Storms prowl region, more forecast for today

Compiled from local reports and The Associated Press

Tornado-producing thunderstorms roamed the Top O' Texas area and remainder of the Panhandle Tuesday afternoon and evening and more are likely today.

The National Weather Service at Amarillo this morning reported unstable air remaining over the area today would be affected by a cold front moving in from the Rocky Mountains.

Forecasters said they expected thunderstorms today and tonight with the probability that some of the thunderstorms could be severe. They said probability of rain would be 60 percent today, 70 percent tonight and 30 percent Thursday.

Early today thunderstorms were beginning to develop in the Panhandle and the South Plains. Shortly after 6 this morning a thunderstorm moved through the Pampa area, bringing an additional .25 inch of rainfall, accompanied by lightning and thunder. Panhandle reported rain and some small hail.

But, the storms were more severe early today to the southwest of the Top O' Texas. About 15-20 persons suffered minor injuries early today when a tornado roared through Seminole in West Texas, the Texas Department of Public Safety said.

At least three persons who apparently suffered more serious injuries were taken from Seminole to hospitals in Hobbs, N.M., the National Weather Service reported.

The tornado at Seminole was one of several reported in West Texas and North Texas during the night.

Gaines County jailer Dale Compton said there were no reports of fatalities at Seminole although damage to both businesses and the residential was heavy.

One business in Seminole was believed to have been destroyed, according to DPS spokesman Larry Todd at Austin. The county jail was one of the buildings damaged, said Gaines. He said part of the roof was destroyed and several windows were knocked out.

Officers searched during the pre-dawn hours to find injured persons.

Tuesday afternoon's weather began developing about 3:30 p.m. when a tornado was sighted near Goodnight, heading towards Gray County. Several minutes later the NWS reported a severe storm southwest of Groom, headed towards Pampa. Law enforcement officers in the area spotted several funnels near Groom, with "the one big one," according to highway patrolman Jim Kingston, confirmed by Amarillo radar.

"It started south of Claude," Kingston told the News, "and came toward Groom, then went right over the top of it," then "came around the town, touching down several times." All the touchdowns appeared to be in open land, with no damage reported. Heavy rain and some hail accompanied the twister.

There was also a report at this time of a "bad cloud heading towards Miami."

About 4 p.m. black clouds moved into the Pampa area, accompanied by heavy rain and hail. Marble-sized hail was reported by local law enforcement officers.

At 4:15 p.m. Tuesday reports were received of another cell north-northeast of Groom, with a tornado on the ground. NWS radar indicated this storm was headed towards Pampa.

A representative of The Pampa News followed this storm which moved northwards, however, staying west of Farm Road 2300, and passed over the Celanese plant west of the city. The thunderstorm produced heavy rain and light hail as it passed through Gray County, staying to the west of Pampa.

Several times on its northward travel the storm cell attempted to produce a funnel, but each time the twisting tail returned to the cloud mass without touching the ground. Sightings of these funnels about 10 miles south of town prompted issuance of a tornado warning for the area.

Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan notified local officers, watching the storms from various vantage points in the city and county at 4:18 that the barometric pressure had fallen rapidly, down to "27 plus." About 5 p.m. the sheriff reported the barometer "is going back up."

Shortly before 5 p.m. Pampa's tornado warning sirens sounded, but the Pampa Police Department reported they had not been set off to warn residents of a tornado. Apparently strong winds and heavy rains had shorted the siren system, a police spokesperson reported.

At approximately 5:30 p.m. a funnel was reportedly sighted at Kingsmill. However, a Pampa News representative in Kingsmill at the time saw no funnel, but did see clouds with ragged bottom edges which somewhat resembled funnels.

Although there were a number of unconfirmed sightings of funnels near Panhandle Tuesday afternoon, a source at the city office said there was no confirmed weather activity at all there — although the town had "a good rain and some hail" this morning.

Numerous other tornadoes were sighted during the night across a vast portion of West Texas and in some areas of North Texas and North Central Texas.

Much of West Texas was under a tornado watch early today. The area covered by the tornado watch was along and 70 miles on either side of a line from 35 miles northeast of Plainview to 35 miles southeast of San Angelo.

One person was slightly injured after a storm believed to have been a tornado struck Coppell in the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex. The injured person stepped on a nail while walking through some storm debris, authorities said.

About 14 homes were damaged and some mobile homes were damaged at Coppell.

The National Weather Service warned that a major severe weather outbreak was possible in North Texas today and said severe weather was also possible in South Texas.

Forecasters said extremely unstable air and abundant low level moisture was expected to couple with an approaching very intense upper air disturbance this afternoon to produce violent thunderstorms.

The area expected to receive the severe weather was from North Central Texas northward into Oklahoma and Kansas.

Only a small area of North Texas was likely to receive severe weather, but forecasters said the storm system could produce large hail, damaging winds, heavy rains and possible tornadoes.

There were reports of hail and street flooding at Brownfield and Lubbock and some reports of streets and highways flooding at low water crossings in the San Antonio area.

Numerous tornado warnings were issued throughout the night in West Texas. A tornado was sighted by severe weather spotters about 10 miles southeast of the Abilene Municipal Airport, prompting forecasters to issue a tornado warning for residents of Callahan and Shackelford Counties. The warning was cancelled at 6 a.m.

A severe thunderstorm caused wind damage at Del Rio late Tuesday after winds gusted to 72 mph.

That storm system moved northward into the San Antonio and Austin areas, causing some high winds, small hail and heavy rain.

Numerous severe thunderstorm warnings were issued during the night covering a vast area of Texas, from Del Rio on the Texas-Mexico border northward into North Texas and from far West Texas along the New Mexico-Texas border eastward into North Central Texas.

A very heavy thunderstorm moved into the Houston area early today, producing heavy rainfall and strong gusty winds. Some street flooding was reported in northern sections of Houston along Interstate 45 near Farm Road 1960.

Tornado kills two, air base hit

ALTUS, Okla. (AP) — A tornado that whipped through Altus Air Force Base and killed two people in a nearby mobile home has caused at least $1 million damage to two giant C-5A cargo planes and other facilities at the base, officials say.

The funnel cloud — one of 30 that darted through Jackson County in far southwestern Oklahoma about 6 p.m. Tuesday — killed 4-year-old Susan Michelle Cook and Rhonda Price, 25, in Friendship, a town of 300 people about eight miles northeast of Altus.

At least 31 people suffered injuries related to the storm. Highway Patrol and Civil Defense officials said.

Six tornadoes touched down near Altus, including the one that plowed into the base where pilots are trained to fly the cargo planes, the Highway Patrol said.

Winds from the storm tore the roofs off four barracks, damaged two C-5As and their hangars and destroyed the base service station, said Staff Sgt. James Harper, base public affairs officer.

Tornadoes were also sighted in the Texas Panhandle, north-central Kansas and south-central Nebraska. Baseball-sized hail was reported at Hitchland, Texas.

The National Weather Service said 2 inches of rain fell at Sedalia, Mo., while 1 inch was recorded in Moberly in one hour. Minor flooding was reported in some areas.

An Oklahoma Highway Patrol spokesman said a $1 million damage estimate would be "very, very conservative" since the two planes are valued at $80 million. The planes, the largest in the Air Force's fleet, were damaged when the high winds tossed them together.

In Friendship, where damage was estimated at at least $1 million, 25 houses or mobile homes were damaged, the patrol said.

Six people were admitted to Jackson Memorial Hospital after the twister hit Friendship. One of the victims remained in intensive care early today. Seven other people were treated for injuries and released from the hospital.

WATERLINE BREAK. City crews worked most of the day Tuesday to make repairs at a break in a downtown six-inch water pipe. The break occurred in the alley between the 100 blocks of South Cuyler and Ballard. Supervisor Glen Moon said city crews replaced about nine feet of the cast iron pipe. Some downtown customers were briefly without water when crews opened area hydrants to relieve pressure on the line.

It was no 'church meeting' in court

By DAVID CHRISTENSON
Staff Writer

A woman outside the 223rd District Court room yesterday asked "Do you know if there is a church meeting going on here?"

It wasn't a church meeting, but testimony for the defense in the Department of Human Resources' civil suit against Pampa Baptist Temple resembled Christian confession in Tuesday's and today's sessions.

The church and its leaders, the Rev. Jerry West and James Means are the defendants in a controversy over the closing of the Pampa Christian Academy, the church's school for children from infancy to grade 12.

The school was licensed until March, 1980 when West sent the license back to the state agency, claiming that licensing of the academy was licensing of a part of the church and would be against the will of God.

In Tuesday afternoon's testimony, West was questioned by defense attorney David Gibbs on the nature of his beliefs and grilled by C.E. Lewis, attorney for the state, in cross-examination.

James Means, the church's assistant pastor and former head of the academy, has been indicted on a charge of child abuse in connection with the spanking of an infant at the school.

West said Tuesday that the spanking of children was an indispensable part of the faith of the church.

"You'd have to tear many of the pages of Proverbs out and throw them away if you were going to take corporal punishment out of our school," he said.

When Gibbs asked what age level that belief applied to, West answered that the proportion of discipline is based on the age of the child. Younger children, he said, should receive less physical punishment.

But West quoted the Bible in a passage about punishing children. "Chasten him betimes," the Bible says. That word "betimes" means "very early," West said.

West also quoted, "Chasten thy son while there is hope."

Gibbs submitted for evidence the enrollment form for the academy that authorizes "spanking on the buttocks" and is signed by parents. West said he could not enroll a child without the authorization for spanking.

The court also heard testimony from the Rev. David Hyles, Pastor of the Miller Road Baptist Church in Garland, who said he shared West's principles.

Hyles told the court "I would agree with and practice the exact same principles he has brought up."

He said the church is under the authority of Jesus Christ alone. "There is only one thing we cannot do," he said. "We cannot back down when the government tells us something contrary to the word of God."

Hyles said the school at his church is presently operating without a state license. He said the state brought suit against the Garland school for unlicensed operation, but the suit was dropped.

West was recalled to the stand to testify on the church's finance and staff structure. He said the accounts of the church and the academy are interdependent, and the qualifications for academy staff are the same as the qualifications for church staff.

He also testified that the statement of belief and church constitution are the same for all ministries within the church, including the academy.

Gibbs read several of the state minimum standards for day care centers and asked West to comment on them. West said the statutes on authority over operations would usurp the power of Jesus Christ over the church, and that inspection of school financial records was against his beliefs.

Compromise reached on rate hike

Southwestern Public Service Company "reluctantly agreed" today to accept a nine percent average price hike in the cost of retail electricity in Texas.

The percentage falls short of an average 12.7 percent increase requested by the electric company earlier this year.

The nine percent average increase was approved by a steering committee, representing 66 Texas cities served by SPS, including Pampa, and the request now goes before the Public Utility Commission of Texas for that authority's final approval.

If approved by the PUC, the price increase becomes effective July 1.

The average residential customer's bill would increase about 10.65 percent, down from a requested residential average of about 15 percent.

The company had requested $41.5 million in additional revenue this year, but settled with the cities for $29.4 million.

SPS last received a rate increase, about two years ago, effective June 1, 1980. That price increase was an average 11.06 percent jump in retail electricity charges, or $31.9 million.

The accepted nine percent increase represents about 71 percent of what SPS had requested.

Company president Bert Ballengee said, "SPS agreed reluctantly because the combined revenues of $29.4 million from city and rural customers is less than had been requested, less than is needed, and less than is justified by today's high money costs and the commitment the company has made to its customers to change to coal as the fuel source in new power plants."

"SPS would go along with the reduced increase because of the current economic situation which is affecting everyone. I guess we'll hurt just like everyone else," Ballengee added.

SPS provides electricity to a population of more than 1 million in a 45,000 square-mile area of the Panhandle and south plains of Texas, eastern and southeastern New Mexico, the Oklahoma Panhandle and southwestern Kansas.

A public hearing on the rate request will be held in Austin before PUC approval.

Pampa City Manager Mack Wofford was unavailable for comment about the agreement this morning.

Hemphill commissioners will sue county sheriff

CANADIAN — Action is proceeding by Hemphill County officials in a planned civil suit against Hemphill County Sheriff C.H. Wright to determine legal ownership of certain funds collected by the sheriff over the past several years.

Hemphill County commissioners voted Monday to take the action against Wright to determine whether funds collected from sale of advertisements and sponsorship of a gospel music show are Sheriff Wright's personal funds, or funds rightfully belonging to the county.

County Attorney Bill Jackson was instructed by commissioners to file the suit in 31st State District Court. Judge Granger McIlhenny of Wheeler is expected to hear the suit.

The action resulted from citizens' complaints at a town hall meeting last week, questioning the legality of sales of advertisements wrapped around the text of a free government pamphlet on drug abuse.

31st District Attorney Guy Hardin of Shamrock was in Canadian last week, reportedly consulting with citizens concerning the complaints.

Canadian citizens have voiced criticism of the city-county law enforcement system, with the Hemphill sheriff's office in charge of law enforcement for both the county and the city.

Wednesday morning, neither Sheriff Wright nor County Attorney Jackson could be reached for comment on the matter.

New Argentine proposals, talks progress reported

By The Associated Press

Argentina made new proposals in the Falklands crisis talks at U.N. headquarters, and Britain's representative said they were "very interesting" but would take "a few more days" for assessment.

Meanwhile, no new military action was reported in the South Atlantic. Britain claimed its battle fleet has a stranglehold on the islands 250 miles east of the Argentine coast and had isolated the estimated 9,000 troops occupying them. An Argentine naval source said the British claim was "ridiculous."

After a fifth day of talks Tuesday at the United Nations, diplomats reported some progress toward an agreement to call a cease-fire and resume negotiations on the future of the disputed islands. But the possibility of a British assault on the Falklands still loomed.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons that "the fact we are negotiating does not close off any military options at all."

British sources predicted the critical point in the talks could be reached by Thursday. But British ministers have denied speculation that the government has set a deadline for agreement in the talks at U.N. headquarters.

One deadline of a sort was set, however. Cardinal Basil Hume, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Westminster, announced that Pope John Paul II's visit to Britain starting May 28 would be cancelled unless "military hostilities ... cease or be on the way to coming to an end by the middle of next week."

The visit would be the first in history by a pope to Britain.

The content of Argentina's new proposals could not be learned immediately. But U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said he was "rather encouraged," and believed the talks were "on the right course."

He said, however, he needed another "couple of days for achieving practical results."

"There have been some very interesting propositions that have come forward from the secretary-general," said British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parsons. "We'll go now and digest them. We need a little more time...a few more days."

An Argentine Foreign Ministry official in Buenos Aires said there had been "a change of attitude but not of basic position" on the issue of Argentine's sovereignty over the Falklands.

The official, who requested anonymity, said full British recognition of Argentine sovereignty "is not absolutely necessary," but "at the end of any negotiations, we must be exercising sovereignty."

Graham sees no direct evidence of religious repression

MOSCOW (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham said today he has seen no direct evidence of religious repression in the Soviet Union and said the concept of religious freedom was a relative one.

"It would seem to me that in the churches I visited (in the Soviet Union) — and there are thousands of them — services are allowed to go on freely," Graham said at a news conference at the close of the second plenary session of the Conference of Religious Workers for Saving the Sacred Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe. "In the countries that I go to — and I've been to more than 50 — there is some form of control over religion. That doesn't mean there is no religious freedom. I have experienced total liberty in what I say."

Graham, 63, preached last Sunday in Moscow's only Baptist church and when he concluded his sermon two people held up signs protesting religious persecution. A young woman who unfurled a banner reading "We have more than 150 prisoners for the work of the gospel" was later detained inside the church by a man in plainclothes.

As Graham, a Baptist, left the news conference today, reporters asked him what he thought of that incident. He at first refused to answer but finally responded: "We detain people in the United States if we catch people doing things that are wrong."

Graham has avoided making strong public statements on human rights in the Soviet Union, apparently to avoid antagonizing the government.

Graham said he "would like to come back and preach in many places throughout the country, if I'm invited and all things work out."

Graham met for 75 minutes Tuesday with six Soviet Pentecostals living in refuge in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and told reporters later he prayed with them. He declined to answer questions about their 22-year battle to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

Portuguese await Pope's arrival

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — More than 700,000 Roman Catholic pilgrims waited through the night at the Shrine of Fatima for Pope John Paul II. The pontiff was arriving tonight from Rome to thank the Virgin Mary for delivering him from an assassin on the 64th anniversary of her apparition to three shepherd children at Fatima.

Lucia dos Santos, a frail 75-year-old Carmelite nun and the last survivor of the three children who claimed to have seen six visions of Mary starting May 13, 1917, was to greet the pope at the shrine. She lives in seclusion at a convent in Coimbra, 54 miles away, and was last at Fatima 15 years ago to meet Pope Paul VI.

John Paul II, whose papal motto is "Mary, I am all yours," frequently has commented on the coincidence that a Turkish terrorist tried to kill him in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981, at the same hour that Lucia and her two cousins, Jacinto and Francisco Marto said the "lady in white" first appeared to them.

Despite a 24-hour strike by Communist-dominated labor unions, the pilgrims made their way to the central Portuguese village. Some crawled part of the way on their hands and knees, others were barefoot as a sign of penance. Poor peasant women in simple black dresses carried belongings in potato sacks on their heads, while the sick and disabled rode in buses, trucks and trains.

Hundreds were treated for scraped, swollen and sometimes bleeding feet at roadside first-aid centers set up by the Red Cross, the Order of the Knights of Malta and the Portuguese army. Officials at the concrete-walled sanctuary, which houses the glass-covered Chapel of the Apparitions, said they expected nearly 1.5 million people by this evening, when the Polish-born pontiff begins a four-day visit to Portugal.

The government declared Thursday a national holiday in his honor and Parliament adopted a decree granting amnesty to some 600 people jailed for petty crimes.

The pope's pilgrimage raised speculation that the "third secret" of Fatima, supposedly revealed to the children by the Virgin, might be made public.

Lucia said Mary's first secret predicted an end to World War I but said a worse war would follow unless man repented for his sins and prayed.

The second secret predicted that the Soviet Union would "spread the error of her ways in all the world," threatening "wars and persecution of the church." Ultimately the Soviets would be converted to Christianity and "a certain period of peace would be granted to the world," Lucia said.

She wrote the last secret in Portuguese and turned it over to the Vatican on condition that only a pope reveal it after 1960. Five popes since then gave increasing importance to Fatima, but did not reveal the remaining secret.

Paul VI told his secretary that like his predecessors, he "would not comment either" on Lucia's document.

Backyard's hot spots bother couple

CLEVELAND (AP) — White stakes stand in Eugene and Joan Skiljan's backyard this spring as they have in past years. But instead of supporting tomato plants, the sticks warn of radioactive "hot spots" — the legacy of a former resident.

A shed filled with toys for four grandchildren is off limits, as is a swing. Fruit from an apple tree, already in bloom, probably won't be eaten this summer.

Since the Skiljans discovered about 200 vials of radium buried in an unused barbecue pit, the couple are "prisoners of our own home," Mrs. Skiljan said. State health officials have advised them to stay out of the yard.

The couple found the buried radium on April 30 while clearing the backyard for a new driveway. Since then, tests have located about a dozen "hot spots" where radiation levels are higher than normal.

"We didn't realize what we actually had when we found this," Mrs. Skiljan said Tuesday at the family's house on Cleveland's east side.

"When you read a vial that says 'U.S. Radium Corp. — Poison,' you know you've got a problem, but you don't know how bad," she said.

"When a man in a white space suit comes out, you know it's serious."

Relatives report Hinckley was depressed

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr.'s brother and sister say he was so depressed a month before he shot President Reagan that they urged their father to send him to a mental hospital.

But Scott Hinckley testified Tuesday that their father, John W. Hinckley Sr., felt the "emotional trauma that may be associated with putting him in an institution may do more harm than good."

Scott Hinckley and Diane Hinckley Sims, the older brother and sister of the 26-year-old man accused of shooting Reagan and three other men March 30, 1981, both told a federal jury that they recommended to their father in February 1981 that their brother be sent to an institution.

"John was so extremely depressed and so withdrawn," said Mrs. Sims, 29, who was to resume her testimony today.

"It was just a constant low," she continued. "He could not seem to cope with what was going on around him. We felt a psychiatrist or psychologist at an institution could help him overcome the problems he was having."

The defendant's father was to be called to the witness stand today.

John Hinckley Jr., who could face life imprisonment if convicted. He admits the shootings, but has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

Death ruled self-inflicted

Michael Ray Tooley, 27, 400 Naida St., died about 2 p.m. Tuesday at Coronado Community Hospital, as a result of a self-inflicted gunshot wound, according to a ruling today by Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge.

Police investigators said Tooley suffered a single shot through the chest from a 38-caliber bullet at his parent's home at 925 Twifford.

Tooley was taken by fire department ambulance to Coronado Community Hospital, where he died while undergoing emergency treatment.

Prestidge ordered an autopsy and made her ruling today.

Services for Tooley are pending with Carmichael - Whitley Funeral Directors.

He is survived by one son, Charlie of Pampa; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Tooley of Pampa; two brothers, Daren Lee Tooley of Pampa and Vernon A. Tooley of San Antonio; and his grandparents, Mrs. Lena Tooley of Borger and Gid and Ida Bice of Ava, Mo.

Special activities mark National Hospital Week

Coronado Community Hospital is celebrating National Hospital Week this week with a series of special activities for patients, employees and medical staff, according to Norman Knox, administrator.

Monday was Patient Recognition Day, with special trays and trays placed for patient meals, recognizing the importance of patients and showing appreciation for their use of CCH facilities.

Tuesday, the Coronado Community Hospital medical staff was hosted at a special dinner meeting at the Pampa Country Club.

Today is Employee Appreciation Day, beginning with a special pancake breakfast, prepared by Knox and the administrative staff, for midnight shift (11 p.m. to 7 a.m.) employees and the dietary staff.

"All too often, it's easy to forget about the midnight shift employees, since we don't see them every day," Knox said. "And due to their hours, they frequently miss other special employee activities."

Dietary, also called upon to provide refreshments for many special employee activities, is being honored separately for their efforts, Knox reported.

All employees were to be honored with a special reception this afternoon, complete with a fashion show courtesy of The Hub, Uniform Ad Lib and Dunlap's.

Capping off the week's activities will be the Employee Service Award Banquet Thursday night with honors being bestowed on employees with three, five, ten, 15, 20, 25 and 30 years of service.

Nuclear freeze advocates step up campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional advocates of a nuclear weapons freeze are stepping up their campaign, saying President Reagan's plan for deep cuts in missile arsenals will take too long to negotiate.

"We are not running against the calendar, we are running against the clock, and I think it's five minutes to eternity," Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Tuesday.

Hatfield and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., testified in support of their resolution to cut nuclear arms "through annual percentages or equally effective means."

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., however, told the committee such proposals would "undercut" the president's plan because they would lock in Soviet superiority and give the Soviets no incentive to negotiate.

The two-phase program Reagan outlined Sunday in a speech calls for the United States and the Soviet Union to reduce their arsenals of nuclear warheads by one-third and then agree on lower, equal ceilings on all strategic forces.

The committee planned to hear today from Sens. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and John Warner, R-Va., sponsors of a resolution calling for a long-term freeze at "equal and sharply reduced levels of forces."

Haig testified that the administration supported the objectives of the Jackson-Warner resolution, but hoped the debate would not lead to "fresh battle lines between divided factions."

In testimony prepared for today's session, Rep. Clement J. Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, supported a resolution he said "bridges the difference" between freeze proponents and administration supporters.

Zablocki said the Kennedy-Hatfield proposal "could destroy needed flexibility to bargain over new U.S. systems in exchange for reciprocal Soviet restraint."

On the other hand, he said, the Jackson-Warner approach "seems to assume that a successful outcome from negotiations can be achieved only through a massive unilateral increase in the U.S. nuclear arsenal."

State to release 450 prisoners

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The State Board of Corrections plans to release 450 inmates by Monday in order to ease overcrowding in state prisons and comply with a federal court order.

But the inmates release does not mean the system could accept more prisoners immediately, board member Harry Whittington said following a Tuesday meeting with Gov. Bill Clements.

The prison board, faced with a bulging prison population of more than 33,900 inmates, shut the 19-unit prison system to further admissions Monday.

The order came in an effort to meet a sweeping prison reform order by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice that among other things requires the state to provide 40 square feet of living space for each Texas Department of Corrections inmate.

"It looks like we might make that by midnight Monday," Whittington said.

after meeting with Clements, TDC director W.J. Estelle and Ruben Torres, chairman of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Torres said paperwork for the release should be completed by the end of the week.

"According to the numbers TDC presented today, that would put them in compliance," said Torres. "Whether they can take inmates at that point I don't know."

Torres said another 1,200 inmates would be released on mandatory supervision within the next two months.

Whittington said the releases would put TDC in compliance, but would not allow the prisons to accept any new inmates.

"If we were in compliance on Monday, by the virtue of the number (Torres) is giving us, we would be back in noncompliance maybe on Tuesday," said Whittington. "So we are going to have a discretionary policy to take only those inmates in as we have inmates leave."

Whittington also said the state will speed up current construction efforts throughout the TDC. New facilities are scheduled to be ready in May, June and July. The biggest facility — a 2,800-inmate emergency unit — should be ready July 15, according to Whittington.

Clements, who did not speak with reporters after the closed-door meeting, was "surprised" by the prison board's Monday action, said Whittington.

Before the meeting, Clements said he would not open the upcoming special session of the Legislature to consideration of the prison problem. The session, scheduled to start May 24, will be limited to the state property tax and college construction funding, Clements said.

Prison officials win showdown

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Texas prison officials turned aside the first challenge to their admissions freeze policy and sent 68 Harris County inmates back to the Harris County jail in Houston.

The showdown Tuesday night came after Harris County criminal judges dared the Texas Department of Corrections to risk contempt of court citations by turning away 82 inmates ordered transferred to the state penitentiary.

TDC officials accepted 14 of the prisoners who met strict conditions for admission at the overcrowded state prisons by the Texas Board of Corrections when it announced Monday it was closing the prison doors.

The 68 remaining prisoners that will be returned were refused by (TDC) Lt. William C. Bradham. He told me he was not authorized to accept these remaining 68. He has orders to only accept those designated by the Texas Board of Corrections," said Mendenhall.

TDC spokesman Rick Hartley said Tuesday the TDC could only accept parole violators arrested out of state, escaped inmates being returned or convicts released for court action and then ordered returned.

Max Rogers, second administrative judge for 34 southeast Texas counties, said prison officials could be held in contempt of court for refusing to accept the inmates.

Mendenhall said the county would continue to send its prisoners to the TDC "so long as we receive a valid court order."

While prison guards and Harris County sheriff's officials conferred at the gate to the diagnostic unit, prisoners in one of four vans used to bring the prisoners here shouted to reporters and briefly rocked the vehicle.

"They brought us all here and they know they ain't gonna let us in," shouted one prisoner, who identified himself as Ray Scott, 28.

Eighteen county criminal judges, prosecutors and the Harris County sheriff met privately and devised the challenge Tuesday, just one day after the Texas Board of Corrections voted to limit admissions at the state's 19 prison units.

The board froze prison admissions to meet the inmate living space requirements outlined in a sweeping order by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice aimed at ending prison overcrowding.

The freeze came after the TDC failed to meet an April 30 deadline imposed by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to provide 40 square feet of living space to each inmate housed in the dormitories.

TDC officials said the Texas prison system, the largest in the nation, housed 33,917 inmates before the Harris County prisoners were sent Tuesday.

District Judge Wallace C. Moore said the judges were forced by overcrowding in county jails into trying to make Prison Director Jim Estelle back down on the admissions freeze.

"We've got to do something with our situation, which is worse than his," Moore said. "We're doing our damndest and the TDC is, too. This is a Catch-22 situation."

Moore said U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue ordered Harris County officials to bring jail conditions up to state standards nearly a decade ago.

"We're essentially in the same situation that the TDC is. We're under the orders of a federal judge to get our jails in shape, and so are they. We

The best way to guard against breast cancer is right in your hands. It's called breast self-examination. You see, changes are continuously taking place in your body. That's why a monthly breast self-examination is so important. As you become familiar with how your breasts feel, you'll be better able to notice changes. Any change, like a lump, should send you to the doctor promptly. Fortunately, most lumps are benign, but finding a cancer at an early stage greatly increases the chance of survival. So ask your doctor to teach you breast self-examination. And while you're at it, ask him about mammography—a low-dose breast x-ray that can detect a cancer even before the most experienced doctor can find it. Doctor suggests studies combining interferon with heat therapy

HOUSTON (AP) — Heat treatments can enhance the cancer fighting ability of interferon and will be used in combination with the drug injections in the future, a researcher predicted.

Dr. Jordan U. Gutterman, head of an M.D. Anderson Hospital research team, said Tuesday interferon's effectiveness in reducing the size of cancer tumors seems to be enhanced by heat.

The doctor said he and other researchers have discussed combining interferon injections with thermal treatments, but the idea is still in the talking stage.

"We'll do it in the future," said Jordan. "I'm sure."

The researcher said that in very limited experimental accompanies viral infections, such as colds and flu. He said it is not known precisely what function the natural rise in temperatures serves in the body's attempt to fight infection.

Other doctors are experimentally using applied heat to artificially raise the temperature of patients with cancer. The elevated temperatures, it has been found, tend to slow the growth of cancer cells.

Gutterman's team at M.D. Anderson and a group at Stamford conducted experimental trials with synthetic interferon on 16 cancer patients last year. They found that the drug caused the reduction of tumors in seven of the patients.

But Gutterman said it is too early to tell if interferon will be the so-called "magic bullet" long sought by medical science as a cure for cancer.

There are a number of types of interferon, he said, and it is not yet known which is the most effective for cancer treatment. Gutterman said it will take years of experimentation before interferon is well understood. Gutterman is just beginning an experimental test of the drug on 100 selected cancer patients. He said the studies are a continuation of the earlier experiments which were planned to determine the proper dosage regimen for the drug.

The Gutterman team is using synthetic interferon in its studies. This is a type of the drug that is produced by manipulating the genes of the E. coli bacteria. A gene is inserted into the nucleus of the bacteria, tricking it into producing interferon in the laboratory.

Gutterman said he detected little clinical difference between the synthetic interferon and natural interferon from human cadavers.

The new study at M.D. Anderson will differ from the earlier experiments in the frequency of dosage. In first tests, patients received injections of interferon on two days a week. In the new tests, the patients will receive daily

TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

More Abscams to come

An ordinary person would think that FBI director William Webster might wish to put the Abscam episode behind him. To the contrary, however, he indicated to newsmen that the FBI may resort to similar tactics in the future.

Such an assertion calls for a discussion of the total concept. The gist of Abscam is that the FBI employed a known criminal to initiate simulated crimes. FBI men played the roles of criminals, and they enticed members of Congress and other government officials for the deliberate purpose of involving them in prosecutable conduct.

Virtually all the intended targets were elected officeholders. One, a police chief, was an appointee. What you have, then, is a kind of war in which an ongoing federal bureaucracy entraps officials who constitutionally are responsible for its oversight. The fact that some of them deserved exposure for weakness and graft does not alter the essence of what went on.

Perhaps a saving feature of this seedy proceeding was that the evidence gathered was brought to trial and hence to public view. What would have been the outcome if the Department of Justice had merely used its information covertly to blackmail key members of Congress? In that case, the U.S. government would be dominated by a Ministry of Justice, such as is common in Eastern Europe.

Law enforcement has enough crime to combat without looking for ways to encourage it. The proper task for law officers is not to create temptation, but to go after those who give in to temptation without prompting. Of course it is easier to score a high arrest record if you set up situations where arrests may take place. But such records are of scant benefit to society when they divert resources of enforcement from genuine, unstaged crime.

Radical's revenge could prove fatal

Iran's former foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh has confessed, on the country's national television network, that he plotted the assassination of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and other government officials. The official Iranian news agency said Ghotbzadeh also confessed to planning the overthrow of Khomeini's revolutionary government.

Ghotbzadeh's status had been in question for an extended period of time. In fact, the revolutionary government only one month ago confirmed the arrest of Ghotbzadeh.

Considering the nature of Iran's news agency it is impossible to know whether Ghotbzadeh is guilty, or whether his only crime is disillusionment with a revolution that has long since turned barbarous. What is known is that most revolutions tend ultimately to devour their more moderate supporters, thus consolidating power in the hands of the most radical and ruthless. Certainly this has been the case in Iran.

Americans will remember Ghotbzadeh as Iran's prickly and often arrogant foreign minister during most of the 15-month-long hostage crisis. They may be less aware of the fact that Ghotbzadeh viewed the seizure of the U.S. Embassy as a reckless act and that he favored an early release of the hostages.

Clearly, this did nothing to endear him to the fanatics surrounding Khomeini. Amidst the prevailing paranoia of revolutionary politics in Iran, Ghotbzadeh must have seemed a threat even in semi-retirement. The operative axiom in Teheran these days would appear to be "those who are not for us are against us."

It is also worth remembering that Sadegh Ghotbzadeh has warned publicly of the dangers of Soviet subversion in post-revolutionary Iran, a warning now made prophetic by the evidence of growing Soviet influence over Khomeini's regime.

Indeed, Moscow's lengthening shadow over Iran may be the real reason for Ghotbzadeh's arrest.

In any event, Sadegh Ghotbzadeh may soon find himself facing a firing squad. If he receives a fair trial before sentence is passed, it will be a distinct break with past judicial proceedings under Iran's revolutionary government.

And if the supreme penalty is invoked, Ghotbzadeh might be forgiven a revisionist view of his arch-enemy, the late shah. While the supposedly blood-thirsty shah ruled, Sadegh Ghotbzadeh suffered only brief imprisonment followed by exile. He isn't likely to be so lucky this time around.

For a majority, poverty is only temporary blow-out

By CHARLES D. VAN EATON

Who are the poor? As defined by official Census Bureau statistics, the poor are that segment of the population who live at or below an income threshold of $8,414 per year for a family of four. From additional data we know that the poor are 70 percent white and 30 percent non-white and that 40 percent of the poor are children. Further more, nearly half of all poor families are headed by women.

But does this answer the question about how the poor are? Obviously not. Such data only statistically define the poor. To answer the question, a lot more needs to be known.

As it turns out, there is a great deal which is known about the poor in America — more, in fact, than some of those who want to admit who appear to derive satisfaction from riding the wagon of self-righteous indignation on the issue of federal spending for the poor.

A recent report, published by the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan, is helpful. Based on a close 14-year study of the poor, the report confirms what earlier studies also have found.

Specifically:

- 1) Hardly anyone stays poor over the long run.
- 2) Nearly everyone is susceptible to becoming poor.
- 3) People do not so much sink into poverty as plummet into it.

4) People do not so much climb from poverty as catapult from it.

5) There is constant, heavy traffic — in both directions — across the poverty line.

In general, the report found that there really is not such a thing as "the poor"; the poor are not a homogeneous class. Nearly two-thirds of those defined as poor by the statistical methods employed by the government are poor only in a "temporary" sense (their income was below the poverty line only during some comparatively transitional and brief period of life). Within this group the faces change from day to day and year to year.

The temporarily poor differ very little from the general population. What brings on temporary poverty is usually some jolting event beyond the individual's control such as illness, a job layoff, or the loss of a spouse. Such poverty is correctable as an expanding economy creates jobs. For this group there is no pattern of behavior or style of life which generates a mentality of poverty.

The one-third of those statistically defined as poor who are "persistently poor" do tend to differ in essential ways from the population as a whole as well as from the bulk of those poor people who are only passing through poverty.

Most of this group have lived all their lives in what can only be called a "sub-culture" or, as one commentator who favors continued support for poverty programs called it, "a culture of dependency." Like it or not, this sort of poverty reflects not just lack of money but, in addition, a cultural incapacity to make use of money. If their incomes were substantially larger, little in their style of life would change.

What I find most interesting about the outcry against even simple marginal cuts in poverty spendings that many of the critics have admitted that the government's whole approach to welfare is flawed. One critic, Sen. Paul Tsongas (D-Mass.), has said of such programs, "If you have a program of sustenance without at the same time having a program of mobility, you simply perpetuate poverty." Ronald Reagan couldn't have said it better.

So why doesn't Congress get on with the business of getting the tax and spending burden which has done so much to cripple the economy over the past decade off the private sector's back? Getting the economy going again would do more to reduce poverty — however it's measured — than anything else that could be done. But many of those who are fighting the president's welfare cuts are also fighting his economic recovery program. One can honestly doubt their interest in fighting poverty.

What about the one-third who live in dependency? The only thing which can be done here is to reform welfare around a serious work requirement rule. Many who have worked closely with welfare, such as Dr. Leonard M. Greene, of the Institute of Socioeconomic Studies, advocate this approach. But again, many who claim to speak for the poor against the Reagan cuts, and his requirement of a work-rule, resist any effort of reform.

I have long since ceased to believe that these who have made their living by keeping the poor dependent on the programs they administer, really care for the poor. Reagan must right these people. When he does, he will be the true champion of the poor.

Letter to the Editor

Editor:

While vacationing with my sister and brother-in-law — Roy and Minnie Reeves of rural Pampa — recently I suffered a heart attack and was hospitalized at Coronado Community Hospital.

I spent about 10 days there and during my recovery there I was visited and called upon by some of the nicest people in this world.

I am home in Oregon now, on my way to recovery, and wanted the people in and around Pampa to know how much it meant to me to see so many kind and concerned people.

I also appreciated the complimentary copy of your paper each day as this helped me keep in touch during my extended vacation.

Editor:

We must urge the building of a dependable national defense system with Americans trained to never surrender. This will prevent the Communists demanding our surrender because they will know that organizations within our country could never lead Americans through fear and panic into surrendering to them. In order to build an effective defense system that will give Americans the confidence to never surrender, it is essential that we build with haste an extensive anti-missile system to shoot down incoming missiles and create a Civil Defense plan of underground shelters — as well as evacuation plans — and intensive training of our people in dealing with any form of threatened attack, including massive internal terrorism. Having this defense will mean that we will not likely have to use it.

The Americans must be given the truth so they will know that if we surrendered, it would be quickly followed by surrender of the rest of the world. With Communist control of the world, they would then exterminate the American people, and collaborators, to prevent environmental pollution of their new "World Social Order" from those who have lived the good life under American capitalism, and serving to alleviate the population explosion.

Lenin knew the power of creating internal fear and terrorism. He said they would surround the United States and then not have to attack because we would fall like an overripe fruit into their hands. He was implying that they could develop such imperceptible control over U.S. public opinion that they could lead us into surrender. We must block Lenin's strategy.

Our people must be told the truth about Communist strategy — that they do not intend to attack us with missiles because that would trigger the release of our missiles on them to their destruction and they intend to have us bound by a "no first use of missiles." But they do intend to try to lead this nation into surrender by building up fear of annihilation so that it can be heightened into hysteria and panic when the Communist give the ultimatum to surrender.

It would be in conjunction with massive internal terrorism.

The most likely time would be after the Communist gain control over Central American and Mexico and plant missiles all over these countries. Then Moscow would give the secret order to Castro to demand our surrender or be hit with missiles from Central America and Mexico while Moscow pretends to have no part in it. Preparing our defense and remaining free is better than becoming Red and all ending dead.

It is ironic that the missiles and anti-missiles will probably never be used, but their being there for use has a most profound effect in psychological warfare. Some deceived Americans will try to persuade us not to implement this defense which would block their leading us into surrender. We must not let them deceive us. Our survival depends on it.

Dinner at the White House

BY ART BUCHWALD

One of the main concerns of the White House is that President Reagan has been perceived by the media as insensitive to the poor. The matter came to a head when CBS's Bill Moyers produced a documentary titled, "People Like Us," which showed people who purportedly were not enjoying Reaganomics.

Although the show had a very low rating, the President happened to see it and told his people something had to be done about his image.

A high-level meeting of advisers was called the following morning to discuss ways of counteracting the "insensitivity" issue.

"The President is sick and tired of being portrayed as a bad guy when it comes to poor people. We have to come up with an idea to turn this perception around," a top aide said.

"How about this? Why doesn't the President give a black tie dinner for the poor people at the White House?"

"That's not bad. Does anybody know any poor people we can invite?" There was silence in the room.

"Let's call the Republican National Committee," someone suggested. "They must have a list."

An aide picked up the hot line to Republican Headquarters. "We need 200 poor people to invite to dinner at the White House. Never mind why. Just give us the names...You don't have any?"

The aide hung up. "They said they don't keep names of poor people because they never give to the Party."

"What about the Department of Human Resources? They must have a list of disenfranchised citizens in their computers," someone else suggested.

The same aide picked up the phone and got a Deputy Secretary at Human Resources on the phone. "We need the names of 200 poor people to invite to a dinner at the White House...Just a minute, he wants to know how poor?"

"Real poor. People who are feeling the pain of the recession and have nowhere to turn," the chief White House aide said.

The man on the phone told the Deputy Secretary, "Scrape the bottom of the barrel. Unmarried mothers on welfare, senior citizens who have lost their homes, people who have been unemployed for more than a year, and a few who went bankrupt and are now existing on food stamps. Get the names over here by three o'clock, so we can run a poverty check on them."

"Okay," someone said. "Now that we've got the guest list, let's talk about the menu. What do poor people like to eat?"

"I know they like cheddar cheese. Every time we give it away, they stand in line for hours to get a block of it."

"Good, we'll serve cheddar cheese soufflé."

"Wait a minute," someone said. "How do we get them to the White House?"

"That's their problem," an aide said. "Hold it," a communications expert said. "These people don't have money to come to Washington. If we have dinner for them and no one shows up, the whole thing will blow up in our faces. We'll have to pay to bring them in."

"But if we do that, they might decide to cash in their tickets and pocket the fares instead."

"Are you trying to tell me that someone would rather have the airfare, than dine at the White House?"

"Poor people have been known to do crazy things. That's why we have to keep a safety net under them."

Berry's World

Students laugh while studying

HOUSTON (AP) — Passers-by probably thought the laughter and screams coming from the Astroworld amusement park were just a bunch of silly youngsters going wild on the rides. Regardless of what they sounded like, the people on the rides were actually students serving the interests of science.

Schoolteachers determined to prove science can be fun turned 570 out-of-town teen-agers loose in the park Monday night and told them to ride the rides to study principles of physics and biology.

Experiments were performed to study such things as G-forces, velocity vectors, momentum rolls, and the effects the various rides have on bodily functions such as coordination, pulse rate, skin moisture and blood pressure.

"The data we're gathering here are fun for many people, but for us they are very important," Professor Howard L. Jones said, raising his voice to be heard above the screaming science students nearby.

"The kids can deal with science in a more touchable way," he said.

The students were in Houston to attend the International Science and Engineering Fair. They represented the 50 states and seven foreign nations, and each was a local science project winner.

As they waited in line to board the "Texas Cyclone" roller coaster, they discussed it in terms of gravity, centrifugal force and acceleration. But once the three-car train was falling down the first hill, a 94-foot incline of 53 degrees, all scientific discussion stopped.

"You don't have time to think of science up there — you're hanging on for your life," said schoolteacher Marcia Steinwand of Belfield, N.D.

"We want to get them to look at science in their everyday lives," said Jones, a University of Houston education professor who is director of the National Science Foundation-funded project.

Amusement parks in Hershey, Pa.,

Kansas City, Mo., and other places are also participating to spur an interest in science. The project is in the second of a three-year, $291,000 science foundation grant.

For the first time Monday night, biological data were collected on the students before and after they rode various rides.

Previously, the students merely observed principles of physics at work on the rides.

It will take a month for the data to be evaluated, but Jim Collins, a science teacher from nearby Pasadena, Texas, said preliminary results were predictable — "we're finding increased pulse rates, higher blood pressure and sweeter palms after the rides."

He said the most dramatic results were shown after students rode a shuttle loop known as "Greezies Lightnin'" which exerts 4.8 times the force of gravity on its riders — nearly two Gs more than that experienced by the space shuttle astronauts on liftoff.

'Boll Weevils' threaten to make their own proposed federal budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservative Democratic "Boll Weevils" threatened to come up with their own 1983 federal budget today to rebut the proposal that House Budget Committee chairman Jim Jones unveiled earlier in the week.

Majority leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, of Fort Worth predicted that most members of the coalition will, in the end, support the Jones budget — which he and other Democratic House leaders have endorsed. Several Boll Weevils from Texas insisted they can't vote for it, however.

Reps. Kent Hance, D-Texas, of Lubbock and Phil Gramm, D-Texas, of College Station criticized the Jones budget, calling it much worse than the proposal offered last week by Sen. Pete Domenici, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

Gramm and Hance were the Democratic sponsors of Reagan's victorious 1982 bipartisan budget and tax bills, respectively, but had indicated a desire to work within the Democratic Party this year.

President Reagan has endorsed the Domenici proposal, but publicly expressed interest Tuesday in budget ideas Gramm has suggested.

"I think the Weevils will have a proposal that the president will like better than he does the Domenici proposal," said Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Texas, of Rockwall.

"It's my understanding the president has given a stamp of approval on the Boll Weevil approach, but I don't think he has actually said let's go with it," Hall added.

Boll Weevils met with Jones a half dozen times in recent weeks, searching for a budget that would satisfy their concern about proposed cuts in military spending and a repeal of the 10 percent income tax cut planned for 1983.

"It's clear from the Jones budget that our suggestions of compromise have been rejected. Things were close while we were talking, but when he came out with his budget, it was clear we were miles apart," Gramm said.

"As I see it, we've come down to a choice between the Democratic leadership and the people, and I'm going with the people," Gramm added.

"Jones attempts to deal with our deficit problem by slashing defense and by increasing taxes so that the 'spending as usual' policies of the 60s and 70s can continue," he added.

"More than 66 percent of the Jones savings comes from raising taxes and cutting defense. So, basically people have broken into two ranks — those who want to raise taxes and cut defense so we can go on spending, and those who want to control spending so we can meet our defense needs and allow the American worker to keep more of what he earns."

Hance said, "Jones is just raising too many taxes. The only thing worse than Reagan's budget is Jones' budget. We thought we could work something out with Jones, but it looks like it fell through. He went with the Speaker instead of the Boll Weevils."

Speaker of the House Tip O'Neill announced their approval for Jones' proposal, but said he would oppose additional concessions to conservatives.

Man charged in bombing death

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — Police planned to continue their search today for an Odessa businessman charged with capital murder in the death of a former employee.

John Clifford Skelton, 51, was charged Tuesday with killing Joe Neal, 46, said Peace Justice Manuel Valles. Skelton has not been arrested and was believed to be out of the state, police Sgt. Jerry Smith said.

Neal was killed when his pickup truck exploded shortly before 7:30 a.m. April 24 as he turned the key and triggered a device wired to the ignition system, police said.

The blast scattered debris as far away as 1,000 feet.

Neal was preparing to drive his 14-year-old daughter to meet a bus, but the girl was still in the house at the time of the blast.

Police said Tuesday that their investigation determined Skelton had threatened to kill Neal "on several different occasions." Police declined to elaborate.

Lakers take 2-0 lead over Spurs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Most noticeable about the Los Angeles Lakers is their free-wheeling, flashy, fastbreak offense. But they seem to think good defense has put them where they are.

The Lakers are sitting atop a 2-0 lead over the San Antonio Spurs in the National Basketball Association's Western Conference finals, one bracket away from the league championship series.

They whipped the Spurs 110-101 Tuesday night after taking the opener 128-117 two days earlier. The best-of-seven series now shifts to San Antonio, with the third and fourth games on Friday and Saturday.

Reflecting on Tuesday night's game, Lakers Coach Pat Riley said, "Our defense was just excellent again, and we did a good job of dominating the defensive boards."

"Overall, I think our defense won out," said Los Angeles forward Jamaal Wilkes, whose 22 points shared Laker high-point honors with guard Norm Nixon. "Another great team effort defensively."

Laker center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had 16 points in the victory, said: "Our defensive play has been very consistent. It seems when we play a hard defensive game, our fastbreak works better."

Mike Mitchell scored 34 points for the Spurs, but the Lakers did a solid job defensively on league scoring leader George Gervin. He wound up with 18 points, just slightly over half his average, and had only three points in the first half.

"We tried to deny George the ball at all times," said Wilkes. "I play him one-on-one, but as soon as he puts the ball on the floor, we double-team him. It seems to be working and I think that's been the key to stopping them."

The Lakers rallied from a 79-78 deficit at the end of three quarters, pulling away to a 10-point lead before the final period was half finished.

"They were able to pick up a lot of loose balls in the fourth quarter and turn them into fastbreaks," said San Antonio Coach Stan Albeck. "I think the turnovers and three Laker layups at the start of the fourth quarter turned things around."

The Lakers displayed depth and balance in the victory. Kurt Rambis led Los Angeles in rebounds with 15, while Earvin "Magic" Johnson had 19 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists. Reserves Mike Cooper and Bob McAdoo had 12 and 11 points.

Dave Corzine came off the bench to score 23 points for the Spurs, and Mark Olberding chipped in 16 points.

Gervin, asked what the Spurs must do to bounce back in the series, said: "Play better, it's just that simple."

Nicklaus, Palmer in Colonial

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer, neither of whom has played in this venerable tournament in several years, both are in the field for the $350,000 Colonial National Invitation Tournament, which begins Thursday.

Nicklaus and Palmer last played here in 1975 when Colonial hosted the then-traveling Tournament Players Championship, a designated event in which they were required to play. This time, however, it's purely voluntary.

In recent years, the NIT simply hasn't fit into Palmer's busy schedule. This time it does, and the current national seniors champion is back to compete for the title he won 20 years ago, in 1962.

Nicklaus has yet to win Colonial, which first was played in 1946. It is one of the few long established tournaments that has escaped him. He created something of a local turmoil a dozen years ago when he made some remarks that were interpreted as being critical of the Colonial Country Club course, a revered old layout on the banks of the Trinity.

With the exception of the TPC, he hasn't been back since. In the last few years, however, the NIT has immediately preceded Nicklaus' own Memorial Tournament. This year, the schedule is different.

"This is the first chance I've had to play here in several years," said Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major professional titles but a non-winner for almost two years. "I haven't been here for some time. So, I put it on the schedule."

And he comes in with his work cut out for him.

"The hardest thing to do is reverse a trend," said Nicklaus. He played well early in the season but has gone into one of the worst slumps of his career. He has failed to qualify for the final two rounds of play in three of his last four starts, with his putting primarily at fault.

"I'm not unhappy with the way I'm hitting it," he said. "I just can't get the ball in the hole."

Sports banquet held at Miami High School

Mark Higginbotham and Lisa Hinton were the top honorees at the Miami High Sports Banquet held last night.

Higginbotham and Hinton were presented with the Fighting Warrior and Warriorette Award named in honor of the late Ed Francis, who coached basketball and track at Miami High.

Higginbotham played football, basketball and track for the Warriors while Hinton played basketball and was a member of the Warriorettes' 1600-meter relay team that competed in the girls' state track meet last weekend.

Francis was killed in a car accident three years ago.

Keith Gray, who will be going to the Class 1A state track in the long jump this weekend, received the all-around athlete award. Gray also received the football and track awards while Wayne Smith and Lewis Lisenby were honored in basketball and tennis respectively.

In girls' sports, Karla Stone was honored in basketball, Kasandra Bailey in track and Tania Stevens in tennis.

Pampa High basketball coach Garland Nichols, who underwent surgery Monday for a cut on his hand, was the guest speaker.

"I could tell he was still in pain, but he did a fine job," said Miami High Athletic Director Roy Young.

HAMBURG West Germany (AP) — Jimmy Connors defeated Ricardo Cano of Argentina 7-5, 6-0 to advance to the second round of the $250,000 German Open.

In other matches, Australian Peter McNamara topped Peter Elter of West Germany 5-7, 6-3, 6-4; Eddie Dibbs swept Ramesh Krishnan of India 7-5, 6-3; and Wojtek Fibak of Poland downed Jan Gunnarsson of Sweden 7-6, 7-5.

TOKYO (AP) — Vince Van Patten reached the semifinals of the $200,000 Gunze World Tournament by defeating Brian Teacher, 6-3, 6-7, 6-3.

AUTOMOBILE RACING
INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The late Fred Offenhauser, the man whose name was synonymous with the dominant racing engine for five decades, was elected to the Auto-Racing Hall of Fame.

Harry Grant and Lewis Strang, outstanding drivers during the pioneer days of the sport, were also elected to the Hall by a special committee of racing historians.

HOCKEY
UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Tom Watt, the rookie coach of the Winnipeg Jets who led them from the bottom of the NHL standings to a playoff berth, was named winner of the Jack Adams Award as the league's Coach of the Year.

Watt, who served as an assistant with the Vancouver Canucks in 1980-81, coached the Jets to a 33-33-14 mark this season. Last year, the Jets finished 9-57-14 for 32 points.

BADMINTON
HUDDERSFIELD, England (AP) — Denmark beat Japan 2-1 to move into the semifinals of the Thomas Cup world team championships.

After Dane C. Andersen lost his singles match to K. Zeniva of Japan 15-11, 13-15, 13-15.

12-15. Flemming Delfs of Denmark won his singles against Nazao Tsuchida 15-11, 15-8. Delfs then paired with Steen Skovgaard to win the doubles 15-5, 15-6 over Nobutaka Ikeda and Toshihiro Tsuji.

FOOTBALL
NEW YORK (AP) — The formation of a new pro football league, the United States Football League, was announced.

The 12-team league will have a 20-game regular season from March through June. The playoffs will culminate in a championship game to be held the night of July 4.

The league will have teams in Boston (New England), Chicago, Denver, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York, Philadelphia, San Diego, San Francisco, Washington, Tampa, Fla., and Birmingham, Ala.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL
DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — The Big Ten will experiment with a three-point goal in all of its conference basketball games next season, Commissioner Wayne Duke announced.

Under the experiment, field goals made from beyond a 21-foot range will be worth three points instead of two. The distance compares to the 23-foot, 9-inch range used for three-point goals in the NBA.

GENERAL
PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — John McCorvey, a 6-foot-8 senior basketball player at Fort Walton Beach Choctawhatchee High School, died two days after suffering a massive stroke.

McCorvey, who signed a national letter of intent with Jacksonville University last month, had been listed in critical condition since undergoing brain surgery Sunday.

McCorvey, 18, had been admitted to West Florida Hospital last week for treatment of a heart valve problem.

Celtics-76ers resume play

BOSTON (AP) — The 76ers try to rebound tonight from a 40-point loss to the Boston Celtics in Sunday's playoff opener, amid charges by Philadelphia owner Harold Katz that center Darryl Dawkins is using a leg injury as an excuse for poor play.

Dawkins scored seven points and played only 17 minutes, all in the first half, of Sunday's 121-81 National Basketball Association semifinal playoff loss to the Celtics, the 76ers' worst postseason defeat ever. Afterward, Dawkins complained that the shinbone that he broke Jan. 17 was still hurting him and hampered his lateral movement on defense.

He was examined Monday by the team doctor, Michael Clancy, and X-rays were negative.

"He says his leg is hurting, but my opinion is, it's a copout for the way he's playing," said Katz.

"Darryl's leg may hurt, but I don't think that's why he couldn't play. Other guys on our team play with just about anything. You can hit Mo Cheeks over the head and he still plays."

"All I can do is talk to him, tell him we need him."

"Clancy says he's not going to say I'm not hurting. He said he'd give me some new medication to try," said Dawkins, who was highly praised by Katz when the 6-foot-11 center scored 27 points and blocked eight shots in the first game of the Philadelphia-Milwaukee playoff series, won by the 76ers four games-to-two.

"The pain's been getting worse and worse, but I'm going to try to play Wednesday."

Kansas City blasts Milwaukee

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

For four miserable games, the Kansas City Royals were a frustrated bunch at the plate.

Tuesday night, they took it out on the Milwaukee Brewers.

Led by Hal McRae, Willie Wilson and Frank White, the Royals' slumbering offense woke up with a blistering 21-hit attack that buried the Brewers 17-3.

"It was good to score some runs tonight," said Manager Dick Howser, whose Royals had come up with but eight runs in their previous four games, including a three-game series loss to Toronto.

The Royals erupted for seven runs in the first two innings and had a 12-0 lead after five Tuesday night to back winner Larry Gura, 3-1. McRae drove in five runs, Wilson four and White three to pace the Kansas City attack. McRae and Wilson each had three-run homers among their hits.

The loser was Jerry Augustine, 0-1, who gave up 12 runs on 15 hits in the first five innings.

Elsewhere in the American League, Cleveland beat Seattle 5-4 in 14 innings. Chicago outslugged Toronto

9-4. Minnesota stopped Boston 10-6. New York edged California 3-2 and Baltimore defeated Oakland 7-1. Rain postponed the Detroit-Texas game. Indians 5, Mariners 4 Von Hayes singled home Alan Bannister with the go-ahead run in the top of the 14th inning as Cleveland beat Seattle in the longest game ever played in the Kingdome in elapsed time: 4 hours and 20 minutes.

With one out in the 14th, Bannister drew a walk off Seattle's third pitcher, Bill Caudill, 3-1. Hestole second and Hayes slapped a sharp single to right to bring home the game-winner.

Cleveland's third pitcher, Ed Whitson, 1-0, retired the final four Mariners he faced, including working out of a 13th-inning jam, with Seattle runners on first and second.

Seattle had tied the score 4-4 with two runs in the ninth. Al Cowens doubled in one run to chase John Denny and Julio Cruz's groundout off reliever Dan Spillner brought home Jim Malar, who had reached on an error, with the Mariners' fourth run. Blue Jays 9, White Sox 4

Wayne Nordhagen hit a two-run homer and Barry Bonnell smashed three doubles and scored three runs to lead Toronto over Chicago, snapping the White Sox' seven-game winning streak.

Jim Clancy, 3-2, scattered six hits over 52-3 innings before being relieved by Dale Murray, who earned his first save of the season. Chicago starter Steve Trout, 2-3, took the loss.

The Blue Jays virtually put the game away by taking a 7-0 lead after four innings, as Jessie Barfield contributed a two-run single in the first inning and Nordhagen a two-run homer in the third.

Twins 10, Red Sox 6 Minnesota scored five runs with the help of six straight singles with two outs in the sixth inning, including Randy Bush's first major league RBI, to break a 4-4 tie and beat Boston.

Bobby Castillo, 1-1, pitched 31-3 innings for the victory in relief of Brad Havens while Bob Ojeda, 1-3, took the loss.

Bush, pinch-hitting for Lenny Faedo, singled to score the first run of the inning and give Minnesota a 5-4 lead. Bobby Mitchell and Ron Washington followed with RBI singles and John Castino capped the rally with a two-run single to put the Twins ahead 9-4.

Yankees 3, Angels 2 Dave Collins, who entered the game as a substitute when first baseman John Mayberry was injured, hit an eighth-inning sacrifice fly for the winning run as New York beat California.

Dave Righetti, 2-2, held the Angels to four hits over seven innings, walking five and striking out four before Goose Gosage worked the final two frames to pick up his sixth save.

The Yankees' decisive rally began with Ken Griffey's one-out single off Ken Forsch, 2-3. Oscar Gamble singled Griffey to third to set up Collins' RBI fly ball to center.

Collins entered the game in the bottom of the first after Tim Foli, running out an infield hit spiked Mayberry on his left foot, forcing him out of the game.

Orioles 7, A's 1 Scott McGregor and Tim Stoddard combined on a three-hitter and Baltimore snapped a three-game losing streak by beating mistake-prone Oakland.

The Orioles capitalized on three Oakland errors, including a throwing error by catcher Jeff Newman which allowed two runs to score in the fifth inning. Center fielder Dwayne Murphy dropped a fly ball in the fourth, setting up an unearned run.

Phillies slip by Dodgers again

By HERSCHEL NISSENSEN
AP Sports Writer

Whatever Bill Russell was thinking of, it certainly couldn't have been the obscure baseball rule that says a runner is out when "he fails to reach the next base before a fielder tags him or the base, after he has been forced to advance by reason of the batter becoming a runner."

What that means in English, among other things, is that if the catcher drops a third strike with two out and the bases loaded, all he has to do to end the inning is pick up the ball and touch home plate for a forceout.

The Los Angeles Dodgers were trailing the Philadelphia Phillies 9-6 in the seventh inning Tuesday night with two out and the bases loaded. Ken Landreaux struck out, but the ball got away from catcher Bo Diaz and Landreaux beat his throw to first.

Russell, who was on third, was obviously puzzled by the play and didn't run. And when first baseman Pete Rose threw the ball back to Diaz, the catcher touched the plate and the inning was over, just like it says in the rule book.

The Dodgers picked up two more runs in the eighth, but that left them one short and the Phillies beat them for the second night in a row by a 9-8 score. Russell and Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda had a shouting match after the game that was easily heard from behind the closed door of Lasorda's office. Neither one, however, would comment.

Nevertheless, the outcome gave the Phillies their eighth victory in nine games and lifted them into third place in the National League East past the slumping Montreal Expos, who lost to the San Francisco Giants 5-4.

Elsewhere, St. Louis downed Cincinnati 5-1. Chicago knocked off Atlanta 6-4. New York blanked San Diego 6-0 and Houston shaded Pittsburgh 4-2.

Rose, a veteran of 21 major league campaigns, said he had never seen the strange play before. "At first, I didn't know what to do with the ball. I knew he (Landreaux) beat it to first. I looked like a genius, but I didn't know what I was doing."

It was that kind of a game

— 25 total hits, five stolen bases by the Phillies and four errors by the Dodgers — as Philadelphia erased a 5-3 deficit with four runs in the fifth inning and ended Dodger starter Jerry Reuss' four-game winning streak. Ivan DeJesus' two-out, two-run single broke a 5-5 tie.

Giants 5, Expos 4 Jack Clark, who tied the game 1-1 with a fifth-inning homer, doubled home the go-ahead run in a three-run sixth. After Clark's tie-breaking double, the Giants loaded the bases with two out and Jim Wohlford beat out a grounder to second baseman Tim Lincecum, who was slow in making the throw to first. Both Evans and Clark scored on the play. The Giants scored what proved to be the winning run in the ninth on doubles by relief pitcher Greg Minton and Chili Davis.

Montreal scored a run in the bottom of the ninth and had runners at first and third with no one out. However, Raines was caught stealing. Jerry White hit a shallow fly ball and Andre Dawson also flied out.

Cardinals 5, Reds 1

George Hendrick singled, homered, scored two runs and drove in two. Hendrick's home run, his eighth of the season, came off Mario Soto in the fourth inning. He also rapped an RBI single in the first off Soto, who started the game with a string of 14 scoreless innings. And to show that the Dodgers had no monopoly on strange plays, Tommy Herr scored from second base on a wild pitch by Soto in the fifth inning and Ken Oberkfell raced home all the way from first when catcher Alex Trevino was unable to pick the ball up and it went off his hand into the dugout for an error.

Cubs 6, Braves 4 Jody Davis drove in three runs with a pair of homers to power the Cubs to their fourth straight victory. Davis hit a solo homer in the fifth to tie the score 2-2 and capped a four-run sixth with his third homer of the season, all in the last two games. He hit a three-run homer in the ninth inning to beat Houston on Sunday. Chris Chambliss homered and drove in three runs for Atlanta.

Lang defends quality of Preakness while blasting Gato Del Sol owner

BALTIMORE (AP) — General Manager Chick Lang of Pimlico Race Course charges that fear of the opposition and a lack of respect for racing's Triple Crown is keeping the Kentucky Derby winner out of the Preakness Stakes.

Lang leveled the accusations at Eddie Gregson, the trainer of Derby winner Gato Del Sol, while defending the quality of Saturday's 107th Preakness which will be without the Derby winner for the first time since 1959.

"Eddie What's-his-name can fabricate all the reasons he wants," Lang said Tuesday, "but he won't be in the Preakness just because he's scared to death of Linkage."

"The last time they met," Lang said, "Linkage beat Gato Del Sol by 5½ lengths in the Blue Grass." Lang said, "The only reason the other horse won the Derby is because Linkage wasn't in it.

As for the Preakness, Linkage has caused the shrinkage."

Linkage, who was kept out of the Derby by trainer Henry Clark because it would have been his third race in 17 days, has won eight of 10 career starts with two seconds. He is expected to be the favorite in the eight-horse Preakness.

"We have the best 3-year-old in America," Lang said of Linkage, "plus the horses that finished 2-3-4 in the Derby (Laser Light, Reinvested, Water Bank). I disagree with those who say this is a bad field."

Two more Derby competitors, Cupecoy's Joy and Bold Style, were added to the probable field Tuesday. Cupecoy's Joy, a filly, led for the first mile of the Derby before fading to 10th and Bold Style was 16th in the 19-horse field.

The other Preakness starters include Aloma's Ruler, winner the Withers Stakes last Saturday, and Cut Away, who won at Churchill Downs on Derby Day.

"I would have thought What's-his-name would have had more respect for the Triple Crown," Lang said.

"It's the ultimate dream for every owner, breeder, trainer and jockey. It's like winning the Super Bowl, the World Series, the Masters, the Indy 500 or any great sports event."

Chrysler warranty makes insurance company unhappy

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp.'s effort to convince consumers its cars are well made by offering a five-year warranty on major engine parts has stepped on the toes of a company that has made money selling insurance against breakdowns.

And the president of that company doesn't like it.

Marv Cowdrey, president of United Dealer Group of Phoenix, Ariz., says the Chrysler warranty takes away one of the most profitable sources of income for dealers and will not help sell cars.

But Chrysler says its dealers haven't complained and adds that it intends to stick by the new plan to lure customers to showrooms.

"They (Chrysler) should have kept the rebates," said Cowdrey.

The Chrysler program requires dealers to honor the warranty, denying them the chance to offer similar programs from United Dealer Group and other independent warranty firms — which guarantee the dealer a profit when the warranties are written, Cowdrey said.

Chrysler's program does not offer a profit for dealers.

"I believe in free enterprise," Cowdrey said. "In today's times, a dealer should be allowed to go after any profit-making area he can get."

Cowdrey told Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca just that in a full-page letter printed in an April issue of the trade journal Automotive News.

Chrysler spokesman B.F. Mullins says Iacocca intends to write Cowdrey, saying "as a manufacturer, we have the right to extend the best warranty possible to our customers."

Chrysler's program, begun April 11 as a substitute for rebates which the No. 3 U.S. carmaker had been running for nearly six straight months, offers a limited warranty on the engine, transmission, transaxle, drive axle and axle shaft for five years or 50,000 miles, whichever comes first, on domestically produced autos.

It includes a warranty against perforation from rusting on outer panels for the same period and a free maintenance program.

Cowdrey says "customers want and deserve a good deal," but adds that dealers in his area, the southwest and

Rocky Mountain states, have complained their showroom traffic and business have been down "better than 60 percent" since the new program began.

But Chrysler says that as far as the company knows, no dealers have complained. And Mullins added that showroom traffic has remained about the same since the rebates stopped and the warranty program began.

Broadcaster fights to stay on dial

By HAL SPENCER
Associated Press Writer

GLOUCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The one-room basement apartment that Simon Geller calls home contains a rumpled bed, a sink, a hotplate, two oak desks and a radio station.

The station is WVCA-FM, and from midmorning to midnight seven days a week, the 62-year-old Geller broadcasts virtually commercial-free classical music to a loyal band of listeners who live as far as away Boston, 30 miles to the southwest.

Geller doesn't exactly operate by the book, and he is on the verge of losing the license he has held for 15 years. The apparent successor is a corporation headed by Josiah Spaulding of Manchester, a prominent figure in Republican politics in Massachusetts.

But Geller is fighting back, aided by scores of listeners, who say his unconventional approach to broadcasting is an oasis in an "era of soul-destroying sameness" on the airwaves.

The supporters are raising money for a court fight and writing letters of protest to the Federal Communications Commission and President Reagan.

The FCC voted March 4 not to renew Geller's license to operate the one-man station. According to FCC spokesman William Silva, the commission said Geller did not meet federal requirements to present news and public service programming.

Geller says the FCC likely will issue its formal ruling around June 1. He hopes to raise enough money to finance a federal court appeal in Washington.

"I don't think programming is the reason they want to force me out," says Geller, whose dusty and paper-strewn living quarters contrast sharply with the sophisticated electronic equipment he operates.

"The fact that the people who want my license have so much money is what's hurting me," he contends. "They (the FCC) want concentration of radio under a few big owners. They don't want competition any more."

Silva said the issue is Geller's refusal to provide programming to serve the diverse needs of the Gloucester area, "especially news."

He said the FCC announced its intention to award Geller's license to Grandbanke Corp., whose officers include Spaulding.

Spaulding says there's another side to what he calls "this David and Goliath story."

He contends Gloucester and other towns on Cape Ann sorely need a radio station to meet the diverse information needs of the community.

"You turn on WBZ in Boston and you can find out if your child's school is closed. You can listen to the news. We don't have that service on Cape Ann," he says. "All we have is a radio station broadcasting classical music."

Spaulding says the FCC gave Geller seven years to comply with regulations that a station serve the diverse needs of the area in which it broadcasts.

"Mr. Geller thumbed his nose at the FCC," says Spaulding. "He did this to himself."

Spaulding also argues that Geller's station reaches about 400,000 people in the Cape Ann area, a minority of whom prefer only classical music.

"We have put together a super program" that will include talk shows, classical music, news and public service programs, he said.

Geller says he supports his $12,000-a-year operation largely through donations from listeners. He says he doesn't like the way potential advertisers do business and no longer seeks ads to help make ends meet.

Geller admits his station broadcasts classical music to the almost total exclusion of public service programming. The station features a Saturday morning program in which a Social Security official in the Salem office answers questions sent in by elderly listeners.

And that's enough, Geller insists. He believes that a significant number of people want a station that broadcasts classical music almost exclusively.

He searched a cluttered desk and came up with a fistful of letters from listeners to prove his point. Copies of the letters had been sent to the FCC or to Reagan asking them to intervene on Geller's behalf.

Thomas T. Howard, chairman of the English Department at Gordon College in Wenham, wrote it would be "a very great pity indeed" if Geller's station were silenced.

Howard enclosed a $25 check for Geller's legal defense fund, which Geller estimates contains $4,000.

The FCC ruling represents a "classic case of big money doing in the little guy," wrote the Rev. James C. O'Brien of Boston.

Geller says his station will continue to broadcast while he mounts a court fight. "And that could take a couple of years," he says.

"I'm not enjoying this fight," complains Geller, who says he works alone, seven days a week, taking a day off only once every six weeks or so to see a movie in Boston.

Mail is demanding

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Joseph McDade, R-Pa., probably gets no more or no less mail than most of his 434 House colleagues, but some of it has been unusually demanding lately.

For instance, constituent Amy Johnson suggested McDade do more for the little people: "Can you make a rule to tell the big kids on the bus to quit picking on us and quit writing on the seat?" she petitioned.

Melissa Carlson, on the other hand, told her congressman: "I am worried about taxes!!! Because I cannot get any more fruit bars! I want you to do something about this!"

You can't fool the kids at Blossburg Elementary School in Tioga County, Pa., with rhetoric and bromides. They know exactly what worries them and what they expect their elected officials to do about it.

The group of 7-year-old and 8-year-old students were asked by their teachers to write McDade on the issues they felt were the most pressing.

From his mailbox, here are some more of their concerns:

"My name is Benjamin Randise ... I am worried about the taxes. I want you to lower the taxes to one hundred dollars."

"My name is Juanita Seeley ... I am worried about some people wrote on the wall Monday night. Some good person called the police."

Don't be discouraged this early in the year if you don't seem to be getting the breaks where your work or career is concerned. Big changes are in the offing. Your time will come. TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A negative attitude today will make things harder for you personally. It could also be very annoying to co-workers and, possibly, could cause unnecessary problems. Summer Safety Tips

Proper usage of power equipment

BY L. D. GODFREY
Fire and Safety Committee
Pampa Chamber of Commerce

Each year many injuries occur while using lawn care machines. These injuries are unnecessary and preventable by following good safety practices. Following are five basic practices that can save you misery and money.

1. Store and use gasoline cautiously.
Gasoline stored improperly is a very dangerous flammable liquid. Its vapors are heavier than air and therefore travel along the ground just as water will. Spending the extra $25 for an approved safety can is a wise investment. A five gallon can of gasoline can explode with the force of several sticks of dynamite.

Always fuel your equipment out - of - doors and away from any sources of ignition. If you run out of gas, take a thirty minute break to let the engine and yourself cool off before refueling. This will prevent the engine from igniting the gasoline and protect you from heat exhaustion.

2. Protect your eyes and feet
The blade on a power mower or edger rotate at several hundred rpm. These blades can hurl objects that are in their path with dangerous force. Many injuries are caused each year by flying objects. It is a good practice to rake your lawn before mowing to remove potential projectiles. Always wear safety glasses or goggles to protect your eyes. You only have two and it's certain that you want to see your children's or grandchildren's reactions next Christmas. Also, wear a good substantial pair of shoes or boots that protect your entire foot.

3. Keep children, pets, or other observers away
Not only can flying projectiles injure you, but others observing are in probably a more vulnerable position than you are. The majority of objects hurled by the rotating blades are "shot" out the side of the mower. Small children and pets are very susceptible to injury from these projectiles. The safe practice is to allow only yourself and the mower in the yard.

4. Always push, never pull your mower
Many injuries occur each year when someone is pulling a mower toward them. If the person trips and falls, the mower is apt to be pulled over the feet and lower legs. A good method to minimize the need to pull the mower-back is to mow around your yard in the same way a farmer plows a field instead of trying to go back and forth across the yard.

5. Never check under mower with engine running
Never attempt to repair or check underneath a mower with the engine running. Also, do not attempt to clean out a plugged grass chute with the engine running. The rotating blades can take a finger or hand off very easily. If you must make repairs underneath, disconnect the spark plug wire so that the engine can't start accidentally.

Your Chamber of Commerce urges you to follow these basic practices to "Keep Pampa Safe" as well as "Beautiful."

Dear Abby

Right to be wanted is every child's right

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You published my letter last March in which I took issue with your statement, "If the parents cannot agree whether to terminate the pregnancy, the decision should be the mother's because it's her body."

I said, "Pregnancy is not simply the state of a woman's body. It is also the stage in another person's life. The whole issue of abortion is difficult enough when both parents agree, but to deny one parent his share in that decision, just because he doesn't agree with the other parent who by biological accident happens to be in control, is unconscionable." My closing remark was, "After all, you could not claim as your own another person's car parked in your garage."

In your published response you said, "A woman's body is not a garage that can be rented by the week or month."

In a subsequent personal unpublished letter to me you wrote, "Now don't tell me you aren't with the right-to-lifers. You're certainly not pro-choice!"

Wrong! And right! I am still getting letters of congratulations from pro-lifers, which shows how poorly I expressed myself. However, I am not with the pro-lifers; neither am I with the pro-choicers. I have enormous difficulty with the issue of abortion.

In the case of an unwanted child who would be severely emotionally or physically crippled by child abuse because he wasn't wanted in the first place, I would have to opt for abortion to prevent that kind of suffering. But I cannot take lightly the argument that abortion is murder.

HERBERT S. HEINEMAN, M.D.

DEAR DR. HEINEMAN: At last we agree. Every child has a right to be a wanted child.

DEAR ABBY: Do you remember the column you had about girls needing to go all the way like a moose needed a hat rack? Well, I cut it out when I was 12 and gave it to a girlfriend who needed it more than I did at the time. She said it helped her make the right decision. It helped me, also, later on.

Please run it again for other girls who are struggling with that problem. Thank you.

MISS R. IN OHIO

DEAR MISS R.: Here it is:

Girls need to "prove their love" through illicit sex relations like a moose needs a hat rack.

Why not prove your love by sticking your head in the oven and turning on the gas? Or playing leapfrog out in the traffic? It's about as safe.

Clear the cobwebs out of your head: Any fellow who asks you to "prove your love" is trying to take you for the biggest, most gullible fool who ever walked. That proving bit is one of the oldest and rottenest lines ever invented!

Does he love you? It doesn't sound like it. Someone who loves you wants whatever is best for you. But now figure it out. He wants you to:

- Commit an immoral act.
- Surrender your virtue.
- Throw away your self-respect.

Risk the loss of your precious reputation. And risk getting into trouble.

Does that sound as though he wants what's best for you? This is the laugh of the century. He wants what's best for him... he wants a thrill he can brag about at your expense.

Love? Who's kidding whom! A boy who loves a girl would sooner cut off his right arm than hurt her. If you want my opinion, this self-serving so-and-so has already proved that he doesn't love you.

The predictable aftermath of "proofs" of this kind always find Don Juan tiring of his sport. That's when he drops you, picks up his line and goes casting elsewhere for bigger, and equally silly, fish.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from the unhappy husband who complained about his wife going off and playing tennis while he sits home. He said no way would he take up tennis and thought his wife should give up tennis. You said it was OK for the wife to go without him.

I used to feel the same way, and told my wife to go ahead and play tennis while I stayed home and studied. (I was in college at the time.) Within a month she began an affair with her tennis partner. It went on for a year. She finally broke it off, but it was the cause of our divorce.

I don't think a married couple should have separate interests. They should either find things to do together, or forget it.

LEARNED MY LESSON

DEAR LEARNED: The more interests a couple have in common, the better. But a solid marriage is based on trust, and if a couple must be together constantly to keep an eye on each other, it's not much of a marriage.

Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

NUMB ARMS, LEGS

Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above) (2) Headaches (3) Painful joints (4) Numbness in the arms or hands (5) Loss of sleep (6) Stiffness in the neck (7) Pain between the shoulders (8) Stiffness of pain in lower back (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals...call for in Depth consultation in Layman's terms.

cool in arm weather

By TOM HOGE
P Wine and Food Writer
A vegetable that is said to be 96 percent water, the cu-ber has made quite a name itself.

With pickled and fresh, this refreshing member of the cucurbit family has long been a favorite vegetable in many lands.
The Romans, Hebrews and Greeks valued them as long as 4-years ago.

Cucumbers were very popular in ancient Rome and the Emperor Tiberius, who is said to have eaten them daily, liked them so much that he had his kitcheners devise artificial ways for growing them out of stone.

The Emperor Charlemagne, who made a hobby of experimental farming, grew the cucumber in France in the 9th century. The English began to cultivate cucumbers in the 13th century, and in 1494
Columbus planted them in Florida. The Spaniards brought them to the mainland some time later.

In North America, cucumbers were first grown in Virginia in 1619 and in Massachusetts in 1630. They have been grown in enormous quantities in this country ever since, with a large portion consumed by weight stitchers.

This succulent fruit of a trailing vine comes in a number of varieties. They range from dainty little specimens 3 to 4 inches long to giants, grown in English greenhouses, that measure up to 2 feet in length.

The most popular cucumbers are long, with a dark green skin, but the Russians, who are fond of them, grow short, thick ones with a tough brown skin.

The French also grow large bumpy cucumbers for cosmetic purposes, since it is believed by many that they soften and whiten the skin.

The pickle known as the gherkin is made from small cucumbers. They are soaked in vinegar, treated with boiling vinegar and flavored with dill and spices.

Cucumbers are available the year round, but the crop reaches its peak in America from May to August.

Here's a recipe for a warm-weather cucumber and tomato soup, to be served chilled.

1/2 a medium cucumber,
peeled and grated
1 can (10 1/2 ounces)
condensed tomato soup
1 soup can water
1/4 cup chopped green onion
1/4 cup chopped green pepper
1 teaspoon Worcestershire
Dash Tabasco
1 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon pepper
1/2 cup heavy cream
Chopped parsley
Mix all ingredients except cream and parsley. Chill for several hours. Strain if desired, and add heavy cream. Serve garnished with parsley. Serves
4. Good with a chilled dry white wine.

Cucumbers in Golden Relish

GOLDEN RELISH
Guests will have fun guessing
what's in this.

3 cucumbers (each 7 to 8 inches long), pared,
seeded and coarsely
shredded
3 medium onions, coarsely
chopped
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup sugar
1 1/2 cups cider vinegar
2 teaspoons celery seed
2 teaspoons mustard seed
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon ground turmeric
1-3rd cup water

In a 3-quart saucepan stir together the cucumber, onion and salt; let stand at room temperature for 1/2 hour; drain well. Return to saucepan. Stir in the sugar, vinegar, celery seed and mustard seed. Bring to a boil; simmer, stirring occasionaly for 1/2 hour. Stir together until smooth the cornstarch, mustard, turmeric and water; add to cucumber mixture. Over moderate heat, stirring constantly, cook until clear, thick and boiling. Store in refrigerator overnight to blend flavors before serving;
keep any left over stored in refrigerator. Makes 1 1/2 pints.

CTURERS' COUPONS ON WEDNESDAYS

ews in Brief

WASHINGTON (AP) — People looking for what are called "entry-level jobs" in the national work force are expected to be facing less competition through the remainder of the decade, the government says.

Because the post-war baby boom generation is already in the labor force and birth rates have been declining in recent years, the number of young people entering the labor force is expected to fall by 2 million during the rest of the decade, "easing the stiff competition for entry-level jobs," the Labor Department said Tuesday.

The department, releasing

a survey of job prospects in some 250 occupations, also said job opportunities are expected to expand sharply during the remainder of the decade. It said the number of new jobs between 1980 and 1990 is expected to range from 17 million to 26 million with 5 million to eight million of those in such traditional white-collar fields as secretarial, retail trade and elementary school teachers.

WASHINGTON (AP) — While offering no concrete political promises, President Reagan reportedly has pledged to Soviet dissidents his continued support for human rights and religious freedom in the Soviet Union.

Reagan had lunch with several dissidents Tuesday. Richard Pipes, a Soviet affairs specialist on the National Security Council staff, said the White House meeting was scheduled six weeks ago and was not intended as a signal to Moscow two days after Reagan's proposal for U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms reductions.

Pavel Litvinov, a grandson of Stalin's foreign affairs minister and an organizer of a 1968 demonstration in Red Square against the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, said the dissidents now living in the United States appealed to Reagan for support of human rights activists still in the Soviet Union.

LONDON (AP) — "Do look after yourself Andy and come back safe and well," read the message, one of dozens sent to Prince Andrew, who is serving as a helicopter pilot with Britain's Falkland Islands task force.

Good-luck wishes for the 2-year-old prince, who is serving on HMS Invincible, have been pouring into the London offices of the British forces Broadcasting Service, which operates a daily request program for the troops.

BFPS officials said one woman signed her letter to Andrew, the second son of Queen Elizabeth II, with a huge kiss in lipstick and wrote on the bottom: "If I was 20 years younger, no other girl would stand a chance (with you)."

virtually an alternate national anthem.

Berlin assigned the royalties to "God Bless America" and a batch of other tunes to a fund for the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts. By the end of last year, the fund had earned more than $1 million.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An airport dispute between Nancy Kissinger and a "foul-mouthed" young woman was "too trivial" for prosecution, her lawyer said in asking to have an assault case dismissed.

Ellen Kaplan, a representative of the pro-nuclear Fusion Energy Foundation, alleged that the wife of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger attacked her Feb. 7.

The Kissingers were preparing to board a flight from Newark to Boston where Kissinger, 58, underwent open heart surgery.

Mrs. Kissinger contends she was provoked by insults from Ms. Kaplan, culminating in a question to Kissinger: "Do you sleep with young boys at the Carlyle Hotel in New York City?"

"We're saying the case is too trivial to warrant prosecution," lawyer Richard McGlynn said Tuesday. "There are extenuating circumstances," he said, since Mrs. Kissinger was "under considerable stress at the time."

Nude sunbathers fight to keep their beach

MIAMI (AP) — Sun worshipers who believe it's better to bask in the buff are hoping that a pitch to Miami's tourism-conscious officials will help preserve one of the Sunshine State's nude beaches.

"I'm optimistic about our chances with the city," said Gary Bryant, head of the pro-nudism Florida Free Beaches, a statewide organization. "We're offering a viable asset."

"Nude bathing is an accepted norm for the people in cosmopolitan areas. Europeans and American tourists are spending their money in the Caribbean islands, which have a lot of areas designated for nude swimming. Why not bring those tourists here?" Bryant reasoned.

The Miami City Commission is deciding whether to convert Virginia Key's beach into a public park, and Florida Free Beaches was to present its case to the commission today.

South Florida's nude sunbathers already have lost another mecca, the former "Air Force Beach" in North Palm Beach, where visitors who shed their clothes these days may receive misdeemeanor summonses.

On Monday, rangers at John D. MacArthur State Recreation Center confirmed three arrests had been made on the beach over the weekend.

The secluded stretch was popular among nudists for 25 years as local authorities looked the other way. But last year, the state and county bought it from a foundation for use as a "family-oriented" park.

Rangers passed out 30 warnings to nude sunbathers during a two-week "grace period" that ended May 3.

Of those arrested this weekend, one was charged with indecent exposure, which carries a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $1,000 fine, and two others were involved in a "lewd and lascivious act," said Ranger John Fillyaw.

Florida Free Beaches gathered 2,000 signatures on petitions asking for part of the park to be designated as "clothes-optional."
