Floods continue in Central Texas

By The Associated Press

Heavy thunderstorms that dumped about 6 inches of rain in parts of Central Texas early today trapped motorists in their vehicles, washed a firefighter into floodwaters and prompted some evacuations, authorities said.

Flash flood warnings were posted by the National Weather Service for parts of Central Texas, including San Antonio and Bexar, Comal, Guadalupe and Medina counties. Watches were in effect for eastern and south central portions of North Texas, South Texas, the Permian Basin and Concho Valley.

Bexar County sheriff's officers said floodwaters ran as much as four feet deep in freeway access roads, and many freeways and streets were closed as motorists began attempting to travel to work early today.

A large number of motorists were stranded in their vehicles, and firefighters and other emergency personnel were attempting to rescue them, said sheriff's Capt. Robert Marks.

"We have a fireman who was washed away, but he's not injured at this time. He's holding on to a tree," said Lt. Charles Benson of the sheriff's department. "We're trying to reach him now. A female subject was trapped in her vehicle.

"Apparently, he was the first fireman on the scene and he tried to go into the water on his own before the other fire units arrived," said Benson.

A flood warning was in effect for Cibolo, Salado, Olmos and Leon Creeks in the Central Texas area, the weather service said.

Two trailer homes at a campground in the San Antonio area were moved to higher ground as a result of floodwaters, officials said.

"We've had 2½ inches of rain on our property and approximately 4 inches of rain above our property," said Ron Rohde, owner of a KOA Campground. "We are experiencing about a 6-foot rise, at this moment, in our creek.

"Nobody's in any danger and we've only had to move two motor homes to higher ground," he said. "The weather service tells us to expect another foot to two-foot rise and we expect another cell coming over, but they didn't give me any approximation of how many inches to expect."

A storm cell containing another two to four inches of rain moved through at about 6:30 a.m., with "another three to five inches of rain coming in from the west, about 50 miles or so out," said NWS forecaster Larry Peabody.

Marks said he did not know how many streets and expressways were closed in San Antonio, but he advised residents to stay home and predicted many businesses would close for the day. He warned residents living near flood-prone creeks to move to higher ground.

"We have reports of several people being stranded in their cars, because they've driven into low-water crossings. We're attempting rescue efforts at this time," said Bensen. "It's being hampered because of the weather. We're not using helicopters, they're grounded."

Heavy rains on Tuesday washed out railroad tracks and triggered the derailment of two railroad cars and two engines near Lometa, authorities said.

Several days of heavy rains and flash flooding killed a San Antonio man who was trapped in a low-water crossing and swept away a Duncanville teen-ager who had been surfing in high water.

An engineer and head brakeman, whose names were not released, received minor injuries, said Susan Metcalf, a spokeswoman for Sante Fe headquarters in Chicago.

The Texas Department of Public Safety said the train was loaded with grocery supplies, 400 cases of wine and some tankers carrying naptha, a flammable substance.

The Texas Water Commission, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and the Environmental Protection Agency monitored the runoff's effect on the watershed. Officials said they believed the hazardous wastes dumped into a creek were being diluted because of the heavy rains and apparently posed no danger.

San Antonio police said Leo John Vyvjala, 61, had just stuck his head out of his nearly submerged car and was reaching for a life preserver when his vehicle flipped over and crushed him Monday night.

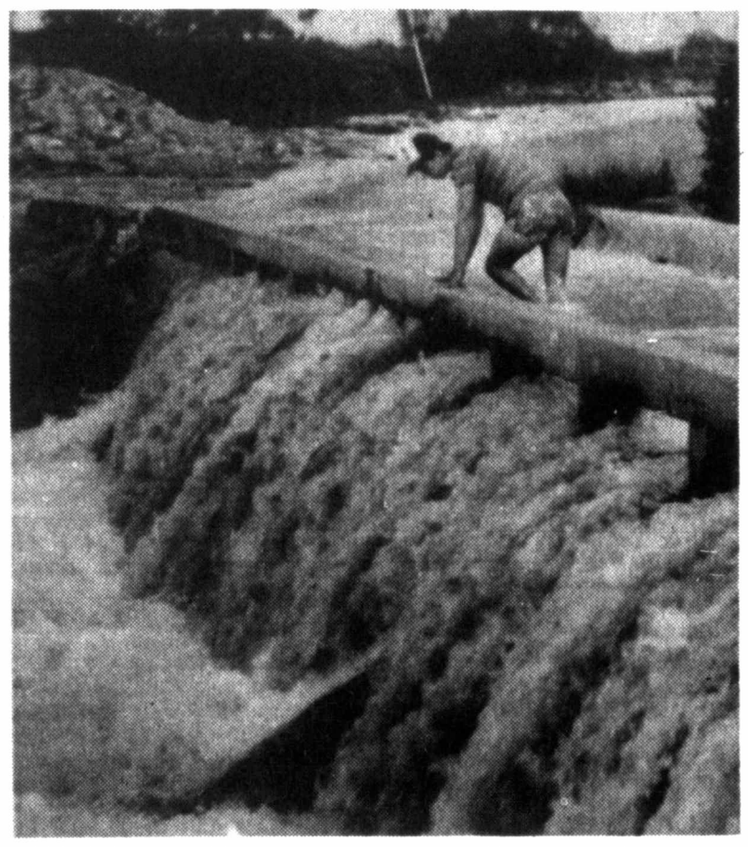

Rescue workers, hampered by the rising waters, later found the man's body about 100 yards downstream in Olmos Creek. By Tuesday, the high waters had receded, said Veronica Laureano, a spokeswoman for the city streets department.

In Duncanville, at least 40 residents searched for Tyrone Jones, 13, who was last seen Sunday trying to surf with a friend in 10-foot-high water in a drainage ditch, authorities said.

His 15-year-old companion escaped, but a witness saw the other boy washed away.

The youth was still missing today, although searchers had found articles of the victim's clothing, authorities said.

In De Leon, 30 to 40 units of a federal housing project were temporarily evacuated, authorities said.

RAGING RUNOFF — Bryson Nokes, 17, cautiously peers over the edge of a low-water crossing of Spring Creek while water from recent heavy rains cascades through the area about 15 miles west of San Angelo. This crossing normally does not run at all, with the platform Nokes is standing on serving as a road through a roadside park. Virtually every river, creek and spring flow is up from the rains, which are not forecasted to abate for at least several days, leading some officials to say the three-year drought that has plagued this part of West Texas may be over. Senators want to save politically sensitive deductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators considering landmark tax-overhaul legislation are looking for ways to save popular tax breaks, such as the deduction for Individual Retirement Accounts, without sinking the entire package.

The 2,847-page plan approved by the Senate Finance Committee was scheduled for floor debate today, but with the chamber likely to turn to other matters for the remainder of the week, any substantive action on the tax bill will wait until at least next week.

Even before the Senate was to take up the measure formally, about 10 senators were set to make speeches just on the issue of Individual Retirement Accounts, reflecting the election-year sensitivity of that issue.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the Finance Committee chairman, has pressed a campaign to resist any amendments to the package, saying changes can wait until congressional negotiators meet to draft a compromise version of the legislation passed by each chamber.

Nonetheless, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said, "We've already been notified of 30-some amendments on the tax bill." It was unclear how many of those amendments will be offered.

In addition, Democrats have grumbled about the no-amendment strategy, which Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia on Tuesday likened to "a big steamroller drive."

Despite the desire of some legislators to offer amendments, it is difficult to draft amendments. The rules under which the package is being considered require that any amendment to restore a tax break must also include a way to raise enough money to pay for the change to keep the overall bill from adding to the budget deficit.

Republicans and Democrats alike have been concerned about the provision of the pending bill that would eliminate the deductibility of IRAs.

The bill would retain fully deductible IRAs only for workers who are not eligible for a company pension plan. Workers who are under a company plan could continue to set aside up to $2,000 a year in an IRA, but that money would not be deductible.

California, Massachusetts to lead job growth

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Sun Belt remains the focus of the nation's growth, but a new study has good news for older industrial areas too, projecting that California and Massachusetts will lead the nation in new jobs for the rest of the century.

"The U.S. population continues to move South and West, but the extreme growth slowdown and even declines in population of many northern industrial states have ended," the National Planning Association reported Tuesday.

The new report by Nestor E. Terleckyj projects strong growth in goods production, manufacturing and construction but little gain in agriculture or mining in the coming years.

Declines in the price of oil will limit growth in the previously booming energy production regions, Terleckyj says, but "continued internationalization of the American economy will add further increments of growth in the financial, trading and corporate headquarters on both the East and West Coasts."

Los Angeles, the rapidly growing area that the federal Bureau of Economic Analysis expects to surpass New York as the nation's largest metro area by the year 2000, is expected to add the most jobs, the private, non-profit Planning Association projects.

Ranking second in job gain is expected to be the Boston metro area, which, like some rapidly growing parts of California, is a center of technological development in recent years.

The study anticipates Los Angeles will add just over 1 million new jobs for a total of 5.3 million in 2000.

The report says Boston will add nearly 755,000 new jobs, followed by Anaheim, Calif.; San Jose, Calif.; and Phoenix, Ariz.

Overall, there are expected to be just over 26 million new jobs for Americans by 2000, with more than 12 million of them in 30 metropolitan areas, the Planning Association says.

The federal Bureau of Economic Analysis, in a study released last December, also picked Los Angeles as the region with the greatest potential for job growth. It ranked Houston second, followed by Boston.

The Planning Association study, however, says Houston is expected to rank only seventh in growth with a gain of nearly 498,000 jobs by 2000.

That is a substantial difference both from the government study and from the last Planning Association report, issued just over a year ago, which called for Houston to be the biggest gainer through the end of this century.

The new study anticipates that Houston will have 2,191,500 jobs available in the year 2000. In 1985 the Planning Association projected that in that year there would be 2,949,000 jobs in Houston.

Job growth is continuing in Houston and similar areas, but with declining oil prices, energy-dependent areas are "less booming" than in the past, commented Carlton N. Strong of the Association.

On the other hand, the lowered energy prices are a benefit to older industrial areas.

Runoff absentee voting is light in Gray County

Absentee voting concluded Tuesday for Saturday's Democratic and Republican run-off elections.

Gray County Clerk Wanda Carter said 96 Democrats and 10 Republicans voted absentee with one mailed-out ballot still out in each party. She described the turnout as fair for both parties, noting the Republicans do not have any local run-offs.

Local Democratic run-offs are for Precinct Two County Commissioner, where Jim Greene faces W.C. Epperson, and for Precinct One Justice of the Peace, where Pat Steele squares off against Mary Lou Winegeart. Each party has several statewide run-off elections.

Voters will go to the polls from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturday.

Carter also announced she will be conducting a public test of the voting machines at 11 a.m. Friday in the county clerk's office on the second floor of the courthouse.

Schools to launch pilot kindergarten program

Hoping to make sure Johnny is emotionally ready for school, Pampa school officials will be piloting a developmental kindergarten program at three schools this fall.

Reading and language arts coordinator Arlene Gibson said the program will be piloted at Lamar, Mann and Wilson elementary schools, with incoming kindergarten students being screened before school starts to determine their developmental levels. Children who score below a five-year developmental level on the Maturational Assessment Test will be placed in the developmental kindergarten classes.

"This will give them a chance to develop school readiness by placing them in a situation in which they can more easily cope," Gibson said.

Tentatively, the screening schedule is set up for June 19 and 20 at Mann Elementary. Gibson said teachers who plan to help with the screening process will be telephoning parents of incoming kindergartners to set up dates and times for the screening to take place. Sessions should not last longer than 30 minutes, Gibson said.

Gibson stressed that screening will not involve IQ tests. A child can be bright and still not be emotinally ready for school, she said.

Rather, she said, the tests will be used strictly to determine the developmental level of the child. She said she also hopes the tests can be used to screen for potential learning problems such as dyslexia.

"Most children reach a learning readiness point before they are ready for group school activities," she said. "Learning readiness is a point where a child is intellectually curious and ready to learn new things in a one-to-one situation in familiar surroundings and for short periods of time sandwiched between periods of play."

Being ready for school, Gibson said, involves a variety of factors separate from intelligence. Students must learn to cope with such things as sight and sound distractions that are always present in the classroom, rules, bells, taking turns, standing in line and getting on the bus, for example.

"School readiness is the ability to cope with the school environment physically, socially, emotionally, as well as academically, without undue stress and strain. It is learning with enough energy left over to develop into a well-rounded person," Gibson said. "School readiness also means being self-confident enough so that energy isn't used up with worrying."

Gibson noted that each child has his or her own growth rate and needs to develop at that rate. Those forced into school before they are ready are good candidates for future problems because the younger grades are the foundation for all that is learned later, she said.

"(A student) should not have to fail just to prove he is not ready for formal schoolwork," she explained. "The child who is pushed into academic instruction before he is mature enough to cope with academic tasks may be affected the rest of his life for this one mistake in timing."

The kindergarten year is pivotal, she said, because some youngsters need more time to grown before beginning formal academic training. Physical, social, emotional and language development all play a part.

"It takes a very mature 5-year-old to cope and learn consistently in kindergarten," she said.

Gibson urged parents whose children are not pre-registered or who did not respond to a district-wide survey requesting names of kindergarten-age children, contact her at her office in Carver Educational Center before June 11. She can be reached there at 665-2376.

Reagan visiting Parris Island

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reporters were advised to wear insect repellent during President Reagan's visit to a mosquito-plagued marsh where Marine Corps recruits clamber over obstacles called the Monkey Bridge, the A Frame and the Slide for Life.

The obstacles — arrangements of logs, ropes and cables averaging as much as 35 feet high — are part of a 12-obstacle "Confidence Course" at the Parris Island Marine Recruit Depot near Beaufort, S.C.

After 20 minutes on the course, where visitors are strongly urged to come equipped with insect repellent, the president's schedule today called for him to speak to about 200 graduates who have completed the Corps' 11-week recruit training course.

He was to fly from Beaufort to Greensboro, N.C., later in the day to speak at a fund-raising affair for Rep. James T. royhill, the Republican candidate for the Senate seat being left vacant by the retirement of GOP Sen. John East.

Reagan, who frequently pays tribute to members of the armed forces in his public remarks, lunched with troops at Ft. Myer, Va., on May 17 and laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns in Arlington National Cemetery on May 26, the Memorial Day holiday.

The Marine training site, located on a flat barrier island off the South Carolina coast, is in sharp contrast to the carefully mowed lawns of the national cemetery and the stately, campus-like brick buildings of Ft. Myer.

Although Reagan was inspecting only three of the obstacles on the "Confidence Course," recruits are required to master all 12 at the site used for Marine Corps training since 1915.

"It's designed to build confidence," said Branski, "so the recruit will say to himself, 'Maybe something looks scary, but I can do it without getting hurt.'"

Defense rests in Pelton spy trial

BALTIMORE (AP) — Ronald W. Pelton testified at his espionage trial he was so sure federal agents wanted to recruit him as a counterspy that he told his girlfriend during a break in his interrogation he was involved with the FBI.

The 44-year-old Pelton, who was a National Security Agency technician for 14 years before resigning in 1979, made his statement Tuesday before his attorney rested his case in the U.S. District Court spy trial.

Pelton could be sentenced to life in prison if convicted of charges that he sold secrets to the Soviet KGB intelligence service from 1980 to 1985.

Pelton, the only witness called by the defense, acknowledged he told the FBI he contacted Soviet spies in Washington in January 1980, traveled twice to Vienna, Austria, for extensive debriefings by the Soviets, and accepted $35,000 for disclosing secrets about U.S. eavesdropping on Soviet communications.

His attorney has tried to convince the jury that the admissions were obtained through trickery.

Pelton said that before an FBI agent confronted him the morning of Nov. 24, he had no idea he was suspected of spying.

During the interrogation that day, Pelton said, he was so sure that FBI agent David Faulkner was trying to recruit him that he told his girlfriend he was working undercover for the government and was "involved with the FBI."

Pelton claimed his remark about the FBI was recorded by a clandestine bug placed in the woman's apartment by federal agents.

Mrs. Bonner leaves Moscow for Gorky

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet dissident Yelena Bonner said farewell to friends in Moscow at the end of a six-month respite from internal exile and boarded a train for Gorky to be reunited in isolation with her husband, Andrei D. Sakharov.

Mrs. Bonner, 63, told Western reporters before she left Moscow late Tuesday that she was very tired, but felt much better after undergoing heart surgery and receiving treatment for glaucoma in the West.

She said she was "very happy to be going back to my husband," who has been living in forced exile in Gorky, 250 miles east of Moscow, since 1980.

Sakharov, a renowned physicist who helped develop the Soviet hydrogen bomb, won the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize for his human rights activities and was sent to Gorky for speaking out against the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in December 1979.

Mrs. Bonner said she expected Sakharov to meet her at the Gorky train station if he was granted permission by the KGB secret police. She was to arrive early today on an overnight train, but there was no confirmation of her arrival from Gorky, which is closed to Westerners.

Among the five friends who saw Mrs. Bonner off at the Moscow train station were Robert Arsenault of Washington and Richard Sobol of Cambridge, Mass., who traveled with her from the United States and had hoped to accompany her to Gorky. Soviet authorities refused to allow them to travel to Gorky.

Arsenault said although "it was very sad, she's extremely strong ... and she feels good about going to her husband."

Mrs. Bonner said she and her children, who live in Newton, Mass., had agreed that the children would place a telephone call to Gorky on the first Monday of each month.

The 65-year-old Sakharov and Mrs. Bonner do not have a telephone in Gorky, and they must go to a post office to receive international calls.

Mrs. Bonner said she hopes to be back in Moscow by June 15 to collect some baggage.

Senate passes higher education bill after supporting end to busing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Expressing support for an end to court-ordered school busing in desegregation cases, the Senate has voted to authorize higher education student loans and grants for the next five years.

The non-binding procedural vote on Sen. Jesse Helms' proposal to curb the power of federal judges to order school busing came Tuesday evening before the Senate voted 93-1 to pass the higher education bill.

The higher education bill authorizes $6.5 billion for Pell Grants, direct and guaranteed student loans and other federal programs in the 1987 fiscal year to help financially needy students attend college and graduate school.

The Senate bill cuts $2.1 billion from the $8.6 billion authorized in the current fiscal year and imposes an income eligiblity standard for Pell Grants.

Senators voted 50-45 against tabling the amendment by Helms, R-N.C., to prohibit federal judges from ordering students to ride 15 minutes or five miles past their neighborhood school as part of racial desegregation plans.

"For 15 years, we have had this folly imposed by the courts," Helms said. "For 15 years we have had the courts trying to be a school board. I say enough is enough, and 80 percent of the black parents in this country say the same thing."

Helms, who cast the only negative vote against the education bill, withdrew his amendment after receiving assurances from Republicans on the Judiciary Committee that a similar measure that is being blocked by opponents on the panel would be passed.

TEXAS/REGIONAL

Record number of inmates admitted to Texas prisons

AUSTIN (AP) — The state prison system has admitted record numbers of inmates this year, straining the Texas Department of Correction's resources and the ability of parole officials to control prison populations, officials said.

TDC officials said Tuesday that a 16 percent increase in admissions occurred between January and May this year over the same period last year.

Prison statistics show the TDC took in 12,812 inmates in the first five months this year, up from 10,781 inmates admitted in the same period last year.

Prison spokesman Charles Brown said admissions totaled 9,607 during the first five months of 1983 and 9,683 during that period in 1984.

State criminal justice officials said the record increase in admissions could result from a growing Texas population, tougher attitudes by judges and juries and better police work.

Ron Champion, executive director of the state Criminal Justice Policy Council, told the Austin American-Statesman he would be "shooting in the dark" to pinpoint precise factors behind the growth in admissions.

The nation's second-largest prison system is under federal court orders to reduce the population in existing prisons.

Parole board officials said 11,466 prisoners have been released this year and that 7,913 were freed during the same period last year. About half of those were released each year because they had served the entire portion of their sentence required by law.

The prison population hovered at about 94 percent of its legal capacity, soaring to as high as 94.8 percent this spring. If the system reaches 95 percent capacity, state law and court orders require the early release of inmates.

John Byrd, executive director of the Board of Pardons and Paroles, said the board in February 1985 changed its procedures so inmates with short sentences are reviewed for parole soon after they are admitted to prison.

"That's when we started seeing the (parole) numbers increase fairly substantially," he said.

He said about 65 percent of inmates are sentenced to terms of five years or less, and before the administrative change they were forced to serve the entire sentence, minus "good time" earned in prison.

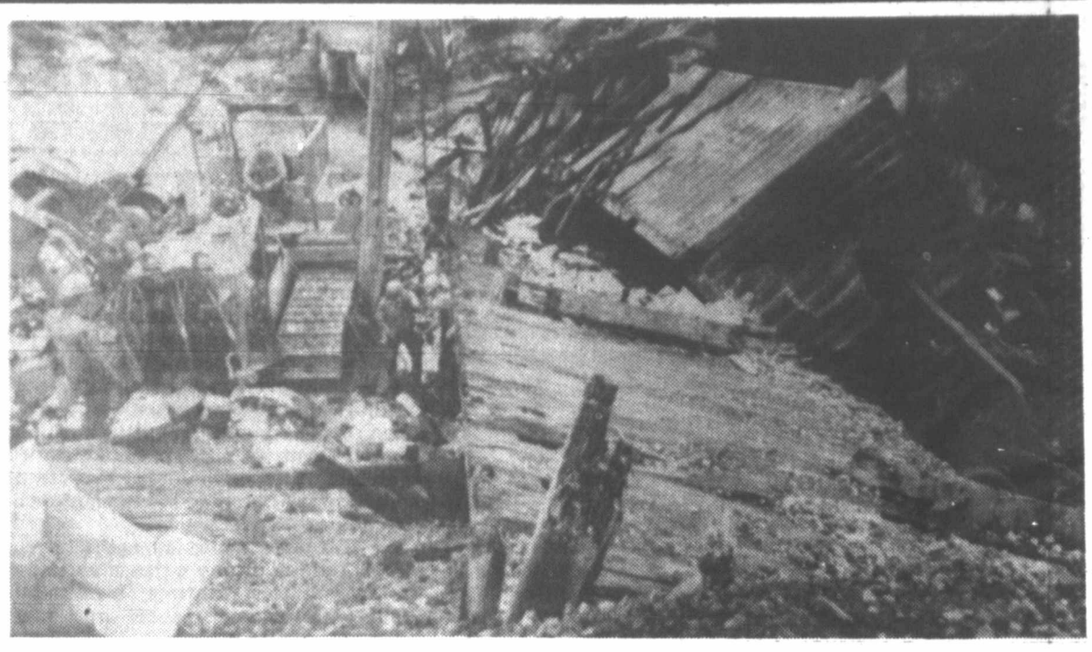

"So we can have a rapid turnaround time on nearly two-thirds of the people coming in the front door," said Byrd. "The real trick is educating the public to the fact that these are not bloodthirsty rapists and murderers. These are non-violent offenders."

The surge in new admissions has created a "big load" for officials in the Diagnostic Center in Huntsville, where inmates are taken before being assigned to one of the 27 prisons across the state, said Phil Guthrie, chief information officer for the Corrections Department.

When the population nears 95 percent capacity, he said, it causes additional hardships because some cells are not in use because they have been emptied for maintenance or repairs.

"Your flexibility on moving people around to keep enemies separate or to provide protective custody is extremely limited," Guthrie said. "The classification people spend most of their time just trying to find a bed to put people in and shifting people around to make room for new folks.

"So it's a continuing pressure on our operation," he said. "A lot of people are working long hours."

Campaign to boost Texas image

AUSTIN (AP) — An advertising and marketing program by Texas officials will counter negative publicity about the state's economic problems and attract new industry, officials said.

Titled, "Texas — Open for Business," the campaign will be funded by $275,000 in state economic development money and up to $600,000 in private contributions, said Jay Kayne, deputy director of the Texas Economic Development Commission.

"We are trying to respond to some of the negative information that has been going around about Texas in the national press," Kayne said Tuesday. "We also want to explode some Texas myths, like Texas is all oil and cattle.

"We don't think that a lot of people know that 8 percent of the employment in the Dallas-Fort Worth area is directly related to the aviation business," he said. "That's a good relocation area for folks in that business."

He said Bonner Inc., an Austin marketing and communications company, was selected by the state agency to develop and coordinate the 14-month campaign.

Private fund-raising will be the responsibility of the Texas Alliance for the Next Economy, a Dallas-based non-profit group headed by Harden Wiedemann, a former director of the state Economic Development Commission.

Kathy Bonner, marketing company owner, said advertisements targeting certain industries that may expand or move to Texas will appear in business and trade magazines and on television this fall.

She said the defense industry, desk-top computer publishing industry and other manufacturers with employment and growth potential will be targets of the campaign.

"If we can diversify the state's economy, we will no longer get caught and allow oil and gas prices to pull our economy down," she told the Austin American-Statesman.

The private Dallas group could reach its fund-raising goal this summer.

Reading is an adventure

Reading must seem like a such a passive pastime. Viewed from a distance, the reader must look almost like a stone, brows knit together in concentration with only the occasional turn of a page to signal the reader is still alive.

That is, if the reader is committed to what he is doing. Some people scan through words while still very much aware of the world around then. But not me, when I begin to read, I become one with the characters of the book. To me, reading is anything but passive. Instead I find it as exhilarating as a desperate race against time as the heroine dashes through the forest to find her lost love. Or reading may be as passionate as a steamy scene from one of the popular romance novels. I may find reading to be heartbreaking, when a mother discovers her child is suffering from a fatal disease, or uplifting as the personal experiences recounted in Guideposts magazine.

No, I personally find reading an adventure, as long as the author knows his craft well enough to give my imagination a foundation to begin on. I'll take care of the rest.

My family has joked about my reading since I was old enough to read. They think it's quite hilarious to find me pouring over can labels in the kitchen. They also like to carry on some ridiculous conversation about me in my presence, because they know I'm oblivious to my surroundings when my nose is buried in a book.

As a child, I read every Reader's Digest that ever crossed our threshold. Mother also ordered the Reader's Digest condensed books every three months. It was a battle to see who got to read the books first, me or my parents. I think I usually won, because they knew it wouldn't be long before I was finished with the entire collection.

A couple of days ago I ran across Walter Farley's Black Stallion series at the Pampa library. Talk about bringing back memories. Those books fit me perfectly when I was 9 to 11 years old. They were the way I could combine my love for horses and reading.

I'm probably part of the first generation of children raised on television, but I can say truthfully that television didn't begin to have the impact on me that books have over the years. I still prefer a good book to a good television program. I think there's a place for both in our lives.

I'm reminded of a recent article I read in TV Guide about a study done on how television has affected people, in comparison with how people entertained themselves in the past. I was particularly impressed with how television has helped make us into a instant gratification society. For example, do you think anyone today would sit for seven hours to listen to two politicians debate the issues? Pooh... we're doing good to give opposing sides five minutes each on "Face the Nation," or some such news show.

We like to just sit while the television provides everything — sound, action, pictures, color. Nothing is left to our imagination. It's all laid out for us on the big screen platter and we greedily lap it up and ask for more, more, more.

I'll admit that some books are just as much pap as television, but I have to admit that I have more respect from some genres, specifically romance and western adventure novels, than I did previously. Though many of thesee are products of a novel mill with about a week's worth of thought put in them, many of these books are laced with historical facts, plot and character development that I find amazing.

We'll all find a bit of leisure time this summer, and we'll fill it with any number of things to do.

You know what I'll be doing this summer? I'm going to Europe and back again, sailing the seas on a high masted frigate. Or I may go to the silver mines of Colorado. I may participate in the American Revolution or be one of the first to discover new planets on a long space voyage. I may learn more about how the Romans lived and how their social structure differed from our own. Or I may follow the path of a runaway slave down the Underground Railroad during the Civil War.

And you know how much these trips are going to cost me? Not a cent! And you know why... because they all come wrapped up in the covers of a book.

Oil industry leaders report producers need tight budgets

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Wildcatter Dan Abbott says he won't dig in and wait until tumbling oil prices regain their balance but plans instead to strike out and drill new wells while costs are low.

"I'm branching out. I am getting aggressive," said Abbott, a member of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association meeting in Fort Worth.

Although few other members exhibited Abbott's optimism Tuesday, the tactics of survival during the lean times predicted for the industry were discussed during a seminar held on the final day of the group's 40th annual convention.

Oil producers can survive the present pricing doldrums by cutting costs, sticking to basics and planning carefully, the panel industry leaders said.

Dallas oilman Jim Hunt urged producers to reduce oil lease housekeeping costs.

"Now is not the time to paint the tanks and mend the fences," he said.

Richard Langdon, moderator of the seminar, told the audience of about 150 that current oil and gas surpluses probably will not dissipate until the end of the decade.

In the meantime, gas prices will remain depressed and oil prices will be unstable, bringing more hard times for independents.

"At the rate things are going, it seems like there's only going to be three oil companies left in business: Exxon, Shell and the FDIC," Langdon said.

Abbott agreed that prices will gradually increase over the next five years, and he said that's what makes exploration an attractive option for longterm profits.

"We don't intend to make any money (during the next five years). We intend to make a living," Abbott said.

By the end of the decade, if the domestic industry recovers, Abbott said he will be in a comfortable market position.

Abbott said he reduced producing operations in late 1984 and in 1985 in order to free capital for exploration because he expected the price downturn. He plans to drill in South Texas and Southern Louisiana as well on Indian land in Utah and Wyoming.

He conceded that present industry conditions are "belt tightening times. More executives will have to do more to preserve their companies."

Despite spiraling rig counts and dropping prices, Abbott said he thinks the domestic oil industry will weather the present oil glut.

"This business has so much interest and romance attached to it. People will stay with it," Abbott said.

Funeral industry probe asked

AUSTIN (AP) — An in-depth inquiry into operations of the Texas funeral services industry and their dealings with bereaved kinsmen of the dead has been asked by the Cosumers Union.

"We will cooperate in any way we can," said James Broussard, chairman of the State Board of Morticians. "We think we earnestly try to do our job. We don't feel we have anything to hide."

The legislative probe of the state agency was demanded Tuesday by Carol Barger, Southwest regional director of the consumers organization.

"It is obvious the board won't clean up its own act," said Ms. Barger. "It is time for the Legislature to act to reform the board. Reforming the funeral law has not been enough."

The probe request went to state Rep. Brad Wright, R-Houston, chairmaan of the House Public Health Committee.

Wright said he felt there was "some sentiment for serious reform" in the regulatory board for funeral directors. "My personal preference would be for a board dominated by public members."

Ms. Barger's request was backed up by Grady Baskin Jr., a Tyler insurance executive who was a public member of the board for six years. In 1984, Baskin made a personal survey of 24 Texas funeral homes and said he found only one in full compliance with the law.

Ms. Barger said her call for an investigation was sparked in part by a recent report by Cable News Network, which used hidden television cameras in visiting Texas funeral homes.

"The entire CNN report and other evidence demonstrates misrepresentations and high pressure sales tactics to bereaved families and other abuses of the law are all too common in Texas," said Ms. Barger. "Also, all too rare is any enforcement of the rules, or discipline to violators by the State Board of Morticians."

Ms. Barger said the CNN report shows "the funeral industry's continuing blatant disregard for the law."

She said the report shows funeral home employees misrepresenting the preservative qualities of embalming, misrepresenting the protective capabilities of caskets and liners and failing to provide customers with a price list.

In 1979, the Sunset Advisory Commission recommended abolishing the board and giving the duties to some other state agency. The Legislature did not phase out the board but did change its makeup from six funeral directors and three public members to five funeral directors and four public members.

Ms. Barger said the Consumers Union made a survey of Texas funeral homes in 1985 and found that 58.3 percent were still not in compliance with the law.

Mattox puts Christian boys' home on the auction block

FOREST HILL, Texas (AP) — A Christian boys' home whose director is trying to avoid obtaining a state license has been put on the auction block by the state attorney general's office.

Most of the buildings at Community Baptist Church are scheduled to be sold at a public auction July 1 at the Tarrant County Courhouse in Fort Worth.

The home's director, the Rev. W.N. Otwell, has resisted efforts by the state to force him to obtain a license for the home. Attorney General Jim Mattox authorized the sale and papers from Sheriff Don Carpenter notifying the church were mailed last week.

Otwell said the proposed sale includes the home's auditorium, educational building, apartment complex, residences for the children and the church office.

"This will be the first church building sold in a sheriff's sale for practicing faith in Jesus Christ," he said. "That's the first case I know of in America."

Otwell said $100-per-day fines assessed against him, his wife and seven others operating the home without a license now total more than $100,000. The home has been put up for sale to pay the fine.

Although Otwell said he would not protest the sale, he doesn't plan to move.

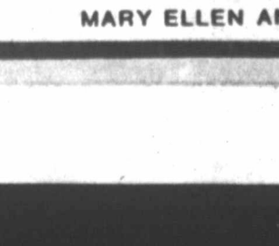

"We're going to stay right here," Otwell said. "We're going to see what (Mattox) is going to do."

Mattox has said he does not want to force the home to close and only is trying to make it adhere to state requirements that it be licensed.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Let market determine mail diplomas' validity

In an effort to protect us all from the menace of "diploma mills" and those who hold "fake" college degrees, Florida Congressman Claude Pepper has introduced a bill that would significantly increase the penalties for violating federal mail-fraud statutes.

What do fake college degrees have to do with mail fraud? As one of Pepper's aides explains: "It is not illegal to buy a degree. Bt it is illegal when the degree is put to fraudulent purposes" — as when someone uses the U.S. mail to get himself a job on the strength of that degree. Under current law, the maximum penalty for fraudulent use of the mail is a $1,000 fine and five years in prison. Under Pepper's bill, penalties would be increased to $10,000 and 10 years.

The problem is that there are two completely different types of degrees unjustifiably lumped together, both in Pepper's bill and in almost all public discussion of this issue. The first is a counterfeit degree from a major school like Stanford or the University of California. The second is a degree granted by a so-called "diploma mill" — a school whose graduation requirements are different, and generally easier, than at most institutions of higher learning.

The first type of "fake degree" is really fraudulent. If an individual has never attended a school and has not fulfilled its graduation requirements, he is not entitled to pass himself off as the holder of a degree from that school. If he does, he should be held liable for damages, to the school and to individuals or organizations he has defrauded.

The second type of "fake degree" is not fake at all. It certifies just what any other degree certifies: that the holder has fulfilled the requirements of the granting institution.

These requirements are different in different schools, of course. Stanford requires a period of residency and the completion of a certain number of classroom hours in certain specified courses of instruction. Some "diploma mills," by contrast, require no more than that the applicant pay a fee, certify that he has acquired a certain amount of professional experience in the field in which he desires a degree, and, sometimes, that he turn in a research paper.

Clearly, though both Stanford and the "diploma mill" call their degrees by the same name, the two are not identical or interchangeable. But is this really surprising? Does anyone believe that because both BMW and Yugo call their products "automobiles" they are identical and interchangeable? Does anyone believe that because both Anheuser-Busch and the Anchor Brewing Company of San Francisco call their products "beer" they are therefore identical and interchangeable?

More important, does anyone (with the possible exception of Claude Pepper) really believe that government should set the standard of excellence all businesses must attain to avoid being prosecuted and jailed for "defrauding" the public? Surely it is obvious that some people prefer Budweiser to Anchor Steam, while others prefer Anchor Steam. Some prefer Yugos rather than BMWs, while others would make the opposite choice.

It should be just so obvious that some employers have found graduates of "diploma mills" highly satisfactory and even exemplary, while more than one public school system has discovered that graduates of fully accredited, traditional four-year colleges have held jobs as school teachers without being able to read, write and calculate as well as the average high school graduate.

Fraud is one thing. Offering a different product is another thing entirely. Government should let the market determine which schools' degree will attain the greatest acceptance.

Free political debate on trial

Anonymous political advocacy has played an important role in American history. Besides mobilizing opposition to the British crown, it shaped the government of the new republic: The authors of the Federalist Papers — James Madison, Alexander Hamilton and John Jay — signed them with the pseudonym "Publius." But in Illinois, anonymous leaflets aimed at affecting the outcome of elections or ballot referenda are illegal.

So Margaret White learned after she distributed leaflets urging write-in votes in an election for State's Attorney of downstate White County. Her endorsement of one James R. Conley was not warmly received: He filed a complaint with the state board of elections. It ruled that she had violated the state law requiring that such leaflets carry the name and address of those who put them out.

The trial court made short work of the case, dismissing it on the grounds that the law violates the First Amendment. But the state has appealed to the Illinois Supreme Court. If it wins, there or in the U.S. Supreme Court, it will do real harm to political debate, which sometimes obliges the vulnerable either to conceal their activities or to remain silent.

The state's case doesn't look like a strong one. In 1960, as the trial court noted, the Supreme Court struck down a Los Angeles ordinance banning the distribution of any unidentified leaflets. "There are times and circumstances when States may not compel members of groups engaged in the dissemination of ideas to be publicly identified," it declared. "Identification and fear of reprisal might deter perfectly peaceful discussions of public matters of importance."

That should settle the issue. But the state of Illinois appeals to a later decision, Buckely vs. Valeo, in which the court upheld a federal requirement that political candidates disclose the names of all their financial contributors. While conceding the potential discouragement to some contributors, the court said that in this instance the government's stake in preventing corruption outweighed the danger. That same purpose, argues the state, is behind this law.

But this case puts too much strain on the court's weak reasoning. The supposed risk of corruption posed by anonymous campaign contributions is plain. An elected official may in effect sell his vote to the highest bidder, unbeknownst to the voters. Even that prospect is farfetched except for very large donations, and it could be eliminated as well by public pressure for disclosure as by federal laws.

But only in the most unusual cases would any comparable danger exist for anonymous leaflets. Their usual purpose is not to conceal graft but to protect against retribution. And the fear of harassment, the Supreme Court says, is grounds for permitting anonymity, even in the case of political contributions. It exempted the Socialist Workers Party from disclosure rules because of the danger that they would discourage potential donors.

No one doubts that this kind of secrecy may be abused, but the First Amendment doesn't allow the government to restrict expression anytime it has a halfway plausible pretext. If a state can force leafleters to reveal their identity, there is no reason it couldn't impose similar rules on street-corner orators. If it can do that, then the right of free speech loses much of its meaning.

The apparent point of the law is not to promote honest elections, as the state says, but to inhibit citizens from exercising their right to express their opinions. Some people have reason to fear the consequences of having their views known — losing a job or a contract, antagonizing neighbors, attracting unwelcome attention from powerful officeholders or criminals.

To strip these people of the protection afforded by anonymity can only discourage them from participating in the electoral process as fully as they would like. By stifling free political debate, it deprives democracy of a precious asset.

Credit card economy theft

Are you getting mugged every month?

Inflation is in reverse; prices actually going down.

The prime lending rate is 8.5 percent.

How come your credit card company is charging you interest at an average rate of almost 19 percent!

Self-government without self-discipline won't work. Excesses, inevitably, eventually are their own undoing.

If credit card companies do not voluntarily respect you enough to play fair, they will be forced to.

Why invite further government snoopervision, further legislative regulation?

If government has to put a lid on a selfish few, free enterprise will be that much less free for everybody.

That some businessmen will loudly beat their breasts and condamn government bureaucracy for its "anti-business bias."

This administration, of all administrations, wants to get government out of the business of business, but it cannot legitimatize pickpockets.

There is a new organization in Oshkosh, Wis., called Corporations for Corporate Responsibility seeking to shame or otherwise motivate corporate America to measure up its obligation of morality, fairness and self-discipline.

If the credit card company encourages you to buy now and take your time repaying — read the fine print.

Interest rates on credit cards — 18 to 21 percent — are usurious.

If you have an unpaid balance on your credit card it would pay you to go to a bank and borrow money at 7 percent to pay off that 20-percent obligation.

But, the credit card companies argue, the interest you pay is "tax deductible."

Yet, allowing for that, even if you are in the 50 percent tax bracket so that your interest payment is cut in half, you are still getting clobbered by the card company.

If there is a thousand-dollar balance on your Visa or MasterCard account, the after-tax interest rate is still a hundred dollars a year.

Keep that extra thousand dollars in the bank and you net an after-tax return of $35.

In other words, paying off your credit card balance with a bank loan will save you $65 a year.

Plastic money has created a kind of credit-card economy which demands self-discipline of all of us.

Hard times blues playing in Texas

TYLER, Texas (NEA) — "We're hurting and it's getting worse," says Louis Early as he glumly surveys a warehouse floor covered with scores of unmarketable drill bits for exploratory oil rigs.

Early is field salesman for Dresser Industries, a Dallas-based firm that is one of the nation's largest suppliers of oil field equipment. At the peak of the oil boom in the late 1970s and early 1980s, he serviced 60 rigs here in east Texas — but now that figure has dwindled to eight.

A typical exploratory rig provides jobs for 15 blue-collar workers, with five-member crews on three shifts. "If there's no rigs running, there's no men working," notes Early.

In February, Texas' unemployment rate reached 8.4 percent after an unprecedented increase of two percentage points from the previous month.

A few miles to the north, Edwin D. Arnold, president of the Continental Drilling Co. solemnly ponders his future following the collapse of a firm that began business in 1980 with 22 modern oil rigs.

Today, says Arnold, "we're not even trying to operate any of 'em." Indeed, the company has sought court protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code.

To the east, in nearby Kilgore and Longview, oil field supply stores have gone out of business. To the west, in the more distant Permian Basin, the spot market price of west Texas Intermediate crude oil has plunged from $26.30 per barrel at the beginning of the year to as low as $12.00 per barrel in recent weeks.

Houston, San Antonio and Austin are atop the list of U.S. cities that experienced the sharpest declines in home construction starts last year.

Texas, which for decades parlayed a larger-than-life image into a reputation for unstoppable growth, now faces the prospect of an economic contraction so severe that it could produce the state's worst recession in almost half a century.

Although plunging oil and gas prices are the principal cause of that economic slump, the growth of high-technology industries that was supposed to propel the state into the post-petroleum era has been indefinitely stalled.

In the Austin area, the high-tech growth that was predicted after the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. selected the city as headquarters for its industry-wide research consortium has never materialized.

In the Dallas area, almost 7,000 semiconductor workers were laid off last year by Texas Instruments, Mostek and other firms. Elsewhere in the state, Motorola, National Semiconductor and other companies also have slashed their payrolls in the wake of an industry-wide slump.

But it is oil that has driven the economy in east Texas (and elsewhere in the state) ever since 1930, when the Daisy Bradford No. 3 exploratory rig produced the first evidence of a vast underground reservoir of petroleum.

Constantly rising oil prices during the past decade led some to believe that the increase would continue indefinitely — or at least until crude oil sold for as much as $70 per barrel. During one four-year period, from 1978 through 1981, the number of active drilling rigs doubled.

A substantial portion of the expanded activity was attributable to "rhinestone wildcatters" — speculators who had no experience searching for oil but were convinced they could get rich quickly.

At the height of the oil boom, in late 1981, there were more than 4,500 active rigs throughout the country. Today, there are fewer than 1,200 rigs operating. The rhinestone wildcatters have been driven out, but many experienced entrepreneurs also have

Robot becomes police officer in Addison

ADDISON, Texas (AP) — This town's newest police officer was sworn in by Mayor Jerry Redding during a special ceremony at Bent Tree Country Club. His first official duty was to go to Trinity Christian Academy to be photographed for next year's city calendar.

It was an extraordinary beginning for an out-of-the-ordinary officer. He's 5-foot-5 and weighs 200 pounds. It takes two Sam Browne belts to circumscribe his 56-inch wasit. He wears a badge, carries a .45 caliber automatic. But his weapon is unloaded.

This rookie is a robot.

They're calling him APD2. APD is acronym for Addison Police Department. There is no APD1. Crime prevention Officer Gary Taylor says the "2" is a shameless ripoff from R2D2 of "Star Wars" fame.

"We'd like to have a contest in the schools to pick an official name for him," says Taylor. "But school's almost out, so he may be APD2 for a while."

APD2 was born and raised in Atlanta by 21st Century Robotics. Rather than leasing as most departments do, Addison bought him for $17,750. "They were amazed we were making an outright purchase," says Taylor, adding that the funds came from the hotel-motel tax revenues.

In the end, it's possible that APD2 will bite the hand that bought him. One of his assignments will be to roam Addison's bars, asking patrons just how sober they really are. He doesn't expect them to get the answer all by themselves. He has a TV camera in his head and a screen on his chest, so they can look themselves over before they answer.

That, of course, could be provocative, says Taylor, adding: "Someone might put a foot through his screen."

When he's not beeping through the bars, APD2 will be assigned to rounds in local schools and hospitals, spreading cheer and tips about crime-prevention.

"He's a public relations tool, but you can do a lot of good with him," says Taylor.

When he isn't traveling in his custom fiberglass trailer, APD2 moves about on four wheels and carries videotape equipment capable of demonstrating 20 warning signs of drunken driving. Taylor provides the voice and guidance commands with a radio transmitter.

Taylor says APD2 goes over pretty well with most children, although some can be intimidated. Daphne Gray walks into the station with her 4-year-old son Billy. She's come over from Fort Worth to pay a traffic ticket.

APD2 rolls over and greets Billy. Billy clings to his mother's neck, peers at APD2 from the corners of his eyes, refuses to speak.

"Don't you know I'm your friend?" asks APD2 plaintively.

No response.

Ah, well.

APD2 came from the factory with a repertoire of one-liners and knock-knock jokes designed to put people at ease. (Knock knock. Who's there? Dishes. Dishes who? Dishes the FBI; open up.)

Crews used mules to position first Goddess, woman says

AUSTIN (AP) — An 87-year-old Round Rock woman said mule power was harnessed when the first Goddess of Liberty was raised atop the state Capitol and she's ready to tell the Texas Army National Guard how her late father helped accomplish the task.

Bertha Johnson said she knows some methods the state National Guard didn't try in its unsuccessful attempts to lower the new Goddess of Liberty atop the Capitol.

"When I heard they were having trouble, I tried to call a radio station talk show," she said. "I wanted to tell them how they did it the first time around."

Her father, the late Ernst G. Kamp, was a member of the crew that hoisted the original zinc goddess into place in 1888.

Kamp, a carpenter and artisan, helped build an enormous wooden trough around the statue on the Capitol grounds.

The National Guard tried to use a helicopter to lift the new 16-foot aluminum statue, an exact replica of the original zinc goddess. The original, weather-beaten statue was taken down from the building in November.

"I'm glad people are interested in history again," she told the Austin American-Statesman, "but sometimes the people who were there remember things differently."

Ms. Johnson, a resident of the Trinity Lutheran Nursing Home in Round Rock, said the crew used mules to hoist the statue to the granite summit, using a block and tackle.

"People have said they brought it up in pieces," she said. "Can you imagine four or even five men holding her giant head while it was being soldered on? My dad said she was brought up in one piece."

Even after she was enshrined above the town and given a coat of paint, the goddess still lacked a layer of gold leaf on the lone star she brandished.

Kamp, an 18-year-old German immigrant impassioned by his newly adopted Texas, had a labor of love, Ms. Johnson said.

The muscular, 6-foot blond fearlessly scaled the Capitol dome and shimmied up her side. Standing on her upraised arm, he painstakingly applied the gold leaf.

"He was proud to do it for his country," Ms. Johnson said. "He loved Texas. This is where he lived, and this is where he's laid to rest. Not many people ever got as close to the Lady — that's what we always called her — as my father did. We could talk about her for hours. I suppose that's where I got my love for her."

"Daddy used to take my hand and walk with me on Saturday night across the Congress Avenue bridge, which was at that time made out of iron," Ms. Johnson said.

White, Hobby tour Valley settlements

LAS MILPAS, Texas (AP) — Ana Maria Redondo fears rain.

Everytime it pours, the unpaved street outside her home becomes a quagmire and threatens to flood her home in this colonia, an unincorporated subdivision that has no drainage system.

Some houses here also lack inside plumbing and electricity.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Redondo told Gov. Mark White she wished something could be done about the drainage problem.

"Everytime it rains it's like this," she said, pointing to the muddy street that had numerous puddles. "When it was like this and the children were in school, the buses wouldn't come and we had to take them to school."

White, joined by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and members of the Texas Water Development Board toured two colonias in Brownsville Tuesday morning and Las Milpas, southeast of McAllen, in the afternoon.

They heard from residents in the colonias who said they were tired of living in substandard conditions. The elected officials promised to help."So long as the people live here in this type of condition no person in Texas should be happy about that. We should be working to improve the conditions here, " White said as he stood outside Mrs. Redondo's home.

The Texas Water Development Board has pledged $215,000 for a study which will eventually make the Texas Water Plan's long-term, low-interest loans available to bring water and sewers to the colonias.

The study, expected to be completed by November, will identify which entities can provide the water and sewer service because the unincorporatdd colonias are not eligible for direct loans.

In the Rio Grande Valley, an estimated 135 colonias are home to about 100,000 people.

The cost to improve about 29 of the colonias is estimated at $40 to $45 million, according to Valley Interfaith, a coalition of Valley churches which has worked to improve living conditions for the poor.

White and Hobby have pledged to the coalition that they would work to get $100 million in state monies to help improve the colonias.

"We're talking millions and millions of dollars if we don't (improve colonias) when you look at the wasted opportunities in the lives of these young children," White told reporters in Brownsville. "There's no reason to turn our backs on the opportunities of these people and when we deprive people of adequate water and adequate sewers and adequate schools then we've lost those opportunities."

As White and Hobby walked the muddy streets, residents told them that many people relied on water in ditches for drinking, cooking and bathing.

"We have a responsiblity to get the sewage out of the streets and get the water into your homes," Hobby told a crowd of about 150 that had gathered outside a home in the Cameron Park colonia outside of Brownsville.

"We're going to continue to see that people are going to be given humane living conditions," White told the same crowd.

White, who is seeking reelection, also talked about the controversial education reform.

Gramm, senators wind up 'tough' talks with Mexicans

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of U.S. congressmen and their Mexican counterparts agreed to disagree after four days of frank discussions described as "tough" by Sen. Phil Gramm, who chaired the U.S. Senate delegation.

The meeting was the 26th annual session of the U.S.-Mexico Interparliamentary Union, held this year in Colorado Springs, Colo. The Mexican delegation met Tuesday with President Reagan. Gramm called the White House session cordial.

"I think the Mexican delegates left very satisfied that we had had a frank discussion, that there are a lot of things we don't agree on, but that our interest springs from our concerns about ourselves, in cases where we have joint interests, and about them," said Gramm, R-Texas.

Gramm said the session with the Mexicans came "in the wake of one of the most bitter and contentious periods in American-Mexican relations in the post-World War II period."

Last month, U.S. officials testifying at a Senate hearing accused Mexican officials of being corrupt and ineffective. Mexico responded by filing a complaint with the State Department.

A White House spokesman said the hearing was not discussed at the meeting with Reagan, but Gramm said the 24-member Mexican delegation had arrived in Colorado still unhappy about the allegations.

"I emphasized from the first day in my opening address that it should come to no surprise to anybody that there is corruption involving drug trafficking," Gramm said. "Anytime you've got that much money, you're going to corrupt people, so it shouldn't come as any surprise, and what is relevant is what can we do about it in working together."

The Mexicans, Gramm said, "have this view that a hearing held about Mexico, about matters in Mexico, represented intrusion into their sovereignty."

He said he told the Mexicans the U.S. position was that any subject of relevance to the United States is appropriate for congressional review.

He said he was able to tell the Mexicans that the U.S. government would supply them with information it has concerning Mexican corruption "and let them decide what was appropriate to do with it."

"So I think overall it was a very productive meeting, though it was a tough meeting and a very contentious meeting at times," Gramm said.

Gramm said the session also included discussion of illegal immigration and Mexico's debt situation. He said he told the Mexicans that the United States does not think Mexico will be able to meet its obligations without "some dramatic changes in their economic policy."

Houston okays death penalty for dogs

HOUSTON (AP) — Owners of vicious dogs — Beware.

The Houston City Council unanimously approved Tuesday a get-tough proposal that can mean death to a dog that attacks someone — even if the canine is a first offender.

Council members were reacting to a recent string of attacks by vicious dogs in the area, authorities said.

"Clearly, from the complaints we're getting, there are people who have dogs that are attacking people," said Dr. James Haughton, director of the city's Health and Human Services Department.

Haughton said he was surprised the final version of the proposal drafted by city lawyers would assess the death penalty against dogs the first time they inflict serious injuries.

"That's what I wanted when I started, but I was told that was a little too summary," he said.

The proposal allows the city to deem a dog dangerous if the animal inflicts serious injury during a first offense or if they bite people twice in a year. The proposal does not single out a specific breed of dog.

Before a dog would be lethally injected, owners would be allowed to go before a health official to make the city prove the animal is dangerous, officials said.

Assistant City Attorney Paul Bibler said the definition of serious bodily injury singles out only the most severe cases, involving life-threatening or permanently disfiguring injuries.

The ordinance exempts police dogs and guard dogs doing their duty and gives dogs a break if provoked.

Animal control officials say they investigate about 2,500 animal bites each year. They keep tabs on dogs that have bitten more than once by tattooing first offenders.

The proposal is the second get-tough measure proposed since last fall in the wake of several attacks by pit bulldogs. Last December, the city council increased the maximum fine for owners who let dangerous dogs run loose from $200 to $1,000.

The Angleton City Council in April outlawed dogs that are at least half pit bull. But the council reversed itself two weeks ago, saying it would be tough to enforce and singled out only one potentially vicious breed of dog.

Meanwhile, Conroe city lawyers are drafting a proposed pit bull ban for that city. Montgomery County has reported many of the most serious dog attacks involving pit bulls, including the mauling death of a 4-year-old boy in February 1985.

Mexicans festive about soccer

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Thousands streamed into the streets in a carnival-like euphoria Tuesday to celebrate Mexico's 2-1 victory over Belgium in their first game in the World Cup soccer tournament.

Cheering "Me-xi-co" and "Gana-mos," Spanish for "we won," crowds ran up and down the wide Reforma Boulevard, filled the tier of steps around the base of the Monument to Independence and climbed on its bronze lions and ornate figures.

Cars and pickup trucks filled with flag-waving enthusiasts honked their horns in rhythm to the cheers.

Police said they expected the celebration to go on into the night, possibly until dawn.

"Since Friday they have been starting at about 5 or 6 in the afternoon and going on until the next day," said Gabriel Gomez Alvarado, a police section chief.

Young people commandeered city buses to take them to the celebration at the monument, in the middle of a busy traffic circle on Reforma Boulevard, or drive them down the street, leaning out the doors and windows and standing on top.

A long late afternoon downpour failed to stop the merriment.

"We're here because we're very Mexican. Forward Mexico," said Maricruz Zuniga, an 18-year-old student who had spent the entire morning and the early afternoon, while the game was played, at the Independence column, known as the Angel because of the gold angel on top.

"I'm happy, very happy," Ruben Banda said, his face glowing with joy, a small radio still pressed to his ear right after the game. He listened with others on a bench opposite the monument, set in the middle of a traffic circle at a busy intersection on Reforma.

Gomez Alvarado said about 2,300 police were on duty in Cuauhtemoc, the district where the monument is located.

Police diverted traffic from a 12-block stretch of the normally busy thoroughfare, creating traffic jams on other streets.

At one intersection, young men danced around an old car, hammering out Latin rhythms on simple drums, a bent-up tin can and an old wheel.

"It's very nice what we see here. It's great. They put so many people in these cars," said Gerhard Arends, a West German who was walking down the middle of the closed-off street with friends. The group had come from the island of Norderney, on the German north coast about 100 miles from Hamburg and planned to go to Queretaro, 135 miles (218 kms) northwest of the capital, for West Germany's opening game against Uruguay on Wednesday.

"Manana, Alemania," another in the group told cheering girls coming down the street. "Tomorrow, Germany."

"It's amazing if you imagine how it will be if they win the final," siad Michael Knudsen of Denmark, walking with two other Danes past the Angel.

"We experienced almost the same when Denmark qualified," said Soren Kristensen.

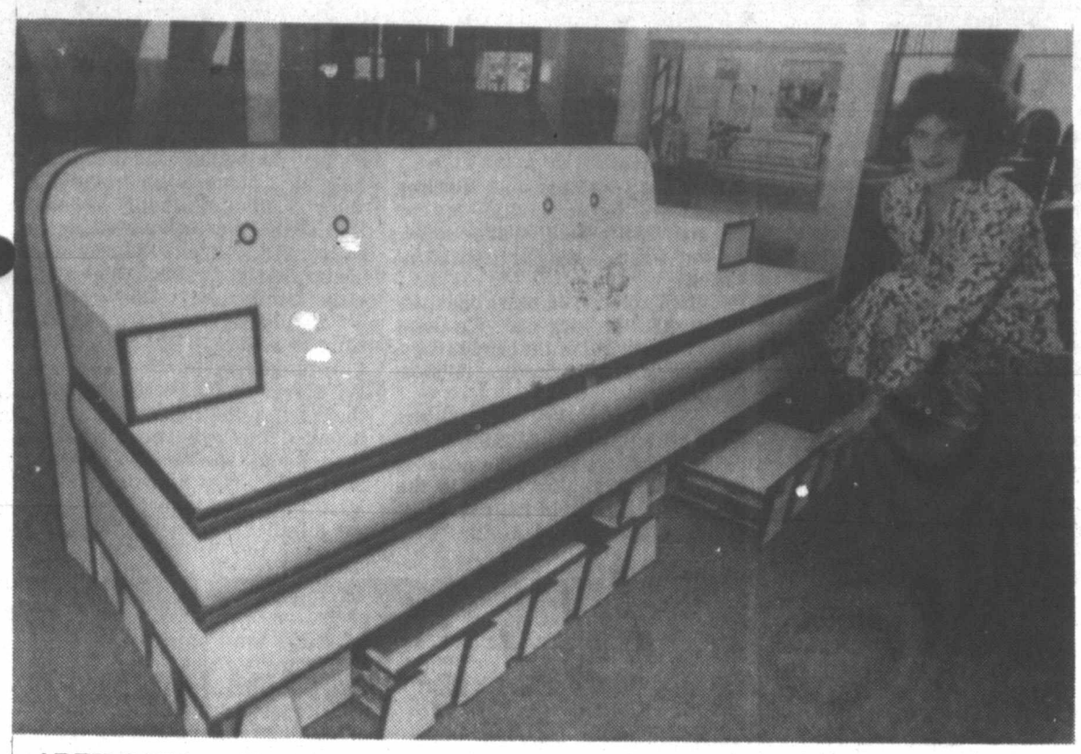

But the other member of the group, Morten Faester, said, "I don't thnk a northern European country will ever experience this kind of warm-blooded emotional thing. It's wonderful."

Lyndon LaRouche's biggest legal challenge in Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Extremist politician Lyndon H. LaRouche Jr. and his organizations face challenges to their fund raising across the country, but nowhere have the fights turned as bitter or posed as much of a threat to his empire as the one in a courtroom here.

A federal grand jury's investigation into allegations of credit card fraud and tax avoidance has brought a blizzard of suits, complaints and public vilification of government officials by LaRouche's followers.

The effort has reaped the LaRouche organization seven separate contempt-of-court findings and massive fines — more than $17 million so far. Each day adds another $45,000 to the total piling up unpaid for 14 months.

"I've never been involved in a case where there was this much grand jury litigation," said Daniel I. Small, assistant U.S. attorney.

"If the intent is to in any way diminish our commitment to the investigation, that won't work," he added. "This office won't be ... intimidated out of a case and won't allow someone to abuse the system to their advantage."

A Boston attorney representing the LaRouche groups, Matthew H. Feinberg, did not return a reporter's telephone calls to discuss the case.

LaRouche's spokesman at his Leesburg, Va., headquarters, Christina Huth, declined repeated invitations to comment.

In documents made public during contempt proceedings, federal prosecutors say the grand jury has found evidence of "an extensive, nationwide pattern" of credit card fraud totaling hundreds of thousands of dollars by entities and individuals associated with LaRouche, a frequent fringe candidate for president.

Prosecutors have said in court that the LaRouche groups allegedly made unauthorized charges of $500, $1,000 or more to the credit card numbers of people whom they had solicited to buy magazines, often at airports.

"It was essentially a way for these entities to get hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars nationwide of, I suppose, interest-free loans, if nothing else," Small said in federal court.

The fines are the result of U.S. District Judge A. David Mazzone's contempt-of-court rulings against four LaRouche-related organizations for refusing to comply with subpoenas for documents.

Officers of two LaRouche organizations were also held in contempt of court, and one, Elliot I. Greenspan, was jailed briefly before agreeing to testify.

Things are not always as they seem

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — An economist who examined the first-quarter gross national product figures stated recently that "there's an imposter out there parading as economic growth."

Like many of his brethren, Robert Christian was surprised by unexpectedly high numbers for GNP during the first three months of the year. Originally reported as 3.2 percent annualized, it was later revised to 3.7 percent.

To Christian and like thinkers, the revision of this statistic — a measure of total output of goods and services — distorted the economic picture, which they felt was one of weakness rather than strength.

"Actually the economy was weaker than expected and therefore GNP was revised up. HUH!?" said Christian in a report to clients of PNC Financial Group, whose affiliates include Philadelphia's Provident National Bank.

"Let me repeat," he said. "The economy was weaker than originally thought and real sales fell even faster than the first GNP estimate had revealed."

Because of this weakness, Christian explained, inventories accumulated. And "if inventories grow they add to GNP and vice versa."

But those inventories, he points out, were hardly a consequence of vigorous production. Instead, they resulted from production schedules being unduly optimistic, so much so that sales forces couldn't get the goods sold quickly.

With few exceptions, most of the components of the gross national product actually declined during the quarter, but were offset by those inventories. "Thus, the apparent improvement in growth is an imposter."

The example illustrates one of the problems that can result from the popularizing of economic statistics devised by economists for the professional use of economists — at least more so for them than for the general public.

A classic example of the distortion capability of numbers results when a great storm, such as a hurricane, brings devastation to a large area of the country — and simultaneously gives a boost to GNP because so many workers, and so many goods and services, and so much money is expended in rebuilding.

Critics of consumer confidence polls, which for the most part have returned optimistic results over the past two years, offer another example. In this one, statistics are given for the nation as a whole, ignoring regional differences.

The problem here is that some parts of the United States, and some areas of the economy, are in almost boom conditions while other areas are in trouble because of low oil prices, farm problems, and depressed metals markets.

One consumer economist and market researcher, Sindlinger & Co., makes a point of reminding clients that averages don't contain the truth for a nation as large as the United States — and that besides, where is Average, U.S.A.?

With each report to clients Sindlinger prints a map showing a vast area of the country — 30 states in all — suffering what he calls a deflation-recession situation, while much of the Southeast, Southwest and Northeast are strong.

Banker accused of murder conspiracy in perjury trial

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Although the indictment reads perjury, a prosecutors has accused a former president of First National Bank in Edinburg of murder conspiracy and insurance fraud in a mysterious death two years ago.

In his opening remarks in state District Court Tuesday, Assistant District Attorney Bill May told jurors he would try to prove that Michael Neff, 39, was involved in a conspiracy with John Bixenstine, a Rio Grande Valley contractor, to claim the proceeds of a $1 million life insurance policy.

May argued that the body found June 11, 1984, in the back of a car at Corpus Christi International Airport was not that of Bixenstine. The body has been identified as the 26-year-old contractor's based on dental records.

Bixenstine had more than $700,000 in loans at the Edinburg bank at the time of his disappearance in November 1983.

May's remarks elicited an unsuccessful call for a mistrial by Neff's attorney, Cass Weiland, who said the statements would have a "prejudicial effect in trying to implicate Mr. Neff in a murder conspiracy" when he is actually charged with perjury.

Although Judge Margarito Garza denied the mistrial motion, he said he would accept Weiland's "continuing" objection to any line of evidence relating to the alleged conspiracy throughout the trial and would keep the mistrial motion in mind.

Neff has been charged with aggravated perjury in connection with statements he made May 2, 1985, before a Nueces County grand jury investigating the death of the man known as John Bixenstine.

The statements referred to in the indictment concerned his association with Bixenstine when Neff was president of the First National Bank in Edinburg. According to the indictment, Neff perjured himself when he said he told an insurance agent not to take out a $1 million life insurance policy on Bixenstine.

The Edinburg bank was the beneficiary of a $1 million Trans-America Occidental Life Insurance policy on Bixenstine. The policy was paid off shortly after the body was discovered and identified as Bixenstine's.

Neff was president of the Edinburg bank for more than two years until his departure in July 1983. He now is president of West Columbia National Bank in Houston.

May's first three witnesses testified to the discovery of the body at the airport in the trunk of a car, which had been parked there for 191 days.

Corpus Christi police Sgt. Hugo Stimmler testified the body was so badly decomposed that conventional methods of identification such as visual or fingerprinting were impossible.

The car was registered to Mission resident Shirley Bixenstine, who had reported her son missing several months before, leading officers to conclude the body was indeed that of John Bixenstine, Stimmler said.

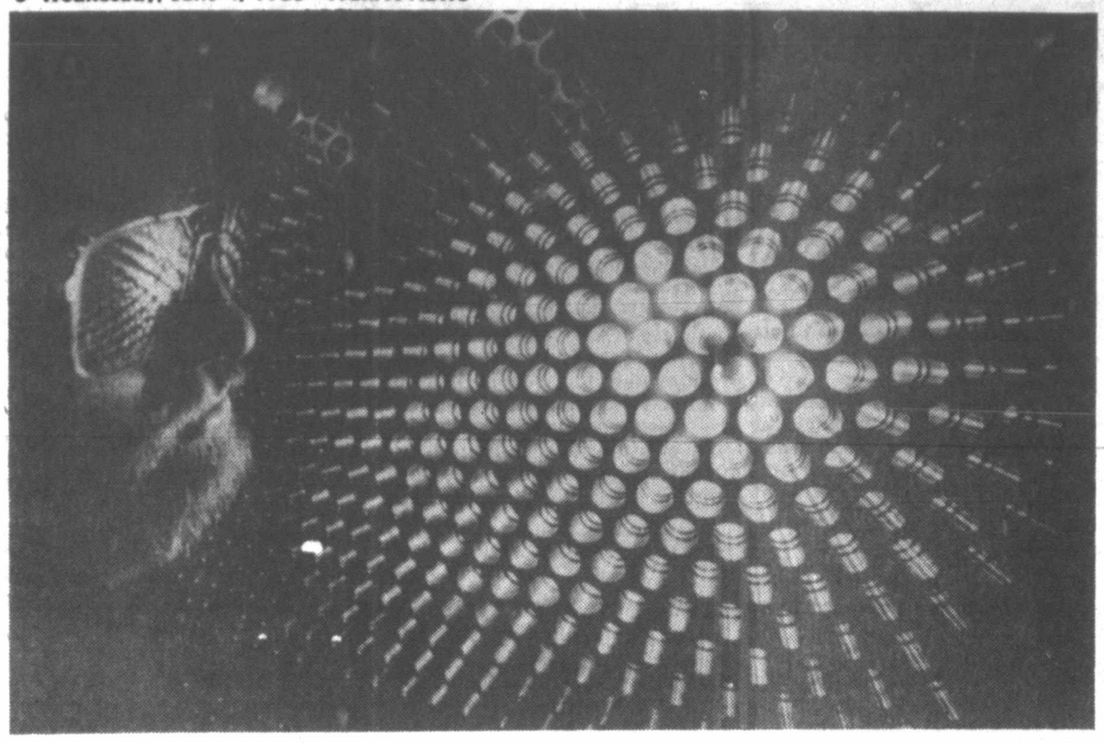

Under cross-examination, Stimmler said Bixenstine owed money to several people. They included a Harlingen plumber who along with another Rio Grande Valley man was accused of Bixenstine's murder before the indictments were dropped after doubt was cast on whether the body in the trunk was Bixenstine's.

Poetry in Navajo language

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — Drawing on a tradition of storytelling and the richness of their tongue, Navajos are beginning to write poetry in the their own language, a 32-year-old Navajo poet says.

"There's a real strong sense of identity, a real strong sense of being Navajo in it," said Luci Tapahonso, a professor of American Studies at the University of New Mexico, who talked with Northern Arizona University students recently about her work.

"That's good," she said, "because until recently, many teachers told young Navajo people not to speak Navajo in class. If they wrote poetry, it was in English. But now they can write both in Navajo and in English."

Ms. Tapahonso says her poetry, some of which deals with contemporary issues "like racism in some of the border towns like Gallup and Farmington (N.M.)," receives attention "even when it is spoken in Navajo in places like Soho (London), in New York City and in West Hollywood.

"People there can recognize the rhythm in it. They know there's poetry there even if they can't understand it," she said.

Ms. Tapahonso says that young Navajos writing in their own language have trouble finding a forum for their work, although contacts among them are increasing.

"We have such a lot to say," she said. "We have a lot of stories, songs and prayers. Even with our sheep, you talk to them because they provide for you and are members of the family.

"Our language is very rich. That lends itself to imagination, to poetry.

"When your car is not working right, you say, in Navajo, 'My car is upset with me. I've done something wrong. My car is mad at me.'

"In English, you talk about putting 'gas' in your car. We don't have a word like that in Navajo, so we talk about feeding it 'mutton stew.'

"The car battery — that's the 'heart' of the car. If the battery goes dead, we say, 'The heart is dead.' The engine to us is the 'head' or 'brain' of the car. A lot of contemporary terms like these, we give in human terms."

Ms. Tapahonso, who is also co-host of a Navajo-language talk show in Albuquerque, N.M., said that she had began writing poetry as a child. She was raised on a sheep and goat farm, she said, amid family storytelling.

"My parents had such a brutal time in school," she said, "that they taught me what to do when I got there. To spare me the pain they suffered from the teachers because they only spoke Navajo, they taught me how to say my Social Security number in English, how to give my (tribal) census number.

Mayor recalls World War II days teaching British to fly

By JOHN PLATERO
Fort Lauderdale News
Sun-Sentinel

PLANTATION, Fla. (AP) — Mayor Frank Veltri would rather talk about aviation than politics — particularly of the days during World War II when he helped British Royal Air Force cadets earn their wings at an airfield near Clewiston.

"Aviation has been the happy times of my life," says Veltri, a retired banker serving his third consecutive term as mayor of this Broward County city. "I always enjoyed flying and it has brought me lifelong friends."

Veltri was one of a cadre of American civilian flight instructors who taught 1,430 British pilots to fly at the British Flying Training School at Riddle Field in Hendry County.

The facility, operated by Riddle McKay Aero College of Miami, was one of six such training schools in the United States that graduated more than 8,000 RAF pilots between 1941 and 1945 under the Lend-Lease Act of 1941.

"They are a friendly, friendly group," says Veltri, 74, who has travelled to England on several occasions for reunions of the British pilots and those who taught them to fly more than 40 years ago.

Veltri learned to fly in his native Nashville, Tenn., in 1938. At the time, he had never taken a plane ride, but was intrigued by the flying machines.

"I went to Berry Field and asked what it would cost to get my license," Veltri recalls. When told the price was $80, he borrowed the money and paid for the entire course.

"There were no refunds. If I hadn't given him the $80 I wouldn't have gone up again after the first flight," he admits.

Veltri got his license, continued flying as a hobby and by the time the war broke out had his commercial ticket. Turned down by the military, he heard the Clewiston flight school needed instructors.

He flew south, practiced some aerobatic flying and was hired as a flight instructor. He joined the flight line in Clewiston in April 1942, where he remained until the program was terminated.

During the three years at Riddle Field, Veltri crashed twice with students. One crash occurred when a PT19 stalled into the Everglades. Neither he nor his student was injured. In the second accident, involving an AT6, the aircraft went down in a cut sugarcane field near Lake Okeechobee. Veltri received a broken nose, which left him with permanently impaired breathing.

After the war, Veltri's enthusiasm for flying continued and he earned instructor, instrument and multi-engine ratings. It was only five years ago that the mayor quit flying.

Cherished mementos Veltri keeps at home include scrapbooks of photos showing cadets he taught to fly.

"They're scattered all over the world," he says of those still living.

When the flying school closed in 1945, Veltri entered the banking field, retiring in 1977 as treasurer and executive vice president of First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Broward in Fort Lauderdale.

In 1955, Veltri and his wife, Genevieve, moved here, where he joined the volunteer fire department and in 1959 he was elected chief. He was elected to the city council in 1968 and in 1975 he won his first term as mayor.

Despite successful banking and political careers, Veltri sounds wistful about not having stayed with aviation.

"When the war was over I applied to all the airlines, but was turned down for being too old," he says.

Crude price is low, but government turning tap off

EDITOR'S NOTE — Long lines at gas stations in the 1973 Arab oil embargo prompted big plans for a national reserve of crude oil. But the history of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve has been as up and down as the price of oil itself. Now, with prices as low as they've been in the project's history, the debate, ironically, is as hot as ever. This is another in a continuing series looking at the impact of the oil price slide.

By SCOTT McCARTNEY
Associated Press Writer

BAYOU CHOCTAW, La. (AP) — Thousands of feet below the swamp slime and cypress stumps of this Louisiana marsh lies what Doug Pulliam considers a $1 billion defense system crucial to national security.

Pulliam is keeper of the cavern here, but he's not in the military and the weapon stored below in a silo 13 times the size of the Washington Monument isn't a missile.

It's oil. Expensive oil.

Since 1978, the Department of Energy has been trying to protect consumers from a foreign oil embargo by purchasing $15 billion worth of crude oil at an average cost of $30 a barrel and piping it into caverns carved out of immense underground salt domes.

By Sunday, the Strategic Petroleum Reserve was to top 500 million barrels of crude.

"This is an insurance policy we did not have in 1975. We can thumb our noses at the Arabs now," said Pulliam, manager of the Bayou Choctaw site for Boeing Petroleum Services Inc., the reserve's contractor.

But by July, with oil priced half what it was six months ago, the faucet will be turned off.

The Reagan administration has decided 502 million barrels — about a 120-day supply — is enough, even though Congress has already made appropriations toward a goal of a 750 million-barrel reserve.

Far from the 36-inch pipes and gray wellheads of salt dome storage caverns, a debate has continued in Congress over what to do with the reserve in these days of cheaper oil.

With deficit reduction the name of the game, the administration has said, the country is better off using the money set aside for the reserve to decrease the national debt.

Besides, since foreign oil imports are down from the levels of the 1970s, a smaller reserve meets the original goal of a 90-day supply, officials argue.

But with oil prices depressed and the international arena sometimes unstable, some congressmen have argued, now is the time to take advantage of the favorable conditions and buy crude. Last week Congress' auditing agency, the General Accounting Office, agreed.

"It makes no sense that the U.S. forgo this opportunity to increase our long-run security and add to the reserves," Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., said when he introduced legislation that would direct President Reagan to release the funds already appropriated.

The Department of Energy said last week, however, there were "no plans ... to increase the fill rate."

Meanwhile, lower prices have prompted the department to lift a January embargo on new well construction, said John Wagoner, the department's SPR project manager in New Orleans.

"We decided to do that so we'd have options," Wagoner said. "Personally, I'd certainly like to see the reserve completed to 750 million barrels. But at the same time, we have to recognize broad budget considerations."

When established, the oil reserve required a massive, secure storage place, and officials found it beneath the Earth's crust in southern Texas and Louisiana.

Millions of years ago domes of pure, clear salt two to five miles wide and 15,000 feet deep formed there.

Over the years, industry has taken advantage of the unique geology to make everything from table salt to Tabasco sauce, and oilmen have known for decades that the land on the outskirts of a dome was potentially rich in oil.

Yet until the last 10 years, no one thought of putting oil back into the dome, Pulliam said.

"It's a new technology, but mostly because no one ever thought of it," he said.

The principles that allow engineers to store oil in cylindrical caverns 200 feet wide and 2,000 feet deep are no more complicated than those taught in junior high school science classes.

A well is drilled several thousand feet down into the dome. Water is pumped in, dissolving the salt, and the salty brine is pumped out, to be discarded in the Gulf of Mexico. When the cavern is formed, the oil goes in.

"The oil itself will be there for millions of years without changing" because it doesn't react with salt, Pulliam said.

And when the time comes, in some national emergency, to draw the oil out, SPR officials will simply turn on the water again, letting the oil, which floats on water, come out the wellhead on the top.

At Bayou Choctaw 12 miles southwest of Baton Rouge, 46 million barrels of oil worth $1 billion sit in four caverns, each larger than New York's World Trade Center. Not a drop is visible to the site's 100 workers, and the only petroleum smell comes from weed killer.

Two 12-foot-tall gray wellheads, standard on producing wells in the oil patch, sit atop each cavern, and miles of giant gray pipe form a lifeline to tanker docks 37 miles away and to the nearby 100-foot-deep fresh water lake formed when an old salt dome collapsed.

Swamp waters full of crawfish and alligators encircle the site, separated by a dike that protects the buildings and gravel cavern pads.

The only tipoff to the enormous value underfoot is the security: concrete barriers form a slalom course for approaching vehicles, all of which are searched by armed guards who scan inside, outside and under the hood with mirrors. An automatic rifle hangs on the guard shack wall.

Pressure in each cavern is checked constantly to make sure there are no leaks or thefts, and DOE officials check nearby drilling rigs from time to time to make sure someone's not trying to drill diagonally, Pulliam said.

The SPR, formed in 1975 after the Arab oil embargo, has five existing storage sites for its $15 billion worth of oil — four in Louisiana and one in Texas capable of holding 509 million barrels. A second site in Texas is under construction.

Nearly 35 percent of the SPR oil came from Mexico, 27.5 percent from the North Sea, 6.4 percent from Alaska and 5.5 percent from Saudi Arabia. This year, SPR has bought only from Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, Wagoner said.

West Germany is the only other nation that stores oil underground, SPR officials said, and the Bayou Choctaw site alone is larger than West Germany's reserves.

To demonstrate its ability to get the oil out of the caverns in an emergency, the SPR last fall sold 1.1 million barrels to U.S. oil companies for about $28 a barrel.

Let salads take simmer out of summer meals

Summer's the time to replace steamy meals with cooler culinary creations. Refreshing main dish salads are ideal. Quick and easy to prepare, these artful entrees perk up wilting appetites and keep the cook and kitchen cool.

With lighter, fitness-conscious eating a way of life for so many people, main dish salads have reached new pinnacles of popularity and panache. Today's entree salads are creative combos of interesting ingredients that star on at-home menus and steal the show at picnics and al fresco meals, as well.

Next time you're planning a portable feast, remember these flavorful recipes are especially well suited for carry-out meals. Even though some people still think that commercially prepared salad dressings can cause food poisoning, especially when left at room temperature, studies show that salad dressing's high acidity level actually retards bacterial growth which causes food to spoil.

When the mercury soars, try one of these following main dish salad recipies. Served indoors or out, they're sure to become warm weather favorites.

Tortellini Pesto Salad is a hearty combination of meat or cheese-filled pasta, summer's finest garden vegetables and herbs in a creamy, savory dressing. When you need a grillside go-along instead of an entree salad, substitute rotini (spira pasta) for tortellini.

Tortellini Pesto Salad
1 c. salad dressing
½ c. finely chopped fresh basil leaves
¼ c. chopped parsley
¼ c. (1 oz.) grated parmesan cheese
2 T. milk
2 garlic cloves, minced
2 c. cheese or meat tortellini, cooked, drained
1 c. 2-inch julienne-cut zucchini
1 c. 2-inch julienne-cut carrots
1 c. cherry tomato halves
½ c. chopped walnuts, toasted

Combine salad dressing, basil, parsley, parmesan cheese, milk and garlic; mix well. Add all remaining ingredients except walnuts; mix lightly. Chill. Stir in walnuts just before serving. Make four servings.

Variations: Substitute 1½ t. dried basil leaves, crushed, for ½ c. fresh basil.

Substitute 2 cups spiral noodles, cooked, for tortellini.

Substitute reduced calorie salad dressing for salad dressing.

Jambalaya Salad teams rice with ham, shrimp, bacon and Cajun-inspired vegetables and herbs for a spicy special entree with just the right touch of red pepper "heat."

Jambalaya Salad
1 c. salad dressing
½ c. celery slices
½ c. chopped green pepper
¼ c. chopped onion
1 t. dried thyme leaves, crushed
¼ t. ground red pepper
¼ t. salt
1 garlic clove, minced
3 c. cooked rice
1 c. cubed, cooked ham
1 6 oz. pkg. frozen cooked tiny shrimp, thawed
1 c. chopped seeded tomato
6 crisply cooked bacon slices, crumbled

Combine salad dressing, celery, green peppers, onions, seasonings and garlic; mix well. Add rice, ham, shrimp and tomatoes; mix lightly. Chill. Stir in bacon just before serving. Makes six servings.

Arranged on a bright bed of pea pods, Far East Chicken Salad features bean sprouts, soy sauce, ginger and mandarin oranges.

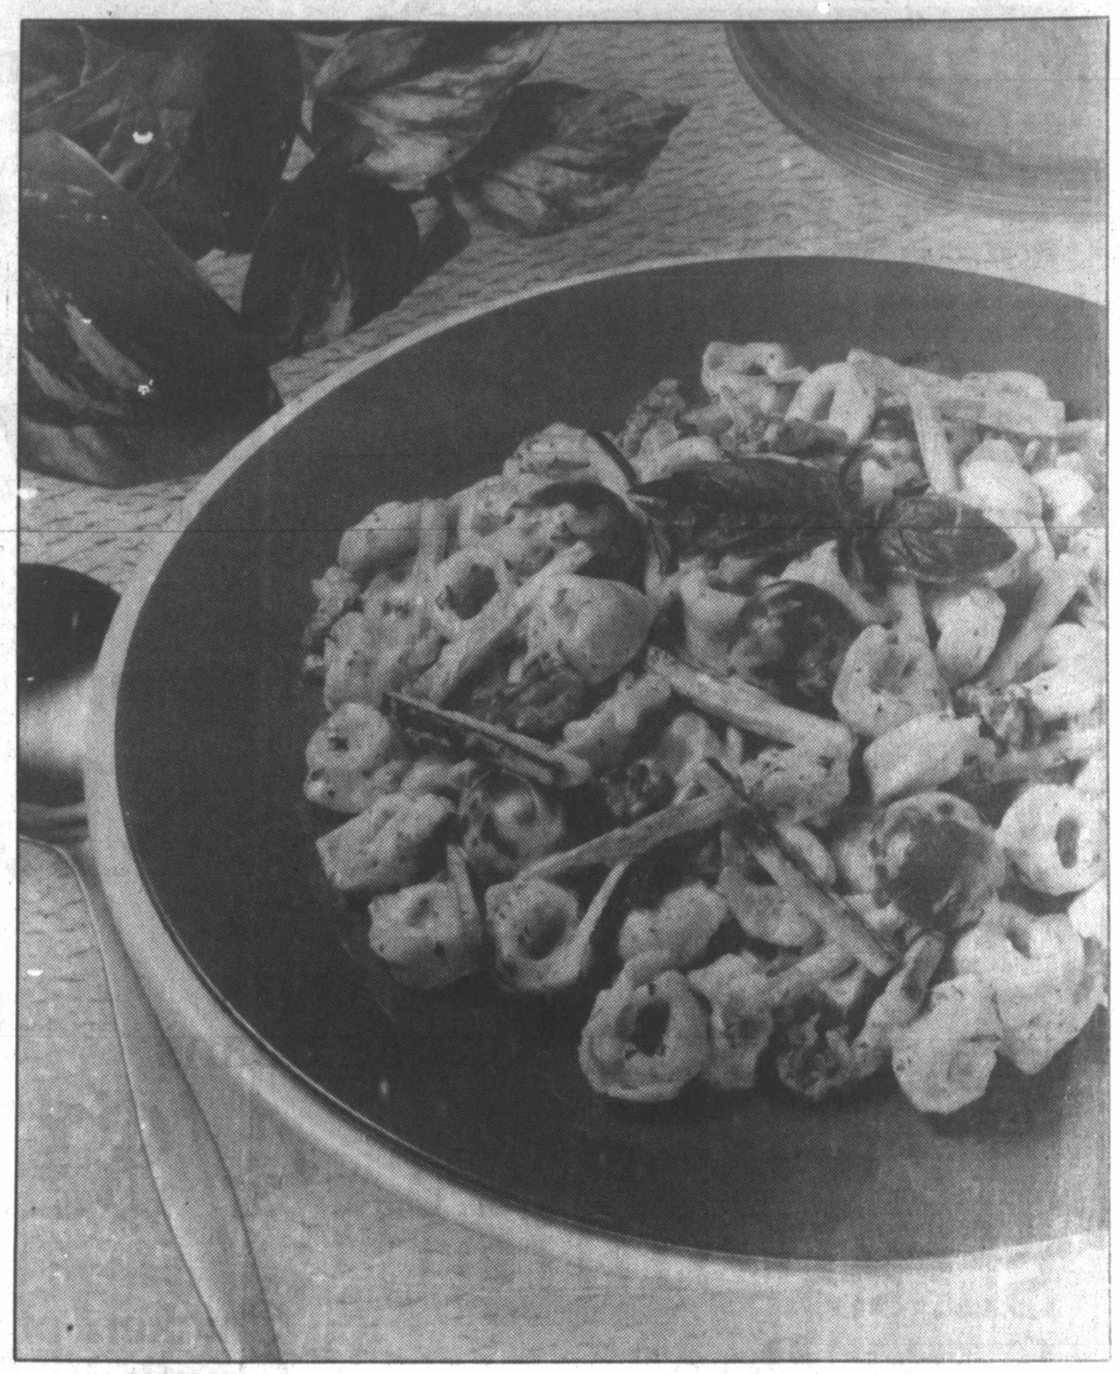

Far East Chicken Salad
½ c. salad dressing
1 T. soy sauce
¼ t. ground ginger
2 c. cubed cooked chicken
1 c. fresh bean sprouts
½ c. thin red pepper strips
¼ c. sliced green onions
1 11 oz. can mandarin orange segments, drained
3 c. pea pods, halved diagonally, blanched, cooled
¼ c. cashews, toasted

Combine salad dressing, soy sauce and ginger; mix well. Add chicken, sprouts, peppers and onions; mix lightly. Chill. Stir in oranges just before serving. Arrange pea pods on serving platter; cover with chicken mixture. Sprinkle with cashews.

With the great popularity of Tex-Mex foods, Fiesta Taco Sald is sure to rate rave reviews. In north-of-the-border fashion it layers lettuce, tomatoes, olives, a spicy ground beef mixture and cheese. The colorful creation is topped with a tangy dressing and tortilla chips before serving.

Fiesta Taco Salad
1 (1¼ oz. pkg.) taco seasoning mix
¾ c. salad dressing
1 lb. ground beef
¾ c. water
3 c. shredded lettuce
2 c. chopped tomatoes
½ c. pitted ripe olive halves
½ c. (2 oz.) shredded cheddar cheese
Tortilla chips

Combine two teaspoons seasoning mix and salad dressing; chill. Brown meat; drain. Add remaining seasoning mix and water; simmer 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Cover serving platter with lettuce. Top with tomatoes, olives, meat mixture, cheese, salad dressing mixture and chips. Makes four servings.

TORTELLINI PESTO SALAD — Ideal for sultry summer nights or toting to a picnic site, this colorful main dish teams cheese or meat-filled pasta with summer's finest garden vegetables and herbs. Prepared in advance with little last-minute fuss, the light yet satisfying salad is as easy as warm weather cooking should be.

B&PW installs officers

Using a sesquicentennial theme and Texas flags, the 1986-87 officers of the Pampa Business and Professional Women's Club were installed in ceremonies Tuesday evening at the Boy Scout District office.

Elizabeth Henderson led the ceremony, installing Kaye Presley as president, Virginia Jones as vice president, Virginia McDonald as treasurer and Capitola Wilson as secretary.

Scholarship recipient Kathryn Diana Peeler was introduced by Jones and was presented a certificate from the club. A Pampa High School senior, she will receive $500 from the club. She plans to attend West Texas State University in Canyon, majoring in education. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Peeler.

Guest speaker Jo Potter reviewed the book Re-inventing the Corporation which deals with drastic changes made in the workplace by big business. Much of the discussion dealt with changes that would directly affect women.

Teresa Reed, outgoing president, was presented a necklace as a "thank-you" gift from the club members.

A special business meeting is called for June 3 at noon at Furr's Cafeteria to take care of several items before state convention. This meeting replaces the one scheduled for June 10.

B&PW's state convention is set for June 12-15 in San Antonio. McDonald and Presley are to be delegates from the local club.

Reed announced that the Pampa club had the largest percentage increase in membership this year in District 9 which covers the Panhandle. Membership increased from 21 to 28 during the year.

Dues of $25 are now being accepted for the 1986-87 club year. Membership is open to anyone 18 or older who is employed.

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Lifestyles Editor

This summer promises to be a busy time for La Leche League, particularly for the leaders of the Pampa chapter, as the international organization celebrates its 30th year of existence.

Kicking off the summer, the local La Leche League plans their annual rummage sale this weekend, beginning Friday at 1 p.m. until 6 p.m., and continuing Saturday from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m., at Zion Lutheran Church.

Pampa La Leche League leaders, Judith Loyd and Jennifer Hancock, have both been asked to be speakers at the Breastfeeding and parenting conference, July 5-6 at the Austin Marriott Hotel in Austin sponsored by the state organization.

Included in the two-day conference are 90 different panels on breastfeeding, nutrition, parenting, birth options and discipline. Keynote speaker for the event is Dr. John Valusek, author, lecturer, and psychologist, who will speak on "Kids Are Not for Hitting." Continuing education units will be given to any health professionals attending the conference, Loyd said.

Hancock is to speak on "Does My Child Need Preschool?," giving the pros and cons of preschool, determining the child's readiness, evaluating preschools and preschool alternatives.

Loyd's topics include "Slim, Trim & Nursing," a general session on nutrition, and grief counseling — how grief affects the nursing relationship. Loyd will also speak on breastfeeding classes at the Leaders Day on July 4 prior to the conference.

Loyd, a La Leche League leader for six years, is also a certified breastfeeding instructor. She is also working towards becoming a certified lactation professional. She also holds the office of group finances treasurer for the state organization.

Hancock has been a La Leche League leader for three years. She is now district advisor for District 11 which includes Midland, Odessa, Alpine and El Paso.

Later in July, La Leche League International is to sponsor a seminar for physicians on breastfeeding. This seminar, July 16-18, is set at the Hotel del Coronado in San Diego, Calif.

La Leche League was founded in 1956 by seven women who wanted to make breastfeeding easier and more rewarding for mother and child. This organization offers information and encouragement, primarily through personal help, to women who want to nurse their babies.

An international group, La Leche League is active in 43 countries reaching more than 100,000 mothers monthly through a network of more than 9,500 accredited volunteer leaders. It is a non-profit organization supported entirely by donations, memberships and sales of materials.

"La Leche League is not just breastfeeding," Loyd explained. "It's a whole concept of parenting."

Pampa La Leche League meets on the third Tuesday morning of the month. During the summer, meetings will be held in the Hiland Park behind Clarendon College - Pampa Center.

Next meeting is set for 10 a.m., June 17, on the topic, "Father's & Siblings of Breastfed Babies."

Anyone wishing to know more about La Leche League or about either of the conferences set for this summer may call Loyd at 665-6127 or Hancock at 665-7816 for more information.

Dear Abby

Children need to learn death is fact of life

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My mother has a terminal illness and does not have much longer to live. I am struggling to find the answer to this question and I hope you can help me. (Perhaps a reader who has had to deal with it can be of help.) Should I let my 3-year-old son attend the funeral when the time comes? He is very close to his grandma. He spends a lot of time with her now because I go there daily to help out any way I can. He has trouble understanding why Grandma doesn't respond when he gives her hugs and kisses — and now she doesn't "know" him.

Should I take him to her funeral to say goodbye, or should I protect him from the pain?

A MOTHER'S LOVE

DEAR MOTHER'S LOVE: Let your son attend his grandma's funeral and explain that her life on earth has ended. Children need to know that all life ends in death — it's a fact of life. If they know the truth, they will not fear it. Give your son a chance to bid a final farewell to Grandma; it will make her death easier for him to accept.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: At what age should a sister and brother cease sleeping together? Our son is a little more than five years older than his sister, who is well-developed for her age. She says she becomes frightened during the night so she goes into her brother's bedroom and crawls into bed with him. (She sometimes stays all night.)

I've noticed a much closer bond between these two than with the other children in the family. I am concerned. My husband says he sees nothing wrong in this and becomes angry when I mention it.

I need advice.

CONCERNED MOTHER

DEAR CONCERNED: You do not say how old these children are, but a well-developed girl of any age should not be sleeping with her older brother.

If you suspect you have reason to be concerned, you should be. Quit speculating, and initiate some candid conversations with your daughter and your son, too. My mail tells me that there is far more "experimenting" among preteen siblings than most parents realize.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Henry from Freeport," who was astonished at how little most Americans knew about the Bahamas. Do you want to hear a better one?

A few years ago, while visiting some relatives in Napa Valley, Calif., I placed a long-distance telephone call to my husband in Newark, Del., and the operator asked me if Delaware was in the United States — or was it a foreign country! I assured her that Delaware was part of the United States — or at least it was when I had left it four days ago.

Later, on the same trip, I was in a restaurant with a cousin when a waitress, on hearing me mention Delaware, said, "Oh, I know where Delaware is — it's near Copenhagen!" (I nearly landed on the floor.) My cousin was so amused, she now refers to my state as "Dela-Where?"

WARREN HASSE

FROM THE NOTEPAD: If the PHS basketball job comes open in the next 48 hours, there is going to be plenty of interest in the job.

I've had calls from six coaches (at this Monday writing) who want to find out more about the post. Filling it, however, appears to be a long way off, since AD John Kendall is out of the city for three weeks, returning only on weekends...It's just my opinion, but I thought the ABC-TV Indy 500 broadcast team of Jim McKay, Jim Limpley and especially, former driver Sam Posey, did a superb job on both of the race telecasts...When will PHS announce the winner of the girl's track MVP? Too bad it didn't occur while school was still in session and the winner could receive proper acclaim to climax a brilliant season. It has to be a very difficult call...Best wishes to Bob Estes upon his retirement. The Borger school administrator was also a very fine coach and always a pleasure to visit with...One of the main jobs of any elected body is to oversee the public's property. And with that in mind, isn't there some conceivable way the city and school can get their tennis courts back into playable condition now that the outdoor tennis season is here? They are in such disrepair tennis players are having to go out of town, and those fine tourneys which used to bring many players to Pampa are impossible to conduct...If, as expected, Garland Nichols takes the South Garland job, isn't Jamie Walling going to become his assistant? Walling coaches in the Pampa system for several years before leaving last season for a post in the Metroplex...New Canyon HS coach Mike Wartes was beaming over the academic achievements of his footballers.

"We had 26 straight "A" student-athletes. This past six weeks, just in our football off-season group, we did not have one kid that failed a class." Isn't the no pass-no play rule wonderful!...Included in the 86 different postal items due release next year there again will be no issue honoring a sports figure. However, there will be a 50-stamp pane depicting different wildlife subjects (birds, mammals, reptiles, insects) in their natural habitat. With Amarilloan Wales Madden leading the way, efforts are being made to get a commemorative issued in March 1989 marking the 50th anniversary of Cal Farley's Boys Ranch...PHS tennis coach Jay Barrett tied the knot last weekend. And that cute once-upon-a-time Babe Ruth beauty queen, Penny Summers, goes to the altar June 28. Daddy Lloyd was an outstanding Pampa baseball player for years...Beginning next year, most high schools in America must upgrade their present pole vault pits or purchase new ones at costs up to $3,000. As a result, the Iowa HS Athletic Association will consider a recommendation from a majority of it's member schools to ban the event from track and field competition. You can stack those poles over by the teeter-totters, guys!...Tim McKyer, the SF 49ers third round draft pick, is being named "The Last Maverick". He is the last player who will be drafted from his school, UT-Arlington, whose athletic teams are named Mavericks, and which is dropping football for economic reasons.

"There's nothing more tragic than seeing a young man who doesn't have confidence in himself," says WT football coach Bill Kelly, "so we start by providing that important factor."...The annual Tree Bender member-guest golf tournament is scheduled at the Pampa CC this weekend. 80 teams are expected for the three-day event...I see where the Lubbock extension of the UT-Austin athletic department was turned down by baseball coach Bill Bethea, 18-year assistant to WT legend Cliff Gustafson. Too much wind in Lubbock, or not enough support for the program?...Just what we need. 44,225 new lawyers passed their bar exams, 2,399 in Texas.

Among the 78 in South Dakota is former Amarillo sportswriter Drake Tietze, who tells me he is planning to practice in Pierre, the state capitol...William Kirby, Texas state education commissioner: "Instead of no pass-no play being the problem, the real problem is why so many kids aren't passing. There's something wrong. The parents are going to have to take their fair share of the responsibility."...Speaking of hiring basketball coaches, Jack Gardner, who started Kansas State's winning tradition taking two Wildcat teams to the Final Four, was recruited with a three-cent stamp. "I applied for the job by letter, they hired me the same way," says Gardner...The Houston Astros will abandon the Day-Glo stripes next season. They were first worn in 1975. And the Pirates have announced they will do away with the Cap Anson-style caps adopted in 1976 for the bicentennial. The commissioners office requires one year's notification when a team intends to change uniform design. Rumors are the Astros may change more than uniforms, becoming the Washington Something-or-Others..."A lot of good people want to go where good things happen," says Oklahoma's Barry Switzer, who lost only 4 of 22 starters off last year's national championship team, and just seven of the top 48...A Georgia high school has been fined $2,215.34 by the state High School Association for breaking transfer rules, altering a report card and using academically ineligible players. That should get the attention of the school board and taxpayers... A Cherokee was telling the doctor about his chronic insomnia. Rockets one game away from elimination

Parish, Walton pace Celtics' win

HOUSTON (AP)— Last season, when Boston center Robert Parish got tired, he often had to ignore his fatigue and continue playing.

But this season, Coach K.C. Jones learned that relief is spelled B-I-L-L W-A-L-T-O-N.

Parish hit 10 of 15 shots, scored 22 points and contained Ralph Sampson in the second half to put the Celtics in position to win Game Four on Tuesday night in their NBA playoff against the Houston Rockets.

But it took a relief performance by Walton in the final three minutes and a crucial three-point basket by Larry Bird to preserve a 106-103 Boston victory.

Walton's performance allowed the Celtics to take a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven series and they could win their 16th NBA title with a victory in The Summit Thursday night.

But Parish isn't the only tired Celtics player ready for vacation time and forward Kevin McHale likes Boston's position.

"Three-one is a good place to be," McHale said. "Everyone knows how close we are and we don't want to extend it any more than necessary. That would give us a chance to go on vacation."

After a tight struggle throughout the fourth quarter, Bird took a feed from Walton and sank a three-point basket with 2:27 to play that gave the Celtics the lead for good.

With 1:40 to go, Walton's tip in made it 106-103 and the Celtics held the ball for the final seconds.

Having Walton to come on in relief of Parish was a key strategy move for Jones in the closing minutes and Parish agreed with the decision.

"I ran out of gas with two minutes left, everyone could see that, I don't think I could have done it," Parish said. "It was time for me to surface. I was almost invisible in Game 3."

Walton played poorly at the start of the game and said he was surprised that he got a second chance.

"I was out of sync and Sampson had a hot hand in the first half," Walton said. "I was surprised that K.C. put me back in the game.

"But at that point nothing that has happened in your life to that point matters. You just have to go out and give it all you've got."

Despite Walton's poor early performance, Jones said he had no hesitation about returning Walton to the lineup.

"He knows where the offensive boards are and he did exactly what was expected of him," Jones said. "Robert had played a tough game and I saw that he was dragging a little. It was a matter of getting a fresh body into the game."

The Rockets led 64-63 at the half. They held the same deficit at 86-85 going into the fourth period.

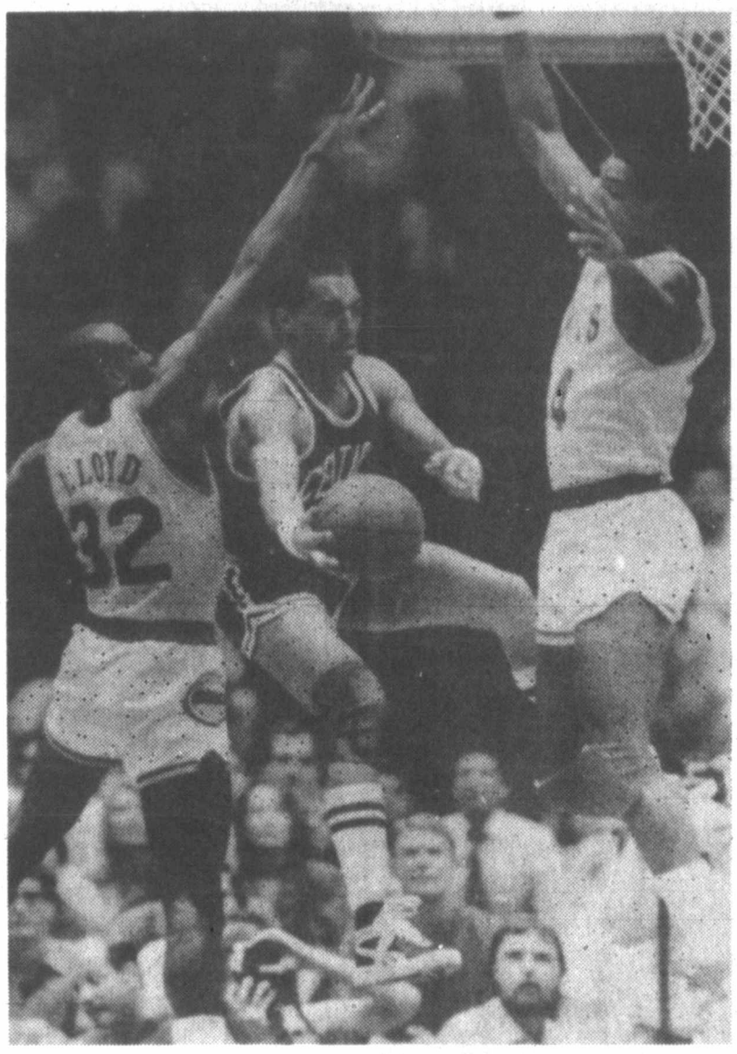

Dennis Johnson, who scored 22 points, hit a pair of free throws with 3:07 to play to erase Houston's final lead and set the stage for Bird's go-ahead three-pointer.

"You need to take the three-pointer in that situation," Bird said. "It gives us the extra point and means they hae to have two possessions."

Bird scored 21 points and Sampson led the Rockets with 25 points but he had only four second half points.

Despite the frustrating loss, Houston Coach Bill Fitch doesn't think everything is lost. He's been in this must-win situation before when his 1981 Boston Celtics recovered from a 3-1 deficit en route to the NBA title.

"I look at this ring and remember that were were down 3-1 and came backe to win it," Fitch said. "If this was a club of 34-year-old players with gray hair, I'd say they don't have a chance.

CELTIC SANDWICH — The Celtics' Dennis Johnson finds himself sandwiched between the Rockets' Lewis Lloyd (32) and Akeem Olajuwon during the fourth game of the NBA championship Tuesday night. Johnson scored 22 points as the Celtics won, 106-103, to take a commanding 3-1 lead.

Rangers win

CHICAGO (AP) — Gary Ward doesn't want to be reminded of last year when the Chicago White Sox defeated the Texas Rangers 10 times in 13 games.

"Last year is gone and you don't worry about it," said Ward, whose two-run double capped a four-run third inning Tuesday night to lead Edwin Correa and the rejuvenated Rangers to a 4-1 triumph over the sliding White Sox.

The victory was the fifth in the last eight games for the first-place Rangers, all at the expense of the White Sox, who suffered their ninth defeat in 10 games.

Ward's double came off loser Joel Davis, 2-3, and was the fifth and final hit of the game for the Rangers as a trio of Sox relievers pitched hitless ball the rest of the way.

But it didn't make any difference as Correa, a 20-year-old who the Sox traded to the Rangers last winter, held his former teammates to four hits in the seven innings he worked.

Fireballing Mitch Williams finished, striking out four batters in the last two innings, to earn his second save.

Correa admittedly struggled in the early innings and walked Wayne Tolleson in the second inning to force in Chicago's only run after the Sox had loaded the bases on a pair of walks and a single by Tim Hulett.

I was struggling in the first three innings," said Correa, the youngest player in the major leagues. "I couldn't get my fast ball over for strikes. It was missing a lot and I couldn't catch up to it."

Neither could the White Sox who have had a total of seven hits and one run in their last two games against the Rangers.

"I settled down after that," said Correa, who was sent to the Rangers with infielder Scott Fletcher for pitcher Dave Schmidt and infielder Tolleson.

"I got my confidence back," said Corea. "It feels good to get your old teammates, to pitch well against guys you know. It's something I can't explain."

"That kid's going to win a lot of games," said Valentine. "He has a great competitive spirit and great stuff. He'll complete a lot of games when he learns to throw less than five pitches to every batter."
