Gorbachev returns to power; tanks pull out

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev reclaimed power and flew home to the Soviet capital early today, arriving just 70 hours after he was ousted by hard-liners in the Communist Party, KGB and military.

Russian police jailed KGB chief Vladimir Kryuchkov after he stepped off the plane that returned him to Moscow with Gorbachev, and Russian lawmaker Anatoly Mostovoy said "reliable sources" reported the seven other members of the junta also had been picked up. Kryuchkov and some of others earlier had traveled to Gorbachev's resort home in the Crimea.

As the coup wilted, Russian Federation President Boris Yeltsin emerged triumphant, having rallied his people to resistance from the streets of major Soviet cities to the mines of Siberia. Tens of thousands of Russians celebrated his victory outside the Russian Parliament.

Tanks withdrew from Moscow and national legislative leaders invalidated the coup leaders' decrees, including press restrictions. Even the Communist Party denounced the overthrow, and the Soviet prosecutor opened a criminal investigation.

The 60-year-old Gorbachev, apparently concerned about his safety, arrived in the middle of the night with extraordinarily tight security at Moscow's VIP airport.

Gorbachev, smiling broadly, appeared tired but showed no visible indication of ill health. He was casually dressed in a loose, tan sportcoat and sweater instead of his usual impeccable dark suit and tie.

"This is some serious victory of the perestroika process," he told Soviet television at the Moscow airport.

Speaking in the third person, he said the coup organizers had tried to isolate him.

"What did they do to the president and his family? For 72 hours, they surrounded him with troops, and they wanted to break his willpower, but they lost," Gorbachev said. "And here is my respect to the Soviet people, and specifically, to

Yeltsin emerges from crisis triumphant

By Celestine Bohlen
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — As army tanks were leaving the city Wednesday, a triumphant Boris N. Yeltsin appeared before the Russian Parliament to a standing ovation.

But in a calm and measured speech, the Russian president shifted credit for the derailment of the coup elsewhere, to the tens of thousands of Muscovites who rose to the defense of their elected government, ready to face tanks with sticks and stones if necessary.

The tribute was a mark of Yeltsin's sure-footed political prowess. Once again, he has shown the country and the world that he can summon the democratic yearnings of the Russian people, and put their political will into play.

Tribute's a mark of sure-footed political prowess.

"Yeltsin's style is to create the illusion of power with willpower," a senior Western diplomat said Wednesday, commenting on the Russian president's extraordinary performance this week.

From his command post at the Russian government building, Yeltsin was able to swing together the elements that, in the end, helped reverse the coup without large-scale bloodshed.

His political mandate provided the cover for those troops who defected from the coup makers' command, and his appeals for calm and discipline were effective in controlling the passions on the barricades around the Russian government building.

By the time it was over, he had established himself as the force to be reck-

AUSTIN — Midland County would be split three ways and some residents might end up being represented by an incumbent congressman who lives in San Antonio if a House congressional redistricting bill approved Wednesday becomes law. ## Sheriff says he'll comply with county's restriction

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The day after Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter filed a lawsuit against the Commissioners' Court to protest the court's order to curtail his out-of-county investigations and sting operations, the sheriff said he would comply with the Aug. 12 court order.

"If we don't abide by the order," Painter said Wednesday, "they can hold us in contempt and fine the people — anybody that violates it."

The decision to abide by the order does not affect the lawsuit, he added.

Painter's attorney, Hal Upchurch of Monahans, had suggested that the sheriff honor the order because "there could be (contempt-of-court) ramifications."

The order, entitled "Resolution Policy and Order," sets out guidelines tied to strict money management and specifically says under what circumstances any county agent,

Elizabeth Henry has a thing for watches, enjoys swimming and likes to take photographs.

"She liked to go to Wadley Baron Park and take pictures of the ducks," said Lynn Henry, her mother.

Elizabeth, a senior at Lee High School, has thought about seeking a photojournalism degree — or maybe a teaching certificate in history — when she goes to college. Texas A&M was her latest choice.

Before that can happen, Elizabeth needs to come home and finish high school.

Elizabeth, 17, hasn't been home since Monday, her father Ralph's birthday, when she disappeared under suspicious circumstances.

Police believe she was abducted.

"We have nothing to show otherwise," said Lt. Earl Luckey with the Crimes Against Persons division of the Midland Police Department.

On Monday afternoon, emergency 911 received a call for help from Elizabeth. The plea was cut short by Elizabeth's scream and the line going dead.

Police were at her 3610 Apollo Court residence about five minutes later. No one was home.

Police were notified about two hours later when Elizabeth's parents arrived home and became suspicious. The lights, television and stereo had been left on. The dogs were inside.

COUP: Hard-liners' 3-day power grab collapses

(From 1A)

Boris Yeltsin, the president of Russia, and to all labor collectives, to all people who stood up in the way of reaction."

The coup's failure will weaken efforts by hard-liners in the Communist Party, KGB and military to thwart reforms Gorbachev and Yeltsin favor. The hard-liners' defeat inevitably will alter the balance of power between conservatives and reformers that has characterized Soviet politics since Gorbachev took power in 1985.

The plane carrying the Soviet leader landed at 2:15 a.m. today (6:15 p.m. CDT Wednesday) at Moscow's Vnukovo-2 Airport, guarded by 200 troops, including 130 from the Russian republic's Interior Ministry. Normally, the Soviet president is guarded by the KGB.

The anti-coup demonstrators outside the Russian Parliament, Yeltsin's stronghold since the coup began Monday, waved red-white-and-blue Russian flags and roared with approval at the hard-liners' retreat. Some wore shredded Soviet flags as armbands and bandanas. At least four people were killed earlier nearby in overnight clashes with Soviet soldiers.

"We've stopped the attempts to seize our building and take our legally elected president!" Gen. Konstantin Kobets, chairman of the Parliament Defense Committee, told the elated crowd. "This, comrades, is your victory!"

In a statement read on state TV, Gorbachev told the nation he was in full control and credited the "decisive actions of the democratic forces of the country."

The statement said "adventurists" would be "held fully and completely responsible for their unlawful actions."

Gorbachev told President Bush in a telephone call at 6:19 p.m (11:19 p.m. CDT) that the coup was over; it began at 4 a.m. Monday (8 p.m. CDT Sunday) when the KGB confined Gorbachev to his Crimean dacha.

Although Yeltsin stood firmly behind Gorbachev during the coup, the two approach reforms differently and have fought bitterly in the past. Yeltsin favors a faster move toward democracy and a market economy.

In his TV statement, Gorbachev said Yeltsin, Kazakhstan President Nursultan Nazarbayev, and the leaders of the Ukraine, Byelorussia and Uzbekistan assured him in telephone conversations their republics opposed his ouster.

There was some early criticism of Gorbachev. Alexander Yakovlev, until recently a close aide, said Wednesday that blame for the coup lay with Gorbachev for choosing "a team of traitors."

In the United States, Bush hailed the coup's end.

"Freedom and democracy have prevailed," the president said. He said Gorbachev was "elated" and expressed appreciation.

YELTSIN: Russian emerges as a world leader

oned with — with or without his erstwhile nemesis, President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. Leaders of other republics, some belatedly, adopted his formula for opposing the coup, foreign leaders were on the phone to him, and people in the street began to speak of him with new awe.

Already, he [illegible] pushed all this to advantage — issuing decrees on the Russian republic's long-sought sovereignty, pre-empting the signing of the union treaty that before the coup was to redefine the republics' relationships with Moscow, redistributing power away from the Soviet national leadership.

For those who look on his appeal to the masses with trepidation, his moves to take control of central government agencies, the central television station and army units on Russian territory smack of an ominous overextension of his power. But supporters see these actions as a rightful attempt to defend the republic's democratic gains against encroachments.

Through the three-day crisis, Yeltsin's popularity proved itself over and over again. Demonstrators chanted his name as often as they shouted slogans against the people they called the "putschists."

Outside the Russian government building, housewives and workers, students and intellectuals said they had come out in the rain to defend "their" president, flaunting their pride in the man they chose as Russia's first elected president only two months ago.

From the moment he clambered, uninvited but unimpeded, onto a Soviet army tank to read his challenge to the new Kremlin authorities, Yeltsin tapped into a deep popular frustration among the Russian people, who time and again have been robbed of a chance to choose their own destiny.

In the past, Yeltsin has seemed to draw strength from negative circumstances. He was elected by more than 60 percect of the vote in June, even after being repeatedly vilified in the official press.

SURVEY: Midland climbs into top-100 places list

from time to time uncovered on the national level, Owens said. "Apparently, those conducting the survey recognized the many qualities we have going for us."

Texas was popular with the magazines raters, claiming three of the top 10 spots: Bryan at No. 3; Lubbock at No. 5 and Austin at No. 9.

Another seven Texas cities also landed among the 50 best places to live, ranging from Galveston-Texas City at No. 13 to Houston at No. 46.

All of the 25 Texas cities ranked improved in this year's edition of the magazine, which was published Wednesday. But no city matched the 194-position improvement in the Tall City.

Debra Wishik Englander, co-author of the magazine's story, said the strong showing of Texas cities "surprised us because in other years Texas has not done as well."

Bernard Weinstein, an economics professor at North Texas State University in Denton, said he, too, was puzzled by the high Texas rankings, particularly those of the Rio Grande cities, which have suffered from well-publicized environmental problems.

In ranking the nation's 300 largest metropolitan areas, Money asked its subscribers what they valued in a place to live. Their top priorities were clean water, low crime, clean air, abundant medical services and strong local government.

The magazine then collected information on the 300 metro areas and fed it into a computer.

Bryan, a central Texas city of 122,000, was the third-best place to live in the nation, the magazine said, after the Provo-Orem metro area in Utah, which ranked first, and Bremerton, Wash., a Seattle suburb, which came in second this year after topping the 1990 list.

Bryan was singled out for its low jobless rate — 3 percent — and its well-educated labor force, affordable housing and the variety of research firms that A&M has attracted.

Money disagreed with Mac Davis' sentiment that "Happiness is Lubbock, Texas, in My Rear-View Mirror," praising the South Plains city for its low cost of living — 6.3 percent below the national average — and pleasant climate. Cotton growing, Reese Air Force Base and Texas Tech keep its economy rolling, the magazine added.

Leaders of the high-ranking cities were predictably delighted.

Bryan City Manager Ernest Clark said his area scored well because of "our location, the people who live here and the opportunities that are afforded us here. Plus, we have the advantages of what the university (A&M) brings in."

Those advantages seemed consistent throughout the Top Ten, nine of which are home to major state-supported universities.

This year's big winner, the metro area of Provo-Orem, (population: 263,000), has one of the best-educated work forces in the nation, Money magazine said, adding that 94 percent of area students graduate from high school. The area is home to more than 80 computer software companies, including WordPerfect.

Money praised Provo-Orem as "an area known for unabashed fertility — of its farmland, its Mormon inhabitants, and more recently its industrial development."

Money, meanwhile, described the bottom five on the list as "a battered cadre of New England cities grievously wounded by the collapse of manufacturing, real estate and financial services."

They are: Manchester, N.H.; Fall River, Mass.; Pawtucket, R.I.; New Britain, Conn.; and dead last at No. 300, Waterbury, Conn.

The Bryan city manager Clark added: "I can assure you, our city's going to take advantage of this (report). Our people can't be blamed for boasting a little bit about something like this."

Rod Ellis, a Lubbock spokesman, said, "We're pleased, but we sure don't like to be behind the Aggies. That's the only bad thing we can say about (the survey)."

This year's ranking of the Texas cities in the survey (followed by last year's in parenthesis) are:

3. Bryan (100)
5. Lubbock (75)
9. Austin (61)
13. Galveston-Texas City (32)

SHERIFF: Decision does not affect lawsuit

not just the sheriff or his deputies, may cross the county line while on duty or "in a compensatory-leave status."

The Commissioners' Court, headed by its presiding officer, Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer, had issued the Aug. 12 order and a similarly spirited July 23 directive to keep the sheriff's operations focused on Midland County.

The sheriff, who noted that he was not rebellious by nature, had decried restrictions inherent in the directive and in the order. He said those restrictions would inhibit his carrying out the sheriff's lawful duties, and would ignore the limitations.

"We did feel that we had the right to enforce the law," Painter said, and suggested he would be compromising his duties as sheriff by strictly following the order he had viewed as unlawful.

But since Painter's lawsuit was filed in Midland's 238th Texas State District Court on Tuesday, the sheriff apparently has tempered his view on how the conflict over the order, styled "Painter vs. Seltzer," should be resolved.

"We are trying to do right," Painter said Wednesday. "I will be glad when a judge can make a decision" on the validity of the Commissioners' Court order.

John Hyde is presiding judge of the 238th District Court for Midland County.

"When you get in front of a district court judge, there's no politics," Painter said. "There's no more bashing around in the media. It's either right or wrong. It's legal or illegal."

In abiding by the court order in seeking the court's authorization to leave the county "while in a duty status or in a compensatory-leave status," several deputies had submitted permission slips to the Commissioners' Court not long after Painter had filed the lawsuit on Tuesday.

They were rejected.

Commissioner Guy McCrary called the appearance of the deputies an orchestrated parade that smacked of mockery of the court because the sheriff had deemed the order invalid. McCrary said the irony of permission-to-leave-the-county slips for criminal investigation purposes or, in the case of compensatory-leave status, for a holiday.

The "parade" was a naive gesture designed to be provocative, McCrary said. "I consider that expressly unprofessional."

"We have every intention of complying with the (court's) resolution," said Clayton McKinney, the captain of the sheriff's Operations Division.

He cited the order that, in cases not specified in the order, said the county judge, Seltzer, or the judge pro tem, Commissioner Durward Wright, may grant permission for a county agent to leave the county while on duty or on compensatory-leave status.

"We did not write the resolution (order)," McKinney said. "If there is a mockery made of the court, it comes from the resolution. We're trying to comply with it."

In attempting to restrict most county operations to Midland County, the Commissioners' Court is trying to tame the county budget and is trying to lessen liability risks and minimize financial losses should a suit arise from an out-of-county or out-of-state operation. The Commissioners' Court said it would not pay for unauthorized out-of-county expenses and would not pay for the defense of any county agent sued while out-of-county on unauthorized county business.

a school meeting earlier that day.

The young woman and her car were gone, but not her sunglasses, and the case and cleansers for her contacts. Elizabeth never left home without those items.

A search for the missing girl began late Monday.

Two police detectives worked 36 hours straight before taking a break. State law enforcement authorities and the FBI were notified. Police have spent numerous hours taking statements from friends and associates. A helicopter from Lubbock was brought in to aid in the investigation.

Friends of Elizabeth have taken up force to find the missing girl.

"We had all the kids over on Monday asking 'What can we do?'" Mrs. Henry said.

About 10 youngsters spent Monday night searching the Midland area for Elizabeth's car.

The vehicle was found Tuesday morning at Midland International Airport. There were no signs of Elizabeth except her purse in the car.

The youths still were searching for their missing friend on Wednesday.

Flyers that sought information about the whereabouts of Elizabeth began popping up around Midland.

"I'm glued to the phone. I haven't been out of the house but to go to the mailbox," said Mrs. Henry on Wednesday while anxiously awaiting to hear some news about Elizabeth.

Police officials did not have any solid leads on Wednesday.

Leaders discuss survival of Yugoslav government

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (NYT) — Gunfights erupted in the Yugoslav Republic of Croatia again Wednesday as the country's leaders agreed for the first time to provide temporarily for the survival of the federal government.

Rebel Serbs, reportedly with Yugoslav army support, occupied the eastern Croatian panhandle town of Beli Manastir, Croatian and Serbian news broadcasts said Wednesday night. Fierce fighting has been reported almost daily near the mostly Croatian and ethnic Hungarian town for weeks.

Yugoslavia's eight-member federal presidency, federal government ministers, and presidents and representatives of the country's six republics agreed Wednesday night to create the conditions necessary to allow the federal government to function normally for a three-month negotiation period.

The leaders agreed to strengthen the government's much deteriorated control over monetary policy, including banking links with foreign countries, the federal budget and customs.

But the government of breakaway Croatia balked at a proposal for financing the Serb-and Communist-dominated Yugoslav National Army, which it accuses of siding with the rebel Serbs, who have taken control of sizeable swaths of Croatian territory on which Serbs have a majority population.

On Wednesday morning, Yugoslav Air Force jets strafed the village of Sarvas, near the eastern Croatian town of Osijek, Zagreb radio said. Sarvas, which has been deserted by its inhabitants, is held by Croatian militiamen. Gun battles and mortar attacks were also reported in Pakrac, Topusko, Darovar and other towns.

Two people have been confirmed dead in Wednesday's clashes, but a complete picture of casualties is not expected to emerge for several days.

A Croatian official asserted Wednesday evening that about 60 Serbs were killed in fighting during the last several days for the town of Pakrac, but there was no independent confirmation of his assertion.

McCarthy comforts family of Terry Waite

LONDON (AP) — Relatives of Terry Waite said Wednesday they were "comforted by the good news" they received from freed hostage John McCarthy, who was held captive with Waite in Lebanon.

In a related development, Shiite Muslim sources in Beirut said Wednesday that top Hezbollah and Iranian leaders in Tehran were discussing steps that could restart stalled U.N.-sponsored efforts to exchange Western hostages in Lebanon for Arab prisoners in Israel.

Hezbollah, or Party of God, is believed to be the umbrella group for factions loyal to Iran that hold most of the 11 Westerners missing in Lebanon.

Waite's wife, Frances, his brother David, and Frances Witts, the Middle East affairs adviser to the archbishop of Canterbury, met with McCarthy for five hours at an undisclosed location in Britain.

"John was relaxed and in good spirits and was able to describe how their living conditions had improved and how the four hostages had been able to support each other," David Waite said.

"The good thing about the meeting was the fact that we were able to meet face-to-face and talk with someone who had been with Terry (Waite) so recently," he said.

McCarthy was held with Terry Waite, an Anglican church envoy, until two days before his Aug. 8 release.

It was not disclosed when the meeting took place. McCarthy met Sunday with Peggy Say, the sister of American hostage Terry Anderson.

The Beirut sources, who all spoke on condition of anonymity, said the consultations between Iranian officials and three Hezbollah leaders focus on how and when to provide U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar with information Israel wants on seven of its servicemen missing in Lebanon.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, sent a letter to Perez de Cuellar with McCarthy on Aug. 8 proposing a swap of the hostages and missing Israeli servicemen for Shiites held by Israel and Western nations.

Israel has said it is prepared to make some "gestures" if factions holding its seven MIAs in Lebanon released reliable information on them.

Other sources with knowledge about the talks in Tehran predicted the lost momentum in the hostage negotiations would be regained in September.

"There seems to be a consensus among fundamentalist leaders here that Iran wants to accelerate the process of resolving the hostage issue," said a fundamentalist source in Lebanon.

SOVIET CRISIS

World hails failure of putsch as victory for democracy

LONDON (AP) — World leaders hailed the collapse of the hard-line Soviet coup on Wednesday as a victory for democracy and a demonstration of the will and courage of the Soviet people. Impromptu celebrations broke out in Germany and Israel.

The leaders of the coup against President Mikhail S. Gorbachev "underestimated the power of the people, underestimated what a taste of freedom and democracy brings," President Bush said as the 3-day-old revolt disintegrated.

Bush said failure of the coup in the face of opposition led by Russian republic President Boris Yeltsin meant "a gigantic leap forward" for democracy, "because we will have seen its underpinnings. We will have seen its inherent strength."

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said he was "deeply impressed by the courage of those who have stood for democratic values." The right side has won.

"The right side has won ... I think this now means that reform in the Soviet Union is absolutely irreversible," said British Prime Minister John Major.

"It shows there is such a thing as human progress, however faltering," British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd said at a NATO meeting in Brussels.

"The three ugly sisters — the party, the KGB and the Ministry of Defense — tried to impose by traditional means their will, and it did not work. That is obviously the beginning of a new chapter."

Norway's prime minister, Gro Harlem Brundtland, said: "Boris Yeltsin's exceptional courage and strength of will in the face of a seemingly superior force will go down in history as a example for all those who fight for people's right to freedom and self-determination."

From its headquarters in Tunisia, the Palestine Liberation Organization called the coup "a purely internal affair," according to the PLO news agency WAFA. The agency said leaders who earlier praised the coup were expressing their personal views and didn't "reflect the official position of the PLO in any way."

At Israel's Ben-Gurion International Airport near Tel Aviv, a group of Soviet tourists clapped and jumped for joy as they learned that the coup in Moscow was breaking up.

Moscow jazz musician Arkady Chikloper took out his horn and started improvising wildly in the airport arrival hall.

"This is a great day for democracy," he said.

After German television reported the coup leaders were fleeing Moscow, about 500 people flooded the central marketplace in Dresden in what was formerly East Germany. In Leipzig, also in eastern Germany, about 400 people took to the streets in celebration.

"The news is great joy to the whole world," said Margaret Thatcher, the former British prime minister.

Bush now looks toward change in Soviet Union

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (NYT) — Declaring Wednesday a "very fine day" for democracy, President Bush began looking ahead to a changed Soviet Union in which he expects democratic reform to leap forward and President Boris N. Yeltsin of the Russian republic to enjoy an "enormous" new stature in his own country and around the world.

Recounting his 12-minute conversation with President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, which he said had begun at 11:19 p.m., CDT, Bush said, "In his view the constitutional authorities are back in power and democracy and freedom have prevailed."

The president, who looked tired after monitoring the unsuccessful coup in the Soviet Union, which had interrupted his vacation, added: "He stated his sincere appreciation to the people of the United States and others around the world for their support for democracy and freedom. He sounded in good physical condition. Indeed, his voice was buoyant."

Bush, who has always been careful to observe diplomatic protocol with the other members of the club of world leaders he has assembled while in office, emphasized that his official dealings would continue to be with Gorbachev. He said the Soviet president "has certainly not been diminished by this at all."

"He will still be a force to be reckoned with," Bush told a group of reporters whom he called to his Walkers Point vacation home for his second news conference in less than two and a half hours. It capped a tumultuous day that began with restrained optimism after a phone call to Yeltsin and later included expressions of the president's "delight."

Before heading off for an afternoon round of golf in a chill drizzle, Bush reminded reporters of his "respect for Gorbachev."

Looking ahead, Bush said the vanquishing of the coup should change attitudes in the Soviet Union and abroad about the longevity of the reforms Gorbachev has undertaken.

"What will be filtered out will be the fear of a right-wing military takeover, because the people will see that the power of the people to stand up against this illegality is pretty good, pretty strong," Bush said.

He also signaled that he might be more inclined to consider greater financial aid to Moscow in light of the events of the last few days.

Poll: Gorbachev, Yeltsin gain U.S. public approval

By Michael R. Kagay
N.Y. Times News Service

The coup in the Kremlin improved the standing among the American public of both the Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, and President Boris N. Yeltsin of the Russian federated republic, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News Poll.

The poll, conducted on Tuesday evening before concrete reports Wednesday that the coup had collapsed, found that 66 percent of 605 Americans interviewed had posititve opinions of Gorbachev, while only 5 percent expressed an unfavorable view.

That represented a surge in Gorbachev's standing among Americans compared with a Times/CBS News Poll in June, when opinion was 40 percent favorable and 10 pecent unfavorable.

Although fewer Americans knew enough about Yeltsin to offer an opinion, the expressed sentiment was favorable by nearly 3 to 1: 28 percent had a favorable opinion of Yeltsin, while 10 percent had an unfavorable view.

This was the first time opinions about Yeltsin were measured by The Times and CBS News. In July an NBC News/Wall Street Journal Poll, using a differently worded question, found 12 percent of registered voters had "positive" feelings toward Yeltsin and 8 percent "negative."

TV and the coup: Images, not analysts, told story

By Walter Goodman
N.Y. Times News Service

For three days the tube was awash with Soviet experts, Moscow correspondents, Washington officials and news anchors whose schedules and vacations had been disturbed.

But once again, it was the pictures that told the story: the tanks on the move in Moscow and then on the move out; Russian republic President Boris N. Yeltsin atop a tank calling for defiance and then before the Russian Parliament calling for punishment of the men who had planned the coup; the coup masters submitting to a news conference that would have made for a "Saturday Night Live" skit if so much had not been at stake.

Later, there were other Soviet officials, notably Soviet Foreign Minister Aleksandr A. Bessmertnykh, coming up from wherever they had been since Monday and declaring their allegiance to the democratic process. And most powerfully, the people on the street, through two threatening nights.

The events, so confused for two days, shook the network anchors out of their accustomed role of controllers of the news. There they sit, night after night, presenting the day's happenings in tidy packages, like managers of classy stores.

The regulars all operated professionally, switching fast in pursuit of new developments, pausing for analysis, repeatedly cautioning viewers that much of the information they were passing along could not be verified.

SOVIET CRISIS

Coup plotters made series of crucial miscalculations

By Maria Recio
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — It was a star-crossed effort from the start. Soviet hard-liners, desperate to stop the reform movement of Mikhail Gorbachev, made a series of crucial miscalculations that doomed their coup and their outdated vision of a centrist, strong-arm government.

After three short days, the putsch was over and Western analysts were quick to pinpoint the conspirators' key errors:

■ They could not silence Russian President Boris Yeltsin, who rallied people into the streets to confront tanks and troops.

■ They did not seize full control of mass communications.

■ They were not in full command of the military.

■ They underestimated the public's commitment to democratization and the West's support for Gorbachev.

■ They could not agree among themselves.

"I think they underestimated the power of the people; they underestimated what a taste of democracy and freedom brings," President Bush said, speaking to reporters at his vacation home in Kennebunkport, Maine.

"Everyone recognized that there were serious economic problems, and I think they felt, 'We'll come in there, promise food on the shelves, and to solve these problems,' and then they saw that overriding all of that was a commitment by many, many people in Russia and in the Soviet Union, entirely to democracy, for democracy," Bush said.

Perhaps the single most important reason for the coup's collapse, experts said, was the plotters' failure to stop Yeltsin, who was able to communicate with world leaders and to get his defiant message to the Soviet people.

"They grabbed Gorbachev and not Yeltsin; that was their first strategic mistake," said Louise Shelley, a Soviet specialist at American University in Washington.

Opinion polls gave Gorbachev low marks as the economy deteriorated while the newly elected Yeltsin was extremely popular, even among military officials.

The pictures of an energetic Yeltsin — holed up in the Russian Parliament building behind a phalanx of tanks, phoning and faxing Bush, British Prime Minister John Major and others — reached the Soviet people and went around the world, making him a symbol of freedom.

With the reform movement taking power away from the center to the republics, Yeltsin could count on a core of support in Russia as well as in the rest of the nation.

"He was a flag around which the nation could rally," said Rose Gottemoeller, a Soviet defense analyst with the Rand Corp. in Washington.

Moreover, the eight coup leaders failed to control any of the key elements of a power grab: the military, the media or the people.

"It is clear that they were poorly prepared," Gottemoeller said. "I think they panicked."

Fearful that Gorbachev's scheduled signing of a Union Treaty would destroy their eroding power base, the coup leaders made their move, isolating Gorbachev, sending tanks into Moscow and shutting down independent newspapers.

Military forces were deeply divided and coup leaders counted on the KGB secret police and the Interior Ministry troops to do their bidding. But the conspirators' powers were soon questioned by leaders who refused to participate in the takeover.

Communism as political force is real casualty of bungled takeover bid

By Bill Keller
N.Y. Times News Service

When euphoria recedes, politicians will face same problem: the public's fear of anarchy, ethnic conflict, economic insecurity.

■ Analysis

MOSCOW — The bungled takeover of the Soviet government left the incumbents of the Communist past discredited, and hastened the demise of the old guard that had long been whispering caution in the ear of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Communism as an ideology was already so moribund that even the conspirators did not wave the Marxist-Leninist flag, claiming instead stability as their cause.

Communism as a political force was Wednesday's casualty, since the coup debunked Gorbachev's rationale for clinging to the Communist Party as his power base, in the hope that by doing so he could keep its diehard partisans in check.

The failed coup legitimized the claim of post-Communist reformers that they are the rightful heirs to power, and invigorated them for the mammoth task of civilizing their country. It also raised the possibility that those who have prevailed may now move against those pillars of the KGB and the military who had conspired against them.

When the euphoria recedes, however, both Gorbachev and the radicals will still face a fundamental problem that the conspirators were banking on to carry their coup: the public's fear of anarchy, ethnic conflict and economic insecurity, which has eroded trust in all politicians.

"There was fertile soil for this action," said Arkady I. Volsky, a Gorbachev confidant who now heads an association of industrial enterprises. "People are demanding order. But that order should be established by forces elected by the people, by constitutional methods."

Along with their endangered democracy, Soviet citizens Wednesday recovered their sense of humor, and across the capital Muscovites shared the same relieved joke: "We knew the Communists couldn't do anything right."

The jibe seemed the perfect epitaph for that Communist machine that once knew how to impose its will on neighboring countries with ruthless efficiency, but now could not manage the hijacking of its own government.

The obvious winner, of course, is Russian republic President Boris N. Yeltsin, who rallied the public and kept his elected government functioning by displaying strength and grace under pressure.

Besides enhancing his authority at home, Yeltsin at last won the international recognition long denied him.

Yeltsin, not long ago regarded tration official said.

Having just returned from a high-level military visit to the Soviet Union, Powell on Monday offered his private view to Bush's senior advisers that the coup leaders had questionable leadership abilities and could not be assured of loyalty from the military. Therefore, he said, they could fail.

But at the same time, Powell and other military officials were also impressed by the forces available to the junta, if they were willing to use them against the resistance forces gathering in the streets.

American intelligence had not specifically warned that a coup plot was afoot during the weekend, administration officials said, but with Gorbachev's detention at his vacation residence in the Crimea, intelligence collection priorities — directed disproportionately at Iraq and the Persian Gulf — were shifted back to the Soviet Union, officials said.

When reports started coming in Monday, the strongest signals of defection from the Soviet military ranks included the top naval commander in the Baltic region, where Soviet land forces were dispatched to seize control of key communication centers.

Administration officials also said the commander of the Soviet air force also threw his support to Yeltsin, refusing to cooperate with the junta.

Another senior commander of airborne infantry forces refused to support the coup leaders, officials said, and there were some news agency reports that the commander was placed under arrest. Other intelligence indicated that two of the four regional guard divisions in the Moscow area refused to follow the coup, administration officials said.

But even with these defections, it was believed that the eight men leading the coup had formidable military and security forces at their disposal and would be willing to use them to consolidate their control over the country. The fact that they did not presents Western analysts and Soviet specialists with one of the most puzzling episodes in modern Soviet history.

Bush, aides hedged administration's long-term bets

By Patrick E. Tyler
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — During the three-day takeover in Moscow, the Bush administration received critical intelligence signals that the military coup was seriously hobbled by defections and internal opposition, but the signals were never strong enough to convince senior officials in Washington that the power grab was doomed to fail, senior administration officials said Wednesday.

For this reason, Bush and his national security aides decided initially to hedge their long-term bets, while organizing an international campaign to undermine the legitimacy of the coup leaders and prevent any accommodation to the "emergency" government by Western countries.

One plan approved by Bush and Secretary of State James A. Baker III was to have Robert Strauss, the newly appointed ambassador, make a dramatic visit to the beseiged headquarters of Russian republic President Boris N. Yeltsin as a sign of American solidarity with his defiance against an unconstitutional government, which Strauss was instructed to ignore, officials said. By the time Strauss reached Moscow on Wednesday morning, the gesture was no longer necessary.

A reconstruction of key deliberations in Washington during the past three days based on interviews with administration officials indicates that from the first formal meetings of Bush's senior aides Monday morning until Wednesday morning's collapse of junta control, administration analysts and intelligence agencies were tempering their assessments about the coup leaders' prospects for success.

To be sure, there were powerful early voices expressing skepticism over whether the coup would succeed, among them the president's top military adviser, Gen. Colin L. Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a senior administration official said.

as a troublesome boor in Washington and European capitals, fielded phone calls from President Bush, British Prime Minister John Major, French President Francois Mitterand and other world leaders.

His enhanced stature also strengthens the democrats in other republics, including the beleaguered Baltic states, whose sovereignty Yeltsin has unflaggingly supported along with Russia's.

Indian government criticized in wake of suspects' suicides

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The government was criticized by newspapers and political parties Wednesday for allowing a wave of suicides by key suspects in the assassination of former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Opponents said Tuesday's suicide by the alleged mastermind of the assassination plot and six compatriots as police closed in on their hideout in a south Indian village had unravelled the case.

Earlier, at least 16 other suspects committed suicide to avoid arrest. Investigators have detained 22 others suspected of involvement in the conspiracy but say the suicides now make it difficult to prove who ordered the killing.

The government suspects the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, a separatist Sri Lankan militia, of involvement. Members of the militia carry a cyanide capsule around their neck and are said to have taken vows to commit suicide if faced with arrest.

"It is not possible to take them alive," said R. Ramalingam, a senior police officer in south India. "Our experience has shown that at the slightest of contact with law enforcers, Tiger activists take cyanide."

On Sunday, 12 Sri Lankan militants committed suicide by taking cyanide when police surrounded them in two villages. All died within minutes.

"The government has bungled the entire issue," Madan Lal Khurana, of the nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party, was quoted as saying by Press Trust of India.

The Congress Party, which was headed by Gandhi until his death and is now in power, said the government should "take abundant caution and care" in investigating the case.

Party spokesman C.P. Thakur said the Congress was "deeply worried" by the suicide of Sivarasan, the Sri Lankan Tamil militant who allegedly led the hit team that killed Gandhi.

Gandhi was killed at an election rally May 21 in Sriperumbudur near Madras in south India by a suicide bomb strapped to the waist of a young Sri Lankan woman. She, Gandhi and 16 others died in the explosion.

Sivarasan, 29, reportedly a top intelligence officer of the Tamil Tigers, was photographed at the meeting by a cameraman who also was killed in the blast. Sivarasan was posing as a journalist and was pictured standing next to the suicide bomber.

Sivarasan and a 22-year-old woman accomplice named Subha, who was among the suicide victims, had eluded the biggest manhunt in India's history for 90 days.

Sivarasan, who lost an eye in a bomb explosion in Sri Lanka, killed himself with a pistol shot through the temple. His accomplices consumed cyanide.

"It is pertinent to ask if the SIT (Special Investigating Team) could not have handled its task more adroitly," said the independent Times of India.

Commented The Hindustan Times, another independent daily, "As of now, it looks that the government will not be able to get at the root of the conspiracy."

Rescuers land for ice-bound Soviets

MOLODEZHNAYA RESEARCH BASE, Antarctica (AP) — A Soviet jet touched down on a frozen airstrip Wednesday to complete the dangerous rescue of 172 Soviets from their ice-bound research ship.

Perfect timing combined with ideal weather to make the risky landing a success. The Ilyushin-76 aircraft left the southern tip of South Africa before dawn Wednesday to arrive in Antarctica at "daylight," which lasts no more than four hours this time of year.

Men with long beards sprinkled white with ice greeted their rescuers with little emotion and appeared to take their predicament in stride. They were more interested in political developments in their homeland.

The head of the rescue operation, Arthur Chilingarov, said depending on weather, the transport jet would be able to return to South Africa early Thursday with its cargo of 172 scientists and technicians.

More than 50 people will remain on the Mikhail Somov vessel.

By the end of three months, the solid ice trapping the ship should have broken up enough for the vessel to move. An iceberg was visible about a mile from the ship, but rescuers said there was no danger to those on board.

There had been concerns about the riskiness of the operation. Chilingarov said it was the first time the Soviets had landed a plane on Antarctica in winter, and the timing had to be exact to enable it to land in daylight.

Weather was another factor. Even if the weather had been severe, the plane would have been forced to land because it could not complete the 5,000-mile round trip without refueling. The weather when the plane landed was termed "ideal" by the rescue team: about 4 degrees below zero. The temperature dropped later to -22 F, and winds were blowing at 31 mph.

In addition to carrying 65 extra tons of fuel in the cargo hold, the plane was loaded with eight tons of vegetables and sheep carcasses to feed those remaining on the research vessel.

Gore decides against presidential bid in 1992

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee announced on Wednesday he has decided against running for the presidency next year, thereby becoming the third prominent Democrat in recent weeks to rule out a challenge to George Bush.

Gore, who unsuccessfully sought his party's nomination in 1988, cited family concerns for his decision. "I have learned that when you're running for president, it's tough to be there when your family needs you," he said.

"If this decision had been based on politics alone, I would instead be announcing my candidacy for the White House right now," Gore said. "But this is about more than politics."

Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., and House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., recently also removed themselves from the White House field in 1992. Like them, Gore insisted his decision was not a concession to Bush's high approval ratings in public opinion polls.

"I sincerely believe the conventional wisdom about the president's alleged invincibility is wrong," he said in an interview. Asked if his announcement did not contribute to that impression, he replied, "I can't help that. I'm not part of a parade. I'm making a personal decision."

The only announced candidate among the rapidly dwindling prospects is former Massachusetts Sen. Paul Tsongas. Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa and Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton are expected to run; Virginia Gov. Douglas Wilder is considering a bid and there is speculation that New York Gov. Mario Cuomo could make a late entry into the race. Cuomo has scoffed at such talk, but hasn't completely closed the door.

Clinton said through a spokeswoman that Gore "would have been the front-runner if he entered the race." Of his own plans in the wake of Gore's decision, Clinton said, "I assume it will increase the pressure to run."

Gore, echoing the refrain of several Democratic colleagues both in and out of the prospective field, said the party's nominee can make the case that Bush, despite his foreign policy successes, has ignored the needs of average Americans.

"American families need a president who will focus his or her energies and ideas on the home front with the same conviction needed to address the challenges that face our country abroad," he said.

Gore's unheralded statement came amid the collapse of the Soviet coup — another international crisis that, like the Persian Gulf War, played to Bush's strengths.

Gore said he made his decision "a couple of days before the coup took place" and felt there was no point in delaying the announcement. "The timing had nothing to do with the events in the Soviet Union," Gore said. "Those events are irrelevant to the '92 election. It's 15 months away."

But Harrison Hickman, a Democratic pollster, said he was surprised by Gore's timing. "It is a curious thing that he would announce it on a day like this. I don't think the headlines across the country will be, 'Gorby In, Gore Out,'" he said.

Democratic Party Chairman Ronald H. Brown said he appreciated Gore's "difficult personal decision" and his intent to take an active role in the coming campaign.

Gore was the only Democratic prospect who voted last January to authorize the use of force against Iraq, making him attractive to moderate Democrats who believe the party needs a stronger defense posture.

His withdrawal likely will prove a boon to Clinton, another southerner with appeal to party centrists. Several key 1988 Gore backers already had been leaning toward Clinton, who has established an exploratory committee and has said he is "inclined to run."

Cubans take hostages in prison uprising

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Cuban inmates took over part of a federal prison Wednesday and held up to 11 hostages, authorities said. A lawyer said the inmates were resisting plans to deport them.

The Cubans, who came to the United States in the 1980 Mariel boatlift, were armed with homemade weapons and had threatened to kill hostages, said Ed Crosley, a spokesman for Talladega Federal Correctional Institution.

Eleven prison staff members and U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service workers were apparently taken hostage, Crosley said.

Eighteen American inmates were in the cellblock. Gary Leshaw, a lawyer who spoke with the Cubans, said they consider the Americans to be hostages. But Crosley said he didn't know whether they actually were hostages.

The takeover occurred in a part of the prison housing 121 Cuban detainees and 18 American inmates. Thirty-two of the Cubans were scheduled to be sent back to Cuba on Thursday, Crosley said.

"They basically don't want to go back to Cuba. That's the bottom line," said Leshaw, an Atlanta lawyer who has represented Cuban detainees.

Crosley declined to speculate on the cause of the rebellion. Officials didn't know how many inmates were involved or how the staff members were taken hostage.

The inmates threatened at one point to kill hostages if phone lines were cut, Crosley said.

One prison employee was slightly injured during the takeover, and was released after being held for about two hours, Crosley said. He was treated for bruises.

An unidentified prisoner told CNN inmates vowed "freedom or death" and wanted to speak to the United Nations High Commission on Refugees and civil rights leader Coretta Scott King, widow of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

Leshaw said he spoke with an inmate who wanted to talk with Fernando Chang-Muy of the U.N. commission.

He said he then spoke with Chang-Muy for the inmates, but the U.N. official said there was "a limited amount the commission could do."

Dozens of Cuban detainees were sent to the prison, about 40 miles east of Birmingham, after rioting at prisons in Oakdale, La., and Atlanta 3½ years ago. Some were returned to Cuba, but others remained.

The riots erupted in November 1987 — first Oakdale, then Atlanta two days later — after the State Department said that Cuba had agreed to take back more than 2,500 of the 3,800 Mariel refugees imprisoned nationwide. At the height of that crisis, more than 100 prison workers were held hostage.

The takeovers lasted eight days at Oakdale, 11 at Atlanta, and ended only after the government agreed to halt deportations while the INS reviewed each case.

Deportations resumed in 1988.

Two ambulances were outside the main building, and unmarked cars blocked the main road to the institution, which houses 980 inmates in the main prison and 160 in a lower-security adjacent camp.

Most of the detainees came to the United States during the Mariel boatlift, then committed crimes in the United States. Attorneys for the Cubans say some also were designated as mentally ill or held because they admitted committing crimes in Cuba.

Collapse of coup positive for West

No event in recent history, including the lightning conclusion to the Persian Gulf War, has exhibited the drama or the intense and confusing emotions of Wednesday's communist coup reversal in the Soviet Union.

In less than 72 hours the communist hard-liners who on Monday had overthrown Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev had abandoned their coup and fled Moscow, leaders of the national legislature had demanded Gorbachev's reinstatement, tanks and armored vehicles surrounding the Russian Parliament had begun to leave Moscow — strewn with flowers from the Russian people whom they would not fire upon — and press restrictions were lifted as well as all other emergency decrees imposed by leaders of the coup.

By Wednesday evening, Gorbachev had issued an announcement saying he was fully in command of the situation and that coup leaders will bear full responsibility for their actions.

To a world that has witnessed in recent years the transformation of political systems throughout Eastern Europe, the fall of the Berlin Wall, and the acceptance of the Soviet Union into the international community, this development seems merely another in a string of unbelievable occurrences. Observers are, at once, bewildered, excited, hopeful, and uncertain they can believe what they hear and read. Soviet communism, that onetime fearsome giant of the East, appears vanquished but can it be?

Even President Bush, who joined with a number of Western nations in condemning the coup earlier in the week and calling for Gorbachev's reinstatement, hailed the Soviet president's return to power and asserted that coup leaders "had underestimated the power of the people, underestimated what a taste of freedom and democracy brings."

No doubt the democratic revolution in Eastern Europe in recent years created the climate in the Soviet Union in which such a coup could be repelled. Although not ordinarily popular with many of the Russian people, Gorbachev's modern style of governing made him a welcome figure on the world political stage and the influence of those nations who spoke out against his removal certainly was a key factor in the coup reversal. There were, of course, other factors, among them the lack of popular support for the hard-line position, the lack of support by some factions in the military for the coup, and the outpouring of Russian citizens in opposition to the coup.

Even the Communist Party, recognizing that the coup could not hold, threw its bloody past to the wind and denounced the takeover.

Uncommon events, perhaps, but these are not common times. The collapse of the coup bodes well for the people of that nation and for the West in general. A new day is dawning in Soviet politics and it will demand extreme attention from both East and West as Soviets better define their new direction in this post-Cold War world. Much will depend upon whom eventually wields power in the Soviet Union and how that power is exerted.

At least now, that choice hopefully will be left to the Soviet people and not to a handful of hard-line generals and Communist Party leaders.

IRS learns money is easy to spend

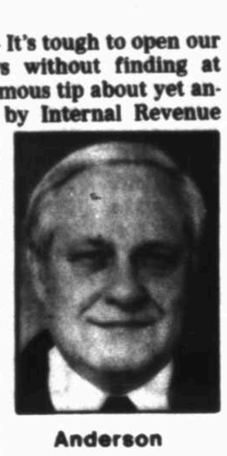
WASHINGTON — It's tough to open our mail these days without finding at least one anonymous tip about yet another extravagant trip by Internal Revenue Service employees traveling on the taxpayers' dime. Collecting all that tax money apparently has warped the agency's sense of thrift. Easy come, easy go.



Anderson

The latest getaway involved a flock of IRS lawyers who spent four days at a tropical resort in Fort Lauderdale. They simply had to remove themselves from the distractions of the office for an educational seminar that cost the taxpayers about $100,000.

Before we expose the sordid details, we must note that the IRS is reviewing its wanderlust. Our recent columns exposing a few of those trips encouraged them to think twice about scheduling fancy retreats for employees. In fact, a two-day meeting for managers, originally scheduled last month at a fancy hotel in Maryland, was relocated to spartan Andrews Air Force Base. So, instead of being put up at the hotel for $70 a night, the 62 participants in the meeting commuted to the base from their homes for two days.

But it was only two weeks later that 150 IRS attorneys threw public opinion to the wind and headed for the Pier Sixty Six Resort and Marina in Fort Lauderdale, our associate Scott Sleek has discovered. They were there for further education, including discussions of new developments in tax court rules and procedures.

It sounds like serious work, but it's hard to swallow the all-work-no-play line from the IRS when the hotel, in its own brochures, is described as "lush," with private balconies overlooking the water, telephones in the bathrooms, daily cruises to the Caribbean islands, waterfront tennis courts, a world-class marina, parasailing, snorkeling, yachting, massages and free shuttle service to the beach.

The IRS claims it holds these events at getaway hotels when work needs to be done without the constant interruptions of the office. Apparently the IRS has never considered a conference room with a lock on the door, a box of donuts and an order to, "Hold all calls."

The IRS also claims that the participants are kept so busy that they have little or no time to enjoy the lavish offerings the hotels. We have to assume then that the IRS is squandering money on amenities that it pays for and never uses.

Although the IRS is reviewing its standards for scheduling such retreats, they will still be held if deemed necessary, an IRS spokeswoman told us.

We have already reported on other trips the IRS has deemed "necessary" in recent months. There was the ethics seminar, costing at least $124,000, put on last winter in a cozy West Virginia mountain resort. In June, 100 internal auditors from the IRS headquarters in Washington attended a computer-training meeting at a beachfront resort in Ocean City, Md., at a total cost of $34,600.

Just a few days later, top IRS managers from Philadelphia put their noses to the grindstone at a seminar at an elegant — but who had time to notice? — golf resort in the Pocono mountains. If the IRS employees hadn't been so busy, they could have used one of two championship golf courses, tennis courts, swimming pools, a sauna, a trap-shooting range and a Nautilus fitness center. That getaway cost taxpayers about $88,000, not including travel expenses.

We acknowledge that the IRS needs an educated workforce so it can collect taxes, but the taxpayers can't afford the price of that education.

Bush rides through coup smelling like a rose

WASHINGTON — Presidents Mikhail Gorbachev and Boris Yeltsin are the big winners with the collapse of the Soviet coup, but President Bush comes out of it looking good too.

Means

His prospects for reelection are better than ever.

He got an immediate boost by standing up firmly for Gorbachev, the constitutionally elected Soviet president, and rallying world opposition to the illegal takeover attempt.

The country always backs an incumbent president when there is a sense of world crisis, whether it immediately affects the United States or not. And tanks rolling in the streets of the other superpower was certainly a crisis by any definition.

More than 30,000 nuclear missiles pointed toward the West could have fallen under the control of militant right-wingers with bad judgment and no respect for the law.

The crisis, while brief, was intense. Just as Americans were turning toward neglected domestic needs, public attention was abruptly refocused on foreign policy. This is the president's strong suit.

His leadership during the Persian Gulf War sent his popularity soaring. Although it has since declined, his ratings have remained comfortably high.

In the Soviet crisis, as in the Persian Gulf war, the United States was the only country with the resources to rally international pressure against the outlaws, making it clear they would be isolated if they had persisted.

The president's actual influence inside the Soviet Union was limited. But he served as a powerful symbol of global condemnation, leading efforts to deny the coup leaders economic aid or any other sign of western acceptance.

"The world is turning to the United States for leadership here," the president said immodestly but correctly as the crisis erupted.

Calm and steady, Bush is indeed a reassuring figure in such moments. It is when life returns to normal that he disappoints.

Suddenly, the Democratic campaign message based upon the charge that he ignores important domestic issues became irrelevant. It is likely to be some time before it returns to the forefront.

Peace and prosperity are always fundamental presidential campaign themes but, of the two, maintaining world stability while protecting national security clearly dominates. The Democrats will sound silly now if they again cry, "Come Home, George," very soon.

Nor do the Democrats have a presidential candidate with distinguished credentials in foreign policy to match those of Bush. The candidate list includes three governors, a former senator and a senator only one year into his second term, none of whom have any foreign expertise.

Would you really trust a young Arkansas governor to stare down the Soviet usurpers?

(For that matter, aren't you glad it didn't happen on Ronald Reagan's watch? He might have slept right through it.)

Among the potential contenders only Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore, a former presidential candidate and a member of the Armed Services Committee, has any claim to international experience. And he announced Wednesday he is not going torun, citing his family.

The Democrats were stymied all last year during the Persian Gulf war, afraid to criticize a president upon whom so much depended lest they sounded disloyal. Now they were tongue-tied a second time; we can, after all, have only one president at a time.

If the Soviet Union had permanently collapsed under a bloody, oppressive dictatorship and world tensions dramatically rose, Bush's political fortunes could have turned sour. It would have been blame time, with all sorts of questions about how such a mess could have occurred.

But now congratulations are in order. Bush's careful, steady foreign policy seems to have been just the ticket. It turns out he was right when he exulted at a much-celebrated summit with Gorbachev that the reforms in the Soviet Union were "irrevocable."

Since the crisis was resolved with a minimum of violence and Soviet progress toward democratization resumed, Bush looks better than ever. He can legitimately claim to have provided a strong American presence when it was badly needed.

How does President of the World sound? He might exaggerate his role for campaign purposes, but, hey, only by a little bit.

'Old soreheads' kill development

This is for some of the old soreheads who are against the "Bed & Breakfast" industry. Some of these people did good at developing Midland and some did better. But I think it is time for them to step down now and let the young blood of Midland show us what they can do for new growth and development.

I think the "Bed & Breakfast" industry is a good idea. It shows that people are looking for changes since the oil industry is moving out of Midland. I am talking about ARCO Petroleum.

It's a situation just like on the news the other night about Midland's south side. Someone mentioned to me the other day that no one has tried to develop that area for the "Bed & Breakfast" industry. Someone brought up the tax angle, noting what Midland would be out; well, why couldn't the taxes be set aside to help feed the hungry? Isn't that an area that some churches are helping out in and wouldn't that benefit the welfare department? Not only would it help our area, but it might help other area towns as well. What they learn here would help eliminate problems they might run into themselves.

If you look hard enough you can find problems with just about anything. That is the reason the people from England came here; they were looking for a place where they could develop new ideas and get away from their old soreheads. Look at all the chances that Midland has had. Do you remember when Pittsburg Plate Glass wanted to move their plant here? It would have meant new jobs. And when the orphanage wanted to build here, the people threw a fit and said they didn't want those kinds of kids around their own. When the High School Girls Ranch wanted to buy a home in a block of Holloway Avenue, it was the same thing — "We don't want that kind in our neighborhood."

Well, I don't think these people want anything in their neighborhood that they can't have some kind of control over.

Bank-robbing is easier working on the inside

There has been a tremendous amount of hanky-panky going on in the banking business lately.

First, the S&Ls turned out to be full of fraud and corruption. Then the public learned that the BCCI bank was not what it was cracked up to be and had even hoodwinked Clark Clifford, one of the country's wisest old men. The latest blockbuster is the Salomon Brothers scandal which revealed that the prestigious Wall Street firm had tried to corner the trillion-dollar U.S. Treasury Bond market.

Buchwald

All this has the public wondering whether the people who handle our money are as wonderful as we once thought they were.

The person who knows the most about our banking system is Willie Sutton, the former bank robber. When asked after being captured, "Willie, why do you rob banks?" he replied, "Because that's where the money is."

Willie is now in retirement, but, as curator of The Bank Robbers' Hall of Fame, he still keeps his eye on the country's savings institutions. He seemed to be glad that someone knew he was still alive.

I asked Willie, "Why do bankers steal money from their own banks?"

"Because it's more fun than stealing green tomatoes from a vegetable stand. Not all bankers are stick-up men, any more than all stick-up men are bankers. But when it comes to heisting a bank, nobody can do it better than the person who runs one.

"When I stuck up a bank I could only rob one teller's window at a time. There was never too much money in that. The best way to steal big cash is to do it from within. The executives at the S&Ls, BCCI and Salomon Brothers never had to use a gun," Willie said.

"Even the public understands that. What it cannot comprehend is why would a man earning $5 million a year honestly want to make $10 million dishonestly?"

"It's pure arithmetic. If you make $10 million instead of $5 million, people have twice as much respect for you. Everyone thinks that greed is the major factor in the banking business. It's not. All a man wants is the respect of his peers and neighbors. Each million he can steal is a feather in his cap. At the end of the year many Wall Streeters look as if they're wearing an Indian chief's headdress."

"Okay, so they are going for respect and not greed. Why so many banking scandals now?"

"Because money is a product that is simple to move around. It's also amazingly easy to acquire. It isn't the banker's money — it's the customers' savings. The client hands the banker a certain amount of cash and says, 'Here's my nest egg. Please take my money and keep it safe for me.' Now that's really dumb. Would you give some stranger in a parking lot your life's savings and say, 'Be a good guy and make it grow'?"

"Why doesn't the government do something about all this white-collar crime in banks?"

"That would mean stricter regulation of our financial institutions — and nobody wants that. It's true that a lot of S&Ls have been raped and pillaged by management, and no one knows the mess that Clark Clifford and Salomon Brothers are going to cause the country. But as one of the greats in the bank-robbing business, I can tell you that I admire the people who are stealing from the inside.

"If I had done it their way, I would now be sitting here with a pile of U.S. Treasury bonds instead of this crummy Social Security check that I stole from my neighbor's mailbox."

Violence continues among blacks, orthodox Jews

NEW YORK (AP) — Racial violence flared for a third day Wednesday in a Brooklyn neighborhood where blacks and ultra-Orthodox Hasidic Jews have a history of uncomfortable coexistence. Mayor David Dinkins visited the community, but jeering, bottle-throwing people chased him away.

A rabbinical student died in earlier violence, which began after a young black boy was struck and killed by a car driven by a Hasidic Jew.

On Wednesday, hundreds of blacks, some carrying baseball bats, marched to the Hasidic Lubavitcher sect's world headquarters in the Crown Heights neighborhood. They shouted "War" and "Soon!" and threw rocks, bottles and other debris. About 100 Jews hurled rocks back.

Police in riot gear separated the groups.

One group of blacks burned an Israeli flag; some held signs with anti-Semitic slogans. Groups of blacks rampaged through the neighborhood, damaging police vehicles and stores. Five injuries were reported.

"This is Nazi Germany all over again," said City Councilman Noach Dear, an Orthodox Jew who was pelted by rocks.

Late Wednesday, eight police officers were shot by shotgun pellets but not seriously injured, Sgt. Ed Burns said.

In three days of sporadic violence, police reported 44 arrests and 86 police officers and at least 20 civilians injured. Some of the injured included journalists and the Fire Department also reported some firefighters were hurt. Several stores and at least 10 police vehicles have been damaged.

The tumult began Monday night when a 7-year-old black boy was struck and killed by a car in the entourage of the Lubavitcher spiritual leader, Rebbe Menachem Mendel Schneerson. The child's cousin, also 7, was critically injured in the accident.

Within hours, people were rioting and a rabbinical student was killed.

"There is an underlying tension. Once something triggers it, everything explodes," said Dennis Carter, a resident who is black. "You see how easily it boils over."

A grand jury was investigating Monday night's accident to decide whether to charge the driver, sect member Yoseph Lisef, 22, said Brooklyn District Attorney Charles J. Hynes.

Dinkins, the city's first black mayor, visited Crown Heights on Monday night and returned Wednesday night. He met with community leaders who begged him to meet with local residents to ease tensions.

But Dinkins decided it was too dangerous to take a planned walking tour. Instead, he visited the nearby home of the dead 7-year-old's family.

Dinkins emerged to an angry crowd. He said through a megaphone that a grand jury would investigate the fatal car accident.

"In the meantime, we've got to increase the peace," Dinkins said. "I do want justice. We all want justice. But we will not get it with violence."

"I care about you very desperately. I want you to listen to me," Dinkins called but the crowd's jeers and boos drowned him out.

About 50 police officers then escorted Dinkins to his car, and some people threw bottles at him. None of the bottles hit him.

Earlier Wednesday, blacks gathered at a memorial at the accident site where the youth, Gavin Cato, died. Jews held a funeral procession for Yankel Rosenbaum, the Australian rabbinical student fatally stabbed in violence that followed the accident.

> 'This is Nazi Germany all over again.'
> — City Councilman Noach Dear

Rosenbaum, 29, whose father survived a Nazi concentration camp in World War II, was in this country researching the Holocaust. Lemrick Nelson, 16, was charged Wednesday with murdering Rosenbaum.

Paradoxically, neither victim was part of the racial animosity that has long plagued the neighborhood.

Members of the Lubavitcher sect blame their black neighbors for crime there; blacks charge the Jewish sect wields too much power and receives preferential treatment from city officials and the police.

But Crown Heights has long been a volatile crucible of cultures.

Hasidic Jews of the Lubavitcher sect emigrated from Russia to Crown Heights during the 1940s and '50s, when the neighborhood was mostly middle-class and Jewish.

The area is now mostly low-income and predominantly black, with about 300,000 residents, some 30,000 of them Lubavitchers. Their dark garb and strict observance of traditional Jewish religious laws can be traced to the 18th century ghettos of Poland.

The Lubavitchers, believed to be the largest Hasidic sect in this country, comprise fewer than 100,000 of the country's 5.8 million Jews.

The black population meanwhile grew in the 1960s and in the 1970s with an influx of immigrants from Haiti, Grenada, Jamaica and Trinidad.

Tensions were inflamed in 1978 when two men in Hasidic garb allegedly attacked a black youth; two rabbis were acquitted in the incident. A 1987 snowball fight between blacks and Jews escalated into rock- and bottle-throwing.

It was a Lubavitcher-run ambulance that arrived at the Monday night accident. Rumors among some black residents that the rescue crew tended to the driver first, rather than the injured children, helped provoke the riots.

Police said they told the ambulance to take away the driver and his two passengers to ease tensions.

Black residents don't believe the official version.

"If the ambulance was there, they should have helped that child. That's the reason why people got riled up," said Michael Johnson, a black resident.

Rosenbaum's body was returned to Australia and an estimated 1,500 mourners formed a procession to a police precinct where Rabbi Shmuel Butman told the crowd:

"When we were children, pogroms were only words in the history books," Butman said. "Unfortunately we in this neighborhood have seen a pogrom with our own eyes."

Carters often return to old homestead

By Elliott Minor

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — About one week a month, Jimmy Carter — former president, world statesman — comes home to Plains. And for those seven days, he is simply Jimmy Carter, neighbor.

He teaches Sunday school, and mows the church lawn. He runs. He works in his shop, and spends time with friends and family.

"Jimmy is not one to sit around," says Bobby Salter, who owns the service station where brother Billy Carter regaled the media. "He's doing something all the time."

Carter and his wife Rosalynn work about one week a month at the Carter Center in Atlanta and travel much of the rest of the time. They have helped Habitat for Humanity build homes for the poor, they have worked as election monitors in Central America and they have led campaigns to rid Africa of measles and the guinea worm. Mrs. Carter champions mental health projects.

But about one week a month, the 66-year-old Carter is in Plains. Cousin Hugh Carter posts the dates in the window of his antique shop for those who want to attend Carter's Sunday school class.

At 9:45 a.m. on a muggy Sunday, about 60 admirers wait outside the Maranatha Baptist Church. They sweat and swat gnats until the nation's 39th president and his wife arrive.

"I have heard good things about Jimmy Carter. The Sunday school class has to be great because the man is great," said Donna Allen of Falls Creek, Pa. Some of the visitors gasp when the Carters and their Secret Service bodyguards arrive in a blue Lincoln.

Carter leads the flock to a big room in the back of the church. His theme on this day is Christian responsibilities. It's not enough, he tells them, to pray and drop $10 a month in the collection plate.

"As we set aside more of our lives to serving Christ, it's not a giving up," he says. "It is a growth of a very beneficial and enjoyable kind."

After church, the Carters greet the guests outside and pose for pictures. Carter says it makes him feel good that people still come. He declines to be interviewed.

Maranatha has no full-time groundskeepers or janitors, so the former president takes turns with other members mowing the lawn. Mrs. Carter brings a covered dish to the church's quarterly dinners.

"They're just plain folks like everybody else," said the pastor, Daniel G. Ariail. "If they ride their bicycles downtown, local people just wave when they go by."

Maxine Reese, who ran Carter's 1976 presidential campaign headquarters in the town's old railroad depot, said Carter is sometimes seated on the riding mower when a tour van stops in the parking lot. "He'll have on a cap or something and they don't know it's Jimmy Carter," she said.

"They do a tremendous amount of work," she said. "Rosalynn told me she's been stocking the refrigerator with fresh vegetables. They're very involved in church affairs. They take an avid interest in what's going on around town."

The National Park Service has designated as a National Historic Site the train depot, the Carters' old high school and apartment 9-B in a public housing project, where the Carters lived in the early 1950s.

The Carters' ranch-style brick home will become part of the historic site after they die. The 65-acre estate is surrounded by television cameras and a metal fence. Secret Service agents monitor the property around the clock.

Some of his carpentry skills were put to work to demolish instead of build, as part of the Plains Historical Preservation Trust effort to raise $320,000 toward the restoration of the old Plains High School.

Carter has cut pine boards from the ceiling of the building into three-inch squares, sanded them and autographed them. Mrs. Reese said 500 will be sold for $200 apiece. The group will also sell other Carter mementos, all with certificates signed by the former president.

House plan chops Midland County in three

■ Midland County would be parts of three Congressional districts under a plan approved by the Texas House.

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland County would be split three ways and some residents might end up being represented by an incumbent congressman who lives in San Antonio if a House congressional redistricting bill approved Wednesday becomes law.

House members defeated several amendments by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, that would have changed the plan and restored the county and city into either one or two districts. The House also rejected a substitute plan for the House bill offered by Craddick that would have paired some Democrat incumbents in elections against each other.

House members approved House Bill 1 by a 74-65 vote at 5:15 p.m. after a day-long debate. It now goes to the Senate, which is expecting a serious fight in its own efforts to redraw districts for federal representatives.

Differences in the two plans then will be worked out in conference committee.

Lamar Smith, R-San Angelo, currently represents Midland County in District 21.

In the fall of 1992, however, some county residents will be voting in District 19, currently represented by Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, if the House plan wins final approval.

Still others would be in District 23, a huge new area that stretches 600 miles from El Paso County to Webb County. That district, which reaches up to take in some of the city of El Paso and Midland in the west and some of San Antonio in Central Texas, currently is served by Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio.

Legislators worked on redistricting during the regular session and the first special session, but put off the chore until a second special session when time ran out.

At one time, the House Redistricting Committee approved an amendment by Craddick that would have split the county into only two districts, but a later amendment by committee chairman Tom Uher, D-Bay City, split Midland into three pieces again.

The plan splits every major city in West Texas except Abilene.

"It's going to be very hard for someone who lives in these split communities to decide who their congressman is," Craddick said. "It's going to be hard for that congressman to represent them and to take care of their needs and service them."

He also called the bill "one of the worst political gerrymandering jobs I think the state has seen in years."

Uher, however, said the bill meets the "one man, one vote" rule with no deviation from the desired number of residents per district.

The bill would add three new minority districts to the existing 27 districts in Texas. Hispanics would be in the majority in two new districts in Harris County and South Texas, and blacks would make up almost 50 percent of the residents, along with 20.5 percent Hispanics, in a new district in Dallas County.

The Supreme Court has ruled that each congressional district must contain equal population "as nearly as practicable," and federal law requires states not to dilute minority voting strength and to create minority districts wherever possible.

The courts prohibit drawing plans to benefit one political party or another, called "gerrymandering."

Any redistricting bill emerging from the Legislature will be subject to court challenge. Both Republicans and minorities have indicated they will challenge a previously approved redistricting plan for state legislators, and also will go to court on the congressional bill.

Karen Young of Midland pays her water bill as cashier Ronda Carper looks on. The city of Midland is considering reducing its discount for customers who pay their bills early.

Down goes the water discount

City considers reducing 10 percent break for paying bill early

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

If a current plan is approved by the City Council, water users may see their bills going up without a rate increase.

In anticipation of Midland's costs for the planned Colorado River Municipal Water District pipeline from Lake O.H. Ivie, city councilmen will consider reducing customer discounts for prompt payment of water bills.

"The rates will all stay the same, we'll just not be giving the same discount for prompt payment," said Bill Tatsch, customer service department supervisor.

John Lowe, director of the utility department, said he has recommended the discount decrease to the city council as part of a package of possible money-saving measures. They are expected to be considered at Tuesday's council meeting.

Currently, about 90 percent of city water users take advantage of the prompt payment discount, according to city estimates. Those who pay their bills by a listed date, normally about 15 days from the date they receive the bill, have been given a 10 percent discount on the water cost.

City officials say cutting that discount to 5 percent will generate enough revenue for the water and sewer fund to cover initial expenses of the pipeline.

"We're anticipating expenses for the pipeline," said John Lowe, director of the city utility department. "We've got ourselves prepared for that. If we wait until we're under contract with CRMWD, we'd have rate shock."

The money saved from the reduced discount — projected at between $700,000 and $800,000 — will go directly toward the city's costs for construction of the pipeline. The reduction could take the place of a water rate increase, a money-saving measure usually unpopular with taxpayers.

Water agency wants Dynagen to clean sludge

ODESSA (AP) — The Texas Water Commission has issued an emergency enforcement order against the Dynagen rubber plant after tests showed groundwater contamination near the plant and extensive pollutants built up in the plant's waste water evaporation ponds.

The emergency order, made available to the media Wednesday, cites violations and recommends several plant policy changes.

According to the emergency order, "Dynagen has allowed unauthorized discharges of stormwater runoff into or adjacent to water in the state."

Runoff from the plant runs directly to the Monahans Draw, a source of drinking water for area residents.

Bill Lockey, the Water Commission's district manager in Odessa, said Wednesday he could not discuss the details of the contamination noted in the emergency order because the TWC and Dynagen are still negotiating the injunction. Lockey said a final draft likely will be drawn up next week.

More than 1,000 residents living near the plant have filed a class-action lawsuit, claiming health problems due to air and groundwater contamination emanating from the plant.

Dynagen plant manager Tim Gorman said Wednesday the plant had been working well with the Water Commission and was surprised that the agency suddenly issued an emergency order.

"We disagree with the fact that our plant is in a situation so bad it would be termed an emergency order," Gorman said Wednesday. "We think we are going to reach some type of agreed language outlining the problems."

According to the order, an undetermined amount of "sludge," a thick gooey byproduct of the plant's waste water, has been allowed to build up in the plant's waste water evaporation ponds against state rules.

The ponds have been cited more than 50 times since 1989 by the Texas Air Control Board for nuisance odor violations. According to TACB records, the ponds have been found to emit above recommended levels of sulfate, creating the stench of rotten eggs and causing headaches and nausea among local residents.

Super collider agency predicts benefits here

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Armed with displays, diagrams, photographs and stacks of educational materials, representatives of the state agency to regulate the Superconducting Super Collider came to Midland Wednesday.

Officials said the scientific research project, to be located in north central will have influence throughout the state, nation and world. Members of the agency — the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission — were in town to conduct a regular monthly meeting on the home turf of member Charles R. Perry, a Midland businessman.

"This is a monumental project that requires the cooperation of many people," said commission Vice Chairman Martha Smiley, opening the business meeting. The agency is designed to oversee spending of the state's $1 billion commitment to the facility, currently under construction around Waxahachie.

Meetings throughout the state and an educational campaign underway now are designed to raise awareness of the agency and the collider's work. The superconducting super collider will smash protons at a high energy level to study subatomic particles.

Glenwood plans workshop to help couples

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

"I always find myself getting into arguments with my husband over the littlest things," said Lisa, a young mother of two toddlers. "He never seems to listen to me until I get upset. Then he clams up and gives me the silent treatment. I promise myself I won't nag him, but as soon as we both get home from work, I find myself picking a fight as soon as we get in the door. Why can't I stop doing this?"

Persons like Lisa, who are unhappy with their behavior in a partnership, may need to learn new communication skills, according to Patricia Netherland.

Ms. Netherland, a Certified Addiction Counselor and social work associate, will facilitate the workshop "Couples in the 90s: Reclaiming the Relationship."

Brrrring of the school bell recalls not-so good old days

Once again, it's almost September. And that means school days are coming up, and cotton is not too far away from ripening out and being harvested.

In the old days in the Southern Cotton Belt, school didn't take up until the cotton was in. If the planting rains fell just right, and cotton was planted early and got plenty of the sun's heat and the cloud's moisture, the cotton got in early and school started about when it was supposed to start. Late planting converted to a late start of school.

Todd

That was back in the heydays of the poor but hard-working family farmers and the poor but over-worked school teachers. Big families were raised to put more cotton-pickers out in the field and to give the teachers more work.

Things have changed. Mechanized cotton-strippers have replaced the banged up knees, the aching backs, the sore fingers, and the cotton sacks. And cotton gets harvested deeper into the autumn.

Nowadays, schools start when the scheduled summer recess is over, and that, sigh, is toward the end of August.

For many, September is sort of the beginning of the year. Perhaps September ought to signal the start of the new year. And the first of January could be just another "no-real-reason" reason for cutting up, partying, saying more than you meant to say and eating and drinking more than you probably ought to. Time and time again, celebrations have proven to be no time to redefine temperance.

It's vivid — those old school days. Don't remember much of what was said but there was no back talk. Discipline was sure and swift. What the teacher said was Gospel, and what the principal spoke was Truth. The superintendent was too busy with paperwork and trying, with not much success, to appease the unappeasable school board.

Back in those days, parents were more inclined to side with the teachers especially when it came to settling down a rowdy pupil or to set right the wrong done by a cheating classmate.

That's back in the days when school children were pupils, and students were the almost-grown high-school boys and girls who were thinking about going off to college or somewhere.

And that was back in the days when colleges were called colleges, and The University was the big school in the state and scholars were held in esteem.

More colleges were content with being called what they were until, one by one, colleges took on a fancy university title that today has lost its luster.

School days.

It's clear that the last day of school was more momentous than 1492 and 1776 and all those other dates history teachers seemed to think formed the foundation the world.

The beginning of the summer vacation, briefly interrupted by the required Vacation Bible School, was exciting. By mid-summer, about all the boys and girls had been "played out" or worked so hard, they thought, at family chores that they relished the coming of September or, at least, the beginning of school.

It was one of five seasons: Beginning of School, Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, Summer.

That was it.

When you're out of school and supposedly out working and doing whatever you went to school for, you tend to forget the beginning of the seasons except when the yellow school buses start cranking up and picking up the school children.

Enjoy the ride, pupils.

Collider work may involve area firms

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Though the Superconducting Super Collider is located south of Dallas near Waxahachie, it can have widespread benefits for Permian Basin businesses.

That's the message officials of the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission, the state agency for the SSC project, brought to local businesses at a "How To Do Business with the Super Collider" seminar Wednesday.

"The object of the commission's visit to Midland/Odessa was to make the entire state, particularly this area, aware of the economic and educational opportunities created by the Super Collider for the entire state, and, for that matter, the whole Southwest," said Charles R. Perry, local member of the commission at a press conference following the seminar.

"The Super Collider is on the cutting edge of technology in terms of high-energy physics," he added. "The fallout in terms of medicine and electronics is already occurring. And as construction starts on the Super Collider, the opportunities will grow for local contractors, particularly heavy equipment operators and precision machine shops."

The commission is a state agency that oversees the state's expenditures in developing and building the Super Collider. Both it and the Super Collider Laboratory have separate procurement needs, and businesses interested in the project are advised to register with both entities.

To register with the commission, a business should submit a Vendor Registration Form. The commission has also established a Disadvantaged Business Enterprise Program to help increase minority and women-owned business participation in the SSC project. The commission recognizes those DBEs that are certified by the Texas Department of Commerce or its designees.

Businesses can expect to benefit from the construction and development of the Super Collider soon. Martha Smiley, acting chairman of the commission, predicted that actual tunneling work will begin this fall.

She said all environmental studies have been completed, and residents in the area of the SSC are being advised by the Department of Energy that the SSC will have no impact on the area, through radiation or other means.

Though construction on the Super Collider has not begun, Ms. Smiley said the lab is already handing out economic benefits. The commission has awarded research and development grants to Texas universities as well as universities across the country to the tune of $10 million.

Also, "We have a strong commitment to the development of educational programs and want to ensure the availability of fellowships for graduate and post-graduate students to work side-by-side with scientists in the lab. We've already awarded $18 million in fellowships," she said.

She added that scientists who will work in the SSC lab are currently in Texas public schools, and the commission has devised several programs to teach school children about and involve them in the project, such as the "Adopt-a-Magnet" program and math and science educational programs.

U.S. Representative Larry Combest of Odessa has helped lead the fight to ensure funding for the project, and said that "I feel comfortable the project will go forward." He noted that there had been heavy debate over funding for the project and that the House had reduced the proposed budget, much of which was restored by the Senate.

Combest cautioned that "We will have to debate (this) continuously and vigorously and look at the project in terms of worldwide ramifications. I'm comfortable (of House support) but we can't rest on our laurels."

DISCOUNT: City could cut rate

(From 1B)

"We could cut off the discount altogether," Lowe said. "But we weren't ready to do that."

Tatsch said the discount has been popular with customers and has helped get water payments into city coffers earlier.

"Lots of people use a penalty or punishment, but we use the discount to entice people to pay early. And they do," he said.

Other proposals the department has sent to council include a "slight" increase in sanitation fees (about 50 cents per month).

"We've got to keep those funds in financially good condition," Lowe said. Utility funds are not supported by tax money, but with revenue generated by fees and charges.

BENEFITS: State will reap profit from collider

(From 1B)

"I think awareness is at a relatively high level," said public affairs director Sandra Dunn. "But at the same time, if you ask individuals what it is, it's very difficult to explain.

"When we find opportunities to talk about the benefits of the facility — economic, educational and scientific — it seems to keep interest out there," Dunn said.

Although no private citizen attendance was apparent at the agency's business meeting, which included a time for public comment, officials said participation had been better at an earlier seminar.

"All of Texas invested with the $1 billion (in general obligation and revenue bonds)," said Robin Stringfellow, manager of communication services. "It's important they're aware of the project and where opportunities exist with it."

Few Texas citizens are aware, for example, that the collider project already employs about 2,000 researchers, administrators and other employees. Two buildings are under construction, including a 100,000-square-foot magnet development lab and a central facility built from a former warehouse of 580,000 square feet.

"They're already conducting scientific experiments," Dunn said.

Public information officer John Kennedy said there was great probability that the collider project would generate a multitude of discoveries.

"A good comparison is the work of NASA," he said. "We don't know what they'll find. It's very exciting."

Officials said West Texans especially could benefit from the collider's need for certain equipment and types of work. The group sponsored a business procurement seminar in the local area in connection with the meeting.

The agency's responsibility, once limited to land acquisition, now extends to development of the collider "campus," as well as allocation of educational grants and research fellowships. Agency staff will maintain a speakers' bureau that can arrange educational talks throughout the state.

"Texans fought hard to get it in the first place," Dunn said. "We can't be passe. We've got to continue to keep on track and support it."

Although it was the agency's first stop in Midland, it likely won't be their last, spokespersons said. The group, which meets monthly in Dallas, plans to travel quarterly to other Texas cities.

WORKSHOP: Glenwood sets couples class

from 9 a.m.-2:30 p.m. Saturday at Glenwood Hospital, 3300 S. Farm to Market Road 1788.

While the workshop is geared toward healing relationships with "significant others," it could also benefit individuals, according to Ms. Netherland.

Netherland

Donna Rogers, addictive disorders coordinator for Glenwood, agreed.

"For some people it's easier to come as a couple, for others it's easier to come alone," Ms. Rogers said. "However, people recovering from individual issues usually involve others. For example, someone recovering from alcoholism, an eating disorder or another individual issue directly compounds the lives of a minimum of four people."

Ms. Netherland said the main thrust of the workshop is to give people the skills they need to "empower rather than manipulate."

"To have true intimacy with our partners we must learn more loving communication skills and be willing to let go of manipulative behaviors," she said.

Methods of attempting to control people include anger, financial strings, emotional blackmail, threats of promiscuity, ambiguous messages and martyrdom.

Ms. Netherland said that unhealthy patterns in a relationship include codependency "a set of learned behaviors that cause us to focus on others in detrimental ways . . . and to focus on control of the partner in order not to be abandoned."

"These attempts at control prevent us from having healthy identities and also from having true intimacy," she said. "We cannot be honest with our partner if we are trying to manipulate his or her behavior."

The counselor said controlling behaviors often lead to breakups or divorces.

"The more frightened a partner is of being abandoned, the more likely he or she is to step up attempts at control which weaken the relationship even more," Ms. Netherland said.

"We learn to have relationships by watching our family of origin," Ms. Rogers said. "We don't go to school to learn how to get married. We learn from role models — sometimes from role models who were not appropriate. Then we may repeat some patterns. It's part of a disease."

Ms. Rogers said people may practice destructive behavior because they "don't know how to get better."

"The recovery movement and 12-step programs address this," she said.

Both women said more and more people are turning to recovery programs to change their behavior.

"We've done a lot of work in the last 10 years on healing individuals," Ms. Rogers said. "It is important to begin looking at relationships, and now we are beginning to look at the family system."

Ms. Netherland said the trend is for entire families to seek counseling together.

The counselor said that people weren't concerned with dealing with emotions in previous generations.

"This has developed over time," she said. "Everyone was so busy. Men were out working. Women labored with children at home. Their life spans were not long and the emphasis was not on the emotions. Many people have grown up where dysfunctional things have happened. There were addictions or a lot of physical punishment. People have grown up with a lot of pain and grief."

Ms. Netherland said the workshop is for those "who don't feel a richness of life or those who feel mistreated or feel they are mistreating others."

"The workshop should foster more open communication and healthier relationships," Ms. Rogers said. "It's of a preventative nature, more of a wellness workshop."

"It's time to work on the joy part of life, which means healthier interaction," Ms. Netherland said.

The counselor said accreditation for LPC and CEU is pending. "But, it looks like accreditation is going to come through," she said.

Ms. Netherland has a masters degree in education. She is the owner of Star Counseling.

Workshop topics will include "Can This Marriage be Saved?," "The Roles of Codependency/Dying to be Loved," and "Empowering — What's in It for You, Me & Us?"

Cost of the workshop is $15 per person and includes tuition, materials and lunch. Advance registration is recommended and scholarships are available.

For registration or more information call 563-1200.

DYNAGEN: Agency sends order

(From 1B)

emergency order to remove the sludge and "prevent future build-up of solids in the solar ponds."

Failure to comply with the sludge removal upon issuance of the order would result in daily fines ranging up to $200 a day, the order says.

Gorman said Dynagen has spent more than $1 million on chlorine dioxide, an oxidizing agent which is supposed to help alleviate the sludge problems.

Lockey said the oxidizing agent has been used to "mask the odor" and could be considered an "interim measure."

Lockey said tests from some of the Dynagen monitoring water wells have shown high levels of chlorides, sulfates and total dissolved solids. But the order mandates Dynagen drill more wells upstream of the plant to determine if the contamination is coming from Dynagen.

LOCAL/AREA REPORT

Woman shot

Staff Report

A 17-year-old Midland woman was shot in the right arm during an argument about a boyfriend at Washington Park on Tuesday, police said.

The bullet that hit Elizabeth Tamara Royals, 17, traveled to the back of her right shoulder into her upper torso. She was in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital late Wednesday.

According to police, Ms. Royals was a passenger in a vehicle driving around Washington Park when she stopped to talk with another woman.

The conversation led to a fight, that was broken up by a third person, police said.

After Ms. Royals got back in her car, the other woman went to her car and retrieved a large-caliber gun, police said.

The armed woman told Ms. Royals to stay away from a boyfriend, police said. When Ms. Royals made a remark, she was shot while sitting in the car, police said.

No one has been arrested in connection with the shooting.

DEATHS

Mary Wesberry

Services for Mary Wesberry of Midland have been set for 11 a.m. Saturday at the Ellis Chapel with Dr. Larry Ashlock, pastor of Crestview Baptist Church, officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Wesberry died Wednesday at her residence.

She was born Dec. 22, 1908 in Duncan, Okla., where she was reared and educated. While visiting a sister in Crane, she met H.G. "Gil" Wesberry. They were married on Oct. 4, 1929, in Walters, Okla. ### ■ Lawyer goes to jail for six months

HOUSTON — An attorney who made disparaging remarks about a Jewish judge has been ordered to begin serving a six month jail term and pay a $500 fine.

U.S. District Judge John Rainey released a ruling Tuesday that the sentence wasn't excessive.

Attorney Jack Love claimed it was unconstitutionally harsh, and he argued that court papers describing why his actions amounted to contempt were unconstitutionally vague. Rainey disagreed.

"It appears that ordinary people could understand the conduct described" in the papers, Rainey wrote in a nine-page order.

Love's contempt charges stem from a June 10, 1990, appearance before County Court-at-Law Judge Sherman Ross. The judge cited Love once when the lawyer left the courtroom without the judge's permission while his client's case was pending.

When Love returned about two hours later, he grew so angry that he was escorted from the courtroom, saying, "I remember when there was a time when Jews couldn't take the bench." Ross, who is Jewish, issued another citation.

Love later referred to Ross as "that little Jew" and made other remarks that were painted as threats against the judge. A state appeals court threw out that charge.

■ Dallas police investigate killing links

CONWAY, Ark. — Police in Dallas are looking into evidence that could link a suspected serial killer to two unsolved Arkansas murders, officials said.

Charles F. Albright, 57, of Dallas, has been indicted in the murders of four Dallas prostitutes between October 1988 and March 1991.

Charges are being prepared against Albright in connection with another slaying, Dallas police Det. John Westphalen said. The women were killed by strangulation, stabbing or gunshots.

Police in Garland and Faulkner counties in Arkansas are checking out possible links between Albright and unsolved slayings in their jurisdictions.

Fingerprints and a stolen pickup truck found at Albright's home in Dallas may help link him to the February 1990 murder of Pamela Faye Felkins of Greenbrier, Ark., in Faulkner County, said Faulkner County Sheriff Bob Blankenship.

Although Mrs. Felkins was not a prostitute, Blankenship said there are similarities between the Greenbrier case and the string of Dallas murders for which Albright is accused, including the rape and the manner in which Mrs. Felkins was attacked.

■ Mexican officials weighing trucks

EL PASO — Mexican officials will be weighing trucks at the international Bridge of the Americas and won't let those weighing more than 40,000 pounds to cross.

The bridge linking El Paso and Ciudad Juarez, Mexico has been a point of confusion and controversy.

American officials say the bridge needs to be repaired and want heavy truck traffic banned. But truck drivers and maquiladora officials have said such a policy would be bad for business.

A ban on heavy trucks was supposed to go into effect this month. But it didn't because of threats of bridge blockades.

But Mexican officials now say heavy trucks will be sent to the Zaragoza International Bridge. Tolls at that bridge are $15 for trucks to cross into the United States and $5 to enter Mexico.

No tolls are charged at the Bridge of the Americas.

U.S. and Mexican officials were still negotiating Wednesday on the bridge ban.

■ Death row inmate wins postponement

HUNTSVILLE — A state judge delayed by about two months the scheduled Thursday execution of a death row inmate convicted of a 1985 robbery-slaying in McLennan County.

Clifton Eugene Belyeu, 33, faced lethal injection for the killing of Melodie Lundgren Bolton of West on Dec. 10, 1985.

The woman was shot in the head and stabbed during a burglary of her home.

The judge reset Belyeu's execution date for Oct. 24 because the appeal filed Wednesday, his first, was filed too late for the court to consider, said Bob Walt, a spokesman for Texas Attorney General Dan Morales.

Police found the murder weapons in Belyeu's mobile home and recovered about $15,000 worth of jewelry and guns taken in the burglary.

Mission woman dies of rabies

MISSION (AP) — A woman suffering from rabies probably contracted from a family pet died Wednesday after battling the disease for about two weeks, a hospital spokeswoman said.

San Juanita Barrera, 55, who had been in a coma at Mission Hospital and was declining steadily, died about 4:40 a.m., hospital spokeswoman Kathleen Mowery said.

Ms. Barrera, a resident of El Sauz, a small Starr County community about 25 miles northwest of Rio Grande City, is the second person to die of rabies in the South Texas valley in just more than a year. The other victim, a Mercedes man, died in June 1990 after he was bitten by a bat.

Health officials had said that Ms. Barrera seemed to be near death and was not expected to survive. There is no known cure for rabies, once the virus becomes active.

"No one has survived rabies once the symptoms have started," said Dr. Michael Kelley, of the Texas Department of Health.

Ms. Barrera was first admitted to the Starr County Hospital in Rio Grande City about two weeks ago and was transferred to the Mission facility shortly afterward, officials said.

Health officials have not been able to determine how the woman contracted the disease, although they believe one of the family dogs was probably the culprit, said George McKirahan, associate regional veterinarian for the Texas Department of Health. The dog died about three months ago.

Ms. Barrera's physician, Dr. Roberto Gonzalez, and six family members who lived with her have begun a series of post-exposure vaccinations at Mission Hospital.

As many as 30 people, including some health care workers, may take or have started the inoculations, health officials said.

McKirahan said that Ms. Barrera's death underscores the need for people to vaccinate their pets, especially in Starr County, where rabies has been on the rise.

"It's just an ongoing problem that we haven't been able to get totally under control," he said.

Appraiser finds LBJ home not on tax roll

DALLAS (AP) — Llano County tax officials are trying to determine why a waterfront home owned by the late President Lyndon Johnson is not listed on the county's tax rolls as a home and instead is taxed as agriculture land.

Chief county tax appraiser Bill Stewart told the Dallas Times Herald Tuesday he has found no tax records on the house.

The home sits on 14.5 acres about 100 yards from Lake LBJ, across the street from a 4,000-acre ranch also owned by the Johnson family.

County appraisers discovered this year that the Kingsland-area home, which residents say still is used by Lady Bird Johnson and her children, may never have been put on the county books after Johnson bought it.

An official with Austin Investments Ltd., owned by the Johnson family, disputed the claim Tuesday, blaming the confusion on "disarray" in the appraisers' office.

The discovery was made after residents of nearby subdivisions, whose properties were undergoing reappraisal, complained about the rates set for the Johnson land.

The neighborhoods were developed by Johnson and his partner, county officials said.

Stewart said he didn't know if the home was purposely overlooked in the past because of Johnson's position.

"I would hope that was not the case. I would hope it just got missed," he said. "But I really just don't know. I've been in this capacity less than a year."

Stewart said it is surprising that the apparent tax-free status of the house was never questioned.

"I think it's kind of unusual. It's not hidden behind the trees, behind the mountain. It's out there pretty much in the open," Stewart said. "It's not unusual in a rural area to find a small hunting cabin that's not on the rolls. But it is unusual to find a big house."

The land the 2,309-square-foot house sits on has been taxed during the years as part of the ranch, meaning it enjoys lower rates assessed on agricultural land.

County tax assessors this spring appraised the home at $84,931 and sent a tax notice to Austin Investments.

Emissions battle traps service station owners

EL PASO (AP) — Texas service station owners are caught in a turf battle with federal and state authorities over who gets to perform vehicle emission tests.

Some of the fiercest opposition to a plan to centralize the testing is coming from service station owners in El Paso.

El Paso County was first in the state to implement vehicle emissions testing, which it did in 1987. Emissions tests also are done in Harris, Tarrant and Dallas counties because their air quality does not meet federal standards.

Owners of 170 El Paso inspection stations said the Environmental Protection Agency's plan will cost them $14 million a year in revenue and do little to win the battle against pollution.

"This is a third of my family's revenues," Norma Chavez, owner of NCN Texaco, said Wednesday. "We're very serious about giving them a fight. We've sent them a hundred letters and given them a petition with 3,500 signatures."

The El Paso owners were to meet with the EPA, Texas Air Control Board and state highway department Wednesday night. Meetings in Dallas, Houston and Lafayette, La. also were held this week.

Ms. Chavez, president of the local Vehicle Inspectors Association, said service station owners most opposed to the idea are in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, New Mexico and Louisiana.

The EPA wants to centralize the tests at just a few places to get more polluting vehicles off the road and stop illegal trade in fake inspection stickers, agency spokesman David Bary said.

In some other U.S. cities, the agency has contracted with a company that sets up the outlets.

Ms. Chavez said if the tests are centralized, an out of state company will have to conduct them because there currently is no Texas business doing emissions testing.

Richards predicts end to county jail crisis near

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards, awarding Harris County nearly $1.3 million in crime-fighting funds, Wednesday said she believed a solution to the county jail crowding crisis may be near.

"We have really high hopes," she said, for a compromise with counties that have won lawsuits over being forced to house state prison-bound inmates in their jails without compensation.

"I am optimistic that some agreement can be reached here," Richards said.

Harris County won a federal lawsuit and a dozen other counties joined in state court to win a lawsuit ordering the state to pay them for holding the prisoners.

An earlier deal to pay part of the costs and pledge to clear the jails of state prisoners by 1995 failed when Harris County, the state's largest, wouldn't go along.

Harris County and Houston city officials have been leading the fight for more state aid. But Richards emphasized Wednesday that increasing crime, and county jail and prison overcrowding, aren't exclusively a Harris County's problem.

"I really feel for the people in Harris County. The citizens of Houston are concerned about crime in their city. And they have every reason to be," the governor said.

"They aren't alone in their concerns ... Crime is a statewide problem," she added.

Richards said her office's criminal justice grants program — which will award about $48 million statewide this year — was giving the county $1.28 million for gang intervention, narcotics, crime prevention and other programs.

That brings the total given Houston this year to $3.7 million, her staff said.

Meanwhile, Harris County lawmakers met with legislative leaders and county officials in a scramble to find an agreement that could win passage during the Legislature's current special session.

The jail deal has been tied to legislation to construct some 25,000 more prison and drug treatment beds, and the governor said he is "convinced we'll come out of this (legislative) session with thousands of additional prison beds."

Several lawmakers said a key provision in the bill would require that prisoners released on parole would be returned to the county where they were convicted. Harris County has contended that too many wind up in Houston.

A bill introduced this week would have the state accept responsibility for its prisoners in county jails, call for speedier transfer of felons to state prisons and pay counties $20 per state inmate per day, plus half the additional cost of holding those inmates.

The legislation would spend the $158 million set aside in the state appropriations bill, and Harris County lawmakers said that may be sufficient money to handle the problem.

In other jail-related developments:

■ Richards and Houston senators said a major element of an agreement would be to ask the federal courts to lift the current inmate population ceiling that has capped prisons at 95 percent

Raising that to 120 percent could immediately free up 15,000 beds, said Sen. John Whitmire, D-Houston.

■ Two other Harris County senators said negotiations over legislation that would help settle the jail and prison problems was making good progress.

"Our negotiations in the prison bill seem to be coming along very well," said Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena. "We're much farther along than we've ever been," added Sen. Gene Green, D-Houston.

■ Attorney General Dan Morales, estimating that prison lawsuits have cost the state more than $1.5 billion, urged the Legislature to quickly address prison and jail overcrowding problems.

Laborer says farmer broke promises

LAREDO (AP) — An Edinburg man accused in a lawsuit of cheating Mexican farm workers often left them sitting idly despite his promise of 40-hour work weeks, a laborer testified.

The workers would sit in a shed for hours between trips into a field and, because they were not paid for idle time, their weekly paychecks sometimes amounted to between $25 and $40, Juan Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez, who testified Tuesday in a hearing before U.S. District Judge George P. Kazen, is one of 135 plaintiffs in a lawsuit filed against Richard Ruiz.

'You couldn't roll over without rolling over on top of the guy next to you.'

Juan Gonzalez, laborer

The suit claims that Ruiz failed to deliver on a promise that the workers could have two or three months of full-time work in West Texas cucumber fields and then cheated them out of their Social Security payments.

The workers, two groups Ruiz allegedly recruited at different times in the summer of 1983, were also forced to sleep on the floor of cramped shanties, according to the lawsuit.

"You couldn't roll over without rolling over on top of the guy next to you," said Gonzalez, one of six workers to testify Tuesday.

He also complained about cockroaches and other insects in the rooms where the workers lived.

Another witness, Andrea Collins, testifying as an expert, described irregularities, including unaccounted-for Social Security deductions, that she found in examining pay records.

The workers claimed they were promised two or three months of 40-hour work weeks when recruited near the Hidalgo International Bridge in South Texas.

Labor leaders end link with Democrats

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas labor leaders have a message for Democratic candidates who take their support for granted: Don't.

"We're not going to stay married just to the Democratic Party ... We've been endorsing people that's been after our backside, and we're tired of it," Texas AFL-CIO President Joe Gunn said Wednesday during a break in the organization's state convention.

Gunn said that some Republican state senators, for example, gave labor more support on workers' compensation reform legislation than their Democratic colleagues.

The Texas AFL-CIO's executive board has unanimously said candidates should be considered individually, rather than on a straight-ticket basis. The trade union coalition normally urges support of a straight Democratic ticket in the general election.

"We spend money, person power, and resources to help many Democrats at the national and state level who seldom respond in votes or support for the welfare and concerns of working people ... Labor continues to be 'taken for granted' by these Democrats," said the policy adopted by the board.

The policy says that labor may want to consider running union members as independent candidates. Gunn said he would support that in strong union areas.

Republicans who support labor interests also will be given consideration, Gunn said.

But he indicated the policy change was a difficult one for him, saying he once considered himself to be a "yellow-dog Democrat."

"The Democrats used to be the people's party, and if they'll return to that people's party advocacy ... I'll be proud to come back, because where I was raised, Republicans lived under rocks and only come out at night," he said.

Gov. Ann Richards and former state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, who spoke at the convention, had no quarrel with the new policy.

Jury convicts Bee County judge

BEEVILLE (AP) — Bee County Judge Robert Walk was convicted Wednesday on a conflict of interest charge.

A state district court jury found Walk guilty of failing to file an affidavit and failing to abstain from a decision when required, said Bee County District Attorney Jose Aliceda.

Walk was accused of buying office supplies from a store owned by his daughter and son-in-law then failing to file disclosures.

Groups attempt to locate Britons' American dads

By Jessica Baldwin

LONDON (AP) — Linda Beddard and her American father, Bob Farnum, have long telephone conversations every Wednesday. Farnum, who was stationed in Britain during World War II, writes his long-lost daughter four letters a week.

The former Army Air Corps mechanic, now 71, last saw her 46 years ago through the chain-link fence of an English army base as he went off to war in France.

They were reunited in July. Mrs. Beddard, 47, tracked Farnum down through U.S. military records and visited him in Danville, Ill.

"He kept holding my hand, putting his arm around me," she said in an interview.

"I was introduced to everyone — everyone who would listen, anyway — in stores, on the street. The English in me wanted to crawl under a stone and the American in me thought, this is wonderful."

FARNUM HAD a wife in the United States and never returned for his daughter. Mrs. Beddard, whose mother died in 1966, said Mrs. Farnum was very nice to her during the visit.

One million GIs served in Britain during World War II and about 70,000 married local women. No one knows how many children were conceived in wartime love affairs, but Pamela Winfield, founder of Transatlantic Children's Enterprise, estimates more than 20,000.

Her organization, known as TRACE, has found 184 fathers. War Babes, started by Shirley McGlade, has located 120.

Getting through the bureaucratic maze was made easier in November by the settlement of a lawsuit War Babes brought against the U.S. government over privacy regulations. It entitles those searching for their fathers to be told the last known address, service number and marital status.

Mrs. McGlade said some bureaucrats still delay, in what she described as a continuation of a wartime policy designed to protect the soldiers.

"Some of the women were paid 100 pounds and told to keep quiet," she said in an interview. "You sign this form, keep the 100 pounds, but don't try and find the man.

"I'VE HEARD of lots of guys who applied to get married, and then the guys are whisked off: The Army got wind of it. They did not discourage the men from fraternizing with the women, but the attitude was: Don't bring them home."

After a 14-year search united Mrs. McGlade with her father in California, she founded War Babes.

"When you don't know who you are, it screws you up," she said. "I just wanted to prove that my mom loved my dad. There were stories of women lying down with soldiers for a pair of nylons. Since I've found my dad, I know who I am. It's self-confidence."

> 'Since I've found my dad, I know who I am. It's self-confidence.'
> — Shirley McGlade

Not every search ends as happily.

Michael Bayliss' father had died two years before his search began, but he has no regrets.

"Irrespective of what one finds, it is good for anyone's personal satisfaction," said Bayliss, a 41-year-old security worker.

HE SAID the four-month search began with a letter and photograph sent to a Sgt. Snow in Myrtle Springs, Texas.

"I'd been discreet in this," he said. "I didn't want to come as a complete surprise to anyone. That's why I left it so long. When they got the photograph, the resemblance was enough to convince them. They said it was like looking at a ghost."

Leslie Evans has mixed feelings about the quest for his father, who came from Philadelphia.

"It seems he was in the military prison when my mother went to see him to say she was pregnant," Evans said. "He laughed at her through the bars and sort of said 'sod off,' in a word."

Evans, who works in a Birmingham wire-factory, said his mother was told the sergeant faced a court-martial.

"We don't know what he did, and that was the last she saw of him," he said. "To find out this chap's like this is a bit of a kick in the guts. To be quite honest, I'm a bit sort of nervous about it.

MRS. WINFIELD of TRACE said middle age prompts many to begin looking.

"Sometimes, at 45 years old, they are suddenly confronted that they have an American father," She said. "At first, I have to calm them down because they are really shattered to learn they are a different person.

"It isn't until you get older, when you become a parent yourself and realize the significance. Then they feel, 'I'd like him to know he has grandchildren'."

Searches go both ways. Mrs. McGlade said she receives mail from Americans looking for children in Britain.

She said the best success at War Babes involved a man in Manchester who visited his father in America. When the son telephoned his mother, the former GI took the telephone and proposed to her. She accepted.

Alhambra called most Asian city

SAN FRANCISCO (HNS) Alexander Besher's "The Pacific Rim Almanac" was recently published, and once and for all, it names the most Asian Pacific city in the United States. Not San Francisco, not Los Angeles or San Diego. It's Alhambra, "the American Rim town of the future."

Bordered by Los Angeles and Pasadena, the town of 73,000 is one-third Taiwanese. By 1999, three-quarters of its residents will be Asian Americans. Alhambra has 12 Asian-owned banks and $100 million of Asian capital sunk into its businesses. It hosts the Pacific Rim International Table Tennis Tournament each year.

Born in China, educated in Japan, Besher is an San Francisco writer whose "Pacific Rim" column runs in U.S. newspapers.

The book chronicles the ways of Asian Pacific business, tourism and lifestyles:

- Thailand's Bangkok "sex tours" are down 40 percent since the AIDS scare.
- Japan uses more pesticides than any nation — four times worse than the U.S.

Triglycerides may cause heart disease

By Jean Carper

It's time to worry again about triglycerides — a type of blood fat that can promote heart disease in some people. So says a group of physicians, headed by Dr. Antonio M. Gotto Jr., Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

Carper

In recent years, cardiologists have ignored triglycerides, believing them relatively unimportant in boosting heart-disease risk. But new evidence shows high triglycerides may help bring on heart disease even if you have low blood cholesterol. Especially hazardous is the combination of high triglycerides and low good-type HDL cholesterol, warns Dr. Gotto.

And what is too high? Triglyceride levels above 200 mg dl need attention, he says.

To combat high triglycerides, Dr. Gotto recommends losing excess weight, engaging in mild to moderate exercise and cutting back on alcohol.

Experts at the U.S. Department of Agriculture also note that too much sugar, including high-fructose corn syrups in processed foods, boosts triglycerides significantly in many people.

Another tip: Eat more seafood. Studies show fish oil, as well as oysters, clams and crab can dramatically depress triglycerides.

FISH VS. BLOOD PRESSURE

If you have mild high blood pressure, a little fish oil may help control it. That's the finding of a new study at the University of Cincinnati. Previous studies have shown that high doses of fish-oil capsules lowered blood pressure but boosted blood cholesterol.

In the recent study, scientists discovered that only 2,000 milligrams of omega-3-type fish oil a day lowered both systolic (higher number) and diastolic pressure. That's the amount in about 31/2 raw ounces of Atlantic mackerel, 4 ounces of canned pink salmon, 5 ounces of fresh salmon or 7 ounces of canned sardines.

For 12 weeks, 33 subjects took either low doses of fish oil or safflower oil. After an interim four-week period, they switched to the opposite oil. They did not take anti-high-blood-pressure medications during the test.

The low doses of fish oil pushed the subjects' average blood pressure down 4.4 points diastolic and 6.5 points systolic compared with pre-study measurements. Cholesterol did not go up.

Caution: Eat more fish, but consult a physician before taking fish-oil capsules to lower blood pressure; there can be unexpected side effects.

IS COFFEE A DRUG?

Why do you drink coffee? Maybe for the kick of the caffeine, says Dr. John Hughes, a psychiatrist at the University of Vermont. That's what he found in some recent tests of 22 coffee drinkers given either caffeinated or decaffeinated coffee.

When not told which was which, half of the coffee drinkers in one test consistently sought out coffee with caffeine. The presumed reason: It made them feel better. For example, when deprived of caffeine for a day, many suffered withdrawal symptoms of headaches, drowsiness and fatigue. On certain psychomotor tasks, the subjects made more errors after drinking decaffeinated than caffeinated coffee.

At the same time, too much caffeine — four or more 6-ounce cups of coffee a day — often caused trembling, stomachache, sweating and talkativeness.

Thus, says Dr. Hughes, "some coffee drinkers exhibit common signs of a drug dependence." Mainly, they self-adminster coffee for the effects of caffeine and suffer when they do not get enough or get too much. However, there's no evidence caffeine cravers cannot control caffeine use, or build up a tolerance to it, causing them to consume more.

Mammograms raise question of cost

By Felicity Barringer
N.Y. Times News Service

Sandra Thomas snapped her wallet shut and walked out of the Breast Cancer Detection Center in Charlotte, N.C., recently, $39 poorer but the very model of the modern medical consumer.

In the course of 15 minutes, her breasts had been X-rayed, films had been developed to be sure the pictures were complete and she was on her way back to work 6 miles away.

Ms. Thomas, 43, says her annual mammography routine is just "common sense." But her common sense is uncommon among her peers.

"A lot of women are frightened," said Kathleen Lacombe, 58, a fabric saleswoman in South Portland, Me. "I wanted to have one and I didn't want to have one. I wanted to know if I had a problem and I didn't want to know."

How to get millions of women together with the machines that could help them is a crucial question, with ramifications not just for women's health but also for the business of medicine and the nation's health costs, now more than 12 percent of the gross national product.

About 52 million women fall under the mammographic screening guidelines of the National Cancer Institute, the American College of Radiology and the American Cancer Society.

These groups recommend regular mammographic screening for women over 40, either annually or once every two years, depending on a woman's age and medical history.

Some 18 million women use the procedure regularly. According to statistics, this is eight million more than four years ago but still barely more than a third of those for whom regualr screening mammography is recommended.

The rest, about 34 million women, stay away.

Some four million of these are expected to contract breast cancer in their lives.

According to calculations by Martin Brown, an economist with the National Cancer Institute, regular mammography screening leading to early treatment for breast cancer will add 1 to 10 years to their life expectancy.

The interests, the well-being and the lives of these absent women have become the banners waved by the two newest wings of professionals in the mammography business, who are engaged in a polite but earnest struggle that exemplifies the tensions between cost and care in American medicine.

Some practitioners say the way to get women in for screenings is to lower the costs, which now average $100 and can exceed $300, to $80, $50 or $40.

In practice this means promoting a limited number of heavily used clinics where the economies of scale bring down costs.

Other practitioners say the answer is to spread mammographic screening devices in doctors' offices around the country, promoting convenience but insuring inefficiency and increased cost.

Andrea Camp, an aide to Rep. Patricia Schroeder, a Colorado Democrat who is active in women's health issues, said:

"How do you make the machines good, and how do you get the women to the good machines? How do make them good at a cost that will allow the women to get to the machines? Those are the questions."

Hospital admissions, surgeries show decline

CHICAGO (AP) — Fewer Americans checked into hospitals or had surgery this year than last, according to a report released Thursday.

The American Hospital Association said admissions nationwide were down 3.1 percent in the first quarter compared with the same three months in 1990. Surgeries were down 1.3 percent.

The association data also show a 4 percent increase in outpatient visits, continuing a long upward trend.

William Erwin, spokesman for the Chicago-based association, linked the decline in admissions and surgeries to the recession and more people out of work. Unemployment rose from 5.2 percent in March 1990 to 6.8 percent a year later, the U.S. Labor Department said.

"The recession may not be the only reason, but it's an important one," he said, noting that people who lose their jobs often lose their health insurance.

But Dallas Salisbury of the non-profit, non-partisan Employee Benefit Research Institute said the recession was not to blame.

He said the declines are a result of a decade-long trend among private employers to curtail health insurance costs through higher deductibles and "managed care," in which employees' choice of health care providers is limited to trim costs but keep up quality services. Under traditional medical plans, employees could select their own physicians and get full reimbursement under their insurance plan.

Feed bag fashions shown

WASHINGTON (AP) — If that smart designer wardrobe from the 1980s is looking a little shabby but your wallet is crying the recession blues, it's time to consider a trendy new outfit made from hand-sewn feed bags.

Yes, they're coarse and scratchy. But they're cheap.

Who needs fancy silks when plain cotton will do?

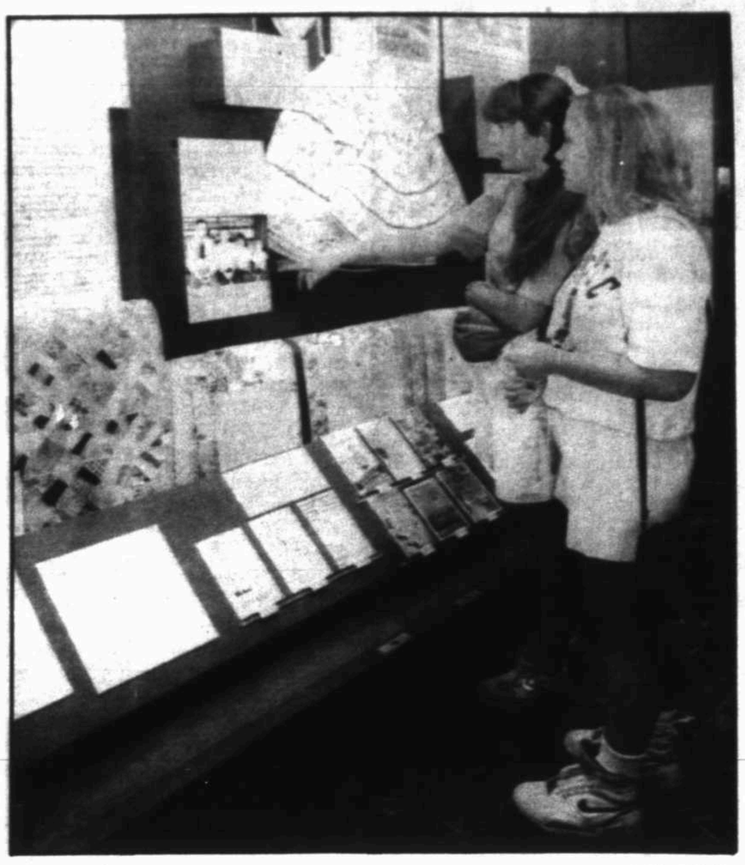
After all, they were good enough for grandma, who scissored bright floral patterns from 100-pound sacks of "Jim Dandy Pig & Hog Ration" to make everything from aprons and underwear to window curtains and jelly strainers.

In the Paris and New York fashion houses, the jury is still out. But feed bags have won the Smithsonian Institution's stamp of approval.

A "Feed Bags as Fashion" show opened recently at the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History as a tribute to the thrift and ingenuity of American housewives of the 1930s and 1940s who were struggling to make ends meet.

They were the pioneers of recycling.

On display at the museum are feed-bag quilts, mother-and-daughter skirts and embroidered dish towels for each day of the week.



AP LaserPhoto

Teresa Galloway, left, of Lee's Summit, Mo., and Amy Galloway of Peculiar, Mo., do some window shopping at the Smithsonian Institution's Museum of American History, looking at a display of clothes made from hand-sewn feed bags.

AN ANONYMOUS poet wrote an "Ode to Flour-Sack Underwear" about the garments she wore as a young girl:

"With many kids and Dad's poor pay,
We had no fancy lingerie.
Monograms and fancy stitches
Did not adorn our Sunday britches;
Pantywaists that stood the test
Had 'Swans Down' on my breast.
No lace or ruffles to enhance,
Just 'Jockey Oats' on my pants ...
Rougher than a grizzly bear
Was my flour-sack underwear,
Plain, not fancy, and two feet wide
And tougher than a hippo's hide."

The cotton "sheeting" used to make feed bags was similar to unbleached muslin. A 100-pound sack would yield about a yard of material.

When feed bags blossomed with colorful paisleys, plaids and floral prints in the early 1940s, farmers walked into feed stores with swatches of cloth their wives had given them.

Farm wives would sell surplus feed bags to their neighbors and pocket the change.

"In a small way, it was a kind of footnote to women's liberation," said Rita J. Adrosko, the museum's curator of textiles.

"Farm ladies whose husbands might have 'ruled the roost' had their private source of cash on the side," she said. "It was an early version of women striking out and doing their own little thing."

AT THE COMPETITION for customers grew, textile manufacturers published pattern books for feed-bag fashions and sponsored national sewing contests.

The hype continued until the early 1960s, when feed bags switched to paper and plastics.

But popular demand is growing for the old cotton bags.

The Cumberland General Store in Crossville, Tenn., is selling reproductions of 100-pound sacks in a half-dozen colorful prints for $7.46 each.

Exchanges find odd-sized shoes to fit

By Carrie White
N.Y. Times News Service

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Four and five times a year, Lin Schmeizer would fly to Los Angeles for shoes. She wasn't being snooty about where she purchased footwear. She just wanted shoes that fit.

Schmeizer, who at 5 feet 10 inches tall wears size 11⅛ narrow, complained long enough and loud enough to the right people. An alternative shoe store, The Forgotten Foot, for which she is a spokeswoman, opened in Phoenix in 1982. The store continues to specialize in women's shoes sizes 9½ to 13, all widths.

"It's really nice to wear shoes that are fashionable," Schmeizer said. She talks about other shoe store experiences, when sales personnel suggested she ditch their shoes and wear the boxes.

Other stores specializing in unusual sizes include Rutherford Shoes, with many locations, and these:

Cordwainer Shop, Deerfield, N.H., (603) 463-7742, which makes shoes to fit individual needs.

Hitchcock Shoes, Hingham, Mass., (617) 749-3260, wide shoes for men.

New Freedom Inc., Rexburg, Idaho, (208) 356-0061, arthritis and polio.

Shoe Craft, Norwell, Mass., (800) 225-5848, women's shoes sizes 10 to 13.

Not everyone who searches for alternative shoe sources has a larger-than-average foot.

Jeanne L. Sallman's situation was a result of a congenital birth defect. For Sallman, a Phoenix resident, her quest for shoes that fit ended in 1953 when she joined the National Odd Shoe Exchange. Her situation: a size 7 left foot and a 4½ right foot.

A Phoenix occupational therapist, Ruth Feldman founded the National Odd Shoe Exchange in 1943 to help victims of polio and war amputees. When Sallman, now director of the shoe exchange in Phoenix, was a teenager, the fee to join the exchange was $1. Today, it is free to children younger than 5 and senior citizens older than 75.

For seniors 62 to 75 and young people ages 5 to 18, the fee is an initial $15 plus $10 a year. For everyone else, the initial fee is $25 with an annual $15 charge.

Today, the National Odd Shoe Exchange, run by volunteers, has 16,000 members. Shoes are free to members, who are asked only to pay postage.

Rutherford Shoes also deals with people whose feet may not be conventional. That includes diabetics, who are particularly sensitive to footwear.

"We do a lot of adjustments to shoes as per the doctor's prescription," said Raymond Jones III, who is the district manager for Rutherford Shoes. The Mayo Clinic is one medical facility that refers patients to Rutherford. Bunions and hammertoes are just two of the reasons why consumers seek out Rutherford. Other problems can be skeletal, vascular and muscular in nature.

"A lot of people don't have foot problems until later years," Jones said. "Sometimes, even the best shoes don't make a difference."

But they can. "Women usually have more problems than men," Jones said, adding that 95 percent of an orthopedist's patients are women, while 5 percent are men. "They say the prettier (women's shoes) get, the less good they are for you. It does depend on how much a slave to fashion you've been."

Avoid trends for back to school

Parents offer shopping tips to prevent going over clothing budget

By Michele Meyer
Hearst News Service

Would it surprise you to learn that parents spend more on school supplies and clothing than the U.S. government's total education budget?

In 1988, the last year for which figures are available, back-to-school spending topped $23.9 billion, whereas the U.S. Department of Education budget was $20.3 billion. The gap has widened since.

This is a trend most parents are anxious to reverse.

Here are some tips from parents, retailers and manufacturers on how to save money while shopping for back-to-school clothes:

■ Check your child's closet before you shop so you can augment rather than duplicate the current wardrobe.

■ Put the nicest shorts and trendy clothes from your child's spring wardrobe away now so the clothes will be fresh at the beginning of the academic year.

■ Set spending limits with your child before you go to the store. If the child is old enough, enlist his or her participation in planning the shopping trip.

■ Shop early sales for clothing, but buy shoes as close to the start of school as possible. Children grow out of shoes more quickly than clothing.

■ Don't spend all the money budgeted annually for school clothes before the academic year begins. Many styles will be passe by Christmas.

■ Buy clothes in colors that go together so they can be worn a number of ways.

■ Buy clothes that dress up or down for parties, casual wear or school.

■ Stick with durable and easy-care fabrics, including cotton, rayon blends and denim.

■ Buy cotton T-shirts and shorts because that's what most children will wear through October in areas of the country with warm fall weather. Slacks made of twill or canvas are better in heat than heavy-weight denim.

■ Avoid spending a lot of money on clothes your child will quickly outgrow. An exception could be tennis shoes, an all-important fashion and status symbol for boys.

■ Buy the younger child oversized clothes so he or she can grow into them during the school year.

■ Stick to TV shows rather than movies when buying T-shirts or other clothes pegged to the popularity of characters. The popularity of a summer movie may fade more quickly than that of a TV show that appears weekly throughout the fall.

■ Listen to your child. The best value is the clothing he or she will wear repeatedly.

■ Read fashion magazines such as Seventeen and Sassy to learn major trends before you shop.

■ Windowshop trendy and expensive stores to find looks you can imitate at stores with more affordable prices.

■ Don't buy an entire outfit just to add a trend to your child's wardrobe. A tartan headband, scarf or blouse, for example, can add a fashion touch at less expense.

■ For a younger child, more likely to stain his shirt, invest more in bottoms than tops.

■ Substitute Gant or Boston Trader for the pricey Polo Ralph Lauren or Nautica look for boys. Slacks in these lines can cost about $10 less per pair and shirts about $7 less.

The best back to school clothing buys for boys include cotton-rich knits and easy-fitting printed beach pants. For girls, outfits such as this houndstooth checked cat suit and floral-printed leggings with tops sporting TV characters pictures top the best seller list. A necessity for girls and boys is the latest styles in tennis shoes.

■ Substitute Eagle's Eye, Boston Trader or Iya for the Adrienne Vittadini girls' label. You could save $5 to $10 per garment.

■ If Cole-Haan shoes, about $75, are beyond the budget, consider Bass shoes that cost about $30 less.

■ Consider buying basics, such as T-shirts, shorts, sneakers, underwear and socks, at off-price or discount stores. It may take more time but savings are worth it. Prices often are reduced 20-60 percent for brand-name items.

■ If the store will allow it, take items home on approval to be tried in a calmer atmosphere by the child who makes shopping difficult.

Ritual of grill rubs against hubby's grain

By Erma Bombeck

As I was separating my husband's mail from mine the other day, I noted someone had sent him a catalog on accessories for his outdoor grill.

Bombeck

This is like sending a Victoria's Secret catalog to Mother Teresa.

If he had his way about it, our outdoor grill would be converted to a planter. He believes if God had meant for men to cook, He would never have created women. You couldn't get him in a cute apron and insulated mitts if it was Halloween. He wants no part of it.

He has never been able to deal with the fun factor. We keep telling him that the whole point of cooking out-of-doors is that you don't have to worry about smoke or flames or mess. It's all contained in this little grill, and people have been doing it for centuries. It was the only way early man cooked.

Sometimes, I feel in my heart that if he had worn moccasins and been called Chief Driving Miss Crazy he would have had the same attitude as he has today.

I can hear him: "Do you have to cook so close to the trees, Dyed Yellow Hair? This forest is like a tinderbox ... one spark and the entire place goes up in smoke."

"Did you spray the rocks with something? You know how buffalo meat sticks. It's stupid to cook out here when we have a perfectly nice tepee."

"Don't put those sweet potatoes in the fire yet. They'll pick up the fumes of the green wood you used and we'll all die of poisoning."

"Watch those embers ... there's a wind kicking up! Don't forget to soak the spit!"

No matter how much you try to reassure my husband that cooking out is as natural as breathing, he still not only worries but he finds it inconvenient. In his words, "If I wanted a life of bird-do and grass stains, I'd live in a park."

You know without asking what kind of camper he was. He was the kid who actually peeled off the back of a stick with a knife before he speared his marshmallow. He cooked only one marshmallow at a time and when it caught fire and turned black, he threw it away.

That's why I couldn't believe it when I saw him actually thumbing through the catalog of grill accessories. When he circled an item with his pen, I couldn't stand it.

"What are you buying?" I asked.

"Look at this," he said. "It's a cover for your grill that you can put on while the grill is still warm. You'd hardly know it's a grill ... in time you'd even forget you had one."

Dear Abby

Daughter's spite splits mom's new marriage

EDITOR'S NOTE: Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters.

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Judy and I have been married for one month, and I have already filed for divorce. This is the second marriage for both of us.

Van Buren

The problem is Judy's 16-year-old daughter, Lynne. Lynne told her mother that if she stayed married to me, she'd go live with her father. Judy doesn't want Lynne to live with her father because he drinks. Also, Lynne threatened to get pregnant just for spite.

Judy insists that she loves me. She says she doesn't want a divorce and the solution would be for me to move out and get a separate apartment near here for two years until Lynne is 18.

Abby, I love Judy more than any woman I've ever known, but what kind of marriage would we have living in separate apartments?

Please tell me what to do. — UNHAPPY IN VIRGINIA

DEAR UNHAPPY: Move out. But as long as you love Judy, don't push for a divorce until you are positive that you really want one. Lynne is blackmailing her mother, who can't be blamed for doing what she thinks is best for her daughter. Both the daughter and mother need counseling. I recommend it.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been invited to a wedding. My husband is unable to attend, so I am taking my 16-year-old cousin. She does not know the bride.

At the last four weddings this cousin attended, she caught the bride's bouquet. Maybe I should tell you that she is a very large and athletic girl who is fast on her feet.

I feel that because she is only 16 and has already caught four bouquets, she should not make an all-out effort to catch this one.

Don't you think she should give the bride's friends and relatives a chance to catch the bouquet? — NO BOUQUETS FOR NORA

DEAR NO BOUQUETS: If you want to risk telling a "large, athletic girl who's fast on her feet" what to do, go ahead.

DEAR ABBY: I knew when I married my husband that his first love would always be horses. I never minded being second to a horse, but now I think a female biped has put me in third place.

This woman is not married. She has horses of her own and she relies on my husband for help and advice about her horses. They seem to spend a lot of time together. I am invited to join them, but what fun is there for me when there is nothing but horse talk?

People who know her say that she has no women friends, enjoys the company of men, but doesn't want the responsibilities of marriage.

I love my husband too much to leave him, but I was much happier before this horsey dame came along. My husband keeps telling me that I have nothing to worry about, but for the first time in my life I am jealous. Please tell me what to do. — THIRD PLACE

DEAR THIRD: Take it from the horse's mouth, your husband is probably just feeling his oats. Turn the twosome into a trio, brush up on your knowledge of horses, and you may win by a nose.

BO'S BACK

CHICAGO (AP) — The Bo Road show back to the major leagues begins this weekend in Sarasota, Fla.

The Chicago White Sox on Wednesday assigned Bo Jackson to their Class A team in the Florida State League for injury rehabilitation and he is expected to play Saturday and Sunday against Port Charlotte.

"I think it's super," Jackson said Wednesday before the White Sox-Detroit Tigers game. "I'm just going to go out and try to get my eye on the ball and make contact.

"I expect there will be a few butterflies but nothing that I think will make me lose my focus," he said.

If all goes well, Jackson, who will be the designated hitter, would then move up to the Class AA Birmingham Barons on Monday.

"He's got to go down there and prove he can do these things," White Sox general manager Ron Schueler said. "I'm not going to activate him just because he's Bo Jackson. If he can't help the ballclub, he's not going to be on the roster."

Jackson, released in March by Kansas City after team doctors diagnosed his hip injury as career threatening, was signed by the White Sox on April 3. At the time, he was on crutches and working to overcome the injury sustained in an NFL playoff game last January against the Bengals while playing for the Raiders.

The White Sox signed Jackson for $700,000 this season plus $10,000 for each game he is available to play for Chicago.

In Sarasota, meanwhile, team officials are expecting a crowd of 6,000 at the 7,500-seat Ed Smith Stadium for Saturday's game. A team spokesman said usual weekend crowds average 1,300.

The 28-year-old Jackson injured his hip on Jan. 13 and it was diagnosed as vascular necrosis of the left hip. He has undergone daily treatment and spent several months on crutches. Since mid-July, Jackson has participated in batting practice with the White Sox.

Vidmar shuts down Diablos

■ Angel pitcher Don Vidmar wins his 17th game as Midland ends a two-game slide in a 6-1 win over El Paso.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Angel pitcher Don Vidmar became only the second 17-game winner in professional baseball Wednesday night as the Midland Angels stopped the El Paso Diablos, 6-1.

Vidmar allowed just five Diablo hits, and with the exception of El Paso's lone run in the fifth, just two more men got past first base the rest of the night.

With the win, the Angels (31-25) remained in first place by three games in the Texas League's second half West Division race. Wichita remained in second with its 6-4 win over San Antonio. El Paso, first half champions, fell four games off the pace while the Missions dropped to last place, five games out.

Mark Howie, who knocked in two runs in the game, broke the Midland Angels' single season RBI mark. Howie now has 109 RBIs, one better than Joe Redfield's 108 in 1987, and is now just 10 RBIs shy of the all-time record for Midland baseball.

Vidmar, 4-2 at Palm Springs before getting the call-up to Midland earlier this season, is now 13-4 with the Angels. The soft-spoken Colorado native had just two shaky innings: Just prior to and just af-

Jeff Hostetler (15) celebrates after guiding the Giant's offense in their 20-19 Super Bowl victory over Buffalo last January.

Hostetler gets nod over Simms

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — For Ray Handley, Jeff Hostetler's two games in January canceled out Phil Simms' 12 years of experience.

Hostetler, who guided the Giants to a Super Bowl title, was named the winner of the team's quarterback contest by Handley on Wednesday over the man who led the Giants to the 1986 title, setting a Super Bowl record for passing accuracy in the process.

"I think as much as anything else, it's a gut decision," New York's new coach told a packed news conference. "I don't think one is very ahead of the other."

In making the pick, Handley went for youth over experience. Hostetler is 30, Simms 35.

He also chose mobility over strictly pocket passing. Hostetler has rushed for 325 yards and five touchdowns in a few relief appearances and seven career starts. Simms, who ranks 18th in NFL history with 28,519 passing yards, has run for just five touchdowns in 12 seasons.

Simms, whose rating of 92.5 led the NFC last season, left practice without comment.

Hostetler, who took over last season after Simms injured his foot when the Giants were 11-2, said: "Either way it wouldn't have been an easy decision."

"It's something I've been shooting for for a long time, and I came into camp prepared — did the best I could," said Hostetler, unbeaten in his seven starts. "I think that I've played well, and Phil has played well.

"I was always told it was an open competition, and for the most part, I felt that was the case," Hostetler said. "But at times, certain things were said that I thought I was the underdog, that I was in a hole. And I had to fight my way out.

"Now I've got to go out and perform right out of the starting blocks. I've got my job cut out for me. It's a tough situation because everyone is shooting for you. I'm sure there will be times when things don't go well."

Some players were surprised but took the news in stride.

Handley "went against my reading of everyone's predictions," center Bart Oates said. "As I was listening to various comments in the newspapers and television, the majority would

SWC tour stops at Houston

Coogs' Parks wants 15 INTs

Associated Press

HOUSTON — University of Houston cornerback Jerry Parks has a laid-back attitude about the 1991 season.

He doesn't care how many yards the defense gives up if it adds up to a Cougar victory and he doesn't care how many interceptions he gets as long as it's more than 14.

"If we're ahead on the scoreboard, I don't care what they get in yardage — we won, so what?" Parks said. "I don't care if you got 2,000 yards; if you ain't winning on the scoreboard that was a wasted day."

Parks led the nation with eight interceptions last season and he's set a goal of 15 for this season.

Parks led cheers for the Cougar defense Wednesday while coach John Jenkins touted his run-and-shoot offense and quarterback David Klingler for writers and broadcasters on the Southwest Conference Tour.

Jenkins was forced to shift Parks to safety last season to fill graduation holes but this season Parks is in his natural position at cornerback and he's aiming for more thefts.

"This is a pretty high goal but I've got it in my mind to catch 15 interceptions," Parks said. "This is my goal and I want all the quarterbacks to know it.

David Klingler takes his first look at an advance issue of Sports Illustrated's College Football Issue, which features the UH quarterback on the cover.

"If you throw it over there, look for me going the other way because I'm breaking on the ball."

Parks was a bright spot on a team that ranked 103 among 106 NCAA Division I teams in total defense last season.

"We only lost one game, we were 10-1," Parks said. "We played to win. The phi-

Jenkins fires back at R.C.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Houston coach John Jenkins said Wednesday he resents a comment made about him by Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum in a national magazine article and intends to seek a retraction from the coach.

"For somebody who is really a pretty good guy, John has managed to (anger) coaches all over the country," Slocum said in a Sports Illustrated article on the flamboyant Jenkins and the high-scoring run-and-shoot offense.

The Cougars, who set or tied 33 NCAA records last season and compiled a 10-1 record, were often accused of padding their statistics at the expense of beaten foes.

"I resent the hell out of that remark, I really do," Jenkins said upon hearing Slocum's comment. "Certainly I respect the job that other coaches have done and I do what's best for Houston and I don't know what he was referring to there."

Jenkins said he planned to talk to Southwest Conference officials about the comments, which he labeled as negative recruiting by Slocum.

"If he made that statement I think he ought to retract it," Jenkins said. "Maybe

Oilers face LA tonight

Associated Press

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Eric Fairs is one Oiler who doesn't mind the holdouts, injuries and contract disputes that have plagued the team this year.

"On the one hand, you'd like to see all the guys here, getting ready for the season," Fairs said. "But in another sense, I look at this as a chance to make a name for myself."

Fairs is pencilled in to start at outside linebacker when Houston and the Rams meet tonight for their final exhibition game at the Liberty Bowl.

Houston (1-2) has been hurt by the loss of six defensive starters, especially injuries to Pro Bowl tackle Ray Childress (stress fracture, right fibula) and second-year starter Jeff Alm (recovering from knee surgery).

Fairs, a standout at Memphis State, will take the place of holdout Johnny Meads, a four-year starter. Fairs joined the Oilers in 1986 as a free agent and has hung on as a backup linebacker and special teams player.

He started three games in 1989 and one in 1990 after injuries to starter Robert Lyles.

Braves 10, Reds 9

CINCINNATI — Francisco Cabrera hit a two-out, three-run homer off Rob Dibble to tie the game in the ninth, and David Justice doubled home the go-ahead run in the 13th inning as the Braves rallied for a victory over the Reds.

Twins keep up torrid pace in West

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Seattle center fielder Ken Griffey Jr. misplayed Shane Mack's liner into a three-run triple that triggered a six-run first inning, sending Kevin Tapani and the Twins over the Mariners.

Orioles 4, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON — Joe Orsulak hit a two-run double in the sixth inning, extending his hitting streak to 19 games and leading the Orioles over the Rangers.

Todd Frohwirth (5-2) pitched four scoreless innings for the victory. Gregg Olson worked the ninth for his 26th save.

AL Roundup

Red Sox 13, Indians 5
Red Sox 5, Indians 4

Boston won the opener 13-5 as Jack Clark had three hits, including two doubles, and Phil Plantier hit a three-run homer. The Red Sox have won seven of their last eight and 11 of 13.

The Red Sox trailed 4-3 in the second game when Mike Brumley began the ninth by beating out an infield hit. Boggs then lined an 0-2 pitch from Steve Olin (2-5) into the Boston bullpen in right-center for his seventh home run of the season.

Brewers 3, Blue Jays 0

TORONTO — Rick Dempsey hit a two-run homer and three Milwaukee pitchers teamed on a two-hitter, leading the Brewers over the Blue Jays.

Toronto manager Cito Gaston missed the game while he rested his bad back at a hospital. He is expected to be out at least a week, and batting coach Gene Tenace ran the team in his absence.

Milwaukee won for the 13th time in 17 games and ended the Blue Jays' three-game winning streak. Julio Machado (1-2) and Dan Plesac each pitched four shutout innings and Edwin Nunez worked the ninth for his eighth save.

Royals 7, Yankees 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kirk Gibson homered for the sixth time against the Yankees this year and Kansas City overcame its bad baserunning to win and stop a three-game losing streak.

Bret Saberhagen (9-6) pitched seven strong innings for the win. Pascual Perez (1-1) lost in his second start since coming off the disabled list.

Gibson hit a two-run, 430-foot shot in the first inning for his 15th home run of the season. He is 12-for-38 with six homers and 11 RBIs against New York this year, including a two-run homer in the series opener Monday night.

The teams combined for a record nine home runs.

ANGELS: Howie snaps RBI record

ter a 30 minute rain delay.

El Paso scored its only run in the fifth when Craig Faulkner singled in John Jaha. In the sixth, Vidmar allowed a single and a walk, the only other inning when more than one Diablo reached base.

Vidmar struck out the side in the ninth and finished with six Ks while retiring the El Paso side in order six times.

"I felt better as the game went along," Vidmar said. "I think it (the rain delay) helped me. I wasn't feeling as sharp early on."

Vidmar admitted he was more than just somewhat uncomfortable with the abundant amount of lightning just before the game's delay.

"It'll make you stop and think," he said.

Centerfielder Reggie Williams finished the night with four hits in five at bats and is 7-for-13 (.538) for the series. Williams, who said the Diablos looked "flat", said the Angels are lucky to be playing El Paso at this point in the season.

"They don't have as much incentive since they won the first half," he said. "We came out tonight to win. It's like if you have a whole lot of money, you're not going to worry if you lose a little bit. El Paso's got a whole lot more money" since they won the first half.

Howie, who drove in Williams twice, credited his new Angel RBI mark with his teammates' ability to get on base.

"To get the RBIs, you've got to have guys on base ahead of you. The guys in front of me just keep getting on and scoring."

Howie was more willing to talk about Vidmar and his fourth straight win than his own RBI mark.

"He's incredible," Howie said. "He's picked us up all year. I can't say enough about him.

Just as complimentary was Marcus Lawton, the Angel left fielder who was 1-for-3 and scored a run.

"Anytime you hold the Diablos to five hits, you know you've pitched a fine game," Lawton said.

ANGEL NOTES: Just how impressive was Vidmar's achievement of holding the Diablos to a single run? Before Wednesday, El Paso had scored 109 runs at Angels Stadium this year, an average of 8.3 per game. Midland has scored 88 runs in the same 14 games.

Ewing's salary so high it may prohibit trade from NY

Associated Press

Is Patrick Ewing is a victim of his financial success, making it difficult for the New York Knicks to trade him?

To hear Knicks president Dave Checketts talk, it doesn't seem that way, despite the NBA salary cap. While Checketts isn't saying the disgruntled all-star center has asked to be dealt — Ewing reportedly has a list of places he'd like to go — a trade hasn't been ruled out.

"I don't want anyone here who doesn't want to be here," Checketts said.

Then, as if to prove what he meant about the cap, Checketts got guard Mark Jackson to agree Wednesday to a restructuring of the remaining years of his contract. Neither the terms of the contract nor its effect on a possible trade of Ewing, who will make $3.1 million this season, was revealed.

But Jackson's agent, Don Cronson, said he didn't think the restructuing was connected to plans for Ewing.

"Our serious discussions started before this whole Ewing bruhaha erupted," said Cronson, who also declined to divulge contract terms.

With all but 10 teams in the league over the salary cap, meeting a request to be sent to the club of Ewing's choice may not be that easy. There is interest in Ewing, who reportedly has submitted a list graced by the Los Angeles Lakers, Golden State, Phoenix, Boston, Washington and Portland.

GIANTS: Little difference to teammates

(From 1C)

have picked Phil."

Left tackle John "Jumbo" Elliott said: "We don't mind who's in there. The assignments are the same. But some plays are designed where Hoss can use his speed to his advantage. Sometimes any quarterback will make you look great by moving, and sometimes he'll get in your way. But both guys are good and smart and will be ready for the job."

"It doesn't matter," running back Ottis Anderson said. "I think it's easier on Jeff and Phil now that this burden is lifted off their shoulders."

Handley said at the start of camp that if the two were even, Simms would probably get the job based on the NFL custom that a starter doesn't lose his job through injury.

Things were relatively equal in the first three exhibitions — Simms was 20 for 38 for 236 yards, two touchdowns and one interception; Hostetler was 24 for 32 for 273 yards and one touchdown. Simms' stats would be better if not for a half-dozen dropped passes against the Jets on Saturday, including one that would have been a touchdown.

Handley, the former running backs coach and offensive coordinator who took over when Bill Parcells resigned last May 15, said his decision was based in part on the way Hostetler performed in playoff games against San Francisco and Chicago that preceded the Super Bowl victory over Buffalo.

He had two TD passes in the 31-3 win over the Bears, then moved the Giants into position in the final two minutes of the NFC title game in San Francisco to set up Matt Bahr's 42-yard field goal that gave New York a 15-13 win.

Handley said the fact that this year's opener is against the 49ers was another factor in his decision.

"During the camp, Hostetler elevated his performance to the level that he gives us a chance to win games," Handley said.

OILERS: Lyght should see first action

(From 1C)

"It's a big-time opportunity. Six years. Man, that's a long wait," he said.

The Oilers beat Dallas on Sunday night 30-20 and will meet a Los Angeles (1-2) team that has had its own problems on defense, losing to Seattle 23-7 last Saturday.

The Rams have been learning the attacking, blitzing style brought in by defensive coordinator Jeff Fisher.

"The mistakes we made aren't anything that can't be corrected," safety Pat Terrell said.

A boost may come from rookie cornerback Todd Lyght, despite his missing training camp and the first three exhibition games. He is expected to see his first action after becoming the Rams' second highest paid player behind quarterback Jim Everett.

Houston coach Jack Pardee is hoping to fill one spot by giving Bo Orlando his first start in place of safety Terry Kinard.

Kinard walked out of camp for two days last week and is unhappy that the Oilers want him to take a pay cut if he isn't the starting free safety.

The teams, ousted from their home fields by major league baseball, are expected to play before a large crowd, said Pepper Rodgers, president of Mid-America Football.

The group is trying to attract a NFL franchise to Memphis.

"By game time, we should have 55,000 tickets sold or better. It's still a preseason game ... and to draw between 55,000 and 60,000 paid customers for a game not between one of your own teams is an amazing statistic," Rodgers said.

Daly keeps finding the unexpected

Associated Press

AKRON, Ohio — John Daly starts to reap some of the rewards from his PGA championship this week in the World Series of Golf.

"Three weeks ago, I didn't have any thought of being here," the 25-year-old rookie said Wednesday.

He hadn't thought of it because, until his victory at Crooked Stick, he wasn't eligible for the winners-only field of 49 players.

"It's a great opportunity. I want to make the most of it," Daly said.

It's just the first of several opportunities available to Daly, whose awesome power has attracted enormous attention.

He also has added such highly lucrative events as the Tour Championship in Pinehurst, N.C., Oct. 31-Nov. 3, the Grand Slam in Hawaii Nov. 12-13, the Skins Game in La Quinta, Calif., Nov. 30-Dec. 1, and the new, unofficial $2.5 million World Championship in Jamaica Dec. 19-22.

There could be more.

Daly said he and fiancee Bettye Fulford "are taking off the next couple of weeks and we'll have a chance to sit down and take a look at some things, kind of try to plan some things."

Among the possibilities, he said, are "maybe that $1 million tournament in South Africa, maybe a tournament in Japan."

Additional, big-money tournaments are not the only benefits, however. More importantly, Daly said, he has found his niche. As recently as a year ago, when he was struggling on the Ben Hogan Tour, Daly was giving thought to another line of work.

But with the PGA championship, he said, "I found out where I belong. I belong on the golf course."

His expectations, in the face of his new celebrity, are decidedly different from those of the legion of fans who have adopted him.

"It's all happened so fast," he said. "My expectations are to keep on playing golf and doing the best I can. A lot of people are talking about superstar and things like that. I don't believe that.

"I'm not a superstar. Superstars are people like Nicklaus and Norman and what they've done over their careers.

"I just grip it and rip it and do the best I can."

Daly, the longest hitter in golf, would appear to have a game ideally suited to the imposing 7,180 yards of the Firestone Country Club.

"It's long," he said, "but the fairways are so narrow I'm probably going to have to back off the driver and go 3-wood or 1-iron off a lot of the tees," he said.

Among his chief opposition in the select field are British Open champ Ian Baker-Finch of Australia, U.S. Open title-holder Payne Stewart and Jose Maria Olazabal, a runaway, record-setting winner in this event a year ago and the winner of last week's International tournament in Castle Rock, Colo.

In addition to Daly, Billy Andrade, who scored consecutive victories earlier this year, is among the 19 men making their first appearances in this event.

Among other contenders for the $216,000 first prize are leading money-winner Corey Pavin, Steve Pate, Fred Couples, Paul Azinger, Mark O'Meara, Rocco Mediate, Davis Love III and Lanny Wadkins, who has a history of strong play in this tournament.

Rarick seeks year's first consecutive LPGA wins

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Cindy Rarick thinks she has the mindset to win two straight LPGA tournaments. If she does, she'd be the first this year.

Rarick gets the chance to win consecutive events when the Chicago Sun-Times opens Thursday.

"It's tough to win any tournament and to try and do it back to back is pretty tough," said Rarick, winner of last weekend's Northgate Classic. "A lot of it has to do with emotions."

Only Meg Mallon, Beth Daniel, Jane Geddes and Deb Richard have won more than one of the 26 LPGA events this year, and no one has won two straight since Daniel won the Northgate and the Rail Charity Classic in Springfield, Ill., almost a year ago.

But Rarick feels she has as good a shot at the Chicago title as anyone in the field of more than 140 vying for the $63,750 first prize in the $450,000 event.

"Winning it gave me a lot of confidence," she said Wednesday. "Putting is one of my strong points and this course favors a good putter."

The frequent doglegs and short holes on the par-72, 6,231-yard Oak Brook Golf Club present problems for some golfers, but Rarick feels comfortable.

"I really like this golf course. The greens are frisky," Rarick said. "It should be a good scoring course. It will depend on the winds and the winds out there were pretty good today."

She disagrees with those who think the course might be too easy.

"It's going to jump up and bite a few people more than they think," she said.

Rarick, from Tucson, Arizona, came from 5 shots behind on the final day at Brooklyn Park, Minn., and won a 3-hole playoff with Daniel and Jody Anschutz.

"It was wonderful winning in front of all my relatives. I had 75 day passes each day and that wasn't enough," said Rarick, whose $60,000 top prize boosted her 1991 earnings to $183,337, 16th best on the tour.

PGA lightning rule amended

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — The PGA Tour has modified a rule of golf in order to get spectators off the course faster in the event of lightning, Commissioner Deane Beman said Wednesday.

The rule governing "proper procedure when play is suspended" previously allowed players to complete the hole they were on after the suspension of play.

The modified rule, in effect immediately for all PGA Tour events, requires that all players stop play immediately when play is suspended.

"In the aftermath of the two tragic lightning-related deaths at this summer's U.S. Open and the PGA Championship," Beman said, "it is apparent that the PGA Tour must act decisively to protect the safety of everyone who attends our golf tournaments."

COOGS: 'Win, baby, win.'

(From 1C)

losophy as far as the defense was concerned was 'Win, baby, win.' We're just like the (Los Angeles) Raiders."

Parks thinks he could have had more interceptions last season.

"I dropped three or four last year or I could have had 12," he said. "Some I knocked down that I could have caught if I gave a little more effort."

Jenkins has reason to be excited about his defense this season. He compares it with the 1989 group that ranked sixth in the nation in scoring defense (13.6 points per game), 23rd in total defense (316.5), and 19th in pass defense (166.4).

"This bunch can be comparable," Jenkins said. "The difference is the 1989 team was a senior-oriented bunch. That was a plus. The minus side that year was we had no depth. We had maybe 14 players that we could put in a game in critical situations without having an extreme dropoff.

"The youth factor still exists but those who played as freshmen last year at least experienced winning."

The quick-striking Cougar offense often put a strain on the Cougar defense last season, forcing it to remain on the field. Parks said the defenders are ready for the same drill this season.

"It's really a workout for us," he said. "This gets us better conditioned early in the season. We spend so much time working against the run-and-shoot that we're in shape. It doesn't bother us."

Parks came to Houston after beginning his college career at Oklahoma. He left that school after a dorm room incident in which he shot and injured teammate Zarek Peters.

Peters recovered and transferred to Texas A&I. Parks came to Houston and fit quickly into the Houston secondary.

He's a Cougar now, but Parks said he still has fond memories of his time at Oklahoma.

"I don't have anything against Oklahoma," Parks said. "What I did was what I did, Oklahoma didn't do it to me. I have no regrets. When I was there they treated me fairly.

"Now I'm in another dynasty. I'll always be a Sooner but the Cougars come first now."

COACHES: UH's Jenkins again accused of running up scores

(From 1C)

the conference office will make a stand on it. I think the world of R.C., I respect the job he's done but I do resent that remark."

Houston's prolific offense has been the target of criticism dating back to former Coach Jack Pardee's tenure when the Cougars beat Southern Methodist 95-21.

Jenkins counters that he wants his substitutes to play their best when they get in a game.

"If that second teamer can score a touchdown by making a great play, or that third teamer can build confidence by making a great play, all that's going to do is build future success for the Houston Cougars," Jenkins said.

"By no means have I ever attempted to degrade a team, another player, coach because football has been my whole life. I was raised by coaches. Basically everyone I've run across in my life, it's been because of football."

Houston's success could be attracting the scrutiny, Jenkins said.

"We're riding along right now in pretty good shape. We've built a very excellent program and the results speak for themselves," Jenkins said. "With that comes a lot of criticism.

"By no means have I tried to intentionally go out there and try to hurt somebody, hurt their feelings. But let's face it, this is a big time business and I approach it that way. It's my life."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Now is the time to grab the brass ring of success. Take a calculated risk. Prominent people will use their influence on your behalf in late fall. December brings a joyful family reunion and happy romance. Changing the direction of your career in early 1992 will result in great financial security. Help a parent who has a health problem. A permanent romantic pairing is likely by this time next summer.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: author Ray Bradbury, actress Valerie Harper, blues singer John Lee Hooker, slugger Carl Yastrzemski.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look before you leap where employment or romance is concerned. Your self-confidence returns. Luck is on your side! Keep your emotions under tighter control at the office. Sidestep petty squabbles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A wish comes true, but your timing may be off. Try to act less self-conscious when around people of wealth and power. Refuse to pass up a career opportunity because of family problems.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Hard work will take your mind off any domestic troubles and bring new financial rewards. Your mate may be in a dark mood. Do not despair. Good things lie ahead.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be careful not to overreact to something you learn about a young person. A sense of humor helps you make a family gathering a big success. Loved one lends a helping hand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Flirting may be exciting but it is also foolhardy if you have already made a commitment to someone else. Do not mistake physical attraction for true love. Catch up on world events.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Behind-the-scenes maneuvering may bring you the success you seek. Your ego gets a big boost when you are honored in public. Do not let your coworkers boss you around.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accept someone's evidence for what it is worth but check on any items you do not understand. Give your mind a real workout. Learn more about computer science.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do your duty today but avoid taking unnecessary risks. Attempts to obtain results despite unfavorable conditions could be dangerous. Balance your checkbook before going shopping or taking a trip.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Acting in haste leads to waste. It takes advance planning to make your dreams come true. Use good judgment when considering investment proposals. Nurture a close relationship. Greater rapport is possible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A former love could be dishonest; be careful. Face a difficult situation with confidence. Follow-through will win you a coveted job. Play your cards cautiously in financial negotiations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Others will take to you, even under the most difficult of circumstances today. A financial success gives you new confidence. Your energy level rises when you follow an exercise-diet program faithfully.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your schedule flexible; last-minute changes will work out better for you. Those who are self-employed should be more assertive. Embarking on a romance with a business partner could be risky. Go slow.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are dramatic, energetic and trusting. Blessed with high intelligence, these Leos can find success in almost any profession. In fact, their leadership skills could steer them toward a brilliant career in politics. However, they tend to take people at face value and sometimes mistake style for substance. They must be very careful when choosing allies and confidants! A strong concern for others makes these Leos interested in people from all walks of life.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠

The prize for the Best Played Hand at the recent European Community Championships in Athens was won by Shmuel Friedman of Israel for this effort.

The contract was a normal enough three no trump and, despite seven fast tricks, chances for nine tricks were not all that bright—switch East-West's minor-suit holdings and you can see that declarer will have a devil of a time trying to develop two extra tricks.

Matters improved somewhat when declarer won the first trick and led a club off the board. East followed low and declarer's jack won for the eighth trick. Since the jack of diamonds was destined to fall, nine tricks were now certain, but Friedman, not blessed with X-ray vision, found a brilliant way to settle the issue regardless of the position of the red-suit honors. South crossed to dummy with a spade, led a club to the ace and then continued with another club, discarding the table's remaining high spade!

The defenders had no counter. East could not broach a red suit without giving declarer the fulfilling trick in that suit, so East persevered with spades. But now Friedman's beautifully timed unblocking maneuver reaped its just reward.

Declarer won the spade in hand and set up a long club by conceding another club trick to East. Since East was now down to nothing but red cards, declarer actually scored an overtrick—three spades, one heart, three diamonds and three clubs.

We have often quibbled with the hands selected to win the brilliancy awards. In this case we congratulate the judges on a worthy choice.

Jazz singer-pianist Connick Jr. cuts new album, goes on tour

NEW YORK — When Harry Met Salaries? It's not a movie sequel but it could be the story of musician Harry Connick Jr.'s life these days.

Connick

The jazz singer-pianist is planning a U.S. tour this fall in a project sponsored by AT&T. He's got a new album coming out on Columbia Records called "Blue Light, Red Light" and this fall he'll be in Jodie Foster's new movie "Little Man Tate."

"It's a great thrill to be going out on the road again with an orchestra of hard swinging musicians," Connick said Tuesday at news conference announcing the tour.

His repertoire relies heavily on nostalgia: Harold Arlen's "If I Only Had a Brain"; Hoagy Carmichael's "Lazy River"; and Bart Howard's "In Other Words" (also called "Fly Me to the Moon").

The 23-year-old New Orleans native has two Grammy awards to his credit. He made his screen debut last year in "Memphis Belle" and scored Rob Reiner's 1989 film "When Harry Met Sally."

---

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Mitch Miller, the Buffalo Philharmonic's principal guest and pops conductor, has resigned in protest of funding cutbacks for the pops series.

Miller

Miller, 80, said a plan to rescue the financially troubled orchestra called for limiting rehearsals to one per pops concert and eliminating special lighting.

Orchestra president Andrew Rudnick said the philharmonic hated losing Miller, who has international renown.

Miller was to conduct nine concerts and a replacement has yet to be chosen, The Buffalo News reported Wednesday.

The orchestra, which employs 82 musicians, has a deficit exceeding $2 million. It shut down for two months last fall for lack of money.

---

SANFORD, Fla. — Hedy Lamarr's arraignment for allegedly pinching laxatives and eyedrops from a drugstore was delayed while prosecutors decide whether to charge the former film siren with theft.

Lamarr, 76, was arrested Aug. 1 after employees at a Casselberry drugstore said she failed to pay for $21.48 worth of items.

Lamarr, a star of the 1930s and '40s, has pleaded innocent.

She lives in Altamonte Springs, a town northeast of Orlando.

A Tuesday arraignment was postponed to Sept. 17, giving prosecutors more time to review the case.

Lamarr's attorney, Joerg Jaeger, said his client did not deliberately steal anything. She believed her shopping companion had paid for the items, the lawyer said.

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. — Surf-rockers Jan and Dean rode the wave of popularity in 1963 with the hit "Surf City," now tourism boosters want the City Council to copyright the moniker as a lure to this wave-riding mecca.

"People from Iowa want to come here to the beach. All the city has to do is grab onto the coattails of this idea," Dean Torrance, representing half of Jan and Dean, told the council Monday night.

Torrance and a group of business and tourism boosters asked the council to spend $2,500 to copyright the phrase "Surf City" to market Huntington Beach.

The heydays for Torrance and Jan Barry were in the 1950s and '60s.

RICHMOND, Va. — Former beauty queen Tai Collins, who claims she had an affair with U.S. Sen. Charles S. Robb of Virginia, poses nude in Playboy's October issue and gives her account of the purported liaison that Robb denies.

Collins, 29 and a model, appears on the magazine's cover clad in lingerie and a hotel robe. Next to her picture appear the words: "Tai Collins — The Woman Senator Charles Robb Couldn't Resist."

Inside, she tells of a 10-month affair she says she had with Robb while he was governor from 1982 to 1986.

Robb has denied ever having an affair with Collins or any other infidelity to his wife, Lynda Bird Johnson Robb, daughter of President Lyndon Johnson.

Christine O. Bridge, Robb's acting press secretary, called the Playboy story "fantasy." She said Tuesday that Robb, who is touring Africa, would have no comment on the Playboy piece.

Accompanying the story on Collins are nude color photographs of the former Miss Virginia-USA.

Collins said she was paid less than $25,000 to appear in Playboy. But she could make at least $75,000 more appearing on television shows and at Playboy promotional events next month, she said.

The October issue hits newstands on Sept. 3, Playboy spokeswoman Elizabeth Norris said.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9938.

2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.

3) Once you've entered the numberical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key(*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.

4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
- You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
- You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key(*). Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
- You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — Investors staged a buying spree on Wall Street today following word that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev was returned to power. Stock prices were sharply higher across the board, more than erasing the losses suffered when Kremlin hardliners announced Gorbachev's sudden ouster earlier this week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials gained 65.29 points to 2,978.98 by 2 p.m. EDT. The closely watched index had plunged nearly 70 points on Monday.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by nearly 6 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 1,446 up, 250 down and 352 unchanged. Volume on the Big Board was extremely heavy, with 171.05 million shares changing hands two hours before the closing bell.

Foreign stock markets also reversed the selling paranoia that gripped them earlier, and the exuberance spilled over into Wall Street when the U.S. markets opened.

IBM downgraded

NEW YORK — Standard & Poor's Corp., a major credit-rating agency, has lowered its long-term rating outlook on International Business Machines Corp. from "stable" to "negative." Though S&P currently gives IBM a triple-A credit rating, its highest, the agency said it is concerned by "the general deterioration of the market environment in the computer industry coupled with IBM's decline in profitability from the high levels of the mid-1980s."

UTC cuts

HARTFORD, Conn. — United Technologies Corp. (UTC) said Wednesday it will slash operating costs by $1 billion by the end of 1993, a move analysts saw as an attempt to reassure stockholders after two quarters of dismal earnings. Although details remain to be worked out, the cost-cutting will certainly include substantial layoffs beyond the thousands already announced, said spokesman Dan Harrison. On Wall Street, UTC's stock surged $3.37½ per share to $48 in composite trading.

Salomon woes

NEW YORK — The flight of customers from Salomon Brothers intensified as the World Bank and more state agencies withdrew business in reaction to the brokerage's bond-trading scandal. The World Bank said it would suspend business with the Wall Street giant at least through September.

Investors go on buying spree

■ Wall Street rebounds from the Soviet crisis with the biggest round of trading since the beginning of the Gulf War.

Associated Press

Wall Street rebounded with its biggest buying spree since the beginning of the Gulf War as financial markets around the world reversed course Wednesday after the collapse of the 3-day-old coup in the Soviet Union.

Investors surged into stocks, gobbled up grains and dumped dollars and oil in a wild burst of trading that countered Monday's nervous reaction to the attempted overthrow of President Mikhail Gorbachev.

The speed of events in Moscow spilled into the financial markets from Tokyo to Frankfurt to New York, where the turnaround in prices mirrored the triumphant comeback of the deposed Kremlin leadership.

"The assessment in the stock market is ecstasy," said John Eberle, head of equity trading at the Chicago Corp. investment firm.

On Wall Street, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, America's best-known stock barometer, surged at the opening bell and finished 88.10 points higher at 3,001.79.

It was the sixth biggest point rise ever and the largest since Jan. 17, when the average rose 114.60 points after the first successful bombing raids against Iraq.

Wednesday's 3 percent gain more than erased losses Monday when news of the coup first shocked the world and raised fears of a Soviet civil war, superpower chill and global economic disruptions.

Other stock barometers in the United States and abroad also surged.

Among the notable gainers were well-known companies with business ties to the Soviet Union, such as Pepsico Inc., which jumped $1.37½ a share to $33, and General Motors Corp., which rose $2.25 a share to $37.50.

Conversely, some big defense contractors, which jumped Monday on fears of a Cold War revival, retreated. General Dynamics Corp. was down $2.62½ a share to $44.12½, and McDonnell Douglas Corp. fell $1.50 a share to $54.

The turnaround was even more dramatic in the grain trading pits of Chicago's commodity markets, where prices of corn, wheat and soybeans soared after tumbling on Monday out of fear that Soviet anarchy would endanger Moscow purchases of American grain, a critical source of business for U.S. farmers.

Traders smile on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange Wednesday shortly before the market closed. The unraveling of the Soviet coup set off a stock market rally, with the Dow Jones average posting its most dramatic gain since the Gulf War.

Oil prices drop when Soviet coup foiled

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices plunged Wednesday as the Soviet coup failed and fears of a disruption of exports from the world's largest petroleum producer subsided.

Light sweet crude oil for delivery in October settled at $21.55 per barrel, down 85 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude oil for delivery in October settled at $19.64 per barrel, down $1.01, at the International Petroleum Exchange.

The drop was as swift and steep as oil's panicky rally had been on Monday, when Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was ousted. The price of crude landed about where it was before the crisis began.

"The market had obviously risen sharply on fears there could be a supply cutoff, and with the coup evaporating, so did the fears and so did prices," said Andrew Lebow, an oil analyst with E.D.&F. Man International Futures Inc.

For three days, the market behaved as wildly as it had a year earlier in the wake of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. But this crisis appeared to have ended much more quickly and traders said the jolt to the market was less severe.

"After last fall, people kind of knew what to expect," said Victor Yu, vice president of futures at Refco Inc. "The emotional factor I don't think was as strong, even though there was headline trading."

During the Gulf crisis, traders were worried about combat damaging vital Saudi oil facilities. That would have had a more devastating effect on the global supply stream, because the Saudis export far more crude than the Soviets.

While oil fell back Wednesday, prices of refined petroleum products also retreated from their sharp rises earlier in the week.

Home heating oil for delivery in September settled at 61.80 cents a gallon, down 4.52 cents. Unleaded gasoline for delivery in September settled at 67.93 cents a gallon, down 1.14 cents.

Heating oil made the biggest move down, because it had the farthest to fall after posting the largest gains earlier. The Soviet Union is a major supplier of gas oil, the European equivalent of oil used to heat residences, and any supply problems would have caused sharp price rises as the cold season draws near.

Continental's chairman, vice president resign

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines Chairman Hollis Harris resigned in a management shakeup Wednesday, a day after the troubled carrier announced cuts in staff, service and the size of its aircraft fleet.

Harris, 59, stepped down as president, chairman and chief executive officer of Continental Airlines Holdings Inc., the airline's parent company, a year after taking over the financially strapped carrier.

Continental, which has been in bankruptcy court since December, named Robert R. Ferguson III as president and chief executive officer of Continental Airlines Holdings. Ferguson also was named to the board of directors of the airline and becomes vice chairman and chief executive officer of Continental Airlines.

Resigning with Harris at a late Wednesday board meeting was R. Lamar Durrett, the executive vice president for personnel and administration.

Harris did not immediately return a telephone call Wednesday from The Associated Press.

"Hollis Harris helped to restore Continental's credibility with our customers, employees and business partners," said Carl Pohlad, chairman of the board of the parent company. "However, after much soul-searching, the board of directors on one hand, and Messrs. Harris and Durrett on the other, reached the mutual conclusion that a change in leadership was appropriate."

Lewis Jordan was named president and chief operating officer of Houston-based Continental Airlines, the nation's fifth-largest carrier.

Charles Goolsbee was appointed executive vice president for corporate affairs at the airline and executive vice president and chief operating officer of the holding company.

The airline filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code on December 3, 1990.

In the last 18 months, Continental's losses have set records for the industry, posting a $2.3 billion loss for all of 1990. That loss included a $2.2 billion loss in the fourth quarter, which the company attributed to write-offs from the liquidation of sister airline Eastern, and from economic conditions such as the recession and the Persian Gulf War.

Last month, it posted a second-quarter loss of $109 million. On Tuesday, Continental announced a restructuring that included eliminating 600 airport and cargo jobs, suspending 133 daily flights and taking 22 leased airplanes out of service.

Harris came from Delta Air Lines to replace Frank Lorenzo last August. Harris was president and chief operating officer of Atlanta-based Delta, having risen from a position as transportation agent in 1954.

When he left Delta, Harris seemed to be just what Continental needed — someone with the financial savvy to keep the carrier afloat and with the charisma needed to encourage dispirited employees.

Several months after Harris was hired, employees referred to him as "a breath of fresh air."

Rules cover tax exclusion for home's sale

By Bill Doyle

Q. My wife and I are both 52 years old. We own a condominium in town which has been our primary residence for the past 10 years. We have owned a weekend lake home for the past three years. We plan to take early retirement this year and sell the condominium. We expect no profit on the sale.

Doyle

Is it possible, after selling the condo, to move into the lake home and live in it for some length of time, so that it will be our primary residence and be eligible for the "once-in-a-lifetime" $125,000 profit exclusion?

A. Certainly. All you have to do to take that exclusion is live in the lake home on a steady basis for three years. Then, when you finally sell the lake place, you'll be able to exclude and not pay tax on $125,000 of your profit from that sale.

Under the rules, anyone 55 or older who sells the principal residence he or she has lived in for at least three of the five years prior to the sale is entitled to that tax break.

Second homes, such as vacation and weekend places, are not eligible for that exclusion while principal residences are owned. So, you won't be able to use the exclusion on your lake place until you have moved there and used it as your principal residence.

This is called a once-in-a-lifetime arrangement, assuming neither your nor your spouse has excluded from tax the profit on sale of a home since July 26, 1978. For a number of years before that date there was a $50,000 tax exclusion on home sales by folks 65 and older.

Q. My husband recently lost his job when his company "downsized," a facetious word if ever there was one. Fortunately, he received large sums from his retirement plans. We will be able to live reasonably comfortably, after selling our large house and moving to a less expensive area.

I am 52 and he will be 55 next June. We want to avail ourselves of the $125,000 capital gains tax exclusion on our present home. I say we can do that by selling any time in 1992, even January, as my husband's 55th birthday is in that year. Right?

A. Wrong. Sorry about that. But to take that exclusion, you'll have to put off the sale until your husband's birthday or later. The regulations are specific on this. One spouse must reach age 55 by the date of the sale. Turning 55 later in the year of the sale does not pass muster.

Q. In reference to the $125,000 capital gains tax exclusion on a home sale by senior citizens, is it better to get divorced before or after the sale? Can each divorced spouse claim the $125,000 exclusion, or is it split in half?

A. Assuming the soon-to-be divorced couple shares things fifty-fifty, it makes no difference if the home sale takes place before or after divorce.

If the sale takes place before the divorce and the couple files a joint income tax return, the $125,000 exclusion can be taken. If they file separate returns, each can take a $62,500 exclusion.

After the divorce, each can take a $62,500 exclusion. Under no circumstances is each of them entitled to a $125,000 exclusion.

Q. I am over 55 years old and have some property I am going to sell. Will I be about to take advantage of the $125,000 exclusion deal?

A. You will, only if that property is your principal residence in which you have lived for at least three of the five years prior to the sale.

If it is business or investment property, you probably can make a "Section 1031 exchange" and defer tax on the profit from the sale. That tactic, through which you end up owning other business or investment property, is complicated and requires assistance from an account or tax lawyer who specializes in real estate.

Hispanic fathers find forum in parenting program

By Barbara Karkabi
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — For five months, the men have been meeting once a week, talking about everything from drugs and teen-age pregnancy to AIDS and fatherhood.

Sometimes the exchange of ideas goes on long after the meeting is over, moving into the parking lot. Leaning against trucks, their eyes bright and animated, a few of the men continue to talk long into the night.

To Arturo Grimaldo, 32, one of several men in the group born in Mexico, the chance to talk about his feelings is a new experience. But it is one he welcomes, and it has started to change his life and his family's.

"Before, when my children would ask me about drugs or other problems, I would tell them they were too young to talk about such things," Grimaldo said. "Or I would tell them I didn't have time. Now, I grab every chance I can to talk to them and be with them."

The men's group, as it is loosely called, was started in March by Avance, a nationally recognized program that focuses on early childhood development and parenting skills.

Avance (Spanish for forward), begun in San Antonio 17 years ago, has worked with blacks and Hispanics. But the 3-year-old Houston program, which has its headquarters behind Trinity Presbyterian Church in the city's East End, has concentrated on the Hispanic community.

'The men want to know how to define themselves in a country where men's roles are so much different. They still want to feel that they are the head of the family, not in a negative sense, but in terms of financial, emotional and social support.'

— Sylvia Garcia

"THIS IS A parenting program, and we had some great things for the mothers, but nothing for the fathers. So we were anxious to get something going for them," said Sylvia Garcia, Avance's area director.

"We started on a shoestring budget and have a volunteer, Samuel Puccio, who leads the group, but we really want to expand."

Most of the men learned of the group through their wives, who are enrolled in an extensive nine-month program with Avance. When the men expressed some reservations about taking a class, they were assured that it was just a group with some scheduled platicas, or talks.

It was, Garcia admits, a subtle and relatively painless way of involving the men, who were already curious about their wives' program.

Talking about problems and feelings is unexplored territory for these men, who were born in Mexico to a background of poverty, Garcia said. Many have low self-esteem because they don't speak English.

Most came to this country illegally to raise their economic standards and now have been granted amnesty. But they're still trying to adjust to changes in their lives, including learning English and becoming U.S. citizens.

"THE MEN WANT to know how to define themselves in a country where men's roles are so much different," Garcia said. "They still want to feel that they are the head of the family, not in a negative sense, but in terms of financial, emotional and social support. They also worry about their futures and how to plan for retirement."

The group is giving them the vocabulary to talk about all the things they had thought about but kept hidden for so many years, Garcia said. They think all their friends should come, too. Santos Velazquez, 41, had told at least 10 friends about the group. So far only one has come with him, and he plans to stay.

During one recent meeting, the subject was alcoholism, prompting an honest discussion as well as some soul-searching.

"I tell my friends: 'Look, you drink too much, that's all you do every weekend. You have a problem and you need to cut back,'" Grimaldo said. "But they just looked at me and laughed."

For Velazquez, whose children are 21, 18 and 8, the alcohol lecture and discussion hit home. For years, he said, he drank too much. Now he has stopped and has begun to realize why he abused alcohol.

AP Laserphoto

Arthuro Grimaldo, 32, says the Avance weekly meetings have made him closer to his children Lisette, 3, Jesus, 8, and Luis, 5. Avance, started a men's group, as it is loosely called, in March where they talk about everything from drugs and teen-age pregnancy to AIDS and fatherhood.

THE REGULAR MEETINGS attract nine to 15 men. But on one recent evening, Grimaldo, Velazquez and Martin Rodriguez, 31, gathered on their own to drink sodas, eat potato chips and talk about how the weekly meetings have changed their lives.

Grimaldo laughingly said that his children, ages 9, 8, 5 and 3, anxiously remind him about the group on the day of the meeting. Not that he would forget. When Grimaldo starts to talk, it is like a dam bursting, so filled is he with ideas and concerns.

He talked about the 10- and 11-year-old boys he sees in his neighborhood who are addicted to drugs, about the young pregnant girls.

New cruiser police's best public relations

N.Y. Times News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — It's Saturday night, and Steve Garcia is cruising the strip in his blue custom low rider with air-brushed murals and metallic sparkle. "Bad car," whoops a group of Mexican-American teen-agers dressed in black as Garcia glides by, nods and cranks up the bass on his six-speaker stereo.

Is this another rowdy cruiser looking for a rumble with the police? No, Garcia is the police.

His custom cruiser with mag wheels is the Santa Barbara Police Department's new public relations vehicle. Officer Garcia is trying to send the message that cool can be legal, even if some here complain that it caters to stereotypes about Mexican-Americans.

"This car makes kids want to come talk to us," said Officer Garcia, creator of the cruise car.

When the car pulls to the side of the street, admirers flock to it. The $6,000 worth of custom work, all of it donated, includes black lace paint designs that swirl around an airbrushed mural of the Santa Barbara Mission on the hood and a Robocop portrait on the trunk. The black seats are custom upholstered, and the emergency light atop the car has a sleek aerodynamic look.

"This gives the young kids confidence with the police; they know police like the kids," said an onlooker, Ricardo Requejo, a 62-year-old maintenance worker with the Santa Barbara school system.

On this evening, at least, the car had its desired effect, drawing the teen-agers into car talk with officers.

"Stereo?" asked Javier Riley, a 20-year-old from nearby Ventura.

"Yep," replied Mark Grunewald, one of the police officers who patrols in the cruise car. "Sony 25. Amp in the trunk. Six speakers. Equalizer. Played only at legal volume."

"You going to tint the windows?"

"Yeah, the rear ones. It's legal to tint those."

"Nice mag wheels. Hydraulics?"

"Nah, it looks good without having to lower it."

"Art work's pretty cool. Where are the girlies?"

"We have to keep it somewhat clean."

"Paint bikinis on them."

Garcia said the car has already helped change some of the behavior of adolescents. Since the car started its Friday and Saturday night sorties in July, the low riders — highly customized cars that cruise Southern California streets on weekend nights — form an automotive conga line behind the patrol car and follow it down the strip, instead of scattering as they usually do at the sight of the police.

Garcia came up with the idea for the car when giving a talk on cruising safety and alcohol abuse at a local high school. Some students jokingly suggested airbrush artwork for a patrol car and Garcia, with connections born of his family's eight generations here, easily found someone willing to modify a standard 1986 Chevrolet Caprice police car for free.

As for complaints about stereotyping, Grunewald said the car was not aimed specifically at Hispanic youths but was intended to make a connection with any of the youths who spend their Friday and Saturday nights clogging the streets, regardless of their ethnicity. Although these "cruising" youths used the term low rider for the police car, officer Grunewald was careful instead to call it a custom car.

The term low rider was originally applied to the very low-slung cars associated with Hispanic youths, but today it is used to describe almost any customized car, and even their drivers and passengers.

Minister testifies meeting at Swaggart's 'very serious'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The meeting that prompted Marvin Gorman's resignation from his pulpit in 1986 was serious, not confrontational, according to testimony Wednesday from the minister whose wife admits adultery with Gorman.

"Everybody was crying. It was somber," the Rev. David Savage of Lubbock, Texas, said in a sworn statement played to jurors Wednesday in Gorman's $90 million defamation suit against the televangelist Jimmy Swaggart.

Gorman claims Swaggart sabotaged his growing television ministry with lies about his extramarital sex life. He said it consisted of only a one-night stand with Lynda Savage and some petting with a second woman.

Savage's description of the July 15, 1986, meeting at Swaggart's home was as different from Gorman's as Lynda Savage's statement, played Tuesday, had been from Gorman's description of their affair.

Gorman said the Rev. Michael Indest, to whom Lynda Savage had confessed before telling her husband, refused to let him call regional or national officials of the Assemblies of God and forced him to meet with Swaggart in Baton Rouge by threatening to call Gorman's wife, Virginia.

He and Savage drove to Baton Rouge together, and, according to Gorman, agreed that they'd rather not go. He said Swaggart and other ministers shouted at him during the meeting, and Swaggart accused him of affairs with Mrs. Savage and seven other women.

"Was anybody yelling at Marvin Gorman?" Swaggart's attorney, Wayne Lee, asked. "No," Savage answered.

Earlier, he said, "It was very serious. ... It was really a broken spirit. I was in a daze."

Savage also quoted Indest as telling him that he tried unsuccessfully to get in touch with officials higher in the church before deciding to call Swaggart.

He said he didn't object to meeting with Swaggart, and couldn't recall Gorman doing so. "I really didn't say much at all," said Savage, who had learned of his wife's infidelity five days earlier.

The Savages' testimony is taped because both live out of state and cannot be compelled to testify in Louisiana civil court. Mrs. Savage said her husband had to leave a church in Edmond, Okla., after word spread there about her past, and is now preaching in Lubbock. She plans to join him after their youngest son finishes school, she said.

In testimony played Tuesday, Mrs. Savage said she and Gorman had sex eight or nine times over 2½ years, that she tried many times to end the affair, and finally did so in January 1981. When she told Gorman it was over, according to her testimony, he was most concerned that she had written down information about their adultery and had carried her letter in her pocketbook for two days.

Wednesday, the jury heard Mrs. Savage's testimony about her confession to Indest, a former member of her husband's church who had become preacher at another Assembly of God church in the New Orleans area.

She said she spent about 3½ hours with Indest after he convinced her that talking might help get her out of a depression. At first, she said, she admitted that she had committed adultery with three men, but could not say who they were.

"He said, 'I'll put it to you this way. You have door number one, door number two, and door number three. ... I can tell you who's behind door number two and door number three.'

"I said, 'No way,' " Mrs. Savage recounted.

However, Indest told her correctly that the third man had been Paul Dunn, music minister at Gorman's First Assembly of God in New Orleans, and the second man was Gorman himself.

"I said, 'How in the world could you know?' Because I never breathed it to anyone,' " Mrs. Savage said. "He said he knew it in his spirit for a long time but could not say anything until I was ready."

Thousands of Easterners remain without electricity

BOSTON (AP) — Residents of the Northeast gradually made headway Wednesday against the damage and debris left by Hurricane Bob, but thousands still had no electrical power for a third day.

Utility companies received help from crews from other states and Canada, but frustration over power outages grew.

"If they've got all these crews, why is it taking so long? Help!" said Merhlee Raposa of Bristol, R.I. "Our food is already thawed out. We've put it in the motor home. We're throwing out the soup."

Heavy rain Tuesday and Wednesday, on top of Monday's hurricane, hampered cleanup and utility crews.

About 20,000 Rhode Island customers lost electricity again because of that heavy rain on weakened branches and because damaged transformers couldn't take the load of reconnected lines. At least 46,000 Rhode Islanders were without power Wednesday evening.

In addition, nearly 42,000 customers in Connecticut were still without power, along with 95,000 on New York's Long Island, 156,000 in Massachusetts, 22,500 in Maine, and almost 9,000 in New Hampshire.

The storm initially blacked out an estimated 2.1 million customers.

"There were thousands of trees that were down," said Murray Smith, chairman of the selectmen in the hard-hit Massachusetts shore community of Marshfield.

Along one 4-mile Marshfield street, there were more than 100 breaks in a single power line.

"People lose perspective in a situation like this," Smith said. "In today's society, many people lose their power for six hours and it's a big catastrophe."

The rain following Monday's storm held bad news for farmers, who already suffered heavy losses during the hurricane. In Maine, it's already the wettest month on record, with 14.54 inches at Portland.

"You work all season just to see everything go down in one night," said Jack Flaherty, who farms 85 acres at Scarborough, Maine. He estimated that half his crop was lost.

The hurricane blew through the Northeast with top wind speed of 115 mph and was responsible for at least 16 deaths from the Carolinas into Nova Scotia.

"The problem now is that we are getting torrential rain and a lot of storm damage that people didn't expect is now being revealed by this rain," said Dave Clark, who works at radio station WCOD in Hyannis. "It's leaking into our equipment and at the transmitter in Dennis about eight miles from here."

Pam Blemel, spokeswoman for the federal Small Business Administration's regional disaster office in Niagara, N.Y., said that agency had representatives throughout the area assessing the damage.

"Everybody's at a standstill waiting for the final information to come through," Blemel said. "The agency is working as if there will be a (presidential emergency) declaration so we will be available immediately."

Damage estimates were still sketchy, but Rhode Island Gov. Bruce Sundlun has asked President Bush to declare his state a disaster area, and other states were expected to follow suit.

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?
The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
