HIGH WATER HALTS RAIL SERVICE

2.1 INCHES OF RAIN TUESDAY DAMAGES NINE S. P. BRIDGES HALTING SERVICE TO CITY

Two and a tenth inches of rain fell in this city late Tuesday afternoon and, due to heavy rains northwest of here, the Sanderson canyon, running thru the south part of the city came down on one of the biggest rises ever to be known. So heavy was the rainfall and so swift was the water that it could not confine itself to the main channel. Soon after 9 o'clock that night a second rise came down the creek and as it reached the railroad bridge in the west end of the yards walls of water came down Downie street, flooding the depot and those houses that were on the east end of the street.

The railroad bridge at the east edge of the town had two concrete pillars to be washed out, one of them being washed away, causing two large steel girders of the bridge to give way. The west end approach to the highway bridge was washed out and early Wednesday morning the highway crews were busy building a temporary bridge across the span so that highway traffic would not be halted. On the S. P. railroad 9 bridges were washed out between this city and Dryden, as well as several miles of track.

Parts of the highway west of here were washed away and the trees all west of here were stripped of foliage due to the hail that fell. While water ran over the railroad in places just west of the city no track was washed out. Train services were halted into the city Tuesday night the west-bound train coming as far as Dryden and turned back. The east-bound train out of El Paso was routed over the Texas & Pacific.

Mexicans living in the lower part of the city were forced to move out as the west banks of the creek started to washing and the water came through several of the houses. Water came up to the Sanderson tourist camps, just across the highway bridge, and at the Newton camp, causing the occupants to move to higher grounds.

It will be several days before normal railroad service will be resumed into this city, while the traffic on the highway was not so badly affected, although parts of the highway were badly washed.

The rain was general in this section of the country with reports coming in that in some places it was heavy while others that a slow rain fell. T. D. Moore reported that he received a half-inch rain while Ross Roberts, north of Dryden reported that an inch fell in that section.

All ranches in the south part of the county received good rains. The Big Canyon ranch received a slow rain Tuesday night and Wednesday all creeks and canyons were still running. Telephone lines were down to several ranches in the extreme port portion of the county but rain fell according to relay reports received. Last Monday night the Lindsey Hicks ranch on the Independence received 3 1/2 inches of rain.

No losses of livestock were reported.

SAFE IN NEW LOCATION

Rancher Injured In Car Wreck East of Uvalde

R. M. Gatlin, who ranches near Dryden, is recovering at his home in Del Rio, following injuries he sustained in a head-on collision of two automobiles three miles east of Uvalde last Saturday evening about six o'clock.

Mr. Gatlin suffered a broken left hip, numerous cuts and bruises and shock in the collision with the car of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fowler of Boerne, both of whom sustained cuts and lacerations about the head.

The three injured persons were taken to the Uvalde hospital immediately following the accident, and Mr. Gatlin was taken to his home in Del Rio Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Gatlin was enroute to Del Rio from San Antonio when the accident occurred.

Both cars were demolished.

WIND DOES DAMAGE

High winds that accompanied the rain which fell in Dryden on Wednesday of last week did considerable damage to the railroad pump house and the residence occupied by W. D. Chandler. The wind was so strong that it blew the west end cornice off the residence carrying it some distance before letting it drop on an out-house damaging the roof to a certain extent. Also the cap off of the top of the railroad pump-house was blown off.

PRESIDING ELDER WILL PREACH HERE SUNDAY

Dr. W. H. Coleman, presiding elder of the El Paso District, will preach at the Methodist church, both morning and evening hours, on Sunday, June 2. He will preach at Dryden three o'clock Sunday afternoon. The third quarterly conference will be held at Sanderson after the Sunday evening service. As this will be his last visit for several months a full attendance is desired.

MISS FRAZIER ILL

Miss Kate Frazier, local manager for Western Union, has been seriously ill at her home since last Sunday. Reports Thursday were that her condition was much improved. Her sister, Mrs. Pat Beard, of Tyler was expected to arrive last night to be with her.

To Renew Drive For Cash Bonus Rancher Killed In Auto Wreck

Washington, May 28.—The Patman bill leaders in congress decided to proceed with a drive for the cash payment of the bonus at this session and to sacrifice inflationary provisions of their bill if necessary.

House and Senate supporters of immediate payment, in joint sessions, agreed to poll and to push action for it.

Word was received here Wednesday telling of the accidental death, near Del Rio, of G. W. "Dub" Miers, prominent rancher of Val Verde county, and who had been ranching south of here for some time. Very little of the particulars attending the accident could be learned here, only that Mr. Miers, enroute to his ranch, accompanied by two Mexican laborers, collided with another car driven by Mexicans. Mr. Miers was killed instantly, and several of the Mexicans were hurt, it was stated.

Funeral services will be held in Del Rio.

LANDS BIG JAVELINA

Wild boar hunting — sport of European nobles—was the diversion for Clyde Morris, genial and efficient manager of the Community Public Service Co. In Europe dogs are used to run the animals by a blind concealing the royal hunters, and the wild boars don't have a Chinaman's chance.

That wasn't Clude's style. When he spotted a herd of javelinias on the Ft. Stockton-Sanderson highway last Friday, he took after them in his Chevy, and finally succeeded in running one down, and took it to Ft. Stockton.

"They were the wildest herd I ever saw," said Clyde, and every time the car got close to one of them he tried to chew off the tires.

"Why didn't you get out and catch one alive?" we asked. "Oh, yea?" he said. "I've only got one suit of clothes, and had that on."

Harry Newton Taken to El Paso For Treatment

Harry Newton, Jr., was taken into El Paso last Friday night for hospital treatment after being ill at the home of his parents since last Wednesday.

Harry had been working for the H. B. Zachary company, who is constructing that part of Highway 90 in eastern Brewster county. Coming in from the job last Wednesday he complained of a severe headache, and most of the day Thursday and Friday he was listless and in a semi-conscious condition.

Reports from his El Paso hospital were that he was suffering from a form of meningitis evidently caused by a lick or jar and that following several days treatment he would be all right.

He was accompanied to El Paso by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Newton.

Half a million pounds of mohair brought 30 cents for grown hair and 40 cents for kid hair in a sale made Tuesday by the Val Verde Wool and Mohair company to Tom Richey, representing A. W. Hillard company of Boston.

The sale brought top price for mohair and marked the disposal of the largest accumulation of mohair in the state.

Around 100,000 pounds of the accumulation was the Fall clip of 1933, the balance being the spring and fall clips of 1934 and this spring's clip, the manager said.

50° ABOVE 50 DEGREES FOOD SPOILS QUICKLY 50° BELOW 50 DEGREES FOOD REMAINS WHOLESOME FIFTY DEGREES The Danger Line in Food Preservation All foods contain tiny micro-organisms known as bacteria or molds. In temperatures above 50 degrees these microscopic organisms multiply with amazing rapidity. Thousands become millions within a few hours, revealing their presence by giving foods an unpleasant look, taste or odor. Below 50 degrees it is a different story. Bacteria need warmth to multiply and low temperatures retard their activity. Scientific tests have proven that foods will remain healthful and wholesome for days, when protected by temperatures below the 50-degree line. Use Ice or Electricity But Refrigerate Adequately Modern refrigerators, both ice and electric, are designed in accordance with the findings of science. They are built to maintain temperatures below 50 degrees in order to prevent bacterial action and preserve foods properly. If your present refrigerator does not keep the temperatures recommended by science, see the new ice and electric refrigerators today. They not only provide protection from spoilage but offer greater convenience in the handling and storage of foods. Prices are reasonable and terms moderate. Synopsis of Preceding Chapter

With Blake is an easterner—Marston—who announces himself as a secret service operator on the trail of Mexican opium smugglers believed to be working in the vicinity of the Savarin ranch. Remembering an incident at a dance they had attended, connects Stone with the smugglers Marston is seeking. Sonya is forced to admit to herself that the man she loves is involved in the nefarious traffic. At the general store in the desert village Sonya inadvertently stumbles on evidence of the storekeeper's possession of opium. On her way home she is seized and carried away in an airplane.

CHAPTER X

Across the Rio Grande

The world and all it held were gone. They were headed south! South toward Mexico! It was El Capitan Diablo who had her in his grip!

Yet El Capitan was—he must be—riding slowly south somewhere in the dark lan below.

Very soon her heart leaped to her throat for the ship was falling by the nose, it seemed, going sharply down. And then she saw some lights spread on the flat darkness—a landing field!

In an incredibly short time the feeling of falling passed and the ship came level again, touched, bounced, lifted beautifully, and came to rest. The man behind her reached around her, unfastened her safety strap, put his arms around her and lifted her to her unsteady feet. "If you please, Senorita," he said in English, and Sonya climbed out into the up-reached arms of the pilot.

She looked around, at a small level field, a hangar, another gray ship beyond its open doors, all plainly visible in the floodlights that studded the field's four corners. Then the two Mexicans took her arms, and they walked across the moonlit darkness beyond a grove of trees. Here the lights of a low, wide adobe house shone dimly; a door stood open; two women in low-necked dresses waited inside.

"La Senorita," the pilot said to them in Spanish. "You will take her to the guest chamber—and bear her company."

There was a marked significance in the last few words.

"Si," the older of the women said briefly. "I will take good care of her."

Sonya, speaking Spanish as well as they, listened tensely.

"And tender care, Carlotta," the man said, smiling meaningly. "She is, as you can see, very beautiful. I like this white skin, sunned though it is, and the curls in the hair. I am glad El Diablo cares only for pure gold blondes."

"You should wait, at least, the master's decision as to what he likes, Manuel," the woman said. "But why did Quatro send her?"

Because she caught him red-handed with a five-gal can of black molasses—the blundering fool, to approach anyone with that in sight. Well, care for the pretty thing, Carlotta, until El Capitan returns. We'll all know more then."

And with a look at Sonya from under his level black brows he bowed and left the house.

"If three Senorita weel come weeth me," the woman said in painful English. "You would eat? Drink? Some wine before you sleep, mobby?"

"No, thank you," said Sonya. She stood hesitantly, with her hands clasped behind her. She had no possessions to pick up. She had lost her hat the first moment in the plane. And she realized suddenly that she was weary to the bone.

Whatever was to happen to her she would not help matters any by giving way to fear and worry.

"I would sleep, senora," she said. "I am very tired."

The woman went to a table of dark polished wood and picked up a candle burning steadily in a silver candlestick, and Sonya followed her down a dark passage between thick whitewashed adobe walls and into a spacious high-ceiled room.

Here the woman left her, and soon returned with a pitcher of cold water and a silver cup.

She asked again if the Senorita desired anything more and finally departed. Sonya was dismayed to hear the unmistakable falling of a bar across the heavy door, and slowly she undressed herself and blew out the light. But a thought came to her suddenly, and she went softly to the one window in the deep walls. It was closely barred with iron and set hard in the old adobe—and on a little stone-flagged yard below, two women were just seating themselves in low chairs. They were soft of manner, gentle seeming, and they carried fans in the lamplight.

She was to be care for—to the very letter of the law laid down by Manuel.

"I am on Thy lap, O, Lord," the girl said inaudibly. "Thy will be done." Then she laid her tired body on the bed and went right to sleep.

Late morning waked her, or perhaps it was the sound of the bar being slid from its slot outside the door. She opened her eyes to see the senora with a little wooden tray on which were coffee steaming in a tiny pot, a luscious fruit, eggs in a cup, and bread made of some dark flour.

The woman smiled at her with a crinkling of all her brown face and Sonya smiled back.

"Good morning, senora," she said in English. "I thank you for these things."

"Good morning, Senorita," the woman answered. "I hope you sleep verree fine."

"Yes, I did," said Sonya, getting out of the bed in her plain undergarments, which she had been forced to use as nightwear, and I would eat."

She washed her face and hands in the ancient bowl where the senora had poured the water from the pitcher. She was young and very hungry and the excellent food put heart in her for what the day might bring.

It brought only the senora to take the things away, and the hours dragged on leaden feet. She sat by the window looking out across the stone-flagged yard at the tall trees of the grove—through which she had come the night before.

And the day drowned itself away. Try as she would, her mulling brain would not relax. Thoughts raced through it, one on the heels of the other.

What had happened to Starr Stone? Where was he? What would El Capitan do with him? With her? So it was opium which Parks had dropped at her feet in the heavy brass container—and she, having seen it, was a menace to them all. And El Diablo took few chances with those who knew too much. He—crucified them. There was no mercy in that wild dark face of his. A woman who knew too much was just a source of danger to him—nothing more.

Parks, the bland owner of a simple store at a lost little station on the cross continent railroad. Parks, who could so easily send small flat cars of contraband to New York City in crates of innocent western produce; lettuce, say, from the Imperial valley, or even bales of hides. She knew now why she always disliked him, why she had felt a repugnance to his speech, the oily handshake.

And it was Parks who had sent the little gray ship, hidden no doubt on some flat among the weathered mesas south of town, to take her and bring her here. What a get-away it had been!

She, Sonya Savarin, was gone completely, a helpless prisoner in an alien country, in the very heart of El Diablo's stronghold, her fate resting in the hands of the cruellest killer in all the turbulent land. If only fate permitted her to see Starr Stone just once again, to look into his eyes, to commune once more with the soul of him which, under all its wrong and sin and spiritual loss, was yet the soul of her predestined mate, gentle and steadfast and irrevocably her own. And she felt that it would be so, that he was coming, would soon be here, though for what dire destiny only heaven itself knew.

And so the long hot hours wore away; twilight came, and with it again the senora with more food. But Sonya could not eat this time.

Darkness fell again and once again the late round moon came up, and one of the little gray ships warmed up and took off into the starlit skies.

Presently there were the soft steps of women on the flagstones just below, the little noise of the creaking chairs. The low intonations of their voices came softly to Sonya at her window.

The spoke in Spanish, as did all the people here, without regard for the white woman, who seemed so alien. Apparently they had not thought she might understand.

"It is warm, Conchita," the senora said, fanning; "the heat is heavy this year."

"Si senora, heavy as my heart."

"Muchacha," said the older woman, "a woman's heart is made for aching. It has always been so."

"But does one never find relief, senora? Does not one forget?"

"Si, with the years. Calm thyself, Conchita. There will be others."

"No," said Conchita, "there will never be another. And once I was good for him, held in his arms, lived on his kisses. Now he does not see me with his eyes that stare ahead. He pushes me to one side—gently, but still he puts me away."

"H'm," said the senora. "He has seen another, child. Best look at a new man—to forget. One does not build a new fire from dead ashes. Say thy prayers, Conchita, and ask the Virgin Mary to send you a new man. One with blue eyes, to make you forget."

"No," said the other weeping, "never another, with blue eyes."

Sonya, by her window, stirred uneasily.

She felt ashamed to listen, yet there was nothing she could do, since she would not let them know she understood. And then, out of the silence, out of the vast diapason of seemingly inaudible sounds that made that silence, something struck lightly on her ears.

Horses' hoofs, far off and slow, padding on hard sand, striking now and again against a stone, the later rattle of chain and spur, the sounds of riding men.

The women below listened in sudden stillness, then got to their feet swiftly.

"Madre—look quick!" said the younger one, "there—in the stable's lantern light. Quince!"

"They have brought him back! Oh, madre!"

Sonya leaped to her feet, her hands clutching the old iron bars with her face pressed close to them. She had been something in Concha's voice when she cried "Quince! Oh, madre!" which explained her tears.

Quince, a blue-eyed man. Verily disaster was riding upon her from all quarters. But she would not give up. Whatever seemed to be, there was still behind it all the sound of Starr Stone's voice saying, "I'd crawl around the world—to change my spots!" So, whatever he had done, whatever he had been, he was another man now. It was in his eyes, in his heart, in the very tone of his voice. The past and all it meant of an and shame were done. He would change his spots if he could; that she knew beyond all doubting.

The newcomers had passed out of sight and sound, and the Mexican night hung its starry jewels above the drooping trees. And Sonya Savarin sat by her barred window as the hours passed, her hands clasped in her lap, her pale face in the shadows.

What the morrow would bring she did not know. Though her mind's uneasy thoughts moiled. She heard again the Servant of the Lord talking in Myra's yard, at the dance at the Neidlingers'. "Beelzebub—and the blue-eyed one—danger where they passed by, a dark form hung on a cross."

She divined in the warm night and hugged her arms across her breast.

"Beware, Innocent One," the mad old man had said, and here was his warning fulfilled. Here was the goal toward which she had turned her face irresolutely when she had looked in Starr Stone's eyes and followed his in spirit. All the good past, all her work and her services, all the sane and precious things of ordinary life, were gone like a chaff in the wind because a man had looked at her with wild blue eyes and she had turned and followed.

Now that man rode by out there in the dark of an alien land—a prisoner; she sat trembling here a prisoner, also, and the morrow held their fate.

The morrow and El Capitan Diablo.

Popular Dancing Team To Appear In "Roberta" Film

Hilarious goings-on enliven the big screen musical "Roberta!" Imagine an All-American football player as the owner of a Paris gown shop!

Try and imagine it, and then see it in "Roberta," the RKO-Radio musical special which stars Irene Dunn, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.

Randolph Scott plays the gridiron hero who by accident of inheritance finds himself with a style salon on his hands. The situation has its compensations, however. The head designer of the gown shop is a lovely exiled Russian princess, Miss Dunne plays this role.

Astaire, as the dance band leader pal of the football hero, and Miss Rogers, as the toast of Paris night club patrons, do their part to make the gown shop the sensation of all gay Paris.

Songs by Miss Dunne, among them the famous "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," spectacular dances by Astaire and Miss Rogers, and some snappy band numbers in one of which Astaire demonstrates his wizardry as a pianist, keep the romantic story moving along in a merry, tuneful way.

A bevy of America's most dazzling girls are seen as fashion mannequins, and all-star hand composed of radio, stage and night club headliners, provides snappy melody under Astaire's direction.

"Roberta" is delightful entertainment, and will be shown at the Princess Theatre today and Saturday, May 21 and June 1.
