Reagan seeks to curb deposit insurance

THE Reagan BUDGET

S & L RESCUES

Source: Office of Management and Budget, AP

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration today recommended curtailing deposit insurance for bank and savings and loan accounts and said the public will have to bear much of the estimated $100 billion cost of restoring the S&L industry to health.

The White House Council of Economic Advisers, in President Reagan's final economic report, said reducing protection for depositors would cause them to more closely "monitor the financial health" of the institutions holding their money.

Although the report did not address the question, Beryl W. Sprinkel, the president's chief economic adviser, said that as part of the insurance curb, institutions should be required to publicly disclose more information about their financial condition.

The administration also sharply criticized S&L regulators for "postponing the day of reckoning" in their rescues of failed institutions.

But the top regulator, M. Danny Wall, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, defended his agency's year-end spree of savings and loan bailouts as cheaper than shutting the failed institutions down and paying off depositors.

Wall, a Reagan appointee, said at a briefing outlining his testimony today before the House Banking Committee that his agency rescued 75 institutions in December at a cost of $16.3 billion to be spread out over 10 years.

Tax benefits arising from the deals will cost the government an additional $4 billion over 10 years.

The alternative to the rescues — liquidating the S&Ls and shutting them down — would have required $47 billion in "up-front cash," far more than is available immediately to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., Wall said.

By selling off the property of the failed S&Ls, regulators eventually would have recouped all but $22.8 billion on the December transactions, he said.

The board supervises nearly 3,000 federally insured S&Ls.

Both banks and S&Ls are failing in numbers not seen since the Great Depression. Reagan's report noted that the problems will be "one of the major challenges for the next administration" under President-elect Bush.

While Reagan placed much of the blame on regulators, the administration's own record has come under fire as well. Critics point out that the administration refused to pay for additional S&L examiners while the problem was developing.

Budget called 'dead letter'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic chairmen of Congress' budget-writing committees said today that President Reagan's farewell, $1.15 trillion spending plan is a dead letter and that President-elect Bush must submit a substitute reflecting his more moderate policies.

"This Reagan budget is a continuation of what we've seen for the past eight years — increased spending in defense, cuts in domestic spending and a lot of red ink. And George Bush needs to reverse that trend," said Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

Joining Sasser on NBC-TV's "Today" show, House Budget Committee

Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif., added: "These kind of budgets have been overwhelmingly rejected by Republicans and Democrats on Capitol Hill."

"So if (Bush) wants a budget that not only goes someplace on Capitol Hill but also reflects some new priorities for this country, then he's got to change the budget that was presented yesterday."

Deficit examined; Related stories — 4A

Texans react — 8A

Sasser said Bush must cut defense spending in favor of restoring funds for domestic programs that were slashed under Reagan.

The president's fiscal 1990 budget, submitted just 11 days before he retires, would produce a deficit of $92.5 billion, within the $100 billion target mandated by the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law.

If achieved, that figure would be a dramatic decrease from the worst of the Reagan era shortfalls, but drastically higher than the red ink run up by any previous president.

Site preparation work already is underway at a 33-acre park site located north of Loop 250 off Bluebird Lane. The park is being developed by the city and other private interests, according to officials.

City ready to back groups developing new sports park

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Midland City Council apparently is prepared to part with surplus and revenue sharing funds to assist local sporting organizations in building a 33-acre park just north of Loop 250 off Blue Bird Lane.

According to Parks and Recreation Director George Logan, grading work already is under way at the site, which will supply the city with seven new T-ball fields, 13 soccer fields, four Little League fields and a neighborhood park for the Crestgate development.

Today, council was expected to act on a $71,000 expenditure for a field sprinkler system as well as an estimated $19,000 for chain link fencing.

"This isn't exactly the way we wanted to do it, but it's still a way," said Councilman Bill Williams.

"Council was committed to do something."

The park — which is located on city water department land — will be Midland's third largest when completed, behind Hogan and Windlands. It will also be the first park built north of the loop.

Last September, council proposed a $4.2 million parks and recreation bond issue, the bulk of which would have been used to construct 150-acre facility located on SBC Corp.-owned property northwest of town.

But 72 percent of voters weren't exactly tickled by that prospect and eventually defeated the issue, sending a message back to city hall. "It just scared people in a down economy," said Williams. "But if our estimates are right, we're going to do this."

Logan, who Monday was firming up final architectural drawings, said organized leagues had the numbers to back up previous claims that demand had finally outstripped all available playing facilities.

In the meantime, South Texas Construction Co. was given the go ahead to clear the area and prepare the site for ball fields that will be ready for use by April 17.

"Once the dirt work is completed, we'll need to get the fencing and irrigation system in," said Logan, adding all initial site-work is being paid by local baseball and soccer funds.

Abortion backer predicts 'chaos' if ruling overturned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reversal of the Supreme Court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion would touch off political chaos and social upheaval across the country, an abortion-rights leader said today.

The justices said Monday they will study a federal appeals court ruling that struck down key provisions of a Missouri law regulating abortions.

The court's eventual decision, expected by July, could resolve the Missouri controversy without disturbing the 1973 decision. But Missouri officials and Justice Department lawyers are urging the justices to use the case to overturn the landmark Roe vs. Wade ruling.

A reversal of that ruling would "create political chaos and social upheaval across this country," Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, said on "CBS This Morning."

"There would be firestorms all across this country on the question of abortion," she said. "We will mobilize this country the likes of which you have not seen in a long time. This country, women and men alike, will never accept going back to the day when women have to risk their lives, their health, their families' lives in order to seek an abortion."

William Bradford Reynolds, who as an assistant attorney general pushed for a review of Roe vs. Wade, said on the CBS program that "there is certainly good reason for optimism that the court is going to differ with the lower court as far as some of the strictures that have been placed in the Missouri statute on abortion."

He added that he hopes "it would go further and entertain the whole question of Roe vs. Wade and reconsider it, and I would hope that if it did that, it would come to a result that is constitutionally sound and that we could correct the error that was made some years ago in this area," he said.

Reynolds maintained that the 1973 decision "does not stand on very firm constitutional footing."

"Women's lives are literally on the line" if the court reverses its most famous abortion ruling, said Eleanor Smeal, president of the Fund for the Feminist Majority.

Thinking, writing, reading share 'loop'

EDITOR'S NOTE: In observance of "The Year of the Young Reader" programs being held this week in Midland, the Reporter-Telegram is publishing a six-part series detailing several issues that affect children and their reading skills. In today's installment, the relationship between thinking, reading and writing is explored.

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Quoting noted reading specialist Roach Van Allen, Midland teacher Kathleen Harper summed up the learning process:

"What I can think, I can say. What I can say, I can write. What I can write, I can read."

The relationship between the three language functions seems simple enough on face value.

But in talking with educators about the subject, terms like "experiential knowledge," "metacognition" and the "total language experience" pop up.

"The Little Engine that Could" — a total cerebral experience? Apparently.

In the classroom, children are taught from the start there are words that define the myriad of thoughts swirling about their heads.

THE YOUNG READER new words ... new worlds

Educators teach children to assign words to those thoughts so that they later may be written or spoken. In essence, the child learns to make his abstracts concrete.

The process of reading, writing and thinking is continuous and circular. The three processes are the functional trioka on which all further education hinges.

It makes no difference if it is science, math, geography or literature, reading plays an integral part in the learning process.

Reading is the importer of knowledge into the brain that — when coupled with comprehension — allows the child to export what he has learned verbally or as written words.

More fortunate children have had the luxury of gaining what teachers like to call "prior knowledge" in taking family trips, visiting museums or being read to by parents.

This "experiential base" is paramount to the child's understanding of what he might be learning about on any given day in school, experts said.

But for the child who hasn't experienced much outside of the occasional game of kick-ball in the street, reading holds the potential to be a mental vacation — a gateway to new worlds that can only intensify his thirst for more knowledge.

South Elementary Principal Rob Van Stavern explained: "Take their experience level, give them a vocabulary to go with it, and build on that with books."

Judy Thornton, a sixth-grade language arts teacher at South, remembered the problems she encountered when introducing a book about elevated trains in New York.

How could a child who's never read about them or seen one understand what an elevated train is?

"Words are meaningless if the experience is not behind it. You can't write about what you've never experienced, but you can write about what you've read," Ms. Thornton explained.

Parents need to turn off the television at night and read to their children, stressed Lucinda Windsor, Midland Independent School District's language arts coordinator.

Reading, writing and thinking are so closely related, in fact, that a deficiency in one directly and adversely affects a child's ability to do either the other two, Ms. Windsor explained.

To parents, she advises talking over a story after its been read to the child.

"Ask a child to discuss the main idea of the story." And "If we really want a youngster to understand, get him to write about it," she added.

These two exercises tone a youngster's ability to think critically and comprehend a story.

Unfortunately, a child's parents don't always have the skills necessary to read aloud to their offspring, much less for teaching him to infer or analyze or anything else, Van Stavern explained.

The responsibility for strengthening the three functions then falls to the teacher and to the child him or herself.

That's why teaching the child that reading can be fun and a path to worlds he may never see is paramount, experts agreed.

Police investigating death of man found stabbed on floor of bar

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Police today had little information about the killing of a 41-year-old man who walked into a Midland bar late Monday, collapsed and later died of a stab wound.

Alfonso Smith, whose last known address was in San Antonio, was pronounced dead at Midland Memorial Hospital 3:38 a.m. today by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, police spokesman Cpl. Jim White said.

Paramedics were called to the Savoy Club, 1111 E. Illinois Ave., about 10 p.m. and found Smith bleeding on the floor, White said. He was transported to MMH where he was treated, underwent surgery and later died, he said.

Homeless 'doctor' arrested for slaying pregnant physician

NEW YORK (AP) — A homeless man who lived secretly at Bellevue Hospital was wearing a surgical gown and stethoscope when he murdered and raped a pregnant physician during a robbery in her hospital office, police said.

Steven Smith, 23, was arrested at a men's shelter Monday afternoon after three other homeless men brought the slain woman's identification and credit cards to police, Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward said at a news conference.

The men told investigators Smith had given them the items to sell and had given a mink coat stolen from the doctor to another man to sell, the commissioner said.

Police recovered the coat with Dr. Kathryn Hinnant's initials embroidered inside from a man at the shelter, Ward told reporters.

Smith was charged with second-degree murder, first-degree robbery and first-degree rape in the strangulation death of Hinnant. Smith had been arrested at the hospital on Jan. 1 for illegally possessing a hypodermic needle but was released and his case adjourned until Feb. 2, said Gerald McKelvey, a spokesman for the district attorney's office.

The body of the 33-year-old physician, who was five months pregnant, was discovered Sunday by her husband, Eric Johnson, after she failed to meet him the night before.

Ward said Smith masqueraded as a doctor and his "normal behavior when he is at the hospital is to steal IDs" and eat at the hospital cafeteria. "He's a kind of a con person who seems to take a great joy in getting over on the staff," Ward said.

Police said Smith was wearing a blue scrub suit, a lab coat and a stethoscope when he attacked Hinnant on Saturday afternoon.

Smith told detectives he had lived periodically on the 22nd floor of the 25-story hospital, where police said they found a dirty hospital bed, a stethoscope and bloodied hospital gloves presumably used in the attack and empty beer cans.

Detectives also found bloodied clothing, including a blue scrub suit, jeans and socks, in a garbage container at the shelter where Smith was arrested. They also recovered a saw that police believed belonged to the victim.

Bellevue is a major municipal hospital where many of the city's homeless are taken for treatment.

The 22nd floor is a maintenance area that houses machinery and was not usually patrolled, according to Dr. Jo Ivey Boufford, president of Health and Hospitals Corp., the city agency that runs Bellevue. She said security at the 1,200-bed complex would be reviewed but an initial check found nothing out of the ordinary at the time of the murder.

"Hospitals are not prisons, they have to be open environments to a degree, for the people to get their work done," she said.

Hinnant had been struck in the face and had her nose broken, then was strangled with an appliance cord and raped, authorities said.

Smith told investigators a man he identified only as John participated in the assault and raped Hinnant, but Ward said police had "not even confirmed that this person exists other than in the mind of Steven Smith."

Apparently Hinnant kept the door of her windowless office ajar with a small box, police said. Smith told detectives he and John walked by, then returned to talk to the physician.

Star-eating pulsar may explain mystery

BOSTON (AP) — Astronomers have spotted a star as it devoured its companion orb, and perhaps solved a celestial mystery.

Scientists have long argued about how some superdense stars called pulsars could get themselves spinning hundreds of times a second. The question may now be answered by the discovery of a black widow binary — a star that like the spider uses its companion and then destroys it.

If current theories are correct, the star represents a celestial missing link, a bridge between fast-spinning stars that have mates and those that do not.

The combination of the star and its companion, labeled PSR 1957-20 in astronomers' shorthand, was detected last spring by Andrew Fruchter of the Carnegie Institution in Washington.

At a meeting Monday of the American Astronomical Society, scientists described the significance of the find in understanding the life and death of the stars.

The duo is made up of a pulsar, an incredibly dense dead-star that transmits rhythmic beats of radar. It is orbited by a much larger ordinary star known as a brown dwarf.

Astronomers have evidence that the pulsar is transmitting a powerful blast of energy that is literally blowing its companion away. They believe this is the late phase of a long, one-sided relationship between the two in which the pulsar steals matter from its mate to boost its speed, then turns on it with a blaze of atomic particles.

"The companion is being destroyed," said Frederic A. Rasio of Cornell University. "It is constantly losing matter. Eventually it could completely disappear."

The pulsar is one of six known pulsars that spin extremely rapidly. The newly discovered pair is important because they seem to help explain how they get to spin so fast.

"It offers a missing link between two classes of objects," said Steve Maran of NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center. "That's why astronomers are so excited."

A pulsar is the collapsed remains of a large star that has exploded in a spectacular disaster called a supernova. Pulsars emit no light, but broadcast twin rotating beams of radar, like lighthouses in the sky.

While a pulsar is only 14 miles across, its mass is 50 percent greater than the sun. One teaspoon of pulsar matter weighs billions of tons.

Most pulsars spin about once a second and are slowing down. However, the newly discovered one spins about 600 times a second.

Astronomers theorize that such fast-moving pulsars speed up by stealing a stream of matter from a companion star. The companion "spins up the pulsar like a top," said Fruchter.

However, astronomers have noticed while some of these fast-spinning pulsars have companions, others do not.

"People wondered, 'If you spin up the pulsar with a companion, where is the companion?'" said Fruchter. "This may explain that. The pulsar has evaporated the companion."

In the newly spotted couple, the companion is close to the pulsar, a distance of only 2½ times the sun's diameter. Yet it is being bombarded with atomic particles 5,000 times more intense than the sun.

Astronomers were able to study the pair because the companion regularly eclipses the pulsar. The companion revolves around the pulsar once every nine hours, and each time it blocks out the pulsar's radar beam for about 50 minutes.

"This is the only one (mate-eating pulsar) that we have seen in the galaxy," said E. Sterl Phinney of the California Institute of Technology. "But there is the exciting possibility that there will be many more."

Study unable to prove effect of abortions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said today he remains "as opposed to abortion as ever" but that a study by his office cannot prove whether having an abortion affects a woman's mental and physical health.

The surgeon general, interviewed on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," said a full scientific study should be done "that will settle the question once and for all."

On Monday, Koop sent a letter to President Reagan declining to issue a report on a study of the effects of abortion on women.

"I remain as opposed to abortion as ever, but I've always been able to separate my personal beliefs from my responsibilities as surgeon general," Koop said in the interview today.

"The focus of the various groups that are pro-life has been on a post-abortion syndrome, and they would like to be able to prove that that is a specific thing, and I can't prove that for them except by anecdotes," he said.

"If you take the whole abortion issue ... at one end there are people who are so relieved to be rid of their pregnancy that they consider it a positive health benefit," the surgeon general said. "At the other end there are people who are really psychologically upset ... I have dealt with women at both ends of the scale."

Koop's letter declining to issue the report came on the same day the Supreme Court agreed to hear an appeal that could reverse or narrow the landmark 1973 decision legalizing abortions nationwide. Koop noted that reversal of the decision has long been a goal of Reagan and the president's advisers.

Red ink marks Reagan legacy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president who rode to the White House on an anti-Washington sentiment, promising to balance the books while shaking things up, is leaving office after the largest credit binge in the nation's history.

The final budget submitted Monday by President Reagan symbolizes what he admits is one of his biggest disappointments and possibly the biggest failure of his eight years: the legacy of red ink he leaves behind.

The federal budget Reagan sent to Congress, his last as president, was like all the others that bore his name. It was far out of balance under even the rosiest of economic forecasts.

Reagan said in delivering it that by getting the deficit under $100 billion in the 1990 fiscal year, his budget would show that "gradual elimination of the deficit is possible without raising taxes."

At his inaugural eight years ago, Reagan declared: "You and I, as individuals, can, by borrowing live beyond our means, but for only a limited period of time. Why, then, should we think that collectively, as a nation, we're not bound by the same limitation?"

In one of his farewell addresses last month, Reagan spoke of the deficits with regret. "One of my great disappointments as I leave office is that the federal budget itself is not yet balanced," Reagan said.

He leaves to his successor George Bush that legacy of deficits, one that together with his no-tax increase pledge severely limits the new president's options.

As Democrats frequently point out, the federal debt under Reagan grew more than under all the presidents before him. From under $1 trillion when he took office in 1981, the national debt has risen to more than $2.6 trillion.

Many point to the 25 percent tax cut Reagan fought for and won early in his first term, reducing the government's revenue and increasing pressure to borrow.

Reagan's first budget director, David Stockman, left office a vocal critic of the administration's tax and budget policies. In his book "The Triumph of Politics," Stockman called the result "the Reagan era's fabulous free lunch" and spoke of frustration in trying to get the president to confront the deficit problem.

The administration's version, however, is that the tax cuts stimulated the economy and generated growth — and that Congress is to blame for failing to carry out all the cuts in spending proposed by Reagan. In his budget, Reagan also blamed the 1981-1982 recession for lowering government revenues.

In his farewell speech, Reagan blamed a new "iron triangle," giving a new definition to a term often used in Washington to represent the triad of special interests, Congress, and the bureaucracy that supports various programs. Reagan's version removed the bureaucracy — for which as president he was responsible — and replaced it with the press, for what he said was uncritical reporting of the special interests' views.

But none of his cuts would have been enough to balance the budget — Reagan has never proposed a balanced budget.

Among the projections of his 1990 budget document are a balanced budget by the year 1993, though many doubt it possible. Even so, that's 10 years later than candidate Reagan was saying in 1980.

Reagan

Critics: Health cuts would deprive needy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's critics say his proposed cuts in Medicaid and Medicare would curtail health care for the 56 million elderly, disabled and poor Americans and could drive up state taxes.

Public policy analysts, members of Congress and state officials all rejected Reagan's claim that the cuts will simply force states, hospitals and physicians paid under the programs to be more efficient.

The giant federal health-care programs have been the fastest growing segments of the budget of the Department of Health and Human Services, the largest federal agency, spending 37 percent of the government's entire budget.

Reagan's spending proposal for fiscal 1990 would trim Medicaid spending chiefly by cutting grants to states by 3 percent and reducing payments to hospitals and physicians serving Medicare patients.

Even with the proposed reductions totaling $1.4 billion, the Medicaid budget would grow by 5 percent to $36 billion. The Medicare cuts, $3.5 billion, would reduce that program's growth rate to 10 percent with $94.6 billion in projected spending.

The federal government shares the cost of the Medicaid program with the states, which administer the program and retain certain eligibility options.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House health subcommittee, said the Medicaid cuts would "put the states in a financially untenable situation" and wipe out President-elect George Bush's promise to expand Medicaid coverage to more low-income children.

States "will be unable to come up with the replacement dollars to continue coverage to the 12 million children now eligible for Medicaid, much less to expand coverage to the millions of low-income families that still have no coverage at all," Waxman said.

Robert Greenstein, director of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a nonprofit group that researches policy issues affecting the low-income, noted that even HHS Secretary Otis Bowen objected to the cuts in grants to the states when they were proposed by the Office of

Budget boosts AIDS research spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration proposes modest spending increases in education, health and poverty programs but wants to save money by cutting school lunch subsidies and home heating assistance along with some student loans and grants.

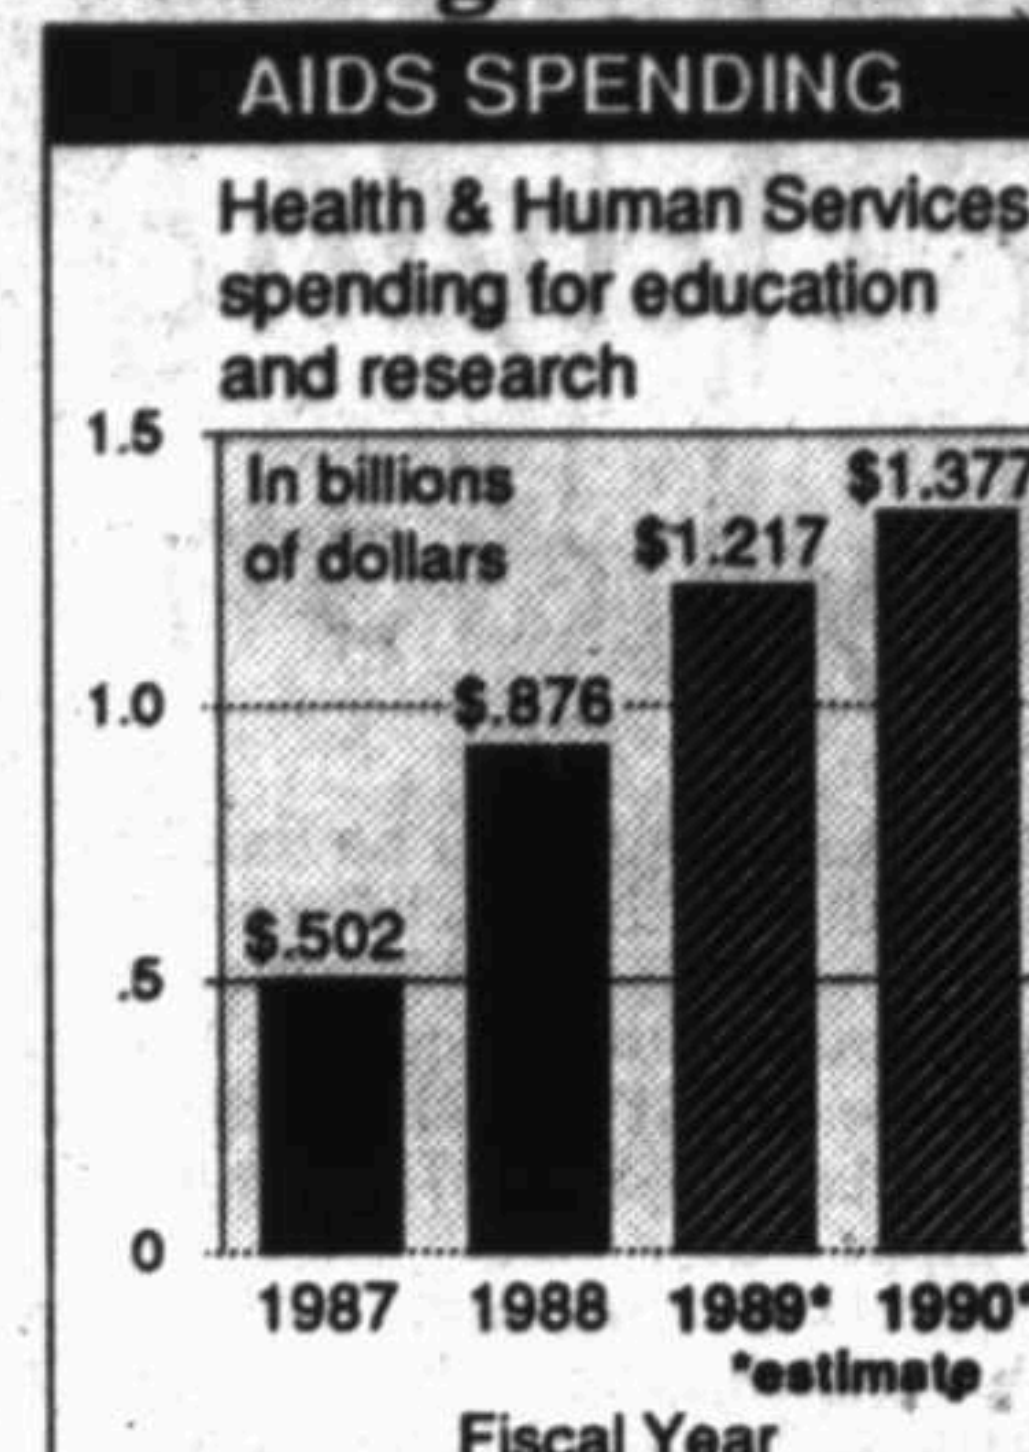

In its proposed 1990 budget unveiled Monday, the administration outlined a 5.7 percent increase for the Department of Health and Human Services and a 3 percent boost in outlays for education.

Health and Human Services, the largest federal department, would receive $424.4 billion in 1990.

The budget called for a 13 percent increase in spending for AIDS research and prevention, raising that to $1.4 billion.

However, the budget proposed saving some $935 million by cutting off school lunch subsidies that benefit middle and upper class students. Currently all students, regardless of family income, are entitled to school lunches subsidized by the government. But under the administration plan, students whose family income is 185 percent higher than the poverty line — about $21,553 for a family of four last year — will be on their own.

THE REAGAN BUDGET

Overall, the government will spend an estimated $5 billion on school and day care center lunch programs this year. Cutting off the subsidy for middle and upper income families would cost them about 28 cents per lunch, the administration estimated.

A group pushing for nutrition programs for the poor attacked the proposal as "inexcusable."

"No matter how they defend it, these proposals will mean the denial of millions of meals to needy children in schools and day care centers," said Robert J. Fersh of the Food Research Action Center.

The administration also proposed to save $283 million by reducing money to help the poor pay their heating and light bills to a $1.1 billion spending authority.

AIDS survey measures spirit of cooperation

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Health authorities seeking to learn how many Americans carry the AIDS virus hope the offer of $50 and a plea for cooperation will attract people in high-risk groups to participate in a pilot survey.

"That's one of the major problems with which we're wrestling and which we've spent a lot of time trying to determine how to evaluate," said Dr. James R. Allen, an assistant deputy director at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control.

The survey began Monday with the mailing of letters to 350 randomly selected households in Allegheny County asking people to anonymously reveal their sexual practices and give blood for $50. If the effort succeeds, the survey could be extended nationwide.

"If high-risk individuals avoid the survey, there's no point" in conducting a national survey, said Dr. Bruce W. Dixon, chief of the sexually trans-missible disease program of the county health department.

In August, officials abandoned an attempted pilot survey in Washington, D.C., after opponents said the effort unfairly targeted blacks, said Peter Hurley, an associate director of the National Center for Health Statistics.

Officials say they learned their lesson and planned the Pittsburgh-area survey with the unanimous consent of a 21-member advisory panel drawn from the community.

"Every concern that was expressed by members of the advisory panel was taken into consideration and changes were made," said panel member Leslie Hunt Turner, assistant administrator of the Alma Illery Medical Center, which is located in a predominantly black neighborhood.

"Everyone was skeptical," said Mrs. Turner. "It wasn't a thing where we said, 'Yeah, this is a great idea. Let's go for it.'"

Success here, ideally in the form of 85 percent participation, will lead to an expanded preliminary survey elsewhere, officials said. Dallas and San Diego are among the communities on the CDC's short list for the next round, Allen said.

If all goes well, the planners could ask Congress as early as next year for the estimated $25 million needed for a national survey, Allen said.

The advisory panel persuaded the planners not to ask for the individual's day of birth, just the month and year, to ensure privacy.

A question on marital status accounts for divorce and same-sex cohabitation to reflect "a lot of differences in living arrangements in today's society," Mrs. Turner said.

The actual results will be meaningless because so few of the county's 850,000 households are to be questioned, Dixon said.

The effort could, however, define the methods to be used nationwide.

People who decline to participate will be asked why and their answers will be used to delete objectionable aspects from the survey, officials said.

On Saturday, professional interviewers and technicians trained to draw blood, working in teams of two, will begin the four- to six-week job of knocking on the 350 doors, asking one person age 18 to 54 in each home to participate.

Those who agree will be paid $50. They will be asked such questions as whether they have ever engaged in behavior that risks exposure to the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Risky behavior includes sex with an infected partner, intravenous drug use by addicts and blood transfusions.

Officials said each participant will complete the questionnaire out of sight of the interviewer and technician and will seal it in a tamper-proof wrapper for mailing.

NATION IN BRIEF

Sedition trial to open today

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A federal jury hearing the sedition trial of three revolutionaries will decide whether a wave of bombings is sufficient to show the defendants can be convicted of trying to overthrow the government.

Opening arguments in the long-anticipated trial were to open today with Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Loucks presenting the government's case against the three remaining defendants, whittled down from eight.

The defendants face charges of seditious conspiracy, racketeering conspiracy and racketeering enterprise under a rarely invoked law whose meaning has been argued by attorneys.

Attorneys estimate the trial could last a year.

Loucks has described the defendants as dangerous members of an underground group that conspired to rob banks and carry out 19 bombings, including a 1976 explosion that rocked the Suffolk County Courthouse in Boston and severed a man's leg.

Aircraft fatalities down

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. commercial and private airplane accidents killed 875 people in 1988, the lowest number this decade, with small planes showing the most improvement, government figures indicate.

The decrease, shown in preliminary figures from the National Transportation Safety Board, came despite steady increases in the number of hours and miles flown and a 30 percent increase in the number of commercial flights over the last decade.

The most dramatic reduction was in the number of people killed in small, private plane accidents, down from 1,556 in 1978 to 782. Flying hours for small planes have decreased about 20 percent since then, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

The next lowest number of fatalities came in 1968, when 1,034 people died in commercial and private airplane accidents. The NTSB figures do not include military crashes.

The 875 total fatalities in 1988 do not include the 270 people killed when Pan Am Flight 103 exploded over Lockerbie, Scotland, Dec. 21, because investigators have determined it was not an accident but an act of sabotage.

$100,000 bail ordered

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Bail of $100,000 was ordered and court-appointed counsel has been approved for Edward A. Roberson Jr., who was jailed on an weapons charge after authorities couldn't corroborate Roberson's claim that he killed his wife.

At a Monday hearing, District Judge Carl Stewart set the bond and appointed the Caddo Parish Indigent Defender's Office to represent Roberson after the former mental patient said he couldn't afford a lawyer.

Roberson, 24, held off police for 12 hours outside his home Dec. 27 after telling a mental health worker that he had killed his 27-year-old wife, Catherine Van-Sickle Roberson, and buried her in the small East Texas community of Burlington.

Roberson shot himself in the chest as the standoff ended. He was released from Schumpert Medical Center last Thursday and immediately arrested for illegal use of a firearm during the Dec. 27 impasse.

Parts testing questioned

SEATTLE (AP) — Engines on the Boeing 737 that crashed in England, killing at least 43 people, had parts that were not properly tested, said a lawyer who sued the engine's maker four months ago.

But a spokesman for General Electric Co., which manufactures the engine in a consortium with the French company SNECMA, said engines on the plane had checked out as normal.

An aerial photo taken Wednesday shows the extent of the wreckage of the British Midland Airways flight from London's Heathrow Airport to Belfast that crashed near Kegworth, 12 miles west of Nottingham, Sunday, killing 44 passengers.

Crash survivors praise skill, cool nerves of 737's pilot

NOTTINGHAM, England (AP) — Survivors of the Boeing 737 crash praised the skill and cool nerves of the pilot for guiding the crippled aircraft over a village as he attempted an emergency airport landing.

"Considering the trouble he was in, he must have nursed that plane to get so close (to the airport). He must have done a brilliant job. I pray for him and hope he is OK," said Gareth Jones, 38, who suffered chest injuries.

Pilot Kevin Hunt, 43, managed to keep the 12-week-old British Midland Airways jet, with one engine on fire and the second apparently failing, skimming over rooftops as he made for East Midlands Airport in central England.

The Belfast-bound plane plowed into a highway embankment a half-mile short of the runway Sunday, killing 44 people and injuring the 82 others on board.

David Thomas, a surgeon at Derbyshire Royal Infirmary, one of the hospitals handling the casualties, said: "It is incredible to have this number of survivors from a major accident. That has got to be down to the skill of the pilot."

A radio ham operator was quoted today as saying the crew was so calm before the crash it was hard to imagine anything was wrong.

"Whoever was in cockpit contact with the East Midlands (Airport) controller sounded so calm it was difficult to imagine anything was amiss," Richard Whittington was quoted as saying in The Times of London.

"There was no panic or fear detectable in his voice. Instead, he was precise, as though he was receiving everyday instructions. Only when I heard the air traffic controller, who certainly did not sound as calm, did I realize something must be terribly wrong."

Hunt, a 22-year veteran with the airline, was seriously injured with spine and leg fractures. He was trapped for 2½ hours before rescuers managed to free him from the smashed cockpit.

Skillfully, Hunt kept the plane from plowing into the 2,000-resident village of Kegworth.

Village resident Bill Tidy said: "The pilot hung on until the last minute. What a man." Another resident, Andrew Pendleton, said: "Suddenly the pilot seemed to pull the nose up and the plane just glided past."

Transport Minister Paul Channon, who visited the crash site Monday, also praised firefighters who arrived within minutes, spraying foam over the plane to prevent a blaze. He said their speed saved many lives.

Survivor Mary McHugh, 23, said: "We were only on the ground for three or four minutes before people started pulling us off. But first there was the foam. It just hit us. Large amounts of it. I thought, wow, it was great. It meant we weren't going to get burned."

Jones said he held the hand of a young woman next to him during the rapid descent. "When the first engine went she started crying and held my hand," he was quoted as saying.

"I tried to joke about how these things could fly on one engine and glide down. Then the second engine went and she gripped my hand and I said there was no way we were not getting out of that plane together. I knew if I showed I had any fear she would have been worse."

Firefighter Eric Moss, who worked more than six hours helping free survivors and getting out the dead,

One engine damaged by fire, investigators say

KEGWORTH, England (AP) — Investigators said today they found fire damage in one of the engines of a Boeing 737 that crashed in central England and that the other engine had been inexplicably shut off before the crash.

Eddie Trimble, the Transport Department's chief engineering inspector at the crash scene, told reporters that while the left engine showed fire damage, the right engine showed no sign of having been on fire and was "in a zero-thrust or shut-down condition."

He said the engine appeared to have been turned off "at a previous point in the flight," rather than in the moments before the plane crashed into a highway embankment while trying to make an emergency landing at nearby East Midlands Airport.

Trimble refused to speculate on whether pilot error was to blame for shutting down the engine. "At this stage in the investigation, all possibilities are open in that regard," he said.

Investigators are listening to the flight recorders and will be able to question the seven crew members, including the pilot and co-pilot.

The British Midland Airways jet crashed into an embankment beside England's main north-south highway Sunday night, killing 44 people. It was flying from London's Heathrow Airport to Belfast when the pilot reported engine trouble.

"The left engine has fire damage," Trimble said. "The fire damage is consistent with witness reports of fire associated with the left engine in flight. We have no evidence at the moment of a mechanical failure in

Transport Secretary Paul Channon repeated Trimble's findings to Parliament and said investigators "are now concentrating on information about the engines, from the flight data and cockpit voice recorders, both of which were recovered."

Investigators rummaged on hands and knees looking for debris that might yield more clues. Theories advanced by experts included contaminated fuel, a rupture in a combustion chamber, improper servicing or a mechanical fault allegedly missed during tests of the engine.

Channon said Monday there was no evidence of sabotage, but Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said "we rule out nothing — we simply can't."

The crash occurred less than three weeks after a bomb destroyed a Pan Am jet over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing all 259 on board and 11 people on the ground.

At the government's sophisticated laboratory at Farnborough, south of London, tests began on the Boeing 737's two flight recorders and the digital flight data recorder.

William Tench, retired head of Britain's Air Accidents Investigation Board, said the odds against double engine failure on a Boeing 737 were about 10 million to 1.

He suggested a "technical mistake such as something incorrect being done to the engines during turnaround (servicing between flights), either inadvertently or deliberately."

Or, Tench said, "it could be inadvertent fuel contamination."

The Evening Standard newspaper said today evidence was emerging that at least one of the plane's engines broke apart.

"Wreckage thought to be engine blades has been found six miles from the crash scene," the newspaper said.

A Transport Department spokesman, requesting anonymity, confirmed that debris, "probably engine fragments," was found at a distance from the crash, but he did not know the distance.

Lawyer Jim Helmer of Cincinnati, who is suing the airplane engine's maker, alleges the engines contained parts that were not properly tested.

Helmer identified the parts as timer valves but told The Associated Press he didn't know if they could have caused the crash.

The CFM56 engines were made jointly by the U.S.-based General Electric Co. and the French company SNECMA. General Electric spokesman Dwight Weber said Monday night that failure of the timer valves would not have caused an engine to go out.

SNECMA spokesman Olivier Fagard said the timer valves are inspected and tested in each engine.

Investigators expect to be aided by accounts from pilot Kevin Hunt and the other crew members. Hunt, 43, a 22-year veteran with the airline, was in poor condition with spine and leg fractures, but hospital officials said he spoke with his wife.

Co-pilot David McClelland was hospitalized with a broken leg and spinal injuries.

Fighting Gadhafi isn't best option

For the past seven years, the United States and Libya have been engaged in a war of words and, sometimes, weapons.

The recent dogfight over the Mediterranean, in which U.S. pilots shot down two Libyan MiG-23s, is the latest in a series of incidents, including American bombing of Libya itself.

Each time, our European allies either criticize the U.S. action or distance themselves from it.

Now, as in the past, this has been difficult for Americans to understand. Gadhafi supports interference in the affairs of other states and the most savage forms of international terrorism. His behavior is erratic and, at times, irrational.

Despite continued terrorist murders of their own people, European governments have long been reluctant to condemn Gadhafi. West German leaders now insist there is little or no evidence to support U.S. charges that Moammar Gadhafi is building a chemical-weapons plant outside Tripoli. Great Britain and Washington say they have "very hard" evidence of such construction from various sources. Bonn has sent officials to Washington to examine the U.S. data while insisting that no West German firms are involved in helping Libya build such a plant.

There are three major reasons why the Europeans don't want to challenge Gadhafi: commercial profits, assurance of Libyan oil supplies, and independent bids to avoid Arab terrorism. The Europeans want the Americans to do any needed dirty work so that their own hands will be clean to do more business with all Arab nations.

The United States has a choice. It can go the European route or act on its own. If it cops out, the Europeans will criticize the emptiness of American rhetoric on terrorism. If the Americans bomb and destroy the chemical-weapons plant, the Europeans will condemn Washington as rash and extreme.

The actions of Western Europe are classic Machiavelli — nations equating ethics with practical politics. That some citizens must die at the hands of terrorists is accepted on the practical basis that terrorism is a fact of life. They also ignore the fact that thousands of Iranians and Kurds died from chemical weapons used by Iraq. The distant action does not involve them directly. However, commerce and trade must continue for the common good.

In all likelihood, the United States will not destroy the Libyan chemical-weapons plant. It would be far preferable to work behind the scenes to gain the support of Western European nations for international pressure against Gadhafi.

Terrorism is a powerful force, but diplomacy can be also if used in the correct way. Gadhafi should be shown that there are other, less violent, ways of making an international splash.

Meat inspection plan questionable

WASHINGTON — A pilot project to test a new federal meat inspection program supports what we have been saying all along — that the public may soon be buying tainted processed meat. Now we aren't the only ones saying it.

Meat-packers themselves are worried that dishonest competitors will abuse the new system by cutting corners and allowing unhealthy processed meat products from hams to hamburger get into supermarkets.

That is one of dozens of unsettling possibilities outlined in an internal Agriculture Department report that sums up a North Carolina test of the proposed new inspection routine.

We have reported in the past on the Agriculture Department's dogged campaign to deregulate the meat business. In the guise of streamlining meat inspection, the USDA wants to eliminate daily scrutiny by federal on-site inspectors at meat processing plants and replace them with company-paid inspectors overseen by random visits from the USDA.

The program is expected to be implemented nationwide in the summer. The USDA has been testing it in selected cities, and the results of those tests should have thrown cold water on the USDA's idea. Instead, the bureaucracy is steaming ahead.

The closely held report obtained by our associate Stewart Harris tries to put the best face on the latest test at 115 plants near Raleigh, N.C. — a herculean feat considering the facts:

While some plants became cleaner, conditions at 19 plants deteriorated without full-time inspection. Inspectors told us the same thing happened when the plan was tested in Chicago, although the USDA claimed the Chicago plants got cleaner. Even if, under the new system, the plants appear to be cleaner, the USDA's own report says that is not proof that the inspection plan is working. Plant employees could be on their toes when the inspector is there and then lapse into bad habits when the inspector leaves.

Many inspectors wasted too much time on the road traveling between the plants they were assigned to inspect. The inspectors looked like they were running a Chinese fire drill and complained that they spent so much time behind the wheel they started passing each other on the streets between plants.

In no time, plant managers could predict when the USDA would show up for the "surprise" inspections.

Many federal inspectors doubt whether the plan will keep tainted meats from reaching the supermarket shelves. During the Raleigh test, 44 percent of the inspectors said the plant provided only "moderate" coverage and 16 percent characterized the coverage as "small" or "very small."

Rodents, roaches and flies continued to be a problem at more than half the plants during the pilot. Just as alarming, there was evidence that insecticides were being misused in the plants.

Consumer advocates are particularly upset about record-keeping problems at the plants. Without full-time federal inspection, plant records are the only way to be sure that a meatpacking plant sticks to the rules. But in the Raleigh pilot, mandatory production records could not be found at 12 plants.

That's enough to turn a nation of meat eaters into vegetarians. It should be enough to put the brakes on the USDA.

HOSPITAL SQUEEZE — For the first time since World War II, Congress will put spending cuts ahead of new taxes. One area where the federal government is likely to look for a savings is in medical expenses. Federal Medicare payments to hospitals are expected to hit $50 billion in this fiscal year. Hospital costs are projected to grow at three times the inflation rate. Congress can put the squeeze on hospitals by cutting back Medicare payments.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Here's one budget item that Congress shouldn't cut — the State Department's $500,000 reward offer for information that prevents or resolves an act of terrorism. We don't like to sanction greed as a motivator. But terrorists are driven by a complete disregard for human life and civilized values. That makes greed look tame by comparison.

CHARLEY REESE

Reagan let North take fall for Iran Contra

Those who think legalistically, which is to say those who have no understanding of the reality of the criminal justice system, insist that Lt. Col. Ollie North, Adm. John Poin-dexter, and Gen. Richard Secord should stand trial.

It appears they will, thanks to President Ronald Reagan who has decided to remain aloof from the mess he created and to allow others to pay the price of his neglect, lack of leadership, and poor judgment. It gives me no pleasure to say those things about the president, who has done much good, but they are true.

The charges against these men, all subordinates of the president, are basically two: that North misled Congress and that money, belonging to the U.S. Treasury, was misappropriated.

That North misled Congress, which he admitted, is the fault of President Reagan, who should never have allowed Congress to question North. Congress in doing so was attempting to usurp the powers of the executive branch. Reagan should have resisted. Instead, he allowed a young Marine Corps officer to be put in an untenable position.

North had been instructed by the executive branch to keep the matter of aid to the Contras secret. Congress demanded to know the secret. North could therefore violate the orders of his superiors in the executive branch or he could violate the orders of the legislative branch. The burden of that decision should never have been put on the shoulders of a lieutenant colonel who was serving as low-ranking White House aide.

A president like Harry Truman or Dwight Eisenhower would have exerted executive privilege and forbidden North to appear before the committee. After all, it was the president's secret, not North's.

As for the money charges, they rest entirely on the premise that the excess amount charged the Iranians belonged to the U.S. Treasury and should have been handed over. Here again, this was not a decision North could make. The president had decided to supply the arms and the Pentagon had set the price it wanted for those arms. When North told his superiors the Iranians could be charged more than the Pentagon wanted and that the excess could be used to help the Contras, no one said, "Don't do that."

Now, the president, the Congress and the Supreme Court can have a lengthy argument and finally decide if those excess dollars had to be deposited with the Treasury or could be used for other purposes, but not a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps. North had no power to make that determination and he did not make it. So far as North could ascertain, he was carrying out the lawful orders of his commander in chief.

People familiar with our legal system know, of course, that a prosecutor can persuade a grand jury to indict a ham sandwich. They know that prosecution is selective. They know that the burden of a trial can bankrupt and destroy an innocent person.

People familiar with the political system as it operates today know that Congress in an attempt to assume control of foreign policy, chose to criminalize a policy difference.

They know, too, that Congress, unwilling to attempt to impeach a popular president on such a flimsy pretext, chose instead surrogates.

They know, too, that the president, like Pontius Pilate, is washing his hands of the affair and the mob justifies its action under the banner of legalism.

In the meantime, the republic is wounded. The principle of leadership — the principle that subordinates who act in good faith shall not take the fall for their superiors — is thrown in the trash can. The message to everyone — in the armed services, in the police agencies, in the regulatory agencies is simple: cover yourself. You and your family will pay the price for political differences at the top. What Reagan has done will result in weak, ineffective government.

Another View:

Jets sent message

The destruction of two Libyan MiG-23 jets that confronted U.S. Navy jet fighters over the Mediterranean underscores two facts of life in international politics:

Nations that take hostile action against U.S. military forces do so at great peril.

Libyan dictator Moammar Gadhafi must rank as the slowest learner among world leaders.

U.S. officials emphasize that the two F-14 Tomcat fighters acted solely in self-defense in the Jan. 4 action. The Soviet-built planes activated their weapon-targeted radar, the usual move before firing, and then the American planes released their air-to-air missiles after maneuvering to avoid the Libyans. The Libyan planes were downed, and the American jets returned without incident to their aircraft carrier, the USS John F. Kennedy.

Thus, U.S. planes made an eminently appropriate response to a hostile if surprising action by the Libyan airmen. For it wasn't as if Moammar Gadhafi hadn't been warned in the past of the risk involved in confronting U.S. forces.

In March 1986, American naval forces destroyed several Libyan gunboats that threatened U.S. warships off the Libyan coast. And the following month, U.S. planes raided Tripoli and other Libyan targets in retaliation for Gadhafi's role in the killing of U.S. soldiers in a West German discotheque.

It's possible that the man President Reagan once called the "mad dog of the Middle East" was trying to provoke an incident that would divert attention from a chemical weapons plant inside Libya. For several weeks, the Reagan administration has been calling attention to the threat to world peace posed by the capability of an international outlaw such as Libya to unleash deadly mustard gas and nerve gas.

But while U.S. officials deny that the latest skirmish was connected with the Libyan chemical plant, it may well have a positive impact on an international conference (that was) scheduled to begin in Paris Saturday. Secretary of State George Shultz is prepared to issue a call at the meeting for world action to halt the proliferation of deadly chemical weapons. He doubtless will offer as a prime object lesson the Libyan poison gas plant and, one hopes, express the need for seeing it dismantled by whatever means necessary. Maybe Gadhafi would get the message, but don't bet on it.

— The Sacramento Union

WILLIAM SAFIRE

On being heard and Baker's first blunder

WASHINGTON — "I will not equivocate," cried a passionate journalist a century ago, "... and I will be heard!" Being heard, a heady experience, carries the obligation to listen and respond to those who hear. Three recent examples:

1. On the morality of pre-emption. When it was suggested that Israel and the U.S. begin jointly planning a strike at the Libyan poison-gas plant, Abba Eban, a grand old dove, denounced this "dark vision" that he saw as a dream to "roam the Middle East bombing Arab weapons systems. It must be a long time since a responsible journalist published an incitement to two governments to initiate what could become a nuclear exchange."

Apparently he fears that the Soviet Union would launch a nuclear attack to support Colonel Gadhafi. But weigh the likelihood of that insane reaction to the risk — in a very few years — of a threat to Jerusalem or

New York of long-range missiles with poison-gas warheads, designed in West Germany, controlled by any terrorist state.

Phony pre-emption can be an excuse for aggression, but as a response to a genuine threat, it can save lives. The Israeli destruction of the Baghdad reactor was a case in point; does anyone doubt that Iraq's Saddam Hussein, who proved so ready to employ poison gas, would have refrained from incinerating millions of Iranians with a war-winning atomic bomb? A decade ago, the world self-righteously condemned that anti-proliferation act, but the residents of Tehran are now alive because of it.

Eban can relax; the Reagan era will end not with a bang but a whimper. Secretary Shultz's anti-gas rhetoric in Paris would have carried more authority if he had not dissuaded the U.S. Congress from ordering sanctions against Iraq for its gassing of Kurds.

2. On the "German problem" of seeing no evil in helping to build the new "Auschwitz-in-the-sand."

Some West German politicians and TV stars, furious at being reminded of previous national experience with gas as an agent of racial extermination, reacted with tirades against "the Jewish press." Such anti-Semitism only proved my point.

More moderate German commentators understood the profound damage being done the Federal Republic by the Kohl-Genscher regime's blustering cover-up. The responsibility for absolute proof of the complicity of West German nationals in today's Third World war crimes does not devolve on outsiders; we can point to the preponderance of evidence, but it is up to tough-minded German investigators and prosecutors to take the sworn testimony needed to get the truth.

If the Federal Republic has no laws to stop its poison gas profiteers from endangering the world's cities, civilized nations can reasonably expect the Bundestag to pass such laws. The world's largest exporter may want to protect its trading position, but its customers want to protect the lives of their citizens — lives endangered when greedy and amoral West German executives and technicians help to turn terrorist states into missile-equipped superpowers.

3. On the cave-in to Soviet demands for a human rights extravaganza in Moscow in 1991 — it was appeasement, but was it "James Baker's First Blunder"?

In the run-up to the cave-in, reporters and pundits in Washington were assured by White House and State Department officials that the decision to bestow this human-rights accolade to Mikhail Gorbachev had the approval of the incoming Bush administration. Not the slightest objection was heard, said Reaganites on background, from George Bush or any of his top men, particularly Secretary of State-designate Baker.

However, after a powerful editorial in The Washington Post objecting to this premature seal of our approval, and a subsequent blast in this space exposing its linkage to a conventional-arms conference, the tune changed.

Bush's top people are telling senators privately they had opposed the Moscow venue, and had asked for months that their hands not be tied in this way. And lame ducks at State, caught off base, now claim they never pretended to have Bush approval.

One group or the other is playing games with the truth. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in its Baker confirmation hearings, should get a clear statement of the new administration's misgivings on this diplomatic abomination, with our expectations of a razing of the Berlin wall as only one of the conditions of our attendance.

That's my trio with brio. It's good to be heard, good to hear back, and good to be able to fulminate with that persnickety editor of yesteryear, "I will not retreat a single inch ..."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Jan. 10, the 10th day of 1989. There are 355 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On Jan. 10, 1776, American revolutionary Thomas Paine published his influential pamphlet "Common Sense." In his call for American independence from England, Paine wrote, "Everything that is right or reasonable pleads for separation."

On this date: In 1861, Florida seceded from the Union.

In 1870, John D. Rockefeller incorporated Standard Oil.

In 1920, the League of Nations was established as the Treaty of Versailles went into effect.

In 1928, the Soviet Union ordered the exile of Leon Trotsky.

In 1946, the first General Assembly of the United Nations convened in London.

In 1946, the first manmade contact with the moon was made as radar signals were bounced off the lunar surface.

In 1957, Harold Macmillan became prime minister of Britain, following the resignation of Anthony Eden.

In 1978, the Soviet Union launched two cosmonauts aboard a Soyuz capsule for a rendezvous with the Salyut 6 space laboratory where two other cosmonauts had been living for a month.

Ten years ago: Billy Carter, brother of President Carter, set off a controversy during a tour of Atlanta with a visiting Libyan delegation by making allegedly anti-Semitic remarks.

Five years ago: The United States and the Vatican established full diplomatic relations for the first time in more than a century, although some presidents had, since 1939, appointed personal representatives to the Holy See.

Thought for Today: "History must speak for itself. A historian is content if he has been able to shed more light." — William L. Shirer, American author and journalist.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviets may not make deadline, envoy says

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin's top envoy to Afghanistan said today there is "a serious danger" the Soviets will not have their troops out of Afghanistan by a Feb. 15 deadline.

Yuli M. Vorontsov, the Soviet's first deputy foreign minister and the ambassador to Kabul, blamed the United States and hard-line elements among Afghan guerrillas for a deteriorating situation in the country.

"The opposition says it wants to topple the current government in Kabul militarily," said Vorontsov, who recently met with leaders of the Afghan resistance in Iran and Pakistan. "They don't want to see a broad-based government."

Vorontsov also told reporters at a government news briefing that U.S. arms are still being shipped to the Afghan guerrillas and that the U.S. government has not given "any indication of its genuine desire to work for an Afghan settlement."

Asked if the Soviet Union might further delay withdrawal of the 50,000 troops it still has in Afghanistan, Vorontsov replied: "It's a serious danger. Things might shape up in such a way that the Soviet Union will be unable to do what we've decided to do as a matter of principle."

In Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the administration expects the Soviets to hold to the Feb. 15 pullout date.

Bush to attend funeral

TOKYO (AP) — President-elect Bush plans to attend the Feb. 24 funeral of Emperor Hirohito in his first foreign trip as the U.S. leader, the Kyodo news service quoted the head of Bush's transition team as saying.

The Kyodo report from Washington quoted Craig Fuller, the transition chief, as saying Monday "our understanding at present" is that Bush will attend the state funeral.

Kyodo said the dates of Bush's visit to Japan would be decided in consultation with James Baker, Bush's secretary of state, and Brent Scowcroft, the new national security adviser.

Fuller was quoted as saying the trip to Tokyo would be Bush's first foreign trip after he takes the oath of office Jan. 20.

Washington so far has not announced who will be the U.S. representative at Hirohito's funeral, and an official at the Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita's office said today that he had no information about a Bush visit.

Moslem sues Shin Bet

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Moslem Israeli army officer who spent more than seven years in prison on false charges of spying is suing Israel and secret service agents who interrogated him for $800,000, a newspaper reported.

Li. Izzat Nafsu, 33, filed a suit in Nazareth district court Sunday seeking the damages from the state, eight agents of the Shin Bet secret service and a psychiatrist, the Hada-shot daily reported Monday.

A court spokesman in Nazareth could not immediately be reached for comment.

Nafsu was arrested while serving in southern Lebanon in late 1979, and a military court convicted him of treason and espionage in 1981 for allegedly passing weapons and information to the enemy.

But Nafsu was released from prison in May 1987 after a Supreme Court ruling that the security service had used illegal methods and committed perjury.

Nafsu is a member of Israel's Circassian minority of about 3,000 people, who are non-Arab Moslems. They are descendants of soldiers who once protected the Turkish sultans, and are among the few Moslems to serve in Israel's army.

Nafsu has said that during questioning by Shin Bet officers he was deprived of sleep, subjected to hot and cold showers and forced to stand outdoors in freezing weather wearing only underwear.

Ex-Nazi flees to Canada

MONTREAL (AP) — A former Nazi propagandist and Yale University lecturer who was stripped of his U.S. citizenship and failed to appear for a deportation hearing has surfaced in Canada and applied for asylum, Canadian television reported.

Russian emigre Vladimir Sokolov, 75, disappeared in July, when the deportation hearing was to have been held in Hartford, Conn.

His whereabouts were unknown until he applied for refugee status in Montreal sometime before Jan. 1, claiming his life would be in danger if he were forced to return to the Soviet Union, the Canadian Broadcast Corp. reported Monday night.

No date has been set for an immigration hearing, the report said.

From 1942 to 1944, Sokolov was a writer and editor of a Russian language newspaper German army occupiers published in his hometown of Orel, 220 miles south of Moscow. Anti-Semitic articles appeared under his name, although he has maintained that the most offensive tracts were written by Nazi censors.

In one World War II article that appeared under Sokolov's name, Jews were compared to rats. The article expressed the hope that during the war, Jews would "be destroyed finally and forever."

Sokolov's Canadian lawyer, Julius Grey, contended there were no grounds to return his client to the United States "since he's out of the country, he's not in violation of any law."

Finns wrote the book on celebrations

By MATTI HUUHTANEN

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — The first book arrived in this arctic nation 500 years ago and Finns apparently have decided reading is an ideal way to spend long, dark winters that keep them indoors most of the time.

"No other country places such emphasis on literature," said Marja-Leena Rautala of the Finnish Literature Society. "It's obvious everywhere you look. Foreign writers and critics who visit us are constantly surprised."

Celebrations pegged to the arrival in 1488 of a volume written in Latin and printed for the Finns in Germany were held throughout 1988 and into January.

She said the extent of the anniversary celebrations reflected widespread interest: "It wasn't just another highbrow cultural event. It also worked at the grass-roots level."

Four of five adults in Finland read a daily newspaper. More than 83 million books are borrowed annually from 20,000 public libraries in a nation of fewer than 5 five million people.

The government subsidizes writers and several literary prizes are awarded each year. The Finlandia Prize, the largest, is worth the equivalent of $23,500.

Nearly 9,000 books are published each year, which the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization says is the most in the world per capita. UNESCO statistics for 1986 put the number of titles per 10,000 inhabitants at 17.7, compared with 1.2 in the United States.

About half the books published are translations, most from English. Although the numbers are impressive, poet and social critic Paavo Haavikko worries about timidity in publishing and the national penchant for consensus.

Haavikko, who won the 1984 Neustadt Literature Award from the University of Oklahoma, published an eight-poem series in a leading magazine in December defining the political climate in Finland as "corrupt."

In an interview, Haavikko said: "It's not 500 years of the Finnish book that has been celebrated, but a couple of hundred years of a closed and stagnant publishing trade."

"Yes, we could say the publishing trade is doing OK, but that does not necessarily mean we can print what we want. There is an unwritten agreement to keep one's mouth shut, and self-censorship prevails in this consensus country."

During the observance, a new magazine called The Reader appeared, promoting literature and reading. Ms. Rautala said schools and kindergartens arranged programs around the theme and companies held writing competitions.

An exhibition at the National Museum in Helsinki was to have closed at the end of 1988, but drew record crowds and was extended.

"We have had some 40,000 visitors during the four months of the exhibition," curator Kirsti Melanko said.

Finland's first book was the "Missa Aboense," in Latin and named for Abo, a southwestern city now called Turku.

Turku, the provincial capital when Finland was part of Sweden, was the focus of the 500th anniversary celebrations. Plays and celebrations were held at its 14th-century castle and there were special services at Turku Cathedral.

Except for Latin publications for church use, most of the earliest books were in Swedish. The first Finnish primer appeared in 1543 and a Finnish prayer book was issued the next year.

Finnish publishing was small-scale for centuries, consisting mainly of scholarly and religious works. By the early 19th century only 18,000 works had been printed, just 2,500 of them in Finnish.

That number of new titles now arrives at the main Helsinki University Library every two months.

Efforts began in the early 1800s to create a national culture and Finnish-language literature.

J.V. Snellman, a statesman and political philosopher, and Elias Lönnrot, a physician and folk historian, founded the Finnish Literature Society in 1831.

Lönnrot roamed the marshes and forests of Karelia, an eastern region now partially in the Soviet Union, setting down its myths and folk songs.

The result was The Kalevala, his epic work, which was published in 1835 and had a major influence on Finnish music and arts. Sibelius drew on it for his symphony "Finlandia," and other artists used its ideas and themes.

Longfellow employed the meter of Kalevala verse in "The Song of Hiawatha," published in 1855. The Kalevala is compulsory reading in Finnish schools.

Mexican police arrest alleged drug kingpin in Juarez

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Police believe they have one of the border's most notorious drug traffickers behind bars, and they want to keep him there this time.

Gilberto Ontiveros Lucero was arrested on drug charges about 9:30 a.m. CST Monday at a house in Juarez, said Esteban Garcia Villalon, coordinator of the Mexican federal judicial police's anti-drug campaign in Chihuahua state.

It marked Ontiveros' second arrest on drug-trafficking charges in less than three years. He was jailed in April 1986, but a Juarez federal judge dropped all the charges last May and set Ontiveros free.

About 45 to 50 federal police officers began searching for Ontiveros Dec. 29, after police found nearly eight tons of marijuana in some warehouses in south Juarez. Officials believe Ontiveros was planning to smuggle the Mexican marijuana into the United States.

Garcia said he hopes Ontiveros faces the wrath of the law in his second brush with it.

"If the judge finds him guilty — which we hope happens — he will get the sentence he deserves," he said.

Ontiveros, nicknamed "El Grenas," or "The Mophead," for his shaggy mane of black hair, was in the company of a young American woman when he was arrested at the home of the mother of a bodyguard, Garcia said.

Police seized two AK-47 assault rifles and three pistols, all loaded, during their search of the house, Garcia said. A few hours later they seized a Cessna Conquest airplane at the Juarez airport and arrested two pilots from the Gulf port of Tampico, Garcia said.

Proposed budget could hurt state's rural hospitals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The ranks of struggling farmers and rural hospitals on the brink of financial collapse would swell under cuts President Reagan is proposing in his fiscal 1990 budget, experts say.

Although Reagan's budget would be hard on rural Texas, major defense and energy projects in the state fare well, including $250 million proposed for the initial construction of the super collider and $2.1 billion for the space station.

The big question is whether President-elect George Bush will stick to those recommendations when he takes office, and what the Democratic-controlled Congress will do.

"People have said the president's budgets of recent years have been dead on arrival, but this one's lost in transit. There's more interest in how President Bush will change this budget than in the budget itself," says Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Texas Democrat and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Health care officials in Texas say they're concerned about the effects of trimming growth in Medicare and Medicaid by about $5 billion.

The savings in Medicare would come primarily from reducing the fees received by hospitals — often the lifeblood of small, rural hospitals, many of which are on the brink of failure in Texas. Nineteen Texas hospitals closed last year.

Rural hospitals would be particularly hard hit by the cuts because of their dependence on Medicare patients. Jim Houdek, senior vice president for health care finance at the Texas Hospital Association, said rural hospitals have a mix of 60 percent to 65 percent of Medicare patients, compared with urban hospitals, with 40 percent to 45 percent.

Gordon Russell, administrator of the Hi-Plains Hospital in Hale Center north of Lubbock, said any cut in Medicare "is going to be a death blow on rural hospitals, which already are suffering terribly."

"We can't stand any more cuts and continue to maintain access to health care in rural areas," said Russell, a member of the Department of Health and Human Services' National Advisory Committee on Rural Health. "Any further cuts would wipe out a bunch of hospitals."

Under Reagan's proposal, Medicare, which provides health care to Social Security recipients, would be cut by $3.2 billion below the projected increase for 1990.

Houdek predicted as many as 20 more hospitals could collapse if the cuts go through. The state has lost about 75 hospitals over the past four years.

Medicaid, which pays the health bills of poor people, would be cut by $1.7 billion over its projected increase for 1990 with the savings coming from reductions in federal payments to the states, which run the program.

Houdek said the state's seven teaching hospitals, capital improvements in hospitals, and the Texas Legislature's efforts to improve its Medicaid system, would also be hurt under the proposed cuts.

STATE

Reagan also wants to slash spending on farm programs by 19 percent, or $9.7 billion.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, a Texas Democrat who leads the House Agriculture Committee, said the budget "takes a stance that appears to be deliberately punitive toward agriculture."

He pledged to work with the Bush administration on a "reasonable alternative...the budget cannot be balanced at the expense of farmers who have kept us the best-fed nation in the world."

Kraig Gallimore, who heads farmer and rancher assistance for the Texas Agriculture Department, said that if the cuts go through, "we can expect to see more (farm) bankruptcies and foreclosures, and a continued exodus, not just from the farm, but from rural America.

"It (agriculture) is just the easiest kid on the block to pick on, with the few votes in the countryside," Gallimore said.

Farmers make up less than 3 percent of the population and "they are just tired of the struggle, of the fight to survive. And now the president says they're going to cut their pay. That's pretty depressing," Gallimore said.

On the positive side of Reagan's budget, however, are proposals to spend $250 million to begin construction of the super collider, the giant physics project that is expected to create thousands of jobs in north central Texas. The budget targets completion of SSC construction at a site in Ellis County by 1993.

In fiscal 1990, the proposed budget calls for spending $50 million on research and development and $100 million on initial construction.

Reagan is calling for spending $2.1 billion for the space station, which would be built in part at Johnson Space Center outside Houston; $100 million in Pentagon money for Sematech, the semiconductor research consortium in Austin; $62 million for a replacement Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio; $22 million in construction funds for Naval Station Ingleside near Corpus Christi; $39 million for modernization of the Red River Army Depot in Texarkana; $51 million for construction of Cooper Lake in northeast Texas; and $7.5 million to clean up pollution of the Rio Grande at Laredo.

Proposed law alternative to life in prison

AUSTIN (AP)

— Proposed legislation that would provide an additional option of life in prison without parole in capital murder cases would have to be carefully crafted to pass constitutional muster, the general counsel to Gov. Bill Clements said.

Warner

State Rep. Larry Warner, who filed the bill Monday, said jurors don't realize that a life sentence given to people convicted of capital murder means the person will become eligible for parole after about 10 years in prison.

"Life doesn't mean life anymore. The law ought to mean what it says," Warner, D-Port Isabel, said.

Rider Scott, general counsel to Clements, and a former first assistant district attorney in Dallas County, said the bill would have to be written to conform with U.S. Supreme Court decisions designed to reduce the discretion of courts when assessing the death penalty.

But Scott said the bill is a good idea.

"I think this bill represents a frustration on the part of many with the shortening of sentences, and the lack of significant confinement options for truly violent offenders in the penitentiary," he said.

People convicted of capital murder — murder in the course of a felony, such as a robbery or assault — can now be assessed the death penalty or life in prison with the option of parole. The prisoner usually is eligible for parole after 10 years, Warner said.

If the jury decides a deadly weapon was used during the crime, the defendant could be assessed life in prison with a parole eligibility date after 15 calendar years. No good-behavior credit could be earned before that.

Warner, an attorney and former prosecutor, said some people given a life sentence should not be allowed back on the streets.

In a capital murder case, the judge assesses punishment after the jury answers three questions:

The jury is asked if the crime was deliberate, whether they believe the defendant would continue to be a threat, and if there was no provocation for the crime.

If the jury answers yes to all three questions, the defendant is sentenced to death. In the case of one negative answer, the defendant is sentenced to life.

The additional option of life without parole will not reduce the number of death penalties assessed in the state, Warner said.

Warner said his bill has a broad range of support, from prosecutors who want to keep criminals behind bars to groups opposed to the death penalty.

"Our position is we're against the death penalty. Any alternative to the death penalty is better than the death penalty," said Richard Avena, executive director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union.

Warner said he did not know the exact cost of incarcerating more inmates for their lifetime.

Dallas surgeons plan to remove a bony growth from Corina Gutierrez' forehead this week. Ms. Gutierrez suffers from Proteus syndrome, the same disease suffered by John Merrick, who became known as the "Elephant Man."

Surgery may give Odessa woman more normal life

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Corina Gutierrez still has nightmares about her last school days, when the only refuge from cruel taunts was at noon in an empty classroom's second-row desk.

"It was hurting me," she recalls of the nickname the other seventh-graders picked for her. "It was me, what they were saying, and I couldn't do anything about it."

"Elephant Man" was her name, and along with the normal crises of a seventh-grader in Odessa, she had the horrific realization that her bones were growing, well, wrong.

When the teasing became too much, she walked away from the lunchtime laughter and out of Blackshear Junior High School for the last time. She has had no formal education since.

Now 27, she is nearing the end of her nightmares. On Tuesday, she travels to Dallas' Humana Hospital, where surgeons will remove the bony growths from her forehead, ears, and inside her mouth that caused her to be compared with John Merrick, the Englishman who was shown around the countryside in 19th Century freak shows.

Like Merrick, who became known as the "Elephant Man," Corina suffers from Proteus syndrome, an extremely rare disorder characterized by the bony growths which are little understood. The name is taken from the Greek god, whose name means "more than one."

Corina had a normal birth in Odessa and was 5 years old before her mother noticed the first growth behind her right ear. A forehead swelling next was noticed and in between were dozens of visits to doctors. Some of the physicians said the growths were calcium deposits while others "just said they didn't know," Corina said.

Finally, about a year ago, her constant headaches — and fatigue caused by a heavier than normal skull — drove her to visit an Odessa clinic run by the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center. A doctor there referred her to Dr. Carol Clericuzio, a physician with the state-run Genetic Screening and Counseling Service.

Dr. Clericuzio was the first to recognize Corina's disease, according to Sharon Davison, the regional clinic coordinator with GSCS, an agency of the state Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Once the diagnosis was suspected, a trip to the Dallas institute confirmed it, Ms. Davison said.

"That's when they determined they were going to do the surgery," she said. "We don't know about the prognosis. We really don't know if it would have been fatal or not. But it would have become more and more disabling."

The cost of the surgery is estimated at $10,000, and is being paid by the Texas Rehabilitation Commission, Ms. Davison said during a visit Monday with Corina at the Midland office of GSCS, where the two met to iron out details of the Dallas trip. The surgery will be performed at the International Craniofacial Institute at the Dallas medical center.

The lead surgeon, Dr. Kenneth Salyer, has even obtained X-rays of Merrick. He will review them prior to Corina's surgery, Ms. Davison said.

Except for a larger than usual jawbone, a casual observer cannot tell anything unusual about Corina. Thick, cleverly placed golden bangs hide the forehead growth. The ear growth also is hidden by hair. Only Corina knows that she can't sleep on her right side because of the swelling. She talks hesitantly, in short phrases, and only occasionally will smile.

"She has been somewhat of a social recluse," Ms. Davison said. "When she came to us, we didn't even realize she could speak English."

While the disease has been disabling, with the help of a large family she has been able to lead a near-normal life. She has two children, Martin, 9, and Beatrice, 8, and is a big fan of television soap operas.

New local agency soon will control housing programs

By JULIE HILLRICH
Staff Writer

About $100,000 from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development will go toward meeting payroll and other expenses accumulated by the new Midland County Housing Authority.

With that news, Midland County commissioners say they expect that the transition between the old system and the new to run smoothly.

"It's only a matter of time before the housing board's contracts with HUD are signed. When that happens, the housing board will then assume financial responsibility for the program," County Commissioner Guy McCrary said this morning.

Commissioners McCrary and Win Brown learned the good news Monday after a meeting with Jerrie Westmoreland, executive director of the newly created agency.

The housing authority was formed in May 1988 as a governing body independent of Midland city and county government.

The creation of the organization was approved by the Midland County Commissioners Court, which up until then governed all matters pertaining to public housing.

At the time county commissioners divested themselves of their interest in housing matters, they appointed a five-member board of directors to oversee the operations of the office.

According to McCrary, the housing authority was formed to provide "better operation and control" over various housing projects in Midland County.

In relinquishing its control over the housing program to HUD, McCrary said the county was unable to assign its contracts to the federal agency, meaning HUD would have to recontract with the new housing authority.

McCrary said commissioners expected the transition to run smoothly. They helped the process along by approving "bridge" funding of up to $20,000 to cover payroll and housing supplement expenses.

The county was to be reimbursed when the money from HUD arrived Jan. 5.

"We knew this was going to occur," said Brown. "We were just one governmental agency helping out another governmental agency."

In other business Monday, commissioners:

- Agreed to contribute $15,000 to the Midland County courts for alcohol evaluation services. The money will be repaid from fines and fees collected by the courts.
- Authorized the county auditor to let bids on furnishings for the Midland County Rehabilitation Center and a new photocopier for the courthouse annex.
- Opened bids on coin operated photocopiers for the library, a photo copier for the library and sheriff's department, a mini van for the extension office, an electronic file unit for the election office and two standard Alpha Division sets for the election office.
- Authorized the county auditor to let bids on a pickup for the constable's office.
- Authorized the county auditor to let bids for uniform cleaning services and carpet for the district courtroom.
- Tabled discussion on the computer committee.
- Tabled the appointment of Midland County Child Welfare Board members.
- Appointed Flower Fund Committee members.

Bunton orders Rochester to repay FSLIC $7 million

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Louis Rochester, the millionaire Odessa real-estate developer convicted of federal bank fraud, has been court-ordered to pay $7-million in restitution to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

Rochester today denied he owes the funds, which reflect a defaulted loan made by the old Odessa Savings Association to Rochester's business partner, James Pruett, in an Arlington housing development called Stagecoach Estates.

"I was surprised at the decision made to pay restitution," Rochester said today.

Further, Rochester said he felt no obligation "whatsoever" to pay the $7-million loan. "I didn't deal with Odessa Savings," he said. "I dealt with James Pruett on that matter."

U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton ordered the payment Monday "after considering the amount of loss" caused by Rochester's offenses and after considering "the financial resources" of the 70-year-old developer and community leader.

The ruling came almost a month after Bunton had pronounced sentence.

A federal jury in Midland last Nov. 16 convicted Rochester of four counts of bank fraud, including mail fraud, misapplication of funds, and fraudulent participation in a loan in 1984, when he was an advisory director of OSA. The jury acquitted Rochester on 21 additional counts, including racketeering and concealing

"I was surprised at the decision made to pay restitution. (Felt no obligation 'whatsoever' to pay the $7-million loan.) I didn't deal with Odessa Savings."

— Louis Rochester

stock in the financially troubled savings association, which last year was bought out by Olney Savings & Loan Association.

On Dec. 12, Bunton sentenced Rochester and placed him on probation for five years, ordered him to perform 500 hours of community service, ordered him to serve six months in a federal "halfway house" called Alternative House II, fined him $10,000, and ordered him to pay $15,453.70 in restitution to the FSLIC for earnings he had from the Stagecoach project.

Rochester, as a director and later advisory director of OSA, had involved OSA in joint-development ventures, which made OSA about $9 million in a 10-year period when the financial institution was losing money on home mortgages, its primary and chartered role.

Rochester, who has been steadfast in denying bank fraud and any wrongdoing, has remained optimistic.

"There's nothing you can do if you're on the downside except to be positive," he told the Reporter-Telegram.

Rochester denied that he exerted influence on the OSA board of directors to fund an $8 million loan to James Pruett Construction Co. for the Stagecoach Estates project. Of that loan, now taken over by FSLIC, only $7.5 million was funded, and some of the indebtedness has been paid.

"I recommended the (Stagecoach) project," Rochester said today. "I didn't recommend the loan. They (OSA directors) made the loan."

Rochester had testified that his dealings with Pruett on the Stagecoach Estates project came on the "back-side" of the OSA loan. Rochester, who appeared unflappable in and out of court, said that his dealings on the OSA-Stagecoach matter were aboveboard and legitimate.

Evidence in the November trial indicated that Rochester, evidently astute in financial matters, had helped the Odessa thrift earn $9 million in profits in joint ventures over a 10-year period even while the thrift management was losing money in making home-mortgage loans.

Rochester is appealing the jury's verdict and Bunton's sentence and indicated he also would appeal to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, Bunton's order for Rochester to pay the $7 million in restitution.

Rochester has maintained a "clear" conscience in his dealings with OSA. "I'm innocent."

Ector County Commissioners OK hiring new extension agent

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The current Hill County Extension Agent February 1 will succeed long-time Ector County Extension Agent Dee Money, who resigned Dec. 31 to take over a similar position in Del Rio in Val Verde County.

Ector County Commissioners Monday accepted the recommendation of Mary Jamison, Texas Agriculture Extension Service district director, who hired Carol Arndt, to fill the position vacated by Ms. Money.

The county will provide $13,500 a year to fund salary, travel, educational expenses and the purchase of demonstration supplies. The balance of funding for the office is provided by the state.

The newly created extension service position of horticulture agent in Ector County has yet to be filled. Whoever is eventually named to the post will be responsible for providing assistance to those people involved in gardening and small farm operations.

In other action Monday, commissioners noted that county engineer Don Bonifay has brought recognition to Ector County with his election as president of the Texas Association of County Engineers and Road Administrators.

County Judge Jan Fisher credited Bonifay's efforts for helping the county "fast become a model for road and bridge departments across the state."

Commissioners also approved a request from District Attorney Gary Garrison to reorganize staff positions in his office.

According to Garrison, "The structure of current office personnel is not meeting the immediate nor long-term needs and work load of the office."

He said that no budget amendment would be required to accomplish the planned reorganization and that he believes it will result in saving allocated funds.

Part of the new district attorney's reorganizational plan includes establishment of a Victims' Assistance program.

Legislature will convene with swearing in of lawmakers

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — New legislators arrived Monday to check out their new offices while veteran lawmakers trickled back into the State Capitol. Both were arriving for the opening of the 71st Legislature at noon today.

Today's activities were largely ceremonial, with family and friends on hand to watch the swearing in of 150 House members and 31 senators for the 140-day regular session.

After both houses finish their greetings, they will get down to the serious business of making up a $1.1 billion shortfall between estimated state revenue and the cost of continuing current services. They also will take on issues such as equity in public school financing and reform of the workers compensation system.

One of the first orders of business in the House, which greets 19 new members, was election of the speaker. Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, has no apparent opposition for election to his fourth term.

In the Senate, where Lt. Gov. Bill

Hobby will preside and four new senators come aboard, Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, whose 25th District includes Midland, and Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, whose 28th District includes Odessa, both return for their fourth regular session.

The House welcomes back Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, for his 11th term, Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, for his second term, Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, for his seventh term and new Rep. Troy Fraser, R-Big Spring.

After the legislators settle in, they will grapple with a $39.2 billion spending plan the Legislative Budget Board has put forward as a start for budget deliberations. Hobby and Lewis, who sit on the budget board, say that plan is at least $1.1 billion short of maintaining current state government services.

Legislators may have to resort to what Lewis called "innovative financing" if they hope to get through their first session since 1983 without a tax increase or further cuts in service.

Gov. Bill Clements has repeated his pledge that he will veto a tax increase this time around. Clements, a Republican, made a similar pledge in 1985 before declining oil revenues forced him to sign a record $5.8 billion tax increase.

This time Clements is proposing the Legislature make up the difference by financing prison construction with bonds and dipping into a $1.5 billion contingency fund for potential court judgments.

State Comptroller Bob Bullock also unveiled a plan this past week that would make $1 billion available by shuffling money that would have to be replaced at some time in the future.

In partisan terms, Republicans gained two seats in the Senate to give the GOP eight of the 31 seats.

In the House, the Republicans had an unofficial gain of one seat, to 57 of 150 seats, but that could change with a challenge by Rep. Ed Watson, a Deer Park Democrat. A recount showed Watson lost to Republican Mike Jackson by eight votes, with several disputed ballots. The Democrat-controlled House has the authority to declare who was duly elected.

Couple make business out of finding the unusual

By MARY ANN KREPS

CLEAR LAKE SHORES (AP) — Telephones are everywhere in Joe and Suzanne Davis' small, quaint island home, 13 of them, including one built into the television.

On those telephones, the Davises have maintained a business finding anything for anyone, anywhere in the world — or at least giving it a try.

Need an albino elephant? A few hundred human skulls? A caravan of red double-decker English buses? How about a guillotine?

Finders Co., a business the Davises started in 1965 out of Whitefish Bay, Wis., will track down such oddities for $50 an hour plus expenses.

"It was nothing more than a name, a hope and a thought when we first started," said Joe Davis, 60, a former advertising salesman who spotted a market to supply studio props for advertising shoots. "Stylists were constantly tearing their hair out to find the necessary props for the studio."

The business grew by word of mouth, and soon, the Davises, who each were married to other people at the time the business started, were contacted by radio disc jockeys in search of publicity gimmicks such as albino elephants and by collectors in search of rarities.

IT'S ALL done with telephones, (their phone bill now averages about $400 a month, although at times it has reached $5,000), a massive filing system and a knack for knowing where to look. "It's not what you know, but who you know," Davis said.

"You're always making mental notes everywhere you go," said Suzanne, 53, his wife of nine years. Today the Davises, who moved from Wisconsin to Houston nine years ago and then to Clear Lake Shores a year ago, concentrate on what they love most — appraisals of classic and antique cars. They leave most of the Finders business to an informal network of long-time representatives who work on commission in cities across the country, including New York City, Miami, Chicago, Milwaukee, Denver, Los Angeles and San Francisco. "I'm theoretically retired," Davis said.

But, oh, the stories they can tell of their exploits over the past 23 years. They once were hired to find 365 human skulls for a clean air campaign by a New York ecology group who wanted to use the skulls in simultaneous displays across the country. The skulls had to be the real thing.

"That was a tough one," Davis said. "People in this country really count their skulls carefully. We finally found them through a contact in south Mexico."

"The contact managed to get them across the border without much fuss. I never asked an awful lot of questions," Davis said.

The gimmick ended up costing the group about $5,000, he said.

FOR a carpet manufacturers' convention in Chicago, Finders rounded up a dozen red, double-decker English buses and had them manned with drivers and ready to carry conventioners from O'Hare Airport into the city.

"The only thing we weren't told is that in England it doesn't get cold enough, so none of the buses had heaters in them...and in February in Chicago, it's really, really cold," Davis said. The buses also were too tall to make it under the concrete loop that encircled the city. "That was a disaster."

A frantic midnight call from an advertising executive had the Davises scrambling to find a race car in time for a promotion to open at a Chicago shopping mall the next morning.

"He called and was shrieking. He was about to lose his client, and he was going bananas," Davis said. Davis, a former amateur race car driver who had a lot of friends in the racing business, made a few calls, and a Grand Prix Formula 1 was flown from the East Coast to Chicago and was at the mall by 10 a.m., he said.

They also grew accustomed to the midnight calls from drunks, requesting that they find a 5-foot, 4-inch blonde with a beautiful body, he said.

One request they refused to go through with involved a Latin American man who wanted a dozen Spitfire airplanes. After locating the planes on a movie set in England, they flew to the Bahamas to clinch the deal and found out he wanted the planes to be armed. They backed out.

They've also at times owned hundreds of carousel horses, cigar and weather vane factories and 1,365 original Philadelphia gas street lights that Davis sold for a $62,000 profit to the city of Milwaukee. A stuffed bald eagle that fell into their hands became an albatross that they couldn't even give away until they were able to prove that the bird was stuffed before 1918, when the federal government enacted legislation to protect the birds.

FINDERS BUSINESS sometimes involves the mundane, albeit odd.

"We were commissioned by Johnson Wax to find real tables in real homes that had real wax buildup on them. It had to be so many millimeters thick," Davis said. "We had to find them all over the United States. Truth in advertising and all that."

They rounded up waxy tables by going door to door and by advertising in local papers.

The toughest location to find tables was the posh Westchester County area of New York, where drive-ways are a block long, Davis said. "It was tough to rent a precious dining room from some family who could care less about the money," he said.

But he finally tracked down his table by finding a bartender at a local English pub who put him in touch with a recently divorced woman "who was left with a tremendous amount of overhead," Davis said.

Suzanne Davis said her toughest job was finding a pumpkin in August for a shoot of a Thanksgiving display for a grocery store chain. "You can't find a pumpkin in August, I don't care where you go," she said. She finally resorted to a fake pumpkin, which they pushed toward the back of the display.

The business, which in 1973 was grossing $80,000 a year, skyrocketed when an article about it appeared that year on the front page of the Wall Street Journal. "From there, it got totally out of hand," Davis said. "We had to hire people simply to answer the phones."

HE REFUSES to say how much the business grossed during its peak years, but now that the Davises no longer actively seek business, "it's enough to put bread and butter on the table," he said. Fees have ranged from their minimum of $50 to several thousand dollars for the Johnson Wax Co. campaign that spanned several years.

Computers have posed the greatest competition to the business, Davis said. "Everybody's hooked up with everybody but God," he said. "If you have a (computer) code to get into, a wealth of information is available. In some instances, that cuts into our business."

The Davises were lured from a four-bedroom, four-bath home with an indoor pool in southwest Houston to a bungalow they are remodeling in Clear Lake Shores, because of the city's oddness.

"It's so unsubdivided," Mrs. Davis said. "There's a really trashy house next to a real neat house. It's full of old hippies and yuppies."

As for the television telephone, it was a novelty that caught their fancy.

DEATHS

Ruth Ray

Funeral services for Mrs. W.G. (Ruth) Ray of Midland will be at 1 a.m. today at the First United Methodist Church with the Rev. Russell Parchman, pastor, officiating.

Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of the Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Sunday in her home in Midland.

Mrs. Ray was born July 9, 1919, in Mount Pleasant. She moved with her family to Midland in 1938 from Albany, where she had graduated from high school in 1936.

She entered the service during World War II and served in Washington, D.C., in the U.S. Navy Hydrographic office. She was discharged and returned to Midland in 1945. She was office manager for Argo Oil Co. for 14 years and in 1960 became an independent landman until 1968 when she became a bookkeeper and office manager for Dr. Jack Walton.

She retired in 1982 and lived in Midland until her death.

Survivors include her husband, Wilburn G. Ray of Midland; three sons, Dr. Bobby G. (Skipper) Ray of Midland, Kenneth Ray of Union City, Calif., and Horace Ray of Petersburg, Va.; two brothers, Max Tidmore of Lubbock and Jim Tidmore of Pipe Creek; three sisters, Mrs. Charles Patterson of Midland, Jayne Tidmore Houston of Loveland, Colo., and Mrs. Kenneth Wood of Irving; six grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland or to one's favorite charity.

But there are constant reminders of the disease, such as when her daughter told her "Mommy, you look scary," or when her previously always perfect vision became blurred. Or the thought of what she may have missed by leaving school in the seventh grade.

"The socialization she missed, that's the big reason why she withdrew so much," Ms. Davison reasoned.

She is disturbed it took more than 20 years for Corina to get an accurate diagnosis of the malady.

"I get real upset when you see someone fall through the cracks of the system," Ms. Davison said. "For socioeconomic, cultural reasons, or whatever. Face it, you just don't get the care unless you have the bucks."

Once the surgery and recovery period is over, Corina plans to earn her general equivalency diploma (GED) from the rehabilitation commission and attend beautician's school. But the first thing she wants to do is model for some "after" photographs, so she can look at her new face, and look back.

She also may want to remember her last school days at Blackshear, which is now a magnet elementary school in Odessa.

"I used to wonder why I looked like this. I didn't feel like a person," she said. At school "I wasn't doing good because of all the kids, you know. I wasn't getting anywhere. So at lunch I would just go and stay in the room at lunchtime. I didn't want to go outside."

Corina also recalls the second-row desk, and wonders aloud what she would think if she could tell her classmates where she is going.

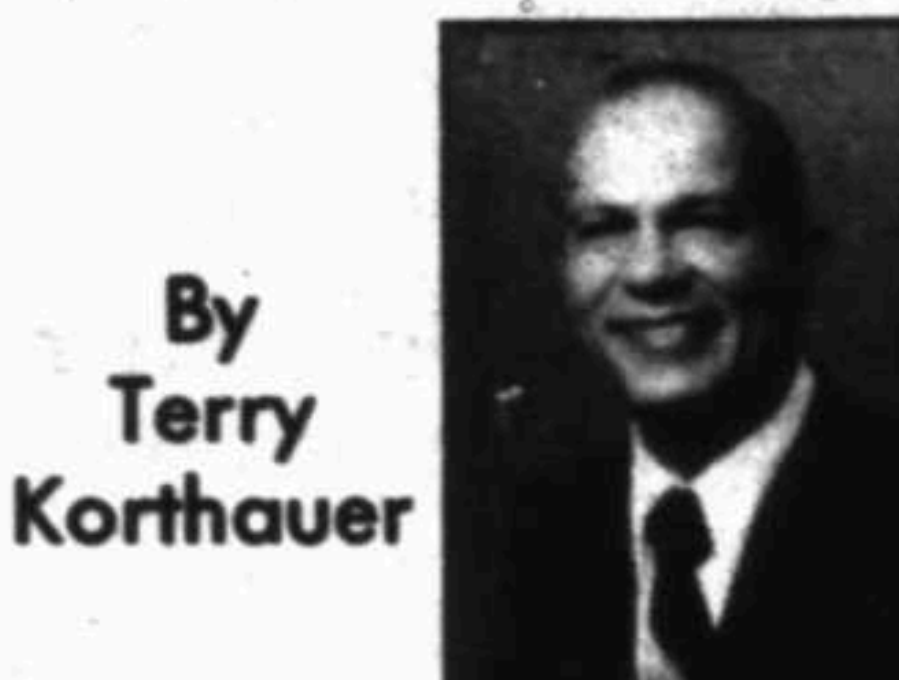

"I would be happy."

Extended Coverage

It is worthwhile to choose replacement cost coverage on your homeowner's policy, even though premiums are higher. Most often, the answer is yes.

In case of loss (fire or theft, for instance), ordinary insurance policies will pay you the "actual cash value" of a covered item — that is, cost less depreciation. The older your belongings are, the more "depreciated" they will be.

Replacement cost coverage, on the other hand, pays for new furniture, new clothing — new items to replace the old, ones lost.

There are certain exceptions. "Replaceable" things — antiques, memorabilia, souvenirs, collector's items, and the like — are not covered on a replacement cost coverage endorsement, though they may be insurable on a personal articles floater.

Motorized golf carts, too, are usually covered on an auto policy, rather than homeowner's, and for cash value only.

Women's clothing expensive

Companies scramble to keep costs down

By ANNE-MARIE SCHIRO
New York Times News Service

In an effort to contain rising prices and to improve lagging sales, manufacturers of women's clothing are re-examining the way they do business.

"Prices are going up astronomically," said Jon Levy, president of St. Gillian, a clothing manufacturer, voicing the concern of the fashion and retail industries. "The question is what are we going to do about it?"

Efforts include using less expensive fabrics and ordering them early, taking lower markups, aggressively negotiating prices with factories and streamlining production.

After a year of diminished sales, partly because of a misplaced emphasis on overly short skirts, the women's apparel field is being hit with soaring prices for imported fabrics and declining value for the dollar.

Silk yard goods have gone up 20 percent to 30 percent, for example, and some woollens have more than doubled in price in the last 18 months.

With China restricting the amount of cashmere exports, the luxury fiber has become more precious than ever. Syd Shaw, executive vice president of Oscar de la Renta, said a cashmere dress that was $700 wholesale four years ago was $825 wholesale this fall.

"The dress four years ago had a full, long skirt that used a lot of fabric," she said, "and this year's dress was very slim and pegged. It used a lot less fabric and still cost more."

In addition, labor prices have risen 10 percent in this country in the last year and between 20 percent and 30 percent in Asia, traditionally a source of cheap labor.

THE DOLLAR is now worth about 123 yen as against a high of 263.5 yen in 1985. As a result, shoppers who were faced with apparel prices as much as 20 percent higher last fall will be facing higher prices again in this year.

As the first spring fashions start to arrive in stores, women can expect to see increases of at least 10 percent on American clothes and even larger increases on European imports.

Giorgio Armani's prices are up 12-15 percent while Valentino's are up 20-25 percent and Claude Montana's have jumped as much as 40 percent.

"Clothes are never going to get cheaper," Levy said. But he and other American manufacturers are working harder than ever to keep price increases at a level that does not send customers reeling.

Keeping St. Gillian's retail prices in the $180 to $400 range involves cost-control strategies like working on lower markups, consulting with engineers to devise more efficient production methods, and ordering a six-to-eight-month supply of fabric rather than a two-to-three-month supply to take advantage of lower prices for larger quantities.

"When you buy 40 to 50 million yards, it gives you clout," Levy said.

High volume also helps to keep prices under control at J.H. Collectibles, which sells more than $150 million worth of career clothes from $80 to $190 each year.

"We buy tons and tons of piece goods and buy extremely early," said Bruce Ross, the executive vice president. "And by producing 40,000 units of a style, as opposed to the 2,000 that a designer line might produce, we can get a better price from the contractor."

"Prices still have to go up every year," he added, "because union contracts go up. Our customer is willing to pay the extra couple of dollars. She'll buy less but she won't go for cheaper quality."

AT LESLIE Fay, whose 14 divisions sell clothing at a wide range of prices, there is always a discussion of the relationship between price and value, said Laura Pomerantz, a senior vice president.

"What I try to do," she said, "is to get our factories to work tighter and closer. Instead of just designing and figuring out the cost, we work backward, setting a cost and working out how we can meet it. We try not to compromise quality, so when we know something has to be a certain price, we go to a factory that can deliver and we negotiate. We negotiate tougher, harder and longer."

"We can control manufacturing prices by virtue of the volume we do," she added.

The company's sales for 1988 were expected to reach $660 million.

Another way of controlling prices is by using less costly fabrics.

"While wool might be $5.50 a yard, we use a wool and synthetic blend at $2.80 to $4 a yard," said Gerald Zipp, president of the Leslie Fay dress divisions, where retail prices cost $80 to $125.

"A silk blend might be $3 and change compared to $7 and change for pure silk."

Even at St. Gillian, where pure silk has been the fabric of choice, Levy said he was willing to steer his business into other fabrics if necessary.

"But the question is," he said, "shall we design for a price point or give the woman what she's used to?"

SUSAN DRESNER, president of Successful Ways and Means, a personal shopping service, said her clients — professional women earning between $50,000 and $90,000 a year — refused to compromise on quality.

"They expect value for their money," she said. "They're looking much more closely at seam allowances and how buttons are put on."

"They're also buying less," she added. "They're taking a good hard look at what they have and what they need in a practical way rather than in a fashion sense."

Even Oscar de la Renta's customers want clothes that will last more than a season, Mrs. Shaw said.

"They don't buy frivolously," she said. "While they'll pay the price for an evening dress, they won't for a day dress unless they feel they can get mileage out of it."

Mrs. Shaw said that her company had managed to keep the prices on a group of wool crepe dresses under $1,000 for last fall and this spring but that they were certain to top $1,000 next fall.

"We can't adjust ourselves any more," she said. "All our fabrics are imported."

Price is a more urgent consideration in the designer's Miss O line, where dresses retail from $200 to $700. "We get more feedback on price there than in couture," Mrs. Shaw said, "so we try to keep prices in line."

"In couture," she added, "we make a dress and then price it. In Miss O, we make a dress to sell for a certain price."

Designers like Patricia Clynne and Isaac Mizrahi, who have not reached the exalted level of an Oscar de la Renta, are even more concerned about not pricing themselves over their customers' heads.

"It's better to be a little less expensive than other designers in our category," said David Wolfson, who is Ms. Clynne's husband and runs her wholesale business.

"Our customer doesn't want to spend $1,000 on a jacket. What we try to do is balance domestic fabrics with imports and not go overboard on European fabrics. Cotton in this country is in good shape."

IN ADDITION, he said he managed to control manufacturing costs by doing the cutting of fabrics in his own workrooms and working with the same small contractors to finish the production of the garments.

"I give them all my work," he explained, "so I'm important to them."

Mizrahi said he tried to maintain a broad price base in his sportswear. While he made a group of Italian wool winter coats that sold for $1,500, he also had domestic wool coats that retailed for $700 and $800.

"We sold maybe 30 of the $1,500 coats," he said, "and 300 of the less expensive."

For next spring, his cotton shirtdresses for $580 will be balanced by cotton knits that will retail between $100 and $200.

'Anything goes' in spring fashion

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Spring '89 is shaping up as another schizophrenic season for anyone trying to reduce fashion trends to a neat formula.

The usual equations don't work. Hemlines of skirts, pants and jackets are up, down and in between — sometimes all in one garment. Waistlines are high or low except when they are in the middle or don't exist at all.

Colors range from purest white to darkest black, with every shade of bright — or pastel — in between. Fabrics, too, vary from raffia — the stuff of baskets, hats and mats — to chiffon.

The trend is toward no discernible trend. The only constant is change. The difference in a trend and a trick, after all, is frequency. Although tricks are usually entertaining to see and fun to wear, they don't belong in anyone's closet on a regular basis. Yet.

Some of both paraded down New York runways to usher in Spring '89. Following is an attempt to order the chaos:

■ Hemlines: They continue to refuse to behave. For every designer who showed skirt lengths all above the knee, there was another who showed only lengths below the knee. Many designers presented several choices, but few were of the extremely short lengths of a few seasons ago. Some, such as Geoffrey Beene, showed sloped hemlines that ranged from relatively short in front to long in back.

■ Colors: The range was from white to black to brights, but navy blue was a favorite in almost every collection. Navy was used for both casual and dress-up fashions, whether in sailor pants from Calvin Klein or a Scaasi Boutique full length formal.

Although the bluish reds such as purple and fuchsia still showed up frequently, the move for spring '89 is toward warmer reds of the paprika, pimiento, peach and orange families. Yellow looked fresh and was often combined with red and orange. Green is branching out to include spring, moss, mint and avocado tones. Pale pinks, blues, greens and yellows made refreshing news in sportswear, dresses, suits and evening wear.

■ Waistlines: These dividing lines were almost anywhere you could want them, even at the natural waistline. There were still many Empire looks, especially in evening wear, but the high-waisted look appeared in jump suits as well. The wide waist band continued into spring lines and provided an especially pleasing balance with the shorter jackets that remain popular.

■ Fabrics: The raw material of fashion took a turn toward the soft, with chiffon being the undeniable trend-setter. Whether used in a sheer, see-through blouse, a complete dress or a scarf to wrap around the head or carry, chiffon has spring '89 wrapped up. There was seldom a show that did not have a chiffon something dragged down the runway.

■ Silhouettes: The overall look is softer than seen in recent seasons. Fabrics flow, drape, gather and fall. There's no question, in most cases, that there's a female body underneath it all. There are few hard structural looks, and even the fashions that are tightly fitted or figure-revealing have a softness about them.

The A-line is becoming more common, and the V, is also seen, most commonly in suits with short skirts and wide shoulders.

■ Ethnic influence: Indian looks — from North America and India — were seen in several collections.

Markdown money hidden factor in high clothing prices

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Markdown money, a term that inspires fear and loathing up and down Seventh Avenue, is a hidden factor in today's high clothing prices.

Here is how it works: Say the Ace Dress Co. delivers 100 dresses at the wholesale price of $100 to Monolithic Stores in July.

Monolithic in turn plans to sell them to customers for $200, at the 100 percent markup that is usual in the industry. At that price the company expects a total profit of $10,000.

But suppose after three months, in October, Monolithic has been able to sell only 50 dresses. The 50 that remain are put on sale, marked down to $125 to clear the stock for the next season. After all the dresses are sold, the profit is $6,250.

But in November, the store buyers are back in the Ace showroom, ordering clothes for spring. And they have their hands out: they are asking Ace for $3,750, the difference between the $10,000 profit they had planned to make and the $6,250 they realized after the markdown.

The $3,750 is markdown money.

If Ace doesn't come up with the cash, the store may not order more clothes. Sound unfair? It happens all the time on Seventh Avenue, where negotiations between buyer and supplier have become baroque in their complexity.

For their part, the stores maintain that they have to devote valuable floor space to the supplier's garments. They say that if the supplier cannot deliver the margin of profit they want, there is no reason to reorder. From this standpoint, markdown money can almost seem a saving grace, a second chance to prove the salability of a line.

"Retailers feel manufacturers should share in the responsibility when things don't sell," said Elizabeth Calderone, who knows both sides: she was a buyer at Macy's and is now merchandising manager for Kathryn Conover, the designer.

Unfortunately, markdown money is a one-way street: designers do not get a bonus from the stores when their clothes sell out. Whether it is done in cash or as a discount on future orders, the process has become a ritual, perpetuating a cycle that hurts the consumer. After being burned by markdown money, a designer or manufacturer builds the expense into the next collection.

"It's one of the costs of doing business," said Ren'ee Hunter, the vice president and head of sales for the designers Tom and Linda Platt. "Everything is passed on to the consumer, one way or another."

Not only do customers pay more, but as the deal itself becomes the focus of store buyer-designer relationships, fashion is lost in the shuffle.

"The buyers generally only know one thing: profitability," said Andrea Jovine, a New York designer. "They're not merchants anymore. They don't care what they're selling, as long as it's profitable."

Neither retailers nor designers like to talk about markdown money, partly because it rears its head only when things don't sell. Designers and manufacturers with a great deal of clout probably don't have to pay, unless they have had a really disastrous season. "It's impossible to get a statistic on it," said Arthur Warshaw, the editor of The Apparel Strategist, a trade journal.

These days the entire markdown process, in which clothes sometimes seem to go on sale shortly after arriving in the stores, may be based on false initial markups, Mr. Warshaw said. "Regular markups are so high now that a sale is not really a sale," he said. "The consumer senses it. That's why nobody wants to pay full price anymore."

Spring fashions sport serious mood

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times News Service

The masquerade is over. A sense of high seriousness pervades the new clothes that stores all over the nation have ordered for next spring.

After last year's extravagant styles that puffed too much and bared too much, the watchwords now include "wearable," "practical" and "enduring."

The most popular clothes are those that are kind to the body, flattering and surprisingly stylish. What's more, they look as if they could be worn with grace for more than one season.

Though designers have pulled back from the overelaborate designs of last spring, they seem to have uncovered a new love of creativity; the clothes look fresh without looking strange.

The lines start arriving in the stores this month so customers can judge for themselves.

In advance-season showings in cities like Houston, Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Memphis, St. Louis and Bal Harbour, Fla., consumers have indicated their approval of styles like pants suits with wider legs and softer jackets, dresses with shaping, gentle drapable fabrics like crepe or chiffon rather than crisp, sibilant taffeta.

These clothes will not shake the world; they will make women feel comfortable.

What makes customers feel the least comfortable is hem lengths.

"We are shipping our skirts and dresses long enough to cover the knees," said Syd Shaw, vice president of Oscar de la Renta. "But most of the clothes look younger and swifter when they stop just above the knees. It is important that a knowledgeable saleswoman turn up the hem to demonstrate this to the customer so that she can make up her own mind."

Sportswear designers like Calvin Klein and Donna Karan report fewer problems with skirt lengths than do dress designers, now that trousers are more acceptable.

The four best-selling daytime out-

Fashion 'ins, outs' listed

By LINDA GILLAN GRIFFIN
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The "What's Out" side of 1989's fashion ledger will bring tears of happiness to the eyes of most women.

Miniskirts bite the dust — again. Designers wanted something new last year, but shoppers were not impressed, so retailers are stuck with racks of skimpy skirts. Steer clear if you see one on sale, unless it's for your memory box.

Poufs, panniers, pumpkins and other weird, wacky or way-out skirt shapes are kaput. Just consider them blips on the fashion radar, created by a decade of directionless fashion designers, and pack them away for your granddaughters' delight.

It's also time to tuck the froufrou into the back of your closet. It has flown the coop in favor of more refined feminine fashions. Dress-up clothes in 1989 whisper of elegance instead of hitting you over the head with every trick in the designer's bag.

Most bows are out. That includes gaudy bows, hair bows, bows bigger than breadboxes and any bow worn on your butt. Read it and weep.

Cross off Christian Lacroix for the present, anyway. The bloom is no longer on his roses, poufs and candy-box bodices, and his designs are no longer sold at Neiman-Marcus.

Gestapo leathers, those skin tight, she-man duds even seen on the streets in midsummer '88, are being eased out. Seek instead gold-buttoned or biker style leathers.

"Character dressing" shows very little of your own. Marie Antoinettes get the ax and so do Spanish dancers and Sherlock Holmeses. And, by the way, Spain is out, India is in as the chic country of fashion influence.

Houndstooth checked jackets in black and white are looking a little long in the tooth, as are gien plaids. If you don't own one and can hold out for another month or two, you might go into the "Guinness Book of World Records" as the only woman on Earth who didn't succumb.

Message T-shirts are booooooring, in case you haven't already gotten the message.

Animal brooches are fickle pets. Salamanders and panthers are slithering off into the bushes, but snakes and insects are just approaching killer proportions.

Duchess of Windsor jewels are out, especially the copies. And we've had it up to here with stories on Calvin Gifts Kelly with Wallis' Pearls. Teeny, tiny crystal necklaces — especially dangling from your rear view mirror — are only in low-rider cars.

This year's cute and funny socks — cows, cameras, Christmas carols — will be next year's old jokes. Sorry. Hope you didn't buy them in cashmere.

Lacy hose are again the property of ladies of the evening and Laura Ashley habitues. And as for red stockings with red dresses and red shoes, the satanic look is out.

Flowers unlimited is no way to dress. Prune back those spring posies to a favored few.

Big hair — or the Texas beauty pageant "do, as it's derogatorily known in the East — has lost its "super hold," even in the South. Hair will be long and sleek or softly curled into more sophisticated stylings in '89.

fits at Klein all involve trousers, with cashmere sweaters, crepe blouses or short jackets. For evening, a short strapless gold lame dress shares top honors with a chiffon jump suit. The trouser legs on the chiffon style are so wide they look like a skirt.

Orders for trousers are called "exceptionally strong" at Donna Karan, partially because pants far outnumber skirts in the collection.

Ms. Karan's basic pants in the spring orders are cuffed or uncuffed or draped in the front and tapered to the ankles. They are usually combined with jackets that either button or wrap to one side or are straight and boxy. The boxy jacket is full enough to be worn over a front-wrapped skirt without causing any bulges.

The two skirts that top the spring orders here at Karan are the front-wrapped style, which bares the knees, and an ankle-length skirt that fits smoothly over the hips and flares gently at the hem. Chiffon pants are popular for evening, sometimes paired with one of the side-wrapped daytime jackets.

While suits and dresses dominate the daytime orders at both Oscar de la Renta and Pauline Trigere, trousers are significant at night. At Oscar de la Renta, they have enormously full legs, each as wide as a modest ball gown.

At Trigere, a top style for late day includes a flower-printed wool crepe jacket in black on beige with striped pants in the same colors.

Cost-conscious customers are adding an extra all-black skirt or pants to wear with the jacket, Miss Trigere said. A black and white striped jump suit is also popular.

Best-selling dresses at Trigere include an aqua wool crepe version of her famous princess dress and a crepe de chine tunic with striped bands at the sleeves and hem, combined with a black skirt.

The leading suit is a black and white tablecloth-checked style shown with a white blouse. ("You can also wear a sweater," the practical designer said.)

At the moment, Miss Trigere is working on a group of catfarms for Bergdorf Goodman which include jeweled styles, flower prints and splashing abstract prints.

They come in one size to fit all figures; slips to be worn under them are made in regular sizes. The catfarms were to be available early this year.

Every year, Christmas toys play out too soon

By ERMA BOMBECK

I've been doing a lot of thinking about the guy I saw on the national news just before Christmas. He's the father who traveled to three different cities in pursuit of the current hot computer game, Nintendo. As I recall, the man stood in lines for two weeks, drove his body beyond human capacity and was prepared to spend half of his salary.

He was doing this because his child needed that toy or life would no longer be worth living.

I wonder how long it took the child to rip off the paper, insert the cartridge in the control deck, play the game non-stop for 12 hours and then banish it to the graveyard of Toys Past.

They do it, you know. Every December, there's a toy so hot parents quit their jobs and devote their lives to finding it. And every January, that same toy is harder to find in the house than it was in the stores.

Remember Cabbage Patch dolls? Their appearance unleashed a group of pit bull mothers who fought and scratched their way into lines and stores across this nation. Last Christmas, grandmothers on pensions paid $125 for a Cabbage Patch doll that when turned upside down activated a microchip which said, "I just love standing on my head." Where is it today?

One thing is certain. From the moment these toys hit the stores, critics charge, "They're addictive!" Do you have any idea how many years I have shopped for an addictive toy? Anything, so long as it would hold the interest of a child for five minutes? I always wanted to find a doll for my daughter that she didn't unwrap, rip off all of its clothes, punch out the eyes and throw under the bed, where it lay with fear on its face, praying for a garage sale.

I always wanted a game that was so riveting my kids would sit up half the night unable to pull themselves away. Instead, within two days, I had half of it in my sweeper bag.

Psychologists who throw around phrases like "a need to create stimuli" and "provides motivation and challenges" are giving kids more credit than they deserve.

There's nothing mysterious or psychological about it. Basically, kids like games that destroy an adult's hearing. They gravitate toward toys that cost more than your first house and are in short supply. Anything with "child-proof" printed on it is a red flag, signaling instant destruction. They just after toys that need special batteries manufactured only in communist-bloc countries.

I'm telling you, when you can find a Clean Your Room Kit that costs $149.95 and then limit the kids' playing time with it only after their homework is done, you're going to reverse a trend in this country.

DEAR ABBY

Magazine's smells sour to migraine sufferer

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Today when I received my TV Guide, a sample of a fragrance for men had been inserted, bound into the other pages. The instructions were to tear a portion of the ad to "release" the fragrance. However, this was unnecessary because the moment the mail came through the slot and plopped to the floor I began to cough and wheeze. In less time than it takes to say, "Lord, spare me!" I had a full-blown migraine headache!

I have also received soap and fabric softener through the mail. When I had a rural mailbox, I had to disinfect it regularly to combat the fumes of these offenders — which to me are extremely dangerous.

Abby, there are millions of folks with severe allergies, asthma, migraine headaches and probably other health conditions that are aggravated by such odors, and we spend a good deal of time trying to avoid them. Many of us cannot attend concerts, church, nightclubs or ride in elevators. We also spend big bucks for allergy shots. (I get two every week.)

It's bad enough that we must live life constantly fighting the silent but deadly enemy — but it is really necessary to invade the privacy of our homes and attack us where it hurts the most?

Abby, please say something about the problem of these "scented samples" that invade the U.S. mail! Sign me ... CHOKING

DEAR CHOKING: Those "free sample" ad campaigns must cost the fragrance folks an arm and a leg, which is nothing to sniff at. If the army of allergics were to join forces and do a little lobbying, they would create a stink that no one could ignore.

DEAR ABBY: Congratulations on a good answer to the new wife who wanted her husband to drop his ex-in-laws.

My ex-in-laws are very dear to me. When I was first divorced, broke and jobless, with two kids and a worthless ex-husband who refused to pay child support, my ex-husband's older sister helped me go back to school. She gave me a place to live, helped with expenses and even paid the kids' orthodontist bills. She is not rich. She simply cared, and I will never be able to repay her for all she did, and still does.

Another of his sisters pays for my kids' piano lessons. She lives in another state, but she calls frequently to check on their progress and to see how we're doing. We see her whenever we can, and I value her friendship.

My ex-mother-in-law always invites me for Christmas and to stay overnight whenever we are vacationing in her state. She is welcome in my home anytime.

None of these relationships have anything to do with my ex-husband, from whom I parted with some bitterness eight years ago.

If I should remarry, I would expect to see my ex-in-laws — all of them (his mother, five brothers and sisters and all of their children) — in the front row at the wedding ceremony. These people were, and always will be, my family. — MORGAN PIAZZA (THEIR FAMILY)

Yaz, Bench elected to Hall

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The two favorites, Johnny Bench and Carl Yastrzemski, were swept into baseball's Hall of Fame Monday night, both gaining admission in their first year of eligibility and both becoming near-unanimous choices.

Bench and Yastrzemski were the only two former players elected to the Hall.

Gaylord Perry, a 314-game winner, missed entrance by 32 votes, and Jim Bunning, who fell just 4 votes short last year, failed by 53 this time in balloting conducted by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

A record 447 ballots were returned by eligible members of the baseball writers, making 336 votes — or 75 percent — required for admission.

Bench, who hit 369 home runs in a 17-year career with the Cincinnati Reds, and Yastrzemski, who hit 432 in 23 seasons with the Boston Red Sox, made it by substantial margins.

Bench was named on 431 ballots, or 96.4 percent of the total submitted, coming within 16 votes of unanimous election. Yastrzemski was listed on 423 ballots, or 94.63 percent.

Only two other players earned a higher percentage of votes than Bench: Ty Cobb, who totaled 98.23 percent of the ballots in 1936, and Henry Aaron, who was chosen on 97.83 percent in 1982. Cobb came within four votes of a unanimous selection.

The selections of Bench and Yastrzemski were announced on the day when Bill Terry, the Hall of Famer who was the last National Leaguer to hit 400, died at Jacksonville, Fla., at the age of 90.

Yastrzemski's total was the seventh highest ever, behind only Cobb, Aaron, Bench, Honus Wagner, Babe Ruth and Willie Mays. Cobb, Ruth and Wagner were elected in 1936, the year voting began.

Because of the high number of ballots returned, the votes for Bench and Yastrzemski were the most ever received by any player. Mays had the previous record for most votes received, gaining 409 in 1979.

Bench and Yastrzemski also became the 18th and 19th players elected to the Hall of Fame in their first year of eligibility. They will be inducted in ceremonies July 23 at Cooperstown, N.Y.

Their election was no surprise. Bench holds the major league record for home runs by a catcher with 327, is a two-time winner of the National League's Most Valuable Player Award and won 10 Gold Gloves for fielding excellence.

Yastrzemski holds the American League record for most games played with 3,308 and won the triple crown in 1967, leading the league in batting average (.326), home runs (44) and runs batted in (112).

The selection of Bench and Yastrzemski marks only the third time since 1936 that two players have been elected in their first year. In 1962, Jackie Robinson and Bob Feller were chosen, and in 1982, Aaron and Frank Robinson were named.

Perry, who won two Cy Young Awards but was accused of throwing spitballs throughout his 22-year career, was the only other player to receive at least 300 votes.

He finished with 304 in his attempt to join Bench and Yastrzemski as a winner in his first year.

Bunning, who threw two no-hitters and won 224 games, drew 283 votes in his 13th year on the ballot. He has only two years of eligibility remaining before being removed.

After that, he must wait three additional years before he can be considered by a veterans' committee.

Ferguson Jenkins, who had 284 victories in 19 seasons, had 234 votes in his first year on the ballot. He was followed by Orlando Cepeda, who totaled 176 votes, and Tony Oliva, who had 135.

Chaps rally by NMJC

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

HOBBS, N.M. — With a date against the No. 1 Junior College team in the land coming up Thursday at Chaparral Center, Midland College will have little time to gloat over Monday's 86-76 WJCAC win over New Mexico Junior College.

Besides, how much gloating can you do over a team that is 0-3 in conference and, with an 8-10 record already has equaled the total number of losses suffered in the last two seasons combined?

Well, in this instance, the Chaps can be pardoned if they gloat a little. While NMJC now has a three-game home losing streak, the Thunderbirds had a 31-game home win streak until Dixie, Utah, ended it 111-110 in the finals of the Thunderbird tournament in December. Then came the loss to Odessa College and after a road loss to Howard, Monday's defeat at the hands of Midland.

So records, in some cases, can be deceiving and this perhaps is one of them.

For a while, it didn't appear the Chaparrals, now 11-6, would do any gloating at all. NMJC led for 25 minutes before a three-pointer by 6-9 Darryl King put the Chaps ahead 53-52 for the first time, a lead MC never relinquished.

MC wound up outscoring the hosts 54-37 in the second half to win going away to boost its WJCAC record to 2-2.

"In the second half, we became more intense and turned up the heat on defense," explained MC Coach Reggie Franklin. "And at the other end of the court we took better shots."

"In the first half we must have missed six layups and fumbled away five other opportunities under the basket."

GOING INTO the game, NMJC Coach Ron Black, whose Thunderbirds have won or shared the conference title the last two seasons, was concerned over the inches his team was giving away at every position.

49ers prepare for Super Bowl

By FRANK LITSKY
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — Last week, Mike Singletary, the Bears' wonderful middle linebacker, was asked what his team would have to do to play a perfect game against the San Francisco 49ers.

"Well," said Singletary, "we'd have to shut out Jerry Rice, which means no touchdowns. We'd have to keep Roger Craig under 50 yards rushing. And we'd have to hold Joe Montana under 100 or 120 yards passing. I'd call that a perfect game. A lot of people would call that unrealistic."

As it turned out, it was indeed unrealistic. On Sunday, the Bears played the 49ers at Soldier Field for the National Conference championship and a berth in Super Bowl XXIII in two weeks against the Cincinnati Bengals.

Jerry Rice caught two touchdown passes and appeared to have caught a third, though the officials said he was juggling the ball when it struck the ground. Craig ran for 68 yards, but did little damage. Montana passed for 288 yards and three touchdowns and did enough damage for the 49ers to win, 28-3.

So now the 49ers are in the Super Bowl for the third time in eight years. They won Super Bowl XVI after the 1981 season by beating the Bengals, 26-21, in Pontiac, Mich. They won Super Bowl XIX after the 1984 season by beating the Miami Dolphins, 38-16, in Palo Alto, Calif.

Montana was their quarterback in both Super Bowl victories. Rice was in college then. Now Montana, Rice and Craig are the backbones of the 49ers' offense. Montana is the consummate big-game quarterback and Rice is perhaps the most dangerous receiver in the sport. After the 1985, 1986 and 1987 seasons, the 49ers were eliminated in their first playoff game. Rice scored no touchdowns in those games. In these playoffs, he has caught three touchdowns passes against the Minnesota Vikings and two against the Bears.

"I know I had to make the plays," said Rice. "I think I'm making them, it really boosts the team."

"Jerry Rice is one of the best receivers around," said Montana.

"Jerry Rice is one of the very best of our time," said the 49ers' coach, Bill Walsh.

This 49ers' team has an unusual age mix. Of its 47 players, 25 have three years or less of National Football League experience.

"This is the strangest of all our teams," said Eric Wright, the seventh-year cornerback, "because the others were more veteran clubs. Now, all the veterans have to tell the young players what the playoffs are all about."

Lady 'Dogs down Carlsbad, 61-56

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Turnabout was fair play for the Midland High girls basketball team on Monday night.

The Bulldogs almost caved in under the strain of Carlsbad's full-court press, but Coach Jane Young brought her own press out of mothballs to key a 61-56 win in non-district play at the MHS gym.

Carlsbad led most of the game before Midland outscored the Cavegirls 9-2 in the game's last three minutes. Young credited a 1-2-1-1 press with turning things around, even though Carlsbad clearly had the edge in quickness.

"I don't feel we're that much of a pressing team," Young said. "But I thought the element of surprise might do us some good."

Carlsbad tried court-length passes in an effort to break the MHS press, but the passes were often too long and the resulting turnovers caused the Cavegirls to score only four points in the last five minutes.

But Midland High botched several attempts to tie before finally hitting stride behind post Kim Jackson.

JACKSON TIED it up for the 'Dogs with two free shots at just under the three-minute mark, and added two more free throws 21 seconds later to put Midland ahead 56-54.

Carlsbad's Caryn Craddock cannot two free shots to tie it up with 2:27 left, but Patricia McMarion made the second of two free throw attempts with 2:07 to put Midland High ahead for good.

Jackson finished with a game-high 22 points, her most since pouring in 30 against Lamesa last month. More importantly, she made all six of her free throw attempts in the fourth quarter and was eight-of-eight from the line for the game — all despite admitting to final-minute jitters.

Rebs to face Bobcats

From Staff Reports

The Midland Lee Rebels will try to recapture the momentum they had before last Friday night's loss to Odessa High when they meet the San Angelo Bobcats at Chap Center today at 8 p.m.

The Rebels, 13-7 overall and 1-1 in district, are currently in a three-way tie for third in the District 4-5A basketball hunt.

With the 54-45 Odessa High win, the Bronchos moved into sole possession of first place in the league with a 2-0 record.

Tonight's matchup will feature a shooting contest between the Rebels' top two scorers, Torval Crisp (14.7 points per game overall, 10.5 in district) and Jared Edwards (12.8 ppg, 12.0), and the best San Angelo has to offer: Tracey Anthony, with 16.0 ppg and Terry Lewis, 14.0 ppg in district play.

Lee's Darren Dortch, a 6-3 post, has been hot since league play began, averaging 14.0 points in two outings. For the season, Dortch is dropping in an average of 7.6 per game.

San Angelo, a game and a half better than the Rebels in the overall category with a 15-6 record, is now 0-1 in district after falling to Abilene Cooper 68-57 last Friday night.

The Rebels are 4-5 playing on the Chap Center floor in the '88-'89 season.

Lady Rebels at Lady Bobcats. The San Angelo Lady Bobcats, reigning District 4-5A champs and coming off a perfect '87 district season, are struggling this year following the loss of numerous key seniors from last year.

Conversely there is Lee, on the upswing this season and sporting a 14-5 overall mark, 3-1 in district. San Angelo is 9-7 overall, but 0-3 in league play. The Lady Rebels are coming off a 79-46 thrashing of Odessa High while San Angelo fell to Cooper 66-52 Friday night.

As they have been all season, the Lady Rebels are led by the inside shooting of Monica Ramirez, who has, for the most part, proved to be an immovable object this year. Ramirez is averaging 23.4 points per game, her lowest average since the second game of the year. In four district games, she is averaging 22.2 ppg. She has scored roughly 38 percent of the Lady Rebel baskets this year.

Also contributing to the Lee cause is Mary Ann Isom. At wing, Isom has a usually dependable long shot. When it's on its good 99 percent of the time. But when it's off, she usually has a rough time of it.

At last, an end to the Ickey Shuffle

First things first ...

What is the best thing about the upcoming Super Bowl between Cincinnati and San Francisco?

It will mark the last time this season the American public will have to suffer through the dreadful Ickey Shuffle.

Just one opinion: It's the stupidest looking TD celebration to come along since Billy "White Shoes" Johnson's dances for the Oilers in the '70s.

What is the worst thing about the upcoming Super Bowl between Cincinnati and San Francisco?

Everything else.

Already I can't bear to think about all the commercials we will have to endure. Or all the overstatements our faithful commentators will heave upon us. How many "great" or "fantastic" or "marvelous" plays can possibly be ahead for us all to enjoy?

Wagerers take note: Mrs. Patterson wonders how the Bengals can lose with names like Ickey.

Patterson

Boomer and Turk?

Another opinion: If baseball players can play the World Series at the home fields of its participants, how come NFL can't do same?

Why do we have to trudge off to Miami, New Orleans, or Pasadena every year, when America should watch Super Bowl at NFC site one year, AFC site the next, and so on.

Why can't football players brave the elements in the most important game of the year?

Oh, you say money has something to do with it? The better the weather the higher the revenue? How come I'm not surprised?

The ridiculous site selection of the SB makes about as much sense as the way District 4-5A plays its basketball, effectively splitting up the boys and the girls every Tuesday and Friday night.

You tell me how come the Lee boys team will host San Angelo tonight while the Lee girls will travel to San Angelo. Or why Odessa High's girls travel to Abilene High while OHS boys travel to Abilene Cooper? And Permian's girls host Abilene Cooper's girls and the Mojo men host Abilene High.

Preposterous! A free doughnut to anyone who can offer a logical explanation as to why it is done this way.

There is simply no logical reason. Period.

I have been told, though, that it has been done this way for years and it'll never change. Seems to me that's the wrong attitude and it's time to shake some sense into the old guard who never believes in change.

Quite likely a change that would feature boys and girls playing on same court on same night would save district school's a heckuva lot of money, time and just plain aggravation.

Best bumper sticker seen in quite a long, long time is on the rear end of an Aggie fan's car in Midland:

"Jackie ... expensive, but worth it."

That one was good for several minutes worth of chuckles.

And then there's the one about Mike Tyson, who says he's upset because he's only receiving $8 million for his fight against Frank Bruno.

Somebody stick this guy on an oil rig and make him do some real work for a week and see if that doesn't shut him up.

"Roy, the choice is yours — you can make a million dollars playing this game or you can go have a Stro's." — Rolando Blackman's words of wisdom in October 1987 to Maverick teammate Roy Tarpley, who was suspended from the NBA last week after admitting his second problem with chemical dependency.

Trivia Teaser...

Today's Question: George Mikan played for what college and professional basketball teams?

Monday's Answer: Glenn Davis wore No. 41 and Doc Blanchard wore No. 35 and both played in the same Army backfield, the only time members of the same backfield won Heisman trophies in successive years.

Dallas guard Derek Harper, right, loses control of the ball as Sixer's Charles Barkley (34) and guard Hersey Hawkins, left, move in for a steal.

Associated Press

DALLAS — He wasn't even at the game, but Roy Tarpley was on everybody's mind as the Philadelphia 76ers used a 26-10 second-quarter burst to run away from the Dallas Mavericks.

The Mavericks were playing their third game without Tarpley, the team's key sixth man. Tarpley is on suspension while undergoing voluntary treatment for substance abuse. His absence has been strongly felt.

"Dallas is struggling without a guy like Roy Tarpley," said Charles Barkley, who led the 76ers with 26 points and 15 rebounds. "Every team goes through periods when they struggle. We're just lucky we caught them on a bad night."

Derek Harper, who led Dallas with a career-high 38 points, said, "We can't use losing Roy as a crutch." "You lose a key member of your family, it's hard to get over," said Mavericks owner Donald Carter. "It's hard to get over. I'm going through an adjustment. I know they (the Dallas players) are, too."

Ron Anderson scored eight of his 23 points during the decisive second-quarter run which broke up a one-point game.

The game was tied, 31-31 with 10:10 left until halftime when the 76ers went on their tear, building a 57-41 lead with 3:06 remaining in the period on Hersey Hawkins' 3-pointer, the fourth consecutive 3-pointer by Philadelphia.

"That was certainly a big run for us, although they cut into it before halftime," said 76ers coach Jim Lynam.

The Mavericks dropped their fourth straight, giving them their first 0-4 start for a month since February 1984.

The 76ers also struggled recently until they defeated the Houston

Rockets on the road Saturday night on Hawkins' 3-pointer at the buzzer. They had lost the first four games of their current road trip.

"Winning that Houston game was important," Lynam said. "It really gave us confidence."

The perimeter-shooting Mavericks got only four free throws in the first three quarters and 11 for the game. "We weren't taking it to the hole," said Mavericks coach John MacLeod. "We weren't aggressive on offense or defense. I'm not happy about this at all, but I'm not going to shoot myself."

The Mavericks wasted Harper's effort, including six-for-12 from 3-point range.

"Derek had a great game," MacLeod said. "It's a shame when you have a man as hot as he was that you couldn't win it for him."

Warriors 130, Suns 124
OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris Mullin scored 39 points and registered his first NBA triple-double to pace the Golden State Warriors over the Phoenix Suns.

Mullin also pulled down 11 rebounds and handed out 11 assists before fouling out with 1:57 left in the game. His performance helped the Warriors snap the Suns' winning streak at five games.

Mitch Richmond scored 28 points, 20 in the second half, and Steve Alford added a career-high 13 for the Warriors.

Despite Mullin's 25 points and seven rebounds, Phoenix led 65-53 at the half as Eddie Johnson scored 18 of his 27 points in the second period.

Seattle 105, Cleveland 103
SEATTLE — Derrick McKey's rebound-dunk of Sedale Threatt's jump shot with five seconds left gave Seattle a victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers, snapping their 11-game winning string.

The Sonics, who have won five straight games and 11 in a row at home, scored the final six points, overcoming a 103-99 deficit.

Dale Ellis, who was held to 17 points, scored on a dunk with 48 seconds left and KcKey tied the game with two free throws at the 28-second mark.

Cleveland ran the clock down to nine seconds and took a timeout. On the inbound pass, John Williams threw the ball out of bounds.

Celtics 119, Clippers 84
BOSTON — Jim Paxson sparked a 34-8 surge in the last 7 1/2 minutes of the first half as the Boston Celtics broke open a one-point game and extended their home winning streak over the Los Angeles Clippers to 10 games.

The Clippers closed a 28-22 deficit after one quarter to 33-32 on Benoit Benjamin's dunk with 7:49 left in the second. But Ron Grandison's layup with 7:29 to go began the run that gave Boston a 67-40 halftime lead.

The Celtics started the surge with a 10-0 spurt during which Paxson and Reggie Lewis scored four points each. Joe Wolf's basket snapped it with 5:28 left in the half, but Boston scored the next 10 points, five each by Paxson and Kevin McHale.

Jazz 114, Hornets 92
CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Karl Malone scored 38 points and grabbed 19 rebounds, leading the Utah Jazz past the Charlotte Hornets.

Utah hit seven of its first nine shots in the opening quarter, while Charlotte missed its first five field-goal attempts and fell behind 28-20. Malone had 14 points in the first period.

vote and 1,173 points.

Syracuse, 14-1, dropped from second to fourth with 1,087 points after losing for the first time this season, to Pittsburgh. The Orangemen rallied to hand them No. 10 Seton Hall a 90-66 thrashing.

On Monday night, Syracuse was beaten 75-73 by Villanova.

Iowa beat North Carolina on Saturday, with the wrong player shooting free throws at the end of the game. The victory helped the Hawkeyes, 13-1, jump from ninth to fifth with 1,031 points, nine more than Michigan, 13-1, which improved one place from last week.

Georgetown, which dropped from the ranks of the undefeated last week at the hands of Seton Hall, fell two places to seventh. The Hoyas, 10-1, received 843 points, just two more than North Carolina, 13-2, which was sixth last week.

Louisville, 9-2 after a nationally televised victory over DePaul, moved from 13th to ninth with 707 points, 14 ahead of Missouri, 13-3, which moved up one place from last week to round out the Top Ten.

shuffled Steve Young into the lineup, though Walsh said a quarterback controversy existed only in the minds of reporters. And Walsh hinted that this would be his last season as coach.

Walsh and Edward J. DeBartolo Jr., the 49ers' owner, have enjoyed a close relationship for years. But DeBartolo became unhappy with some of Walsh's moves, and this year he took over as the club president, replacing Walsh.

"We hope Bill coaches next season," said DeBartolo. "This game in two weeks will have no effect. We're good friends. He's done a great job. This is one of his great coaching years. He's coached his head off. His contract runs through 1989, and I'd love him to fulfill it. I think he's made up his mind, but he hasn't told me."

Walsh would not discuss his future, only his next game.

"We know what the Bengals can do offensively and defensively," he said. "We'll have to control the ball. Sam Wyche is one of the most creative coaches in the league."

So said probably the most creative and successful coach in the league.

Syracuse defeated

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Villanova may not have been exactly explosive, but Coach Rollie Massimino figures the Wildcats had TNT on their side Monday night in a 75-73 upset of No. 4 Syracuse.

"The key to the game was TNT: Tempo negates turnovers," Massimino said after his club dealt the Orangemen their second Big East loss in a week.

The Wildcats — slowing it down and staying close after trailing by two at halftime — took a nine-point second-half lead over a team that had been averaging 100.5 points per game.

"That's how Big East games are played," said Massimino, whose Wildcats won their first in three league games this season and moved to 9-6 overall.

Syracuse, which lost last week 81-76 to Pittsburgh and dropped two places Monday in this week's Top 20 poll, fell to 14-2 and 1-2.

Kenny Wilson scored 20 points and Doug West 14 to lead five Wildcats in double figures.

Villanova targeted Sherman Douglas and Stephen Thompson.

"The game plan worked perfectly," West said. "We wanted to limit them to one shot and control Thompson and Douglas."

"I hope this gets us on our way."

No. 3 OU 89, Nebraska 81
LINCOLN, Neb. — Terrence Mullins scored 27 points and third-ranked Oklahoma hit four key free throws down the stretch to come from behind and beat Nebraska in Big Eight basketball.

Stacey King added 21 points, including a 3-point play that put Oklahoma ahead for good, 80-78, with 2:40 left in the game.

Andre Wiley and Tyrone Jones each followed with a pair of free throws to put the game out of reach for the Sooners, 13-1. Wiley and Jones each finished with 13 points.

Nebraska, 9-5, led the first 16 minutes of the game, but trailed at the half, 43-42. The Cornhuskers went ahead 78-75 when Rich King made a pair of free throws with 3:04 remaining, but the Sooners followed with a 12-2 run, including Stacey King's 3-point play.

Oklahoma converted 18 of 25 free throws in the second half, with four of the misses coming after the game was decided.

King had a career-high 21 points for Nebraska. Beau Reid scored 16 points and Pete Manning 15 for the Huskers.

No. 9 Louisville 82, Va. Tech 73
BLACKSBURG, Va. — Pervis Ellison scored 18 points and Kenny Payne had 13 as No. 9 Louisville shook off a scare from Virginia Tech to post a victory in the Metro Conference opener for both teams.

The lead changed hands eight times in the second half as Virginia Tech got 23 points from Wally Lancaster and from 18 from Bimbo Coles. But Ellison's hook shot with 6:08 left to play put Louisville up 64-63 and Virginia Tech never regained the advantage.

The Cardinals moved to 10-2 with their 10th straight win, while Virginia Tech fell to 6-6 before a sellout crowd of 9,971 in Cassell Coliseum.

Virginia Tech was within two points at 71-69 with two minutes to play when the Cardinals finally broke the game open.

No. 11 UNLV 83, Pacific 61
LAS VEGAS — Stacey Augmon scored 15 points and grabbed eight rebounds Monday night to lead 11th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas over Pacific.

David Butler added 13 points and eight rebounds and guards Clint Ross and Greg Anthony had nine points each for the Runnin' Rebels.

Chris Fox led Pacific with 14 points. Dell Demps added nine points for the Tigers.

The win was the eighth straight for the Rebels, who are 5-0 in Big West play and 10-2 overall. The Tigers are 0-3 in conference play and 4-7 overall. They have lost 26 consecutive conference games over the last three seasons.

No. 16 Kansas 90, SMU 82
LAWRENCE, Kan. — Kevin Pritchard scored eight of his 16 points in overtime, including two consecutive 3-point baskets, as No. 16 Kansas fought an uphill battle to defeat Southern Methodist.

Mark Randall led Kansas with 21 points.

Pritchard's game-winning 3-pointers came at 3:02 and at 1:45 of overtime. He then added two free throws.

SMU's Glenn Puddy scored with 1:07 left in regulation to tie the score at 78. SMU had a chance to win the game, but missed a shot and Kansas' Milt Newton grabbed the rebound. Newton's shot with two seconds left was short.

No. 18 Ohio St. 108, Radford 61
COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jay Burson scored 29 points and 12 Ohio State players scored as the 18th-ranked Buckeyes crushed Radford.

Leading 16-11, Ohio State hit 12 of its next 14 shots to take a 42-18. The Buckeyes, 11-3, rolled to a 56-27 lead at the half by forcing 22 turnovers and shooting 57 percent.

It was the first meeting ever between the schools.

Baseball Hall of Famer Bill Terry died Monday at his home in Jacksonville, Fla. Terry was the last NL player to bat .400.

Terry dead at 90

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Hall of Famer Bill Terry, the last player to bat .400 in the National League, died Monday at the age of 90 of natural causes.

Terry died in Jacksonville after several months of failing health. He had been living there since 1949.

Terry, who spent all 14 of his major-league seasons with the New York Giants, batted .401 in 1930.

The famed first baseman had a lifetime average of .341 and drove in 100 or more runs for six consecutive seasons, starting in 1927. He finished his career with 1,078 RBI.

He was also one of baseball's rare player-managers for the Giants from 1932 until his retirement as manager in 1941.

Terry succeeded an ailing John McGraw as the team's manager and led the Giants to the World Series championship in 1933. New York also reached the Series under Terry in 1936 and 1937.

"He was a good manager. He knew the game," said Leo Duracher, who played and managed against Terry. "When you play under a man like John McGraw all those years you learn the game."

"Terry almost quit baseball before he reached stardom. He began playing for Atlanta of the Southern League — before he was 16 years old — in 1914 as a pitcher."

"I still think I would have made a first-class pitcher," he once said, "but even for a left-hander, I found my control entirely too good. I simply couldn't keep that ball away from the other fellows' bats and right there I decided that if ever I hoped to get anywhere, it would have to be at the other end of the pitch."

Terry continued playing in the minors but left organized baseball in 1918 to begin operating a chain of gas filling stations for an oil company.

But Terry returned to the game in 1922, and after minor-league stops in Toledo, Ohio, and Shreveport, La., he joined the Giants in 1923.

For two seasons, Terry had to wait his turn while the Giants used George Kelly at first base. Terry, not lacking in confidence, kept pecking away at McGraw, causing the first of their many disputes.

"Why this fellow isn't even half a first baseman," McGraw said of Terry, "and wants twice as much money as a real player."

Terry finally took over as the starting first baseman in 1925 and batted .319 that year. He dipped to .289 the next season, which was to be the last year he hit under .300 in his career.

He finished with 2,193 lifetime hits and 154 home runs.

Asked what his formula for hitting was, he said: "Confidence, my boy, confidence. I don't mean a fellow can start right off knocking a ball lopsided by simply saying to himself he can do it."

"What I do mean is that if you want to accomplish something, you must have confidence in your method of doing it."

The Thunderbirds minimized the disadvantage by keeping the ball moving and sooner or later finding the open man. As a result, NMJC enjoyed advantages of 17-10, 26-19 and 35-28 before MC began to close the gap in the final four minutes before intermission.

It was a steal by Charles McCovery and feed to Kethus Hanks for an easy layup that cut it to 36-39 at the buzzer.

In the second half, Darryl King and 6-8 Fred Campbell began converting the shots they'd had been missing the first half. Campbell's fourth basket of the half and eighth for the duo since intermission gave MC a 55-52 lead with 13:41 to play.

HANKS, the 6-3 freshman from Houston, took it from there, drilling home four second-half three pointers on the way to a game-high 23 points.

"Kethus began to come on in Arizona where he had a good tournament," Franklin praised. "And after that first three pointer tonight, I told him he had taken a good three-point shot and he just seemed to become more confident as the game went on."

While the Chaps offense was putting it together, the defense snuffed out the Thunderbirds' offense.

"They were trying to penetrate and we just collapsed on them," Franklin said. "I'd have to rate it the best 15 minutes of defense we have played in the last three years."

CAMPBELL AND King each had 18 points and Campbell pulled in 11 rebounds.

Charles McCovery, who had a big Arizona tournament, scored 15 points, but at 6 of 17 from the field, was off his shooting feed. Still, there was nothing wrong with his floor game, where he continued to make things happen with eight assists, seven steals and a not too shabby seven rebounds.

When McCovery fouled out, Louis Clay came in and, as the Thunderbirds desperately fouled in an attempt to get back in the game, sank six free throws in the final 1:18 of play, all his points. He also missed the first shot of two one-and-one opportunities.

Play got underway an hour late when the NMJC women and OC decided to play their game. NMJC, 19-2 and ranked No. 2 nationally, led by Melissa Nix, a 5-7 point guard from Sudan, Texas, and 6-2 Tonya McCaster of Buffalo, N.Y., beat the Wranglers, 11-7 and 0-2, 72-65.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 11, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Positive developments will give all your close relationships a lift. Look out for storm warnings in April. If planning to marry, do it near the end of June. Work quietly, making plans in private. An overly aggressive attitude will only go against you in the workplace, causing undue stress. Reduce business tensions in the interest of better health. Changing offices or partners will help you attract the financial backing you need.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: statesman Alexander Hamilton, golfer Ben Crenshaw, pitcher Schoolboy Rowe, actor Rod Taylor.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Financial gains can be made through home and family affairs. Cottage industries yield high income with little expenditure. Be prepared to travel. You are your own best spokesperson!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Deals made behind closed doors are likely to prove successful. Agreements made now should make the financial outlook rosier. Romance requires nurturing. Guard against taking loved one for granted.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Concentration will come easier today. You should be thinking more logically. Trips are favored. Seize an opportunity to cultivate an influential person. Be complimentary without gushing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stay on your toes! Welcome an opportunity to earn extra cash. Consult professional people and pick their brains. Distant affairs become more profitable. A new friendship could turn into a romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Devote more time and attention to details. Go over monthly accounts with care. A domestic upset needs a calm approach. Admit your mistakes to those closest to your heart. Pledge to do better.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Expect the unexpected. Consult a lawyer if you have legal problems. A trip out of town should be postponed until things are straightened out. Bring long-neglected affairs up to date.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): No new problems will develop if you take things easy today. Postpone starting new projects. Take special care if driving. Impatience could lead to dangerous errors of judgment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Steer clear of anyone who involves you in secret transactions. Your love life could be going through a sticky patch. A casual flirtation could cause complications. Concentrate on hobbies.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The domestic scene could be unsettled. Take time to discuss things before a trivial matter is blown out of proportion. A low-interest-rate loan is possible. Investigate further.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep a tight rein on spending. Be careful how you reply to letters. Avoid writing anything that could be misconstrued. A platonic relationship intensifies.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Changes you hoped for could be postponed or fall through. Do not brood. Concentrate on self-improvement projects. An excellent day for signing contracts. You negotiate favorable terms.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for conferring with influential people. Speak your mind; others welcome your original ideas. Distant affairs will progress nicely. Romance is back on the right track. Count your blessings!

Opening lead: King of ♥ "Eight ever, nine never" says the old rubric about how to tackle a suit combination missing the queen. In other words, the percentage play is to finesse when you have a combined eight cards in the two hands, but not with nine. That advice, however sound it is in general, is simplistic. Information you have about the hand can cause you to take a different view.

West's four-heart preempt posed quite a problem for North. He finally decided, correctly in our opinion, that he held too much to be shut out of the auction, so he boldly bid four spades. That made life easy for his partner.

West led the king of hearts and shifted to a diamond. Had South blindly followed the adage, he would have cashed the ace and king of trumps. However, West's preempt gave him cause for concern. He won the diamond in hand and tested trumps by leading to the king. When both defenders followed, declarer gave himself an additional chance to learn about the hand—he led dummy's remaining heart.

When East showed out, West was marked with a nine-card heart suit. That meant that his remaining four cards were divided among three suits, and the most probable division was 2-1-1. It was at least 2-to-1, therefore, that West held a singleton spade.

Backing his card-reading skill, declarer crossed to the ace of clubs and took the trump finesse. When West discarded on this trick, it was a simple matter to draw the last trump and claim the slam.

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

If you need a good helper, try advertising in our classifieds. Who knows? You may spark the beginning of something big!

Land Commissioner unveils gas-powered economic blueprint

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro on Monday released what he called an "extensive blueprint for economic growth in Texas," which calls for increased natural gas use based on the growing demand for clean air.

Natural gas, a clean-burning fossil fuel and one of the state's most abundant natural resources, could be the future's clean-air fuel — and Texas should take advantage of that, Mauro said in a news conference.

Increased demand for natural gas could mean 110,000 Texas jobs over five years, Mauro said. He said that clean air legislation is gaining support in other states and in Congress.

"For Texas, clean air is good business," Mauro said. "Texas' vast reserves of natural gas can create hundreds of thousands of new jobs in this state and begin to recapitalize our battered economy from within."

Mauro released a booklet Monday entitled "Putting Together the Pieces: The Recapitalization of the Texas Economy," which outlines ways to increase natural gas use and demand.

The booklet said natural gas can power automobiles, and is cleaner and more efficient than gasoline. When combined with coal in industrial boilers, natural gas reduces noxious emissions that research has shown produce acid rain, it said.

OPEC, non-OPEC nations to meet

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Members and non-members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet Jan. 26 in London to discuss ways of cooperating to stabilize the world oil market, OPEC's secretary general said Monday.

Indonesia's Subroto also said that OPEC had no confirmation of published reports that the United Arab Emirates was exceeding its production quota agreed upon at an OPEC meeting last November.

The January meeting will include representatives of the 13-member cartel, but not necessarily the countries' oil ministers, Subroto indicated to reporters after meeting with Egypt oil minister Abdel-Hady Kandil.

The Indonesian minister, who arrived in Cairo Sunday night, is touring non-OPEC oil-producing countries, and already has visited Colombia and Mexico. He is to depart Wednesday for Oman.

Aramco ups Saudi reserves

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Saudi Arabia, the world leader in oil reserves, said this week its reserves are at least 50 percent larger than previously estimated and may be as much as 88 percent bigger.

The country's natural gas reserves are at least 25 percent larger than the volume calculated a year ago and could be almost double the previous figure, a Saudi statement said.

TexCan spinoff fuels Brazilian speculation

By BARBARA SHOOK
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Texaco Canada's planned spinoff of its Brazilian properties and other small interests to shareholders is reinforcing the belief of many industry observers that Texaco has found a major oil deposit at the mouth of the Amazon River.

Speculation that the area contains oil and gas fields similar in size to those in the North Sea has been rampant since the discovery was disclosed last June. The president of Brazil, Jose Sarney, called the discovery "historic" at the time.

The Brazilian holdings are being combined with an exploration concession in the West African nation of Mauritania and with interests in some small Canadian oil and gas producing properties to form a new company, Texaco Canada

Petroleum Inc., or TexCan.

Stock in TexCan will be issued to shareholders of Texaco Canada as a special dividend. One share of TexCan will be issued for each share of Texaco Canada.

The carving out of these assets will allow Texaco, which owns 78 percent of Texaco Canada, to hold onto the Brazilian interests, even though it is selling the rest of its interest in Texaco Canada, said Rosario S. Ilacqua, international oil analyst with Nikko Securities in New York.

"The effort to retain the Brazilian properties makes me believe they have found something big there," Ilacqua said.

Jay Gallagher of PetroConsultants in Houston noted that Texaco Canada put a value of $92 million on the properties assigned to TexCan. "There can't be much value placed on the Mauritania concession, so that would indicate to me

Texaco thinks it has a significant find in Brazil," he said.

Last summer, Texaco and Petrobras, the national oil company of Brazil, would confirm only that oil and natural gas were encountered in an exploratory well Texaco drilled on Marajo Island.

Texaco Inc. and Texaco Canada each own 50 percent of a 21-million acre exploration contract with Petrobras covering Marajo Island and the surrounding area.

Two wells have been drilled to total depths of about 18,000 feet, and a third is in progress. Although Texaco says it still has not determined the magnitude of the discovery, the president of its Latin America and West Africa division described the area as having "world class" potential.

Oil purchasers raise posted price

From Staff and Wire Reports

The bullish sentiment surrounding energy futures prices had apparently weakened slightly as prices for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 11 cents from Monday's close, standing at $17.61 at mid-morning.

Local oil purchasers, however, had taken a cue from the rising market, raising posted prices for WTI 75 cents. The average price now stands at $16.75. Among those raising prices were Permian Corp., Pride Pipeline, Phillips Petroleum, Marathon, Sun Refining and Marketing, and Texaco.

Prices had been influenced the last several days by bullish sentiment surrounding OPEC's recent production accord.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, WTI settled 17 cents higher at $17.72 a barrel. On Friday, the contract closed 13 cents higher at $17.55 after a volatile week.

Dollar mixed, gold up overseas

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed in early European trading today but traders said the market appeared poised to test how high central banks are willing to let the currency rise. Gold prices rose.

Central banks in the United States, West Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Canada all reportedly intervened in the market on Monday to slow the dollar's climb.

"The intervention has run out of effect," said one trader in Rome. In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.39 yen to a closing 125.70. Later, in London, it was quoted at 125.93 yen.

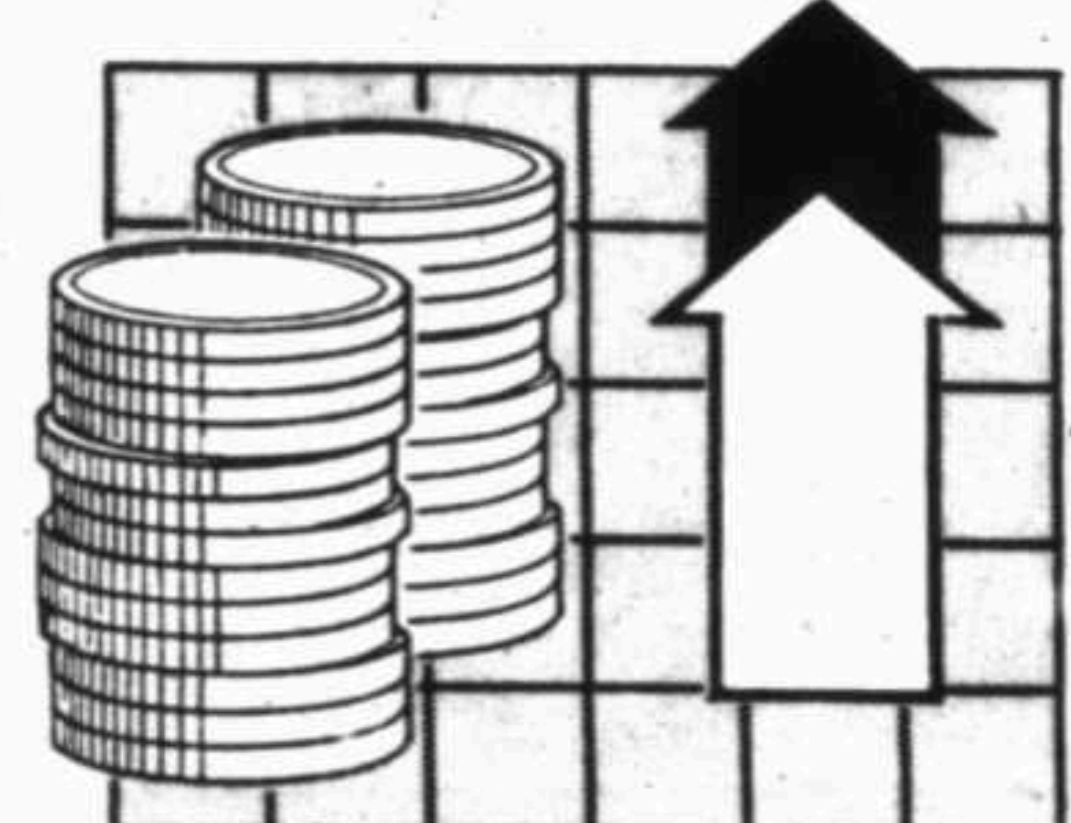

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

- 1.8253 West German marks, up from 1.8245
- 1.5580 Swiss francs, up from 1.5555
- 6.2190 French francs, down from 6.2300
- 2.0589 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0575
- 1.338.50 Italian lire, down from 1.339.75
- 1.1995 Canadian dollars, unchanged

In London, one British pound cost $1.7695, slightly more expensive for buyers than late Monday's $1.7650.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price for gold of $405.50 a troy ounce at midmorning today, unchanged from the opening bid but higher than $402.75 bid late Monday.

In Zurich, the bid price was $405.25, up from $402.75 bid late Monday. Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose 5 cents to close at a bid $407.23. Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.96 a troy ounce, up from Monday's $5.94.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gained ground for the fourth straight session Monday, getting a little more mileage out of its early-1989 rally despite resistance from sellers.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 5.17 to 2,199.46, a new high since the 1987 crash. Over the past four sessions the average has climbed 54.82 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 880 up, 639 down and 469 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 163.18 million shares, up from 161.33 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 191.09 million shares.

The market has benefited in recent sessions from buying by money managers at investing institutions seeking to put some of their large cash reserves to work at the start of a new year.

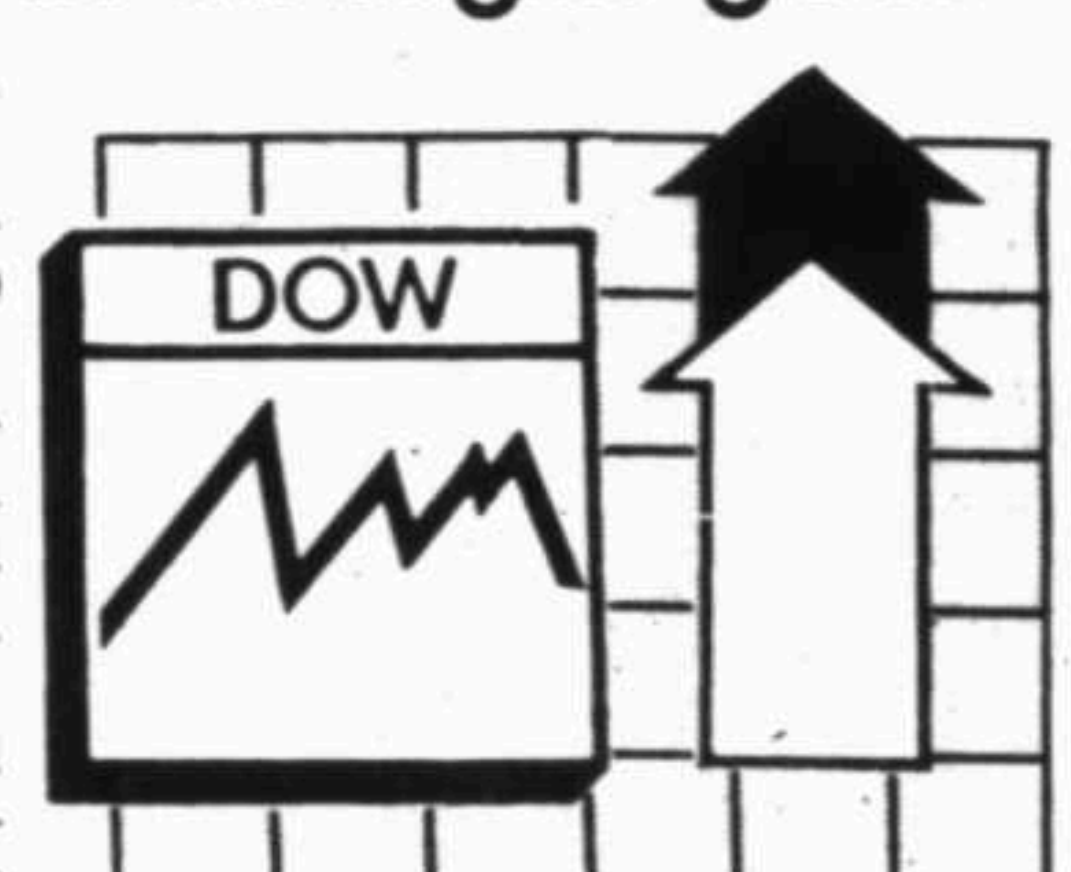

But analysts said traders were worried that the rally had encountered some large obstacles.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $3.93 billion, or 0.14 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .19 to 158.15.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose .11 to 325.04, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up .31 at 280.98.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market added .54 to 385.28. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 313.54, up 2.14.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Thrift crisis dumped in Bush's lap

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration dumped the savings and loan crisis into the lap of President-elect Bush, acknowledging for the first time it does not have enough money to bail out the troubled industry.

The administration, in its proposed budget for fiscal year 1990, outlined plans Monday to spend $64 billion from the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. from 1989 through 1994.

But the budget document acknowledged "these proposals will not resolve the entire problem" and said Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady is working on a plan, "including identifying additional funding sources for FSLIC," to be presented to Bush within 60 days.

Americans increased debt load in November

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans took out $4.5 billion more in consumer debt than they paid off in November as consumers increased their purchases for the holiday season, the government reports.

The Federal Reserve Board said Monday the increase followed a revised increase of $3.9 billion in October and a tiny $2 million rise in September.

Feds seek to block Westinghouse venture

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department says it will sue to block two proposed joint ventures between Westinghouse Electric Corp. and a Swiss company.

The ventures between Westinghouse and Asea Brown Boveri Inc. of Zurich, Switzerland, would involve the manufacture and sale of electric power generation, transmission and distribution products.

Monday's announcement came just two weeks after Attorney General Dick Thornburgh launched an effort to stem a "fear of an antitrust challenge."

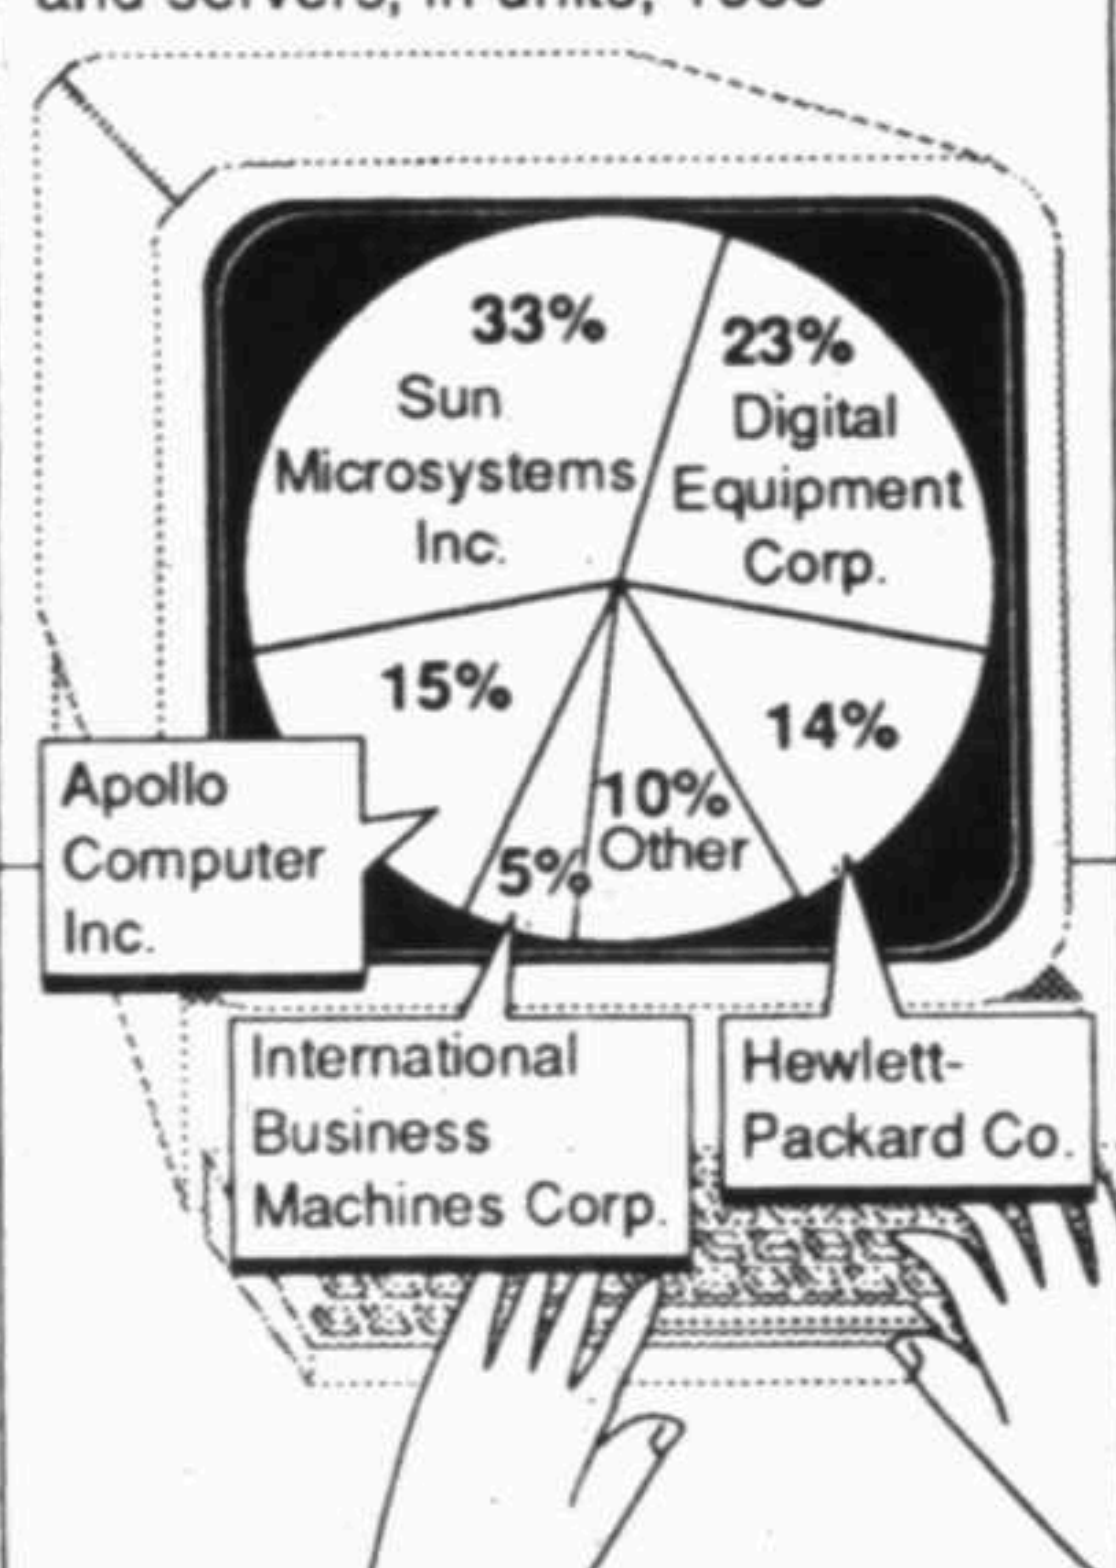

Dismissal of suits against Dow upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a major victory for Dow Chemical Co., the Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling dismissing hundreds of personal injury lawsuits tied to the chemical giant's anti-nausea drug Bendectin.

The court, without comment, rejected on Monday an appeal by more than 800 families who filed a federal lawsuit against Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, the Cincinnati-based Dow unit that manufactures the drug.

H-P cuts price on cheapest workstation

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Hewlett-Packard Co. says it will cut prices, bring out a low-cost graphics computer and make it easy for customers of rival Digital Equipment Corp. to switch to H-P products.

The series of moves preceded by a day Digital's expected announcement of its first engineering workstation based on a technology H-P embraced several years ago.

At risk for the corporate giants is the market for computer workstations, fast-growing workhorses in the most rapidly growing sector in the computer industry. The $3.6 billion market is dominated by Sun Microsystems of Mountain View, whose sole business is workstations.

Workstation sales are expected to rocket to $11.4 billion this year, according to Dataquest Inc., a San Jose market research firm.

Analysts say Hewlett-Packard of Palo Alto and Digital of Maynard, Mass., are vulnerable because these desktop computers are rapidly becoming powerful enough to replace many of their more expensive refrigerator-sized minicomputers.

Digital's announcement of a workstation based on a computer architecture called reduced instruction set computing (RISC) has been expected for several months. Analysts said H-P's announcement was partly in response to it.

H-P introduced an entry-level workstation called the 340SRX and said that its $14,900 price tag made it the lowest-cost system capable of three-dimensional graphics, an important feature for engineers who need see vivid representations of projects on a computer screen.

Black chamber seeks city backing

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

They are asking the Midland City Council for $50,000, but what members of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs say they really want is economic justice.

At Monday's monthly MBCE meeting, members discussed a proposal to be made before the City Council today seeking $50,000 to fund the chamber and several activities, including a Business Development Center, Young Chamber of Entrepreneurs and the Excel Youth program.

"The Midland Chamber of Commerce is funded by the city; the Hispanic chamber is funded by the city. Where does that money come from? From taxes," pointed out James Fuller, a chamber vice president. "We pay taxes, and we want our share of the pie."

The chamber is asking for funding of half its budget of $100,000; the remainder would come through donations from corporate members, membership fees and fund-raisers, according to Robbyne Fuller, president of the chamber.

The city is being asked to provide "seed money" to establish a business center, pay a director and purchase equipment such as a fax machine and photocopier. Members agreed that the chamber would not be able to grow until a director was hired to be available during the day and see to day-to-day operations.

The business center would offer seminars, training and support for businesses, function as a job clearinghouse, and resource center where minority businesses would be matched with corporations seeking to purchase goods and services from such vendors.

The group's proposal pointed out that there are over 200 minority and women-owned businesses in Midland, and that less than 10 percent of these businesses have received contracts from the City of Midland in the past 15 to 20 years. Because these businesses often lack effective marketing skills and access to information about potential contracts, the business center is needed, according to Mrs. Fuller.

Her husband noted that all three Midland chambers are attempting to perform an important function, which is assist the city in diversifying and strengthening its economy, which he said could only benefit all Midland residents.

Members also discussed plans for the upcoming Martin Luther King Jr. celebration, scheduled for this weekend. The festivities begin Friday night at the Northeast YMCA with a drama-in-the-round covering Dr. King's life in chronological order and a photographic exhibit of his life. There will also be "family fun" where family members can play table games, basketball or volleyball or swim.

Family-oriented activities will continue Saturday with a children's story hour, readings on the black family, exhibits on the community family, and another evening of family fun.

The King celebration will conclude Sunday with a 3 p.m. procession from the Federated Women's Club to Greater St. Luke A.M.E. Church.

It was also announced that "Celebration III," the third anniversary of the MBCE, has been rescheduled, tentatively to March 4.

Scrutiny of S&L rescues intensifies

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — With savings and loan rescues coming under greater Congressional scrutiny, the $18 billion of promissory notes issued by industry regulators to help sell off insolvent institutions have become a pawn in a fierce political debate.

Members of Congress are steaming over what they perceive as an agency gone on a wild spree to close sick savings institutions, spending billions of dollars it does not have.

The lawmakers are likely to create uncertainty about the legitimacy of the notes at least until they receive a full accounting from the agency of the many deals it struck with investors in the last weeks of 1988. Meanwhile, the accounting profession has raised questions about whether the Treasury is obligated to make good on the notes.

Last week at a House Banking Committee hearing on third world debt, Rep. Stan Parris, R-Va., wondered whether Congress should pass a nonbinding resolution that the notes issued by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's deposit insurance unit, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, do not have the full faith and credit of the Government.

While other members said they were sympathetic to Parris's sentiments, they expressed concern that such a proposal could create havoc in the markets, and possibly lead to a crisis of depositor confidence.

Midland chamber earns export center designation

From Staff Reports

The Midland Chamber of Commerce Department of Economic Development has been designated an Export Assistance Center by the Texas Department of Commerce.

Midland's program, begun last year by the Small Business Development division of the department, is now affiliated with the new statewide network of export assistance centers. State officials hope to expand the network to some 30 to 40 cities in 1989.

The affiliation with the state program will enhance the chamber's access to trade leads and information on foreign markets, according to Mike Strotheide, Small Business Development officer for the chamber.

"We believe exporting offers great opportunities for local firms to find new markets for their goods and services," he said. "The purpose of our program is to assist area businesses in determining their export potential and to help overcome some of the hurdles involved."

Strotheide said many entrepreneurs are reluctant to explore international markets due to the "red tape" involved. Through its affiliations with the state and U.S. commerce departments, the chamber can help entrepreneurs find the most efficient way to enter foreign markets, he added.

As a first step to determining readiness to export, he suggests entrepreneurs walk through an export readiness questionnaire, answering questions about their business, products, financing and other information. Answers are analyzed by a computer program which provides the business with a profile of its strengths and weaknesses in regard to its ability and readiness to export.

Once a business decides it's ready to export, the center can help with information on potential markets and specific trade leads.

Strotheide said that since the center began operating in September, the number of current and prospective exporters inquiring about foreign trade opportunities has grown. He expects increased local awareness will be created by Midland's foreign trade zone, expected to be approved this spring.

"Both the U.S. Customs port of entry — already in place — and the proposed Foreign Trade Zone will provide greater impetus for the development of export business locally. Through our new affiliations with the Texas Department of Commerce and as an associate office of the U.S. Department of Commerce, we are better prepared to help," Strotheide said.

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Texaco tests Reeves field extender

From Staff Reports

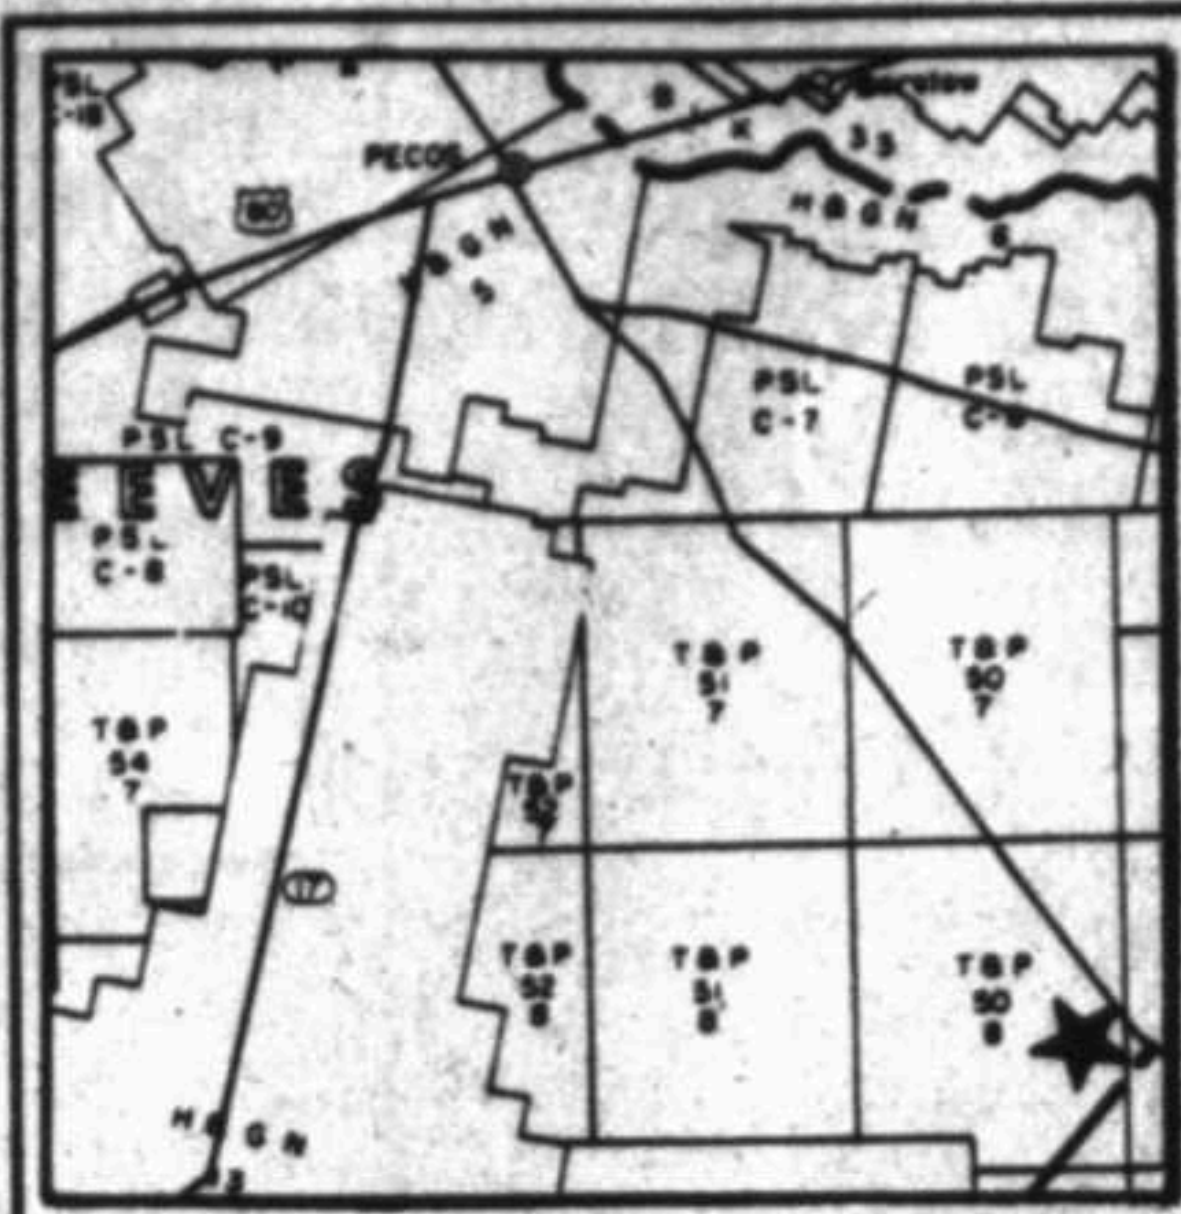

TEXACO INC., Midland, has added a fourth Ellenburger producer to the Rojo Caballos West (Ellenburger) field of Reeves County, extending the pay 2.5 miles southwest.

The No. 1 Reeves "CAN" was tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 955 Mcfd from perforations 20,744 to 21,284 ft. The interval was acidized with 130,500 gallons of 15 percent Ne acid.

Permitted as a 21,800 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 21,800 ft. and plugged back to 21,510 ft. A five inch liner was hung from 11,005 to 21,800 ft.

Formation tops, on elevation of 2,816 ft., included the Atoka at 16,330 ft., Mississippian Limestone at 17,140, Devonian at 17,580, Silurian at 18,050, Fusselman at 18,130, Montoya at 18,150, and Simpson at 18,786 ft. Pay was topped at 20,740 ft.

Location is 1,320 ft. from south and 2,310 ft. from east lines of Section 25, Block 50, T-8, T&P survey, Abst. 721, 21 miles southeast of Pecos.

Reeves extension

Texaco has added a fourth well to the Rojo Caballos West field of Reeves County, extending the field 2.5 miles southwest.

Location is 2,811 ft. from north and 1,053 ft. from east lines of ETRR survey 155, Abst. 163, five miles northeast of Ballinger.

Amerind Oil finals strong Strawnwell

The Northeast Lovington field of Lea County has gained a very strong Strawn producer.

AMERIND OIL CO. potentiated the No. 1 State "29" Com. to flow 561 barrels of crude, 557 Mcfd and no water on a 40/64 inch choke from perforations 11,162 to 11,222 ft. Flowing tubing pressure was 135 psi and the producing interval was acidized with 3,000 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 998:1.

Drilled to 11,365 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 11,296 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,810 ft., formation tops include the Anhydrite at 706 ft., Yates at 3,163, San Andres at 4,934, Glorieta at 6,177, Paddock at 6,315, Blinberry at 6,970, Tubb at 7,622, Drinkard 7,733, Wolfcamp at 9,718, Pennsylvanian at 9,987, Canyon at 10,815, Strawn at

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and 810 ft. from west lines of Section 28, T10s, R37e.

Crockett field gains 5.9 Mmcfd producer

Another producer has been added to the Howards Creek (Penn) field of Crockett County.

HARRISON INTERESTS LTD., Houston, tested the No. 31 University Lands "9-23" for a calculated absolute open flow of 5.9 Mmcfd from perforations 8,543 to 8,721 ft. The interval was acidized with 12,000 gallons of acid.

Permitted as a 10,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 9,095 ft. and plugged back to 8,998 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 9,093 ft.

The well topped the Spraberry at 3,892 ft., Dean at 4,705 and Strawn at 8,530 ft. on ground elevation of 2,381 ft.

Location is 920 ft. from south and 1,320 ft. from east lines of Section 9, Block 32, ULS survey, 14 miles southwest of Ozona.

■ DRILLING PLANNED FOR ANDREWS FIELD. Union Oil Co. of California, Midland, plans to drill seven wells in the Dollarhide field of Andrews County. Four will test the Clearfork formation and three the Devonian. All seven are in the Dollarhide Unit, 31 miles southwest of Andrews. Contract depth ranges from 7,800 to 8,300 ft.

■ BHP PLANS PROGRAM IN SCURRY FIELD. BHP Petroleum Co. Inc., Midland, has applied to drill five new producers in the Diamond M (Clearfork) field of Scurry County. All five are in Block 97, H&TC survey, 11 miles southwest of Snyder. Contract depth is 3,500 ft.

■ SECOND SCURRY FIELD TO SEE ACTIVITY. The Sharon Ridge (1700) field of Scurry County will see some activity as Mobil Producing TX & NM Inc., Midland, plans to drill 12 new wells in the field. All 12 are in the Strain Unit, three miles southeast of Ira. Contract depth is 2,000 ft.

"Although we are looking at a high-risk venture, the Marajo rift basin has the potential to provide major earnings for Texaco into the next century," C. Robert Black said.

The Marajo Basin is a relatively unexplored area covering 27,000 square miles, about the same size as the North Sea Basin. The exploration contract area represents 18 percent of Texaco's total worldwide acreage under lease.

Since the Petrobras contract was signed in 1984, Texaco has invested $21 million in geophysical surveys alone. The studies have been extremely successful in identifying numerous structures that could hold large oil reserves.

Black said some of the structures cover more than 20,000 acres, or 30 square miles.

The first exploratory well, Brevés 1, found indications of oil at a depth of about 18,000 feet, but Texaco was unable to test its productive potential for "mechanical reasons."

The second well, the Piria 1, was abandoned without being tested in November. It also was drilled to a depth of about 18,000 feet.

Parker Drilling's Rig 225 is drilling the third well, the Santa Rosa 1. Texaco said it is at a current depth of more than 10,500 feet and is expected to reach 18,000 feet. The contract with Petrobras requires Texaco to drill a fourth exploratory well to evaluate the area.

Because of the size of the Marajo Basin, the high risk and the multi-million-dollar investment required, Texaco has taken another partner in the venture. A unit of Shell Oil Co., Pecten Brazil Marajo, recently signed a letter of intent to assume part of the cost of exploring and developing the area in exchange for a portion of Texaco's interests.

Bids for Texaco Canada's remaining assets and operations are due later this month. Analysts estimate Texaco Inc. could get more than $4 billion for its holdings.

The sale is part of the company's post-bankruptcy restructuring program that includes the sale of at least $6 billion of properties.

Mauro said he planned to meet with Gov. Bill Clements to discuss his report. He said state legislative and congressional leaders had expressed support for his ideas.

The Land Office will propose state legislation addressing the report's recommendations, Mauro said. He said proposed bills would include amendment of the Texas Clean Air Act, and a bill requiring all state vehicles to be converted to natural-gas power, at a cost of $2,000 per vehicle.

Texas sits on 26 percent of the known U.S. reserves of natural gas, Mauro said. Quoting a Southern Methodist University study, Mauro said that 110,000 jobs would be created in Texas if natural gas consumption increased by 1 trillion cubic feet.

In 1987, the U.S. used 16.7 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. The country used 20 trillion cubic feet in 1980.

A 1988 U.S. Department of Energy study cited in the plan says there are more than 1,000 trillion cubic feet of untapped natural gas, representing a 60-year supply.

OPEC

Subroto said his purpose is to determine "what OPEC and non-OPEC (nations) can do together."

Subroto and Kandil said that non-OPEC oil-producing countries will hold a meeting of their own in London Jan. 25 at Oman's request. Then, experts from OPEC and non-OPEC countries would meet the following day to prepare the ground for a ministerial meeting later, he said.

"We discussed cooperation and what we shall do together to bring stability in the oil market," Subroto said of his talks with Kandil. "Certainly one aspect of that cooperation is how to influence supply, and OPEC has done its part already by the November agreement to reduce production and I think it is now time that non-OPEC producers will also contribute."

Kandil however, ruled out any further reduction of Egypt's production. He said that since October 1984, Egypt had reduced its daily output in support of OPEC policies.

Egypt is not a member of OPEC but its oil policy is generally guided by the cartel's actions.

Subroto said that OPEC's eight-minister monitoring committee has closely followed each member's output, looking for possible violations of quotas. Asked about published reports that the United Arab Emirates was exceeding its quota, Subroto said there was no evidence to support such a claim.

Subroto said that world oil prices were "developing very much positively" thanks to observance of last November's OPEC quotas and cooperation between OPEC and non-OPEC producers.

SAUDIS

The revisions raise estimates of the country's crude oil reserves to about 252.4 billion barrels, while natural gas reserves stand at 177.3 trillion cubic feet.

The addition to Saudi Arabian oil reserves is more than triple the U.S. total of just over 25 billion barrels. The Saudi gas reserves for the first time exceed the U.S. reserve volume of about 150 trillion cubic feet.

"With additional development of the existing oil fields and with the recent expansion of exploration activities to all areas in the kingdom, Saudi Arabia's remaining reserves could be as high as 315 billion barrels of oil and 253 trillion cubic feet of gas," said Aramco, the Saudi national oil company and the world's largest oil producer.

The new Saudi figures put the kingdom far ahead of its closest rival, Iraq, which claims oil reserves of 100 billion barrels.

"In case anybody needed reminding, it is a statement that Saudi Arabia is No. 1," said Daniel F. Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Boston. This is also a reminder that a shortage is not exactly imminent."

In the past two years, Aramco has begun exploration in areas north and northwest of the capital of Riyadh, several hundred miles west of the primary producing region along the east coast of Saudi Arabia. Additional oil and gas zones have been identified in exist ing fields.

"Saudi Arabia is the last of the major producers within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to disclose significant reserves additions," Yergin said. "It has always been believed that the Saudi reserves were substantially understated and could be double the official published figure."

Land Commissioner unveils gas-powered economic blueprint

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro on Monday released what he called an "extensive blueprint for economic growth in Texas," which calls for increased natural gas use based on the growing demand for clean air.

Natural gas, a clean-burning fossil fuel and one of the state's most abundant natural resources, could be the future's clean-air fuel — and Texas should take advantage of that, Mauro said in a news conference.

Increased demand for natural gas could mean 110,000 Texas jobs over five years, Mauro said. He said that clean air legislation is gaining support in other states and in Congress.

"For Texas, clean air is good business," Mauro said. "Texas' vast reserves of natural gas can create hundreds of thousands of new jobs in this state and begin to recapitalize our battered economy from within."

Mauro released a booklet Monday entitled "Putting Together the Pieces: The Recapitalization of the Texas Economy," which outlines ways to increase natural gas use and demand.

The booklet said natural gas can power automobiles, and is cleaner and more efficient than gasoline. When combined with coal in industrial boilers, natural gas reduces noxious emissions that research has shown produce acid rain, it said.

OPEC, non-OPEC nations to meet

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Members and non-members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet Jan. 26 in London to discuss ways of cooperating to stabilize the world oil market, OPEC's secretary general said Monday.

Indonesia's Subroto also said that OPEC had no confirmation of published reports that the United Arab Emirates was exceeding its production quota agreed upon at an OPEC meeting last November.

The January meeting will include representatives of the 13-member cartel, but not necessarily the countries' oil ministers, Subroto indicated to reporters after meeting with Egypt oil minister Abdel-Hady Kandil.

The Indonesian minister, who arrived in Cairo Sunday night, is touring non-OPEC oil-producing countries, and already has visited Colombia and Mexico. He is to depart Wednesday for Oman.

HOUSTON — Saudi Arabia, the world leader in oil reserves, said this week its reserves are at least 50 percent larger than previously estimated and may be as much as 88 percent bigger.

The country's natural gas reserves are at least 25 percent larger than the volume calculated a year ago and could be almost double the previous figure, a Saudi state media said.

Oil purchasers raise posted price

From Staff and Wire Reports

The bullish sentiment surrounding energy futures prices had apparently weakened slightly as prices for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 11 cents from Monday's close, standing at $17.61 at mid-morning.

Local oil purchasers, however, had taken a cue from the rising market, raising posted prices for WTI 75 cents. The average price now stands at $16.75. Among those raising prices were Permian Corp., Pride Pipeline, Phillips Petroleum, Marathon, Sun Refining and Marketing, and Texaco.

Prices had been influenced the last several days by bullish sentiment surrounding OPEC's recent production accord.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, WTI settled 17 cents higher at $17.72 a barrel. On Friday, the contract closed 13 cents higher at $17.55 after a volatile week.

Dollar mixed, gold up overseas

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed in early European trading today but traders said the market appeared poised to test how high central banks are willing to let the currency rise. Gold prices rose.

Central banks in the United States, West Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Canada all reportedly intervened in the market on Monday to slow the dollar's climb.

"The intervention has run out of effect," said one trader in Rome. In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.39 yen to a closing 125.70. Later, in London, it was quoted at 125.93 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

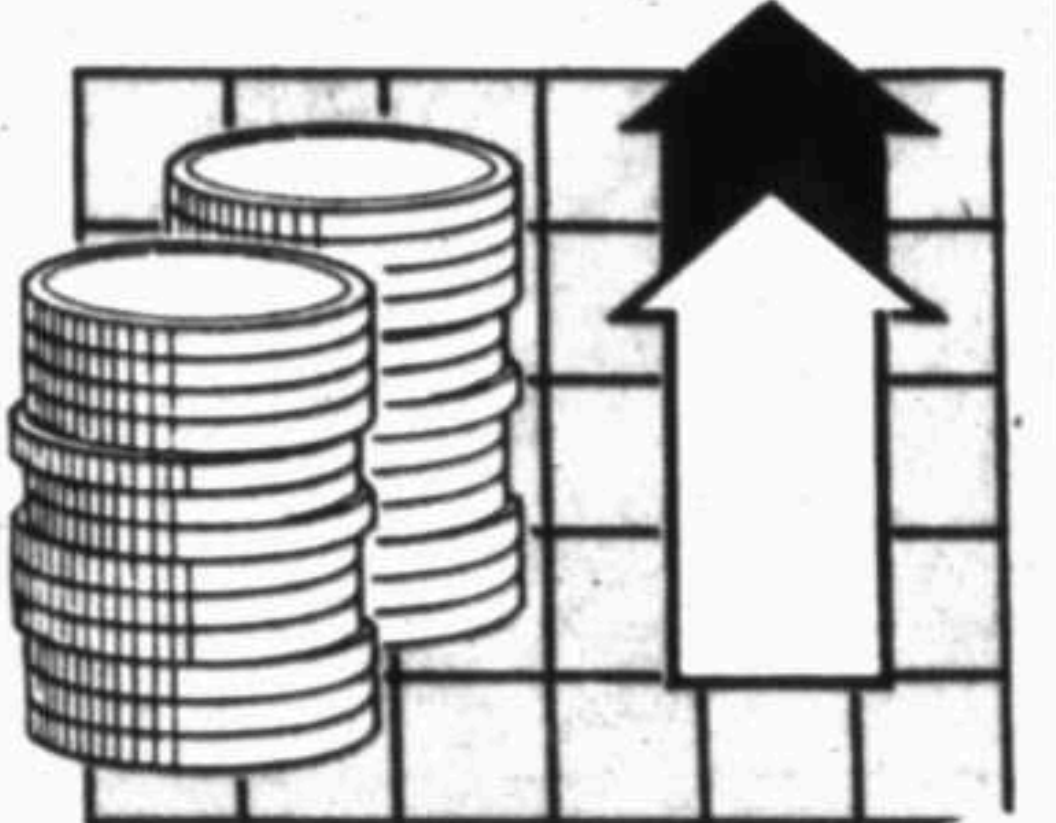

- 1.8253 West German marks, up from 1.8245
- 1.5580 Swiss francs, up from 1.5555
- 6.2190 French francs, down from 6.2300
- 2.0589 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0575
- 1.338.50 Italian lire, down from 1.339.75
- 1.1995 Canadian dollars, unchanged

In London, one British pound cost $1.7695, slightly more expensive for buyers than late Monday's $1.7650.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price for gold of $405.50 a troy ounce at midmorning today, unchanged from the opening bid but higher than $402.75 bid late Monday.

In Zurich, the bid price was $405.25, up from $402.75 bid late Monday. Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose 5 cents to close at a bid $407.23.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.96 a troy ounce, up from Monday's $5.94.

Stocks post fourth straight gain

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gained ground for the fourth straight session Monday, getting a little more mileage out of its early-1989 rally despite resistance from sellers.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 5.17 to 2,190.46, a new high since the 1987 crash. Over the past four sessions the average has climbed 54.82 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 880 up, 639 down and 469 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 163.18 million shares, up from 161.33 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 191.09 million shares.

The market has benefited in recent sessions from buying by money managers at investing institutions seeking to put some of their large cash reserves to work at the start of a new year.

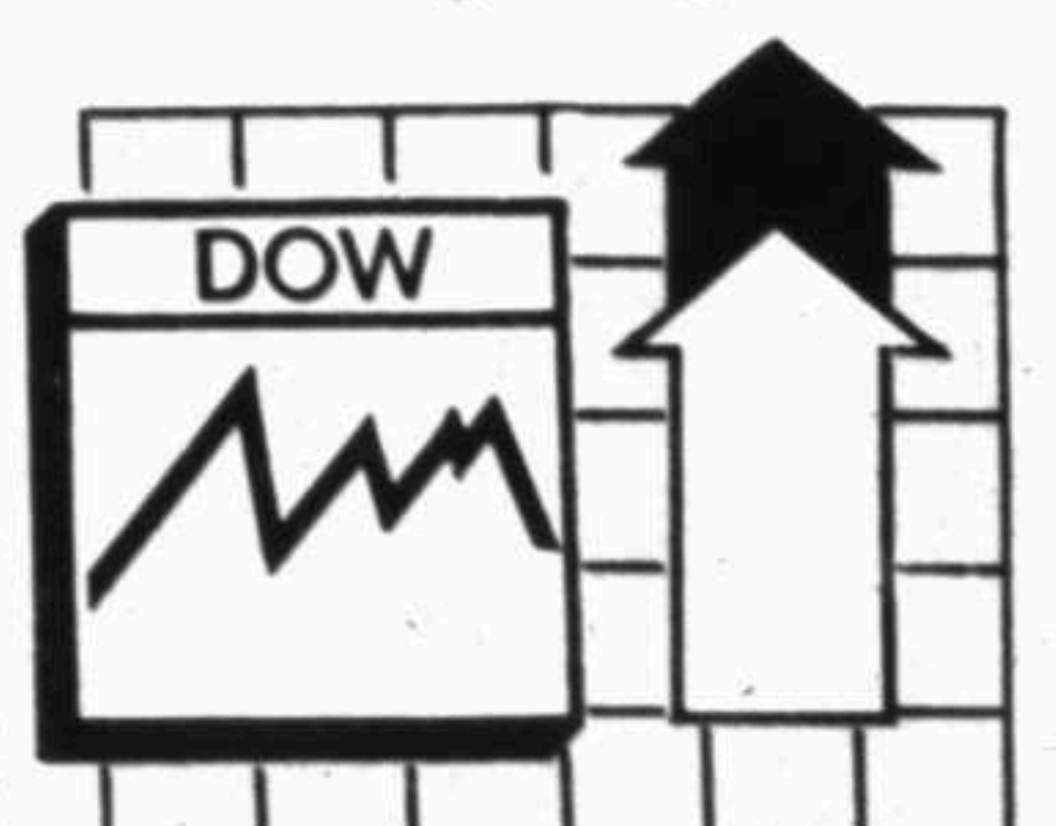

But analysts said traders were worried that the rally had encountered some large obstacles.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $3.93 billion, or 0.14 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .19 to 158.15.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose .11 to 325.04, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up .31 at 280.98.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market added .54 to 385.28. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 313.54, up 2.14.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Thrift crisis dumped in Bush's lap

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration dumped the savings and loan crisis into the lap of President-elect Bush, acknowledging for the first time it does not have enough money to bail out the troubled industry.

The administration, in its proposed budget for fiscal year 1990, outlined plans Monday to spend $64 billion from the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. from 1989 through 1994.

But the budget document acknowledged "these proposals will not resolve the entire problem" and said Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady is working on a plan, "including identifying additional funding sources for FSILIC," to be presented to Bush within 60 days.

Americans increased debt load in November

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans took out $4.5 billion more in consumer debt than they paid off in November as consumers increased their purchases for the holiday season, the government reports.

The Federal Reserve Board said Monday the increase followed a revised increase of $3.9 billion in October and a tiny $2 million rise in September.

Feds seek to block Westinghouse venture

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department says it will sue to block two proposed joint ventures between Westinghouse Electric Corp. and a Swiss company.

The ventures between Westinghouse and Asea Brown Boveri Inc. of Zurich, Switzerland, would involve the manufacture and sale of electric power generation, transmission and distribution products.

Monday's announcement came just two weeks after Attorney General Dick Thornburgh launched an effort to stem a "fear of an antitrust challenge."

Dismissal of suits against Dow upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a major victory for Dow Chemical Co., the Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling dismissing hundreds of personal injury lawsuits tied to the chemical giant's anti-nausea drug Bendectin.

The court, without comment, rejected on Monday an appeal by more than 800 families who filed a federal lawsuit against Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, the Cincinnati-based Dow unit that manufactures the drug.

TexCan spinoff fuels Brazilian speculation

By BARBARA SHOOK
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Texaco Canada's planned spinoff of its Brazilian properties and other small interests to shareholders is reinforcing the belief of many industry observers that Texaco has found a major oil deposit at the mouth of the Amazon River.

Speculation that the area contains oil and gas fields similar in size to those in the North Sea has been rampant since the discovery was disclosed last June. The president of Brazil, Jose Sarney, called the discovery "historic" at the time.

The Brazilian holdings are being combined with an exploration concession in the West African nation of Mauritania and with interests in some small Canadian oil and gas producing properties to form a new company, Texaco Canada

Petroleum Inc., or TexCan.

Stock in TexCan will be issued to shareholders of Texaco Canada as a special dividend. One share of TexCan will be issued for each share of Texaco Canada.

The carving out of these assets will allow Texaco, which owns 78 percent of Texaco Canada, to hold onto the Brazilian interests, even though it is selling the rest of its interest in Texaco Canada, said Rosario S. Ilacqua, international oil analyst with Nikko Securities in New York.

"The effort to retain the Brazilian properties makes me believe they have found something big there," Ilacqua said.

Jay Gallagher of PetroConsultants in Houston noted that Texaco Canada put a value of $92 million on the properties assigned to TexCan. "There can't be much value placed on the Mauritania concession, so that would indicate to me Texaco thinks it has a significant find in Brazil," he said.

Last summer, Texaco and Petrobras, the national oil company of Brazil, would confirm only that oil and natural gas were encountered in an exploratory well Texaco drilled on Marajo Island. Texaco Inc. and Texaco Canada each own 50 percent of a 21-million acre exploration contract with Petrobras covering Marajo Island and the surrounding area.

Two wells have been drilled to total depths of about 18,000 feet, and a third is in progress. Although Texaco says it still has not determined the magnitude of the discovery, the president of its Latin America and West Africa division described the area as having "world class" potential.

Black chamber seeks city backing

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

They are asking the Midland City Council for $50,000, but what members of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs say they really want is economic justice.

At Monday's monthly MBCE meeting, members discussed a proposal to be made before the City Council today seeking $50,000 to fund the chamber and several activities, including a Business Development Center, Young Chamber of Entrepreneurs and the Excel Youth program.

"The Midland Chamber of Commerce is funded by the city. The Hispanic chamber is funded by the city. Where does that money come from? From taxes," pointed out James Fuller, a chamber vice president. "We pay taxes, and we want our share of the pie."

The chamber is asking for funding of half its budget of $100,000; the remainder would come through donations from corporate members, membership fees and fund-raisers, according to Robbyne Fuller, president of the chamber.

The city is being asked to provide "seed money" to establish a business center, pay a director and purchase equipment such as a fax machine and photocopier. Members agreed that the chamber would not be able to grow until a director was hired to be available during the day and see to day-to-day operations.

The business center would offer seminars, training and support for businesses, function as a job clearinghouse, and resource center where minority businesses would be matched with corporations seeking to purchase goods and services from such vendors.

The group's proposal pointed out that there are over 200 minority and women-owned businesses in Midland, and that less than 10 percent of these businesses have received contracts from the City of Midland in the past 15 to 20 years. Because these businesses often lack effective marketing skills and access to information about potential contracts, the business center is needed, according to Mrs. Fuller.

Her husband noted that all three Midland chambers are attempting to perform an important function, which is assist the city in diversifying and strengthening its economy, which he said could only benefit all Midland residents.

Members also discussed plans for the upcoming Martin Luther King Jr. celebration, scheduled for this weekend. The festivities begin Friday night at the Northeast YMCA with a drama-in-the-round covering Dr. King's life in chronological order and a photographic exhibit of his life. There will also be "family fun" where family members can play table games, basketball or volleyball or swim.

Family-oriented activities will continue Saturday with a children's story hour, readings on the black family, exhibits on the community family, and another evening of family fun.

The King celebration will conclude Sunday with a 3 p.m. procession from the Federated Women's Club to Greater St. Luke A.M.E. Church.

It was also announced that "Celebration III," the third anniversary of the MBCE, has been rescheduled, tentatively to March 4.

Scrutiny of S&L rescues intensifies

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — With savings and loan rescues coming under greater Congressional scrutiny, the $18 billion of promissory notes issued by industry regulators to help sell off insolvent institutions have become a pawn in a fierce political debate.

Members of Congress are steaming over what they perceive as an agency gone on a wild spree to close sick savings institutions, spending billions of dollars it does not have.

The lawmakers are likely to create uncertainty about the legitimacy of the notes at least until they receive a full accounting from the agency of the many deals it struck with investors in the last weeks of 1988. Meanwhile, the accounting profession has raised questions about whether the Treasury is obligated to make good on the notes.

Last week at a House Banking Committee hearing on third world debt, Rep. Stan Parris, R-Va., wondered whether Congress should pass a bonding resolution that the notes issued by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's deposit insurance unit, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, do not have the full faith and credit of the Government.

While other members said they were sympathetic to Parris's sentiments, they expressed concern that such a proposal could create havoc in the markets, and possibly lead to a crisis of depositor confidence.

Midland chamber earns export center designation

From Staff Reports

The Midland Chamber of Commerce Department of Economic Development has been designated an Export Assistance Center by the Texas Department of Commerce.

Midland's program, begun last year by the Small Business Development division of the department, is now affiliated with the new statewide network of export assistance centers. State officials hope to expand the network to some 30 to 40 cities in 1989.

The affiliation with the state program will enhance the chamber's access to trade leads and information on foreign markets, according to Mike Strotheide, Small Business Development officer for the chamber.

"We believe exporting offers great opportunities for local firms to find new markets for their goods and services," he said. "The purpose of our program is to assist area businesses in determining their export potential and to help overcome some of the hurdles involved."

Strotheide said many entrepreneurs are reluctant to explore international markets due to the "red tape" involved. Through its affiliations with the state and U.S. commerce departments, the chamber can help entrepreneurs find the most efficient way to enter foreign markets, he added.

As a first step to determining readiness to export, he suggests entrepreneurs walk through an export readiness questionnaire, answering questions about their business, products, financing and other information. Answers are analyzed by a computer program which provides the business with a profile of its strengths and weaknesses in regard to its ability and readiness to export.

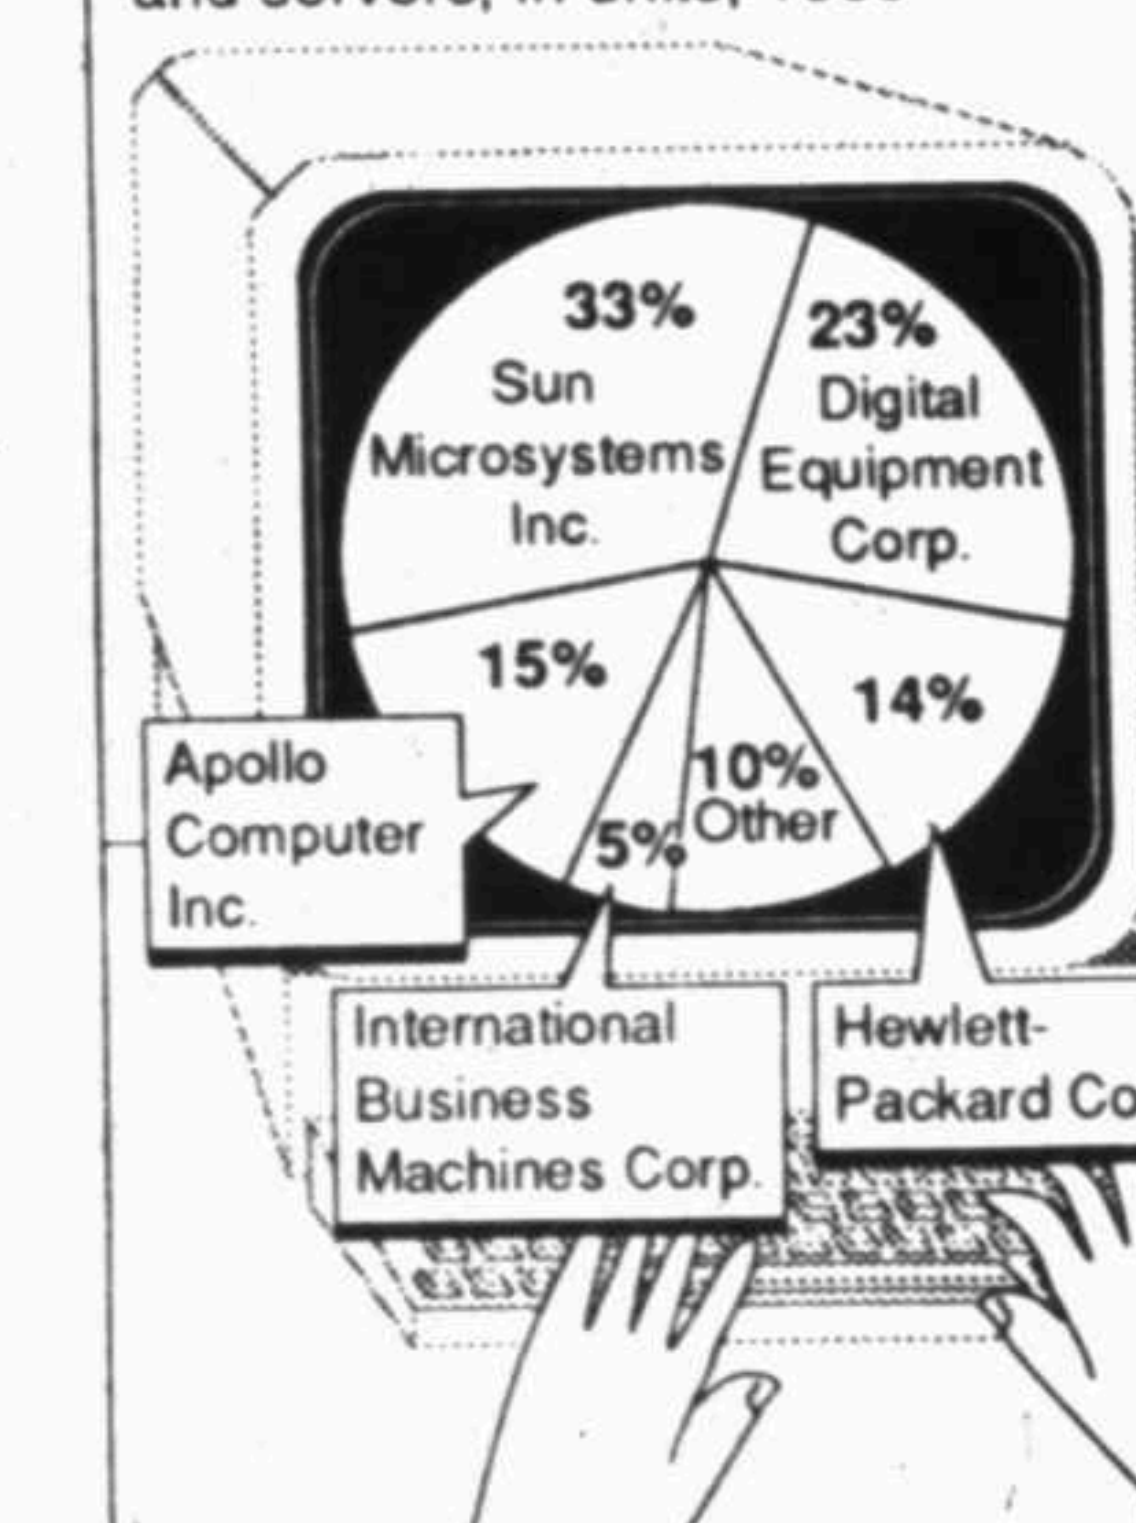

Once a business decides it's ready to export, the center can help with information on potential markets and specific trade leads.

Strotheide said that since the center began operating in September, the number of current and prospective exporters inquiring about foreign trade opportunities has grown. He expects increased local awareness will be created by Midland's foreign trade zone, expected to be approved this spring.

"Both the U.S. Customs port of entry — already in place — and the proposed Foreign Trade Zone will provide greater impetus for the development of export business locally. Through our new affiliations with the Texas Department of Commerce and as an associate office of the U.S. Department of Commerce, we are better prepared to help," Strotheide said.

H-P cuts price on cheapest workstation

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Hewlett-Packard Co. says it will cut prices, bring out a low-cost graphics computer and make it easy for customers of rival Digital Equipment Corp. to switch to H-P products.

The series of moves preceded by a day Digital's expected announcement of its first engineering workstation based on a technology H-P embraced several years ago.

At risk for the corporate giants is the market for computer workstations, fast-calculating wonders in the most rapidly growing sector in the computer industry. The $3.6 billion market is dominated by Sun Microsystems of Mountain View, whose sole business is workstations.

Workstation sales are expected to rocket to $11.4 billion this year, according to Dataquest Inc., a San Jose market research firm.

Analysts say Hewlett-Packard of Palo Alto and Digital of Maynard, Mass., are vulnerable because these desktop computers are rapidly becoming powerful enough to replace many of their more expensive refrigerator-sized minicomputers.

Digital's announcement of a workstation based on a computer architecture called reduced instruction set computing (RISC) has been expected for several months. Analysts said H-P's announcement was partly in response to it.

H-P introduced an entry-level workstation called the 340SRX and said that its $14,900 price tag made it the lowest-cost system capable of three-dimensional graphics, an important feature for engineers who need see vivid representations of projects on a computer screen.

Save storewide during Matlock Furniture's annual clearance

Matlock Furniture, Midland's oldest family owned furniture store, is celebrating the new year with a super January clearance.

Everything in the store, located at 805 South Big Spring, is marked down for this tremendous annual sale. You'll find a showroom of savings on sofas, recliners, dining room furnishings, wall units, accessories and more.

Beautiful Universal and Broyhill furniture would look great in your dining area. Choose from a large selection of wooden dining room sets and china cabinets by these fine manufacturers.

Matlock Furniture carries metal, glass and brass dinettes by Shelby and Imperial. You can find a big group of styles for your home, including contemporary and country, in oak, ash and cherry. Trellis, split pedestal and leg models are available.

Save today on five piece sectional closeouts, starting at $1499. The Benchcraft collections include two full recliners, a wedge, an armless chair and a sleeper sofa.

Matlock Furniture was opened 47 years ago by Mr. and Mrs. T.M. Matlock, and they and their family continue to serve the needs of Midland furniture buyers. Donny Rains, John Bob Hopkins and Ann Matlock Hopkins are also ready to assist you with selecting new furniture during this special clearance sale.

A huge selection of closeouts on sleeper sofas in full, twin and queen sizes awaits you at Matlock Furniture. These sofas are upholstered in contemporary, traditional and Southwestern style fabrics in a variety of colors.

Glider rockers, just perfect for a child's nursery, are also available at a savings of $40.

Matlock Furniture also carries a variety of entertainment centers and wall units. Choose from such styles as contemporary and country. Many come with a rolling video tape library and are great for maintaining your stereo, TV, VCR and accessories.

Just in time for the clearance sale is a new shipment of lamps to help accessorize your home. Choose from many popular decorating ideas, such as Southwestern and country style lamps in mauve, peach, blue and beige and many others.

A large selection of mirrors by Bassett are reduced by 25 percent for the sale.

A factory dealer for Sealy, and Sterns and Foster, Matlock Furniture carries eight different styles of bedding. Also, a big grouping of Broyhill bedroom furniture is priced for quick sale.

Matlock Furniture also has a wonderful selection of daybeds and trundle beds that come in a variety of styles, including wood, bamboo, wicker and wrought iron.

Visa, MasterCard, Discover and bank rate financing are available, in addition to layaway. Stop by 805 South Big Spring Monday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., and enjoy the fine selection of name brand home furnishings.

Lewellen Construction adds seamless gutter machine for greater service

Add to the value and beauty of your home with seamless gutters installed by the experts at Lewellen Construction. "We have just purchased a seamless gutter machine, and we can fabricate our own gutters at the job site," said owner Bill Lewellen.

Actually, if you see a newly painted tan Lewellen Construction truck about town, inside is the new machine, which constructs any length of gutter needed.

With the outstanding advantages of eliminating leaking joints, a wide variety of colors and extra enhancement to your home or office building, it makes good sense to purchase a seamless gutter system.

"We can run any length in one continuous piece," Lewellen explained. Choose from aluminum or vinyl clad steel seamless gutters. In stock colors include rafia beige, autumn brown, desert sand and white. Stock colors are priced at $3.00 per foot, with a $100 minimum purchase. Down spouts are an additional $2.50 per foot. Prices on stock colors include installation.

To see what it would cost to improve your home, just measure the area needing gutters and downspouts and give Lewellen Construction a call.

Also available on special order in aluminum or vinyl clad steel are colors to match all non-stock Lewellen Construction siding colors. An additional set up fee will be charged for these special orders.

"We are happy to sell custom lengths for builders, installers and do it yourselfers," Lewellen added. Just call 686-8007 for a price list on accessories.

Lewellen also added that his new truck stops on demand for you. In other words, if you want an estimate or need some gutter work to be done at that moment, flag down the truck. The driver will be happy to stop and answer any questions you may have on seamless gutters.

"As with all of our work, we stand behind our seamless gutters with a 100 percent guarantee. Our customers must be satisfied," said Lewellen. Lewellen Construction is happy to do out of town jobs—an extra charge of just $1.00 per mile one way is added.

Whether or not you need gutters, don't forget Lewellen Construction for quality work at a fair price on storm windows, steel siding, roofing, soffit, fascia and carport covers. It's not too soon to shape up your house for spring with Lewellen Construction, your one-stop home improvement shop.

For more information or a free estimate, call Bill and Joan Lewellen at 686-8007 or 563-4520.

★ JOBS ★ U.S. POSTAL SERVICE

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT: MIDLAND AND ALL AREA POST OFFICES HAVE JUST RECEIVED AUTHORIZATION TO ACCEPT APPLICATIONS FOR THE CLERK-CARRIER EXAM IN FEBRUARY.

A recent issue of Newsweek magazine noted that the average Postal Worker earns $17,500 in salary and benefits. Men and women, regardless of age or experience are eligible to apply. Courses to help you prepare for the above exams will be offered by Postal Exam Workshops. Instructors Harve Anderson and Bill Harrell are considered to be the most qualified in how to best prepare for the Postal Exam. These exams do not test general knowledge. Proper preparation is the key to getting hired, because people are hired for these positions based on their exam score. The easy-to-learn techniques taught in these courses were designed by Mr. Harrell. He is a former Postal employee, the author of three postal exam guides, and has repeatedly scored 95% on Postal tests.

3 HOUR WORKSHOP: SCORE 95-100%

GUARANTEE: The time-saving and accuracy-increasing methods taught in this course are so powerful that we will enter into a written agreement. "If you will score 95% or higher on your money will be refunded."

WORKSHOP TYPING is 50% and includes the guaranteed workshop, workbook, interview hints, study guide with 25 accurate take-home exams, follow-up consultation privileges with free telephone phone number, home study program kit, personal notification of future application dates, and more...WANT TO RELOCATE? We offer the Postal Alert Bulletin giving you postal exam dates nationwide. You are invited to bring your tape recorder to record the workshop for personal review.

Purchase offers requiring VA vendor financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-67058, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705. Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendor financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter at 17-88 dated May 25, 1988 outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT
 Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-67058, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be refunded to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705. Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to
