Arrest of suspect clears Geter's name

DALLAS (AP) — A black engineer imprisoned for a robbery he insisted he did not commit says he can see "the bright clouds of justice" now that prosecutors have promised to drop the charge after arresting another suspect.

District Attorney Henry Wade announced Wednesday that the aggravated robbery charge would be dismissed sometime today because four of five witnesses who identified Lenell Geter as the robber have now identified another man, who is in custody in Houston.

Geter, who claimed his conviction was the result of racism and shoddy police work, was released from prison in December after news reports raised doubts about his guilt. The 26-year-old had served 16 months of the life sentence and was scheduled to be retried April 9.

"All right! Listen, I'm just excited," Geter told The Associated Press on Wednesday when first given the news at his office at E-Systems Inc. in Greenville. "It's a new beginning. I'm going to pick up my life and go on.

"I thank America. I thank people for writing, my colleagues, praise God, my lawyers," he said, adding that throughout his time in prison, he never lost hope he would be vindicated.

"I'm getting to see the bright clouds of justice and I feel that our system will work," he told Fort Worth television station KXAS-TV.

Geter refused to directly comment about a possible lawsuit in connection with his arrest and conviction in October 1982 on charges he held up a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant in the Dallas suburb of Balch Springs and took $615.

"I'm sorry to say nothing tangible can account for lost time I spent in prison, but the mere fact I received justice and the intangible things...could be handled later," he said.

"I knew it was going to happen one day but I didn't know it was going to be this soon. I'm so happy," Geter's mother, Ellame Willis, said in a telephone interview from her home in Denmark, S.C.

Geter was convicted on the testimony of five witnesses to the robbery, even though co-workers said he was at work 50 miles away.

About 10 days ago, an informant identified Curtis Eugene Mason, an inmate in the Harris County Jail, as the robber, Wade said. In lineups on Tuesday and Wednesday, four of the five witnesses also identified Mason, he said.

Lenell Geter makes a victorious gesture as he leaves E-Systems Inc. in Greenville Wednesday after learning that robbery charges against him will be dropped. Four of the five witnesses who earlier had identified Geter as a robber have now identified a man in custody in Houston. Geter spent 16 months in prison as a result of his conviction but was released in December when news reports raised doubts about his guilt. A new trial had been scheduled. "As a result of this investigation and as a result of our office finding who we feel committed the robbery, we feel like Geter is innocent and that this office has found the guilty party. Therefore the Lenell Geter case will be dismissed," Wade said.

The prosecutor said Mason has been charged in Houston with four robberies and is being questioned about a series of holdups at other Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants. He probably will not be charged with the Balch Springs robbery because he already is charged with similar offenses and because the prosecution's case is weakened by the witnesses' changing story, Wade said.

In an interview with reporters at the Dallas County Jail, Mason denied robbing the Balch Springs restaurant.

"Well, actually he's (Wade) trying to get a scapegoat," Mason said. "Those witnesses.... What makes them so reliable? They put Geter in prison, then they turn around and put me in prison."

Geter's case gained national attention following a CBS "60 Minutes" television program on Dec. 4. Wade agreed to a new trial 10 days later, conceding that news reports raised questions about the validity of Geter's conviction.

Wade later offered to drop the charges if Geter passed a lie detector test, but Geter refused the test, and a new trial was scheduled.

Geter's attorney, Ed Sigel, said the defense team was "elated" but bitter the case wasn't dropped sooner.

"There was so much evidence exonerating him. He was at work that day. We're not quarreling with Henry Wade's office now. We're quarreling with the delay in doing what they did," Sigel said.

But Wade had no apologies for the way he handled the case.

"He'd still be down there in the penitentiary if it hadn't been for me," Wade said. "I'm the one who offered him a new trial. I offered to let him take a lie detector test and we found the person who we think did it.

"If he's innocent of this thing, and the evidence seems to show that he is, I feel sorry for him," Wade added.

Mine explosion sends out diplomatic 'aftershocks'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crippling of a Soviet tanker by a mine off Nicaragua's coast has produced strongly-worded accusations and hostile encounters between senior Soviet and American diplomats here and in Moscow.

The two superpowers are holding each other responsible for Tuesday's incident off Nicaragua's Pacific Coast, in which the mine planted by American-backed rebels exploded and blew a hole in the hull of the Soviet ship.

Five Soviet sailors were injured, prompting the Soviet news agency Tass to say that Moscow may seek compensation.

At the heart of the dispute are Soviet concerns over U.S. support for anti-government rebels in leftist Nicaragua and American allegations that the Soviets are to blame for much of the tensions in Central America through their backing for Nicaragua and the insurgency in El Salvador. With Tuesday's episode, a new dimension was added the conflict.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, reacting sharply, summoned U.S. charge d'affairs Warren Zimmerman and handed him a note claiming the United States was responsible for the "grave crime, an act of banditry and piracy," according to Tass.

Tass charged the mine was planted by U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels with "the direct participation of agencies and persons controlled by the U.S. government." It went on to accuse the United States of conducting a "policy of state terrorism" against Nicaragua.

U.S. officials, who asked not to be identified, said they were struck by the tone of the statement. Because Moscow went public with it, the State Department responded in kind, first with a statement by deputy spokesman Alan Romberg and later with a rare public account of a meeting between Undersecretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger and Soviet Embassy Minister Counselor Oleg Sokolov.

Romberg suggested the Soviets had no basis for complaining because the mining of certain Nicaraguan ports had been "widely advertised."

While regretting the injuries and damage caused by the incident, Romberg said the dangers in the area were well known.

He added that to a great extent, "these regional dangers and tensions result from Soviet encouragement of conflict in Central America and the Caribbean, and therefore the Soviets are hardly in a position to blame others for an increase in violence."

But Romberg refused to answer questions about whether the mine was supplied by the United States. He said he was not authorized to comment on allegations about intelligence activities.

Pentagon blames Soviets for submarine-carrier collision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon officials say a Soviet attack submarine was to blame for a collision involving the nuclear-powered sub and the 80,000-ton U.S. aircraft carrier Kitty Hawk during maneuvers in the Sea of Japan.

The mishap Wednesday resulted in no apparent damage to either vessel, officials said.

There were no casualties aboard the Kitty Hawk, the Navy said. It was not known whether any of the submarine's crewmen were hurt, but the Soviet ship — a 5,200-ton craft of the Victor I class — proceeded away from the collision scene under its own power.

Pentagon officials, who spoke only on condition that they not be identified, asserted that the submarine was traveling without navigation lights.

"We think the submarine hit the Kitty Hawk apparently as the sub was coming up through the sea," said one Navy official.

In a statement describing the incident, the Pentagon said:

"Following a noticeable shudder which was felt throughout the ship, observers on the starboard side of Kitty Hawk saw the outline of the sail of a submarine resembling that of a Soviet Victor class moving away."

Although the identification of the Victor was somewhat qualified in the statement, Pentagon officials said they have no doubt the boat belongs to the Soviet Navy. Neither mainland China nor Communist North Korea owns Victor-type submarines.

Ronald Reagan, in wax, could polish appearance of your home

Or Thomas Edison in your study, for scholarly inspiration?

Both will be available, along with 173 other wax figures, when the now-defunct Miami Wax Museum auctions off its entire store of luminaries April 6.

Democratic state Sen. Gwen Margolis of North Miami Beach, who took over the property when the museum closed in February, wants the figures out by the end of April to make room for office renovations, said museum manager Pierre Dupeyroux.

Each fully clothed figure is made of pure wax, has human hair and is worth $2,000 to $4,000, although there will be no minimum bid at the auction, Dupeyroux said.

Also on sale will be the displays that accompany the figures, including antique furniture and jewelry.

Nominee Edwin Meese seeks special prosecutor investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Edwin Meese III, his nomination as attorney general increasingly under fire, asked today for a special prosecutor to investigate his affairs.

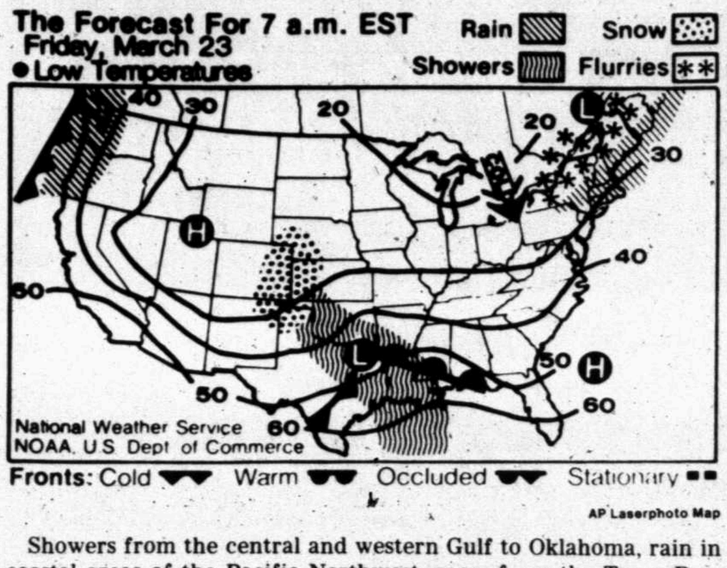

"Because of unsubstantiated charges that have been widely publicized by those who oppose my nomination to be attorney general, I feel that there must be a comprehensive inquiry that will examine the facts and make public the truth," Meese wrote Attorney General William French Smith.

President Reagan said he supported Meese's decision.

"I know that an impartial, prompt and thorough inquiry will demonstrate the high level of integrity and dedication which have marked Ed's long career of public service," Reagan said in a statement made public by the White House.

Meese, in his own statement, said he will not ask Reagan to withdraw his nomination.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Showers from the central and western Gulf to Oklahoma, rain in coastal areas of the Pacific Northwest, snow from the Texas Panhandle to Nebraska and rain mixed with snow in New York and New England are forecast for Friday by the National Weather Service.

Hijacker seeks asylum in Taiwan

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A hijacker who claimed he was armed with explosives commandeered a British Airways jumbo jetliner en route from Hong Kong to Peking, diverted the plane to Taiwan and asked for political asylum, government officials said.

No one was reported injured in the hijacking. Liang Weijiang, 28, surrendered peacefully once the plane landed at Chiang Kai-shek airport in suburban Taipei, and security officials there said they found no explosives or other weapons on him.

Liang, who was taken to a security area for questioning, told officials he was married to a Taiwanese woman who is now living in China's Henan province. He initially told authorities he was from Guangdong province in southern China, but he was carrying a Hong Kong resident identification card.

The officials said the Boeing 747 had 338 passengers aboard and a crew of 18, all of them reported unharmed. It was reported to be the first hijacking of a commercial airliner to Taiwan since the Nationalist government arrived there after being ousted from the Chinese mainland in 1949.

The jumbo jetliner later took all the passengers and crew safely back to Hong Kong.

The officials said crew members reported that Liang passed a note to a stewardess shortly after Flight 003 took off from Hong Kong reporting that he was armed with explosives and wanted the flight diverted to Taiwan.

The stewardess delivered the note to the plane's pilot, who radioed the control tower at Taipei airport for permission to land.

In Hong Kong, British Airways spokesman Roger Medcalf said 221 of the 338 passengers boarded in Hong Kong on Flight 003 from London to Peking via Hong Kong.

He said British Airways began its weekly flight to Peking from London less than two years ago. The airline was allowed to pick up passengers in Hong Kong starting Jan. 1.

There is no sanctioned air traffic directly from China to Taiwan, divided for more than three decades because of bitter political differences between the mainland's ruling Communists and the island's ruling Nationalists.

The hijacking was the first involving a commercial airliner to Taiwan since the Nationalists came to Taiwan, although there have been a number of defections involving Chinese and Nationalist pilots between Taiwan and China.

In 1978, a flight engineer tried to hijack a plane belonging to Taiwan's China Airlines, reportedly to China, but he was shot dead by an air marshal on board while the plane was en route from Taiwan's southern city of Kaoshiung to Hong Kong.

Last May, six Chinese hijacked a Chinese jetliner to South Korea and asked for political asylum in Taiwan. South Korean authorities refused their request, convicted them of hijacking and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from four to six years.

STATE

Scattered cloudiness covered the Coastal Bend of the Texas Gulf today as moist air pushed northward into the eastern half of the state, the lower Rio Grande Valley and south central areas, bringing the threat of thunderstorms.

The Panhandle and Northwest Texas had high-level cloudiness, while clear skies prevailed elsewhere in the state.

Low temperatures ranged from the 40s in the Texas Panhandle, south plains and Davis mountains of West Texas to the 60s in the lower Rio Grande valley and the 50s elsewhere.

NATION

Heavy snow driven by strong gusty winds plunged upper Michigan into near blizzard conditions today, with up to 12 inches of snow along the shores of Lake Superior.

One Michigan traffic fatality Wednesday was blamed on the weather as winds gusted to 40 mph and visibility was near zero in blowing and drifting snow.

Memorial postponed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church, a steady critic of the extremist violence wracking El Salvador, has postponed ea memorial for its slain archbishop to avoid creating additional tension on the eve of the presidential election.

Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero, archbishop of San Salvador, was assassinated eby a lone gunman while ehe officiated at an evening Mass ein a hospital chapel on March 24, e1980.

Church leaders here said, without elaboration, that they believe it would enot be appropriate to commemorate the anniversary on Saturday, the day before the election, and have postponed services until April 1. In the past, the anniversary has been marked on the date of Romero's edeath with Masses at the Metropolitan Cathedral and elsewhere.

e Eight moderate to ultraconservative parties are fielding candidates in the voting, the first presidential election since 1977.

Leftists are boycotting the election, as they did a Constituent Assembly eelection in March 1982. They brand the balloting a "farce" and say no fair election can be held until a share of power is negotiated.

Church leaders have regularly condemned eviolence from the radical right and left which has raged during the 4½-year-old civil war and has killed more than 43,000 civilians.

"Our people do not want Marxist oppression, but they do not want social injustice either," said Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador.

Rosa Chavez, a young priest who often delivers the Sunday homily at the cathedral — the church's main means for spreading its message across ethe country — has been threatened ewith death by rightist death squads.

Although the church has not made eany endorsement in the race, Rosa Chavez said it views with some concern the possibility of a rightist victory.

He said the popularity of the rightist egroups, especially that of leading contender Roberto d'Aubuisson eand his Republican Nationalist eAlliance, is in part the result of the frustration felt by many epeople wearied with violence.

e "There would be a temptation there for a violent solution in case of a victory of the right," Rosa Chavez said.

Voting may be disrupted

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Campaigning for Sunday's presidential election has ended with little sign that leftist rebels plan to disrupt the voting, but the U.S. Embassy says guerrilla promises not to interfere are "worthless."

The rebels have given contradictory signals about their intentions. Last month guerrillas announced they would not disrupt the voting but on Saturday they threatened in a radio broadcast to step up the war "before, during and after" the balloting.

There have been scattered reports of violence around the country this week and rebels Wednesday continued a campaign of confiscating identification cards that citizens need to vote.

Rebels also briefly took over two San Salvador radio stations Wednesday and forced employees to broadcast recordings denouncing the election. Rebels blacked out the northern province of Chalatenango by dynamiting power poles and fought government troops in the east, killing one and wounding four.

Still, the week so far has been in marked contrast to 1982, when guerrillas launched a broader campaign against voting for a constitution-writing assembly. Despite the offensive and threats of violence, 1.5 million Salvadorans went to the polls.

The result was an international public relations setback for the leftists, whose leaders have publicly admitted the offensive backfired on them.

A Salvadoran military official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said the guerrillas learned a lesson in 1982 and would not likely threaten voters with the same sort of violence.

"The left never repeats the same error twice," the officer said Wednesday. "The elections of 1982, from the standpoint of international image, were a much greater loss than a benefit. They would not risk it again."

Late Wednesday the U.S. Embassy here distributed a statement saying continued vigilance is necessary because the rebels already have been doing "everything possible to disrupt the elections and reduce the voter turnout."

"Promises that they would not interfere in elections are worthless," the statement said.

"Since the beginnning of the year leftist terrorists have assassinated three members of the constituent assembly, a military judge and a campaign organizer," the statement said.

Salvadoran 'death squad' officer was paid by CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high-ranking Salvadoran police officer allegedly tied to rightist death squads was on the CIA payroll for about five years, according to a U.S. government source.

The source, who spoke on condition he not be named, said the officer, Nicholas Carranza, was paid $8,000 to $10,000 a month by the spy agency.

The source, who provided no other details of the arrangement, had access to material supplied by the CIA to congressional oversight committees on its dealings with Carranza.

The source also was familiar with material provided about Carranza by a former Salvadoran military officer who has been interviewed by several members of Congress and appeared on the CBS Evening News Wednesday.

In the CBS interview, the official said Carranza had received up to $90,000 a year from the CIA.

The New York Times reported in today's editions that Carranza, now head of the Salvadoran Treasury Police, had been recruited by the CIA while he was deputy minister of defense to provide information on power struggles within the Salvarodan military and on political and military developments in the country.

The CIA would not acknowledge or deny that Carranza had been on its payroll.

Governor to back school improvement

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White says if it's money the Texas school system needs, "then we'll have to find that money."

White commented Wednesday after the Texas Research League released a preliminary survey showing that Texas schools spend about as much instructional money on vocational education, physical education and sports as they do in reading, writing, mathematics and science.

"I think it is an alarming revelation," White said. "We have to make certain we are not diluting the scarce dollars we have for education on something that's less than essential."

Dr. Jared E. Hazleton, TRL president, released a sample study of 12 Texas schools, which was requested by the Select Committee on Public Education.

Hazelton said the final report to be released in May would include 20 Texas school districts but the preliminary report only had data from 12 of those districts.

"I suspect if we had the figures from 150 or 200 schools, the data would be similar to these 12," he said.

School districts in the preliminary report included New Deal, Paducah, Beckville, Junction, Jourdanton, Iowa Park, Rockdale, Atlanta, Lockhart, La Porte, Temple, and Edgewood.

Hazleton said the report in May would include data from eight other school districts — Commerce, Fort Stockton, Georgetown, Grapevine, Midland, McAllen, Austin and either Houston or Dallas.

"The percentage of instructional salary costs devoted to the core academic curriculum in the sample high schools ranged from 12 percent to 48 percent," the report said.

Hazleton said the "core academic curriculum" includes courses in English, mathematics, science, social studies and foreign languages.

"On the average, the rest of the high school instructional dollar broke down this way: 25 percent for vocational education, 13 percent for electives, 10 percent for competitive sports, 7 percent for special and compensatory education and 5 percent for health and physical education," the report said.

Other highlights of the preliminary report included:

— At the campus level, high school salary costs per student are 54 percent higher than for elementary schools and 31 percent higher than for junior high.

— Larger high schools offer two to three times as many electives as smaller high schools.

— The average cost per high school student for core academic courses is $181, compared with $215 for other academic courses.

— Vocational education courses, averaging $425 per student, generally cost from two to three times as much as academic courses.

"I sensed the likelihood of this occuring but I didn't know until we saw this preliminary report that it was as bad as it was," the governor told his weekly news conference. "It appears some of it was built in by legislation, some of it is in the vocational areas. For instance, vocational education teachers can't be asked to do anything but that particular subject. You cannot use that classroom except for that particular course."

Fishfurters put professor 'in swim'

NEW YORK (AP) — He didn't set out to turn ground-up fish into hot dogs, but now Ernest Buck is swimming toward success with that brainstorm and trolling for other products.

"We see no reason why you can't go on to bologna and luncheon meats," said Buck, who has developed a fishfurter at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, where he is a food science professor.

Buck said his fish hot dog is more nutritious than the standard version, and uses a fish — red hake — that is unpopular for other uses. He plans to publish a paper on the product and lecture in June to the annual meeting of the Institute of Food Technologists in California.

For years, researchers in several places have investigated using fish — especially plentiful but unpopular species — as a substitute or extender in meat products. The Japanese use fish in some sausages, and a Florida researcher has produced a recipe to make a sausage from minced mullet.

But the National Hot Dog and Sausage Council says it knows of no all-fish frankfurter on the market, and several fish and hot dog companies have already shown interest in Buck's product.

Buck hit on the fishfurter by accident, after setting out to find a way to turn ground-up red hake into a food base for sale to Japan. He then noticed that the protein gel he produced, which contained no scales or bone, might pass as the innards of a hot dog if it were spiced and colored.

He tinted it with beet juice, added normal hot dog seasonings, stuffed it into a casing and tried it out on students.

"It competed quite nicely, particularly with a chicken hot dog," he said in a interview this week. Most people still preferred a beef or beef-and-pork version, he said, but "we were quite pleased with the product we developed."

The fishfurter lacks a fishy taste because it uses very fresh fish and the washing process removes some chemicals responsible for the taste, he said. The spices cover any taste that might remain.

Fishfurters contain less than half of 1 percent fat, compared with 22 percent to 30 percent for regular hot dogs, Buck said.

Arson suspected in UNESCO fire

PARIS (AP) — The director-general of UNESCO said today that a fire that gutted a wing of his organization's Paris headquarters was "criminal" in origin and asked employees to cooperate in a police investigation.

Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, the top official of the United Nations agency, told assembled members of his staff he had requested a "painstaking inquiry" by French police, firemen and prosecutors into the Wednesday night blaze.

The fire, which caused no injuries but destroyed an undetermined amount of documents, occurred just a few weeks before the expected start of a U.S. review of the financial and administrative operations of the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Congress sought the review to help it determine the merit of President Reagan's decision to leave the organization at the end of this year unless there are major political and management reforms.

About 45 minutes after the fire was contained, two smaller fires were discovered in another wing of the building and quickly extinguished.

"I am asking everyone to do all they can so that we can find out the different reasons for the fire and the identities of the person or persons at the root of this crime," M'Bow said.

UNESCO officials said the fire began in an archives storage area but denied any classified documents had been destroyed

Jerome Hinstin, a UNESCO official, said, "No document concerning the budget or the administration of UNESCO that could interest the U.S. congressional inquiry due here shortly was destroyed."

Hinstin said only recent correspondence and files concerning the correspondence were damaged, and that budget and administrative files were kept in another wing.Hinstin said files concerning personnel were kept in another UNESCO building in Paris.

As M'Bow spoke to his staff, investigators from the French crimnianl brigade moved through the gutted floors looking for clues as to the blaze's origin.

M'Bow, the embattled Senegalese educator who has headed the 161-member nation organization since 1974, agreed to the congressional probe, officially termed a "review."

He also said he would welcome establishment of an international commission to investigate the organization's operations in order to end "untruthful allegations" against him.

The United States, which provides one quarter of UNESCO's $187 million annual budget, announced Dec. 28 that it would withdraw from the organization at the end of this year because UNESCO had become too politicized, was anti-Western and badly managed.

In closing his speech today, M'Bow requested UNESCO employees "to reinforce our solidarity ," and said he would remain at the helm of the international organization despite criticism by Western nations that under his leadership UNESCO has strayed from its original responsibilities in education, science and culture.

"I have the will to assume to the very end the reponsibilities that the member states have vested in me," M'Bow told the audience, which responded with a standing ovation.

Druse crack down on Sunni

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Street battles between Druse and leftist Sunni Moslem militias broke out in the Moslem half of Beirut today as President Amin Gemayel returned to the capital.

Gemayel headed the reconciliation talks among Lebanon's principal leaders in Lausanne, Switzerland, that ended Tuesday with a call for an effective cease-fire but no major proposals to solve Lebanon's political crisis.

Gunfire crackled in west Beirut's main commercial area of Hamra and the Corniche Mazraa district as Druse militiamen mopped up Mourabitoun resistence.

The Mourabitoun — Arabic for "ambushers" — is a Libyan-backed leftist militia that fielded the largest Moslem paramilitary force in west Beirut during the 1975-76 civil war. It lost much of its strength after the 1982 invasion of Lebanon by Israel.

The Mourabitoun leader, Ibrahim Koleilat, took no part in the meeting in Lausanne. He is currently reported to be visiting Libya.

The Mourabitoun radio station Voice of Arab Lebanon went off the air, and the militia's main position by a crossing point on Beirut's "green line" was taken over by Druse gunmen. The crossing point, controlled by French troops, was closed to traffic today between Christian east Beirut and the Moslem western sector.

Druse militiamen were seen manning checkpoints in the Corniche Mazraa area and the commercial district of Hamra after nightlong clashes with the Mourabitoun.

Druse leaders provided no immediate explanation for the move against the Mourabitoun. However, there have been indications that the failure of the Lausanne conference might prompt shifts in the various alliances and rivalries of Lebanon's numerous sectarian militias.

A Lebanese family walks across Beirut's Green Line, Wednesday, on their way back home. They are in an area of the Green Line which is controlled by French soldiers and which in the only link between the two halves of the divided city.

As the crackdown was underway, Christian and Moslem militiamen traded artillery, mortar and machine gun fire intermittently along the "green line." Police said two persons were killed and 16 others wounded in those battles, but there were no figures on casualties.

The Druse-Mourabitoun confrontation was heaviest in a neighborhood that houses Koleilat's headquarters and the group's radio station near the Gamal Abdul Nasser mosque, named for the late Egyptian president whose ideas the Mourabitoun espouses.

Druse militiamen pounded the area with multiple rocket launchers, and by midmorning they appeared to be in control of all Mourabitoun strongholds in west Beirut. Mourabitoun offices and the radio station failed to answer phone calls.

Witnesses in the Hamra neighborhood saw ambulances taking casualties to hospitals during the battles, but there were no figures on casualties.

During the night, a small explosive device exploded outside the office of the British Council, a cultural group. But it caused only broken glass.

The Switzerland conference had been intended to outline political reforms and appoint a "national unity" Cabinet to implement the changes. But the meeting ended after nine days with only a vague six-point declaration aimed at consolidating a much-violated cease-fire declared on the second day.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the Reagan administration was "disappointed the conferees have been unable to make greater progress toward national reconciliation. We hope the parties will continue to work to make more meaningful the fragile cease-fire that now exists."

Congress pushes to restrict oil mergers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arguing that the country is engulfed in a flood of oil company mergers which hold unknown implications for the nation's energy future, a bipartisan group of senators were pressing today for a six-month moratorium on further "mega-mergers" while the trend is studied.

Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., said he hoped to get a vote on the Senate floor today on his proposed restriction prohibiting new mergers among the industry leaders until Congress has a chance to evaluate them.

In a bid for broader support, he narrowed its scope on Wednesday by limiting its application to mergers that have not yet been announced. That would clear the way for some $29 billion in oil company mergers that have been announced but not consummated in the last month.

"What began as a gentle breeze in 1980" with the first industry mergers "has now become a hurricane," Johnston told the Senate.

Citing an estimate by the New York investment firm of Salomon Brothers Inc., Johnston argued that "$44 billion to $51 billion in additional mergers wait in the wings ... unless the United States Senate steps in and does something about it."

Johnston's proposal, co-sponsored by Sens. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and Warren Rudman, R-N.H., was prompted by an unprecedented series of merger announcements in recent months.

Standard Oil Co. of California said it would pay $13.2 billion for Gulf Corp., in order to foil a takeover bid by T. Boone Pickens Jr., the maverick chairman of Mesa Petroleum Co. Mobil Corp. said it would pay $5.7 billion for Superior Oil Co. and Texaco Inc. said it was buying Getty Oil Co. for $10.1 billion.

Johnston said he was concerned that the spending money for acquisition would limit the amount of money used for oil exploration. And the heavy borrowing would put pressures on credit markets, increasing inflation, he said.

Even if his moratorium is approved, Johnston said, "the Congress may decide that nothing ought to be done ... though I rather doubt that. ... But if we fail to act (now), it is clear the country will have lost irrevocably the ability to act."

Johnston, Metzenbaum and Rudman moved on their moratorium proposal Wednesday, attempting to attach it to a pending farm bill. It was then they announced the decision to narrow its scope to future mergers, thus excluding the Gulf-Socal and Mobil-Superior mergers from its terms.

"They would be able to do their deed without our interference," Johnston said.

No decision was made on the proposal, however, because Johnston withdrew it before a vote. He was asked to do so by the sponsors of the farm bill and agreed after Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. promised another bill would soon be available, probably today.

The oil mergers issue has become a central topic of debate in both houses of Congress since the big takeovers were announced. Legislation also is pending in the House to put mergers on hold.

While the Senate debated Johnston's proposal Wednesday, oilmen and economists were arguing before two House subcommittees over whether the deals will cause higher heating oil and gasoline prices.

Pickens, making his second appearance before Congress since touching off the merger mania, argued that the mergers will make the combined companies more efficient and able to explore at lower costs.

"Prices of gasoline at the pump will not be adversely affected," he told the fossil fuels and commerce subcommittees of the House Energy and Commerce Committee. "Gasoline prices are tied to the price of crude oil, and OPEC sets that price."

And Thomas Campbell, former antitrust chief for the Federal Trade Commission, said none of the companies would control more than 6.2 percent of the U.S. oil and gas production after the mergers, "dramatically below the danger level any economist would perceive."

Good times lie ahead for Midland apartment owners, despite problems

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Energy Writer

Randy L. Wright, president of the Texas Apartment Association, told local apartment owners and managers they should not dwell on obstacles facing the industry in Texas but should focus instead on the opportunities that lie ahead.

Speaking at the monthly meeting of the Midland chapter of the Texas Apartment Association Wednesday, Wright said the opportunities are plentiful. Quoting a recent report by Texas A&M University, Wright said predictiona are that by the year 2000 one out of every 12 Americans will live in Texas.

"In 22 years, Texas has gained 5.7 million residents. One of every six has arrived since 1970. If we keep growing at our current rate, in 10 years we will add another 4.3 million people," he said.

Wright emphasized his excitement "about the future and all the prospects it holds for me as an apartment owner."

"In 1980, there were 5 million households in Texas. By 1990 there will be 7 million. During this decade we will need approximately 1.5 to 2 million new housing units. The average price of a new home in 1990 will be $134,000, almost two and one half times the 1980 cost. Obviously that will mean many people won't be able to afford to buy. Where do you suppose they'll live?"

While Wright praised Texas apartment owners for doing a good job of filling the state's housing needs, he did acknowledge the industry's major problem of low occupancy. Wright said this statewide problem was created by overbuilding and the downturn in many businesses.

He was critical of apartment owners who use gimmicks to lure new residents and characterized them as "desperate."

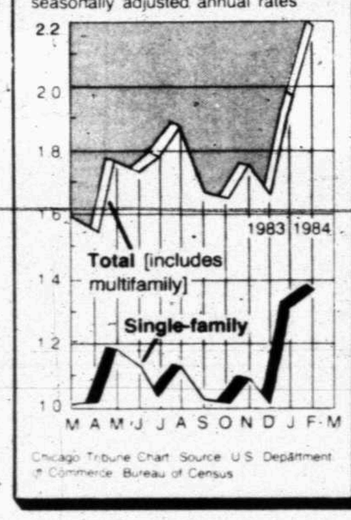

"I believe the biggest reason why some folks are having trouble today, is because they misread signals — signals about the economy, building needs and even social changes."

Wright urged the local association to pay attention to what's going on around them.

"Apartment builders in particular better be checking out the indicators on where our society and population is going. They'd better notice that the number of one and two-person households is increasing — that the average Texas household will be 2.55 people, which is down from 3.17 in 1970 — that consumers are becoming more energy and amenity conscious and that they want decent prices and higher quality in their houses, whether they're bought or rented," Wright said.

Bankruptcy bill faces difficult negotiations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to rescue the nation's bankruptcy system may be stalled in a House-Senate conference committee because of controversy over a provision that would bar companies from scrapping labor contracts during bankruptcy proceedings.

The House passed the bill Wednesday by voice vote. The legislation keeps the nation's bankruptcy courts from going out of business later this month.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1982 that the bankruptcy courts were run in an unconstitutional manner, but the governing body for federal judges granted temporary operating authority through March 30.

The House-adopted labor provision was not included in a Senate bankruptcy bill approved last year.

Difficult House-Senate negotiations will be needed because Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., is unlikely to accept the labor safeguard, according to a Senate source who spoke on the promise of anonymity.

But AFL-CIO lobbyist Ray Denison, speaking of House negotiators not yet selected, said, "I hope everyone would stand fast."

The House bill also included language — not in the Senate version — that would make it more difficult for people with income-earning potential to avoid paying their debts.

The bill introduced in the House, sponsored by Judiciary Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J. would have given the bankruptcy judges life tenure, a key provision also in the Senate bill.

But in an unusual defeat for Rodino, the House voted 250-161 to have the bankruptcy judges continue serving the 14-year terms they now have.

Rodino said after final passage, "I don't think the bill is constitutional" since the Supreme Court struck down the bankruptcy system because its judges had similar powers to other federal judges — but not the life tenure that insulated them from politics.

However Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., co-sponsor of the victorious amendment against lifetime jobs, said the measure is constitutional because it makes bankruptcy judges subservient to U.S. district judges.

The labor protection in the House bill was prompted by a unanimous Supreme Court ruling Feb. 22 that allowed companies filing for bankruptcy to cancel collective bargaining agreements that they considered "burdensome." The contracts could be scrapped without waiting for a court ruling.

The House legislation requires court approval before any labor agreement is canceled. Even then, the company must demonstrate the contract would result in the loss of jobs and make it impossible for the firm to reorganize under bankruptcy proceedings.

Arnold Mayer, a lobbyist for the United Food and Commercial Workers, said it is vital that the labor provision remain in the bill because if it was separated, "President Reagan would veto it."

Reagan's views on the House-passed package were not immediately known.

Small and large businesses and the consumer credit industry, fought for the provision to stiffen requirements for people to use the bankruptcy laws to wipe out their debts.

It would permit bankruptcy judges, after finding "substantial abuse," to dismiss so-called "straight bankruptcy" filings, which allow debtors to eliminate their obligations permanently. The purpose is to encourage a different form of bankruptcy, called "Chapter 13," which permits a long-term repayment plan.

Retail sales picture better than estimated

By The Associated Press

The retail sales picture last month was better than originally estimated, the Commerce Department says, revising upward its first report.

Presidential economist Martin Feldstein, meanwhile, said Wednesday he would be "very surprised" if the economy continues growing at the robust clip estimated earlier this week in a separate report on the current quarter.

The Commerce Department reported last week that February retail sales declined 0.2 percent from January. In its revised report, the department says sales declined by only 0.1 percent to a seasonally adjusted figure of $106.2 billion.

The department also revised the sharp 3.3 percent January increase to an even higher 3.8 percent rise.

Feldstein, before a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, cited recent economic statistics as giving "a very positive sense of the state of the economy."

But the chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisors also said he doesn't expect the GNP to maintain the 7.2 percent inflation-adjusted rate the Commerce Department estimated Tuesday for the current January-March period.

"I would be very surprised if it continued to expand" at that pace in future quarters, said Feldstein in response to questions.

Some economists consider Tuesday's growth estimate a sure sign the economy is expanding too fast, putting pressure on the Federal Reserve Board to clamp down on the growth in the supply of money and credit in an effort to restrain the economy and keep inflation under control.

Federal Reserve policy-makers are scheduled to meet next week to discuss monetary strategy, and some analysts expect them to decide to tighten the credit reins.

Other economic developments Wednesday:

—President Reagan made separate appearances before House and Senate Republicans on Capitol Hill, urging them to "stand together" on behalf of a GOP plan to cut federal deficits.

—LTV Corp. said it will have to sell two of Republic Steel Corp.'s plants — in Gadsden, Ala. and Massillon, Ohio — to complete the proposed merger between the two companies, which has been approved by the Justice Department.

—Large businesses as well as long-distance competitors of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. have been given an unexpected reprieve until June from new telephone "access charges."

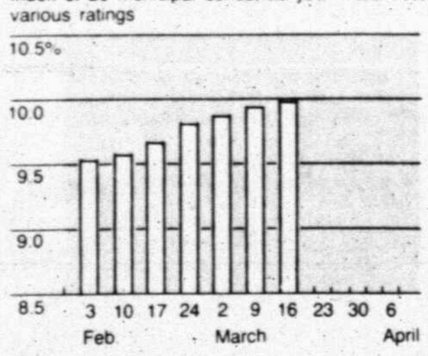

The Federal Communications Commission, which earlier this year postponed access charges for residential customers and small businesses, postponed from April 3 until June 13 the effective date for new fees to be paid by larger businesses and long-distance firms.

—Senators seeking to end the surge of oil company mergers agreed to limit their proposal to future mergers, a change that would allow $29 billion in previously announced takeovers to go forward.

—International Business Machines Corp. and Merrill Lynch & Co. announced they are joining forces to produce and market a new system for distributing and processing investment information.

Comanche Peak may get costly fuel delay

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commissioon official says the owners of the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant will be nine to 12 months late in loading radioactive fuel in the project's first reactor, a delay that could be costly.

Figures provided recently by the utility show the delay could add between $550 million and $730 million to the plant's estimated $3.89 billion price tag.

Officials said if the forecast is correct, the first reactor will not begin operation until late 1985 or early 1986. Utility officials are still saying operations will begin in early 1985.

The prediction was made by Thomas A. Ippolito, an NRC executive who was appointed last week to head a special NRC task force that will examine licensing issues posed by Comanche Peak, located near Glen Rose.

Ippolito said the forecast was a preliminary assessment reached after three days of meetings with plant officials this week. He said an official prediction based on more detailed research should be issued within a month.

The forecast marks the second time in four months that the NRC has revised its estimate of when fuel loading is likely to occur.

At the end of November, the NRC said it expected the fuel to be loaded between this July and September. The estimate was seven to nine months later than the prediction of the utility, which was anticipating fuel loading in December. In December, the utility changed its estimate to midyear.

Homer Schmidt, manager of nuclear services at the plant, said officials of the Texas Utilities Generating co., the consortium of six utilities that own the plant, told NRC officials Monday they are running six to eight weeks behind the schedule that would have allowed fuel loading in July.

Schmidt said he still hopes that fuel loading will occur between July and September and said plant officials will be submitting additional information to the NRC in an attempt to persuade them to revise their forecast.

The earlier construction forecast is important to the utility because the company is pressing the U.S. Atomic Safety and Licensing board to recommend issuance of an operating license for the plant as soon as possible.

Schmidt said it would be premature to speculate on whether the project's prize estimate will go up. The $3.89 billion estimate, made in December, was the sixth increase since the original estimate of $779 million in 1974.

Last fall, plant officials estimated the plant's price will go up $2 million fo reach day of delay in loading fuel. In adding $450 million to their previous estimate in December, they boosted the price by $2.47 million for each day of the projected six-month delay.

Ippolito said the NRC's prediction was based on a large amount of unfinished insulation work, paitinig and pre-operational testing, as well as a delay in correcting almost 9,000 construction defects.

Ippolito made his announcement during a break in licensing hearings being conducted by the licensing board.

X-car owners seek damages from GM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disgruntled owners of 1980 X-cars are following the federal government into court with claims that General Motors Corp. showed "callous disregard for life and limb" in selling them autos it knew had faulty braking systems.

Some 127 individuals or couples who bought the autos filed a class-action lawsuit Wednesday in U.S. District Court seeking damages from GM on behalf of all 1.1 million owners of 1980 X-cars.

GM currently is on trial in a lawsuit that the federal government initiated to force the automaker to recall and repair the 1980 X-cars. The government also wants GM fined $4 million for putting cars on the market that it allegedly knew were defective.

The owners' suit alleges that "because of the design defect of the brakes, the automobiles ... were and are hazardous, unsafe, unmerchantable and unfit to be used."

The suit, prepared by the Washington law firm of Arnold & Porter, says the owners suffered "physical, financial and emotional injury as a result of General Motors' callous disregard for life and limb in pursuit of profits."

"Their automobiles had and continue to have far less value than would have been the case but for the defect," the suit alleges. "Each member of the class received a product worth substantially less than he or she paid for it."

The suit was filed as the federal government's case against GM entered its sixth day at trial. Both the X-car owners and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said GM put the cars on the market after the automaker's test drivers reported numerous problems with locking of rear-wheel brakes on the cars.

"Eager to get the cars into production and to market in order to meet increasing competition and threatened lost profits, GM refused to be delayed by, and actively concealed, serious safety defects and problems with the braking system of the front wheel drive vehicles," the car owners said in their suit.

Irvin Nathan, an attorney with Arnold & Porter, estimated that the value of each 1980 X-car has decreased by at least $1,000 because of problems with the braking systems, meaning that compensation of the 1.1 million owners would cost more than $1 billion even before punitive damages were assessed.

Dollar mixed; Gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar turned in a mixed performance on European currency markets in thin trading early today. Gold bullion prices were little changed.

Currency dealers said markets were quiet ahead of reports later in the day on the weekly growth of U.S. money supply and durable goods orders for February.

-8.1505 French francs, down from 8.1525.

Ford recalling 17,000 vehicles

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. said it is recalling 9,426 subcompact cars for a possible pollution problem and 7,400 light trucks and utility vehicles for replacement of transmission fluid coolers.

The 1984 Ford Escort, Ford EXP and Mercury Lynx subcompacts may have blockages on the pollution-control device known as the vacuum supply line. Fixing it requires installation of a washer, the automaker said Wednesday.

Ford said it recalled the trucks and utility vehicles because it has been getting complaints about overheating automatic transmissions, most from places where temperatures have been extremely cold such as the upper Midwest, Canada and Alaska.

The company said it would replace the auxilliary fluid cooler.

Loved ones give you the support you need to make an important decision. A property sale provides the funding for a special project. Be more realistic about romance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Someone may be difficult to figure out. Concentrate on projects you can handle alone. Your instincts will be sounder this afternoon. An investment begins to flourish. Your timing is excellent in romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be wise and stay out of a difficult person's way as much as possible. Conventional business methods are favored. Curb spending. Love at first sight is a distinct possibility.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone will help you wipe the slate clean if you have unexpected debts. Count on there being some strings attached, however. Local travel could help an important relationship. Be flexible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A morning business trip could take on romantic overtones. This is fine if you are eligible and interested! Postpone making a major career or financial move until more information is available.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A close relationship requires more tender, loving care. Do not voice your opinions too swiftly to a teen-ager who resents unsolicited advice. A financial situation begins to show improvement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Family opposition complicates some of your plans. Be prepared to modify your schedule. Afternoon hours are excellent for making business calls. Expect good news where romance is concerned.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your immediate superiors may turn a deaf ear to a request. Concentrate on routine matters. Do not let envy cloud your usually sound judgment. Loved one shares a wonderful secret.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Go all-out to earn extra money. Seize a chance to work overtime or take on a second job. A little skillful maneuvering will steer new business your way.

Potter's stories on PBS

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — John Hawkesworth, whose best-known television project was the much-acclaimed "Upstairs, Downstairs," has moved into the nursery to write about Flopsy, Mopsy, Cottontail — and their creator, Beatrix Potter.

Hawkesworth's "Tales of Beatrix Potter," which chronicles the life of the famed writer and illustrator of children's stories, will be broadcast on Mobil's "Masterpiece Theatre" in two one-hour installments, this Sunday and next.

Alistair Cooke, host of "Masterpiece Theatre," is surrounded by cages of animals when he introduces the broadcast. He says Hawkesworth was drawn to Miss Potter's work because of the delicacy of the animal illustrations scattered throughout her classic square-shaped books.

Hawkesworth's script, which is based on the biography written by Margaret Lane, emphasizes how Miss Potter was the child of snooty, rigid parents in the late 19th century in England. With no one to give her love or receive her affection, Miss Potter lavished her attentions on small animals, who become the inspiration for such popular characters as Peter Rabbit, Mrs. Tiggy-Winkle and Jemima Puddle-Duck.

Holly Aird of "The Flame Trees of Thika" gives the young Beatrix wonderful charm, and Penelope Wilton is also winning in the role of the older Beatrix, the adult writer-illustrator and, after she turns 50, the successful and contented sheep farmer.

Befitting its subject matter, the TV series is gentle and sentimental, but it lacks the excitement, high drama and strong character development of Hawkesworth's best projects. It is watchable, but never compellingly so.

"Upstairs, Downstairs" was one of the most popular miniseries on public television. To some, it was the classy forerunner of the network's serial sagas, such as "Dallas" and "Dynasty."

"I think it hit at the right moment," said Hawkesworth. "It was the first program we produced in color and the first one we actually exported." It also legitimized PBS' "Masterpiece Theatre" as a respected program importer.

Hawkesworth said his two favorite American programs are "Hill Street Blues" and "M*A*S*H."

Among his future projects are "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," a 13-part series, and "By the Sword Divided," an adventure series he based on the division in his family in England's 17th century civil war. Both will be on public television next year.

Peter Weichsel and Alan Sontag have long been considered one of the best pairs in the world. They confirmed this ranking when their team won the 1983 world championship in Stockholm. Defense has been their forte. Here's an example from the semifinal of the championships.

In North-South's methods, South's hand was not good enough for a two-over-one response. His one no trump was a one-round force, and two no trump was invitational. North-South needed points — they were trailing by a considerable amount — so North pushed on to game.

Since South's long suit was almost certainly clubs (he could have bid two hearts over North's rebid if that was his suit), Weichsel, West, elected to attack with a low heart. Declarer won East's queen with the ace and forced out the ace of diamonds. East returned a heart to his partner's king and it seemed normal to clear the suit.

Had Weichsel made the reflex play, declarer would have gotten home easily. Weichsel, however, visualized the position. Instead of playing a heart, he shifted to the king of spades (to cater to a singleton queen in the South hand). Declarer held up, but Weichsel continued with the ten of spades to the ace.

Declarer now had only eight tricks, and he had to look to the club finesse for his ninth. But when that failed, Weichsel continued with the jack and six of spades for down one.

In the other room, Weichsel's teammates reached the less ambitious contract of three diamonds. Declarer made an overtrick, so Weichsel's brilliant defense turned a potential loss of 7 International Match Points into a gain of 5 IMPs.

Sure it's politics

The big political news of recent days has originated in New England, the South and Midwest. These are the areas where Democratic aspirants for the presidency, eight in the beginning but now down to three, have been scrambling for attention and delegates.

Meanwhile, back at the White House President Reagan's aides and travel agents have been putting together a schedule of meetings with foreign dignitaries that is likely to be the most significant political news of all in the coming months. The presidential itinerary includes journeys to both Asia and Europe.

Highlight of the Asian trip will be talks with Chinese leaders in Peking. President Reagan wants to keep open the door that was unlatched so effectively by President Nixon. An interesting side event will be a stopover in Alaska where the president will have conversations with His Holiness, Pope John Paul II.

The European tour, scheduled for June, will include a visit to the Normandy beaches on the 40th anniversary of D-Day. Mr. Reagan will meet with European leaders at an economic summit gathering in London. Although it may not be strictly classified as business, the president plans to take time out to visit Ireland and look around a bit for Reagan family roots there.

This busy spring and summer calendar starts this week at home, as France's President Mitterrand will pay his respects to our president in Washington. Other foreign visitors to Washington will be Soares of Portugal, FitzGerald of Ireland, Lusinchi of Venezuela, Prem of Thailand, and a few others.

No president can adequately prepare himself for all the foreign policy problems that will arise in any four-year period. Too many imponderables and unexpected events are involved, as President Reagan has discovered in Lebanon and Central America. But there is such a thing as on-the-job training, and that is what Mr. Reagan is engaging in by getting better acquainted with as many foreign leaders as possible, and making it possible for them to get acquainted with him and American policies.

In this presidential election year, some Democrats are sure to squirm when Mr. Reagan's foreign excursions and Washington summit sessions monopolize the headlines. Some will scream "politics." The answer to that is that in this republic politics is government, and good government can result from good politics.

Remember that quote

Among the quotable quotations to surface in recent days were remarks from the lips of the president of the United States, a past president, and two senators.

President Reagan, 73, made this comment about what his campaign strategy would be if his opponent happened to be Senator Gary Hart, 47:

"I don't see any need for a generational struggle, but if there is, maybe we can settle it with an arm wrestle."

Former President Richard Nixon, in an address to the Economic Club of New York, spoke as follows about the goals of the United States and the Soviet Union:

"We want peace. The Soviet Union wants the Middle East."

A Democratic member of the United States Senate, John Glenn, bowed out of the race for his party's presidential nomination with estimable dignity and decency. The gentleman from Ohio showed real class as he said:

"I'm deeply indebted to almost everybody."

Would that all politicians could handle themselves with such grace. Despite his failure to win a primary, in the eyes of many Americans John Glenn came out a winner.

Another View:

Man of quiet change

The word "lobbyist" conjures up a vision of private-interest advocacy precisely opposite to the meaning that Clarence M. Mitchell Jr.'s career gave the term. Mr. Mitchell, who died in Baltimore Sunday night at the age of 73, was perhaps the leading public interest lobbyist of his time. As head of the Washington office of the NAACP and as a leader of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, which he helped found, he did as much as any man of his generation to make equality the law of the land.

Mr. Mitchell did not simply contribute to the great moral passion for equal rights that built up in this country in the 1950s. His special contribution was to find effective ways to bring that force to bear in the political arena. He made it his business to know and to earn the confidence of a wide range of Washington figures, not least the politicians whose resistance to his cause had to be overcome. A gentle and dignified as well as persistent man, he never wrote anyone off. His method was to work the Hill quietly and diligently, taking legislators aside one by one, making his arguments and ensuring that the people he was talking to knew that behind him stood the moral power of the country and considerable political power as well. That was the meaning of the Leadership Conference, a public interest coalition of rare breadth and effectiveness.

While he was not as well known outside Washington as other civil rights leaders, Clarence Mitchell was the movement's skilled negotiator, the man who translated demands into laws. In the halls of Congress he won victories without making enemies because he was strong without ever being mean. Beginning with the Civil Rights Act of 1957, every anti-discrimination statute for a quarter of a century bears his mark. His life's work, inspiring those who shared his hopes and eventually persuading almost all of those who hesitated, profoundly changed and uplifted the nation.

Auto wizard's fate 'on tape'

WASHINGTON — High drama will unfold in a Los Angeles courtroom in the weeks ahead, as one-time auto wizard John Z. DeLorean is tried on charges he attempted to bankroll his failing sports car company with a $24 million cocaine deal.

Jack Anderson

The key prosecution evidence will be audio tapes of conversations between DeLorean and government undercover operatives. Some of them were recorded on July 12, 13 and 14, 1982.

The government claims the conversations formally launched the illicit drug deal with DeLorean's OK. Defense attorneys will argue that they involved a legitimate financing plan for DeLorean's auto factory in Northern Ireland.

The jury will have a tough time on this. My associates Tony Capaccio and Indy Badhwar have examined bootleg copies of the tapes and transcripts, which are still under court seals. The references are far from conclusive. Were they talking about dope or dollars? You decide.

A government document shows that, in an unrecorded conversation on July 11, government informer James Hoffman, the prime mover in the transaction, gave DeLorean the name of Jim Benedict, supposedly a California banker who would vouch for Hoffman. In fact, Benedict was an FBI agent. DeLorean called him on July 12:

DeLorean: "I've been talking to Jim Hoffman. He suggested that I call you. Really in relation to two things. We were talking about a business transaction. He said that, that you would confirm that a substantial, ahh ...."

Benedict: "Oh, yes. Mr. Hoffman. It is, I would say, in eight figures the average price, and, ah, you got some transactions — very, very young, good customers, you might say."

DeLorean: "Good, yeah, and then the next thing was that I had asked him if under the — he said that it might be possible that you could do some financing for us. We have some cars in inventory that we would like to finance."

On July 13, DeLorean called Hoffman:

DeLorean: "I had talked to Jim Benedict and I was trying to get him there this morning. He's not in yet. He was going to consider floor planning some of the cars, and, ah, hopefully they'll agree to do that. That would be a godsend to us."

After more discussion on auto inventory loan matters, DeLorean said: "So I'm expecting to hear back from him (Benedict) real soon. But in any event, we want to proceed."

Hoffman: "OK. I just wanted you, you know, I didn't mean to sound negative, but I wanted you to just think about it and, you know ...."

DeLorean: "It's a — it's a godsend."

When Hoffman says he'll "draw up kind of a cash-flow projection on the project," and says Benedict could "handle the funding on this, he's cool," DeLorean says softly, "Well, we're an inch away, that's all."

On July 14, DeLorean called Benedict, who tried to set up a meeting.

DeLorean: "OK. This is relative to financing some of our cars?"

Benedict: "I believe that's what you called for. There's another matter, but, uh ...."

Benedict: "Right."

NO-NO LOGO: The FBI's new, 50-man Hostage Rescue Team, modeled after U.S. Army, British and West German anti-terrorist squads, wanted its own special emblem bearing the slogan, "To Save Lives." But FBI Director William Webster vetoed the suggestion; he doesn't want the new team to be considered an elite branch of the bureau. The contretemps is referred to privately around FBI headquarters as "No-Go Logo."

Incidentally, when the FBI showed off its new hostage rescue team at a recent press demonstration, it would not disclose its cost for "security" reasons. More likely, the bureau just didn't want it known that the team will cost $2.3 million this year, while Congress allocated only $830,000 for the project. The G-men will find the money from other operations to make up the difference.

FEUD OF THE WEEK: Environmentalists are revved up over the prospect of another desert motorcycle race from Barstow, Calif., to Las Vegas. The American Motorcycle Association, which runs the 140-mile race, has applied to the Bureau of Land Management for permission to hold the race again this November.

Last year, BLM laid out $20,000 for the "world's biggest motorcycle race," but was later reimbursed by the cyclists.

The event has infuriated the Sierra Club, which recently lost a lawsuit against BLM, arguing unsuccessfully that the race violates federal law and is "dangerous to fragile ecosystems" as the motorcycles roar through or near wilderness study areas in the desert. The club has appealed the decision. Meanwhile, BLM has the bikers' application under study.

WHISTLE BLOWER UPDATE: I recently wrote about Dave Lambert, a Defense Logistics Agency contract auditor at the IBM plant in Manassas, Va. When he blew the whistle on his military bosses' management of defense contracts at the plant the Pentagon brass slapped him down.

Now I've intercepted a memo issued by IBM to its Manassas employees. While disputing Lambert's criticism of IBM the memo does confirm that the Pentagon has ordered a follow-up investigation into the charges I reported.

Another election's sizzling egos

WASHINGTON — Political junkies are in danger of overdosing because fate is supplying stimulation with a lavish hand. In addition to the conspicuous campaigns, there is a quiet campaign concerning an election for which the full electorate has not yet been elected. The election will occur next January and will select the replacement for Howard Baker as leader of Senate Republicans. There are, so far, five candidates.

George F. Will

Alaska's Ted Stevens is currently the second-ranking Republican — the whip — but he is not Mr. Congeniality. His sharp tongue serves a quick temper that is ... how shall I say this ... as varied and occasionally violent as Alaska's weather. He has bruised some egos, of which the Senate has its share.

If President Reagan loses, the next Republican leader in the Senate might be the minority leader, not the majority leader, and probably will become the nation's most visible Republican. Republican senators might then want someone with a zest for gnawing on the new President's ankles, and for combat on the Senate floor. Bob Dole of Kansas has the best zest. The position involves much more than floor leadership, but that part is important, and no one in either party in either house of Congress is better on his feet than Dole.

If Reagan wins, Dole may lose some support. He is lively, opinionated, intelligent and — even more unforgivable — witty. In short, he is a boat-rocker. And he wants to be President. And he thinks Reagan's taxophobia may wreck the economy and Republican chances in 1988 (not to mention 1986, when Dole is up for re-election). Being insubordinate is impolitic; being right is insufferable.

Some Republicans squinting down into Gender Gap would like to see Nancy Landon Kassebaum of Kansas elected whip. But that can not happen if Dole is elected leader, because elevating to glory two Kansans would violate one of those unwritten rules that remain unwritten because if they were written down everyone would see how dumb they are. Just by being a shimmering possibility for the second spot, Kassebaum might benefit one of Dole's rivals for the top spot — perhaps Indiana's Richard Lugar.

Lugar's temperament is markedly less tangy than Dole's, and less apt to vex Reagan. As chairman of the Senate Republican campaign committee, Lugar holds the key to the hearts and minds of those senators elected this year: money. When freshman Republican senators — if any — arrive next January, Lugar and his staff will be the people they know best.

Dole has to get votes one at a time. Idaho's Jim McClure starts with a group — the conservatives who comprise what they call the Steering Committee. One McClure handicap is that the Republican leader can not be a committee chairman. If McClure is elected, his committee, Energy, would fall to Connecticut's Lowell Weicker. Senators from energy-producing states would not like to see that committee run by anyone from the Northeast. Besides, Weicker is a liberal live wire and as abrasive as a six-foot six-inch emery board. The thought of him happy depresses many Republicans.

(Dole would have to give up chairmanship of Finance, the most important committee in the tax-raising last half of this decade. Many senators — more than will admit it — want his views and skills in that chair. And some senators would not want that chairmanship passed to Oregon's Bob Packwood. For reasons having nothing to do with economic policy — especially his intense pro-abortion position, and some infelicitous criticisms of Reagan — Packwood is considered a liberal and not a team player.)

New Mexico's Pete Domenici is vastly respected and liked, but as chairman of the Budget Committee he has been duty-bound to deliver bad news and be bossy. Furthermore, the Budget Committee is constantly seen as committing the worst Senate sin, infringing on other committees' jurisdictions. He would be succeeded as Budget chairman by Colorado's Bill Armstrong, a hard-charger who would not give Republicans any respite from the kind of rigor Domenici brings to budget questions.

The five candidates are already courting and counting votes, but not with much confidence, for two reasons. If Reagan loses, some senators (Armstrong, for example) not now in the race might enter. And promises do not mean much. Votes for leadership positions are the only votes senators cast by secret ballot, so they are occasions when the sense of honor is, er, attenuated.

'Problem' is Odessa's

This is in reference to your article on Monahans Draw, the city and county council meeting on Tuesday, March 13. Also on the same page, just below this article, the hundreds of thousands of dollars Odessa is spending on various projects, none of which is to alleviate the problem of their sewage dumping into Midland County.

We live about one mile north of Monahans Draw on Farm Road 715 and we are very concerned with the mosquito problem along with the other diseases mentioned, one very important one was omitted — heartworms. As you know heartworms are a killer to animals. It seems to me 95% control is not good enough. Odessa should find another means to dispose of their waste.

How many millions of dollars have we in Midland spent to take care of our sewage? We certainly do not send it to Martin County to cause them problems.

We also have the problem of the possibility of our water wells being contaminated, along with the odor when we otherwise could enjoy a soft southerly breeze. We moved to the country for this once fresh air and clean sweet water away from the smells of the city and chlorinated water. Now we have to endure Odessa city odors; this is not fair.

The article also mentioned this was fresh water and should be used and not wasted. Further down in this article, it stated that fish were used in some areas to control mosquito larvae but they could not survive in polluted water, so spraying was necessary. This is a contradiction within itself. Do we need to add more pollution to our already overpolluted environment?

Instead of Midland taxpayers' money being spent to control Odessa's problem, the problem should be eliminated by Odessa in Odessa.

Thanks offered from the heart

In Spanish the words "dios te lo page" have a very profound meaning as the person who expresses his or her appreciation for kindness, prayers and love shown during a time of need. Those are the feelings expressed by Virginia Melendez and the Reyes family. The following is the best way they know to express what is in their hearts and minds for all the expressions of Christian love and concern shown to Virginia during the fire which critically injured her.

The apostle Paul said, "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you." God has given each of us so much for which to express thanks, yet, we forget. True thankfulness comes from the heart. It is an expression of God's love within us. Your expression of love flows from His love. Thanks be to God for the love you expressed, and for your selfless expression of inner caring in an outward fashion.

Please forgive when the words are not said. Thank you for believing, trusting, and caring. And, with Paul, praise the Lord for the meaning you have given to love.

"Dios se los page."

Virginia is still very sick and in the Lubbock hospital. The prayers said for her have helped her overcome so many obstacles during the past weeks. The fund started at Republic First National Bank was at $1,585 the last time we checked.

Why not UTPB 'togetherness'?

Now that we have full cooperation between Odessa and Midland because of the media blitz and the spirit of togetherness, has anyone thought of exploring a two campus U.T.P.B.?

By using the Midland College Campus for U.T.P.B. — Midland and the U.T.P.B. Campus for U.T.P.B. — Odessa a tremendous number of possibilities suddenly open up for the good of the entire area.

It is obvious that the Board of Regents would be equally selected from each of the two harmonious communities.

The combined political clout of the entire region working together would allow for elevation of the school to full four-year status within a very short period of time.

The administration and record keeping in all areas could be combined for greater efficiency.

Enrollment should almost triple within three years.

Students from both towns and surrounding communities could receive a full bachelor program without leaving home, which would result in a greater number of our young people receiving an education. They would also be more oriented with the West Texas method of doing business and be more likely to seek their careers in our area.

When pride and selfishness are put on the back burner this idea seems to have far more positives than negatives.

Do you suppose our friends in Odessa would be interested in pursuing a project like that?

French President Francois Mitterand, left is escorted by Secretary of State George Shultz and U.S. Chief of Protocol Selwa Roosevelt on the visiting leader's arrival at Andrews Air Force Base, Md., Wednesday night. Reagan, Democrats fight for deficit plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan and House Democratic leaders are trying to shore up support for separate deficit-reduction plans that will force legislators to make politically painful election-year votes to raise taxes, curb popular domestic programs and trim defense spending.

Reagan was at opposite ends of Capitol Hill on Wednesday exhorting Republicans in the House and Senate to stand with him in support of a three-year, $150 billion package he had negotiated with senior GOP senators.

The president said "it is absolutely essential ... that we appear united in our determination to get this package ... and stand together."

Nonetheless, said Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., there will "be an uphill fight" to pass the compromise plan because it has "enemies on both sides" of the aisle — Republicans and Democrats.

House Democratic leaders, meanwhile, said it will be no easier to pass their competing $184 billion "pay-as-you-go" plan for trimming federal budget deficits over the next three years.

The Democrats began the campaign for their plan Wednesday with the House Steering and Policy Committee — the formal organization of the Democratic leadership — adopting a resolution that "calls upon all Democratic members" to support the package "and to oppose any Republican substitutes or amendments."

Conservative senators are pressing for further domestic spending cuts such as those outlined by the so-called Grace Commission, a presidential panel that recently studied government operations and recommended some 2,000 ways to save money and improve efficiency.

Meanwhile, the Senate Finance Committee finished work Wednesday on a $74 billion package of tax increases and spending cuts that will be the core of the $150 billion plan Reagan has embraced.

The panel agreed to delay sending the measure to the full Senate until other committees have a chance to add their own cuts to the package, possibly next week.

The $74 billion includes $48 billion in taxes and nearly $26 billion in spending reductions through 1987.

The Finance Committee's tax measure is very similar to one approved March 1 by the House Ways and Means Committee. Either plan would avoid any across-the-board tax increase; neither would tamper with the individual tax reductions enacted on Reagan's recommendation in 1981.

Deliberations set in trial of four men

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP) — Jurors starting deliberations in the trial of four men accused of raping a young mother in a barroom should adhere to "a tradition that says we don't tolerate bullies," a prosecutor argued.

But lawyers for the defendants, who could face up to life in prison if convicted of aggravated rape, said that a 22-year-old woman and a bartender lied about the events of March 6, 1983, at Big Dan's tavern in nearby New Bedford.

In closing statements, the defense said the woman originally consented to sex with the men, then panicked at the thought of her family's reaction.

Before the start of deliberations today, court officials tried to ensure that the 16 jurors would be unaware that another jury Saturday convicted two other men of aggravated rape in the case.

Those two, Daniel Silva, 27, and Joseph Vieira, 28, are to be sentenced Friday.

In closing arguments Wednesday, assistant Bristol County District Attorney Robert Kane said there was "a natural ... outrage" against what happened in the tavern. He said the men acted as a "mob" in "an explosion of violence and brutality against that small woman."

"It is an outrage that's drawn upon the American tradition and experience. It's a tradition that says we don't tolerate bullies," Kane said.

"We have a tradition in this country where we've always supported the underdog. ... It is that group enterprise, that group of six against one — against one — that revolts us and outrages us, because that is our spirit and this is America," Kane said.

The defendants — Virgilio Medeiros and Jose Medeiros, both 24 and not related, John Cordeiro, 24, and Victor Raposo, 23 — are all Portuguese immigrants.

Some members of the city's Portuguese community claimed the Silva and Veiera were convicted because of their nationality. Protest marches are planned in New Bedford tonight and in Fall River on Friday.

District Attorney Ronald Pina, a Portuguese-American, has rejected the claims of prejudice. "That has nothing to do with this case," he said Saturday. The victim is also Portuguese-American, and at least five of the 16 jurors have Portuguese surnames.

Defense lawyer Judith Lindahl, representing Raposo, said the woman "stopped short of telling the truth" when she testified. "There is something here that she is trying to get away from," she said.

Giraffes from Kenya destined for Tampa zoo

NEW YORK (AP) — A zoo is flying 25 captured giraffes from Kenya to Tampa, Fla., for a breeding project to help keep a subspecies alive, officials say.

The reticulated giraffes, a variety in danger of being wiped out in the wild, have begun a 60-day quarantine required before a modified jumbo jet can fly them to New York City in May, Brian Smith, a Busch Gardens Zoo vice president, announced Wednesday.

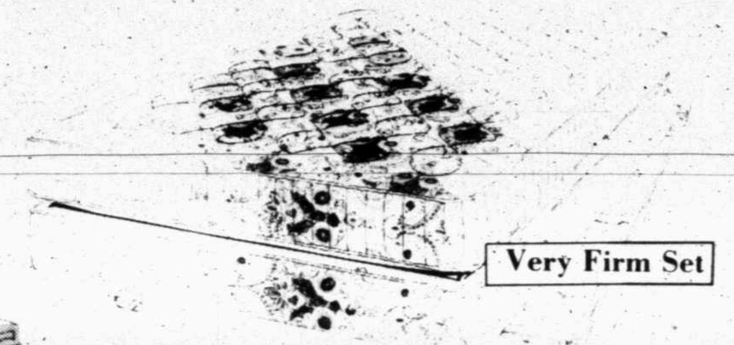

After a one-month quarantine north of New York, the long-necked animals will be trucked to the Busch Gardens zoo, he said.

Mustangs have wild time in win over Rebs

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

One way or another, Lubbock Coronado batters were hitting the ball against Midland Lee. Or, is it the other way around?

The Mustangs were the beneficiaries of Rebel pitching control problems Wednesday at Midland Lee Diamond. When they weren't being hit, they managed to collect 11 hits and seven walks enroute to a 15-5 non-district victory.

With none out in the top of the first, the bases loaded and three runs already home, Lee's Mike Rittenberry hit four straight batters which brought in three more runs to spot Coronado a 6-0 lead.

The situation didn't improve much in the second inning, but at least Rittenberry wasn't hitting any more Coronado players. He gave up two more runs on three hits and a sacrifice fly. He finished the inning and was replaced by Dennis Matta in the third.

Matta fared no better. He walked the first batter he faced, hit the second (the fifth of the game) and gave up a RBI single to David Johnson. Terrell Gillespie drove in the next two runs with his single to left. The fourth run of the inning scored on a throwing error by first baseman Cary Brown. Coronado led 10-2.

The Mustangs added two more runs in the fourth inning and a final tally in the seventh.

AT THE plate, the Rebels managed to get 10 hits but owe three of their five runs to left fielder George Matta who went 3-for-3, including a two-run homer over the left field fence in the fourth inning. He also had an RBI single in the second. Michael Wilson brought home a fourth Lee run on a sacrifice fly to shallow right and Terry Ullom scored on a double steal to account for the final run.

Dirk Bergoon was the only other Rebel with more than one hit in the game, going 2-for-4 while Johnny Gonzlez and Brown hit doubles in their 1-for-4 efforts.

For Coronado, David Johnson had a stellar performance with a 5-for-5 effort, accounting for eight of the Mustang runs: five RBIs and three runs scored. Brock Marshall went 2-for-4 with a double (at the start of the game) and scored two runs while Gillespie was 2-for-4 for four RBI.

Mustang pitcher Jeff Richardson went five innings to collect the victory, getting relief help from Monte McLean and Steve Rodriquez.

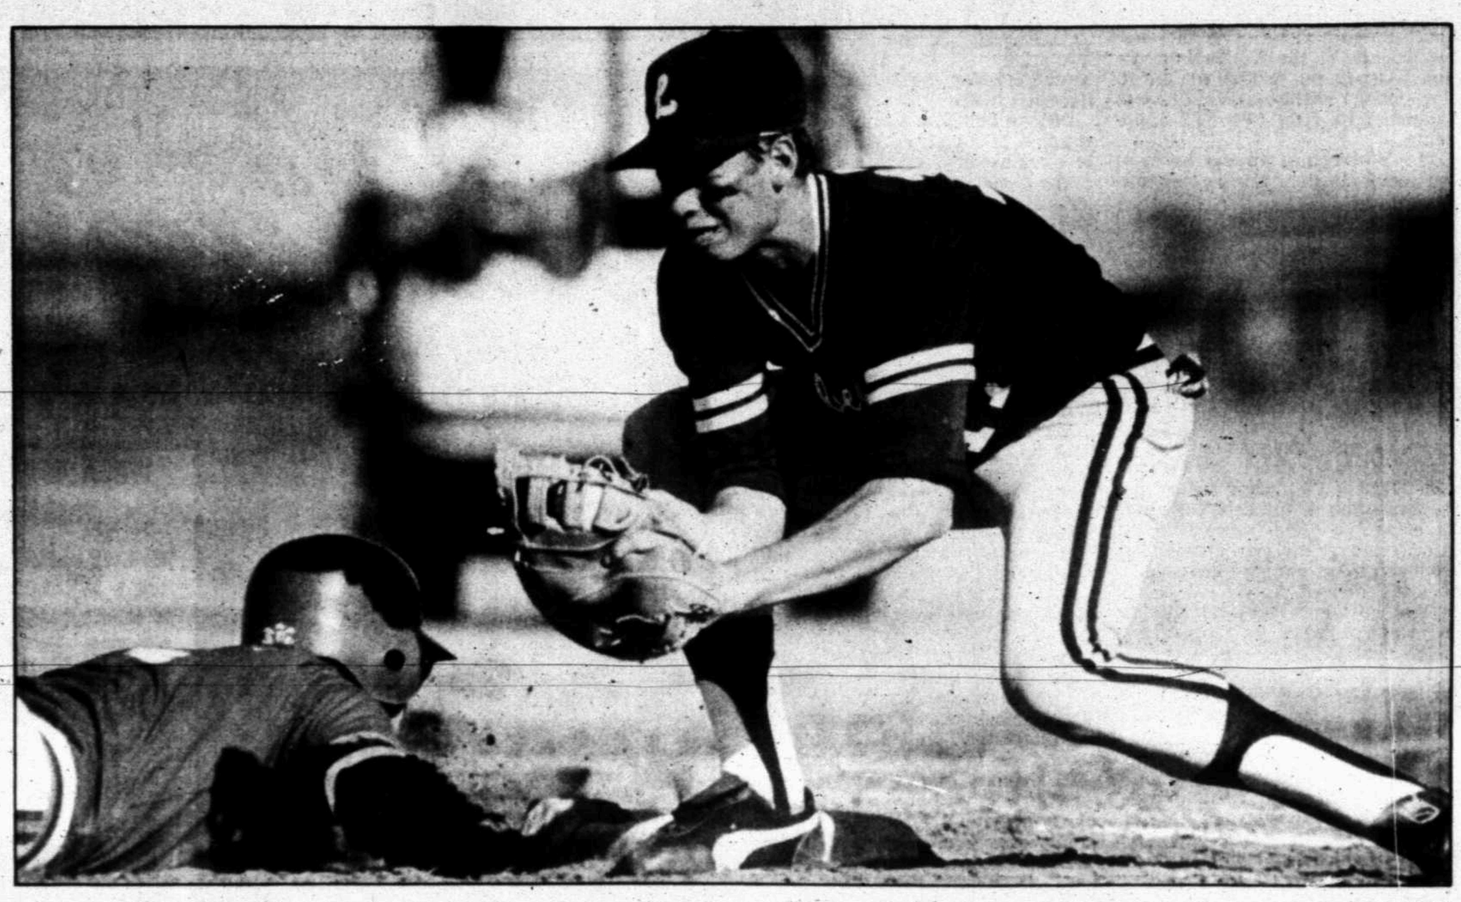

THOUGH THE game wasn't pretty to behold, it did give Lee coach Ernie Johnson a chance to see several different players in a game situation. Of the Rebels to see action, only three have been starters in Lee's three District 4-5A games this season.

Some lineup changes could be in order when the Rebels return to 4-5A action against Odessa Permian Saturday at 2 p.m. in Odessa.

Lee is tied for first place in the district with Midland High at 3-0, 10-4 overall. The Panthers are 2-1, 10-2.

Four of last six NCAA champions still in title hunt

Only North Carolina State, Michigan State failed to qualify

NCAA Tournament

By The Associated Press

The four most recent national college basketball champions who made this year's NCAA tournament still are alive. And they're set to pair off in the regional semifinals.

Of the last six NCAA champions, Michigan State (1979) and North Carolina State (1983) did not qualify for this year's carnival. But Kentucky (1978), Louisville ('80), Indiana ('81) and North Carolina ('82) all are there. The top-ranked Tar Heels meet the unranked Hoosiers tonight in the East Regional at Atlanta, while No. 3 Kentucky hosts new archrival Louisville, ranked 18th, in the Mideast at Lexington.

The other NCAA tournament games tonight pit a pair of unranked teams, Syracuse and Virginia, in the East, and No. 7 Illinois against No. 14 Maryland in the Mideast.

On Friday, it will be No. 2 Georgetown against 10th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas and unranked Dayton vs. No. 13 Washington in the West at Los Angeles. Also, No. 4 DePaul takes on No. 19 Wake Forest and fifth-rated Houston plays No. 17 Memphis State in St. Louis.

THE LAST time North Carolina and Indiana met was for the 1981 title, with the Hoosiers winning 63-50. The Tar Heels are favored this time based on their 28-2 record — including 14-0 in the tough Atlantic Coast Conference — experience and the presence of All-Americans Michael Jordan and Sam Perkins in the lineup. Indiana, 21-8, is a young team which starts three freshmen and finished third in the Big Ten.

"I think we're capable," Tar Heels Coach Dean Smith said in assessing his team, which has been ranked No. 1 for almost the entire season. "But when you get this far, everyone is good.

"The thing that worries me is they're improved," Smith said of how Indiana has played down the stretch. "I'm confident his (Bobby Knight's) teams will always perform well."

The feeling was mutual, according to guard Steve Alford, one of Knight's freshmen.

"We know they're a great team," Alford said. "It's a great opportunity for us to play against them. If we play as well as we can, we feel we can cause them an awful lot of problems."

KENTUCKY AND Louisville did not meet for 24 years but now are playing for the third time in less than a year. Last year, in the Mideast Regional at Knoxville, Tenn., the Cardinals won 80-68 in overtime. At the beginning of this season, in the same building where they'll play tonight, 23,000-seat Rupp Arena, the Wildcats romped 65-44.

"The mystique is out of it now," said Kentucky guard Jim Master. "It seems like every time we turn around, we're going to play them."

"It has to be treated as just a very important tournament game," said Coach Joe B. Hall of the 27-4 Wildcats, champs of the Southeastern Conference. "We've just got to realize we're in a race that involves a lot more distance than just this one turn."

Added Denny Crum, coach of 24-10 Louisville, "It's a different game for both teams. It will be exceptionally emotional because this is the regional semifinals."

Kentucky is led by a fearsome front line of 7-foot Sam Bowie, 6-11 Mel Turpin and 6-8 Kenny Walker. Louisville hopes to counter with a stronger backcourt of Lancaster Gordon and Milt Wagner.

TONIGHT'S OTHER East semifinal — which precedes Indiana-North Carolina — features surprising Virginia, 19-11 in "The Year After Ralph," against Syracuse and its outstanding freshman point guard, Dwayne "Pearl" Washington.

"I think we've proved we are a good basketball team," said Cavaliers Coach Terry Holland. "I felt all along we had a very sound basketball team and if we'd survive the regular season, we'd be prepared for this kind of competition."

The Illinois-Maryland matchup will open the doubleheader at Lexington. The Illini, 25-4 and co-champions of the Big Ten, were impressive in a 64-56 victory over Villanova in the sub-regional and are led by center Efrem Winters and guard Bruce Douglas, who spearheads a fierce man-to-man press. The Terrapins, 24-7, are riding a wave which carried them to their first ACC tournament championship under Coach Lefty Driesell and a win over West Virginia last weekend.

Free rallies Cavaliers to victory over Knicks

NBA Roundup

By The Associated Press

After a 4-for-14 start from the field, World B. Free proved again why he is one of the most dangerous players in basketball in a game's closing minutes.

The New York Knicks, with a five-game winning streak on the line, led 95-90 with three minutes left before Free sank his last five shots to rally the Cleveland Cavaliers to a 100-99 National Basketball Association victory Wednesday night.

All of the baskets came from the 15-20 foot range.

"I say to the other guys, 'Just get out of the way, here I come,' " Free said when asked what he does when he feels a hot streak coming on. "I really struggled in the first half of the game because New York's my home and I was really pressing. I knew my mom was watching."

"If he's on your team, you've got to go with him," Cavaliers coach Tom Nissalke said. "You don't just jerk him if he takes a crazy shot. As long as he works hard, he's in there."

CLEVELAND, WHICH snapped a four-game losing streak, was led in scoring by Cliff Robinson with 24 points, while Free scored 22.

With New York ahead 95-90, Free hit a 15-footer with 2:40 remaining and followed with an 18-foot shot with 1:22 left to pull the Cavaliers within 95-94.

Bernard King, who led the Knicks with 19 points, hit a short hook shot eight seconds later, but Free countered with an 18-foot jumper to cut the deficit to 97-96 with a minute to go.

New York's Ray Williams made a jump shot with 44 seconds left to push the Knicks' lead back to three, but Free tossed in a 20-footer to make it 99-98 at the 31-second mark.

Lakers 123, Kings 116

The first-ever sellout crowd for a Kings game — 17,164 — saw Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Earvin "Magic" Johnson score 24 points apiece for Los Angeles against Kansas City.

The Lakers led 98-78 after three quarters, but Reggie Theus scored 17 of his season-high 36 points in the fourth period for the Kings, cutting the deficit to 118-115.

Bucks 102, Nets 95

Marques Johnson had 23 points and 10 rebounds to help Milwaukee win at New Jersey.

The Nets outscored the Bucks 22-8 to turn a 12-point deficit into an 84-82 lead on a three-point shot by Micheal Ray Richardson, who led New Jersey with 23 points. But Milwaukee scored the next six points, including a tip-in by Johnson, to regain the lead for good.

Pistons 132, Clippers 123

Bill Laimbeer scored 24 points and Kent Benson 23 as Detroit stayed only a game behind Central Division leader Milwaukee by winning at San Diego. The Pistons took the lead for good midway through the first period, but led only 67-65 at half-time. They outscored the Clippers, who got 30 points from Terry Cummings, 34-20 in the third period and led 105-85 early in the final quarter.

Mavericks 102, Hawks 101

Rolando Blackman got the last two of his 30 points on an off-balance 10-footer with two seconds left to give Dallas its victory over Atlanta. The Mavericks, playing before a sellout home crowd of 17,007, trailed by six points with four minutes left. But they pulled within one on a free throw by Mark Aguirre with 34 seconds left.

Nuggets 134, Rockets 125

Kiki Vandeweghe and Dan Issel scored 30 points apiece as Denver beat Houston for its ninth straight home victory. The two teams were tied 80-80 midway through the third quarter before Issel led a 19-10 streak that gave the Nuggets a 99-90 lead after three periods.

Sonics 104, Suns 102

Gus Williams scored 22 points, including six in a row midway through the fourth quarter, to lead Seattle over visiting Phoenix.

Xavier hunting Michigan Wolves

By The Associated Press

Xavier of Ohio, which has a pair of heart-stopping victories in the first two rounds of the National Invitation Tournament, will try tonight to slow down a Michigan team that has squashed its first two NIT opponents.

The Wolverines appear to have two factors in their favor going into tonight's meeting.

First, the game is in Ann Arbor, Mich., which not only could spark the Wolverines, but also could hinder the Musketeers, who are unbeaten at home this season, including two NIT victories, and 4-9 on the road. Second, Michigan is on a roll, having beaten Wichita State and Marquette by 24 and 13 points, respectively, to reach the third round.

"We've been playing very well at home," Michigan Coach Bill Frieder said. "This is a big thing for us. It's the first time in three NIT appearances we've been home for the third-round game. Our attendance has been good and the crowd has been supportive."

"You go where they tell you to go," said Coach Bob Staak of Xavier, which beat Ohio State in overtime and Nebraska by one point in the earlier NIT rounds. "We're looking forward to the challenge."

IN ANOTHER third-round game tonight, Santa Clara will be at Southwestern Louisiana, while Notre Dame is at Pittsburgh and Tennessee at Virginia Tech on Friday. The third-round winners will come to New York for the semifinals and final next week.

NIT Roundup

The Musketeers have 6-foot-8 center Jeff Jenkins, who followed a regular season in which he averaged nearly 17 points per game with 30- and 18-point performances in his first two NIT games.

"Xavier is a good team and has had some impressive victories," Frieder said. "Jenkins is a pro player. He'll go in the first round of the draft. He's a good scorer inside and outside."

Michigan will counter Jenkins with 6-11 forward Tim McCormick and 6-10 center Roy Tarpley.

"We've played against bigger teams all year," Staak said. "We played two physical teams in Ohio State and Nebraska. This is nothing we haven't seen before. We're quicker, and we use that to offset our height disadvantage."

IN TONIGHT'S other game, Santa Clara will be on the road for the third straight time in the NIT. The Broncos beat Oregon 66-53 and then defeated Lamar 76-74, only the second loss in 82 games at home for the Cardinals.

Southwestern Louisiana won both of its previous NIT games by two points over Utah State and in two overtimes against Weber State.

Cooper golfers have big lead going into second round

From Staff Reports

ABILENE— Whether it's due to bad weather, spring fever or duffer's disease, the boys' golf teams at Midland High and Midland Lee are in a precarious position entering the second round of the District 4-5A golf hunt.

Abilene Cooper posted a 295 team total last week in San Angelo in the first date of the district round-robin, and the Cougar junior varsity bested every other 4-5A squad with a 308, so Cooper looks to be difficult to gain ground on as they host this leg of the tour.

San Angelo is currently second in the standings, with Odessa Permian two strokes ahead of Midland High and Abilene High, tied for fourth with 325 totals after opening play. Midland Lee fared no better, and the Rebel linksters are mired in fifth place with a 337 count.

Catching Cooper will take more than just several unplayable lies. Bob Estes and Todd Moore of Cooper own the best scores in medalist play with 73's and teammates Brian Heller and Brian Springer are only a stroke back. Midland High's David Pritchett also carded a first-round 74, keeping MHS closer to the superior Cougars.

The season is still young, this being only the second leg of a five stop tour, but Cooper is deep, strong, and they've been here before. The Cougars are the defending 4-5A champs.

Defending 4A champs embarass MHS, 15-2

From Staff Reports

SNYDER — After the dramatic ending Tuesday against Abilene Cooper, Midland High didn't have anything left for Snyder in a non-district game here Wednesday.

As a result, the defending 4A state champion Snyder Tigers, embarassed 4-5A's Bulldogs, 15-2.

"It's just as I thought it would be. I was hoping we could go over and play but we were tired and sore, emotionally drained," said MHS manager Tim Whalen. "We didn't have any intensity. We couldn't get too fired up after that game against Cooper. The kids weren't thinking about Snyder but more towards the weekend."

And what happens when you don't keep your mind on the game at hand?

"You get your shins kicked," said Whalen. "I was afraid they were going to do that to us. We beat them twice last year and I think they wanted to get back at us. We were the only team to beat them twice all year."

While thinking about this weekend's game, against Odessa High, the Bulldogs were shelled in the third and fourth innings. Already leading 2-0, the Tigers added six runs to their total and came back with five in the two big innings. Just to be on the safe side, the added a final pair in the sixth.

Snyder's runs were scored on 13 hits and eight MHS errors. The Bulldogs managed to score one run in each of the fifth and seventh frames on eight hits and three Snyder errors.

Mike Stanton suffered the loss for Midland High with Doug Daehling relieving in the third. Bollinger took the win for Snyder with relief from Peterson in the fifth.

Sabres beat Canadiens again

By The Associated Press

Don't ask the Montreal Canadiens about the approaching playoffs right now. They'd rather not think about the prospect of having to beat the Buffalo Sabres to advance on the road to the Stanley Cup.

The Sabres beat the Canadiens for the eighth time in as many tries this season, riding a stingy defense and balanced scoring to a 4-2 victory Wednesday night. If the standings in the National Hockey League's Adams Division stay the same for the remaining 10 days of the season, the Sabres and Canadiens will meet in the opening round of the playoffs.

And, if Buffalo's domination of the once-mighty Canadiens this season wasn't enough, the Sabres swept Montreal out of the playoffs last spring, allowing only two goals in three contests.

"It sure doesn't make it rosy," said Montreal captain Bob Gainey, whose team was swept in a season series by a divisional foe for the first time ever. "The team has played well but we have to break that streak. It's up to us to break it. They haven't taken us lightly in 11 games."

"I think they're playing a lot better defensively," said a respectful Buffalo defenseman Phil Housley. "You just have to treat them like any other team. You've got to work hard. There's no tricks. We just outworked them."

Buffalo also has outscored Montreal 43-23 this season. The Sabres lead second-place Boston by six points in the Adams with the Bruins holding a game in hand.

"If we want to play them, we've got to get first place," said defenseman Bill Hajt. "It's been a combination of things, but our goaltending has been tremendous against them in the eight-game stretch."

Montreal's Mats Naslund got the only goal of the first period, then goals by Dave Andreychuk and Gilles Hamel gave the Sabres a 2-1 lead after two. Lindy Ruff made it 3-1 when he beat Montreal goalie Steve Penney, making his NHL debut, following a scramble early in the third period.

Steve Shutt cut the deficit to 4-2 when he fired a 20-foot slapshot by Buffalo's Bob Sauve, then Brent Peterson shoved a rebound under Penney with four minutes to go to clinch it.

Elsewhere, it was Edmonton 5, Hartford 3; Chicago 6, Winnipeg 2; Pittsburgh 3, Toronto 1, and Washington 5, Minnesota 1.

Oilers 5, Whalers 3

Glenn Anderson scored four goals, giving him 52 for the season and providing the Oilers with their third 50-goal man this season, a league record. Wayne Gretzky, who had one assist against visiting Hartford, and Jari Kurri, who notched his 51st goal, also have reached the half-century mark.

Anderson scored the final three goals of his big game in the third period, including the third with 1:26 to go to break a 3-3 tie and the fourth with three seconds left into an empty net. He also missed a wide open net in the second period and tumbled into the boards.

"I lost both my contact lenses on that play and I had to get another set," Anderson said. "That's the third time this season I've lost a lens but the first time both have popped out."

Black Hawks 6, Jets 2

Troy Murray had two goals and an assist as the Black Hawks returned home from an all-losing six-game road trip to record only their second victory this month. Tom Lysiak and Murray each scored shorthanded goals within a 34-second span of the final period.

Chicago moved five points ahead of Toronto in the race for the final playoff spot in the Norris Division. Each team has five games left.

Penguins 3, Maple Leafs 1

The host Penguins put on one of their best defensive displays of the season and dealt a crushing blow to Toronto's playoff hopes. The Leafs, winless in five games, had only 25 shots as Pittsburgh collected its second win in a row for only the third time all season.

"Maybe we're not good enough," mused Toronto Coach Mike Nykoluk. "It's going to be hard, really. Chicago still has a pretty decent team. We had a good chance about 10 games ago but we couldn't put together the three or four straight wins that we needed."

Capitals 5, North Stars 1

Al Jensen, making his second start since recovering from a back injury that sidelined him for nearly two months, stopped 21 shots to record his first victory since Jan. 20. Bob Gould scored twice for the host Capitals, who crept within a point of the first-place Islanders in the Patrick sector. Minnesota's eight-game undefeated string was snapped.

"The team played well in front of me," said Jensen, who entered the game with a 2.96 goals-against average, third best in the NHL. Teammate Pat Riggin leads with 2.83. "I was able to see the puck and they didn't give up any rebounds, or anything. We had to be at the top of our game, and we were."

Adjustments needed in move from Yankees to Rangers

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Coming from the glitter of the New York Yankees where he was a World Series hero to the Texas Rangers forced Bucky Dent to make adjustments.

He had to learn to tolerate country-western music in the dressing room and roommate Bill Stein taught him the two-step.

But it took awhile to feel down-home.

"It's a big difference when you go from a town like New York where for five years you are right in the thick of things and come to a ball club like Texas that really hasn't challenged for a division in a long time," Dent said.

"I think a player has to be able to accept the changes. In today's time, you could be with one club today and gone tomorrow for actually no reason. Players have to gear themselves to possibly being traded in their careers and going to some place that is totally different from where they were."

Therefore, Dent has placed his Yankee past, including his three run homer that won the AL East title and his 1978 MVP trophy, behind him and looked at building a new tradition with the Rangers.

"I spent six pretty good years over there and I don't have any bitter feelings at all," he said. "I enjoy playing against them now because they are the Yankees."

Dent learned to enjoy the local customs–most of them.

"My roommate (Bill Stein) got me out there and showed me how to two-step," Dent said. "I kind of like that. But I don't do Skol. I don't go for all that spitting."

Dent likes the relaxed atmosphere of the Rangers compared to the crisis-per-minute Yankees.

"It's been one of my best spring camps in a long time as far as doing your work real quick and getting it over with. I think that's the way it should be done."

Although the Rangers faded in the second half of last season after leading the AL West at the All-Star break, Dent didn't see the season as a washout.

"I think we lost 58 games by two or less runs and that's pretty good ball," Dent said. "We've got good pitching and outstanding defense. We just didn't score a lot of runs.

"It put a lot of pressure on our defense and our bullpen. This year, they've acquired Gary Ward in the off-season and hopefully we'll put more runs on the board and not lose so many close ball games.

Three seeds ousted from Cuore Cup

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Three seeded players were eliminated in the third day of the $365,000 Cuore Cup tennis tournament, while Swedish entries were expected to be the protagonists of second-round matches.

Guillermo Vilas, the third-seeded Argentinian, surrendered Wednesday to the powerful shots of Australian John Fitzgerald and to pain caused by a sprained stomach muscle.

Vilas, 31, who was injured during an exhibition against Ecuadorian Andres Gomez last Saturday, was trounced 0-6, 3-6 in about one hour at Milan's indoor sports palace.

Unseeded Fitzgerald faces Italy's Gianni Ocleppo Thursday in a match described as a rehearsal of the forthcoming Italy-Australia Davis Cup clash.

The lackluster, resigned showing of Kriek, who was quickly downed 6-0, 6-2, angered the audience.

Hlasek, a 19-year-old resident of Zurich, became the first quarterfinalist of the week-long tournament awarding a first prize of $70,000.

U.S. Veteran Vitas Gerulaitis and France's Henry Leconte were other early qualifiers to the quarterfinals.

Gerulaitis defeated fifth-seeded Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia 7-5, 3-6, 6-3 with a string of fine volleys and passing shots.

Leconte, a star of the French Davis Cup team, breezed past Shlomo Glickstein of Israel, 7-5, 6-3.

Top-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden is going to clash with Leconte if he overcomes temperamental Romanian veteran Ilie Nastase tonight.

Another second-round match pitted against sixth-seeded Swede Anders Jarryd and his countryman Stefan Edberg.

Wilander rated Jarryd as favorite. But Edberg, who dominated the major junior tournaments last year, has class and determination for an upset win.

Other second-round matches scheduled included South African Kevin Curren against American Steve Denton and American Mark Dickson against Brad Drewett of Australia.

Hogs outscore SW Baptist by 54-4 total count

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The Arkansas Razorback baseball team swept a non-conference doubleheader against Southwest Baptist on Wednesday by 21-0 and 33-4.

In his first game of the season, sophomore Fred Faust pitched a five-inning no-hitter in the first game.

Catcher Phil Laws had two RBIs.

By the fifth inning, the score was 33-4, and Southwest Baptist forfeited the rest of the game on the 10-run rule.

The Bolivar, Mo., team waived the 10-run rule in the second game. Arkansas' 33-4 victory set a team record for the Razorbacks, and set another record with 32 hits.

The Razorbacks are now 20-4 for the season.

Texas Tech 20, Sul Ross 4

LUBBOCK (AP) — The Texas Tech Red Raiders pounded out 22 hits, including six home runs, to defeat the Sul Ross State Loboes 20-4 in a non-conference game Wednesday.

The Raiders, who now stand at 17-12, have hit 59 home runs this season through 29 games to set a new school standard. Sul Ross is now 3-19.

Texas A&M 1-5, Minnesota 0-3

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The Texas A&M Aggies swept a doubleheader from Minnesota 1-0, 5-3 in non-conference action Wednesday.

The nightcap victory gave the Aggies their 20th win as the Aggies prepare for Friday's Southwest Conference opener with Texas Christian University.

Shriver survives pain, beats White

DALLAS (AP) — Second-seed Pam Shriver, in obvious pain, overcame a sore shoulder Wednesday night to beat Wendy White, 6-4, 6-3, highlighting first-round matches in the $150,-000 Virginia Slims of Dallas.

Shriver, 21, of Lutherville, Md., has suffered arm and shoulder troubles throughout her career and never have they been more bother. The world's third-ranked player lacked her usually overpowering serve and was forced to rely on her ground strokes.

White, 23, of Atlanta, Ga., made too many unforced errors to capitalize.

Other winners Wednesday were Sandy Collins of Odessa, Kathy Jordan of King of Prussia, Pa.; and Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia.

The audience was awed into silence during the first movement of Dvorak's A-major Piano Quintet, Opus 81. Appreciative murmurings could be heard during the brief pause between the first and second movements. Thus began the pattern which continued throughout the four movements until at the piece's close, bravos rang out in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

The Thouvenel String Quartet and guest artist Anne Epperson played as one entity. Nothing but an encore would satisfy the audience. Cellist Jeff Levenson said, as they sat down again, "This is going to sound familiar."

It did, but no one cared.

Best known for his Ninth Symphony "From the New World," Antonin Dvorak (1841-1904), is considered, along with Bedrich Smetana, the founder of the Czech national school of music. The music in his chamber works, as well as in such orchestral works as the "Carnival" overture (1892), is lyrical and powerful. This piece is no exception and requires absolute precision among five players.

The Thouvenel and Miss Epperson received a standing ovation. This and the bravos were in response to the Dvorak, performed after intermission.

The opening selection, Quartet in C minor, Opus 51, No. 1, by Johannes Brahms (1833-1897), did not seem to flow with the same grace, nor was it executed as precisely. However, what may actually have happened is that the playing of the Brahms paled when compared against the playing of the Dvorak. Those attending Thouvenel concerts are used to hearing the quartet perform as one, but the addition of a fifth player added a new dimension. An electrifying intensity came, not only from the players, but from the audience as well during the Dvorak.

Although the composers' musical style is not startlingly different, the audience's response was. The Brahms was savored, the Dvorak inhaled.

Miss Epperson received her musical training at Juilliard School of Music in New York City as well as completing her graduate degree at the University of Southern California. While she was in Los Angeles, she was asked to be the pianist for the master classes of the world-renowned violinist Jascha Heifetz.

Miss Epperson, who is married to violinist and conductor Sergiu Luca, has been associated with the North Carolina School for the Arts, the University of Illinois, the Cincinnati Conservatory and the Aspen Music Festival. She is on the music faculty at Rice University and plays with The Canterbury Trio.

Miss Epperson has a light, almost airy touch, that is, at the same time, deft and sure. She is mistress of her music, but never attacks nor dominates it in the aggressive manner of some virtuosi.

This reviewer feels certain that aficionados of the Thouvenel would welcome a return appearance by Miss Epperson with the Quartet.

Norman Lear back in series television

By JERRY BUCK

"'Pablo' is a knockoff of life," says writer Norman Lear, seen here recently during an interview in Hollywood. Lear is back to writing for television with a new series, "a.k.a. PABLO."

Norman Lear is back in television.

Lear, the man who stood television on its ear a decade ago with such shows as "All in the Family," "Maude," "Good Times" and "The Jeffersons," is back with a contentious new series for ABC called "a.k.a. Pablo."

"Pablo," a half-hour comedy about a rising young Mexican-American comedian (played by Paul Rodriguez) and his family, doesn't break new ground as "All in the Family" did in 1971. Pablo isn't as controversial as Archie or Maude; television has changed too much for that. Still, it is about a family in turmoil. Comedian Paul (a.k.a., also known as, Pablo) Rivera's act is based on ethnic jokes, which sends his proud, conservative father into a rage.

Lear has other pilots in the works, but this is his first series since he walked away from television in 1978 with the intention of writing a movie called "Religion." He never wrote the movie, instead founding People for the American Way to counter the religious right movement.

"WHILE I WAS gone the world has turned 120 degrees," he says. "There's that much more to write about." He pauses as a puff of smoke rises above him and is caught in a ray from the skylight of his spacious office. "Actually, I don't feel I've been away. I just haven't been doing weekly television."

He walks to a wall decorated with framed maxims, points to one and reads, "Happiness is the exercise of one's vital abilities along lines of excellence."

"That's Aristotle. So my vital ability is communications. In the five years I was away from television I was developing the People for the American Way. That was an exercise in communications — talking to people and pulling them together. The organization might just as well have been a miniseries.

"Some of what we feared five years ago has been realized. The networks have an increased fixation with the ratings. Five years ago the networks bought 13 shows. Now you've got to be instant success. That's antithetical to innovation. If you need to succeed instantly you knock off something that's already working. You copy somebody else's successful show."

LEAR ISN'T ready to knock off somebody else's success. He has been one of the most innovative and creative writers in the history of the medium. His contribution to television was recently recognized when he was inducted as a charter member of the Hall of Fame by the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

He smiles wryly. "'Pablo' is a knockoff of life," he says. "A knockoff of the immigrant experience, not of another television show. The emergence of the Latino culture in our consciousness is new. That wasn't here five years ago." (According to the 1980 census there are 14.6 million Hispanics in the United States.)

He believes the audience will be able to identify with the Rivera family, just as it did earlier with blacks on "Good Times" and "The Jeffersons."

"People are people," he says. "What people respond to are performers and relationships. Husbands, wives, mothers, and daughters are all the same. If 'Pablo' works it's because we all came from an immigrant experience. If we didn't personally experience it our parents or grandparents did. This family might as well be Irish or Italian or German or Jewish.

"THEY ARE NOT in tune with the primary culture. One of their members is starting to make it. It's like 'Golden Boy' or 'Humoresque' or 'Body and Soul' or 'The Jazz Singer.' I think people can relate to that."

Lear says the concept for the show had been in the back of his mind for a number of years. Originally, he thought of basing it around a black comedian or a woman. He had Suzanne Somers in mind at one time and another time he suggested to Rita Moreno after she did "The Ritz" that she play a Puerto Rican actress who plays a Puerto Rican caricature in a show-within-a-show concept.

"It's akin to when Jimmy Walker played J.J. on 'Good Times,'" he says. "He was in a position to do many things for people, but at the same time people said J.J. was a caricature. I thought something like that would be good for Rita Moreno or Suzanne Somers, who plays the dumb blonde but is successful at it. When I saw Paul Rodriguez at the Comedy Store I thought this was an opportunity. Mexican-American groups attack his portrayal. We want to examine the impact of the media on the Latino culture."

DESPITE HIS enormous success as a producer, and, in fact, an entrepreneur of television, Lear says he still considers himself "primarily a writer." He says, "I don't think of myself as anything but a writer, although I do produce."

Lear also has a movie coming up for ABC called "Heartsound," based on a book about his cousin. James Garner and Mary Tyler Moore star.

Boy Scouts display Art Roundup

Proceeds from the sale go to the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch, Fort Davis. Created in 1947, this winter and summer Boy Scout camp was built by volunteers working weekends to erect the structures now found on the 6,000-acre property.

Art work for the show was provided by Midlanders Carol and Pete Swain, owners of The Hanging Tree Gallery, Kerrville, who first began putting on a benefit for the Boy Scouts about eight years ago.

All work is for sale. The paintings can be viewed during office hours.

Western art sale scheduled for Saturday

"This significant Western art event is in keeping with an expressed purpose of the library — to promote and preserve Southwestern heritage," says Cindy Burleson, administrative assistant at the Haley.

"Another purpose is to raise funds for the acquisition of fine art and rare books for the library collections, and the show has been successful on both counts throughout its history."

Directed by Jim Clark of Scottsdale, Ariz., the sale features 150 works by 60 artists. For ticket information call the library at 682-5785, or go by 1805 West Indiana Ave.

"Those attending will have the opportunity to see and to buy the very best examples of current Western painting and sculpture," says Ms. Burleson.

In conjunction with the art show and sale, a special exhibit of paintings and sculpture by early Western artists is hanging at the library through this weekend.

Indians prolific potters

From the time of Christ until the late 13th century, three major Indian cultures of what is now the American Southwest flourished almost simultaneously. Their most prolific artistic legacy was pottery.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Travelers need vaccinations for polio, measles

Dear Dr. Solomon: What's the scoop on being vaccinated if you intend to travel? Is it best to play safe and get everything, or are there only certain vaccinations that are considered necessary? — Eddie, Milton, Penn.

Dear Eddie: Dr. Peter T. Frame, of the University of Cincinnati Medical Center, recommends that people planning to travel overseas consider a number of vaccinations, including polio and measles; however, the specific vaccinations a person receives should depend upon where he or she intends to travel, and an evaluation of the risks vs. the benefits involved in getting a particular vaccine.

For example, smallpox vaccine is almost never indicated. Similarly, vaccination for cholera is not given since Americans almost never get cholera even when they travel in countries where the disease is prevalant. On the other hand, measles and polio vaccinations are important. There have been reports of adult Americans who returned home from trips to foreign countries with polio.

The typhoid vaccine illustrates the importance of evaluating the potential benefits of a particular vaccine against its probable side effects. According to Dr. Frame, the risk of typhoid for tourists who confine their eating to the larger hotels is relatively very low.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My nephew is taking phenobarbital and it is really doing the job. But you have always said that any drug can have side effects, and I'd like to know if this is true of phenobarbital. — Ms. J.A., Brighton, Mass.

Dear Ms. A.: Phenobarbital is no exception to the rule that any drug, no matter how valuable, can cause side effects. The most common side effects associated with phenobarbital therapy are behavior problems such as hyperactivity, irritability, and sleep disturbances.

Some researchers have maintained that phenobarbital interferes with learning, but other studies contradict these findings.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My boyfriend came down with a case of scabies and I would like to know if it is possible to get scabies in any way other than by having sexual intercourse. — Deborah, Silver Spring, Md.

Dear Deborah: Scabies used to be considered a sexually transmitted disease, and in men it often affects the penis and scrotum; however, scabies can be spread through many forms of contact. It most commonly occurs within families, with children the first to be affected. Treatment, therefore, should include all members of the family as well as other close contacts who might develop the disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I want to increase the amount of calcium I take in in order to avoid bone loss. How much milk would I have to drink to meet the requirement for calcium? — Florence, Rochester, N.Y.

Dear Florence: According to Dr. Michael Freedman, of the New York University-Bellevue Hospital Center, one gram of calcium daily is the current recommendation. That is the equivalent of four glasses of milk.

If you are concerned about having too much fat in your diet, try low-fat milk and other low-fat dairy products.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every once in a while my doctor will tell me to cut down on red meats and eggs — not to cut them out entirely, but to use them less often than I usually do. He says it is good for the heart. Is there any real proof of this? — Herman, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

Dear Herman: Diets that are high in saturated fats can increase the risk of heart attack. A study of vegetarians and of the populations of the Mediterranean countries, where meat consumption is low, shows a decreased risk of myocardial infarction. A recent study shows that decreased fat in your diet decreases your chances of getting a heart attack. Your physician is therefore recommending moderation, which is what I do with my own patients.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine is singing the praises of herbal teas because she says they permit her to avoid caffeine. Since herbal teas are sold in health food stores, does that mean they are safe? If they don't contain caffeine, what kinds of things do they have that give them their taste? — Mindy, Teaneck, N.J.

Dear Mindy: There really isn't enough known about herbal teas to state definitely that they are safe to use. Herbal teas contain a number of compounds that may affect the human body. I can understand why a person would want to avoid caffeine, but we know much more about caffeine than about the chemicals in herbal teas.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I work as a secretary in an office where the coffee machine is the most important piece of equipment. I sometimes think that if it ever broke down, the busjness would close. Is it a common practice for hot-shot executives to drown themselves in coffee? It almost seems as if the cup is attached to their hand because I never see any of them without it. — Mabel, Port Washington, N.Y.

Dear Mabel: The results of a study of college students may provide at least a partial response to your question. The study revealed that type A students consumed about 50 percent more coffee than did type B students. Whether these results can be applied to older people in the business world, such as those you work with, is not clear.

For Roger, Philadelphia, Penn.: Older people not only require less food to maintain their weight as they age, they are also often less active. Such individuals should reduce thier caloric intake to avoid obesity.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

San Antonio revives streetcars

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The city of San Antonio has reached back to the 1930s and revived its colorful gleaming wood and green streetcars to entice the lucrative tourist trade and boost downtown-area ridership of its metropolitan bus line.

The 20 brass-trimmed trolleys, authentic reproductions of the streetcars that trundled down city streets more than 50 years ago, have been in operation since June.

"This was all done after consultation with city groups and members of the conservation society," said Wayne Cook, general manager of VIA Metropolitan Transit, the city's bus company.

"The response has been fabulous," he said. "Ridership in that area is up 52 percent and still climbing. We thought it'd be a novelty item and wear off, but it's still going up slowly."

Passengers who purchase tickets on that weekend shuttle, called "The Greyline Express," are allowed unlimited reboardings of the buses throughout the day or transfer to any other VIA streetcar or regular bus route.

"It's an easy way for people to get around the city and be able to linger wherever they want," Cook said. "You aren't stuck on the shuttle seeing things you don't want to see."

A streetcar trundles down a road in San Antonio recently. The city's transit company has put about 20 streetcars in its downtown fleet, which are authentic reproductions of the trolleys used in San Antonio more than 50 years ago.

AP Laserphoto

The public's response has been good, he said, even though the owner of an independent tourist trolley business is less than thrilled.

Cook said about two years passed between the time VIA dreamed up the idea of reviving the streetcars and actually got one of the diesel-powered, rubber-tired vehicles on the street.

But the company lucked into a piece of good fortune by hiring Chance Manufacturing Co. Inc. of Wichita, Kan., to build the streetcars, he said.

"Normally, a bus company would have no interest in making something like this at all, but another division of Chance makes carnival rides," Cook said. "They've even started a new line now called Alamo City Streetcars."

Each streetcar cost about $127,000, not too much more than the $115,000 price tag for a conventional bus, Cook said.

The streetcars, which have open-air sides, can operate year-round with the help of removable plastic shields, he said.

The last streetcar rumbled down San Antonio streets in 1933, the victim of changing times and a fickle public.

"Cars were coming in and ridership was slumping throughout mass transit," Cook said. "It just kind of faded out."

The city of Austin currently is testing a simulated trolley car called the Armadillo Express. Fort Worth boasts some buses painted to look like trolleys, and Dallas' downtown transit features pink vehicles decked out with bunny ears called Hop-a-Buses.

But Cook said San Antonio's cars are unique because of their faithful link to the past.

"I think they add to the unique charm of the city," Cook said.

One VIA employee found the vehicles so charming that she fulfilled her streetcar desire and got married on one, he said.

Sandwich shop chain has beef with Wendy's over commercial

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A sandwich shop chain says it has a beef with Wendy's over the popular TV commercial in which actress Clara Peller asks: "Where's the beef?"

Suburpia Submarine Sandwich Shoppes Inc. claims its own ad — in which the question "Where's the Meat?" was asked — was the forerunner of the Wendy's spot.

Both commercials had the same producer, Joe Sedelmaier of Chicago, said Suburpia President William Drilias, who has written a complaint to Wendy's, of Dublin, Ohio, and its New York ad agency, Dancer Fitzgerald Sample Inc.

"Compensation for your appropriation of our award-winning commercial is due," Drilias said.

Francis J. Mooney Jr., senior vice president for business and legal affairs at Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, responded that Suburpia's claim "is based neither upon the facts nor the law."

The Suburpia ad, which ran in the late 1970s, showed a man ordering a cheeseburger from a clown-faced machine, which then served the sandwich on the clown's tongue. The customer viewed the small patty and asked: "Where's the meat?"

Court not likely to overrule THFC on new facility

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

State officials doubt Travis County district court will rule in favor of American Medical Corp. on a suit the firm filed almost two years ago to reverse approval of another psychiatric hospital to serve Midland and Odessa. The hearing on the suit is scheduled for May 11.

American Medical Corp., the Tennessee-based owner of Midland's Parkview Hospital, was denied a $500,000 conversion of Parkview into a psychiatric hospital. As a result, the company sued Southwest Health, Inc., of Arlington.

The two hospitals and Midland Memorial Hospital were joined in a battle for psychiatric and drug abuse facilities before the Texas Health Facilities Commission (THFC) in April 1982.

The THFC approved Southwest Health, Inc.'s certificate of need application for a $3.9 million 60-bed psychiatric and chemical abuse facility in early July 1982. At that time, MMH's application for a $3.4 million 50-bed chemical dependency facility also was approved.

SOUTHWEST HEALTH'S facility, to be called West Plains, will be built on 10 acres of land west of Midland Regional Airport at the northwest corner of the intersection of FM 1788 and Highway 80. MMH's Behavioral Health Center will be constructed on a 10-acre tract of land valued at $1 million and donated by Scharbauer Brothers and Co. in February 1983.

MMH's certificate of need application is not being contested by Parkview, according to Dick Liley, Parkview administrator. But the hospital is named as a party in the suit against the THFC's approval of West Plains because they were joined in the THFC hearings.

Meanwhile, West Plains, confident the THFC's opinion won't be reversed, continues with the planning and development of its hospital, with construction possibly beginning this summer.

Healthcare International Inc., an Austin-based health care corporation, was selected to manage and develop West Plains. According to Diane McIver, Healthcare International project manager, "We're still waiting on a ruling by the Travis County court."

"The bottom line, as I understand it, is (Parkview) wants the whole proceedings to return to the THFC," she said.

THAT'S NOT VERY likely according to Carol Daniels, THFC deputy administrator. Since at least 1980, she remembers only one case being brought back to the health commission, she said.

"The bottom line, as I understand it, is (Parkview) wants the whole proceedings to return to the THFC."
—Diane McIver of Healthcare Interntional

"Once those things go into the court system, we're not really involved in them," Ms. Daniels said. "And the court has a lot of leeway when doing a review of an administrative decision."

But Steve Martin, assistant attorney general defending the THFC in the upcoming hearing, said it would be unlikely for the court to overturn the commisson's opinion.

"It's pretty unusual," he said. "Percentage-wise, I don't know. But we haven't been overturned on anything that I can remember. It is real common for parties to appeal decisions because there is so much money already tied up in it."

"Who wants to be the first?" asked Ms. McIver.

Although preparation on West Plains would not have to be refinanced if the procedures returned to the THFC, Ms. McIver said legal fees could be costly. Also, she added, the architectural designs and purchase of the land already have been made.

According to Martin, the Travis County district court will review records of the THFC hearings and attorneys from the pasties involved will make statements and answer questions during the May hearing.

"Generally, there is no new evidence introduced and, depending on how complex the case is, the hearings usually last about an hour and a half to four hours," he said.

"WE'RE VERY confident in the strength of our application," Ms. McIver said.

West Plains's certificate of need allocated 20 beds for adults with psychiatric problems, 20 beds for adolescents with psychiatric problems and 20 beds for adults with substance abuse problems.

Drug abuse is not a "primary diagnosis" with adolescents, Ms. McIver said, but most young people with psychiatric problems have experience with drugs and alcohol and are treated accordingly.

Two dogs stumble into asphalt pit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two wandering dogs stumbled onto a shallow asphalt pit and, like bees in molasses, couldn't get out on their own.

One died.

"This is the survivor," Debra Shock said of her brown-eyed border collie, 3-year-old Mischief. The dog was snuggled in a corner but later moved around, stepped outside and wagged her once-bushy tail.

After most of the asphalt had been removed from Mischief by a veterinarian, she took on a mangy look. "They had to shave her," Mrs. Shock said. "They had to yank hair off of her."

"Her tail was like a fan," Mrs. Shock said. "Her hair was good (thick and long). That's pretty much what saved her. She had more hair coyer...She's puffy (now). She has sores. She has blisters."

Tuffi, Mischief's 4½-month-old running companion, wasn't so fortunate. A Labrador retriever, he had short hair and didn't have the protection which Mischief's thick coat afforded her. The pup was frozen in the asphalt; about 90 percent of his body was covered. Mischief, who didn't sink so deeply, was "able to look around" while she was stuck in the mire.

LAST WEEKEND, while the Shocks and their son, James Michael, 2, were in Lubbock, the two dogs got out of their fenced-in back yard in south Midland after Sunday's brisk wind apparently blew the gate open. When the Shocks returned home Sunday afternoon, the dogs were gone. They searched until nightfall that day and the next day and, late Monday afternoon, found the dogs whimping and bogged down in asphalt dregs in a Midland County yard near the county barn about a half mile from their home. The dogs evidently went under or over a fallen fence and happened onto the spreading blops of asphalt, which was the dregs from county road-paving equipment.

"She (Mischief) was out there for 24 hours," Mrs. Shock, 22, surmised. "It was knee-deep. I don't know how she made it."

"This dog has been bathed in kerosene," she said. "We're not sure she's going to come out of it. You see, tar is toxic."

Her real fear, though, is what could have happened to children who might have happened onto the yard and into the asphalt, stumbled and got stuck.

"With the damage it did to the dog, I don't think a small child could go through what she has."

"IT'S A HAZARD," her husband Jim, 23, said of the shallow pit. "It's our fault the dogs got out; I guess." He expressed apprehension over what could have happened. "Kids can go anywhere a dog can."

After the Shocks found their dogs, a passer-by, Francisco Saenz, helped Shock pull the dogs from the mire, pitched sand into the bed of his pickup truck, loaded Mischief and Tuffi and drove them to the Permian Basin Emergency Veterinary Clinic near Odessa. "He was so sweet; I can't thank him enough," Mrs. Shock said of Saenz.

There, Dr. Ken Sweeney sedated the dogs. He and his aides immediately went to work on Mischief. They used scissors and petroleum distillates, such as Bug & Tar Remover, to remove the asphalt from Mischief and worked on her throughout the night.

Tuffi, who was more heavily covered with asphalt than Mischief, was going into shock. "He was suffering so much," Mrs. Shock said. "He was in so much pain...It wouldn't have been right to make him suffer through that." That night, she gave Sweeney permission to administer euthanasia to the pup. The veterinarian said Tuffi was in the beginning stages of systemic toxicity apparently due to the cresol in the asphalt. The oil was absorbed through his skin.

"I'VE SEEN some dogs that have fallen into crude oil," Sweeney said. But the asphalt-covered Mischief was "a lot tougher to get cleaned up. It was hard to remove." He said the dogs were "fortunate they didn't get any over their noses or much in their mouths."

Mischief is surviving, Tuffi is out of pain and the pit is now buried.

The asphalt pit was covered with caliche Wednesday after County Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders called Albert Stewart, superintendent of the county's road and bridge department.

Jury finds Odessa man innocent in 1981 murder

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — An all-white Ector County jury emerged from more than three hours of deliberation Wednesday night with a verdict of innocence for a 21-year-old black Odessan charged with murder.

The two-day trial of Michael Gordon, 21 — who had been in jail since his arrest in December 1983 for the November 1981 killing of 26-year-old Yolanda Huxley — ended shortly after 9 p.m. Wednesday in the 161st District Court of Judge R.L. McKim.

Gordon had been indicted for the 1981 killing. Pathology reports showed Ms. Huxley's death was caused when she was beaten and then run over by a vehicle inducing her to suffocate in her own vomit. Gordon was arrested after the state's only witness claiming to be at the scene came forward.

Daniel Phillips testified he and Gordon had been present at the scene near a pump jack in southwest Ector County. He said Gordon had raped the victim and struck her in the head. The head injuries as Phillips described them showed up in the pathology reports.

Phillips — with a past prison record — is serving a five-year sentence for four offenses, including a savage beating and robbery of the 83-year-old wife of a former county chief probation officer.

Defense attorney Michael McLeaish added up the charges for which Phillips is serving five years and it totaled 149 years had all the sentences been served consecutively. The other charges were possession of heroin and two burglaries.

"The true losers, if you return a guilty verdict against this man, will be the citizens of Ector County," said McLeaish. "The true winner will be Daniel Phillips."

Both McLeaish and co-counsel Tony Chavez, waving color photos of the beaten woman from the aggravated robbery as they called for acquittal during final arguments, suggested that Phillips probably was Ms. Huxley's killer. Gordon was tried on the basis of a Texas law which makes accomplices equally prosecutable.

The state's other key witness, a woman who is a police informant, said during Tuesday's testimony that Gordon had come to her house and admitted raping and killing a Mexican girl. While the defense stressed the woman and Gordon were enemies since the defendant had turned in the woman and her husband for possession of stolen property, the state entered as evidence a photo showing the woman performing oral sex on Gordon.

Ms. Huxley's nude and beaten body was found Nov. 3, 1981, by an oilfield worker. Phillips testified that several men, including John and Lawrence Peterson and Michael Rheams, were also at the scene. He said John Peterson — who appeared before a Midland federal grand jury Wednesday concerning an FBI investigation into the burning of the O'Michael Building — drove the vehicle which ran over Ms. Huxley as he, Rheams and Gordon were leaving the scene.

Both Petersons, along with Phillips, are in prison. Rheams is dead, with Odessan Charlie Garrett serving 40 years for that murder.

The defense moved for a mistrial earlier Wednesday when an Ector County Sheriff's deputy admitted talking with a juror in the case.

The integrity of a jury is protected under Texas law, with judges routinely instructing panel members not to discuss their case with anyone during the trial.

The defense on Wednesday twice called for an instructed verdict acquitting Gordon, questioning whether the state's case warranted any further proceeding.

Their sole witness was a female employee of the same company where Rheams was employed. She presented records which showed he was at work during the time Phillips testified he, Rheams and Gordon were present at the crime scene. As driller of the crew, Rheams signed the work reports himself.

An inspector for the sheriff's department said Phillips had been able to lead him to the scene and point it out on the map, although his testimony indicated the crime had occurred after dark in a remote part of the county.

Admitting his witnesses were "not perfect," prosecutor Anthony Foster pointed out, "Murder does not happen in front of the Baptist minister usually. Usually, you have other criminals out there."

He denied the state had withheld any witnesses, emphasizing that when the body was found, there were no clothes at the scene to test or use as evidence. The only physical evidence was a photo of the body.

District Attorney Mike Holmes has indicated that future indictments may be sought in connection with Ms. Huxley's death.

Stress: No. 1 killer of prime-time people

The ultimate secret of longevity is to be laid-back. You could be the oldest living denizen in the poor house.

Even so, you'd be talking about cutting the mustard. But, you wouldn't be doing much outside of breathing, hoping the emphysema retards, taking a slow stroll down the street, waiting for the lucky lottery ticket and wondering why you're old when you feel so young but still creep around. You look at your hand and recall what Norman Lear once said: "I've lived long enough to see my Dad's hand coming out of my coat sleeve." If you want to make a stab at living forever, try halt. Don't get too *h*ungry, too *a*ngry, too *l*onely or too *t*ired.

After that, you might work on controlling the killer of prime-time people: stress.

There's no advocating the doing away with stress; that would be tantamount to crawling into your coffin and waiting to expire. Stress is part of living. But the grave's not to be so feared: The stress is minimal, and there's no rank and no grade in the grave. There's equality; everybody's the same.

Here's a few ways to do yourself in if you're not able to adapt to situations.

—Get a job.

—Get married.

—Tour Europe.

Most any job will do:

—Try newspapering. It'll make a cynic out of you if you don't position your defenses. You see, management always wants more and more; it's never really satisfied. And your public wants a thousand versions of one story. So what do you do? You crank out those stories like a hack writer and hope you wake up in the morning.

—Fly an airplane. That's easy. You're up in the wild blue yonder on fantasy island. There's only a few vexing problems: Your passengers want a perfect landing everytime, the navigational maps look like New York Times crossword puzzles, and other air traffic up there is like a flock of buzzards crazied over the scent of rotting flesh.

—Play the stock market with other people's money and get paid for doing it. That may be your motherlode — your trip to the rainbow. The catch to that, of course, is making the right choices at the right time. Goof up, and you and your stress may be out the window,Depression-style.

—Be a model. Your ego will revel in the praise. Men of good taste will adore your body, and women will envy your figure and wonder why they couldn't be so fortunate. But stress invariably sets in. You worry about how long your youth and stance will sustain you and if you're still pleasing the big clients and the designers.

—Start preaching. When times get rough, you can always make a living pontificating at the lectern. The important thing is the soothing phraseology, the stimulating enunciation, keeping the offering plates circulating, and no messing around with the choir. One who preaches for pay knows where his treasures lie. But there's a drawback: If you're a con, they are going to find out.

—Strike an oil well. Now there's a real gold mine. Just keep the pumpjacks plugged in and make sure all of your associates are as honest as you are; you'll know what to look out for. You wheel and deal, make the money, spend it on gold nuggets and finery, and spudder more wells. You'll need the income. The anxious moments come when the spuddered wells fizzle out, prices and the demand drop, and you're out of credit. That's stress.

—Become a bureaucrat. You're in an 8-to-5 job with the biggest company in the country, have good insurance, a retirement plan, and lots of time to plan tomorrow's routine. And you never forget your No. 1 obligation: loyalty to the government. But when that conflicts with your obligations to the boss, you may get upset nerves.

—Teach. It's similar to being a preacher, but here, you keep the roll. The hazard is not so much your students as it is their parents who may have some influence with the principal or, worse, school board trustees. Worrying about that will get you ulcers and cut into your classroom performance.

—Politick. Your best bet is to campaign at the national level. Make unrealistic and outlandish promises, such as pledges to balance the budget, to steady the ecomony, to institute government projects in your district and to fix Social Security while fighting off socialism and courting capitalism. You're sure to win a term or more in office. Your stress will come in cloaking the truth.

—Practice law. Here, you'll need the traits of a preacher, teacher, politician, journalist and dramatist. Insist on clients who don't need to work out time-payments or who would be satisfied with a 50-50 split of the goods if a lucrative "deal" could be worked out. It's hard to lose; just keep the business rolling in. But if greed and feuding suddenly diminish, you might as well pull in your shingle and step up to the pulpit.

—Marry rich, hope you fall in love, go skiing, tour Europe, check out the community property laws and, when the fling is over, hire yourself a good lawyer and bill the no-good rascal you married.

Meanwhile, take it easy, don't worry about a thing, forget about dying and just lay back. The end will come soon enough. They can bury stress with you.

From Staff Reports

A weekend workshop on "Discovering the Presence Within," will be presented by Lee Gibson, Ph.D., beginning Friday night.

Gibson, organizer of PEAKE (Perceive, Experience, Acknowledge, Know, Expand), will focus on breaking through blocks, past programming, old patterns and how to live a desired life.

The workshop will center on discovering what one does to uncover the presence of who they really are. "You can only discover what you already have," said Gibson, who holds his doctorate in Humanistic Psychology from Pacific Western University. "The presence within is your core, your ground zero, your essence, your abstraction from which you manifest, your greater mind, the universal consciousness."

Gibson, a California public school teacher for 12 years, organized PEAKE in 1971. Among the various therapies and techniques Gibson has experienced are the Neo-Reichian Education, Biocentrics, Past Life Therapy, Rolfing, Gestalt, Dianetics, est, NLP and Hellerwork. He feels people are infinitely responsible for their lives and the consequences of their actions.

The author of "Bottom Line," "Love is Everything," and "Getting it Off," Gibson presently is working on a book on psychological processing which is designed to assist individuals in clearing personal issues.

Gibson conducts seminars and workshops on relationships, life planning, fear of rejection, sex and money, communication, jealousy/envy, stress management, procrastination and the power of participation.

Beginning at 7:30 p.m. Friday with a pot luck dinner, the workshop will be held in the clubroom of Las Colinas on Wadley Avenue and Godfrey. Saturday's session will begin at 9 a.m. and Sunday's session will begin at 11 a.m. with church in Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley.

Two dogs fall into asphalt pit

"I called Albert right away," Ahders said, "to see if there was an open pit. He said 'yes.'" The fence was promptly repaired, and the asphalt was covered with the rock. "He (Stewart) did as much as he could," Ahders said. "He got the job done and got it covered."

Later that day, Ahders went with Mrs. Shock to see the pit and to visit Mischief.

"He had tears in his eyes," she said. "He said he's a dog lover."

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis said the county likely would reimburse the Shocks for their veterinary expenses, which to date total $155. The county, he noted, now will have to find other means to dispose of the asphalt dregs. "It's a Catch-22 situation."

The commissioner said he was "very sympathetic" with the Shocks.

"She (Mrs. Shock) was very emotional about it (at the outset)," Davis said. "She was upset."

Despite the tragedy, Davis said the incident "may have been a blessing in disguise. It may prevent a child from going in there."

Court not likely to overrule THFC

From Staff Reports

A federal grand jury will continue hearing testimony today related to investigation of a fire at the O'Michael Building in Odessa on Nov. 25, 1981.

Odessa Mayor Bob Bryant and former City Councilman Keith Weddell are scheduled to testify today. John and Lawrence Peterson, who were arrested but released after the fire, testified Wednesday before the grand jury related to a FBI investigation of the incident.

Weddell and Bryant were formerly owners of what has been renovated and is now known as the Jackson Center, located at 300 N. Jackson Ave. in Odessa. The building is now owned by David and Stephen Brannan.

Documents have been subpoenaed from present and former city and county officials for use in the investigation. County Judge Jan Fisher has supplied all the county officials subpoenaed with fill-in-the-blanks affidavits, with all but Commissioner Willie Hammond having returned them.

Any indictments that result from the investigation may not be released until May, according to an assistant U.S. attorney whose office is also involved in the investigation.

Woman reports purse with $350 was stolen

Geter's friends 'elated' he has been cleared

GREENVILLE (AP) — E-Systems Inc. employees were elated Wednesday afternoon after learning that armed robbery charges against co-worker Lenell Geter were going to be dropped.

"We feel like out efforts have finally paid off," said Charles Hartford, Geter's supervisor, one of several co-workers who rallied around Geter when he was in prison.

Geter was convicted of the August 1982 robbery of a suburban Dallas fast-food restaurant and served 477 days of a life sentence before his release in December. Prosecutors agreed not to oppose his motion for a new trial after news reports raised questions about the case.

Hartford, Wendell Crom and other co-workers had claimed Geter was at work when the robbery was committed.

"We had a big yell when we heard and he had his arm shook off," Crom said.

Hartford said he was surprised that Geter didn't have to go to trial as scheduled April 9.

"I thought the district attorney's office was so vindictive that they wouldn't do anything like that," Hartford said.

Another of Geter's co-workers, Chris Cassell, who was scheduled to testify at his retrial, said Geter was elated Wednesday afternoon.

"He jumped up and held his hands in the air. Then he slumped down in his chair like a big weight had been taken off his shoulders," Casell said.

"I guess justice has finally been done," Cassell said. "But the man has suffered so much. We've believed in him all the time. i thought all along that it was so inconceivable that he was charged with it."

Crom, an E-Systems engineer who helped lead the campaign to raise money to free Geter, was critical of Wade because the prosecutor didn't notify Geter.

"The DA didn't have the decency to call him apparently," said Crom. "The whole thing makes me flash mad all over. They never had any reason to believe he did it."

Hartford, who has visited Geter once a week since his release, said the engineer was still a little bitter about the prison time, although his faith in God was stronger.

Geter "will come out of it all right," Hartford said. "He has some problems after being in jail. But he's a big man ... he's handling himself very well.

"He's slightly bitter. Once and a while, you can tweak him and something will come out. But he's not any more bitter than anyone else would be."

Civic leaders: Criminal justice system flawed

DALLAS (AP) — The Lenell Geter case may not tarnish Dallas' image, but some civic leaders believe there are flaws in the Dallas County criminal justice system.

"I don't think that in any significant, long-term sense the case will affect Dallas' image of itself or the rest of the world's image of Dallas," said Bill Solomon, chairman of the board of the Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

"From a personal standpoint, I tend to feel that the case was an extremely unique set of circumstances which could have happened anywhere," he said.

Geter, a black engineer at E-Systems in Greenville, served 16 months of a life sentence for an armed robbery he said he never committed. On Wednesday, Dallas prosecutors announced they were dismissing charges against Geter who was freed and whose second trial on the charge was to have started in about three weeks.

Officials of the Dallas NAACP said the announcement by Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade to drop the charges against Geter "should signal that we need to examine the district attorney's office."

"It disturbs me that they delayed it so long, but you have to say that they have done right by Lenell now," said George Hairston, one of Geter's attorneys. "It's a tribute to the DA's office."

Dallas Mayor Pro Tem Annette Strauss, however, said she had no questions about Wade's performance.

"I trust Henry Wade to do what he thinks is right," she said. "Sometimes juries just make bad decisions. You've seen it happen many times in other cases. I think that different people are going to think different things."

But Geter's attorney, Edwin Sigel, said Wade should have dropped the charges much sooner.

"There was so much evidence exonerating" Geter, Sigel said. "He was at work that day. We're not quarreling with Henry Wade's office now. We're quarreling with the delay in doing what they did.

"They were just too hard-headed in this case. We had plenty of alibi witnesses," he added.

Houston minister's wife arrested

HOUSTON (AP) — A minister's wife and another woman refused comment after they were arrested by Harris County undercover detectives and charged with prostitution, authorities said.

Josephine Elizabeth Power, 37, wife of the Rev. Larkin Jackson Power Jr., was charged with promoting prostitution and Robin Elizabeth Midgett, 22, of Houston, was charged with prostitution.

Power also was charged with assault with bodily injury in the case.

A parishioner at the Houston Baptist Temple said the couple would decline comment until they spoke with an attorney.

Co-ed: Candy Man 'kind, caring man'

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Ronald Clark O'Bryan, facing execution next week on a conviction of killing his son, is really a kind, caring man who is "the type of friend everyone would like to have," said an 18-year-old coed who has exchanged letters with the condemned man for the last six months.

Kim Lea Manganaro, a Texas A&M freshman from Houston, said she and O'Bryan became pen pals last October and she has found him to be be "kind and caring, very accepting and very encouraging."

"He's the type of friend everyone would like to have," she said in an interview at the Ellis Unit of the prison Wednesday. "He's a real friend of mine, a nice human being."

Ms. Manganaro said that O'Bryan introduced himself by letter after a letter she wrote opposing the death penalty was published last October in the Houston Post.

"In the first letter, he asked if it (her letter) was some type of joke," she recalled. The letter went on, she said, to ask her to write him. Ms. Manganaro said O'Bryan even provided references which she could check out.

Ms. Manganaro said during the following months they developed a warm friendship through the mail.

Kim Manganaro, a Texas A&M freshman from Houston, visits convicted killer Ronald Clark O'Bryan at the Ellis Unit at Huntsville. She said she has ben exchanging letters with him for six months and described him as "kind" and the "type of friend everyone would like to have."

"I got a lot out of the relationship," she said. "He's a very good person and I really care for him."

Ms. Manganaro, a nursing and journalism major at Texas A&M, said she has twice visited O'Bryan and hopes to visit him next week just before his scheduled execution.

O'Bryan, 39, was convicted in the 1974 Halloween candy poisoning murder of his eight-year-old son Timothy. At his trial in 1975, the prosecution contended that O'Bryan fed his son cyanide-laced candy to collect on a $30,000 life insurance policy.

O'Bryan has stoutly denied his guilt and has insisted all along that he had nothing to do with his son's death.

O'Bryan is scheduled for execution prior to dawn on March 31, but the U.S. Supreme Court is considering a writ of habeas corpus that would give him a new trial.

Asked how she feels about the prospects of O'Bryan being executed by poisonous injection next week, Ms. Manganaro replied: "Scared, very scared. I never truly believed they would go through with it."

She said that she is strongly opposed to the death sentence and particularly for someone like O'Bryan who had been a deacon in his church and a respected member of the community.

She said it is incomprehensible to her how anybody could kill "a man like" O'Bryan.

"They don't get to see in him what I see," said the Houston student.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A statewide bulletin has been issued for a woman who police say went on a shooting spree — killing one man and wounding two others — after a bar patron mistakenly took her bar stool.

The woman was armed and already had been facing an aggravated assault charge in connection with an attack on a police officer, authorities said.

The shootings began at 8 p.m. Tuesday when the former cab driver — called a "tough hombre" by witnesses — returned to her stool and found Air Force Lt. Nolan Horton sitting there, detective Billy Hook said.

Bartender Robert Rios, 22, offered her another bar stool, but she pulled a revolver from her purse, put the gun next to Horton's head and pulled the trigger, Hook said.

She then fired at Rios, grazing the side of his head, witnesses said.

Horton, 32, was listed in critical condition late Wednesday at Medical Center Hospital, while Rios was said to be in good condition.

Dead was Allen Knight, 45, who was shot in his home in Live Oak, a San Antonio suburb.

Investigators said the woman, who had not been charged, apparently drove to Knight's house immediately after leaving the bar.

He was shot once in the head about 15 minutes after Live Oak police questioned him concerning the woman's whereabouts, Hook said.

The license plate of her car had been traced to Knight's address, he said.

Employees at the bar, called Cahoots, said the woman and Horton were the only customers in the establishment at the time of the shooting.

"She pulled a gun out of her purse and shot (Horton) in the left temple," said Cahoots manager Scotty Roberts. "Everybody jumped. At the time, everyone thought she was trying to rob the place."

The woman chased two waitresses behind the bar and threatened them with her gun, but ran into the parking lot and drove away without harming them, Robertson said.

He said she did not appear to be drunk.

Texas Women's Political Caucus endorses candidates

AUSTIN (AP) — Four women candidates for the Texas House of Representatives, all Democrats, have been endorsed by the Texas Women's Political Caucus.

Meg Wilson

Meg Wilson, Austin, chairwoman of the statewide group, told a news conference Wednesday that "these women will receive not only our endorsement — they get our money and our time."

Meg Wilson said that endorsement of worthy women candidates for state legislative and congressional races was the main drive of the organization's "More for '84" campaign.

However, they did announce endorsement of "several outstanding feminist candidates" including state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, for U.S. Senate; Bob Mosbacher, Houston oilman, Republican candidate for U.S. Senate; and former Attorney General John Hill, a Democrat, for chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court.

Recipe yields unlimited looks

The clothes are not coordinates. The latest in spring fashion news is the term coined "related separates," which may cross the forbidden borders of the past, and allows wearer to mix brands and fabrics, rather than sticking with the manufacturer's coordinated line of yesterday.

The following recipe is based on a seven-piece selection and, on its own, makes 12 combinations. Because the pieces are neutral pastels, they may work with other pieces of an already-owned wardrobe. Because the pieces are the latest styles — not classic lines intended to last several seasons — they may be considered a short-term investment. But for the price, it can't be beat for fashion.

The items were selected at random, without regard for price or brand name, but simply on the look of the garment, the styles, color and combination potential. Ironically, many of the items were later discovered to have been sale items. Not bad news when you're in search of the most for your money.

Midland's own Christie Brinkley look-alike, Laura, the blonde, is a junior at Taft school in Watertown, Conn. "I love it," she said succinctly. She enjoys politics. The school has a free dress code, she said, with two restrictions — no jeans, and no collarless shirts for the men. The least seen style at Taft, said Laura, "is anything conservative." Twist-a-beads are unknown in her East-coast school. What's big is "new wave" — they wear a lot of hip wraps and spiky belts, for example, she added.

Susannah Kendrick, a junior at Lee High, said she is most comfortable with the new wave look. "I don't wear anything preppie," adding that mini-skirts, baggy shirts, big jewelry and belts are among her favorites. Her natural flame red hair was designed, in preparation for an upcoming hair style show, by Alwana Vaughn of Alwana's Salon in Midland. A member of Dillards Teen Board, Susannah enjoys jazz dance and modeling and plans to study fashion merchandising.

Midland High cheerleader Kelly Munn is a member of National Honor Society, Younglife and is concentrating her studies in math and science. Her personal taste in clothing includes sharp tailored cuts of straight skirts, and oxford blouses. Though she doesn't set out to seek pieces to coordinate with her wardrobe, items she buys often "end up coordinating" with something she already owns. She said she prefers dresses because they "look more feminine," and she enjoys wearing turquoise and silver jewelry with casual clothing and gold jewelry for her tailored clothing.

The Gazebo No. 21 Imperial Shopping Center

"Advance planning and smart shopping are the keys to creating a successful, fashionable and economically feasible wardrobe," says Elena Castaneda, manager of Castaneda designer fashion discount stores.

"First, decide on a realistic budget, one you can live with and stick to," says Castaneda. "Give yourself some leeway for a special bargain, provided it's something you can really use."

Before you set foot in a clothing store, do a thorough evaluation of your wardrobe. Go through your closets and drawers and decide which items fit well, are in good repair and lend themselves to today's fashion look. Don't automatically reject last year's styles, however. A stylish accessory such as a belt or scarf may be all you need to bring a favorite outfit up to date.

After you've completed your wardrobe review, make a list of everything you are keeping for the new season, then develop a shopping list that fills in the gaps. A golden rule to remember: Keep your wardrobe balanced.

"If you have eight blouses and two skirts, be sure to include a new skirt or a pair of pants on your shopping list," advises Castaneda. "Resist the temptation to buy another top."

Once you hit the stores, take your time. Comparison shop so you get the best value for your money. Browse through boutiques or designer collections in department stores to get a sense of styles and prices. Then you might try going to a designer fashion discount store to see whether you can get the same items for less.

If you can afford it, buy a complete look, Castaneda advises. Two-piece outfits with print tops and matching print skirts are an excellent investment. They can be mixed with solid-tone skirts, pants or blouses already in your wardrobe to create a variety of fashionable looks. "Every potential purchase should be evaluated to make sure you can wear it at least two different ways," says Castaneda.

"Buy the best quality your budget allows and only purchase garments you really like, so you know they will give you many hours of wearing pleasure," says Castaneda. "Clothes that make you feel good about yourself are the ones that give you the most for your money, regardless of cost."

When the New York Pret fashion exposition introduced more than 600 spring-summer collections, it was obvious that the styles were designed to fool the eye.

Combinations of fabrics, textures and shapes create a multilayered look, but what appears to be several garments is really only one. And that means fewer pieces to buy and less to wear.

These designs borrow heavily from the weighty, layered Japanese look but reinterpret the look in lean, clean styles that give the illusion of lots of fabric without the discomfort.

The fool-the-eye looks start with short, cropped tops with double necklines designed to look like a tunic or tank top layered over a blouse. Double sleeves add to the illusion, creating the effect of a short-sleeve jacket or vest over a long-sleeve top. Even dresses have double necklines, sleeves and hems for the look of a blouse — or another dress — worn beneath.

Multiple textures and prints add to the fashion deception. Combinations of linen and leather, knit and woven fabrics, large and small stripes, solids and florals frequently are seen in one garment. All this to make the wearer look like a multilayered trendsetter while staying cool and comfortable.

Whether your layerd look is real or not, the most important item to own will be the little vest. Worn over a short- or long-sleeve top, dress, jacket or even another vest, it's bound to be the season's hottest look.

T-shirts in varied shapes and sizes also take to layers. Try an oversize tank over a body-hugging, short-sleeve undershirt or a slouchy man's shirt over a skinny long-sleeve T-shirt. Once you've got the hang of it, dressing in layers can bring out a lot of creativity — as well as a lot of clothes.

With all that layering on top, bottoms must be kept brief. Knee-length skirts and short pants keep the look from getting out of hand — or underfoot. Comfortable, loose-fitting pants with high, accentuated waists inspired by the sailor look of the '40s are newly interpreted for the '80s.

Linen in new, textured weaves looks like the leading spring-summer fabric. Patterns — giant florals, primitive tribal designs, stripes and animal prints — make the 'clean-lined clothes exciting. White was the most-seen color at the New York Pret followed by desert shades: khaki, olive and terra-cotta, all of which look good with white or on their own.

This spring and summer, if you opt for layers, the essential ingredients are lean, spare separates that work on their own or together. And that means clean, architectural-looking pieces without any superfluous details.

If you lack the time to search for layers or the self-confidence to combine them, you can take the fool-the-eye approach and find single pieces with the look of several separates worn together.

The layer look fashion fools the eye and can work to your budget's advantage if you learn the trick. The essential ingredients are light, cool, lean, spare separates that work on their own or together. And that means clean, architectural-looking pieces without any superfluous details.

From Wire Reports

If you want the look of linen but can't bear to be creased, there are several fabrics and blends that fake it. Here are some of the most popular:

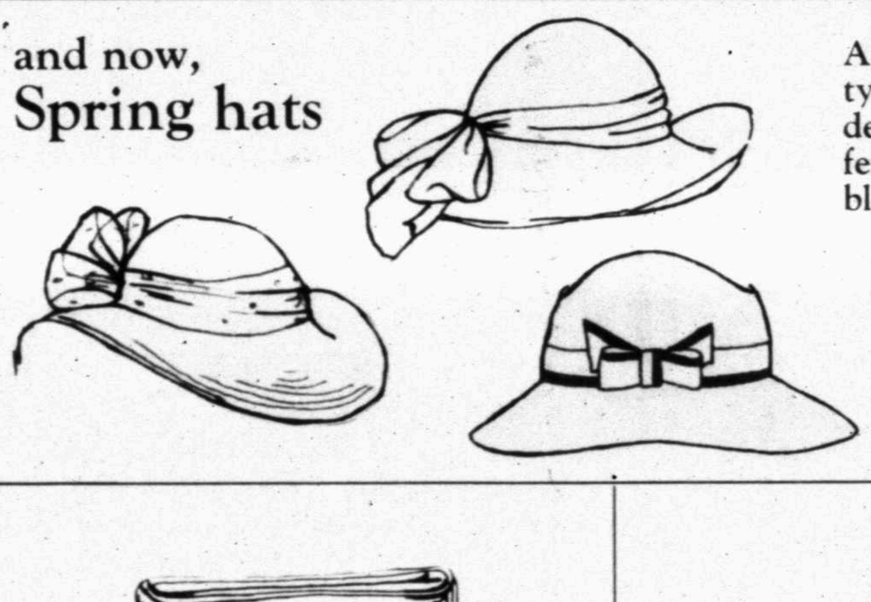

Rayon: The best imitation linen is made from rayon, which, despite beliefs to the contrary, is not a synthetic fiber. Rayon is made of cellulose from pine, hemlock and spruce trees and is biodegradable, according to the "The Fashion Encyclopedia," by Catherine Houck. Rayon does not wrinkle quite as much as linen, but it is not nearly as strong, either. As a result, you would not want to buy rayon cropped pants for everyday wear.

"Linen-looks out of rayon, if they're at least 75 to 80 percent rayon, will be rather comfortable and nice," Harry Banks, president of Hamilton Adams, the leading linen import company. Too much synthetic and the fabric will be "uncomfortable."

Model makes most of full figure

"Fat is ugly," says model Ann Harper.

"There is nothing pleasing about loose, unmolded rolls of fat," says the 32-year-old woman who has modeled everything from panty hose to designer jeans. "But big, firm and healthy is sensually appealing."

And Ann is big — 5 feet 9 inches and about 165 pounds — and she admits without a pause that her dress size is a 16 or 18.

She's also firm, well proportioned and healthy. And when she walks across a room, men look with obvious interest at the tall, blonde woman.

"Glamour is an alluring personal style that fascinates the people who come in contact with it," she says, adding that it's a misconception that to be glamorous you have to be a size 10 or smaller.

That's what Ann did and she relates how she did it in "The Big Beauty Book" (Holt, Rinehart and Winston). She shares how she came to terms with being a fuller-figured woman and went about creating a new image, one that has made her a top model in her size range.

She prefers the word fuller-figured to that of overweight, heavy or fat because its connotation is more positive. The other words, she says, convey the idea of someone who doesn't take care of herself.

But when Ann was 12, she was 5 feet 8 inches and weighed 157 pounds. Although she dreamed of being a size 10, food became her panacea during her teen years.

From adolescence, her goal was to be a singer, and people told her that she had a good voice and stage presence. But when she graduated from a two-year college at 21, she was so terrified at the thought of auditioning that she went on an all-out eating binge.

"My fear of failure crippled me," Ann says. "I ate myself silly." In three months, her weight went from 175 to "a sloppy 210."

Her sister, Ruth, watched quietly for most of the summer as Ann stuffed herself. Finally, Ruth sat down with Ann and the two women talked about Ann's use of food to cover up her fear of failure.

"My sister got me back into a good emotional state," says Ann. "Ruth began to put things into focus by helping me list my positive physical features." Ann decided she was tall, had shapely legs, a nice chin, good posture and evenly distributed weight.

"I definitely could be a knockout," she told Ruth, and Ann immediately started talking about a 70- to 90-pound weight loss. But Ruth pointed out that Ann's body build — broad shoulders, large thighs and big hips — didn't fit into the petite range.

"The message was there in plain language," says Ann. There wasn't going to be a size 10 at the end of her rainbow.

It was time to make a decision: to continue to stuff herself or to accept the fact that she would never be a size 10. Ann decided that she probably always would be a fuller-figured woman, to play up her good points and keep her weight in a range she could handle comfortably.

She began what has become a permanent way of eating — avoiding fats, preparing more fresh foods and reducing the size of her portions. She also began to exercise to firm up her body and stopped weighing herself several times a day.

"The numbers don't mean anything," she says. "Instead of weighing in like clockwork, study the contour of your body. You should calculate any losses or gains by the way certain clothes fit."

"Spring Preview" a fashion show at Women's World at 7 p.m. today, will present the latest style in large sizes for women. With large-size women becoming more fashion conscious, career oriented and self-confident, an array of stylish fashions are being designed to fit their lifestyles. Today there are 26 million large size females in the United States. The influx of women into the work force has generated a demand for more specialized wardrobe applications — from business to social to leisure.

This Christian Dior, and many other brand name designer fashions, are are readily available to most consumers by home sewing.

Although original designs by names like Christian Dior and Oscar de la Renta may be beyond the reach of most consumers, home sewers can enjoy a wardrobe full of "designer" fashions by selecting appropriate patterns, say sewing experts with Vogue patterns.

The great designers earn their reputations by understanding that it is the woman who creates the clothes she wears, and it is the job of the designers to capture and interpret the spirit of each individual. Now, with designer patterns and easy-care fabrics, a woman can sew a designer original to fit her proportions perfectly.

Women want clothes that relate to them personally. They want to be fashionable and appropriately dressed for their individual lifestyles, so the home sewer is not limited just to sewing her favorite designer's styles.

Instead of a traditional spring suit, Laue suggests making a dress with a matching jacket. Select a solid fabric for the dress and a coordinating pattern for the jacket. The fabric Laue recommends is a lightweight linen look-alike, with either a smooth or slubbed surface.

"Unlike linen made from flax, which tends to wrinkle, these blends, featuring easy-care fibers such as Kodel polyester, will keep their crisp look," she explains. New shades this season include pearlized pastels and sophisticated grayed mid-tones.

For other special spring events like weddings and graduations, Laue points to a variety of beautiful sheer fabrics including voiles and shadow sheers. Many of these delicate fabrics are machine washable, so check carefully for easy-care fibers.

Warm weather brings dozens of outdoor pursuits, so active wear and leisure styles will play an important part in every woman's wardrobe. A wonderful choice of patterns for every type of pant is available this season. Look for jumpsuits, split skirts and walking shorts that can be worn for a variety of different activities — from bicycling to patio dinners.

Multipurpose fabrics for sporting styles include poplin, linen looks, twill, cord and sheeting. Many of these tried-and-true fabrics have taken on fashion excitement with new textures and surface treatments.

Linen terms defined in 'Fashion Encyclopedia'

From Wire Reports

Many of the definitions come from "The Fashion Encyclopedia," by Catherine Houck.

Moygashel: Trade name for the highest quality Irish linens used for clothes. Moygashel is the name of an Irish company that weaves fabrics, linen among them. The home of Moygashel linen is the town of Dungannon, 40 miles from Belfast, where the first Moygashel mill was built at the end of the 18th century. Fabrics made there are pre-shrunk, tested for smoothness and color-fastness and treated for crease-resistance by baking resin into the cloth as it runs through the textile finishing plant.

Oatmeal linen: An unbleached, homespun-type linen used for blazers. It is a brownish cream color like oatmeal. Most oatmeal linen is imported from Poland and is a little less expensive than handkerchief linen. The term "butcher's linen" usually means imitation oatmeal linen.

Beat the heat in style

What do you wear to be cool and chic in the good ol' summertime? A department store fashion director and a family medical center physician suggest light-colored, loose-fitting clothes.

T-shirt dresses are ideal for women, they say. Avoid synthetic fabrics and regular panty hose. Synthetics can't breathe the way natural fabrics can, so when considering summer fabrics, think "natural."

Sculpturing methods utilize new products

The scissors, razor and electric clippers are all important to the creation of shortly-sheared Spring/Summer haircuts titled "Newbreak," stated HairAmerica, the fashion group of the National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association.

Filled with variety, the styling body's brief precision cuts feature versatile styling length at the front of the head to accent and frame a multitude of facial shapes.

"Newbreak hair fashions combine the finest razor sculpting for singled napes and edged bangs, the control of clippers for fashionably buzzed-down sides and precision scissor tailoring for dashing, overlapping lines, Duckworth explained.

Commenting on the Newbreak style, Gene Wilson, Secretary of the Texas Hairdressers and Costmetologists Assocation, said "The biggest mistake a woman can make is to get into a rut and not accept change. Career women — and Dallas has an ample share — adapt to change and often look forward to a new hairstyle or color."

A powerful variation in the Spring/Summer style is the diagonal look, which draws hair length to one side of the face, either with equal length on both sides of the head or with a closely-cropped side to contrast longer length. Other styles include edged bangs, with equal length on both sides or full throughout the front.

Sculpturing techniques make use of new salon products such as styling gels, foams, lotions and mousses. The haircut collection utlizes perm-swept body for luxurious hair movement and deep style control.

"This hidden cut allows the total look to be instantly changed by pulling back the hair. Newbreak breaks away from the old, familiar one-dimensional bob," Duckworth said, "and away from the traditional attitude of haircutting toward a new direction of creating design forms. It's really several cuts in one," he added.

Color surfacing adds an extra layer of accent around the bangs and the sides of the top layer of hair, to create vibrancy and softness aound the face.

Adds Wilson, "Multi-tones are the key to coloring this year. There will be lots of vibrant reds and warm blondes."

New perming techniques include the crinoline perm, which adds extra texture and volume to underlying the hair ruffle surfacing, which creates hair lift and texture and chemical reformation, which improves hair direction and thickness.

In addition, base extension perming utilizes perming at the base of the hair shaft to improve volume and stability. Strand expansion perming is an aid to style direction.

The masculine look for Spring/Summer is the Male Dash, which features cropped-out ears, closely trimmed sides and extra, fully permed volume and the front and top of the head. Summer dimensional blonding is a look becoming increasingly popular for the male.

The Newbreak collection for Spring/Summer was designed by HairAmerica designers Louise Cotter of New York City, Raymond Adams of Ft. Worth, Lyal McCaig of Omaha, Diana McKeever of Helena, Montana, Alida Weerganag of Hudson, New Hamphsire and Doris Williams of Statesville, North Carolina.

Hair show presented at Yucca

The West Texas Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Assocation will present "Puttin' on the Ritz," at 7:30 p.m., April 13 at the Yucca Theatre. Reservations, $5-$8, may be made at Christine Valmy, 683-9891. Several models will show the latest in hair styles for Spring and Summer 1984. Proceeds of the show will benefit the continuing education of THCA members.

Hot flash tip for flushed face

If you suffer from the hot flashes or flushes of menopause or other hormonal upsets, you can turn your malady into a comforting beauty treatment.

When you do feel the flush or flash in your face, your circulation in that area is increased, which is basically good for the skin. If you keep a bottle of your favorite moisturizer in the refrigerator, and apply it when your face is warm, you will have a soothing, cooling balm which will help soften your skin.

Bob variations highlight 1984

Strong, blunt cut lines and distinctive shapes will headline hair fashions for 1984, say stylists who create and maintain the looks of 1983's 10 Best Coiffured Women.

The women, named by the Helene Curtis Guild of Professional Hairstylists, are: Pat Benatar, Sheena Easton, Nastassia Kinski, Morgan Fairchild, Melissa Manchester, Linda Gray, Raquel Welch, Debbie Allen, Princess Diana and Joan Rivers.

Nearly all these women have short hair, most variations of the clean-cut bob. Some exceptions are the long, flowing style of Fairchild and the soft, curly styles of Welch and Allen.

These attractive alternatives have wide appeal, but hottest hairstyles, say stylists, will be shorter. Movement and volume will be a must, created with gentle body waves or partial perms.

The basic bob is versatile and not likely to bore. "It's simple. It's chic. It can be pulled behind the ears or back at the crown and even curled for evening glamour," says Rahn McDow, Fairchild's stylist.

But Rick Gillette, makeup and hair consultant for Kinski says: "A lot of curly unkempt hair is out. Bobs are big but more importantly, hairstyles this spring will have stronger lines and definite shapes."

Hairstylist Jose Eber agrees that styles will be less wild and closer to the head. He creates the soft, sensuous looks of Manchester and Gray.

Tradition preferred

In a Merit Report survey, 44 percent of all adults said they prefer the traditional boxer-style swimsuit; 25 percent, the traditional brief style; 14 percent, the much briefer European or bikini style.

Beck brings 60s prep, with fresh dimension

From Staff Reports

Ford Beckman's overall approach to design is "pure American, rooted in the 60s, a time during which I strongly believe the true 'American Prep' look was born."

"I seem to use color differently, always stressing it to its extremes until it pops, creating a visual simplicity that can only come from experimentation and strong decisiveness with myself. My palette contains no mid-tones.

"My sense of proportion, balance and scale is affected by architecture and scultpture. I'm intrigued by the German Bauhaus designer of the 30s...Mies van der Rohe's 'less is more' approach to design. I am in awe of the buildings that architect Richard Meier has created. Because of these influences, I've often described my designs as Modern Classics."

Beckman was licensed in 1982 by CoxMoore of Nottingham, one of England's oldest and most prestigious knitwear firms, to create a line of sweaters for the American market. Shortly thereafter, Michaelsons of London did the same for neckwear. In 1983, he was commissioned by an Italian manufacturer to go to Milan and create a complete men's and women's collection for Europe. In America, Norman Shirtmakers licensed him to develop an extensive line of men's dress and sportshirts in addition to a collection of women's sportswear.

Pearls bring sophistication to finished look

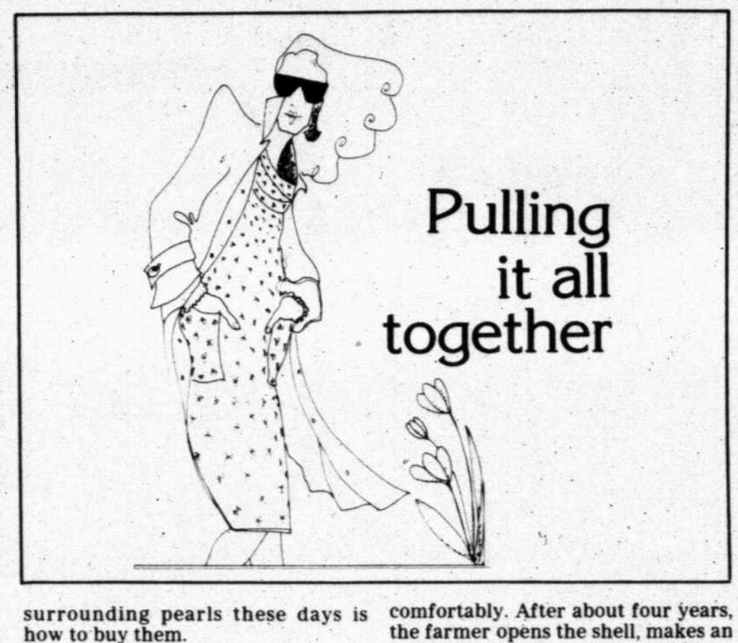

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — After two decades of piling gimmicky jewelry upon gimmimcky clothes, fasion is cleaning up its act. Just as fussy, overdone ready-to-wear is giving way to minimalism, so, too, is chunky, glitzy jewelry giving way to classicism.

If ever a piece of jewelry epitomized classic, sophisticated good looks, it's the pearl. And after years of being relegated to fashion's back drawer, pearls — from the most expensive cultured pearls to less costly simulations — are not only back in vogue, they're also more popular than ever.

"Just a few years ago, I remember women coming into my showroom saying, 'Who needs pearls? My grandmother wears pearls,' " said Norman Lowenstein, president of Marvella Inc., which has been manufacturing simulated pearls for 75 years. "Now, I see those very same people coming in bedecked in pearls."

ALTHOUGH IN SOME CIRCLES pearls never went out of style, their new-found popularity seems to be a reflection of fashion. "When designers returned to — shall we use the word elegance? — in clothes, they found that the one thing that's never wrong is pearls," said Helene Fortunoff, head of the Fortunoff chain and its chief jewelry merchandiser. "When Ralph Lauren, for example, did a little blouse and featured it with pearls, all of a sudden young women realized that pearls were for them. And as soon as young women said pearls were 'in' again, older women said they were 'in' for them, too."

"IN" MAY BE understating the situation. According to the Cultured Pearl Association of America, a New York-based industry group, retail sales of cultured pearl jewelry in the United States totaled $502 million last year — up from $305 million in 1982 and $84 million in 1978. Moreover, Americans are becoming the world's chief purchasers of pearls. Last year, association officials said, the United States accounted for 48 percent of the pearls exported by Japan, the world's principal supplier, compared with 17 percent just five years earlier.

Traditionally, one of the most alluring facets of pearls has been the mystery associated with them. Centuries ago, for example, westerners believed they had medicinal powers and could cure almost anything from heart ailments and ulcers to epilepsy and — when consumed in lemon juice, milk or in powdered form — even insanity. But, since modern medicine has put those theories to rest, the only mystery surrounding pearls these days is how to buy them.

THE FIRST STEP, experts say, is to recognize that there's no such thing as a "natural" pearl — one that, of its own volition, has grown inside an oyster. "Natural pearls don't exist anymore because the major body of water where they were produced is the Persian Gulf, and they're more involved with oil than with pearls now," said Mel Strump, chairman of the department of jewelry design at the Fashion Institute of Technology. "The only natural pearls left are the ones for resale at the major galleries."

What is referred to as a "real" pearl these days is the round "cultured" pearl, which is formed when a seed is implanted in an oyster; to protect itself against the foreign body, the oyster secretes a substance called nacre, which coats the seed and, in the end, produces a pearl. The process dates back to the turn of the century and the efforts of three Japanese men: Kokichi Mikimoto, a noodle vendor who was the first person to successfully culture a pearl; Tatsuhei Mise, a carpenter who patented the needle used to insert a seed into an oyster, and Tokichi Nishikawa, a researcher who received the first patent to produce cultured pearls.

PRODUCING A CULTURED pearl, though, is no small undertaking. "It takes about seven years, from start to finish," said Strump. "Oyster farmers have to select the correct oysters, maintain them until they're large enough for the (seed insertion) operation, put them into flexible nets where they're kept, and periodically remove them to clean off the shells so the oysters can live comfortably. After about four years, the farmer opens the shell, makes an incision and removes the pearl."

But there are no guarantees. "Even today, the quality of the crop is subject to the vagaries of the environment — typhoons, hurricanes, algae growth, pollution," said Richard Reuter, president of the cultured pearl association and an official of Lyes Christie, a New York firm that imports and manufactures pearl jewelry. "There is always a risk in growing them — far more than most people understand — because the nature of the mollusk is rather sensitive."

Despite the hit-or-miss nature of producing cultured pearls, experts say there are some clear-cut things to look for in buying them:

— Luster: Also known as "orient," luster refers not to the surface shine of the pearl, but to its inner glow. And high luster — achieved when an oyster is allowed to spend years coating the pearl with nacre — is considered the most important element in evaluating a pearl's quality. "Orient technically means light bouncing off the sub-surfaces of a pearl," Reuter said. "It almost looks like you're looking into the pearl, and it's what gives it a mysterious look." If the pearl is dull and chalky, it's inferior.

— Cleanliness: This is the second most important factor in selecting pearls. Many pearls are marked with tiny dimples, wrinkles or blotches, but as natural as that might seem, they're not the mark of quality. The fewer the imperfections, the better the pearls.

— Color: Unlike diamonds, where the rule is the-whiter-the-better, color in pearls largely is a matter of preference. Colors range from black to white and every shade in between. The most popular categories are creamy whites, which tends to look best on women with dark skin, and roses, which tend to look best with fair skin. Your best bet, though, is to try on several colors to determine the best one for you.

— Roundness: Some categories of pearls, such as Biwa (also known as freshwater pearls), rice or baroque pearls are meant to be flat, oblong or irregular in shape. But when it comes to cultured pearls, the most valuable ones are the roundest ones.

— Size: This, too, is a matter of taste, but, as a rule, the larger the pearl, the more expensive. Cultured pearls can range in size from about 2.5 millimeters to 12 or 13 millimeters, though the most popular sizes are from about 6 to 9 millimeters. In necklaces, the other size to consider is length; the most popular lengths are 15-inch chokers, 24-inch "matinee" lengths, 30-inch "opera" lengths and 54-inch ropes.

"OBVIOUSLY, THE BIGGEST benefit of owning simulated pearls is that they put them into an affordable position," Lowenstein said. But another benefit is that they allow consumers to try some "fasihion" looks–everything from black pearls to multistrand chokers known as "dog collars."

The other thing to remember is that pearls must be cared for. "Make sure they don't come in contact with the three no-nos — perfume, hairspray and sweat," Fortunoff said. "That will do more damage than anything else." Since they're not indestructible, pearls should be stored in a soft container and cleaned with a soft cloth and warm water and then dried gently. They should also be restrung every few years.

BUT THE BEST WAY TO care for them, said Strump, "is to wear them, since the oils of the body improve their luster. If they sit in a drawer, they'll lose their luster because the oil and moisture could evaporate or be absorbed."

When it comes to looking good, no one knows more about the subject than Linda Evans of "Dynasty" fame. And, according to her book, "The Linda Evans Beauty and Exercise Book" (Wallaby-Simon and Schuster), one of the most important parts of your appearance is your nails.

Whether long or short, a well-groomed, well-manicured "magic 10" can add just the right touch of elegance and grace to your overall look, and they shouldn't be overlooked in the course of your regular beauty routine.

1. When filing, choose an emery board that does not shed its granules as the nail is filed. Hold it vertically against the center edge of the nail, and don't let it lose contact with the nail as you gently move the file back and forth.

2. Before working on cuticles, soak hands in pure soap in water and then, if needed, use a mild cuticle solvent. Loosen the cuticles with a cuticle losening tool only, holding it lightly and using a circular motion. Do not jab the cuticle.

3. Wash away cuticle debris and then wrap an orangewood stick in cotton and dampen. Circle the nail under the cuticle to wipe away film.

4. To clean under nail correctly, use a tool with a round, thin point. Start at the corners and draw the tool to the center and then to the opposite edge. If you start at center and force the debris to the sides, it will discourage the nail selvage from tightening the nail to the nail bed.

5. Buffing is an important step to harden the nail surface and stimulate the flow of moisture and oil to the nail bed, both of which help nails grow longer and stronger.

Glasses accent, complement fashion look

Often worn every day, glasses are considered by many fashion experts to be among the most important, and telling, accessories you own. They can date you at a glance — or put you in immediate fashion touch. Since you dress differently for different occasions, having several styles of glasses for day and evening can allow you to complement your attire for a complete fashion look.

Consider your lifestyle when you select glasses to wear for day or evening, for casual or formal occasions, he says. A more traditional frame may be perfect for work but inappropriate for nighttime parties. One pair of eyeglasses just won't suit every occasion.

High-tech designs in a range of metal shades such as gold, silver, gray, brown and black suit the image for active well-dressed, elegant men and women.

Plastic frames allow for distinctive color combinations to accentuate your eyes and clothing. To accent eye color, choose frames that belong in your natural color group with second color accents like specs, swirls or enamel detailing. For example, if your eyes are blue, a beige frame with blue enamel will emphasize your eyes.

If you have an oval face almost any eyeglass frame shape will be becoming, Jobbins says. This includes oval, angular and softly upswept modified cat's-eye shapes.

A round face looks best in soft geometric shapes and ovals. Be careful to avoid upswept shapes that can emphasize the lower fullness of your face. People with a square facial shape look best in geometric frames which help blend and de-emphasize the jawline.

Never before have opticians and optometrists offered such a generous selection and variety of attractive glasses. Using the preceding guidelines can make it easy and fun to select several frames complementary to you, enabling you to change your looks at will.

—CNS

Take care in selecting sunglasses

Sunglasses are fashion accessories that not only look great but also are useful in protecting the eyes from potentially harmful rays.

People often spend hours considering the appropriate frame shade and shape to create just the right look. Fine. But people also should look beyond the appearance to the quality of the glasses, experts say. Poor-quality sunglasses can do more harm than good, many doctors warn.

That's because the shading process causes the pupils of the eyes to dilate. And when the pupil gets larger, the retina is exposed to harmful ultraviolet rays unless the glasses filter them out.

— Examine glasses for distortion by holding them up to a light source. If you see ripples in the lens or distorted reflections, put the glasses back on the rack.

— Try glasses on and look across the store in an attempt to read signs. Some lenses are so faulty they can change your eyes from 20-20 to 20-50, Zeterbaum said.

Dark-brown or gray lenses filter harmful rays best, Zeterbaum said. A spokeswoman for the Food and Drug Administration said gray or dark green are best. It appears color choice depends on your source. However, gray as a recommendation appeared more frequently in research for this report.

Polarized lenses cut out glare, but not necessarily harmful rays. However, a pair of Polaroid brand glasses had a label claiming they filtered out up to 100 percent of ultraviolet rays.

Headwraps: Dramatic change of pace

You're getting set for a special night. You've spent the entire day in the sun, so your tan is at its golden best. Only thing is — oh, no! Your hair is dry and static.

Or, a last-minute invitation has caught you unprepared. Your hair is uncurled and unmanageable.

In both cases, it's "can we hide it?" time for your hair.

Take a hint from the Senegalese women of Africa, ancient Egyptians, Hindus and traditional Jewish women. Wrap your hair problems away — and look smashing while you're doing it.

Head wraps are romantic, inexpensive and great for adding individual style to any outfit — individual because you choose exactly which variation of wrapping, twisting and tucking suits you best.

"The beautiful thing about head wraps is that they should be able to be secured just by tucking, twisting and knotting," says Amelia Eley, a California designer who fashions them in fabrics to match her ensembles. "You shouldn't have to do any pinning," she adds, "although you can add pins for decoration."

Of course, they're not all that simple. Eley admits that when she does a flamboyant wrap that calls for pearls and flowers entwined in three yards of fabric, she does ask for assistance from her husband. But that's for very special occasions.

Most of the time, head wraps can be whipped together out of a couple of scarves tied together, a remnant of fabric, even a couple of dish towels (preferably new).

Sheer or lightweight fabrics work best for wraps, according to Eley, because they are less bulky when twisted and knotted. Materials with a little stretch to them will hug the head better, as well.

Ready wear origin

Women's ready-to-wear clothes are believed to have originated in Germany about 1850. Shopkeepers had cloaks made to use surplus from textile mills, which were then beginning to thrive.

Alternatives to sneakers

Hearst Feature Service

No, you may NOT wear sneakers at work.

But so many women now wear them to and from work that designers have reached new heights in the leisure shoe this spring.

Canvas boots, two-tone "booties" coming to the ankle and the old high-top tennis shoe in every color are what's new. So are jungle-print, pop-art or triple-color espadrilles as designers such as Yves St. Laurent, Ralph Lauren and Perry Ellis step up their leisure shoe design.

Sneakers come in buttery napa leather, with Velcro closings or made of rubber. Tennis runners have blossomed into a rainbow of colors. Even U.S. Keds come in seven colors.

Upscale canvas is the most radical news in shoes this spring, but other informal styles are kicking up their heels as well. Leather loafers explode with color variety. Sandals have broader straps. Plastic shoes, inexpensive and multicolored, continue strong.

The more formal pump — the shoe you might carry to work — continues to show no heel, or low or highish heels. Colors keep expanding, coordinated to this spring's grays, yellows and hot pinks, as well as the timeless blacks, whites, reds and navy blues.

But pumps are also two-tone or textured and cut out, cut away and cut into in every imaginable way. You wouldn't recognize some of the old spectator pumps any more.

Among the choices:

— Those sneaker chic "booties" by Ciao come in gray lined with pink, or white lined with lavender. The ankle cuff can be turned up for the puckered bootie look or turned down for a sneaker and tennis sock look. Other Ciao designs are gathered-top tennis shoes and even Oriental canvas slippers. They come with their own carrying bags, a reminder that Ciao was a luggage designer first.

— Sandals in brighter colors will be served up for those longer skirts.

— In every shoe style, there will be new natural colors as well as their opposites, and also more two-color or double-texture shoes. Pumps sporting reptile skin play off canvas or kidskin, for example. Texture is achieved through perforation, weaving and cutouts.

— The classic black patent pump is still important, though it comes in other colors now. Black patents have neutral python skin trim, red heels or chrome heels and chrome buckles.

— The plastic shoe may be this year's most interesting trend. Inexpensive and made in many colors, they're nice if you have, for example, a turquoise dress and want turquoise shoes. You wouldn't spend $120 for them, but you might spend $20, a typical plastic shoe price.

Styles create confusion

By GWEN JONES
Hearst Feature Service

If the rise and fall of hemlines leaves you confused over what heels and hose to wear, take heart. Some of the most stylish women in history have committed blunders in that department.

Contemporary designers don't make it any easier to determine the most suitable heel heights.

Designers have presented women with more fashion options than ever before — which can be bewildering. These hemline and shoe "do's and don'ts" offer some guidance for terrific legs:

With minis and skirts just above the knee, a high heel — at least 2 inches — is the most flattering. Unless you're as leggy as Christie Brinkley, avoid flats which give the illusion of a heavier leg. To achieve the longest and leanest look possible, choose pantyhose, shoes and skirts in the same color.

Skirts just below the knee are easiest to accessorize. Almost any heel works, depending on the wearer's height. Women shorter than 5-foot-4 can heighten their appearance with higher heels.

The newest hems hit about mid-calf, and they're the biggest challenge. One-inch heels, flats and matching stockings work best. Using this combination, even short women can pull off this look.

Mistakes are common with short-cropped pants. High heels (2-1/2 inches or more) don't make it. For a casual look, flats and textured hose in the same color family are eye-pleasers. One-inch heels and stockings that are color-coordinated with the pants are fine for dressier occasions, but ankle straps and sling-back heels destroy an elegant line.

Italian shoe designers mix textures, colors

With summer right around the corner, it's time to step into the latest warm weather footwear fashions. So put away the fur trims, rubber soles and suede shafts — trend-setting shoe manufacturers are unveiling new texture combinations to complement traditional leather pumps and sandals.

— CORK: Paired with leather, it gives a casual, nautical flavor to platform sandals and high-heeled pumps. On Roman sandals, cork provides a perfect footnote to a day at the beach. Sunny espadrilles on cork platforms are eye-catching when the upper is studded with colorful gems.

— LINEN: Leather and linen also are making fashion headlines this season. Linen may cover the shoe, appear across the vamp or along the sides of a leather pump. Sandals and espadrilles look nautical with thick linen straps crisscrossing the vamp and toes.

— REPTILE: Thick reptile straps woven with leather give an elegant look to high-heeled sandals. On a more casual note, soft, natural snakeskin slip-ons tell this season's safari story, with thick straps across vamps and sides for an open, airy look.

— WIRE MESH: The look sizzles but the feel is cool, light and airy. A linen pump with low, curvy heels and open toes has leather cutouts sewn onto a mesh vamp — a clever combination of American Western and jungle safari.

— LACE: On hot summer nights, the bare look is best. Some of the new lace and silk styles — matching slinky nighttime fashions — are skinny-strapped sandals perched atop high, thin heels.

All these innovative textures mix freely. Lightweight linen uppers team up with cork wedges. Wire mesh covers the toes of a tightly woven linen-and-burlap pump. Black silk sandals sport long, skinny reptile straps that wrap around ankles.

Psst. Beige hose are dead.

Got that? Dead — as in you wouldn't be caught dead in them if you have one ounce of fashion sense. If you happen to be out in public in a pair today, sorry about that. But for goodness' sake, ditch 'em quick before people start to talk. Even your grandmother probably wouldn't show her legs in them.

Wow! Just escaped, didn't you? But now that you have divested yourself of your, uh, beige hose, what are you going to wear? Well, you've got a jillion choices, but just remember that leg wear is supposed to be exciting.

OK, you're no doubt wondering what all the fuss is about; you probably felt relieved that your hose didn't have a run in them for once. Well, that's commendable, but remember — those plain-Jane stockings are a dead giveaway that you're not, gosh, current.

By now you are probably panicked. It took you 10 minutes to put an outfit together this morning and now you've got to worry about your legs, too. Well, relax; it's not as tough as it sounds. You might even have fun.

If you still have doubts — and if, for some strange reason, you haven't removed those unsightly beige hose yet — then read what some of the experts in the fashion industry are saying about leg wear.

"It seems that leg wear and shoes now are as important as ready-to-wear itself," says Andrea Rosen, fashion director of The Footwear Council in New York City.

See?

Those folks from the Big Apple are to fashion what E.F. Hutton is to the stock market, so listen up.

Jeanne Chappell, also of New York City, who does public relations for Hot Sox, Ralph Lauren, Polo and Missoni, gives an overview of what is happening in leg wear.

"The major trend in the last year is that everything is lighter weight — going into cottons and lots of textured sheers," she says, emphasizing that color and texture are currently the most important influences.

"The whole industry is headed toward a dressier approach. We've got to keep making panty hose exciting so women won't get bored. Nobody is ever going to go back to beige hose — we hope — so we've got to keep it exciting."

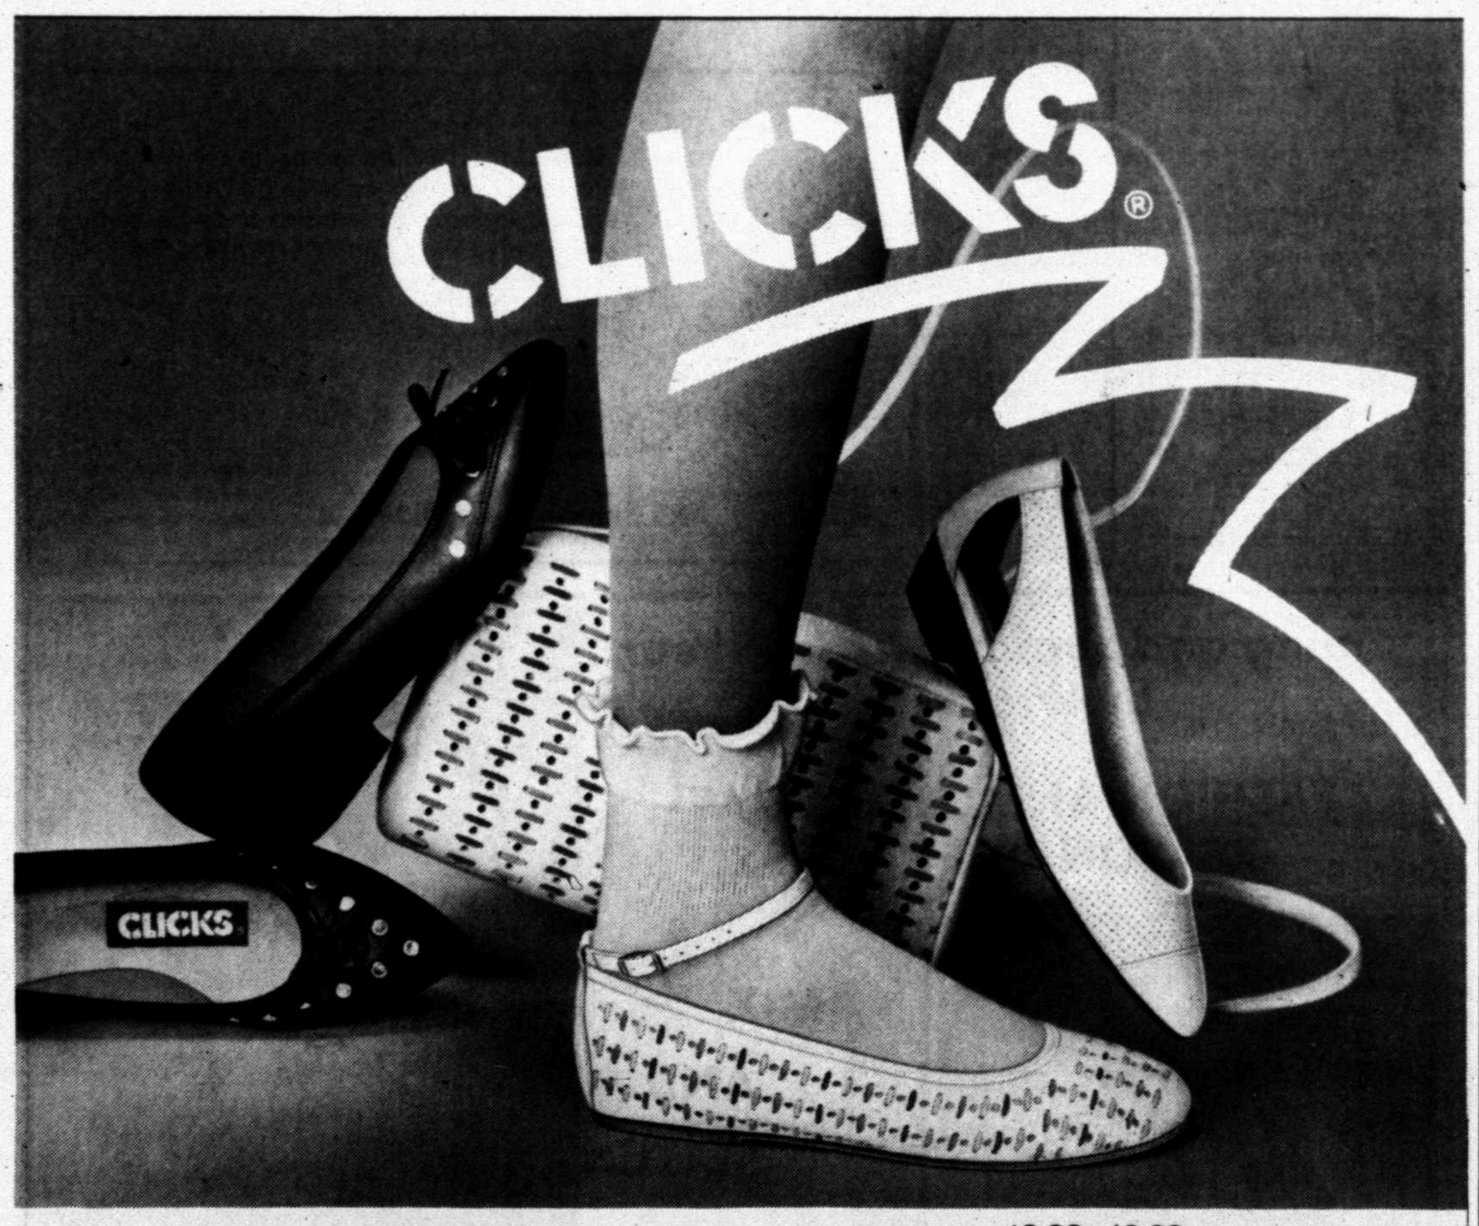

So what are they doing to make it exciting?

Ex-surfer catches wave to career

By Lucretia Steiger
Copley News Service

CHICAGO — He still looks like the La Jolla, Calif., surfer he used to be.

Matt Leddick, 31, now a resident of Connecticut, makes his living as a model in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and hundreds of exotic locations around the world.

He does fashion shows and television commercials, enough of them to support a wife, two sons and a house in the country. And he still surfs, only now off the coast of Long Island, Rhode Island and Cabo San Lucas in Mexico.

"That's a fellow who wears a 40 regular or long in a suit or jacket, is around 6 feet tall and weighs between 160 and 180 pounds." Leddick said. "If the man is smaller than that, the suits swallow you up."

As one of about a dozen male models at the show, he modeled everything from designer suits to bikinis during an intensive three days of spring-summer previews for the Men's Fashion Association.

The 6-foot-1, green-eyed Leddick, who is affiliated with Zoli, a New York modeling agency, said he has the usual model's worries: his skin, which he moisturizes with Nivea, vitamin E and "something from Lancôme," and his receding hairline.

But he's having success with that. A "hair treatment guy in New York" now keeps his scalp so healthy that he says his hairline has stopped receding. And, anyway, "there's plenty of a market for older guys in modeling, up to 60 or 65 or beyond."

But he doesn't advise young men to take up modeling even if they fit all the height, weight and looks requirements.

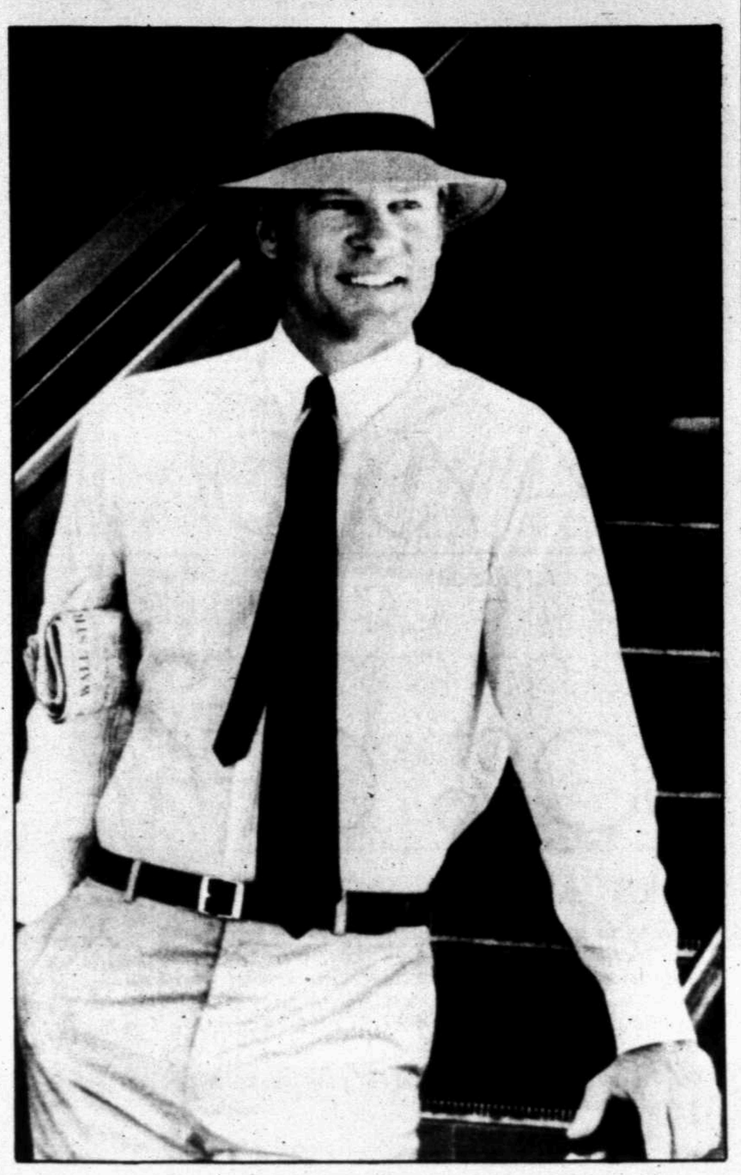

"When you get to Los Angeles or New York, there are 1,000 guys as perfect or more perfect than you are. The ones that make the megabucks have perfect hair, perfect skin and perfect bodies. It's very difficult to get into this kind of work.

"What you have to do is figure out how you look best and stick with it. Then you develop a reputation for being professional."

But that's not exactly how he got started. Leddick grew up in San Diego, then graduated from San Diego State University with a degree in sociology in 1975. Taking some time off and traveling around the country, he eventually contacted an uncle who was the creative director of advertising for Revlon.

"He said I was the right size, the right weight and the right height for modeling. So I checked around and finally was accepted by Wilhelmina (a New York modeling agency). Then I didn't work for a year.

"You have to do a lot of testing to learn how to carry yourself and make the clothes look good. Somewhere along there, I had the good fortune to meet Olivero Toscani, a well-known photographer, who took me to Milan (Italy) and that was my big break. When he began his career, he worked every day for six months. "Modeling is very demanding. You have to have your energy level up for show after show. Sometimes it's just insane. Then when you do get to relax, you're absolutely exhausted. Everybody thinks that modeling is glamorous, but it's just a job like any other. We earn our money."

Crisp shirts spruce up spring season

Spring is a season of new beginnings and, for the fashion conscious, a time to shuck the woolens of winter and update last season's wardrobe. A few crisp, new shirts in the latest styles and colors is one of the easiest — and least expensive — ways of sprucing up a man's wardrobe.

With surveys showing that men are becoming more confident about fashion — especially color — menswear makers are offering exciting new shirtings this spring for both dress and casual wear.

"Increasingly, a man will buy a boldly striped or large windowpane-check shirt and he'll have the fashion savvy to match it with the right suit and tie," says Richard Monds, vice president at Sero Shirtmakers.

A focal point for spring shirtings is the collar. The oxford button-down, once considered the representative business shirt, is enjoying renewed popularity. "We're seeing more and more young people buying traditional button-down models for business and casual wear," Monds says.

In the '50s, button-downs were almost compulsory. The '60s counterculture considered them establishment, and in the '70s they were "preppie." Now they're cool fashion, available in almost any shade, from red to khaki to white.

Whether you're a formal or casual dresser, updated or traditional, Monds suggests you consider these quality points when choosing additions to your spring shirt wardrobe:

— SEAMS. Turn the clothing inside out. All seams should be finished to prevent fraying and unraveling and allow a smooth fit on the body. In addition, a well-made garment will have extra stitching at stress points, such as shoulder seams.

— COLLAR. Make sure it lays flat and doesn't pucker. The mark of a good button-down collar is a full, softly rolling "liberty bell" curve.

— BUTTONS. Lightly tug a button to ensure it's sewn on well. Make sure the buttons look as though they'll withstand repeated wearings.

Neckwear exec describes point of ties

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — To many men, a tie is one of those necessities of professional life, something to be put on in the morning at some point between shaving and starting the car and taken off at the very instant circumstances will allow. To Norman Propper, a tie is more ... much more.

He started Serica — he said the word means "silky hand" in Italian. The happy ending, of course, is that the company took off. Sales last year totaled $1.8 million, said Propper, and they're expected to exceed $2 million this year.

Serica makes ties the old-fashioned way — by hand, a practice Propper said is all but dead in the industry. "From a functional point of view," said Propper, "the tie has more resilience. When you hang it up, the tie is not stiff, and it can bounce back into shape."

He believes yet another reason for his company's success is that it "dares to show a little bit of expression in neckwear." In most stores today, he said, "all the ties look alike," with a preponderance of small, all-over pattern or stripes. While Serica sells "tons" of those ties (at prices ranging from $25 to $50), it also branches out. One of the most popular styles for spring — "we're on our fifth reorder," he boasted — is a print design that looks very much as though a painter had casually slapped on the color with a wide brush and gotten tired of the whole project midway through. For fall, he said, he has commissioned a number of fabrics printed with small flowers because that inner voice tells him men are ready for florals again.

In addition, he's thinking about playing around with the width of the tie (every bit as burning an issue in the menswear business as hem length is in women's fashion). "The industry is presently producing around 98 percent of its better ties at three and a quarter inches," he said, explaining that tie widths change in accordance with lapel width and collar length in something near 10-year cycles.

Though he likes to remind people that a young unknown named Ralph Lauren got his start in ties, he seems disinclined to emulate that example. While Serica will produce a limited line of dress shirts for fall because "there is that feeling to move on," Propper said he intends to limit any future endeavors to the dress furnishings area. For while his business is important to him, it's definitely not everything. "I never ever," he said, quite adamantly, "want it to overwhelm me."

Swimwear styles blamed on Rio — or Sports Illustrated

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Blame it on Rio, or maybe Sports Illustrated.

Either way, expect to reveal the real you if you wear the newest swimsuits. Maillots are minute, bikinis are teeny, and they're all designed to show skin that has never seen the light of day.

If you've got a new Nautilus body, this is your year to show it off. If not, this is your year to work it off. The swimsuits are almost always fashionable, sometimes functional and rarely forgiving. So, unless you plan to spend the summer under a cover-up, be prepared to show skin.

Swimsuits have been "better in the past two to three years than they've ever been," says Jule Campbell, associate editor of Sports Illustrated.

She should know. Campbell is the force behind SI's swimsuit edition (which came out the week of Feb. 13), and she begins planning the year's photo shooting in September, when she views the resort collections of 30 to 35 manufacturers.

Because the swimsuit issue has such clout — and can bring fame to both models and swimwear companies — Campbell's judgment means a lot.

"In September, I look at all the suits, take notes and make sketches," Campbell says. She imagines how a suit will look in a particular locale, and, sometimes, she has bathing suits specifically made for a shoot.

For a shooting on a pyramid of rock salt in Bonaire, an island in the Antilles, Campbell had one sequined bikini and one rhinestone-studded bikini made especially by Gottex. The company will incorporate those designs into its own line, Campbell says, but at $100 and $150 each, the bikinis will not rush out of the stores.

In fact, many of the suits modeled in SI have a certain show quality that would sink in real life. What the magazine has done is propel the fashion status of swimsuits. (Cheryl Tiegs and Christie Brinkley helped some, too.)

In the last few years — spurred by SI, the fitness boom, new fabrics, a healthier economy and innovative designers like Norma Kamali — swimsuits have undergone a fashion revolution. What manufacturers can do with less-than-a-yard of cloth is amazing.

Norma Kamali has done wonders with variations on the tank — adding zippers, snaps and a cire finish for shine. This year, she also offers draped, jersey suits that have a Betty Grable look. Her terry cover-ups are some of the most practical around, too.

"I never make a model wear a suit that she doesn't want to wear," Campbell says. "If they look good — and they feel it — they get excited, and they show the suit off better."

That goes for you, too. Even if you're not Christie Brinkley.

Simple clothing care maintains investments

Shopping for clothes each season can be costly — even more costly if you don't know how to maintain these important investments. Keeping your clothes in good condition will help them last longer and look better.

JANE TERKER, vice president of marketing, Halston Fragrances-Orlane Inc.: An important part of your wardrobe is your fragrance, but some perfumes can stain your clothes. Avoid fabric damage by making sure your fragrance is completely dry before dressing. Reapply your fragrance to the backs of your knees and wrists to minimize the risk of dripping or spilling on your clothes.

To get more mileage out of your original fragrance application, layer one fragrance form over another, like perfume over body lotion. The scent will last longer so you won't have to apply it as often when you're dressed.

If you still want your clothes to wear your favorite fragrance, consider using scented drawer liners or tucking scented candles or empty perfume bottles with their caps off into your drawers.

BETTY HALBREICH, director of "Solutions," the personal shopping service at Bergdorf Goodman: Knowing simple techniques for clothes care can save you money. I advise washing most fabrics by hand rather than dry cleaning.

To keep clothing clean on a day-to-day basis, use a lint brush. This works well on all fabrics but silk.

Keep beaded and sequined evening clothes in sparkling condition by storing them in a dark garment bag made of silk or rayon. Do not put them in plastic because this will cause the sequins and beads to lose their shine and become cloudy.

Keep your cottons looking fresh by rolling them up and placing them in the refrigerator for a while before ironing. If you're in a hurry, stick them in the freezer. This makes the cotton more receptive to ironing and the clothes will end up with a crisp feeling.

To care for sweaters properly, wash them in a cold water soap, rinse and squeeze out excess water. Then roll up the sweater in a towel and wring it in the towel. After removing the sweater from the towel, shake the sweater to remove wrinkles. This also lifts the nap and restores life to the fabric. When blocking, use straight pins to hold the garment onto the towel and pin another towel on top of the sweater to help absorb excess water.

A word of caution: Pay careful attention to the way you hang your clothes. Button all buttons on suit jackets, shirts and dresses. Crease pants properly before draping them. Never hang sweaters — they'll keep their shape better if folded neatly in a drawer.

MALLORY SAMSON, fashion editor of Bride's magazine: White is the color news for spring. Storing your whites, especially linens, in blue tissue paper will keep them as white as new. Only use blue or pink tissue paper, since white paper reacts chemically to the white fabric and causes yellowing.

On special occasions, such as a wedding day, most people are conscious of their posture. They want to look their best when they're having their picture taken. But good posture should be maintained on a daily basis. Good posture helps clothes keep their shape and fit you better.

Mondale says 'sleaze factor' exists in Reagan administration

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Walter Mondale, on a money-raising swing through through Southern California, says there is a "sleaze factor" in President Reagan's administration and vows to "establish a standard America can be proud of again."

"For nearly three years, almost every couple of weeks, another rotten apple is falling out of a tree," Mondale said at a $100 per person fund-raising event Wednesday night.

Buoyed by his Illinois Democratic presidential primary victory Tuesday over rivals Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Mondale cited a string of controversies surrounding Reagan's administration.

He listed last year's turmoil in the Environmental Protection Agency, the current furor over the nomination of presidential counselor Edwin Meese for attorney general, the sale of federal lands at "fire-sale prices," and CIA director William S. Casey's much-criticized ties to Wall Street.

"It's what I call the sleaze factor," he said. "The one thing that's consistent is nothing but silence from the White House."

In Albuquerque, N.M., earlier, Mondale also spoke of a "sleaze factor" in the Reagan administration and mentioned the Meese nomination and controversies surrounding the U.S. Information Agency under Reagan friend Charles Z. Wick.

HE SAID THE REAGAN administration has a "tawdry record of unethical conduct that seems to pop out almost every week."

"I think they're out of sync," he said of the administration while in New Mexico. "They're going to find that out soon and they're going to be out of the White House soon."

Mondale also blasted Reagan's "upside-down" policies in Central America, which he said ignored human rights. He said he supported efforts to delay a congressional vote on Reagan's proposed $93 million aid package to El Salvador until after that country holds elections Sunday.

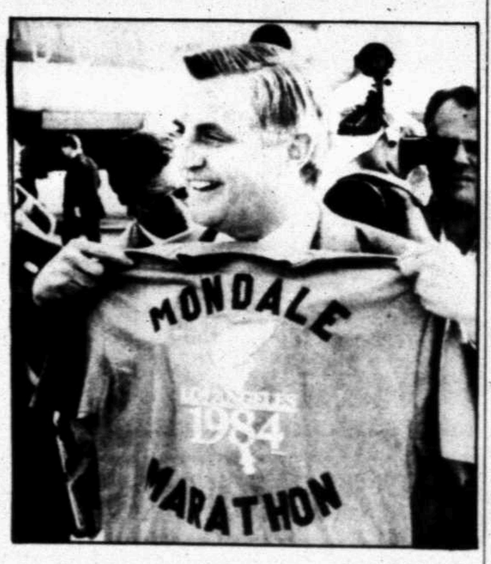

"The fact of it is that those elections were designed by this administration to paper over fundamental problems," he said. "Elections cannot solve problems that are that deep."

Mondale added that if the elections resulted in victory for right-wing candidate Roberto D'Aubuisson he would favor "at least reducing" U.S. aid to the nation.

MONDALE, AT A $100-per-person reception in Century City, received warm praise from Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, former Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher and former Secretary of Education Shirley M. Hufstedler.

He said he was optimistic about beating the president in Reagan's home state of California if the two are matched in the general election, and predicted the race between himself and Hart would not be settled before the state's relatively late June 5 primary.

"California's going to be the shoot-out time at the OK Corral," Mondale said. "You'll decide probably how this is going to be resolved leading up to the San Francisco (Democratic) convention" on July 15.

AP Laserphoto

Presidential candidate Walter Mondale holds up a T-shirt given to him Wednesday by his California campaign chairman, Mickey Kantor, upon Mondale's arrival in the Southland for a series of fund raisers.

Mondale accused Hart of having taken "seven basic inconsistent positions" on the issue of arms control over the past several months, and said that issue would be a key one for Democratic voters in upcoming primaries and caucuses.

Mondale was also attending other fund-raising events Wednesday night, including two receptions where tickets cost $500 to $1,000 a person.

Today he was attending a breakfast of businessmen and members of the gay community in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley.

MONDALE'S STATE chairman, Mickey Kantor, said Hart's surge beginning with his Feb. 28 New Hampshire primary victory proves to be a "big favor" to Mondale in terms of California fund raising.

"Two months ago, people thought this was a slam-dunk," and were more complacent about giving money than they have been since the Hart surge, Kantor said. He said the campaign's biggest problem in California is not raising money but being careful not to spend too much — since Mondale has spent just over half the $20.2 million federal campaign spending limit for the period up to the Democratic National Convention.

"Raising money is no problem for us," Kantor said. "Right now the problem is for us to husband our resources."

Candidates given $1.2 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury will forward $1.2 million in matching funds to five Democrats today, with Walter F. Mondale getting $609,413, or half the money.

Sen. Gary Hart qualified for only $9,630 in this round of matching funds, approved Wednesday by the Federal Election Commission.

Mondale now has gotten nearly $5.9 million in matching funds to Hart's $948,535. The candidates can submit requests for matching funds every two weeks.

Hart's campaign, outspent 4-to-1 by Mondale through February, said Wednesday it has raised approximately $1.8 million in the first 20 days of March, two-thirds of which should qualify for matching funds.

The FEC also approved $313,802 in matching funds for the Rev. Jesse Jackson on Wednesday, giving him a total of $702,157. It also approved $210,515 for George McGovern and $69,223 for Sen. John Glenn of Ohio for contributions they submitted before dropping out of the race.

To date, eight Democrats have shared $14.2 million in matching funds. The commission is expected to approve shortly President Reagan's request for matching funds for his unopposed bid for the Republican nomination.

Eligible candidates can get matching funds for all individual donations of up to $250. Those who withdraw can still get matching funds if they have debts to pay off.

Hart pitches to Jewish population

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart, opening his New York presidential primary campaign with a pitch to the state's large Jewish population, is stressing his support for moving the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem while suggesting that Walter F. Mondale missed an opportunity to make the proposal a reality.

"I do support and have stated that as president I would move that embassy to the capital of Israel and that that should be done unilaterally and without negotiations," Hart told reporters Wednesday night after a rally at his New York headquarters.

He said Mondale "did nothing" as far as he knew, to implement the move in his four years as vice president.

It was Hart's first trip to the state since he lost the Illinois primary to Mondale on Tuesday. The Colorado senator intends to spend most of the next two weeks in New York, which holds its primary on April 3, and neighboring Connecticut, which votes next week.

Mondale had previously questioned Hart's commitment to the movement of the embassy to the Israeli capital of Jerusalem. He said that Hart is the author of a letter that suggests the move not be made without negotiations with neighboring Arab states.

Since Arab countries regard Jerusalem as territory occupied by Israel, Mondale says that would doom any chance for a move of the embassy, currently located in Tel Aviv.

But Hart told reporters that the "only deviation" in his support for the move was in suggesting "that we could or could not make that move unilaterally without negotiations as part of a settlement under" the Camp David peace agreements.

"But that was a purely voluntary effort," Hart said.

The Colorado senator also seemed anxious to attack Mondale on that and other subjects of importance to the large Jewish population in New York. He had an opportunity to continue his attack during a meeting scheduled for today with leaders of large Jewish organizations.

"Now, if Vice President Mondale wants to get into a debate on the Middle East, I would be glad to point out his support for sale of F-15s to Saudi Arabia," Hart said. That jet fighter sale was proposed during former President Carter's administration, which Mondale served as vice president, and opposed vigorously by Israel.
