National Sun Day Rainy in Panhandle

National Sun Day to the contrary, Old Man Winter remained rejuvenated in the Panhandle today, dumping intermittent rainshowers and snow across wide sections of the area.

While much of the nation was observing Sun Day ceremonies to promote the use of solar energy in brilliant sunshine, the Panhandle shivered through unseasonably cold spring temperatures under overcast skies for the second straight day.

Despite the cold, however, generous thunderstorms which continued through most of the day Tuesday prompted smiles on the faces of local farmers.

Virtually all sections of Deaf Smith County received at least an inch of precipitation Tuesday, and intermittent showers mixed with light snow continued early today.

Brisk northerly winds sent the mercury plummeting into the 30's Tuesday as they accompanied the downpour. Although the moisture was welcome, it was cold and the rain quickly chilled those out in it to the bone.

While only light accumulations of snow were reported locally, the late season cold snap left accumulations of up to 17 inches of snow in portions of the southern

Farm Bills Getting Okay

293 Vote Absentee In County

By PAUL SIMS
Managing Editor

Absentee voting in Deaf Smith County may have set a record in this year's Democratic and Republican primaries with 293 persons casting ballots by Tuesday's 5 p.m. deadline.

There were 285 personal appearances and eight ballots cast by mail. Of the total, only seven persons voted in the Republican primary.

County Clerk B.F. Cain said today that the total might be a new high.

"Since 1962, which is as far as I went back, the next highest was in 1974 when 180 people absentee voted," Cain said.

That year, there were 2,965 total votes cast. Cain said he would not be surprised if at least 4,500 voted this year.

"I guess these candidates are getting them out," Cain said. "There are more local candidates than there have been in a long time, and people are interested in these state races."

Democratic voting places for Saturday's primary are as follows:

Precinct 1, driver's license examiner room; 2, Deaf Smith County commissioners' courtroom; 3, Zinser residence, west of Westway; 4, Simms Community House; 5, Hereford Community Center; 6, Ford School; 7, Dawn Community Building; 8, Walcott School; 9, Bippus Community House; 10, Wildorado Church; 11, Northwest School.

Voting precincts are numbered on the registration cards, according to Cain.

Voting in the Republican primary will be conducted Saturday at La Plata Junior High School.

Contested Democratic races in this year's primary include:

County judge—Ed Coplen, Glen Nelson, L.B. "Scat" Russell, Bruce

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two bills aiding financially troubled farmers are drawing close to final congressional action and their expected signing by President Carter.

Senate and House conferees are expected to meet soon and easily resolve the differences between a package of changes in rural and farm credit programs the Senate adopted Tuesday on a 92-to-0 vote. The House passed its version last week.

The House has scheduled the final vote for Thursday on a second measure. It would allow the president to raise the federally guaranteed rates of return on wheat, feedgrains, cotton and rice whenever he asks growers to idle cropland as a way to boost their market prices.

The Senate approved that product of House-Senate conferees Tuesday on a voice vote with two minutes' discussion by the four senators present. The conferees' earlier and more extensive proposal, backed by the American Agriculture protest group, was attacked by Carter and killed by the House on April 12.

Carter has said that he would accept the authority to change prices since present law requires that the congressionally set "target prices" be adjusted only by a fixed formula.

But he has said only the wheat target would be raised this year, from $3 to $3.40 a bushel, a $600 million budget addition if the average postharvest market price is $3.

The Agriculture Department pays eligible farmers the difference between the target and a lower average.

"This is a modest bill that provides limited help to the nation's farmers," said Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., chairman of the agriculture committee. "It is far short of what I think is needed to restore vitality to the agricultural economy. But it appears to be the best farm legislation attainable under existing circumstances."

"This is the best we can accomplish," said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., prime author of the defeated bill. "We are at the mercy of the administration."

The credit bill has three parts. One raises the limits on traditional ownership and operating loans to reflect the larger farms prevalent today. It also opens the programs to corporations and partnerships principally involved in farming.

The second sets up a 20-month program under which up to $4 billion in federally guaranteed or insured loans of up to $500,000 each would be available to proven, farmers who need to refinance existing debts or face bankruptcy because of "economic stress." The House has a $400,000 limit.

The third raises from one-half to three-fourths the amount of a rural water or sewer project that can be paid for through a grant from the Farmers Home Administration.

Both credit measures, three years in the making, have general administration approval.

Cash Stolen From Allsup's

A small black male robbed Allsup's Convenience Store No. 111, 910 Park Ave., of an undetermined amount of money around 2:20 a.m. today.

Night clerk Audrey Garcia told Hereford police that the man, described as being no more than 20-years-old, 5-foot, 4-inches tall and weighing 125 to 135 pounds, entered the store between 2:16 and 2:25 a.m., walked back and forth in front of the cash register, then put his hands into the pockets of his dark blue jacket.

The man, who never actually produced a pistol, told her to "open the register and give me the money," according to police. She complied, and as the man headed out the front door of the store he told her "to be a good little girl."

Ms. Garcia told police the robber wore a yellow towel wrapped around the lower part of his face and had on a dark blue cap, dark jacket and khaki pants. He reportedly ran from the store after the incident.

Patrolman Steve Hendrix initially was called to the scene of the robbery. Others investigating the incident were Detective Roger Scott, Lt. Paul Rameriz and Patrolman Joe Brown.

Police were still investigating the armed robbery, Hereford's first in at least two years, at noon today.

Betzen Named Recipient Of Merit Scholarship

Hereford High School senior Mark Betzen today was awarded a four-year college-sponsored Merit Scholarship by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation of Evanston, Ill.

Betzen is one of approximately 1,795 students from throughout the country to be named a scholarship recipient by the NMSC. The total scholarship program is valued at more than $12 million.

The scholarships are offered with the stipulation they be used at the sponsor institutions. Winners were selected by officials of the sponsoring college who also computed the students' financial need and determined the individual stipends.

The scholarships range from $1,000 to $6,000, with the individual dollar amounts not made public since they are based in part on confidential family financial information.

Betzen was awarded the Preston Smith Merit Scholarship to Texas Tech University. He qualified for the scholarship by scoring high on the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test as a junior in October, 1976.

Betzen, who is one of only 11 Panhandle-South Plains seniors to earn a NMSC scholarship, plans to major in accounting at Tech.

He is a member of the National Honor Society at Hereford High School.

"I'm just glad to have the opportunity to take advantage of this scholarship," Betzen said.

Betzen is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Betzen, north of Hereford.

Arrowhead Mills: Hereford's Best-Kept Secret

Factory Treats Food with Respect, Not Chemicals

By PAUL SIMS
Managing Editor

Natural foods, says Boyd Foster, breeds healthy bodies, which he adds are becoming a thing of the past in a junk-food society.

Foster is executive vice-president of Arrowhead Mills, Hereford's very own natural-food factory, and an ex-farmer, which qualifies him as the closest thing to an expert on what's good for the body.

"Natural foods are the old-fashioned way of eating. They're simple foods, the basic foods that America sort of grew up on."

Natural foods are more commonly called health foods, but Foster prefers not to use the term.

"We're talking about whole foods grown on fertile soil. That's why we don't use the words 'health foods' around here," Foster said as he guided the Brand reporter through Arrowhead Mills.

Mini-assembly lines churned off "Olde Mill" stone-ground flour,

"Arrowhead" cereal, "Deaf Smith" wheat brand and numerous other products all to be shipped throughout the country for sale mostly in health-food stores.

Arrowhead Mills, which has produced natural foods in Hereford the last 18 years, may be the town's best-kept secret, Foster said, because the products are distributed elsewhere.

"A lot of people in Hereford don't even know we're here. Those who do, don't know very much about us. We've grown up here with our foods being sold out of the area."

Doing business with other places has been profitable for Arrowhead Mills. The factory did $8 million in sales last year, compared to $6 million in 1976. The products are distributed to, pardon the expression, health-food stores in all 50 states.

Health-food stores in Germany, Sweden, Norway and Canada also stock Arrowhead Mills products. A few weeks ago, a buyer in Sweden ordered 400,000 pounds of Arrowhead Mills natural-grown wheat to be shipped in the next two to three months.

"Our business has really grown," Foster said. "The health-food business has grown tremendously. Ten years ago, most big towns had only one or two. Now, Amarillo and Lubbock have several. And places like Los Angeles and San Francisco and Boston and New York City have a tremendous number of health-food stores."

"We think there are just a larger percentage of people today who have become interested in natural foods. They've decided people eat too many refined foods."

Arrowhead Mills has kept pace, growth-wise, with the trend towards natural foods.

It all started in 1960 when wheat farmer Frank Ford, whose philosophy was (and still is) "treat food with respect, not chemicals," rigged up an old rail car and some used grain bins and began selling flour from whole wheat.

Arrowhead Mills supplied customers with flour and corn meal ground with a 30-inch stone grinder, delivering the products in an old pickup and trailer. It was seven years before the little enterprise broke even financially.

The company today operates out of a 20-acre complex just off Highway 60, has approximately 60 employees and distributes more than 250 natural whole grain products under brand names like Olde Mill, Deaf Smith, The Simpler Life and Arrowhead Mills.

George Warner is president of the company, and Ford is chairman of the board.

Warner coordinates all local buying of grain for use in Arrowhead Mills' products.

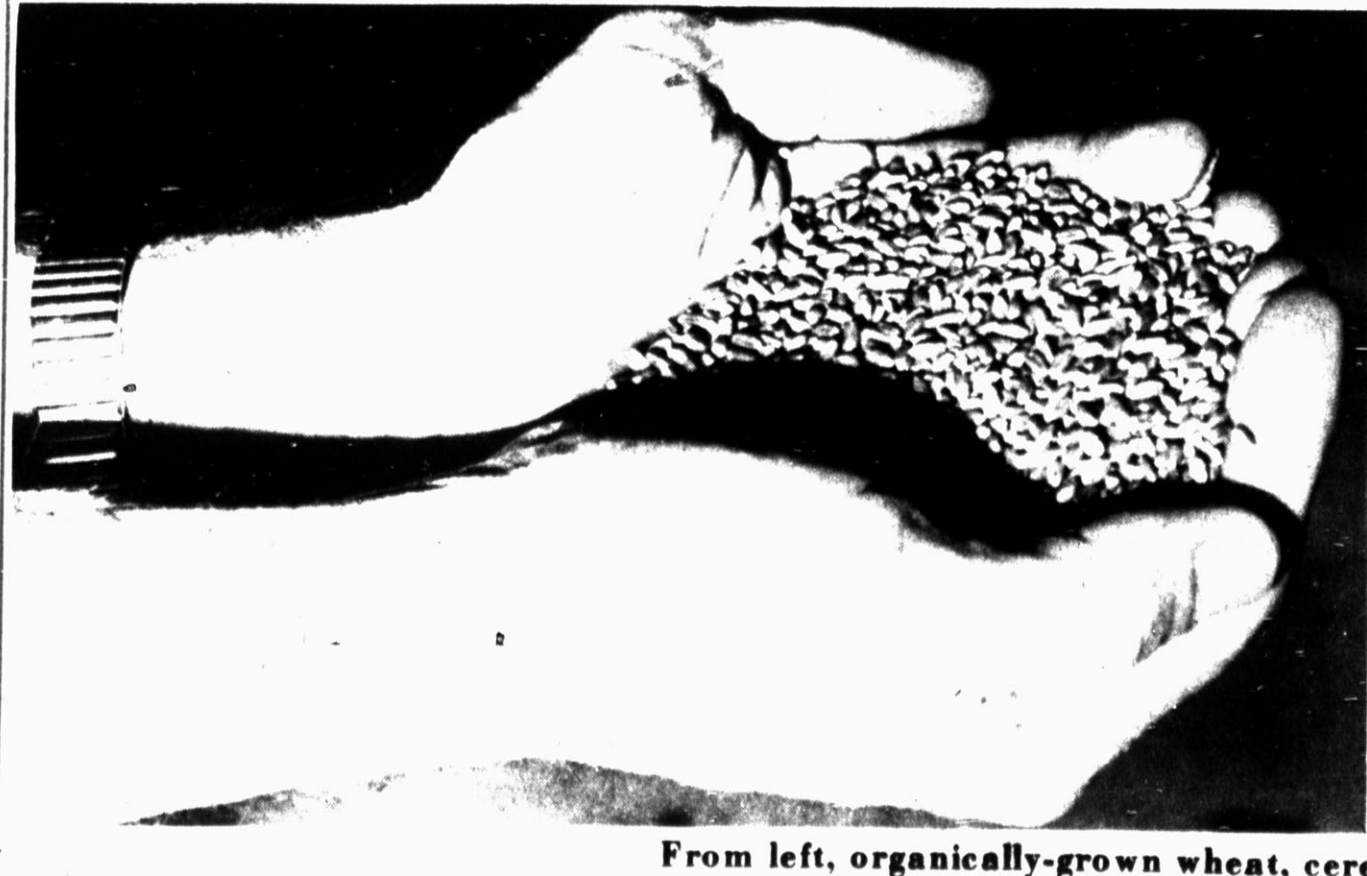

"We pay good premium and we want farmers to get that premium," Ford said. "We're trying to increase the profitability of farming in Deaf Smith County."

"We have the most fertile soil in the nation right here in Deaf Smith County, according to many experts over a long number of years. By building the biological strength of the soil through the use of compost, humates and other natural materials and by using beneficial insects to create a better balance—to work with nature—we know we're sending out one of the highest quality products in the nation."

"Many farmers have adapted to this natural-science farming method, which has proved to be a higher profit

Thunderstorm Rips San Antonio Tower

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A thunderstorm packing 80-90 mph "hurricane force" winds lashed the 675-foot Tower of the Americas Tuesday night, shattering a window, knocking out power and forcing the evacuation of about 150 persons from the tower restaurant.

Three persons suffered minor cuts from flying glass, but there were no major injuries, authorities said.

The winds at the 620-foot restaurant level, called "hurricane force" by one official, shattered a 10-foot square plate glass window. The winds blew down a chandelier in the restaurant and threw dishes and utensils across the room.

The power was knocked out for about 20 minutes. Most of the diners walked off their dinner by trudging down the 1,200 steps to the base of the tower, escorted by fire department personnel.

Others, however, were taken down in elevators powered by emergency generators.

The tower was closed for the remainder of the night and officials began surveying the damage today. There was no immediate damage estimate.

"It (the tower) swayed back and forth and I started to get sick to my stomach," said Ruby King, one of those in the tower. "I thought this is it and maybe I panicked. I just wanted to get out of there."

Beef Prices To Rise Says Ag Economist

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Rising prices for hamburger meat signal the beginning of a period of increasing beef prices that will last from three to five years, an agricultural economist says.

"Beef prices will go up," says Dr. Herrell F. DeGraff, former president of the American Meat Institute.

DeGraff, addressing an agribusiness conference here Tuesday, said U.S. ranchers have completed a cycle of liquidating their cattle herds and are moving into a new cycle of rebuilding their herds.

This means that more animals will be held back from feed lots and markets for breeding purposes, he said. The resulting shortage in the marketplace will drive prices up.

DeGraff said a recent increase in hamburger meat prices from about 79 cents a pound to 99 cents a pound is the earliest indicator of what lies ahead.

Former U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz, who also spoke to the conference, lashed out at the farm policies of the Carter administration during a news conference.

'Sun Day' Originator Lauds Solar Energy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Solar energy! Everybody's for it; nobody's against it.

It isn't really free and easy, and adopting it in place of oil, gas, coal and uranium will be at best a long, costly and uncertain process.

But solar energy has so much going for it that optimists want an all-out drive, on the scale of wartime mobilization, to base the nation's economy on energy drawn directly or indirectly from the light and heat of the sun.

And the worst thing pessimists can say about it is that we can't switch to solar energy fast enough.

Denis Hayes, who organized "Earth Day" in 1970 to publicize the environmental movement and originated the idea of today's "Sun Day" demonstrations, is one of the optimists.

"Federal policy has, in the past, consistently discriminated against those forms of energy that represent our highest hopes," he said.

"The real leadership is not to be found in Washington," he said, but all over the country where companies, local governments and private citizens are building, encouraging and inventing new solar projects.

Mrs. Davis Charges Husband in 2 Suits

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — Priscilla Davis has charged in two civil suits that her estranged husband, millionaire Cullen Davis, wounded her and killed her 12-year-old daughter in a "barbaric" 1976 shooting spree at the $6 million Davis mansion.

The two state court suits were filed Tuesday against Davis, a Fort Worth businessman who has been acquitted of capital murder charges stemming from the death of his 12-year-old step-daughter Andrea Wilborn.

The girl was one of two killed in August 1976 in a midnight rampage by a black-clad gunman.

Davis still faces charges in connection with the slaying of his estranged wife's lover, Stan Farr, and the wounding of his Mrs. Davis and a family friend. Davis is free on bond.

In one suit, Mrs. Davis sought an unspecified amount of damages for her injuries. She alleged in the suit that Davis waited in ambush for her and "intentionally and maliciously" shot her in the lower chest.

In the second suit, Mrs. Davis, 36, sought damages for the loss of her daughter and asked that punitive damages be awarded "in an amount that would constitute punishment of defendant, Thomas Cullen Davis, as an example for the public good."

Lighter Side

OTTAWA (AP) — "It has backfired," a Bell Canada operator says with a chuckle of a company television advertisement.

The ad showed a Bell operator telling about the time she helped out a caller by providing advice on how to cook a chicken. It was part of an $800,000 "Bell commitment" promotional campaign that ended Saturday.

But the campaign started in early March and Bell operators say there were deluged by callers who poked fun at the ad by requesting cooking instructions.

The company should never have run the ad, one Ottawa directory assistance operator said. It certainly backfired, said another. "It got to be a bit of a hassle," said a third.

Richard Martin, who coordinated the ad campaign, disagreed.

The chicken-cooking ad was not meant to be taken literally and most of the public seemed to understand that, Martin said. The company didn't keep a running tally of the number of troublesome phone calls or complaints the ad prompted, he said.

SALIDA, Colo. (AP) — The Chamber of Commerce is betting one buffalo — valued at about $600 — that this small Rocky Mountain community has more days of sunshine than any other place in Colorado.

So far only the Chamber of Commerce in Gunnison, 50 miles west, has taken the Salida promoters up on their offer. Gunnison's stakes in the wager have not yet been determined.

The sunshine comparison will be made for a set period, probably one year, beginning next week, officials said.

"We not only have a large number of sunny days, we also have unusually fine, mild weather compared to communities surrounding us," said Val Bergman, executive director of the Salida chamber.

SURREY, British Columbia (AP) — Cathy Lenz got a divorce, then immediately held a party, complete with decorated cake and disco music.

More than 200 guests showed up. Single men among the crowd identified themselves with garter-like armbands; single women wore carnations in their hair.

Cathy, whose last name was Tomlinson, but now uses her maiden name, said her ex-husband, whom she married in 1975, would have been welcome had he decided to show up.

Federal Reserve Board Seeks New Savings Transfer System

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board wants to make it harder for you to bounce a check by letting banks automatically move money from savings to checking accounts in case of overdrafts.

That also means a bank customer could keep funds in both checking and savings accounts with most of it lying in the interest-bearing savings account.

The United States League of Savings Associations, whose members cannot provide checking services, promised to sue the Fed. The league said current law forbids the move.

Obituaries

LANNIE ATEN RUTTER

Services for a former Hereford resident, Lannie Aten Rutter, 73, of Flagler, Colo., will be at 2 p.m. Thursday in the Congregational Church at Flagler. Burial will be at Flagler.

Mrs. Rutter resided in Hereford from 1925, shortly after she married Glenn Rutter, until 1958, when they moved to Flagler. She was widowed two weeks ago.

She is survived by a son, Leland Rutter of Hereford; two daughters, Sally Walker of Hereford and Leta Glenn Hawks of Denver, Colo.; two brothers, Austin Aten of McAllen and Quinn Aten of Leola Lake; a sister, Cassie Pierce of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; ten grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

In lieu of flowers, the family suggests memorial contributions to the American Heart Association.

Norman Strunk, vice president of the league, said the rule could "dry up the supply of mortgage credit, devastate the values of homes and make the purchase of a home impossible for millions of other families."

The Federal Reserve's action also was criticized by Robert McKinney, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which regulates savings and loans institutions.

"By making the commercial bank checking account even more attractive to the consuming public, the Federal Reserve's action puts greater pressure on dwindling savings flows into associations," he said.

"This tourniquet on the supply of savings translates into reduced mortgage availability at higher mortgage interest costs," he said.

But Federal Reserve attorneys said the action is legal because the banks are not paying interest on the checking accounts but are simply transferring money from one account to another.

The board may look for support for its proposal in a court decision last year in which a federal judge ruled that nationally chartered credit unions may provide interest-bearing checking accounts.

At its meeting Monday, the Federal Reserve rejected suggestions that customers lose interest when they overdraw accounts or that they be charged for each overdraft.

Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller said small depositors would be penalized and that it should be up to the banks to decide about the charges.

The move, which would take effect Nov. 1, technically affects the 5,700 state-chartered and national banks which are members of the federal reserve system. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which controls about 9,000 banks, will act on a similar proposal Friday.

The federal reserve's decision puts pressure on Congress to give savings and loan institutions the same privileges that banks would have.

The Senate Banking Committee has approved a bill to let both banks and thrift institutions pay interest directly on checking accounts. The system, called Negotiable Order of Withdrawal, or NOW accounts, is being tested in six New England states.

method.
Ford's sincerity is convincing. It convinced Foster, who left his farm to work at Arrowhead Mills.

"Since I've gone to work here, I've found it's healthier to try to stick with simple, basic foods. We eat, in my home, very little high-refined foods. But I consider myself more pure than the rest of my family. I've tried to convince my wife and kids, but I haven't been too successful," Foster said.

Foster, easy-going and sharp-looking, fits the Arrowhead Mills image of healthiness and cleanliness. Most of the company's employees, Foster said, neither smoke nor drink and all dress neater than the stereotyped factor worker.

"We don't allow smoking in the work areas or in the office," Foster said. "It just isn't in line with the health idea. A lot of people come to visit us, and it says a lot when our people don't smoke."

Most of the Arrowhead Mills products are manufactured in the large factory on Lawton Road off U.S. Highway 60. Two- and five-pound bags of flour are produced in the company's original factory, located on Victory Drive.

Arrowhead Mills products include various types of whole grains and whole grain flours, beans, seeds, nuts, cereals, flakes, raw honey, peanut butter, oils, vitamins, dried vegetables, fruits and mixes.

Organically-grown grains are stored in more than 100 bins at Arrowhead Mills where they are fan blown with cool air. The gains also are run over a gravity table and stoner to remove foreign matter.

The factory has seven large, granite stone mills and two impact mills for producing its whole grain flours.

Cereals and flakes are fractured, rolled and slow-cooked by special machinery.

Hereford people can purchase the natural foods in a small "store" inside the company's main office. On the counters are brand names like "Deaf Smith Old Fashioned Peanut Butter", "Simpler Life Vitamins", "Old Mill Maple Nut Granola", "Deaf Smith Wheat Bran" and "Arrowhead Mills Bear Mush."

Arrowhead Mills has a branch office in Denver, Colo., which serves as a warehouse and distributing point. There are 20 employees at that office.

Rain

Rockies, with travel advisories in effect for the San Luis Valley of Colorado and eastern portions of New Mexico.

Heavy snow was reported in the vicinity of Tucuman.

The snow gave way to rain for the most part as the weather front moved from New Mexico into the far-flung western areas of Deaf Smith County, where the dryland wheat crop has suffered through drought conditions for months.

Appreciable moisture blanketed the dryland country, but the showers may prove too late for a major portion of the wheat crop there.

The Clint Homfeld farm 47 miles northwest of Hereford recorded 1.50 inches of rainfall Tuesday with two inches of snow on the ground this morning and more coming down.

Farms in the vicinity of the Homfeld property were more fortunate than many dryland areas in that they had received about two inches of moisture in mid-April, and wheat in that area is in relatively good shape.

Mrs. Eldred Brown reported that 1.50 inches of rainfall was recorded at her husband's farm in the Walcott community last night with snow and sleet this morning.

Mrs. Brown, who drives a bus for the Walcott school, reported that she noticed some spotty snow accumulations on her rounds this morning, and added that rainfall extended all the way to the New Mexico border.

The Bruce Coleman farm at Walcott recorded 1.60 inches of rain with some snow and light rain falling this morning.

"I'm afraid the wheat is already too far gone here for the rain to be of much help, but maybe we'll have enough moisture to plant a sorghum crop," Mrs. Coleman commented.

One of Tuesday's heaviest rain reports came from the Easter community south of Hereford in Castro County, where two inches of rainfall was recorded.

A spokesman for Easter Grain reported light snow and sleet were falling there this morning, and pointed out that farmers in that area are particularly gleeful over the moisture because nearly half of them were forced to plant their corn dry and were going to have to water it up.

The city of Hereford logged one inch of moisture from Tuesday's downpour according to KPAN radio, while the Holly Sugar Corporation's Hereford plant recorded 1.15 inches of precipitation.

To the east of Hereford, the Dawn community recorded 1.50 inches of rainfall, according to a spokesman for Dawn Co-Op, who added that light snow was melting as it fell there this morning.

Generous rain fell northeast and north of the city as well.

Reports from the Wildorado community were in the 1.50 inch range.

The H.L. Hershey farm 13 miles northeast of Hereford reported one inch of moisture while the Raymond Schlabs farm five miles north of the city recorded 1.30 inches.

Pioneer Fertilizer at Milo Center reported 1.25 inches of rainfall and the Mark Hicks farm approximately six miles west of the Ford community received 1.50 inches of rainfall, with an inch of snow on the ground last night.

Amarillo also recorded snow last night, and two inches of the powder fell at Stratford.

The temperature dipped to freezing at Dalhart last night.

The chance of light rain for most sections of West Texas continues today. Considerable cloudiness should continue through tonight, becoming partly cloudy Thursday.

A warming trend is expected to begin Thursday, although temperatures are expected to remain very cool tonight.

Panhandle lows are expected to dip into the mid-30s again tonight with highs in the northern Panhandle expected to rise to near the 60 mark Thursday.

Local farmers will continue to welcome whatever moisture they can get, although they would probably like to see the temperature rise a bit to aid the soil in sprouting already-planted crops.

South Texas Drought Threatens Cattlemen

CARRIZO SPRINGS, Tex. (AP) - Hundreds of South Texas cattlemen say they may be driven out of business soon unless general rains begin to ease a year-long drought which has parched their pastures.

And, even if the rains come, they say it may take years to recover financially.

Many ranchers are watching their cattle die before their eyes, and others are selling off their herds even though they claim it will take several years to rebuild them when the drought ends.

The last general rain, according to county agricultural extension agents, was in April 1976, and many acres have received less than half their average annual rainfall since then.

Jim Castellaw, who ranches in Dimmit County, daily faces the question of whether to sell his herd or hang on for rain, knowing that to hang on could mean watching his animals die.

Already, Starr and Zapata counties along the Rio Grande have been designated by the federal government as disaster areas because of the dry spell.

If the rancher sells his stock, Castellaw says it probably will be two years before he can market another herd. Then, he must hope he can borrow the money to buy new animals.

In Starr County, authorities report, an estimated 1,500 to 1,600 mature cows have died from malnutrition or general weakness. About 150 animals are dying each month in neighboring Zapata County.

"The way ranchers let their cattle get in that situation is they'll say, 'If it doesn't rain by May 1, I'm going to sell.' But May will come around and he'll say, 'Well, we never get any rain in April, so I'll wait until May 15.' And it goes on and on like that," said Castellaw.

Bill Dullning, who works 3,000 acres in Dimmit County, sold his herd last week because he couldn't afford to gamble any longer on the weather.

"I'm not surprised this is happening," he said. "We've had good rains for the last four years and people thought everything was going to be great and overextended themselves (financially)."

"That's the thing about South Texas - if you stay here long enough, you're going to get your hook hung."

Besides Dimmit County, the drought has affected, to a varying extent, cattlemen in Starr, Zapata, Frio, La Salle, Webb, Duval, Maverick and McMullen counties.

And, while ranchers vary on their observations about the drought, they all agree on one thing - May is the critical month.

Even if the area gets good rains this month, officials say the drought will affect the cattle industry in South Texas for the next five years.

"It will take several rains over the next few months to bring the situation back to normal," said Dimmit County Agricultural Agent Larry Weise.

"Dimmit County has had only 10.2 inches of rain during the past year," he added. "We usually have 20 inches."

Webb County Commissioners have voted unanimously to seek emergency disaster assistance because of the drought, and Gov. Dolph Briscoe said he will transmit their request immediately to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Cattle are dying at a rate of about 50 a week in the Laredo area, Webb County Extension Fred Scheutze estimates, and at the rate of about 100 a week in Zapata County.

It has been 12 months since the last appreciable rain fell in the area.

The drought also is taking its toll in northern Mexico. The state of Tamaulipas has lost 15,000 head of cattle in the past three months.

Divorce Becomes Natural Thing For Attorneys, Do-It-Yourselfers

HOUSTON (AP) - Divorce, once a social stigma and a word only whispered in polite society, has become a way of life during recent years and profitable for both attorneys and do-it-yourself organizations.

As more and more states approve uncontested divorce laws, attorneys and those firms offering cheap, non-legal advice have become financial and legal enemies.

The Divorce Services of Texas, a segment of an organization that has extensive operations in California, Colorado, Florida, and Texas, is being challenged by the State Bar of Texas. The Bar has been granted a temporary injunction in state district court stopping the offer of a do-it-yourself divorce for $95.

Van Royce Vibber, president of the organization, said the State Bar is a "monopoly and they are acting like one. The public knows the primary function of the Bar is to protect the astronomically high income of lawyers. The Bar Association is nothing more than a high-priced, feather-bedding union."

John Graml, who represented the Bar Association in the case, told The Associated Press, "the divorce services, which advertise in the news media, are not hurting the lawyers of Texas. It is simply a fact that the public is being had. This service answers to nobody. It is like buying a car for $50 and the damn thing doesn't run. It isn't worth anything."

Graml said some of the work on the divorce cases "are so sloppy that the judges are getting irritated. There are divorces prepared by this service being rejected. There are people who don't know whether they are really divorced or not."

James Greenwood, a prominent Houston attorney, told The AP, "The service is giving legal advice without a license. I'm not against them, but it is like writing your own will or preparing your own income tax."

"You can make a mistake without an expert there to help you and you can be in trouble," he said.

Vibber answered, "Look at it this way. We are not going to charge someone $300 to $350 just to hold their hands. We don't offer legal help, but in an uncontested divorce, our work is guaranteed. We don't deny people have the right to an attorney, but we don't think the Bar Association should deny the public their right to low-cost divorces."

Vibber said the State Bar of Texas was attempting to put him in jail for his divorce service activities and, "I find it incredible that I could be put in jail for offering low-cost divorce, while the white-collar corporate crime is bliking the people of Texas out of hundreds of millions of dollars every year."

"The justice system is royally screwed up, and the State Bar is one of the many contributing factors," he said.

Robert E. Gardner, a young Houston attorney who is still building his practice, said, "The divorce services are a danger to these people who think they are getting something for a cut-rate price. They are not getting the legal service they need. They are not being told about the divorce of property. All they are getting is a typing service."

"And when those divorce services say attorneys charge $350 for an uncontested divorce, they are not telling the truth. We know what our time is worth, but also consider what a person can pay."

Vibber, in the telephone interview from his office in Santa Monica, Calif., said, "The Bar's main concern is that we are cutting into their fat incomes. They are scared, because they don't want to compete with our low prices."

Another Houston attorney who handles many divorce cases - Robert Piro - told The AP, "a majority of the people think all they need are the forms, but no legal assistance. These divorce mills have no skills. No good lawyer will overcharge."

"In fact, I try to talk a lot of people out of using me. I send them to the younger attorneys when there appears to be no major problem, such as child custody or a large estate to be divided."

Vibber answered, "We will fight the State Bar. A person has the constitutional right to represent himself in court. We are not anti-attorney. But the Bar Association is not interested in protecting the public. The associations are interested in protecting their pocketbooks."

Carter Selection Process Confusing

WASHINGTON (AP) - Whatever else they might think about merit selection of federal prosecutors, a lot of people agree with Attorney General Griffin Bell about one thing:

Some of what President Carter said on the subject has caused confusion.

Whether Republican members of the Senate Judiciary Committee have dispelled the confusion with their probe into the firing of U.S. Attorney David W. Marston is an open question, but they have certainly focused attention on it.

For the record, this is what

He Waves

For a Hobby

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) - Every weekday morning, Joseph W. Charles stands in front of his immaculate white frame house for nearly two hours, smiling and waving at the rush hour traffic. Practically everyone waves back.

He's been brightening the day for an estimated 1,800 commuters each morning for years.

"If they're driving, walking or crawling, I'll say good morning and wave to them," says Charles, 68, who loaded crates at a Navy supply center for 28 years before retiring five years ago.

Even when he was working, he would wave for a while before he had to leave for his job.

"When I retired, I decided to wave every day. They all wave - the truck man, the bus man, the policeman, everybody. Children are the best," he said in an interview one recent morning, talking and waving at the same time.

A young woman with tinted glasses smiles and waves out the window of her car. A transit bus driver smiles and waves out hand out the window to give a friendly "thumb up" greeting.

"You have a nice day!" shouts Charles.

A construction truck rumbles by and its grinning, young driver picks up a microphone. "Good morning!" booms a loudspeaker on the truck.

"Goodood morning!" replies Charles.

presidential candidate Carter said on June 18, 1976: "All federal prosecutors and judges should be appointed strictly on merit and without any consideration of political aspects or influence."

Called before the Senate Judiciary Committee to discuss the Marston firing, Bell said a couple of weeks ago that there was "no problem" with the first part of this.

"I have not appointed or recommended anyone who did not have merit," he said. "But he went further and said something about political aspects. I think that has caused some confusion."

Bell may have added to the confusion himself Jan. 10 when he was asked at the National Press Club about the dismissal of Marston, a U.S. attorney in Philadelphia whose office has been investigating some Democratic politicians.

"We have two parties in this country," he replied. "The 'in' party right now happens to be the Democrats. They can get in to complain probably faster than the other party right now. So there are a lot of complaints about Mr. Marston."

Bell also told his questioners that the political system had been in effect since 1789 and he and his colleagues in the Carter administration were "the first people to try to change it."

The administration's Republican critics say the Marston case shows the efforts at change haven't amounted to much.

Bell, however, paints a different picture. After he was picked to be attorney general but before he took office, he says, he asked the previous administration to have U.S. attorneys and their assistants write in if they wanted to be retained.

Many did. Some were kept and some were not. The Justice Department won't say which or how many of those who have been replaced had asked to be kept on.

The Justice Department says only one of the U.S. attorneys who have been named by this administration has been a Republican. But Bell says that is beside the point. The point, he says, is that, regardless of party, they were named because of their merit.

Law School-Test Takers Don't Follow Failing Trend

WASHINGTON (AP) - Law school admissions officers are in a dilemma. Amid all the clamor about declining student test scores, they're upset about a bumper crop of students who scored high on the Law School Admission Test last fall.

They are concerned because some high scores apparently were caused by a change in the test given by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N.J., to make it more difficult.

There was a rash of high scores among the 64,000 persons who took the test last October and December. There were 142 perfect scores on the multiple-choice test, graded on a scale of 200 to 800. A year earlier, there were only 15 perfect scores.

ETS notified law schools in February that the percentage of scores above 650 was higher than usual. Paradoxically, it said this was because there was a great number of difficult questions on the new test and thus more opportunities for above-average students to score high. Thomas O. White, director of law programs for ETS, said the test writers made "a conscious decision ... to make the test somewhat more difficult than predecessor forms, but they did not intend or expect this result."

What they expected was a better breakdown or spread among the high scorers. White uses the analogy of a high jump contest where the bar had been set only at five feet and eight feet.

"We were trying to add questions at the 6-foot and 7-foot level," he said. "The better jumpers had more opportunities on average to do better."

Some law schools, including Harvard, already had begun admitting students by the time the new tests were given. Students who took the LSATs in October and December may have gained an advantage over the 61,000 who took the exam in February, April or July last year.

"The reaction from law schools is one of some bitterness. We're really quite put out," said William Warren, dean of the UCLA Law School. "Admissions is already a touchy issue without this. A lot rides on admission to a good law school."

A Governor Who Knows Agriculture

Other candidates may talk a lot about the problems of farming and ranching. None of them has the background and experience in agriculture gained over his lifetime by the Governor already in office—Dolph Briscoe.

THE PAST

- ★ Earned award as the state's leading conservation rancher-farmer when during the drought of the 1950's he turned brush-infested, sun-baked range lands into lush grasslands by root-plowing and re-seeding.
- ★ Helped organize and served as president of Southwest Animal Research Foundation, which conducted the successful screw worm eradication program.
- ★ Past president of Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association and the Mohair Council of America, chairman of National Livestock and Meat Board and director of Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association.
- ★ Has won two high awards from Texas A & M for contributions to agriculture, as well as the Federal Land Bank Medal.
- ★ As legislator sponsored the Colson-Briscoe Act creating the farm-to-market road system that brought rural Texas out of the mud.

THE PRESENT

- ★ Kept his promise of no new state taxes in three consecutive Legislatures; advocates property tax relief for homeowners and family farmers and repeal of the sales tax on utilities.

- ★ Signed into law a requirement that all beef and dairy products purchased by state-supported agencies be produced in the U.S., and has urged President Carter to require federal agencies to do the same.
- ★ Has urged President and Congress to require imported agricultural products to meet the same inspection standards as domestically-produced goods and favors the Beef Import and Labeling Act of 1978 requiring imported beef to carry an identification label to the ultimate consumer.
- ★ Backs the Flexible Parity Act of 1978 which would establish new target prices for wheat, upland cotton and feed grain.
- ★ Backs emergency legislation in Congress directing Secretary of Agriculture to increase acreage set-asides for this year's crops of wheat, corn, cotton and soybeans by 31 million acres, thereby stimulating market prices.
- ★ Has helped mobilize nation's governors to encourage President and Congress to bring about 100% parity in the marketplace for American agricultural products.

Throughout his private and public career Dolph Briscoe has provided strong leadership for agriculture. His actions speak louder than the promises of others. He has earned re-election to a second four-year term.

Ann Landers Lacking Laughter

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I hope you can help me. I'm ashamed to ask anyone else. My problem is I don't know how to laugh.

It's not because I can't see the funny side of life -- in fact I am easily amused, but I have never been able to produce a hearty laugh spontaneously the way others do.

I envy friends who can respond to a humorous remark with a great big guffaw. The best I can manage is a little chuckle. I dread it when someone tells a joke. I hate not being able to show my appreciation. Can you check with a psychiatrist and tell me what is my problem?— Too Serious In Yonkers

DEAR YONK: I didn't need to check with anyone. Your problem is relatively simple.

Laughter is a highly individual response. Some people scream, others roar, cackle or hoot -- and then there are those who can only smile. Settle for your chuckle. A fake laugh is much worse than none at all. And remember that wise old Chinese proverb: "Have pity on the person who laughs at a great deal, for he is almost always unhappy."

DEAR ANN: I recently acquired a diamond ring. My grandmother left it to me in her will. I hate having this reminder around and I could really use some extra money.

I took the ring to a pawn shop last week and after considerable haggling they offered to give me about a fourth of what the ring is really worth. I then took it to a jeweler down the street. He was willing to give me a trade-in. I don't want another diamond ring, Ann. What I need is the money to pay off some bills.

How can I get as much for the ring as it is truly worth? — Diamonds Are Forever

DEAR FOREVER: Go to a jewelry store that has a reputation for quality. Avoid the shock shops. Ask for an estimate, then go to two or three other stores of good reputation. Make your selection based on the highest bid.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: The letter from the woman who couldn't stand her husband because of his poor speech habits and gross manners hit home. My story, however, has a different ending.

"When I married 'Bill' I knew we were worlds apart in education. Even though we both had the same amount of schooling, he didn't sound like it.

I loved the guy enough to help him. I started by reading aloud to him as well as to the children. I tactfully brought 'Bill' into conversations and corrected him gently, in private, when he made mistakes in grammar or pronunciation. Eventually his manner of expressing himself improved -- along with everything else.

It didn't happen overnight, but by the time our four children graduated high school their father could have been valedictorian.

What did it? Love. If that woman really cared about her man she would be helping him instead of complaining about how embarrassed she is (P.S. My sister's husband made Phi Beta Kappa at Yale. He broke her jaw last week.)—I'm Proud of Mine

DEAR PROUD: You sound like a neat lady. I hope your star student appreciates you.

Fight To Be Waged Against High Blood Pressure Here

May has been declared High Blood Pressure Month by the American Heart Association and the American Red Cross.

May has been declared High Blood Pressure Month by the American Red Cross and the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare.

Deaf Smith County residents are invited to participate in the observance by attending a free blood pressure clinic Friday, May 12, and Monday, May 22, at the local Red Cross office, 406 W. 4th St. The clinic will be open from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and from 1-5 p.m. both days.

Tilly Miller, R.N., will be checking the blood pressure of all interested persons, free of charge. She is a representative of Public Health Region I of the Texas Department of Public Health.

Avoiding a heart attack or stroke is a goal which motivates millions of Americans to exercise more, reduce their consumption of saturated fats and give up smoking. Yet one factor which causes cardiovascular problems is often overlooked -- high blood pressure. The disease can be controlled in a simple manner, but many people who have high blood pressure are not treating it the way they should. With proper treatment, a person can bring his or her blood pressure down and can look forward to living a full, normal life.

Alarming statistics, compiled by the National Institutes of Health High Blood Pressure Education Program show that of the people who have high blood pressure, only about 29 percent successfully control it. Another 29 percent do not know they have the disease. About 19 percent are under treatment but do not yet have it under control, and 23 percent are not treating it at all. It is these latter categories to which the Program is devoting its educational efforts during May, National High Blood Pressure Month.

Graham W. Ward, Coordinator of the National Program, says, "We must convince and help people with high blood pressure to follow the treatment prescribed by their physicians. Too many people take their pills for a while, and then quit after a few months. They are in danger of dying prematurely or suffering disability or illness. We know that if people are under treatment for high blood pressure they can live healthy lives."

He cites four common misconceptions which contribute to a patient's dropping therapy.

First, patients confuse controlling high blood pressure with curing it. After they reach a goal blood pressure reading, patients think they don't have to take their medication any longer. There is no cure for the disease, but often only a pill a day will permit them to lead normal lives.

Second, according to Ward, is that many people believe high blood pressure has symptoms. Since they don't feel "sick," they don't treat the disease. He points out that most high blood pressure has no symptoms and a person can't tell when his blood pressure is up.

"Once a person has the disease he will probably have it for life and must treat it every day, even though he feels great."

A third mistake is confusing hypertension with "tension." Patients who act on this error take their pills only when they feel tense or when they feel dizzy or have a headache. The pills, intended for daily use, become an occasional medication, like aspirin, for the relief of symptoms.

Fourth, Ward points out, is believing a person can choose a treatment plan. "In addition to pills, physicians sometimes prescribe that a patient lose weight, stop smoking, exercise more, and limit salt," he says.

"But often the patient assumes he has a choice. Many people follow a part of their therapy and think their blood pressure is under control when it is not. In most cases, patients do not have a choice of treatment."

"If a doctor prescribes medication, it's just as important to take it regularly as it is to do the other things he recommends."

During High Blood Pressure Month hundreds of national and local organizations, civic and medical groups are involved in educating the general public, patients, and health professionals on the nature of the disease and its treatment.

The main emphasis of this year's High Blood Pressure Month will be on convincing patients to take their pills as their physician advises. That's why, according to Ward, the slogan for May is, "High Blood Pressure....Treat It for Life."

Fine Arts Council Outlines Purpose

Deaf Smith County Fine Arts Council convened Monday night for its first general membership drive meeting in the Heritage Room of the County Library.

Peggy Furr, board of director president, introduced her fellow board members to those in attendance. The board is composed of Mrs. Furr, president; Wanda Newman, vice president; Terie Beth Rush, recording secretary and publicity chairman; Melvin Jayroe, corresponding secretary; and Amy Gilliland, treasurer. Other directors are Mozelle and Ben Childers, JoAnn and Archie Dwyer, Jane and Wesley Gulley, Joel Newman, Mary Parker, Ruby Kendrick Sears and James W. Witherspoon.

Ruby Kendrick Sears presented a brief resume of the history of the house located at 511 West 4th St., now known as The English House. This structure is the main object of the Council's concern, hoping to save and remodel it as a teaching art center.

Mrs. Furr outlined the Council's plans for remodeling and future uses of the center. She particularly stressed the fact that funds for remodeling and equipping the art center will not be sought locally, but will be solicited from foundations and agencies involved in endorsement of fine arts.

An amusing, original skit, entitled "Progressive Education," was performed by Amy Gilliland, Meredith Wilcox and Archie Dwyer.

The Council's membership drive will continue through this week with Council members accepting membership dues at both local banks. Interested persons may also contact Mrs. Furr at 364-3514, or Mrs. Gilliland, 364-3717.

All-Girl Rodeo Plans Shaping Up

By BOB NIGH Sports Editor

Consummation of plans for the 1978 version of the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Professional All-Girl Rodeo, set for the Riders' Club Arena August 25-27, is near rodeo general chairman Jim Tucker of has announced.

The stock producer, secretary, time keeper, clowns, announcer, organist, and dance bands have been selected for this year's rodeo and satellite activities.

The Flying "J" Rodeo and Cattle Company of Hampshire, Texas has been secured as stock producer for this year's show. The Flying "J" is owned and operated by Johnny Ackel, and has furnished stock for some of the top Girls Rodeo Association (GRA) rodeos in addition to the one here.

A member of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association (PRCA) for 29 years, Ackel was National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association Bull Riding Champion in 1951-52.

Tucker also announced that

Lydia Moore, Executive Secretary of the GRA, and her daughter Linda of Spencer, Oklahoma will serve as secretary and official timekeeper for the rodeo this year.

In addition to conducting the affairs of the GRA office, Mrs. Moore is a PRCA-sanctioned timer and secretary and secretaries a number of the larger all-girl rodeos. Miss Moore is also a PRCA timer, is an active member of the Southwestern Oklahoma State University Rodeo Team, and is a permit holder in the GRA. She also works in the GRA office during the summer months.

Former Hall of Fame inductee Rhonda Coy Sedgwick of Newcastle, Wyoming has also consented to return to the rodeo this year to serve as organist where she will provide background music for all three performances.

Miss Sedgwick was a 1977 honoree in the hall, and will bring her own musical instrument to the rodeo. She is not only an accomplished musician, but was also named Miss High School Rodeo of Wyoming, Miss

High School Rodeo of America, Miss Rodeo Wyoming, and was the 1964-65 champion barrel racer in Wyoming.

The Holland Brothers of Lubbock, Texas will work as clowns for this year's rodeo. The brothers, Steve and Dave, are experienced rodeo clowns, having worked the Texas Tech University NIRA, Plainview Bar None, Amarillo Range Riders, and Tri-State Finals Rodeos. They are National Little Britches and Tri-State Rodeo Association-approved as well.

Tucker not only serves as general chairman for the rodeo, but will also be the announcer for the show this year. He is well-known in the West Texas high school and amateur rodeo circuits, having announced shows for the Tri-State High School Rodeo Association and such stock contractors as C&C, C Bar T, Halliday, Martin, and James Martin rodeo companies for the past several years.

Some 200 professional cowgirls are expected to turnout for this year's rodeo to compete for the all-around title, which comes with a saddle valued at $950. The saddle was donated by Syntex Agribusiness and Tufts and Son Western Division of Amarillo, Texas.

In addition to the rough and tumble action in the arena there will be dances following both the Friday and Saturday night performances. The weekend-full of activities will also be highlighted by a rodeo parade, which will wind its way through downtown Hereford beginning at 2 p.m. Saturday.

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) - Pole position qualifying runs were set today for Saturday's Alabama 300 sportsman auto race, along with practice rounds for Sunday's Winston 500 grand national race at Alabama International Motor Speedway.

Texans Go High In NFL Draft

By The Associated Press The only person more surprised than Doug Greene when St. Louis drafted him in the third round Tuesday was the Atlanta coach who had made a special trip to check out the Texas A&I safety as the Falcons' prospective fourth-round pick.

Greene was one of four players from the small NAIA powerhouse to be selected in Tuesday's first six rounds of the National Football League draft.

Ace running back Larry Collins, who galloped for more than 5,300 yards in four years for the Javelinas, was a third-round selection by Cleveland and linebacker Johnny Barefield was picked by the Cardinals in the second round.

A&I wide receiver Glenn Starks went in the sixth round to Seattle.

Atlanta assistant coach Jerry Glanville arrived in Kingsville Tuesday afternoon for a final check on Greene's speed over 40 yards. The Falcons considered Greene a sleeper in the draft and felt no other team would draft him early, Glanville said.

"If he showed anything at all like a 4.6, we were going to draft him in the fourth round," said Glanville.

Glanville said the Falcons had traded safety Ray Brown earlier Tuesday with Greene in mind as a possible replacement.

But as they were leaving the athletic department to head for the football field, Greene, a 6-2, 195-pounder, got a long distance phone call from the Cardinals.

Of course, Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell of Texas and his $1.3 million contract with the Houston Oilers hogged the spotlight in the NFL draft. The Oilers, who acquired Tampa Bay's No. 1 draft choice, made Campbell the NFL's first pick.

Arkansas kicker Steve Little, who was picked by St. Louis, was the only other Southwest Conference player to be selected in the first round. He was the 15th player picked.

Texas-Arlington, never considered to be a fertile hunting ground for the NFL, had two players - running back Derrick Jensen and defensive tackle Dwight Carey - selected in the first five rounds.

Jensen was the first player selected in the third round and went to Oakland. The Kansas City Chiefs drafted Carey in the fifth round.

Campbell's teammates, All-American defensive tackle Brad Shearer, was the 18th player selected in the third round, going to the Chicago Bears.

Glue-fingered Texas Christian wide receiver Mike Renfro was the Oilers' No. 4 pick.

The Dallas Cowboys used their No. 4 choice on running back Alois Blackwell of the University of Houston, while Texas Tech running back Billy Taylor was taken in the fourth round by the New York Giants. The Giants then took Texas Tech defensive tackle Jim Kral in the fifth round.

Texas Tech defensive back Eric Felton was a fifth-round pick by New Orleans, while Texas A&M offensive tackle Frank Myers was a fifth-round selection by Baltimore.

West Texas State offensive tackle William Fifer went to Detroit in the fourth round and Arkansas guard Leotis Harris was Green Bay's No. 6.

Mark White
FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL

Texans can't afford to pay any more for energy...

More and more of our electric companies have been forced to sign long term contracts with coal suppliers in Wyoming and Montana. Now those states want to levy a 30% excise tax on the coal. Mark White believes you should have someone in state government who makes it their business to see that this doesn't happen. As Attorney General he will go to court in your behalf to stop this and other consumer rip-offs. We need an Attorney General who means business.

Elect Mark White Attorney General. He Means Business.

Few Surprises In First Round

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The "Who's Who" players of Tuesday dissolved into the "Who's He?" crowd today as the National Football League entered the mopping up stage of its annual college draft.

The Earl Campbells, Art Stills, Wes Chandler, Chris Wards and the other instant superstars were long gone, gobbled up and showered with hundreds of thousands of dollars by most of the league's 28 teams.

The electricity which had buzzed through the Roosevelt Hotel's Grand Ballroom had drained out along with the hundreds of fans who packed the gallery to watch the proceedings, the teams were looking for diamonds in the rough in today's seventh through 12th rounds — Don Nottingham and Larry Browns, late-round picks who bucked the odds and became stars.

Campbell was Houston's No. 1 selection in the opening round, no surprise since the Oilers traded away four draft choices plus tight end Jimmy Giles to Tampa Bay for the Buccaneers' pick to guarantee getting the Heisman Trophy-winning running back from Texas.

Campbell, a 6-foot-1, 220-pounder, is this year's version of Ricky Bell and Tony Dorsett, the running backs drafted 1-2 by Tampa Bay and Dallas a year ago. And, like them, he's financially set for life, thanks in part to Mike Trope. He's the agent who negotiated contracts reportedly worth about $1.2 million over five years — and who promised that Campbell would make about $1.4 million in six.

It was no wonder that when Campbell spoke briefly at the draft before heading for Houston he thanked Trope rather than Texas Coach Darrell Royal.

"A guy in my position needs somebody like Mike Trope to help him out," Campbell said. "I owe everything to Mike."

Still, a 6-foot-7, 250-pound defensive end from Kentucky, was the No. 2 pick, taken by Kansas City, whose defense was the worst in the NFL last year, a statistic that led to a 2-12 record and put two Chiefs head coaches — Paul Wiggin and Tom Bettis — on the chopping block.

Wes Chandler, a wide receiver from Florida, was the No. 3 selection, by New Orleans, the New York Jets took Ohio State tackle Chris Ward and Buffalo went for Terry Miller, a running back from Oklahoma State.

Miller is the Bills' successor to O.J. Simpson, traded to San Francisco last March. The 49ers, who have made wholesale changes under General Manager Joe Thomas and Coach Pete McCulley, drafted with O.J. in mind. They took Notre Dame tight end Ken MacAfee.

MacAfee, a 6-4, 250-pounder, was the seventh selection overall, after Green Bay had taken Stanford wide receiver James Lofton. No. 8 was also from Notre Dame's national champions — defensive tackle Ross Browner. The Cincinnati Bengals picked the winner of the Outland Trophy as the best college lineman of 1976.

The two-hour, 10-minute first round about an hour shorter than first rounds in recent years because of the lateness of the draft ended when Dallas, the Super Bowl champion, took defensive end Larry Betha from Michigan State.

Record Setters

The La Plata 9th grade girls mile relay team broke the old school record by 12 seconds this year. From left are Carol Montemayor, Colleen Keating, Lindy Walterscheid, and Diane Warden. They ran a 4:15.4 at the loop meet last Saturday to take first place. Keating also was undefeated in the 880 this year, while Walterscheid was a top 100 and 220 competitor. [Brand photo].

76ers Face Double Dilemma Tonight

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers are faced with a double dilemma tonight. They have to beat the Washington Bullets in the second game of the best-of-seven National Basketball Association Eastern Division finals or go to Landover, Md., for Games 3 and 4 down 2-0.

In addition, owner Fitz Dixon and General Manager Pat Williams would like to see all of those 18,000-plus Spectrum seats filled.

It's bad enough that Elvin Hayes scored 28 points, picked off 18 rebounds and blocked six shots in a 122-117 overtime loss on their own court, but the 76ers have not been drawing in the playoffs.

The Sixers sold out 16 times in the best season for attendance in franchise history. But the fans have been cold to the playoffs. There were 7,688 empty seats for the two home games with the New York Knicks, 4,568 for the opener with the Bullets.

Williams admits he doesn't know what's wrong. He theorizes the sophisticated Philadelphia basketball fan figures the 76ers should wipe out teams such as the Knicks and Bullets, and won't spend the $6 to $12 ticket price to see those opponents.

It's an alarming situation for Dixon and Williams. With their tremendous payroll, the 76ers have to go deep into the playoffs and fill the house to avoid red ink.

Meanwhile, 76ers' Coach Billy Cunningham is concerned with reawakening his slumbering giants, who lost a home game to the Bullets for the first time in more than three years. Cunningham refuses to use the Sixers' week layoff waiting for the Bullets to eliminate San Antonio as an excuse.

Backs-Nuggets

Denver Coach Larry Brown says the announcement of David Thompson's multi-million dollar contract with the Nuggets right before the National Basketball Association playoffs may have backfired.

Thompson, explaining that he felt bad physically and mentally, missed practice Tuesday as the Nuggets and Milwaukee Bucks worked out in preparation for tonight's showdown in the Western Conference semi-final playoff series.

Denver and Milwaukee, tied at three games each, will decide the best-of-seven series at 7:35 p.m. MDT at McNichols Arena in Denver.

Red Grange, the "Galloping Ghost," played in the first pro football game ever staged in New Orleans. It was on Jan. 10, 1926.

Blue Trade Looking Good For Both Sides

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

The Vida Blue deal is looking good — from both sides of San Francisco Bay.

Blue, the hard-throwing lefthander who had sought to be traded from the Oakland A's for several years, got his wish this spring when A's owner Charles O. Finley sent him across the Bay to the San Francisco Giants, where he is 3-1 and pitching well.

And one of the players who went the other way, 25-year-old Gary Alexander, has been nothing short of sensational as Oakland's designated hitter.

The 25-year-old Alexander belted his fifth game-winning home run of the season Thursday night as the A's edged the Toronto Blue Jays 2-1.

Alexander, who appeared in just 77 games the last three years with the Giants but is seeing full-time duty with the A's, has hit seven home runs to lead Oakland to a sizzling 17-5 start — the best record in the major leagues. The A's lead the second-place Kansas City Royals by 2½ games in the American League West.

In other American League games Tuesday night, the New York Yankees beat the Royals

4-2, the Baltimore Orioles trimmed the Boston Red Sox 3-1, the Chicago White Sox defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 5-3, the Cleveland Indians topped the Seattle Mariners 4-1 and the Detroit Tigers clobbered the California Angels 10-2.

Yankees 4, Royals 2

New York's Catfish Hunter posted his first victory since Aug. 24, allowing five hits over seven innings before giving way to relief ace Sparky Lyle. Hunter allowed successive homers to Hal McRae and Darrell Porter in the fourth inning but otherwise was in complete command, striking out four and walking two.

Orioles 3, Red Sox 1

Dennis Martinez allowed just four Boston hits and struck out five in raising his record to 3-1.

Eddie Murray snapped a 1-1 tie with a home run in the seventh inning and the Orioles added an insurance run in the eighth on a double by Larry Harlow and a single by Lee May.

White Sox 5, Brewers 3

Lamar Johnson's first home run of the season, a two-run blast in the eighth inning, snapped a 2-2 tie for the White Sox, who got another run in the ninth on an RBI single by Don Kessinger. Wilbur Wood went all the way, allowing eight hits in posting his second victory against three losses.

Indians 4, Mariners 1

Rick Waits combined with relievers Rick Krueger and Jim Kern to stop Seattle on five hits. Willie Horton led the Cleveland attack with a two-run homer.

VIEWPOINT

IN WASHINGTON

Martha Angle and Robert Walters

To speak with one voice

WASHINGTON—(NEA)—If there is to be a turning point for the Carter administration, it is likely to come now or never.

Senate ratification of the Panama Canal treaties has provided desperately needed breathing space that should give the president and his top advisors a chance to gain their second wind.

Lord knows they need it. The treaty battle—bloody, chaotic and uncertain to the last—took every ounce of muscle Carter and the Senate leadership could muster. It was an exhausting, occasionally demeaning struggle, but it gave the president his first big win and the messy details do not detract from the significance of the victory.

It is worth noting that for all the tactical stumbles along the road to ratification, the entire administration marched in lockstep towards the president's declared objective. From Vice President Mondale to the lowliest State Department gofer, there was a united front.

The same has not been true in the domestic sphere, where Carter's energies must now be directed. But even before the treaty vote, the president moved to correct the drift and dissension within administration ranks. Over a long weekend at his Camp David mountain retreat, Carter read the riot act to members of his Cabinet and the senior White House staff. He reminded them, in no uncertain terms, of who is in charge of the executive branch.

It is an unflattering commentary on the caliber of Carter's leadership to date that such a reminder should even be necessary, but the president was unquestionably wise to recognize the problem and confront it directly, even if belatedly.

Part of Carter's perceived "competency" crisis has stemmed from the apparent confusion of purposes within his own administration. Cabinet members, their subordinates, even White House staffers have gone marching off in all directions on crucial economic issues, creating confusion on Capitol Hill and elsewhere about the president's real aims.

When Treasury Secretary Mike Blumenthal publicly suggests the administration might accept a smaller, or later, tax reduction than the president has proposed, Congress can be forgiven for wondering exactly where the administration stands.

And Carter's efforts to discourage reconsideration of last year's big Social Security tax boost were not exactly helped by suggestions from Barry Bosworth, executive director of his Council on Wage and Price Stability, that a rollback would help curb inflation.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland has gone off the reservation several times on sensitive farm price issues. Asst. Treasury Secretary C. Fred Bergston told the Germans one thing about U.S. policy regarding the sagging dollar while Carter was saying something else.

The president has had enough. Cabinet members have been ordered to coordinate and communicate with one another and the White House staff, which is being overhauled and beefed up. Their subordinates, the president suggested, should be told to shape up or ship out.

If head-cracking is required, especially in the economic policy area, the ubiquitous Robert Strauss will probably do the dirty work. His mandate from Carter to serve as "special counselor on inflation" was broader, the president privately indicated, than it appeared.

Carter's avowed commitment to "cabinet" government was a lovely notion on paper, but fraught with practical hazards from the start. This president, like others before him, has finally realized that to be effective, his administration must speak with one voice—his.

Some tough battles still lie ahead—the energy bill, tax reform and civil service reorganization, to name just three. But if Carter can put his own house in order, he may be able to win a few more fights on Capitol Hill.

Analyst Says Corporations Have Faulty Bosses

NEW YORK (AP) - One of corporate America's big weaknesses, said the management analyst, is that it has a lot of problem solvers but few turn-around managers.

The latter, said Eugene

Jennings, can restructure a sick company and build a lasting organization - new image, new direction, sound financing, strong executive staff.

The former, capable in their own right, handle one problem at a time, a performance that can prove disastrous for crisis-ridden companies with fundamental, multiple, inter-related difficulties.

Jennings, management professor at Michigan State University, author and confidential adviser to top corporate executives, distinguishes between problems and crises in this manner:

"To managers, a problem to be solved is the choice between a current condition and a more desirable condition.

"A crisis is where a current condition is untenable if not intolerable, and the alleviation of it does not appear to be at hand."

Quite understandably, he observes, the crisis manager is very exceptional, very much in demand, and very much in short supply. There is no training ground for the crisis manager: he acts as he learns.

"Very few chief executives have a bullpen of turnaround managers in whom they have confidence to move a sick division or company efficiently and effectively," he comments. But many need such people.

Put a problem-solver in the job and he often turns too far or liquidates the management and assets, said Jennings, leaving the company without the energy it needs for the long haul.

"We have executives in great numbers who can clear up the balance sheet and the profit-loss statement, but we don't have as many who can rebuild the foundation," he said in an interview.

A consequence of this shows up in the nature of today's mergers and acquisitions, in which high-cost but quality companies are sought in preference to less costly but troubled concerns.

The latter, Jennings points out, might in the long run represent the better acquisition, but the absence of turnaround managers prevents the acquirer from taking the risk involved.

Probably one of the best crisis executives ever produced, Jennings believes, was Ernest Breech, who helped turn around a sick Ford Motor Co. Currently, he believes, Robert Wilson of Memorex Corp. is developing a turnaround reputation, which began at Collins Radio.

Meanwhile, the absence of crisis managers if forcing cash-rich, acquisition-minded companies to choose already well-managed concerns that can give them a quick earnings fix, said Jennings.

Because they cannot manage them, acquirers are reluctant to seek poorly managed concerns that, with defects eliminated, might be more desirable acquisitions in the long run.

Why Did You Leave Me? Asks Man after Stabbing

EDITOR'S NOTE: Stephan O'Ryan, 27, was accosted and stabbed on a Seattle street Dec. 16. Badly wounded, he crawled away, observed but ignored by people in the neighborhood.

O'Ryan, the son of a Seattle Post-Intelligencer reporter, has recovered from his wound and plans to enter law school. No one has been arrested for the crime. Here is his story.

By STEPHEN O'RYAN
Seattle Post-Intelligencer

SEATTLE (AP) - One afternoon I was knocked down on a Seattle street, stabbed in the back and left for dead while both my attackers walked away. The wounds are almost healed, but I want an answer from the people of this city.

Why did you leave me there to die?

I had gotten off the bus that afternoon at Boren and Yesler to visit a friend. If it hadn't been raining, I would have waited for the transfer, and there wouldn't be this six-inch scar up the middle of my stomach and a knife wound in my back. But that's all hindsight. I decided to walk, and two blocks later landed on the pavement, gasping for one deep breath.

I first saw them when they rounded the corner in front of me. One of them had on a greasy white raincoat, the other a shabby tweed. The one in white had his head thrown back, shouting incoherently. I figured he was high and moved over to give them plenty of room. It wasn't room enough.

"Well now, don't this look just like one of 'em," shouted the one in the white raincoat. He was short, thin, wore his hair in a wedge-like afro, and had that wild look in his eyes, like a horse gets when it's scared.

"A honky, a honky, a honky. I swear you can't go nowhere but there ain't a hundred of 'em. Jumpin' outa the sidewalks, tellin' you when and what to do. Look out for me boy, look out!"

"Just let me by," I said.

"Let you by, by, by!" he laughed, nudging his partner as the two closed in. "Oh yes, sir, so mighty powerful and strong. Ain't gonna let nobody by, by, by, not till they do some shuttin' up. Now move!"

He shoved me off the sidewalk, and I should have moved. Instead I swung for his stomach, turned on his partner and was stopped short by an incredible jolt of pain on my left side. There was a knife in my back. I staggered once before one of them kicked me in the groin, then I fell. The wound was so bad, I could feel that cold blade all the way to my chest. Later the doctors told me it tore open my left lung, but I guess I was lucky. It almost pierced my heart.

"Should've done what you was told," his partner said as he leaned over to take my wallet. When he pulled out the knife, I felt something give deep inside.

I looked across the street as they walked away and saw a middle-aged man walking his dog in the rain. He must have seen the whole thing. I tried to shout, but the pain was so bad I couldn't even catch my breath. All I managed was a drawn-out moan. He didn't see me.

I moved my head and saw a woman standing at her window. For several seconds I stared at her face, then she moved away and the window was empty. She didn't see me either.

I must have blacked out for a while. When I woke up, I was drenched with rain, and blood was dripping on the sidewalk. It wasn't until then I understood what had happened.

I'm dying. The realization bewildered me. People don't get stabbed to death in decent neighborhoods, not in plain view and the middle of the afternoon.

Yesler Way was two blocks off and crowded with traffic. Unable to stand, I rolled slowly to my side, pulled my legs up one at a time, then started crawling down the sidewalk. Every move made me sick to my stomach with pain.

Maybe they thought I was drunk but that whole neighborhood watched me as I struggled in the rain. All the doors were closed, but they knew I was out there. The appearance and disappearance of a face in a window, the movement of curtains - they were there, being careful. By the time I got to Yesler my arms and legs were quivering like those of an old man. I waved at the first car, smearing my hand with blood so they could see I was wounded, and I waited with relief.

It didn't stop. I waved at the next car, and the next one, and the next. Some of them pointed or stared, a back-seat full of kids laughed, but to most I was invisible.

A city bus pulled over a block away and an elderly lady stepped out. "Help," I shouted. "I've been stabbed. I need an ambulance."

She didn't answer, but the look on her face told me how disgusting she thought I was.

When she turned away I felt only one thing, and it wasn't panic or fear or pain. It was anger, anger that people could turn their back on a wounded man, anger at indifference, and at the fact that nothing would ever change it.

I shouted again, but I knew she wouldn't turn around.

"I am dying. Doesn't that make one damn bit of difference to you?"

Later I found out it was an attendant at Lloyd's Rocket service station who finally spotted me from across the street and called the ambulance. Welcome to the human race.

For those who like to keep notes on the incidence of black crime, note this. If it was a black who shoved that knife in, it was also a black man who saved me.

You might not think my story all that horrifying, but you weren't out there in the rain. You don't know about the surgery and the scar it left, the nights I couldn't sleep because of the pain.

I could cite you statistics on the increase of violent crime, or quote authorities on how to avoid being victimized, but you've already heard that. Besides, that's not what troubles me.

What troubles me is the man with the cocker spaniel, the woman in the window, the neighborhood that watched me crawl, the people in those cars, and the woman who turned her back on me.

This doesn't have a moral, only a question. And I want an answer.

Why did you leave me there to die?

Rats Start Diets

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government put 200 obese rats on strict protein diets similar to those blamed for the deaths of 16 women, and 95 percent of the animals died within a month.

The rats' deaths seemed to bear striking similarities to those of the women who the government said were victims of a popular liquid protein modified fast.

The 16 women, all between the ages of 25 and 44, died suddenly, generally following cardiac arrhythmias, which are irregularities in heartbeat seemingly similar to those observed in the rats.

The Food and Drug Administration has attacked the liquid protein diet as being potentially lethal. FDA Commissioner Donald Kennedy said, however, there have been no recent reports of deaths linked to the diets.

A spokesman for the FDA said preliminary results of the study of fat rats indicate that females "are dramatically more susceptible to diets of this kind than males, although we don't know why."

The study also indicates that vitamins and minerals, particularly potassium, prolonged the life of the dieting rats for a few days but were not sufficient to keep them healthy.

FDA spokesman Wayne Pines said other early findings of the study include a pattern of sudden death, possibly due to heart attacks.

He said scientists also observed that "calories count" as a factor because a group of rats fed twice the calories in the form of protein as other groups tended to survive longer.

Only 11 rats, all of them male, were still alive on Friday, one month after the diets began, Pines said. The tests are still under way.

The laboratory findings were disclosed as the FDA prepared to issue a new set of warnings it plans to require on labels of liquid protein and other dietary protein products.

Last December the FDA proposed to order all liquid protein products and similar diet aids to display prominently warnings that said: "VERY LOW CALORIE PROTEIN DIETS MAY CAUSE SERIOUS ILLNESS OR DEATH." And it proposed warning consumers not to use the products without medical supervision. The proposals are still pending final action, and no warnings have yet been required on these products.

Christie Dominates Debate, Fails To Put Krueger Away

DALLAS (AP) - If it had been a boxing match, U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger would have been the boxer and Joe Christie would have been the slugger.

It their televised debate Monday night, Krueger took a lot of punches from his opponent for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination.

But neither appeared to score a knockout.

The debate was telecast on Dallas' educational channel, KERA-TV and was piped to other Public Broadcasting System stations across the state. Only KUHT-TV, Houston, failed to carry the debate live. It will, however, broadcast the tape Saturday.

The two will debate again tonight in Houston on a commercial station.

Christie, former chairman of the State Insurance Board, took aim at Krueger's absentee record since he's been a congressman, which, according to Christie, was 78 percent. But the New Braunfels congressman said he was in constant touch with his office and was in attendance for important votes.

Then Christie put his opponent on the defense again by saying Krueger's campaign manager spent a month on the government payroll.

Krueger replied that he had been cleared of that charge by the House Administration Committee, and that during his campaign he had done nothing to violate the law.

Krueger, who is leading Christie in the polls, asked his opponent to "stick to the issues." The candidates, however agreed on nearly all of the issues.

Their only major difference was the Panama Canal Treaty.

Krueger said he would have opposed the measure if he had been in the Senate, but Christie said he agreed with a poll released by Sen. Lloyd Bentson, D-Texas, showing Texans favored giving the canal back to Panama.

Both agreed: -they like President Carter and welcome his support, but don't favor his energy program.

-federal jobs should be the last straw in solving the unemployment problem.

-that abortion is a religious and moral issue.

-that maternity benefits should be provided to women workers.

Each man said he was the only candidate who could beat incumbent Republican Sen. John Tower, who has held the Senate post since he first was elected in 1961. But neither really went after Tower in the debate.

Krueger said his organization was strong enough to collect the funds needed to counter the estimated $2 million Tower will spend for the November

Christie admitted he had a difficult time asking someone for money, but he said much of Krueger's funding was coming from Republicans who hope Krueger will be Tower's opponent.

Judge Permits Labor

NEW YORK (AP) - A judge has given a hospital permission to induce premature labor to rid a woman of her severely deformed eight-month fetus.

State Supreme Court Justice Thomas Hughes has ruled after three doctors testified that a Caesarean operation would be needed if the unborn child were allowed to develop fully.

Doctors said the operation would endanger the life of the mother, Florence Lee-lau, 30. And besides the physical complications of the pregnancy, the birth of the deformed fetus would cause the mother "severe mental stress," they said.

"This appears to be a case where medical judgment rather than judicial judgment should apply," said Hughes. He added, "It is understood that no abortion will be performed."

Lawyers for St. Luke Hospital promised the institution would take "whatever steps were available to preserve the health and safety of the child after birth as well as of the mother." The doctors described the unborn fetus as a "thanatophoric dwarf," with an enlarged head, small abdomen and chest, and flipper like arms and legs. Even if born after a full-term pregnancy, the child would have "very little chance of survival," the doctors testified.

Bow Window, Double Doors and Side Entrance Garage

NEW ENGLAND STYLE APPEALS TO THE YOUNG

FEATURE HOMES
 © By W. D. Farmer

Charming four bedroom two story plan includes all the features most young couples desire in a size that most can afford.

The first floor of this plan is the living and activity area. There is a large living room and a separate family-sized dining room. There is a conveniently located powder room behind the foyer. The foyer includes a graceful open stairway.

The kitchen is U shaped for efficiency. It has all the built-in appliances plus excellent counter top work surface and cabinet space. The washer and dryer space is located near bath plumbing for greater economy.

The breakfast room in this plan is as large as some dining rooms. The step-down family room has fireplace at one end with 1/2 partition at the other end, dividing breakfast room and family room. A french door, located beside the three large windows, leads to a terrace behind the house.

The second floor includes the quiet or sleeping area. All four bedrooms are on the second floor, along with two full baths. Three of the bedrooms have large walk-in closets.

The New England style two-story house is enhanced by the beautiful bow window, nestled under the cantilevered frame second story. There are half glass, cross-buck doors centered under the covered entrance shown with matching shutters. The Plan is Number 2126. It includes a total of 2,174 square feet of heated area. For further information write W. D. Farmer, P. O. Box 49463, Atlanta, Ga. 30329.

HEALTH

Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

Low back pain

DEAR DR. LAMB - Recently I developed low back pain, involving spasm of the large supportive muscles along the spine and causing stiffness. It hit me upon getting out of bed one morning. The first two days I could hardly move about because of the pain and spasms.

I believe it was caused by too much forward bending from the waist during the preceding few days. Can you recommend an exercise program that will help prevent reinjury by strengthening the muscles. I am 70 years old. I've found out that many of my friends are also bothered by low back pain.

DEAR READER - You are right, low back pain is a common problem and you don't have to be 70 to get it either.

Anyone who has such an attack should be examined by a physician. There are many causes for low back pain. You could have a ruptured disc between two vertebrae; the material leaked out of the disc is very irritating. The irritation sets up spasm causing the low back pain. Pain can even be a sign of a bone tumor or spread of a hidden cancer. That is why a person can't fool around with such problems on a do-it-yourself basis. It is important to know first what you are treating.

If the back pain is a complication of weak muscles then you can use exercises to help. Also a good exercise program for everyone helps to prevent such frequent problems.

What kind of exercise do you need to do? The most important ones are to strengthen your abdominal muscles. When we sit the abdominal muscles are slack - particularly if you are leaning over a desk typing as I am doing now. Office workers commonly develop weak abdominal muscles which has something to do with the tendency to develop a large abdomen. I am sending you The Health Letter number 3-7, Girth Control: Avoiding the Big Middle, not because you have a big middle but because the exercises described there are good to help maintain your abdominal muscles, but do see your doctor before beginning an exercise program.

The strong abdominal muscles help maintain pressure in your abdominal cavity and literally splint the back. If they are weak the back must provide all the support and it may get a little sore as a result. Sitting is the worst of all positions as a cause of back strain.

You need to do modified leg lifts to strengthen the lower abdomen and sit ups to strengthen the upper abdomen. I am sorry to say that level walking will not use the abdominal muscles and won't help much.

Many back problems are related to chronic unrecognized conditions. If a person has one leg significantly shorter than the other it will tilt the pelvis and cause a realignment of the spinal vertebrae. The resulting abnormal position causes a constant see-saw effect and puts unusual stress on spinal muscles. The stressed muscles go into spasm to splint the back and cause pain. When this or other chronic conditions are present correcting the basic defect is just as important as treating the muscle spasm. Proper shoes, proper furniture that fits you and prevents strain are important features of managing back pain problems.

Help for wine glasses

POLLY'S PROBLEM

DEAR POLLY - Three of my beautiful wine glasses have broken off from the stems. Is there any way I can repair them? If not, can you suggest some other use for them? They have lovely carving on them and I hate to throw them out. - DEBORAH

DEAR DEBORAH - If you wish to keep them in a cabinet for display only I am sure you could repair your glasses with one of those new glues that "grab" instantly. They do have to be handled with great care. I suggest wearing gloves when using such glue. I repaired a ceramic totem pole that I was very fond of with such a glue and every tiny flower and leaf gripped instantly. But your fingers can stick together as well if you do not exercise great care in its use. - POLLY

DEAR POLLY - My son who is in the Army Medical Corps suggested that I use dental floss when sewing on buttons and patches as it is so much stronger than thread and is waterproof, too. - BETTY

Bentsen Presses Navy for Honorable Discharge

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, thinks he has presented the Navy with three good reasons for issuing an honorable discharge to a Fort Worth man who illegally enlisted at the age of 12 and fought in two World War II naval battles. The boy warrior, Calvin Graham, is now 47 and says he is suffering from wounds received during Guadalcanal when he served aboard the U.S.S. South Dakota. He has been refused veterans' benefits and the medals he was awarded during the war because of his fraudulent enlistment. Bentsen joined House Majority Leader Jim Wright of Fort Worth in introducing private bills in both the House and Senate that would restore Graham's benefits. Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, co-sponsored the Bentsen bill. The Navy, however, sailed onto troubled waters when it opposed passage of Bentsen's bill in a March letter to the Senate committee reviewing the proposed legislation. The Navy letter said that "Mr. Graham was treated in some manner as others similarly situated."

Joseph P. Hargrove, who reportedly enlisted in the Navy at 15 in 1944 the legal age was 16 and who received an honorable discharge on Dec. 21, 1946.

Bobby Lee Pettit, who enlisted in the Army in 1942 at age 13 and was granted an honorable discharge at the urging of the late Albert Thomas, then a U.S. Representative from Texas.

Jimmy Baker, who according to an article in the June 18, 1943 issue of Time magazine, received an honorable discharge from the Marine Corps after enlisting in 1942 at age 12.

SIB Sets Ad Guidelines

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - Insurance ads would have to spell out any policy features that would deny or reduce benefits under new rules laid out for the State Insurance Board on Tuesday.

The board asked for minor revisions and indicated it would hold a public hearing before voting on the rules, which staff members wrote in an attempt to curb deceptive advertising.

Former board chairman Joe Christie started the process a year ago, saying existing rules weren't doing the job. Changes proposed by the staff would:

Require that any ad that mentions policy benefits must also spell out all provisions that reduce or deny benefits. Present rules allow an ad to cover this with a simple disclaimer that says exclusions exist.

Force advertisers to disclose that customers have 10 days to examine and reject an accident and health policy.

Prohibit disparaging competitors or their policies.

Require ads to define "pre-existing conditions" probably the most common means of denying health insurance benefits to a policyholder. Clip-out application forms would be accompanied by a clear statement of the exclusion for pre-existing ailments.

Savings and Loan Associations Accuse FRB of Violations

NEW YORK (AP) - The Federal Reserve Board, say the nation's savings and loan associations, has urged the powers of Congress, endangered the booming housing market and violated the laws of the land.

Home mortgages, the associations remind us, are supported largely by the thrift industry, made up of S & Ls and mutual savings banks. If thrifts don't have the money to lend, they warn, housing might tumble.

It doesn't matter to the associations that the commercial banks already have encouraged regulators to permit the thrifts to do the same thing - offer interest-bearing checking accounts.

The associations don't want them, and they don't want the commercial banks nosing into their territory either. They fear it's part of a plot to make all financial institutions look alike.

"We'll sue, no question about it," said a savings and loan spokesman of the Fed, which this week voted to permit automatic transfer from savings accounts to checking accounts.

"Our lawyers have been meeting since yesterday," said a spokesman for the U.S. League of Savings Associations. "They're deciding where to file, when to file, the wording."

Has the Fed, that august, austere, proper body that determines the nation's monetary policy, actually violated the law? Can the Fed, powerful enough to challenge the President, be forced to retract?

Remove that differential, they say, and the thrifts, committed by law to financing the home mortgage market, would be unable to compete for money with the various attractions of the powerful commercial banks.

Senate Committee Says It Will Reject Sale

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Carter's planned Mideast jet sale seemed certain last Friday of slipping through Congress unscathed. But Carter's trump, the House International Relations Committee, is now threatening to kill the deal if he doesn't sweeten it for Israel.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which begins hearings on the measure today, already has served notice that it will vote as early as Monday to reject Carter's sale of fighters to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

But in an abrupt about-face, 22 members of the 37-member House panel also introduced a resolution Tuesday afternoon to reject the entire sale.

Carter had been counting on that committee to kill all resolutions aimed at rejecting the package. That parliamentary move effectively would have prevented the full House from considering rejection.

To kill the deal, both houses must adopt resolutions rejecting it by May 28.

A number of the House committee members are staunch supporters of planes for Israel, and at least two chief sponsors of Tuesday's unexpected resolution had said earlier that they were trying to force Carter to revise his sale to ease Israeli fears.

The chief sponsor was Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., who had said he was trying to get concessions from Carter.

Another sponsor, Rep. Edward J. Derwinski, R-Ill., agreed that Carter must make concessions. Derwinski predicted the committee would send to the House floor rejection resolutions against the entire sale.

"I think we'll approve them - but only as a strategy to force Carter's hand," Derwinski said. The congressional opponents are not demanding specific concessions from Carter but are negotiating on several fronts for a way to make the deal look better to Israel.

Panel Requests Harding Views

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - State Treasurer Warren Harding sent his chief assistant Tuesday to tell a legislative subcommittee about state funds in interest-bearing accounts, but the panel wanted to hear it from Harding.

"It's disappointing the treasurer can't come and meet with the committee and give us his views, and we can't even find out what city he's in," said Rep. Frank Hartung, R-Houston, chairman of the oversight subcommittee of the House Financial Institutions Committee.

Harding was out of town, said his chief assistant Morris Stevens, who did not know where the treasurer was. Harding, who was appointed to his post, is running for election.

The subcommittee asked Harding in January for his views on competitive bidding for interest-bearing accounts and whether his department needs additional investment authority. Harding had no recommendations at that time, and Stevens

As your Congressman, I will be in your county twice each year, preannounced, to sit down and visit with you.

It is vitally important as your Congressman to stay in touch with the thinking of the people of West Texas. It is my desire to represent all of the people. I will stay in touch.

TITHE CUSTOM

The tithe (from Old English "teogothian" meaning tenth) was a custom dating back to times of the Old Testament and adopted by the Christian church. Lay people were supposed to contribute one tenth of their annual income to the church. The money, or its equivalent, was used to support the clergy, maintain churches and assist the poor.
