Thirty persons killed by Beirut car bomb

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — At least 30 people were killed and 90 were wounded today when a bomb-laden car exploded during rush hour at an intersection in a densely-populated residential suburb of Christian east Beirut, police said.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio station appealed for blood donors to help hospitals cope with what it called a "catastrophic massacre" in the fashionable, pine-wooded suburb of Sin El-Fil..

A three-month-old girl was found lying on the sidewalk, cut by flying glass, after her mother was blown to pieces, witnesses reported.Several school children were wounded in a bus more than 500 yards from the blast.

Firefighters and ambulance crews were still struggling two hours after the blast to rescue people trapped in wrecked cars and buildings.

Huge pillars of black smoke rose above the area, with more than 50 cars set ablaze by the explosion, according to witnesses and the radio station.

The blast occurred at 2 p.m., when students and employees return home at the end of the day's work.Witnesses said the car exploded in an intersection where cars were caught in a traffic jam.

The radio station said the car could have been rigged with up to 440 pounds of explosives, judging from the tremor caused by the blast.

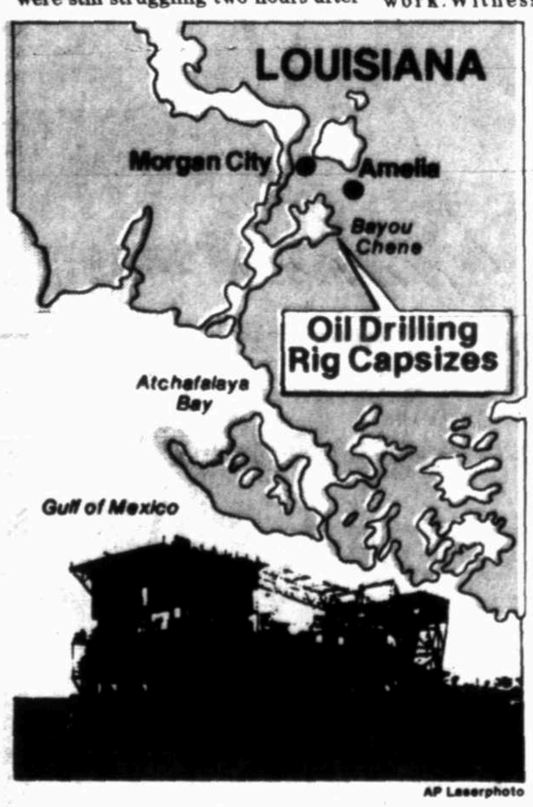

The target of the bombing was not immediately clear. There are no militia offices in the area.

It was the second such bombing in Beirut in less than a week. Last Friday a car bomb exploded outside a militia office of the Druse sect of Islam in west Beirut, wounding eight people.

It also was the worst bombing in Beirut since a bomb-laden car exploded in early March outside the home of Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, the spiritual guide of Lebanon's Shiite Moslem community.

Capsized rig site searched

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — Divers returned today to the dark, flooded interior of an oil drilling rig that capsized in a remote bayou to search for five men feared drowned in the accident that killed six others.

Federal investigators were sent to find out why the platform turned over and sank while being towed through the murky bayou. Eleven people survived.

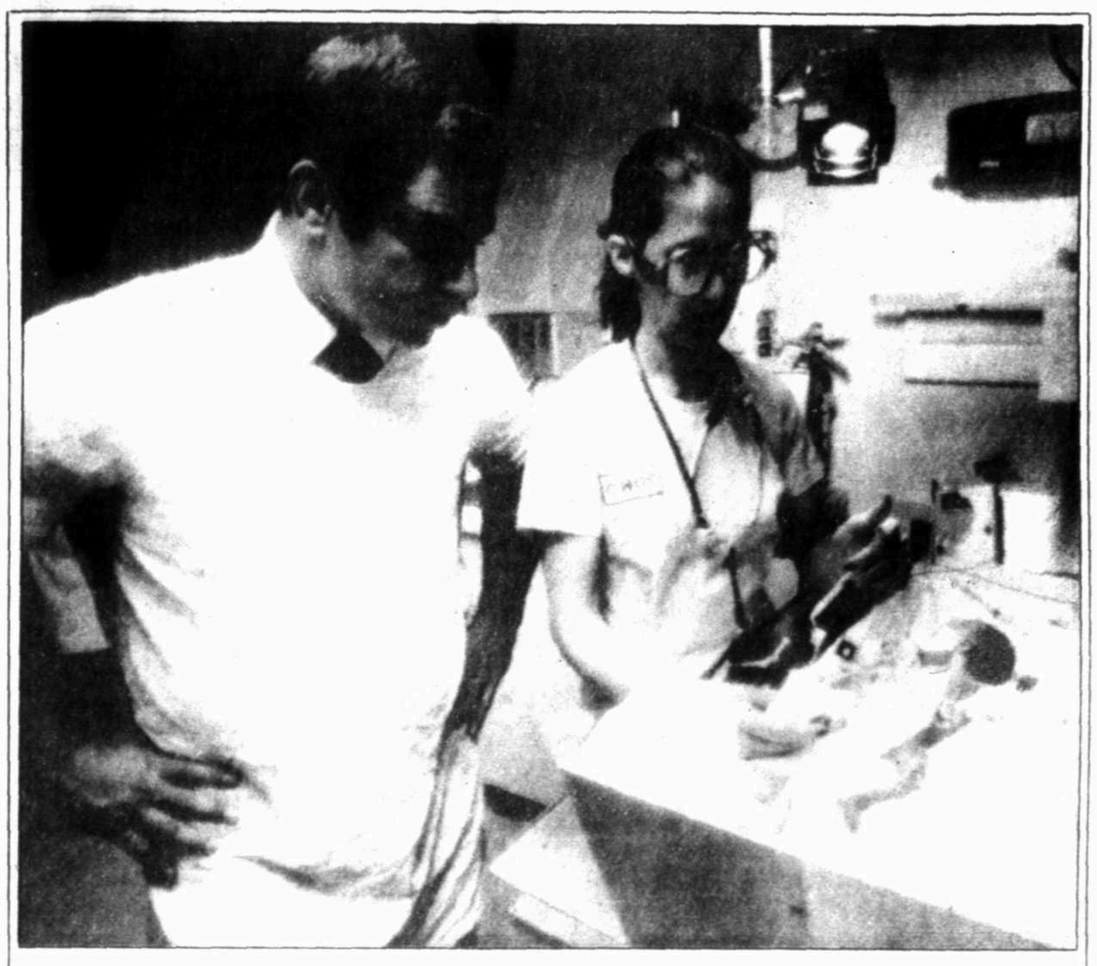

The search for bodies aboard the capsized rig, known as the Tonkawa, was suspended late Tuesday and resumed at 7 a.m. today, said Keith Spangler, a Coast Guard spokesman in New Orleans.

Spangler said the search was being expanded from the immediate area of the overturned rig.

"The search was expanded based upon what the divers accomplished yesterday and where the owners believe the people may have been at the time of the incident, based on what their job description was on the barge," said Spangler. "Three people are believed to be still on the barge and two people may be in the water."

Divers found one body inside the rig shortly after they began their search and others later as they explored crew's quarters and work rooms.

"The outlook is not very good for survivors. Two of the three decks are under water. Very little of the vessel is exposed," said Keith Simon of Acadian Ambulance Service.

Six septuplets surviving

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

ORANGE, Calif. — The exhausted parents of premature septuplets cradled their stillborn baby girl and prayed for their six surviving infants as doctors closely watched the newborns for any sign of trouble.

Doctors said the 72 hours following the multiple birth Tuesday would be the most critical period for the four boys and two girls.

The tiny infants — weighing from 1 pound, 1 ounce to 1 pound, 13 ounces — were listed in critical but stable condition in intensive care. Their mother, who had taken the fertility drug Pergonal, delivered them in her 28th week of pregnancy, 12 weeks early.

"We're not out of the woods. We encourage people to continue to be prayerful," said Samuel Frustaci, 32, an industrial equipment salesman whose wife, Patricia, 30, a high school English teacher, delivered the babies by Caesarean section.

"They have been remarkably stable over the past 24 hours and we see that as a good sign," said Dr. Carrie Worcester, a neonatologist at Children's Hospital of Orange County, where the six infants were taken after their birth at the adjacent St. Joseph Hospital.

"The major problem for the next few days is their severe hyaline membrane disease, and that's an immaturity in the lungs of these pre-term babies," Ms. Worcester said today on the ABC program "Good Morning America."

"We have to take each hour at a time with these babies, but they really are very active and they're holding their own quite well," she said.

More showers possible; Farmers still foresee delays

From Staff Reports

Although the National Weather Service is predicting the possibility of more thunderstorms following this morning's showers, the month of May has been a dry one for area farmers, causing many to delay their spring planting.

"It's still awfully spotted in the area," said Hoot Leonard, manager of the Midland Farmer's Co-op. "East of town, the farmers are in pretty good shape where they've recieved as much as two inches of rain in some areas."

"Northeast also is in pretty good shape around Wallace's store," he said.

Other areas have not been so fortunate, according to Leonard.

"South of town is still too dry to plant and up north there is a dry area near the old Pinkie's store," he said. "We have about three more weeks to plant. We like to plant by the first part of June."

This year has been drier than prior years, according to Newt Locklar, a cotton farmer on Cottonflat Road south of Midland.

"We've got to have some rain before we can plant," he said. "I don't know of anyone getting much rain. It's dry - plenty dry."

The National Weather Service stated that despite a wet April and soaking by thunderstorms over the past two days, the amount of rainfall is below the average for the year to date.

"The normal amount of precipitation for the beginning of the year through May is 4.4 inches," said Don Oettinger of the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal. "We've only received 2.54 inches so far. We still need almost two inches to get the normal amount."

The average rainfall for the month of May is 2.05 inches, according to Oettinger, but to date, May has received only 00.27 inches of rain.

"It varies in different areas," he said. "We received 0.01 of an inch yesterday, but have had reports of up to three-fourths of an inch."

Although the outlook does not sound promising for area farmers, Oettinger states that there is hope.

"This is the time of the year for thunderstorms and one good one can dump a couple of inches of rain," he said. "We can still make it up pretty well."

More thunderstorms are likely in the next week, he predicted.

Tonight's weather forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, said Oettinger, with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low will be in the mid 50s with winds out of the northeast at five to 15 mph.

Thursday will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and winds from the east at five to 15 mph. The high will be in the upper 70s.

The record high for this date was 105 degrees set in 1953. The record low was 48 degrees in 1931.

Lubbock man arrested in wife's death

LUBBOCK (AP) — A report of a man throwing something off a cliff led police to arrest an elementary school teacher on charges he dismembered his wife's body with a handsaw, authorities say.

Arthur Lee MacLeod, 36, was jailed in lieu of $350,000 bond on charges stemming from the death of his wife, Evelyne, 35, whose head and hands were found buried in his back yard.

Ben Miller, of Fluvanna, told police he wrote down a license plate number belonging to a man who threw a bundle off a cliff Tuesday morning more than 50 miles south of Lubbock.

Garza County Chief Deputy Billy Pimms said he found Mrs. MacLeod's fully clothed torso wedged against a tree at the bottom of the short, steep cliff.

MacLeod was later arrested at his home.

Annapolis address touches on defense

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — President Reagan, battling congressional demands for deeper cuts in the Pentagon budget, gave a rousing send-off to the graduates at the U.S. Naval Academy today and warned them "it is too costly for America not to be prepared."

Reagan, speaking at the academy's commencement exercises, put in a plug for strong defense systems and the need for top-notch leadership in the nation's military as vital elements of national security.

The president warned the graduates that they will have to guard, as he has, against attempts to clip military expenditures.

"You will hear during your career ...that maintaining the military at peak readiness, keeping our forces trained and supplied with the best weapons and equipment, is too costly," Reagan said. "I say it is too costly for America not to be prepared."

"It is strength, not weakness, resolve, not vacillation, that will keep the peace," the president told the class of 1,032 at the prestigious service academy.

The president told the graduates that "many good men" gave their lives in World War II because of "America's unwillingness to prepare in the 1930s."

He vowed: "Let me promise you, as long as I am president, that will not happen again."

Reagan argued that U.S. military might has been "an immensely positive force in the world" and that many nations in Europe "owe their freedom...to the protection of the United States military."

The president warned the graduates that the Soviet Union has "raced forward with the largest peacetime military expansion in history."

His administration has attempted to combat that by funding "top-of-the-line weapons systems," building a 600-ship Navy by the end of the decade and cutting out waste.

White considers pair of drinking age bills

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White now has two ways to raise the drinking age to 21 — a pair of bills approved by lawmakers and sent to his desk.

The House on Tuesday wrapped up work on a measure that does nothing but raise the age from 19 to 21, effective Sept. 1, 1986. Last week, the House sent White a separate bill that was amended to add the drinking age hike.

That bill also includes a section allowing increased DWI penalties in cases where the offender was drinking while driving.

"The governor has the choice of signing either or both," said Rep. Gary Thompson, D-Abilene, sponsor of the drinking-age-only bill.

The House on Tuesday also sent White a measure extending the wiretap law through 1993. The House approved and sent to the Senate a measure allowing prosecution of rape cases in which the attacker is married to the victim.

The drinking age hike was sparked by a federal threat to cut highway funds to states with a drinking age under 21. Both drinking-age measures sent to White would self-destruct if a federal appeals court knocks down the federal mandate to raise the age.

Texas could lose $100 million in federal highway funds if it does not raise the legal age.

Thompson said the bill would never have reached the House floor if not for the federal threat, a threat he does not appreciate.

"I don't like federal mandates. But I would have sponsored this bill if there had been no federal mandate," he said. "It would have been my preference even if we had done it for the right reason, but I think thet net result is it's going to save lives. So when we do it for the wrong reasons we're still one up."

Future efforts to bring the drinking age back down to 18 or 19 probably would fail, according to Thompson.

Rumors, horror stories abound as China adapts to one-child rule

KUNMING, China (AP) — The public notice on Qingyun Street told the story of a 6-year-old girl who poisoned her mother because she wouldn't buy her ice cream, only to be strangled by her father who then hanged himself.

"Too much spoiling caused a tragedy," the notice began. The people who stopped spoke to foreign reporters about it as a consequence of their government's one-child birth control policy.

It was a rare, freewheeling street-side discussion and touched on forced abortion, infanticide and spoiled single children.

The notice from the neighborhood committee gave what it called a true account of something that happened in Shandong province, halfway across China from this flower-strewn southwest city of 2 million:

The young couple loved their 6-year-old daughter too much and often spoiled her. One day when the girl wanted ice cream, her mother said she was too busy to buy it.

That evening, the girl poisoned her mother's dinner and she died.

When the father got home and saw what happened, he strangled his daughter and hanged himself.

"There has been no such tragedy here, but we want to prevent such a thing happening," said Lu Guiying, 64, a member of the neighborhood committee, a grass-roots social welfare agency.

"It is a general problem now that many families have only one child," she said.

The one-child policy is strictly enforced in Kunming, Mrs. Lu said, and those who have a second are fined $350 to $700, the equivalent of one to two years' salary.

The second baby is born with no urban residence permit or ration coupons and his parents can be demoted at work.

The government adopted the one-child rule in 1980 to limit the population, now at 1.03 billion, to 1.2 billion by the year 2000. The natural growth rate declined from 1.33 percent in 1981 to 1.08 percent last year, approaching the target of less than 1 percent.

Zuo Longxing, his 1-year-old son mounted on the handlebars of his bike, told reporters he wants a second child but cannot afford it on his monthly $25 driver's salary.

Asked if he approved of the one-child policy, Zuo, 34, said: "It is harsh." But he added: "There is nothing we can do."

He said population control is right in principle, but, "It is a good thing for a child to grow up with brothers and sisters. Otherwise, they will be lonely." He said he spoiled his own son.

Zuo and others who had gathered around said authorities force women to have abortions as late as seven or eight months into a pregnancy.

Work units, trade unions and the local women's federation pressure couples to abide by the national policy. If their advice is ignored, they force women to have abortions, Zuo said.

"Some people just hide away but after they give birth to the child and return to their work units, they usually get demoted and fined," he added.

Some offenders are given only $7 a month to live on until the fine is paid.

The Reagan administration in March withheld $10 million from the United Nations fund for population activities because of concern that the money was financing abortions in China.

The government in Peking denies a forced-abortion policy. But some foreign studies report local officials get cash awards for enforcing low birthrates, sometimes by coercing women to undergo abortions.

Kunming residents nodded yes when asked about reports — confirmed by the government — that some Chinese murder their baby girls so they can try for a son, the traditional preference.

Most cases are in the northern part of China, the group agreed, and those found guilty of infanticide receive sentences ranging from 10 years to the death penalty.

Nanning radio in the neighboring Guangxi Zhuang autonomous region reported April 19 on a crackdown on those who "drown infants" or interfere with contraceptive practices.

The government reports a disproportionate number of male babies in some localities, indicating female infanticide. But it has not released figures on the number of female babies lost.

Premier Zhao Ziyang has denounced the "feudal attitude" of wanting sons to carry on the family name, help in the fields and support parents in their old age.

In the Kunming street gathering, those who most strongly defended the one-child policy admitted they already had two children before the controls were adopted.

Guangxi has the country's worst birth control record, reflecting its ethnic minorities who are exempt from the one-child rule. Its 1.6 percent growth rate last year was China's highest with 240,000 women bearing a third or fourth child.

At Sanjiacun near Simao in southern Yunnan, county chief Li Ziyong told reporters that of 618 local families, only nine have one child. There is no penalty for a second, he said, indicating the government is willing to be lenient in some rural areas.

Even for a third child, Li said, the fine is just $35 — a relatively affordable sum in a district where per capita income is $206 a year.

Fighting continues in hills of Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Fighting between Palestinians and Moslem militiamen raged today in the hills surrounding the capital and a car bomb exploded during rush hour in a fashionable Christian sector of the city, killing 80 people and wounding more than 110, police said.

East of the capital, Palestinian gunners used long-range missiles for the first time in three days of fighting and blunted a Shiite Moslem assault on an embattled Palestinian refugee camp.

The barrage of rockets fired at noon was followed by a massive artillery bombardment in the afternoon.Grey clouds of smoke billowed above the shelled residential neighborhoods of Dahieh, Sultan Ibrahim, Jnah and Aouzai on Beirut's southern fringe.

Nabih Berri, leader of the Shiite Amal militia, said in a statement the bombardment came from Palestinian gun positions in the central mountains east of the city.

He said the area was controlled by "a certain Palestinian organization." He did not name the group, butBerri appeared to be exonerating his civil war ally, Druse chieftain Walid Jumblatt, and the Syrian army of responsibility.

Jumblatt's militia and Syrian troops control the central mountains. But they have long allowed Palestinian groups opposed to PLO chairman Yasser Arafat to set up gun positions there.

Police say at least 121 people and 680 others have been wounded in the three days of battle.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said the bomb-laden car was parked at an intersection in the wooded suburb of Sin el-Fil, in east Beirut. The radios station reported more than 50 cars were set ablaze by the blast as the vehicles were caught in a traffic jam.

The radio appealed for blood donors to help hospitals cope with the "catastrophic massacre." Firefighters and ambulance crews struggled to rescue people trapped in wrecked cars and buildings.

In west Beirut, Associated Press correspondent Ed Blanche saw one salvo of missiles crash at the entrance to the Chatilla refugee camp as Shiite Moslems of the Amal militia assaulted a Palestinian fortification near the camp gate.

The attackers were advancing on the camp on foot with cover of antiaircraft and recoilless rifle fire when the incoming salvo struck. They immediately retreated.

"This was just a message," said a senior Palestinian source who declined to be identified. "If they try to thrust against the camps, we shall hit harder." However, another guerrilla spokesman denied Palestinian gun positions hit west Beirut.

It appeared from the timing of the barrage that defenders had radioed a requested for artillery help.

Another salvo hit a coastal road in the Shiite neighborhood of Ouzai, gutting at least six cars.

Time magazine photographer William Foley said he saw one passenger leaping out of a car in flames, and another lying in flames on the side of the street. Three other rockets exploded within yards of Amal's al-Zahraa Hospital. Three scored direct hits on houses, and Amal officials said a family of five was wiped out in one of the houses.

The hospital administrator, who spoke on condition he not be identified, told the AP that patients were evacuated from upper floors. Most of them were casualties from the two previous days of fighting.

State radio said the rockets came from Palestinian positions in Bhamdoun, Mansourieh and Kakhashtai, a string of shell-shattered summer resort towns near Beirut.

Today's fighting broke a cease-fire mediated by pro-Palestinian Shiite leader Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah.

A spokesman said the Palestinians were holding their own. "Our fighters are holding fast in the three camps. We have lost no significant ground. At some points, we have improved our positions," he said.

He said six wounded Palestinians bled to death Tuesday at Bourj el-Barajneh camp, near the site of the former U.S. Marine base at the Beiruit airport, because they were unable to get medical care. Civilians were in "dire need of blankets, food and medical supplies," he said.

There was no sign that Red Cross ambulances or medical teams were reaching the camps today.

The fighting was preceded by three weeks of tension between the Shiites and the Palestinians, most of whom are Sunni Moslems. Amal, Lebanon's largest Shiite militia, is trying to stop the Palestinians from rebuilding the power base they lost when Israel invaded in 1982. Palestinian leaders since have boasted that many have filtered back into Beirut.

Reagan's desk-slapping emphasis creates interest

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — A moment of desk pounding by President Reagan became a big issue around the White House even though the president joked that all he was trying to do was swat a fly.

It started when the two Republican leaders of Congress, Robert Dole of the Senate and Robert Michel of the House, were briefing reporters on their meeting with the president Tuesday.

They said much of the meeting dealt with U.S. policy in Nicaragua.

Dole said Reagan "made a very firm statement" about the frustration of conducting foreign policy in the face of congressional attempts to tie his hands.

Michel said the president not only made a firm statement but "really put his fist down on the table, very audibly."

Reporters wanted to know more.

"What did the president do with his fist?"

"What did he say?"

"Remember his words?"

"What did he do?"

"Well," said Dole, "I can't re-enact it but he...pounded the table. Took off his glasses. Had a firm look on his face and laid it out there."

When the president posed for photographers with visiting Honduran President Roberto Suazo Cordova of Honduras, a reporter asked whether it was true he had been "pounding the table on Nicaragua."

"Oh, just kind of slapped it," he said.

This muddied the waters, because slapping is not the same as hitting with your fist.

"You mean it wasn't a real fist?" somebody asked. The president's answer was not audible.

Reporters returned to the attack when White House spokesman Larry Speakes held his daily briefing.

"What were the circumstances under which he started pounding the table?"

"The circumstances is the frustration in being able to get funding through Congress without a myriad of restrictions placed on the executive branch."

"Was somebody challenging him?"

"No. No. He was just making a point ..."

The discussion drifted off for a while onto some policy questions concerning Central America, but soon returned to the point.

"Larry, back on this pounding, was he pounding for emphasis or was he pounding out of anger?"

"I would say it was emphasis."

"How many times did he hit the desk? Just once?"

"I think it was two and a half."

"Did he double up his fist or did he slap the desk with his open hand?"

"Fist."

At departure ceremonies for Suazo, the president was asked again if he had been pounding the table in frustration.

"I was slapping a fly," he said.

Whatever he was doing, Reagan seems to think he made his point.

Reporting what the congressional leaders had said, a reporter told him, "They think you mean business."

"Then I'm happy," the president said.

BABIES

Mrs. Frustaci, still groggy as she recovered from general anesthesia, spent 15 minutes Tuesday afternoon cradling the body of the stillborn girl, who was the last child delivered.

Doctors said Mrs. Frustaci would spend up to three days in intensive care, where she was in good condition, and up to seven days in the hospital.

Her husband, exhausted "just trying to survive the day," said he also cuddled the dead baby earlier and prayed for the other infants.

The newborns were on respirators and were being fed and provided medication intravenously.

Dr. Ragnar Amlie said premature babies weighing less than 2 pounds generally have a 30 percent to 40 percent chance for survival. But Ms. Worcester said: "Every baby has a 50-50 chance, and I think really it's better than that."

Hospital spokesman Doug Wood said the children "will be here for quite some time. It could be as long as three months."

When asked the chances of the six surviving, Frustaci said, "You just hope and pray they will come out all right."

Handling his new sons and daughters "can be a little bit scary," Frustaci said today on "Good Morning America." "I think what happens is that you have to be careful, but we also understand too that the babies like to have a firm touch. They're not as fragile, I guess, as they look."

The surviving babies, designated only as A, B, C, D, E and F, were delivered within three minutes starting at 8:19 a.m. Tuesday. Frustaci said the babies will not be named for at least a couple of days, but their first names probably will start with the letters A through F.

The Frustacis also have a 14-month-old son, Joseph, who also was conceived with the help of Pergonal.

Frustaci joined 40 doctors, nurses, respiratory therapists and other medical personnel in Delivery Room 4 when Dr. Martin Feldman cut into his wife's abdomen and extracted the infants.

The Guinness Book of World Records lists no cases of septuplets all surviving. It mentions three cases in which sextuplets survived, but none was in the United States.

Tax reform among Bentsen's topics

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The average, middle-income American sees no personal gain from proposed "tax reform" as it has been reported in the press and is not likely to push hard for it, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Monday.

"The $25,000-a-year family of four might save $100 on income tax, but could have their rent go up by $300 if real estate tax rules are changed, for example. So where's the gain?" Bentsen asked.

In recent weeks, the senator said he had received 90 letters favoring tax reform and 6,000 against it. Acknowledging that many of the anti-reform letters came from organized campaigns, he said, "They count, too."

In a wide-ranging interview at breakfast with reporters for national newspapers, Bentsen said it is important to retain oil producers' tax allowance for intangible drilling costs.

"It would ridiculous not to write off costs of a dry hole," Bentsen said.

Oil exploration should be encouraged "as a national security issue," the Texas senator said. "If you don't have it, you have a situation where you're increasingly dependent on the Middle East oil cartel. If they had the muscle they would do it to us again, in a minute," said Bentsen, referring to the mid-70's Arab oil embargo against the United States.

As evidence the oil field tax break is necessary, Bentsen cited a "precipitous decline" in the number of rigs in the field from 4,500 two years ago to approximately 2,000 now.

Asked if his position on tax deductions for the oil industry causes a "political problem" for tax reform, in that it looks like "special interest" favoritism, Bentsen said that problem arises on many other issues as well, including the treatment of capital gains. "Tax reform will not be easy," he said.

Asked to say where he would bring about reform of the tax code, if not in oil production or capital gains, Bentsen said he would go after a variety of tax shelters and would impose a minimum tax on corporations and wealthy individuals who presently use legal deductions to reduce their tax bill to zero.

President Reagan is expected to reveal details of his tax overhaul plan on May 28. Bentsen said he believes it will ask that federal tax deductions for state and local taxes will be a part of it. "That is a highly controversial issue...but they overestimated how much revenue they would be receiving (under the first draft plan) and they have to give someplace."

Congressional leaders last week complained that delaying release of the President's plan would slow momentum for reform of the tax code this year.

Earlier it had been expected the administration's proposal would be forwarded to the Capitol this week.

House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said the postponement "saps the cause of tax reform and raises doubt about the President's nerve."

The White House has been counting on Rostenkowski as an important ally in the tax reform fight. His aides last week said Rostenkowski fears he will not have enough time this year to forge consensus on a bill and that the administration could blame him if tax reform fails.

Although details are not final, and administration officials will not talk about it for the record, the President reportedly has agreed to back off the Treasury Department's previous proposals to restrict tax breaks for the oil industry, business investment, charitable contributions and capital gains.

Reform supporters have argued that concessions to "special interests" will make it more difficult for Congress to pass a bill.

The administration's revised plan still is expected to end many current tax breaks and to increase the existing personal exemption of $1,040, possibily to $2,000.

Contra aid compromise 'likely'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, one of the sponsors of a Nicaraguan Contra aid package expected to come up before the Senate today, predicts the compromise proposal will be approved by Congress.

On Tuesday, the proposal won important bipartisan support from Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Richard Lugar, R-Ind.

The House has turned down previous proposals to aid the Contra rebels, who are fighting the socialist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

But Bentsen said with a change in mood in the House since Sandinista leader Daniel Ortega's recent trip to the Soviet Union, the measure he and four other Democrats wrote will be more palatable.

"I think it would pass the Senate and I think there is some change in the thinking in the House and I think it would have an excellent chance of passing there," he said.

"This country sent down $118 million down to the Sandinistas when they first took over in hopes they would do what they said they were going to do — have a Democratic form of government," Bentsen said. "But we found very quickly that wasn't the case."

House bill reconsiders, calls for school bus belts

AUSTIN (AP) — After a couple of changes of heart, the House has sent senators a bill that would require seat belts on new school buses.

The bill won preliminary approval last Friday, was defeated Monday but revived and approved Tuesday in a 76-70 vote. House members heard the same arguments each time. Sponsor Eddie Cavazos, D-Corpus Christi, said seat belts could save lives and prevent injuries.

"Parents of school children want this bill to pass," Cavazos told the House Tuesday.

Rep. Talmadge Heflin, R-Houston, fought the measure as unnecessary.

"All you have heard is an emotional plea," he said after Cavazos won permission to reconsider Monday's vote. Heflin claimed statistics show buses are safe and the belts "would add injuries in many cases."

Under the measure, school districts would have to install seat belts on buses put into service after Jan. 1. The state would pay for the belts, about $16 each.

The first House action on the bill came last Friday, when it was approved 66-52 in a preliminary vote. After a weekend of lobbying from school superintendents who oppose the measure, the House reversed its decision by voting it down 63-71 Monday.

Cavazos said Monday's nay votes came from House members who thought the bill would immediately require seat belts on all school buses.

There are an average of four school bus accidents a day, according to Cavazos. It would take 13 years to wind up with a bus fleet completely equipped with seat belts, he said.

"It surprises me they could sit there and vote against protecting the children when they voted protection for themselves," he said during Monday debate, referring to a bill requiring seat belt use in cars.

REAGAN

"That's why you hear stories about outrageously expensive hammers or bolts," Reagan said. "We're finding the waste and cutting it out."

The president told the graduates that he was proud of their courage and their patriotism. "Be brave," he told them. "As you go forth in your career, the flag will be in your hands. Carry it and yourselves with pride."

The president's remarks came as his plans for increases in military spending have run into a congressional roadblock, with the Republican-run Senate approving a budget plan to slash his Pentagon request and allow only for inflation. A key House committee, meanwhile, has voted to freeze military spending at current levels.

As a gift for the commander in chief, the class presented Reagan with a regulation bathrobe decorated with the stripes of a five-star admiral, according to Ellen Gallagher, the academy's spokeswoman.

"Commander in Chief," has been emblazoned on the back, but inside the president will find the Navy's favorite command — "Beat Army," Ms. Gallagher said.

After the presentation of the gift and several customary cheers, the class ends the ceremony by hurling their white midshipmen's caps high into the air.

Some 18,000 guests were expected to attend the ceremony in the Navy Marine Corps Memorial Stadium. The famed Blue Angels — the Navy's precision flying team — was to perform a fly-over during the event, Ms. Gallagher said.

Reagan spoke at the commencement exercises at West Point in 1981 and at the Air Force Academy in 1984.

The president also planned to take an hour to shake each graduate's hand, something he did last year during the election campaign at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

HOUSE

"It's always easier to play defense in this process that it is to play offense," he said.

The other bill — an amended version of a minor House bill — includes the open container provisions approved as a compromise that failed to satisfy the Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

MADD wants a ban on drinking while driving. The open container section of the bill merely offers stiffer penalties for drinking drivers convicted of DWI.

In a non-record vote, the House concurred with Senate amendments added to the House-approved wiretap bill.

The Legislature in 1981 gave the Department of Public Safety the authority to use electronic eavesdropping in drug cases. DPS must get approval from a state district judge.

The 1981 law expires Sept. 1 unless re-enacted by the Legislature. Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, staged a 12-hour filibuster against the bill last week, giving up after winning some concessions.

Amendments added by the Senate include the provision that sets up legislative review of the wiretap law in 1993. Senators also added an amendment mandating that DPS use covert entry as a last-resort way to install a wiretap.

Revised immigration bill has less civil rights protection

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — A revised immigration bill, scheduled to be introduced Thursday by Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., would provide fewer civil rights protections for Hispanic-Americans and undocumented workers than both the House and Senate informally agreed to last year.

Instead of having several federal agencies closely watched for discrimination that might result from enforcement of the bill, Simpson's new bill calls for just an annual report to Congress by one agency and a review of the reports by another.

Simpson, according to an aide, believes the Republican-controlled Senate will approve his simpler approach.

But initial reaction indicates that Simpson's revisions will face opposition in the Democratic-controlled House.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., a key advocate of civil rights protections during House-Senate negotiations last year, said Tuesday that Simpson's new approach is "plenty of nothing."

Frank, a member of the House Immigration Subcommittee that will draft a competing version later this year, called Simpson's new approach "clearly a mean bill."

"It could never get past the House Judiciary Committee," Frank said.

Ever since Simpson and Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., chairman of the House subcommittee, introduced a joint bill in 1982, Hispanics and civil libertarians contended that aspects of the bill could result in job discrimination.

It was argued that employers, fearful of possibly hiring undocumented aliens in seeming violation of the law, would protect themselves by refusing to hire any Hispanic or foreign-looking workers.

Frank and others also argued that the millions of undocumented aliens who would be eligible to obtain legal residency under the law also would be subject to job discrimination.

House conferees, led by Frank, last year insisted on adding language that would have extended the reach of federal civil rights agencies to monitor and report frequently to Congress on incidents of discrimination.

In the conference last year, Simpson reluctantly agreed in an effort to reach a compromise. But he argued at the time that there would be no reason for law-abiding employers to discriminate because the bill would penalize only employers who knowingly hired undocumented aliens.

Demonstrators protest Palestinian prisoners' release

WORLD

JERUSALEM (AP) — Conservative politicians and hundreds of demonstrators protested the release of convicted murderers and terrorists in a prisoner exchange that could threaten the shaky coalition government.

The Israelis released 1,150 Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners on Monday in exchange for three Israeli soldiers. Seventy-six of the Arabs were convicted of killing Jews, and 91 were found guilty of killing other Arabs or foreigners.

The Jerusalem Post today reported that the Arab prisoners amounted to 11 percent of Israel's prison population.

The army issued an unprecedented criticism of eight Israeli soldiers, including two of the three freed in Monday's swap, for surrendering without a struggle on Sept. 4, 1982. Six were exchanged in November 1983 for 4,600 Arab prisoners.

The army statement said: "Being taken prisoner is only possible in dire and rare circumstances. It's clear now this was not the case" of the eight.

Dorit Rosenfeld, an immigrant from New York City, joined hundreds of Jewish settlers from the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River in a demonstration Tuesday outside Parliament.

"Murder should not be a basis for negotiation," Mrs. Rosenfeld said. Her husband, David, was slain three years ago by one of the prisoners exchanged Monday. "Prisoners of war, that's one thing, but for my husband's murderers to serve only three years, I can't understand it."

The demonstrators demanded pardons for 25 Jews convicted or standing trial in connection with a series of attacks on West Bank Palestinians.

The controversy set the stage for a confrontation between Prime Minister Shimon Peres, head of the Labor Party, and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, the leader of the conservative Likud bloc.

Shamir also called for the release of the 25 Jews, and if he remains adamant the issue could bring down the coalition government in which both Likud and Labor politicians serve.

Commerce and Industry Minister Ariel Sharon, the former defense minister who planned the 1982 Lebanon invasion, told Israel radio Tuesday, "It is unimaginable that after the release of the most terrible murderers...we should keep the Jewish underground prisoners under lock and key."

Sharon also is a Likud member.

Peres has avoided a direct response. His office issued a statement saying "one cannot mix the subject of redemption of (war) prisoners with any other issue."

Army radio said Tuesday that at least 50 of the 120 members of Parliament support pardons for the Jewish underground, although 17 of them are still on trial. Eight have been convicted.

According to the report, the issue provoked a stormy debate during a meeting Tuesday of the Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee.

Sources close to Peres, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said he hoped return of the last Israeli soldiers known to be in Arab hands would help end Israel's involvement in Lebanon at a time when the army is preparing for its final withdrawal.

Especially alarming for many Israelis was the government's agreement to allow 606 of the freed prisoners to remain in Israel or in occupied territories.

Shmuel Goren, chief administrator in the West Bank, said authorities would personally warn each of them and their families against resuming guerrilla activities.

Gorbachev, Gandhi sign agreements

MOSCOW (AP) — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev signed agreements today for economic, scientific and technical cooperation until the year 2000.

The official news agency, Tass, said the two leaders signed the documents at a ceremony in the Kremlin palace that was also attended by Soviet Premier Nikolai Tikhonov, other Soviet leaders and officials accompanying Gandhi on his trip to the Soviet Union.

Last week, India signed agreements with the United States to acquire advanced American non-military technology. Gandhi is to visit Washington next month.

A ceremony was scheduled today to rename a square in Moscow's Lenin Hills for Indira Gandhi, the late Indian prime minister and Rajiv Gandhi's mother.

Gandhi is on his first state visit since he succeeded his mother, who was assassinated Oct. 31.

In addition to the accords on cooperation, agreements also were expected to be signed for Soviet assistance to India in oil, coal, power generation and machine building.

Gandhi was honored at a Kremlin banquet Tuesday night during which Gorbachev proposed that all Asian nations establish a forum on security for the continent patterned after the Helsinki accords.

Gorbachev said security problems in Asia are "in some areas, even more acute and painful than in Europe."

He said Asian nations, including China, should consolidate past proposals toward security and hold a conference similar to the 35-nation East-West conferences that led to the 1975 Helsinki accords on security and cooperation in Europe that also called for the nations to respect human rights.

Gorbachev also said President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, a research program to develop space-based anti-missile systems, will increase the risk of nuclear war and use money that could be spent to fight world hunger and other social problems.

Gandhi, in his dinner speech, praised the state of India's relations with the Soviet Union and pressed for greater efforts worldwide to remove the nuclear threat.

"Friendship and cooperation with the Soviet Union are an integral element of our foreign policy. Our people regard the Soviet people as friends who have stood by them in times of need," Gandhi told the Kremlin gathering.

He added that, "In this nuclear age, peace is the basic yearning of all the peoples of the world. Yet at no time in history has the danger to peace been greater. This danger comes from the very weapons that have been developed in the name of security."

Gandhi leaves Thursday for the Byelorussian capital of Minsk and also will visit Frunze, the capital of Kirghizia, before returning to Indian Sunday.

NATO defense ministers reaffirm goal of increasing military budgets

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — NATO defense ministers reached rapid agreeement today on the alliance's major weaknesses and pledged a stronger effort to remedy them, a senior NATO official said.

In the opening session of a two-day strategy meeting, the ministers also reaffirmed a longstanding goal of increasing military spending by 3 percent a year, the official said during a break in the talks. Few NATO nations have consistently met that target.

The official briefed reporters on the closed-door discussions on the condition that he [illegible] be identified by name or nationality. None of the ministers was available for interviews.

He said the ministers accepted an internal NATO report that said the alliance is poorly prepared to deal with a conventional Warsaw Pact attack because of inadequate standing ground forces and reserves, insufficient stocks to sustain a conventional defense, lack of facilities to receive and protect reinforcing aircraft and inadequate ability to identify enemy aircraft.

The ministers agreed that the 16 North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries should buy military equipment jointly more often, the official said. They also called for better planning and setting of priorities.

The meeting brings together the defense chiefs of the United States, Canada, Britain, Italy, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Luxembourg, Portugal, Greece, Turkey and Iceland. Spain is represented by an official observer. France is absent because it is not part of NATO's integrated military command.

The ministers are apt to be less harmonious when they turn to President Reagan's space-based defense program, called "Star Wars."

Senior U.S. officials said although it was not on the formal agenda, U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger almost certainly would push for a NATO endorsement of "Star Wars" during the conference's less formal open discussion portion.

Even before the 14 ministers assembled in the Belgian capital for the semi-annual meeting of the Defense Planning Committee, the Reagan plan was the subject of a diplomatic flare-up.

Freddy Vreven, the Belgian defense minister, on Tuesday denied a U.S. report that his government had committed to participating in the program, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, right, enters NATO's conference room with British Secretary of Defense Michael Heseltine for the alliance's spring session in Brussels, Belgium.

Vreven had discussed the program with Weinberger on Monday.

Vreven told a news conference Tuesday that a Pentagon spokesman had been mistaken in suggesting Vreven had told Weinberger that Belgium had decided to participate in Star Wars research.

Michael I. Burch Pentagon spokesman, in briefing American reporters, said Weinberger "informed the minister during their meeting that he was very glad to hear the word that Belgium was favorably inclined to accept the American offer to participate...Vreven responded that the matter would be reviewed finally within the next week or so, but that his government wanted to proceed."

Baldrige: U.S., U.S.S.R. trade may increase

MOSCOW (AP) — The U.S. commerce secretary says the United States and the Soviet Union have agreed to measures that should increase trade between the two superpowers.

But Malcolm Baldrige said at a news conference Tuesday that he detected "no change" in Soviet emigration policies that have caused the U.S. Congress to deny the Soviets most-favored-nation trade status.

The Soviets have sought such trade status, but Baldrige said discussions did not go into detail on that issue, technology transfers or other complicated matters.

He said he expected formal talks to open soon on restoring the Soviet airline Aeroflot's landing rights in the United States, halted after the Soviets shot down a South Korean airliner in 1983.

Speaking to reporters after two days of talks in Moscow, Baldrige said, "Our main achievement was to agree on the basic issue of re-establishing the structure for regular, high-level review and resolution of trade problems, a structure that has been absent for seven years.

Baldrige referred to agreement to resume meetings of the U.S.-U.S.S.R. Joint Commercial Commission, which met this week for the first time since 1978. The meetings were halted after the 1979 Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

The next meeting will be held in Washington in 1986.

He said, "A fundamental change in our trade relationship will depend on parallel improvements in other aspects of our relations."

Baldrige met for more than two hours Monday with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev who said trade could help "defrost" relations between the two countries. The Soviet news agency Tass said Gorbachev accused Washington of using trade as a political tool during the last few years.

Baldrige said the agreements reached this week, which are primarily promises to assist each other's businesses, are a start.

"I don't want to describe this as a cure-all and end-all for our trade relations," he said. "It is a good solid start, there are still a lot of problems but the way to start is one step at a time."

Baldrige said he does not detect any relaxation in Soviet emigration policies, which would be a major factor toward improving trade.

Among the agreements that Baldrige said were reached this week were:

— The administration will introduce legislation to end a 34-year ban on Soviet fur imports.

— The Soviet Union will end a ban on U.S. firms giving trade seminars at the U.S. Embassy's commercial office in Moscow.

— A U.S. official trade promotion program will be resumed in the Soviet Union.

— U.S. and Soviet officials will begin discussions later this year on negotiating a new maritime agreement.

— The Soviet Union promises not to discriminate against American companies in circulating bid invitations and the United States promises not to discriminate against Soviet trade organizations.

U.S.-Soviet trade was slightly more than $3.7 billion last year, with 90 percent of that representing Soviet imports, mostly grain.

Baldrige said he expects some increase in trade, and that since January more than $40 million in contracts have been signed with American firms, including some that he said were "virtually excluded" in recent years.

Poland rejects appeal for activists' release

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The government has rejected an appeal by 28 Nobel Prize winners for the release of a dissident historian and two Solidarity activists who face trial for allegedly planning a general strike.

Historian Adam Michnik, a prominent Solidarity adviser, and Solidarity underground leaders Bogdan Lis and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk are to go on trial before a Gdansk court on Thursday on charges of inciting unrest by calling for a 15-minute general strike against food price hikes.

The strike was cancelled and never took place.

If convicted, they face up to three years in prison.

The three also are charged with playing a leading role in an illegal union, which carries a maximum five-year prison sentence.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said Tuesday in a letter to the Nobel laureates that Polish authorities did not persecute people for holding different views, but are determined to "safeguard public peace."

"You have no right, gentlemen, given your remoteness from things Polish, to treat lightly calls for strikes over price movements," Urban said. "It is the Polish government that is responsible that blood never again is spilt on Polish streets and our country shaken by fresh crises."

The Nobel Prize winners, most of them Americans, sent the appeal earlier this month to Poland's leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski. They said that by jailing the three, the government was "breaking the international norms of human rights."

The laureates, who included peace prize recipient Linus Pauling and writers Saul Bellow and Czeslaw Milosz, a Polish native who now lives in California, said Michnik, a founder of the now-disbanded KOR workers' rights group, had "devoted his life to non-violent protests in the name of economic, cultural and political freedom."

Ethiopia welcomes nurses, despite anti-American media

AP Laserphoto

GEWHA, Ethiopia (AP) — The four American volunteer nurses, pitching tents on a windswept hill overlooking Gewha in January, were the first foreigners many of the 2,500 townspeople had ever seen.

And their only notions about Americans came from the government-controlled media, which relentlessly pictured the United States as the world's main villain.

"We were naturally concerned about what reception we would get," Geraldine C. Scott, 42, one of the camp's founders, told a visiting reporter. "But we haven't had any cause for worry. We're welcome here."

Ms. Scott and the other volunteers from the New York-based Church World Services serve 9,000 drought victims at their camp, one of 225 feeding centers for Ethiopians and the only one run exclusively by Americans.

Scores of foreign volunteers came with food and medicine for millions of Ethiopian drought and famine victims. But they also brought anxiety to officials of the Marxist government, who fear the people's exposure to Western influence.

In Addis Ababa, the capital, taxi drivers and souvenir hawkers wear jeans and T-shirts emblazoned with pictures of American rock star Michael Jackson — garb largely unavailable before the influx of volunteers began arriving in September.

In the countryside, peasants marvel at the simple things — compact radios, battery-operated stereo tape recorders, disposable cigarette lighters — that volunteers bring with them.

Some Ethiopians listen with the volunteers to foreign radio broadcasts, which often carry reports of Ethiopian and international events never aired in the rigidly controlled local media.

Ethiopians who have studied abroad eagerly seek copies of Western newspapers and magazines from the volunteers. And students discreetly lobby for help in getting overseas scholarships.

"It is something of a dilemma for this government to have all these Westerners around, given this has been very much a closed society for so long," said a European diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity for fear of offending the government.

"One thing that perhaps disturbs them more than anything is that the volunteers are speaking their mind, that they are frank about issues, Ethiopian or otherwise. This is new."

Scores of local children follow Ms. Scott as she leads the visiting journalist through the Gewha camp, 155 miles northeast of Addis Ababa. She arrived from the Bronx in New York City to help the relief effort.

Another of the camp's founders, Betty Ann Normandin, 35, of Watertown, Mass., said she and her colleagues now "feel quite at home."

"We knew that we were not particularly wanted by the leaders and we even avoided the American Embassy for fear of being branded CIA spies," said one American volunteer, who wished to remain anonymous. "But we wanted to come, and more of us want to come."

Throughout Ethiopia, a nation of 42 million people, 300 volunteers from 39 countries are caring for drought and famine victims, according to the Ethiopian government.

Charter flight ferries tourists between Cuba, U.S.

MIAMI (AP) — A charter flight today ferried tourists stranded by Cuban-imposed travel restrictions to and from the communist island, but others trapped by Cuba's retaliation against Radio Marti may have to travel home via other nations.

Radio Marti originates in Washington and is relayed to Cuba from broadcasting towers in the Florida Keys. Havana used terms like "subversive" and "cynical" in describing the 14-hour-a-day broadcasts, which the United States says provides unbiased news and information to Cubans. It began broadcasting at 5:30 a.m. Monday.

An Eastern Airlines charter flight left Miami shortly after midnight today and returned several hours later with an undetermined number of passengers, airport officials said.

The flight was to allow return of stranded Cubans who were visiting South Florida and of Cuban-Americans who were visiting relatives in Cuba when flights were canceled Tuesday.

Those unable to take the chartered flight could be forced to fly home through other countries, Cuban and U.S. officials said, but would be allowed to return to their homes.

"They (Cuban-Americans) will be able to return. We are not going to keep them jailed," said Angel Pino, a Washington spokesman for the Cuban government.

Pino said additional charters may be allowed to take Cubans to their island but would not be allowed to take any new tourists.

The Cuban sanctions also suspended a Dec. 14 agreement with the United States which would have allowed 20,000 Cubans to emigrate each year, along with 3,000 former political prisoners and their families.

The suspension means Cuba is no longer accepting criminal or mentally disturbed refugees who arrived in the United States in the 1980 Mariel boatlift and that the promise of orderly emigration from Cuba has been broken.

U.S.S.R. criticizes U.S. broadcasts to Cuba

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has joined Cuba in criticizing the new U.S. government radio broadcasts to Cuba, saying they amount to "ideological sabotage" against the communist-ruled Caribbean island.

The U.S. government's Radio Marti went on the air from Washington on Monday. Fidel Castro, Cuba's president, reacted by canceling an agreement that allowed the United States to send back nearly 3,000 Cuban "undesirables" who emigrated to Florida during the 1980 boatlift.

The agreement also would have allowed thousands of Cuban dissidents, including political prisoners, to go to the United States.

"Both the Reagan administration and the U.S. public are well aware that the inauguration of the...radio station is in point of fact ideological sabotage against Cuba," the Soviet news agency Tass said Tuesday.

"For almost a quarter of a century, Washington has been trying in vain to stifle the Cuban revolution by means of various kinds of economic and trade sanctions," it said.

Cuba's Radio Havana said Tuesday that Castro's government would "adopt additional measures relating to the communications between the United States and Cuba," and Cuban representatives to the United Nations in New York called the establishment of Radio Marti "a cynical and provocative decision" by President Reagan.

WORLD in brief

Men sentenced for forcing American to change money

PEKING (AP) — Two men who forced an American tourist to change foreign currency into local currency have been sentenced to three years of reform-through-labor, the official China Daily said today.

The case follows a government crackdown launched April 5 to penalize black marketeering and other illegal currency transactions. The government prohibits money-changing except through the official Bank of China.

The English-language daily said U.S. tourist Eunice Zibota was visiting Peking's Summer Palace on May 6 and approached a Chinese stand to buy some film.

He Beilu, 23, and Meng Wenge, 19, saw her pull out a roll of foreign exchange certificates — the special notes foreigners swap for dollars and other hard currencies — and asked her to exchange them for local money.

When she tried to leave, one of the men grabbed her purse, took out 200 yuan ($70) in certificates and replaced it with 200 yuan in local currency. Foreign exchange certificate yuan can be used to buy imported goods. On the black market, it brings 1.50-2.0 yuan.

Iraq: Iran power plant hit

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq said its warplanes attacked a power plant and two water pumping stations in Iran in the first reported Iraqi raids on civilian targets in seven weeks.

There was no Iranian confirmation of the Iraqi report. Western reporters are not customarily allowed into battlefield areas. A Iraqi military spokesman, in a communique broadcast on state radio, said Iraqi planes hit on Tuesday a power station northeast of Ahwaz and two water pumping centers near Dezful and Khorramabad.

The spokesman denounced Iranian leadership for "consecrating the spirit of evil and crime by rejecting the call for a cease-fire during this holy month."

He was referring to an appeal issued to Iraq and Iran last week by a Saudi Arabian-based committee of Islamic scholars for a cease-fire during Ramadan, the Moslem holy month.

Golan Heights force to stay

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Security Council has voted unanimously to extend the life of the 1,331-man U.N. Disengagement Observer Force on the Syrian Golan Heights for another six months.

The new mandate for the four-nation force runs until Nov. 30.

The Thai Foreign Minister, Air Chief Marshal Siddhi Savetsila, who presided over the 15-member council, said the peacekeeping body agreed with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who concluded the force was "essential" despite "the present quiet in the Israel-Syria sector."

Both Israel and Syria agreed to keep the 11-year-old force between them on the strategic Golan Heights.

Dolls sells for $19,600

LONDON (AP) — A rare English wooden doll made in about 1740 has been auctioned off for $19,600, and a record price of $2,654 has been paid for a teddy bear, Sotheby's auction house said.

The 24-inch doll, in its original green dress, quilted underskirt and corset, was sold by Mary Hillier, a doll expert, and bought by an unidentified bidder at the Tuesday auction of toys and dolls.

The high-priced teddy bear was manufactured by the Steiff company in Germany in 1905, less than three years after teddy bears were first marketed in New York by Brooklyn candy store proprietor Morris Michtom. The buyer and seller were not identified.

Physicist wins compensation

LONDON (AP) — The Defense Ministry says it will pay compensation to a physicist who was embarrassed by being ordered off a navy submarine because she is a woman.

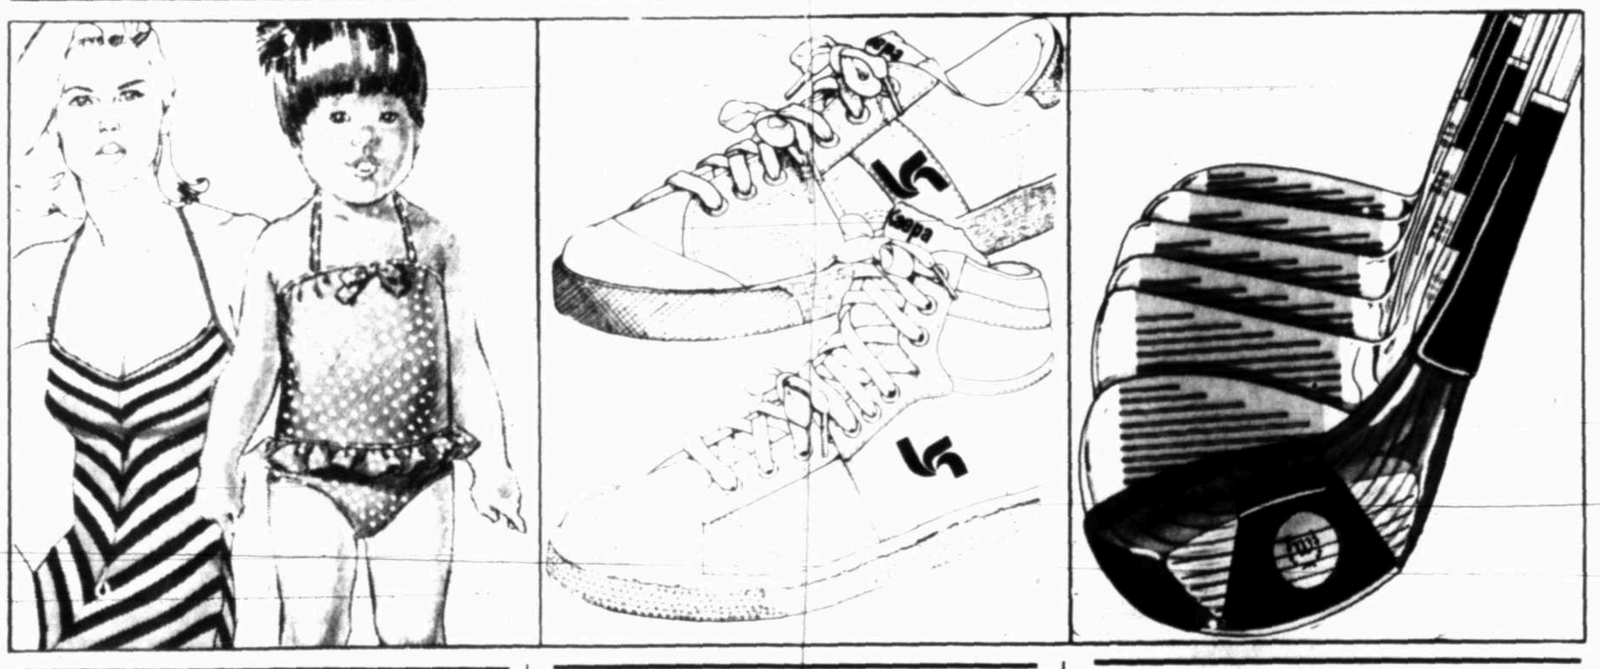

Yvonne Hawkins, 33, who works for the British Admiralty, successfully argued her case in Bristol before an industrial tribunal, a government body that resolves employment disputes.

She said that two hours after boarding the HMS Turbulent on the Clyde River in Scotland to observe sonar tests, the officers told her to leave because they had no accommodations for a woman.

'Unwavering support' promised Honduras

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a clear signal to Nicaragua, President Reagan is promising Honduran President Roberto Suazo Cordova the United States will provide "firm and unwavering" support for Honduras in the event of communist aggression.

U.S. officials said the commitment, issued following a meeting Tuesday between the two leaders, reaffirmed previous U.S. security obligations to Honduras and served as psychological reinforcement to the Central American nation, which shares a long border with Nicaragua.

The United States is committed to Honduras' defense under a Western Hemisphere treaty, known informally as the Rio Pact. Officials, who asked not to be identified, said Reagan has made it clear all along he would act unilaterally in the event that Honduran security is jeopardized, but the the commitment signed Tuesday adds a new dimension to U.S.-Honduran security ties because American obligations now are spelled out in a joint statement.

"In case of armed attack against Honduras, the United States will take appropriate measures...to consult with and support in a timely and effective manner the government of Honduras in its efforts to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity against communist aggression," the communique said.

The United States has looked to Honduras as a major element in its efforts to contain the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua, but Honduras on occasion has appeared uncomfortable in that role, worried about provoking Nicaragua.

Tuesday's communique was issued following a series of Nicaraguan attacks inside Honduras against rebel camps. In what was widely viewed as an attempt to placate Nicaragua, the Honduran Army recently occupied a key Honduran-based headquarters of Nicaraguan anti-communist resistance forces.

But, speaking to reporters at the outset of his meeting with Reagan, Suazo indicated no ambiguity about his support for U.S. policies in the region and his hostility toward the Sandinistas.

He said congressional rejection of new U.S. aid for the Nicaraguan Contra rebels last month was a victory for communism. He added: "What the American Congress and the American people should remember is that 24 hours after the request by President Ronald Reagan was rejected by the Congress, that (Nicaraguan) President Daniel Ortega was in Moscow saying hello to Chairman Gorbachev of the Soviet Communist Party."

"I think that everybody recognizes that this vote in the Congress of the United States...was a victory for President Daniel Ortega and for the Communist Party," Suazo said.

Later, as Suazo was departing, Reagan said, "Honduras is a friendly nation facing a serious threat of communist aggression and subversion. There should be no doubt that we will fulfill our mutual defense obligation under the Rio Treaty and the OAS charter."

Democrats unite on budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats, finding harmony with a "vague" compromise over a minimum corporate tax, are confidently predicting swift approval for a 1986 budget that chops $56 billion off the deficit without curtailing Social Security benefits.

"We are now united. All Democratic factions are behind this compromise" on taxes, Democratic Whip Bill Alexander of Arkansas said Tuesday after several days of negotiations produced agreement.

"I think this will give us the votes to pass the budget," Alexander added, and while test votes were possible today, no final roll call was expected before Thursday.

The Democratic budget would reduce deficits by $250 billion over three years by making deep cuts in President Reagan's defense buildup and making smaller domestic program cuts than a plan approved by the Senate earlier.

It also would grant next year's scheduled benefit increases in Social Security and other pension programs, in contrast to the one-year freeze in the Senate package that President Reagan has endorsed.

Ironically, the tax compromise that House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., helped forge was similar to the one that Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., came up with when Republicans were pressuring him to include a call for higher taxes in their deficit-reduction plan.

The provision Democrats will seek approval for from the full House declares that the present tax code "lacks equity and fairness in that it permits profit-making entities to escape taxation," and recommends enactment of legislation addressing "these inequities by imposing a minimum tax."

The proceeds of such a tax could be used either to finance tax reform or reduce deficits or both.

But that recommendation is nonbinding, and the budget itself would not be amended with any specific requirement for higher taxes, as some Democrats had originally demanded.

Not everyone was satisfied, and Rep. James Oberstar, D-Minn., was expected to seek a vote on a provision requiring a minimum tax that would raise $8 billion next year and $44 billion in three years.

But given the agreement among Democratic leaders to shy away from such a specific amendment, Oberstar's proposal appeared doomed.

"The final version is so vague and general as to be meaningless," said Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas.

Said House Republican Leader Bob Michel of Illinois, "It is a little mind-boggling."

But if the compromise worked out by Democrats appears innocuous, it also represents something of a defeat for Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas, who was part of a group that wanted to use the budget to require a minimum tax to raise $44 billion over three years.

At the same time, the final language was a victory for Rep. Daniel Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee and a potential rival of Wright to become speaker in two years. Rostenkowski had argued against any tax increase in the budget for fear it might complicate efforts to enact overall tax reform later in the year.

The agreement not only settled the Democratic dispute, but, as Alexander said, appeared to boost chances for approval of the leadership's budget. Several alternatives have been drafted, but most officials conceded none was likely to command a majority. They include:

— A plan by House Republican leaders to restore some funds to defense and achieve greater savings from domestic programs.

— A proposal by moderate and conservative Democrats to freeze Social Security and other pension benefits while imposing a minimum tax to reduce deficits further than the leadership plan.

— A plan by the Congressional Black Caucus to make deeper cuts in the defense buildup and use $171 billion in higher taxes over three years to offset greater spending on domestic programs.

Director to resign after MOVE probe

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — City managing director Leo A. Brooks, who directed the attempt to evict the radical group MOVE in which 11 died and 53 homes were destroyed, says he will resign, according to a published report.

Brooks, a former Army major general, said he made the decision four months ago, and told Mayor W. Wilson Goode of his plans to quit two weeks before the May 13 siege, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported today.

Brooks, 52, said he probably would delay his resignation until the summer while a mayoral commission investigates the confrontation, which also left 270 people homeless.

He also said in the Inquirer interview that he was out of town for the five days before the showdown, when plans to evict MOVE were worked out.

Brooks said he made the decision to "find another way to deal with life" because the job took up too much time.

"It is not the pressure of this work," he said. "It is the pressure of having no family life...my phone rings all night long. You're always out evenings for some event or public meeting. Your weekends are tied up the same way. Getting away for two days to rest is almost impossible."

Goode's press secretary, Karen Warrington, said Brooks' decision "was not a surprise, since a number of his cabinet people had really only committed to staying about two years."

Brooks came under criticism from lawmakers, the media and community members for authorizing use of a bomb against the MOVE headquarters. The fire that engulfed the neighborhood began shortly after the explosive device was dropped on the roof of the MOVE compound.

Brooks had been commanding general at the Defense Personnel Support Center, a supply depot with 7,000 civilian workers in south Philadelphia, when he was asked by Goode to become managing director in January 1984.

Lundgren urges FBI relay for missing kids

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying many abducted children are killed within 24 hours of their disappearance, Rep. Dan Lungren, R-Calif., is urging states to require that local law enforcement agencies relay the names of missing kids to the FBI's national computer system.

Lungren, in a speech on the House floor Tuesday night, said only six states currently require such contact with the FBI. And since many missing children turn out to be runaways, some police departments wait seven days before entering a name, to conserve time and resources, Lungren added.

"That is a concern," Lungren said, but doesn't outweigh the need to start an immediate search for children who are criminally abducted. Many are killed within a day, he said, and "some are buried without an identification."

Before Lungren spoke, House members took turns displaying pictures of missing children from their districts on the chamber's television system. Televised House sessions are broadcast through cable systems nationwide.

Viewers were asked to call the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children if they had any information on the children in the pictures.

The number is 1-800-843-LOST.

The FBI has permitted law enforcement agencies to enter names of missing children in its national computer since 1975. But in 1982, a federal law permitted parents to have the names entered if their local police would not do so.

Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., who organized the House program, applauded the increasing efforts to find missing children, including placing their pictures on milk cartons, on movie theater screens and even on toll road fare tickets.

Meanwhile, the mother of a murdered child and a Michigan state policeman told a House Education and Labor subcommittee Tuesday that fingerprinting provides little help in locating missing children.

Marie Edenstrom, of Ferndale, Mich., said, "Fingerprinting is not that useful — only if you're identifying a body or when someone's in a coma."

Mrs. Edenstrom is founder of Kids Everywhere Now Need You, or KENNY, an organization that tries to educate parents and children of the dangers of abduction. Her son, Kenny, was abducted and murdered last July at age 14.

She said some organizations offering fingerprints do not use experts, and the prints they provide are useless.

Democrats seek MX missile cap

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is waging a last-minute lobbying blitz to prevent a major legislative defeat in its long battle to deploy the controversial MX nuclear missile.

Senate Republican leaders say Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., one of the Senate's foremost authorities on national defense, has the votes he needs for passage of an amendment capping deployment of the MX system at 40 missiles, far fewer than the 100 President Reagan seeks.

The amendment, which Nunn seeks to attach to a pending $302 billion military authorization bill, also would restrict MX production to 12 missiles in fiscal 1986 instead of the 21 nuclear weapons the administration seeks to build.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said today that he thinks "the votes are out there" to pass Nunn's proposal.

But talks aimed at seeking a compromise with Nunn were still going on, Rudman told reporters.

Congress already has approved 42 MX weapons, but Nunn's amendment would require that the number of MXs built beyond 40 be used as spares and not be deployed.

Nunn is using the apparent majority support for his amendment to pressure the administration to change its plan to base the 10-warhead MX in existing Minuteman missile silos. Critics claim the silos are vulnerable to attack by the Soviet Union.

"I want to make it clear to them that if they continue down the road they're on, they've reached a dead end," Nunn told reporters. "I want to send a clear message that we are not going to continue to place MXs in a vulnerable basing mode."

An administration team led by National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane spent hours Tuesday attempting to forge a compromise. But Nunn said, "I have not heard anything that indicates to me that I should change my amendment in any respect."

He said suggestions have been made, however, that the administration might be prepared to offer to continue to comply with the limits on nuclear arms set by the SALT II treaty when its terms expire at the end of the year in exchange for modifications in the amendment.

Nunn said that although trial balloons have been floated, no firm proposal has been made.

But he added that if the administration "were to make an overture on that, I have an open mind."

The administration was offering a compromise on the MX that would temporarily limit deployment to 50 of the weapons, Nunn said.

That would leave the White House able to try to deploy more of the weapons in the future if relations with the Soviets deteriorate or arms control talks break down.

On Tuesday, the Senate made clear that while many senators have serious problems with the MX program in its present form, they are not ready to kill it outright.

The Senate refused 56-42 to approve a motion by Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., to halt production of the weapon on grounds that its vulnerability makes further spending for it "a folly."

It then turned to the Nunn amendment for which Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas and other GOP leaders said was apparent majority support.

"In my judgment, Sam Nunn has got the votes for his amendment," said Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, the assistant Republican leader.

Dole said administration officials are concerned that the use of the word "cap" to describe the 40-missile deployment limit of the Nunn amendment could be interpreted as a permanent limit even though the amendment expires after one year.

"They are concerned about how it may be perceived at the arms negotiations in Geneva," Dole said. "It's going to appear to many that Congress is making it very difficult for our negotiators."

"It would be interpreted as an end to MX production," Stevens added.

Nunn said those arguments are a misinterpretation and a distortion of his amendment.

He said it is clear that with only three days remaining before the Senate recesses for Memorial Day, opponents could block consideration of his amendment this week.

But he agreed to continue to work with administration officials in search of compromise.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Brown Ridge Mountains? The not-so-Grand Canyon? Small sequoia trees?

These, the National Park Service says, are some of the actual or possible results of the man-made pollution officials say they are finding in America's national parks, even those distant from industry and traffic jams.

"The results of our research and monitoring reveal serious air pollution problems in many units of our national park system," says Mary Lou Grier.

"Our monitoring has revealed ozone pollution levels in remote park areas higher than the National Ambient Air Quality Standard for ozone and surprisingly high levels of sulfur dioxide in some parks," she told the House Interior national parks subcommittee Tuesday.

She released a summary report on environmental studies, begun by the park service in 1978.

Falling C-5A jet parts mystifying Air Force

DOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Del. (AP) — Forty-six parts, including a 352-pound door, have fallen from airborne C-5A cargo jets in the past two years despite Air Force efforts to prevent falling parts, officials say.

No injuries have been recorded in the incidents involving the base's 36 Air Force C-5As, the largest aircraft anywhere, Maj. Peter H. Clark said Tuesday.

The Air Force is investigating why the door dropped on a farm near Smyrna on May 14, he said, adding that the service stresses securing doors and other objects that could tear loose during flight.

EPA may ride horses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency and the Forest Service have reached a compromise requiring EPA scientists to travel on horses and by foot whenever possible this summer as they look for acid rain contamination at hundreds of western lakes.

The officials, who spoke Tuesday on condition that they not be identified, said Administrator Lee M. Thomas has not yet approved the compromise.

Thomas, said one official, wants to assess the possibility that delays in getting the samples to laboratories from remote lakes could render test results useless.

Minister found guilty

BALTIMORE (AP) — A Lutheran lay minister convicted of conspiring to bomb 10 abortion clinics in three states and the District of Columbia was described by a prosecutor as a "frustrated opponent of abortion."

The U.S. District Court jury also on Tuesday night found Michael D. Bray, 32, guilty of one count of obtaining destructive devices but aquitted him of two other explosive charges. Sentencing was set for July 2.

Bray and two other men were charged in bombings, burnings or attempts to damage 10 abortion-related facilities in Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and Washington.

Lone policeman killed

TRAFFORD, Ala. (AP) — The town is "broken up" because its only policeman died in a shootout shortly after announcing plans to give up his badge and return to a coal company job, the mayor says.

J.W. Mann, 44, a part-time officer, was at City Hall Monday night telling Mayor Kenneth Sanders of his plans when Mary Kay Clements, 47, came in with her daughters and complained that two men were harassing them, officials said.

Sheriff's Sgt. N.C. Harris said a shootout at a house where the woman lived left the officer dead. He said Fred Crenshaw Stockley, 61, was hospitalized in serious condition. No charges had been filed Tuesday, he said.

Animal lovers charged

NEW ULM, Minn. (AP) — A member of a group of animal lovers called "The Dog Team" said after being charged with stealing seven dogs from a dealer who sells them for medical research that dogs shouldn't be used for research.

"That's what mice and rats and hamsters should be used for," said Jan Mass, 29, who faces misdemeanor charges of theft, conspiracy and aiding and abetting criminal damage to property.

She said Monday that she did not participate in the May 4 removal of the dogs from a kennel in rural Nicollet County but helped place them in homes.

Soul's brother ousted

FRANKLIN PARK, Pa. (AP) — The Rev. Daniel N. Solberg, brother of actor David Soul, was suspended from the ministry for refusing to vacate his pulpit.

The dissident Lutheran minister has remained behind the chained doors of Nativity Lutheran Church in suburban Allison Park since May 14.

He was suspended Monday by Bishop Kenneth May, church officials said.

National anthem's birthplace needs $27 million in repairs

BALTIMORE (AP) — Soon it will be the summer of 1814 again at Fort McHenry, where "The Star Spangled Banner" was born.

Volunteer members of the fort's guard, wearing traditional 19th century wool outfits with linen shirts and pants, will relive those summer days before the fort withstood a 25-hour British bombardment the following Sept. 13-14.

The fort that barred British ships from entering Baltimore's harbor during the War of 1812 is one of the city's most popular tourist attractions. Last year it drew 773,000 visitors, 50,000 more than came the previous year.

The fort's increasing popularity, however, has also highlighted its need for substantial repairs.

Inspired by the campaign to restore the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor, a non-profit group of business people and civic leaders hopes to raise more than $27 million over the next three years for repairs to the fort's structures, including its seawall, gun batteries and Civil War-era powder magazines.

The fort is "a symbol of hope for all who dare to hope; the place where the past teaches us what the future can be," said the Rev. Winthrop Brainerd, chaplain of the Fort McHenry volunteer guard which performs on summer weekends, beginning June 8.

As part of its fund-raising effort, the Patriots of Fort McHenry last month honored the first "Patriot of the Year," Baltimore Mayor William Donald Schaefer, at an awards dinner.

About $50,000 has already been raised, said Walter Hyle, president of the patriots association.

The group set out last fall to raise $6 million, but decided it would be easy to raise more than four times that amount because "it's only about one-tenth of what they need to repair the Statue of Liberty," said Bruce Phillips, who handles the group's public relations.

More than $143 million of the $290 million sought for the restoration of the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island has been collected. Some $50 million is being used to restore Lady Liberty.

The national campaign to save Fort McHenry will include direct mail solicitations to individuals and personal contact with major corporations and foundations, said Hyle.

"It will be the same type of campaign as the Statue of Liberty," Hyle said. "However, we're going slow. We don't want to make any mistakes."

As in the Lady Liberty campaign, a public relations firm will develop brochures and television commercials promoting the fort restoration, he said.

"One of the other things we'll have will be the membership, so people visiting Fort McHenry can join and become a patriot," Hyle said.

Funds received beyond what are needed for restoration and other repairs will be used to establish an endowment for the future, Hyle said.

Fort McHenry's superintendent, Juin Crosse-Barnes, points out gun batteries that are among sections of the fort in need of repairs. Baltimore leaders hope to raise $27 million for restoration.

Air Force planes may track drug smugglers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States' war against drug smuggling may soon be helped by some of the military's most sophisticated tracking equipment.

The Senate on Tuesday approved a proposal that creates a new unit of 16 Air Force planes, piloted by Air Force reservists, to help the Customs Service halt Latin American drug smugglers heading for the United States.

"This will send a shudder through the drug families," said Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., chief sponsor of the proposal. "It's a giant step forward and means we are finally getting serious about going to war against drugs."

The move doesn't violate constitutional or legal prohibitions against using military troops for enforcing civilian laws, DeConcini said, because the Air Force personnel involved will not make arrests but will only track and turn their information over to Customs agents.

DeConcini won voice-vote approval for his amendment, which was attached to a bill authorizing Pentagon spending for fiscal 1986. A similar proposal is part of a defense spending bill now on the House floor.

The 16 planes will be surplus aircraft that will be turned over to the Air Force reserve, DeConcini said. He estimated the probable cost at $100 million, although the bill doesn't actually propose spending any of that money.

It will be up to the Air Force to decide where to base the planes, but at least two will be stationed at U.S. facilities in Panama under the terms of DeConcini's proposal.

The 16 planes will include six P-3 Orions, the Navy's chief anti-submarine hunter. All the Orions, along with the other 10 planes, will be outfitted with radar systems like those aboard the F-15, the top Air Force fighter, DeConcini said.

While all the details have not yet been worked out, DeConcini said, "nothing in this will allow the military to make arrests," and the Air Force reservists will operate the planes as part of their regular training.

Any information about suspected drug shipments picked up by the planes will be relayed to the Coast Guard and Customs agents, he said.

The Pentagon "is satisfied with this arrangement," he said.

Currently, in addition to one P-3 operated by the Customs Service, the anti-drug effort already receives some help from the Army and the Navy. Surplus Army helicopters and planes are used for tracking and halting drug shipments, while Navy surveillance planes operating out of Virginia fly to the Caribbean on training missions and pass along information to the anti-drug network.

The last major anti-drug effort involving the U.S. military was "Blue Lightning," a 16-day operation last month aimed at rooting out drug sanctuaries in the Bahamas. There were 58 arrests, along with the seizure of 5,500 pounds of cocaine and 33,872 pounds of marijuana.

The use of the military for civilian law enforcement purposes is generally barred by both the Constitution and the Posse Comitatus Act, an 1878 law enacted during Reconstruction after Army troops were used to halt Ku Klux Klan activities.

But Congress four years ago amended the 1878 law to permit the Pentagon to provide surveillance and training advice to the Customs Service and Coast Guard.

Earlier Tuesday, Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., introduced a bill that would permit the Navy and Air Force to intercept drug-smuggling boats.

"Every time a military plane is overhead, or a ship is at sea, the narcotics smuggler should know that there is a chance he will be apprehended," Bennett said.

The bill would let the secretary of defense assign members of the armed forces to assist drug enforcement officials as long as the assistance took place outside the land area of the United States and any territory or possession.

IRS lays claim on possible hidden Capone fortune

CHICAGO (AP) — Famed mobster Al Capone may be long gone, but the Internal Revenue Service wants to stake a claim on whatever loot he may have left behind.

A tax lien issued by the IRS to the owners of a hotel that once served as Capone's headquarters demands $800,000 worth of whatever is found in the building's basement vault.

"I couldn't believe it," said Patricia Porter of the Sunbow Foundation, which owns the hotel. "I asked them if I find bodies in there, would they want me to wrap one up for them and send that along, too."

Five IRS agents recently served the foundation with documents seeking $200,000 Capone owed the government for failing to report his lucrative income from Chicago's vice industry, plus another $605,000 in interest covering the years since he died in 1947.

Ms. Porter said she was shocked by the IRS lien, which applies to the contents of a city block-long concrete vault the Sunbow crew discovered last winter while renovating the old Lexington Hotel.

The foundation, a non-profit school for women in construction trades, bought the South Side hotel to rehabilitate it into an international women's museum and housing complex.

IRS spokesman Steve Mongelluzzo said the lien of $201,347.68 originally was filed in January 1936. He said the IRS is after Capone, not the foundation, and the $800,000 would only come out of the vault contents that belonged to Capone.

The vault is buried behind a wall in the basement of the 10-story Lexington.

For months, Ms. Porter's foundation has had plans to jackhammer through the vault's concrete walls to reveal its contents. But financing has been a problem.

Ms. Porter said the foundation has just enough money this year to get its construction trainees through its program. Opening the vault would take at least another $2,000, which would pay for the needed heavy construction work, such as fortifying the building's upper floors.

Baseball drugs

Major-league baseball players are responding with animosity to Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's call for mandatory drug testing of nearly everyone in professional baseball except the players. They shouldn't; Ueberroth's program is needed.

After all, no one has a greater stake in the integrity of America's oldest, most successful professional sports leagues than the highly paid athletes who play the game.

But instead of embracing this opportunity to prove that most players don't use drugs and to find and help the few who do, the Major League Players Association and many of its members have denounced the commissioner's call for mandatory drug testing.

Some players apparently feel the program is demeaning or an invasion of privacy. Others argue that drug abuse is a societal problem not an athletic one.

That may be, but it should be remembered that Ueberroth did not single the players out. His drug-testing edict initially applied to every non-union employee in professional baseball — from owners to ushers. There were two exceptions: Major-league players and umpires, baseball's only union employees, could not be included unless they agreed to change their labor contracts. The executive board of the Major League Umpires' Association later voted unanimously to join the drug-testing program. So much for unfairly singling out the players. They have singled themselves out as the only group in baseball that refuses to be tested.

Ironically, drug testing is not new to baseball or to most other sports. The San Diego Padres, for example, began conducting random tests of minor-league players in 1982 and last year expanded the testing program to include all minor leaguers and front-office personnel. Furthermore, amateurs competing in international events such as the Pan-American or Olympic games are forced to undergo testing.

The players do make one good point, however. Drug abuse is a societal problem, one of the most serious in America today. But this is yet another reason for testing professional athletes, who are role models and heroes to the impressionable youth in this country.

It makes a definite impact when nearly a dozen major league players testify before a federal grand jury investigating cocaine trafficking in Pittsburgh or when baseball superstars such as Dodger pitcher Steve Howe or Padre second baseman Alan Wiggins are suspended from baseball for drug use. Or when four members of the Kansas City Royals serve time in a federal prison for selling cocaine.

Baseball is not the only professional sport in which drugs are a problem. The National Football League and National Basketball Association have their share of drug users, too. Neither has mandatory drug testing, although NFL teams may test players when they have reasonable cause to suspect drug abuse.

But baseball has a unique place in American sport. Long hailed as the national pastime, it is a century-old tradition. It also has changed and sometimes has set the pace for society. Don't forget, Jackie Robinson broke major league baseball's color barrier 17 years before Congress passed the Civil Rights Act.

It's time for baseball to step out in front on another social issue — namely, the drug problem. Commissioner Ueberroth understands the importance of baseball continuing its leadership tradition in the fight against drugs. The players should, too.

Another View: Hardly 'dialogue'

Before Pope John Paul II ever touched down in Holland — a country widely perceived as harboring the most liberal wing of the Catholic Church in the West — there was much talk of Dutch Catholics wanting more dialogue with Rome over matters that concerned them.

"Progressive" Dutch leaders were reportedly dissatisfied with the pope's traditional stand on various aspects of Christian doctrine, especially with regard to the church's code of sexual ethics.

So what happened?

— Before his arrival, signs were posted in Amsterdam urging riots during his visit, and a reward was offered for the pope's assassination. A trade union group distributed an open letter to reporters beforehand, sharply criticizing the pope's stands on Nicaragua, abortion and radical feminism.

— Several hundred youths in Utrecht, many in punk dress, burned an effigy of the pope after his arrival. Anonymous protesters in ski masks, shouting profanities and singing, "Kill the pope," hurled rocks, bottles and rotten eggs at the pontiff's white vehicle.

— Demonstrators in The Hague — ranging from homosexuals and lesbians masquerading as priests and nuns to members of the international pacifist group Pax Christi — denounced the Vatican's stand against Marxist infiltration of the church in Nicaragua. Other protesters, with contraceptive devices garishly wrapped around their necks, released hundreds of helium-filled condoms into the air as they marched past police. One banner defiantly proclaimed: "If the pope could be pregnant, abortion would be a sacrament."

— In televised meetings, dissident Dutch Catholics, including a well-known laywoman and a missionary official, rebuked the pope for defending the church's stand against premarital sex, divorce, homosexuality, married priests and the ordination of women.

Perhaps it's belaboring the obvious. But if this is "dialogue," we hesitate to imagine what the Dutch version of open rebellion must be like.

State secrets 'blowing in wind'

WASHINGTON — Washington is one of the few places in the world where state secrets can be found blowing in the wind — literally.

Jack Anderson

A reader called us to report seeing highly classified government documents strewn around the playground of an abandoned school in the northwest section of the city. A visit to the scene confirmed the information: Amid hundreds of papers scattered about were dozens bearing the familiar red stamps at top and bottom: top secret, secret and confidential.

Fortunately, the Playground Papers were somewhat dated — ranging from 1948 to 1962. But portions of them, at least, would undoubtedly be denied to anyone seeking them under the Freedom of Information Act. And under the rules as interpreted by the Reagan administration, prying the documents loose would probably entail months or years of delays.

Though no self-respecting spy would pay a ruble for the Playground Papers, they do provide a fascinating inside view of history in the making — and some thoughts that are relevant for U.S. policy makers today.

They were the work of a distinguished American diplomat, the late G. Lewis Jones Jr., whose Foreign Service career as a Middle Eastern expert led to his appointment as director of the State Department's office dealing with the region. He was also the first U.S. ambassador to Tunisia.

As nearly as we can figure it, Jones had taken classified documents home with him and eventually put them in a file cabinet with personal effects and stored them in a warehouse near the playground. Thieves broke into the warehouse, carted off the file cabinet, looted it of valuables and left the secrets behind.

The oldest document we found was dated August 1948, and was a classified analysis titled "Reassessment of American Policy in the Middle East." It confirms many critics' longheld suspicion that the State Department was heavily laden with what Jones described as "Arab-lovers such as myself" among career Foreign Sevice officers. He knew "the State Department crowd fairly well ..." he wrote. "To a large degree in the past, many of them have shared my thinking."

But Jones was not blind to the Arab leaders' faults. "I have felt a keen sense of personal shame with regard to various phases of (pro-Israeli) U.S. policy in Palestine," he wrote. "However, I must admit that the Arab performance has been so bad that it begins to make the pro-Zionist course of the U.S. government in recent years appear much more realistic and logical than the framers of U.S. policy probably had in mind."

Jones was appalled by the Arab nations' "pathetic performance" during the first war against Israel, and the "series of displays of disunity and ineptitude ... produced in recent weeks."

As for the "Arab awakening" about which he and his friends had "talked glibly" for years, Jones observed bitterly: "There has not been an Arab awakening: the Arabs merely turned over in their deep sleep."

He added forthrightly: "I confess that almost none of my predictions with regard to the Arabs have come to pass. The Arab performance in connection with Palestine has been marked by such a compound of the worst features of their complex heritage that I can still hardly believe it. ... The Arab effort has, in the main, been largely one of bluff and braggadocio which was quickly dissipated whenever the Arab groups met the Jews in strength."

The "Arabist awakening" of G. Lewis Jones Jr. was just one subject of historical interest addressed in the Playground Papers. More later.

WILSON UPDATE: Our suggestion that the overnight visit Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, two aides and three friends paid to the aircraft carrier Saratoga was a $4,000 junket has been effusively contradicted by Wilson and the Navy.

At least we think it has; the evidence offered to refute the suggestion is couched in sometimes impenetrable Pentagon jargon.

Wilson's office thoughtfully provided us with a hand-printed itinerary of the trip taken May 3-4 by "CODEL" or "CODEL WILSON" — which is government talk for the "congressional delegation" led by Wilson. The idea, apparently, was to show us how utterly businesslike the whole junket was.

Using the military's preferred 24-hour time designations, the itinerary beings with Friday's "1300 — CODEL departs Rayburn horseshoe via Navy sedan" and ends two pages later with Saturday's "1310 — CODEL departs NAF (Naval airfield) Washington for Rayburn horseshoe."

In between horseshoes (a reference to the Rayburn House Office Building's U-shaped main entrance), Wilson's pitch contains these highlights:

"1705 — ... CODEL reveives general orientation film on aircraft carrier operations."

"1725 — CODEL escorted to primary flight control to observe daylight flight operations."

"1900 — Rep. Wilson addresses members of wardroom and conducts Q & A session on military issues."

"2000 — ... Rep. Wilson conducted lengthy interview of ship's company officer aviator and enlisted operations specialist on retention issues."

"2200 — CODEL escorted to primary flight control to observe night flight operations."

"2330 — CODEL escorted to respective berthing compartments."

Hoping for 'small and medium'

LAKE BALATON, Hungary — The anniversary of victory in Europe has come and gone and there is still a certain tension in the East.

Flora Lewis

Veteran East European diplomats, gathered here for a private meeting, say the Russians are getting ready for serious negotiations with the United States. Moscow always tightens up, they say, when it is preparing for difficult talks.

For nearly a year now, the V-E Day celebrations were the big coming event in the East bloc. It was not just a matter of commemoration. The point was fully current and political — to make clear that 40 years after the war, Soviet dominion of Eastern Europe remains firmly in place and must be acknowledged by all as a fact of the modern world.

There have been many changes in that time. Eastern Europe is by no means the monolith Stalin tried to impose. Each country is different in its own traditional and historical way, but Moscow sets the limits.

That is why there is particular irritation in the Kremlin when President Reagan speaks of refusing to accept Yalta. The Russians know the West is not going to do anything about the East-West division of Europe. But they are determined to show people on both sides of the line that they are in charge here.

Sir Frank Roberts, a veteran British diplomat who worked closely with Winston Churchill in the war and early postwar period, recently remembered being told in Moscow when the Iron Curtain clanged shut, "We will try to make trouble on your side, and you will try to make trouble on ours, but you will have a much harder time."

In any case, when the Russians approach what they consider a really important bargain, their allies are expected to stiffen up and stay out of the way so as not to complicate matters.

The search for a new Soviet-American agreement is most welcome to Eastern Europeans. They were the prime beneficiaries of detente, which opened opportunities to them for trade, development and contacts that cannot be replaced in any other way.

But there may be a difficult period now for a new leader in the Kremlin and new uncertainties. A phrase has come into wide diplomatic usage in these parts that represents current hopes. It is "small and medium countries."

That sounds anodyne, but it is a code with intense if ambiguous undertones. It means the recognition of certain superpower absolutes in world affairs, but an effort to carve out elbow room within that frame for the lesser but no less vital national interests of other states. It is primarily an appeal to Western Europe, but also the United States, to provide flexibility for engagements that do not necessarily involve the Russians, but won't provoke them either.

This is likely to be the theme of developments in Europe for the rest of the century, despite recurrent strains and upheavals. It is the continuity underlying the rapid changes that are coming through technology, in military systems as well as in civilian life.

The fear of being left behind technologically, of lagging in the new industrial age as some countries floundered in the 19th century while others raced ahead, has spread across the whole of Europe. There is no way for "small and medium countries" to cope with the change alone, so it is becoming the new driving force for political connections that transcend ideology and custom.

The centerpiece of Soviet-American relations now is the Geneva arms talks. But while they are limited to three specific issues — intercontinental nuclear weapons, medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe and weapons in space — the negotiations focus the whole range of questions that determine the international political climate.

Almost by happenstance, Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative has become the critical point. It shouldn't seem as important to either side at this early stage of research as it is being made to. But it is turning into the ghost that haunts the technological future.

The concerns of "small and medium countries" everywhere in Europe shouldn't be drowned out by the specter's sarieks. These are people who are obliged to stay earthy and are trying as best they can to keep the everyday world on a steady course.

ART BUCHWALD

History marches past facts

There is a great deal of rewriting of history in the United States these days. One of the most outstanding scholars in the field is Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, who chairs the President's Commission for Historical Revisionism.

Art Buchwald

I found Applebaum in a tiny government office off Lafayette Park, tapping away on his word processor. He seemed to be grateful for the interruption.

"What are you working on?" I asked him.

He replied, "'I Was a Teenage SS Colonel.' It is the diary of a child who serves for 14 years as a storm trooper, only to become one of the millions of victims of World War II."

"Where did you find the diary?"

"I was tipped off by one of President Reagan's speechwriters."

"How do you explain the sudden interest in historical revisionism?"

Applebaum said, "You can't learn from history unless you rewrite it. The job of the revisionist is to make people forget the past. The neo-historian looks at what has been printed so far and then asks himself, 'Will this hurt or help our present alliances?' If it hurts, then he must reconcile the facts with what is in the nation's best interest."

"Can you give me an example?"

"When the revisionists saw that the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II was coming up, we realized that the German people would be very sensitive if they were shown in a bad light. So we assigned a crack team of neo-historians to make their role in the unpleasantness more palatable. This book was the result." He handed me a volume titled "We Were All Guilty."

As I leafed through it he told me, "It proves that Adolf Hitler started World War II against the express wishes of the German people. As a matter of fact, we discovered the entire population rose up to stop him from invading Czechoslovakia, Poland and France."

"That's quite a scoop," I said. "You must have done a lot of research."

"We interviewed hundreds of people who lived through those days and couldn't find one who admitted to supporting Hitler's mad ambition to take over the world. This confirmed our earlier suspicions that Hitler worked alone."

"It sounds like you've got a Pulitzer prize winner here," I said. "What's this other manuscript?".

"That's my revisionist history of the war in the Pacific. It sheds a whole new light on how we got involved."

"In what way?"

"I discovered the Russians bombed Pearl Harbor."

"That's one I hadn't heard before."

"They wanted us to think the Japanese had done it so we would declare war on the Axis powers. Roosevelt fell for it hook, line and sinker."

"I always thought there was more to Pearl Harbor than any of us had been led to believe. But if the Russians sank our fleet, why did the Japanese capture the Philippines?"

"Who says the Japanese captured the Philippines? They were Cubans dressed as Japanese."

I looked over the manuscript and was impressed with what I read. "If the United States had known who really bombed Pearl Harbor I'll bet we would never have dropped the atom bomb on Hiroshima."

"Who said the United States dropped the bomb on Hiroshima?"

"Don't tell me. If we didn't do it, who did?"

Applebaum said tersely, "The Nicaraguans."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 22, 1819, the first steam-propelled vessel to attempt a trans-Atlantic crossing, the "Savannah," departed from Savannah, Ga. The ship arrived in Liverpool, England, on June 20.

On this date:

In 1761, the first life insurance policy in the U.S. was issued, in Philadelphia.

In 1813, composer Richard Wagner was born in Leipzig, Germany.

In 1856, violence broke out in the chamber of the U.S. Senate as Rep. Preston S. Brooks of South Carolina used a cane to severely beat Massachusetts Sen. Charles Sumner.

In 1868, the Great Train Robbery took place in Indiana as seven men held up the crew, detached the locomotive, and made off with $96,000 in cash.

In 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt went before Congres to explain his veto of the Patman Bonus Bill to pay World War I veterans the remainder of their 1924 bonuses.

Club lets vintage Mustang owners cruise memory lane

LUMBERTON, Texas (AP) — One slight push on the gas pedal of the 1965 blue Mustang coupe sends the speedometer roaring past legal limits and time melts away. The driver turns 17 again, listening to the radio blasting the Beach Boys singing "I Get Around."

For some 35 area residents, driving a vintage made-in-the-U.S.A. Mustang made between 1964 and 1973 is an everyday occurrence. But so are off-work hours spent heavily buffing and polishing the car's already showroom surface, or greasy minutes spent tinkering with an engine in better shape than one just off the assembly line, despite an odometer reading 89,000 miles.

These local afficionados decided recently to share their love of the sports car officially by forming the Southeast Texas Mustang Club, one of four regional groups in the state. As clubmembers, they meet once a month, forming a network for hard-to-find parts and intricate engine knowledge. "I guess you could say we're kind of reliving," says club secretary Bonnie Truax, who adds that her lifetime friend Bill Caywood first had the idea for the club.

Mrs. Truax says present membership learned of the group through word of mouth, or from group interest in finding the same auto parts. "It's just a rare type of car," she says. "People restore them and have a lot of fun doing it. So we formed a club so we could share thoughts."

Mrs. Truax laughs as she explains that her husband, Harvey, a mechanic by day at a local car dealership, spends all his off-work hours under the hoods of their green or maroon Mustangs. "He's probably a little nuts," Bonnie Truax says. "No... he just loves it and it's a hobby to him as well.

Mickey Pellerin says he's a club oddity because he actually owned a Mustang during the car's initial heyday, long before he joined the club. "In 1965, I bought a brand new Mustang," Pellerin says. "And I kept it for 11 years. But I missed my Mustang, so I found this one." The car Pellerin found is the stereotypical Mustang memory, glistening bright red, the convertible roof reclining to reveal shiny bucket seats, while underneath the hood sits an engine guaranteed to win a pink slip in any off-the-highway drag race.

Nancy daisy absent from flower list

AALSMEER, Netherlands (AP) — If a daisy could blush, then that's what the purple Gerbera, named after Nancy Reagan and struck from the White House's flower list, would be doing.

From the world's largest flower auction house here millions of flowers and potted plants are dispatched every day to grace homes ranging from the White House to Saudi and Danish royal palaces.

But even Dutch floral experts, whose taste is finely tuned to the fashion of their most perishable of products, can guess wrong when it comes to their customers.

The "Nancy Reagan" Gerbera daisy failed to win the heart of America's First Lady two years ago, despite a "real nice party to baptize the first daisy crop with the American ambassador," according to Frans Maarse, export manager of the Klaas van Zijverden firm, which has stocked the White House with flowers for the last four years via an American flower importer.

"We were told not to send it anymore because it was a rather difficult color to match in the White House," said Maarse of the "Nancy Reagan."

"They like a lot of soft colors, white tulips in summer and winter, and pink tulips...which look nice in the pink room," said Maarse, who visited the Reagan residence at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue in 1982 and was shown around by the head florist.

Other White House favorites, Maarse told The Associated Press, are lilies, lilacs and orchids.

Few of the 300 flower buyers with offices in the 111-acre Aalsmeer Flower Auction can claim to send their sweet-smelling merchandise to such illustrious destinations as the White House.

But more than 80 percent of the total of 12 million flowers and 900,000 potted plants auctioned off here daily are exported to countries as far afield as Japan, Australia, South Africa, Abu Dhabi, Saudi Arabia and Venezuela — making the Netherlands the world's largest flower-exporting nation.

The value of Dutch flower and plant exports totaled about $925 million last year.

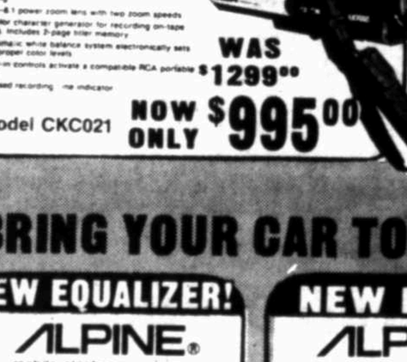

"To maintain our position things have to move quickly," said Cor de Vries, export director of Klaas van Zijverden, adding that "here people know they can find the most exclusive flowers. That's why we must also import from all over the world to always have a nice, exclusive assortment."

Despite Holland's 10,149 acres of artificially heated greenhouses devoted to floriculture, de Vries said that some flowers — such as carnations — are not readily available in winter.

Importing such species is necessary, often for export the same morning they arrive.

Like most decorative items, flowers succumb to quickly changing fashions, according to Maarse, who says that at the moment the demand is strong for artificially colored flowers, to match interior color schemes in homes.

"People are still asking for black tulips and it's not even possible to dye a flower black," said Maarse, although "people are working on it."

Heavy rain hits region

Associated Press

Strong thunderstorms dumped heavy rains over the southwest third of the Texas Panhandle and parts of the South Plains this morning as an upper-level disturbance tracked across the area.

Late Tuesday night, the National Weather Service posted a flash flood warning for several counties just west of Amarillo, but the warnings expired early today with no damage being reported.

Elsewhere, bands of high clouds hugged the coastal waters and lower Rio Grande Valley, while the remainder of the Lone Star State woke up to fair skies this morning.

Pre-dawn temperatures were generally in the 60s except in the rain-cooled air in the northwest, where readings dipped into the 50s. Temperatures at 4 a.m. ranged from 53 degrees at Marfa to 72 degrees at Beaumont and Port Arthur, the weather service said.

In the forecast, skies should be partly cloudy and mild through Thursday with a chance of scattered thunderstorms both days. High temperatures should be mostly in the 70s and 80s, while overnight lows should dip into the 40s in the Panhandle and the 50s elsewhere.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled across the South, along the Atlantic Coast and from Colorado into Texas today.

One band of thunderstorms reached from northern Arkansas and southern Missouri across western Tennessee, northern Mississippi, northern Alabama and central Georgia.

Another band of thunderstorms was moving along the northern half of the Atlantic Coast, while others stretched from southeast Colorado across eastern New Mexico into the Texas Panhandle.

Today's forecast called for rain and thunderstorms over the Ohio and Tennessee valleys, the southern half of the Appalachians, Florida, the eastern coast of the Gulf of Mexico and from north central Texas across the Texas Panhandle through northern New Mexico.

Highs were expected to be in the 60s across much of Maine and in parts of the Great Lakes region; 90s across the Georgia coast, much of Florida and the desert Southwest; and in the 70s to 80s across much of the rest of the nation.

Temperatures around the nation at 1 a.m. EDT ranged from 33 degrees at Marquette, Mich., to 82 at Key West, Fla.

Quarterback Tuey Rankin and halfback Rodney Sims went a long way Tuesday night at Memorial Stadium to help Midland Lee football fans survive the next three months.

Lee ended its spring training drills with the annual Maroon-White scrimmage and there was not a fan present who wasn't wondering what the Rebels would be like without the departed likes of Texas Tech bound Walter Jones and Tyrone Thurman, both of whom watched for the first time from the stands.

Enter stage right Rankin and Sims to give "New Traditionalists" a sigh of relief. It is in the offensive backfield where some major concerns have been cast toward the 1985 Rebels. Rankin and Sims gave some welcome answers.

Rankin, who missed much of spring training due to baseball duties, rushed for 185 yards on 17 carries. He broke the first play of the game 70 yards for a touchdown and gave the Maroon a 42-35 victory when he fired a 33-yard TD pass to Sims with seven seconds left. It was the right way to start and finish business.

Sims had 171 yards on 15 carries and scored four times, including his Rankin connection at the end. Sims also scored on runs of 57, 18 and eight yards, showing some remarkable open field talent.

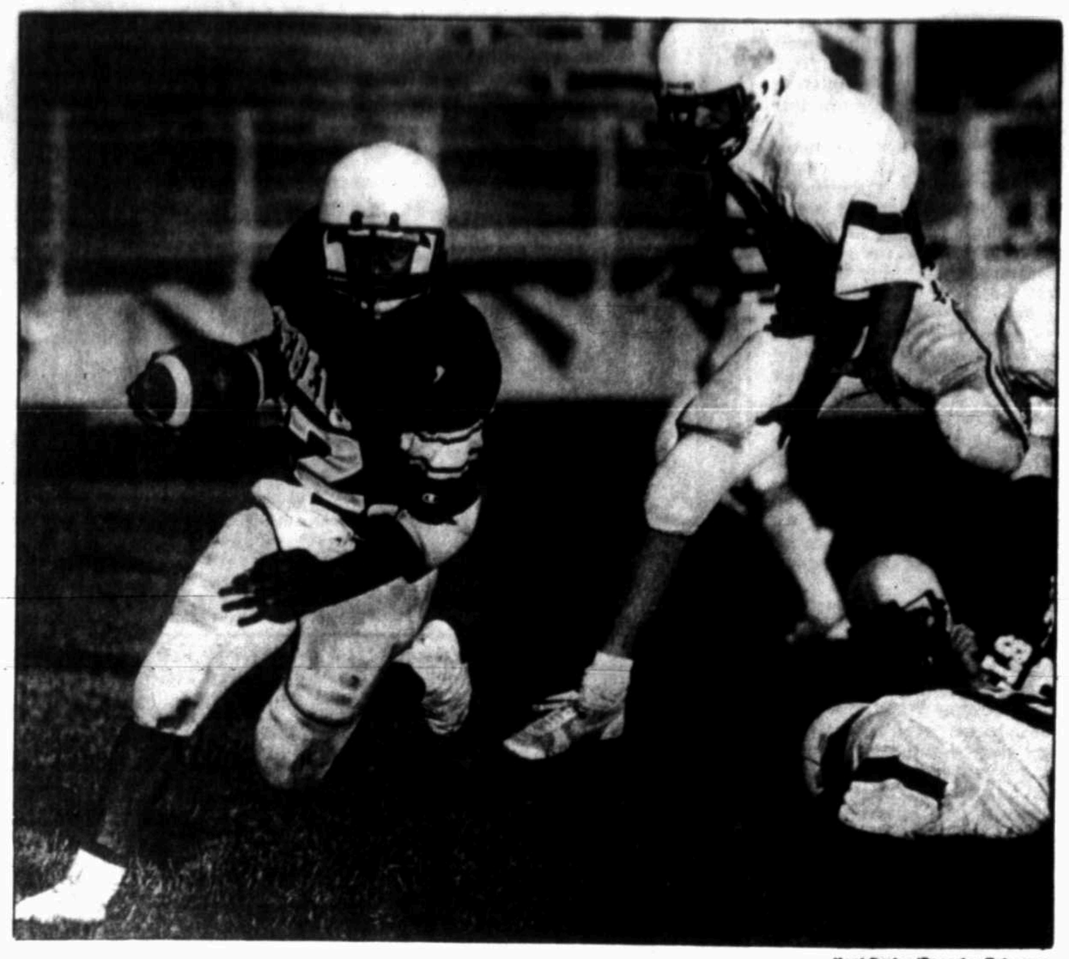

Actually, the Maroon team outscored the Whites by five touchdowns, but the White team, which consisted of the No. 2 offense and defense, was given seven points at the beginning of each new quarter. They were insured of 28 points.

"Both Rankin and Sims had good nights. There is no question about that," said Lee coach Jack Tayrien. "We saw some good things. We were concerned with the running back situation, but we knew we had a lot of competition back there for positions.

"I thought both teams played very well and Rankin and (Rodney) Johnson both looked good at quarterback. I thought our No. 1 defensive team played very well. I was pleased the way the two squads got after it. They gave a good effort. We fumbled too much and made a lot of mistakes, but I didn't see anything that can't be corrected."

Rankin would have had well over 200 yards rushing if he hadn't been caught for losses six times, a hazard for any quarterback.

TCU formula for victory: Pitching, defense, speed

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

For the third time this year, a Texas Christian University representative was in the halls of Midland High, seeking out athletic talent for the future of Horned Frog competiveness.

Unlike the first two ventures, which collared football players Darrell Davis and Allen Foret, this time it was baseball coach Bragg Stockton making the raid. His target was Bulldog second baseman Darren Thorpe.

Thorpe is the kind of player Stockton has been looking for this year: Good defensive ability and quick down the line. He fits the mold in Stockton's winning formula.

"Darren could be an outstanding infielder but we'd like to see if he can play center field and be a lead-off hitter," said Stockton. "He's a switch hitter and we'd like to work with him on that because the Southwest Conference has as many left-handed pitcher as right-handed. He also knows how to run the bases and that's important because we're a running team. We stole about 100 bases last year."

Last year, Stockton's second at the TCU helm, produced a 35-17 record (an improvement over the 26-22 mark in his first year) and came just short of a berth in the SWC post-season four-team tournament.

Stockton's formula for success: "Good pitching from the right and left sides and strong defense. Our team defense last year was .965 or above. If you can keep the ERA below 3.00 it's awesome.

"Those are the two big stats. Then, you have to be able to steal 100 bases a year and you have to be successful at the things that move runners along like the hit and run, run and hit , sacrifce bunt. We work hard at our bunting. Basically, it's a low ERA, high team defensive average and speed."

And, what about hitting?

"We work probably as hard on hitting as anything we do but you can't win with just your hitting," said Stockton. "If you don't have a pitching staff and team defense, you give away more games than you get back."

Stockton's philosophy, especially the base stealing which is an area Thorpe has really worked at hard the past three years, was a main reason why the MHS senior chose TCU. That and the academics for his major in medicine.

"I looked at a couple of schools and I decided that TCU's program was the one I could step into and contribute," said Thorpe. "I like Coach Stockton's style of coaching. I think I'll fit TCU's mold better than any other school I visited."

WHEN STOCKTON came to TCU two seasons ago, he brought successful junior college and SWC coaching credentials. As the head coach at San Jacinto Junior College, his teams posted a 424-112 record and "we went to nationals three times and finished as high as second. We missed going up there by one game three other times."

Stockton's last post before coming to TCU was at the University of Houston where he was an assistant coach, again with a successful team.

"I was an assistant at the University of Houston for three years and we were in the Southwest Conference tournament all three years. I was there when we went to the West Two regionals," said Stockton.

Now, as a SWC head coach, Stockton is trying to put a few changes into the league's way of thinking. One change is to revamp the current SWC regular season schedule to give fans of each school a chance to see more home games each year against other SWC schools.

"We only played three conference teams at home this year," said Stockton. "I submited a plan to the SWC where the teams would be zoned and we'd play three-game home and home stands with each team in our zone and doubleheaders against teams in the other zone. That way, our fans would get to see five of the teams in the league."

His other plan is to get the SWC to expand its post-season tournament from a four-team field to six. He doesn't believe that the extra two teams would diminish the quality of the tournament "no matter where it was held. This year, there wasn't a spits worth of difference between the third, fourth, fifth and sixth place teams," said Stockton. "A lot of the games were decided by one run.

"This league is so even it's incredible. Texas has the edge over the rest of the teams for a couple of reasons. One, it's the state university and it has a tradition of winning and two, they have the Castle (Dischfaulk Stadium) down thee and that's where the high school kids play there state games so they all want to go there. The problem with that is there are so many going there and only 40 or so can make it."

And that leaves a lot of talent left over for Stockton to go after, talent TCU needs to pick up if the Horned Frogs hope to please their fans.

"Our fans are outstanding," said Stockton. "We have tremendous fan support at TCU. On most weekends the stands are filled and they're sitting on the hill and on the batting cage watching the games. If you were playing pick-up sticks, they'd be out there rooting for you. They don't care about the score or if you're impoving. What they want to know is if it's a W or an L."

At least in the past couple of years, the Ws have been pulling away from the Ls.

Drillers sneak by Angels, 2-1

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Angels Stadium doesn't see too many games like this. With the wind blowing in, it was a pitchers' park and Tulsa lefthander Rob Clark and Midland righthander Fred Wilburn staged a classic duel through eight innings. Unfortunately, the same luck that dogged the Angels through the recent road trip reared it's game-costing head in the ninth inning and Midland lost 2-1 in the opener of a 10-game home stand.

The Drillers pushed over a run in the ninth inning to even the season's series between the Texas League rivals at 3-3.

"It was a nice job of base running by Mark Gile," praised Tulsa Manager Orlando Gomez.

"Who'd ever have thought Julian (Gonzalez) would throw two wild pitches," lamented Midland Manager Joe Madden.

A single to right with one out in the ninth by Gile got Wilburn, who pitched magnificent four-hit ball, out of the game. Gonzalez wild pitched Gile to second and then the winning play, a bold bit of base running that paid off.

Javier Ortiz grounded to third and Gile raced to third, barely beating Mark Bonner's return throw from first.

So Gile was on third when submariner Gonzalez uncorked that uncustomary wild pitch that decided the game.

THE DRAMA, however, was not yet over. In the ninth, Clyde Reichard, a seven-win-five-save bullpen stud, took over for Clark and walked the first two batters and a crowd of 1,199 buzzed with anticipation.

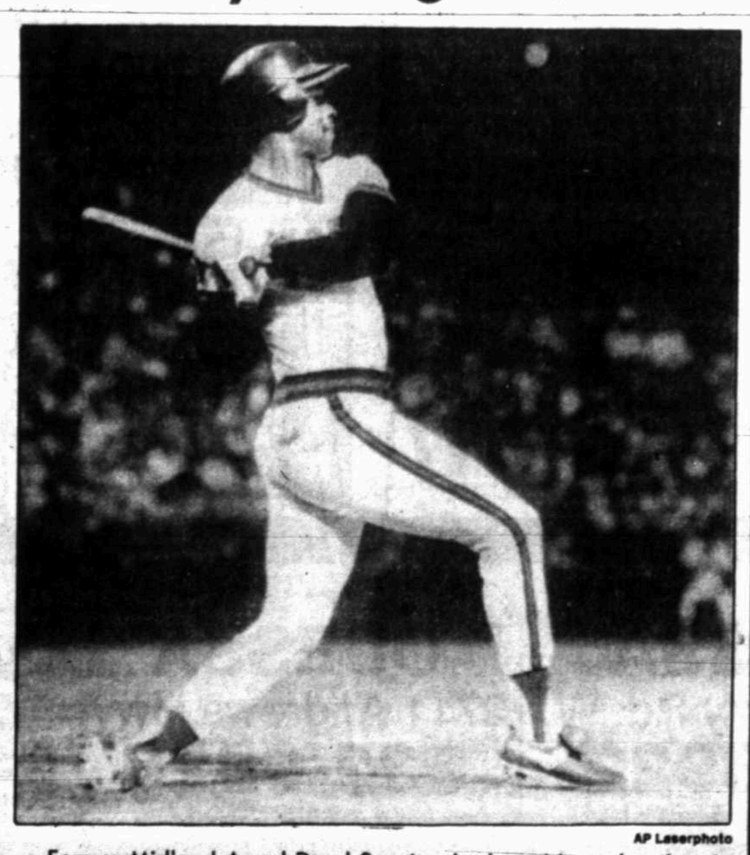

No worry. Gomez simply went to the bullpen for Charles Hudson, his three-win-four-save fireman. Dwayne Murphy popped out on a bunt attempt and then Juan Cruz hit a liner that Hudson gloved and turned to double Bonner off second.

"A foot either side and it's a hit and the game's tied," replayed Murphy who has seen his team lose five one-run games in the last 11. "Last year at Peoria, we were a good one-run team, 32-20, but this year we can't get the big hit although we are hitting the ball hard. Murphy sliced that ball and Doug Davis just missed getting a two-bagger."

BUT UNTIL the ninth it was the Clark-Wilburn show, backed up by some clutch defensive plays.

By all rights, Wilburn, 9-5 with eight complete games at Redwood last year and pressed into a starting role after an April in the bullpen, by injuries, should have won. This was his best effort yet. In 8⅓ innings, he walked just one and two of the four hits could have been outs. Clark walked four and gave up five hits.

Boddicker walks in winner for A's

Associated Press

With the bases loaded, two out in the bottom of the 10th inning and the score tied, the last thing Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli expected was Mike Boddicker to walk anyone.

So what did Boddicker do?

He threw four straight high pitches to Dwayne Murphy, which forced in the winning run Tuesday night and gave the Oakland A's a 3-2 victory over the Orioles.

"The one thing I thought 'Bodd' wouldn't do was walk him on four straight pitches," Altobelli said.

Boddicker, the American League's only 20-game winner last season, figured he could have had better luck.

"I thought the second pitch was a strike," he said. "Getting a 1-1 count, instead of 2-0, would have made an awful lot of difference."

Royals 5, Rangers 0

George Brett hit a pair of two-run homers and Bud Black pitched a three-hitter to lead Kansas City over Frank Tanana and host Texas.

Brett belted a home run in the first inning after a single by Willie Wilson, and homered again in the eighth after a walk to Lonnie Smith. Brett has hit seven home runs this season, and twice has hit two in one game.

Jim Sundberg added a solo shot to back Black, 4-3, who gave up three singles. It was the second shutout and second three-hitter of his career.

Angels 2, Tigers 1

California rookie Kirk McCaskill held Detroit hitless for 6⅓ innings. Tigers starter Jack Morris took a one-hitter into the seventh.

But neither McCaskill nor Morris was around at the end to get a decision. The end came when Ruppert Jones cracked an RBI double with one out in the 11th inning.

Yankees 11, Mariners 1

Not even a brownout at the Seattle Kingdome could halt New York's attack.

The Yankees knocked out Mariners starter Mark Langston, 5-4, with one out in the first inning by scoring four runs.

Rickey Henderson drove in four runs, three with a home run in the sixth, and also doubled and singled while scoring three times. Dave Winfield contributed three of New York's 14 hits.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 3

Jeff Burroughs lined a one-out single in the bottom of the ninth inning, driving in George Bell from third base with the winning run.

Bell started the ninth with a double off reliever Bob James and moved to third on a flyout. Burroughs then singled just past the outstretched glove of third baseman Luis Salazar.

Indians 6, Brewers 4

Brook Jacoby hit a two-run homer in the fifth to put Cleveland ahead 5-4, and relievers Bryan Clark and Rich Thompson held off visiting Milwaukee.

Jacoby's blow came off Ted Higuera, 1-3. Chris Bando added a sacrifice fly in the eighth.

Clark, 1-0, entered the game with one out in the Milwaukee third and allowed one run in three innings to get the victory. Thompson gave up

Sims and Rankin also had a big edge since they were running behind the No. 1 offensive line, which returns seven veterans from last year's 12-2 team. "The Piglets" appear to be as mean as ever and hold a big key to Lee's offensive success this next year.

In all, Lee coaches got a look at 15 running backs. The Maroons rolled out 433 yards rushing and 48 more passing. The negative was three lost fumbles. The White squad had 134 yards rushing and four yards passing with the negatives being two interceptions and one lost fumble.

Quarterback Rodney Johnson paced the Whites with 67 yards rushing on 12 carries. Sophomore Joe Woodard showed a lot of promise with 40 yards rushing on 13 carries. He had 35 yards at the half.

The Maroon scored four times in the first half. Rankin's 70-yard scrimmage opener started it. They came back with a 70-yard march that was set up by Rankin's 24-yard run to the White 10. Fullback Novert Morales, who rushed for 42 yards, got the final yard.

A fumble recovery by Don Forsythe set up Sims' 18-yard TD romp as the Maroon scored on its first three possessions. Sims' 57-yard scamper in the second period showed his open field ability as he juked past a couple of defenders on his way to paydirt.

After Dejuan Norris recoverd a Maroon fumble at the 40, the Whites got in on the scoring act for the only time of the night. Johnson romped 30 yards to set up a four-yard TD run by fullback Tommy Wood.

The two teams were scoreless in the third period, but the Maroon marched 36 yards for another score on Sims' eight-yard bust up the White middle. A 27-yard TD pass from Rankin to Sims, netted only 15 yards after a penalty negated the TD.

The Maroon won the contest by marching 70 yards in the final two minutes of play. Sims' 28-yard run and 33-yard TD reception from Rankin ate up ground in a hurry.

One Lee fan noted after the scrimmage, "Well, I guess we're open until September. I wish it was next week."

ANGELS—

According to Baseball's Law to Pitchers, Thou Shalt Not Walk, Wilburn should have won. But then injustice is running rampant among Angels these days.

Jeff Moronko opened the game with a triple to center and scored on Gile's grounder to second, Tulsa 1-0.

Midland tied it in the second when Mark Bonner singled to center and moved to third on Billie Merrifield's hit. Unfortunately, Merrifield made too wide a turn and was caught by centerfielder Ruben Sierra's throw and relay. The run scored when Dwayne Murphy walked and a pick off throw got away from first baseman Ortiz for an error. Well, perhaps there was in justice on both sides.

Midland had a chance to score again in the fifth when Doug Davis reached on an error, stole second, his first of the year, and tried to score on a two-out single to center by Greg Key. Sierra's perfect throw cut down the run at the plate.

"With two out, he had to go and it looked like a good gamble," said Madden. "The ball wasn't hit that hard and Sierra had to come in for it."

In the eighth, one-out walks to Key and Devon White again offered promise, but Tulsa's version of catcher Doug Davis gunned down Key trying to steal.

HALO HOOPS — Barry Bass, 2-5, starts for Tulsa tonight against Don Timberlake, 2-4....Game time is 7 p.m. and it's Knothole Gang Night...Both teams are hurting injury wise and Javier Ortiz just joined the club as a result of a shoulder injury which sidelined Oscar Mejia, one of the top defensive players in the Texas Rangers' organization...With Daryl Sconiers being called back to California, where he went 0-for-4 Tuesday, and second baseman Mark McLemore in California for treatment of an injured knee, the Angels are really playing with a skeleton crew. But that's not all of it. Catcher Dave Heath discovered upon Midland's return from the road trip that he had been walking around with pneumonia for the last 12 days. "The worst is over and I should be ready to play in a few days."...Pitcher Todd Fisher, acquired from Oakland, is reporting from the Mexican League to bolster the Angels hill staff...Clark pitched in Tulsa in 1983 and was in triple A last year. "He finished the season in Tulsa after he developed arm trouble last year," explained Gomez.

Flyers down Oilers, 4-1

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — With Ron Sutter watching his every move, Wayne Gretzky was just a shadow of his usual self.

Gretzky, the most prolific scorer in National Hockey League history, not only was held off the scoreboard altogether, but failed to even get a shot on goal as the Philadelphia Flyers defeated the Edmonton Oilers 4-1 Tuesday night in the opening game of the Stanley Cup finals.

The Flyers, with the best home record in the NHL this season, 40-5-4 including eight in the playoffs, host Edmonton in Game 2 of the best-of-seven series Thursday night.

Sutter, who also scored the game's decisive goal, refused to take the credit. The Flyers, playing the strong, tough defensive hockey that got them to the title series, closed the nets on the defending-champion Oilers, holding them to 26 shots on goal, 14 in the last period.

Edmonton entered the contest as the highest-scoring team in the playoffs, averaging 5.9 goals-a-game in 13 previous games.

They scored their lone goal while trailing 3-0 with three minutes and eight seconds left in the game. That tally ended a streak of 149 minutes and 50 seconds of scoreless playoff work by winning goaltender, Pelle Lindbergh.

"I'm a little more aware when he (Gretzky) is on the ice, but I didn't try to shadow him," said Sutter. "It was a total team effort that shut him down.

"I don't think we gave him a chance to get going. You don't want him to throw you off your game. You have to make him watch you as much as you watch him. I don't think only about him because that would take me out of my game."

Sutter, who also assisted on Dave Poulin's empty-net goal in the final minute of play, observed: "I know it makes me better to play a great player like Gretzky. You get the chance to play against the best in the league and it gives you the chance to improve."

"I can't remember a game when I didn't get a shot," said the frustrated Gretzky, who has won the NHL regular-season scoring title five straight times.

"You know you're going to play a good team in the final, but I played a bad game. I didn't play well tonight.

"But it takes 20 guys to win. I'll be back Thursday and I'll play better."

Gretzky had scored 36 points (10 goals, 26 assists) in the Oilers' previous 13 playoff games this year — just two points shy of his own Stanley Cup record of 38, set two years ago.

Philadelphia took a 1-0 lead at 15:05 of the first period on a rebound shot by Ilkka Sinisalo with the Flyers on a power play.

The score remained 1-0 until 5:56 of the third period as Lindbergh and Oilers' goalie Grant Fuhr played exceptionally well in the nets.

Then, Sutter intercepted a pass outside the Edmonton blue line, skated in and beat Fuhr with a backhander over the goalie's glove to make it 2-0.

Tim Kerr, who missed the last five playoff games because of a sprained knee, made it 3-0 at 8:07 on a rebound from just outside the crease.

Kerr, who wore a knee brace, said his knee felt "pretty good."

"It's still a little tender, but it gets better every day," he said.

Edmonton finally got a goal at 16:52 when Willy Lindstrom backhanded a shot into the net over Lindbergh, who had slipped to the ice.

The Flyers ended the scoring at 19:39 when Poulin flipped one into an empty net after Fuhr had departed for a sixth attacker.

"We played exactly the game we wanted to," Poulin said. "It was a case of a perfectly executed game plan and five guys going all out on every shift."

"They forced us into a lot of bad plays and mistakes that we don't usually make," said Edmonton star Mark Messier. "And we didn't take advantage of our chances. We never seemed to get any flow going until the third period."

Oilers' coach Glen Sather said his team spent the first two periods trying to kill penalties.

"That hurt our team a lot. We played like we were skating in sand all night."

Sather said he didn't think the Flyers did anything to stop Gretzky.

"I think he stopped himself. He just didn't skate and play as well as he's capable of."

Sather discounted the fact that Gretzky had been nursing a cold.

"We can't make excuses. In the Stanley Cup you find guys played with broken legs."

Sather criticized the condition of the ice on a warm night. He added, "the referees were as good as the ice."

The Flyers, who have won 22 of their last 23 games at home, now are unbeaten in the last nine games (8-0-1) against the Oilers, who last won here Nov. 13, 1982.

Memphis area facing grand jury investigation

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — United States Attorney Hickman Ewing Jr. says he expects a grand jury investigation into sports gambling in the Memphis area to lead to indictments against alleged bookmakers.

But Ewing said Tuesday he could not predict when the indictments will be returned.

Neither would the federal prosecutor discuss rumors that the grand jury is interested in the athletic program at Memphis State University.

"The overall investigation is going to be several months before its conclusion," Ewing said. "We're after bookmakers. There are tax implications also."

Seven witnesses, including the general manager of the Colonial Country Club and his assistant manager, testified before the panel Tuesday.

Ewing said the grand jury has recessed until the week of June 3.

"The FBI and IRS will be interviewing people between now and then," Ewing said. "There will be some more people subpoenaed."

Published reports have suggested a connection between professional gambling and the Memphis State basketball team, which finished last season with a 31-4 record and a trip to the semifinals of the NCAA playoffs.

Injured Nuggets in battle to survive

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Denver Nuggets, who are ravaged by injuries, will battle for survival tonight when they challenge the healthy Los Angeles Lakers in Game 5 of the National Basketball Association's Western Conference finals.

Even under the most ideal conditions, beating the Lakers is not an easy task, especially at the Forum, where they have won 23 of their last 24 games. For the Nuggets, a victory at this point would be a major surprise.

The Nuggets will be without forward Alex English, who averaged 30.4 points in Denver's first 13 playoff games. English suffered a broken thumb on his shooting hand during Sunday's 120-116 Los Angeles victory at Denver.

English is only one of several injured Nuggets. Forward Calvin Natt and guards Lafayette Lever and Mike Evans are nursing knee injuries; center Wayne Cooper has a strained rib ligament; swingman Elston Turner has a sore hamstring and center Dan Issel has a deep thigh bruise.

Outside of English, all the wounded Nuggets are expected to play.

The Lakers are in good health going into the nationally televised game, which begins at 11:30 p.m. EDT.

A win by the Lakers, who are 10-2 in the playoffs and hold a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven Western Conference finals, would earn them a berth in the NBA's Championship Series for the fifth time in the past six years.

The Lakers would meet Boston or Philadelphia — the defending NBA champion Celtics hold a 3-1 lead over the 76ers heading into Game 5 of their Eastern Conference final series at Boston tonight.

"It's tough enough to beat them (the Lakers) at full strength," Issel said. "It's nearly impossible under these circumstances. Unfortunately, we're playing what I think is the best team in the NBA."

English scored 28 points before being injured late in the third quarter of Sunday's game. He scored 40 points in Denver's lone win in the series, a 136-114 triumph at the Forum last week.

"Anytime you lose a guy that scores 30 points a game, it's going to hurt you," said Los Angeles center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar in assessing Denver's chances in Game 5.

"It was a heartbreak for them," said Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers. "They came this far and then the injuries started to happen. I've been there before. It's hard to beat a good team without your horses."

Said Lever: "He (English) is the key to our team and we need his leadership."

Despite their injuries and the loss of English, the Nuggets were in a position late in the fourth game to deadlock the series. They fell behind for good with 20 seconds remaining on a tip-in by James Worthy.

"I've seen a lot of courageous performances," Abdul-Jabbar said. "That definitely has to rank with them.

"They had guys hurt, but they have a lot of pride, and I have to give them credit for having the courage to keep coming back at us."

As grim as things appear to be for the Nuggets, perhaps one statistic can give them some hope — they have won four of their last six games at the Forum. But on those occasions, they were healthy.

Rangers appoint Howe to staff

ARLINGTON (AP) — Former major league infielder Art Howe has been appointed to the Texas Rangers' coaching staff.

Howe, 33, will join the Rangers as batting instructor today, replacing Merv Rettenmund, who will not be retained by the team, manager Bobby Valentine said Tuesday.

Howe spent 10 seasons with Pittsburgh, Houston and St. Louis, primarily as a third baseman. Howe was with the Cardinals in 1984, batting .216 with two homers and 12 RBIs in 91 games.

JIM MURRAY

Hey Al, the Cubs have this third baseman...

"Hello, operator? Get me Al Campanis on the phone. What? Oh, he's the head honcho with the Los Angeles Dodgers. Just tell 'em you want the Chief. They'll know. ('Oh, we ain't got a barrel of mo-ney, maybe we're ragged and fu-nny ... ')

"Hello, Al? El Jefe! Howzit, ol' gumba? How's the old pennant chase? Doing any rewrites on that book of yours, 'The Dodger Way to Play Baseball'? Heh-heh, just kidding, old sport. Don't hang up!

"But, listen, Al, all kidding aside, I been meaning to call you about that team of yours and I think I've spotted something. Now, wait a minute, don't get mad! This is important!

"Al, I been studying those guys and nobody seems to be able to pick up a rolling ball. At least not before it stops. I mean, people are starting to refer to that infield of yours as the anvil chorus 'cause you can hear the clank when that ball hits a mitt.

"Chief, I think I see one of your troubles. From what I can see, your team seems to consist entirely of first basemen. I mean, you've got 'em all over the place, the infield, the outfield — every place but first base.

"Everybody else on that team is an outfielder. I never saw so many outfielders in my life trying to play second and third base. It's hard on them, you know? They're used to more time to surround hit balls. I mean, they seem to want to flip down their glasses, get set to make the play, check the fence, the blonde in the third row and all — and before they're ready, the ball's gone through.

"FROM WHAT I can see, your third baseman is still punching his glove after the ball has gone to the wall. And your second baseman, I don't have to tell you he needs more distance than from second to first for his throws. To tell you the truth, he needs an airport.

"They used to joke that, when the team was in Brooklyn, that Brooklyn was the only team in the league without a daily newspaper, a railroad station — or a left fielder. Now, they got nothin' but left fielders. But they're all playing third base.

"Your team can't seem to hit a moving ball, either, but, Al, I think I've pinpointed your trouble there. It's geographical, not psychological.

"Al this is a team that is playing well below its capabilities — 5,000 feet below its capabilities, if you know what I mean.

"Al, Albuquerque — in fact, all of New Mexico — is a nice place to try out atom bombs but I wouldn't want to pitch there. It's like putting a farm team 5,000 feet under water.

"You make rugs at Albuquerque, not ballplayers.

"Al, the whole state averages 5,700 feet above sea level. You know what happens to you at 5,700 feet above sea level? Well, first of all, you get a nosebleed. Then comes the bad news. Al, the ball carries at that altitude. Can I tell you something? I hit a 4-iron 240 yards once at that altitude. Tell you something, does it? Al, I can't hit two drives 240 yards at sea level.

"You know something else that happens at altitude, Al? You can't break off a curve ball. Not a good one. Ask any pitcher. Hell, you can't even boil water!

"So, you see what I'm getting at, Jefe. You got to start throwing out those batting averages and home run statistics. Hey, Babe Ruth would hit 120 home runs a year that high up in the sky.

"So, what you have to do, Chief, when you see some guy with 44 homers — and Albuquerque gives new meaning to the term homers — is, you have to start dividing by two.

"Now, that's not only 22 homers you take away from the guy, it's 22 hits. You see what I'm getting at? Those 22 homers you deduct are 22 hits. Instead of a home run, he gets a flyout. Instead of batting .310, he's batting .262. Take 22 hits, i. e. home runs, from a guy batting .343 and suddenly he's batting .291.

"Albuquerque stats are like special-effects movies. Entertaining but unreal.

"SO, WHAT you got to do, Al, is one of two things: either move the Dodgers to Albuquerque — or move Albuquerque to some place you can boil water. And, oh, yes, sign any pitcher from there whose ERA is under 11.

"Now, then, about that lineup of yours, they don't have enough power to run a radio. Eddie Murray can hit an egg farther than your guys can hit a baseball.

"I know you're in the market for a trade, Al, and I got a dandy for you.

"Al, the Cubs have this funny-looking little guy on third for them. He looks like something you'd see on an ice floe in the Antarctic. You don't know whether to throw him a ball or a fish. He looks like that bird that looks like a headwaiter with flippers.

"But, can he hit a baseball! He's got 282 lifetime homers, Al. More than your whole lineup.

"And, would kids love him! Al, he looks like a ride at Disneyland. I'd grab him Al. Whatever it takes. Should be cheap. I'm told the Cubs got him for some guys named Dan Cataline and Vance Lovelace. Can you believe that, Al?

"Wait, there's more. You want a first baseman. You're not gonna believe this but down in San Diego they've got this guy, he's built like an oak stump but he's the most natural hitter you ever seen in your life. You couldn't get a fastball by him in the dark.

"WAIT, IT gets better. You know all the trouble baseball's been having lately? Second basemen disappear on their way to the ballpark and turn up in a CareUnit. Guys by the busload appearing in front of grand juries?

"Al, this guy wouldn't even double-park. This guy's as square as a piece of fudge. He's not bucking for playboy of the month, he's bucking for U.S. senator. Or maybe it's Pope. Chief, he shouldn't be on bubble gum cards, he should be on stained glass windows.

"And he can scoop more things out of the dirt than a clam shovel. With your infield, that's something to think about. They name schools after him — him and Abraham Lincoln. I think he glows in the dark.

"Now, is this guy a natural for the Dodgers? How much? you ask. Chief! I'm disappointed in you! Money should be no object with a guy like this! Give him what he wants!

"Now, there's one other thing. This tough little second baseman the Cubs have — Davey something or other. Got this little bushy mustache and, boy, can he play!

"Al? Al?

"Operator! This line's gone dead! Whadaya mean he hung up on me! I'm trying to build him a pennant-winner. They haven't had one in a while, you know."

Long rest could help Celtics, Sixers

BOSTON (AP) — Julius Erving was tired. Larry Bird was hurt. More than 72 hours of rest could help the two superstar forwards shake their shooting slumps at a critical time.

Bird and the Boston Celtics take a 3-1 lead into tonight's fifth game of their best-of-seven National Basketball Association playoff series against Erving and the Philadelphia 76ers.

A Celtics' victory would send them into the championship round against Los Angeles or Denver, who also play their fifth game tonight with the Lakers leading 3-1. A 76ers' victory would force a sixth game Friday night in Philadelphia.

Boston captured the first three games of the Eastern Conference final before Philadelphia stayed alive with a 115-104 triumph at home Sunday.

In that fourth game, Erving made four of 21 field goals attempts and scored 15 points, while Bird was four of 15 with 14 points. In the last two games Saturday and Sunday, Erving was five of 31 with 20 points.

"For the most part, the shots that he missed, especially in the last game, we want Doc (Erving) to take, the shots Doc has made throughout his career," Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham said. "He'll be able to get rolling again."

"My legs haven't had enough strength on my close-range shots," said the 35-year-old Erving. "There is no power in my jumps. The few days off should help. The way I shot the ball this weekend, if I was just a shooter and scorer I shouldn't play the next game. Hopefully, I can do other things."

He did other things Sunday when he pestered Bird with tight defense that kept Boston's star forward to his lowest playoff point total of the year.

"He's always got a hand in his face," Celtics Coach K.C. Jones said of Bird. "That's the idea, to make him put the ball on the floor."

Bird jammed his right index finger in the first half of Saturday's game. He played 38 minutes Sunday, even though the damaged finger on his shooting hand was swollen.

He said the injury didn't affect his shooting and added, "I just didn't get the ball in the hole."

Dr. Thomas Silva, Boston's team physician, said the time between games should "be very beneficial" in helping Bird get over his injury.

While Bird, who averaged 28.7 points per game during the regular season, has been limited to a 21.8 average in the four games against the 76ers, Robert Parish and Kevin McHale have played well for Boston. Parish has averaged 16.8 points and 13.5 rebounds, and McHale has averaged 22.3 points and 10.5 rebounds in the series with the 76ers.

In the last two games, while Erving has struggled, Charles Barkley had 38 points and 31 rebounds and Andrew Toney scored 52 points for Philadelphia.

"What we like to try to do is keep him (Toney) from going three, four or five (baskets) in a row," said Boston guard Quinn Buckner. "When a great player gets on that kind of roll, you may be looking at a 40-, 45-point night."

"We need to move the ball, create a lot of fast breaks, sustain it," said Philadelphia guard Maurice Cheeks. "We've been able to get the lead in all the games but we haven't been able to hold onto it."

The 76ers have led each of the last three games after the first quarter. They have won only one of them. To avoid elimination, they must snap Boston's 10-game home playoff winning streak, then beat the Celtics Friday in Philadelphia and Sunday here.

Despite the long odds, the 76ers haven't conceded defeat in their quest to become the first team in NBA history to win a series after losing the first three games and to keep Boston from becoming the first club to win consecutive titles since the Celtics did it in 1968 and 1969.

"Their situation is still better than ours," said Philadelphia center Moses Malone. "But if we can get it to a point where there's a seventh game, it will have been a great series. We're not going to fold."

Oilers working on getting Rozier into full NFL uniform

HOUSTON (AP) — Running back Mike Rozier thus far has only worn the football shoes of a National Football League team.

But the Houston Oilers are working on getting him into a full uniform.

Rozier, currently playing for the United States Football League Jacksonville Bulls, rushed 86 yards on 20 carries in the Astrodome Monday night en route to a 20-17 victory over the Houston Gamblers.

But he didn't need another outstanding performance to convince Oiler assistant general manager Mike Holovak.

"My mind's made up," Holovak said. "Those were some hard-fought yards he got tonight. If you give him room like we can give him, he'll produce."

Art Wilkinson, Rozier's agent, met with Oiler General Manager Ladd Herzeg on Monday. He said the Bulls have made an attractive offer to retain Rozier next season.

Herzeg has said the Oilers will not attempt to sign Rozier until the end of the USFL season.

"I'd like to get to the NFL eventually," Rozier said. "I came to Houston to prove to the fans I'm ready to run for them ... whenever."

The Oilers, who own Rozier's NFL rights, gave Rozier a pair of artificial turf shoes because Rozier had brought grass cleats. Rozier's 86 yards put him over the 1,000-yard mark for the season.

Despite his statements about wanting to play in the NFL, Rozier said he was happy with the Bulls.

"They gave me a chance to play," Rozier said. "Right now, I'm concentrating on the Bulls and helping us win. I can't tell you much except that it doesn't matter to me where I play.

"Football's fun for me, and I just want to play."

Opening lead: King of ♣.

Your natural impulse is to treat your hand as the master and try to ruff your losers in dummy. However, when there are high trumps on the table, you can often increase the number of tricks you can make by taking the ruffs in your hand and using the table's trumps to draw the fangs of the enemy.

North-South wasted no time in getting to an excellent grand slam in clubs. South's opening two club was artificial and strong, and North's response showed a balanced hand of at least 8 points. South introduced his club suit and, once he was raised, he simply checked on aces and then gambled on a grand slam.

When dummy came down declarer could count 11 tricks. While he might have been able to ruff a diamond and a heart on the board, that would need a 2-2 trump split or a very favorable lie in hearts. Declarer wanted better odds than that.

The fact that dummy had such excellent trumps suggested a dummy reversal. Declarer won the ace of spades and ruffed a spade in hand, then led a trump to the ten. He was quite unconcerned with the 4-0 break—since it was West who held all the trumps, the contract was now a virtual laydown.

South ruffed a spade with the king of trumps, crossed to dummy with the queen of hearts and ruffed the table's last spade with the ace of trumps. The rest was routine. Declarer took the marked finesse of the eight of trumps, drew the remaining two trumps, then cashed out his high cards. In all, he scored seven trump tricks (dummy's four trumps and three ruffs in hand), three hearts, two diamonds and a spade.

Vereen, Osgood honored as fathers

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Ben Vereen and CBS broadcaster Charles Osgood were among eight men honored as a National Father of the Year.

Also named Tuesday as dandy dads were New York Gov. Mario M. Cuomo; athlete Bruce Jenner; New York Mets catcher Gary Carter; world middleweight boxing champion Marvin Hagler; and television newsman Gabe Pressman.

Actor John Walsh, whose 6-year-old son Adam was abducted and murdered in 1981, was honored for his efforts in helping to create the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

Walsh has spent the past year working with the center in Washington. He and his wife Reve have two other children, Meghan, 2, and Callahan, 6 months.

Walsh, who has been honored by President Reagan and others for his work, said he has "won many awards, and this is the most rewarding because I was a broken-hearted dad."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Former NBC newsman Edwin Newman, who keeps a wary eye on the state of our language, says at least one hospital describes the death of a patient as "negative patient care outcome."

In future marriage vows, he said, people could "take each other for richer for poorer, in sickness and in wellness, till negative patient care outcome does them part."

"Foolish language like this is everywhere," Newman told about 1,200 people attending a computer software convention on Tuesday, and is "deplorable — not only because much of it is wrong — but because it groans with false dignity.

"What makes this language attractive to those who use it is that it introduces...overtones of profundity. The more difficult and complex you can make your job sound, the more money you are likely to get for doing it and the more prestige you are likely to have," Newman said.

• • •

ATLANTA (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Herman Talmadge, 71, was listed in satisfactory condition at Piedmont Hospital after minor surgery.

Hospital spokeswoman Linda Tucker said Talmadge had asked that details of his illness not be disclosed.

"It has not been a life-threatening thing at all," Ms. Tucker said Tuesday. "He's making a wonderful recovery and this should have no bearing on his condition in the future."

She said the surgery was elective and that Talmadge probably would be discharged shortly.

• • •

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actor David Keith, who quit the University of Tennessee to star in such movies as "An Officer And A Gentleman," is getting academic credits for some of his acting roles and will graduate June 11 as a bachelor of arts.

"It's an honor to be a real alumni and it really makes a difference to my mom and dad," Keith, 31, said.

Keith dropped out of the university in the mid-1970s and headed for Broadway then moved on to movie roles in "An Officer And A Gentleman" with Richard Gere, "Brubaker" with Robert Redford and other films.

He said his years at Tennessee were hectic, with days divided between classes and a part-time job and evenings given to dramatic productions at UT's Clarence Brown Theater.

• • •

DENVER (AP) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., who has led congressional efforts to ensure continued funding for public broadcasting, has been named winner of National Public Radio's Edward E. Elson Award.

The award, established in 1979, is presented annually to an individual making a significant contribution to public radio.

A Goldwater staff member accepted the award for the senator on Tuesday at the 1985 Public Radio Conference.

NPR President Douglas J. Bennet praised Goldwater, chairman of the Senate commerce-communications subcommittee, for his "strong and unwavering support in Congress."

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Actor Roger Moore, in the city by the bay for the world premiere tonight of his 7th James Bond film, "A View To A Kill," says he doesn't tire of playing the suave secret agent.

"I get to play other parts in between," he said, adding with a laugh, "I know that may come as a surprise to many of you."

Reuschl's return to majors causes trouble for Astros

Associated Press

Rick Reuschel's fastball is back...and so is Rick Reuschel.

The 36-year-old right-hander, just recalled from the minors, checked Houston on one run and three hits in 7⅔ innings in his first major-league start since last Aug. 10 as the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the Astros 3-2 Tuesday night.

Reuschel, a 12-year major-league veteran, almost all of it with the Chicago Cubs, retired 15 of the first 16 batters before needing help from John Candelaria in the eighth inning.

"I'm just glad to be here," said Reuschel, who has battled through four years of shoulder problems and signed a minor-league contract with the Pirates after he was released by the Cubs last November.

"I've been happy with the way I'm throwing the curveball, but I had so much success tonight with the fastball. When I was hurt, I couldn't throw the curveball as hard as I wanted, but now I can. It's a pleasure not to have the pain, to go out and do the things that I can do."

Reuschel was 6-2 with a league-best 2.50 earned run average at Hawaii of the Pacific Coast League until joining the Pirates.

"I didn't mind having to go to Hawaii," he said. "I was prepared to go there and I felt like I could go there and do the job. I wasn't disappointed when I didn't make the Pirates in spring training. They told me coming in that I couldn't make their staff unless somebody got hurt. It was the healthiest spring I ever saw."

Pittsburgh took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on Bill Madlock's single, a walk to Jason Thompson and RBI singles by George Hendrick and Tony Pena. They made it 3-1 in the fifth when Mike Scott walked the bases full and then walked Steve Kemp.

Reuschel threw only 40 pitches in the first five innings and Manager Chuck Tanner said: "I've seen him throw pitches this year he hasn't thrown in years."

Astros Manager Bob Lillis concurred. "He pitched a beautiful ballgame," Lillis said. "He's a very knowledgeable pitcher. He uses the corners and makes you hit the ball. His ball was moving and he kept it down and changed speeds and kept the hitters off balance."

National League

Reds 5, Cubs 2

Dave Parker's tie-breaking double keyed a three-run eighth inning. Pinch-hitter Eddie Milner drew a walk off reliever George Frazier, one out later Dave Concepcion singled and Parker followed with his double off the left-field wall, extending his hitting streak to 13 games. Alan Knicely was walked intentionally, filling the bases, and walks to Tony Perez, who earlier had homered, and Nick Esasky forced across two more runs.

Cincinnati's John Stuper blanked the Cubs until they tied it with two runs in the bottom of the seventh. Jody Davis and Thad Bosley opened with singles, Larry Bowa sacrificed and pinch-runner Gary Woods scored on Richie Hebner's infield hit. Tom Hume relieved and got Bob Dernier to hit into a force at second as Bosley took third. Dernier then stole second and Bosley scored the tying run on catcher Knicely's throwing error.

Expos 6, Dodgers 1

Tim Wallach drove in three runs, two of them with his second homer of the season, while winning pitcher Bill Gullickson scattered five hits over 6⅓ innings and helped his own cause with two hits, including a two-run double. Jeff Reardon picked up his ninth save with 2⅔ innings of hitless relief.

Wallach hit a sacrifice fly for the Expos' first run in the fourth inning after Andre Dawson reached on a fielding error by Los Angeles third baseman Pedro Guerrero, stole second and moved to third on Hubie Brooks' infield hit. Montreal added two more runs in the inning on Gullickson's double. Wallach hit a two-run homer in the sixth.

Cardinals 6, Braves 3

Rookie Vince Coleman's first major-league home run, an inside-the-park shot, helped St. Louis withstand two mammoth homers by Atlanta's Bob Horner. Coleman's homer came off loser Len Barker in the third inning. St. Louis starter Danny Cox surrendered Horner's solo homer in the second inning and a two-run blast in the sixth. Ricky Horton relieved in the sixth and recorded his first save by allowing two hits over the final 3⅔ innings.

St. Louis struck for two runs in the first inning on just one hit. Coleman walked, went to third when Ozzie Smith singled and, after Smith stole second, Willie McGee's grounder scored Coleman and Jack Clark's sacrifice fly made it 2-0. Coleman homered in the third, Tom Nieto singled a run across in the fourth and pinch-hitter Tom Herr delivered a two-run single in the seventh.

Phillies 6, Giants 5

Glenn Wilson drove in two runs and Philadelphia took advantage of San Francisco's shoddy fielding to score four unearned runs. Winner Shane Rawley gave up seven hits in five innings and Kent Tekulve worked 1⅓ innings for his second save in two nights.

Valentine trying to restore Rangers' confidence

The 35-year-old Valentine, youngest manager in the major leagues, is trying to get the lowly Texas Rangers' confidence back and have fun doing it.

"If they are happy then they will perform at peak level," says Valentine, who replaced the fired Doug Rader only last week.

Valentine is the 13th Ranger manager in as many years. He refuses to dwell on the Ranger's past problems.

"I'm not here to find out what went wrong, I'm here to find out what I can do to do better," Valentine says.

Rader was sacked as manager although his contract runs through 1987.

Valentine has a contract for this season and next, with an option for 1987.

Valentine, who was a third base coach for the New York Mets, has come up with a novel approach for his heavily criticized team.

"I've asked 'em what they like to do best in uniform," Valentine says. "Most of the players answered that they are doing what they like to be doing. Of course, Gary Ward wasn't all that happy because I didn't start him the first day.

DURABLES

Durables rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for durable manufactured goods rose 1 percent in April, the first increase in three months, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said orders for durable goods, items expected to last more than three years, totaled $100.7 billion in April, a gain of $1 billion from the March level.

In March orders had fallen 2.7 percent following a 2.8 percent February decline. While orders rose 4.1 percent in January to a record high of $105.4 billion, this was only a 1 percent advance from the level reached in March 1984 as orders have generally been weak the past year.

The setbacks underscore the weak performance in the industrial sector. U.S. industry has been battered by foreign competition both at home and abroad with sales slumping because of the strong value of the dollar.

The government on Tuesday reported economic growth for the first three months of the year reached an annual rate of only 0.7 percent, the slowest pace since the end of the last recession.

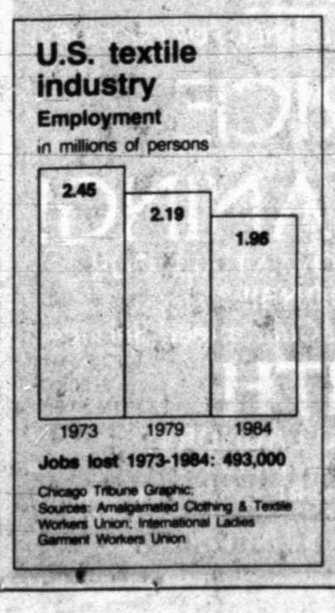

Many economists have expressed concern that the country could be in danger of tumbling into another recession. However, interest rates have been dropping in recent weeks and some analysts think these declines will be enough to spur further growth in the economy.

The Commerce Department report said the 1 percent April increase came from gains in orders for transportation equipment and primary metals such as steel which offset a large decline in machinery orders.

Orders for defense capital goods rose 6 percent in April following an even larger 32.5 percent March gain. The increase put April orders at $6.6 billion.

Orders for non-defense capital goods declined 6.9 percent following an even sharper 7.8 percent drop in March. This category is considered to be a good indicator of business plans to expand and modernize production facilities.

By industry, new orders for transportation equipment rose 6.9 percent, offsetting a 9.3 percent decline the month before.

Economists: Slowdown could be severe

Associated Press

The current economic slowdown may be more severe than previously estimated, analysts said after a review of figures showing the weakest growth in the gross national product since the end of the 1981-82 recession.

The Commerce Department reported Tuesday that the growth rate of the gross national product — the broadest measure of the nation's economic health — was only 0.7 percent for the first three months of this year.

However, the Dow Jones average of selected stocks reached a new high Tuesday as the index reached 1,309.70, surpassing Monday's record high of 1,304.88.

Meanwhile, the Labor Department said consumer prices rose a modest 0.4 percent in April despite a jump in gasoline costs. Consumer inflation is running at an annual rate of 4.2 percent, only a slight deterioration from last year's 4 percent level.

Part of the reason that inflation has remained docile has been the pronounced slowdown in economic growth.

Before the quarter ended, the government predicted GNP growth of 2.1 percent, revising that figure to 1.3 percent last month.

The weakness was centered in the industrial sector, where producers have been losing sales because of the high value of the dollar.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, testifying before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, said the first quarter "was a good bit slower than we anticipated ... and we are going to see a less strong second quarter" than expected.

But he said it still would be possible to achieve the administration's forecast of 3.9 percent growth for the year, predicting the economy would gain strength considerably in the second half of the year.

Several private economists disagreed, saying growth for the year will likely be between 2 percent and 3 percent, a substantial drop from last year's 6.8 percent pace.

Robert Wescott, senior economist at Wharton Econometrics, said the question was "whether the decline in interest rates will be enough to avert a recession. I think we will muddle through the second quarter and the lower rates will stimulate activity by the third and fourth quarters."

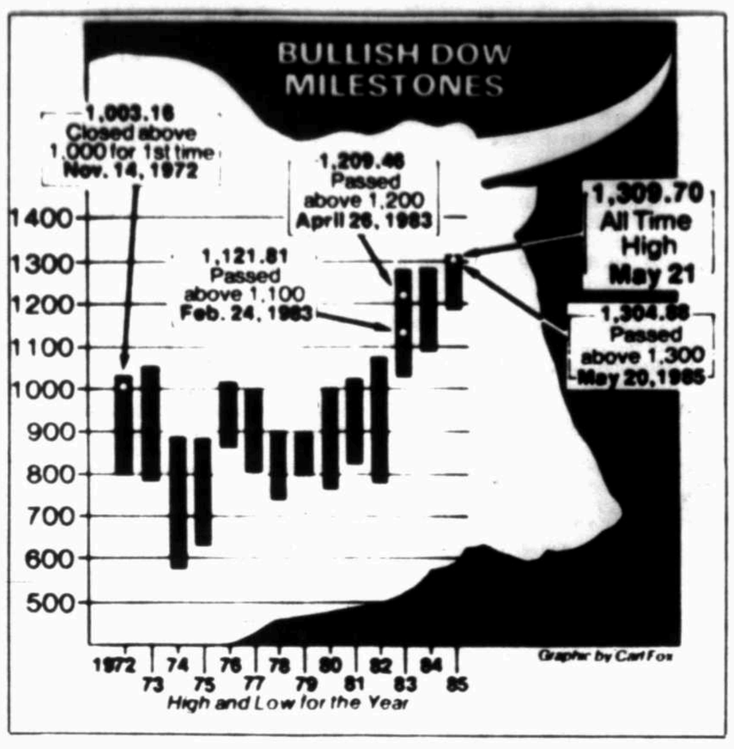

Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist of the National Association of Manufacturers, said, "While an actual recession is not in the offing, the combination of the large trade deficit, excessively high inventories and the exhaustion of pent-up demand will keep the economy growing slowly until at least the fourth quarter."

The Commerce Department also reported that corporate after-tax profits fell 0.7 percent in the first quarter of this year, reflecting the weakness in the general economy.

In its separate report, the Labor Department said Americans' average weekly earnings, after adjusting for inflation, fell 0.3 percent in April, based on a decline in the number of hours worked and the 0.4 percent increase in inflation.

In other economic developments:

—The Navy stopped processing up to $1 billion in new contracts with General Dynamics Corp., canceled two contracts worth a total of $22.5 million and fined the firm $676,283 because of what the Pentagon called improper business conduct. The penalties stem from the company's actions in giving gratuities to retired Adm. Hyman Rickover.

Helen Witt (left) and Ralph Colliander, federal mediators, leave a negotiation session Tuesday in Chicago held between United Airlines and striking United pilots. The strike is in its fifth day.

Negotiators seek breakthrough in five-day United pilots strike

CHICAGO (AP) — Negotiators worked through the day Tuesday seeking a breakthrough in a five-day strike by 5,000 United Airlines pilots, but the company said there was little progress.

The airline continued to operate a limited schedule, planning 207 flights Tuesday, compared with 1,550 daily departures before the strike. United had 218 flights Monday.

The strike began after talks broke down over United's proposal to set a lower wage scale for new hires than for top veteran pilots.

Resolution of the strike, he said, was not "any closer than yesterday," United negotiator Gerald Andrews said Tuesday evening, adding that his colleagues were frustrated by the lack of movement in the talks. The session ended around 10 p.m., and more talks were scheduled to resume at noon on Wednesday.

Representatives of the pilots avoided reporters, and it was not known how they viewed the negotiations.

Federal mediators acted as go-betweens for the two sides, but small teams of negotiators for both sides met face to face.

Tuesday's talks, following 11 hours of discussions Monday, began informally at the breakfast table, where two top United bargainers met with their counterparts from the Air Line Pilots Association.

"They were conceptual discussions," said United spokesman Tom Germuska. "There are no proposals on the table."

Helen Witt, head of the National Mediation Board, was not present for the breakfast but later led the two sides to the upper floors of an Arlington Heights hotel that is the site of the talks. It was an attempt to elude reporters who had camped outside the room where Monday's session was held.

"Mediation is a very private type of bargaining process," said mediation board spokesman Meredith Buel, who said a "marathon" bargaining session was possible.

Asked Tuesday if she believed progress was being made, Ms. Witt said, "Oh, I think there's momentum."

The strike began Friday when talks broke down over United's proposed two-tier wage system.

United Chairman Richard Ferris was still "firm on the fact that this airline needs a cost competitive contract with our pilots," company spokeswoman Eileen Golab said in a telephone interview.

Democrats criticize Navy's GD decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic critics of the Pentagon and its troubled $6 billion arms supplier, General Dynamics Corp., say the Navy's decision to freeze contract negotiations for a new Trident submarine and other weapons isn't tough enough punishment.

But they attacked as too harsh a decision by Navy Secretary John Lehman on Tuesday to send a formal letter of censure — the toughest action possible — to retired Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, the architect of the U.S. nuclear navy, for accepting $67,628 in jewelry and knicknacks from General Dynamics.

Lehman called the gift-taking "a fall from grace" for the 85-year-old admiral, who served in the Navy for six decades.

But in a statement, Rickover said his "conscience is clear" and that he always acted "in the best interest of the Navy and my country during my 64 years of military service. No gratuity or favor ever affected any decision I made. The record shows that I have been consistently tougher on contractors than any government official at any time."

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., called the censure "a travesty" and said "Rickover will be known as the father of the nuclear Navy and an indomitable fighter against defense contract abuses long after the petty figures who now run the Navy are forgotten."

Interior department opens bids on eastern Gulf tracts

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The oil and gas industry takes another multimillion-dollar gamble today when the U.S. Interior Department opens bids for the right to explore perhaps the richest depths of the central Gulf of Mexico.

It is the first of three bid openings on Gulf tracts for 1985. Another will be held in August for the western Gulf and the last will be in November for the eastern Gulf.

Today's bids, opened at a suburban hotel, were on 4,567 tracts off the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama coasts — 9 million acres in the highly competitive central Gulf.

Included are submerged blocks off Mobile Bay, where recent discoveries of natural gas have been so significant that a new underwater pipeline is under construction.

Some of the tracts are in deep water, up to 220 miles offshore where the depths are a mile and a half.

About 1,500 tracts, in deeper waters, were pulled out of the sale because of apparent lack of interest from the oil companies.

Others included are in the so-called 8(g) areas in which coastal states and the federal government are fighting over lease money.

Congdon said these 8(g) leases, all off Louisiana, were included after consultation with the state, which could get a $700 million share of the proceeds under a distribution plan now pending in Congress.

Proceeds from those 8(g) sales would go into the special account with the $2.6 billion that has already piled up during the dispute, to be distributed later.

Continental opposes airline sale

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines has filed with the U.S. Transportation Department an objection to Pan American Airways' proposed sale of its Pacific division to United Airlines.

Under the proposed $750 million sale agreement, Pan Am would sell to United the rights to its Pacific routes, which Continental contends are "unique to Pan Am."

Houston-based Continental, which currently serves 20 destinations in the Pacific, wants to expand its own Pacific routes, according to a statement Continental released Monday.

The Transportation Department has been trying to "foster competition in international markets" and allowing Pan Am to transfer the route to United, thereby eliminating one carrier in the Pacific, "flies in the face" of the department's objective, said Continental.

Continental also contends that because the federal government awarded Pan Am the Pacific routes, the government "has the right and responsibility" to select an airline to take over the routes.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce and the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce will have their first joint ribbon cutting at CELIA'S FINE APPARREL at 2403 N. Big Spring at 2 p.m. Thursday.

Celia Morales, owner, said she is very proud to have the first business that the chambers dedicate together. "It's history in the making," she said.

She said her boutique caters to petites, juniors and women.

CLAYDESTA NATIONAL BANK has opened its new Mid-Town banking facility on 2408 N. Big Spring.

The 20,000 square foot facility houses 45 of the bank's employees. Bookkeeping and proof and transit offices are located in the bank as well as an employee lobby.

"Any of our customers can bank at either of our locations. They can chose the one that is most convenient for them," said David Jones, president and chief executive officer of ClayDesta National Bank.

He said the Mid-town bank is near a substantial number of business and as a result, has picked up a lot of new business for the bank.

The Mid-town bank is a tandem of the bank's opening of its downtown facilities in September, said Jones.

A new drilling fluids manufacturing company, DYNAMATERIALS INC., has opened on Interstate 20 between Midland and Odessa.

Its main product, "Dynasweep," is based on the property of wetted cotton lint fibers to sell, facilitating removal of cuttings from the hole during drilling operations. A similar product originally manufactured in Joplin, Mo., was sold under the name "Ultrasweep."

General manager Clyde R. Veltmann, said the company will also manufacture "Dynapaper," a lost circulation material.

Another new business has opened in Odessa. HYDRIL CO. manufactures casing and tubing connections, blowout preventers and other well control and drilling safety equipment and automated production and pipelining equipment and instrumentation.

Charles Miller will serve as district manager-tubular products division. Coy Reece is district manager-mechanical products division and Charles Locke is district manager-production technology division.

Ground breaking ceremonies were held Friday for PETROPLEX SAVINGS' drive-up banking facilities, located at the corner of Big Spring and Kansas.

The facility will feature five drive-thru lanes and a Pulse/Mpact automated teller machine. The drive-up is scheduled to be completed by December 1985.

Contractor for the project is Dave Leonard and Gary Vandergriff is architect.

HILL COUNTRY SPRING WATER OF TEXAS, INC. has opened a Midland/Odessa branch at East Highway 80 and County Road in Odessa.

Roger Copeland is district sales manager of the company.

The company opened its first store about a year ago in Utopia, selling water in one gallon containers. It now markets two and one-half gallon bottles as well as five gallon containers.

It also has offices in San Antonio and Austin as well as Uvalde, Kerr and Bandera counties.

SIMPLE PLEASURES, located in the Imperial Shopping Center, has reopened under new management.

Debbie Atwell, owner, said the store is a country gift shop, which carries quilts and folkart. She has some pieces from local craftsmen, including paintings of Leslie D'Allesandro Hill.

The store has been open for three years.

Lehman, citing Pentagon and Congressional investigations that "call into question the integrity" of General Dynamics, said he was withholding further processing of contracts with the company's Pomona and Electric Boat divisions.

Among the practices he cited was one in 1981, when Electric Boat "put forward brazen insurance claims against the Navy for their own negligence and faulty workmanship."

Until General Dynamics satisfies the Pentagon that its billing procedures and ethical standards are reformed — a process that could take several weeks, Lehman said — there will be no signatures on pending contracts worth between $600 million and $1 billion.

The half-billion-dollar commitment to the Electric Boat division for another Trident missile submarine is the largest item pending, along with a plan to buy Phalanx ship defense guns made by the Pomona division.

In other actions, Lehman also:

—Rejected as "inappropriate" recommendations by Pentagon Inspector General Joseph Sherick that General Dynamics chairman David Lewis and executive vice president Gorden MacDonald be barred from doing work with the Pentagon.

For several months, General Dynamics has been under fire from the Pentagon and the Congress for improper billing practices, gift-giving and other irregularities. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in March suspended payment of overhead claims by the company.

—Said he had no evidence, despite Sherick's assertions, that George A. Sawyer, a former assistant Navy secretary, violated conflict of interest rules by working on General Dynamics contracts shortly before he went to work for the company. Sawyer performed to "the highest ethical standards," Lehman said.

—Took no action on Sherick's charge that the company issued a false press release about Trident submarine deliveries, because the matter is being handled by the Justice Department, along with other allegations about the company.

—Said barring the company from doing Pentagon work would "cut off our nose to spite our face," because the contracts are vital to national security. General Dynamics, was the third largest defense contractor in fiscal year 1984, selling $6 billion worth of submarines, missiles, tanks, surface ships and other weapons to the Pentagon

Lehman's announcement drew sharp repsonses from Congress.

"General Dynamics is probably chuckling," said Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

Restrictions eased on Maryland S&Ls

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Sixteen Maryland savings and loans certified as fiscally sound resume full operations today while restrictions on others were eased to allow payment of mortgages and medical bills for the elderly.

The easing of curbs, ordered by Gov. Harry Hughes Tuesday, is the first step in what officials hope will be a quick return to normal operations for the state's beleaguered savings and loan industry.

Hughes imposed a $1,000 limit on withdrawals at 102 privately insured S&Ls eight days ago to stem a run by depositors at two institutions that officials feared could grow and bankrupt the industry.

His order Tuesday covers 84 institutions and allows exemptions for:

— Mortgage payments.

— College tuition bills.

— Settlement costs for buying homes under contracts signed before May 14, the date his original order went into effect.

— Bills for medical care and institutional or custodial care for people over 85.

The order also frees payroll funds held in commercial accounts and allows account holders to carry over to succeeding months any unused amount of the $1,000-a-month withdrawal allotment.

Since the crisis began, the state has enacted legislation requiring S&Ls with more than $40 million in deposits to apply for federal insurance by June 1.

Fifteen of the 16 institutions permitted to open today without restriction are too small to qualify for federal insurance and the 16th, Commercial Credit Savings and Loan, a Control Data subsidiary with assets of $120 million, does not qualify because of its corporate structure, officials said.

The 16 S&Ls were certified sound by federal examiners.

Hughes said other small thrifts would be added soon.

In addition, 12 larger thrifts have received conditional approval for coverage by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. and others are in line for quick entry into the federal system, the governor said.

The run that triggered the crisis began at Old Court Savings & Loan in Baltimore after reports that it was having serious management problems. Anxious depositors also began withdrawals at other institutions.

Old Court and another Baltimore S&L, Merritt Commercial, are being operated by conservators and are exempt from the governor's order.

On the day Hughes imposed the withdrawal restrictions, the net outflow from the state's 20 largest thrifts reached $119 million. By Friday, it had fallen to $275,000.

Hughes called the legislature into special session last Friday to abolish the private insurance system, the Maryland Savings-Share Insurance Corp., and pledge state funds to insure all deposits up to $100,000 per account.

Halliburton expects lower 1985 earnings

DALLAS (SWN) — Reporting to shareholders at the Halliburton Co.'s annual meeting in Dallas today, Thomas H. Cruikshank, president and chief executive officer, said that, "in the first quarter of 1985 there was a further shrinkage in most of our major markets and a decline in earnings compared to the first quarter of 1984. Our best feel for the rest of 1985 tells us that it will continue to be difficult year, and it is doubtful that our performance can match that of 1984."

Halliburton recently reported that its net income for the first quarter was below that of a year ago, with earnings per share declining 19 percent.

"A major factor affecting our primary markets," Cruikshank said, "is the amount of drilling and exploration activity in the United States."

He attributed the current decline in drilling to the hesitancy of the domestic petroleum industry to make heavier investments in exploration and production in the face of what he termed "rising uncertainty."

"The possibility of a further fall in the price of crude oil, excess deliverability of natural gas, possible unfavorable tax legislation, and a further tightening of credit by lending institutions are major concerns to oil and gas producers," the Halliburton Company president said.

Cruikshank also spoke of further erosion in many of the company's industrial and marine engineering/construction markets, and said "there is litle demand at this time for sizable new industrial facilities."

Despite current uncertainties, Cruikshank emphasized management's belief in the future of the oil business and of the oil field service industry which the company serves. He noted that the continuing production of oil and natural gas is essential. Although it may take several years for supply and demand to come into sufficient balance to permit price increases and more rapid growth for the company's services, he said "that day will come."

Halliburton shareholders reelected all 11 nominees to the board of directors, William E. Simon, former Secretary of the U.S. Treasury and a Halliburton director since 1979, retired from the board and was recognized by board members for his service to the company.

Also recognized were Thomas J. Feehan, chairman of Brown & Root, and Leonard Leon, former president of the Welex Division, who did not stand for reelection. Following over 35 years of service, both are retiring from active employment within the year.

At the directors' meeting immediately following the shareholders' session, the board declared a regular second quarter dividend of 45 cents per share, payable June 25, 1985, to shareholders of record on June 3, 1985.

Halliburton Company, operating through various divisions and subsidiaries, is a diversified services and sales organization that provides oil field services and products, industrial and marine engineering/construction services and insurance services.

Crawford has loss in quarter

AUSTIN (SWN) — Crawford Energy, Inc. has reported that the company sustained a net loss for the three months ended March 31, 1985, which amounted to $1,707,848, or 22 cents per share, on total revenues of $1,035,824, compared to a loss of 12 cents per share on total revenues of $2,125,504 for the same quarter last year.

A 'Rise and Shine' Breakfast

Imagine it's a relaxing weekend morning — no plans have been made for the rest of the day. Wouldn't it be nice to invite a couple of friends over for brunch? Now you can put out a spread, even on the spur-of-the-moment, with this easy recipe, featuring soft cream cheese and real fruit or vegetables.

A flavorful way to serve eggs is this recipe for Brunch Muffins. First spread toasted English muffins with either the chives and onion or toasted onion-flavored cream cheese. Then top with cooked bacon or ham slices and fluffy scrambled eggs.

Complete the menu with Brunchtime Treat, which contains only three ingredients. Toast frozen waffles or French toast slices, spread with fruit, soft cream cheese and top with chopped nuts.

FESTIVE WREATH BREAD

Breakfast breads are at their best hot from the oven and home-made. While they seem time-consuming to make, they are really quite simple. Just be sure to pinch the seams together well to form the ring.

Since this recipe makes three breads, you'll have one to serve amd two for the freezer. Wrap the cooled breads, without glaze, separately in double foil thickness making sure to press out as much air as possible. They'll keep well about three months.

Filling:
3 cups (about three 8-oz. packages) dried figs, finely chopped
1½ tablespoons grated orange peel
¾ cup orange juice
¾ cup sugar
1½ cups toasted chopped almonds

Bread:
2 packages (about 2 tablespoons) active dry yeast
¼ cup warm (110-F.) water
2½ cups milk, scalded and cooled
¾ cup butter or margarine
¾ cup brown sugar, firmly packed
1 tablespoon grated orange peel
½ cup orange juice
3 large eggs
2 teaspoons vanilla
2 cups whole wheat flour
5 cup (approximate) all-purpose flour

Combine filling ingredients, except nuts, in a saucepan. Simmer, covered for 20 minutes. Cool, stir in nuts. In large bowl of mixer dissolve yeast in warm water. As scalded milk cools, add to it the butter, sugar, orange peel and juice, eggs and vanilla. Add cooled liquids to yeast along with whole wheat flour and half the white flour. Beat until smooth. Add enough remaining flour to make a soft but workable dough. Turn out onto floured surface. Knead until smooth and elastic, adding flour just as needed to prevent sticking. Turn dough over in a large greased bowl; cover and let rise in a warm place until doubled (about 1-1½ hours.)

Knead slightly. Divide dough into three sections. Pat out each section to a 14x9-inch rectangle. Divide filling mixture between rectangles, spreading evenly over the dough. Roll up each along the side, jelly-roll fashion. Pinch seams, taper ends slightly and join ends together to form a circle. Place each circle on a greased baking sheet. With a sharp knife, make slashes along rolls, every 1½ inches, cutting to within ½ inch of opposite side of roll. Carefully turn each section to show filling, alternately placing sections to the right and left, making a "wreath" shape. Cover lightly, let rise in a warm place about 45 minutes. Bake in a 350-F. oven for 30 minutes. Cool. Glaze if desired, with 2 cups powdered sugar mixed with ¼ cup orange juice. Makes three large coffee cakes.

SUNSHINE BREAKFAST BREAD

On the weekdays, lure sleepyheads in your family to the breakfast table with a rousing homemade treat. The heavenly aroma and mouth-watering goodness of this breakfast makes it difficult for your family to ignore.

1 cup (about 6 oz.) pitted prunes, coarsely chopped)
½ cup chopped nuts
2 tablespoons firmly packed brown sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1½ cups sugar
¾ cup butter or margarine, softened
2 eggs
1 cup unflavored yogurt
2 tablespoons grated orange peel
1 teaspoon vanilla
2¼ cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt

Combine prunes, nuts, brown sugar and cinnamon; set aside. In mixing bowl cream sugar and butter until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Combine yogurt, orange peel and vanilla; set aside. Sift together flour, baking powder, soda and salt; add to creamed mixture alternately with yogurt mixture. Spread half of batter evenly into greased and floured 12-cup tube pan; sprinkle with half of prune-nut mixture. Repeat with remaining batter and prune-nut mixture. Bake in 350-F. oven 50-60 minutes, until pick inserted into center comes out clean. Cool in pan 5 minutes. Loosen edges and invert onto rack. Reverse onto another rack, topping side up; cool completely. Makes 12 servings.

DEAR ABBY

Trucking husband hears 'highway hooker'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a trucker, and he hauls heavy loads across the country. He has a CB radio in his cab, which he needs for his own safety as well as for entertainment.

He told me there's a hooker who drives a van with a waterbed in the back, and she "advertises" on her CB. He says the guys in that area (Nevada) all know her, and he would like to see her himself just to find out what she looks like. "Just curiosity," he says. Now I'm worried every time he has to go through Nevada.

Isn't that kind of thing against the law? This is no joke, Abby. — TRUCKER'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Soliciting in some parts of Nevada is legal, but I don't know if the airwaves can be used for this purpose.

Taking one's show on the road isn't all that unusual. But make it clear to hubby that if he doesn't keep on trucking when he hears this siren's song — his marriage may suffer a blowout.

DEAR ABBY: Now that prom season is upon us, I have a favor to ask: Our son has been to three proms. Each time he has rented a tux, bought the girl a corsage and paid for the tickets plus dinner before the dance. Each prom has cost him between $100 to $125. Our son has told us that when he picks up his date, her parents are waiting with a camera to take a picture of him and their daughter. The girl then has a picture for her memory book, but we have nothing. We don't even know what the girl looked like!

Will you please ask the parents of these girls to please send a picture to the boy who spent so much money on their daughter? Even if the date turned out to be a disaster, the boy (or his parents) may want the photo as a souvenir. — LEFT OUT IN VENTURA, CALIF.

DEAR LEFT OUT: Here's your letter. I hope something develops.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column you wrote: "If I could give young people just one piece of advice, it would be read, read, read!" To that, I say "Amen."

In reflecting on the many people who have had a significant influence on my life, the one I remember best is Miss Sellers, my first-grade teacher in a little one-room school in Kemah, Texas. I was her only pupil, so she was able to give me the individual attention I wish all children could receive. I remember her saying, "Honey, once you learn to read, there isn't anything in the world you can't learn, know or be."

How right she was. Reading has enabled me to overcome the traumas in my life. I got polio at 14 and became an avid reader when I was unable to go back to school. I became a housewife and mother, and I'm now a grandmother, learning to survive the loneliness and loss of divorce by taking up the computer, writing and going to college.

Most youngsters have lofty goals — some may require physical endurance. However, many of these goals must be changed because of the unpredictable — car wrecks, illnesses and other accidents that turn many ambitious young people into paraplegics. Then, only their abilities to read and learn can help them to grow and achieve. — L.W., BARTLESVILLE, OKLA.

Creuzot's Creole chicken creates competition for 'Colonel'

HOUSTON (AP) — Percy "Frenchy" Creuzot set out to become the king of Creole food in Houston, but the New Orleans native instead has become a rich man known as "the black Colonel Sanders."

Chicken, cooked with a secret recipe he got from a family friend in Louisiana, now constitutes three-fourths of the business at Frenchy's Creole-Fried Chicken and the success has been a surprise even to Creuzot.

"I never in my wildest dreams expected to do what I've done in the food business," Creuzot, 60, says of his career.

Frenchy's restaurants, now with more than $12 million in sales, are not named for Creuzot. He is named after his restaurants.

"Just about everybody calls me Frenchy, even those who called me Percy before I started this business. People just assume that because there's a name on your business, that's your name," Creuzot said. "If I'd known that, I might have named it something else."

He wanted to name his first restaurant Etienne, a shorter version of his daughter's middle name. But a friend scoffed at the idea.

Recalls Creuzot: "He said, 'Don't be a fool. People won't know how to pronounce it, they won't know how to spell it and they won't be able to find it in the phone book. Name it something like Frenchy's Po-Boys.'"

He went with Frenchy's and it has become famous in Houston.

Creuzot, a bespectacled man with thinning, wiry, silver hair and an easy laugh, said he left his native New Orleans nearly 23 years ago after going broke trying to sell insurance.

He came to Houston with dreams of making and selling hot Louisiana-style sausage. But regulations governing state and federal inspections were stiffened, making such a venture more expensive than he expected.

Instead, Creuzot got a job as a salesman for an Indiana-based manufacturer of high school graduation supplies. He was assigned the black high schools in Houston as his territory.

Desegregation cost him the job. When racial barriers fell, the company let Creuzot go instead of reassigning him.

He took a job as an interviewer for the Texas Employment Commission, but the pay was too low to "buy the grits and grease," he said. "I wanted to live a little better."

Creuzot decided to take a chance.

He borrowed $2,000, leased a store in a predominantly black neighborhood on the city's south side near the campuses of Texas Southern University and the University of Houston and started organizing a restaurant to sell the spicy foods of his native Louisiana — oyster loaf, red beans and rice, hot sausage.

It was Jesse Hearns, an auto dealer on the adjacent lot, who suggested the addition of fried chicken.

Creuzot says he resisted at first, but Hearns persisted.

"He said, 'Don't be a fool. You gotta pay the rent while you're teaching everyone to eat oyster loaf,'" Creuzot said. "Jesse even came and cooked the chicken for me. If he hadn't, I probably wouldn't."

A family friend in New Orleans provided the ingredients for spicy Creole-fried chicken. Creuzot adapted the recipe to include "some of this and some of that and a lot of the other," and Frenchy's Creole-Fried Chicken was born.

The first Frenchy's restaurant opened July 3, 1969, and took in $14 that day, Creuzot said. Business gradually picked up during the summer, but he had to keep receipts in a shoebox under the counter until he could afford to buy a cash register.

After a summer of struggle, business took off when the college students returned to school that fall. "That was the beginning of the real success of Frenchy's," he said.

Creuzot was content with his single restaurant for almost 10 years. Then a competitor moved into the neighborhood and he decided it was time to expand.

Within six months, he had opened four restaurants, Creuzot said.

Now there are 12 Frenchy's restaurants in the Houston area.

Tomatoes top Southern dish

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

In a booklet titled "Treasured Recipes of the Old South," I found an interesting open sandwich combination. It's one I've never come across before, and as delicious today as it was over 40 years ago when a lady named Gloria passed along the recipe. Here it is in updated form.

One word of advice: make sure that, if necessary, the tomatoes you use in this open sandwich are held at room temperature until they are fully ripe. This way they'll complement the other ingredients of the sandwich: English muffin halves, ham and a glorious sweet mustard sauce.

OPEN TOMATO-HAM SANDWICHES WITH MUSTARD SAUCE

4 medium-size fully ripe tomatoes
2 slices (2 ounces) cooked ham
4 English muffins, split and toasted
Salt and pepper
8 tablespoons butter
¼ cup sugar
1½ teaspoon dry mustard
2 eggs, lightly beaten
¼ cup cider vinegar

Remove stem ends from tomatoes; cut each in half. Cut each slice of ham in half; cut halves into 1-inch wide strips. On each muffin half place 2 strips of ham, crossing one over the other. Top with a tomato half. Sprinkle lightly with salt and pepper. Dot with 2 tablespoons of the butter. Place in a shallow pan — lined with foil, if you like. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven for about 10 minutes or until hot.

Meanwhile, make a mustard sauce by melting remaining 6 tablespoons butter in a small saucepan. Stir in sugar, mustard, ¼ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper; mix well. Stir in eggs, then vinegar. Cook, stirring constantly, over low heat (do not boil) until mixture thickens — about 2 minutes. (Makes ⅔ cup.) Spoon over tomatoes and serve at once.

Makes 4 servings.

Strawberries bring 'berry' bright flavors to summer

By ANTONIA ALLEGRA
Copley News Service

Strawberries are here! One of the first signs of spring, these plump mouthfuls of juicy goodness are adaptable for a variety of fruit-based dishes.

Strawberries appeal at table or as low-calorie snacks throughout the day and are quick to prepare. Consider the pleasures — visual as well as gustatory — of a rich cheesecake topped with strawberry halves and sauced with strawberry puree.

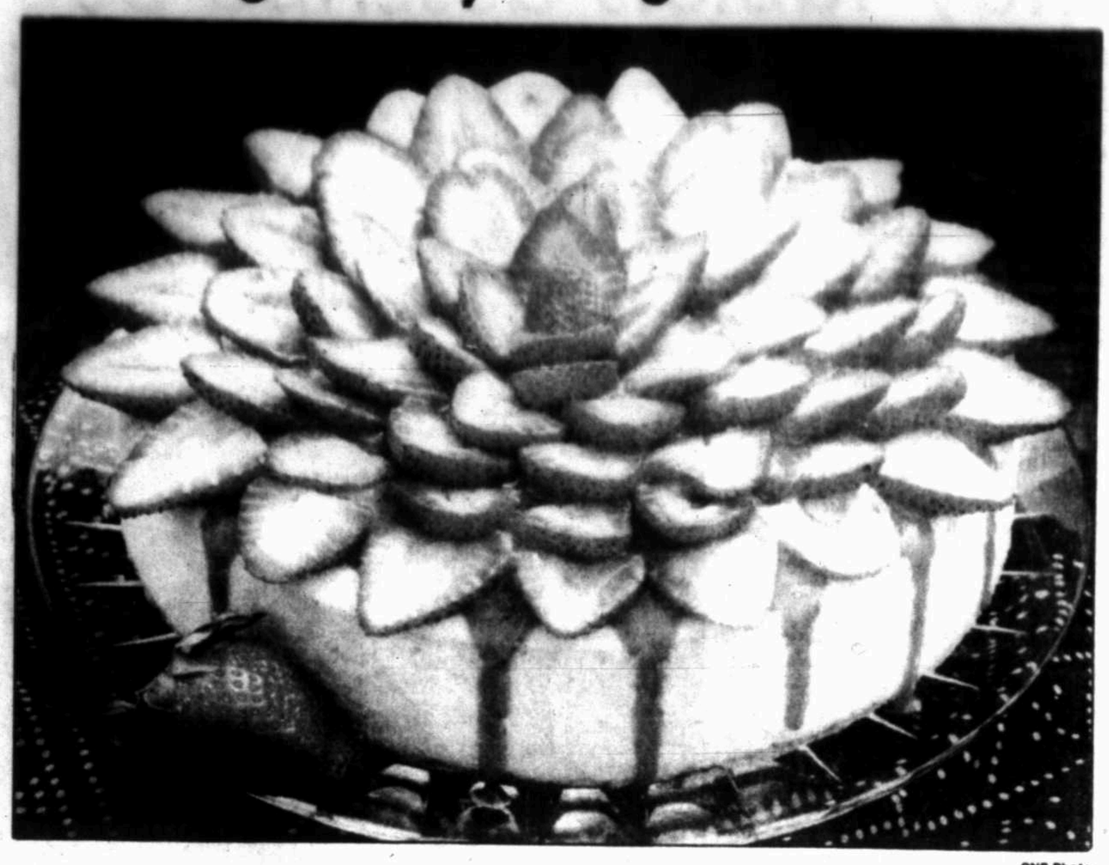

Or imagine a fluffy biscuit-based shortcake piled with fresh strawberries and a mound of sweetened cream.

The variety of strawberry uses is unlimited: jammed in a flaky pie crust; sliced on ice cream sundaes; floating in fizzy punches; held in brilliant suspension in jams, jellies or syrups.

Strawberries will flourish from now through the summer and on into fall. But from mid-April through mid-June is the peak season for strawberries, and that makes right now the very best time to enjoy them.

To choose the best berries, growers suggest seeking fully ripened, bright red berries, as they do not ripen after being picked. The berries should be well-rounded, with a natural shine and bright green leaves.

Never wash strawberries or remove the green caps until it is time to eat the berries. Washing removes the natural protective outer layer, and the caps protect the strawberry and help preserve flavor, texture and nutrients.

Ancient clay tablets describe Babylonian cuisine

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The cuisine of ancient Mesopotamia could be the hottest thing to hit the food world since the discovery of fire. It is doubtful that chefs desperate for a new wrinkle will introduce dishes dating to the reign of Hammurabi of Babylon to Manhattan's trendy dining spots next season. But the flurry of scholarly excitement over the first published translation of the oldest written recipes known to exist promises to add a significant chapter to the history of food.

Recipe tablets from the Yale Babylonian Collection, previously thought to contain pharmaceutical formulas, have been decoded by French Assyriologist and gourmet chef Jean Bottero. The three Akkadian tablets, dating to approximately 1700 B.C., revealed, Bottero wrote in a description of his find, "a cuisine of striking richness, refinement, sophistication, and artistry, which is surprising from such an early period. Previously we would not have dared to think a cuisine 4,000 years old was so advanced."

Various cooking techniques were known, and a complex assortment of herbs and spices was used to flavor a single dish. Garnishes and presentation were so highly esteemed that they were mentioned in recipes that are otherwise not highly detailed. In one recipe, crumbled bread provided a thickening. And, just as modern cooks collect recipes from other regions or countries, the Mesopotamian chefs gave credit to the Assyrians to the north for one stew and to the Elamites from the southwest corner of Iran for another.

ALTHOUGH SOME of the ingredients are unknown to us today or cannot be translated, the discovery of such ancient recipes is unparalleled. Until quite recently, the oldest surviving collection of recipes was that attributed to Apicius, the Roman gourmet who lived at the beginning of the first century.

Apicius' "De Re Coquinaria" ("On Culinary Art," also sometimes translated as "Of Culinary Matters") had been preceded by other recipe anthologies by Greeks, but most of these works are lost, according to Bottero, save for a few quotations that were preserved in the work of Athenaeus of Naucratis, who lived in the second century. (Others have contended that Athenaeus knew of Apicius as a gourmet but did not know of his cookbook, which some researchers think was written at a later date, possibly by someone else.) Athenaeus mentions the names of as many as 20 cookbook authors, but none of their work survived in its original form. And in the Bible, while food is mentioned, there are no conventional recipes.

"WE KNOW that both the Egyptians and the Hittites had developed distinctive cuisines," said Bottero, a professor at the Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes. "But we do not, in either case, have a single recipe which would give us a sufficiently detailed picture of how the food was prepared." Of the 25 Mesopotamian recipes translated by Bottero, 21 are for meat dishes and only four are vegetable preparations, but this proportion is not an accurate sampling of the overall diet, which was largely vegetarian. According to William Hallo, master of Yale's Morse College and curator of the Babylonian Collection, these recipes were written on tablets prepared by ancient scribes as part of advanced training in cuneiform, a form of writing using pictures and symbols.

The tablets survived and were found, and in 1933, they were cataloged into Yale's collection. Mary Inda Hussey, who died in 1952, had made hand copies of some of them, and Albrecht Goetze, a Yale professor of Assyriology, tried his hand at deciphering them — "21 entries concerning water of the meat and four on herb" — in an introduction, never published, to Hussey's work. For a time, the work languished. But at last, Jan van Dijk, who was doing hand copies of other, related tablets for publication by Yale University Press, told Bottero of their existence. They will be published this fall as Volume 11 of the Yale Oriental Series: Babylonian Texts.

HALLO, WHO is also professor of Assyriology at Yale, said the tablets were very difficult to translate, "and we have the happy accident that Bottero has a special interest." Some of Hallo's Yale colleagues, including Benjamin Foster, have dined sumptuously on Bottero's own modern European cooking at Bottero's home in Gif-Sur-Yvette near Paris.

The code to the tablets was hard to crack. "I thought they were magical texts," said Foster, associate professor of Assyriology at Yale. Foster respects Bottero for more than his academic expertise. He is a specialist in Provencal cuisine and, said Foster, "one of the best gourmet cooks in France."

Despite Bottero's reputation as a chef, he said in a telephone interview that he would not attempt to re-create the recipes, although some business friends beg him to try. "The cook knows many things from having seen people work," Bottero said. "We can't identify all the ingredients, many words escape us." Imagine, he said, if we'd gotten a recipe from Japan with only a list of ingredients and no directions.

LAT Photo

William Hallo, curator of Yale University's Babylonian Collection, examines one of the tablets holding the oldest known recipes.

"If you come to see me, I'll cook for you," he added. "French cuisine, but not that."

Certain ingredients are, indeed, impossible to guess at. Suhutinnu and samidu, heavily relied upon in the recipes, were probably members of the onion family, Bottero said. As for surummu, another staple of the cuisine, Bottero wrote succinctly, "we know nothing."

EVEN IF contemporary cooks could arrive at an approximation of the recipes, they might relish the finished product only as a curiosity, for these ancient peoples were exceptionally fond of fat and often used no salt in their cooking. Then, too, directions require a certain amount of guesswork by the modern-day cook who is not familiar, for instance, with exactly what it meant to the Mesopotamians to "prepare water."

In Bottero's article, translated from the French, he hypothesized: "The name of each dish is preceded by the generic term me which literally means water but in this context signifies something similar to bouillon, stew or possibly a sauce. ... If we knew the strength and consistency of the liquid in its final form we would better understand what me means."

Said Hallo: "They were writing-happy. They committed everything to writing. But they were laconic. Much is left to the imagination."

In the translation of Bottero's article, it is noted that the style of the recipes is "extremely compressed, reminding one of the cookbooks written for professional chefs in our own era, such as the 'Guide Culinaire' by Auguste Escoffier." Here, Bottero's taste for culinary lore left him helpless to resist noting in an irrelevant aside that Escoffier created peach Melba.

THE YALE collection, one of the five largest Babylonian collections in the world and the largest in this country, contains 40,000 pieces, of which about 30,000 are inscribed tablets, housed in a dehumidified environment to approximate the dry climate of Iraq. Such a wealth of material to draw from causes speculation that perhaps other tablets, at Yale or elsewhere, formerly thought to contain formulas for medicines or herbs, will reveal recipes when a scholar with an interest in culinary arts eventually takes a crack at them.

Even before Bottero decoded the text of the recipe tablets, Hallo said, a great deal was known about the foods in the Mesopotamian diet, because tablets bearing lists of staples and information that amounted to a farmer's almanac had been translated. We know, for example, how much seed grain was planted per acre. Date palm was enthusiastically cultivated. Winemaking and the cultivation of barley for beer flourished. Also surviving are records of the meager rations allotted to workers — about a quart of barley a day for men, half that for women and still less for children, and minuscule amounts of only six other foods, including onions and fish.

BUT MEAT, Hallo said, "was a rare item, confined to festival occasions." Animals were considered useful primarily for hide, milk, wool, the pulling of carts and war chariots and for dung, the universal fuel. The elite ate some meat. When sacrifices of animals were made, members of the priesthood and some lucky lay people could feast on the meat. Entrails were not considered edible, said Hallo, but "the liver, lungs and intestines were used to foretell the future." The color of the liver, for example, supposedly predicted sagacious appointments and the outcome of battles.

It is thus reasonable to assume that the recipes that have survived and been translated by Bottero were for delicacies eaten by the upper crust. The ability to write and read in itself constituted a profession, and it took years of subsidized leisure and patient practice to master the largely ideographic writing system. There was no alphabet.

This incovenience leads to dissension over some details. For example, Hallo said, some other scholars translate as fresh fish what he translates as smoked fish. There is room for disagreement, because in cuneiform, a single sign stands for an entire word and several different readings may be possible. But, Hallo said, besides the contextual evidence, common sense dictates that "in a climate like that, in these quantities, fish by the thousands would not last long enough. There were not enough people to consume it before it spoiled." So he holds that the fish was smoked.

"WE ARE frustrated by the laconic text and the economy of wording," Hallo said. But, he added, many examples exist; this makes educated guessing more accurate.

Of one recipe for preparing fowl, Bottero wrote that many steps are taken "to produce one dainty. If the goal had been simply to cook them, it would have sufficed to have thrown the birds on the fire. Instead we see a cooking method which has been adapted to different techniques of preparation, numerous utensils used, each with its own purpose, and complex combinations of foods, especially seasoning. Even though the seasonings combined are complementary, some dishes call for as many as 10 of them.

Here are some of the Mesopotamian recipes, as they appeared in English translation in the March issue of Biblical Archaeologist. The article and recipes originally appeared in French in L'histoire in October 1982.

MEAT STEW

Take some meat. Prepare water, throw fat into it, then add ——— (the word is lost), leeks and garlic, all crushed together, and some plain suhutinnu.

RED STEW

You do not need meat. Prepare the water. Throw in fat. Pluck, tripe, and belly, salt, hulled malt, onions, samidu, cumin, coriander, leeks, and surummu, crushed together. Before placing on the fire in the pot the meat should be marinated in the blood which has been saved from the animal butchered for this dish.

Bottero commented on this translation: "This is not only a complicated recipe, but the laconic tone of the text is striking. It is only concerned with the essential ingredients and never specifies quantities or cooking time. These are left to the discretion of the cook, who, we may assume, knew his business."

STEW OF A KID

"In this recipe," Bottero wrote, "we note that the cooks knew how to combine different cooking techniques in order to enrich the food's taste." Singeing and boiling were among these techniques.

Head, legs and tail should be singed (before being put in the pot.) Take the meat. Bring water to a boil. Add fat. Onions, samidu, leeks, garlic, some blood, some fresh cheese, the whole beaten together. Add an equal amount of plain suhutinnu.

Fast-paced New Yorkers eat on run

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — At a Perry Ellis fashion show, a woman is eating a hero sandwich while watching the thousands of dollars in clothes go by. On a Broadway bus, a woman with an irritable child starts pushing french fries into its mouth. As a cab stops for a light in Greenwich Village, the driver dives into a bag of barbecued chicken.

"Your hands are slipping off the wheel," the passenger, David Pierce, protests. The driver shrugs. "If I spend 20 minutes eating I lose $7," he says.

The other night, a young woman was sitting in an Upper West Side movie theater when she caught a wiff of Sichuan cuisine. "Two rows back a couple were eating Chinese takeout," she said, rolling her eyes. "With chopsticks."

For a small subculture of New Yorkers, eating has become something to do while doing something else: working; shopping; watching entertainment; walking; driving; riding a bicycle, bus or subway, and especially waiting. In laundromats, on bank and movie lines, in doctors' offices, wherever people are waiting there is the rustle of foil unfolding, the pop of soft drink cans opening.

What feeds this trend, of course, is the ubiquity and variety of food purveyed by takeout shops and sidewalk carts. And as the eaters will tell you between bites, there is the pace of modern life.

"We just came from a picture shoot," Chris Van Zutphen was saying one recent evening, "and this is our first chance to munch out." He and Evan Wiener were eating pizza and drinking beer on a stoop on West 11th Street. Both work in photo labs and both attend the School of Visual Arts, where classes are so tightly scheduled, they said, students eat during lectures.

"You see a lot of Danish in class, and bagels with cream cheese," Wiener said. "What you grab is what you eat."

While people who eat in strange places say they have no time for more gracious dining, anthropologists such as Sidney W. Mintz of Johns Hopkins University say that time constraints are only part of the problem.

In "Sweetness and Power," published this month by Viking Penguin, Professor Mintz suggests that an economic system based on the principle of ever-expanding consumption may have created a climate in which people consume different things at the same time.

Fresh cherries only have short but sweet season

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

The brief season for cherries is at hand, and by mid-June the crop from the Northwest will be on fruit stands across the country. And by early August it will be over.

This harvest of sweet fruit comes from Washington, Idaho, Oregon and Utah. Best known from this area are the plump, round Bing cherries, noted for their mahogany hue, and the heart-shaped Lambert with their rich flavor.

Cherry growers have also crossbred the Bing and Lambert, creating a sweet, egg-shaped fruit with a blush that ranges from pink to brilliant red.

Other Northwest varieties include the Van, Chinook and Black Republican, as well as the light-skinned Royal Anne.

These cherries make a delicious light dessert tucked into lunch boxes or packed into plastic bags to give a lift to a picnic. At home, they are a tasty addition to salads, muffins, cakes and sauces.

Cherries should be pitted, but this is not as tedious a job as it sounds. A cherry pitter, a small hand-held device, is available in most cookware shops. Incidentally, this gadget can also be used to pit olives.

Cherries should be eaten as fresh as possible to enjoy the full flavor. Serve them no more than a few hours after purchase, if you can. If not, place the fruit in plastic bags in your refrigerator. Then wash and serve as needed for up to two or three days.

Cherries run only about 70 calories per ¾ cup, pitted and stemmed. And they contain vitamins A and C.

Some consumers leave cherries on the stem when using for a dip, but if you want to remove stem and pits you can dip them with a fork. Try this Camembert-ginger dip.

CAMEMBERT-GINGER DIP WITH FRESH CHERRIES

1 package (4 ounces) Camembert cheese, softened
1 package (3 ounces) cream cheese, softened
¼ cup dairy sour cream
2 tablespoons white wine
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons candied ginger, chopped
1 teaspoon grated lemon peel
Fresh cherries in amount desired

Beat Camembert and cream cheese together until well blended. Add sour cream and wine and stir until smooth. Add sugar, ginger and lemon peel. Makes 1½ cups of dip. Let stand at least one hour to blend flavors. Serve as a dip for appetizer or dessert.

Fresh corn can be 'a-maize-ing'

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Of all the members of the grain family, corn is unique in being a product of the New World.

Native American Indians taught the Pilgrims to bury small fish with planted kernels of corn. The fish, being high in nitrogen, replaced the nitrogen the growing plant removed from the soil. (Some historians, however, argue that the Indians simply were trying to sabotage the Pilgrims' crop, since animals could smell the fish and would dig it up, along with the newly planted crop.)

The first European immigrants to this country soon learned the value of this important Indian staple. A 1632 Virginia law regulated the size of corn barrels, and any corn merchant who failed to seal his barrels (to protect the grain from contamination by insects or rodents) was placed in the stocks.

Anyone who ever has savored the sweetness of just-picked corn knows why it's important to get this vegetable at its freshest. The sugars in corn begin converting to starch the very minute it is harvested, faster than in any other vegetable.

True corn lovers often will have a pot of water boiling and ready on the stove before going out to pick their homegrown ears. Some fanatics have even been known to boil their water outdoors on a camp stove, and to lower the ears into the water to cook — while still on the stalk!

Commercially packaged frozen corn is processed as soon after harvest as possible, to retain its natural sweetness. To microwave a 10-ounce package of frozen corn, place corn with 2 tablespoons of water in a 1-quart covered glass casserole. Microwave four to six minutes, rotating one-quarter turn after three minutes. Let stand, covered, five minutes before serving.

All forms of corn — fresh, frozen or canned — adapt well to microwave cooking. Following are several a-maize-ing microwave recipes sure to please the corn-lovers in your family.

SATURDAY NIGHT CASSEROLE

1 lb. lean ground beef
½ cup chopped onion
¼ cup chopped green pepper
1 (16 oz.) can tomatoes
1 (12 oz.) can whole-kernel corn
1 (8 oz.) can tomato sauce
½ cup sliced black olives
1½ tsps. chili powder
¼ tsp. cumin
⅛ tsp. pepper
1 cup coarsely crushed corn chips
½ cup shredded cheddar cheese

Crumble beef into 2-quart glass casserole. Add onion and green pepper. Micrwave 6 minutes, stirring once after 3 minutes.

Drain tomatoes (reserve ¼ cup juice) and dice. Add to meat, with reserved juice. Stir in corn, tomato sauce, olives, chili powder, cumin and pepper. Cover and microwave until piping hot, 6 to 8 minutes.

Sprinkle casserole with crushed corn chips, then top with shredded cheese. Microwave, uncovered, about 2 minutes longer, until cheese melts. Let stand 2 minutes before serving.

Serves 4 to 6.

CREAMY CORN CHOWDER

⅓ cup chopped chives (green part)
¼ cup chopped fresh parsley
3 tbsps. butter or margarine
3 cups thawed frozen or canned corn
½ cup milk or half-and-half
3 tbsps. butter or margarine
2 tbsps. flour
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. white pepper
Dash dry mustard
4 cups canned chicken broth
½ cup shredded cheddar cheese

Place chives, parsley and butter in small glass dish. Cover with plastic wrp and microwave 3 minutes. Let stand, covered, 1 minute.

In blender container, combine sauteed chives and parsley with corn and milk; blend just until smooth.

Place butter in 2-quart glass casserole; microwave until melted, about 1 minute. Stir in flour, salt, pepper and dry mustard. Blend until smooth.

Add 2 cups chicken broth, a little at a time, stirring constantly to blend. Cover and microwave 4 to 5 minutes, stirring every other minute, until mixture thickens and begins to boil.

Stir in remaining 2 cups chicken broth, a little at a time, then blend in corn mixture.

Microwave, covered, 8 to 10 minutes longer, until soup is hot. Let stand, covered, 2 to 3 minutes before serving.

Serve in individual bowls topped with cheese.

Serves 4 to 6.

SCALLOPED MEXI-CORN

2 cups fresh or canned corn
2 eggs, beaten
¼ cup thin-sliced green pepper
2 tbsps. chopped pimiento
½ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
¾ cup evaporated milk
½ cup finely crushed cracker crumbs
2 tbsps. butter or margarine, cut in small pieces
¼ tsp. paprika

Combine corn, eggs, green pepper, pimiento, salt, pepper and milk in 1½-qurt glass casserole.

Sprinkle cracker crumbs over top and dot with butter. Sprinkle lightly with paprika.

Microwave, uncovered, 8 to 10 minutes, rotating dish one-quarter turn after 4½ minutes.

Let stand, covered, about 5 minutes before serving.

Serves 4 to 6.

Butcher suggests money-saving tips

By JIM WOOD
Hearst News Service

Tony Aiello took up the butcher's trade in 1942, and after a life with the knife, he has some advice for the meat buyer: Smarten up.

What amazes Aiello is the way consumers throw away money. With a few strokes of the knife, he says, they could make big savings on their barbecue bills.

Aiello speaks from experience. He learned to clean chickens as a high school student working part-time as a poultry truck lumper. Since then, he's been a butcher, a butcher shop owner, a teacher in the butchers' apprentice program and promotion director for the California Beef Council.

"After World War II, it was the time of the supermarkets. But now, small service markets seem to be making a come back. We did a research project about a year ago and asked people where they bought their meat. Most of them said supermarkets. But when we asked them, 'For a special occasion, do you go to the same place?' most of them said no. Consumers didn't have the confidence. They wanted human beings to help pick meat for special occasions."

Aiello says a lot of customers don't realize why there are different kinds of ground beef. They just know that some kinds are leaner.

"The different fat contents of ground beef have their uses. Meatloaf is just fantastic with just regular hamburger, ground beef. If you add bread crumbs and eggs, it makes just a great meatloaf. But if you get 90 percent lean ground beef and put breadcrumbs in it, you'll find you haven't made a good meat loaf; it's too dry."

The leaner ground beef, he suggests, is better in barbecues and spaghetti sauces.

For selecting steaks, the key is the end use. Beef has changed over the past 30 years. It doesn't even look the same. Beef used to be 3 years old when it came on the market; it was stockier, marbled. Now beef is finished in 15 months or 18 months. The animals are very young and very lean.

"The color looks absolutely different. You see very little inter-muscular fat. With this new kind of beef, the method of cooking has to change a little. If you're going to barbecue, you want a little fat to keep that meat moist. My personal preference for a barbecue is a rib eye or any of the rib cuts."

For the customer seeking delicious lean beef at reasonable cost, Aiello suggests full cut round steak, a blade roast or a seven bone roast (the latter two are from the chuck). None of these cuts sells well at present.

"The reason you can't sell them is that people don't know what to do with them. We have a lot of two-person families, or a lot of single people or senior citizens, people who are economy-minded, and they see a blade roast on special, very reasonably priced, as low as 79 cents a pound, but it's four or five pounds. What would two elderly people do with a big 5-pound roast?"

They could cut it up in ways suggested in many cook books, and end up with some good steaks and roasting or stewing meat.

Keeping the meat after you cut it is easy, provided it's been properly handled. Meat usually is kept in the market's meat counter on a three-day cycle. After that, either the price is cut or the meat is removed. Aiello suggests you buy meat last when you're shopping and that you take it right home and put it in the refrigerator — no stops at the cleaners or picking up the kids from school.

If you've kept the meat properly, it usually will last in the refrigerator for around three days. Wrap the meat in plastic, very tight, sealing out the air. Keep the meat in the coldest part of your refrigerator, most often the lower part, and don't allow anyone to hold the refrigerator door open for extended periods. Even if the color turns a little, the meat probably is all right as long as it smells fresh.

But Aiello heartily endorses this advice about spoilage: If in doubt, throw it out. The possibility of saving a few dollars isn't worth the risk of making your family ill.

Aiello suggests that if you aren't going to use the meat within three days, the best way to keep meat is to freeze it. He has kept roasts nine months without damage, although, as a professional, he knows how to wrap meat for maximum freezer protection.

With a blade roast, he says, the best procedure is to make all your cuts the first day: cubes for stew and kebabs, sliced pieces for Swiss steak and stir-fry strips.

To wrap beef for freezing, use specially coated freezing paper, aluminum foil, heavy-duty polyethylene or heavy-duty plastic bags. The wrap must lock in moisture and seal out air, so plastic sandwich bags and wax paper won't work. When freezing several steaks, patties or individual pieces together, place a double thickness of freezer wrap between them for easier separation. Wrap closely so that air is forced out, and double-fold the ends to keep air out. Tape the ends shut and be sure to label each package with the name of the cut inside, the date and the number of servings.

Baked brisket makes tasty meal

BAKED BRISKET

2¼ pounds straight-cut beef brisket
½ cup ketchup
½ cup water
1 medium onion, chopped
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
1½ teaspoons prepared mustard
Salt and pepper to taste

Place the beef, fat side up, in a heavy casserole. Mix together remaining ingredients and pour over beef. Cover tightly and bake in a 300-degree oven until tender — about 3½ hours. Chill beef and gravy separately. Slice beef thin; arrange in a 12 by 8 by 2-inch baking dish. Remove fat from gravy and pour gravy over beef. Cover tightly and reheat in a preheated 350-degree oven until hot — about 30 minutes. —(AP)

California Beef Council offers flavorful recipes

Hearst News Service

Here are some recipes you'll enjoy from the California Beef Council:

BEEF AND ARTICHOKE DINNER

¾ pound boneless beef chunk
1 teaspoon vegetable oil
½ small onion, chopped
1 package (9 ounces) frozen artichoke hearts
1 cup beef broth
½ teaspoon dried oregano leaves
1 cup cherry tomatoes, halved
1 teaspoon cornstarch

Cut the beef into ½-inch cubes. Heat the oil in a non-stick surface skillet until it's hot. Cook the beef and onion in oil until the beef is browned. Stir in artichoke hearts, ¾-cup of the beef broth and the oregano. Heat to boiling, then reduce heat and cover. Simmer until the beef is tender: about 30 minutes.

Stir in tomatoes and cover. Simmer until it's hot: about 5 minutes. Mix cornstarch and the remaining ¼-cup of beef broth. Stir it into the beef mixture. Cook and stir until the mixture is thickened. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Serves two.

SALSA ROAST

3 pound bone-in beef chunk blade roast
2 jars (12 ounces each) salsa sauce
1 can (12 ounces) beer

Trim excess fat from the pot roast. Place the pot roast and the remaining ingredients in a Dutch oven. Next, heat to boiling; reduce heat and cover. Simmer until the beef is tender: 1½ to 2 hours.

Tip: Salsa sauce comes in three heat levels: mild, medium and hot. Be sure to check the level and use according to your personal preference.

HEARTY BEEF BARLEY SOUP

3 pounds boneless beef chunk
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 pound beef bones
3 cups water
¾ cup chopped parsley
3 bay leaves
1 teaspoon dried thyme leaves
¼ teaspoon pepper
½ cup pearl barley
8 small white onions, peeled
1 carrot, sliced
8 ounces fresh mushrooms, sliced

Cut the beef into ½-inch cubes. Heat the oil in a Dutch oven until it's hot. Cook and stir the beef in oil until it's browned. Add beef bones, beef broth, water, parsley, bay leaves, thyme, pepper and barley. Heat to boiling; reduce the heat and cover. Simmer for 1 hour.

Next, add onions and cover. Simmer for 30 minutes. Add carrots and mushrooms; cover. Simmer until the beef and vegetables are tender — about 10 minutes longer. Strip the beef from the beef bones and add it to the soup. Discard the beef bones and bay leaves. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Serves 8.

ZESTY SKILLET ROAST

1½ pound boneless beef chunk pot roast
2 teaspoons vegetable oil
1 can (19 ounces) enchilada sauce
1 avocado
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Sour cream, if desired

Trim the excess fat from the pot roast. Heat the oil in a non-stick surface skillet until it's hot. Cook the pot roast in hot oil until it's browned: about 5 minutes per side. Pour enchilada sauce over the roast. Heat to boiling; reduce the heat and cover. Simmer until the roast is tender: 1 to 1½ hours.

Slice the avocado and sprinkle with lemon juice. Remove the roast from skillet; slice thinly. Arrange the beef slices on a serving plate; spoon the sauce over slices. Surround with avocado slices. Serve with sour cream. Serves four.

Milan Zucchini: Italian-style

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

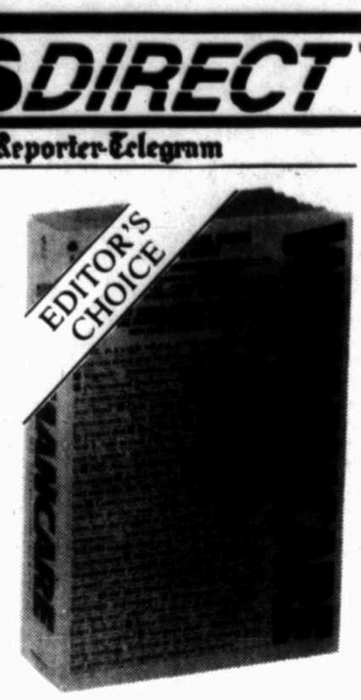

MILAN ZUCCHINI

2 pounds small zucchini
⅓ cup water
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley
Salt to taste

Scrub zucchini; do not peel; cut crosswise into ¼-inch thick slices. Into a 2-quart microwave-safe bowl or dish turn zucchini and water; cover. Microwave at high (100 per cent power) stirring midway, until just tender — 8 minutes. Toss with oil, parsley and salt. Microwave at high for 2 more minutes. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Cook: Chinese cuisine uncomplicated

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — "A lot of people misunderstand Chinese cooking," said Lily Lee Levin during a recent visit to New York. Mrs. Levin, who was born and raised in China, is the wife of the U.S. Consul General in Hong Kong, Burton Levin. She is also an enthusiastic exponent of the art of Chinese cooking, which, she insists with disarming conviction, is not so difficult as Westerners make out. If millions of Chinese women can turn out three meals a day, Mrs. Levin says, there is no reason why the rest of us should find it daunting.

"People say about Chinese cooking: One, you use a lot of ingredients I've never seen before, and two, there's a lot of chopping, it's a lot of work — but that's not true," Mrs. Levin said as she quickly assembled the ingredients for a demonstration one Saturday morning in the sunlit Hors d'Oeuverie at the top of the World Trade Center. "You don't need a wok, you don't need a cleaver and you don't need special ingredients."

She went on to describe her formula: "P-O-S-S, pepper, oil, salt and sugar, that's the basis," she said. "Add G-S-G — garlic, scallion and ginger, but never add MSG (monosodium glutamate). That's the sign of bad food or a bad cook — or both."

The daughter of a Chinese army officer, Mrs. Levin was born in northern China in Shandong Province. In the difficult years before, during and after World War II, her family moved from city to city throughout China.

Mrs. Levin learned to cook, she said, by following in the steps of her amah, or nursemaid. "The family cook traveled with us," she said, "and we always had a house full of people, family and soldiers. In the kitchen they would give me a few vegetables to chop or a piece of dough to roll out just to keep me quiet." When the family moved to Taiwan in 1949, she took over much of the meal preparation herself.

But it was not until she became a Foreign Service officer's wife that she discovered her cooking was something special. She met her Brooklyn-born husband in the United States while attending Warren Wilson College in North Carolina. "Now I like to intermarry Chinese and American things," she said, comparing her cooking style to her marriage. "These days no place is isolated. We mix cultures and we mix cuisines." With her husband and two children, Mrs. Levin has lived in Indonesia, Thailand, Taiwan and several times in Hong Kong, as well as in Washington, D.C., and Cambridge, Mass.

Although she has always been a dedicated cook, it is only in recent years, with her children away at school, that Mrs. Levin has found the time to demonstrate her enthusiasm to others. Now she has translated that enthusiasm into a book, "Lily's Way," subtitled "Scrutable Chinese Cooking," which she published privately in Hong Kong last year.

"Americans have such a misconception of Chinese cooking," Mrs. Levin told a group of American women assembled for her demonstration at the World Trade Center here. "They ask me, do you cook Peking style, Sichuan, Cantonese?" Her response, she said, is to insist: "I cook Chinese! It's the same way of cooking all over China. Only the spice, the flavoring, makes the difference from one region to the next."

Mrs. Levin does not believe in teaching recipes, she said on another occasion, preparing a meal in a friend's kitchen in New York. "What is important is to get a sense of how the whole thing works," she said.

As an example of the method approach from "Lily's Way," here is Mrs. Levin's "one-for-all recipe for stir-fried fish or shrimp dishes:

"For fish or shrimp and vegetables, the proportion is 2 cups to 1 cup — i.e., twice as much fish or shrimp as vegetables.

"Method"

"Clean the fish (which should be filleted and cut into bite-sized pieces) or the shrimp (which should be deveined) and use paper toweling to blot dry.

"Salt and pepper the fish (dusted with a little cornstarch as a binder to prevent it from falling apart while cooking) or the shrimp and separately dice, shred or slice the vegetables.

"Proceed as you would with a meat dish — stir-fry the vegetables for about 10 to 15 seconds in 1 ½ tbsp. of heated oil, salt very lightly and then scoop the vegetables out of the pan. Add another 2 ½ tbsp. of oil and when it is hot, saute a few slices of ginger or, if you prefer, a little chopped scallion or garlic.

"Add the fish or shrimp, stir-fry for about 20 to 30 seconds until almost done, and put back the vegetables. Stir fry for another 5 to 10 seconds. Taste, add salt if necessary and a pinch of sugar, and it is ready to serve.

"Hint"

"Ginger complements sea food. Use a lot of it when available. Sauted ginger gives off a fragrant aroma and imparts a delicate flavor to the seafood. If you don't like ginger, substitute scallions.

"Note"

"Fish and shrimp are often cooked with only a few slices of ginger and a couple of scallion stalks cut into about 1-inch lengths. With fish, soy sauce can be used instead of salt, but it is generally not used with shrimp since it would overwhelm the delicate flavor. If you use soy sauce, the general rule is 1 tsp. for every cup of meat or fish."

The cooking times are only approximate and depend on the size of the pieces of fish, shrimp and vegetable. Mrs. Levin recommends several vegetables to go with shrimp or fish, among them asparagus, bamboo shoots, bean sprouts, mushrooms, both fresh and dried, celery, cucumber and snow peas.

SOYA WINGS
12 chicken wings
⅓ cup soy sauce
⅓ cup apricot preserves
4 scallions, finely chopped (about ¼ cup)
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
1 tablespoon white rice wine vinegar
1¼ teaspoons vegetable oil

Cut chicken wings apart at joints; save tips in freezer for stock. Marinate remaining chicken pieces in a mixture of soy sauce, preserves, scallion, garlic, vinegar and oil for a day or overnight. Place chicken pieces in a single layer on oiled foil in a very shallow pan. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven for 15 minuts; turn and bake until tender — about 15 minutes longer. Makes 4 servings.

Cornish game hens elegant

By OLIVIA and PAUL BENSEN
Copley News Service

Rock Cornish game hens, also known as Cornish game hens and Rock Cornish hens, are the main ingredient in several of our favorite recipes. Averaging about 1 pound apiece, they are a perfect size for one serving, and have much less fat than chicken.

Game hens also lend themselves to beautiful presentation and easy serving — each person carves his own. The meat has a rich distinctive taste, and absorbs the flavor of sauces wonderfully well.

A cross between Cornish and White Plymouth Rock chickens, game hens were bred for small size and a high proportion of meat to body size. They are available in almost all large supermarkets. Usually less than $2 apiece, they make an inexpensive and dramatic entree.

Unlike chickens, which generally are raised in close confinement, kept on a diet that includes many chemicals (often including amphetamines to keep them awake around-the-clock to increase egg production), game hens usually are fed much more naturally and allowed to move about, which accounts in part for their lower fat level and the richness of their meat.

Both of our recipes for today are for charcoal-broiled, halved game hens. As noted in the recipe directions, you will need to control the fire during cooking by spraying a bit of water on the coals with a baster, to prevent the game hens from blackening on the outside. As a rule of thumb, cook the halves for 20 minutes or so, turning and basting them frequently.

Tandoori-Style Barbecued Game Hens are marinated in a mixture similar to the classic Indian Tandoori sauce. We have adapted the Indian recipe, generally used with chicken.

Island Barbecued Game Hens, with a marinade that includes pineapple and honey, have a light, sweet-and-sour flavor.

Both recipes can be marinated overnight, so you can prepare them one evening and serve them quickly and easily the next.

TANDOORI-STYLE BARBECUED GAME HENS
4 game hens
Marinade:
1 heaping cup plain yogurt
2 tbsps. vegetable oil
¼ cup fresh lemon juice
1 tsp. turmeric
1 tsp. cumin
½ tsp. paprika
1½ tsps. salt
1 tsp. freshly ground black pepper
4 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 tbsp. hot chili powder
1 tsp. ground red pepper
¼ tsp. cinnamon

Combine all marinade ingredients and mix well.

Clean and halve game hens. Mrinate halves for several hours, or overnight, in large bowl or plastic bag.

Cook over large charcoal fire, using baster and water to control heat occasionally, so that game hen halves cook through thoroughly without blackening on outside. Turn halves frequently, using pastry brush to apply marinade liberally each time halves are turned.

Serves 4.

ISLAND BARBECUED GAME HENS

½ cup soy sauce
2 cloves garlic, minced

Combine all marinade ingredients and mix well.

Clean and halve game hens. Mrinate halves for several hours, or overnight, in large bowl or plastic bag.

Recipes cut cholesterol, not taste

Hearst News Service

Winning the odds against heart disease takes commitment, not luck.

The human heart weighs less than a pound, is as big as a fist and beats about 70 times a minute, or more than 100,000 times each day. It pumps five quarts of blood through its chambers every 60 seconds. The heart does enough work in one hour to lift a 1½-ton weight more than a foot off the ground.

You can give your heart a break by controlling cholesterol, fat and sodium in the diet, keeping your weight at the correct level, maintaining normal blood pressure, controlling stress and eliminating smoking.

Cutting down is the key. Cutting down on fats keeps calories under control. Substitute moderate amounts of polyunsaturated vegetable oil for saturated fats.

All food fats, animal or vegetable, contain a mixture of saturated and unsaturated fatty acids, but generally, animal fats are more saturated than liquid vegetable oils. Saturated and polyunsaturated fats in diets differ in their effect on blood cholesterol. Polyunsaturated fat in the diet tends to lower the amount of cholesterol in the blood.

To cut down on fat, avoid deep fried foods, bacon, sausage and luncheon meats. When prepared without fat, chicken, turkey and fish contain 10 to 20 percent fat. Trim all visible fat off meats and skin from poultry. Select skim milk and low-fat dairy products.

FISH CHOWDER

1 cup raw potatoes cubes
1 cup carrots, sliced
¾ cup onion, chopped
⅓ cup celery, sliced
8 peppercorns
1 bay leaf
Water
1 package (16-ounce) frozen cod, thawed
¼ cup margarine
¼ cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
3 cups skim milk

Heat potatoes, carrots, onion, celery, peppercorns and bay leaf and water to to a boil, covered in a large saucepan. Reduce the heat and simmer for 15 minutes. Add the fish. Simmer 10 minutes, or until the fish flakes with a fork. Remove the fish, vegetables and seasonings. Discard the peppercorns and the bay leaf. Boil broth to reduce to one cup. Break the fish into chunks.

Melt the margarine. Blend in the flour and salt. Stir in the skim milk and reduced the broth. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly until the mixture comes to a boil. Add the fish and vegetables. Heat through. Serve garnished with parsley. Serves four. About 350 calories per serving.

CHICKEN MARENGO

1 broiler-fryer, cut up and skinned
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons margarine
2 cups sliced onion
1 cup sliced mushrooms
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 cups canned tomatoes
¼ cup sherry

Sprinkle the chicken with salt and pepper. Saute the onion, mushrooms and garlic in margarine. Stir in the tomatoes and sherry. Arrange the chicken in the sauce. Cover and simmer about 30 minutes until the chicken is tender.

Drain off and reserve the liquid. Chill until the fat hardens on surface. Cover and refrigerate the chicken mixture.

Discard hardened fat from the liquid. Blend two tablespoons of flour with a small amount of liquid. Stir into the remaining liquid. Bring to a boil. Reduce the heat and cook until thickened. Add the chicken and cook until heated through. When cooking one-half pound of chicken per serving, plan 430 calories per serving. A three-pound broiler-fryer will serve six.

TEXAS HAMBURGERS

½ cup finely-chopped onions
2 tablespoons oil
½ cup catsup
2 tablespoons prepared mustard
2 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon white vinegar
1 tablespoon brown sugar
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon salt
1¼ pounds lean ground beef
8 hamburger buns

Saute the onions in oil until transparent. Stir in the next seven ingredients. Bring the mixture to a boil. Reduce the heat and simmer about five minutes.

Meanwhile, shape the ground beef into eight patties. Heat the griddle. Cook the meat as desired. Place a hamburger on each bun. Spoon two tablespoons of sauce over each hamburger. Cover with bun tops. Serves eight with about 285 calories per serving.

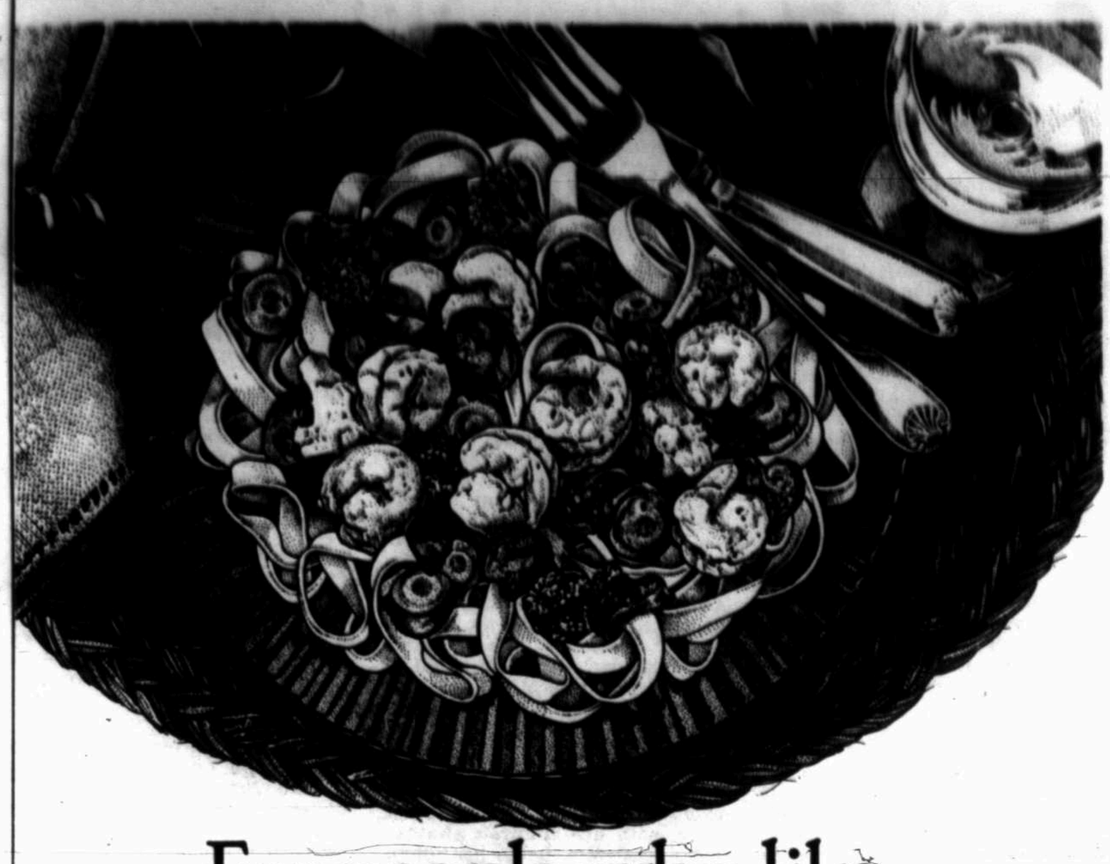

TEX-MEX CHILI

½ pound dried pinto beans
1 tablespoon oil
3 talespoons chili powder
2 pounds ground beef
2 green peppers, chopped
2 onions, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
3 to 5 tablespoons chili powder
1 tablespoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon cumin seeds
2 cups canned tomatoes
1 dried hot red pepper

Cover pinto beans with water, about two inches above the beans. Cover and let soak overnight.

Add the oil and three tablespoons chili powder to the beans and water. Cover and simmer one hour or until tender, adding more water if necessary.

Combine ground meat, green peppers, onion and garlic in a Dutch oven. Cook over medium heat until the ground beef is browned. Drain. Stir in the next five ingredients. Cover and reduce heat. Simmer one hour and 15 minutes. Add beans and the hot pepper. Continue to cook for 15 minutes. Remove the hot red pepper before serving. Makes 2½ quarts to serve 10 to 12.

Familiar or exotic herbs can enrich ordinary dishes

Herb blends

Herbs can be combined for specific foods. Having the combinations on hand will speed cooking and enhance one's reputation as a gourmet. They can be added loosely or wrapped in cheesecloth and removed before serving. Following are some suggested herb blends.

Egg herbs	Basil, dill weed (leaves), garlic, parsley
Fish herbs	Basil, bay leaf (crumbled), French tarragon, lemon thyme, parsley (options: fennel, sage, savory)
Poultry herbs	Lovage, marjoram (two parts), sage (three parts)
Salad herbs	Basil, lovage, parsley, French tarragon
Tomato sauce herbs	Basil (two parts), bay leaf, marjoram, oregano, parsley (options: celery leaves, cloves)
Vegetable herbs	Basil, parsley, savory
Italian blend	Basil, marjoram, oregano, rosemary, sage, savory, thyme
Barbecue blend	Cumin, garlic, hot pepper, oregano

French herbal combinations:

Fines herbes	Parsley, chervil, chives, French tarragon (sometimes adding a small amount of basil, fennel, oregano, sage or saffron)
Bouquet garni mixtures	Bay, parsley (two parts), thyme. The herbs may be wrapped in cheesecloth or the parsley wrapped around the thyme and bay leaf
Basic herb butter	One stick unsalted butter, 1 to 3 tablespoons dried herbs or 2 to 6 tablespoons fresh herbs, ½ teaspoon lemon juice and white pepper. Combine ingredients and mix until fluffy. Pack in covered container and let set at least 1 hour. Any of the culinary herbs and spices may be used.
Herb vinegars	Heat vinegar in an enamel pan and pour it into a vinegar bottle and add 1 or several culinary herbs (to taste). Do not let the vinegar boil. Let the mixture set for 2 weeks before using. Any type of vinegar may be used, depending on personal preference.

Herb blends to replace salt

(These can be placed in shakers and used instead of salt.)

Saltless surprise	Two teaspoons garlic powder and 1 teaspoon each of basil, oregano and powdered lemon rind (or dehydrated lemon juice). Put ingredients into a blender and mix well. Store in glass container, label well and add rice to prevent caking.
Pungent salt substitute	Three teaspoons basil, 2 teaspoons each of savory (summer savory is best), celery seed, ground cumin seed, sage and marjoram and 1 teaspoon thyme. Mix well, then powder with a mortar and pestle.
Spicy saltless seasoning	One teaspoon each of cloves, pepper and coriander seed (crushed), 2 teaspoons paprika and 1 tablespoon rosemary. Mix ingredients in a blender. Store in airtight container.

Now that garden-variety cooks wouldn't dream of using anything but fresh basil from their kitchen gardens or windowsill pots, it's time to move on beyond basil.

Even if you don't have a miniature hedge of herbs marching along your kitchen windowsill or an herb garden out back, you can cook with fresh or dried herbs. Most supermarkets offer at least a few fresh herbs and an abundance of dried ones. There are even cookbooks dedicated solely to the art of herb cookery, and from three, here are a number of recipes.

The books are "Cooking with Herbs and Spices," (Harper and Row, $18.95) by Craig Claiborne, "The Herb Cookbook," ($4.20) from the Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, Mass., and the entertaining classic "Herbs for the Kitchen" (Little, Brown, $6.95), by Irma Goodrich Mazza, which breaks into poetry at odd moments as it discusses varieties of herbs, growing them, and cooking with them.

From the Garden Center come recipes for herb cheese, green rice salad and lamb Provencale. Claiborne is represented by chive potato souffle, Luchow's May wine bowl and cauliflower or mushrooms a la Grecque. From Mazza are risotto all'erbea and tarragon vinegar.

HERB CHEESE

1 pound sharp, well-aged cheddar cheese
½ cup sherry
¼ pound butter, softened
3 tablespoons chives, minced
3 tablespoons parsley, minced
1 tablespoon tarragon, minced
Salt and pepper to taste

Allow cheddar to stand at room temperature for several hours. Mash it and mix with sherry, soft butter, herbs, salt and pepper. Place in pots. Cover with melted butter and refrigerate.

GREEN RICE SALAD
(Serves four)

1 cup rice
1 cup vinaigrette sauce (recipe below)
1 10-ounce package frozen peas or two cups fresh, cooked for three minutes
1 bunch watercress, chopped
½ cup fresh dill, snipped
½ cup fresh parsley, chopped
¼ cup fresh chives, chopped

Bring six cups water to boil. Add the rice and boil for 15 minutes. Drain, rinse with cold water and transfer to a large bowl. Add one cup vinaigrette. Stir and let rest.

Mix peas, watercress, dill, parsley and chives; fold into rice. Serve at room temperature.

VINAIGRETTE SAUCE:
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tablespoon salt
1 teapoon freshly ground pepper
1 teaspoon dried oregano
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
3 tablespoons wine vinegar
½ cup olive oil

Mix garlic, salt, pepper and oregano in a bowl. Add mustard and vinegar. Stir well with a whisk. Slowly add the olive oil while whisking vigorously, until mixture is creamy. Let sit about 15 minutes to absorb the flavors before pouring over the rice.

CHARCOAL GRILLED LAMB PROVENCALE
(Serves six to eight)

1 six-pound leg of lamb, with all fat removed
1 cup olive oil
⅔ cup lemon juice
3 cloves garlic, crushed
2 bay leaves
6 sprigs parsley
2 teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon black pepper
1 teaspoon dried sage
1 teaspoon dried rosemary
1 teaspoon dried thyme
Sauce Provencale (recipe follows)

Combine oil, lemon juice, garlic, bay leaves, parsley sprigs, salt, pepper, sage, rosemary and thyme. Marinate lamb for 24 hours, turning occasionally. Drain meat and reserve marinade. Dry meat with paper towel. Place lamb flat on hot grill and sear both sides. Lower heat and cook 45 minutes to one hour, brushing with marinade. The outside should be crusty and the inside pink. Do not overcook.

SAUCE PROVENCALE:
½ cup beef stock
¼ cup red wine
2 tablespoons shallots, chopped
1 teaspoon dried sage
1 teaspoon dried rosemary
1 teaspoon dried thyme
3 tablespoons butter, at room temperature
3 tablespoons parsley, chopped

Combine the stock, wine, shallots, sage, rosemary and thyme. Boil sauce rapidly until it has reduced to about one-half cup. Remove from heat. Add butter and parsley. Serve immediately.

CHIVE POTATO SOUFFLE
(Serves four to six)

¾ cup shredded sharp Cheddar cheese
2 cups hot mashed potatoes
½ cup sour cream
Salt to taste, if desired
3 tablespoons chopped chives
3 eggs, separated

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees F. Combine the shredded cheese with the mashed potatoes, sour cream and seasonings.

Beat the egg whites until stiff but still moist; set aside. Beat the yolks until smooth and add them to the potato mixture. Whip until light. Fold in the beaten egg whites and pour int a buttered one-and-one-half-quart casserole.

Bake 45 minutes and serve immediately. Garnish with additional chopped chives, if desired.

RISOTTO ALL'ERBEA
(Serves four)

1 cup raw rice
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
1 small onion
1 clove garlic
2 tablespoons white wine
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon paprika
Pinch allspice
2 tablespoons chopped green herbs in equal amounts: parsley, marjoram, thyme, basil and rosemary
4 bouillon cubes
4 cups hot water

Rub rice clean with a dry towel, but do not wash. Mix and heat together oil and butter in a skillet or earthenware casserole. Add minced onion and garlic, and the rice. Let fry over a slow fire until rice is translucent, stirring frequently to prevent burning. When translucent, add wine, seasonings and green herbs. Stir well. Dissolve bouillon cubes in hot water and keep hot in a pan on the stove. Pour a cup of it over rice, stir once, then cover tightly. Cook slowly until this bouillon is dissolved, then add another cup. Continue this process until rice is tender and bouillon is used up. Do not stir after first bouillon is added. Serve this risotto with raisins cooked in half white wine and half water, with a little allspice added.

LUCHOW'S MAY WINE BOWL
(Makes eight to 10 cups)

½ cup dried woodruff
¼ cup of superfine granulated sugar
½ cup cognac
2 bottles Rhine or Moselle wine
1 bottle champagne or club soda
½ cup whole fresh strawberries

Tie the woodruff in a small piece of cheesecloth. Place it in a bowl and add the sugar, cognac and one-half bowl of wine. Cover closely and let stand overnight.

Strain the woodruff-wine mixture into a punchbowl containing ice cubes or a large chunk of ice. Add the remaining still wine, champagne and strawberries. Serve in stemmed glasses.

CAULIFLOWER A LA GRECQUE
(Serves six)

1 medium head cauliflower, cut into flowerlets
2 cups water
1 cup olive oil
Juice of three lemons
1 stalk celery, sliced
1 clove garlic, minced
1 branch whole fresh fennel or ½ teaspoon dried fennel
1 teaspoon freshly chopped chervil or one-half teaspoon dried chervil
½ teaspoon thyme
½ bay leaf
¾ teaspoon freshly ground coriander
8 peppercorns
Salt to taste, if desired

Bring all ingredients to a boil. Reduce the heat and simmer five minutes, stirring occasionally.

Turn into a bowl, cool, then marinate overnight in the refrigerator.

Variation: Follow same recipe, but substitute 1½ pounds whole small mushrooms, quartered, for the cauliflower.

Apples found all year

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Time was when apples were regarded as an autumn fruit, featured on Halloween and Thanksgiving.

That is still the peak season when such well known types as Golden Delicious and McIntosh are at their best.

But many others ripen all through the year. Winter is the season for the red York Imperial and the Winesap, especially suited for making pies. Spring is the time for the deliciously tart Rome Beauty. Summer ushers in the juicy Yellow Transparent and the red-striped Gravenstein.

For centuries, people have eaten apples, mainly because they liked the taste, but also because they were said to be good for the health. Today, research has supported that belief. Apples are virtually fat-free and high in vitamins. They are also claimed to be a digestive aid.

The fruit dates as far back as the Trojan War and the mythological dispute among Greek goddesses over a golden apple.

Homer praised the apple as a gift of the gods. And Solomon made the cryptic comment in his song, "Comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love."

Emerson once commented that "every finished man must eat every (type of?) apple once." A tall order, since there are more than 6,000 types grown around the world.

Apples are eaten all during the day, but are especially popular for breakfast. Here's a recipe I like for Apple French Toast.

APPLE FRENCH TOAST

1 apple, sliced
½ cup apple juice
1 egg, beaten
Dash vanilla
2 slices bread
1 teaspoon cornstarch
Dash salt
Dash cardamom
1 tablespoon cold water

Poach apple slices in apple juice about 8 minutes, or until tender. Combine egg and vanilla and mix well. Dip bread in egg mix until all the egg is absorbed. Cook quickly on both sides in a non-stick skillet. Remove apples from juice with slotted spoon and arrange on toast. Combine cornstarch, salt and cardamom and gradually blend in water. Stir into the apple juice; cook and continue to stir until thickened and clear. Spoon over apple slices. Makes 2 servings.

Lamb meat eaten for millennia

By JIM WOOD
Hearst News Service

Lamb is a very tolerant meat. We humans have been feasting on it for at least 5,000 years and we've developed some wonderful ways of preparing it.

One of the simplest, and probably one of the best, is to roast a leg of lamb: Trim most of the fat from a 6-pound leg, make six slashes in the meat with a paring knife and insert a sliver of garlic in each slash. Paint the leg with a thin mixture made from a cup of white wine, a crumbled bay leaf and a teaspoon each of thyme and oregano. Put the leg in the oven for 15 minutes at 450 degrees F, then reduce the heat to 350 degrees and roast for another hour. The trick is to take the lamb out of the refrigerator for at least an hour before working on it to allow it to warm to room temperature.

For more elaborate ways of preparing lamb, I went to Executive Chef Paul Bermani at Doro's, the famous San Francisco restaurant. Here are some of his favorites. (The Noisettes recipe is difficult but delicious; read it through carefully before attempting it.)

STUFFED SADDLE OF LAMB
1 saddle of lamb
1 onion, coarsely chopped
1 carrot, coarsely chopped
½ cup celery, coarsely chopped
1 sprig rosemary
1 clove garlic
½ cup red wine
2 cups brown sauce
Stuffing:
½ pound ground sausage meat
½ pound ground lean veal
1 onion, finely chopped
1 cup fresh bread crumbs
1 egg
3 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
Salt and pepper
Pinch of thyme and nutmeg

To make the stuffing, saute the chopped onions in butter until golden brown. Remove from heat and in a bowl mix the onion with sausage meat, veal, parsley, egg, bread crumbs and seasoning.

Have the butcher remove the bone from both loins of lamb without separating them. Skin the saddle and remove excessive fat. Spread the stuffing between the two loins, then roll the saddle and tie it with string. Salt and pepper the outer side and place in roasting pan. Bake in oven at 450-F for 20 minutes, turning to brown all sides.

Reduce heat to a more moderate oven (350-F) for 1 hour.

Add the chopped vegetables and a sprig of rosemary. Braise them for about 10 to 15 minutes until soft, then remove the lamb and drain the excessive fat from the pan. Pour red wine into the pan, reduce it, and add brown sauce. Strain the mixture, season to taste and serve the sauce in sauce boat. Untie the lamb, slice it across and garnish with Belgian baby carrots sauted in butter, sauted potatoes and mushroom caps.

Makes six to eight servings.

STUFFED LAMB CHOPS VERONAISE
8 lamb chops, ⅛-inch thick, trimmed of fat
2 cups fresh mushrooms, finely chopped
2 cups fresh white bread crumbs
⅛ cup onions, finely minced
1 pinch thyme
2 egg yolks
¼ cup clarified butter
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
1 tablespoon fresh parsley, finely chopped
Salt and pepper

Season the lamb chops. In a very hot skillet using 1 tablespoon of butter, saute the lamb chops on one side only for about four minutes, then set them aside.

In a sauce pan, saute the finely chopped onions in butter. When golden brown, add the mushrooms. Season to taste with salt, pepper and thyme. When cooked — about seven or eight minutes — add the bread crumbs, stir and remove the mixture from the heat. Cool the mixture for a while, then mix it with the chopped parsley and egg yolks. Season to taste.

Place a small mound of the prepared mixture on the cooked side of each lamb chop. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese, and place them in a buttered baking pan in a preheated 375-F oven for about 15 minutes. Serve with broiled tomato and green vegetables in season.

Makes six to eight servings.

RACK OF LAMB PARSILLE
½ rack of spring lamb
Salt and pepper
2 cups brown sauce
1 cup of diced onion, celery and carrots
Sprig of rosemary
¾ cup red wine
½ cup white bread crumbs
½ cup finely chopped parsley
1 small clove garlic
Sprig of rosemary

Trim a rack of lamb almost entirely of fat. Salt and pepper it. Braise in the oven at 450-F for 25 minutes.

Meanwhile, make a mixture of fresh bread crumbs, parsley, garlic and rosemary, all very finely chopped.

Drain excess fat from the rack of lamb and add chopped onions, celery, carrots and rosemary. Place lamb back in the oven. When vegetables are golden brown, remove the rack from the pan. Add ¾ cup red wine. Reduce mixture and then add 2 cups of brown sauce. Bring mixture to a boil and then strain.

Press the parsley crumb mixture well to make it adhere evenly all over the top of the meat. Set rack into another pan and put it back in the oven until it turns golden. Then arrange it on platter with garnish of sauteed small potatoes and carrots and buttered string beans.

Serve the sauce separately after the rack has been carved.

Makes two servings.

NOISETTES OF SPRING LAMB SAUTE PIEMONTESE
1 loin of spring lamb
Toothpicks
2 tablespoons clarified butter
1 shallot
2 ounces brandy
1 cup brown sauce
1 ounce solid butter
Salt and pepper
4 mushroom caps
2 broiled tomatoes
12 asparagus spears
1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese

With a boning knife, remove meat from each side of the loin of lamb. Trim away fat. Roll boned loin from the heavy part of the flank. Secure roll with toothpicks. Slice crosswise into pieces about 1-inch thick. Make sure a toothpick secures each slice. Season with salt and pepper.

Saute slices in clarified butter about 5 minutes on each side. Drain excess fat. Add finely chopped shallots and stir until golden brown. Add brandy. Reduce. Add previously sauted mushroom caps and brown sauce. Simmer 2 to 3 minutes.

Garnish with asparagus Parmesan, broiled Tomatoes and risotto a la Piemontese.

ENGLISH LAMB CHOPS MIXED GRILL
4 small lamb chops cut 1-rib thick
2 rashers of bacon
2 butterflied lamb kidneys
4 links sausages
1 tomato cut in half
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 tablespoon fresh bread crumbs
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese
Salt
Pepper
Pinch of oregano
1 small clove garlic, finely chopped
8 asparagus spears (steamed)

Season the chops with salt and pepper. Split the lamb kidneys, remove fat and tubes. Butterfly them, using skewers to keep them open, otherwise they will curl up when placed on under broiler.

Mix bread crumbs, oregano, parsley, cheese, garlic, salt and pepper together. Spread this mixture over the cut side of tomatoes, sprinkle on a little of the olive oil and place them under the broiler.

Broil the chops, sausages, kidneys and strips of bacon for about 12 minutes, making sure to turn them over so they cook on all sides. Warm the plates and arrange the mixed grill. Garnish with broiled tomatoes and steamed asparagus. Serves two.

Cheese souffle recipe not difficult once learned

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Cheese and other souffles are not hard to make once you get used to preparing them.

We use the French method of whisking in the egg yolks without beating them first.

We've never found beating the yolks until they were thickened, as called for in many American recipes, necessary.

Here's a cheese souffle for two.

CHEESE SOUFFLE FOR TWO
2 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
⅛ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon dry mustard
⅛ cup milk
2 ounces sharp cheddar cheese, grated medium fine
2 large eggs, separated

In a 1½-quart saucepan over low heat, melt the butter; stir in the flour, salt and mustard. Off heat, gradually stir in milk, keeping smooth. Cook over moderately low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened. Remove from heat; add cheese and whisk until melted; whisk in egg yolks, one at a time. Beat egg whites until stiff; fold into cheese mixture. Turn into two souffle dishes, each about 4½ by 2 inches holding about 1½ cups.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until puffed and brown — 20 minutes for firm souffles. Serves 2. Serve at once because souffles sink rapidly.

New wineries springing up rapidly

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Wineries are springing up faster than ever, and becoming familiar with the better new wines is getting harder and harder.

For that reason it sometimes becomes important for me to scour the wine shops buying bottles made by wineries I never heard of before. I admit that this practice uncovers some very fine wines, but there are also an equal number of ho-hummers, wines that are either not very good, unmemorable or merely overpriced.

I recently tasted 12 wines from new wineries, and found eight of them worth seeking. Here are those eight:

1981 Sea Ridge Winery Pinot Noir "Bohan Vineyard" ($10.50) — A lighter aroma at first opens with airing into a striking fruitiness. The taste is silky and warm.

1981 Sea Ridge Pinot Noir "Summa Vineyard" ($15) — Very Burgundian in aroma, with a slight hint of oxidation. The wine is very spicy yet delicate in the mouth. Impressive.

1981 Sea Ridge Pinot Noir "Sonoma County" ($9.75) — Fruity-floral aromas and balanced taste, though lighter than the previous two wines.

Sea Ridge is a small winery on California's Sonoma coast that made its first wine in 1980. The 1981 Pinot Noirs are well made and worth seeking out.

Soleterra is a venture headed by wine educator John Thoreen.

1983 William Baccala Chardonnay ($11) — A strikingly fruity aroma (the wine has some oak but it is subdued) combined with a citrus-apple taste. This is a fresh and delightful wine from a new Mendocino County, Calif., winery. The label displays an attractive watercolor design.

1983 Groth Sauvignon Blanc ($9) — There is a slight hint of the grassy notes that you'd expect from this variety, but the richness and complexity from oak aging give it its backbone. The wine finishes like a rather big French Graves.

1982 Groth Cabernet ($14.50) — This was an early release. I first tasted it late last year, and I was impressed. However, the extra aging in the bottle has made it even more impressive. A very rich, chocolatey aroma carries through into the taste, and structure of the wine appears complex enough to carry it well into the next century.

Groth is a new Napa Valley winery owned by Dennis Groth, a San Francisco businessman who didn't cut corners. He hired as his wine maker one of the best: Nils Venge, who had made a string of exceptional wines with Villa Mt. Eden.

What Venge brings to Groth is experience both as a wine maker and as a grape grower (he worked at Charles Krug in vineyard development), and this dual ability should be an advantage for Groth over the years.

1983 Gainey Chardonnay ($11) — This wine is fruity with a citrus-apple aroma and a rich, complex taste. The wine is not overly woody.

'True' Italian Chianti should be lighter-style red wine

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Italy's most famous wine, though probably not its best wine, is Chianti, which is supposed to be a lighter-style red wine with plenty of acidity and balance to match with strongly flavored pasta dishes.

When it is made as a "riserva," the wine is aged at least three years (often in oak barrels), and it comes out richer, yet still not very coarse or concentrated. It is fuller, yet still retains its fresh delicacy.

And yet Chianti is known to some people as a dark, coarse wine, often inexpensive, and often found in a straw-covered bottle.

The confusion over what a Chianti personality is begins back about 1870 when Barone Bettino Ricasoli, owner of Brolio castle in Tuscany, came up with what he felt was an appropriate way to blend the grapes of the region.

His aim was to make the best red wine in that northwestern part of Italy, a wine to be called Chianti.

In 1872, the barone wrote that most of the Chianti wine should be from the rich, aromatic Sangiovese grape, and that some Cannaiolo, another red grape variety, could add "the sweetness which moderates the roughness without taking away any bouquet. And Malvasia (a white grape), which could be left out of wines due for long maturation, has a tendency to dilute the products of the first two grapes. By making it lighter, it makes the wine more quickly suitable for everyday consumption."

He suggested blending in Malvasia for wines intended to be consumed young and implied that true Chianti Riserva — which is intended to develop in the bottle for years — should be made from just Sangiovese and Cannaiolo.

But practical matters intervened. Since the barone's Brolio castle was such a dominant part of the Tuscan landscape, his words became ingrained in the oral tradition of the region, and since most of the hundreds of producers of Chianti made everyday wine, Malvasia became a routine addition to Chianti.

In the years before the turn of the century, however, wine makers in Tuscany added not only Malvasia but also another white wine grape: Trebbiano. This made Chianti much lighter in color, texture and taste than did red grapes alone, so steps were taken to darken the wine.

"To make the wine appear darker, many of the producers used grapes from the South of Italy, and so they made wine that was dark and very heavy," said Barone Bettino Ricasoli, great grandson of the first developer of a Chianti formula.

Chianti that was shipped after World War II was made in that style, a style many Americans assumed was what Chianti was supposed to be.

"The image many people have of Chianti is that it is a dark, heavy, coarse wine," said the barone. "This is not a true idea."

Wine laws were enacted in 1932, but not enforced.

As Burton Anderson points out in his fine book "Vino":

"In the troubled period between two wars and the advent of fascism, the Italian legal system was often encumbered by matters of greater gravity than wine fraud. Chianti's reputation hit appalling lows in the years following World War II."

Some Chianti was well made, clearly identifiable as the delicate and exceptional wine of the region. But there was some fraudulent Chianti on the market that was fortified with wine from other regions; it was coarse and astringent and tasted terrible, with flaws in every bottle, and no two flaws alike.

And then there was the fiasco.

That cute straw-covered bottle — the one the drippy candle goes into after the wine is gone — is called a fiasco, and in the aftermath of the war, the idea that sprang up as a tourist gimmick caught on.

By the early 1960s, fiaschi (the plural form of fiasco) were everywhere, filled with "Chianti." And I use quotation marks because the wine inside may not have had the slightest resemblance to Tuscany's Chianti.

"The fiasco was born for cheaper wine," said the barone.

Cooking expert studies ecology

ZITACUARO, Mexico (AP) — Diana Kennedy, whose books on Mexican cooking have acquainted thousands of Americans with its variety and sophistication, knows there's more to life than tacos and enchiladas.

Here, on the five-acre ecological farm she has spent five years developing, she says new ways must be found to handle what she believes will be a future of scarce resources.

"I don't know why I started, except I'm tenacious," said the British-born cooking expert, wearing a simple white cotton blouse and pants, and a straw hat atop her gray-streaked, chestnut-colored hair. "It's just a more interesting way to live — experimentally."

The house essentially runs like a ship, with power coming in from a windmill next to it. The gardens, of course, run naturally.

The mountains of Mexico's Michoacan state are visible from virtually any point of the grounds or the house, an airy and spacious brick and adobe dwelling filled with Mexican crafts, artwork and furniture.

"There are also things for the soul," Mrs. Kennedy said, with a gesture toward the view. "Sensually, it's very satisfying."

She first lived in Mexico as the wife of New York Times correspondent Paul Kennedy. After his death, Times food critic Craig Claiborne suggested she teach what she had learned about Mexican cooking in her extensive travels around the country.

The resulting publicity in New York led to an offer to write a book, and "The Cuisines of Mexico," published in 1972, established her reputation as an authority on what she calls "a very complex cuisine, full of surprises and full of contrasts — and many surprisingly mild dishes."

It was followed by "The Tortilla Book," "Recipes from the Regional Cooks of Mexico" and, most recently, "Nothing Fancy."

"It becomes a life, really," she said of her career as a cooking expert, which leads her to spend much time out of Mexico. "I work all the time. I like what I do. You're always trying new recipes — experimenting, adjusting, then writing them up."

Her latest book roams from recipes remembered from her childhood outside London to Middle Eastern favorites to "cazuelitas," small tortilla-dough cups filled with zucchini squash and tomato that started off a lunch for recent visitors to Zitacuaro, 100 miles west of Mexico City.

"We were brought up cooking — just something we were expected to do in that generation in England," she said. She declines to state her age.

The recipes in her books are mixed with anecdotes that leave no doubt about their authenticity or the author's knowledge and genuine fondness for Mexico.

Mrs. Kennedy has little patience for errors, pretense or ignorance regarding cooking, which she clearly believes should be a rewarding experience. But neither does she have many kind words to say about the overactive attention to style that seems to be affecting eating in the United States.

"Food has become too chic. We've simply got to get back to some basics," she said, after carrot and coriander soup made from her own garden's produce had been served.

"I hate to make everything look beautiful; it should look appetizing."

The kitchen has a tile counter with a tray of drying chili peppers. Its walls and shelves are draped with the copper, straw, wooden and ceramic utensils and vessels found throughout Mexico.

Modern gadgets — an electric food mill, an ice-cream maker — round out the wooden spoons, 20-year-old pressure cooker and cast-iron pots.

After a Bibb lettuce salad, again from the garden, Mrs. Kennedy produces Veracruz-style tamales, made from a thin, delicate dough topped with an "hoja santa" — "holy leaf." She and her two maids then quickly whip up some corn tortillas to wrap around homemade "chorizo" sausage, served individually — "Excuse my fingers."

"Very few really get the whole concept of the thing," she says of the response to Mexican food abroad. "One of the basic concepts is the chilies — the different chilies that have flavors — and the basic concept of a good tortilla just doesn't exist."

The good corn tortilla, according to Mrs. Kennedy, provides the background for the whole meal. A Mexican meal, she also noted, is heavy and intended for midday consumption, thus becoming hard to adapt to American-style evening dinners.

"Good Mexican food is labor intensive, and people aren't willing to pay the price for that sort of thing," she said of Mexican restaurants in the United States. "They think Mexican food should be cheap."

Second theft trial of ex-banker resumes

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

The second theft trial of former Midland banker Lonnie Mack Bartley resumed this morning in 142nd District Court after several state witnesses Tuesday identified Bartley as the man who tried last August to steal a $38,000 mobile home belonging to a retired judge.

Bartley, a former First National Bank of Midland vice president who served two years in federal prison for embezzlement, was first tried in January for allegedly trying to steal Judge Joseph Mims' 14-by-84-foot mobile home, but the trial ended in a hung jury. Bartley had given police a signed statement admitting his guilt, but later recanted the statement, and Judge Pat Baskin declared a mistrial when the jury was unable to reach a verdict after eight hours of deliberations.

The new trial before a nine-man, three-woman jury began Tuesday as a reprise of the previous trial, with several state witnesses once again identifying Bartley as the man who called himself John Dudley when he responded on August 27 to a notice in the Reporter-Telegram advertising the mobile home for sale.

"He said he was with Texaco," said Mims' daughter Dixie, who with her brother Bill was handling the sale for her father. "He said he needed the home because he was transferred a lot."

She showed "Dudley" the home, which was in Eastwood Manor Mobile Home Park on Elkins Road just inside the eastern city limits, and gave him the key because he said he wanted to show the home to his wife.

"He brought it back about an hour, hour and a half later," Ms. Mims testified.

But when she and her brother tried to follow up several days later by calling the Houston phone number he'd left, there was no answer. And when they called Texaco, "They said, 'No, we've never heard of him.'"

On the morning of August 29, according to testimony from Ms. Mims, her brother Bill Mims and Eastwood Park owner Dwight Houghton, two movers from Rolling Homes Rental Inc. of Odessa showed up at Eastwood Manor and prepared to move Judge Mims' trailer. The movers said they had an order from a John Dudley to move the trailer to an unoccupied lot a few miles down the road.

Houghton called Dixie and Bill Mims, who called their father and determined no sale had been made. They had Houghton tell the movers to stop, then drove to the trailer park to wait for Dudley, who had told the movers he'd be back around noon to pay them. When a red and white car drove by the park at around noon, Dixie Mims thought she recognized Dudley, and Houghton gave chase in his pickup, according to their testimony.

"I followed him (down Elkins Road to Highway 80). He made a fast stop and I took his license number," Houghton testified.

Police traced the number to Bartley, who had been living in Greenwood and operating a grocery store since being paroled in 1982 after serving two years of a 10-year embezzlement sentence.

Bartley was identified as Dudley in a photo line-up by Dixie Mims, mover Richard Smith and Ruth Avery, an employee of Bill Mims' who has died since the first trial, but whose previous testimony was read to the jury over the objections of defense attorney John Hyde.

At first, Bartley told police he hadn't tried to steal the trailer but knew who had, according to testimony from Midland Police Detective Milton O'Bryant. But then Bartley changed his story, according to O'Bryant:

"He told me he was the one involved, he was the one who had attempted to steal the trailer."

O'Bryant obtained a voluntary statement from Bartley admitting guilt, but said a few days later Bartley told him the statement was a lie; he said he wasn't guilty, but was trying to protect the true culprit.

On cross-examination, Hyde questioned O'Bryant closely about a note which "Dudley" had given Ms. Avery, which the police department apparently lost.

Hyde said an analysis of that handwriting might have cleared Bartley, and suggested that O'Bryant ended his investigation too early, settling on Bartley as the prime suspect and not following other leads which may have turned up other suspects.

Ector County hires veteran to be fiscal affairs director

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners late Tuesday announced a 22-year-Marine Corps veteran with a strong background in financial management has been hired to fill the newly created position of county fiscal affairs director.

Ray T. "Tom" Pace, 47, who has been vice president of a Virginia general contracting firm since leaving the Marine Corps nearly two years ago, is scheduled to begin working in his new position June 15, according to Precinct 1 Commissioner Bill Tolbert, who said he was pleased Ector County had been able to obtain the services of a man as "highly qualified" as Pace. He will draw a salary of $35,000 per year.

Pace, a native West Texan, graduated from Texas Tech in Lubbock in 1961 with a bachelor's degree in finance and earned a master's degree from Pepperdine University in Los Angeles in 1977. He retired from the Marine Corps in 1983 with the rank of lieutenant colonel. His last assignment was as head of operations and management of the Marine Corps budget section (O&MMC), with the responsibility of determining financial resource requirements for the O&MMC appropriations program. From 1980-82 he was comptroller for the 2nd Marine Division and from 1977-80 headed up the Plans & Review Section, budget branch, fiscal division, headquarters, USMC. Earlier he served for four years as commanding officer/chief executive officer of the USMC Recruiting Depot, budget analyst for the comptroller of the U.S. Navy and as a junior officer with a Marine Corps artillery unit.

According to County Auditor Dan Ramirez, Pace will be overseeing long-range county financial planning, insurance risk management programs and employee compensation and benefit programs. Some of the tasks Pace will assume responsibility for are ones that have been done previously by the auditor, tax assessor-collector, treasurer and purchasing agent. Pace will also have the responsibility of managing county investments. The new position will be funded from $50,000 in federal revenue sharing funds, with the remainder above Pace's salary to be used for office operations.

A total of 18 applications for the new position were received and the field was narrowed to Pace and 42-year-old Bill H. Pendergrass, a vice president for finances for T-Bar-S Inc., an El Paso-based boot manufacturer.

Commissioners Court members began interviewing the remaining candidates shortly after noon Tuesday and didn't announce the selection of Pace until about 5:30 p.m. Commissioners Tolbert and Gerrid Bowen said the choice was difficult because Pace and Pendergrass were both highly qualified.

Pace, who resides in Woodbridge, Va., with his family, said he is looking forward to returning to West Texas and Odessa. His wife, Hazel, is the sister of Ector County District Clerk Jackie Sue Barnes.

Retrial of Weddell, Hammond set to begin May 29 in El Paso

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

The retrial of former Odessa City Councilman Keith Weddel and Ector County Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr. is scheduled to begin May 29 in El Paso despite the fact Hammond's attorney, Warren Burnett, has been incapacitated with a broken hip.

Burnett's administrative assistant, John Sliney, said Monday from Galveston that Burnett had filed a motion asking U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton to grant a continuance in the case. A spokesman in Bunton's office late Tuesday afternoon said the judge was in Austin but had informed his Midland office by phone he planned to deny Burnett's request to delay the trial.

May 4, Burnett's 58th birthday, he and some friends stopped at a county park in Galveston for an impromptu basketball game after spending the day sailing on Galveston Bay, according to Sliney. Burnett reportedly slipped, broke his hip and suffered a serious laceration from his knee to his hip.

Following some time in a wheelchair, Sliney said, Burnett is expected to be on crutches for from four to six weeks. One Odessa attorney, a longtime friend of Burnett's, said doctors have told Burnett too much activity too soon could produce a "life-threatening situation."

Weddel and Hammond went to trial in Midland in February on charges stemming from the November 1981 O'Michael Building fire in Odessa. Federal grand jury indictments against Weddel and Hammond last fall alleged they had conspired to burn the building to collect insurance money. Hammond was additionally indicted on two counts of perjury in connection with statements he allegedly made in a deposition relating to an insurance claim on the building.

Jurors in the Midland trial deliberated about 12 hours before informing Bunton they were deadlocked, unable to reach a verdict, and the judge declared a mistrial and ordered the case to be retried in El Paso.

Midland College trustees add dean of continuing education

From Staff Reports

The organizational structure for administration was changed to add a third dean to the list of two when the Midland College Board of Trustees met in regular session Tuesday afternoon at the college.

A dean of continuing education position was created by the board and Dr. Dena Lusk was hired for the position. She had been employed as assistant director of community services, serving under director James Bramlett. Bramlett, who had been in his position 12 years, announced two months ago he would be retiring in September.

According to a spokesman for the college, the administration had been operating under a system of president, vice president of instruction, dean of academics and dean of vocational-technical.

The dean of continuing education will be responsible for community services, adult basic education, traffic safety, special needs and Need to Read volunteers. Lusk, the first woman dean at Midland College, also will be responsible for various seminars, institutes and workshops.

President of the college, Dr. Jess Parrish, said that with Bramlett leaving he felt it was time to make some changes which had been contemplated for several months.

In other board action, Katherine L. Favrot was hired as director of the new child care center and instructor of child development, effective July 1. Midland College's center should open in September.

She has bachelor's and master's degrees of science from the University of Tennessee with a major in child development. For the past nine years she has been employed by the University of Tennessee at Knoxville in its child development center. She currently is coordinator and master teacher for that program.

Dr. Hosni Nabi, assistant to the president, presented a report on a three-year faculty evaluation program. He listed the criteria included for evaluation and presented samples of completed evaluation reports. Parrish said the evaluation by administrators and students confirmed that MC's faculty ranks above average.

A letter of retirement from Dr. Geraldine Box was accepted by the board. Box, a history instructor, has been at Midland College since 1971.

The resignation of Rob Scofield, director of student services for the past year, was accepted. His wife Barbara has been been a computer instructor the past three years and is taking a two-year leave to study for her doctorate at the University of Texas at Austin.

The meeting was interrupted by Sheriff Gary Painter and a deputy who checked the administration and board members for beards, which are being grown for Midland's Centennial. Parrish said administrators without beards must pay an additional $25 to the college's scholarship fund, in addition to the $10 Centennial fine.

At the meeting's conclusion, trustees toured the nearly completed Health Sciences Building. It has been accepted by the board and will begin its programs in the fall term.

Consolidating various health science programs into one location, the building will house the associate degree nursing, vocational nursing, fire technology, respiratory therapy, child care and radiologic technology programs.

Midland woman arrested, charged with burglary

From Staff Reports

A 24-year-old Midland woman was arrested early this morning and charged with burglary after a police officer on patrol became suspicious of her car, according to police reports.

The woman's 1976 Buick was parked near Builders and Homeowners Supply Co., 1701 West Industry, shortly after midnight. When a passing patrolman became suspicious and tried to investigate, she drove away. Before the officer pulled her over, a man got out of the car and ran away. In the car were four Amweld fire doors worth $320, which were identified as missing from Builders and Homeowners by store employees. The woman refused to identify the man who jumped out of the car, according to reports.

A 24-year-old Midland man was treated at Midland Memorial Hospital for a gunshot wound in the neck Tuesday after being accidentally shot while hunting snakes, reports said.

Jeff Roland, Route 6, Box 839-A, was hunting snakes with his brother and some friends about 8 p.m. in a caliche pit near County Road 150 and FM 1788 when he was hit by a shot from a .22 which came from the other side of the pit. The person who fired the shot hasn't been identified, but the Sheriff's Department considers the shooting accidental, according to reports.

Among several thefts and burglaries reported Tuesday was the theft of a 1977 Mustang with no motor from a trailer lot near the intersection of County Road 114 West and County Road 120 South. Rhonda Greuling, 3001 N. Midland, had left the non-running Mustang parked out at the trailer. The car, valued at $650, was apparently taken Sunday, reports said.

James Robert Martin, County Road 150, reported the burglary of 11 firearms worth a total of $2,589 from his bedroom between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. Monday. Entry was gained by prying open the rear door near the northwest corner of the residence, reports said.

Scooter Magee of Scooter's Farm and Ranch Center on Rankin Highway reported the burglary of $400 in cash, $1,600 in uncashed checks payable to Scooter's, and a $250 pistol Monday night, according to reports. Entry was apparently gained through the back door.

Stereo equipment worth $900 was taken from the Midland Parks and Recreation Department's Senior Citizens Center, 2500 Delano, sometime between 9:30 p.m. Monday and 8 a.m. Tuesday, reports said. The equipment included a $500 cassette deck and a $450 tuner.

A $275 black leather jacket and a $150 watch were taken from Thomas Cross' 1982 Ford van, according to reports. Cross, 4416 Roosevelt, told police the items were taken from the unlocked van sometime between 7:30 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. Sunday.

Marguerite Ray, 3219 Camarie, reported the loss of a $730 watch, which she told police she had noticed missing in January.

Model kits fill spare time, shelves of American youth

By MIKA SHARP

EL PASO (AP) — Your granddad fitted pieces of balsa wood together to make planes.

Your father glued pre-formed plastic into a scaled-down version of his dream car.

Now you can make models of just about anything imaginable, from real-life spacecraft to fantasy heroes.

Model kits are filling the spare time and shelves of a fourth generation of U.S. youngsters, many of who find it's a hobby they never have to give up. Tinkertoys and Lego plastic blocks that can be put together and taken apart over and over again are giving way to snap-lock car and airplane kits as youngsters gain patience and skill. But the kits are not limited to kids.

Dan Pfeil, vice president of Texas Hobby Distributors in San Antonio, says that "15- to 35-year-olds are the most into model building."

"They did it when they were kids and, now that they have some extra money and time, they're doing more of it," Pfeil says.

Airplanes, which account for about 60 percent of all kit sales, are the most popular models, according to Pfeil. Cars come in second, with ships, figurines and miscellaneous categories trailing.

Ernie Denson, co-owner of Toys by Roy in El Paso, says that the U.S. space shuttle Columbia was the most popular model of all time, followed by the USS Enterprise of Star Trek fame.

Trends in models follow trends in society. During the '70s, the gas shortage forced the car industry to build fuel-conserving compacts, and sales in model cars dropped because "real cars weren't exciting," Denson says.

"Then, when video games became popular, boys who had saved their money to buy model kits started dropping their quarters into the video games and model sales dropped further," he says.

Business, however, is looking up for the industry, Pfeil says. A recovering economy allows boys who spent 25 cents on models in the '50s to spend up to $500 for models today. The expensive models are more intricate and generally take longer — sometimes months — to complete.

A renewed interest in defense and the military has meant an increase in sales of tanks, troop transporters and warplanes, Denson and Pfeil agree. The return of high performance cars on the streets also has mean a return of car kits on the toy store shelves.

Chris White, an eighth-grader in El Paso, loves jets and old boats. He also likes having them around his room so he can look at them. Since Chris lives in an average-sized house, the jets and boats he keeps around him must be scale models. The 15 models in his room are only a fraction of the number he has completed over the years. The others were discarded when they broke.

Chris, 14, began building models when he was 7. His first project was a Star Wars X-Wing Fighter kit he received as a Christmas present. He is currently working on a Navy F4-J Fighter, which is a modern jet, and an old-fashioned schooner, a sailing ship.

"I started out with really easy stuff," Chris says. "I'd like to get into remote control planes and a motorized boat next."

Chris spends anywhere from two or three nights to a month or more working on each model.

Chris White, an avid model maker, shows off his latest in a large collection of plastic models. They range in variety from luxury yachts to supersonic fighter bombers.

Central, West Texans bullish on economy

HOUSTON (AP) — Texans living along the Gulf Coast and in the state's eastern section are less optimistic than Central and West Texans about their financial well-being, according to a recent survey.

The poll, by First City Bancorporation of Texas, showed a large increase in Texans living along the Gulf Coast who think the state will undergo widespread unemployment or economic depression over the next five years.

The Houston-based bank polled 1,001 Texans by telephone in the survey, which is conducted quarterly to research consumer confidence.

In April, 38.1 percent of Gulf Coast residents said they expected the state's economic condition to worsen over five years, compared to 25.6 percent in January, according to the survey.

Gulf Coast residents' optimism about the state's economy over the next year also declined. The April poll indicated 38.1 percent of the region's residents questioned think "good times" are ahead, compared to 51.6 percent in January.

East Texans remained the least optimistic in the state, with only 36.2 percent forecasting the state's economy will be healthy over the next year and 31.8 percent predicting "bad times."

But optimism about the state's business conditions over the next five years increased significantly among West Texans, according to the survey, which had a margin of error of 3 to 4 percent.

Of those West Texans polled in April, 43.7 percent said they expect good conditions, compared to 30.8 percent in January.

Central Texans also seemed optimistic. The poll in April showed 47.1 percent of those surveyed in the central section of the state — which includes Austin, Bryan, College Station and Waco — said they expect their finances to improve over the next year.

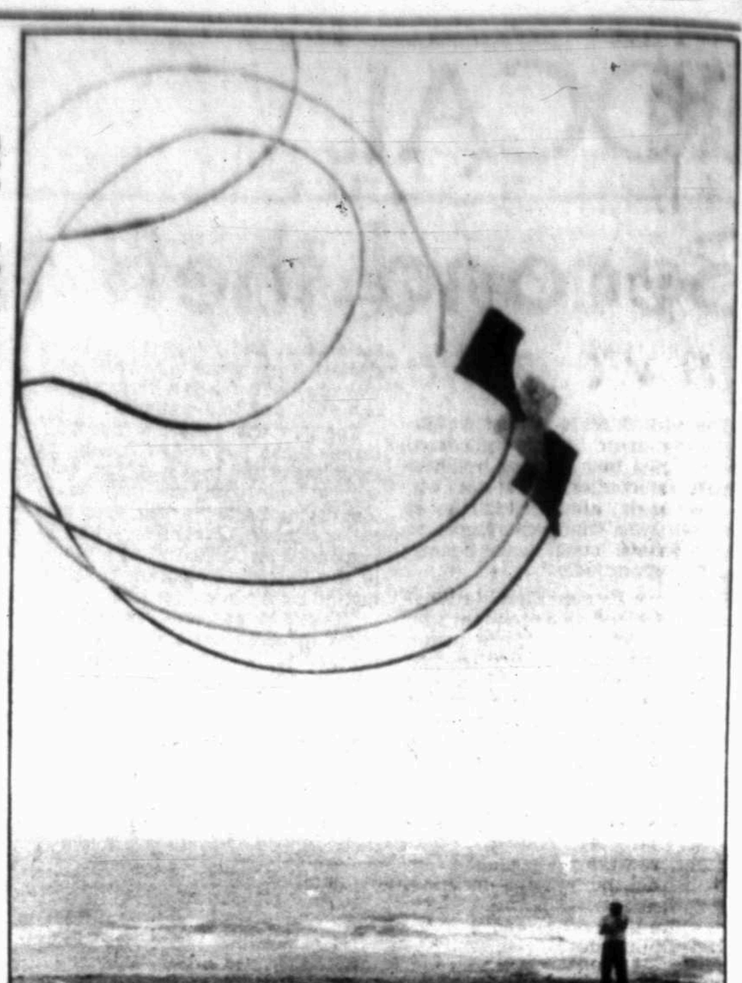

In January, 38.8 percent of those polled in the central section of the state said they thought their finances would improve over a 12-month period.

Only 5.8 percent of central Texans polled said they expected their family finances to worsen over the year, compared to 12.6 percent questioned in the last survey.

In North Texas, which includes the Dallas-Fort Worth area, 59.7 percent of those polled in April said they think now is a good time to make major purchases, compared to 69.2 percent in January.

"North Texans tend to view their fortunes as more closely tied to the economy, and in fact that is the case," said Charles Franckle, vice president of First City. "With the slowdown in growth of the overall U.S. economy and mounting concern over the federal deficit and the trade imbalance, it's not surprising to see some erosion in confidence."

The survey also indicated consumer confidence dropped among the state's college-educated and blue-collar residents, while optimism increased slightly among unemployed and retired Texans.

Evidence shows other articles written on probe

EL PASO (AP) — Evidence in the trial of a $50 million libel lawsuit showed that The El Paso Times was not the only news organization to report an FBI investigation into a 1977 city land transaction.

But a plaintiff in the suit testified that those articles did not damage his reputation.

The Times' articles on the probe, published April 8, 1980, and April 9, 1980, are among several news stories alleged to be libelous in the lawsuit filed five years ago against the daily newspaper and former Mayor Tom Westfall by real estate developer Joe Foster and ex-Mayor Ray Salazar.

Times attorney Richard Munzinger produced copies Tuesday of three other news stories on the FBI investigation, two from local television stations and the third from another El Paso newspaper.

All the stories reported that the FBI was looking into allegations of wrongdoing in the land transaction, in which Foster turned over to the city an option he had on a downtown tract of land. In the transaction, which occurred when Salazar was mayor, Foster was given one year to lease or buy back a portion of the land to use as a site for a hotel. The city moved its city hall to its portion of the tract. No hotel has been built.

Foster testified Tuesday that he did not see the other news stories on the FBI investigation when they ran.

But after reading them in court, he testified that the Times' articles and those of the television stations were different.

"In the El Paso Times article...they mentioned the investigation and then in the second paragraph,...they immediately brought up the names of Ray Salazar and Joe Foster," he testified about one story published by the newspaper.

Referring to one of the television scripts on the investigation, Foster said, "This is a one minute and 50 second spot that (the station) ran on that date. It cited the fact that the Federal Bureau of Investigation is looking into the land transaction. It, in no way, mentions me specifically."

Munzinger also showed in his cross-examination of Foster that the Times published a Jan. 27, 1981, article reporting that federal officials would not file any charges as a result of the FBI investigation.

Foster, however, contends that the April 1980 articles, several others, a May 1979 Times editorial and statements made by Westfall when he was mayor-elect damaged his reputation and contributed to his not being able to succeed with his hotel proposal.

Munzinger, however, argued that other factors led to Foster not being able to complete his project, including the developer's failure to obtain financing for the hotel.

Foster testified under cross-examination that in the early 1980s, he began to have problems with the El Paso bank from which he obtained a loan to buy the downtown property.

Foster testified that in 1981 he prepared a lawsuit to be filed against El Paso National Bank because it "began to have second thoughts about continuing its loan to Foster."

The petition contended that the bank was trying to "weaken Foster financially" because it wanted Foster to pay the outstanding interest on his loan, which was in violation of his agreement with the bank, Foster testified.

Austin High School cartoonist suspended

AUSTIN (AP) — A Stephen F. Austin High School student has been suspended and barred from graduation ceremonies after the school newspaper published one of his cartoons that authorities deemed lewd.

The comic strip by national award-winning cartoonist Whitney Ayres, 18, contained "lewd and obscene artwork not protected by the First Amendment," said Tom Prentice, the school's journalism instructor and student publication adviser.

The drawing was part of the comic strip "Lucky," which Ayres had done for three years in the school newspaper, The Maroon.

Prentice said he requested disciplinary action after a number of students brought the drawing to his attention within minutes of the paper being distributed last Friday.

Prentice said the cartoon slipped through the normal newspaper review process because Ayres "turned the comic strip in nine days after his deadline in the middle of a frantic production week, when it was impossible for the news staff, senior staff, or the adviser to subject the comic strip to editorial scrutiny."

Ayres declined to comment on the motive for his drawing. He said he planned to take his final exams during the three-day suspension that he will serve in a special second-floor room at the school.

He said he may attend the graduation ceremony, "But I'm not supposed to walk across the stage."

Ayres received a national first-place award in a contest sponsored by the American Newspaper Publishers Association and Quill and Scroll, an international honor society for high school journalists.

Prentice, who reviewed the cartoon before publication, said the offensive drawings in two of the strip's panels were "surreptitiously and subliminally inserted into the comic strip."

Jacquelyn McGee, the school's principal, said she upheld the three-day suspension and ban from commencement imposed by the campus review board.

AG to ask court for ruling on no-pass, no-play

AUSTIN (AP) — The attorney general plans to ask the Texas Supreme Court for quick examination of the legal challenge being mounted to the controversial no-pass, no-play rule imposed on public schools earlier this year.

"We're going to move very quickly. We'll ask the court to expedite it," Elna Christopher, spokeswoman for Attorney General Jim Mattox, said Tuesday.

The rule is a cornerstone of the sweeping school reforms passed by the Legislature last summer, but it has been caught in a legal web.

A judge in Orange postponed the Class 5A state baseball playoffs over a no-pass, no-play fight, while a Houston judge has declared the rule unconstitutional.

The rule prohibits a student from participating in extracurricular activities, including athletics, for six weeks if he receives a failing grade in any course.

Gov. Mark White, who pushed for the rule, has said it is intended to make certain that students concentrate their energies on studies rather than outside activities such as sports.

On Friday, state District Judge Marsha D. Anthony in Houston declared the rule unconstitutional and ordered the state not to enforce it in the Alief and Spring Branch school districts.

Her ruling was binding only upon the two districts named, but was expected to be consolidated with court actions filed by students against other school districts.

Judge Anthony's ruling came in the case of football player Chris Stamos and 11 other students. Stamos had been forbidden to participate in spring football training because of a course failure.

A judge in Orange, meanwhile, has postponed play in the Class 5A state baseball playoffs pending a Thursday hearing. District Judge David Dunn is to decide at that time on the status of a restraining order he issued last week.

Under that order, the University Interscholastic League is prohibited from continuing with the 5A playoffs unless West Orange Stark, beaten in the first round by Houston Aldine, is advanced to the second round.

Aldine allegedly used two players ineligible under the no-pass, no-play rule in winning the series against Stark.

Ms. Christopher said the attorney general's office is still waiting Judge Anthony's written order. The state's lawyers also may wait on the outcome of Dunn's hearing before going to the Supreme Court, she said.

"We'll try to get the court to sort it out because we've got conflicting orders" from the two judges, she said.

Senate OKs 'sweetheart-loan' reporting bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate has approved a bill that would require political candidates to report "sweetheart loans" in enough detail to show who's making the loan and how good a deal it is.

The Senate on Tuesday sent to the House on voice vote a bill that would require candidates who receive loans below the prime interest rate to list the date of the loan, interest rate, lender's name and names of those who guaranteed the loan.

"With sweetheart loans, the public has a right to know," said Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, who offered an amendment spelling out requirements of reporting such loans.

Also Tuesday, dodging an apparent filibuster, Senators stayed away from a proposal that would extend the life of the Department of Health.

The bill apparently is not controversial but Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, has said he will try to amend the bill to license abortion clinics.

Bill Price, president of the Greater Dallas Right to Life Committee, said, "Late last week, we made the decision to make the passage of the Lyon amendment to the Department of Health sunset bill our No. 1 priority for this session of the Legislature."

Price, also director of Texas Coalition for Life, the state's largest anti-abortion organization, added that one reason "for making the change in strategy was the fact, that by choosing the Department of Health bill as our vehicle, it would make it almost impossible for the Legislature to avoid dealing with this issue. You can rest assured that the Department of Health will not be allowed to go out of business."

Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, had the plastic floor covering removed from under his desk Tuesday, a sign that he intended to filibuster against the Lyon amendment.

The "sweetheart loan" bill by Sen. Chet Edwards would require semi-annual reports of political contributions.

House approves mass transit tax

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas House gave tentative approval Tuesday to a Senate bill which would allow certain cities — including Midland — to levy a local sales tax up to one-half cent to fund mass transit with voter approval.

The legislation, introduced by Sen. Chet Brooks, D- Pasadena, originally allowed cities to levy a one cent tax, but the measure was amended by Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Kileen, to set a one-half cent limit.

However, the Schlueter amendment also allows counties to levy a one-half cent tax for mass transit. A separate election would have to be called for voters to consider the county tax.

The House passed the bill on second reading without debate, and is expected to give final approval to the bill today. Upon final passage, the bill would be sent back to the Senate for concurrence in the House amendment.

The bill, which first passed the Senate on April 2, also provides for the creation of a mass transit department in certain cities, and for administration of the department.

Democratic candidate: Bush comments 'nonsense'

TEXARKANA (AP) — Claims by Vice President George Bush that a Democratic congressman from the 1st District would be controlled by liberal House Democrats are "nonsense," a Democratic candidate said.

"It's incredible to suggest that a freshman Democrat is somehow going to be at a disadvantage in the House when the House is run by Democrats," said former 8th Judicial District Attorney Jim Chapman, a Sulphur Springs native.

Chapman, one of four Democrats for the 1st Congressional District seat, said Tuesday that Bush's statements are "nonsense" and that a freshman Republican would be hampered in the Democratic-controlled House.

Mount Pleasant attorney Billy W. Flanagan also said Bush's comments were not logical.

Bush, at an earlier rally in Marshall for Republican congressional candidate and former Texas A&M football star Edd Hargett, said East Texans must put a GOP member in Congress.

A freshman Democrat with no seniority would have to "play ball" with House Speaker Tip O'Neill, Bush said Monday. But he praised the voting record of Democratic Rep. Sam B. Hall.

Gymnasts ready to roll in weightless freedom

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — For six world class gymnasts who got a ride in simulated weightlessness as part of a space sickness experiment, the next step is to tumble, flip and roll in the freedom of zero gravity.

The group of gymnasts flew on the KC135 jet Tuesday and reported that the aircraft lived up to its nickname — the "vomit comet." All but one of the athletes, Olympic medal winner Kathy Johnson, became ill.

"Our first reaction was that it was fabulous," said Patty Gerard, 26, of Watauga, Texas. But after the aircraft made three of its zero-gravity-producing swoops, all but Ms. Johnson became ill.

"We weren't surprised that we got sick," said Ms. Gerard. "On this flight, we were not in control."

She said the National Aeronautics and Space Administration doctors had the athletes strapped to seats and blindfolded for the flight on Tuesday. On the flight set for today, the gymnasts will be permitted to float free of their seats and practice the twists, flips and somersaults of their speciality.

Ms. Johnson said during her brief moments of unfettered weightlessness she plans to do gymnastic manuevers that even an Olympic performer can't do on Earth.

"I was never really able to do multi-full-twisting somersaults," said Ms. Johnson, who won a silver and a bronze medal in the last Olympics. She plans to do stunts that may involve up to three twists during periods of zero gravity on the KC135.

NASA doctors arranged for tests on the gymnasts in order to gather data on their ability to withstand stressful motions.

Dr. Millard Reschke, a NASA researcher, said the study is part of a continuing effort to understand the human balance system and how it is affected by weightlessness. He said it was believed that the gymnasts, who are trained to withstand the motion stress of flips and twists, could be able to resist motion illness better than ordinary people.

In tests conducted in April, the gymnasts were fitted with sensors and placed into a variety of motion-producing machines.

Man arrested in deaths of parents, brothers

HOUSTON (AP) — A 21-year-old man has been arrested in his attorney's office after a grand jury indicted him in the Feb. 1 murders of his parents and two brothers, authorities say.

Reginald Lewis was jailed on bonds totaling $800,000 — $200,000 for each murder count — after the Fort Bend grand jury indicted him Tuesday.

"We're going to challenge the charges and find out if there is any evidence at all and what exactly they have that would make (them) think I would kill my entire family," a handcuffed Lewis told reporters as police escorted him to Fort Bend County Jail.

Lewis is accused of slaying his mother, Mary Lewis, 44, and his brothers Henry Lewis Jr., 22, and Byron, 13, all of whom were found shot in the family's Fort Bend County home. Lewis lived in Houston at the time of the killings but now lives in Austin.

He also was indicted in the grisly death of his father, Henry Lewis Sr., 45, whose flaming body was found in a hallway of the home just southwest of Houston. Investigators say the elder Lewis had been shot, beaten, strangled and stabbed.

Police held Reginald Lewis in custody for questioning for three days after the killing, but he was released without charges.

Houston Police Sgt. J.C. Mosier said police, informed of the indictments Tuesday, arrested Lewis after receiving a phone tip he was at the office of his attorney, state Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston.

Lewis told police he was was driving from Austin to Houston to visit his grandmother when he heard about the indictments on his car radio and decided to drive to Washington's office.

'Pest pilots' fly in the face of aerodynamics

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Don Emmick's tiny test pilots and their balsa and plastic crafts fly in the face of aerodynamics, leaving aeronautical engineers bug-eyed and mystified.

Emmick, 60, uses the common housefly to power a superlight model airplane. The aeronautical engineer said he got the idea from a 1940 trade journal.

"It's given me a great appreciation of flies," Emmick said. say.

But Emmick didn't attempt insect aviation until 1978, when fellow engineers bet $5 that a fly could not power an airplane.

Emmick, who occasionally lectures for the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, spent two months studying flies and building model planes.

His first successful flight required development of an ultra-thin plastic "about the same thickness as a wave of light" which he added to balsa wood to build a twin-winged plane.

Emmick also learned to glue the flies to the fuselage by their abdomens because "for some reason, they don't flap their wings when you glue their legs."

Doctor still practicing despite IRS actions

SAN SABA (AP) — A doctor in this Central Texas community who has watched Internal Revenue Service agents seize his home, horses and other assets says he now makes house calls in a friend's borrowed car.

Dr. Roy Lee, who faces IRS liens totaling more than $270,000 in connection with a hospital he once owned, was suspended from the facility several weeks ago, officials said.

"My head is bloody, but unbowed," he said in an interview. "I've been bouncing around making house calls on invalids and shut-ins. When in Rome, you fire Roman candles."

Dr. Robert Connor, chief of staff at the 24-bed San Saba Memorial Hospital, said Lee did not apply for hospital privileges, and ignored Medicare regulations requiring doctors to complete discharge records and insurance forms.

Lee, once the only doctor in this community of 6,000 people, was arrested in 1983 for allegedly failing to pay child support, and residents picketed the county jail to protest his incarceration.

Lee's car has now been repossessed and his San Saba home will be sold May 28, federal officials said.

IRS agents on Monday used a federal court order to seize 87 of his registered quarterhorses and ponies, 72 of which came from his San Saba ranch. San Saba National Bank, which foreclosed earlier on Lee's Hilltop Mediplex Inc., also confiscated an undetermined number of cattle at a separate ranch Monday.

"I went barreling out there, and there they were," said Lee. "My reaction was unprintable. Let's just say I had some explosive thoughts.

"There were 14,000 IRS agents gathering everything they could get their hands on," he said. "I'm laughing to keep from crying. It's like Hank (Williams) Jr. says in his song, 'Pride is easy to swallow if you chew it long enough.'"

Bob Branson, an IRS spokesman in Austin, said the agency has seven liens against Lee totaling $274,860 for federal withholding and Social Security taxes that were to be claimed from hospital employees and the employer.

Lee was arrested in November 1984 on contempt of court charges relating to the settlement of a bill from a medical supply company. San Saba National in February foreclosed on Hilltop Mediplex, which had operated San Saba Memorial Hospital.

Now one of three doctors in San Saba, Lee said he is staying in the community on principle.

Man will attempt to fly 'Texarkana Baby' to Honolulu

TEXARKANA (AP) — A 45-year-old chiropractor says he will attempt to establish 44 national and international records while flying his single-engine plane on a 12,000-mile journey from this East Texas city to Honolulu, then nonstop to Miami.

Dr. Dan Bookout said his hero was Charles Lindbergh, the pilot of the Spirit of St. Louis, who made the first solo, nonstop trans-Atlantic flight in 1927.

He said his "Texarkana Baby" flight, beginning about 8 a.m. May 30 at Shilling Field in Pleasant Grove, will be almost twice as far as Lindbergh's trip.

"This flight is quite an ambitious attempt," said Milton Brown, secretary of the U.S. contests and records board of the National Aeronautic Association in Washington, the national sanctioning organization.

"Because of the technicalities involved, most of these records are closed to civilian planes and are held by military planes," Brown said.

He said the flight, if successful, would be the seventh highest number of aeronautic records held by one person and the first time anyone has flown non-stop between Honolulu and Miami in such a light-airplane class.

"Lindbergh set the original records," said Bookout. "This is an attempt to enhance the records, the standards of performance. We need to go back and pick up from the '20s. I'm not the last of these guys, just one of them."

Bookout said that since Lindbergh's flight, single-engine plane records lagged because of the Depression, and the jet age and space age contributed to the decline.

Negotiators fail to win compromise on budget

AUSTIN (AP) — Budget negotiators have spent another long and mostly fruitless night trying to get a 1986-87 spending bill compromise out and avoid a special session.

"There are a number of issues still open — major issues," Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Witchita Falls, said after the committee meeting ended just before 11:30 p.m. Tuesday.

"If those issues don't fall into place tomorrow, we'll be in a real critical situation," said Farabee, a conference committee member.

The Tuesday night meeting followed Monday's marathon session that ran past 2 a.m. Tuesday, plus other long meetings Saturday and Sunday.

Negotiators spent most of the evening considering funding for various state agencies, but they steered clear of issues such as higher education and proposed pay hikes for state employees that are key to final approval of a spending plan.

Committee co-chairman Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said he is "optimistic" that negotiations will result in a compromise, but added, "I guess I'm too optimistic. I always think we're going to move fast and we end up taking longer."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis showed up to help speed things along, but Hobby wasn't hopeful.

"We've got problems," Hobby told reporters after he and Lewis appeared in the conference committee's crowded hearing room. "This is the latest I can remember for an appropriations bill still being in conference."

"Right now we are $25 million over what we have available and they still have not been through all the bill," Lewis said.

Threats of a special session, which would be necessary if no agreement is hammered out by midnight May 27, were obvious among the tired and worried legislators.

Lewis was asked if he thought a compromise could be reached before May 27, when the Legislature is scheduled to adjourn, or whether a special session would be needed.

"That's why the lieutenant governor and I are up here now," Lewis said. "We're trying to find a way out of this situation."

Both officials said differences over higher education funding and a pay raise for state employees have been the main sticking points.

"There have been several tentative agreements but they didn't stick," Hobby said.

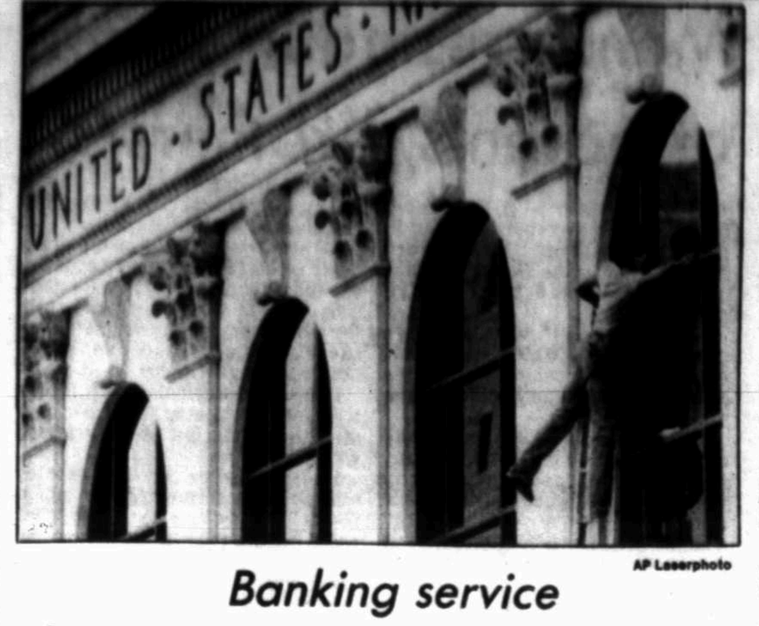

After talking with various members of the 10-member conference committee, Hobby, Lewis and legislators from their respective chambers disappeared behind closed doors in a nearby room.

"Each side is working up another package," said Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan. "We've had lots of packages and likely will see a lot more."

The negotiators have to settle differences between the $36.8 billion Senate bill and the $36.4 billion House bill. The main differences have been in higher education, where the Senate bill has a $71 million edge, and the House bill which contains a state employees pay raise.

One stumbling block was removed Tuesday afternoon when the House and Senate agreed on financing of state junior colleges for the next two years.

The negotiators agreed to fund the colleges at 97.5 percent of the current level, an agreement that wiped out $22 million of the $52.6 million differences in the House and Senate bills.

Dead men probably illegal aliens

LEAKEY (AP) — Three men believed to be illegal aliens have been found dead near Leakey in the trunk of a car that was washed into a creek by heavy rains.

Officials began a search for four other men who left the scene after they were rescued from a tree.

Leakey, a small Hill Country community between Junction and Uvalde, is the Real County seat. It is approximately 60 miles southwest of Kerrville.

The decomposed bodies of the unidentifed men were found Monday when Real County authorities broke into the locked trunk of the car after a Leakey wrecking company retrieved the car from the creek, Real County Sheriff Buck B. Miller said in an interview Tuesday.

The car was located hood-deep in the swirling water on May 17, but the vehicle could not be pulled out until Monday.

Miller said the dead men, whom he estimated to be in their 20s, were buried at Leakey Cemetery.

Prison officials try to end racial tensions

ROSHARON (AP) — Prison officials are looking for ways to resolve racial tensions at the Texas Department of Corrections Darrington Unit, where 27 inmates and guards were injured in a recent disturbance.

"We've had racial problems ever since I got here, said Tim West, warden at the Brazoria County unit. "But it's been brewing stronger in the last few weeks."

Some 400 inmates were being released from their cells Tuesday for the first time since Friday, when the prison was rocked by the melee, West said.

"It wasn't anything organized," he said. "It was more like a high school-type fight."

The fight involved about 30 inmates and was triggered by a knife-wielding Hispanic chasing a black inmate in a hallway near a recreation room, West said. Other convicts in the recreation area began fighting each other.

"Once the stabbing happened, the folks in the dayroom began to break benches for weapons and paired off," the warden said.

Guards had to use tear gas to quiet the inmates.

West, who ironically was in Austin for a riot training school when the disturbance broke out, said inmates would be interviewed "to see if this is something we can work out."

The population at the Darrington Unit is 54 percent black, 26 percent white and 20 percent Hispanic.

Two guards were injured in the brawl, as were 25 inmates. One prisoner was hurt when he was hit on the head with a board and another was bruised in the leg. Both were treated at the prison infirmary.

A prison search carried out after the Friday problems turned up about 100 weapons, most of them pieces of wood, metal, wires and broken pieces of fans.

Meanwhile, prison officials say a stabbing Sunday night is being viewed as a warning to an inmate accused of being an informant.

TDC settlement tentatively OK'd

HOUSTON (AP) — The proposed settlement to a 13-year-old prison reform lawsuit shows "good faith effort" to resolve problems facing the prison system, a federal judge says.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler gave preliminary approval Tuesday to the agreement that ends a civil rights suit inmates filed against the Texas Department of Corrections.

"The court has reviewed the proposed settlement agreement and finds that it appears, on its face, to be a good faith effort to resolve the problem posed by this central and difficult area of the case," Justice wrote in a three-page order filed in federal court.

The settlement on overcrowding, announced last week, will cap prison population in existing units at 34,212, about 12 percent below the current population.

Officials have estimated it could cost the state an estimated $200 million if new facilities are built to accommodate additional inmates.

Justice directed the parties to prepare within 10 days a proposed form of notice and summary of the agreement to distribute to the plaintiff prisoners.

Houston officials: Esquire figures all wet

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston water has the highest level of suspected carcinogens of any U.S. city, according to a report in the June issue of Esquire Magazine.

But city, state and federal officials say they're puzzled by the report, which cites no sources for its figures.

According to the magazine, Houston water leads the country with the most micrograms of suspected carcinogens — 250 parts per billion — compared to 0.4 ppb for the three cities at the bottom of the list — Fresno, Calif.; Baton Rouge, La., and Boston.

"I haven't the foggiest notion what they are talking about," Thomas D. Tiner, chief of water hygiene for the Texas Department of Health, said of the Esquire report.

Tiner said the city should consider suing the magazine, although Department of Public Works spokesman Dan Jones said that action was not likely.

An Esquire spokeswoman in New York, Judy Strong, said she would try to locate the source of the report in the magazine's latest issue.

Despite the article, Houston officials contended the city was meeting all standards set by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency for drinking water.

But they said the report appears to be referring to trihalomethanes, or THMs, instead of cancer-causing chemicals dumped into a surface water source.

THMs form when chlorine, used as a disinfectant in water treatment, reacts with algae and other natural humus in raw water. The EPA in 1979 imposed a 100 part-per-billion limit on trihalomethanes.
