Principal pledging 'stronger line'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

In emotional testimony Tuesday night, Crockett Elementary Principal Roberto Banda vowed to take a "stronger line" on discipline at his campus.

"I have been charged with being too lenient. One thing no one can ever say is that I've been abusive," the principal told Midland Independent School District Tuesday night.

On Friday, Jan. 20, two Crockett sixth-grade boys had been suspended for bringing a loaded .25-caliber chrome-plated automatic pistol to school the prior Wednesday.

The two boys currently are attending class at the district's Alternative Education Center.

County Attorney Mark Dettman said this morning officials from MISD, the Juvenile Probation Office and the Midland Police Department were to meet at 10:30 a.m. today to discuss the case.

Charges of reckless conduct and carrying a weapon on a school campus would probably be filed today against one of the boys, Dettman said. Those charges — if the student were an adult — would be felonious, he added.

The second student faces probable charges of unlawfully carrying a weapon, Dettman said.

Penalties the boys could face range from homebound-probation to placement in a Texas Youth Commission facility, the county attorney explained.

About 30 parents attended the MISD Board of Trustees meeting Tuesday to express their concerns about what they believe is an extreme lack of discipline at Crockett, located at 401 E. Parker Ave. in south Midland, and on the buses that carry the children to the school.

More than one-tenth of all bus disciplinary reports on record for this school year have concerned Crockett Elementary children, one MISD official said.

Nineteen Crockett students have been permanently prohibited from riding the bus to and from school.

Parents believe the problem is one of a lack of communication between students, teachers and administration, they concurred Tuesday night.

Parents spoke of unfilled promises by district administrators and one principal who said he didn't think the superintendent needed to be bothered about one problem the parent felt was severe.

Linda Green, who has children at Crockett and Rusk elementary schools, said "children are petrified of telling the teacher about other students." Mrs. Green said her child told her "the gun" had been on campus all day, but none of the children told an adult.

Pick up poisoned pigeons with care

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Midlanders today should start seeing the first of thousands of pigeon carcasses that will litter the downtown area as a county-sanctioned extermination project enters its second day of operation.

The dead birds primarily will be confined to downtown rooftops, the areas where county contractor Boydstun's Pest Control is dropping poison-laced corn kernels for the birds' ingestion.

However, some carcasses may show up on city streets, Larry Witten, a Boydstun entomologist, said this morning. Witten suggested that residents who find the carcasses use a plastic bag to retrieve the dead birds.

Witten suggested that the finder place his hand in the bag, pick up the creature, turn the bag inside out, seal it with a twist-tie, and dispose of the body in a Dumpster, remembering to close the trash container when finished.

City and county animal control personnel also may be called to dispose of the birds, he said.

The extermination project, which is slated to continue through spring, is intended to reduce by half the number of downtown pigeons, which are deemed a health hazard and cosmetic eyesore.

"It's going to be quite a few birds, when you number them in the thousands," Witten said.

Boydstun personnel began dropping the poisoned kernels Tuesday morning, he said. The chemical takes about 24 hours to take effect.

The entomologist emphasized that exterminators are using whole kernel corn, which is too large for wild and game birds to pick up.

The kernels will be dropped every two weeks through the first of March. The efforts will turn toward disseminating kernels laced with a birth-control chemical during April and May.

At least two dozen downtown companies and government agencies are lending financial support to the extermination project.

Council approves property

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Loraine Center is as good as city property.

In a deal valued at $1.2 million, Midland City Council Tuesday gave attorneys the go ahead to close on the property by Feb. 16, thus sealing three months of planning and negotiations.

The three-story building — located just a few blocks north of city hall — will eventually house the highly-touted Emergency Operations Center and Midland Police Department.

In addition, council executed a second contract with Houston-based Horne Co. (Prudential's acting agent) to continue to manage the 52,000-square-foot facility which now houses 17 tenants.

City Attorney David Reagan said he would act immediately on the building, thus giving architects and consultants the green light to move on the futuristic radio dispatch system.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said he was surprised by the remodeling figures that came in $500,000 over budget, but as noted earlier, several other factors, including hardware/software purchases, could well offset the expenditure.

James Rhotenberry Jr., a principal in the firm of Rhotenberry Wellen Architects and Planners, said by placing the centralized communication center in the basement, the city will add as much as 8,400 square feet of working office space to the building.

Following a study of the building, architects determined it will cost about $175,000 to implant a generator and auxiliary power supply. "Most of the costs that make a difference have to do with electrical and mechanical modifications needed in the basement," he said.

Rhotenberry said the city also didn't take into account the fact that they are mandated by state and federal laws to alter the building's makeup for handicap accessibility.

Council is leaning toward placing the center in the basement, with all data processing operations to be located on the first floor, thus minimizing any destruction threat that could be caused by tornadoes.

Other than some basic structural changes, Rhotenberry, in a report to council, found the building to be in relatively sound shape.

Based on reports, the city will probably have to make some minor roof repairs, but expect no problem, given the fact that three to five microwave dishes will have to be installed on top.

Tuesday's agreement on the purchase culminates months of work that became reality when local residents opted to approve a $4.2 million public safety bond issue.

City officials estimate annual maintenance and utility costs at $160,000. However, those costs will be offset by annual rent receipts which run $175,000 for the same period.

In other business:

■ Council voted on first reading to create "no parking" and "tow away" zones on Fannin Avenue, Cimarron Drive and Dengar Avenue, following numerous complaints by residents who live just east of Midland Lee High School.

Council decided on immediate action following complaints of students parking in personal driveways, double-parking in streets, parking in yards and threatening residents.

Confirmation of Sullivan still seems likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anti-abortion lawmakers are concerned about the views of President Bush's choice to head the Department of Health and Human Services but concede they have little hope of blocking the nomination.

Instead, they are pinning their hopes on assurances by Bush transition officials that other top-level HHS jobs will go to anti-abortion activists.

"I'm assured all will be well in the end, but it's growing curiouser and curiouser by the day," said Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., a strong opponent of abortion who is still waiting to meet face-to-face with HHS Secretary-designate Louis Sullivan.

Humphrey said he is concerned that some senators who have met with Sullivan in advance of his confirmation hearing next week report that the nominee personally supports the Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion — a view different from that of Bush, who says he wants the decision reversed.

Humphrey said he was not comforted by Sullivan's pledge that as a member of the Bush Cabinet he would back the abortion policies of the president, but that he sees little likelihood the nomination will be blocked.

"Let's put it plainly: Dr. Sullivan is the only black nominee to the Cabinet. It would be an embarrassment to the president, an embarrassment to the Republican Party, if the nomination encountered any trouble and we don't want that," Humphrey said.

"We want to make the best of the situation and that's what we've been striving to do by encouraging the White House to surround Sullivan with people experienced in government and who would actively support the president on abortion," he said.

Bush, in a bid to placate anti-abortion groups, will name Constance Horner as undersecretary of HHS, an administration source, declining to be named publicly, said today. Horner, director of the Office of Personnel Management under President Reagan, is considered acceptable by anti-abortion lawmakers.

The Horner appointment was initally reported by The Washington Post, The New York Times and The Washington Times.

Sullivan declined to comment on the developments Tuesday.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, a conservative who has worked with Humphrey to extract the White House promise that top-level HHS jobs would go to anti-abortion activists, downplayed the controversy. He said he interprets Sullivan's support of the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision to be simply a pledge to support current law.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said that in his meeting with Sullivan, "he said that personally he would favor abortions in three instances, the life of the mother, rape or incest. But he says that he's going to go with President Bush's policies, and I think that's responsible."

Bush also has said he favors abortion in those same circumstances.

In addition, Sullivan has said he opposes federal spending on abortions except for those three exceptions, a position Bush also has supported.

Tower's character, career now under Senate scrutiny

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — John Tower's character as well as his defense expertise will undergo unusual scrutiny today as the Senate opens hearings on the former Texas senator's fitness to lead the Pentagon in the Bush administration.

The Senate Armed Services Committee is holding at least three days of hearings on President Bush's nomination of the 63-year-old Republican to head the nation's $315 billion-a-year defense operation.

An exhaustive review is underway, committee aides said, in order to lay to rest questions about Tower's personal life and business practices as well as to allay Senate embarrassment over its routine, 1981 confirmation of a Navy procurement official, Melvyn Paisley, who later became implicated in the scandal afflicting the $150-billion-a-year Pentagon acquisition system.

Stock market recovers its crash loss

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The stock market stormed higher Tuesday and the Dow Jones industrial average finally regained all the ground it lost in the October 1987 market crash.

The Dow soared 38.04 points, or 1.7 percent, to close at 2,256.43. On Oct. 16, 1987, the Dow closed at 2,246.74, a level that almost instantly became a fond memory on the following Monday, when it plunged a record 508 points.

Analysts said that too much should probably not be made of the 2,246.74 level, since the Dow at that point was already in the midst of a rout from the record 2,722.42 it reached on Aug. 25, 1987.

Futures-related program trading — which tends to inflate the prices of blue-chip stocks — played a large part in Tuesday's rally, analysts said. Broad measures of stock market performance did not fare nearly so well as the Dow.

Blue chips led the charge.

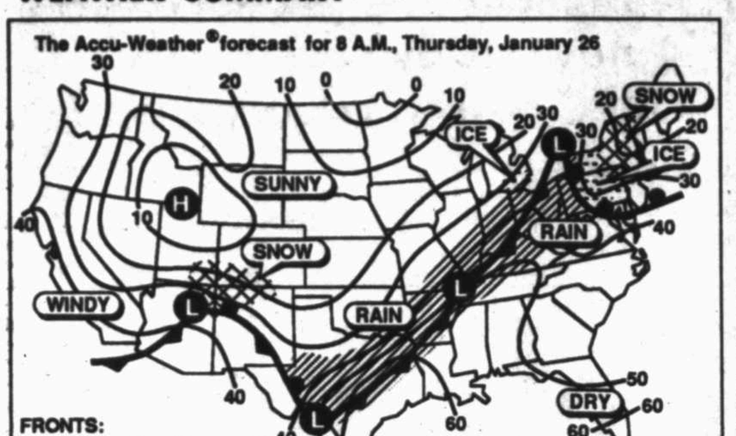
WEATHER SUMMARY



Cloudy skies continuing

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be cloudy tonight with a less than 20 percent chance of showers becoming freezing rain showers by morning. The low will be in the lower 30s with northeast winds blowing from 10-15 mph.

Cloudy skies will continue through Thursdays with the chance of freezing rain upgraded to 20 percent changing to rain showers by late morning. High temperatures will be in the lower 40s and winds will continue northeast 10-15 mph.

Tuesdays high of 66 was 16 degrees cooler than the record high of 82 set for that date in 1950. The overnight low of 45 was 32 degrees warmer than the record low of 13 set for this date in 1940.

STATE

Snow and freezing rain is possible across portions of West Texas tonight and Thursday, but the rest of the state will continue to have wet, but unseasonably warm weather.

Forecasts are calling for mostly cloudy skies over the state through tonight with a chance of scattered showers and thunderstorms statewide. There is a chance of rain mixed with snow over the Panhandle, changing to all snow tonight.

The snow is expected to spread southward tonight, changing to freezing rain over the Permian Basin and Concho Valley early Thursday.

The scattered showers and thunderstorms over the rest of the state will continue through tomorrow.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 30s across West Texas, ranging from the 20s over the Panhandle to the 40s over southern portions, in the 40s and 50s across North Texas and in the 40s in the Hill Country and in the 50s and 60s over the rest of South Texas.

Highs Thursday will be in the mostly in the 40s across West Texas, ranging from the 30s in the Panhandle to the 50s and 60s in southern portions, in the 40s in western portions of North Texas and in the 50s and 60s elsewhere and in the 60s and 70s over all of South Texas except in the Hill Country where readings will be in the 40s.

Showers and thunderstorms were reported over portions of North Texas and West Texas and in parts of Southeast Texas early today.

Light rain fell in the San Antonio area and a dense fog advisory was in effect for the Permian Basin.

NATION

Freezing drizzle and light snow were scattered over the Plains today and heavy snow fell in the mountains of the Southwest and Colorado.

Scattered showers fell in Oklahoma, and thunderstorms developed in Texas. At Altus Air Force Base, Okla., a thunderstorm produced hail a half inch in diameter.

A few rain showers occurred in the middle Mississippi Valley, the central Appalachians, the mid-Atlantic Coast states and southeast Florida. Arkansas had dense fog. Skies were mostly clear in the Southeast and across Nevada and California.

The freezing drizzle and light snow began late Tuesday in the Dakotas, Nebraska and Kansas. A freezing drizzle advisory was issued for southeastern South Dakota.

The Western snowstorm continued today after leaving 8 inches of new snow Tuesday at a ski resort on Sunrise Mountain in eastern Arizona. A foot of snow fell in the southwest mountains of Colorado, and up to a foot more was expected. Snow also fell in eastern Colorado.

Heavy snow warnings or snow advisories were in effect today in mountain sections of Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado.

Evidence of 'post-abortion trauma' denied

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — The American Psychological Association says a survey of the scientific research on abortion suggests that most women suffer no lasting emotional problems from the procedure.

"By and large, what you find is that most of the women who have abortions experience a sense of relief," Brian Wilcox, director of public interest legislation at the APA, said in an interview on Tuesday.

The APA survey found that much research on the subject has been flawed, but it also found the notion of a post-abortion syndrome is not a "scientifically or medically recognized" disorder.

Earlier this month, U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said in a letter to the White House that there was no scientifically sound evidence showing negative health effects to the 1.5 million women who get abortions annually.

Groups opposed to abortion have promoted the idea of a "post-abortion trauma," typically by offering anecdotal evidence about individual cases.

Olivia Gans, director of a group called American Victims of Abortion, said negative findings on the effects of abortion are absent from scientific literature because the APA and the American Medical Association have a pro-abortion "bias."

But she agreed with both Wilcox and Koop that more research on the subject is needed.

Wilcox said APA experts surveyed more than 100 studies on the psychological effects of abortion and found that most were flawed scientifically because they failed to make valid comparisons. For example, Wilcox said, no studies have directly compared the relative effects on women who choose abortion with those who decide to bear an unwanted child for adoption, or raise a child out of wedlock.

In general, however, the studies do not show any lasting psychological trauma that can be attributed to abortion, he said.

"It's clear that the vast majority of women are not going to experience any significant problems," said Wilcox. "Millions of women are having abortions and it appears to be a relatively benign procedure both medically and psychologically. It just depends on the circumstances surrounding the abortion."

Wilcox said there is "the occasional woman" who has difficulty adjusting emotionally after an abortion, "but that depends on whether she has had psychological problems in the past and what motivated the abortion, or if she was forced into having an abortion."

"If a woman had to have an abortion and she didn't want it, she might feel very badly about it," he said. "But the vast majority of abortions are chosen by women."

Miss Gans, however, maintained that many women experience great difficulty after an abortion.

"Post-abortion syndrome is a theory that has been discussed by clinicians around the country among those who have seen patterns emerge," she said.

Professionals are beginning to compile research on the syndrome, "but they are having difficulty getting published," she said.

She said an organization called the Association for Interdisciplinary Research In Values and Social Change has been formed "to get some cohesion on these clinical experiences, these anecdotal bits of evidence that are coming together forming this theory."

"The association was founded because many of the members felt they were not finding the forum they need to discuss it in a scientific way," she said.

TOWER

"Some tough questions" lie ahead for Tower, Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, (D-Ga.), emphasized. "We are checking into a lot of allegations floating around. ... I hope that when we get through, we'll be able to say that we agree with President Bush."

The scope of the hearings expanded Tuesday to include testimony next week by outside witnesses, including Paul Weyrich, chairman of the Conservative Coalitions for America, who plans to attack Tower's "moral character."

Bush, in announcing his selection of Tower on Dec. 16, said a month-long background check by the Federal Bureau of Investigation gave Tower a "clean bill of health" regarding allegations of extra-marital affairs, alcoholism and conflicts of interest.

The "extensive" FBI investigation will "satisfy the most inquisitive" senators, Bush forecast.

The hearings will be "very thorough" nonetheless, said an aide to Nunn. Shortly after Tower's nomination, Nunn said that the Senate panel is "not going to play the old-boy game this go-around" and Sen. John Warner, R-Va., the senior Republican on the committee, added: "I would say John Tower will be accorded special respect, but no special privilege."

Tower, who served in the Senate for 23 years and became chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee before retirement in 1985, is widely expected to win confirmation by his former Senate colleagues.

The selection has sparked the most controversy of any of Bush's 14 Cabinet-level nominations. The other members of Bush's national security team, Secretary of State-designate James Baker III and national security adviser Brent Scowcroft, already are in place, with Baker's nomination confirmed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week. Scowcroft's appointment did not require Senate approval.

Bush has made a point of ethics in his administration, telling 65 new staff members on Monday: "It's a question of knowing right from wrong, avoiding conflicts of interest, bending over backwards to see that there's not even a perception of a conflict of interest."

Nunn said the Senate panel would examine questions of conflict of interest regarding Tower. After leaving the Senate and working as a member of the U.S. arms negotiating team in Geneva for 14 months, Tower formed Tower & Associates, a firm that received hundreds of thousands of dollars from defense contractors for work as a consultant and lobbyist.

Bush, a former congressman from Texas and director of the Central Intelligence Agency, has strong ties to Tower, who won Lyndon Johnson's Senate seat after Johnson became John F. Kennedy's vice president in 1961.

Louis Sullivan

According to Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore. and ranking Republican on the Senate Finance Committee, which has scheduled a Feb. 1 confirmation hearing for Sullivan, the doctor was mystified by all the interest in the abortion issue.

"I think he was stunned and not prepared for the fervor over something that he regarded as a relatively slight part of what would be his responsibilities, and he has the proportion right — it is a slight part," said Packwood, who supports women's right to make their own decisions on abortion.

HHS, with a nearly $400 billion budget this year, encompasses the Medicaid, Medicare and Social Security programs as well as the Public Health Service and the Food and Drug Administration.

Packwood said he was impressed with Sullivan, the founder of the Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta, and hoped he would not be hamstrung by anti-abortion concerns in his personnel appointments.

"I would hope that in picking someone who's going to head the Health Care Financing Administration, that he'd pick somebody that has some knowledge about how we can contain health costs, not are they pro-choice or anti-choice on abortion," Packwood said.

SCHOOL

Mrs. Green added that her child had once been threatened with a knife at school, but that her child didn't tell his teacher.

In response to why he didn't tell the teacher, Mrs. Green said her child told her: "He would have killed me."

Children don't respect the office of the principal and don't fear penalties they might face should they misbehave, parents said.

Another mother of a Crockett student, Kathy Chappel, told trustees her child had no discipline problems at Rusk, but had become unruly at school when he began attending Crockett.

Her son isn't ashamed of getting sent to the principal's office and in fact, told her "It's fun to go the principal's office," Mrs. Chappel said.

"I don't think one child should hold an entire elementary school under its intimidation," asserted Rick Tucker, father of children at Rusk and Crockett.

"They're manipulating the school and they're manipulating the administration because they know they can do it," Tucker said.

One mother said the problem is that there are no disciplinary guidelines for children at Crockett to follow.

"It's hard to blame the children ... they're just human," said Kathy Jordan.

Parents agreed and presented to board members a plan for the discipline of children at Crockett.

The plan ranges from small penalties such as having the child's name written on the chalk board to removal from school and placement in the Alternative Education Center.

More communication with parents was stressed in all penalties.

Banda spoke last at the school district's hearing on the matter Tuesday night.

He took full blame for any discipline problems at his campus and said he might be too lenient at times, but believes in letting "children express themselves."

"Certainly ... it's never been my intention to cause harm or to bring harm," the principal said. "I feel there is room for improvement on my part on how I've been addressing things.

"There is a request being made here to tighten the reins and I have no problem with that," Banda said.

"And if at some point my job performance ... does not meet with the expectations that (MISD Superintendent) Dr. Baressi has of me, then that matter will have to be addressed by my superiors."

CITY

City Manager Fred Poe said Midland Independent School District now owns six tracts of land and is negotiating on five others located directly across from the campus on Neely. That area is expected to be turned into a parking lot.

Poe said he has discussed the matter with two board members and is convinced the district will act on the matter, but that nothing will probably be done this school year.

Once the ordinance is passed on final reading in two weeks, it will be illegal for anyone to park in those streets between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. Violaters, according to the ordinance, could be towed or fined up to $500 per incident.

City Councilman Bob Monaghan said he fully supports the ordinance based on what he's personally seen.

Thomas said the city could modify the ordinance, should any new information come to light between now and council's next meeting scheduled for Feb. 1.

Council instructed staff to send letters to all residents living along those streets about the impending parking change.

■ Council also honored Code Enforcement Administrator George Wolf for 27½ years of service; Policewoman Wyvonna Ordener for 25½ years of service and Thomas Wright, an inspection department employee with 10 years of service, on their retirement from the city. "If you didn't notice they have 60 plus years among them," said Mayor Carroll Thomas. "They're a valued commodity to this city and they're going to be hard to replace."

The New York Stock Exchange composite index, which tracks more than 1,500 issues, added 1.86, to 161.99. The NASDAQ index of thousands of over-the-counter stocks gained a relatively modest 2, to 391.99, and the American Stock Exchange market-value index rose only 0.71, to 318.74.

A day after oil prices fell sharply, airline stocks moved higher on the Big Board. AMR gained 1¼, to 53⅜; Delta 1, to 54, and NWA 1⅛, to 59½. However, the price of a barrel of crude rebounded a bit Tuesday.

In the over-the-counter market, Radionics jumped 6⅛, to 19⅝. The company agreed to a $20-a-share tender from Expamet International PLC.

In Tokyo, the Nikkei index rose 224.80, to a record 31,557.68.

Traders said the rally was fueled by a rising dollar that drew strength from comments by Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve.

"The stock index futures were up because of Greenspan," said Peter G. Grennan, head of the stock index futures department at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

Greenspan told Congress that the central bank was unhappy with the current inflation rate and would seek to lower it, implying strongly that the Fed would push short-term interest rates higher.

Higher short-term rates, which could slow economic expansion and curb inflationary pressures, are good for the dollar, analysts said, because they attract foreign investors into American securities. Such foreign investment would also be good for stock and bond prices, they noted.

Analysts said that many on Wall Street believed that the Fed would now pursue a non-recessionary policy that curbed inflation while keeping a lid on yields on long-term bonds, the most direct competition for stocks.

SPELLING BEE 1989

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1989 Regional Spelling Bee April 15 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

chal·lənj-ing

challenging — (verb) Anyone who enters the spelling bee will find it "challenging." Something that is "challenging" arouses interest and entices someone to compete. "Challenging" is based upon the root word "challenge," which can be traced to the Latin word "calumnia" meaning "false accusation." You "challenge" someone by bringing a charge against them or by asserting a right, title, claim, or inviting them into competition. You and other spelling bee participants are "challenging" each other in the championship.

Killer blames pornography 'addiction'

Unsolved murders part of Bundy legacy

SEATTLE (AP) — After enduring more than a decade of Ted Bundy's smug silence and denials, relatives of his acknowledged victims found a chilling relief in his 11th-hour admission of a life of rape and murder.

"The only thing I can say is thank God, it's finally over," said Vivian Rancourt of LaConner, whose 18-year-old daughter, Susan, disappeared April 17, 1974. In the days before his execution Tuesday, Bundy confessed to her slaying.

But an investigator who heard some of Bundy's confessions said there were crimes the serial killer wouldn't talk about and secrets he took with him to Florida's electric chair.

The 42-year-old Bundy, who was convicted of murdering three people in Florida, admitted killing 23 other women after a decade of denial, but he left a legacy of frustration for those who suspect he killed many more.

No one knows the enormity of Bundy's crimes. FBI officials said years ago he might be implicated in 36 slayings throughout the West. But Bundy's confessions included deaths to which he had not previously been linked, such as two in Idaho, and he did not give specifics on at least 10 others in which he was a suspect.

"I don't think we have even scratched the surface with Bundy," Sheriff Pete Hayward of Salt Lake County, Utah, said after the execution. "Somewhere there is someone Bundy has told the whole story to."

Bundy confessed to eight Utah killings, but because he identified only two victims there, authorities said many cases may never be solved.

Investigators said Bundy would not answer when asked about his connection to two Utah deaths in which he is a suspect, including the October 1974 strangulation and beating death of Laura Anne Aime, 17, of Salem, Utah.

But there was no doubt Tuesday in the mind of her mother that Bundy killed her child.

"He needed to die very badly," Shirlene Aime said, but she conceded the last minutes of waiting for his execution were "horrible."

"It made me feel guilty," she said. "Despite all the things he did to my daughter and all the other girls, I started to think, 'How low am I, waiting for a man to die?' "

Her long-sought relief at Bundy's death was slow to come, she said.

"I still have this empty feeling. I'm sick to my stomach. It's an uptight, horrible feeling. But it is a relief to know he's gone, and he won't do it again."

Bundy was executed for the 1978 rape and murder of 12-year-old Kimberly Leach of Lake City, Fla. He also was convicted of killing two women in 1978 at a Florida State University sorority house. His gush of confessions in the four days before his electrocution did not include those deaths.

Robert Keppel, an investigator for the Washington state attorney general, said the law student dropout from Tacoma was unwilling in interviews to talk about some cases that gave him "painful memories," and balked at confessing to deaths before 1973.

"That seemed to be where he drew the line," said Keppel, who spent about two hours during the weekend extracting confessions.

Keppel said Bundy denied kidnapping and killing 8-year-old Ann Marie Burr in 1961, when Bundy would have been just 14. But the way Bundy talked about that crime, he left doubt about whether he might have been responsible, Keppel said.

STARKE, Fla. (AP) — Hours before his execution, Ted Bundy coolly traced his origins as a serial killer, describing how boyhood glimpses of violent pornography became "an addiction" that grew until his "destructive energy" exploded from fantasy into reality.

Bundy

The 42-year-old law school dropout, whose bizarre mixture of intelligence, charm and homicidal bloodlust were the subject of five books and a TV movie, also warned before his execution Tuesday that there were others like himself.

"There are loose in the towns and their communities people like me today whose dangerous impulses are being fueled day in, day out, by violence in the media...particularly sexual violence," Bundy said in a videotaped interview Monday.

Bundy, who after a decade of denial told detectives from four states that he had murdered 23 young women since the mid-1970s, said he deserved his punishment. His execution in the electric chair at Florida State Prison elicited cheers from more than 100 people who stood in a field across from the penitentiary.

"I don't want to die, I'm not going to kid you...(but) I deserve, certainly, the most extreme punishment society has. I think society deserves to be protected from me and from others like me," Bundy said in the interview with James Dobson, a religious broadcaster and psychologist.

He said between sobs he hoped the interview would spur society to protect itself from the widespread influence of pornography, TV violence, X-rated movies.

Although he said he felt remorse for the sex-related murders, which authorities believes could total 36 nationwide, Bundy said, "There is no way in the world that killing me is going to restore those beautiful children to their parents."

Handcuffed and sitting at a table across from Dobson, Bundy alternately sobbed and smiled during the 29-minute interview. He was dressed in the peach-colored, short-sleeved shirt worn by Death Row inmates.

He appeared to ponder each question carefully, sometimes pausing at length before answering articulately.

Dobson, who has a daily radio program heard on 1,200 radio stations, asked about the rape and murder of 12-year-old Kimberly Leach, for which Bundy was executed.

"What did you feel after that?" Dobson asked.

Bundy held his hands to his face, closed his eyes and thought for a long time before responding: "I can't talk about that right now...It's too painful...I can't begin to understand the pain that the parents of these children (felt).

"I don't ask them to forgive me. I'm not asking for it. That kind of forgiveness is of God."

Prodded by Dobson to explore the sources of his violence, Bundy said that during his murder rampages "the unique thing about how this worked...is I still felt in my regular life the full range of guilt and remorse about other things."

But the murders, he said, were "compartmentalized" in his brain, a "very well focused, very sharply focused area that was a black hole that was like a crack and everything that fell into that crack hole just disappeared."

He emphasized he didn't blame pornography for his actions and took full responsibility. But he said hardcore pornography, fueled by alcohol, "guided and shaped" what he did.

"I have lived in prison for a long time now, and I've met a lot of men who were motivated to violence just like me. And without exception, every one of them was deeply involved in pornography," he said.

Claiming he was "essentially a normal person" who grew up in a good home, Bundy said:

"People need to recognize...those of us who are or who have been so much influenced by violence in the media, in particular pornographic violence, are not some kind of inherent monsters. We are your sons and we are your husbands and we grew up in regular families. And pornography can reach out and snatch a kid out of any house today."

But Dr. Dorothy Otnow Lewis, a psychiatrist who examined Bundy as part of a last-ditch attempt to save him from execution, said Bundy's first home was that of his maternal grandparents, with a grandfather who was "an extremely violent and frightening individual." The grandfather would kick dogs, swing cats by their tails, beat people who angered him and read pornography voraciously, the New Haven, Conn., psychiatrist said.

Lewis said a cousin told her that when Bundy was a preschooler in the home in Philadelphia, he used to sneak into a greenhouse where his grandfather's pornography was kept and read it.

In the interview, Bundy said his desire to murder "happened in stages, gradually...Once you become addicted to (pornography), and I look at this as a kind of addiction like other kinds of addiction, I would keep looking for more potent, more explicit, more graphic kinds of material.

"You keep craving something that is harder, harder, something which, which gives you a greater sense of excitement. Until you reach a point where the pornography only goes so far, you reach that jumping-off point where you begin to wonder if maybe actually doing it would give you that which is beyond just reading it or looking at it.

"In the beginning it fuels this kind of thought process, then at a certain time, it is instrumental, I would say crystallizing, making into something which is almost like a separate entity inside...a building up of this destructive energy."

After committing his first murder, Bundy said, he was "absolutely horrified that I was capable of doing something like that."

"It was like coming out of some horrible trance," Bundy said. "It was like being possessed by something so awful, so alien.

"But then the impulse to do it again would come back even stronger."

Vets return to Vietnam for therapy

SEATTLE (AP) — Combat veteran Jim Kessi is hoping that by returning to Vietnam — where most everyone in his battalion was either wounded or killed — he can exorcise the demons that still haunt him after 20 years.

"Whenever I think of Vietnam...I get real sad...for the people who were killed uselessly, both Vietnamese and American," said Kessi.

"If I go back and actually see the territory again — that it is different, that there isn't that big a bogeyman out there that will cause the same thing to happen for my sons, maybe I can come to peace with it."

Kessi, 43, seven other veterans, two group therapists and a documentary film crew were to leave tonight for Vietnam. The veterans will spend three weeks traveling through the country and undergoing intensive psychiatric therapy.

Kessi said guilt was a big problem when his one-year Army tour was over.

"My first month in the field, my best friend from training drowned with six other guys" while patrolling a river in Vietnam, Kessi said. "When I got back 12 months later, I think I was the only guy out of 18 guys signed to my battalion with me who wasn't injured or dead."

Upon his return in January 1969, Kessi buried his memories and built a succession of businesses, dabbling in construction, real estate and commodities.

"I could build up something, do real well, and then destroy it. Out of guilt," he said. "I'm not supposed to be good. Why did I survive and nobody else did?"

Perhaps he will find some answers in Hanoi, the group's first stop. From there, they will go through several other cities, mostly by bus, ending up in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon. They also will visit the sites of some of the bloodiest battles of the war, including Da Nang and the Mekong Delta area. Plans also include meetings with Viet Cong and North Vietnamese army veterans.

Dr. Ray Scurfield, director of the post-traumatic stress disorder program at the Veterans Hospital at American Lake near Tacoma, will accompany the group and conduct daily sessions.

Scurfield, who did psychiatric work in Vietnam, said victims of the disorder can develop chronic symptoms that include walking nightmares, numbing, helplessness, fear that leads to rage, fear that leads to grief, anger against authority and "the system" and an inability to control emotions and actions.

The disorder often responds to intensive therapy, he said.

Bill Koutrouba, 46, who was an Army medic with three tours of duty in Vietnam, came up with the idea for the trip following a discussion about the Oscar-winning movie "Platoon."

"If I had one wish about this trip, it would be that I could come back with less guilt, because I'm guilt-driven. And with less sadness, and maybe with some reason why all those guys died."

California school shooting triggers gun control drive

By DAN FREEDMAN
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The massacre of five schoolchildren in Stockton, Calif., last week has reinvigorated the sputtering drive on Capitol Hill for gun control.

Four months after Congress failed to establish a seven-day waiting period for handgun purchases, gun-control advocates are now taking aim at semi-automatic assault rifles such as the Soviet-bloc AK-47.

Patrick Edward Purdy, 24, used a foreign-made, civilian model of that weapon in his shooting spree Jan. 17 that left five Southeast Asian immigrant children dead and 29 wounded. Purdy ended the attack by killing himself with a pistol.

Rep. Fortney H. (Pete) Stark, D-Calif., said Tuesday that he would introduce legislation next week requiring a 15-day waiting period for assault rifle purchases. Such a period would require a prospective buyer to wait 15 days after ordering such a weapon, leaving police time to do a criminal record check that might disqualify the purchase.

It would "give law enforcement officials a chance to screen the kooks out," Stark said.

Although he has not spelled out details, Stark's proposal is likely to cover semi-automatic rifles originally designed for military purposes but now being manufactured for civilian use. It probably will not cover handguns.

In 1986, Congress banned the production and import of fully automatic assault rifles and semi-automatic weapons that are easily converted to fully automatic.

Rep. William Hughes, chairman of the House Judiciary crime subcommittee, said he would conduct hearings on assault rifles within a few months.

"I've been troubled for some time about how semi-automatic weapons can be converted into automatic weapons, often just by taking a pair of pliers and snipping a cog in the rifle," Hughes said.

Stark and others favoring limitations on gun purchases say the prospects for federal legislation hinge in part on what happens in the California legislature, where Democratic leaders are pushing for a ban on assault rifles.

"We are looking to California to be a leader on this," said Barbara Lautman, spokeswoman for Handgun Control Inc., which sponsored the failed drive for the seven-day waiting period on handgun purchases.

Those pressing to make assault rifle purchases more difficult received a boost Monday from FBI director William S. Sessions, who said he could see limiting weapons that have no "purpose other than making war and killing people."

The National Rifle Association, which successfully lobbied Congress to defeat the seven-day waiting period on handgun purchases, argues semi-automatic rifles such as the AKM model used by Purdy are the same as other semi-automatics favored by hunters.

Regulation would deprive hunters of a favored weapon, said NRA lobbyist David Conover, adding that hunters want "the same thing that an automobile driver who has an automatic transmission gets — ease and convenience."

Stark decried the NRA's contention that hunters are the greatest users of assault rifles. He cited a study by the Oakland, Calif. police department, which found that three-fourths of 350 guns confiscated in drug raids in 1987 were assault rifles traced to one store in San Leandro, Calif.

Most of the guns seized were semi-automatics.

Stark said that "there isn't much pheasant hunting" in downtown Oakland and that he has never seen "a dove, quail or self-respecting mallard" there.

The 1986 ban covers the AK-47, the standard issue weapon of Soviet bloc troops since the 1950s, from which the AKM used by Purdy was derived.

Leaders pushing budget agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pressure to get an agreement on a federal budget is very strong, the House Democratic leader said today, because nobody wants to see an across-the-board cut in federal programs.

"We have a target pretty much of a budget resolution by about the 15th of April," Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., House majority leader, said on the "CBS This Morning" television program.

"Nine months from now we run into the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (deficit-reduction) deadlines. That means you're going to have an across-the-board cut in both defense and domestic accounts, unless they're exempt accounts, which will take care of the budget deficit targets if we don't have a budget plan that's agreed on between the House and the Senate and the administration," he said.

"That sort of pressure to get an agreement is very strong, because no one wants to see ... an across-the-board cut," Foley said.

President Bush met Tuesday with Foley and other congressional leaders to set the stage for this year's budget work. He plans to speak about his administration's priorities in an address to Congress on Feb. 9 and then detail his budget proposals soon thereafter.

Rep. Robert Michel, R-Ill, the House minority leader, said he hoped the time frame would be telescoped to considerably less than nine months.

"We'd like to do as we did last year, get our appropriations bills out on time. That means that the budget resolution and its allocations ought to be done just as quickly and speedily as possible," he said.

Foley said he wants to see the specifics of Bush's budget before making any decision on a budget summit.

"We haven't decided on a precise formula or process yet but we are listening to the president's suggestions and we are promising to get back to him after we hear the specifics of his budget," he said.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, made a point Tuesday of emphasizing there would be consultations, not negotiations.

"We'd like to wait and until we see a budget, until we see where the areas of agreement and disagreement would be, before we consult," Wright said.

Wright presented Bush a jar of pork rinds and some hot pepper sauce, one of the president's favorite snacks.

"There is (a) good atmosphere," said George Mitchell, D-Maine, the Senate Majority Leader.

The president's choice for budget director, Richard Darman, suggested weekly meetings between the White House and selected leaders from Congress in order to expedite the budget process.

But while lawmakers said they'd be glad to meet, and would work to keep the process running on time, none was ready to put a new team of negotiators above the committees already charged with working out spending plans.

"The president's team will be welcomed, as soon as they want to come, by our budget committees," Wright said.

"It would be to our advantage to have the leadership meet in an informal sort of way from time to time, moving the process along," said Michel. He did not support bypassing the current process, he said.

Although there is precedent for a budget "summit" — one occurred in late 1987 after the stock market crisis — it is unpopular on Capitol Hill because it cuts most lawmakers out of the process. In addition, cautious congressional leaders do not want to be wedded in any way to the Bush budget proposals until they are made public.

Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., chairman of the House Budget Committee, said the president needed first to send up his budget and then begin discussions without setting up a new framework.

While a "summit" can serve a function, it also carries the risk of leaving the rest of Congress behind — and alienating the votes needed to enact the results, he said.

"You could cut a deal at a high level only to find out that members aren't going to be with you when it comes to a vote," he said. "A worse thing than failing to get an agreement is getting an agreement that fails."

Episcopal woman bishop elected

BOSTON (AP) — The election of the first woman bishop of the Episcopal Church has been approved over some adamant objections, but church officials say they don't expect the misgivings to develop into a schism.

Tuesday's mail brought the 60th ballot required to give the Rev. Barbara C. Harris approval from a majority of the 118 Episcopal bishops around the nation, said the Rev. James Solheim, spokesman for the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts.

Harris

Those votes ratified the Sept. 24 election of Harris by the Boston diocese. The selection of Harris, a former public relations executive who is black and was once divorced, sent tremors through world Anglicanism.

When she is consecrated Feb. 11 in Boston, Harris will become the first woman bishop elected by a 2.5 million-member church that believes its leaders to be direct successors of Christ's apostles.

"This is the first time in the history of our church that the full breadth of ministry is coming into focus," Bishop David Johnson said in a statement Tuesday.

Presiding Bishop Edmond Browning, who heads the church, said the consecration would be "momentous" and "a time of great celebration."

Supporters of Harris have said she is qualified for the job and her election will broaden the church's outreach.

The Rev. James Lewis, director of social ministry for the Diocese of North Carolina, has said opposition to her election reflected a tradition of the church heirarchy being "a white gentleman's club."

But critics have said the 58-year-old Harris is too liberal in her political views, or unqualified because of her lack of a degree from a college or seminary. Some have been concerned by her divorce, while church conservatives have opposed her election simply because she is a woman.

The Rev. Andrew Mead, rector of the Church of the Advent in Boston, said Tuesday he would neither recognize the consecration nor allow Harris to conduct religious services in his parish.

"I'd invite her for tea," Mead said, adding that her consecration "is against the Catholic tradition. We're supposed to be part of the Catholic Church. This just ensures the drift of the Episcopal Church to Protestantism."

Mead isn't the only one concerned that election could damage efforts at reconciliation between the Episcopal, Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox churches.

In December, Pope John Paul II told a group of cardinals that the consecration of a female bishop "poses serious obstacles to that progress in reciprocal reconciliation, which in the course of recent decades has arrived at such promising results."

On Tuesday, Bishop Raymond W. Lessard of Savannah, Ga., a Roman Catholic representative on a 24-member international commission carrying on reconciliation talks, said Harris' election "represents a new, major obstacle" in the negotiations.

"It is simply exacerbating the situation," said Bishop Athenagoras, who serves as ecumenical affairs officer in the New York headquarters of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America.

Johnson, who heads the 96,000-member Boston diocese, said he does not expect a serious rift to develop within the Episcopal church.

"I hope there is a way for those who find it difficult to accept the reality of a woman in the episcopate to experience it for themselves," he said.

Bush names panel to stop 'sleaze factor'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is naming a panel to recommend standards of conduct for government officials, in an attempt to ensure that he does not face the same allegations of an administration "sleaze factor" that dogged his predecessor.

Largely to counter such complaints about the Reagan administration, Bush during his campaign promised to create the panel as one of his first acts in office.

Bush today was scheduled to sign an executive order creating the advisory commission on ethics. It will be chaired by Griffin Bell, the former attorney general in the Carter administration, and Malcolm Wilkey, a senior judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, the White House said Tuesday.

Other panel members will include former White House counsels Fred Fielding and Lloyd Cutler, and Washington attorney Jan Baran, said White House spokeswoman Alixe Glen. She said she could not confirm the two remaining names.

On Tuesday, Bush asked the director of the Office of Government Ethics, Frank Nebeker, to brief all senior administration officials on ethical and conflict-of-interest standards required of them, said White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Bush had proposed during his campaign that such briefings be held on an annual basis, and Nebeker wrote to him on the day after the Nov. 8 election offering to conduct the sessions, said Fitzwater.

Fitzwater said the 10-minute meeting with Nebeker on Tuesday was for "symbolic value" to emphasize the importance Bush attaches to ethical conduct.

More than 100 members of the Reagan administration, in which Bush served as vice president, were at various times accused of unethical or improper behavior. Two of President Reagan's closest advisers, Lynn Nofziger and Michael Deaver, were convicted of offenses associated with their lobbying after they left the administration, while a string of allegations against Reagan's longtime friend and attorney general, Edwin Meese III, battered the Justice Department.

An independent prosecutor declined to seek indictment of Meese, but the Justice Department's own ethics office concluded this month that he had engaged in conduct "that should not be tolerated of any government employee."

Democrats assailed the "sleaze factor" and used it as ammunition in the fall campaigns. Bush responded by saying repeatedly that he intended to have an administration that hews to high ethical standards.

Bush supported President Reagan's veto of ethics legislation passed by Congress last year, but said he wants to introduce his own package.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reputed mob boss free on bail

NEW YORK (AP) — Reputed mob boss John Gotti, who according to his attorney "has never run away from a problem," walked out of a courtroom free on bail after being accused of ordering the shooting of a construction union official.

"Did I ever worry yet?" a smiling Gotti asked reporters waiting for him as he arrived back at his home 20 hours after being arrested by dozens of law officers on a street in Little Italy.

At a bail hearing Tuesday, the prosecution asked that Gotti be held without bail, arguing that the reputed head of the Gambino crime family had access to massive sums of mob money and would flee if freed.

Gotti's income is "literally that of the family," Assistant District Attorney Michael Cherkasky told acting Judge George Roberts.

But Gotti's lawyer, Bruce Cutler, said Gotti has strong family ties here and had never failed to appear for a court date.

Roberts set Gotti's bail at $100,000, and about an hour later the 48-year-old Gotti was back on the streets.

Brown emerges as front-runner

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney Ronald Brown has emerged as the front-runner in the race for Democratic Party chairman, despite complaints from party conservatives about his association with Jesse Jackson in the 1988 presidential campaign.

Brown picked up endorsements from West Virginia Democrats on Tuesday, the latest in a series of announcements that cemented his position as the man to beat in the race to succeed Paul G. Kirk Jr. as chairman of the party.

At the same time, an Alabama party leader said election of Brown as chairman would be a victory for the "Kennedy, Cuomo, Dukakis ultra-liberal element."

John Baker, Alabama Democratic Party chairman, said Brown was trying "play on the liberal conscience" by making an issue of the fact that he is black and had ties to Jackson.

Among those who have endorsed Brown, who was Jackson's convention manager last year, are Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and New York Gov. Mario Cuoo. Party sources said Michael Dukakis would add his backing to Brown by week's end and that Democratic National Committee members from Massachusetts would join their governor in that endorsement.

Also competing for the party leadership are Michigan Democratic Party chairman Richard Wiener and former Reps. Jim Jones of Oklahoma and James Stanton of Ohio.

Bid made to get North's papers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prosecutors are making a final pre-trial attempt to subpoena notebooks which fired National Security Council aide Oliver North compiled on his daily activities in the Iran-Contra affair.

The notebooks delve into North's assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras and his involvement in the Reagan administration's secret arms shipments to Iran.

Defense attorneys are challenging on Fifth Amendment grounds efforts by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh to obtain a subpoena for the notebooks, the last of which North took with him when he was dismissed on Nov. 25, 1986 after the diversion of Iran arms sale proceeds to the Contras was uncovered.

Hamburglar takes Big Mac buns

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Police found some of the "hot buns" but not the "hamburglar" who stole 150 rolls from a fast-food restaurant.

The theft occurred between 10:45 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. Sunday at the McDonald's restaurant across the street from the police administration building, authorities said Tuesday.

Five trays, each containing 30 of Big Mac rolls, were taken from a storage area of the restaurant.

The restaurant's manager later received an anonymous telephone tip that the rolls could be found in a vacant house less than a mile away, according to a police report. Police searched the house and recovered four of the missing trays still loaded with rolls.

One tray of 30 rolls, worth $20, was not found, police said.

Thompson protest out of character

The protest walkout staged the other night by Georgetown University basketball coach John Thompson against the NCAA's new eligibility rule was out of character. Thompson has built a reputation as a coach who has high standards for his players, both on and off the basketball court. Why then should he object to the National Collegiate Athletic Association's having some minimal academic standards of its own?

Four years ago, to stop the athletic exploitation of academically unqualified freshmen, the NCAA passed Proposition 48, barring freshman athletic eligibility for students admitted with high school grade point averages below 2.0 and combined Scholastic Aptitute Test scores below 700. However, in a loophole, the NCAA permitted member colleges to give athletic scholarships to athletes who met one part of that standard. The result at several schools was scandal, as athletic departments engineered higher grades for ineligible freshman athletes. With its new Proposition 42, narrowly passed a few days ago, the NCAA eliminated that loophole, forbidding member schools from giving athletic scholarships to students who don't meet the standards.

Thompson and other coaches charge that the rule is racist and is meant to drive black athletes out of major universities. He objects particularly to using college entrance test scores as a standard, charging that they are culturally biased.

That's an insult to black students. The majority of college-bound black students, and 80 percent of college-bound students as a whole, score above 700 on the SAT. While it's true that the new rule will deny athletic scholarships to about 600 students a year, most of them black, those scholarships won't disappear. They will go, instead, to athletes, many of them black, who may not have the same dazzling moves on the basketball court or football field, but who have paid more attention to the classroom and who will now be given an opportunity for scholarships that the superstars would have otherwise taken.

The NCAA's new rule sends a clear message to young athletes, their high schools and parents: You can't just dribble, pass or run your way into college. To win a scholarship, an athlete must put in some time with the books, too, learning enough to meet at least minimal academic levels. That rule may make life more difficult for coaches and some athletes, but it tells kids who need to be told that there are some standards in life that may have nothing to do with jump shots and hip fakes.

Another View:

Tax-hike rhetoric

No sooner was the election over than Washington politicians began a drumfire of rhetoric insisting that taxes would have to be raised. This despite the fact that only one presidential candidate, Democrat Bruce Babbitt, dared say so on the campaign trail, and he was knocked out of the race in March.

Those who dwell in our nation's capital — Republicans as well as Democrats — seem to have a well-nigh insatiable appetite for ever more of the taxpayer's money. The size of that appetite became evident when the Reagan White House released its final budget (which would cut the deficit to $92.5 billion).

The document was widely hooted at as being "based on wildly optimistic assumptions about the economy." Members of Congress should have consulted their own budget office first. The bottom line is that both the Congressional Budget Office and the White House Office of Management and Budget agree that in 1990, even without a tax increase, federal revenues will increase by about $84 billion.

Read our lips: That's $84 billion in higher revenues from present taxes.

The OMB's forecast assumes higher real GNP growth and lower inflation, while the CBO assumes lower real GNP growth and higher inflation — but they both agree on the final revenue number, which is almost a record increase for one year. We hereby suggest a product for some enterprising entrepreneur out there: a new lapel button with the slogan, "$84 Billion Is Enough!"

Indeed it is. It will take about $55 billion of that to reach the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction target for this year of $100 billion. That will leave no less than $30 billion for new spending growth.

Why, then, the nearly unanimous agreement that President Bush will have to "compromise" and raise taxes? Two reasons: First, because it would destroy his credibility with the public and be a political victory for his critics; and second, because the liberal faction in Congress wants to increase total federal spending as a share of the economy and do it in the name of "deficit reduction."

Since 1985, federal spending as a share of GNP has fallen from 24 percent to 22.2 percent this year, and will fall to 21 percent under the final Reagan-proposed budget. This means that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has worked well, holding outlay growth in constant dollars to about 1 percent a year between 1985-1989.

As for the complaint that this administration is always too optimistic in its economic assumptions, we did a little arithmetic. We added up the original Reagan administration revenue forecasts for six years (1984-1989) and compared them with the actual revenues for that period, and the difference came to $21.9 billion, or $3.7 billion a year. That's about 0.4 of a percentage point a year of "wildly optimistic" forecasting.

That's not worth yelling about — and Congress knows it. Every member who calls for new taxes should be made to go to the blackboard and write "$84 Billion Is Enough!" 100 times.

Baker staff wary of Soviet motives

WASHINGTON — As James Baker prepares to take charge of U.S. foreign policy, he appears to be in easy command of an awesome array of strategic concepts and tactical details. He already exercises a calm mastery over foreign affairs.

Jack Anderson

But sources close to Baker tell us that, privately, he feels insecure about foreign policy. He has deployed two seasoned veterans to protect his flanks — Brent Scowcroft as national security adviser and Lawrence Eagleburger as deputy secretary of state.

Both come out of Henry Kissinger's shop, a consulting firm called Kissinger Associates. This could mean that Kissinger will be the shadow secretary of state, guiding foreign policy from behind the scenes.

Eagleburger is as cynical and pragmatic as Kissinger. He alternates cigarettes with an inhaler to clear his lungs. Scowcroft is a modest, conscientious man who shuns the spotlight.

A source who knows both men says they share Kissinger's distrust of the Soviet Union. They suspect that behind Mikhail Gorbachev's amiability could be a move to diminish American influence in Europe. As Kissinger, Scowcroft and Eagleburger see it, that could lead to a Europe dominated by the Soviet Union. Then the Soviets could nourish their sick economy by feeding off of Western Europe.

Kissinger Associates doesn't regard Gorbachev as a born-again Western liberal, but as a hard-bitten communist who has been forced by a failing economy to adopt Western methods.

In the Kissinger view, Gorbachev cannot count on continued public support just because he has reformed and softened the Soviet system. Most Soviets have adjusted to the communist dictatorship; they have learned to live with it. At this point, they are more concerned about food on the table than about any intangible new freedoms.

To maintain popular support for his reforms, Gorbachev must improve the quality of daily life in the Soviet Union, so he is turning to Western ideas for a quick economic fix.

Meanwhile, his reforms are opposed by the entrenched commissars and bureaucrats who support the hardliners in the Kremlin. Should Gorbachev falter, he would likely be succeeded by a repressive regime which would discard his reforms, crack down on the populace and revive the Cold War.

Kissinger and company believe it would be a dangerous mistake for the United States to let down its guard and base its foreign policy on Gorbachev.

They fear the greatest danger could come from Eastern Europe. Now that the Soviets have relaxed their grip on their satellites, they might show too much independence and antagonize the Kremlin.

The views of Kissinger, Scowcroft and Eagleburger add up to a Europe-first policy. But other strategists believe the danger lies not in Europe but in Asia. They point out that national security has three dimensions — military, economic and political. The United States may be a military superpower, but if its economy declines and its people lose confidence in the government, then the nation would become vulnerable.

Thus, these strategists contend, the real threat to U.S. security is posed by Japanese economic power, not Soviet military power. But with Scowcroft and Eagleburger in positions of influence, Kissinger's view is likely to prevail.

ENFORCEMENT SLIPS — Inside traders and white-collar criminals will love the budget that the Bush administration is planning for the Securities and Exchange Commission, the agency that polices Wall Street. On paper, the SEC will get a budget increase, but because of pay raises and automatic spending increases, the enforcement arm of the agency will have to do with less. That will thwart investigations that rely on innovative techniques for keeping up with the stock market wizards.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Last fall, the Chinese government made a pretense of wanting to settle its differences with Tibet, the province China annexed more than 30 years ago. The government offered to meet with the exiled Tibetan leader, the Dalai Lama. Apparently that was a hollow offer. No attempt has been made to open negotiations and the Chinese are operating business as usual in Tibet, which means killing Tibetans. Last month when Tibetan monks and nuns held a peaceful demonstration for human rights, Chinese police stormed the small group with guns blazing. The Chinese have a funny notion of rapprochement.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Jan. 25, the 25th day of 1989. There are 340 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 25, 1787, Shays' Rebellion suffered a setback when debt-ridden farmers led by Captain Daniel Shays failed to capture an arsenal at Springfield, Mass. (Shays, who escaped, was later condemned to death but eventually pardoned.)

On this date:

In 1533, England's King Henry VIII married Anne Boleyn.

In 1579, the Treaty of Utrecht was signed, marking the beginning of the Dutch Republic.

In 1890, reporter Nellie Bly (Elizabeth Cochrane) of the "New York World" received a tumultuous welcome home after she completed a round-the-world journey in 72 days, six hours and 11 minutes.

In 1915, the inventor of the telephone, Alexander Graham Bell, inaugurated U.S. transcontinental telephone service.

Today's birthdays: Journalist and author Edwin Newman is 70. The president of the Philippines, Corazon Aquino, is 56. Actress Elizabeth Allen is 55.

In 1946, the United Mine Workers rejoined the American Federation of Labor.

In 1959, American Airlines opened the jet age in the United States with the first scheduled transcontinental flight of a Boeing 707.

In 1961, President John F. Kennedy held the first presidential news conference to be televised live.

In 1971, Charles Manson and three young women followers were convicted in Los Angeles of the 1969 Tate-LaBianca murders.

In 1978, Muriel Humphrey was appointed to fill the U.S. Senate seat left vacant by the death of her husband, Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota.

In 1981, the 52 Americans held hostage by Iran for 444 days arrived back in the United States.

'Bump, bump, bump' isn't a monster sound

Grizzard

That's the only way you can get to Melrose. By boat. Unless you have your own helicopter, I suppose. You could probably land out on the 18th hole of the golf course, but there is a monster that lives in the ocean just behind the tee, and it sucks golf balls down into its briny depths.

It might do the same to a helicopter.

Anyway, speaking of monsters, at about 3 a.m., I wasn't sure there was another living soul at Melrose besides me.

I'm the only non-staff person currently staying at Melrose. I don't know why there's no other guests here.

The weather's been great — warm and sunny — the golf course isn't crowded, since I'm the only one playing.

But at 3 a.m. it occurred to me, maybe all the cooks and waiters and waitresses and bartenders and golf pros have gone home and I might be the only one inside the gates.

It was 3 a.m. when I started hearing the bumps outside my cottage.

The sound went "bump, bump, bump." Then there would be a pause, and then another "bump, bump, bump."

There are a lot of swamps and marshes at Melrose. Things with three eyes could live in those swamps and marshes.

And what if a mad-dog killer had jumped off a prison boat and had swum to shore and was looking for a throat to cut because his parents had made him dress up like a little girl when he was a kid?

Naaaah.

Then, the bumps started again. What if I am alone? What if no one could hear my screams? There are alligators all over Melrose. What if this were the revenge of the alligators?

I'm usually not easily frightened. No, that's a lie. I'm very easily frightened — especially at 3 a.m. when something is making noise outside my window.

I turned on the light. I reached for the phone. I dialed "O." God, let somebody answer.

Somebody answered. It was the Melrose operator. I told him something was making bumping noises outside my window.

"Want me to call Security?" he asked.

"Hell, no, call the National Guard!" is what I was thinking. What I said was, "Yes, please call Security."

A guy showed up armed with a flashlight. A flashlight. What is he going to do with a mad-dog killer? Shine a light in his eyes until he gives up?

"Probably raccoons," said the guy with the flashlight.

"You've never had any mad-dog killers here?" I asked.

"Not since I've been here, but I just started," said Mr. Flashlight.

He drove away. I tried to go back to sleep. Then, I heard the bumping again.

Probably raccoons, I said to myself.

Morning came, I was still alive. The cooks and the waiters and the waitresses and the bartenders and the golf pros all came back.

The monster at the 18th hole got my golf ball again.

ART BUCHWALD

It's redecorating time in Washington, D.C.

What kind of big changes are going on in Washington now that we have a new President?

If there are any at all, they are taking place among the lawyers and lobbyists who make their living persuading our elected officials that what's good for their clients is good for the country.

Art Buchwald

I dropped in to see the lawyer-lobbyist, Norton Nesbitt, the day after the Inauguration. He was removing all the photographs of Reagan appointees and replacing them with autographed pictures of Bush people.

"Redecorating the office?" I asked.

"Just changing the decor a little," he replied. "You get tired looking at the same faces all the time."

"You're not throwing an autographed picture of Ed Meese in the trash can, are you?"

"What kind of a friend do you think I am? I'm taking it home and putting it in the bathroom. Ed was good to me. He always took my calls."

"I can understand you taking Ed Meese off the wall, but how can you discard a picture of you and Cap Weinberger, particularly when he signed it 'To Ted, with Admiration'?"

"I need that space for a golf photo of me and Secretary of State Jim Baker."

"Can I see it?"

"I don't have it yet, but I'll get one at the next Republican fund-raiser."

"I notice that you have a big gap where you used to have an autographed photo of Ronald Reagan."

"Yeh, I decided to take Ronnie down and put him in the store room so that no one will steal him."

"Who are you planning to put in his spot?"

"I'm waiting for a picture of the big guy."

"You mean President Bush?"

Nesbitt said, "I could kill myself. I had thousands of opportunities to have my picture taken with him when he was Vice President. I remember one time I was at the New Jersey State Fair for the crowning of Miss Bergen County, and George wanted to get a photo with me. I turned him down and went off to get myself a beer."

"You really blew it."

"How was I supposed to know he was going to be President? Whoever heard of having your picture taken with a Vice President of the United States?"

"I just hope for your sake that Bush doesn't remember that you walked away from him."

"I doubt it. People were doing it to him all the time. I have someone in the White House working on an autographed picture of the Prez right now. They owe me for all the money I raised for the party in Michigan."

"Nesbitt, people will think of you as a good lobbyist whether you have a photo with the President or not."

"That may be true of those who know me, but what about the potential clients who don't? They will only judge me on the basis of whose picture I have hanging on the wall. This is a dog-eat-dog business and the reason that they hire you is because they think you have access to the top dogs."

"I guess once they're out of power there is no reason to keep in touch with the Reagan people any more."

"Some folks may feel that way — but I don't. Those I dealt with during the Reagan years are still my friends — regardless of what they are doing now."

Nesbitt's secretary came up to him and said, "George Shultz is on the phone."

"Well, for God's sake, don't tell him I'm here." He turned to me, "The man thinks I have nothing to do but chat with him on the phone."

Salvadoran rebels score hit with peace proposal

An Analysis

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas are likely to be politically strengthened by their startling offer to take part in elections, whether the proposal prospers or dies on the vine.

Even government officials grudgingly admit the insurgents will probably be bolstered by the surprise proposal made Tuesday.

One high-ranking Cabinet official likened the guerrillas' offer to a bomb and complimented the rebels on devising such a powerful weapon.

"It is very ably constructed. You have to take it apart very carefully and examine all the component parts in trying to deactivate it," he said of the rebels' radical policy shift.

The Cabinet official spoke on condition of anonymity because the government has not formally responded to the rebel proposal.

Fidel Chavez Mena, the incumbent Christian Democrats' presidential candidate in this year's election, said Tuesday the rebels' main condition for participating in the vote could not be met.

The guerrillas said elections set for March 19 should be postponed until September, but the Constitution prohibits such a postponement.

The proposal from the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front can be taken at face value — or it can be examined for possible ulterior motives.

A nine-year-old civil war has devastated this Massachusetts-sized nation, killing 65,000 of its people, making refugees of a million and ruining the economy.

The guerrillas, who have called previous elections this decade "farces" and part of a counterinsurgency plan, may simply want to end the war.

"The country is headed for a social explosion. We feel a responsibility to explore possible alternatives. We are being responsible and flexible," Ana Guadalupe Martinez, a member of the guerrilla General Command, told a news conference Tuesday in Mexico City.

"Flexibility is a sign of strength," said Salvador Samayoa, a member of the guerrillas' political-diplomatic committee.

The rebel document's authors said their offer was partially motivated by "an international situation in which the majority of wars are being resolved by means of negotiation."

Negotiations have recently produced agreements to seek an end conflicts in Afghanistan and Angola, among other countries. The Contra insurgency in Nicaragua has also been quieted by a preliminary cease-fire agreement.

A rebel source in Mexico said: "There is a wave of negotiations in the world. We want to look for a solution that is not so drastic (as war) so the country's fall won't be so drastic."

The guerrillas don't just want to end the war — they presumably want to win it. Their proposal, especially if rejected, could improve their standing.

Reporters who recently spent time with guerrillas in the hills of Chalatenango and Morazan provinces, both rebel strongholds, heard leaders talk of preparations for a big push in coming weeks.

The insurgents launched two nationwide offensives late last year. During the past three months they have hit four major military installations in the capital, bringing a predominantly rural war to the city.

The guerrillas appear heady, and sources close to them confirmed that attacks will increase if the proposal gets nowhere.

If the rebels do step up their attacks, they likely will point to rejection of their election overture as a spurning that left them no alternative but to escalate warfare against an intransigent regime.

Most military observers say the 7,000 rebels have little chance of defeating the 56,000-man army. The rebels say they are organizing rural and urban sympathizers and that the moment for mass insurrection is not far off.

WORLD

Argentine president tours site of 'leftist' insurrection

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Raul Alfonsin declared all-out war on leftist subversion after touring a suburban army base where at least 36 people were killed in a battle between troops and besieged civilian commandos.

Troops were still scouring the smoldering rubble of the ravaged La Tablada base Tuesday night as Alfonsin told the nation the attack was "a new challenge that I believe is the most serious and decisive of my administration."

The 3rd Infantry Regiment base was seized Monday by heavily armed civilians and retaken a day later by army and police forces who had pummeled commando positions with howitzers, mortars, grenades and machine-gun fire.

In his nationally broadcast speech, the president recalled his impressions of the base and the charred and mangled corpses he encountered there: "It was a nightmare. Death, once again death. The brutality, the barbarity."

He said seven soldiers, one policeman and 28 commandos were killed and that all but four of the 67 wounded were soldiers and policemen.

Authorities said troops captured 14 of the commandos, who apparently intended to steal weapons from the base and quickly flee.

Alfonsin described the attackers as "irregular elements of ultra-leftist affiliation," citing a written proclamation found at the base as "evidence of their hallucination."

A copy of the proclamation given to reporters said the base was seized to pre-empt a purportedly imminent coup by right-wing army officers.

Alfonsin was elected in 1983 to end a nearly eight-year military dictatorship during which 8,900 suspected leftist subversives were arrested and vanished without a trace, presumably murdered by security forces.

Soviet officials lower toll from Asian quake

SHARORA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Officials said today the death toll from an earthquake and mudslide in Soviet Central Asia was only about a quarter of the 1,000 originally estimated, and they called off efforts to find more survivors.

"We will transform the settlement of Sharora into a common grave with a monument to commemorate the victims of this catastrophe," said Khusain Kasymov, Communist Party chief in the Tadzhikistan republic's stricken Gissar region.

He said there was no hope of finding more survivors in Sharora, where 52 homes were buried and 100 bodies were hauled from the mud and debris.

The republic's prime minister, Izzatullo Khayoyev, said 274 people were known to have died in Monday's pre-dawn quake, which toppled all 88 mud-brick dwellings in Okuli-Bolo and sent mudslides as high as 50 feet onto the villages of Sharora and Okuli-Poyen.

"There may be a difference of five or seven people in the casualties, but no more," Khayoyev said in an interview on a grassy hill overlooking Okuli-Bolo, 20 miles southwest of the capital, Dushanbe.

The official Tass news agency earlier made a preliminary estimate that up to 1,000 people died in the quake and mudslide. Officials on the scene did not explain the discrepancy in figures.

A day of mourning was declared in Tadzhikistan, which borders China and Afghanistan. All flags were at half-staff, plays and concerts were canceled and restaurants were closed.

"The bitter truth is that nobody can be rescued from under a landslide provoked by the earthquake," Tass said.

But there were stories of miraculous survival.

Kholmurod Barotov, 17, of Sharora said his 6-day-old cousin survived the quake held above the torrent of mud by her father, who perished.

One man, 27-year-old Sergei Muratov, was found alive buried in the mud, the prime minister said. Tass said Muratov was in grave condition at a Dushanbe hospital.

The agency said Sharora, the largest of the stricken villages, would be rebuilt near its former site and that construction would begin in several days.

The 40-second tremor, which measured 5.4 on the Richter scale, hit before dawn Monday..

Violence affects Arab children in Israel's occupied territories

By LOUIS MEIXLER

JERUSALEM (AP) — During a kindergarten show-and-tell period in the occupied Gaza Strip, a pupil told of throwing a rock at an Israeli army jeep, causing it to overturn and kill the soldiers in it.

It was all in the child's imagination, of course, said kindergarten administrator Mary Khas in describing what Arab educators and psychologists say is a trend of violent fantasies of children growing up in the 13-month Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation of the Gaza Strip and West Bank.

The experts said Arab children who are 5 and 6 years old will become more aggressive as they become desensitized to the violence and predicted the Israeli-Palestinian conflict may become more brutal as the children grow up.

"All the children have these fantasies," said Khas, director of the American Friends Service Committee's kindergarten program in the Gaza Strip, which runs 14 schools for 1,500 pupils.

She said the violent behavior also shows up on the playground.

"When they're alone they play a game called Arabs and Jews," she said. "They bang on doors and arrest each other.

"I saw one child, who played an Israeli, holding another boy's head to the sand and screaming, 'yamous, yamous,' lick it, lick it, imitating the Hebrew-accented Arabic the soldiers speak," she said.

Bethlehem University's Nadira Kvorkian said such hostile feelings are spilling over into family life.

"The children are learning how to deal with problems in a violent way and I'm seeing more fa mily violence," Kvorkian said. From last May to August, she studied the effects of the uprising on 80 Palestinian children 11 to 14 years old.

"When they have an argument with their brothers the first thing they think of is fighting, of throwing stones," she said.

Kvorkian said the children also are becoming alienated from their families, which they see as incapable of protecting them from the Israeli army.

"Children complain that the family can't solve their problems and parents are now afraid of their children," Kvorkian said.

"They try to keep the kids inside so they don't throw stones, but the children want to act like men," she said. "They feel that their parents have been sitting in the refugee camps and doing nothing for 40 years."

Most of the refugees have been living in camps since fleeing from what is now Israel in the 1948 Middle East war. Others came to the camps after Israel captured the West Bank from Jordan and the Gaza Strip from Egypt during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

The generation gap was illustrated in another study in which the Arab father, the traditional role model in Palestinian society, was shown as virtually powerless in the dreams of 11-year-old children in refugee camps.

In 58 out of 75 dreams involving the Arab-Israeli conflict, the father was incapable of rescuing his family from the army, according to a study by Dr. Shafiq Masalha for Save the Children, an international relief organization.

Masalha said that in a typical dream a child will say: "The army entered our house and tied up my father in front of my eyes. I screamed, 'God help us, our lives are in danger.' Then I woke up."

Masalha and a research team of four interviewed 24 children in July 1988 for his clinical study.

He said 70 percent of the dreams he randomly collected centered on the Israeli-Arab struggle. In a similar study in 1982, the conflict appeared in 50 percent of the dreams.

"In dreams there are more confrontations with the Israeli army, and the children are afraid," Masalha said. "But in the dreams I analyzed before the uprising the children sometimes panicked in the confrontations and the dreams became nightmares.

"I see this much less now," he said.

Masalha said the children are growing less fearful of the military and increasingly identifying with the "shebab," the young, rock-throwing Palestinians who confront the Israeli army.

Khas said pre-schoolers have come to idolize the shebab.

WORLD in brief

Scandal claims third Japanese minister

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita today rejected opposition calls for him to quit after a third member of his Cabinet resigned over links to a company at the center of a stock-trading scandal.

Harada

Also today, the Labor Ministry announced the resignations of its two top bureaucrats who also have been linked to the company.

Takeshita, scheduled to travel to Washington in a week for a meeting with President Bush, was hit Tuesday with the resignation of Ken Harada from the Cabinet post of director general of the Economic Planning Agency.

Harada, 69, had been appointed Dec. 27 when Takeshita brought 15 new faces into his scandal-plagued administration in an effort to erase the taint of money links to the Recruit Co., an information-based conglomerate.

But Takeshita's justice minister, Takashi Hasegawa, resigned after only three days and now Harada has quit. In the case of both men, news reports had revealed that they continued to take political donations from Recruit months after the scandal became front-page news last summer.

Bush soon may visit China

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — President Bush will make an official visit to China on Feb. 25-26, the official Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported from Beijing today.

The agency, quoting unnamed sources, said the two-day visit would follow Bush's trip to Tokyo to attend the funeral of Japan's late emperor Hirohito.

In Washington, White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk denied the report, saying, "There are no plans at this time."

China's Foreign Ministry has not yet confirmed the report on Bush's impending visit, but its spokesman has recently said that the U.S. president "would be welcome in China," Tanjug reported.

Chemical firms searched

OFFENBURG, West Germany (AP) — Prosecutors today searched the offices of 14 West German companies suspected of helping Libya build a chemical weapons factory, authorities said.

A spokesman for the prosecutor's office in Offenburg, Hubertus Voegele, said one of the firms searched was Imhausen-Chemie in Lahr, which is suspected of playing a major role in building and equipping the Libyan plant.

Voegele said the searches were conducted "on suspicion that export laws had been violated." He declined to name the other firms whose offices were searched, but added they were located throughout the country.

The U.S. government says the plant at Rabta, 60 miles south of the Libyan capital of Tripoli, was built to make poison gas. Libya says it will manufacture medicine.

Bonn officials initially dismissed the U.S. allegations, but have now launched a criminal investigation to determine if Imhausen-Chemie and other companies illegally shipped arms, hazardous substances or components that can be used to produce them.

Tuesday, news reports said an Imhausen-Chemie employee had confirmed allegations the company played a key role in building the Libyan plant.

Nurse's hobby wins award

LONDON (AP) — A psychiatric nurse who turned to writing as a hobby won the Whitbread Book of the Year award for his first novel "The Comforts of Madness."

Paul Sayer, 33, received the $34,000 prize Tuesday from an 11-judge panel for his harrowing story about long-term psychiatric hospital patients who cannot speak.

The novelist works with elderly patients at a hospital in North Yorkshire and his tale has been likened to Ken Kesey's "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" about inmates of a U.S. psychiatric institution.

The total prize money of $46,750 makes the Whitbread Britain's richest literary award.

Hershiser named AP Male Athlete

Dodgers' Orel Hershiser
.....more trophies for case

NEW YORK (AP) — Orel Hershiser became the first non-Olympian since Denny McLain in 1968, to be named The Associated Press Male Athlete of the Year, leaving the Olympians far behind in the voting.

The Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher set a record with 59 consecutive shutout innings and is the 22nd baseball player to win in the 58-year history of the award and the first since Dwight Gooden in 1985.

Hershiser got nearly twice as many votes as World Series rival, Jose Canseco: 67 first-place ballots and 465 points, with Canseco — the first player to hit 40 home runs and steal 40 bases in a season — getting 30 first-place votes and 233.

Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders, who set all-time college records for rushing yards and touchdowns, was third with 207, followed by Olympic swimmer Matt Biondi with 152, NBA star Michael Jordan with 91 and Olympic diver Greg Louganis at 59.

Voting was done by sports writers and broadcasters on a 5-3-1 basis. The AP's Female Athlete of the Year will be announced Thursday.

"This caps a year of fantastic awards," Hershiser said. "It is a tremendous honor to be recognized with an award which covers all sports."

Hershiser spent the 1988 season setting records and collecting trophies. His wholesomeness and his hymn-singing earned him adulation among children and adults.

Hershiser's record streak, 23-8 record and 2.26 earned run average made him the unanimous National League Cy Young winner.

His record 24 2-3 innings, amazing save and shutout in Game 7 against the New York Mets made him Most Valuable Player in the NL playoffs.

His three-hit shutout in Game 2 and a four-hitter in Game 5 against Oakland made him MVP of the Dodgers' World Series victory.

By the time it all ended, helped by a How To Pitch card he carried in his uniform back pocket, Hershiser had allowed just five earned runs in his final 101 innings. He also won his first Gold Glove award and became the first pitcher to get three hits in a World Series game since 1924.

During the shutout streak, which broke Don Drysdale's hallowed mark, Hershiser celebrated two other events. On Sept. 15, his second son was born; the next night, he turned 30.

Amazing. And it kept going.

He dined at the White House with President Reagan. He joined Johnny Carson on "The Tonight Show" and reprised his dugout hymn-signing — of course, Hershiser had perfect pitch.

"From now on, my career will be divided into two parts — before 1988 and after 1988," he said.

Hershiser's 1989 is being taken up, so far, by difficult contract negotiations. He has asked for a record $2.425 million in salary arbitration and the Dodgers have offered $2 million, also the most ever.

Hershiser would prefer a multi-year contract and the Dodgers would like to accomodate him, at the right price.

Canseco, the American League's unanimous Most Valuable Player, led the major leagues with 42 homers and 124 runs batted in. He batted .307 and stole 40 bases.

Canseco's season came to a crashing halt when he went 1-for-19 in the Athletics' five-game loss to the Dodgers. He hit a grand slam in his first at-bat before going into a slump along with the rest of the Oakland batters.

Sanders ran for 2,628 yards and scored 39 touchdowns in his junior year at Oklahoma State. He will return for his senior season, although the school has been placed on NCAA probation.

Biondi won seven medals in Seoul, including five gold. He was the most decorated Olympian since Mark Spitz won seven golds in 1972.

Jordan was the first in the NBA to be MVP and defensive player of the year in the same season. He led the league in scoring for the second straight season with the Chicago Bulls.

Louganis won both diving gold medals at the Olympics. He did it despite cutting his head on the board during a dive.

Finishing out the Top 10 in the AP voting were Magic Johnson of the NBA's Los Angeles Lakers, heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, golfer Curtis Strange and hockey star Wayne Gretzky.

Midland Lee's Ed Brown defenses Abilene Cooper's Jay Monkerud.

Lee dunks Cougars

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Hot shooting from both field and line along with a questionable call in the final minute helped the Midland Lee boys clinch a 74-73 win over Abilene Cooper in District 4-5A play at the Chaparral Center Tuesday.

The Rebels, 2-4 in district play, snapped a four-game losing streak with 59 percent field goal accuracy and 93 percent free throw shooting. Add to that the fact that things just went the Rebels' way in the final two minutes and you have a happy Paul Stueckler.

"We're just happy to win a game," Stueckler said. "Now, we'll try to win our next game (against Midland High Friday).

THE REBS still have a chance in district play with Tuesday's win. Lee stands two games behind second-place San Angelo with six games to play, while Midland High and Cooper are one game ahead of the Rebs.

In other 4-5A boys action, Abilene High remained undefeated in district play with a 92-73 win over Midland High. San Angelo moved into second play with a 66-64 win over Odessa Permian.

Lee led most of the fourth quarter until Cooper's Tony Early scored six points in 92 seconds to give the Cougars a 70-68 lead with 1:41 left. That was the last hurrah for Cooper, however.

The hosts started turning things around when Torval Crisp put an inside move on Cooper star Mitch Royals for a layup — and drew Royals' fifth foul, taking away the Coogs' big inside threat.

CRISP made the subsequent free shot with 1:17 left to give Lee the lead for good, but Cooper still had plenty of time to regain the lead.

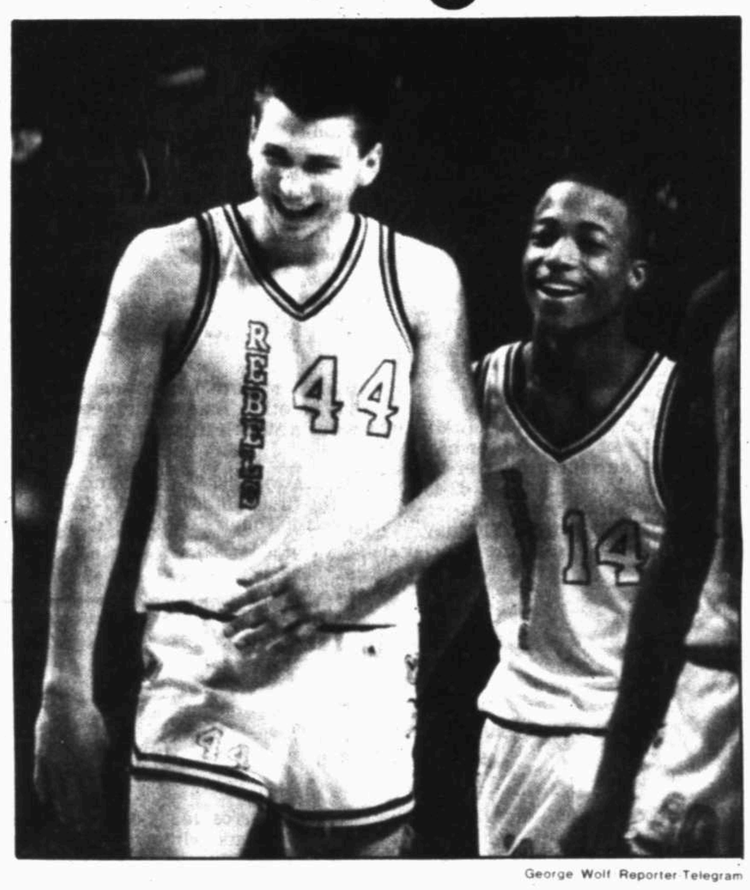
But backup guard Jay Monkerud was short on a three-point attempt with 50 seconds. Lee couldn't increase its lead on the next possession, but Cooper's Scotty Pugh threw the ball into Darren Dortch's hands and intentionally fouled Jared Edwards while the latter was streaking toward an easy layup with 16 seconds left.

Edwards made both free throws after Pugh's foul and added another with eight ticks remaining to make Thomas Toney's buzzer-beating three-pointer meaningless.

Cooper coach R.M. Currin said a variety of things contributed to the Coog downfall.

"Losing Royals was the game for us," Currin said. "There's not anybody in the district who can stop him one-on-one."

Then there was Monkerud's three-point attempt.



George Wolf Reporter-Telegram

Darren Dortch (44) and Ed Brown (14) share a laugh as Lee wrapped up District 4-5A win against Abilene Cooper Tuesday night at the Chap Center.

"That was the turning point," Currin said. "We didn't need a three, just a two."

Finally, the visiting coach found fault with the official judgment on Pugh's foul.

"He went for the ball, and that's all it says to do. It was not flagrant."

Edwards agreed.

"I don't think it was on purpose," he said. "But it was a breakaway, and they call it that way."

EDWARDS finished with nine-of-10 free throw shooting, all in the second half. In fact, the Rebs attempted nary a free shot in the first half since Cooper committed only four fouls.

So Lee started taking the ball inside in the second half.

"Coach said he wanted me to go the hole everytime I got a lane," Edwards said.

Lee led much of the first half until Toney and Royals got quick baskets on the Coogs' full-court press to force a 22-all tie with 4:39 left. Backup guard Ian Walker put Cooper ahead with a three-pointer at the halfway point of the quarter and the visitors were able to maintain a one-point halftime lead.

Dortch scored 14 of his game-high 22 points in the first half. Edwards added 18 for Lee, 14-10 overall, while Torval Crisp scored 13.

Royals and Toney scored 17 points each for Cooper, 10-14 overall, while Early added 14 and Walker 12.

In JV action, Mike Connally hit a three-pointer at the buzzer to give Lee a 50-49 win over Cooper. It was the only three-pointer of the game.

Abilene Cooper (73): Thomas Toney 7-13 3-4 17; Girardeau Murray 1-3 0-0 2; Mitch Royals 6-10 5-8 17; Scotty Pugh 2-7 0-0 5; Tony Early 3-7 8-8 14; Lee McAliley 2-3 1-1 5; Ian Walker 5-7 0-1 12; Jay Monkerud 0-4 2-2 2. Totals 25-54 19-24 73.

Midland girls win in OT

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Ever-gracious in defeat, Midland High Lady Bulldog head coach Jane Young wrapped up her team's effort Tuesday night: "Here they are sitting at the bottom of the ladder and they come out and play really good ball."

Even more gracious in his team's 68-63 victory, Abilene High head coach Sam Nichols also had good words for the Bulldogs: "Jane's got to be really proud of her girls. This is what basketball is all about. They didn't have much to play for except pride. They're not in contention, but Jane had them prepared emotionally and physically."

It took an overtime to do it, but the visiting Abilene High Lady Eagles defeated the MHS Lady Bulldogs to stay in contention for the 4-5A girl's basketball crown.

IN OTHER girls action Tuesday, Midland Lee fell to Abilene Cooper, 57-46, while Odessa Permian defeated San Angelo 78-73 in overtime.

The MHS-AHS game was, at most times, an impressive display, but hardly ever did both teams play impressive at the same time.

For instance, the Lady Bulldogs hit 58.7 percent from the field, connecting on 27-of-46. Strangely enough, though, MHS couldn't buy a shot in overtime, missing on all four attempts from the field and on three tries from the line.

On the flip side, AHS hit only 30 percent of its field goals (26-of-86) during regulation play. But in overtime, the Lady Eagles hit the only field goal they tried and converted 3-of-5 from the line. It was enough, though, for the win.

"We just got tired," Young said of her Bulldogs. "That team (AHS) ... they beat us by 30 points last time. Tonight, I thought our girls did a fantastic job."

Midland High entered the fourth quarter with a 48-42 lead. The Lady Eagles had, though, been picking away at the Bulldog lead all night, cutting it from eight after the first quarter. By halftime, the MHS advantage was hardly secure, 32-27.

And what enabled AHS to force the overtime was capitalizing on Midland High turnovers throughout, while limiting their own turnovers. In the fourth quarter, Midland High gave AHS the ball six times. In the previous two periods, MHS had committed 17 turnovers, another key reason the Lady Eagles kept crawling closer.

MIDLAND High seemed to effectively control the Eagle press, although pressure did lead to four Midland High turnovers and three AHS points in the second quarter. Three points may not seem like much, but had the press not been on, the turnovers might not have occurred, the points might not have been scored and the overtime might not have been necessary.

Too many "might-not-haves" to think about, though.

What was a definite was the way the Midland High girls got off to an impressive lead out of the chute. With half of the first quarter gone, the Lady 'Dogs led 11-1 and looked like they would continue to be in control.

The Lady 'Dogs were led by 17 Kim Jackson points; Tina O'Neal had 11, including a trio of three-pointers. O'Neal, though, had tough luck in the OT, failing on all three attempts from long range.

ABILENE High had three in double figures: Di Di Doss (19), Terra Alexander (17) and Tarra Anderson (10).

Colleges operating on thin edge

Battles

From Sports Inc. "Sixty percent of the schools in Division I are operating in the red and the problem is growing more severe and affecting more schools.

"Many agree that if nothing is done soon, minor, non-revenue sports will become scarce, and even major programs, perceived as tremendous financial successes just a few years ago, will test the boundaries of solvency."...

One reason for the colleges problems is that they aren't very astute business men.

The University of Oklahoma and the University of Georgia pocketed more than $1 million each for three TV appearances the year the two schools decided that wasn't enough and took the NCAA to court.

OKLAHOMA made $522,544 less in its first year of tv freedom, providing the Sooners with an expensive lesson that spilled over into the rest of college football.

The decision continues to threaten the fiscal stability of college athletics.

THE NCAA TV plan was launched in 1952 and, as it grew, college football and the non-revenue sports it supported grew.

From a modest $1.14 million beginning in '52, it grew to $74.2 million in 1983 as the NCAA exacted tight controls over appearances and money distribution.

"It was basic supply and demand economics," said Big Ten Conference Commissioner Wayne Duke, "The NCAA kept a tight rein on the supply and the demand kept growing."

Oklahoma won in the courts, but it lost at the bank when it learned an expensive business lesson.

OUTSIDE of games with Nebraska and Texas, it really didn't have that much to sell. It was also discovered that without the exclusivity as provided by the NCAA, even their prime games became watered down attractions when offered in competition with other "big" games of the day ...

Illustrating how times have changed, in 1983, under the NCAA's non-competing agreements with ABC, CBS and TBS, 24 games were shown on TV. A 30-second network spot cost $55,000. Rights fees for a national game amounted to $600,000 per team.

In 1986, there were 66 games on tv with ABC, CBS, ESPN,TBS and a myriad of syndicators competing. A 20-second spot cost $39,000. Rights fees for a national game amounted to $350,000.

THE WAY Southeastern Conference commissioner Harvey Schiller put it. "The golden goose is dead. And we have no one to blame but ourselves,"/ or Oklahoma and Georgia.

The ratings have suffered accordingly. In 1974, USC-Notre Dame played to a 20.9 TV rating. In 1988, USC-Notre Dame played to a 14.5 TV rating and this was for the national championship.

In view of the inroads, the heavyweights of college football, with full conference support, are working together to restore some semblance of order and restraint to college football telecasting....if they can just find a way around the legalities.

Bradshaw, Blount among four named to grid Hall

By ROBERT McG. THOMAS Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Terry Bradshaw and Mel Blount, the quarterback and cornerback who helped the Pittsburgh Steelers win four Super Bowl championships in the 1970s, were named to the Pro Football Hall of Fame Tuesday.

Art Shell, an offensive tackle for the Oakland and Los Angeles Raiders, and Willie Wood, a defensive back and punt-return specialist for the Green Bay Packers during the 1960's, were also selected.

They will be formally inducted into the Hall in Canton, Ohio, on Aug. 5.

The four were selected from among seven finalists by 28 reporters and broadcasters who cast secret ballots in Miami last weekend.

The finalists not selected this year were Bob Griese, the Miami Dolphin quarterback; Ted Hendricks, a defensive star for three teams, and Henry Jordan, a defensive tackle for the Packers from 1959 to 1969.

BRADSHAW and Blount, whose parallel careers with the Steelers extended from 1970 to 1983, were each selected in their first year of eligibility. A player is eligible after five years of retirement.

"This is a particularly good feeling because Terry and I came in together, we retired together and now we go into the Hall of Fame together," said Blount, who serves as director of player relations for the National Football League.

Bradshaw, who completed 2,025 of 3,901 passes for 27,989 yards and 212 touchdowns in his 14-year career, was also pleased by the vote. "It's like winning the Super Bowl," he said.

Shell, who played 15 seasons with the Raiders, from the 1960s to the 80s, was in his second year of eligibility. He seemed surprised by his selection.

"I had no idea I'd ever be in there," he said, recalling a visit to the Hall of Fame a decade ago.

Wood, who played with the Packers from 1960 to 1971 and had been among the finalists or semifinalisfs for several years, said he had all but given up hope of making the Hall of Fame.

"I started thinking that so many Green Bay Packers had gone in, maybe they had used up their quota," he said.

He is the 17th Packer to be named to the Hall, and the first since Paul Hornung in 1986.

OF THE finalists who did not make it, Griese, who retired after the 1980 season, was in his fourth year of eligibility, and Hendricks, who played with the Colts (1969-73), the Packers (1974) and the Raiders (1975-83), was in his first year of eligibility.

Jordan, who died in 1977, had been nominated by the Hall's old-timers' committee.

Bradshaw and Blount, the 13th and 14th Steeler players to be elected to the Hall, join two teammates from the teams that won Super Bowl championships in 1974, 1975, 1978 and 1979.

Joe Greene was elected in 1987 and Jack Ham last year.

To be elected to the Hall after surviving a series of premliminary votes, a finalist had to receive yes votes from at least 80 percent, or 23, of the 28 panelists who voted this year.

Leonard, Hearns to fight again

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard and Thomas Hearns, who met eight years ago in a classic welterweight title fight, will fight June 12 at Caesars Palace in a rematch for Leonard's 168-pound title, promoter Bob Arum said.

Arum said Caesars Palace, which he said will pay $8 million to host the bout.

The promoter said Leonard's lawyer, Mike Trainer, had not signed a contract for the fight but had "agreed in principle to everything."

"All we have to do is get a signed contract on the terms we agreed on," Arum said.

Leonard will be guaranteed $13 million and Hearns $11 million for the bout, which will be televised to closed-circuit locations and pay-per-view, Arum said.

Arum, though, said the fight was a certainty and said he would hold a press conference early next week to formally announce it.

The fight has been in the talking stages for several months following Leonard's ninth-round knockout Nov. 7 over Donny Lalonde in a fight that won him both the World Boxing Council's super middleweight and light heavyweight titles.

The 32-year-old Leonard, who is 35-1, gave up the light heavyweight title after the fight, but agreed to a request by the WBC to retain the 168-pound crown.

Hearns, 46-?, has long clamored for a rematch with Leonard and has often expressed bitterness that Leonard would not agree to fight him again.

But Hearns is coming off an unimpressive performance in beating James Kinchen in a 168-pound fight Nov. 4, and was knocked out by Iran Barkley in the fight prior to that.

"I think he's shot," Leonard said earlier this month.

The fight will be a rematch of the September 1981 battle between the then-undefeated Hearns and Leonard for the welterweight title.

Leonard, hurt midway through the fight and with his eye almost swollen shut, rallied from near certain defeat in that fight to knock Hearns out in the 14th round.

Lee girls remain in 2nd place

ABILENE — The Midland Lee Lady Rebels remain in second in place in the girls' 4-5A basketball race, despite dropping a 57-36 decision to the first-place Abilene Cooper Lady Cougars.

Cooper, 15-6 overall, remains undefeated in District 4-5A, sporting a 7-0 mark; Midland Lee, 17-6 overall, falls to 6-2 in district, but remains in the runner-up spot.

Cooper took a quick 15-6 lead, an advantage which it never let go of throughout the contest. At the half, Cooper led 29-19.

The Lady Rebs hit only 15 field goals, compared with 20 by Cooper. Lee fared somewhat better at the line, hitting on 13-of-17.

Lee was led by Mary Ann Isom's 17 points and three three-pointers; Monica Ramirez poured in another 16 for the Rebs.

Holly McMillon (17), Kelly Huff (13) and Paula Scott (11) led Cooper scorers in double figures.

The Lady Rebels next face the Midland High Lady Bulldogs Friday at Chap Center. Cooper hosts Abilene High.

No. 5 Missouri wins 8th in row

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Byron Irvin scored a dozen of his 28 points during a 19-5 second-half run that brought the fifth-ranked Missouri Tigers from behind for a 87-73 victory over Maryland.

Irvin totaled 20 points in the second half to lead Missouri, 17-3, to its eighth striaght victory. Maryland has lost eight straight, falling to 6-11.

Forward Greg Church started for Missouri in place of Doug Smith, out with an ankle injury, and scored 17 points, matching his career high. Coward had 15, Anthony Peeler 11 and Gary Leonard 10.

John Johnson led Maryland with 24 points, scoring 17 in the second half. Tony Massenberg had 15.

Providence 106, Miami 91

MIAMI — Carlton Screen scored 27 points and keyed an early second-half surge to lead No. 20 Providence, 15-2, over Miami as Marty Conlon also contributed 23 points and Matt Palazzi had 15.
Palazzi.

Eric Brown scored 30 points for the Hurricanes, 10-8, while Dennis Burns added 12 points and Joseph Randon 11.

Arkansas 109, S. Utah 76

PINE BLUFF, Ark. — Freshman Todd Day scored 26 points and Mario Credit added 21 as Arkansas, 12-4, defeated Southern Utah, 8-12.

UTEP 69, Colo St 53

EL PASO — Tim Hardaway scored 21 points to lead Texas-El Paso, 5-2 and 16-3, to a 69-53 WAC victory over Colorado St., 4-3 and 11-7.

Greg Foster, a 7-foot junior, was second high scorer for the Miners with 16 points. Colorado State was led by Joel Tribelhorn with 16 and Pat Durham with 15.

Nineteen of Hardaway's points were scored in the first half, giving the Miners a commanding 41-19 lead at intermission.

UTEP shot a blazing 66 percent from the field but 20 turnovers made the game closer than the score appeared.

1960 — Wilt Chamberlain of the Philadelphia Warriors set an NBA record for rookies with 58 points in a 127-117 triumph over the Detroit Pistons. Chamberlain also grabbed 42 rebounds.

1939 — Joe Louis knocked out John Henry Lewis at 2:39 of the first round at Madison Square Garden in New York and retained the world heavyweight title.

1981 — Jim Plunkett's two first-quarter touchdown passes, including a Super Bowl-record 80-yard strike to running back Kenny King, led the Oakland Raiders to a 27-10 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles.

1987 — The New York Giants won the Super Bowl with a 39-20 rout over the Denver Broncos. The Giants, who trailed 10-9 at halftime, scored 30 points in the second half, setting a Super Bowl record. They were led by Phil Simms, who completed a record 10 straight passes and 22 of 25 attempts overall.

NBA Today

SUPERB IN DEFEAT
Denver forward Alex English scored a season-high 43 points, shooting 17 of 33 from the floor, but the Nuggets lost their fourth straight game, 117-115 to New Jersey.

SPURTS
Trailing 15-12 with seven minutes left in the first quarter Tuesday, Seattle went on a 20-0 run to take a 32-15 lead over Portland. The SuperSonics held on to defeat the Trail Blazers 103-100.

SWINGS
New York's 122-117 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday was the Lakers' first home loss in 18 games this season and ended a streak of 24 consecutive regular season victories at The Forum. The Knicks, also 17-1 at home, avenged their only home loss of the season. The Lakers defeated the Knicks 110-98 Nov. 22 at Madison Square Garden.

STREAKS
Denver guard Michael Adams record streak of 79 consecutive games with at least one 3-point field goal ended Tuesday at New Jersey where he went 0-for-6 from long range in the Nuggets' 117-115 loss to the Nets. Just two games ago, Adams had tied the record for most 3-pointers in a game, sinking eight against Milwaukee last Saturday. Adams made 193 3-pointers in 530 attempts during the streak, which dated back to Jan. 28, 1988.

SUPER SONIC
Seattle forward Derrick McKey scored a career high 34 points Tuesday, leading the SuperSonics to a 103-100 victory at Portland. McKey shot 14 of 25 from the field and had five rebounds and two steals.

Chiefs pick Schottenheimer as new coach

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Marty Schottenheimer, the winningest coach in the American Football Conference the past three seasons, was named head coach of the Kansas City Chiefs Tuesday.

"Our goal for 1989 is to become the champions of the National Football League," said Schottenheimer, who resigned as coach of the Cleveland Browns at the end of the season in a dispute with owner Art Modell.

Schottenheimer, 45, took the Browns to the playoffs in each of his four full seasons as coach. His 32-15 regular season record the past three years is unmatched in the AFC and trails only the Chicago Bears and San Francisco 49ers among all NFL teams.

His resignation from the Browns was triggered by his refusal to hire an offensive coordinator, a role he was filling.

Asked if he would hire an offensive coordinator with the Chiefs, Schottenheimer broke into a grin.

"We will have an individual to fill that role," he said. "Rest easy. Marty Schottenheimer is not going to call the plays. Someone will have that role, if not the title."

Asked why he would change from the approach that led to his departure from Cleveland, Schottenheimer said that he thought remaining offensive coordinator for the Browns "was the best thing to do in that situation."

The naming of Schottenheimer completes a house cleaning that owner Lamar Hunt began in December with the resignation of team president Jack Steadman and the firing of General Manager Jim Schaaf.

Eleven days later, Hunt hired Carl Peterson as president and general manager. Peterson, as expected, fired coach Frank Gansz on Jan. 5 after Gansz had completed 4-11 and 4-11-1 seasons.

The Chiefs, a power in the old AFL and winners of the fourth Super Bowl, have made only one playoff appearance since 1971 and consistently been at or near the bottom of the AFC West.

"I see a gathering of talent here that can make us competitive. I mean in 1989," Schottenheimer said.

Mavs' road nothing but bumps

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored nine of his 24 points in the fourth quarter after sitting out seven minutes with a knee bruise as Chicago handed Dallas its 10th straight road defeat, 190-91.

Dallas, which trailed by 13 at the half, closed the gap to 65-59 a minute after Jordan fell to the floor attempting to block a shot by Mark Aguirre with 5:21 to go in the third quarter. He came back with 10:14 left in the game and the Bulls leading 82-73.

Two three-points plays by Dave Corzine and five points by Jordan gave Chicago a 93-77 lead with 7:12 left and the Mavericks didn't threaten again. Bill Cartwright scored 13 of his 23 points in the third quarter for Chicago, which has won seven of its last eight games. Aguirre and Rolando Blackman each scored 22 for the Mavericks, who are 6-11 on the road after a 6-1 start.

Rockets 118, Heat 93

HOUSTON — Otis Thorpe scored six points and Purvis Short had five during a 19-4 second-half run that powered Houston over Miami and lifted the Rockets within one-half game of first-place Utah in the Midwest Division.

Houston's burst stretched a 74-73 lead with 1:30 left in the third quarter to 93-77 lead with 7:45 left to play as the Rockets snapped a four-game losing streak. Miami, an expansion team which has the NBA's worst record at 4-34, is 1-19 on the road and suffered its 11th straight setback away from home.

Eric Floyd led the Rockets with 22 points, Akeem Olajuwon had 20 points and 12 rebounds and Short scored 15 points. For Miami, Billy Thompson had 20 points and Kevin Edwards 18.

SuperSonics 103, Trail Blazers 100

PORTLAND, Ore. — Derrick McKey scored 13 of his career-high 34 points in the final period to lead Seattle to its fourth straight victory. The Sonics led 72-60 with 6:21 left in the third quarter but the Trail Blazers went on a 15-4 burst to close the gap to 76-75 heading into the final period.

Portland then took its first lead of the game 77-76 on a jumper by Terry Porter and the teams traded the lead until McKey's layup with 4:17 left put the Sonics ahead for good 90-88.

Clyde Drexler scored 25 points for Portland, which has lost four games in a row, including three straight at home. Dale Ellis and Xavier McDaniel paced Seattle with 24 and 23, respectively.

Hawks 121, Cavaliers 105

ATLANTA — Dominique Wilkins scored 41 points, equaling his season high, and hit a key 3-point goal in the fourth period in powering the Atlanta Hawks to a 121-105 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers on Tuesday night.

The victory was Atlanta's fourth in a row and snapped a five-game winning streak by the Cavaliers, who have the best record in the NBA at 30-8.

The Hawks led 89-88 in the fourth quarter when Antoine Carr made a pair of free throws and Wilkins hit in his 3-point shot — his third of the game — to ignite a 9-0 run that gave Atlanta a 98-88 lead. The Cavaliers, losing only their third game in the last 20, never got closer than seven points thereafter.

Wilkins made 17 of 24 shots, including three 3-point goals without a miss. Moses Malone added 21 points while Larry Nance led the Cavaliers with 28.

Nets 117, Nuggets 115

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Buck Williams scored a season-high 27 points and the New Jersey Nets held off a late Denver spurt to hand the Nuggets their fourth straight loss.

Denver guard Michael Adams, who scored eight points, missed all six of his 3-point shots, ending his NBA record of 79 consecutive games with a 3-point basket.

Edberg drops out with achin' back

By RICK WARNER

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Two-time champion Stefan Edberg withdrew from his Australian Open quarterfinal against Austria's Thomas Muster Wednesday because of a back injury he suffered during a fourth-round victory over Pat Cash.

The walkover moves moves Muster, the 11th seed, into the semifinals, where he will play the winner of the Ivan Lendl-John McEnroe match.

Edberg, the fourth seed, hurt his back near the end of his 6-4, 6-0, 6-2 win over Cash Tuesday. The Swede managed to finish the match after receiving treatment, but was bent over and wincing in pain as he left the court.

"I was so stiff this morning, I couldn't move," Edberg sai. "I couldn't even put my socks on."

The 1988 Wimbledon champion said he's not sure how long he will be out of action, but he will definitely miss Sweden's first-round Davis Cup match against Italy next week.

Edberg, the Australian Open winner in 1985 and 1987, suffered the injury while serving an ace to go up 30-15 in the final game.

"It felt like I had a knife in my back," he said.

Helena Sukova, who halted Martina Navratilova's 74-match winning streak at the 1984 Australian Open, knocked the three-time champion out of the Grand Slam tournament again Tuesday night.

The big-serving Czech eliminated Navratilova 6-2, 3-6, 9-7 in a dramatic quarterfinal before a packed center court crowd at the National Tennis Stadium.

"The last time I beat her here, I was just trying to win a set," Sukova said. "This time, I thought I had a chance to win."

Navratilova, who hasn't won a Grand Slam title since the 1987 U.S. Open, was upset by her failure in the clutch.

"I gave her the match at the end," she said. "I wasn't outplayed. It was just a matter of a couple of points here and there."

Sukova's semifinal opponent will be unseeded Belinda Cordwell of New Zealand, who beat Sweden's Catarina Lindqvist 6-2, 2-6, 6-1. The other semifinal pits defending champion Steffi Graf of West Germany against arch-rival Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina.

Martina Navratilova ....loses to Sukova

Graf, who hasn't lost a set in the tournament, breezed past eighth-seeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany 6-2, 6-3 in 55 minutes, while Sabatini rallied from 1-3 in the final set to beat sixth-seeded Zina Garrison of the United States 6-4, 2-6, 6-4.

"It's going to be hard for anyone to beat me," said Graf, who is seeking her fifth straight Grand Slam title. Sabatini, who defeated Graf twice last year but trails their series 2-14, also sounded confident.

"I won't be afraid when I go out and play her," she said. "I don't feel any pressure. I think I have a good chance to beat her."

In men's play, long-time rivals Lendl and McEnroe set up a quarterfinal showdown with straight-set victories.

Lendl recovered from a slow start to beat Israeli Amos Mansdorf 7-6 (7-2), 6-4, 6-2, while McEnroe cruised to a 7-6 (7-4), 6-2, 6-3 victory over Aaron Krickstein.

"I've come a long way," said McEnroe, who is trying to regain the form that made him the world's No. 1 player in the early 1980s. "I feel more comfortable mentally and my game is coming together."

Fired UT assistants hold no bitterness

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Texas Longhorn football assistants fired by head coach David McWilliams say they harbor no bitterness toward McWilliams but said they thought the timing of the dismissals was poor.

"He's a class guy," defensive tackle coach Bill Hicks said of McWilliams.

McWilliams on Monday announced the firing of Hicks and tight end-special teams coach Bryant Pool. Offensive coordinator John Mize will be reassigned, McWilliams said.

The changes came two weeks before the Feb. 8 signing date for high school recruits and 11 days after the American Football Coaches Association convention in Nashville, Tenn.

Pool said finding a new job "will be a problem because of the timing. I mean, why now? How many jobs are out there now?"

Hicks, 48, said, "When you get to be my age, you start to worry about how marketable you are. But I'm a Christian, and I think the Lord has a plan for me."

Hicks and Pool said Monday they were given no specific reasons for their firing, and they defended the coaching jobs they did in Texas' 4-7 season.

"I felt like it was in the best interest of the program to make the changes," McWilliams said at a Monday news conference. "I felt like maybe it was a difference of philosophies."

LSC names players

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Carlos Mayes of Cameron and Pat Bidwell of Abilene Christian have been named Players of the Week in the Lone Star Conference in men's and women's basketball for games of Jan. 17-23.

Mayes, 5-11 junior guard from Gary, Ind., scored 70 points as the Aggies won one of three games last week. He had a career high 32 against Abilene Christian.

Bidwell, 5-9 senior forward from Missouri City, Texas, led the Wildcats to three victories with 69 points and 19 rebounds.

Highsmith in line at Texas Southern

HOUSTON (AP) — Walter Highsmith, the father of Houston Oilers fullback Alonzo Highsmith, has agreed to terms on a five-year contract to become Texas Southern's next football coach.

Highsmith rereportedly has resigned as defensive coordinator at Florida A&M in Tallahassee. Texas Southern officials were not immediately available for comment Tuesday night.

Colonial, SW Bell to become a team

FORT WORTH (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Corp. may become the first major corporate sponsor of the 43-year-old Colonial National Invitation golf tournament, published reports said Tuesday.

"It's pretty much of a done deal," Jim Pottorf, manager of corporate advertising for Southwestern Bell. But a PGA Tour source told the newspaper it was "not a done deal."

Foreign investment in U.S. oil to continue

By BARBARA SHOOK
Hearst News Service

Foreign investments in the U.S. oil and gas business will continue in the coming decade — perhaps at a faster pace — in spite of opposition from sectors of the domestic industry and others, says a new study published by Cambridge Energy Research Associates.

Intervention by the U.S. government would be a complete shift in historical policy, which favors free trade and open investment, said Raymond Vernon, a senior associate at Boston-based Cambridge Energy and a professor at Harvard University.

If the U.S. government were to take any significant restrictive measures on this front, "it would represent a classic case of the missionary turned cannibal," Vernon said Tuesday.

He said he finds it a "curious turnabout in views" that the same Americans who strongly supported the rights of U.S. firms to make direct investments in foreign countries during their days of rapid international expansion in the 1950s are opposing the idea of foreign companies buying businesses here.

While Vernon would not rule out the possibility that protectionist regulations would be established, he believes it unlikely.

Study finds OPEC output capacity down

HOUSTON (AP) — Announcements of increased oil reserves in Persian Gulf states may have eased concerns about an impending oil shortage, but a new study suggests almost everyone is overlooking a drop in the production capacity of members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries since the energy crisis a decade ago.

Dr. Fereidun Fesharaki of the East-West Center, a Honolulu research institute, estimates that OPEC is capable of producing less than two-thirds the oil it could 10 years ago.

OPEC had a production capacity of 39.1 million barrels a day in 1979, the year output peaked at 31.5 million barrels a day. By 1988, capacity had fallen to only 25 million barrels a day. Production last year has been estimated at approximately 18.5 million barrels a day.

The East-West Center study concludes that low oil prices and the resulting lower revenues are the reason for the decline in capacity.

"The lower oil prices have resulted in a significant decline in OPEC production capacity through declining investments, mothballing of facilities and unwillingness of a number of counties to maintain higher capacities," the study said.

"The largest decline has taken place in the Persian Gulf, particularly in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Non-Persian Gulf OPEC production capacity has fallen less dramatically," it said.

Conversely, Fesharaki points out in the study, the Persian Gulf nations have the greatest potential to increase their production capacity in a short time if needed.

Trader calls $19 'unsustainable'

From Staff and Wire Reports

Energy futures continued Tuesday's rebound this morning as attention turned to a scheduled meeting between OPEC and non-OPEC nations later in the week.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the March contract for West Texas Intermediate rose 49 cents in early trading today to stand above the $18 mark at midmorning. Tuesday the contract closed ahead 21 cents at $17.54 a barrel.

The contract fell $1.06 on Monday in what some analysts called an expected "correction" following a recent strong rally fueled by confidence in OPEC's production-cutting pact.

"Right now the market is a little confused as to whether yesterday's decline was the beginning of a sharp movement downward or just a correction," said Andrew Lebow, senior analyst with ED&F Man International Futures Inc. "I think it was overdone, and I think (Tuesday) we just had a rebound off yesterday."

Chris McCormack, an energy analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., agreed, but wasn't too bullish about the direction of prices in the near future.

"I think the market pretty much has discounted all the bullish news," McCormack said. "I don't think crude is sustainable at $19."

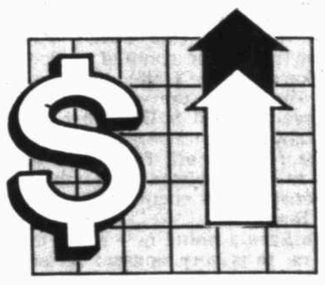
Greenspan comments bolster dollar



LONDON (AP) — The dollar edged up against most major currencies in light European trading early today, spurred by Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan's declared commitment to fight inflation. Gold prices fell.

Dealers said the dollar's surge could prompt renewed dollar-selling by central banks, and said fear of intervention was already preventing the dollar from rising faster.

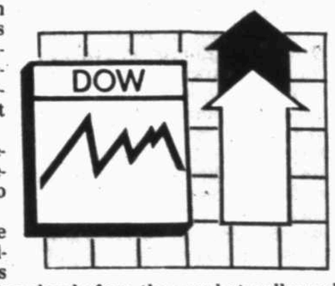
In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.70 Japanese yen to a closing 127.65 yen. Later, in London, it slipped back to 127.55 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7710 from $1.7700 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $404.80 a troy ounce, down from $407 bid late Tuesday. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $404.75.

Silver fell sharply in London to a bid price of $6.12 a troy ounce, down from $6.21 bid late Tuesday.

Stocks close above pre-crash level



NEW YORK (AP) — Optimism about interest rates sent stock prices sharply higher Tuesday and propelled the Dow Jones industrial average past the point where it stood before the October 1987 Wall Street crash.

The Dow Jones average, which reflects the performance of 30 blue-chip industrial stocks, rose 38.04 to close at 2,256.43.

Tuesday's session was the first time since the crash that the widely-followed index closed above 2,246.74, its finish on Oct. 16, 1987, the last trading day before the market collapsed and the average plunged 508 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by better than 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,009 issues up, 477 down and 498 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 189.62 million shares, up from 141.64 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market rose $29.931 billion, or 1.07 percent, in value.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market rose 2.00 to 391.99. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 318.74, up 0.71.

Nugent attends London non-OPEC meeting

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — Texas Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent will attend the two-day meeting of non-OPEC oil producers in London which will seek ways to stabilize world markets.

The conference, sponsored by the Sultanate of Oman, was scheduled to begin today with non-OPEC producers only. On Thursday, the group is expected to meet with representatives of six Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to expand the oil price stability discussion.

"For over 50 years, the Texas Railroad Commission has been fine-tuning a set of rules and regulations for oil and gas production that have serves as models not only for other states, but other nations as well," Nugent said.

Oman invited Colombia, the Peoples' Republic of China, Egypt, Mexico, and the Soviet Union to the London conference, as well as Texas, Alaska and the Canadian province of Alberta.

Greenspan pledges to rein in inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan has told Congress unless economic growth slows, the nation "would risk a serious intensification of inflationary pressures at some not too distant point."

Greenspan, testifying before the House Banking Committee on Tuesday, said it was "especially encouraging" the economy managed to grow at a strong pace last year without a flare-up of inflation, but mounting pressures on prices will keep the central bank's monetary policy on the tight side.

S&L League advocates shifting thrift burden

WASHINGTON (AP) — The savings and loan industry's largest trade group has recommended tapping the U.S. Treasury to close insolvent institutions while slashing the amount contributed by healthy S&Ls.

The proposal made Tuesday by the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, if adopted, would have the effect of shifting all of the burden for solving the problems of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. onto taxpayers and freeing the industry from further responsibility.

Businesses: Benefit programs too costly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several small business groups have told Congress a 1986 tax change designed to increase worker benefits is too costly and is prompting employers to eliminate health and other benefit programs.

"This was a shortcut someone tried to make along the way that ended up being a roadblock for small business instead of an aid," John Paul Galles, executive vice president of National Small Business United, told the House Small Business Committee on Tuesday.

Forest Oil consolidates divisions

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

In a move to revitalize its onshore operations, Forest Oil Corp. will consolidate its Rocky Mountain Division into a newly formed Western Division based in Midland.

Reorganization of Denver-based Forest's onshore operations will affect local workers, but a company spokesman says it's too early to guess what the final employment impact will be.

The consolidation of operating divisions announced Tuesday, will result in "some attrition, some transfers and some employees leaving the company because they choose not to move," said Leslie Young, director of investor relations for the company.

The Western Division, to be headquartered in Midland, will be responsible for all of Forest's exploration opportunities in the continental U.S. except for the Gulf Coast and encompasses the former 47-member Midland-based West Texas Division and the 17-worker Rocky Mountain Division in Denver.

Ms. Young said she expects total employment in Midland "will stay about the same," but that the company is still involved in "the interview process to see which employees will best fit the needs of the new divisions."

The moves are designed to "revitalize Forest's onshore operations and beef up the Gulf Coast area," where the company has seen its greatest successes in recent years, Young said.

In addition to the consolidation in Midland, Forest is closing its former South Texas division office in Corpus Christi, which will be merged into the company's Lafayette, La. office.

The Lafayette office, which formerly housed Forest's MAFLA — Mississippi, Alabama, Florida and Louisiana — division, will be home to the new Southern Division, responsible for all the company's Gulf Coast operations, on- and offshore.

As a result of the revitalization, Young said Forest anticipates "substantially expanding" its exploration efforts. The investment portion — not including general and administrative expenses — of the company's drilling budget is expected to grow from about $47 million in 1988 to more than $70 million this year, she said.

Forest is also forming a New Ventures Group, "with a handful of people initially," which will be responsible for developing non-Canadian foreign and frontier exploration prospects, Young said.

The company's Canadian division and its corporate staff in Denver are not affected by the operational consolidation, she added.

Incoming National Automobile Dealers Association president Ron Tonkin's group opposes the Big Three automakers call for a higher tariff on imported sports utility vehicles.

'Big Three' call for higher tariff

By DORON P. LEVIN
New York Times News Service

DETROIT — In an unusual show of solidarity, the Big Three auto makers have joined forces in urging the United States Treasury to uphold a 25 percent tariff on imported sports utility vehicles and mini-vans.

A decision by the Deputy Treasury Secretary, M. Peter McPherson, is expected within a few days, department officials said.

The Treasury had decided on Jan. 4 to review a December ruling by the United States Customs Service that reclassified the two types of vehicles as trucks, subjecting them to the much higher tariff.

Although they make up only about 10 percent of the domestic automotive market, mini-vans and sport utility vehicles are among the fastest-growing and most profitable segments.

The tariff would raise prices an average of $2,500, economists say, and give domestic auto makers a chance to raise prices and gain a competitive advantage.

But the American auto makers say they do not intend to use the higher tariff as an opportunity to raise prices. The importers, meanwhile, oppose the reclassification.

Lee A. Iacocca, chairman of the Chrysler Corp., earlier this month sent letters to Chrysler dealers soliciting their support of the tariff.

With it, Iacocca wrote, Japanese producers would be saddled with a $2,500 cost penalty on their vehicles.

The issue is particularly crucial for Chrysler, company officials acknowledge, since mini-vans account for 20 percent of its sales.

Mid-January domestic car sales off

By PHILIP E. ROSS
New York Times News Service

DETROIT — Sales of new domestic cars and light trucks fell 11.5 percent in mid-January from a year earlier, the seven domestic manufacturers reported Tuesday.

Sales of American-made cars were down 16.3 percent, while those of light trucks dropped 2.8 percent. A total of 257,259 cars and 101,286 light trucks were sold in the Jan. 11-20 period.

Cars sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 6.6 million, after an extremely low rate of 5.2 million in early January and a strong 10.3 million pace in late December.

That erratic pattern has been attributed by most analysts to Detroit's last-minute efforts to embellish 1988 results through its sales-recording methods.

Still, on a 30-day basis sales have run at an average annual rate of about 7.4 million, said L. Ray Windecker, a marketing analyst for the Ford Motor Co. "I see absolutely no problem with that," he added.

A more pessimistic opinion was expressed by Edward A. Sullivan, an automotive analyst with the WEFA Group, a forecasting firm in Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.

A new management team has taken over running the RAMADA HOTEL, 3100 W. Wall.

Dallas-based Westbrook Hotels, which also manages 35 other hotels nationwide, is now in charge of the local Ramada. The new manager is Jim Kinsinger from Spokane, Washington. He has a new management staff, including a new chef, sales manager, catering director and food and beverage director.

"We have an extensive breakfast buffet for our guests, a lunch buffet. We have new menus and new catering menus. We even have our liquor license back," he said.

Kinsinger is also attempting to make the hotel more accessible to Midlanders by, among other things, booking parties to be held around the swimming pool.

The Chicken Ranch offers a variety of chicken dishes, from chicken nuggets to a "chick-wich," a chicken salad on a croissant to "chiquita tequitas," chicken or beef wrapped in crunchy corn tortillas and served with salsa or cheese dip.

Murphy, who was in the oilfield service sector before opening his restaurant, said he wanted to try something different. The restaurant is truly a family affair, with his wife Cathy and son Ty joining in.

Hours are from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Saturday. The food can be eaten in or carried out, and there's a drive-through window.

FUTURE SYSTEMS, a computer sales and service firm, has relocated to 1000 N. Midkiff, the Town and Country shopping center. The company can now be found next to Major Video.

Robert Peets, who owns the company with Dennis Brewer, explains that the move was made for expansion purposes. "Our new location is about twice the space as our old location at 422 Andrews Highway," he noted.

He added that the move has allowed them to add a new product line, Unisys, to their current inventory of IBM compatibles and multi-user business computers.

Future Systems offers sales, service and custom programming and carries a variety of computer accessories.

K mart, 340 N. Midland Drive, has joined the 2,200 other stores in the K mart Corp. family in participating in Invent America.

Invent America, established by the U.S. Patent Model Foundation, encourages children to learn problem-solving skills and turn unique ideas into inventions through local, state, regional and national competitions. K mart, along with Eastman Kodak, is sponsoring a contest that will allow these young inventors to compete for prizes, including a trip to Washington D.C. for the national finals during Invent America week, July 23-28.

Entry blanks are available at the local K mart.

Texas firm celebrates new rig

GALENA PARK, Texas (AP) — A dedication ceremony for a new oil rig that officials say will be the largest and deepest land rig to drill in Europe was a dim reminder of the oil-boom days when such celebrations were a common occurrence.

But the party given Tuesday by a Houston-area manufacturer was a rarity for the economically depressed oilfield equipment.

The so-called "super-deep" rig stands 197 feet and is touted as having a unique brake system that controls the speed of the pipe going into the holes in the earth. It is capable of drilling three wells simultaneously to depths of up to 25,000 feet.

Assembled by Houston-based National Oilwell for INA-Naftaplin of Yugoslavia, the $10.5 million rig will be used to drill in the Dinarides area of that country near the coast of the Adriatic Sea.

"All of our new business is for overseas," said Donald W. Vogelsang, general manager of drilling equipment for National Oilwell. "There was an abundance of rigs ordered during the boom days and there are a lot available rigs (for domestic use)."

Bozidar Omrcen, vice president for INA-Naftaplin, saw the rig for the first time Tuesday at a Texas barbecue that marked the completion of the 10-month project.

"We are very satisfied," he said. "This is a big day. A lot of people are here to celebrate."

His company pumped 22 million barrels of oil in 1986 and is the leading marketer of oil and gas in Yugoslavia. Tuesday's delivery is the largest of three rigs made for INA-Naftaplin.

During the party, National Oilwell spokeswoman Pat Smith recalled times in the late 1970s and early 1980s when at least seven rigs were being assembled at one time in the industrial area east of Houston. Then, oil prices approached $40 per barrel.

But for some companies now, seven rigs would be a good year, industry officials acknowledge.

For example, this week's latest Baker Hughes Inc. count of rigs looking for oil in the United States was 789. The lowest the count reached last year was 880. In December 1981, the tally peaked at 4,500.

The rig sent off Tuesday is the first to be completed in months by National Oilwell, company chairman Bob Smith said.

"To have a brand new rig of this size range is very unusual because the industry was so overbuilt and there is such an overhang in inventory and there hasn't been that much demand for new equipment," Smith said. "So this is very unusual, although our company has 11 drilling rigs on order — all overseas.

"By and large, the international companies are focusing their investments outside the United States. For a company that is strictly a United States company, that is a problem."

Smith said he sees a turnaround in the domestic market but nothing significant for several years and even then, no return to the boom conditions.

"Until it does, the fact we have a strong international presence, we will be able to maintain a strength in the company," he said.

In addition to the rig, INA-Naftaplin also is purchasing more than 60,000 feet of pipe.

The rig probably would begin drilling a 6,000-meter project — about 19,000 feet — by late May or early June, according to Omrcen.

Vogelsang said now that officials were certain the rig would work and all bugs were removed, it would be taken apart piece by piece and shipped to Yugoslavia for reassembly.

"The underlying market is weakening with higher interest rates, and probably will continue to weaken for a couple of months," he said. "We have a recovery occurring in the second quarter, with the year as a whole coming in with 7.1 million domestic car sales."

In 1988, 7.5 million domestically produced cars were sold.

Sullivan said that under existing conditions, he expected light-truck sales to continue to outpace those of cars. But he said this might change if the Treasury Department accepts a recent decision of the Customs Service to reclassify many imported Japanese vehicles as trucks rather than cars.

"I imagine that it would take a month to two months for prices to rise, and then you'd see a decline in light-truck sales," he said.

The General Motors Corp. had the biggest year-to-year loss in market share in mid-January, partly because its incentives were more generous a year earlier. GM held a 42.6 percent share of domestic-car and light-truck sales, down 2.5 percentage points from last year.

Ford's market share dropped three-tenths of a percentage point, to 34.3 percent. Only the Chrysler Corp. posted an increase, adding 1.2 points and taking a 17.8 percent share.

GM sold 109,503 domestic light vehicles, down 16.4 percent. Car sales were down 22.9 percent, to 70,745, and light-truck sales fell 4 percent, to 38,758.

Ford sold 88,285 domestic light vehicles, down 10.4 percent. Ford's car sales fell 13.6 percent, to 52,577, and light trucks were down 5.5 percent, to 35,708.

Chrysler's domestic sales fell 4.7 percent, to 45,859 vehicles. Car sales declined 10 percent, to 22,156, but light-truck sales rose eight-tenths of a percent, to 23,704.

FOREIGN

"I cannot picture a sustained U.S. policy to limit foreign investment. There might be an isolated incident, but not a broad policy," he said.

Cambridge Energy President Daniel Yergin said the perceived threat from foreign ownership of domestic oil and gas operations will be debated with growing intensity as U.S. oil production declines and imports approach 50 percent. However, he said he believes only a clearly identified national security problem would change U.S. policy.

Foreign investment in the American petroleum industry is one of three main trends that will influence the international oil business in the next decade, Vernon said in the study, "Oil and Politics: The Shape of Things to Come."

He also expects foreign governments to continue selling off their interests in national oil companies. This second trend of "privatization" will be more influenced by pragmatic concerns, such as eliminating a drain on government revenues, than by ideology.

In the 1960s and '70s, many foreign governments thought certain sectors of their economies would be better off under direct control, Vernon explained. By the early 1980s, they realized it did not work as well as hoped.

The extent of privatization will vary from country to country, he said. While the British government has been selling its holdings quickly, the governments of Mexico and Venezuela probably will allow only marginal operations to be turned over to the private sector, he said.

The third trend is the re-integration of the international oil business through partnerships between national oil companies in exporting countries and refiners and marketers in consuming countries. While some industry executives see these partnerships as a means of returning to the days when oil prices were stable for years at a time, Vernon said that will not happen.

OPEC

Outside of the Middle East, only Venezuela can boost oil output significantly. Production by OPEC's smaller members is limited by the size of their oil fields.

The study does not see physical limits as a problem until the late 1990s unless demand increases rapidly. If consumption picks up, OPEC production capacity could be strained in the early 1990s.

Fesharaki also disputes the higher reserves and production capacities recently reported by several OPEC countries.

In the study, he notes that the United Arab Emirates claims it has reserves of 94 billion barrels of oil and a production capacity of 4 million barrels daily. The East-West Center believes that the United Arab Emirates cannot produce more than 1.5 miilion barrels a day on a sustained basis.

The United Arab Emirates' higher reserves figure is not based on any new discoveries, the study said. Instead, it comes from an increase in the amount of oil that can be recovered from existing fields to more than 50 percent.

Saudi Arabia announced earlier this month that its recoverable oil reserves stand at more than 250 billion barrels, 50 percent higher than the previous estimate. Fesharaki believes 200 billion barrels is a more realistic figure.

The new figure is based more on Persian Gulf political factors than geology, he said. "I think they are trying to retain their ratio to Iran, Iraq and other countries that they had before the others raised their estimates. I have seen nothing that would indicate they have found that much new oil."

TARIFF

But the National Automobile Dealers Association, a trade group representing more than 20,000 car dealers, has urged that the government "continue the classification as it had been before" — with the sport utility vehicles and mini-vans considered passenger vehicles — a spokesman said.

The dealers group usually opposes taxes and duties that would raise car and truck prices.

The Big Three, through their lobbyists, are arguing that importers are abusing a loophole in the tariff system.

Japanese importers, they point out, bring sport-utility vehicles to this country under car allocations established by "voluntary" restraints set by the Japanese government, but switch to the truck designation when their car allocations run out.

Moreover, the Big Three contend that under a new, so-called harmonized U.S. tariff system, which went into effect Jan. 1, customs officials must define trucks by the nature of their design, not how they are used.

Therefore, they contend, the truck frames on the sport-utility vehicles make them trucks, even if they are often used as passenger vehicles.

The General Motors Corp. and the Chrysler Corp. concede that they have imported sport-utility vehicles as cars in the past.

GM and Chrysler spokesmen insist that the companies were entitled to do so by law and that their actions do not compromise their arguments for the tariff.

Chefs' Salute to Alaska

Alaska pollock. It's the sort of fish that restaurant chefs love to work with because of its versatility.

And pollock is just as easy to use at home. Its delicate, mild flavor makes it perfect for a simple microwave treatment sprinkled with fresh herbs or lemon butter. But, don't overlook what a showcase it can be for the spicy flavors of Mexican or Caribbean cuisine, or the more sophisticated treatment of the French.

Four noted Northwest chefs have developed their own favorite recipes for utilizing this succulent, yet affordable whitefish. Here are the recipes and some background on the surroundings and the attitudes that inspired them.

Pollock with Three Pepper Salsa

Martina Sharra, The Captain Cook Hotel, Anchorage, Alaska

Chef Sharra of the hotel's private dining room, "The Quarterdeck," incorporates the flavor of the Southwest in this zesty entree. She serves it amidst the restaurant's nautical motif as a delicious example of her commitment to regional American cuisine.

Blackened Pollock with Herb Butter

Mindy and Richard Lee, Silverbow Inn, Juneau, Alaska

To Mindy and Richard Lee, Cajun-style seafood doesn't have to come from the Gulf of Mexico. Their use of the blackening technique on Alaska pollock sends the fragrance of Cajun spices throughout their six room country inn, beckoning their overnight guests to the dining room and a cozy, informal meal.

Alaska Pollock Bouillabaisse

Jacques Boiroux, Le Tastevin, Seattle, Washington

As he surveyed the majestic Puget Sound from his restaurant's front window, Chef Boiroux was inspired to create the quintessential fishermen's stew. This Bouillabaisse is hearty enough to serve to a crew right off the fishing boat, but elegant enough to be a featured item in this classic French restaurant.

Filbert-Coated Alaska Pollock with Nasturtium Butter

Bill King, McCormick and Schmick's, Portland, Oregon

The flavors of the Alaskan sea and the Northwest gardens come together under Chef King's seafood-sensitive hands. McCormick and Schmick's brass and mahogany Old Portland ambience houses a new cuisine attitude. They can be found on the leading edge of food trends, but with the old-fashioned commitment to quality ingredients.

Alaska pollock is one of the most plentiful resources in Alaska's vast fishing industry. Harvested in abundance from the Bering Sea and the Gulf of Alaska, this member of the cod family is also known as walleye pollock, big-eye cod or Alaska snow cod.

Alaska pollock is a premium quality seafood, often compared to the finest Atlantic haddock, though its flesh is whiter and contains less oil. It is an extremely lean fish with a fairly firm texture, an exceptional flake and a fine, delicate flavor.

Alaska pollock is marketed year-round in 3 to 10-ounce waste-free fillets.

Alaska pollock is an excellent source of high-quality protein, containing all of the essential amino acids. It is significantly low in fat, and those fats present are primarily polyunsaturated in nature. Important minerals present in this lean whitefish include: iodine, phosphorus, magnesium, copper, iron and zinc.

POLLOCK WITH THREE PEPPER SALSA

(Illustrated)

- 1/2 cup tequila
- Juice and peel of 1 each lemon and lime
- 1 large clove garlic, minced
- 1/4 cup olive oil
- 2 teaspoons cracked black pepper
- 8 (3 oz. each) Alaska pollock fillets
- Three Pepper Salsa
- Garnish: Red peppers, cilantro, lime slices and dairy sour cream

Combine tequila, juice and peel of lemon and lime, garlic, oil and pepper; marinate pollock one hour. Remove pollock from marinade; drain. Charbroil allowing about 10 minutes per inch of thickness measured at its thickest part or until fish flakes when tested with a fork. Serve two fillets per plate. Place Three Pepper Salsa over 1/3 of fish. Garnish with red pepper, cilantro, lime slices and sour cream. Makes 4 servings.

Three Pepper Salsa: Combine 1 each roasted, peeled and diced small green and red pepper; 1 fresh jalapeno, seeded and chopped; 3 fresh tomatillo, chopped; 1 teaspoon fresh chopped cilantro; 2 tablespoons olive oil; 2 teaspoons balsamic vinegar; 1 tablespoon minced green onion and 1/4 teaspoon salt. Makes about 1-1/3 cups.

BLACKENED POLLOCK WITH HERB BUTTER

- 4 (6 oz. each) Alaska pollock fillets
- Blackening Powder
- 1/4 cup vegetable oil
- Herb Butter, optional

Dredge pollock in Blackening Powder. Preheat heavy skillet or griddle until smoking hot. Pour in oil. Pan-fry on each side 3 to 5 minutes or until fish flakes when tested with a fork. Place on serving dish; top with a big pat of Herb Butter and serve immediately. Makes 4 servings.

Blackening Powder: Combine 8 teaspoons paprika, 4 teaspoons cayenne, 2 teaspoons each turmeric, dry mustard, garlic powder, onion powder, white pepper and black pepper, 1 teaspoon each salt and ground cloves and 1/2 teaspoon each marjoram, thyme and oregano.

Herb Butter: Combine 1/4 pound softened butter and 1-1/2 teaspoons each thyme, basil and chopped parsley. Whip for at least 10 minutes. Roll in waxed paper and refrigerate. Makes 3/4 cup.

ALASKA POLLOCK BOUILLABAISSE

- 1 tomato, quartered
- 1/2 sweet red pepper, quartered
- 1 celery stalk, chopped
- 1/4 cup sliced leeks
- 4 cloves garlic, crushed
- Fennel seeds, saffron threads and thyme to taste
- 1/2 bay leaf
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 1/4 cup olive oil
- 2 cups fish or chicken stock
- 4 (6 oz. each) Alaska pollock fillets
- Garnish: Cilantro sprigs and French bread rounds

Saute tomato, red pepper, celery, leek, garlic and seasonings in oil until leek is transparent. Add stock and simmer 30 minutes. Strain stock, reserving vegetables. Puree vegetables and return to stock. Season with salt and pepper. Poach fillets 6 to 8 minutes in bouillabaisse stock. Carefully place each fillet in individual serving bowls and add 1/2 cup stock. Garnish with cilantro and French bread. Makes 4 servings.

FILBERT-COATED POLLOCK FILLETS WITH NASTURTIUM BUTTER

- 1/2 cup flour
- 2 eggs
- 1 tablespoon milk
- 1-1/2 cups blanched filberts*, roasted and finely ground
- 1/4 cup cracker meal
- 4 (6 oz. each) Alaska pollock fillets
- 6 tablespoons butter Nasturtium Butter
- 1/2 papaya, peeled, seeded and thinly sliced
- Fresh raspberries

Place flour in shallow pan. Combine eggs and milk in another shallow pan; set aside. Combine filberts and cracker meal in separate shallow pan; set aside. Coat pollock fillets with flour, then dip in egg mixture, then filbert mixture; pat gently so mixture adheres. Refrigerate coated fillets 1 hour. Pan-fry in butter until golden-brown and fish is no longer translucent; transfer to serving platter. Slice Nasturtium Butter into 8 pieces; place 2 pieces on each fillet. Garnish with papaya and raspberries.

Nasturtium Butter: Combine 1/2 cup finely chopped nasturtium flowers and leaves, 6 tablespoons softened butter, 1 tablespoon finely chopped shallots, dash hot pepper sauce and salt to taste. Roll in waxed paper to make a cylinder about 1-1/2 inches in diameter; refrigerate or freeze until firm.

*Pecans may be substituted.

One-half cup finely chopped watercress or parsley can be substituted.

Tuna favorite fish of 'finicky' eaters

By MELANIE BARNARD and BROOKE DOJNY
Copley News Service

It's one of those kitchen staples — that familiar friendly can of tuna sitting on the pantry shelf.

Isn't it funny, and more than a little ironic, that so many people (children especially) are finicky about fish, yet love canned tuna? It seems to be in a food group all by itself — and there we will let it lie to try to keep the kids in the dark as long as we can!

With their ingredients always readily at hand, open-faced tuna "melt" sandwiches are a suppertime favorite in both our households. Somewhere along the line they started getting called Tuna Doodle Melts in Brooke's house — so we herewith pass along that name as well as our version of this always satisfying combination.

Our Tuna Noodle Special is a creamy, delicious casserole that is easy to put together and has the advantage of being able to be prepared ahead. Serve with a leafy green salad or steamed broccoli with lemon for a wonderful supper any night of the week.

Canned tuna labeled "white" is from the albacore species. It is usually milder and less "fishy" tasting than "light" tuna.

Water-packed tuna has fewer calories and less fat but is drier than oil-packed. Oil-packed has a smoother, more rounded flavor. If you use it, drain off all of the oil to reduce total calories.

Help save the dolphins. Try to buy albacore tuna (labeled "white meat tuna"). Dolphin are trapped in the nets of yellowfin and some other species labeled "chunk light tuna."

TUNA DOODLE MELTS

1 (12½-ounce) can tuna (or 2 6½-ounce cans), drained
⅓ cup chopped celery
3 tablespoons chopped onion
¼ cup chopped pimiento olives, optional
½ cup mayonnaise
Black pepper, to taste
6 English muffins, split
Softened butter for muffins
4 to 6 ounces medium-sharp cheddar cheese, sliced

Place tuna in bowl and break up into small chunks with fork. Add celery, onion and optional olives. Stir in mayonnaise and mix well to combine. Season with black pepper to taste.

Lightly toast English muffins and spread with softened butter.

Divide tuna mixture among 12 muffin halves and top each sandwich with slices of cheese.

Place sandwiches on baking sheet or on microwave-safe plate. Broil or microwave until cheese is melted and bubbly. Serve hot.

TUNA NOODLE SPECIAL

8 ounces flat egg noodles
3 tablespoons butter, divided
2 tablespoons flour
2¼ cups milk
1½ teaspoons Dijon mustard
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon cayenne
1 (12-ounce) can tuna, drained and broken into chunks
½ cup thinly sliced scallions, including green tops
½ cup fresh bread crumbs (from 1 slice of bread), or ¼ cup dry bread crumbs
Sprinkling of paprika

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

Bring large pot water to boil for noodles. Add about 2 teaspoons salt and cook noodles at rapid boil for about 7 minutes until al dente. Drain in colander.

Meanwhile, heat 2 tablespoons butter in medium saucepan. Stir in flour and cook, stirring over medium heat for 2 minutes. Stir in milk, raise heat to high and bring to boil, whisking almost constantly. Reduce heat to medium and cook for 1 minute, until sauce is smooth and medium-thick. Season with mustard, salt and cayenne.

In bowl or pasta pot, combine noodles, sauce, tuna and scallions. Stir gently to combine and transfer to 1½-quart baking dish, such as an 8x8-inch square.

Melt remaining tablespoon of butter in small skillet. Add bread crumbs and toss to combine. Scatter this mixture over top of casserole and sprinkle with paprika.

Bake casserole uncovered in preheated oven for about 25 minutes, until crumbs are lightly browned on top and sauce is bubbly around edges. If crumbs are not brown enough, run casserole under broiler for 30 to 60 seconds, watching carefully that it doesn't burn.

Note: May be assembled several hours ahead or made ahead and frozen.

Seasonings add new flavor to tuna casserole

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Take that old favorite, tuna and noodles, off your family's ho-hum list by adding new flavor. Bite for delicious bite, this casserole made with Italian seasoning, shrimp soup and broccoli, is one of the most economical entrees around.

ITALIAN HERBED TUNA AND NOODLES

3 cups medium noodles
1 10-ounce package frozen cut broccoli
2 tablespoons margarine or butter
1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
1½ cups milk
1 10¾-ounce can condensed cream of shrimp soup
¾ cup shredded process Swiss cheese
1 teaspoon Italian seasoning
1 12½-ounce can water-pack tuna, drained and flaked
1 4-ounce can sliced mushrooms, drained
¼ cup finely chopped onion
2 tablespoons snipped parsley
1 tablespoon margarine or butter
¼ cup fine dry bread crumbs

Cook noodles according to package directions; drain. Cook broccoli according to package directions; drain.

In a large saucepan melt 2 tablespoons margarine. Stir in flour. Add milk and soup. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly. Remove from heat; stir in cheese and seasoning. Stir until cheese melts. Stir in broccoli, tuna, mushrooms, onion and parsley. Fold in noodles. Turn into 2-quart casserole. In small skillet melt 1 tablespoon margarine; toss with bread crumbs. Sprinkle on top of casserole. Bake, uncovered, in 350-degree F oven 35 to 40 minutes or until heated through. Makes 6 servings.

Single-serving meals frozen

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Freezer and microwave team up for homemade single-serving entrees that are ready in minutes. Store these savory stuffed shells in the freezer; reheat in the microwave.

HERBED CHEESE MANICOTTI

6 manicotti
1 beaten egg
1 cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese (4 ounces)
¾ cup ricotta cheese
½ cup loose-pack frozen whole kernel corn
1 2-ounce can mushroom stems and pieces, drained
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
1 tablespoon snipped fresh chives
1½ cups salsa
½ teaspoon garlic powder
¼ teaspoon dried Italian seasoning

Grease 3 shallow individual baking dishes. Cook manicotti according to package directions. Drain. Rinse with cold water. Drain well; set aside.

In medium bowl combine egg, ricotta cheese, corn, mushrooms, green pepper, chives and half the Monterey Jack cheese. Use about ¼ cup cheese mixture and spoon into each manicotti. Place 2 manicotti in each individual baking dish; set aside.

In small bowl combine salsa, garlic powder and Italian seasoning. Spoon ⅓ salsa mixture over manicotti in each dish. Sprinkle with remaining cheese. Wrap in moisture- and vaporproof wrap; seal, label and freeze.

Microwave reheating: Unwrap one entree. Cook, covered with waxed paper or vented plastic wrap, on 70 percent power for 9 to 11 minutes or until heated through, giving dish a half-turn once.

Fish dishes are high in protein, low in fat

By ANN CRISWELL
Hearst News Service

Fish has a considerable nutrition advantage: it is generally high in protein and low in fat.

Lean fish is less than 5 percent fat, and even the fattest fish at 18 percent is less than beef, which averages 30 percent fat, according to "The Fish Book" by Kelly McCune. Fish also contains Omega 3 fatty acids, which are thought to promote heart health — and it's very easy to digest.

Restaurants have helped elevate fish steaks to status symbols and whet our appetites for cooking it at home. Here's what you can do to achieve professional quality at home:

■ Never overcook fish. That goes for shellfish, too.

■ Marinate lean fish (30 minutes is a good rule of thumb) and choose the best cooking technique for the type of fish.

Good choices for grilling over open fires: cod (tends to get dry; use an oil marinade or butter baste); flounder, grouper, halibut, mackerel (oily; doesn't need a marinade, but tends to stick to the grill); rockfish (tile fish), salmon (don't overpower the delicate flavor with strong marinades or charcoal), snapper, swordfish and fresh tuna.

■ Brush fish with a little oil before grilling it.

■ Build a proper fire in the grill. Let coals burn down to a light gray ash over red-hot coals (takes about 30 to 40 minutes). Don't start cooking while coals are still black.

McCune, author of "The Fish Book" (Harper & Row Perennial Library, $14.95) recommends oiling the grill and preheating the grill rack.

■ Turn fish only once. Thin fillets need not be turned.

■ Place fragile fillets or thin steaks on a sheet of oiled aluminum foil on the grill and poke several holes through the foil so the smoke flavor will penetrate fish.

Halibut provides only about 110 calories per 3½-ounce serving, is low in cholesterol and high in protein.

GRILLED HALIBUT WITH HERB BASTE

¼ cup olive oil
2 tablespoons dry white wine
1 tablespoon chopped chives
½ teaspoon grated lemon peel
½ teaspoon crushed tarragon
Salt and pepper as needed
4 (6- to 8-ounce) Alaska halibut steaks, thawed if necessary
4 lemon slices
Chives with blossoms (optional)

Combine the oil, wine, chives, lemon peel, tarragon, salt and pepper. Brush the mixture on both sides of the halibut. Place the steaks on the hot, well-greased grill. Grill, allowing a total of about 10 minutes per inch of thickness measured at its thickest part. Turn once.

Thoroughly brush the fish with the oil mixture several times during the grilling. Grill until the halibut flakes when tested with a fork. Garnish with lemon slices and chive blossoms.

BASIL-BUTTERED FISH STEAKS

(From Better Homes and Gardens "Fresh Fish Cook Book")
½ cup butter or margarine, softened
1 tablespoon snipped fresh basil or 1 teaspoon dried crushed basil
1 tablespoon snipped fresh parsley

Your fisherman had a great catch

You can eat only so much fish now.

Here's how to freeze the rest:

1. Gut and rinse small whole fish, fillet larger ones.
2. Place on baking sheet, lay foil on top, freeze.
3. Dip frozen fish in ice water briefly, hold in air a few seconds to create an ice glaze. Repeat several times. Wrap in freezer paper and freeze.

2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
4 halibut, salmon, or swordfish steaks, cut 1 inch thick (about 2 pounds)

For butter mixture, combine the butter, basil, parsley and lemon juice in a small bowl; mix until well blended.

Place the fish on a greased rack of an unheated broiler pan. Lightly brush with some of the butter mixture. Broil 4 inches from the heat for 5 minutes.

Turn the fish carefully with a wide spatula. Lightly brush with more of the butter mixture. Broil 3 to 7 minutes, or until the fish is done.

To serve, dollop the remaining butter mixture on top of the fish.

CHARCOAL-GRILLED TUNA STEAKS

(From "Southern Seafood Classics")
2 pounds yellowfin tuna steaks, fresh or frozen
½ cup vegetable oil
¼ cup fresh lemon juice
2 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
¼ teaspoon white pepper
⅛ teaspoon liquid hot pepper sauce
Paprika

Thaw the steaks, if frozen. Cut into 6 serving portions, and place in a well-greased hinged wire grill. Combine the oil, lemon juice, salt, Worcestershire, pepper and pepper sauce. Baste the fish with the sauce and sprinkle with paprika.

Cook about 4 inches from moderately hot coals 5 to 6 minutes. Turn, baste with the sauce and sprinkle with paprika. Cook 4 to 5 minutes longer or until the fish has a slightly pink center.

Difference in workout time is a few calories

Associated Press

Don't fret over exercising at the "best" time of the day, says the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau. Many athletes try to exercise in the morning when their basal metabolic rate is higher, so they'll burn more calories.

But the real difference between morning and evening workouts, says Dr. Barbara Frey-Hewitt at the Stanford Center for Disease Prevention Research, is only a few calories.

Experts caution against eating raw oysters

By ANNE BYRN
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — The old wives' tale about eating oysters only in months with an "R" in them may have some credence, say seafood experts.

These are the chillier months when the oyster's appetite lessens, which means it doesn't eat many of the harmful organisms that are currently flourishing in our oyster bays and estuaries nationwide. And the levels of toxic bacteria tend to decrease when the water gets colder.

A name such as PSP may sound like a wartime missile, but in reality, it is one of the mysterious microorganisms waging war on our oyster industry.

PSP stands for "paralytic shellfish poisoning," and it is caused by toxins that block nerve impulses, cause paralysis of the respiratory muscles and extremities and is sometimes fatal to humans. The toxin that causes PSP is produced by microscopic plankton that bloom in such large numbers that they color the water red — thus the name "Red Tide" has been coined to describe them.

The most recent villain is a bacterium called Vibrio vulnificus, which is found in the salty water of the Gulf of Mexico, and in higher concentrations in warm weather. Those at highest risk of being affected by the bacteria are people with liver disorders, cancer or AIDS, said Dr. Dan Rodrigue, medical epidemiologist for the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

In addition, a variety of illnesses — from diarrhea to hepatitis A to cholera — can occur if oysters are harvested from waters contaminated with human sewage.

Because of the increasing number of toxins in the water, eating raw oysters on the half shell, no matter what time of year, is "very risky," said Rodrigue. "You really should cook them."

Not all methods of cookery, such as grilling or steaming, effectively reduce bacterial levels. The longer they are cooked, the better, and frying, sauteing, baking and boiling are recommended.

An oyster gets food and oxygen from its surroundings by pumping about 100 gallons of water a day across its gill system. It also takes in whatever bacteria, viruses, impurities and chemical contaminants are in the water.

Ironically, the bacteria that causes gastroenteritis and cholera, the virus that causes hepatitis A and the toxin that produces PSP are most dangerous to humans but don't faze an oyster's system.

What's even worse, said Carol Ballentine of the Food and Drug Administration, is that the oyster is able to filter and concentrate these microorganisms at higher levels than they are found in its habitat.

The best way to avoid sickness and yet to enjoy raw oysters is to eat them in cool months and to purchase them from reputable retailers who buy from safe, pollution- and parasite-free areas, Ms. Ballentine said.

A parasite that, at present, poses more danger to the oyster population than it does to humans is mysterious MSX, which first decimated Atlantic coast oysters in the 1950s and '60s. While it subsided in the '70s, it returned with full force in the '80s. It tends to attack oysters in saltier water that are already weakened by pollution.

Beds in Atlantic coastal areas such as Maryland and Virginia, as well as the Belon oyster beds in Europe, have been greatly diminished by MSX.

What's being done to ensure present and future generations have a safe, clean supply of oysters? The Florida Department of Natural Resources is working with the FDA to learn more about Vibrio, and Florida Sea Grant researchers are preparing a brochure to educate physicians, public health officials and dietitians about the bacterium. Apalachicola Bay waters are being monitored to determine what times of year Vibrio is present.

This past summer, the FDA warned consumers to cook Gulf of Mexico oysters from April to October. Gulf of Mexico oysters account for about a third of all oysters sold in the United States. The industry is also considering an expensive method of cleaning oysters, whereby shucked oysters are placed in purging tanks where their water is disinfected.

Oysters are shipped with a tag that reveals where they were harvested, by whom and on what date. This is an FDA regulation and one local health departments are supposed to enforce during routine inspections.

Restaurants are supposed to keep the tags for 90 days, so that if a customer gets sick from eating raw oysters, the source can be traced and the bay or estuary closed.

If you believe you have become ill as a result of eating contaminated raw oysters, contact the regional office of the FDA, your local health department and your doctor.

DEAR ABBY

Majority votes to stop solicitations by phone

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest your columns about telephone solicitation, and agree it is sometimes a nuisance. But I am chairman of the fund-raising committee for a local symphony orchestra, and we could never survive without telephone solicitations. We write letters first, but most people ignore letters, so we resort to telephoning — and we do not give up until we have made five telephone calls.

I do not like to call people, and I can understand their irritation if they are interrupted in lovemaking or some other pleasantry. However, lovemaking can be resumed later — a dead symphony orchestra is not easily revived, so I continue to call.

Abby, any advice that can free me from having to call people to beg for money is welcome. — LARS B. LOFGREN, M.D., TALENT, ORE.

DEAR DR. LOFGREN: Believe me to understand your problem, but I still maintain that the telephone is in the home for the convenience of the person who pays for it.

DEAR ABBY: The problems created by aggressive telephone solicitation can be more than merely disturbing.

Not long ago, my wife, who is undergoing chemotherapy treatments for cancer, received a phone call from a local cemetery, telling her that she had "won" a cemetery lot worth $500!

She replied, "Thank you, but I am not ready to die yet!" She was visibly upset and wondered aloud if perhaps the American Cancer Society might have given them her name. Of course they had not, but it is apparent that some controls over telephoning people to solicit business are desperately needed. — ANGRY IN MANSFIELD, OHIO

DEAR ANGRY: My stand on telephone solicitation for any reason, which includes consumer researchers who want only to ask busy homemakers what kind of soap or cleanser they use, met with some angry responses from professional researchers. For example:

DEAR ABBY: You said, "Market researchers should find another way to gather information. Some people sleep at odd hours; others may be ill and don't want to be disturbed."

Abby, that response was the most uninformed response I have ever read in my adult life. Maybe it's time you considered stepping down to let a more rational, knowledgeable person give advice to the public.

National companies need to know what consumers really think. Their survival depends on quality information. Our client list of manufacturers, retailers, banks and dentists are most interested in gathering information so they can better fulfill consumer needs. To say that market researchers should find a better way to gather information reflects your total ignorance of what telephone research really does.

I, too, grew up in Iowa, and it is obvious that you have lost the common-sense perspective associated with Midwesterners.

By the way, we get many more positive comments than negative ones from people our company has interviewed. It is with much sadness that I read your poorly thought-out column. — PROFESSIONAL RESEARCHER, CHARLESTON, S.C.

DEAR RESEARCHER: Sorry. I stand by my original opinion: Telephoning the general public either to sell something or to gather information for whatever purpose is an invasion of their privacy and should be abolished. Furthermore, my mail is running 100-to-1 in favor of my view.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A project being put on hold could be a blessing in disguise. Do not burn your bridges. In romance, you are drawn to a person of mystery. Work to put money matters on a sound, commonsense basis. You feel less inclined to push the panic button than in the past. Young and old Aquarians alike find support and strength within the family circle. Good times roll in spring! Be more selective when making friends.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Gen. Douglas MacArthur, cartoonist Jules Feiffer, entertainer Eartha Kitt, actor Paul Newman, football star Jack Youngblood.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Talk over your objectives with friends who are professionals. You know exactly what to say in a difficult situation. Continue to pinch pennies. The mail brings good news. Romance flourishes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New alliances will increase your earning power. Reach beyond today's limitations. Escape from your familiar routine by getting out more during the day. The evening definitely favors romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Vital information gives you the advantage in professional relationships or business negotiations. Welcome an out-of-towner who can bring you news about hometown folks. A domestic situation is on an even keel.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Squelch a rumor before it does further harm. The innocent victim will be grateful and you will have a new ally. Look for some hidden benefits at work during this period.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The effort you put forth today will produce bigger dividends tomorrow. Others are eager to jump on your bandwagon. Welcome their help and advice. A marital relationship is strengthened.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be more flexible. A moderate exercise program should be conscientiously followed. Pay attention to delicate nuances where romance is concerned. Become a better listener. Offer mate support, not suggestions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day for socializing with older people. Entertaining is pleasurable if you keep the guest list short. Mate or business partner shares an important secret.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A financial venture sounds too good to be true. Do not overestimate the profit potential. Dollars earned from your job are a more reliable source of wealth. Romance enters a new phase.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If asking for a raise, be prepared to state why you deserve one. Thoughts of romance could interfere with the flow of career success. Concentrate on essentials first.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Give in gracefully; eventually things will work out to your advantage. Be sensitive to the needs of your loved ones. Daydreams and travel occupy your thoughts. Plan that special vacation with mate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Teamwork goes a long way toward getting things done at home. Visitors or neighbors may want to join in, too. Romantic partner will require extra attention. Show tenderness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Joint ventures will have a beneficial effect on your income. You will need plenty of discipline and patience to make things work, however.

You can't play bridge by rote. All those generalities you learn as a tyro serve only as guidelines in the play. On this hand you have to go contrary to two of those rubrics, depending on what line declarer adopts, if you want to be sure to defeat the contract.

Since South had showed minimum values, North was a trifle aggressive in the auction. His bid over game inquired about a club control. When South dutifully bid five no trump to confirm possession of the king, North opted for the no trump slam to protect his partner's monarch from immdiate demise.

A low club lead would have given declarer no chance, but West was not clairvoyant. Declarer won the diamond lead in dummy and cashed the ace-king of spades. All he had to to to make his contract was to get to his hand so he could discard one of dummy's losers on his queen of spades, and the only suit to offer a means of transportation was clubs.

However, declarer was faced with a choice. He could play East for either the queen or ace of clubs. Since West might have led a club from the queen, he decided to play East for the lady and rely on a club finesse.

At trick four declarer led a low club. Now we know all about second-hand low, but if East had heeded that saw, declarer's ten would force the ace and the king would be the entry to hand. But if East flies in with the queen, there is no entry and the contract fails.

Now let's assume that, instead, declarer leads the jack of clubs at trick four. If East "covers an honor with an honor," the defenders are dead. If he plays low, declarer again is frustrated from gaining entry to his hand when West does his part by withholding the ace.

After the SuperBowl the best go Pro.

And ESPN lets you watch. The Pro Bowl pits the best from the AFC against those from the NFC in one of the most exciting football games of the season. So when the SuperBowl's over, don't put away your megaphone, the best are just suiting up.

On January 29 at 7:00 PM on channel 12.

'Surf's up' in Iowa for sock hop recalling Holly, Valens, 'Big Bopper'

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — It's Buddy Holly time again in northern Iowa, time to put aside modern day problems for people who remember when rock 'n' roll was young.

Holly

Some 2,000 18-year-olds trapped in middle-aged bodies, determined not to let the music die, will gather Feb. 3-4 at the Surf Ballroom in Clear Lake where Holly performed his last concert 30 years ago.

"You can forget about the federal deficit, crime or whatever bothers people the rest of the year," said Darryl Hensley, who has taken the annual event from a money-losing spoof to a sold-out attraction.

"They got wife problems? Kid problems? They come here and they're 18 again, and they have no problems. And you know they want to come. Hey, this isn't Phoenix, Ariz. This is Clear Lake, Iowa, in winter," Hensley said.

As usual, all 1,600 tickets for the two-day event at the Surf have been sold for months. The other 400 tickets are controlled by the ballroom, a local radio station and Hensley, with many reserved for performers, press and security.

After their concert 30 years ago, Holly and fellow rockers J.P. "Big Bopper" Richardson and Ritchie Valens decided to fly to their next gig rather than take the tour bus. Their small chartered airplane crashed into a frozen field shortly after takeoff. There were no survivors.

Hensley, a radio personality who prefers to be known as the Mad Hatter, said there are no special plans for this year's concert. Holly's relatives have attended before, but none has accepted invitations this year.

"There's no reason to change it or add anything. I got the right combination for the thing. People from 30 to 50 or 60, they're reliving 1959. Don McLean wrote that song ("American Pie") about the day the music died. I think he was premature. Buddy Holly is still living today, bigger and better than ever," the Hatter said.

On Feb. 3, the event begins with the Mad Hatter's Tea Party, an all-night sock hop featuring '50s and '60s favorites. The next night, Bobby Vee, the Diamonds and Freddy "Boom Boom" Cannon will recreate their hits, along with warm-up groups the Rockin' Ricochettes of Minneapolis and Bill Dewey and the Blazing Broncos of Clear Lake. The $45 ticket provides admission to both nights.

Bobby Vee took over Holly's scheduled appearance the night after the crash.

Hensley first hosted the concert as personality and owner of KZEV radio in Clear Lake, now owned by his ex-wife Diane Hensley.

"I was just doing a spoof on the radio show," he said. "I was brand new in Iowa, and I explained that we had built the studio by mistake in a time warp. Buddy and Elvis (Presley) talked to me each morning. I used a couple of my alter ego voices. Buddy thought it was strange that nobody put on a concert in his memory, and Elvis said, 'Yeah, man, we got to do this for Buddy.'

"Then some guy from AP called and asked if I was really going to do it. So we did," he said.

"It's been sold out every year, although I bought most of the tickets the first years. I lost my rear end in the beginning."

NEW YORK (AP) — A new plan has emerged after years of debate to move the bulk of the nation's largest collection of Indian artifacts from New York City to Washington, D.C., a newspaper reported today.

The Museum of the American Indian would relocate from its Manhattan site to the Mall in Washington, The New York Times reported. The Smithsonian Institution would build and operate that museum, as well as a smaller Indian museum in New York.

Although the collection is considered the finest of its kind, it has been virtually invisible in its current location in upper Manhattan, far from the usual tourist areas.

The museum is only able to display about 1 percent of the collection, and the rest is stored in a four-story warehouse in the Bronx. There has been increasing concern that the collection could be deteriorating.

Various plans had been raised for several years to move the collection, which at one point appeared on the verge of being moved to Dallas. But New York City officials intervened, pointing out that a trust established for the museum 73 years ago requires that it remain in New York.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Singer Mel Torme says he expects to be left out of the winner's circle this year at the Grammys, thanks to his criticism of the award panel that voted him honors two years in a row.

Torme

Torme, who will be appearing at the Sands Hotel, Casino and Country Club this weekend, blasted the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences for failing to nominate his partner on both award-winning albums, pianist George Shearing.

By 1982, Torme had received 11 Grammy nominations for Best Jazz Vocalist. Because five of the nominated albums were collaborations with Shearing, Torme asked the nominating committee why Shearing had been ignored.

"They told me they had no category for him," Torme said. "So we make the album 'An Evening With George Shearing and Mel Torme,' " Torme said. "George asked me 'why do you want to do this?' I told him now, 'We are a duo and that there is a duo category.' Again, I got nominated and he didn't."

That album gave Torme his first Grammy in 1983, and in 1984 the duo's follow-up "Top Drawer" earned him his second.

This year, he is nominated for "A Vintage Year," while Shearing is again ignored. The Grammys will be awarded Feb. 22 on CBS-TV.

"I won't win this Grammy. I have come to understand how the Grammys work," said the 64-year-old singer, who last year published his autobiography, "It Wasn't All Velvet."

LONDON (AP) — The Duchess of York, dubbed "Her Royal Idleness" by British tabloids who accused her of preferring play to work, went back on duty at a dinner held to start a fund-raising campaign for British museums.

As royal patron of an organization called Museums Year, she was guest of honor Tuesday at the dinner attended by rock star and charity aid promoter Bob Geldof; the editor of The Times of London, Charles Wilson, and other celebrities.

The 29-year-old duchess, who as Sarah Ferguson married Prince Andrew in 1986, looked slim and elegant in a black Tudor-style dress with fitted velvet bodice and leg-of-mutton sleeves.

Seaweed grows more popular

By WANDA A. ADAMS
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — We've tried tortillas, salsa, and hoisin sauce; tabasco has even made it to the White House dining room.

But seaweed?

The Japanese eat it every day and like it. Most Americans do the same but don't know it. Seaweed derivatives are a common but invisible ingredient in many processed foods.

A few Westerners are even beginning to appreciate kelp and algae in all their crunchy, briny, nutty forms — at least at sushi bars and in Japanese restaurants. And some aquaculturists predict seaweed — or "sea vegetables," as image-conscious boosters say — will soon bask in celebrity as the new culinary exotica.

It's happening already.

Sea vegetables such as nori, wakame, kombu and agar-agar are abutting oatmeal and peanut butter in American pantries. Asians, macrobiotics enthusiasts and some vegetarians lead the way.

Seaweed grower John Merrill says sea vegetables — mostly sold dried, then reconstituted in water — will soon spread to other households as well.

"It's going to happen," he says. "It wasn't that long ago that you couldn't get tortillas or salsa in the supermarket. Now they're everywhere...look at how common sushi has become."

Merrill is a partner in the American Sea Vegetable Co., one of a handful of sea vegetable producers in the United States. In late 1987, the company reaped its first harvest of cultivated nori — otherwise known as laver or Porphyra, a red algae — grown on plastic nets suspended in Puget Sound. In a process similar to making paper, nori is chopped, mixed with water to form a slurry, rolled flat, and dried.

American Sea Vegetable is researching the possibility of cultivating bullwhip kelp, which grows here but is too ecologically important to be freely harvested from the wild, Merrill said. The kelp is similar to what the Japanese call "kombu," the key ingredient in "dashi" — a fragrant stock that is the basis for much of Japanese cooking.

Merrill and other enthusiasts say nori, kombu and their many oceanic cousins are not only nutritious, but are an ecologically benign industry for U.S. waters (the growers use no pesticides or fertilizers).

Almost all sea vegetables are rich in calcium, protein, fiber, minerals and vitamins C, B1, B2, E and K, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

For example, 100 grams (3.5 ounces) of nori offers 470 milligrams of calcium, 23 milligrams of iron and provides 30 to 45 percent of the recommended daily allowance of dietary fiber in a 1-ounce serving.

Folklore in Japan and even the British Isles has long linked seaweed with longer life and general good health. Researchers now are supporting those claims.

In "The Food Pharmacy" (Bantam, 1988), nutrition writer Jean Carper cites several studies that link sea vegetables with lower rates of cancer, high blood pressure and stroke in experimental animals. The results also hold for the Japanese population in general. Japanese research suggests that nori may help prevent ulcers and assist the body in fighting disease-causing bacteria.

Sea vegetables tasty change

By LORNA SASS
Copley News Service

Call them seaweeds, and they sound unappetizing. But call them sea vegetables, consider their power-packed concentration of valuable nutrients, and the picture suddenly changes.

One of the most ancient forms of life, sea vegetables have been appreciated for their unique taste and healing properties in many parts of the world for millenia.

If you ever have eaten in a Japanese restaurant, chances are that you have already eaten at least one sea vegetable. Flattened sheets of crispy dried nori are used as the outer casings of sushi rolls, and small softened bits of nori are often floated in miso soup.

The Chinese also usually serve a sea green in wonton soup, and the cosmetics industry has recognized the healthful value of sea vegetables for years.

According to Rebecca Wood, author of "The Whole Foods Encyclopedia" (Prentice-Hall, $14.95), "Sea vegetables supply all of the minerals needed for human health, with the most significant elements being calcium, iodine, phosphorus, sodium and iron."

Indeed, research has shown that sea plants contain 10 to 20 times more minerals than land plants and are an excellent source of protein. Seaweed is also a better-than-average source of vitamins.

With such a fine nutritional profile to recommend them, sea vegetables deserve the attention of any adventurous health-conscious cook — especially since they have the added advantages of being quite delicious and extremely versatile.

A wholesome range of dried sea vegetables is now readily available in health food stores and Oriental markets. Most are imported from Japan, but a few — such as dulse and kelp — are harvested off the coast of Maine and Massachusetts.

Here is a glossary of the most commonly available sea vegetables plus suggestions and recipes for incorporating them into your diet. The cooking ideas and first recipe were inspired by Sharon Ann Rhoad's delightful and informative book, "Cooking With Sea Vegetables" (Autumn Press, 1978). Most packaged sea vegetables also offer cooking and serving suggestions.

NORI

Also known as green laver or sea lettuce, nori usually is sold in the form of flat, dark greenish-brown sheets. It has delicate, sweet flavor and is ideal for wrapping sushi rolls, floating in soups and stews, or cutting into thin strips for garnishing salads.

KELP AND KOMBU

Kelp is most commonly sold in powdered form and makes a tasty alternative to table salt.

Its close relative, kombu, is usually sold in dehydrated strips that expand considerably upon soaking. Once softened in water, kombu may be used instead of pasta for lasagna, or stuffed as you might fill a grape leaf. A few strips of kombu add a zesty edge to soups and stews.

ARAME AND HIJIKI

Both of these sea plants are sold in the form of charcoal-black, spaghetti-thin strips. Since they are precooked, they require very little cooking time and are delicious mixed into cold salads, tossed into curries and pilafs and stir-fried or simmered with chopped onions, celery and carrots.

WAKAME

A must for authentic miso soup, wakame may also be softened for two to three minutes in water and cut into slivers for addition to a green salad. Try grinding dried wakame and mixing it with sesame seeds for a very tasty condiment.

CURRIED ZUCCHINI WITH NORI

1 tablespoon olive oil
½ teaspoon cumin seeds
½ teaspoon black mustard seeds (optional)
1 large clove garlic, minced
1 large onion, coarsely chopped
4 scallions, minced
4 large zucchini, cut into matchstick strips
4 large ripe tomatoes, coarsely chopped
4 teaspoons curry powder
4 sheets nori, torn
Sea salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

In large skillet that has a cover, heat oil. Fry cumin and mustard seeds in oil for 20 seconds, then add garlic, onion and scallions and saute for 2 to 3 minutes.

Add zucchini, tomatoes and curry powder. Cover and simmer until zucchini is crisp tender, about 3 minutes. (Tomatoes should give off enough water to steam zucchini; if not, add a few tablespoons of water.) Stir in torn nori (which will soften almost immediately) and season with salt and pepper to taste. Serve warm or chilled with brown rice.

HIJIKI SALAD

1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 clove garlic, minced
2 to 3 slices fresh ginger
1 onion, coarsely chopped
½ green or red pepper, diced
2 carrots, sliced
2 cups tightly packed hijiki, freshened in water to cover
2 scallions, minced
1 to 2 tablespoons toasted sesame oil
2 tablespoons sesame seeds
1 tablespoon apple cider or umeboshi plum vinegar

In large skillet, heat oil. Saute garlic, ginger and onion for 2 to 3 minutes. Add pepper, carrots, and hijiki along with ½ cup of hijiki soaking water. Cover and cook until carrots are crisp tender, about 4 to 5 minutes. Pour mixture through a fine strainer to drain. Set into bowl.

Stir in scallions, sesame oil and seeds and vinegar. Adjust seasonings and serve at room temperature or chilled.

Steamed foods are among the healthiest

Butter and cream add nutritional knockout.

Here's how to add flavor and not fat:

1. Don't put flavorings into the water. They will not penetrate the food.
2. Place aromatics in the bottom of steamer. Try basil, fennel, sage, rosemary, lemon slices, etc.
3. Lay fish, vegetables, or poultry directly on the flavoring. Steam drives the flavor into the food.

Fish dish served with vegetables

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

There are some great catches in your grocer's seafood case, and they come in all shapes and sizes. Because the thickness of the fish is especially important for uniform microwave cooking, we base our timings on ½-inch thickness. Perch, turbot, walleyed pike and orange roughy fillets are usually about ½-inch thick. Flounder, sole and whiting fillets are usually thinner; haddock, red snapper and cod are often thicker. If your fillets are not exactly ½-inch thick all over, you can compensate. Just halve thicker fillets, or fold, stack or trim thinner pieces.

GAZPACHO FILLETS

1 pound fresh or frozen fish fillets
1 large tomato, peeled, seeded and chopped (¾ to 1 cup)
¼ cup chopped, seeded cucumber
¼ cup chopped green pepper
¼ cup chopped celery
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon instant chicken bouillon granules
⅛ teaspoon pepper
Few dashes bottled hot pepper sauce
2 tablespoons tomato paste

Thaw fish, if frozen. In a microwave-safe 8x8x2-inch baking dish combine tomato, cucumber, green pepper, celery, onion, lemon juice, sugar, bouillon granules, pepper and hot pepper sauce. Arrange fillets on top of vegetables with thicker portions toward edges of dish. Turn under any thin portions of fillets to obtain an even thickness of about ½-inch. Sprinkle fillets with salt and pepper.

Cover with clear plastic wrap, folding back a corner to allow steam to escape. Cook on 100 percent power (high) 6 to 9 minutes or until fish flakes easily with a fork, giving dish a half-turn after 4 minutes. Carefully transfer fish to a serving platter. Cover to keep warm. For sauce, stir tomato paste into tomato mixture in baking dish. Cook, uncovered, on high about 1 minute or until heated through. Serve over fish. Serves 4.

Nutrition information per serving: 114 cal., 21 g pro., 5 g carb., 1 g fat, 59 mg chol., 200 mg sodium. U.S. RDA: 13 percent vit. A, 40 percent vit. C, 14 percent niacin.

Potato snacks boast nacho flavor

Associated Press

NACHO POTATO SLICES

2 medium potatoes (about 12 ounces total)
2 tablespoons thinly sliced green onion
2 tablespoons finely chopped green pepper
¼ cup bottled taco sauce or salsa
½ cup shredded American cheese

Scrub potatoes. Trim ends. Cut potatoes into ⅜-inch slices. In microwave-safe 8x8x2-inch baking dish arrange potato slices, with smaller slices in center. Sprinkle with green onion and green pepper.

Cover with microwave-safe clear plastic wrap, turning back corner to allow steam to escape. Cook on 100 percent power 7-10 minutes or until tender, turning dish half-turn once. Drizzle taco sauce over slices. Sprinkle with shredded cheese. Cook, uncovered, 30-60 seconds more or until cheese melts.

Fish soups and sauces need a boost

Just a hint of flavor is needed.

Here's how to add flavor of the sea:

1. Add 1 or 2 anchovy fillets to simmering fish stew, soup, or sauce.
2. As the fillets cook they disintegrate and dissolve into the main cooking liquid, adding a fishy punch.
3. Taste. If more correction is needed, add another fillet or a bit of oil. Go slowly.

'Night of oysters' was pearl of dining idea

By NATHALIE DUPREE
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — At the London Cordon Bleu, I was taught you should never repeat the same food twice in a menu. Fortunately, like most rules, it was meant to be broken on occasion.

Such a time is when oysters come back in their full, plump, icy glory after the hot summer. Tom and Susan Puett (now owners of the Sierra Grill in Atlanta), once organized an all-oyster meal for a group of friends. I wish they would do it again. That night was the beginning of a new kind of alliance for me, a bonding of friends who had a love of food in common.

It started in the early evening, when we arrived in sweaters and blue jeans to open the sack of oysters on the back porch. There were enough oyster knives for the men, who opened enough for the women to start cooking them. The men then proceeded to open enough for us all to have a gracious plenty on the half shell, along with horseradish and hot sauce. It was a time to be grateful for chauvinism.

We ate outside, popping oysters into our mouths just moments after they were opened. We squeezed a bit of lemon juice over them and tipped the shell to make sure we got the last bit of liquid into our mouths.

When we were chilly enough to go inside, Jean Thwaite had her oyster stew ready. We stood in the kitchen, eating the stew to warm our bones. It was so good and tasty and flavorful, I make it each year at this time.

I brought spinach sauteed in brown butter, topped with oysters and then grilled. The husky nutty flavor of the brown butter enveloped the oysters. Jim and Gwen Bentley fixed a garlic oyster on the half shell, full of onion, garlic, hot sauce and seasoning. We relished it in front of the fireplace.

When the chill was completely gone — the glow of the fire and the kinship of relishing good food warmed us outside as well as inside — we ate Rebecca Chase's scalloped oysters, which were drizzled with butter, then layered with saltine cracker crumbs sparked with ground pepper. The plump oysters nestled in a crust of crushed saltines.

We moved to the dining room, which gleamed with wood and silver. There we ate Susan's oysters on a bed of leeks, topped with a white butter sauce and a sprinkling of golden caviar. The contrast of the white shells with the muted green of the leeks and the diamond-like glistening of the golden caviar made a startling visual impact. The variation of flavors surprised and enlightened us — the oysters took on the flavor of the leeks to create a new flavor unlike the oysters we had just been eating.

That night marked the formation of a group that endured for years and met regularly to celebrate food. We had the idea that night for a dinner cooked completely over and in an open fireplace. Tom and Jim were aided by Dick Williams, Walter Thwaite and Bud Creal (the three of whom never cooked a thing, but provided good conversation and enthusiasm) in deciding to build a sway in Jim's fireplace for the next month. We named ourselves The Food Group, and expanded our group the next month and again the next, until we came full circle and went our separate ways.

Recently, I asked Susan what she would serve if we were able to catch the magic of that night again. She responded by talking about her red chili oysters, dredged in a mixture of light chili powder and flour, then sauteed in butter, placed around a spinach chiffonade with julienned red and green bell peppers and an orange marjoram vinaigrette.

A different world than the one we were in, that cold evening, that happy time of promise. But then, of course, we would have Jean's oyster stew, and maybe it would seem the same again.

Experts predict food trends for 1989

NEW YORK (AP) — Now's the time to pull out the crystal ball and make some predictions for 1989 food and taste trends.

Buzz words for 1989: Oat bran. Calcium. Boron. Beta carotene. Lemon grass. Fiber. Reduced-sugar fruit spreads. Hearty breakfasts. Cheesecakes. Yellow bell peppers. Cranberries. Real Cantonese cuisine. Honest food. Designer menus. Premium toasts.

FOOD & WINE magazine says one of the important innovations of 1989 and the 1990s will be the sous-vide process of warming precooked, never-frozen meals in plastic bags.

Unlike boil-in-a-bag products that are frozen, dried or chemically treated, sous-vide foods are cooked and placed in vacuum-sealed plastic bags that prevent deterioration for up to three weeks. They need only to be refrigerated and heated through for serving. Popular in France for the last 15 years, sous-vide foods will be available in gourmet stores in the United States for $2 to $6 a package, the magazine says.

New in appliances: steam ovens, such as those by Tefal, that cook rapidly and retain moisture, and extra-wide ovens (twice the width of the average model), such as those by Gaggenau, which are perfect for pizzas.

1989 promises to be the "year of the banana," according to FOOD & WINE magazine, with many new varieties making their appearance including manzanos, called apple bananas, from Central America; burros, chunky bananas with a square shape; red bananas, with a purplish skin and reddish tinge inside; and starchy plantains.

Beer drinkers will enjoy dry beer, introduced two years ago in Japan and now available in the United States. The brew is fermented longer, so more sugar is converted into alcohol, making for a drier tasting beer.

And for those who love coffee, the latest innovation is the "espresso pod," a kind of tea bag for coffee that is precisely measured, pressed and packaged to brew a perfectly intense cup of Italian coffee.

Among FOOD & WINE magazine's other predictions:

■ MEDITERRANEAN CUISINE: Mediterranean cuisine fits perfectly with today's low-cholesterol, high complex-carbohydrate diets. The emphasis is on olive oil, garlic, vegetables, legumes and seafood, instead of butter, cream and red meat.

■ PROVENCAL: Look for classic dishes like bouillabaisse and olive-onion-anchovy pizza, which make use of black olives, garlic, tomatoes, capers, saffron, fish and fresh herbs.

■ PROSCIUTTO: Look for genuine prosciutto from Italy. The federal government has lifted its ban on imported pork products, and lovers of the delicious cured ham from Parma will be able to enjoy the real thing.

■ MIDWESTERN CUISINE: More folksy than New York, less radical than California, this down-home food is always served in generous portions and is exemplified by dishes such as corn chowder with country ham and Indian persimmon pudding with dried blueberries.

■ ANYTHING SMOKED: Anything smoked promises to be "hot" in 1989, including salmon, scallops, oysters, turkey, quail and venison.

■ VEGETABLES: We'll also see more jicamas in supermarkets, Asian pears year-round, cheaper shiitake mushrooms grown in the United States, sun-dried tomatoes, fresh cilantro, sugar snap peas and "Champagne" grapes (actually a form of currant).

Executive chef Jon Jividen of Ridgewells Caterer of King of Prussia, Pa., includes "honest" food, "designer" menus and premium toasts among his taste-trend picks for 1989.

Jividen says "honest" food, also called comfort food, down-home cooking, or real food, is the result of the growing availability and appreciation of high quality produce, and the continuing movement away from overwhelmingly complicated ingredients.

Those who crave variety will find it in controlled "designer" menus with complimentary flavors unjumbled and separated into different courses or side dishes.

As for the trend toward premium toasts, Jividen says people are drinking less but better. Bars are being stocked with quality labels, and people are ordering cocktails with specific brand name liquors.

More requests are coming in for single malt scotch, ports, eau de vies, brandies, armagnacs and cognacs, he says, and people want to know the vintage of the wine.

Other taste trends noted by Jividen:

■ BREADS: There is a demand for whole grain breads, and the average consumer has a well-developed vocabulary of special requests including oat bran, sesame, bulgur, classic rye, pumpkin, winter, summer and red wheat. Classic dinner rolls have shapely competition in crescents, biscuits, baguettes, brioches and petit pans. Cheeses and other savories are baked right in.

■ PASTA: Americans love pasta, and as the diversity in products has increased, so, too, has the demand. The selection now includes lemon pepper, tarragon, squid ink, onion, tricolored tortellini and fusilli, raviolli, rigatoni, lasagna and roulade sheets, spinach, egg and tomato cappellini and fettucine.

■ TURKEY: Chicken won't wane in popularity, but turkey will gain as an equally inexpensive, versatile alternative. Expect surprises like turkey cutlets with plum brandy coulis; stuffed turkey legs with sausage and fresh herbs.

■ A FEW MORE THINGS FROM THE PLATE: Watch for more wild game including partridge, elk, reindeer, buffalo, rabbit and venison; greater use of edible flowers; more couscous, risotto, basmati and mixed bean dishes; "pepper-mania" including hot, sweet, red, yellow, green, purple, chocolate-colored, roasted, fried, steamed and stuffed; and new favorite international cuisines including African, Moroccan, Indian, Caribbean, Spanish and Soviet Georgian.

Clam chowder microwaveable

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

MANHATTAN CLAM CHOWDER

1 slice bacon
1 small potato, peeled and cut into ½-inch cubes (¾ cup)
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ cup chopped celery
1 7½-ounce can tomatoes, cut up
1 6½-ounce can minced clams
1 6-ounce can tomato juice
1 small bay leaf
⅛ teaspoon dried thyme, crushed
⅛ teaspoon pepper
Snipped parsley

Place bacon in a microwave-safe 1½-quart casserole. Cover with paper towels and cook on 100 percent power (high) for 1 to 2 minutes or until crisp. Remove bacon, reserving drippings. Drain bacon on paper towels. Crumble bacon and set aside.

Add potato, onion and celery to reserved drippings. Cook, covered, on high for 4 to 6 minutes or until vegetables are tender, stirring once.

Stir in undrained tomatoes, undrained clams, tomato juice, bay leaf, thyme and pepper. Cook, uncovered, on high for 3 to 5 minutes or until heated through, stirring once. Remove bay leaf. Stir in bacon. Garnish each serving with parsley, if desired. Makes 3 servings.

Fish termed 'the ultimate diet food'

By MELANIE BARNARD
and BROOKE DOJNY
Copley News Service

It's January, and the guilt has set in.

But, thankfully, to make it a little easier, we are in truth almost tired of rich food. Not only our waistlines and our thighs, but also our palates are craving something light, something fresh, something healthy.

Gratefully, we can turn to fish Not only is it the ultimate diet food, but it also fills all of the other requirements as well.

Poached Fish Fillets Oriental is inspired by a dish that Melanie once ate at Leon Lianides' The Coach House restaurant in New York, where he does a poached black bass with a julienne of colorful vegetables bathed in an intensely aromatic broth. Our version adds Oriental seasonings (ginger and sesame) to boost the flavor of the poaching liquid. This dish makes a lovely meal in itself that needs only the addition of melba toast or rice cakes and perhaps some sliced fruit for dessert.

Shrimp and Snow Peas with Garlic Lemon Rice is also a whole meal in a skillet. This dish is made with rice — that delicious and healthy carbohydrate — and uses a minimum of fat in the form of flavorful (and good for you) olive oil. Garlic and lemon add such a boost with their heady flavor and aroma that one does not feel in the least deprived eating this!

Bottled clam juice contributes a wonderful flavor boost in both of these recipes. Look for it in the juice section of your supermarket.

When poaching fish, barely simmer, don't boil. A rapid boil will cause the fish to fall apart.

Fish odor can be easily removed from your hands, utensils or cutting board by rubbing with the cut half of a lemon.

POACHED FISH FILLETS ORIENTAL

1 leek, white part only
1 carrot
1 small red bell pepper
1 rib celery
1 cup white wine
1 cup bottled clam juice
1 cup water, plus additional if needed
2 slices lemon
2 half-dollar-size slices fresh gingerroot
Pinch red pepper flakes
4 unskinned red snapper fillets (1 to 1½ pounds total) or other firm, flaky fish fillets
1 teaspoon sesame oil
Salt and pepper, to taste

Yields 4 servings.

Preparation and cooking time: 25 minutes.

Thoroughly wash leek. Scrape carrot. Discard seeds and ribs from bell pepper.

Cut leek, carrot, bell pepper and celery into thin strips about ¼x1½ inches. Reserve all vegetables.

Bring wine, clam juice, 1 cup water, lemon, gingerroot and pepper flakes to boil in non-reactive skillet just large enough to hold fish in single layer.

Lower heat, add fish and small amount of water if liquid does not cover fish. Poach gently for about 5 minutes or until fish is opaque.

Remove fish with slotted spoon and place, skin side up, in each of 4 shallow soup dishes. Carefully peel off and discard skin.

Bring liquid to boil and add all of the vegetable strips. Cook 2 to 3 minutes until crisp-tender.

Use slotted spoon to remove vegetables and place over fish. Discard lemon and ginger slices.

Stir sesame oil into poaching liquid, then taste and add salt and pepper only if necessary. (Bottled clam juice can be very salty).

Pour about ½ cup poaching liquid over each serving of fish and vegetables.

SHRIMP AND SNOW PEAS WITH GARLIC-LEMON RICE

3 tablespoons olive oil
1 small red bell pepper, chopped
3 cloves garlic, minced
1 cup raw long-grain white rice
¼ teaspoon red pepper flakes
⅓ cup white wine
1 cup bottled clam juice
1 tablespoon lemon juice
⅔ cup water
½ teaspoon grated lemon zest
4 ounces snow peas
1 pound medium shrimp, peeled and deveined
Black pepper, to taste

Yields 4 servings.

Preparation and cooking time: 35 minutes.

Heat oil in large (12- to 14-inch) skillet and cook bell pepper and garlic over medium-low heat, stirring often, for about 4 minutes until vegetables are softened.

Add rice to skillet and cook about 1 minute, stirring until grains are coated and begin to look translucent.

Add pepper flakes, wine, clam juice, lemon juice and water. Stir well and bring to boil. Cover pan, lower heat and simmer 18 minutes.

While rice is cooking, trim snow peas and cut in half on diagonal if they are large.

Uncover pan and add up to ¼ cup water if all of the liquid seems to be absorbed at this point.

Gently stir lemon zest into rice mixture and arrange snow peas and shrimp on top, pushing them lightly into rice.

Cover pan and simmer 3 to 5 minutes until snow peas are crisp-tender and shrimp is just cooked through.

Taste and add pepper, if needed.

Nourishing soup made in minutes

By NANCY BYAL
Assoicted Press

Here's a nourishing soup with rich, homemade taste. Because you start with a convenient packaged noodle mix, you can ladle the soup up in a mere 15 minutes.

SALMON NOODLE CHOWDER

2¼ cups water
2 tablespoons margarine or butter
1 4½-ounce package noodles with sour cream and chive sauce
1½ cups loose-pack frozen corn, broccoli and red peppers
½ teaspoon dried dillweed
1 7¾-ounce can red salmon
2 cups milk

In a large saucepan bring water and margarine to boiling. Stir in noodles with sour cream and chive sauce, frozen vegetables and dillweed. Return to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer, uncovered, for 5 minutes.

Meanwhile, drain salmon; remove skin and bones. Break salmon into chunks. Stir milk into noodle mixture. Return to boiling; add salmon. Cook and stir for 1 minute more. Serve at once. Makes 3 servings.

Tips for proper popcorn etiquette listed

NEW YORK (AP) — You will be a better popcorn pal if you pay attention to the following "Proctor-Silex Points of Popcorn Etiquette" from Proctor-Silex, inventor of the hot-air Popcorn Pumper.

- Use a hot-air popper so that butter and salt can be added later.
- To keep popcorn from getting soggy, salt before you butter the popcorn — but only if you want those flavors.
- Don't lick your fingers before you put your hand back in the bowl.

County's medical insurance more than predicted

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners who had forecast a 15 percent increase in group medical insurance premiums for 1989 found out this week that their prediction is way off target.

"It could have been worse," Commissioner Durward Wright said, referring to a 23 percent increase that the county is expected to absorb.

Commissioners had budgeted $389,000 for its medical insurance premiums, but discovered this week that the cost actually will reach $410,000.

A budget amendment appears to be the only solution to make up the estimated $21,000 shortfall, the commissioner said, adding that the money most likely will come out of the county's $800,000 cash reserve fund.

The cash reserve fund represents about 5 percent of the county's annual operating budget.

Wright blamed the shortfall on the county's failure to accurately predict the nationwide increase in the number of insurance claims filed and sky-rocketing medical costs.

"Everything is based on the number of claims filed and on the rate of inflation with respect to medical delivery costs," he said, observing that those sums have risen 15 and 30 percent respectively over the past year.

The inflation is measured by comparing the cost of a given procedure last year against the cost of the same procedure this year.

According to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, the "Index of Medical Care Prices" went from 179 to 421 between 1975 and 1985, an increase of 140 percent.

That same publication said the "National Health Care Expenditures" increased from $132 billion to $421 billion during the same period. That's an increase of 219 percent.

During that same period, "Per Capita Medical Expenses" went from $554 to $1,636, an increase of 195 percent.

Commissioner Win Brown had hoped that the increase in insurance costs would subside, but he's come to realize that there's no end in sight.

Brown asserted that the influx of such catastrophic illnesses as AIDS, and the insurance industry's inclusion of drug and alcohol rehabilitation programs in many policies is largely to blame for the increased premium rates.

Wright agreed. "That's the problem the insurance industry is facing and will be passing on to the consumer," he said.

Last year, Midland County adopted a self-insurance program and contracted with Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Texas to administer the policy.

By pooling their resources with other counties, commissioners believed that they could save money in the long run.

In addition, the county revised its policy last year, adding coverage in some areas and cutting back in others.

Among the changes were an increase in the lifetime maximum benefit to $500,000; the addition of a prescription drug card, limiting inpatient psychiatric care to 30 days per year, and stopping coverage for dependent children at age 19 — unless those children are attending an accredited school or college on a full-time basis. Prior to March 1, 1988 there was not a student requirement.

Currently, the county picks up the medical and dental insurance tab for all of its employees, while a portion of the premium for spouses and dependent children are paid by the employee.

At this point in time, Brown said it appears that there will be about $40,000 in the self-insurance pool that will be carried over from last year, Brown said.

But Wright insisted that this money, which has been set aside for larger unforeseen premium hikes in the future, won't be touched in this fiscal year.

Razing the roof

A backhoe, operated by an employee of William Pavement Co. of Odessa, digs through debris at the First United Methodist Church, 305 N. Baird St. Portions of the church are being demolished to make room for new classrooms, a gymnasium, kitchen and fellowship hall. A church spokeswoman estimated that the construction project will take at least a year to complete.

Projects at MISD on schedule

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Construction is sailing right along on the school district's new 102 elementary classrooms and George Herbert Walker Bush Elementary, the project's chief architect announced Tuesday.

"I'm just extremely pleased the process is going very, very smoothly," said architect Terry Harden.

Construction of Bush Elementary and classrooms at Bonham, Jones and Henderson elementaries is one month ahead of schedule, he said. The South and Travis elementary schools' additions, however, are about three to four weeks behind schedule, Harden added.

But all projects should be complete by the Aug. 1 deadline, he assured trustees at the regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

One nearly hour-long process that didn't go so smoothly Tuesday — and often bordered on the humorous — was the selection of a contractor to install 26,000 yards of carpet in the new classrooms and in some rooms at existing buildings.

It all started when Fashion Floor's carpet company owner Charles Pierce arrived late to the bid openings Jan. 19 because he went to the wrong location.

He was accustomed to going to a northwest Midland MISD office for bid procedures and didn't realize until five minutes before the deadline that the location had been moved that day to another south Midland MISD locale, he told trustees Tuesday.

Pierce called the office where bidding was going on that day and asked that his bid be accepted and that he would arrive at the other location immediately, he said.

This excuse didn't sit well initially with Larry Moffatt, owner of Moffatt Carpets in Midland. His bid — though significantly higher than low-bidder Pierce's — was on time and complete Jan. 19.

Former jail inmate sues Painter, Czech, police detectives

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 32-year-old Midland man has filed multi-million-dollar federal lawsuits against Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter and Midland Police Chief Richard Czech and police detectives.

The complainant, Garland Clifton Epting, is claiming that his constitutional rights were violated by his being confined in jail for "approximately 70 days" from late December 1987 to late February 1988 on a robbery charge, which did not result in an indictment.

The robbery case was dismissed in February by 238th Texas District Court Judge Vann Culp for "insufficient evidence," Epting said in his petition.

But Epting promptly was indicted on a "theft-by-check" offense, his parole was revoked, and he was sentenced to 17 years in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Epting, who has served "at least" three stints in prison for forgery and theft, by law may be considered for parole in October 1989, according to Karin Armstrong, public information officer for the Texas Board of Pardons and Parole.

"Just because he's coming up for parole doesn't mean he'll get it," Ms. Armstrong said today. "It's up to the discretion of the board."

But Epting is being credited with good-conduct time in the Texas Department of Corrections, she said.

"It seems he does better in prison than on the outside," Ms. Armstrong said.

While he was in Midland County Jail, Epting claimed that by confinement he was subjected to "cruel and unusual punishment," that he experienced "loss of respectability and character in the community due to media response," and that he suffered loss of his non-profit organization, Helping Hands Outreach of Midland. He also said that he suffered "loss of self-confidence and self-esteem."

While he is seeking $2-million to $5-million in actual and punitive damages, Epting is asking U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton to "freeze" assets of the defendants, who include Czech, Painter, and Midland Police Department former detective Lt. Earl Luckey, who is now community relations commander, and detectives Sgt. Ron Wilson and Mel Francis.

Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman today said that Epting's lawsuits amounted to harassment.

"It's totally frivolous and obviously designed merely to harass the sheriff and other law-enforcement officials," Dettman said. "It's a typical abuse of our judicial system by convicts with nothing better to do."

Odessan Citizen of the Year

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Many years of dedication to civic service and community affairs drew high praise for longtime resident-businessman Richard D. Gillham as he was named Citizen of the Year by the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night.

The continuing efforts of Gillham, 60, president of Marks Crane, and his willingness to devote time to worthy causes were cited by friends and business associates during an awards presentation at the Odessa Hilton.

Most of the plaudits came in a video presentation that began with pictures of Gillham as a youngster growing up in Hot Springs, Ark., where he was born Aug. 30, 1928, and progressed to his adult years.

Longtime business-associate and friend Vic Shackleford took the podium to praise Gillham's unstinting willingness to devote time to a great many community projects and organizations.

Shackleford told Gillham, "Dick, you're no John Wayne, but you're the closest thing we've got to him."

Gillham earned a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Arkansas, graduating as a civil engineer in 1950.

Machinist building 65-foot cabin cruiser in front yard

By AMY KEEN

MINERAL WELLS (AP) — Dale Scott never has to worry about visitors finding his house.

It's the one with the 65-foot steel boat in the front yard.

For almost a year, Scott has been building the boat by himself, fashioning hand-cut steel together with a homemade hoist, a welding torch and the sweat of his brow.

In three to five years, Scott hopes the rusty hulk will be a four-cabin, four-bath luxury boat, and a floating home for him, his wife and daughter.

"Then, if you don't like the front yard, you can just move on to another one," the 48-year-old said. "You don't have to be tied down to the confines of a house."

Scott, a General Dynamics machine shop supervisor, has built things before, from a barbecue-smoker to a small tractor. But this is the first time he has tackled a project of this magnitude.

He decided to build the boat after a longstanding job as a machinist ended in 1983.

"Then in '84, I decided it might be pretty neat to do something else," the soft-spoken Scott said with a grin.

The "something else" is a boat shell in the driveway that dwarfs the family Volkswagon. Neighbors don't mind the sight because, Scott pointed out, all have their own workshops. Some fiddle with cars, and one even made an ultralight airplane.

But this is Morningside Street's first boat.

"These neighbors over here wouldn't ask me for the longest time what I was building," he said.

"They knew I worked for GD and they said later they thought I was building something for the government."

Scott got interested in big boats when he, his wife, Carol, and 18-year-old daughter, Machelle Lea, took a seven-month vacation to see friends in Alaska.

"I spent a lot of time on the boats out there and started asking a lot of questions," he said.

He fell in love with the boating and fishing in Alaska, and would have stayed if he had found a job.

Instead, he came back to General Dynamics, and while in Fort Worth he found a man who had built his own boat from a Holland boat-building company's blueprints. Scott got a copy of the blueprints and decided to build a boat that he and his family could someday call home in the waters off Alaska.

Scott was never a boating fanatic, so he had to learn from scratch how boats are made and how they float.

"I went to boat shops, I read, I talked to people who know boats, I took pictures of boats," he said. Then he had to convince his wife that their boat, when finished, could be luxurious.

"She thought it would look like it does now: rusted," he said. "After I took her to a boat show and showed her how plush it could be, she liked the idea."

Before Scott could start on the boat, however, he had to build a chain hoist with a pulley to give him enough leverage to handle the 2,047-pound sheets of steel.

"It's like lifting a little car into place," he said. "That's why you use nature and gravity to help you a little bit."

Steel beams underneath the boat hold it off the ground. Scott uses rigging to mold the steel — which he says is pliable — into shape before it is welded.

The boat will stand about 27 feet high, from keel to mast, and weigh about 100,000 pounds.

When the work is complete, Scott will have to remove two trees from either side of his driveway to get the boat out. Using an 18-wheel rig, he will haul it to the West Coast to launch it for the voyage to Alaska.

Scott knows every inch of the boat because he works on it for hours each day before he has to leave for his second-shift job in Fort Worth. He climbs a ladder up the side of the boat and down another ladder to work on the inside.

When finished, the boat will contain the newest computerized navigational equipment. A 3,000-gallon fuel tank and two 300-horsepower engines will rest beneath the floor. A machine that converts sea water to fresh water will be on board, as well as a sewage system.

"It'll be all self-contained, like a little bitty town," he said.

Scott's brother will help him finish the interior, with three cabins and three full baths at one end and a master cabin and bath at the other.

Specialty company in Waco profits by Bush's inauguration

By ALAN NELSON

WACO (AP) — Friday's inauguration of George Bush as the nation's 41st president was a solemn milestone in the nation's history, but it also was a profitable venture for a Waco specialty advertising company.

Amaco Products Inc. made the portfolios, or small briefcases, that President Bush gave the inaugural staff and that the inaugural committee is selling to defray the costs of the $32 million ceremony. The firm is wholly owned by president Charles H. Woodliff, who bought Amaco in 1973. The specialty advertising manufacturer has been operating since the mid-1950s.

The firm was contacted about a month ago for the inaugural portfolio order, Woodliff said.

"It was a rush order," he said. "It was quite a surprise. We shipped them about 200 pieces two weeks ago."

Part of the contract bars Amaco from advertising that it made the portfolios, Woodliff said.

But other than that, it was just another order for Amaco, which made the products for Bush's administration just as it makes bags for the American Manure Movers Association. And IBM, GE, RCA, MCI, Penn State, Baylor University, Texas Tech and the Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

Thousands of specialty product orders find their way to the downtown manufacturer, which cuts and sews the product and imprints the organization's logo.

Amaco manufactures thousands of bank bags, aprons; drawstring bags, tote bags, travel bags, bags for cassettes, barrel bags, portfolios, sport bags and other articles for clients throughout the United States and in several foreign countries. The firm does not sell directly to the customer but through specialty advertising distributors. About 50 people work in the factory.

The firm also does bank deposit bags for hundreds of banks throughout the nation.

Woodliff has noticed, however, that the scores of bank closings during the last two years has started to cut into the number of accounts in that market.

Besides its manufacturing and sales staff, Amaco also has an art department that does design and silkscreen work for those firms that request it. But most of the firm's orders require logos on the products — such as the U.S. Postal Service, which ordered several hundred portfolios imprinted with its express mail service design.

Amaco imprinted the presidential inaugural seal on the portfolios it sold to the inaugural committee as one of the official souvenirs of the event. Like Amaco, hundreds of other promoters are cashing in with sales of souvenirs such as plates, books, calendars and even chili mix.

The federal government paid about $7.1 million of the cost of Friday's inauguration. The remainder will come from ticket sales to the inaugural events and from the sale of official souvenirs. Tickets along the parade route cost $5 to $100. A box at the Inaugural Gala cost $25,000.

A spokeswoman for the Inaugural Souvenir sales staff, who asked not to be identified, said more than 40 official souvenirs will be available through March 31. For a catalogue, call 1-800-447-BUSH. Prices range from 95 cents to $2,000.

DEATHS

Minnie Estes

Minnie Estes, 68, of Wichita Falls, mother of Ruth Hawkins of Midland, died last Friday at her home.

Services were held at First Presbyterian Church of Iowa Park with the Rev. Betty Stribling, pastor, officiating. Burial was in Highland Cemetery under the direction of Tanner Aulds Funeral Home.

Mrs. Estes was born March 8, 1920 in Lindsay, Okla. She had been a resident of Iowa Park since 1943, before moving to Wichita Falls six months ago.

She was a member of First Presbyterian Church of Iowa Park, House Plants Unlimited Flower Club, African Violet Society and Wichita Cancer League. She retired after 25 years of civic service at Sheppard Air Force Base in Wichita Falls.

Survivors include a son, James A. Estes of Budd Lake, N.J.; another daughter, Sheryl Harrison of Wichita Falls; one sister, Virginia Ezzell of Amarillo; five grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

L. Weldon Benninger

Services for L. Weldon "Ben" Benninger of Midland were to be at 1 p.m. today at the Ellis Chapel with Doug Parsons officiating. Interment was to follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Masonic rites. Ellis Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

Pallbearers were to be members of Masonic Lodge #955 of Odessa.

Honorary pallbearers were to be Barry Welton, Allen Cornett, John C. Luccous Sr., Darrell Hickman, Lloyd Chamblin, Eldon Herndon, Earl Bagget, Bud Ott, H.C. Bowman and Marc Bowman.

MISD—

Furthermore, Moffatt argued, he was in the right place at the right time that day.

The school district's director of purchasing brought the matter before the board Tuesday night to let them make a decision on the matter.

Pierce's bid for carpet in the new schools was $34,000 less than Moffatt's, though half of Moffatt's bids for carpet in the eight carpet projects in the existing buildings were lower than Pierce's.

The two men took turns pleading their cases to school trustees. Both are Midlanders and both have well-established carpet firms and both would do "perfect" jobs, they told board members.

Trustees decided that the change in location of the bidding process was genuinely a mitigating factor, and when coupled with the $34,000 savings, was too good a deal to pass up.

Both men walked away happy and taxpayers didn't do so badly either. Fashion Floors will install carpet in the new classrooms and in certain rooms in three existing buildings at a cost of $309,600 and Moffatt Carpets will install carpet in areas in five other existing buildings at a cost of $88,035.

In other trustee action Tuesday, approval was granted to hire a teacher and a teacher's aide for a new class in the district for students with severe mental or physical handicaps.

Three students initially will be enrolled in the class. They have been in state schools and have come home to Midland, MISD Director of Elementary Instruction Frank Marlow said.

The students' classes will be held at West Elementary, Marlow said.

Trustees also gave approval Tuesday to publish the 1987-88 Annual Performance Report which will be sent to the Texas Education Agency.

The mandatory report summarizes the district's major educational pursuits, explained Larry Lusby, MISD director of computer services.

Among other indicators, the report shows that MISD spent $3,125 per student in 1987-88, which was $533 below the state average of $3,658 and $764 less than the average of $3,889 spent by a group of comparable districts in size, wealth and socio-economic levels.

The report also indicates that students attending MISD schools continue to score above the national average on the standardized achievement test and above the state averages on the TEAMS test.

Fewer than one third of Texas farmers return FmHA forms

By NELSON ANTOSH
Hearst News Service

Fewer than one-third of the Texas farmers who received packets from the Farmers Home Administration designed to restructure their overdue loans have filled out and returned them, setting the stage for a wave of foreclosures.

The state results are more dismal than the national percentage, in which just under half of the packets were returned within the congressionally mandated deadline of 45 days from receipt.

The latest tally by the state office of the FmHA in Temple found about 1,400 packets returned out of 4,890 that were sent out, said a spokesman. The packets were sent out in a staggered mailing, but the deadline has run out on all but a handful.

Neal Johnson, the acting administrator of the FmHA, said Tuesday before a Senate Agriculture Committee meeting that 34,719 farmers responded nationally out of 70,747 who received notices.

Dismayed officials laid the blame on despair, the complex forms, too little time and distrust of the agency that is the lender of last resort for farmers.

The threatened new wave of foreclosures will be the final installment of the farm crisis, which has seen an even larger number of properties foreclosed on by private lenders. In the case of the FmHA, a court order had blocked most such actions since 1984.

Foreclosures peaked at 13,420 in 1986 for the Farm Credit System. The number was down to 6,984 last year. Since 1986, more than 62,000 loans have been restructured by the borrower-owned system.

In the case of the FmHA, Congress ordered the agency to do everything possible to keep farmers on the land, including writing down the amount due on loans.

"Those who didn't respond will get another letter saying that their loan is being accelerated," and they may face foreclosure.

Farmers who completed the packets will be notified within 60 days whether their applications were accepted.

Bob Hopper, head of farmer programs for the state FmHA of fice, noted with surprise that more applications seemed to come from people who had quit farming than those who remain active.

"I don't know what more we could have done to get the word out," said Kraig Gaillimore, with the Texas Department of Agriculture's office of Farmer Assistance Programs. "We scattered notices all over the place and mailed directly to every farmer who received this notice a farm survival handbook.

"But we knew, doggone it, that this pound and one-half received in the mail (from the FmHA) would spook some people."

Gary Condra of Lubbock, an economist at Texas Tech who heads the mediation service that will work with borrowers and the government, notes that the packets went out when cotton was still in the fields and during a period containing three major holidays.

"But I will have to say, a lot of people just ignored Farmers Home," said Condra. "This has been a workable strategy" in the past. They may not realize that ignoring notices will not work this time, said Condra.

He suspects there may be further congressional action, giving the farmers who didn't respond another chance. The bulk of the problem loans held by FmHA in Texas are in the plains area around Lubbock.

Bill Ahrens staffs an office for the Texas Farm Foundation in Brownfield and has helped farmers from 12 counties fill out the forms. About half who responded have already quit farming, said.

Some may have been misled by the popular notion that FmHA was sending out foreclosure notices, said Ahrens. "These people have been getting periodic notices — demand letters — over the years. They have been told in the past that nothing can be done, that there is no help, just sell out.

Crews rescue puppy from sewer system pipe

HOUSTON (AP) — It took city crews and volunteers more than seven hours to rescue a black puppy who fell into an access pipe leading into an apartment sewer system, officials said.

The puppy, Baby Bear, a six-week-old terrier, fell into the sewer Tuesday while playing in a yard with the three children of Jeri Robinson.

Mrs. Robinson and her children, Krystina, 6, Adolph, 5, and Krystal, 3, spent most of the day inside, listening to the roar of machinery and the shouts of people as holes were dug, pipes cut and tools pushed and pulled in the rescue operation.

Rescuers included a crew from the city Public Works Department's Southeast Quadrant Maintenance Branch, Citizens for Animal Protection, Houston Fire Department, city Animal Control Bureau and Spring Branch Volunteer Corps.

George Huebner and Cynthia Shaw of Citiznes for Animal Protection spent a long afternoon with their arms and faces thrust into pipes flowing with raw sewage.

"I've been in a sewer before but not having to chew up a whole lawn," said Ms. Shaw.

The problem was that Baby Bear was a very frightened pup, and all the noise apparently caused him to creep even deeper, about five feet below ground.

Apartment maintenance workers had first tossed him bits of bread and hamburger in an effort to lure him out to where they could reach him. When this failed, they began to dig.

Using a backhoe, crews quickly ripped a huge hole in the lawn, exposing the six-inch, white plastic sewer line. Baby Bear had wiggled into another pipe.

Workers then ripped another hole in the yard and more sewer lines were found and cut. Through still another access opening, the Public Works crew began snaking in a long orange hose normally used to flush out blockages. Baby Bear was still not to be seen.

As a last resort, the crew turned on a pump, putting blasts of water through the hose. Then there was a cheer.

Huebner had his hands in the pipe and suddenly they were full of wet, shivering puppy.

"I think he'll make it," Huebner told the children. "We're going to take him to the hospital for a while, and then we'll bring him back to you. We'll warm him up and put him on some fluids. He's a little hypothermic."

Public Works crews assured apartment manager Betsy Lowe they would fill the holes and repair the broken sewer lines. She said she would take care of the landscaping.

Man pleads innocent to deputy's murder

DALLAS (AP) — A former mental patient accused of killing a Dallas County sheriff's deputy has pleaded innocent to a charge of capital murder at his arraignment.

Alfonzo Seward, 37, faces the death penalty if convicted of shooting deputy Suzanne Kays at the Lew Sterrett Justice Center early on the morning of Jan. 4.

In the proceedings before state District Judge Tom Thorpe Tuesday, Seward reserved his right to enter a plea in two related charges of attempted capital murder and attempted murder.

BOAT—

A galley and lounge area will be in the middle of the boat, which will have 10 portholes on each side. A clothes washer and dryer will be on board, and maybe even a garage containing a small car for when the boat is in port.

Scott said he can picture where every room will be, but because others have trouble visualizing the finished product, he keeps photos in an album to record his progress.

Co-workers who've heard about the project "tease me a lot about Noah," he said.

Scott has spent $12,300 so far on steel, with about $8,000 more to go. When the project is complete, Scott estimates he will have sunk between $100,000 and $125,000 into it.

"But it's better than sitting around watching TV," he said. "I'll go in the house with rust all over me and my wife asks me if it's fun, and I tell her it is."

Cisneros won't run again because of 'matter of honor'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Calling it a matter of honor, Mayor Henry Cisneros has vowed to remain out of the mayor's race that would have pitted him against a good friend, who is a former mayor, as well as many political and financial supporters.

After voters approved a Cisneros-led campaign to increase the sales tax one-half cent for construction of a $174 million domed stadium, Cisneros indicated he might reconsider an earlier decision not to seek a fourth term.

But on Tuesday, Cisneros issued a statement reaffirming his September vow not to run again.

"The issue I confront in considering whether or not to seek re-election is not a political calculation nor is it about personal decisions nor is it a matter of my hopes for San Antonio," Cisneros said in the statement.

"It is not about whether I would win nor is it about whether I see work that I want to complete. It is about my word. It is a matter of honor."

Mayor Henry Cisneros

Former mayor Lila Cockrell announced her candidacy after Cisneros — considered one of the leading Hispanic politicians and among the country's top mayors — said last fall he would not seek a fourth term.

A race between Cisneros and Mrs. Cockrell threatened to divide the business and political communities loyal to both.

"Certainly the part that I least desired was the role that I think I would have had to run against a good friend, but I would have felt a responsibility to remain in the race," Mrs. Cockrell said Tuesday.

"I've already pledged that I will continue the major thrust that he would leave possibly unfinished. We agreed on all major issues and I feel that a lot of the groundwork for the current economic development and growth of our city was laid when I was mayor," said Mrs. Cockrell, who held the post from 1975 to 1981.

Ret. Brig. Gen. Robert McDermott, a close friend of both Cisneros and Mrs. Cockrell, said he talked to Cisneros last fall before deciding to become an honorary chairman of Mrs. Cockrell's campaign.

McDermott, chairman and chief executive officer of United Services Automobile Association, said it's time Cisneros stepped out of the mayor's job, which pays less than $5,000 per year.

"I think it would be good for Henry to take a couple of years off, a kind of sabbatical to financially get his house in order and to take care of his children," McDermott said.

Cisneros' marital difficulties could have become an issue in the race. In October, about a month after he said he would not seek re-election, published reports linked him romantically to former fund-raiser Linda Medlar.

Cisneros cited personal reasons when he first said he wouldn't seek a fourth term. His toddler son, John Paul Anthony, suffers from a congential heart defect and needs surgery, and Cisneros said he needs to try to make money for his daughters' college education.

The 41-year-old Cisneros first began to cut his public ties in December 1987 when he said he would not seek a statewide office.

McDermott, considered one of the city's most influential businessmen, said he thought Cisneros may have been caught up in the moment of victory over the Alamodome election when he intimated he might seek re-election.

"There's a kind of euphoria after you fight and go through a tough campaign just like the Alamodome and you come up winning," McDermott said, adding that Cisneros' judgment was helped by his trip Monday and Tuesday to Massachusetts for a speaking engagement.

"I think it's good that he happened to go away. I think if he were hearing and hearing the applause that he led a successful campaign it would have been a difficult decision to make, but I think he was able to get away and reflect about all his concerns," he said.

Mrs. Cockrell has raised about $40,000 and lined up commitments from key supporters, including McDermott, auto dealer and banker Tom Benson and developer Cliff Morton, who previously had supported Cisneros' campaigns.

She also hired Austin political consultant George Shipley, who has run numerous previous Cisneros campaigns.

Sex-selection abortions 'false issue,' NOW says

AUSTIN (AP) — A spokeswoman for a woman's rights group said a state proposal to ban abortions based on the sex of the fetus is an attempt by anti-abortionists to rally support around a false issue.

State lawmakers and pro-life forces Tuesday proposed legislation to stop what they said is the growing practice of women having abortions after learning the sex of the fetus.

"Surely, this is the most frivolous use of abortion yet invented," said Bill Price, director of the Texas Coalition for Life.

Price said the women prefer to have a male child and get an abortion if the fetus is a female.

"In other words," said state Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, "abortion on demand has given rise to boys on demand."

Brown and state Rep. L.B. Kubiak, D-Rockdale, said they will introduce legislation that would make it illegal for doctors to perform an abortion based on sex selection.

But Danalynn Recer, a local spokeswoman for the National Organization for Women, said there is no evidence to indicate so-called sex selection abortions are on the rise.

"The anti-choice people look at laws and hypothesize on what kind of atrocities could occur and then they hype them up and make the public believe that is common," she said.

Ms. Recer said she thinks sex selection abortions are "morally reprehensible. It's the ultimate in sexism."

But, she said, any law limiting a woman's right to an abortion would increase the likelihood of deaths and injuries from illegal or self-induced abortions.

Price and the legislators conceded it would be difficult to enforce the law, but Price said, "All it will take is one or two doctors...being prosecuted and it will greatly put a damper on the willingness of physicians to do these kinds of abortions."

Price cited a survey that said the number of medical geneticists who are supportive of prenatal diagnosis for sex selection rose from 1 percent in 1973 to 20 percent in 1988.

Kubiak said he thinks the situation is tragic. "My feeling is that if you can do it for that, well then, what's next? Why can't you do it for hair color, why can't you do it for eye color? Where are we going?" he said.

Two other legislators, spoke in favor of a bill that would require minors to gain parental approval before getting an abortion.

Sen. Gene Green, D-Houston, has filed the bill in the Senate and Rep. Dan Shelley, R-Crosby, will file a similar bill in the House.

Ms. Recer said the law would "force teen-agers into the underground abortion market." She said some parents are not approachable on the subject of abortion, or sex, which, in some cases, might have contributed to the unwanted pregnancy.

Clements tells Farm Bureau there will be no new taxes in 1989

AUSTIN (AP) — There will be no new taxes out of the 1989 Legislature, and temporary taxes from 1987 that are due to end in August will not be renewed, says Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements said a tax hike can be avoided by tapping $750 million to $800 million reserved for the settlement of lawsuits against the state, and financing $300 million of prison construction with bonds.

"And yet we have certain legislators talking about a tax increase," Clements said in a speech Tuesday before about 800 Texas Farm Bureau members.

"I've got news for you. There ain't going to be no tax increase," Clements said. "What was it George Bush said? 'Read my lips.' "

To cheers and applause, Clements said $600 to $700 million in temporary taxes will expire Aug. 31 and will not be renewed.

About prison financing, Clements said, "I have a strong conviction that we should not be paying out of current revenues for $300 million worth of additional prison space that we will be using over the next 30 years."

In answer to a question by a Farm Bureau member, Clements said, "the horrendous problem" in the Texas savings and loan industry "will get worse before it gets better."

Clements predicted "radical changes" in banking regulations being studied by Congress, but said the problem is "far from being solved."

"I think you are going to see that Congress is very unhappy also in this regard," he said. "It's a serious problem, and one that, to date, has defied solution."

Ex-Bostonian proud to salute Texas flag

By NANCY PERDUE
Hearst News Servie

SAN ANTONIO — Thirty years ago, Larry Williams would have said that anyone who recited the pledge to the Texas flag simply was bragging about the state.

That was when he was a Bostonian in the Army. But after teaching Texas history in the Alamo Heights School District 22 years, Williams would be among the first people to stand up and salute the Lone Star flag.

"When I was in the Army, I got tired of people telling me how great Texas was," Williams said. "But after I retired here, I found out all those lies were absolutely true."

Today, he especially is proud to honor the Texas flag because it is the 150th anniversary of the banner's official adoption by the Third Congress of the Republic of Texas on Jan. 25, 1839. He will be sharing the history of the flag during a public ceremony the Daughters of the Republic of Texas are to host in front of the Alamo.

Williams, who retired from teaching in 1985, is considered to be the city's utmost expert on Texas flags by officials of local university history departments. He said people realize six sovereign flags have flown over Texas, but few realize about 50 others also served the people during their revolutionary struggles that led to a Texas republic and finally, statehood.

His former students made some of those flags to hang in the Institute of Texan Cultures during HemisFair in 1968.

It took three attempts before the Lone Star flag became the banner flying from Texas flagpoles today. The first was proposed by Lorenzo De Zavala during a convention held in March 1836 at Washington-on-the-Brazos to declare independence from Mexico. It was blue with a white star and letters spelling T-E-X-A-S between the star points.

"De Zavala was Santa Anna's buddy until Santa Anna tossed out the Constitution (of 1824)," Williams said. "His flag wouldn't have to work very hard to be my favorite."

The second flag was a blue banner with a gold star introduced by David G. Burnet, the president of the interim government between the time independence was declared and it actually was won. The flag was adopted as the national standard Dec. 10, 1836.

Group calls Leland, Gonzalez 'liberal heroes'

WASHINGTON (AP) — An advocacy group says Reps. Mickey Leland and Henry B. Gonzalez were "liberal heroes" in 1988, and the two say they're proud of it — despite all the liberal-bashing George Bush did during the presidential campaign.

Leland says being a liberal means "doing what's right by humanity," caring about the environment and "those who have very little in society."

"I love being a liberal hero because my roots have always been in progressive politics...the civil rights movement, the anti-war movement," Leland, a Houston Democrat and chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, said Tuesday. "Some of us are not afraid to be called liberal and progressive and to continue to fight for our place in the sun, and eventually, we'll get there."

In ranking members of Congress, Americans for Democratic Action gave Leland and Gonzalez, a San Antonio Democrat, scores of 100 percent. They were among 24 House Democrats and two senators with 100 percent ratings that earned them an ADA designation of "liberal heroes in 1988."

ADA ranked the members of Congress based on a set of 20 floor votes on bills and amendments that the organization believes most clearly reflect liberal and conservative differences. Issues include civil rights, labor issues, women's rights, foreign and military policy.

"These (liberal) issues don't have a lot of advocates or high-paid lobbyists, like children's issues, the hungry, the homeless," Leland said. "We advocate the government has a responsibility to take care of those with the least amongst us. Government has a responsibility and we're not afraid to say that."

The next-higest scoring Texan in the House was Rep. John Bryant, with an 85 percent ranking. The state's lowest scoring Democrats were Reps. Ralph Hall of Rockwall and Marvin Leath of Waco, with 15 percent each, and Rep. Charles Stenholm of Stamford, at 20 percent. House Speaker Jim Wright of Fort Worth was not ranked because the speaker rarely votes.

Texas Republicans earned no more than a 10 percent ranking, with seven of them coming in at zero.

Gonzalez, chairman of the House Banking Committee, was conducting a hearing Tuesday and could not be reached for comment. But he has said he continues to consider himself a liberal and proud of it. A spokeswoman said the congressman votes his conscience and would not be surprised by the ranking.

The ADA showed the House of Representatives had a "liberal quotient" of 52 percent last year, the highest figure since ADA began rating voting records in 1947. In the Senate, the average score was 48 percent.

Of the 25 House members, all Republicans, who had scores of zero, six were from Texas. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, was one of 11 Senate Republicans scoring zero. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat and the state's senior senator, scored a 40 percent.

Here's how Texas House members fared in the ADA survey:

Democrats — Mike Andrews, Houston, 75; Jake Brooks, Beaumont, 75; John Bryant, Dallas, 85; Albert Bustamante, San Antonio, 70; Jim Chapman, Sulphur Springs, 50; Ron Coleman, El Paso, 80; Kika de la Garza, Mission, 50; Martin Frost, Dallas, 70; Henry B. Gonzalez, San Antonio, 100; Ralph Hall, Rockwall, 15; Marvin Leath, Waco, 15; Mickey Leland, Houston, 100; Solomon Ortiz, Corpus Christi, 55; Jake Pickle, Austin, 80; Charles Stenholm, Stamford, 20 and Charlie Wilson, Lufkin, 35.

Republicans — Bill Archer, Houston 0; Dick Armey, Copper Canyon, 0; Steve Bartlett, Dallas, 10; Joe Barton, Ennis, 5; Beau Boulter, Amarillo, 0; Larry Combest, Lubbock, 0; Tom DeLay, Sugar Land, 0; Jack Fields, Humble, 0; Lamar Smith, San Antonio, 5 and Mac Sweeney, Wharton, 10.

Sweeney and Boulter are no longer members of Congress.

Man sentenced to 10 years for biting woman's finger

FORT WORTH (AP) — Tarrant County jurors have recommended that a man serve 10 years in prison on his aggravated assault conviction in a case where he was accused of biting off part of a woman's finger while attempting to rape her.

It took jurors 20 minutes Tuesday to select the punishment for Ronald James Quiroz, who had been convicted in the Jan. 29, 1988 attack on a 37-year-old River Oaks psychologist. It took jurors about four hours to convict Quiroz on the aggravated assault charge. Jurors could have elected to convict Quiroz on a charge of aggravated robbery, a charge that would have carried a maximum punishment of life in prison.

The aggravated robbery charge was based on an allegation that Quiroz stole the woman's car following the assault.

But they set 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine, the maximum punishment for aggravated assault.

"If he couldn't get the top charge, this was next best," said the psychologist, who cried when the jury announced their recommendation for punishment.

Clayton OK'd for regent

Clayton

AUSTIN (AP) — Former House Speaker Bill Clayton's appointment as a regent at Texas A&M University, his alma mater, was approved 7-0 Tuesday by the Senate Nominations Committee.

Clayton, 60, was appointed by Gov. Bill Clements to fill the unexpired term of Joe Reynolds of Houston, who resigned. The term only extends to Feb. 1 but Clayton is expected to be reappointed to a full six-year term.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby told the committee he could not imagine "a finer public official or a greater addition to the Texas A&M Board of Regents."

Clayton was elected to the House in 1963 and served as speaker for four terms, 1975-83.

Clayton's nomination will go to the full Senate for a confirmation vote on Monday.

Lawmen break out of jail

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — There was a jailbreak at the new $2.5 million Erath County Jail, but Sheriff David Coffee and his deputies weren't upset.

They were just relieved to get out.

It seems that Coffee and some of his deputies got accidentally locked inside a hallway between cells at the jail Monday and had to stage a breakout to get free.

It happened while the sheriff was showing off the jail's new security system when the door to the jail's control room suddenly slammed shut, causing all the doors to lock automatically.

Much to their dismay, the trapped lawmen discovered that the jail keys lay far out of reach and locked tightly in the control room.

After about an hour, the lawmen devised a plan of escape.

They found two poles remaining from the construction work and fitted them together, inserted them through a slot in the control room door and retrieved the keys.

FORT WORTH (AP) — A federal magistrate has arraigned a 30-year-old Arlington man on charges of threatening a congressman's life.

Brentley Harold Hinshaw remained in federal custody today after he was arrested by FBI special agents in connection with telephoned threats to U.S. Rep. Dick Armey, said FBI spokesman U.H. "Woody" Specht.

He said Hinshaw was arrested without incident at his workplace in Dallas Monday.

Magistrate Alex McGlinchey of Fort Worth ordered Hinshaw held without bond. Hinshaw, who will undergo a medical examination, allegedly made numerous calls to Armey's Arlington office, the most recent on Jan. 20, said Specht.

"On one of the calls, he (Hinshaw) discussed the congressional (pay) raise, and said, 'I'm going to kill you,'" Specht said. "He made another call as late as the 20th and said basically the same thing. That was basically what the gist was."

Sniper eludes police

EL PASO (AP) — A sniper who fired on at least two cars on an Interstate 10 access road has eluded police.

No one was hurt in the shooting incidents Monday night, and police using helicopters and dogs searched a brushy area with no results, said El Paso police Sgt. Don Georgens.

Police began the search after two motorists said their cars were struck by bullets Monday evening as they drove on a westbound access road on the west side of town. Another driver had reported being shot at while driving in the same area Sunday, Georgens said.

Police enlisted the aid of a Border Patrol helicopter with a spotlight, and six El Paso police officers and a canine unit searched a brushy area, but the two-hour search ended at 8:30 p.m. Monday without anyone being found.

Saddle Club
Chris-
Just wanted to drop you a line to let you know I'm all settled into my new spot at Saddle Club Apartments. And it's just fantastic! This place has everything I need and even more! I never imagined that apartment living could be like this, or I would have moved here months ago. Spacious and affordable. Private, but the people are really friendly. And the amenities are out of this world!
Give me a call soon. Or drop by sometime-I'm sure you'll enjoy it. Life at Saddle Club Apartments is simply...GREAT!
