linarilly one serves his own interest by avoiding any discussion business and ordinarily only who are entitled to know are nything of my affairs: but the st that has been awakened in bject of dairying hereabouts, it at least proper that I write this letter.

is my intention to go out of the ng business at Dublin, either ling out of the business or else moving it nearer to my home. will not be done at once, as is no hurry about the sale or al, but in this connection I it not only proper, but likemy duty to state some of my s for this action, to the end t may not deter others from en- in the business.

der the management heretofore usiness has not been satisfactory e, further than this I do not to state through the public . The business at this time, er, is doing fairly well and it is paying investment, though it es my personal attention to degree and is so far from my that it will not justify me to ue it. My decision in matter is so entirely personal it should to affect no other in their ideas as to the profits of such an enterprise. My to dispose of the business is in with my desire to sell my ranch- rms, town property and other gs, all of which are for sale. similar circumstances any busman would sell a cotton oil a farm or any other property he ossess. I simply do not wish e the busines that close per- attention that is essential to it profitable and the reasons ffects me to sell should induce who wants occupation to buy. well arranged dairy of good cows ay, provided it is managed inently, otherwise, like any other ss it will not. It will pay l times as much as the same and capital invested in a farm. e risks are much fewer than in ng and the work is not harder. so much more profitable than ary farming that the two can- e compared. If I should perly go to farming, my kind of would be a dairy farm and I that a truck farm will pay far to say nothing of the extra risks in the latter. Butter fat will transportation which truck sell- will. The demand for butter unlimited and it will continue now indefinitely. The sale is and there are no losses or bad ac- . A good herd of good cows intelligent management will exceedingly profitable so far as pinion goes and it is likewise my ience but scrub cows will not nywhere.

ere is every reason for saying dairying here in Texas should be much more profiatble than in the cold northwetern states, where half the year is winter and where two of those months lie close up to each side of zero for the full time. Yet, with all this, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and other northern states, where it costs twice as much to feed a cow as it does here, dairying has brought the farmers from poverty to prosperity. In recognition of the extent of the interest in those states and even in cold Canada, the state governments have organized dairy commissions to encourage and advance the dairying business and still we have untold advantages for handleing this business over our northern neighbors, but have no dairys.

The intelligent farmer who would keep as many cows as he and his family could attend to, would find a large increase in his revenues, with scarcely no increase in his expense account.

Of course everything will depend at first on the man, as it does in everything else. With the right man fifty high grade cows, breed to fine diary stock, would be more profitable than five hundred acres of cotton at a good price, and the boll weevils won't hurt the cattle or destroy the supply of milk.

The business men of Dublin, I think, should take an active interest in building up this business and in every way encouraging it. A good dairy business would mean more to the town than would a cotton mill, or the workshops of any railroad.

It is the farmer who has the cash that is the dependable customer after all and it is he who build up the country. If your farmer who receives cash each day gets the most out of life and is the best customer, and this is the kind of farmer the dairy farmer is. It is strictly an intelligent branch of the farming industry. It belongs to that branch of farming in which the farmer uses his own productions and secures a marketeable commodity that pays him two profits. He can hire himelf, pay himself good wages and make an extra profit from his property and his work.

The market for butter fat is at home and there will be no oversupply. Good butter will always be in demand. Thirty good butter cows can average gross sales of over $3000 a year. Ordinary cows will not do this, but there are many that will. It will be better to pay high prices for good cattle than to have the other kind given to him as a gracious gift. Only butter cattle promise anything to the farmer, as he can only secure a market for butter fat, the leavings he can feed to his hogs, if they amount to enough to do so after his own supply is kept out.

There are four sources of profit for the dairyman; one is the sale of butter fat and milk; the second is the raising of fine cows by breeding his milk cows to fine bulls and raising the female calves, the third is the production of good pork and the sale of fine hogs and the fourth is the use of manure on the farm. Well managed dairy farms grow richer every year.

The man who farms near a railroad depot or a creamery, and neglects to take advantage of the opportunities offered in the dairy business, even on an independent scale, does himself and his family an injustice. I do not wish to discourage those whohave so extensivelly engaged in truck farming, but repeat that I consider dairy farming far more profitable and much safer. The difficulties of the transportation question do not stand in the way in the least of a man who has a concentrated food product for sale. It is far cheaper to transport hogs to the packeries than to transport truck to the distant cities of the north and east. In fact I have not and never intend to plant any land in truck until the railroads will guarantee rates to the markets. We have a commission rate to the creameries and besides we may soon have a creamery at Dublin. Butter, however, will bear transportation to any part of Texas and the item of carrying it is small.

Very Respectfully,
LEE YOUNG.

SURE NOW

The Truth About Coffee.

It must be regarded as a convincing test when a family of seven has used Postum for five years, regaining health and keeping healthy and strong on this food drink.

The family lives in Millville, Mass., and the lady of the household says, "For eight years my stomach troubled me all the time. I was very nervous and irritable and no medicine helped me.

"I had about given up hope until about five years ago next month when I read an article about Postum Cereal Coffee that convinced me that coffee was the cause of my troubes. I made the Postum carefully and liked it so much that I drank it in preference to coffee but without much faith that it would help me.

"At the end of a month however I was surprised to find such a change in my condition. I was stronger in every way, less nervous, and at the end of six months I had recovered my strength so completely that I was able to do all of my own house work. Because of the good that Postum did us I knew that what you claimed for Grape-Nuts must be true and we have all used that delicious food ever since it first appeared on the market.

"We have seven in the family and I do the work for them all and I am sure that I owe my strength and health to the steady use of your fine cereal food and Postum (in place of coffee). I have such great faith in Postum that I have sent it to my relatives and I never lose a chance to speak well of it." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Ice cold Postum with a dash of lemon is a delightful "cooler" for warm days.

Erath Anties Denied an Injunction at Beaumont. Other Items Regarding Elections in Texas.

Judge Watts of Beaumont, the district judge of that district, who has been granting so many of the injunctions in prohibition matters lately, has declined to again interfere in the Erath county matter and grant an injunction preventing the carrying out of the law as voted here. He also wishes it published and understood that other counties need not apply.

The court of criminal appeals has reversed and remanded the case of the State vs. T. A. Minter and his bondsmen. The cause was one wherein Minter was sued on his bond as a liquor dealer for having permitted a minor to enter and remain in his saloon in Stephenville and in the trial he was convicted and forfeiture to the state of the sum of $500 was declared. There was evidence tending to show that the minor appeared to be of age and that he entered the saloon and purchased a glass of beer, remaining long enough only to drink it. The court held that this raised the issue of a sale in good faith, which under the law would constitute a valid defense and consequently the judgement of the lower court was reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Petition for People to Elect Officers by Popular Vote Was Turned Down By City Council.

John F. Albright was elected to the position of chief of police of Dublin at a call meeting of the city council on the night of June 23rd. It was last April that the time for the regular election of new officers was due, but at the time the council was tied up between two candidates for the place, viz: W. A. Goodwin, who was filling out the unexpired term of D. C. Deaton, and Joe E. Bishop, who was the first city marshall of the town. Since that time Mr. Goodwin has of course continued to hold the place. Several times the council made efforts to agree on a compromise, but in every instance they failed; the friends of each of the candidates remaining loyal to their man. In the meantime a petition was prepared and signed by practically every citizen to whom it was presented, asking that the election of chief of police and every other heretofore appointive office in the city, should be left to the popular vote and that a special election be ordered to fill all vacancies which had not already been filled for the coming year. The council rejected this proposition on the grounds that it was believed by some of them that they had no right to order a special election for any officer except for that of mayor or alderman. At the special meeting above referred to another petition, signed by a less number of citizens than that asking for a popular election, was presented asking the appointment of R. B. Moore as chief of police. At the request of the council Mr. Moore appeared at the meeting and made a statement as to the amount of time that he might probably be able to devote to the duties of the office and as he stated that he would be absent quite a good deal the council agreed upon the election of Mr. Albright as a compromise candidate, cut off the night watchman altogether and increased the salary of the chief of police from $45 to $55, besides the allowance which comes to him as fees out of the corporation court.

Very Remarkable Cure of Diarrhoea.

"About six years ago for the first time in my life I had a sudden and severe attack of diarrhoea," says Mrs. Alice Miller of Morgan, Texas. "I got temporary relief, but it came back again and again and for six long years I have suffered more misery and agony than I can tell. It was worse than death. My husband spent hundreds of dollars for physicians, prescriptions and treatment without avail. Finally we moved to Bosque county, our present home, and one day I happened to see an advertisement of Chamberlin's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with a testimonial of a man who had been cured by it. The case was so similar to my own that I concluded to try the remedy. The result was wonderful, I could hardly realize that I was well again, or believe that it could be so after having suffered so long, but that one bottle of medicine, costing but a few cents, cured me. R. M. LOVE KILLED

WILLIAM G. HILL FIRES THE FATAL SHOT.

SLAYER THEN SHOOTS HIMSELF

The End Came as Suddenly as a Thunder Clap From a Cloudless Sky.

Austin, Tex., July 1.—Hon. Robert M. Love, state controller of public accounts, was shot down in his office yesterday morning. The fatal shots were fired by Wm. G. Hill, a former employe of the department. Hill fired a bullet into his own body which resulted in his death nearly six hours later.

At the time Hill shot himself he was struggling with S. J. Stephens, chief bookkeeper of the department, and it is not known whether he fired the shot with suicidal intent or in an attempt to shoot Stephens. The double tragedy came without warning.

Col. Love was sitting at his desk about 10:20 o'clock talking to Rev. M. F. Cowden, a Presbyterian minister of Bonham, when Hill entered. Col. Love and Hill exchanged pleasant greetings and the latter was invited to a seat. He seemed to be perfectly cool and collected. He carried on a brief but pleasant conversation with Col. Love in a steady and unbroken tone of voice.

Rev. Cowden listened to this conversation for a brief period and then arose to leave the office. Just as he was going out of the door leading to an adjoining room he heard Hill say: "Col. Love, I have a letter here which I would like for you to read."

An instant later two shots were fired in rapid succession. Col. Love fell over his chair and gave a call of agony.

The instant the shots were heard, S. J. Stephens, the chief bookkeeper of the department, whose room adjoins that occupied by Mr. Love, sprang through the open door and saw Hill attempting to reach the entrance leading into the corridor of the building. Mr. Stephens intercepted him and the two men had a desperate hand-to-hand struggle. While it lasted but a minute the time was sufficient for them to reach the outer doorway, passing through an adjoining room. Just as the corridor was reached Hill threw his hand, in which he still carried the pistol, forward, and turning it close against his left breast, and it was discharged, a bullet passing through the lung and close to his heart. Hill fell to the tiled floor of the corridor and weakened rapidly, his pistol dropping near him in the fall. He was laid upon a couch in the corridor and a physician summoned. Col. Love was laid upon the couch where the man who shot him had been seated but a moment before.

After lying in the capitol about thirty minutes Hill was conveyed to the sanitarium, where he weakened from the internal hemorrhage until he lost consciousness, and died at 3 o'clock. His sons and other members of the family were summoned to his bedside.

Several doctors were on the spot in a few moments after Col. Love had been shot. After brief consultation, only a cursory examination of the wound was made. They administered the necessary drugs to aid the dying man in retaining his strength and to ease the pain to the fullest possible extent.

It was one of the saddest scenes ever witnessed in Austin. With his strong, robust body quivering with the pain from the terrible wounds and with full consciousness that death was near, and in possession of all his mental faculties up almost to the moment of his death, Col. Love called his loved ones around him and bid them goodbye. The grief-stricken wife and children were summoned from their home and brought to the office where the devoted husband and fond parent lay dying. It was a true exemplification of Christian fortitude that he said his parting words. He sent for Gov. Lanham, who had returned to his office from his first visit to his side. The governor quickly responded. The dying man said to the governor that he fully realized he was going to die; that he had one request to make of him, and that was that he would appoint Mr. Stephens, his chief bookkeeper, controller after his death in order that the existing official family of the department might not be disturbed.

Gov. Lanham attempted to make no reply to the request, except to assure him that he was not going to die. Col. Love replied with resignation, which which was closed with the pathetic remark that it was the will of God that he should die, and with the beautiful words, "The Lord's will be done." A few minutes later the end came, the time being 11:20, or about one hour from the time the wounds were received.

Gas Explosion in a Wyoming Mine Entombs 280 Men.

Hanna, Wyo., July 1.—Probably the worst disaster in the history of Wyoming occurred at this place Tuesday when a terrific eplosion of fire damp in Union Pacific Mine No. 1 shut off the escape of 200 men who were working in the pit. The fire, which immediately broke out, is defying the efforts of the rescuing party and there is slight hope of saving any of the men. Twenty-eight bodies of those working near the entrance of the mine, all of them horribly mangled and some showing bare evidence of life, have been taken out. The supposition is that some careless miner allowed his lamp to come in contact with firedamp. One hundred and seventy-five lives were lost, others injured, and much property was destroyed. The mine was not fired, as stated in the earlier reports, but the explosion was terrific and completely shattered the timbers, and those of the miners who were not killed outright were buried alive. The explosion was heard for many miles. Huge timbers and railroad irons were hurled from the mouth of the shafts a distance of two and three hundred feet.

Later: Late Tuesday night a party of rescuers reached four mules that were alive and this caused hope to rise. Of the 284 men about 175 were married and leave large families. About 100 were Finlanders, fifty were colored and the balance Americans.

Quit Speculating and Stick to Spinning and Weaving Instead.

New Orleans, La., June 30.—W. P. Brown, the master bull leader whose clique has cornered the world's supply of raw cotton, is of the opinion that cotton operators had better stop speculating in cotton exchanges and attend more to their spinning and weaving.

"The market is healthy," declared Mr. Brown. "This is nothing but a little reaction, perfectly natural after the recent advances. It will have the effect of making the market even more healthy.

"There is no doubt that later on prices will go up again. The statistical position of cotton warrants the present prices and it is folly to suppose that mills are going to shut down, when they can get cotton at present prices when there is a famine of dry goods all over the world. Of course there is and will be a lot of shutting down by mills that can not possibly obtain their supplies of raw cotton material.

"The bears all over the world would have the general public believe that we are tying up the visible supply. Such is not the case; it was tied up before we got hold of it. Now we are selling it to the trade all over the world.

"We would be very foolish to hurt the trade of the world because it would be against our interests as merchants dealing in raw cotton to do so.

"We know that a great many spinners, both in the south and in the New England States, have sold against their supplies several months ago, before cotton reached 10c, and now because they have got to deliver they are complaining. In other words, the situation is due in part to bad trading on the part of the treasurers of many mills instead of a state of bad trade.

"It is a strange thing that mill owners nearly always try to depress prices of cotton. If they would go ahead and buy cotton and then make and sell their goods and do less speculating themselves they wouldn't squeal so much when cotton goes up."

Another Trolley Projection.

Dallas: A projected electric road is to start from Timpson, in Shelby county, and will be built to Dallas by way of Tyler and Canton. The stock has been subscribed by citizens of the towns through which the new road is to run. It is the intention of the projectors to enter into competition with steam roads for business, and also to bid for mail. The owners will ask for recognition by the commission. They want to be considered as a railroad of the first class so as to exchange freight and passenger business with steam roads.

HUNDREDS HOMELESS.

Driven Out on the Sand Hills by Rio Grande Floods.

El Paso: The high waters of the Rio Grande north of this city in New Mexico have driven hundreds of families from their homes and these have taken refuge in the foothills. Mrs. William McDonald of Berino, N. M., is among those who have taken refuge in El Paso to escape the water. In describing the situation mrs McDonald said: "The high water has practically rendered homeless every resident from Mesquite and Earlham south to White Spur, N. M. All along the road in the sandhills families can be seen camped, many of them with their household goods piled around them and with no shelter. The heat of the sun in the hills is intolerable. Many alfalfa fields are ruined and many Mexican families are not only homeless, but living on short rations.

FIND 24 DEAD MEN

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION IN A MEXICAN MINE.

MANY ARE FEARFULLY WOUNDED

Gas Had Accumulated and Miners Had Been Warned. Defective Lamp.

Barratoeran, Coahuila, Mex., June 29.—Twenty-four miners were killed and as many more seriously wounded in an explosion of gas that occurred in Las Esperanzas coal mines. The disaster was caused by the ignition of the gas by the flame from a defective lamp used by one of the men who is now dead.

The men were just on the point of quitting work for the day. A large force was employed in a new lead. Probably one hundred men were in the mine at the time, over fifty of whom were working in the new lead. The gas had accumulated on the floor of the workings in which the explosion occurred, and the men had been warned to be more than usually careful, yet in spite of all precautions the unexpected happened.

Miners who escaped say that a solid wall of flame rushed the entire length of the tunnel, and at the same time a terrific explosion resounded throughout the mines. Those who were able to move rushed for the exits, but the falling earth and debris caught more than a score and carried them down to death, while fully fifty more escaped with broken limbs and scorched flesh. As soon as it was known that the flames had subsided miners went below to ascertain the extent of the damage done. At last reports the dead bodies of twenty-four men had been brought to light. A call of the roll has determined that they were the only ones who perished, though others might die as a result of their injuries.

Only Some Bloody Clothes.

Beaumont: Some very bloody clothing was found on the banks of the Neches, and foul play is suspected. There is no clew as to who the clothes belonging to ,except a laundry mark on the garments, "H. R. I." The other clothes had gashes cut in them where the laundry marks or initials would most likely have been. There is a deep mystery surrounding the matter.

Just how the accident occurred is not known, as the remans were not found until next morning by an early passer. When found the corpse was in the cattle guard, and from indications death must have been instant. He was evidently killed early in the night.

THIRTY PERSONS ARE DEAD.

Perhaps a Hundred More are Badly Wounded.

Madrid, June 29.—Fourteen bodies and fifty injured persons have been extracted from the wreck of the Bilbao train which overturned at Nejarilla river Saturday night.

According to official information thirty persons were killed and sixty others seriously injured. Many of the latter will die. Of the three hundred passengers on the train it is stated that only six escaped unhurt. The train composed of two engines and sixteen coaches, was crossing the bridge when the couplings between the engines broke. The second engine left the track and fell, followed by the entire train, into the bed of the river. The nearest medical attention was a mile and a half distant, and those passengers who were least injured aided the others and did all possible until the arrival of relief trains, bringing nurses, doctors and soldiers from Bilbao.

The train fell fifty feet from the bridge to the river bed, the coaches piling up in a mass of splintered wood and iron work. Many corpses were carried down the stream, which was actually reddened with blood. It was found impossible to extricate numbers of the injured who were pinioned under the wreckage.

A railway guard was arrested in the act of robbing the dead and narrowly escaped lynching. It is believed the official figures underestimate the number of the killed, some accounts giving the number of dead as 100. The full extent of the catastrophe will only be known when the wreckage has been cleared away.

AND THE LAWYER SUBSIDED.

Newspaper Man Won His Tilt with Bumptious Lawyer.

A Philadelphia newspaper writer, being a witness in a neighboring county recently, was harried by a bumptious county lawyer, who asked:

"So you are a writer, are you? Well sir, with what great paper or magazine are you connected?"

"With none," was the modest reply.

"Then why do you call yourself a writer? What do you write—novels, scientific works, histories, or what?"

"I write anything and everything that occurs to me as likely to be worth reading or to sell, whether it is worth reading or not."

"Well, then, for whom or for what do you write? You say you are not connected with any paper or magazine."

"Yes, sir. I so stated. I am an unattached writer, for the general market.

"Just so. You write anything that occurs to you. Well, now, do you ever write up the proceedings of courts?"

"I have done so occasionally."

"Can you state to the judge and jury what particular kind of a court proceeding you would deem worthy of your pen?"

"Yes. If I saw a young lawyer treating a respectable witness in a very rude and disrespectful manner and making an ass of himself generally I should think that possibly worth writing up."

The court and jury smiled audibly. The judge took the witness in hand for a moment.

"How much do you think a scene like this, for instance, ought to bring if it were well written up?"

"It would depend upon the actors. If the lawyer were a person of any note or character, possibly $5 or $10."

"What would you expect to receive should you write the facts of this particular instance?"

"About 75 cents, your honor."

Counsel for the defense had no more questions to ask.

COME FROM SMALL PLACES.

Politicians of Highest Ability Not Raised in the Cities.

It is an interesting fact that politicians of the highest ability are often produced by the struggles forced upon them from the restricted environment of a country town, says the Portland Oregonian. Platt, of New York, lives at Owego, Quay at Beaver, Gorman at Laurel. When one reflects upon the acumen necessary to offset the disadvantages of a small local delegation in State and district conventions, it becomes apparent how much credit these powerful bosses deserve for raising up and maintaining themselves in the face of opposition from rivals situated in the great cities of New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. Other eminent Senators whose homes are outside the metropolis of their states are Spooner, of Madison; Proctor, of Proctor; Elkins, of Elkins; Morgan of Selma; Teller, of Central City; Platt, of Meriden, Conn.; Dolliver, of Fort Dodge; Blackburn, of Versailles; Hale, of Ellsworth; Bacon, of Macon; Lodge, of Nahant; Hoar, of Worcester; Nelson, of Alexandria; Cockrell, of Warrensburg; Depew, of Peekskill; Daniel, of Lynchburg. There is hardly a great city of the country with a representative of any prominence in the Senate. Philadelphia and St. Louis have men there of inferior powers and a few places like Omaha, Detroit, Milwaukee and Portland have one. Indianapolis has both the Indiana Senators, and Ohio's seats are divided between Cincinnati and Cleveland.

Wrought Into Gold.

I saw a smile—to a poor man 'twas given,
And he was old.
The sun broke forth; I saw that smile in heaven
Wrought into gold.
Gold of such luster never was vouchsafed to us;
It made the very light of day more luminous.

I saw a toiling woman, sinking down
Footsore and cold,
A soft hand covered her—the humble gown,
Wrought into gold.
Grew straight imperishable and will be shown
To smiling angels gathered round the judgment throne.

Wrought, into gold! We that pass down life's hours
So carelessly,
Might make the dusty way a path of flowers
If we would try.
Then every gentle deed we've done or kind word given,
Wrought into gold, would make us wondrous rich in heaven.

America in the Lead.

America is the leading commercial nation of the world and is offering great inducements to the young people who desire to make a success of life. Our commercial trade with foreign nations and our great home industry demands special preparation of the rising generation, such as they would get by attending some up-to-date practical commercial schools like that of Tyler College, Tyler, Texas; a school that not only gives a knowledge of accounts and how much to punch the keys of a typewriter, but one that gives a good literary foundation and a broad practical business training with all their courses.

This is a commercial age and no young person's education is complete without a thorough, practical and extensive commercial course.

Complying with an order of the city council the Texas Central railroad company have men at work this week opening three streets in the western part of town which have been closed for years by the wire fences on each side of the right of way ....A chemical engine has been purchased for the fire department which is to withstand a pressure of three hundred and fifty pounds..... A. L. Hamilton, foreman on section three of the Texas Central railroad, met with his first railroad accident last Monday, after an uninterrupted experience of sixteen years at railroading. He was in charge of two crews and they were coming to town on two hand cars, the head one carrying white men and the rear one seven negro laborers. The rear car ran into the forward one and in jumping off Mr. Hamilton fell with one arm across the rail and one wheel of the rear car passed over it. Strange to say the limb was but slightly bruised.....The colored people of Whitney and vicinity celebrated emancipation day on June 19th by an outing on the Brazos river. The question has been asked us why it is that the colored people of Texas celebrate on the 19th of June? The emancipation proclamation was issued by President Lincoln on January 1st, 1863, but this did not take effect generally until all the seceeding states had surrendered and submitted to the conditions. Texas being the last to surrender, it was not until June 19th when this was effected and on that day Gen. Granger, commander-in-chief of the army of Texas, proclaimed that the emancipation proclamation of the president of the United States was then in force in the state of Texas.—Whitney Messenger.

The Spelling of English.

Our present sistem ov spelin is the wurst mixt up kombination ov absurdities tu be found in the wurld. It takes frum fiv to fifty yers fur a purson to lurn tu spel wel, and sum never lurn at ail. We try to represent forty-tu or mor sounds with twenty-six karakturs, which iz absurd tu start with. Caxton was the first publisher and hiz printurs wer al duchmen, so that explainz matturs az tha now ar. Our spellin iz not a siene but a axident—a relik of the dark ages. Why hav four korrect waz tu spel it—all ov them really rong, viz: wright, write, rite and right? How iz this for a sentens? "When the Wright writes upon the rites of the church he hopes to do right." Sum will sa it iz usful tu sho a differens in mening. If that be so why not hav different wurds for tear, mening to rent anything frum tear, menin water in the i? Ther ar thousandz ov similar instanzes in our language. Under our prezent sistem ov spellin it takes mor tim tu lurn to spel wel than it takes tu komplet the hol kors ov mathematicks from one—a single thing—tu the distance and magnitude of the stiarz. Eny wun kan se that such iz a grate draw back tu studentz.

Nerly ail the grate skolarz and publishurs ar in favor ov a change tu what iz known az fonetic speling. Ther iz no sens or filosofy in uzing silent letturz in speling. The time wil soon come when we will hav forty-tu letterz insted of twenty-six—a letter for every sound, and then a child will easily lurn tu spel korectly in a very fue weks.

Publishurz and skolarz have only tu objecshuns tu the nu stile, viz: Thoz who lurn the nu furst never wuld lurn the old. A fonetik speler wuld be at se in wun ov our furst redurs even wer he a graduat. The buks now in print wuld becum absolutely unintelligible to all future generations, at any event the los wuld be grate, but the gane wuld be much gratur. And sekund, sum sa our languag has a historikal bases and that it wuld be a sin tu distroy it. Tu me the first sems the only gud objekshun. Be that as it ma, the chang is kuming just the same. All techurz shud bekum inturested in this reform. Tha, furst of all, wuld be benefited bi it. Yu aut tu inform yurself upon this thing, and I advize you tu send to Chicago fur a buk which iz kalled "Our accursed spelling and what to do with it". Yu shuld have it, for yu wil then lurn what the eminent skolarz have to sa about the reform.

Du not understand me to offer abov az a gud sample ov the nu riting and speling, for it is not, simply bekauz wun kannot avoid difficultez and errorz without the us ov mor karakturs than we no hav.—J. SPED KARROL.

BIT HIM

If It Had Been a Bear.

Sometimes it is good to be in a position where you can turn around to your shelves and take down food that is a rebuilder and life saver. A prominent grocer of Merrysville, Ohio, had heard so many of his customers praising the food Grape-Nuts that he finally gave it a trial himself. He says: "For several years up to fifteen months ago I was hardly fit for business from indigestion which also affected my head. My brain was dull and I could hardly keep my books.

"One day I heard one of my customers praising the Grape-Nuts so highly that I wondered if it would help my case, so I took a package from the shelf and said that I would use it and even if it failed I would not be much the loser.

"But before I had finished that first package such a change came over me that I thought it wonderful and by the time three packages had been used I had changed so that you would hardly believe it if I told you about it. My head grew clear and my mind strong and my memory was very much improved and I was well in every respect. I can only give you a faint idea of all the good that the food has done me. It is all that I eat for supper now-a-days and the rest of my family think as much of it as I do. Truly it is a great food and if it were not a great food it would not have done me so much good and have created a tremendous sale in my store." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Michigan.

His family is camped up there near his work and he reports a fine time fishing and hunting at odd times of leisure. The town only voted the incorporation in January of this year by a vote of one hundred and two to twenty-four, the officers were elected on February 2nd and a code of ordinances adopted March 1st. PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

Does a Wondrous Work for a Lady Who Was Almost Crazed with Pain and Suffering.

It is well known that terrible rheumatism, sciatica, and neuralgia cause more helplessness, acute suffering, and agony, than any of the other diseases that afflict humanity. The great medicinal virtues of Paine's Celery Compound make it the only trustworthy specific for the cure of all forms of rheumatism and neuralgia. Thousands of strong testimonial letters from the most prominent people of the land, prove that Paine's Celery Compound has banished these terribly fatal troubles when all other treatment has failed. Mrs. Margaret Bethel, of Brainerd, Minn., after thirty years of agonizing tortures had a desire to end her life, if it was the will of Heaven; she almost prayed for the time to lay it down. Heaven-directed, she made use of Paine's Celery Compound, and is enjoying true life once more. She says:—

"For thirty years I have been a great sufferer from neuralgia in the head, and also with rheumatism in the whole body. I began taking Paine's Celery Compound and soon found I was much better. Before taking the Compound, my life was such a burden that I almost prayed to lay it down. I was bedfast every two weeks with horrible pain in the head, back, and neck, until I was almost crazed. I am able to do harder work and more of it today than for twenty-five years. I am really enjoying life again, thanks to Paine's Celery Compound. I am satisfied that my life has been prolonged many years by its use."

Racing men tell a story concerning an overanxious horse owner and a particularly conscientious rider. The horse owner had issued full orders as to the way a horse was to be ridden in a coming race to a small negro boy, the only rider he could secure. The original orders then were added to, with provisions for all sorts of emergencies, until the jockey became bewildered.

"Look yere, boss," the boy broke in at last. "Dis yere race is only one mile. I kain't do all you done told me in just one mile."

LOOK OUT FOR MALARIA.

An epidemic of Malaria is sure to follow the wet season and the high waters which have prevailed all over the South. Malarial and kindred fevers will develope to an alarming extent. General health conditions will be bad; every precaution should be taken.

The System Must Especially Be Fortified to Resist Malarial Attacks.

A trial of fifty years has demonstrated that for this emergency, Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic has no equal. Iron is the fighting element in the blood, and the kind of iron supplied by Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic is just the kind the system requires to successfully combat malarial conditions. Don't wait until you are attacked. Take it now and fortify yourself; it is an absolute safeguard and, at the same time, it is the best tonic and invigorant for the entire system. On the other hand, quinine disturbs the system and its cumulative poison begets greater physical troubles than those it is employed to remedy.

Where a bad case of chronic Malaria already exists, take DR. HARTER'S FEVER and AGUE SPECIFIC. It is guaranteed to cure. Price 50 cents. BUT IF YOU WILL

THE LION'S WHELP

A Story of Cromwell's Time

CHAPTER I.

Swaffham and De Wick.

During the seventeenth century Swaffham Manor House was one of the most picturesque dwellings in Cambridgeshire. It was so old that it had a sort of personality. It was the history of the Swaffham family in stone and timber.

The central tower—built of the white stone of the neighborhood—was the fortress which Tonbert Swaffham erected A. D. 870, to defend his lands from an invasion of the Danes; and five generations of Tonbert's descendants dwelt in that tower, before William of Normandy took possession of the crown of England. The Swaffham of that date became a friend of the Conqueror; and the Manor House had the singular fortune to be identified with the stirring events of every dynasty.

In the middle of the seventeenth century it still retained this character. Puritan councils of offense and defense had been held in its great hall, and parliamentary soldiers drilled in its meadows. For Capt. Israel Swaffham was the friend of Gen. Cromwell, and at the time this story opens was with Cromwell in Scotland.

A great fighter, he had no parliamentary talent, and no respect for parliaments. He believed England's religious and civil liberties were to be saved by the sword, and when the King's fast-and-loose proposals had been discussed by the men of Cambridgeshire, in Swaffham, he had closed the argument with this passionate declaration:

"There is no longer disputing with such a double mind as the mind of Charles Stuart. The very oath of God would not bind him. Out, instantly, all of you who can!"

His three sons rose at his words and the rest of the council followed, for all felt that the work was but half done—there was to be a Second Civil War. Then home was again deserted for the battlefield, and Capt. Swaffham's wife and daughter were once more left alone in the old Manor House.

Mrs. Swaffham was the child of a Puritan minister, and she had strong principles, but there were hours when she had pitied the late King, excused his inexcusable treacheries, and regretted the pomps and ceremonies of royal state.

Jane Swaffham was of a different spirit. She had a soul of the highest mettle; and she had listened to those English mystics, who came out of the steel ranks or triumphant Puritanism, until she had caught their spirit and been filled through and through with their faith.

This was the maiden who was sitting, one sunny afternoon, at the open window of the household parlor in Swaffham. She was thinking of her father and brothers, of the unhappy condition of England, and of the unrest in their own household. For she knew that her mother was worried about many things, and the fret that was bred in the kitchen and the farm offices—in spite of all her efforts—insinuated itself into the still order of the handsome room in which she was sitting.

At this moment there was the sound of wheels and the tramp of horses, and Jane said, "It is Matilda de Wick. I know the roll of the carriage." Then Jane lifted her sewing, and the wheel began to hum, and the door opened swiftly and Matilda de Wick entered.

"I have just been at Ely," she said, "and if I live seven-and-fifty years longer in this sinful world, I shall not forget the visit. I have been visiting Lady Heneage, and I have heard so much of the Cromwell's full cup that, in faith, I think it has gone to my head."

"I trust Lady Heneage is well," said Mrs. Swaffham.

"She had need to be well. Her house is as full as the ark. Mrs. Elizabeth Hampden is there, and daughter Flambord, and daughter Clayton, and all their children and retainers. It is their last gathering before they go away. Do you wish to know where they are going? To London, of Course."

"And they are going to London? Is it really so?" asked Jane.

"'Tis not very civil to doubt it. But that is not all of my news—I heard also that Jane Swaffham was going to London—a thing I would not believe without Jane's assurance."

"It is very uncertain," replied Mrs. Swaffham. "Jane has an invitation from Mary Cromwell, and if Doctor Verity comes here soon, he may find the time to take her to London with him. We know not assuredly, as yet."

"June must move mountains to go. The Cromwells are now living in the stately Cockpit. They will hold court there, and Jane Swaffham will be of it."

"I am sure of one thing," answered Jane. "Public honors please not Gen. Cromwell. He would thank God to escape them."

"I do not say that the wish to see him honored is universal," continued Matilda. "Father Sacy thinks there are a few thousand men still living in England who have not bowed the knee to this Baal."

"Children! Children! can you find nothing more lovely to talk about? Matilda, you know that you are baiting Jane's temper only that you may see her lose it."

Then Matilda laughed, and stooping to her friend, kissed her and said, "Come, little Jane, I will ask your pardon. Kiss and be friends, Jane. I came to get your receipt for lavender conserves, and this is nothing to it. Come, let us go to the still-room." She spoke with an unconscious air of authority, and Jane as unconsciously obeyed it, but there was a coldness in her manner which did not disappear until the royalist lady had talked with her for half an hour about the spices and the distilled waters.

When the electuary had been prepared, the girls became silent. They were as remarkably contrasted as were the tenets, religious and civil, for which they stood. But if mere physical ascendency could have dominated Jane Swaffham, she was in its presence. Yet it was not Matilda, but Jane, who filled the cool, sweet place with a sense of power not to be disputed. Her pale hair was full of light and life; it seemed to shine in its waving order and crown-like coil. Her eyes had a steady glow in their depths that was invincible; her slight form was proudly poised; her whole manner resolute and a little cold, as of one who was putting down an offense only half-forgiven.

Matilda was conscious of Jane's influence, and she called all her own charms forth to rival it. Putting out of account her beautiful face and stately figure as not likely to affect Jane, she assumed the manner she had never known to fail—a manner half-serious and wholly affectionate and confidential. She knew that Swaffham was always a safe subject, and that a conversation set to that key went directly to Jane's heart. So turning slowly round to observe everything, she said,

"How cool and sweet is this place, Jane!"

"It is, Matilda. I often think that one might receive angels among these pure scents."

"Oh, I vow it is the rosemary! Let me put my hands through it," and she hastily pulled off her white embroidered gloves, and passed her hands, shining with gems, through the deliciously fragrant green leaves.

"I have a passion for rosemary," she continued. "It always perfigures good fortune to me. Sometimes if I wake in the night I smell it—I smell miles of it—and then I know my angel has been to see me, and that some good thing will tread in her footsteps."

Then she said with an attempt at indifference, "When did you hear from Cymlin? And pray in what place must I remember him now?"

"I know not particularly. Wherever the Captain-General is, there Cymlin Swaffham is like to be."

"Why do you not ask after Stephen's fortune—good or bad?"

"I did not at the moment think of Stephen. When Cromwell is in the mind 'tis impossible to find him fit company. It is he, and he only."

"Yet if ever Stephen de Wick gets a glimpse of home, it is not home to him until he has been at Swaffham."

Jane made no answer, and they walked silently to the door where Matilda's carriage was waiting. Mrs. Swaffham joined them as Matilda was about to leave, and the girl said, "I had come near to forgetting something I wished to tell you. One of those men called Quakers was preaching his new religion at Squire Oliver Leder's last night. There was much disputing about him to-day."

"What said Lady Heneage of the preacher?" asked Mrs. Swaffham.

"She thought he ought to be put in the stocks; and her sister Isabel said that he was a good man, and had the root of the matter in him. I heard that he was to preach again at Deeping Den. Now, I must make what haste I can; my father will be angry at my delay. Good-bye! faithful till we meet again."

"She says 'faithful,' yet knows not how to be faithful."

"She is much changed."

"It would be strange indeed if she was not changed. Before these troubles she was a girl living at her mother's knee, petted by her father, and the idol of her brothers. Two of her brothers fell fighting by the side of Prince Rupert, her mother wept herself into the grace for them, her father is still nursing the wound he got at Naseby, and her only brother, Stephen, is with Charles Stuart, wherever he may be. If such troubles did not change a girl, she would be hewn from the very rock of selfishness."

On her way home Matilda sat erect, lost in thought, and her eyes had a look in them full of anxiety and sorrow. The sadness of an immense disillusion was over her. Her life had gone to ruin, but she trusted that some miracle would restore it. All her old friends had departed. The grave had some; others had taken different ways, or battle and exile had scattered them. By the side of her sick father she stood alone. Oppressed by such considerations, she felt like a child that suddenly realizes it has lost its way and is left alone in a wilderness.

Nothing in her surroundings offered her any help. The road was flat and dreary; a wide level intersected with deep drains and "droves"—a poor, rough, moist land, whose horizon was only broken by the towers of Ely, vast and gray in the distance. Large iron gates admitted her to de Wick park. The house was a quadrangular building of various dates, and gray walls rising from trim gardens with box edged flower plots and clipped yew hedges. An old-world sleepy air, lonely and apart and full of melancholy, pervaded the place.

The door stood open, and she passed without delay into the wide entrance hall, and went leisurely up the broad stairway. Her hat, with its moist drooping feathers, was in her hand; her hair hung limply about her brow and face; she was the very picture of a beauty that had suffered the touch of adverse nature, and the depression of unsympathetic humanity.

But the moment she entered her own room she had the sense of covert and refreshment. She put off her sense of alienation and unhappiness with her damp clothing, and as the comfort of renewal came to her outwardly, the inner woman also regained her authority; and the girl conscious of this potent personality, erected herself in its strength and individuality. She surveyed her freshly clad form in its gown of blue lutestring; she turned right and left to admire a fresh arrangement of her hair; she put around her neck, without pretense of secrecy or apology, the rosary of coral and gold; and admired the tint and shimmer of its beauty on her white throat. Then she asked—

"Was any stranger with the Earl at dinner, Delia?"

"My lady, he dined with Father Sacy alone."

"And pray what did they eat for dinner?"

"There was a sucking pig roasted with juniper wood and rosemary branches, and a jugged hare, and a pullet, and some clotted cream and a raspberry tart. All very good, my lady; will you please to eat something?"

"Yes. I will have some jugged hare, and some clotted cream, and a raspberry tart—and a glass of Sapnish wine, Delia, and a pitcher of new milk. Have them served as soon as possible."

She took one comfortable glance at herself, and in the pleasure of its assurance went down-stairs. Her step was now firm and rapid, yet she paused a moment at the door of the room she wished to enter, and called up smiles to her face and a sort of cheerful bravado to her manner ere she lifted the steel hasp that admitted her. In a moment her quick eyes took a survey of its occupants. They were only two men—Earl de Wick, and his chaplain, Father Sacy. Both were reading; the Earl, Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia"; the chaplain, the evening service in the book of common prayer. Neither of them noticed her entrance, and she went straight to her father's side, and covering the open page with her hand, said in a merry tone—

"Here is a noble dwelling in Arcadia, while the great Captain-General Cromwell——"

"The devil!"

"Is going up and down and to and fro in the land, seeking whom he may devour. I have been at Ely and at Swaffham, gathering what news I can, and I assure you, sir, there is none to our comfort."

"What have you heard? Anything about the Scots?"

"Cromwell is in Scotland. What do you expect from that news?"

"That Leslie will be his match."

"Then you will be disappointed. 'There is a tide in the affairs of men,' and this tide of Cromwell and the Commonwealth is going to sweep all royalty and all nobility into the deep sea."

"Well, then, I may as well return to my 'Arcadia' and learn how to be rustical. We nobles may play at Canute if we like—but——"

"It is useless, while this man's star flames in the firmament. If he conquers the Scotch army, what more can they offer him but the crown?"

WOMAN NOT SO FRAGILE.

Think of the 43,000 Pounds of Bread and Meat She Eats.

"A young man of my acquaintance visits me occasionally," said Dr. Cynicus, "who is very much in love, but who wearies me excessively by his ravings over his sweetheart, her angelic qualities, et cetera. She is too fragile for this world, he thinks.

"'Fragile?' says I. 'How fragile? Ever test her fragility? Let me give you some figures about her, and womankind in general, showing the extent of their fragility.

"'We will suppose this piece of perfection is in moderately good health. She will live to, say, 60 years of age. Women do not like, any more than men do, to die—not so much, for women never grow old, you know. Listen to me? She will eat one pound of beef, mutton or some other meat every day. That's 365 pounds of flesh in a year. In sixty years it's 21,900 pounds. How's that for fragility?

"'She will eat as much bread and as much vegetables per diem, and there you have in 60 years 43,800 pounds of bread and meat.

"'If she is not too angelic she will drink daily no less than two quarts of coffee, tea, wine or beer. And by the time she is really to have a monument she will have consumed 175 hogsheads of liquids. Fragile?

"'Now,' says I to this young man, 'these figures do not include the 40 or 50 lambs she will worry down with mint sauce. It does not take into consideration her ice cream, her oysters, her clams and such. All this means about 45 tons.

"'Fragile? Think of your affinity in connection with these figures and then rave over her being fragile. Young man, you're a fool. Bah!'"—New York Times.

ONE FOR TILLMAN

CHANGE OF VENUE GRANTED IN HIS TRIAL.

MITIGATION IS DEFENSIVE PLEA

His Counsel Claims Defendant Was Goaded to Do the Deed by the Paper.

Columbia, S. C., June 25.—Argument on the motion for a change of venue in the case of Jas. H. Tillman, indicted for murder, was concluded late yesterday afternoon, and Judge Townsend at once announced his decision that the change would be granted. Counsel disagreed concerning the county where the case should be sent, and this was left undecided for the present.

Arguments were made by Andrew Crawford and Duncan Bellinger for the prosecution, and by P. H. Nelson, Geo. W. Croft and former Judge O. W. Buchanan for the defense. Judge Buchanan, who is Jas. H. Tillman's brother-in-law, delivered a bitter arraignment of the press, commercial interests and people generally of Columbia. He charged that The State (newspaper) had goaded the defendant to desperation by its attitude toward him.

The court then announced its decision to grant the motion, and asked the counsel for suggestions concerning the place to which the case should be transferred. Mr. Croft suggested Saluda. To this Solicitor Thurmond objected. Counsels being unable to agree on a county, Judge Townsend told them to draw up an order for a change of venue and leave the county blank for the present. The case must be tried in this judicial district, in which there are five counties. This county, Richland, is now eliminated by this decision. The belief is that Judge Townsend will name either Saluda or Lexington county. In either case the trial will not take place for six weeks or two months.

Two Killed in a Wreck.

Fort Smith, Ark.: Wednesday morning a freight engine and a car went through a trestle on the Missouri Pacific railroad at Flat Rock. Louis Wyatt, the engineer, and P. W. Duff, the head brakeman, were killed outright, and J. B. Lighter, the rear brakeman, was taken out of the wreck with a broken shoulder and several fractured ribs. The accident was caused by the working away of the dirt around the foundation of the trestle posts.

Another Lorenz Success.

Campbell: Little Ruth Ralph, who was treated by Dr. Lorenz for hip dislocation is able to walk about the place without a crutch. She still has the plaster case on her hip, both limbs are of equal length and her body is now in proper shape and it is the opinion of the family physician that when the plaster case is removed she will be sound and well. They will not remove the plaster for some time yet. She had not walked a step in three years when operated upon.

Dave Hugeley, in jail at Crockett, charged with the killing of his wife about ten days previously, committed suicide by eating the sulphur from matches.

Destructive Blaze at Merkel.

Merkel: Merkel suffered another fire Tuesday. Masonic building and lodge supplies $800, with total loss, insurance $400; Fleming building, occupied by Besham & Shepherd, loss $2250, insurance $1635; vacant building, owned by Mrs. Nobles, total loss, with no insurance; Ferrier Hall, damaged to the extent of $500, fully covered by insurance; Dr. Little, dentist, damaged to the amount of $300, fully covered.

Heavy Wind and Rain at Dallas.

Dallas: A heavy rain storm with heavy wind visited Dallas Wednesday night doing much minor damage, particularly in the way of flooding basements in down town warehouses. Signs, wires and trees were blown down promiscuously. In Oak Cliff Noble Witt's house was completely destroyed, but all escaped, except Mrs. Witt, whose ankle was sprained and bruises received. Telephone poles are down in every direction.

Dumont's Airship No. 9.

Paris, France. Santos Dumont made his first appearance Tuesday in airship No. 9, over the center of Paris. He started from Langchamps, going in the direction of the Place D'Letoil. He made a number of skillful maneuvers over the Place D'Triomphe, and, turning down the Champs Elysees, brought his airship down at the door of his house. Later he returned to Longchamp. There was little wind.

He Careth for Thee.

"Not a sparrow falleth, but its God doth know,
Just as when His mandate lays a monarch low;
Not a leaflet waveth, but its God doth see;
Think not then, oh, trembler, God forgetteth thee.

For more precious surely than the birds that fly
Is a Father's image to a Father's eye.
E'en thine hairs are numbered, trust Him full and free,
Cast thy care upon Him, and He'll care for thee.
For the God that planted in thy breast a Soul,
On His sacred tablets doth thy name enroll.
Cheer thine heart, then, trembler, never faithless be.
He that marks the sparrows will remember thee."

A Summer Millionaire

Jimmy Baker is a journeyman barber. Last July he "got on a good thing" at a racetrack and won $120. He immediately resigned his position and started to take a two weeks' vacation. He had heard some of the patrons of the downtown barber shop where he worked talking about Oconowoc as being a "dead swell place," and he decided that it would just suit him so long as his $120 held out.

He took a fine room at the "swell" hotel and started in to try to enjoy himself. But nobody at the hotel seemed to be anxious to make his acquaintance. Even the pretty young woman in blue and pink flowered shirt waist who acted as telegraph operator in the hotel lobby was exceedingly busy. In the big hotel dining room the summer girls and their guardian mammas never even seemed to see Jimmy, though he never came in unnoticed, everybody else was seated and was always careful to comb his hair into elaborate semi-circles on either side of the forehead.

Four or five days had gone by in this way and Jimmy was almost ready to declare that society life was all a bore and a delusion.

Meanwhile the small blond young woman who sent and received messages had unconsciously twined herself tightly into the tendrils of Jimmy's helpless affection. Time after time Jimmy sauntered airily up to her desk and made some playful remark which was intended to be fascinating. But it was no use. Miss Maginn always looked up with a sober and businesslike air and inquired whether he was collecting a message.

At last that finally gave him an idea. He had never received but two messages by telegraph in his life, but there seemed to be no reason why he should not get a few. He sat down and wrote a long letter to one of the boys in the barber shop at Chicago.

That evening Jimmy spent in pain- fully watching a dance in the hotel dining room, watching with envious eyes a young man in a white yachting suit as he whirled the beauteous Miss Maginn round the long room in a waltz. And Miss Maginn never even looked in his direction.

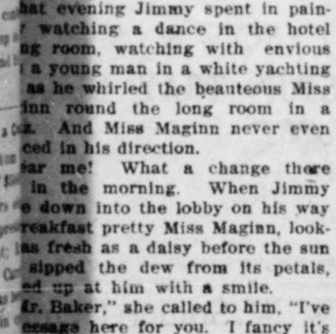

"Dear me! What a change there will be in the morning. When Jimmy comes down into the lobby on his way to breakfast pretty Miss Maginn, looking as fresh as a daisy before the sun has sipped the dew from its petals, will look up at him with a smile.

"Mr. Baker," she called to him, "I've two messages here for you. I fancy it's the more important one."

Jimmy took the yellow envelope with as much as he tried to make a bored expression. He leaned carelessly against the ornamental railing about Miss Maginn's desk, tore open the envelope, unfolded the message, and read it.

"James Baker, Oconomowoc, Wis.: Big offer of $200,000 spot cash for corner State street frontage. Shall I accept? Z. S. Sullivan."

For just a wink of the eye Jimmy was knocked out. But he was game and quickly recovered himself. The shock in the barber shop at home were not so pretty strong, but that was no reason why he should weaken and lose the game.

"Beautiful morning," said Jimmy.

Carelessly he doubled up the bit of yellow paper and thrust it into his vest pocket. Pretty Miss Maginn was watching his every movement. She had discovered an unsuspected millionaire.

"Beautiful morning," said Jimmy, as if he had dismissed the telegram and its contents from his mind altogether.

"Charming," gurgled Miss Maginn. "I didn't see you at the dance last night, Mr. Baker."

O, the gay deceiver! Jimmy knew perfectly well the reason why she had not seen him. She had looked clear over his head. But he countered promptly. "I'm not a dancing man, Miss Maginn."

"You really ought to learn, Mr. Baker. Why, it's perfectly lovely. There's to be a dance over at the Merritt house this evening, and if you like I'll give you a lesson. I'm sure you'd learn quickly."

Ah! the power of a few feet of State street frontage!

"I'll be delighted," said Jimmy. "I'll call for you at 8 o'clock. Shall I dress?"

Jimmy started to walk away from the desk when Miss Maginn called him back. "That message came collect, Mr. Baker. Shall I put it on your room bill?"

"Why, yes," said Jimmy in a lordly way. "Or, wait a minute. I'll pay it now. I hate these extras on one's hotel bills."

He pulled out his diminishing roll of bills and put Miss Maginn to the trouble of changing the only twenty he had left. Then he left her in a most excited and delighted state of mind. On his way across the hotel lobby he pulled one hand out of his coat pocket. With it came the telegraph message and dropped unnoticed on the floor.

He was at the breakfast table when the mother of the three charming young women who sat at the next table came hurrying up.

"Is this Mr. Baker?"

"Yes? Well, I found a telegram of yours on the floor in the hotel lobby. I'm glad to be able to return it to you. It's too bad for you to sit over here all alone at this table when we have an extra place at ours. We'd be delighted to have you join us, Mr. Baker."

Jimmy decided as he accepted the pressing invitation to change his seat that the boys in the barber shop had builded better than they knew. After a pleasant breakfast with the three pretty girls Jimmy accepted an invitation to go out yachting with one of them in the afternoon and then strolled out into the hotel lobby again.

Miss Maginn looked up at him with a ravishing smile on her face.

"May I have a blank and a pencil?" he asked. "Thank you. I'll send an answer to that telegram."

This is what he wrote:

"Z. S. Sullivan, Chicago, Ill.: Use your own judgment about selling. Don't bother me about details. I am trying to rest. James Baker."

"Send it paid, please," said Jimmy, as he laid half a dollar on the desk.

The look that grew in Miss Maginn's beautiful eyes as she read over the careless message in which Mr. Baker put away from him a mere matter of $200,000 might well have warmed the heart of a colder man than Jimmy.

"You won't forget our dancing lesson this evening, Mr. Baker?" she said with a caressing note in her voice.

Jimmy had a lovely time out on the lake that afternoon. He was all alone in the boat with the youngest of the old lady's three pretty daughters. When the boat keeled over under the wind Jimmy could hardly help sitting close to her indeed, but she didn't seem to mind it a bit. Once a sudden gust of wind almost capsized the little craft and after it had righted again the pretty skipper looked at Jimmy with an arch smile and said: "Well, that was a close shave, wasn't it?"

Jimmy blushed a rosy red and looked at her a second time. But he decided that she didn't mean it.

When they started out Jimmy had seen Miss Maginn watching them out of the hotel windows. Now, as they drew near the landing he saw her again, standing out on the end of the pier waving a handkerchief as if to beckon them in.

"O, Mr. Baker," she called before the boat had been tied up, "here's an important message for you. I think it wants an immediate answer."

Jimmy wondered what was coming now. He tore the envelope and read:

"James Baker, Oconomowoc, Wis.: Big bulge in wheat. Shall I let go half million bushels for a profit of sixty thousand? Z. S. Sullivan."

"Nothing important," said Jimmy. "I wish I could get the boys not to bother me about trifles when I'm on my vacation."

Then he helped his fair partner out of the boat and walked up to the hotel with one of the girls on each side of him.

Jimmy did not stay out the whole two weeks. At the end of the tenth day he discovered that he had just money enough left to pay his car fare back to Chicago after the hotel bill was settled. So he took his departure between dinner and breakfast. He left at least two girls behind him who had taken his proposal of marriage under consideration for a few days. Doubtless they are still wondering what ever became of him.—Chicago Tribune.

THEY DO NOT WANT RICHES.

One Owns a Silver Mine and the Other a Health-Giving Spring.

"I know two men in Colorado," said Col. Alexander, an officer in the army, "who may be ranked as peculiar characters. One of them owns the greatest silver mine in the state and does not develop it, and the other owns a hot springs which is a marvel in its curative properties and he does nothing to encourage people to come to it. The mine owner digs out some silver ore from time to time, puts it in a sack and carries it to Denver, where he sells it. In this manner he gets enough money to supply his necessities, but he will do nothing more. He might become a silver king if he would develop that mine and take out the wealth of silver. I can't say why he will not do so, but he won't, and that is all there is to it.

"The other fellow has a spring that is wonderful and those who could stand the treatment they received at his place have been cured of chronic ailments of a most serious nature. He has a few tumbledown cabins about, and with nothing in the way of luxuries or even comforts. If he would put up a good hotel and make his place attractive for sick people he would have great crowds there, but that is something he will not do.

"He says those who want the benefit of his spring must take what they find and be satisfied with what satisfies him. 'If they don't like it they needn't come,' is the way he puts it, and he cannot be induced to make improvements or to allow others to do so."

The Industrial Revolution.

They spun and knitted i' the sun
I' the good old days, the good old ways;
And work with a homely joy was done
I' the good old days, the good old ways.
The needles clicked and the pale went round.
The spindle hummed and the laughter rung.
Ah, honest work had a merry sound
When the world was young!

They mind the threads of the whirring loom
In the latter days, the weary days,
For the soul and joy there is no room
In the latter days, the weary days.
They piece the snapp'd threads one by one,
No song is sung and no tale is told;
And there's little mirth beneath the sun
For the world is old.

Smokes No More.

A party of Englishmen were talking about human qualities. "What I admire in a man," said one, "is the power of self-denial. Now, take smoking," he continued, lazily filling his pipe. "It is a useless habit, and yet probably none of you could give it up." A Yankee who was present broke in—"I knew a fellow down in Nebraska, who smoked ten ounces a day, and yet gave it up at a minute's notice, and never touched it again. Fact, I assure you," he resumed, as a murmur of unbelief arose. "He was lighting his pipe when something came to him, and from that day to this he never smoked another. Yes, it is strange, a friend of mine, too, so I know it's true. He was sitting on the top of a barrel blasting powder, and the head of his match dropped through the bunghole."

HUMOR OF THE WEST

COWBOYS NOT ALWAYS PARTIAL TO SILK HATS.

That Particular Headgear Savored Too Much of Eastern Civilization —How the Wearer of One Made Himself Popular With the Crowd.

Recently the telegrams brought from Fagan, Texas, a story of how the town roughs had set upon and killed a Bible agent whose sole offense was that he wore a long-tailed coat, patent leather shoes and a plug hat. Commenting on the story, the Wellington (Kan.) Mail declares that "a similar incident occurred in the early days of Caldwell." However, the plug hat shooting in Caldwell was a different affair from that of Fagan. In April, 1872, one McCarty, a local "bad man," entered a store in Caldwell and found there Dr. Anderson, who was known throughout the Southwest as "the plug hat man," because he was usually adorned with that kind of headgear. Anderson was not a "tenderfoot." He had been a prominent member of the Butler county vigilantes, and it was known that McCarty had a grudge against him. When McCarty entered Thompson's store and found Anderson there he pulled a six-shooter and said: "Watch me put a hole through that hat." He did put a hole through the hat, and when Anderson protested he fired again, this time putting a hole through Anderson's head and causing his instant death. McCarty was pursued by the indignant citizens of the town and took refuge at the ranch of Curley Marshall. When the ranch house was surrounded he refused to surrender and then the house was set on fire. In the running fight which followed, he managed to escape, after wounding several of his pursuers, but a few days later he was overtaken and his dead body was left on the prairies.

There is no well authenticated account of a killing in Kansas on account of the wearing of a plug hat, though it is popularly supposed that the incidents were frequent. It is quite true that when a stranger appeared in one of the border towns wearing this kind of head covering, he was always greeted uproariously, and the hat came to grief, but the affair usually went off in the best of humor. The first plug hat worn into Hays City, for example, was on the head of the late Connell Henley, who died at that place a few years ago. In 1868 he went to Fort Hays to be a clerk in the quartermaster's department. He was a good dresser, and when he stepped from the train he wore a tall silk hat. At once the town loafers and joshers and killers congregated at the depot. They said nothing at all to Henley, but they formed close behind him a procession, and whenever he walked they walked, keeping up the lockstep. The foremost man walked so close to Henley that he could not even turn around to see his tormentors, and it was a sight—that procession solemnly moving along, each man with his hands on the shoulders of the one in front of him and all keeping step.

Then an inspiration seized Henley, and he steered straight for Tom Drum's saloon, the most popular place in town. Walking up to the bar he set his silk hat down, bowed politely to the barkeeper, and said: "These are my friends, and they are all drinking with me."

It happened that there was a big bowl of tom and jerry on the bar. Some one emptied it into the plug hat and some one else got a dipper and passed the drink around. Presently the liquor soaked through the top of the hat, and thereupon it was placed on the top of a post, and every man in the crowd took a shot at it, riddling it into rags.

Henley came off from the encounter with every man his friend. He had met the rude introduction of the West with good nature, and his place was made.—Kansas City (Mo.) Journal.

The Champion Economist.

Albert J. Barr, proprietor of the Pittsburg Post, while in New York attending the annual meeting of the Associated Press, was discussing with a group of friends the queer economical traits some men develop. "I heard of a miserly chap in Western Pennsylvania," said Mr. Barr, "who determined to save on his undertaker's bill, so he made his own coffin and had it ready when he needed it."

"That's nothing," remarked one of the party. "I frequently have heard of people making their own coffins."

"Yes," said the Smoky City journalist, "but when the part of this man's house devoted to bodily cleanliness was undergoing repairs, to keep down the plumber's bill he lined the coffin with zinc and used it as a bathtub for the rest of his life. Then he was buried in it."—New York Times.

Largest of Overshot Wheels.

The largest overshot water wheel still in existence is said to be that at the Great Laxey mine, on the Isle of Man.

According to a description in London Engineering this wheel is 72 feet in diameter and capable of developing about 200 horse power. It has for many years driven the pumps for draining the mine, but in the extension of the workings a greater quantity of water was met than the pumps could handle, and the mine has been flooded to a total depth of about 1,000 feet.

A temporary steam pumping plant is now to be installed to unwater the mine and later a permanent electrical pumping plant will be installed.

June 26th.—Last week your correspondent was engaged on the jury at Stephenville and hence was unable to get the items to the Progress.

We have had good rains the past week and crops are looking fine. The cut worms have disappeared and cotton is growing nicely. All the oats and wheat have been harvested and the crops will soon be laid by by most of the farmers.

Roasting ears are now plentiful and it is generally considered that the corn crop is made.

The rabbits are destroying many of the cantaloupes in this section, though we are of the opinion that there will be a fair yield in spite of their ravages. Water melons are a month late and it will be the first of August before they can be put on the market.

Recently Hon. Ben Palmer of Paluxy received the returns from his first shipment of mohair, or goats wool, the first shipment of this product that ever went out of Erath county. The mohair was sent to the St. Louis market and netted him thirty-six cents per pound while sheep's wool shipped at the same time to the same market brought but nineteen cents. Both prices are extraordinarily high but the tendency of the market is towards still higher figures. Both the wool and mohair were produced on Mr. Palmer's Paluxy ranch, where he is gradually accumulating a nice lot of fine goats and sheep. A new packery is just in course of erection at St. Louis, which will furnish a regular market for the goats the year round and will handle nothing but goats

J. F. Norris from Immermere, was in to see us Wednesday. Mr. Norris tells us that while sitting on his porch at home last Saturday, he saw and heard something greatly out of the usual order of things. He says the sky was perfectly clear and the sun was shining hot, when suddenly he saw in an easternly direction a bright light resembling a flash of lightning and in a few minutes thereafter he heard a terific noise like thunder. From what he tells us of the matter we would judge the phenomena to have been a falling meteor and that possibly it will again be heard from.

The Perfect Liver Medicine.

Mrs. M. A. Jolley, Noble, O.T., writes "I have used Herbine for a number of years and can cheerfully recommend it as the most perfect liver medicine and the greatest blood purifier. It is a medicine of positive merit and fully accomplishes all that is claimed for it." Malaria cannot find a lodgement in the system while the system is in perfect order and one of the functions of this medicine is to prevent the absorption of fever producing poisons.
