Gramm: Tax bill to address sales tax, IRAs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress returns today from a two-week July 4th recess to resume work on sweeping tax-revision legislation that members and Reagan administration officials expect to be sweetened for middle-income Americans.

The first step in the process, which lawmakers hope to complete by Labor Day, will be the appointment of House and Senate negotiators to resolve the differences in the tax bills passed by both chambers.

On Sunday, Rep. Richard Gephart, D-Mo., and Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, predicted that once the conferees are selected and begin meeting, they will quickly produce a compromise to effect the most sweeping income tax code changes in decades.

Both also said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" that they thought the final product will address two issues attracting attention among middle-income taxpayers: the deductibility of sales taxes and contributions to individual retirement accounts.

The Senate tax-revision plan eliminates these popular writeoffs. The House bill retains them, but it calls for higher overall tax rates on individuals and a bigger bite on corporations.

The chief House negotiator, Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., says he will be pushing for more relief for middle-income people and be trying to keep the rich from "getting the lion's share."

Top Reagan administration officials such as Donald T. Regan, the White House chief of staff, said last week the administration is prepared to give ground on sales tax and IRA deductions to save the Senate's lower overall rates.

And Treasury Secretary James Baker, also appearing Sunday on ABC-TV, said there is room for trading in the House-Senate negotiations, but he cautioned against taking too much away from business to help taxpayers in the middle.

"Our position is, we would be willing to give on IRAs...in order to preserve these low rates because on balance the low rates are more important than those other things," Baker said.

"What we don't want to do is fall into this trap...of playing to the audience to such a degree that we further impair economic growth in this country," he said. "There's going to be a great temptation to take more money out of (business) depreciation, for instance, and put it into greater benefits for the middle class, and we ought to be very careful about that, particularly with the state of our economy."

In other major business facing Congress, the Senate is still embroiled in controversy over judicial nominee Daniel Manion, whose confirmation is in a strange parliamentary limbo.

Manion was tentatively confirmed to a seat on the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on a 48-46 vote last month. But a series of vote switches and parliamentary maneuvers left the situation in doubt. Democrats, arguing that Manion is unqualified, will be pushing for another vote on the conservative attorney.

Pole painter climbing in her career

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Secured by nothing but a rope stirrup around her waist, former Midlander Jan Mitchell descends slowly down the tall, narrow pole until she plants both feet firmly on the ground.

"Another day, another dollar," said the middle-aged Fredricksburg resident.

Actually, it takes only about an hour or two to complete a job, but Ms. Mitchell said each is a full day's work because of the risks involved in the nature of her trade — flagpole painting.

"It's very dangerous work," said Ms. Mitchell, who has been climbing up and down flagpoles and flood lights with bucket and brush in hand for more than a decade.

The dangers are so great, in fact, Ms. Mitchell said she knows of only two others in the profession.

"I haven't seen any other women and I've seen only two other men since I started 12 years ago," she said.

The flagpoles Ms. Mitchell paints are "real slim."

"Those are the most dangerous," she said.

Still, it's a profitable business "when the wind doesn't blow and you don't have to sit around for a month and wait for it to stop."

Ms. Mitchell said she began painting flagpoles to supplement her income. She also teaches karate.

"I was working with a guy who painted and I was the ground man," she said. "After awhile, I got tired of waiting on the ground so I started climbing."

The tallest pole she has painted was 90 feet.

"That one took two hours," she said. "Another at Village Lincoln Mecury took an hour-and-a-half."

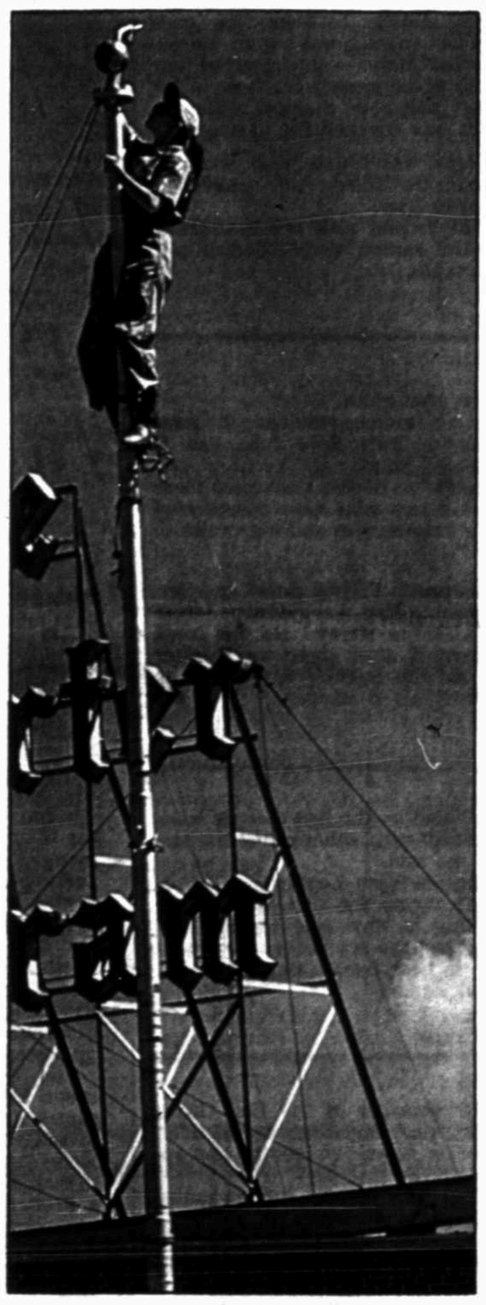

Working out of Fredricksburg, Ms. Mitchell's job takes her across the state, but she said she prefers to concentrate her work between Central and West Texas.

Last year she painted Midland Christian School's flagpole and now is working on flood lights at several of the city's parks.

Angel Stadium and the school district's 30 flagpoles are next on her list.

She wraps the stirrup around her waist, hangs on tightly with both hands and places her foot against the pole as she prepares for another 60-foot climb.

"It's pretty scary at first, but once I get up there I feel pretty much at home," she said.

Legislators urged to help fight campus drug abuse

FORT WORTH (AP) — The U.S. secretary of education today urged legislators from 15 southern states to give college presidents all the help they need to fight drug abuse on campus.

"Parents expect colleges to be positively and publicly and actively against illegal drug use. They do not expect colleges to be neutral when it comes to this issue," said Education Secretary William Bennett.

Bennett told the 40th annual meeting of the Southern Legislative Conference that support they give colleges in fighting drug abuse would be rewarded.

"If you will let your college presidents know you are behind them on this, I think you'll see some results," he said.

Bennett said that while drug use among young people nationally is "unacceptably high," research indicates that abuse is lower in the South. Nonetheless, it remains a serious problem in southern states, he said.

"There is no excuse for this," he said. "Let us give those in charge of colleges and universities a signal: whatever is necessary for you to do, do it now. We are behind you."

Bennett was the meeting's first speaker. U.S. House Majority Leader Jim Wright was scheduled to address the group later today.

Although it's not on the agenda until Wednesday, the legislators and others will be talking about the planned southern presidential primary. The super primary would have all southern states hold primary elections the week of March 8.

Such a regional election, done early, means every presidential hopeful would be forced to pay heed to the South and its interests, the idea's backers insist.

If that happens, Iowa and New Hampshire still would hold the first presidential nominating contests in 1988, but the South would put more national convention delegates up for grabs at one time than any single state, boosters say.

"The arrogance of voters in New Hampshire has gotten to be of rather astounding proportions for people who represent nothing but rocks," Texas Democratic Party chairman Bob Slagle said recently.

"I want (presidential candidates) to come down here and talk about things we care about," Slagle said.

The Southern Legislative Conference, which this year is chaired by Texas state Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin, endorsed the regional primary concept last year. Conference spokeswoman Mary Jane Gallagher said last week that 11 states so far have scheduled their primaries for the week of March 8.

U.S. installs monitoring device at Soviet's nuclear test site

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. scientists have installed the first Western monitoring stations at a Soviet nuclear test site, but say they have no assurance of being able to record any blasts once a unilateral Soviet freeze on testing expires next month.

Thomas Cochran from the Washington-based Natural Resource Defense Council said Sunday his group last week positioned about a dozen seismic devices around the Soviet Union's primary underground test site in the rugged hill country of remote Kazakhstan.

The non-profit council and the Soviet Academy of Sciences agreed May 28 to set up three monitoring stations near the Soviet site and at least one near the main U.S. nuclear test site in Nevada. The U.S. government has not objected to the idea.

Cochran said U.S. scientists have no assurance from the Soviets that they will be allowed to monitor any test explosions from the three stations once Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing expires on Aug. 6.

The Natural Resource Defense Council has said the aim of the project is not to monitor nuclear tests, but to calibrate seismic instruments by keeping a watch on seismic conditions in the area.

"We will certainly be allowed to stay there after Aug. 6," Cochran said. "We'll have to see if we'll be allowed to record their tests or not.

"Either way, we'd know that a test occurred. What would be lost if we're not allowed to monitor a test would be additional interesting technical information that could be useful in further calibrating the site," Cochran said.

Both the Defense Council and the Soviets say the experiment should prove that a moratorium on nuclear testing can be verified by on-site monitoring equipment.

The United States has cited difficulties in verification as the prime reason for not heeding the Soviet call to join in the nuclear test ban.

Philippine soldiers hunting for kidnapped nuns, missionary

Lawrence

ZAMBOANGA, Philippines (AP) — Soldiers searched a southern Philippine island today for an U.S. missionary and 10 Filipino nuns kidnapped by armed Moslem bands, but reported no contact with the missing or their abductors, an army official said.

Brig. Gen. Pedro Balbanero, deputy chief of the army's Southern Command, said officials also appealed to residents of Marawi, considered the capital of the Philippines' 5 million Moslems, for assistance in finding the 11 people kidnapped in separate incidents on Mindanao island.

The American missionary, Brian Lawrence, 30, of Madison, Wis., was abducted from his dormitory room at Mindanao State University in Marawi Saturday night.

Carol Ann Lawrence, the Protestant missionary's wife, was able to hide in a cabinet in the room before the kidnappers, about 20 heavily armed men, entered and dragged her husband away, Balbanero said.

On Friday, the Roman Catholic nuns, members of the Carmelite order, were abducted from their hilltop convent about two miles from the university, Balbanero said.

Witnesses said they saw armed men lead the nuns — the mother superior, six nuns and three novices — from their convent and take them away on two motorboats.

Balbanero, who is based in Zamboanga, 170 miles northwest of Marawi, told reporters the military has sent out five small teams of soldiers to hunt for the kidnappers and their victims. One army battalion is on standby, he said.

In addition, the governor of Lana del Sur province has asked the province's 37 mayors and their police chiefs to join the search, Balbanero said.

"So far, no contact has been made with the kidnappers and no ransom demand has been received," Balbanero said.

No group has claimed responsibility for the kidnappings, which Balbanero said appeared aimed at embarrassing the 4½-month-old government of President Corazon Aquino.

Alan Croghan, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy, said the embassy was in touch with local authorities and was considering whether to send an American representative to Marawi, 510 miles south of Manila, the capital.

Lawrence is the eighth foreigner and third American to be kidnapped in the southern Philippines in the past eight years. The military has blamed most of the kidnappings on Moslem rebels fighting for self-rule.

Balbanero said the military was looking into reports that Lawrence was abducted by former members of a group called the Barracudas, which was formed by a group of Moslem politicians in the late 1960s to fight off Christian settlers.

Balbanero said he was not sure of Mrs. Lawrence's whereabouts today. He said she might have left Marawi for nearby Iligan, a predominantly Christian city.

Lawrence's parents, Carl and Muriel, said Sunday in Madison that their daughter-in-law was staying with friends, but did not say where.

White to address local forum on bringing business to Texas

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Gov. Mark White will be attending a "strategy session" next week at Mission Country Club, officials said today.

White and other government officials will detail how state agencies can help the needs of sagging businesses in small towns July 21, Chuck Bernhard, director of Economic Development for the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce said.

The Odessa chamber will host the event, Bernhard said.

Bernhard said White realizes the need for diversification of local economies and wants to help the future of West Texas.

"Gov. White's economic development program grew out of an early recognition that the state can no longer rely solely on a small appropriation from the Texas Industrial Commission," Bernhard said.

The industrial commission, Bernhard said, traditionally has been the primary state agency in charge of "hustling new business" for Texas.

Man found dead identified as former MISD bus driver

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A man who was found dead in a northeast Midland field was a former school bus driver, officials said today.

The body of Perry Raymond Guthrie, 29, was found Friday by passers-by.

Guthrie's name was released today by police.

Midland police Detective Sgt. B.D. Johnson said fingerprints were used to identify Guthrie, who lived in Midland.

The identification was made Saturday, but police did not release the name until the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Guthrie, could be notified.

Johnson said Guthrie's parents, now living in Oklahoma, were notified of the death Sunday by a family friend.

Guthrie was employed several years ago by the Midland Independent School District as a bus driver, said Wes Washam, MISD director of transportation.

Johnson said Guthrie, who lived at the Elm Grove Trailer Park on North Fairgrounds Road, was not working at the time of his death.

Egyptians losing their jobs in oil-exporting countries

By NEJLA SAMMAKIA

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Financial difficulties pummeling Arab oil producers is causing a recession in Egypt's main export product — Egyptians.

At least a quarter of Egypt's expatriate work force of 2.2 million is coming home from the oil-exporting Arab states, and a spirited debate has blossomed on what it will mean to the country.

Some experts see it as a blessing to the Egyptian economy but others are concerned that the economy will be hurt by the loss of the billions of dollars the workers sent home over the years.

High salaries abroad have lured tens of thousands of Egyptian teachers away, with the result that Egypt's student to teacher ratio has risen by about 40 percent in recent years. That should decrease as many teachers return.

"If well managed, returning workers and professionals will do this country a great service," said Hamdi Saleh, a U.S.-educated political scientist.

Saleh cited his job as symptomatic of the brain-drain: "I'm a political scientist, but now I'm teaching economics. We simply do not have enough economists."

Egyptians began leaving to work in the Arab oil states of the Persian Gulf as early as the 1960s. Their numbers peaked in the early 1980s. Then, as oil prices fell in the past year or so, many of the Arab states found it wiser to replace foreign laborers and professionals with their own people, or to lower the salaries of foreigners kept on.

As a result, many Egyptians who have come home for summer vacations will not be going back abroad.

At Cairo International Airport early this summer, the normally chaotic return of teachers for the vacation period took place with little of the fanfare than usual. Luggage carts were less full of the color TV sets and other luxury goods that the teachers brought home on previous vacations, largely because they had lost their jobs or because the salaries now are smaller.

"We felt things were getting poorer there," said a woman just back from Saudi Arabia with her husband, a high school teacher, and their three children.

"They haven't paid my husband's salary for three months now. He and many others have had to borrow money from Saudis, who would then cash in his delayed salary."

An airport customs officer said the average income from duties was lower this year than last year at the same time, despite recently increased rates, mainly because people are bringing back less merchandise.

Such shortfalls are but minor irritants, however, compared with anticipated huge drops in foreign exchange sent home by Egyptians working abroad.

The economic magazine Ahram Iqtissadi reported that expatriates have earned an average of $10 billion a year in the 1980s, sending home $5 billion through official and unofficial channels. About $2 billion of that came officially, through public sector and joint venture banks, the government's largest source of foreign exchange.

Official remittances peaked at $3.9 billion in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1983, and Ahram Iqtissadi said they will be down to no more than $2 billion in the fiscal year just ended.

The decline will continue with the projected return of at least 400,000 more expatriate workers this year.

Some experts also are predicting widespread dissatisfaction among the returnees as they find life at home far less glamorous than they are accustomed to abroad. They are returning to a country with a per capita annual income of $600 compared with, for instance, $20,600 in Qatar, according to figures published before the current oil glut.

More than a million foreign laborers are believed to have left the Persian Gulf states in the past 18 months, especially construction workers. Saudi Arabia has said 600,000 foreign workers will leave by 1990.

Abdel-Kader el-Assar, a Labor Ministry official, dismissed the significance of the expatriates' return.

"There are still many Egyptians leaving for the Arab countries," he said. "They are laying off mainly Asian workers."

But he added in an interview that Egypt has plenty of openings for agricultural workers and industrial technicians.

Since the labor exodus began, Egypt has been especially hurt by a lack of skilled workers for construction and repair work. The few plumbers, carpenters and agricultral workers remaining have flourished, raising prices for their services far higher than before.

While skilled workers may be absorbed quickly into the work force at relatively high pay, returning physicians may have to contend with a meager $300 a month.

With Egyptian medical schools turning out about 4,000 graduates a year, physicians are less needed than plumbers and carpenters.

Man injured by stacks of books toppled by quake

OCEANSIDE, Calif. (AP) — An avalanche of books buried and critically injured an elderly man and 14 others were injured when Southern California was jarred by the second big earthquake to rumble through the region in six days.

Residents along a 150-mile stretch of coast from San Diego to Oxnard swept up and assessed damage today.

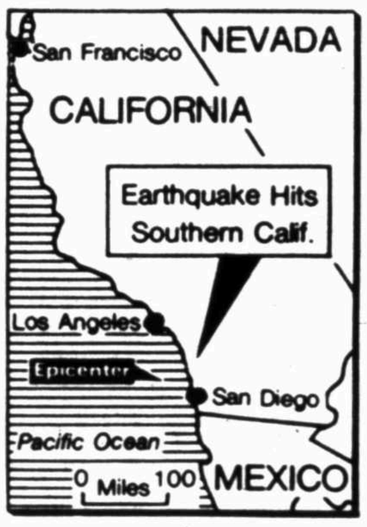

"The way my bed was shaking it was like something out of 'The Exorcist,'" said Lorraine Jimenez, a cashier at an Oceanside market.

The man buried under the books, Anthony P. Cima, 86, who lived in a downtown San Diego hotel, was rescued by firefighters from beneath thousands of books that had been stacked floor to ceiling in his room.

He was in critical condition at University of California-San Diego Medical Center.

Meanwhile, a woman in the San Diego subub of Chula Vista died of a heart attack that was thought to have occurred during the quake, officials said.

The quake, 5.3 on the Richter scale, was recorded at 6:46 a.m. Sunday. It was centered 28 miles southwest of Oceanside in the Pacific Ocean. Oceanside is 75 miles southeast of Los Angeles, but it was felt in Yuma, Ariz., 160 miles east of San Diego.

AP Laserphoto Map

The temblor emptied shelves at several grocery stores, ripped an ornamental lion from a San Diego hotel and sent it crashing into a parked car, and damaged a terminal at Lindbergh Field, San Diego's airport, where hairline cracks were reported in walls. The runways, however, suffered no damage and service continued uninterrupted.

Authorities estimated non-structural damages at $500,000, San Diego County Disaster Preparedness officer Lois Clark McCoy said Sunday.

"We have no reports of structural damage as yet, but we anticipate that that will change when people go to their workplaces (today)," she said.

The earthquake was the largest recorded quake in modern history in the immediate area offshore from the San Diego metropolitan area, said Jackie Parker, spokeswoman for the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla. She said the previous record in that area was magnitude 4.3 on July 7, 1984.

No damage was reported in Los Angeles, but fire companies were put on an earthquake alert for an hour. Engine companies left their firehouses and parked equipment outside, away from tall buildings and walls.

Last Tuesday a quake 12 miles northwest of Palm Springs measured 5.9 on the Richter scale. It caused an estimated $5.75 million damage and injured 40 people. Numerous aftershocks, some measuring as high as 4.0 on the Richter scale, have jostled the area since then.

California Institute of Technology spokesman Dennis Meredith said the Oceanside quake was unrelated to the Palm Springs quake since they took place on different faults. The timing of the Oceanside temblor, he said, was coincidental.

The San Onofre nuclear power plant, midway between San Diego and Los Angeles, was put on "unusual event" status — the lowest of four levels of emergency response — for about one hour Sunday while the plant was checked for damage.

None was found, said Southern California Edison Co. spokesman Charles Beal.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs.

KIDNAP

Asked about the kidnapping, Carl Lawrence said: "We don't yet know why he was taken or who the group was, although we've been told they may be holding him some place near Marawi."

Brian Lawrence first visited the Philippines in 1983 and there met his future wife, Carol Ann Booze, of Livitz, Pa., a school teacher. They were married in the Philippines in 1984.

In 1985, they moved to Marawi to study the language and plan their missionary work. Lawrence's parents described his religious beliefs as "orthodox Presbyterian."

The Rev. Michael Fitzgerald, head of the Carmelite order in the Philippines, said the nuns had been cloistered for six years in the convent, spending their lives in prayer and venturing outside only in extreme necessity, such as illness.

He said the kidnappers allowed the nuns to bring along their guitar.

Balbanero said initial leads indicated the nuns were kidnapped by the "Lost Command" faction of the rebel Moro National Liberation Front, spearhead of the Moslem separatist rebellion in the southern Mindanao region.

He said the faction is composed of former guerrillas who have turned to banditry.

The nuns chose to live in Marawi in hopes their prayers would improve Moslem-Christian relations, said Fitzgerald. He said the nuns had a good relationship with local Moslems, making the kidnapping "even more mysterious."

At his summer residence in Castel Gandolfo, Italy, Pope John Paul II appealed Sunday to the nuns' kidnappers "to release unharmed these good sisters who have consecrated their existence to adoring praise to God."

In June, a French priest, the Rev. Michael Gigord, was kidnapped from his office in Marawi. He was freed unharmed after three weeks after he and the military agreed not to identify his kidnappers.

Texas, the largest state in the South, hasn't yet done so. Lawmakers say a plan that would shift the state's presidential selection from May to March will be introduced when the Legislature convenes in January for the 1987 session.

Texas Republicans oppose the idea. GOP Chairman George Strake said voters already are overwhelmed by the number of elections — primary, general, local — held each year.

"The more elections there are, the less turnout there seems to be," Srake said.

He also said Texas — the nation's third-largest state — is big enough to command the attention of presidential candidates without joining the rest of the South.

"Texas is of such a size that its very size alone will demand national media attention and national election candidates. Our weight would be diluted by the fact that we were included with other southern states," he said.

The Southern Legislative Conference's theme for this 40th annual meeting is "investing in the Sunbelt," and the lawmakers are scheduled to hear from a number of national leaders.

WHITE

Bernhard said White will bring representatives from the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, the Texas Water Development Board and the Texas Department of Community Affairs.

Agency representatives will suggest new ideas on bringing new business and industry to Texas.

"The forum is aimed at finding ways to give small cities and towns the economic tools to attract new business and industry," Bernhard said.

"White wants to show that the state of Texas is actively involved and a supportive partner in economic development at the local level," he said.

White is planning to unveil a new $250,000, 15-minute film, "Texas — Open for Business," which will be distributed to Midland and Odessa businesses for use as a marketing tool.

Some 200 people, what Bernhard described as "VIPs", will be invited to the event.

Guthrie's body was found in a field east of Fairgrounds Road about 10 a.m. Friday by two girls on horseback.

Police searched the area, recovered a small pocket knife and said there were "possible" signs of a struggle.

Johnson said Guthrie's death was being investigated as a murder, but added he could not comment on the cause of death until a final autopsy report, not expected for at least two weeks, is in.

The manager of the Elm Grove Trailer park said Guthrie had lived there for about two months, and apparently lived alone.

His father, Charles, was an industrial arts and swimming coach at Midland Lee High School, school officials said.

The elder Guthrie was hired by the district in July 1982, and took a medical leave after the 1984-85 school year.

Before that he worked for the Ysleta Independent School District in El Paso, when the family moved to Midland.

NUCLEAR

The Soviet test site is about 1,800 miles southeast of Moscow near the Kazakhstan city of Semipalatinsk, in rugged grassland marked by small hills and gulleys.

The installation of the seismic equipment marks the first time Western scientists have been allowed near the Soviet site or permitted to set up a monitoring station on Soviet territory.

Council chairman Adrian DeWind, in Moscow for a conference, said Sunday the Soviet government gave its official blessing to the project and that the State Department "has told us visas will be issued for the Soviet scientists to come to the United States."

Cochran said teams of seismologists and geologists from the University of California at San Diego brought in seismometers from the United States and installed them at three locations around the Soviet testing site in Kazakhstan.

The seismic stations are aboveground, he said, making them susceptible to interference from wind and movement of nearby trees.

The U.S. scientists plan to import more sensitive equipment to be installed in 300-foot-deep holes to reduce interference, Cochran said.

The scientists will calibrate the instruments to take into account local geological conditions and will measure earthquakes and other ground motion, Cochran said.

"Under a comprehensive test ban, one would want to set up perhaps 25 stations in the Soviet Union and similarly in the United States to monitor the entire country," Cochran said.

"We are not setting up that network. This is a demonstration project to show that you can set up a station in the Soviet Union, and we've chosen the most sensitive area right up against the nuclear test site," he said.

Divers recall what it was like finding NASA flight suit

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A lone NASA flight suit, floating eerily 87 feet below the ocean's surface, was the marker that told two Cocoa Beach divers they had found space shuttle Challengers crew cabin, the divers say.

Mike McAllister and Terry Bailey, divers for Petchem Inc., an Air Force contractor, recall picking their way through a mass of mangled metal when the spacesuit appeared out of the heap of rubble.

The spacesuit "was in the pile and it was pinned down underneath some debris," McAllister said in interview with the newspaper Florida Today. "It was full of air and the legs were floating up toward the surface."

The divers plunged into the ocean Feb. 7, a week after the shuttle's explosion on Jan. 28, to investigate a sonar contact at the discovery site. Two earlier dives to search for the crew cabin and a $100 million satellite were unsuccessful.

With the exception of the suit, the divers had found nothing easily identifiable that would indicate they were near the crew cabin.

"It was just like a bomb had gone off in an airplane or something," McAllister said in the interview, published in Sunday's editions.

McAllister, who worked in the shuttle program for four years, knew flight suits were not worn by the seven Challenger astronauts during launch but were stored in the crew cabin's middeck for use in orbit.

With six minutes left on their oxygen, McAllister and Bailey marked the location of their find with a buoy and returned to their ship, the LCU, about 18 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral.

The rest of the task of recovering the cabin parts and the astronauts' remains was turned over to the U.S. Navy divers aboard the USS Preserver.

Petchem divers also were responsible for raising a portion of Challenger's left fuselage, its American flag emblem intact, and an aft fuselage.

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the Judiciary Committee, threatened to hold up Senate confirmation of President Reagan's Supreme Court nominees, William Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia.

The Senate also faces a choice over whether to continue televising its floor proceedings. Unless it votes to keep the cameras rolling, the Senate will pull the plug Wednesday on television coverage until it debates the issue further later this month.

Before the recess, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., proposed a resolution to continue televised proceedings under the experiment that began last month. But Sen. Russell Long, D-La., objected, saying cameras should be turned off as part of the original agreement to experiment with live coverage.

Under that arrangement, the cameras would be turned off for two weeks until a July 29 debate on whether to extend coverage permanently, continue the experiment for a while or ban the cameras altogether.

Thousands of blacks stay away from school

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Thousands of black students in some townships stayed away from school today while other areas reported normal attendance as the nation's 7,000 black schools reopened under tough security rules.

Meanwhile, black trade unions staged a national "Day of Action" that leaders said would include work slowdowns and sit-down strikes to protest the detention of union leaders under the state of emergency imposed June 12.

In Durban, the Metal and Allied Workers Union argued in Natal Supreme Court today that the emergency decree was invalid.

The complaint contended that President P.W. Botha had failed to formally notify Parliament of the declaration, and that a ban on making "subversive statements" was void because it was too vague to be enforceable.

As black schools reopened for the new term, a share of the 1.7 million students, especially in major cities, stayed home in a renewal of the protests that have disrupted black education for two years.

Most high schools in Soweto, Johannesburg's black township, and in the Alexandra ghetto were nearly deserted, residents said.

Boycotts also were reported in the Vaal region south of Johannesburg and in the East Rand, the industrial district east of the city.

Some schools in Pretoria's townships had a normal turnout while others had only slight attendance, reporters said.

The government said official attendance figures would not be available until late in the day.

On Sunday, Botha issued rules requiring all black students to reapply for admission today and empowering school officials to refuse to admit students without giving reasons.

White students, who follow a different school calendar, were not subject to the new regulations.

The government said the emergency orders were meant to assist the Department of Education and Training in restoring order at the nation's black schools.

Blacks have accused the government of deliberately setting up an inferior education system for them.

The reopening of the black schools after a midyear break had been delayed for two weeks while the education department completed its new security plan. It involves identity cards for teachers and pupils, fencing on school grounds and the possibility of security forces on campuses.

Some Soweto youths told reporters they planned to boycott school for the entire week to protest the emergency and the new security rules, including identity cards for pupils.

Some residents of Soweto said Sunday that "comrades," the gangs of young radicals that control many black neighborhoods, had proclaimed that no one was to go to school today, but that students could attend later in the week.

One Soweto principal said he doubted there would be any attendance at his school because of tension in the community.

Lawmakers' foreign trips cost $4.76 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than half the members of Congress took overseas trips in 1985 as lawmakers and their aides criss-crossed the globe at a cost to taxpayers of at least $4.76 million.

Three out of every five representatives made at least one foreign trip as the House ran up a travel bill of more than $4.08 million — almost six times greater than the $681,232 or more spent by the Senate.

The House has 435 members and five non-voting delegates.

Forty-three of the 100 senators engaged in official foreign travel last year, with one of them — Ted Stevens, R-Alaska — emerging as Capitol Hill's most frequent flier with seven trips.

The figures were compiled from documents published in the Congressional Record. The cost of foreign travel is understated because some reports did not give the amount spent on transportation, as required by law.

For example, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., led a delegation of seven other senators and 18 aides on a two-week trip last August to South Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong and China. The group reported spending $70,360, but no transportation costs were shown.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., headed two traveling parties, one of them spending 10 days visiting West Germany, the Soviet Union and Spain. O'Neill said the 13 members and 10 aides spent $42,966 on food, lodging and incidentals, but no transportation cost was given.

O'Neill's other trip was to Ireland from March 13 to March 18 — dates that put the 10 members and seven aides in the speaker's ancestral homeland for St. Patrick's Day. Most of these travelers have Irish surnames, and most of the members along are known as close friends of O'Neill.

The delegation met with top government officials, including Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald and opposition leader Charles Haughey. O'Neill was the guest of honor at the Lord Mayor's Parade in the city of Cork, and the delegation attended the annual St. Patrick's Day parade in Dublin.

The total cost of the five-day sojourn in the Emerald Isle was $118,331. In this case, O'Neill reported the transportation costs: $106,651.

The U.S.-Soviet arms-control talks in Switzerland drew a large number of congressional observers last year.

The Senate, which would vote on any treaty coming out of the negotiations, spent $79,741 sending people to Geneva. The House, which doesn't vote on treaties, spent $73,857 — all of it in three days by a group of eight members and five aides headed by Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas.

Another popular destination in 1985, as it has been in past years, was the Paris air show, where the aircraft industry displays its wares. The House Armed Services and Science and Technology committees took European trips that ended in Paris for the show.

The total bill for the 18 members and 12 aides on these trips was slightly more than $200,000.

Overall in 1985, there were 426 foreign trips taken by members of Congress. The House accounted for 347 of them, with 282 representatives traveling abroad. Forty-three senators took a total of 79 trips.

Travel approved by the House leadership cost at least $471,014, with the Senate leaders authorizing travel amounting to at least $255,012. Committees accounted for the bulk of the rest of the travel bill.

In the Senate, the top spenders were Foreign Relations, $123,604; Judiciary, $39,814; Appropriations, $34,643; and Commerce, $30,765.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee topped all spenders with $892,395. Other House committee travel bills were: Armed Services, $494,717; Appropriations, $488,583; Ways and Means, $366,500; Science and Technology, $219,127; and Agriculture, $158,674.

Also traveling were committees that have basically domestic-issue responsibilities. House Government Operations spent $93,383, while House Interior spent $100,321 — $90,285 on a trip to Japan, the Soviet Union and Ireland by six members and nine aides. Three of the six members are non-voting delegates from U.S. possessions.

Patrolman Thomas Nestel holds a puppy found near a temporary garbage dump site in north Philadelphia Sunday. Nestel said he would adopt the dog, left at one of the 15 temporary dumps set up by the city, and would name it "Hefty," after a brand of trash bags.

Strike talks making progress, Goode says

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mayor W. Wilson Goode has put off a plan to hire private haulers to cart away two weeks' worth of trash, saying progress was made during weekend negotiations between the city and its striking blue-collar union.

Talks ended just before 11 p.m. Sunday, but Goode said "informal talks" would continue today with District Council 33 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, which represents nearly 13,000 workers, including garbage collectors.

"The informal talks may be by telephone, may be by carrier pigeon, may be in person, but informal talks are important to bring this to a conclusion," Goode said after the talks recessed. The strike began July 1.

Goode said that because progress was made during all-day talks Sunday he was delaying implementation of a plan to have private trash haulers pick up an estimated 10,000 tons of garbage that have accumulated on streets and at 15 designated collection points.

The plan, which had prompted increased pickets at some sites, was tentatively scheduled to begin today.

The city's white-collar union, AFCSME District Council 47, settled its contract Friday. Some of the 2,500 District 47 workers crossed picket lines Friday, and District Council 33 president Earl Stout said the sister union's settlement "tears up" union solidarity.

Goode said he expected more District 47 members to report to work today because they have ratified their contract, which provides a 10 percent wage increase over two years and improved benefits.

"We are not going to punish them if they stay away, but we expect them to go to work," the mayor said.

District Council 47 President Thomas Cronin urged his members not to work, noting a contract clause that bars disciplinary measures against those who honor picket lines.

Both sides said a major obstacle to settlement was a dispute over the city's request to see records of the union's health and welfare fund. The city wants to audit the books in an effort to resolve a dispute over past payments into the fund.

Most families glad they adopted special children

WASHINGTON (AP) — A vast majority of the families interviewed for a new study say they're glad they adopted physically handicapped or emotionally troubled children and would do it again.

Only 3 percent of the adoptions in the Child Welfare League of America study of 177 families came to an end, while 73 percent of the parents interviewed said their experience had been good or excellent.

More than three-quarters said the adoption had made family members happier. Asked if they would do it again, 86 percent said yes.

"The study provides some evidence that special-needs adoption, even of the hardest to place children, can work out well," said Katherine A. Nelson, the author.

Social service workers began a push in the late 1960s to find permanent homes for older children and those with physical, intellectual or emotional problems. David Liederman, executive director of the league, said there are 35,000 of these youngsters — previously considered unadoptable — currently awaiting adoption.

The league research, the first of its kind, found that 85 percent of the 257 children studied showed improvements in health, schoolwork or the ability to form good relationships. And 86 percent of the parents said their lives had more meaning because of the adoption.

"Neither one of us would be alive if it weren't for this little boy," Ms. Nelson quotes an elderly couple as saying.

"We were prepared for the worst but it never came," another woman said of her 5-year-old adopted daughter, who had been abused and neglected. "She's made us realize how precious a child is, and how an adult can have a devastating effect on a child. It's made us more conscious of our responsibilities."

Another family said their adopted son, who has Down's syndrome, had enriched their lives with his humor and giving nature. "No matter what he's gone through and the pain he's had, he goes on, and how can we complain about (our own) minor problems?" they said.

Other parents said they had become less materialistic, more tolerant, more flexible, more compassionate, more responsible and more understanding as a result of adopting a special-needs child. For the children, the adoptions often provided their first exposure to family life and basic skills such as using table utensils.

But problems arose even in good adoption situations, Ms. Nelson reported, and the experiences of some parents were overwhelmingly negative. Some said they "hated" their children, according to the study. One woman said she was anguished because the adoption made her "see a side of myself that scared me to death. Cruelty came from my frustrations and disappointments."

The worst experience reported by someone who did not terminate the adoption came from a family Ms. Nelson calls the Reades, who adopted "a large sibling group of older children." From the start the children stole from neighbors and broke into their homes, and were so disruptive that the adoptive parents put a lock on their own bedroom door.

Shortly after the legalization, Mrs. Reade was hospitalized for two months with a nervous breakdown. She told an interviewer later that the problems are getting worse — shoplifting, running away. "When you talk to them, they shut you out. I don't know how to deal with this."

Judge's arrest for child abuse shocks peers

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A judge's arrest on a charge of sexually molesting another jurist's grandson at a conference on child victims may help focus attention on the "national scandal" of child abuse, judges said.

"The whole purpose of the conference is the issue of child victims of abuse. This certainly brings home the issue rather abruptly," Rhode Island Family Court Judge Thomas Fay, host of the conference, said Sunday following the arrest of Circuit Judge Jimmy Dean Sloan, of Anniston, Ala.

"If nothing else, this will help us focus on the issue and let people know this is a national problem," said Fay, the state Supreme Court chief justice designee. "We've been trying to explain to people that child abuse stretches across our society in equal percentages, from the educated to the uneducated, from the poor to the rich. There is no question about this, this is a national scandal."

Sloan, 42, was charged Saturday with first-degree child molestation for allegedly sexually abusing the 13-year-old grandson of another judge at a Providence hotel, state police said.

Sloan was released on $10,000 personal recognizance pending an Aug. 18 court appearance, according to Maj. Lionel Benjamin.

John Sheehan, a Providence attorney representing Sloan, said the judge is innocent of the charge but declined to elaborate. Sheehan said Sloan returned to Alabama on Sunday.

"He feels he'd be better off at home. He doesn't want to interrupt the conference and make a side issue of this," he said.

Sloan could be suspended or removed from the bench upon recommendation by an Alabama judiciary investigative panel, according to Kenneth Ingram, chairman of the commission.

Ingram said Sunday he would call commission members today to discuss whether they will investigate the charge immediately or wait until the case is resolved in Rhode Island courts.

According to Benjamin, the incident allegedly occurred about 10:30 p.m. Friday when the boy went to Sloan's room to ask for help in operating a television. Sloan allegedly forced the boy to perform oral sex, Benjamin said.

The boy was treated at Rhode Island Hospital and released. He was one of 40 children, ranging in age from 2 to 18, accompanying the 300 judges at the 49th annual conference of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges. The meeting concludes Thursday.

Judges registering for the conference Sunday expressed shock and sadness about the arrest.

Circuit Judge John M. Yeaman of Platte City, Mo., president of the national council, said in 27 years on the bench he had never heard of such a charge against a judge.

Police and explosives experts examine the car bomb that exploded today in a Madrid residential neighborhood, killing at least eight paramilitary civil guards. The bomb exploded as a bus carrying 58 civil guards drove past.

Car bomb explodes in Madrid, killing eight civil guards

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A car-bomb exploded at rush hour today alongside a bus carrying civil guards through a residential Madrid neighborhood, killing eight of the paramilitary policemen and wounding at least 35 people, officials said.

The blast bore all the earmarks of ETA, the Basque separatist organization, police said, and was the most serious attack carried out by the group since it began its campaign of killing police, civil guards and military officers in 1968.

Shortly after the explosion at Dominican Republic square about three miles from the center of the capital, angry crowds gathered at the site littered by twisted metal, shards of glass and mangled cars and shouted anti-government and anti-ETA slogans.

Government spokesman Manuel Moles said the bomb consisted of 110 pounds of plastic explosives packed inside a van. He said it was set off by remote control at 7:48 a.m. as a bus carrying 58 civil guards passed by.

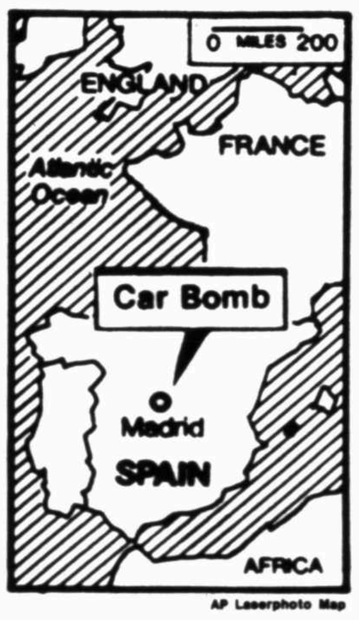

A civil guard spokesman, who would not give his name, said 20 civil guards were injured in the blast. Moles said 15 other people, including a street sweeper, were hospitalized because of injuries received from flying metal and glass.

The blast shattered windows in buildings around the square and damaged ground-floor shops.

ETA claimed responsibility for a similar April 25 car bomb attack in Madrid in which five civil guards died.

Today's deaths brought to 28 the number of victims of political violence in Spain this year.

The civil guard spokesman said "between 140 and 150" civil guards had been killed by ETA since 1968. So far this year, ETA has claimed responsibility for attacks that killed 16 people. Four ETA members have died in confrontations with police.

Diego Cortes Valdes, a guardsman who was riding in the front of the bus next to the driver, told reporters he had "no idea what happened, but the next minute I was standing, unhurt, next to the wrecked bus."

The guardsmen were on their way to a training center for highway patrolmen.

"The blast was so powerful it threw me against a wall as I was coming up from the subway," radio announcer Carlos Cofrades said. "There is broken glass all over the place."

The civil guard spokesman said the 20 injured guardsmen were in serious condition.

Israeli jets raid Palestinian targets

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli jets attacked Palestinian guerrilla bases in Druse-held hills southeast of Beirut today, demolishing targets in fiery rocketing and bombing runs that officials said left two guerrillas killed and 12 wounded.

Police and the International Red Cross reported the casualties in separate communiques issued shortly after the 30-minute raid in the vicinity of the Druse towns of Aitat, Bayssour, Shimlan and Ainab.

The attack, which began at 10:50 a.m., was staged by a squadron of 10 F-15 and two Phantom F-4 fighter-bombers in the central Lebanese mountain range overlooking Beirut, police said.

The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said its pilots reported accurate hits on an "area of terrorist concentrations" northeast of the Lebanese coastal town of Damour. They returned safely to base, the command reported.

Several buildings used by guerrillas of Syrian-backed factions opposed to Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat were ablaze after the raid, according to Lebanese police.

In the almost adjacent towns of Ainab and Shimlan, a two-story stone house used as a command center by Dr. George Habash's Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine was flattened.

But a Popular Front spokesman on the scene told reporters the building was empty when the planes struck.

"The PFLP command had anticipated the attack and ordered the evacuation of all its bases in the area," said the spokesman, who goes by the code name of Abu Khaled.

Another six-story stone building used by the Moscow-oriented Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine was devastated.

Democratic Front guerrillas were sifting through the rubble, trying to recover files and documents from the debris. Democratic Front spokesman Mamdouh Nawfal told reporters one of the group's guerrillas was killed and four others were wounded in Ainab.

The identities of the other guerrilla killed and those injured was not immediately available.

Police reported a three-story building used by the Fatah-Uprising faction of breakaway PLO Col. Saeed Mousa, code-named Abu Mousa, was demolished by direct rocket hits in Bayssour.

Guerrillas and militiamen of Druse chieftain Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party fired scores of Soviet-made surface-to-air SAM-7 missiles at the raiding Israeli planes.

But Israeli pilots dropped hot air balloons that deflected the heat-seeking projectiles, police reported.

Police said the planes dropped several delayed action bombs that went off in a chain of blasts after the planes completed their five bombing runs.

The sound of exploding bombs and rockets were heard at Beirut's southern outskirts, including the city's international airport.

Some of the attacking planes streaked over Beirut on their way back from the raid. They crashed the sound barrier, rattling the city with sonic booms.

The raid came a day after a bomb planted in a garbage bin exploded as thousands of people were strolling in downtown Tel Aviv at 8 p.m. Sunday, injuring one woman.

Beirut news media said Force 17, a security branch of PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat's mainstream Fatah faction, claimed responsibility for the bombing.

Israeli officials have said in the past that they believe retaliatory attacks against any Palestinian faction serves as a deterrent to them all.

Mercenary claims he was tricked

By MORT ROSENBLUM

PARIS (AP) — Irish-born mercenary "Mad Mike" Hoare claims South African authorities tricked him by backing his 1981 assault on the Seychelles Islands and then jailing him when the coup attempt was aborted.

Speaking for the first time Sunday about the abortive raid, he said South Africa's Defense Force provided half of his 50 men and that its National Intelligence Service funded the operation.

Other mercenaries were former Rhodesians hired in South Africa, he said. Hoare's men planned to take over the Indian Ocean islands, but were caught at the airport, where they arrived disguised as rugby players.

After a nightlong shoot-out at the airport, they escaped back to South Africa on an Air-India plane.

Instead of being welcomed, Hoare and his men were tried and convicted of hijacking the plane despite his insistence that the pilot took them voluntarily.

He was sentenced to 10 years in prison, but was released last year in an amnesty for prisoners over 65.

Hoare, 67, said his original contacts "disappeared" during his trial because the Pretoria government wanted to appear innocent. South Africa denied involvement.

THE MERCENARY said South Africa sponsored the assault because it was worried about the Seychelles' move to the left and feared the government would bring in Cuban and North Korean advisers. He said he was told President P.W. Botha approved the raid.

He has written a book called "The Seychelles Affair" that is to be published next month in London by Bantam. Hoare disclosed its main points to an Associated Press correspondent who knew him as a Congo mercenary leader in the 1960s.

Hoare spoke by telephone from southern France, where he was making a 120-mile pilgrimage on foot to Santiago de Compostela in Spain, honoring a saint credited with helping drive Moorish invaders from the Iberian Peninsula.

Hoare plans to settle in his native Ireland to write a book on the pilgrimage and a novel about African mercenaries. Since fighting in the Congo, now Zaire, for Katanga secessionists in 1960, he has arguably been the world's most famous mercenary.

His 1967 memoir, "Congo Mercenary," is in its ninth printing. The film, "The Wild Geese," is a fictionalized account of his Congo exploits.

Hoare said he first was approached in London by a former minister of Seychelles leader Jimmy Mancham, who was ousted in 1977. Hoare agreed to recruit 100 men to overthrow Seychelles President France-Albert Rene.

Mancham's support wavered, Hoare said, and plans changed frequently. He said new backing came from Gerard Hoarau, a disinherited young Seychelles politician.

Planning was done in Durban, South Africa, where Hoare had settled. He said the price of the coup fell from $5 million to $3 million to $1 million, adding, "I have a chapter called Cut-Price Coup."

WHEN HOARAU'S backers could only come up with $200,000, "South Africa stepped in and took the whole thing out of my hands on behalf of Hoarau," Hoare said. "Two days later, I got $2 million worth of stuff, things I could never use."

An aircraft was chartered in Swaziland to take the mercenaries to the Seychelles under cover as Ye Ancient Order of Frothblowers' rugby team. Hoare said he preferred that name to the South Africans' choice: the Chauvinist Pigs.

Arms were to be smuggled aboard a yacht, but Hoare got word that Seychelles authorities were warned. Instead, they packed the guns under false bottoms in the men's suitcases.

The plan nearly worked. But a customs inspector in the Seychelles found prohibited fruit in a French traveler's bag. One more mercenary had to pass through customs, and the inspector, looking in his luggage for more fruit, found an assault rifle.

Hoare attacked immediately. The mercenaries secured the airport, losing one man. They killed an armored car driver.

An Air-India passenger plane that was low on fuel landed despite warnings. Artillery shells landed five feet from the plane, Hoare said, and he persuaded the government troops to stop firing. The grateful pilot offered to fly his men to safety, he said.

Hoare said he urged his men to finish their job, but South African officers feared the casualties would be too high. Hoare ordered retreat.

WHEN INDIAN authorities refused to testify in Hoare's hijacking trial, he said, "The South Africans had the perfect opportunity to let us go.

"The trial was entirely a South African affair to show they conformed to international norms."

PRI ahead in Chihuahua gubernatorial race

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — The government party won the mayorship of this border city and had a wide lead in the hotly contested race for governor of Chihuahua, officials said, in elections that opposition supporters claimed were stolen.

U.S. authorities, meanwhile, have advised American citizens to use caution if visiting Juarez because of the potential for turmoil.

No violent incidents were reported during the weekend, when both parties staged rallies and caravans through city streets under the watchful eye of Mexican army troops and patrolling government helicopters.

Jaime Bermudez, a wealthy industrialist running for Juarez mayor on the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, ticket gathered 111,640 votes, said Lorenzo Gonzaleez Lechuga, president of Municipal Election Committee. Bermudez defeated Gustavo Elizondo, candidate for the main opposition National Action Party, who got 78,961 votes.

Elizondo's campaign was hurt the week before the July 6 elections when his 1985 drunken driving arrest in neighboring El Paso, Texas, became known.

Leaders of the opposition party, known by its Spanish acronym as PAN, are seeking annulment of the elections, claiming ballots were stuffed or stolen and their representatives ejected from polling places.

PRI, which hasn't lost a gubernatorial or presidential election since its founding in 1929, rejected the allegations.

PAN also lost the race for two seats from Juarez for the legislature of Chihuahua, Mexico's biggest state which borders with New Mexico and Texas. Juarez, with a population of 1.2 million, is the largest city in Chihuahua and along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Apart from the governor's seat and mayor of Juarez, there were 14 legislative seats and 66 mayorships at stake in the elections.

The 22,000 U.S. military personnel stationed at Fort Bliss, just outside El Paso, were advised by their commanding general to avoid Juarez this weekend.

The chief of the U.S. Border Patrol in El Paso said he has assigned more staff one of the bridges over the Rio Grande connecting the downtown areas of each city.

Successor named to head Vietnam's Communist Party

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Truong Chinh, a 79-year-old communist hardliner, today was named to succeed the late Le Duan as head of Vietnam's Communist Party, the official Vietnamese radio reported.

The Voice of Vietnam radio said Chinh was unanimously named to succeed Le Duan at a meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee.

Chinh is chairman of Vietnam's State Council, and after Le Duan's death last week ranked No. 1 in the party's ruling Politburo.

Le Duan — who succeeded Ho Chi Minh as Vietnam's top leader and was an architect of Hanoi's victory in the Vietnam War — headed the Communist Party in Vietnam for 17 years before dying Thursday at age 79.

Like Le Duan, Chinh has kept away from the limelight. His forte has been party organization and planning and communist ideology.

Ethiopian allegedly defects

LONDON (AP) — The second ranking diplomat at the Ethiopian Embassy in London has defected and is now in Washington, The Observer newspaper reported Sunday.

It identified the diplomat as Ato Hailu Teferra, 48, who is listed in the London diplomatic directory as the embassy's commercial counselor.

The Observer said Teferra had defected because he believed his country had become a Marxist dictatorship under the rule of Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, who emerged as the military strongman after the 1974 turbulence that deposed the late Emperor Haile Selassie.

Storms batter China coast

PEKING (AP) — A typhoon and a tornado battered costal regions of China, killing 52 people and injuring about 800, an official newspaper said today.

The English-language China Daily said a tornado on Friday left 31 dead and 500 injured in Shanghai, China's largest city. It said Typhoon Peggy killed 21 people and injured 297 the same day in southern Guangdong Province.

The newspaper quoted Li Gaisheng of the Guangdong Provincial Disaster Prevention Office as saying more than 100,000 people were stranded by flooding caused by the torrential rains accompanying the storm.

Typhoon Peggy, which killed 93 people in the northern Philippines, severed traffic and communications links in the province, washed away 4,700 houses and damaged 43,600 others, China Daily said.

The storm destroyed 680 bridges, blew away more than 620 miles of telephone wires and flooded 968,000 acres of farmland, the newspaper said. It estimated damage at $162 million.

In Shanghai, the tornado swept through 20 villages on the city's outskirts, destroying about 1,300 houses and cutting off electricity to a large area, China Daily said.

Losing the 'war'

President Reagan and First Lady Nancy Reagan have both publically launched a frontal assault against drugs. Yet, by most measures the Reagan administration is losing its war on drugs and drug trafficking.

The flow of illegal narcotics into the United States, most especially from Mexico, continues to increase. That's particularly evident in the Midland area because West Texas is one of the hotspots for bringing drugs into the United States. The domestic market for cocaine, marijuana, and heroin also is on the increase. Accordingly, it's difficult to understand the administration's apparent reluctance to expand its drug-interdiction campaign by using military personnel and equipment where appropriate.

Last April, President Reagan laid the necessary groundwork by signing a presidential directive defining narcotics smuggling as a threat to national security. The directive specifically authorized greater use of the military to assist in reducing the flood of drugs into the United States. In mid May, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger approved specific measures, including the use of radars and surveillance aircraft along the U.S.-Mexican border. In late May, the plan was approved by Attorney General Edwin Meese III, the designated coordinator of the administration's anti-drug campaign.

Now, however, the White House's Office of Management and Budget is refusing to fund the program. No formal explanation beyond the obvious need to hold down spending is being offered for this most curious failure. But budget drafting is about nothing as much as it is about establishing priorities and then allocating funds accordingly. The program set forth by Weinberger and approved by Meese would cost perhaps $250 million, or less if more interdiction operations were used as part of normal training that would be necessary in any case. Somewhere in a $970 billion annual budget surely it must be possible to find $250 million for bolstering an interdiction campaign that is currently being overrun by the drug smugglers.

This definitely should be true given the evident support in Congress for enlisting more military help in the battle against narcotics traffickers. Much of the impetus for the plan accepted by Weinberger and Meese came from Arizona Sen. Dennis DeConcini and Oklahoma Rep. Glenn English. What's more, Congress seems likely to appropriate funds for parts of the program even without cooperation from the White House. Congress will probably allocate the $78 million for buying and deploying six radars mounted on tethered balloons to cover the 1,800-mile border with Mexico. Coincidentally, the radars would plug a huge gap in the Pentagon's system of air-defense surveillance.

But without the active cooperation of the administration, efforts to reinforce the drug-interdiction campaign can never be more than partially effective at best. This is not a plan to militarize the U.S.-Mexican border or to thoughtlessly throw the military at a problem that is principally a matter of law enforcement. But modest numbers of border radars, surveillance aircraft, helicopters and various other specialized units could make it dramatically more difficult for drug smugglers. As it is the Drug Enforcement Agency estimates, for example, that only 10 percent of the aircraft flying narcotics into the United States from Mexico are being detected.

The Reagan administration won't start winning its war on drug traffickers until those odds improve.

AG's porn proposals

If anyone was worried that the Report of the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography would spark a new era of puritanism and repression, he can probably relax.

The document released this week was the result of a year-long exploration of the smut trade, which included hearings where testimony was given on everything from sex with a chicken and a corpse to the probable links between pornography and shoplifting. Prostitutes and skin-flick queens were trotted out as "victims" of pornography, and the staff got to catalog a lot of dirty movies. When the voluminous report with 92 recommendations was presented to the attorney general, he soft-pedaled his response, declining to comment in detail and assuring questioners that he has no intention of fostering censorship that violates the First Amendment. A final bizarre note was struck at this ceremony when officials posed before a flag and a statue of a Rubenesque nude. That either sends a subtle message that the Justice Department is really cool about this subject or provides evidence that Dick Tuck or the editors of the National Lampoon have managed to infiltrate the attorney general's senior staff.

To have a reaction against pornography is not inexplicable. There's a lot of raunchy material out there that you don't want your 8 year old to become familiar with. To this end, we see nothing wrong with consumer boycotts or with making your views known to retailers and advertisers. These are classic pressure tactics that have been used effectively by all sorts of groups from unions to the NAACP. But while you have the right to keep your children from subscribing to Screw or sneaking out to watch "Wanda Whips Wall Street," you don't have the same power to control your neighbor's choice in reading material or to enlist the government as an ally in your crusade. The commission's recommendations along these lines include the creation of a permanent obscenity task force, the confiscation of assets of corporations dealing in pornography and the upgrading of some of these offenses from misdemeanors to felonies. The commission would have us believe that these steps are necessary to protect the public from the violence that is the certain result of pornography.

Sixteen years ago another federal commission found no link between the reading of obscene material and the commission of crimes. This commission, with only a small fraction of the funds that were available to the 1970 group and no independent research capability, comes to a contrary and dubious conclusion and proposes a set of responses that is unwarranted if not unconstitutional. Our guess is that the report will be treated with all the respect it deserves.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, July 14, the 195th day of 1986. There are 170 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 14, 1881, outlaw William H. Bonney Jr., alias "Billy the Kid," was shot and killed by Sheriff Pat Garrett in Fort Sumner, N.M.

On this date:

In 1789, the French Revolution was in full swing as citizens of Paris stormed the Bastille and released the seven prisoners inside.

In 1798, Congress passed the Sedition Act, making it a federal crime to publish false, scandalous or malicious writing about the United States government.

In 1853, Commodore Matthew Perry relayed to Japanese officials a letter from former President Millard Fillmore, requesting trade relations.

Japan's fake bolt industry prospering

WASHINGTON — Why would anyone counterfeit steel bolts? The same reason someone counterfeits $100 bills: to make money by passing them off as the real thing.

Jack Anderson

Granted, you don't make as much illicit profit from a fake steel bolt as you do from a phony $100 bill, but the counterfeit bolt is a lot harder to detect. In fact, it costs about $200 — real dollars, that is — to determine the exact metallic content of a single bolt. For this reason, few tests are done unless a bolt fails, and then it's too late.

Why should you care whether a steel bolt isn't what it's supposed to be? Consider that there are about 3,000 bolts in the car you drive, 7,000 in every Army tank your taxes pay for and perhaps 3 million in some jet aircraft.

Consider also that alloy-steel bolts are reliable to 800 degrees Fahrenheit, while cheaper boron-steel bolts turn to putty at 500 degrees. Recent bolt failures in nuclear plants and military equipment suggest that fraudulent fasteners may already be screwed into America's vitals.

A study last April by the Industrial Fastener Institute concluded that 80 percent of Grade 8 bolts — supposedly the hardest and most durable on the market — were counterfeit. Some Japanese exporters have admitted using cheaper, boron steel on their Grade 8 bolts instead of the specified alloy steel.

What's worse is that some U.S. importers appear to be cooperating with the Japanese bolt counterfeiters — or even to be instigating the fraud. Our reporter Jim Lynch was slipped a letter to an American importer from a major Japanese fastener manufacturer. Dated June 10, 1985, the letter suggests that the Japanese firm was well aware of the U.S. alloy-steel requirement, "but that regarding the present orders we will ship Grade 8 boron ... using 60-degree equally spaced headmarking." That marking on the bolt is the officially recognized identification of Grade 8 alloy-steel bolts.

Some Japanese bolt manufacturers have apologized for the mismarkings when caught, but claimed that the U.S. importers requested them.

"I wouldn't put a kids' swing set together with some of the junk I get in here!" griped an angry distributor in Houston.

Unfortunately, it's more than swing sets that fail because of faulty bolts — and the injuries are far graver than a bump on the head for a 4-year-old. Here are some examples of what some industry insiders call "The Junking of America":

— Two military helicopters crashed in separate accidents on the West Coast last spring, killing six occupants. Both crashes were traced to faulty fasteners.

— A neighborhood in Texas had to be evacuated in 1984 when a bolt broke and 5,000 pounds of deadly phosgene gas spewed out of a petrochemical plant.

— Five ironworkers died when a television/radio antenna tower in Houston collapsed in 1982 because of a bolt failure.

— A 1984 study, costing $2 million, estimated that almost half of the 67,000 bolts in a Midland, Mich., nuclear plant did not meet specifications. The failure of three main bolts anchoring two reactors had prompted the study. The plant is not in operation.

An alarming trend is that many foreign manufacturers now sell "generic" bolts and other fasteners — that is, without identifying factory marks. This makes tracing counterfeits virtually impossible, especially when the importers deny responsibility.

So why not simply "Buy American"? Because almost half the U.S. fastener manufacturers have shut down in the past 10 years due to foreign competition. A Commerce Department study in 1982 found that domestic fastener makers could supply only 45 percent of the military's emergency needs, but ruled that this did not threaten national security.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Foggy Bottom insiders are following with interest the activist operations of the U.S. ambassador to Bulgaria, Melvin Levitsky. He has shown a keen concern for Bulgaria's Turkish minority, estimated at 1 million. The communist regime is trying without much subtlety to eradicate the minority's Turkish culture.

BURGER BIT: Chief Justice Warren Burger is not made of marble. The guest told Burger, who walked over, shook the tourist family's hands, then took off his nametag that said "The Chief Justice" and bent down. "Someday, YOU be the chief justice," he said, pinning the tag on the little girl.

House panel doggedly on Deaver's trail

WASHINGTON — Members of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee investigating Michael K. Deaver intend to question John Gunther Dean, U.S. ambassador to India, about his dealings with the Reagan aide-turned-lobbyist.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The congressmen want to ask Dean why Deaver was his house-guest in the ambassador's residence this year while seeking Indian business. Dean, a career diplomat, was pushed for the post by Deaver. The subcommittee either will go to New Delhi or call Dean to Washington.

If the probers go to India, they may return through West Germany to interrogate Ambassador Richard Burt for the second time. The subcommittee members previously met with Burt but have new questions concerning alleged help he gave Deaver in seeking the public relations contract for Berlin's 750th anniversary.

REAGAN 'INFLATION'

President Reagan could scarcely believe how high the prices were on the menu of the Jockey Club, one of Washington's most fashionable restaurants, when his old friend, USIA Director Charles Wick, and his wife Mary Jane took the Reagans there to celebrate the first lady's birthday.

Black bass, which the President ordered, was priced at $24 all by itself. That's no more than other posh eateries would charge, but it seemed a lot to Reagan. The reason: He had not set foot in a restaurant since he entered the White House five and half years ago.

The president first expressed his amazement. Then he quickly noted that during his administration inflation has dropped from double-digit to the lowest point in 20 years.

ROSTY'S CHOICE

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski has been quietly pushing Sen. Bill Bradley for the next Democratic presidential nomination but is running out of patience with Bradley's reluctance.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski was impressed with Bradley's backstage cultivation of support for tax reform — in the House as well as Senate. He has twice privately urged Bradley to make a run in 1988, and twice been told by the senator that he is not interested.

On the second time, the Chicago Democratic insider told Bradley, in words to this effect: Bill, sometime down the line, I will ask you a third time, but if the answer is still no, don't expect to hear from me again.

THE VP'S IRE

A sign that political criticism may be getting to the normally even-tempered George Bush came when he personally telephoned political reporter Michael Kramer to chew him out for a two-week-old article in New York magazine downgrading the vice president's political prospects

"Mike, you didn't have to go on the trip to write that stuff," snapped Bush, referring to his political visit to Connecticut which Kramer covered. The vice president's disposition was not improved when the reporter, in response, addressed him as "George."

The New York article particularly irritated the Bush camp because it had considered Kramer a friend. Before the vice president's call, Kramer received a card from Bush press secretary Marlin Fitzwater reading in its entirety: "Et tu, Brute."

DRAFT IACOCCA

Greg Schneiders, strategist for the group seeking to draft Lee Iacocca for the Democratic presidential nomination, privately tells politicians he is not unhappy with the Chrysler boss's reluctance on grounds that a celebrity candidacy is better late than early.

Schneiders was a key aide to Jimmy Carter's early-bird candidacy in 1976. But as press secretary to Sen. John Glenn's failed effort in 1984, he tried unsuccessfully to slow down the ex-astronaut's emergence as a candidate. While spending $30,000 in funds to research how to get Iacocca's name on 1984 primary ballots, the draft organization is in no hurry for him to become an active presidential hopeful.

A footnote: The draft group, headed by veteran Democratic pro Terry O'Connell, wrote Iacocca this past week for the first time. The letter concluded by reminding him that George Washington ran only with the greatest reluctance.

America must work hard in order to survive

We Americans have run out of margin for error. We have to think in terms now of survival. We have enemies today who have the capability of destroying us. We live in a world in which most countries are either hostile or indifferent to our fate.

Charley Reese

That is not a pessimistic assessment. We certainly have the capability of surviving. What we don't have is the luxury of making a series of blunders. We had that luxury in the 1920s and the 1930s. The relatively low level of technology made the Atlantic and Pacific effective barriers against attack. The comparative strength of our industrial base and its invulnerability to attack foredoomed Germany and Japan in World War II.

We do not have that luxury in the 1980s and 1990s. Technology has reduced the oceans to puddles. Our industrial base has seriously eroded. We are once again a debtor nation with a large trade deficit, a gigantic bureaucracy, a staggering public debt, and an election process which favors money rather than excellence.

In such circumstances, it is time to get down to serious business and to play it smart. The key to survival, for nations as well as for individuals, always rests on how well we can identify the real world which exists out there independent of our mental processes.

If you can't swim and must cross a river, it is very important for you to be able to determine if the river is deep or shallow. This is not a matter of theoretical interest. Your life depends on it. The river, of course, is either deep or shallow and its depth is neither determined nor altered by your opinions, the opinions of experts, your wishes, or your desires. The river simply is what it is and you, not it, must make the adjustment.

The only way to determine a river's depth is to measure it. The whole of science rests on a commitment to determine as accurately as possible the nature of that world which exists outside our perceptions. Science does this by careful observation, by formulating educated guesses, and by testing to see if the guesses are correct or incorrect.

Unfortunately, public affairs are conducted on an opposite basis. Vagueness, untested claims and assertions, emotionalism, and appeals to authority (the authority of the crowd, the authority of tradition, the authority of the expert, the authority of credentials) are characteristic of discussions about public affairs.

Anyone who has read a history knows that established authorities are almost always wrong. That's no mystery. You become an authority by learning a lot about what is already known and believed. Someone who challenges existing beliefs is viewed as a threat. Humans — including authorities — do not like change. That's why true innovators are almost always controversial.

If we are going to survive, we have to apply the principles of scientific thinking to public affairs. We ourselves have to learn how to think. We have to teach our children how to think. Most education remains memorization and recall for testing purposes. That's like building computers which can store and recall data but do nothing else with it. That kind of education can't cut it in this dangerous world.

The first step is to make the commitment to seeking the truth. That means having the courage to face the possibility that our present beliefs may be wrong. The second step is to set priorities. We have finite amounts of time and energy. A great problem in our country is a lack of priorities. To be obsessed with how many shoes Ferdinand Marcos's wife has bought or how South Africa is dealing with its internal problems is like a cancer patient becoming obsessed with curing his neighbor's warts.

We no longer have the luxury of wasting time. We no longer have the luxury of being able to substitute moralizing for effective action. We have too much to do, too much to learn. We must attend to the hard, gritty work of our own survival. Nobody else is going to do it for us.

Northampton resident harbors creatures great and small

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — As one of the Pennsylvania Raptor Association's most important working members, Hope Carpenter cares for 100 or more birds of prey and other wild residents each year at her secluded Northampton County home.

Currently 14 great-horned owls of varied ages and sizes live in an enclosed pen separated from her kitchen by a wall and window, where they can keep their eyes on one another. In an adjacent room an osprey with a broken wing sits on a low perch, surrounded by cages containing a pair of merlins, kestrels, screech owls and a fledgling saw-whet owl.

Outside, a blind turkey vulture struts across the patio. A half-dozen screech owls, a pair of long-eared owls, two snowy owls, two golden eagles, a one-winged bald eagle, an assortment of red-shouldered, red-tailed and broad-winged hawks plus a lone goshawk inhabit varied pens that take up most of the back yard — along with baby possums, raccoons and other injured and orphaned wildlife.

Mrs. Carpenter, a former airline stewardess, and her partner, Rita Schaadt, have full-time baby-sitting and nursing jobs every day of the week. Both women are licensed by state and federal wildlife agencies with which they work closely in caring for the wild animals, particularly birds of prey brought to them for care, rehabilitation and eventual release. But not all of the animals can again be returned to the wild.

"Sometimes we have to put them down," explained Mrs. Carpenter, sitting in her Mount Bethel living room while giving a young raccoon its 4 o'clock bottle.

"Putting them down" is a euphemism for putting injured hawks and owls with no hope for recovery out of their pain and misery.

Last year, however, 80 percent of the 94 birds she took under her wing were "hacked" back to the wild. Miss Schaadt has had similar success with the 100-plus animals she treated in 1985. A few of the birds, depending on their state of health following surgery, are retained for educational purposes.

This year so far the success rate is similar — bolstered by the liberation of a red-tailed hawk recently. The mature hawk had been brought to the rehabilitation center by Jim Loundsberry, a youngster from nearby Flicksville who saw the bird "fall out of the air" and brought it to the center. Mrs. Carpenter's diagnosis was secondary poisoning.

"It will sometimes happen that way," Mrs. Carpenter explains. "They'll pick up organo-phosphates in the food chain — from eating starlings or grackles or other animals that have eaten treated grain or other food contaminated with pesticides or lawn sprays."

After a few days of treatment most of the birds are ready for release. Others die. But that's not the case with the hawks, owls and eagles that show up with varied injuries — many of which occur from hitting power lines, windows and vehicles.

Many of the current residents in the Mount Bethel raptor center are orphans that were grounded after destruction of their nests following storms or other disasters or were "rescued" by well-meaning but uninformed people. And each year young hawks, owls and other protected animals are confiscated from people who adopt them as pets — which happens to be Mrs. Carpenter's pet peeve.

"We must educate the public that baby raccoons and birds are better off in the wild," she stresses. "Most people haven't got the slightest idea what a bird eats or how much care it needs. And even if they do, wild animals don't belong in captivity."

Imprinting, the identification of a human caretaker as a parent, has long been a problem with nestling birds. Mrs. Carpenter says that the first three weeks are the most critical in avoiding imprinting. She's discovered that keeping fledgling great-horned and screech owls in cages with adults solves the problem. The youngsters identify with the mature owls, not with the humans who bring them food and must occasionally hand-feed them.

With adult birds, imprinting is seldom a concern. They can be released, says Mrs. Carpenter, without fear that they'll gravitate to another person — who may mistake the friendliness of the raptor as an "attack."

Raccoons are the easiest to return to the wild, she's discovered — even after they've received all of their nursing and nurturing from a human.

Although rehabilitation of wildlife is the prime reason for the facility, education is a close second in terms of importance.

As time permits, Mrs. Carpenter and Miss Schaadt visit schools, civic groups and other organizations with some of the birds specifically retained for educational purposes. The youngsters, or adults, are then invited to visit the "rehab center," as the animal hospital is frequently called.

Barber started when haircuts were 35 cents

By DAN FRICKER

SELLERSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — When Charlie Frederick started barbering, a haircut cost 35 cents, a shave, 15 cents.

That was in 1928 and, although he retired last July, all those years of dexterously wielding a comb and scissors in his Sellersville shop haven't dimmed his enthusiasm for barbering. Frederick still cuts the hair of his three grandsons and, at age 75, he's even considering a comeback, although his health will probably prevent it.

"To tell you the truth, I miss it," Frederick said while seated one recent afternoon on the screened-in back porch of his Sellersville home. "Meeting the gang, talking and stuff like that. I like to cut hair."

Borough Mayor Joseph E. Hufnagle said about 10 customers used to gather in the shop for a half-hour each morning to sit and talk and maybe get a shave. "It used to be like a breakfast club there every morning years ago," Hufnagle said.

Customers liked Frederick and appreciated his tonsorial skills. So much so that the Sellersville Chamber of Commerce recently proclaimed a Charlie Frederick Day in the borough.

In a ceremony in front of his former shop, Frederick was given a plaque by Hufnagle and a citation by state Rep. Paul Clymer. In a touch that even predates Frederick, a barbershop quartet sang old-time favorites.

Oddly, Frederick owes his career in part to The Depression.

The youngest in a family of five boys and two girls, Frederick was working as a carpenter when the nation's economy collapsed in 1929, sending his boss out of business. He became a barber when his eldest brother, Lloyd, offered him a job in his four-chair shop. He started off shaving customers with the traditional straight-edge razor and, by trial and error, gradually learned the art of cutting hair.

Lloyd took care of the mistakes. "He'd touch it up. He'd check it," Frederick says.

In those days, Frederick's Barber Shop opened at 8 a.m. as white- and blue-collar workers alike from Sellersville and Allentown, the latter on their way to jobs in Philadelphia, stopped in each morning for a shave.

Frederick was in the shop from opening until 10:30 p.m. or later on Saturday nights. "You were lucky to get out at 11 o'clock," said Frederick, who worked five days a week, with Mondays off.

For $1, a customer could get the works: shave, haircut and a facial with hot Turkish towels and boncilla, a type of mud pack. Frederick can name the local businessmen who plunked down a big buck, big money in those times, for the special treatment.

In 1931, Frederick took a job with a friend who opened his own barber shop in Horsham Township, Montgomery County. But the friend sold out less than a year later and Frederick went to work at a shop in Silverdale. In the next few years, he was at shops in Coopersburg and Trumbauersville before returning to his brother's shop in the 1930s.

Frederick purchased the shop from his brother in 1950 when it was only one of two in Sellersville. He sold it recently to John Schumacher.

To talk to Frederick about barbering is to learn the hairstyles of the last 50 years. During the 1930s, he says, men wore their hair short, parted and often combed back. But perhaps most distinctive was their predilection for hair tonics, and every shop had a shelf full. "They liked to smell nice more than now," Frederick said. In the '40s and '50s, hairstyles were longer.

Frederick, a deliberate perfectionist when it comes to cutting hair, was the area's acknowledged master of the flattop, a deceivingly difficult cut. "I'm perfect at that," he says. "People came from Souderton to get them. A lot of barbers don't want to give them."

As for long hair in the '60s and '70s, Frederick said it never hurt his business because he had an established and older clientele. But he minces no words about long hair. "I don't like long hair and my brother didn't like it at all," he says.

The secret to Frederick's success was his desire to give the customer the best cut possible. As a result, he had many lifelong customers. "I figure keep a guy who comes in," Frederick says.

Helen, his wife of 55 years, agrees. "He really took pride in what he did," she says. "He really enjoyed it when somebody said, 'If you want a good haircut, go to Charlie.'"

WEATHER SUMMARY

Conditions forecast for 8 AM Tuesday

Windy weather in area forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland residents can expect windy weather once again on Tuesday. According to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, winds will be out of the south at 15-25 mph with occasional gusts. The high on Tuesday is expected to be near the 90-degree mark.

Isolated late afternoon and evening thunderstorms are in the NWS forecast also, but the chance of rain is less than 20 percent.

Tonight, under partly cloudy skies, the low will be in the middle 60s with southerly winds at 10-15 mph.

Sunday's high of 88 was 19 degrees below the record high set for the date in 1933. This morning's low was 17 degrees warmer than the record low of 50 set for this date in 1936.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms developed over the Coastal Bend and Texas Gulf coastal waters early today, and forecasters expected additional rainfall later.

An isolated patch of fog shrouded the lower Rio Grande Valley, the National Weather Service said. Skies were mostly clear over North and Southeast Texas while high level cloudiness covered West Texas and the rest of South Texas.

Patchy low clouds dotted South Texas, the Rio Grande valley and the south plains as a high-pressure ridge over the Gulf pushed low-level moisture up across these areas.

It should be partly cloudy in most sections through Tuesday with widely scattered mainly afternoon and evening thunderstorms in the south and west.

NATION

Rain was scattered across broad sections of the nation today and downpours set off flash flood watches in Iowa and Nebraska, while a heat wave held its grip on the Southeast.

Showers and thunderstorms ranged across the northern and central Plains and the middle Mississippi Valley.

Severe thunderstorm watches were in effect early today in southwest Iowa and northern Missouri. Heavy rain prompted flash flood watches in southwest and south central Iowa and east central Nebraska.

Thundershowers spread across the middle Atlantic states and rain was widespread across New England.

Thundershowers also were scattered across North Carolina, Alabama, the central and southern Rockies and Arizona, while light rain fell in southern California.

In the Southeast, temperatures soared above 100 in parts of the Carolinas and Georgia on Sunday and similar temperatures were expected today.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Carradine

Q. Can you tell me about Keith Carradine? How old is he, is he married, what has he been in?

D.S.
Redding, Calif.

A. He's 35, was born in San Mateo, Calif., the son of actor John Carradine and his second wife, Sonia Sorel. His childhood was a little hectic due to his parents' custody battle over him and brother Robert; they were placed with other relatives and in schools until it was resolved and they went to live with their father. (Keith didn't see his mother between the ages of 8 to 15.)

He grew up in the San Fernando Valley away from show business, which was his father's intention, and as a teen-ager, he wanted to become a painter. After putting in some time at Colorado State University, however, he drifted into acting, courtesy of his half-brother, David — after moving in with David, he left with him for New York where David was auditioning for the role of Claude in the musical "Hair." David was judged too old for the part and it was given to Keith. He later repeated it in the Los Angeles production and did a couple of TV movies while he was there.

His feature-film debut was in "A Gunfight" with Kirk Douglas, followed by a stream of acclaimed films: "Thieves Like Us," "McCabe and Mrs. Miller," "Nashville" (his song for that film, "I'm Easy," won the Academy Award), "Pretty Baby," "The Duellists," "Welcome to L.A.," "The Long Riders," "Southern Comfort," "Choose Me," "Trouble in Mind," "Maria's Lovers." On TV he did "Chiefs," "A Rumor of War" and the recent "A Winner Never Quits." Currently, he's in Tunisia making a movie called "The Inquiry" with Harvey Keitel.

He is married to actress Sandra Will and they have a 4-year-old son and a 6-month-old daughter.

Smith

Q. I really liked Lewis Smith in the miniseries "North and South." Could you tell me everything about him?

Tamara Weir
Oromocto, N.B., Canada

A. He's 29, from Chattanooga, Tenn., the son of a self-made hotel/restaurant empire tycoon and his wife. Lewis majored in business in college but dropped out to join the family business. At 20, he was managing the El Dorado Hotel in Lexington, Ky., and King Arthur's Round Table Restaurant in Daytona Beach, Fla., when he decided, on a whim, to become an actor.

His father gave him some money to live on while he tried, with a fixed amount, so he had a definite time period within which to succeed or come home. He drove out to Hollywood, and through a clerical error in the institute office wound up in acting master Lee Straberg's advanced class, studying alongside Lee Grant and Jon Voight. Strasberg realized it had to be a mistake, but he let him remain in class anyway.

He got some great training, but he still didn't have any work. His father's money was about to run out when he was cast in a low-budget fright flick called "The Final Terror" with two other young hopefuls, Rachel Ward and Daryl Hannah.

That led to other movies: "Southern Comfort," "I Ought to Be in Pictures," "The Heavenly Kid," "Love Child" and "Buckaroo Banzai" along with "North and South" on TV. Currently, he's finishing up production on a TV movie based on David Bowie's film "The Man Who Fell to Earth"; it's scheduled to air on ABC in the fall and if it does well, could go on to become a series.

He's based in California and has been involved with actress Marsha Mason for approximately a year.

Sheedy

Q. Could you please give me a short biography of Ally Sheedy? I'm a big fan.

J.S.
Vandenberg AFB, Calif.

A. Alexandra Sheedy is 24, one of three children of a (divorced) New York advertising executive and a literary agent. She began studying and performing with American Ballet Theater at the age of 6 and, encouraged by her mother's literary friends, began to write as well, first articles for The New York Times and Village Voice and later a book, "She Was Nice to Mice," which was published when she was 12.

As a result of the publicity surrounding the book, she was offered acting jobs in TV commercials — for Burger King and Clearasil, among others — which, in turn, led to roles off-Broadway and in TV specials for children. After graduating from prep school, she decided to pursue acting further, so she moved to Los Angeles. Much to her family's surprise, she was immediately cast in TV movies such as "The Best Little Girl in the World" and series such as "Hill Street Blues," in which she had a brief but memorable role as a parochial-school student who tries to seduce Det. LaRue.

Those appearnaces led to movies: "Bad Boys," "WarGames," "The Breakfast Club," "Oxford Blues," "St. Elmo's Fire," "Twice in a Lifetime," "Blue City" and "Short Circuit." Now, according to an associate, "She's taking it easy for a while before she decides what she wants to do next. She's also finishing school. She's been a student at U.S.C. while she's been making all these movies and now she's just a few credits short of graduation. She wants to make sure she gets them. She really wants that degree."

Fox

Q. My little girl is 7 years old and after seeing Michael J. Fox in "Back to the Future," she was devastated by him. Is he going to be in anything else?

C.V.
Landner, Baker, La.

A. There's a sequel to "Back to the Future" in the works, but before that, she'll be able to see him in the movie "Light of Day," in which he and singer Joan Jett portray a brother and sister in a neighborhood bar band. After that film, he started shooting "Private Affairs" for director Herb Ross and should be resuming "Family Ties" shooting any minute for next season. There are also plans, still tentative at this point, for him to portray the late James Cagney in a TV movie.

Ritter

Q. Please tell me what John Ritter has been doing lately.

Ron Keeping
Grand Bank, Nfld., Canada

A. Making TV movies: He's just finished one called "Find a Safe Place," in which he plays a counselor at a camp for juvenile delinquents, and has another one, "Unnatural Causes," about the tragedies associated with Agent Orange, the chemical used in the Vietnam War. It's set to air on NBC next season.

There are also plans for him to co-star with Henry Winkler in something called "Kind of a Drag" for ABC and there is recurring talk that he may do another series, but he hasn't committed to anything yet.

Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky, only one of two women U.S. governors, began her political career by helping Wendell Ford in his 1971 Kentucky gubernatorial campaign.

An unusual governor

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features

"You (women in politics) have to work harder and it's tough to be taken seriously. One of the difficulties that women have always had in politics is trying to raise money. My husband (Dr. William Collins) helped me raise $5 million for the governor's race. He's good at strategy. He's got a good gut feeling for it."

— Gov. Martha Layne Collins

She is definitely a minority, this poised but outgoing blond chief executive, one of two women currently holding office as United States governor. But Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky, beauty queen- turned canny legislator, is unusual in other ways. (Vermont's Madeleine M. Kunin is the other woman governor).

It's not just that she brought over 45,000 new jobs and over 119 new manufacturing plants to the land of blue grass and blue-blooded horses within a two-year span.

How many governors ever came home from campaigning to freeze corn or green beans? How many hold staff meetings in a 70-foot white houseboat, flaunting Kentucky's blue and gold colors?

It's a boat with decks fore and aft, with kitchen, blue-carpeted double-bed master bedroom and staff-bestowed nickname, "Doc's Lady," a reference to former dentist-turned businessman Dr. William Collins who is married to the governor.

Mrs. Collins, a former schoolteacher with a lively sense of humor, admits she whisks staff members by raft to the boat — and isolation. "We work out programs where we can't be interrupted. Nobody can drop in. The staff has no reason to leave. So it's get 'em out there and don't feed them or give them anything but soft drinks, until the work is done.

"You maroon them," she chuckles, "and after the programs are worked out, then you cook them steaks or hamburgers on the gas grill, let them swim a little in the Kentucky River and take them back home."

This is a busy woman. She was recently in New York, then Atlanta, at the ground-breaking of still another Kentucky plant; soon she will fly off to Japan.

The traveling, she says practically, "comes in spurts. It's like any other business. And it helps the state."

Last year, Toyota agreed to build an $800 million plant in Kentucky, employing 3,000 workers; and five other Japanese firms have announced plans to follow suit.

It's not a one-way street. As Mrs. Collins points out, "I also travel to promote markets for Kentucky products: coal, tobacco, corn, soy beans, manufactured goods — even golf clubs. You wouldn't believe some of those Japanese driving ranges."

Magazines have compared her down-to-earth style with the social flurry and frequent New York fashion shopping trips of her predecessor Governor John Y. Brown and his wife, Phyllis George. That misses the point.

Martha Layne Collins, born 40 miles east of Louisville, in Bagdad (population 250), is no slouch on the fashion front. Her suits could belong in any board room. But she is the governor, not the consort of one. In fact, she was lieutenant-governor in the Brown administration.

True, she still whips up an occasional fish fry for friends.

Her style, says Mrs. Collins, is a combination of things. And being in the chief executive's mansion does not prohibit midnight raids on the kitchen. Suddenly she starts to chuckle, recalling the recent Derby celebration when VIP guests including Gary Collins and wife Mary Ann Mobley stayed with her.

After a race around the social track from parades to parties, with no chance to finish any meal along the route, the governor found herself in the executive kitchen at a 1 a.m. cooking for her still-hungry guests; bread in the microwave, barbecued ribs just right for sandwiches.

She is a practical woman in other ways, too. "I have two priorities," she says succinctly, "education and economic development."

Mrs. Collins, who worked eight years as a schoolteacher, insists both her priorities are interdependent. Two years ago, she persuaded the state General Assembly to pass reform measures including: mandatory kindergarten, testing and internship for new teachers and an "academic receivership act" which allows the state to take control when a local school district fails to meet certain educational standards.

"Money alone," says Mrs. Collins briskly, "is not the answer to everything. A good education goes a long way toward a good job and developing a good state."

How, you wonder, did Martha Layne Collins grow from a small-town child to the woman in Kentucky's governor's mansion?

The daughter of Everett and Mary Hall, who owned the local funeral parlor, Mrs. Collins was raised as a strict Baptist.

"I'm an only child," she says. "My mother was one of 10 children; my father, one of four. Growing up in a funeral home, you have a great respect for life and the uncertainty of life. I think that's one reason why I want to get everything done now, why I crowd as much into a day as I can. I may not be here tomorrow. I don't dwell on that idea, but I know it has created a drive on my part."

Her mother was a strong influence. "If I went home and told her someone else had been elected class president and maybe I was a little upset, my mother would say, "Now you've got this job. It may not be as big as president, but you do a good job here and maybe next time you'll be elected president."

It was a happy childhood in Bagdad. There was a small farming property. "I learned to drive a tractor before I could drive a car, and I used to set tobacco and do all those kinds of things."

In high school she was a cheerleader and went on in 1954 to become the Shelby County Burley-Tobacco Queen and in 1959 was the Kentucky Derby Festival Queen.

And in the summer of 1957, Martha Layne Hall, fresh from her sophomore year at the University of Kentucky, met Bill Collins, quarterback for Georgetown's football team. They married two years later.

She remembers the early days. "I was teaching, helping my husband through dental school and we had two children. But I was still very active in the local community."

Asked to help Wendell Ford in his 1971 gubernatorial campaign, she did, rising from precinct committeewoman to the state's National Democratic Committeewoman.

Her husband encouraged her. "I would teach school, grade my papers, pick up my kids, whisk them to a bean dinner or a fish fry, then tuck them into the back seat of the car with a pillow and go home. They ended up with friends all over the state."

Daughter Marla is a realtor, and son Steve — now married to schoolteacher Diane Spalding and in his second year of law at the University of Kentucky — served as chairman of Kentucky's delegation to the 1984 Democratic National Convention chaired by his mother.

"I thought he did a good job. But we got a little criticism over it," she says candidly. "That's OK. He was the youngest chairman and that brought a bit of recognition to our state delegation."

When Ford was elected governor, Mrs. Collins took a leave of absence to go her own way in politics. "I went to work with women's groups. And soon, people around Kentucky were saying, "Why don't you run for office?"

Says Mrs. Collins, "We're a close family, so we talked about that. Now, my husband doesn't say very much. He's a very quiet fella from eastern Kentucky. That's where they don't say a lot, because if they say it, they mean it. And Bill said, 'You put in enough hours and have traveled enough miles for other people. It's time that you either run or come home.' "

Patrons of Mary's Diner get more than good cooking

By SUE MROZ
King Features

Patrons of Mary's Diner in Tomahawk, Wis., get more than food when they choose this eating spot situated in the former Hiawatha School House at the intersection of Highways 51 and U on the north city limits.

Imagine feasting on home-cooked meals prepared by a vivacious, rotund Italian proprietor who refuses to accept tips and who introduces her patrons to one another when they enter the converted brick schoolhouse with its blackboard walls, antique clock and an oil space heater where the pot-bellied stove once stood.

A neon sign on the lawn of the diner's former location announced "Rooms." Until the fall of 1985, Mary Edmunds had also operated a two-room motel next to that diner for 12 years. "Just leave the money under the lamp," she said to one customer who asked about his room rental.

A native of Pittsburgh, Pa., Ms. Edmunds, 70, is an unsung hero to those who know her.

"We love Mary." "When I first came in here, she introduced me to the other diners. I thought, hey, this gal can't be for real!" "We love coming to eat here!" "She is one heck of a terrific person!" "She cares about everybody." "She has a fantastic memory. Once you come in, she'll remember you next time and call you by name." "She introduces people from different tables." "Mary really cares." "I've traveled halfway around the world on my job and have yet to meet a person as honest and trusting as Mary." "She trusts everyone." "Dining at Mary's is just like going home to dinner."

These are some of the well-deserved testimonials bestowed upon Mary Edmunds by her patrons.

The sides of the restaurant's counters are covered with photos of customers who are regulars. "Some of these are now grandparents," announced Ms. Edmunds nostalgically. "I've watched them grow since they were teen-agers."

Her regulars share the fact that she has several boxes of thank-you notes and cards from newcomers who are overwhelmed at her genuine concern and delightful conversation.

With her husky, spontaneous laugh, Ms. Edmunds bustled about the room wearing her crisply starched uniform and balancing three plates containing her famous pecan pie as she poured steaming coffee for two local high-school seniors.

While it may seem a bit atypical that her diner is open only during the hours of 10 p.m. to 4 a.m., she doesn't see it that way.

"I aim to provide a service, " Ms. Edmunds explained. "When people are traveling or out late at night here, they may want a bite to eat. And there isn't any place in town where they can do this in the wee morning hours. So I hope that they will come here."

The diner is open every day of the year because, according to Ms. Edmunds, "This is my life. I love it. People mean everything to me."

MARY

This unpretentious woman loved by so many could easily have become a bitter lady, as her late husband was injured in a mill accident. The tragedy rendered him an amputee. Mary had to fend financially for him and their child. But she accepted this cross graciously and has single-handedly operated her restaurant business for the past 25 years. For 12 of those years she also ran the motel.

The diner's location has changed three times, but her dynamic personality and high-quality food, apparently seasoned with love, have remained unchanged. This could be due to the fact that the motherly woman has deep faith in her fellow man and in God. "The Lord works in mysterious ways. When you help someone, someone else helps you too," she affirmed.

Former Milwaukee resident Tom Krull, whom Ms. Edmunds has taken under her wing since 1981, is one example of this reciprocal care.

In the fall of 1985, the owner of her diner informed her that she would have to move because he needed the property for a building project.

Krull was there along with some other Tomahawk residents to assist her in her move to the schoolhouse about one mile up the road from the diner's former location.

Krull then put his carpentry skills to work and remodeled the building for the grateful Ms. Edmunds who doesn't drive a car and prefers to spend her off-duty hours at the diner, where she also sleeps.

"I haven't made a trip since 1968," she announced. "I visited my sister in Pennsylvania then. But now I get all the news from my customers and prefer to stay close to home. I'd be lost if I went anywhere."

People with burdens have become accustomed to confiding in Ms. Edmunds, who is usually able to perk up their spirits with her contagious smile, consoling words and positive attitude.

As she answered the phone to take a carry-out order, I overheard her inquiring about the caller's health problem and the welfare of his other family members.

She possesses the human touch that attracts a cross-section of residents and tourists. A group one evening began conversing with one another as Ms. Edmunds sat alongside a threesome at one of the tables in her restaurant.

"This is how Nancy and I met," announced Don Kainz, who was seated at the next table with his wife. "We were both in here one night at separate tables, and Mary introduced us."

Kainz was enjoying one of Edmunds's popular creations — a krautburger, a combination of grilled beef chuck and fried sauerkraut on a buttered, grilled hard roll.

Another menu item, the Chargeburger, consisting of a fried egg and hamburger on a bun, was named after a local resident.

Since regular Highway 51 no longer passes through Tomahawk due to a recently contructed bypass, business isn't quite as brisk as it used to be. But Ms. Edmunds is satisfied with the steady flow of her regulars and the tourists.

Today Mary Edmunds is a legend — a giving, caring person who believes and practices the philosophy that it is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness.

MARTHA

In her first, successful 1975 bid for elective office, Mrs. Collins spent just $30,000 to win tenure as clerk of the Court of Appeals — which promptly became the Kentucky Supreme Court after a sweeping judicial reform, vaulting her into the state spotlight and a chance at lieutenant governor.

Less than a decade after she entered politics, Mrs. Collins became the first woman to win a Southern governorship without following her husband into office and only the third woman to do so in the entire country.

Mrs. Collins approves of the death penalty and vetoes any Kentucky-based nuclear plants. "I don't want to be like some people," she says wryly, "against electricity. But..." She opposes abortion, is for the Equal Rights Amendment and has her own definite views on "women's issues."

Says the governor, "One reason Mondale couldn't take me as a vice-presidential candidate in the last election was because I don't have the support of all women's groups. I don't have all the positions. I just have my beliefs. And I won't change them."

She adds candidly, "You talk about women's issues. In my opinion, there are no women's issues; only issues which affect women more than men. But I believe all issues are women's issues or should be."

She emphasizes, "There are women who have done wonderfully well, calling attention to special needs. I'm not that type. I'm not the marcher. I'm not the demonstrator. That's not my nature, but I'm going to do such a good job as governor, no one can say, 'Hey, we can't take another woman in the Mansion.'"

It is not easy being a woman in politics. "You have to work harder," she says flatly, "and it's tough to be taken seriously. One of the difficulties that women have always had in politics is trying to raise money. My husband helped me raise $5 million for the governor's race. He's good at strategy. He's got a good gut feeling for it."

For Collins, there have also been adjustments to make. Says his wife, "There has been a lot of scrutiny of him, something you'd never have with a male governor."

After practicing dentistry for 20 years, Collins is now president of Collins Investments Inc., headquartered in Lexington, Ky., a firm dealing with real estate and horses.

In 1987, there will be a new governor in the Frankfurt Mansion — perhaps George Y. Brown, the Democrat who preceded Mrs. Collins. Since Kentucky governors, by state law, cannot succeed themselves, she will be living somewhere else.

Maybe in Versailles, where the family lived while Collins practiced dentistry, in a one-story brick house surrounded by wild flowers a creek and a rock quarry on a hill in the middle of a 13-acre "baby farm;" maybe in the lakeside cabin in Anderson County. "No phone," she says, "no TV. It's just a place to go lay out in the sun, read a book and sleep."

And there is, of course, the houseboat.

But the real question, the long look down the road, is toward her future. Says Mrs. Collins candidly, "There are days, as there are in any job, when I'm fed up with government and I don't want to get into anything else connected with it." But Mrs. Collins ruefully admits she is too restless to retire to the bluegrass sidelines and lazy summer afternoons with nothing much to do.

That's definitely not her style.

"I can't do anything halfway; it's either all or nothing."

And for Martha Layne Collins, that means working — at something.

Would she run for vice president to neatly balance a ticket headed by for New York's Governor Cuomo or Colorado's Senator Gary Hart or any 1988 presidential candidate? Would she just launch out on her own for president?

Martha Layne Collins considers that for two seconds, then shakes her head. "Noooooo...Not really. But again, things can change. I never close doors. And I never cross bridges before I come to them."

Boone says 'honesty' characterizes his music

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Pat Boone has swapped his white bucks for white boots, curbed his appetite for whole milk and is diving into a pool of projects.

Boone, still the handsome boy-next-door with foursquare morals at the age of 52, says of his frantic schedule: "It looks like everything is happening right like it did in the late '50s."

He's currently seen on three shows on the Christian Broadcasting Network: "Pat Boone USA," "Gospel Gold" and "Together: Shirley and Pat Boone."

The Pat Boone Radio Show, featuring contemporary Christian music, airs on 130 stations.

He's just done a 50-minute exercise video, "Take Time With Pat," for people over 40. And his current 45 rpm record is "Over," a song about how love keeps a couple together.

He's also putting together a network TV special, "America Salutes Gospel Music," and with help from the Oak Ridge Boys, he's doing a tribute album to his father-in-law, the late singer Red Foley.

He performs every year at state fairs and is spokesman for the National Easter Seal Society.

Boone also has his own Christian record label, "Lamb and Lion Records." And he keeps an affectionate eye on his 11 grandchildren.

He's still a whirlwind of activity — even after selling 45 million records in a 30-year career dating back to the earliest days of rock 'n' roll when he and Elvis Presley vied for the hearts of America's teen-agers.

His hits include "Love Letters," "April Love," "Speedy Gonzales," "Ain't That a Shame," "Friendly Persuasion," "Why Baby Why," "Don't Forbid Me" and "I Almost Lost My Mind."

He considers "Love Letters" the best because it sold more than 3 million copies and touched so many people.

"It seemed to communicate with so many people," Boone said in an interview. "People have told me they courted to it and it became their song. It was instrumental in couples getting together and staying together. It wasn't my best song by musical standards, but it communicated."

"If there's any characteristic to my music, it's honesty. I mean what I sing."

Boone also made a dozen motion pictures, including "Journey to the Center of the Earth."

Even though his marriage was no mere April love (it's lasted 33 years), he says he wasn't always the straight-laced personality the public saw.

"There was a wandering period," he said. "In the 1960s, I copped out and compromised some. I had a period of eight or 10 years when I settled in in Hollywood when I didn't want to be regarded as square. I went to parties and premieres and drank and told risque stories and enjoyed the different looks of the young starlets.

"My marriage was coming apart. But there was a supernatural intervention. There was training and what I learned at home and at church that got me back on the track. Church took precedence over everything on Sunday and Wednesday night."

Still, he says the highlight of his career has been his No. 1 records.

"There's nothing more thrilling than that," he said. "It becomes a permanent part of a lot of lives. I don't know of anything else in the entertainment business like that unless it's a movie role that somebody becomes so closely identified with."

Boone, a descendant of Daniel Boone and father of singer Debby Boone, was the son of a Nashville building contractor. He sang in public as early as age 10 and helped pay for his schooling at North Texas State College by working on a Fort Worth television show for $44.50 a week.

He won on "Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts" and then signed a recording contract that led to national fame.

Early in his career, he wore white bucks a few times on television, and when he changed to darker shoes his fans objected. Today he wears white patent leather boots.

"You can wipe 'em off and keep going. Those bucks were hard to clean," he said.

As for his TV commercials for milk: "I love it, but I don't drink as much as I used to. I've changed to low-fat."

Aviation writer will address Nightwriters

Bob Worthington will be the next speaker for the Texas Nightwriters. His topic will be "Writing as a Business." The meeting is scheduled for Saturday at 1 p.m. in the Electronics Technology Building, Room 119 at Odessa College, 201 University.

Worthington teaches management and is the director of the Small Business Center at West Texas State University. He is primarily an aviation writer and contributes an airport business quarterly report to Airport Services Management magazine. He also writes regularly for Flying Review and Cessna Owner Magazine.

Worthington and his wife co-authored a book, "Staffing a Small Business," which was released in 1985.

He will speak about the new tax laws and how they may affect a writer. He will give guidelines for keeping business records that will allow a writer to have business tax benefits.

The Texas Nightwriters, a group of professional writers, meets at 1 p.m. on the third Saturday of every month. Guest speakers are featured for the first hour of the meeting. Then members discuss writing tips, market information and to read their works for critique. The annual membership fee is $15. For more information call 685-3232.

Ballet Midland will be offering summer classes

Ballet Midland Academy will offer a summer workshop for students from ages 3 to adult.

Classes will be taught in the Allison Fine Arts building on the Midland College campus Monday through August 15.

The workshop will provide instruction in classical ballet from introductory pre-ballet and rhythm classes to a highly focused, in-depth program for the serious and/or pre-professional student.

Anthony Ferro, artistic director of Ballet Midland, will oversee all activities of the summer workshop. He will be assisted by Robert Barnett, artistic director of the Atlanta Ballet for over 20 years and Susan Clark, who formerly starred with the Atlanta Ballet.

'Trouble' kung fu ghost comedy

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

Forrest

"Big Trouble in Little China" is being billed, believe it or not, as "a mystical action-adventure-comedy-kung fu-monster-ghost story."

The unlikely hero of this unlikely epic is "a 'good old boy' who powers his huge semi-trailer, the Pork Chop Express, through hell and high water, hauling live pigs to the wholesale market," as Twentieth Century Fox's press kit unabashedly describes him.

Kurt Russell plays this tough-guy hero, the third time he's been a rough-and-ready leading man for action film director John Carpenter. Russell began his career portraying clean-cut, all-American youths in live-action Disney films, including such works as 1960's "The Absent-Minded Professor," 1966's "Follow Me Boys," 1970's "The Computer Wore Tennis Shoes" and "The Barefoot Executive."

Until 1981, Russell was typecast as the kind of actor who could only be in second-rate Disney kiddie movies. In that year, he startled almost everyone by appearing as a cynical antihero with a terminal sneer and the nickname of "Snake" in Carpenter's action film "Escape from New York."

Amazingly, by camping it up just ever-so-slightly, Russell gave a nearly perfect performance in this offbeat bit of casting. He followed this role up with a fairly similar — and equally good — performance in Carpenter's 1982 remake of "The Thing."

Now Russell is already parodying his relatively new tough-guy persona in Carpenter's "Big Trouble." He plays the truck driver, Jack Burton, who boldly wanders into a lot of trouble indeed in San Francisco's Chinatown. As bold as Jack is, though, he's never quite as tough, brave or as efficient as he thinks he is.

A Chinatown gang kidnaps the mailorder bride of Jack's Chinese-American friend, played by Dennis Dun, and steals Jack's truck.

Russell's character is extremely annoyed about his truck. "How do you think I feel?" Dun points out. "I lost a whole girl."

The story gets extremely sketchy as it goes on, but basically the girl was kidnapped because she had green eyes, which one character explains is an expensive luxury item in the white slavery trade, "like leather bucket seats." The theft of the truck is still hazier, but maybe its upholstery was responsible, too.

Anyway, the girl ends up in the foul clutches of an evil 2,000-year-old sorcerer named Lo Pan, who has his own special uses for a good green-eyed woman.

There are a lot of other peripheral persons and subplots, all of which race by at breakneck speed.

For example, Russell's love interest, played by Kim Cattrall, speeds up her characterization by simply walking in and announcing, "You know me, I'm always poking my nose in where it doesn't belong."

This fast, furious and frequently funny movie seems to be an attempt to do what foreign-made martial arts movies do, but do better.

Carpenter told the Denver Post his new picture "is basically a triumph of momentum over content." This is an exceptionally honest description. There's practically no story in "Big Trouble in Little China," but if you put your mind on autopilot, it breezes by very quickly.

"Big Trouble in Little China," rated PG-13 for violence and strong language, is now showing at the North Park Cinemas.

Kanaly: 'Dallas' will be changed

By JUDI HUNT
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — "Dallas" regular Stephen Kanaly, replete with the familiar, roguish smile of his character, Ray Krebbs, says that major changes in the show will make the upcoming television season "unlike anything I've seen in the last eight years. We've already shot (more than) six episodes, and they are some of the best I've seen in the show's entire history."

Kanaly says the return of Patrick Duffy (Bobby Ewing) is just one of the many changes.

"There are so many major changes that Patrick coming back is only a small part of it. We're all thrilled that Patrick's coming back, of course. From an actor's point of view, he did the incredible. He walked away from the show, and they actually begged him to come back. And to get him, they gave him everything he ever dreamed of. Other than that, he's the tip of the iceberg."

Among the changes Kanaly predicts should make a considerable difference is a "whole new" production and writing staff. But perhaps the most important change, he said, is the return of the show's original producer, Leonard Katzman, who left a year ago to do another project.

"In his absence, the show slipped six points in the ratings," says Kanaly, whose character began with the show as a ranch hand and later, because of his resemblance to the late Jim Davis (Jock Ewing), became an illegitimate Ewing son.

Kanaly doesn't know if Charlene Tilton, who played Lucy Ewing, also will return.

"No one seems to know if she will or not. She has the capability to do so, because she only left to get married. But currently Charlene is doing a play, which ties her up, so if she does rejoin the show it will be later on. I'd like her to, because she's a very sweet person."

The 40-year-old Kanaly once thought of quitting the show himself, in the second season, "because I thought I was being overlooked. They talked me out of it, and I'm glad they did, because it's been a lot of fun doing the show, even the parts we film in Dallas in the summer when it's 110 degrees out. I never thought I'd hate to put on a pair of jeans, but I do there."

He has learned, however, that "you can exist there, if you walk slowly, take plenty of potassium — I eat a banana every day — and drink liquids like Gatorade all day long. I did that once during a rodeo sequence we were filming, and I still lost two pounds that day."

But he thinks the men in the cast have it a lot easier than the "Dallas" women in the hot, humid weather of a Texas summer.

"They get all dolled up in those beautiful, suffocating gowns, and you can tell they're suffering. Their makeup almost melts on their face."

Kanaly doesn't want "Dallas" to film all of its episodes in California, because "I think going on the road is important to the show. The Texas element is what makes this show different from any of the other evening soaps. Every time we go back, we find something different, something we can incorporate in the show. And I think we've made some of that difference because, since Dallas has been exposed on our shows, it's become a major convention center with a lot of new hotels and a population that's gone from 800,000 to 1.5 million people."

As for how long the cast will be returning to Dallas, Kanaly believes it will be for at least two more years.

"Some of us, like myself and Larry (Hagman, who plays J.R. Ewing), wouldn't mind if it went on and on. We're capable of change, and we have enough characters that we ought to be able to keep pace with the times. There's no reason that we couldn't continue indefinitely like the daytime soaps, if the audience wants us.

"What we have to guard against is the weariness factor that hits any show that continues year after year. You can't be on the air for a long time without touching almost all the bases. But I think our producers are aware of that and are guarding against it, which is why we have a whole new ballgame going to pitch in September. Just watch that first special, two-hour episode, and we'll tell you what the game rules are."

Beasley proud of work in 'Moonlighting'

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — "I used to be shy," admits Allyce Beasley, who stars as Ms. Dipesto on ABC-TV's "Moonlighting." "Like I'd put on a sexy dress and I'd get scared and run back in the house and put on something over it. I'm not so much that way as I used to be, but that's definitely how Ms. Dipesto is."

Back in her native New York on a visit, Ms. Beasley is tiny-voiced and fast-talking. She's softer-looking in person than on TV, even more vulnerable. Her large wary eyes miss nothing, even when she's relaxed.

She laughs as she talks about one of her favorite episodes, "North by North Dipesto," where she got to wear drop-dead glamour gowns by designer Bob Mackie "with cleavage down to there. That was really fun. I got a lot more fan mail after that!"

Dressing up is something Ms. Beasley likes to do "only when I really have to." She hates makeup and wears very little in private life.

"I'm self-conscious about myself with makeup," she says.

Seeing herself made up makes it hard for her to watch herself on TV.

"It took me a while to get used to seeing how I look."

She's very proud of her work on "Moonlighting" and of the show as a whole.

"People talk about the Golden Age of television and how it was in the 50s and I think we're starting a new Golden Age, or maybe this could be the Platinum. Glenn Gordon Caron (the show's creator-producer) is really starting something very wonderful."

Getting the role was "like winning the lottery," says Ms. Beasley. "Not that I didn't deserve it, but that doesn't necessarily mean you're going to get a job."

Caron's method of handing the scripts to the cast right before filming drove everyone crazy at first.

"It took us about six months until we got smooth with that way of working. On Thursday or Friday, when we've all been working all week and a six-page script comes down, people get kind of grouchy. But the show's working, so who can argue with it? The manic quality of 'Moonlighting' is really very contemporary. That's what I think people find attractive about the show."

Ms. Beasley's home life these days is manic, too. She's recently moved into a new house in Los Angeles with her husband, actor Vincent Schiavelli, and their dog Abe. Two actors under one roof isn't always easy going, Ms. Beasley says.

"You never begrudge the other person's working. Whatever comes into the household is great, but if you're not working and the other person is, it really brings it home."

She and Schiavelli (who's featured on CBS-TV's "Fast Times at Ridgemont High") like to entertain friends at home rather than go out.

"He does all the cooking. I try to be like the olive oil geiger counter. He's a wonderful cook, but I'm always fat-conscious or health-conscious. He always tells me his hand slipped."

One of Ms. Beasley's closest friends is co-star Cybill Shepherd.

"Bruce Willis is like a cousin or a brother. I love him," Ms. Beasley says. "But I have a much different relationship with Cybill. Maybe it's the boy-girl thing. Cybill and I get together and talk and jabber about everything. We're pretty different and there's a definite attraction there. She's been very generous and very giving to me and I really value our friendship a lot."

Ms. Beasley's character is not so close to Ms. Shepherd's Maddy. Although her character has a first name, Agnes, Ms. Beasley likes to think of her without one.

"In one episode she says, 'My friends call me Ms. Dipesto.' I like that," Ms. Beasley says with a giggle.

She's hoping next season will find her working on the detective cases, but says it's more likely that the writers will develop Ms. Dipesto's personal life.

"There'll probably be more romance for Ms. Dipesto. After all, 'Moonlighting' is billed as a romantic comedy."

Writers dreaming up stunts for Ball's new show

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Carroll Jr. and Madelyn Davis are cooking up something funny with the pasta machine in their office.

Carroll took a sheet of paper and ran it through the machine, turning it into confetti.

"That's what Lucy is going to do to Gale Gordon's tie," he said.

"We like to try out all the stunts ourselves, because sometimes our ideas don't work," Miss Davis added. "People get very testy if you bring in a stunt that doesn't work."

Carroll and Miss Davis, writing partners for 39 years, are back with Lucille Ball in her return to series television. The partners, who previously created "I Love Lucy" and "The Lucy Show," also are producing her new sitcom for ABC, "Life With Lucy."

Miss Ball, who will be 75 on Aug. 11, has not had a series since "Here's Lucy," her third and final show for CBS, which left the air in 1974. Last year, she made her first TV movie, "The Stone Pillow," playing a spunky bag lady.

The writers' association with Miss Ball goes back to 1948, when they began writing for her radio show, "My Favorite Husband." They also wrote for "Here's Lucy" and "The Lucy-Desi Comedy Hour," and did the screenplay for "Yours, Mine and Ours," which starred Miss Ball and Henry Fonda. In addition, they created "The Mothers-In-Law" TV series and were executive producers of the sitcoms "Private Benjamin" and "Alice."

When Miss Ball decided to return to series TV, she called on her tried-and-true collaborators. "We sort of said she's the best, so how could we say no?" Miss Davis said.

In the series, Miss Ball's late husband was Gale Gordon's partner in a hardware store in South Pasadena. Her daughter is married to Gordon's son, and they all end up living in the same house.

In one typical plot, the writers said, Miss Ball will rent her house to a band in town for the Rose Parade. And, of course, she'll end up marching with them in the parade. Or, she might work on a float for the parade.

"So we've been prowling around hardware stores looking for ideas," said Miss Davis. "We're going to do something with a rolling ladder. We've been wanting to use a ladder for years.

"Both Lucy and Gale are in marvelous physical shape. Lucy's always had tremendous stamina. I used to try out her stunts. They'd wear me out. In the past, quite often we'd have Lucy flying on a wire. We flew her one week when she got carried away by a helium balloon. When we started talking about the show I said if we think of some wild physical things we'll let you know. She said OK. I said, 'We won't ask you to fly.' She said, 'Oh, I can fly.'"

"So she may be the angel in her grandson's Christmas play," Carroll said.

"This will be vintage Lucy, but brought up to date," Miss Davis said.

"In the second story she uses geese to guard the hardware store. Gale gets trapped by the geese. Lucy ends up being trapped, too."

Miss Ball will not get involved in the type of sexual situations common on NBC's "The Golden Girls." "We'll be contemporary, but I doubt that we'll get into any explicit or hard humor," Miss Davis said. "It's not her style, or ours, either."

Miss Davis is married to a surgeon and has five children. Carroll was married for the second time last year. He has one daughter. "We once dated and considered marriage when we were both single," Carroll said, "but it might have ruined everything."

They became partners when they were staff writers at CBS in the 1940s.

"The first script we wrote had Richard Crenna in it," Carroll said. "He played a teen-ager who had a crush on Lucy."

People don't mind standing in line for tickets to see De Niro

By DENA KLEIMAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Gary Cummings, a librarian from Clinton, Conn., was recently in a line on 48th Street that began near Eighth Avenue and stretched to Broadway. So were Nancy Wemhoener, a housewife from Manhattan; Bill Sliwa, a firefighter from Staten Island (N.Y.); Mark Grampp, a 21-year-old senior at the State University of New York at Purchase, and Ken Heckle, a tourist from England.

They were were willing to stand in line for more than two hours for one reason: Robert De Niro.

"De Niro's my boy," said Ed Tighe, a Wall Street lawyer, who was in the line outside the Longacre Theater, where De Niro is scheduled to open Wednesday in "Cuba and His Teddy Bear," a new play by Reinaldo Povod. "I love this guy. I'd see him in 'Swan Lake.'"

The play, which also stars Burt Young, who played Sylvester Stallone's brother-in-law in "Rocky," and Ralph Macchio, who played the title role in "The Karate Kid" and its sequel, is set on the Lower East Side of Manhattan and is about a drug-dealing Cuban-American and his teenage son.

The production first played at the Public Theater, and all tickets to that eight-week run were sold out within three hours of the box office opening on April 10. A call to Telecharge indicated that seats in all price ranges were still available for the Broadway run.

The actors agreed to work for salaries of $700 a week so the play could be produced on Broadway. Seats in the orchestra and first balcony will go at the usual Broadway rates, with a top of $37.50. But all second-balcony seats are being sold for $10.

"Besides this there is not a lot worth seeing," said Steve Sherman, who is dean of students at Norman Thomas High School, adding that he was particularly gratified that some seats were being offered at $10.

"It's probably the only chance to see De Niro on stage in our lifetime," said Raymond Bongiovanni, who drove in from New Jersey to wait in line.

"I'm coming to see a great actor," said Martin Pincus, who described himself as "an attorney and actor."

"We tried to see him downtown," said Holly Hughes, a magazine editor.

"De Niro," replied Matei Stoler, a subcontractor from Staten Island, when asked why she was waiting in line for tickets. "He's one of my favorites. What do I care about the play? I'm not even interested in the theme."

Genetics takes bitterness, burp out of cucumbers

By TED LARSEN
King Features

To put is quite bluntly, you're probably not burping on cucumbers as much as you used to, and you can thank genetic engineering for that. Please forgive my blatant lack of sensitivity, but this is an important point for enjoying one of the most abundant fruits.

Yes, cucumbers are fruits, not vegetables, and thanks to genetic tinkering, they are a lot more enjoyable these days. Don't panic at the word "genetics." We aren't about to see a headline such as "Monster Cucumber Devours Manhattan."

For years the major drawbacks of cucumbers were their bitterness and burp. The cause of these unendearing traits was hidden deep in the cucumber's genetic make-up, in something we'll call the "burp gene."

It took years to isolate this annoying speck, but new hybrid varieties lack it, and cucumbers slide past the palate much more easily (and don't return). The long, slender "European" varieties are even sweeter, though considerably more expensive.

In the food theater, cucumber is a real trooper. There is evidence it's been used in Thailand for at least 12,000 years, a part of Hindustani Indian cuisine for 3,000. Around the year 1300 the English discovered it and called their new garden addition "cucumer" after the Latin, "cucumis." The Spaniards brought cucumber to America where the Pueblo Indians thought it was the best discovery since adobe (and a lot more flavorable).

Today, cucumber is a major commercial and backyard crop in America. The U.S. Department of Agriculture says we consumed more than four pounds each, on an average, in 1983.

While modern botany may have removed the burp and bitterness from most just-picked cucumbers, these annoying traits sometime appear when the fruit is stored for more than a couple of days and begins to dry out. To help retain moisture, store-bought varieties are often waxed and must be peeled, or plunged into hot water, before eating.

To absolutely rid cucumbers of any remaining bitterness, try the following. Slice about an inch from each end and peel the cucumber thoroughly. Now run a fork lengthwise down the cucumber, scoring it all around. You will have removed about 98 percent of the area where bitterness hides.

Salting before use also works well, but leaves the cucumber less crisp. Pickling cucumbers are also excellent to eat because they have softer seeds and are sweeter. They are more yellowish in color, but perfect for eating (and never waxed).

Cucumbers have long been a dieter's favorite because their calorie content is almost nil; however, they also have several other nutritional benefits. Fresh cucumbers are quite high in vitamins C, E and A with a strong dose of fiber and potassium. Sodium content is among the lowest of any vegetable...er...I mean fruit.

Just about every culture has its cucumber salad. Because of my heritage, I'm crazy about the Danish version, "agurkesalat."

CUCUMBER SALAD
2 medium cucumbers
1 tablespoon wine vinegar
1 tablespoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar (or to taste)
1 tablespoon fresh dill, chopped
Sour cream

Combine dressing ingredients and mix well. Pour over cucumbers.

Hints:

Try to obtain fresh dill. If dried must be used, reduce amount to 1½ teaspoons.

Try adding this cucumber salad to a regular tossed salad. It's a real flavor boost.

While not traditional, thinly sliced raw carrots can be tossed in the dressing along with the cucumbers and then pressed with them. The result is a colorful taste and texture contrast.

• • •

The famed James Beard felt soup thickening is the only decent use for instant potatoes. The recipe is mine, but the instant spuds are his inspiration.

CREAM OF CUCUMBER SOUP
2 pounds cucumber
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 cup shallots, chopped
5 cups chicken stock
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar
⅛ cup fresh dill
1⅓ cups instant potatoes
Salt, pepper
1 cup sour cream

Trim the ends from the cucumbers, peel, seed and score. Roughly chop the cucumbers and set aside. Melt the butter in a 3-quart saucepan and saute the shallots until just wilted — 2-3 minutes. Do not brown. Add the cucumbers, stock, vinegar and dill. Simmer over low heat for 30 minutes or until the cucumbers are very tender.

Puree in a food processor or blender. Return to the saucepan, bring to another simmer and stir in the potatoes. Cook slowly for 20 additional minutes. If extremely thick, thin with water. Add salt and pepper to taste.

This soup can be served hot or cold in the following manner. Hot: Remove from heat and whisk in the sour cream. Do not return to heat. Serve. Cold: When final simmering and thinning is complete, allow soup to cool and then refrigerate. Before serving, whisk in sour cream. Serve.

Both versions can be garnished with chopped raw cucumber, dill and sour cream.

Hints:

For a lower-calorie version, substitute yogurt. To make the soup richer and silkier, mix heavy cream with the sour cream in a 50-50 proportion.

Try using ¼-½ cup of farina rather than the potatoes. Some cooks think a smoother soup is the result.

Fresh chopped watercress can be substituted for the dill, or try using them both in 50-50 proportion.

Cooked cucumbers are a staple of European cuisine, but are not very well known here in the U.S. We really are missing something.

SAUTEED CUCUMBERS
2 medium cucumbers
Salt
1 clove garlic, crushed
1 cup sliced onions
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 tablespoons chopped chives
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
½ cup sliced black olives
Salt, pepper

Trim the ends from the cucumbers, then peel, seed and score them. Toss with salt and allow to stand for one hour to drain. Pat dry with paper towels. Melt butter and saute garlic and onion until onion is wilted, about 3-4 minutes. Do not brown.

Add the cucumber and cook an additional 3 minutes. Cucumber should remain crunchy. Remove garlic. Add the chives, parsley and olives and cook 1 minute more. Season with salt and pepper.

Hints:

Just before serving, add ⅛ cup heavy cream and reduce slightly to thicken. Sour cream or yogurt can also be added, but cook these only enough to heat through. Do not boil.

Try substituting the other fresh herbs such as dill or basil for the chives and parsley.

Peeled and seeded tomatoes can also be added if they are first sauteed in butter to evaporate some of their juice.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon
Monday, July 14, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Expenses will rise, but so will income. Odd circumstances frustrate you in October but result in golden opportunities for you at your workplace in 1987. Strive for a better balance between work and play and you will be both productive and satisfied.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Spend time getting yourself organized and work will be more productive. Put your natural talents to work. Humor helps ease an embarrassing situation. Show loved ones more affection.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Look to superiors for assistance only if you run into a difficult problem. Employment opportunities should proceed without a hitch. Your mate or partner has a logical solution to a difficult personal dilemma.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Out-of-town business trips can be fun if you take along your mate. Perseverance really begins to pay off. A happy romance is possible for those who are uncommitted.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work is excellent therapy if you are feeling blue and frustrated. Finish up some uncompleted tasks. Correspondence could help open new doors to employment or social contacts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Meet deadlines and impress superiors. New duties are challenging. You perform brilliantly under fire! Tend to first things first. Partners may need diplomatic handling.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): All financial matters need your attention now. Use the conservative approach. Try to be flexible when dealing with personal problems. Your mate or partner would rather take the lead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tackle difficult work assignments early in the day. Withhold making decisions until all the facts are known. A noon break provides needed relaxation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An influential person seeks your advice. Show enthusiasm for new work methods. Accept compromises good-naturedly and you will make new allies. A hasty decision could be dangerous where romance is concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Seek an expert's advice before making impulsive investments. More income can be made through hobbies or avocations. Consider getting marketing advice. A new romance could cause a conflict at work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good news comes in the mail or through a friend. Luck helps you to increase your savings. You must find more time for rest and relaxation. Pleasure trips will bring you enormous happiness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Set a definite time limit on a project or you could be investing too much. Communicate your true feelings to your mate or partner. It will affect romance or business positively.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Expect more travel as part of your job responsibilities. Optimism will help erase tension. Relationships that have been up in the air come down to earth, and things begin to settle down.

PUZZLE ANSWER

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I am a rubber bridge player of the old school. All my life my friends and I have played that all two-bids are forcing to game, and so is a suit response to a two no trump opening bid. A new player in our game insists that neither of these actions is forcing. We have agreed to accept your decision. — J.L., Pompano Beach, Fla.

A.—Both are partly right. All opening two-bids in a suit are forcing either to game or until the opponents are doubled (if you play weak two-bids with two clubs as your strong bid, the same applies to an opening two club bid followed by a rebid in a suit). However an opening bid of two no trump, whatever your range, is not forcing.

There is a logical reason for this. A demand opening bid in a suit has an unlimited range at the top end. Thus, the opening bidder can have game or even slam in hand, but he might need room to describe a two-suiter. There is no way to bid such hands contructively if opener has to worry about the possibility of responder dropping him short of game.

An opening bid of two no trump, however, is a limit bid. Whether your range for such action is 21-22 or 22-24, you need some degree of help from partner if you are to make game. Therefore, partner is free to pass a two no trump opening bid if he has a bust, or near bust if you use the lower range.

The suit response to an opening bid of two no trump presents a different problem. True, if partner opens 2 NT, it might be better to play the hand in three hearts if you have a holding such as:

♠xx ♡Jxxxxx ◇xxx ♣xx

But suppose your hand is:

♠Kxx ♡Jxx ◇K10xxxx ♣x

Depending on partner's hand, your best contract could be three no trump or a diamond game or slam. If you have to start with a jump to four diamonds to show this hand, you have robbed yourself of a whole level of bidding that could be invaluable to probe for the right spot in which to play the hand.

Since you are far more likely to have a few points on the hand than a bust, it is better to treat a suit response to an opening bid of two no trump as forcing. It is more important to have constructive bidding sequences than to limit a possible loss at a contract of two no trump when you might be able to make exactly three of a suit.

What do you do with the first example given when partner opens two no trump? You have a choice of actions: either pass and let him do the best he can in his no trump partial, or else gamble out four hearts and hope your doubletons and six-card suit will be enough to make game. I prefer the latter option.

Copland, Anderson among honored artists

WASHINGTON (AP) — A dozen artists and art patrons, including filmmaker Frank Capra, composer Aaron Copland and contralto Marian Anderson, have been chosen to receive this year's National Medal of Arts citations.

Along with Ms. Anderson, who was once forbidden to give a concert in Constitution Hall because she was black, Copland and Capra, the painter Willem De Kooning, choreographer Agnes de Mille, actress Eva La Gallienne, scholar Alan Lomax, literary critic Lewis Mumford and writer Eudora Welty also will be honored.

Three patrons of the arts were singled out by President Reagan. They are: the Exxon Corp., Dominique de Menil and Seymour H. Knox.

The recipients will be given their medals at a White House luncheon on Monday.

The National Medal of Arts was first proposed by Reagan as a way to honor distinguished artists and arts patrons in 1983. Congress agreed to establish an official medal and passed legislation on Jan. 23, 1984, authorizing the president to award the medal. The first awards were presented last year.

Capra, known for his stylish comedies of the 1930s and '40s, made more than 60 movies.

Miss Anderson was the first black singer to be named a permanent member of the Metropolitan Opera in 1955 and the first black to perform at the White House in 1958.

De Kooning, who was born in the Netherlands, was a leader of the abstract expressionism. His gigantic canvases were slashed with color.

Miss De Mille, who choreographed "Rodeo" in 1942, bought the techniques of ballet to Broadway musicals, including "Oklahoma!"

Miss La Gallienne founded several theater companies and appeared in repertory productions on Broadway.

Mumford, an architecture critic, is author of "The City in History" and "The Culture of Cities."

Fuzzy Zoeller
...Busch winner

Golf

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Fuzzy Zoeller, who began the day five shots off the pace, shot a 7-under-par 64—274 to win the Anheuser-Busch Classic by two strokes. "You're never dead. Five shots is not that much if you can get a little momentum," said Zoeller, who earned $90,000 for the his third victory this year and 10th overall, and boosted his 1986 earnings to $332,883. Two shots behind at 276 was Jodie Mudd, a winless four-year pro who earned $54,000 for his showing...

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.VA. — Don January tapped in a 1-foot par putt on the first playoff hole to defeat Jim Ferree and capture The Greenbrier-American Express senior tournament for the second straight year. January shot a 1-under-par 71 to finish at 9-under-par 207 while Ferree had a 66 that included a hole-in-one on the 177-yard third hole...

Basketball

OVIEDO, Spain - Argentina shocked the United States 74-70 Sunday in the World Championship semifinals. It was the Argentines' fourth victory and the Americans' first loss in the 15-day round-robin tournament. Each team plays two more games in the semifinal round in Oviedo before the championship round begins Thursday in Madrid. The United States must win the next two games against Canada and...Yugoslavia to have a chance at the gold medal...

Basketball

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Olden Polynice, the University of Virginia's leading scorer last season, has lost his athletic scholarship and been dropped from the school's team after pleading no contest to a shoplifting charge. Polynice pleaded no contest July 10 to a charge of shoplifting a $17 set of headphones. After the athlete was handed a 30-day suspended sentence, Coach Terry Holland said he would recommend Polynice's scholarship be cancelled. "I think he needs a year away from it all. I don't think it would do him or us any good for him to represent the University of Virginia this year," Shultz said...

EDINBURGH, Scotland — The Commonwealth Games, already deep in controversy over the withdrawal of five African nations, suffered another setback when South African-born British athletes Zola Budd and Annette Cowley were barred from participation.

Whiteside-Cox spoil C.E. Boyd's golf run

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

This is the year C.E. Boyd has been winning everything in sight just as a year ago Steve Whiteside won everything left laying around loose.

If C.E. wasn't talking to Steve this week, you couldn't blame him. Sunday Whiteside and Kelly Cox teamed up to horn in on Boyd's year by winning the Jamboree member-guest partnership at Green Tree Country Club, but they did it with such a grandiose flourish that no one could begrudge the victory.

Actually, Boyd and partner Harry Bettis took their third place finish philosophically. "They were eight under par. There wasn't much you could do when the putts were dropping for them like that," Boyd shrugged.

Going into the final round Whiteside-Cox and Boyd-Bettis were tied at 132, which wasn't very good. It was Jay Isaacs and David Pritchett who looked like they were going to run off and hide after opening 66-61—127. Instead they ballooned to a 72—199 to finish second.

Whiteside and Cox came home with a 63—195.

"We had eight birdies," Whiteside explained, "and 10 pars. I changed putters for the final round, which is something I never do, but it worked." After Sunday, he may do it more often.

Whiteside and Cox have talked about playing together in a partnership since high school days.

"We had nine one putt greens in a row, three through 12," Whiteside marveled in retrospect.

The birds came on three, four, five, six and seven and, after a brief recess, resumed on 10, 12 and was capped off by a totally unnecessary bird on 18. At least two rivals who were sick of watching birdies fall, it was unnecessary.

GTCC Jamboree

Both plan to play some more golf this summer, but not as a team. "I'll be playing at Broadmoor in Colorado Springs next," says Kelly, who drilled home 75 and 80 foot putts to keep alive that nine in a row streak.

"And I'll be playing with Randy Geiselman at Merion, Pa. (site of the 1980 U.S. Open), but outside of the club championship, that will be about it," says Whiteside.

SHORT PUTTS— Bill Rigney, Sr., and Bill Rigney, Jr., teamed up for a 219. Bill, Jr., is former GM of the Midland Cubs and Bill, Sr., of course, managed several major league clubs, but was the New York Giants' third baseman in what many remember as the greatest pennant race of all time....1951 when Bobby Thomson's Shot-Heard-Round-the-World finished off the Brooklyn Dodgers in the National League playoff game....Mark McDonald, Dallas Morning News sports writer, teamed up with Rob Porter, a teammate on some Midland Lee championship baseball teams, to shoot 73-78-81 in the third flight....Apparently that golfing vacation at Tamarron paid off for former Midland Cub pitcher Mark Thomas, who teamed up with Norm Smith for a 213 go win the second flight...Whiteside, winner of the Men's West Texas at Ranchland Hills last year, finished ninth in the same event at Lubbock this year. "I was one over and really didn't play all that bad. Mike Stanley, Abilene and the University of Houston, won it with a five under."...The Men's WT, which until its return to RHCC last year, took a 20-year vacation from Midland, comes back to the Tall City for the second time in three years at Green Tree next summer...

Lake Jackson takes first in state play

From Staff Reports

Lake Jackson Chaos bounced back to defeat Alvin's Silver Streaks, 8-3, in the finals of the Girls 15 and Under ASA Fast Pitch State softball tournament Sunday at Ulmer Park and earn a trip to the nationals in Sioux Falls, S.D., in mid-August.

The Silver Streaks forced the Chaos to the limit by emerging from the loser's bracket to beat Lake Jackson, 7-4, and necessitate an extra game. It was a three-run homer by Sara Stout that propelled Alvin, which played four games Sunday, to its win.

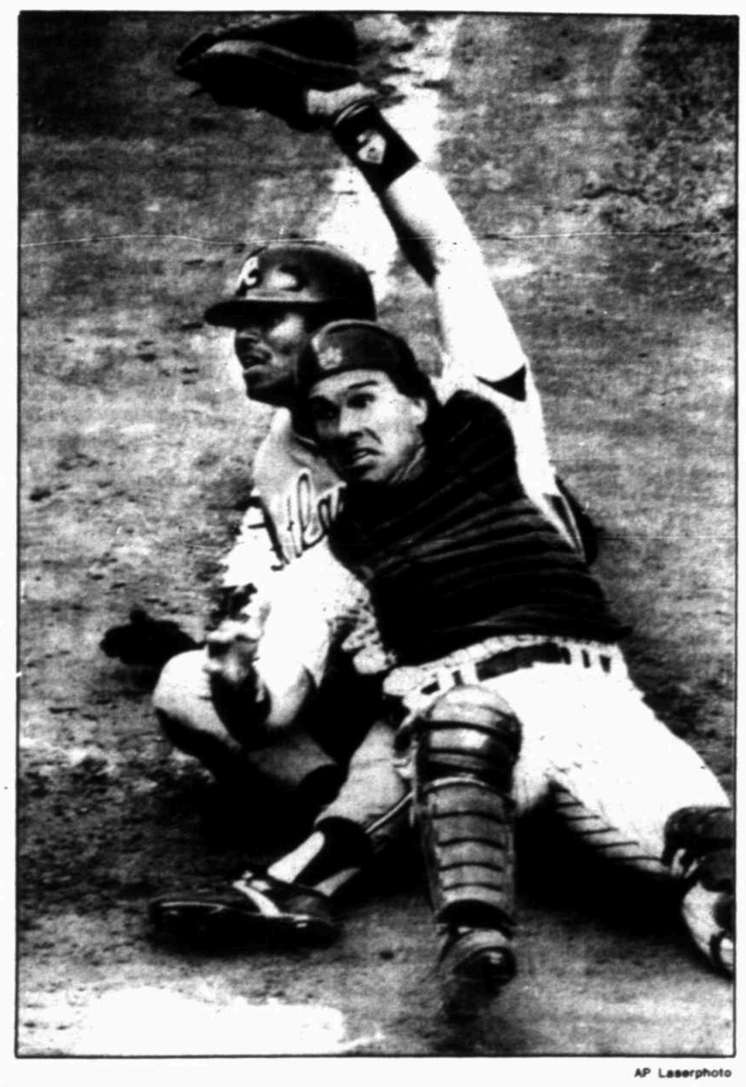

After losing Sunday morning to Lake Jackson, Alvin defeated surprsing Freeport, 14-4, in the loser's bracket final.

Galveston Rotary Wheels and The Woodlands Outlaws finished fourth and fifth, respectively, in the 26-team field. The second through fifth place teams qualify for the regional at San Antonio July 25-27...

The tournament's only grand slam homer was hit by Melissa Aguirre of Woodlands. Two homers were hit during the three-day tournament by Jennifer Stevens and Kim Weber of the Outlaws; Melissa Salazar, Bay City Bulldogs; Jodi Beach, Lake Jackson; Janice Burch, Freeport, and Belinda Lemons, Freeport...

The Iron Michelle pitcher of the tournament was Kerri Veal of Wichita Falls' Sensations. She pitched 62 innings...

Caps outslug Angels, 10-9

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Maybe Midland shortstop Jeff Schaefer summed it up best: "A lot of runs in this ballpark just means a lot of runs."

In other words, even though the Angels scored a lot of runs, they dropped their second straight Texas League slugfest to the Shreveport Captains Sunday, 10-9.

The Captains weathered the marathon contest, which included an 11 minute dust storm delay, to take a 3-1 edge in the five-game set. Tonight's 7:30 contest will wrap up Shreveport's stay in the Tall City for 1986.

And with the Angels serving up pitchers like so many sacrificial lambs, the Captains will be sorry they have to go.

The Captains quartered this one away in the top half of the ninth inning, breaking a 9-9 deadlock with a two-out, clutch double by center fielder Everett Graham.

It was the final comeback in a night full of Shreveport rallies. The Captains erased Midland leads of 3-0, 5-2 and 9-8 as the bullpen could not keep the Angels' ship afloat.

LEFTHANDER MIKE Romanovsky was as disappointing in his Midland debut as he was in his Texas League debut last week. Romanovsky was around for 4⅓ innings, allowing seven runs, six earned, on seven hits and five walks. His earned run average in two starts in the Texas League is 14.01 after going 8-2 with a 2.86 ERA in Class A Palm Springs.

The loss spoiled another fine night of hitting by the Angels who have scored 21 runs in two nights off the stingiest pitching staff in the Texas League and have nothing to show for it.

Doug Davis hit his fourth homer of the year, a two-run shot in the second, and Dante Bichette extended his hitting streak to 11 games with a 3-for-5 performance at the plate.

But with the starting pitching wavering and the bullpen faltering, the Angels fell one rally short.

The winning run came off reliever DeWayne Buice, 8-5, who had squashed a Shreveport rally in the eighth by striking out Charlie Hayes and getting Johnny Grimes, a Monahans and Texas Tech product, to tap back to the mound.

But in the ninth, Buice yielded a rare base on balls to lead off pinch-hitter Mike Jones to ignite the rally. Buice had allowed just 17 free passes in 64 innings coming into Sunday's game.

The walk came back to haunt Buice, however, as the Captains moved Jones carefully around to third with a sacrifice by Angel Escobar and a fielder's choice to bring up the left-hand swinging Graham.

AFTER FOULING off four full count pitches by Buice, Graham blasted a double over the head of center fielder Al Romero for the game winner.

Snubbed pitchers hurl like All-Stars

Associated Press

Four pitchers who failed to make their respective All-Star teams hurled shutouts Sunday as the major-league season reached the annual three-day midseason break.

Minnesota's Bert Blyleven threw a three-hitter and beat the New York Yankees 5-0, Detroit's Jack Morris fired a four-hitter for his second consecutive shutout as the Tigers trimmed Kansas City 5-0, Neil Allen of the Chicago White Sox hurled a five-hitter in a 7-0 rout of Baltimore and Ron Darling of the pitching-rich New York Mets scattered nine hits in a 2-0 decision over Atlanta.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Twins 5, Yankees 0

Blyleven allowed only one hit and one walk until the ninth in pitching his —and the Twins' — first shutout of the season and 52nd of his career. Roy Smalley homered off Bob Tewksbury in the first inning for Minnesota's first run and Greg Gagne drove in three runs with a triple and single.

"Hopefully, a game like today will get us over the hump," said Blyleven, who struck out eight and exceeded 100 strikeouts in a season for the 16th time in his 17-year career.

Tigers 5, Royals 0

Kirk Gibson and Lou Whitaker homered in support of Morris, who struck out 12 and walked three. It was the fourth consecutive complete game for Morris, who struck out every man in the Royals' batting order at least once and has pitched 22 consecutive scoreless innings.

Gibson hit a three-run homer off rookie Scott Bankhead in the third inning for Detroit's first runs and Whitaker homered with the bases empty in the fifth. The defending world champion Royals finished the first half of the season with a 40-48 mark and are 8½ games out in the AL West.

White Sox 7, Orioles 0

Joel Skinner's three-run homer off Scott McGregor in the second inning was the big blow while Allen, who began the season in the bullpen, pitched his first complete game since 1983 when he was with St. Louis. He struck out four and walked one. Chicago's Greg Walker tripled twice and scored each time.

Angels 12, Red Sox 3

Dick Schofield homered and drove in three runs, Brian Downing hit a two-run homer and John Candelaria had his second straight scoreless outing since returning from the disabled list. The Angels had a season high of 17 hits in a game that was delayed for almost three hours at the start by rain.

Candelaria, who went five innings against Milwaukee last Tuesday, gave up two hits and three walks and struck out seven in 5 1-3 innings in his second start since undergoing surgery on his left elbow on April 16. The Red Sox fell behind 10-0 and did not score until the eighth inning but retained their seven-game lead over the Yankees in the AL East.

Rangers 5, Indians 3

A's 10, Blue Jays 5

Mike Davis' triple sparked a five-run seventh inning as Oakland took advantage of a two-out, two-run error. Trailing 4-3, the A's batted around in the seventh. They scored the last two runs when Toronto first baseman Willie Upshaw dropped a throw from third base. Oakland's Jose Canseco hit his major league-leading 23rd homer in the ninth.

Pinch- hitter Dwayne Murphy started the seventh with a single off reliever Mark Eichhorn and Davis greeted Bill Caudill with his triple. Donnie Hill's single put Oakland ahead. After two walks by Tom Henke loaded the bases, Canseco hit a run-scoring grounder. Canseco stole second and two runs scored when Upshaw dropped a throw from Rance Mulliniks on Dave Kingman's grounder. George Bell homered for Toronto.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Mets 2, Braves 0

Darling got offensive and defensive support from center fielder Len Dykstra, who tripled and scored in the first inning and homered in the sixth after throwing out the potential tying run at the plate in the top of the inning.

Atlanta, which has lost nine of 10 games, was blanked twice and outscored 28-2 during the Mets' four-game sweep. One of the Braves' two runs was unearned and they managed only 25 hits in the four games. Loser Doyle Alexander allowed just four hits.

Little, Geddes play off for Open title

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

KETTERING, Ohio — Sally Little, who has not won in more than four years, and Jane Geddes, who has not won at all her four-year career, came from behind to tie for the 41st United States Women's Open championship Sunday on the soggy NCR Country Club course.

They will meet in an 18-hole playoff today starting at 12:20 p.m. The playoff, the fifth in a Women's Open, will be televised by ABC from 4-5 p.m.

Little, once one of the premier women's golfers before being struck down by injuries and illness, shot two-under 70 to finish at one-under 287. She missed a 25-foot birdie putt on No. 18 that would have given her the title. The 34-year-old Little was born in South Africa and became an American citizen in August 1982.

Geddes, a 26-year-old native of Northport, N.Y., also missed a birdie putt of 15 feet on the final hole minutes before Little came along. When Geddes dropped her par putt on 18 she completed a round of 69.

The leaders ended a stroke in front of Betsy King, the third-round leader, and Ayako Okamoto of Japan. King, who held a two-shot lead with five holes left, lost her chance at the biggest title in women's golf when she took a double-bogey 6 on the 14th hole.

There has not been a playoff in this championship since 1976, when JoAnne Carner won her second Open by beating Sandra Palmer by two shots in a playoff.

Pat Bradley, going for her third major women's title of this year, shot a 69 Sunday tied for fifth at 290 with Amy Alcott and two others.

Having a chance for the Open championship represents a big comeback for Little, who has gone through difficult times over the last four years. Abdominal surgery, knee surgery and chronic back problems have kept her from winning since the Mayflower Classic in spring of 1982. She had to drop off the tour for five months to recover from the knee surgery in 1983.

Before her setbacks, Little had won 12 times in less than three and a half years.

In the final round of the 1978 Open, Little shot an Open record 65 at the Country Club of Indianapolis, lifting her to a tie for second with Carner, one shot behind the champion, Hollis Stacy.

As Sunday's play began, the course was still soggy from the heavy rains of the first three days and a light drizzle that lasted most of this morning. Out onto this long-playing track went the leaders just as the sun began to break through for the first time in a couple of days. This made the playing conditions warm and very muggy.

King drove into the deep right rough off the first tee. The result was a bogey at the par-4 hole of 412 yards. Okamoto hit a fine drive down the middle but put her wood second shot through the green into the shallow bunker in back of the putting surface.

That was the 10th time she had missed the green in regulation in her last 19 holes. But Okamoto pitched to within 3 feet and dropped the putt to save par.

Okamoto did not hit a green in regulation Sunday until the fourth hole, so she missed 12 greens in her last 21 before putting a 9-iron onto the middle of the fourth green. She then three-putted for a bogey 5, so that she and King were deadlocked with Little for the lead at that point.

King, who had lost the lead when she bogeyed the first and second holes, regained it by herself at the seventh, where she dropped an 18-foot first putt for a birdie. King's bogey at the second came when she three putted.

The Pennsylvanian has a tendency to rush second putts. She likes to putt through, that is take her second putt immediately after her first, even though her opponent is away. At the second hole King didn't take enough time to set herself, so she missed an 18-inch second putt.

Same old tune, another verse

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Baseball's annual midseason pause — the grand and glamorous All-Star Game — comes again Tuesday night under another infernal big top. If past form holds, the evening will unfold as just another dull summer rerun.

This will be the 57th game in a series begun in 1933. But the contest has become predictable: The National League has won 13 of the last 14 meetings and will likely be favored once more.

The two teams will meet at the Astrodome in Houston — the granddaddy of all indoor arenas — where the Astros have turned the National League West on its ear. A year ago, the game was played in another indoor venue, the Minneapolis Metrodome, and the Nationals prevailed routinely, 6-1.

The American League has infused itself with some fresh faces this year, notably Wally Joyner and Jose Canseco, the rookie sluggers, and a starting pitcher with Dwight Gooden-like credentials: Roger Clemens, the 15-game winner from Boston.

National League fans, finding no reason to tamper with success, returned several reliable old warriors to the game: Gary Carter, Mike Schmidt, Dale Murphy and Ozzie Smith.

CLEMENS is expected to face Gooden, the gifted Met pitcher who is enduring a spotty 1986 season, at the start.

It is worth noting that the voting process was altered siginficantly this year. Ballots were expanded to allow spectators more choices at each position; under the old format, it is likely that Joyner would have been a write-in candidate and that the Yankees' Don Mattingly would have won a starting spot at first.

No matter. Mattingly will again be at the game, and New Yorkers will revel in the number of local representatives: five for the soaring Mets, four for the Yankees. The Red Sox and the Astros will also have four players each.

Sadly, several of the game's grand old masters were passed over, including four 300-game winners: Tom Seaver, Phil Niekro, Don Sutton and Steve Carlton. Also among the missing are the all-time hit leader, Pete Rose; the all-time strikeout king, Nolan Ryan, and the only active player with at least 500 home runs, Reggie Jackson. That's seven potential Hall of Famers who will join the rest of the viewing audience who will see the game on ABC starting at 8 p.m. Eastern Daylight Time.

The game, however, has become one for the onrushing stars — Joyner, Canseco, Kirby Puckett, Sid Fernandez, Darryl Strawberry — and for the bona fide drawing cards who are still productive everyday players: Rickey Henderson, Cal Ripken, Keith Hernandez or Dave Parker.

All-Star Game

THE YANKEES will have two starters in Henderson and Dave Winfield, and the Mets — the team with the best record in baseball — will have four: Carter, Hernandez, Strawberry and Gooden. Winfield, who has been benched lately against right-handed pitching, might be the only player in the game who is good enough to make the All-Star Game but cannot start for his own team.

There are oddities, too. Steve Garvey, a 10-time All-Star and generally regarded as one of the sport's good guys, will not be in attendance, although he was second in the voting to Hernandez. Even Hernandez was surprised by the support he received, considering the occasional booing he has received since his admission of past drug difficulties.

The Houston Astros and San Francisco Giants, clubs that figured to finish at the bottom of the National League West, will have a total of seven players at the game. Six of them have never appeared in the game before: Glenn Davis, Kevin Bass, Mike Scott and Dave Smith of the Astros, and Chris Brown and Mike Krukow of the Giants. Chili Davis of San Francisco has been selected once. Interestingly, Bass, the Houston slugger, did not appear among the top 16 in voting for outfield berths this season, and Glenn Davis was not in the top eight among first basemen. Neither would qualify as a household name.

GEORGE BRETT, the Kansas City third baseman and a 10-time star, bowed out because of a shoulder injury, opening a spot for the one player, above all, who deserves to start: Boston's Wade Boggs, who may yet become baseball's next .400 hitter.

The Americans, however, will have a number of repeat starters from 1985: Lou Whitaker at second base, Ripken at shortstop and Henderson and Winfield in the outfield. Back again for the Nationals will be Smith at short and all three outfielders — Strawberry, Murphy and Tony Gwynn.

Gooden might have the best pitching support in Sid Fernandez, his Met teammate, and others such as Scott, Krukow and Fernando Valenzuela. But the Americans — should they pull a surprise and take a lead — have the better late-innings relievers in Don Aase, Dave Righetti and Willie Hernandez.

And this would not be an All-Star Game without an unhappy face. A year ago, it was Joaquin Andujar, who wanted to start for the National League, did not receive the nod and stayed home. This time, it is Dennis (Oil Can) Boyd of the Red Sox, who was not picked and proceeded to trash the Fenway Park clubhouse and earn a suspension.

Oil Can lubricates scuffed Bosox feelings

BOSTON (AP) — Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd apologized Sunday to his Boston Red Sox teammates for his tirade and walkout on the club three days earlier.

The Red Sox said that Boyd apologized "in a closed clubhouse meeting for his unprofessional actions."

"General Manager Lou Gorman indicated that the issue is now ended and no further statement regarding the matter will be made," the Red Sox reported in a brief release.

"Boyd apologized and then left the clubhouse since his three-day suspension without pay includes today (Sunday)," the club announced. "He will rejoin the team for the trip to the West Coast Wednesday."

Boyd, a right-hander with an 11-6 record and a 3.71 earned run average, began shouting in the clubhouse after he learned that he had not been chosen as one of eight American League pitchers for the All-Star Game on Tuesday in Houston.

He shouted obscenities at just about everyone in sight and threw clothing around as he got out of uniform, donned civilian clothes and bolted from the ballpark.

On Friday next day the Red Sox announced that Boyd had been suspended without pay for a minimum of three days and would not be permitted to rejoin the club until he apologized to teammates for his behavior.

The suspension cost Boyd three days' pay, or about $6,450. He was fined one day's pay, $2,150, for reporting late for the Red Sox' final exhibition game in Florida on April 5.

With a smaller salary in 1985, he was fined one-day's pay, about $1,600, for missing a game less than 24 hours after he got into a shouting match with slugger Jim Rice, who tried to quiet him in the clubhouse after a tough loss.

Meanwhile, family, friends and hometown admirers of the pitcher in Mississippi said they are worried about the outburst that led to the suspension.

"If we have to go up there, I'll put my little money together and we'll do it," Steve Boyd, one of the pitcher's three brothers, said. "I don't know if we can afford it, but we'd like to get up there and just be with him."

But Willie Ludgood, a long-time friend of Boyd's and a waiter at Weidman's restaurant in pitcher's hometown of Meridian, Miss., said Saturday that Boyd should have kept his composure when he was passed over.

ANGELS

"I just fought him off 'til I got a good pitch to hit," explained Graham. "In that situation, you get all keyed up, you get the adrenaline flowing. I got out in front of it, but I hit it pretty good."

Midland manager Joe Maddon emptied his bullpen once again, using four pitchers in an attempt to cool the Captains' bats. Maddon also used four pitchers Saturday against Shreveport. None have been effective.

The Captains, who were last in the league in hitting with a .245 average going into the weekend, have pounded out 28 hits, accepted 19 bases on balls and scored 25 runs in two games.

The Captains' Kevin Burrell blasted two-run homers in the fourth and fifth innings supplying much of the Shreveport punch.

"The bullpen just can't come in with this kind of frequency and be effective," Maddon said. "I've said it time and time again, but to have to come from behind all the time can be very mentally draining on the position players."

USSR adds more Gold to stockpile

MOSCOW (AP) — Sergei Gurylev of the Soviet Union edged American Dan Watson for the gold medal in platform diving and the Soviet water polo team beat the United States on Sunday for the championship at the Goodwill Games.

The Soviet Union won the team gold medal in men's gymnastics, with East Germany second and China third. The United States was fifth, just edging out Japan.

The United States wrestling team, led by Olympic medalists Mark and Dave Schultz, beat Mongolia for the bronze medal. The Soviets shut Bulgaria 10-0 for the gold medal.

Five more U.S boxers advanced to the semifinals. Light middleweights Mylon Watkins and Michael Moorer stopped their oppoents, while flyweight Arthur Johnson, welterweight Ricky Royal and lightweight Romallis Ellis won by decision.

The 10th day of the international sports festival was a busy one, with competition in nine events.

The day also featured an appearance by former President Richard Nixon, who is in town on what is described as a private fact-finding trip.

Nixon visited a reception for American athletes at the home of U.S ambassador Arthur Hartman and told them he had won and lost a few myself."

The Soviet Union won all four gold medals on the day to add to its big lead in the medals count. With Gurylev's diving gold and championships in water polo, wrestling and gymnastics, the hosts raised their total of 51 golds and 132 medals overall. The United States was a distant second, with 31 gold medals and 93 total. East Germany was third, with seven golds and 21 medals.

The Soviets scored the first six goals in the water polo match and never were in serious trouble in a 10-5 victory over an American team which included six members of the 1984 Olympic gold-medal team.

"They caught us off guard in the first half," U.S. goalie Craig Wilson said. "This is the best lesson we could have had to help us qualify for the Olympics."

The United States must finish in the top six at the next world championships to qualifying for the 1988 Olympic draw.

The Americans got their first two goals in the third period, from Jeff Campbell and James Bergeson, but the Soviets outscored them 4-3 in the final quarter to clinch the gold medal.

Alan Mouchawar Scored two goals for the Americans, who wound up with the silver medal. Three Soviets — Sergei Maumov, Mikhail Ivanov and Sergei Markoch —scored two goals each.

"We have a collective way of playing," Soviet coach Boris Popov said. "We play well together. That is our strength."

Goodwill Games

Gurylev took the lead on his eighth dive and on his ninth scored the afternoon's highest total, 86.40 points, with a 3½ back somersault. He finished with 609.30 points.

Watson, who totaled 593.34 points, clinched the silver on his last dive, a 1½ somersault with 3½ twists for 76.80 points.

The bronze medal went to gao feng of china, with 569.55 points. American Kent Ferguson, the silver medalist in springboard diving, finished sixth on the platform, with 546.09 points.

"It was a competition for the gold, and I knew I had a shot at it, but I didn't make it because of a couple of shaky rounds near the end," Watson said. "I was in contention for the gold. I had made it a lot of fun."

Dave Schultz, the 1984 Olympic gold medalist at 163 pounds, won the match when his Mongolian opponent, Lodojn Erkhbajar, was disqualified at 5:37.

Mark Schultz, who won the 180½ gold in 1984, pinned Sanzhzhav Sukhbaatar at 2:39.

Another 1984 olympic champion, Bruce Baumgartner, won his heavyweight match by pinning Odnai Bakhat at 3:46.

The only Mongolian victories were by Tumendemberel Sukhbaatar over Richard Salamone, 9-5, at 105½ and Arslangijn Tsedensodnom, who beat Adam Cuestas on bonus points for better quality holds. The match ended 8-8.

Watkins, from Tacoma, Wash., stopped Rosen Ibishev of Bulgaria at 1:59 of the third round, while Moorer, from Monessen, Pa., floored Makojo Matiko of Tanzania at 1:32 of the first round.

Arthur Johnson, the U.S. national flyweight champion from St. Louis, also advanced to the semifinals with a unanimous decision over Hamilton Rodriquez of Brazil.

Royal outpointed Lukas Sinoia of Mozambique 4-1, and Ellis took a unanimous decision from Jose Luis Perez of Venezuela.

But five other U.S boxers lost, four by unanimous decision.

Best performance by a Midland team was turned in by the Mavrix, who defeated the Lewisville Outfits, 16-4; lost to the Texas Mustangs, 12-1, beat the El Paso Warriors, 8-2, and finally were eliminated by the Outlaws. The Mavrix are the only ASA team in Midland and the first-year club took fourth in the San Marcos tournament and third in the Carlsbad, N.M., Yucca Blossom event earlier in the year.

The Midlanders placed 12th in the 26-team state tournament field.

Giants 11, Pirates 4

Reserve first baseman Harry Spilman drove in four runs with a double and a three-run homer and Mike LaCoss allowed five hits in seven innings as San Francisco took undisputed possession of first place at the All-Star break for the first time since 1978.

Rookie Randy Kutcher triggered a three-run first inning against Rick Reuschel with his sixth home run in just 24 major-league games. Spilman homered in the third and Chris Brown hit a solo shot in the eighth. Candy Maldonado had a run-scoring infield hit in the seventh, his 14th pinch hit of the season. That tied the Giants' single-season record set by Duane Kuiper in 1982.

Phillies 5, Astros 4

Mike Schmidt hit his second home run of the game in the top of the 11th inning off Houston relief ace Dave Smith. Schmidt, who hit a three-run homer off Bob Knepper in the sixth inning, had 477 career homers and lead the NL with 66 RBI. Houston's Glenn Davis, the league leader, hit his 20th home run in the fourth inning.

Reds 3, Expos 2

Kurt Stillwell singled home a run to give Cincinnati the lead shortly before the game was suspended by rain with the bases loaded and one out in the top of the sixth.

The game will be resumed at the point of interruption in Cincinnati on July 24 prior to the next regularly scheduled meeting of the two teams. The Expos will be the home team for the completion of the suspended contest. Sunday was Cincinnati's last scheduled visit to Montreal this season.

Padres 13, Cardinals 6

Marvell Wynne had three RBI and three hits, including two doubles, while Steve Garvey had two hits during a seven-run fourth inning, San Diego's biggest of the season. Trailing 2-1 entering the fourth, the Padres scored the tying run on a bases-loaded wild pitch by loser Tim Conroy. Two runs scored on a throwing error by St. Louis second baseman Tommy Herr, winning pitcher LaMarr Hoyt and Kevin McReynolds had RBI doubles and Steve Garvey capped the outburst with a two-run single.

Dodgers 4, Cubs 3

Alex Trevino hit a two-run double off relief ace Lee Smith with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning. It marked first time in 34 games this season the Dodgers won a game in which they trailed after six innings.

Steve Sax started the winning rally with a single and Ken Landreaux walked but Mike Marshall grounded into a double play as Sax took third. Len Matuszek walked before Trevino doubled off the glove of left fielder Jerry Mumphrey.

Freeman ignites Diablos

Associated Press

El Paso's Lavell Freeman batted a three-run homer in a six-run second inning to help the Diablos to a 12-3 victory over the Jackson Mets in a Texas League baseball game.

Freeman, who hit his 10th homer of the year, was 3-for-4 with two runs and three RBIs. The Diablos sent 11 to the plate in the inning.

In other league action Sunday, the Shreveport Captains edged the Midland Angels 10-9 and the Tulsa Drillers nipped the San Antonio Dodgers 3-2.

Dan Scarpetta, 9-5, went the distance for the win, giving up eight hits. He struck out two and walked two.

The Diablos had 15 hits; all but one of the Diablos starters got a hit. Charlie O'Brien was 3-for-4 with 3 RBIs, while shortstop Bob Nandin was 3-for-5 with two RBIs.

Loser Wray Bergendahl, 3-4, went 1 2-3 innings, giving up eight runs, including five walks, all in the first inning. He walked five of the seven batters he faced.

Jackson's Keith Milller contributed two solo homers in the first and third, respectively.

Larry Klein singled in the eighth and scored on Jerry Browne's double to center with the score tied 2-2.

Astros activate Billy Hatcher

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros activated outfielder Billy Hatcher from the 15-day disabled list Sunday and optioned outfielder Louie Meadows to Tucson of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League.

Hatcher was placed on the 15-day disabled list June 28 after suffering a bruised hamstring the previous day. He was batting .255 with 21 stolen bases in 61 games.

Meadows, who was brought up to replace him, had two hits in six at-bats with the Astros.

Fan choices not manager's

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Darryl Strawberry and Cal Ripken, the most popular players in All-Star voting, would not start in Tuesday night's game and neither would George Brett, Ozzie Smith or Dale Murphy if managers picked the teams instead of the fans.

According to an AP survey, two other starters in the 1986 All-Star Game, Dave Winfield and rookie Wally Joyner, also would be replaced.

Nine National League managers and eight in the American League responded to the survey, naming eight starters for their league. The other nine declined to participate, with Dick Williams of Seattle, Jim Fregosi of the Chicago White Sox and Gene Michael of the Chicago Cubs — all hired in midseason — saying they had not seen all of the clubs.

Strawberry, who drew more than 1.6 million votes, and Murphy would be replaced in NL outfield by Tim Raines and Dave Parker while shortstop Hubie Brooks would start in place of Smith, the survey showed.

Half of the AL's starting team would change if managers did the choosing.

Ripken, who got nearly 1.5 million votes, would lose his shortstop spot to Tony Fernandez. Don Mattingly was picked ahead of Joyner at first base, Wade Boggs was selected in front of Brett, who was elected for the 11th straight season, and Jesse Barfield would be in the outfield instead of Winfield.

Strawberry, Ripken, Smith, Brett and Murphy were five of the six most-popular players in fan voting.

NL managers and fans agreed on catcher Gary Carter and first baseman Keith Hernandez of New York, second baseman Ryne Sandberg of Chicago, third baseman Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia and outfielder Tony Gwynn of San Diego. AL managers and fans both selected catcher Lance Parrish and second baseman Lou Whitaker of Detroit and outfielders Rickey Henderson of New York and Kirby Puckett of Minnesota.

Carter was the most-selected player among NL managers, being named eight times.

Brooks got 7½ votes from the managers and Smith got 2½. Houston's Hal Lanier split his choice between Smith, a perennial Gold Glover who is near the .300 mark this season, and Brooks, who is among the league leaders in batting, home runs and runs batted in.

Boggs, leading the major leagues in hitting, and Mattingly, last season's Most Valuable Player, each were named by seven AL managers, as was Henderson.

Strawberry, hitting near .300 for the Mets, was named by two managers — Lanier and Dave Johnson of the Mets. Raines, among the league's leading hitters, was picked six times; Parker, among the NL's RBI and home run leaders, was picked five times, and Murphy, hitting about .270 with 14 homers, was selected by four managers.

Fernandez finished third in fan balloting, more than a million votes behind Ripken. But Fernandez, named by five managers, is hitting over .300 and has a better average and fewer errors than Ripken, selected by two managers.

Boggs, who got 1,172,529 votes yet finished 85,000 behind Brett, is hitting about .370 and was the choice of seven managers.

Majors' All-Star game arriving just in time

By HAL BOCK

HOUSTON (AP) — Baseball's midseason All-Star break is arriving just in time. The sport needs a breather from a most unusual first half of the season.

How strange was it?

Well, Steve Carlton, who has led a Sphinx-like existence with the media for the last decade or so, submitted to a mostly unrevealing news conference after being released by the Philadelphia Phillies and signing with the San Francisco Giants. It reminded some of Bob Meusel, a churl of another era, who turned mellow at the end of his career, causing author Frank Graham to write, "He learned how to say hello when it was time to say good-bye."

But nowhere was the unusual first half more evident than in the standings. All four of last year's division champions — St. Louis, Los Angeles, Kansas City and Toronto — have drifted through hard times. At the same time, the meek have risen with Houston, Texas, San Francisco, Boston and Cleveland leading their division or in contention.

NONE OF the once mighty have suffered more than the St. Louis Cardinals of the NL East, who never seemed to recover from the shock of losing the World Series after winning three of the first four games.

Cardinal hitters went into a coma and as the All-Star Game approached, the team was hitting 20 points less than any other major league club and had 27 home runs. Willie McGee, the National League's Most Valuable Player when he hit .353 last year, was hitting more than 100 points less than that. Tommy Herr, who drove in 110 runs last season, had 23 going into the weekend before the break.

Things were not much better in Kansas City in the AL West. The world champion Royals looked entirely mortal during an 11-game losing streak that ended last week but left them well under .500. Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen was struggling with a 4-10 record and allowing 4.5 earned runs per game, scant reminders of his 20-6, 2.87 production of a year ago. Darryl Motley, who hit the home run that started the Royals' seventh game World Series romp, wasn't even with the club, farmed out to the minors. And folk hero Buddy Biancalana was riding the bench.

LOS ANGELES, winners of the NL West a year ago, were buried at the bottom of the division, saddled with a depressing string of injuries that began when slugger Pedro Guerrero tore up his knee while trying to steal a base in spring training. The Dodgers also led both leagues in errors, committing their 100th of the season one week before the All-Star Game.

Toronto of the AL East recovered from a difficult start to climb past .500, but still were far behind first-place Boston. And the Blue Jays still were trying to unlock the puzzle of Dave Stieb, the ace of their staff, who was at 2-9 with a 5.74 ERA.

If some teams were down, others were surprisingly up. San Francisco and Houston, both with new managers, were battling for the National League West lead.

Somehow under Roger Craig, windy and cold Candlestick Park has become tolerable for the Giants, thanks to solid batting production from players like Chili Davis, Jeffrey Leonard and Chris Brown. Craig also turned journeyman Juan Berenguer into the ace of his bullpen.

Houston has not allowed rumors of a franchise move interfere with its charge to the top of the NL West. Hal Lanier's club has ridden the strong pitching of Bob Knepper and Mike Scott and solid hitting by Glenn Davis and Kevin Bass and was not the least bit deterred by losing Nolan Ryan to the disabled list.

ALSO ENJOYING a solid first half were a couple of perpetual have-not franchises, the Texas Rangers and Cleveland Indians.

Bobby Valentine had the young Rangers near the top of the AL West with graybeard knuckler Charlie Hough leading productive younger pitchers like Bobby Witt, Mike Mason, Mitch Williams, Jose Guzman and Ed Correa.

The Indians, perhaps celebrating the city's acquisition of the rock 'n roll hall of fame, have been resuscitated by young players like Joe Carter and Mel Hall, both acquired in the Rick Sutcliffe trade two years ago and proving now that the deal was not as one-sided as some people thought.

One of baseball's hottest teams during the first half of the season has been the Boston Red Sox, sitting on a comfortable lead in the AL East.

Boston's Roger Clemens, rebounding from shoulder problems a year ago, won his first 14 decisions and, with Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, gave the Red Sox a formidible 1-2 pitching punch. Designated hitter Don Baylor, obtained from the New York Yankees, was a productive bat and supplied clubhouse leadership, an element this team often has lacked in the past.

THERE ALSO were some significant comings and goings in the dugout. The Chicago Cubs fired manager Jim Frey and, not to be outdone, their crosstown neighbors, the White Sox, did the same thing to Tony LaRussa.

The White Sox let LaRussa twist in the wind for a while before hiring Jim Fregosi. The Cubs' ax was faster for Frey with Gene Michael hired as his replacement. It was the second time Frey has been dismissed less than two years after leading a team to a division title. There is some message in that.

Also invited to seek employment elsewhere were Chuck Cottier at Seattle, replaced by Dick Williams, who made the Mariners his sixth managerial stop, and Jackie Moore at Oakland, where LaRussa was hired as the replacement.

At a higher level, the National League named as its incoming president the outgoing president of Yale University, who confessed to a lifelong love affair with the Boston Red Sox, occupants of the rival American League. A. Bartlett Giamatti promised, however, to be loyal to his new employers, even if his favorite team shows up in the World Series.

Back on the field, the American League All-Star starters included a few wrinkles entirely in keeping with the strange season.

Less publicized deaths prove more puzzling

By GEOFFREY BARNARD

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cocaine was the much-publicized cause of cardiac arrests which killed basketball All American Len Bias and Cleveland Browns safety Don Rogers.

But less publicized and more puzzling are the deaths of at least 10 to 15 athletes a year caused by heart disease, congenital heart defects or a combination of the two.

In September of last year, a 19-year-old Texas Tech guard collapsed and died of a cardiac arrest during a pickup basketball game. Cleveland State University forward Paul Stewart, another 19-year-old, died April 30 after suffering a cardiac arrest during a pickup game.

In January, Flo Hyman, 31, a volleyball star, died in Japan after an artery in her heart burst during a game.

In each case, the athlete was in superb condition. In each case, the athlete tested clean of drugs.

Hyman died of Marfan syndrome, a genetic condition which weakens the connective tissue in the heart and affects a disproportionate number of tall people. Doctors might be alerted to the condition by its symptoms: arms with a span that exceeds a person's height; nearsightedness; and long or malformed fingers, toes and breast bone.

There were no warning signs for the diseases which killed Stewart or Texas Tech's Edward Robinson.

"Here's a kid who was jogging and sprinting and jumping," Cuyahoga County deputy coroner Lester Adelson said of Stewart. "He died of a heart disease more common in people over 45. He was in excellent shape otherwise.

"We checked his blood, urine and bile. There were no drugs or chemicals of any kind whatsoever. We don't see many of these cases, but one is too many."

Cleveland State basketball team physician John Lombardo said he examined Stewart before last season. There was no record of heart disease in Stewart's family.

The cause of death for Robinson was a puzzling phenomena known as hypertrophic idiopathic cardiomyopathy — longhand for a heart attack caused by heart inflammation of undetermined origin.

"This seemingly healthy athlete suffered sudden unexplained cardiac arrest," said L.J. Bialack, justice of the peace in Lubbock, Texas. "He was clear of drugs. There was no alcohol present.

"He just collapsed while playing basketball in a university gymnasium."

This Day in Baseball

1956 — Mel Parnell of the Boston Red Sox no-hit the Chicago White Sox 4-0 at Fenway Park.

1967 — Eddie Mathews of the Astros hit his 500th home run off San Francisco's Juan Marichal at Candlestick Park. Houston defeated the Giants 8-6.

1968 — Atlanta's Hank Aaron hit home run No. 500 off Mike McCormick as the Braves beat the San Francisco Giants, 4-2.

1968 — Don Wilson of the Houston Astros struck out 18 Reds in a 6-1 victory over Cincinnati in the second game of a doubleheader.

1969 — Joe Niekro of the San Diego Padres beat older brother Phil of the Atlanta Braves, 1-0.

1970 — Cincinnati's Pete Rose bowled ver Cleveland catcher Ray Fosse at home plate in the 12th inning to give the National League a 5-4 victory over the American League at Riverfront Stadium. Chicago's Jim Hickman got the game-winning hit.

Little tries baseball

AUSTIN (AP) — Former University of Texas quarterback Donnie Little, whose pro football career ended with a knee injury in Canada, is working toward a professional baseball career.

Little batted .400 and pitched two no-hitters at Dickinson High School, but he did not play baseball again until recently signing on with the semi-pro Austin Collegiates.

At age 25, he has a lot of improving to do and not much time to do it.

"You can tell he hasn't played in a long time," said Charlie Smith of Austin, an Atlanta Braves scout. "But he's definitely a gifted athlete. He's awful quick for a guy who's 6-foot-2 and 195 pounds. He has to really focus on baseball if he really wants to try to make a career out of it.

"He's got to do a lot and do it quick," he said.

Little said football and spring practice kept him from playing baseball for the Longhorns.

"I wanted to play, but being a quarterback, having to devote so much time to footbal," he said. "With the position I played, I just don't think (football Coach Fred Akers) would be too liberal with me."

Akers said he does not remember the subject ever coming up.

Little wrapped up his college grid career in 1981 as a wide receiver, a move some thought would help his pro chances.

But he was not drafted by an NFL team, and was cut after the Atlanta Falcons brought him in as a free agent. He later played for Ottawa in the Canadian Football League and caught 46 passes for 753 yards in 1983 before the knee injury.

"There was a time that Donnie Little was probably the best athlete we had on the team," said Gordon Bunky, Ottawa's director of communications.

So now Little plays semi-pro baseball. He also is taking a Spanish course and working for a heavy equipment company.

Watts claims Trans Miss golf

LUFKIN (AP) — Brian Watts took the lead early and never fell behind as he defeated Neil Hickerson, 5-up, Sunday to capture the 1986 Trans-Mississippi golf championship.

Watts, 20, a junior at Oklahoma State University and current Big Eight Conference champion from Carrollton, Texas, defeated Hickerson, a junior at Texas A&M University from Belton, Texas.

Watts fired eight pars and a bogey on the first nine for a 2-up advantage.

Dollar rises

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rose in slow European trading today as the market continued to react to last week's cut in U.S. interest rates. Gold prices were lower in quiet trading.

Dealers said foreign currency markets were wracked by mixed opinion on the dollar's direction following Thursday's cut in the U.S. discount rate from 6.5 percent to 6 percent.

While the general feeling remains bearish towards the dollar, dealers said, it was being pushed up by traders cashing in on earlier declines and other technical factors.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose to a closing 161.35 yen from Friday's 160.90.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

— 2.1910 West German marks, up from 2.1805

— 1.7932 Swiss francs, up from 1.77675

— 7.0375 French francs, up from 6.9975

— 2.4653 Dutch guilders, up from 2.4540

— 1,501.50 Italian lire, up from 1,496.50

— 1.3775 Canadian dollars, unchanged

In London, the British pound, hit by falling oil prices, lost more than 2 cents against the dollar. It cost $1.4880 to buy 1 pound, cheaper than last Friday's $1.5085.

Bullion dealers said the firmer dollar wasn't having any effect on the market, which was quiet.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $346.50 a troy ounce, down from late Friday's $347.75. At mid-morning Monday, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $346.20.

In Zurich, Europe's biggest bullion market, the bid price was $346.35 at noon, down from $348 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold dropped the equivlent of 69 cents to close at $345.63 compared to Saturday's $346.32.

Silver was also lower on the London market where the metal was selling at a bid price of $5.03 a troy ounce compared with $5.07 last Friday.

Study: Coast will be better off

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economic growth patterns in the past five years threaten to split the United States into a nation of relatively well-off coastal dwellers and a disadvantaged heartland, says a new congressional study.

While growth over the nation as a whole has been sluggish in recent years, those living in California and in 15 East Coast states would hardly have noticed, according to the analysis by the Joint Economic Committee, which was released recently.

Coastal regions have enjoyed average annual growth in personal income since 1981 of 4 percent, compared with a 1.4 percent rate for the other 34 states. The Gross National Product grew 2.3 percent during that period, compared with a 3.4 percent average for all years since World War II.

"Most of this country is suffering a prolonged period of economic stagnation," said Rep. David R. Obey, D-Wis., chairman of the committee. "Workers and their families, unless they live on the coasts, are experiencing very limited economic opportunity."

Obey said the picture developed by the Democratic staff study is at sharp odds with the picture painted by the Reagan administration of a steady U.S. economic recovery.

"The fact is that economic well-being depends heavily on where you live," he said in a statement accompanying the report. "The administration should be examining both this developing geographic disparity and the policies which have led to it."

The study cited data showing that while there was relatively little disparity between family income levels in the coastal and heartland regions in 1981, the income growth differences had led to a 10 percent gap by 1984, the last year for which figures were available.

If the trend continues, there could be a more than 40 percent difference by the mid-1990s between average income of families in the 16 coastal states and those living in the rest of the country, the report said.

"That would roughly equal the regional disparity which existed between northern and southern states during the first half of this century," the committee said.

Of the $234 billion growth in real personal income nationally during the 1981-85 period, 70 percent went to the 16 coastal states, which have 42 percent of the nation's population. Less than $73 billion went to the other 34 states, which account for 58 percent of all Americans, the study said.

That meant on a per-person basis, real growth in the heartland states was one third the rate of the coastal states.

Much of the problem stems from hard times in the agriculture, petroleum, mining, timber and heavy manufacturing sectors, all of which are heavily concentrated in the country's midsection. Growth has come largely in service areas like the financial, information and convenience food industries, which are heavily represented in coastal states.

The study said the slump in U.S. export sales — particularly in agricultural exports — is largely to blame. The United States has hastened the slide in its own agricultural exports by encouraging Third-World debtor nations to use farm product sales overseas to help pay their debts, the report noted.

A third set of figures, those reflecting creation of new jobs, also reinforces the growing split. Of the 8 million new jobs created in 1981-85, 58 percent came in the 16 coastal states.

Gasoline prices continue falling

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The average price of a gallon of gasoline has fallen 29.6 cents a gallon since the first of the year, says oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg.

Part of that dip came between Memorial Day and July 4, he said Sunday. Prices fell 5.25 cents a gallon at a time when the average price traditionally rises, he said.

During the past two weeks, self-service prices throughout the country fell 4.2 cents.

The slide will continue because of confusion in OPEC and large supplies of crude oil, said Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter and Lundberg Survey of gasoline prices.

The average price for all grades of self-service gasoline dropped from 89.75 cents a gallon on June 20 to 84.49 cents a gallon over the weekend, Lundberg said.

Checking the prices at 15,000 stations over a two-week period, Lundberg said averages showed regular leaded gasoline at self-service stations was at 78.56 cents a gallon, down from 82.95 cents on June 20.

Regular unleaded was down to 84.29 cents from 88.70 cents, premium unleaded was at 98.63 cents, down from $102.50. Motorists who chose to use full-service pumps paid, on the average, 28.13 cents a gallon more, he said.

A year ago this month, motorists were paying an average of $1.24 a gallon for all grades of gasoline.

"Oversupply of both crude oil and finished products, such as gasoline and refined oil, and OPEC's failure to get out of its doldrums could drive summer pricing still further down," said Lundberg.

He was referring to the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' inability to reach agreement on crude oil prices.

Pepsi agrees to buy unit from Seven-Up

NEW YORK (AP) — Pepsico Inc., parent of the world's No. 2 soft-drink producer, said today it has bought the international unit of rival Seven-Up Co. from Philip Morris Cos. for $246 million in cash.

The company earlier had announced plans to buy both the domestic and foreign operations of Seven-Up for $380 million, but the Federal Trade Commission said it opposed the deal. Philip Morris subsequently ended that agreement.

Pepsico said the purchase of Seven-Up's international operations, completed Friday, doesn't require government approval. Philip Morris still intends to sell Seven-Up's U.S. operations.

Seven-Up International, headquartered in Lausanne, Switzerland, is the third-largest soft drink company outside the United States and operates in more than 85 countries. Seven-Up is third largest in the United States, too.

Pepsico ranks behind Coca-Cola Co. as the biggest soft-drink company.

Pepsico will increase its overseas volume of 1.4 billion cases by 250 million cases through the purchase.

In addition to acquiring the right to sell Seven-Up everywhere except the United States, Pepsico is buying two bottling plants owned by Seven-Up in Toronto and Ottawa, the company said.

These plants, which already bottle Pepsi-Cola products, weren't part of the original deal that the FTC opposed in June on antitrust grounds.

Overseas, non-cola drinks account for two-thirds of sales, and colas represent the rest. The sales proportions are opposite in the United States.

Despite the purchase, Pepsico, which has headquarters in Purchase, N.Y., still will have a much smaller presence overseas than Coca-Cola.

Coca-Cola, which is based in Atlanta, has said it is proceeding with its planned $470 million acquisition of No. 4 Dr Pepper Co. of Dallas despite the FTC's opposition to that agreement.

Philip Morris had bought St. Louis-based Seven-Up for $520 million in 1978 and made little profit on the company, which represents a small part of its business. Philip Morris owns General Foods Corp. and Miller Brewing Co.

Continental reports June traffic

HOUSTON (SWN) — Continental Airlines reported that its June traffic was 6.9 percent higher than in June 1985, and that its load factor was 65.5 percent last month.

In June, Continental flew 1.7 billion revenue passenger miles (RPMs), compared to 1.6 billion RPMs flown in June 1985. Capacity in June increased 26 percent, to 2.6 billion available seat miles (ASMs), compared to 2.1 billion ASMs flown in June 1985.

Year-to-date, Continental has flown 9.4 billion RPMs, an increase of 22.8 percent compared to the first five months of last year. Continental's year-to-date capacity is 14.9 billion ASMs, up 28.7 percent from 11.6 billion ASMs in the same 1985 period.

Continental's load factor in June of 65.5 percent was 11.8 points below that in June 1985, when traffic was boosted significantly by a strike at United Airlines.

Confidence in economy remains high

NEW YORK (UPI) — Business leaders' confidence in the U.S. economy remained at fairly high levels at the close of the second quarter, despite some reports of deteriorating conditions in the petroleum, mining and contract construction industries, the Conference Board said Tuesday.

The business research group's Measure of Business Confidence, a quarterly barometer based on the views of 1,000 top executives across the nation representing a cross-section of business, closed at 61 in the second quarter of this year, unchanged from the first quarter, but up from 55 in the fourth quarter of 1985.

Scores are based on a scale of zero to 100.

More than two-fifths of the surveyed executives reported improved business conditions in their industries and fully half expected conditions to strengthen further during the second half of this year.

The survey also showed that, reflecting the general stability in business confidence, most firms reported their capital spending plans have remained unchanged since the beginning of this year.

About 70 percent reported no change in capital spending plans with 15 percent raising them and 15 percent lowering them.

Despite the general tone of strength and optimism, a quarter of the business leaders reported deteriorating conditions in their industries, with weakness most pronounced in petroleum, mining and contract construction, said Douglas Cliggott, an economist at the board.

Buy American plan could hurt petroleum industry

DALLAS (UPI) — The oil and gas industry feels the patriotic overtone in the proposed "Buy American" legislation will be even more difficult to fight than the measure's real intent.

The American Petroleum Institute (API) says the legislation may be added as an amendment to the Interior Department's 1987 appropriation bill and says if passed it will do great harm to the industry already reeling under declining prices and falling demand.

The measure would restrict the oil and gas industry from buying its offshore drilling and exploration platforms and components mostly for its Pacific region operations from Japan and South Korea.

The API sees the proposal as part of a larger effort by the U.S. steel industry to restrict the import of cheap foreign steel. It says even if the measure became law the benefit to the steel industry would be negligible, while its adverse impact both on API members and the government will be enormous.

"It is one of those issues that could move quickly when Congress returns from its recess," said an energy industry source who asked not be identified. "It has a very attractive name and if people don't think through it, this could be a serious threat to our energy security. It is attractive only on the superficial level. It also has a protectionist flavor."

In a recent letter to Congress, API President Charles DiBona said the "Buy Amrican" proposal would substantially increase the cost of offshore operations, impede future exploration and invite retaliation from foreign governments.

Aides to Rep. Douglas H. Bosco, D-Calif., the main author of the legislation, said there is considerable support for the measure and rejected API's contention that it would cause massive layoffs and huge revenue losses to the government.

An API study says under the "Buy American" requirement government revenue from outer continental shelf leases in the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific region could decline by nearly $2 billion over the next 15 years.

"In addition, the expected reduction in oil and gas production would reduce annual government royalty receipts by $112 million from Gulf of Mexico OCS leases and $110 million from Pacific OCS leases when the maximum impact is reached," the study said.

On the employment side, the study said any job gains in the domestic industries that make offshore oil platforms would be more than offset by employment losses caused by decreased offshore petroleum activity. It said between 16,000 and 25,000 jobs would be lost if the measure is enacted.

API spokesman Joseph Lastelic said 14.1 percent of all the oil and 29.3 percent of all the natural gas produced in the country come from offshore.

The API study said that on the Pacific shelf, a typical domestically manufactured offshore platform costs $86 million, or $20 million more than one in which the platform's jacket and piles are foreign-manufactured. A jacket supports the module which holds the equipment. Piles are supports sunk into the sea bed.

"A smaller cost differential is expected for Gulf of Mexico platforms for two reasons - higher transportation costs from foreign manufacturing facilities located principally in Asia and the existence of a highly developed infrastructure of domestic manufacturers serving the Gulf of Mexico offshore which has been competitive with foreign producers to date," the study said.

Higher outer continental shelf development costs also will make some projects that were marginally profitable using foreign platforms unprofitble under "Buy American" restrictions, the study said. Thus some production would be abandoned and replaced by imported oil, it said.

Mitch Stogner, administrative assistant to Rep. Bosco, said since U.S. oil companies have exclusive bidding rights on public resources, they ought to ensure that the jobs needed to develop the outer continental shelf properties go to U.S. citizens first.

"One offshore platform will hire from 1,000 to 1,300 people. The Koreans and the Japanese have been the recipients of the major oil construction contracts in the last several years. You don't take the oil industry lightly," Stogner said.

He said supporters of the "Buy American" measure question the assumptions made in the API study. "It is our contention that adding to the cost of the oil rigs will not discourage drilling the outer continental shelf because there is plenty of oil there."

Survey shows computer's affect on oil and gas

Will robots be drilling oil and gas wells by the year 2000? In a recent survey, major service and supply companies predicted the computer age will continue to impact the oil and gas industry substantially.

Survey respondents, according to an exclusive report in the current issue of Drilling Magazine, indicate computer-controlled robots will replace drilling rig crew members on medium and large-sized rigs by the year 2000. The robots will be used to perform repetitive drill rig floor activities, particularly in adverse environments such as Alaska and the prolific North Sea. An extensive computer-controlled communications network will relay data from instruments in the hole directly to robotic crew members which will regulate drill bit weight, speed and mud content accordingly.

Robot-controlled equipment will yield longer service life with minimum maintenance requirements — some offshore wells will produce for 20 years via robots controlled from land-based computers.

Savings and loan owner resigns amid fraud charges

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — The owner of Key Savings and Loan Association has resigned as chairman and director after being indicted in Texas on charges of defrauding Colorado's 11th largest thrift.

Laurence B. Vineyard, a Dallas attorney and investor, stepped down voluntarily from his posts at Key Savings, and said in a prepared statement he is "absolutely satisfied there was no wrongdoing" on his part. He predicted he will be found innocent of the fraud and conspiracy charges against him.

Vineyard said last week he had only stepped down temporarily from his posts at Key.

Vineyard was among nine people indicted June 26 by a grand jury in Lubbock, Texas, on 12 counts of fraud and conspiracy to defraud Key Savings and Brown State Savings and Loan of Brownfield, Texas.

The 50-page indictment accuses Vineyard and a former partner — Dallas investor Tyrell G. Barker — with arranging a $4.5 million loan from the Englewood thrift to a Texas land company controlled by a West Texas banker who, a few months earlier, had helped them find a $6 million loan to buy Key Savings.

The $4.5 million has not been repaid, according to Keith Key, president of the Englewood S&L, and it has been charged off as uncollectible.

Key Savings recently started foreclosure on the 7,900 acres of land near Valencia, N.M., that the money allegedly was lent to purchase and develop. None of the land has been developed, said Key.

The unpaid loan does not threaten Key Savings' health, according to David Paul, Colorado savings and loan commissioner. All deposits up to $100,000 remain insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., he said.

With $227 million in assets, Key Savings had a net worth of 5.51 percent on March 31, well above regulatory requirements, said Paul. Net worth measures the difference between what a thrift owns and owes.

Key Savings showed a profit of $1.206 million during the first three months of 1986, said Key.

Vineyard voluntarily removed himself from management of the thrift after the indictment was announced, said Paul. As state commissioner, he can remove officers and directors from state-chartered S&Ls.

"There is a clear understanding that (Vineyard) is no longer involved in the decision-making, that he won't recommend any courses of action to the savings and loan association or negotiate in any way on its behalf," said Paul.

Paul said he does not know whether regulators have the authority to force Vineyard to sell his stock if he is found guilty of the charges. He said he was aware of the federal probe in Lubbock, but did not participate in it.

Vineyard and three partners purchased Key Savings in 1983 for $8 million.

Squatters' camps

The squatters' camp community of La Sandia in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, top photo, is partially obscured in a dusty haze. Approximately 600 families live in the cardboard and cinder-block huts. At left, residents find time to play a makeshift game of soccer. A youngster, above, poses next to the 55-gallon tanks used to store water in the community.

Text and Photos by the Associated Press

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico — To others like them — the families who occupy more than 50 acres of once uninhabited land in the southwestern sector of this city — they are pioneers. But to their foes, they are interlopers, taking what is not theirs.

The families who reside in the Colonia Loma Bonita are not alone — there are others, many, many more, who live under similar circumstances near another settlement called La Sandia.

Given the continuing deterioration of the Mexican economy, it appears likely that the numbers of the squatters will grow, not just here, but throughout Mexico.

The problem of illegal possession of land is particularly acute in a city where good, cheap housing is scarce. Nuevo Laredo's population is being swelled daily by Mexicans from the interior who use it as a springboard for their trek north.

If they can't cross the border into the United States and have no means to return home, their only option is to stay here.

With unemployment high and jobs, even those that pay minimum wage, scarce, those men from the interior who bring their families with them are forced to take desperate measures.

Taking possession of uninhabited land is illegal, but how else will the majority of Mexicans obtain housing, asks Chamber of Commerce president Higinio Ibarra Murillo.

"I fear that this is the wave of the future in Mexico," Ibarra said about squatter camps. "It's not that they're being stubborn. They have a very real need for a roof over their heads, even if it's made of cardboard."

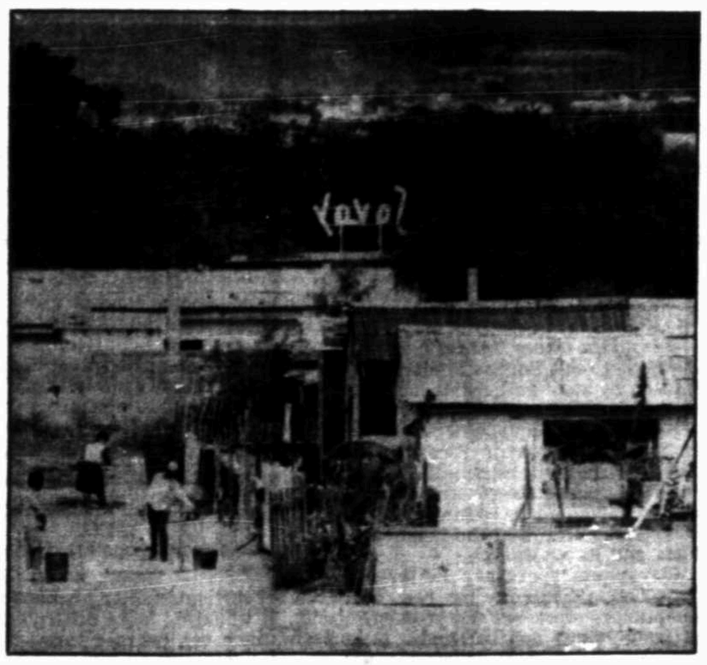

Cardboard is just one of many materials used in the structures that fill the eye for miles and miles at Loma Bonita and La Sandia.

The two settlements are located in the southwestern edge of the city, in what was once brushland. La Sandia is located across from a large PEMEX storage facility.

The majority of the two- and three-bedroom dwellings are made of a little of this and a little of that — some lumber, a lot of cardboard, plastic sheeting and cloth.

The materials used in the structures are not what someone would go out and purchase but would salvage out of a Dumpster or landfill.

Those better off than their neighbors have homes made of cinderblocks. Paint, often in vivid colors such as turquoise and pink, adorns a few of the homes, but for the most part each of the two neighborhoods is predominated by tones of gray and beige.

Residents of Loma Bonita, another squatter camp near Nuevo Laredo, work outside their makeshift huts.

Like the hardy men and women who settled here before them, the families that reside in the two villages lack basic services most take for granted: paved streets, running water, electricity, sewage and a drainage system.

"Even without that, we are happy here at Loma Bonita," said Maria Betancourt, a native of Veracruz. "We feel more comfortable because this is our home."

Only Mrs. Betancourt and her husband, an ice cream vendor who does not work every day because of circulatory problems with his legs, live here. Their children are grown and live in other parts of the city.

A neighbor, Maria Elulia Villaloza, mother of three, complained that she and the other residents will do without electricity, but not water.

"It's indispensable; we need it simply to drink," she said.

There are taps nearby at Loma Bonita and the city provides water stored in huge drums. Those that have the money, purchase water each week when a pipe truck comes by, but the cost, as much as $2 a liter, keeps many from having water, Mrs. Villaloza said.

At a small stand nearby, Maria del Refugio Garza sells soft drinks and chips. She watches over two of her three young daughters who are playing by the water tap.

The 27-year-old woman moved here nearly two years ago after rent at a small house near the old city cemetery nearly tripled.

"Here, we don't have to pay rent but I do wish we could get the land legalized so that the city could provide us with services," she said.

The need to legalize the land is a common thread that is repeated over and over by the residents of Loma Bonita. But that is unlikely to occur any time soon, said Irineo Bernal, who is considered by many as the neighborhood leader.

Bernal, a cabinetmaker, and his wife, Conchita, were among the first 10 to 15 families who took part in the invasion of the land on Nov. 15, 1983. The land is located just adjacent to the city's red light district.

Mrs. Bernal, 32, has been married to Bernal nearly 19 years, and they have three children. She said she supported her husband when he decided to take possession of the land.

With pride, she exhibited a sketch in which she and her husband drew out the neighborhood, complete with a school.

The school, Presidente Guadalupe Victoria, is not far from their corner house on Emiliano Zapata Street. Also nearby is a green-colored building that serves as the Baptist church.

Bernal, 39, said he and his family moved here becuse the land was unpopulated, it was used by "bad people," and "we weren't hurting anyone by moving in."

"By the time we came here, it was out of desperation. We weren't the only ones; everyone else was in the same situation," he said.

Graveside services for Adrian De Leon, 16 months, of Midland, were to be at 1:30 p.m. today at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home. A memorial service at the Kingdom Hall of Jehovah Witnesses was to follow, with Frank Davis officiating.

He was born March 5, 1985. He died of complications resulting from a choking accident that happened on April 24, 1986.

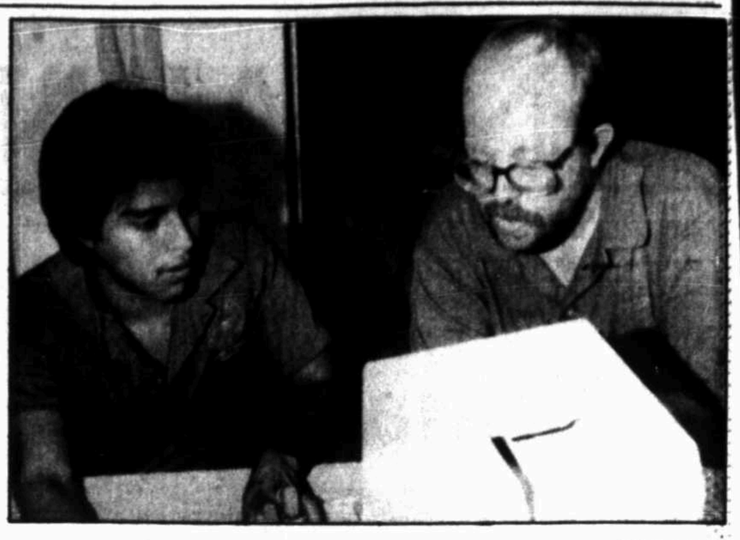

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jessie De Leon of Midland; grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Jo De Leon of Midland, Mr. and Mrs. Rudy Sanchez of San Angelo, and Mr. and Mrs. Pepe Lopez of San Angelo; a great-grandmother, Mrs. Maria Garcia of Midland; and several aunts and uncles.

Madge Wilson

Rosary for Mrs. Madge Wilson will be at 7 p.m. today in the Ellis Funeral Home chapel. Services will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday in St. Anns Catholic Church with Father Fred Nawarskas officiating. Interment will be at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Wilson, 96, had resided in Midland since 1962. She was a member of St. Anns Catholic Church.

She is survived by a son, Robert C. Leonard of Midland; and a stepson, Perry B. Wilson of Redwood City, Calif.

Students of migrant farm workers get taste of college

HOUSTON (AP) — Felix Moreno has lived in the United States for five years and cannot speak English very well, but he's still attending college this summer.

"I like it. It's good for us," Moreno stutters as he searches for the proper words. "It teach you how to get a education and how you can get a career."

Moreno, 18, is one of 60 teen-agers — all children of migrant farm workers — attending the University of Houston's first summer camp, called the Migrant Educational Advancement Opportunity Program.

The project, at the university's downtown Houston branch, is a six-week summer program developed this year by Loren C. Thompson, a reading professor.

"Migrant children are the most educationally deprived students in the country and some of the best students around," he said.

MEAOP, which is financed by an $84,000 federal grant, hired five professors to teach the migrant students English, math, reading, science and social studies. Each student is placed at his grade level and slower students receive special instructions in specific areas of need.

Professor Jose Reynaga, a former migrant himself, says migrant children are deprived of the benefits of the regular school system because their families are constantly moving.

"Just when you get your foot in the door concerning education, friends, and teachers, you have to move," he said. "Maybe the next school will not be so good or friendly. It's not easy and you may end up dropping out."

For four years, the university has operated a year-round program to assist teen-age children of farm workers or fishermen. The summer camp is in its first year.

Thompson, who became migrant education director a few months ago, said he decided the summer program would convince the teens that a higher education is not beyond their reach.

"A big problem with migrant children is attitudinal," he said.

Woman's death still under investigation

From Staff Reports

The Midland Police Department is still investigating the June 26 death of a Midland woman as a possible homicide.

The woman died of a gunshot wound to the head, police said.

Christina St. John, 21, was wounded about 10:30 p.m. June 25 following an argument with her boyfriend at his residence in the 4400 block of Tanforan Ave., police said.

The shooting was originally reported as an attempted suicide based on the statement of the boyfriend.

"We are still talking to and looking at witnesses," said Midland Police Sgt. David Garcia. "It is being investigated with the intensity of a homicide, which means a very thorough investigation."

According to the man's account, Garcia said, an argument erupted between the two before the woman shot herself in the right temple with a handgun.

The gun reportedly belonged to the man, but Garcia said the ownership of the weapon has not been verified.

An autopsy on the body was performed by pathologist Dr. David Schneidman, but Garcia said toxicological and chemical results are still pending.

"Hopefully we can get this thing wrapped up in the next couple of weeks," Garcia said.

Police Lt. Hank Norton said the case would probably be referred to the Midland County District Attorney's office for review within two weeks.

"It's my understanding that we do have to contact more witnesses in the case," Norton said. "There are certain things which may be regarded as abnormalities in the case that we are still looking at."

Military retirees cause controversy at TDC

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of jobs and amount of pay military retirees are getting in the Texas prison system are causing morale problems among other prison employees, a state legislator says.

Rep. Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville, who chairs the House Law Enforcement Committee, says prison director Lane McCotter's hiring practices are creating problems because he's passing over longtime Texas Department of Corrections employees to hire or promote military retirees.

"There needs to be some further investigation into what appears to be the hiring of military personnel at higher salaries than other people," said Hightower, who added he plans to push for an investigation.

But McCotter, who once ran the U.S. Army Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., denied any bias toward military retirees. McCotter, who joined the Texas system in 1984, became prison director in June 1985 when Raymond Procunier stepped down.

He said 85 percent of recent TDC promotions have come from within the agency.

"These people are hard-working," McCotter said. "Most of our people are extremely happy."

Friction among prison employees has grown in recent months with some longtime workers complaining that preferential treatment is given to staffers with military backgrounds, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

Since June 1984, 20 new senior administration employees have been hired from the outside. Nine are military retirees. Those nine earn an average of $65 more per month than non-military employees in similar positions, the newspaper said.

McCotter's top assistant, J.E. Riley, is a military retiree. Three of the 13 assistant directors that have been hired since Procunier and McCotter took over the agency are retired from the military, according to The Post.

Only one warden is a military retiree and he's been with the system since 1966.

McCotter said his policy has been to hire people he believed could do the job, and he blamed the unrest on employees who "have faced disciplinary action or are facing disciplinary action and missed a promotion because of it."

He gave two examples of consciously looking to military personnel for help — the hiring of retired Army intelligence officer John Scanlon to help curtail inmate gang violence and the hiring of an Army maintenance specialist.

But Hightower said stories of favoritism, true or not, spread fast through the prison system and that McCotter should move to alleviate the morale problem.

Midland man found dead Sunday

Police Roundup

From Staff Reports

A Midland man was found dead early Sunday, police said.

Police said they are unsure of the cause of the death.

Patricio Menchaca was pronounced dead about 3 a.m. by Justice of the Peace Judy Massingill.

Paramedics had been called to a residence at 401 W. Marshall where the man was found unconscious in the backyard.

The body was taken to Ellis Funeral Home, and an autopsy was ordered by Ms. Massingill.

Police said they did not have an exact age. They estimated Menchaca's age to be near 50 years old.

In other reports, police are investigating the burglary of a residence early Sunday.

Self Williams, 4303 Andrews Highway, told police a computer valued at $100 and a cable box valued at $60 were taken from his residence sometime between 1 a.m. and 3 a.m..

Items valued at $300 were reported taken over the weekend from a Midland home in the 600 block of South Main.

A stereo valued at $100, a jewelry box valued at $100 and miscellaneous jewelry items valued at $100 were reported stolen.

Odessa police looking for robber

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police are searching for a man who robbed Odessa oilman Charles Perry of a gold wristwatch valued at $9,000 at his home Sunday afternoon.

Police spokesman Cpl. John McAhon said Perry was on a ladder, doing some work on his home at 9 San Miguel, when he felt someone touch his leg.

Perry told investigating officers he looked down and saw a man standing at the bottom of the ladder with a tire tool in his hand.

The man told Perry to give him his wallet, which Perry said he did, telling the man there was no money in it.

Perry told officers the man then said, "Come on, man, give me your watch, I've got two kids to feed."

Perry took off his gold Rolex wristwatch and handed it to the man, who fled south on foot down the alley behind Perry's home.

Perry described the man as in his mid-30s, 5-feet 8-inches to 5-feet 9-inches tall, weighing 150 to 170 pounds with a slender build, black hair, blotchy complexion and a droopy right eye

The man was wearing a khaki waist-length jacket, black T-shirt, dirty blue jeans and soft-soled shoes, police said.

He said the owner, Alonso Trevino, is willing to sell, but the needed permission by state authorities has not been granted.

Because of the squabbles over who is the leader, Mayor Ricardo de Hoyos Arizpe and a representative of the Tamaulipas state government recently appointed a commission to oversee the affairs of the neighborhood and its residents.

City press secretary Federico Schaffler said the city has been attempting to work out the problems of Loma Bonita and La Sandia, but admitted the problems were many.

The basic services can't be provided by the city until the residents purchase their lots, Schaffler said. Meanwhile, a state agency that deals with housing and urbanization is attempting to help out residents with the deeds.

Schaffler said that more and more families are moving into the two neighborhoods, and the problems will increase.

And the residents maintain they will not move.

"It is a difficult matter," Schaffler said. "It would be more difficult to throw them out because there are too many people."

Odessa man dies in one-car mishap

From Staff Reports

An Odessa man was killed early Sunday 10 miles north of Ft. Stockton in a one-vehicle rollover, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

Larry Arthur Gilmore, 25, of 406 E. 19th St., was killed when the vehicle he was riding in ran off FM 1053 about 4 a.m. Sunday.

The car, a 1977 Toyota driven by Antonio Franco Acosta, struck a culvert and rolled over, pinning Gilmore inside, the DPS said.

The Jaws of Life had to be used to cut the top off the vehicle.

Both men were transported to Pecos County Memorial Hospital where Gilmore was pronounced dead at 5:30 a.m.

Acosta suffered a broken ankle, broken arm and lacerations. He was listed in stable condition early today, a hospital spokesman said.

Expo 86 will satisfy craving for around-the-world travel

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Foreign travel may be lighter than usual this year, but those who want to see the sights of other lands can take a trip around the globe at Expo 86 here.

They can view the scenic wonders from Australia to Yugoslavia in slides and films, taste such ethnic foods as musk-ox steak and Beijing duck, buy native handcrafts, and even have their souvenir "passports" stamped as they visit the pavilions of more than 50 countries.

Photographs, slide shows, videos, Imax and 3-D films, along with 360-degree screens, seem to put the viewer right in the midst of the mountains, waters and cities of the far-flung lands.

These international travelers can make their way from Great Britain to the Yukon, from Brunei to Costa Rica or from Cuba to Kenya by monorail, rather than by plane. And, with a comfortable pair of shoes, much of the "world" is accessible on foot.

The festival, which runs through Oct. 13, focuses on transportation and communication. The theme is carried out not only by such diverse on-site transportation as the monorail, ferries, gondolas, sky trains, France's people mover system, and Japan's High Speed Surface Transport, but also through display of vehicles ranging from the past to the future.

China, for instance, has a replica of a bronze chariot dating from about 200 B.C.; Korea shows a model of a 16th-century turtle ship, the first armor-plated ship; while Indonesia features a copy of a 500-year-old Javanese chariot.

In the Japanese area, brief rides are offered on the experimental HSST, an electromagnetic train that floats above the rails. At the U.S.S.R. pavilion the public can go through a Soviet space lab.

On "Highway 86," crossing the fairground, examples of every form of locomotion are immobilized in a gray coating that makes them look like victims of Mount St. Helens ash fallout: vans, trucks, bicycles, motorcycles, ships, tanks, skates, snowshoes, planes, helicopters, wheelchairs, and even running shoes.

A few of the actual bricks from the Great Wall of China are on hand in the pavilion of the People's Republic of China, with visitors invited to touch them as they go by a model of that imposing structure.

Exotic foods abound: riesenbockwurst in the Munich Festhaus, served along with oom-pah-pah band music; salmon grilled by Salish Indians at the First Nations restaurant; sate — skewers of chicken and beef dipped in peanut sauce — at the Malaysian pavilion; eel and octopus, along with Japan's sushi; and bannock bread washed down with drinks cooled by glacial ice at the igloo-shaped Northwest Territories spot.

The Caribbean pavilion offers guava, mango, papaya and coconut ice cream. At Foodlife, there are daily cooking demonstrations and samplings of international foods.

Works of art normally seen only in distant museums are on view, including priceless Inca gold artifacts in Peru's pavilion, an original Goya painting of King Charles III of Spain in that country's space, and the Ramses II and His Times exhibit containing artifacts from the reign of the Egyptian pharaoh.

Town honors residents with personalized city signs

BELLFLOWER, Ill. (AP) — People who drive through this tiny town may wonder why the names Nell Moore and Grace Golden don't ring a bell.

"Welcome to Bellflower, home of Nell Moore," says the 6-foot redwood sign at one end of the central Illinois community.

"Welcome to Bellflower, home of Grace Golden," says one at the other end.

The women aren't getting special treatment. Over the next eight years, the signs on U.S. Highway 54 will tout each of the 421 residents.

"I guess we need something to put Bellflower on the map," said Mrs. Moore, adding that she never cared much for publicity.

The signs, which cost $425, were the brainstorm of Mayor Wilson Mears.

"It's a way to honor people in our community for two weeks," Mears said recently. "It's something for people to enjoy and be proud of."

Each time the names are changed, a photograph is taken and presented to the current Bellflower celebrity.

The first names were chosen for the honor based on age. Mrs. Golden is 95 and Mrs. Moore is 94.

"It was a surprise to us all," said daughter Velda Golden. "It's rather nice."

Mears said he got the idea while driving through Kentucky, where he spotted a water tower decorated with a welcome message and the name of a local jockey.

"I thought it was a great idea to honor someone from your town," he said.

Potato could feed masses if plan works

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — If plants can be pushed into making better use of a new gene, says its creator, a "meat-and-potatoes" potato could nourish people who now must starve.

"We're still a ways from having a potato like a steak. But it's certainly within the realm of possibility," says Dr. Jesse Jaynes, a Louisiana State University biochemist who dreams of ending world hunger.

"This could have a profound impact on developing nations," he said in an interview.

Jaynes said potatoes are about 2 percent protein. If the protein produced by his gene made up one-quarter of that 2 percent, he said, potatoes could provide all the protein a normal person needs.

Genes direct the growth of every cell in every living thing. Over the last 15 years, scientists have learned how to put their molecular building blocks together in new ways and to use viruses and bacteria as microscopic shot needles to carry the new genes into cells to become permanent residents.

Jaynes said he recently got the results of tests showing that his gene has become a permanent part of more than a dozen potato plants at LSU. And although it's not making enough protein to matter, he said he thinks it can be made to do so by the early 1990s.

"In five years we'll know whether or not it's attainable. I personally think it will be," he said.

It would be invaluable to poor countries where most people can't afford meat, eggs, milk or cheese, said Jaynes.

He is working with scientists at the International Potato Center in Lima, Peru, under a grant from the Agency for International Development.

"We'd like to say, 'Now it's a matter of fine-tuning,' but it isn't," said Jaynes. "But I think we're more than halfway there, to having a plant that's worth something — not necessarily monetarily, but valuable to the people."

He said it will be several months before scientists even know how much additional protein the new potatoes contain.

What is important, he said, is that they have successfully made the gene part of the potato.

Jaynes said the gene he put together — he doesn't know if it's been named — is extremely high in the five amino acids which are most needed by the human body and least common in vegetables.

"Proteins are made of 20 amino acids, just stuck one after the other like a train," he said. "We can make 10 of the amino acids ourselves. Ten we can't, so we have to get those 10 from the foods we eat."

If he can get the gene producing a significant amount of protein, he said, the next step will be getting that protein concentrated in the potato itself. At present, he said, it's spread throughout the plant.

Potatoes aren't the only food Jaynes is trying to improve. He's working with the International Center for Tropical Agriculture in Cali, Colombia, to try to introduce his gene into cassava — the root from which tapioca is made.

"Cassava is eaten by a billion people in the world. More of the poor rely on it than on potatoes," he said. "And its protein is a lot worse than potato."

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Do not take financial risks; cut unnecessary spending to increase your chances for career, business and partnership success. Opening new channels of communication in and outside the workplace makes life more tension-free. You will capitalize on the past and be able to reserve more time for family pleasures.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: "Dallas" star Ken Kercheval, pop singer Linda Ronstadt, sportscaster Alex Karras, Dutch painter Rembrandt, the author of ""Twas the Night Before Christmas," Clement Clarke Moore.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be prepared to ask or answer some tough questions. A friend helps you cut through the red tape. Avoid borrowing or lending money. Heed deep feelings as your intuition is right on target.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A long-overdue check finally arrives. Rearrange your schedule to accommodate others but do not let yourself become overburdened. Charitable work will appeal to you at this time. A loved one needs your attention.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A career change is possible. Your mate or partner will voice strong feelings about this. A big surprise arrives in a small package. Family news is surprising but welcome.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A crucial career choice surfaces. Postpone involvement with someone who makes too many demands. Make concessions to a loved one even if you are inconvenienced. The road to romance is rocky.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Speculation is ill-advised today. Keep better track of your expenses for tax purposes. Business plans will go according to plan provided you do not delegate too much authority.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finances can be improved based on today's developments. New sources of income open up if you move quickly. Advice from a close friend is right on target. Use the direct approach in romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Worries will diminish if you take the long view. Real estate is a good investment. Stick to what you know best and you will do well. Family members may act out-of-sorts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Deal with government officials in person as red tape could entangle you. Hold spending down by purchasing only essentials. Make a list to increase work productivity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep your savings in the bank as friends may try to impose their ideas upon you. A wise choice of partner becomes increasingly important at this time. Be more discreet in romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Respect the privacy of others. They will tell you what you need to know when the time is right. An emotional set-back will be short lived. Make better use of your time.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Children can be more than a handful for grandparents today. Protect your mate from negative outside forces. Break out of that social rut and accept a friend's invitation to dinner tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Being too positive in a bad situation is sometimes just as bad as being too negative. Face the reality of the situation and you will be able to survive more easily.

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South with both sides 60 on score you hold:
♠Q93 ♡7 ◇K654 ♣KQ762
The bidding has proceeded:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | 1 ♠ | 2 ♡ | ? |

What do you bid now?
A.—Don't bid two spades, your hand is too strong for such action and partner might think you are bidding just to prevent the opponents from completing the rubber. Jump to three spades. Partner won't play you for more than this, since with a very good hand you would have cue-bid three hearts.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡A10932 ◇KQJ63 ♣K5
The bidding has proceeded:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | Pass | ? |

What action do you take?
A.—If you overcalled with either two or three hearts, you have not valued your hand correctly. A reopening bid of two hearts could be made on a far weaker hand than you have, and a jump to three hearts misstates the quality of that suit and shuts out diamonds as a possible contract. The correct action is to double, and then bid hearts if partner responds in clubs. If you use Michaels cue-bids, this hand is perfect for it.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQJ98 ♡73 ◇A1065 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | Pass | 1 ♡ | 2 ◇ |

What action do you take?
A.—It is a close decision between a penalty double and a bid of two spades. The texture of your suit and the fact the opponents are not vulnerable suggest to us there might be a greater profit in trying for game. Certainly, if the opponents were vulnerable we would double.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQJ ♡872 ◇953 ♣A83
The bidding has proceeded:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | Pass | Pass | ? |

What is your opening bid?
A.—Regardless of whether or not we are playing five-card majors, we would open this hand with one spade. Since partner is a passed hand, there is little chance for game. Therefore, we would not waste our time with prepared bids but would open in the suit we want led should the opponents buy the hand.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ95 ♡A87 ◇63 ♣KJ102
The bidding has proceeded:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| 2 ♠ | Pass | 3 ◇ | Pass |

What do you bid now?
A.—It is unclear whether partner is making a game try in diamonds or looking to no trump as a possible contract. In any event, you certainly want to be in game and the way to tell partner of this is to show your heart feature by bidding three hearts.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K95 ♡J9 ◇652 ♣AKJ106
The bidding has proceeded:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | Pass | 2 ♠ | Pass |
| 3 ◇ | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?
A.—Despite the fact that you have no particular fit for either of partner's suits, your side's combined holding puts you in the slam zone. Your best action at this point is to bid four clubs. That not only leaves partner room to complete the description of his hand, but also stresses the quality of your suit. Our second choice would be three spades.

Crew of HMS Bounty replica refuses to sail until they know they'd be paid

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — In a new twist on Fletcher Christian's 1789 Mutiny on the Bounty, crew members commandeered a replica of the HMS Bounty and refused to sail until they were sure they would get paid.

Without paychecks since the second week of June, crew members said they decided to stop taking parties to sea on July 5 when the full-rigged, 170-foot HMS Bounty was in New York for Liberty Weekend festivities.

"We seized the ship and refused to take it out," said Brian Wallace, an assistant engineer on the replica of the Bounty.

Instead, the crew took the tall ship to its next scheduled stop in New London, where it remained docked. Visitors were allowed on board to look at the ship while the disgruntled crew tried to work out a solution before departing for Nova Scotia on Sunday.

Captain Hugh Boyd, who has been sailing the ship for 26 years, did not take part in the takeover.

The crew blames the dispute on Ted Turner, part-owner of the ship since his company, Turner Broadcasting Systems, bought out Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in March and assumed control of the ship.

Turner is trying to sell parts of MGM, which built the ship for the movie, "Mutiny on the Bounty" starring Marlon Brando in 1960, but is keeping half ownership of the ship. Rouse Corp., which developed the Baltimore waterfront, owns the other half.

Turner was in Moscow for the Goodwill Games and was not available for comment.

Kitsie Bassett, a spokeswoman for TBS, said the crew's checks arrived Friday in St. Petersburg, Fla. where the ship is on exhibit year-round. She said she was not aware of the takeover, but said the crew apparently had not been paid because of a "mixup with all the changes in ownership."

After leaving St. Petersburg several weeks ago, the crew took two private parties out in Boston, one in Newport, two in Greenwich and five in New York — all at Turner's request, they said. After the fifth party in New York without pay, the crew said no more.

Mark Bill, a rigger on the ship for four years, and one of four left from the original 12-man crew, is resigning because of the controversy and disputes with the skipper, he said.

"We had a happy ship until all of this," he said. "No pay, no work."

BRYANT POND, Maine (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, who once worked as a telephone operator, sat at the switchboard again as she helped to dedicate a museum for telephone equipment.

Smith

Mrs. Smith, 88, recalled her high school and post-high school days in her Maine hometown when she was paid 10 cents an hour as an operator. "I really knew what was going on in Skowhegan," said Mrs. Smith, a Republican who served in the Senate for 24 years.

The western Maine village of Bryant Pond is believed to be the last community in America where the old magneto-style crank phones remained in use in 1983, the year they were swapped for a modern switching system.

"The cranks may have been yanked, but the equipment has been maintained," said Doris Stevens, president of the Independent Telephone Pioneers of America, one of the groups responsible for the museum dedicated Saturday.

Murphy

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A weekend performance by comedian Eddie Murphy was delayed after his life was threatened by an anonymous caller, police said.

Up to 400 people were evacuated from the Civic Arena shortly after a receptionist received the telephone threat around 5:55 p.m. Saturday, said Police Chief William H. Moore. The show was scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m., and most of the approximately 7,500 ticket-holders had not arrived yet.

Moore said the caller, believed to be a middle-aged man, told the receptionist that, "If Eddie Murphy goes on stage tonight, he'll be shot. He might as well cancel the show, he's going to be dead anyway."

Murphy, who was not in the arena when the threat was made, went on with the show, just a little behind schedule. He did not acknowledge the threat on his life and instead offered his own explanation for the delay.

"I'm sorry I was a little late. I was in the back watching a porno movie," he told the cheering crowd.

Police spokeswoman Margaret Rizza said Murphy's life has been threatened in other cities on his current tour.

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Woody Harrelson, who plays a bashful bartender by the same first name on the television series "Cheers," was beaten along with his brother in a fistfight, police said.

Harrelson, 35, was treated for facial injuries at Hilton Head Hospital and released, said rescue squad director Pat Lancaster.

His brother, Brett, 23, who was severely beaten, was treated for a fractured jaw, injuries to an eye and cuts on his face, Lancaster and a hospital spokesman said Sunday night. Further information was not available.

The Saturday night fight with the owner of a limousine service started over a disagreement about a fare, said Hilton Head Deputy Sheriff John Kistler.

Woody Harrelson, along with boxer Gerry Cooney, actress Lynda Carter and singer Donnie Osmond, were on the island during the weekend for the Gregg Russell Pro-Celebrity Offshore Powerboat Exhibition.

GREENBRAE, Calif. (AP) — Jerry Garcia, lead guitarist for the Grateful Dead rock band, was awake and alert after coming out of a diabetic coma, hospital officials said.

Garcia, 43, was continuing to improve Sunday at Marin General Hospital, said nursing supervisor Elsie Cramer.

He was hospitalized for treatment of diabetes, an infection from an abcessed tooth and exhaustion after a tour. Band spokesman Dennis McNally and rock promoter Bill Graham said Friday.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The original Allman Brothers Band played their hit "Ramblin' Man" in an emotional reunion at the Volunteer Jam concert.

The seven members of the rock 'n' roll band who had not played publicly together for about 10 years reunited for an hour of performing Saturday that was broadcast around the world by the Voice of America, the far-flung radio network of the United States Information Agency.

Their performance was the highlight of the 11-hour Volunteer Jam rock-country concert, presented by more than 30 entertainers.

'Dear Abby' celebrates 30 years of giving advice

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Abby turned 68 on Independence Day. That's Dear Abby, of course, and those who know her use the modifier less as address than description.

For those who don't know her, the question of the moment, any moment, remains. She's read by millions daily, tens of millions. That we know. Be that as it may, is she for real? Really for real? Dear?

The answer resounds like a firecracker set off in a mailbox: Absolutely! Can one make a judgment, snap or definitive, over the relatively brief span of a five-hour interview-cum-gab fest? Again, absolutely. At least with Abby. This is one of the realest ladies you are ever going to meet.

The facts are pretty well known, but perhaps bear rehashing:

Born July 4, 1918, in Sioux City, Iowa, of Russian immigrant parents. Three sisters, including a twin: Esther Pauline Friedman, aka Eppie. Abby is Pauline Esther Friedman; she's Popo.

Twins, "precocious, mischievous, talkative," are into everything, up to and including the local college, Morningside — a noted breeding ground for Methodist ministers — where they co-author a gossip column called the Campus Rat.

Both drop out after junior year to marry ("It's what you did then"), Popo to Morton Phillips, scion of the Presto Cooker family, also 20.

Eppie moves to Chicago, becomes advice columnist Ann Landers, mails Popo batches of letters from readers, to which Popo sends back suggested replies, apt and pithy.

LANDERS' SYNDICATE puts kibosh on sister act, but Popo has "acquired a taste for giving advice." Now living in the San Francisco Bay Area, she applies for a job at the San Mateo Times, which will never win a Pulitzer for prescience. They're not interested.

Popo lands full force on the San Francisco Chronicle in 1956, becomes Abigail Van Buren, moves at the speed of delight from $20 a week to a career-boosting appearance on Ed Murrow's "Person to Person" to worldwide syndication and household name.

It is virtually impossible to interview Mrs. Morton Phillips, not in the accepted sense. The trouble with Abby is, she listens too damn well.

"Nonsense," she protests. "I haven't stopped talking since you got here."

True enough, but what she has been talking about, until almost forcibly diverted, is her interviewer. She is interesting, this Abby, even fascinating, but above all, she is interested. In you, in me, in the milkman as well as the mighty.

Universal Press Syndicate

Mrs. Morton Phillips, the former Pauline Esther Friedman, celebrated her 68th birthday earlier this month. As syndicated advice columnist "Abigail Van Buren," she is also celebrating the 30th anniversary of her famed "Dear Abby" column this year.

She is almost apologetic about her celebrity friends — "It isn't as if I'm trying to impress anyone. A person in my position has got to meet a few people. But you must appreciate that most of the neatest people I know you never heard of."

Some you have, though, and through the network of a thousand John and Mary Smiths slip the likes of Cary Grant, her dinner companion of a few weeks ago at a gala tribute — to Abby. ("Legend though he is, I want to tell you that Cary Grant wouldn't impress me a single bit unless he were a perfectly charming guy, which he is.")

The likes of violinist Itzhak Perlman ("a master, yes, but a loving, loving father"); of Armand Hammer, beside whom Abby sits as a director of the United World College in New Mexico; of Prince Charles, a fellow UWC director ("the epitome of a gentleman, but more important, a gentle man").

Mainly, though, there's the man on the street — or, since Abby doesn't drive, the man on the plane, or the train. Perfect strangers, she says — and some not so perfect — somehow gravitate toward Abby, and "sit right down and pour their hearts out.

"Of course, it's no great tribute to me. They figure they're never going to see you again. But I imagine they're people whom nobody listens to, and they take the opportunity and let it all hang out.

"I'm not reserved, not all that guarded, and I do have an interest in people. I think they feel that.

"For my part, I enjoy the feeling that people trust me and want to tell me things. But it's nothing really remarkable.

"There are a lot of people who feel the same way I do about other people. I don't think it's all that unusual...."

But it is, it is.

THERE ARE other sides of Abby, of course, many of them revealed in a mini-tour of her quintessentially comfortable Beverly Hills home.

The dining table, for example, which will seat six or eight comfortably, but more in a pinch. The Phillipses try to finesse the pinches. "More than eight," Abby says, and the conversation — the good conversation — suffers."

The bathroom, of all places, papered as it is with clipped cartoons — many of them psychiatry jokes, some of them refreshingly raunchy. On one wall, another photo, this one of Abby and Richard M. Nixon, on which somebody has pasted a cartoon balloon: "Would I lie to you, Abby?"

The office where the serious work is done: hot-line telephones; ponderous but dog-eared reference books; dozens and dozens of plaques of appreciation: Kidney Foundation, Salvation Army, Overeaters Anonymous, Cancer Society, Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays, Goodwill Industries, something from Oral Roberts citing Abby's "deep faith and wisdom from God. ... "

"I was a judge at a Miss Teen-age America contest in Tulsa when Oral Roberts gave me this. He thanked me, and I said, 'OK, will you do something for me?' 'Sure,' he said. 'Will you speak in tongues?' I asked.

"Here we are in this cluttered makeup room and he does it, he actually speaks in tongues!

"So I asked him, 'What did you actually say?'

"Well, he looked at me like I was crazy. Nobody ever asks them what they said.

"But I'll say this for him: He recovered nicely, thought fast and said: 'It meant "Bless this daughter of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. ..."' By the time he'd finished, I had me a full-length sermon...."

AT ONE of Los Angeles' poshest restaurants, a crisp Pouilly Fume sets off the occasion. The occasion of being, mostly — Abby lives "for the here and now," can't wait for the day to begin, rising at 5:30 to scale an Alp of correspondence — but also the occasion of the 30th year of the column, the upcoming 68th birthday, the just-past 47th wedding anniversary.

"Mort," Abby says. "That's who I turn to for advice. Strong yet very gentle. Reliable, dependable, solid. A consummate gentleman, lovely manners. When people meet him, they ask, 'Was he brought up in this country?'

"Even before we were married, I sensed something very unusual in this man. It was like archeology: The deeper you dug, the better it got.

"And handsome? He looked like a Talmudic Robert Taylor....

"Of course I was lucky. What do you know when you're 20? People have hardly developed. They change.

"No, I never recommend marriage at 18, 19, 20. You've got to be crazy to make such a commitment so young. What I recommend to young women now is an education, some sort of training. Learn to take care of yourself, because the chances are you'll have to."

ON THE way home, more stories, not so much unprintable as private — observations of the rich and famous that Abby usually reserves for gloves-off letters to her sisters.

She is a marvelous raconteur, but as usual, her thoughts drift back to her column.

"I work hard," she says, "but I don't consider it work because I love it. I really do.

"I never intended it to be a profession. A lot of people could do it better than I — I'm not kidding myself. That's why all this hoo-hah, all these kudos.... Well, I can't believe it.

"But the personal rewards are enormous — beyond price, beyond any small fame I might have achieved.

"Every day I get letters from people who say, 'You changed my life. Thank you.'

"Now that's important. That's what makes me feel terrific."

DEAR ABBY

Star concerned about elderly

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest the letter from "Helpless," who said she couldn't send gifts to her mother in a nursing home because they would be stolen. The management claimed that this was beyond their control and they could not be responsible for it, since it was "standard."

This is a lie. Theft is not a normal part of the aging process. The trauma for anyone to have a wedding ring stolen can be considerable. For an elderly widow or widower, it can be devastating. Unfortunately, theft is the least of the abuses that occur in nursing homes. Once you accept theft as "normal," it is easier to accept bedsores, rapes and broken bones from beatings as "normal."

I learned a great deal about nursing homes while doing research for "Amos," a television movie. I was horrified at the real-life abuses I discovered and spoke up.

I received a flood of letters from the nursing home industry, vilifying me personally and telling me that I didn't know what I was talking about. I also received hundreds of heartbreaking letters from people who had had hideous experiences with nursing homes.

I turned some of these letters over to the authorities, and one — a murder — to the police.

Answering all that mail was difficult. It was like writing hundreds of condolence letters. I got a small taste of what it must be like to be Dear Abby. I respect your stamina.

"Helpless" said that her mother was "attached" to some of the staff. Of course she was attached to them; she's dependent on them. But they are stealing from her.

Over an 11-year period, a trusted woman employee embezzled $173,000 from 32 elderly servicemen living at the U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home in Washington, D.C.

Of course there are some good nursing homes. My mother, at her own request, spent her last seven years in one, and she was very well-cared for. But you don't have to be related to a movie star to be well-cared for. The non-profit nursing home where we filmed "Amos" had an excellent reputation, but it also had a three-year waiting list.

I am sure those who operate good nursing homes are not happy about those in their profession who break the law and pass it off as standard industry practice.

"Helpless" is not helpless. Nursing home records are open to the public. Before deciding on a nursing home, you should go to your local department of health and ask to see the state inspection reports of the facility you are considering. These will include any complaints and fines for violations.

If you have a problem with a nursing home, contact the state ombudsman through your state's Department of Aging; he or she will refer you to the local ombudsman. This is a federal program in every state set up specifically to investigate and resolve complaints in nursing homes and in board and care homes.

Many of the ombudsmen are volunteers — retired nurses, doctors or pharmacists. They do it because they care. They are confidential and discreet. In some states, such as California, not allowing the ombudsman into a nursing home is a crime.

The last week in June was "Elder Abuse Awareness Week" in Los Angeles. We need a "National Elder Abuse Awareness Week" — 52 weeks a year.

Making the public aware of a bad situation is the only way to change it. Thank you, Abby, for bringing this hidden horror to light. You may use my name. — KIRK DOUGLAS

DEAR MR. DOUGLAS: Thank you for an excellent, informative letter and kudos for caring enough to write.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Experience teaches right from wrong

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Children don't always need adults to teach them right from wrong, according to a study of moral development in children at the University of Rochester.

Professor Judith Smetana found that children often learn moral values — that hitting people is wrong, for instance — from their own experience. They see that hitting others produces crying, pain and other distress that is clearly negative.

Social conventions, on the other hand, such as dressing boys in blue and girls in pink, must be taught by adults because such conventions are arbitrary and not obvious to children.

Language proposal sparks war of words

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A proposal to make English the official language of the U.S. government became a war of words during the annual national convention of the League of United Latin American Citizens.

Critics claimed such a law would be used by white supremacists to eliminate bilingualism, while proponents contended the law would prevent the United States from turning into a nation of competing languages.

The proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution would declare English the official language of the United States government.

Former U.S. Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., a language expert who founded U.S. English, which favors the amendment, led the word battle Saturday for proponents.

The amendment is needed, he said, "to forestall the naming of a second language as an official language in any part of the United States" — a move which would create a fragmented nation of different languages as is the case in India and the Middle East.

"The amendment would not prohibit the use of Spanish or any other language in the home, in religion, in business, in sports, on street signs or in bilingual education...If you want to conduct a meeting in your home in Serbo-Croatian, no Gestapo is going to knock on your door to stop you," Hayakawa said.

Florida state Rep. Grover Robinson echoed Hayakawa's arguments. "We're all proud of the contributions of Hispanics to our culture. There is no more noble experiment than the American melting pot. But language is a powerful tool. A common language unifies society. Diverse languages fragment society," he said.

"Your program is ugly. There's no greater threat to the unity of our country than the U.S. English movement," said Tony Bonilla, chairman of the National Hispanic Leadership Conference.

"We do not need a movement to tell us the importance of speaking English," Bonilla said. "The bottom line is that your movement creates a climate of fear, hate and division. It's a very dangerous movement."

Educator Sarah Melendez said she feared such a law would be used by bigots to file lawsuits to suppress bilingual education and other bilingual services.

She also said political differences rather than language barriers prevent different groups in India, for example, from living in peace with one another. Where there are no political differences, as in Switzerland or the Netherlands, bilingualism does not cause disruption, she argued.

Hayakawa claimed the "paranoia of minorities" was to blame for the opposition rather than the issue.

But Melendez countered, "I'm worried about the paranoia of the majority. We know we need English. But we don't need English only. We need English plus (other languages)."

LULAC, meeting at the Las Vegas Hilton, is the oldest and largest Hispanic organization in the country.

Woman wins title on fourth attempt

FORT WORTH (AP) — Stephany Samone, the first runner-up to Miss Texas last year, said she brushed up on her interviewing techniques and talent for her fourth try at the title.

On Saturday it paid off.

Miss Samone, competing as Miss Grand Prairie, performed a jazzy version of Tammy Wynette's country hit, "Stand By Your Man," to best 62 other contestants and win the Miss Texas Scholarship Pageant here.

"I worked really hard all the way around," said Miss Samone, 25. "What I worked on most was my interview as well as my talent."

Even though she won the talent preliminary Friday night, Miss Samone said she wasn't sure if the unusual version of the song would go over well with classic country and Western fans.

A self-employed entertainer who also won a preliminary swimsuit competition, Miss Samone was among 21 veterans competing this year in the Texas contest.

Last year she was first runner-up as Miss Dallas, second runner-up in 1983 as Miss Greenville, and was one of the top 10 pageant contestants in 1982 as Miss Blackland Area.

All the other five top finishers also have been in the Miss Texas Pageant at least once.

Miss Arlington, Mary Theresa Atkins, 22, a part-time program analyst in her third year of competition, was first runner-up. The next three spots were held by contestants in their second year of competition.

Miss Dallas, Johnna Marie Ogden, 22, took second runner-up honors.

Miss Duncanville, Leslie Evelyn Chambers, 21, a junior at the University of Texas at Arlington, was third runner-up. Elizabeth Katherine Johnson, 26, Miss Hurst-Euless-Bedford, was fourth runner-up.

Miss Samone advances to September's Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J. She won a $4,000 cash scholarship, about $23,000 in 10 other college scholarships, plus a car.

Although she represents Grand Prairie, she is from Mesquite and is a sophomore at the University of Texas at Arlington. She plans to continue pursuing a business degree in music at Belmont College in Tennessee.

Miss Samone has released two singles and has performed with Alabama, Moe Bandy and Reba McEntire.

State has 210 'time bombs' in unsafe dams

DALLAS (AP) — The 28-foot-tall Lake Wichita Dam, criticized as structurally deficient by federal and state officials, is a ticking time bomb to the director of public works for Wichita Falls.

"I guarantee you that, sooner or later, a storm will come that will take the dam out," said George Bonnett.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers lists the Lake Wichita Dam and 209 other dams in the state as unsafe high-hazard structures because their failure could cause heavy loss of life or great property damage.

In a 1977 report, the Corps said that a Lake Wichita dam failure would flood out one-third of Wichita Falls' 94,000 residents. The report stated property damage could top $26 million.

But city officials still have not submitted plans to the state for approval that is necessary before needed modifications can begin, despite government warnings since 1972 of the dam's deficiencies.

"There's not enough funding to make it all safe," said Bonnett. "What do you do? You, I, neighbors are not willing to tax ourselves to correct these dams."

A Corps inventory identified dams in the state that were threats to people and property more than five years ago. But few of the dam owners have made changes needed to make the structures safe.

A review of federal and state records by The Dallas Morning News shows flood warning systems for downstream residents were recommended in nearly every government report on the dams, but some have not yet been developed.

The Texas Water Commission is the agency responsible for ensuring that the state's 5,881 dams are safe. But the state has one dam inspector for every 392 dams, compared with one for every 19 dams in California.

"With this many dams, the probability of a dam failure is probably greater in Texas than any other state," said Bruce A. Tschantz, a professor of civil engineering at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville who studied the issue of dam safety in the United States.

Bear Foot Lake Dam, one on the list of unsafe high-hazard structures, was breached on June 26. No one was injured but more than 200 families were stranded in their subdivision near the community of Rye for about three days because the only access road washed out.

Man's soul seeks justice, prosecution tells jurors

KERRVILLE (AP) — The soul of a hitchhiker who prosecutors say was tortured to death and burned on a Hill Country ranch will not rest until his killers pay for what they did, jurors were told today.

"We may never know the true cause of Anthony Bates' death," prosecutor Gerald Carruth said in closing arguments of the nine-week organized crime trial. "All that remains of Anthony Bates are spread out before you on the jury box."

Nodding toward small plastic vials of bone fragments found at the ranch, Carruth said, "We know he's not with us, but we know his soul is out there somewhere and will not rest until those responsible are brought to justice."

Final arguments were scheduled to conclude later today, with the jury expected to begin deliberations afterwards.

The state has charged Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 55; his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33; and drifter Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21, with violating the state's organized crime law.

The case is the first ever under Texas' organized crime statute in which defendants are accused of aggravated kidnapping and murder conspiracy.

They are charged in the March 1984 death of Bates, a 27-year-old drifter from Huntsville, Ala. The state claims Bates, like Caldwell and other hitchhikers, was lured to the Ellebracht ranch with the promise of work.

Prosecutors allege he was forced into slavery and not permitted to leave. He and other workers were ordered to cut down cedar trees on the ranch and fashion the wood into souvenir keychains, the state contends.

Prosecutors also allege Bates was tortured to death with a cattle prod over a period of several days before his body was drenched in gasoline and burned.

Charred human bone fragments were found at the ranch after law officers raided the spread in April 1984.

The defense has claimed the drifters were free to leave the Ellebrachts' sprawling Hill Country ranch at any time.

Defense lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, who represents the senior Ellebracht, tried to show that ranch worker Mark Hamilton was the "active aggressor" in the torture sessions.

Caldwell, who testified 11 days in his own defense, admitted he participated in the torture sessions. But he said he did so because he feared for his life.

Tape recordings of several torture sessions involving Bates were played in court. Witnesses have identified voices belonging to the junior Ellebracht and Caldwell on those tape recordings.

Two hitchhikers not charged in the case testified they were forced to dig ditches on a chain gang after they asked to leave the ranch. One of the men said the senior Ellebracht put a rope around his neck and threatened to hang him.

Several witnesses have told the court the Ellebrachts used guns, knives, threats and a cattle prod to force workers to do their bidding.

To win a conviction under the organized crime statute, prosecutors must prove a conspiracy by at least five people.

Seven other people face charges in the same case.

Chemical firms may join opponents of nuclear plant

AUSTIN (AP) — A group of more than 80 Texas chemical companies is considering joining opponents of the South Texas Nuclear Power Project to convince state officials that the nuclear plant is unnecessary and uneconomical.

The Public Utility Commission is investigating Unit 2 of the twin-unit nuclear facility to determine whether it is economically worthwhile, PUC staff members said.

"We think cancellation of both units should be seriously examined very carefully and very quickly," said Jon Fisher, director of research for the Austin-based Texas Chemical Council. "We are beginning to come to the conclusion that we don't need the power and can't afford its price."

He said that the chemical group, as an alternative, is encouraging the development of a technology called cogeneration as well as other sources of cheaper power.

Some chemical companies on the Gulf Coast have built cogeneration projects in which steam and electricity are produced simultaneously. Natural gas or other fuel is burned to produce steam, both for production processes and for electricity.

Excess electricity is then sold primarily to private power companies, which by law must purchase cogenerated power.

Officials said cogeneration facilities are capable of generating more than 3.1 million kilowatts of power across the state, most of it from several chemical companies on the Gulf Coast.

Although official estimates place the final cost of the South Texas Nuclear Project, now under construction near Bay City, at $5.5 billion, Fisher said he expects the cost to be at least $7.5 billion.

"The $5.5 billion is three years old — there is no way they are going to make that," he said.

Project opponents welcomed the chemical group's stance.

"We are delighted to have the chemical industry help spread the word about the the devastating economic effect this project will have in terms of economic competitiveness and jobs," said Tom Smith, director of Public Citizens of Texas.

Houston's economy blamed for increase in hot checks

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's depressed economy is being blamed for an increase of more than 50 percent in the number of hot check arrest warrants being issued, officials said.

One Houston police precinct has served more than 9,000 fraudulent check warrants in the first half of this year, an increase of 53 percent over the same period last year, said Lt. Tommy Burnup.

Burnup said most of those coming through his office are first-time offenders who never have had trouble paying their bills.

"More people are hitting on hard times," Burnup said. "These people are not the professional hot check writers. Most of these people have not had trouble with hot checks before."

Don Chumley, chief of a precinct warrant division, said his office has issued 51 percent more warrants for fraudulent check writers during the same period in 1985.

"This is the biggest number it's ever been in this short period of time," he said.

His precinct has issued more than 32,000 fraudulent check warrants so far this year and a total of 71,000 in the past two years, he said.

American Airlines expansion turned into nightmare for staff of DFW

DALLAS (AP) — What started out as a challenge for the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport staff ultimately caused the departure of many of the airport's senior employees and contributed to indictments against them and contractors.

American Airlines had planned to create a major domestic and international hub at the airport with a $300 million, 10-gate expansion that began in 1982. The airport staff planned it as the first terminal construction project to be managed in-house rather than by consultants.

In the end, most of the airport's administrators were indicted on charges of falsifying documents — to speed up the project for American and, investigators told The Dallas Morning News, to protect their own jobs and professional reputations by hiding illegal expenditures and cost overruns from the airport board.

"It started out as typical bureaucratic (cover-up) type conduct that over the years turned into something criminal," said Dallas City Attorney Analeslie Muncy, whose staff has investigated airport affairs since 1984.

A Dallas County grand jury returned 30 indictments, including the first-ever in the county against a corporation.

"There were a lot of management problems," said George Bonna, the airport's new engineering chief. "This was a large project with very tight time schedules. I think that many people managing it didn't have the background and experience necessary.

"And it just blew wide open because of that. I think it's very much symptomatic of (what was) a much larger problem."

In 1984, American Airlines chief executive Robert L. Crandall was concerned enough about the cost and quality of the construction at Terminal 2EC that the airline sued the main contractor, John W. Ryan Construction Co. The airport joined American in the suit.

The lawsuit prompted American and airport attorneys to take the first good look in years at airport records, and the Morning News said they found dozens of fraudulent documents, allegedly designed to circumvent state bidding laws.

That prompted a special airport audit, which found the staff had wasted millions of dollars by giving work to favored firms without the legally required competitive bids, adequate staff review or the knowledge of the airport board.

American also was unaware of any violations that may have been committed by the airport staff and never applied "undue pressure" on DFW, said Wesley G. Kaidahl, American Airlines senior vice president for airline planning.

One American official, who played a key role at DFW and who was not identified by the newspaper, said the staff's actions were intended only to help American in the face of tight deadlines and numerous changes sought by airline management.

He said that airlines at DFW — and not taxpayers — are solely responsible for repaying the government bonds used by the airport to finance terminal construction.

"I fault my company some for not standing up and saying, 'These people were just doing what we asked them to do,'" he said. "I just can't overstate how much pressure we put on the airport board and staff to get the job done."

American, he said, was under pressure from the 1978 deregulation of the airline industry, which spurred competition for new routes and airport gates.

The airline planned a $305 million expansion program at DFW, and believed each new gate could bring in $6 to $8 million in annual revenue, he added.

American's plans were delayed from 1980 to February 1982 by a Delta Air Lines lawsuit, which caused DFW to amend contracts so that each airline paid for its own terminal construction.

The Ryan Co. was awarded the contract to begin building 2EC on April 26, 1982. Problems began almost immediately, the News reported.

Fight at benefit party ends in men's deaths

BURLESON, Texas (AP) — A fight at a benefit party held by about 150 members of at least two motorcycle gangs from across the state resulted in the deaths of two men and injury of another, authorities say.

Johnson County Sheriff Eddy Boggs said witnesses told authorities David Devaughn, 29, of Lancaster, and Stephen Gerholt, in his mid-30s, of Burleson, were killed late Saturday after an argument.

Devaughn was a weekend motorcyclist, not associated with any single club, while Gerholt was a member of the Bandidos group, which has chapters in several Texas cities, said Boggs.

He said the shooting occurred on private property in a wooded area near the line between Tarrant and Johnson counties where motorcycle club members had gathered for a benefit in honor of a club member who was killed in a car accident.

Boggs said Rick Reast, 39, a vendor at the party and a friend of Devaughn's, was shot and wounded in the hip. He was in stable condition Sunday after undergoing surgery at Huguley Hospital in Fort Worth, said nursing coordinator Bob Hadley.

Neither Boggs nor Hadley had an address for Reast. But the sheriff said he is believed to be from the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Witnesses told investigators that Devaughn's girlfriend "became involved in some sort of altercation...and he got upset and started waving a .38-caliber pistol around," said Boggs.

Devaughn was wounded at least twice in the chest, and Gerholt was shot once in the chest, he said.

"We don't really know what transpired between the two," said the sheriff, who added that only one gun had been recovered and many of the gang members had left by the time investigators arrived.

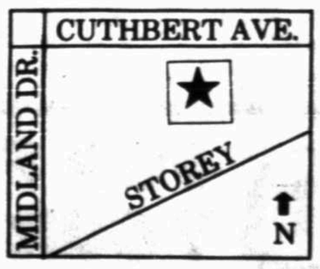

Boggs said members of the Rebel Riders, a local area club, also were at the gathering, as well as members of other unidentified gangs, some from as far as Oklahoma.

Professor builds canoes using Indian designs

YELLOW SPRINGS, Ohio (AP) — When Antioch University professor Robert Bieri sees a canoe, he sees a work of art and a vehicle for a trip into history.

Bieri, 60, builds canoes as closely as possible to Indian designs, and uses traditional tools to do it.

"To me, you get a much more appreciative view of their culture when you get into this sort of thing," Bieri said.

It's also difficult because few good records remain about how and why Indians designed canoes the way they did, he said.

The canoes "look ugly, but students really get turned on by them," said the environmental sciences professor. He also teaches a course in canoeing each spring.

Hanging on the side of his Japanese-style house are wood, canvas and paper canoes. He doesn't have any of the newfangled aluminum or fiberglass models, though he's not above using modern material to enhance nature's supplies.

"There's no need for it," Bieri said of the modern canoes. "A lot of people could put these things together if they wanted to, fairly easily, and get out and have some fun with them."

Some of them also are more stable in rough water, he said, and so light they seem to float on your shoulders.

In some ways, Bieri is glad the modern materials exist because it means people again are designing canoes, something he said was neglected for years.

Bieri got hooked on canoes when he was 7 and took a ride in one at a New Jersey Boy Scout camp.

"I never forgot it," he said. However, in the process of moving coast to coast, he had no opportunity to go canoeing until he came to Antioch. He started auditing the university's canoeing course, then got a taste of lake canoeing in Canada and started researching the history of canoes.

Bieri said he began teaching the course about seven years ago. When he was idled that summer by Antioch's financial problems, Bieri built his first canoe, a 13-foot Cree crooked model named after the tribe that used it for traveling on rough waters.

It is built of strips of white cedar that Bieri collected, split, then glued together and coated with fiberglass. The half-moon-shaped hull rides the waves like a rocking chair with surprising stability, he said.

He was in the Kanawah Canoe Museum north of Toronto, Canada, when he found his dream canoe three years ago. Bieri asked to look at a model built by the Salish tribes. He said he was amazed when the curator told him to lift the 12-footer off a top shelf, and he could. It weighed just 15 pounds.

"I was so blown away, I came rushing back here to make one," he said. Bieri said he made it in his house in two weeks.

His 12-foot, 12-pound canoe has a frame of white cedar strips, split by knife from the log, tied together and covered with brown paper, which Bieri said most closely resembles bark the Indians used.

The paper is coated with artist's medium to make it tougher and water resistant, then coated with lacquer.

He punched it; it did not break. Bieri said the paper turns dark in the water but doesn't leak. If he breaks a cedar rib, there are spares attached.

"You just tie another one on and go on your way," he said.

Bieri has built a 16-foot version which has bamboo ribs. With its wide center, he said, it will hold more gear than a modern 17-foot canoe.

The Salish canoe; which he thinks may have originated in Siberia, has sharply pointed ends, so when it hits a wave, it slices through the water, he said. But why the Indians built it that way, how they got the design and especially how they paddled it and what terms they used to describe the canoes eludes him.

There is little information about how they worked. But Bieri gleans tidbits from various works and pictures, and from visits to places like British Columbia, where two Kutenai Indian women in their 70s still make canoes.

Only the women of that tribe make canoes, he said, but he doesn't know why. Their children now have little need for canoes and haven't learned the craft, so "when they die, it's gone," Bieri said.

Other tribes have been relocated from their homelands which had extensive water systems to areas where they no longer need canoes, further ensuring the canoe-making art will be lost, he said.

Next, he wants to make a canvas-covered and painted canoe similar to what Indians made beginning in the mid-1850s. Bieri also dreams of putting all his research into a book someday.

His enthusiasm will have to be put on hold for about a year, though. Bieri is preparing to travel to Japan to study his other love — ocean plankton.

Black may be next U.S. envoy to South Africa, Time says

NEW YORK (AP) — Robert Brown, a black businessman from North Carolina, is under consideration as the next U.S. ambassador to South Africa, according to Time magazine.

Time, in its July 21 edition, said Ambassador Herman Nickel plans to leave by the end of the month after four years in Pretoria.

Brown, 51, who once was a special assistant to President Nixon, runs a public relations and management-consulting company in High Point. He has been to South Africa a number of times, most recently in February as head of a fact-finding group, Time said.

"Brown is the embodiment of conciliation and bridge-building," the magazine quoted an unidentified administration official as saying. "He's close to Jesse Jackson and Richard Nixon."

Sonda McCarty, a State Department spokeswoman, declined comment on the Time report.

Time said another possible successor to Nickel is Richard Viets, a career diplomat formerly assigned to Tanzania and Jordan.

Lawyers ask courts to seize assets of LaRouche foundation

LEESBURG, Va. (AP) — Lawyers for an elderly California woman, armed with a $135,000 judgment, are asking Virginia courts to seize assets of an organization tied to political extremist Lyndon LaRouche in order to recover money she lent the LaRouche group.

The organization, Fusion Energy Foundation, acknowledged owing the money to Grace M. Lindros, 71, of Los Angeles in settling a lawsuit in California in January.

Mrs. Lindros had charged representatives of Fusion, LaRouche's presidential campaign and another related group used "oppressive and fraudulent tactics" to persuade her to make three loans totaling more than $125,000, and then failed to repay them.

"They virtually cleaned her out," said C. Brian O'Gorman, her lawyer in Goleta, Calif.

"They overcame her will, and convinced her to sign over very large amounts of money to entities about which she knew nothing."

Fusion Energy Foundation Inc. is one of several groups under investigation by a federal grand jury in Boston into allegations of credit card fraud. It faces multimillion-dollar contempt of court judgments stemming from that case.

LaRouche, a frequent fringe candidate for president, is listed as a director of the foundation.

Fusion Energy agreed to a repayment schedule to settle the woman's suit, but one of check for $7,500 bounced and after several months of payments no more were received, O'Gorman said.

Her lawyers filed a motion for judgment in Loudoun County, Va., where LaRouche makes his headquarters, seeking to force the organization to make payments or to have the court attach assets to obtain repayment. No hearing has been set.

"We'll attach anything we can find, and we'll go to any other state if we can find assets," said James R. Treese, an Alexandria, Va., lawyer also representing Mrs. Lindros.

Fusion Energy missed a June 22 deadline to file a response in Circuit Court here.

Treese said Fusion, through its lawyer, initially agreed to repay a large portion, but recently said the group did not have money to make payments.

The Fusion lawyer, Herbert R. Rubenstein, said in an interview he was still trying to negotiate a new schedule to repay the debt.

"Obviously we understand we owe some money, and we are trying to negotiate some terms," Rubenstein said.

LaRouche's spokesman, Christina Huth, and the executive director of Fusion Energy Foundation, Paul Gallagher, did not return a reporter's telephone calls seeking comment.

Mrs. Lindros was described by her attorney as unsophisticated in financial matters, and as having no understanding of what Fusion Energy or the LaRouche organizations intended to do with the money.

"She didn't really know what they did. It was simply a matter of too many of them talking too fast. She lost any powers of resistence. Some people are very persuasive," O'Gorman said. "She had no real understanding of what she was doing."

According to her suit, Mrs. Lindros said she was first persuaded to lend LaRouche's presidential campaign $950 in April 1984, and 11 days later agreed to lend $25,000 to another LaRouche-related group, Campaigner Publications Inc.

Four days later, she was persuaded to lend another $100,000 to Fusion Energy Foundation. According to the suit, the LaRouche-group's fund raisers refused to accept a check and took Mrs. Lindros to her bank where they "insisted that she immediately transmit the funds by wire transfer to defendants' account in New York," a method that prevented a stop payment order.

O'Gorman said Fusion Energy offered its settlement the day before the case was to be tried in Los Angeles County Superior Court.

The claim in Virginia includes the $100,000 loan to Fusion plus interest, attorney's fees and other costs totaling $135,783.32. No settlement has been reached on the smaller loans to Campaigner and The LaRouche Campaign, he said.

Fusion Energy Foundation is under investigation by the New York attorney general's office for its fund-raising tactics. Officials there said the group has failed to file required annual financial disclosure reports for five years.

Seven other states have issued cease-and-desist orders or sued to stop the sale of unregistered securities by LaRouche-related groups. California securities authorities took the step late last year as a result of Mrs. Lindros' case.

People in those states have complained of being persuaded to make loans of as much as $100,000 to LaRouche groups and of later being unable to have all or part repaid. Also, a Florida man has turned over more than $2 million in loans and contributions to Fusion Energy Foundation.

Fairy tale, diary of Anne Frank attacked by fundamentalists

GREENEVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A fairy tale by Hans Christian Andersen, the diary of Anne Frank and other works are under attack by a group of Christian fundamentalists who fear the books will corrode their children's faith.

The parents, who argue it is a question of religious freedom, are suing Hawkins County school officials to force them to provide alternate textbooks.

They say they object to books that tell of feminism, evolution and Eastern religions.

"The schools have no constitutional right to bombard children with ideas that are counter to their religious view," said Michael P. Farris, an attorney for seven families.

The families' fight began in 1983 when they sued the school system for the right to choose reading texts other than the Holt, Rinehart and Winston readers used in grades 1-8.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Hull dismissed the case, but the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decided a question remains whether alternative texts should be used and ordered a trial.

The trial, which begins today, is expected to last two weeks. If the judge rules in favor of the parents, a jury will be selected to determine the amount of damages.

"It goes beyond offensive," said plaintiff Vicki Frost of Church Hill, who was arrested for trespassing in 1983 after pulling her children out of a reading class.

"It violates our religious conviction. It changes our children's way of thinking," Mrs. Frost said. "The books have the potential for changing the religious philosophy of our children."

"We're not opposed to each particular story per se. But the books taken as a whole contrast with our beliefs," she said. "It is just too overwhelming. I believe the books indoctrinate students into a pattern of...humanism, supernaturalism, mind-over-matter, Hinduism."

The material the families find objectionable includes works by science fiction writer Ray Bradbury, anthropologist Margaret Meade and chimpanzee expert Jane Goodall.

The Andersen fairy tale they cite describes a child's trip to a fortune-teller, which the parents argue introduces students to supernaturalism.

"The Diary of Anne Frank" is included in the list because of a passage that the parents say describes all religions as equal.

The young Jewish girl, hiding from the Nazis in war-torn Amsterdam, wrote of trying to convince a friend he should have some type of religion.

"Oh, I don't mean you have to be Orthodox...I just mean some religion...it doesn't matter what," Miss Frank wrote. "Just to believe in something!"

Mrs. Frost also cited a story entitled "The Revolt of Mother," which she described as "an attack on the biblical family." In a biblical family, she said, "the wife should submit to the husband's authority, and the children to the parents' authority."

School officials defend their book selections and say providing a second curriculum would be difficult.

"We're not trying to teach any particular doctrine," said school Superintendent Robert Cooper. "We're trying to teach the students how to read."

Ronald Woods, an attorney for the school system, said the parents must prove the texts go beyond merely exposing their children to different ideas and in fact seriously harm their religious beliefs.

"It's difficult to conceive how a school could operate if they open the door for someone to come in and say, 'I don't like this,' " he said.

Hostages' kin attend music festival

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Relatives of Americans held captive in Lebanon joined hundreds of other people at a music festival designed to honor the hostages and keep attention focused on their plight.

Mayor Ken Schultz Sunday welcomed the families "on behalf of all the freedom-loving citizens of Albuquerque." He said the Freedom Awareness Latin Music Festival, which featured Latin bands, was being held to remind the nation during its celebration of 210 years of freedom that not all Americans are free.

Among those attending was Sue Franceschini, sister of the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, 51, who served as a pastor in Beien before moving to Lebanon, where he was abducted last year.

"I feel him here with you and with so many people here today that knew my brother. And he touched your lives, and now you have touched ours," Mrs. Franceschini, of Joliet, Ill., told the crowd.

Also held in Lebanon are Terry Anderson, 38, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; Thomas Sutherland, 54, acting dean of agriculture at the American University; and David Jacobsen, 54, director of the American University Hospital. William Buckley, 57, a U.S. Embassy political officer, reportedly was killed, but his death has not been verified.

Jacobsen's 30-year-old son Eric performed a song he and his brother, Paul, wrote "not only for my father, but for all the hostages and anyone who's been separated from a loved one."

Jacobsen, of Huntington Beach, Calif., urged the audience to request that local radio stations play the song, "When the Word Comes."

"It's a simple way that we can keep this in front of the general public," he said.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

The Mazda 626 is available in a number of variations to suit many different needs, from those of the sport car enthusiast to the family.

Mazda 626: High performance, unexpected price

By Tom Cooper

The Mazda 626 is introduced by the company as a "bonafide world-class road car." This is a rare claim but rarer still is the sticker price of less than $10,000. The basic 626 is also surprisingly well equipped, and for one fundamental reason: Mazda's specifications for equipment considered essential for creating a dynamic harmony between driver and machine. Standard on this model are velour-upholstered seats, remote releases for locking fuel door and trunk, dual remote mirrors, interment wipers, front door map pockets, wide body side moldings, halogen head lamps, tinted glass, rear defroster, cut-pile carpeting, trunk light, power assisted brakes, lockable lighted glove box, digital clock, reminder beepers, illuminated ashtray, 6 way adjustable driver's seat, split fold down rear seats and more.

Also standard on this car is Mazda's digitally programmed multi-point fuel injection system. Mazda engineers prepped the 2 litre engine by revising the piston design to increase power and torque, revised cam timing and intake pulse inertia. For its multi-point injection control, Mazda programmed an 8 bit, 4k byte ROM digital microprocessor with monitor inputs and memory, for precise control of combustion factors. The result is a constant regulation of fuel/air mix, timing and combustion providing economy and performance at all times, under all varying conditions.

A further development that is available is an Automatic Adjusting Suspension System. Computer-controlled and sensor-monitored, the system reads various forces active upon the car in any maneuver, and adjusts the shocks individually to neutralize squat, dive, roll and lateral G-forces. Turbocharging is also available with sophisticated developments in design that have resulted in a lightweight unit with built-in durability and reliability, and reduced need for precautions to prevent damage to the turbocharger. Combined with a Mazda-programmed 8-bit 8k byte ROM microprocessor, this turbocharged engine produces an unusually large boost over a wide range or rpms, and does it with virtually no lag.

There are many other refinements to be found in this car as well as a host of standard and optional features. This appears to be a driving machine that is a cut above the competition in value as well as in performance.

This feature appears each Monday as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.
