Will shuttle fly again during 1987?

By DAVID ESPO

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA Administrator James Fletcher is vowing to make the space shuttle "safe and reliable again, hopefully in the summer of 1987," although some members of Congress say the long list of recommendations in the Challenger commission report makes that timetable unrealistic.

"We're probably looking at January 1988 before any launch," Rep. Manuel Lujan Jr., R-N.M., said Monday, as he and other lawmakers prepared to begin hearings on the report that pinned the blame for the Jan. 28 disaster on a faulty seam on the shuttle's right booster rocket.

With the commission calling for multiple changes in flight hardware as well as demanding sweeping management changes at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Rep. S. William Green, R-N.Y., added, "I think there's a real question that NASA is going to be able to make the July 1987 target."

House and Senate members, who generally deferred to the commission's investigation for the past four months, called commission chairman William P. Rogers to testify today in the first of several days of scheduled hearings. Many lawmakers are likely to use the hearings to signal their determination to keep closer tabs on NASA in the future.

Fletcher, expected to appear before congressional committees later, told a news conference he already has asked a former official of the NASA Apollo moon flight program to review the agency's management structure, as well as see to the establishment of an independent panel of experts to assist NASA in redesigning the booster rocket seam.

In addition, he said the agency will make improvements in the shuttle engine and brakes before it flies again, and promised additional improvements.

"We have taken the first steps to be sure that that rededication is established," he said. "I think as we go along we'll see more and more steps toward recommitting all of us to making that shuttle safe and reliable again, hopefully in the summer of 1987."

But asked about proposals for full-scale, vertical testing of the redesigned booster rockets and installation of an escape system for future astronauts — two of the more costly recommendations in the report — Fletcher stopped short of committing himself to implementation.

He also said NASA officials cannot anticipate "external forces" such as budget constraints and technical problems.

Nation's rig count still falling

HOUSTON (AP) — Oil drilling activity in the United States continues to sag as the weekly rig count plunged to another post-World War II low.

Dale Steffes, a Houston-based energy analyst, predicted that the number of oil rigs will continue to drop in the weeks ahead because of the uncertainity of oil prices.

But eventually, the oil rig count will rise as prices steady at $14 to $15 a barrel, Steffes said.

The number of active rigs fell 37 to 686 in the week ended Monday, according to the Hughes Tool Co. rig count, the industry yardstick for drilling activity in the United States.

Since May, the rig count has dipped below the World War II low of 805 rigs in April 1943.

More than 1,000 rigs have been idled since December, a month after oil prices began plummeting from $32 a barrel and bottomed out at about $11. At the peak of the oil boom in December 1981, the Hughes count stood at 4,530.

UTPB backers push importance

By JULIE HILLRICHS

With rumors of closures and mergers flying, Permian Basin residents are gethering facts to convince state officials that the area's only upper level institution is important.

During a news conference this morning, the development board of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin announced it will appear Friday in Austin before the Select Committee on Higher Education to present what members call "a case for the regional concern and support" of UTPB.

Among the area residents slated to speak before the select committee are Tom Wageman, chief executive officer of RepublicBank First National Midland , UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach, Dr. Bob Riley, president of Howard Community College in Big Spring and State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock.

UTPB, along with all other state institutions, has come under the select committee's scrutiny as it gathers information to prepare a report and make recommendations to the 1987 Legislature. The Legislature will take the report into consideration in making final decisions on funding, if or how restructuring would occur and how best people of Texas would be served by its colleges and universities.

"Our purpose is to witness and to testify to this committee about our situation here in West Texas," Wageman said. "All we are suggesting is that it is critical that the men and women of this area have an opportunity to seek higher education."

John Landgraf, president of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, said the UTPB Development Board requested a hearing several months ago to inform the select committee of the university's "importance to our economy, our future diversification potentials and to the access for higher education of the half million Texans in our region.

"We will present positive, constructive evidence that this university is meeting its mandate in a cost effective, viable manner which is in the best interest of the state," he said.

Letter from White endorses efforts to push Stacy Dam

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White on Monday released copies of a letter in which he endorsed the efforts of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, to win congressional approval to push along construction of the Stacy Reservoir.

Without congressional authorization, White said, the $68 million project might be held up for two years or more because the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has delayed the permit. Any postponement could cost $3 million to $4 million a year, he said.

"It is imperative that Stacy Reservoir not be delayed," the governor said in a June 3 letter. "In area already decimated by the oil crisis, an adequate water supply is absolutely essential in building an economic recovery. For this reason, I support and endorse your efforts to expedite construction of Stacy Reservoir."

Timing of pre-dawn executions shrouded in history

Public hangings gave way to privacy of electric chairs, gas chambers

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The news stories have a familiar ring to them: "Shortly after midnight today, convicted killer John Jones was executed in the state death chamber."

For the 13th time in Texas since the Dec. 7, 1982 execution of Charlie Brooks, that scenario held true early Monday morning. At 12:13 a.m., a lethal solution of potassium chloride, pavulon and sodium thiopental flowed into the veins of 50-year-old Rudy Esquivel.

At 12:21 a.m., Esquivel died for killing a Houston narcotics officer during a 1978 shootout. The Department of Corrections carried out its statutory duty of executing Esquivel "at any time before the hour of sunrise on the day set."

Legal and penal experts agree that in almost every state of the union, executions occur between midnight and dawn. Although they offer various hypothesis, known seem to know exactly why.

Gara LaMarche, director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, says the night-time killings tend to reduce publicity for the executions themselves and for those demonstrating for and against the death penalty. Most morning newspapers have either gone to press by then or have time for only a cursory story on the actual event.

"The next day it's old news," LaMarche says.

Texas prisons spokesman Charles Brown believes the timing makes it easier to carry out a difficult task. "There would not be a lot of people out then," Brown says. "Everybody who's not involved in it would be asleep."

As head of the American Civil Liberties Union's anti-death-penalty group, New York attorney Henry Schwartzchild has "been involved" in many executions, dating back to the celebrated case of Utah killer Gary Gilmore.

With Gilmore sentenced to die at dawn Utah time, Schwartzchild's team of ACLU lawyers hopped through the night from court to court, ending up — unsuccessfully — at the U.S. Supreme Court just minutes before a firing squad shot Gilmore to death.

Dr. George Beto, director of the Criminal Justice Center at Sam Houston State University and former director of the Texas Department of Corrections, believes legislators set executions for the early morning hours to avoid another day full of 11th-hour court battles. "All kinds of problems could come up during the course of the day," Beto says.

Schwartzchild doesn't accept most of the reasons given for nighttime executions, particularly the thought that carrying out the death penalty as close as possible to midnight helps reduce the condemned man's anxiety. "It seems a little peculiar to rush this to be solicitous to the guy," he says.

Until the early 1920s, Schwartzchild says, most executions were public hangings in the county square. "Public executions were normally, obviously, by daylight," he says.

"Executions were generally centralized in the state prison when states started to leave the gallows behind and moved to the electric chair and the gas chamber."

In Texas, a time change accompanied that move. Until a massive rewrite in 1923, the Texas Penal Code required condemned killers to die by hanging "after eleven o'clock, and before sunset, on the day stated."

The 1923 revision brought in the electric chair, and the "before the hour of sunrise" time schedule.

Beto says the executions come closer to midnight than to dawn for fear that a late start might delay the inmate's death past the statutory deadline.

"Shrouded somewhere in the mists of history was a desire to comply with that law," Beto says. "They wanted to be sure they met that deadline, because if you missed it, you'd have all sorts of legal problems."

Assistant Texas Attorney General Bob Walt, whose responsibilities include overseeing death penalty cases, agrees. "There's always the horrible prospect of misjudging when dawn is going to start and while you are putting the needle in, the sun cracks through the window."

Former American soldier arrested in Bonn on charges of espionage

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The Bonn government announced today that an American has been arrested on espionage charges. Sources said the suspect was a former U.S. soldier who offered to sell information to the Soviet bloc.

Interior Minister Friederich Zimmermann told a news conference the American was among 13 suspected spies arrested in West Germany this year.

Zimmermann, who was presenting an annual report on terrorism and espionage, refused to provide further details.

Bonn security sources, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press the suspect had a long career in the U.S. Army and Navy.

They said he had offered to provide the Soviet bloc "highly important" information about American installations, the sources said.

About 100 Splendora residents forced from homes by flooding

SPLENDORA (AP) — Rising waters from a Houston-area creek forced the evacuation of about 100 people, many of whom were still unable to return to their homes today, authorities say.

Some residents who had to leave their homes Monday night were rescued by boat, law enforcement officials reported.

Evacuated residents spent the night at First Baptist Church in Splendora and a skating rink in nearby Patton Village after waters in Peach Creek began rising late Monday, police and sheriff's officers said.

About 35 people remained at the skating rink this morning, and five to 10 residents were at the church, said Pat Dugger, Splendora police dispatcher.

Some residents left the two shelters to stay with friends or relatives, and many homes remained inaccessible today, Ms. Dugger said.

"Some waters are receding, but some seem to be rising," she said.

Haitian strike call draws opposition

By ED McCULLOUGH

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Organizers of a general strike urged everyone from bus drivers to professionals to stay home today to press for changes in the governing council, but moderates said the strike call was inappropriate and should be ignored.

The strike organizers were pressing for a civilian provisional government to replace the ruling three-man military-civilian council, and for the ouster of two government officials.

The council has been in power since former President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier fled to exile in France on Feb. 7.

Sylvio Claude, head of the Christian Democrat Party, a strike organizer exhorted "bus drivers, employees, workers, professionals" to stay home.

But Hubert de Ronceray, Haiti's former representative to UNESCO, said, "I think a general strike is not justified."

De Ronceray, a likely presidential candidate in elections the council has pledged to hold in 18 months, said in an interview on Radio Metropole, "This (a general strike) is an alternative to be used (only) when all other means have been exhausted."

Gladys Coupet, president of the Haitian-American Chamber of Commerce, predicted today's strike call would fail.

Ms. Coupet, a bank president, said, "I don't think any of them (chamber members) would support a strike."

Council president Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy on Saturday tried to defuse opposition to the council by setting election dates — July 1987 for local elections, November 1987 for presidential elections, February 1988 for the swearing-in of a new president — and stressing that he would not be a candidate.

He was forced to act in part by widespread anti-government demonstrations the previous several days in which at least two people were killed and a dozen wounded in clashes with police and soldiers.

Marc Bazin, a former finance minister and another likely presidential candidate, said, "it is of the utmost importance now to avoid conflicts and bloodshed."

The capital and outlying cities were calm Monday, with no reports of demonstrations.

In Gonaives, an early center of opposition to Duvalier, schools and some government were closed Monday, according to Radio Metropole, a Port-au-Prince station.

Claude and 27 small political, civic and labor groups also are clamoring for the resignations of council member Col. Williams Regala and Finance Minister Leslie Delatour.

Delatour is criticized for his efforts to restructure Haiti's finances, and Regala for his ties to the Duvalier government, a dynasty which began in 1957 under Jean-Claude's father, Francois.

With the exception of Claude's political party and Haiti's largest labor union, most of the groups supporting the strike call are unknown even to Haitians. It was uncertain how many people they represent.

Residents of Gonaives met to discuss a proposal by Namphy that he meet with protestors in that city. The meeting broke up without a decision being made to accept or reject Namphy's overture.

In demonstrations last week in Gonaives, about 105 miles north of the capital, protesters for the first times armed themselves with machetes, knives, picks, rocks and sticks. Previously demonstrators did not arm themselves.

Main roads were barricaded with burning tires and tree trunks.

"We have aimed at a realistic program — not an optimistic or a pessimistic one," Fletcher said. "July 1987 is our goal."

President Reagan, accepting the report in a Rose Garden ceremony, said that because of the commission's work, "Our shuttle program will be safer and better prepared for the challenges that lie ahead."

Many lawmakers praised the Rogers commission, but Lujan, the senior Republican on the House Science and Technology Committee, had complaints as well. The commission made "very good recommendations and findings," but failed to go far enough, he said.

He said he would not be satisfied until investigators "look deeper into the questions of negligence." Lujan said officials at NASA and rocket maker Morton Thiokol Inc. knew of the dangers hanging over the mission, but failed to act. "In my opinion, that's negligence on the part of both the contractor and NASA," he said.

Five men and two women perished in the accident, in which the Challenger exploded into pieces 73 seconds after liftoff from Cape Canaveral, Fla., on Jan. 28.

The victims were Dick Scobee, Michael J. Smith, Judith Resnik, Ronald McNair, Ellison Onizuka, Gregory Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe, the first teacher to fly aboard the shuttle. Their remains were later located on the ocean floor off Cape Canaveral.

Scobee's widow, June, said she was reading the report and told a reporter she hopes the shuttle will fly again. She also said she plans no legal action in connection with the Challenger accident. "All that was important to me was him, and nothing will bring him back," she said.

Rogers formally presented the blue-covered, 256-page report to Reagan, then told reporters he was confident the panel had been "able to determine precisely what occurred" in the Challenger explosion.

"I certainly hope there will be no nagging questions about it." He said the commission was not asked to assess blame, "and we have not assessed blame."

But in addition to calling for changes in the faulty booster rocket as well as other shuttle systems, the panel criticized NASA for running a "silent safety program."

White says financing sought for prison

TENNESSEE COLONY (AP) — Gov. Mark White is promising a quick resolution to the dilemma facing state officials who are preparing to build a new maximum security state prison but legally don't have the money to pay for it.

"We are exploring other ways to finance the construction of this prison," White said Monday at ceremonies dedicating the site of the new Mark Michael Unit about 15 miles west of Palestine.

Asked when a satisfactory financial proposal would be reached, he replied: "Hopefully, in a matter of days."

Attorney General Jim Mattox threw the finances into turmoil last week when he ruled a proposed bond issue to raise money for construction was illegal.

That sent prison officials scrambling because the Monday event at the Michael Unit site originally was planned as a groundbreaking. Instead, several hundred people gathered in a cleared field near the existing Coffield Unit for what was billed as a "site dedication."

The proposal Mattox ruled invalid would have allowed the Texas Board of Corrections to use $78 million in private money to build the prison, which would then be leased to the state. The bonds would have been issued under the state Health Facilities Development Act.

Mattox said the bonds could not be used because although the prison would have some medical capabilities, "using that method of financing would violate the intent of the Legislature," which passed the act.

"We are exploring other ways to finance the construction of this prison — and I am hopeful tha a breakthrough will be forthcoming in the very near future," White said. "We will not have early release of inmates. That is not an acceptable means of relieving the pressures on our prisons."

Prison Board Chairman Al Hughes said Mattox's ruling last week meant the state would miss a federal court deadline to reduce prison crowding by Sept. 1, 1987. He also warned that unless construction began within 60 days, state officials would have to begin preparations to release 2,941 convicted felons from their sentences early because of prison crowding.

"These few days here shouldn't make a great deal of difference," White insisted.

"I assure you we can build prisons fast enough to avoid early release."

Hughes was scheduled to attend the ceremonies Monday but failed to appear. Fellow prison board member James Parsons said Hughes was busy in Austin trying to come up with a financial plan to make the prison "a fruition rather than a promise."

The new prison, which would house 2,250 inmates, is needed to meet federal court orders requiring an end to overcrowding in Texas prisons.

As of the end of last week, the prison population was 37,996, or 94.78 percent of capacity, according to department figures. Once the percentage reaches 95 percent, the state must begin a procedure which includes the early release of certain inmates.

Michael, for whom the new prison is named, recently died of cancer. He was a highly respected warden at the Hilltop Unit.

Steffes said both large and small oil companies are holding back oil exploration because of the continued low prices of oil.

Oil prices have averaged $13 to $14 a barrel recently after hitting just over $17 a barrel last month, he said.

Foreign competition is part of the U.S. slowdown in oil drilling, he said.

Steffes said it is cheaper to drill oil in Saudi Arabia and Third World countries than in the United States, prompting U.S. companies to import rather than produce oil in the United States..

Costs range from $5 to $20 a barrel to produce oil in Texas — compared to $1 in Saudi Arabia, he said.

Much of the future U.S. oil production rests in the upcoming OPEC meeting in Yugoslavia, he said.

An agreement on prices among OPEC members will help U.S. drilling, he said.

And he predicted the number of U.S. oil rigs will go up as the market steadies and oil company officials become confident oil prices won't drop further.

He said many oilmen are frightened now that oil prices will drop to $10 a barrel — although they say pubicly that the prices will rise in the fall.

Meanwhile, American consumers continue to conserve because they believe the prices will rise, Steffes said.

The current Hughes tallies showed that in Texas the number of rigs working is just over 30 percent of the year-ago level.

Offshore drilling also fell again after a one-week pause. The utilization rate in the Gulf of Mexico is down to 30.5 percent, while the worldwide figure dropped to 58.8 percent.

Michigan hospital finds donor for baby in transplant dispute

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A Michigan hospital announced today that a heart donor had been found for the infant once turned down as a transplant candidate because his parents are young and unmarried.

Officials of Butterworth Hospital of Grand Rapids, Mich., were to fly the body of the donor child to Loma Linda University Medical Center, where doctors have performed the rare infant-to-infant transplants before, said Butterworth spokeswoman Gera Witte.

The operation is to take place at about 10 a.m. PDT, she said. She would provide no information about the donor, except that the infant was from the Grand Rapids area.

Doctors had sought a donor for Jesse Sepulveda, 16 days old today. Jesse was born with a heart defect, but doctors said he could live indefinitely with the help of drugs and a balloon propping up his heart.

He also appeared healthy and was more than 2½ pounds heavier than the average weight for his age, doctors at Huntington Memorial Hospital said.

"We cannot say how long he will stay alive — it could be days, weeks or months," Dr. Paul E. Johnson Jr. told a news conference Monday.

Loma Linda University Medical Center refused to seek a donor for the rare operation because doctors there feared the baby would not get the constant post-operative attention necessary for recovery.

The hospital reversed itself last week after Jesse's 17-year-old mother, Deana Binkley, and father, Jesse Sepulveda, a 26-year-old heating and air conditioning worker, relinquished custody of the baby to the child's grandparents.

The baby, who was in serious but stable condition Monday, breathes with the aid of a respirator, but now weighs 10 pounds, 5 ounces, said Dr. Ernesto Gangitano. The average weight for babies his age is 8 pounds, Gangitano said.

"Considering the heart underdevelopment, his condition is very good," said Gangitano, a neonatologist.

Doctors at Huntington Memorial last week inserted a catheter with a balloon into Jesse's heart, which has a defective left ventricle that cannot pump blood throughout the body.

The balloon props open a hole between two heart chambers so blood can be mixed before being pumped by the right ventricle.

Jesse also is receiving an anti-clotting drug that eases blood flow.

The cost of Jesse's care has been paid by California Children's Services, a state agency.

The development board also recruited an information task force comprised of 22 individuals from 16 area towns to present university-related statistics for the select committee at Friday's hearing, Landgraf said. Included are 36 resolutions of support from city councils, county commissioners courts and school boards in 20 Permian Basin communities. In addition, over 115 clubs, churches and businesses passed resolutions and circulated petitions in support of UTPB and another 229 personal letters from alumni, area employers and private citizens give testimony on the effect the university has had on their lives and businesses.

Tommy Thompson, former Kermit Independent School District superintendent, spearheaded an effort to sign up UTPB Boosters, a group of supporters concerned with retaining and promoting the university'd programs. To date, 9,345 individuals from 34 Permian Basin communities have joined.

"I have worked on the creation of UT-Permian since its inception in the '60s," Thompson said. "There are a lot of people who appreciate and feel strongly about the need for higher education in this area."

Landgraf said the board's efforts have been jointly sponsored by many communities throughout the area because the university is "integral to attract new industries and to revitalize our existing businesses."

The university recently created the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification which will be located near Midland Regional Air Terminal at the intersection of State Highway 191 and County Road 1788. It will partner the univeristy's resources with private enterprise to develop new markets for existing oilfield technology and stimulate the application and production of new technologies which are ready for the marketplace.

ARREST

The man has been released and is living in West Germany while the investigation continues, the sources told the AP. He has not been charged.

The man allegedly made the offer to a Soviet bloc intelligence agency while living in West Germany after his discharge from the U.S. military, the sources said. The sources declined to identify the country to whom the man had made the offer or say exactly when he had been arrested.

The Associated Press telephoned the U.S. Embassy spokesman Bruce Byers for comment, but a secretary said he was unavailable and would return the call later.

In addition to the American, two of the spies arrested this year were East Germans, seven were West Germans and three were Poles, Zimmermann said.

Educators: Less paper work needed

STATE

EL PASO (AP) — The Texas education reforms of two years ago would be improved if teachers had less paperwork and a better system for rewarding superior performance, witnesses told an education panel.

First Lady Linda Gale White is head of the four-person committee, which is to present recommendations to the governor at the end of July.

"This is the first time all aspects of House Bill 72 are in operation," said Mrs. White. "Now is the time to sit back and see what fine-tuning needs to be done."

Teachers are overwhelmed by the amount of paperwork involved in monitoring the quality of instruction, said Anne Bradshaw, principal of the junior high school in Presidio.

"Our teachers are working late at night and coming to school tired" trying to keep up with paperwork, said Ms. Bradshaw. "I don't feel the reduction of paperwork will reduce our quality."

Holly Braden, a Socorro first-grade teacher, agreed.

"I spend more time doing paperwork than preparing for my classes," she said.

The committee is scheduled to hold its second public hearing today in Fort Worth. The panel kicked off a series of 16 statewide meetings Monday in El Paso, when 16 witnesses offered suggestions on how to improve HB 72, the education reform legislation passed in June 1984.

Commissioner of Education Bill Kirby; Maria Elena Flood, a member of the state board of education, and Larry Yawn, an aide to Gov. Mark White, are committee members.

Kirby agreed with some witnesses, who criticized the way teachers are evaluated to determine whether they are elegible for money rewards from the Career Ladder program within HB72.

"The state implemented it backwards," Kirby said. "We should have had the training first, then implement it."

He said evaluation will improve after staff are trained this summer.

extend the appropriation for the reward system within the bill.

HB 72 is a three-year package that appropriated $2.8 billion for all education reforms in Texas above the $10 billion currently earmarked for education in general, said Yawn. Career Ladder funding was $60 million for the first fiscal year after the bill was passed; $90 million for the second year and is set at more than $100 million for the fiscal year that starts Sept. 1, he said.

Julia Samaniego, an elementary school teacher for 37 years, was among several witnesses who said the Career Ladder program has created animosity and suspicion among teachers.

"There is not the sharing, cooperation and team-teaching that we used to have," said Ms. Samaniego.

Instead of making teachers compete for the reward money, better salaries would be a more appropriate way to recognize superios performance, said Ms. Samaniego.

Mrs. White, a former school teacher, disagreed.

"If I were teaching today...if I would get the token raise every year, that would not be enough for me," Mrs. White said. "I think competitiveness out there may be a plus."

Ex-bank president acquitted of perjury

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Former Edinburg bank president Michael Neff has been acquitted on charges that he lied to a grand jury investigating the death of a man who owed $1.1 million to Neff's bank.

Jurors found Neff, 39, not guilty on the charge of aggravated perjury Monday night. He was indicted for statements he made in May 1985 to a Nueces County grand jury probing the death of a man identified as John Bixenstine.

The man's body was found in June 11, 1984, in a car trunk at the Corpus Christi International Airport.

Bixenstine, at the time of his disappearance in November 1983, had more than $1.1 million in debts at the First National Bank in Edinburg, debts approved by Neff while he was bank president.

During Neff's trial, his defense attorney, Cass Weiland, tried to squelch prosecutor Bill May's allegations that perjury was a result of insurance fraud that ultimately ended in murder.

"This is a great country," Neff said after the jury's decision was announced.

Neff, a Vietnam veteran, said his indictment and trial were "more than a nightmare...This is the worst thing I've ever been through. This system is a tremendous system and worth fighting for in Vietnam."

Weiland told the jurors in closing arguments that prosecutors had presented a "morass of evidence" concerning $1.1 million in delinquent bank loans, federal lending limit violations, a $1 million insurance policy and questions surrounding the identity of the body in the trunk.

Weiland said Neff's indictment concerned statements Neff made before the grand jury about a conversation Neff had with Edinburg life insurance agent James Elliott in May 1983.

Neff told the grand jury that he told Elliott the policy was in connection with bad loans and to cancel the $1 million policy.

While Neff stood behind his story, Elliott testified last week that he was never told about the bad loans or to cancel the policy.

May argued that Elliott had nothing to gain by lying to the grand jury, while Neff, who by federal lending limit laws was liable for the $1.1 million in loans, had "a million" reasons

Texas volunteers building Colorado church

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP) — Seventeen volunteers from five Texas churches began work on a new Pleasant View Baptist Church here Monday and by the time they leave Friday all that will be left to do will be interior and exterior finishing.

"If they had lights and are that excited about it, they could have a Sunday school class this weekend," said Arvil Pickett, a Tyler, Texas, shipping foreman supervising the Volunteer Christian Builders contingent.

In the first six hours of work Monday, the volunteers from east Texas raised the outside walls on the new church to replace the St. Charles Mesa church destroyed by fire last November.

Today, the 17 volunteers from five Texas churches will raise roof trusses.

Wednesday, the crew will lay in plywood roof decking. By Friday when they leave, they will have fitted doors and windows and attached exterior insulation board. If necessary, they'll also do some plumbing and electrical work.

By July, the 172-member congregation, led by the Rev. J.M. Phillips, will have a new 5,300-square-foot home on 7.3 acres.

The Texas volunteers take a week's "vacation" each year to journey somewhere at their own expense to build a church.

In the past 14 years, they've contributed their labor — about 60 percent of a building's cost — to erect 14 new churches in Kansas, Indiana, Iowa, Texas, West Virginia and Wyoming.

Other Colorado projects include churches at Silverton, Springfield and Parker.

Only two of them are professional carpenters.

The local church must lay the foundation so concrete is cured by the time the carpenters pull in.

The local church also is responsible for sheetrocking, roofing and inside finish work.

The volunteers' wives come along to cook meals and help where needed. Their only pay after four days of driving to and from the site and five days working on the project is the thanks of the local church.

Clements aide: White reverses stand on HB 72

AUSTIN (AP) — The campaign manager for Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements said Monday that Gov. Mark White has reversed himself on the major education reform bill, House Bill 72.

George Bayoud said White was quoted in April as saying the bill was a "total package. Take it or leave it," but this weekend said in a Dallas Morning News story as regards the controversial no-pass, no-play provision, "If a student didn't pass one week, he wouldn't play the next week. Every week counts. If they pass, they play."

"So, instead of a six-week probationary period, Mr. White now sounds like he's talking about one week," Bayoud said.

Bayoud said Clements has called for students to miss three weeks of extracurricular activities if they fail a course.

Mark McKinnon of White's campaign said the comment did not represent a policy change. "There has not been a policy change and absolutely will not be (a policy change)," McKinnon said.

Loud music ends in death

AUSTIN (AP) — An argument over loud music Monday left one Austin man dead, a roommate injured with slash wounds to his face and another roommate wanted for murder, police said.

Jose Franco Herrera, 31, was shot once in the back of the head as he sat on the front porch of the home he shared with two roommates, police said. Officers found Herrera's body slumped in a chair when they arrived about 2:30 a.m. Monday.

Witnesses told police that Herrera and roommate Guadalupe Yanez were arguing over loud music, and that the two had argued repeatedly about Yanez's loud music, which Herrera said kept him awake.

During the argument Monday, police said Herrera walked out of the residence and threw a knife at Guadalupe Yanez, 23, who suffered a 2-inch cut to his left cheek.

Guadalupe Yanez was discharged from Brackenridge Hospital Monday afternoon, officials said.

Moments after Herrera left the house, police said the third roommate, identified as Leonirez Yanez, Guadalupe Yanez's cousin, walked to the front porch, put a small caliber pistol to the back of Herrera's head and fired one shot.

Cash transfer to be costly

AUSTIN (AP) — Transferring money from other state funds to keep the General Revenue Fund solvent may cost as much as $100 million over the next two years, state Treasurer Ann Richards says.

She gave the warning Monday in her monthly report of cash balances in the state General Revenue Fund.

That fund "has needed money almost every day this year," Ms. Richards said. "The cash shortfall has been handled through inter-fund borrowing, the process of transferring money from other state funds into the Fund Account."

Memories of McAuliffe alive through yearbook

By DERRICK JACKSON

CONCORD, N.H. (LAT) — For the students of Concord High School, the findings of the Rogers Commission on the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger were a distant, anticlimactic echo from Washington. They have a more personal reminder of the death of their teacher, Christa McAuliffe.

They have their yearbooks.

In a special color section, Mrs. McAuliffe, the first teacher selected to go into space, is shown in her most buoyant moments — laughing, frozen in midair, head flying back and heels pointed to the ceiling. Then, at the section's end, are four pictures in sequence. They show the Challenger lifting off, rising, then exploding, killing Mrs. McAuliffe and the other six crew members.

For some, the reminder was too strong.

"I didn't react the first day," Helga Stevenson, 17, said. "Then the next day, I walked down the street, hugging the yearbook as tight as I could to me. I was shocked the pictures were there. I thought of her in the hall saying 'Hi,' her interviews, and how she was going to write a journal. I started saying, 'Why did you have to die?'

"I walked up the stairs one day and for a split second, I thought I saw her, alive. But it was just the new portrait of her they put up. I got sick to my stomach again."

"I was just so shocked," junior Linda Stickney said. "I almost got over it ...now it brings back old memories."

For others, the pictures were in their rightful place. "When the shuttle blew up, a lot of my friends said to me, 'Do you still want to be an astronaut?' " Scott Kibby, 16, said. "When I said yes, everybody said, 'Oh, no, how could you want to go?' But my guidance counselor told me it was good that I wanted to stay with my goals. The picture didn't bother me. She would've wanted us to go on, and seeing it again is a reminder of what space exploration is all about. I figure now, if I ever get into space, I'll be flying not for myself, but for Christa, too."

With one week left in the school year, most of the students have grown weary of the attention the Challenger disaster brought. While several adults in downtown Concord were visibly angry over the lapses in the management of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and said that they think that Steven McAuliffe, husband of Christa McAuliffe, should sue the government agency, many students spoke in softer tones. They said most of their anger had been spent in the first two weeks after the explosion.

"It's easy to blame NASA now, and yeah, they did things wrong, but I remember saying to myself, 'When are they going to get it up there?' They had two delays already," junior Bill Mullen said. "I could see them being anxious at NASA to get it up, too."

Shuttle panel calls for escape system

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rogers commission recommends that NASA equip the space shuttle with a mechanism to allow astronauts to escape if something goes awry while the orbiter is gliding back through the atmosphere to Earth.

But the commission made no recommendation on an escape system for the first two minutes after liftoff when the orbiter is being lifted by twin booster rockets, the period during which the Challenger shuttle exploded on Jan. 28.

"The events that led to destruction of the Challenger progressed very rapidly and without warning," the panel wrote in its report released Monday. "The commission believes it is highly unlikely that any of the systems (discussed in the report), or any combination of those systems, would have saved the flight 51-L crew."

The commission, however, said, "The crew should have a means of escaping the orbiter in controlled, gliding flight," which occurs on reentry. The panel did not spell out what kind of system it had in mind for the descent escape.

"The commission thinks it crucial that the vehicle that will carry astronauts into orbit through this decade and the next incorporate systems that provide some chance for crew survival in emergencies," the report said.

The Challenger had no flight crew ejection or parachute system.

"Even if there had been warning (of the danger) there were no actions available to the crew or the Mission Control team to avert the disaster," the commission said.

It also said there was no way for the crew to safely separate the orbiter from the rest of the shuttle while the booster rockets were still firing and that, if there had been separation, the orbiter would have slammed into the ocean with such force no one would have survived.

Speaking to reporters after the report was released, Commission Chairman William P. Rogers declined to discuss when and how the astronauts aboard the Challenger were believed to have died.

"We did not look into that. We didn't think that was appropriate for us to develop," Rogers said.

But the report said neither astronauts nor ground controllers "had any warning of impending disaster."

The orbiter began breaking apart seconds after the shuttle's right booster rocket leaked flame which ignited a massive fireball 73 seconds after liftoff.

The 256-page report of the presidential commission includes an eight-page section discussing the lack of an escape mechanism aboard the Challenger and the difficulty in designing such a feature.

The report noted that NASA designers have debated various escape mechanisms for astronauts for years. Some escape systems have been largely discarded in the past because of concern about added weight, the commission said.

NASA had in place before the January accident a procedure that would allow astronauts to abort their mission and land safely at a designated landing area or ditch the orbiter into the ocean, an option they probably would not survive.

But each of those procedures involve emergencies with the shuttle's main engines after the solid rocket boosters have separated. The Challenger never reached that point.

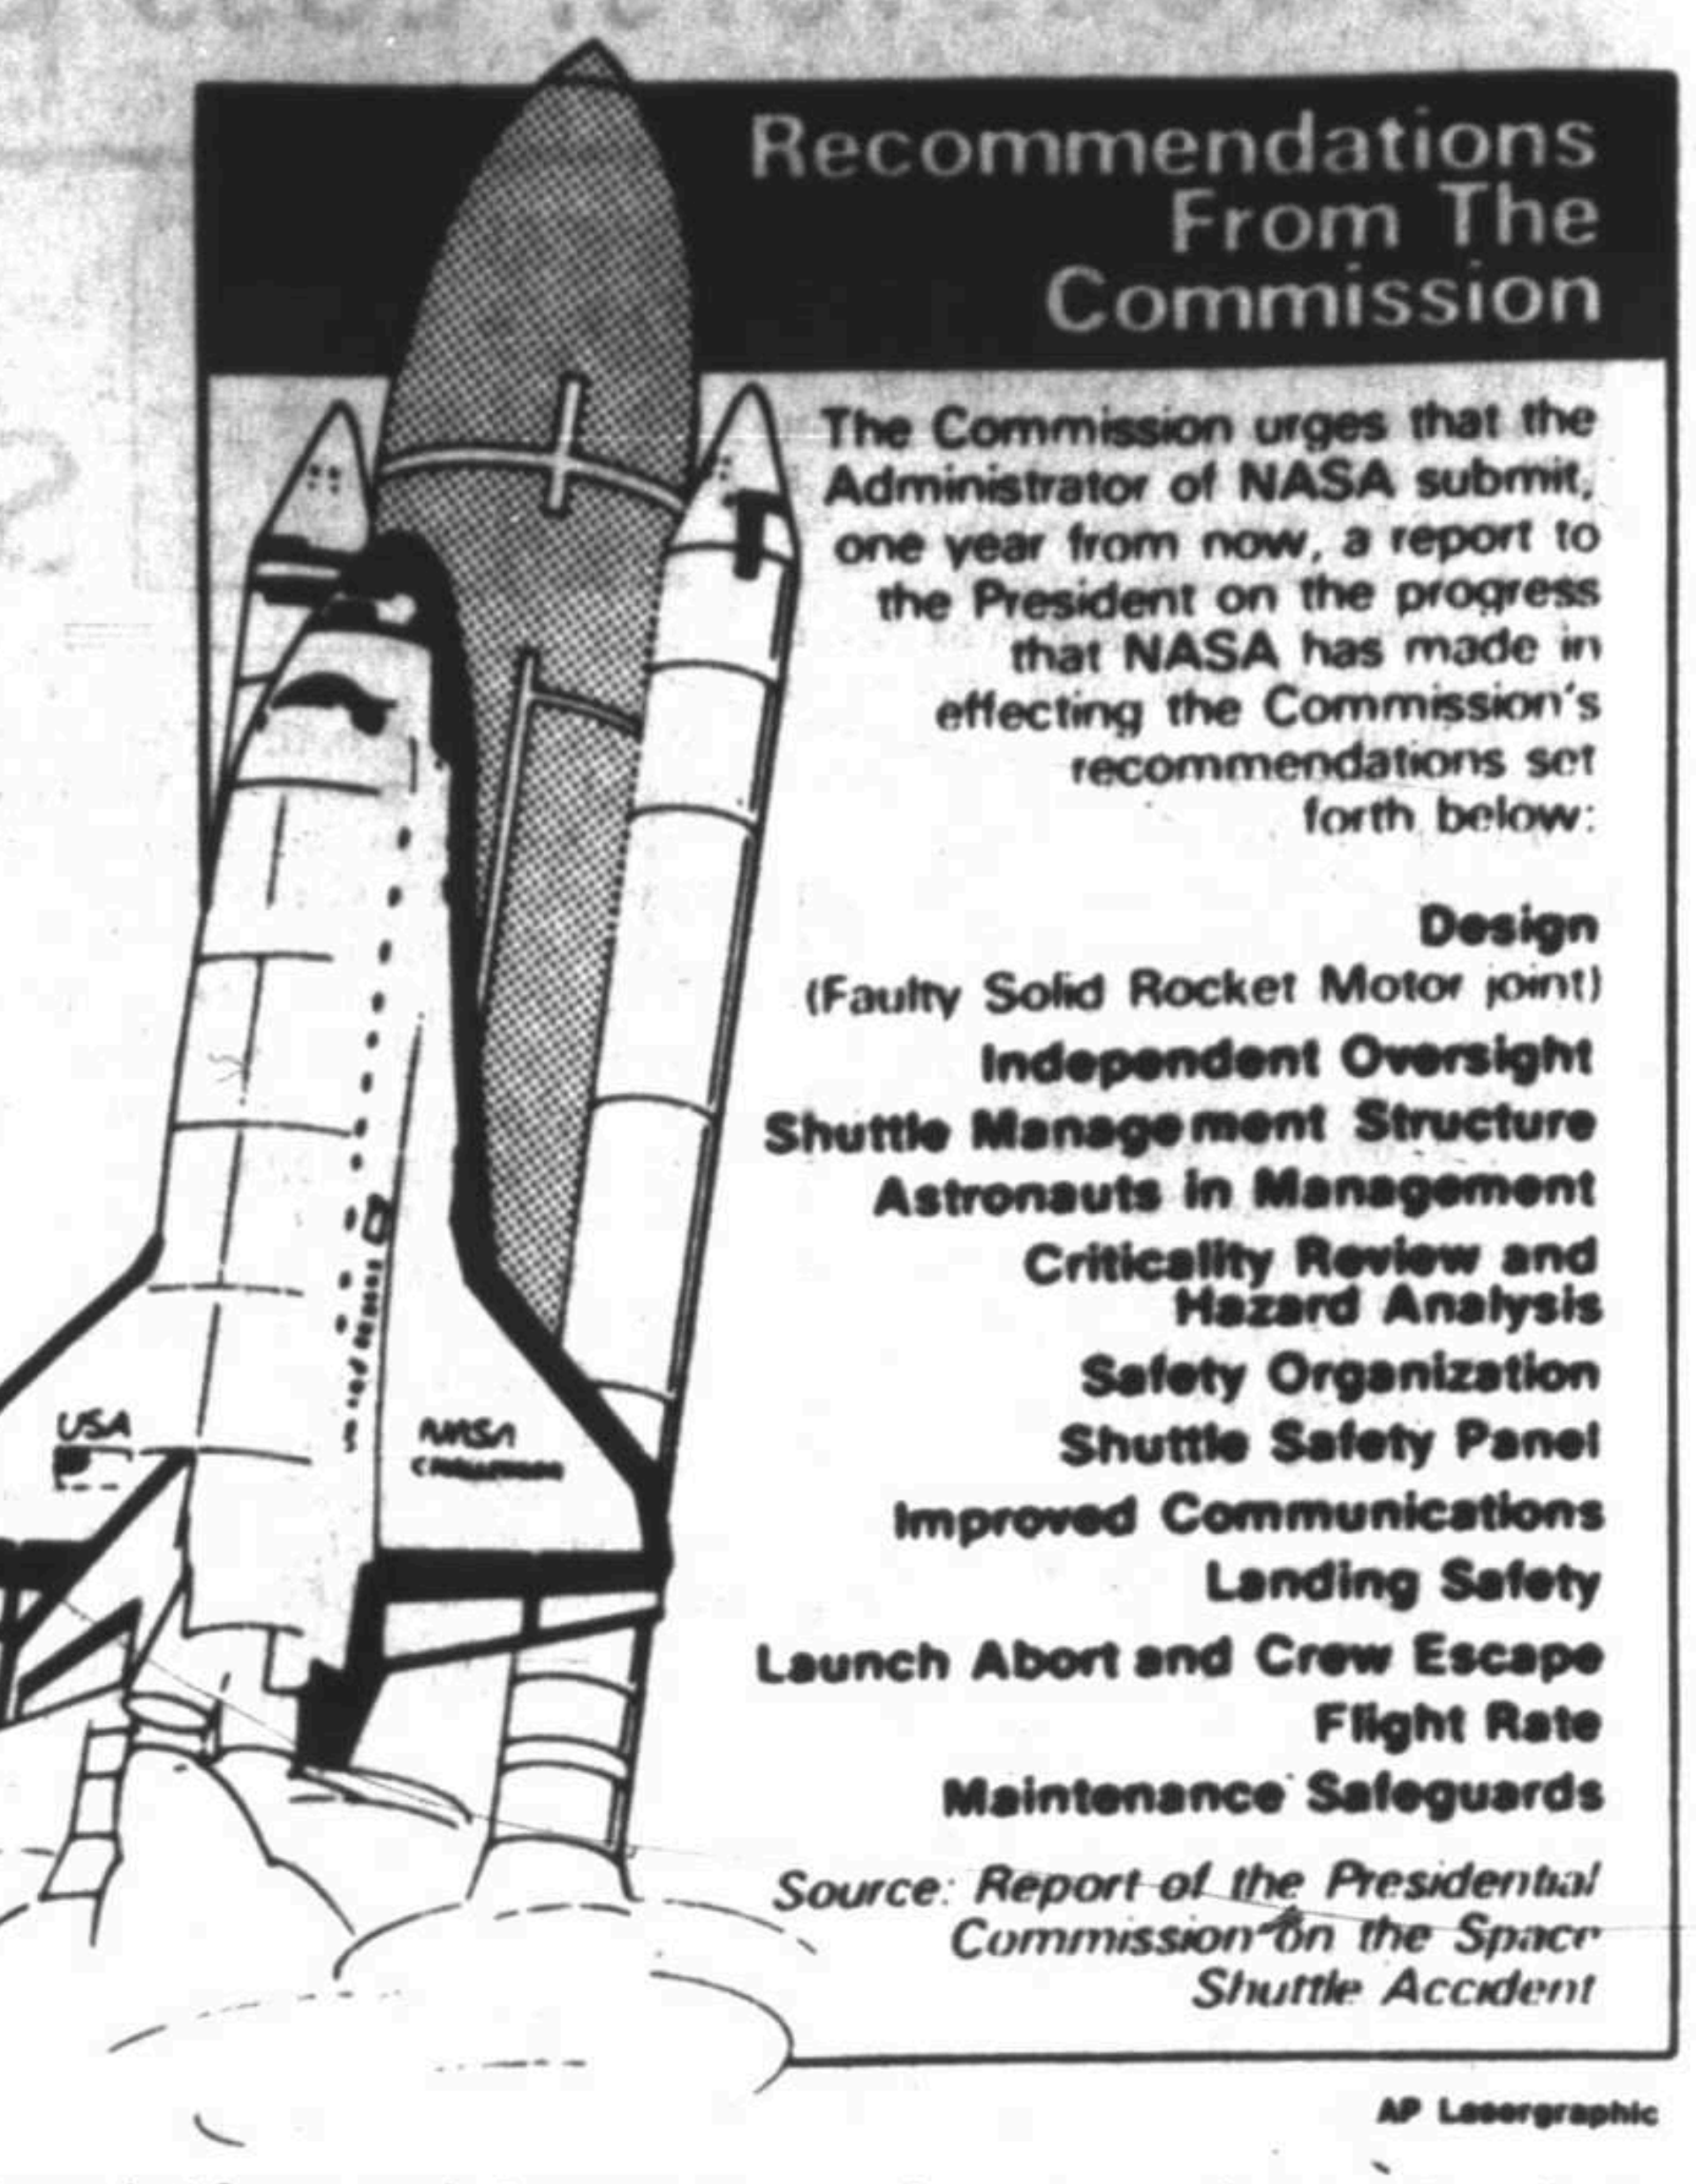
"As long as the solid rocket boosters are still thrusting, fast separation does not provide a way to escape," the commission said.

The panel noted that NASA in the early development of the shuttle considered allowing astronauts to shut down the booster rockets in an emergency. But that option was scrapped because it would require significant strengthening of the orbiter to withstand the forces of a booster shutdown and because a booster failure at the time was considered to be remote.

The presidential commission called such a booster shutdown option "the key to any successful first-stage abort" but conceded such a shutdown alone would not have saved the Challenger, because the orbiter would have crashed into the ocean and been destroyed.

Another system that was considered was a parachute-equipped ejection system that would accommodate an entire crew. The idea of individual ejection seats was discarded by NASA engineers long ago because such seats could accommodate no more than two astronauts.

NASA also considered putting an "escape module" aboard the shuttle, but that was scrapped because it would add more than 30,000 pounds to the orbiter.



Recommendations From The Commission

The Commission urges that the Administrator of NASA submit, one year from now, a report to the President on the progress that NASA has made in effecting the Commission's recommendations set forth below:

Independent Oversight
Shuttle Management Structure
Astronauts in Management

Wright doubts House would back tax hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Majority Leader Jim Wright says he doubts the House could support a new proposal by the Senate Budget Committee chairman to increase taxes to pay for more Pentagon spending next year.

"I think it would be very hard to sell to the House," the Texas Democrat said Monday. "We have pared domestic services to the bone."

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., has told President Reagan's top aides that Reagan should soften his opposition to a $10.7 billion tax increase in the fiscal 1987 budget. In exchange, Domenici said he would would try to make sure most of that money went to the Pentagon.

"I believe if the president joined with us we could at least commit somewhere around two-thirds to three-fourths of this rather small revenue increase...to something close to the Senate's" military budget, Domenici told an American Stock Exchange conference.

The Senate approved $301 billion for the Pentagon. Reagan requested $320 billion. The House approved only $285 billion.

House and Senate negotiators planned to resume their efforts today to reach a compromise. The slow-moving talks so far have been aimed at resolving other disagreements, giving Domenici time to work with the White House.

Committee orders battling Baptist factions to 'cease fire'

By ROBERT FURLOW

Rogers

Moore

ATLANTA (AP) — Cease firing, two warring Southern Baptist factions are being told, even as they mass to decide which camp's favorite will become president of the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

Whoever wins the election, there must be a prompt end to destructive name-calling, politicking and other sorts of fighting between the two groups, a special Baptist peace committee said Monday.

Amid the talk of peace, though, the chairman of the committee said there probably will be "casualties" and people "dealt with" before the dust finally settles on a feud over just how much theological diversity the traditionally conservative denomination can stand.

The committee's report and recommendations came one day before more than 40,000 church members were to elect a new president of the 14.5-million-member Southern Baptist Convention.

The rivals in that election were:

- The Rev. Adrian Rogers, 54-year-old pastor of Bellevue Baptist Church in Memphis, Tenn., candidate of the denomination's strict-fundamentalist wing that says every word of the Bible is literally true and that doubters are hurting the denomination. He's a former president who started the faction's string of presidential victories in 1979.

- The Rev. W. Winfred Moore, 66-year-old pastor of First Baptist Church of Amarillo, Texas, himself a conservative churchman but one embraced by denomination moderates for his willingness to let individual Baptists and churches interpret the Bible as they see fit.

The peace committee, which includes both Moore and Rogers, was formed after disputes at last year's denomination convention in Dallas got so heated that fears rose the denomination might literally split in two.

The battle is still going on, and both sides are guilty of keeping things stirred up, the committee said in its report, which will be formally presented to the convention tonight.

Besides asking for another year to complete its work, the committee called for "a one-year moratorium on theological-political position meetings and a deceleration, if not a dismantling, of the political power structures" of the two factions.

"A major effort is necessary if Southern Baptists are to honor legitimate diversities without compromising established convictions," the committee's report said.

The Rev. Charles Fuller of Roanoke, Va., the group's chairman, said: "There is no question that a certain amount of legitimate diversity is good, healthy and wholesome. But it is also obvious there is a limit to how far our diversity can stretch without deteriorating our fellowship.

"During the coming year we will work on what constitutes legitimate diversity."

"There is no way in which we can finally come to peace without having some casualties," he added, implying some officials of denomination agencies or professors of Baptist seminaries might be removed.

Though most of the rhetoric concerns belief in the Bible, the conflict also involves control of the denomination's 26 national agencies, seminaries and other institutions, with budgets totaling about $400 million annually.

The convention's president has considerable, though far from total, control over those agencies and institutions through his appointive authority. After seven years of controlling the presidency, the fundamentalists are close to controlling the boards of many of the agencies, one reason for the heat of recent elections.

Among the peace committee's recommendations was a call for the full convention to condemn recent uses of "intemperate, inflammatory and unguarded language, i.e., 'going for the jugular,' 'Holy wa,r' 'flaming liberal' and other perjorative terms."

In pre-election comments, the presidential candidates stuck to the positions they have held throughout months of sermons and talks.

"Theological diversity is never strength; it's always weakness," Rogers said.

Moore said he disagrees "with many of my dear friends and can't understand some others, but I love them and accept them all. There has to be room for all of us."

NATION IN BRIEF

King's son announces candidacy

ATLANTA (AP) — Martin Luther King III, the eldest son of the slain civil rights leader, has announced he is a candidate for the Fulton County Commission.

A victory in the Aug. 12 primary for King, 28, could lead to the first-ever majority for blacks on the seven-member commission.

The three black incumbents are unopposed so far. The qualifying deadline is Wednesday.

King, a Democrat who announced his candidacy Monday, is director of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change.

His Democratic opponents include Milton Farris, 79, the incumbent, who has more than 40 years experience in Fulton County politics, and Don Mairose, 51, a Delta Air Lines pilot.

Ten accident victims leave hospital

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Ten of the 21 people injured in the nation's worst bus crash in nearly six years have gone home from hospitals in Nevada and California, while the conditions of five of the survivors remain critical or serious.

Gifford Thrasher, 72, and Lawrence Ward, 73, both of Santa Monica, were discharged from Washoe Medical Center in Reno on Monday. Ward's wife remains in satisfactory condition at Carson Tahoe Hospital in Carson City, where Thrasher's wife died on Tuesday.

She was the 19th person to die as a result of the accident. One woman still is missing and presumed dead following the May 30 crash.

The bus was returning to a Santa Monica retirement home from a gambling trip to Reno when it flipped off U.S. 395 and landed upright in the Walker River.

Bomb explodes at abortion clinic

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A bomb damaged an abortion clinic that had been the scene of protest marches and picketing, and caused several thousand dollars in damage, police said today.

No one was in the Family Medicine Center when the bomb went off shortly before midnight Monday, and while damage was extensive, there were no injuries, said police Capt. B.Q. Price.

The bomb was placed close to the entrance of the one-story, brick building, Price said.

"No one has claimed responsibility for the bombing," he said. "We had no telephone calls relating to the bombing before it occurred and we have had no calls since claiming responsibility."

Teen-ager swallows toothbrush while brushing back of tongue

DE PERE, Wis. (AP) — Doctors who performed a quick rescue operation on 14-year-old Kerry Shea gave her a tip: Tie a string to her toothbrush next time.

"I was brushing the back of my tongue because I saw on TV that it helps get a lot of the sugar that way," she said Monday, explaining how she swallowed her toothbrush.

Miss Shea, who graduated last week from De Pere Middle School, said she was brushing her teeth before heading to a Saturday baby sitting job and that "My toothbrush was slippery because I had just washed my hands. It just slipped and I swallowed it. At first, I couldn't breath," she said.

Doctors at St. Vincent Hospital took X-rays of Miss Shea's stomach, which, said her mother, Diane, clearly showed the toothbrush. She said doctors then removed the toothbrush, gave her some medication and sent her home.

"They took a long tube with a hook on the end and they got it out with the first try," said her mother. "Otherwise they would have had to do surgery."

Miss Shea got the toothbrush back and her mother said doctors suggested that she "tie a string to it the next time she brushes."

Swiss climbers found dead in tent

TALKEETNA, Alaska (AP) — Two Swiss mountain climbers have been found dead in their tents on Mount McKinley, apparently of carbon monoxide poisoning, the National Park Service says.

Nancy Spromsem, spokeswoman for the Park Service's Alaska region, said the two climbers, whose names haven't been released until next of kin have been identified, were found Sunday by their climbing partners.

The dead climbers were lying in the tent with the stove on, she said. They had apparently inhaled fumes from the stove, upon which it appeared they had been cooking stew.

The tent had been sealed up tightly to shield them from the snow and cold, Ms. Spromsem said.

The climbers were on the 14,000-foot level on West Buttress Route, which Ms. Spromsem said is the route most climbers take up the 20,320-foot peak, North America's highest mountain.

Achille Lauro hijackers planned to kidnap Americans, reports say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Arab terrorists who hijacked the Achille Lauro cruise ship intended to kidnap Americans on board and exchange them for about 50 captured Palestinians held by Israel, news reports said.

The plan failed when Syria refused to allow the captured Italian liner to dock, according to Italian prosecutors' documents cited by ABC News in a report Monday.

The documents, on which The Washington Post carried a similar report in today's editions, also said that Palestinian leader Mohammed Abbas handpicked the terrorists who hijacked the ship last year and directed every stage of the operation.

The report specifically absolves the Syrian government and Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat of complicity in the hijacking, the Post said.

When the plan failed, the hijackers became angry and killed American passenger Leon Klinghoffer, the reports said.

The documents say the hijackers were trained at a camp in Algeria and met with Abbas in Tunisia, ABC News said.

The Post said the 115-page prosecutors' report is to form the basis of the Italian government's case against four alleged hijackers and 11 other Arabs accused of involvement in the case.

The trial on charges including the hijacking and the murder of Klinghoffer is to open next week in Genoa, Italy. Abbas, also known as Abul Abbas, is among those to be tried in absentia. He was freed eight months ago by Italian officials after U.S. Air Force jets forced a plane carrying him and four alleged hijackers to land in Italy.

The report avoids criticizing the government of Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi for allowing Abbas to leave Italy last October, the Post said. It notes that at the time Abbas was released, there still were no indictments directly tying him to the hijacking, according to the newspaper.

Jet detained for entering Peru airspace

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Peru detained a Pan Am jetliner for almost eight hours when the plane entered Peruvian airspace without permission, but the flight was freed to continue to Los Angeles after the airline paid a $5,000 fine, officials said.

A Pan Am spokesman today denied reports by Peruvian officials that the Boeing 747 with 105 people aboard had been forced to the ground Monday in Lima by a warplane.

"We were able to radio the pilot and he said there was only verbal contact with the tower," said spokesman Jeff Kreindler.

Commercial U.S. planes have been barred from flying over Peru since 1984, when that country failed to renew an air travel agreement with the United States, Kreindler said. The pilot had been following a flight plan that mistakenly sent the plane over Peru, he said.

Passengers on Flight 210, en route from Santiago, Chile, to Los Angeles, said they hadn't seen military aircraft when the pilot announced that he had been ordered to land.

Passenger Maria Battista, 45, of Buenos Aires, said passengers remained calm, adding, "Everybody was perfect and quiet."

Passenger Bruce Downs, a Santiago resident, characterized the incident as a case of "a little dog biting a big dog."

The passengers left the plane after three hours and were allowed into an airport lounge, Kreindler said.

Food for thought

Several weeks ago Midlanders were treated to a second annual Gourmet Midland, one of a number of events staged during the Celebration of the Arts and co-sponsored by the Midland Arts Assembly and the Convention & Visitor's Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce.

Virtually all who attended and offered comment later said the culinary event was exceptional, attracting contributions from more than 20 Midland restaurants, bakeries, specialty food preparers and private clubs. The event was more than a "food fair." It was a true display of the culinary arts and, thus, was an appropriate part of the Celebration of the Arts which seeks to promote the wide spectrum of talent available in the Tall City.

All of which brings us to this point. At any time, but certainly during times when it is especially important to keep the local economy as strong as possible, all of us should be thinking about how we can best keep the most dollars at home. When we help any segment of our local professional or business community we actually help Midland and, as a result, indirectly at least, help all of us. Certainly catering should not be ignored in that effort.

This year's Gourmet Midland proved, if proof was needed, that Midland nowadays boasts outstanding chefs and top-flight catering specialists capable of producing and presenting food that is both great to taste and exciting to see.

We hope in the future those whose task it is to secure services for Midland's philanthropic galas and other events, public or private, will at least give serious thought to seeking out local talent prior to making any final decision about using out-of-town companies.

Big money is often involved. It would be good if more of it stayed in Midland.

Another View:

IRA's or tax reform?

The Senate Finance Committee hit a sensitive nerve with its tax-reform proposal to limit deductions for Indivixual Retirement Accounts, or IRAs, to workers not covered by pension plans. A number of senators, among them California's Alan Cranston, have leaped to defend the popular deduction, as have the financial institutions — banks, brokers, thrifts — that court IRA investors. IRAs, they say, are the average Joe's tax shelter and an important incentive for saving.

As politics, that message sells well. In the four years since IRAs were thrown open to all workers, a quarter of the nation's households have taken advantage of the opportunity to put up to $2,000 a year per worker, tax free, into an account to be drawn on after age 59. For many taxpayers without the wealth to enjoy the loopholes with which the tax code abounds, the IRA deduction has come to seem a matter of right.

But when one moves beyond politics to policy, the senators' defense of the IRA deduction hits shaky ground. Though the amount in IRAs has grown to $250 billion since 1982, when the accounts were first made available to taxpayers covered by pension plans, there has been no overall increase in the rate of personal savings.

The age of IRA holders (a large majority of IRAs belong to workers over 44) and their income level (two-thirds of the dollars deducted for retirement accounts are claimed by the 20 percent of taxpayers with adjustable gross incomes of over $30,000) suggest to economists that the major effect of the IRA deductions has simply been to encourage people already saving for retirement to shift their savings from one form to another. Even if some portion of the $70 billion added to IRAs in the last year represents saving that would not have occurred without the tax deduction, its value must be measured against the cost to the Treasury of securing it: In the current fiscal year, the IRA deduction will add $14.3 billion to the national debt. That's hardly an efficient way to promote saving.

The senators championing IRAs have not said which deduction they would crimp or eliminate to save their favorite tax provision. If they were willing to eliminate 401(k) plans, which are less universal and even less efficient at promoting saving than IRAs, the swap would be worth considering. But there's little sign of interest in such swapping. The campaign to preserve the popular IRA deduction so far looks less like a legitimate policy effort to perfect the Packwood bill than the opening wedge for special interests to tear it apart. If the choice is between IRAs and the possibility of genuine tax reform, taxpayers and the Senate should not hesitate to bid farewell to their IRA deductions.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 10, the 161st day of 1986. There are 204 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 10, 1935, Alcoholics Anonymous was founded in Akron, Ohio, by William G. Wilson and Dr. Robert Smith.

On this date:

In 1801, the north African state of Tripoli declared war on the United States in a dispute over safe passage of merchant vessels through the Mediterranean.

In 1865, the opera "Tristan und Isolde" by Richard Wagner made its premiere in Munich, Germany.

JACK ANDERSON

Kennedy law would help Jackie O.

WASHINGTON — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and her neighbors on the resort island of Martha's Vineyard are the only clear beneficiaries of a bill introduced by her brother-in-law, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., to settle a 15-year-old Indian claim to a small portion of the island.

Jack Anderson

The land in question, 238 acres in the township of Gay Head, used to be part of a reservation for the Wampanoag Indian tribe. But in 1870, Massachusetts opened up the reservation for non-Indians, and whites eventually bought much of the Wampanoags' land.

Kennedy's bill would appropriate $1.5 million of federal funds (Massachusetts would put up an equal amount) to buy a tract of land in Gay Head that the Wampanoags could develop. In return, the Indians would give up their court battle for title to the entire 238 acres. That lawsuit has clouded land titles and made it difficult for non-Indians to sell or mortgage their property, including some posh vacation homes. Title to a 325-acre estate owned by Onassis could also be in question as long as the Wampanoags push their land claim.

But Kennedy apparently did not break any conflict-of-interest rules by offering his bill. The rules state that senators may not propose legislation "the principal purpose of which is to further only" the interests of themselves or their immediate families. An ethics expert said that "only" is the key word; Kennedy's bill, if adopted, will benefit unrelated landowners as well as the former first lady.

A Kennedy aide also argued that the senator became involved in the Wampanoag dispute several years before Onassis acquired her property.

The negotiated settlement at the heart of Kennedy's bill has bitterly divided the Wampanoags. Dissenters claiming to represent 100 to 170 Wampanoags — almost half the tribe — accused those who agreed to the settlement of giving away basic aboriginal rights, including exclusive access to the Gay Head cliffs, possession of the beaches and hunting and fishing rights.

Wampanoag leaders claim the dissidents number 20 percent of the tribe at most. One tribal negotiator, Donald Widdiss, explained to our associate Stewart Harris why the Wampanoags didn't try for more concessions before they settled.

It seems the Bureau of Indian Affairs has not yet ruled whether the Wampanoags are a bona fide Indian tribe. The decision is expected sometime this month. Rather than gamble on the bureau's decision, Widdiss explained, the Wampanoags decided several years ago to settle with the state and the town; Kennedy's bill would supposedly nail down the settlement.

But the Indian bureau pulled the rug from beneath the Wampanoags when it announced recently that it will ask President Reagan to veto any settlement unless the tribe is given official recognition. The bureau's premise is that the federal government shouldn't be giving money to Indians who cannot prove their heritage.

What this means is that the Wampanoags may have negotiated away their rights for nothing. If the Indian Bureau rules against them, they come up empty-handed despite the settlement.

The Indians' attorney, Henry Sockbeson of the Native American Rights Fund, said his clients feel as if the rules were changed midway through the game. But he said the Wampanoags are honor-bound to stick with the negotiated settlement, even though he agrees it's a poor one.

This attitude infuriates Joan Patadal, a leader of the dissident Wampanoags. She blames the Native American Rights Fund for the settlement, and thinks that Kennedy's judgment was clouded by his special relationship with the widow and children of his slain brother, John F. Kennedy.

Meanwhile, the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs is holding up the Kennedy bill until the Indian Bureau decision on the Wampanoags' status. None of the committee members co-sponsored the legislation.

MINI-EDITORIAL: We'd certainly hate to be classified as "diehard" Nixon haters, in Newsweek's phrase, but we were frankly appalled at the magazine's recent cover story announcing that Richard Nixon is "back." To its credit, Newsweek did list all the various assaults on the Constitution approved by the former president. At the risk of seeming unforgiving, we'd suggest that the proper title for the puff piece should have been: "The Unindicted Co-Conspirator Is Back."

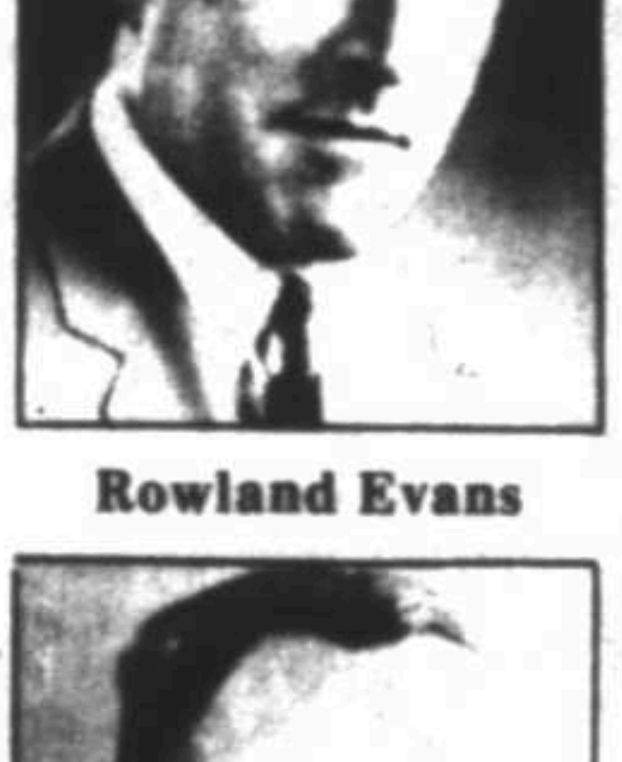
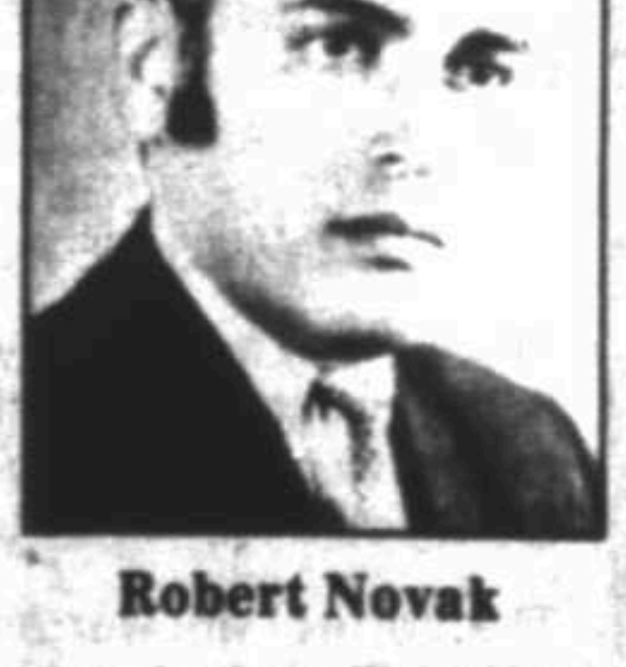
EVANS & NOVAK

Buchanan becoming increasingly isolated

WASHINGTON — Chief of staff Donald T. Regan's rejection of Pat Buchanan's choice for chief presidential speechwriter has more than ever isolated the commmunications director as an ideologue in a nest of pragmatists.



Rowland Evans



Robert Novak

Regan had fired Bently T. Elliott, a Buchanan ally, as top speechwriter. Buchanan's recommendation to promote speechwriter Peggy Noonan to replace Elliott sat on Regan's desk for weeks, then was turned down. "Pat is being treated with such contempt that Regan must be trying to force him out," one White House aide told us.

Regan's men deny it, and Buchanan doesn't think so. But nobody denies his isolation. At the 8 a.m. senior staff meeting each day, the only participants following an ideological agenda are Buchanan and Budget Director James Miller. They are described by colleagues as impractical "ideologues."

This is no right-left struggle. To the conservative movement, Don Regan is measurably less obstructive than his predecessor, James A. Baker. He actively supports Reagan's anti-tax cut and pro-contra commitments. But lesser conservative issues that do not engage the president's attention suffer. Thus, efforts to water down affirmative action have languished, and the White House has not mobilized to combat the assault against judicial nominations.

Regan has functioned as chief operating officer, exuding power and control. An exception has been the speechwriting shop, a den of creative, often feuding individualists shaping an administration that sounds more ideological than it is by words put in the president's mouth. Reagan's supply-side, anti-communist conservatism has been verbalized by Ben Elliott.

As Elliott's boss, Buchanan approved. But the chief speechwriter clashed with what are derogated as "mice": the chief of staff's lieutenants. Amid mutual charges of leaden prose and wooden ears is a struggle between caution and daring.

Regan would not tolerate the "friction," so Elliott had to go. In truth, he had pondered quitting for months. A soft landing was prepared: speechwriter for Rep. Jack Kemp's incipient presidential campaign. The harsher truth was that he had been fired.

The divided White House was displayed May 20 at Elliott's farewell party in the speechwriters' shop. Buchanan presided. National Security Council staffer Constantine Menges, fired a day earlier (and also bound for Kemp's campaign), was on hand. Regan and the "mice" were not invited. The president was, but since nobody told him, he did not show up to honor the man who had brought such elegant prose to his lips.

The succession looked like a struggle between Noonan and fellow speechwriter Tony Dolan. As a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author of Reagan's "evil empire" speech, Dolan's journalistic and conservative credentials are strong. But he had feuded with Elliott and had not favorably impressed Buchanan.

Buchanan picked Noonan, an exceptional writer. She accepted on condition that she meet Regan to explore an arrangement negating friction that ruined Elliott's final months. That meeting never took place.

Under Regan's businesslike procedure of letting lieutenants pick their subalterns and then be responsible for the consequences, Noonan should have been rubber-stamped. But Buchanan's memo sat on the chief's desk for weeks. Regan finally turned down Noonan and named Dolan acting chief. Noonan resigned, and a cover story had her leaving to write a book about the youths of Joseph Kennedy Jr. and John F. Kennedy.

Regan's lieutenants claim Noonan failed because the other speechwriters revolted against her, but that does not wash. For instance, speechwriter Dana Rohrabacher, the staff's senior Reaganite, made clear he would support Noonan though he preferred Dolan. Actually, Regan preferred a managing editor to take charge and calm the tempestuous speechwriting shop (a job description that may be filled by Terry Eastland, Justice Department press chief).

What the chief of staff may be seeking emerged in preparing the president's speech last week at Parris Island, S.C. The speechwriters' draft, harping on the Reagan Doctrine fighting communism in Central America, was rejected and replaced by a blurb on defense.

On Pat Buchanan's ideological agenda — that rarity in the White House — Central America ranks high. If he took Noonan's rejection as a personal affront and quit, one less voice would be there pursuing such issues regardless of political profit and loss. But Buchanan, avoiding criticism or complaint, sees a patriotic duty. However isolated he may be in Don Regan's White House, he is sticking around.

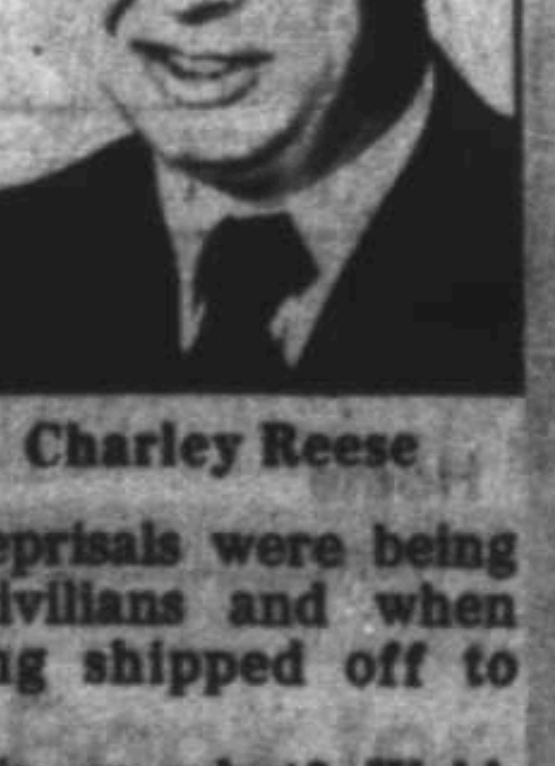
CHARLEY REESE

U.S. shouldn't be hypocritical about reprisals

If moral hypocrisy could be converted to heat, the world's energy problems would be solved for eternity. Take the current uproar over the war record of Kurt Waldheim, former United Nations secretary-general.



Charley Reese

All the revelations have proved nothing but that Waldheim lied about his role in the war. We now know that he served as a lieutenant with the German army in the Balkans when reprisals were being taken against civilians and when Jews were being shipped off to death camps.

The question is, so what? Waldheim, as a lieutenant, was in no position to stop either event from taking place. A soldier in wartime faces a simple choice: obey orders or be shot. Waldheim acted just the same as millions of soldiers did on both sides of the war. He obeyed orders.

In many European countries, the Nazis worked through the Jewish community leaders. They would go to the Jewish community leaders and say, "Give us the names and addresses of all the Jews in this community." Later, they would say to the Jewish leaders, "Have x-number of Jews down at the train station for shipment to labor camps." And the Jewish community leaders did exactly what they were told to do. Were they war criminals? Were they Nazi collaborators? Of course not.

Like Waldheim, they were in a position of limited choice. Their choice was either obey orders or die. And they knew that if they chose to die, their deaths would be meaningless because the Nazis would still get the lists and still ship the other Jews to the camps. Dead, they could do nothing. Alive, some opportunity might present itself to do at least some little thing.

Americans who have never known the horror of war, who have never stared down the barrel of a gun, should be careful in making moral judgments about people who lived under the extreme condition of having to make life or death decisions every single day.

The whole business of calling people war criminals is pure hypocrisy. We should have never staged those ridiculous Nuremberg war crimes trials. We should have simply rounded up the Nazi leaders and shot them as an act of vengeance earned by the right of conquest.

Instead, we tried to camouflage our vengeance with the color of law and in doing so, we trapped ourselves in an irreconcilable moral dilemma. The Nazi leaders were vicious killers but they violated no laws. There is no logical way you can try a German citizen for violating laws when in fact he obeyed the laws of his own government.

Let's take the act of reprisals, which some people call a war crime. In the occupied countries, the German army would frequently say to the population, if partisans kill German soldiers, we will round up so many civilians and execute them. We will do this, the Germans said, to discourage partisan warfare. Is that a war crime? If so, President Reagan is guilty and should be hanged.

The raid on Libya, which he ordered and which we all cheered, was precisely a reprisal. We did not kill the Libyans who planted the bomb in Berlin. We killed innocent Libyans who not did not plant the bomb, may not have known about it and couldn't have stopped those who ordered it even if they had known about it. In short, we did exactly what the German army did.

We said to the Libyans — if your terrorists kill our people, then we will make a random selection of some of your people and execute them. The fact that we executed them with bombs instead of rifles makes no difference at all. The principle of reprisals — whether practiced by the Nazis, the Americans, or the Israelis — is exactly the same. You kill the innocent people available because you can't lay hands on the guilty.

Is killing non-combatants a war crime? If so, we and the British are as guilty as the Nazis hanged at Nuremberg. We bombed Japanese and German cities with the full knowledge that thousands of innocent women and children would die in those cities. We simply chose, in cold blood, to execute them in order to further our goal of winning the war.

War itself is a crime against humanity. I'm willing to commit it to protect our country but I'm not willing to lie about the nature of it.

Charley Reese is a syndicated columnist for King Features Syndicate.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Gorbachev calls for aid

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev called for the establishment of an international program to provide free medical care, homes and financial aid to victims of nuclear accidents such as the Chernobyl disaster in the Soviet Ukraine.

Gorbachev discussed the Chernobyl accident at length Monday in a speech to Hungarian workers at the Csepel machine tool factory in Budapest.

Today, Gorbachev and the leaders of other Warsaw Pact countries hold a meeting in the Hungarian capital, and the Soviet leader said he would propose deep cuts in conventional military forces that both East and West keep in Europe.

Members of the Warsaw Pact are the Soviet Union, Hungary, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia, Romania and Bulgaria.

Leukemia rate higher

LONDON (AP) — A leukemia rate more than 10 times the normal level was detected among people under 25 years old living within 8 miles of the Dounreay nuclear plant in northern Scotland, says a study released Monday.

The report by the Scottish Health Service says that between 1979 and 1983, five cases of leukemia were discovered among people living near the plant, where statistically less than one-half of a case should have occurred.

"There is without any doubt a cluster of cases of leukemia near Dounreay which may have occurred by chance, but which, on statistics, appears to be very unlikely," said Dr. Mike Heasnan, director of the Health Service's information division.

Dounreay is run by the British Atomic Energy Authority as a prototype fast breeder reactor and a reprocessing plant, using chemicals to recover uranium and plutonium from spent fuel elements.

Strong support noted

BERLIN (AP) — Candidates endorsed by East Germany's Communist Party received more than 99.9 percent of the vote in parliamentary elections, the state-run news media said Monday.

The official ADN news agency reported 7,502 voters — .06 percent of the 12,398,619 people who cast ballots — did not support the slate of 500 candidates proposed by the Communist Party.

East Germans could vote for or against the candidates, but one could be defeated only if more than 50 percent of the electorate in his district voted against him. That has never happened since the first election was held in 1950 for the Volkskammer — Peoples' Parliament.

The main choice for eligible voters was whether or not to go to the polls, and ADN said the turnout was 99.73 percent.

Iran's phone links cut

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — An Iraqi air raid on an Iranian satellite ground station apparently has severed Iran's telephone and telex links with the world, Persian Gulf oil executives said today.

"We have no details, but what is certain is that all of Iran's telecommunications with the rest of the world are cut," said one Japanese oil company executive, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

He said his company's Tokyo headquarters had been unable to contact Tehran since Sunday when Iraq claimed its warplanes struck telecommunications stations at the northern Iranian region of Assad Abad.

Telephone and telex operators in Bahrain and elsewhere in the gulf region said today that all lines with Tehran still were down.

The Assad Abad region is home of Iran's largest satellite ground station, according to Dubai-based Arab diplomatic sources.

Indian protesters held

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Police arrested more than 500 workers of an opposition party for staging a noisy protest near Parliament in which they demanded that the army be deployed in Punjab state to check Sikh terrorism.

The demonstrators, including several leaders of the right-wing Indian People's Party, shouted slogans against the federal government and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Protesters were to be released later without being charged, police said.

They came from Hindu-dominated Haryana state, bordering Punjab and New Delhi.

The demonstration Monday was part of a campaign by the Indian People's Party to focus attention on Punjab, where more than 100 people, mostly Hindus, have been killed in Sikh terrorist attacks during the past five weeks.

Several opposition parties have demanded the army be deployed in four districts of Punjab to contain the violence.

Sun strike now possible

LONDON (AP) — Journalists at Rupert Murdoch's Sun newspaper voted Monday against continuing to work at the new high-technology printing plant that has been the target of violent protests by fired production workers.

That vote raised the possibility of a strike by the Sun's 230 journalists. They were the first to accept the $3,000 pay raise per person offered by Murdoch to move when he transferred his printing operations from central London to the new facility at Wapping in east London last January.

The Wapping plant produces Murdoch's four London newspapers — the tabloid Sun, which has Britain's largest circulation, and its Sunday sister, News of the World, and The Times and Sunday Times.

Journalists at the Sun previously rejected a strike call by the National Union of Journalists to back the more than 5,000 fired production workers, and the new vote came after 4½ months of daily picketing at Wapping and no sign of a settlement.

Clashes continue at squatter camp

WORLD

Palls of smoke from the KTC sauatter camp near Cape Town form a backdrop for a roadblock manned by South African police.

By DAVID CRARY

CROSSROADS, South Africa (AP) — Thousands of rival black squatters clashed for a second day today at the Crossroads squatter camp, wounding four journalists, including two cameramen working for British television.

Police firing tear gas and birdshot from armored vehicles drove thousands of young black militants off a ridge overlooking the shanty city where they had lined up opposite a huge crowd of conservative black vigilantes.

At least eight people were killed and 20,000 left homeless in Monday's fighting, a renewal of battles between black factions in May. The two groups of blacks are battling over ideology as well as control of the camp 12 miles from Cape Town.

Cameramen George De'Ath and Andile Sosi, filming for the British network Independent Television News, were found lying next to a house. They had been attacked with axes, colleagues said.

De'Ath and Sosi, both South Africans, were taken to Cape Town's Groote Schuur Hospital where De'Ath underwent surgery. De'Ath was in very serious condition, a doctor told reporters.

South African reporter Bert van Hees of Johannesburg's Citizen newspaper was shot in the arm when squatters opened fire on a police patrol that was taking a group of South African journalists through the devastated camp.

Photographer Patrick Durand, on assignment for the French agency Sipa, was shot while taking pictures during a tense standoff between the opposing black groups.

Journalists occasionally have been hurt in clashes between police and rioters, and have been stoned by crowds. But this was the first time several journalists were wounded in a single conflict.

The vigilantes, known as "Witdoeke," Afrikaans for the white handkerchiefs they wear, and the young black militants, known as "comrades," lined up on the ridge in the early morning hours.

They hurled stones and abuse at each other for several hours. As the number of young militants swelled to several thousand, police in armored cars firing tear smoke and birdshot rolled in behind them.

Panic ensued as the militants, stationed between the advancing police and the vigilantes, fled in all directions and smoke billowed through the settlement.

On Monday, a day-long attack by the vigilantes against the militants and refugees destroyed hundreds of shacks in the KTC section of Crossroads. The combatants used guns, axes and clubs, and arsonists torched hundreds of shacks. Strong winds whipped the flames from shack to shack.

Since the first fighting broke out in mid-May at Crossroads, more than 50,000 people have been left homeless and 41 killed.

Residents and clergy have accused police of allowing or even encouraging the vigilantes to attack the homes of young militants in the outlying sections of the squatter settlement. Some said they saw police ignoring vigilantes who were staging attacks.

"KTC would still have been there if police were in control of the situation. I suppose the police wanted the destruction of KTC to occur," said the Rev. Allan Brews, a Methodist minister who has tried to negotiate grievances between the two sides.

Lt. Attie Laubscher, a Cape Town police spokesman, said, "For the last time, I categorically deny that. We haven't got time to interview people and ask. 'What side are you on?' On several occasions, we fired at both sides."

The government wants to move most residents of Crossroads, a squalid settlement of more than 100,000 people, to a new black township, Khayelitsha, 6 miles farther from Cape Town.

Most residents have refused to move. Thousands of the victims of the first round of fighting were living in refugee tent camps, church halls and community centers, hoping to rebuild on the same site where their original homes were destroyed.

Philip compares royal life to 'Dynasty'

LONDON (AP) — Prince Philip, who turns 65 today, complains that the British royal family is treated like the cast from a television soap opera.

"People only want to know about the splashy things, or the scandalous things. They're not really interested in anything else," Queen Elizabeth II's husband was quoted as saying in an interview published today in Woman's Own magazine.

"What you want is a 'Dynasty' production where everybody can see what we do privately," the Duke of Edinburgh lamented, referring to the U.S.-made TV drama about the turbulent life of a fictional Denver oil baron and his family.

The outspoken prince defended his second son, Andrew, the dashing prince who is marrying a childhood friend, Sarah Ferguson, next month after a several publicized affairs with leggy models and undiscovered actresses — flings that earned him the sobriquet "Randy Andy."

"I'm delighted he's getting married, but not because I think it will keep him out of trouble because, in fact, he's never been in trouble in the sense the popular press would have it," Philip was quoted as saying.

"As a parent, you can either try to compete with your children or you can feel proud of them," he was quoted as saying. "I've opted for the latter."

The Greek-born consort, whose naval career was cut short when his wife took the throne in 1952, said he supported Andrew's decision to remain in the navy as a lieutenant and helicopter pilot after the July 23 wedding.

Fair, warm days due

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair and very warm is the forecast for Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The high is expected to reach the lower 90s on Wednesday with winds out of the east at 10-15 mph.

Wednesday's fair skies will be a carry-over from tonight. The NWS is calling for a low in the middle 60s and easterly winds at five to 10 mph.

Monday's high was 11 degrees below the record high of 105 set in 1981. This morning's low of 71 was 20 degrees above the record low set for this date in 1975.

STATE

Warm humid air from the Gulf of Mexico triggered thunderstorms today along Texas coastal sections, forcing evacuations of about 100 residents from low-lying areas, while a twister caused damage in a Panhandle community, authorities said.

Residents living near Peach Creek at Splendora were evacuated from their flooded homes in boats late Monday, a police dispatcher said.

A tornado that touched down 3 miles west of Memphis on Monday then skirted the northwest portion of the community, heavily damaging a General Telephone Co. district office and two restaurants, said Charles Waller, police dispatcher.

He said no injuries were reported. But Jerry Hatley, Texas Department of Public Safety dispatcher in Amarillo, said the twister caused about $1 million in damage to telephone company computer equipment and the building.

The National Weather Service said rain fell from the Texas-Louisiana border to near Palacios. Drier air prevailed from West Texas through the Big Bend with generally clear skies.

Fog shrouded the Texarkana area, the weather service said.

Early-morning temperatures were generally in the 70s across the state, except some 80 degree readings in the lower Rio Grande valley and some 60 degree readings in the Panhandle and far West Texas.

Extreme readings ranged from 81 degrees at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station to 55 degrees at Marfa.

Winds were generally from the south or southeast at 5 to 15 mph statewide, and light and variable in far West Texas and the Big Bend.

The weather service said scattered thunderstorms were expected statewide in the next 24 hours, with highs generally in the ' Dntinue over most of the state except the far west, Trans-Pecos and Big Bend area.

Randall hits dramatic homer to nail SA

'Sap' breaks out of slump in style

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

A night of steaming emotions and carefully thoughtout strategy all became academic when James "Sap" Randall powered a two-run homer over the right field fence with one out in the ninth to give Midland's Angels a dramatic 8-7 Texas League win over the San Antonio Dodgers at Angel Stadium Monday night.

It was Randall's second homer of the game, third in two nights and tenth of the season, giving Midland's its third straight win to keep alive those flickering TL West Division pennant hopes. The Angels are now 2½ back after Beaumont beat league leading El Paso, 14-7, Monday.

If any one was to win this game in which Midland trailed 7-4 going into the home sixth, the veteran first baseman from Whistler, Ala., was the logical nominee. Randall is on the kind of rampage that revives memories of when the Comanches roamed West Texas.

RANDALL is 17 for his last 29 at bats (.586) and in going 4-for-4 with three RBI Monday stretched his batting streak to seven games.

"Randall has been pushed back to AA ball the last three years, but he can hit triple A pitching," said Manager Joe Maddon, who watched the game-winning blow from the stands. "He's one of the best hitters I've ever managed."

Maddon got the thumb in the seventh after arguing a close play at third when Billie Merrifield was thrown out trying to stretch a run-scoring double into a triple. An inning earlier, second baseman Mark McLemore got the heave-ho after being picked off first while DH Kevin King exited in the ninth for comments following Ken Harvey's lead off double down the left field line.

"We played with a lot of emotion tonight, which is how we are going to have to play the rest of the way," said Maddon.

SO THE big decisions in the ninth were up to pitching coach and acting manager Aurelio Monteagudo and he had some big ones.

With a runner on third, two out and lefthanded Tracy Woodson, a known game-wrecker at large, coming up. Monteagudo went out to the mound, maybe to lift his righthanded Terry Clark for Dwayne Buice?

"No, Terry was pitching well and is tougher on left handed hitters. I just wanted to remind him how to pitch to Woodson," Monteagudo explained. Woodson, who batted in seven runs in a game on a previous trip to Midland, flied to center for the third out.

In the home ninth, Jeff Schaefer opened with a single and John Hotchkiss fouled off his third bunt attempt for a strikeout. "With Randall coming up," Monteagudo said, "I didn't want a double play," something Midland had already hit into twice.

And with Randall at bat after taking a high fast ball, San Antonio catcher Joe Szekley stopped the game for a conference with pitcher Phil Torres and manager Gary LaRocque. "I think he was trying to change the defense, adjust how some of the infielders were playing," Maddon guessed.

There was no defense for what Randall did on the next pitch, a fast ball down over the right field fence. In the seventh inning, Randall's homer to right had pulled Midland to within one, 6-7, of the Dodgers.

Sap stopped to watch that one. "The second homer was off the end of the bat. I hit the first homer harder, but I was watching to see if it stayed fair. It was close," Randall explained. Estimates were that it landed somewhere around the 16th green up on the hill at Hogan. The second one only reached the 15th green.

Randall's binge comes after a 2-for-29 slump. The turnaround? "I'm concentrating and taking extra BP."

Alexander 'pitches' Arizona to title

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Arizona's Gary Alexander didn't achieve his goal in the championship game of the College World Series, but he wasn't disappointed.

Alexander pitched a three-hit shutout for eight innings and finished with a seven-hitter as the Wildcats thumped top-ranked Florida State 10-2 on Monday to win their third NCAA baseball championship.

"I don't even consider myself a pitcher," Alexander said. "I like to hit. It was the other way around today — I couldn't hit."

Alexander was named to the all-tournament team as both a pitcher and designated hitter. He hit .263 in the Series but was 0 for 4 Monday.

"My goal was I wanted to get as many hits as they did," the junior right-hander said with a smile. "It didn't work out. I can't be disappointed — we won the national championship."

Alexander, 8-2, was within three outs of becoming the first pitcher to hurl a complete-game shutout in the title game since Jim Withers of Southern California in 1961. Florida State bunched four hits in the ninth to score twice.

"I really wanted to shut them out, but I was trying too hard," Alexander said.

Mike Senne, named the tournament's most outstanding player, and Gar Millay hit two-run homers off Richie Lewis in the sixth to make it 6-0. Lewis relieved starter Mike Loynd, 20-3, after Chip Hale led off the inning with a double.

Four straight hits and a steal of home by Tommy Hinzo helped the Wildcats add three runs in the seventh. Hinzo walked, stole second and scored on Hale's triple in the eighth.

"It was unusual being ahead instead of being behind," said Arizona Coach Jerry Kindall, whose team rallied from 7-0 and 5-0 deficits in the Series. "We didn't want to be nonchalant, and we weren't."

Kindall said pitching coach Jim Wing decided Alexander should start rather than 16-3 Gilbert Heredia, who beat Florida State on Friday.

"Jim Wing said, 'Gary's our man. He's got the fire in his eye,' " Kindall said. "Jim Wing has wrung the most out of this pitching staff, the likes of which you can't imagine."

Fifth-ranked Arizona, 49-19, will add its championship trophy to those won in 1976 and 1980. Florida State, 61-13, lost the only other time it played in the title game.

"It was a great year," Seminoles' Coach Mike Martin said. "It's just too bad we were not able to play up to our full ability here in the last game. It was just an old-fashioned whipping."

Nancy Lieberman ready to join man's world

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Bruised but undaunted, Nancy Lieberman says she's ready to become the first woman to play in an organized men's professional basketball league game when the Springfield Fame opens its season at home Tuesday night against Staten Island.

It took only four days of practice with the United States Basketball League team for Lieberman to learn a lesson, etched in livid bruises, in the laws of physics that says when a small object, such as a 5-foot-10 woman, collides at high speed with a large object, such as a 6-8 man over 200 pounds, the small object is going to go flying.

But she maintains her disadvantages in strength and quickness are "something I've just got to learn to work around and I think I'm smart enough to do it."

"I've had to develop a constant awareness of where those big bodies are on the floor all the time — even in the huddle," she said. "Once one of the guys casually reached up to scratch his head in a huddle and I got an elbow. "My teammates have been super, but I'm just another basketball player when I'm out there.

"It's hard to curb the competitive instincts, but I have to learn to go to my strengths," she said. "If I tried to drive on a seven-footer, I'd wake up three days later in the hospital. But I can utilize my outside shot and be a leader on the floor."

The zone defenses allowed in the summer, developmental league also will let Fame Coach Henry Bibby protect his unusual rookie point guard.

"We will be using zones a lot when she is in," Fame owner Harry Gilligan said. "But that doesn't mean we will be giving up anything."

In the Fame's 135-115 exhibition romp over Westchester last Friday, Lieberman played the second and fourth quarters, and was one of five Springfield players to score in double figures, with 10 points.

"She'll get playing time. She's very competitive," Bibby said. "She's a professional and although she's had back spasms and gotten bruised pretty badly, she's just gone about her job and never complained. There isn't a coach who wouldn't like a player with that kind of attitude."

"She's tough," said 6-8 rookie forward Andre Patterson from New Mexico. "She plays defense, she passes and plays in the open court. She can keep up."

Despite her success in the women's game, the largest adjustment Lieberman said she has had to make is to the speed of the men's game.

"The first couple of days were quite an experience," she recalled. "My passes just weren't working the same way as they did against women in the Dallas recreational center. These guys think five steps ahead of the pass.

"But unless I can play against people who are better than I am — and at 27 I think I'm just reaching my prime — I'll never know how good I could be," she said. "I don't need the money. Basketball has opened a lot of doors for me and it's been fun. This opportunity is just the icing on the cake."

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Falling for fall bad habit...

A few notes while running between the dots.

We still have a long, hot summer ahead of us before the first kickoff of the football season, but some big news may be coming again before the start of the high school season.

Midland Lee set a school record for season tickets sold last year and that record won't be topped since MISD can't sell anymore season tickets for Lee than they did last year. But Midland High fans may jump on the wagon this year since the Bulldogs are the host team for the Sept. 26 meeting between Lee and MHS.

SINCE THIS will be the first District 4-5A game for both teams, it insures that the game will mean everything to both teams. There is no doubt that it will be a sellout and Bulldog fans should gobble season tickets at a record rate to insure a seat at that contest...

Lee should have no trouble matching last year's season ticket march since the Rebels again will host Odessa Permian on Oct. 24. There is no doubt that it will take a season ticket to get into that game also, especially in view of the fact that MHS is open that weekend. Also Lee season ticket holders will have the option to purchase a ticket for the Lee-MHS game...

It seems like we have to keep mentioning the fact that there is a long summer ahead of us, but with the Texas Rangers and Houston Astros in first place through June 9, one can't help but think of what a World Series between the two teams would mean to the state during the Sesquicentennial celebrations.

These are two teams which were picked by Sports Illustrated as two of the eight worst teams in major league baseball. Wonder if SI would even cover a "Remember the Alamo" World Series?...

And are you scratching your head over the demise of the lovable, but inept Chicago Cubs? You really shouldn't be. The finger should be easily pointed at Cub GM Dallas Green.

WRITERS ARE blaming the Cub woes on the failure of starting pitching, but when you consider the fact of the Cubbies' outfield, the problem mounts. Bob Dernier is hitting less than .200 and left field is played by clubhouse committee.

Who did Green let get away? Consider Mel Hall and Joe Carter of Cleveland for starters. Both have eight homers. Carter had a 21-game hitting streak, the longest in the majors before coming to an end Monday and Hall is having a career year after a bad car accident in 1985. What would they mean to the Cubs?

Houston also has a kid named Billy Hatcher in center. He has won a starting job on merit. Over the weekend, Hatcher was 7-for-10 against Los Angeles and 4-for-5 against the Dodgers' Fernando Valenzuela. And yes, he is a former Midland Cub and another Chicago outfielder to get away from Green.

Other players who have made an impact this year who once wore the ChiCub uniform are reliever Donnie Moore of the California Angels, reliever Bruce Sutter of the Atlanta Braves, infielder Scott Fletcher of the Texas Rangers and starting pitcher Mike Krukow of the San Francisco Giants. All played in Midland...

NOW THAT Midland fans are in the process of watching for Midland Angels to hit it big in the Bigs, second baseman Mark McLemore appears to be a "can't miss" choice. A year ago, McLemore had a great first half of the season and ended badly with a poor second half showing in the Texas League. He is off to another good start this year with a .322 batting average and 38 stolen bases as a leadoff hitter, but a lot of major league eyes will be on McLemore to see if he can produce those kind of numbers in the second half.

McLemore seems to control his own destiny. California second baseman Bobby Grich can't play too much longer and the Angels need more youth transfusions like rookie Wally Joyner at first base...

Maybe the summer won't be so long after all. There seems to be enough to keep interest high until former Lee great Junior Miller plays for the Dallas Cowboys. I guess I'm always falling for fall. We all have our faults.

The Baltimore Orioles' 18-9 victory over New York on Sunday took four hours and 16 minutes — the longest nine-inning American League game ever — not counting a 40-minute rain delay.

STREAKS

Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox broke an 0-for-22 slump with a third-inning single Sunday against Oakland.

SWINGS

Ray Knight of the New York Mets, who batted .218 last season, went 2-for-4 Sunday against Pittsburgh and raised his average to .335, third-best in the National League.

June 10

1921 — Babe Ruth of the New York Yankees became baseball's all-time home run leader by cracking his 120th off Cleveland's Jim Bagby.

1944 — Joe Nuxhall, at 15 years, 10 months and 11 days, became the youngest player in major league history when he pitched 2-3 of an inning for the Cincinnati Reds in an 18-0 loss to the St. Louis Cardinals.

1966 — Cleveland's Sonny Siebert tossed the only no-hitter of the year as the Indians beat the Washington Senators 2-0.

Sutton moves closer to 300

Associated Press

Don Sutton got within one victory of the vaunted 300-mark Monday night by outdueling a pitcher who has already reached that lofty plateau.

Sutton pitched a two-hitter and led the California Angels to a 3-0 triumph over Tom Seaver and the Chicago White Sox.

"Up 'til now I haven't thought about it," said Sutton of going for his 300th victory.

Sutton, 4-5, will get his chance to reach that mark Saturday at home against Kansas City.

Doug DeCinces hit a three-run homer in the fourth inning as the Angels ended Chicago's four-game winning streak.

Seaver, 2-4, entered the game with 306 victories and Sutton began the night with 298 for a total of 604 for the two starting pitchers.

That was one short of the record, which occurred on Aug. 26, 1926, when Washington's Walter Johnson, with 408 victories, faced Chicago's Red Faber, who had won 197. Johnson defeated Faber 9-3.

The host White Sox got their only two hits in the fifth inning when Bobby Bonilla and Scott Bradley led off with singles, putting runners on first and third. Sutton struck out the next three batters.

"That was the best inning I've had since I can't remember when," said Sutton. "The curve ball was my best pitch, but if I'm going to win, I have to change speeds and pitch to spots. Control was the key."

Sutton struck out eight and walked two. Seaver yielded three hits in seven innings.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Twins 3, Rangers 2

Kent Hrbek scored from first base on Tom Brunansky's looping double with two outs in the 10th inning as Minnesota broke Texas' seven-game winning streak.

Hrbek singled with two outs off Mitch Williams, 5-1, for his third hit of the game. Greg Harris relieved and Brunansky followed with a looper that center fielder George Wright backed up to field, and Hrbek scored ahead of second baseman Toby Harrah's relay.

Baseball Scene

Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 1

Dave Stieb and Tom Henke combined on a six-hitter and Lloyd Moseby and Jesse Barfield hit solo home runs to lead Toronto over Boston.

Stieb, 2-7, allowed six hits before getting relief help in the ninth from Henke, who gave up a sacrifice fly Dwight Evans.

Moseby's homer opened the scoring in Toronto's two-run fourth, while Barfield made it 5-0 with a solo shot in the sixth.

Yankees 9, Tigers 7

Pinch-hitter Butch Wynegar's bases-loaded single in the 11th inning drove in two runs and lifted New York over Detroit.

The Yankees, with the help of two home runs and four RBI by Don Mattingly, had built a 7-4 lead going into the ninth. But the Tigers tied it against relief ace Dave Righetti on a two-run single by Kirk Gibson and sacrifice fly by Lance Parrish.

Brewers 3, Orioles 2

Robin Yount hit a sacrifice fly with one out in the ninth inning to lead Milwaukee over Baltimore, snapping the Orioles' winning streak at four.

Rich Bordi relieved starter Storm Davis, 5-5, with runners at second and third and one out. After Mike Felder was intentionally walked to load the bases, Yount hit a sacrifice fly to right to drive in Earnest Riles, who had singled off Davis.

Indians 6, A's 5

Brett Butler singled home Andy Allanson from second with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning as Cleveland sent Oakland to its sixth straight loss.

Jose Canseco of the A's doubled twice and drove in three runs, increasing his major league-leading total to 56. Joe Carter of the Indians went 0-for-3 with a walk and ended his hitting streak at 21 games, longest in the majors this season.

Mariners 5, Royals 3

Bob Kearney drove in two runs with his first homer of the year to help Seattle snap a five-game losing streak by beating Kansas City.

Winner Mark Langston, 5-5, allowed only three hits before leaving in the ninth with tightness in his left elbow as the Mariners notched their seventh consecutive victory in Kansas City. The Royals have not won at home against Seattle since Sept. 9, 1984.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Astros 5, Padres 3

Kevin Bass, Bill Doran, Glenn Davis and Craig Reynolds hit solo home runs to lead Houston over host San Diego.

Bass homered in the fourth inning and Doran and Davis connected in the fifth off Padres starter Eric Show, 3-4. Reynolds homered in the ninth off Tim Stoddard.

Rookie Jim Deshaies, 2-2, pitched two innings for the victory. Aurelio Lopez worked the final two innings for his first save.

Phillies 3, Mets 2

Glenn Wilson singled home Mike Schmidt from second base with one out in the 10th inning to give visiting Philadelphia its victory over New York.

The loss snapped New York's four-game winning streak. It also marked the first time in 31 games this season that the Mets lost a game in which they led after seven innings.

Rick Anderson, making his major-league debut after pitching nine years in the minors, held the Phillies to one unearned run on four hits over seven innings and left leading 2-1. After the game, Anderson, who was purchased from Class AAA Tidewater on Sunday, was sent back to the minors.

Pirates 6, Cubs 5

Pinch-hitter Jim Morrison's double off Chicago relief ace Lee Smith scored R.J. Reynolds with the winning run in the 11th inning as Pittsburgh edged the Cubs.

Cubs reliever Jay Baller had retired 10 straight batters, including the first five on strikeouts, until Reynolds lined a leadoff double in the 11th. One out later, Morrison doubled to right.

Expos 5, Cardinals 4

St. Louis second baseman Tommy Herr's throwing error with two outs in the ninth inning allowed pinch-runner Casey Candaele to score, capping a two-run rally that boosted Montreal past the Cardinals.

Trailing 4-3, Andres Galarraga, who had homered earlier, opened the ninth with a double off Todd Worrell, 3-4. Herm Winningham singled home Galarraga and took second on the throw to the plate.

Dodgers 6, Reds 5

Mariano Duncan, who hit an inside-the-park homer earlier in the game, singled home the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning and Los Angeles also got two home runs by Mike Marshall and a homer from Bill Madlock to beat Cincinnati.

Tom Niedenfuer, 4-2, was the winning pitcher, pitching 2⅔ innings of one-hit relief. Tom Browning, 3-6, took the loss.

Marshall took over the NL homer lead with 15.

"When he goes on a tear like this, he'll hit anybody," says Maddon. "The thing about it is that during his tough time, there was no bat throwing in frustration and he didn't let it effect his defense. He is playing better defense now than he did last year. He is our quiet leader. He leads by deed."

Moving up to the second spot in the order has also helped. "With McLemore getting on base so often, I wanted Randall batting second where he could do some damage. Having Merrifield, Walker and Tovar behind him means they can't pitch around him," says Maddon.

San Antonio used five pitchers and Midland four. Clark with three innings of two-hit ball got his fourth win. Until Randall homered, Szekley, with two doubles and three RBI, was the hero for the Dodgers.

McLemore and Merrifield both had two RBI.

Harrelson appoints Haller as Chisox GM

CHICAGO (AP) — Ken "Hawk" Harrelson continued his reshuffling of the front office by naming former major league catcher Tom Haller general manager of the Chicago White Sox.

Haller, 48, was managing the White Sox Class AA affiliate at Birmingham, Ala., when he was named Monday to his new position. Haller also had a tour of duty as executive vice president of the San Francisco Giants.

"I received a phone call last night," said Haller, an Illinois native. "It was a surprise to me. It's exciting for me to have an opportunity to be back in the major leagues."

Haller said he and Harrelson, who is vice president in charge of baseball operations, will be working together.

"Hawk will make the trades but we'll be kicking ideas back and forth. We'll do a little arguing, but it will be an atmosphere of give and take."

Harrelson, who last Thursday fired his chief assistant, Dave Dombrowski, because of a difference in "baseball philosophy," said "Tommy is a solid baseball man. We will work together. I was becoming desk-locked."

"He was a logical choice," said Harrelson. "Tommy and I think alike."

Harrelson said Alvin Dark, director of the minor leagues and player development, recommended Haller for the job.

"Tommy's duties will be the duties of a general manager," said Harrelson, who had been a broadcaster with the White Sox before assuming the top job last October when he replaced Roland Hemond.

"I always said I was going to get a general manager," said Harrelson. "I thought about Tommy last winter and the biggest reason I didn't make the move sooner was because he was doing such a good job at Birmingham.

Haller, in his first job as a manager, posted a 33-29 record at Birmingham.

A native of Lockport, Ill. — 100 miles northwest of Chicago — Haller played in the major leagues as a catcher with San Francisco, Los Angeles and Detroit.

He batted .257 in his 12 seasons with 134 home runs and 504 runs batted in. The highlight of his career was in 1962 when he homered and drove in three runs for the Giants in a World Series game against the New York Yankees.

Haller's brother, Bill, a former major league umpire, is a scout for the White Sox.

Haller was a coach with the Giants in 1978 and 1979 and became their general manager in 1981 until late last season.

"Haller did a helluva job with the Giants," said Harrelson. "Look at all the fine, young talent they have."

France, Soviets zip foes

World Cup

MEXICO CITY (AP) — European powers France and the Soviet Union pitched shutouts Monday to secure places in the second round of the World Cup soccer championship.

The Soviets clinched first place in Group C with a 2-0 victory over Canada in Irapuato. France, the European champion, beat Hungary 3-0 at Leon.

Previously, Brazil and Denmark had made the second portion of the 24-team tournament.

While the Soviets await a third-place team from either Group A, B or F for a game Sunday in Leon, the French will have a one-week respite before facing the runner-up in Group A in Mexico City on June 17. That could be either Italy or Argentina, the winners of the last two Cups.

Hungary's only chance to move on would be as a third-place team — four of them advance — but its minus-7 goal differential just about precludes that.

As for Canada, it went scoreless while losing all three games in its World Cup debut.

The Soviets fielded a team of nine second-stringers against Canada, feeling it already was assured of moving on. The move nearly backfired as the plucky Canadians kept things scoreless for 57 minutes.

But Oleg Blokhin scored after Igor Belanov, who had just entered the game, gave him a side-footed pass. Blokhin kicked it in and then fell in the goalmouth, apparently injurying his knee. He was replaced by Alexander Zavarov.

Zavarov made it 2-0 in the 74th minute, collecting a pass from Gennady Litovchenko on the edge of the penalty area and chipping it over charging goalie Tino Lettieri.

"When we came here were we were not considered favorites but forecasts are only forecasts," Soviet Coach Valery Lobanovsky said. "Our team has shown what it can do.

"Our objective was to finish first in the group and we achieved this. We don't know our next opponent, but we'll continue preparing as we have done. We'll be ready."

Tony Waiters, coach of Team Canada, picked the Soviets to make the semifinals, at least.

"They have to be taken very seriously and I think they'll reach the last four," Waiters predicted. He also expressed pride in his team.

"We have given all we've got. We're disappointed at not scoring a goal or winning a point, but we've learned what we need to do in the future to improve Canadian soccer."

Branko Segota, the striker who did not start in any of Canada's games here, accused his coach of "blackballing" him.

"There was no reason for him to do this to me," said Segota, 24, who played with the MISL champion San Diego Sockers until just before this tournament began. "I didn't do anything that was bad for him to blackball me from the national team. It was not fair to me. I don't want to go through this same thing again.

"I decided to come here and take all this just for my own satisfaction of being in a World Cup."

Waiters had said Segota lacked outdoor training to play a full game. Segota did come on in the second half of each contest.

France went up 1-0 when Yannick Stopyra headed in a long centering pass by William Ayache. The Hungarians tried to open it up in the second half, but that is France's game. The French scored when Jean Tigana converted a superb give-and-go with Dominique Rocheteau, and again when Rocheteau converted Michel Platini's pass.

"I know that everything was not perfect, we were too hesitant in the first half," French Coach Henri Michel said. "We missed a lot of opportunities but I'm satisfied."

"We know how the Bulgarians play, we played Argentina once and we also know the way Italy plays," he said. "They are three tough teams and we are going to have to do our best."

Hungary was going to do its best to get out of Mexico, not bothering to await the other results.

"We are going home just as quickly as we can," Hungarian Coach Gyorgy Mezey said. "Considering everything I'm not too disappointed. Unfortunately the circumstances do not allow European teams to do their best."

Sidekicks fold tent

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Sidekicks folded Monday when owner Donald Carter, facing $5 million in losses over the club's first two seasons, couldn't find a suitable buyer for the Major Indoor Soccer League franchise.

Carter, who also owns the Dallas Mavericks of the National Basketball Association, requested a $2.5 million line of credit that a group of potential investors couldn't meet, club officials said.

Auditor Ron Tharp cited financial losses as the reason for the team's demise.

"We lost $5 million in two years. It's just that simple," he said.

An investment group headed by oilman Jim Graham had been discussing a possible purchase of the team, which averaged 7,700 fans per game last year at Reunion Arena. But General Manager Ron Adkins said negotiations ended Monday.

"Unfortunately, the final proposal did not satisfy the conditions outlined to meet the team's terms of sale," Adkins said. "Both parties gave it their best efforts."

Adkins said Carter planned to sell the club's assets.

"This is a very sad day," Adkins said. "We had a lot of good memories to cherish. I thank the fans for their support and I hope some day that professional indoor soccer will be back in the area."

Graham had said over the weekend that terms of agreement looked good.

'Bomb Squad' hits Atlanta

ATLANTA (AP) — After a dismal season last year, a new but aging group of bench-warmers has Atlanta Braves fans talking about a possible pennant race in 1986.

Fans show up for Braves' games at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium carrying posters that say, "I love the Bomb Squad," and wearing old-fashioned aviator's caps that look like beanies with ear flaps.

The Braves' announcers on Channel 17 joke that the station's call letters, WTBS, stand for "We're The Bomb Squad." And hawkers outside the stadium offer Bomb Squad T-shirts.

The cause of all the excitement is six backup players who are hitting .295 as a group with 50 RBI, 28 doubles, five triples, eight home runs and 10 stolen bases between them.

The group, named by Ted Simmons during spring training, has been given credit for several Atlanta victories.

Simmons can play catcher, third base or first base. Chris Chambliss is a reserve first baseman. Billy Sample is a backup outfielder, as is Omar Moreno. Bruce Benedict is a backup catcher, and Andres Thomas a rookie shortstop.

Chambliss leads the group with a .484 batting average. Benedict, who batted a pitiful .202 last year, is hitting .333. Thomas is batting .312.

Moreno has chalked up nine doubles, five triples and one home run in 28 hits. Sample has provided power off the bench with four homers. And Simmons, who at .244 has the lowest batting average of the crew, has more RBI than hits — 12 to 11.

"It was a concept that I hoped would bring the bench players together, help them see they can contribute as a group," Simmons said. "It's hard to sit."

Adding experience to the bench was one of the goals of new manager Chuck Tanner, who was given the job of nursing the Braves back to respectability after last year's 66-96 record.

The average age of last year's bench was 26½ years. This year, Thomas, at 22, is the only player not in his 30s.

Experience is the key to the group's success, Tanner said.

"All of our bench players, with the exception of Thomas — who acts like he's been up here for 20 years, even though he's only a rookie — are veterans who have been starters and stars in the past," Tanner said.

"You can't fool them, and you can't scare them," he continued. "No matter how crucial the situation, how much pressure there is, they know how to handle it because they've handled it before."

Gold jumps

LONDON (AP) — Precious metal prices increased sharply in Europe and Hong Kong today amid fears of a production crisis in South Africa, the world's largest gold producer. The U.S. dollar was mixed but little changed.

Gold rose by up to $6 in Hong Kong, London and Zurich after gaining $9.60 in New York Monday.

Later in the day, gold lost some of its momentum as dealers concluded that South Africa's latest wave of violence was less likely to affect mine production than previously thought.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $348.25 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $342.40. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $347.55.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.31 a troy ounce, up from Monday's $5.20.

The dollar continued to fluctuate in a narrow range on the strength of technical trading, since there was no major economic news or central bank intervention to influence currency exchanges.

New worries about Mexico's debt problems and the resumed fall in oil prices also weighed on the dollar. "The bullish trend for the dollar had to pause because the (Mexican debt) affects the U.S. banks quite strongly," said a trader.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rebounded after losing ground against the Japanese yen for five straight days, gaining 0.95 yen to close at 168.35.

In London, the British pound was stronger, quoted at $1.5038 compared with $1.4985 Monday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—2.2293 West German marks, up from 2.2257

—1.8365 Swiss francs, down from 1.8387

—7.0995 French francs, down from 7.10

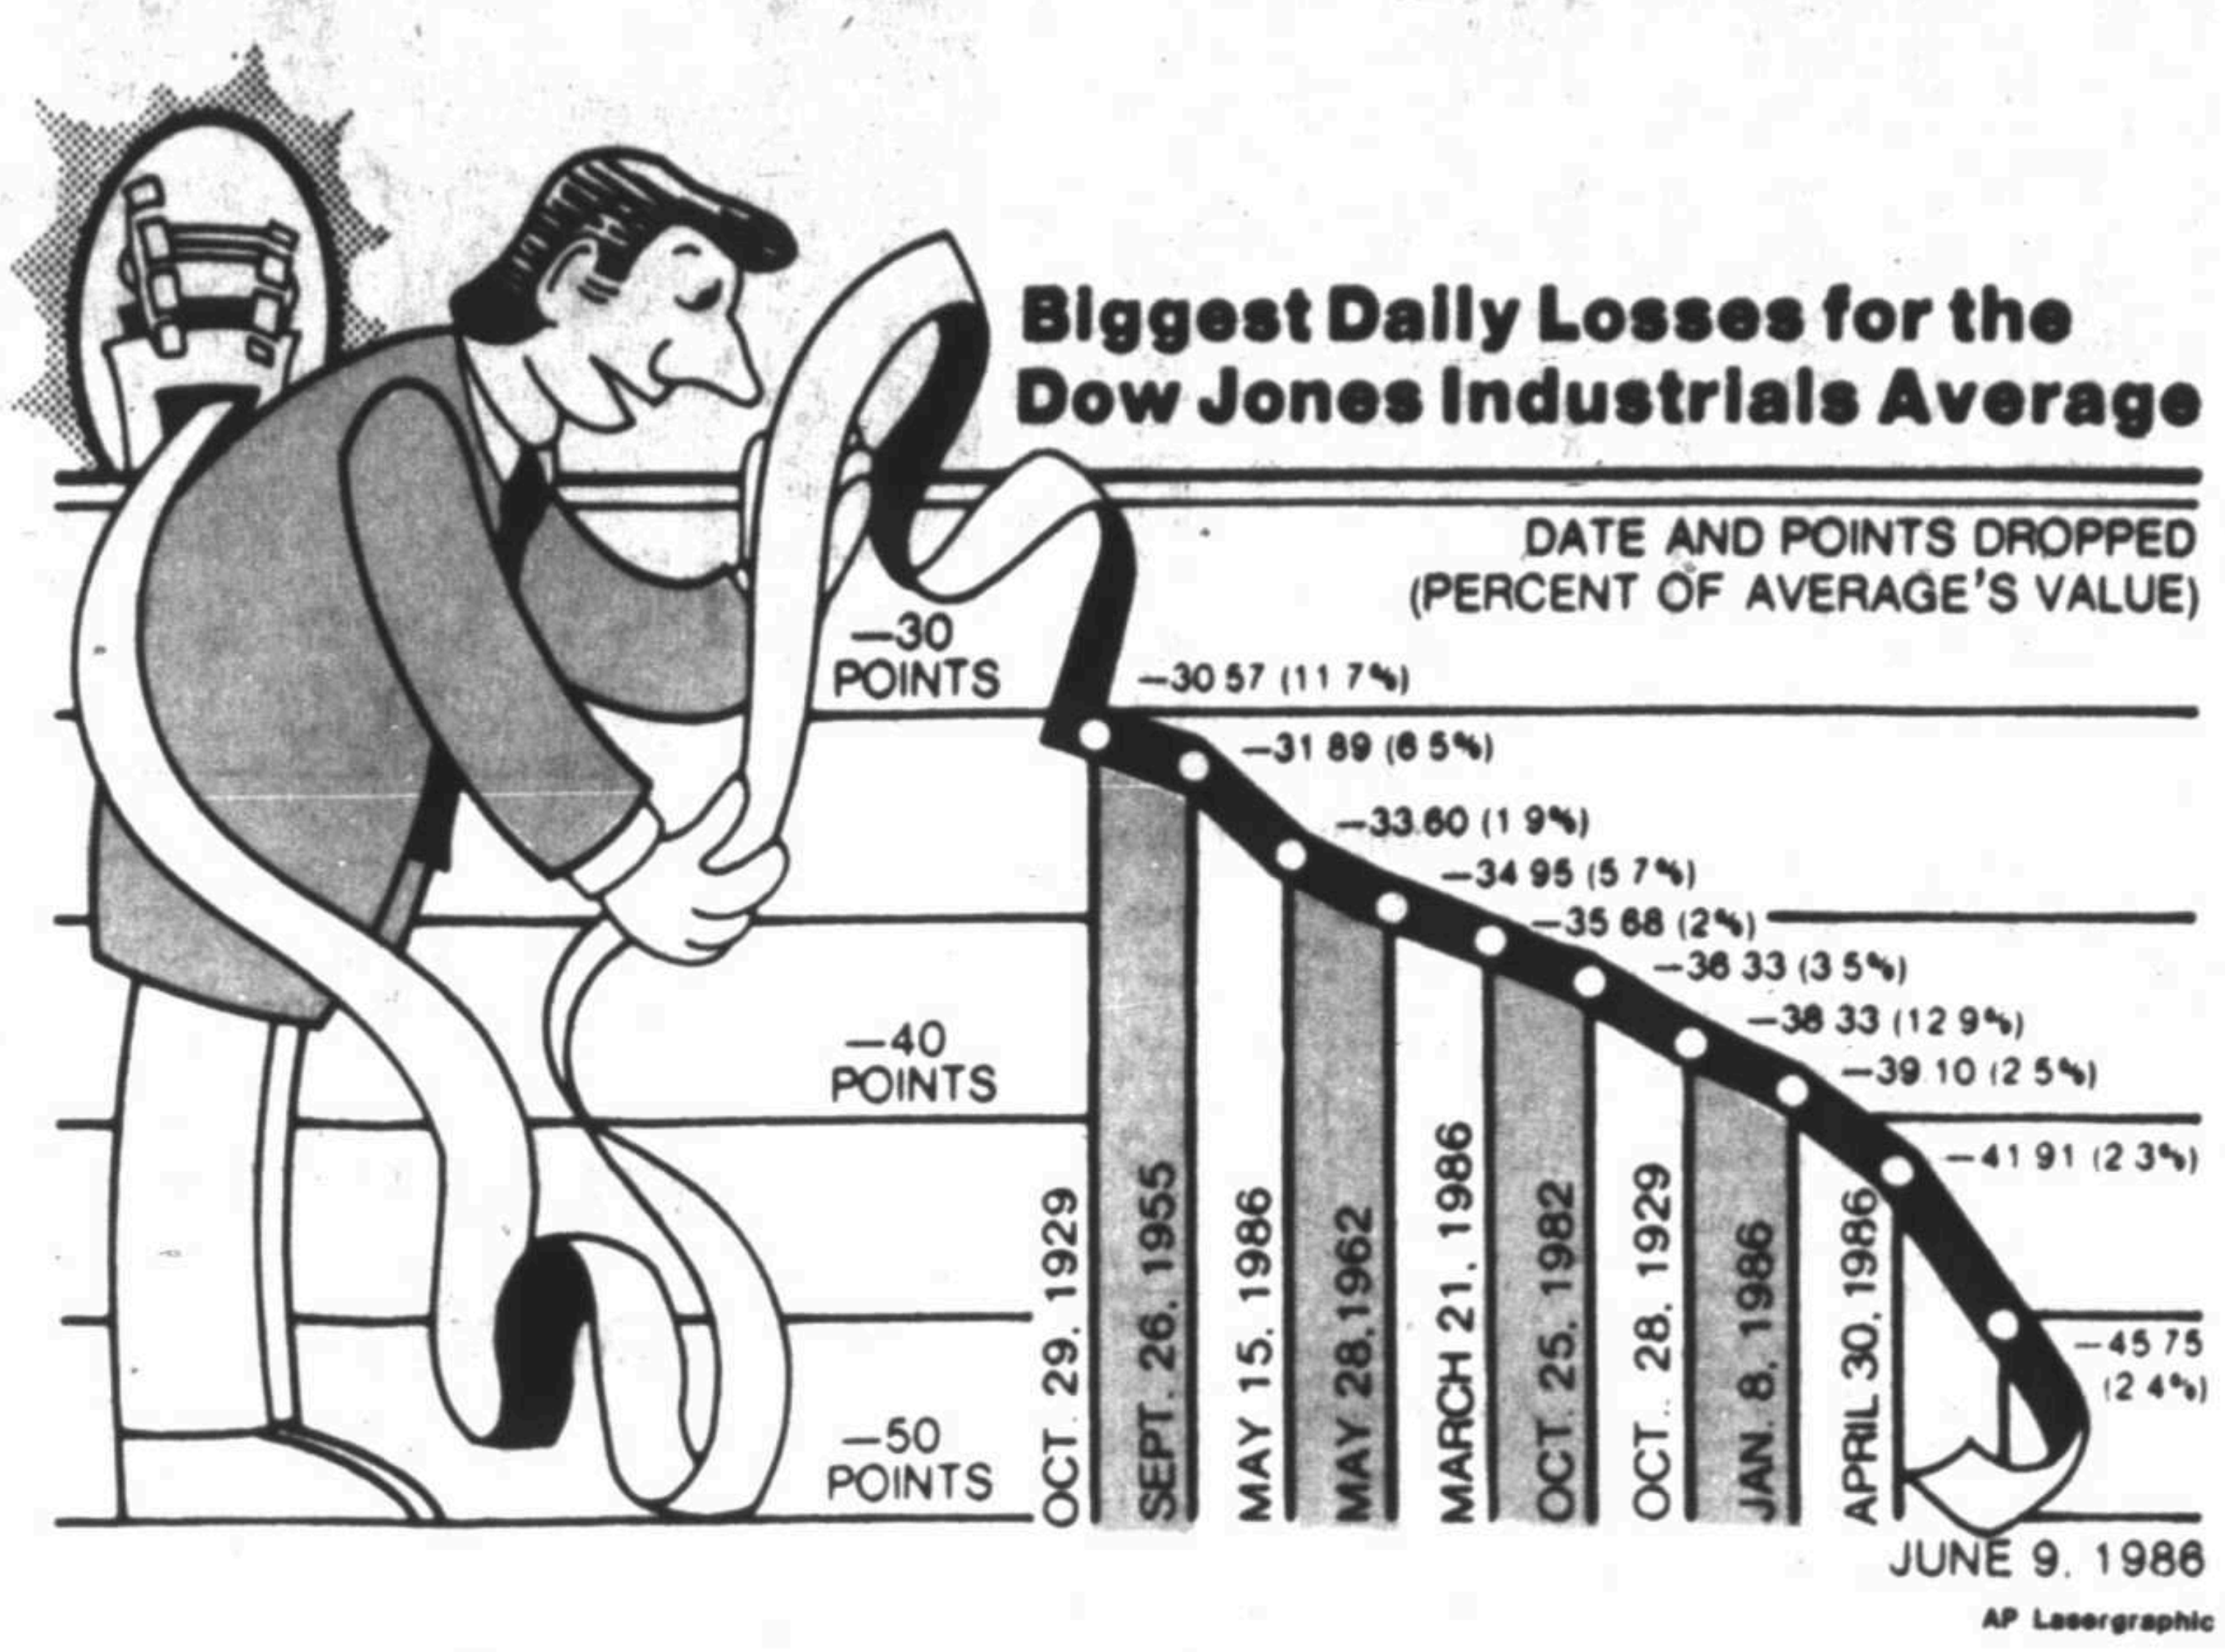
Dow Jones average takes steepest drop in history

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service



AP Lasergraphic

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average suffered its biggest one-day loss in history Monday, a resounding 45.75-point fall provoked by the absence of any clear signs of an economic upturn and magnified by computerized stock-selling programs.

The closely watched indicator's fall was its third record drop this year, following declines of 39.10 on Jan. 8 and 41.91 points on April 30. In percentage terms, the Dow's 2.43 percent fall Monday was dwarfed by the 38.33-point, or 12.8 percent, loss on "Black Monday," Oct. 28, 1929, because the average is much higher now. Duplicating that percentage decline today would require a fall of about 241 points.

The Dow index opened Monday's trading down more than 13 points from Friday's close and, in the words of S. Richard Szczepanik, a partner in Harvard Management Co., manager of Harvard University's $4 billion endowment fund, the index "cascaded" during the day.

Although many professionals blamed the magnitude of Monday's fall on computerized "program trading," the now-ubiquitous system in which large transactions are triggered by price disparities between stocks and stock-index futures, most observed that the market was due for a reversal in any event because of its strong rise of more than 125 points over the last three weeks.

The Dow index — down to 1,758.18 on May 19 — closed Friday at a record high of 1,885.90 and finished Monday at 1,840.15.

"All the financial markets have been very nervous, in part because of their tremendous run-up," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at the investment firm of Shearson Lehman Bros. "For the stock market, the actual performance of the American economy doesn't show, in growth or corporate earnings, the strength that has been anticipated."

Monday's collapse was a broad one. All major market indexes dropped sharply, with the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index falling 5.71 points to 239.96 and the New York Stock Exchange composite index falling 2.95 to 138.03.

Declining stocks outnumbered advances by 1,416 to 265; not one of the 30 stocks in the Dow industrial index rose, and only one remained unchanged.

The general feeling that the economy remains listless gained credence from the government's latest unemployment report, released Friday. The Department of Labor reported an increase in civilian unemployment to 7.3 percent in May from 7.1 percent in April, with weakness showing particularly in the manufacturing sector.

In past months, such economic languor would have been likely to provoke a stock rally because of expectations that the Federal Reserve Board would ease credit to stimulate growth. The consequent reduction in interest rates would drive investment money out of bonds, bank deposits and money market accounts and into the stock market.

But now, the Fed's principal concern appears to be the impact of lower rates on the falling dollar. If interest rates fall, investment in the United States becomes less attractive to foreigners, the relative value of the dollar falls further and the price of imports rises, increasing the inflation rate.

Sun to reduce exploration staff

From staff and wire reports

Robert P. Hauptfuhrer, president of Sun Exploration & Production Co. announced plans to downsize the Denver regional exploration office and reduce employee staffing within Sun E&P's domestic exploration, production and international groups. The total employee reduction will be about 270, or approximately six to seven percent of the permanent workforce.

Hauptfuhrer emphasized that these actions are required to match organization size with the capital and activity levels called for by the business environment forecast for the early years of the Dallas-based company's long-range plan.

"Given the uncertainty of oil and gas prices, both near term and longer term, some actions are unavoidable," said Hauptfuhrer. "We are, however, taking every possible measure to avoid precipitous or premature actions. We will continue to monitor our business environment and Sun E&P's performance, and tighten our belts one notch at a time as required."

Bennie L. Franks, vice president of production, announced actions taken within his division. Efforts have already begun to reduce the Dallas production headquarters staff by 50 people by Jan. 1, 1987. Reductions of an additional estimated 170 employees from throughout 10 production districts, which includes the Midland-based Southwestern district, are also planned by year's end.

Franks said the number of current regions and district office locations are not affected by the decision. A Sun spokesman in Dallas noted that it is premature to predict how production district cuts will be apportioned. However, the announcement puts to rest rumors of district consolidations or closings, he said.

Franks said his desire is to accomplish required operating and administrative expense reductions by downsizing versus consolidating current locations. "This approach provides an immediate response to the current business downturn, but allows the production division to respond to the upturn when it occurs."

The exploration geoscience activities currently based in Denver will be relocated in Dallas and could result in the transfer of 50 employees. The shift will result in the reduction of approximately 25 total permanent and contract positions. The remainder of the Western Region will be downsized to a major land office by Sept. 1. Western Region operations include the Rocky Mountain area, onshore West Coast and the Williston Basin area of eastern Montana and the Dakotas. Sun E&P will retain its Rocky Mountain District production office in Aurora, CO.

In announcing the downsizing, James E. McCormick, vice president of domestic exploration, said that shifting the geoscience effort from Denver to Dallas is a result of the current business climate and capital levels identified during the company's long-range planning effort and will enhance exploration's flexibility to adjust to both positive and negative fluctuations in the business environment.

The exploration division will be reduced from four to three regions, all located in Dallas, although the number and boundaries of projects and districts has not been finalized.

McCormick said Sun plans to maintain an active and visible exploration presence in Denver through a major land office. "Through the efforts of our Western Exploration Region, Sun has earned a strong reputation as an active player in the Rockies," said McCormick. "And we will be in a good position to quickly take advantage of the price turnaround when it occurs." He added that the decision is being announced now in order to allow maximum time for employees to relocate before school begins next fall.

James E. Roberts, vice president of international exploration and production, said his staff in the United States and expatriates assigned overseas will be reduced by approximately 25 positions by early 1987.

"Sun will maintain a presence in international exploration and production activities through pursuit of its current committed programs and will be prepared to take advantage of opportunities accompanying an improved economic environment in the future," said Roberts.

Economist forecasts fluctuating oil prices

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Oil prices will hover between $12 and $18 per barrel and inflation will rise to 8 percent by the start of 1987, a former advisor to President Reagan predicts.

Alan Greenspan, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, during a recent visit to the city said he did not expect the wild surges in oil prices experienced during the past few years.

"The shut-in capacity in OPEC, which of course is low-cost crudes, of about 7 to 8 million barrels a day overhangs the market," he said.

Greenspan said he believed $12 was the floor price of oil because at that point gas becomes so inexpensive consumption rises and above-ground reserves dwindle, causing oil companies to raise prices.

Half the shut-in crude — which has been drilled and is ready to be extracted from the ground — is in Saudi Arabia, he said. but "it seems unlikely other OPEC nations would be able to avoid moving additional liftings into the market either openly or clandestinely" to take advantage of the higher prices.

When the prices rise to about $18 per barrel, OPEC countries flood the market with crude, which again depresses the oil market, Greenspan said.

He predicted the price of oil would continue to fluctuate rather than to reach a stable price.

"My best guess is we're probably going to get stability only in our heads," he said, "but in the market it will remain pretty volatile."

A drop in the price of oil and other associated products has driven the cost of living down, said Greenspan, predicting that index would heat up again in the future.

"We're at the end of the decline in the cost of living," he said. "I think that the patterns are turning more to a 5-to-6 percent cost-of-living raise.

"We're at the threshold of something significant. Something that probably will change slowly, but is more likely to be abrupt than slow."

He said economic pressures would build at the end of 1986 and cause inflation to rise. Greenspan said he believed there would be a sudden upsurge in inflation causing the cost of living, which now is between 3½ to 4½ percent, to rise to a maximum of 8 percent by the start of 1987.

He was optimistic, however, that double-digit inflation was not in the cards for 1986.

"At the moment, that does not seem to be credible," he said.

Peso's value holds steady

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican currency markets reopened nervously Monday after plunging more than 20 percent last week in a stunning dive that analysts blamed on the economy's uncertain outlook.

The peso's value held steady during the morning, began slipping at midday but then strengthened at some commercial banks.

Private exchange houses in Mexico City opened their windows to offer 715 pesos to customers who wanted to trade a U.S. dollar on the free market. For those wanting to buy a dollar, the cost was as much as 745 pesos. A week ago, the rate was 554 and 559.

The decline in the free-market rate, which is used in tourism and for most border transactions, means travelers visiting Mexico can get more pesos for their dollars this week than last. Mexicans, though, have to come up with more pesos if they want to buy dollars.

The value of a second rate, regulated by the government, slid gradually last week, standing at about 546 pesos to the dollar on Monday. This rate, set daily by representatives of the nation's central bank and commercial banks, is used in about 80 percent of commercial transactions.

Currency traders and other analysts said the peso plunge was sparked by investors nervous about a string of bad economic news.

An official at the Bank of Mexico, the central bank, said that "there's always concern" in the government about such sharp declines.

But the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the central bank "is not going to intervene in the free market. Let it get wherever it wishes." In the past, analysts suspected that the central bank was directly or indirectly supplying dollars to the currency markets to support the peso. The central bank denied it was taking such action.

In Basel, Switzerland, it was reported that Miguel Mancera, head of the central bank, canceled longstanding plans to attend the annual meeting of the Bank for International Settlements.

Among the factors making investors nervous about the economy is the government's inability so far to work out a new financial aid package with the International Monetary Fund and foreign bankers.

Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog raised the possibility late last week in an interview with The Associated Press that Mexico might suspend payments on the debt if the negotiations were not successful.

General Electric acquires RCA

NEW YORK (AP) — General Electric Co. said Monday it has completed its $6.4 billion purchase of RCA Corp., closing the biggest non-oil acquisition in U.S. history.

The merger, which will give GE annual revenue of nearly $40 billion, was completed earlier than expected. The companies initially estimated that the deal would be consummated in late 1986.

GE said RCA and its National Broadcasting Co. unit, which operates the NBC television network, will become GE subsidiaries but retain their New York headquarters. GE is based in Fairfield, Conn.

Robert R. Frederick will remain president and chief executive of RCA, and Grant A. Tinker will remain chairman and chief executive of NBC, GE said.

RCA Chairman Thornton F. Bradshaw previously said he would step down once the merger was completed, although he agreed to remain a GE consultant for three years.

GE's acquisition of RCA, in which GE paid $66.50 for each of RCA's common shares, was announced on Dec. 11, 1985. The deal was approved by RCA's stockholders on Feb. 13, and the Federal Communications Commission approved the transfer of RCA's and NBC's broadcast and communications licenses to GE last week.

However, the FCC also ordered GE to sell, within 18 months, five NBC radio stations in New York, Washington and Chicago.

RRC well plugging, pollution fines total $29,500 for week

AUSTIN — Fifteen oil and gas operators received a total of $29,500 in administrative penalties last week for problems under the Texas Railroad Commission's pollution and well plugging rules.

WEDCO Texas Corp., Monument, Colorado, agreed to a $5,000 penalty after Commission inspectors visited the company's Dickenson lease in Runnels County and found saltwater leaking from a tank batter and flowing about a half a mile into a stock pond. Commission tests of the saltwater showed chloride concentrations of more than 43,000 parts per million.

Four companies were penalized for well plugging violations after they failed to appear at hearings called by the Commission while several other companies agreed to pay penalties for unplugged wells on leases they operate without admitting any violation of Commission rules. One of those was Midland-based Santa Fe Energy Co., fined $500 for two wells on the Ernestine lease in Andrews County.

To date in 1986, the Commission has levied more than $576,000 in pollution and well plugging penalties. Last year the Commission assessed more than $1 million in such penalties.

RRC issues pipeline permits

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission has issued 32 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas during April. In March the Commission approved ten permits.

Eighteen of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, six were for trunk transmission lines and eight were for multi-purpose and other types of lines. Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases, while trunk lines are larger diameter lines into which smaller pipelines connect.

Permits approved include two in San Angelo's District 7C office, two in Midland's District 8 office and one in Lubbock's District 8A office.

Gathering line permits approved include one to The New Energy Co. of Midland for a gas line in Glasscock County and one to Terra Resources, Inc. of Midland for a gas line in Upton County.

White attacks proposed burden for industry

AUSTIN (UPI) — Gov. Mark White Monday urged a congressional committee not to unfairly burden the petrochemical industry with the cost of expanding the Environmental Protection Agency's Superfund program.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., has proposed a $3 billion tax on petroleum products over the next five years to expand the EPA program, which provides funds to clean up abandoned toxic waste dumps.

White said in a letter to Rostenkowski that any additional burdens on the declining petroleum industry would "exacerbate the problem and threaten our national energy security at the same time."

White said of the more than 6,000 potentially responsible parties who have disposed wastes at now abandonded sites, only 15 percent were identified as petroleum or chemical companies.

"Ninty-nine percent of petroleum wastes are deposited on site, indicating that much of the petroleum product waste found a Superfund sites is disposed by users of these products," White said. He called for a broad-based tax on manufacturers to finance the expansion of the Superfund program.

Phillips to use surplus funds to retire debt

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (SWN) — Phillips Petroleum Co. plans to make available to the company approximately $400 million in surplus funds from its retirement plan for reducing corporate debt.

The action will be made possible through a restructuring of the retirement plan authorized by Phillips board of directors. The restructuring must be reviewed and approved by appropriate governmental agencies. These surplus funds will be available for corporate use during the latter part of 1986.

Funds in the retirement plan exceed current obligations to both retirees and active employees. The amount of the surplus will be determined by an independent actuary after additional data is available.

The restructuring, termed a spinoff/termination, will result in a division of the current plan into two separate plans – one covering all active employees and the other covering retirees. The active employee plan will continue to provide the same benefits as the current plan with accrued benefits at the date of restructuring provided through annuity contracts with an insurance company. Funding remaining in the plan will be in excess of that required to purchase the annuity contracts.

Arco subsidiary to close EDC plant in July

HOUSTON (UPI) — Lyondell Petrochemical Co., a subdivision of Arco, will shut down its ethylene dichloride plant in Port Arthur effective July 31, Lyondell president Bob Gower said.

The closing is expected to have no significant impact on Arco's 1986 earnings.

Gower said the plant was being closed for now because of a worldwide oversupply of EDC and low prices. It's unknown when the plant might be reopened once it's closed, officials said.

Coastal registers fixed-rate securities offering

HOUSTON (SWN) — The Coastal Corp. filed a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission for a public offering of $900 million of debt securities. Proceeds are to be used for retirement of bank debt having variable interest rates and shorter maturities.

The company said the new debt will enhance its financial structure by fixing interest rates and lengthening the maturities of its debt.

The offering will include $500 million principal amount of senior notes and $400 million of senior debentures which will rank equally as unsecured obligations of the Coastal Corp. Underwriter for both issues is Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

The senior notes will mature on June 15, 1996. Optional redemption provisions will permit the company to call all or part of the issue at par on or after June 15, 1993.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

S&Ls changing to stock form to raise capital

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Why are so many savings and loan associations changing from the mutual form of ownership to stock form?

Doyle

A. The main reason is to raise more capital — money. When a S&L converts from mutual to stock form, it sells stock. The money from that sale can be used to expand the S&L's operation and make it more profitable.

Money can be described as any S&L's or bank's "raw material." To operate successfully, a S&L or bank must have money to lend. The sale of stock increases a S&L's capital, for use in loans and other phases of its operations.

For example, a S&L might convert and sell a million shares of stock at $25 a share — giving it $25 million more capital to use in its business and prosper.

A note of caution. When a S&L is in bad financial shape, it might have to convert and sell stock to raise money just to survive. Some S&Ls have been faced with the choice of "going public (by selling stock) or going broke."

A mutual S&L is owned by its "members" — depositors and borrowers. People who have savings and/or checking accounts, certificates of deposits and other deposits at a mutual S&L are members. So are folks with mortgages and other loans.

A stock S&L, on the other hand is owned by stockholders. When a conversion from mutual form to stock form — which must be approved by majority vote of members — takes place, members give up their ownership.

• • •

Q. As I understand it, a depositor's ownership in a mutual savings and loan association represents a share of the S&L's "net worth," also called "surplus," which is the amount by which its assets top its liabilities.

The S&L at which I have deposits has converted from mutual to stock form. Have I lost all claims to my share of that net worth?

A. Technically, no; in practice, yes.

At the time of conversion, a "liquidation account" equal to the net worth is established on the S&L's books. If the S&L is liquidated at some future date, depositors with shares in the liquidation account have claims on that money — after all other creditors have been paid off.

However, your claim to a share in that liquidation is reduced by every withdrawal you make from the accounts that entitled you to that claim and is not increased by any deposits you make.

Summed up, your chance of ever getting your hands on any of the net worth that S&L had at the time of conversion are extremely remote to nonexistent.

• • •

Q. My wife and I voted in favor of the conversion of our savings and loan association from mutual to stock form and now have the opportunity to buy stock in this S&L. Would this be a good investment, as safe as our certificates of deposit and other accounts there?

A. There's no way it could be counted as safe as your deposits, which are protected by the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. up to $100,000 per depositor.

Stock ownership always has some risk. While many S&L stocks have been good investments, some have been just so-so and some have been financial disasters. My advice is to study the prospectus describing the stock offering — very carefully — and consult several brokers.

• • •

Q. A new bank has opened nearby and its vice president told us is it covered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Where can I find out if this is correct?

A. Go to the bank and see if it displays the FDIC emblem. In the most unlikely event it claims FDIC membership and doesn't have it, that bank would be slammed shut by regulators.

Assuming you see that emblem at the bank but you're still skeptical, write Office of Consumer Compliance Programs, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., 550 17th Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20459.

• • •

Q. My wife and I set up Keogh retirement plans six years ago, when we were self-employed. We have sold our business and I have taken a job with a company that has a profit-sharing plan.

What is the status of our Keogh plans, now that neither of us is self-employed? It is conceivable that either my wife or I might develop some other self-employed income before we retire.

A. You can either leave your Keogh plans intact or roll them over into individual retirement accounts. Either way, your money will remain tax-sheltered.

Because you might have additional self-employed income in the years ahead, keeping the Keogh plans as they are makes sense, so you will be able to add 20 percent of that net income to your Keoghs. If you transfer your Keogh plan funds to rollover IRAs, you will have to open new Keoghs when you want to shelter future self-employed income from income tax.

Petitioners ask commissioners to consider lower taxes

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

A group of Midlanders Monday presented the Midland County Commissioners' Court with more than 500 signatures requesting the court to consider maintaining or lowering 1985 tax rates in light of the Permian Basin's hard economic times.

"We want them to realize the private sector is having a hard time," said the group's spokesman, Charles "Bro" Seltzer, a Midland attorney.

The group, which plans to petition the other four Midland taxing entities, will meet with the Midland Independent School District today.

The group was formed after they received their tax notices notifying them about expected tax rate increases, Seltzer said. The Commissioners' Court considers the budget in two weeks, with an estimated 10 percent tax rate increase from 1985 to 1986 predicted. The Midland Central Appraisal District has predicted an increase from the 1985 rate of 19.96 cents per $100 valuation to 22 cents per $100 valuation for the County.

"Despite the harsh economic times endured by the private sector, it appears the tax rates may increase. We feel it's improper and unfair," he said.

"We are just concerned that the government share its part in these hard economic times," he said.

The commissioners assured the group they would attempt to keep tax rates down, although they are facing a $500 million reduction in property values.

"We have been making an effort to hold ourselves within budgetary constraints in the past and will continue to do so in the future," commissioner Durward Wright said.

The county along with other Midland's taxing entities will have to be making some tough decisions in the upcoming months with their tax bases decreasing as property values decline with the ecomomic downturn.

"We're going to be looking over your shoulder to make sure those hard decisions are made," Seltzer told the commissioners.

In other action, the court heard proposals from two firms competing for the chance to conduct a long-range study for the county. The plan would provide the commissioners with "an intelligent, well-informed plan for all their space allocations," said John Webre, the proposed project manager for the Dallas firm Henningson, Durham & Richardson. The Houston firm, Daniel, Mann, Johnson & Mendenhall is also being considered by the court to conduct the study.

HD&R reduced its fee for a five-year plan from $100,000 to $58,500. DMJM will present a proposed fee at the next Commissioners' Court meeting. Midland's fluctuating population is the major factor to be examined in the proposed long term study that could be updated if a major boom or bust occurs, Webre said.

Wright told the firms the county needed a study, "That basically tells us where we are today...and tells us on an updated basis where we should go and what we should do."

"They need someone to look at the situation and make an intelligent decision for them," Webre said.

The commission also authorized the architecture firm of Pate & Associates to present its county jail design to the Texas Commission on Jail Standards in Austin this week. The jail must be upgraded to meet minimum jail standards for the state. The plan at a cost between $1.4 to 1.5 million, would increase the jail's capacity from 85 inmates to 104.

Man watches for careless water users

EL PASO (AP) — In this dry West Texas city, where water is a precious commodity, one man patrols the streets looking for sprinklers running amok and careless car washers.

They call him the water warden, although in just two months on the job Bill Wade said he has been called other names and threatened with physical violence and political undoing.

"Generally, I get great cooperation," Wade said last week. "But then I get these upstanding citizens, civic leaders, who refer to my questionable heritage and my illegitimate birth."

A former Fort Bliss contractor who went looking for work when the construction business dried up, the aptly named Wade got the temporary job of enforcing El Paso's year-old ordinance against wasting water.

The city's public inspection department gave him a copy of the ordinance, a monthly gasoline allowance of 100 gallons, and a batch of citation and warning forms.

"This is kind of an awesome job," Wade said. "They have an ordinance that's never been tested and they don't really know how to enforce it. They just said, 'Here it is, you figure it out.'

"So I'm it for the whole city, with 100 gallons of gas. But at least it's a start."

He sees the job as an important one that involves some law enforcement and a lot of public education and public relations.

So far, he said, he has issued 13 tickets to flagrant violators, more than 100 warnings, mailed about 50 warning letters to water abusers and has made uncounted telephone calls trying to win compliance.

The city ordinance makes it a Class C misdemeanor punishable by a fine of up to $200 to allow water to "flow, spray or otherwise move" into a street, alley or someone else's property.

When running water strays onto the asphalt or makes a puddle in an intersection, citations may be issued.

Commercial-sized sprinkler systems are the worst problem, he said.

During a brief tour, he pointed out several intersections where water from surrounding sprinkler systems has damaged or all but destroyed the pavement.

Damage to roadways, traffic safety and water conservation were the three reasons behind for the city ordinance.

While the City Council was debating it, one council member tried to exempt car washing. But, Wade says car washing can waste water too, and he has issued about a dozen warnings, even to a sentimental favorite — school clubs washing cars to raise money.

Texas rural health care will be subject of conference

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Speaking on the future of rural health care, Robert T. Van Hook, executive director of the National Rural Health Care Association, will be the keynote speaker at the second annual Texas Rural health Care Conference on June 12-13 at the Odessa Holiday Inn Centre.

"Because of the close connection between rural health care and rural economics," Van Hook said, "rural providers should involve local community leaders and nonleaders in development of local health services. This must include periodic reassessments of the service mix and realignment or reprogramming as necessary to respond to the changing local market or health care environment."

Panel and forum topics for the conference include water quality and health in rural Texas, corporate initiatives in rural health, organization and operation of a regional trauma center, the health care team concept and opportunities for the small rural hospital.

The conference is sponsored by the Texas Rural Health Association, an organization of health care professionals and private citizens interested in rural health care. Cosponsors are the Texas Office Rural Health and Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center Schools of Medicine, Nursing, Allied Health and Continuing Education.

Jim Bob Brame, M.D. president-elect of the Texas Medical Association, will also speak at the conference, along with Jessie Oliver, state representative from Dallas and Helen Grace, Ph. D., program director of the W.K. Kellogg Foundation.

Permian Basin residents participating in the program include Ella Herriage, R.N., Ph.D., director of the School of Nursing at Texas Tech Regional Academic Health Center in Odessa and Harley Reeves, health systems agency director of the Permian Regional Planning Commission.

Anyone interested in rural health and health care is eligible to attend, but prepayment of the $45 registration and luncheon fee is required. For registration forms and more information contact Lois Barry, director of the Texas Office of Rural Health, Texas Tech University Regional Academic Health Center at the Permian Basin, 800 W. Fourth Street in Odessa.

Fate of Texas seems to hinge on putting goddess on Capitol

By DAVID MARANISS

AUSTIN (LAT) — This has not been the best of years in the Southwest, and in times like these, when life goes bad for awhile, people tend to look for symbols and omens. Everything becomes part of a conspiracy — even, or perhaps especially, inanimate objects. It could not have been coincidence that the oil well on the Oklahoma capitol grounds went dry just when the petroleum industry was collapsing. And now, here in Austin, why are Texans having so much trouble with their Goddess of Liberty, crowning symbol of the state capitol dome?

They took her down for repairs six months ago, and all hell broke loose: Without her on top of things, so to speak, the oil fields went bust and the state budget slipped billions into the red. Then they decided that the century-old zinc statue was beyond repair, so they tried to replicate her with 3,000 pounds of aluminum. The price of oil dropped again. Then they unveiled the new lady, and some Texans winced: They said she looked like a Texas Tech offensive lineman. That brought on a rage of tornadoes and floods.

The suffering was supposed to end on a recent Saturday. Texans had learned how to be humble; they were ready to brag. The goddess was going back where she belonged, to the top of the dome, making this, once more, the tallest of the nation's Renaissance revival capitols, taller by a few feet than the one in Washington. Perhaps with her in place the natural order of things would be restored. The bankers, brokers, Realtors and wildcatters would resume their profitable ways.

By 8 a.m. May 31, the capitol square was roped off and several thousand Austinites had gathered in the nearby streets. Lee Iacocca had nothing to do with this event. The Colorado River was too shallow to hold the QE2 and tall ships. No one was selling viewing access for $5,000 per person. In other words, for once Texas, in comparison with the hoopla planned for the refurbished Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor, was being restrained. Still, it was quite something when a giant CH-47 Chinook cargo helicopter piloted by Col. Jim Looney of the Texas National Guard took off from Camp Mabry in northwest Austin and headed downtown with the goddess dangling below on ropes and straps.

The Chinook traveled so slowly and made so much noise that it was its own advance team. People and dogs in one neighborhood after another moved out into the streets to gaze up, gawk and bark at the sight. It is not every day that a shining white goddess flies by. Cheers greeted its arrival downtown, but the exhilaration was soon replaced by anxiety. The weather was windy and wet, and the task of fitting the hollowed goddess into a cruciform shaft rising from the dome was a difficult one under the best of circumstances. Col. Herbert Purtle, aviation officer for the state Guard unit, likened the pilot's task to trying to thread a needle in the dark.

After 10 minutes of hovering above the dome, the helicopter team, frustrated by the strong winds, retreated to Camp Mabry, accompanied by the local news helicopters. People and dogs returned to the streets as the chopper came back north. The crowds down at the capitol followed the goddess back to camp. Three more attempts were made that day, but the mission came close to success only once. The goddess touched down on the shaft, but got stuck on it, so the helicopter had to pull away. By the fourth trip not even the dogs were barking anymore, so accustomed had they become to the whirling blades overhead.

On Sunday the weather was slightly better and all of Austin seemed hooked on the saga of the goddess. Crowds gathered early at Camp Mabry and the capitol. Gov. Mark White staked out a viewing spot in an office building across the street. It was early afternoon when the helicopter lifted off. One of the local TV stations interrupted a Texas Rangers baseball game to go live with the action. And again the helicopter swooped down toward the dome, lowering the goddess toward the shaft, but it never connected. Overcome by stress and fatigue, the team returned to camp and called it a week.

At dinner parties and bars all over Texas that night, the goddess was the No. 1 topic of conversation. It seemed that everyone had an idea on how to get her back on the dome.

VIEWPOINT

Most respondents against legalized gambling in Texas

By HOLLY LONGABERGER
Staff Writer

With the Texas economy in a depressed state and with very little immediate relief in sight, legislators are looking for ways to help the economy.

Many states have legalized paramutual gambling and created a state lottery to raise money for their economies. Texas is now looking into those possibilities.

On Monday a random sample of 11 people were asked, "In light of the depressed economy in Texas do you favor legalizing paramutual gambling and a state lottery to raise money?"

Only three out of the 11 persons interviewed were for both paramutual gambling and a state lottery. One person was for a state lottery, but was against paramutual gambling.

Seven persons were against both.

"Yes, I'm for it," Lonnie Payne of No. 12 Danley Lane, a bailbondsman said. "It would bring revenue to Texas and it will keep Texas money from going to New Mexico and Oklahoma where horse racing is legal."

Linda Wadsworth of Tyler said now that the oil fields are not producing the state should do something to alleviate the economy.

"However it could be bad in the long run because it could legalize all gambling," she said.

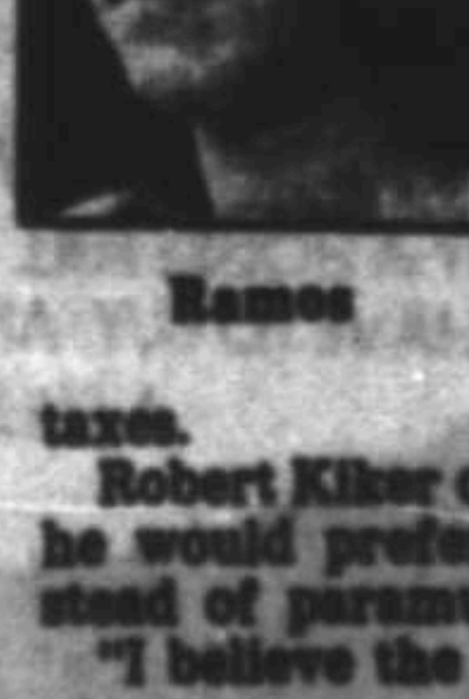
Kiker



Ramos

Roy

"I think it would put more money into the state," Albert Roy, a postal worker in Midland, said. He said he feels that paramutual gambling and a state lottery would also lower taxes.

Robert Kiker of rural Midland said he would prefer a state lottery instead of paramutual gambling.

"I believe the lottery would bring in more money than paramutual gambling," the retired Kirker said.

On the other hand some people do not want to see the legalization of the lottery or paramutual gambling.

Ruby Johnson of 913 N. Dallas, said she is not in favor of it.

"It would bring too much temptation into the state and there's already enough of that," she claimed.

Both Blanca Ramos of Route 13, the owner of Casa Blanca and Ofeial Oharra of 1314 Golf Course, said they did not like the idea of paramutual gambling and state lottery because they were against gambling in general.

Midland Government Employees Federal Credit Union employee Billy Perry said she is against it because it can hurt people. She said she feels that it is morally wrong.

"I'm against gambling," stated John Perkins of 608 S. Calhoun, a cook. "A gambler never wins and always ends up in a hole."

Judy Hearn, a secretary-receptionist, said, "I don't think it would contribute to the welfare of the state."

"I don't know of any occasion where it did not get involved in crookedness, and I've been in states that have had it" Eugene Greenwood, a geologist said.

"I might be in favor of a lottery because it can be run by the state," he added.

Some lakes reach flood stage after recent rains

AP Laserphoto

Larry Bogue, a park ranger with the Army Corps of Engineers, looks out over Joe Pool Lake in South Dallas County. Recent heavy rains have caused the lake, which is about one-third full, to fill ahead of schedule. Other area lakes are full, near flood stage.

DALLAS (AP) — Heavy rainfalls that have flooded wide sections of Texas over the past few weeks have replenished some drought-stricken reservoirs and left behind a mixed blessing for farmers who feared another dry summer.

During the weekend, most of the state took a breather from severe weather that has steadily soaked the state since May 25, claiming at least 11 lives.

Ironically, the same storms are giving life to Texas crops that appeared headed into a dry summer, said Bill Braden, a spokesman for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service at Texas A&M University.

The National Weather Service recorded 6.52 inches of rainfall at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport during May and 2.41 so far in June. The May total was 2.25 inches above normal, said Fort Worth meterologist Tommy Trimble, but far from the 1982 record of 13.66.

The total is not unusual, he said. "What is unusual is we have not had a clear break in the pattern. What we've had is continuous high humidity, rain and a lot of clouds," Trimble said.

The National Weather Service in San Antonio also recorded an above-normal rainfall of 12.34 inches at San Antonio International Airport since May 25, said metorologist Bill Crouch.

"We had a fairly serious deficit prior to then," Crouch said.

But in Lubbock, the May rainfall total of 1.82 inches was slightly below average, said meterologist Ken Winger.

With the drought of 1984 still fresh in the minds of many Texans, the rains are considered a precious commodity.

"As far as the month of May is concerned, by and large (rains) have been beneficial (for crops) except in a few areas, particularly in the winter garden area west of San Antonio," said Braden. "I wouldn't go so far as to say the moisture is enough to get us through the summer, but it's enough to get us into the summer."

The rains also have increased the Edwards and Ogallala acquifer levels and filled numerous reservoirs, lakes, basins, creeks and rivers, officials said.

Last week, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers announced it would be releasing water from 18 of 23 operating lakes, which cover about two-thirds of the state.

The lakes have reached flood pool stage and waters must be released downstream to prevent them from spilling over, said Sally Werst, a corps spokeswoman.

On the border with Mexico in far South Texas, Falcon Lake rose about four or five feet, said Max Woodfin, a Texas Water Commission spokesman.

But officials are wondering if the rains may be a factor in a major fish kill that started at Falcon Dam and continued about three miles downstream, Woodfin said.

For the first time in four years, the Lower Colorado River Authority opened the flood gates at Lake Buchanan, which has reached its maximum elevation level, said John Williams, an agency spokesman.

Williams said the rains have given the authority and its customers the benefit of additional capacity from hydroelectric power plants.

Braden said West Texas benefitted most from the rain. Farmers waiting for a little more moisture before planting can now go ahead, he said. The rain also has helped Texas grasses and pastures for cattle grazing, he said.

But Joe Pena, a Texas agricultural extension agent in Uvalde, said about 1,500 acres of onions may rot in the fields because rains have made the soil too muddy for harvest.

Pena also said some cantaloupes must also be harvested because the rain has speeded their growth and they could burst before they're picked. But he said the rain was a "welcome relief" for the corn, sorghum and grasses in South Texas.

Braden said there will be some losses to the North Texas and South Plains wheat crop because of wet fields.

"There probably will be some wheat that won't be harvested because of wet conditions. (And) once weeds start growing, there can be some loss in quality," Braden said.

"The problem has been the prolonged wet weather. With three or four weeks wet weather, the soil has no chance to dry out, so you can't harvest," he said.

"It's difficult to say if the overall is a negative or a positive," Braden said. "We have been in a drought, so therefore the rains were very welcome."

The Austin American-Statesman set up a phone bank and asked people to call in with suggestions. According to Diane Porter, editor of the Lifestyle section, 430 people called in one day. On Wednesday, the best read page of the newspaper was C5, an entire page of ideas. One thing you can't take away from Texans is their sense of humor:

- Set the goddess on top of the state deficit. By the time the legislature gets here in January, it should be the right height.
- 1 million Aggies should lift the capitol, with Mark White directing, and move it under the statue.
- Invite King Kong to Austin.
- Get the twin towers, Akeem Olajuwon and Ralph Sampson, to lift her into place.
- We are obviously worshipping false goddesses. If she were a real goddess, she'd fly up there herself.
- Put the goddess in the right mood. Ply her with champagne and play Frank Sinatra records.
- Recruit all the state politicians and, as in ancient Egypt, have them pull the goddess up with pulleys.
- Step 1: Build a dirt ramp all the way around the dome. It should cover the capitol and be an inclined ramp. Step 2: Have volunteers walk her up there and put her in place. Step 3: Leave the dirt where it is. Step 4: The Texas legislature can't meet anymore.

Roy Graham, architect of the capitol, studied all the suggestions. He said the helicopter will probably be tried again. The fate of Texas hangs in the balance.

Local woman honored by U.S. Army recruiters

From Staff Reports

Meighen

Kathy Meighen was presented a Scroll of Appreciation by the Southwest 5th Recruiting Brigade of the United States Army. She is the wife of SFC Gerald J. Meighen Station Commander of the Midland United States Army Recruiting Station.

She has been active in the Army Community Service Program through the Recruiting Field for the past two years. She has been developing programs and forming a network of services to be rendered to family needs of servicemen under the Albuquerque Battalion covering a portion of the New Mexico and Texas territory.

Ms. Meighen said, "Due to geographical problems, families are separated in the recruiting field. Recruiters seldom are stationed near or on a military base, therefore isolating them from people they know or have common interest with. "

"Through this program," she continued, "we have drawn them closer even though separated by distance, and provided a program of communications systems for keeping in touch and sharing problems."

Ms. Meighen added that monthly activities developed and newsletters of information on a regular basis. She said that there has been a network developed to provide special services for families with special needs.

"We feel that if we have a happy recruiter family, then we have a productive recruiter," Ms. Meighen said.

Ms. Meighen is employed by Stephenson, Realtors as a secretary, public relations advertising and publicity person.

Two men to be arraigned on drug charges

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Two men arrested late Monday afternoon by patrol officers acting on information provided by a citizen were to be formally arraigned in Municipal Court today on drug and gun charges.

According to police spokesman John McAhon, a 41-year-old Odessa man sitting on the passenger side of a vehicle was allegedly observed throwing a clear plastic bag containing a brown tarry substance from the car as officers arrived at a convenience store near the intersection of Oakwood and Parkway. Arresting officers confiscated about 28 grams of a substance believed to be hashish.

A search of the vehicle produced a loaded .38 caliber revolver and officers arrested the 39-year-old driver, a man believed to be from Kermit, on a charge of unlawfully carrying a weapon. The man was allowed to post a $1,000 bond set be officers on the misdemeanor charge and he was released from jail Monday night.

McAhon said the arrests were the result of information provided by a citizen who flagged down a passing patrol car and told the officer of the suspicious actions on the convenience store parking lot.

WATER

"When I catch a carwash, I tell them to use buckets, hoses with nozzles that shut off and to watch where the water runs," he said. "You can't just lay the hose down and let it run into the street."

Often, he said, finding the right person to issue a citation to is difficult, as in the case of a car dealership where the police had to be called before one of the managers would accept a ticket.

Ector commissioners OK cost-saving measures

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday approved cost saving measures they expect will partially compensate for a tax revenue shortfall this year that could reach $4 million.

The policy approved includes a wage and hiring freeze, no filling or advertising vacancies without prior approval of the court and a limit on the maximum accumulation of compensation time for overtime worked.

Tom Pace, fiscal services director, said the court cut about $2 million from the Road & Bridge fund, but the county still faces a revenue shortfall of from $3 million to $4 million in the 1987 fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

The implementation of the cost saving measures by commissioners, Pace said, is an effort to avoid layoffs and pay cuts.

Sheriff Bob Brookshire, citing soaring crime rates here and in other counties, asked that personnel in his department be exempted from overtime-compensation time restrictions but his request was denied.

The court also ordered that vacancies not be filled until all accrued vacation and overtime pay had been absorbed unless the department is specifically exempted by the court. Departments with two employees or less will be allowed to fill vacancies with prior court approval.

Commissioners also ordered that any overtime-compensation time in excess of the 20 hour maximum be reduced to that level no later than Sept. 30 unless specifically excepted by the court.

In other action, commissioners approved a contract with the Odessa Junior League to establish a child abuse prevention program.

As part of the We Help Ourselves program, the Junior League and the Ector County Sheriff's Department will sponsor school programs to teach children what they can do if sexually or physically abused.

According to Junior League representative Lorraine Bonner, the program will go beyond state mandated child abuse education programs.

Police say more crime victims fighting back

DALLAS (AP) — Police may not recommend it, but they concede that more crime victims are meeting violence with violence.

"It made me mad," Jim Beam says of the Feb. 1 robbery attempt at his store. "If I get a chance, I'll fight back."

So he did — he shot and killed the would-be robber, and police say he is one of a growing number of local crime victims who are fighting back, partly because criminals themselves have become more violent.

"There is more violence even in purse snatching," said Dallas police Sgt. Mia Sullivan. "It is uncalled for, unincited violence, when the victim complies and it seems to not matter."

Ms. Sullivan said police still discourage crime victims from fighting back, which has little impact on crime.

"The best thing for a victim is to be highly observant and remember as much of the description as possible," Ms. Sullivan said.

Employees of 7-Eleven convenience stores, for example, say they are taught not to resist. Beth Pineda, assistant manager of a 7-Eleven, said she has been robbed several times, although not by anyone armed.

"I give them what they want. Whatever they want to take is fine with me; I just put it down and notify security," she said. "It's no fun being robbed. You have to fill out more forms than if you had a baby."

Beam, 51, who shot and killed Johnny Earl Harrison during the February robbery, said he has had a long policy of fighting back. He said he has been robbed by armed men three times in nine years. Fifteen years ago he shot another robber.

Police hunt for missing person

Andres

Crime Stoppers

Every year thousands of people are reported missing. Many are located, but some are never heard from again. Midland Police are still investigating the mysterious disappearance of two young women.

Six years ago Kristy Lynn Booth walked out of a local night club and vanished. The second odd disappearance involves 21-year-old Carolee Andres, who is the focus of this " Crime of the Week."

On Feb. 23, 1985, Ms. Andres was working the night shift at the 7-Eleven on the corner of Midland Drive and Illinois. Sometime before 3 a.m. she walked out, leaving the store unattended. Later that morning a state trooper found Ms. Andres and a friend parked off Interstate 20 near Midland. She has not been seen since.

She is a white female of Hawaiian descent, 5 feet, 2 inches tall, 160 pounds, with a scar above her right eye and one on her right cheek.

Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward for any information that leads to the whereabouts of Ms. Andres. Call Crime Stoppers in Midland at 694-TIPS or in Odessa at 333-TIPS. Callers do not have to reveal their identities.

Police seek alleged kidnapper

From Staff Reports

ANDREWS — Andrews police reported a child custody kidnapping case Monday afternoon, after the child's mother and a male companion forced a baby sitter to give up the child at gunpoint.

The 5-year-old child was kidnapped around 3:30 p.m. Monday after her mother unsuccessfully attempted to use a North Carolina court custody order, said Andrews Police Chief Douglas Gaines. The child's father was awarded custody of the child four years ago in Texas, Gaines said.

After taking the child, the couple joined another couple in a parked car, according to witnesses, police said.

Andrews Police have issued bulletins for a compact-type blue car that the couples are believed to be traveling in. If caught, they will be charged with aggravated kidnapping, Gaines said.

In other law enforcement reports, Midland police report the burglary of $575 worth of items from Lynn D. Jones, 1503 West Ohio. Jones told officers one $450 VCR and one $125 cubic zirconium ring were taken between 12:45 p.m. to 4:45 p.m. Monday.

Dallasite charged with conspiracy

DALLAS (AP) — A 22-year-old Dallas man charged with offering $2,000 to have his common-law wife killed was arrested a day after the separated couple had talked about reconciling, police and the suspect's mother said.

Police said Daniel Martinez Santoya was being held in Lew Sterrett Justice Center in lieu of $5,000 bond on a charge of criminal conspiracy to commit capital murder.

He was arrested Sunday in a car near the home of his common-law wife, Patricia Rodriguez.

Investigators said a 19-year-old man claims Santoya gave him a knife and offered him $2,000 to kill Ms. Rodriguez and kidnap their 20-month-old daughter.

Investigator John Westphalen said the man got scared and called police.

But Santoya's mother, Josefa Santoya, and Ms. Rodriguez said they are confused about the arrest.

Customer of Unique Cabinet Fronts: I think it's beautiful

"It seems like we're in a different room" said Mrs. Glen Woodruff after Cabinets Unique had given her kitchen a "facelift."

"I think it's a beautiful job... The more I see them (cabinets) the better I like them," said Mrs. Woodruff.

Mr. Woodruff explained that they wanted to make a change in their kitchen cabinets which were painted green. They had read about Cabinets Unique which allows customers to get a totally new look within just a few days because they don't have to tear out the cabinets, counter tops, flooring, plumbing and electrical fixtures. Knowing that they wouldn't have to live and eat in the middle of a "disaster area" for a long time convinced the Woodruff's that Cabinets Unique was a superior alternative to cabinet replacement.

The Woodruffs got to select from solid oak and solid cherry from a variety of styles and finishes, as well as a new European laminate style door. They selected an oak door with a light finish which coordinated beautifully with the wood tones in their living area which is adjacent to the kitchen.

Bill Shields, owner of Cabinets Unique in Midland, went to work on the cabinets and within four days 16 door fronts and 7 drawer fronts were replaced with solid oak. A beautiful wood veneer, which matches the doors, covered the framework and sides of the cabinets - giving the Woodruffs a complete wood cabinet.

Bill and Ruth Shields are delighted to be able to transform kitchens with Cabinets Unique so quickly and make customers so happy. Not only can customers enjoy having a new kitchen, Unique Cabinets is also the ideal way to improve a home's marketablity. The kitchen can often make or break a sale, and Cabinets Unique is an incredibly low investment that can help you make the sale.

Bill has been in the home remodeling business for over 10 years, so he recognizes the frustraton and expense caused by have a kitchen out of service for weeks while installing new cabinets. That's why he began looking for a reasonable and top-quality alternative to complete cabinet replacement. After extensive research, he concluded that Unique Cabinet Fronts was just what Midland needed.

He explains that most likely 75 percent of your cabinets are structurally sound and usable (sides, backs, bottoms, tops, shelves, etc.), so new cabinets really mean only new fronts.

Unique Cabinet Fronts will utilize the 75 percent of your cabinet that is still good and turn your old outdated wood or metal cabinets into beautiful new cabinets quickly and usually for less than half the cost of conventional cabinet replacement.

Yet, the beautiful doors are custom made for your kitchen.

Unique Cabinet Fronts can be used on old wood cabinets, metal cabinets, even long bell cabinets and bathroom cabinets.

Bill announces that they have a display at Merriman Appliances. So, go by Merriman Appliance at 3001 W. Wall and see the difference Unique Cabinet Fronts really make. Or, call Bill and Ruth Shields, Texas and New Mexico's only Unique dealer, at 563-4720 for a full color brochure or appointment.

Hanks offers beautiful fresh produce in down home atmosphere

Do you ever long for the days when the grocer that you knew on a first name basis selected beautiful, fresh produce by hand with you in mind? Do you wish that you knew of a place where you could get genuinely fresh eggs?

If so, Hank's Superette, located at 2040 Cuthbert just across from the football stadium, is your dream come true!

Richard and Emajon Mayfield, owners of Hank's Superette, delight in giving their customers the personal service you can get only at an old fashioned, family owned and managed grocery.

Hank's Superette is always well stocked. Don't be decieved by it's size and down-home friendliness. "We have anything the big ones (groceries) have," Richard says. Though Hank's may not have as many different brands, you can count on them to have some of the most popular name brands.

Hank's also has many things you won't find at other stores.

With it's friendly service, Hanks Superette makes the 1980's the good old days. They have the many things you remember enjoying years ago - the fresh meat counter with special cuts from the hind quarter and rib eye, seasoned brisket, FRESH eggs, FRESH produce — even fresh green beans and black eyed peas will be in this summer.

Richard and Emajon say they recently began offering homemade barbeque, as well as fresh-fried pies and burritos every day.

"There are a lot of things we handle that no other store handles," Richard said. For instance, Hanks Superette has fresh turkeys at Thanksgiving and Christmas.

In addition, Richard and Emajon deliver groceries for many of their customers.

It's just like the old days. Richard does admit, "We don't have the pot-bellied stove, but we're thinking about it."

When asked why they bought the store, Richard said, "It was the personalized service, the country atmosphere, the friendliness that has gone out of our business in the U. S. We wanted that when we were buying groceries from other people, all we got to be was a number."

Now, Richard and Emajon are providing their customers with that good old-fashioned service. They're open Monday through Saturday, 8 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Graham's: Bear in mind that Sunday is Father's Day

Doris Graham insists that Wes Graham model a "Pops is Tops" apron from Graham's Pharmacy's selection of Father's Day gifts. At Graham's, 319 Dodson, Grandpops is tops, too!

With Father's Day rapidly approaching, it is nice to know that there is one gift shop where you can find that special gift just for Dad.

Graham's Pharmacy at 319 Dodson Street has gifts suitable for all dads this Father's Day.

Some gifts are designed with Dad and Father's Day in mind. There are picture frames which bear the sentiment, "Father's Day 1986." There are mugs for the #1 Dad. Colorful aprons are perfect for cook outs, especially when they say "Pops is Tops."

One of the really nice gifts you will find at Graham's is a beautiful oil painting, entitled "The Hunting Lodge" by Hans Toomsalu. It's a perfect gift for a special dad.

If Dad travels a lot, he might enjoy a new dopp kit, a handy travel alarm clock, a travel tie rack, or a set of folding hangers.

Shoe mits, shoe polishing kits, luggage straps and a Norelco Man Care blow dryer are some other selected gifts that might help make Dad's business trip run more smoothly.

Graham's has things for Dad's office, too. An acrylic paper holder and pen, or desk light with a clock are two ideas. Dad may delight in a set of executive marbles or some beautiful brass bookends.

Other gifts include simulated leather portfolios of various sizes - some with built-in calculators, some with locks, some even with address books. Acrylic key chains, pocket calculators, wallets and visor organizers will all help Dad stay organized, both at work, and at home.;

If Dad is an avid sportsman or if he likes playing games, Graham's has just the gift. Try golf tees, checker boards and card shufflers for starters.

Or if Dad already has all the games he could ever want, one of a variety of clocks may be more appropriate. The quartz domino clock with a nice wood frame, the ping pong paddle clock or dice clock are some of the more original ones to choose from.

Young and old dads alike will enjoy one of the many colognes that Graham's carries. Some of the more popular fragrances are Stetson, Old Spice, Musk and English Leather.

And, if grandfather is on your Father's Day list, some of the gifts you might consider for him are a grandfather's mug with a coaster or a magnifying glass — these come in a variety of sizes and shapes.

And, be sure not to forget that Father's Day card! With the huge selection of Ambassador cards, you are certain to find that special card for that special Dad at Graham's Pharmacy on Dodson.

Rosebud Nursery has large stock of trees, shrubs, flowering plants

Whether you are needing colorful flowering plants, shrubs, trees, grass seed, vines or cacti, Rosebud Nursery on the Rankin Highway is the place to go.

Located just 2.5 miles South of Interstate 20, Rosebud Nursery has just about everything you could possibly need to make your yard the envy of the neighborhood.

Before you even enter the greenhouse, you'll discover a wide variety of beautiful shrubs and trees —— one gallon, two gallon and five gallon trees, shrubs that are perfect for low hedges and others ideal for taller hedges. Rose Barten, owner of the nursery, keeps them healthy and ready to be planted. So, if you've been wanting to add some rich green colors to your landscaping, Rosebud Nursery can help.

When you enter Rosebud Nursery's greenhouse, you'll find more colorful plants. Geraniums, Petunias, Impatiens, Roses, Begonias, Lantana, Honeysuckle and more flowers create a whole rainbow of oranges, pinks, yellows, purples, reds and violets. You'll both see and smell the beauty.

Need ground cover? Rosebud Nursery has it. There are flowering plants that will make a good cover and many varieties of ivy.

In addition, they have a stock of the most popular grass seeds.

Rose says this about her plant selection. "We try to order plants from different parts of the country that have approximately the same climate we have here."

This assures her customers of a wide selection of hardy plants.

Rose also explains that she takes special care of the plants that are in stock. Of course, she also gives her customers the personal service they need. She'll be glad to answer your questions and help you select the plants for your landscaping.

Rosebud Nursery is open from 9 a.m. to sundown, seven days a week. Customers from Iraan and Rankin find it rather handy to stop by Rosebud Nursery after their shopping in Midland. Midland customers will find that it is well worth the drive 2.5 miles past I20 on Rankin Highway.

It may be a little out of the way, but one peek inside Rosebud Nursery's greenhouse will convince you that it is well worth the pleasant drive.

Rose of Rosebud Nursery on the Rankin Highway keeps a healthy stock of trees, shrubs, ground cover and flowering plants. For a terrific selection and friendly service go to Rosebud Nursery.

Copy Service and Supplies has family commitment to quality service

Since Wade Ingrham started Copy Service and Supplies in 1945, the industry has faced a great number of technological changes. As the industry leaders moved away from the old duplicators, famous for their purple ink, and toward more and more advanced photo copiers, Copy Service and Supplies, Inc. kept pace with the progress. And the company is continuing to move forward and change with the industry, but one thing that hasn't changed and won't change, says President David Ingrham, is Copy Services and Supply's concern for their customers.

The Ingrham family's genuine concern has long been manifest by their dedication to excellence in equipment and service.

When the Ingrham's were selecting the line of photo copiers that they would carry, they were careful to select a company which held to the same high ideals that Copy Service and Supplies holds.

"The primary reason we choose Mita is the fact that they specialize in copiers. They do nothing but copiers... they have the edge in quality manufacturing, design and fabrication."

Mita maintains that edge by putting its profits back into research and development for better, more advanced copiers. Maybe, that's why they are the second largest photo copy company in the world and they have a nation-wide government contract.

In addition, Mita, like Copy Service and Supplies, Inc., is a family owned business.

Recently, Copy Service and Supplies added Olympia typewriters to their Mita line. Olympia, the second oldest typewriter manufacturer, is owned by Mercedes Benz. "There you see a corporate policy toward not a decent, a good or a functional product, but the BEST product," David said.

The experts at Copy Service and Supplies explains that many people are familiar with Olympia's portable typewriters, but that their electronic typewriters are quite different.

When asked why a company that had specialized in sales and service of copy machines alone for so many years would begin offering typewriter, David had an enlightening response. "The primary stimulus was that the office of the future is going to be completely integrated... A big part of that will be the keyboard technology... It won't be that far in the future when they'll (office personnel) sit at a word processor, type a letter for administration, then touch a key and it will be printed on a copier across the room, around the corner or across the world."

Mita's prototype of a "smart" copier like this was developed three years ago. Field testing is underway, as Mita prepares to market this new generation of copiers, thus David felt it was important for his company to get some experience servicing keyboards.

It's just one more evidence that Copy Service and Supplies' commitment to service has not changed along with the technology of the industry.

"We're the only major corporation that I'm aware of in West Texas where the owners continue to do service in the field on a daily basis. I can't think of a stronger commitment to the service aspect... Standards set by Wade in the 40's when he was getting started are carried through the policy of the company to today," David says.

"Our philosophy of how we deal with our clients is basically the same as it's been for decades," David adds.

Both sales representatives and service personnel at Copy Service and Supplies are constantly attending schools. Service people are factory-trained, and Mita's national training director spends time in Midland training the entire staff.

The staff is committed to meeting each client's needs. "Our product really isn't copy machines, supplies and servicing the equipment. It's taking care of the account and servicing their needs," David says.

David explains that they evaluate a client's needs and try to meet those needs. He says they want to be fair with their clients and not sell them a machine that is more than they need.

With the right equipment, a company can count on saving time and energy. With Copy Service and Supplies, they can count on service for years to come.

The service department keeps parts in stock, and each service truck is thoroughly stocked to insure prompt, efficient service. In fact, they try to offer same day service.

The account representatives at this family-owned company say, "I don't have to make excuses to my clients or go through 15 people to get something approved...I know I can say 'We'll take care of you' and it will be done."

That's why their service contracts include preventive maintenance (PM's) about every six weeks, instead of six months.

Copy Service and Supplies clients have discovered the dependability of this company. Perhaps, that's why this local company is continuing to grow even during this slow economic time in the Permian Basin. From January through May, the company's sales were up 64 percent over last year.

"Success speaks for itself in a lot of ways, as far as how good a job you're doing for your client," David says.

Copy Service and Supplies is open Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 563-1418 for a company you can count on to be there when you need them.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Any business conducted today will require careful handling. Attention to detail pays off handsomely. Double-check all financial figures.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A friend alerts you to a unique opportunity involving foreign investments. A lawyer could play a major role in today's events. Avoid contributing to the gossip at place of employment. Romance thrives.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Postpone travel. You are needed at work or home. Others look to you for guidance in time of crisis. A positive attitude will help you work wonders when dealing with a stubborn individual.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not allow jealousy to get the upper hand today. An extravagant romantic gesture could put a severe strain on your budget. Pursue your aims quietly this evening. Enjoy a period of solitude.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your creative energies are at an all-time high. A major change in a special relationship could cause frustration. Sit back and relax.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A co-worker may be jealous of your talents or resources. Guard your ideas. A full financial recovery is part of the picture. A loan or grant relieves worries about a student's tuition.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go ahead and speak up at a business meeting. An authority figure is impressed with your ideas. Originality counts big in business. Give serious thought to forming a new partnership. Alliances flourish.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look for new ways to showcase your talents. Family members need to know exactly where they stand. A candid conversation proves fascinating. You are amazed by a young or less experienced person's idea.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A close professional relationship gets a big boost. Tackle tasks that require careful attention to detail. Friends prove their loyalty in new ways. Avoid someone who likes to play games in romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Creative ventures hold great promise. A raise or promotion is in the offing. Romance is exciting without being too expensive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Artistic and creative pursuits deserve top priority now. Now is the time to make some big changes. Career advancement is easier than in the past. An important event could take place this evening.

If, ten years ago, you had taken a poll to find the world's best bridge player, Giorgio Belladonna would have been one of the favorites. Although he plays little competitive bridge these days, this hand proves that he has not lost any of his skill.

West's weak two heart opening bid made life difficult for Belladonna in the balancing seat. He tried to solve his problem by first making a takeout double and then bidding three no trump over North's three club response.

The top-of-nothing opening lead did not do anything to help declarer's cause. Declarer won in hand and led the queen of clubs, continuing the suit to the ten when East held up. East took his jack and returned a heart, covered by the ten and won with the jack. West reverted to a diamond, taken by declarer. How would you continue?

Belladonna made no mistake: he returned a heart! That shattered the defense. Had West won and taken his ace of hearts, the king of hearts and fourth diamond later would have squeezed East in the black suits—he would not have been able to hold three spades and the ace of clubs. However, the defense did no better when West did not cash his ace of hearts, for the heart return had broken the defenders' line of communication. East now was out of hearts, so declarer could use the diamond entries to the table to set up and run the clubs. He lost only two club tricks and two hearts.

The Statler Brothers, from left, Jimmy Fortune, Don Reid, Harold Reid and Phil Balsley, were honored Vocal Group of the Year. The group won four other awards including Entertainer of the Year.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Statler Brothers hit it big with five fan-voted honors and "coal miner's daughter" Loretta Lynn was honored as a living legend at the 20th annual Music City News Country Awards.

The Statlers, a quartet known for their tight harmony, won entertainer of the year, top vocal group, country music video of the year for "My Only Love," single record of the year for "My Only Love" and album of the year for "Pardners in Rhyme."

The awards were presented Monday night during a syndicated TV special at the Grand Ole Opry House.

"We want to simply and sincerely say God bless all of you in a very special way. ... I hope we never do anything to disappoint you," said Don Reid, lead singer for the group. "We love you in a very special way."

The Statlers, from Staunton, Va., and discovered by country star Johnny Cash in the 1960s, have won a total of 33 Music City News awards.

Awards are based on voting by subscribers to The Music City News, a monthly country music publication in Nashville.

Miss Lynn won the Living Legend award for contributions to country music during a career spanning more than 25 years.

"I think this is quite a surprise. I think probably since I've been singin', you people have done more for me than I have for you and I love all of you," Miss Lynn said as she brushed away tears in accepting the award.

Miss Lynn was presented the award by last year's winner, Barbara Mandrell, who lauded her as the first female headline singer in country music.

Reba McEntire won female vocalist of the year for the second straight year and George Strait won male vocalist of the year.

The Judds, a mother-daughter combination, were voted duet of the year and the "Hee Haw" gospel quartet was gospel act of the year for the seventh time. Members are Grandpa Jones, Roy Clark, Buck Owens and Kenny Price.

Other winners were: Ray Stevens, comedian of the year; "Nashville Now" on The Nashville Network, country music TV series of the year; "FarmAid," country music TV special of the year; John Schneider, former co-star of the TV series "Dukes of Hazzard."

The Statlers, whose singing specialty is love themes, won in every category they were finalists in except for comedian of the year.

RACINE, Wis. (AP) — U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, who pleaded guilty to drunken driving and said he wanted to be treated the same as any citizen, has been fined $555 and likely will have his drivers license suspended.

Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, did not appear Monday before Court Commissioner Joe E. Kremkoski.

The congressman, arrested June 1, said last week in Chicago he would plead guilty. He was arrested after attending a 40th reunion of his class at St. John's Military Academy.

Officials said a charge of refusing to take a breath test was dismissed after Rostenkowski agreed to a guilty plea.

Queen Mother

LONDON (AP) — Queen Mother Elizabeth has lived longer than anyone who served as Britain's queen now that she has reached the age of 85 years and 304 days.

The Guinness Book of Records said Monday that the queen mother surpassed the previous record-holder, her late mother-in-law Queen Mary, on Sunday. Queen Mary died in 1953 at age 85 and 303 days. Queen Mary was the widow of King George V, who died in 1936.

The queen mother, widow of King George VI who died in 1952, lives in Clarence House near her daughter, Queen Elizabeth II at Buckingham Palace, and is still going strong with a program of regular official engagements.

Guinness said the queen who lived the longest was the Queen Grandmother of Siam, Queen Sawang, 27th daughter of King Mongkut, who died in 1955 at age 93 years and 3 months.

Comfort of '50s marks men's sportswear

By JULIE VARGO TURI
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — If spring cleaning uncovers a trunk full of Dad's duds left over from the '50s, snatch them up and consider yourself lucky. They are back in style again.

This season, menswear turns back the hands of time. Retro looks straight from "Happy Days" — updated with '80s details — call the shots this spring for fashionable guys.

Fuller pants with multiple pleats and crisp cuffs line the racks in an array of colorful plaids, stripes and solids. Classic cotton cardigans, slouchy vests and pullover sweaters sport "Father Knows Best" appeal. Cotton and rayon shirts with small, button-down collars come with longer short sleeves that dip to the elbow.

Drive-in movie and malt shop scenes, fellows in white bucks and crew cuts and girls in ponytails and poodle skirts frolic across spring's selection of camp shirts, beachwear, ties — even underwear. Jockey International Inc. peppers fun-loving boxer shorts with drive-in movie marquees and couples in Chevy convertibles.

"The retro '50s themes are the latest in conversational prints for menswear," says Erica Fineberg of the American Printed Fabric Council. "Prints seem to be coming back around to more America-inspired themes."

RALPH LAUREN sketches colorful classic cars, surfboard-laden pickup trucks, drive-in hamburger joints and roller-skating carhops across a taupe camp shirt. Jeans-clad guys and gals with retro hairstyles lounge around on a blue chambray shirt by Italy's Omonimo Clothing Co.

While shirts make a statement splashed with retro prints, the tapered silhouettes of the season's trousers remember easygoing days of the past.

"Comfort is a major factor," Chip Tolbert of the Men's Fashion Association says of the return to pleated pants and '50s styling. "Men are finally getting over the fallacy that pleated pants make them look fat. Since they are fuller cut, these trousers are less binding and more comfortable — especially for the fellow who spends his day sitting behind a desk."

Mixing patterns has become the norm in menswear and spring's retro-inspired togs offer a bevy of exciting combinations. Double-pleated trousers in a teal, navy and royal plaid team up with an Aztec-print cotton shirt. A boxy striped bowling shirt tops madras Bermuda shorts. Zany Hawaiian shirts of drapey rayon are paired with everything.

While others are just discovering the joy of American chic, the boys at Basco continue dishing up the wearable retro looks that have been their hallmark for the last seven years.

"Maybe we were ahead of our time," says Lance Karesh, who designs the carefree Basco collection with partner Gene Pressman. "But we stay with the same concept every year. And we'll be doing this style for the next 10 years. That's just the way I like clothes."

AMERICANS AREN'T the only ones delving into their fashion past. The European designers, enamored with the preppy Ivy League look last spring, dish up their version of American '50s panache this season with lots of pleats, cuffs and easy silhouettes.

"The European designers are infatuated with American classics," says Kenn Roberson of Matinique. "All the designers in Europe are really big into the retro looks of the '50s and '60s — lots of plaids and madras, deco prints, rayon shirts, pleated trousers."

"Shapes are less exaggerated, leaner, cleaner," says Roberson. "Pants, while pleated, are more tapered, less baggy — like something Robbie Douglas on 'My Three Sons' would wear. And lots of madras as well, which is a real retro influence."

"The '50s look is really catching on all over Europe with designers such as Gaultier and Byblos," says Harry DeMarco of H.D.'s Clothing Co. DeMarco makes several trips to Europe each year to stock his store.

"I'VE LIVED THROUGH the '50s," adds DeMarco, "so I understand reliving it. It's the wild and crazy guy look that we laughed at on 'Saturday Night Live' a few years ago — but more tastefully done."

DEAR ABBY

Minor's love affair creates major mess

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read with great interest the letter about "New Mexico Mess," whose 15-year-old grandson was sexually involved with an 18-year-old girl.

Two years ago our son, who was 15 at the time, became involved with "Lilly" — an 18-year-old girl. Lilly came to our home in the afternoons while we were gone and went to bed with him. Her parents were aware of this, but did nothing about it. We contacted two lawyers and an assistant district attorney. They all gave us the same advice. In Texas, an 18-year-old boy can be charged with contributing to the delinquency of a 15-year-old girl, but there is no law to protect a minor boy from an 18-year-old girl!

When Lilly became pregnant, her parents demanded that our son marry her! Of course, we refused to allow our 15-year-old son to marry her. We begged Lilly to give up the baby for adoption. She refused. Our son is now a 17-year-old high school dropout. He lives with Lilly and the baby, working two jobs to pay the rent. We provide for the baby, pay a sitter during the week and care for the child on weekends. Lilly sleeps late and works part time. Her parents contribute nothing.

Our friends tell us to wash our hands of the whole mess, but we feel that an innocent baby would suffer if we did. Do you have an answer to this horrible situation? — NO NAMES IN TEXAS

DEAR NO NAMES: You could help your son far more by encouraging him to complete his education so he will better be able to support himself and his family. To "wash your hands of the whole mess" would be tantamount to throwing the baby out with the bath water!

DEAR ABBY: Lately, I have been getting so much junk mail and begging letters from various organizations asking for money, I am going to need a bigger mailbox!

I have my favorite charities and I give as much as I can, but it seems that I am on at least two dozen "lists," and this mail keeps coming and coming — some with stamped envelopes which I find difficult to throw away, so I send a few dollars not knowing how much of my money will ever reach the cause.

Abby, this has got to stop. Please tell me how to get off those lists and reduce my junk mail. Thank you. — TOO MUCH MAIL

DEAR TOO MUCH: Write to: Mail Preference Service, Direct Marketing Association, 6 E. 43rd St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

But be aware that many organizations are now computerized, and once your name is in the computer, you are automatically solicited, in which case your only defense is to ignore the solicitation.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend's 25th wedding anniversary is approaching soon. They were married in July of 1961. In January of 1965 they were divorced. Shortly after, they realized they had made a mistake, so they were remarried the following January and they've been happily married ever since.

There are several of us friends who want to give them a big party in celebration of their 25th wedding anniversary — on their original wedding date — but we wonder whether it would be proper to overlook the time they were not married. — THEIR LONGTIME FRIENDS

DEAR FRIENDS: Friends who count don't count. Overlook the lapse and celebrate on their original wedding date.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Dad's Day gifts fashionable

NEW YORK (AP) — Father's Day is always an opportunity to augment dad's wardrobe with a few well chosen gifts. It's also an opening to give the man in your life — whether you call him dad, son, grandpa or honey — a clothes lift, says fashion expert Pat Rushin.

"Fear of fashion can crimp an attractive man's style, but you can help him expand his conservative tastes by introducing him to new colors and patterns," says Rushin, senior color and fabric coordinator, Eastman Chemical Products Inc.

She offers some suggestions for giving a gentle push in a more forward-looking fashion direction:

"Men are looking to 'Miami soft' shades in shirts, pants and jackets," she says. "These 'new neutrals' such as peach, pale yellow and mint green are ideal coordinates. You can build an entire wardrobe around them."

Dad doesn't have to give up his gray and beige poplin and tropical weight trousers to add a little color to his fashion life, she points out.

"How about a peach or yellow shirt in lieu of white? These new neutrals work well with gray, navy and khaki. Even color-shy dads like pale blue — only second to white in shirt sales."

Men's sportswear designers are also dipping their brushes into a bright palette of colors: magenta, jade, turquoise, blue and red, Rushin notes.

"These lively hues add pizazz to dad's wardrobe," she says. "Make a bright color a variation on a familiar theme by selecting a shirt with a traditional cut, for instance a sports shirt, but in a bright-toned plaid. Or look for a classic-colored knit shirt edged with rainbow hues on collar and sleeves.

"Mixing patterns is the latest fashion trend, for both women and men. Coordinate patterns of different scale with matching colors for a new look," she adds.

Start conservatively by selecting shirt, tie and pocket square with different patterns, Rushin advises. Accessories should reflect the tones in the shirt. A tie pattern can combine the two predominant colors in the pocket square and shirt, for instance, or feature their background colors in its figures.

Because many pinstripe-suited fathers sport more daring tops on the golf course or by the pool, Rushin suggests that Father's Day gift givers pick summer's hot prints in casual, active or beach wear.

Ancient site no longer disfigured by Mounds Drive-In

EDITOR'S NOTE — Some of the mysteries of the Cahokia Mounds may never be solved. But thanks to new restoration efforts by the state, the ancient earthen mounds built by prehistoric Indians will be preserved for a new generation of archaeologists and history buffs to ponder.

By ED SCHAFER

COLLINSVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Not long ago you could stand atop giant earthen mounds built by prehistoric Indians and see the silver screen of an adult drive-in, ramshackle houses and a discount shoe store.

But attitudes are changing, and so is the landscape around the Cahokia Mounds, one of the richest archaeological sites in the world.

The Mounds Drive-In has been cleared away. The run-down subdivision and shoe outlet are soon to go. The property has been purchased by the state in order to reclaim and restore as much as possible of the 1,000-year-old city.

The Cahokia Mounds World Heritage Site is the largest prehistoric site on the continent north of the Mexican border, says Bill Iseminger, curator of the museum there. Monks Mound, which stands 100 feet and covers 14 acres, is the largest prehistoric earthwork in the New World, he says.

Indians of the Mississippian Culture built the mounds between 900 and 1200 A.D. For reasons still unknown, the Indians disappeared before the first visit by European explorers, who believed the mounds to be natural formations.

Most archaeologists conclude that there was a major city at the site, but they disagree on its size.

The majority believe 20,000 to 40,000 Indians lived there at the peak of the settlement's history, but others say it was more of a trading center with a permanent population of 10,000 or less. The higher figure would make the city larger than London was at that time.

One of the arguments against the large city is put forth by archaeologist James Porter of the University of Illinois, who believes there are not enough burial sites to support a major city.

Most of the mounds contain no graves and were platforms for ceremonial buildings and homes for the ruling class.

Bill Iseminger, curator of the Cahokia Mounds World Heritage Site, stands at the largest prehistoric site on the continent north of the Mexican border, located at Collinsville, Ill. He stands at the base of Monks Mound, which is 100 feet high and covers 14 acres, as visitors climb down the steps.

But Iseminger disputes Porter's argument.

"Only 1 percent of the site has been excavated," Iseminger says. "The burial mounds we have explored were reserved for the elite. The common people would have been buried in cemeteries and we just haven't found them yet."

Iseminger also says the work force needed to construct the mounds and a 1½-mile-long wooden stockade around the "downtown" area required a large labor pool and a political structure that could only be found in a large concentration of people.

"You're talking in terms of huge amounts of earth to be moved and, in the case of the stockade, the cutting of 15,000 logs the size of telephone poles and moving them to the site," he says. "There must have been a complex social system that gave one man power enough to order the work to be done."

Early farming and later construction of homes, highways and businesses along U.S. Highway 40 a few miles east of St. Louis destroyed much of the city.

Parts of the site are beyond reclamation, but new programs and money are enabling the Illinois Historic Preservation Agency to save what is left and reclaim much that had earlier been feared lost. Construction is due to begin this year on a new museum.

Iseminger says the state bought 144 acres for the park in 1925, but recent buyouts of private property have boosted the size of the site to 2,300 acres.

Even that is not all of the ancient Indian city that once stretched for more than 1½ miles in all directions from Monks Mound.

Aside from the mounds themselves, one of the most striking features of the site is a circle of logs set upright with an observation post near the center that permitted the city's priest-astronomer to announce the vernal and autumnal equinoxes and the summer and winter solstices.

Called "Woodhenge" after similar structures made of slabs of stone in Great Britain, the 410-foot-diameter circle tells scientists that the mound people belonged to an agrarian society that needed to know the growing cycle.

Even with the limited digging that has been done, Iseminger says, enough material has been unearthed to give scientists a good idea of how and why the city existed.

The Indians of Cahokia Mounds were apparently at the center of a vast trading network that linked the Gulf Coast area with northern Minnesota and stretched from the Rocky Mountains eastward to the Appalachians.

Excavation of the burial mounds of chieftains has turned up marine shells from the Gulf of Mexico, mica from the mountains of North Carolina and West Virginia, copper from Lake Superior, lead and other goods not naturally found here.

The mounds are located on two creeks that formed a link with the Mississippi River near the confluences of the Missouri and Illinois rivers. The Indians used the rivers as their highways.

Iseminger says there are no plans to excavate the entire site.

"Work is being done nearby where the new highways are going in," he says, "and the site of the new museum will be dug. But most of the digging from now on will be limited to 'problem solving' digs" — attempts to prove or disprove theories about the city and its structures.

What is not known is why the Indians deserted the city or where they went.

"There is some evidence of a climate change about the time the civilization disappeared," Iseminger says. "That could have affected the growing of corn, one of the staples of their diet. But the need for the stockade also suggests that there may have been some social unrest or attacks from outsiders. It's all still very unclear."

Volunteers pay for thrill of discovery

EDITOR'S NOTE — The idea grew out of a conversation between a Smithsonian scientist and several friends who were bemoaning the scarcity of grants for research projects. Why not use volunteers willing to pay their own way on scientific expeditions? Earthwatch was born.

BOSTON (AP) — This year some 2,600 amateur adventurers will scatter throughout the world to hack through jungles, count birds, tag kangaroos, dig up bones, chase whales, track turtles and map uncharted regions.

They are members of Earthwatch, an international organization based in a suburb of Boston that matches researchers who need field help with volunteers willing to pay for the thrill of being on a scientific expedition.

People like Marilyn Boettcher. The 55-year-old St. Louis housewife embarked alone last January on a two-week adventure that sent her into the jungles of the South Sea islands, through the ruins of ancient sacred sites, into the kitchens of modern-day Maoris and to her first 60-pig Polynesian wedding feast.

"It's definitely not my husband's idea of a good time and it wasn't my friends' idea of a good time, but for me, well, I'm trying to decide what to do this year," she says.

It's surprising what people are willing to pay to do. A trip of two or three weeks costs from $600 to $2,500 per person, including food, airfare and lodging — often in a tent or primitive dormitory. But the cost is tax deductible and some scholarships are available for teachers and students.

Conceived in a living room in 1971, Earthwatch now has a full-time staff of about 40 and an annual budget of nearly $4 million. In its short history, Earthwatch has sponsored 730 projects in 68 countries, providing researchers with nearly 14,000 helpers and more than $7.6 million in money and equipment.

Volunteers range in age from 16 to 80 and include students, teachers, corporate executives, housewives and retirees. They choose among 90 projects a year that could take them anywhere from the reefs of the Canary Islands to a Borneo rain forest to the northwest New Mexico desert. One-third of them will return for another taste of the life of a research scientist.

"YOU'RE HELPING on whatever needs help with; and they're usually very eager to teach you," said Steve Buehler, 34, a Chicago tax attorney who has been on archaeological digs in northern Maine, Zaire and Swaziland.

By its 15th birthday this year, Earthwatch had outgrown its original headquarters in Belmont, two floors of a gracious old mansion, where linen closets bulged with stacks of files and a bathtub had to be removed to make room for the computer. The group recently moved to a former elementary school in nearby Watertown.

This year, teams of volunteers will help researchers trap fruit bats in Costa Rica, excavate a French cathedral dating from the Dark Ages, search for Mayan trading villages in Belize and photograph dancers in Japan.

Others will catalog traditional medicinal plants in India with a DuPont Co. biochemist who believes Western medicine has something to learn from the 5,000-year-old folk remedies.

Three teams will do what Mrs. Boettcher did last year — clear out and restore 1,000-year-old religious sites in the Cook Islands while spending weekends living with native Maori families.

The idea for the organization grew out of an armchair conversation between a Smithsonian scientist and several friends who were bemoaning the scarcity of grants for research projects, says spokeswoman Mary Blue Maguder. One of the group, a public relations specialist at Boston University, suggested a clearinghouse where volunteers could learn about projects in need of money, and Earthwatch was born.

LEADERSHIP was assumed a year later by a frustrated Wall Street lawyer named Brian Rosborough, who still refers to himself as "midwife" to the idea. While the founders have left, Rosborough has remained as president of the organization.

When Earthwatch began, using volunteers to do field work "was a very radical idea," Ms. Maguder says. "The Ivory Tower simply hadn't felt the need to publicize its research or reach out to the public at all."

In its first year, Earthwatch sponsored only four projects. A total of 45 volunteers took part in volcano studies in Costa Rica and the Galapagos Islands, a geological expedition to Ethiopia and an archaeological dig in Zambia.

"Since it was a new concept, a new idea, it took awhile to catch on," says John Humphrey of the University of Michigan, who this summer will lead his fourth expedition of Earthwatch volunteers on an archaeological dig on the site of the ancient city of Carthage.

In the early days, many researchers "thought volunteers would come in and mess up the research, that they would get out of control," Humphrey says. "Well, some of them do have their own ideas. The secret is to have enough staff so you are supervising, you're physically watching every volunteer all the time."

These days Earthwatch regularly turns down researchers' requests for workers simply because there aren't enough volunteers to go around. The organization now sifts through about 300 preliminary proposals a year to find 90 or so of the most promising.

"PEOPLE STILL wonder if they can really trust amateurs, but if you are charting a reef and you have to collect research samples at different depths, then you'd jump at the idea of 10 divers," Ms. Magruder says.

Earthwatch's project-selection arm, the Center for Field Research, has become adept at spotting proposals that can attract willing laborers. Midwinter trips to the tropics are predictably popular, and kangaroos and dolphins are always a big draw, but other subjects require some creative recruiting.

For a study of potato plant pollination in the Peruvian Andes, for example, Earthwatch is advertising for spud-lovers in Maine and Idaho and in "Peelings," the official publication of The Potato Museum in Washington.

"There aren't a whole lot of people who want to watch bees pollinating flowers, so you have to be creative about where to look," Ms. Magruder says.

"You look for a project that needs labor that you could train interested people in doing in a couple of days. You might have a vet who's done poodles, but he's never looked at a baboon except in a zoo. Almost anybody who applies could do almost any of the projects, but you do have some self-selection."

That's where the Earthwatch staff comes in, helping volunteers sift through the options to find an expedition they will really enjoy.

"You might get someone who says, 'I always wanted to go to Katmandu.' And then you say, 'But did you always want to get up at 4 a.m. and bicycle uphill to a site and work all day?' And then they might say, 'Well, no, maybe I didn't.' So, you suggest something else," Ms. Magruder says.

This year, teams of volunteers will help researchers trap fruit bats in Costa Rica, excavate a French cathedral dating from the Dark Ages, search for Mayan trading villages in Belize and photograph dancers in Japan.

THE SUCCESS of projects often depends more on the personality of the researcher than on the kind of work being done.

"You have to like to teach, because teaching becomes a large part of the operaton," says Humphrey, whose Carthage trip is an Earthwatch favorite. "You can't treat Earthwatch volunteers as paid workmen, where you might expect them to do the same job day in and day out. You have to treat them more like people, and vary their routine and instruct them at the same time."

Still, there are occasional failures. Cacti in Uruguay didn't sell. Neither did sand wasps in western Australia. Monk seals in the Mediterranean fizzled when would-be volunteers learned there was almost no chance they would see one.

A popular project asks volunteers to patrol a Caribbean island shoreline from dusk to dawn looking for half-ton leatherback turtles, a critically endangered species.

Volunteers who have taken part in "save the turtle," expeditions on St. Croix in the U.S. Virgin Islands for the past four years are so enthusiastic that they now hold regular reunions.

Ellen Goff, 44, a psychiatric nurse from Lexington, Mass., who has been on five trips in as many years, spent half of one frosty January recording the types of birds she sighted as she hiked up to 10 miles a day along the lonely, coastal cliffs of Scotland.

"I found it wonderfully exhilarating to be just walking in the fresh air. And you have such a feeling of accomplishment at the end of the day. You come back and you might go to the pub and talk," she says.

More than a few volunteers have been changed by the experience. One banker who went on an Earthwatch expedition ended up joining the Peace Corps in Africa. Another man who wrote software for computers was inspired by a trip to enroll in archaeology school.

More often, though, volunteers simply end up with a new hobby or a new perspective.

"We don't intend to be changing people's lives," said Ms. Magruder. "We just intend to make them richer."

Time running out for Indian site in Seattle

By RORY MARSHALL

SEATTLE (AP) — Along the Duwamish River, hard by the steel and lumber factories, is a ditch where archaeologists are uncovering a bit of Seattle's long-buried and long-forgotten past.

But time is running out for the site of what is believed to be an ancient Duwamish Indian hunting village. A sewage pipeline is to be built through the heart of the camp, which apparently was used for at least 1,200 years.

As those involved in the dig work toward a deadline, the tribe's chairwoman hopes the effort will uncover historical information that will help her people gain federal recognition.

"With all the urbanization around Seattle, there aren't that many sites that still survive," said Dennis Lewarch, senior archaeologist for URS Corp., which is conducting the sewer project. "Every one of them is like a time capsule with a lot of valuable information."

Bits of shell and bone, a few rough tools, almost indistinguishable from regular stones to the untrained eye, and fire-marked rock show where Indians once worked about 100 feet above one of the river's bends.

Just as important as the relics are the patterns of artifacts showing how the camp was used and what the Indians gathered. Lab tests, for example, can tell what species of migratory birds and other animals were collected.

"The food debris isn't as dense as a winter village, so it might have been either a fall or spring hunting or gathering camp," Lewarch said.

The campsite is an anomaly along the grimy waterway. The plot of several acres has been spared heavy development.

Just south lies Kellogg Island which, like much else along the river, fell victim to the turn-of-the-century frenzy to dredge and develop — a process that turned the swampy mouth into a ruler-straight ship channel that today is the heart of Seattle's heavy industry.

As part of an effort to clean up the Duwamish, the state Department of Ecology ordered the metropolitan sewer and transportation authority to stop dumping treated sewage into the river by Jan. 1, 1987. Instead, a pipeline will carry the wastes along the Duwamish to an outfall in Elliott Bay.

The 300-by-15-foot Indian dig site lies in the path of the sewer line. Lewarch says a possible alternative route, under a roadway, would be more expensive and require "a lot of exploratory work" to determine whether there's anything valuable there.

The dig site is listed on the National Register of Historic Places, which means that potential developers could not ignore its historical aspects, Lewarch said. "But that doesn't automatically protect it," he added. The camp extends beyond the current excavation site and other parts could be excavated later.

Officials of the dig have advised Duwamish tribal chairwoman Cecile Maxwell of their progress, and she is enthusiastic.

"We would like to see something come out of this dig that really, truly documents it was our people," she said of the tribe, whose numbers have dwindled to about 325.

The Duwamish Indians were dispersed in 1855 to several Puget Sound-area reservations. Though they signed a treaty, the Duwamish have never been recognized by the government nor granted their own territory.

"If you don't have a land base and your people are scattered all over, how can you keep anything together?" she said.

Radiocarbon dating has identified relics indicating the site was used as early as A.D. 600 and as late as 1800, Lewarch said.

Moreover, remnants of a post found during preliminary excavations in 1978 indicate a building stood on the site about A.D. 700. If fully traced and excavated, it would be the first complete study of a building from that period, Lewarch said.

Lacking definitive clues, archaeologists on the dig are careful not to specify which tribe used the site, saying only that the riverbank was "in Duwamish (Indian) territory."

Lewarch said, however, that the camp probably was used by Duwamish Indians, and may have been related to Duwamish sites along the now-dry Black River.

Lewarch theorized the Black River sites were wintering grounds for the Indians, who dispersed to the Duwamish River and other sites when better weather arrived.

"That's one of the things we're trying to find out, is what the relationship was to the Black River sites," he said.

Another question for researchers is why the site apparently was not used after about 1800.

"In the Northwest generally, after the initial European contact, smallpox decimated the population," Lewarch said. "It might be that the population was just decimated by disease. I know in other areas a lot of villages were abandoned."

Chilean minister characterizes Palme charges as 'foolishness'

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Foreign Minister Jaime del Valle said Monday that press reports about the involvement of Chile's military government in the assassination of Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme were "supreme foolishness."

He told reporters that stories in London's Observer newspaper and Sweden's Expressen suggesting that Chilean secret police had plotted the assassination were "absurd, like so many others of that type."

In Stockholm, police spokesman Leif Hallberg told The Associated Press the leads in the investigation of the killing "are not inclined in the direction" that it was ordered from outside Sweden.

He said the number of suspects has narrowed gradually, but declined to elaborate.

The weekly Observer quoted a Swedish government source, who was not identified, as saying police were "actively investigating a Chilean connection" in the assassination of Palme on a Stockholm street Feb. 28.

It said in the report Sunday that Chilean secret police "are known to have plotted for more than a decade" to kill Palme, a Social Democrat who was a critic of Chile's right-wing military government headed by President Augusto Pinochet, the army commander.

The Observer said the Swedish source named American Michael Townley as a key figure in the alleged Chilean plot. Townley was convicted in connection with the 1976 murder of Orlando Letelier, who had been a diplomatic official in the government of Marxist President Salvador Allende that was overthrown in the coup led Gen. Pinochet. Letelier was killed by a bomb planted in his car in Washington, D.C.

Townley pleaded guilty to conspiracy to murder a foreign official, and in return for his testimony against others, the government agreed to support his parole after serving 40 months of his 10-year sentence.
