Sister says story of rescue a hoax

MOSCOW (AP) — The sister of a man who claimed he and five companions survived 35 days in the rubble of the Armenian earthquake says the story was made up so her brother could get into a good hospital, Soviet media reported Saturday.

The Tass news agency said reporters had tracked down Aikaz Akopyan's sister, Julietta, who Akopyan said witnessed his rescue Jan. 11 from the ruins of his nine-story apartment building in the city of Leninakan.

Neither officials nor local journalists had been able to find his sister or the five other people reportedly rescued with Akopyan. They could find no witnesses to the reported rescue.

"At first the sister denied her kinship with Akopyan but later on acknowledged that it was she who had brought Aikaz to the Yerevan hospital and that he really was her brother," Tass said.

"According to her words, it appears that on Jan. 6 Aikaz requested her to drive him to a good Yerevan hospital and it was on the way to Yerevan that a story of rescue after 35 days was ostensibly invented," Tass said.

The government newspaper Izvestia said Akopyan's sister made up the rescue story "because she wanted to put her brother in a good hospital." It based its report on an interview with an unidentified Leninakan resident, who it said was present when Tass spoke to the woman.

Tass quoted Lt. Col. V. Kozlov of the Armenian civil defense medical service as saying that according to data he had available, Akopyan was rescued five days after the Dec. 7 earthquake, and that on Jan. 6 he had sought drugs from Leninakan hospital for an allergy. But he added that there are many people with the last name Akopyan in Leninakan.

However, the news agency said Akopyan, now in a hospital in Yerevan, was sticking to his story and that doctors could not rule out the possibility it was true.

Doctors "regard the threat as quite realisitic," Tass said.

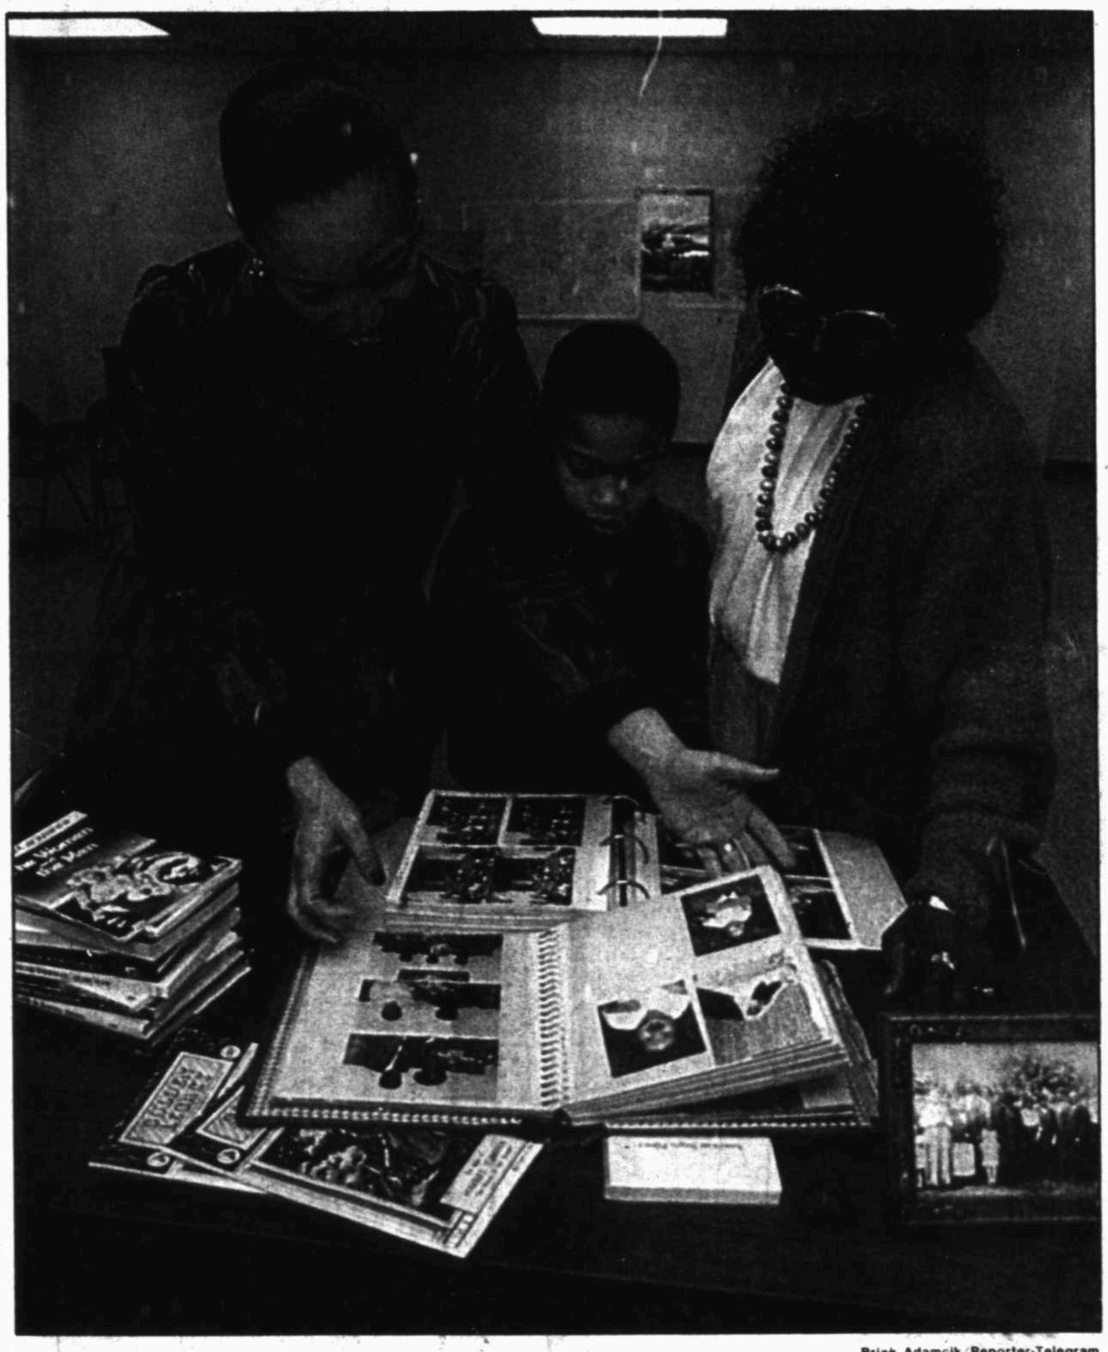

Tass reported Thursday the rescue from the ruins of the quake that killed about 25,000 people. That night, the 50-year-old electrician was shown in his hospital bed on Soviet television.

But the news agency cast doubt on the story the following day, saying that no witnesses had been found. "Everyone wanted to believe in the Leninakan miracle," it said.

Akopyan said he and the five others had gone to the basement of the apartment building to haul out two large kegs when the earthquake struck. They were stuck unhurt in a food cellar and survived on canned vegetables, smoked ham, stewed fruit and pickles, he said.

He said he sang songs and told stories to the other five to keep their spirits up.

Akopyan was reported to be suffering from pneumonia as a result of the confinement when he was admitted to the hospital.

'More time, less weather' all inaugural team needs

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Bobby Holt is confident that he and Bush-Quayle inaugural co-chairman Penne Korth have everything under control. That is, everything except for a couple of potential problems — time and snow.

"We need more time, less weather," said Holt, the Midland, Texas, oilman who is responsible for scheduling, inviting, assembling, feeding and paying for dozens of inaugural events starting next Wednesday and continuing through Sunday.

Appearing relaxed and cheerful, Holt and Ms. Korth, formerly of Waco, took time out Thursday to talk about their non-paid jobs, which they see as a labor of love for their longtime personal friends George and Barbara Bush.

"We got busy and recruited a staff of 400 to 600 people, which blossomed on out to 25,000 to 27,000 volunteers. All of this for a 60-day life. It's mind-boggling."

— Midlander Bobby Holt, inaugural co-chairman

A blizzard forced the 1985 Reagan swearing-in inside the Capitol and hundreds of disappointed band members, float-riders and military units who came to Washington to take part in the inaugural parade had to be disbanded.

"It was a disaster," said Holt, "but this time we have such a good contingency plan, there's no way we'll have to use it. We're over-planned."

Crash kills two Dallas policemen

DALLAS (AP) — Police discovered the stolen car Saturday that three officers chased until slamming into a truck, killing two, but continued to search for the driver.

The officers were chasing the stolen vehicle on a rain-slickened major street on the city's south side Friday night when their car went out of control, crossed the median and collided nearly head-on with a pickup truck.

Officer Lisa Louise Sandel, 27, died about 11:22 p.m. Friday at Parkland Memorial Hospital. Her partner, Mark Fleming, 24, died after emergency surgery at Parkland about 5 a.m. Saturday.

An officer-trainee riding in the back of the police car was critically injured and the driver of the pickup was injured. Both remained hospitalized Saturday.

Wet highway surface conditions played a part in the crash that occurred on Ledbetter Road just east of Interstate 45, but police said there was no evidence of snow or ice on the road. The National Weather Service had issued a winter storm advisory for sleet and snow in North Texas Friday evening.

The driver of the car the officers chased remained at large Saturday, said police spokesman Ed Spencer. "We have no suspects," he said Saturday afternoon, but the stolen car was recovered Saturday morning.

A patrol squad discovered the 1985 Oldsmobile 98 about 10:30 a.m. in southeast Dallas, in "the general vicinity of the accident," Spencer said.

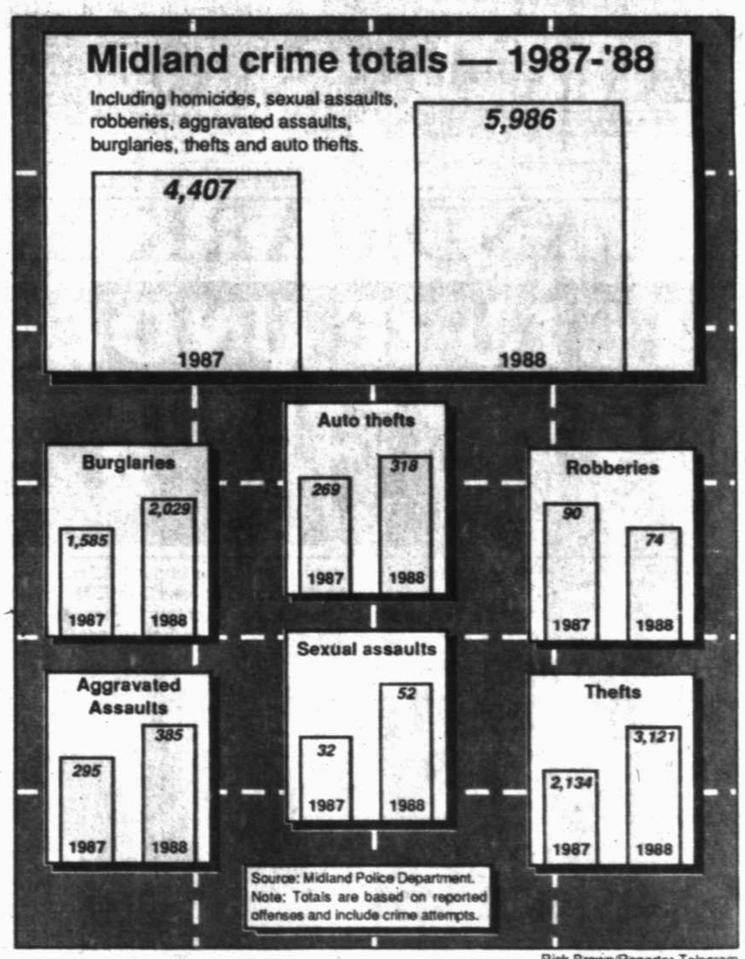

The officer-trainee, Nathaniel White, 25, was in critical condition at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas with head and internal injuries, a hospital spokeswoman said. White, who has a short time remaining in the police academy, was riding in the car to observe a night shift.

Willie Earl Henderson, 62, the driver of the pickup truck, underwent abdominal surgery at Charlton Methodist Hospital in Duncanville Saturday morning and was in fair condition, said nursing supervisor Kay Anderson.

Ms. Sandel and Fleming are the first two Dallas Police Department officers to die in the line of duty in 1989.

A new Dallas County sheriff's deputy was killed earlier this month while on duty at the county jail by a man who had been released a few hours earlier from the facility.

Last year, a record five Dallas officers died, all in shooting incidents.

Midland blacks use King legacy to underscore strength of family

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The black family is alive and well in America.

"We're basically showing the stability of the family; that it's been a rock of ages," said Midland business owner Robbyne Fuller.

This year's theme, "The Black Family: A Rock of Ages," has been threaded into a variety of activities, which began Friday and continued Saturday at the Northeast YMCA.

The celebration resumes at 1:30 p.m. today at the Federation of Women's Club and Washington Park gymnasium in the 1600 block of East Wall Street. At that time, a parade of families will move from the gymnasium to the Greater St. Luke AME Church at 401 S. Adams St.

Prison problems blamed for local crime increases

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A revolving-door prison system is to blame for a 36 percent jump in the number of major crimes reported in Midland in 1988, according to prosecutors and law enforcement advocates.

The number of sexual assaults, aggravated assaults, burglaries, thefts and auto thefts rose 35.8 percent in 1988 compared to 1987, according to statistics released by the police department. The statistics include attempts.

Drops were reported in two categories. Only five homicides were reported in 1988 compared to 10 in 1987. Robberies also decreased, from 90 in 1987 to 74 in 1988.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, whose office prosecuted more than 1,000 felony cases and tallied nearly 700 convictions in 1988, said he was disappointed but not surprised by the figures.

"Our convictions are way up," Schorre said. "The gist of the situation is this: the people are getting arrested and sent to the penitentiary, but they are not staying there long enough to have an impact on the crime rate. We are prosecuting and sending people to prison twice in the same year."

The beleaguered Texas Department of Corrections already has been forced to close its doors once in 1989 because of overcrowding. Under state law, the system refuses new inmates when it reaches 95 percent capacity.

Not all Nicaraguans welcoming new refugees to United States

NATION

MIAMI (AP) — Hundreds of Nicaraguans and other Central Americans seeking a promised land are pouring into this haven for immigrants, but some who settled in the area after the 1979 Sandinista revolution are wary of the newcomers.

"Some of the Nicaraguans here have mixed feelings about those who stayed with the Sandinistas," said Maritza Herrera, head of the Nicaraguan-American Foundation.

"They are people from the farm areas, with a different orientation," said the Rev. Leon Pallais, a Nicaraguan priest who runs the Nicaraguan Assistance Center in Little Havana.

The Central Americans began arriving from southern Texas by the busload Thursday and Friday following a federal judge's ruling that the government could not keep them there while their applications for political asylum were being processed.

Since the judge's decision Monday, some 400 people have come here, bringing the two-month total to about 2,000, most of them Nicaraguans. Officials expect about 100,000 more over the next 18 months.

Pallais said the new group is different from the first wave of Nicaraguans that settled in southern Florida.

Roberto Arguello, head of the Nicaraguan Bankers Association, disagreed, saying the time has come to forget the differences that separate the first group from the second.

"The bottom line is we are all Nicaraguans," he said. "Back in Nicaragua, there was no in-between. Here we just have to forget it...The objective is to help all Nicaraguans."

The latest group is coming to town with no guarantee of food, shelter or social services, and officials are warning there will be very little support once they arrive.

Isidoro Cuevas, the Cuban-born mayor of Sweetwater, a heavily Nicaraguan city in western Dade County, said his city will have trouble absorbing the aliens.

"We've been trying to gather clothes and food to pass it on to them," he said. "But there are many dwellings shared by more than one family already. People are sleeping on the front porches, sleeping on the couches."

In Miami, about 250 immigrants have been staying in a sports stadium, but the Baltimore Orioles baseball team arrives Jan. 25 for spring training, and the immigrants will have to be relocated, most likely to private shelters and churches.

Mayor Xavier Suarez sought an emergency meeting with President Reagan, and other officials urged President-elect George Bush, who is fishing in the Florida Keys this weekend, to come to see the situation for himself.

Bush told reporters he would examine immigration policy when he takes office. He said the newcomers are "causing an overburdening of facilities like schools and hospitals, and this is a sorry commentary on what's happening in Central America and Nicaragua.

"The United States has to be generous, but no one community can suffer an overload without some support in some way," he said.

A delegation of community leaders visited southern Texas on Friday to warn those awaiting transportation to Miami.

"If people come down there (Miami), they need to know that they're going to have to fend for themselves," Dade County Assistant County Manager Tony Ojeda said in Harlingen, Texas.

He estimated the Miami area has 75,000 to 125,000 Nicaraguans, along with thousands of other recently arrived Central Americans.

More than 30,000 Central Americans passed through south Texas in 1988 seeking political asylum, according to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The best way for Miami to deal with the influx would be to allow more of the immigrants to get work permits, Arguello said.

"With work permits for every Nicaraguan, the private sector can step in and help," he said. "We don't want to create a welfare society."

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

A lovely Sunday and Monday are in store for Midland, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Today will be sunny with a high in the mid-50s. Winds will be from the north at 10-20 mph and gusty.

Tonight will be clear with a low in the lower 20s.

Monday's skies will be clear, with a high in the upper 50s.

The record high for Saturday was set in 1953 when the temperature reached 79 degrees. The record low for today was set in 1972, when the temperature dipped to 6.

STATE

Despite forecasts of one to two inches of snow, the precipitation never surfaced Saturday and instead much of the state had sunny and dry weather.

The only clouds being reported were over the eastern third of the state.

Winds swung from the north to northwest over the Panhandle in advance of a Pacific cold front located over the central Rockies, while west and southwest winds prevailed over the remainder of Texas.

Breezes were generaly 10 mph to 20 mph, but gusts in excess of 35 mph reported in the South Plains were creating blowing dust in and around Lubbock.

High temperatures were still in the 30s under cloud cover over the eastern fringes of Texas while far West Texas had readings in the 40s. The rest of the state felt readings in the 50s and 60s. Extremes ranged from 38 degrees at Longview and Lufkin to 62 degrees at Laredo.

The forecast calls for some patchy morning fog and low clouds over East and southeast Texas as well as along the Gulf Coast. Skies are expected to be mostly fair and fair to partly cloudy.

Low temperatures are expected to range from the teens in the mountains to the 40s in South Texas. Highs are expected to reach the 50s and 60s over much of the state, while the Panhandle will feel readings in the 40s.

NATO, Warsaw Pact agree to talks

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — NATO and the Warsaw Pact agreed Saturday after two years of negotiations to hold new talks on reducing conventional weapons and troops across Europe.

The agreement was the final element of an accord designed to enhance freedom in the Soviet bloc and boost East-West contacts. It was initialed after a last-minute compromise solved a dispute between Greece and Turkey.

Diplomats who have spent more than two years haggling over that accord informally accepted it — minus the mandate for the new arms talks — Friday. Negotiators at the 35-nation conference said they would formally adopt the final statement Sunday.

The conference, to review the 1975 Helsinki Accords on economic cooperation and human rights, convened in November 1986 and involved the Soviet Union, United States, Canada and all European nations except Albania.

The U.S. ambassador to the talks, Stephen J. Ledogar, said the arms negotiations could start the week of March 6. They were dubbed CAFE, or talks on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe.

Ledogar told reporters the mandate for the arms talks was signed by NATO and Warsaw Pact negotiators after last-minute telephone calls between Vienna and the Turkish capital, Ankara, resulted in a compromise on a Greek-Turkish dispute that stymied diplomats for the past week.

Greece had objected to the exclusion of a triangle of Turkish territory close to the Syrian border from the arms talks.

The territory includes the eastern Mediterranean port of Mersin, which Greece says is used to ship arms to northern Cyprus, controlled by Turkey.

Turkey had agreed with the Soviet Union to exclude the territory and feared that reopening the issue might prompt Moscow to reiterate earlier demands to include the nearby U.S. air base of Incirlinck in the talks.

Ledogar said the territory was not strategically important in East-West terms.

The text of the new mandate left open whether the zone for the new talks would include or exclude Mersin.

Ledogar indicated this was deliberately left ambiguous but said the United States, the Soviet Union and other unidentified states gave undisclosed bilateral assurances to Turkey over the zone.

The new talks will aim to reduce troops, tanks, heavy artillery and other weapons across the continent, from the Atlantic to the Ural mountains deep inside the Soviet Union.

Negotiations on setting up the talks, which do not include naval forces, chemical or nuclear weapons, started in February 1987.

Both the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact have said they are eager to begin the negotiations, which will replace the Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction talks going on in Vienna since 1973.

Those talks aimed only to reduce conventional troops and weapons in central Europe.

Negotiators from both blocs say they are hopeful the new talks will progress much faster, although they are complicated by the difficulties of defining weaponry involved and by verification.

The mandate for the new talks now goes into the Helsinki final document, which contains the most detailed human rights agreements ever reached between East and West.

Western diplomats hailed the accord but said the East bloc frequently violated commitments it made on human rights in the 1975 Helsinki Final Act.

The new accord foresees greater freedom for religious believers in the East bloc, much more precise regulations on emigration and travel from the East, an end to abuse of psychiatry and to the jamming of Western radio stations, and increased East-West tourism and business deals.

It also for the first time creates a mechanism to raise human rights issues at any time on a bilateral level with any other Helsinki signatory.

One of the most disputed issues at the Helsinki conference was a 1991 human rights conference in Moscow. The United States and Britain announced last week they would go, but only on condition that Soviet reforms continue and are institutionalized by then.

Canada held out on Moscow until the last minute, seeking exit visas for a Jewish couple in Leningrad refused emigration for 10 years on grounds of national security.

Canadian Ambassador William Bauer said Saturday the Soviets had promised to review the case.

Delegates had said they would formally adopt the accord on Saturday, but on Saturday that was pushed back to Sunday.

A Western diplomat said the delay was due to East German objections to a word in the German translation of a provision that minimum currency exchange requirements could be abolished in the future. The objection was resolved, he said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

HOLT

Military weather forecasters' long-range predictions assure Holt and Ms. Korth that there will be no preciptation when George Bush places his hand on George Washington's Bible to take the oath of office as president on the West Front of the U.S. Capitol next Friday.

Just to be sure, Holt said he consulted an Old Farners Almanac sent to him by a fellow in South Texas that predicts 40-degree days and no rain or snow between Jan. 19-21.

Holt, 54, a third-generation native of Midland, who has known the Bushes since they moved to West Texas when he was in junior high school, and Ms. Korth — the former Penne Percy — a teenage volunteer in Bush's unsuccessful 1964 campaign for the U.S. Senate, teamed up two days after the Nov. 12 election to direct the inaugural.

"There were no lights, no walls," recalled Holt. "We got busy and recruited a staff of 400 to 600 people, which blossomed on out to 25,000 to 27,000 volunteers."

"All of this for a 60-day life. It's mind-boggling. We have some amazing young people who work 12 to 16 hours a day and nobody minds a bit," Holt added.

The incoming first and second families have taken an active part in planning the inauguration, which officially gets underway on Wednesday, Holt said.

President-elect Bush telephoned Holt twice Thursday — just two of the 200 calls Holt took that day — with a few ideas. Holt said they talk almost every day.

The inauguration, billed as "the American bicentennial inauguration," will be the costliest in history at $25 million — almost all of it to be paid by contributions and ticket sales. But it also will offer more free events than any other inaugural celebration.

The most expensive ticket is $1,500 a plate for one of the three inaugural dinners on Wednesday night. Five were scheduled, but the ticket sales as of Thursday didn't justify it.

Holt and Korth chose to add a Young American Ball, however, because all the $30 tickets to the first one scheduled were snapped up the first day they went on sale.

The other eight balls, at $175 a ticket, will take place simultaneously Friday night, and each one is termed "THE" inaugural ball. Invitations went out to loyal campaign workers, contributors and staunch Republicans from all over the country from lists provided mostly by Bush state campaign chairmen, Holt said.

The tickets cost a lot to defray the costs of dozens of free events, the planners said. The presidential gala at the Washington Convention Center on Thursday, to be televized live, will cost $250 or $150 per person.

The Bushes especially want to "reach out to people of all ages and interests," said Ms. Korth, who took a leave of absence from her work as a lecturer for Sotheby's, the auction house, in Washington and Texas, two places where her familiarity with rich people and their possessions are useful.

It was Barbara Bush's idea to open her new home, the White House, to the public on Inauguration Day. The president and Mrs. Bush will open the doors at 8 a.m. and shake a few hands before being whisked away to other events — and to star at the swearing in.

CRIME

Other laws, known as "good time" laws, credit inmates with additional time served for good behavior as a way to reduce overcrowding.

Persons convicted of non-violent crimes — such as burglary and theft — are eligible for good time and often serve only a fraction of their sentence, according to prosecutors.

"Another problem is the entire system is really understaffed, particularly the police department," Schorre noted. "They are short manpower wise, and it doesn't allow them to do the patrolling that is necessary for preventive enforcement."

The prosecutor, who is a member of Gov. Bill Clements Criminal Justice Task Force, said the Legislature will have to face the problem of prison space during this session — or else.

"The system is working locally," he said. "We have increased apprehensions, increased convictions, and increased the numbers (of persons) going to TDC."

Burglary continues to be the area's number one headache for law enforcement authorities. During 1988, 2,029 homes and businesses were burglarized, compared to 1, 585 in 1987, an increase of 28 percent.

"The burglars tend to be repeat offenders, and that is a reflection of the prison problem," Schorre said.

"We seem to be arresting more burglars and getting more property back," said Cpl. Jim White, Midland police spokesman. "But as soon as we get two off the street, three take their place."

White agreed with Schorre that lack of prison space is to blame for the increase in reported crimes.

"We have a lot of repeat offenders," the spokesman said.

In 1988, 52 sexual assaults or attempted assaults were reported to police, an increase of 62 percent from the 32 reported in 1987.

Some of the increase White blamed on the so-called "east side rapist," who was responsible for a string of assaults in the summer of 1988.

Theft — which is the most common crime committed in the city of Midland — showed the sharpest increase. In 1988, 3,121 thefts were reported, compared to 2,134 in 1987, an increase of 46 percent.

Aggravated assaults showed a 30 percent increase, with 385 reported in 1988 compared to 295 in 1987.

The smallest increase was a double-digit jump in the number of vehicles reported stolen. Auto theft increased 18 percent, with 318 vehicles reported taken in 1988 compared to 269 in 1987.

Jackie Hamilton, who serves on the boards of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission and Crime Stoppers, said lack of police manpower aggravated the increase, which she also blamed on prison overcrowding.

"They (convicted felons) are not staying down there long enough," Ms. Hamilton said. "They're coming right back. And we've got to have more police. There are just too many individuals out there per man."

Another prosecutor said aggressive prosecution of bad check writers and an increased popularity of shoplifting are to blame for the increase in thefts.

"During the last several years, we have been very aggressive with hot checks, so you will see more cases filed," County Attorney Mark Dettman said. When he took office in 1985, 10 hot check cases a month were filed. In 1988, nearly 1,000 warrants were issued for offenders, he said.

"I have also seen a general increase in shoplifting cases," Dettman noted. "And a lot of it is related to drugs."

The founder of a Midland-based crime prevention group said the burgeoning crime rate could be lowered.

"I have to work harder now to get my program out to more people," said Fred Lewis, executive vice-president of Innovative Solutions, Inc. Lewis said that of the several hundred persons that have taken his course — a curriculum that stresses mental awareness of criminal threats — none have been victimized since by criminals.

"That is pretty unusual, from some of the checking I have done," he said. "If more people would have taken it (the course), we would have had a heck of a lot fewer victims."

KING

"The black family is a very protective type of family that takes care of its own," said Mrs. Fuller, a member of the sponsoring organizations that include the NAACP, the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc. and the International Ministerial Alliance.

James Fuller, president of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees and Mrs. Fuller's husband, asserted that the black family is not in a state of demise, contrary to many of the negative pictures that have been painted of the single parent and the disappearing father.

"There is a black family that is together, and it has a father, mother and kids pulling together to survive in an environment that is highly competitive," he said.

There are ample opportunities to see the black family at work in a positive way in Midland, the school board president said.

F.E. Yarbrough, a 21-year-old lifeguard and the product of a single-parent home, also is living proof that the black family remains healthy and strong.

"My dad used to live with us and there used to be a lot of fights. But when it came to me, he and my mom were always in agreement," Yarbrough said. "Actually, the separation brought my family closer together. My mom and dad don't bicker anymore, they can have a good conversation and I don't get upset."

Fuller, a college English teacher, blames sociologists for painting negative pictures about the condition of the black family, while Hispanics, Anglos and Native Americans suffer from unique problems as well.

"Our statement this weekend is to say, 'Don't be deceived by the observances of sociologists who have made their living doing research in order to sell a book or to retain a tenure at the various universities around the country.'

"I'm not discounting the fact that there are some legitimate studies that reveal serious problems within the American family in general. But I'm afraid that the media has latched on to the negativisms and painted a very bleak picture that says the black family is void of stability, that the black male is irresponsible and that children are simply fending for themselves," he said.

Fuller wants the sociological experts to acknowledge that the family structure is still intact, even though there are some severe adjustments that are being made given the changes which have transpired economically, socially and politically.

"The thing I remember the most is the day my father learned how to write his name," said Fuller. "My father didn't even get out of elementary school; he left home at age 14 and sort of moved about the country. In those days, a man could survive by doing manual labor.

"The thing that impressed me the most as I grew up in San Angelo was to see my father struggle as an illiterate trying to deal with contracts, insurance policies and the simple tasks which we take for granted.

"To see him learn to sign his name was the ultimate experience in terms of saying anything is possible if family sticks together," he said.

That's what Martin Luther King would be telling black Americans if he were alive today, Mrs. Fuller said.

"I think that we hear the words of Dr. King and many of those who followed him saying that family is important," she said.

"He'd still be saying that we have a long way to go and that we have some difficult days ahead. But we're going to get to the Promised Land."

lox — (noun) Have you ever tried bagels and "lox" with cream cheese? "Lox" is cold smoked salmon. To make this treat, divide a bagel into halves, spread both halves with cream cheese and top with "lox." Mmmm! "Lox" is derived from the Yiddish-German word, "lachs," which is closely related to the Anglo-Saxon " leax," also meaning salmon.

Slaying raises questions about treatment of mentally ill homeless

NEW YORK (AP) — She was a dedicated doctor who had gone to Bellevue Hospital on her day off to work on a pathology lecture. He was a former Bellevue mental patient who moved unchallenged through its halls in a lab coat and stethoscope.

She was bright, bubbly and caring, a 33-year-old South Carolina native who came north to pursue her medical career and was expecting her first child. He was a 23-year-old from Brooklyn who once yearned for a career in baseball but had instead a history of petty crimes and psychiatric problems.

The paths of Kathryn Hinnant and Steven Smith crossed when he stopped by the tiny office where she was working. During a violent struggle, police say, he beat, strangled and raped her, then stole her fur coat and credit cards.

In a city where there were more than 1,840 homicides last year — an average of more than five a day — this one got attention. And it raised questions, both about security at the hospital and about the treatment of the mentally ill.

Smith, who has a history of psychiatric care since 1981, sometimes stayed at a homeless shelter; sometimes he slept on a cot hidden in a closet on the 22nd floor of the hospital, a massive, 1,200-bed facility.

Last summer, he reportedly tried to have himself committed to Bellevue's emergency psychiatric ward but was referred to a clinic.

Just last month, Smith was hospitalized for nine days after telling doctors there he had swallowed rat poison in a suicide attempt.

And on Jan. 1, six days before the slaying, a security guard arrested Smith at the hospital and accused him of stealing a clock and a hypodermic needle. Smith was charged with a misdemeanor, allowing him to go free.

"It's a rotten system set up by our society," Dr. John Pearson, director of pathology at Bellevue and Hinnant's boss, said after speaking at a memorial service for her.

The mentally ill homeless "are not in and of themselves at fault," he said. "It's the system that is at fault. They don't have to be out on the streets, but we have a society that lets that happen, and that's wrong."

Hinnant was working on her own time Saturday, Jan. 7, in a fourth-floor office, preparing a lecture for her younger colleagues on Monday.

She was to meet her husband, Eric Johnson, a piano salesman, that evening. The couple had married in October; she was five months' pregnant.

But sometime Saturday afternoon, Smith, wearing physician's clothing and a stethoscope, attacked her, police said. He has contended that a man he identified only as John also participated in the attack, but police have found no evidence that John exists.

When Hinnant failed to meet her husband, a worried Johnson called her office, the police and two hospitals. On Sunday morning, he went to Bellevue where he and a hospital administrator found his wife's severely beaten body.

Mayor Edward I. Koch called it a "brutal, outrageous murder," and police made the case their top priority. A $30,000 reward was posted. Police got a break when three homeless men went to police with some of the doctor's belongings they said Smith had given to them.

Last year in New York, 65,000 people showed up at city hospitals asking for psychiatric help. About 16,000 were admitted for psychiatric care, said Luis Marcos, vice president for mental hygiene at the city's Health and Hospitals Corp., which oversees Bellevue and other city hospitals.

Marcos wouldn't discuss whether Bellevue officials bungled Smith's case but conceded that overcrowding can affect a physician's judgment.

"I'm not necessarily saying crowdedness interferes with a diagnosis," Marcos said. "But if you are under pressure, because you have many patients to be seen in a crowded situation, obviously your ability to perform an evaluation is going to be affected by it."

"We try to provide the best care we can with the resources we have," Marcos said.

Robert Hays, spokesman for the Coalition for the Homeless, estimated that New York has 10,000 homeless people who are also mentally ill.

"The real story is that mentally ill people are routinely turned away from psychiatric hospitals for lack of beds," Hays said.

City on toes over open cabinet post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elliott Abrams returns to private life next week after 3½ tumultuous years as President Reagan's top aide for Latin America, and much of the city's foreign policy establishment is abuzz over the question of who will succeed him.

Outside the cabinet itself, few presidential appointments have generated more interest and curiosity about who President-elect Bush will select for what is widely regarded as one of the toughest jobs in government.

The job carries an imposing title, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs; a spacious paneled office on the sixth floor of the State Department, and enough headaches to keep a medium-sized pharmaceutical company in business. The task involves dealing with issues ranging from drugs to debt in 33 hemispheric countries.

The Bush transition team is said by several sources to have reduced the list of candidates to replace Abrams to five, four of whom are foreign service officers.

The only non-diplomat is Robert Helander, 67, a New York lawyer who has had a long-time association with Rockefeller family business interests in Latin America.

But State Department officials said Helander's prospects seemed to fade when he left an unfavorable impression on Capitol Hill staffers during get-acquainted sessions earlier this month.

The other candidates said to be on Bush's short list for Abrams' job are:

■ Deane Hinton, ambassador to Costa Rica and a former ambassador to El Salvador. One of his strengths is knowledge of economic issues facing the hemisphere.

■ Everett Briggs, ambassador to Honduras who dealt with Central American issues at the State Department during the early Reagan years. He also was ambassador to Panama.

■ John Negroponte, a former ambassador to Honduras who serves as deputy to National Security adviser Colin Powell. Some conservatives oppose his appointment, contending his support for the Nicaraguan Contras is only lukewarm.

■ Craig Johnstone, a former ambassador to Algeria who was the top adviser on Central America under Abrams' predecessor, Tony Motley. Johnstone has been actively pursuing the assistant secretary post and has told friends he will leave the foreign service if the job goes to someone else. He also has detractors in the conservative camp.

Much of the interest in the identity of Abrams' successor stems from the uncertainty about the course Bush will follow on the two dominant hemispheric issues: Central America and Latin America's $420 billion foreign debt.

Bush is expected to pursue a policy of continuity in most areas of the world but he is considered by most experts as likely to try new directions on Latin policy.

The air of uncertainty has been fueled by the almost total absence of discussion about Central America, particularly Nicaragua, since well before the fall presidential election campaign.

Once an issue of highest priority for the administration, Reagan made no mention of Nicaragua or Central America in his summation this past week of his eight years in office.

Abrams, in a speech Thursday about the Reagan legacy in Latin America, gave only a passing reference to Nicaragua and did not mention the Contras at all.

Bush will take office with the bulk of the Contra force stationed at camps inside the Honduran border, surviving on U.S.-donated food and other humanitarian supplies. Congress cut off military aid last February and Bush has left unclear what plans he has for the Contras.

Some transition team members have indicated privately that the new administration may open talks with the Sandinista government, a clear break with the Reagan policy of giving Managua the diplomatic cold shoulder.

One possible option for Bush would be to abandon the Reagan goal of seeking a democratic outcome in Nicaragua and instead seek an accommodation with the Sandinistas in return for promises of a reduced Soviet-bloc role there.

On the debt question, Bush has left the impression he will seek new approaches that will have the effect of easing Latin repayment obligations.

Defense rests case in Steinberg trial

NEW YORK (AP) — The defense rested in the murder trial of Joel Steinberg, accused of beating to death his illegally adopted 6-year-old daughter, without introducing an insanity defense and without calling him to testify.

During 11 weeks of testimony, the jury heard 39 prosecution witnesses and 13 defense witnesses.

State Judge Harold Rothwax scheduled the defense summation for next Thursday. He told the jurors the government would sum up next Friday and they would get the case on Jan. 23 after receiving the judge's instructions.

With the jury absent, Rothwax again asked Steinberg's lawyers, Ira D. London and Adrian DiLuzio, "Am I correct you do not intend to introduce an insanity defense?"

"You are 100 percent correct, your honor," DiLuzio replied.

Rothwax had repeatedly pressed Steinberg's lawyers to tell him if they intended to argue that Steinberg was not responsible for Lisa Steinberg's death by reason of mental defect or disease.

In case they did, the judge had ordered the defendant to be examined by a prosecution psychiatrist to determine his mental condition on Nov. 1, 1987, the night he is accused of fatally beating Lisa.

The examination was completed Thursday night.

Programs urged to expand

NEW YORK (AP) — Fearing a loss of the nation's competitive edge, a group of college officials is seeking ways to double the number of students studying abroad and include more business and science majors.

Members of the Council on International Educational Exchange met privately in New York on Friday to discuss ways to expand study-abroad opportunities for less-affluent youngsters and encourage students to attend programs in places other than just England or France.

The meeting followed release of a council report in December which found fewer than 5 percent, or about 50,000, of U.S. college students studying abroad each year, while some 350,000 foreign students attend U.S. schools.

"Citizens of other nations are learning more about us than we are about them and each year are doing so in increasing numbers," said the 28-page report, "Educating for Global Competence."

"We have quite rightly welcomed these students to our own shores but have failed to encourage our own students to go abroad," it said.

The report warned that failure to expand study-abroad opportunities would mean "we will irreversibly diminish the world status of the United States."

Man arrested for threats

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — A man was arrested after he made death threats against President-elect George Bush, who is vacationing in the Florida Keys, authorities said.

George Hicks, 37, of Boca Raton was arrested in his apartment Friday after he made telephone threats against Bush, Secret Service agent Dave Nozneski said. No weapons were found in Hicks' apartment, Nozneski said.

Court documents quote Hicks as saying, "If I see him, I'll kill him."

Hicks, who described himself as an unemployed musician, was charged with threatening the life of the president. A threat made against the president or vice president is a federal felony punishable by up to five years in prison.

Hicks was in the custody of the U.S. Marshal's office Friday night in West Palm Beach, Nozneski said.

Tests ordered for jets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cross-wiring found in cargo hold emergency systems of two Boeing 757 airliners prompted federal aviation authorities to order inspections of all the aircraft within the next three days.

The order late Friday was similar to one issued for Boeing 737s 48 hours earlier involving critical engine fire and vibration warning systems. The two "airworthiness directives" were unrelated, however.

The earlier order was prompted by speculation the pilot of a British Midland Airways 737 that crashed Sunday, killing 44 people, might have been confused by false wiring into shutting down his only good engine.

The Times of London reported Friday, however, that investigators were certain there was no wiring problem, and neither U.S. nor British airline officials reported finding such a problem on any other aircraft. Tests of U.S. 737s have to be completed by Sunday morning.

Snake has operation

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — Laser surgery on an 8-foot boa constrictor's throat cancer turned a small university clinic into a media zoo.

The 12-minute operation Thursday drew cameras and reporters from four television stations, an independent network and assorted newspapers to the Beckman Laser Institute at the University of California, Irvine.

The press presence was so great that a pool arrangement more common to courtrooms and battleships had to be set up for television.

Dexter Avenue church still following King's path

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Thirty-five years after a young Martin Luther King Jr. stepped up to the pulpit at Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, aging members of his congregation carry on the activist spirit he fostered.

The red-brick building situated a block from the Alabama Capitol looks much as it did the day he arrived. The worn, dark pews are the same ones members sat in to hear King's sermons. Only cushions have been added.

The Rev. Murray Branch, the current pastor, said physical appearances are not the only things that remain unchanged at the church, now known as the Dexter Avenue King Memorial Baptist Church and recognized in 1974 as a national historic landmark.

King, who would have turned 60 Sunday, came to Dexter Avenue in the fall of 1954 at age 25. On Dec. 2, 1955, blacks went to his church to organize the Montgomery bus boycott, often regarded as a starting point for the civil rights movement.

Branch said that kind of activist spirit — which dates back to the church's founding in 1877 — still exists in the congregation. The church is a meeting place for social activists, and its work extends into Africa, where the congregation supports missionary work.

King "would be pleased to some extent because we have increased substantially in our benevolent work," Branch said in an interview last week. He said "a constant stream" of people comes to the church in need of help.

"Hardly a week passes that we do not get appeals, and many are white," said Branch, who taught at Morehouse College in Atlanta while King was a student.

But Zelia Evans, who remembers King's first sermons, said he would not be satisfied. "He would think we were not doing enough," she said.

On Monday, the national holiday marking King's birthday, a noon service featuring speakers and singing is expected to attract scores of visitors. On Sunday, congregants will remember their former pastor with a quieter service.

Branch said Dexter Avenue Baptist had about 460 members in King's day, but that number has dwindled to about 250.

Robert Nesbitt, a member of the church committee looking for a new pastor, had heard about King from a friend while in Atlanta. King had planned to go to Chattanooga, Tenn., to preach, but Nesbitt persuaded him to come to Dexter Avenue, Mrs. Evans said.

"He was young and energetic. In fact, one of the members said, 'Why did Mr. Nesbitt bring us that boy to preach here?' But we found out he was much more than a boy," she said.

Members knew they had a good preacher in King, "but we didn't know how special he was," Mrs. Evans said.

King remained at Dexter Avenue through 1960, when the demands of the civil rights movement required his full attention. Some of the programs King instituted at Dexter Avenue Baptist still are in place, such as his Month Clubs, in which members sharing birthdates in the same month get together for service projects.

Branch disagreed with assessments that King built Dexter Avenue Baptist, or vice versa. King's personality dictated his destiny, Branch said, adding, "He was headed this direction growing up at Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta."

And Branch said the church exhibited a keen social conscience long before King, as early as the late 1800s, when news accounts indicate it provided assistance for disaster victims in Central America.

King Day dedicated to peace, non-violence

Associated Press

Communities planned celebrations and other events Monday to honor slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., including a candlelight peace march in suburban Detroit and an anti-apartheid demonstration in California.

King's birthday will be observed as a federal holiday Monday in all but six states, including Arizona, where it will be business as usual at state offices.

In New York City, a mural painted by high school students depicting non-violence was unveiled Friday, and Mayor Edward Koch mayor spoke of the "grace and glory" King brought to the United States.

In Michigan, the celebrations "help us keep Dr. King's dream alive and provide opportunities for all people to renew their commitment to work for a society in which there is one standard of equality and human rights," said state Sen. Jackie Vaughn.

John Roy Castillo, director of the Michigan Civil Rights Commission, said King's legacy has helped advance racial equality.

"Tremendous progress has been made over the last 20 to 25 years," he said Friday. "There are more minorities who are elected officials, there are more minority businesses, more professionals."

But he noted the high poverty and school dropout rate among minorities.

A symposium was planned Sunday and Monday at the University of Michigan to honor King's work. Willie L. Brown, Jr., speaker of the California Assembly, was to give the keynote address Sunday and Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, a close associate of King's, was scheduled to speak Monday.

The end of King day will be marked by a candlelight peace march at Roeper City and Country School in Bloomfield Hills, a wealthy northern suburb of Detroit.

In Beverly Hills, Calif., 26 teenagers moved into the South African consulate Friday for a weekend anti-apartheid protest to mark King's birthday.

The students, none of them black and ranging in age from 13 to 19, occupied a hallway outside the consulate's third-floor office, singing songs such as "We Shall Overcome" and other protest anthems. The crowd blocked at least one person from entering.

They said they would camp in the hallway until Monday, when fellow protesters planned a march at the building to commemorate King's birthday and to denounce South Africa's system of racial segregation.

The mural unveiled Friday at the Bronx Regional High School in New York City was inspired after a student at the school was killed in 1987. Ten students painted, kept journals and did research about non-violence for the 10-month project.

In Arizona, federal and city offices will be closed Monday but all state offices will remain open.

Former Gov. Bruce Babbitt, a Democrat, created the holiday by executive order in 1986 after the Legislature refused to act. But, as one of his first official acts as governor, Evan Mecham rescinded the order before the first holiday could be celebrated. The action touched off the first major controversy of his short-lived administration.

Mecham said he acted because Attorney General Bob Corbin, a fellow Republican, had said that Babbitt's order was illegal because a holiday requires legislative approval as well.

State Board of Education adopts evolution policy

RELIGION

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The California Board of Education on Friday unanimously adopted a new policy statement intended to strengthen the teaching of evolution in the state's 7,125 public schools.

Fundamentalist church leaders criticized the new policy, which was adopted as a guideline for classroom teachers and for textbook publishers, and said they will urge local school boards throughout the state to interpret the policy to allow teachers or students to question evolution.

A key provision of the policy statement specifies that only theories based on factual evidence should be taught in science classes, while theories based on religious belief "are appropriate to the History-Social Science and English-Language Arts curricula."

Associate State Superindentent Francie Alexander described adoption of the new policy statement as "a very significant step" toward eliminating the hesitancy of some local schools to teach evolution in science classes when faced with opposition from church leaders.

"It makes it explicit what is science and what is religion. That means evolution is going to be taught as the main theory of origins. We have not had anything of this clarity before," she told reporters after the board's vote.

But the Rev. Louis Sheldon of Anaheim, president of the Traditional Values Group, which he said includes 6,000 California churches, said the principal weakness of the new policy is that it is not clear how students or teachers may question evolution theory.

"Is there still a door of opportunity through which a critical view of evolution can be raised? We do not see it precisely in the language. We're kind of in a no man's land," he told reporters after the vote.

Sheldon said his group isn't advocating the teaching of the Bible creation theory in science classes, but only wants to "keep the door open" to allow discussion of other theories of the the origin of life.

"The issue is, will evolution be taught as fact, or as theory," Sheldon said, adding that there "is some positive material in the statement. We just want to carry it further."

Neither side testified directly before the full board, which adopted the policy statement after a brief description and no debate. But nearly half of the board's members had participated in part or all of two lengthy hearings drafting the statement earlier this month.

The debate over the policy statement focused almost exclusively on evolution, but that word didn't even appear in the first two drafts of the document, and was added in the final draft adopted by the board only as an example of scientific theories in a footnote.

However, Alexander said she was sure that to textbook publishers and local teachers, "it's very, very clear" that the statement sets policy for teaching evolution.

Over 700 arrested in abortion protests

Associated Press

Anti-abortion demonstrators chained themselves to fences, stopped traffic and sang hymns as they blocked the entrances of clinics in three cities Saturday. More than 700 people were arrested, police said.

In New York, members of the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue continued to defy a federal judge's order to stop blocking clinic entrances. Police said 565 people were arrested at demonstrations at six sites.

Demonstrators chained themselves together to slow police efforts as long "as we possibly can to save as many babies as we can," said Bob Chuvala, an Operation Rescue spokesman.

About 72 of the 400 demonstrators blocking the doors of the Delta Women's Clinic in New Orleans were arrested on charges of obstructing a public place, police said. In Toronto, about 80 people were arrested in a demonstration outside the clinic of Dr. Henry Morgentaler, who led the fight for legalized abortion in Canada.

In the second day of demonstrations in New York, protesters chanted, lay down, triggered fire alarms and halted elevators, said Inspector Richard Mayronne, a police spokesman.

Some 500 to 600 people stopped traffic for more than two hours while protesting activities of Planned Parenthood's Margaret Sanger Center, said Sgt. Raymond O'Donnell, a police spokesman. About 225 demonstrators were arrested.

"They were lying down and praying in seated positions," O'Donnell said. "Most of the people had to be carried. We would load some people onto the bus, then other people would run out into the street and lie in front of the wheels of the bus."

The second biggest protest occurred at Lincoln's Women Services, where police said 175 people were arrested — most of them carried away on stretchers after they refused to walk.

Seven people chained themselves together. They used extra-strong steel locks, "but we have equipment that cuts through them like butter," said police Inspector Richard Mayronne.

On Friday, 275 members of the group were arrested in two protests outside the Sanger clinic, police said.

U.S. District Judge Robert Ward issued a permanent injunction against the group on Tuesday, forbidding members to obstruct access to clinics that perform abortions in New York City.

The order calls for a fine of $25,000 a day for violations.

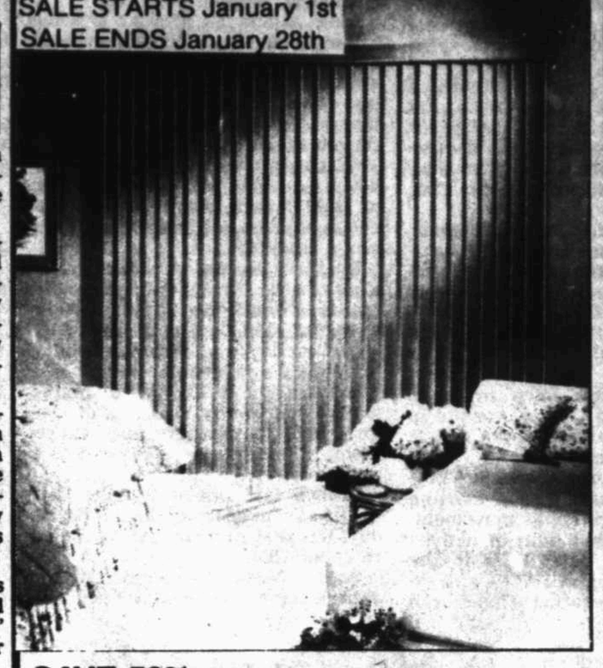

Joan Coombs, deputy executive director of Planned Parenthood, said the organization planned to seek a contempt charge against Operation Rescue.

"We got here at 6:30 this morning. We shut the place down. No ladies have had abortions today. Look at the lives we've saved," said Anthony Marquize, director of United for Life.

Company's role in Libyan scandal probed

WORLD

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A West German company that U.S officials contend exported goods to Libya to help it build a suspected chemical weapons plant is being investigated by a Black Forest prosecutor.

The new probe compounds official embarrassment over a scandal that has dominated West German politics for two weeks.

Government officials conceded Friday they had received intelligence reports in October that indicated German companies may have helped build the plant in Rabta, about 40 miles outside the Libyan capital of Tripoli.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl's spokesman, Friedhelm Ost, had said earlier Bonn knew nothing of alleged West German complicity in the project until U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz brought it up during Kohl's visit to Washington in November.

The United States contends the plant is on the verge of full-scale production of poison gas. Libya claims it is a pharmaceutical plant.

At the same news conference at which Ost spoke, Finance Ministry spokesman Karl-Heinz von den Driesch said investigators had found no evidence against West German companies that would stand up in court.

Werner Botz, chief prosecutor for the Offenburg region in the Black Forest area, told The Associated Press that he opened the new investigation into Imhausen-Chemie of Lahr after reading a detailed report in this week's Stern magazine.

The Hamburg-based magazine cited what it said were official documents and witnesses in its article, which accused Imhausen-Chemie, the now defunct I.B.I. Engineering of Frankfurt and Pen Tsao medical supply of Hamburg of being deeply involved in the Libya project.

Stern alleged that Imhausen-Chemie provided "everything that is needed to build a chemical plant" to I.B.I., which the magazine said in turn shipped the materials to Libya under forged bills.

Body of pilot downed in Libya flown home

New York Times News Service

ROME — After a brief, silent ceremony at Rome's military airport, the body of an American pilot downed over Libya in 1986 was put on a U.S. Air Force plane Saturday for the final journey home.

The body, which was flown to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware, was returned by Libya on Friday in what its official press agency described as a humanitarian gesture. The United States said it regarded the Libyan move as a public-relations maneuver, and sent no representative to receive the body when it arrived in Rome in the custody of a Vatican official.

Early Saturday, the U.S. Embassy in Rome announced that the remains were those of Fernando Luis Ribas-Dominicci, 33, of Utuado, Puerto Rico, who piloted the only American plane that was lost in the April 1986 bombing raid on Tripoli and Benghazi. At his death he held the rank of captain, but was promoted posthumously to major.

Libya uneasy about U.S. intentions

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Machine guns jut from the walls of Col. Moammar Gadhafi's compound, the army is building roadblocks, and anti-aircraft batteries point north toward the Mediterranean in case the Americans come again.

Officials and ordinary Libyans in the streets express fear of attack. The bomb-shattered former French Embassy in the heart of Tripoli is a daily reminder of American ability to strike.

Some diplomats say the mood reminds them of the days before the U.S. air raids on Tripoli and Benghazi in April 1986, intended as punishment for Libya's alleged support of international terrorism.

Gadhafi speaks defiantly about the possibility of a U.S. attack, but the diplomats believe he has genuine fear of one.

They said Gadhafi believes the decision has been made to attack a plant at Rabta, 60 miles outside Tripoli, and other targets. The Americans say the plant is to manufacture chemical weapons. Libya says it will make pharmaceuticals.

A Western diplomat said his first impression had been that Libyan officials were "not really worried, that their talk about the American menace was for domestic consumption. Later, after talking with them day after day, I became convinced they are really scared."

He and the others spoke on condition their names not be revealed.

In downtown Tripoli, heavy machine guns manned by soldiers in olive fatigues rested on the white walls, 25 feet high, around the leader's fortified compound. Diplomats said the number of guns had been increased.

Camouflaged tanks and anti-aircraft batteries were positioned in a line of trees behind a high brown wall a few blocks from the compound.

Reporters taken by bus to the desert southwest of Tripoli, near the Rabta plant, saw surface-to-air missiles aimed northward, toward the sea. Radar scanned from a barren ridge and troops manned roadblocks on the highways.

One diplomat said the army might be keeping tabs on dissident Moslem fundamentalists returning from Tunisia and Sudan, but another said roadblocks were common in tense times and these could be linked to the fear of attack.

"They seem to be afraid the Americans could pop up in a jeep somewhere along the highway," said an envoy from Western Europe. "I don't know why they think a roadblock could catch a convoy of American troops."

European and Arab diplomats say Libya has asked their governments repeatedly in the past few weeks to use their influence with the Americans.

Some feel the momentum of accusation and tension between the United States and Libya will be difficult to stop. A European said, for example, that Washington had "maneuvered itself into a difficult position by talking so loudly."

"Every American president has his own favorite top enemy," one said. "For Reagan it is Gadhafi, although I can't imagine anybody really takes Gadhafi seriously as a No. 1 enemy."

They agreed the Libyan leader could be counted on to play into Reagan's hands with bluster and threats of terrorist reprisal. As one put it: "Gadhafi is the worst spokesman for his country."

Despite all this, the Europeans said they felt Gadhafi was serious in requesting direct negotiations with the incoming administration of George Bush. They also said more moderate members of his government were encouraging such proposals.

"People in the government...believed that the policy of confrontation in the mind of Gadhafi would lead to disaster," one said.

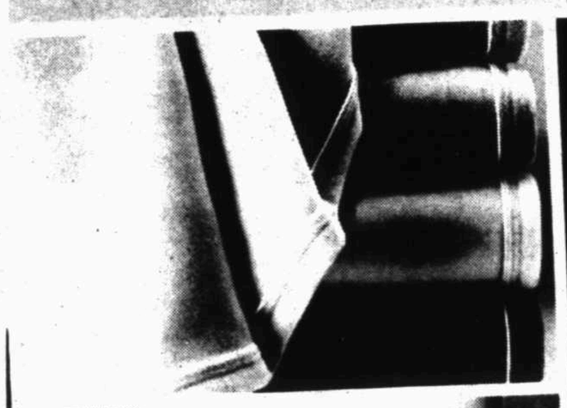

In the past year, Libya has tried to improve relations with Europe and its North African neighbors, according to the diplomats.

Most shops and cafes in Tripoli were closed a year ago. Now they are open, although poorly supplied.

A few blue-and-white sack dresses from Tunisia hung in a clothing store. The next window held a sparse display of faucets and other plumbing supplies. Cans of Pepsi-Cola rested on nearly empty cafe shelves.

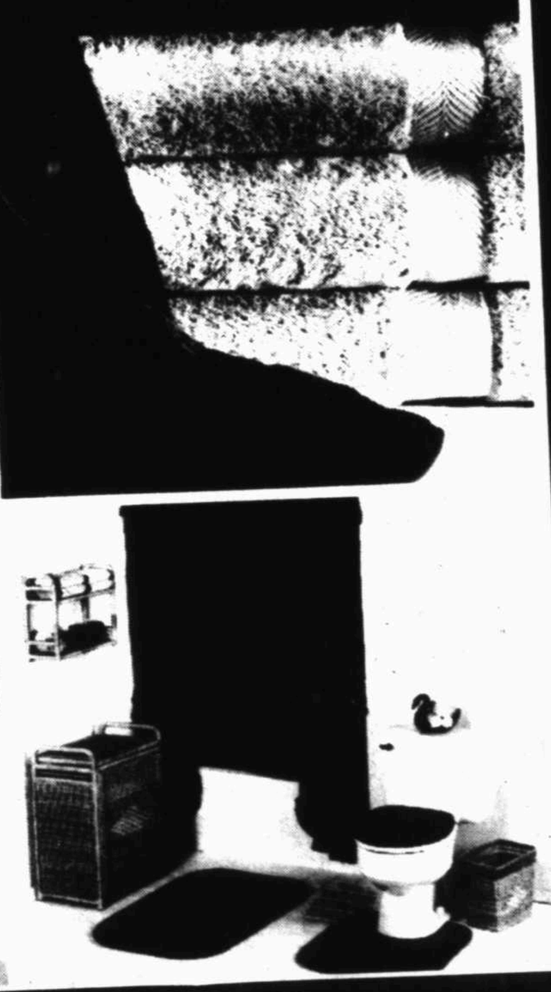

Libyans now can talk and travel more freely, but diplomats and others said the slight liberalization has created problems for Gadhafi. They said a growing, more organized opposition worries him and there are signs of greater activism among Moslem fundamentalists.

More oil union arrests expected

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The powerful Oil Workers Union has been left with a leadership vacuum after the jailing of its longtime leaders on homicide and weapons charges. Leading analysts called the arrests a political move.

Government sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, have indicated more arrests are expected.

The arrests this week of union boss Joaquin Hernandez Galicia and 50 others, including its secretary-general, carried a message from new President Carlos Salinas de Gotari for other unions, the newspaper Excelsior said in a front-page column Friday. Salinas was inaugurated last month.

"The dramatic arrest of (Hernandez Galicia) and his closest associates should be seen not as a normal legal action, as the attorney general is uselessly depicting it, but as a presidential decision, 100 percent political, which is covered by a thin veil of legality," wrote columnist Lorenzo Meyer, of the prestigious Colegio de Mexico, a graduate school and think tank.

"With the fall of (Hernandez Galicia) all the labor and union leaders who emerged and prospered in the shadow of the state are placed at the disposition of the government and in quite a vulnerable position."

Gaston Garcia Cantu, a government supporter, wrote in a column in Excelsior, "It's not a legal but a political problem; not between the judicial power and the delinquents but between the old and new society in our country." Most of Mexico's unions have been closely tied to the government.

Hernandez Galicia and Salinas have been at odds since Salinas, as budget secretary, began cutting into the 200,000-member union's control of contracts with Pemex, the state oil monopoly.

The union long has been known to have weapons, Meyer said.

The Attorney General's Office said 200 Uzi submachine guns were found when soldiers and federal agents burst into Hernandez Galicia's home Tuesday in the northeastern city of Ciudad Madero and arrested him.

A federal agent was killed in the shootout.

The Excelsior news service reported Friday that the Attorney General's Office has asked Interpol, the international police agency, to help find and arrest the former mayor of Reynosa, across the Rio Grande from McAllen, Texas.

Hernandez Galicia told investigators the former mayor, Jose Cruz Contreras, arranged the arms shipment, and that the weapons were smuggled from the United States, the Attorney General's Office said.

Union chief's wealth to be investigated

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A labor chief famed for his Las Vegas gambling exploits faces an inquiry into the source of his wealth as part of the crackdown on the leadership of the Oil Workers Union, government sources said Saturday.

Former Sen. Salvador Barragan Camacho has already been charged with possession of illegal weapons. Barragan Camacho, the union's secretary-general until last week, declared his innocence on the weapons charges early Saturday from a bed at the Cardiological Hospital.

He checked into the hospital complaining of heart trouble last week after federal officials raided the fortress-like home of his mentor and the union's top leader, Joaquin Hernandez Galicia.

Authorities also raided Barragan Camacho's home in Mexico City, confiscating several high-caliber weapons, ammunition and silencers.

A search of his $75,000, bulletproof limousine turned up more than $1 million in jewelry, cash and bars of silver. The jewelry included a gold bracelet that authorities said weighed almost half a pound and several gold medals from gambling tournaments.

Barragan Camacho was the last of the 51 suspects to enter a plea in the crackdown on the Oil Workers Union.

Government sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, have indicated more arrests are expected. The sources also said there will be an investigation into Barragan Camacho's "unexplained riches."

The former senator was an enthusiastic patron of Las Vegas casinos. He once reportedly gambled away more than $1 million in a matter of minutes.

Man claims to be 135 years old

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — To live 135 years you need Islam, fresh food, mountain air and farming, according to an Iranian man who claims to be the oldest alive.

The Islamic Republic News Agency reported Saturday that Karam Ahmadi, of Kalan village in western Ilam province, is 135 years old and still working his farm.

Ahmadi claims never to have taken any modern medication, according to IRNA, which was monitored in Nicosia. The IRNA story was based on a report in the daily Kayhan newspaper.

It said that in addition to farming, Ahmadi still takes his sheep to pasture and collects wood for his winter fuel. He has five children and 65 grandchildren or great-grandchildren.

Earthquake rattles Iran

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Tremors measuring up to 4.8 on the Richter scale have shaken Iran's southern Fars province but caused no casualties or damage, the Islamic Republic News Agency said today.

The agency, monitored in Cyprus, quoted the Shiraz Seismological Center as saying a quake measuring 4.8 struck the cities of Larestan and Bastak late Friday.

IRNA said several other moderate tremors were reported Friday night and this morning but gave no further details.

In 1988, at least 30 tremors measuring from 3.0 to 4.8 rocked the quake-prone Fars region without causing any injuries or damage, IRNA said.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. A quake of around 5 can cause considerable damage.

Cartel solidarity urged

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — OPEC Secretary-General Subroto said solidarity among the cartel's 13 member nations was the main reason for a recent rise in oil prices, a Saudi Arabian newspaper reported today.

The newspaper Al-Nadwa quoted Subroto as saying in an interview that cooperation from non-OPEC oil producers along with dwindling stockpiles as demand rises, partly because of winter, also contributed to the increase.

"Solidarity of OPEC member states after the last OPEC conference is the most important reason (for the hike), but this strength hinges primarily on the extent of adherence to the terms of the last agreement," Subroto was quoted as saying.

Two Palestinian girls die, 14 wounded in clash

JERUSALEM (AP) — Two Palestinian girls died Saturday from bullet wounds suffered in clashes with Israeli soldiers, and hospital officials said troops shot and wounded at least 14 other Palestinians, mostly teen-agers, in the occupied lands.

The deaths brought to four the number of young Arabs killed by army gunfire in two days and raised to 355 the number of Palestinians killed in the 13-month-old uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Fifteen Israelis have died.

In annexed east Jerusalem, police fired tear gas to disperse Arab stone-throwers. Israel radio said authorities safely dismantled a bomb left at a major road junction near the city.

In east Jerusalem's Mukassed Hospital, 14-year-old Rana Al-Masri died of wounds suffered in a Jan. 7 clash in the West Bank city of Nablus, the army said. Arab reports said she was shot in the head with a plastic bullet.

Residents in Nablus called a strike to mourn the girl's death, and Arab students left schools to march in protest of the killing, an Arab reporter in the city said.

Two Palestinians — a teen-ager and a 20-year-old man — were shot in the legs in ensuing confrontations with Israeli troops, Arab doctors said.

A 12-year-old Palestinian girl, Hanadi Abu-Sultan, died at the Tel Hashomer Hospital near Tel Aviv after troops shot her in the head in a Jan. 10 clash at the Shati refugee camp in Gaza Strip, the military command said.

On Friday, two 15-year-old Palestinians died after being shot by troops in clashes.

The army, in an apparent effort to prevent disturbances, clamped a curfew on Shati, a beachside shantytown in Gaza City housing about 42,000 Palestinians.

Curfews were also imposed on Rafah, Deir el-Balah and Nuseirat camps, which have a combined population of almost 100,000.

Hospital officials in Gaza said a 35-year-old man was wounded in the leg and a 17-year-old Arab from Rafah was transferred to Tel Hashomer in serious condition after a bullet struck him in the head.

At least 10 other Palestinians, aged 13 to 19, were wounded in stone-throwing clashes with troops in the Rafah, Khan Yunis and Bureij camps, doctors at Nasser and Ahli Arab hospitals said.

Merchants in Gaza continued a commercial strike begun Friday to protest Israeli raids to collect taxes. Non-payment of taxes is a major tactic of the revolt against Israeli occupation.

Also Saturday, a senior Israeli defense official, Uri Lubrani, said the PLO has not conducted any attacks against northern Israel or Israel's self-proclaimed security zone in Lebanon since PLO chairman Yasser Arafat renounced terrorism.

The zone is a 6- to 10-mile-wide strip along the border that Israel created in 1985.

Texans oppose Congressional pay increase

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

At least two congressman and or senator from Texas are taking issue with a proposed 50 percent pay raise for top governmental officials despite President Reagan's endorsement of the package.

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, a San Antonio Republican, during a visit to Midland last week told the Reporter-Telegram that the amount of the pay raise and process that allows it to go into effect "cannot be justified in any way.

"A 50 percent increase, when we're trying to balance the budget and reduce the deficit, seems completely inappropriate," Smith said. "We will be the laughing stock of the country, and should be, if that pay raise goes into effect as it stands."

The raise would increase the pay for members of Congress and federal judges would to $135,000 a year unless both houses of Congress reject it by Feb. 8.

Along with the salary hike, the Commission on Executive, Legislative and Judicial Salaries urged Congress to abolish outside income such as speaking engagements.

Smith said at least 60 or 70 members of Congress have co-sponsored legislation that would require a roll call vote on the package and any future pay increase proposals.

Among the individuals endorsing Smith's actions is Odessa Congressman Larry Combest, who termed the pay raise "absolutely ridiculous," especially at a time when the U.S. is battling hard to reduce spending and get a handle on the federal budget deficit.

If the proposal for a roll call fails, Combest and other legislators during the next two years will seek passage of legislation that would retroactively repeal the congressional pay raise, the congressman said.

This countermeasure would require that a congressional election occur between the time the pay hike proposal is initially voted on and when it would take effect. That would give voters an opportunity to "vote their consciences" on the measure, he said.

What really upsets Combest about the proposal, he said, is that the leadership of the Democratic controlled House has said there won't even be a vote on the congressional pay raise proposal.

Another opponent of the pay hike, Republican U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas,said he believes that the Senate is likely to reject the raise as it has in past years when the House allowed pay hikes to take effect.

Gramm said he will vote against the package.

"At a time when we've got the budget challenge we have, I think it would be wrong for Congress to vote itself this big pay increase ... There's an old adage that says, 'Practice what you preach.' And if Congress begins by telling itself 'no' on the pay increase, we are going to have a lot more credibility when it comes to telling other people 'no,'" the senator suggested.

Under the pay hike proposal, members of Congress and federal district judges, who both now make $89,500 a year, would be paid $135,000. The House speaker would receive an increase from $115,000 to $175,000, and majority and minority leaders would be boosted from $99,500 to $155,000. Top executive-branch officials such as Cabinet members also would get raises, from their current $99,500 to $155,000.

In addition, the president's pay would increase to about $350,000 from the current $200,000, which has been fixed since 1969. However, such a hike would not take effect until 1993 because of a constitutional prohibition on raising a president's pay during his term.

President Reagan could have modified the proposal made last December by the commission. Under the law, unless both the House and Senate vote to head off the pay increases, they will automatically take effect 30 days after the plan's submittal to Congress.

The pay recommendations directly affect about 2,500 top federal jobs and indirectly impact another 10,000 high-level positions whose pay is tied to salaries in the top echelon.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Stanton's Saunders 'dean of sheriffs'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — You couldn't find a better next-door neighbor than Dan Saunders.

And that's pretty much what Saunders is to the 5,000 people who live and work in rural Martin County and its home-spun county-seat — Stanton.

Saunders, who at 63 has been the Martin County sheriff since 1953, is amiable, understanding, temperate, compassionate and outright nice.

The sheriff seems to be on the threshold of sainthood.

He's the "Dean of Texas Sheriffs," which means he has been in office longer than any of Texas' current 254 sheriffs.

Saunders is right proud of living so long and being elected term after term. He has been challenged by an opponent only once — in 1980 — since he first was elected to office in 1952.

"I made a mistake," he explained. "The rumor got out that I was not going to run" for re-election.

So another Democrat, who hadn't a prayer, challenged the gentleman-sheriff and lost.

"I'm a firm believer in dancing with the one that brung you," said the sheriff, a "dyed-in-the-wool" Democrat, with a smile.

"I believe in staying with the party. I don't believe in changing parties," he said, "and I don't believe in splitting a ticket. That would be just like saying I love one of my sons more than the other.

"When they bury me, they can say, 'Well, there lies a loyal Democrat,'" he said. "Loyalty is one of biggest words in my vocabulary."

WELL, THE SHERIFF'S work here is not finished and neither is he. And "they" already are talking about Dan Saunders — a country boy and a farmer's son who was raised on a cotton farm at neighboring Lenorah.

From childhood, when he got acquainted with amiable Martin County sheriffs such as Milt Yater and Morris Zimmerman, Saunders was impressed.

Particularly, he recalls Zimmerman. Way back, young Dan Saunders "respected and admired" the sheriff who, like Saunders is today, was a friend of youth. Zimmerman "kept a lot of kids out of trouble," Saunders said. The old sheriff wore "a good hat" and drove a new "black Ford" automobile.

"I thought he was rich," Saunders recalled. "I can see now he was just like me — had an overdraft and bought groceries on credit."

"He's solid in his ways — a fine fellow, sure is," said former Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan of Pampa, up in the Panhandle. Jordan, a 76-year-old Democrat, was sheriff for 38 years before he was defeated last year by a write-in candidate. Saunders succeeded Jordan as dean of Texas' sheriffs.

"I've known Dan since he was was a highway patrolman," said Jordan. "He's a nice boy — an exceptionally fine man and officer."

Gordon Johnson, an ex-lawman who is executive director of the 1874-founded Sheriffs Association of Texas, sized up Saunders as a "mighty fine individual. He's very attuned to the needs of his people."

SAUNDERS is a former president of the Sheriffs Association, whose 23,000 members include sheriffs, policemen, deputies, marshals, Texas Rangers and Federal Bureau of Investigation agents. One of the association's honored members was the late Midland County Sheriff Ed "Big Ed" Darnell, who served for 36 years. "I respected him greatly and learned a lot from him," Saunders said of Darnell.

Saunders is "a father-figure to rookie sheriffs," Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, 41, said of his colleague. "If a guy needs assistance, he is always there. He never turns anybody down. Seems like I've known him all of my life. Midland County couldn't have a better neighbor," Painter said of Saunders. "He's a wonderful person."

Saunders seems to fit the mold of the good Samaritan.

"I don't believe that anybody has ever called up Dan that he wouldn't help them," McGilvray said.

"He doesn't help people for what they can do for him. He helps them because he likes to help people. It's a different approach than what a lot of people take."

The genteel sheriff has a knack for soothing irate folks, resolving problems, solving cases, and befriending the forsaken. He doesn't holster a sidearm, although he has a cabinet full of rifles and six-shooters and a well-used Bible on his desk. He doesn't even hunt and says he doesn't have a hobby.

"HE WILL SOOTHE you down and take care of your problems," McGilvray said. "Dan is able to handle them (the accused and criminals) and still be their friends."

And the sheriff, who earns $27,400 a year in a county that's relatively rich in cotton, cattle and oil production, "is not in this job for the money," McGilvray said. "That (salary) is no money for the top peace officer in the county. He's in the job because he loves it."

Midland City Council could boast new faces in 1990

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

New faces will grace the Midland City Council after 1990 balloting, as three current office holders — including one considering a Bush administration post — either will not or may not seek re-election.

Marcum

A fourth council member, Oralia "Lilly" Corrales, said she will file for re-election.

Fifth-term Councilman Gordon Marcum III said he was contacted Friday by parties in Washington, D.C., who asked whether he would be interested in serving in either the Department of Energy or Department of Interior.

Marcum said if he's offered either post, he won't be seeking a sixth term on council as an at-large candidate.

"It would have to be the kind of position would be high enough to have some influence," said the president of of Marcum Drilling Co., who has lived in Midland for nearly 35 years.

Should either position not come to pass, Marcum said, "I'll probably run, but there's still the other question of LULAC."

That's because the League of United Latin American Citizens had threatened the city with a lawsuit last fall in an effort to convert the remaining two council seats from at-large slots to single-member districts.

City Attorney David Reagan said his office has not heard from LULAC since the group last met with city officials in October.

And Reagan admits he doesn't know what to make of it. "We (the city) have no idea why. We've been waiting for them to get back to us, but as of now nothing's happened," he said.

In the meantime, at-large Councilwoman Katie Heck announced she will not seek a third term. "I've served two terms and that's enough. It's someone else's turn now."

Heck, who served five years on the planning and zoning commission and four years on council, said she felt she devoted enough of her life to public service.

"You come in and you wonder just how well a city is run. I can say this now, it runs very well. I'm not really a watchdog. Some people are. But this city certainly doesn't need it. The more I here of other cities problems, the more I realize just how good we have it here," she said.

District 1 Councilman Bill Williams, president of Bill Williams Tire Center and owner of a local sporting goods store, said he doesn't have any idea what he's doing.

"Two months ago I would have told you I was running, but right now I don't have a feeling about which direction I'm headed. A lot of my time has changed."

UTBP won't be defendant in 1987 civil suit

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The University of Texas Systems and UT Permian Basin will not be defendants in a civil lawsuit filed in June 1987 by the former director of the Center for Energy, Technology and Economic Diversification in a trial that will be held in Ector County's 358th District.

Troy York, contacted at his home in Gaithersburg, Md., Saturday said he has not been notified when District Judge Bill McCoy will hear the case against UTPB President Duane Leach and Warren Gardner, UTPB vice president for academic affairs.

On Jan. 4, Michael McLeaish, York's Odessa attorney, agreed to a motion filed by Texas Assistant Attorney General Kevin T. O'Hanlon asking that the 358th District Court judge grant a partial summary judgment that removed UT Systems and UTPB as defendants in the suit because action was barred by sovereign immunity.

However, in granting a partial summary judgment, McCoy let stand allegations of fraudulent inducement and negligent misrepresentation against Leach and Gardner, as individuals, in connection with the Jan. 19, 1987, firing of York.

Following advice from his attorney, York declined Saturday to comment on the lawsuit because the trial is pending.

York filed the lawsuit in June 1987, naming Leach and Gardner in their official UTPB capacities and as agents of the UT Systems, as well as individually. The suit specifically named the UT Systems and UT Permian Basin as defendants.

McCoy's order granting partial summary judgment dismissed the allegations against UT Systems, UT Permian Basin and against Leach and Gardner in their official capacities.

The judge's action clears the way for trial to be held on the initial suit or on an amended petition that alleges fraudulent inducement and negligent misrepresentation that solely names Leach and Gardner as individuals.

The original lawsuit filed by York sought compensatory damages of "not less than $8.5 million" and punitive damages of "not less than $1 million," together with "attorneys' fees, costs, interest, and such other and further relief as this court deems appropriate."

The original complaint claimed York had suffered damages at the hands of the UT Systems, UT Permian Basin, Leach and Gardner as state agents and individuals, due to "fraud, negligence, third-party interference with contract and violations of his due process rights."

York's petition notes that on Sept. 6, 1985, following several months of negotiation, he signed a "letter contract" sent to him by Leach that assured him the academic rank of "research professor of business management with tenure."

According to the suit, the letter also assured York of all UT System benefits, including $965 of FICA liability paid by the State of Texas. York also was to receive relocation expenses for him and his family, a vehicle provided by UT Permian Basin for Center business and an expense account, according to the suit.

Prior to accepting the position offered by UTPB through Leach and Gardner, York had held several federal and state government positions as a senior scientist, planner and agency executive, according to the petition, which added that York had accumulated "21 years of service with the U.S. government."

GARY OTT

The speaker was a friend of mine who had just read a newspaper article about another child gone bad. I forget all the details, but basically the kid had gotten in trouble with the law at an early age and from there things got worse. He was in and out of reformatory schools and eventually pulled the trigger in a bungled hold-up attempt. A store clerk was killed and the youth was arrested for first degree murder.

Ott

It was at that point in the article that my friend made his Ward Cleaver remark.

He was being a smart aleck, of course, but he also made a valid point.

Old Ward and June Cleaver had it easy. They may have thought Eddie Haskell's influence on Wally and Beaver was giving them nightmares, but compared to what parents face today the Cleavers' life together was a piece of cake.

Nothing occurred that couldn't be handled by a heart-to-heart talk between father and son. Ward would march up to the Beaver's bedroom and within five minutes whatever problem had arisen would be solved.

Usually it was something terribly traumatic, like Beaver trading his brand new winter coat for a bullfrog.

But Ward would get to the bottom of the mess and by the time the show ended everyone would be happy. Wally and Beaver would celebrate by having an extra glass of milk at the dinner table and Ward would give June a loving wink as the final credits appeared on the screen.

Life was good back then.

But the question remains: How would Ward and June Cleaver cope with modern-day society?

Let's examine the situation.

June, no doubt, would remain much the same. Whenever one of her sons would get into trouble she would say, "Just wait til your father gets home." Mothers have been saying that for hundreds of years, and I doubt seriously they are going to change anytime soon.

And why should they? It works. Fathers, as a general rule, strike more fear into the hearts of their children than do mothers.

At least they used to.

Now I'm not so sure.

Somehow, I don't picture the father-son conversations of today being quite as simple and easy-to-understand as those of the 1950s.

For one thing, instead of trading away his winter coat, Beaver probably would be accused of burning down the principal's office. While Ward would attempt to be understanding, he might be forced to change his strategy.

He would still march up to the Beaver's bedroom for a heart-to-heart discussion, but that's where most similarities would end.

From there, it would go something like this:

Ward enters the room. Beaver, with the stereo blaring, is leaning against the wall with his eyes closed. He is making grunting noises to the music. Ward turns off the music. Beaver slowly opens his eyes and attempts to focus in on his surroundings. He sees Ward and gives him a bored look.

Ward clears his throat and says, "Wally, would you mind leaving the room. I need to talk to Beaver."

Now it is just Ward and the Beav.

Ward begins. "Beaver," he says. "Did you burn down the principal's office?"

Beaver laughs and cleans his fingernails with a switchblade. He glances up at Ward and says, "What's it to you?"

"Well, we can't have that."

"Why not?" Beaver says, waving the switchblade about. "The old coot made me mad. He wouldn't let us listen to rock music during our English examination. He's so unreasonable."

"Maybe so," Ward says. "But I'm going to have to punish you, just the same. You'll be grounded for two weeks. No TV. No going out with your friends. No movie this Saturday afternoon. Do you understand?"

"That's not fair," Beaver screams. "Besides, Eddie Haskell made me do it."

"Really?" Ward says. "I suspected him all along. He's just such a bad influence. You just forget the punishment. Everything is going to be fine."

He pats Beaver on the head and leaves the room.

On second thought, maybe things haven't changed.

As long as there are Eddie Haskells around, parents will never believe the worst about their kids.

Thank God for Eddie Haskells.

AIDS bill proposed

AUSTIN (AP) — A state senator is proposing legislation that would create a felony offense for knowingly transmitting the AIDS virus.

"Anyone who knowingly exposes another person to the AIDS virus is as good as taking a gun out and shooting them," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is an affliction in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a wide variety of infections and cancers.

UTPB

York's petition further states he told Leach and Gardner "he would only abandon his long-standing and secure government job in Washington D.C. for a tenured position as a full professor at UTPB, with a compensation and benefits package equal to or better than his then-existing U.S. government income and benefits.

In August 1985, after submitting information Gardner told him would be required, York called Gardner to determine if the UT Regents "had accepted his publications as support for a full professorship," the suit says. During that phone conversation, York alleges, "Gardner stated that the regents had approved the record (of publications submitted) and plaintiff's full professorship."

After receiving the letter contract from Leach in September 1985 and before signing it, York alleges he again sought to assure himself that "appropriate authorities in Austin had approved the contract sent by Leach on behalf of UT Regents." During a phone call, he says, "Gardner answered in substance that the contract had been approved in Austin."

However, in ordering that York "take nothing" on his claim of contract liability against the state, McCoy said in his partial summary judgment that "defendants offered summary judgment proof that no contract for tenure was approved by the Board of Regents of the University of Texas System."

York's suit alleges that, relying on these representations, he signed the written employment contract and delivered it to President Leach, retired from his secure U.S. government position and gave up rights to significant income and benefits, borrowed money to move to Texas, abandoned personal business ventures and income, and, in late October 1985, moved to Odessa.

About a month after arriving in Odessa, York alleges he received information "suggesting that, despite prior representations to the contrary, his appointments as a tenured full professor might not have been approved" by the UT Board of Regents. On Dec. 11, 1985, York wrote a letter to Leach "reiterating" his earlier reliance on the signed contract.

Neither Leach nor Gardner ever "contested York's letter in writing," according to the suit. On Dec. 12, the petition states, he met with Leach and Gardner.

According to the suit, neither man "denied the validity or effectiveness of the employment contract and the explicit tenure provision." However, Leach that day, York alleges, "heatedly admonished York for writing the letter and told York that such letters should not be written."

In an effort to determine if the employment contract he believed he had was still valid, York contends he asked Leach if he should move his family to Odessa. "In response," the suit states, "Leach directed York to move his family to Odessa, Texas, thereby ratifying the contract."

"On Jan. 19, 1987," York states in his petition, "Defendants, represented by Leach, willfully, maliciously, intentionally, and in reckless disregard of plaintiff's contractual rights, breached the explicit written employment contract by improperly terminating the contract."

York specifically alleges Leach and Gardner, "acting on their own individual behalf and within the scope of their authority as agents of UT and UTPB," fraudulently induced him to sign the employment contract through "negligently made material misrepresentations" that caused him "to retire from a career with the U.S. government."

It is on the allegations of fraudulent inducement and negligent misrepresentation against Leach and Gardner, as individuals, that the case is expected to proceed when it comes to trial in 358th District Court.

Leach and Gardner were both in Austin Friday and Saturday and were unavailable for comment.

ELECT

Williams said if he does decide to run, he won't be announcing it until March 1, the day before the filing deadline. "I'm trying to see if I'll have the time for two more years."

District 2 Councilwoman Corrales said she will be seeking another term, despite some health problems. "I've already written my (to her constituents) letter. I know I can still do the job."

Mrs. Corrales, who is seeking a third term, said she wants to see several projects through that she was instrumental in pushing, particularly the Lamesa Road realignment, which she referred to as the cornerstone to that area's redevelopment.

"It's a lot like building a house. Once you've started you want to finish it," said Corrales, who also has been active in trying to push redevelopment of the Lee Street area as well as the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corp.

In the meantime, City Secretary Bill Clanton announced Feb. 20 as the first day to file for municipal office. The deadline is March 2.

"I normally don't receive inquiries about what's offices are open, but I received seven to eight just in December and that's pretty unusual," said Clanton.

Local elections will be held May 6 — the first Saturday of the month.

Works shown at Midland College

From Staff Reports

Three-dimensional creations from two Texas artists showing their works at Midland College are sure to evoke smiles, laughter, some quizzical looks, but always interest. Opening Monday are works by Princess Cook of San Antonio and Greg Elliott of Dallas. The show remains on display at McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, through Feb. 10.

Cook returned to her studies full-time after several years of working for attorneys. She earned her BFA degree at the University of Texas-San Antonio, spent three years travelling with her husband, then returned to UTSA to obtain her MFA degree. She now is a part-time faculty member at the San Antonio Art Institute, creating most of her work at her home studio at nearby Leon Springs.

She had exhibited prize-winners at shows throughout Texas and the Southwest. Her works also have been exhibited in Utah, Nevada, Ore., and Washington, D.C.

Elliott has a varied background, which is reflected in his works. He received his BFA and MA degrees from Stephen F. Austin State University and recently completed his MFA degree at South Methodist University. In addition to teaching at SFA and SMU, he has taught at Brookhaven College, Dallas County Community College District, was Texas Artist in Residence for the Ysleta Independent School District, and taught ceramics for the City of Nacogdoches.

He also has worked for Schmid Mold Company as a sculptor and master mold maker, and for Loma Ceramics as a consultant to customers as well as kiln repair and glaze research. His employment also has been as a building painter, a welder and machine operator.

SHERIFF

"It (the pay) figures out to $3.35 an hour," said Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport, who, like the sheriff, puts in long hours — days, nights and weekends — and helps out people from town or country.

Saunders figures no man "amounted to a hill of beans" if he worked only eight hours a day.

Saunders works double-time and worries a bit to boot. He said that he is concerned about the county's Hispanic population. "I feel that I know Mexican custom and culture as well as any man alive," he says.

"A sheriff has lot of power," he reflected. "I may under-do my power, but I have never over-done it or used this badge on my left chest to abuse people. I treat them with dignity."

And Saunders, who knows the county and its people well, said that "There is not a farm or a ranch in Martin County that I can't go to at 3 o'clock in the morning, and that sure helps me serve people."

Saunders, who gets along well with judges, other officials, and lawyers, said that he thanks "God we live in a land where we can be tried before a jury of our peers.

"It may not be a perfect system, but it is the best in the world, and I respect it.

"Every man owes his home county a little rent," Saunders said. By that, he means that "every man that makes his living in and out of Martin County" should serve on a public board — school, city or others. Community service "makes them a much better citizen," he said.

BUTCH HOWARD, the Martin County treasurer who farms and ranches, said Saunders would be sorely missed were he to leave office.

"He's going to be hard to do without one of these days," Howard said. "Real hard. He's one of a kind. There will never be another like him."

Saunders himself had something to say about that time when he bails out of office.

"Oh, I know I can be replaced by a sprig of flowers and a shovelful of dirt," the sheriff said. "But I worry about who is going to replace me when I leave here.

"I don't mean by that I worry about who will solve the murders and burglaries and thefts. Someone else can do that," Saunders said. "I worry about who will look after the young people and the old people. The ones in between can about halfway root for themselves."

AN ABUNDANT LIFE- Part 3

CAUSES AND EFFECT - Everything and every activity, from the tiniest atom to the whole universe, are the results of the natural forces of cause and effect. Therefore, it is necessary to learn them and to use them in order to bring about whatever it is that we need or want. Simply said-we must Give in order to Get. We must pay the price to have the things! This is a divine principle.

DESIRE - The Great Energizer. Desire is the absolute starting point for all achievement whether for the necessities of food, clothing and shelter or for anything else, the effort will be proportional to the desire. Feed it. Keep it hot.

Legislature facing far-reaching issues

Texans may have agreed to disagree over what is the most pressing issue facing state legislators as the 71st session of the Legislature got under way in Austin this week, but few will be willing to settle for the session to end without major steps being taken. Finding the work won't be the hard part, although arriving at a consensus on what to do regarding a particular topic typically isn't easy.

Workmen's compensation, campaign finance, the nagging problem of crime and the Texas prison system, welfare, judicial selection and on and on .... This session of the Legislature promises to challenge legislators to find solutions to matters affecting the quality of life for millions of Texans and, perhaps, even determining whether the state is capable of dealing with the changes it will face in the 1990's.

Gov. Bill Clements late this week released his legislative blueprint designed to stimulate the state's lagging economy and on most points we're in agreement with him. Clements called for workmen's compensation reform, tax exemptions for goods in transit and manufacturing equipment, retraining programs to get workers ready for incoming industry, establishment of a rural economic development fund, establishment of an export business-assistance fund and establishment of a product development fund.

The only real addition we have to the governor's list is one we consider even more important: public education. Recent reports that have placed Texas at the second highest illiteracy rate in the nation make it readily clear that the state has only begun to "reform" education. Much work still needs to be done and legislators should place public education's future at the forefront of their deliberations because there is little that affects all Texas families more or can have a more direct impact on lives.

The economic situation now facing the state is critical and Clements' plan to remedy the matter appears realistic although it does carry a price tag of $35 million. Clements says the plan would reap the state good dividends. Whether it's in the form of businesses threatened by a workmen's compensation system that creates unacceptable costs and fails to protect individual workers, spiraling medical malpractice costs that force doctors out of practice to the detriment of patients or a savings and loan industry that begs to be controlled in a better way, legislators need to pay attention to matters affecting the business climate in Texas.

None of the issues facing legislators will be easy to resolve. But the people of Texas will be ill-served if their lawmakers act as though the state faces no challenges in the 1990's. Recent census projections show that Texas is a growing state and will continue to grow in coming years.

That stresses the fact Texas needs insightful, courageous leadership more now than at any other time in recent years. In this session, legislators should, literally, work for the future of Texas.

Another View:

A 'museum piece'

President Reagan's proposed $1.15 trillion budget for fiscal 1990 is, frankly, a museum piece. It's a document cast in amber. It stakes out, yet again, the themes of the Reagan presidency. Those themes served the nation well — as President Reagan noted in Wednesday night's valedictory. But the budget he proposed has only marginal relevance to the needs of the nation at the beginning of a new decade.

Fortunately, the incoming administration recognizes that the Reagan budget is more ritual than realism, although it does meet political and strategic needs of the Bush administration. In fact, Bush's designated budget director, Richard Darman, helped prepare the document.

Darman's work no doubt laid the groundwork for the real challenge. That challenge involves wrestling with a Democratic-controlled Congress to meet long-delayed needs of the nation, even as a burdensome budget deficit bears down.

Reagan's request for a 2 percent increase in defense spending, over and above inflation, typifies the document's passing relevance. President-elect Bush and congressional leaders have made it clear that it's time to hold the line on defense spending. Congress is likely to slash more than $300 billion from the Reagan administration's long-range defense-spending plan.

The Reagan defense request does offer the new administration several fat targets for cutting. The challenge will be to cut wisely, so as not to weaken the nation's defenses. We have no worries that Bush will provide for an adequate defense, even with the cuts.

By holding the defense increase at least to the rate of inflation, Bush gives himself operating room on spending for pent-up social needs. He has proposed large increases for education, for the Head Start program, for expanded Medicaid payments to low-income pregnant women and their babies and for environmental cleanup. The new president also will have to deal with other expensive cleanup obligations involving the savings-and-loan industry mess and dirty nuclear-weapons plants.

The Bush proposals, and additional proposals that Congress is sure to recommend, are investments as much as they are expenditures. They are investments that a farsighted nation will not hesitate to make.

Yet, we will hesitate, for one very sobering reason: a budget deficit that will rise again this year to $161.5 billion. Reagan predicts that the deficit can be squeezed to $92.5 billion next year, but that prediction depends on highly optimistic economic forecasts.

Reagan also proposes closing 82 federal programs, which is about as likely now as when he made similar proposals in earlier years. Some programs no doubt need to be abolished, but that's not how the budget is going to be balanced.

"It's a darn good strategic budget for Ronald Reagan going out and George Bush coming in," Joseph R. Wright Jr., Reagan's budget director, said earlier this week. He probably is right about that. But what will emerge after Congress and the Bush administration get down to business will be a far cry from the piece of history the White House offered this week.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Jan. 15, the 15th day of 1989. There are 350 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On this date:

In 1777, the people of New Connecticut declared their independence. (The tiny republic later became the state of Vermont.)

In 1870, the Democratic Party was represented as a donkey for the first time in a cartoon by Thomas Nast in Harper's Weekly.

Bush should use 'a refreshing notion'

WASHINGTON — President Dwight Eisenhower was asked by a reporter to explain a controversial White House resolution. But Ike didn't know what the reporter was talking about. "Now you are telling me something about my own administration I never heard of," he said. "Maybe I was fishing that day. I don't know."

Jack Anderson

At the time, reporters were slightly alarmed and more than slightly amused at the president's ignorance.

In retrospect, Eisenhower looks pretty good, not because he didn't know what was going on under his nose, but because he was willing to admit he didn't know.

What a refreshing notion — a president who doesn't profess to know everything. It's time for another refreshing notion — a press that doesn't expect its president to know everything.

The fear of appearing uninformed or being caught without a scripted answer drove Ronald Reagan away from press conferences. They became such a rare event that reporters were forced to shout questions at him over the roar of a helicopter rotor. Then Reagan looked not simply uninformed but hard of hearing. And he looked a bit surprised, too, as if he had expected that the questions would go away simply because he didn't create a forum for them to be asked.

Instead of going away, the questions intensified. At the few press conferences Reagan held, reporters were so starved for news that they came on like hounds who hadn't seen a fox for ages. Small wonder that the fox didn't show his head very often.

We can't promise George Bush that reporters will be any less hungry when he holds his first press conferences. But we do promise that if Bush holds weekly press conferences, familiarity will breed a kinder and gentler press. Reporters who confront the president once every six months are so eager for news that they will record his every twitch. Reporters who see him every week stop caring if he twitches or mispronounces a word or scratches his nose. It simply isn't news anymore.

There are bound to be close encounters of the harsh kind. If Bush seeks to avoid those, he is the wimp that voters first feared he might be. Everyone knows the famous Harry Truman line, "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen." The circumstances surrounding that gem have been forgotten. Truman was referring to those who criticized the press for abusing the president.

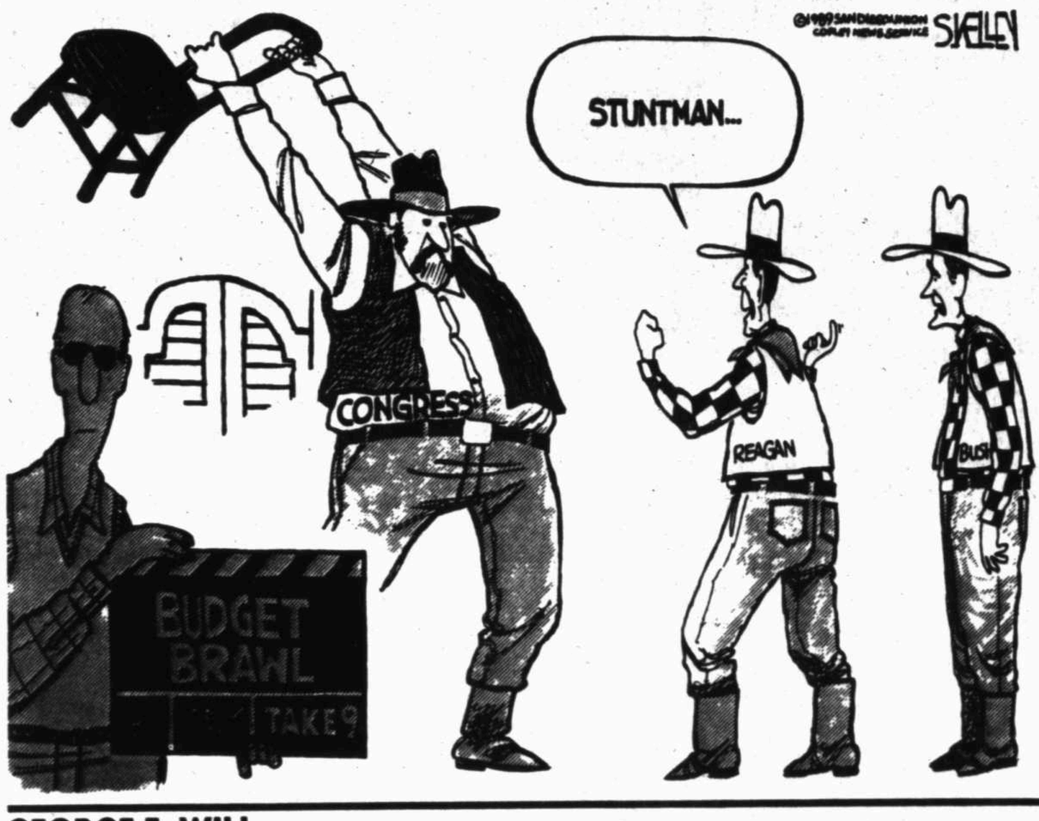

Truman really liked reporters, but more important, he understood their job — to keep the public informed, with or without the consent of the president. He wasn't afraid to answer a prying question with, "None of your business," but he also realized that a reporter would ask again if it was the public's business.

Eisenhower was coached on diction and deportment by actor Robert Montgomery, but the Hollywood touch didn't keep the grandfatherly Ike from saying "I don't know."

Omniscience reared its ugly head with John F. Kennedy who was the first packaged and scripted president. His aides gave the silent treatment to reporters who criticized Kennedy. More than once, Kennedy angrily canceled a White House newspaper subscription and summoned reporters for a dressing down. In public he was witty, but rarely candid.

Lyndon Johnson was neither witty nor candid. Then along came Richard Nixon who simply hated the press, and any hope of an easy give-and-take was history. Gerald Ford tried, but after Nixon, the press hounds had their appetites whetted and the clumsy Ford was an easy target for reporters who liked to come by their "news" easily. Jimmy Carter was no match as a fox. He was more of a bunny.

GEORGE F. WILL

Bookselling remains matter of personality

George F. Will

Intellectuals like loitering in bookstores and they like detecting signs of the decline of the West. They can do both simultaneously on Jan. 22 when Scribner's bookstore closes its doors after 75 years. But discerning large cultural portents in small commercial decisions is usually, as in this case, a mistake. Bookselling is still a sphere of robust pluralism, even healthy eccentricity, among the more than 21,000 bookstores.

The 10-story Scribner's building opened in 1913 and until 1984 housed the offices of Scribner's publishing company, which was founded in 1846 and once dominated American publishing as no house has since done. Its authors included Edith Wharton, Edmund Wilson, Ring Lardner and Winston Churchill. In a fifth-floor office the celebrated editor Max Perkins dealt with Fitzgerald, Hemingway and the chaotic manuscripts of Thomas Wolfe. One of the first shoppers downstairs was Teddy Roosevelt.

But all that's beautiful drifts away like the waters, and when has beauty been a match for the iron laws of real-estate values? The basic problem is that Manhattan is made up of just 14,000 acres and those in midtown are so pricey that it is hard for book sales to pay the rent.

It can be done. There are several Fifth Avenue bookstores nearby. But the intractable problem is how to be sufficiently profitable while being interesting. What makes a bookstore worth supporting, or mourning, is a rich selection of slow as well as fast-moving titles drawn from back lists and from the smaller sources of the nearly 56,000 new titles published each year.

Away from the highest rent districts, bookselling on a small scale, as a haven of quirky individuality, is thriving, or at least surviving. Consider Bridge Street Books in Washington, D.C. It is the pride and joy of Philip Levy, 44, who in his bulky sweaters and unpressed slacks looks like what he is: a '60s radical who has come to terms with commerce.

Levy recalled, with middle-aged bemusement, an early crisis of conscience. He wanted to specialize in literature of the Left. Should he sell Henry Kissinger's memoirs? He did. Booksellers read election returns.

However, Levy's Georgetown store is a small island of individuality where his tastes and hunches are offered to the eclectic whims of bookstore browsers. He has packed about 8,000 titles into a two-story building 12 feet wide and 27 feet deep. He specializes in trade (high-quality) paperbacks and hardbacks, many of which you would not find in the sort of bookstores that sell board games and greeting cards.

His hardback best seller — he sold about 20 copies — during the Christmas season was Richard Posner's "Law and Literature" from the Harvard University Press. His second best seller was "1791: Mozart's Last Year." It is highly probable that no other bookstore in the nation had those two books at the top of its list. But other small stores had other odd lists because other proprietors exercised interesting discretion in what they decided to display.

One of the sublime delights of being an author is attending the teeming convention of the American Booksellers Association. There, you are apt to be told by a no-nonsense woman that she is "thinking about" ordering six, maybe even eight, copies of your book for her store, The Bookworm in Jackson, Miss. It is of course splendid when one of the large chains orders your book in the thousands, but there is a special pleasure in the personal judgments of these intense individualists who bring their interests to the attention of small portions of the reading public.

Among owners of, and aficionados of, small bookstores there is resentment of the big chains — Waldenbooks, B. Dalton, Barnes & Noble and Crown Books. The chains emphasize mass marketing and thus cater primarily to mass preferences. They enjoy economies of scale that enable them to get from publishers and give to customers discounts which small sellers cannot match.

But the existence of the chains does not mean the extinction of the small bookseller, any more than McDonald's has killed the neighborhood restaurant. Price isn't everything. Small bookstores survive because enough readers, like enough diners, will pay a bit more for the pleasures of personality.

So is the West doomed? Sure. So is the East. Everything is. Nothing lasts. Even the continents drift. Why should Scribner's stay there forever? But intellectuals are too easily convinced that commerce is homogenizing America. Bookselling, like the country it reflects, is still a bouillabaisse, not a bland puree.

RUSSELL BAKER

After all that nastiness comes the Nice Bush!

In Washington George Bush was being a swell guy again. "What a swell guy!" everybody was saying.

The reporters were reporting Bush niceneses that would have been unthinkable a few weeks ago when this very same George Bush was the Attila of the campaign trail.

Russell Baker

Would you believe, for instance, chatting like a regular guy with House Speaker Jim Wright about hunting and fishing!

And being nice about it while getting his hand shaken by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen!

Just a few months back he was talking about Jim Wright as though the speaker were a pool shark. And now, talking hunting and fishing with this same Wright.

Senator Bentsen is the same Senator Bentsen who said Dan Quayle was no Jack Kennedy. And what is Dan Quayle to George Bush? The one man in the whole world he wanted to stand just a heartbeat away, that's all.

It's hard to believe this is the George Bush of the autumnal sound bites and photo ops who captured the American voter by the ruthless way he put the boot into anybody who got in his way.

My first guess was that this isn't the same Bush at all, but a new Bush. Way back in the 1950s and 1960s whenever people started to get uneasy about Richard Nixon — lo and what do you know! — a new Nixon would be sprung on the country.

Reporters who were admitted to the Nixonian presence would announce that the old Nixon had been replaced by a new Nixon.

So could we have a new Bush among us? Maybe the factory that turned out all those old new Nixons has been retooled and has turned out a new Bush.

Trying this out on Washington people, I got an absolute turndown. People who know him say George Bush is not the kind of guy who's willing to slough himself off periodically so a new Bush can be issued to replace him.

A Bushian Republican insisted that what we are seeing now is the true Bush, or as he is known among Washington insiders, the Nice Bush.

The Nice Bush, apparently, is like your favorite uncle. He likes nothing better than sitting around talking about fishing and hunting.

If you're the speaker of the House and don't treat him nicely, he never holds it against you, but says, "Let me take you down to the ice-cream parlor and buy us a big sundae with plenty of hot fudge and whipped cream."

This Nice Bush was hurt when he started to run for president and Democrats called him a "wimp." His first inclination was to go on television and to deny that he was a wimp and say it really hurt his feelings when Democrats said he was, so that he wished they would be regular fellows and cut it out.

Only after students of mass psychology persuaded him this would be the same as slashing his wrists in prime time on all networks was he persuaded not to do it.

But what explains the sudden campaign emergence of the Bad Bush? Hypnotism. I am told Bush was hypnotized just before the Republican Convention and kept completely in the power of the hypnotist until the election results were in.

The Nice Bush naturally didn't know what the hypnosis would do to him. He agreed to it after somebody told him a few sessions with a hypnotist would relieve the nervousness he had been experiencing recently while hunting and fishing.

Sources close to the Nice Bush, speaking to me in confidence, have revealed that their old comrade was amazed and appalled after the election to see news film of his own campaign.

I am told, on condition that I not reveal the identity of the Bush friend who told me, that the Nice Bush — or the "Real Bush," as this unimpeachable source called him — wept with heartbreak when he saw himself being the Bad Bush.

On the best authority, I am assured that the Real Bush's sweet nature is so profound that in a showdown with his campaign hypnotist he told the scoundrel: "Though you have turned me into Genghis Bush in the eyes of my fellow Americans, I nevertheless find it in my heart to forgive you. But next time, remember: I'd rather be nice than president."

After the hypnotist promised never to do it again, Bush took him to an ice-cream parlor for a big sundae with plenty of hot fudge and whipped cream.

Yes, Bush's choice of Dan Quayle for vice president was made while he was in the power of hypnotism, but the Real Bush is too nice to explain this to Quayle and ask for his resignation.

Instead, and I have this on excellent authority, he intends to take Quayle to the ice-cream parlor and introduce him to a hypnotist.

BILL MODISETT

Modisett

This week should bring bittersweet thoughts for Midland Republicans, particularly, and residents who wear other political labels, Ronald Wilson Reagan, the Great White Hope of political conservatives, will ride off into the national sunset, leaving behind him a somewhat mixed bag of accomplishments and sobering failures.

As he leaves, he'll hand the reins of the nation to George Herbert Walker Bush, a former resident of Midland who, while he does not have as broad support among conservatives as did Reagan, also can claim support of Americans cut from more moderate cloth.

The question on the lips of many people is "Can George Bush fill the shoes being left behind by Ronald Reagan?" It's a question that requires careful thought.

Each man has his strengths; each has his weaknesses. From the outset, there was no doubt that Reagan's greatest strength — his mastery of the art of communication — was not Bush's strongest trait.

Ronald Reagan proved again in his farewell address to the nation that he can call to the surface of the American public the spirit of patriotism that sleeps hidden from view until that rare someone can make the red, white and blue a rallying cry. Reagan did it like not one else in modern times.

But Reagan, while doing wonders with the national economy, failed on two major counts — to bring down the deficit and to conquer the giant bureaucracy, although he dented it. If Reagan couldn't cut the government down to size, conservatives no doubt are wondering, "Who can?"

Perhaps George Bush. Bush can't match the style of Reagan. He forms the words, but doesn't boil the blood.

On the other hand, though, Bush knows the role of the government probably as well as any individual just entering the presidency ever has.

He should. He was a congressman, ran for but failed to win a U.S. Senate seat, served admirably as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, as the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, as envoy to China, and now for eight years, as second-in-command to Reagan. Those who know Bush's track record and abilities say he not only knows his job but performs it well.

In regard to that wealth of experience, there's no question that Bush has the definite edge. He's also called a strong administrator, a good manager. Reagan fell far short on that count and it showed sadly in the Iran-Contra affair and in the day-to-day operations of the Oval Office.

Reagan should fit nicely into the role of senior statesman. He's loved. He's lovable. He's grandfatherly.

Bush has the experience to, with good luck and a few breaks, be an outstanding chief executive — even if he can't put the Star-Spangled Banner on the Top 40 charts with his calls to patriotism.

But to answer the question of whether he will be able to fill Reagan's shoes, he shouldn't even try. He's not Ronald Reagan; he's George Bush. He may not lead the nation the way that Reagan did, but he could, in fact, lead it better.

LETTERS

Non-profit group can help you avoid crime

My letter is in response to one published in the Reporter-Telegram on Sunday, Jan. 8th, written by Debbie Dacus Floyd. In her letter, she explained that she had fallen victim to crime three times. She was concerned that this kind of activity is happening right here in Midland and that citizens should be alert to the dangers that we live with on a daily basis. She was concerned for her children and for all citizens.

I fully agree with her, and would like to remind the citizens of Midland that, as an individual and a victim of an armed robbery, I have been striving for 10 months to let my fellow citizens know about a non-profit organization, INNOVATIVE SOLUTIONS, which deals with teaching us how not to become victims of crime. There are varying degrees of crime, but when you are victimized by any form of crime, your life changes forever. We are potential victims every day because we are not educated with respect to knowing how to "avoid" a criminal encounter or how to deal with life after the victimization occurs.

INNOVATIVE SOLUTIONS, headed by Fred Lewis, offers a course of instruction that will train the average citizen to become "aware." There is not room to explain in depth the intensity of this course and the dedication of its teachers. It is taught in cooperation with the Midland County Sheriff's Department and the Midland Police Department. It is supported by United Way, Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs, and ClayDesta National Bank through scholarship funding for people who cannot afford the cost of the class. It is also endorsed by Midland College, American Airlines and many other companies and individuals.

Do yourself a favor — "Outsmart the criminal by learning beforehand" where, what and why he works his evil deeds BEFORE he has the chance to victimize you. And believe me, he will.

Call Fred Lewis at 683-6946. He will explain and answer all questions and give you future dates for upcoming classes.

Medical house calls actually never ended

A very small article headlined by "House call will make comeback" struck my interest until I read it, at which point I said to myself, "What century does that doctor live in?" As the Medicare nurse coordinator for Nurses Unlimited, a home care agency serving the 17 counties of the Permian Basin, I would like like to point out to the editor and the readers of the Midland Reporter-Telegram that the technology referred to in the article has been used for almost a decade in the home.

Patients with bone infections, post-operative infections and other diseases have been and are being treated successfully at home with intravenous therapies and the house call, in fact, is alive and well.

This is hardly a technology of the 1990s as Dr. Paul F. Griner of the University of Rochester was quoted as saying.

Statement about Bush completely inaccurate

I am writing in response to the letter from J.E. Upfold published in the Dec. 5th Reporter-Telegram and quoting me as saying that "If Reagan lacked cooperation from the Democratic Congress, George Bush hasn't seen anything yet." I never made any such statement.

In fact, anyone who has followed my work in the Senate knows that I do not approach issues on a partisan basis but in a spirit of bipartisan cooperation. As chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, I seek to build a consensus for legislation before that committee. To cite but one example, Sen. Danforth, a Missouri Republican, joined me as coauthor of the landmark trade legislation that was signed into law last year by President Reagan. Other far-reaching legislation within the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee was enacted last year, including welfare reform which passed the Senate 96-1 and the Catastrophic Coverage Act which was approved 86-11.

In each case, passage was made possible not only by cooperation of Democratic and Republican members of Congress but between Congress and President Reagan.

I have pledged to work with the Administration of President-elect George Bush and will certainly do so. We only have one president at a time, and whether he's a Democrat or a Republican, I'll support the president when I believe he's right and oppose him when I believe he's wrong.

SPEAKING OUT

Displaced Palestinians resigned to Israel, ready to make peace

By GEORGE W. ALDRIDGE

George W. Aldridge of Dallas is executive director of Region VI for the National Association Of Arab Americans Foundation. The article was written in response to articles concerning PLO leader Yasser Arafat's renunciation of violence and statements that the organization has recognized the right of Israel to exist.

According to Jewish author Roberta Strauss Feuerlicht, European "Zionists executed the psychological coup of the century by taking Palestine from the Arabs and then pretending Jews were Arab victims."

Now, 71 years after Lord Arthur Balfour (British Foreign Secretary under David Lloyd George) unilaterally declared that a "Jewish home" would be established in Palestine, the indigenous Arab population is resigned to the reality of Israel and prepared to coexist with the Jewish state.

The Palestinians have been dispossessed and displaced. Through no fault of their own they have paid the price for crimes committed elsewhere. The Zionist conquest meant the dismemberment of Palestine and the victimization of a peasant population. In due time, it would help precipitate the collapse of democratic Lebanon, heretofore, the "Switzerland of the Middle East."

Despite all this, despite numerous bombings of innocent civilians in Lebanon, despite an Iron Fist policy of "beatings and the breaking of bones" in the West Bank and Gaza, the Palestinians are prepared to make peace. They are prepared to agree to permanent partition.

As Palestinian Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat succinctly put it, "We need peace. After 40 years of war, enough is enough."

Partition in 1947 was rejected because the Arabs got a raw deal. At that time, the Palestinian Christian and Muslim population (an absolute majority at 69 percent of the total population) had no vote on the dismemberment of their country and the allocation of 56 percent of it — including the most fertile lands — to a 31 percent Jewish minority which owned less than 6 percent of the land. More than 90 percent of the Jewish population were foreigners, a great many of them illegal immigrants.

Given that Zionist policy as articulated by Jewish Agency executive director Joseph Weitz called for the complete expulsion of the indigenous Arab population, it is understandable that the Arabs saw Ashkenazi Jews as the enemy. Jews came, they saw, they conquered.

The Zionist enterprise was open to question from the start because it was predicated on an untruth: that Palestine was void of people. Zionism was guided by Israel Zangwill's slogan , "Give the land without a people to the people (namely, Jews) without a land."

Except Palestine was not a land without a people. Many European Jews were startled to find developed cities like Jaffa and Akka along the coast.

Max Nordau, the first lieutenant to Theodore Herzl, the founder of Zionism, summed up this awakening best. Upon returning from his first trip to Palestine, he declared, "I never realized this — we are committing an injustice!"

Not that other, perhaps all, peoples haven't committed injustices at one time or another. What made Zionist imperialism so baneful was that its leadership refused to admit that they were doing any wrong at all.

One, the late Israeli prime minister Golda Meir, would go so far as to say that the Palestinians did not even exist! Incredibly, she claimed that the Jews did not expel anybody.

When, in fact, between 330,000 to 400,000 Palestinian Arabs were expelled prior to Israel's declaration of independence on May 14, 1948. Jewish leaders fabricated all sorts of tales to cover up these and subsequent expulsions, only to later admit in their memoirs that they carried out operations (Plan Dialet and Plan Gimmel, for example) to clear out the Arabs.

That the Palestinians and other Arabs didn't take too kindly to this is understandable. Revenge will spawn all sorts of bad behavior. Revenge, not reconciliation, was the order of the day.

War weariness, however, can quickly create a change of heart. The long debilitating civil war in Lebanon coupled with the "camp wars" among all manner of groups has exhausted most Arabs in the Levant.

Correspondingly, Palestinians in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem are tired of Israel's military occupation. The vast majority of Palestinians, Lebanese, and Israelis are ready for normalized relations. Coexistence is critical for everyone's well-being.

Arafat himself has expressed these longings for an end to conflict. In his address to the United Nations in Geneva, he asserted: "Our statehood provides salvation to the Palestinians and peace to both Palestinians and Israelis...We want peace. We are committed to peace. We want to live in our Palestinian state, and let live."

After 40 years of off-and-on war, live and let live is a policy all the combatants could appreciate.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 700 words or less.

Lewis

LUSAKA, Zambia — The Rev. Jesse Jackson is here, telling leaders at the conference of the African-American Institute what they want to hear from the United States.

Everybody is asking what the Bush administration will do. Rep. Amo Houghton of New York brought a friendly, encouraging message from President-elect George Bush, which Jackson said was a good sign. But he called on Bush to visit Africa and to hold a summit meeting with the front-line states to demonstrate a new, more active policy.

This is partly the context of his attempt to call American blacks "African-Americans." Many of the American blacks at the conference are uneasy at the idea, and Africans are confused. One complained, "We are just getting used to your way of calling ourselves blacks, and now you want us to change back to Africans."

Personally, I find it disturbing for reasons Jackson doesn't address. It seems to emphasize separateness and division, just the opposite of the goal of integrating society and reducing the importance of ethnic and racial origin. In the Soviet Union, a distinction is made between citizenship (Soviet) and nationality, which may be Russian, Ukrainian, Jewish, Armenian or Uzbek, for instance. Nationality remains a major unresolved problem of the Soviet empire and could bring its undoing.

But Jackson makes two good arguments in support of his idea, and they are worth considering. One is cultural and historical.

"There is no cultural integrity in skin color," he says. "The African roots of American culture are substantial. If we were going to teach history, Western civilization, we must tell the truth.

"In our history books, there is a tremendous denial of the tragic truth of the slave trade. People tend not to know, to wipe it off. We are the living descendants of this massive dislocation of people. There is a grand deletion of our history as Americans, a gaping hole in our culture. Others came to drop their chains; we were issued chains on arrival."

He notes that during the election campaigns, TV profiles of the candidates traced them back to the village of their forebears — Ronald Reagan's in Ireland, George Bush's in England, Michael Dukakis' in Greece. "With me, it was just to South Carolina, as though we started there."

"It is the main moral dilemma of our society's existence. The number one threat is our inability to come to grips with the question of race...We live beneath our own dignity, our own privilege. These are our roots, our historical lineage."

The second argument deals with foreign policy, which Jackson has chosen as a major concern because "most elected officials have to focus on domestic issues."

He sees the link to Africa as a key to America's relations with the Third World, "seven-eights of the human race. When Reagan and Gorbachev meet, they represent one-eighth of humanity." Jackson talks about the world leadership capacity of the United States in this connection, pointing out that it provides ties Gorbachev does not have.

A decade ago, at an earlier institute conference, a New York state legislator was asked by Africans why American blacks didn't organize lobbies to support Africa as American Jews have done to support Israel.

He answered that his constituents had other, more immediate problems, that they would probably criticize him for being in Africa instead of in Albany tending to Harlem's concerns.

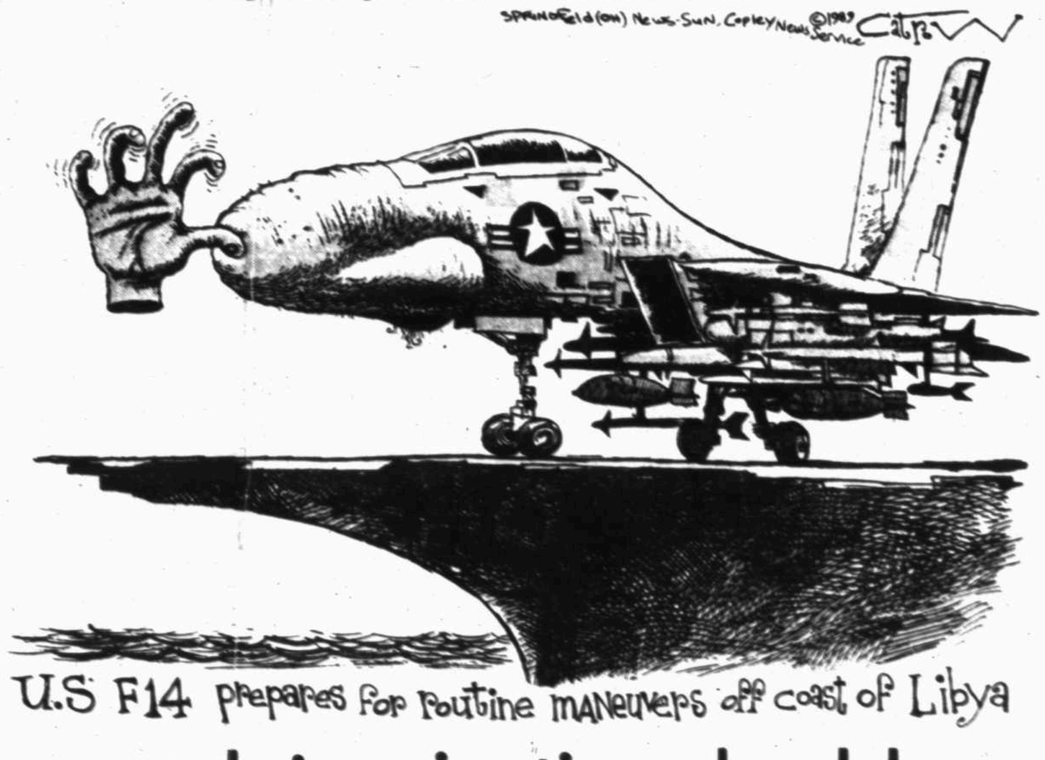

"A lot has changed since then," Jackson said. "Now we need a consistent, principled policy," and he is preaching it with fervor.

Clearly he is determined to remain a major figure on the political scene and a goad to U.S. policy. That is a useful role, perhaps his best. He is a loose cannon, who wouldn't be reliable as an official representative of the United States.

He carries himself away.

But he carries emotions with him.

Reagan ends second term with sound, inspirational address

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

SAN FRANCISCO — Five days from this Sunday, one of our most successful and popular presidents will end his second term with sound and inspirational advice for the American people.

President Ronald Reagan gave that advice in his farewell address to the nation Wednesday. History will surely record it as one of the greatest speeches of his presidency.

His most important advice was, in my opinion, not only that America must remain economically and militarily strong, but that it must instill in our children and grandchildren the knowledge and spirit of old-fashioned Americanism. The tradition of patriotism, of love of country, of appreciation of American freedom and opportunity, the will to work hard and be optimistic, not cynical and callous. Above all, to use common sense and teach it to our children.

He said that for those who have created the so-called popular culture, "well grounded patriotism is no longer in style." Many young children are ignorant of the significance of early American history and our basic traditions.

"Those of us who are over 35 grew up in a different America," he added.

"We were taught, very directly, what it means to be an American. We absorbed almost in the air a love of country and an appreciation of its institutions. If you didn't get those things from your family, you got them from the neighborhood, from the father down the street, or you could get a sense of patriotism from school."

In clearly implied criticism of the liberal philosophy of professors and teachers in public schools and institutions of higher learning, he said: "We've got to teach history not on what's in fashion but what is important: who Jimmy Doolittle was, and what those 30 seconds over Tokyo meant. We've got to get across that America is freedom — freedom of religion, freedom of enterprise, and that freedom is special and rare. It's fragile. It needs protection."

The president's reminder that "man is not free unless government is limited" made me think of similar wisdom voiced, perhaps by Winston Churchill, to the effect that the least governed people are the best governed people.

President Reagan recalled that when he was a film actor in Hollywood "the movies celebrated democratic values and implicitly reinforced the idea America was special." He said TV was like that until the '60s but "since then things have changed."

I agree, especially since liberal-minded American and foreign producers and directors have influenced film production.

Let us hope the school boards of our local communities as well as the faculties of urban educational institutions will take heed of President Reagan's warning that "an eradication of the American memory could result ultimately in an erosion of the American spirit."

I also believe foreign refugees and their children entering this country should first learn the American language and history before demanding schools to teach their native language and culture.

Noting that, despite what the pessimists had predicted, he succeeded in bringing about economic recovery which created 19 million new jobs, the president said those new jobs helped produce a projected additional $84 billion in federal revenues, the largest increase in U.S. history, for the 1990 fiscal year starting October 1.

President Reagan also said what he achieved both in respect to the economy and improvement in relations with the Soviet Union was due to the support of the American people for his policies.

In praising Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev for his reform programs and for concluding the agreement to eliminate an entire category of nuclear weapons, the president urged that the "new closeness" with the Soviets continue as long as it serves America's interests, but he cautioned once again — trust but verify and keep up our guard.

In an article in the National Review magazine, she wrote that he restored faith in the prospects of the American dream — "a dream of boundless opportunity built on enterprise, individual effort, and personal generosity."

"President Reagan," she added, departs the political scene leaving America stronger and more confident, and the West more united, than ever before."

It is particularly gratifying to me that I recommended this remarkable man for president and supported him strongly and consistently throughout his presidency.

Tuck

Those who didn't get out for registration may sign up for classes in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Hours this week are 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday. Students who wish to sign up as fulltime students, taking five classes, must be registered not later than Monday, Jan. 23. Those who want to take three classes or less may register as late as Jan. 31. However, by that time many classes already are full or students will have difficulty in making up missed assignments.

• • •

MC also has extension centers, which are attracting quite a number of students. Those in Iraan may register tomorrow evening at 7 p.m. at the high school. Extension centers also operate in Big Lake and Fort Stockton. Prospective students in those areas should call the respective high school for details.

• • •

There's only one basketball game for the Chaps this week and it's at home. At 7:30 p.m. Monday MC hosts the Clarendon College Bulldogs in Chaparral Center. Hope you will come out and watch the exciting Chaps in action. It's elementary school night, with free tickets for all elementary students in Midland. One adult is admitted free with each child's ticket.

The following evening the Chaparral Booster Club is having its regular monthly meeting. It begins at 7 p.m. in Chap Center and you're invited to attend. There's a barbecue dinner first, priced at $6 per person. If you plan on attending, enter through Door 3.

• • •

A new exhibit opens Monday in the McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Works by Princess Cook (that's a name, not a title) of San Antonio and Greg Elliott of Dallas will be displayed through Feb. 10.

McCormick Gallery is open Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and Sunday from 1-5 p.m. Admission always is free.

During the first session, classes include Aerobics, Art Appreciation (concentrating on the Near East, Egypt, and Greece), Babysitting, Bookkeeping, Calligraphy, Changing Relationships, CPR and Standard First Aid, Fat Busters, Financial Planning, Grief and Recovery, How to Get Barely Out of Town (trips to nearby places), How to Record Your Life Story, Learning Healthy Living, Managing Your Health, Spanish, Typing, and World History.

Course bulletins are available in local senior services centers, with a mail-in enrollment form. Or you may register by visiting the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. Since enrollment has been open a couple of weeks, we recommend you call 685-4518 to check on class openings before mailing in your registration.

A word of advice for those who are undecided about attending MC this spring. Persons who complete at least three hours of academic classes before the start of the 1989 fall semester will not have to take the new state-mandated TASP (Texas Academic Skills Program) test. Not only can you save the $24 test cost, but you also will avoid the hassle of taking the rather comprehensive exam.

This is quite an incentive for those who have never attended MC or any other college.

• • •

Three MC music faculty members are providing a program for the Midland Music Teachers Association, when it meets Tuesday morning in the Allison Fine Arts Building.

Dr. Donald Grant, clarinet; Dr. Betty Walker Morris, piano; and Walter Osadchuk, cello; comprise the Lamy Trio. They'll be playing all three movements of Beethoven's Trio in B flat Major, Opus 11; one movement from Brahms' Piano Trio in A Minor, Opus 114, and one movement from Max Bruch's composition for piano, clarinet, and cello.

• • •

Of the many Continuing Education classes beginning this week, most are concurrent enrollments of courses which also may be taken for credit. Several of the classes are offered in several sections, so you can take the class either in the daytime or the evening. For up-to-date information, contact the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building or call 685-4518.

Classes include: Coed Aerobics for those 50 and older, Calculating Machines (daytime or evening), Small Business Management (daytime), six sections of Beginning Typing (daytime and evening), two sections of Intermediate Typing (daytime and evening), Bookkeeping I (evening), two sections of Word Processing (daytime or evening), two sections of Lotus 1-2-3 (daytime or evening), Introduction to Machine Shop/Lathe (evening), Intermediate Shorthand (evening), Investments (evening), and Oil and Gas Law II (evening).

Budget draft cuts higher education

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — Spending on Texas' 34 senior universities would be slashed 8.2 percent during the next two years if state lawmakers settle on a budget that does not require additional revenue, indicates a Legislative Budget Office report that a newspaper obtained.

The proposed reduction in the Legislature's budget draft would translate into a $170.8 million overall cut for state universities, according to a summary of the spending plan cited Saturday in an Austin American-Statesman story.

The report will be presented next week to the Senate Finance Committee. It contains details on how each component of government would be affected by the 1990-91 spending proposals that Gov. Bill Clements and legislative leaders have adopted as a springboard for negotiations.

While most programs would receive slight increases over the current budget cycle, spending would be sliced for universities, as well as for health-related schools and some research and technology grants, according to the report.

The proposed cuts "are more than we had even emotionally prepared for," said Gerald Hill, vice chancellor for governmental relations for the University of Texas System.

In addition to freezing faculty salaries, Hill said, the budget plan does not take into account funds for the proposed mergers of South Texas universities with the UT and Texas A&M University systems.

The Higher Education Coordinating Board has recommended a $540 million increase over the next two fiscal years, including a proposal for a 10.1 percent boost in faculty salaries.

Although major institutions would see more than an 8 percent cut from their budgets, higher education spending across the board would decline 5 percent if the proposal becomes law.

With the exception of some special programs, the newspaper said, the state's 49 junior colleges would be the only institutions of higher learning to receive an increase, with their funding going up 11 percent under the plan.

Since state revenues began declining with oil prices in the mid-1980s, the Legislature in 1985 and 1986 turned to higher education for cuts to keep spending in line with expected revenues.

Lawmakers this year are expected to be $1.1 billion short of revenues required to maintain current services when devising a 1990-91 budget, and the governor has vowed to veto any tax increase. House Speaker Gib Lewis this week also ruled out a tax increase, intensifying the search for alternative revenue sources to close the budget gap.

A move to make deep cuts in university spending "would be a repeat of the 1986 fiasco, only more dramatic because, nationally, Texas is seen as having turned the corner," Hill told the American-Statesman.

"We not only had faculty members leave" amid reports of the 1986 higher education cuts, Hill said, "but we had some faculty members committed to come to Texas simply call and say, 'I've changed my mind.' "

That situation was turned around last session, he said, when the 1987 Legislature provided a faculty pay raise.

Despite an increase approved two years ago, state universities still are operating on budgets below 1985 levels, Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth said. The recommended 10.1 percent faculty pay increase is projected as the figure needed to close the gap between the average faculty salary in Texas and that for the 10 largest states, he said.

Sen. Carl Parker, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, said Texas has slipped from 28th to 36th nationally in salaries for university faculty.

Although Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Lewis have predicted that spending will top levels in the proposed budget, Caperton said he was not confident that higher education supporters can stave off attempts to slash university spending.

Senator kicks off low-interest home ownership program

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm and government officials launched a home-ownership program aimed at low- and middle-income Texans from the the porch of a federally-owned house Saturday.

Christening the plan the "Texas Home Ownership Initiative," Gramm said it will unite federal and state governments and the private sector in providing low-interest, subsidized home mortgages for first-time buyers.

Texas' program will be the pilot for a project that, if successful, could spread throughout the nation, officials said.

Gramm said the initial program will include the sale of 400 of the 12,000 single-family houses repossessed in Texas by HUD in the last three years. Private lending institutions will make loans, in connection with the bonding authority of the state government and the backing of the federal government, the senator said.

Instead of the current standard 10.5 percent interest rate, the homes will be financed at rates of 8.05 percent and 9.55 percent, depending on the cost of the house. The 8.05 percent rate will apply to houses costing less than $35,000.

"It's very seldom that I really get excited about a new program. But I'm excited about this program," Gramm said, calling the plan a "fundamental breakthrough" in helping people own their own home.

To qualify for the program, applicants must meet income guidelines, exhibit a stable family life and have held a job for an extended period of time, the Republican senator said. Some families who earn as little as $15,000 a year may qualify.

"This home is going to mean an awful lot to them," Gramm said. "They're going to take care of it. They're going to maintain it."

The average purchase price of the houses is $36,531, according to a statement issued by HUD and the Texas Housing Agency, also a participant in the program. The homes generally range in price from $30,000 to $70,000. Down payments for the houses generally range from $100 to $500..

The Texas Housing Agency estimates $16.9 million will be financed.

Gramm said the houses HUD has repossessed are a financial burden to the federal government in upkeep and insurance and to local governments in that the homes are not on the tax rolls. Also, he said, empty houses negatively affect the value of nearby occupied homes.

Joining Gramm in announcing the program were Federal Housing Commissioner Thomas T. Demery, Texas Housing Agency Chairman Kenneth G. DeJarnett, and Region 6 Housing and Urban Development Administrator Sam Moseley.

DeJarnett said interested Texans should contact a real estate agent, see the homes and make an offer. He said the housing agency will establish a "hotline" beginning Monday at (512) 472-7500 to provide information on the program.

Cisneros takes crack at San Antonio drug trade

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros, keeping his promise to learn more about the woes of a crime-filled neighborhood, spent a night in the area watching drug traffickers peddle their trade.

Cisneros said Saturday that he was surprised about the amount of drug deals taking place on the city's east side and in an area called "The Hill," located near a public housing complex and Gates Elementary School.

He said the area seems to be the distribution point for buyers from across the city. Cisneros said he hoped to increase foot patrols in the area to help move the drug traffickers out of the neighborhood.

"There's going to have to be a systematic response to this," Cisneros said, adding that officials also will have to look at employment, drug rehabilitation and housing issues in the neighborhood.

"We have to bust up the normal order of business, go after the dealers from a prosecution standpoint. But that only solves the symptoms of the problem; more deeper is the lack of jobs and the abandonment of the neighborhood," he said.

Cisneros went on patrol with police Friday night and came up on a crack transaction in an alley.

Cisneros and an officer later spent the night in the apartment of a resident, who asked that her name not be used because she has gotten death threats after trying to help put an end to the drug peddling and shootings in the area.

Cisneros said he watched pedestrian and car traffic from the apartment up until midnight and that the officer said people were on the streets almost until daylight.

"There's a fairly intricate network of observers, guards or lookouts and then there are drug runners who are carrying the drugs on them and then there are the dealers who are managing them," Cisneros said.

"The drug dealers come in Cadillacs, Mercedes, Volvos throughout the course of the evening and pick up the money," he said. "It's a very well-organized operation."

He said drugs — including cocaine, heroin and crack — and weapons are stashed in some abandoned units. He said there are plans to move the drugs out of the buildings when police move into the area.

He said the problem has been around for quite a while.

"We've had police on it all along, but the intensity has increased," Cisneros said.

"It's now very open, very blatant, very massive and the reason I think it's gotten so strong is crack. It's so cheap and has drawn more people here."

The mayor took several reporters on a tour of the area. The woman in whose apartment Cisneros spent the night pointed out buildings burned by addicts and several in which people were killed in the past six months.

"I don't have enough money to get out of here or else I would leave," she said.

Cisneros, who next week will attend a task force meeting to help find solutions to the problems on "The Hill," said he would help find a new home for the woman on Monday.

"They have told her that because I was here, she was going to be killed, but she can't afford to move. She pays $63-a-month rent," he said.

"I'm going to try to find her a place. I don't want to be responsible for anything that happens to her and her little boy."

Second school superintendent gives resignation

ALLISON, Texas (AP) — The resignation of the second school superintendent in this Panhandle community in seven months came after allegations that trustees tried to generate poor teacher evaluations.

David Mims resigned his Allison Independent School District post on Thursday night, saying he would not be forced by school board members to take actions he considers unethical.

"We have not worked together well at all," Mims said Friday. "I want to do things the legal and right way."

Earlier, Dr. Nora Hutto resigned after having repeated clashes with the school board in the job.

Mims claimed five of the seven board members repeatedly pressured him into giving poor evaluations to a district teacher who deserved positive marks. He said he would rather resign than allow quality of education in the district to deteriorate.

Board member Keith Boydston said trustees had put no pressure on Mims or Rives to issue unfavorable evaluations.

Boydston said Mims was not asked to resign, but did so freely.

Allison School Principal Doug Rives told the Amarillo Globe-News on Friday that the teacher in question is Donna Jo Nall, who teaches fourth- and fifth-grade and special education classes.

Boydston refused comment on any controversy between the board and the Nalls, saying he could not speak for the majority of the board.

Deputies cleared in escapee's slaying

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Harris County sheriff's deputies have been cleared of criminal wrongdoing in the November shooting death of a prisoner who was trying to escape from the county jail.

A county grand jury Friday did not indict detectives Barry Rizk and Robert Nichols in the death of 28-year-old Roland Brothers Jr., who was struck by three bullets as he tried to flee from the downtown jail Nov. 5.

Both officers faced possible civil rights violations.

"This certainly does lay it to rest," Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen said. "The grand jury has looked at it and taken the same stand as we did. The rule is one that we have to have. In order to ensure safety, we have to show force when necessary."

Although Texas penal law — and sheriff's department policy — allows some officers the use of deadly force to prevent an escape, the grand jury investigated whether the officers continued to fire after hitting and impairing the escapee.

An autopsy indicated Brothers, a Lafayette, La., resident also known as Michael Reed, was killed by a bullet that entered his back and exited his chest. Two other bullets struck him in the chest.

Rizk and Nichols had been transferred to desk jobs pending the grand jury investigation, Klevenhagen said. After attending the grand jury hearing, Friday, the detectives returned to their jobs in the criminal warrant division.

"They are very happy with the outcome," their attorney, D. Reid Walker, said.

The grand jury heard testimony from one witness, Elaine White, who said the officers continued to shoot after Brothers, already wounded, pleaded for them to stop.

"To be fair to the officers," assistant County Attorney Don Smyth said, "this guy was wanted at the time this happened for escaping from the Louisiana penitentiary. According to my count, he has escaped or attempted to escape at least six times since 1985, and in Harris County alone, he had three felony escapes and one attempted felony escape since September 1987."

Thompson keeps vow, walks out

By DAVID GINSBURG

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — True to his word, Georgetown coach John Thompson walked off the court immediately prior to the opening tipoff of the seventh-ranked Hoyas' game against Boston College Saturday night to protest a new NCAA rule on scholarships.

Most of the fans at the Capital Centre gave Thompson a standing ovation as he slowly walked across the court to the Georgetown dressing room. He did not openly acknowledge the cheering crowd, and clutched the white towel he normally drapes over his shoulder during games.

Thompson's move was designed to protest proposal No. 42, a rule that would impose harsher academic requirements for incoming freshmen.

After being defeated on Tuesday, the proposal passed on Wednesday by a 163-154 vote.

"In an effort to rekindle discussion in this proposal ... I will not be on the bench in an NCAA-sanctioned Georgetown basketball game until I am satisfied that something has been done," Thompson said Friday in announcing his plans. He said the protest would "bring attention to something I think is a tremendous tragedy."

Thompson said before the game that he intended to leave the building after walking off the court.

He refused to speak to a mob of reporters, got in a car withing the complex and drove away.

The Hoyas then went on to an easy 86-60 victory over Boston College.

Dozens of coaches around the country agreed with Thompson, expressing displeasure in words, but he was the only one who backed up his anger with such action. He did not indicate exactly how long he would continue his boycott.

Most of crowd appeared to support Thompson's gesture. In addition to the standing ovation, one fan displayed a sign that simply read, "I Love John."

"I agree 100 percent with what he's doing," said Maria Moreira, a senior at Georgetown. "The rule is racist and discriminates against kids from poor backgrounds."

Courageous Barnes close to shot record

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Randy Barnes, a 1988 Olympic silver medalist, somehow overcame the loss of sleep following an early morning confrontation with an Arkansas gunman and recorded history's second-best American indoor shot put on Saturday.

Barnes, of College Station, Texas, threw the shot 71 feet, 10 inches in the Dallas Morning News Games, seventh-best throw of all time and his personal best.

George Woods owns America's best indoor shot effort of 72-2¾, set in February 1974 in Inglewood, Calif. The world mark is 73-0½ by Werner Guenthoer of Switzerland.

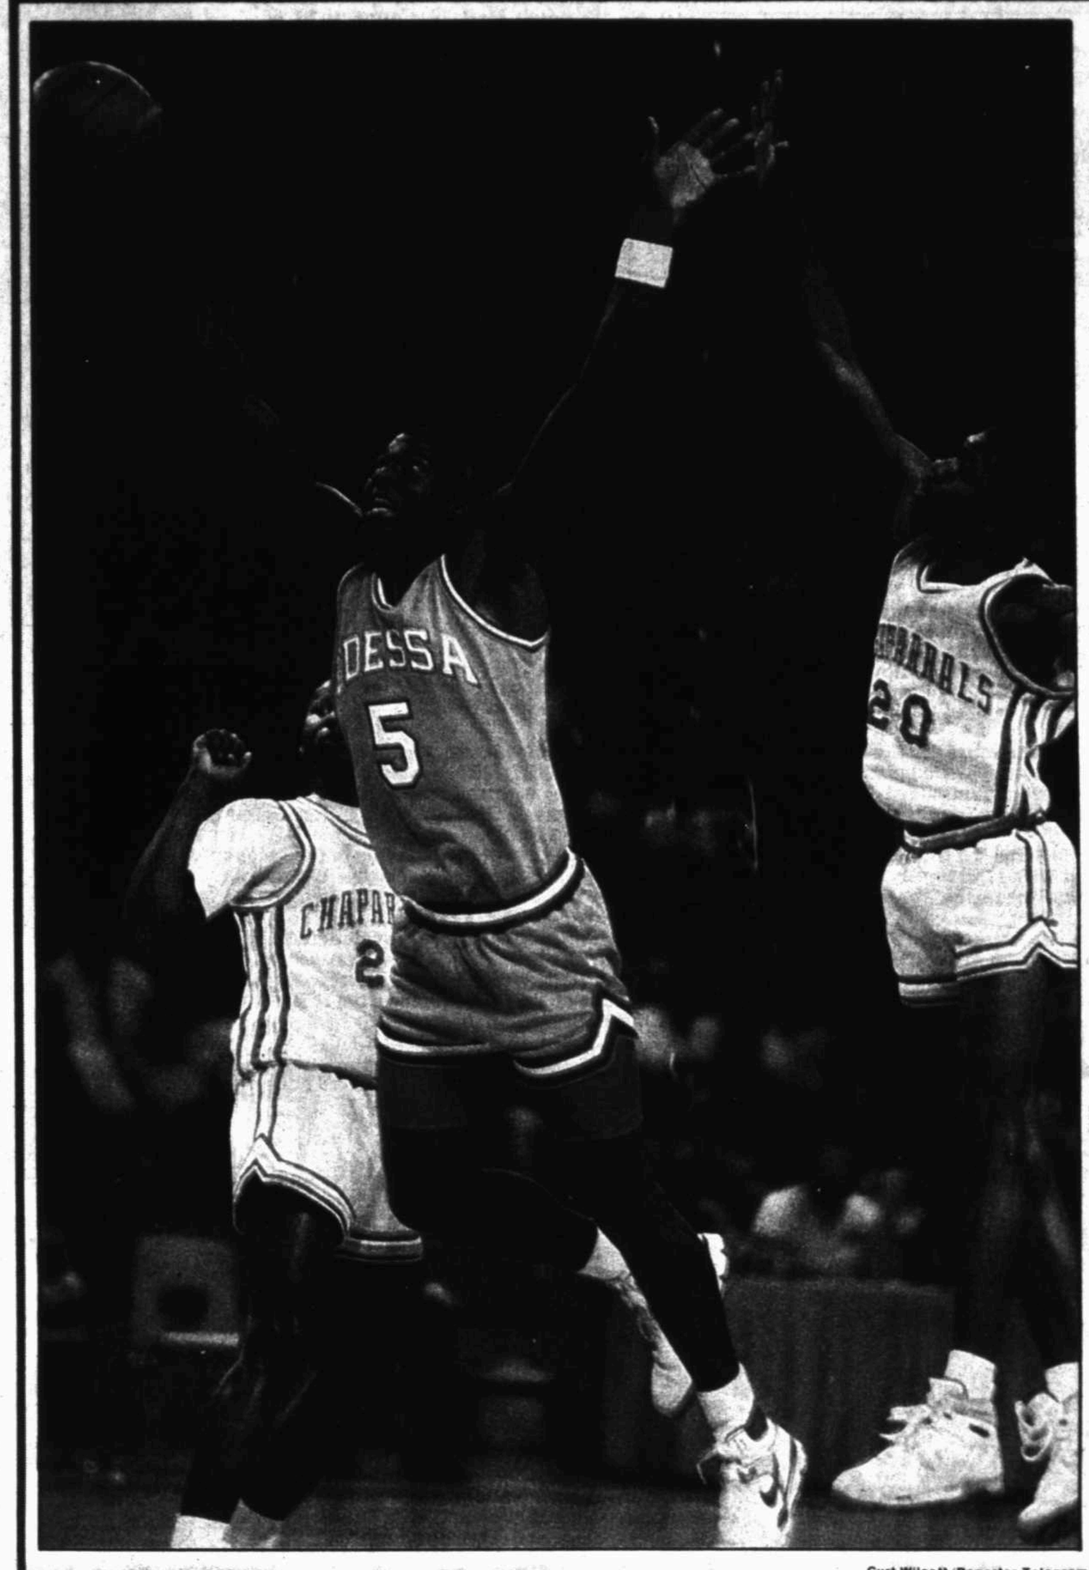

"I couldn't believe the throw after what happened to me this morning," Barnes said. "I really thought I was going to hit the world record. I had the adrenalin really pumping."

Barnes had been confronted by two men in the parking lot of a Little Rock motel at 2 a.m., following a meet in Jonesboro, Ark. One of them pointed a rifle at Barnes.

"I was getting the luggage out of the car when these two guys in a pickup truck said I had their parking spot," Barnes said. "Before I could say anything one of them pointed an automatic rifle at me. I can tell you one thing: The size of your ego shrinks when you face a gun."

Barnes ran into the lobby and called police while Olympic high jump gold medalist Louise Ritter and Roger Jennings cowered in the car.

Making An Impression

Wranglers' Larry Johnson hoops it up in Odessa

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Don't.

Johnson doesn't mean that belligerently. The Odessa College All-American forward is simply speaking from personal experience.

"When I came here, I didn't think I would have to play my best every game," Johnson said. "I thought that maybe I wouldn't progress that much in basketball, coming here."

But he's found out otherwise. Though the 6-foot-6, 236-pound power forward was averaging 30 points and 18 rebounds going into Thursday's game with Midland College — and had posted averages of 22 points and 16 rebounds last season — he's had to work a lot harder than he originally thought he would.

See, Johnson was one of the most heavily recruited high school players in the nation two years ago. The former Dallas Skyline standout could have gone anywhere in the country, but signed with Southern Methodist University in his home town.

Those plans were derailed when the National Collegiate Athletic Association requested that Johnson re-take his Scholastic Aptitude Test, even though he had achieved the required scores for freshman eligibility.

BIG MO:

Niners aim for history in Sunday's big game

By DAVE CARPENTER

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A huge banner draped across the front of City Hall contains a message the San Francisco 49ers believe is premature.

"Thanks 49ers for the Super Season," the red-lettered sign proclaims.

Indeed, the team's latest NFC championship is nothing to sneer at. But for a franchise that has found it increasingly hard to meet its own high standards of success, the season so far is only semi-super.

A clue may lie in the happy but not frenzied mood in the locker room in Chicago after last Sunday's 28-3 victory over the Bears in the NFC title game. Coach Bill Walsh and his players wouldn't say so, but they are a win away from historical greatness.

One more win will give them three Super Bowl trophies, one behind the record by the Pittsburgh Steelers and matching the Oakland-Los Angeles Raiders.

One more win will put Joe Montana nearly on a par with Terry Bradshaw as the definitive Super Bowl championship quarterbacks.

One more win and you can count the ballots early for the 49ers as team of the decade. Washington and Miami will have to duel for runnerup honors next season.

"We're not just going to the Super Bowl, we're going there to win," said Roger Craig just minutes after the trip to Miami became official.

Montana, one of only six 49ers on the active roster who have played on all three Super Bowl champions, summed up the change in attitude from the Cinderella season in 1981 to the current team and its far loftier goals.

"We expect to go to the Super Bowl every year now," he said. "That's what we set our sights on at the start of training camp every summer."

A proud, sensitive man who has been deeply wounded by public criticism over the past year, he has hinted of quitting in the event only of a victory. One more win would end — or at least crown — his 10-year coaching career with the 49ers at the pinnacle of success and virtually clinch eventual enshrinement in the Football Hall of Fame.

Yearning for respect motivates Cincinnati

By JOE KAY

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Bengals want two things from the Super Bowl — rings and respect.

To their way of thinking, they currently have neither.

The Bengals have never won a Super Bowl. Their only other appearance, in the 1982 game against San Francisco, resulted in a 26-21 loss that only whetted their appetites for an NFL title.

The seven remaining veterans from the 1981 team can't bear even to see clips from that loss.

"One time I looked at the game when I was really feeling sorry for myself, I really had the blues, and I wanted to see if there was a possibility I could feel worse," linebacker Reggie Williams said. "And I did."

The 49ers, their opponent again for this year's title game, are old hands at Super Bowl fame. They've already got two Super Bowl rings from this decade, and would become the third team to win three with a victory Jan. 22 in Miami.

Bengals veterans from that first Super Bowl match also have rings — their AFC Championship rings. But they don't even wear them because they're reminders of the team's failure to win the big one.

"I keep it in the jewelry box," Williams said. "I probably should take more precautions with it. It is right now while I'm still playing an afterthought.

Quimby takes reins from Wolski

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Mike Quimby will officially become Midland Lee's third head track coach Jan. 20, replacing Eddie Wolski, who recently resigned that position to accept a job with the powerful Texas High School Coaches Association in Austin.

Wolski replaced Sam Volpe as track coach two years ago. Volpe had served in that position for 25 years before retiring. Wolski will become an associate director with the Austin-based THSCA and will work for the interests of coaches across the state. Wolski was also an assistant football coach.

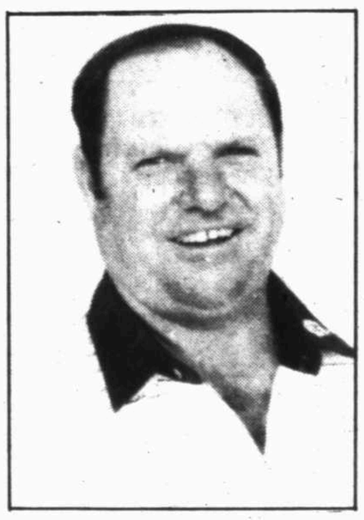

Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, said that Quimby will continue to be an assistant football coach in addition to his duties as head track coach. Quimby has been an assistant track coach for the past four years at Lee and an assistant in football for the past seven years.

"We are not naming a replacement for Wolski in football at this time," noted Bartosh. "We will do that, probably this summer, so we can hire someone to fit the teaching positions available at that time. We would like to hire someone who can also fill the role as an assistant track coach."

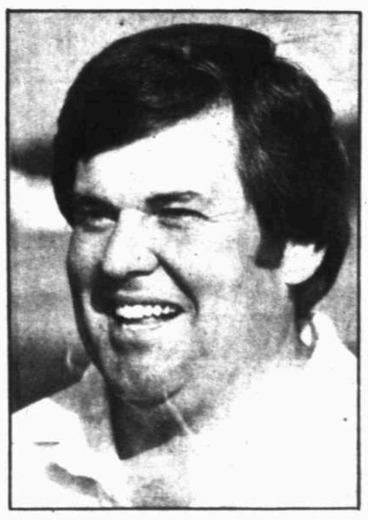

Van Tom Whatley, Lee's offensive coordinator in football and a former track assistant, has agreed to return to track for this season and aid Quimby in the short run. Larry Tate will continue as an assistant track coach.

"We think it will be business as usual in track with Quimby taking over the reigns," said Bartosh. "Mike has a lot of experience in track and Van Tom is no stranger to track."

Quimby has coached track for 18 years, serving as a head track coach eight years in Eldorado and Wall. Quimby has groomed 10 individuals and a relay team for the state meet and has had 35 individuals and 10 relay teams qualify for the regionals while at Eldorado and Wall.

Mike Quimby

Eddie Wolski

"This is something I have wanted and I'm looking forward to the opportunity of coaching track," said Quimby. "Since I've been with the program for the last four years, I think we will be doing things pretty much like we've been doing in the past and that has been pretty successful.

"I realize that coaching at the 5A level is a lot different from coaching at Eldorado or Wall. You have kids with so much more speed and so many more kids to work with. It's a great challenge for me.

Lee High school has had an outstanding track program over the years and it is my desire to continue the success that we have become accustomed to. We will encourage maximum participation."

Quimby said that he will not officially become head track coach until Jan. 20.

"Eddie will be here until Jan. 20. That's his last day and I guess he's still head track coach until then," said Quimby.

Quimby graduated from Kermit High School in 1961 before attending Sul Ross on a football scholarship. He was head track coach at Eldorado from 1972 to 1977 and at Wall from 1981 through 1982 before moving on to Lee, where he works with receivers in football.

West Texas bullrider critical

DENVER (AP) — Bull rider Larry Williams remained in serious condition Saturday after being bucked off and then gored in the face by a bull at the National Western Stock Show Rodeo.

Williams of Denver City, Texas, was injured Friday night, said rodeo physician Dr. Dale Poppert. Williams was admitted to AMI St. Luke's Hospital.

Following surgery, Williams "was asking about when he could ride again. He's a good strong young cowoby," said Poppert.

Redmen upset No. 4 Orangemen for third straight win

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Billy Singleton and Matt Brust hit short jump shots in the final 1¼ minutes, and St. John's rallied from 13 points back for a 65-63 upset of fourth-ranked Syracuse and its third straight victory in the Big East Conference.

The Orangemen, 14-3 and 1-3 in the conference, played most of the game without their leading scorer, Sherman Douglas, who pulled a lower back muscle.

St. John's took a 61-60 lead on a layup by Jason Williams with 3:54 left, but Derrick Coleman put Syracuse ahead again with a basket 27 seconds later.

Singleton put St. John's on top for good, 63-62, with 1:37 to go when he hit from the key, and Brust followed with a similar shot with just 25 seconds to play, making it 65-62.

No. 1 Duke 82, Maryland 72

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Danny Ferry scored 22 points and keyed a 14-0 run in the second half Saturday as No. 1 Duke defeated Maryland and ran its record to 13-0, the Blue Devils' second-best start ever.

Ferry scored six points and Quin Snyder added five in the decisive run that turned Duke's 44-41 lead into a 58-41 advantage with 11:40 remaining. The Blue Devils held the Terrapins scoreless for a 3:12 span.

The Terrapins climbed within 65-58 on a 3-pointer by Greg Nared with 6:23 to play. The Terps were down 74-66 with 1:44 left when Duke freshman Christian Laettner was whistled for his fifth foul and was issued a technical by referee John Moreau.

No. 2 Illinois 96, No. 6 Michigan 84

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Kendall Gill scored 26 points as No. 2 Illinois won a battle of second-half rallies Satuday, and the Fighting Illini remained unbeaten with a victory over No. 6 Michigan.

The 15-0 start by Illinois matches the one of the 1978-79 team. The school record is 16-0 in 1915, the school's only perfect season.

The victory made Illinois 3-0 in conference play, while Michigan fell to 14-2 overall and 2-1 in the Big Ten.

Illinois, which led 48-44 at halftime, took its largest lead of the game at 67-52 on a dunk by Lowell Hamilton with 13:10 to play.

The Fighting Illini had used an 11-2 run within an 18-8 burst to take the 15-point lead. Illinois capitalized on cold shooting by the Wolverines and its own offensive rebounding in the streak.

Top 20 Hoops

Minnesota 80, No. 5 Iowa 78

MINNEAPOLIS — Jim Shikenjanski's only basket, a tip-in with two seconds to play, lifted Minnesota to a Big Ten upset Saturday over fifth-ranked Iowa.

With the score tied at 78, Minnesota's Ray Gaffney missed a 7-foot jumper. Walter Bond's tip was no good, but Shikenjanski got his hand on the rebound and the ball just crawled over the rim into the basket.

Iowa, 13-2 overall and 1-1 in the conference, called time out with one second left. Wade Lookingbill connected with Roy Marble on a court-length pass and Marble swished an 18-footer, but the buzzer had sounded before the shot.

With easily the biggest victory of Clem Haskins' three-year coaching tenure, Minnesota improved to 9-4 and 1-2.

No. 7 Georgetown 86, Boston College 60

LANDOVER, Md. — Seventh-ranked Georgetown, playing without Coach John Thompson, shot 71 percent from the field in the first half Saturday and coasted over Boston College.

Thompson walked off the court just prior to the opening tipoff to protest a new NCAA rule on scholarships. He left the team to assistant coach Jim Riley, who watched the Hoyas jump out to a 24-7 lead en route to building a 50-31 cushion at halftime.

No. 10 Missouri 96, Iowa St. 71

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Doug Smith scored 20 points, and Byron Irvin added 19, leading 10th-ranked Missouri over Big Eight Conference rival Iowa State.

No. 12 Arizona 95, Oregon 71

TUCSON, Ariz. — Anthony Cook scored 23 points with a strong inside game, and a tough man-to-man defense propelled No. 12 Arizona over Oregon in Pacific-10 Conference basketball.

Arizona improved to 11-2 for the season and 6-1 in the Pac-10, while Oregon fell to 6-8 overall and 1-3.

No. 13 Seton Hall 76, Connecticut 62

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — John Morton scored 19 points and made two 3-point baskets and a three-point play down the stretch to carry No. 13 Seton Hall to a 76-62 Big East victory over Connecticut on Saturday night.

No. 15 N. Carolina St. 82, No. 19 Georgia Tech 68

RALEIGH, N.C. — Adversity might be the best thing that could happen to North Carolina State this season.

While discussion continued Saturday on allegations of wrongdoing in the school's basketball program, the 15th-ranked Wolfpack posted a victory over No. 19 Georgia Tech on the strength of 26 points from Rodney Monroe and Coach Jim Valvano's so-called junk defenses.

No. 16 Kansas 75, Kansas St. 74, OT

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Milt Newton hit the winning free throws with 30 seconds to play in overtime and finished with 21 points as No. 16 Kansas beat Kansas State in the first Big Eight game played in the Wildcats' new Bramlage Coliseum.

Lee athletes honored

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee celebrated its third consecutive District 4-5A football championship, its sixth consecutive trip to the state playoffs, six All-District players and four honorable mention All-State players during the annual Lee football banquet at the Holiday Inn Convention Center Saturday night.

It was also an emotional time for Lee coaches and fans as they mourned the loss of assistant football and head track coach Eddie Wolski, who is leaving to join the Texas High School Coaches Association this week.

Lee has won or tied for the 4-5A title three years in a row under head coach Earl Miller, who has posted a 26-6 record over that span, including three victories over Odessa Permian. Miller also owns a 2-3 record on the state playoffs during the three-year period.

Two special awards were given to guard Erich Byerly and center John Martinez. Byerly was presented the annual Lena Douglas Award for having the highest grade point average on the team. Byerly owns a 5.3 GPA.

Martinez won the annual Bob Dillon Memorial Award, which is a fighting heart honor that is given to the player who best demonstrates what it is to be a Lee Rebel football player.

Running back Farris Strambler, a junior, was named as the team's most valuable offensive player while senior linebacker Michael Pearson was named as the most valuable defensive player.

Strambler was a 1,000-yard rusher for Lee, who was unanimous All-District and an honorable mention All-State selection. Pearson was also a unanimous All-District pick and honorable mention All-State.

Other individual awards went to junior kicker Arthur Donnelly for special team work, guard Billy Parks for best offensive lineman, John Valles as best receiver, Darwin Cavil for defensive special team play, Michael Wyatt for best defensive secondary player and Sid Harper for best defensive lineman. Strambler was best back and Pearson best linebacker.

Donnelly, Wyatt, tight end Quincy White and lineman Chad Haney were all All-District selections. Haney and White were also honorable mention All-State selections.

Metal plates from the Reporter-Telegram with the All-District story burned into them were presented to the All-District players.

Wolski was honored with a special plaque for his work at Lee since 1978 by the Lee Booster Club. Miller bid a tearful farewell to his assistant coach, with whom he has had a coaching association since 1968 when both coached at Alice under Spike Dykes.

Mac Gilliland was named booster of the year and was honored with a plaque and Patricia Jones was also honored for six years of service in decorating for the annual Lee banquet.

Geni Rich also gave a special drawing to Art and Linne Donnelly for their booster club work this past year. Donnelly served as Lee Booster Club president.

The banquet didn't have a guest speaker this year, but master of ceremonies Scotty Alcorn took up the slack with an emotional ending.

QUIMBY

Wolski came to Lee with Bartosh in 1978, the same time that present head football coach Earl Miller came onto the scene. The loss of Wolski is a keen one for Miller.

"It's just like losing a member of the family or having your right arm cut off," said Miller. "Wolski and I started coaching together at Alice in 1968 under Spike Dykes. I went on to become head coach at Tulia for seven years and Wolski went on to be the head coach at Shallowater and later an assistant at Permian. We were always close even after we left Alice and we've been together at Lee for the past 11 years.

"But I'm happy for him. He has paid his dues and this is a great opportunity for him. I would like to fill Wolski's position in football with someone just like him, but I don't know if there is anyone in the state like him. He's one of a kind."

Miller said that going through spring training without a replacement for Wolski wouldn't be a major problem.

"We have enough coaches. The junior high and ninth grade coaches help us anyway during spring training. The biggest thing is that Wolski did so many more things for us than just coach football and track. He was in charge of grades and kept our kids eligible. Well, the list is just too long to list."

The position with the THSCA was something for which Wolski campaigned long and hard. Still, it is hard for Wolski to leave.

"You don't live in a place for 11 years without hating to leave," said Wolski. "Midland Lee has been good to me and my family. My kids went to school here. It will always be a part of me.

"But this was something I really wanted and am looking forward to the challenge ahead. I loved coaching, but it's time for me to do something else, but I'll always remember the coaches, the kids and the faculty members who I have worked with over the years. It's been a great experience."

49ERS

At press conferences after the 49ers clinched their third straight division title and went on to two playoff triumphs, he has repeatedly cited the opinions of detractors.

"There are people here that basically told me a few weeks ago that I was outdated, and the game had passed me by, right in front of me," he told reporters at the team's training facility in Santa Clara this week. "I don't want to change their minds."

It's safe to say Walsh wants to do just that, especially in light of his comments that his self-esteem took a beating in the uproar that ensued after the 49ers'third straight opening-round playoff defeat last winter.

Walsh achieved his 100th victory on New Year's Day, a plateau achieved by just 17 other coaches in NFL history, only four of whom are active — Don Shula, Tom Landry, Chuck Noll and Chuck Knox. With another Super Bowl title, he would join an even more exclusive club of seven men who have coached a team to at least three NFL championships.

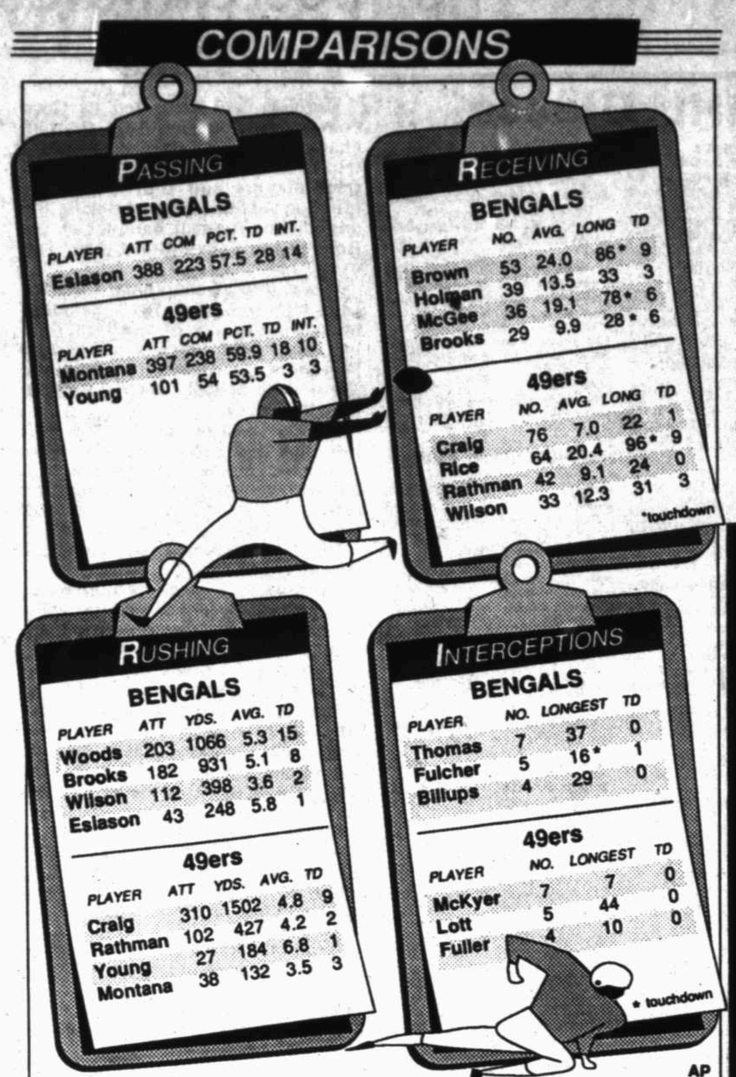

With the focus now on the Bengals, historical goals have been pushed into the background, at least publicly.

"I don't care how many Super Bowl trophies Chuck Noll has in Pittsburgh," Walsh contends. "You can't. You have to win it again."

Heading into Miami the 49ers are being described as the best team in football — a touchdown favorite in the Super Bowl, boasting the NFL's No. 2 offense and No. 3 defense. They have been devastating in the playoffs, as proven by their combined 62-12 scoring margin over Minnesota and Chicago.

But the 49ers continue to be motivated by the role of maligned underdog, which they assumed in times of turmoil which contributed to a 6-5 record at one point earlier in the season.

BENGALS

"I've always felt that my primary goal as a professional athlete is to sometime during the course of my career stand at the apex amongst my peers, to say I am the best, the champion of the world. And I look at my AFC Championship ring as a second-best ring."

"I don't even wear it," guard Max Montoya said. "It brings back bad memories."

Montoya and the other veterans have given the team's Super Bowl newcomers a lesson in the importance of grabbing for the gold ring.

"You try and tell the guys the money is great, but really deep down in your heart you know that there are only so many rings on this earth of that magnitude, and that's what we're fighting for," Montoya said.

They're also still fighting for respect. At least, that's the way they see it.

The derision from their 4-11 season a year ago has been a main motivation for the Bengals since training camp, when they were either ignored or maligned in the media. Coach Sam Wyche has continually referred to the Bengals' reputation as bunglers.

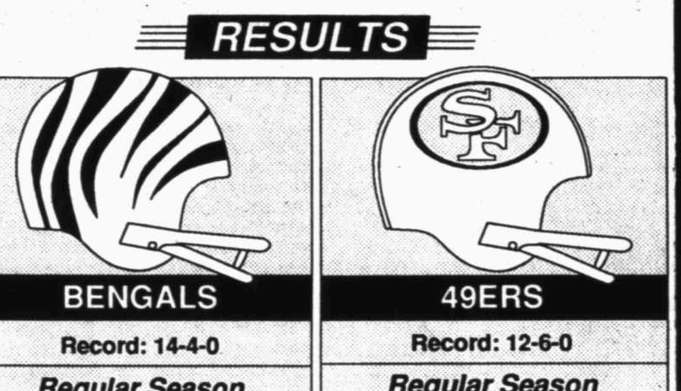

"We came in (to start training camp) and I remember Sam saying, 'Nobody is giving you guys any respect,' " quarterback Boomer Esiason said.

Esiason remembers a training-camp visit from ESPN commentator Pete Axthelm that reinforced that message.

"He said that in January our season would be over, Sam Wyche's head coaching career would be over, it all would be over, like Cincinnati would be over," Esiason said. "And we remember that quite vividly. And I think that was one of the motivating factors in our resurgence this year."

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

MIAMI (AP) — "I don't look at all the things that have happened in the past," Mike Ditka said before the San Francisco 49ers trounced his Chicago Bears in the NFC title game last week. "I only worry about what happens on the field this week."

Sage advice for the Cincinnati Bengals when they meet the San Francisco 49ers in the Super Bowl next Sunday.

That's the average score of the past four Super Bowls, all won by the NFC teams. And it could be worse if not for meaningless last-minute touchdowns by the New England Patriots against Ditka's Bears in 1986 and by the Denver Broncos against the New York Giants in 1987.

There's an anomaly in all this.

Since the current conference configuration took effect in 1970, AFC teams have won the season against NFC teams 12 times. The NFC has won in 1970, 1971 and 1981 and there have been four ties — in 1973, 1983, 1984 and 1986.

But while the AFC won eight Super Bowls during the 70s to two for the NFC, the situation has been reversed in the '80s — only the Raiders after the 1980 and 1983 seasons have won the league title.

And even while the AFC won this year's season series 30-22, San Francisco has been installed as a touchdown favorite based, at least in part, on the NFC's past four Super Bowl routs.

Why?

"It's a cyclical thing," says George Young, general manager of the New York Giants, whose 19-point victory over Denver two years ago was the smallest margin of victory in the past four years.

"I don't think there's any long-term significance to it."

In fact, the figures bear that out.

If the NFC is strong at the top, it's week at the bottom, accounting for the AFC's continual regular-season margins.

Longhorns nip Coogs at buzzer

HOUSTON (AP) — Joey Wright scored five of his 16 points in the final 2:53, including the winning shot at the buzzer, leading Texas to an 88-86 Southwest Conference victory over Houston Saturday night.

The Longhorns now are 12-3 for the season and 3-1 in SWC play. Houston dropped to 9-6 and 1-2.

Alvin Heggs led Texas with 25 points but played much of the second half with four fouls.

He hit four straight baskets to start the second half that boosted the Longhorns' 54-51 halftime lead to 64-55.

The Cougars then outscored the Longhorns 15-6 and knotted the score at 70-70 but a 3-point play by Travis Mays with 8:36 to play gave the lead back to Texas.

Texas took their halftime lead after an offensive first half in which the Longhorns shot 60 percent from the field and Houston hit 58 percent of its shots.

The Cougars temporarily solved Texas' full court press midway in the first half and took a 30-23 lead before the Longhorns charged back to a 32-32 tie.

From that point, the Longhorns scored eight straight points and didn't trail the rest of the half.

Texas Tech 64, New Orleans 48

J.D. Sanders scored 20 points and Texas Tech shot 72.7 percent from the field as the Red Raiders won a non-conference game.

Texas Tech, 6-8, connected on 24 of 33 field goal attempts, including 14 of 17 in the second half.

Willy Richardson and Robert Hokett paced the Privateers, 8-4, with 10 points and five rebounds apiece.

Sanders scored 12 of his points during a see-saw first half in which there were eight lead changes and two ties.

Texas Tech opened the second half with a 12-4 run to build a 34-24 lead with 14:28 remaining. The Red Raiders added a 17-6 run that gave them a commanding 56-39 lead with 3:13 to play.

Sean Gay and Todd Duncan fueled Texas Tech's second half surge with 14 and 10 points respectively.

Texas A&M 62, Baylor 53

Lynn Suber hit six straight free throws in the final 32 seconds for A&M as Baylor got its fifth straight loss.

Doug Dennis lead A&M with 17 points while Donald Thompson added 14 and Suber got 12. It was A&M's first Southwest Conference win after two defeats and put the Aggies at 8-7 for the season.

Julius Denton lead Baylor with 13 points while Joey Fatta had 12 and Toby Christian, 10. Baylor is now 0-4 in SWC and is 4-11 for the year.

Baylor held a 26-25 advantage at halftime but A&M came out with a full court press defense and opened the second half with a 12-2 run for a 37-28 lead. A&M's defensive presure resulted in 11 Baylor turnovers in the second half.

The Aggies led 49-49 with 6:47 remaining and Fatta sank two free throws with 4:34 left to pull Baylor within two at 49-47.

It was 56-53 when Suber started his string of free throws that came on a fouls by Burke Brown and Denton.

Arkansas 93, SMU 73

Eric Longino hit one of his six 3-pointers to pull SMU within one point with 3:50 left in the first half, but Arkansas dominated the game after that.

Mavericks lose seventh straight

Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Olajuwon scored 10 of his 29 points during 17-6 fourth-quarter scoring run by the Houston Rockets, to lead the Rockets over the Dallas Mavericks Saturday night.

Olajuwon re-entered the game with the scored tied 81-81 and 8:51 left to play. Houston then outscored Dallas, 17-6, including 10 straight points by Olajuwon, to take a 98-87 lead and control of the game.

The Mavericks were never closer than six points again, as Mike Woodson scored eight of his 11 fourth-quarter points in the final two minutes to secure the Houston win.

The game displayed unusually accurate free-throw shooting by both teams, with Houston hitting 39 of 44 attempts, for 89 percent, and Dallas hit 22 of 26, for 85 percent.

The win gives Houston a 22-12 season record, equalling the franchise's best record ever through 34 games, set in the 1985-86 season.

The loss was the seventh straight for the Mavericks.

Woodson finished with 17 points, followed by Derrick Chievous, who had 15. Otis Thorpe had 13 points and 11 rebounds for Houston.

Mark Aguirre led the Mavericks with 23 points, followed by Sam Perkins with 18, Derek Harper with 15, and Rolando Blackman with 14.

Knicks 132, Hawks 122

NEW YORK — Trent Tucker scored 18 of his 21 points in an 11-minute span in the first half to lead the New York Knicks to their 13th straight home-court victory over the Atlanta Hawks.

The victory, before a sellout crowd of 19,591, raised the Knicks' home record to 16-1 this season, while the Hawks lost their third straight and fifth in six games.

Tucker hit 4-for-4 from 3-point range in the second quarter and the Knicks made eight 3-pointers overall.

Trailing 12-10, the Knicks scored 10 straight points and were never behind again. New York led 27-17 after the first quarter and 66-48 at the half. After the Knicks moved ahead 106-84 with 9:37 left in the game, Atlanta used a 13-2 streak midway in the fourth quarter to pull within 114-105 with 4:25 remaining.

Nets 106, Pacers 97

INDIANAPOLIS — Roy Hinson scored 10 of his 23 points in the fourth quarter, including four free throws in the final two minutes, to lead the New Jersey Nets over the Indiana Pacers.

Chuck Person tied the game at 97 on a 3-pointer with 2:00 left in the game. But the Nets scored the final nine points, including seven at the free throw line.

Indiana led 85-83 on a dunk by Reggie Miller, but New Jersey outscored the Pacers 10-2 in the next 4:36, taking a 93-87 lead with 5:05 left in the game. The Pacers scored six of their next eight points at the free throw line and tied the game on Person's 3-pointer as the 24-second shot clock expired.

But Hinson and Lester Conner each sank two free throws while the Pacers went cold and fell behind 101-97 with 1:05 left. After Scott Skiles missed a 3-pointer with 50 seconds left, Joe Barry Carroll hit an easy layin, Hinson sank two more free throws and Dennis Hopson added one.

Cavaliers 116, Nuggets 104

DENVER — Ron Harper scored 30 points and Craig Ehlo tallied all three of his baskets in the final five minutes as Cleveland handed the Denver Nuggets their fourth straight loss.

The win was Cleveland's second in its last 15 games in Denver and gave the Cavs the best record in the NBA at 26-7. Denver chalked up its eighth loss in the last 12 games.

The Nuggets trailed from the middle of the first quarter and were down 60-47 at the half, but staged a second-half rally behind Fat Lever, who finished with 33 points.

Denver remained in contention until the final three minutes. Then Ehlo followed a pair of Harper free throws with a basket for a 107-100 lead. Ehlo hit another basket at the 1:40 mark for an insurmountable 112-102 edge.

Trail Blazers 103, Spurs 99

SAN ANTONIO — Terry Porter scored a season-high 28 points, including two crucial free throws in the final minute, as the Portland Trail Blazers defeated the San Antonio Spurs.

Porter broke a 99-99 tie, hitting two foul shots with 23 seconds left. Caldwell Jones added two free throws for the final margin.

San Antonio held a 79-67 lead with 1:00 left in the third quarter. But Portland scored the next 19 points, eight by Adrian Branch, to take a 86-79 advantage with 8:09 left.

Aikman receives O'Brien Award

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman Saturday was named recipient of the 8th Annual Davie O'Brien National Quarterback Award, officials said.

Aikman will be honored at a Feb. 13 dinner at the Fort Worth Club, where he will receive the O'Brien trophy and a gold Rolex watch. A trophy and $10,000 scholarship grant will also go to UCLA.

The award was established by the Fort Worth Club in the memory of Davey O'Brien, who led Texas Christian University to the 1938 national championship and won the Heisman, Maxwell and Walter Camp awards.

The runner-up for the award, Steve Walsh of Miami, will also be presented a trophy and a special plaque will be given to his school.

Calcavecchia leads Hope Classic

By BOB GREEN

PALM DESERT, Calif. (AP) — Mark Calcavecchia extracted a 5-under-par 67 from friendly little Indian Wells Saturday to take the lead after the fourth round of the $1 million Bob Hope Classic.

Calcavecchia, playing the shortest (6,478 yards) and easiest of the courses used for the first four days of this 90-hole tournament, came from two strokes back to take a two-shot lead going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $180,000 first prize.

The final round will be played at Bermuda Dunes.

Steve Jones, who won last weekend's Tournament of Champions, set a course record with a 9-under-par 63 at Eldorado and moved into a tie for second at 274.

He shared the runner-up spot with Tom Kite and Paul Azinger, who had a 67 in the mild, sunny weather at the Arnold Palmer course at PGA West.

"I hate to finish like that. It leaves a bad taste in your mouth'" said Kite, who bogeyed the 17th and missed a 4-foot birdie putt on the 18th.

The group at 275, three shots back, included West German Bernhard Langer, Fred Couples, Brad Bryant, Ted Schulz and Donnie Hammond.

Couples pitched in for an eagle-3 on the first hole at Bermuda Dunes and went on to a 68. Bryant and Hammond had 67s at Bermuda Dunes. Langer and Schulz each shot 69 at PGA West.

King atop LPGA board

SANDY BAY, Jamaica (AP) — Betsy King moved to a seven-stroke lead after two rounds of the $500,000 LPGA Jamaica Classic with a 3-under-par 68 on Saturday.

King, who had a 64 in the opening round, has a two-day total of 10 under 132 to lead Hall of Famer Nancy Lopez.

Lopez, who had an opening-round 69, shot a 70 to take second place.

The 54-hole tournament on the par-71, 6,292-yard Tryall Golf and Beach Club concludes Sunday.

There was a four-way tie for fourth place among Danielle Ammaccapane, Nancy Brown, Robin Walton and Lori Garbacz. Garbacz, who had a first-round 70, came back with a 66 to move into contention.

PAST

This year, for example, the five weakest teams in the NFC — Dallas, Green Bay, Detroit, Tampa Bay and Atlanta — were 4-14 against the AFC. The five NFC teams with 10-6 records or better were 16-9 against the other conference.

But NFC dominance also has to do with an old adage — defense wins football games.

So while the AFC this decade has been the conference of the quarterbacks — Dan Marino, John Elway, Bernie Kosar, Boomer Esiason, et. al., the NFC has been known for its physical, dominating defense. It's no coincidence that the last four defensive players of the year — Mike Singletary in 1985; Lawrence Taylor in 1986; Reggie White in 1987, and Singletary again this year — have come from the NFC.

The Bears of 1985 and the Giants of 1986 were dominating teams because of overpowering front sevens and the situation hasn't changed this year. Minnesota, Chicago and San Francisco, NFC teams all, ranked 1-2-3 in the league in defense and the 49ers were also second in offense.

Cincinnati, on the other hand, led the league in offense and was 15th in defense, similar to Denver, which entered the Super Bowl last year second in offense and ninth in defense and lost 42-10 to Washington.

Oddly, the 49ers, who started the NFC on its run with a 38-16 blowout of Miami in 1985, often have been derided for playing "finesse" football of the AFC variety.

In part, it has stemmed from Bill Walsh's reputation as an offense coach and the fact that the highest profile players — Joe Montana, Jerry Rice and Roger Craig — played offense. In fact, that Montana is the only NFC quarterback rated on a par with Marino and Elway may have added to the reputation of the 49ers as "sissies."

That reputation was intensified the past three seasons, when the 49ers were knocked out of the playoffs in one game by more physical teams — 17-3 and 49-3 by the Giants; 36-24 by the Vikings.

But that may have been dispelled this season.

"I don't think anyone can say we're a finesse team anymore," says Walsh, whose team features perhaps the hardest-hitting safeties in the NFL in Ronnie Lott and Jeff Fuller and whose nose tackle, Michael Carter, won a silver medal in the shot put in the 1984 Olympics.

Some Bengals agree, like Cris Collinsworth, who seemed almost awed this week after watching San Francisco beat Chicago 28-3 for the NFC title last Sunday.

"When I watched the game, I started rooting for the Bears a little bit, to tell you the truth, just because the 49ers were so dominating-looking on television," Collinsworth says.

They feature a 228-pound strong safety, David Fulcher, who hits like a linebacker, and a huge, physical offensive line featuring 6-foot-6, 290-pound Anthony Munoz and 320-pound Brian Blados.

But the defense, like Denver's, is light in spots it shouldn't be — 245-pound Jim Skow is probably the lightest starting defensive end in the league, a spiritual cousin to Rich Kragen, the 245-pound nose tackle of the Broncos. That quick, light, Denver defense caved in against both the Redskins and Giants.

Moreover, Cincinnati — with its no huddle, quick-snap offense — is considered a team that relies on trickery and deception, finesse, if you will. A typical AFC team.

Where did Wyche get that?

He began his coaching career under Walsh with the 49ers in 1979.

LARRY

After deciding not to re-take the test, Johnson set his sights on the junior college level rather than sit out a year at a major college. He picked Odessa over Navarro and McLennan, in part because of the large contingent of Dallas players already with the Wranglers.

"The other two schools were closer to home, but what attracted me to Odessa was the players," he said. "We had four players from Dallas here last year and that helped me adjust."

"(Former OC players) Riley Smith and Troy Bell were always there for me," Johnson said. "Sometimes the freshman need someone to chat with, even though our freshmen this year are more mature than I was last year."

OC coach Dennis Helms agrees that Johnson has matured from last season.

"He keeps his mind on what he's doing longer," Helms said. "Last year, his intensity level wouldn't stay as high and he'd be lost on defense."

Johnson says his biggest adjustment has been academically, even though Skyline is one of the top-rated schools in the Dallas Independent School District.

"In high school, all you have to do is something to get by," he said. "I knew coming out of high school that I would have to work harder.

"But you put into something what you want to get out of it."

Johnson is completing requirements for an associate degree at OC this spring, and will study broadcast communication at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas after signing with UNLV during the early signing period in November.

The articulate Johnson said a broadcast career would enable him to keep his hand in sports.

"To make it in life, you have to have a job you feel comfortable with. As an athlete, I really love sports and I don't want to get too far away from it."

Coaching? Johnson hasn't ruled it out, but he thinks he'd stick with the younger players.

"I probably wouldn't coach any higher than high school," he said. "I couldn't put up with hard-headed guys like myself in college."

Broadcast plans aside, it appears that Johnson has a good chance to play basketball for many years based on his physical capabilities. He picked UNLV because of Coach Jerry Tarkanian's up-tempo style of play.

"UNLV plays about the same type of game as Oklahoma," he said. "I visited both, weighed the options and picked Vegas after visiting with the team."

UNLV has been ranked nationally for most of the last two decades under Tarkanian, but has never won a national championship. Tarkanian and staff hope to change that with the likes of Johnson and former San Jacinto College standouts David Butler and Moses Scurry.

"If I have to play some 3 (small forward), I should get down to 225 or 230 pounds," he said. UNLV plans to use Johnson at both forward positions.

But for now, Johnson is primarily concerned with helping OC win a national junior college championship.

"We could be a great team if we work hard. The season's really just starting for us.

"Last season at this time, we were kind of burned-out but we seem fresher this year."

The Wranglers are trying not to look too far ahead, he added. "The only goals we have now to work hard every day in practice."

BARNES

"The police arrested the two guys and found out the rifle was unloaded," Barnes said. "It was still unnerving. I didn't get to sleep until 3:30 and we had to catch an early flight to Dallas."

Barnes said: "You just never know how things will work out. I had all that trouble and then I hit my personal best today."

Barnes, a former star at Texas A&M University, threw the shot 73-5½ inches outdoors to win second place for the United States in Korea. The Dallas indoor meet's record was 71-3 1/4.

Ritter of Red Oak, Texas, the women's gold medalist in Seoul, Korea, also came through with a victory. It was her first win in five tries in Dallas with an effort of 6 feet, 2¾ inches. She won first place over Jan Chesbro-Wohlschiag on fewer misses.

THOMPSON

Siobhan Sullivan, who recently graduated from Georgetown, said Thompson was wise to leave the court after the opening tip as opposed to merely skipping the entire game.

"This way, he gets the team together," she said. "Also, it attracts more attention because it's being done in the open."

Proposal 42, which is to go into effect in 1990, would prevent high school students who meet only part of the NCAA's entrance criteria from receiving scholarships their first year in college. It applies to athletes who fail to score 700 (out of a possible 1,600) on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or a 15 (out of 36) on the American College Test, and a 2.0 grade-point average in a high school core curriculum of 11 subjects.

Thompson purposely refused to label the proposal as racist, but did call it "discriminatory."

Before the game, Boston College coach Jim O'Brien applauded Thompson's action, saying his lofty stature among college coaches helps make it a very effective demonstration.

"John Thompson is clearly one of most recognizable coaches in America," O'Brien said. "He's in charge of one of the premier teams in the country and served as our Olympic coach. This is going to make a lot of noise.

"I don't think that just saying anything gets it done," O'Brien added. "In his position, by doing what he's doing, he will draw more attention to it. He feels something needs to be done right now."

The last time Boston College played at the Capital Centre, the Eagles scored only 36 points. O'Brien said he didn't feel Thompson's action would greatly alter Saturday's game.

"Personally, I don't think it will have a great deal of effect one way or another," O'Brien said. "Obviously things will be a little bit different without John there, but it would matter more if they played without (freshman center Alonzo) Mourning or (forward) John Turner.

"It may sound sound stupid, but honestly, if the other coach walked off the court in the middle of the game I probably wouldn't notice because I'd be too busy taking care of my own team."

Boston College guard Dana Barros also said the move would likely have little effect on the game.

"The way I look at it, we aren't playing John Thompson. We're playing Georgetown," Barros said.

Splendor in the Bath

The master bath has a stained glass window above a marble jacuzzi tub. Two separate vanities, an oversized shower and two separate walk-in closets are the other amenities of the bath.

Text By JILL HANCOCK

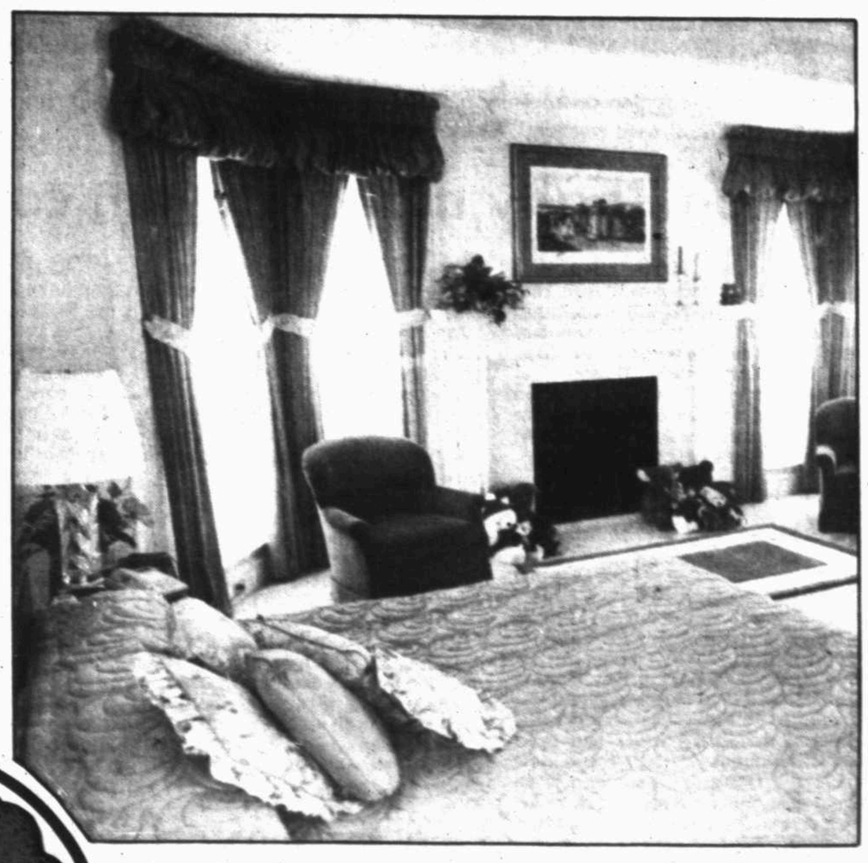

In today's society, many people are becoming overstressed due to the demands of their careers, families and trying to find time for relaxing is at the bottom of their priority list. If your head is nodding in agreement, then the master suite of this weeks featured home will help ease your day-to-day tension.

A warm soak in the jacuzzi tub, followed by relaxing in front of a cozy, romantic fire will help even the most stressed-out person at the end of the day.

Located in Saddle Club North, this custom designed home has three living areas, five bedrooms, four and a half baths, as well as a backyard pool.

The two story, Chicago brick house has a porte co-chere drive through at the front entrance. The lot is large enough to accommodate the addition of a tennis court and a common area which adjoins the property enables children even more space in which to play.

Double leaded glass front doors open onto a huge entry area that has a marble floor. A visitor immediately notices the high ceilings, at least 12 feet, in the downstairs formal living and dining rooms.

A marble fireplace with a carved mantle, as well as two bay windows, highlight the master bedroom.

The formal dining room is to the left of the entrance and a vast bay window provides a view of the front yard. This room also features a lovely brass chandelier and stylish wallpaper above the white wainscoting.

To the right of the entrance a marble fireplace with a carved mantle is the focal point of the formal living room. The room can be closed off from the entrance with French doors and it has a bay window identical to the one found in the formal dining room.

A second set of French doors lead from the formal dining room into the ash wood paneled den. Access to this room can also be made through a door in the entrance hall. This room has a brick fireplace and a large wet bar with a U-Line ice maker and a wine rack. A grass cloth wallcovering decorates this room where family members can relax for an evening of television or board games by the fire. Skylights help to brighten the room during the day.

The spacious kitchen and breakfast room are situated behind the den and formal dining room. Doors from these rooms lead into this gathering area.

A hand painted tile highlights the functional kitchen that has a central work island, triple sink, breakfast bar and built-in desk. The appliances include a Sub-Zero refrigerator, triple Jenn-aire with grill, a General Electric double self-cleaning oven and dishwasher, a Litton microwave and a Compactall trash compactor. The spacious counter by the breakfast bar also has a small sink.

A large walk-in pantry is situated between the kitchen and breakfast room. The pantry is large enough for storage of food items, as well as small appliances, ice chests and cleaning supplies. A pale blue, rose and peach floral wallcovering with a cream background decorate the walls.

The breakfast room has a built-in china cabinet with a server. French doors lead from this area into the backyard which has a wonderful pool, complete with a diving board and slide.

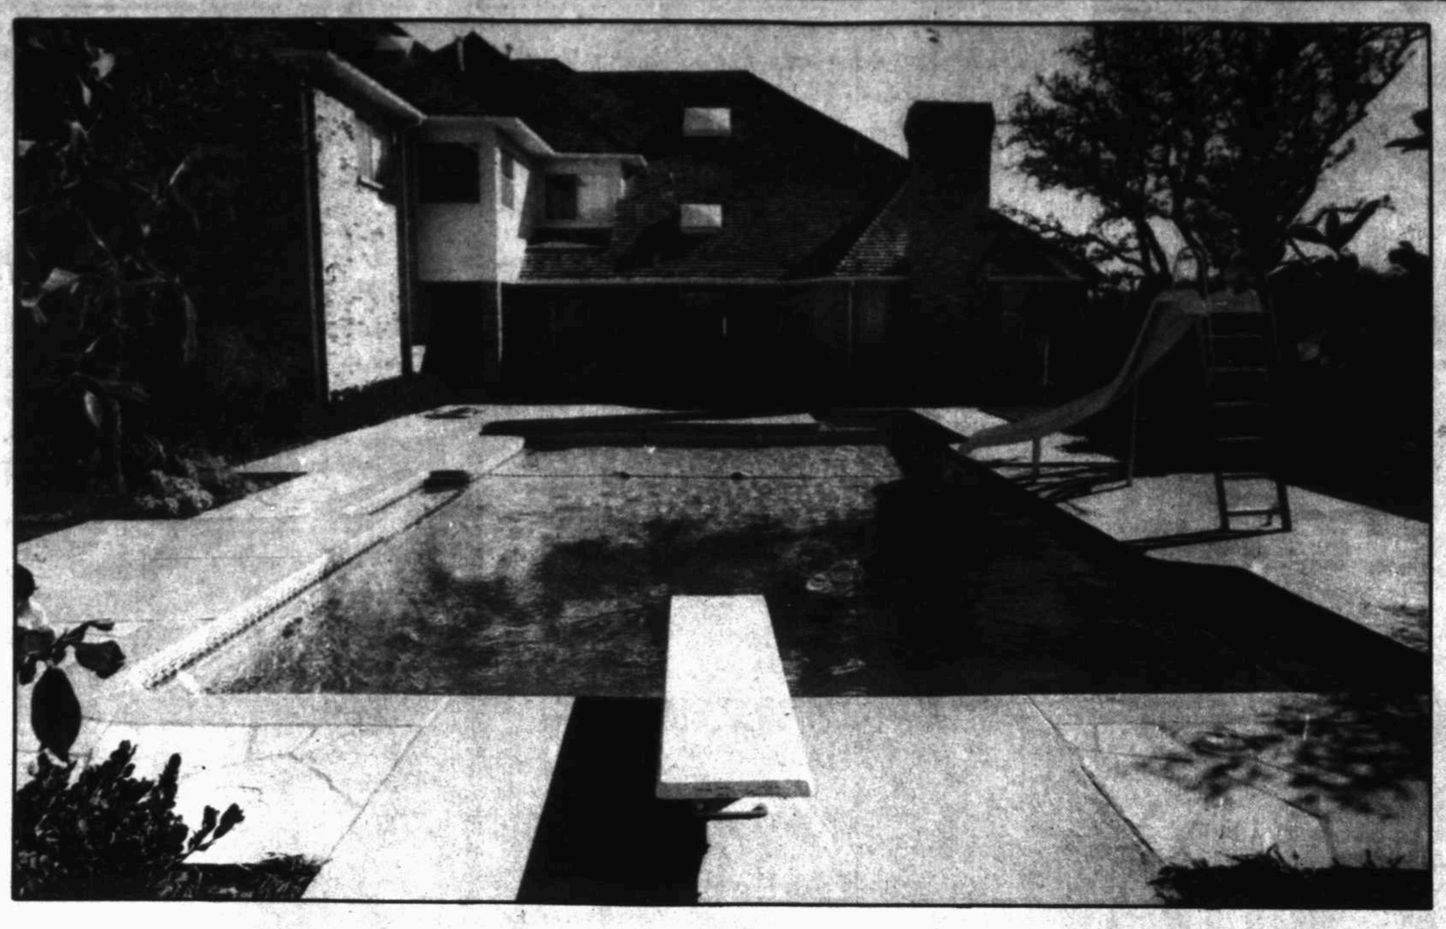

A half bath and utility room are also adjacent to the kitchen and breakfast area. The utility room is extra large and built-in cabinets make this room ideal as a hobby, sewing or computer room.

The master suite of the home is found to the left of the formal dining room. A bedroom is situated at the front of the home and is currently being used as an office. It would also make an elegant guest room and has an adjoining bath which features a built-in shower.

The master suite is located at the end of the hall and would provide a haven for any couple at the end of the day. A high ceiling with a unique design is only one of the elegant features found in this room. A marble fireplace and bay windows also highlight this room. Doors provide a private entrance into the backyard.

BATH—

Two doors open onto a wonderful bathroom that may be the neatest room in the house. A wallpaper in shades of rose with blue, teal and cream accents adorn the walls of the bath. A beveled edge mirror reflects the stained glass window over the marble jacuzzi tub, making this bath truly elegant. The bath also has two marble vanities, an oversized glass shower and separate walk-in closets with built-in drawers and cabinets.

A staircase off the breakfast room leads to the children's wing of the home. Three spacious bedrooms are situated off a gameroom where children can gather with their friends. This room has ash wood paneling, a built-in desk and bookcase, as well as two windows which provide a great view of the pool.

One of the bedrooms has a private bath with a shower. The other bedrooms are connected by a common bathing area, with each having their own private vanity area. All three bedrooms are decorated with a fashionable wallpaper and would delight any child, regardless of age.

The other amenities of this splendid home are an intercom, vacuum system, gold bathroom fixtures, crown molding, a security system, outdoor lighting, lots of storage closets, tile flooring and neutral carpeting.

Don Harvey, Realtors is offering this home for $495,000.

During the spring and summer, a family would relish the swimming pool in the backyard of this week's featured home. Beautiful landscaped flower beds surround this area in the backyard.

A bay window, above, that spans into the 12 foot ceilings brightens the formal living room. This room has a sitting area in front of a marble fireplace and can also accommodate a grand piano in the corner of the room.

Treat hand-knotted rugs with care

By JOHN WARDE
New York Times News Service

Fine hand-knotted rugs are often works of art, yet many owners choose to use them every day.

Handmade antique and silk rugs, which are both precious and fragile, should be used daily only with great caution and should be cared for professionally.

But most fine hand-knotted wool rugs, those less than 50 years old, can withstand normal household use, and as long as they are in good condition, they can be cleaned and cared for by amateurs.

Routine cleaning to remove surface dirt and dust should be done daily, by sweeping with a hand broom or with a mechanical, not electric, carpet sweeper. Experts do not recommend the frequent use of a vacuum cleaner because its powerful suction may loosen the knots that hold the rug's yarns in place.

If you do decide to vacuum, use an ordinary carpet attachment, not a motorized carpet cleaner with rotary brushes. The recommended frequency: about once a week over high-traffic areas like stairs and hallways and about once every two to four weeks over the entire carpet.

Be particulary careful not to vacuum over the fringed borders of a hand-knotted rug.

The fringes can be sucked into the vacuum, destroying them and causing damage to the warp threads, the rug's foundation, which may then require professional repair.

Rotate rugs every six months (more frequently in high-traffic areas) by turning them 180 degrees.

At this time, no matter whether you routinely vacuum or sweep your rugs, flip them over, and vacuum them on the back, using the vacuum's motorized carpet attachment, if you have one.

This will remove dirt that has found its way to the base of the pile.

Rugs of manageable size can be beaten by hand to remove embedded dirt, using an old-fashioned cane or wicker rug beater.

If the rug is easily transported, hang it outdoors on a clothesline and gently beat it from the back.

If that's not possible, flip the rug pile-side down on the floor, then lift up one section and beat it. Remove the dirt that falls to the floor from one section before moving on to the next.

Rugs should be washed every two years or so, even those that are swept or vacuumed regularly.

All rugs made by hand should be washed by hand. Most owners will probably choose to have this done by professionals; be sure to select only reputable experts who specialize in cleaning the type of rugs you own.

But if you choose, you can wash undamaged wool rugs at home.

If the rug is small enough, place it on a table or counter top for comfort. Otherwise, any hard, dry surface, including a floor, will do.

Beat the rug thoroughly to remove all loose grit and fiber. This is extremely important, because if this step is ignored, mud will form during the cleaning, and when it's dry, that mud can damage rug fibers severely.

After beating the rug, test for colorfastness.

Mix half a cup of mild, non-detergent rug shampoo, the type that, once dry, can be removed by sweeping or vacuuming. Dilute to the proportions recommended by the manufacturer.

Apply the solution with a natural-fiber brush: a fine horse-grooming or animal-care brush, available at pet stores, is recommended.

Start with a small area, preferably an inconspicuous one with an intricate pattern. Gently massage the solution into the rug, using short, overlapping strokes and taking care not to soak the material.

After about a dozen strokes, wipe the area with a clean white cotton cloth. If any coloring comes off, the dye is not colorfast, and the rug should be professionally washed.

Spread the rug pile-side up on the work surface. Dip the brush into the solution, shake off the excess, then scrub small areas of the rug at a time in succession, using the same gentle overlapping strokes employed for testing.

Again, be careful not to soak the fibers.

Proceed in rows across the rug, applying a uniform amount of solution and keeping the number and strength of the brush strokes constant.

First, brush against the direction of the pile, then reverse the process, brushing in the direction of the pile.

Do not try to brush the fringe.

Handle the rug carefully; when damp, it will be heavier than normal.

Once finished, carry the rug, rolled or flat (never folded), to a hard, non- absorbent surface for drying, preferably outdoors exposed to direct sunlight.

If no outdoor location is available, spread the rug indoors on a floor covered with thick newspapers in a sunny or heated room equipped with a fan to circulate the air.

Allow the rug to dry completely.

Once a day (or more often if necessary), roll up the rug and replace the newspapers underneath as they become damp.

After the rug is dry, sweep or gently vacuum away the powdery shampoo residue. Finish by using a clean broom to brush the rug in the direction of the pile.

If water soaks the pile, lift the rug and blot up the water by pressing pads of wadded paper towels against the spot on both sides.

Then dry, using warm, not hot, air from a blow-dryer. Rub the nap of the dried pile with your fingers to restore its texture.

With all other spills, use a spoon to scoop up as much of the spilled material as possible.

Then, except for greasy or waxy spills, add a tablespoon or so of cold water or club soda to the spot and continue scooping, adding water from time to time until the water being removed is clear.

Homeowners aided by Carriage Company Realtor with buying, selling of new home

BY JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

The Carriage Company, Realtors assist homebuyers when they are in the market for a new home, as well as selling their homes. Five months ago, Dana Chandler, a Carriage Company associate helped a couple relocate to Northgate into a lovely three bedroom family home which is now available on the real estate market.

Richard and Tina Song moved to Midland from Houston in October of 1987. After they had lived here a few months and familiarized themselves with the community, the Songs decided that the Northgate addition would be the perfect neighborhood for their growing family - Helen Yuri, 3 and their "baby-to-be," Daniel Yumin, who was born in June.

Chandler checked the computer print out daily for new listings of homes available in the Northgate neighborhood. The Song's new home was discovered by Chandler in the HUD Home Sale advertisement in the Reporter-Telegram.

These homes have been repossessed and are for sale. We knew this home was going to become available on the market and we watched for it," explained Chandler.

Buyers then submit a bid to the HUD offices in Lubbock by a certain date. The list priced is based on the fair market value of the home. A day is designated to open the bids and usually clients are notified within a day or two. The Songs, however, found out that same day. Mrs. Song pointed out that they had looked at a variety of homes but this particular home featured a floor plan that was perfect for their family.

"After a HUD Home bid has been accepted, the locks are changed on the home and no one is allowed back in the house until the closing is final," stated Chandler. For the Songs, it was a long six weeks. Mr. Song did admit that they came and looked through the windows a few times.

Chandler also added that an advantage of purchasing this type of home is that HUD will help with the closing costs.

Mr. Song is a program analysis in the computer company of Chevron. And due to the specialization of his job, he recently found out that he is being transferred back to Houston.

Dana Chandler, left, of The Carriage Company, Realtors helped the Richard Song family find a new home in the Northgate neighborhood last summer. The Songs have been transferred to Houston and their house is now, once again, on the real estate market.

After five months in a house which they updated with new paint and the addition of ceiling fans and an automatic door opener, the Song's home is now - once again - on the real estate market.

The three bedroom, two bath home has a spacious living area with a brick fireplace and a formal dining room. The kitchen and breakfast room are brightened by a large bay window that provides a view of the front yard.

The master bedroom also has a bay window with an open vanity area and a private bathing area.

The other amenities of the home include a sprinkler system, extra storage closets and a conveniently located utility room. The home is priced at $ 63,000.

Chandler has assisted the Songs a great deal - from finding a home with a floor plan they liked to making a bid to secure the home and to having everything organized for the loan application. She is now ready to help them, as well as a new family, in selling this home to a family who will enjoy raising their children in these ideal surroundings.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

O.J. and Janette Jenson recently moved into a Key Home in northwest Midland. Vicky Garrett of Action Realty assisted them with the purchase of their new home.

Action Realty makes dream come true

Moving into a larger home in a new neighborhood is a dream that many couples have but sometimes are not able to achieve because they must sell their present home first. For O. J. and Janette Jenson, that dream came true recently when they traded a home where they have lived 34 years for a 1,900 square foot Key Home in northwest Midland.

After having looked at numerous existing homes, the only alternative presented to them was to sell their home in order to purchase an existing home with no assurance that this could be accomplished in a timely fashion which would enable them to acquire a home of their choice. Upon meeting Vicky Garrett of Action Realty and having Key Homes' Guaranteed Purchase Agreement explained to them, the Jenson's discovered that this barrier had been totally eliminated. They could now receive a fair and reasonable price for their home whether or not a purchaser was found by the completion of their new home.

By building a home rather than purchasing an existing home, the Jensons found that Harry Deter, the builder, was quite easy to work with. Modifications were promptly and cheerfully accomplished by Mr. Deter.

Mr. Jenson was quite pleased in their purchase of a quality, yet affordable home with the ability to select and modify a plan designed especially for them.

"We especially liked being able to choose the carpeting, wallcoverings and brick," stated Mrs. Jenson.

After moving from a one bath home, it is no wonder that the master bath is their favorite room in their new home. Both have their own "space" - a spacious vanity, a bathtub, a built-in shower and separate closets - making morning much more pleasant.

Mr. Jenson is employed by Tergerson Fine Foods which is a local, complete food supplier service. Mrs. Jenson has worked for the Midland Independent School District Food Service Department for 15 years and is currently at Lee High School.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Jenson feel that their dream was made possible due to a Realtor and builder who were willing to work with a seller and address their individual needs.

The Jensons met Garrett at the end of September and ground was broken for the new home on October 10. Due to good weather, an experienced builder and qualified crews, the Jensons moved into their homes two months later on December 10, just in time for the Christmas holidays.

Garrett stressed that one of Key Homes' policy is to work with buyers to satisfy the individual needs whether it be trading for an existing home or relentlessly seeking out the best possible means of financing tailored to the individual buyer.

The Jensons new three bedroom home has two living areas that include two living areas, a formal dining room, a spacious kitchen and breakfast room.

Their enthusiasm for their home is very contagious and their seven grandchildren were able to get comfortable with their new surroundings during Christmas. And with the addition of landscaping in the backyard, Tatoo, their dog will also adjust to his new home.

"It just amazes me, every day when I go to work, that I'm being paid for doing something I love." How many people can say that? No matter how much anyone enjoys their line of work, sooner or later it can become repetitious.

And as a result, everyone is probably guilty of daydreaming about the ideal job at least once in their life. According to a study published by Future Directions for a Learning Society, more than 40 million Americans are usually in some stage of career transition or job change.

THE DESIRE for a better (more challenging or higher paying) job is an ongoing desire. Many jobs — such as teachers, salepersons and investment brokers — have a high burn-out rate and some careers are limited by age requirements, such as those of baseball players or fashion models. Even jobs which can last a lifetime, however, can lose their appeal eventually.

The ideal job may be equated with fame, with little work for high pay, with working out of one's own home or being able to awake at leisure and begin the workday in the afternoon. It may offer a person high international visibility or just have little stress involved.

Dave Perkins, radio disc jockey for KODM, has a job that many people think is ideal. Radio personalitites don't have to dress up for work, and they have an opportunity to listen to music all day and chat on the phone with listeners. But although being a radio DJ seems like an effortless job, it requires technical skills and knowledge of public relations.

To succeed as a DJ requires "a lot of concentration and shoestring management skills, often employed with seconds to spare," according to Perkins. "It is one of the only jobs I know of where you try to make people like you and feel like you are their friend," he said. "It is an extension of everyone's natural desire to be liked — something that I would want to achieve in my personal life anyway."

Perkins said he would like to be a professional golfer or fishing guide. "The fishing guide would probably be impractical financially and I would need an incredible amount of skill to be a professional golfer."

Johnnie Isbell, area manager of Midland's Texas Employment Commission, has an ideal job not too far removed from her current career. "I'd like to be a fairy godmother, wave my wand and make everyone's dreams come true — get everybody a job," she said.

Director of Speech Communications and Reading for Midland College, Jerry Watson, said his dream is to become a famous syndicated columnist. This isn't too far-fetched, since Watson does write "Slam the Door, Quietly," a column based on his personal experiences, for several magazines and newspapers.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Members of the Ranchland Hills Country Club Ladies Association started the new year with a fun luncheon meeting in early January.

A Mexican theme was carried out in decorations and the menu. Pinatas and fresh flowers decorated the tables, and an outstanding Mexican buffet followed the social hour, during which margaritas were served.

Linda Bond, director of development and marketing for the Midland Community Theatre, introduced the MCT Singers, who presented the program. They sang selections from musicals, including "Oklahoma," "Paint Your Wagon" and "South Pacific," and from current MCT productions of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" and "A...My Name is Alice," closing with "It's Not Where You Start, It's Where You Finish."

Among those enjoying the gathering were Sherry (Mrs. Ray) Johnson, Connie (Mrs. Gene) Thomas, Mary Ann (Mrs. Dub) Johnson, Maneeta Heckathrone, Donna (Mrs. David) Devine and Gladys (Mrs. Dalvin) Awalt.

JOYCE JONES of Lamesa and the mother of a Midland woman is the exhibiting artist at the Midland Woman's Club during the month of January. Her watercolors can be viewed weekdays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Ladies of the club will have the opportunity to meet Mrs. Jones when she is a special guest at their regular monthly meeting on Jan. 19. She will be accompanied by her daughter, Debbie (Mrs. Gerald, Jr.) Nobles.

A FUN TRIP to the Big Apple was enjoyed by Mary (Mrs. John) Stringer, Dilly (Mrs. Shorty) Nance and her daughter, Kay Linn, and Vera (Mrs. Paul) Wecker and her daughter, Judy (Mrs. George) Blakeman of Fort Worth prior to the Christmas holidays.

The quintet enjoyed Radio City Music Hall's Christmas Spectacular and the musical, "Me and My Girl," at the lovely theatre in the Marriot Hotel. Other highlights included lunching at Tavern on the Green in Central Park and dining at Windows on the World at the Trade Center.

They were caught up in the holiday spirit by the gaily decorated stores and the cordiality expressed by the New Yorkers to the Texans.

She shared the six-and-a-half week adventure with her former nursing school roommate, Mary Teegardin of Keystone Heights, Fla. Miss Teegardin is retired from the Overseas Missionary Fellowship, an interdenominational agency, and the pair paid visits to South and Central Thailand, where Miss Teegardin had served for 32 years of her 35-year mnistry.

While serving in Thailand, Miss Teegardin, an R.N. and superintendent of the hospital in the city of Sai Buri, worked with the leprosy patients and was instrumental in organizing several clinics in the villages of the region.

On this trip, she and Mrs. Johnson visited some of those clinics and saw some of her former patients, including one man, who asked if she remembered him and stated, "You dressed 33 wounds for me the first time I saw you."

Although Mrs. Johnson experienced cultural shock at first, the natives' friendliness, their many kindnesses and the desire to shower the Americans with gifts, as well as the breathtaking beauty of the countryside, more than made up for the inconveniences.

While staying in the villages, Mrs. Johnson learned to go without hot water, accepted the necessity of sleeping under mosquito netting and that it was de rigueur to remove one's shoes before entering a home or store. No screens on the open windows made for some interesting companions, she said, including lizards, butterflies, flies and even birds and bees. Their meals consisted of rice with various curries and fruits for dessert.

The women did some sightseeing in Bangkok and Singapore before returning home, and Mrs. Johnson has a renewed appreciation for the American way of life after her far-flung travels.

It is time to alphabetize your spices.

It is time to use the packet of yeast before it expires at noon tomorrow.

Sometimes Jim will act like a houseguest.

"Where do you hide the iced tea glasses?"

"The hall bath needs toilet tissue."

"There is someone at the door selling something."

"I'd put the dishes away, but I don't know where they belong."

Sometimes Jim will act as if he has hired you for the summer.

"Who was that on the phone, and what did they want?"

"Where are you going, and what time are you coming back?"

"I don't think the grass can wait another day."

"It is cheaper to make your own tea bags than to buy ready-made."

See Jim drive you crazy.

You are surprised.

You did not know you married a man who knew so much about dishwashers, wax buildup, hand-washables, stain removers, children and how to keep bananas from turning brown.

Jim is surprised.

He does not know how you have managed to stumble through 40 years of running a house without him.

Everyone is surprised he is busier than ever.

You're not.

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

U.S. Gov't. Approves Patent Claims for New Diet Pill

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special) — An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling) to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W841, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime, 24 hours, toll free 1(800) 527-9700, ext. W841.

DREAMS

"I wouldn't start 'work' until 10 a.m. and would try to wrap up my writing by noon," Watson said. "Then I would do some volunteer work for the theater and symphony, sit around the house and go to movies on evenings when I wasn't preparing to appear on the 'Johnny Carson Show.'"

Executive Director for Midland Community Theatre Don Bachmann, said if he could do anything he wanted he would play second base for the New York Yankees. "God knows they need the help," he added.

Marilyn Bassinger, education director for Museum of the Southwest says she has the job that she had previously "dreamed of having."

"My job allows me to work with musicians, artists and dancers. Working to create an educational environment for children, especially with the Children's Museum, also is a unique and challenging experience," Ms. Bassinger said. "I've had other jobs, but none with such great rewards."

The education director said the best part of her job is "seeing the public enjoy programs that I have helped create. Oh, sure there are pressures and peak load periods, but the benefits — seeing the public's reactions, being here when exhibits arrive and working with the artists — makes it all worth while," she said.

Another person who wouldn't trade her "people-oriented position" for any other job is Elvia Hernandez, executive director of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. Ms. Hernandez, who is involved with youth and community projects, said, "My job is ideal because I can take something and make it grow. I also enjoy organizing projects. If there is cause that is worthy, I am there."

Elizabeth White, a hairdresser at Head Hunters, said she decided "long ago" that being a hairdresser was her ideal occupation. "I've been a hairdresser for 29 years and I am still fascinated with my job. Not only do I have a chance to make an impact on people's lives by helping to change their image, but I also act as therapist, counselor and diagnostician."

Ms. White says her career field allows her to "touch people's lives as well as their hair."

"I may get tired, but I never get tired of what I'm doing. Although I have plenty of outside interests — serving on church board of directors, singing — I hope to continue being a hairdresser for another 29 years," she said.

Patteann Daniel-Beverley of Pages & Prints bookstore also followed her dream. "When I was 17, and a secretary for a Methodist minister, my dream was to own a bookstore, and his dream was to write a book. We still write each other and he signs every letter 'KODA' for 'Keep Our Dream Alive.'" The bookstore owner said that she enjoys being surrounded by "art, music and people everyday."

Diane Gaddy, artistic director for Ballet Midland, said, "ideally I would like to have enough money so that I wouldn't need to work. Then I could do anything I wanted and travel everywhere. But if I did work, I would love to have international status as a ballerina, be in 50 performances a year in cities all over the world. As a free-lance performer I could have one city as a home base, and study under top coaches and perform in lovely opera houses."

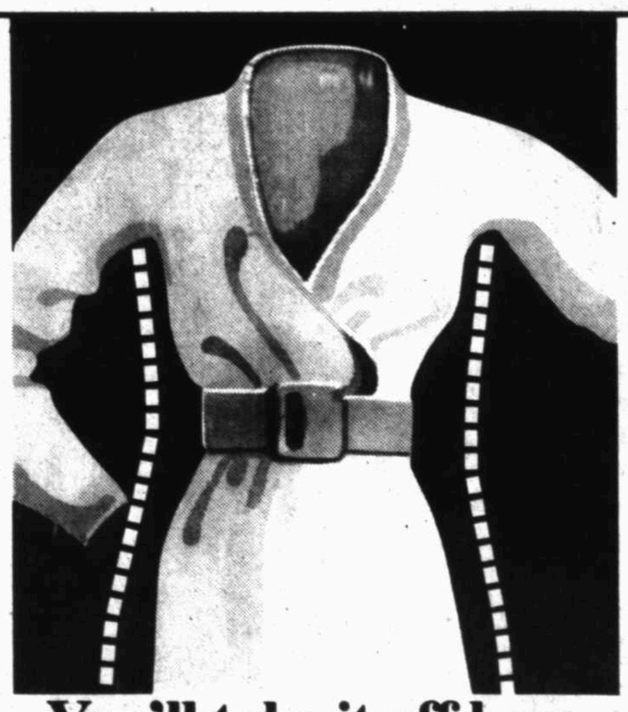

Ms. Gaddy said that her biggest fantasy of all would be "dancing with Mikhail Baryshnikov and Rudolph Nureyev."

Another person who aspires for fame is Patty Loftis, a performer for Midland Community Theatre's Singers and cast member of the musical "A ... My Name is Alice." Ms. Loftis said her dream is to have a leading role in a Broadway musical. "That or be a marine biologist," she said.

One conservative business man, who decided to remain anonymous, had a surprising fantasy. "If I could do anything I wanted, I'd be a Chippendale dancer," he said.

Other too-good-to-be-true jobs some people aspire to are:

- Vanna White's position of turing letters on the television show "Wheel of Fortune." Who would have ever dreamed that someone could become so wealthy and famous just from "turning letters?"
- Erma Bombeck's job of being a syndicated columnist. She can sleep late, work out of her own home and she recently signed a $12 million three-book contract (not bad for a humor columnist).
- A mattress tester (unfortunately — due to modern technology — mattresses are usually tested by machines, but imagine simply relaxing on matresses all day and then giving your opinion of them).
- A taste-tester in a chocolate factory. Since "Cholcolatier" magazine has a circulation of 350,000 and the average American consumes 11 pounds of chocolate a year, this could be a well sought after occupation.
- Travel agent who has to try out cruises, and package deals with all expenses paid.
- Cruise director.
- Lamborghini test driver.
- Tonight Show host (because working days are few and pay is high.)
- Elizabeth Taylor's divorce lawyer.
- Playboy photographer (courtesy of the Midland Reporter-Telegram photograpy department).
- Ed McMahan's job. How much does he get paid for playing Johnny Carson's straight man, anyway? (Laughing at Carson's jokes is almost as easy as Vanna White's job).

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Health care costs covered

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Beginning Jan. 1, 1989, Medicare now covers catastrophic health care costs. The legislation helps protect the 32 million elderly and disabled beneficiaries from "catastrophic" hospital, doctor and prescription drug bills.

The new law limits the amount each Medicare beneficiary is paid for covered hospital care, physician services, medical supplies and outpatient drugs; it increases home health, skilled nursing facility and hospice coverage; and it adds breast cancer screening and respite care benefits.

These new benefits are available to eligible Medicare beneficiaries automatically. Participants are not required to do anything to receive this coverage. If a person is enrolled in Part A only and wants to enroll in Part B to take advantage of all the benefits, he or she will be given the opportunity during the Jan. 1-March 31 general enrollment period each year.

■ Coinsurance — Under the previous law, beneficiaries were required to pay a daily coinsurance charge equal to 12.5 percent of the inpatient hospital deductible for days 21-100 of post-hospital extended care services for each spell of illness. No coinsurance requirements were applied to the first 20 days.

Effective Jan. 1, coinsurance charges will only be imposed on the first eight days of extended care services in a calendar year. Coinsurance amounts will be equal to 20 percent of the estimated national average per diem reasonable cost recognized under Part A.

■ Prior hospitalization requirements — under the previous law, payment for extended care services was made only if the beneficiary had been a hospital inpatient for at least three consecutive days. The new law waives the prior hospitalization requirement.

■ Increase in covered days allowed — previously, Medicare covered up to 100 days of post-hospital extended care services during a spell of illness. Beginning Jan. 1, the number of days per calendar year is 150.

The new law also extends the day limit for hospice care beyond the current lifetime limit of 210 days. To be eligible for an extension, a beneficiary must be recertified as terminally ill by the medical director or physician member of the interdisciplinary group of the hospice program.

The new Medicare legislation also affects the blood deductible for participants. Under the previous law, beneficiaries were required to pay for the first three pints of whole blood or equivalent quantities of packed red blood cells used. The three-pint deductible is applied separately under both Parts A and B. With the new law, beneficiaries will only be responsible for payment of one annual deductible which is equal to the cost of the first three pints of whole blood or equivalent quantity of packed red blood cells, furnished under either Part A or Part B. If the blood is replaced on the beneficiary's behalf, the deductible will be waived.

For more information concerning the new Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, contact the Social Security Office.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Study names most promising jobs for '80s

Associated Press

WILTON, Conn. — What industries offer job seekers the most promise in the '80s?

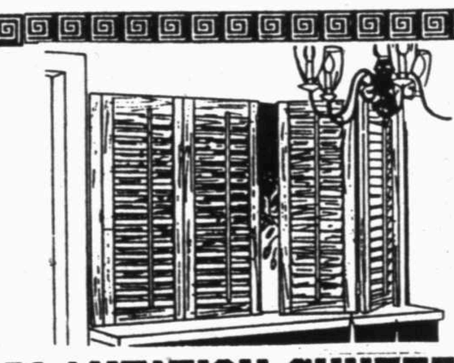

According to a study by PHH Homequity Inc., the four best prospects are chemicals, paper and forestry products, drugs-pharmaceuticals and defense and space electronics.

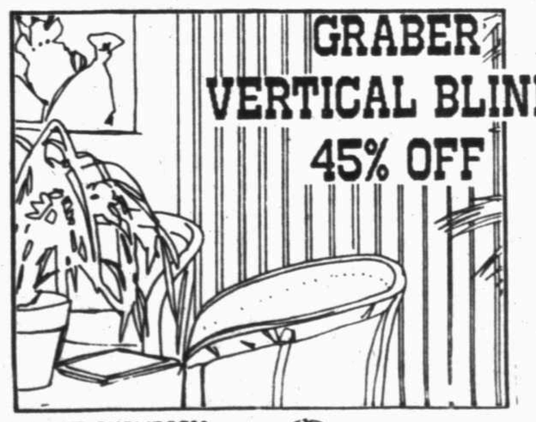

The chemicals industry, a big exporter, benefits from the weakened dollar. Paper and forestry firms are helped by strong product demand and modernized equipment, says the study. New health-saving products keep the drug and pharmaceutical business growing. Defense and space electronics are expected to benefit from existing long-range contracts.

Saying yes to phone sales pitch dangerous

BY AMANDA GRIFFIN
New York Times News Service

OPELOUSAS, La. — I've said no to vinyl siding, circus tickets for needy children and insulation for my home, but the other day I gave in and said yes to the sales rep who called from a nationwide photography studio.

If Ralph Nader didn't say it he should have — it's dangerous to buy anything over the phone. There's always a catch.

But, this offer sounded so good — three 8x10 photographs taken at three different appointments for $12.99 with a fourth thrown in free because I gave the saleswoman the names and phone numbers of 10 friends, at least they were friends.

I made an appointment for the first sitting, it was the two-year old's turn, and then 10 days later it was time to review the proofs. I blithely sat down with a fatherly-looking gentleman, who with a flourish produced my set of pictures, lined them up on a piece of black velvet and pronounced them the best he had seen all afternoon.

"Now, what we can do is to create an oil mount of this picture so that you have a treasure much like an artist would create," he said, gathering momentum and reaching for a sample photo of a pair of darling brunette sisters.

"The cost for this heirloom is only $159," he said, pen poised to write the order.

"I don't think my budget will allow that," I demurred, declining to add that I thought the "heirloom" was tacky.

"Well, for $30 less we can go with this version, a textured photograph and still an excellent buy," he said.

In the next three minutes he went through his 10 best package deals, scratching on a note pad, throwing out numbers and promising me that these photographs would be perfect Christmas presents.

While he talked, I sat and wondered who I would give 13 wallet size pictures of my two-year old to. Two sets of grandparents were the most appreciative audience I could come up with.

When my fatherly salesman in his brown polyester plaid coat seemed to reach the end of his list of packages and I still hadn't spent any money, he threw in the clincher.

"If you don't care to purchase these proofs for $38.99, they will be recycled," he said, gathering the photos into a stack like a Las Vegas card dealer.

That sweet smile, the white Peter Pan collar, the pink dress with the faint brown stain left by an M&M eaten three minutes before the picture was taken, gone. My one 8x10 began to pale in significance.

I meekly retrieved my credit card from my purse while the salesman suddenly became more cheerful and talked about his four grown children. Was he gloating? I wondered to myself.

I knew I had done just what they wanted me to do when they called. Next time, I resolved, I would send an objective third party without a credit card to review the proofs.

Recycled, of all the nerve.

Traditional bridal showers updated

Copley News Service

The traditional bridal shower has been updated in recent years. Once thought to be a time for girlfriends, mothers and aunts to get together and shower the bride with gifts and advice, today's bridal shower is more likely to be a cocktail party for the friends and relatives of both bride and groom.

Brides purchased

Copley News Service

Currencies used in purchasing brides have varied considerably. In the Santa Cruz Islands, brides once were bought with oils made from mango-bird feathers wrapped in banana fibers. In New Guinea, bird-of-paradise feathers were used; in Siam (now Thailand), silver ingots with a special stamp; and in Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe), iron bells.

Spring bridal collections not traditional styles

By LESLIE WATTS
Hearst News Service

If the bridal styles from the recent New York and Paris spring markets ever take hold and waltz down the aisle, wedding guests will have to change their tune from "here comes the bride" to "there goes tradition."

For better or for worse, you might even say that some of the suggested matrimonial ensembles took the cake. Here's how it was served.

Emo Pandelli, one of New York's newest names to note, sent his fluttering bride out in a voluminous, winged victory of white cotton pique, tucked organza and gabardine.

"I wanted it to be very pure — like an angel," said Pandelli, and at one point the ensemble did seem about to take flight off the end of the runway.

The midriff-baring underdress showed only a peekaboo of skin beneath a floor-length, tentlike coat large enough to sleep a family of four. The pleated, wing-style hat most closely resembled a cross between a large, accordion-folded Kleenex — the kind young girls create in boring English classes — and a nun's cap branded with a silver cross in front.

Also noted were this bride's black-tied "Swiss cheese shoes" in iridescent white leather with 3-inch-thick soles decorated with large cylindrical holes.

Who says men don't make passes at girls who wear glasses? Two of this season's New York runway brides sported specs.

A barefoot surfer bride at Bob Mackie's show took to the runway in a white-and gold-sequined oversized T-shirt with "California" written in gold across the front. A long froth of a veil and poetically just, rose-colored glasses completed this California-dreaming look.

Mary McFadden's bride appeared to have been tarred and flowered. The bodice of her white organza gown was heavily encrusted with full sized silk daisies, irises, tulips and assorted wildflowers, and an overgrown wreath of flowers covered most of her head.

Isaac Mizrahi's Pharaoh's bride, also in a tentlike coat and dress, jangled down the runway with enough jewelry around her neck to sink Cleopatra's barge. Whatever happened to a nice, quiet single strand of pearls?

Darkhorse candidate for the New York season would have to be Oscar de la Renta's Goyaesque bridal segment, which included serious gowns of pale blue and taupe faille trimmed with black lace. Black lace mantillas, peineta combs and bright floral bouquets carried out the Spanish theme.

Pas de deux, anyone? A few weeks earlier in Paris, Bernard Perris' lady in white had tippy-toed down the runway in a white satin and tulle ballet tutu cut down to the waist in front and up to the waist in back.

Jacqueline de Ribes' bride wore a dress that was reasonable enough – an asymmetrical hemline sloped from above the knees in front to a long train in back – but the spiky headdress fanned out high and wide enough to make a white peacock turn green with envy.

Also in Paris, Jean-Paul Gaultier's bride might have made it to the church on time, but her dress didn't. The bare bones of his bird-cage-style "corset dress" reduced onlookers to reading between the lines. The ensemble also included the skeleton of an opened umbrella and a rib-cage style basket headdress.

Borrowing on a look from Old Testament times, Yves St. Laurent's bride wore a hooded, robe-style gown and carried a sheaf of wheat as a bouquet.

All things considered, if spring brides start taking any of this seriously, we may have a new saying on our hands: Something old, something new, something borrowed, what's it to you?"

Nothing doing

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

The holidays are over, along with the endless parade of turkey dinners — both fresh and leftover — most of the football games, shopping trips, visiting relatives, most of the football games, over consumption of food and drink, most of the football games, holiday parties and, of course, most of the football games.

And those who are burned out by the proverbial "hustle and bustle" of November and December can finally kick back and enjoy the one day of the year set aside for this feeling — National Nothing Day, Jan. 16.

According to Chase's Annual Events, a book that lists what or who is celebrated each day of the year, Monday is the anniversary of "National Nothing Day, an event created by newspaperman Harold Pullman Coffin and first observed in 1973 'to provide Americans with one national day when they can just sit without celebrating, observing or honoring 'anything.' "

However, this year, National Nothing Day is taking place on a something day — Martin Luther King Jr. Day. In 1983, the third Monday in January was set aside in honor of the birthday of Dr. King, an American hero who was born on Jan. 15, 1929 — he would have been 60 today.

Some businesses — banks and government agencies, especially — will be closed tomorrow, in observance of Dr. King's birthday, which means some employees will have chance to celebrate in whatever style they choose — even by doing nothing.

Sam Flores, vice president of lending at NCNB, who does have a day off tomorrow, said he has two personal preferences for celebrating. "I would track down anyone I know who made tapes of all the football games I missed on the weekend of bowl games, plug myself into the living room and not budge for six or eight hours."

Since his wife and two daughters probably wouldn't appreciate him vegging out in front of football games all day, he said, his other choice would be "to spend my day doing absolutely nothing but fishing. Because 'a bad day fishing is better than a good day at work.' "

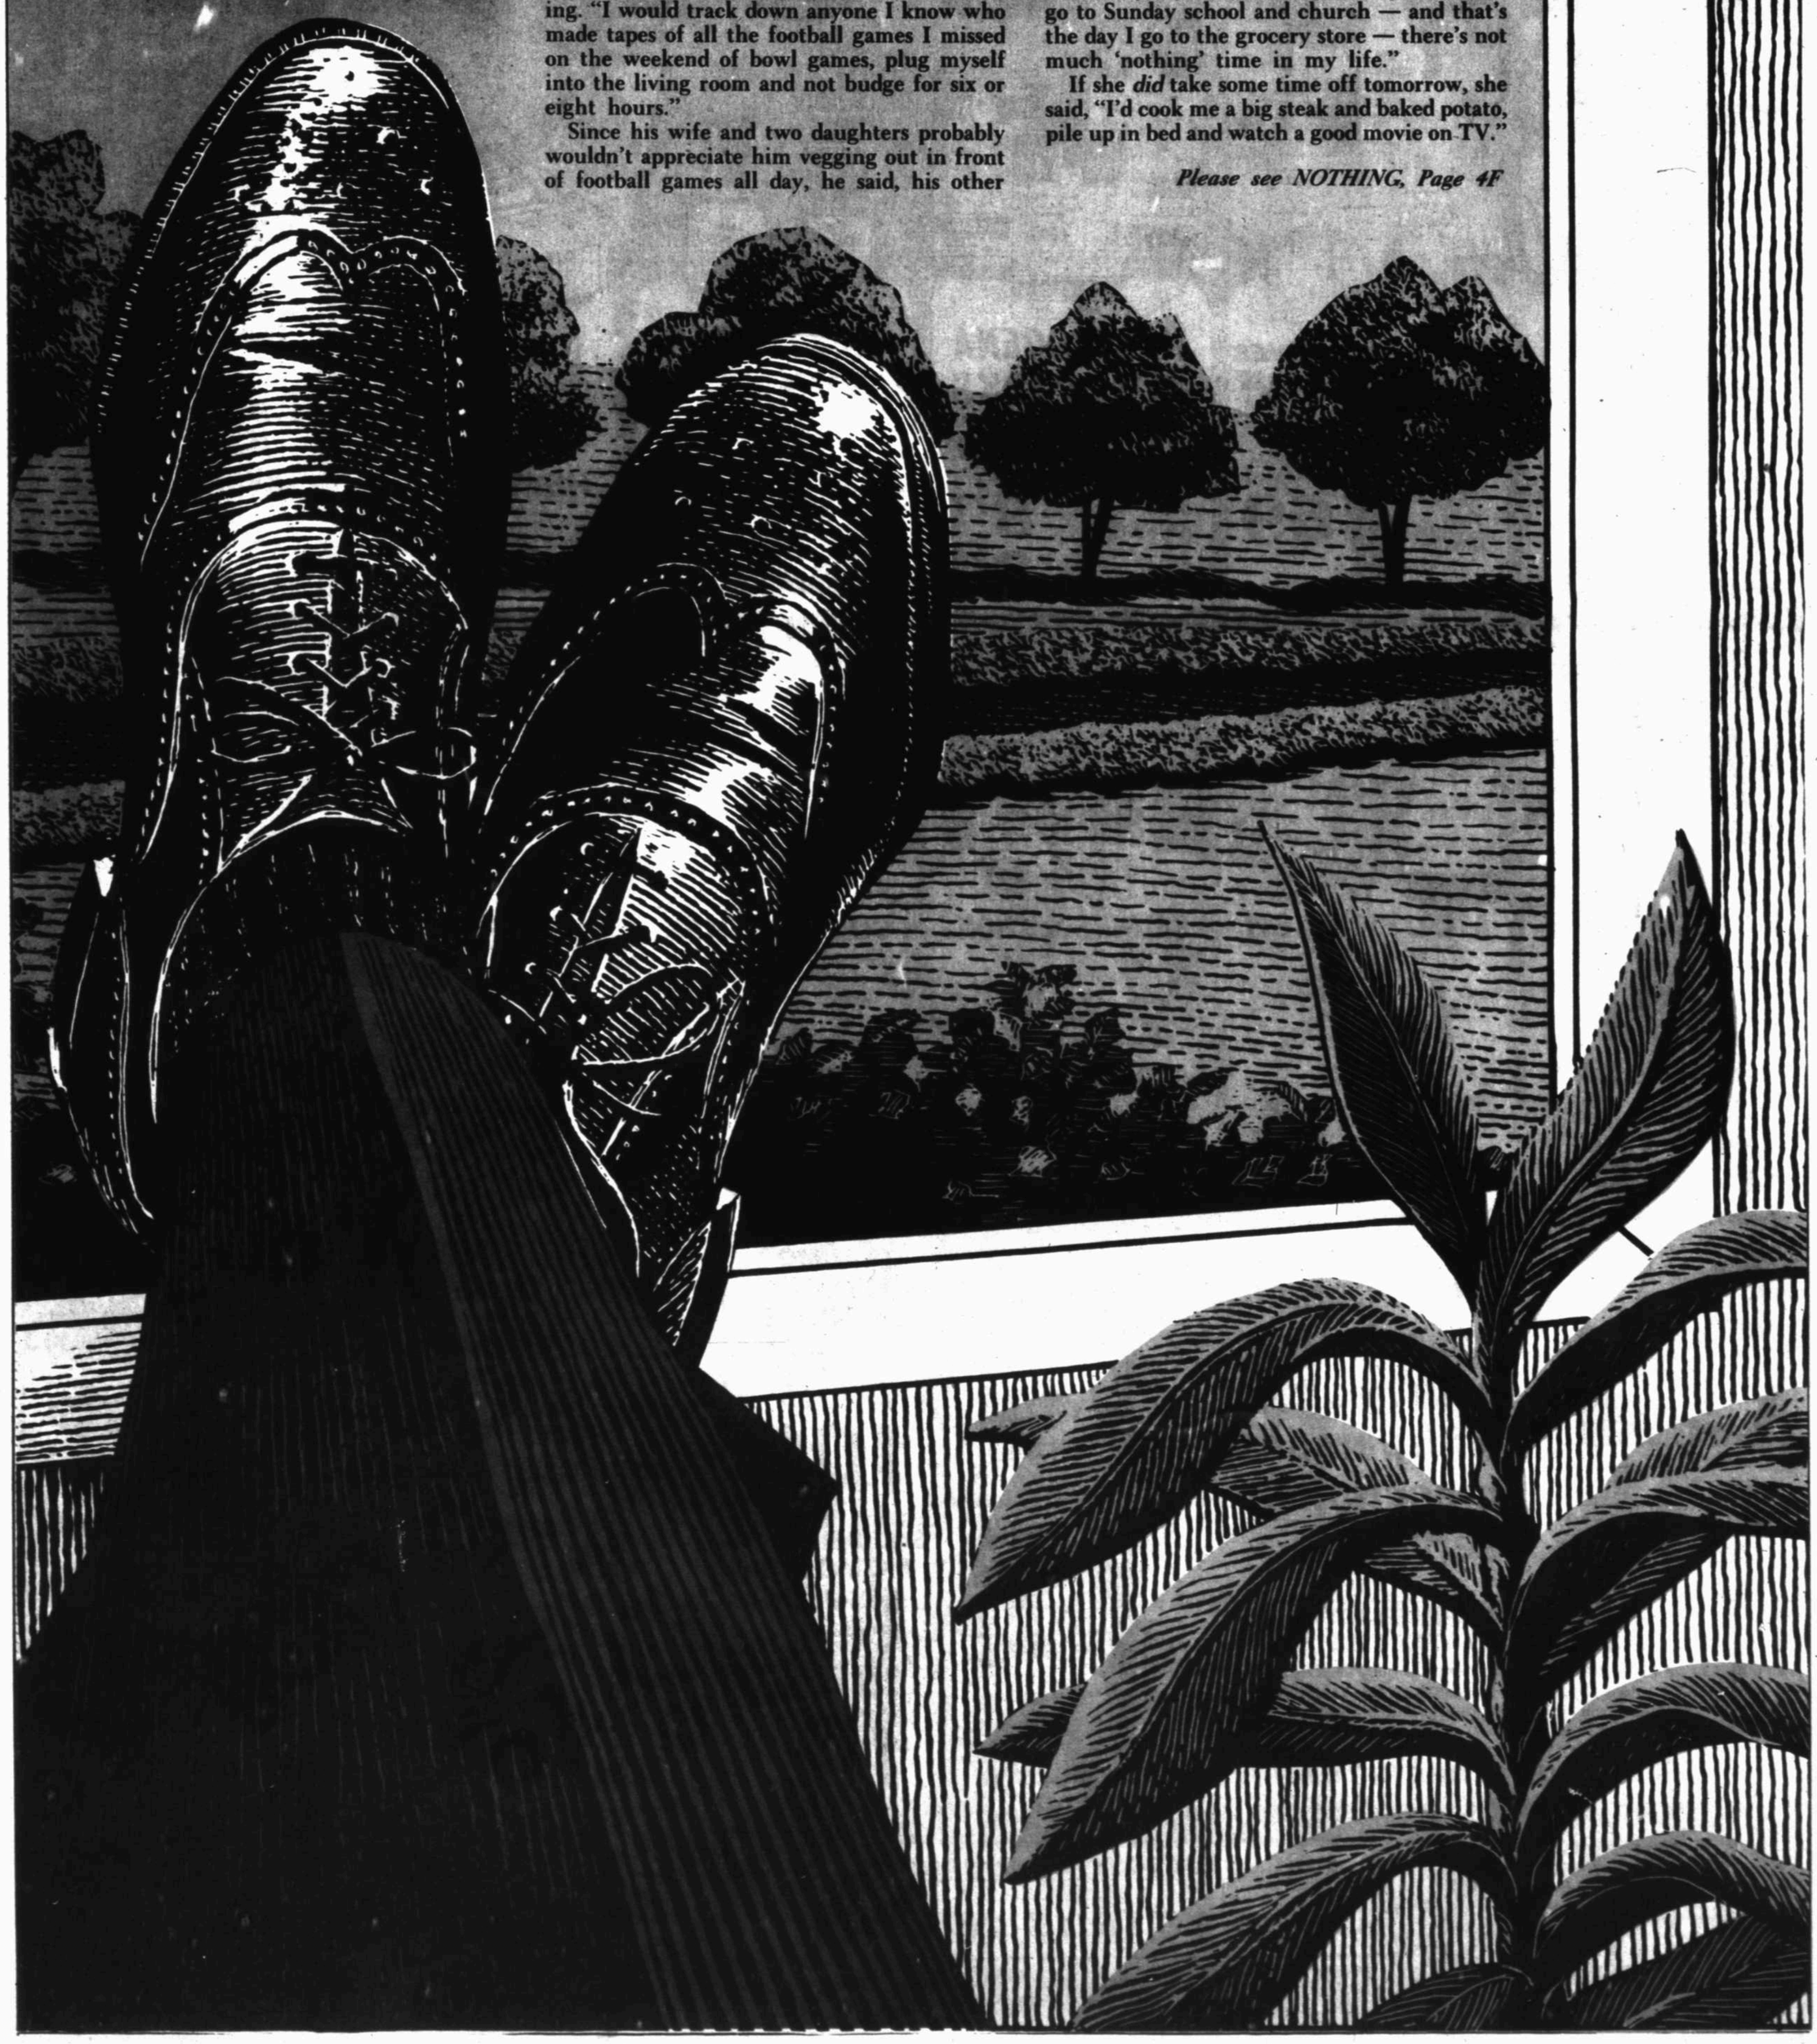

But most of us still have to go to work or school, barring hazardous weather conditions or illness, so our personal celebrations probably will be marked in minutes instead of hours. However, given the opportunity to actually celebrate Nothing Day, Gayle Koeniger of Midland said his choice would be "to spend the day doing everything." And No. 1 on his Everything List, he said, would be to "play golf."

Joy Swift, owner of Bingham Dance Center, said, "I don't have a 'nothing' day. I teach dance from 10 in the morning until 8 at night," and then go home and collapse.

"I go at such a pace," she said, that "Sunday is the only day I don't teach. And by the time I go to Sunday school and church — and that's the day I go to the grocery store — there's not much 'nothing' time in my life."

If she did take some time off tomorrow, she said, "I'd cook me a big steak and baked potato, pile up in bed and watch a good movie on TV."

NOTHING

As is appropriate for Nothing Day, Midland Park Mall has nothing planned, according to mall manager Shawna Gardner. "I wish I could tell you that we did have something planned, like a Nothing Day Sale." Mall merchants have recently had their January clearance sales, she said, but for Nothing Day, nothing is on the mall's calendar. "I didn't even know there was a Nothing Day."

Ms. Gardner's personal preference for celebrating Nothing Day is "curl up with a good book and my cats, and try to clear my mind," she said.

And as for quality education, it never stops, not even on Nothing Day. Hundreds of Midland College students will mark the holiday by returning to school for the spring semester. "That's no way to celebrate," growled one dedicated MC sophomore.

And the thousands of students attending Midland Independent School District public schools will have an ordinary school day, too. Maybe they will celebrate by doing their homework as soon as they get home from school and getting it over with. Then again, maybe they won't.

Most businesses will be open, so most working parents will have to go to work. And pre-school children will have another busy day at day care centers all over Midland. Irene Sanders, owner of Mrs. Irene's Day Care Center, will be on the job tomorrow, but if she could celebrate Nothing Day, she said, "I'd spend the day at the park with a bunch of kids and some dogs, and not have to worry about being someplace else at a certain time."

Steve Sanders, co-owner of the day care center with his wife, will mark Nothing Day in a more personal manner. "It's my birthday," he said.

Holiday sweetens rate of candy sales

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly two out of three Americans give candy as gifts on Valentine's Day.

Industry sources estimate candy sales for this Valentine's Day will be approximately $600 million, which would represent an all-time high for the day, says Chocolatier magazine.

It says most of the purchases are made on the actual date of the holiday, which makes Feb. 14 the biggest candy-selling day of each year.

JAN 15 89

Celebrations make every day special

By MICHELLE HISKEY
New York Times News Service

Jan. 1 isn't just New Year's Day any more. Thanks to Tom Zager, it's also Z Day.

"It's about time people and places that begin with Z get a little more of the recognition they truly deserve," the 42-year-old Michigan advertiser said. "Alphabetically we've always been done an injustice. We need a day to be first for once."

The Friday before New Year's is a holiday as well. It's Kipling Day; it's Guggenheim Day; it's Monitor Day. It's even Diddley Day.

Americans celebrate 10 federal holidays each year, but unofficial observances are increasing, like those celebrating the birthdays of philanthropists (Simon Guggenheim), writers (Rudyard Kipling), musicians (Bo Diddley) and the anniversary of the sinking of the Union ironclad ship Monitor.

In 1989 there will be thousands of days, weeks and months commemorating such diverse subjects as arthritis, microwave ovens, grouchy people, the Andy Griffith Show, ragweed control and sauerkraut. There's even a Nothing Day, Jan. 16.

"Everyone enjoys celebrating, whether it's a rattlesnake roundup or some kind of local historical observance," said William D. Chase, 67, who recently retired after 31 years of editing Chase's Book of Annual Events, a well-known compendium of mostly not-so-famous anniversaries and observances.

In 1958 the first Chase's book included 364 entries, but by the 1989 edition that number has reached nearly 7,800, according to new editor Mary Ealy.

Jan. 28 is National Kazoo Day, then National Condom Week begins on what most people call Valentine's Day, Feb. 14. National Fink Day, to honor all people surnamed Fink, is June 24, and National Sarcastics Month is October. Dec. 31 is, fittingly, You're All Done Day, as well as Make Up Your Mind Day, for perpetual procrastinators.

CNS Graphic

Entries come from all over the world, and as long as the observance isn't obscene or "blatantly commercial," it will be considered for publication, Ms. Ealy said.

"Someone sent in one about (celebrating) wives who scratch their husbands in bed with their toenails," she said. "That was a little far out."

"People would ask us to list their birthday as a national event, but we didn't include that," added Chase.

"They'd ask me, 'Is there really such a thing as National Sweater Week?' " he recalled.

Although the holidays are often ridiculous, the editors have heard from those who celebrate them, particularly schoolchildren, nursing home residents and overseas servicemen whose teachers and program directors use the theme of the day for curriculums and entertainment.

"I knew of people who had Bunsen burner parties in his honor," said Chase.

The intent of the book was not to deface the calendar but to be a clearinghouse, said Chase, who observed the growth of popularity of days like National Grandparents' Day (Sept.10) and National Boss Day (Oct. 16) after their listing in his almanac, which has a circulation of about 30,000. These days have since been promoted by greeting card and florist companies.

Special days aren't only a boon to industries, but they also reveal trends in society, he added. Judging by holidays, people are much more concerned with environment, health and civil rights than they were 30 years ago, and the increase in special days reveals Americans' creativity.

"We're more interested in patriotic events when our nation is under stress," he added. "A noted theologian at Harvard observed that many animals play but man is the only animal that celebrates."

His almanac has been a magnet for advertising people, who start a special day, week or month as a stunt designed to catch the public's attention. Richard R. Falk, a Manhattan press agent, sponsors 14 observances — including National Hitchhiking Month in July and Latin America Week in November — and his goal is to personally signify each day of the year.

"Hey, if there's a Mother's Day, why can't there be a Beauty Queen Week?" he said. "I created Psychic Week in the first week in August and I forget now why."

Meanwhile, Zager has noticed that Z Day is having an impact on Jan. 1, as people recognize the alphabetic inequities it exposes.

"A lot of employers are realizing the injustice," he said, "and are giving employees the day off."

DEAR ABBY
Information for being good husband provided

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You helped "Never Been Wed in Wisconsin," who had been invited to a bridal shower and was asked to bring 10 tips on how to be a good wife.

I thought they were real neat. Do you happen to have 10 tips on how to be a good husband? I'm getting married soon and need to know. — MARC

DEAR MARC: Try these:

1. Never forget her birthday, anniversary or Valentine's Day. A kiss, a card or a single rose could save the day.
2. Don't keep talking about the beautiful young chicks at work.
3. Don't turn on the radio or TV, or pick up something to read, when she's trying to talk to you.
4. Don't bring a friend home to dinner without advance notice.
5. Don't use her car and return it with an empty gas tank.
6. If you know you're going to be late getting home, call and tell her.
7. Don't try to make her jealous.
8. Don't look like a slob all weekend — unless she looks worse.
9. When you know you're wrong, admit it.
10. Never criticize her in the presence of others.

DEAR ABBY: I must comment on the letter concerning two crimes and your evaluation of the punishments for each.

In the first example, a speeding driver had killed three people. Had the driver used a gun or knife to commit these murders, he would undoubtedly be on death row at this time. Juries should realize that an automobile can be a lethal weapon, and they should treat these crimes accordingly. I agree with you — the sentence of 28 months to seven years is indeed outrageously lenient.

The second example concerned a police officer in Lubbock, Texas, who had a portion of his ear bitten off. In fact, a third of his ear was bitten off, chewed and swallowed by his attacker! The prisoner, who was on probation at the time of his arrest, also attempted to bite another officer, and was successful in biting through a CB antenna cable. He also kicked at the police car repeatedly with such force that it became inoperable.

Not only did the jury find the defendant guilty, they sentenced him to 10 years in prison — the maximum allowed for assault on a police officer in the state of Texas.

I was an observer at that trial, but did not have an opportunity to thank the jury for their decision. You see, the officer who had a third of his ear bitten off was my son.

In view of all the facts, do you still believe the sentence was excessively harsh? — MAXINE McNEILL

DEAR MAXINE: No. And that should teach me not to shoot from the hip before learning all the facts.

Wedding bells? Wedding bills! Who pays for what and everything else you need to know if you're planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Women's group choses 10 'most watchable' men

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Donald Trump, Paul Newman and Mel Gibson are among the year's 10 most watchable men, a women's group said Monday.

The 10 Most Watchable Men of 1988 represent a variety of attributes that include attractiveness and success, said Suzy Mallery, president of the 15,000-member Manwatchers Inc.

"They want it all, and this year's list has it," Ms. Mallery said. "Big bulging muscles have never been important, but now dress, grooming and keeping in good physical shape has become much more important.

"Good manners and communication are equally essential."

But women seem to be looking more at looks, Ms. Mallery said. "Today's ambitious women are looking for the superficial things, the bright and the savvy. It wasn't that way when we started in 1975," she said.

Also making the grade this year were Kenny Rogers, John F. Kennedy Jr., Tony Danza, Andrew McCarthy, Alan Thicke, Tony Curtis and Lou Gossett Jr.

Three previous contenders — Burt Reynolds, Tom Selleck and Don Johnson — weren't eligible this year because Manwatchers elevated them to its Hall of Fame, allowing room for new faces. Previous inductees include Clint Eastwood and Robert Redford.

Photo deterioration sometimes due to PVC contained in albums

Hearst News Service

ALBANY N.Y. — Warning: some photo albums may be hazardous to your photographs.

Most new albums display labels stating they are "archival" or that the pages do not contain polyvinyl chloride (PVC) which can damage photos over time.

"PVC breaks down into a gas which can damage precious photos, slides or negatives," says Jim Clayton, operations manager at Bern Camera Stores Inc. in Albany. Clayton says most photo shops now carry the new archival albums guaranteed not to affect photographs.

While some prints remain in excellent condition for 80 or 90 years, there's been concern for years about others that are slowly deteriorating because of the materials in which they are stored.

In addition to PVC pages in older photograph albums, the glue on the pages of so-called "magnetic" albums can damage photographs when the adhesive breaks down, Clayton says. So, too, can the inexpensive black Kraft paper in older albums. According to Clayton, if it is not pH neutral, the paper could cause spots to appear on prints.

Another culprit in older albums is acetate, says Paul Allen, a spokesman for Eastman Kodak. Allen says the acetone pages react with chemicals in photographs and makes them fade faster, another reason why most album manufacturers have switched to polypropylene or polyethylene pages and sleeves for photos and slides, he says. It's also a mistake to store slides in wooden boxes or in the cardboard boxes that came from the processor, a Kodak publication on photograph preservation advises.

Wood contains acid that eventually discolors slides. A much safer system for protecting your slides is to use the new generation "archival" polysleeves of heavier plastic, and store them in a three-ring binder

Light is the enemy of color photographs, according to the experts at Kodak. Other enemies include hot attics, damp basements and indoor air pollution. For best results, keep precious shots and slides in an airtight, dark, cold and dry enclosure.

There's one sure way to keep a favorite snapshot practically forever, says Geraldine Walsh of the Arts Associates Gallery in Albany.

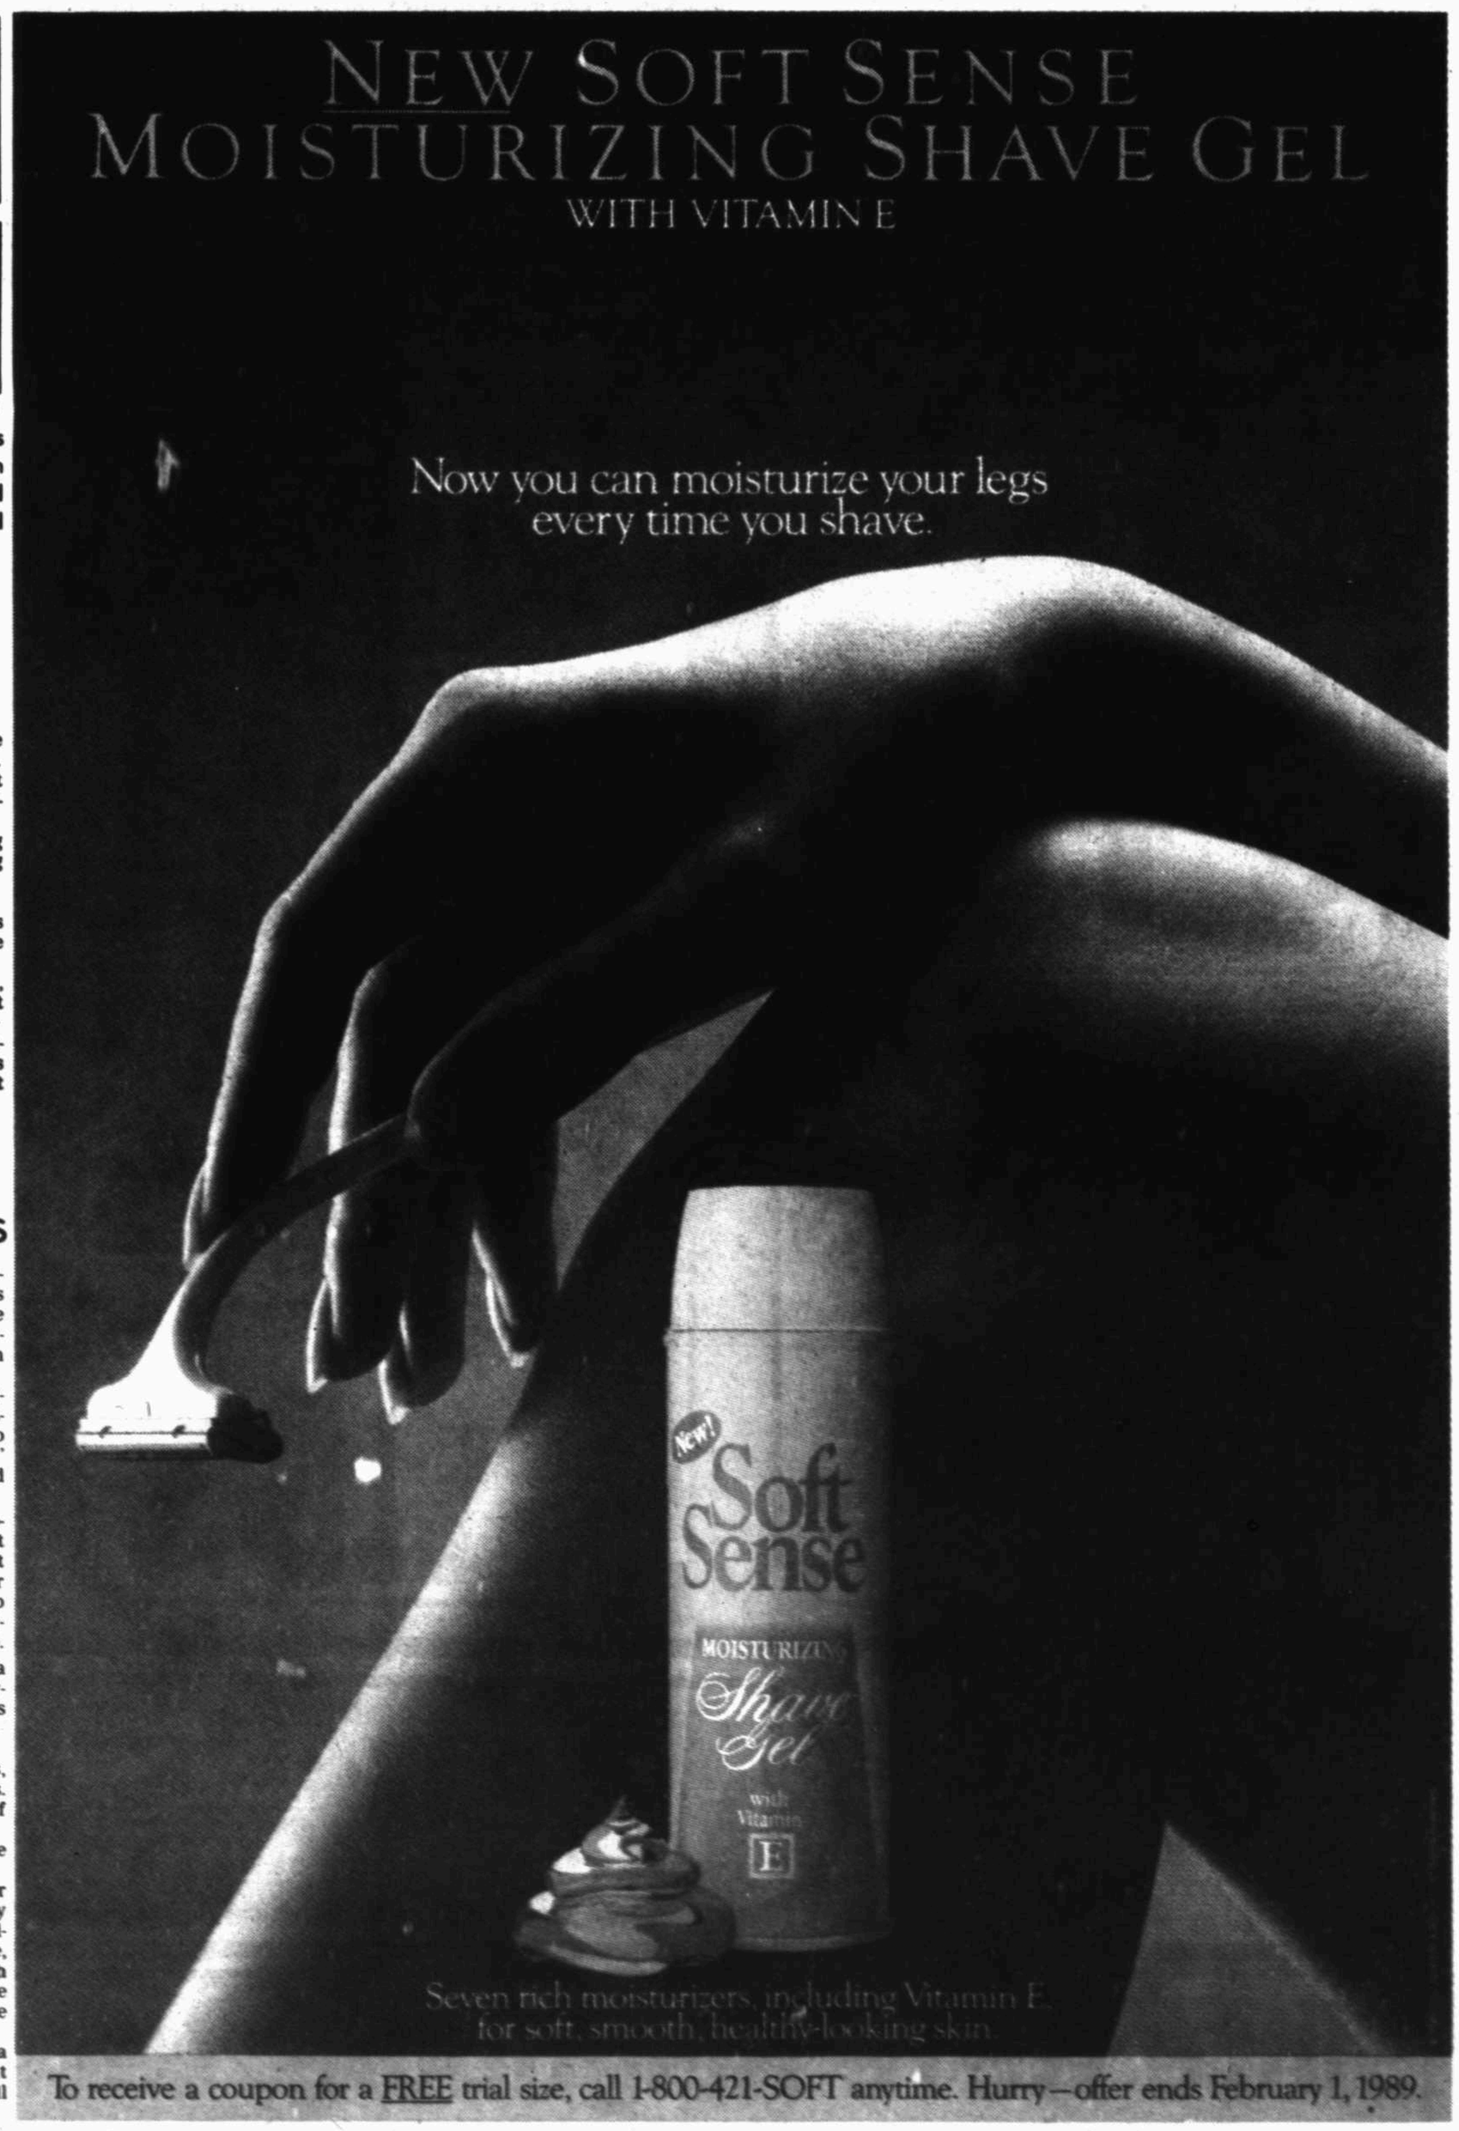

"Frame it," she says.

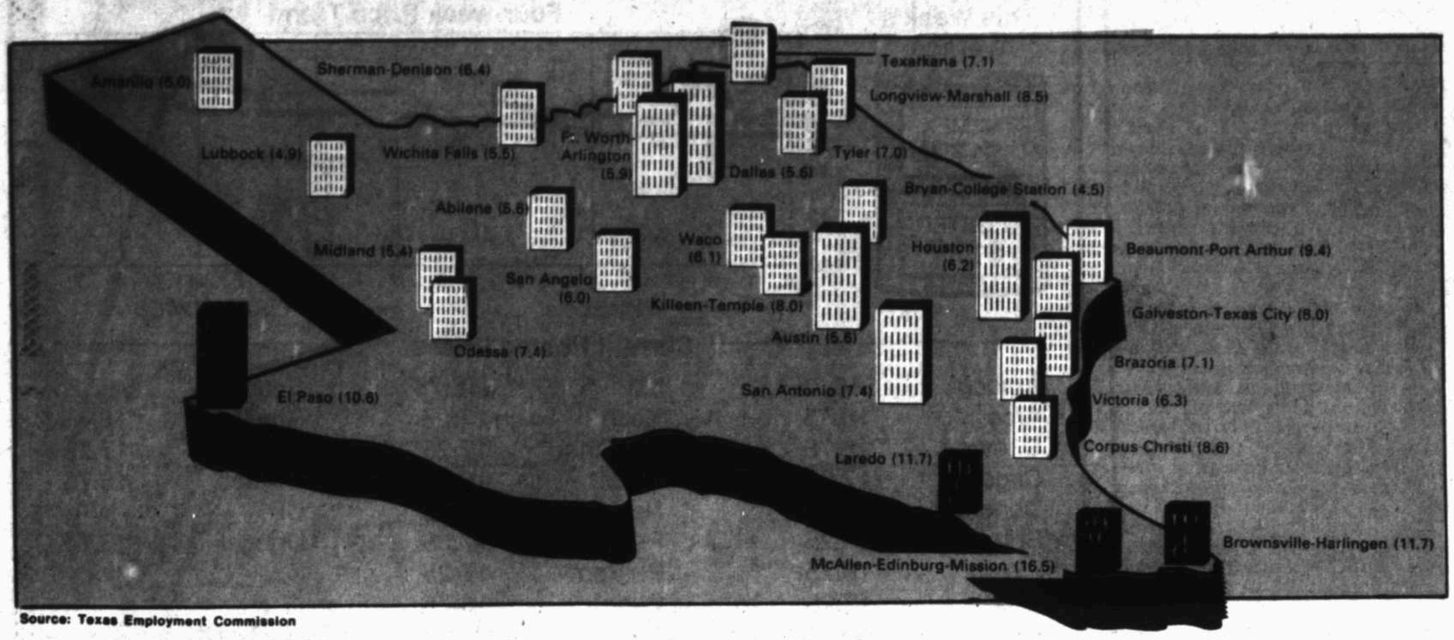

"Naturally," she acknowledges, "you can't frame all your snapshots. But photos will last longer if framed."

There are some caveats to observe when framing, however.

Be sure to use acid-free paper or board for mounting. Avoid ordinary cardboard which may not be acid-free. And, instead of a glass frame, consider Lucite or Plexiglas, which can protect your prints from the damaging rays that fade photographs.

One last tip: A mounting used as a slight separation between the print and the transparent covering will add further protection.

In October Midland had the third brightest unemployment rate in the state, while border towns had the darkest employment outlook.

Unemployment indicates better times

Midland economy may be better than thought

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

By all rights Midland should have one of the most depressed economies in the state. Its oil-based economy has been bludgeoned unmercifully since 1982 by a series of oil price depressions and crashes.

But despite the economic bloodletting of past months and the lingering perception of depression, the perception may be worse than the reality according to Texas Employment Commission records.

So why does bloody Midland have one of the lowest unemployment rates of any metropolitan area in the state?

According to Lorna Giar, a spokesman for TEC in Midland, three factors can account for a low unemployment rate. They are: a mass exodus of the unemployed; a temporary upsurge of seasonal employment, or an expanding economy. Some feel the latter is the best explanation for Midland's low unemployment.

"There is no way you can have a 5.3 employment rate without something being right," says Bill Griffith, Western Regional Manager for Texas Utilities.

He discounts the notion of a mass exodus of unemployed. "Our records indicate negligible growth of less than 1 percent per month, or a stagnant situation," said Griffith. He added that a stagnant rate for electrical connections might result in a slight decrease in population, but not a massive moveout that could significantly affect employment rates.

Records indicate that Midland has been among the top five cities in the state with low unemployment for the past six months. With a 5.3 percent unemployment rate in November, it was tied with economic hotspots like Austin, Dallas and Bryan-College Station for third place.

Executives praise Japanese hell camp

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — A Japanese-style "Hell Camp" leadership development program that made its U.S. debut in Malbu, Calif., about a year ago is struggling to get a solid foothold — but there are some loyal graduates of the intense 13-day course who hope it will succeed.

"It's very, very practical. You leave the course having those techniques be a part of you," says Jim Kowalick, a director of production and quality improvement for Aerojet Ordnance Co.

He was so impressed after completing the program that Hell Camp is now part of Aerojet Ordnance's leadership management program. The company, and sister units, will send more people to the course.

"It's the way it is presented as well as the material," Kowalick says.

The course addresses management issues on three levels: the overall company vision, the teamwork among groups, and individual effort. Kowalick calls it "a form of good brainwashing."

The regimented program puts students through a mind-numbing and body-aching experience of drills, classes, memorization, studies and tests to help them realize their full potential by first discovering, then overcoming, their weaknesses. There's a heavy emphasis on perseverance.

HIGH SUCCESS RATE

While it is very challenging, all but three of the approximately 60 people who have taken the course have completed it, school officials report.

Lawrence Morikawa, an efficiency manager for Industrial Electric Manufacturing Inc. in Northern California, gives the course good marks.

"I think it's a real good course. It was a great learning experience," says Morikawa, who was a shop foreman before his company sent him to Hell Camp. "It told you how to be a good manager and gave you self-confidence."

Larry Leintz, a business operations manager who went through the first class in February 1988, is still enthusiastic about the experience.

"I got a lot out of it," Leintz says. Hell Camp helped him to "focus on things and follow through. ... It made me a lot more disciplined. They give you tools on how to solve problems. They challenge you a lot."

Rod Walsh, Leintz's boss who put him in the course, says he does not have a good measuring stick for the class because Leintz had just rejoined Blue Chip Inventory Service Inc. when he took the course.

"I wish I did have a benchmark so I could say this is why Larry is so enthusiastic," Walsh says.

J.E. Borron will build Midland Plaza store

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Downtown Midland will soon lose one of its last retail stores, while Midland Plaza Shopping Center is set to gain a major clothing facility.

James Borron, owner of J.E. Borron stores, has announced that he will build a 9,000-square-foot store in the shopping center to house both his men's outlet at 103 N. Colorado and his ladies' wear store in the Courtyard at Midland Park.

The building, expected to be complete by the fall of 1989, will be built on a site next to Loop 250 and the strip which houses Hastings Books and Don Harvey Realtors. "Originally designated as a restaurant location, the site is an excellent location next to the loop," said Borron.

Borron said the design of the building would be an interesting mixture of traditional and contemporary. An architect's rendering shows a facade to the building which is distinctly traditional and a main structure that is basically contemporary. Rhotenberry-Wellen Architects designed the project and Dick Campbell is general contractor.

"Even the interior will be a mix of contemporary and traditional," said Borron. "The walls will be painted, but all the fixtures will be cherry and mahogany." Midland cabinet maker Jim Scisco has been retained to build the fixtures.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

The design of J.E. Borron's new 9,000 sq. ft. store will be a mixture of traditional and contemporary elements.

AN S&L PRIMER

Savings & Loans: Why they fail; Who pays for it

WASHINGTON (AP) — More savings and loans failed in 1988 than in any year since the Depression. This year, taxpayers may be asked to pick up the cost of rescuing the industry — and the price could run into the billions of dollars.

Q: How are depositors' savings protected?

A: The first line of defense when an institution fails is a government insurance fund, the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. (FSLIC).

The ultimate backing, if the fund runs out of money, is the taxpayer. On several occasions Congress, most recently in 1987, has reaffirmed that the full faith and credit of the federal government stands behind the deposits.

Q: Does that mean the government would pay the depositors if the S&L went out of business?

A: Yes, as long as the S&L has federal insurance.

In most cases the insurance fund tries to avoid direct depositor payoffs. Instead, the government "rescues" the institution by providing new owners with a mixture of cash, promissory notes and other guarantees to wipe out the old losses.

The new owners also invest some of their own money and the institution stays open, usually under a new name. The old managers lose their jobs, the stockholders lose their investment but depositors are protected.

Q: How does the FSLIC work?

A: The FSLIC guarantees deposit accounts up to $100,000 in nearly 3,000 S&Ls. (Similarly, government insurance also protects savers in commercial banks through the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), while the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA) stands behind credit unions.)

A: From the institutions whose deposits they insure. S&Ls, for instance, pay a premium of 21 cents a year for every $100 in deposits. The FSLIC also has been raising money by selling 30-year bonds, which will be paid off by the premiums from the industry. And, it sells property from failed institutions to recover some of its costs.

Q: If S&Ls fund the insurance plan, why do people say the public will end up paying?

A: The Reagan administration has recently acknowledged that income from the industry won't be enough to cover savings accounts in failed S&Ls and, therefore, the public will have to bear much of the cost. Industry trade groups say healthy institutions will start going under if they're forced to pay higher premiums.

Q: How would the public pay?

A: This is not clear. The Treasury Department is working on a plan for President-elect Bush. Private analysts believe that in some manner tax money will be needed.

The solution could involve a direct appropriation of taxpayer funds. Or, Congress could authorize regulators to borrow what they need with the understanding that taxpayer funds will be used to pay the interest. Or, Congress could impose fees on members of the public, such as home buyers, who benefit from the S&L system.

Q: What is the controversy about the 1988 bailouts?

A: Keeping a money-losing institution alive means it could continue to lose money under new owners, eventually making another rescue necessary.

The government protects the new owners from losing money on loans made by the previous owners. Critics think the new owners ought to share more of the risk as an incentive to manage the loan portfolio wisely.

Also, members of Congress are angry because in some cases private buyers are reaping tax breaks from the deals that are worth more than they are paying to take possession of failed institutions. They say regulators ought to have been able to get more cash from the buyers in exchange for the tax benefits.

Q: Why do regulators think the bailout approach will ultimately save money for the taxpayers?

A: If the government simply shuts

Marketing: An ever-changing game of wits

Pitts

In the months to come, look for some fundamental changes in the marketing of some products.

Look for a lot of things to happen with eggs. I purchased a dozen eggs last week for only 39 cents a dozen. That was a good buy even in the '50s.

Eggs, over the years have been a perennial good buy and along with mayonnaise a favorite loss leader in supermarket advertising. For the last 50 years eggs have generally remained under $1 a dozen, and it seemed like they were in the 69-cent range for decades.

High demand and high production have been able to keep prices low. But now egg consumption is at an all-time low, and it remains to be seen what will become of the $3 billion egg industry as a result of the cholesterol scare.

No doubt about it, when it comes to counting cholesterol eggs, shrimp and calf brains are so high they can't even keep the numbers on the page.

According to the Lempert Report, a newsletter which monitors marketing trends and issues, the egg industry and others in the food industry are going to have to look to some creative marketing to hold on to shrinking market share.

But past attempts by the egg industry to prevent market erosion have failed. The national campaign "Incredible Edible Egg" ended three years ago for lack of funds. A campaign by the California Egg Council to increase the egg's appeal among Yuppies also failed.

Now, the egg producers are targeting Hispanics and blacks with a campaign called "Have Some Eggs Now."

Look for more controversial targeting of minorities and Third World countries by companies trying to cope with a health-conscious public and shrinking market share.

Cigarette sales in this country have been on the decline since 1973, as Americans have become more informed about the dangers of cigarette smoking. As a result, says the Wall Street Journal, cigarette companies are shifting marketing efforts toward Third World countries, where they are permitted to advertise on radio and television.

In Argentina, 20 percent of all ads on television are cigarette commercials. This incessant and provoking advertising, in which sophistication is always the theme, has created a near epidemic of cigarette addiction in some countries least able to afford addictions, says the Journal.

The Journal also reports that the practice of smoking has become a practice linked to lower incomes and lower educational levels, and that minorities, particularly Hispanics, have been targeted by cigarette firms. Dorado is a brand said to be aimed at Hispanics.

"Do you suppose it is because there is a perception that minorities are less informed?" asked a Hispanic friend.

But Hispanics are not alone in the awareness that they are being singled out by the manufacturers of unhealthy products. According to CNN news, blacks in Detroit claim they have been targeted by the makers of hard liquor and have launched a campaign to have liquor advertising removed from ghetto areas. The group claims alcoholism and poverty are already problems in the ghetto and the promotion of liquor can only add to the problem.

Those involved in the black backlash against liquor advertising point to an extraordinary number of outdoor signs advertising hard liquor in the ghetto areas as proof.

Many fast food franchises may soon be offering will payment by credit card. To date, credit cards have not been accepted by the fast food people, because the imprinting, filling out and signing of receipt slips would have done much to take the word "fast" out of the business.

But that may be changing. Visa is testing its Express Payment Service at 32 Wendy's and Arby's locations in the Southwest and Midwest. The system, says the Lempert Report, will process purchases under $25 in less than two seconds. It could mean more income for fast food operators, because records indicate the average credit card purchase is $6 while the average cash purchase is only $3.

Basin steady, U.S. tally plunges

From Staff Reports

Baker Hughes Inc. reported that the U.S. count fell 36 to stand at 872. This follows a 32-rig drop the previous week.

Lea County, N.M. regained its title as most active county in the Basin with eight rigs at work this week, followed by Eddy and Chaves counties, N.M., and Andrews County.

Among major oil producing states, Wyoming saw the steepest decline with 10 fewer rigs, followed by New Mexico, nine; Louisiana, five; Kansas and Pennsylvania, four each; Michigan and Texas, three each; and North Dakota, one.

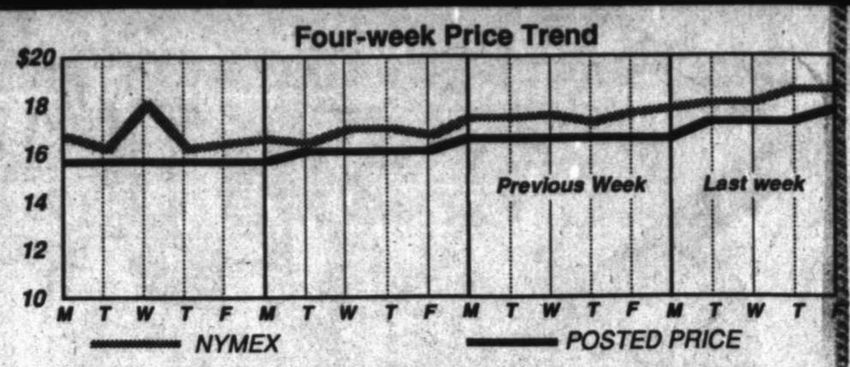

Oklahoma had the biggest gain with six additional rigs, followed by California and Colorado with three each and Ohio had one.

Florida Gas wants to offer 'open access'

HOUSTON (SWN) — Florida Gas Transmission Co., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Citrus Corp. which is jointly owned by Enron Corp. and Sonat Inc., has filed an application with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) seeking approval to provide on a self-implementing basis the transportation of natural gas for others in accordance with the terms and conditions of FERC Order Nos. 436 and 500.

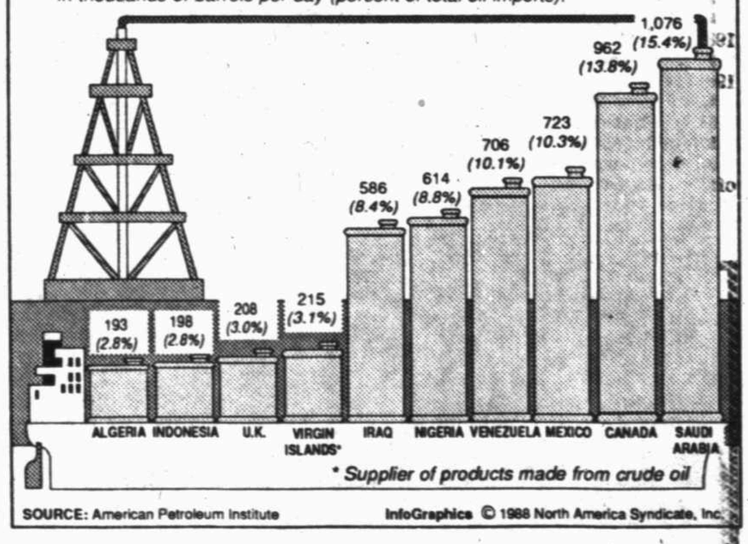

The certificate application is one of four interrelated filings made concurrently with the Commission by FGT. One filing requests a general rate increase applicable to jurisdictional sales and transpor-tation service, together with a redesign of rates and charges to reflect a demand/commodity rate structure.

The other applications include a request for the restructuring of FGT's contractual relationships with its customers and a request for an on-system, off-system interruptible sales program.

Experts: Fatter nest egg possible with resolute fiscal planning

By CHRIS BARNETT
and ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

Fed up with spending, wasting cash, failing to save and missing gold-plated money-making opportunities? Here are some New Year's financial resolutions that can fatten your nest egg in 1989.

First, you have to resolve to break your bad habits. Then you have to commit to new ones. We asked disciplined investment pros nationwide for their best ideas on how to build your net worth over the next 12 months and beyond.

First, make your IRA, Keough or pension plan contribution early in '89 rather than late to get more compound interest benefits.

Second, use tax-free or tax-protected investment (municipal bonds, some Treasurys) to pare your '89 tax bill.

Third, analyze your retirement program now and make the "financial commitment" to fund this very important "need" before spending money on "wants."

Fourth, consider consolidating your liquid assets under the supervision of a professional money manager who has at least a 10-year track record.

Peter Grandich, chief marketing strategist for Municipal and Government Securities Corp. of New Jersey, says investors should "resolve" to seek advice only from those advisers who candidly talk about their "errors as well as their successes." Avoid any adviser who "constantly uses words like 'if,' 'perhaps', 'maybe' or who says 'buy now or you will never get another chance again.'i'

Grandich, who edits a monthly investment newsletter as well, says two important resolutions would be to realize no "investment system is foolproof" and to listen to only those advisers who "say what they think" and "not what they think I want to hear."

San Diego financial planner Betty Covey proposes you "resolve once and for all to give up any excuse for not establishing a savings program, however modest."

Set simple objectives — education, retirement — and "pay yourself first." Ten percent of your gross income is a "terrific goal" but even a nominal amount is OK as long as you stick with it, says Covey.

Once you make the commitment, boosting the savings sums "become easier. I've seen people make themselves very comfortable at young ages with a commitment to savings."

Resolve to start your tax planning in January, not December, urges Stanley Gott, tax partner in the San Diego office of Deloitte Haskins & Sells, a national CPA firm. "Just because you aren't rich doesn't mean you can't think like the 'big hitters' do," and plan early, says Gott.

Cut your consumer debt in '89 when only 20 percent is deductible. Convert debt, when possible, to residential mortgage interest that can be written off. Look for "double tax-free bonds" where the income cannot be taxed by either Uncle Sam or your own governor.

Stock market investors should resolve to "maintain a defensive posture" early in '89, says Jeffrey Applegate, chief investment strategist at Boston-based Tucker, Anthony & R.L. Day.

"Overweight your positions" in bonds and "underweight" in stocks. Meantime, do your homework before you invest. Applegate likes overlooked cyclical stock with positive earnings momentum.

One example is Avondale Industries, a New Orleans non-union shipbuilder growing at 15 percent a year. It has a price/earnings multiple of 6, pays a dividend of 5.3 percent of 84 cents a share and is selling over-the-counter for $15 a share.

If you can handle more risk for a potentially bigger reward, consider foreign bonds or convertible debentures — debts that can convert to stock, says Michael McGoldrick, portfolio manager for Janus Flexible Income Fund. He has 11 percent of Janus' "flex" funds invested overseas.

McGoldrick doesn't advise people to invest globally themselves, but, rather, to put investable dollars into a professionally managed mutual fund and let them call the shots. We say study "flex funds" closely before you speculate.

With new year come new records

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Among all the New Year's resolutions that can be made and broken, few carry a more ominous burden than the simple "This year I'm going to get organized."

Even in a household of modest means, the paperwork pile can easily get out of control — bills, pay stubs, bank statements, canceled checks and too many others to mention.

At the start of a new year, the flow reaches flood stage with W-2s, 1099s and the other trappings of income taxes.

Most people don't have many alternatives to coping with this problem, whether their filing system reposes in a single desk drawer or a sophisticated computer program.

You can pass along the burden of filling out your tax forms to some trusted friend or paid preparer. But there is no way to dodge the legal responsibility of being able to document where you stand with Uncle Sam.

"The burden of proof for the accuracy of your return is directly on you — not your accountant, tax adviser or tax preparer," notes the accounting firm of Arthur Andersen & Co. in its "Tax Guide and Planner" for 1989.

Tax laws passed in recent years have only served to increase the emphasis on record-keeping.

These days, if you inadvertently fail to report the interest earned on some small, forgotten bank account, the Internal Revenue Service can quickly catch the omission.

Then, it can demand not only tax payment for the neglected amount but interest on the balance due and maybe penalties as well.

Once you get your records in order, of course, there's the continuing challenge of keeping them organized. What to do, say, with that file marked "Checking Account — 1979"?

The IRS usually has three years from the filing deadline to audit an individual income tax return. The limit is six years if your income is underreported by more than 25 percent.

And there is no statute of limitations in cases where anyone has filed a fraudulent return or no return at all.

Let's suppose you are reasonably confident you reported all your 1979 income and didn't commit any kind of deceit in doing so. The deadline has passed for auditing your '79 return, so you can go ahead and throw that folder away...

But WAIT! Does it contain receipts for improvements you made to your house? Statements from a mutual fund in which you still have an investment? Documents showing nondeductible contributions to a retirement savings plan?

Things like these could have an important bearing on the taxes you might owe in some future year. Their rightful place is in a "permanent" set of records independent of year-by-year files.

"In general," Arthur Andersen's advisers conclude, "when you're in doubt about the importance of any record, keep it."

If all this makes you feel like an unpaid clerk-secretary in thrall to the government, don't despair. Good records can have other purposes and benefits.

In the course of compiling and maintaining them, you can keep yourself and your loved ones informed about where you stand financially — how you are progressing toward some goal, or just "where does all the money go?"

Records may also be vital to the orderly disposition of your affairs should you die or become disabled.

"What would happen if someone needed to understand your affairs but couldn't discuss them with you?"

"That day will unavoidably come, which is a powerful argument for maintaining clear, accurate, accessible records of your tax and financial life."

VDT law goes into effect despite legal challenges

New York Times News Service

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y.— Despite a legal challenge, a landmark law is in effect that requires work breaks and special training for many operators of video display terminals in Long Island's Suffolk County.

The law, believed to be the first in the nation enacted by a local government to regulate the devices, is being challenged in state Supreme Court by four businesses.

A ruling is expected within two weeks.

The law applies to operators who spend more than 26 hours a week before the screen in private work places with 20 or more terminals.

County health officials, who will enforce the measure, said an estimated 8,500 operators from 150 to 200 businesses are covered. They said monitoring for compliance would begin this week.

As part of the law, which went into effect Wednesday, employers must notify operators of health hazards including eye strain and nervous disorders that the law says may result from prolonged use of the devices.

They must also schedule training in recognizing symptoms and taking protective steps.

A section of the law that would have required the employers to pay 80 percent of the cost of eye examinations and glasses for operators was blocked by a preliminary injunction granted to the four businesses by Supreme Court Justice John Copertino.

Most Suffolk businesses already provide regular breaks to operators, according to Mitchell H. Pally, the director of legislative and economic affairs for the Long Island Association, a business group.

According to Pally, Suffolk businesses fear that the law will put them at a disadvantage with companies outside the county.

The law also requires all computer equipment and work space furniture purchased after next January to conform to county standards to protect operators from discomfort.

The law was approved by the 18-member County Legislature in June over the objections of County Executive Patrick G. Halpin. He said the measure would harm business and was of questionable value to the operators.

Paul Sabatino 2d, the counsel to the county legislature, said the legislators would appeal if Copertino ruled the law invalid.

Cat litter king only scratched surface of success

CASSOPOLIS, Mich. (AP) — Forty-two years after giving a friend a bag of clay to try in her cat box, Ed Lowe has become a celebrity of sorts, his white-bearded, grandfatherly image recognized by millions of feline fanciers.

The inventor of cat box filler obtained a trademark for "Kitty Litter" back then, but only within the last two years has his face begun appearing on the packaging.

Now, people occasionally stop the 68-year-old Lowe on the street — but not always to ask about him.

"One day I was walking down the street and this guy walked by and looked at me and asked, 'How's Ugh?'" Lowe said, referring to his pet cat who appeared with him on television commercials. "So I guess they know Ugh better than they know me."

The self-made millionaire doesn't mind the attention. In fact, he relishes making the most of his caring image as "the man who brought the cat in from the cold."

A new cat food expected on supermarket shelves in February or March — the first for Edward Lowe Industries Inc. — also will bear his picture.

"We're going to promote the character of Ed Lowe a little more, because no one else can do that," Lowe said during an interview at the 3,000-acre farm in southwestern lower Michigan, where he lives and conducts business as chairman and chief executive officer of the company he founded.

Two cats roam the offices, which resemble a tasteful country inn more than the headquarters of a company with annual revenues of $150 million. Sales offices are located about 20 miles away in South Bend, Ind.

Lowe, dressed in corduroys, a red sweater and matching bandana, drinks coffee from a cat coffee mug and is surrounded by a host of cat sculptures and paintings — even a stuffed toy cat that moves its head.

More than a hundred cats are housed in Lowe's cat care center, where cat box filler and food preference are studied. The cats are kept either individually in small, glass-enclosed rooms or in groups of 10 or 20 in larger rooms, where behavior is monitored.

Despite appearances, Lowe says he has never been crazy about cats — especially when he gave out that first bag of clay.

"I didn't dislike them," Lowe said. "I wasn't and I'm still not a fanatic about any pet."

Chickens were on Lowe's mind in 1946 when he began trying to market granulated clay to poultry farmers as a nesting material. When Chicken Litter failed to catch on, Lowe returned to his father's sawdust business in Vandalia, Mich., which sold the absorbent clay to soak up oil and grease.

On a cold day in January 1947, a friend of Lowe's, Kay Draper, approached him for some sand for her cat box. Because all the sand at the sawdust business had frozen, Lowe instead gave her a bag of the clay.

Word spread, and before long Lowe was peddling his Kitty Litter from the trunk of his '43 Chevy to pet shops and at cat shows across the country.

"If I hadn't seen Kay that day, I'd still be shoveling sawdust," Lowe says with a laugh.

For more than 10 years, Lowe was alone in the cat litter business.

Today, Lowe Industries is the leader in what has grown to be a $600 million industry. Between Kitty Litter, which retails for $1.89 for an eight-pound bag, and his less expensive cat box filler, Tidy Cat, Lowe says he accounts for about 40 percent of the market.

He employs 500 people at five plants in Missouri, Illinois, California and Tennessee — where clay deposits are plentiful.

Despite his success, Lowe still fights the use of Kitty Litter as a generic term.

"I have the same problem as Kleenex. You just gotta keep fighting it," Lowe says. However, he calls the dilemma "a joyful problem. I would rather have it that way than not have it at all."

Lowe hopes to advance that cause by putting his face on all of his products. He also hopes that by familiarizing consumers with his picture he will capture their trust.

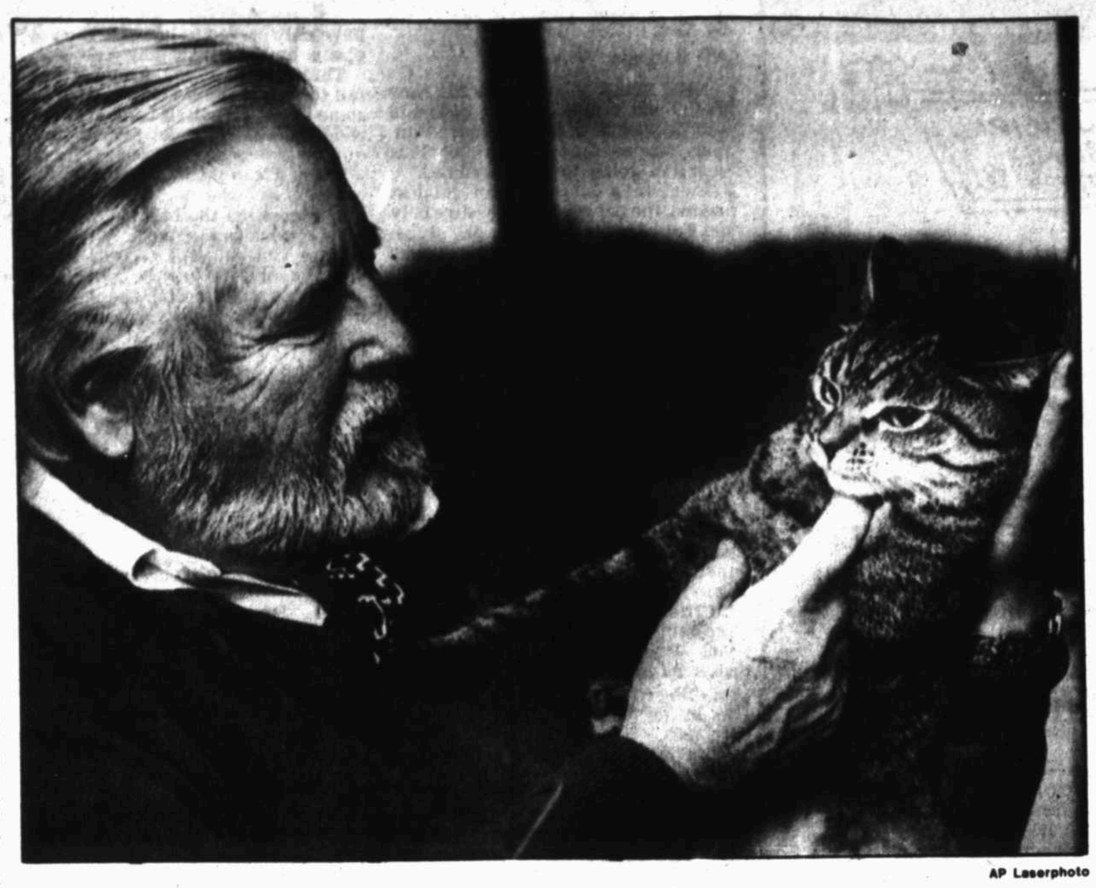

Though corporate strategy is to promote a gentle, grandfatherly image, Lowe is not shy about taking credit for establishing an industry.

"I think that I've made the cat popular," Lowe says. "You wouldn't be able to own a cat if you didn't have Kitty Litter."

Lowe also has started a foundation at his farm to support partnership programs for owners of family and independent businesses.

"Building a foundation allows you to go on forever and my mission is to help entrepreneurs," Lowe said.

"This property will be given to the foundation when I go to the great cat box in the sky."

Should we worry about economy in 1989?

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

BUSINESS MIRROR

NEW YORK — Always and ever there are things to worry about regarding the economy's future, and no forecaster seeking to remain employed would dare not mention them.

To them, the issuance of warnings is professional protection, allowing a forecast to be made but escaped from if wrong. Nothing is lost, since most warnings are considered examples of erudition and responsibility.

You should, know, however, that most of last year's warnings — inflation, dollar collapse, stock market debacle, recession — were changed in midstream, only to be trotted out again as the New Year began.

This is the 1989 list, with comments by Edward Yardeni, the Prudential—Bache Securities economist who debunked last year's forecasting myths and stands firm and independent from the general consensus this year.

The Economy Is Overdue For A Recession.

The expansion has lasted more than six years, a long time by past measures, suggesting that the odds can't be bucked much longer. But, hold on; the economic world has changed, and maybe the past isn't that accurate a criterion.

True, there has been no general recession in that time period, but there have been several rolling recessions. Different industries at different times have been very hard hit, but the impact was offset by good times in others.

But what if these different industries slump at the same time? It could happen, but many U.S. companies now operate globally, and bad times in the United States could be offset by good business in Europe.

Capacity Is Too Tight.

The percentage of production capacity rose above 84 percent in November, marking the highest level in eight years. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, among many, is concerned that such a level may generate inflation.

"This could be a big mistake," says Yardeni. Why? Because "in an environment of intense global competition, we believe that tight capacity stimulates expansion rather than big price increases."

The Jobless Rate Is Too Low, So Wage Inflation Will Develop.

At 5.3 percent of the civilian labor force, the rate is at a 14-year low. There is indeed a shortage of new entrants into the labor force. The thesis appear sound.

Still, says Yardeni, "we believe that the employers recognize that offering big wage hikes will only drive up their labor costs rather than attract workers that, demographically speaking, don't exist."

In his opinion, "odds are that industries will opt to spend more on labor-saving, productivity to substitute for scarce and expensive workers."

The Federal Deficit Is Too Large.

Sure it is large, and that doesn't include perhaps $75 billion to rescue the thrift industry or maybe $150 billion to clean up radioactive pollution at the government's weapons plants.

But there's a brighter side too. The deficit came down from an annualized peak of $234.4 billion in the second quarter of 1986 to $124.8 billion in the third quarter of 1988. Include state and local surpluses and the total government deficit dropped from $174.3 billion to $68.9 billion in this period.

The big "problem," says Yardeni, is in transfer payments, designed to redistribute income more equitably, which amounted to 23.2 percent of gross national product in fiscal 1988, a very large fraction.

But in terms of expenses for goods and services, the situation wasn't all that bad. In the third quarter of last year purchases of goods and services were but 8.1 percent of GNP, compared with more than 10 percent in the 1960s.

The Trade Deficit Isn't Narrowing Fast Enough.

Really? Says Yardeni: "The adjustment process is still working in our view and it will take another two years to produce a zero trade balance." Imports have clearly stopped growing. Exports are well above previous-year figures.

Shop around to avoid fees

By CHRIS BARNETT
and ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

Copley News Service

Banks started automating their sweet, smiling tellers 20 years ago to save themselves money, but now they are quietly charging you for the privilege of banking with their computerized replacements.

The first Automatic Teller Machine (ATM) debuted in 1968 at First Pennsylvania Bank in Philadelphia as a free, convenient customer service and to thin out the lines of those who wanted to transact business with humans.

Now, 20 years and some 82,000 ATMs later, about 20 percent of the nation's banks are levying fees ranging from 18 cents to $1 every time you step up to a computerized teller, according to the American Bankers Association. What's more, the trend is escalating.

"There is a trend toward banks charging ATM fees but some banks have charged these fees in the past but in different forms," says Ed Alwood, who is a spokesman for the American Bankers Association in Washington on operational issues.

"Some banks buried their ATM fees in the overall checking account charge. If a bank, for example, charged a $2 monthly fee, perhaps a quarter or 50 cents or maybe $1 went to cover (the cost of) the ATM, but people didn't realize they were being charged."

The ABA spokesman insists, "It is no coincidence we are seeing a proliferation in ATM fees."

He says banks have invested heavily in these computerized tellers and consumers are reaping dividends of convenience. And while claims were originally made that the machines would save banks money in the long run, Alwood concedes banks "haven't been able to cut back on tellers the way we originally thought."

People use ATMs for withdrawals but they want to see a human face when they make deposits, he adds.

There is no rule of thumb when it comes to ATM fees. Bank of America, California's biggest bank, started charging 30 cents for every withdrawal at an ATM, but the fee is only imposed on customers with a Custom Choice Checking Account. There are no ATM fees imposed for the four other checking account plans Bank of America offers.

Usually, it is the people who make the fewest transactions who pay for the convenience of using the computerized teller. For instance, Bank of America's Custom Choice Checking Account previously cost $2.50 a month and offered the customer eight free checks. Now the same account costs $3 a month and there is a charge of 30 cents per transaction. That includes an ATM withdrawal, using an ATM card to say, pay for a tank of gas or a cart of groceries.

The problem, say consumer officials, is that hiking the cost of a checking account with a relatively small number of monthly transactions only impacts on the poor and elderly who opt for these low-priced accounts because they can neither afford nor utilize the more elaborate checking account schemes banks are marketing today.

However, Bank of America, says a spokeswoman, is only "meeting the competition," not breaking new ground in charging an ATM fee. Indeed, Security Pacific, Wells Fargo and First Interstate Bank, California's next three biggest banks, have been charging for ATM transactions for some time.

While some banks are only charging ATM fees for some accounts, the ABA spokesman says a few banks are charging every customer for every transaction. He did not know which banks have this policy.

That means when bank customers insert their plastic ATM card in the slot to check the balance in their account, withdraw money, make a deposit or transfer money from a checking account to a savings account, a fee is imposed on each of the four transactions.

Frankly, it is doubtful that many banks are trying to bilk customers so blatantly, unless, of course, consumers are too lazy to shop around.

A far more common practice is to charge bank customers a fee when they withdraw funds from an ATM machine that belongs to another bank but is part of an ATM network.

These so-called "shared networks" that go under the trade names of Star, Master Teller or Plus allow say, a Clevelander, to withdraw money from his own account in Dallas, providing the Texas bank is a member of the same network that is hooked up to the customer's Cleveland bank.

For that convenience, expect to pay anywhere from 50 cents to $1 per transaction. The fee may cover the cost of any computerized telecommunications required to access an account from 2,000 miles away.

Plus, supermarkets like Thriftway on Queen Anne Hill in Seattle, have ATMs that let virtually anyone with a credit card — Visa, MasterCard, American Express or Discover card, among others — insert plastic and pull out cash. The price for that service is $1.

So far it seems that only commercial banks — and only the bigger ones at that — are putting the arm on customers to pay for certain ATM transactions. Savings banks, savings and loans and credit unions, all of whom generally have ATM, have not followed suit.

"We charge no fee and we have no interest in doing it," says Monica Wiley, a spokeswoman for Home Federal Savings and Loan, a San Diego-based financial institution with 175 ATMs in California. "We want to encourage people to use our ATMs because they are more cost-effective for us."

Still, Home Federal does charge $1 per transaction if its customers use some other bank or S&L's ATM. Home Fed feels that is a justified administrative and operational cost.

In Seattle, Washington Mutual Savings Bank lets its customers use its ATMs free and it has no plans to change its policy. But chairman Lou Pepper, who has previously warned his fellow bankers that savvy consumers will not tolerate being nickeled and dimed to death by a rash of administrative fees and costs, also says, "Look, there is no free lunch today in banking."

Washington Mutual takes a "neighborly" approach to serving its customers with a surprisingly broad array of services (you can buy a stock or an airplane ticket to Singapore) but Pepper will not rule out the possibility of someday charging to use the ATMs.

The message to anyone with a bank account and a concern for his or her cash is clear. If you're not willing to pay the cost of keeping the bank's ATMs alive and well, you don't have to.

'Adverteasing' keeps ad pros guessing on historic slogans

By CARLA MARINUCCI
Hearst News Service

They're the people who invent those insidious slogans that stay buried for years in the foggy netherworld of the junk-fed, "raised-on-television" brain.

Until, one day — without warning — they surface like Excedrin Headache Number 101 or a bad case of post-nasal drip. That's when clever lines pop up, like:

Or: "Take it off, take it all off!"

But ad junkies have created a socially acceptable way to control those dark impulses. It's called "Adverteasing," a kind of Trivial Pursuit for people who like to test their recall of commercials and advertising witticisms.

■ Millie Olson, the spunky executive creative director of Ketchum Communications, San Francisco, one of the local ad community's most respected talents.

■ Wayne Buder, account supervisor for Young & Rubicam, San Francisco, a man who deserves profound credit for publicly chastizing President-elect Bush's ad mouthpiece, Roger Ailes, in a letter to Ad Age recently. When he isn't standing up for truth and justice, Buder handles Clorox business at Y&R.

■ Joel Drucker, senior account executive at Burson-Marsteller, San Francisco, a self-described "media junkie" who candidly admits to growing up on television and TV advertising. Despite this confession, he handles business for Chevron at this major public relations agency.

The idea of the game is to start out — where else — in the mail room, then scratch and claw your way to the title of agency president. In a clever departure from reality, your ability to make it to the top in this game rests solely on intelligence.

Indeed, some of the slogans in this game were memorable, only because they could rate as some of the worst prose ever put together on the planet. Like, "The drop that can make it stop." (Acne 12); "The Sun in Powdered Form" (Revlon's Pure Radience); "Ivory tips protect your lips" (Marlboro); "So round, so firm, so fully packed" (Lucky Strike). And, "If vodka has no taste, how come I know it's Wolfschmidt?"

"Like UPS," Olson said. "'We run the tightest ship in the shipping business.'" That's great. "Or Clairol, 'Does she or doesn't she?' A great campaign seeps into and influences popular culture. Take American Express, and 'Don't leave home without it.' That's one that has really affected people in terms of the way they live their lives."

"But we think it's brain surgery, and it's not," Buder said. "A client can love a slogan, or they can hate it," but when you're racking your brain to come up with something, and you think it's really great, "it all comes down to trust."

"It's the clients who believe in advertising for the long term, and not just the quick hit, who get great advertising," Olson agreed.

Car & Driver reviews Beretta pistol, sedan

DETROIT (AP) — An automobile magazine that couldn't resist the trademark battle between General Motors Corp. and an Italian gun maker did a "road test" comparison of Beretta, the pistol, and Beretta, the Chevy.

Car and Driver, its editorial tongue planted firmly in its cheek, has a story in its current issue with the headline: "We've shot from the hip before, but never like this."

Fabbrica d'Armi P. Beretta SpA, the gun company, sued GM for $250 million in federal court in New York last July, claiming that the car infringes on the pistol's trademark. The case is pending.

The Car and Driver comparison was thought up by Editor William Jeanes, and was written by New York Contributing Editor Bruce McCall.

"For our test, we chose a 1989 Beretta V-6 GTU two-door notchback coupe and a 1989 Beretta 16-round Model 92F 9mm Parabellum, the spiffiest models in their respective lineups," McCall wrote.

Along with the facts and figures, there are some performance opinions in the article:

■ "The Beretta 92F (the pistol) ... hates corners more than any device C-D has tested since the 1964 AMC Marlin."

■ "We liked the solid heft and natural feel of the Italian lightweight. It falls easily to hand. ... No such provision is designed into the five-speed Getrag shifter fitted to our U.S. test sample, perhaps because while the Italian aims to be on the hip of everybody in uniform, the American aims only to be uniform among everybody hip."

■ "You can field-strip the Italian in minutes without tools, while the same task performed on the Chevy would require countless hours and untold broken fingernails."

From Staff and Wire Reports

By the end of the year, Texas Commerce Bancshares had earned $2.1 million last year, including $11.2 million in the fourth quarter.

The results are considerably better than a year earlier, when Houston's biggest banking company reported a loss of $120.3 million for the year and $28.8 million for the fourth quarter.

TCB's Midland bank more than doubled its profits in 1988, with net income of $1.2 million last year, compared to $450,000 in 1987.

Statewide, the bank spent much energy working through problems early in the year and posted losses in each of the first two quarters. But benefits began to show up in the third quarter when the bank posted a small profit, followed by fourth quarter results which thrust the company into profitability for the year.

The bank's fourth quarter earnings were helped by $9.9 million in tax benefits from a sharing arrangement with its parent company and the recovery of $6.1 million of past-due interest on Brazilian loans.

Texas Commerce's loan portfolio continued to improve for the three months that ended Dec. 31. Problem loans fell for the second straight quarter, dropping from $1.28 billion on Sept. 30 to $1.25 billion at year-end.

Jones said that non-performing loans account for only 3 pecent of the Midland bank's portfolio which grew from $30 million to $37 million during the year.

Texas Commerce Chairman Ben Love was jubilant about the return to profitability.

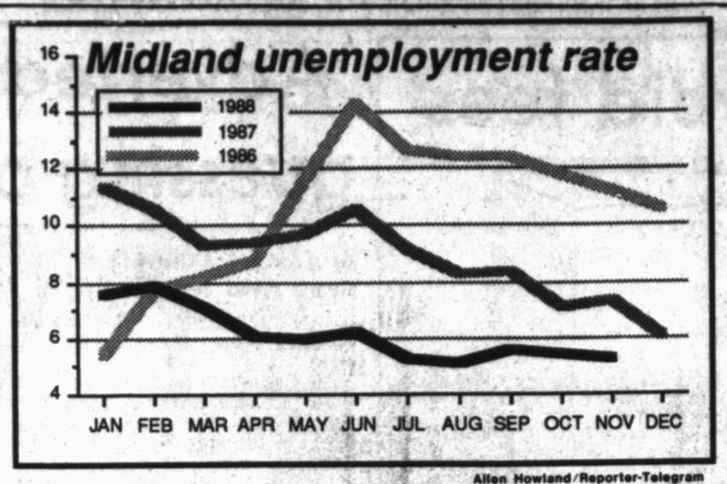

"At the start of 1988 all our 8,200 bankers made a commitment to put Texas Commerce back in the black," Love said.

He stressed the goal was accomplished without a capital infusion from a source outside the bank. Chemical Banking Corp., which bought Texas Commerce for $1.19 billion in 1987, has not contributed any capital to its Texas affiliate.

ECONOMY

Jim Crider, director of economic development for the Midland Chamber of Commerce, feels the low unemployment rate is basically the result of a strong economy. "I think the economy in Midland is actually stronger than we realize," said Crider. "We are not in boom conditions, but the economy is still healthy. All the economic indicators for the city have been on a gradual incline since late 1986."

Crider said move-ins by Arco and Texaco could have contributed to a stronger economy, adding that increased activity by the firms already in Midland could be a factor.

Dianne Dobie, a spokesman for the TEC Labor Market Information Dept. in Austin, agrees that a stronger Midland economy is probably indicated by the difference in unemployment rates between Midland and Odessa, where unemployment has consistently been 2 percent higher. "The Odessa service economy was hardest hit by the downturn," said Dobie, "and remains hard hit."

JOHNNY ISABEL, TEC office manager in Midland, said a stronger Midland economy might also be indicated by a decrease in the number of professionals, landmen, geologists and engineers applying for unemployment at the Midland office.

"We see few professionals applying for unemployment now," said Isabel, "and it appears that market may have stabilized. What we see now are mostly employees of the drilling and well service companies that remain hard hit by the downturn."

She noted that if the rig count would only improve for the Permian Basin, Midland might well have the lowest unemployment rate in the state.

S&L

down an institution, it has to spend enormous amounts immediately to pay off depositors — more money than the regulators have. Over a period of years, it then hopes to get back some of it by selling loans and repossessed property from the failed S&L.

By rescuing an institution, the government pays only for the loss, not for the entire amount of insured deposits. And, it gets to spread out the cost, typically for as long as 10 years.

Also, most institutions have a certain value as a going concern — such as a loyal customer base — that would be destroyed if they were liquidated. In 1988, new S&L owners pumped $3 billion into the rescued institutions in exchange for this value.

In December, regulators "resolved" the cases of 75 S&Ls at an estimated cost of $15.5 billion to the insurance fund and $4 billion in tax breaks. The ultimate cost of liquidating those S&Ls would have been $22.8 billion, however, and the insurance fund would have had to immediately come up with $47 billion in "up-front cash."

A: Inflation and high interest rates in the 1970s and early 1980s put most S&Ls in a bind. They were forced to pay more to attract deposits than they were earning on long-term mortgages already on their books.

One of the "solutions" was to allow savings and loans to expand beyond traditional mortgage lending and invest in commercial real estate and other projects, which earn higher rates of return and require only a short-term commitment by the S&L.

The new rules attracted a new class of S&L owner, now called "high-fliers." They were particularly prevalent in states with more liberal S&L rules such as Texas, California and Florida.

Unfortunately, the new investments made by high-fliers were riskier. When the Texas economy collapsed because of plummeting oil prices, borrowers stopped making payments and much of the commercial real estate serving as collateral was worth only a fraction of its previous value.

At the same time S&Ls were entering unfamiliar territory, the Reagan administration was cutting back on its force of examiners. It was only in 1985, when regulators arranged to have the examination force taken off budget, that S&Ls began to be more closely supervised.

In some cases outright fraud contributed to the losses. A Justice Department-led task force, operating in Texas since 1987, has obtained indictments and convictions of S&L managers.

Also, throughout the 1980s, Congress, at the urging of industry lobby groups, consistently refused to provide regulators with enough money to shut down all failed institutions. The institutions stayed open and lost even more money. Congress also directed regulators to "forbear" from taking action against S&Ls in economically distressed areas, such as Texas.

CAMP

Troy E. Mitchell, owner/operator of Hair Research & Design, says "it was tough at times but I learned a lot. ... How to use my time and how much you're capable of doing." At first, he thought there was no way he could complete the course.

Mitchell liked the Japanese instructors. "They brought it down to simplicity," he says.

Some of the original instructors have returned to Japan. An American, Frederick C. Delisle, has been promoted to head instructor, but there also are Japanese instructors, says Carl Craig, executive director of sales and marketing for Kanrisha Yosei Gakko USA Corp., which conducts the courses.

Though these graduates were impressed by the course, KYG has had a tough time marketing its 13-day, $2,480 program. It also offers a five-day, $1,250 version.

Ironically, the course may have suffered from overexposure.

KYG opened up its early camps to the media and got extensive coverage. But KYG complains that some of the coverage was too sensational and scared potential students away by making them think the camp grinds down students. The Tokyo-based organization now has suspended media coverage of the camps, Craig says.

NO ILL-TREATMENT

"In Japan, instructors can be pretty harsh. We don't do that," Craig says.

But, he says, "Kanrisha is having a difficult time here in the U.S. Coming from Japan, it is slightly oriented toward Japanese culture." The regimentation and Japanese trappings, which include bowing, do not appeal to many Americans.

These elements, however, do not deter supporters such as Kowalick. He went on a two-week study mission to Japan with some auto industry managers, where they looked at Hell Camp on its home ground, where it has trained more than 100,000 people. "All of us were very impressed," Kowalick says.

This is the type of feedback that is encouraging KYG to persist in the United States and even to consider buying a permanent site for the program in Malibu.

RETAIL

Plans call for a U-shaped sales floor with 14-foot ceilings to provide an open and comfortable feeling, says Borron. About two-thirds of the retail area will be devoted to men's fashions and one-third to ladies' wear. Borron also plans to double the size of his tailoring operation to provide room for a complete made-to-measure department that will custom tailor suits, shirts, dresses and other apparel.

Borron, a former dentist, launched the original J.E. Borron store in 1978 in a 1,500-sq. ft. store in San Miguel Square, and later knocked out a wall to add a women's wear section.

In 1980, at the height of the oil boom, he moved the store to its present downtown location. In September 1986, the ladies' store moved to the Courtyard location.

Borron said the move was necessitated because the traffic flow downtown had shifted from the courthouse square to other areas in the downtown area. "The center of the downtown area is no longer the center of the town," said Borron.

Dow Jones Average has a passion for jazz, especially music from the big band era. Members are, front row, from left, drummer Gary Burnett, saxophonist Carvel Mills and pianist Jim Ross; back row, from left, bassist Robert Compean and rhythm guitarist Jerry Tubb. The group plays at 2 p.m. today for a jam session at Mission Dorado Country Club, which precedes the West Texas Jazz Society's first annual meeting. The session is open to the public.

'All that jazz'

Decades ago, during a charity ball at the Century Room of Dallas' Adolphus Hotel, a ruffling of egos led to an incident Midlander Jim Ross still remembers today.

Joe Reichman, a famous band leader of the time, was in town. He had hired Billy Mayo, conductor of the old WFAA Early Birds Orchestra, and members of the Billy Mayo Quintet to back him up.

"Billy was a flamboyant player and he was playing lead alto sax," Ross recalls. "He played the score exactly as it was written, except he embellished it. Joe was a famous guy, and he was standing up there waving his baton while the guy playing first alto sax was getting all the attention.

"He fired Billy. He sent him home before first intermission. When he did, the rest of us quit because we were hired as a unit. Joe came running to the drummer and hired the drummer, bass player and the piano back, but we wouldn't go back until he hired all of us."

Ross was Mayo's piano player. Then, the idea of losing money for a gig was more serious to Ross then than it is now. Ross, who is president of Tipperary Corp., is a member of Dow Jones Average, a group of musicians who all have other jobs and play more for fun than for money.

Since its formation in 1978, Dow Jones Average has played numerous charity events as a donation of the members' time to worthwhile community endeavors.

"I was required to begin studying music at the same time I started kindergarten, don't ask me how many years ago that was — but if you want to know the truth it was about 1929."

His mother gave him piano lessons.

"I was fortunate. I don't call it talent, but I had a lot of encouragement from my parents who believed in me, so I became rather proficient in terms of what other people thought back then."

Ross played all through grade school and high school in Sulphur Springs. When he was in high school, he began playing a second instrument, French horn, an instrument he still enjoys.

"When time came to go to college, there was a deficiency in a thing called money in the family, and I began working to support my education so I joined a band at age 16, having just gotten out of high school. Primarily because all the piano players had been drafted, I was able to get a job with a big band in Dallas — Al Cortez.

"I worked days, and I played at night until I joined the Navy to keep from being drafted in April of 1943. That pretty much ended music until the war was over."

In April 1946, Ross returned to Dallas, rejoined Cortez and entered Southern Methodist University. He didn't stay long with Cortez, but instead began free lancing or jobbing about two nights a week in addition to working days and carrying a full load of college classes.

It was when he graduated in January 1949 that he began working full time with the Billy Mayo Quintet. In 1953, Ross, who worked for U.S. Steel Corp., was transferred to Pittsburgh.

"I dropped music as a profession pretty much as of that time, although I was transferred back to Dallas twice since then, and each time I would, rather informally, join Billy Mayo."

Ross arrived in Midland in 1974, after first moving to the Bahamas, courtesy of U.S. Steel and then San Antonio, where he first became involved in the oil and gas business by working for Tesoro Petroleum Corp.

This move was to put him back in the music business.

"I've always, all through the years, kept my union dues paid, and so when I came here, I went to a jam session at the Sans Souci one Sunday afternoon. Who should I meet there but Carvel Mills and his saxophone. We became friends, and we just began to play together."

"Jim and I played together privately at home," says Mills, owner of Carvel Mills Inc., a life insurance agency. "We had individual sessions at Jim's house or my house in addition to the monthly sessions at the Sans Souci."

He also played saxophone and clarinet at Howard Payne University, where he played in the concert band and in the stage band. During his years in Brownwood at Howard Payne, he also played both instruments in the Leonard King Dance Orchestra.

While completing his graduate studies in music education, oboe and clarinet at the University of North Texas, he played bass clarinet in the University of North Texas concert band and saxophone and clarinet in the Aces, the university's college dance orchestra.

Mills, who is the leader of Dow Jones Average, was band instructor at Brady Junior High and San Saba High School for three years before moving to Midland in 1956, when he got into the insurance business.

"I played in the Lions Club band for a year or two, and then I basically hung up the horn," Mills says. "In 1975, we started the monthly jam sessions at the Sans Souci. I had always missed playing in those intervening years and when the jam sessions started, it gave me an opportunity to play again."

At about the same time Mills and Ross were practicing at home and jamming at Sans Souci, a third member of the soon-to-be Dow Jones Average entered the scene — Gary Burnett, president of Roden Oil.

Burnett's interest in jazz music began around 10 years ago when he met Ross.

"I got interested in playing the drums," Burnett says. "I played trumpet in high school, but that was 100 years ago. My high school was so small, I played football during the game, and at half time I'd get out and play with the band.

"I met Jim Ross at a party — he was playing the piano — and they happened to have a set of drums there that belonged to this family's son."

"I want to buy a set of drums," Burnett told the sales clerk. "What do you want with them?" the clerk asked. "I want whatever comes with them."

"I knew it was fun," Burnett says. "I started practicing or playing with the stereo and got where I could do that good enough. I started playing with Jim Ross, then Carvel was added, and we grew from there."

A joke had a lot to do with propelling Burnett's career as a drummer.

"Clayton Williams was having a party down at his ranch, and I told Janet Pollard, Clayton's sister, "He's going to hire a big name band to play at his ranch. That'll be Saturday. Why don't we get a band up, and we'll play Friday night?' "

The group was called JP and the Boys, in honor of Janet Pollard, and featured Ross on piano.

Country music's Faron Young

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Exchanging kisses for songs provided the impetus for one first grader to seek a career in the music business.

"I was in the school play, and the little girls came up and kissed me if I'd sing them a song, and I said, 'Good. I think I'll stay in this business.' "

Now 56 years old, Faron Young has a career as a country music singer which spans more than three decades and includes recording 123 singles, 32 of which were No. 1 songs and 79 which were Top 10 songs.

"I've recorded, counting albums and album songs, over 500 to 600 songs," Young said in a recent telephone interview.

Young, who is a deputy sheriff in Nashville, and his band, The Singing Deputies, will perform at Midland Center at 8 p.m. Saturday. The event is a benefit for United Way. Tickets, priced at $8 in advance and $10 at the door, may be purchased at Wells Boot City in Midland, and Luskey's Western Wear in Midland and Odessa.

After so many songs, says this Shreveport, La., native, "It would be hard to reach in that pot and just pull out a favorite. Different things have different stories behind them.

"You're always happy about your first hit which was 'Going Steady,' the song I wrote that got me started. And my biggest hit that sold over a million was 'Hello Walls,' that Willie Nelson wrote for me back when Willie first started out as a songwriter.

"I was the first one who recorded 'Sweet Dreams' back in 1954. And, it was a No. 1 record for me. About eight years later, Patsy Cline recorded it. It was a big hit for her.

"And I know nowadays when I go out to some of the younger kids, all they will remember is Patsy Cline's recording of it. They say, 'Why did you record this Patsy Cline song?' Back then, when she recorded it, people said, 'Oh, you've done that old Faron Young song.' "

Another Young song recently revived is "If You Ain't Lovin', You Ain't Livin'," recorded by George Strait. The song was a hit for Young 30 years ago.

He suspects that one of the greatest songs he recorded was "Four in the Morning," written by a friend of his, Jerry Chestnut.

"But when I recorded it, it wasn't going to be my single. I had some other song I was going to put out, and the secretaries around the office got to listening to me playing that tape, and they'd come over and say, 'Play that song.' And I'd say, 'You girls really like that?' And they'd say, 'Yeah.'

"One of the best barometers on a hit song is to listen to the girls up there at work, the secretaries and the different girls that are in the music business. I think they can pick a hit over us. Women really buy the records. I listen to them."

Actually, Young sang popular songs until his junior year in high school. Then, he switched to country music when he began singing with his high school football coach's band.

When he started college, he met up with Webb Pierce and went to work with his group. Pierce got Young on the Louisiana Hay Ride. It was while on tour with Pierce that Young first came to Midland, 38 years ago.

"I watched Midland grow from just a little old bitty western hick town to a pretty good metropolis. Of course, the last few years I know the economy has been a little less than desired, but Midland had its growth. It's a good city."

Some 36 years ago, Young signed with Capitol Records.

"The first thing we had was a pretty good record. The people at WSM in Nashville heard it, and they brought me up here (Nashville) on a two-week trial, and I've been up here ever since."

Young, who spent 14 years with Capitol Records and then 17 years with Mercury, isn't bothered by the new trends in country music.

"It's really not country as I know country, but I'm a pop singer, too, so I can accept it. I like all kinds of music.

"A lot of the hard line country fans are very upset with this new wave rockabilly coming in and they say taking over. But as far as I'm concerned, they ain't hurting me none. They print that money up in Washington 24 hours a day so there's still plenty of it left around if anybody wants to get out there and work."

He remarks that country is returning to its roots with performers like Randy Travis, George Strait and Gene Watson.

Although his recording career slowed in the mid-80s, he's released an album, "Here's to You," and is back on the road performing about 150 dates a year and appearing regularly on the Nashville Network on cable television.

YOUNG

During his career, he has had a number of humorous things happen to him on stage.

"I've walked off of stages into the orchestra pit, and I've backed into the drums and fell over the drummer."

He recalls a New Year's Eve engagement in Omaha, Neb.

"During the show, they were going to let snowflakes start dropping, and this guy pulled this string, and the whole thing, the curtain and everything, fell down over the band. Half the snowflakes went out in the audience and all over us. It was a mess, really.

"I tried to run, but I didn't get away. We got covered with that artificial snow. If you ever try to get that off of you, you'll know what I'm talking about. Looked like Frosty the Snowman. Must have been a half a ton of that stuff that fell."

He's seen talent come and go.

"You watch some of these new kids coming along. After a couple, three hits, you never hear of themagain, and they're pumping all this money they're making. I say, 'Well, that's good. I'd rather spread mine out over 40 years.' You make all yours right now, and the government will get it, and next year you'll wonder where the hell you're going to get a job."

When asked what he would most want to see appear in an article about him, Young says, "The fact that I have always loved and helped other people in this industry."

He cites as examples, Roger Miller, Darrell McCall, Johnny Paycheck, Sonny James, Elvis Presley, Willie Nelson and Charley Pride.

"In the early days when Elvis first started, Elvis didn't have the money to even rent a room, and I used to let him stay in my rooms with me on the road to keep from having to check into the hotel. I've always helped people, it's never hurt me.

"Willie Nelson, when he came in here starving to death and nobody would record his songs, I got to knowing Willie and I started recording his material. The other singers saw me hit with his material and they started after Willie, so Willie became a very profitable songwriter after that.

"When Charley Pride first came to town, nobody would carry Charley out on a tour. I carried Charley on his first road show with me, down through Texas and Louisiana. Charley and I have been dear friends ever since those days. After Charley got to be a big star, Charley hired me.

"When Elvis got to be a big star — before the end when he got so big when he didn't need anybody with him — he used to carry me, and I'd open his shows. He paid me more money than I was making. I said, 'Why are you doing this?' He said, 'Because you helped me one time.' Anything you can do to help somebody, it'll all come back to you."

As he talks about his career, he makes being in the music business and having stayed in the music business this long sound easy. He knows it isn't.

"I work at it as a business. It's something I love. It's great when you can make a living out of something you love doing.

"But, when we first started back in the old days, riding in a car and pulling an instrument trailer and being gone 40 and 50 days at a time before you'd come home. Nowadays, these new kids they come in and they get airplanes and big busses and everything. They don't know what the earlier people went through in this music industry.

"It was a lot tougher back then. Of course, I wouldn't trade it; it's been very good to me. And I've never forgotten where I came from and what music has done for me and what the fans in country music have done for me."

Young has strong feelings about fans and the treatment they receive from some of the newer talents. He understands that it's impossible to sign autographs for 15,000 or 18,000 fans at a concert, but sees no legitimate

"They get the big hit records, start making big money, and they don't stay around a show to autograph, they don't visit with the fans. That's something I've never missed doing. I've always made sure that I talked with the fans, made autographs, and did anything I could do for them.

"They can forget you just as quick as they thought of you."

He recalls a conversation with a group he prefers not to name.

"I was playing golf with one of them, and I said, 'I understand ya'll don't autograph after shows.' They said, 'Well you old timers started that crap. You and Ernest Tubb and Webb Pierce and Hank Snow. We don't have to do that kind of stuff.'

"I said, 'Well, you better get on your knees and thank us old timers there was a music industry for you to even come into cause if everybody thought like you do, there wouldn't be no industry.' They can get me upset real quick, some of these new punks."

Young once fired a secretary because she didn't send out the autographed pictures he had asked her to mail. In firing her he said, "You don't understand the importance of the people out there. They're the ones who pay your salary, too."

His strong feelings about remembering the fans and taking care of business go back to his childhood.

"Years ago, I wrote Alan Ladd. He was my favorite movie star. I was expecting an answer the next day cause I was just a kid who lived out in the country, and I'd go out to that mailbox everyday looking for that picture.

"After a couple of months I figured — it broke my heart — he ain't going to send it to me. Finally, I guess three months later, I got this picture of Alan Ladd. Man, I carried that around, showed everybody, and said, 'This is one of my personal friends.'"

He laughs, then, his voice serious, adds, "I've met people in airports and different places, and I wouldn't have a picture on me, and they'd give me their address. When I'd get back, I'd always sign them and send those pictures because I remember what that meant to me. People wouldn't ask if they didn't want it."

GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

Scholar says Shakespeare's plays may not exist as he wrote them

Temple

"No Shakespeare play actually survives."

Strong words and spoken by a Shakespearean scholar — Dr. Andrew J.G. Patenall of the University of Toronto, Canada — Tuesday night at the opening talk of Midland Community Theatre's "Shakespeare LIVE and Lively!" week.

When I was going through the public school system in Midland, I had the strong impression that the acceptance of curiosity and questioning on the part of the student was directly proportional to the level of enlightenment held by the teacher in that classroom.

When it came to English, and I had good English teachers, I somehow graduated from high school with the impression that God ordained how the language was written and spoken. After all, questioning either was taboo.

In college, I was surprised and pleased to discover fallible man, not infallible God was the culprit. However, I was appalled to learn how influential editors and printers have been in course of the written language and thus in the course of history.

Tuesday night, when Patenall spoke on "Who Stole Shakespeare" and "Approaches to Hamlet," the same scoundrels came to light — editors and printers.

The experience sent me back to my college days. I frequently grinned. I was pleased to see numerous honor students from Midland and Lee high schools in the audience and thrilled to hear that many returned Wednesday night.

On Tuesday night the students were there for extra credit. On Wednesday night, they were there for their own learning, proof of the interest they had in the topic being discussed. Perhaps after seeing Shakespeare unveiled, they won't leave high school with some of the misconceptions I had.

Patenall spent the night proving the line which opens this column. No text exists in Shakespeare's own handwriting. He pointed out specific examples from different printings of Shakespeare's works which contain obvious differences in wording, phrasing or specific words which have been changed. Of course, without editors and printers we would have no printed copies of Shakespeare's works.

He closed his talk by saying, "Our hunt for the thief of 'Hamlet' is merely a symptom of larger acts of piracy which were going on in all Shakespeare's plays. When we say we have seen the definitive Shakespeare, here, there or somewhere else, we are not being true.

"All we can have are attempted reconstructions, and they have to be regarded as experiments, as trials for the kind of way in which we think they might have sounded at some particular time in the past.

"I suppose if I have a message overall, it's that I urge curiosity and tolerance of productions of the play ('Hamlet') which may affront our expectations.

"We all think we know the perfect 'Hamlet,' in point of fact, that perfect 'Hamlet' is waiting to be violated by someone else's perfect 'Hamlet,' and I suspect that is why we still, 400 years later, go many miles to see any production of Shakespeare anywhere because we know that every production of Shakespeare is in some measure an experiment."

During Patenall's talk, I thought of a conversation I had at Christmas with a friend. She told me she was enraged to discover, in reading a series on distinctive women in Womans World magazine in 1988, that Paul Revere did not make the ride which made him famous.

He was sick. The ride was made by a woman named Mary — and my friend can't recall her last name. However, the article said, Longfellow's poem made Revere famous. History has done the rest.

Certainly, the story aroused my curiosity. I'm looking into it at this time and will report back when I have an answer.

"Shakespeare's Lucky Banana Peel" was the topic Wednesday night when Midlander Bob Anson talked about the twists of fate that led Shakespeare to write some of his most interesting works.

During his talk, he discussed the labor-union type pressure that the theater's head clown put on Shakespeare to write good parts for the clown. Included in the presentation was a scene from "The Two Gentlemen of Verona" in which — live on stage — Patenall and a large golden retriever romped around the stage.

I was ill or I would have been there. I understand the demonstration effectively showed how Shakespeare used a dog to steal the scene from the head clown.

Were Shakespeare alive today, I suspect he would heartily enjoy the upcoming inaugural events. After all, he was perhaps one of the greatest people-watchers of all time and knew how to capture humanity's glories and follies.

He might have been interested in viewing "The Dishong Collection of First Lady Dolls," on permanent display at the Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee, Odessa.

Shakespeare might even have written this inauguration in comedic terms — making light of the Republicans' talk about the private sector rather than the government providing charitable funds, while influential members of the Republican private sector stage a multi-million dollar inauguration which contains no charitable benefit.

Gallery 1114 is hosting a one-man show for Jim Romberg, nationally known ceramic artist noted for his skill and creativity in the Raku method, Jan. 21 through Feb. 23.

The show will open with a public reception from 7 to 10 p.m. Saturday.

He organized the panel and demonstrated for the recent Raku Invitational at the Kansas City Contemporary Art Museum. This is Romberg's second one-man show at Gallery 1114.

In this exhibit, the artist continues to explore clay as a sculptural medium while still using traditional pottery forms. "Raku," said Romberg, "is both creative attitude and using to advantage the smoking and firing that can't be duplicated in any other art form."

Gallery 1114 is a contemporary artists' cooperative located at 1114 N. Big Spring and is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

DOW

"We went down there and played Friday night just for a joke, but we played pretty good," Burnett says.

Mills recalls meeting Burnett at the Sans Souci during a jam session.

"That's where I met Ross and Gary and a lot of the other players around," Mills says. "From those sessions, the Dow Jones Average really took shape in 1978. If we wanted to be real corny, we could say, 'And, the rest is history.' It isn't, but it sounds good."

Dow Jones Average still didn't have a steady bass player until Randy Hunt, a CPA with Peat Marwick, came on the scene.

When Hunt was transferred to New York City around three years ago, a new member joined — Jerry Tubb, Midland College coordinator of commercial music studies and director of the recording studio at MC.

"Nearly three years ago, Carvel Mills called me up, said he'd heard that I was a jazz musician, and he needed a bass player," Tubb says.

"Foremost, I'm a jazz guitarist, but I do play bass as well and being civic minded I agreed to play some with the group. Our first function was the United Way rally that I played with them in '85, and I've been with them ever since. I'm the only full-time musician in the group, but these guys are extremely talented, and it's a great honor to be able to get to play with them."

"Jerry was recommended by another bass player," Mills says. "When I called Jerry, I'd never met him. He'd never met Jim Ross, either. We were playing for a United Way banquet that night. He met us out there and played his first gig with us. No rehearsal, we just met and played the gig. He's been our steady bass player ever since."

Last year, Tubb also worked as part of a duo with bass player Robert Compean, who has now moved from Midland. While he was here, Compean played bass with Dow Jones Average, while Tubb played guitar.

Tubb, who grew up in Levelland, became interested in art as a child and then, when he was in junior high, developed in interest in music.

"I grew up liking rock music, but eventually really got turned onto playing jazz, and my first musical love is jazz. But, I like most popular styles of music, and I like classical music as well."

Although Dow Jones Average has other musicians including Jess Parrish, Felix Welmaker, Bobby Crues and singer Janet Pollard, who perform with the group from time to time, Ross, Mills, Burnett and Tubb are the mainstays of the group.

Friday, Dow Jones Average will perform for the Boy Scouts at the Holiday Inn Convention Center.

That's not the group's next gig. Today, beginning at 2 p.m., Dow Jones Average will play during a jam session for the West Texas Jazz Society at Mission Dorado Country Club, Odessa. The session is open to the public and is being conducted before the Society's first annual meeting.

"The West Texas Jazz Society is a year old now, and we're very proud of it," says Ross who is a member along Burnett, Tubb and Mills.

"We have been able to make three different presentations to local public and private schools and to the colleges in the area of what I call classical jazz — the performers who will go down in history as real jazzists," Ross says. "And we are dedicated to continuing that. For example, Feb. 18, we will be bringing a twin piano duo to appear at the Midland Hilton."

As for the music Dow Jones Average plays, Mills calls it the big band music of the 30s, 40s and 50s. "That's basically the kind of music we like and the kind of music we play," he says.

Ross calls the music Dow Jones Average plays traditional jazz.

"We are not Dixieland, although we're influenced by Dixieland," Ross says. "We are not modern, although we have tried to keep up. With an old geezer like me it's hard to do. Carvel is a bebop enthusiast. We're probably closer to big band even though we just play as a small unit."

Tubb, who has a master's degree in music from Texas Tech University, likes jazz because "jazz gives you a freedom to express yourself without using words necessarily. A lot of people think of instrumentals as being subservient to vocals. I highly disagree with that.

"Once you put words with the melody somehow you've defined the idea of the melody. Without words, it's up to the listener to interpret what it might mean in an even broader sense than interpreting the lyrics."

Burnett is definite in his musical preference.

"I like jazz, not progressive jazz. I like big band type sound — Glenn Miller sound. If I can't hum it, I don't like it." He laughs and adds, "A lot of guys in the band accuse me all the time of whistling."

"I think he's the only drummer I've every played with who whistles while he plays," Mills says. "He whistles all the songs we play."

Another aspect of the business that Burnett has strong feelings about is the type of performances he likes to play.

"I like to play for charities. Any charity that's doing anything, I enjoy doing it. If a charity wants a band for an event, I'll be the first one to volunteer. If I'm doing it for charity, I feel good and can quit whenever I want to. If I'm being paid, I feel I have to do it whether I want to or not."

Burnett pauses, then makes a comment which might have been made by any member of Dow Jones Average, "But I always want to because I enjoy it. It's fun."

'Accidental Tourist' worth trip

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

It was gratifying to see the hordes of moviegoers waiting to see the sell-out performances of "Accidental Tourist" last weekend (I made it in before it sold out on my second attempt (And due to a tremendous turn-out getting into the sneak preview of "Beaches" wasn't even a remote possibility).

"Accidental Tourist," the film based on Anne Tyler's exceptional novel, was voted 1988's best film by the New York Film Critics' Circle. It was the darkhorse which barely edged out "A World Apart" (a film about a white journalist and her daughter in South Africa), due to some quirk in the voting system.

"Accidental Tourist" is the story of Macon Leary (William Hurt), a writer who has made his livelihood by compiling guidebooks for the business person who hates to travel. His fastidiousness in avoiding anything foreign or spontaneous spills over into his own life, and his emotions are also numbed by the sudden, violent death of his 12-year-old son. His wife (Kathleen Turner) of many years has decided to divorce him, alienating him further from his established routines.

The logo on Macon's books, an armchair with wings, represents his attempts to take the familiarity of home with him no matter where he travels. "That traveling armchair isn't just your logo; it's you," his wife rightly accuses.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss

STRIPPER — barely worth the time

PRODUCER — a good investment

GUSHER — not to be missed

Macon, who avoids all of life's complications, finds himself strangely attracted to a dog-trainer, Muriel Pritchett (in an intense performance by Geena Davis), a brash, avant-garde dresser. The hapless travel writer gets caught between his wife, girlfriend and his eccentric family, consisting of his brothers and sister, Rose (in a refreshingly quirky performance by Amy Wright). Bill Pullman, Macon's publisher, is also a nicely drawn character.

The film manages a fine balance of humor and pathos overall. It should be a contender for best picture at Oscar time, which is unusual since none of the performances are Oscar material (with the exception of a Welsh corgi named Bud who gets my vote for Doggy of the Year).

"Accidental Tourist" offers a nice jaunt into the lives of those adverse to life's excess baggage. It's worth the trip.

"Accidental Tourist" rates four rigs.

Strange characters dominate '88 films

By JOHN HORN

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Uncommon characters surviving strange circumstances dominated 1988's movie season, as "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," "Coming to America" and "Big" emerged as the year's highest-grossing films.

An inventive hybrid of animated and live-action characters fighting bad guys in mythical Toontown, "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" grossed $150 million to finish at No. 1, according to figures released last week by Exhibitor Relations Co.

The Disney comedy was followed by Eddie Murphy's "Coming to America," the tale of an African prince on his own in New York, which netted $128.1 million. The No. 3 movie, with revenue of $112 million, was "Big," Tom Hanks' portrayal of a boy trapped in a man's body.

Although six comedies were in the Top 10, two action-adventures — "Die Hard" and "Rambo III" — also enjoyed brisk business, finishing near the top of the heap.

Box-office receipts for 1988's top three titles were down from 1987, as no film surpassed the $150 million mark. A year ago, three films — "Three Men and a Baby," "Fatal Attraction" and "Beverly Hills Cop II" — all collected more than $150 million.

Meanwhile, the holiday film season was down more than $5 million from a year ago. Grosses from Nov. 29 to Jan. 4 were $564 million, off from $569.8 million during the corresponding weeks in 1987. The last two weeks of 1988, with revenue of $221.6 million, were off from the same period in 1987, with revenue of $257.8 million.

"Scrooged," "Twins" and "The Naked Gun," three popular Christmas comedies, missed making the Top 10, finishing in 11th, 15th and 18th place, respectively.

The list includes films released in the 1988 calendar year only. Box-office receipts for 1988 ended on Dec. 29, the last full week of the year.

1. "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," a Disney film directed by Robert Zemeckis and starring Bob Hoskins and a host of animated characters. $150 million.

2. "Coming to America," a Paramount film directed by John Landis and starring Eddie Murphy and Arsenio Hall. $128.1 million.

3. "Big," a 20th Century Fox film directed by Penny Marshall and starring Tom Hanks and Elizabeth Perkins. $112 million.

4. "'Crocodile' Dundee II," a Paramount picture directed by John Cornell and starring Paul Hogan and Linda Kozlowski. $109.2 million.

5. "Die Hard," a 20th Century Fox film directed by John McTiernan and starring Bruce Willis and Alan Rickman. $79.7 million.

6. "Cocktail," a Disney film directed by Roger Donaldson and starring Tom Cruise and Bryan Brown. $76.8 million.

7. "Beetlejuice," a Warner Bros. release directed by Tim Burton and starring Michael Keaton and Geena Davis. $73.3 million.

8. "A Fish Called Wanda," an MGM/UA film directed by Charles Crichton and starring John Cleese, Jamie Lee Curtis and Kevin Kline. $60 million.

9. "Willow," an MGM/UA film directed by Ron Howard and starring Val Kilmer and Joanne Whalley. $55.8 million.

10. "Rambo III," a Tri-Star release directed by Peter Macdonald and starring Sylvester Stallone and Richard Crenna. $53.7 million.

Like mother, like daughter

Carol Burnett and her daughter, actress Carrie Hamilton, joke on the set of the made-for-TV movie they're filming in Toronto. "Hostage," a tale of a lonely widow, Ms. Burnett, kidnapped by a desperate teen-age fugitive, played by Ms. Hamilton, is scheduled for broadcast on CBS.

Company to stage play about Paddington bear

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Kaleidoscope Company of the Permian Playhouse opened its third production this season, "The Adventures of a Bear Called Paddington" Saturday at the Permian Playhouse, 310 W. 42nd St. The production will be onstage at 2:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday through Jan. 23.

The proper title might be the "misadventures" of this truly unique, naive bear found at the London Paddington railway station.

The role of Paddington will be played by newcomer Laura Barnes. The Brown family who befriends Paddington is composed of Ray Edwards, Mr. Brown; Miquela Hamilton, Mrs. Brown; Terri Clay, Judy Brown; Charles Clay, Jonathan Brown; and Rachael Beesinger, Mrs. Bird, the family maid. The effects of this bear on the Brown family is comical to say the least.

The Kaleidoscope Company in producing "Paddington" is helping celebrate the the 30th anniversary of Paddington Bear.

Michael Bond, a cameraman on the way home from his job missed a bus on Christmas Eve in 1957. Rather than wait outside for the next bus, he ducked into a London department store. That's where he saw him: the last teddy bear sitting on a shelf in the toy department. Bond impulsively bought him as a "stocking stuffer" for his wife.

They named him Paddington, because they lived near the London Underground's Paddington station, and quickly he became a part of the family. Bond's father-in-law made him a bed; his wife, Brenda, sewed him a duffle coat. "He sat on the mantle piece, and we'd say 'Hello, Paddington,' when we came in the room."

Several months later, Bond, a struggling writer, sat down at his typewriter and began a story about Paddington. He had never written a children's story; however within eight days Bond had hammered out an entire book about Paddington.

Rounding out the cast is Shonna Shafer as the kid, Mrs. Gruber; Jack Mabry as the grouch Mr. Curry; Adileta Lopez, Liz Matthews, Erika Admae, Johnny Blue, and Russell Tatum.

The technical crews are headed by Melissa Goodwin, Stage Manager; Tommoy White, Set Construction/Running Crew; Lighting, Jimmie Matthews; Percussionist, Toby Lopez; Properties, Christina Porras; Costumes Design and Construction Martha Shafer, Liz Atkinson and the Cast; and Make-Up, Amanda Thiebaud.

Kids of all ages are invited to come and help Paddington celebrate his 30th birthday. A drawing will be held each performance for a special Paddington Bear toy to be given away.

NEW YORK (AP) — In addition to regular medical check-ups, have you considered undergoing a legal check-up?

According to attorney Armond Budish in Family Circle magazine, there are nine categories covering the most common legal ailments: divorce; home purchase-sale; employment; physical injury; bankruptcy; wills; power of attorney; Medicaid, and taxes. What many don't realize, he says, is that even the friendliest divorce or the simplest real estate transaction could contain pitfalls that could lead to years of litigation if an attorney is not protecting your rights.

Senator given opener to get out of can

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — It was not the type of ceremonial presentation that a governor makes every day, but it wasn't in recognition of the kind of senatorial circumstance that arises every day, either.

Gov. Kay Orr made a special trip from her second-floor office one day last week to call Sen. Jim McFarland from an Education Committee and present him with a can opener, bedecked with a big ribbon, "in case you ever find yourself locked in the can again."

McFarland somehow managed to break a dead-bolt lock on the door of a small bathroom on the Capitol's eighth floor recently. He was there for nearly an hour before maintenance workers got clearance to take the door apart and let him out.

"I heard that you had had some difficulty and thought this might be of some value to you if this unfortunate type of thing happens again," Mrs. Orr said.

NBC places first for 29th week in row

By KATHRYN BAKER

NEW YORK (AP) — Here's how NBC analyst Gerald Jaffe watches football:

"I'm sitting there watching the game and when that fourth quarter started, I'm thinking, we're looking at a 7:25 (p.m.) finish, and there goes the week for us."

But the San Francisco 49ers wrapped up a 28-3 victory over the Chicago Bears in the NFC championship. Jaffe was relieved, not because he's a 49ers fan, but because the high-rated game ended early enough to keep CBS from edging NBC for the victory the weekly A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings.

NBC won the week, its 29th in a row, by a tenth of a rating point over CBS, 15.5 to 15.4. It was CBS' highest average rating since March 1987. ABC had a 12.8.

CBS also got help from Monday night football — but on the other two networks. ABC and NBC split the audience with competing college bowl games.

"When you have two bowl games head to head, and the competition appeals to a different audience, they're going to get a big number," said Jaffe.

CBS won the new ratings race decisively, thanks to pre-emptions on NBC and ABC for football last Monday. The "CBS Evening News" had a rating of 13.5 and a 23 share. "ABC World News Tonight" had a 12.3 and 21. "NBC Nightly News" had an 11.6 and 20.

Sajak had a rating of 7.0 and a 25 share for the hour it was opposite "Tonight," which had a 6.1 and 18 share. For the entire 90 minutes, Sajak had a 6.7 and 25. Sajak also competes against the first half of "Late Night with David Letterman," but Letterman was a repeat Monday night. Sajak went up against a Carson rerun Tuesday, and Carson was to return in a new show Wednesday night.

Michael Eisenberg, CBS vice president for national research, said Sajak increased CBS' rating in the 90-minute time period by 64 percent. CBS had previously run reruns and low-budget original dramas in the time period.

In prime time, "The Cosby Show" returned to first place last week with a 28.6 rating and 43 share. The rest of the top 10 were: "NFL Championship Post-Game," CBS; "60 Minutes," CBS; "Cheers," NBC; "Murder, She Wrote," CBS; "A Different World," NBC; "Roseanne," ABC; "Golden Girls," NBC; "Empty Nest," NBC; and "Who's the Boss?" ABC.

The lowest-rated prime-time shows of the week were: "Scarface," "Oh, God, You Devil," "Mission Impossible," "Sugar Bowl," "West 57th," "Tattinger's," "TV 101," "HeartBeat," "Dirty Dancing" and "Knightwatch."

In theory, a combined total of 26 points should produce game at no trump. One would think, therefore, that with 29 points distributed more or less evenly between the two hands, nine tricks would be a breeze. But see what can happen when declarer fails to take the proper precautions.

North checked for a possible 4-4 major fit with the Stayman Convention. When South denied holding a major suit, three no trump was the obvious contract.

West led his fourth-best spade. Dummy's queen won and declarer cashed the ace of diamonds—he needed to set up the suit to make his contract, and he was prepared to surrender a trick to West; he was trying to guard against the faint possibility of a singleton king with East. East won the diamond continuation and pushed a spade through declarer's king. West took five spade tricks to complete a two-trick set.

As is often the case, declarer lost his contract at trick one. While he could do nothing about a 5-3 spade division, he could protect himself if West held six spades, via a line superior to trying to drop a singleton king of diamonds.

All declarer had to do was play a low spade from both hands to the first trick. Whether or not West wins the spade continuation is immaterial, as the cards lie. Declarer wins any return, comes to hand and takes the diamond finesse. When East wins the king he has no spade to return, and the contract is home.

Radio station changes sexy call letters

They turned to the NFL's Chicago Bears in changing the call letters to WCBR last week.

The station, northwest of Chicago, won a battle with the Federal Communications Commission in 1983 to change from WTCO to WSEX.

"The WSEX name instantly put us on the map," station manager Michael Krafcisin said. "But we got as much mileage as we could from the name, and we wanted to capture something that was warm and fuzzy."

Something down there will scare the hell out of you.

The Kansas City Museum in Kansas City, Mo., housed in the mansion of a frontier labor baron, tells the story of the adventures to settle the Old West.

Museums tell story of Old West

By NEIL MORGAN
Copley News Service

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As a Californian at the Kansas City Museum, wandering through rooms vibrant with the tension and terror of the great trek west, I began to sense what it was like here at the head of the trails that led to the Pacific.

So I asked the flashing-eyed woman at my side why the Gateway Arch, that noble symbol of the westward migration, rises above the Mississippi River at St. Louis, 250 miles to the east, when the pioneer trails — the Santa Fe, the California and the Oregon — had begun here on the banks of the Missouri.

Her eyes sparked again, this time with humor. Her name is Jean Svadlenak, and she is president of the museum.

In Kansas City we think of St. Louis as the end of the East," she said. "Kansas City is the beginning of the West."

And so it seemed to me, during a weekend spent in pursuit of what remains for a visitor to learn of those riotous, sometimes heroic years that shaped our land.

Jean Svadlenak and others have helped to preserve and unlock in Kansas City some admirable symbols of those years. The tedious fight to save and restore historic places is being won here. Like older cities, Kansas City learns that history can pay off in tourist dollars. John Wayne films are not the only way to learn about the Old West.

So far the fledgling Kansas City Museum has been housed in the mansion of a frontier lumber baron, a site where only 2 percent of its artifacts can be seen.

Alexander Majors House. Built in 1856 along the Kansas-Missouri state line, this 1856 farmhouse was the first headquarters of the extraordinary freighting firm, Russell Majors Waddell, which at one time moved 40,000 oxen and 3,400 wagons in caravans along the Santa Fe Trail to California. His firm founded and operated the Pony Express.

Harris-Kearney House. An 1855 brick mansion in Westport, near the start of the Santa Fe, California and Oregon trails, restored as a symbol of the heyday of migration from 1821 until the completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1869. Westport, now part of Kansas City, was an outfitting center for westbound wagon trains.

John Wornall House. During the Civil War battle of Westport in 1864, both armies used this fine farmhouse as a field hospital. Close to the marvelous Country Club Plaza, it has been restored. In the parlor, Bruce Prince-Joseph, a Kansas Citian who was pianist with the New York Philharmonic, plays a grand piano that he rebuilt. Director Ann Kenyon bustles about, leading tours and tastes at the herb garden and in the kitchen, where gingerbread cookies are baked on hot coals.

Not far away: the Shawnee Mission where Methodists doggedly sought to teach Indian children until 1862; the Army's Fort Leavenworth, and Fort Osage, the first trading post.

At such sites it becomes easier to understand the overwhelming urge to wester that shaped our nation and positioned it to become the envy of the world.

Santa Fe called most appealing city in nation

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

A few years ago, Esquire magazine published an article about a subject that most of us who travel for a living know well. The magazine piece argued that Santa Fe is the most appealing city in our country and the single best place to live or vacation. Our secret was out! We worried that our beloved Santa Fe would quadruple in size with high-rise hotels encircling the historic plaza. Happily, our worst nightmares never transpired.

Benevolent city planners and preservationists will never allow this dreamlike capital that rests on a northern New Mexico plateau to become just another modern functional and charmless city. A recent visit has verified that the city has experienced an increase in vacationers over the past few years, but Santa Fe is never crowded or chaotic. It merely appeals to all the senses as it has for the past 378 years since its founding.

While there are delightful inns and hotels throughout the Santa Fe area, we were particularly taken with the Sheraton Inn that is located about two miles north of the plaza. Although part of a worldwide chain of hotels, this Sheraton is unique, with its authentic Spanish architecture, its beautiful, spacious grounds and the consistently excellent food in its lovely Mariposa Restaurant.

But hotels are all about the people who work there, and the staff at the Sheraton Inn truly is phenomenal. Bettie Ditto, one of the hotel's managing partners, seems to inspire her employees to go out of their way to please the guests.

Case in point: Our rental car had broken down just as we arrived at an important meeting across town. Knowing that we had only a short time before having to drive to Albuquerque to catch our plane for home, we telephoned the Sheraton. A bellman came over, replaced the ailing car with a new one and, without missing a beat, we were able to make our plane on time. Not many American hotels "go this extra distance" on behalf of their clients.

Although well-known for its opera, cuisine, chamber music festival, art galleries and museums, Santa Fe also happens to be a shopper's paradise. The following stores are among our favorites.

ARTESANOS
(222 Galisteo St.)

Here is where you can buy the distinctive Talavera tile to decorate your home, as well as the functional Saltillo floor tile. They also sell custom-made lamps and fixtures and wonderful furniture made of pigskin.

CRAZY FOX BOUTIQUE
(227 Don Gaspar)

The best place to find the top clothing of such popular designers as Karen Alexander, Jane Tise and Foxy Lady. Best of all, the prices are just above wholesale. Allow some time to browse through this fabulous outlet store.

TOM TAYLOR'S BELTS, BUCKLES AND BOOTS
(108 San Francisco St.)

The store's name says it all. Gigantic selection of handmade boots, as well as lovely sculptured sterling-silver buckles designed by Jean Taylor. Some of the belts made of ostrich, alligator and other exotic leathers are breathtaking.

A MANO
(822 Canyon Road)

All kinds of house accessories and decorative pieces are here, and they're all handmade. Bronze and aluminum objects from Spain, silver and wood from Italy, stone and clay from Mexico are just some of the unique items to browse for.

KACHINA HOUSE
(236 Delgado Road)

If you want to buy an authentic Hopi Indian Kachina doll, you should look here first because the selection is incomparable. There also is a vast selection of Navajo pottery, sculpture and jewelry.

NANCY BLOCH DESIGN
(725-C Canyon Road)

She does her own weaving for most of the clothing shown. The women's line is outstanding, as are the items in suede. We also were impressed with the hand-painted furniture, lamps and the decorative dolls.

DAVID BRIGHTON, ENGRAVER
(702 Canyon Road)

CHRIS O'CONNELL, SPIDER WOMAN DESIGNS
(225 Canyon Road)

Her nickname for her label is quite apt since O'Connell is one of the area's most prolific and talented weavers. You can buy just her handwoven textiles or the ready-to-wear hand-woven clothing. There also are some gorgeous decorative accessories. A lingering visit is almost mandatory.

NAMBE SHOWROOMS
(924 Paseo De Peralta)

Many famous New Mexican potters show their hand-thrown works here. Wonderful lamps, tableware and serving ware. Besides the traditional Southwestern designs, we also liked the contemporary handcrafts.
