Rex Loftis stands with his "gang" ready to draw outside Fort Texas Ranger Bar-B-Q restaurant he owns on the Garden City Highway near U.S. Interstate 20.

Rustic restaurant reflection of hard times, owner says

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

To hear Rex Loftis explain it, the rustic restaurant and saloon he's built on the Garden City Highway near Interstate 20 aren't so much the products of a fertile imagination as hard times.

"I'm out here doing this because, basically, there's no jobs in Midland," the Panhandle-raised Loftis, 48, said Thursday, standing behind the bar of the dark, dirt-floored, tin-roofed saloon he cunningly constructed out of sandbags.

The former owner of the now-closed High Chapparal western clothing store, Loftis had to enter bankruptcy after the failure of the Metro Bank, he said.

"When the FDIC — the Darth Vader bunch — came, they closed my bank and they cut my credit, like they did everybody else," he said.

"They said, 'Well, find you another banker,' " he said, but money was tight and second loans were hard to come by.

"You can't find a job, so you might as well go do something creative," he said.

That Loftis has done something creative might be putting it lightly. The food and beverage establishment Loftis built is a tribute to one man doing the best he can with what he has.

"Everything out here I've had to scrounge and scavenge out of the junkyard," said Loftis, who added he's not the kind of person to comb flea markets and has no overt interest in junk other than how he can use it.

The saloon's sandbag walls — propped up with wood posts to a height of 8 feet or so — serve as a good example of the man's ingenuity.

The fort complex has been surrounded by water 10 of the 12 months that it's been open, Loftis said, because of its low land level.

City curb and gutter work in the Florida Avenue area resulted in water being directed away from that city street and toward the low area on which his and other nearby businesses stand, he said.

'Peace is at stake,' mourners reminded

MAYPORT NAVAL STATION, Fla. (AP) — A consoling President Reagan today told the families of sailors killed on board the USS Stark that their loved ones "were ordinary men who did extraordinary things. Yes, they were heroes."

Reagan, speaking at a memorial service for the 37 sailors killed in Sunday's missile attack in the Persian Gulf, also declared that "peace is at stake" in the troubled region.

"Were a hostile power ever to dominate this strategic region and its resources, it would become a chokepoint for freedom — that of our allies and our own," the president said in a speech prepared for delivery at a memorial service in a hangar at the frigate's home base.

Reagan lamented that "the burden of our time is so different" from that faced by earlier generations.

Recalling the casualties of World War II, he said, "while our sorrow was great in those days, I cannot help but tell you this morning that, in some ways, it was easier to bear then because it was easier to understand why we were there, why we were fighting."

The president's remarks came amid increasing controversy over the U.S. role in the troubled gulf, where the United States has agreed to have Kuwaiti tankers fly the American flag and come under the protection of U.S. warships.

Navy continues probe; Qatari vessel attacked

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The U.S. military sought today to determine how many Iraqi planes were involved in the raid on the USS Stark, and an Iranian gunboat attacked and crippled a small Qatari ship sailing for Kuwait in the Persian Gulf.

A 10-man U.S. Navy team that began its probe into the Stark attack Thursday ruled out the possibility that three missiles hit the ship in the raid Sunday night that killed 37 American sailors and wounded 21 others.

Meanwhile, Navy spokesman Michael Cherry denied news reports that the Stark's main Plalanx anti-missile weapons system was not working the day of the attack because of a missing part.

Cherry denied that, saying: "I have no knowledge of any such failure and I stick with my statment that all equipment was operational at the time."

Meanwhile, not far from the site of the Stark attack, an Iranian gunboat attacked a small Qatari ship sailing to Kuwait, despite Saudi Arabian air control and Kuwaiti navy patrols in the area, shipping executives said today.

The gunboat fired rocket-propelled grenades into the 2,596-ton Rashidah and raked it with machine-gun fire Thursday night, critically injuring three crewmen and gutting the engine room and crew quarters, they said. The disabled freighter was drifting in gulf waters after the attack.

U.S. military officers investigating the Stark attack have been told by the ship's captain and crew members that two missiles struck the Stark, and some crew members mentioned two explosions. But Wednesday, an unexploded Exocet missile was discovered lodged in the frigate.

"All I can say is that no third missile is involved," Cherry said Thursday. The Exocet was defused by bomb disposal experts.

Cherry said the Navy team, led by Rear Adm. Grant Sharp, would not make its findings public in Bahrain, and said crew members would be unavailable to journalists for interviews.

Still unresolved was the question of whether one plane or two fired the missiles. Iraq has said one warplane fired two French-made Exocet missiles. But Pentagon officials in Washington said the French-made Mirage F-1 fighters used by Iraq are usually able to carry only one Exocet at a time.

Ten persons exposed to rabid cat

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

One northeast Midland family of five, the family's babysitter and four Animal Control employees will undergo Human Deploy Cell vaccinations to combat exposure to the family's rabid cat, said the director of the City of Midland Animal Control.

A man brought his cat into the Animal Control office on May 19, said director Coy Willis, because he had noticed a change in the cat's habits.

"The cat went bananas" in the office, Willis said.

The animal bit its owner while trying to escape and then bit an Animal Control clerk and either bit or scratched an Animal Control officer as they tried to help the man control the cat, Willis said.

In humans, rabies is unconditionally fatal, Willis said.

The cat was destroyed that afternoon and it's brain sent to a laboratory in El Paso for rabies confirmation.

However, while dissecting the cat at the Animal Control office, two additional Animal Control employees were exposed to fluids from the cat — the feline's spinal fluid came in contact with one employee's open wound and the other employee cut himself with a scalpel while dissecting the cat, Willis said.

The El Paso City County Health Department lab, which operates in conjunction with the Texas Department of Health, confirmed the cat was rabid on May 20.

Signing repeals long-battled Fuel Use Act

From Staff and Wire Reports

Legislation, described as a longtime "thorn in the side" for the oil industry, was removed Thursday when President Reagan signed into law legislation repealing the Fuel Use Act of 1978.

Flanked by Secretary of Energy John Herrington and Interior Secretary Donald P. Hodel, Reagan said of the bill shortly before he signed it: "This legislation eliminates unnecessary restrictions on the use of natural gas. It promotes efficient production and development of our energy resources by returning fuel choices to the marketplace."

The 1978 legislation, which was passed at the same time as the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, prohibited large utility power plants from burning natural gas to generate electricity and required them to begin a phase out of natural gas as a fuel. The law was later amended in 1982 to remove the phase-out requirement, but continued to prohibit the construction of new gas-fired power plants. The bill signed by Reagan repeals the construction ban.

Midlander Richard Gaddy, an independent natural gas producer and pipeline owner, said the legislation had robbed the natural gas industry of a great market and its repeal was long overdue.

■ U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland of Houston receives apology for exclusion from ceremony. — 8B

News of the repeal was greeted with enthusiasm in the oil and gas industry. U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, who was present at the signing and had given testimony as an expert witness in favor of the repeal, said he was delighted that congressional action to repeal the Fuel Use Act was quickly followed by the president's signature.

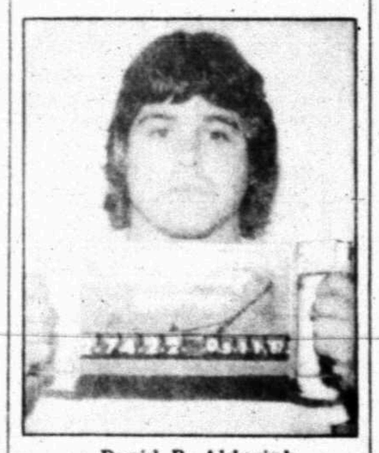

"The repeal will now allow power companies to make decisions based on the free market and technological innovation and not government regulations," said Smith.

He said the event marks the first small step in a long march toward an energy policy that pays better attention to the vital importance of the oil and gas industry, national security and the national economy.

"The repeal may not have an immediate effect on a natural gas turnaround, but it will certainly help in the long run," said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "PBPA is delighted; this should have been done long ago."

Midland attorney and natural gas consultant, Hans Hansen, called the news "wonderful." He said it would give the natural gas industry new markets and new opportunities and would play a role in the long term recovery of the industry.

Michigan man arraigned in disappearance

From Staff Reports

David Russell Alderink was arraigned this morning on a charges of aggravated kidnapping and conspiracy in connection with the Nov. 8 disappearance of June Carpenter Gilkerson of Midland.

Alderink, 21, dressed in county jail whites, appeared with his attorney, James Bobo of Odessa. Alderink entered a plea of not guilty to the charges.

Alderink was named in a sealed indictment handed down by a grand jury April 28. He was arrested several days later in Michigan and was returned to Texas.

According to the indictment, Ms. Gilkerson, 24, was abducted by Alderink and another man who was named as an unindicted co-conspirator. According to police, her whereabouts are unknown.

Ms. Gilkerson's unlocked car was found at a local motel several hours after she left her west Midland home Nov. 8. Her purse, car keys, and a pair of sneakers were found inside.

Unemployment rates reflect continued sluggishness

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Unemployment figures in the Permian Basin for April reflected the sluggishness of the overall economy. Midland's showed a .2 percent increase in unemployment while Odessa's rate moved down by the same amount.

Total employment in each city grew by 100 workers but Midland's available labor force increased by 200 and Odessa's remained stable. The Tall City jobless rate stood at 9.5 percent in April, up from 9.3 percent in March. Odessa's rate crept down to 12.4 percent, from 12.6 percent a month earlier.

"There just aren't any factors to cite in such a minor movement," noted Joe Hatcher, office manager for the Texas Employment Commission in Midland.

"There isn't anything encouraging on the horizon in terms of bringing a large number of jobs into the area either," he added.

April saw 45,800 Midland County residents employed from a total labor pool of 50,600, leaving 4,800 unemployed jobseekers. Those figures compare to 45,700 of 50,400 working in March, when 4,700 were unemployed. In April 1986, Midland employment totaled 46,600 in a work force of 52,700 — leaving 6,100, or 11.6 percent unemployed.

Odessa's April numbers stood at 49,500 total employment, 56,500 available labor force, with 7,000 unemployed. In March, total employment was 49,400 in the same sized labor force, leaving 7,100, or 12.6 percent, out of work. A year ago, 50,200 of 60,000 available workers were at work in Ector county, putting total unemployment at 9,800, or 16.3 percent.

The local TEC office is preparing for an expected influx of school-age jobseekers this summer, Hatcher said. "Although our program is nonfunded, we already have a number of job orders from employers needing summer help."

Last year the seasonal youth job program placed about 400 in short-term or summer-long jobs, primarily minimum wage positions, he added.

Hatcher expects the TEC office to begin processing Immigration & Naturalization documentation requests on a "control basis" by June 1 and anticipates the agency's employer recordkeeping program to be in effect June 15.

Surrounding counties showed mixed, but minor movements in jobless figures in April as well.

Andrews County continues to have the lowest rate in the region, although it rose from 7.7 percent to 7.9 percent in April. Minor increases were registered in Howard (from 9.2 to 9.3 percent), Ward (from 9.1 to 9.5 percent) and Dawson (from 12.6 to 12.8 percent) counties.

Lubbock couple files suit after home mistakenly raided

LUBBOCK (AP) — A Lubbock couple whose home was mistakenly raided in February by lawmen looking for a drug suspect have filed a $300,000 federal civil rights suit.

Robert and Debra Childs, both 30, are suing the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, the Lubbock Police Department and Lubbock County for negligence and civil rights violations. Officers of all three agencies were involved in the raid.

Police Chief Tom Nichols, Lubbock County Criminal District Attorney Travis Ware and CDA Civil Chief Ruth Cantrell had not seen copies of the suit filed Thursday and declined to comment.

The Childs and their two sons, ages 4 and 2, were asleep when their front door was broken open about 7 a.m. on Feb. 3. In rushed police with guns drawn, the suit states.

Moments before, authorities had burst in on their elderly neighbor, Julie Criswell, realized they had the wrong address and proceeded to the Childs' residence, police said.

It was the address they had been given, but the Hispanic woman named in a sealed state drug indictment was not there. Mrs. Childs told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal on Feb. 5 that the suspect had been staying nearby, but had moved out a few days before.

Mrs. Childs said the raiders never identified themselves as police officers.

"We didn't even know who they were until after they had handcuffed us. They just told us to shut up and be quiet," she claimed.

The suit contends that the officers did not have a proper warrant and could have determined that the information on the suspect's address was false.

Awakened by the commotion, the two boys entered their parents bedroom and, according to the suit, had guns pointed at them while watching their mother and father being arrested.

Attorney Charles Dunn added that the Childs allegedly were thrown against a wall as their children screamed.

Good example best advice, 'father of the year' feels

NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway star Ossie Davis, whose credits include three children and four grandchildren, told a "father of the year" gathering featuring a Texas dad that there's only one kind of advice that kids will accept.

"When young folks are concerned, the only good advice is a good example," the actor said Thursday. When instructing his children, he recalled, "I could see in their eyes what their answer was: 'We're watching what you do, Dad, not what you say.'"

Davis, who is married to actress Ruby Dee, was one of 10 award recipients named at the 52nd annual Father's Day Luncheon.

He said kids who drop out of school need to be inspired by their parents, adding, "The difference between a winner and loser is motivation."

The Rev. Harold Halcomb was heralded as "Everyman's Father of the Year."

Halcomb, pastor of the North End Baptist Church in Beaumont, Texas, said that if he could live his life over, "I would ask God for some more children."

He and his wife, Patsy, have two daughters: Teri J. Halcomb Riley, 27, and Tina R. Halcomb, 16. Both were born prematurely and a doctor had told them that Tina might not survive.

"Being a father is one of the greatest honors and privileges any man could have," said Halcomb, a cancer patient who defied his prognosis and returned to the pulpit three weeks after surgery.

Ted Kaufman, chairman of the National Father's Day Committee, said recipients were chosen by a committee of previous winners. The purpose is to raise the reputation of fathers "from the level of Dagwood to a reliable guardian of the family."

"It means we're paying attention to the need for parents to be involved with their kids," explained Brock. He and his wife, Sandra Schubert Mitchell Brock, are the parents of six children.

"I love them very much.... That makes life worth living," he said.

Brock also said he and his spouse share household duties, noting that tradition has made it "too convenient for fathers to put the load on mothers."

Ojeda, who with his wife, Tammy, has three children, could not be present to receive his award. The Mets' pitcher was to undergo elbow surgery and will be out for the remainder of the season.

Testimony reveals 'one-two punch'

Iran-Contra Affair

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration maintained a "fiction" that it was not soliciting money for Nicaragua's Contra rebels when in fact officials had teamed up with a fund-raiser for a "one-two punch" on wealthy sympathizers, a senator said at Congress' Iran-Contra hearings.

Three private donors to the Contra cause testified Thursday that they had given money because they were convinced President Reagan wanted them to do so. In two cases, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North briefed the donors before conservative fund-raiser Carl R. "Spitz" Channell asked them for contributions. Channell has pleaded guilty to a tax fraud conspiracy charge stemming from the Contra fund raising.

"Where I come from, we call that the old one-two punch," said Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., a member of the Senate investigating committee. "To me it's a fiction for anyone to assume that's not a solicitation."

The three donors — Ellen Garwood, a wealthy widow from Austin, Texas; Joseph Coors, a Colorado brewery owner; and William O'Boyle, an oil and gas investor from New York — gave a total of $2.4 million for weapons and aircraft for the Contras during a time when Congress had prohibited U.S. military aid, "directly or indirectly."

In other Iran-Contra developments:

— Investigators said they had discovered in the safe at North's former office in the White House complex a private proposal outlining a plan for transferring U.S. high-technology goods to Israel, which in turn would transfer military equipment to a third country. The third country, apparently China, then would deliver arms through a trading company to the Contras and other "freedom fighters" in Afghanistan, Angola and Cambodia. The plan, although never specifically carried out, could have been a model for the Iran-Contra scheme, investigators said.

— Testimony seemed to cast growing doubt on the sworn statements of retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, who had been the hearings' opening witness. Witnesses told of markups on weapons sold to the Contras by Secord, who has insisted he made no profit on the deals. Investigators noted Secord has decided to dig in his heels on release of Swiss bank records rather than cooperate, as he had told the committees he would. Secord's business partner, Albert Hakim, was scheduled to testify when hearings resume Wednesday.

— Lawrence E. Walsh, the independent counsel investigating the Iran-Contra affair, has subpoenaed David Kimche, the former director of Israel's foreign ministry, to testify about his role in the affair, an Israeli official said Thursday. Asher Naim, Israeli embassy information director, accused Walsh of "going off on hs own and violating agreements reached between Israel and the United States." Kimche is visiting New York and would not have risked a visit to the United States if he had not felt safe from subpoena, said an Israeli offcal who asked not to be identified. Israeli officials are negotiating with Walsh over the summons, said an embassy official.

— As the committees ended their third week of televised joint hearings, questioning from panel members increasingly became divided into queries aimed at uncovering facts from witnesses and those asked by conservative Republicans that seemed focused more at highlighting communist activities in Central America and justifying the administration's policies in the region.

The three Contra donors testified that they would not have made their contributions without assurances that the Reagan administration wanted them to give. Coors said he approached then-CIA Director William J. Casey, who told him, "Ollie North's the guy to see." Garwood and O'Boyle were introduced to North by Channell.

"Colonel North's involvement seemed to me a guarantee that this was the executive branch of the government asking for help," said Mrs. Garwood, who gave more than $2 million through Channell's organizations.

Mrs. Garwood said she attended a White House session in January 1986 at which North and Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams made presentations, and Reagan thanked the contributors present for their support of the Contras.

No money solicitations were made then, she added.

O'Boyle said North even told him during a private meeting of a "secret" U.S. plan to use the Navy to blockade Nicaraguan ports and overthrow the leftist Sandinista government. Rudman later said the story was merely a gimmick to raise money.

O'Boyle also testified that Channell told him Reagan would meet with him for a 15-minute, "off-the-record" session if he raised $300,000 for the cause. North was present when the assertion was made and did not take exception with it.

Mrs. Garwood said she became angry later when she heard Channell was taking 35 percent of donations to cover his organization's overhead, and Coors and O'Boyle said they were surprised to hear Secord was claiming ownership of the light aircraft they thought they had donated to the rebels.

Another witness annoyed by Secord's activities was retired Army Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub, who said he was trying strenuously to raise money for the Contras when Secord apparently was sitting on $8 million in profits and donations intended for the rebels.

"I must say that was a source of great irritation to me," said Singlaub.

A neighboring business owner used the sandbags to keep out the water, and when the bags had served their purpose, he gave them to Loftis.

A new drainage canal eventually will direct the water to a more fortunate resting place, Loftis said, but the politics of dedicating the necessary right of way have taken time.

Other features of the fort complex also have a scrounged look.

"Everything about this place is decayed — you think 'God, I don't want to eat in that place,'" he said, surveying the false-front western town that includes a jail and stagecoach office, the screened in porch he built in front of the restaurant and the haybale lined area for dancing.

But those who venture into the restaurant are well rewarded, according to the comments of several Thursday lunch customers.

"The food is excellent and the decor is interesting," said John Brown, 48, who works at Marathon Oil Co. and says he comes to the fort for lunch two or three times a month.

Danny Smith, 37, eats at the fort "every chance I get," he said. "It's just good — real good — good old country barbecue. And the desserts are super."

Loftis' wife, Rene, is responsible for that area of the menu, garnering her expertise from her native Germany. "Everything is fresh whipped up," Loftis said of his wife's work — coconut cream pies, chocolate cakes, strawberry tortes, and so on. "Having experience in Europe with those kinds of pastries means a lot."

Of the barbecue itself, Loftis — a consistent barbecue cookoff winner — is reluctant to give away too many trade secrets.

He started learning the secrets of good barbecue at a young age, when he rode with the XIT Ranch rodeo in Earth.

Oldtimers at the rodeo would cook their brisket buried in the ground over a bed of coals, he said.

"From that I learned that if you take that meat and keep it at an even temperature you can tenderize it and make it real flavorful.

"I've got guys come here that don't have any teeth that love it," he said.

For all the tastiness of the Loftis' food, the restaurant is "no get-rich-quick proposition," he contends.

He's just trying to make ends meet and pay off loans that remain outstanding.

But his point of view takes in the city's entire economic situation. "If I could just make a little money and pay off my obligations, then those people could pay off their obligations and so on down the line," he said.

SHIP

On Thursday, the Senate voted overwhelmingly to require the administration to inform Congres before committing U.S. forces any more deeply in the gulf.

"Our aim is to prevent, not to provoke, wider conflict; to save the many lives that further conflict would cost us," Reagan said.

"The men of the USS Stark stood guard in the night," the president declared.

"And these fallen — whom we knew and loved but rarely thought of as great men or legends — can we now truly say they were heroes?" he asked.

Answering his own question, Reagan said, "They were great. And those that died did embody the best of us: they were ordinary men who did extraordinary things. Yes, they were heroes."

Reagan called the Persian Gulf "a crossroads for three continents and the starting place for the oil that is the lifeblood of much of the world economy."

"Even more important, this is a region critical to avoiding larger conflict in the tinderbox that is the Middle East; and our role there is essential to building the conditions for peace in that troubled, dangerous part of the world," he said.

This objective has guided the United States in seeking a negotiated end to the 6½-year-old war between Iran and Iraq, he said.

"Peace is at stake here; and so too is our own nation's security, and our freedom," the president said.

"The fallen sailors of the USS Stark understood their obligations — they knew the importance of their job," the he said.

"So, too, I believe that most Americans today know the price of freedom in this uneasy world," he added. "They know that to retreat or withdraw would only repeat the improvident mistakes of the past and hand final victory to those who seek war, who make war."

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger and Navy Secretary James Webb were joining the Reagans at the service. The White House said the president and first lady Nancy Reagan would meet after the service with relatives of the sailors who lost their lives.

Reagan overruled a Navy decision to pay transportation costs to the memorial service only for widows, and ordered the government to pay travel costs for all immediate family members.

The Senate, by voice vote, gave final congressional approval Thursday to a resolution making May 25 a day of remembrance for sailors killed on the Stark.

Another measure passed Thursday by the Senate on a 91-5 vote called on the president to inform Congress of the threat to U.S. ships in the gulf. The measure by Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., also asks for a report including the rules under which U.S. vessels can defend themselves and the role of European allies in defending sea lanes.

Byrd told the Senate, "Our country is again faced with a question of credibility, effectiveness and forethought in the Middle East. I believe that it is appropriate to ask the administration to provide the Congress with a full report ... before we implement any agreement with the Kuwait government for protection of oil tankers in that very hostile environment."

In other developments:

— Iraq sent the United States a note Thursday agreeing in principle to pay damages for the attack, but mentioning no specific figure, The Washington Post reported in today's editions.

— Iraqi defense officials have told U.S. officials that the Iraqi plane fired two French-made Exocet missiles at the frigate, Pentagon officials said.

— Richard W. Murphy, assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern affairs, said at a news conference Thursday that attacks by Iran on American naval forces in the gulf would open "a new dimension" to its war with Iraq.

But Murphy said he did not think Iran would attack U.S. ships or Kuwaiti oil tankers carrying American flags for protection. He said Iran has not won its war with Iraq and "would be reluctant to initiate actions that could provoke a second" conflict.

So far this year, Iran has attacked 20 ships in the gulf. At least 16 were linked to Kuwait.

— Murphy said American investigators from the Pentagon and State Department were to leave shortly for Baghdad for a joint investigation with Iraq.

"There is no doubt in my mind it was an accident," the State Department official said. "The Iraqis did not intend that attack."

— A team of U.S. Navy investigators in the Persian Gulf headed by Rear Adm. Grant Sharp began their probe of the attack Thursday, but they were silent about early findings and what they were looking for.

— Murphy said the United States has appealed to the Soviet Union to restrain Eastern European countries and North Korea from supplying arms to Iran. "We pursue the effort with our side," he said. "We urge them to do the same on their side."

Tim Hilbert, office manager for Clajon Gas Co., said the repeal would also be beneficial to transmission companies. "When more natural gas markets are opened up, and more gas is bought, it is good for natural gas transmission companies."

George H. Lawrence, president of the American Gas Association, said the industry could not move into a new era of energy planning marked by new gas marketing oppotunities, increased natural gas demand, strong supply, competitive pricing and continued development of new high technology in gas processing.

"The time was right for the repeal," said Lawrence, "because it had become apparent that demand, not supply, was the problem facing the natural gas industry."

RABIES

The other four family members and the family's babysitter will undergo the vaccinations because they may have been exposed to the cat, Willis explained.

Normally, the rabies virus is passed to humans through a bite, but the virus is contained in the saliva of the animal, Willis explained. If the saliva comes in contact with an open wound, the disease could be transferred, he said.

If there is no broken skin, an animal could not pass the deadly disease just through licking a human.

The rabies vaccination used in the United States consists of five shots injected intra-muscularly, Willis said.

Rabies vaccinations — as many as 24 at a time — consisting of the "old duck embryo solution" and given in the stomach are not used anymore, the director added.

The shots spur the body's natural immune system to create antibodies to the slow-moving rabies virus.

Willis said the rabid cat had no connection to a rabid skunk found in northwest Midland last week.

No cases of human exposure from the skunk were reported to Animal Control, Willis added.

The director stressed the need for pet owners to vaccinate their animals and keep them contained.

Cats more frequently acquire rabies as they are more of a wandering animal, much like the skunk, Willis said.

Air Force jet crashes

FORT WORTH (AP) — An Air Force F-4 jet crashed into a lake this morning, and a crew member ejected, a spokesman at Carswell Air Force Base said.

Airman Tamara Miller said she did not know how many people were aboard the plane when it crashed into Lake Worth.

The plane went down about 10:10 a.m. near the General Dynamics plant while on a training mission, Ms. Miller said.

The weather at the time was clear and the cause of the crash was not immediately known, she said.

The F-4 was from the 301st tactical fighter wing at Carswell, Ms. Miller said.

Correction

An article in Thursday's Reporter-Telegram mistakenly said that a local charity organization, Christmas in April, will take over administration of a city housing rehabilitation program.

Christmas in April will not take over the program, organization head Bobby Trimble said today.

However, Trimble — as an individual — currently is negotiating with city administration to take over the reins of the municipal program, which operates in part with federal funding, he said.

Trimble is concerned that potential Christmas in April donors may have been confused by the article, resulting in a lessening of donations to the charity organization.

He emphasized that Christmas in April will continue to operate without the benefit of federal funding.

American Airlines pilot Verne Jobst, surrounded by women in vintage dresses, salutes the crowd after landing a replica of Charles Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis at Paris' Le Bourget airport.

Replica repeats Lindbergh's flight to Paris 60 years later

PARIS (AP) — A replica of the Spirit of St. Louis made a brief flight Thursday night over Le Bourget airfield before touching down, 60 years to the day after Charles Lindbergh ended the first solo, non-stop Atlantic crossing there.

Pilot Verne Jobst made two passes overhead, wiggling the wings in a tribute to Lindbergh and to two French flyers who died attempting Atlantic crossings.

The Concorde, a modern supersonic plane en route to Charles de Gaulle Airport nearby, flew low over Le Bourget in salute just before Jobst landed.

Jobst made just a brief spin in the replica, built 10 years ago to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Lindbergh's flight.

"That silver lady flies just fine," he said.

The small silver plane taxied around to the front of the Air and Space Museum, where a sculpture of Lindbergh had just been unveiled by the aviator's granddaughter, Wendy Lindbergh, 30.

On May 21, 1927, thousands of people packed Le Bourget, some waiting up to seven hours to give Lindbergh a wild welcome after his 33½-hour, 3,600-mile flight.

"It was high drama," The New York Times said. "Big arc lights on all sides with enormous electric glares were flooding the landing field. From time to time rockets rose and burst in varied lights over the field."

About 200 American aviation buffs crossed the Atlantic to be in Paris for the anniversary flight.

"It's a very special time for all of us," said Jim Newton of Fort Myers, Fla., who was a friend of Lindbergh's for nearly 40 years. Newton is on the board of directors of the Minneapolis-based Lindbergh Fund, which organized a week of activities in Paris to celebrate the anniversary.

Henri Ziegler, 80, who was a 20-year-old student pilot the night Lindbergh landed at Le Bourget, said the anniversary celebrations brought back memories.

"I remember the crush of the crowd, how we all rushed like hell for the plane," he said. "It was a great moment. I already knew that I would become an aviator, but to be there, to see this happen, made me very happy with the life I had chosen."

Ziegler, who went on to become a test pilot for the Concorde and other aircraft, was given a Lindbergh Fund award this week for his contributions to aviation.

When Lindberg himself landed at Le Bourget, his first worry was that the crowd would crush his plane. His second worry, he recounted in his book, "The Spirit of St. Louis," was that he spoke no French.

He called for mechanics, he wrote, but added, "I couldn't understand a single word that came back in answer from a half-dozen different mouths. 'Does anyone here speak English?' I shouted. The noise and excitement made a reply impossible."

Pilot Jobst, who is a Chicago-based captain for United Air Lines, said he's usually calm at the controls, but flying the Spirit of St. Louis replica "just makes my heart race."

The original Spirit of St. Louis is on display at the National Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.

The $100,000 replica, with modern features like hydraulic brakes, is owned by the Experimental Aircraft Association of Oshkosh, Wis.

WORLD

An armed guard patrols a civic center rooftop in Suva, Fiji, Thursday as a council of chiefs meets inside. The group gathered to discuss the latest development in the week-old military coup.

AP Laserphoto

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — Fiji's top chiefs today endorsed a military coup that toppled the elected government but, in a compromise, declared that the governor general would run the country until elections later this year.

Coup leader Lt. Col. Sitiveni Rabuka announced that the Great Council of Chiefs, concluding three days of meetings, decreed that a committee would assist Governor General Ratu Sir Penaia Ganilau in ruling the country.

Ganilau is the appointed representative of Queen Elizabeth II, the formal head of state of this former British colony. After Rabuka and other army personnel stormed Parliament May 14 and took the prime minister and his ethnic Indian-dominated Cabinet hostage, Ganilau refused to swear in the coup leader's Cabinet.

The governor general has contended that he, not Rabuka, has the right to rule in the absence of the elected government.

But it appeared today that Rabuka remained firmly in control behind the scenes. The 38-year-old lieutenant colonel, the army's third in command before the coup, was designated head of the 2,000-man army and the police, and chairman of a committee to rewrite the constitution to guarantee political power for ethnic Fijians.

Rabuka said he carried out his coup to prevent ethnic warfare between native Fijians, who make up 47 percent of Fiji's 715,000 people, and Indians, who make up 49 percent.

Since independence in 1970, the government has been in the hands of native Fijians, while commerce has been controlled by the descendents of Indian laborers brought here by the British. After his election last month Bavadra named Fiji's first Indian-dominated Cabinet.

Rabuka, in a speech today from the balcony of the downtown government buildings, said a 10-man committee would assist Ganilau and an eight-man group would review the constitution.

In a broadcast later today, Ganilau announced he would swear in a 19-member Council of Ministers to administer the country until elections can be held in about six months' time. A nine-member committee drawn from the council would rewrite the constitution to guarantee political control to the ethnic Fijians, he said.

In the radio address, Ganilau imposed a state of emergency lasting until the elections.

Earlier today, Ganilau dissolved the month-old Parliament and declared all ministerial positions vacant. By doing so, he seemed to seal the overthrow of Prime Minister Timoci Bavadra, who was freed from house arrest Tuesday.

The Coucil of Chiefs' decision appeared to end a week of wrangling between Ganilau and Rabuka. The Council of Chiefs includds more than 60 elected and appointed leaders who wield considerable power and have a formal consultative role in government.

There are no Indians on the new constitutional committee and only three named to the Council of Ministers.

Bavadra and his Deputy Prime Minister Harish Sharma were appointed to the Council of Ministers, but they have refused to join because they are only representatives of their administration in the new government.

Group labels American, Indian hostages 'spies'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A group that seized three Americans and an Indian from a Lebanese college in January has denounced the hostages as spies and threatened to "bring the four to reckoning."

A statement from the group calling itself Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine was delivered to the Beirut newspaper An Nahar on Thursday.

It said: "We declare the current investigation with the four American spies reveals serious information about involvement of high-ranking political, educational and diplomatic figures in conspiring with the Israeli Mossad secret service and the U.S. intelligence."

The Indian hostage was a resident of the United States.

The two-page statement, handwritten in Arabic, said the kidnappers awaited "the completion of this information and the necessary measures to take the adequate action, to bring the four to reckoning and announce the outcome of the investigation."

It provided no details. The kidnappers included with their statement a photograph of 48-year-old Alann Steen of Boston, whom they had earlier said was dying.

Steen and three others — Jesse Turner, 39, of Boise, Idaho; Robert Polhill, 53, of New York City; and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, an Indian with U.S. resident status — were kidnapped Jan. 24 from the the U.S.-affiliated Beirut University College in Moslem west Beirut, where they were on the faculty.

A senior Israeli military official in Tel Aviv said of the statement: "It is the first time I hear such rubbish." He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The kidnappers have offered to trade the four men for the freedom of 400 Arab prisoners held in Israel, but Israel has refused.

Eight Americans are among 24 foreigners believed held in Lebanon. The hostage held longest is Terry A. Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Thatcher attacks arms stand as socialists gain poll points

LONDON (AP) — With the socialists gaining ground in election polls, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher attacked the opposition parties' nuclear arms policies and said Britain's national security "is now only safe in Conservative hands."

The socialist Labor Party has pledged to scrap Britain's nuclear weapons and send back U.S. cruise missiles if it wins the June 11 general election.

The centrist alliance of the Liberal and Social Democratic parties would retain a British nuclear deterrent but, like Labor, is committed to canceling the U.S.-made Trident nuclear system Mrs. Thatcher has ordered to replace Britain's aging Polaris vessels.

"Labor would abolish our nuclear weapons altogether," Mrs. Thatcher told party supporters during a visit Thursday to her parliamentary constituency in Finchley, north London. "The SDP-Liberals would leave us with a deterrent which would no longer deter.

"The people know where they stand with the Conservative Party," she said. "They know we will not take risks with the defense of our country. The defense of Britain is now safe only in Conservative hands."

Mrs. Thatcher launched her attack as opinion polls showed Labor cutting into the Conservatives' strong lead. Over the last week, the Tories have had a 10-14 percent lead in most polls.

But a Marplan poll in today's Guardian newspaper put the Conservatives at 41 percent, down 2 points, with Labor 8 points behind at 33, up 3, and the alliance dropping 4 points to 21. The poll of 1,517 voters, with a 3 percent margin of error either way, was taken Thursday.

A Harris poll for TV-AM carried out over five days this week and released today put the Conservatives further ahead. It showed the Conservatives favored by 43 percent of the voters, Labor by 36 percent and the alliance by 20 percent.

In both polls, the remainders were divided among several tiny factions.

Last November, despite near record unemployment and a sex scandal that forced the resignation of party chairman Jeffrey Archer, the Conservatives regained the lead in public support for the first time in almost a year.

Commentators said Labor's nonnuclear defense policy, affirmed at its autumn conference, had cost the socialists support. The same policy played a major part in Labor's crushing defeat in the 1983 election.

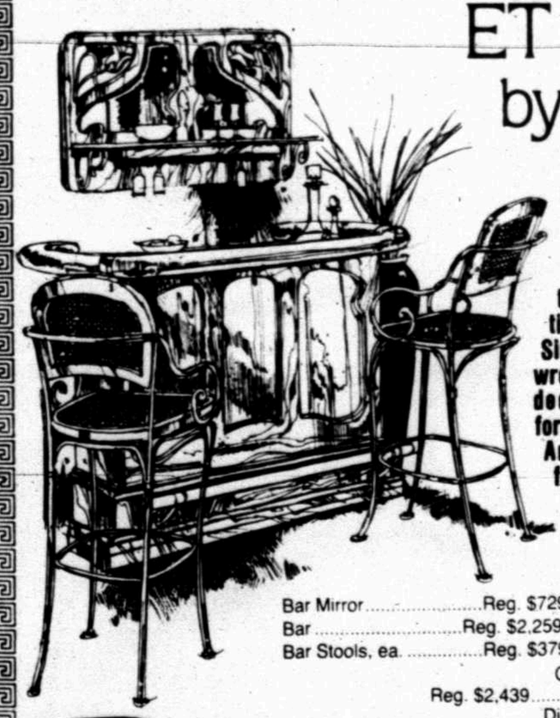

The alliance also paid heavily for a split on nuclear arms. The Liberals voted at their annual convention in October to abandon Britain's deterrent, in conflict with the Social Democrats' platform.

Settlers place memorial sign for 8-year-old

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Jewish settlers entered an Arab village in the occupied West Bank before dawn today and erected a sign in memory of a slain 8-year-old boy, the army command in Tel Aviv said.

The settlers, under the eye of Israeli soldiers, put up the sign, which read "The House of Rami," then left the village of Ajja, said an army spokesman. He commented on condition of anonymity in keeping with military regulations.

The body of Rami Chaba of the Elon Moreh settlement was found Thursday in a small cave on a rocky hillside near the settlement. His head had been crushed.

The putting up of the sign was the only action taken by the settlers in Ajja, a village of 1,300 Palestinians 45 miles north of Jerusalem.

Israel Radio quoted Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir as saying Israel should increase its civilian settlements in the territories it captured in the 1967 Middle East war to prevent more terrorist acts.

Some 64,000 Jewish settlers now live in the West Bank and Gaza Strip along with 1.4 million Palestinians.

Israeli media reported today that Israeli troops had carried out house-to-house searches in three Palestinian villages near Elon Moreh, questioned all the men and made some arrests Thursday.

The army spokesman refused to comment on the report but said the curfew imposed on the villages was still in force.

Two injured in robbery

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — A man who tried to rob a jewelry store in downtown Hamburg shot and wounded two people before he was overpowered by a police officer, police said today.

The man, who was not identified, entered the store Thursday evening and demanded jewelry from a sales clerk. The clerk apparently tried to stall and the robber knocked him down with a blow to the head.

The robber then tried to flee and an employee of the store gave chase. The man pulled out a gun and fired two shots at the employee, wounding him in the stomach, police said.

Two plainclothes police officers chased the robber and caught up with the man not far from the store.

The middle-aged man then pointed the gun at his head, threatened to shoot himself and demanded a priest.

Police called for a priest, but the man suddenly turned his gun and shot one of the officers in the stomach from close range. The other officer then pounced on the man and overpowered him.

Police said the two injured men remained in serious condition but their wounds were not life-threatening.

15 held in Swaziland

MBABANE, Swaziland (AP) — Police have arrested 15 people, including members of Swaziland's royal family and three Cabinet ministers, on charges of sedition and treason, the country's major newspaper reported today.

The 15 are believed to be supporters of Prince Mfanazibili Dlamini, who effectively ruled the kingdom before 19-year-old King Mswati III assumed the throne in April 1986.

The Times of Swaziland said those being held include Energy Minister Mhambi Mnisi, Defense Minister Fonono Dube and Prince Phiwokwakhe Dlamini, minister of labor and public service. Prince Bhekimpi Dlamini, dismissed as prime minister by the king in October, also is among those reported held.

Dlamini is a common name in Swaziland, and the Dlaminis, members of the populous royal clan, are not closely related. It was not known when the accused would appear in court.

Soldier's remains found

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The remains of a U.S. soldier thought to have died during the Korean War have been recovered in a provincial city, local media reported today.

The remains were found Thursday at Chinju, 175 miles southeast of Seoul while workers were moving graves at a cemetery, according to Yonhap, the South Korean news agency.

Also recovered were personal belongings of the dead American soldier, including an identity tag bearing the name Jack Walker.

City officials in Chinju have informed the U.S. military command in Seoul of the discovery, it said.

Jet lands in Hong Kong

HONG KONG (AP) — A British Royal Air Force VC-10 with 88 passengers and crew onboard made an emergency landing at Hong Kong's Kai Tak International Airport today after it was struck by lightning, authorities said.

A government spokesman said the plane left Hong Kong for Katmandu, Nepal, at 10:57 a.m. local time, but returned after an hour to check for damage after lightning struck the plane.

There were no injuries and the plane was not damaged except for a tire that burst during the emergency landing, according to a spokesman for the British Forces in Hong Kong, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Crowds cheer as wheelchair tour rolls to an end

MISSION, British Columbia (AP) — Thousands of admirers turned out to cheer Rick Hansen as he approached the end of his 26-month around-the-world wheelchair tour to raise funds for spinal cord research.

The 29-year-old from Williams Lake, B.C., who has become a Canadian hero was to roll into Vancouver's Oakridge Mall today at the end of a 25,000-mile journey.

Janette Laberge had an emotional encounter with Hansen at a ceremony Thursday in this sawmill community. Her 5-month-old daughter, Amanda, was born with spina bifida, a spinal defect that will leave her paralyzed below the waist for the rest of her life.

Mrs. Laberge, cradling her tiny daughter in her arms, presented Hansen with the town's $38,000 contribution to the "Man-in-Motion" fund for spinal cord research.

Fighting back tears and stopping once to compose herself, Laberge told Hansen: "In all honesty, until she was born ... I never really gave much thought to how difficult her life would be and the obstacles that she's going to have to face.

"I am so grateful to you for raising the awareness of society to the needs of disabled people. I want to thank you for providing a more hopeful and brighter future for her and other disabled children."

Hansen, who was disabled in a car accident when he was 15, said it was often difficult to articulate the tour's goals. But he called Laberge's comments a good example of how his journey has affected people. Community programs will have to continue what he started, he said.

"I know Amanda's going to have a better life as a result of your efforts," he told the cheering crowd. Later he held the baby girl in his muscular arms as photographers snapped pictures.

Earlier, a choir of elementary school children sang a song composed for Hansen by a teacher. It drew smiles from Hansen and his crew as children pumped imaginary wheelchair wheels while singing: "There came a man in motion."

"Everywhere we've gone, no matter what country, the children have been so enthusiastic, so full of excitement," said Hansen. "It's really rewarding for all of us to know that we've affected their attitudes in some positive way."

Hansen has raised more than $10 million for spinal cord research, rehabilitation and wheelchair sports. Interest earned on the money will be spent annually at the direction of an advisory group to be named by Hansen.

He left Vancouver in March 1985, wheeled down the U.S. west coast, then east to New Orleans. He flew from there to London and toured Britain, traveling from there to the continent, where he toured several eastern and western European countries.

He flew from Athens to Jordan, toured Bahrain on the Persian Gulf, then flew to New Zealand. He traveled in Australia, then flew to Hong Kong and Beijing and wheeled from the Chinese capital to Shanghai. Following trips around South Korea and Japan, he flew to Miami.

He made his way up the U.S. east coast, then wheeled across Canada.

Thousands of people lined the highways and streets to greet Hansen here.

Cpl. Doug Hardman of the Vancouver city police said Thursday that reserves have been called out to help keep traffic away from major intersections and off portions of the route Hansen will take into the city.

He said police will reserve the curb lane along the entire route for Hansen and his entourage.

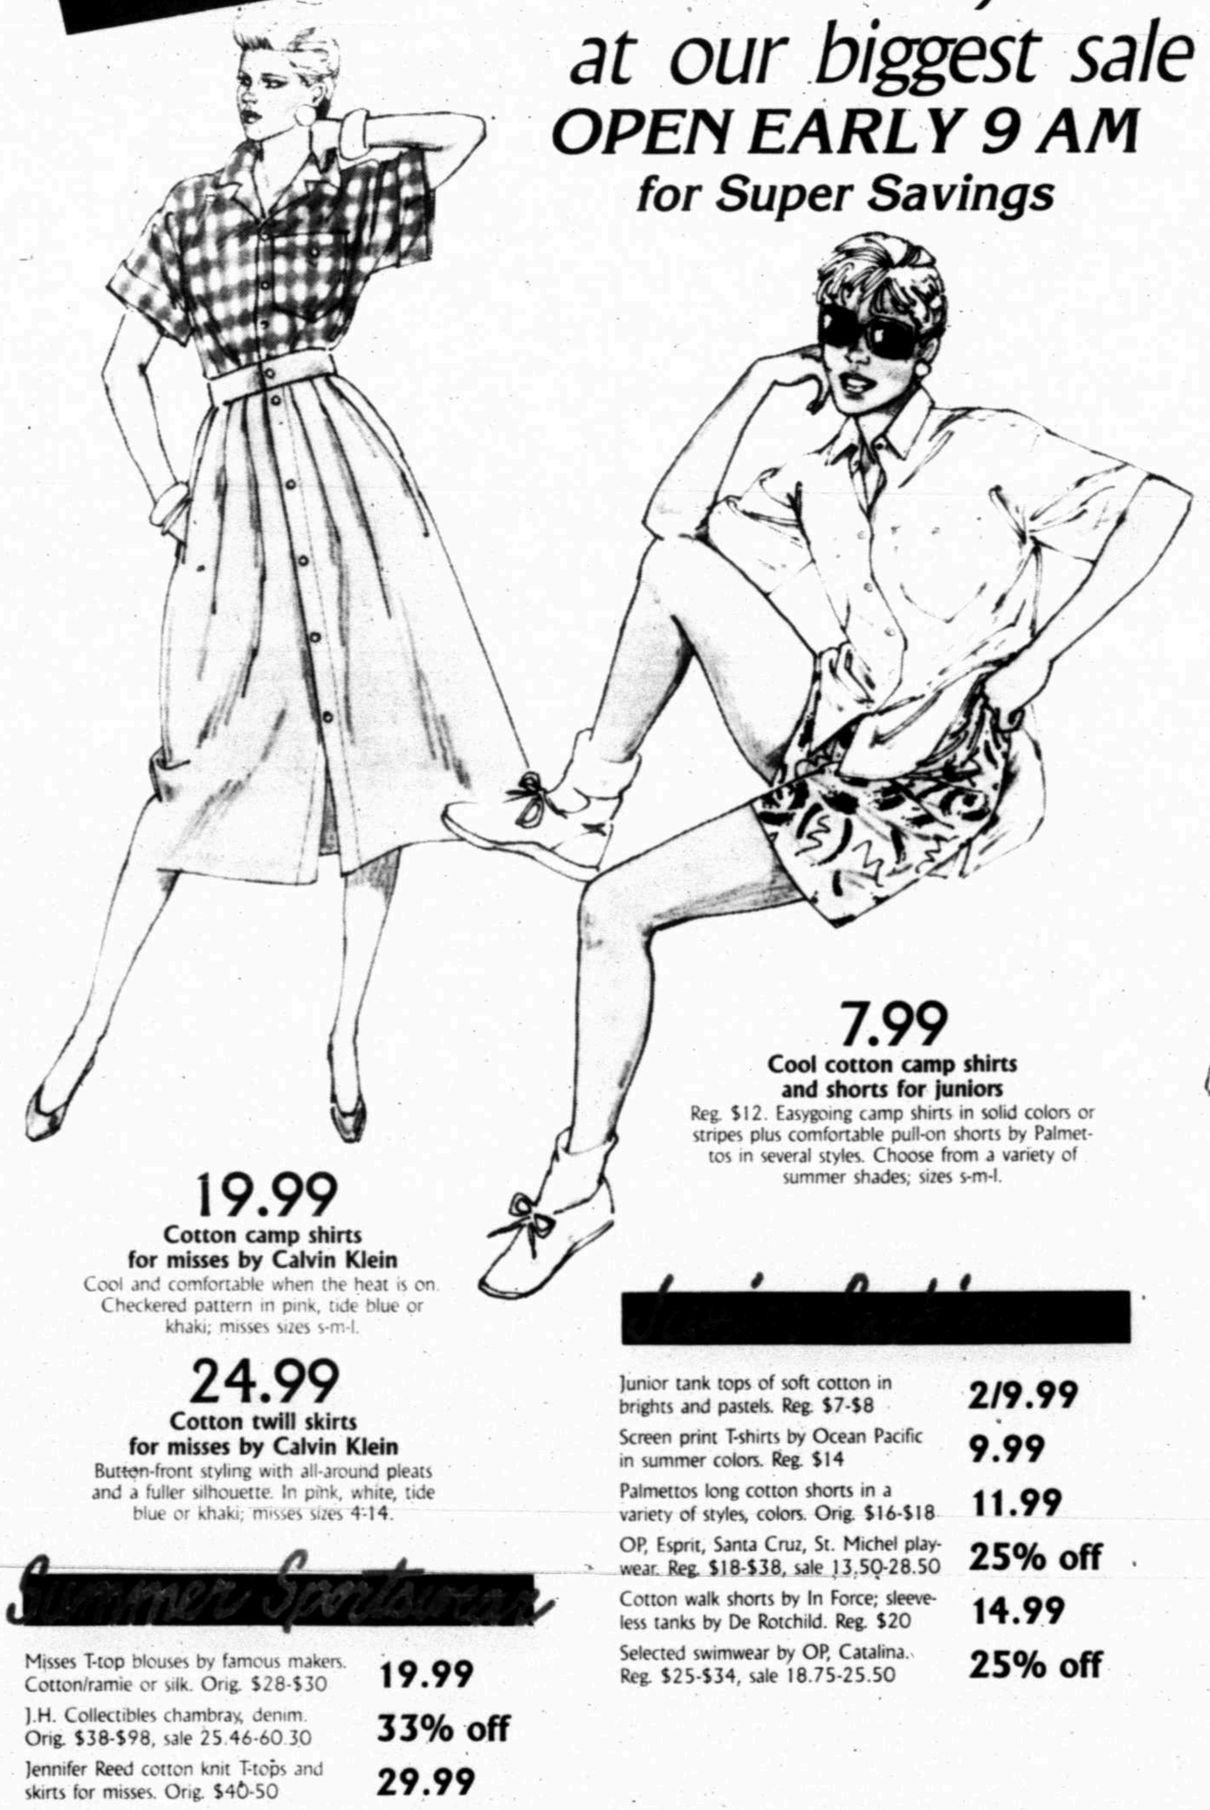

A star-studded musical show is planned Saturday for Hansen at B.C. Place Stadium.

Threat of nuclear attack used to lure Contra contributors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tales of possible Soviet nuclear attacks on the United States and "secret" administration plans for Nicaragua were part of Lt. Col. Oliver L. North's "briefings" for potential contributors to the Contra cause, according to donors.

While North was careful not to make a direct solicitation for funds, he worked in tandem with conservative fund-raiser Carl R. "Spitz" Channell, who even promised meetings with President Reagan if the donations were big enough, contributors told the congressional Iran-Contra hearings Thursday.

Channell generally moved in with the money pitch after North's impassioned description of communist threats in Central America and the Contras' difficulties during the congressional ban on U.S. government aid to them.

Channell has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the government by using his tax-exempt organization for a non-tax-exempt purpose: raising money for Contra weapons. He named North as a fellow conspirator.

During Thursday's testimony, members of the House-Senate investigating committees labeled North's briefings for contributors a money-raising gimmick.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said the "secret plan" on Nicaragua that North discussed with $160,000 contributor William O'Boyle was "just a fund-raising technique. These people are really marks," he said of the wealthy donors.

And Sen. Paul Trible, R-Va., said the "grand plan in the mind of Oliver North...proved to be an effective fund-raising ploy."

The three donors who testified — Ellen Garwood of Austin, Texas; beer magnate Joseph Coors of Denver; and O'Boyle, a New York oil exploration executive — said North told them about the Contras' weapons and aircraft needs.

Coors said North gave him the number of a Swiss bank account to which he could wire his $65,000 contribution.

O'Boyle's dealings with North and Channell had a cloak-and-dagger veneer, with North admonishing him to tell no one of the administration's secret Nicaragua plan, and Channell saying there would be no record of O'Boyle's stay at the posh Hay-Adams Hotel near the White House during his trip to Washington.

O'Boyle said he attended a March 1986 briefing at which North showed about 10 potential contributors photographs of a Nicaraguan airport.

"One of the uses for which the airport was intended was to recover the Russian Backfire bombers after they made a nuclear attack on the United States," O'Boyle recalled being told.

Another use "was to fly a certain kind of mission that was currently being flown out of Cuba, up and down the East Coast of the United States," he said.

O'Boyle said the planes had "some kind of large device on the outside of the plane; we don't know what it is, exactly."

Both O'Boyle and Coors said they were persuaded to buy tiny aircraft called Maules for the Contras — at $65,000 each — after North told them of a desperate need for the short-takeoff planes to supply the rebels.

"I was a little bit surprised to see that Bill O'Boyle also bought" two Maules, Coors told the committee, "because I thought I was the first and only one."

Members of House reveal their finances

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Illinois congressman's mystery rugs and a Louisiana lawmaker's mastery of the poker chips put spice into the House of Representative's annual show-and-tell of personal finances.

The financial disclosures of all but about two dozen of the 438 House members and non-voting delegates revealed Thursday the broad contours of their outside income and holdings, but some turned up interesting details as well.

The mystery rugs belong to Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., a member of the House committee investigating the Iran-Contra scandal. He secured permission to keep secret which foreign government gave the rugs to him, saying disclosure might adversely affect relations between the United States and that country. The rugs are displayed in Hyde's office.

If the constituents of Rep. Buddy Roemer, D-La., had any doubts about his favorite pastime, they know now. Roemer grossed more than $15,000 at what he listed as his "hobby — poker playing."

But after losses, Roemer's net winnings reportedly came to around $8,700. He is running for governor of Louisiana this year against the Cajun State's best known gambler, Gov. Edwin Edwards.

The reports demonstrated once again just how lucrative a sidelight speech-making can be for lawmakers.

The undisputed king of the lectern is House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., who commanded $177,500 in honoraria. Rep. William Gray III, D-Pa., the Budget Committee chairman, pulled in $111,950 for 75 speeches.

Both men, like the rest of their colleagues, had to give everything over $22,530 to charity.

If talk wasn't cheap, the written word generally was.

Several lawmakers reported being paid $100, $150 or $250 for op-ed pieces in leading newspapers. Rep. David Bonior, D-Minn., didn't fare much better in the book business. He earned $235 in royalties for a book on the plight of Vietnam veterans.

When the Senate disclosed its finances Tuesday, about one in every four senators appeared to belong to the millionaire class. The House's batting average of wealth was not so high, but it also has its share of politicians who don't have to live from paycheck to paycheck.

Freshman Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., earned more than a quarter-million dollars last year, much of it flowing from his partnership in Chicago's huge Merchandise Mart, the cornerstone of the Kennedy family fortune. He reported assets of more than $2.5 million.

Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y., is worth anywhere from $6 million to $12 million or more. Rep. Jimmy Quillen, R-Tenn., is worth at least $3.5 million, and Rep. Norman Sisisky, D-Va., has a fortune of $7 million to $12 million or more from his days as a Pepsi-Cola bottler.

Rep. John R. Miller, R-Wash., took a bath on a $10,000 bond he purchased in Wedtech, the South Bronx, N.Y., defense contractor at the center of a bribery-kickback scandal. Anna Perez, Miller's press secretary, said the congressman bought the bond on the advice of his broker before the scandal erupted last year, and lost $8,500 when he unloaded it recently.

Rep. James V. Hansen, R-Utah, had one $2,000 speaking engagement before the Turkish Americans Association, but he also spoke for $35 at Weber College and for $25 at his alma mater, the University of Utah.

Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., had more than $64,000 in outside income last year, including $10,142 in Social Security benefits. He also earned $150 for an article for The New York Times.

The lawmakers don't have to report home equity or mortgages or car loans.

Rep. Tommy Robinson, D-Ark., a former sheriff, listed assets of no more than $15,000 and liabilities of at least $500,000. Reps. Les Aspin, D-Wis., and Daniel Lungren, R-Calif., showed no assets and no liabilities. Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., reported no assets but as much as $50,000 in liabilities.

Freshman Rep. Fred Grandy, R-Iowa, the former actor, received $392,000 in 1986 for his final days as the purser Gopher on televison's "The Love Boat."

Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif., a millionaire banker and vineyard owner, picked up $250 from The Washington Post for writing an article about wine. Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., sold some hay for $250. Rep. James A. Hayes, D-La., made more than $250,000 from the sale of coins.

Freshman Rep. Tom McMillen, D-Md., made $151,923 in his last four months as a pro basketball player with the Washington Bullets.

Graham's ministry calm amid storm

Disclosures of gold-plated plumbing fixtures, air-conditioned dog houses and crystal chandelier-lit clothes closets in Jim and Tammy Bakker's personal quarters of the PTL complex has put the beleaguered television ministry in the news again.

To his credit evangelist Jerry Falwell, who now heads PTL, said such amenities, along with luxury cars, boats and other odds and ends used by the Bakkers would be put on the auction block. A fitting end, hopefully, to such nonsense.

Although several well-known evangelists have spoken out on the Bakker affair one who has not is the man who has gained more fame during his life as an evangelist than any other — the Rev. Billy Graham. Dr. Graham, in fact, reportedly has turned down more than 100 media requests for interviews since the scandal erupted. Everyone, no doubt, was anxious to know if he was shocked and appalled by the revelations that have come forth.

He probably was saddened if not surprised. As early as 1983 Dr. Graham was warning of the dangers of mixing money and politics with televised religion. Earlier, he had founded the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability (ECFA) to promote annual audits and open disclosure of financial records. Perhaps it is noteworthy that none of the so-called "Television Ministry Top Ten" are members.

While Graham himself has been criticized in the past for being too soft on civil rights issues, too strong on the Vietnam War and too close to Richard Nixon, his ministry has been considered to be above reproach virtually from its founding.

Not only has he set a standard for the stewardship of money that flows into his organization but his name has appeared on the Gallup Poll's "10 most admired men in the world" list 26 times in 27 years. He drives a 1977 Oldsmobile, according to one report, and lives in the large but modest North Carolina mountain home where he has lived for 36 years. One news report put his current salary at $59,500 while another stated it was $69,000. No matter — it obviously is NOT $1.6 million, the sum paid to the Bakkers in 1986.

While Graham's internationally famous crusades and other appearances are not in the limelight these days that doesn't mean the Billy Graham Evangelical Association is dead on the vine. Last year it reported revenue of $66.6 million and it is probably safe to say it came in without the need for pressure tactics, weeping or other theatrics deployed by so many other leaders in the field of evangelism.

Perhaps it provides a little balance to note, particularly in these times, that there still are Christian ministries that are above-board and sincere, and evangelists who have accomplished their purpose without becoming living examples of those weaknesses of mankind which they preach against.

Bank picture rests on uninsured funds

WASHINGTON — The picture most Americans have of a bank panic is the Hollywood version: frantic depositors clutching their passbooks, trying to elbow their way through the crowded bank lobby to the teller's cage to withdraw their money.

Jack Anderson

The reality of the next bank panic will be much less dramatic: empty bank lobbies, with only the quiet hum of computers to reflect the fear and loathing of money managers in Japan and Europe as they desperately transfer funds out of their accounts. The only common thread will be the rumor of disaster that ignites the panic.

Treasury officials given to such dark thoughts speculate that the rumor will be one not directly related to the average American bank customer's field of interest: word that Mexico or Argentina is about to default on its foreign debts, perhaps, or gossip that one of the top 10 U.S. banks is in serious difficulty. But this will be enough to cause foreign money managers to leap to their computer keyboards and whisk their billions out of American banks to safer havens.

Whatever the immediate cause, the result will be catastrophic: Within days — or even hours — America's august banking system could be shattered like a child's piggy bank dropped on the kitchen floor. And the U.S. economy would be shattered along with it.

It's not generally realized that the vast majority of deposits in the biggest U.S. banks are more than $100,000, and thus not insured — or that most of this uninsured money comes from foreign sources. Because they are uninsured, these foreign deposits are the most volatile part of the delicately interconnected U.S. banking system — and the first funds to be withdrawn when a bank shows signs of trouble.

Banks are not required to make public the amount of uninsured foreign deposits they have, but our associate Michael Binstein has obtained a confidential list from federal bank regulators. Here was the level of uninsured foreign deposits held by the nation's 10 biggest banks as of 1985:

Citibank, $53.7 billion; Bank of America, $31.9 billion; Chase Manhattan, $35 billion; Morgan Guaranty, $28.6 billion; Manufacturers Hanover, $21.7 billion; Chemical Bank, $16.2 billion; Bankers Trust, $17.8 billion; Security Pacific, $7 billion; First National Chicago, $14.5 billion; and Continental Illinois, $8.2 billion.

As if American depositors' unwitting dependence on foreign investors weren't bad enough, there is also a serious inequity involved. American depositors are effectively underwriting the safety of the uninsured foreign funds that are most likely to trigger a devastating panic.

That's because the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which by law insures deposits up to $100,000, also stands behind uninsured deposits in the big banks as a practical matter. The reason for this de facto insurance of uninsured deposits is that it's necessary to instill confidence among the mega-depositors and avert a panic. It would cost the FDIC far more to make good on the insured deposits of a big bank than it costs to keep one afloat.

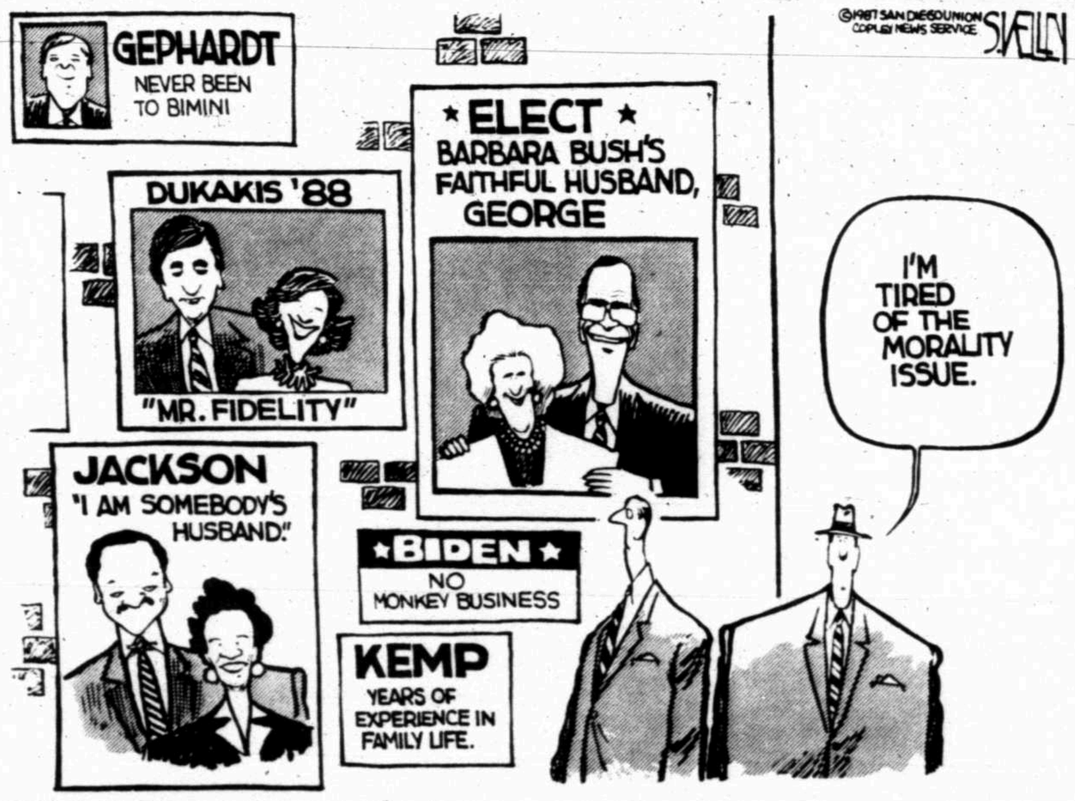

This in turn means that big banks are safer to have your money in than small banks (which the FDIC can afford to let collapse, paying off the insured deposits).

There's a further unfairness: U.S. taxpayers ultimately guarantee the FDIC's insurance payoffs. The big banks that attract the uninsured foreign deposits pay no insurance premiums to the FDIC on these deposits — yet they rely on the full faith and credit of the American taxpayers to keep them in business.

HARD TIMES ALL OVER: If it's any consolation for the many unemployed oil workers in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, their Soviet counterparts are sharing the misery caused in the oil industry by the worldwide glut and the subsequent rollback in prices and production. Our intelligence analysts estimate that the Soviet Union, which depends on oil exports for about 75 percent of its hard currency, loses about $500 million for every $1 drop in the price of oil. The result has been a substantial cutback in production and layoffs of oilfield and refinery workers.

Another View:

Don't cheer mandate

South African President P. W. Botha, in the recent parliamentary election campaign, told the voters that his National Party needed a mandate to permit the government to negotiate a form of political representation for the country's blacks. After the votes were counted, Botha said he had a mandate. Whether the result will be genuine progress in the fight against apartheid is debatable.

Botha has expressed interest in providing some kind of political representation for urban blacks, a number of whom are male workers. He played a leading role in opening the door for political participation by mixed-race citizens. But he opposes the principle of one person, one vote. And he clings to the policy of granting nominal independence to the millions of blacks who live in tribal homeland areas, which has the effect of saying that the blacks in the homelands have no legitimate claim to a participatory role in national politics and government.

Furthermore, conservative politicians to the right of Botha's party gained strength in the elections. Spokesmen for the right-wing Conservative Party said they would use their stronger showing as a basis to push for tougher apartheid enforcement.

"Mandate for reform" or not, it isn't difficult to understand why Bishop Desmond Tutu and other black leaders said they were discouraged by the election results.

While moderate white politicians lost strength in the Parliament, however, the voice of anti-apartheid politicians and business people hasn't been stilled. Referring to Botha's appeal for a mandate, the president of the Cape Chamber of Industries said: "We hope (the government) will proceed down the road of reform at an accelerated pace."

A writer in The Star, South Africa's largest daily newspaper, said: "The real contest for ultimate power begins when the representatives of the whites negotiate with those of the blacks for the future of the country."

But a plurality of the white voters, apparently, were content with Botha's approach. He asked for a mandate, and he received what he said was a mandate. Now Botha says he will pursue "constitutional and gradual" reform. It is now up to him to demonstrate that the expression "constitutional and gradual" isn't just another excuse for intolerable delay.

Today is Friday, May 22, the 142nd day of 1987. There are 223 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Forty years ago, on May 22, 1947, the "Truman Doctrine" was enacted as Congress appropriated military and economic aid for Greece and Turkey.

In 1856, violence broke out in the chamber of the U.S. Senate as Representative Preston S. Brooks of South Carolina used a cane to beat Massachusetts Senator Charles Sumner.

In 1868, the Great Train Robbery took place in Indiana as seven men held up the crew, detached the locomotive, and made off with $96,000 in cash.

In 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt went before Congress to explain his veto of the Patman Bonus Bill to pay World War I veterans the remainder of their 1924 bonuses.

In 1939, Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini signed a "Pact of Steel" committing Germany and Italy to a military alliance.

In 1972, the island nation of Ceylon became the republic of Sri Lanka with the adoption of a new constitution.

In 1984, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that law firms may not discriminate on the basis of sex, race, religion or national origin in promoting young lawyers to the status of partner.

Reagan throws weight behind AIDS testing

WASHINGTON — After the federal government's long arm reached to Concord, N.H., to kill Gov. John Sununu's AIDS testing bill, a vexed President Reagan this week ordered a letter supporting the measure — perhaps settling a long internal debate within the administration.

Sununu last Friday chased home three operatives from the federal government's Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control (CDC) who were lobbying against his proposal to require AIDS tests for marriage license recipients. But a Republican state legislator doomed the plan when he read a letter opposing mandatory testing from Dr. C. Everett Koop, surgeon general of the United States.

After those events were related to Reagan at his Monday issues lunch, he voiced irritation with the CDC and Koop. He then ordered his staff to tell Sununu he supports the concept of marriage license testing.

That suggests the president may pass his own AIDS test, recognizing public danger and political volatility. The question has been whether he would lead his administration and party toward mandatory testing when his most senior aides have seemed lukewarm and the first lady may actually be opposed.

Koop and the Public Health Service have fought mandatory testing as wasting money on "low risks" but preached "safe sex" use of condoms by students. Critics inside the administration wonder whether the medical profession fears testing would show an AIDS epidemic mainly for homosexuals and drug users rather than heterosexuals; that might diminish pressure for massive research appropriations.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Debate remained hidden within the administration until April 30, when Secretary of Education William J. Bennett, the Cabinet's principal breaker of crockery, publicly called for mandatory testing. Koop immediately rebutted him. But Bennett is supported by T. Kenneth Cribb and Gary Bauer, No. 1 and No. 2 domestic aides to Reagan. Getting ahead of the administration for once, Vice President Geroge Bush wants required tests for marriage licenses.

Bauer has made a pest of himself at White House staff meetings by pressing the issue. Chief of staff Howard Baker did not respond. The issue seemed foisted on the presidential AIDS commission, which won't get going for many weeks.

Events in New Hampshire may have changed that. Sununu was outraged when he found federal officials lobbying against his marriage license bill, told them they were doing a mighty "poor job" on AIDS and suggested they cut it out. He got a bigger shock when Republian State Rep. Robert F. Wilson, a retired doctor who opposes mandatory testing, took the floor brandishing a "Dear Robert" letter from the surgeon general.

"While well-intentioned," said Koop, "such laws would spend a lot of money testing a group for AIDS at low risk and finding few cases. Scarce public funds would be better spent providing anonymous voluntary test sites to those who may believe they have been exposed." So, while urging condoms to avert a heterosexual AIDS explosion, he bars tests for the general populace (though health officials have switched and now favor tests for immigrants).

The federal lobbying resulted in a 165 to 136 defeat. When told of this, Reagan ordered his true feelings conveyed to Sununu to help possible legislative reconsideration. Baker then commented he did not see much argument against testing anyway. The chief of staff may be no Reaganite but sincerely wants to follow the president's line.

All this does not constitute a formal policy finding and is not even a public presidential declaration. That could come May 31 at the testimonal for Koop, which is being boycotted by conservatives. Acceptance of the invitation from the event's organizer, Elizabeth Taylor, by her friend Nancy Reagan has led to speculation inside the administration that the first lady favors a soft line on AIDS.

Mrs. Reagan's friend, free-lance speechwriter Landon Parvin, is being retained to write the president's speech for the occasion. Conservatives have feared Gary Bauer's talking points would hit the cutting room floor.

But Reagan's irritation with federal bureaucrats butting into New Hampshire was genuine. The president showed he thinks the epidemic is serious, that it is a health not a civil rights problem and that marriage license testing is well within the American tradition. Ronald Reagan may pass his AIDS test.

Sanctions against South Africa only hurt

I have a great deal of sympathy for South Africans, both black and white, but for different reasons.

White South Africans deserve sympathy not only because they are the target of a character assassination campaign but because they are being judged, by self-righteous American hypocrites, on a moral basis when the problem they are trying to solve is physical.

Charley Reese

Black South Africans deserve sympathy because they are being thrown out of work by American economic sanctions and butchered and burned by black radicals for the crimes of wanting their children to go to school and seeking a peaceful resolution of South Africa's problem.

It's very easy to sit here in the United States and pronounce moral judgment. Apartheid is wrong. There, that's all we have to do — just say the words and feel good about ourselves.

White South Africans, however, have an entirely different problem. After they have decided that apartheid is morally wrong, which the majority have, they then have to find a way to construct a post-apartheid society without being killed and without losing all their property and without setting off a horrendously bloody civil war between the different tribal groups.

That's not easy. That's not something which can be done overnight. The 4 million whites trying to reach some accommodation with 23 million blacks, divided into several different tribal groups and the majority lacking the education to run either a complex government or high-tech industrial economy, don't get encouraged when they look to the north.

To the north the view is almost uniformly one of wrecked economies, black dictatorships, starvation, and brutalization of the people by the ruling elites. One million black Africans have voted with their feet for South Africa, apartheid and all, as an alternative to their own countries.

These people will be among the first to suffer the accumulating effects of economic sanctions as the South Africans will be forced to expel them to provide jobs for native South Africans.

As Americans we ought to be concerned about several points:

How is it that the Communist Party can so successfully set our domestic agenda and in some cases, manipulate our foreign policy? The campaign for sanctions against South Africa began with the communists. As proof, all you have to do is go to any good public library and read the back issues of the American communist newspapers several months prior to the initiation of the demonstrations in front of the South African Embassy in Washington.

Why did this campaign occur at the very moment progressive leaders in the South African Nationalist Party had announced an end to apartheid and begun taking concrete steps toward dismantling it?

Why are so many Americans supporting the communist-controlled African National Congress rather than the democratic moderates the ANC is murdering? The takeover and control of the ANC by the South African Communist Party were well documented in U.S. Senate hearings in March, 1983. That, too, is in the public record and available to anyone with even a slight interest in learning something about the subject.

Why is the American Congress such a collection of hypocrites? How could they vote economic sanctions against South Africa while voting aid for countries whose human rights records are 100 times worse? How could they stomach the hypocrisy of banning South African apples while exempting from the sanctions the importation of all the vital strategic minerals and metals we continue to import from South Africa?

The sanctions, of course, have had precisely the effect opponents predicted. They have caused economic hardship on innocent blacks. They have destroyed any positive influence the United States might have had. They have undercut South African liberals and strengthened South African hardliners.

Congress should add to the endangered species list people in other countries who still have any respect for the United States.

Increased AIDS testing considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is said to be "leaning in favor" of AIDS testing for marriage license applicants and immigrants, although the Senate has rejected the idea by a 2-1 margin.

An emotional debate over the government's response to the deadly disease broke out Thursday on Capitol Hill as the Senate, voting 63 to 32, killed an amendment offered by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to require such tests.

The Senate did approve $30 million to provide about 3,000 people with the AIDS drug AZT, an experimental treatment that now costs patients about $10,000 a year.

Earlier in the day, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters that Reagan has made no policy decisions on the matter, but the president "would probably look favorably" on the idea of testing immigrants and those who wish to marry.

"There is a general leaning in favor of testing under those circumstances...where you already have mandatory tests for contagious diseases and the two most prominent examples are marriage licenses and immigration," the spokesman said.

Fitzwater said the issue of mandatory testing for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is expected to be among the issues discussed by Reagan's Domestic Policy Council as early as next week.

Reagan, who also has authorized a panel to deal with the illness, has branded it America's "public health enemy No. 1," and he is scheduled to appear at an AIDS benefit with actress Elizabeth Taylor on May 31.

On Capitol Hill, Helms offered his amendment to a $9.4 billion spending bill, saying the issue is "whether we're going to talk about controlling AIDS or whether we're going to do something about it."

Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., responded that testing is laced with problems, such as protecting the privacy of those tested. He also said many "positive" test results are wrong, and he cited medical experts who said testing of marriage applicants would be a poor use of scarce resources, since it would be aimed at a low-risk group.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., fought the amendment, saying the Senate was trying to rush ahead without a sensible, thoughtful plan.

"This is really panic. Both of these amendments are panic," Danforth said, punctuating his words by pounding on his desk. "This is no way to decide matters of life and death."

The question of mandatory testing also is the subject of heated argument among administration officials.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop opposes testing, saying it would be expensive and ineffective, driving AIDS victims into hiding or subjecting them to discrimination.

Taking the approach voiced by other conservatives in the administration, Education Secretary William Bennett has advocated tests for marriage applicants, immigrants, hospital patients and prisoners.

Immigrants seeking resident status already have their blood tested for a variety of diseases, and also are required to undergo examination by a doctor.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health, responding to administration statements Thursday, said, "The president is turning to one of the most expensive and least effective means of dealing with AIDS."

"This appears to be a knee-jerk reacton," said Waxman, who is working with Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., on a voluntary testing bill that would draw in the highest-risk people by guaranteeing them confidentiality and barring discrimination against them.

"On the issue of marriage license testing, every public health and medical organization in the nation, even the administration's own Centers for Disease Control and the surgeon general, have recommended against such proposals," he said.

Regarding the testing of immigrants, Waxman said the State Department has warned that it could trigger international repercussions, and he said it would drive people away from the amnesty program for illegal aliens, a program that "is already confusing to people afraid of being deported."

For the most part, Reagan has stayed out of the argument among his advisers.

Fitzwater, asked about reports that Reagan had been critical of Koop and officials of the CDC, said, "We have no problem with the comments of the surgeon general or the CDC in this matter. They have done an outstanding job."

The spokesman noted that while the immigration matter is one of federal jurisdiction, the question of marriage licenses falls to the states. He said White House discussion on that point is "yet to come."

AIDS is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections.

The incurable condition is believed to be caused by a virus, now called human immunodeficiency virus or HIV, discovered in France and the United States. The virus, previously termed HTLV-3 or LAV, is spread through contact with blood, semen and other bodily fluids from infected persons.

The chief victims of AIDS have been homosexual men and intravenous drug users. Health officials estimate that heterosexual contact is responsible for 4 percent of cases and that between 1 million and 1.5 million Americans have been exposed to the virus.

Authorities crack illegal bodybuilding steroid ring

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A federal indictment was unsealed Thursday charging 34 people, including a University of Miami football coach and a former Olympic runner, with smuggling and distributing illegal bodybuilding steroids.

The ring, which authorities said was begun by former Olympian David Jenkins of Oceanside, Calif., was supplied with steroids manufactured at two laboratories in Tijuana, Mexico.

The labs also were named in the 110-count indictment.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Phil Halpern said co-conspirators in the ring claimed to control 70 percent of the U.S. black market for the drugs, used primarily by athletes and bodybuilders to increase muscle bulk.

The use of steroids has been linked to liver cancer, heart disease, hypertension, premature baldness and scarring acne.

They are illegal in the United States, except by prescription, and the Food and Drug Administration has clamped down on the range of prescription steroids available.

"These steroids have been found during this investigation in high schools, colleges and in gyms across the county," Halpern said. "And it's not just professional athletes who are using them."

The manufacture and sale of steroids, chemically derived from the male sex hormone testosterone, is legal in Mexico.

In the months leading up to the indictment, hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of steroids were seized at border checkpoints and from aliens entering the United States illegally, said U.S. Attorney Peter Nunez.

All the steroids were found to be linked to the ring authorities said was headed by Jenkins and Juan Javier Macklis of Tijuana.

Jenkins, 35, is being held without bond in San Diego. Halpern declined to say whether Macklis was in custody.

Macklis, 48, owns United Pharmaceuticals of Baja California and Laboratorios Milano in Tijuana, both legitimate drug manufacturing labs, Nunez said.

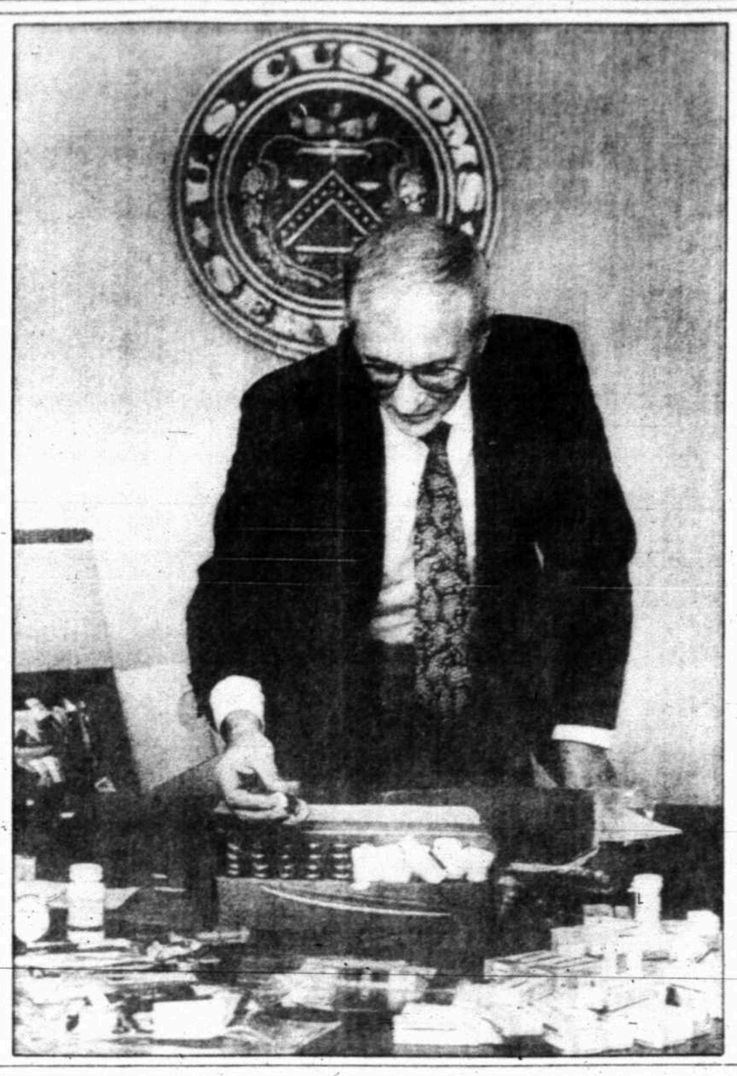

Daniel Duchaine of Benica and William Dillon of San Diego were named in the indictment as wholesale distributors.

In addition to the health risks from taking steroids, Halpern said the counterfeit packaging added danger.

"You have the possibility of contamination with micro-organisms," he said. "You have the possibility these drugs are in some way tainted."

He said the drugs were below FDA standards in potency, and in some cases were found to be a drug other than that shown on the label.

Jenkins, who represented Great Britain, placed seventh in the 400-meter run in the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal and the 1980 Games in Moscow. Halpern said Jenkins was arrested about three weeks ago.

U.S. Customs spokesman patrick O'Brien displays to the press the steriods seized in connection with the arrest of University of Miami assistant strength coach pat Jacobs Thursday in Miami. Jacobs was arrested on charges of trafficking in bodybuilding steriods in a nationwide crackdown on a smuggling ring. The steriods were manufactured for use by veterinarians on animals.

WARNING
(A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)

From Staff and Wire Reports

The weather outlook for the beginning of the Memorial Day weekend is much the same as the weather pattern set over the last week, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service. Saturday's high should be in the middle 80s. Under partly cloudy skies, there is a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms.

Tonight there is a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, a few possibly severe. The low will be in the middle 60s. Winds will be out of the south at 10-15 mph tonight, shifting to the southeast at 10-20 mph on Saturday.

The NWS forecast for the remainder of the holiday weekend calls for highs in the middle-80s, lows in the lower 60s, and a slight chance of afternoon thunderstorms.

Thursday's high of 89 was 16 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1953. Today's low of 65 was 17 degrees above the record low set for this date in 1931.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms, some of them strong, rolled across the Panhandle, rolling plains and the northwest sections of north central Texas today.

A weak cold front extended from Oklahoma to near Childress and further west to near Dalhart in the northwest Panhandle.

Skies were partly to mostly cloudy across the High Plains, with the cloudiness extending east to the northwest sections of north central Texas. Low-level cloudiness caused by moisture from the Gulf of Mexico covered sections of south central Texas, the Rio Grande plain and the coastal plains. The rest of the state had generally fair skies.

Southerly winds prevailed across the greater part of the state. The far west and extreme northeast Panhandle had northerly winds. Wind speeds were in the 5 to 15 mph range. Light and variable winds were over northeast Texas.

Temperatures were in the 50s across the Panhandle and mountains of the southwest. Readings in the 60s were common elsewhere in West Texas. The rest of the state had temperatures in the 70s. Extremes at 4 a.m. ranged from 50 degrees at Marfa in the Davis mountains to 79 degrees at the naval air station in Corpus Christi.

The National Weather Service forecast calls for a chance of thunderstorms over West Texas, the Hill Country, south central, central and north central Texas. Some of the thunderstorms may possibly become severe.

Officials drafting airport master plan

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Defending the integrity of the Midland Regional Airport as it develops is the goal of a draft master plan being fine tuned by a technical committee, officials say.

"You cannot develop anything, whether it's an airport or lemonade stand if you do not have a plan for its orderly development," said Ed Vogler, chairman of the Airport Planning and Development board.

Along with revising the master plan, for the first time the airport has conducted a Land Use Compatibility Study that officials hope will pave the way for zoning land adjacent to the airport not owned by the city.

The land compatibility study measures the noise created by planes, said Aviation Director Victor White.

The study will help deter homes from developing near the airport's high noise levels, White said.

"We're trying to protect homeowners from getting into a situation they will regret.

"We know there are plans on the drawing board to develop areas near the airport," he added.

The study tracks aircraft routes and officials may reroute some paths that cross over Midland, White said.

"We will consider rerouting if there is a way to do it. It is an FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) air traffic control function, but we feel like we need to do what we can to protect the community," he said.

The two plans cost $200,000, of which 90 percent was paid by a FAA grant and $20,000 from airport funds, White said. An updated master plan is required for any airport receiving FAA funds for construction projects.

The 20-year master plan projects the airport growth to jump from 659,201 passengers in 1984 to 1.8 million by 2005.

The study is a "plan of action" reviewing all aspects of the airport and what sequence of improvements need to be done to handle the expected growth, Mayor Carroll Thomas explained.

The study presented three phases, including $12.9 million to be spent over the next four years for improvement.

FAA will finance the majority of the improvements with the city's share expected to be $776,470, according to the study.

However, because of the oil bust, some of the Phase I recommendations have been put on hold.

Airport roof repairs and asbestos removal work are expected to go out for bid next month, but runway extensions and adding two jetways, which connect planes to the terminals, have been put on hold, White said.

White added, however, that the $1 million project to refurbish runway lighting is still on with bids expected to go out in September.

Some officials admit the plan's projections may be a little ambitious in light of the recent economic downturn.

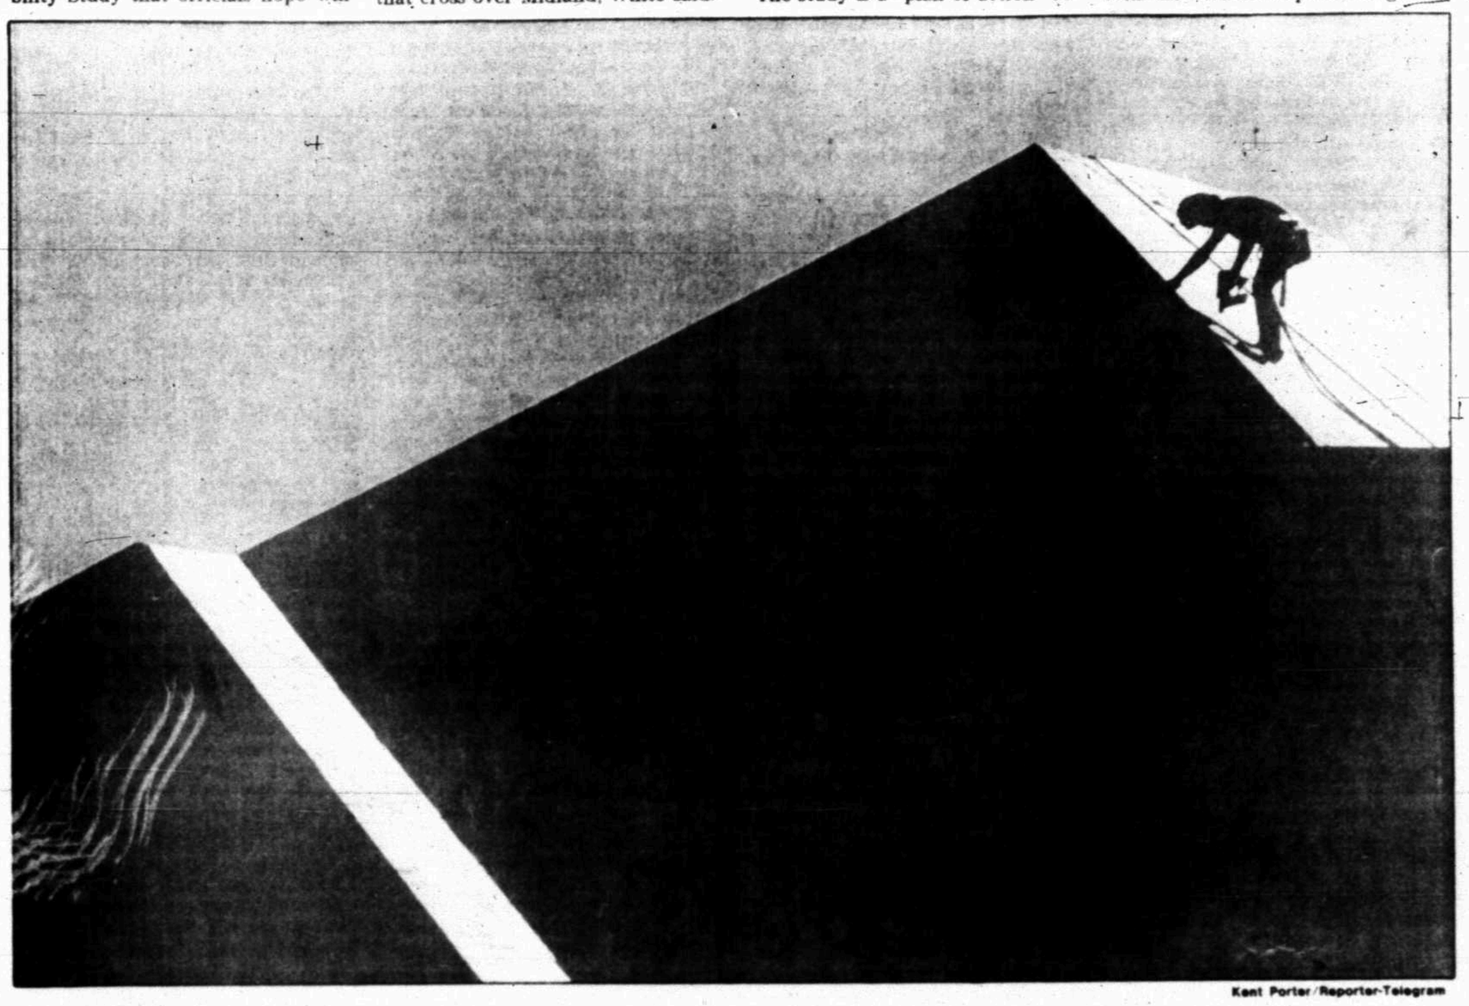

But Thomas said, "It is not set in concrete. We can change the forecast of passengers we have and scale down the plan."

The number of passengers traveling through the airport declined 12 percent last year; however, the first increased occurred last month with a 5 percent jump over last April's figures, White said.

Even with the bust economy the terminal is under built now, he said.

"For four gates to operate 1.3 million passengers is unheard of. It's overburdened and overcrowded at times. We still have to be prepared for when things get better," White said.

A public hearing on the airport Master Plan is expected to be scheduled for late June, White said.

Cisneros unable to address state LULAC convention

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Jose De Lara

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros will not address a women's luncheon Saturday as previously announced by a minority rights organization holding its state convention in Midland this week.

League of United Latin American Citizens delegates instead will hear former New Mexico Governor Toney Anaya, convention chairman and former Midland LULAC President Isabel Jimenez said.

The news was released during a Thursday afternoon press conference called at the start of the organization's four-day annual convention.

A spokeswoman for Cisneros said Thursday that the mayor decided to stay in San Antonio because of problems his wife is experiencing with her pregnancy.

"She has to stay off her feet," Barbie Hernandez, the spokeswoman, said.

Answering questions during the press conference was Jose De Lara, state LULAC president, who revealed that an ongoing investigation into alleged discriminatory practices at an Odessa post office almost is complete.

However, Odessa Postmaster Ronald Praden said Thursday he knew of no investigation.

Q.J. Batson, U.S. Postal Service director of employee and labor relations in El Paso, added the charge that "something is being blown out of proportion."

Batson said he recalled a letter from a LULAC district director informing the postal service of alleged discriminatory practices in Odessa reaching the desk of postal service Regional Director Arnold Elias in Tucson, Ariz.

"Mr. Elias said he would look into it," Batson said, adding, "But I never heard of a full-fledged investigation.

"I would know about any such action," Batson said.

Elias Thursday could not be reached for comment.

LULAC District Five Chairman Willie Serna of San Angelo said during the press conference that the postal service has restored six Hispanic employees to jobs they held before the discrimination allegations were made.

The employees, all 20- to 30-year veterans, had been "pushed out of their positions" and made to work in manual labor jobs, Serna said.

Defense lawyers seek holes in testimony in malpractice trial

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Defense attorneys had started an attempt to find holes in the testimony of the plaintiff's expert witness when a Midland malpractice suit recessed Thursday afternoon in 238th District Judge Vann Culp's court.

Dr. Anne Jerene Robbins, exper. witness for plaintiff James Morgan, had begun her recitation to defense attorney D. Murray Hensley concerning why she thought a dose of morphine and a transfer to a Lubbock nursing home had contributed to the October 1983 death of Morgan's mother, Gertrude Ritter.

The plaintiff claimed in his petition that an overdose of morphine and a subsequent transfer to a Lubbock nursing home — committed, the petition said, by physicians B.K. Khandelwal and Brian D. Mohr respectively — directly contributed to the death Morgan's 72-year-old mother who'd been hospitalized at Midland Memorial Hospital for double knee surgery.

Contrary to Khandelwal's and Mohr's testimony Wednesday and Thursday, Dr. Robbins testified to Morgan's attorney, John Green, that after reading hospital records she "definitely" felt the standard of care administered by the two physicians fell below standard medical care.

She testified that Khandelwal's prescription of four milligrams of morphine on Sept. 26, 1983, had put Mrs. Ritter over the edge of tolerance.

Furthermore, she told the court that Mrs. Ritter's cholesterol-blocked arteries — which hamper an even flow of blood throughout the body — could have prevented prior doses of morphine from metabolizing and being excreted.

That condition, she testified, may have manifested into a dangerous level of morphine in her body and contributed to the adverse reaction — resulting in a cardiac arrest and subsequent coma — Mrs. Ritter suffered when Khandelwal prescribed a smaller dose of morphine to the woman on Sept. 26, 1983.

The severity of the brain damage which resulted from Mrs. Ritter's subsequent cardiac and respiratory failure could have been lessened had it not taken an in-hospital cardiopulmonary resuscitation team 20 minutes to get to her hospital room, Dr. Robbins testified.

During the course of Thursday's testimony, however, the two physicians presented a set of extenuating circumstances, which, they told the court, would show their actions did not contribute to the death of Mrs. Ritter.

Khandelwal testified Thursday Mrs. Ritter was not in good physical condition prior to the surgery and confirmed "she could have been walking down the street and died."

"There is no question she was a seriously ill woman who was going to die at any time," Mohr testified.

Both doctors told the court her condition entering the hospital was not good, citing diabetes, a stroke in the late 70s, arteriosclerosis (blocked arteries), severe arthritis and a history of smoking as contributors to her weakened condition.

Khandelwal testified Wednesday he had prescribed four milligrams of morphine — one-third of the normal dosage she'd been receiving three times daily — at 4 a.m. on Sept. 26, 1983, after a nurse had called him to tell him Mrs. Ritter was in severe pain following her knee joint replacements on that Sept. 14 and 20.

The physician claimed that the 12 milligrams of morphine Mrs. Ritter had received the prior morning at 8 a.m. was sufficiently out of her body by the time he ordered a smaller dosage that next day, and could not have contributed to a morphine overdose.

Aerobatic club air show set for takeoff

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Erdmann

Record

Supersonic jet fighters will thunder into the wild blue yonder.

Agile aerobatic aircraft will fly like hummingbirds and with predictable precision.

The mammoth U.S. Air Force C5-A Galaxy will open its whale belly for aviation fans to behold.

And world-class aerobatic pilots, such as Gene Beggs, Julie Pfile and Patty Wagstaff, along with U.S. Air Force pilots will be performing aerial maneuvers at the third annual International Aerobatic Club's Air Show at Midland Regional Airport on Saturday, June 6.

"It's a merger of the best of both world's — military and civilian pilots," said Paul Erdmann, president of the IAC's Chapter 71, which is sponsoring the air show. "When you see the merger of the top civilian pilots along with the top military pilots, that promises to be a thrilling demonstration," Erdmann said. "It can't be anything else. They study and practice their maneuvers faithfully and precisely."

The event coincides with Armed Forces Appreciation Day as declared by Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas.

Erdmann said the excitement will be enhanced by the airborne narration of aerobatic pilots Ole Olsen of Midland and Kirk Fulton of Lubbock. Both will be flying high-performance biplanes expressly designed for aerobatic competition.

"I THINK we will have a lot of excitement in the narration from the cockpits."

Olsen, a commercial pilot who is president of Petro Jet Aviation in Midland, will be flying the Christen Eagle, and Fulton, a Lubbock banker, will be flying the Pitts S2B.

Performances by the aerobatic pilots will be precision flying and not "stunt" or "daredevil" flying, noted Beggs who, in addition to being an aerobatic pilot, is a Boeing 737 pilot for Southwest Airlines.

"I never refer to aerobatics as stunt flying," Beggs said. He likened stunt flying to movie scenes in which "the Great Waldo Pepper flies through a hangar" or an airplane is crashed into a barn or a haystack.

"Aerobatics is as different from stunt flying as a demolition derby is from the Indy 500. It's a totally different thing."

"Precision aerobatics is a real art form," Beggs said. "It's something that definitely enhances flying safety for a straight-and-level pilot."

THE AIR SHOW will open at 1 p.m. on June 6. Prior to that, gates will open to the public at 8 a.m. Military aircraft will begin arriving at 9 a.m. The United States Air Force Band will play patriotic selections under the wing of the Galaxy, which is the Free World's largest operational transport and is capable of hauling six Greyhound buses.

It is almost as long as a 100-yard football field, and its T-tail rises as high as a six-story building. The aircraft, which is based in Kelly Air Force Base near San Antonio, is powered by four turbofan jet engines, has a maximum takeoff weight of 769,000 pounds.

In 1984 and again in 1986, a C-5A transported nine American aerobatic aircraft to Europe for the World Aerobatic Competition. The aircraft included Gene Beggs' Pitts biplane. Beggs has been on the U.S. World Aerobatic Team since 1984.

Ex-FNB official pleads not guilty to bank fraud

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Joel T. Mays, former executive vice president of the defunct First National Bank of Midland, pleaded "not guilty" today in U.S. Magistrate's Court where he was arraigned under a four-count federal indictment for bank fraud.

The 51-year-old Mays, who was indicted by a federal grand jury on May 14, is charged with making false entries and statements in the bank's 1982 Executive Officers' and Directors' questionnaire, misapplying a $675,000 loan to Bill C. Cotner, doing business as Meadco Properties, and benefiting from that loan, and devising a scheme in November 1982 "to conceal and disguise" his investments and "other business dealings" with his loan customers.

U.S. Magistrate Darrell F. Smith released Mays under his own recognizance and ordered him to stay within the federal-court system's Western District of Texas, which spans the area from Austin, Waco and San Antonio to El Paso. Smith told Mays that his "travel will not be restricted" but that he must let the court know when he plans to leave the district.

Mays acknowledged his constitutional rights, pleaded "not guilty" to the four counts alleged in the indictment, and said little more. He is being represented by Odessa attorney James "Jim" O'Leary.

DPS head not sure higher speed limit will increase fatalities

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Many Texas drivers mistakenly believe that the speed limit on all highways has been raised to 65 mph, the retiring head of the Department of Public Safety said Thursday.

Col. Jim Adams, in Midland for a retirement reception, said the higher speed limit applies only to rural stretches of interstate highways, which account for only three percent of the state's highways.

Adams said he opposes the higher speed, but is not sure it will translate into more fatalities this Memorial Day weekend, the first holiday weekend since the limit took effect.

"I don't think it will have any appreciable effect if the public does not increase their average speed, which is 65 now anyway," Adams said. "Of course you worry that they are now going to push that (gas) pedal down and go 70 or 75."

Adams said since the change May 9, DPS troopers have talked to many drivers during traffic stops who feel the speed limit has been raised on all roads formerly with a 55 mph limit.

He said he is used to questions about the 55 mph speed limit, "especially when I'm in West Texas," and he has always supported the 55 mph speed limit "from a safety standpoint."

Tougher legislation, such as DWI laws, a new law banning drinking and driving, and the seat belt law should offset any negative effect the higher speed limit has, Adams said.

The director, a 28-year veteran of the FBI who was associate director when he left, blasted the Legislature for ignoring the funding needs of DPS, especially its patrol function.

Adams said Texas ranks 44th nationally in the funding for its state police.

"We don't have enough troopers, and we don't have enough narcotics officers," he said. "We have only one trooper for every 130 miles of highway.

"We ask for more resources, yet everyone is aware that we have had a tremendous revenue shortfall."

But, even when the state had a huge budget surplus in the early 1980s, Adams said the Legislature never appropriated enough money.

"There has been a certain amount of opposition in the Legislature to funding traffic safety," he said. "And the Legislature has never liked the 55 mph speed limit."

But when DPS requested funds for criminal functions, such as narcotics operations, "when money was available, we generally got the funding."

One of the areas DPS has been successful during his 7½ years at the agency is in fighting narcotics traffic, Adams said.

"We have done a much more effective job in dealing with the major drug traffickers. But we don't delude ourselves into thinking we are doing anything but dealing with the tip of the iceberg."

At least a third of all cocaine, marijuana, and heroin that comes to this country comes across the border with Mexico, and Adams said "technology and people" are necessary to retard the problem — technology in the form of sophisticated aircraft, and better-trained troopers.

"We have trained our troopers to be more alert on routine traffic stops, and that has helped increase the number of narcotics arrests," he said.

Adams will be replaced as DPS director June 1 by Leo Gossett, who was regional commander in Midland from 1962 to 1967.

After he met with reporters, Adams spoke to several dozen DPS employees.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas read a proclamation in Adams' honor, which referred to the director as an "outstanding leader." Thomas then said the portion of Loop 250 in front of the DPS office would be renamed "James B. Adams Drive" Thursday afternoon.

SHOW

A four-member Eagle's Nest Parachute Team will open the air show at 1 p.m. when skydivers Robert Rhoton of Midland and Saundra Dye, David Dye and Karen Clark, all of Odessa, will skydive over and onto the air field. They will jump at 11,500 feet mean sea level from a Cessna 182 piloted by master rigger Jim Fowler and will be "flying in" in their square air-foil parachutes.

At noon, Brig. Gen. James Record, commander of the Tactical Air Command's 833rd Air Division at Holloman Air Force Base, N.M., will swear in new Air Force recruits.

AIR SHOW events will include:

— Several aerobatic aircraft will make a fly-by at 1:10 p.m.

— Veteran aviator Fred Michna of Midland will fly a circus-like routine in his clipped-wing Piper Cub at 1:35 p.m.

— IAC sportsman champion Pat Day will perform loops, rolls and spins in his Star Duster biplane at 1:50 p.m.

— World-class aerobatic pilot Gene Beggs of Midland-Odessa will fly his four-minute free-style routine, which he performed in the world competition in England in 1986, at 2 p.m.

— Dr. Julie Pfile of Albuquerque, N.M., will execute her four-minute free-style routine at 2:15 p.m.

— Midland Fire Department will demonstrate its new firefighting equipment at 2:25 p.m.

— Patty Wagstaff of Anchorage, Alaska, will fly her four-minute free-style routine at 2:40 p.m.

— A U.S. Air Force McDonnell Douglas F-15 Eagle from the 49th Tactical Fighter Wing at Holloman Air Force Base will perform high-performance maneuvers at 3:20 p.m.

THE EAGLE'S maneuvers are to include climbing rolls, four-point rolls, high-G turns, double Immelman climbing turns, Cuban 8, and wing-walk, gear-down maneuver. The air-superiority fighter, which replaces the F-4 Phantom II, is similar to the U.S. Navy's Grumman American F-14 Tomcat, which was featured in the movie "Top Gun."

Aircraft on display at the air show will include U.S. Navy and U.S. Air Force aircraft, including the General Dynamics F-16 Fighting Falcon, such as the one flown by Midlander Burt E. Ballentine. Ballentine, who is an American Airlines DC-9 Super 80 pilot and a Midland businessman, is a "weekend warrior" who is a member of the Texas Air Guard at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio. He earned the Distinguished Flying Cross in the Vietnam War.

No admission will be charged to the air show. However, donations, which will benefit the U.S. Aerobatic Foundation and the IAC chapter here, may be made. The foundation raises funds to support the United States aerobatic team in world aerobatic competition.

Clements says special session likely

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Blaming Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby for the state budget stalemate, Gov. Bill Clements Thursday said he sees no alternative to a special legislative session after the regular session ends June 1.

With the House working all day on other legislation, scheduled House-Senate negotiations on the budget and House Ways and Means Committee hearings on new tax bills were postponed until today. Clements predicted the House will not pass another tax bill.

Asked if he is resigned to a special session, the governor said: "I'm not resigned, I'm realistic. I certainly don't see any alternative at this point to a special session."

The Senate, where Hobby presides, originally passed a $40 billion budget for the 1988-1989 fiscal cycle, the House came up with a $39.4 billion version, and Clements proposed spending $36.9 billion. In negotiations since, Hobby proposed coming down to the House level, while House Speaker Gib Lewis' latest offer fell an additional $800 million lower.

"The problem is Mr. Hobby," Clements, a Republican, told reporters. "He's immovable."

Democrat Hobby denied the allegation. "I'd like to think I'm moving right along," he said, adding, "not always in the same direction" (as Clements).

House Speaker Gib Lewis, also a Democrat, said he does not believe Hobby is thwarting the process. "I don't think anyone is," he said.

Clements maintained that the Senate budget actually totals $41 billion, because it does not include college tuition income. Hobby said budget writers compensated for that by reducing college appropriations.

BANKER

Assistant U.S. Attorney Stephen Jurecky represented the federal government.

If convicted on each of the four counts, Mays could be sentenced up to 20 years in prison and fined $21,000, the magistrate said today. Each alleged offense carries a maximum five-year prison sentence.

As a result of FBI probes into West Texas banking practices, Mays became the ninth Midland-Odessa ex-banker to be indicted for bank fraud since 1985. Seven were found guilty in jury trials, one pleaded guilty and Mays is the ninth.

Six of the former bankers, who include bank presidents, directors and vice presidents, were sentenced by Bunton from six years to 24 years in prison. The judge is to sentence a father and son at noon on June 9. The father, Kenneth Martin Jumper, the 58-year-old former chief executive officer of the failed National Bank of Odessa, was convicted of a misdemeanor bank-fraud count. His son, Ricky Lan Jumper, 37, former NBO vice president, pleaded guilty to several bank-fraud counts.

The case against Mays was investigated by FBI Special Agent Ed Stroz of Midland.

The grand jurors charged that Mays had a "pattern, practice and method...to procure, purchase and accept working interests, shares of stock, and loans from some customer-borrowers of First National Bank in violation of the (bank's) 'Standards of Conduct.'"

The 93-year-old bank, which was Texas's largest independent bank, failed on Oct. 14, 1983, and was taken over by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The bank's Standards of Conduct in part said that "All directors and staff members will be required to manage their personal and business affairs so as to avoid any conflict between their self-interest and their obligations to the Bank, its customers, and its shareholders."

In addition, the Standards of Conduct said that achievement of the Bank's goals and objectives "is dependent upon complete public trust of confidence in the Directors and staff of the Bank" and prohibited the use of confidential customer information for "personal gain."

Pre-registration ends soon for MC summer session

From Staff Reports

With one day remaining, pre-registration for Midland College's first summer session is running almost 10 percent ahead of last year.

The count Thursday was 820 students pre-registered, compared with 747 at the same time last year.

Tuesday is the last day to pre-register and obtain a time permit for official registration. Those who plan on taking courses during the first summer term should come to the Student Services Office in the Administration Building Tuesday between 7 a.m.-5 p.m.

The college will be closed Monday for Memorial Day.

At Thursday's registration in the Physical Education Building, those who pre-registered will come at assigned times between 2-4 p.m. and 6-9 p.m.

Persons who don't pre-register must come between 7-8 p.m. and they'll be processed as quickly as possible.

"One change is being instituted at this registration, and that is no scholarships will be issued during registration day," said financial aid officer Bill Burns. "Because of the increased number of students who are receiving grants and scholarships, we are requiring they obtain their scholarship permits prior to registration."

Burns will be available in the Student Services Office Tuesday and Wednesday to assist those who will be attending the summer session with financial assistance.

First summer session classes begin Monday, June 1, and conclude July 7. Late registration for the session will be limited to June 1-4.

During the first session, courses are offered in art, biology, business administration, chemistry, computer information systems, criminal justice, dance, economics, English, government, history, journalism-photography, legal assistance, management, mathematics, music, office education, physical education, physics, psychology, reading, real estate, respiratory therapy, sociology, Spanish, and speech communication.

There also will be classes of longer duration in automotive, electronics, and welding. These will conclude July 23.

Three shorter courses in Computer Information Systems also are scheduled. These will meet Monday through Thursday for seven days each from 6-7:50 p.m. The classes are in word processing, spreadsheet, and database.

Both daytime and evening classes are available in many of the courses. Summer session classes meet daily Monday through Thursday.

Information about specific courses is available by calling 685-4518 on Tuesday or Wednesday.

SUIT

Khandelwal told the court in prescribing the opiate, he was simply following a medication course set by Mrs. Ritter's surgeon, Dr. Charles Younger.

The plaintiff's petition also claimed the transfer to the Lubbock nursing home on Oct. 14, 1983, authorized by Mohr, led to Mrs. Ritter's death the next day.

Dr. Robbins testified Thursday she wouldn't have transferred Mrs. Ritter because of her weakened condition.

Mohr testified Thursday he thought the transfer was necessary and said Mrs. Ritter's health problems at that time — an ulcer, heart, renal, brain and respiratory failure, fluid in the lung and a urinary infection — had rendered his future attempts at improving her condition futile.

Of the seven possible diagnoses listed on Mrs. Ritter's discharge slip from MMH, mention was not made of a morphine overdose, Khandelwal testified. "It is not a clear cut case," Khandelwal told the court, adding his best guess was that the ultimate cause of Mrs. Ritter's death was "acute myocardial infarction" or a blockage caused by arteriosclerosis or hardening of the arteries.

Mohr, an internist with a subspecialty in cardiology, testified he got involved in the case following Mrs. Ritter's cardiac arrest on that Sept. 26.

He told the court Khandelwal had called him in to consider her cardiac problems.

The internist testified Morgan approved the transfer and told Mohr to "make the arrangements." "I told him his mother was going to die," at one point not far down the road. But Mohr said Morgan kept thinking his mother would recover.

Mohr testified that Mrs. Ritter, in his opinion, was in serious — not critical condition — upon her exit from the hospital.

Mohr told the court a patient in "critical" condition must have something done immediately to him, while a patient in serious condition has no problems requiring immediate antidotal measures.

A transfer to a nursing home capable of taking care of Mrs. Ritter — known in medical circles as a "level four" facility — was in order, Mohr said.

The closest nursing home facility of that caliber in 1983 was in Lubbock, Mohr testified.

While Mohr testified he has never seen anyone in Mrs. Ritter's condition survive, Robbins told the court there was not sufficient time to be able to make that kind of a judgment.

Robbins, at the end of the day's testimony Thursday, told Hensley, Khandelwal's attorney, based on the hospital and physician records sent to her in New Jersey by Green, she had come to the opinion the two physicians' care was substandard and contributed to Mrs. Ritter's death.

However, Hensley successfully led Dr. Robbins to disclose the fact that wording on some of the records had been illegible and that she had not been able to read absolutely everything about the case.

Furthermore, Hensley brought out the fact that in a letter to Morgan from Dr. Robbins, dated Feb. 1, 1987, the New Jersey physician made no comment about the likelihood of Khandelwal's morphine prescription as a possible cause of death.

That statement was on the heels of her prior testimony to the contrary.

LULAC

LULAC is asking that the Odessa post office draft a memorandum stating its minority rights policies as part of the probe's outcome, De Lara said.

Five of the employees are satisfied with the reinstatement, but the sixth is considering federal court action against the post office, Serna said.

Police look for witness

From Staff Reports

Police are searching for the person that reportedly witnessed an early morning two-vehicle accident that left a Midland woman in very critical condition at Midland Memorial Hospital.

According to reports, Jonell Johnson Abshire, 37, 4410 Lanham, was critically injured about 12:35 a.m. this morning when the vehicle she was driving collided with a vehicle driven by Albert Esparsen, 28, of Gardendale. Esparsen's wife was a passenger in the vehicle.

Police said Esparsen was driving westbound on Andrews Highway, and Ms. Johnson was driving northbound on Loop 250 when they approached the intersection. Reports said Esparsen told police he thought he had a green light, and drove through the intersection.

The Esparsens suffered fractures and lacerations, and were listed in satisfactory condition today at MMH. The nature of Ms. Johnson's injuries were not known, but she was listed in very critical condition, said a spokeswoman at MMH.

Jury rules against church

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 244th District Court jury of 10 men and two women Thursday ruled an Odessa church was equally responsible for the 1984 sexual assault of a then-15-year-old by a former youth minister of the church and awarded the victim $50,000.

However, Judge Joe Connally said he will not hand down an official ruling in the case until he determines if the cash award was meant to be in addition to a $50,000 settlement made by Brad Calley, the former youth minister. The cash settlement was made in exchange for an agreement with the young woman and her mother that criminal charges would not be pressed against him.

The alleged incidents occurred during July and August of 1984 when the girl, who lived in California with her mother, was visiting her father in Odessa.

Attorney Perry Davis, representing The Lutheran Church of the Risen Lord, contended Calley was not acting in his capacity of church youth minister when the incidents occurred and asked Connally to dismiss the case. Connally refused.

Attorney Melissa Hirsch, representing the now-18-year-old woman and her mother, with attorney Michael McLeaisch, contended the youth minister and the church could not be disassociated. She further contended the incidents occurred either on church property or during church-sponsored trips.

'Budget-busting' spending bill may leave some farmers in pinch

AGRICULTURE

By ANDREW MANGAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas is walking a tightrope after ambushing a "budget-busting" spending bill that raises the federal deficit $2.6 billion but also provides money for wheat and dairy programs in Texas.

"It is an old trick around here to try to ransom deserving programs to try to lard a bill with programs that are not deserving. But I don't play blackmail with the taxpayer's money," said Gramm, who co-authored the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

The Senate supplemental appropriations bill, which has the support of the White House, would add $9.4 billion to the 1987 budget, $6.7 billion of which would cover U.S. farm programs. A more expensive version passed in the House.

Gramm said he stalled the bill by invoking a Gramm-Rudman provision, which requires a 60-vote majority to override, because it pushes the country $2.6 billion deeper into the red.

"When I ran for the Senate, I said I would be willing to stand in the way of runaway federal spending, and now, when nobody else will, including the White House, I am going to do it," the freshman Republican said. "This is a perfect example of Gramm-Rudman at work."

Unfortunately for him, many of the farmers who first will feel the pinch from the lack of federal farm money are in his state.

These farmers often deposit their harvest in government silos as collateral for loans to pay off operating expenses. But the federal Commodity Credit Corp. reached the end of its $25 billion credit rope nearly three weeks ago. The money in the supplemental bill would free the CCC's financial logjam.

"Within the next two weeks farmers start harvesting, and when they go to government offices they won't be able to check it in for loan money," said an agricultural aide to Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford, whose district is a major wheat producer.

Farmers in "the blacklands" of Central Texas have already begun their harvest and have avoided the government loan program because the market wheat price is currently higher than the loan rate. But as the harvest rolls north and more wheat becomes available the market is expected to contract.

"We're beginning to get a few phone calls but not that many," said Lester Byrd, a U.S. Agriculture Department official in College Station. "Eventually it will cause some problems because the bankers are depending on the farmers to get those payments to pay off some of their debts. For one individual it could get critical in the next week and others it could be the next month."

Dairymen also are suffering. Those who joined a national buyout program designed to reduce the number of dairy cows in the U.S. market are now being told they cannot collect their payments.

Gramm insists, however, that his action against the bill has nothing to do with the CCC funds but with controlling overspending.

"This issue of a budget waiver has absolutely nothing to do with the farmer," Gramm said on the Senate floor. "The issue is that we have $2.6 billion of add-on spending that there is no offset for, that is not built into the budget baseline, that is a direct addition to the deficit."

The Texas Republican cited $8 million in the bill to fund a weed technology center in North Dakota, $2 million for initial funding of an international trade division center in Iowa and $6 million to subsidize honey production as examples of budget-busting programs.

"You can't have a faint heart and hope to have any success doing anything for the average people," Gramm said. "They don't have the pork barrelers on their side."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., has said he will not reschedule a vote on the supplemental appropriations bill until he is assured of Republican support for its passage.

Gramm said that he and Budget Director James C. Miller III have been negotiating with members of the Senate Appropriations Committee to shear off some of the spending and get the supplemental bill back on track.

Future lawns may need less water, mowing

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hang in there with the lawnmowers and sprinklers, folks, evergreen grass that thrives on desert sand dunes and never needs mowing could be right around the corner.

Well, that's an exaggeration, but agronomist Jack Murray of the Agriculture Department's Agricultural Research Service has grown a few lawns among his 3,000 that need less water and only a third as much mowing as ordinary front yards.

Murray's lawns are small plots, 3 feet to 6 feet on a side, and represent some of the latest developments in turf testing. His work was described in a report by the agency.

One new turf in the final stages of testing is a zoysia grass that will be sold as seed rather than expensive zoysia plugs that homeowners now must buy and plant.

"This zoysia only needs to be mowed one-third as often," Murray said. "Some zoysias like this grow sideways, spreading out to cover the ground, and tolerate drought.

Evergreen grass? Not quite, but Murray is working on lawn seed mixtures of zoysia and fescue grass seeds that would stay green yearround. Today's zoysias are mostly suited for Southern states, with those in the North turning brown during the winter.

According to Murray, the zoysia seed in the mix will keep grass green in the summer. And in many locations, the fescue will keep it green all winter. Final tests are being run on an experimental mix of the two grasses, he said.

At USDA's research center in Beltsville, Md., where Murray works, tests also are being conducted on hundreds of other grasses: tall fescues, fine fescues, perennial ryegrasses, Bermuda grasses and Kentucky bluegrasses.

Murray's work includes the evaluation of new lawn grasses for disease resistance, vigor, smooth and even growth, and tolerance to cold or heat, as well as for rooting power or blade width, which gives the lawn a carpeted appearance.

Commercial seed companies then use the USDA evaluations to name and market new varieties of turfgrasses for homeowners and landscapers.

One of Murray's specialities is turf grass for sports fields, and he says athletic directors will find that the newer sports turf varieties stay locked into the earth and can't be uprooted as easily by players.

"We have stronger, more disease-resistant turfs that keep fields smoother and safer and are less costly to maintain," he said.

Knee and ankle injuries from uneven turf no longer have to be accepted as part of the game in high school and college sports, Murray said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exporters have sold the Soviet Union an additional 150,000 metric tons of U.S. wheat at subsidized prices, according to the Agriculture Department.

The sales, equal to 5.5 million bushels, were handled by two companies: Cargill Inc., who sold 50,000 tons, and Louis Dreyfus Corp., 100,000 tons, Melvin E. Sims, general sales manager for the department's Foreign Agricultural Service, said Tuesday.

Sims said the wheat was part of the 4 million tons for the Soviets announced on April 30 under the Export Enhancement Program. Under the program, exporters receive bonuses paid as surplus commodities held by the department's Commodity Credit Corp. so they can meet prices of foreign competitors.

The average selling price of the wheat, allowing for the bonuses, was $80 per ton or about $2.18 per bushel, delivered to U.S. ocean ports.

Sims said the bonuses awarded the exporters averaged $39.99 per ton or about $1.09 per bushel. In effect, wheat that cost about $3.27 per bushel, or $119.99 per ton, was reduced to $2.18 so the Soviets would buy from the United States.

Pet, livestock owners 'on alert' as first screwworm case is identified

Minzenmayer

The first confirmed screwworm case in the United States since August of 1982 has been identified in Denver, Colo., as a result of commuting flies that apparently traveled back to the U.S. from Venezuela with several hunting dogs.

Worms were collected from a wound in one of the hunting dogs by a veterinarian in Denver on April 7, and the worm sample was sent to a number of laboratories before it was identified by a lab in Ames, Iowa, April 23, as a positive screwworm case.

The dogs had been flown from Colorado to Venezuela for an earlier hunting trip. Upon their return to the U.S. April 4, the owner of the animals took them with him to Albuquerque, N.M., where he spent two days visiting a brother. He then took the dogs with him in a pickup truck to Pagosa Springs, Colo., and thence to Denver, where the veterinarian colected the worm sample.

Treatment over the Albuquerque-Denver areas began immediately after confirmation of the screwworm case, with sterile fly drops being dispatched from Tuxtla Gutierrez, Mexico. In addition, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant health Inspection Service is operating Screwworm Adult Suppression System (SWASS) traps to help in monitoring the situation.

All owners of household pets and livestock should be on the alert for screwworms. When worms are found in animal wounds, representatives samples of worms in a wound should be colected and sent to the Screwworm Laboratory, Box 969, Mission, Texas 78572, for laboratory identification.

When any suspected blowfly larvae is found by a veterinarian, livestock or pet owner, great care should be used in getting a truly representative sample for analysis by the screwworm lab. The sterile fly technique has been highly successful in the past, but extreme vigilance is needed now to make sure there is no screwworm outbreak.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Make the most of a special event and you will increase your chances for lasting success. A personal relationship undergoes changes that should make you happier. TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep your schedule loose this weekend. A phone call could turn everything around. Include people who are upbeat in your plans. This could be an outstanding day for your social life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may be feeling restless. Be sure to look and listen before you leap. Travel could make you even more at loose ends. Get involved with a project that requires intense concentration.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Even if you are difficult, others forgive you. Speculating wildly about a relationship would be a huge mistake. Think about inexpensive ways to improve your appearance and surroundings. The emphasis is on adding color.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A shopping spree could be costly. A sale item is no bargain if you do not really want it. Be practical. Save up and buy something that will make your life easier.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Maintain a low profile today. Someone may be looking for trouble. Settle down with a good book or video. An afternoon nap refreshes you. Tackle those household tasks you have been postponing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Money wrangles are possible. Limit spending to necessities. Leadership matters come under discussion. Others want to take over but you prevail. Romance is mostly happy. You and loved one enjoy a new rapport.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could be resisting a change for the better just because you do not understand someone's thinking. Assume a leadership role. Family members are supportive in a time of need.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not allow petty jealousy to affect your ability to meet your responsibilities. Stay active today. Your social life could get a needed shot in the arm this evening. Enjoy yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You make a decision today that will prove to be an important turning point in your life. This is no time to sit back and let nature take its course. Get going!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Nervous energy could make you feel out of sorts. Someone approaches you with an exciting offer. If it is what you want, do not hesitate to accept. It could prove very profitable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
4 ♡	Dbl	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of ♢

Give some players a seven-card suit and they feel they have carte blanche to preempt. Nothing could be further from the truth. A preemptive opening bid, and that includes a bid of four in a major suit or five in a minor, describes a specific type of hand. Besides the long suit, all or most of the strength must be in that suit, otherwise partner will not know when to defend and when to sacrifice. And if you have defensive strength, you cannot be sure the opponents have a game, or will make it if they bid one.

North-South were playing against a pair of experts, and South thought he could "take advantage of the vulnerability" by opening with a preemptive bid of four hearts on a hand that qualified in all respects for a one-heart opening bid. West doubled for takeout, and East took the opportunity offered to convert to penalties.

The defenders picked declarer clean. West led the king of diamonds and continued with the ten to partner's ace. With no need to do anything dramatic, East simply continued the suit for declarer to ruff. Declarer tried to salvage something from the wreck by leading the ace and queen of trumps, but nothing good happened.

East took the king and shifted to the jack of spades. West captured the king with the ace and tried the queen, and declarer still had to concede a trump trick and two clubs for down four, minus 700. And East-West were still 3-to-1 favorites to win the rubber.

A sensible opening bid of one heart would have avoided the catastrophe. After a takeout double by West and a probable one no trump response by East, a bid of two hearts by South would have been adequate to describe the hand. Left to their own devices, there then would be no guarantee that East-West would reach game!

Texan 'rakes it in' at poker match

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A Houston man drew to a pair of nines on the last card Thursday to beat a fellow Texan and win the $625,000 first prize in the 18th annual World Series of Poker.

Johnny Chan's nines topped a pair of fours for Frank Henderson, who had bet all of his $300,000 in chips in the showdown hand that climaxed the four-day unlimited Hold 'Em event at Binion's Horseshoe Club.

"It feels like a miracle," said Chan, who outlasted 151 other poker professionals for the win. Each player put up $10,000 to enter the competition Monday.

The 29-year-old Chan, part-owner of a Las Vegas restaurant, had more than $1.1 million of the $1.52 million in chips after knocking out the third-place finisher, but Henderson refused to quit.

Henderson, a mechanical engineer, put in all of his chips several times and won hands before losing the deciding hand. He won $250,000 for second place.

In the final hand, Chan held an ace and nine of clubs while Henderson had a pair of fours. The first four common cards turned over did neither player any good, and it was down to the final card.

To win, Chan needed either an ace or a nine on the final card turned over by the dealer. He got the nine.

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — Vanna White drew more people to a department store here than any celebrity since Sophia Loren, but the silent letter-turner from television's "Wheel of Fortune" says she's not sure why.

White

"I have no idea," Miss White said after more than 1,000 people showed up Thursday at a Caldor store in the first stop of her 18-city tour to promote her autobiography, "Vanna Speaks."

Because Miss White does not talk on "Wheel of Fortune" she is "a woman of mystery," her publisher says.

White, 30, said she wrote the book "so people can finally get the truth. I want them to know that I'm a normal person like everyone else."

Miss Loren visited the Caldor store in 1979, said Fred Robson, Caldor spokesman.

NEW YORK (AP) — City Opera director Beverly Sills says that as an opera star she had only to worry about her own talent, while now she worries about the whole company's.

Sills

"The buck stops here," the former diva said in an interview in the June issue of Working Woman. "I don't share blame, I don't share credit and I don't share desserts."

Miss Sills' take-charge attitude was evident when a Labor Day 1985 warehouse fire destroyed nearly all of the company's costumes and scenery. She said she was at her Martha's Vineyard, Mass., vacation home when the call came in.

The next day she flew back to New York and had the costume designer hard at work re-creating outfits to get the company through the 1986 season. Since then she has raised $5 million of the $10 million needed to complete the reconstruction.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Ossie Davis, Labor Secretary William Brock and NBC sportscaster Marv Albert were among eight famous fathers honored as role models at the 52nd annual Father's Day Luncheon.

Also feted Thursday by the National Father's Day Committee were author Tom Clancy, New York Rangers General Manager Phil Esposito, U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, NBC-TV "Today" show newscaster John Palmer and former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb.

"My family — nothing comes before that," said Brock. He and his wife, Sandra Schubert Mitchell Brock, are the parents of six children. "I love them very much. That makes life worth living."

Davis, who with his wife, actress Ruby Dee, has three children and four grandchildren, said kids who drop out of school need to be encouraged by their parents.

"The difference between a winner and loser is motivation," said Davis.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Roy Orbison has been asked to sing an extra song on the last "Saturday Night Live" of the season, which will have actor Dennis Hopper as host, the singer's publicist says.

Orbison, scheduled to appear on the show this weekend, was rehearsing when SNL producer Lorne Michaels walked into the NBC studio in New York, publicist Jeb Baird said Thursday. The producer asked the singer to do three songs instead of the usual two.

"Roy still has that three-octave voice he had when he made all those hits, and it just knocked Michaels out," said Baird.

Orbison originally was scheduled to perform "In Dreams," featured in the movie "Blue Velvet" starring Hopper, and "Pretty Woman," his biggest hit. He added another Orbison classic, "Crying."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Julio Iglesias, who has sold more records than any other vocalist, says his Spanish heritage may have helped make his 56th album his best ever.

"It's a very special album for me, and a very special one for the Spanish-speaking people," the pop singer said in a recent telephone interview from his Miami estate. "I feel as if I have poured all of my ancestral energies into it."

"Un Hombre Solo" ("A Man Alone"), his 17th album in Spanish, was released in Spanish-speaking countries in April and is being distributed elsewhere this month.

Iglesias has sold 115 million records worldwide, more than any other singer, according to the Guinness Book of World Records.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — More than 3,000 tickets to Paul Simon's June 29 concert have been set aside for sale in the black community at the singer's request.

Simon

Simon is touring with two dozen South African black musicians, including Ladysmith Black Mambazo, a 10-member group that performed on Simon's hit album "Graceland."

The singer has ordered that blacks be given a special opportunity to buy tickets to events on his summer tour, including the Milwaukee concert at the new Marcus Ampitheater.

"Simon realized during his concert tour of the states in the last couple months that the audience was always predominantly white, because it was his fans who were going to the shows," Kristine Weaver of Imaginary Entertainment, the Los Angeles company planning the concerts for Simon, said this week.

A total of 3,200 of the 9,000 reserved seats for the Milwaukee concert are available only through the use of a special mail order coupon at the bottom of flyers distributed in the black community.

The flyer describes the concert as "an unforgettable celebration of South African music."

FAMILY MATTERS

Parents of retarded child deal with painful reality

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: I have recently learned my newest grandchild is retarded.

I am uncertain as to what my daughter meant by that as she was very upset when she told me. They don't live in Midland, so I haven't seen the baby for some time.

I tried to be encouraging since doctors can do so much these days. What can I do to help?

I hate to admit it, but I don't know what "retarded" means. What does it mean? MRS. GG

DEAR MRS. GG: Retarded can mean many things, but one thing it does mean is that your grandchild is disabled in some fashion. Many parents who are dealing with the painful reality of a permanently disabled child experience profound feelings of helplessness, fear, guilt, anger and pain.

All of these feelings are normal — they are honest feelings. All parents believe they will give birth to a normal child. So you might begin by helping them deal with the feelings associated with the birth of their disabled child.

Don't be surprised if your daughter and her husband go through a time of what appears to be "self-pity" or mourning. They have a right, and you can be very supporting in that right, to mourn the passing of the perfect child they dreamed of.

Now, they do not and connot know that in time, possible better dreams may take the place of their hurt.

Support your daughter by being a sympathetic and loving listener, even if she blames herself. After all, Americans seem to believe if something is "wrong," someone is to blame.

I recommend reading Leo Buscaglia's book, "The Disabled and Their Parents." He states, and I support, that the real challenge for everyone involved with a special child is to develop that child's innate potential, rather than trying to make the child into society's idea of "normal."

As Pearl S. Buck wrote in her experience with her special daughter: "Be proud of your child, accept him as he is and do not heed the words and stares of those who do not know better. The child has a meaning for you and for all children. You will find a joy you cannot now suspect in fulfilling his life for and with him. Lift up your heart and go your appointed way." God bless, and please let me know how things are going.

DEAR FAMILY: My son and I can't seem to carry on a conversation without getting into an argument. I guess that is normal for a 10-year-old, but I am worried about what it's going to be like when he becomes a teenager. Any suggestions? — WORRIED MOM

DEAR WORRIED MOM: One thing you might consider doing is something different. It is good that you noticed something is not working and a change is in order. All too often we do just what we are taught, we try the same thing, harder and harder.

You might try to change both of your listening styles. In order to listen, we must listen with our eyes, our mind, and our body, as will as with our ears. So the first objective for both of you is to give the other their undivided attention while talking.

When I first started doing this with my children, I was amazed at how often I felt an urge to interrupt them. I had to work hard to hold that urge in so they could talk and I could listen.

If you cannot talk to your child right then, and you obviously cannot always do that, consider asking your child to wait until you have time to listen. I think that this approach conveys the message that what they have to say is important and that we care about their thoughts.

DEAR FAMILY: What difference does it make to my parents who am talking to on the telephone? It is my telephone call, not theirs. ANN

DEAR ANN: I don't know. Maybe you should try asking them at a calm, quiet time, and in a respectful tone (like NOT when they have just asked you).

I have heard parents express that a telephone call is like bringing other kids into their home, and they feel a responsibility to know about anyone who comes into their home.

Others have expressed a concern over the amount of time their teenager spends taking on the telephone, to whom and about what. They are trying to help their teenager develop appropriate social skills.

DEAR ABBY

Teachers' mistakes anger parents

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Appalled in Sacramento" wrote: "My son is in the eighth grade, and I was horrified by the following comment his English instructor wrote on his assignment: 'Is this original? What does this GOT to do with insects taking over?'

"I wrote a note on the back and corrected her blatant grammatical error, but my son refused to give it to her."

Abby, you excused the teacher's use of incorrect grammar, saying, "I think you overreacted. The teacher obviously made a careless mistake."

I do not agree that the mother "overreacted." I have had seven children go through the public school system — my youngest is now in the ninth grade. I've had similar complaints for years. My son recently brought home a list of class rules from one of his teachers. It contained at least a half-dozen misspelled words. I wanted to circle those words and send it back, but my son asked me not to.

I received a better education in a country school in North Dakota with teachers fresh out of high school than my kids have received in big cities with college-educated teachers. Most teachers today leave a lot to be desired. — APPALLED IN TACOMA

DEAR APPALLED: Read on for a view from Amarillo, Texas:

DEAR ABBY: I believe that you and "Appalled in Sacramento" were both off the mark. You should have been outraged by her first comment — "Was this original?"

As a bashful, timid child, I expressed my dreams in stories. When I was in the fifth grade, my teacher, whom I idolized, wrote across a short story I had written, "Where did you copy this?" I was devastated that she would think I might have cheated. It was 40 years before I ever tried to write again.

Abby, teachers who scorn and deride children's creative efforts are bullies. Now, 45 years later, I wrote a sonnet about this experience to alleviate this pain. If you think it merits publication, you have my permission to use it.

UNWRITTEN WORDS IN LIMBO
My writing suffered deep withdrawal pains in one-room schoolhouse on Midwestern plains, when 5th grade teacher scrawled across my page,
"Where did you copy this?" The shocking stains of caustic phrase stunned writer's urge. No rage, for I was quiet gentle child at stage
when fragile dreams were crushed to dust, my pride in stirring plots defiled by worshiped sage.
With wistful dreams of future goal denied,
I turned the pain to fester deep inside and 40 years were lost, creatively, until five years ago; dam opened wide.
At last, the doors to writing welcomed me — a dream restored through gift of poetry.

Hawaii's golf courses among nation's busiest

HONOLULU (AP) — It's 5 a.m. and overnighters at the Ala Wai Golf Course are stirring in their cars.

A key-laden custodian rattles open the clubhouse gate in the predawn chill. The first of 22,000 morning telephone calls finds its way through a computer system to Jean Haraga, assistant manager.

Another day has begun at one of the nation's busiest golf courses.

Nearly 200,000 rounds of golf were played on the 18-hole course last year. The National Golf Association lists the national average for 18-hole courses at 30,000 rounds. More than 16,000 rounds were logged at the Ala Wai during a recent month.

Competition for some 100 daily tee times is fierce. Hawaiian Telephone Co. recently logged 30,000 calls to the city's three 18-hole courses in one frantic hour, 6:30 and 7:30 a.m.

All four city courses saw usage far above national averages last year.

Demand was so great at the Ala Wai course that telephone calls for reservation jammed a switching center in Kaimuki, disrupting private phone lines in the area.

A computerized system has since been installed that connects calls only every 5 seconds.

Unable to beat the odds against a telephone connection, many players turned to the early morning routine.

"We had eight of us trying to get through every day, even my wife, but we never could," said Charles Oh, a 67-year-old regular. Oh shows up at about 6 a.m. to join the foursome of a friend who spends the night in the car. First in line to sign the day's waiting list are first to fill a vacancy.

Faced with the heavy demand, Ala Wai officials try to squeeze in as many players on the course as possible. Foursomes are sent off at brisk six-minute intervals and stragglers are hurried by a course marshal.

The city operates four of the 28 courses on Oahu. Nine are military and the rest private.

Ten of Oahu's 15 private courses are open to the public, but higher greens fees keep many golfers away. Weekdays, a round of golf on one of the city's three 18-hole courses costs just $4. The rate is $6 weekends and holidays. The city's nine-hole course at Kahuku costs $2 weekdays, $3 weekends. Greens fees at private courses range from $9 to $75.

Moreover, many private courses are booked many weeks in advance, while membership-only courses have long waiting lists.

Mayor Frank Fasi has long been lobbying for more municipal courses. He cites studies that say there should be one 18-hole course for every 25,000 people. The formula would call for about 40 courses on Oahu.

Trip designed for modern-day explorers

For modern-day explorers Nature Expeditions International is offering two itineraries — one to Australia and the other up the Amazon.

The 23-day Australian trip will depart July 18, Oct. 17 and Nov. 21 for an expedition into the continent's tropical rain forests, remote desert Outback and vast coral reefs.

Led by natural history specialists, the group will spend three days in Kakadu National Park in the untamed Northern Territory, home of "Crocodile Dundee," and study such native animals. The land fee for this trip is $2,700 per person.

The 15-day, 3,000-mile Amazon trip scheduled to depart July 11, Sept. 13 and Nov. 7 will traverse the length of the river from its mouth near Belem to its tributaries in the jungles of Peru. Travel will include dugouts on the Amazon and Rio Napo in lakes and backwaters of the undisturbed by civilization. This trip's land fee is $2,000 per person plus airfare.

Graduation day should be for parents, not children

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I opened a college graduation speech one year by saying, "I know all of you are sitting out there today frightened, scared and apprehensive about your future. You're wondering how you're going to fit into the scheme of things and face the challenges that lie ahead for you, but I'm not here to talk to you parents. I'm here to address your children."

Actually, the parents needed the speech more than their offspring. The kids were still under warranty. What did they know? They were still someone's tax deduction until the end of the year, still had their old door key to their old room and enough cuteness and youth to borrow money. They should have gotten the empty nest speech and their parents should have gotten the "Graduation is not the end ... it's the beginning ... you are on the brink of a new horizon ... and beginning today you are in control of your own destiny" number.

Graduation day is tough for adults. They go to the ceremony as parents. They come home as contemporaries. After 22 years of child-raising they are unemployed. They no longer have to have a stocked refrigerator when they go on vacation. They can buy a new car without worrying whether or not their child is going to need tuition for summer school. They can get their own apartment and not feel guilty.

They can come and go as they please and not have to check with their kids. They have the opportunity to put into practice all the things they've learned over the past four years ... that there is a life after children and bread can be frozen.

My heart went out to parents as I saw them sitting there, out of a job and wondering how they would handle their new lifestyle when they no longer had children to tell them what to do.

What was it they did before they had children? Did they speak entire sentences to one another? Did they ever have a social life? Did they ever do things that weren't planned?

They are the ones who should have been told there are rewards for those who finish something they started, and there must have been times when they questioned that.

After the ceremony, I watched the parents as they smiled awkwardly into cameras, embarrassed at the attention they were receiving. Instinctively, mothers settled into their roles. They filed the programs in their purses, carefully folded the graduation gowns to be returned to get the fees back. The fathers began their ritual of lugging stereos, boxes and bedding from the third floor of the dorm to the station wagon for the trip home.

They would face the reality of their graduation day tomorrow.

Paris considered a city of charm

Associated Press

From Thomas Jefferson to Olivia de Havilland, an American in Paris has always found the French capital a city of special charm.

Jefferson found that an educated man could conceivably make Paris his second home and, according to an article in the April issue of Town & Country, Americans in Paris today struggle with the French tongue and temperament to try the shopping, the food and the night life.

Some stay at hotels, others buy smart flats. Some only visit; others take up permanent residence.

In the 1920s, Ernest Hemingway and F. Scott Fitzgerald roamed the bars, Josephine Baker jazzed up Montmartre and George Gershwin put "An American in Paris" to music.

In the '80s, the Americans are mostly designers, film makers and businessmen, as indicated by this spotters guide to Americans in Paris, both permanent residents and seasonal migrants.

Olivia de Havilland settled in Paris 33 years ago.

Candice Bergen and her husband, film director Louis Malle, are in France during Christmas and high summer vacations, with stopovers in Paris before heading down to their country property.

Film director and producer Robert Altman two years ago chose to live in Paris when not filming in the United States.

Lee Huebner, publisher of the International Herald Tribune and a former speechwriter in Richard Nixon's White House, is organizing the centennial of the newspaper that began life as the Paris edition of James Gordon Bennett's New York Herald.

Pierre Salinger, Paris bureau chief and chief foreign correspondent for ABC News, is the self-appointed interpreter of events in Washington for the French media. His mother was French, and he traveled to France as President John F. Kennedy's press secretary. He moved to France in 1973, and he and his wife, Nicole, enjoy Paris and their chateau in the Loire Valley.

Minister has taken polygraph tests, lawyer says

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — The Rev. Walker Railey has taken two polygraph tests in which he was asked bluntly whether he had choked his wife or had conspired in the attack that left her in a coma, the minister's attorney says.

One test, administered by former Dallas police polygraph operator Bill Parker at the request of attorney Doug Mulder, showed Railey was "clearly truthful" when he answered "no" to six questions asking whether he had attacked his wife or had arranged to have her harmed, Parker said Thursday.

The second test was given by a current Dallas police polygraph operator who found the results of his examination inconclusive, said Mulder, who was hired by Railey's friends to represent the First United Methodist Church minister.

Dallas police acknowledged the tests were given but declined to discuss the results, Sgt. Pat Herring said.

Polygraphs are not admissible in court and are used primarily as an investigative tool, police and Mulder said.

Railey's wife, Margaret, 32, remains in serious condition and in a coma at Presbyterian Hospital, where she has been since Railey said he found her unconscious at the couple's home early on the morning of April 22.

Railey, who moved into a private hospital suite so he could be near his wife after the attack, was found unconscious in the private quarters on May 1 when police went to question him about discrepancies in his account of his whereabouts on the night his wife was choked in the garage of their home.

Police later said evidence indicated Railey had attempted suicide with an overdose of drugs.

Railey, 40, spent about two weeks under care at Presbyterian Hospital before he admitted himself to Timberlawn Psychiatric Hospital, where the polygraph tests were given on May 14 and 15, Mulder said.

Mulder said he arranged the tests to clear up questions about whether Railey was involved in his wife's attack, although police never have labeled the minister a suspect in the case.

Otwell puts church up for sale

FOREST HILL (AP) — The Rev. W.N. Otwell, who clashed with state officials last year over his church's unlicensed boys home, has put the church up for sale and plans to conduct services at a Fort Worth hotel beginning in June.

Community Baptist Church, which has lost about half of its 425 members since the boys home controversy began in March 1986, is having trouble meeting operating expenses and has several substantial debts, Otwell said Thursday.

"The state really financially done a number on us in the last year," Otwell said, referring to the forced closing of the boys home.

Part of the money from the sale would be used to pay off church debts, which are less than $100,000, Otwell said. The remainder would provide funds for the 31-year-old ministry, which will operate out of the Ramada Inn Central and members' homes at least through August, he said, adding that there are no plans to build or buy another church.

"We felt like this was a good time to get a breath of fresh air, get a new location and expand our ministry," Otwell said. "We're going to start all over. I don't even know the name we'll be using."

The 6.57 acres at 6300 Nell St. contains the church, boys home and school, a barn and baseball diamonds.

White House apologizes after excluding Leland

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House officials have apologized to U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland of Houston after he said he was excluded from a bill-signing ceremony marking the repeal of the Fuel Use Act because he is black.

White House spokesman Albert R. Brashear said Thursday that Leland's exclusion from the affair was an oversight and stressed that race had nothing to do with it.

"Certainly there was no snub intended, least of all regarding his race," said Brashear.

The ceremony at the Old Executive Office Building involved President Reagan signing into law legislation repealing the 1978 energy-conservation law that placed sharp restrictions on natural gas use.

Leland said he originated legislation calling for the repeal of the law two years ago after discussions with oil and gas people in Houston. A spokesman for Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, said Leland was one of three people most responsible for repeal of the law in the House.

"There has been an injustice here. Hopefully it will help the White House understand in the future that black people in this Congress are involved in more than just civil rights," said Leland, the only black congressman in the Texas delegation and former chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus.

"A pattern is developing here, and I hope I'm not crying wolf, but I can only conclude that racism is involved," said the four-term Democrat, who is considered one of the most liberal congressmen on Capitol Hill.

The White House issued an apology through Brashear for not recognizing Leland's role in repeal of the legislation and expressed hope that he would understand that it was an oversight and not at all racially motivated.

Leland said that after learning of his exclusion from the ceremony, Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., refused to go and several other colleagues who felt compelled to attend said they would register protests.

"I'm very proud of (Rep.) Jack Fields, who immediately upon finding out called the White House and they told him to bring me along, but I didn't think that was the dignified way to handle the situation," Leland said.

Fields, a three-term Republican from the Houston suburb of Humble, said Leland has been directly involved in the fight to repeal the Fuel Use Act from the beginning and that there is no way the White House could claim they didn't know of his involvement.

"Mickey had been very active along with all of us in the Texas delegation in removing a regulatory obstacle to the natural gas industry," Fields said.

U.S. discrimination shocks mayor from black township

FORT WORTH (AP) — The mayor of a township in South Africa says he was shocked to learn some blacks, other minorities and women in the United States file anti-discrimination lawsuits.

Soweto Mayor Nelson Botile, who is part of delegation attending the International Institute of Municipal Clerks this week in Fort Worth, said the existence of racial discrimination in the United States surprised him.

"They keep telling us that America has no discrimination," said Botile, referring to white Americans who visit South Africa.

Soweto, with a population of 2.5 million, is South Africa's largest city. Most of the adults who live there work in businesses and factories in Johannesburg, a city of 1 million, where blacks cannot live. Botile is black.

But the town clerk, Nico Malan, who is white, said blacks attending the conference have told him about discrimination in America.

"I also know of South African blacks who have come here and gone back to South Africa because they could not stand the discrimination," Malan told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "My point is that you also are making mistakes in this country, and you shouldn't throw stones."

Hermanus Venters, town clerk of Johannesburg, noted television reports of U.S. homeless people sleeping in parks. He commended the government for trying to find a place for the homeless, but added that divestment in South Africa will put many South Africans on the streets.

"I understand there was discrimination here 200 years ago," said R.J. Ngake, town clerk of all-black Thabong, 144 miles from Johannesburg. "Many whites tell me there is no discrimination here now."

'Mediocre swimmer' Doug Ingram headed for Olympics

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Former City of Midland swim team coach Doug Ingram, by his own admission, was "a mediocre swimmer." But, that isn't keeping him from going to the Olympic Games.

"I had a great time, I enjoyed myself. I worked hard and tried to learn as much as I could but didn't have the national level of success as some of my (University of Texas-Arlington) teammates," said Ingram, guest speaker for the 1987 COM awards banquet. "I was able to contribute as a team member, but not much as an individual. I wasn't a star, but a good squad member."

So, how did he make the jump from mediocrity to the Olympic games.

"Well, if you can't go as an athlete, you have to find an alternate route," said Ingram, the Southern Illinois swim coach and 1988 Olympic swimming committee Chairman.

"Our committee determines the site where trials will be held, the standards to compete in the trials, and the selection process — what the athletes have to do to make the team.

"We start putting together a plan of what kind of competitions and camps to evaluate the talent — where we're weak, where we're strong. The plan is carried out through 1988 to put together the strongest team we can."

INGRAM IS originally "From Hill Country in Texas between Dallas and Waco. I grew up on a farm/ranch. We moved to Dallas when I was a teenager. That's when I got involved in swimming myself.

"From there I went on to swim for UTA but I finished my undergraduate degree at North Texas State. I finished my masters here at UTPB while I was coaching in Midland.

"Back then," continued Ingram, "I held the same position Brad (Swendig) has now. In fact, Brad was a swimmer when I coached. He was our Sam Perry, our Michaela Hasek of those days. He was the one who showed the way for the rest of the swimmers, showed what it took in practice and in meets to be successful."

From Midland in 1975-79, Ingram moved to Indian River Community College in Fort Pierce, Fla., as head swim coach.

Ingram said he first got involved as a swim coach while "a pre-med student during the summer between my freshman and sophomore years. I coached a little novice team at the YMCA and loved it."

"I spent my whole junior year trying to figure out if I wanted to go to school for eight more years to do something I might like (medicine) or go into something the next year that I knew I'd love," said Ingram. "The hardest part of my decision was calling my mother and telling her that her son the doctor was now her son the coach."

"She's finally stopped asking me when I'm going to get a real job," said Ingram.

Maroon defeats Lee White

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Just how good can Midland Lee's offensive machine be in 1987? If Thursday night's Maroon-White scrimmage game at Memorial Stadium offers any clue to that question, get ready to use all available toes and fingers to count the points.

Coach Earl Miller put his first team offense and defense together on the Maroon squad and let them go against the rest of the team. The White squad was given seven points to start each quarter, but the Maroon romped anyway to a 42-31 victory.

Just as expected, this Lee bunch showed the strength that only experience in the skilled positions can bring. Fullback Waymond Goodley and halfbacks Durian Jenkins and Joe Woodard return to the starting lineup and quarterback Geoff Rich started three games a year ago. "Together Again" could be an appropriate theme song come fall for this group of heady Rebels.

GOODLEY romped for 156 yards on 21 carries, caught two passes for an additional 35 yards and scored two touchdowns. He would have had 25 more yards and another touchdown if he hadn't tripped over his own feet in the open field on one play.

Rich rushed for 98 yards on seven carries, including a 73-yard TD run in the fourth period. He also completed five of 11 passes for 107 yards, hitting Jenkins with a 48-yard scoring play for another touchdown.

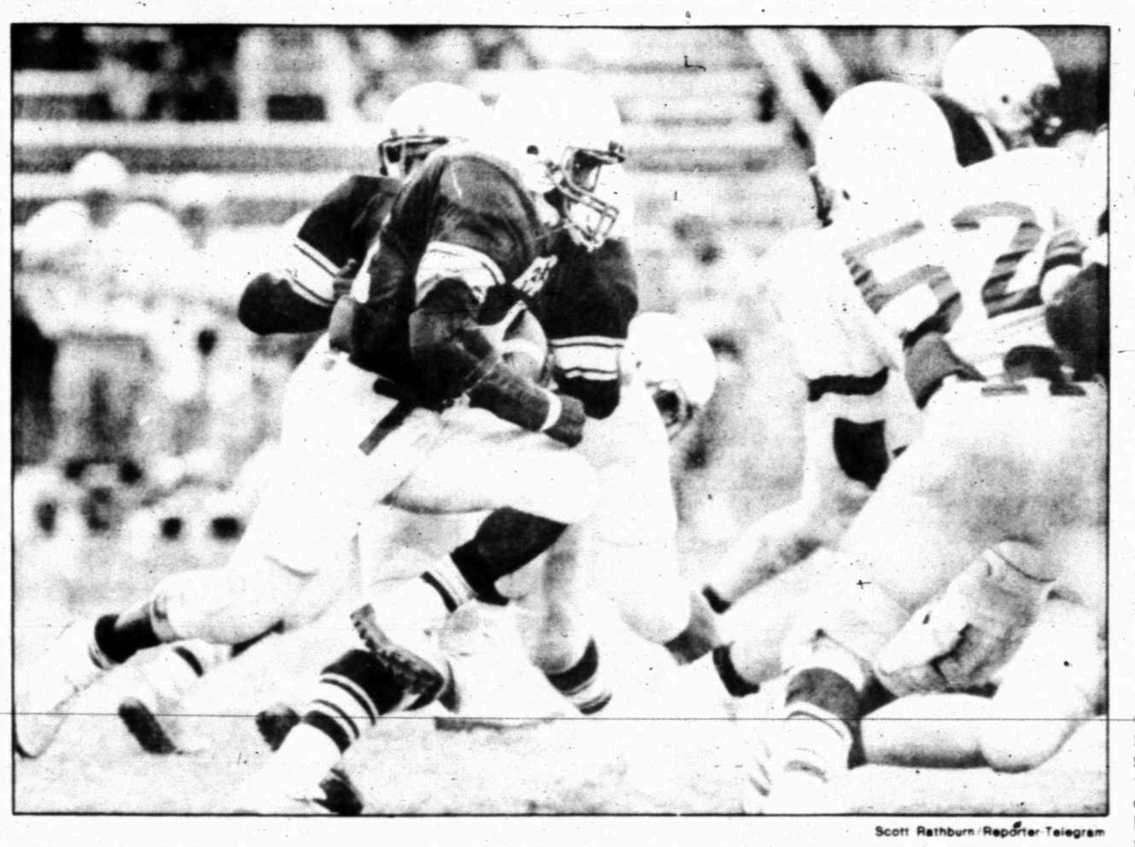

Jenkins added 52 yards rushing and 73 yards in pass receptions. Woodard gained 61 yards on eight carries and scored twice. It was quite a show with 388 yards rushing and 137 yards passing.

"TO BE honest, we would have been a little disappointed if those kids hadn't had a good spring game. After all, they've started a lot of games between them and that should be a strength of our team," said Miller, who added, "We had a good spring and we have felt all along that this team has a chance to be a good one. We're not there yet. We had a lot of mistakes and the first team lost three fumbles."

Lee has had to revamp its offensive line with heavy graduation losses, but the line is large and opened big holes for Goodley up the middle. Some line movement before the snap of the ball is still being seen, however, and that is a concern for the Lee coaching staff. Tackle Charles Short had an outstanding game.

Defensively, the Rebels look to be as sound as ever. Defensive tackle Dejuan Norris still has a nose for the football in his third year to start and defensive end and returning starter Steve Brenner were outstanding. Marcus Mayberry, the other end, also gave great pressure on passing and option plays. Linebacker Tony Pina made several key plays.

Mims scrimmage ends MHS drills

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland High's Bulldogs end the spring training grind with the annual Bill Mims scrimmage game at 7 p.m. today at Memorial Stadium as MHS football fans will get a first hand glimpse at the "Great Experiment."

Coach Doug McCutchen has gone to the two-platoon system at Midland High for 1987 and that new look will get its test tonight even though the Bulldogs will be a little thin by dividing into two teams.

"We've got six kids (four starters) out with injuries and that's going to make us real thin in the two-platoon system," said McCutchen. "Still, we're going to go with it. We have enough to try it out, but we may not be at the top of our game with so many key people out."

MISSING will be starting offensive tackles Stirling Warren (pinched nerve) and Art Nunez (knee). Also out are starting defensive tackle Toby Box (knee) and starting linebacker Clyde Govan (knee). Defensive end Jeff Fry (cracked ribs) and tight end Stoney Griffen (knee) will miss tonight.

"There's no question that will hurt us, but then again, we will get to look at a lot of people," said McCutchen. "We've divided the two teams (Purple and Gold) as evenly as we possibly could and hope to put on a good game that will be competitive for the fans."

To keep the teams even, McCutchen has put his top two quarterbacks on opposite teams with Jeff Somers guiding the Purple and Russell Page the White. The same with top running backs Paul Gary, who will be on the White, and Guy Giesecke, who will play for the Purple. That type of formula was used throughout the team selection process.

THE MHS varsity lost a 19-13 decision to the graduating seniors last week in a scrimmage, causing McCutchen some concern.

"The game was good for us because we're playing a lot of people for the first time. I think the game with the seniors opened some eyes to what it's going to take to play varsity ball. It was by far the most prepared senior team we've faced," said McCutchen.

"We didn't play as well as we had hoped. We've got a long way to go offensively, but we're using the scrimmage as a learning experience."

McCutchen has 14 freshmen on the varsity at the present time and is interested in seeing how they perform tonight. "The freshmen have sure helped our depth. They have a lot of learning to do, but have done well."

THE ABSENCE of Warren and Nunez in the offensive line have put a strain on the Bulldog offense, but has given McCutchen a look at some the backups. He cites a need for more consistency at running back and in the receiving corps. He has been pleased with defensive tackles Box (now injured) and Jeff Rashall and also pointed out that linebackers Govan (injured), Clif Coleman and Scott Mowles have been impressive this spring.

"The secondary is young, but possibly has a chance to be a good one," notes McCutchen. "We've looked good at defensive end, but again we are young and inexperienced. Our linebackers have been great against the run, but we need to improve against the pass."

Tickets for tonight's game are $2 for adults and $1 for students.

Celtics go up, 2-0

Boston survives Thomas spree

BOSTON (AP) — For seven straight playoff series, the Boston Celtics have won the first two games. They captured the first six of those series and are headed toward a seventh consecutive triumph.

Boston survived Isiah Thomas' 36 points and a late Detroit rally to beat the Pistons 110-101 Thursday night and take a 2-0 lead in the NBA Eastern Conference final.

Celtics' forward Kevin McHale said, "2-0 is a huge advantage. All the pressure shifts to them ... 3-0 is so depressing. 2-1 is, hey, we've got to play again tomorrow. So there's a big difference, a big, big difference."

Boston won all four of its series last year after going up 2-0 and the first two this year. Why should the current round be any different for the defending champions?

"Nobody's had Isiah on their team," Thomas said.

He was a big factor in the first half, when he scored 25 points to lead Detroit to a 59-54 advantage. Adrian Dantley added 18 before intermission. But neither got a field goal in the final 14 minutes after Thomas' jumper gave the Pistons a 79-78 lead with 2:04 left in the third quarter.

"We weren't quite as good in the second half," Detroit Coach Chuck Daly said. "Isiah was fatigued and we were in foul trouble."

"The defense really did the job by sticking with Isiah," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said. "It looked like Isiah and Dantley were going to beat us by themselves."

Detroit's 65-56 lead early in the third quarter, its biggest of the game, shook the Celtics out of a mediocre stretch.

"We came back with a vengeance," McHale said. "I could feel the level of play rise with us."

The victory was the Celtics' 34th in 35 games at Boston Garden. Detroit is 0-16 there since winning on Dec. 19, 1982.

The best-of-seven series moves to Pontiac, Mich., for games Saturday and Sunday.

"We were lucky to escape this one," Jones said. "We were going well early in the game and then we began to mishandle the ball.

"But we battled back in the third period and weathered the storm," he added. "Our offense was a little better in the second half."

Larry Bird led Boston with 31 points, but was scoreless in the fourth quarter when the Celtics' substitutes contributed.

Caps beat Dodgers in 21 innings

Associated Press

It took six hours and four minutes for Shreveport to defeat San Antonio in one of the longest games in Texas League history. The Captains nipped the Dodgers 4-3 in 21 innings.

Only 60 of the 1,144 fans who were there when the game started at 7 p.m. Thursday hung around to see the game end at 1:04 a.m. today. It was four innings shy of the Texas League mark of 25 innings when Austin outlasted Dallas-Fort Worth 2-1 Aug. 4, 1971.

In other Texas League games Thursday, Arkansas edged El Paso 8-7 and Wichita beat Tulsa 5-3.

The Shreveport-San Antonio marathon ended with two outs in the 21st inning. Winning reliever Stuart Tate, 2-0, reached first on an infield single. Everett Graham followed with a single to right off loser Jon Pequignot. Paul Van Stone hit a routine grounder to shortstop Jeff Schaefer. But he slipped and couldn't make the play as Tate crossed the plate.

RBI singles by Mike Fitzgerald and Roy Silver in the bottom of the eighth inning lifted Arkansas over El Paso.

In the top of the ninth, with two men on base and two outs, reliever Ken Hill came in and struck out El Paso's Mike Gobbo in three pitches to preserve the victory, earning his first save. The winning pitcher, another reliever, was Steve Peters, whose record is now 2-2. El Paso reliever Barry Bass dropped to 4-2 with the loss.

Second baseman Mike DeButch's two-run double highlighted a four-run fourth inning to give Wichita its win over Tulsa.

Mets edge Angels

From Staff Reports

JACKSON, Miss— Jackson's Mets came up with two runs in the last of the ninth to beat Midland, 6-5, and take a 2-1 lead in the Texas League series.

Greg Jeffries, who extended his hitting streak to nine games with three hits, won the game with a fly ball hit to right center with one out in the ninth of Vinicio Cedeno.

The ball fell between two outfielders, either of whom could have caught the ball on a dry field, but the grass was soaked from two earlier rain delays.

Midland went ahead 5-4 in the top of the ninth on Damon Farmar's sac fly and Rick Adams' rbi double. Adams also knocked in a run with a single in the fifth and two with a seven-inning single.

The series resumes at 7:30 p.m. today with lefty Marty Reed, 5-0, going for Midland and Dave Lendermann, 0-4, on the hill for the Mets.

Mark Brouhard, a former Texas League MVP who played last year in Japan, was scheduled to join the Angels this weekend.

The Mets took a 4-1 lead after five on John Wilson's two-out two-run single in the third and three doubles good for two runs in the fifth.

Battles

For those who wondered if a Preakness hadn't been left out of Midland accomplishments listed in this space the other day, specifically Ralph Lowe's Gallant Man in 1957, I'd like to add it the list, but would have to take it away from Bold Ruler, Eddie Arcaro up.

It was in '57 that the Lowe won the Belmont and really should have won the Kentucky Derby, only Willie Shoemaker, running in front, pulled up at the eighth pole and Iron Leige, Willie Hartack aboard, dashed by him.

Midlander Pete Tyson recalls that when they asked Lowe if he was mad about the costly misjudgment, Ralph replied, "Mad? Hell, no. Shoemaker made a mistake. That's all. Show me someone who never made a mistake and I'll show you someone who has never done anything." Said like a true Midlander...

Last time they held the NJCAA golf tournament in Odessa was almost a decade ago and the thing that stands out for Odessa College's AD Barry Rodenhaver is the long-driving contest.

"Most of the golfers had been driving about 285 yards and folks were stationed along the course accordingly. Then this big kid from Norfolk, Neb., steps up and hits one so far that one guy fell over backwards trying to follow the flight of the ball. When it finally landed, they had a tough time measuring it because it went beyond the green....401 yards and 10 inches."

OC hosted the first NJCAA ever back in 1959 and will play host to some 200-plus golfers again June 9-12 at Odessa and Mission country clubs....

Mark Moseley, one-time Washington Redskins' kicking star retired, commenting on the vagaries of a long career, "I can't kick."...

Dick Motta was reprimanded by the NBA toward the end of the regular season when he claimed Houston's Rockets were trying to avoid meeting the Lakers in the playoffs as long as possible. Turned out he was right....And don't tell me I'm going to have to take back all those nasty things I said the other day about the Celtics and their bench?...It's gotta be fixed. Everybody knows Jerry Sichting can't do that to Isiah Thomas....

Remember Al McGuire's reservations on the Bulls' Michael Jordan, claiming despite all that ability, he wasn't a franchise player?

One guy who is looking like a franchise player is the Cubs' Andre Dawson. He has not only turned Chicago into a contender but turned Leon Durham into the kind of player everybody thought he should be but never really was....In fact, Dawson's leading competition for MVP could come from Durham, that is if the Reds' Eric Davis keeps hurting himself....

Joe Maddon, roving batting coach for the California Angels, rates Jackson shortstop Greg Jeffries as the best major league prospect he has seen in the Texas League, "but then I haven't seen everybody, yet."...

Idle thought dept.: What does Chicago have to show for Scott Fletcher? I'm not being facetious, I can't remember. Steve Trout?...

Brewers prove win streaks are overrated

Murray

Don't look now but the Milwaukee Brewers are the first club in major league history to break league winning- and losing-streak records in the same season.

It just goes to show you that winning streaks are overrated. Just ask the German army.

The key to victory is really consistency. Ralph Waldo Emerson said that a foolish consistency is the "hobgoblin of little minds" but how many pennants did he ever win?

I would think the absolute, definitive word on winning streaks was offered up by the 1916 New York Giants. They had one winning streak — baseball's longest — of 26 games. And they didn't win the pennant. But wait a minute! They had another winning streak that year of 17 games. And still didn't win the pennant!

Can you imagine a team that went a total of 43 games without a loss in two stretches during the season finishing — a little drum roll, please, professor — fourth?

You would think the Giants of that era would have put up an all-time losing streak. How do you lose 66 games in a 152-game season in which you go 26-0 and 17-0 in two stretches. But John McGraw's Giants are nowhere to be found in the consecutive-losses list. They were just mediocre when they weren't brilliant.

Streaking teams often streak right into the pennant. But not always.

One of the most famous streaks of all was the Giants' run in 1951, when they shoved aside a 12-game Dodger lead in the pennant race and swept to 16 straight victories. There would have been no "Little miracle of Coogan's bluff" — Bobby Thomson's famous playoff home run — without that streak. Because there would have been no playoff.

Teams that blow 12-game leads in August usually crumple like an old air bag, but the Dodgers actually played acceptable pennant ball that year. The Giants, on the other hand, just played well over their heads. Streaking teams usually do.

There's a hypnotic quality about winning streaks. It's an almost mystical experience. Every golfer can attest that there are days when, through no fault (or gift) of your own, the ball just seems to have a will of its own, to be targeted to greens and fairways on every shot. You don't know what you're doing right but every putt runs right for the hole, every chip seems on a track of its own.

Writers have been known to lock themselves in a creative funk and start putting words on paper with no idea where they came from.

It's what seems to happen in winning streaks. Almost as if it's an outside-the-body experience.

IT'S AN idea that so fascinates Hollywood that it seems unable to make a baseball picture without resorting to metaphysics. Every film seems to have angels in the outfield or a guy who lights cigarettes with his fingers making a deal with a daydreamer for a pennant or a magical potion that, rubbed on the arm, turns an economics professor into a 20-game winner.

Baseball has that effect on people. All sports have superstitions but baseball is ridiculous. Guardian angels are not considered too farfetched in the dugouts in this game. Ballplayers, to a man, believe there are outside forces at work in their game.

Listen to the shriek of an aggrieved batsman when somebody breaks his favorite bat: "There were still 50 hits in there!" The bat, you see, has a life of its own. Fielders take their gloves to bed with them.

It goes beyond wearing the same underwear through a winning streak or stepping across the same foul line in the same way when you go 4 for 4. There are forces to be appeased out there.

Losing streaks are believed to be supernaturally directed, too. Ballplayers call them slumps, and they know positively in their hearts that slumps are never wholly the fault of the people or the team in them. It's the fates, not the stance, the stride or the swing.

You get out of slumps when the mysterious elements out there get bored and take their whammy elsewhere, hopefully to the Yankees. As soon as he or she or it stops positioning fielders in the exact trajectory of the line drives your team is hitting, you get out of the slump and not before.

YOU DON'T escape a slump by pretending it's not there. You do the next best thing. You pretend it's there but it's not your fault. Somebody out there has it in for you. Somebody you can't see.

It's a standard tactic that enables great athletes to keep their self-esteem.

The pitcher is getting you out repeatedly? He's doing something illegal, then. He's scuffing up the ball, greasing it.

You can't get the ball out of the infield? They're letting the grass grow too high, watering the infield.

That's why a winning streak has an unreal quality, an element of tables levitating, lights appearing in an abandoned house.

The best teams in baseball history lose 50 games a year. The 1927 Yankees only lost 44 but that wasn't a team, it was an apocalypse. The trick is never to lose them in clusters.

The most effective winning streaks are usually the late-season ones but here again the 1916 Giants confound the percentages. They won 26 games in the final month in 1916 but finished seven games behind Brooklyn.

THE CHICAGO Cubs in 1935 put together the most telling September drive in the game's history, winning 21 in a row and overtaking the Dizzy Dean Cardinals in the last week.

The Brewers are the first team to break the league record for consecutive victories at the start of the season and find themselves in third place by the middle of May.

There's never any logical explanation. That's why Hollywood scenarists, baffled by the inconsistencies of the grand old game, turn its scripts into sci-fi. Baseball defies logic.

The Milwaukee Brewers are a good club. Otherwise, they would not have won their first 13 games and 16 out of 17. A team that has Robin Yount, Cecil Cooper, Rob Deer and a no-hit pitcher is not a candidate for an all-time losing streak.

That's why Americans love baseball. It's not a game, it's an eccentricity. It wasn't invented, it came out of a lamp.

Sports in Brief

Auto Racing

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Four-time winner A.J. Foyt and former world driving champion Emerson Fittipaldi escaped serious injury when their race cars struck the walls in separate crashes during the final practice period for Sunday's Indianapolis 500. Foyt's car sponsor Jim Gilmore said the Lola racer sustained "semi-substantial" damage, and that Foyt's crew would have to work around the clock to have it ready by race day, when Foyt would be making a record 30th consecutive start. If the car cannot be repaired, Foyt could substitute a backup and start from the rear of the 33-car field. Fittipaldi, who qualified for his fourth Indy start, was unhurt.

Golf

ATLANTA — George Burns took advantage of ideal playing conditions to shoot an 8-under-par 64 and take the first-round lead in the $600,000 Atlanta Classic. Burns held a one-shot advantage over long-hitting Davis Love III.

MASON, Ohio — Patti Rizzo took advantage of an early tee time for a 6-under-par 66 to take the first-round lead before rain suspended play in the LPGA Championship. Play was stopped with 69 of the 144 starters still on the course.

General

NEW YORK — Some college athletes may have been offered drugs and prostitutes as an inducement to sign with two New York sports agents who are being investigated by a federal grand jury, a published report said.

About 60 former and current college athletes have been subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury in Chicago, which is looking into the dealings of agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom. Newsday said several athletes and college athletic officials were asked by FBI agents whether they were provided with drugs and prostitutes at all-star bowl games.

Road Racing

JERSEY CITY, N.J. — It took him 602 hours, 29 minutes, 55 seconds to get to the marathon's finish line here, but 73-year-old race-walker Harry Drazin said he felt terrific. Drazin could not complete the New Jersey Waterfront Marathon April 26 because he was hit by a bicycle at the 14-mile mark. His time this afternoon, discounting the nearly 25 days he spent recuperating from his injuries, was 5:07:10.

Dernier homer sinks Reds in ninth

CHICAGO — Bobby Dernier hit a home run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning Thursday, giving the Chicago Cubs an 8-7 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

It was the first run of the year allowed by Reds' reliever John Franco, who had gotten the first two outs of the inning to extend his scoreless streak to 14 1-3 innings.

Eric Davis, making his first start since injuring his left shoulder last Friday, hit a three-run homer in the third. It was his 16th homer of the season, tops in the major leagues.

"I can't remember the last time I hit one to center, maybe in Triple A," Dernier said. "With two outs and the wind blowing out, of course you're thinking home run."

"I didn't think he hit it good enough to go out of the park," Franco said, "but it got caught in the wind and just kept carrying."

Cardinals 7, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Terry Pendleton extended his hitting streak to 15 games with a two-run double in the third inning and pitcher Bob Forsch also had a two-run double for the Cardinals. The win was St. Louis' seventh in eight games and kept the Cardinals percentage points ahead of the Cubs for first place in the National League East.

Pendleton, who also had a single, doubled to left in the third inning, scoring Steve Lake, who had singled and Vince Coleman, who had walked.

Forsch, who is hitting .429 (9-for-21), including four doubles and six RBI, knocked in Jose Oquendo, who had singled and Lake, who had walked, in the next inning.

The Cardinals added two more in the fifth. Ozzie Smith walked, moved to second when Pendleton reached on first baseman Griffey's error and scored on Clark's hit-and-run single to right. McGee then followed with a sacrifice fly.

Phillies 6, Dodgers 3

PHILADELPHIA — Jeff Stone's two-run first-inning homer and a solo home run by Juan Samuel helped Philadelphia hand the Dodgers' their sixth straight loss. Luis Aguayo also homered for the Phillies, who have won five of six and eight of 11.

Shane Rawley, 4-2, worked six innings and got his third straight victory and sixth career win over the Dodgers without a loss. Steve Bedrosian pitched the ninth for his seventh save.

Milt Thompson opened the game with a walk and Stone hit the first pitch over the right-field wall for his first homer of the season.

Indians 6, Twins 3

CLEVELAND — Cory Snyder hit three solo home runs and Greg Swindell pitched a nine-hitter.

Snyder, who was 7-for-70 entering the game, homered in the second and fourth off Bert Blyleven and led off the eighth with a smash into the upper deck in left field off Mark Portugal.

Blyleven, 3-4, also allowed solo homers to Tony Bernazard and Mel Hall, and has now surrendered 19 homers in 72 2-3 innings this season.

Charlotte hosts The Other Race

By PAUL NOWELL

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — H.A. "Humpy" Wheeler insists it isn't crazy to schedule the Coca-Cola 600 stock car race on the same day as the Indianapolis 500.

There are even some sound reasons for doing so, he says.

"I think the Memorial Day weekend is the best holiday of the year for a sports event," said Wheeler, president of Charlotte Motor Speedway. "It's not a big family holiday like Mother's Day or the Fourth of July. And if it rains on Sunday we can bring it back on Monday."

The Coca-Cola 600 has gone head-to-head with the Indy 500 for the past 15 years on Memorial Day weekend.

About 400,000 spectators flock to Indy — more than any other one-day U.S. sporting event. But Charlotte doesn't do so bad either — about 150,000 fans are expected on Sunday.

WHEELER CONTENDS that Indy hasn't been the same since it began using rear-engine European-style cars in 1963, something that doesn't sit well with the NASCAR crowd.

"We still have the Detroit heavy metal," he said. "It's true American racing. This is a contact sport and the people love it. The cars run closer and the people can see them."

Besides, he said, "It's better entertainment."

Wheeler says many of the Charlotte fans agree with his own theory that the Indianapolis 500 has changed too much over the last 20 years.

"Those cars were born, bred and developed in Europe," he said. "It was never an American race after the first rear-wheel-drive cars started running at Indy in 1963.

"They're playing soccer up there while we're playing football."

Though Wheeler concedes that Indy is one of the top sports events of the year, he notes that Charlotte is catching up.

"We don't have a tradition dating back to 1909," he said. "Indy has been a meeting place for more than 50 years for industrialists and big business people from the Midwest.

It took Todd Haney's run scoring single in the bottom of the 10th inning to lift top-ranked Texas over fiesty Lamar 6-5 in the first round of the NCAA Central Regional baseball tournament Thursday.

The Longhorns, 55-9, face Oklahoma in the second round of the tournament today. The Sooners were upset by Sam Houston State 5-1 Thursday.

Lamar, 40-18, plays Indiana State today.

Texas A&M, meanwhile, easily defeated Purdue, 13-3, in the Mideast Regional at Starkville, Miss. A&M, 42-20, faces Mississippi State, 39-20, in an 8 p.m. game today.

LEE

IN ALL, the Maroon defense allowed the White only 88 yards rushing and three yards passing. The White scored three points on Tony Rice's 31-yard field goal, but that was set up when Jeff Howard recovered a Maroon fumble at the Maroon 13 yard line.

Rice led the White team with 27 yards rushing and quarterback Dudley Jordan had 25.

The best way to score against Lee this year may be through the airways, but that might be tough as Lee's No. 1 defense rarely gave Jordan time to set up with some heavy pressure. However, Miller was impressed with the gutsy performance by Jordan. Miller feels that the quarterback situation will be in good hands if either Rich or Jordan are running the offense.

And as impressive as the Rebels looked on the field, those hot dogs cooked up by the Lee Booster Club were the hit of the night. Never, ever has Midland seen anything like that. Athletic director Gil Bartosh may have to investigate the idea of letting this group take over the Friday night concession stand operation.

Not only can they play baseball in El Paso, they can also win coin tosses.

Both District 4-5A champion Abilene Cooper and District 3-5A champs Lubbock Monterey came out on the losing end of home field coin flips so the Border City will play host to what could be a Class 5A six-game marathon at Dudley Field Friday at Saturday.

Cooper will play El Paso Eastwood, winner of the Tournament of Champions in Midland in March, in a best of three series beginning at 8:30 p.m., or right after the Monterey-EP Andress opener.

The Cougars, 25-2, beat Plainview in the bi-district round in a one-game playoff. Monterey eliminated 4-5A runner-up Odessa Permian in a best of three series last weekend.

Both series will conclude Saturday with games beginning at 10 a.m. and continuing all day if necessary.

Tyler takes charge in NJCAA tennis

From Staff Reports

ATLANTA, Ga — In an all-Texas finale, Midland College faces almost impossible odds in defending its National Junior College Athletic Association women's tennis title after dropping key semifinals matches Thursday, but three singles players and two doubles qualified for the championship round.

Tyler, Texas, took command Thursday by gaining eight championship spots. Tyler leads with 35 points. Cooke County, Texas, has five finalists and 32 points for second place. Midland is third with 31 points after losing two singles matches to players from Cooke.

Broward, Fla., is fourth place with 17 points and San Jacinto, the fourth Texas team in the tournament, was fifth with 16 points.

"We just seemed to have jitters today and ended up playing not to lose instead of playing to win," said a disappointed MC coach Joe Williams. "Two of the losses were to players we had beaten twice previously, but we just didn't stay in the matches as we should have."

MC's No. 1 player, freshman Caroline Bhaguandas, lost 2-6, 6-2 6-3 to Cooke's Camille Svensson. Bhaguandas had beaten Svensson twice this season. It was the same story for MC's No. 4, freshman Rebecca Nevarez, who fell to Cooke's Sally Ann Fossey 3-6 6-1-6-3 after beating Fossey twice in straight sets. Sophomore Helen Schildknecht, No. 3, lost to Lesley Ferkins of Tyler 7-6 6-1 after holding a 5-4 lead and serving for the first set.

But it wasn't all bad news. No. 2 Natasha Koprivica took out Renee Alexis, Broward, 6-4 6-0; Sara Hancock, No. 5, beat Asa Hellmerson, Cooke, 6-0 6-2; and No. 6 Rachel Wilson still hasn't lost a game in the tournament, beating Susan Wallace, Tyler, 6-0 6-0.

The Nos. 2 and 3 doubles teams are alive and face Tyler in both their final No. 2, defeated Higginbotham-Caplin, Broward, 6-0 6-0 and No. 3 Koprivica-Nevarez powered past Paul-Kall, Cooke, 6-0, 6-2.

Disaster strikes quickly at Indy

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The cars hurtle around the track at breakneck speeds, the roar of their finely tuned engines echoing throughout historic Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

First the sound is in front of you. Then you blink, and it is behind you. Then, just as quickly, it seems to be in front of you again, playing tricks with your ears. These low-slung, high-tech racing machines challenge your senses constantly, daring you to keep up with them.

When everything is going smoothly at Indy, when the green light is on and the cars are negotiating the straightaways and the turns safely, this place is fun. It's the county fair with cotton candy and carmel corn and a carefree, happy-go-lucky crowd.

But when something goes wrong and cars find the wall, the way A.J. Foyt and Emerson Fittipaldi did in the final practice round Thursday, a pall falls over the Speedway. The roar of the engines is replaced, first by a gasp and then by silence, an eerie, empty silence that is terribly out of place in this carnival atmosphere.

Foyt's car suddenly lost its stability coming through the first turn. In an instant, it was spinning madly out of control, pieces of metal and tires flying off in different directions, the machine's fate out of its driver's hands.

When his car finally stopped in the infield, Foyt limped off with nothing more serious than a muscle cramp. He blamed himself for the mishap.

"I had a meeting with all my rookies (Davy Jones and Stan Fox will drive Foyt-owned cars Sunday) and told them, 'Don't be out there racing cars in traffic,' and I turn around and do it myself. The car was running good, just a little loose. I was going to pull it in and I thought I'd see what the car does in dirty air, and it just took off."

The driver, of course, is the first one to know when he is losing control. It is not a wonderful moment.

"You feel disappointed, sad, frustrated," defending Indy champion Bobby Rahal said. "You've got to be fatalistic to be successful as a race car driver. If you took every mechanical breakdown personally, you'd be in a white jacket somewhere. You can sit there and be devastated, but you have to say to yourself, 'OK, there's a race next week.'"

For Foyt and Fittipaldi, that race still will be Sunday. Foyt's 30th consecutive start at Indy was preserved when it was decided that his car could be repaired in time to maintain its spot in the starting lineup. Fittipaldi will drive a backup car from the rear of the grid.

STATE IN BRIEF

State workers deserve salary hike, Clements says

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says he would like to give state employees a 2 percent salary increase, but he's not sure how much money it would take to fund the proposal.

Responding to a call-in question, Clements said Thursday he believes state employees "do deserve consideration for a small increase."

"If an increase can be managed through these difficult times...I would be inclined to give it to them," Clements said on "The Governor Reports," a locally televised question-and-answer show.

On the program, the governor responds to call-in questions and those from a panel of Capitol journalists.

When asked how much money would be needed to fund the proposed increase, the governor said he didn't remember the figure. He said he would try to give the pay increase through agency incentives.

Open Records Act lauded

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox says Texas' Open Records and Open Meetings Acts are being used as models by other states.

"Our open records and open meetings laws are the most progressive in the nation," Mattox told a conference Thursday on freedom of information.

Mattox also told about 400 people, most of them from governmental agencies, that he hopes the attorney general will one day be able to enforce the Texas Open Meetings and Open Records acts.

"We hope that in the future we will get the Legislature to give us the resources to engage in enforcement activities," Mattox said. "We interpret the law but we very seldom are engaged in enforcement."

Under present law, enforcement is left largely to local officials after the attorney general gives a legal opinion.

Mattox seeks 'finder'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas officials have asked for a court order against a California man who allegedly charged clients a fee for finding money that was already rightfully theirs.

"This is a blatant rip-off and we have no idea at present how may unsuspecting citizens have been taken," Attorney General Jim Mattox said.

He said the suit was filed in a Travis County district court after state Treasurer Ann Richards brought him information from complaints she had received.

The suit was filed against David Bendah of San Diego, doing business as Money Finders Association and Lion Publishing Co.

The suit alleges that Bendah encourages persons to buy a book he publishes, "The Complete Manual to Finding Unclaimed Money," then go into business finding unclaimed property and charge a finder's fee.

Doctor's hearing continues

AUSTIN (AP) — A woman who says she developed an abscess after undergoing fat removal surgery actually developed it by improperly draining the growth, says a Houston attorney representing the physician who performed the procedure.

Robert Newey alleged Thursday the woman actually developed a seroma, a collection of fluid that he said sometimes forms after fat suctioning. He said it became infected because someone improperly drained it.

Newey is representing Dr. Hugo A. Ramirez, a Pasadena physician, in a hearing to decide if the Texas Board of Medical Examiners should revoke his license. The hearing is scheduled to resume today.

Ramirez was ordered by a federal judge to stop performing liposuction, a procedure in which which fat is is sucked with a tube through a one-eighth-inch incision, after one of his patient's died and another became critically ill.

Letter confusing mental illness, retardation 'mistake'

AUSTIN (AP) — A letter which angered advocates for the mentally ill was a simple mistake, Gov. Bill Clements' staff says.

Members of the Texas Alliance for the Mentally Ill said Thursday they were upset by a letter which they allege indicates that the governor's office doesn't know the difference between mental illness and mental retardation.

Members of the alliance recently wrote Clements about the need for services for the mentally ill, and the governor replied with promises to keep open the 13 state schools for the mentally retarded.

His letters made no mention of mental illness or the eight state mental hospitals.

"It's appalling to me that he doesn't know the difference," said Genevieve Hearon, president of the alliance, whose 2,600 members have relatives with mental illness. "It makes me wonder what else he doesn't know about human services. It's such a putdown."

Jane Basey, secretary of the group's Austin chapter, said she "just couldn't believe it" when she received the letter.

"I was angry," she said. "I learned the difference 20 years ago in Psych I (class). It's dismaying to think the governor's office doesn't know the difference."

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, said the letters about mental retardation that went to the alliance were "simply just a mistake." He said Clements knows the difference between mental illness and mental retardation.

Mental illness is a disease that affects a person's thinking and behavior. It can be overcome or controlled with therapy and medication. Mentally ill people usually have normal intelligence.

In contrast, the mentally retarded usually are born with a diminished intellectual capacity that is irreversible. Mentally retarded people can be educated and trained.

"We are going to apologize to the alliance," Bashur said. "We acknowledge these letters are inadequate. We will call them and subsequently send them a written response that more adequately answers their questions and concerns.

"I want to say in the strongest terms possible that we are very sensitive to the mentally ill and the mentally retarded," he said.

But Ms. Hearon said an apology from Clements "is not good enough." She said she doesn't believe the letter she received was a mistake.

"I think he really doesn't know" the difference, she said.

She called on the governor to meet with advocacy groups for the mentally ill and the mentally retarded to show that he understands their concerns.

Dollar dips slightly

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was mostly lower in thin European trading early today.

Dealers said the dollar was holding steady at slightly lower levels against most other major world currencies.

They said market participants were reluctant to take up strong positions before the scheduled release of several key U.S. economic indicators.

Among reports due later today were revised figures on U.S. gross national product and corporate profits for the first quarter, and retail prices and durable goods orders for April.

The data could provide a clearer picture on the state of the U.S. economy and the likely course of the Federal Reserve Board's monetary policy.

The dollar was little changed against the British pound, which was quoted at $1.6807, up from $1.6805.

GOLD

Gold bullion rose as London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price at midmorning of $473.60 a troy ounce, up from $469.50 late Thursday. Trading was described as active.

In Zurich, the metal was bid at $474.50, up from $468.65.

Gold closed in Hong Kong earlier today at a bid of $471.66, up from $469.06.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $9.00 an ounce, up from $8.85.

Texas ties its record for bank failures at 26

More foreseen as economy struggles

DALLAS (AP) — Banks are failing faster in Texas than in any other state in the union, and officials say the clip may accelerate as the oil-busted state struggles to get back on its feet.

The Lone Star State Thursday tied the national record it set last year for bank failures in a calendar year when two more collapses brought the 1987 total to 26, state and federal officials said.

Texas had already held the dubious distinction of having more banks fail in one year than any other state when 12 collapsed in 1985. That compares to just three in 1984.

So far, 81 banking institutions have failed across the country this year, and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. spokesman Bill Olcheski predicted that number could soar as high as 200 by year's end.

Nearly 140 failed in 1986 nationally, the most since the FDIC was founded in 1933. There were 120 failures in 1985 and 79 the year before, FDIC spokesman Stephen Katsanos said. The previous record was in 1937 with 77 failures.

"Up through 1986, 90 percent of failures were primarily the result of poor management, but at least half of the failures now are no longer caused just by poor management," State Banking Commission spokesman Richard Nun said.

"It's the hanging-on of poor economic conditions," he said. "Even the strong bank — if he's got two or three tackles hanging on him — sooner or later he's going to come down. It's getting to be a matter of how long they can hold on."

Frank Anderson, a Dallas banking analyst with Ferguson & Co., said he wasn't surprised at the high number of Texas bank failures this year.

"The banking system is more or less reflective of the economy as a whole," he said. "As the market in Texas has deteriorated, we've seen a lag effect in bank failures."

But Anderson said he wasn't overly distressed at the record number of banking failures.

"Texas has 14 percent of the total number of banks in the country, more than 2,000," he said. "We've had less than 1.5 percent of that number fail. It's not something you want to see, but it's still a small part of the whole picture."

The analyst said he expected the bank failure trend to continue through 1987.

"We're seeing some improvement — in agriculture, in oil, even in real estate — as we work our way through the cycle," he said. But the banking system operates under a lag effect that means failures will continue after the economy turns up.

National cost of living shifts upward

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, nudged upward by higher costs for food, energy and imported goods, rose 0.4 percent in April, the government said today.

The increase in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index, equivalent to an annual inflation rate of 5.5 percent, matched the 0.4 percent price increases of February and March.

Analysts said the stagnant inflation rate reflects in large part steady declines in the value of the dollar, making imports more expensive.

Indeed, prices for goods other than energy and food — the category that economists say most accurately reflects the dollar's value — were up 0.5 percent, the same as in March.

April's price increases were wide-ranging. Food costs were up 0.3 percent, while energy prices, still rebounding from last year's collapse in world oil prices, also rose 0.3 percent.

For the first four months of 1987, consumer prices have risen at an annual rate of 6.0 percent — compared to the 1.1 percent increase for all of 1986. Economists have said they expected inflation to continue in the 5 percent to 6 percent range for most of the year.

As import prices rise, some domestic manufacturers, in turn, have raised their prices.

"The declining dollar is putting upward pressure on foreign producers to raise their prices. To the extent that they do that, it does give domestic producers the opportunity to raise their prices," said Donald Streizheim, chief economist for Merrill Lynch of New York.

While the falling dollar "is not going to cause inflation to go through the roof," he added, "We're going to have about a 5 percent inflation rate in 1987. Let's face it, the best news on inflation is over."

The increase in the CPI was not nearly as sharp as April's 0.7 percent surge in wholesale prices, equivalent to an 8.9 percent annual inflation rate.

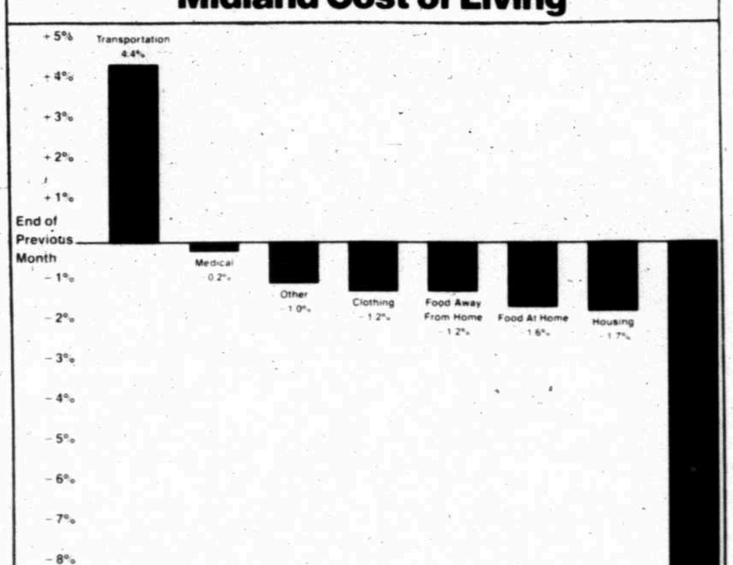

"The markets clearly overreacted to the 0.7 percent gain," said Donald Ratajczak, a Georgia State University economist who specializes in price activity.

With today's report, he said, "the markets may be relieved that inflation at the retail level," while higher generally than it's been for the past four years, "has not intensified any further."

The April increase left the index at 337.7, meaning that the same goods which cost $10 during a 1967 base period cost $33.77 last month. That's $1.24 cents more than the same goods cost in April 1986, when the index stood at 325.3.

The full index is not adjusted to eliminate predictable seasonal price fluctuations; the other figures in the report are.

Economists: Growth unimpressive

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy grew at a 4.4 percent annual rate from January through March, the fastest pace in almost three years, the government said today.

The advance in the gross national product, which followed a lackluster 1.1 percent rise in the final quarter of 1986, left many economists unimpressed, however, because the strength came almost entirely from an unwanted buildup in business inventories.

The Commerce Department estimate of overall economic strength represented only a slight revision from a month ago, when the government said the economy grew at a 4.3 percent rate in the first quarter.

A companion report on inflation showed that prices shot up at an annual rate of 4.2 percent in the first quarter, the fastest price spurt since the first quarter of 1984. The increase in the GNP deflator was blamed on sharply higher energy costs.

In other reports, the government said that:

—Consumer prices, nudged upward by higher costs for food, energy and imported goods, rose 0.4 percent in April. The increase matched the 0.4 percent gains of February and March and amounted, analysts said, to a further indication of the effect of the declining dollar.

—Orders for "big ticket" durable goods edged up a slight 0.1 percent in April. It was the weakest showing in three months and would have been even worse except for strength in defense orders.

Analysts said the poor showing for factory orders in April supported their belief that economic growth during the current April-June quarter will slump considerably from the 4.4 percent first quarter pace.

Some economists are even forecasting a negative GNP performance in the current quarter as businesses slash production in order to work off the huge increase in inventories.

Analysts are not now forecasting a recession, generally defined as two consecutive quarters of declining GNP. They believe that growth will strengthen in the second half of the year.

AP LaserGraphic

But economists admit there is a good deal of uncertainty in their forecasts, noting increasing worries about rising inflation and a plunging dollar.

The Reagan administration is forecasting the economy will grow at a 3.2 percent rate this year, up from a 2.5 percent increase in GNP during 1986, the weakest showing since the last recession ended in 1982.

Tall City consumers pay less for utilities, food

From Staff Reports

Led by an 8.7 percent drop in utility costs, the cost of living in Midland fell 1.1 percent in April, according to figures released by ClayDesta National Bank.

This is the second month the Tall City's cost of living has fallen. The six month annualized rate of deflation is 1.6 percent, and over the past year, the cost of living has declined 0.8 percent. In April, Odessa's cost of living fell 0.5 percent, reversing five months of increases.

Transportation was the only category measuring an increase in April, with Midlanders paying 4.4 percent more in April. Higher premiums for automobile insurance and higher prices for gasoline were assisted by mixed, but generally higher, costs for automobile maintenance. Midland transportation costs have fallen 6.2 percent over the last year, but have shown a 1.1 percent increase in the last six months.

After four months of increases, Midland medical costs fell 0.2 percent in April, as higher non-prescription medicine prices were offset by lower costs for dental care. Over the last year, a 0.2 percent decline has been measured in medical expenses, although the last six months have revealed a 2.7 percent rise.

Midland clothing costs broke a four-month trend in April, showing a 1.2 percent decline. Lower costs for clothing maintenance were responsible. The past six months have shown a 2.0 percent increase, although clothing costs have dropped 0.3 percent over the past year.

For the second consecutive month, Midland restaurant prices fell, measuring a 1.2 percent decrease in April. Lower prices were recorded for meals prepared with beef. Midlanders eating out have seen a 5.1 percent increase in eating out costs over the past year, with 4.4 percent coming in the last six months.

Decreases in produce, alcohol and shelf items offset increases in meat prices as food at home prices fell 1.6 percent in April, reversing a two-month trend. Over the past year, food prices have risen 5.2 percent.

Housing costs fell 1.7 percent in April, the second consecutive decrease. Slightly higher costs for home maintenance were offset by lower rental charges in the Midland area. A 12.5 percent decrease in housing expenses has been calculated for the past year, with a 7.4 percent rise coming in the last six months.

Southwest shows confidence in Midland

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

"A great partnership and a fantastic growth rate." That's how Southwest Airlines Chairman Herb Kelleher described the airline's ten-year relationship with the Midland-Odessa market.

In Midland to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the start of Southwest service to Midland Regional Airport, the jovial executive said that service to Midland had increased 120 percent per year for the past ten years. "That's a fantastic growth rate," said Kelleher, who added that it put Midland among the top markets for consistent, substantial growth.

"We still have confidence in West Texas and we're looking for continued growth in the Midland-Odessa market, with only occasional and temporary interruptions of the economy. Texas is on the rebound," he said, adding that 1986 was a temporary economic aberration and not an indicator of things to come.

He said an expression of the confidence was the airline's recent order of 20 new airplanes to be delivered in 1990. Kelleher took advantage of the Midland anniversary celebration to announce that Southwest had placed the launch order for the 737-500, which will be even more quieter and fuel efficient than the 727-300. Southwest also placed the order with Boeing which launched the 737-300, which has since initiation into service in 1984, has become the most popular airplane in the industry.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Doing homework critical to mutual fund choices

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I'm a member of the military, within four and a half years of retirement. For the past four years, I've been putting $400 a month into a credit union and have not done anything else with that money, for fear of losing it.

I have read a lot of newspaper articles, books and magazines and have talked to brokers, investment advisers and financial planners about mutual funds. But I'm still not sure about taking that step. As a matter of fact, I've been trying to make up my mind for the last 10 months. Do you have any suggestions?

Doyle

A. There's nothing wrong with the way you are approaching mutual fund investments. That's not procrastination. You're showing good common sense by studying up on the subject before putting your money on the line.

By this time you should be well aware that there are many different types of mutual funds — everything from money market mutual funds, which have virtually no risk but provide low yields, to aggressive common stock funds, which can be very risky but hold out possibilities of high financial rewards.

In between, there are various kinds of funds with differing risk-reward ratios. The higher the risk, the greater the potential for profit.

You have to make up your own mind as to how much risk you are willing to take. As relatively young person, you should be able to accept a moderate degree of risk.

A good common stock fund seems suitable for you. Before you invest in any fund, study its prospectus and its record of past performance. I'd advise you to stay away from very aggressive funds, those whose share values take drastic changes. Although such funds often do exceptionally well during times the stock market is rising, they can plunge during down markets.

After you've done some more studying and picked a mutual fund, start off with an investment of $1,000 or $2,000 — the minimum most funds accept.

Then, add steady investment of $100 or $200 a month. That way, you'll be "dollar averaging" — buying more shares when prices are high and fewer shares when prices are low. You'll avoid the ulcers that go with trying to pick the "right" or "best" time to invest.

If you have been reading this column as part of your investment education, you should know it's wise to buy a true no-load mutual fund, in order to avoid unnecessary costs.

Q. I had my individual retirement account transferred from a brokerage firm mutual fund to a different mutual fund organization. I received a statement from the brokerage firm showing that my shares in that fund were redeemed January 1. I also received a statement from the other fund organization showing that my money reached there February 5.

Between those two dates, the per share price of the second fund went from $15.32 to $16.30. I have been trying to get satisfaction ever since. Should it have taken so long for my money to be transferred?

A. No. The money from the shares you redeemed should have been available by January 13, seven days after the redemption. Assuming the IRA transfer papers were in order, that money could have been sent to the other mutual fund organization immediately.

But it's like pulling teeth to get money out of some brokerage organizations. The New York Stock Exchange claims it has cracked down on the slow transfer of IRA money from its member firms. However, letters such as yours continue to come in.

Take your complaint to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Q. I redeemed shares of a brokerage firm mutual fund at a brokerage subsidiary of that firm and was informed the money could not be released before the end of the seven-day waiting period. Since this was, in effect, an "in-house" sale, I say I should have had the money right away. Am I right?

A. Nope. Even though it's run by a brokerage firm, that mutual fund is a separate entity and does not have to release money for redeemed fund shares until the seven days are up.

KELLEHER

"We wouldn't be buying more fuel efficient airplanes if we didn't think energy prices were coming back," he said.

After record earnings in 1986, a year of extreme downturn, Southwest, the most profitable airline in the industry, recorded its first loss in 16 years in the first quarter of this year. "We did not respond to the 'max-saver' fares soon enough," said Kelleher who explained that the airline had just installed its new reservation system when competition initiated the fares and that Southwest did not geared up with the new system and its Fun Fares until April.

He said 'max-saver' fares — extraordinarily low fares predicated on a number of restrictions, including advance, non-cancelable reservations and seat availability — would probably not hurt the airline industry but could help fill up airplanes.

"We probably fly 90 percent of the time with less than a full airplane," said Kelleher, "but we would make more money if we make more money if we had a paying passenger in every seat."

He said max-saver fares had helped to fill some of the seats, but Southwest had gone one further with $15 standby fares for students under 24 years of age.

"This is one of the biggest innovations in ticketing that we have ever come up with and the ultimate in filling the last seat," boasted Kelleher. "It is strictly a standby fare for students and they are not allowed to check baggage. Tickets will be sold in certain convenience stores."

Other plans Kelleher has for increasing Southwest revenues are increasing its presence in Chicago, Phoenix, St. Louis, Birmingham and Detroit.

Addressing the question of airline safety, he said that contrary to opinion flying is safer after deregulation than before, but there is need for improvements within the system.

He said that 8 percent of each airline ticket goes into a federal fund for airports and air control, but each administration refuses to spend the money for budgetary reasons.

"There is now $5.8 billion dollars in this fund to improve air traffic control and airports and it will be $10 billion by 1990. It needs to be spent on better air traffic control and new airports. There has not been a new airport built in this country since DFW in 1974," he said. "Everybody wants to fly but nobody wants an airport."

As for the future, he says the industry is on the threshold of bold new technology. Kelleher says planes of the future will be controlled by fiberoptics and computers and will be stall-proof.

LIVING

Led by a new electric rebate program, residential utility bills plunged 8.7 percent in April. Gas rates dropped 3.8 percent while electric bills declined 20.4 percent due to the new rebate program. Local water rates remained stable. Over the last year, a 10.6 percent increase has been measured for Midland utilities; however, the last six months have shown an 11.9 percent decline.

Couple's hobby lights up their life

By ARLENE TURKEL

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — Grabbing early retirement, Jeannie and Joe Sherrill rubbed a brass lamp and wished for a bright future.

They started their hobby by rescuing a rusty old lamp from a garage sale three years ago.

"We call it the Joe Stevens lamp, after (my husband's) former boss," Mrs. Sherrill says.

She noticed the lamp during a garage sale at Stevens' home and remembers saying, "Wouldn't this be pretty if someone could redo it?" He immediately handed it to her.

Using steel wool and sandpaper, she sanded rust off the brass finish. Then she applied gray primer, let it dry well, and finally applied antique white paint over most of the brass. She and her husband found new globes for it at another garage sale.

Finding parts of lamps at flea markets and garage sales comes in handy. The couple even buys chandeliers with missing parts.

A collection favorite is a 1900 coal oil lamp with a wick, which Sherrill converted to electricity. Solid brass with nickel plating, it has since been stripped, buffed, polished and laquered.

The Sherrills completely disassemble lamps, replace wiring with new cords and replace felt pads on the bottoms. Sometimes they replace removable harps on which the shades hang, changing them to accommodate differently sized shades. Sherrill may put a new switch into an old socket to retain the antique look, or change the entire socket if it's in terrible shape.

When he replaces worn cord, he uses a longer replacement. If a white cord is discolored, bleach removes the stain. "I try to replace them with the same color cord — if I think they're original."

Cords are one indication of a lamp's relative age, but it is unusual to find one with its original cord and shade, Sherrill says.

"A lot of old lamps have wrapped silk-thread cords," he says, holding a Depression-era lamp. "I don't know what year they switched to extruded plastic."

A former Stanley Co. salesman tells them that the company presented lovely lamps as hostess gifts during the 1930s and '40s. The Sherrills own two. One is an Aladdin, which Sherrill calls "the Cadillac of lamps in their day," when they made kerosene lamps.

For a pretty and practical effect, some lamps have both a night light in the base and a standard light under the shade.

"When I see one with a pull chain, that leads me to believe it's older than the others," he says. Holding a pull-chain lamp in the shape of a Japanese woman, he debates whether it's worth redoing the base with 24-carat gold paint. It would be attractive, but a serious lamp collector might not want that, he says.

One flea market surprise was finding a lamp that just looked like a handpainted vase on a shelf. It even had roses sticking in it. The Sherrills recognized it as a lamp from its hardware holes.

They prize any signed lamps, and matching pairs of old lamps. "Usually one is busted," Sherrill says.

Household conditions affect lamps over a period of time, he says. "Lamps look pretty awful from houses that heated with wood or coal-burning fireplaces."

Most of their collection is American, and judging from sockets and hardware, some are English.

One lamp that has them wondering is made from a three-inch projectile like that used in an army tank. Bullets and shells have been cut in half and soldered onto it for decoration, and bullets hang from the ends of several pull chains. They think it may be from World War I.

Man searches for pioneers' springs

Retired geologist finds hobby 'drying up'

By JAY JORDEN

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — A modern-day Ponce de Leon who traveled Texas looking for the flowing springs that gave life to the state's early settlers instead found many springs had dried up and others were dying.

In a 10-year search across some 20,000 miles, Gunnar Brune found that only one-third of the 10,000 or so springs that existed before Texas' colonization remain today.

"Urbanization and the general increase in population takes its toll," the retired geologist said. "The biggest cause is well pumping."

Brune wrote a report for the Texas Water Development Board warning that heavy urbanization and crop irrigation threaten springs and the groundwater aquifers from which they emerge.

A book Brune wrote in 1981 detailing his findings from 183 counties identifies Texas' growing population and its demands for food and drinking water as the culprits.

At age 72, Brune says it's doubtful he'll visit springs in the rest of the state's 254 counties. He plans to leave the research, and possible solutions, to others.

"I probably could not afford to put out another book," he says. "It was more or less a hobby at first, and a pretty expensive one. I don't expect to get back more than 10 percent of what I spent."

Springs have been important to Texans since the first colonization of the state by Spanish explorers. Indians, who used spring water to irrigate crops long before the arrival of Europeans, often marked springs by placing arrows nearby.

Many battles were fought for the springs' control. At least 200 Texas communities were named for springs at which they were located, and the spring-rich Balcones Fault, running diagonally to the northeast across the state, attracted many settlements.

"...Springs...are merely the overflow of groundwater. Even the springs here in Arlington are about gone now. They were only a pool of water recently."

— Gunnar Brune, retired geologist

Brune's book and 1975 report for the water development board said groundwater withdrawn for irrigation amounts to about 80 percent of the total used in Texas. In recent years, thousands of small springs have dried up and the flow of larger springs has been curtailed. Paving and construction have prevented recharge of aquifers.

"The situation is still getting worse generally," Brune says.

The flow of springs mirrors the availability of groundwater in aquifers, on which the state's residents and economy depend.

"I really got interested in springs while working for the water development board," says Brune, who had worked 33 years for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. "I was working in groundwater at TWDB, but their main interest was in helping people find water, helping exploit groundwater.

"I didn't realize that the water tables are going down all the time and springs are failing."

Pumping for residential and industrial use lowered the water table by as much as 700 feet around Fort Worth in recent years, Brune says.

"You can imagine what that does to springs, which are merely the overflow of groundwater," he says. "Even the springs here in Arlington are about gone now. They were only a pool of water recently."

Mary Le Bone Springs, which flowed from sandstone into Mill Creek in south Arlington, was the site of an Indian settlement in the 1700s. Texas Ranger Col. Middleton Johnson's unit was stationed there from 1846 to 1850 and a trading post and stagecoach stop sprang up. The surrounding land was later bulldozed and the springs partially buried.

"But wells were the main factor in these springs' decline," Brune says.

The springs' site in the Woodbine sandstone became a Texas Historical Commission landmark in 1979.

"It began to hit me how badly the springs are suffering," Brune says. "No one seemed to worry very much in the water development board. In fact, some were even recommending we should draw water tables down so that trees and other vegetation could not use the water and transpire it.

"In those days, that was the attitude they took. They were not much concerned about the aesthetic value of springs."

The Edwards Aquifer in Central Texas, which produces many of the state's largest springs, is threatened by overuse and the proposed 30-inch All American Pipeline that would cross it, Brune says.

The Texas Attorney General's office filed suit against the pipeline company and the Bureau of Land Management on the grounds that the system's Environmental Impact Statement did not adequately examine consequences for the aquifer.

"The aquifer is fluctuating a lot these days due to heavy pumping," says Brune. "And the Edwards is subject to very easy pollution."

The aquifer provides all of the water for San Antonio, the state's third-largest city with 786,023 residents, and is the primary water source for more than 1 million additional Central Texas residents.

"Where the water is recharged into the aquifer is through sinkholes," Brune says. "Any material of a certain size can also drain in. Corncobs have been known to come out of springs in Central Texas. So far, there has been no serious pollution measured in any springs, but it could easily happen."

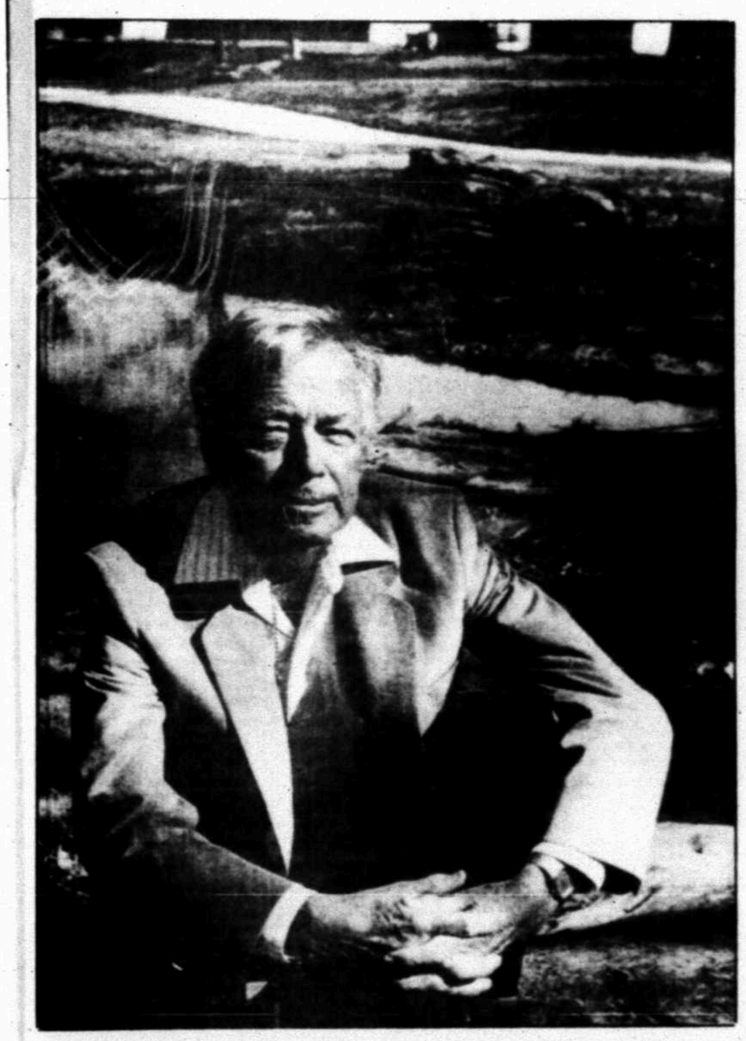

The Edwards supplies Comal Springs, the state's biggest, and San Marcos Springs, the second largest, along with Barton Springs in Austin and San Antonio Springs.

The aquifer also is home to rare and endangered animals, including the federally protected Texas Blind Salamander.

"Some say Texas is not overpopulated, that there are plenty of wide open spaces," says Brune. "But many of these spaces produce beef and crops for other areas of the country that are overpopulated and it puts a strain on our resources.

"At the rate we are going, the future is gloomy. So many (plant and animal) species are becoming extinct when we stop the flow of these springs, someone estimated that one species is going out of existence every minute or so.

"If that continues, this earth will not be what is used to be," Brune says. "I don't know how long we can survive if this state changes that drastically."

One-of-a-kind black history collection finds home at Tulane

EDITOR'S NOTE — It takes its name from a mutiny aboard a slave ship that galvanized the abolitionist movement in America. Today the Amistad Research Center houses this country's richest collection of material dealing with black and ethnic life. And it recently found a new home, at a Southern university that once refused to admit black students.

By PHILIP DRYSDALE

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Carved African statues collected by W.E.B. Dubois are on display in the new reading room. The piano on which Fletcher Henderson learned to play nestles under a staircase.

Next to the piano is a model of La Amistad, the ship aboard which a slave revolt galvanized the anti-slavery movement in America.

They are parts of a treasure trove for scholars called the Amistad collection, a repository of more than eight million manuscripts dating back to the late 1700s, this country's fullest and richest collection of material dealing with black and ethnic life.

Once it was austerely tucked away on the third floor of the Old U.S. Mint, where the occasional tourist might wander by looking for the Jazz Museum. Much of its collection of African art was stored.

Today the Amistad Research Center is housed at the entrance to the Tulane University campus in Tilton Hall. Its new home was officially dedicated in early April.

"The acquisition of this collection adds not only to the vitality of scholarship on campus, but to our scholarly reputation as a major research institution," says Tulane President Eamon Kelly.

To Clifton Johnson, the director of the research center, the challenge is to prove that it can benefit Tulane, its fourth home in a decade.

Inside are records concerning the South Carolina Colored Regiments, among the first made up of former slaves, that historian Willie Lee Rose used in writing "Rehearsal for Reconstruction: The Port Royal Experiment."

Here also are the records of the Southern Tenant Farmers Association that Theodore Rosengarten brought to life in his National Book Award-winning "All God's Dangers, The Biography of Nate Shaw."

And then there are the records of the 1839 incident from which the collection takes its name.

THE AMISTAD Incident began when 53 African slaves took control of La Amistad as it was transporting them from Havana to the Cuban port of Guanaja. Three days out to sea the Africans, under the leadership of Cinque, mutinied, killed the captain and a member of the crew, then ordered the men who had purchased them to set a course for Africa.

Cinque could steer by the sun during the day, but at night the Cubans steered north and west. After 63 days of zigging and zagging, the Amistad arrived off Montauk, Long Island, where the ship and its cargo of slaves were seized by an American warship for salvage.

The Cubans in turn sued to recover their property and charged the adult males with murder and piracy.

A group of abolitionists led by Lewis Tappan, Simeon Joycelyn and Arthur Leavitt volunteered to provide legal assistance to the Africans.

The diplomatic negotiations and lawsuits lasted more than a year. John Quincy Adams argued the case before the United States Supreme Court, which ruled in 1841 that the Africans were free.

The records of the defense committee form the core of the Amistad collection, from the appeals for clothing and money to reports on the Africans' religious instruction and progress in English.

Among the letters of thanks written by the Africans is one bound into a Bible that was presented to Adams:

"Mendi people will remember you when we go to our own country we will tell our friends about you and we will say to them Mr. Adams is a great man and he plead for us and how glad we be and our friends will love you very much Oh because wasa a very good man and Oh how joyfull we shall be. We hope the great God will send down His holy spirit upon you and have mercy upon you...we write this because you plead for us. We give you good love."

After the successful resolution of the Amistad case, the members of the Amistad committee founded the American Missionary Society, one of the leading organizations in the anti-slavery movement.

AMONG THE institutional records is the correspondence among the people that devoted their lives to the cause of abolition and the later battles to aid the newly freed slaves.

A letter from Laura Haviland, written during the impeachment crisis of President Andrew Johnson, bemoans the weakened state of the Freedmen's Bureau under the Johnson administration.

"Andy has crippled everything but the Rebels, and they are loud and defiant in their mein," she wrote.

Then, with the combination of evangelical fervor and shrewd political sense that the veterans of the abolitionist movement developed, she continues:

"I think Grant looks better in shoulder straps than in the White House. Perhaps I was in his division a little too long during the war to be prepossessed in his favor."

Johnson says, "We don't just go looking for papers of the elite. That's the trouble with American history and that's the trouble with what has been written about black history — 'He was the first to so-and-so or she was the first, or they were so-called black leaders.'

"What we're trying to do is really document black life, day to day. Family relations, community activities, the new concept of history, social rather than elitist history."

The origins of the collection date back to 1950, when Johnson started teaching history at LeMoyne College, a predominantly black institution in Memphis, Tenn., founded by the American Missionary Association.

At the time, Johnson, a doctoral candidate at the University of Georgia, was planning to write his dissertation on Joe Brown, the Civil War governor of Georgia. Despite his personal interest in black history, he had never heard of the American Missionary Association until he began teaching at LeMoyne.

"AND THAT'S really horrible when you think about someone who has as much American history as I had, the American Missionary Association — which grew out of the Amistad Incident — and all of its educational work and all the schools it founded and its importance in Reconstruction. And I had never heard of it," Johnson said.

"So I began to re-educate myself."

That re-education led Johnson to write his dissertation on the American Missionary Association and to the association's files, which form the core of the Amistad collection, then stored at Fisk University in Nashville.

When the AMA asked Johnson to return to Fisk University in the early 1960s to organize the records, he proposed creating the Amistad Research Center. The center was established in 1966.

From the beginning, Johnson said, he began to come across other collections of papers, unrelated to the American Missionary Association, "that needed a home, needed care, they needed to be accessible to scholars."

By 1969 the Amistad Research center was independent, incorporated, raising its own money and growing.

It was the demand for space that led Johnson to move the center from Fisk to Dillard University in New Orleans then, in 1980, to the Old U.S. Mint in the French Quarter, a place Johnson said he felt would be adequate for 10 to 15 years. By late 1983 the center needed to move again.

Johnson began discussing a possible move to the Hampton Institute, another AMA-founded school, but word got out and other schools, including Harvard, the University of North Carolina, Mississippi, Prairie View and Tulane, began to inquire about having the center move onto their campus.

"Quite frankly, some members of my board were concerned about the Amistad Research Center going onto any campus that had been traditionally white, and especially a campus that had at one time denied admission to blacks, such as Tulane or the University of Mississippi," Johnson said.

Former Mayor Ernest Morial, who is black, persuaded the presidents of nine local institutions of higher education to form a consortium to support the move to Tulane.

In addition, Johnson said, a local group of supporters called Friends of Amistad collected hundreds of signatures in the black community in support of the move.

The head archivist, Florence Borders, says some new undertakings are in the works, such as a proposal by Vietnamese students to begin collecting oral histories from local Vietnamese refugees and plans for a series of projects with the campus black students' association.

"Approximately 12 percent of Tulane's student body is made up of minority students, about five percent are black," Kelly says. "The majority of the city is black.

"So it's important to maintain an active presence in the minority community, in the city and the state.'

Legislation 'closes gaps' in education

WASHINGTON (AP) — Months of negotiations over bilingual education and other potentially explosive topics culminated in near-unanimous House passage of a wide-ranging education bill.

The School Improvement Act, passed 401-1 on Thursday, consolidates 14 programs that touch nearly every elementary and secondary school child in the nation, expanding in some areas and renewing all programs until 1993.

"We've expanded our commitment to the nation's children and closed the gap between the haves and the have-nots in education," said Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

The sweeping bill contains programs for low-income and low-achieving children, preschoolers and high-school dropouts, gifted and talented students, math, science and foreign language teachers, students with limited English skills and many other groups.

The overall budgets approved by the Senate and House contain enough money to pay for the higher spending authorized in the omnibus House bill. Actual fiscal 1988 outlays for the House-approved programs will not be determined until an education appropriations bill is passed.

The education authorization bill calls for $779 million in education spending above current levels — the first time the House has backed a real increase in domestic spending in several sessions of Congress, according to Hawkins.

Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill., was the only lawmaker voting against the bill.

"We tried to work out the controversies behind the scenes," Hawkins said. He said the overwhelming bipartisan vote makes it likely the Senate will act quickly on a companion measure and unlikely any significant opposition will arise.

One of the only floor debates Wednesday concerned an unsuccessful attempt by Rep. Bill Grant, D-Fla., to bar federal funds for youth suicide prevention courses until the Education Department studies such activities further. School districts are allowed to use education block grants to develop the courses if they wish.

Grant said many experts fear "death education" courses could spark suicide epidemics among teens. "It's not that we don't want to deal with the problem, we don't want to aggravate the problem," he said.

Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., said his son committed suicide the day he was released from a hospital and his teen-age granddaughter is hospitalized now after trying to kill herself. He said it would be "a very great mistake" to delay federal aid for voluntary grass roots education efforts.

The amendment was rejected by voice vote.

A floor battle over bilingual education was averted by a delicate compromise between the demands of the Reagan administration and members of the Hispanic caucus. It authorizes more money in the future for teaching methods that use English, as the administration had sought. But the native-language programs now required of almost all grant recipients will continue to receive at least as much money as they get now.

The largest single item in the bill is the government's Chapter 1 program for low-income and educationally disadvantaged children. The bill authorizes $4.1 billion for basic grants for Chapter 1 services, $200 million higher than current spending.

More money would be targeted to the poorest areas, and districts would have to prove they are getting results to keep getting money. New Chapter 1 services would include a $100 million dropout prevention program and a $50 million "even start" program combining literacy training for parents with preschool education for their children.

In addition, the bill calls for $30 million to help pay for vans, mobile classrooms and other equipment needed to provide Chapter 1 services to religious school students. A 1985 Supreme Court ruling barred public school teachers from teaching in the private schools.

Other major authorizations:

— $759 million to offset the revenue loss suffered by school districts that contain tax-exempt federal installations. Current spending is $695 million. A lengthy floor dispute over the distribution formula ended with a decision to resolve the problem in conference with the Senate.

— $580 million in education block grants, about $50 million higher than current spending.

— $246 million for bilingual education, nearly double current spending.

— $200 million for adult education, almost twice the $109 million currently being spent.

— $25 million for a new gifted and talented program named after the late Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y.

Goetz defense opens with testimony from '81 mugging

NEW YORK (AP) — The defense opened its case in the trial of Bernhard Goetz with testimony portraying him as a crime victim who once had been jumped and beaten so badly that he was plagued by a painful "crunching" in his knee.

Defense attorney Barry Slotnick called to the stand Thursday a Sanitation Department law officer who witnessed three men punching and kicking Goetz on a street in 1981, and the doctor who treated him for his injuries.

The attack occurred four years before Goetz opened fire on a subway train, wounding four young men who he said were about to rob him. One of those shot, Troy Canty, 20, has testified he asked Goetz for $5 and was merely panhandling. Goetz, 39, is charged with attempted murder, assault, reckless endangerment and weapons violations in the 1984 shooting.

The Sanitation Department law officer, Charles Cozza, said he saw Goetz chased and attacked by three men on Jan. 21, 1981.

He said two assailants fled as he approached, but the third continued kicking Goetz, who had fallen to the ground, Cozza said. The officer said he grabbed the man, Fred Clark, and handcuffed him.

Clark was charged with assault, criminal mischief and harassment, and later pleaded guilty to criminal mischief.

Cozza said Goetz told him the three had tried to rob him. Cozza said he saw only the beating, and there were no witnesses to the alleged robbery.

Dr. Murray E. Burton, an orthopedic surgeon, testified he treated Goetz for 15 months in 1982 and 1983 for a kneecap problem characterized by "pain and crunching." He said he believed the condition was caused by the 1981 mugging.

Assistant District Attorney Gregory Waples suggested during cross-examination that Goetz was unhappy with police because Clark was not charged with robbery.

Cozza, under questioning by Waples, said he couldn't remember Goetz telling police, "Whatever you want me to say, I'll say. If you want me to lie, I'll lie."

Earlier in the day, the defense asked for dismissal of all charges against Goetz, arguing that the prosecution had not proved its case.

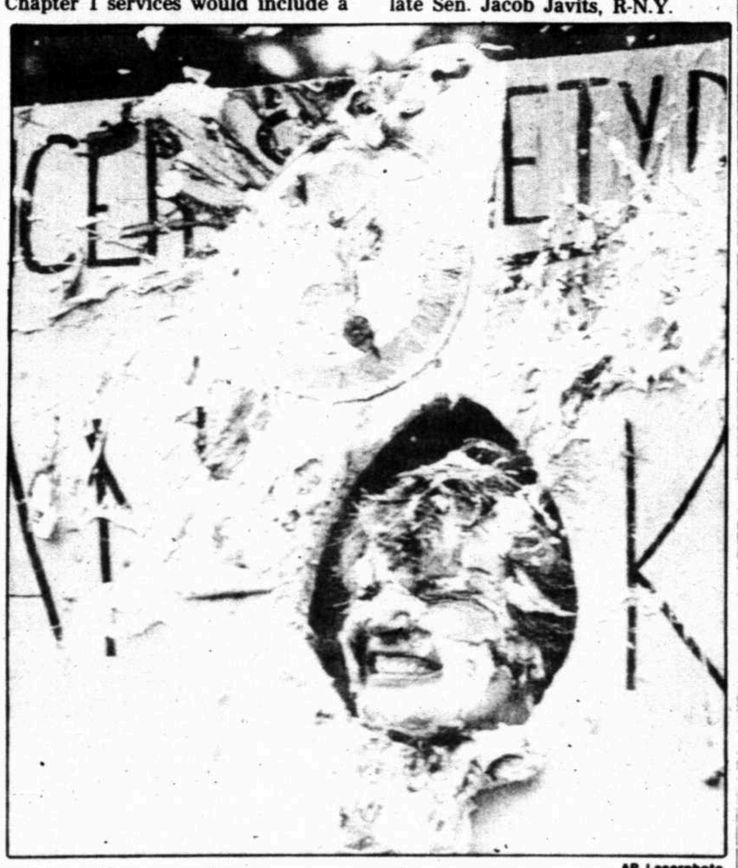

The judge, Stephen G. Crane, refused to dismiss charges of criminal possession of firearms, but reserved decision on the more serious counts of attempted murder, assault and reckless endangerment. He did not say when he would rule.

The defense has said it will call seven or eight witnesses. The lawyers have not said whether Goetz would testify.

The judge rejected a defense request to present as witnesses up to five people who had been crime victims more than once.

Defense attorney Mark Baker had argued that they could testify how their experience helped them recognize that they were about to become victims a second time.

The judge responded, "If your witnesses are not telling us anything but war stories...it may be interesting (but) they may not be reasonable people."

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Lexicographer Noah Webster walked with the ladies to the Bettering House. He remarked that the gardens were elegant.

This afternoon, Jacob Hiltzheimer went to the funeral for David Erwin's wife. She was taken from Robert Erwin's house in Sixth Street and buried in the Friend's graveyard.

The City Street Commissioners met and paid several bills for materials and labor on the Fourth Street sewer. Also, since the commissioners had had frequent complaints about carts and drays parking on sidewalks they appointed Mr. Geyer to draft an ad warning the guilty carters and draymen.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Only Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and North Carolina had at least two delegates present, so Congress again lacked a quorum.

The attitude that lack of a quorum had on those delegates who were present is shown in a letter North Carolina delegate Robert Barton wrote today to Gov. Caswell. Barton had arrived in New York on the 15th; there hadn't been a quorum of Congress since and there were only a few members in town. He was going home until he heard that Congress would be able to meet, when he would again attend.

CONVENTION TODAY

The delegates on hand again met at the State House at 1:00 p.m. North Carolina now had a quorum of its delegates, so five states were represented.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson remained in Hartford at the Connecticut General Assembly's session. On this day, James Duane wrote him on behalf of the trustees of Columbia College to inform him of his unanimous election as president of Columbia College. Duane said he'd told the trustees that Johnson would accept.

Benjamin Franklin presided at a meeting of Pennsylvania's Supreme Executive Council in the council's chamber on the second floor of the State House.

George Washington dined and drank tea at Mr. Morris'.

William Blount wrote from New York to his brother, John Gray Blount:

"I am this day informed that Williamson, Spaight and Martin are at Philadelphia or I should have set out for that place on tomorrow or next day intolerable as traveling certainly would have proved to my Breech, at present it is uncertain when I shall go but certainly not till I am quite well unless my Colleagues should inform me of a greater Necessity for my coming than I at present conceive ... Spaight has informed me that you have sent me by him 200 dollars for which I am obliged to you. I fear I shall want another 100 ...

"(P.S.) Colonel Burton has been here about a Week and will (I believe) set out for home in two days with an Intent to return here in 6 or 8 Weekes which will be as soon as there will probably be (a) Congress — at present there are only four States. There will not be a Congress again before the Convention rises."

LOOKING BACK
Anne Willing Bingham, Philadelphia Hostess

Two hundred years ago last night George Washington dined at the Bingham residence at Third and Spruce. On July 2, July 10, and Sept. 5 the general was invited to tea. June 13 he records visiting the Binghams for the evening and on Aug. 10 returned for dinner.

Anne Willing Bingham was an outstanding Philadelphia hostess in 1787. She was the daughter of Thomas Willing, an early partner of Robert Morris. Her aunt, Elizabeth, was married to Samuel Powel, Philadelphia's last mayor before the Revolution and first mayor after the Revolution.

Her husband, William, had served as continental agent in the West Indies during much of the Revolution. He served succesively in the Continental Congress, the Pennsylvania Assembly, and the United States Senate.

From 1784 to 1786 the Bingham's traveled in Europe. They were received at the Court of Louis XVI of France and George III of England. Abagail Adams, wife of the ambassador in London, wrote of Mrs. Bingham: "Her elegance and beauty attracted more admiration than, perhaps was willingly expressed in the old Court of George the Third."

This beauty presided over an avant-garde court back in Philadelphia, amid the splendor of marble staircase and elegant furniture. Her beauty and gracious hospitality made her home a choice spot for visiting dignitaries.

Basement apartment fire kills six while sleeping

CHICAGO (AP) — A smoky fire broke out in a basement apartment early today, killing six people, including four children, and critically injuring one other child, authorities said.

The fire, which broke out about 2 a.m., was confined to a bedroom in the apartment and brought quickly under control, said Fire Department spokesman Jerry Lawrence said. The apartment did not have a smoke detector, he said.

The victims were asleep when the blaze started and died apparently of smoke inhalation, Lawrence said.

"Detectors...might have provided the early warning necessary for the residents to escape, particularly considering how minor the fire was," he said.

Officials at five hospitals listed six dead in the fire — four children, ages 4 to about 7, a woman about 25 years old and another woman in her late 20s.

A 1-year-old was in critical condition at Children's Memorial Hospital, said spokeswoman Karen Shepherd.

The cause of the fire was under investigation, Lawrence said. The three-story brick building was being remodeled, he said.

Army OKs equipment work

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army has authorization today to start work on equipment that will be carried by a new generation of helicopters, but a decision has yet to be made on the type of craft involved.

The authorization from Richard P. Godwin is viewed as at least a temporary victory for proponents of a "tilt-rotor" craft to replace the Army's aging inventory of light helicopters.

The Army has never flatly ruled out the tilt-rotor technology, but has been proceeding on the assumption that it needs an advanced, rotary-blade chopper resembling existing helicopters. The tilt-rotor design features a conventional airplane fuselage with propellers that can be rotated to a vertical position for take-offs and landings.

Godwin on Thursday authorized the Army to start work on the "mission equipment package" that will be needed for either type. In the meantime, he said, the Army will select an independent contractor "to evaluate competing airframe technologies."

Delegation visits Hanoi

WASHINGTON (AP) — Determining the fate of American servicemen missing in Vietnam tops the agenda today for a U.S. delegation that is visiting Hanoi for meetings with Vietnamese officials.

The U.S. delegation, which left for Hanoi on Thursday, hopes to lay the groundwork for more formal talks between the Vietnamese and retired Army Gen. John Vessey, assigned by President Reagan last fall to deal with the MIA issue. The United States has listed some 2,500 servicemen as missing in action from the Vietnam war.

The United States says Vessey is only be empowered to discuss the MIA issue, while the Vietnamese have sought to link the subject to an overall discussion about improving political ties with Washington.

'Debt owed' emphasized

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's Memorial Day message to the men and women of the U.S. military this year emphasizes the debt owed "to those who fell in battle."

Reagan's meassage was released Thursday, less than a week after 37 crewmen of the USS Stark were killed in an attack in the Persian Gulf.

"This Memorial Day we remember with solemn pride and gratitude America's sons and daughters who have paid the ultimate price for the preservation of freedom," Reagan said.

"The debt we owe to those who have left home and family to serve this cause is beyond measure. But our greatest debt of all is to those who fell in battle."

Military new recruits up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's armed services have more new recruits today than predicted six months ago, but three of the four are having trouble meeting re-enlistment goals.

New recruit totals were boosted by greater success in attracting high school graduates, the Pentagon said Thursday. Overall, the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps enlisted 152,000 men and women during the first six months of the fiscal year, exceeding a combined goal of 150,900.

Drug rule safeguarded

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drug companies will bear a greater burden to show that experimental drugs are safe and effective under a new rule making it easier for victims of AIDS and other life-threatening diseases to obtain the treatments.

The final version of the new federal regulation was issued Thursday and takes effect in 30 days.
