Becky Oekerman, Rusk Elementary School PTA president, is preparing for a fight to have television networks and affiliates reschedule daytime talk shows such as "Donahue" so unsupervised children home after school can't watch them.

PTA questions fitness of talk shows topics

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

After school at the Oekerman home, the television screen is filled with cartoons rather than chair-throwing Nazi skinheads or teen-aged lesbians and their mothers.

Becky Oekerman said her 8-year-old daughter and 5-year-old son aren't allowed to watch "Oprah Winfrey," "Donahue," "Sally Jessy Raphael" and other talk shows which sometimes fill the afternoon airwaves with controversial and risque subjects. Besides, she said, the children would rather watch "Duck Tales."

However, the temptation for an unsupervised child to view the programs has local and state Parent-Teacher Association representatives concerned.

Ms. Oekerman, Rusk Elementary School PTA president, said Tuesday that her school's chapter, as part of a statewide campaign, has started a push to warn parents about what their children could be watching. Rusk PTA members also plan to ask local television stations to reschedule the shows earlier in the day, she said.

"There are a lot of kids not being supervised on after-school television," Ms. Oekerman said. "If a warning comes on that children are not supposed to watch the show, what do you think that child is going to do?

"It's like a red flag saying that this is something that they should be watching."

A 1988 survey by Campfire Corp., a Midland youth agency, showed that 6,000 kindergarten through sixth-grade pupils in Midland and Odessa come home after school to empty houses.

Midland Independent School District first-through third-graders, sixth-graders and some kindergarteners arrive home in time to catch all or part of "Oprah Winfrey" on KOSA, Channel 7, and "Sally Jessy Raphael" on KTPX, Channel 9. All MISD elementary pupils get out of school by 4 p.m., in time to see "Donahue" on KMID, Channel 2. "Geraldo" airs on KMID at 9 a.m., when some kindergarteners are at home.

"I think they're potentially harmful to adults," Ms. Oekerman said of the shows. "It's giving kids things to think about that they don't need to be thinking about when they're 8, 9 or 10 years old."

Stricter laws, retiring older buses urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal safety officials are calling for tougher drunken driving laws and want the oldest one-fifth of the nation's school buses off the road, in response to the United States' worst alcohol-related highway accident.

The National Transportation Safety Board, ending its inquiry into the May 1988 head-on collision that killed 24 children and three adults aboard a Kentucky church bus, adopted a long list of recommendations for federal and state officials Tuesday.

Flames spread through the bus after it collided with a pickup truck that was going the wrong way on Interstate 71 near Carrollton, Ky. Authorities said the pickup driver had a blood alcohol content of .26 in tests 90 minutes after the accident, and a board investigator said Tuesday he likely was at .29 when the collision occurred, which is nearly three times the legal level of presumed intoxication.

All 27 deaths aboard the bus, which belonged to the First Assembly of God in Radcliff, were attributed to smoke inhalation, the board said. Forty people escaped, most with injuries. The bus was returning from an amusement park near Cincinnati.

The NTSB's acting chairman, James L. Kolstad, said the May 14 collision "may be one of the most influential highway accidents the board has ever heard."

The board said the accident clearly was caused by "the alcohol-impaired condition" of the pickup truck driver, Larry Mahoney, 35, of Worthville, Ky., who is free on $540,000 bail awaiting a November trial on 27 counts of murder.

But the board also said characteristics of the 11-year-old former school bus contributed to the accident's severity. The vehicle's unprotected fuel tank, flammable seat covers and a rear door partially obstructed by the last row of seats were all noted in the report which was adopted after a daylong session.

The Ford bus was assembled by Sheller-Globe Corp. of Toledo, Ohio. Last July, both Ford and Sheller-Globe reached out-of-court settlements for undisclosed amounts with families of nearly all the victims' families. Neither company admitted any liability.

Effort aimed at limiting oil damage

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Exxon's response to the nation's worst-ever oil spill was so late and inadequate that authorities are losing hope of cleaning up the mess and are concentrating on saving the fishing industry, the governor said today.

"Just about all we can do is to act in specific areas. For instance we're trying to save the hatchery areas," Gov. Steve Cowper said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Cowper and Mayor John Devens offered pessimistic assessments a day after fishermen wearing black armbands vented frustration with the efforts and President Bush dispatched high-ranking officials to determine whether the government should take over.

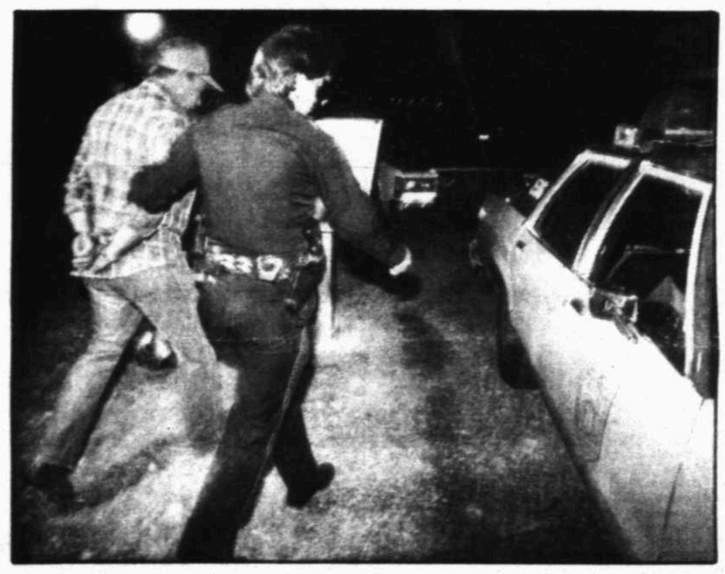

Bush said he has received conflicting reports about Exxon Shipping Co.'s response to the spill that occurred when the Exxon Valdez rammed a charted reef about 25 miles from Port Valdez. The tanker leaked 240,000 barrels of the 1.2 million on board.

Since the tanker ran aground Friday, the 10.1 million gallons of crude oil have moved more than 40 miles, contaminating some beaches and marine life in wildlife-rich Prince William Sound.

The San Diego Union, meanwhile, reported today that the Exxon Valdez, unlike many tankers, was built without a protective second hull.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Bill Reilly and Coast Guard Commandant Paul Yost viewed the spill site by helicopter Tuesday.

Two men arrested in Odessa in state child-support effort

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Jim Allen Cook could have seen the red flags years ago.

Instead, Cook, 39, a truck driver, found himself cuffed today at his Odessa apartment and headed for a city jail cell as part of an ongoing "get tough" policy on child support payments by the Texas Attorney General's office.

At 4:49 a.m., Odessa police began rounding up delinquent fathers, rousing Cook and another Ector County man from their beds for failure to make court-ordered payments.

Cook, who the attorney general's office said owed $16,748 in back payments to his ex-wife and two children, had been ordered to pay $350 a month.

"We're running three cases today," said Special Enforcement Officer Gary Richards.

"He (Cook) had his opportunities," said Richards. "This office is going to enforce child support. We're sending a message to those out there that if you don't pay, we'll be knocking at your door."

GOP caucus backs testing, accreditation changes

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House Republican Legislative Caucus today endorsed a package of education reforms aimed at giving more control to school districts, which would receive incentives for improved student performance.

Proposals endorsed by the caucus in its nine-point package include:

■ A more rigorous TEAMS test. Legislation endorsed by the caucus would expand the number of subjects tested, eliminate testing for first-graders and include "norm-referenced" testing to indicate a student's level of skills.

■ State funding for alternate textbook selections. Districts currently must themselves pay for textbooks not on the state's standard list. Rep. Bill Hammond, R-Dallas, called many of the books "boring" and cited them for failing to impart "our commonly held culture."

■ Performance-based accreditation. With the proposal, accreditation teams would visit districts that fail to meet certain criteria more often than those that perform well. The criteria has yet to be developed.

■ Financial incentives for school districts. The caucus supports financial rewards for districts that log large percentage increases in student academic performance.

■ Uniform enforcement of no-pass, no-play. While caucus members support the concept, they feel some districts are lowering their academic standards to allow students participation in extra-curricular activities such as football.

■ Revision of the state's mandatory September 1 school starting date. Legislation supported by the caucus would allow districts more flexibility in setting the date their students start class.

■ Expansion of alternative teacher certification procedures. Caucus members feel that alternative certification is not just for shortage situations. The procedures could bring more excellent teachers into school districts.

■ A "choice system" for parental selection of schools. Students would be able to attend any school in their home district as space allows under the proposal.

■ Vouchers for disadvanted students who want to attend private schools. The system would give the students the same advantages of wealthier students in choosing schools, caucus members say.

Book casting 'Reflections' on speaker

EDITOR'S NOTE: The House ethics committee expects to complete its investigation of Speaker Jim Wright in April. Following is one of a series of articles examining the specific allegations against Wright. This story focuses on the speaker's arrangements in the publication and sales of his 1984 book.

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — No charges aimed at beleaguered House Speaker Jim Wright have sparked more controversy than those involving the publication and sale of his book, "Reflections of a Public Man."

WRIGHT PROBE

Next month, the House ethics committee will determine whether Wright's unusually high royalties from the book sales were a subterfuge allowing him to circumvent the House ceiling on outside income and whether the arrangement also amounted to a scheme for converting campaign funds to his personal use.

The committee also will decide whether Wright's use of a staff aide to help edit the book violated a 1981 Supreme Court ruling that no member of Congress can use public funds to pay an employee for nonofficial work.

Formally known as the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, the ethics panel is expected to decide whether to exonerate Wright or recommend a reprimand, censure or his ouster.

Wright has repeatedly denied that he has violated any rules. The speaker has conceded, however, that the committee may fault his judgment in some matters.

Other issues being examined focus on Wright's lobbying activities on behalf of Texas gas and oil companies, pressure on thrift regulators to go easy on Texas savings and loan institutions and his financial links with a Fort Worth developer.

The ethics committee launched its probe last June after Common Cause, a public policy lobbying organization, and Georgia Republican Rep. Newt Gingrich filed complaints that Wright had violated several House rules.

Their complaints did not include Wright's assignment of use of staff aide Matthew Cossolotto to help prepare his "Reflections" book.

But after news stories surfaced on Cossolotto's work, the committee added it as a target of inquiry.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be fair tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 50 and winds will be out of the southwest at 5-10 mph.

Thursday will be sunny and warm with the high reaching into the middle 80s and winds out of the west at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 74 was 18 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 92 set for that date in 1963. The overnight low of 46 was 28 degrees warmer than the record low of 18 set for this date in 1944.

STATE

Flash flood watches remained in effect for East Texas this morning as rising waters were forcing evacuations and stranding motorists.

A strong upper level low moving through Central Texas this morning produced strong thunderstorms and heavy rains across north Central and East Texas.

Almost 13 inches of rain fell in the Tyler/Longview area. Strong thunderstorms in the Waco area produced wind gusts to 72 mph. Flooding of small creeks and streams in Nacogdoches County prompted the evacuation of residents in the flood areas.

Rains were still falling in east and northeast Texas this morning with some thunderstorms remaining in the area. Also, thunderstorms continued to plague parts of Central Texas near Abilene and Eastland.

Cloudy skies covered most of North Texas and the southeast while clear to partly cloudy skies were common over the south and west.

Winds were variable around the state with speeds in the 10 to 15 mph.

Temperatures were mostly mild with 50s over most of the state. Some 60s remained in the eastern third of the state while in the mountains of the west, 30s and 40s were reported. Extremes at 4 a.m. ranged from 35 degrees at Marfa to 66 degrees at Houston.

BUSES

The board recommended that states set a date for phase-out of buses not meeting 1977 federal standards. If adopted nationwide, the rule would affect 77,000 school buses, about 22 percent of those now in use. It would also affect thousands of former school buses used by church groups and other organizations.

The 1977 standards required strengthened fuel systems, stronger seats, toughened roof and body joints and more accessible exits.

The five-member board also asked states to toughen their drunken-driving laws to allow police to revoke drivers' licenses, to prohibit plea-bargaining in drunken-driving cases and to end the practice of giving convicted drunken drivers reduced licensing penalties if they enroll in treatment programs.

Among safety improvements suggested by the NTSB, which has no enforcement powers and can only recommend actions to other federal agencies and the states, were making seatcovers out of fire retardant material, putting more exits on school buses and making their fuel tanks more resistant to puncture in severe accidents.

The board noted that a three-inch tear in the fuel tank on the Kentucky bus led to the fire that engulfed the vehicle.

But the board said it was unclear whether such strengthening measures would have prevented the fuel tank rupture, which it said was probably caused by a spring broken loose in the collision. It also noted that flame-retardant requirements did not change under the 1977 rules.

The bus involved in the crash was built two weeks before the stiffened federal school bus safety requirements took effect April 1, 1977.

Among specific board recommendations were:

—That the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration require more fire-retardant material in bus seatcovers.

—That school buses be made to meet the same standards for exit doors imposed on public transit buses, including the installation of either more exits or pop-out windows.

—That the safety administration evaluate and revise, if necessary, its standards on the placement of school bus fuel tanks, plus adding various protective structures around the tanks, in addition to cages required under the 1977 law.

—That the Federal Highway Administration conduct a test of increasing the number of "wrong way" signs on divided highways to determine the signs' effectiveness in reducing wrong-way accidents, which the board said kill an average of more than 270 people a year.

—That church groups and other private organizations purchase only buses that meet the post-1977 standards.

Micky Sadoff, president of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, praised the recommendations but said she was saddened that the board focused more on bus safety than drunken driving.

"We wouldn't want to put down bus safety in any way," she said, but added, "The equivalent of a fully loaded 747 crashing every week for a year equals the number of fatalities on our roads due to drunk driving."

The board said 51 percent of the 46,000 annual fatalities are attributable to alcohol use.

SPILL

After the tour, Skinner said it would be inappropriate to make any judgments until they talked to those involved in the cleanup. They planned to meet with Exxon representatives and state and federal agencies.

Exxon Shipping Co. President Frank Iarossi conceded earlier this week that the cleanup "is not proceeding well — believe me, that is an understatement. We've got a mess on our hands."

Cowper, a Democrat, said it was the oil company's legal duty to respond first to the spill, "and they didn't do a good job, to put it charitably."

"I think clearly in the beginning the response was very poor," he said. "Then the weather got bad for a day or so. I think now the effort's being coordinated farily well, but it's pretty late."

Devens said, "I think the hatcheries are saveable. I think that's where the effort has to be placed now. ... The thing that we're concerned about right now is whether or not the fish stocks are going to be affected. We think we've probably lost our herring season. We're likely to lose a good bit of our salmon season. ... The value, just the fishing season is going to be in excess of $150 million."

The San Diego Union reported that the Exxon Valdez was built at a San Diego shipyard without a protective second hull. Fourteen tankers built at National Steel and Shipbuilding Co. between 1976 and the 1986 launch of the Exxon Valdez included dual bottoms, or second skins, to lessen the risk of leaks caused by punctures.

"It's a question of economics. It's much cheaper to build a single-skin ship," said Lt. Cmdr. Woody Loveland, who was the Coast Guard's chief marine safety officer in San Diego when the Valdez was built.

Many tankers were constructed with protective hulls in anticipation of regulations requiring them, Loveland said, but the design feature was dropped for some ships when it became evident such a requirement would not be enacted.

Though industry sources agree that double bottoms prevent spills under certain circumstances, their effectiveness remains open to debate when ships run hard into rocks or other obstructions as the Valdez apparently did, the newspaper said.

In the fishing village of Cordova, 50 miles to the southeast, angry residents packed a high school gymnasium Tuesday night for a meeting with state and Exxon officials. Many of the town's 2,500 residents had opposed using Valdez as the southern terminus for the Alaskan pipeline.

Resident Marla Adkins said the oil industry had promised to have adequate equipment on hand to handle any spills.

"What happened here is not what we were told would happen 10 years ago," she said.

Fisherman John Booren said he feared publicity about the spill would destroy the market for the area's fish, even if the damage were contained.

TV

The campaign began after a Dallas-Fort Worth area parent, Lynda Beams, sent petitions to schools, PTA presidents and churches in the Metroplex to request scheduling changes for the talk shows.

Using PTA as a catalyst to spread the campaign around the state, Ms. Beams is suggesting that stations move the shows into the evening, when parents are home. Ms. Beams could not be reached for comment this morning.

Alma Thompson, Midland City Council PTA president, said she hopes the campaign quickly spreads from Rusk to other MISD elementary schools.

"I think it's excellent," Ms. Thompson said of the Rusk effort. "There are a lot of things on TV that children shouldn't be seeing."

Ms. Thompson, though, said she has no plans yet to start a campaign at the city level.

Ms. Oekerman said her school PTA has only just begun, starting with a March 13 announcement about the campaign in the Rusk newsletter. PTA members also plan to suggest to other parents that they talk to their children about the shows and monitor the programs they watch.

They then intend to take their case to local television stations to see if schedule changes are possible.

John Foster, KMID general manager, said this morning he would be responsive to any public concerns over his 4 p.m. "Donahue," which can be shown at any time during the day because it, like other talk shows, is syndicated.

Foster said his station has considered the issue of shows that are inappropriate for children.

"I think there is a definite concern that we have as a station," Foster said. "The material on all these talk shows in some cases has gone a little too far.

"I'm very concerned where talk shows are going to go over the next three or four years."

Foster said he is disappointed with the ratings "Donahue" has received in recent rating periods. He said, however, that he is certain some children watch the show.

Representatives from KOSA and KTPX did not return repeated phone calls from the Reporter-Telegram.

GOP

■ Surveying the plan, caucus chairman Tom Craddick, R-Midland, said, "Our Texas education system must encourage excellence rather than merely encouraging conformity."

The reforms "recognize that local districts and parents often know what works best for their students," he said.

Hammond, who drew up many of the caucus' proposals, said the plan "emphasizes the ways and means of improving academic performance without additional cost."

For example, he noted that the statewide average expenditure per child is $3,600, while a voucher level set at $2,500 would result in a "net savings to the taxpayer."

The voucher system also would promote "greater parental involvment than ever before," he said.

Even while citing the cost savings, Hammond said the program does not address the issue of public school finance reform, which the caucus will detail further — possibly next week — in budget proposals.

The Dallas Republican said financial incentives probably would benefit poorer performing districts more than those whose performances already are up to par.

The poor performers have more room to improve on a percentage basis, he explained.

Hammond also said that the proposals that allow parental choice in their children's schools may not be applicable to districts that are under court to integrate.

"By an act of the Legislature, you cannot override a court order," he said.

Aspects of the plan, including those that call for financial incentives, already were contained in Gov. Bill Clements' education plan presented at the start of the session. Other plan aspects also have the governor's approval, Hammond said.

BOOK

Cossolotto, who worked for Wright from 1983 until 1987, earned a $27,000 congressional salary a year.

Cossolotto spent two months working on the book, including a three week stint in Fort Worth, Wright's home town. The staffer went there, he said, to help the publisher, Carlos Moore, edit the book. Cossolotto received $2,100 in official funds to cover his Fort Worth expenses.

Defending the assignment, Wright noted that it is "common practice" for members to ask staff to help write speeches or books, for which they are paid from public funds. Wright added that as long as "a person on the public payroll gives ample time to public duties, it's not improper to give incidental time and effort to collateral matters."

The book was published in 1984 by Moore, a former Wright aide. Moore's Fort Worth printing firm, Madison Publishing Co., and five other companies he owns received $651,000 between 1976 and 1988 from the speaker's campaign committees for a variety of services, including printing, polling, and public relations.

Under a royalty arrangement with Moore, Wright received $54,642 in 1985 and 1986 in royalties, or $3.25 of the $5.95 that each of 16,812 copies sold for. The book was unavailable in most bookstores. Most of the books were sold in bulk to lobbyists or at political events.

New England Life Insurance Co., for example, bought $2,000 worth of Wright's book rather than pay the speaker an honorarium. John C. White, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, bought 1,000 books for members of the Texas Legislature and friends. Coronado Transmission Co., a Texas gas pipeline, also bought 1,000 books, as did the Teamsters Union political action committee.

Gingrich argued that the 55 percent royalty is far higher than the standard 10 percent to 20 percent fee authors normally receive. The Georgian, who is now GOP whip, or assistant leader, charged that the arrangement, in effect, channeled campaign funds through Moore's companies into Wright's pocket, circumventing limits on outside income.

Wright has denied the allegation.

Gingrich himself came under fire earlier this month for a bizarre book deal in which he and his wife got tax breaks when the venture lost money.

Members of Congress can earn no more than 30 percent of their salary in outside income. Wright, as speaker, now makes $115,000 and his outside income is limited to $34,500. In 1985 and 1986, he was making $85,000 and the cap on his outside income was $25,500.

Wright's 117-page book features selections from the speaker's poems, homilies, speeches and observations on politics, history and religion, as well as a short philosophical essay on "Political Integrity."

In the essay, the speaker observes: "Politics is as necessary to the functioning of our society as water is to the flow of the river. It doesn't have to be filthy or corrupted."

Questioned clauses from conduct code outlined

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Below are the clauses in House rule 43, called the Code of Official Conduct, that Speaker Jim Wright is accused of violating:

CLAUSE 3

A member, officer or employee of the House of Representatives shall receive no compensation, nor shall he permit any compensation to accrue to his beneficial interest from any source, the receipt of which would occur by virtue of influence improperly exerted from his position in the Congress.

CLAUSE 4

A member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives shall not accept gifts (other than personal hospitality of an individual or with a fair market value of $50 or less) in any calendar year aggregating $100 or more in value, directly or indirectly, from any person (other than from a relative of his) having a direct interest in legislation before the Congress or who is a foreign national (or agent of a foreign national).

(The clause defines registered lobbyists and their employees as those having a direct interest in legislation.)

CLAUSE 5

A member, officer or employee of the House of Representatives shall accept no honorarium for a speech, writing for publication or other similar activity, from any person, organization or corporation in excess of the usual and customary value for such services.

CLAUSE 6

A member, officer or employee of the House of Representatives shall keep his campaign funds separate from his personal funds. He shall convert no campaign funds to personal use in excess of reimbursement for legitimate and verifiable prior campaign expenditures, and he shall expend no funds from his campaign account not attributable to bona fide campaign purposes.

SUPPORT

According to Attorney General Jim Mattox, a 5 percent increase in voluntary compliance around the state would generate more than $1.1 million a month in child support payments.

Mattox said his department now faces more than 360,000 such cases around the state. Today's effort, which Richards said is part of an ongoing regional program in West Texas, began in February 1988 when Mattox's office first formed the special operations division.

But Cook was not alone. About 15 minutes after his arrest, police and Ector County Sheriff's Department officers converged on a West Odessa duplex occupied by Jerry Lee Fox.

Fox, 42, an oilfield worker, owed his Big Spring ex-wife and her two children some $7,925 in back child support.

Divorced in 1976, Fox had been ordered by the courts to pay his wife a mandatory $200 a month.

"He paid something in March, but he hasn't been paying what the court ordered," said Richards as Fox was led away in cuffs as a pleading daughter looked on.

Contacted today, Ms. Triggs, ex-wife of Fox, said she thought the attorney general was doing the right thing.

"It's real hard when a father doesn't pay child support. I'm sorry my ex was arrested ... it's a sad thing, but I'm not working and his children need this money," she said.

In Texas, child support collections hit a record $97.9 million in fiscal 1988 — up 450 percent since 1983, according to Mattox's own office. During the past fiscal year, officials say about $3.25 was collected for every dollar spent on child support cases.

Richards said the Cook and Fox arrests never would have reached law enforcement levels had the men complied with the courts and child support investigators.

"But when they can't get anywhere, they come to us. We're telling them (delinquent fathers) now that we'll seize their bank accounts, their property and even extradite from another state," he said.

Richards said he was pleased with the cooperation he received from city and county officials, but added, it was only the beginning. "The point we're trying to make is it's time to start complying."

AG officials on the scene said delinquent fathers living in Midland, Odessa and other West Texas communities can be certain that today's raids were just the first of many to come. "These cases we worked today took us three weeks to get together," he said.

Richards said other measures now being taken by the AG's office will include interception of Internal Revenue Service income tax refund checks. "That's just one more technique we're using."

West German border police mount a gangway to inspect the cockpit of the Hungary's Malev air lines Tupolev 154 passenger plane today in Frankfurt. The plane, hijacked by two armed teenagers in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Wednesday, was diverted to the Frankfurt airport.

Hostages freed after Czechs fly to Frankfurt

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Two armed Czechoslovak teenagers hijacked a jet in Prague today and reportedly demanded it fly to the United States. They surrendered and freed their hostages — including a Hungarian diplomat — after the plane landed in Frankfurt.

No injuries were reported among the 10 passengers and at least four crew members aboard the hijacked Hungarian plane when it reached Frankfurt, officials said.

The hijackers released 82 passengers at Prague airport after speaking with Lajos Taba, the Hungarian consul-general, the Hungarian news agency MTI said. It said Taba traded himself for the passengers and was among those freed in Frankfurt.

The gunmen surrendered less than three hours after seizing the Soviet-made Tupolev-154 owned by Hungary's Malev Airlines.

MTI said the hijackers demanded to be taken to the United States, but West German officials said the gunmen's motives were not known.

The hijackers, who were armed with guns and carried a fake hand grenade, gave up at Frankfurt Airport when U.S. officials prevented the plane from taxiing onto adjoining U.S. military base.

A witness said a policeman collapsed during a shootout at Prague airport when the hijackers took a hostage and forced their way onto the aircraft.

Hans Neitze, chief spokesman for Frankfurt police, said: "We found the emptied casing of a bullet, and we assume that there was at least one shot fired on the aircraft." He offered no further details.

Criminal investigator Roland Desch said the hijackers initially demanded to be flown "overseas" but were convinced by the airliner's crew that the plane could not fly that far. The plane then went to Frankfurt.

"As far as I know, all passengers are safe. It ended without bloodshed," airport spokesman Hans Rainer Otto said. Frankfurt police spokesman Karl-Heinz Wagner also said there were no injuries among those aboard the plane.

Wagner said the youths were Czechoslovak citizens aged 15 and 16.

"We still don't know what their motive was," Wagner said, adding the two youths were being questioned by police. He said the hijackers were armed with a sawed-off shotgun and a rifle and carried a fake grenade.

Wolfgang Schwalm, a spokesman at Frankfurt airport, said the hijackers gave up after officials refused to accept them at the U.S. Air Force's Rhein-Main Base, which is located at the airport. U.S. officials confirmed that.

"The pair wanted to go to the American side of the airport," he told reporters. "The Americans declined accepting them, and at that point the hijackers gave up." Desch said a military truck was driven onto the Tarmac to prevent the jet from reaching the U.S. base.

A U.S. Air Force spokesman, Eberhard Bock, said the jet was halted on the taxiway.

"Two men got off the plane and they were held by U.S. military security police until the German police arrived and took over," Bock said.

The jet had been en route to Amsterdam, said Hungarian radio, which was monitored in Budapest. It did not say where the flight originated.

Witnesses at Prague's airport said two hijackers forced their way into the VIP lounge and took a female airport employee hostage.

They then broke the glass wall of the airport building to get onto the Tarmac where they aimed their guns at a policeman, said the witnesses.

Czechoslovakia still silencing critics

By ALISON SMALE

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Ignoring a new moderation in neighboring Poland and Hungary, this country's Communist government has silenced or muted voices critical of its rule.

To a flurry of publicity in the West and protest even from the East bloc, playwright Vaclav Havel was arrested Jan. 16 and subsequently sentenced to eight months in jail.

At least seven leading activists who are less known abroad but important in the emerging, younger dissident groups at home have also been jailed.

Dozens of other critical voices have been muted by what dissidents term not only the most sweeping crackdown in a decade but a skillful, carefully targeted repression.

Last year, it appeared to other activists that the authorities had at last loosened up on Charter 77, Eastern Europe's oldest human rights movement, and were prepared to tolerate a measure of more active dissent.

Leading activists such as Havel and fellow Chartist Jiri Dienstbier and Jiri Ruml began publishing Lidove Noviny (People's News), an underground monthly they estimated quickly gained a readership of 4,000 and even seemed a candidate for legal registration.

A year later, those hopes are dashed.

Underground journals, starved of equipment and money, cannot reach more than a few thousand readers, making activists dependent on foreign radio stations — widely listened to in Czechoslovakia — to spread their news.

Prague, a charming city of winding alleys, towers and steeples, is the only capital in Europe where riot police appeared on the streets six times in five months, using tear gas, batons, dogs, water cannon and even armored personnel carriers to disperse peaceful crowds.

"Our great problem is the problem of information," said Charter 77 signatory Ladislav Lis. The situation has worsened, he noted, with the passage of new laws this month imposing stiff fines or jail terms on anyone circulating any documents deemed anti-Communist.

Dissidents see various factors behind the change of tactics by the authorities.

One is that the Vienna conference reviewing implementation of the 1975 Helsinki Final Act has ended. At that forum, Czechoslovakia found itself under fire for repression of known dissidents.

Now, the authorities assure Western diplomats they will implement the Vienna accords — they appear willing, for instance, to make it easier for millions of citizens to travel to the West — but are not giving rein to groups they view as anti-Communist enemies.

Probably the biggest factor in the changed tactics is the response to mass anti-government protests that occurred in August, October and January.

Prague, a charming city of winding alleys, towers and steeples, is the only capital in Europe where riot police appeared on the streets six times in five months, using tear gas, batons, dogs, water cannon and even armored personnel carriers to disperse peaceful crowds.

Thousands of intellectuals signed at least three different petitions to the government protesting the police actions and the detention of Havel and other dissidents.

The crackdown on known dissenters since has signaled the authorities' determination not to allow Charter 77 a voice in politics.

Instead, an official committee was created in December to monitor human rights. Two officials, Vladimir Fiegel and Zbynek Vokrouhlicky, said in an interview they have already solved 65 cases where citizens previously were refused permission to travel abroad.

But the committee has not spoken out against the police brutality in January and against toughened penalties on violating public order.

Yet change could be in the offing.

There have been few if any reprisals against the intellectuals who signed the petitions, an indication that at least some of the country's Communist leaders realize they cannot isolate the brains they need to revitalize an increasingly stagnant economy.

A well-informed source who asked not to be identified reported that at a meeting in mid-March, senior party leaders and economists discussed a plan to open the economy and allow some political liberalization.

The plan — the work of economist Valtr Komarek, who drew attention late last year with highly critical analyses of the Czechoslovak economy — was rejected when first put to party leaders last December.

Peace activists try to block U.S. tanks' movement

BREMEN, West Germany (AP) — Peace activists hauled trees onto a new rail spur used to transport U.S. Army tanks, officials said, and police reportedly used truncheons to disperse protesters who had blocked a nearby road.

A U.S. official said Tuesday's protests did not disrupt the transport of tanks along the rail spur near Bremen en route to maneuvers.

"It's been pretty much business as usual here," said Capt. Keith F. Jordan, spokesman for the Army's 2nd Armored Division Forward unit in nearby Garlstedt.

But activists, who asked not to be identified, said that at one point West German police used truncheons to break up a group of demonstrators blocking a road near the rail spur and that one protester was slightly injured.

A police official, who also asked not to be identified, said late Tuesday that he had no information about the reported incident.

Jordan said protesters placed small trees on the 5.2 mile rail link during the night but the debris was easily removed.

Paramilitary police check the identity papers of a group of youngsters in Pristina, Yugoslavia, Tuesday morning. After six days of ethnic Albanian unrest, authorities declared a curfew from 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. throughout the entire province of Kosovo. The photo was taken before a ban on photography went into effect.

Yugoslavia's ethnic riots claim at least 21 victims

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Authorities proclaimed a day of mourning today for two police officers killed in bloody clashes in Kosovo province that left at least 21 people dead and 74 injured.

A spokeswoman for Kosovo's information office, Marija Gasi, told The Associated Press, "Today the situation in Kosovo is normal. There has been no single extraordinary event."

However, Radmilo Bogdanovic, interior minister of the republic of Serbia, described the situation as "dramatic and changing from hour to hour."

"The security forces are making great efforts to restore peace and order," Bogdanovic told Serbia's Parliament.

The protests in Kosovo, which is part of the republic of Serbia, began last week after Kosovo's Parliament approved constitutional changes giving Serbia control of the provincial police, courts and civil defense. Serbia's Parliament approved the changes Tuesday.

Ethnic Albanians, who make up 85 percent of Kosovo's 1.9 million citizens, say the changes threaten autonomy they won under the 1974 constitution.

Protesters hurled stones at riot police, who responded with tear gas. Two policemen, one an ethnic Albanian and one a Serb, were shot and killed Monday. Officials said 19 protesters died Monday and Tuesday.

Sources in Pristina, the capital of Kosovo, said there were unconfirmed reports two more demonstrators died during the night following clashes in the village of Zur, near the border of Albania.

Police in Zur shot to death an 18-year-old Tuesday, and the state-run Tanjug news agency reported 14 people injured in the village, which was sealed off by police.

The entire province was placed under an 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew Tuesday.

Bogdanovic estimated that on Monday, the worst day of bloodshed and rioting, there were 14,000 mainly young ethnic Albanians on the streets of Kosovo, battling 2,400 police.

The Interior Ministry said 146 demonstrators were detained Monday and Tuesday.

There were rumors that several prominent ethnic Albanians, including businessmen, government officials and university professors, were questioned by police in connection with the violence. They could not be confirmed.

The deputy head of Pristina's university, Muhamed Bicaj, said he heard of one philosophy professor being questioned by police Tuesday night. The man was allowed to go home afterward, Bicaj said.

Serbia says the constitutional changes are needed to protect the province's Slav minority, which alleges harassment by ethnic Albanians. At least 30,000 Slavs are estimated to have left Kosovo since the last ethnic riots erupted there in 1981. At least nine people died in the protests.

The anniversary of those riots is Saturday. Officials hoped a heavy police presence in Kosovo, in addition to tanks and other military vehicles, would prevent new protests.

Tanjug said 76 people were injured in the latest unrest, two more than the figure released by the Interior Ministry.

According to the ministry, 25 policemen were injured — five seriously — and 49 demonstrators were hurt.

Collector takes major risks with Central American art

By DAVID BARRY
Hearst News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Collecting primitive art in the hills of El Salvador and Guatemala can be a lonely, dangerous business.

Yet those remote, mountainous border regions are home to the painting that Richard Flamer has made his specialty.

Flamer, a native of Long Beach, Calif., buys paintings from rural artists, which he sells and exhibits in Manhattan and other U.S. cities.

"Central America is a terrific place for art," says Flamer, 41. "But very few people experienced in art dealing want to come down here."

Civil war that has raged for nine years in El Salvador poses obvious dangers for travelers. A particular hazard for Flamer, or any foreigner in the Salvadoran or Guatemalan hills, is that government soldiers deployed in guerrilla territory view outsiders with suspicion. In both countries, thousands of persons have "disappeared" after being picked up by government troops.

"I've been detained and searched by the army three times in Guatemala," says Flamer, a self-taught expert on Central American folk art.

In El Salvador, he was first apprehended at the border village of La Palma.

"I was visiting local painters for three days before the army picked me up," says Flamer, a former U.S. Army intelligence officer in the Vietnam war.

Heavily armed officers took him to a regional commander, "who wanted to know what a stranger was doing there," says Flamer. "He wouldn't believe I was only there for art."

Flamer was detained eight hours in La Palma, then escorted to San Salvador and detained another 24 hours. He did not know when, or if, he would be released. Now he is in the capital and hopes the artists he had been visiting in La Palma will find him in the city.

"There are at least 22 talented artists in La Palma," says Flamer. He believes their folk art more accurately represents the Central American people than the more sophisticated, European-influenced works featured in mainstream galleries and museum collections.

"The painters in La Palma, in Quiche, Guatemala, and in Solentiname, Nicaragua, portray everyday life," says Flamer.

"Their work is an expression of liberation theology arts and crafts movements that have been organized by priests in different areas."

Though the techniques and styles of the paintings are distinct, Flamer sees a similarity of spirit, sincerity and vitality which makes the work exciting — and worth hazardous encounters in military danger zones.

"The ironic thing is," he says, "that I heard heavier fighting this week on the outskirts of San Salvador than I did in the hills near La Palma."

Flamer, a bachelor, keeps apartments in Omaha, Neb., and Antigua, Guatemala. He spends much of his time on rutted, dusty roads in a Ford F-100 pickup truck with Nebraska plates.

"My goal is to put on a full-scale exhibit of these paintings that would bring the artists some recognition," says Flamer.

"In a time of so much conflict," he says, "I think art, especially these so-called 'popular' paintings, is a way of sharing something between people of these countries and the U.S."

"I've gotten cynical about politics," Flamer says, "revolutionary or otherwise.

"But I think promoting local art is a way of advancing civilization in Central America, as opposed to increased militarization."

South African black detainee takes refuge in U.S. Consulate

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A black detainee escaped today and took refuge in the U.S. Consulate, officials said. Six other former detainees sought refuge in the British Embassy and demanded an end to restrictions on their activities.

Police said Simon Ntombela, a teacher and anti-apartheid organizer who has been on a hunger strike, eluded six guards and escaped at daybreak from Shifa Hospital in the port city of Durban.

Gene Friedman, a U.S. Embassy spokesman, said late this afternoon that Ntombela had reached Johannesburg, 360 miles away, and was at the U.S. Consulate.

"We have been in touch with the South African government with a view toward resolving this case as expeditiously as possible," said Friedman. He did not say how Ntombela reached the consulate.

Ntombela, 27, was the eighth detainee to escape from a hospital since September. He fled as the government announced new steps to prevent such breakouts.

Seven other detainees who escaped from hospitals since September quickly sought safety in foreign diplomatic missions. The government allowed all seven to remain free.

Shortly before midday today, six black activists entered the British Embassy in Pretoria and said they would stay until the government lifted restrictions imposed on them following their release.

The embassy issued a statement saying the six "cannot stay indefinitely on British government premises and should leave."

"We are nevertheless prepared to draw to the attention of the South African government once again to the issue of restrictions."

WORLD IN BRIEF

49 top Korean generals transferred or retired

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Roh Tae-woo ordered 49 top generals transferred or retired after army hardliners criticized him for seeking ties with communist nations and not suppressing dissidents, officials said today.

Roh, a former general who played a key role in the military's seizure of power in 1980, replaced several hardliners in key security posts with generals loyal to him, according to Korean press reports.

Many of the generals being replaced were allies of former authoritarian President Chun Doo-hwan.

Defense Ministry officials said a major shuffle had been ordered in the army's high command but would not elaborate, declining to say how many of the 49 generals would be retired or moved to other posts.

Details of the shakeup appeared today in all Seoul newspapers, which also said a further shakeup of the army's divisional commanders was expected to be announced in coming weeks. Dong-a Ilbo, a leading national newspaper, said a Cabinet shuffle was also expected.

Talks stalled at prison

SANTA CATARINA PINULA, Guatemala (AP) — Negotiations were at a standstill and food and water reported running out today inside a prison farm where heavily armed inmates were holed up with relatives who were visiting when the prisoners revolted.

The government threatened to cut off supplies to the estimated 2,000 inmates and family members, who have been inside Pavon prison since Easter Sunday, if no accord is reached today.

"We're at an impasse," the Rev. Antonio Lopez Martin, chaplain of Guatemalan prisons said late Tuesday. Lopez is part of the delegation negotiating with the rebellious inmates at the facility outside Guatemala City.

The bodies of four guards and three inmates who were killed in Sunday's takeover have been recovered, authorities said. Five others are believed dead, said prison spokesman Conrado Monroy, but their bodies have not been found on the grounds of the 2½-square-mile prison, Guatemala's largest.

Legislator kills another

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — An opposition True Path Party deputy was shot and killed today by another legislator inside the Parliament building, Parliament officials said.

There was confusion over who shot Abdurrezzak Ceylan. The 37-year-old deputy died while undergoing emergency surgery for a chest wound.

"The prosecutor's office is investigating the shooting between two members of Parliament," Hilmi Aras, deputy speaker of Parliament, told reporters.

He said the shooting apparently resulted from a personal conflict between two deputies, but he did not identify them. There was speculation the dispute was related to Sunday's elections.

Baker sees hostile relations until Cuba ends repression

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker rejects speculation that U.S.-Cuban relations are about to improve, saying American policy will not change until Cuba ends repression at home and "unacceptable behavior" abroad.

Baker's views are outlined in a confidential memo drawn up to counter suggestions that Cuba's pledge in December to withdraw its troops from Angola will improve the climate between Havana and Washington.

"U.S. policy has not changed in the wake of the southern Africa accords," Baker said in the memo.

The memo has been distributed to diplomatic posts abroad and to selected government agencies. The document is dated March 1989 and is stamped "confidential." A copy was made available to The Associated Press on Tuesday.

The memo indicates that no changes are planned from the hardline Cuba policy of the Reagan administration. Under President Reagan, the United States tightened the U.S. trade embargo against the island and waged an international campaign against alleged human rights abuses by the regime of Fidel Castro.

"No modification of U.S. policy is contemplated in the absence of significant changes in Cuban repression at home and unacceptable behavior abroad inimical to U.S. interests," Baker said.

Baker rejected the arguments of some, including Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., that U.S. policy toward Cuba over three decades has failed and should be changed.

"Cuba provides the U.S.S.R. major political, strategic and intelligence benefits that it otherwise would not have," Baker said.

"Cuba continues to engage in military adventurism abroad and to support subversive movements in the Western Hemisphere to the detriment of peace, stability and democratic processes.

"Further, the Cuban government persists in its internal repression and violation of the basic human rights of its citizens. Cuba has not changed its basic policies."

Baker said Cuba is involved in a public diplomatic effort to reinforce the impression that there will be an improvement in relations with the United States. He said an end to the trade embargo, imposed by the United States in 1960, "would benefit greatly the failed Cuban economy and enhance Cuba's image and prestige."

It also would undercut U.S. efforts to encourage other countries to maintain economic and political distance from Cuba, he said.

Baker said Cuba "has steadfastly failed to offer any concrete proposals of its own to satisfy longstanding and well-known U.S. concerns."

As described by U.S. officials, Cuba has demonstrated a more accommodating attitude toward the United States over the last 18 months, and there has been an improvement in the ability of the two countries to work out differences on non-strategic issues, such as immigration.

Cuban officials have disclosed that the head of the Cuban Interests Section in Washington, Ramon Sanchez Parodi, will be replaced shortly by Jose Antonio Arbesu, a vice chief of Cuba's America Department, a party organism that oversees Cuba's relations with other Western nations.

Four Tower aides remain on payroll

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Four top aides to John Tower during his unsuccessful bid to become defense secretary remain on the Pentagon payroll as transition staffers almost three weeks after the Senate rejected Tower's nomination, according to government records.

A fifth aide, David S. Addington, has shifted from Tower's transition team to the staff of Defense Secretary Dick Cheney as a senior special assistant, officials said. Addington, a former congressional aide, worked with Cheney on the House Intelligence Committee.

"Five aides were put on Department of Defense rolls as DOD employees to assist Sen. Tower (in preparing) for Senate hearings and the transition," a Pentagon spokesman said Tuesday. "Four remain, working on a study of defense management."

A report on defense management is due in early May — part of a comprehensive review of Pentagon decision making and efficiency ordered by the White House in the wake of a scandal in the $150 billion-a-year defense procurement system.

Tower aides serving as "special assistants" or "executive assistants" to the secretary of defense include: Rhett Dawson, Michele G. Markoff, Richard D. Billmire and Paul S. Stevens. Their annual salaries range from $78,600 and $80,700, according to Pentagon records.

The former Tower aides are among dozens of mid-level personnel waiting to find out whether they will be kept on by Cheney. The former Wyoming congressman, who took over at the Pentagon on March 17, has selected only a few of the 44 senior policy making positions that face Senate action.

"There are still a lot of slots to fill over here and they're really just starting to roll," said one Pentagon official who hopes to stay on. "A lot of people (are waiting), not just people who were on the transition staff, but people throughout the building."

Defense Department spokesman Dan Howard said Tuesday that Cheney has not yet made final decisions. "That package (of nominations) is still being worked," Howard told a Pentagon news briefing.

While Tower's transition staff continues to be paid, Tower did not receive any salary payment or expenses from the federal government during the 12 weeks between his nomination on Dec. 16 and the rejection of his nomination by the Senate on March 10, according to Pentagon officials.

Soviet asylums still issue abuse

Last year, Soviet officials announced with much fanfare a state decree making it a crime to hospitalize a sane person involuntarily. In so doing, the U.S.S.R. hoped to improve its brutish image and thus pave the way for readmittance to the World Psychiatric Association (WPA). But an American team, including 14 American psychiatrists, a psychologist, and two lawyers specializing in mental-health issues who just returned not long ago from a two-week tour of several Soviet mental asylums report a different story.

Although numerous political prisoners have been freed from psychiatric wards, countless others remain in the not-so-tender care of state doctors. Moreover, Soviet dissidents who dare speak out against the government live in constant fear of being judged insane and slapped into an asylum.

This has been confirmed by Alexander Podrabinek, an underground newspaper editor once jailed for publicly complaining about psychiatric abuses. "Political prisoners," he said,"remain in psychiatric hospitals to this day. New ones are being added to their number. We know of several cases in the last few months."

It will be sometime before the U.S. psychiatric delegation issues its final report. But Ellen Mercer, director of international affairs for the American Psychiatric Association, said she will recommend that the Soviet Union be barred from the WPA until further reforms are enacted and Moscow acknowledges past abuses.

The world organization would do well to heed that recommendation. Six years ago, it was about to expel the U.S.S.R. because Soviet doctors routinely diagnosed as schizophrenic those who protested against the state. The American delegation found that dissidents are no less vulnerable now to being locked up and treated with massive doses of psychotropic drugs that are generally considered to have no medical value. These findings are given additional weight by a group of 18 Soviet mental-health specialists who agreed earlier to defend patients who have been wrongly confined.

The Soviet Union should be regarded as a pariah in the world psychiatric community until there is international verification that Soviet dissidents are not being victimized in state mental asylums.

Accountability is key

With 10 million gallons of crude oil threatening wildlife and fouling the pristine beauty of Alaska's Prince William Sound, the oil industry's repeated assurances that it can protect the environment assume a particularly hollow ring.

The chairman of the Senate environmental protection subcommittee, Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., correctly notes that the spill — the largest ever experienced in North America — is the most tragic evidence yet of the gap that exists between the oil industry's past assurances and its actual performance.

That Exxon's 987-foot tanker was illegally under the command of a junior officer when she rammed two reefs 25 miles south of Valdez hardly lends credence to the industry's assertions. According to reliable reports, the only person aboard the tanker qualified to pilot the ship through the environmentally sensitive sound was the captain. But he was asleep in his cabin when the ship strayed off course with the Third Mate in charge of the watch.

In calm-weather conditions she struck a well-charted reef outside the shipping lane. Despite the shuddering impact, which seriously damaged the ship's hull and storage tanks, the captain apparently remained in his cabin one deck below the bridge and was still there when his vessel grounded on a second reef 15 minutes later. Quite obviously, the system that allowed this tragedy to occur and turn Prince William Sound into a disaster area is in need of drastic overhaul.

The accident also highlighted the oil industry's apparent lack of preparedness for a large-scale clean-up operation. Anxious officials on the spot berated Exxon for the time the company took to come up with an organized cleanup plan. Alaska's frustrated Department of Environmental Conservation at one stage even considered asking the Coast Guard to assume charge of mopping up operations.

In Washington, the repercussions of the oil spill will be felt for months to come as environmentalists fight to keep oil developers out of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. President George Bush favors exploratory drilling in the refuge if it can be done without harming the environment. It is estimated that the coastal strip could produce as much as 3.2 billion barrels of oil and keep the Alaska pipeline working at full spate long after the North Slope oilfields have been exhausted.

If Congress is to approve such development, however, the oil industry must demonstrate renewed dedication to legitimate environmental concerns, not only during the extraction of oil but also during its conveyance by pipeline or ship through areas of ecological importance and natural beauty. One Prince William Sound disaster is one too many.

Budget 'fat' best removed surgically

WASHINGTON — Budget Director Richard Darman is searching for ways to get around President Bush's read-my-lips pledge not to raise taxes. The harassed Darman doesn't see how he can hold down the worrisome deficit without collecting more revenue.

Jack Anderson

We'll tell him how; all he needs to do is stop the government's excessive, wasteful spending. We'll make it easy for him; we'll even point out the waste.

We'll show him how hundreds of billions of dollars sink out of sight each year in federal quicksand. This is a swamp that must be drained before Darman can rebuild a sound fiscal structure on it.

The pitiful whining for higher taxes, meanwhile, comes from the bureaucrats who want more money to spend, the recipients who want more benefits and the members of Congress who court the beneficiaries.

They wail that they need the extra taxes to reduce the deficit. The truth is that they will merely find new ways to spend the additional revenue. Taxes have been going up for the 58 years that this column has chronicled Washington, D.C., scoops and scandals. Yet the deficit remains.

After each tax increase, the deficit has not come down; spending has gone up. The federal establishment has always spent every last dollar the tax system has brought in, plus a perennial deficit as high as the public would tolerate.

The real need is to spend less, not tax more. And the way to cut spending is not with a meat cleaver, but with a scalpel. The Gramm-Rudman approach is to cut government expenditures across the board, but that hurts legitimate programs and barely scrapes the ones that need to be eliminated. The J. Peter Grace approach is to cut out the waste and leave the legitimate programs unscathed.

Grace headed the commission that searched for waste in the dusty corners of government. The offshoot of the Grace Commission, Citizens Against Government Waste, has surgically removed $110 billion in unnecessary fat. But far more waste is still rotting on the federal carcass.

It will take Congress to cut it off. Darman lacks the authority to eliminate most of the waste. But it is up to him to start the process. We will show him where the waste is; all he needs to do is cut it out of the budget he submits to Congress.

Here are just a few examples that in our view could have been cut from last year's budget:

The taxpayers were tapped for $10 million for surplus sunflower oil. They paid a $6.4 million advance on a $46 million gondola system in Idaho. They put up $376,000 to subsidize a privately owned underwater laboratory in Florida. The Army shelled out $26 million for coal, though it already has a four-year surplus.

Members of Congress also slipped a few million dollars out the back door of the Treasury. Among the appropriations not mentioned in the law but requested by Congress anyway were $1 million for a study on how to replace a vegetable laboratory in Washington, D.C.; $500,000 for an oil-seed research project in North Dakota; $2.5 million for a "World Trade Center" in Kansas; $200,000 to reactivate two unneeded data buoys off the coast of California; $3.8 million to build salmon hatcheries in Alaska; $1.9 million for research on new ways to use fish oil, and the list goes on.

Even as we write this, Congress is working on another budget larded with fat.

OPEN-DOOR POLICY — The federal government has what amounts to an open-door policy at nuclear power plants. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is supposed to check the backgrounds of potential employees at power plants to make sure they aren't the type of people to steal secrets or jeopardize safety. But the system of checks isn't working. The NRC allows many workers to begin their jobs before background checks are completed. Congressional investigators have uncovered cases where employees in sensitive positions had serious sexual, drug or financial problems. One worker got a security clearance and the NRC background check failed to turn up his record. He has failed to file income taxes, abused his wife and children and had been in treatment for alcohol abuse.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Shaklee Corp., a door-to-door sales outfit is about to be purchased by a Japanese company. We're usually the one to sound the alarm about foreign ownership, but this one has interesting possibilities. Maybe the Japanese can inject some decorum into the sales technique of leaning on friends and neighbors. Can we offer Japan a deal on Avon, Amway, Tupperware and Mary Kaye, too?

Pitchers who listen can count their blessings

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — One of the reasons I make an annual visit to baseball's spring training is to watch the kids.

I'm tired of the Darryl Strawberrys, who are making 40 zillion a year and refuse to play if the wind isn't blowing to suit them. There is a 162-game regular season to watch those clowns.

Lewis Grizzard

But here you get to see the kids who are struggling to make it out of places like Richmond and Modesto and Albuquerque, where the meal money buys only hamburgers and there are no first-class jet rides.

In little ballparks like West Palm's Municipal Stadium, where the Braves and Expos share a spring training site, you're close enough to the field to share the pressure involved in trying to be upwardly mobile in professional baseball.

A kid nearly fresh out of the University of Georgia is trying to make the Braves' big league roster.

He's a left-handed pitcher and his name is Derek Lilliquist and his chances of staying with the big club are maybe 50-50, you figure.

He comes on in the sixth inning against the Dodgers and I'm sitting there in the stands thinking to myself, despite the pressure and assorted other agonies, how much I'd like to be 23 again and in Lilliquist's shoes.

I played a little ball. I was a pitcher. I didn't exactly throw smoke, but I had good breaking stuff.

I remember the last game I pitched. I was a senior at Newnan (Ga.) High School. We were playing Griffin.

Tommy Cobb had hit a three-run homer and I had a 3-2 lead with two men on base and two outs in the bottom of the sixth.

Griffin's clean-up batter was at the plate. He looked 10 years older than me.

But I'd struck him out twice earlier with curve balls and when the count reached two balls and two strikes, I was ready to throw him another one.

Before I could make my delivery, my coach called time and came to the mound.

"Don't throw him that curve again," he told me. "He's seen enough of that and he'll be waiting for it."

I'll finish the story later.

Lilliquist comes in and strikes out all three Dodgers to end the inning.

"He's sneaky fast," said a man sitting in front of me. I wasn't exactly sure what "sneaky fast" meant, but it sounded good, so I concurred with the man.

Lilliquist also pitched the seventh and the eighth. He gave up a hit and a walk, but the Dodgers didn't score, and you could see how pumped up the kid was when he walked off the mound.

He might be a millionaire in a couple of years, who knows?

Anyway, I'm 17 and I know everything there is to know about everything, so I ignored my coach and threw the Griffin catcher my curve ball anyway.

It was the last pitch of my career. My left fielder said he didn't have a chance to catch the ball the Griffin catcher hit, but that he had gotten a glimpse of it when it went over his head.

But maybe if I'd worked a little harder and maybe if somebody had shown me more about pitching and had pushed me....

We can all dream. I simply hope that those who get to live their dreams can understand their good fortune.

TOM WICKER

American forests once protected our ecology

NEW YORK — The Eastern region of the United States once was covered with dense forests.

Westward to about the 95th meridian, beyond the Mississippi River, mighty trees covered the land, save in what are now Illinois and Iowa.

Tom Wicker

Not until the mid-19th century did settlers moving west, "which they had for generations seen at sunset through traceries of the twigs and leafage of the primal forests," reach the Great Plains and stand "at last with the forests behind them."

That was the end of "Book One of our history," wrote Herbert Quick, an Iowa editor and novelist, in his autobiography.

Even by then the great forests through which the pioneers had pushed with ax and rifle were pocked and spotted with farm clearings and primitive roads; as the nation developed into an agricultural-industrial colossus, the destruction of the Eastern forests rapidly proceeded.

Now there's little left of the vast tree cover that once stretched from the Atlantic to the Mississippi and beyond; and only on the Pacific Slope are ancient or "old-growth" forests in sizable tracts still to be found in this country. Even they may be gone within 20 or 30 years.

Thus has the United States done throughout its history what a righteous world denounces Brazil for doing today; no wonder Brazilian leaders point to the United States as their role model in deforestation.

And even without Brazil's development needs, the U.S. continues to clear away its most valuable forests.

The U.S. Forest Service regulates most of the nation's remaining old-growth timber, almost all of it in the Pacific Northwest and Alaska, including the important temperate rain forests of the Olympic Peninsula in Washington.

But that doesn't mean these forests are protected from cutting.

The Forest Service is charged not with preserving forests but with their utilization — timber productivity as well as recreation and the protection of wildlife habitat and ecosystems.

So it regularly permits private lumber companies, as they deplete their own forests, to cut Forest Service timber.

Old-growth trees, 300 or more years old, make particularly valuable timber for their huge size and tight grain.

Critics charge that the Forest Service does not sufficiently protect these irreplaceable trees or the remarkable ecosystems that surround them, and that it contends twice as much old-growth remains on its lands as is actually the case.

Wilderness Society officials believe, for example, that within two or three years no "ecologically significant" old-growth will remain in the Gifford Pinchot National Forest in Washington.

West Coast conifer forests unique to the United States are being cut, too; sometimes mixed stands of spruce, hemlock and cedar are inadequately replaced with Douglas fir alone, making for a very different forest.

In old-growth areas, of course, saplings planted today hardly replace trees that took hundreds of years to grow.

For the loggers to get at the trees, roads must be cut, increasing forest destruction and preventing affected areas from ever being declared protected "wilderness."

In six Southern Appalachian national forests encompassing 3.5 million acres, the Forest Service plans to open more than 2 million acres to logging in the next decade, doubling the timber harvest. The plans call for more than 3,000 miles of new roads in the six areas.

An active federal tree-planting program was established in the 1985 farm bill, but the need is enormous and growing with every slash of the saw.

The Wilderness Society estimates that up to 3.1 million Forest Service acres need to be reforested.

The American Forestry Association has identified 20 million open acres in the Southeast alone that should be planted to trees.

In cities, towns and suburbs, which the Forestry Association calls "heat islands," it urges the need by 1992 for 100 million more trees to be planted in yards around houses and businesses, and 60 million more along streets — not just for scenery but to achieve huge savings in energy use.

Deforestation anywhere — in Montana or Brazil — means soil erosion, fouled streams, increased vulnerability to flood and wind, vanished habitat, extinct species, a heritage discarded.

The disappearance of trees, moreover, with their capacity for absorbing carbons from the atmosphere, is a major cause of global warming, with all its dangers.

In these circumstances, the United States needs to plant more and cut less; until it does, the finger it points at others will not be clean.

Former Attorney General Edwin Meese leaves U.S. District Court in Washington Tuesday with his wife Ursula after testifying in the Iran-Contra trial of Oliver North.

Administration pushes Contras to go home

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is cutting funding in half for the Nicaraguan Contras' political operation in exile, to underscore its desire for rebel leaders to return to their homeland, a Contra leader says.

The administration wants Contra leaders to return to Nicaragua to test promises made by the leftist Sandinista government of an open political process, said Alfredo Cesar, a member of the rebels' political directorate.

The United States has been spending $4.8 million a year to support the Contras' exiled political operation, including offices in Miami and Central America.

Under the new policy, the Contras are being urged to take part in the national elections scheduled by the Sandinistas for February 1990.

"Even though it's only at the suggestion level, it's a very strong suggestion," Cesar said in a telephone interview Tuesday evening. "The message is that they will no longer support political activities in exile. The only ones they will support are ones conducted inside Nicaragua as part of the political opposition there."

Cesar said that message was delivered to the rebels at a State Department meeting when the seven members of the directorate were in Washington two weeks ago. It was repeated in stronger terms when a State Department delegation traveled to Miami to meet again with the group last Friday — at the same time President Bush was announcing a new policy toward Nicaragua at the White House.

"The message is that they will no longer support political activities in exile. The only ones they will support are ones conducted inside Nicaragua as part of the political opposition there."

— Alfredo Cesar, rebel leader

"The whole idea behind that is that political activity should be transferred inside Nicaragua, which is where the testing arena is now" said Cesar.

"This is a logical result of the new policy of the Bush administration," he said. "You cannot support the peace process, really, unless you support the internal political opposition. And you cannot support the internal opposition at the same time you are supporting a shadow opposition in exile."

He said "this shows the Bush administration is very serious about the new policy."

That policy, arrived at after weeks of meetings with congressional leaders, calls for a 10-month renewal of humanitarian aid to the rebels troops now based in border camps just inside neighboring Honduras.

But it also commits the United States to support a peace process undertaken by the five countries in the region and permits the rebel aid to be used to relocate the fighters into their homeland when political conditions there improve.

Cesar said he is the only one of the seven members of the directorate thus far who has announced plans to return to Nicaragua. He said he will go back the third week in May, assuming that the promised changes in electoral and communications law are made in Nicaragua and that the five presidents come up with a plan for voluntary repatriation of the rebels.

Meese says Contra aid diversion prompted fear of Reagan's impeachment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fear that President Reagan would be impeached gripped his administration after Oliver North confirmed that money from the Iran arms sales had been diverted to the Nicaraguan Contras, says former Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Testifying Tuesday at North's trial, Meese agreed with defense lawyer Brendan Sullivan that the administration was worried disclosure of the diversion could cause "the toppling of the president himself."

Meese's discovery of the diversion came during a weekend inquiry he conducted for Reagan. Earlier disclosure of the administration's secret weapons sales to Iran had already produced an uproar.

Meese, who informed President Reagan of the diversion on Nov. 24, 1986, said he didn't know if the word "impeachment" itself was used in discussions, but that there was anxiety over "the tremendous consequences."

Meese said he was concerned that administration opponents might get hold of the information and make it public, so he urged quick action to limit the political damage. He held a news conference the next day to announce the news.

"I felt it vital that there not be any appearance of a coverup," said the former attorney general.

North was fired and his boss, national security adviser John Poindexter, resigned. Also, the Tower commission was created and independent counsel Lawrence Walsh was appointed in December 1986.

"They were the actions taken because they were the appropriate actions to take in any event," said Meese. "But one of the concerns was from preventing this from being used by political opponents of the president."

Meese described interviewing North on Nov. 23, 1986, a Sunday, seeking confirmation of a memo found the previous day at North's National Security Council office. The memo by North outlined a plan for the diversion.

The NSC aide told Meese the diversion had already occurred from an earlier arms shipment to Iran.

"Your worst nightmare had come true?" North lawyer Brendan Sullivan asked Meese.

"Yes," Meese replied.

"You knew that spelled trouble?" asked Sullivan.

"Yes, I did," responded Meese.

One of the criminal counts against North accuses him of lying to Meese about details of the secret operation. North is charged with falsely telling Meese that the National Security Council had no involvement with the diversion and that Israel determined the amount of money funneled to the Contras. In fact, North and other U.S. officials were directing the secret operation.

Meese described his inquiry as a fact-finding mission, not an investigation, and said North therefore was under no legal obligation to tell the truth.

Prosecutor John Keker elicited from Meese that the attorney general had told North at the outset of their Sunday afternoon interview not to try to conceal anything.

But Meese subsequently agreed with Sullivan that he was acting as "basically a counselor to the president" when he interviewed North, not as the nation's chief law enforcement officer.

"Oliver North had no obligation to answer questions?" asked U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell.

"He would have had no obligation other than as a loyal member of the administration," replied Meese. The former attorney general added that North had "no legal compulsion" to answer truthfully as he would have "in a criminal investigation."

Meese's handling of his weekend inquiry drew much criticism from Congress.

Soviets warn against U.S. aid to Afghanistan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union says U.S. refusal to stop arming rebels in Afghanistan could lead to a wider conflict in Southwest Asia.

Two Soviet diplomats, at a news conference Tuesday, urged Secretary of State James A. Baker III to reconsider a Soviet proposal for a mutual arms embargo.

"So far, the American side is reluctant to accept our proposal," Oleg Derkovsky, a counselor at the Soviet embassy here, said.

He said Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze is likely to renew the appeal when Baker goes to Moscow in May.

Derkovsky said fighting between the rebels and the Afghan government is escalating and could involve India and Iran, as the two countries seek to protect their interests.

The Soviet diplomat said the two countries were concerned that Pakistan might try to arrange a federation with Afghanistan should the rebels succeed in overthrowing President Najibullah's government.

"People have to be very careful of avoiding incidents that could lead to a larger conflict," Yevgeny Kutovoy, minister-counselor of the embassy, said.

The two diplomats accused the United States and Pakistan of illegally arming the rebels and said the United Nations should conduct an inquiry and consider posting monitors at the country's borders.

The diplomats also recalled predictions that Najibullah would collapse "like a house of cards" after the Feb. 15 departure of Soviet troops.

The Soviet-backed Afghan leader and his army "have shown most convincingly they are prepared to uphold on their own the country's sovereignty," Kutovoy said.

Soviet troops backed the government in Kabul against the U.S.-armed rebels for nine years. The war has continued since their departure.

Kutovoy accused Pakistan of training and arming rebel forces in "extensive subversive and terrorist activities" to overthrow Najibullah's government. He said Pakistani officers were directing attacks and that Pakistani servicemen have been captured deep inside Afghanistan.

Pakistan's involvement calls for a special investigation by the United Nations and U.N. monitoring of the Geneva accords of last April which barred outside intervention in the Afghan war, Kutovoy said.

New Zealand wins court battle for America's Cup

SAN DIEGO (AP) — New Zealand has won in court what it didn't win on the high seas — sailing's coveted America's Cup. But the San Diego Yacht Club hasn't decided whether it will relinquish sport's oldest trophy without an appeal.

"This is not a hollow victory when you see the issues that were at stake," Michael Fay, leader of the New Zealand sailing syndicate, said Tuesday after a New York judge ruled that San Diego's defense of the cup was illegal.

"The real winner is the cup and its traditions," Fay said from New Zealand.

Kiwi joy contrasted with shock and bitterness in San Diego.

"There is a feeling that we've been had," yacht club attorney Mark Smith said.

A decision on whether to appeal will be made in the next few days, after attorneys brief the boards of the yacht club and its event organizer, the America's Cup Organizing Committee, said club Commodore Pat Goddard.

The 138-year-old silver cup will remain in San Diego until the decision is made, said Goddard.

Skipper Dennis Conner had sailed the twin-hulled Stars and Stripes to an easy sweep of the Mercury Bay Boating Club's single-hulled New Zealand last September. Conner's 60-foot catamaran was lighter, faster and more maneuverable than its 133-foot challenger.

"I'm disappointed, naturally, because we worked hard to win it," he said.

But in the first disqualification in the event's history, New York state judge Carmen Ciparick called the best-of-three series a "gross mismatch" and said San Diego had "paid lip service to the cup as a competitive event."

The judge said the 102-year-old Deed of Gift that governs the race does not specify a boat size or number of hulls.

But, she said, "the conclusion is inescapable" that George Schuyler, who established the race, "contemplated the defending vessel to relate in some way to the specifications of the challenger."

Ciparick said she had no alternative but to award the cup to New Zealand, although she acknowledged it was a "drastic remedy" because of the trophy's economic significance and prestige.

Studies indicated San Diego stood to gain up to $1.2 billion from its planned international regatta to defend the cup in 1991 or 1992.

NATION IN BRIEF

Dog serves as holding company president

LOS ANGELES (HNS) — A black Labrador retriever was president of a real estate holding company that owned some of the worst slum properties in the city, according to a suit filed in Los Angeles Superior Court.

Teluce, a dog owned by a real estate investor, is listed on the incorporation papers for the T.H.I.S. Corp. as Teluce Black.

The dog-owned company was one of nearly a dozen paper corporations and front landlords that shielded two seemingly respectable Los Angeles loan companies as they made millions from slum properties, according to the city attorney's office.

The two companies, Highland Federal Savings and Loan of Highland Park and A&B Loan of Inglewood, are the main targets of a massive anti-racketeering lawsuit filed yesterday against 137 defendants.

"Basically, what we have here is a conspiracy," City Attorney James Hahn said at a press conference outside one of the 11 buildings the 95-page suit alleges were slums.

Sullivan agrees to pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan has reversed course and will take $215,000 in severance pay from his previous job as a medical school president.

Sullivan said in a statement released Tuesday evening by his office that the severance, which was part of his contract as president of the Morehouse School of Medicine, has been approved by the Office of Government Ethics.

"I have made this agreement in the full faith that it in no way presents ethical difficulty, or appearance of difficulty, with regard to my services as HHS secretary," he said.

Sullivan had prviously decided to forgo the money because he said he wanted to avoid even the appearance of potential conflicts of interest with his connection to the medical school, which receives federal grants. He said such questions could hamper his effectiveness and damage Morehouse's image.

Tests reveal Alar levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — Makers of apple sauces and juices presented test results today showing the products to be virtually free of Alar, a chemical that environmentalists say heightens the risk of cancer in children.

The Processed Apple Institute, which represents most of the producers of apple sauces and juices, said today tests covering 4,623 samples and a cross-section of brand names revealed only eight cases in which detectable levels of Alar were found in the product.

Larry Davenport, executive director of the Atlanta-based trade association, said a detectable level meant a trace of at least 1 part per million in the sample, or 20 times below the tolerance level established by the Environmental Protection Agency.

"We're talking about truly insignificant levels here," Davenport said Tuesday in a telephone interview.

There has been widespread concern reported among parents in recent weeks over the health effects of chemicals used on apples.

Company to pay penalties

MIAMI (AP) — A medical equipment manufacturer has pleaded guilty to criminal charges of selling thousands of defective pacemakers and corrosive batteries and has agreed to pay $764,000 in penalties.

Cordis Corp., which last week agreed to pay $5 million to settle a separate civil-fraud claim brought by the government, pleaded guilty Tuesday to 12 felony counts and 13 misdemeanors in the second case.

Four executives of the Miami-based concern still face a criminal trial set for September over the defective pacemakers.

127 arrested in crackdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh today announced the arrest of 127 people in an investigation he said smashed a billion-dollar international money-laundering ring with links to the Medellin drug cartel of Colombia.

Thornburgh called it "the largest money-laundering crackdown ever carried out by the federal government."

Authorities seized a half-ton of cocaine and $45 million in cash, jewelry and real estate, and have identified more assets for potential seizure, he said.

"There is no more effective way to deal with the business of drug trafficking than to take the profit out of it. That's what has happened with Operation Polar Cap," Thornburgh said at a news conference.

Transit issue defeated

PHOENIX (AP) — Voters on Tuesday rejected a proposal to increase the sales tax half a penny to finance an $8.4 billion expansion of the growth-burdened Phoenix area's mass transit system.

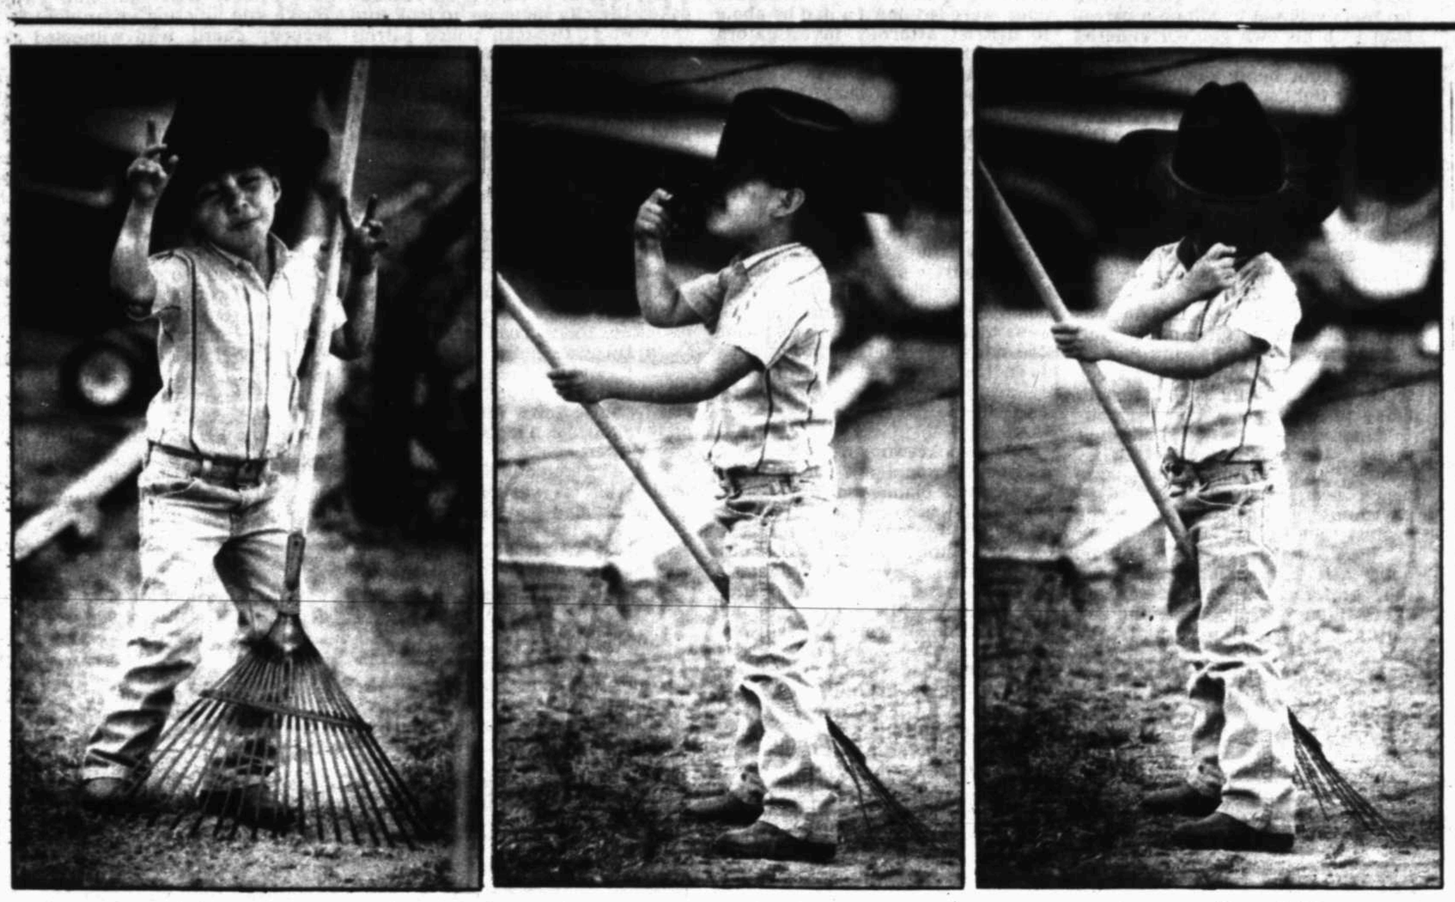

With ballots from 923 of 1,093 precincts counted, the tax increase had 114,618 votes, or 38.5 percent, to 182,833 votes, or 61.5 percent, against.

"Obviously this train is not leaving the station," said Mayor Terry Goddard.

Firm sanctioned for obtaining secret transcripts

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Dallas lawyers who violated federal-court orders by procuring copies of sealed and confidential transcripts have been admonished by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Coupled with the admonishment of Dallas lawyer Stuart C. Hollimon and other counsel in the Strasburger & Price law firm were sanctions against their client, Wagner & Brown, a Midland-based oil-exploration and oil-production company, in a multi-million-dollar civil lawsuit against the Dow Chemical Co. of Midland, Mich., and Dowell Schlumberger Inc. (DSI) of Houston.

In its initial suit filed in September 1988 in 238th Texas State District Court in Midland, Wagner & Brown had sought at least $15-million, including $5 million in actual damages and $10 million in exemplary damages, from DSI and Dow.

The litigation later was transferred to federal court in Midland.

In imposing sanctions related to abuses of the legal system, Bunton struck from the lawsuit allegations of "fraud and gross negligence" and the request for exemplary damages.

However, Bunton did not strike Wagner & Brown's accusations against Dow and DSI for violations of the Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act. Under those violations, Wagner & Brown is asking treble the alleged $5 million in actual damages.

Wagner & Brown claim that DSI and Dow had "cheated" Wagner & Brown on oil-well services by doing inferior work and using inferior materials in acidizing and fracturing projects and in cementing projects on Wagner & Brown's wells.

Wagner & Brown owns working interests in oil-and-gas wells in Texas and Oklahoma and operates those wells.

The Dow and DSI work resulted in lost profits due to "diminished production and producing capabilities" of the wells, Wagner & Brown claims.

Wagner & Brown maintain that Dow and DSI used "junk" or "blow-down" cement in cementing projects and used "waste" acid or provided a "lesser amount" of sand, acid, gelling agents and other chemicals and additives in acidizing and fracturing projects.

Further, Wagner & Brown claim that Dow and DSI used a "systematic" plan designed "to cheat Wagner & Brown and every other customer with which Dow and DSI did business" and that the plan was "encouraged and sponsored" by the Dow and DSI management.

In 1984, Dowell became jointly owned by Dow and Schlumberger and changed its name to Dowell Schlumberger Inc. — DSI, according to court records.

The lawsuit covers the 1978-86 period, and the trial over the dispute is to be held in Bunton's court in Midland.

In his order for sanctions against Wagner & Brown's counsel and the company itself, Bunton noted that the pre-trial discovery battles have been "heated" and that the court previously had "refused to order sanctions against the parties for conduct" during the pre-trial process.

Dow, which is represented by the Beirne, Maynard & Parsons law firm of Houston, had filed the motion for sanctions against Wagner & Brown and the company's counsel. Co-defendant DSI is being represented by Fulbright & Jaworski, an international law firm.

The case of sanctions was rooted in efforts by Wagner & Brown's counsel to get Federal Judge Halbert Woodward of Lubbock to unseal certain documents in the OJB Inc.-vs.-Dowell dispute which apparently has a tie-in with the Wagner & Brown case against Dow and DSI.

Woodward had ordered the OJB record sealed and held confidential. The sealed record of the OJB litigation was ordered forwarded to Bunton.

However, according to Bunton's order for sanctions, Wagner & Brown's lead counsel, Hollimon, "embarked on a concerted effort to procure from outside sources (court reporters) materials" which were subject of Woodward's protective orders.

The OJB case allegedly contained documents, depositions and other materials which would "support" Wagner & Brown's claim of "widespread fraud" against Dow and DSI.

Wagner & Brown's counsel did not disclose to Woodward, Bunton or U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes of Midland that the lawyers had obtained in-camera — secret — OJB state-court proceedings before the case had been moved to Woodward's federal court.

2 more Odessa measles cases reported

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Just when Midland County health officials believed they had seen an end to the red measles outbreak, two more cases have popped up in Odessa.

Midland County Health Department Administrator Toby Cross this morning said a 22-month-old boy was confirmed by blood test as having the disease, while an 11-month-old boy was diagnosed by a doctor.

Midland has had no new cases since Monday, health officials reported.

Meanwhile, three cases of chickenpox also have been confirmed in Midland, health department nursing supervisor Gretchen Parsley said this morning.

Though less serious than the recent measles outbreak, Ms. Parsley characterized the disease as no less contagious.

"We've had reports ever since last fall," she said, observing that outbreaks reach their peak in late autumn and early spring.

While weekly reports from local physicians have turned up only three chickenpox cases, Ms. Parsley acknowledged that the numbers may actually be much higher.

At least six cases have been reported at the Gingham Day Care Center, 2111 W. Michigan Ave., said owner Jody Ivy.

Also, Grace Elig, owner of Discovery Day Care Center, 3220 W. Illinois Ave., confirmed one case involving a Rusk Elementary School student who contracted the disease last Sunday.

According to Ms. Parsley, the disease is marked by crops of itching and blisterlike eruptions on the skin and is carried by direct contact with the blisters or by droplets spread by the breathing tract of infected persons, usually in the early stages of the disease.

The fluid and scabs from the blisters are infectious until entirely dry and diagnosis is usually made by physical examination and by the characteristic appearance of the disease.

The incubation period averages two to three weeks and is followed by slight fever, mild headache, malaise and loss of appetite occurring about 24 to 36 hours before the rash begins, Ms. Parsley said.

She added that the rash, which begins as flat red spots and develops in a day or two to raised bumps, leads to blisters surrounding a reddened base and contains clear fluid.

Within 24 to 48 hours the blisters turn cloudy, are easily broken and become encrusted. They erupt in crops so that all three stages are present at the same time on the back, chest, face, neck and limbs.

The symptoms last from a few days to two weeks, Ms. Parsley said, observing that routine treatment is made up of bed rest, drugs to reduce fever and applications of wet compresses.

Calamine lotion, or a paste made from baking soda and water to control itching and antihistamines by mouth also are given to relieve itching.

One attack of the disease gives permanent immunity and few cases need hospitalization, although it may be serious or fatal in people with less resistance, as those getting chemotherapy or radiotherapy for cancer.

Common complications are secondary bacterial infections, such as abscesses, pneumonia, blood poisoning and tiny hemorrhages occurring in the vesicles or surrounding skin.

Less common complications are swelling of the brain, Reye's Syndrome, blood disorders and liver disease.

Ector County Health Department to hire AIDS counselor

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Health officials got a financial shot in the arm Tuesday that they hope will assist them in stopping the spread of the AIDS virus throughout West Texas.

The Texas Department of Health has awarded the Ector County Health Department $30,000 to fund a new AIDS counselor's position, administrator Toby Cross said today.

Under terms of the contract, the new employee will counsel people before and after they undergo an AIDS-antibody blood test.

The newly created position's duties also call for "partner notification" services, Cross explained.

People who test positive for evidence of the AIDS-antibody will be urged to disclose the names of persons with whom they have had sexual intercourse or shared intravenous drug needles, Cross said.

The Ector County Health Department will be in a better position to stop the spread of the AIDS or HIV virus, Cross said.

People who test positive for the AIDS-antibody virus or those with whom the infected person has had sex or shared needles will be educated on methods of safe sex, Cross continued.

Currently, the Midland and Ector county health departments and Planned Parenthood of West Texas, Inc., provide AIDS-antibody testing.

The Permian Basin AIDS Resource Center in Odessa also provides AIDS educational services to West Texas.

AIDS is a fatal disease that renders a human's immune system defenseless against infection.

Those at the highest risk of contracting the disease include homosexual or bisexual males and intravenous drug abusers.

The AIDS-antibody blood test searches for antibodies or "virus killers" in the blood that have been formed to combat the AIDS virus.

Dr. R. Palmer Beasley of the University of Texas Health Science Center at Houston said Tuesday the AIDS epidemic in Texas is increasing rapidly "without an end in sight," and nationally AIDS is the worst epidemic in 70 years.

More than 6,200 Texans have been diagnosed with AIDS since 1981, according to the TDH. Beasley said that figure is expected to grow to 45,000 by the end of 1992.

"The Texas epidemic is growing faster than the U.S. epidemic overall," he said.

Cross said the money is for one-year's services and hopefully will continue to be renewed. The new position should be filled before summer.

Bill would reorganize state parole board

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill passed by the House Tuesday would bring needed order to the agency run by the State Board of Pardons and Paroles, which the bill's author said is "poorly run."

The House overwhelmingly approved the measure sponsored by Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, whose legislation would attach a three-member administrative panel to the six-member pardon and parole board.

Among ills the measure would remedy is inadequate personal protection training that led to the abduction and rape of a Beaumont parole officer this past May, said the representative.

The bill made a speedy exit from the House floor Monday on its way to Senate consideration, as did another bill to better regulate the sale of redfish.

A third bill, one to allow bus companies the weapon of lower fares in competition with airlines, also received a quick House after already garnering Senate approval.

Stiles said he was shocked to discover that supervisors sent the Beaumont officer into a dangerous situation alone with "no safety training at all."

Among the bill's many provisions is power for the administrative panel to develop the missing safety training.

But the legislation is intended as a broader house cleaning of the agency, which both Stiles and House Corrections Committee Chairman Allen Hightower said is past due.

The administrative panel also would hire and fire the agency's executive director and rule on contracts.

The legislators saw the measure as an "insurance policy" should criminal justice reform supported by the governor, lieutenant governor and House speaker fail to become law.

Border Patrol to fine country club

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

U.S. Border Patrol agents recently issued a notice of intent to fine Odessa's Mission Country Club more than $30,000 for violations of the Immigration Reform & Control Act.

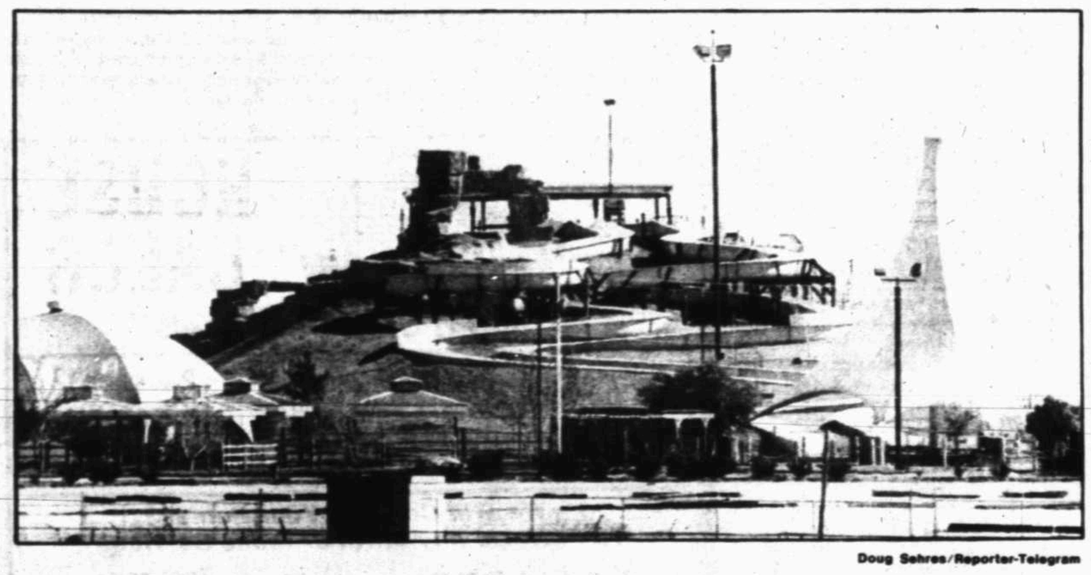

Gerry L. Pockat, general manager of the country club, received notice of $30,550 in fines for 154 alleged violations from the Midland Station of the Marfa Sector of the Border Patrol, according to senior border patrol agent, Lewis H. Reynolds.

The country club was cited for failure to properly prepare and maintain employees' I-9 eligibility verification forms.

Pockat said the club will appeal the fine within the 30 days allotted to begin the appeals process.

"We believe the fines for a first time offense are excessive and we will appeal them," Pockat said in a telephone interview this morning.

Water Wonderland, located between Midland and Odessa, has closed its doors and will not open for business this summer.

Water Wonderland won't be opening

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

After nearly a decade of bringing "wet and wild" recreation to the Permian Basin, Water Wonderland has called it quits. A spokesman for the 22-acre recreation park confirmed Tuesday that the family water park would not open this summer because of the downturn in the economy.

Neither General Manager Cindy Belew Weaver nor S.F. "Sonny" Henderson, owner of the facility, returned phone calls Tuesday despite several attempts. It was learned, however, that Eric Olsen, Water Wonderland public relations director, was no longer employed there.

When reached at his home Olsen confirmed that he had not worked for the park for two weeks and had no knowledge of the present situation. "I learned about the closing just yesterday," he said.

Norma Funderburk, director of the Midland Chamber of Commerce Convention and Visitors Bureau, called the closing of the facility "a great loss." Said Ms. Funderburk: "Water Wonderland brought a lot of visitors from throughout the area to Midland and Odessa. It also prompted many tourists on Interstate 20 to make this a stop."

She said the recreation facility would be particularly missed because of the increased tourism expected in Texas this year. "The state is spending a lot of money on tourism, and I expected we would get some of the spill over," she said.

She added that there had been no indication that the water park might close as late as February 28, when Water Wonderland participated in a program to provide tourist information to volunteers manning the information booth at Midland International Airport.

Ms. Funderburk said it was her understanding that the motocross and golfing facilities would remain open at Water Wonderland, but the water park would be closed.

Airport cabbies can park closer to baggage area

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Cab drivers can park closer to their potential customers at Midland International Airport thanks to a city ordinance amendment passed Tuesday.

City council members voted to allow taxi drivers to park and wait for business closer to the airport's baggage claim area doors.

Prior to the move Tuesday, drivers had to operate from an area adjacent to the restricted and rental car parking lots north of the terminal building, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor explained.

Airport officials had been in negotiations with cab drivers since December, hammering out details of the parking area ordinance amendment, said airport spokeswoman Marcie Blauvelt.

Terms of the amendment passed Tuesday call for two taxi drivers to be parked immediately outside the exit doors of the baggage claim area, Ms. Blauvelt said.

Another four to six cabs will be allowed to wait south of the baggage claim doors. When one of the two cabs parked directly in front of those doors leaves, the cab next in line may move into the "front and center" locale, Ms. Blauvelt explained.

The move was designed to help cab drivers' business and ease airline travelers' quests to find a taxi cab, she said.

Passengers had complained that they were forced to carry heavy luggage when looking for a cab or that they couldn't find a cab, Ms. Blauvelt said.

McGregor added the move should not hinder cars who stop at the terminal's curb.

Suspects in officer's death surrender

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Saying they were scared of police, two brothers accused of killing a patrolman with his own gun surrendered to prosecutors and were ordered held without bond.

Under tight security, Henry David Hernandez, 25, and Julian Hernandez, 28, were taken before state District Judge James Barlow, who ordered the pair held without bond on capital murder charges.

The brothers were arrested Tuesday afternoon at the office of their attorney, who had arranged with Bexar County prosecutors for the suspects' surrender.

Attorney Joe Hernandez, no relation to the suspects, requested during the five-minute hearing that no police officials or prosecutors speak to the men without their attorney being present.

"They were concerned about their safety," Joe Hernandez said. "They wanted to surrender. They were very concerned about the police department because of the charge against them.

"The deceased was a San Antonio police officer, and that's the reason they preferred to surrender to an agency that was not under the San Antonio Police Department," he said.

"We are concerned that they are safe now...We wouldn't want them to be out on bond," said Hernandez, who has represented the suspects on previous charges.

Rodriguez said he did not know whether the vehicle or the weapon used in the slaying of Patrolman Gary Williams had been recovered.

The suspects, looking scared and declining to answer reporters' questions, were led down a hall by about 10 district attorney investigators. One of the suspects was wearing a suit and the other was wearing slacks and a vest.They had been strip-searched before entering the courtroom, Rodriguez said.

He said their attorney contacted him Tuesday morning after the suspects said they wanted to surrender.

"They were scared. Mr. Hernandez was scared for them. He wanted my word that they would not be harmed," Rodriguez said.

"I find it a little ironic that he was asking me for help and that he didn't want them harmed and I told him, 'Joe, more than likely I'm going to do more than harm. I will probably seek the death penalty,' " said Rodriguez, who said he did not foresee a plea bargain.

Police spokeswoman Sandy Perez said police would not comment on the suspects' claims that they feared police retaliation.

Police had intensified their search for the brothers Monday and Tuesday after the slaying of Williams.

The 37-year-old officer died Monday morning while undergoing surgery at Brooke Army Medical Center. The two-year department veteran was shot once in the lower abdomen below his bulletproof vest and once in the left side of the neck, apparently with his own .357-caliber Magnum revolver, police spokesman Sgt. Paul Buske said.

Capital murder warrants with no bonds were issued for the brothers' arrests while police officers staked out several locations.

Mayor Henry Cisneros on Tuesday asked the city manager to look into the cost of two-man police patrols during overnight shifts.

The shooting incident began about 3 a.m. when Williams was dispatched to the city's northeast area to investigate a report of a suspicious vehicle parked behind a closed restaurant, said homicide Lt. Albert Ortiz, who is heading the investigation into the shooting.

Williams said he would ask for a backup unit once he determined the situation, Ortiz said.

When Williams approached the car, a 1987 beige Mercury, it pulled onto the access road of Northeast Loop 410.

After stopping the men, he took a driver's license from one of them and typed in the vehicle's license plate number in a mobile display terminal, Ortiz said.

Two men got out of the car and while Williams was making a check on the car and one driver's license, the two men jumped Williams, took his revolver and shot him twice, Buske said, quoting an unidentified security guard, who witnessed the shooting.

San Antonio television station KMOL aired an interview Tuesday night with a man calling from the Bexar County Jail who identified himself as Henry David Hernandez.

The station said the man, who described the shooting of the officer, was calling KMOL to tell his side of the story. The caller said Williams tried twice to take the gun away from him and during the struggle he bit the officer on the neck.

A reporter from Channel 4 said he set up the interview in advance, and a jail official on the line assured him he was talking to the defendant.

A Bexar County jail official who would not identify himself told The Associated Press Tuesday night that Hernandez was in an area with access to a pay telephone. However, the jail official said he did not know if the call was made.

C.W. Thompson, assistant chief patrol agent for the Marfa sector, said this morning that a number of the 154 violations were for incomplete I-9s, while "others were not prepared at all."

The assessment against Mission is the largest fine levied to date in the Marfa Sector, which covers Texas west from the Wichita Falls area to Van Horn from the U.S.-Mexico border to the Oklahoma state line.

Since aggressive enforcement efforts began in October 1987, agents in the Marfa Sector have initiated 12 fine cases, with fines totaling $55,400 ranging from $400 to the $30,550 levied against Mission Country Club.

The Mission case is the second generated by the patrol's Midland station. The first involved a $3,500 fine against the Shogun Restaurant in Odessa last fall.

"The abuses and misrepresentations to this (Bunton's) Court are material and significant," Bunton said in his order.

"The principles and oaths by which lawyers practice within are not to be followed only when convenient or advantageous," Bunton ruled. "They are to be followed by letter and by implication at all times."

Bunton found flaws in Wagner & Brown counsel's contentions that the order sealing the OJB documents "meant that only" the OJB papers within possession of the federal court clerk were "outside their reach" but that copies of those documents were "fair game."

"The argument is ingenuous in the context of the strenuous and effective arguments of Plaintiffs (Wagner & Brown) to gain access to those Court documents," Bunton said in his order.

Bunton found "most troubling" that he "could not rely" on Wagner & Brown counsel's representations.

"The Court does not have the resources to be 'sandbagged' by parties in this matter," he said in his order.

If Wagner & Brown and counsel "did not trust that this Court could provide procedural fairness to them, they are invited to resort to appellate review of this Court's proceedings," Bunton said.

However, Bunton said that Wagner & Brown are "entitled to a clean slate once sanctions are imposed."

"These are good lawyers with an outstanding reputation in this Court and elsewhere," Bunton said of Hollimon and lawyers in the Strasburger & Price firm.

In a recent hearing prior to issuing his order, Bunton said: "I don't like lawyers' trying to get in-camera proceedings," which, he said, are secretive.

Any further violations of sealed orders by the offending lawyers would result in arrests by the U.S. deputy marshals and "jail terms."

"It's serious," Bunton said.

Bunton termed the incident a case of the "ends-justifying-the-means" mentality and that the proceedings before him did not reflect a "kinder and gentler" attitude.

"We are not trying this lawsuit for the benefit of the lawyers" but rather to resolve the dispute between Wagner & Brown and the defendants — Dow and DSI.

"I am very concerned about how this Court is supposed to protect the secrecy of in-camera proceedings," Bunton said. "I would hope it (the judge's concern) would scare any lawyer."

Passengers injured in bus crash near Fort Stockton

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Only two of 21 bus passengers injured in an early morning bus crash near Fort Stockton Tuesday remained hospitalized today, according to hospital officials.

The 4:10 a.m. crash killed 26-year-old Carla Maria Teresa Giovanettina of Muralto, Switzerland. Ms. Giovanettina, who was riding in the right front seat according to Department of Public Safety reports, died of a broken back, Pecos County Justice of the Peace Freddie Capers said this morning.

Still hospitalized at Memorial Hospital in Fort Stockton today were Renate Lass, 37, and Jochen Flint, 38, both West Germany nationals, according to William Maloy, hospital administrator.

Both patients were admitted in serious condition on Tuesday and had been upgraded to "improved" by midmorning, Maloy said.

Ms. Lass suffered multiple head lacerations and the possibility of a concussion is still being investigated.

Flint suffered multiple facial lacerations and a fractured right clavicle in the accident.

Federal, state and private investigators arrived at the accident scene 23 miles east of Fort Stockton on Tuesday afternoon to probe the cause of the fatal crash.

All that is known this morning is that the westbound bus "sideswiped an 18-wheeler parked on the shoulder" of Interstate 10, according to Kerrville Bus Co. spokesman Ken Scafe. Kerrville's driver John Racco Jr. of San Antonio was driving the Greyhound-Trailways Co. bus at the time of the accident.

Only five of the 21 injured passengers were admitted to Memorial Hospital, Maloy said; three of those for oberservation only. All three were released Tuesday.

Dallas judge asked to respond to lawyers' petition for dismissal

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today gave State District Judge Jack Hampton of Dallas until April 12 to respond to a petition from some Dallas lawyers seeking his removal over his controversial remarks about homosexuals.

Hampton's remarks were made when discussing his Nov. 28 sentencing of Richard Lee Bednarski in the slaying of two men.

Nearly 20 lawyers signed the petition filed with the Supreme Court on Feb. 16.

In their request, the lawyers said Hampton's comments in an interview with the Dallas Times Herald showed that he "cannot be fair and impartial and should be removed from office."

During that interview, the newspaper quoted Hampton as saying, "These two guys wouldn't have been killed if they hadn't been cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys ...I don't care much for queers running around on weekends picking up teen-age boys."

The Supreme Court's one-paragraph letter to Hampton, signed by deputy clerk Peggy Littlefield, said the justices have "requested that a reply be filed...within two weeks (or by April 12, 1989)."

The State Commission on Judicial Conduct has been investigating the judge.

BOARD

Included in that reform is a similar proposal for splitting administrative duties away from the parole board, Stiles said.

According to the Beaumont Democrat, the agency is beset by low morale and allegations of nepotism, expense account padding, discrimination, and drunkeness among officers.

Stiles and Hightower asked for an investigation into the allegations in August 1987 but did not receive a response until January 1989, they said.

During that 1½-year period, "We could not get answers," said Hightower.

The agency's executive director, Glenn Heckmann, said Tuesday that the allegations were investigated, "and when we were wrong, we corrected it."

Whether the agency took too long in releasing its findings "is in the eye of the beholder," he said.

But he may be too far removed from rank-and-file parole officers to gauge morale, he said.

The two legislators also were miffed that Heckmann had sent a letter to districts inferring the state criminal justice reorganization would eliminate jobs.

The letter, dated March 24, said pardons and parole employees "may consider it their individual right" to discuss the package with their local legislators, but warned they must use their own time.

Heckmann said the letter was intended to "squash any fears" that the board and administrators were not working to contribute their input into the legislative process.

But Hightower said that employees "have absolutely nothing to fear" because all criminal justice reform plans under consideration will create more agency jobs.

"We going to cut case loads," he said. "And when we cut caseloads, more employees have to be added on."

Of two other bills the House passed Tuesday, one would loosen Texas Railroad Commission regulations to allow bus companies to give fewer days notice before altering their base fares.

The Senate bill, which Rep. Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville, sponsored in the House, has the effect of allowing ground-level "supersaver" fares which legislators hope will increase travel competition.

Another House-approved bill would ban all sales of redfish that are not grown on legally sanctioned fish farms.

Prior legislation already had banned all sales of redfish caught in the state's public waters, but the new measure adds fish caught out of state to that prohibition.

Sponsors hope the additional restriction will make the practice of altering fish sale documents to indicate an out-of-state catch an impossibility.

Traps set for coyote roaming on golf course

HOUSTON (AP) — Two live traps were set for a coyote seen roaming a local golf course after objections were made about attempts to shoot the animal.

City animal control officers set a trap Tuesday on the Sharpstown Park Golf Course, as did the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

If the animal can be trapped, the volunteer Texas Wildlife Rehabilitation Coalition has offered to transport it to a wildlife refuge in San Antonio, where it would be released in South Texas.

The coyote, which animal experts say is not a danger to people, has been spotted at the 128-acre golf course for about a month. It apparently has survived by eating the ducks and geese from two ponds.

After receiving a call about the coyote Monday, a city animal control officer went to the golf course that evening and tried to shoot animal because of the possibility it was rabid.

Midland woman dies in alley outside house

From Staff Reports

A 69-year-old Midland woman died this morning after suffering an apparent heart attack in the alley outside her westside residence.

Ruby Lallande, 2901 Aurora Lane, was pronounced dead at the scene by Midland County Justice of the Peace Bob Pine after an unidentified woman found the body about 7:30 a.m. today, police department spokesman Cpl. Jim White said.

White said officials suspect the woman was dumping trash when she suffered a heart attack near a dumpster in the alley.

Water Wonderland was the dream of Henderson a rancher and native West Texan. In a 1986 interview, Henderson told the Reporter-Telegram that living in dry West Texas, he had always dreamed of having his own "swimming hole."

At that time, then-general manager Doyle Wolfe, said the tourist attraction which brought visitors from as far away as Abilene, Lubbock, Roswell and San Angelo, had shown increases every year since it opened.

Dole: Higher minimum wage must be combined with skills training

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole says a proposed split-minimum wage package that includes job training provides a key to better preparing disadvantaged youths for the marketplace.

Mrs. Dole told business and community leaders she strongly supports President Bush's stand that the minimum wage of $3.35 be raised no higher than $4.25 an hour and include a provision for a six-month job training program during which youths would be paid $3.40 an hour.

Bush has indicated he will veto anything larger, such as the $4.65 minimum hourly wage proposed by Democrats.

Mrs. Dole said raising the minimum wage is not enough to address the problems of disadvantaged youngsters and the working poor.

"Increasing the minimum wage to $4.65 will not lift any families out of poverty," Mrs. Dole said. "The minimum wage population and the working poor population are basically two different groups of people.

"So if you want to lift families out of poverty, the way to do it is just what we've been talking about here today: provide education, literacy skills, basic skills. That's the way to do it, but you're not going to do it through the minimum wage."

Mrs. Dole toured the SER-Jobs for Progress Inc. center in downtown Dallas on the second stop of her 10-city tour to promote a reorganization of federal labor training programs. SER is a federally funded, community-based job training program geared largely to Hispanic youth that also provides English instruction, child care and job placement assistance.

"There's a skills gap which has to be addressed," she said. "We've got to prepare our young people with remedial education, with basic skills training, with literacy training."

Mrs. Dole said the lack of such a comprehensive program in the past undoubtedly played a role in lowering disadvantaged youths' expectaions in themselves and in the marketplace.

"Now my message is it's a new day," Mrs. Dole said. "Everyone who wants a job can have a job. Jobs are available if you have the skills."

She said the Labor Department has a history of distributing funds to youth programs in piecemeal fashion with short-term goals, lacking a well-defined overall mission.

Mrs. Dole said she plans to ask Congress for amendments to the Job Training Partnership Act, which provides federal funds to training programs. The JTPA has been criticized as largely ineffective and lawmakers are seeking its overhaul.

"We don't want to saw off the bottom rung of the economic ladder," she said. "We don't want to jinx another generation.

"Let's give them the skills, training, the opportunities and not snatch the jobs away by an excessive increase in the minimum wage," she said.

Sixth measles victim dies in Houston

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — A measles epidemic has claimed a sixth victim here — a 27-year old woman who died March 13 of pneumonia and brain inflammation arising from the red measles.

"The woman was vaccinated in the late 1960s, but the vaccine used then did not provide permanent protection against the disease. This points out the need for older people vaccinated before 1968 to be revaccinated against measles," Linda Forys, Harris County Health Department spokeswoman, said.

Health officials delayed releasing information about the measles death while they awaited laboratory confirmation, Forys said.

While the death rate in this epidemic seems to be one death for every 250 reported cases, neither federal nor state officials could determine whether Houston has a higher than expected measles death rate.

So far, Houston and Harris County have reported 1,455 cases, said Wes Hodgson, a representative of the immunization program based with the Texas Department of Health in Austin.

Many measles cases go unreported, Hodgson said. If those unreported cases could be included in the count, the death rate would be much lower than it seems now, he said.

Dr. Diane Simpson of the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said scientists at her agency usually expect about one death per 1,000 cases. But she said those figures may not take into account all factors that come into play in current epidemics.

Los Angeles, the site of the second largest national measles epidemic, also seems to have a high death rate, Simpson said.

In addition, officials base their expectations on old reports of measles epidemics, she said. Many people who get measles in the 1980s suffer from underlying medical conditions that would make them more likely to develop deadly complications from the disease, Simpson said.

Local infectious disease experts have estimated there may have been as many as 3,000 cases of measles in the Houston area.

As the local epidemic enters its fourth month, health officials predict cases will continue until the end of the school year.

"We won't say it's over until we have two consecutive weeks with no cases," Forys said.

Senate approves removing river authorities from Sunset review

AUSTIN (AP) — River authority officials hailed Senate approval of a bill that would remove the authorities from legislative review.

On Tuesday, the Texas Senate adopted a measure removing river authorities from Sunset Advisory Commission review and placing the authorities under the scrutiny of the Texas Water Commission.

In other action, the Senate gave preliminary approval to a bill that would would allow counties to raise maximum vehicle registration fees from $5 to $10.

Carson Hoge, president of an association of river authorities and water districts, said he was pleased with the Senate action.

"We are regional agencies, not state agencies. We have a direct line of responsibility and communications with the people we serve," said Hoge, who is president of the Texas Water Conservation Authority and general manager of the Brazos River Authority.

Hoge also said river authorities did not want to go through the time and expense of a Sunset review.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said the river authority bill would strengthen oversight of the authorities.

"I think the water commission is better equipped than the Sunset Commission to oversee these river authorities," on a day-to-day basis, Montford said.

The Sunset Commission reviews state agencies on a periodic basis and recommends changes, and sometimes recommends disbanding agencies because they have outlived their usefulness.

Montford said he led the fight in 1985 to place the river authorities under Sunset review, but has since become disillusioned with the Sunset process, saying the reviews become "hopelessly bogged down in details."

But Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, blasted the measure. He said river authorities have abused their powers in the past and need to be reviewed by elected lawmakers, rather than by appointed water commissioners.

Truan charged that Montford's bill was backed by river authority lobbyists paid with public funds.

"That's the first reason that river authorities should get their first taste of Sunset," he said.

"These are hidden agencies, almost secret agencies. It would be a great disservice to the citizens of Texas to not expose them to sunlight or sunset," Truan said.

The bill was sent to the House on a 27-4 vote.

In other business, the Senate gave tentative approval to a bill that would allow counties to charge up to $10 for vehicle registration.

Hobby breaks ankle in skiing accident

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby remained seated as he presided over the Senate on Tuesday after having suffered a broken left ankle while skiing during the Easter holiday.

Sen. Chet Edwards, who has been using crutches the entire legislative session because of a skiing injury, welcomed Hobby to the Senate, saying, "Gov. Hobby is the newest member of the crutch caucus."

After being kidded about his new nickname — Gov. Hobble — Hobby, who has decided not to run for reelection, said, "I really know how it feels to be a lame duck now."

Quizzed by reporters on the details of the accident, Hobby, a politician of few words, said he injured his leg while skiing at Snowmass, near Aspen, Colo.

What happened? "I fell down," he said.

Did you hit something? "I hit the ground."

Hobby, 57, said it was a one-skier accident and that his ankle will be in a cast from six to eight weeks.

Rates for vets to increase

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials say they expect the increase to be small, but rates charged by the Texas Veterans Land Board will be going up.

"We had hoped to be able to extend the 8.75 percent interest rate through the end of March. But we've received such a tremendous response that we have now committed all the funds we had available at that rate," said David Gloier, deputy commissioner.

Gloier said Tuesday that interest rates on future land loans made by the board will be higher, determined after bonds are sold in mid-April.

The Veterans Land Board last week received approval to sell another $50 million in bonds to fund the loan program.

"We still have plenty of money to lend and we are expecting only a slight increase in the interest rate," he said.

The self-supporting Texas Veterans Land Program lends eligible veterans up to $20,000 for purchase of five or more acres of land.

Officials said all contracts which were received by the land board prior to Tuesday would receive the 8.75 percent rate. More than 600 contracts currently are being processed.

Roads to be restored

AUSTIN (AP) — About 2,500 miles of Texas roads will be restored and improved under a $400 million program approved by the Texas Highway Commission.

Work will begin immediately and continue for up to two years under the plan approved by the commission on Tuesday.

About $300 million will be spent statewide for general rehabilitation of highway surfaces, said Raymond Stotzer, engineer-director of the highway department.

Another $50 million is planned for improving "trunkline highways," roads that support commerce, furnish regional service and provide significant economic gain.

"Generally, these are Interstate highways or primary routes that have deteriorated to the extent that they need major reconstruction," Stotzer said.

The remaining $50 million will be spent to add shoulders to narrow, two-lane highways.

Skills test voted down

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate on Tuesday approved a bill that would eliminate the basic skills test given to first-grade students.

The Senate voted 31-0 to eliminate the test that has been criticized by all major teacher and education organizations and the State Board of Education.

Sen. Gene Green, D-Houston, said teachers testifying on his bill said the test hurt students and that "directions for the test were harder than the test."

Opponents of the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimal Skills test for first-graders said it upsets 6-year-olds by placing too much pressure on them and branding some students as failures at an early age.

Critics of the test also claimed the examination showed only which children had pre-school training.

Magazine highlights Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Editors at Billboard magazine say they are planning a special issue that will focus on Austin and the city's growing music scene.

"As overseer of four other city issues, I feel Austin has a refreshing story to tell," Lynda Emon, the magazine's project coordinator, said Tuesday.

Ernie Gammage, president of the Austin Music Industry Council, said the issue that's scheduled for September publication was good news for Austin musicians.

"This special edition presents an outstanding opportunity for Austin to internationally showcase its emergence as a true music center," Gammage said.

Billboard, a weekly music publication, previously has spotlighted Minneapolis, Memphis, Nashville and New Orleans.

Issues termed emergencies

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has designated three issues as emergencies for consideration by the Legislature, including money for the state's legal fight over the method of electing judges.

Deputy press secretary Jay Rosser said issues given emergency status by the governor Tuesday were:

— Appropriating $265,000 to the attorney general's office for defense costs in lawsuits against the state over at-large election of judges.

— Spending up to $165,510 for repairs at Tarleton State University related to a leak of PCBs from a transformer.

— Appropriating nearly $85,000 for improved enforcement of the Dental Practices Act.

Texan found with cocaine

NEOSHO, Mo. (AP) — A state trooper allegedly found 1 kilo of cocaine Tuesday in the car of a Texas man, who was charged with possession of cocaine and transporting a controlled substance, officials said.

Newton County Prosecutor Tim Perigo said the trooper stopped Danny White, 28, of Dallas for speeding on Interstate 44 shortly before noon.

White was arrested when the trooper spotted the cocaine, which was worth about $50,000 on the street, Perigo said.

Beaches to be cleaned up

AUSTIN (AP) — State Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says he expects 6,000 volunteers on Saturday to help clean up 157 miles of Texas beaches.

The theme of this year's cleanup is recycling, Mauro said, because last September 75 percent of the trash that was picked up from the beaches was plastic, which pose the most danger to wildlife.

Egg experiment raises more questions, shuttle pilot says

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A fertilized egg experiment that rode aboard the recent Discovery flight raised more questions than it answered after half of them were discovered dead, the shuttle's pilot says.

The experiment, designed by a student, included 16 eggs fertilized two days before the March 13 shuttle blastoff and another 16 fertilized nine days prior to the launch.

While all the older eggs hatched this past Saturday, the others were found dead after the shuttle ended its flight March 18. Both the hatched chicks and the dead ones are being studied to determine the effects that weightlessness had on them.

"What looked like a very simple experiment may turn out to have generated thousands of questions now instead of providing any answers to anything," Discovery pilot John Blaha said Tuesday at a post-flight press conference.

"It's certainly a great mystery as to why this happened," Blaha said. "I'm sure a lot of people will be thinking about that, as well as where is the break point."

Dr. James Bagian, another astronaut on the flight, said the experiment raised questions as to whether plant or animal life can begin in zero gravity.

Bagian said the chicken experiment and another in which he observed plant growth were designed to determine if cell division is somehow "impeded or mutated" by a lack of gravity.

"Is there a certain point in the differentiation of cell types where they are vulnerable to the effects of the loss of gravity? Maybe gravity plays up to now an unknown role but a very essential role in that the older ones (eggs), at nine days, are past that crucial gate, if you will, and they are developing normally," Bagian said.

"If it turns out to be a big limiter area, that there is some gate where where you can't start a new cell line, that has great implications for long duration space stays," Bagian said.

"Life cannot begin anew in orbit if that proves out to be true," he added. "You may have to supply a gravity environment for a period of time."

During the flight, the five astronauts also took 3,000 photographs and shot nearly three miles of 70mm IMAX film in an effort to document environmentally damaged areas of the Earth.

On Tuesday, the crew showed several spectacular views they captured, including shots of a sunset, Sri Lanka, the Caribbean Sea and the Himalayas. But they also talked about how deforestation, air and water pollution and the effects of droughts can be observed from space.

"I think all of us that have flown (into space) come back with a very protective feeling about our planet," said Discovery commander Michael Coats.

Odessa among MBanks seized

DALLAS (AP) — Less than two days after Dallas-based MCorp announced it would seek Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. transferred the deposits of 20 insolvent MBanks to a newly chartered institution wholly owned by the FDIC.

The failed banks, subsidiaries of MCorp, were to reopen today as units of The Deposit Insurance Bridge Bank, National Association, of Dallas.

The move late Tuesday night came after the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency declared the banks insolvent, said Lee Cross, director of communications for that agency.

"From the depositors' standpoint, they won't notice any difference, except for a change in name," Ms. Cross said.

The comptroller determined the 20 institutions were insolvent and turned them over to the FDIC's bridge bank.

The 20 banks seized are MBank Abilene, MBank Alamo, MBank Austin, MBank Brenham, MBank Corsicana, MBank Dallas, MBank Denton, MBank Fort Worth, MBank Greenville, MBank Houston, MBank Jefferson, MBank Longview, MBank Marshall, MBank Midcities, MBank Odessa, MBank Orange, MBank Round Rock, MBank Sherman, MBank Wichita Falls, and MBank The Woodlands.

The five remaining banks in the MCorp system are not involved in the transaction and continue to be owned by MCorp, federal officials said.

MCorp spokesman George A. McCane did not answer telephone calls to his office early today and did not return a telephone call placed to his home by The Associated Press.

"All banking services to customers of these banks that failed will continue uninterrupted," Ms. Cross said. "The only difference is ... the management selected by FDIC will be operating these banks."

The FDIC will seek offers for the acquisition of the bridge bank, federal regulators said.

Among the possible suitors is NCNB Texas National Bank, which is eyeing parts of MCorp, said Timothy Hartman, NCNB Texas vice chairman.

NCNB Texas, 20 percent owned and managed by NCNB Corp. of Charlotte, N.C., is not formulating a plan to acquire MCorp, Hartman said. But he added that NCNB Texas would be interested in bidding on subsidiary banks if the FDIC sold off parts of the firm.

The FDIC and the Comptroller of the Currenty scheduled a news conference today in Washington.

Ms. Cross said a decision on when the MBank deposits will be transferred from the interim bank to another bank or banks "depends on what type of bids are submitted."

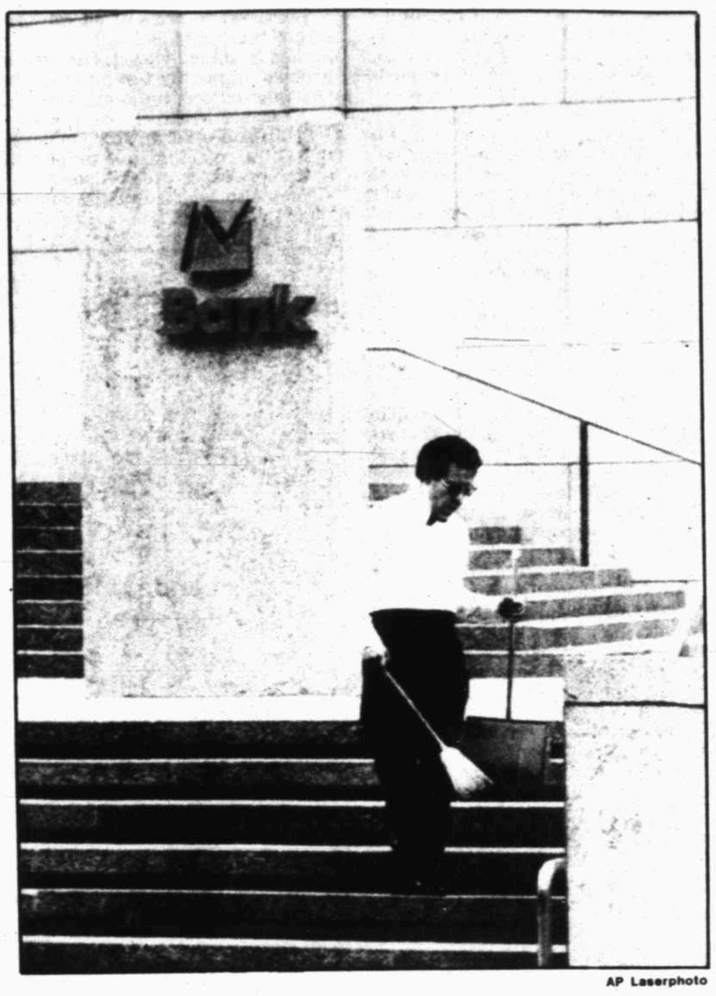

MCorp announced Monday it would seek bankruptcy protection from creditors following efforts by three minor MCorp bondholders to have the holding company's assets liquidated.

Financial analysts said the move could have been an obstacle to federal regulators' efforts to rescue MCorp's subsidiary banks.

Texas' second-largest bank holding company, MCorp had 20 days to file for reorganization after it was served with the creditors' petitions. The Chapter 11 filing supersedes the creditors' Chapter 7 petitions for involuntary liquidation.

FDIC records indicate MCorp's 25 banks lost $903 million in 1988, $213 million in the fourth quarter.

The Chapter 7 petitioners were S.N. Phelps & Co., a Greenwich, Conn., bond broker who claims to hold $2 million principal amount in MCorp debentures; and Janice M. Eberhardt and Carol R. James, each of whom claims to hold $5,000 in debentures, according to a copy of the filing provided by S.N. Phelps.

OPEC may seek $20 price ceiling

By YOUSSEF M. IBRAHIM
New York Times News Service

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Demand for oil produced by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has pushed prices up by 50 percent since November.

Now Saudi Arabia and a majority of other OPEC members are determined to hold the prices below a ceiling of $20 a barrel.

The Saudi camp is believed to fear a repetition of the mid-1980's, when a vast increase in supplies of oil from outside OPEC was followed by a collapse of oil prices.

Avoiding such a collapse is a goal of all the group's members. But what steps to take is a matter of debate.

Kuwait, traditionally a Saudi ally, along with the United Arab Emirates, Ecuador and Gabon have gone beyond the Saudi position, pressing for higher production, which would push prices lower.

The Kuwaitis believe that holding oil prices at moderate levels encourages consumption.

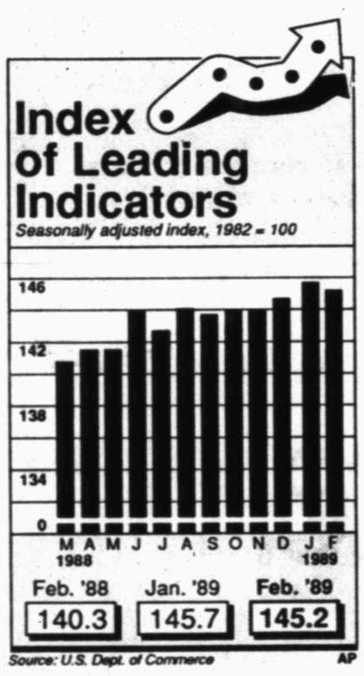

Even though members of the Saudi camp want to hold prices in the present range, they are reluctant to authorize higher production.

The Saudis believe the current higher prices may reflect only a short-term increase in demand that cannot be sustained.

The clashing views will be discussed on Wednesday when eight OPEC members meet in Vienna to review the condition of world oil markets.

The Saudis appear to be happy for the time being with the oil prices that are hovering close to $20 a barrel, they indicate.

Indicators record drop in February

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's chief economic forecasting gauge dropped 0.3 percent in February after posting sharp gains during the previous two months, the Commerce Department said today.

February's decline in the department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators was the first drop since a similar dip last September and the largest since a 0.8 percent drop last July.

It was in line with widespread expectations that the economy will slow this year.

The leading index, designed to foretell economic activity six to nine months into the future, had advanced 0.6 percent in December and 0.7 percent in January after vacillating during much of 1988.

Brady: Feds won't dump real estate

DALLAS (AP) — Federal officials have no intentions of holding a fire sale of real estate acquired through the closing of insolvent thrifts, Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady assured Texans, who have been worried the government would dump billions of dollars worth of property on the market.

Brady, making his first trip to Texas since the Bush administration unveiled its plan to rescue the nation's troubled thrifts, also warned Tuesday that delay in adopting the proposals is costing taxpayers $20 million daily.

The trip to Texas, where most of the failed thrifts are located, comes one week before congressional committees are scheduled to begin work on the legislation, which could reach Bush's desk by the first of May.

Key elements of the plan call for the government to close some 350 insolvent, but still open thrifts and meet commitments for 205 institutions rescued last year.

Brady used a speech to the Greater Dallas Chamber of Commerce to allay fears of real estate dumping.

"We understand the potential destructive effects on the local economies of wholesale dumping," Brady said. "Let me assure you that we intend to proceed very carefully with real estate sales.

AP Laserphoto

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, right, speaks to the Greater Dallas Chamber of Commerce as U.S. Rep. Steve Bartlett listens.

"Decisions will be evaluated and made with the best interest of everyone involved, particularly local communities, taken into consideration," he said.

Brady said the government would be robbing itself by cut-rate sales, which would reduce the money that the sales could generate to help finance the rescue plan.

The Federal Asset Disposition Association, formed to handle repossessed real estate, currently manages about property in 33 states with an approximate value of about $3.8 billion. Most of that, worth an estimated $2.59 billion, is in Texas.

Oil prices head higher

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices continued their yo-yo imitation, posting an increase after Tuesday's sell-off, which followed a sharp increase Monday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate gained 19 cents to stand at $20.10 at midmorning.

In active trading Tuesday, WTI dropped 62 cents to close at $19.91 a barrel.

The near-month contract had risen 38 cents a barrel Monday to close at $20.53, the highest level since Aug. 14, 1987, when it settled at $20.57.

Analysts blamed the decline — which included a drop of more than 2 cents a gallon for home heating oil — largely on profit-taking and concerns about whether OPEC ministers will ease production restraints during their meeting in Vienna this week.

Dollar steady amid cautious trading

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was steady in European trading early today ahead of the release of U.S. leading economic indicators for February. Gold prices were lower.

The market was apparently cautious about the possibility of central bank intervention after the banks' aggressive actions Tuesday, dealers said.

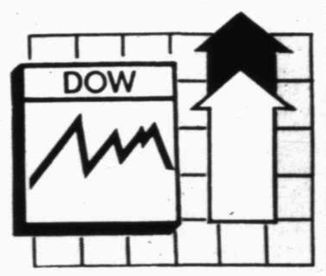

In London, the dollar rose against the pound. One British pound cost $1.6905 dollars today, cheaper for buyers than Tuesday's $1.7030.

Earlier in Tokyo the dollar closed at 133.25 Japanese yen, up 0.35 yen. In London, the dollar traded lower at 133.10.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $383.35, down from late Tuesday's $387.50. At midmorning, the city's bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $383.30.

Silver bullion traded in London at a bid $5.83 a troy ounce, down from $5.91 late Tuesday.

Energetic dollar boosts stock prices

NEW YORK (AP) — An energetic dollar and renewed airline takeover talk sent stock prices higher for a second session Tuesday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 17.68 to 2,275.54, bringing it to its highest point since after the St. Patrick's Day plunge of March 17, when the average plunged 48.57 to 2,292.14.

Advancing issues outnumbered declining ones by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 838 up, 584 down and 530 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 146.42 million shares, up from 112.96 million on Monday, which was the slowest day of the year.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 173.64 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Dunlap buys Arkansas-based retailer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A Texas retailer, Dunlap Co. of Fort Worth, announced Tuesday it is purchasing the nine department stores operated in three states by Little Rock-based M.M. Cohn Co.

The sale takes effect April 3, principals said. The M.M. Cohn stores — four in Memphis, Tenn., one in Oklahoma City, two in Little Rock, Ark., one in North Little Rock, Ark., and one in El Dorado, Ark. — will retain their name and employees, according to Dunlap chairman Reginald Martin.

Dunlap operates 34 stores under 11 names in 27 cities in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Louisiana and Missouri, including the Stripling & Cox stores in Texas.

Enron announces significant gas find

HOUSTON (AP) — Enron Oil & Gas Co. said Tuesday a second natural gas discovery in the Gulf of Mexico off the Texas coast should equal about one-third of the company's current daily production of 300 million cubic feet.

The latest Enron discovery is about 20 miles south of Port O'Connor below 7,000 feet in 100 feet of water in what's known as Matagorda Island Block 638.

Combined with an earlier discovery nearby, Enron said the finds could account for 100 million cubic feet of natural gas daily by 1990.

Enron said a platform has been ordered for the site and production is expected to begin later this year.

Government set to indict Milken

NEW YORK (AP) — The government has told lawyers for Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.'s Michael Milken and others that their clients could be indicted this week, before securities fraud charges against the investment firm are settled, sources said.

Defense attorneys had expected the indictment to follow a settlement between Drexel and the Securities and Exchange Commission of civil fraud charges, including insider trading, brought last year. The complaint names Drexel; Milken; his brother, Lowell; two other Drexel employees; industrialist Victor Posner and his son, Steven.

But with negotiations stalled, Drexel balking at government-ordered sanctions and the Milkens mounting legal challenges to the firm's proposed settlement, the Manhattan U.S. attorney's office has decided to proceed with the case, two sources said Tuesday.

Yields on treasury notes at four-year high

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on two-year Treasury notes rose in Tuesday's auction to the highest level in four years.

The average yield was 9.87 percent, up from 9.49 percent at the last auction Feb. 22.

It was the highest rate since two-year notes averaged 10.86 percent on March 20, 1985. The notes will carry a coupon interest rate of 9¾ percent with each $10,000 in face value selling for $9,978.70.

Some $9.27 billion in notes were sold out of bids totaling $27.2 billion.

TWA announces $3.6 billion jet order

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines has joined the ranks of air carriers making billion-dollar renovations to their fleets, with its announcement that it will buy up to 40 Airbus Industrie jetliners.

TWA said Tuesday it had placed 20 firm orders for A330-300 wide-body aircraft, with options to purchase 20 more of the twin-engine planes in a deal valued at more than $3.6 billion.

Possible takeover boosts NWA stock

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — NWA Inc.'s stock soared after the company, parent of Northwest Airlines, revealed a possible takeover attempt was brewing from an investment group holding 4.9 percent of NWA stock.

NWA said Tuesday that the investment group, which the company did not identify, recently expressed interest "in the possibility of a negotiated leveraged acquisition."

NWA stock closed at $70.25, up $9.62½, near its 52-week high of $72.87½.

INDEX

With labor markets tight and factories operating close to peak capacity, analysts say some slowdown is needed to keep the economy from overheating and inflation from spiraling.

However, analysts are divided over whether the Federal Reserve Board can successfully engineer a controlled slowdown that restrains economic growth just enough to ease inflation without causing a recession.

The Fed for a year has been pushing up interest rates in order to relieve inflationary pressures, and it intensified those efforts after sharp price increases were recorded in January and February.

In another report today showing the impact of higher interest rates, the government reported that sales of new, single-family homes plunged 9.4 percent in February to the lowest level in more than a year.

The Commerce Department said sales retreated to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 626,000 in February, following a 2.5 percent increase in January and a 3.7 percent gain in December.

Irwin Kellner, chief economist for Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. in New York, said in advance of today's report that the jagged behavior of the leading index suggests "the economy has been slowing down from its overheated pace and that the economy is continuing to slow down as we work our way into the second quarter of 1989."

Kellner said that despite the Federal Reserve's efforts to prolong the life of the economic expansion even as it restrains growth, "the odds are growing each day" that the central bank will push the nation into a recession.

In February, eight of the 11 indicators that make up the leading index declined, with the biggest negative factor being a drop in manufacturer orders for new plants and equipment.

The other negative factors were a drop in building permits, a decline in manufacturers' orders for consumer goods, a contraction in the money supply, a dip in an index of consumer expectations, an increase in initial claims for unemployment benefits, faster vendor deliveries to companies signaling slower demand and a decline in manufacturers' unfilled orders.

Two indicators made positive contributions: an increase in prices for raw materials indicating stronger demand, and rising stock prices.

One indicator was unchanged last month: the length of the average work week.

BRADY

"Obviously there's some real estate that's junk...that has no value now, that never did have, never will have. You might as well get that behind you," Brady said Tuesday. "There's other real estate that's well-conceived which has tenants in buildings and people living in condos...and those kinds of properties shouldn't be thrown on the market willy-nilly and won't be."

The administration is resisting efforts by Sen. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., and other legislators to write dumping obstacles into the S&L rescue bill being considered by Congress.

The Treasury Department is working on an alternative operating plan for the so-called Resolution Trust Corp., the government entity in the Bush proposal that would liquidate failed S&Ls, according to an administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The RTC would be free to consider a number of proposals for preventing dumping, including the creation of regional trusts to buy and manage problem properties or the "securitization" of pools of real estate for sale to public investors, the official said.

The Bush plan, which would bring thrift regulation under the Treasury Department, would spend $40 billion to finance the insolvent institutions that already have been taken care of and would borrow another $50 billion to be spent during the next three years, Brady said.

The Treasury secretary disagreed with past suggestions for a one-time lump sum appropriation of taxpayers' money to pay for the massive thrift rescues. he said such an expense would make it impossible to meet budget deficit reduction targets, which in turn would boost government borrowing costs.

"We cannot afford delay. If the debate over alternate financial plans takes even three weeks, the cost to the taxpayer goes up by $500 million," Brady said.

OPEC

Oil prices slid below $20 Tuesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange. "There is nothing wrong with that, at least until we find out how real this is," a Saudi official said, referring to the rise in demand.

This puts the Saudis at odds with the overall judgment of market conditions advocated by their traditional ally, Kuwait, which has called on OPEC to produce another 1.5 million barrels a day. Kuwait has never made a secret of its desire to keep oil prices substantially below the $20-a-barrel level.

The average price of oil has passed the $18-a-barrel target that OPEC set in November when its members agreed to abide by production quotas and to reduce the group's output by three million barrels a day. Just a few months ago, the organization's oil was bringing as little as $12 a barrel.

Saudi and other Arab oil officials said they expected the OPEC meeting to produce no new decisions on either prices or production.

They also asserted that the meeting would stay clear of any serious clashes since no member has any interest in upsetting the remarkable rise in oil prices.

Saudi officials said they would advocate caution, arguing that the 50 percent increase in prices since November is an exaggerated jump not justified by such market fundamentals as a sustained demand for more OPEC oil.

The Saudi officials, who asked not to be identified, also maintain that the increase in demand for OPEC oil has been helped along by accidental breakdowns in production from areas like the North Sea and Alaska.

"We should not rush into anything now until we make sure we have the fundamentals to move on to the next step," said one Saudi oil official.

In an interview published earlier this week in the Middle East Economic Survey, Kuwait's oil minister, Sheik Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, said there was enough new demand for OPEC oil to justify a rise in output starting in June.

He added that the increase in production might be necessary to keep oil prices at moderate levels that encourage further consumption.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Legislation eliminated bearer bonds in 1982

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Before my recent purchase of four tax-exempt municipal bonds, I specifically asked my broker if the bonds were available in bearer form with interest coupons attached. He said, "Yes." So I gave him the order.

When the bonds arrived, they were stripped of coupons and fully registered in my name. Have the rules been changed?

Doyle

A. Yes, indeed, by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act back in 1982. Among other things, that piece of federal legislation did away with new issues of bearer bonds. A bearer bond does not have the owner's name on the bond certificate or the record books of the issuer. The owner must cut off semiannual coupons in order to collect interest. And owners often do not learn their bonds have been called for early redemption until their coupons are returned unpaid.

No new issues of U.S. Treasury or corporate bonds have been available in bearer form since the year that law was enacted. Municipal bonds stopped being issued in bearer form, effective July 1, 1983. Newly issued bonds now come in registered form or book-entry form.

The owner's name is on a registered bond and on the record books of the issuer. Interest checks are mailed to the registered owner and the owner usually receives individual notification of a call for early redemption. I had to write "usually," because there was at least one case in which that did not happen.

With a book-entry Treasury bond, interest is sent electronically to the owner's bank account — if the owner has a "Treasury Direct" account. Otherwise, interest goes to the brokerage firm or bank through which the bond was purchased. Then, the brokerage or bank credits that money to the bond owner's account.

In the case of a municipal bond in book-entry form, interest always goes to the brokerage or bank where the bond was bought.

You still can buy bearer bonds issued before the new rules went into effect. There are lots of them around. However, after all those old bearer bonds reach maturity or are called for early redemption, only registered and book-entry bonds will be available.

Your broker gave you incomplete and/or inaccurate information when he told you the bonds you bought could be purchased in bearer form.

Q. An elderly relative owned a $30,000 bond issued by a financial service company. The bond matured about two weeks ago. My relative sent it in by registered mail, return receipt requested, before the maturity date. The return card shows it was received four days before the maturity date.

Because the bond's redemption value has not reached my relative, we telephoned and were told checks for redeemed certificates are sent only every other Friday and my relative's check will be mailed this coming Friday.

Assuming this is true and "the cricks don't rise," the check will be 17 days late. When asked if they pay interest on the extra time, they answered, "Of course not."

Is this ethical and common practice among financial institutions?

A. It's unethical. That's for sure. The proceeds of a matured bond or other debt security are supposed to be available on the maturity date.

If the bond had been hand delivered, your relative or whoever acted for him or her should have been able to pick up the check on the maturity date.

Since the redemption checks were going by mail, they should have gone out on the maturity date or the next business day. The story about checks being mailed every second Friday doesn't hold water.

Unfortunately, some outfits hang on to money as long as they can get away with it. But that can't be called "common" practice among reputable financial institutions. Your relative had a bond issued by a "schlock" outfit.

Students lay money at feet of evangelist

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Hundreds of students laid money at the feet of evangelist Oral Roberts Tuesday after he said he must raise $11 million by May 6 or creditors will start dismantling his university and ministry.

Roberts

The 71-year-old evangelist said scandals in other ministries have caused contributions to his ministry to decline from $5 million a month to $2.7 million during the past two years.

Speaking to a sometimes hushed and often raucous gathering of 4,300 Oral Roberts University students at a campus chapel service, Roberts described himself as a "tough old bird" intent on keeping the university going "until Jesus comes."

Roberts' son, Richard, executive vice president of the school, told students it was the greatest financial crisis in his father's 41-year ministry.

After the elder Roberts made an impassioned speech to students, Richard Roberts laid a $100 bill on the stage at the feet of his father and mother, Evelyn. Mrs. Roberts suggested students might want to contribute, too, and hundreds filed down to the stage to leave checks, change and bills in a pile.

The collection raised $8,500, Richard Roberts said.

University officials declared Wednesday a day of prayer and fasting on campus.

Roberts first made his plea during a taping session Monday for his weekly "Expect A Miracle" television program, scheduled to air in part on Sunday on 147 statons.

"If we can't make our payroll, I don't know what will happen to this man or this ministry," Roberts said during the taping. "People, this is serious. This is a life-and-death matter."

He lambasted the news media for the way they cover his ministry, but school officials contacted reporters about his comments and made the unedited tape available for viewing.

The evangelist's plea comes two years after he raised a furor by saying his life depended on raising $8 million to provide scholarships for his university's medical students.

Roberts announced on April 1, 1987, that the money had been raised.

"Two years have passed, and I have been silent," he said.

During that time, he said, contributions to his ministry have declined by nearly half. He said the ministry needs 10,000 to 15,000 additional "partners" to boost monthly income to $3.3 million.

With that amount coming in, "we can pay all bills and keep them paid," Roberts said.

He said he was "laughed at, mocked, scoffed" two years ago, but said he was only repeating what God had told him about redirecting efforts in medical school missions work at the university.

Roberts said he has fallen behind in paying for time on the television stations that air his program, as well as for food services at the university, supplies and other bills owed to hundreds of vendors.

"Now our vendors and suppliers have to have their money," he said. "If we cannot pay the $11 million by the first week in May...they will have to go to the extent of the law to collect their money."

"If we don't pay it, then they start coming in, start dismantling," he said.

Richard Roberts said the university has no plans to sell its commercial property, including a hotel and three office buildings in Tulsa.

Bishop calls for Pepsi boycott

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A Roman Catholic bishop wants people to stop buying Pepsi and other Pepsico Inc. products because of a music video in which the pop star Madonna sings and dances by a church altar and amorously caresses an apparent saint's statue.

Pepsi-Cola has signed the singer to a $5 million contract to be a spokeswoman for the soft drink through commercials and on her upcoming tour.

Bishop Rene Gracida of the Corpus Christi Diocese said after seeing Madonna's video for the song "Like a Prayer" on MTV and after reading a newspaper interview of the pop star, he was "outraged."

"Madonna's using Catholic symbolism in what I consider a sacrilegious way. She, like others, is seeking to justify abandoning her former religion by attacking it and making fun of it."

— Rene Gracida, bishop

The song also was featured in a Pepsi commercial."She's using Catholic symbolism in what I consider a sacrilegious way," Gracida told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "She, like others, is seeking to justify abandoning her former religion by attacking it and making fun of it."

Pepsi spokesman Jeff Brown said the commercial featuring "Like a Prayer" was shown once on March 2, and will not be shown again. Brown said the commercial does not include the imagery that offended Gracida.

The full-length video accompanying the song, shown frequently on MTV, inciudes Madonna afflicted with stigmata (wounds Jesus suffered during crucifixion), singing and dancing before an altar, and caressing and kissing what appears to be the statue of a saint.

"He should stop watching MTV," said Madonna press agent Liz Rosenberg, a vice president with Warner Bros. Records.

In the March 24 issue of South Texas Catholic, which is distributed to more than 40,000 people in 17 counties, Gracida in a signed letter asks Catholics to "refrain from purchasing any of the following Pepsico products during the remainder of this year of 1989: Frito Lay products, Pepsi-Cola beverages, Slice soft drinks, Ruffles chips, Pizza Hut restaurants, Taco Bell restaurants and Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants."

Ms. Rosenberg said the record company does not censor its artists, and that Gracida's complaints were the first she had heard in the United States, although there had been some criticism from Catholics in Italy.

The Mississippi-based, non-Catholic American Family Association also has criticized the video.

Gracida and the Rev. Don Wildmon, executive director of the Mississippi organization, said the fact the commercial will not be shown again does not stop their outrage.

"I think it's wrong to use Madonna in their campaign to reach young people, given her history, attitude and predilection for mocking her former religion," Gracida said.

Wildmon said his organization sent letters to "about 3,000 Christian leaders of all denominations" describing the video and urging them to boycott Pepsi products for the rest of 1989 or until the company cancels the singer's contract.

Unemployment aid for refusing to work on Sabbath upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today barred states from denying unemployment benefits to people who refuse to work on their Sabbath even if the refusal is not based on a religious sect's doctrine.

The justices, in a unanimous 9-0 decision, said Illinois officials violated a Peoria man's religious freedom by denying him unemployment benefits.

The high court previously had barred states from denying unemployment benefits to people who refuse certain work because of religious scruples. But in all previous cases, the workers' refusal was based on the teachings of an established religious group such as the Seventh-day Adventists or the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Justice Byron R. White wrote for the court, "Never did we suggest that unless a claimant belongs to a sect that forbids what his job requires, his belief, however sincere, must be deemed a purely personal preference rather than a religious belief."

Austin neighborhood outraged at church

AUSTIN (AP) — While the preacher preached and children fidgeted on a recent Sunday, homeowners disguised in church-going attire tucked fliers on the windshields of cars belonging to Hyde Park Baptist Church worshipers.

"How Would You Feel?" the messages asked, to find "your 'neighborhood church' had taken out demolition permits on most of the houses on your block?"

Not far behind, church messengers followed, picking up the fliers.

The melodrama in historic Hyde Park has continued for more than a decade. As the church has expanded and chomped into the neighborhood's core, homeowners have grown increasingly antagonistic toward the Baptists.

On one side is the city's largest Christian congregation — 10,000 members, a church with the resources to do God's work on a grand scale.

On the other side are the homeowners. They love their old houses and love life in the central city, but they don't have much love left in their hearts for "that church," as they call it.

It's God's House against all the others.

The Hyde Park neighborhood was born before the turn of the century. Then, the neighborhood and church were growing up together, as allies.

By the 1960s, however, Hyde Park was on a skid. Homes were deteriorating, and the growing University of Texas to the south brought in renters. Character was replaced by characters — such as hippies. Families moved to the suburbs, but returned on Sundays for church.

In the 1970s, there was a renewed interest in Hyde Park's unique homes. People began moving back to the central city, renovating and showing off the properties with annual spring home tours. Hyde Park Baptist Church, under the leadership of the Rev. Ralph Smith, began to prosper.

The bickering began.

At their simplest, squabbles have been about parking. Every Sunday is Easter Sunday in Hyde Park, with a parade of churchgoers parking bumper-to-bumper for blocks.

"It's like an automotive equivalent of a blood clot," homeowner Grant Thomas told the Austin American-Statesman.

Smith said, "Frankly, we feel like a lot of it is anti-church sentiment. I have prayed so often. It's gotten to the point of not knowing what to do."

An entire block is taken up with the church's educational buildings, administrative offices and two sanctuaries. Another block is reserved for parking, including a multi-level garage. Nearby are two playgrounds and senior citizens center.

Church programs include those for international students; food for the needy; family counseling; and daily hospital visits. It has a school for kindergarten through 12th grade.

"Because God has blessed this work, the church has grown," church business coordinator, Dan Gardner, told the newspaper. "We do not apologize for this growth."

But the neighbors want the church to stop its sprawl. Through the years, they say, it has cleared 28 pieces of property from Hyde Park's core. It owns at least 14 more taxable parcels, valued at $1.1 million by the county.

Earlier this month, the church demolished two houses. Two others are being removed, and the church has obtained demolition permits for six houses.

A request for a seventh demolition permit triggered a hearing because the house is a candidate for potential "historic status."

To the homeowners, it is no consolation the church has every legal right to acquire properties their neighbors will sell. They have asked the City Council for a moratorium on house removals and demolition permits, requests council members said they had no legal authority to approve.

Some council members express dismay at the dispute.

"I can't understand why a church that professes brotherly love and 'Love thy neighbor' is destroying the neighborhood," said Sally Shipman. She said her best idea is for the city to create a "special district," a zoning overlay used successfully in such cities as San Francisco and New York to protect neighborhoods.

Robert Liverman, who heads the church's long-range planning committee, said Hyde Park Baptist Church is amenable to consolidating its development in the neighborhood's more commercialized sector.

But he said the church owns only a fraction of the property necessary for that. Current asking prices are said to be excessive.

The battle shows little promise of a peaceful resolution. Yet with the history of feuding and discord, there may be one thing upon which both sides can agree.

"After they all have moved away," Smith said, "the church will still be here."

Moderate Baptists vote to create new independent seminary

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — In a defiant move against the theological conservatives who run the Southern Baptist Convention, a coalition of moderate Baptists has voted to create its own independent seminary.

Members of the moderate Southern Baptist Alliance voted 462-42 recently to create a seminary in Richmond, Va., that would reach out to all nine Baptist denominations as well as people of different ethnic backgrounds.

The new seminary would be located on or near the campus of the predominantly black Virginia Union University, which has a Baptist School of Theology. Leaders of the Southern Baptist Alliance said they hope to open the new seminary as soon as they can raise the necessary $500,000 and finalize plans.

"It's a very risky, bold step and a lot of things have to be worked out before it's truly a reality," said the Rev. M. Mahan Siler of Pullen Memorial Baptist Church in Raleigh, N.C. Pullen is one of 23 North Carolina churches that belong to the Alliance.

The Alliance also supports proposals for a divinity school at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., and a program of Baptist studies at Duke University in Durham, N.C.

The Rev. Tom Graves of Charlotte, N.C., said there are enough Southern Baptists seeking a moderate theological education to fill all of the programs.

Churches oppose detaining refugees

NEW YORK (AP) — Churches are mounting broad opposition to a new policy by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service of detaining Central American refugees at the Texas border until asylum applications are processed.

They previously were allowed to join relatives or friends elsewhere while awaiting the results. Now they're kept in tents, and most sent back.

The Rev. Arie Brouwer, general secretary of the National Council of Churches, asked that the new "restrictive measures" against "asylum seekers and war refugees be halted."

In a letter to a House subcommittee on immigration, he said "No persons fleeing such conditions should be returned, nor should they be detained."

Individual Protestant denominations and the U.S. Catholic Conference also have protested the new policy. United Methodists established a 24-hour telephone hotline, (800) 841-1235, to provide information on the situation.

PARADE OF HOMES

An antique, hand-carved walnut armoire with mirrored doors and an antique dress supported by an antique dress form are the focal points of the master bedroom.

The formal dining area, to the right of the entry way, features a built-in hutch.

Old South moves west

The home of Dianne and Lonnie Jordan, No. 9 Suffolk, features a Southern Colonial architecture reminiscent of the Old South.

The 20th Annual Parade of Homes will be presented by the Midland Junior Woman's Club 1:30-5:30 p.m. April 16 when the homes of four Midland families will be open for the public to see. Proceeds from the event will benefit the Developmental Disabilities Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Problem Pregnancy Center and Special Care Infants. Tickets are $7.50 and can be obtained from any Junior Woman's Club member. For tickets or more information call 684-6152, 699-1219 or 682-2037.

It seems unusual to see an antebellum-style home in the Midland area, but the recently built house of Dianne and Lonnie Jordan features white columns and Colonial architecture typical of the pre-Civil War South. The four bedroom, four bath house at #9 Suffolk, reflects the tastes of Mrs. Jordan, a native Alabamian.

"My favorite place to be in springtime is in Alabama," said Mrs. Jordan, who was born and raised in the southern part of the state.

Even though the Tall City is nearly devoid of blooming magnolia trees and the streets are not lined with graceful weeping willows, the decor of the Jordan house reflects the pale shades of green, pink and lavender of springtime in the South.

Custom-made wood plantation shutters and dental crown moldings are used throughout the house. The arched framed front door is surrounded by windows adorned with white trim and set with beveled glass. The foyer features an antique entry hall piece that was made in the 1850s and is in its original condition.

The floors on the lower level of the house — with the exception of the master bedroom — are covered with simulated brick and decorated with accent rugs.

To the right of the entryway is the formal dining room. Further right is the living area, decorated in white and shades of pink and sea-foam green. The living room walls are painted desert pink accented with white trim and shutters. The focal point of the living area is the white antique fireplace, adorned by a white mantelpiece marbleized with flecks of peach and pink.

Next to the living area is the kitchen. Balloon curtains in a red, green and blue floral print grace the kitchen windows. Because of the many windows in this area, it is filled with sunlight during the day. The kitchen cabinets and island, with glass pull-down storage bins, are white, trimmed in pink. According to Mrs. Jordan, who enjoys gourmet cooking, all the modern amenities are included in her kitchen for her style of cooking.

An area just beyond — but open to — the kitchen is a breakfast area used for informal dining. From this area, double doors open to an enclosed patio decorated in white sand and terra cotta. Ceiling fans — a practical touch for hot West Texas summers — add a Southern touch to the patio.

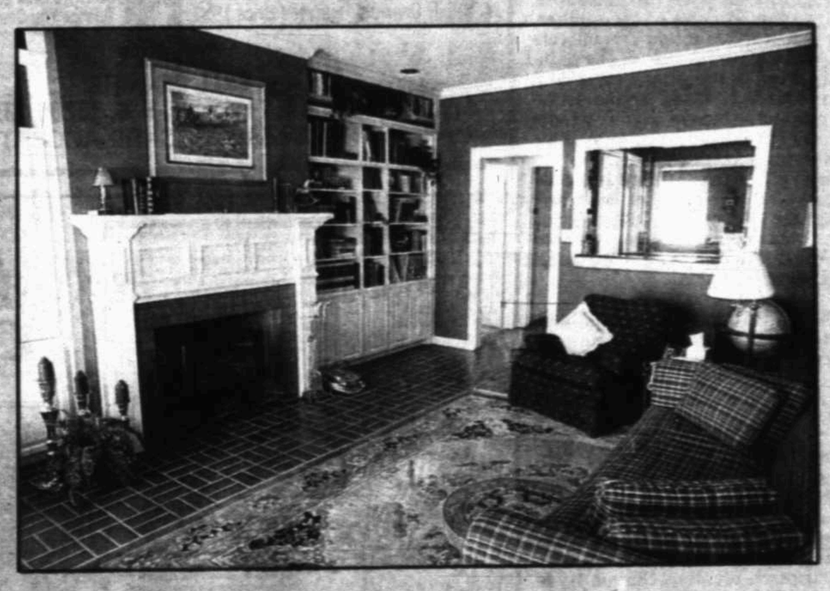

Also on the first floor is an English-style library, complete with built-in bookshelves and a fireplace. The walls are painted hunter green and white. These colors also are accented in the upholstery. When the hall doors to the library are closed, the room serves as a sitting area to the master suite. An entertainment center is tucked away in cabinets, and a mirrored wet bar (complete with dishwasher) is adjacent to the room. The bar's most unique feature is the jade-colored sink in the shape of the state of Texas.

Next to the library is the master bedroom. One of the focal points of the bedroom is an antique hand-carved walnut armoire from the 1800s and an antique dress form.

Vegetables add flavor, texture, nutrition to diet

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

MIDLAND, Mich. — For too many Americans "eat your vegetables" is a grim reminder of childhood days, when vegetables were often overcooked, pallid and unappetizing.

Yet, as we all must know by now, vegetables are low in calories and add fiber, vitamins and minerals to the diet. They are a health food when cooked properly, and can also be delicious. Variety in preparation will increase enthusiasm for vegetables as you await the arrival of garden-fresh produce.

Frozen vegetables are convenient and attractive. Canned vegetables are economical. In March, pick carrots, cabbage and potatoes from produce counters because they are economical since they store well for long periods of time. Watch for freshly-dug carrots.

A head of cabbage weighing 1½ pounds will serve 4. One cup of cooked vegetables provides 30 calories and supplies two-thirds of the day's requirement for vitamin C. Count 20 calories for 1 cup of finely shredded raw cabbage. Try seasoning cabbage with allspice, dillweed, marjoram, tarragon, caraway or celery seed.

Fresh or processed, the potato is the budget vegetable that satisfies big appetites. Serve them often in soups, salads or with meat.

TWICE BAKED POTATOES, COTTAGE STYLE

4 medium potatoes
1 cup low-fat cottage cheese
½ cup skim milk
1 tablespoon minced onion
½ teaspoon salt
Dash pepper
Paprika
Dried parsley flakes

Pierce each potato and bake at 400 degrees for 45 minutes or until tender. Cut hot potatoes in half lengthwise. Scoop out flesh leaving skins intact for re-stuffing. Add cottage cheese and milk and mash potatoes till smooth. Add onion, salt and pepper. Mix well. Pile mixture back into skins. Sprinkle with paprika and parsley. Bake 10 minutes more or until golden. About 75 calories each.

FRITTATA WITH BROCCOLI AND POTATOES

4 potatoes, peeled and diced
2 tablespoons oil
1 package (10-ounce) frozen chopped broccoli
6 green onions, sliced
4 eggs, beaten
¼ cup Parmesean Cheese
2 teaspoons parsley flakes
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

In large skillet cook the potatoes in oil over medium heat, stirring once or twice, for about 10 minutes, or until tender and lightly browned. Add broccoli and green onions. Cover and cook 5 minutes.

In bowl, combine eggs, cheese, parsley, salt and pepper. Pour into skillet and cook fritta about 5 minutes, pushing mixture occasionally with spatula to allow any uncooked egg to make contact with skillet.

HOME

"The armoire, which is put together with wooden pegs, breaks down into sections for travel," Mrs. Jordan said.

Another eye-catching item in the bedroom is an antique dress form covered with an antique dress. "The dress form, a gift from my husband, is actually older than the dress," Mrs. Jordan said. Other elegant touches in the master suite include a white chandelier hanging from the high ceiling over the bed and a chaise lounge covered in a pale lavender floral fabric.

The Jordan's spacious master bathroom is decorated in white, accented with deep green and hints of gold. Some walls are painted green and are topped with a floral border in shades of yellow, red and green. The bathroom features his-and-her sinks and a shower with two entrances. Skylights and a mirror-covered wall over the large bath and spa add to the spacious look of the bathroom.

Upstairs are the children's bedrooms.

The boy's room, for their son, Colby, features bunk beds formed with pipe frames. Red and blue are the dominant colors seen in a wallpaper border of tennis shoes, basketballs and soccer balls. Adjoining Colby's room is a bathroom decorated in white with hints of primary colors and a walk-in closet.

The girl's room, which belongs to the Jordan's daughter, Tara, has lavender walls and features white built-in bookshelves, drawers and a desk. Accent colors are green, peach and pink. Tara also has her own bathroom and walk-in closet.

A door leading to an attic where the children's toys are stored. "The attic is going to be decorated as a toy room," Mrs. Jordan said, "It's a great way to keep toys out of sight."

An upstairs closet, designed by Mrs. Jordan, is a gift wrap closet, complete with roll holders for gift wrap and ribbons.

Off of the upstairs guest suite is an outdoor redwood sun deck which offers a view of the Midland skyline.

One of the special features of the house is the window design. "All the windows are true divided windows with custom wooden window shutters throughout," Mrs. Jordan said. "They are wood, double-hung, easy tilt-free, divided light windows."

For security and communication, the home features a security system attached to every opening (windows, doors and skylights), and an intercom system.

The architect for the 4000-plus square foot home was Monte Hunter of Hunter and Associates of Odessa. Jordan was builder and contractor for the home.

Cook views film classics to 'catch a quiche'

Simple dish made sophisticated in famous suspense movie

By CHARLES BRITTON
Copley News Service

You probably remember the scene that made culinary history. It comes early in the 1955 Alfred Hitchcock classic, "To Catch a Thief."

Insurance agent John Williams — not the "Star Wars" composer but the British character actor — has come to Cary Grant's villa high above the Mediterranean. Grant is a retired cat burglar ... or at least he says he has retired. Grant and Williams enter into a deal to catch the real thief.

GRANT IS CHARMING, the day is radiant, and the scenery looks great in VistaVision. And there's lunch:

Grant: "This is Quiche Lorraine. I think you'll like this."

Williams: "Oh, yes, I've heard of it, but I've never had it. (Takes a bite.) Mmmm, it's wonderful!"

That moment marks the introduction of quiche to the great American public. In 1955, probably not one person in 100,000 could tell you exactly what a quiche might be, although you could see from the movie that it was some kind of pie served as a main dish. But everyone learned that it was very sophisticated and, as Williams said, wonderful!

The details were filled in during the first wave of American interest in fine cooking that got started shortly thereafter.

Quiche went through the fame cycle of boom-and-bust. Eventually this essentially simple dish of savory custard in a pie shell turned into a cliche; trendy people became known as the "quiche and Perrier set," and the standing of the recipe never recovered from the title of a popular 1982 book, "Real Men Don't Eat Quiche."

THUS QUICHE traveled the road from, "You've got to try it," to, "Oh, that old thing." Perhaps it is reaching the point where it's ready for the next stage: the rediscovery.

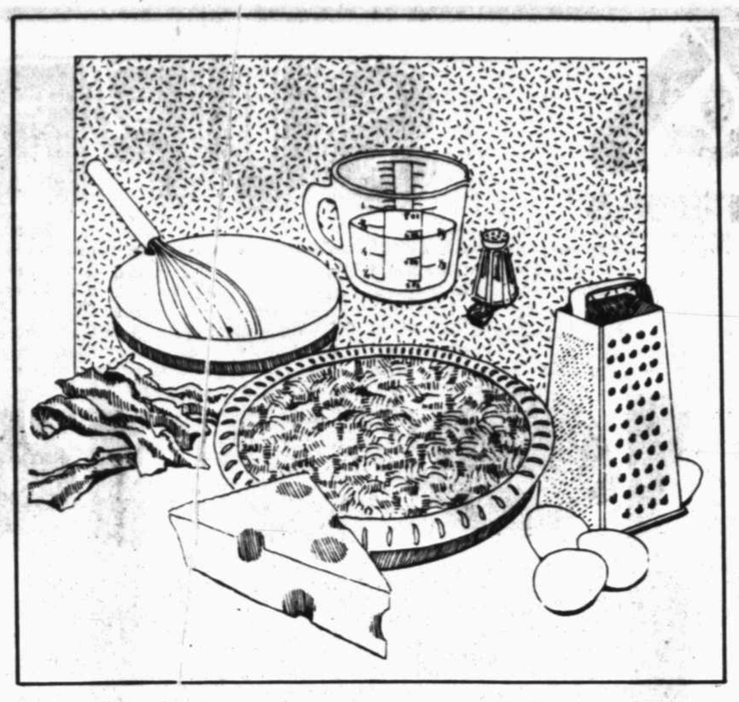

The same virtues that made quiche a hit when it was in remain just as real now that it's out.

It's readily made, savory, satisfying and capable of uncounted variations.

Cut in small wedges, it makes a good party food or appetizer, and in larger portions it provides a satisfying main dish.

It is quite rich and, sadly, full of saturated fat and cholesterol. Keep the rest of the meal light: a green salad and fresh fruit. For a wine, a fruity white would be appropriate — especially a gewurztraminer from California or, better still, Alsace.

TO HELP THE REVIVAL along, we offer Quiche Lorraine as it is most often encountered in the United States. A more authentic recipe follows, and then we have Hitchcock's own favorite version. We end with a necessary preliminary — directions for making piecrust.

CNS Graphic

QUICHE LORRAINE
1 (9-inch) pie shell
4 strips bacon
1 onion, thinly sliced
1 cup Swiss cheese, shredded or chopped
¼ cup Parmesan cheese, grated
4 eggs, lightly beaten
2 cups half-and-half or milk
Pinch nutmeg
Salt, white pepper

Preheat oven to 450 degrees. Bake pie shell empty for about 5 minutes, until set and very lightly brown. Meanwhile, cut bacon into small pieces and saute until crisp to render fat. Reserve. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of fat and saute onion until tender.

Strew bacon and onions in pie shell. Add cheeses. Beat together eggs, half-and-half or milk and seasonings. Pour this mixture over bacon, onions and cheese. Bake quiche 15 minutes, then reduce heat to 350 degrees. Continue baking another 10 minutes or so, until the custard is just set. Serve immediately.

Variations: Quiche can be varied indefinitely. You could leave out the bacon, if you like, and produce a Cheese Quiche. Other cheeses may be substituted. Leftover vegetables, such as spinach or seafood, may be added. Just make sure that additions are drained of liquid.

A true Quiche Lorraine differs in a number of respects from U.S. versions. The pie will not contain cheese, but the custard will be made with cream. And the pie will be baked in a French tarte form, with a removable bottom and fluted sides about an inch high, or a bottomless flan ring, resting on a cookie sheet.

In the United States, people often use a shallow pottery quiche dish. Generally, the French prefer a thin pie with a very rich filling and a higher proportion of crust.

Here is a recipe by Elizabeth David, Britain's foremost authority on French cuisine.

ELIZABETH DAVID'S AUTHENTIC QUICHE LORRAINE
Pastry for 8-inch tarte form
6 slices lean bacon
1 cup cream
3 egg yolks plus 1 whole egg
Salt, pepper

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Line flan ring with fairly thin layer of pastry. Cut bacon into small pieces. Fry them briefly to render some of fat. Drain pieces and strew them into flan shell.

Beat cream with egg yolks, egg and seasonings and pour into flan shell, making sure not to overflow edge. (I have found it best to place the shell on the oven rack and pour the filling in there to minimize the chance of sloshing custard out of the shell.)

Bake for 20 minutes, then lower heat to 350 degrees for another 10 minutes. The quiche is done when it has puffed and browned.

If using tarte form, set quiche on something small enough so that sides will fall free, then slide pie from base onto serving dish. If using a bottomless flan ring, simply lift off the ring and slide quiche from cookie sheet. If using pottery quiche dish, serve from that.

Serve immediately.

Hitchcock enjoyed the reputation of being a fancy feeder, and Quiche Lorraine was one of his favorite dishes. His unorthodox recipe comes from "Great Performances in the Kitchen" by Johna Blinn (Andrews & McMeel, $9.95).

ALFRED HITCHCOCK'S QUICHE LORRAINE
1 (10-inch) pie plate lined with pastry
2 cups milk
About ⅓ cup diced ham
2 onions
2 tablespoons butter
4 eggs
Pinch salt
Dash cayenne pepper
Pinch nutmeg

Yields 4 generous servings.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Heat milk. Scatter ham over pie shell. Saute onions in butter until tender but not brown. Spread them over ham.

In heavy saucepan, beat eggs, salt, cayenne and nutmeg; gradually add hot milk, beating constantly. Place saucepan over gentle heat, stirring constantly. When mixture just begins to thicken, pour over ham and onions in pie shell.

Bake for about 30 minutes or until custard is set and top is golden.

PIECRUST
2 cups all-purpose flour, preferably unbleached
12 tablespoons (1½ sticks) unsalted butter, chilled, cut into 1-tablespoon chunks
3 tablespoons vegetable shortening, chilled
Pinch salt
1 egg yolk with enough chilled water to make two-thirds cup liquid

By hand: Cut butter and shortening into flour and salt until it resembles coarse meal; it's all right if some of butter remains in lumps about the size of peas. A pastry blender is best for this.

Mix egg yolk into water and pour into flour mixture. Blend together only long enough to make cohesive mass. Overworking dough will result in tough crust. If needed, add a few drops of water.

Quickly form dough into a cake a couple of inches thick and wrap in plastic bag. Refrigerate for at least 1 hour. Although you can roll it out right away, rest will improve result.

With a food processor: Using steel knife, blend flour, butter, shortening and salt until coarse blend is achieved. Use short pulses for this. With motor running, add liquid and process only until dough begins to cling together. Do not let it form a ball as some books direct; this will overwork dough. Place it in plastic bag and refrigerate.

This recipe is enough for 2 single-crust pies. Dough will keep in refrigerator, securely wrapped, for 3 to 4 days; frozen, it will keep indefinitely.

Etiquette experts recommend eating asparagus with a fork

By MARIAN BURROS
New York Times News Service

With the arrival of California asparagus in the markets, the perennial question arises: should the long green spears be eaten with a knife and fork or with the fingers?

The 1975 edition of "The New Emily Post's Etiquette" answers thus: "By reputation this is a finger food, but the ungraceful appearance of a bent stalk of asparagus falling limply into someone's mouth and the fact that moisture is also likely to drip from the end, cause most fastidious people to eat it — at least in part — with the fork.

That is, cut the stalks with the fork to where they become harder, and then pick up the ends in the fingers if you choose. But don't squeeze the stalks or let juice run down your fingers."

The contemporary arbiter Miss Manners, in "Miss Manners' Guide to Excruciatingly Correct Behavior," written by Judith Martin, says this, in essence: It's fine to eat asparagus with your fingers.

Another way to eat it is cut up, in a one-dish Sunday dinner of angel-hair pasta, chicken, sesame paste, soy sauce and ginger. If you can't find sesame paste, substitute peanut butter. If fresh coriander isn't available it can be eliminated, but when you do find it, try the dish with it.

Depending on how long it takes the water to boil for the noodles and asparagus, the meal will be ready in 20 minutes, or at the most, 22.

CHICKEN AND ASPARAGUS IN GINGER DRESSING
6 quarts water
1 large whole chicken breast, skinned, boned and halved
Water and white wine or vermouth
1½ pounds asparagus
2 teaspoons minced fresh ginger
4 teaspoons minced garlic in oil
5 tablespoons Chinese sesame paste
3 tablespoons reduced-sodium soy sauce
2 teaspoons sugar
1½ tablespoons Chinese sesame oil
2 teaspoons hot sesame (chili) oil
2 tablespoons rice vinegar
2 tablespoons white wine or dry vermouth
16 ounces angel-hair pasta or other very thin fresh pasta
2 scallions
4 tablespoons chopped fresh coriander
8 to 12 cherry tomatoes for garnish

Bring 6 quarts of water to a boil in a covered pot for the noodles and asparagus.

Cook the chicken breast in a half-and-half combination of water and wine or vermouth to cover. Poach until done, about 15 minutes. Cool, drain and shred.

Wash and trim asparagus by breaking off tough stem ends. Cut on a diagonal into one-inch pieces.

Slice scallions; add to sauce.

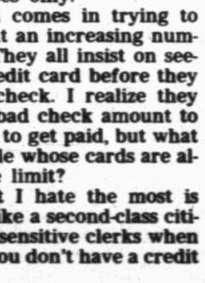

Add noodles to asparagus in boiling water and cook 30 seconds to one minute.

Drain noodles and asparagus and add with chicken to sauce; mix to incorporate sauce thoroughly with other ingredients. Decorate with coriander and serve with tomatoes.

DEAR ABBY

Student deep into a funk about living in a dump

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a full-time student, male, living on my own and working part time to pay my bills and put myself through college.

It's a real problem to stay in school and pay such outrageous prices for rental property that is certainly nothing to brag about.

I have two choices: I can either live in a dump, or I can work long hours in order to make enough money to live in a nice apartment and let my grades go down.

What do you say, Abby? — BARELY MAKING IT IN PERU, IND.

DEAR BARELY MAKING IT: You didn't really think I would advise you to work long hours in order to live in a nice apartment at the expense of letting your grades go down, did you?

If you are living on your own and working part time to get a college education with no outside help, you apparently have the right stuff.

Your education should be your top priority. If all you can afford now is a "dump" — then live in a dump, clean it up, and work hard to get the best grades possible. Better that way than living in a nice apartment now, letting your grades go down, and living in a dump the rest of your life.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I do not believe in having credit cards because of the serious problems they can lead to — and also because we don't think we should pay a yearly service charge for "identification" purposes. We did finally get a local department store card for check-cashing purposes only.

The problem comes in trying to pay by check at an increasing number of stores. They all insist on seeing a major credit card before they will accept a check. I realize they could apply a bad check amount to the credit card to get paid, but what about the people whose cards are already over the limit?

I guess what I hate the most is being treated like a second-class citizen by rude, insensitive clerks when you tell them you don't have a credit card. They look down their noses at you as if you are a poor risk just because you don't have $8,000 worth of plastic debts.

What option do we have besides carrying cash for all our purchases? We do not want to compromise ourselves by having a credit card just for check-cashing identification.

Isn't it a form of discrimination to refuse to accept a check from someone just because he or she doesn't have credit cards?

Any suggestions? — STILL "CHECKING" IN ILLINOIS

DEAR STILL: One option: Get a check-guarantee card from your bank. Not every business will accept it, but most should — and if a clerk refuses, ask to speak to the manager. The check-guarantee card is better protection for the merchant than the credit card.

Some credit card companies offer cards with no annual fee, so if you don't use the credit, they cost nothing.

DEAR ABBY: A friend of ours lost his wife of many years about two years ago. He asked us to have dinner with him and a new lady-friend he had been dating, so of course we said yes. We thought she was very loud, talkative and bossy, and we couldn't understand what he saw in this woman.

The morning after our evening together, he stopped by the house and asked us what we thought of her, so we told him the truth.

You guessed it. They are being married in June! Now we won't be able to look either one of them in the eye and probably won't be invited to their wedding.

My husband thinks we were wrong to have told him the truth when he asked us what we thought of her. Were we? — FOOT IN MOUTH

DEAR FOOT: Honesty is always the best policy, but in cases such as this, no man wants an honest opinion about a horse after he's bought it.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ALL PARENTS: Parents who want to "train a child in the way he should go" should go that way themselves.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A sudden increase in schoolwork or family responsibilities could slow you down unless you get better organized. Hard physical work will clear away certain barriers at place of employment. August is the best time for socializing and exploring new job opportunities. Keep better tax records and you will prevent some headaches next year. A close relationship will be tested. Everything will turn out fine unless you succumb to envy.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Warren Beatty, statesman McGeorge Bundy, artist Vincent Van Gogh, singer Frankie Laine, playwright Sean O'Casey.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be industrious! A mature, conscientious attitude will win you new supporters and admirers. Know who your friends are. Hasty commitments or endorsements will lead to lasting regrets. Play for time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Self-improvement projects and educational studies enjoy favorable influences. Your chances of making "easy money" are slim. Do not despair! A consistently good performance at work will pay rich dividends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance will be secondary to your career now. New responsibilities at work will mean a fatter paycheck. Learn to delegate more authority. Younger people are eager to show what they can do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Positive forces are on your side if you have a new idea you want to promote. Make sure your facts and figures are correct. Legal action is best postponed. Seek a compromise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A second income could be linked to a tip from a close associate. Use the "soft sell" if trying to win an argument. A friend shares an important secret; you benefit directly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The renewal of an old friendship could prove quite fruitful. Distant affairs are a source of deep satisfaction. Do everything you can to satisfy higher-ups' demands. Romance is mostly happy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The mail brings welcome news. Golden opportunities open up for those trying to move ahead. Make certain to pay bills on time to protect your credit rating.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Look for ways to make extra money. Mate or partner could come up with practical ideas. You might decide to postpone a meeting with an old friend. This person will understand your reasons.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be more decisive in your work. Steer clear of get-rich-quick schemes. If you are reasonable in your demands, you are likely to get cooperation. Recent worries disappear. Count your blessings!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone or something very alluring is seducing you off the beaten path. The time may not be right for making a major move. Your spontaneity brings others great pleasure now. Be yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New partnerships should flourish. Pool your ideas and resources with mate or business partner. Donate unwanted items to your favorite charity. Use public transportation whenever you can today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Concentration will be easier if you isolate yourself. You feel more optimistic about the future. Guard against unnecessary spending. Having a nest egg will help relieve tension when an emergency arises.

It was the late S.J. Simon who first propounded the theory that, if you defeat every contract you double, you aren't wielding the ax often enough. However, to double for an extra 50 or 100 points and thereby give away the show is hardly a profitable pastime.

South took the bidding along at a slow pace until North jumped to three no trump. Since North could hold no more than two kings in the major suits, it was quite likely that he held a high diamond honor. South put his reasoning to the test with a slam try of four diamonds, then bid one more for luck after North raised. West's double was fatuous, and received its just desserts.

West led a trump, taken by dummy's jack. Declarer cashed the ace and was delighted to see East follow a second time. With nothing to guide him, declarer might have come to hand and conceded a trump trick, relying on either a 3-3 heart break or the spade finesse. However, the double marked the king of spades with West, so declarer tried something else.

He cashed the ace-king of clubs and ruffed a club, then the ace-queen of hearts. Next, he threw West in with a trump. That worthy was now firmly enmeshed in an endplay.

A spade lead would be into declarer's major tenace, so West was forced to exit with a club. Since the lead of the queen would permit declarer to ruff and set up the jack for a spade discard, West led his ten of clubs. Declarer covered with dummy's jack and claimed. If East held the queen, declarer would ruff and a long club would be established; if West held the queen, the jack would be the fulfilling trick.

Leave them something to REMEMBER.

Malcolm Cowley, last editor, critic of the '20s 'Lost Generation,' dies

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Malcolm Cowley's death marked the passing of one of the last surviving members of the so-called Lost Generation, the group of American writers who exiled themselves in Paris after World War I.

Cowley, 90, who died Tuesday at New Milford Hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack at home in nearby Sherman, was a poet and essayist in his own right.

But he made his most significant contribution to American letters as an editor and critic who was among the first to recognize the brilliance of the writers dubbed "The Lost Generation" by Gertrude Stein in the 1920s. The group included Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, John Dos Passos and Ezra Pound.

He is also credited with saving Nobel laureate William Faulkner from obscurity.

"His reactions to and perceptions of Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Faulkner and Dos Passos are invaluable; his long presence in American letters as editor and critic have few parallels in this American century," author John Updike said. "He was an energetic and gregarious man who lived the life of the mind with gusto and good nature."

A former associate editor of the New Republic and literary adviser to Viking Press, Cowley described himself as a literary historian in his 1978 account of writing in America, "And I Worked at the Writer's Trade."

Born on Aug. 24, 1898, Cowley attended Harvard University from 1915 to 1917, when he joined the American Ambulance Service in France. He drove a munitions truck for several months before re-enrolling in Harvard in February 1918.

He began contributing book reviews to the New Republic and Dial magazines and completed his degree at Harvard in 1920.

Cowley spent much of his time writing free-lance magazine pieces to support himself, which diverted his attention from writing poetry.

He also held a job as a copy editor at Sweet's Architectural Catalogue. Cowley described this time of his life as his "anti-careerist" period.

"I wanted to be a writer, but not a celebrated writer appearing in glossy magazines. I wanted to live obscurely, limit my needs and preserve my freedom to write something new and perfect at some moment in the future," he wrote.

Cowley was afforded his opportunity to go to France and hobnob with other young American expatriate writers when awarded an American Field Service Fellowship to study French literature in 1921-22.

While at the New Republic, Cowley published the book for which he was best known, "Exile's Return: A Narrative of Ideas," in 1934.

The book dealt with writers of the 1920s who tried to pursue alternative lifestyles in Paris and Greenwich Village. Their exile from the mainstream ended with the collapse of Wall Street. A revised edition of the book was released in 1951.

Cowley also championed the work of Hart Crane, e.e. cummings, Thornton Wilder and Thomas Wolfe.

BRASELTON, Ga. (AP) — Actress Kim Basinger has purchased Braselton from the family that founded it in 1876, and a real estate broker said she might establish a movie production company in the tiny northeast Georgia town.

Herbert B. Braselton Sr. said Tuesday that his family agreed to sell 1,800 acres of property — including the town's industrial park, shopping center and bank — for $20 million to Miss Basinger, a native of nearby Hart County.

The deal's closing will come later this year, Braselton said.

"I've worked with Kim on this for quite some time, about 18 months," said Charles Morris, the Braselton real estate broker who handled the deal.

Morris said Miss Basinger has expressed an interest in developing Braselton into a tourist center, and possibly establishing a movie production company.

Attempts to contact Miss Basinger and her representatives were unsuccessful Tuesday.

Braselton, a town of 500 people about 40 miles north of Atlanta, has been virtually controlled by the Braselton family since William Harrison Braselton founded it in 1876.

The property first was offered for sale five years ago for $14 million. But the price jumped after Chateau Elan winery and a Mitsubishi plant located in the area.

"We're relieved we found somebody we think will do good for the community," Herbert Braselton said. "There were tears shed this morning, when we told the employees. We hate to divest ourselves of a longtime loved entity, but it has to happen. We've all gotten old, and it's time for younger people to take over."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sylvester Stallone was named worst actor and "Cocktail" was selected worst picture for 1988 top honors in the Golden Raspberry Awards announced Tuesday.

Other big Razzie winners (or losers) included Liza Minnelli for worst actress ("Arthur 2: On the Rocks" and "Rent-a-Cop"), Dan Aykroyd for worst supporting actor ("Caddyshack II") and Kristy McNichol for worst supporting actress ("Two-Moon Junction").

Stallone

The Razzie statuettes are scheduled to be presented Wednesday night by the Golden Raspberry Awards Foundation at a local nightclub during commercial breaks of the Academy Awards telecast. Recipients are not expected to be in attendance.

Stallone's worst actor Razzie, given for his work in "Rambo III," was his third in only five years. He "won" in 1985 for "Rhinestone" and in 1986 for "Rambo: First Blood Part II" and "Rocky IV."

Blake Edwards ("Sunset") and Stewart Raffill ("Mac and Me") tied for worst director, "Cocktail" took worst screenplay and hamburger pitchman Ronald McDonald was chosen worst new star for playing himself in "Mac and Me."

LONDON (AP) — Ringo Starr is back at work at Abbey Road studios for the first time since his treatment for alcohol abuse, and all he had to do was act naturally.

Owens

"Ringo looked terrifically healthy and well when he arrived at Abbey Road. He was bright-eyed and very entertaining all day," said country singer Buck Owens.

The former Beatle recorded a new version of his 1965 hit, "Act Naturally," with Owens, who wrote the song.

Starr, 48, and his wife, 38-year-old actress Barbara Bach, spent five weeks undergoing treatment at a clinic in Arizona last year.

The Owens-Starr duet will be the title track of an album to be released this summer.

'Sinful' desserts can be made healthier

By JONATHAN PROBBER
New York Times News Service

CNS Graphic

This is what really happened with Adam and Eve:

Many years ago, in a popular restaurant called The Garden, a young couple on their first date sat contentedly after a magnificent meal. The maitre d'hotel, a long, thin fellow with a greenish complexion pushed a loaded pastry cart to the side of the table and asked the young woman, rather sibilantly, if she would like dessert. She demurred. "After that rich meal, I think I'll just have an apple," she said.

"Why don't you try just a teeny bit of this delicious Souffle au Chocolat ..." coaxed the maitre d'hotel. "Well, all right," said the woman. "I've gone this far. I might as well really do it up."

If that is unoriginal sin, so be it. We've all surrendered to that craving for a rich, high-calorie dessert when we know that something light and tart is much more appropriate. And we've all felt some guilt over our choice.

But ideas about sin, guilt and redemption belong in literature classrooms and divinity schools, not at the dinner table, nutritionists say, especially when considering dessert, the most anxiety-inducing part of a meal.

"Desserts are a powder keg of misinformation and emotion," said Molly Gee, chief dietitian at the Institute for Preventive Medicine of the Methodist Hospital in Houston. "We label food 'good' and 'bad' and desserts end up being 'bad.' No one would label a spear of broccoli 'bad.'"

ASSIGNING VALUES to certain foods and certain courses of a meal is a sure way to skew one's diet, dietitians agree. If any credo can be applied to food, it is that food is valueless, but moderation is devoutly to be wished.

Karen Miller-Kovach, a registered dietitian at the Cleveland Clinic Foundation in Cleveland, said: "People march into my office and demand to be given a list of good foods and bad foods. I tell them that any bad food can be an all-right food, so long as they practice moderation."

As an example, Ms. Gee said: "If you're eating at a restaurant that has pecan pie to kill for, don't be afraid to ask the waiter to cut you half a portion and wrap the other half up. Give the other half away."

Survey results from the Crest Household Annual and Quarterly reports last month indicate that many of us eat dessert happily and then voice concern with our chocolate-stained lips. The results are based on diaries completed by 12,800 households for 10-week periods.

It is hardly surprising that ice cream was the most popular restaurant dessert, representing 51 percent of all dessert orders in 1987.

After a 1.3 percent decline in dessert orders from 1982-87, sweets experienced a rebound of 3.4 percent in 1987 and a 6.2 percent increase during the first three quarters of 1988, the survey found.

Given these dessert statistics, it might appear that we have thrown our dietary integrity out the window.

Not so, says Ann Papa, manager of media relations for the National Restaurant Association, noting that 60 percent of those surveyed in 1986 in a study by the association said they were "concerned with nutrition."

TO BOLSTER this argument, she points out that fresh fruit is on the menus of more than half the restaurants in which the check averages less than $15, and on the menus of more than 90 percent of restaurants that get $25 or more for a meal.

Desserts, like other foods, run the gamut from being hopelessly empty of calories to being moderately dense in nutrients.

Chocolate souffle, served with chocolate sauce, is a typical dessert at higher-priced restaurants. Since it consists of a significant amount of air, it might save you some calories over a piece of ultra-dense chocolate cake, for example, while satisfying a craving for chocolate.

But the numbers are still pretty frightening: a very modest 3-ounce serving of a typical souffle is 260 calories, 44 percent of which come from fat. A quarter-cup of the sauce weighs in at 274 calories, half from fat.

Ms. Gee, Ms. Miller-Kovach and others offer guidelines:

■ Use whole-wheat flour in baked goods, and less saturated fats where possible. When making pie crust, for example, use margarine instead of butter or lard.

■ The dessert food that can best withstand modifications of ingredients is probably the cookie. Try oatmeal raisin instead of buttery chocolate chip or other fattening varieties.

■ Sorbets and ices are a splendid, refreshing dessert available at restaurants and in supermarkets. Combine them with fruit and a small cookie if you want a production.

■ Remember that dessert is an extra, as in "optional and extra." Do not skip meals in anticipation of sweets, and never substitute dessert foods for any part of your meal.

■ ESTABLISH "BEHAVIOR boundaries" and know what you are doing. If you find yourself in a shopping mall staring at one of those fresh cookie booths, buy one or two regular-size cookies. Don't buy a family pack, or you will be eating cookies on the way home in the car, and later while standing in the kitchen and sitting in front of the television.

■ Despite repeated warnings against anthropomorphizing food, it must be said: fruit is a hero, a Norse God with blond hair flying in the wind and shield held high. The more fresh fruit that figures into your dessert schemes, the better off you will be. It crowds out fattier alternatives and in time will become as satisfying as the highly processed, sugary desserts many of us eat.

■ You can reduce the amount of sugar used in many recipes, by a quarter to a third, many dietitians say.

We tested the two recipes below with less sugar than originally called for. For the ice, we used two cups of sugar. No problem. For the cookies, a half a cup each of white and brown sugar proved enough.

Ms. Gee notes that many of her clients, after being weaned off high doses of refined sugars, are amazed at how sweet fresh fruit is. "Your palate just becomes more aware of the spectrum of sugars," she said.

Here are two recipes that, taken together, can give you a pretty nice, relatively low-fat dessert. It is recommended that you make the orange ice a day in advance.

CRISP OATMEAL COOKIES
(Adapted from "The Fannie Farmer Baking Book" by Marion Cunningham; Alfred A. Knopf, 1984)

1 cup vegetable shortening, plus additional shortening for greasing cookie sheets
¾ cup granulated sugar
¾ cup brown sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
3 tablespoons water
1½ cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon cinnamon
3 cups uncooked oatmeal (not instant)
½ cup chopped walnuts
½ cup raisins

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees and grease some cookie sheets. Combine the shortening and sugars in a bowl and beat until thoroughly blended. Add the eggs, vanilla and water, and beat until light and fluffy. Stir together the flour, salt, baking soda and cinnamon. Add to the first mixture and beat until completely mixed. Add the oatmeal, walnuts and raisins, and stir until thoroughly blended.

Arrange by rounded teaspoonfuls on the greased cookie sheets, placing them about 2 inches apart. Flatten cookies slightly with your wet fingertips into rounds about 1½ inches across and one-third-inch thick. Bake for 10 to 12 minutes, or until the cookies have spread a little and are lightly browned all over.

Yield: About 60 cookies.

ORANGE ICE
(Adapted from "Mediterranean Cooking" by Paula Wolfert; Ecco Press, 1977)

2¾ cups sugar
2 cups water
1 quart orange juice, strained
½ cup lemon juice, strained
½ tablespoon grated orange rind

Combine sugar and water in a saucepan and cook, stirring over medium heat until the sugar is dissolved. Boil the syrup for 5 minutes. Pour into the mixing bowl and allow to cool.

Stir the orange juice, lemon juice and grated rind into the sugar syrup. Set in the freezer compartment until the mixture is mushy but set around the edges of the bowl. Use an electric beater and beat until smooth. Return to the freezer for 4 to 5 hours. Beat again, pour into mold (if desired) and freeze until suitably firm.

Old fashioned brownies become big business

New York Times News Service

"It started with Betty Crocker, who didn't exist," said George Lois, the chairman and creative director of the Lois-GGK advertising agency in New York, referring to eponymous food products.

"Uncle Ben, Aunt Jemima — they didn't exist," he said, but they helped consumers identify with rice and pancakes. "You are more likely to believe in a new brand if there is a personality attached. It's great schmaltz, and it works."

It is working for brownies, at least. Based on industry estimates, more than 2 billion brownies were consumed in the United States last year. An increasing number are not homemade but ready-made — individually wrapped and sold with a biography of the maker on the back.

The stories of the brownie makers are remarkably similar.

They are baby boomers with backgrounds in (pick one) music, photography, social work or dental hygiene who start companies in their (pick one) parents' kitchens or cramped one-room apartments. They begin by (pick one) carrying plates of brownies to local stores or feeding friends and family who, in an agony of excess, suggest that the brownies be sold.

Inevitably, the brownie makers build a loyal following of chocoholics and achieve success with what is invariably a preservative-free but fat-filled recipe.

Interviews with leaders in the brownie business indicate that the stories are true, as far as they go. They preach the virtues of starting small and of caring about the product. If their stories sometimes leave out the fact that the brownies are now made in semiautomated plants, consider it a small evasion in a high-tech world.

Consider three brownie makers: a large concern in Rockland County, N.Y., that makes 25 products but attaches its biography only to its brownies; a company in Malvern, Pa., that has built a $2 million industry from biographical brownies alone, and a small confectionery in Oakland, Calif., that sends out biographical brochures along with its mail-order sweets.

Attached to a four-ounce cakelike brownie your mother indeed might have made is the Well-Bred Loaf story: "In 1974 Judy Glicken and Steve Caccavo began baking homestyle munchies ..." The label goes on to describe Ms. Glicken, 42, and Caccavo, 40, as "two energetic, hard-working entrepreneurs," and notes that the company has grown to multimillion-dollar levels.

Caccavo, who was a guitar teacher, and Ms. Glicken, a social worker, met through a shared interest in folk music. They started their company in a fourth-floor walk-up on the East Side of Manhattan.

They began selling brownies, hallah, Irish soda bread and pound cake at the South Street Seaport in 1974, back when it was home to fishmongers, not stockbrokers. Between 1975 and 1987, the company grew from a $25,000-a-year operation to a more than $8 million business.

Gwetzli Co.'s mail-order brownies come with a picture of their creator, Barbara Hack, and her personal note: "The original recipe for Gwetzli brownies was developed in San Francisco, perfected and first sold in Zurich, Switzerland, then brought back to the United States in 1982."

Ms. Hack, 39, chief executive officer and sole employee of the company in Oakland, Calif., says that "if you know something about me, you know something about my brownie."

What you know is that Ms. Hack habitually burned brownies she made from mixes. She was a dental hygienist in San Francisco when she created a brownie she could not burn because it contained vast amounts of butter, along with chopped walnuts, unsweetened chocolates, sugar, eggs, unbleached flour and chocolate chips.

Nowadays, she leaves the baking to a contractor with an 80-person staff that churns out Ms. Hack's tortes and toffees in addition to brownies. Total sales have reached about $100,000 a year.

The package for Rachel's 2.1-ounce fudge-type double-chocolate brownie chirps, "Hello! In 1975, I started baking brownies in my parents' kitchen and selling them to gourmet shops in Philadelphia ..." Rachel Borish, 36, decided to add her hand-written labels in 1980.

"When an individual starts something," she explained, "people are always interested to find there is an individual and not a corporation behind it." There is a corporation behind it now, however.

The company in Malvern, Pa., now ships thousands of brownies through the mail and has a $900,000-a-year business selling frozen brownies in supermarkets.

Rachel's employs 30 to 35 people and the company's sales have reached $2 million a year.

Taste of chocolate adds different twist to Key Lime Pie

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Be sure to buy sweetened condensed milk, not evaporated milk, for this recipe. Evaporated milk does not thicken when combined with lime juice as sweetened condensed milk will.

KEY LIME CHOCOLATE PIE

16 chocolate sandwich cookies, crushed (½ cup)
½ cup flaked coconut
2 tablespoons margarine or butter
3 egg yolks
1 14-ounce can sweetened condensed milk
2 2-ounce envelopes premelted unsweetened chocolate product
⅓ cup lime juice
3 egg whites
1 7-ounce jar marshmallow creme

In a medium mixing bowl combine cookie crumbs, coconut and margarine or butter. Press onto bottom and up sides of a 9-inch pie plate. Bake in a 375-degree F oven about 8 minutes. Cool.

Meanwhile, in a small mixer bowl beat egg yolks with electric mixer on high speed about 4 minutes or until thick and lemon colored. Add sweetened condensed milk, chocolate and lime juice. Beat until well combined. Pour into crust.

Wash beaters thoroughly. In a large mixer bowl beat egg whites until soft peaks form (tips curl). Gradually add marshmallow creme, beating until stiff peaks form (tips stand straight). Spread meringue over filling, sealing to edges of crust. Bake in 350-degree F oven 12 to 15 minutes or until meringue is golden. Cool slightly on wire rack. Chill 2 to 3 hours.

Serves 8.

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski remembers his first game as a collegian, and he's quick to point out that night at Army is a far cry from the first year of his prized freshman, Christian Laettner.

"We played Princeton and I scored four points, which is a high game for me. We lost, but I felt good that it was my first game and I did well," Krzyzewski said Tuesday. "This kid's playing against Georgetown in such a big game and he's having a lot of fun."

That Georgetown game further established the 6-foot-10 Laettner as one of the keys to Duke's bid for a national championship in Seattle.

Krzyzewski touted Laettner last November as a player who could have an immediate influence on the Blue Devils. That impact became apparent when he scored a game-high 24 points in leading Duke to an 85-77 victory over the Hoyas in the NCAA East Regional finals.

So much for the freshman jitters, Krzyzewski said.

"He's not just one of the better freshmen. He's one of the better players," Krzyzewski said. "Christian's a very good player and he's going to get a lot better."

Krzyzewski said Laettner's enthusiasm for the game was quite apparent when he brought the Angola, N.Y., native to the Durham campus as well as when he visited Laettner at his home.

"One of the things we had to bring up for one of our visits with him was a copy of the press conference that our kids did in '86 in Dallas," Krzyzewski said of that Sunday gathering in which the Blue Devils delivered a memorable package of one-liners.

"For him to like it that much, not just basketball, but all the stuff. It's refreshing, it's really nice, and it's not phony.

"He's looked at playing in the ACC with so much anticipation," Krzyzewski said. "I remember when we recruited him, how awestruck he was by the whole situation. He's dreamed of it for so long. And he's an even better player than he thought he'd be. He's excited about that."

Excitement doesn't come too hard to Laettner. His play in the NCAA tournament, and throughout the season, has been spiced by fists thrust into the air in confidence, fiery looks of celebration after a great play and red-faced rage when he commits a mistake.

His teammates often have to calm him down to prevent the possibility of a technical foul, but they also feed on his natural high.

"Some of the teammates walk up to me after the game and say 'That gave me such a personal lift' when they saw me having a really good time out there," Laettner said.

"I just have a lot of fun. I think the happiest I've been this season, and the craziest I've gone on the court is when Rob (Brickey) gets a really nice dunk," Laettner said. "In the Minnesota game, he just had an excellent dunk and I went crazy. I'll go crazy if we get a really big rebound or something like that."

Criticism doesn't affect Laettner often, but in the East Regional, he let guard Quin Snyder know that he wasn't in the mood to take heat.

"In the Minnesota game, Quin got really angry with me and told me to quit acting like a freshman. We were 50 feet away on the court and I told him to leave me alone," he said.

His teammates might have taken the advice to heart as they were battling the Hoyas. Laettner didn't back down from Georgetown's Alonzo Mourning, instead charging to the basket with every opportunity.

Laettner is hitting 72 percent of his field goals, and while he is averaging eight points per game, he has been in double figures in his last five games.

The moment which most impressed was when, after grabbing an offensive rebound, he had his first shot blocked by Mourning, then went back to the basket and scored. That elicited his trademark — the wild flailing arms and the defiant facial expression.

"I think the biggest thing that hurt him (Mourning) momentally was when Phil (Henderson) dunked on him," Laettner said of his teammate's monster slam in the second half.

Carlesimo burns midnight oil to prepare Seton Hall

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — P.J. Carlesimo sat at a table in his hotel room eating breakfast.

He wore Seton Hall gym shorts and a tee-shirt. His feet were bare and his hair was a mess.

On top of the video recorder sat nine or so black tape boxes, each marked and bearing the names Illinois, Duke and Michigan. Each was game tape and Carlesimo had seen each more than once. His eyes showed it.

The newest rising star on the national collegiate coaching scene looked tired and overworked and not the glib coach seen recently in postgame news conferences during the NCAA tournament.

Within a couple of minutes, he would lie on his bed and handle a telephone conference call with New York and New Jersey area writers. Most he would address by first name.

It was classic Carlesimo, from a who in his late 30s admits to being a basketball junkie, a workaholic and a nice guy who has managed to beat the odds and finish first.

P.J. Carlesimo is at the top these days, and Seton Hall, 30-6, is heading toward a Final Four showdown against Duke on Saturday in Seattle for one reason. Carlesimo has never stopped working to get them there.

He still gets to work about noon and many times answers the phone in his South Orange office near midnight.

A little more than a year ago, the Final Four may have seemed the most inaccessible place for Seton Hall. It was January, 1988 and the Pirates had stumbled to a 2-6 mark in the Big East and were in their familiar spot in last place in the league.

Many on campus called for Carlesimo's ouster despite improvement by the team in each of his seasons.

"That's the kind of thing I don't try to pay too much attention to," said Carlesimo, who since has signed a five-year contract and twice been named Big East coach of the year. "My concern was whether (athletic director) Larry Keating and (Chancellor) Monsignor (John) Petillo were satisfied. I never lost their support."

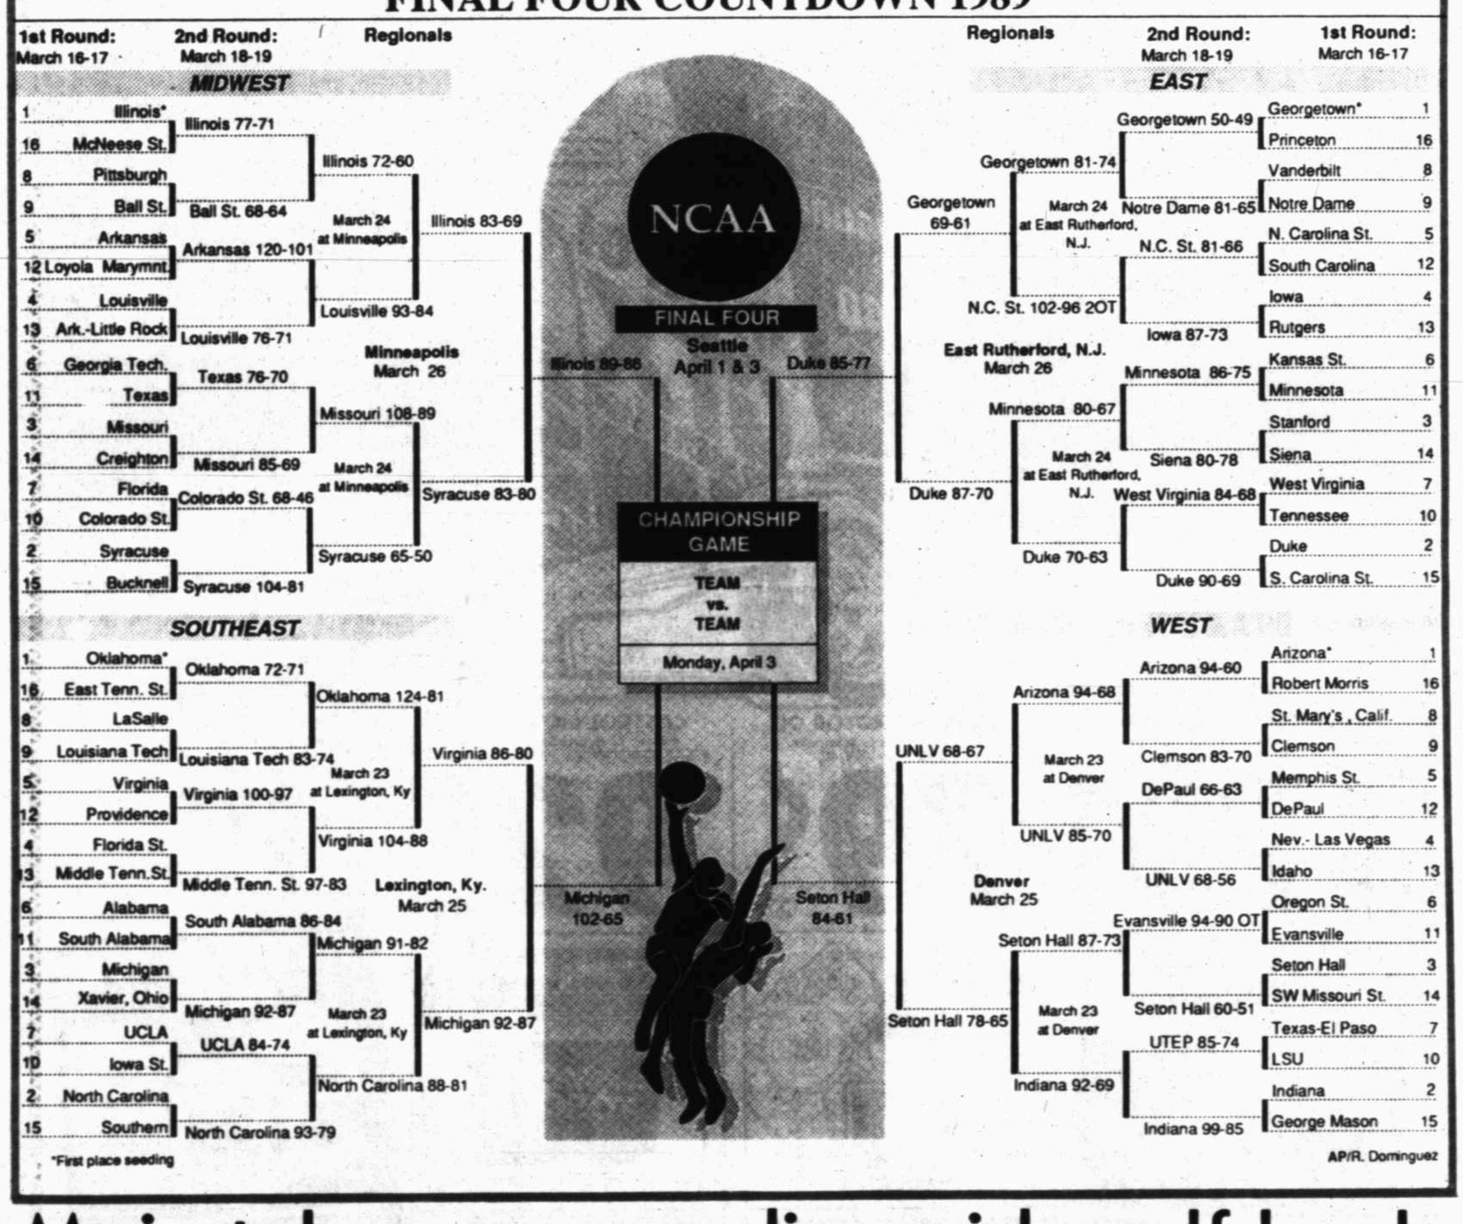

Things turned around quickly. Seton Hall finished the 1987-88 season by winning six of eight Big East games, completing the season 22-13 and earning its first NCAA bid.

What has followed this season is even more remarkable. The Hall captured both the Great Alaska Shootout and the Sugar Bowl tournaments early, stayed in the Top 20 most of the year, finished second in the Big East with an 11-5 mark and went 26-6 to earn a second NCAA bid.

Victories over Southwest Missouri State, Evansville, Indiana and UNLV have moved the Pirates within two victories of their first NCAA title.

"It's simple, whatever team puts together the two best games will win," Carlesimo said.

Illini succeed by raiding city

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — In a state known for its fertile farmland, the asphalt playgrounds of Illinois' cities have produced one of the most popular crops this spring: basketball players.

The Fighting Illini have reached the NCAA Final Four by relying almost exclusively on home-grown talent — 11 of the 12 players dressing for Illinois are natives of the Land of Lincoln.

"We're very pleased that the talent we've got are all from the state. It's exciting," Coach Lou Henson said Tuesday.

In the past, many of Illinois' budding basketball stars were harvested by universities in other states. Henson estimates at least 25 top players were wooed out-of-state in his 14 years at Illinois.

But that trend has been reversed, due largely to the work the past six years of Henson assistant Jimmy Collins, who is described by the players as "a father figure and the emotional key to the team."

Collins, 40, personally recruited nearly every member of the squad and has developed a rapport with the players that has made him more than just a coach.

Rice shy to FF press; burns bright on court

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — It took a while for the organizers of the Uinversity of Michigan's most recent news conference to prod Glen Rice into the spotlight.

When they finally got the Wolverines' star to come out like teammates Sean Higgins, Loy Vaught and Demetrius Calip had done for more than an hour to meet with reporters and photographers Tuesday, there was a slight change in the format.

"I do not expect to keep Glen Rice for as long as I had the other players, so we are going to gang him at once right here," Sports Information Director Bruce Madej said as he motioned reporters to the center of the conference room in Crisler Arena.

It was example of Rice's disinclination to puff out his chest and run to the microphones every time someone asks about the ability he's displayed — like the 34 points he scored Thursday against North Carolina in Michigan's 92-87 NCAA tournament quarterfinal victory.

"He works with a quiet sort of resolve," said interim coach Steve Fisher, whose Wolverines, 28-7, are scheduled to leave tonight for Seattle where they will meet Illinois, 31-4, in an NCAA semifinal game Saturday.

"By nature he would prefer not to come out and deal with the media, but the responsibility comes with his position," Fisher said.

Mojo takes commanding girls golf lead

If things keep going like this, Denise Moralez will be looking for another sport pretty soon.

The Odessa Permian senior led the Panthers to a whopping 17-stroke lead after the first round of the District 4-5A girls golf tour at Hogan Park Tuesday by shooting a medal 78.

Two and a half years ago, Moralez never even played golf.

"I was always athletically inclined. I played basketball and volleyball. Then my dad (Augustine) suggested I take up golf."

Permian Coach Bob Pulliam is glad she did. She is one of the reasons Permian is the favorite to win district and behaved like it Tuesday with a team 356 to second place San Angelo's 373.

MIDLAND LEE is in third place with a 380. "It's the first time this year," said Coach Shirley Stephenson, "That all four of our counting scores were under 100."

MIDLAND HIGH is fourth at 394, which didn't make Coach John Ford too happy. "I'm very disappointed in our showing, but there are still three rounds to go. It's early."

With three players still on the course, Lee's Clare Sutton was the early medalist with an 86.

"It was my best round of the year," she said, "On the back nine I was hitting better with my driver and getting in position where I could do something with my second shot."

While the 86 was her low for the year, the senior who is trying to make up her mind between TCU and Texas A&M, her lowest ever round was an 84 last year at RHCC.

Jenny Hyde led Midland with a 93, a round that was sabotaged by a nine on No. 2 on the way to a front nine 46.

Two golfers in the final three some topped Lee's Sutton, Moralez and San Angelo's Lisa Balch, who shot an 80. Balch was the medalist at Hogan Park a few weeks back in the Midland Invitational.

Moralez "had a little trouble putting, but I was even par on the front nine when I bogeyed seven and double bogeyed eight to finish with a 39."

Highlight of the round was an eagle on the par five fifth hole. "I hit the cart path with my drive and just needed a wedgie to reach the green."

Reach it, she was a foot away from the pin.

Moralez has come a long way in 2 1/2 years as a golfer and is thinking now in terms of a golf scholarship.

Last year she competed on the WT Junior Tour and took first in the president's flight consolation in the Texas-Oklahoma tournament at Wichita Falls.

A year ago, she finished third medalist in district and fourth in regional.

Not only was Tuesday a perfect golf day, "but the Hogan greens were a lot like those at Sunset, where I usually play, and that helped my confidence."

She expects more trouble next Tuesday when the tour hits Mission CC where the greens are faster.

'Saints' come marching into Garden for NIT final

NEW YORK (AP) — St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca calls the St. Louis Billikens "the best kept secret in the world."

In the world of college basketball, however, more and more people are finding out about the team from the Midwestern Collegiate Conference that plays St. John's tonight for the championship of the National Invitation Tournament.

"We may be a surprise team to a lot of people around the country, but we felt we were pretty good all along," St. Louis coach Rich Grawer said Tuesday.

The Billikens, 27-9, reached the NIT final by beating Southern Illinois, Wisconsin, New Mexico and Michigan State.

"It's kind of mind-boggling, but someone told me there's only 10 teams in the country with 27 wins or more, and we're one of them," Grawer said.

Despite their record, the Billikens didn't get much national publicity until they arrived in New York.

"The last time I saw this many reporters was when I was a high school coach and Steve Stipanovich was playing for me," Grawer said.

Grawer said he isn't worried about playing before a pro-St. John's crowd at Madison Square Garden.

"We always preach to our kids about how great it is to overcome the odds," he said. "It's always more satisfying to win on the other guy's court."

What does concern Grawer is his opponent's big front line.

"They've got a 7-footer, a 6-10 guy and a 6-8 guy," he said. "I just hope we can see over them."

Meanwhile, Carnesecca is singing the blues over the Billikens' high-scoring trio of Anthony Bonner, Monroe Douglass and Roland Gray.

"You're talking about three of the best players in St. Louis history," he said. "Two of those guys are going to make a lot of money in the pros."

St. John's, 19-13, reached its low point after losing to last-place Boston College in the qualifying game for the Big East tournament. But the Redmen have rebounded with four victories in the NIT, including a 76-65 semifinal win over Alabama-Birmingham on Monday night.

"It was very depressing after the BC game," Carnesecca said. "A lot of people thought we were dead, but we stuck with it and we're still playing."

Because they start three freshmen — guard Jason Buchanan, forward Malik Sealy and center Robert Werdann — the Redman are considered a team of the future. But Carnesecca would rather talk about today than tomorrow.

"The future is now," he said, echoing the phrase made famous by George Allen. "You never know what's going to happen in a year or two. You've got to grab it while you can."

St. John's is playing in its 25th NIT and St. Louis is appearing for the 14th time, but it's been years since either school won the championship of the country's oldest postseason tournament.

"Easy" Ed Macauley led St. Louis to its only NIT title in 1948. St. John's won the last of its four NIT championships in 1965.

Gossage, Cedeno, Concepcion released

Associated Press

Is the Goose cooked?

Rich "Goose" Gossage, only 39 saves shy of Rollie Fingers' record of 341 was released by the Chicago Cubs on Tuesday.

Gossage, whose tough looks and thick mustache backed up a fastball that once terrorized hitters in both leagues, was 4-4 with 13 saves in 1988 and had not pitched in exhibition games in more than a week.

He does not intend to retire, though.

"They said I was through in '84, and I wasn't," Gossage said. "Basically, that's how I feel now. I still feel as if I have a couple more years ahead of me."

Now, he must wait for the phone to ring but not the one in the bullpen.

Gossage, 37, still has a guaranteed contract worth $1.2 million this season.

Al Nipper, acquired from Boston in December 1987 in the Lee Smith deal, also was released by the Cubs.

Experimenting with off-speed pitches to compensate for a diminished fastball, Gossage had an odd exhibition season. Even though he had a 0.82 ERA, he walked 13 batters in 11 innings.

"You look at his (Gossage's) ERA and it looks good," Cubs manager Don Zimmer said. "But he walked 13 men. That's not Goose's bag. He's going through changes. He was trying to do new things. We just didn't feel he was one of our 10 pitchers."

Several other teams made roster moves on Tuesday and more are expected today.

Mark Eichhorn, once Toronto's top reliever, was sent to the minors. He was 0-3 with the Blue Jays with a 4.19 ERA in 37 appearances last year and, with Class AAA Syracuse, was 4-4 with a 1.17 ERA in 18 games.

Lifetime with Toronto, Eichhorn is 24-18 with a 2.98 ERA. His best season was 1986, when he was 14-6 with a 1.72 ERA and 10 saves in 69 appearances.

Reliever Ed Vande Berg was sent to the minors by Texas and St. Louis signed Ted Power to a minor-league contract.

Elsewhere, Montreal made two trades. Neal Heaton, 29, was traded to Pittsburgh for a player to be named later. Heaton, who was demoted to the bullpen last season, had an 8.57 ERA this spring. He was 3-10 with a 4.99 ERA last year for the Expos.

In a minor deal, the Expos sent catcher Mark Bailey and infielder Tom O'Malley to the New York Mets for pitcher Steve Frey. Bailey and O'Malley each spent several seasons in the major leagues.

Two comeback bids ended Tuesday as the California Angels released 40-year-old infielder Dave Concepcion and the Houston Astros decided not to keep Cesar Cedeno, 38.

Milwaukee ace Ted Higuera, who underwent back surgery in January, was placed on the 15-day disabled list retroactive to March 25. He will stay at Milwaukee's minor league camp in Arizona for rehabilitation.

Exhibition Results:

Athletics 4, Giants 3

In a game played before 32,020 at the Louisiana Superdome, Dave Henderson hit a sixth-inning home run and a broken-bat single off the pitcher's glove to score Stan Javier in a three-run ninth to lead Oakland past over San Francisco.

All three runs in the ninth came off Mike LaCoss, the fourth pitcher used by the Giants.

Mets 2, Braves 0

Ron Darling and Rick Aguilera combined on a one-hitter and faced the minimum 27 batters as New York beat Atlanta. Darling pitched seven innings and allowed the only Atlanta hit, a leadoff single to Dion James in the sixth inning. One out later, James was erased on a double play.

Oprioles 4, Expos 2

Rick Schu's two-run, two-out double in the bottom of the eighth inning lifted Baltimore past Montreal.

Mickey Tettleton singled to start eighth, stole second and advanced to third on Francisco Melendez's single. With two outs, Schu's fly ball down the left-field line fell between three Expos fielders allowing Tettleton and Melendez to score.

Rangers 8, Pirates 4

Ruben Sierra hit his fifth homer of the spring, a two-run shot in the fifth inning, and Texas beat Pittsburgh. The victory was the Rangers' 12th in 15 games, and gave them 14 for the spring, one short of a club spring record.

Tigers 11, Twins 6

Mike Brumley, acquired last week from San Diego, was 3-for-4 with five runs scored as Detroit outlasted Minnesota. Shane Rawley started for Minnesota and allowed eight runs and eight hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Reds 8, Astros 0

Cincinnati scored seven runs in the first inning off Houston right-hander Rick Rhoden. Rhoden, 1-2, lasted just two-thirds of an inning. He walked three and gave up five singles, three of them infield hits, as his spring-time earned run average climbed to 7.29 in six appearances. Paul O'Neill had three hits and two RBIs for the Reds.

Vandeweghe hurts old teammates in N.Y. Knick win

Associated Press

Kiki Vandeweghe was hurting during much of the last two years with Portland. After running into Vandeweghe for the first time since trading him away last month, the Trail Blazers were the ones hurting.

Mark Jackson had 27 points, 10 rebounds and 12 assists, Vandeweghe scored 24 points and the New York Knicks rallied in the fourth quarter and defeated Portland 128-124 Tuesday night.

"Once the game started it was just a basketball game," said Vandeweghe, who suffered from back problems with the Trail Blazers. "This was a team victory. Everyone came together, and that's the way it should be."

Vandeweghe, acquired from Portland on Feb. 23 for a first-round draft pick, had his most productive game for the Knicks. He averaged 9.1 points in his first 14 games for New York, with a high of 23.

Jackson was playing his third game after missing 10 following surgery for torn cartilage in his right knee.

"For someone who is coming off surgery, it shows what a competitor he is," Coach Rick Pitino said. "For him to play at that level is fantastic."

Jackson scored 21 points in the second half as the Knicks overcame an 11-point halftime deficit.

"I was really upset with the way we played in the first half," Jackson said. "I'll accept the glory for the second half because I run the show, but I also take the blame for the first. We were embarrassed in the first half."

Patrick Ewing scored 25 points for the Knicks while Clyde Drexler had 28 points and Jerome Kersey 26 points and 12 rebounds for the Trail Blazers.

New York tied the score five times in the fourth quarter before taking the ead for good 116-114 on a fast-break layup by Gerald Wilkins with 4:14 left. That started an 11-1 run that clinched the Knicks' 31st home victory in 34 games this season.

76ers 117, Celtics 115

Charles Barkley had 27 points and rookie Hersey Hawkins scored eight of his 21 in overtime. Boston's Reggie Lewis scored a career-high 39 points and Brian Shaw had 18 points and 14 rebounds but the Celtics fell 2½ games behind second-place Philadelphia in the NBA's Atlantic Division.

Suns 127, Lakers 104

Tom Chambers scored 28 points, Kevin Johnson 24 and Eddie Johnson had eight of his 21 in a decisive second period as Phoenix clinched its first playoff berth in four years.

Cavaliers 102, Mavericks 90

Ron Harper scored 15 of his 26 points during a rally late in the third quarter and Cleveland reached the 50-victory mark for the first time in its 19 NBA seasons.

Mark Price added 21 points as Cleveland won for the 32nd time in 35 home games

Bulls 115, Warriors 106

Michael Jordan had his sixth triple-double of the season and scored 14 of his 33 points in the final quarter as Chicago won its fifth consecutive game. Jordan had 12 rebounds and 11 assists. He made a pair of short jumpers during a 12-3 fourth-quarter spurt that gave the Bulls a 103-88 lead.

Rockets 120, SuperSonics 117

Akeem Olajuwon scored 17 of his 36 points in the pivotal fourth quarter. Olajuwon was one of six Rockets in double figures, including Mike Woodson with 22, Walter Berry 18, Otis Thorpe and Buck Johnson 11 each and Sleepy Floyd 10. Dale Ellis led Seattle with 36, Derrick McKey had 21 and Xavier McDaniel 19.

Spurs 130, Bullets 114

Willie Anderson scored 29 points and Alvin Robertson 28 as San Antonio snapped a four-game losing streak. The Bullets were led by Bernard King with 31 points and John Williams with 20.

Nets 111, Hawks 108

Roy Hinson scored six of his 25 points in the last two minutes as New Jersey snapped a 10-game losing streak overall and a 16-game losing streak against Atlanta.

Hinson made a pair of free throws with 7:57 left to break an 88-88 tie and give the Nets the lead for good.

ABILENE — District 3 champion Abilene advanced to area playoff action with a 4-1 win over District 4 runnerup Wichita Falls here Tuesday.

The Eagles, 14-5-1, face District 2 runnerup El Paso Hanks in a second-round playoff match this coming weekend. Hanks was a 3-2 winner over El Paso Coronado in bi-district action Tuesday.

AHS' Tuell Green got the Eagles rolling with a goal in the fourth minute off an assist by Joe Barrientos. Ryker Hall added a successful penalty kick in the 16th minute to put the Eagles up two.

WFHS cut the Eagle lead to 2-1 just before halftime, but second-half goals by Barrientos and Aaron Roberts put the match out of reach for the Coyotes.

Wichita Falls finished at 10-4-3.

Trevino savors PGA swan song

THE WOODLANDS (AP) — Lee Trevino is leaving the PGA Tour the same way he came in — talking, and loving every minute of it.

"My career is over as far as playing this Tour," said Trevino, who will be in the field for Thursday's first round of the $800,000 Independent Insurance Agent Open.

"I don't expect to go out there and get on the leader board and do this and do that. If I do, it's a plus."

Trevino, who hasn't played a Tour event since last September, is using this year's PGA Tour to prepare for his debut on the PGA Senior Tour in December.

"I think I'll do very well (on the Senior's Tour) but it won't be as easy as it has been the last three or four years," Trevino said. "It's competitive out there."

The man who has won 27 PGA events and captured the hearts of millions of fans with his jovial personality, has lost none of his gift for gab.

He still loves the interaction with the fans, as he proved in Tuesday's practice round, playing in the same group with Seve Ballesteros.

"My legs are killing me, you could play a tune on these legs right now because they're as tight as a drum," Trevino said.

Ballesterous enjoyed his round of practice and patter with Trevino, recalling an anecdote from Tony Jacklin, who once told Trevino he didn't want to talk during a round.

"Trevino told Tony he didn't have to say a word, just listen," Ballesteros laughed.

His best year on the Tour was 1980 before back problems forced Trevino to curtail his tournament participation.

Since back surgery in 1982, Trevino's best year was 1984 when he won his second U.S. Open and finished 12th in money earnings with $282,907.

He has since dropped each year in earnings because of contract commitments and his work as a network analyst.

"I was doing 13 tournaments a year but I couldn't get into the flow of it," he said. "You have to play with these guys every week to get the feel and confidence to play."

Midland High School golfer Jenny Hyde concentrates on lining up a putt during Tuesday's District 4-5A girls golf tournament.

"I used to be a big brother to them, but the older I get, the more they call me a father figure," Collins joked Tuesday as the team went through a light workout in a campus gym.

"There's not anything mystical about recruiting. It's a 24-hour-a-day job. It's just hard work and persistence. You have to know how to reach each kid. And every kid is different."

Clad in a warmup suit and basketball shoes, Collins still looks comfortable on the basketball court, whether talking quietly in the corner with a player, huddled on the sideline with other assistant coaches or joking at center court with the team.

It hasn't been that long since Collins was in the players' position. The Syracuse, N.Y. native was a star at New Mexico State in 1970 and led the Henson-coached Aggies to a third-place finish in the Final Four.

Collins became a first-round draft pick of the Chicago Bulls and it was during his years there that he first met many of the local high school coaches he would later call upon in his recruiting work.

"I used to play pickup games with a lot of the coaches and I stayed in touch after my playing days when I worked as a probation officer in Chicago," Collins said.

Collins connects with the players on a personal level and has forged deep bonds with them.

WOLVES

It's true that Rice, whose 24.8 average in Big Ten play made him the conference scoring champ for the second straight season, likes to find the shadows when he can.

Two weeks ago, when the Wolverines were at Detroit Metropolitan Airport getting ready to leave for their first tournament game in Atlanta, Rice tried to politely dodge a reporter.

Asked his name, the 6-foot-7 senior forward said, "Terry Mills," and proceeded to spell the other Wolverine forward's name. Then he smiled, said his own name and took a seat in a lounge away from reporters and photographers.

Rice said his shyness is one reason he often steps out of the spotlight. But he also says he's thinking of the team.

"I really don't want to be getting too focused in the media because I really just want to concentrate on the games that we have to play," said Rice, who's sure to be a media darling in Seattle.

He also said his mother and friends have influenced his reaction to the attention.

"They just tell me (not to) get caught up into all the media and don't go get caught up reading about myself," Rice said.

Some photographers also have found that catching Rice on film — even on the court — can be like trying to shoot a ghost. He's either far away from the basket or setting up a play.

Fisher's explanation for that is that Rice's mechanics are so good that he doesn't have to labor for a shot.
