City calls for public hearing to spur I-20 corridor growth

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

In the quest to spur development along Interstate 20, a public hearing has been scheduled for7 p.m. Wednesday at the Midland Center.

"We need some input on how the public perceives development on I-20 and its future," said Cameron Walker, planning and development coordinator.

Encouraging development along the interstate between Fairgrounds Road and Loop 250 has been targeted as a priority by the City Council at its last three annual work retreats.

"We're committed to improving our airport, we've made a commitment to develop Loop 250 and we feel like adding the I-20 corridor is a logical step to becoming a regional center," Walker said.

Assassination attempt fails to harm Egyptian president

Associated Press

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — A team of assassins cut off Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's limousine and fired a hail of bullets at it as he headed to an African summit Monday. Mubarak, a close U.S. ally who is fighting a Muslim insurgency, escaped uninjured and flew back to Egypt.

At least one bullet struck a window of Mubarak's armored, black Mercedes-Benz limousine, but failed to penetrate the bulletproof glass. "I saw those who shot at me," Mubarak said after returning to Cairo.

Two of the attackers were killed in a lengthy exchange of gunfire with Egyptian and Ethiopian guards. The gunmen were Arab in appearance, heightening suspicions that Muslim extremists were responsible.

"Whatever happens, Egypt will not be shaken and we will not

Court permits school sports test for drugs

■ Justices say in 6-3 ruling that public schools can require student athletes to submit to random urinalysis.

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Public school officials may conduct random drug tests on student athletes, even those not suspected of using narcotics, without violating their constitutional protections against unreasonable body searches, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

In a 6-3 decision handed down as the justices rushed toward their summer recess on Thursday, the court said that traditional concerns for privacy based on the Constitution are overridden by a school system's responsibility for ensuring the well-being of young athletes as well as schoolchildren in general.

Also, the court said, student athletes cannot expect much privacy in a locker room where drug testing typically takes place.

"School sports are not for the bashful," said Justice Antonin Scalia, noting that open showering and changing are routine. "Students who voluntarily participate in school athletics have reason to expect intrusions upon normal rights and privileges, including privacy."

Scalia warned, however, that drug testing of a person without reasonable suspicion of narcotić usage might not pass constitutional muster "in other contexts."

The Clinton administration had asked the court to uphold student- athlete drug testing. Lee Brown, director of the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy, hailed the ruling, saying it "gives school districts around the country another weapon in their arsenal to combat drug use and drug-related violence."

But Steven Shapiro, legal director of

In split, commissioners fill vacant seat

The Midland County Commissioners' Court went through two sets of votes on Monday before naming Randel K. "Randy" Hicklin, a 43-year-old certified public accountant, to a commissioner's post on the five-member Midland County Housing Authority.

In a split 3-1-1-vote, the Commissioners' Court appointed Hicklin to serve out the one year remaining on the two-year term formerly held by Iris Hall, who resigned from the board.

"I just hope I can be of benefit to the board," said Hicklin, whose expertise includes accounting and finances.

"There are a lot of problems over there," Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood said of the Housing Authority. "I don't know all of the facts. I don't know if the things we are hearing are legitimate or are just sour grapes."

Greenwood ISD chalks up 1st look at budget proposal

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

GREENWOOD — The Greenwood Independent School District board of trustees got its first look at a proposed budget for the 1995-96 school year at its meeting Monday.

The proposed $8 million budget is an increase of $154,869 over the 1994-95 budget.

Payroll costs made up the majority of the budget at about $4 million, or 57.64 percent of the proposed budget. Debt services made up the second-highest portion of the budget at $1 million, or $15.93 percent.

The largest increase in the budget from last year was $224,423 in hiring new teachers and teacher salaries. The second-largest increase was $62,610 in lease purchase payments toward new buses.

Decreases from the previous year included a $95,000 drop in

As the top negotiators, U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor and Japanese Trade Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto, prepared for crucial negotiations, each side said it wanted to avoid a damaging trade war.

Yet Hashimoto and Kantor both came to the table talking tough, which could impede a solution that would allow both to claim victory.

The negotiators smiled and shook hands as they met briefly in public Monday night.

San Antonio woman lives eight years with incorrect AIDS diagnosis

By Don Finley
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — When doctors told Grace Mireles she was infected with the virus that causes AIDS, she felt her life spinning out of control. One by one, she lost the things most precious to her — her health, her marriage, her two young sons.

Eight years later, doctors are trying to understand how a terrible mistake occurred. New tests show Mireles is not infected and she apparently never was.

Worse, she was prescribed powerful and toxic doses of anti-AIDS drugs like AZT and DDI for years.

For Mireles, 35, the pain is more than eight years lost. It's the rage she witnessed in her adolescent son, who left to live with his father after she was diagnosed.

When she told him she was never infected, he hurled a chair across the room, demanding to know who had harmed them so.

That question may be left to a panel of jurors. Mireles filed a lawsuit last week in state district court against dozens of San Antonio health providers.

Mireles' ordeal began in 1986, when she suffered severe bleeding during oral surgery and was given a series of blood transfusions. She was diagnosed with von Willebrand's disease, a condition related to hemophilia.

She was referred to the hemophilia center at Santa Rosa Hospital in San Antonio, where in June 1987 she was tested for a number of transfusion-related infections, including human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

The initial test, known as an Elisa, came back positive for the virus. A subsequent, more sophisticated test, known as Western blot, also was positive for HIV.

Santa Rosa officials declined to comment on the case, saying it is under litigation.

After the test results were back, Mireles was called back for counseling. Her counselor, she said, "specifically told me not to worry, because it was not known at that time that women got full-blown AIDS."

She soon had other things to worry about. Her youngest son was diagnosed with cancer, from which he has since recovered.

She went to the then BradyGreen Community Health Center with symptoms

German Cabinet OKs first fighting mission since WWII

BONN, Germany (AP) — German fighter jets will take to the skies over Bosnia to counter Serb missile radar this summer in what could be their first combat mission since World War II, the government announced Monday.

Officials portrayed the Cabinet's decision as a step in Germany's postwar maturation, showing a willingness to take risks in support of NATO allies. They hope shouldering responsibility will boost German clout in the European Union.

"This is a sensible government that makes sensible decisions," Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in Cannes, France, where he was meeting with other EU leaders.

The $241 million mission, expected to win approval in parliament Friday, followed months of agonizing over whether German troops should venture into the Balkans, where the Nazis slaughtered hundreds of thousands of Serbs and others in World War II.

The commander of a Tornado fighter squadron called the mission a deciding moment for German's postwar military.

"We hope to be a deterrent, but of course it could come to shooting, and that hasn't happened in 50 years," said Lt. Col. Johann G. Dora, 46, commander of Fighter Bomber Squadron 32 in Lechfeld, near Munich.

"Naturally, we've all had doubts about the wisdom of a mission in an area where the German Wehrmacht committed atrocities, but we can't eternally fall back on historical guilt," he said in a telephone interview.

It is not clear whether Dora's pilots will ever see real combat. They'll only fly if needed to back up the new force of French, British and Dutch troops sent to protect peacekeepers, said Defense Minister Volker Ruehe.

The United Nations has approved deployment of the 12,500-member force, but hasn't authorized it to react against the Serbs if they attack or hinder U.N. blue helmets.

Ruehe indicated he supports using limited force if that's what it takes to keep the U.N. mission of blue-helmeted peacekeepers alive in former Yugoslavia.

"German pilots won't attack unless there is aggression by others against the U.N.," Ruehe said at a news conference. "But if the United Nations says 'No' to protecting its blue helmets, it means the end of its mission anyway."

Should its allies decide to end the mission, German troops will be in position to support the U.N. pullout, Ruehe added.

In the coming weeks, 16 German jets and 12 transport planes will transfer to NATO bases in Italy. They include eight ECR-Tornado anti-radar jets under Dora's command. Their mission is to locate and, if necessary, destroy Serb surface-to-air missile sites.

The ECR-Tornadoes, armed with HARM missiles, have been sought by NATO for months because U.S. anti-radar planes capable of destroying missile batteries aren't always available.

A radar-guided missile downed U.S. pilot Capt. Scott O'Grady on June 2.

Germany will base some 1,000 staff, ground crews and support personnel in Italy and 500 medics at a field hospital in the Croatian port of Split.

The Tornado mission has split the opposition Social Democrats, whose leader Rudolf Scharping opposes it.

Bosnians blast U.N. as shelling, sniping maim, kill

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's prime minister marked the United Nations' 50th anniversary Monday by branding it an accomplice in genocide for failing to protect his people during 38 months of war.

The criticism came after rebel Serb gunners killed a civilian Monday in Sarajevo and pounded the U.N.-patrolled enclave of Srebrenica in eastern Bosnia with their heaviest attack this year.

"The international community, whether it likes it or not, and the United Nations organization, is an accomplice in the genocide against Bosnia and its people," Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic said.

The U.N. force, he implied, had done little for Bosnia since Bosnia's war began in April 1992 with a Serb rebellion against independence from Serb-led Yugoslavia. An estimated 200,000 people are dead or missing.

Silajdzic said the United Nations has not been able to protect civilians in six "safe areas" it established around Bosnia in May 1993. Nor has it continued to enforce a weapons exclusion zone that largely kept Serb guns from pounding Sarajevo from February 1994 until this spring, he said.

At least one person was killed and nine were wounded in renewed Serb shelling of Sarajevo Monday. Eleven civilians, including four children, were killed and 17 were wounded by shelling and sniping Sunday.

The heaviest shelling this year was recorded Monday morning in Srebrenica. The Serbs also shelled Gorazde, another eastern enclave, U.N. officials said.

There were no confirmed casualty reports from the shelling.

Serb shelling of Sarajevo and five other U.N.-protected areas in Bosnia has increased since NATO airstrikes last month and the June 15 launch of a government offensive to break the Serb siege of the city.

Treatment of U.N. peacekeepers by both sides has worsened. On Monday, U.N. officials reported that French peacekeepers patrolling the only open road into Sarajevo were harassed by government troops who robbed one unit. Bosnian Serbs have shot at others using the road.

U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Gerard Dubois said a unit of French peacekeepers on the road on Mount Igman, southwest of Sarajevo, was ambushed and robbed of assault rifles, flak jackets, helmets, radios and ammunition belts by Bosnian army soldiers late Sunday.

Diplomats and politicians are trying to determine whether the 23,000-man peakeeping force should continue its mission — even as they bolster it with additional troops.

A new rapid reaction force of as many as 12,000 soldiers is arriving in Bosnia, and Germany decided Monday to back it with planes and 1,500 troops.

When Serb violations of the weapons exclusion zone led to retaliatory NATO airstrikes last month, the Serbs seized hundreds of peacekeepers. They released them only after apparently winning promises that there would be no more airstrikes.

Virtually the only U.N. measure in effect in Bosnia is an international arms embargo on all of former Yugoslavia, Silajdzic said angrily.

Although Bosnia's Muslim-led government army clearly has obtained some weapons despite the embargo, it has always been outgunned by Serbs who inherited heavy weapons from the old Yugoslav army before it left Bosnia in April 1992.

"Our hands are tied," Silajdzic said.

'I'm innocent,' brother of former Mexican president says

Hearst News Service

MEXICO CITY — Claiming "I am innocent," Raul Salinas de Gortari, older brother of former President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, says he is not getting a fair trial on charges he plotted the assassination of a high-ranking official.

Speaking for the first time since he was imprisoned four months ago for allegedly planning the assassination of Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu, Raul Salinas made his views known in a paid advertisement that appeared Monday in leading Mexico City newspapers.

A spokesman for Attorney General Antonio Lozano Gracia refused comment on Raul Salinas's statement.

Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu was shot and killed outside a hotel in the Mexican capital on Sept. 28, just six months after the leading presidential candidate was assassinated in Tijuana.

At the time of his death, Ruiz Massieu was secretary-general of the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) and had just been named majority leader of the Chamber of Deputies. He was also touted for a Cabinet post in the new administration.

Five months after the death of Ruiz Massieu, the attorney general ordered the arrest of Raul Salinas on charges he and a friend, former Tamaulipas Congressman Manuel Munoz Rocha, hatched the murder plot. Munoz has been missing since October, and he is feared dead.

A few days after his brother was arrested at the home of their sister — former wife of Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu — Carlos Salinas flew to New York amid accusations that he was responsible for the economic debacle and peso devaluation.

In the advertisement, Raul Salinas said statements made by Fernando Rodriguez Gonzalez, Munoz Rocha's former legislative aide and a co-conspirator, have been contradictory.

U.S. says Cuba refuses to free Nixon's nephew

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The State Department said on Monday that Cuba was holding the passport of Donald Nixon Jr., nephew of the late President Richard M. Nixon, and was preventing him from returning to the United States.

Last Friday, Nixon's wife, Helene Nixon, asked the State Department and several members of Congress to help her husband, asserting that he was being detained by Cuban officials.

The Cuban Foreign Ministry denied on Monday that it was detaining Nixon, although it said the Cuban government did not want him to leave the country until it finished investigating his relationship with Robert Vesco, who was recently arrested by the Cuban authorities after living in Havana for a dozen years. Vesco fled the United States in 1972 to escape charges that he had bilked mutual fund investors of more than $200 million in what was then the largest financial fraud in history.

On Sunday, Nixon told ABC News that Cuban officials had accused him of money laundering, espionage, and drug trafficking.

Christine Shelly, a State Department spokesman, said: "We are not aware of specific charges having been brought against Mr. Nixon by the Cuban Government. He did inform the U.S. interests section that Cuban authorities were holding his U.S. passport."

Nixon has long had close ties with Vesco, and for a while lived in Costa Rica with Vesco in the 1970s shortly after Vesco became a fugitive.

In 1975, federal prosecutors in Detroit said they were looking into Nixon's activities as part of an investigation into whether Vesco was involved in drug smuggling.

Congressional aides said Nixon was in Cuba as part of an effort to work with Vesco to manufacture an anti-AIDS drug that the United States has not approved for use.

At Monday's State Department briefing, Ms. Shelly said she could not comment on whether Nixon's business dealings in Cuba violated the 32-year-old economic embargo against trading with Cuba.

■ 500 die in Liberia cholera outbreak

MONROVIA, Liberia — At least 500 people trapped by fighting have died in a cholera outbreak in northern Liberia, health officials who visited the stricken area said Monday.

Sixteen towns in Lofa County have been affected, and thousands of people have begun fleeing to other villages to escape the disease.

"Lofa County is now a silent tragedy," said James Mulbah, the leader of a group of Liberian health workers that visited the area.

Officials urged aid agencies to send medication to the area, but aid workers have considered Lofa County off-limits since December 1993, when the warring faction controlling the area attacked a United Nations post there.

■ 4th day of violence: Death toll hits 99

KARACHI, Pakistan — Muslim militants terrorized Pakistan's largest city for a fourth day Monday, killing 20 people and threatening more violence if their jailed supporters weren't released.

The streets, usually packed with overcrowded buses, rickshaws and thousands of cars, were empty as the militants' 4 p.m. (7 a.m. EDT) deadline passed without the prisoners being released.

Residents in the hardest-hit areas of central and eastern Karachi stayed indoors. Even usually safe areas were deserted as militants continued a shooting spree that has killed 99 people, including two policemen shot Monday.

■ Boat from Jesus' time is on display

KIBBUTZ GINOSAR, Israel — A Sea of Galilee fishing boat dating to the time of Jesus was displayed Monday for the first time in nine years.

Scientists drained rust-colored preservation fluid from a tank containing the 27-foot by 7 1/2-foot vessel, known as the "Jesus Boat."

Two Israeli fishermen discovered the boat in 1986 on the shores of the Sea of Galilee, where Jesus is said to have walked on water. Soon after it was found, the vessel was submerged in the preservation fluid, which reinforces the wood.

"We're quite happy with the result," said Israel Antiquities Authority archaeologist Orna Cohen.

Haiti election confusion stirs questions about outcome

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Some Haitians got a second chance Monday to cast a vote in a chaotic election that was championed by the Clinton administration as a successful experiment in democracy.

Suggesting the disorder that plagued the election, officials climbed over boxes of votes piled haphazardly at the main counting center — including about 1,000 boxes found abandoned and unsealed in the street.

At a mountain town near the capital, scorched remains of burned ballots blew around in front of a polling office attacked overnight.

Voting continued in some northern towns Monday, after electoral officials announced the extension of Sunday's 12-hour voting period because some bureaus only opened an hour or two before they were supposed to close.

Hundreds of polling stations never opened for lack of ballot materials, preventing hundreds of thousands of Haitians from voting.

The station attack was among a few violent incidents that marred elections flawed by major administrative irregularities.

Sunday's balloting was for 2,195 senators, deputies, mayors and provincial and local council members. About 3.5 million Haitians — 90 percent of the electorate — were registered to vote.

"A peaceful balloting process occurred in a country where violence has so often marked past elections," said Brian Atwood, leading a team of observers sent by President Clinton. "This feat is truly impressive when one considers that but nine months ago Haiti was under the yoke of military dictatorship."

But, he said, "there may be a need to rerun elections in certain jurisdictions."

He said a determined effort would be needed to remedy the biggest problems before a July 23 runoff and presidential balloting in December.

Atwood, head of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said 1990 elections that swept President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to power in a popular revolt against decades of tyranny were no better organized.

"Some 25 percent of the ballots were not counted in 1990," he said. "So there was some chaos there as well."

Aristide, ousted by the army in 1991 after only seven months in office, was returned to power last fall following a U.S.-led intervention that removed army rulers from power. His five-year term expires in February.

Critics blamed the Provisional Electoral Council for the disorganization. Opposition parties long have accused the council of being weighted in favor of Aristide and his supporters, who were expected to sweep the vote.

Robert Pastor, an analyst at former President Jimmy Carter's Center for International Studies, said the crucial next step was the counting of ballots, some already tainted by apparently inept electoral officials.

"I saw 1,000 (ballot boxes) open in the street last night," Pastor said.

On Monday, the two-story building where a final vote count is supposed to be verified was the scene of more confusion.

Boxes of ballots were stacked seven feet high in four rooms. When the stacks got too high, more boxes were piled helter-skelter into the center. Election officials and observers tramped on them to get from room to room.

There were reports of ballot boxes that were unsealed before voting started or left unsealed after the vote.

Pastor said he saw only a couple of instances of officials trying to manipulate votes.

However, observers from the independent Washington-based International Republican Institute said they saw vote tally sheets being altered and ballots being substituted with newly marked ballots in Port-au-Prince.

Despite its flaws, the vote won praise from the Clinton administration.

Yeltsin meets with lawmakers to avert political showdown

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin met with legislators in the Kremlin on Monday amid speculation he will sack one or more top ministers to end Russia's worst political crisis in two years.

Both Yeltsin and Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, under pressure to shuffle the Cabinet after parliament's no-confidence vote last week, sounded conciliatory and said they hope to avert a major showdown.

But Yeltsin's spokesman issued a veiled warning to lawmakers about trying to bring down the government.

"You have probably noticed that when the president does choose to fight, few people have been able to defeat him," Sergei Medvedev told Russian Television.

In a non-binding vote Wednesday, the lower house of parliament voted no confidence in the government for its handling of the recent hostage crisis in southern Russia.

The government struck back by daring lawmakers to declare no confidence again in a vote scheduled for Saturday. A second no-confidence vote would allow Yeltsin to dissolve parliament and call new elections instead of dumping Chernomyrdin and his Cabinet.

Back-room talks and political jockeying were under way as both sides signalled a willingness to compromise. Yeltsin summoned several lawmakers, including his former reformist prime minister, Yegor Gaidar, to the Kremlin for consultations Monday and scheduled more talks for Tuesday.

The lawmakers' chief demand is a change in the so-called "power ministers," the men in charge of the army and security forces. They passed a series of near-unanimous votes on Friday demanding their ouster.

Yeltsin has suggested he might consider personnel changes at Thursday's scheduled meeting of his Security Council. ITAR-Tass said Monday that the president was planning to call the "power ministers" on the carpet beforehand.

Yeltsin's press service said the president would "take a number of steps and propose specific measures" to end the crisis between the parliament and the government."

Chernomyrdin, who met with another group of lawmakers, told them the country would be destabilized politically if they reaffirm their no-confidence vote.

"The country needs neither disbanding of the Duma nor dissolution of the government," he said in remarks reported by ITAR-Tass.

In a speech to the government Thursday, Yeltsin admitted mistakes were made in the handling of the hostage crisis and the war in Chechnya that set the stage.

SEAT: Commissioners appoint Hicklin to post

(From 1A)

Voting for Hicklin's appointment were Norwood and Commissioners James Brezina and Henry Goulet. Voting against the appointment was Commissioner Louise Valencia. Commissioner Guy McCrary abstained.

But in an earlier motion proposed by Mrs. Valencia, Mrs. Valencia and McCrary had voted to appoint Lola Nunn, a retired Midland teacher, to the board. The proposal failed to gain more votes.

In nominating Mrs. Nunn, Mrs. Valencia said that Mrs. Nunn "knows the needs of that (Midland's eastside) community. She is willing to serve on that board for the betterment of the community."

Mrs. Valencia said an African-American citizen who understands the community ought to be on the board.

"She (Mrs. Nunn) is concerned," Mrs. Valencia said. "She is right there. She sees the (housing) needs every day," particularly on Midland's far east side.

In making appointments to the board, the Commissioners' Court has "tried diligently" to ensure that community interests are represented, McCrary said.

While Norwood acknowledged that Mrs. Nunn is "an outstanding person," he said that "due diligence" on the part of the Commissioners' Court would dictate that an accountant serve on the board to help resolve the housing problems, which mainly are financial.

Though the Commissioners' Court appoints the Housing Authority's board members, the court does not interfere with the "day-to-day operations of the board," Norwood said.

Following the vote, Norwood noted that the Housing Authority "has turned into a multi-million-dollar operation. And I think it is important to have someone on the board with an accounting and financial background."

Mrs. Nunn, who was not present for the vote, later offered no comment on the Commissioners' Court's action.

"We have a very strong board now," Norwood said, "and I think Randy (Hicklin) will strengthen it even further."

Serving with Hicklin on the board are Tim Johnson, a Midland lawyer who is board chairman; Elsie Hugly, a community volunteer who is vice chairman; Don Hellinghausen, a Midland businessman; and Romeo Canales, principal of Crockett Elementary School on eastside Midland.

Johnson had recommended Hicklin's appointment to the board.

While he "may not be the one to come in and solve our problems," Johnson said that Hicklin has a background and understanding of the tax laws. "We are not looking for Randy Hicklin to solve our problems."

Mrs. Valencia had recommended that the Housing Authority hire an outside accountant to analyze the Housing Authority's finances.

"Maybe you are exactly right," Johnson said. "We may need to hire a full-time accountant."

Housing Authority board members-commissioners Hellinghausen and Canalas had recommended Mrs. Nunn for the board position.

Mrs. Nunn is "very well known and highly respected," said Canalas. He recommended a comprehensive external audit of the Housing Authority. "Something needs to be done."

In advocating Mrs. Nunn for the Housing Authority position, Hellinghausen said, "The African-American has suffered disproportionately" in America and a black person on the board could "bring something that we can't. We (Anglo-Americans) can bring good intentions."

Hellinghausen, who said he has "a lot" of experience in finances, said that it would be "ludicrous" to expect a volunteer to solve the Housing Authority's financial problems.

The Housing Authority's executive director, Jerrie Ann Westmoreland, said she was pleased to "welcome him (Hicklin) on the board," which oversees the Housing Authority's $2 million annual operation, including federal housing subsidies and affordable housing projects for low-income families.

"We have really progressive programs in Project Self-Sufficiency," Mrs. Westmoreland said. "We are very active in welfare reform."

The Midland County Housing Authority in 1986 started operating Project Self-Sufficiency as a pilot project "to transform the welfare system from one of enabling dependence to helping people get back into the system and to provide economic mobility."

In Project Self-Sufficiency, people on the welfare roles are encouraged to learn living and job skills through college courses, to escape the welfare pattern, and to become productive citizens who develop self-esteem and self-respect.

CLOCK: U.S., Japan try to avert trade sanctions

(From 1A)

ty and patience.

"You represent all of this," Kantor told Hashimoto.

"Having talks with Mr. Kantor requires patience," Hashimoto said. "I very much hope we can carry on our conversations politely."

Earlier, Hashimoto said it would be "difficult" to reach an accord before Wednesday's deadline for threatened U.S. sanctions against Japanese cars worth nearly $6 billion. He echoed Japan's other leaders, saying his nation's basic position was not negotiable.

Kantor said nothing less than a complete deal will satisfy the United States.

The main cause for hope has come in reports that top Japanese manufacturers plan to boost car production in the United States and use more American parts in vehicles assembled there. That would create U.S. jobs and might defuse the troubles.

President Clinton says that if Japan does not start buying more U.S. cars and parts, it will impose a 100 percent tariff on 13 types of Japanese luxury cars that had sales last year of $5.9 billion in the U.S. market.

That would sharply raise the price of models such as the Toyota Lexus and Honda Acura, effectively making it impossible for U.S. dealers to sell these cars.

Japan says the unilateral threat by the United States violates global free trade rules. It objects to what it calls "numerical targets" for more use of U.S. auto parts.

Officially, Japan has said it would rely on the World Trade Organization to address the U.S. action. But Japanese officials say privately that some form of more immediate retaliation would be likely.

Two potential targets: Japan's imports of American agricultural and high-tech products.

Other big trading partners say both sides are wrong. They agree that Japan keeps its market too tightly closed to competition, but they also say the United States is being too heavy-handed and ignoring free-trade rules.

DIAGNOSIS: 'If I'm going to die, I want to die'

including weight loss and diarrhea.

Because of her symptoms and earlier transfusions, the doctor asked if she'd ever been tested for AIDS. When she answered yes, she was immediately placed on AZT, the powerful anti-viral drug that prevents the virus from multiplying, but at a cost. It is extremely toxic, with a host of unpleasant side effects.

Morales was also made aware of the seriousness of her disease.

"The humiliation of having to go through all these things ... " she said. "I remember one time when I was at the (AIDS) clinic at the BradyGreen, people would walk through there and actually cover their mouths."

Over the years, doctors increased her dosage of drugs, and placed her on new ones.

"I was constantly nauseated, constantly vomiting. I couldn't get out of bed. I was thinking it was the AIDS that was causing these problems. It never occurred to me it was the drugs."

The greatest blow came when her oldest son, whom she had told of her condition, said he wanted to leave her to live with her ex-husband. The younger son, who was unaware of her condition, followed his brother's lead.

"I couldn't provide for them like they wanted," she said.

In 1993, sick with pain and loss, Mireles stopped taking her medication. "I just said if I'm going to die, I want to die. Let it run its course."

She began feeling better immediately. She also underwent acupuncture and message therapy. She even traveled to Mexico for what she described as "miracle water."

On New Year's Day this year, she was watching the television program "60 Minutes" with a friend. The program featured a Connecticut woman, Charlene Riling, who had been misdiagnosed with HIV.

Her friend suggested she be retested. She took the test under a false name at a Planned Parenthood clinic.

Two weeks later, when she returned, the clinic worker cheerfully told her the test was negative.

"She kept telling me, 'What's wrong? Why are you crying?'"

I said, "You must have made a mistake."

But there was no mistake.

"Did her blood become confused with somebody else's? There's got to be some explanation," said George LeGrand, her lawyer.

"But I think more significant than that is that six or eight years go by, and everybody just presumes she has AIDS based on some test she had done back in 1987."

For Mireles, the end of her long ordeal brings little comfort.

"I am happy I'm no longer HIV-positive, don't get me wrong. But I'm really angry about this."

FAILS: Mubarak survives assassination attempt

give up fighting terrorism," Mubarak, 67, said at a news conference at Cairo airport.

According to witness and official accounts, the gunmen veered across a grass median and opened fire as Mubarak's three-car entourage drove from Addis Ababa's airport to the opening session of the annual summit of the Organization of African Unity.

It was the third known attempt to kill Mubarak since the former air force officer was elevated from vice president after the assassination of Anwar Sadat in 1981. Last year, two soldiers and a civilian were executed after being convicted of plotting Mubarak's murder.

The Muslim extremists who killed Sadat launched a new attempt three years ago to topple Egypt's government and install Islamic rule. More than 750 people have been killed in the insurgency, mostly police and guerrillas.

Ethiopian officials said seven to nine gunmen were involved in the attack Monday on Mubarak.

"Troops positioned on the roof of an unfinished building and security officers patrolling the streets took immediate action and killed two of the terrorists," an unnamed Interior Ministry spokesman told the official Ethiopian News Agency.

Two police officers standing on the roadway median were shot and killed, and a third was wounded, the Interior Ministry said. It said one attacker was wounded but escaped.

The Foreign Ministry statement said the assailants "were of Arab origin," but said they hadn't been identified. Mubarak said his attackers "did not look like Ethiopians or black."

Ethiopian TV showed two slain gunmen who appeared to be Arabs lying in pools of blood. Inside their blue Land Rover, the Interior Ministry said, police found two hand grenades and about $2,700 in U.S. and Ethiopian currency.

A vehicle that carried the wounded gunman was found abandoned, said the Interior Ministry spokesman.

Police escorted journalists to a grey stone house down a side road about 150 yards from the ambush site, which they described as the gunmen's hideout.

GROWTH: City calls for public hearing

(From 1A)

Dunkin — recently completed an assessment of land use, zoning and driver accessibility around the interstate.

"There's a lot of pass-through traffic in our region that's not stopping in Midland," Walker said. "We're looking to capture the overnight travelers."

In a 24-hour period along the interstate in Midland, about 11,500 vehicles travel on the main lanes, and about 5,500 to 6,500 drive down service roads (depending on the section), according to state- and city-compiled statistics.

Despite the traffic volume and available zoning for retail, office space and industrial parks, Interstate 20 at Midland is "underdeveloped," local officials said.

Recently, a main sewer line — from the water control plant at Cloverdale Road and I-20 to just west of Rankin Highway at I-20 — was installed, in part, to make way for development in the area. "We're hoping the sewer line extension will spark some development," Walker said.

Meanwhile, the city will look at other measures to help induce development. Possibilities include rezoning, making capital improvements such as water lines, and increasing or altering access points for motorists, officials said.

"We'll put the ideas received at this meeting with the findings of the consultant for a series of options for the council to consider," Walker said.

Notices of the public hearing have been sent out to about 280 people. More than 250 of those were directed to property owners on and around the interstate.

DRUGS: High court OKs student athlete testing

(From 1A)

the American Civil Liberties Union, said the opinion "makes student rights the latest casualty in the war on drugs."

In a dissent, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said the court majority erred in not making individual suspicion the only basis for drug tests of athletes.

"Intrusive, blanket searches of school children, most of whom are innocent, for evidence of serious wrongdoing are not part of any traditional school function of which I am aware," O'Connor wrote. "Indeed, many schools, like many parents, prefer to trust their children unless given reason to do otherwise."

Monday's case concerned the small logging community of Vernonia, Oregon, which in 1989 ordered all student athletes to undergo random drug tests regardless of whether they were suspected of using drugs.

The school system instituted the policy to counter the doubling of disciplinary problems in the mid-to-late 1980s, an increase officials attributed in large measure to drugs.

They aimed drug testing at athletic programs because they worried that drug abuse among athletes would lead to injuries and also because of the leadership and role-model status of athletes.

In 1991, James Acton, then a seventh grader, refused to be tested and was barred from the district's football program. His parents, Wayne and Judy Acton, filed suit in federal court, arguing their son's rights under the Fourth Amendment had been breached. They were represented by the ACLU.

The Actons also cited the 14th Amendment, which applies Bill of Rights guarantees to the states, and the Oregon constitution.

They lost in 1992 in a federal district court in Oregon but won a reversal of that decision in 1994 before the San Francisco-based U.S. Court of Appeals.

Vernonia school officials appealed to the Supreme Court, where they won on Monday.

James, now a high school student, joined his school's basketball team after the drug-testing plan became voluntary last year.

Before Monday's ruling, fear of lawsuits had kept virtually all of the nation's 15,000 or so school districts away from drug testing.

"This opinion will encourage a lot of school districts concerned about the legal risks to go ahead with it," said Richard Willard, a Washington lawyer and former Reagan administration Justice Department official.

the building construction fund and a combined $33,000 drop in electricity and gas costs for the district.

The board must approve a final budget by Sept. 1, according to state law. Superintendent Quentin Burnett said the board most likely would approve the budget on the last Monday in August.

The board unanimously approved a multi-age pilot project designed to target at-risk students in kindergarten and first grade. The project, approved for a two-year trial run, will extend the school year an additional 200 days for those students deemed as at-risk by their teachers.

The emphasis of the program will be on improving basic skills, including math, reading and language arts. About 20 students, along with one teacher, will be allowed to participate in the project.

Burnett said the cost of the program will be about $23,000, including instructional aides and computer equipment.

"We feel that this program will pay dividends in keeping our students at a level they need to be," he said.

The board also approved the purchase of two buses from the Rankin Independent School District for $1,500 each.

The buses, which seat 71 passengers each, will serve as spare vehicles for the district, Burnett said.

In other business, the board approved the district's 1995-96 goals and objectives, which included the multi-age program. Other goals included improving TAAS math scores and the beginning of plans for separate classroom facilities for the seventh and eighth grade students.

Jungle cat's owner defies court order to kill her pet

CHICAGO (AP) — A woman whose pet jungle cat mauled her 2-year-old niece whisked the animal away to Iowa, defying a court order to have it killed and tested for rabies.

Sari Mintz, who owns the exotic, 20-pound cat, could go to jail for contempt of court, and her niece is undergoing a grueling series of rabies shots that might not have been necessary had the pet been destroyed for testing.

The child, Alice Mintz, needed 200 stitches on her face and scalp after she wandered into her aunt's suburban back yard June 18 during a Father's Day party. The golden jungle cat, which had previously bitten three people, was on a tether.

DuPage County Judge Bonnie Wheaton, acting Friday at the request of the girl's parents, ordered the cat killed and the carcass examined. By then, Mintz had spirited away her pet to the clinic in Iowa City, Iowa, where she bought it.

"She holds the animal very close to her," said her lawyer, Frank M. Howard. "It's just a terribly unfortunate circumstance. It's her niece as well, after all."

On Sunday, the girl's parents changed their minds about having the animal destroyed.

"If the cat is that important to (Sari Mintz), then for the sake of family harmony we will ask the state's attorney not to pursue legal remedy further on behalf of Alice and not to pursue destruction of the cat," they said in a statement.

Despite the change of heart, the DuPage County state's attorney is pursuing the cat's return, said Nancy Wolfe, chief of the office's civil division.

Mintz, a spokeswoman for the Illinois State Toll Highway Authority, was in New York City on a business trip and could not be reached Monday. She could face jail time until she complies with the court order, Wolfe said.

Alice began treatment for rabies over the weekend and was resting at home Monday after having her stitches removed under general anesthesia, said her family's attorney, Richard Stavins.

She will need two rabies shots in her head and buttocks over the next two weeks unless the cat, named Cabo, is killed and found to be free of rabies.

Although Cabo has received rabies shots, a veterinarian testified Friday that the shots are designed for domesticated cats and are not approved by the Food and Drug Administration on exotic Asian jungle cats.

Merger to create country's largest health business

NEW YORK (AP) — United Healthcare Inc., which has prospered by buying independent HMOs around the country, has agreed to buy the struggling MetraHealth Cos., for $1.65 billion, the companies said Monday.

The deal would create the largest company in the country providing health insurance and services, providing 40 million customers with health care management products and services.

The combined company would have annual sales of more than $8 billion.

MetraHealth was created last year when two large insurers, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and Travelers Inc., combined their health businesses.

It provides insurance, HMOs and other health plans to employees of about 58,000 companies nationwide. It has more than $4 billion in annual revenue and is expected to earn about $200 million in profits this year.

Half of MetraHealth's customers have traditional health insurance, which pays claims based on fees charged by doctors, clinics and hospitals. When MetraHealth was created, its owners said one of their main goals was to convince those customers not to jump to outside managed care companies but to switch to MetraHealth's own networks.

But its networks are considered by analysts to be among the smaller and weaker in the business and many customers were lured away.

Travelers and MetLife had planned to spin off MetraHealth in a public stock offering in the next couple of years. United's chairman William McGuire approached MetraHealth about a buyout in February, the companies said Monday.

United, based near Minneapolis, has prospered by buying local independent HMOs around the country. It is now one of the largest managed care companies, covering about 3.7 million people. That gives it the power to negotiate big discounts from doctors, hospitals, and companies that make drugs and medical gear.

United earned $288.7 million last year on revenues of $3.67 billion.

The buyout, subject to approval by regulators, would leave McGuire in charge. MetraHealth's chairman, Kennett Simmons, would leave management, but take a spot on the company's board of directors.

Burger's influence will be felt into future

Surprisingly, retired Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, who died Sunday at 87 years of age, may be remembered better for his chairmanship of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution than for any specific ruling issued during the 17 years he served the court as chief justice.

If so, that will not be because of any lack of dealing with major issues while on the court. During his tenure as chief justice Burger wrote opinions that legally defined obscenity, established busing as a tool to end segregation and forced President Richard Nixon to release the infamous Watergate tapes.

Although a politically conservative judge on the bench, Burger wrote numerous opinions that were praised by liberals. In fact, President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, issued a joint statement that praised Burger for bringing "balance to the bench."

There is no question that Burger's influence on the high court will be felt for years into the future. He was a champion of judicial reform who was described as concerned with the administration of the court.

When he retired in 1986 it was to devote his full time and energy to his duties as chairman of the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution. He did that tirelessly, leading the national celebrations of the Constitution's 200th anniversary in 1987 and the Bill of Rights' 200th anniversary two years later. In that capacity, Burger was perhaps more visible than at any point while serving as chief justice.

Burger served the court and his country with distinction and it is proper that he will be remembered for drawing the nation's attention back to those two outstanding documents — the Constitution and Bill of Rights.

Cyberspace smut bill is useless law for network

Score one for mindless lawmaking.

The Senate's passage ... of a law to patrol the filth on the Internet won't do a thing to protect children or others from finding the obscene pictures and dirty conversation that reside there.

Instead, it tries to impose a vague standard of decency on computer cyberspace that knows no geographic or political boundaries. The U.S. Congress simply can't control what is put on the network by a computer geek in Singapore or a free spirit in Sweden. Tracking down who's responsible for what would be incredibly difficult and would tie up law-enforcement time better spent on more tangible threats. ...

Congress would do better to concentrate on helping the real cyberspace enforcers take charge. The best referees to make sure children don't see things they shouldn't see are parents. They don't need a useless law; they need better access to blocking devices that would allow them to rope off the parts of the wide-open Internet they don't want their children to explore.

That's a more sensible approach than trying to monitor the behavior of the Internet's 30 million users.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 27, the 178th day of 1995. There are 187 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 27, 1950, President Truman ordered the Air Force and Navy into the Korean conflict following a call from the United Nations Security Council for member nations to help South Korea repel an invasion from the North.

On this date:

In 1844, Mormon leader Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum, were killed by a mob in Carthage, Ill.

In 1847, New York and Boston were linked by telegraph wires.

In 1880, author-lecturer Helen Keller, who lived most of her life without sight or hearing, was born in Tuscumbia, Ala.

In 1893, the New York stock market crashed.

In 1942, the FBI announced the capture of eight Nazi saboteurs who had been put ashore from a submarine on New York's Long Island.

In 1944, during World War II, American forces completed their capture of the French port of Cherbourg from the Germans.

In 1957, more than 500 people were killed when Hurricane Audrey slammed through coastal Louisiana and Texas.

In 1969, patrons at the Stonewall Inn, a gay bar in New York's Greenwich Village, clashed with police in an incident considered the birth of the homosexual rights movement.

In 1973, former White House counsel John W. Dean told the Senate Watergate Committee about an "enemies list" kept by the Nixon White House.

In 1984, the Supreme Court ended the National Collegiate Athletic Association's monopoly on controlling college football telecasts, ruling such control violated antitrust law.

In 1991, Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, the first black member of the nation's highest court, announced his retirement.

Ten years ago: The legendary Route 66, which originally stretched from Chicago to Santa Monica, Calif., passed into history as officials decertified the road.

Five years ago: NASA announced that a flaw in the orbiting Hubble Space Telescope was preventing the instrument from achieving optimum focus.

U.S. Constitution doesn't fund cultural arts

Public support for the arts is a down payment on our future. It is an investment in the values we claim to honor and in the cultural traditions in which democracy has flourished for 218 years. Now is no time to turn our backs on that legacy or its promise."

Thus spoke Hillary Clinton on the National Endowment for the Arts. She spoke at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and The New York Times deemed her remarks of sufficient consequence to reprint as the debate heats up over cutting the NEA's budget.

Murchison

Clinton, as ever, lays out a forceful case for her side. There is just one minor detail missing from her presentation. She neglects to tell us where in the U.S. Constitution it says that Congress may spend taxpayer money on the arts.

There is probably a good reason she neglects to tell us. The Constitution makes no provision for a national endowment for the arts, the crafts or anything else deemed cultural by the cultural establishment. Does this omission perplex Clinton? Presumably not. She nowhere alludes to it in the printed text. Arts funding is something we do because it's a Good Idea, and isn't that what we have a Congress for — to carry out the Good Ideas of people like Clinton? You certainly could get that impression from the legislative and judicial theory of the past few decades.

Congress, in 1787, received comparatively few powers at the hands of the constitutional convention. These were carefully enumerated, chiefly in Article I, Section 8. For new powers, Congress was supposed to apply to the states, asking that the Constitution be amended — as in fact has happened more than two dozen times. The idea — an excellent one — was to restrict federal aggrandizement of power and so protect the liberty of the states and the people.

The framers knew they couldn't provide for every future contingency, but they hoped future lawmakers might walk a middle way — neither too broad in their understanding of their powers nor too narrow. Funding and building an Air Force is a logical deduction from the power to "raise and support Armies" and "provide and maintain a Navy." Funding of the arts derives, at best, from the Preamble, which lists promotion of the "general welfare" as one of the Constitution's objectives.

From here you get to Clinton's case: namely, that the arts are important to our welfare. "The artistic imagination," she says, "is critical to our civilization," helping us "understand better the complexities of life" and enriching "the lives of our children."

The case she makes out is highly respectable — so long as we differentiate it from the case for irrigating arts programs with federal dollars. The Constitution doesn't give Congress the power to do any such thing. If it did, how come we found out only in the 1960s?

That the NEA has funded obscenity — the crucifix immersed in Andres Serrano's bodily fluids comes vividly, and repulsively, to mind — is a point in favor of those who want either to compress or dissolve its budget. The truly critical matter, nonetheless, is that Congress has no legitimate power to fund offensive art, uplifting art or art of any other description.

When all's said, Congress has no right to do multitudes of the things it does routinely in the 20th century. Why quibble about a few million dollars for programs that make people feel good? Well, some people, anyway.

Because it's the principle of the thing, and principles should matter. We need to take a look at all constitutionally dubious programs the federal government carries out — from the arts and humanities to farm subsidies to welfare to education. If the majority are so old and venerable that we're unlikely to abolish them outright, at least we can rein them in — and, equally to the point, learn caution from past misadventures in the casual extension of federal power. Thus, when the political seducers come around, saying, "Here's the place to start spending our money," we can reply, with infinite conviction: "Oh, yeah?"

Politicians blame Hollywood, not government

Why in the world are presidential candidates and high government officials talking about Hollywood?

Really, folks. This is nonsense.

It's not that Hollywood doesn't produce its share of cultural trash. It does. So does the recording industry. So does the television and cable industry. So does the book publishing industry, the magazine industry and, yes, the newspaper industry. Let's face it: There's a trashy element in the country.

Reese

But Hollywood movies are an effect, not a cause. There was a drug culture long before Hollywood made movies about it. The Crips and Colors, two Los Angeles gangs, precede Hollywood's movies about them by decades. And people were having sex long before Hollywood got around to depicting it in a graphic manner.

If you made a body count of all the people killed in all the movies made in the last 30 years, you wouldn't come close to the numbers of real people killed by real violence initiated by the U.S. government.

Well, I can tell you why politicians, whether Bob Dole or Bill Clinton, prefer to talk about Hollywood. Better to get up and knock Hollywood than to try to explain their own disastrous records as public officials. Better to talk about sex in the movies than badly run public health programs and welfare laws that subsidize illegitimacy.

Better to blame Hollywood for crime than to talk about the government's ineffective criminal justice system, its failed war on drugs, its decaying public education system, and its impoverishment of people by means of inflation, high taxes and bad trade policies.

Better to talk about gangster rap than congressmen bouncing checks, goosing female employees, committing felonies, junketing, boozing and selling public policy to lobbyists for millions in campaign donations.

Instead of knocking Time Warner, Sen. Dole ought to be telling people what he, as the Republican leader, thinks of fellow Republican Sen. Bob Packwood, who is facing over a dozen counts of sexual harassment. How about his moral example, Sen. Dole? How about a little responsibility from you in cleaning up your own institution and your own political party?

Bob Dole and Bill Clinton together prove that hypocrisy is multigenerational.

In all seriousness, we should not allow public officials to run campaigns on false issues. The cultural state of Hollywood or any other segment of the entertainment industry is not a government issue. It's a private issue. Dole, Clinton and the rest of them should discuss government, not entertainment.

We in the private sector can handle entertainment. The entire industry is money driven, so the answer is simple. If you don't like it, don't buy it. Even a "cheap" movie is so expensive to make these days that nobody can afford to keep turning out box-office duds.

And Hollywood is getting the message. It is making some movies that reflect good values. Anything dependent on voluntary support by the public will respond to the public's preferences.

It's government which is not responsive. Being institutionalized force and compulsory, it doesn't have to respond. We can choose not to attend a movie or boycott a product; we can't choose not to pay taxes or disobey the law.

Before the presidential race really heats up, we should all make a pledge not to let candidates spread smoke screens and litter the campaign trail with red herrings.

I don't give a hoot what Bob Dole or any other politician thinks about Hollywood. I want to know what they intend to do about the mess in Washington we call a government. There's more than enough immorality and irresponsibility in government to keep the most ardent puritan reformer busy for decades.

Leave Hollywood to audiences and private critics.

Cameras turn Simpson courtroom into movie set

What a surprise. Don Hewitt, the legendary creator of the "60 Minutes" TV show, has come out against cameras in courtrooms.

The wackiness of the O.J. Simpson trial turned him around. The law's dignity has been destroyed, he said, and the trial has become little more than show biz.

Royko

As Hewitt said: "I think Ito, the judge, should have realized that the camera was going to turn the courtroom into a movie set. You know, with Marcia Clark coming from hair and makeup and Johnnie Cochran coming from wardrobe. It's undignified.

"... When you go on trial, you should be judged by a jury of your peers who sit there all day long and listen to all the evidence, weigh all the evidence. You shouldn't be tried in a court of public opinion where there's a guy who's not watching until his wife says, 'Hey, Harry, come in here, they've got the socks on now.' ... We go in and out of this thing because somebody says, 'Hey, this is the good part.' That's not how you should be tried."

Hewitt is right. But he's a bit late. The time to have spoken up was last year, before the trial began, when Judge Ito was pondering whether to let the cameras in.

That's when the views of someone like Hewitt — a legend in the broadcast industry — might have had an impact on Ito's thinking.

Of course, Hewitt could respond that last year he didn't know that the trial would turn into a showcase for ego-puffed lawyers, self-absorbed witnesses, or that jurors would see it as an opportunity to launch careers as best-selling authors.

But why didn't he know? As an expert on TV's impact, Hewitt should have known what to expect. Thousands of ordinary people did.

These were the people from all over the country who took the time to write to Judge Ito, urging him to ban cameras.

This was after I wrote a column suggesting that people who were against televising the trial drop the judge a note telling him so.

More than 15,000 of them did just that.

As you might remember, the judge had his clerk pack the letters in boxes and stack the boxes in his courtroom to let the lawyers and TV viewers know how a large segment of the population felt.

That, in itself, should have been a hint as to the potential entertainment value of the trial. If the cameras hadn't already been going, it's doubtful that the judge would have used the boxes of letters for a visual stunt. Why have his clerk risk a hernia if the audience consisted of 50 people in his courtroom?

No, once the cameras were on, there was no chance that the trial would maintain dignity or even sanity. TV does that to people, whether they are lawyers or oddballs telling talk show hosts why they cheated on their wives with their mothers-in-law.

Should it be any surprise that a moocher like Kato would follow his testimony with a book, probably one of the few he has ever owned, and a round of appearances on comedy shows?

Those 15,000 people knew because in their own way they are just as expert as Hewitt on the subject of TV. They've been watching it. They saw the show biz aspects of Simpson's low-speed car chase. They saw how half of California's deranged population started offering their fantasies as evidence.

Would the trial have been any different if Judge Ito had listened to the grass-roots wisdom of those 15,000 people?

Probably. Without the cameras, the coverage would have been provided by newspapers and brief spoken reports on TV. The written or spoken word doesn't have the drama of lawyers snarling at each other, members of the victims' families dabbing their eyes, or O.J. shaking hands with a star-struck prosecution witness.

The judge might have been more inclined to crack the whip at stalling lawyers and preening witnesses. The lawyers might have decided not to waste their blustery acting talents on so small a live audience.

And it's doubtful that jurors would have been so eager to con and lie their way onto the panel if they didn't sense that they were going to be part of a major television production, giving them the opportunity to cash in.

People knew and some of us said so. As I wrote last November, when Judge Ito displayed his mail: "I want the trial on TV, every lurid, disgusting, heart-pounding, spine-tingling, fantasy-building moment. But not for all the lofty reasons offered by lawyers for the TV stations. ... I want to wallow in the muck just like millions of other muck-craving Americans."

I'm not going to take this obvious opportunity to say "I told you so" to someone like Don Hewitt.

As it happens, I don't have to. Now he knows.

Vacation Planning

Whether you are planning a weekend camping trip to Put-n-Bay or a sightseeing tour across Europe, planning is the key to a successful vacation. Here's some advice from the Better Business Bureau to keep your vacation trouble free:

As soon as you've decided when and where to travel, discuss dates with your employer and family. The sooner you pin down the dates, the easier it will be to reserve overnight accommodations and seats on flights — especially around holidays. With more options available, you and/or your travel agent will find it easier to cut costs.

Keep a record of your plans, including flight numbers, arrival and departure times and the name and location of your hotel. This information will come in handy if you decide to make changes.

If a passport, visa or proof of citizenship will be needed, make plans to acquire the necessary documents as soon as possible.

Just in case they are lost or stolen, keep your passport, credit card, insurance and traveler's check numbers written down in a separate place from the items themselves.

Fill all necessary prescriptions and pack a first aid kit. Ask your doctor or pharmacist for advice on what to include in the kit for your particular type of vacation.

Give an itinerary to friends or business associates so that you can be reached in an emergency.

Finally, make arrangements for the security of your home. Try to maintain as lived -in appearance as possible while you are gone. At the very least, make arrangements to have mail and newspaper delivery either stopped or picked up daily by a neighbor.

Just before leaving, check that all doors and windows are locked and all household appliances are turned off.

Have a safe and carefree trip!

The Nation in brief

■ Kevorkian opens death clinic

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — Dr. Jack Kevorkian has started a clinic and was present there Monday for the death of a Missouri woman with Lou Gehrig's disease. It was the 24th death he has attended.

Erika Garcellano, 60, died at the clinic Kevorkian established "for the purpose of alleviating the suffering of patients," his attorney, Geoffrey Fieger said.

Garcellano had suffered for at least three years from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease, a degenerative nerve disorder, he said. She had been living at a nursing home in Kansas City, Mo., he said.

Fieger would not say how Garcellano died. Garcellano's two sons, John and Paul, and her friend Marjorie Jackson also were present when she died, Fieger said.

■ Chances are slim for today's launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The weather forecast was bleak for NASA's third attempt in five days to launch space shuttle Atlantis on a flight to link up with the Russian space station Mir and bring home an American astronaut.

Thunderstorms reduced the chances of good weather for today's 3:32 p.m. liftoff to 30 percent, NASA weather officer Ed Priselac said Monday. More bad weather was forecast for the rest of the week.

Atlantis was drenched during launch attempts on Friday and Saturday. Technicians had to dry about 15 shuttle thrusters.

NASA has only seven to 10 minutes each day to send Atlantis on the most fuel-efficient route to Mir. Thunderstorms could be a problem until July 3 or 4, Priselac said.

If Atlantis isn't up by August, NASA's Norman Thagard and his two Mir-mates will have to return to Earth later that month in a Russian Soyuz capsule.

Republicans, Dems disapprove of secret adviser

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In the White House, he is a powerful adviser unseen by many aides, a hidden hand behind President Clinton's speeches and political strategy.

And as Dick Morris' influence grows, Democrats and Republicans alike are beginning to question his role. Republicans are even fuming about his claim of being one of them.

"He's the Aldrich Ames of politics," grumbled Paul Curcio, former political director for the National Republican Senatorial Committee, comparing Morris with the CIA turncoat.

"You have a consultant who doesn't believe in anything working for a president who doesn't have any beliefs, so it's a perfect match," snapped another GOP pollster, Bill McInturff.

Morris answers his critics this way:

"I'm like a good many of the voters. Sometimes I favor Republicans and sometimes I favor Democrats."

Hastening to end a brief telephone interview, Morris said, "I don't believe that consultants should be talking about their clients or themselves."

Morris, 47, has been a political repairman for Clinton off and on for nearly two decades, back to the president's first race for Arkansas governor. Clinton has fired him at times, only to bring him back. Once, in a 1990 political argument, Clinton lost his temper and struck him.

The president quietly summoned Morris back last December to help regroup from the Democrats' devastating election losses. Many people see him as this year's version of David Gergen, the Reagan adviser who was recruited by Clinton but eventually lost influence and left the White House.

For months, many of the president's aides were unaware of Morris' role as he advised Clinton in late-night telephone calls and faxed speech drafts to the White House. Even now, many aides say they've never seen him. He visits the White House about once a week.

Presidential spokesman Mike McCurry acknowledges there's some carping about Morris but plays it down as the usual complaints of junior staffers.

"A lot of people who don't know who he is and don't know how his strategic approach fits with what Clinton does, I guess they might resent him," McCurry said. "But they seem to resent anybody who's new and comes in and gets access when they don't."

"Among the senior people," McCurry said, "you heard a lot of people say, 'Well, Morris and (George) Stephanopoulos are at each others' throats all the time,' but I've been in discussions where they're working through issues, like on affirmative action, where even though they've had a disagreement in philosophy, they clearly can work pretty well together."

Morris also has had to stop dealing just one-on-one with Clinton.

"A lot of us felt it was important for him to be part of the process around here by which we sort of define what the agenda and what the plan are and lay out a program," McCurry said.

Morris' friends and foes agree that he's effective.

"He's a smart cookie, a smart guy," says Clinton's 1992 campaign chief, James Carville.

Carville doesn't question Clinton's turning to a pollster who started out with Democratic liberals such as Sens. Eugene McCarthy and George McGovern in the late 1970s and now feels more comfortable with conservative Republicans such as Sens. Jesse Helms and Trent Lott.

Adoptee to meet birth mother

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

With nervous enthusiasm, a Midland mother of two is preparing for a trip to meet the birth mother she has never known.

Melanie Rankin-Zachery was adopted by Bobby and Eva Rankin in 1965 at 2 days old in Paducah, Texas.

The Rankins told their adopted daughter early on that she was adopted, and her parents assured her that she could look for her biological parents when she turned 18, but for 10 years this did not occur, she said.

It was only in 1993, after her critically ill mother suggested that Ms. Rankin-Zachery find her birth mother, did the search begin.

"For two years, I've just been digging and digging," she said.

Ms. Rankin-Zachery, who is married to Sam Zachery of Midland, lost the only mother she had ever known in early 1994.

During this search, which began in 1993, she sent letters of inquiry to various state agencies and the county judge of her county of birth — finally receiving an original copy of her birth certificate that bears the name Pamela Diane Green as birth mother.

Rankin-Zachery

There was no one living in or near Paducah by that name, but Ms. Rankin-Zachery called a newspaper to put in a classified ad in hopes of gaining information that way.

As fate would have it in a town of about 2,000, the woman she spoke to at the newspaper knew Ms. Rankin-Zachery's grandmother.

Ms. Rankin-Zachery called her biological grandmother and was given a number for her mother, who lives in Livingston, between Huntsville and Beaumont.

On June 16, Ms. Rankin -Zachery made the telephone call and the mother she had never known answered.

"At first she was kind of disbelieving — thinking that someone was maybe playing a cruel joke on her," Ms. Rankin-Zachery said.

When the truth began to sink in, her mother was overwhelmed, she said. Her mother had been married only a short time and never had any other children.

Now she has found the child she was coerced into surrendering in 1965 and two grandchildren to boot, Ms. Rankin-Zachery said.

Of the many things she and her mother spoke of on the phone, one interesting fact to become known is that her mother is six-feet tall. "I'm five-foot-11. I'm taller than my father that raised me," she said.

Ms. Rankin-Zachery and her newly-found mother plan to meet in person July 9, following a flight to Livingston, she said. A local businessman has agreed to provide air fare for the trip, she said.

TUESDAY DAY WATCH

Lawn concert

Texas original music presented by "2 Muses" is the program for the Summer Sunday Lawn Concert beginning at 7:45 p.m. Sunday of the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest. The program is free and those attending are encouraged to bring seating and picnics. Bill and Mary Muse, who describe their music as lyrical acoustic, perform in an intimate style stressing the importance of the words in their songs. Bill Muse's commitment to music and songwriting came after he worked his way from a bricklayer's helper to a university vice president. Mary Muse left corporate life in San Antonio to follow her dream. The two met at the Kerrville Folk Festival, and now they live on a small farm near Austin.

Public hearing

A public hearing concerning allocations of 1995-96 Community Development Block Grant funds — generally designated to benefit low- to moderate-income areas — will be at 7 p.m. today at the Southeast Senior Center, 1803 E. Indiana Ave. The public is invited to review and comment on a preliminary list for distribution of $1.4 million in CDBG funds. Subsequent to public input, the City Council is scheduled to make a final decision on allocations on Aug. 8.

Trustees meet to consider bond election, reports

From Staff Reports

School board trustees will hear a report on renovating schools and whether or not a bond election is needed at today's 4 p.m. school board meeting.

The district's Facility Needs Advisory Committee will report its findings — from site tours, research and meetings — and announce if a bond election is necessary to fund capital projects.

Trustees will be scheduled to hear a report on results of the Texas Assessment of Academic (TAAS) Skills test for students in third through eighth grades.

Judge John Hyde will present a report on Coleman High School Principal's Advisory Board. The board will offer suggestions gleaned from student interviews. Some CHS students are expected to take part in the presentation to the board. CHS Principal Helen Lackey said the board meets with students twice a year to ask what is working and what needs improvement. "Students are concerned about cutbacks in funding or in staffing," Ms. Lackey said.

Jack Ladd, member of Gov. George Bush's Select Task Force on Public Education, will discuss Senate Bill 1 during the 6: 30-7: 15 p.m. dinner break for trustees.

Following the dinner break, Midlanders Mr. and Mrs. Baer will address the board concerning district procedures for selling football tickets.

Following the board meeting trustees will meet in closed executive session to discuss employee discipline, security matters and Unitary status litigation.

Other agenda items include considering expanded disciplinary options, hiring a writing specialist for San Jacinto Junior High School (at no cost to the district), and expanding the study/skills reading pilot program at Alamo Junior High School. Alamo administrators are crediting the program with raising TAAS test scores.

The public is invited to attend the meeting. It will be located in the MISD administration office, 615 W. Missouri.

Memorial Hospital and Medical Center lactation consultant Kim Cast holds one of the many babies she helps daily in her work helping nursing mothers make breastfeeding a successful experience for both mothers and babies.

Nurse provides new mothers with extra help

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Right now, Kim Cast may be helping another mother bond with her newborn infant. Or, she may be answering a phone call from a new mother who just isn't quite getting the hang of it.

What exactly is she doing for these women? She's helping them learn how to relax and nurse their babies.

As a registered nurse and lactation consultant for Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, Ms. Cast works with the nursing mothers who give birth at the hospital.

Ms. Cast said in July she will have been working at this job for four years. She was already a registered nurse when she was trained by her predecessor. She said she certified through special classes which taught about nutrition, proper latching for the baby and much more.

"I breast fed both of my kids and I was successful. Even when I worked, I expressed milk," Ms. Cast recalled. "Because I was so successful I wanted everyone else to be because it is so rewarding."

"When the job came up I couldn't believe they were going to pay someone because I had no trouble," she said. "It was worth giving it a try."

Ms. Cast doesn't really have an average day. Her job fluctuates depending upon how many deliveries there are each day. Normally, she said, she has eight to 10 babies being breast fed on the floor all the time.

She said obstetricians at Memorial deliver between 130-160 children a month and of those births, about one-half of the mothers will try to breast-feed.

If a mother is having difficulties, Ms. Cast spends a little more time with her. After a mother is discharged, Ms. Cast still provides support and education fielding about five to 10 calls daily.

Newspaper staff receives additional state awards

The Reporter-Telegram has been advised of three additional awards, bringing to 10 the number received during the recent annual Texas Press Association convention in Austin.

The three are a second place in the sweepstakes competition and third places in editorials and community service.

Other honors previously announced were first places in general excellence and firsts in best sports photography, best use of photos and advertising quality; third places in features and sports writing, and fourth in news writing.

The newspaper competes in Division One with Texas newspapers with circulations of 15,000 and above.

Testimony begins for sentencing of Mireles

■ Rogelio Mireles Jr. was found guilty of murdering his common-law wife and attempting to murder her father.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Jurors will begin hearing testimony this morning in the sentencing phase of the murder trial of Rogelio Mireles Jr. for the Dec. 13, 1993, murder of his wife.

Mireles, 21, was found guilty Friday of the shooting death of his common-law wife, Catalina "Cathy" Chavez, 18, and for the attempted murder of her father, Jose Chavez.

The victim had left the defendant about a week before she was gunned down, her father testified.

Chavez, his wife, his son, a niece and the victim's daughter were all in the house when Mireles shot and killed Ms. Chavez. Her father tried to catch Mireles, when Mireles turned and began firing at him.

Mireles testified that Chavez pulled a gun on him, so he began firing at him in self defense. He said he thought he shot Chavez and didn't learn he shot Ms. Chavez until three days later when he turned himself in.

However, during this punishment phase of the trial, Midland County Assistant District Attorney John Westbrook plans to introduce evidence of Mireles jumping bond and fleeing the country.

In the punishment hearings, under a new state law, other "bad acts" the defendant is alleged to have committed can be presented to the jury even though he has not been convicted of the charges, Westbrook said.

Mireles posted bond and was placed on an electronic monitoring device, which officials say he took

Mother's porch light trick embarasses daughter on date

More rambling thoughts ...

— Do mothers still turn the porch light on and off as a not-so-subtle signal to their daughters, who happen to be snuggled up to their boyfriends in the front seat of the car in the driveway, that that night's date has officially ended, "and I mean right now"?

Ott

— Do fathers still fall asleep at 9: 30 p.m. in front of the TV and therefore remain oblivious to the whole ordeal?

— Does the daughter still storm into the house and severly chastise the mother "for humiliating me in front of (fill in the blank)"?

— In other words, do kids still worry more about what their friends think of them than anything else in the world?

— Great nickname: "Catfish," as in Jim "Catfish" Hunter, the former baseball great.

— Change can be a hassle, especially when it involves something that is very time consuming and expensive, but it is also good for the soul.

— Everyone should buy something they can't really afford every once in awhile.

— People shouldn't do that too often, though.

— It must be strange to be so popular that professional autograph collectors would pay big money just to own your signature.

— It must be even more strange to be a person who would pay big money in order to own someone else's signature.

— For some reason, winter seems a more appropriate time to rent movie videos than summer.

— No matter how happily married and faithful a man might be, his eyes are still instinctively drawn to any attractive woman who enters the room.

— I assume that goes for married women, too.

— A little-known fact you might not be aware of: When a man enters a public restroom and there is already another person using a urinal, the new guy will automatically go to the urinal that is located the greatest distance from the original ... and under NO circumstances will the two men exchange words.

— Don't ask me why, it is just a "guy rule."

— It is kind of like when you are in an elevator with a bunch of strangers. Everyone stares at the ceiling and says nothing.

— An assessment that probably fits us all in one way or another is: "He (or she) knows just enough about that subject to be dangerous."

— Awkward feeling: Trying to determine what is a decent hour in the morning to call a friend on the weekend.

— OK, you're right ... what is a decent hour in the AFTERNOON to call a friend on the weekend.

— Silence may be golden, but sometimes a little noise can make a person feel more alive.

— Spoting a bird sitting all alone on a telephone line always makes me feel just a bit jealous.

HELP: Nurse assists new mothers to breastfeed

(From 1B)

"It all depends, but I may have a mom who went home come back for a visit if she is having problems or needs more help," she said.

A large part of her job is teaching. She said a nursing mother needs to be equipped with the knowledge of how to properly care for herself whether it be the good care of her breasts to expressing breast milk and proper nutrition.

Ms. Cast also spends time in the childbirth education classes providing instruction and assistance to pregnant women.

"There is a mixture of joy and frustration in the job," Ms. Cast said.

"It is extremely frustrating when you have a baby that won't cooperate and some will refuse the breast altogether. That typically happens to a mom who really wants to breast-feed.

"Then there is the joy when you work with a baby for seven to 10 days and then he finally latches on and the expression on that mother's face is wonderful," Ms. Cast said.

She said the benefits of breast feeding include helping the new mother lose weight because of the large amount of calories it takes to produce milk. The baby benefits as well with extra protection of the mother's immunities passed on through the breast milk.

"Plus, there is nothing like you nurturing that child and seeing him or her benefit from what you're doing," Ms. Cast said.

She said a lot of the mothers she sees coming through have "middle-of-the-road" beliefs when it comes to breast feeding.

"They don't want to, but they figure it's best for the baby. There are a lot of people like this and usually once they do it they are the most pro-breast-feeding people," she said.

Ms. Cast said while she assists new mothers by providing information and some tips, she doesn't give rules or set guidelines.

"You set up your own rules for what works for you," Ms. Cast said.

off and fled. He was on the run for approximately nine months before Chavez helped law enforcement track him down in Mexico. He was arrested in January and returned to Midland.

Mireles has elected for the jury to assess punishment. He could be sentenced from five to 99 years in prison.

Westbrook called the shooting "cold-blooded, premeditated murder," during his closing arguments Friday. The jury deliberated from 3:15 to 4:40 p.m. before finding Mireles guilty of both counts.

Court officials said they believe the evidence should be presented to the jury sometime today.

MC president announces new vice-president

From Staff Reports

Citing the increasing importance of the role of institutional effectiveness at community colleges, Midland College President David Daniel announced that Eileen Piwetz has been named vice-president of institutional advancement and effectiveness. She will continue in her role as executive director of the Midland College Foundation Board.

Piwetz

"This new vice-president's position reflects the importance we place on institutional effectiveness at Midland College," Daniel said. "Dr. Piwetz has had great success in reaching out to make sure the college remains one of this community's greatest resources."

Piwetz has served as director of institutional advancement and effectiveness since 1993. Elevating the office of institutional advancement and effectiveness to the vice-presidents level will allow Piwetz better access to information and college resources, Daniel said.

Piwetz's duties include coordinating the writing of grant proposals and serving as a resource person for others on campus who are pursuing grants. She coordinates institutional research, which includes reporting to the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, MC's regional coordinating association, and makes sure the college is in compliance with the Texas Coordinating Board's mandates and accreditation standards. She also is involved with measuring the effectiveness of MC's services to the community.

Under her direction the Chaparral Circle Endowment Fund has reached more than 75 percent of its $5.75 million goal to be reached by the college's 25th anniversary in 1997.

At MC, Piwetz served as chair of the Health Sciences and Technologies Division from 1992-93 and as chair of Health Science Studies and director of Associate Degree Nursing from 1984-92. During that time she was instrumental in adding Associate in Applied Sciences programs in Veterinary Technology, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling, Emergency Medical Services, Radiography and Associate Degree Nursing.

Odessa trustees to approve tuition rates, award bids

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Odessa College board trustees will approve tuition rates for non-credit courses, and award bids for cafeteria food service and dormitory furniture at tonight's school board meeting.

Trustees will meet 7:30 p.m. in the community room on the second floor of the OC Student Union Building.

OC began using an outside firm in 1992 to provide food service in the college's cafeteria. Philadelphia-based Aramark Corp. has had the contract since that time.

The furniture that the college plans to purchase will be used in the college's two dorms, Parker-Downs and Wrangler halls, which are being renovated this summer. The public is invited to attend.

Republican congressman defects to GOP

VICTORIA (AP) — Citing diminishing influence on the Democratic agenda and a nagging conscience, Rep. Greg Laughlin led a swarm of Texans defecting to the Republican Party on Monday.

"My conscience requires me to change my affiliation ... if I am to best represent the conservative principles upon which I ran when you elected me," Laughlin said while announcing his decision at a private Victoria club.

The switch, rumored for more than a week, brought enthusiastic cheers from up to 100 supporters in attendance, including state GOP chairman Tom Pauken. In Austin, Gov. George W. Bush welcomed the newest Republican congressman.

"I think that he'll be a wonderful addition," Bush said. "I will help him in any way I can ... Yes, absolutely I can embrace him. His voting record is a conservative voting record reflecting a conservative district."

Laughlin, 53, became the second House Democrat to defect this year, following Georgian Nathan Deal. With the addition of Laughlin, House Republicans now have a 232-202 majority.

Laughlin said his decision was influenced less by the growing GOP majority than what he called the shrinking role of conservatives in the Democratic Party.

"At one time our position was one of influence because we represented a swing vote," Laughlin said of conservative Democrats.

"Now, in the bitter partisanship and rhetoric of Washington, D.C., our ideas — those conservative principles that predominate in the 14th District — are not in the agenda of the House Democratic leadership."

Texas Democrats lashed out at Laughlin, accusing him of "selling out his district to Newt Gingrich."

"Greg Laughlin's party switch is an ill-advised act of a damaged politician who is selling out his district to Newt Gingrich for a choice Ways and Means Committee seat," said state Democratic chairman Bob Slagle.

Laughlin has said GOP leaders promised him a seat on the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, which is chaired by fellow Texan Bill Archer of Houston.

Texas Rep. Martin Frost, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, went a step further than Slagle, calling for a special election in Laughlin's district.

"Rep. Laughlin should resign immediately from his seat and give the people of Texas' 14th congressional district the opportunity to decide for themselves," said Frost, who also said Laughlin should return $79,000 in campaign assistance he received from the DCCC since 1986.

Laughlin said he "seriously considered resigning and running as a Republican," but decided that his conservative values — not his party moniker — won the seat.

He added that if he resigned, "our district would have no voice."

One of the House's most conservative Democrats, Laughlin and three other House members recently resigned from the campaign committee, saying it was intolerant of differing views.

Earlier this year, Laughlin joined with 22 other conservative Democrats in creating a separate group known as "The Coalition." The group's stated purpose is to temper the extremes of both parties.

Slagle said the party always supported Laughlin's right to oppose the leadership in order to stand with his constituents in Texas' 14th Congressional District. It is a largely rural strip of Texas stretching from the western outskirts of Austin east to the Gulf of Mexico.

"We stood by him loyally and defended him in the face of vicious attacks leveled by the same Republicans who are his new best friends," Slagle said.

Laughlin was the highest officeholder among 19 Texas Democrats who converted to the Republican Party Monday.

GOP leaders, whose party has gained a total of 31 converts this year in Texas, said the swaps are representative of a state that is becoming more and more conservative.

Democrats lost their 40-year grip on the House last November. Since then, party conservatives have made no secret of their displeasure with their House leadership, which they believe is too liberal.

On the House Republicans' "Contract With America," Laughlin, who has represented the 14th District since 1989, voted for 14 of the 17 major provisions, including a $189 billion tax cut package that only 26 other Democrats supported.

Pauken said Laughlin's district clearly is a conservative one.

POLICE REPORTS

Assault

BIG SPRING - Police are looking for a man who allegedly kidnapped and assaulted a Big Spring woman on Saturday.

Sgt. Victor Brake said officers found the 29-year-old female in Howard County about 2 a.m, after a motorist who tried to help her called police.

Brake said the woman told police that she and a male companion were forced at gunpoint — by a man the woman knew — from a Big Spring business into a vehicle, which was taken into the county. The woman said that once they were in the county, the suspect removed her from the vehicle and told the other male to leave, Brake said.

The woman was repeatedly struck in the head and face with the gun and was sexually assaulted, Brake said.

During the incident, a motorist stopped to try to help. When the woman attempted to get into the vehicle, the suspect grabbed her and dragged her into some bushes, Brake said.

The motorist drove off and contacted police.

Police were not releasing the names of the victims or suspect on Monday.

Officials battle over Japanese WWII submarine

DALLAS (AP) — A two-man submarine used in the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor is involved in another battle, this one between federal officials and a museum that won't give up the ship.

The National Park Service wants to return the sub to Pearl Harbor for a ceremony Sept. 2 marking the 50th anniversary of VJ Day. The Nimitz Museum in Fredericksburg has the sub and wants to display it the same day.

"We'd like to avoid an argument with anybody, but we're going to keep our little boat," said Marshall Steves, president and chief executive of the San Antonio-based Admiral Nimitz Foundation, a non-profit group that raises money for the state-operated museum.

While a carrier-based Japanese air armada attacked the U.S. Pacific Fleet from above, Japanese submarines launched the five 110-foot, battery-powered midget submersibles Dec. 7, 1941.

The two-man craft were to penetrate Pearl Harbor's mouth and fire their two torpedoes at warships. No more than one of the midget subs is known to have penetrated the harbor and all but one were scuttled by U.S. Navy depth charges.

The surviving sub drifted to the eastern shore of Oahu, about 15 miles east of Pearl Harbor, and beached on a reef. One of the two men aboard — Ensign Kazuo Sakamaki — made it ashore.

He became U.S. Prisoner of War No. 1 and lived to become a manager for Toyota in Brazil.

The submarine was taken to the U.S. mainland, where it became an attraction at War Bond rallies. It went on display at a Navy submarine base in Key West, Fla.

In 1990, when the Navy closed the base, the Nimitz Foundation obtained the sub on loan from the Navy, Steves said.

"It was found in three pieces, rusted through. We got permission from the Navy to get it back," he said. "Then the National Park Service got into it with the idea of moving it to Hawaii."

Fredericksburg, a town of 7,000 residents about 55 miles northwest of San Antonio, is the birthplace of World War II Pacific Fleet commander Adm. Chester W. Nimitz.

But Don Magee, superintendent of the USS Arizona National Memorial, says the park service always intended to move the sub to Pearl Harbor. The memorial is the shrine anchored in Pearl Harbor over the wreck of the sunken battleship in which 1,102 crew members remain entombed.

"We have a signed agreement with the Nimitz Museum that we are supposed to get the sub," Magee said.

Bob Kinzler of Honolulu, a member of the USS Arizona Memorial Museum Association and another survivor of the raid, said he and many others want the sub displayed at Pearl Harbor.

Nichols is too trusting of friends, wife says

DALLAS (AP) — The wife of Oklahoma City bombing suspect Terry Nichols says he was clearly not involved in the blast, but has been too trusting of his friends, The Dallas Morning News reported.

Marife Nichols, in a telephone interview from her hometown of Cebu City, Philippines, told the newspaper Monday that she was with her husband in the days before the April 19 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. She saw nothing to suggest he was helping build a bomb or planning an attack.

"If I knew anything, I would still be talking to the FBI. I don't know anything," said Mrs. Nichols, 23, who was kept in protective custody for about six weeks after the bombing. She was subpoenaed to testify before a grand jury, but returned to the Philippines on June 1 without testifying.

Authorities accuse Nichols, 40, of helping to buy materials and build a fertilizer and fuel bomb in the back of a rental truck with his Army friend Timothy McVeigh, 28. McVeigh is accused of renting and driving the truck, which exploded in front of the federal building.

In her first extensive interview since the explosion, she called her husband a "gentle person" who was "definitely not" involved in the blast.

Relatives have said Mrs. Nichols dislikes McVeigh, a subject she wouldn't discuss. When asked about McVeigh, she would say only that her husband's choice of friends had cost him before, in ways she wouldn't explain.

"He's always been a victim," she said. "He trusts his friends too much."

Nonetheless, she said, she would divorce Nichols if she could, because their relationship always has been ill-fated.

She said they met when in 1989 through one of the many mail-order bride services in Cebu City.

After a courtship by mail, they married in 1990. She arrived in the United States several months later and bore a son in September 1991. In August 1993, when Mrs. Nichols was pregnant with their daughter, her son suffocated with his head in a plastic laundry bag, she said.

Mrs. Nichols pointed to that loss as the most dramatic in a string of disappointments that have plagued her married life.

By the time of the bombing, she said, she was homesick, numb — and pregnant again.

"I'm always been in problems," she said of her husband's arrest. "I wasn't shocked. Nothing is shocking to me, ever since me and Terry got married."

After the FBI finished questioning her in late May, Mrs. Nichols went to visit Nichols at the federal prison in El Reno, Okla., she said.

Nichols, so upset by the visit that the warden called a psychologist, told a friend later that his wife had said he would never see his unborn child or 18-month-old daughter again.

"I was confused," Mrs. Nichols reflected on that conversation Monday. "If he wants to see the kids, if he gets out of jail, that's fine."

With the help of Filipino authorities, Mrs. Nichols got a discounted ticket for the 30-hour flight to Cebu, the second-largest city in a country of 65 million people spread across 7,100 islands.

"I only bought a one-way ticket," she said. "I don't plan to go back to the United States."

State expects to collect big money on 60-year-old dispute

DALLAS (AP) — An oil well that blew in 61 years ago has just paid off in a big way for the State of Texas.

The state estimates it will eventually reap about $50 million the settlements surrounding the murky claims to the wealth that began flowing from the Yates Fields, which oil wildcatter Fred Turner first brought in in 1934.

Turner used a series of paper maneuvers to gain control of part of the oil fortune that lies beneath the West Texas field, which yielded oil at the rate of 152,000 barrels a day, the second-biggest flow in a field that will produce well into the next century.

For decades, Turner, his lawyers, then their heirs collected on the black gold from that find. But the state held some of the land rights, and the Texas General Land Office just this year pried the final bits of a $50 million settlement from the family and his lawyers.

Turner's heirs settled first, for $5.3 million plus a sweetened share of future oil proceeds. Descendants of Turner's lawyers went to court and eventually settled as well.

The Land Office calculates it might gain as much as $250 million on similar cases as it pores over similar oil dealings from the area that might mirror the Turner saga.

The Dallas Morning News pieced together a convoluted tale involving the oil-rich Pecos County field, which was a virtually worthless range of sand hills until grocer Ira Yates began selling drilling plots in 1926.

Questionable surveying on the barren lands made for unclear titles, including vacant lands with no title. That would have meant they belonged to the state. Lawsuits and pretzel-like deals flowed from the soil like the bountiful crude.

A court interpretation of a 1919 law stated that owners of lands on which the state owned mineral rights would split proceeds with Austin 50-50.

In 1930, Turner acquired four acres and took three years to record the title. In that time, the former owner executed a lease on the land, which had belonged to the state.

The state received only a $397 bonus payment on the oil from the land, beginning nearly six decades' worth of official government suspicion.

Courts ruled that Turner executed a lease with a man named Albert Fasken that stipulated that Turner and the state each receive a 1/16 royalty. Problem was, the court later determined Fasken was merely a front, meaning Turner actually reaped all but the fraction of the money the state took off oil proceeds.

In all, Turner, his lawyers and their heirs received about $150 million from the well. The Permanent School Fund, which benefits from state lands, got $10 million — not exactly a 50-50 split.

According to former Turner bookkeeper Andrew Knickerbocker, Fasken never earned a cent off the oil, serving merely as a stooge to allow Turner to make a killing.

Knickerbocker was upset about not receiving properties he felt were promised to him after the millionaire's death in 1963, just four months after Turner's wife, Juliette, was killed in a robbery. Knickerbocker paid back the estate in 1967 by reporting accounting irregularities.

The state didn't listen to Knickerbocker until 1986, when a dispute involving Summit Energy Corp. cropped up. Reviewing a separate case, Summit lawyers uncovered peculiar transactions with Turner's stamp all over them.

"Mr. Turner was apparently a busy man," one appeals court later noted dryly.

Summit notified the state, which pored through boxes of yellowed documents in an 60-year-old paper trail. Knickerbocker, who lives in Midland, was delighted to help.

Knickerbocker and retired U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough offered damning testimony against the Turner estate.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JUNE 27, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A financial or business boom looks likely. Joint endeavors produce the largest gains. Welcome a more harmonious atmosphere at work. Your special skills and dedication to duty make you stand out at promotion time! Be very discreet if romance blooms in the office. A rash involvement could jeopardize all you have worked so hard to attain.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: educator Helen Keller, actress Julia Duffy, "Captain Kangeroo" (Bob Keeshan), pool champ Willie Mosconi.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Worrisome issues could arise in connection with a family member or elderly friend. After today, you will have a better idea of what needs to be done. Those in the arts or entertainment world prosper.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Speculative financial ventures look promising. Just remember, there are no guarantees. Self-discipline is essential if you want to make the most of your creative gifts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Confusion at work could be due to unreliable employees or the adoption of new methods. Conduct your own research. Those with specialized knowledge deserve a fair hearing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Try not to resent someone whose idea is better than your own. Disorganized or negative thinking could interfere with progress. Do not believe everything you hear from a disgruntled co-worker.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Behind-the-scenes discussions could improve a domestic or work situation. Family life becomes much more fulfilling. Teamwork is easier to obtain both at home and at work. Plan a simple but nutritious dinner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What is done is done. Stop torturing your spirit with guilt and self-criticism. Stand on your own two feet to avoid dependency situations. Say "yes" to life and take joy in your accomplishments.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Break into the clear and run for the money. Putting your creative and artistic talents to work will fatten your bank account. Reaffirm your decision-making skills. Diplomacy helps you resolve a financial dispute.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Let someone who has overstayed their welcome know it is time to depart! Procrastination could prove costly. Return phone calls and answer letters promptly. A practical, commonsense approach will prevent regrets later on.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An unusual experience makes this a wonderful day. Your family will do you proud. Spend more time with loved ones. Sharing a secret with a close friend will make you feel more cheerful. Be open to suggestions.

CAPRICORN Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Tie up loose ends, then launch a campaign to solve a financial problem. Lunching with an old friend will revive memories of the past. A romance can be re-ignited if that is what you really want.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Pay overdue bills now. Otherwise, you could get caught in a credit squeeze. Closer attention to detail is essential if a project is to succeed. A budget revision will reduce family tensions. Set a good example.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): More and more people are entering your life. Marrying or finding a happier home environment could become a top priority. Make a fresh start at work. Joining forces with like-minded associates ensures speedy advancement.

You don't need to be a mathematical genius to play bridge. But some knowledge of the probabilities is necessary to enable you to choose the better of two lines. Quite often, common sense is all that is needed.

North-South did well to get no further than a small slam after the interference by East. South's bid of five no trump not only asked for kings, but confirmed possession of all four aces and permitted North to go directly to a grand slam with the right hand. When, despite holding three kings, North could not take advantage of that opportunity, South decided that at least one of the black-suit queens was missing and that a small slam was enough.

West led the jack of diamonds, won in the closed hand. When the ace and king of spades revealed there was a trump loser, it might seem that declarer's only chance was to hope that the queen of clubs was no more than singly guarded.

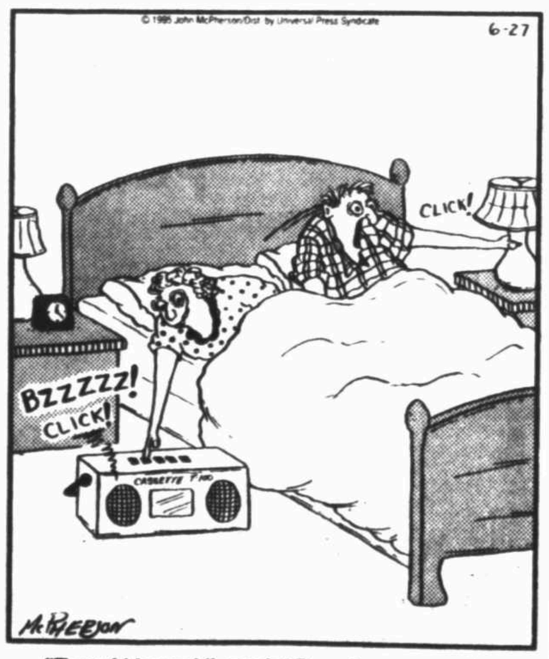

That was considerably against the odds. Even though South could not work out the exact percentage of felling the lady, logic decreed that, if clubs were 4-2 or 5-1, the defender with the long clubs was more likely to hold the queen. So declarer came up with an alternative line.

A diamond was ruffed in the closed hand and three rounds of hearts were cashed, ending on the table. Declarer now ruffed dummy's last diamond to complete the strip, one high club was cashed, then West was put on lead with the queen of trumps. On the forced club return, declarer played low in dummy and, when East followed low, the jack won and the slam was home.

'Melrose Place' heads for big bang season premiere on bomb story line

RADNOR, Pa. — "Melrose Place" is heading for a big bang, with dire consequences for some of the show's characters.

Premiere includes scenes from bomb blast story line.

The premiere of the hit series' fourth season will include scenes from a bomb blast story line that were cut from the past season's finale because of the Oklahoma bombing, according to TV Guide, quoting sources close to the show.

Mackenzie Hart, played by Morgan Brittany, is killed by the blast, and Kimberly (Marcia Cross) faces charges and is institutionalized.

Alison (Courtney Thorne-Smith) loses her sight in the explosion, and ex-boyfriend Billy (Andrew Shue) returns to her side, making his new bride Brooke (Kristin Davis) jealous.

The date of the opener hasn't been released.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Garth Brooks is tired of his greatest hits album, so he's burying it — sort of.

Garth Brooks, tired of his greatest hits album, will bury it.

"The Hits," announced as a limited edition package six months ago, has sold 6 million copies, and about 4 million are still in stores.

That's enough for the country singer, so he's planning a little ceremony Friday in front of the Capitol Records office in Los Angeles with the album's master recording.

"We want to visually make it apparent that 'The Hits' is over, so we're burying the ... master of 'The Hits' in L.A. in front of the towers, where it all started in 1988," Brooks said.

The original tapes of the music, however, will remain in the Capitol vaults.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — There will be little rest for Eddie Stubbs on the stage of the Grand Ole Opry.

He became the weekly country music show's newest announcer over the weekend, replacing Charlie Douglas who retired. But he also plans to continue with his fiddle playing.

Stubbs is a longtime member of the Johnson Mountain Boys, a bluegrass group, and also plays in the Kitty Wells' band.

NEW YORK — Miss America Heather Whitestone is looking forward to the end of her busy yearlong reign. She needs time to dance.

"I feel like part of me is blaah," she said in the July-August issue of Fitness magazine. "I love being Miss America, but when I don't have time to dance, I feel like something is missing."

Whitestone, 22, deaf since she was a toddler, dances to the vibrations.

Before being crowned Miss America, she could dance two to three hours a day, five days a week. Traveling almost 5,000 miles a week doesn't leave much time for that.

"When I dance, I forget about my deafness," she said. "I forget about everything."

SEATTLE — No more jams this summer for Pearl Jam.

The grunge-rock band is surrendering this round to Ticketmaster and canceling eight concert dates, beginning with Monday's show in San Diego.

Pearl Jam had planned its summer tour around sites that didn't use Ticketmaster, the ticket agency that the band has accused of price gouging.

However, most sites with more than 5,000 seats use Ticketmaster exclusively.

Tickets will be refunded, the group announced Sunday.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Federl Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., whose rulings on segregation and civil rights helped transform the South, has been awarded a Medal of Freedom.

President Clinton announced the selection in a letter read Saturday at a reception marking Johnson's 40th year on the federal bench. Johnson is now a senior judge on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Johnson, 76, an appointee of President Eisenhower, issued landmark orders in the 1950s and '60s that helped bring an end to segregation.

It was Johnson's order that cleared the way for the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. to hold the Selma-to-Montgomery voting rights march in Alabama in 1965 despite then-Gov. George Wallace's bid to block it.

Doctors can't wait to examine space endurance champ

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Dr. Norman Thagard, NASA's space endurance champ, is the most eagerly awaited astronaut since the moonmen.

American scientists can't wait until Thagard returns from Russia's space station Mir so they can put him through a series of rigorous medical tests.

"I'm not just up here conducting science. In a way, my body is the science," Thagard said from Mir on June 6, the day he broke the U.S. space endurance record of 84 days, one hour and 16 minutes.

By the time Thagard returns to Earth on space shuttle Atlantis in early July, he will have been in orbit for more than 110 days.

For NASA, Thagard's body is a gold mine.

Researchers want to see how his heart and lungs function after nearly four months of weightlessness. They want to check his bones and muscles, weakened by the absence of gravity. They want to measure his radiation exposure. They want to observe his mental state after being cooped up for so long.

Thagard's Mir-mates, Russian cosmonauts Vladimir Dezhurov and Gennady Strekalov, also will be monitored at Johnson Space Center in Houston for nearly a month. But Thagard is clearly "our cover story," said NASA mission scientist Tom Sullivan.

"We're looking forward to getting them back down and looking them over, assisting them in their rehabilitation" to Earth's gravity, Sullivan said. "One thing we want to learn is how to make that as easy a transition as possible for all future astronauts coming back down from any space station."

Or coming back some day, perhaps, from interplanetary space — like Mars.

Atlantis' laboratory will become a doctor's office as soon as the shuttle docks with Mir and the two Russian cosmonauts on Atlantis switch places with Thagard, Dezhurov and Strekalov.

Astronaut-physician Ellen Baker expects Thagard to be in better shape than she'll be when the hatches open.

"Our adaptation to zero-gravity will not be complete by then," Baker explained. Her last space flight lasted 14 days, and she didn't feel really comfortable until day 10.

Coming home is another matter. Doctors suspect it will take weeks or even months for Thagard's body to readjust completely to gravity, even though he's exercised regularly in orbit. His space anemia, for instance, could linger for up to four months after he returns, said NASA biochemist Helen Lane.

To keep from fainting, Thagard will be lying down when Atlantis begins its fiery dive toward Earth. The shuttle is equipped with special reclining couches for Thagard, Dezhurov and Strekalov.

After landing, the three men will be carried on stretchers from Atlantis to an examining room at Florida's Kennedy Space Center. Then they will be flown to Johnson.

In Kazakhstan, Russian cosmonauts sometimes have to be lifted from their capsules by cranes after months in space.

Thagard, who turns 52 on July 3, will stay at Johnson for a few days for his own safety, Sullivan said. But he won't be quarantined like the first three moon-landing crews in 1969 and 1971.

Doctors feared the moonwalkers might bring back alien germs. They didn't.

Even after Thagard returns home to his wife, three sons and two cats, he'll face about three weeks of daily medical tests and easy exercise. And he'll become one of the prime subjects in NASA's astronaut health study, which follows space travelers throughout their lives.

So far, space seems to have no life-threatening side effects, either to astronauts or their offspring, said Dr. Larry Pepper, a NASA flight surgeon.

"I don't think there are any hidden time bombs, where 30 years after space flight you suddenly see some strange effect. I don't expect that on short-duration flights," Pepper said. "I don't know for long-duration flights whether we will see something in 30 years. We don't have enough data."

Until Thagard, NASA's longest-orbiting astronauts were three Skylab crewmen who spent 84 days aloft in 1973 and 1974. By comparison, the longest space shuttle trip to date — in March — was 16 days.

Here's Norman Thagard, M.D., giving a status report this month from Mir:

"I have, so far as I can tell, maintained pretty much the aerobic capacity that I had on the ground. I feel fine and I really don't think I'll have any major problems on return to Earth. I would worry at this point for long-duration space flight about things like probably radiation and bone loss. I don't think I'm quite so worried anymore about things like exercise and the cardiovascular system."

DEAR ABBY

Officer's wife lays down law on public respect for police

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am the wife of a police officer, and I hope you will permit me to suggest the following to your readers:

Van Buren

Please don't call us at home in the middle of the night when you think you hear a burglar, or are having a domestic dispute. Also, do not call us when your brother-in-law's nephew gets a ticket for exceeding the speed limit.

And please don't insult me by saying that our town is so small that nothing could possibly happen here. My husband doesn't wear a bulletproof vest and carry a gun for kicks.

I've heard parents in the school yard ridicule my husband and other police officers for issuing tickets to speeders on the main thoroughfare. This is the same road where their elementary school children walk home. If, God forbid, one of these kids gets hit by a car, guess who would be the first to complain that cops are good only for hanging out at the local doughnut shop?

Other than doctors, I don't know of any professionals who encounter more domestic violence, gunshot wounds, bloodied bodies from accidents, infants who have stopped breathing, drug-crazed individuals and attempted suicides. And police officers are expected to come home "normal" after putting in eight hours.

My children say, "God bless Daddy," every time they hear a siren. -- OFFICER'S WIFE, PARK RIDGE, N.J.

DEAR WIFE: Your message is well worth repeating. We should ALL say, "God bless the police officers who're answering that call" whenever we hear a siren. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ABBY: My handsome new boyfriend, who is quite bald, recently arrived at my door wearing an unwelcome surprise -- a toupee. He couldn't have been more pleased with it.

Unfortunately, it is unnaturally thick and wiglike, and I'm finding it embarrassing to go out with him now.

I tried telling him in a friendly way that I liked the way he looked before, but he doesn't get it.

We're still in the early stages of our romance, and I don't know him well enough to tell him my true feelings about this.

Abby, how would you handle this touchy subject? -- NEW LADYFRIEND IN JERSEY

DEAR LADYFRIEND: Approach this touchy problem by suggesting that he ask his barber to thin it out a little so it will look more natural. (It can be done.) You would be doing him a favor.

Write again and let me know how he reacted. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Now that the camping season is in full swing, perhaps you can pass along this bit of information to Dear Abby readers who are also campers.

While camping with my husband last year, we were distressed to see so many campers who are unaware that when a light or lantern is on inside a tent, their every move is silhouetted outside of the tent. These campers unknowingly put on quite a show when undressing for bedtime.

To maintain a sense of modesty before bedtime, we lay out our nightclothes to change into, then move the light outside of our tent while changing. Sign me ... EYEFUL IN ARIZONA

DEAR EYEFUL: Your letter was a "first." There IS something new under the sun -- and the moon as well.

AT WIT'S END

You never really leave your 'before'

By Erma Bombeck

You can't pick up a magazine, a newspaper or glimpse a TV show these days without seeing someone being "made over."

Bombeck

Before-and-after ads featuring a person losing 226 pounds used to be a staple among wonder diets. But I always noticed the same things about them. The "before" person wore slacks that made her look as if she had just swallowed a Buick, her hair was stringy, and she had the expression of a woman who had just put her dog to sleep. The person in the "after" picture wore heels and was dressed by Bill Blass, had her hand on her hip, was in full makeup and smiling. I also noted I was looking at two different people.

With cosmetic surgery, we really have some dramatic before-and-after pictures. Air bags under the eyes disappear, rivulets around the lips become smooth, and you don't want to know where the chins go.

From time to time, Regis and Kathie Lee have a segment where a woman is chosen from the audience at the beginning of the show and appears at the end — made over.

What they do is cut and style her hair, give her "important eyes," create cheekbones by darkening just below them, define her lips with liner and outfit her in something with a scarf. Always a scarf.

The results? You have a woman who has never been more uncomfortable in her life. It's not her; it's someone else. It's a lot like the high school senior who has a date for the prom and for the first time springs to go to a beauty shop, where she drops a bundle. Two hours later, she is home in tears, standing under the shower washing it out. It's not her.

Women have a fantasy of being in the hands of professionals who know how to emphasize their best features and give them a face that makes heads turn.

I used to go on a lot of talk shows from time to time to promote my books. The first stop was makeup. Little suitcases emerged with creams, powders, pencils and sponges. Dab here ... brush there ... spit here ... feather there. Close your eyes. Look up. Look down. Are you on the show first? Let's lose the chins.

Finally, I was allowed to look. It wasn't me. I just wanted it to be me. Sometimes I wore the face out to dinner, and when I went through my hotel lobby I was so full of myself I thought of renting a white wolfhound as an accessory.

In my bathroom, however, as I sudsed up my face and rinsed, I saw it go down the drain. The party was over.

We never really leave our "before."

NEW YORK — Pitching greats Nolan Ryan and Ferguson Jenkins will serve as honorary captains at the All-Star Game next month, the baseball commissioner's office said today. Ryan, who pitched in both leagues en route to career records of 5,714 strikeouts and seven no-hitters, will captain the American League players in the 66th annual All-Star Game. Hall of Famer Jenkins, the Chicago Cubs' pitching coach who also was in both leagues, will act as captain for the National League. He won 20 or more games seven times, and was the NL Cy Young Award winner for the Cubs in 1971.

Oilers QBs

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers, hoping to add a veteran quarterback by the start of training camp July 20, are looking at Jim McMahon and Jay Schroeder. McMahon and Schroeder have taken teams to Super Bowl championships. Both are free agents who played for Arizona last season. Earlier this month, the Oilers cut last year's starting quarterback, Cody Carlson, after he failed his physical. Oiler coaches have said they will not push No. 1 draft pick Steve McNair into the starting role. McMahon and Schroeder reportedly have expressed a desire to play for the Oilers. Schroeder, a 12-year veteran, started for the Redskins most of the 1987 season, when the Redskins won the Super Bowl. McMahon has played for five NFL teams and is a 14-year veteran. He was the Chicago Bears quarterback in the 1985 Super Bowl champion season.

Midland man leads

RENO, Nev. — Midland bowler John Denton, who won his only PBA title in 1977, averaged 248 pinfalls Monday to take a 29-pin lead over Ed Deines after the first round of the ABC-PBA Senior Masters at the National Bowling Stadium. Denton, 54, had a five-game total of 1,240 and Deines, 61, of LaPorte, Colo., followed at 1,211. Avery LeBlanc, a non-winner from Houma, La., was third at 1,204.

Diablos win series finale, 8-5

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

El Paso manager Tim Ireland said ending the 12-game home-and-home set with the Midland Angels is like ending a marriage that lasted too long.

Monday, that divorce was finalized as the El Paso Diablos defeated the Midland Angels 8-5 in Texas League West action to split the six-game series at Midland's Christensen Stadium.

"Leaving tomorrow (today) is like cutting the knot with the would be gone love," said Ireland. "It's time to turn the page."

The Diablos, 3-3 in the second half of the season, hit Midland starter Willard Brown, 5-5, early on, scoring seven runs in the first three innings. The five-run third inning was the key one in the game.

After allowing one two-out runs in each of the first two innings, Brown, who had given up six home runs coming into the game, was touched up for three blasts in two and one-thirds innings Monday.

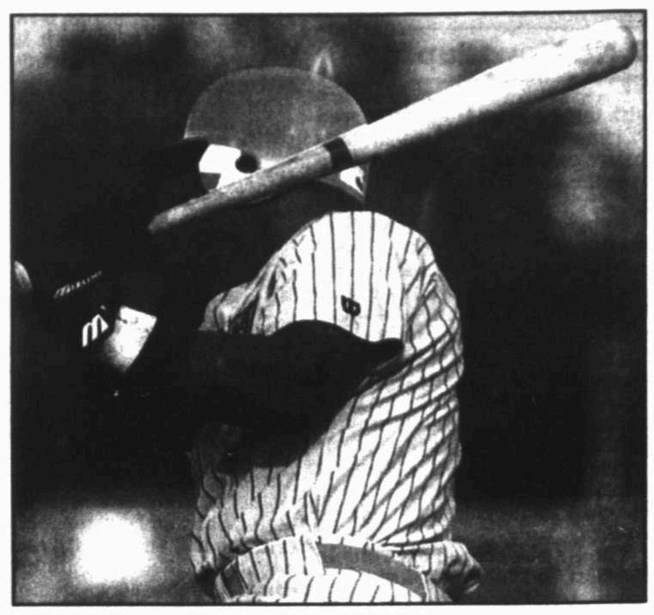

The Diablos got home runs from Brian Banks (his seventh), Bobby Hughes (first) and Kenny Felder (eighth) for a 7-0 lead after three.

That would be all that Diablos' pitcher Kevin Kloek would need. Kloek, 4-4, kept the Angels' bats silent for most of his six innings work, holding Midland to two runs and four hits while striking out six. In reality, the only true damage done to the right hander came on Leon Glenn's bomb over the center field fence in the fifth, but that was all the Angels could do to Kloek, who was happy his performance.

"These guys are good hitters and you have to keep them off balance," said Kloek, who is now 2-1 versus Midland. "They'll put the ball in play and don't strike out a lot. If you don't have all your pitches, you'll be in big trouble."

Sampras shaky in 'homecourt' Wimbledon win

■ Two-time defending champion may feel at home on Wimbledon grass but he seemed like a stranger in four-set victory in the first round.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — In case anyone confused the two, Pete Sampras emphatically declared on opening day of Wimbledon, "I have nothing in common with Deion Sanders."

Sampras, the one without the gold chains and the handkerchief on his head, felt moved to distance himself from the San Francisco 49ers star when asked if he would say of Wimbledon what Sanders said of Atlanta on his return for a game last season: "This is my house!"

Boasting and strutting have never been part of Sampras' style, but for the past two years in his championship runs Wimbledon has, indeed, seemed like his home, a place where he could settle in comfortably on the grass for a fortnight each summer.

On Monday, though, Sampras seemed more of a stranger on the sweltering Centre Court, slipping and sliding to a shaky 7-6 (7-4), 6-7 (7-2), 6-4, 6-1 victory over Karsten Braasch, a left-handed German who looked as if he were swatting flies while winding up to serve.

Sampras is trying to become the first American to win three straight Wimbledons — and the first player since Bjorn Borg won five in a row — but the combination of the slick surface and Braasch's quirky serves nearly led to a different niche in Wimbledon history for him. Not since Manuel Santana was knocked off by Charlie Pasarell 28 years ago had the champion gone out before tea on the first day.

Braasch, born a year later, threatened to equal that upset with a serving motion that had Sampras flummoxed. Besides the three stages of swatting that Braasch performed before he served the ball, he hopped along the baseline at the same time and alternately grunted, howled and berated himself throughout the match.

"There were times when I felt I had handcuffs on returns of serves," said Sampras, who did some handcuffing of his own with 20 aces at up to 127 mph. "I felt like I really didn't get into a great rhythm today. I was struggling a little bit to find the form I really wanted to be in."

Calling Braasch a crafty player, Sampras summed up his frustration with a terse assessment: "He's a pain in the ass to play."

To which the No. 120-ranked Braasch responded: "Thank you. If everybody would think so, I'll be happy. If nobody wants to play me and goes on the court and is already afraid of losing, then it's not bad for me. I know my game is a little bit unusual, but there's nothing I can do. I am not going to change it."

As odd as he seemed, Braasch had eight aces in the first two sets and came up with spectacular angled shots to win the second-set tiebreaker after dropping the first tiebreaker.

"After I lost that second set, I wasn't exactly a happy camper," Sampras said. "I needed to regain my composure

Devils take one step closer to Nashville

By Tom Canavan
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Two days after winning the Stanley Cup, the New Jersey Devils took another legal step to break their lease and clear the way for a possible move, perhaps to Nashville, Tenn., after the 1996-97 season.

However, even though the Devils on Monday notified the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority of their intent to end their franchise agreement in two years that doesn't necessarily mean the team will be leaving.

Devils president and general manager Lou Lamoriello said the team is continuing to negotiate with the sports authority on a new lease. He said the team issued its termination notice to "preserve its legal rights."

Gov. Christie Whitman, a close ally of team owner John McMullen, remains optimistic the two sides can agree on a new lease, her spokeswoman said. The current lease, renegotiated in 1991, expires in 2002.

The notice came hours before the Devils announced a Meadowlands Arena rally for Wednesday in honor of the Stanley Cup. The state assembly, meanwhile, unanimously approved a resolution urging McMullen to keep the team in New Jersey.

"We were looking at a celebration, not a termination," Whit-

Shaq issues challenge to Houston's Olajuwon

The Associated Press

Despite being swept in the NBA Finals, Shaquille O'Neal wants another shot at Hakeem Olajuwon.

In a full-page advertisement appearing in today's newspapers across the country, the Orlando Magic center insists he is not through with Olajuwon.

A two-sentence-long letter to Olajuwon reads: "Hakeem — The series may be a done deal, but it ain't over between you and me. Sure, you're pretty good with your team behind you, but I want you one on one."

The letter ends with O'Neal's signature — "Shaq."

It was not immediately clear whether O'Neal or one of his sponsors paid for the ad.

Olajuwon's agent, Ralph Greene, said the Rockets center knew nothing about the ad until it appeared in the newspaper. Reebok International Ltd., the shoe company O'Neal represents, also said it was not responsible for the ad.

Olajuwon, the MVP of the finals, averaged 32.8 points and 11.5 rebounds during the championship round in helping the Houston Rockets to their second straight title. O'Neal averaged 28 points and 12.5 rebounds.

LPGA expected to change Hall of Fame criteria

By John Curran
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Now that Betsy King has finally earned her way into the LPGA Hall of Fame, the association expects to make the criteria for getting there more realistic.

The change could happen within two years, outgoing LPGA commissioner Charles Mechem Jr. said, but the final decision is up to the players. And most of them say the requirements are outdated because the game has grown so much.

"In today's world, meeting the existing criteria is a virtual impossibility," Mechem said.

King's win in the ShopRite LPGA Classic finally gave her Hall-of-Fame clinching career victory No. 30, but renewed debate about what it takes to make the Hall. King won her 29th event in November 1993.

To gain entry, a player must post 30 victories, including two major tournaments; 35 victories with one major; or 40 with no major titles.

"I definitely feel they should change the standard," the 39-year-old King said. "I think the idea of having an objective criteria is good, but I believe it needs to be changed because of the number of good players.

"I believe you want to reward the best players from each era. I think it's unfairly slanted to the people who played on the tour a long time ago."

One possibility is establishing a system under which golfers get points for winning tournaments, leading the tour in prize money and being named player of the year.

King, who joined the tour in 1977, said the pressure to win one more haunted her during the 20-month drought.

Astros rip Cardinals for 11-0 win

The Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

HOUSTON — Greg Swindell pitched a six-hit shutout and rookie Orlando Miller drove in a career-high five runs with three hits as Houston scored 10 runs in the first two innings before coasting to an 11-0 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Monday.

Swindell (5-3), who got his first shutout since Oct. 1, 1993, allowed only seven baserunners. He struck out five and walked one. Only three St. Louis runners made it as far as second base.

The Astros, who scored a club-record 19 runs Sunday, scored nine runs on five hits in 1 1-3 innings against St. Louis starter Mark Petkovsek (3-2).

Houston had 14 hits, getting at least one from every starter except Phil Nevin and Jeff Bagwell.

The Astros scored six runs in the first on Luis Gonzalez's two-run single, Tony Eusebio's RBI double and Miller's three-run homer, his third.

With one out in the second, Craig Biggio was hit by a pitch and Jeff Bagwell walked. After a double steal, Derek Bell hit a two-run single to chase Petkovsek.

Gonzalez and Eusebio greeted reliever Rich DeLucia with consecutive singles to load the bases. One out later, Miller hit a two-run single to right to make it 10-0.

The Cardinals did not advance a runner past first base until Ramon Caraballo led off the sixth with a single and moved to third on Brian Jordan's one-out double.

Pirates 8, Cubs 6

CHICAGO — Carlos Garcia went 3-for-4 with a homer and extended his hitting streak to 20 games as Pittsburgh beat Chicago, dropping the Cubs to .500 for the first time this season.

Garcia also doubled and singled and is hitting .365 (27-for-74) during his streak. Al Martin had three hits and three RBIs as the Pirates had a season-high 16 hits.

Trailing 7-3, the Cubs rallied for three runs in the bottom of the eighth off reliever Jim Gott. Todd Zeile, Shawon Dunston and Ozzie Timmons hit consecutive singles to make it 7-4. Pinch-hitter Howard Johnson walked to load the bases with two outs and Brian McRae followed with a two-run single to center.

Jason Christiansen relieved and, after McRae stole second, walked pinch-hitter Todd Pratt to load the bases. He then got Mark Grace on a fielder's choice grounder to third to end the uprising.

Braves 4, Expos 3

ATLANTA — David Justice's 431-foot, two-run, sixth-inning homer carried Atlanta to a victory over Montreal.

The Braves overcame a 3-0 deficit in winning for the 10th time in 13 games and handing the Expos their 10th loss in 12 games after a 46-minute rain delay to start the game.

Ryan Klesko also homered for the Braves and Tom Glavine (6-4) beat the Expos for only the seventh time in 18 career decisions.

The Braves rallied off reliever Luis Aquino (0-2), who yielded a one-out double to Fred McGriff before Justice hit the next pitch over the center field fence. Klesko hit his seventh homer 418 feet over the right field fence in the fifth on a 1-2 pitch from starter Gil Heredia.

The Expos had taken their 3-0 lead in the third with five consecutive hits off Glavine.

Heredia started the rally with a bloop single to right and former Brave Tony Tarasco followed with a single to center, moving Heredia to second. Wil Cordero then cleared the bases with his double to center field.

Marlins 9, Mets 4

MIAMI — Jeff Conine's two-run homer sparked a five-run sixth inning, lifting Florida to a victory over New York and pushing the Mets deeper into last place in the NL East.

Florida, fresh off a 6-6 road trip, remain in fourth place, a berth the Marlins secured after Sunday's 5-1 victory over Cincinnati. Florida bettered its league's worse home record to 7-16.

Bobby Bonilla's two-run homer in the first and run-scoring single in the fourth gave starter Bobby Jones (4-5) and the Mets a 3-2 lead. Bonilla also hit a solo homer, his 11th, in the ninth.

Jones, who leads the league in innings pitched (95 2-3), walked Kurt Abbott to begin the sixth. Conine, who was 3-for-5 and scored three runs, hit his 11th homer of the season 441 feet into the middle deck.

Terry Pendleton followed with a single and took third on Greg Colbrunn's single off of shortstop's Edgardo Alfonzo's glove. Andre Dawson, who had two hits and two RBIs, bounced into a double play, scoring Pendleton for a 5-3 lead. Tommy Gregg singled and Charles Johnson capped the inning with a two-run homer.

Ogea helps Cleveland to win but is hit in stomach

The Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chad Ogea won his fourth straight start and helped Cleveland end its longest losing streak of the season Monday night, but he took a shot in the gut while leading the Indians to a 2-0 victory over Kansas City.

With two outs in the seventh and a runner on base, Tommy Goodwin hit a hard liner back to the mound that struck Ogea (4-0) in the belly. He lay on the ground for several minutes, then slowly got up and walked off. He was not seriously hurt, a team spokesman said.

Jim Poole replaced Ogea and got out of the inning by retiring Wally Joyner on a fly ball.

Athletics 4, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON — Benji Gil's throwing error with two outs in the ninth allowed the winning run to score as Oakland rallied for four runs in the inning and beat Texas.

The Rangers made two throwing errors in the ninth, and a bad relay throw by Gil on a potential double play allowed Oakland to keep batting. After one-out RBI singles by Terry Steinbach and Stan Javier made it 3-2, Roger McDowell relieved with runners on first and second and got Gates to hit into a fielder's choice. Gil's throw to first pulled Will Clark off the bag and kept the rally alive.

After an RBI double by Craig Paquette tied the game, Mike Bordick walked to load the bases and Rickey Henderson hit a grounder to the right of Gil at shortstop. He fielded the ball, double-clutched and threw low to first. Clark scooped and juggled the ball as Gates scored the winning run.

Orioles 2, Brewers 0

MILWAUKEE — Jamie Moyer took a no-hitter into the sixth and allowed only two hits in 7 1-3 innings as Baltimore sent Milwaukee to its fourth straight loss.

Moyer (2-3) didn't give up a hit until Jeff Cirillo lined a single to center with two outs in the sixth. Cirillo was robbed of a hit and an RBI in the third when third baseman Leo Gomez made a leaping grab of his line drive for the last out.

Kevin Bass and Rafaerl Palmeiro had RBI singles for the Orioles. Doug Jones finished up the combined two-hitter by pitching the ninth for his 10th save.

White Sox 6, Twins 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Frank Thomas hit a pair of two-run homers to give rookie Brian Keyser his first major league win as Chicago beat Minnesota, extending its winning streak to a season-high four games.

Thomas homered to left-center in Chicago's three-run fifth and hit a line drive over the wall in right-center for his 18th of the season to make it 6-1 in the seventh.

Keyser (1-2), making his fifth start since being recalled from Class AAA Nashville, worked out of trouble several times as the White Sox followed their three-game sweep over Cleveland with a rare road victory. Chicago has the worst road record in the majors at 5-19.

Yankees 7, Tigers 3

NEW YORK — Rookie Andy Pettitte pitched seven scoreless innings and New York extended their longest winning streak of the season to five games with a victory over Detroit.

Pettitte (3-4) shut down a team that had hit 16 home runs in its previous seven games and had won four in a row. An inning after he left with a 5-0 lead, Cecil Fielder hit a two-run homer off Josias Manzanillo.

Pettitte, a 23-year-old left-hander, gave up five hits, walked two and struck out four. He fanned three in the first inning and allowed only one to reach third.

Midland Lee product Randy Velarde, batting ninth for the Yankees, went 3-for-3, drove in two runs and scored twice. Wade Boggs also had three hits for New York and has 10 hits in his last 21 at-bats. Velarde put the Yankees ahead 1-0 with a hit-and-run double in the third off Felipe Lira (4-4).

Red Sox 4, Blue Jays 3

BOSTON — Luis Alicea's single in the bottom of the ninth inning gave Boston a victory over Toronto after the Red Sox blew a three-run lead in the top of the inning.

Mike Greenwell was hit by a pitch from Tony Castillo (0-2) to start the inning. After two fly outs to center, Greenwell stole second and scored on Alicea's line single. Left fielder Candy Maldonado fielded the ball and had a play at the plate, but he fired it high over the head of catcher Lance Parrish.

Stan Belinda (5-0) got the win after failing to protect Erik Hanson's lead in the ninth.

Mariners 7, Angels 3

SEATTLE — Tino Martinez hit a three-run homer and Edgar Martinez and Luis Sojo also homered to lead Seattle to avictory over California.

California's Jim Edmonds extended his hitting streak to 20 games, longest in the AL and second-longest in the majors this year.

Edgar Martinez, the leading hitter in the majors, went 2-for-3 with two walks to boost his batting average from .371 to .376. He had an RBI single in the opening inning to tie the score 1-1 after Tony Phillips led off the game with his 10th homer.

SAMPRAS: American aces Frenchman 20 times

and, hopefully, start to string in a couple of returns. I didn't get a good rhythm out there until I broke him in the third (at 5-4). Then I relaxed a bit and started to play a bit better."

As Braasch faded in the fourth set, Sampras cranked up his serves and closed out the match with another ace.

The new heavier and softer balls, designed to lengthen rallies, didn't appear to affect the number of aces served on the first day. Nor did they seem to make much difference in the style of play. Most points still went quickly with short rallies, just the way they always have on grass.

No. 4 Goran Ivanisevic, who lost in the final to Sampras last year and to Andre Agassi three years ago, served 21 aces to overpower Sebastien Lareau 6-2, 6-4, 6-4.

Todd Martin, seeded No. 14, also served 21 aces in beating Nicolas Pereira 6-1, 3-6, 7-6 (7-4), 7-5. Michael Chang, No. 5, flexed his improved serve for 14 aces in beating Lionel Roux.

In other men's matches, American grass-court specialist Bryan Shelton ousted 12th-seeded Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands in straight sets, 7-6 (7-2), 6-3, 6-3. It marked the second year in a row that Krajicek lost in the first round, while Shelton showed the form that took him to the Round of 16 last year.

Wayne Ferreira, seeded No. 7, advanced with a 6-2, 6-4, 5-7, 6-4, win over Daniel Vacek; No. 16 Guy Forget was a 6-1, 6-3, 7-6 (7-5) victor over Gary Henderson.

Forget, one of the fastest servers, had only five aces but was quite happy with the new balls.

"You have to sometimes play one more shot, which is probably what the tournament wanted," Forget said. "Have more rallies and less free points on the serve. I think the balls are really nice, and I wish all the other tournaments in the world could ... have those new balls with less pressure."

Mats Wilander, back at Wimbledon for the first time since 1989, has a style suited to the new balls and had little trouble sweeping past Mark Petchey, 7-6 (7-3), 6-1, 6-2. Aaron Krickstein came from two sets down to beat Sweden's Christian Bergstrom, 4-6, 0-6, 7-6 (7-4), 6-2, 6-2.

In women's play, 11th-seeded Iva Majoli was the first upset victim, losing 1-6, 6-3, 6-1, to Angelica Gavaldon.

Sixth-seeded Kimiko Date beat Sabine Appelmans 6-4, 6-2; No. 8 Gabriela Sabatini beat Lea Ghirardi 6-3, 6-4; No. 12 Amy Frazier downed Stephanie Rottier, 6-4, 7-5; No. 15 Brenda Shultz-McCarthy was two points away from elimination before rebounding to defeat Radka Bobkova, 6-7 (4-7), 7-6 (7-3), 6-1; and No. 16 Helena Sukova beat Sandra Cecchini 6-3, 7-6 (7-5).

LPGA: King admits mixed emotions about possible changes

(From 1C)

"I think it is pretty tough. I have mixed emotions about it," King said. "I think it's a standard that everybody can shoot for. I know that was the reasoning for making the criteria, so it would be objective, not a popularity vote."

Beth Daniel, who has 31 victories and one major title, said the standards were set when there were 40 or 50 players competing. The field for the ShopRite had 144 players.

Prior to the tournament, Daniel discussed the Hall of Fame with Amy Alcott, who is one win away.

"Eventually, they're going to have to change the qualifications. When they do, Amy Alcott and I are in, no question," Daniel said Sunday.

That, too, poses a dilemma, Mechem said.

"One of the reasons that there has been reluctance to make the changes as soon as some people might have liked is that Amy Alcott, Betsy King and Beth Daniel didn't want to get in based on a change in the rules," said Mechem, who will officially be replaced as commissioner by Jim Ritts on Jan. 1, 1996. "It was everybody's feeling to let time go by to see which of those players are going to get in."

MOVE: New Jersey team makes legal maneuvers to relocate south

(From 1C)

man spokeswoman Rita Manno said. "It did come as a surprise but it may be strictly a legal maneuver on the part of the Devils."

Manno said Whitman supports the sports authority and believes the current lease is valid. The sports authority said its general counsel is reviewing the Devils' termination letter.

"We are not giving up hope," Manno said. "We are nowhere near that level."

Whitman's husband, John, has been an informal mediator in the dispute.

"He is still very much in this and devoting a lot of time to this, and he remains confident this can be worked out," Manno said.

NHL spokesman Arthur Pincus said Monday he was not aware the latest step by the Devils.

Harley Hotchkiss, a part-owner of the Calgary Flames and the new chairman of the league's board of governors, said a move by the Devils would be a public relations blunder for the league.

"If the fans in New Jersey and the owners of the facility they play in want New Jersey to stay and prosper, then they have to be supportive and they (the Devils) have to have a viable deal that makes economic sense," Hotchkiss told The Canadian Press.

McMullen has been considering a lucrative offer from Nashville, while trying to renegotiate his Meadowlands Arena lease, something he did in 1986 and 1991.

McMullen refused to comment on the situation Saturday night after the Devils won their first Stanley Cup by sweeping the Detroit Red Wings. But the word came from his attorneys Monday.

The Devils are seeking to break their lease by using an amendment contained in the original agreement signed in 1982. That amendment allowed the team to end its franchise agreement after 15 full seasons. The renegotiated agreement in 1991 pushed the date the Devils could end their lease to 2002. On Monday, the Devils maintained the 1991 amendment was invalid.

"For the past four years, the authority and the Devils have abided by the terms of that amendment which the Authority maintains is valid," chairman Michael Francis and chief executive officer Robert Mulcahy said in a joint statement released by the sports authority.

The notice is the second legal maneuver by the Devils in recent months. They also filed a default notice with the sports authority listing 13 points on which they alleged the authority had violated its lease. If any one of those points were proved, the Devils would be free to move.

An expansion franchise in Kansas City that later played in Colorado, the Devils moved to New Jersey for the 1982-83 season. The team was one of the league's doormats during its early years but in 1988 made the playoffs for the first time.

The Devils got within a goal of making their first Stanley Cup final in 1994, losing the Eastern Conference final to the New York Rangers in double overtime of Game 7.

Jacques Lemaire's team didn't fall short this year, posting a 16-4 record in the playoffs and capturing the Cup with a sweep of the Red Wings.

McMullen, a New Jersey resident, has been troubled not only by his lease but by his team's inability to attract big crowds. Attendance averaged around 16,000 this season.

The recent offer from Nashville was almost too good to refuse. It included $20 million to move and other incentives, such as more luxury boxes and a share of revenues from other events to be held at 20,000-seat arena, which is scheduled to be completed in 1996.

Maggert takes Family House tourney lead

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jeff Maggert shot a 6-under-par 65 on Monday to take a one-stroke lead in the suspended first round of the Family House Invitational.

Thirteen players, including Fred Couples and Ernie Els at 8-under, were still on the Pittsburgh Field Club course when rain forced the suspension of play. Couples completed 15 holes and Els played 13. D.A. Weibring, Bob Tway and Mike Hulbert opened the 36-hole event with 66s and Jay Haas, David Edwards and Scott Hoch shot 68s.

The winner receives $170,000 from the $850,000 purse.

Lawyer: No evidence links Rodman, herpes

ATLANTA (AP) — Dennis Rodman had unprotected sex with a former Atlanta Hawks cheerleader a day after a Detroit woman went to his home and told him he had given her genital herpes, a lawyer said Monday.

But an attorney representing the San Antonio Spurs star in a federal lawsuit brought by the Atlanta woman said there was no evidence Rodman has ever had a transmittable form of the incurable disease.

Lisa Beth Judd, 24, is suing Rodman for unspecified damages. She claims Rodman, with whom she had an on-and-off relationship since 1991, gave her herpes Jan. 14, 1993, when he came to Atlanta while then playing for the Detroit Pistons. Her lawyer, Mark Trigg, said Rodman had told her the night he gave her herpes he was ready to get serious about their relationship.

"That was exactly what Lisa had hoped he would say," Trigg said in opening arguments to the eight-woman, two-man jury. "Lisa loved Dennis Rodman. Lisa trusted Dennis Rodman."

The usually flamboyant Rodman, who came to court wearing a green jacket and dark slacks but no tie, had given herpes to two other women about two weeks earlier, Trigg said. Richard Hines, representing Rodman, told the jury there was no medical evidence the 26-year-old Detroit woman who accused Rodman of giving her herpes actually has the disease.

"The evidence will show that this is between two consenting adults," Hines said. "The bottom line is going to come down to individual responsibility for sexual activity in the 1990s."

ANGELS: Midland ends 12-game set

(From 1C)

Paso 12-10 in the season series, did show some signs of life against Diablos' reliever Francisco Gamez in the bottom of the seventh inning. Down 8-2, the Angels' Steve Hosey hit a mammoth shot over the left field for his second home run of the year. That was followed by two more runs later in the inning set up by back-to-back walks by Ty Boykin and Tim Harkrider and RBIs by Orlando Munoz and Todd Greene.

However, that was it as the Diablos' Steven Duda finished the last three innings to pick up his first save of the season. Duda gave up just two hits (both to Orlando Munoz) and struck out four.

"That (the third inning) was the game right there," said Midland manager Mario Mendoza. "We tried to come back but their relievers did a good job, especially Duda. He did a hell of a job."

The Angels also received solid efforts from their bullpen. Korey Keling and David Holdridge finished out the last six and two-thirds with a dinger off the bat of Todd Landry (his 12th) in the top of the seventh against Keling the only damage.

Monday's was the 12th played between the two teams in the last 12 days. The two teams will now have a well-deserved break from each other until a five game set on Aug. 6.

Midland, who is among the four teams in the Texas League West tied for first-place with a 3-3 record, will now take on a tough Wichita team that has come on the last few weeks. The Angels will rely on the right arm of Ryan Hancock (6-3 with a 3.90 ERA). The Wranglers will probably throw Mike Busby to start the six-game series. The game starts at 7 p.m. and will be broadcast on KCRS (AM 550) radio.

ANGELS NOTES: Angels center fielder Michael Wolff was named the Texas League's Batter of the Week. Wolff hit .591 (13-for-22) with three home runs, seven runs scored and nine RBIs. He also had a 1.136 slugging percentage in seven games.

Dennis and Pat O'Donnell of West Side Optical relax for a moment in the waiting area. The former owners of O'Donnell Optical, they have returned to their West Texas roots.

O'Donnells have vision for Midland

They say West Texas gets in your blood, and it's hard to stay away. That's certainly true for the husband-wife optician team of Dennis and Pat O'Donnell, who heard the plaintive call of the west even in the deep woods of North Carolina.

The O'Donnells have returned home to open West Side Optical in Lone Star Plaza at Illinois and Midkiff. They both have a long history of "framing" West Texans.

Dennis, at an age when most teenagers are just worried about looking good, was helping others with their vision. When Dennis was 15 years old his father, Frank, decided to leave the optical chain he worked for to open O'Donnell Optical in 1970. His father told Dennis, "I need a partner. Why don't you go in with me?"

Still at Lee High School, the younger O'Donnell attended school in the mornings and worked with his father in the afternoons as part of the Industrial Co-op portion of VICA.

In fact, Dennis O'Donnell practically cut his teeth on frames. "Dad had already been in the optical business about 25 years when he opened his own shop. When I was little, sometimes he would let me come to the shop where he worked. I watched him train opticians for that chain from all over Texas," he recalled.

The elder optician passed down his feeling of joy and care for customers to his son. "Dad always put people over product. He took whatever time necessary to make them happy," Dennis O'Donnell related.

"You can't hurry people and give them personal service. Sometimes they may not know what frames will get them the look they want. My job is to help them look good," he said.

Dennis met Pat before she came to work for them as a dispenser, one who assists people in choosing frames and lens styles. Dennis was actually working for an Odessa radio station at the time. When he and Pat decided to get married, Dennis's father recommended he get back to O'Donnell Optical full time because that salary would better support a family. Dennis agreed.

They've been married for 20 years, and most of that time she has worked with him in the optical business.

The O'Donnells sold their business in 1985, during the bust, when it seemed a good time for the elder O'Donnell to retire. "I think selling out was the only way Dad would ever have retired. Even now, he wants to come down here (to West Side Optical)," he said.

For the next seven years, Dennis worked in Midland for two different optical chains. He and Pat then spent one year in North Carolina before answering the call to return to Midland.

Working with them is a long-time friend and associate, Cheryl Tollefson. Between the three of them, Dennis said, they have 45 years' experience in the optical field. "There are no rookies here," he added.

The O'Donnells have created a sort of "new west" decor at West Side that emphasizes the personal touch Dennis's dad taught them. "Most optical places are very clinical and sterile. We wanted a more informal, relaxed atmosphere. This feels more like you're looking at frames in your living room," he stated.

"We're really glad to be back in West Texas. My family moved here in 1959, and this is really home for us."

West Side Optical, in the Lone Star Plaza at 4411 West Illinois, is owned and operated by Dennis and Pat O'Donnell. They are open 8 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday, closed Sunday. Weekend appointments can be made. Call them at 520-5595.

Funeral Director suggests planning ahead

"Most people don't like to talk about death until it happens. Then when it does occur they often don't know what to do," said Clawson Pipkin, owner of Pipkin Funeral Home.

For that reason, it is important to deal with as many questions as possible beforehand. Pipkin listed five questions everyone should ask themselves regarding this issue.

If my death occurred tomorrow:

Would my funeral arrangements be made by:

- a. my spouse
- b. my son or daughter
- c. a neighbor
- d. one or both parents
- e. not sure

Would the money needed to pay for services come from:

- a. a life insurance policy
- b. my savings
- c. my children's savings
- d. a bank loan by my spouse or other family member
- e. not sure

Would my funeral include:

- a. a copper or bronze casket
- b. a hardwood casket
- c. a steel casket
- d. visits from friends and relatives
- e. my preferred clergy
- f. not sure

Would I expect my funeral expenses to be:

- a. under $1500
- b. $1500-$2500
- c. $2500-$3500
- d. $3500-$5000
- e. $5000-$7500
- f. $7500 or more
- g. not sure

What would I regret most about the arrangements for my funeral would be:

- a. the emotional burden on my survivors
- b. no one would know what I wanted for myself and my loved ones
- c. the financial strain on my survivors
- d. the possibility of emotional overspending
- e. the potential for disagreement and conflict among my survivors over what to do.
- f. that I had not taken care of this myself ahead of time.

Pipkin Funeral Home owner Clawson Pipkin deals personally with each bereaved family. Pipkin is a locally owned funeral home.

Pipkin said he sees all too many instances of disagreements among survivors. One way to prevent these problems is with the purchase of a pre-need policy that spells out exactly what you desire.

A pre-need policy also avoids any financial burden on survivors responsible for the funeral arrangements. Pipkin offers a policy that is transferable to anywhere in the United States in the event of a move.

A Midlander since 1949, Pipkin has worked for funeral homes here and elsewhere since 1970. He purchased what is now Pipkin Funeral Home two years ago.

Being locally owned and operated, Pipkin Funeral Home accepts all pre-need plans and other insurance or can provide financing themselves. They also can file insurance claims as part of their service.

"It may sound strange, but people should check around before deciding on a funeral home. What services are available? Which ones do they want? What are the prices? When checking prices, people should make sure they're comparing the same services; apples to apples, if you will," said Pipkin.

"Often, survivors overspend on arrangements for a loved one out of guilt that they didn't do more while the person was alive. People should re-evaluate why they are doing what they're doing," Pipkin recommended.

German writer Thomas Mann said it this way: "A man's dying is more the survivors' affair than his own."

Pipkin Funeral Home, at 510 North Big Spring, is an independently owned and operated funeral home in Midland. Owner Clawson Pipkin is available for consultation at 682-3700.

Carrier clears the air with ozone-friendly unit

Under the blazing West Texas sun, air condition ing is more a necessity than a convenience. Even nationwide nearly 80 percent of all homes built in 1992 were air-conditioned, as compared to 58 percent in 1978, according to a census conducted by the National Association of Home Builders.

While few people would give up the comfort of air conditioning, many are concerned about the potentially harmful effects on the ozone layer of chlorine and chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs). West Texans don't need any holes in the ozone letting in even more of the sun's rays.

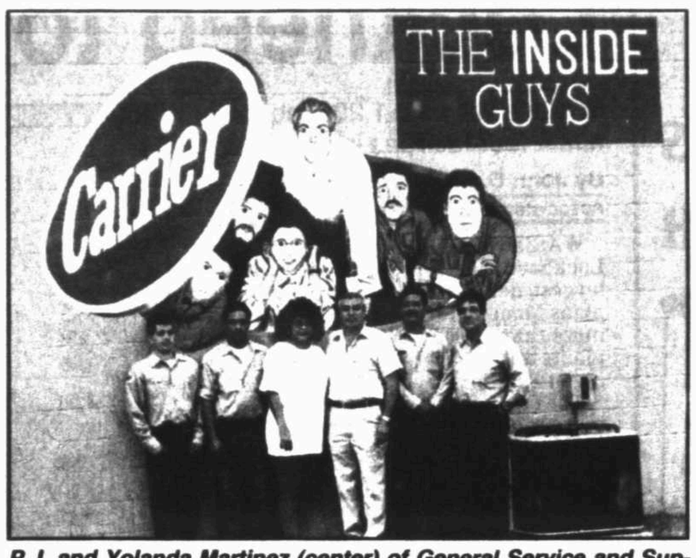

Early air conditioners used a refrigerant called R-12, better known as Freon, which is a CFC. While CFCs continue to be used in larger, commercial air conditioning systems, new residential units now use the safer R-22, which is a hydrofluorocarbon (HCFC.)

"Although the R-22 used in today's air conditioners does not contain CFCs, and is therefor less harmful than Freon, it does contain chlorine, which is still bad news for the ozone layer," said P. J. Martinez, owner of General Service and Supply in Midland.

Consumers may want to protect the environment, but they don't want to sacrifice reliability, quality or energy efficiency.

In light of that, Carrier Corporation recently introduced the first chlorine-free, "ozone-friendly" air conditioner.

"For the first time, an air conditioner is available for residential use that is safe for the environment. The WeatherMaker 134a Zero Ozone Depletion air conditioner is as energy efficient and quiet as anything currently available. And the price is in line with units using the older refrigerant," Martinez said.

P.J. and Yolanda Martinez (center) of General Service and Supply Company say their crew is prepared to install Carrier's new "ozone friendly" WeatherMaker 134a.

Weathermaker 134a Profile

R-134a Millennium Scroll compressor uses non-chlorine refrigerant.

Compressor Vibration Isolator Plate provides for quieter operation.

Filter Drier traps refrigerant contaminate.

Back Seating Service Valves provide reliable, leak-tight hookup.

PTC Start assists the start-up process in adverse weather.

Time Guard II prevents rapid restarts after any operation shutdown.

High and Low Pressure Switches protect the compressor.

The key to the use of this new refrigerant is the development of Carrier's Millennium scroll compressor. John R. Lord, president of Carrier North American Operations, said, "Up until now, there hasn't been a compressor that could operate efficiently with a chlorine-free refrigerant. The new compressor works just as efficiently—and potentially better—with a chlorine-free refrigerant than what is presently available."

High efficiency is important to the homeowner because it means energy savings and lower utility bills. The WeatherMaker 134a has a Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratio (S.E.E.R) of 12.0, comparable with Carrier's other high efficiency air conditioners. That is up to 50 percent more efficient than a typical 10 year-old unit.

"The ozone-friendly air conditioner is a milestone in the air conditioning industry," said Martinez.

"More importantly, it gives homeowners the option to maintain their indoor comfort without harming the environment."

General Service and Supply, at 309 South Terrell, has been in business since 1958. P. J. Martinez came to the company in 1966, and in 1972 bought it from the founder. Call them at 683-1051 for more information about Carrier's line of high-efficiency, ozone-friendly products.

Offer in Compromise gives hope to taxpayers

The story is told of a New York man who received from the IRS a "Second Notice" that his taxes were overdue and carrying with it dire threats as to what would be done if it was not paid immediately. Hurrying to the IRS office, the man settled up and said, "I would have paid this earlier but I didn't get your first notice."

"Oh," replied the clerk, "we've run out of first notices and besides, we've noticed the second notices are more effective anyway."

Most IRS notices are very serious and all too real. There is still hope, however, even if a taxpayer faces the following circumstances:

- The tax penalty and interest exceed the taxpayer's net realizable equity or
- Monthly ability to make an installment agreement with the IRS is minimal.

Taxpayers in either of these situations may qualify for the Offer in Compromise program. Amarillo's Charles Frost, Enrolled Agent and founder of Federal Tax Consultants of Texas (FTC) said the IRS has a new willingness to accept the Offer in Compromise which can result in a win/win situation for both the government and taxpayers.

"The Offer has been an IRS possibility for many years, but it was never utilized on a wide scale," said Frost.

Local FTC consultant William F. Judd said it was just over three years ago that the IRS changed its policies to accept more Offers in Compromise.

"The IRS initiated the new policies in lieu of a general taxpayer amnesty program to help bring people out of the underground economy and back into the realm of voluntary compliance with federal tax laws," Judd explained.

The IRS benefits because the government regains control of billing and accounts receivable. The individual benefits because he then has an opportunity to make a fresh start free of long-standing tax obligations.

In one past case, the IRS accepted $7,000 from a client who owed more than $70,000. In another FTC case, the IRS agreed to a $24,000 settlement against a $24,000 tax debt.

FTC currently has over 100 Offers in Compromise in progress. The IRS has accepted more than 25 of FTC's Offers in the last two years.

While everyone's case is different, there is always a possibility a person could qualify. There is an easy way to find out one's potential for qualifying.

"We offer a service called a Letter of Opinion in which we review your case at minimal cost to determine if you qualify for the Offer in Compromise process. Naturally, we can't guarantee everyone will qualify for this procedure, but if you do, the savings could be substantial," Judd said.

In recent years, FTC has saved taxpayers more than $1 million by using the Offer in Compromise program. FTC believes each taxpayer should pay based on his abilities and not based on a pre-conceived collection policy set by the IRS.

Simulcasting target of race track lawsuit

MIAMI (AP) — A group of horse owners and trainers Monday sued Hialeah Park and 74 simulcasting outlets in the United States and Canada, claiming they illegally accepted nearly $11 million in off-track wagers.

The federal suit was filed by the Florida Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association, which represents about 5,000 horsemen nationwide. It said the illegal wagering came during the last 10 days of the 60-day season at Hialeah Park after the FHBPA had withdrawn its consent for such wagering.

The consent, pulled May 11, was required under a 1978 federal law and the FHBPA's contract with the suburban Hialeah Park, according to the lawsuit.

It's the first suit filed under the 17-year-old law, said Kent Stirling, FHBPA president.

The suit names casinos such as the Taj Majal in Atlantic City, N.J., and the Sands Hotel and Casino in Las Vegas, Nev., and assorted simulcast outlets.

"These outlets chose to ignore our attorney's letter advising them that we had withdrawn our consent to accept wagering on the simulcasts," Stirling said.

Hialeah, like most tracks, derives a substantial part of its income from simulcasting races to wagering outlets around the country. The FHBPA gets a percentage.

The horsemen's group said it withdrew its consent for the off-track wagers because the track was underpaying purses. Stirling put the total underpayment at about $500,000.

Hialeah Park officials previously have denied underpaying purses.

John Van Lindt, executive vice president for Hialeah Park, said Monday he had not seen the suit and had no immediate comment.

Woody Schick, president of Santa Fe Racing Inc., which operates The Downs, said the New Mexico track had not done anything wrong and its contract was with Hialeah Park, not the FHBPA.

"I entered into a contract with the racing track that was sending me the (simulcast) signal," Schick said. "There's nothing that tells me I have to enter into an agreement with the horsemen's association."

The suit claims Hialeah Park officials organized another horsemen's group so the track could get around its agreement with the FHBPA.

It cites a May 11 letter a Hialeah Park official wrote to the betting outlets saying the FHBPA had violated its contract and that a group called Florida Owner's and Horsemen's Association now represented most of the horsemen at Hialeah Park.

The track's racing season ended May 22.

The suit seeks a court injunction to keep Hialeah Park and the betting outlets from accepting any more simulcast wagers without FHBPA's written consent.

It also seeks attorneys' costs and unspecified damages, although it estimates the total sum it is due from all the outlets is about $1 million.

The lawsuit has been assigned to U.S. District Judge James Lawrence King. No trial date has been set.

1998 All-Star game set for Coors Field

DENVER (AP) — Denver's Coors Field will be the site of the 1998 All-Star game, baseball officials formally announced Monday.

"Another of our goals is to have a World Series here," Colorado Rockies chairman Jerry McMorris said during a news conference with NL president NL Coleman.

Word of the decision got out last week, when baseball officials also confirmed that Miami's Joe Robbie Stadium will be the All-Star site in 2000. This year's game will be in Arlington, Texas, next year's will be in Philadelphia and 1997's will be in Cleveland.

Coleman said the 1998 game was awarded to Colorado because of the "great management" of the Rockies, the support of state and local government and "such tremendous fan support."

The expansion Rockies drew nearly 4.5 million fans in their inaugural season two years ago, a baseball record.

Coors Stadium, which opened this year, holds about 50,000 — more than 6,000 fewer seats than the Rockies' 1993 average.

Crude rebounds

NEW YORK — Energy futures prices finished mixed Monday in technical trading following last week's sell-off, which was spurred by news of rising supplies of refined products.

There was little economic data or fundamental news to move the market. Iraq has reached an agreement for Russia to develop oil fields in Iraq that can produce 1 million barrels a day, the Middle East Economic Survey reported.

But the development will only take place if United Nations and other international sanctions on Iraq are lifted, a prospect traders did not view as immediately likely.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in August settled at $17.64 per barrel, up 15 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 25 cents to $16.

Natural gas prices were 2 cents higher, with contracts for delivery in August settling at $1.56 per 1,000 cubic feet.

New Ford radiator

PLYMOUTH, Mich. — Ford Motor Co. said it will test a promising new radiator-catalyst system its inventor says could make cars and trucks "pollution eaters" instead of smog makers.

The inventor, Engelhard Corp., said it hopes to sell the system as a gasoline-powered alternative to more costly electric and natural gas-powered cars automakers are developing to meet new pollution standards.

If the tests over the next nine months prove successful, the system in 1998, a Ford executive said.

Dollar higher

NEW YORK — Britain's pound tumbled Monday after a member of Prime Minister John Major's Cabinet challenged him as leader of the Conservative Party, the latest sign of British political turmoil.

In late New York trading, the British pound was quoted at $1.5849, down from $1.6065.

The dollar ended the day higher vs. most other currencies.

In late New York trading, the dollar fetched 1.3905 German marks, up from 1.3858 late Friday. It also was trading at 84.40 Japanese yen, up from 84.30 late Friday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.1505 Swiss francs, up from 1.1465; 4.8770 French francs, up from 4.8600; 1,628 Italian lire, up from 1,614; and 1.3728 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3744.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — Stocks dropped sharply Monday in a sell-off that traders attributed to rising interest rates, weaker markets abroad and concern about the U.S. automotive trade dispute with Japan.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 34.59 points to 4,551.25.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 7 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 296.67 million shares.

Among broader market indicators, the NYSE's composite index fell to 2.89 to 291.48. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index lost 5.58 to 544.13, while the Nasdaq composite index tumbled 11.89 to 926.98. At the American Stock Exchange the market value index lost 4.37 to 489.11.

Lockheed to eliminate 12,000 jobs

■ Move will cost 1,200 jobs, affect four facilities in Texas.

By John D. McClain
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Newly created Lockheed Martin Corp., the nation's largest defense contractor, announced plans Monday to eliminate 12,000 jobs — more than 1,200 in Texas — and close 12 plants and laboratories in hopes of saving $1.8 billion.

The company, formed March 15 by the merger of the Lockheed Corp. and Martin-Marietta Corp., employs about 170,000 workers worldwide.

In addition to the plant and laboratory closings, it said it would eliminate 26 duplicative field offices in the United States and overseas. The consolidation will be carried out over the next five years.

The restructuring would close facilities in Austin and Abilene, and merge two smaller offices in El Paso. The Fort Worth plant was not on the closure list, and a plant in Harlingen will become one of eight national "centers of excellence," for the company.

About 5,000 jobs will be eliminated this year and 3,000 more in 1996. Another 4,000 in job losses will be spread over the remaining three years of the consolidation, due to be completed in 1999.

The layoffs will be in addition to the 7,000 jobs already eliminated this year as part of previously planned actions the company said reflected changing business conditions and increased productivity.

AP Laserphoto

Daniel Tellep, chairman and chief executive officer of Lockheed Martin, discusses the defense contractor's restructuring plans at a press conference Monday.

"This consolidation plan dramatically improves our competitiveness," Daniel M. Tellep, chairman and chief executive, told reporters. "It creates new economies of scale, capitalizes on corporate-wide synergies and leverages our added financial strength to build a stronger corporation."

Tellep acknowledged at the news conference that sharp cuts in defense spending and in NASA budgets played a large role in the consolidations.

Four major space facilities are being merged into two, located in Denver, Colo., and Sunnyvale, Calif. Commercial, civil and military space activities now in East Windsor, N.J., and Valley Forge, Pa., will be reestablished in Sunnyvale.

The plan also calls for eliminating an ocean, radar and sensor systems facility in Utica, N.Y., and consolidating the programs into a single facility in Syracuse, N.Y.

Austin will lose 780 jobs along with a plant that makes satellite ground support systems, environmental support systems, space avionics and command and control systems.

In Abilene, a facility will be closed that supports various programs, including the F-16 aircraft, Lockheed Launch Vehicle and THAAD missile system, for a loss of 450 jobs.

In addition, El Paso field offices for Lockheed and Martin-Marietta were merged into one office, with one position transferred and four people remaining, office manager Thomas Bailey said.

Lockheed's Fort Worth plant, which employs some 13,000, wasn't on the closure list.

On the other hand, Harlingen's space and strategic missiles sector will become one of the company's eight "centers of excellence," dedicated to structural assembly.

Before the merger, Lockheed and Martin-Marietta were the second and third largest Pentagon contractors, after McDonnell Douglas Corp.

Tellep said the two companies had a combined workforce of nearly 250,000 as recently as 1987. About 40,000 employees working at Department of Energy facilities are unaffected by the consolidation plan.

Investors still expect Fed to lower rates

By N.Y. Times News Service

New York — By the measure that matters most — where they put their money — investors still expect the Federal Reserve to cut interest rates by Labor Day.

Never mind that a couple of relatively upbeat economic reports — a rise in home resales and a jump in orders for durable goods — shook the conviction of some market participants that a decrease was imminent. Yields on short-term investments indicate investors expect the federal funds rate on overnight bank loans will be as much as a half point lower come September.

"The market is telling you the Fed is going to ease between 25 and 50 basis points by the end of the summer," said William Westgate, a vice president at HSBC Securities in London.

The latest sign that a rate cut could be imminent, perhaps as soon as the Federal Open Market Committee meeting July 5-6, came last Tuesday in a speech by Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan in New York. Though cloaked in the ambiguity beloved of central bankers worldwide, investors didn't have much trouble deciding that the overall weight of Greenspan's remarks was on the side of lower rates. They responded by driving down rates on Eurodollars, three-month deposits at foreign branches of U.S. banks, which are among the most sensitive barometers of bets on Fed rate changes.

The September Eurodollar contract's rate dropped 12 basis points to 5.55 percent Thursday, and the December contract dove 18 basis points to a low of 5.44.

Among remarks that stoked hopes for a rate cut was the chairman's observation that this year's inflation is only the "afterglow" of last year's brisk, 4.1 percent growth.

Growth of more than 2.5 percent could drive the inflation rate higher and convince Fed officials to defer an interest rate cut, analysts say.

Optimism the Fed will reduce rates in an effort to ensure the current economic slowdown doesn't become a recession increased in four of the last five weeks.

Those expectations faded only during the week ended June 9, when Eurodollar rates rose 41 basis points to 5.89 percent, after Greenspan called the slowdown "desirable."

Business confidence falls in June

By N.Y. Times News Service

Washington — Businesses reported waning confidence in the U.S. economy during June, although they're still optimistic about avoiding a recession.

Cahners Economics' business confidence index declined to 65.3 for the month from 67.3 in May. The index is now more than four points lower than its peak of 69.7 at the end of 1994, with monthly confidence consistently falling below year-ago levels.

The number of manufacturers expecting business conditions to improve within three months also fell sharply in June to 60.8 percent from 69.3 percent last month and 69.5 percent a year ago.

"This clearly suggests that the manufacturing sector — and probably the entire economy — is cycling down from its peak," the report said. Confidence has fallen this year among all major industry groups except for makers of traditional manufacturing equipment, the report said.

Every component of the index declined during June except for the number of new product introductions, which increased as a result of a seasonal surge of new consumer products. The index's employment component posted the biggest monthly drop, suggesting businesses pared hiring or laid off workers during the month.

Still, just 10 percent of the manufacturers surveyed believe a recession is imminent. The majority — 61 percent — foresee very slow growth in the months ahead, while 18 percent predict a "soft landing" from last year's robust growth, and 11 percent say the economy will speed up next year.

The index is compiled from a telephone survey of 400 senior and mid-level executives at U.S. manufacturing and construction companies.

Existing home sales rebound in May

Source: National Association of Realtors AP

By John D. McClain
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The lowest mortgage rates in more than a year pulled prospective home buyers back into the market in May. Existing home sales rebounded by 4.7 percent from the lowest level in nearly three years.

"Rates have come down significantly," noted economist David Lereah of the Mortgage Bankers Association, who said rising mortgage applications hinted at improved sales in June as well. "I think we've hit bottom and are on our way back up."

But Lereah and other economists acknowledged that the slowing economy will keep the sales level below last year's 3.95 million, even with lower rates. The National Association of Realtors predicts sales of 3.65 million this year.

In May, sales totaled a seasonally adjusted 3.55 million annual rate, the Realtors reported Monday. That was up from 3.39 million in April, when they dropped 6.4 percent to the lowest level since a 3.36 million rate in June 1992.

Lereah said the increased sales of existing homes should help spark renewed construction of new homes. That building has been sluggish in recent months because of large inventories.

Surveys by the National Association of Home Builders have found shopping traffic by prospective buyers rising in recent months as mortgage rates fell and made housing more affordable.

Thirty-year, fixed-rate mortgages averaged 7.91 percent in May, down from 8.32 percent a month earlier and 9.15 percent in January. It was the lowest monthly average since rates stood at 7.15 percent in February 1994.

The monthly payment on a $100,000 mortgage with a 7 percent interest rate is $665.31, while the payment on the same loan with a 9 percent rate is $804.63 — a difference of $139.32.

Also helping to make existing homes more affordable was a 0.7 percent drop in the median price, to $109,100 from $109,900 a year earlier. The median is the midpoint, meaning that half of the homes cost more and half cost less.

Regionally, sales in the South shot up 9.6 percent, to a 1.37 million rate. The median price was $93,600, down from $96,300 a year earlier.

The sales jumped 5.6 percent, to a 950,000 rate, in the Midwest, where the median price was $91,100, up from $87,500 in May 1994.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Reverse split doesn't dilute equity held in company

By Bill Doyle

Q: I owned 100 shares of stock I bought at 4 3/8 — $4.37 1/2 a share. Recently, when this stock was trading at 10 3/4 — $10.75 — I decided to sell. My broker informed me that there had been a one-for-10 reverse split of this stock and that I owned only 10 shares when I sold.

Doyle

They stole 90 shares of my stock. I feel it is wrong for a company to dilute shareholder holdings that way. What is the purpose of a reverse split?

A: It's to bring the stock's price up, out of the "cat and dog" range. Were it not for the one-for-10 reverse split, that stock would have been worth about $1.07 1/2 per share at the time of your sale.

As the name indicates, a reverse split is the opposite of a regular stock split. In a regular 10-for-one split, one share becomes 10 shares. In that one-for-10 reverse split, 10 shares became one share.

Because it happened to all stockholders, there was no dilution of your equity — percentage of ownership in that company. Your one share after the reverse split represented exactly the same percentage of corporate ownership as your 10 shares did before the split.

It stands to reason that the market price of your one share should be 10 times that of each of the shares prior to the reverse split — give or take a bit for buying demand and selling pressure.

The split would have come as no surprise to you if you had read stockholder reports, proxy statements and other material sent by the company whose stock was involved.

Assuming you were registered as a stockholder on the company's books, that literature would have been mailed directly to you. The hang-up might be that you had the stock in a street-name account at a brokerage firm, which was supposed to forward corporate communications to you but did not.

Q: How can I stop the reinvestment of dividends by companies in which I own stock? I am 88 years old and live on my Social Security benefits, which are not enough any more.

A: Contact the agent for each dividend reinvestment plan in which you are participating. Inform the agent that you no longer want to reinvest your dividends to purchase additional shares of stock.

Some companies act as their own DRP agents. Others turn that chore over to outsiders — usually banks. The name, address and phone number of the DRP agent is printed in each company's annual stockholder report. Chances are, that information is also listed in your reinvestment statements.

If you didn't save those reports and statements, try a big public library, where you can find that data in financial manuals.

Each agent will provide a form for you to fill out, instructing that all future dividends be sent to you.

Hopefully, the total amount of the dividends you start receiving after you return the forms, along with Social Security benefits, will be "enough" for you to live comfortably in your golden years.

You did the right thing by signing up for those DRPs, which are offered by some 900 companies. DRPs are a great way to build investments. Each dividend purchases full and fractional shares, usually to the third decimal place, so that all your money is invested for you.

With every subsequent dividend buying more shares, you had a compounding factor working for you. And you avoided brokerage commissions.

At your age, however, it's time — perhaps, past time — to take your dividends and spend them.

Q: When I stop reinvesting my dividends, can I have that money sent directly to my bank account?

A: That is possible with the dividends from an ever-increasing number of stocks, both new purchases and those formerly in DRPs.

If a company in which you own stock provides direct deposit of dividends, it would be mentioned in the annual stockholder report and probably in the "welcoming" letter the typical company sends to new shareholders.
