Courthouse may get renovation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

That edifice called the courthouse — the pivot of many a community — may be undergoing some sort of renovation and expansion if the Midland County commissioners adopt a proposal by architect Walter Pate and if they take the advice of District Judge Pat Baskin.

Pate, who has been hired by the Midland County Commissioners' Court to propose building-space remedies for a burgeoning county government, on Monday tendered the court a $13 million proposal which calls for turning the courthouse strictly into a hall of justice and building an annex to house non-court function.

"It's a real professional job," County Judge Bill Ahders told Pate after the architect outlined a four-tier proposal. Commissioners Durward Wright and Win Brown are to confer with Pate in drafting what could be plans for expanding the courthouse.

The commissioners, however, were reticent after Judge Baskin made an appeal for a "first-class operation" for Midland County government and for a courthouse which the citizenry would not just be "marginally proud, but immensely proud of."

"I'm very proud of the state Capitol building in Austin and the Capitol building in Washington," the judge said. "And they've kept the White House in good shape."

HOWEVER, BASKIN noted the "increasing tendency (among governments) to be economical" in replacing a courthouse rather than in being lavish in building a stately building, such as the pink granite Capitol in Austin.

Baskin, who is presiding judge of the 142nd State District Court for Midland County, advocated that the present 1930-built courthouse, which was expanded in the early 1970s, be a hall of courts. Non-judiciary-related functions would be relocated to an annex.

"There's no compelling reason for the tax office to be associated with any other office," he said.

But he said the courtroom bench and the jailhouse bars in one peculiar sense go together.

"The jail and the courtrooms are in bad shape when they're apart," Baskin said. He noted the convenience and expediency in meting justice by having prisoners at the ready call of the courts in disposing of criminal cases. Cases could be taken care of "on the spur of the moment."

Baskin did visualize two jails: One, as now is the case, would be at the courthouse for the lodging of prisoners awaiting disposal of their cases. The other jail might be apart from the courthouse and would incarcerate those who are awaiting transfer to, for example, the Texas Department of Corrections to serve sentences.

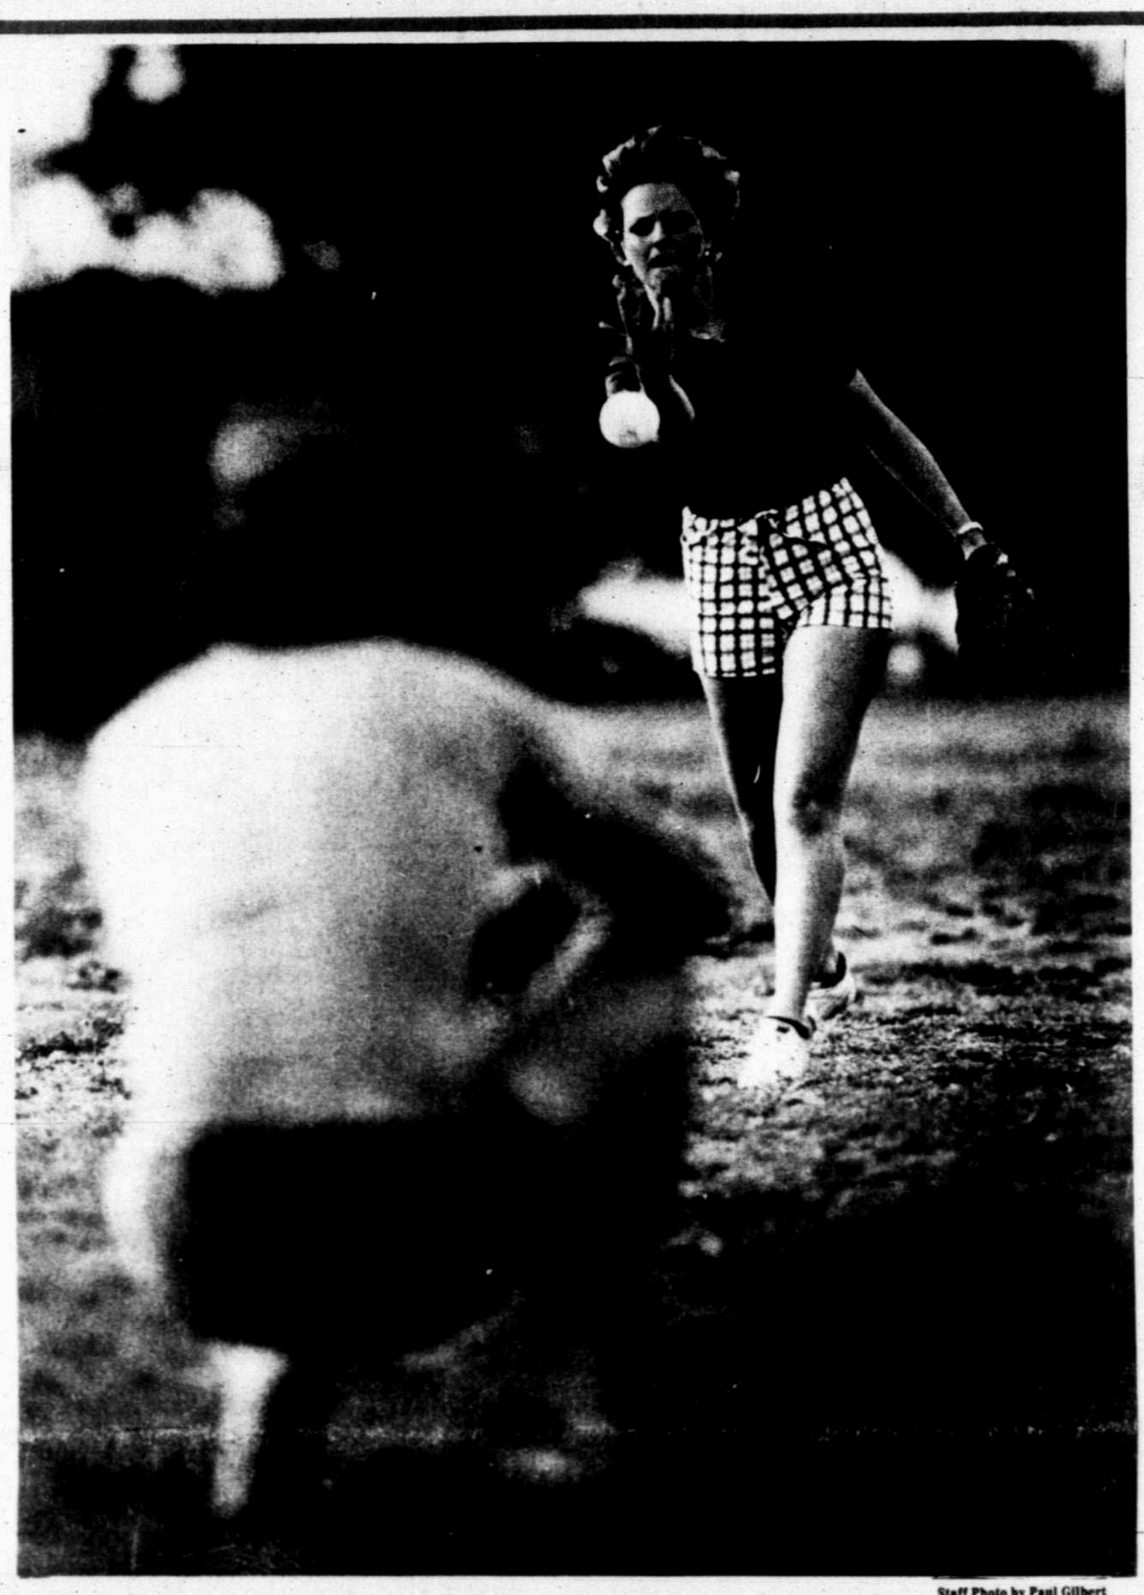

The judge also said that the offices of the district attorney and the county attorney should remain in the courthouse. And he mentioned the need for an adequate law library or libraries. "Right now, we don't have one." The county's existing library is in a compact niche in the tax office in the basement of the courthouse.

THE JUDGE also suggested that the county probation office might be in the courthouse rather than in the old two-story Courthouse Annex a block north of the courthouse square.

"We (the courts) are placed at a considerable disadvantage" by the probation office being in a separate building. "They need to mount up and come over," he said.

The judge addressed the downtown parking problem. "Parking in downtown Midland is very bad," he said. "It's an absolute cinch to get worse." He referred to the 200 jurors who almost weekly are called to the courthouse and to the increasing number of weeks in which jury trials are held. He suggested a 500-space parking facility. The judge said it would be "folly to assume" the county could get by with fewer than 300 spaces. In instances, he said, some workers have changed

Softball-playing weather

A relatively mild and windy spring turned downright hot Monday as the temperature climbed into the 90s for the first time this year in the Permian Basin. And with the warm weather came outdoor activities, especially softball. Here Kim Collins, a member of the Saints softball team, gets some pitching tips from her husband, Jeff, at Lancaster Park.

MMH defends land acquisition

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Two members of Midland Memorial Hospital's governing board testified Monday that the hospital's land acquisition for a proposed chemical dependency unit is not a conflict of interest.

Ed Magruder, chairman of the MMH board of directors, and Roy Campbell, president of the MMH board of trustees, along with five other witnesses, testified at the second day of MMH's presentation to the Texas Health Facilities Commission.

MMH, Southwest Health and Parkview are testifying in Austin to gain approval for similar psychiatric and/or chemical abuse facilities.

In previous testimony, Ray Branson, MMH president, stated there was not a conflict of interest in purchasing five acres from a member of MMH's board of trustees. MMH has an option to purchase the land in northwest Midland for $75,000 from Eugene Abbott, a Midland developer.

In testimony Monday, Magruder and Campbell agreed that the land option is not a conflict of interest. Magruder said Abbott is offering the hospital the land at cost, resulting in no personal gain.

CAMPBELL SAID since the trustees have not taken any action on the option, there is no conflict of interest. Additionally, if the certificate of need is approved, Campbell said the trustees will vote to recommend the purchase, excluding Abbott from the vote and the room.

In response to other questions concerning the land, Magruder said the present location at Wadley Avenue and Whittle Way is the site MMH will build its facility if approved by the THFC.

However, he added, if a 40-acre site, which was recommended by MMH's long-range study, could be found before construction begins, MMH would have the option of coming back to the THFC to seek approval for changing locations.

Magruder and Campbell were asked by the opposing applicants about the hospital's plan for financing the $3.4 million facility. Presently, MMH plans to finance the project through general obligation bonds, but Magruder said the hospital is looking into revenue bonds as an alternative.

Ace Pickens, Parkview's attorney, asked Magruder if revenue bonds could be issued without the voters' approval.

Magruder said yes, but added that it would depend on the advice of a fiscal agent.

Pickens also asked, "Whose revenue would be pledged for the revenue bonds?"

THE HOSPITAL district's revenue, Magruder said.

Campbell added in his testimony that MMH could provide the service for less cost despite alternative financing.

Other testimony by Campbell and Magruder included clarifying the structure of the hospital's three governing boards — board of governors, trustees and directors.

Dennis Armstrong, administrator of chemical dependency services at St. Luke's Behavioral Center, traveled from Phoenix, Ariz., to testify on behalf of MMH.

St. Luke's was one of two facilities MMH officials visited. They have stated that the hospital would pattern its chemical dependency unit after St. Luke's 150-bed behavioral center.

Armstrong said St. Luke's has a verbal agreement with MMH to provide services of marketing, staff recruitment, education and training, program development and joint commission for accreditation of hospital approval for the facility.

J. Kay Trostle, THFC hearing officer, asked Armstrong if the service would be done on a temporary basis and if there would be a fee.

St. Luke's would offer a minimum of a year and probably up to two years for its services with a possibility of staffing an employee at MMH, according to Armstrong, who added there would be a fee.

Two other witnesses, Dr. William Youngblood, a Midland psychiatrist, and S.C. Myers, of Area Builders, Inc., also testified Monday.

YOUNGBLOOD POINTED out the need for such a facility and stated he would be a staff member and use the facility. In addition, he replied that if one of the other hospitals is granted approval, he would use it.

Myers estimated construction costs at $2.5 million. Area Builders, Inc., has just completed MMH's $10 million renovation and construction project from the hospital's 1977 bond election.

Myers said that he had been out to the five-acre site and testified that utilities are available.

The remainder of the day was spent with MMH's attorney, Kevin Reed, and Commissioners withhold action on Monahans Draw

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners are holding in abeyance any action on attacking Odessa's flooding of Monahans Draw and alleged contamination of underground water with the city's sewage effluent until the Environmental Protection Agency has reviewed the data.

But the commissioners, in disposing of a 25-item agenda Monday, were more decisive in disposing of other matters, including helping out the Christmas-in-April program, granting a $10,000-market value property exemption for persons age 65 and older, approving plats and sanctioning a sheriff's application for a governor's grant.

Midland attorney Ted Kerr, who has been retained by the county to ferret out any legal recourse to keep Odessa from dumping its effluent down the draw, said the EPA is reviewing the situation.

"They are reviewing the matter with the seriousness it deserves," Kerr told the court.

"I hope so," said County Judge Bill Ahders.

After an executive session on the draw, Kerr said that Midland County later this year would be in Austin to combat Odessa's application for a renewed permit from the Texas Department of Water Resources to continue dumping secondary-treated waste water down the draw, which cuts easterly through Midland County and which hooks up with Midland Draw east of Greenwood.

In other action, the Commissioners' Court:

—Agreed to assist the Christmas-in-April this April 24, when CIA volunteers repair and spruce houses of the poor and needy. "You want (the use of) a dump trunk?" County Judge Bill Ahders asked CIA coordinator Bobby Trimble. "I want two drump trucks," Trimble answered.

"It isn't exactly kosher with the law," allowed Commissioner Charlie Welch, "but we do it every year."

"Let's not talk about that," suggested the judge.

State law prohibits the use of county equipment on private property; however, the court in 1975 allowed use of its grading equipment to make parking spaces at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum when President Gerald Ford came to town to dedicate the museum.

"I think it's great in view of the fact that we (the county) are working on four houses under a federal grant." With the 80 houses to be repaired under the CIA project this April 24, the volunteer program will have repaired 140 Midland houses in the past year.

—Agreed to allow a $10,000-market value exemption on houses owned by person aged 65 and older.

—Agreed to pay the day-care charges incurred by Midland County foster parents. "Our biggest problem is the day-care rate," said Beverly Acker, who is child placement supervisor for the Texas Department of Human Resources. "It is becoming increasingly more difficult to recruit foster homes, particularly Spanish speaking and black homes, because in most homes in Midland both parents work and they cannot afford to pay day care rates for foster children."

Currently, foster parents are paid $7 a day for caring for a child up to age 9 and $8 a day for caring for a child aged 10 to 18. But if a young child is placed in day care while foster parents are at work, the day-care cost ranges from $210 to $240 a month. At present, there are 14 foster homes in Midland and 26 children in foster care.

—Approved Sheriff Dallas Smith's proposal to apply for a governor's Criminal Justice grant for a new communications system for the sheriff's office. "We're reaching the economic life of that (existing) equipment," which the sheriff figured is about 10 years old. The grant is for $75,553; of that amount, the state would pay 75 percent, and the county, 25 percent.

—Expressed increasing concern over the rise of rural housing projects, particularly mobile-home parks, in the county and over the quality and availability of water.

"There's still (underground) water" since wells were drilled in the mid-1940s, said Commissioner Charlie Welch. "And I don't know how to predict" how long the water will hold out. "It's a spooky thing.

"I'm more concerned about the pollution, contamination of underground

Pulitzer Prizes awarded in journalism

NEW YORK (AP) — The Associated Press and The New York Times each have won two Pulitzer Prizes, and the Kansas City Star and the Kansas City Times have been cited for showing how and why two skywalks collapsed at the Hyatt Regency Hotel, killing 114 people.

"Fantastic! ... It came as an absolute surprise," Detroit News Editor William Giles exclaimed Monday after learning his paper had been awarded the Pulitzer gold medal for public service.

The News won with an investigation that led to a series of stories detailing "a pattern of deception and unresponsiveness" in the way the Navy reported the shipboard deaths of sailors to their families.

Poet Sylvia Plath, who committed suicide two decades ago, won the Pulitzer Prize in poetry for the posthumous volume, "The Collected Poems," and Charles Fuller won the drama award for "A Soldier's Play" as the annual awards were announced for the 66th time.

John Updike won the fiction prize for his best-selling novel "Rabbit is Rich."

AP's Saul Pett was awarded the prize in feature writing for a portrait of the federal bureaucracy, and Ron Edmonds of the AP was honored in spot news photography for his pictures of the attempted assassination of President Reagan.

Jack Rosenthal of The Times was cited for editorial writing.

Water to be convention issue

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Brochures depict the highlights of the 1982 West Texas Chamber of Commerce 64th annual convention scheduled for Midland April 21-23. But Ed Koltharp, WTCC executive vice president, focuses on the nitty-gritty of the convention — the work that goes on in committee meetings.

While the agenda for the convention, which will be headquartered in The Midland Hilton, points to the special speakers and dinners, Koltharp digs down into the issues with the primary one being water.

"One of the most important issues is one that won't be decided in a short time and that is dealing with the future status of water resources. Many people have recognized the only limiting factor this state can have for further economic growth is in the area of water resources."

In the past years, WTCC "has been strongly involved with the water resource question," noted Koltharp. He pointed to the last session of the State Legislature in which WTCC lobbied successfully for a water plan. That legislation, however, was defeated by the voters in the November constitutional amendments election.

SINCE THEN, the WTCC has worked with the Governor's Task Force on Water Resources in gathering input from the public, Koltharp said. And the chamber organization representing 132 West Texas counties will present its position on water to the task force after the convention.

Other issues that will be discussed include national and state affairs, agriculture and ranching, mineral resources and industrial development.

Activities of the convention will center around the theme, "Challenge of the '80s." In explaining selection of the theme, Koltharp said, "We feel the country is experiencing transitions in many areas. We feel there are many important issues to be confronted by the business community. We'll be looking at the challenge of the rest of the decade."

Thus, the affairs for the convention were selected to conform with that idea.

At 10 a.m. April 22, State Rep. Gibson Lewis will give the conventioneers a perspective on state affairs. He has served as Tarrant County representa-

West Texas: Fair with warm afternoons through Wednesday. Highs low 80s north to mid 90s south and near 100 Big Bend. Lows upper 40s north to near 60 south. Highs Wednesday near 80 north to low 90s south and near 100 Big Bend.

Fair skies, warm temperatures continue

Warm temperatures, fair skies and mild winds should continue through Wednesday in Midland and the surrounding area.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the mercury will drop into the middle 50s tonight, climbing once again to near 90 Wednesday.

Variable winds at 5-10 mph are expected tonight. Southerly winds should blow at a relatively calm 10-20 mph on Wednesday.

Monday's high of 93 was six degrees cooler than the record high of 99, set for that date in 1972. The overnight low of 66 was almost 40 degrees warmer than the record low of 28, set in 1957.

Cassette tape player stolen from home

In light criminal activity reported to police during the past 24 hours, Cecila Rico of 300 N. Madison St. said a $1,430 cassette tape player was taken from her residence sometime Monday. Entry was gained through an unlocked rear door. The tape player had been rented from a local firm.

And G.T. Burrow of Route 1, Midland, told officers 30 cassette tapes and two pieces of welding equipment were taken from his truck while it was parked in the 3800 block of West Wall Avenue Monday night. The loss was placed at $600.

Odessa man critical after shooting

ODESSA — An Odessa man remains in critical condition at Medical Center Hospital today after being shot six times at a southside lounge about midnight Sunday.

According to police, Trinidad Bersosa Fuentes, 39, was shot in the chest, back and arm during an apparent argument outside the El Barillto at 1103 S. Dixie Boulevard. Several persons told police they heard shots but did not witness the shooting. There are no new developments in the case, a detective said this morning.

While John Holt, MMH vice president of quality assurance, was on the witness stand, Reed offered approximately 16 exhibits to the THFC. But most were met by objections from Southwest Health and Parkview attorneys. The attoneys claimed that the material was infiltrated by Holt's opinions.

The objections resulted in changes and deletions in words or sentences from the material presented.

MMH WILL CONCLUDE its presentation today with testimony from Judith Kolander, MMH recruiting personnel office; Carson Collins, MMH materials manager; Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance; Morris Dudley, a bond consultant; Jonathon Swett, TriBrook consultant; and additional testimony from John Holt.

Parkview Hospital will begin its testimony for its proposed 60-bed, $500,000 renovated facility. The three-way hearing is expected to wrap up by Friday.

Sunday's Reporter-Telegram story on the new freight loading zone permits said the cost would be $100 if a firm required three permits. The total, however, would actually be $175: $25 for the first one, $50 for the second and $100 for the third. The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

tive since 1971 and is being considered as the next Speaker of the House to succeed Billy Clayton.

Lewis was named one of the 10 best members of the Texas House by Texas Business magazine in 1979. He was chosen by the Texas Municipal League as Outstanding Legislator of the Year for 1979 and in 1981 he was honored by the Texas War on Drugs Committee.

FEATURED SPEAKER at the luncheon that day will be Everett J. "Ebb" Grindstaff of Ballinger, incoming president of Lions International and a WTCC director. In speaking on the challenges of the '80s, Grindstaff will combine the issues with insight, humor and inspiration.

Following Grindstaff will be a report on Texas 2000 by the director of that organization, Dr. Victor Arnold. Koltharp said that Gov. Bill Clements called on the four regional chambers in Texas to assist this committee with gathering data and Arnold will review the final results. The study looks at growth in Texas between now and the year 2000.

This report, said Koltharp, "will provide the state government and private sector with insight to the needs and issues we'll be looking at with the objectives of providing more effective planning and more effective state government."

Highlighting the evening will be the Cultural Awards Banquet, which will start at 7:15 p.m. in The Hilton. Selected to receive the coveted awards are the Sixth Van Cliburn International Quadrennial Piano Competition at Fort Worth; the Old Jail Foundation and Art Center in Albany; Fine Arts Department at Cisco Junior College; and Gile Connell McCrary of Post.

THIS AWARD was set up in 1969 to elevate and recognize cultural achievements in West Texas, whether by an individual, an event or an organization.

Said one spokesman with WTCC, the Cultural Award "has achieved the acclaim as the finest example of how businesses can promote cultural achievements. It's a highly coveted award."

Starting off the next morning at 10 will be a Meet the Candidates forum, which is the first time the chamber has sponsored such an event, according to Koltharp. Candidates for the eight top statewide offices were invited.

Acknowledging they will be attending and the office they are seeking are the following Republican candidates: Lowell D. Embs, governor; Bill Meier, attorney general; Mike Richards, state comptroller; Raymond Frank, state comptroller; Al Gutierrez, land commissioner; Woodrow Glasscock Jr., land commissioner; Andrew Jackson, land commissioner.

Democratic candidates who will be attending are: David L. Young, governor; Troy Skates, lieutenant governor; John H. Hannah Jr., attorney general; Max R. Sherman, attorney general; John R. Cutright, treasurer; Lane Denton, treasurer; Warren G. Harding, treasurer; Ann Richards, treasurer; George Edwin Fore, land commissioner; Dan Kubiak, land commissioner, Garry Mauro, land commissioner; W.E. "Pete" Snelson, land commissioner; Reagan V. Brown, agriculture commission; and Ralph Pacheco, railroad commission.

SPEAKING AT the April 23 luncheon will be Dr. Don Newbury, president of Western Texas College and a noted humorist.

At 2 p.m. that day, Charles Wood will give an updated look at the Texas Industrial Commission as its newly-appointed executive director. Wood worked on the general counsel's staff at the Public Utilities Commission for three years and in the office of the Secretary of State. He has been in private law practice for 10 years.

"I know Midland is interested in industrial development," remarked Koltharp.

Featured speaker that evening at the 6 p.m. banquet in Midland Country Club will be Nancy Hays Teeters, a member of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System. She will speak on "Monetary Policy and the Economy — Challenges of the '80s."

Koltharp said that Ms. Teeters "will provide an insight into what lies ahead. The business community in general and the WTCC are vitally interested in the economic atmosphere nationwide. The Federal Reserve Board is deeply involved in monetary policy."

The regional chamber official is expecting 350 to 400 persons to attend the third convention that has been held in Midland during WTCC's history. Midland was selected as the convention site this year, said Koltharp, because it is centrally located in the region and because Midland "has always been one of the strong supporters of WTCC. We have better than 200 members from Midland."

And while Midland has boasted of three past presidents of WTCC, it is getting ready to install its fourth — Joe Kloesel with Canyon Consolidated, Inc.

HE HAS SERVED as president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, president of Junior Achievement, an advisor on Leadership Midland, advisor and conferee to Midland's Objectives for the '80s, director of the West Texas Chamber Foundation, vice president of Midland Industrial Foundation and vice president of the Texas State Chamber of Commerce. He currently is general campagin chairman for Midland United Way.

Other Midlanders serving on the board and as officers include C. Winston Barclay, Spencer Blocker, Clarence Cardwell, W.H. "Bill" Collyns, L. Roy Prescott, Emil Rassman, Tony Martin and Don Mendell III.

The public is invited to attend any of the events and should call the Midland Chamber office, 683-3381, to make reservations for the luncheon and banquet affairs. The afternoon sessions are open to the public at no charge.

Armstrong takes jab at Clements, White

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

In the past two weeks, gubernatorial candidate Bob Armstrong has gained endorsements that should be worth at least 350,000 votes, if not more, in the Democratic primary on May 1, the contender claimed Monday afternoon during a news conference at Midland Regional Airport.

Calling himself a "fiscal conservative," Armstrong took a punch at the campaign strategy of his two top opponents, Mark White and Buddy Temple, saying, "I'm taking my campaign to the people of the state and not by buying the media."

And by getting these endorsements, Armstrong said, he hopes to make it into the runoff against one or the other of those candidates. Others lagging behind in the race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination are David L. Young, Don Beagle and Ray Allen Mayo.

Standing on his 10-year stint as land commissioner, Armstrong pointed out that Midland-Odessa and its oil-rich land "is important to the state. I moved the University Lease sale out here while I was land commissioner" and most of the sales since then have set a record.

While other states saw their drilling programs shift into reverse, Armstrong said that Texas moved forward. "We have a drilling program because we do it right."

Until this month, voters were "fluid" on their choices for governor in the Democratic primary, he contended. But they are beginning to gel on one of the top three and Armstrong said his record as land commissioner stands out above that of White as state attorney general and Temple as railroad commissioner and legislator.

Answering criticism from other candidates that he has worked for every presidential candidate since 1972, Armstrong replied, "Yes, I have, because I'm a Democrat. I didn't cut and run from the party like others did. And now it has a much more moderate image."

His record as land commissioner, he contended, "is one I'm proud of. We've run the office with less than a 2 percent increase in employees. I passed more bills in one session of the legislature than Buddy (Temple) did in four."

The winner of the governor's race shouldn't be determined solely by which candidate can raise the most money, Armstrong claimed. "I'm not supported by the wealthiest people. I think we need more diversification — find ways to raise money more from the" less wealthy people. "However," he added, "I wouldn't object to a large contribution."

The test of the governor's race should be "who will be the best governor, not who can raise the most money."

In taking another jab at Mark White, Armstrong noted that White "has issued a press release every time he moves or breathes" and White has been lax in making the Public Utilities Commission to be responsible to the people. "We pay 15½ percent profit to the utility companies and that's the largest that any state pays."

The land commissioner commented on his statement last week in which he called a study of illegal aliens commissioned by Gov. Clements a "sham." He explained that the study took a poll of supposedly illegal aliens and Armstrong said it was simply a list of people with Spanish surnames. Of that list, "only 10 percent were illegal aliens. I said to spend $146,000 on it just to get 80 interviews was a sham. The governor said the study was incomplete."

But Armstrong still was critical of Clements' proposal for issuing cards to illegal aliens wanting to work in the U.S.

"When someone comes north they have the normal desire to improve themselves. They want to get trained and go to work and make as much money as possible and they're competing with Texans for jobs," he said.

Until the economic picture improves in Mexico, Armstrong said these aliens will continue to pose a threat for Texans' jobs, and he suggested tighter control at the border to cut down somewhat on the migration.

If elected governor, Armstrong pledged to involve people on a broader basis in working on the problems instead of resorting "to the contributions list."

And he suggested the gasoline taxing method be changed to account for the higher-priced gasoline. When gasoline prices rose, he said, consumption dropped and revenues from the 5 cents a gallon gas plummeted, putting fewer dollars in the state's coffers for the highway department. By placing a percentage per gallon tax on the gas, this keeps the revenues going, in spite of lower consumption, he said.

"I'm taking my campaign to the people of the state and not by buying the media."

water by septic systems, more than running out of water; you run out of water, you simply haul more in."

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis expressed concern over "mobile homes all over the county" and the possible shortage of underground water. He mentioned one case in which the park owner cuts off the residents' common water supply and then increases their space rent because they're not "keeping up the property" and watering the grass. "This is moralistic," Davis said. "This is not business."

—Considered the concern of library patrons who wish to preserve the mosaics of the 1957 Midland County Public Library. The old library is to be razed after a new downtown library is built.

—Agreed to pay Librarian John Deats' expenses in attending the opening of the Dallas County Public Library this Sunday, but opted not to pay expenses for Charlotte, N.C., library consultant Hoyt Galvin to travel to Midland to speak at the Friends of the Library's annual meeting at 8 p.m. Monday at Theatre Midland. "I just can't see paying his way out here to address the Friends of the Library," said Commissioner Durward Wright.

Galvin, a retired library administrator who has been into library consulting work for more than 10 years, has been advising the Commissioners' Court and library staff on plans for the new library and outfitting it. To date, his fee, which is $40 a day, charged Midland County is $1,230.25. At the Monday night meeting, Galvin is to apprise the Friends of library plans.

"Look like he ought to be addressing us (commissioners) instead of the Friends," Wright said.

—Considered turning the old county warehouse property at Front Avenue and Pecos Street into an elections-tax office buildig. The county had placed the triangular plot up for sale at a beginning bid of $350,000 but got no offers.

—Postponed from March 1 to July 1 the date for appointing an election administrator, a newly-created job, at a salary not to exceed $25,000 a year. The Commissioners' Court created the position last Dec. 14. Thereafter, a County Elections Commissions unanimously selected Janeice Builta, the county's deputy voter registrar, to be the elections administrator.

Serving on that commission are County Judge Bill Ahders, the chairman; County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, vice chairman; Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield; County Democratic Party Chairman Darrell Smith and County Republican Party Chairman William T. "Bill" Shaner.

—Adjusted per-diem expenses for county employees on business expenses. The commissioners set limits of $5 for a breakfast, $8 for a noon meal, and $12 for a evening dinner.

—Discussed but reached no agreement on working out a rural ambulance contract wih the city of Midland. Commissioner Welch, who made reference to a 1960s agreement by which the city would care for the rural fire protection in exchange for the county taking over 100 percent of the public library, said the city ought to run its emergency ambulance into the rural areas at no cost to the county. "They (paramedics) are firemen, period," Welch said. "That's why we shouldn't have to pay anything on it at all."

jobs to solve their downtown parking problems. They "give up health insurance in order to have parking."

Baskin said that a juror in Midland finds it "more difficult" to locate a parking space than does a juror in Houston. "We don't have any old buildings to tear down now; we just have fancy ones going up."

ARCHITECT PATE also acknowledged the "severe shortage of space" confronting county government and the judiciary. "We need to do some catching up," he said, adding that it was not feasible to "add onto this (52-year-old) courthouse building in a sizable sense." In addition, he said the cost of adding onto the five-story (plus basement) courthouse would be 30 percent higher than constructing a new building.

He offered four recommendations:

—Build a Courthouse Annex: $3.5 million. Pate suggested relocating several departments to a 47,000-square-foot annex. Cost, at $75 a square foot, would be $3.5 million, he said. Under this proposal, the courts, the district clerk's office and court-records section of the county clerk's office, the district attorney's and county attorney's offices would remain in the courthouse. "Everybody else would move to the annex."

—Construct a new jail and sheriff's office: $4 million.

Pate recognized that Sheriff Dallas Smith "needs twice the space" he has now and said that by 1992, the jail could use 140 cells.

Earlier in the session, the sheriff had noted that on Monday the jail's population was 110. "When we reach 90, we're really basically full," Smith had said. The jail takes up the top floor of the courthouse.

Pate said that a new 43,600-square-foot jail and sheriff's office would cost about $4 but that the cost could be reduced to $3.5 million if much of the existing jail equipment is used in the new facility. Pate did not recommend that the present jail be expanded, although another story could be built atop the courthouse for about $3.3 million.

—RENOVATE the courthouse: $1.6 million. When the non-judiciary-related departments are shifted to the annex, about 35,000 square feet of floor space would be usable for judiciary expansion on the courthouse. "In theory, the space is available." Among newly-created space would be a multi-use room primarily serving as a common- jury selection room and additional county and district courts.

—Build a parking garage: $3.8 million. Pate proposed a nine-story, 1,000-space parking garage; the per floor dimension would be 150-by-300 feet, and the cost per space would be about $3,800. Pate, who had mentioned a 1,000-space parking garage, said that parking spaces, about 500, not used by county employees, jurors and prospective jurors and by courthouse visitors could be leased out by the county as "revenue-producing" spaces and would contribute toward paying for the garage.

The commissioners did not discuss means of financing Pate's proposals and made only passing reference to a site for the proposed annex and jail: the county-owned property, two blocks east of the courthouse square and between Illinois and Texas avenues and along Baird Street.

F. Lee Bailey on trial for driving while intoxicated

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A police officer who processed the arrest of attorney F. Lee Bailey on a drunken driving charge has testified that the famed Boston lawyer was intoxicated and acted "very arrogant and pompous" during the incident.

"He was extremely obnoxious to everybody in the immediate vicinity," Sgt. Lawrence McKenzie told a Municipal Court jury on Monday.

McKenzie, who was called to supervise Bailey's arrest and booking on Feb. 28, said Bailey had bloodshot eyes, a red face and smelled of liquor.

Bailey, who was arrested in the city's fashionable Union Street area, has pleaded innocent to a charge of driving under the influence and running a stop sign.

Bailey was so upset, McKenzie recalled, "that he said I was a disgrace to the uniform I was wearing. I told him he was a fine example of the legal fraternity."

McKenzie's testimony matched that of Peter Canaan, the motorcycle officer who arrested Bailey.

"I just took him for another loud drunk," Canaan told Bailey's attorney, J. Albert Johnson. "I've done this job for 10 years, and I've had to put up with a lot of them."

Midland teen-ager dead after being shot in motel

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — A Midland teen-ager is dead and a 12-year-old Odessa youth has been taken into custody as a result of a late night shooting incident at a party in a Lubbock motel room early Monday morning.

According to Lubbock police, Ralph Sylvester Sandoval, 17, of Midland, was found dead on a bathroom floor in a room at Motel 6, on U.S. 87, by Lubbock police at 12:54 a.m. Monday. According to Bill Morgan, police information officer for the Lubbock Police Department, the victim, clothed in dress pants and an unbuttoned dress shirt, had been shot one time in the left cheek.

Morgan said the bullet went through Sandoval's head, exiting below and behind the right ear. The bullet passed through the wall above the commode into the next room, which was unoccupied. Officers think the bullet was fired from a .357-caliber magnum pistol, Morgan said.

The shooting was reported by unidentified hotel guests from Florida, Morgan said. Police reports identified the victim as Raphael Sylvester Sandoval of Midland.

Witnesses told police they heard loud arguing before the shooting occurred. When the shot was heard, witnesses told police they saw one black male and two Hispanics run out of the room. Two other Hispanics, who were then seen entering the room, left separately a short time later.

A motel employee told police he saw three persons leave the scene in a brown Chevrolet Monte Carlo "lowrider," Morgan said. The vehicle, occupied by one black male and two Hispanics, was stopped by Lubbock police shortly after they received a description of the car. Morgan said police questioned the trio, who said they were witnesses to the shooting.

"The officers developed sufficient information to take a 12-year-old Odessa youth into custody as a suspect," Morgan said. The youth was found in another room at the motel and taken into custody at about 4:30 a.m., he added. He was placed in the Lubbock County Youth Center.

Midland and Odessa residents who witnessed the shooting were apparently "partying" in the motel room after attending a Lubbock "lowriders" car show, Morgan said. A case of empty beer bottles was found in the room by investigating officers.

Morgan said witnesses told police the 12-year-old suspect had been "playing around" with the gun, which was thought to be unloaded. The youth allegedly opened the bathroom door, where Sandoval was standing facing the commode with his back to the door. Police reports indicate Sandoval probably turned his head when the suspect "playfully" pointed the gun and pulled the trigger.

Sandoval's body was taken to Thomas Funeral Home in Midland.

OAS members hope to ease conflict over Falkland Islands

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. ambassador to the Organization of American States says he is confident the OAS will be able to bridge differences between Argentina and the English-speaking countries of the Caribbean over the Falkland Islands crisis.

The OAS, after a four-hour closed-door debate Monday night, was resuming debate today on a compromise resolution aimed at promoting a peaceful solution to the conflict between Great Britain and Argentina.

U.S. Ambassador William Middendorf told reporters he believes there is a good chance a consensus resolution will be reached.

Led by St. Lucia, the English-speaking countries of the Caribbean showed their support for London's position by insisting the OAS resolution make a reference to the U.N. Security Council resolution on the crisis.

The day after Argentina seized control of the South Atlantic islands from the British on April 2, the U.N. approved by a 10-to-1 margin a resolution insisting Argentina withdraw its forces.

OAS sources, who asked not to be identified, said Argentina and several other countries opposed any reference to the U.N. resolution.

The debate Monday night centered on a draft resolution introduced by Colombia. The resolution steered clear of taking sides even though the dispute involves an OAS member and a nation from outside the hemisphere. Great Britain has observer status at the OAS.

The neutral stance reflected the clout of the growing number of English-speaking Caribbean countries in the OAS, many of which are relatively new members of the regional body. Most of the countries where English is spoken are former British colonies.

The mildly worded resolution expresses "profound concern" over the conflict and the "fervent hope that a rapid, peaceful solution can be found."

It called the conflict a danger to the peace of the hemisphere and offered the "good offices" of the OAS to help Argentina and Great Britain reach a peaceful solution.

The OAS first took up the Falklands issue last Thursday, but suspended debate until Monday to give Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. time to resolve the dispute.

Delegation to meet Nicaraguans

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Eight members of the U.S. House of Representatives were to meet today with Nicaragua's leftist junta to find out how it feels about the Reagan administration's conditions for improvement of relations between the two governments.

"We are in Nicaragua to hear the government's reaffirmation that it has not sent arms to the Salvadoran rebels, although I believe there has been such a flow," said House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, the head of the delegation.

"But we are not here to create divisions or talk about the past, but to reach an understanding on the basis of respect and friendship."

There has been no comment from the Sandinista junta on the eight-point U.S. plan proposed last week to normalize relations strained by the junta's alleged support of the leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

The junta has repeatedly denied the U.S. charge that it is funneling arms from the Soviet Union and Cuba to the Salvadoran rebels. But as far as the Reagan administration is concerned, the key point in its proposal is a pledge by Nicaragua to stop supporting armed revolts in other countries.

The plan also calls for U.S. and Nicaraguan pledges of non-intervention in each other's affairs and those of other countries in the region, a regional ban on importing heavy offensive weapons, reduction of the number of foreign military advisers in the area and reduction of military forces "to levels commensurate with security needs."

In return, the United States offered to add Nicaragua to Reagan's proposed $350-million Caribbean Basin initiative.

The Reagan administration says the proposal grew out of a Mexican plan for Central American peace that Nicaragua endorsed. Mexico called for a U.S.-Nicaraguan non-aggression pact, a reduction of Nicaragua's military forces and a negotiated settlement of the war in El Salvador with Mexico acting as "communicator."

The United States has charged Nicaragua with building its military beyond the needs of internal security and claims Cuba has sent numerous military and technical advisers to Nicaragua. The junta insists there are fewer Cubans here than the Reagan administration believes and has declared a state of emergency, claiming an invasion by rightist exiles supported by the United States is imminent.

Meanwhile, President Roberto Suazo Cordova of Honduras on Monday recalled his ambassador to Nicaragua, claiming there had been cross-border raids by Sandinista troops. Nicaragua recalled its ambassador to Honduras a week ago and made similar charges.

"A sector of the Sandinist army is engaged in creating a climate of uncertainty through repeated violations of Honduran territory, which causes relations between Nicaragua and Honduras to deteriorate," said a Honduran statement announcing the recall of Ambassador Robert Perdomo Paredes.

Emergency room attendants at San Francisco General Hospital work over the body of Professor Dudley Yasuda after he was shot to death in his office at San Francisco City College Monday. Yasuda, 43, was shot in the chest and abdomen during a conference in his office.

College professor shot to death in office

By THOMAS MURPHY

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A psychology professor who was "a sort of guru" to some of his students and often spoke of threats on his life to explain fear during class lectures was shot to death in his office as several stunned students looked on.

The gunman, believed by police to be an ex-student, opened the door to the office, fired four or five shots, glanced at the students and fled.

Dudley Yasuda was hit in the chest and abdomen by gunfire about 11:30 a.m. Monday during a meeting with eight students in his office at the San Francisco City College, said homicide inspector Marvin Dean. He died at San Francisco General Hospital about an hour later.

Yasuda, 43, had received threats in the past and once told his students the man who was threatening him had just walked in and out of his classroom, Dean said. The college, too, had received a call from a man who descibed himself only as a psychiatrist and said he was treating an ex-student of Yasuda's who had threatened Yasuda's life, Dean said.

Yasuda never told anyone who the man was, Dean said.

Instead, the professor used the threats in his lectures on fear, telling students what is was like to be threatened.

Dean said "it was common knowlege" that Yasuda had been threatened. "He was explaining to the class what fear was like," he said.

Karen Yasuda said her husband often talked of the possibility of being shot.

"He always lived a life where he could get shot," she said. "He talked about the truth and he never stopped. He taught about love and he lived the truth."

Dean said police had narrowed their search to three suspects.

"We believe it's an ex-student," Dean said. "But we don't have any names yet. It may have been an ex-student who couldn't take a joke. Maybe he couldn't handle getting an F."

Two students said Yasuda sometimes made racial references during his lectures.

"He is not a racist," said student Jerome Trupet, who attended one of Yasuda's classes hours before the shooting, "but he could be misinterpreted as being one."

Dee Burtis, who once took a class from Yasuda, added: "He was really hard on Latins."

But Ms. Burtis also said some students liked Yasuda so much that they wanted to be his followers. She said Yasuda shunned the attention. "He would always say he didn't want a lot of 'Yasudites,'" she said.

"A lot of students respected, almost revered him," Trupet said. "They come to rap with him after class."

"He was on the leading edge of current thought," college president Kenneth Washington said. "He was well liked. He was very popular with the students."

Department chairman Robert Manlove called Yasuda, who had been on the faculty since 1967, "a valuable member of the staff. It will come as a terrific shock to his students. Many of them virtually worshipped him. To some, in many respects, he was a sort of guru."

During one of Yasuda's lectures, a man entered the classroom. After he left, Yasuda told his students it was the man who had threatened him. Dean said some students recognized the man as a former student.

The attack resembled a March 19 shooting in Las Vegas, where Clarence Piggott, a 54-year-old high school psychology teacher who was popular with his students, was shot once through the heart just before a class. A student, Patrick Lizotte, 17, pleaded innocent in the death.

Man shoots 13-year-old boy thinking he was burglar

HOUSTON (AP) — Irving Mielsch says he was jittery about break-ins in his secluded neighborhood because burglars had hit his house a few years ago.

So when Mielsch heard suspicious noises late one night, he ran outside and fired one warning shot before a fleeing figure slumped to the ground.

His victim — 13-year-old Michael MeGee — has been in a coma since that night, March 29.

"We just grab him and tell him he's going to wake up," says his mother, Christine MeGee, who says she makes the 45-minute trip to Ben Taub Hospital three times a day.

She says Mielsch's daughter, 12-year-old Stephanie, had passed Michael a note across their seventh-grade classroom inviting him and friends to come visit her that night. Michael and Tracy Salazor, 12, were throwing pebbles at the girl's window in an attempt to wake her when the shooting occurred.

Tracy was not injured.

Harris County Sheriff's Detective Howard Kimble said the case will be presented to the district attorney's office Wednesday.

Mielsch says he was shocked and stunned when he walked across his yard and found the boy's body. He called authorities. Michael was in surgery for 7½ hours.

Doctors removed two shotgun pellets, but say they were afraid to move another lodged in the boy's brain. They say his chances of living a normal life are slim if he survives.

Michael was a member of his school's football team last season, enjoyed fishing and tinkering with his small motorcycle.

Morin murder trial to go to jury

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A state district judge says he would prepare his charge today for the jury hearing the capital murder trial of Stephan Peter Morin, one day after he accepted Morin's guilty plea.

District Judge David Berchelmann accepted the plea Monday after both the prosecution and the defense rested. Defense attorneys did not present any evidence.

Berchelmann had refused to accept the guilty plea offered by Morin last week, and ordered prosecutors to present corroborating evidence in the slaying of 25-year-old Carrie Marie Scott in a San Antonio restaurant parking lot.

Morin is charged in the slayings of five young women in three states and was on the FBI's list of 10 most wanted fugitives at the time of his arrest in Austin on Dec. 12.

In testimony Monday, a 25-year-old woman testified that Morin shot Miss Scott in the back. Dru Valdes said she saw Miss Scott's legs protruding from an open car door and Morin holding the woman in a headlock when she went to the parking lot to find her friend.

Morin also is charged with shooting Mrs. Valdes.

"I knew that she was in danger, obviously. I said he should leave us alone, just leave, get out of the car," Mrs. Valdes testified. "She said, 'Run. He's got a gun.'"

"I ran three or four steps," she said. "I heard a blast go off. I felt it go through my shoulder. I was knocked down."

Pamela Jackson of Tyler testified that Morin abducted her and held her captive until she was rescued Dec. 11.

Mrs. Jackson, 23, said Morin abducted her about 2:30 a.m. Nov. 30 from the parking lot of a Corpus Christi apartment house where she had gone to pick up her 7-year-old son.

Mrs. Jackson said she, Morin and a companion, 32-year-old Sarah Clarke, arrived in San Antonio on Dec. 3 and moved from motel to motel before ending up at The Sands.

On Dec. 11, Morin followed a woman to a restaurant, returning later and waiting in a car with Mrs. Jackson and Ms. Clarke, Mrs. Jackson testified.

A different woman came out and Morin said "he wanted her," then sent Ms. Clarke to ask her for directions, Mrs. Jackson said.

"He told me to lay down on the front seat and not to get out," Mrs. Jackson said, adding that Morin then also got out of the car.

She said she heard screams and two gunshots. Morin jumped back into the car and Ms. Clarke drove them away, Mrs. Jackson testified.

Morin told Ms. Clarke to hurry back to the motel "before they find us and find out what happened."

Mrs. Jackson said that once back at the motel room, Morin handed her his gun and told her "to kill him. To put him out of his misery. I threw the gun on the bed. I told him I was not going to kill him...that I'm not a cold-blooded person, that I never used a gun before."

She said he had given her the gun once before during her captivity, in Corpus Christi, but that he then grabbed it away from her.

She said that Morin fled from the motel room through the bathroom window after he saw police outside. Police came to the motel room two or three hours later and freed her, she said.

Ms. Clarke also has been charged in Miss Scott's killing and in the shooting of Mrs. Valdes.

Jury must decide if woman aided spy

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — A federal jury on Monday began deliberating charges that a 42-year-old mother of six helped convicted spy Christopher Boyce plan or commit a string of bank robberies in the Northwest.

The deliberations began after Justice Department attorney Guy Goodwin charged that Boyce, who took the stand to say Gloria White had nothing to do with the robberies, was an "admitted liar" who made up "a foolish story."

The jury recessed for the night after deliberating for 3½ hours Monday.

Mrs. White, a widow, of Newport, Ore., is charged with bank robbery, conspiracy and harboring a fugitive.

The Justice Department contended Mrs. White harbored and helped Boyce during the 19 months he was at large after escaping from a federal prison in 1980. She was also charged with planning eight bank robberies in Idaho, Montana and Washington in 1980 and 1981.

The trial, which originally had three defendants, including Boyce and Mrs. White, lasted four weeks.

Boyce, who was serving a 40-year prison term for espionage when he escaped, pleaded guilty April 2 to the same conspiracy and bank robbery charges facing Mrs. White and is to be sentenced April 30.

He could receive up to 90 years in prison and fines up to $65,000.

Boyce, 29, was called as a defense witness after pleading guilty and denied Mrs. White harbored him or had anything to do with the holdups. He said he camped out in mountains around Bonners Ferry, Idaho, where she has a cabin, and only visited her home occasionally.

Goodwin said Boyce admitted he lied, made false statements and did everything he could to avoid detection while at large.

"Christopher Boyce cannot be believed in this case," said Goodwin. He called Boyce's story "a red herring to distract you from the true facts in this case."

Defense attorney Thomas Mitchell urged the jury to reject the testimony of three paid informants, brothers Joe, James and Brett Pratt, who have been granted immunity from prosecution.

'Deprogrammer' charged with abduction

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ted Patrick, a well-known California "deprogrammer," went on trial Monday on charges of abducting a 20-year-old woman whose parents wanted to change her lesbian lifestyle.

Patrick, known for his efforts to deprogram members of religious cults and frequently sued by his targets, is accused with two other men of abduction, kidnapping and sexual battery.

Prospective jurors were questioned Monday about their views on homosexuality, parental rights and mind control. Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Gilbert Bettman said a jury would be empaneled Tuesday.

Patrick, 51, and James Roe, 25, both of San Diego, and Naomi Goss, 25, of Cedar Bluff, Ala., are accused of taking Stephanie Riethmiller last October from the street in front of her suburban Norwood apartment at the request of her parents.

She was taken to Alabama and held for six days. Court documents allege that during that time, Roe had sexual intercourse with Miss Riethmiller "to detract her from her lesbianism and to attract her to heterosexual activities."

The parents have been barred by a temporary restraining order from harassing their daughter.

Miss Riethmiller has also filed a civil suit against her parents, Patrick and four others, seeking $2.75 million. She alleges the kidnapping and "mental torture" were an effort to make her accept certain "thoughts and beliefs."

U.S. sends another envoy to Mideast

WASHINGTON (AP) — With Mideast tensions simmering at the boiling point once again, the Reagan administration hopes a senior U.S. official will be able to head off any last-minute stumbling blocks in Israel's withdrawal from the Egyptian Sinai on April 25.

Deputy Secretary of State Walter J. Stoessel left here Monday for the Mideast to perform what one State Department official called a "hand-holding role." He was dipatched by President Reagan.

The White House also said Stoessel will try to ease the threat of renewed fighting between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization in southern Lebanon.

THE ADMINISTRATION believes the presence of a senior official will help prevent misunderstandings that could delay Israel's withdrawal from territory it occupied in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"The purpose is to make sure things come off as planned," said the State Department official, who did not want to be identified.

Stoessel is scheduled to confer with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin on Wednesday. He also is expected to meet with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

Alan Romberg, the deputy State Department spokesman, said Monday, "There are some things which remain to be worked out" regarding the Sinai withdrawal. He wouldn't reveal them.

But he did say, "This is an important moment and all parties simply felt it was appropriate for a senior U.S. official to be there."

Israel has compiled a laundry list of complaints against Egypt in recent weeks. Among them, an Israeli diplomatic source said, are alleged smuggling of weapons to Palestinian terrorists in the Gaza Strip across Egyptian territory, continuing disagreement over the precise boundary between Egypt and Israel following the Sinai withdrawal, and the postponement of Mubarak's visit to Israel.

"Many obstacles have surfaced recently, making the Israeli-Egyptian position quite a dangerous situation," said the source, who didn't want to be identified. "I don't know if they have endangered Israel's final withdrawal or not, but it is quite a difficult situation in our relations."

The source said Israel favored the visit of Stoessel, although he said it was suggested by the Reagan administration.

Romberg said Stoessel will be prepared "to address all areas of tension" in the region, which he acknowledged have grown worse in recent days.

State Department officials have expressed confidence the Sinai withdrawal will go forward on schedule, although they acknowledge privately that a serious outbreak of fighting along the Lebanese border could complicate matters.

ALSO CONTRIBUTING to tensions was Sunday's attack on the Jerusalem's Dome of the Rock mosque, one of Islam's holiest shrines. An American-born Israeli has been charged in the shooting.

Meanwhile, the State Department said an alleged Palestinian incursion into Israel on Saturday apparently was a violation of the cease-fire beween Israel and the PLO. It was the first time the United States has acknowledged a specific violation by either side since the cease-fire went into effect last July.

Israeli troops said they captured two Palestinian guerrillas, who had infiltrated from Jordan, before anyone was hurt. It was only in recent weeks that the State Department said that the cease-fire bars PLO incursions across borders other than Israel's border with Lebanon.

With regard to the Sinai, Israel and Egypt have failed to agree on the demarcation of 15 points along the new border. In the past, Israel has threatened to delay withdrawal from the final third of Sinai until the dispute is resolved.

The Israelis also are upset over what they see as a possible turn by Egypt away from the Camp David plan for Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The Egyptian delegate to the non-aligned conference in Kuwait last week stressed self-determination and independence for the Palestinians without mentioning Camp David or autonomy, Israeli officials said.

Jewish American claims politics behind shooting

JERUSALEM (AP) — Shouting "justice, justice, for national liberation" and flashing the V-for-victory sign, Alan Harry Goodman, a Jewish immigrant from the United States, was brought before an Israeli magistrate today for the shooting two days ago in Islam's third holiest shrine.

The attack Sunday on Jerusalem's Temple Mount killed two Arabs and touched off Arab rioting that continued today for the third day. The toll rose to more than 175 injured as Israeli soldiers and Arabs clashed in the Gaza Strip.

Magistrate Haman Shelah ordered Goodman, 38, held for 15 days on suspicion of "murder and all the other offenses arising from his action." A police spokesman said the other offenses were too numerous to describe in a routine request for extension of custody, the customary procedure until the police investigation is completed.

GOODMAN WAS NOT called on to enter a plea. Answering Shelah's questions in English, he said he did not have a lawyer and could not afford one. He added in a firm, low voice, "It doesn't matter. This is a political action rather than just a legal matter."

The judge said he would appoint a defense lawyer.

At one point, the thick-set, bearded man tried to break away from the security men holding his arms and lost his glasses in the struggle.

Israeli newspapers reported that Goodman told police he wanted to "liberate" the Temple Mount from Moslem control and to avenge the deaths of Jews in Palestinian terrorist attacks. On Monday night, Goodman took part in a police reconstruction of the assault.

The immigrant from Baltimore, a soldier in the Israeli army, is accused of emptying his M-16 automatic rifle Sunday in the Mosque of Omar. Also called the Dome of the Rock, it is Islam's third holiest shrine after Mecca and Medina because it is built around the stone from which Moslem tradition says the prophet Mohammed ascended into heaven.

The Temple Mount, a plateau in the Arab quarter of Jerusalem, is also revered by the Jews because it was the site of King Solomon's temple and still contains the temple's western wall, the Wailing Wall that is Judaism's most revered shrine.

Police said Goodman killed two Arabs and wounded nine before he ran out of ammunition. About 150 people were injured in the rioting that followed Sunday and Monday in Arab East Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza, including 16 Palestinian Arabs hit by Israeli gunfire Monday. Hospitals reported treating 24 people — six of them children 12 and 13 years old — with gunshot wounds following riots today in two Gaza refugee camps. The military command said four soldiers were injured, two seriously, by rocks.

Israeli newspapers, responding to reports of a probe of possible links between Goodman and Jewish extremist groups, urged the government to crack down on such organizations as Kach, a tiny offshoot of the U.S.-based Jewish Defense League led by Rabbi Meir Kahane.

Kach denied any connection with Goodman. In New York, Kahane said Goodman was never a member of Kach or the JDL, but he called his act "courageous" and offered to pay for a lawyer for him.

A State Department spokesman said the U.S. Embassy was told a consul could visit Goodman as soon as the police finished questioning him.

POLICE ARRESTED 37 Arab leaders who tried to march down Salahidin Street, the main shopping street in Arab East Jerusalem. All were released on bail.

Most Arab shops and schools were closed in response to the call by the Moslem Supreme Council of Jerusalem for a week's general strike.

King Khaled of Saudi Arabia called on Moslems throughout the world to observe a daylong strike Wednesday to demonstrate solidarity with the Arabs in the territories occupied by Israel.

More effective U.S. fighters may be purchased by Jordan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The possibility of offering to sell Jordan more advanced fighter planes than those now in the moderate Arab nation's air force is being considered by U.S. officials, according to Reagan administration sources.

The aircraft being discussed is the F-5G, which U.S. officials rate as substantially more effective than the F-5E jet fighters Jordan now has.

The possible arms sale offer is being considered as one way to satisfy Jordan's requirements for improved air defense, the sources said Monday.

The administration has made no final decisions on the question of a possible new arms sale to Jordan, said the sources, who asked not to be identified. But they said that various ideas are being discussed in preparation for U.S.-Jordanian meetings late this month.

When Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger visited Jordan in early February, he said he was willing to urge Congress to approve sales to Jordan of a mobile version of the improved Hawk anti-aircraft missile system.

Israel, however, strongly objected to that proposal, saying its security would be seriously endangered if Jordan were allowed to deploy such mobile anti-aircraft weapons, which could be positioned to reach into Israeli territory.

Jordan already has Hawk missiles, but they are anchored in fixed positions — a requirement that Congress insisted on when it approved the sale several years ago.

Defense spending

Can the defense budget be cut without damaging the necessary military rebuilding program now under way in the United States? That is a crucial question in any compromise that Congress may strike on the Reagan budget proposals.

Dr. Robert Foelber, a defense budget specialist, suggests in a study for the Heritage Foundation that savings can be made without sidetracking major components of the administration's proposals. But they require changes in the way the military does business.

In listing 11 specific reforms which he estimates could save a total of $8.5 billion annually by 1987, Foelber suggests that major economies depend on two things: More cost conscious weapons design and more vigorous interservice standardization. Weapons procurement reform would help achieve both.

"It is time to rethink America's weapon design strategy in terms of cost efficiency," he said, because savings would permit the services to buy more, if somewhat individually less capable, weapons.

Typically a piece of equipment like the $38 million F-A 18 fighter — which Foelber calls a "design-to-cost disaster" — is now upgraded to the latest technology feasible throughout production. Also, Foelber contends, many sophisticated weapons systems are not designed to handle a realistic enemy threat.

Several things happen as a result. Such weapons take longer and longer to develop. They cost more per unit, so the services can afford fewer of them. Fewer orders mean shorter production runs, further driving up unit costs. And on-line upgrading of technology means more down time during production.

One example of the attitude among weapon designers that "good is not good enough" is the Army's night vision binoculars. "The Army could have equipped its soldiers with a decent set of night vision binoculars years ago but has delayed deployment while it seeks an ever more capable system in the light of state-of-the-art technology," said Foelber.

Production runs could be larger if there were not so much duplication of effort among individual services. He cites examples of projectiles that could have been designed to fit both Army and Navy guns but were designed differently at triple the cost.

Foelber's study deserves attention by the administration and by Congress. It sheds considerable light on why defense spending seems to be out of control. It also underscores a disquieting fact: If defense spending spirals out of sight, the national consensus that at last supports a challenge to the Soviet drive for military superiority may well evaporate.

Charity isn't needed

Congress recently passed a bill to authorize James Brady to accept contributions to cover the expenses of his recovery from wounds he suffered a year ago in the assassination attempt.

Brady is the White House press secretary. He was shot in the head when President Reagan was wounded in the chest. Brady's wound was more serious. His survival was in doubt and he remains partially paralyzed.

After eight months in the hospital, he was released to his home. But now he is back in George Washington University Hospital, undergoing treatment for a blood clot in his right leg.

He remains on the government payroll. But rehabilitation treatments are expensive. Contributions are being offered.

Federal law bars federal employees from accepting such funds. But the special legislation passed exempts federal workers wounded in an assassination attempt.

No such exemption should be necessary.

The government should undertake to pay all of Brady's legitimate and necessary expenses with public funds. He should not be required to accept charity.

Brady's wound was a direct result of his employment in public service. The taxpayers should insist on paying for his rehabilitation.

Another View:

Help for the islands

No incumbent American president had ever set foot in the Caribbean island nations of Jamaica and Barbados until Ronald Reagan's visit recently. Considering the area's strategic importance to the United States, that alone makes the president's trip worthwhile.

Reagan's first stop was Jamaica. Thursday, he arrived in Barbados where, before vacationing at Claudette Colbert's home, he met with leaders of Barbados, Dominica, Antigua-Barbuda, St. Kitts-Nevis, St. Vincent and the Grenadines.

All are black-populated, English-speaking islands that gained their independence from Great Britain in recent years.

Even Jamaica, by far the largest of the group, has a population of fewer than 2½ million. Normally, the islands do not get much high-level attention from Washington.

Lately, however, this has begun to change as realization has sunk in that what happens in the former British colonies — which lie athwart the sealanes to and from the United States, Western Europe and Japan through the Panama Canal — is very important to the United States.

Beginning with the Carter administration, Washington has been disturbed by the emergence of a virtual Cuban satellite government in Grenada, one of the southernmost islands, and by leftist inroads elsewhere — including Jamaica.

Reagan has asked Congress for $350 million to promote economic and security projects in the Caribbean Basin, but a major share of the aid will go to El Salvador and other troubled Central American countries. The president's visit is intended, in part, to reassure the former British colonies in the Caribbean that their economic-development needs are not being overlooked.

Although a small country by global standards, Jamaica is a colossus among the English-speaking islands. What happens in Jamaica influences what happens elsewhere in the area.

Luckily for the United States, a Castro-leaning government that had presided over the virtual collapse of Jamaica's economy was thrown out by the voters in 1980 and replaced by a new government that reversed the trend toward socialism and welcomed foreign investment.

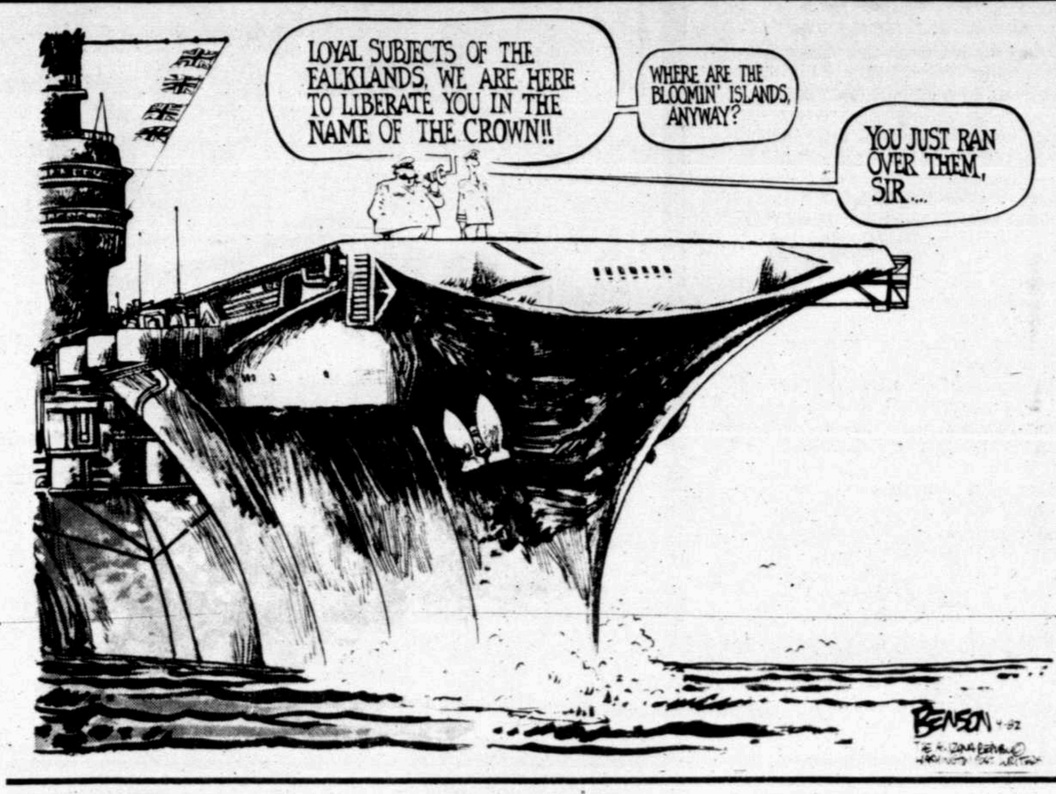

Since that time, inflation has eased, the economy has turned up after seven consecutive years of decline, and international credit has been re-established. But foreign investment has not been forthcoming in the quantities needed, and unemployment is still an appalling and politically dangerous 27 percent.

Some of the smaller islands, lacking the infrastructure of roads and other facilities that must precede development, are worse off.

Unless the poverty in the area can be alleviated, the young island nations will remain vulnerable to Cuban troublemaking, and the stream of job-seeking emigrants to the United States will continue.

The islands are so small that a relatively small amount of economic aid goes a long way. Reagan should take a good look at the realities and ponder whether an increase in direct foreign aid would not be the humane thing and, in the long run, a bargain for the American taxpayer.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Cost-cutters aiming at handicapped children

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration denies that it is picking on the more vulnerable members of our society, like the poor and the elderly. But the bureaucratic bullies of the "New Federalism" are taking aim at the most helpless targets of all: handicapped children.

Jack Anderson

What's even more shameful is that the administration is apparently planning to trick Congress into going along with its shabby scheme. Here's the story:

In the sacred cause of "getting the government off our backs," the Department of Education wants to turn responsibility for handicapped kids over to the tender mercies of local school boards and state agencies. It wants to redefine the "free, appropriate, public education" guaranteed to the handicapped by law. It also hopes to give the states greater flexibility, such as considering cost, when deciding where a handicapped child should go to school.

Realizing that Congress would be unlikely to swallow this set of proposals whole, Joe Beard, a lawyer in the department's general counsel's office, proposed a plan to feed it to the lawmakers piecemeal. In a confidential March 30 memo to Tom Anderson, special counsel to Education Secretary Terrel Bell, Beard acknowledges that, by law, Congress will have to be notified of the changes.

"But it (the law) does not say we have to send it up all in one part," the legal adviser points out. The solution he recommends is to send the program to Capitol Hill a piece at a time.

"In this manner, certain controversial parts will not kill off the less controversial parts, and also, we may be able to divide the enemy," Beard writes. By having separate votes on each part of the deregulation plan scheme, "we might be able to pull it off," he advises his colleagues.

But the lawyerly strategist adds this warning: "On the other hand, Congress may find this to be a trick, which it definitely is, and may react negatively."

On the whole, though, Beard concludes that Congress might be fooled by his divide-and-conquer tactics. I suppose contempt for Congress is a minor sin compared to kicking a crippled kid.

Footnote: When my associate Vicki Warren asked Beard about the memo, he would neither confirm nor deny its existence. Such things would be "a matter of legal advice," he explained.

S.O.S.: The once-proud presidential yacht Sequoia has been awash in legal and financial difficulties.

The good ship's troubles began when Jimmy Carter decided a luxurious yacht didn't fit in with the image of a "people's president," and had the floating palace decommissioned and sold. A succession of owners found that upkeep on the Sequoia was more than they could handle, and the sleek old beauty was passed from one hopeful entrepreneur to another, growing more down-at-heel as the years went by.

The depths of the 50-year-old yacht's indignity were probably reached earlier this year when it was placed under arrest at its mooring in Baltimore, like any common footpad. The action was a legal maneuver in a long dispute between its two most recent owners.

The Sequoia has since been bailed out, so to speak, and is currently tied up in the Potomac River, a few hundred yards from the White House. But the high hopes of its latest purchasers, a group of wealthy Republicans who formed the "Presidential Yacht Trust," appear to have dissolved in a frenzy of internecine bickering and financial problems.

The skipper and many of the trust's illustrious crew have jumped ship. Those on the beach include former Treasury Secretary John Connally, former Navy Secretary J. William Middendorf, former Sen. George Murphy, R-Calif., Dr. Dale Tahtinen, formerly of the American Enterprise Institute, and businessman Robert Gray, who was co-chairman of Ronald Reagan's inaugural committee.

Edgar Skinner, the trust's original president and chief executive officer, left the group a few months ago and has been firing verbal broadsides at his former associates ever since, accusing them of various forms of skulduggery and calling for an investigation by the Internal Revenue Service, the Justice Department and Congress.

In an "unsolicited notice of my intention to resign," dated last Oct. 21, Skinner wrote: "The circumstances and events evolving since the acquisition of the USS Sequoia are not consistent with the standards I envisioned when I conceived and organized the Trust ..."

Skinner also noted that a serious heart ailment had made him "physically unable to bail the Trust out of the impending financial disaster."

Since that restrained communication, Skinner has grown increasingly bitter. In a recent statement, for example, he refers to "abuses (that) have severely damaged the good reputation of the gallant Sequoia," and adds that "the proud lady cries out for those who have tainted her grand reputation, by using her for their own personal gain, to be brought to justice. She now flounders, patiently waiting for help, from the country she so nobly served. I ask, on behalf of my lady, will America respond?"

One of the principal targets of Skinner's wrath seems to be Michael Gill, a nephew of the late President Eisenhower, who is chairman of one of the trust's boards. Gill told my associate Lucette Lagnado that the trust is indeed low on funds, but he played down the legal and financial difficulties that have so exercised Skinner. As for Skinner's letter of intent to resign, Gill said he had never seen it. He was confident, he added, that the Presidential Yacht Trust would keep the Sequoia afloat.

INSIDE REPORT:

McNamara, Bundy drop political bombshell

WASHINGTON — Former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara and McGeorge Bundy, President Kennedy's national security aide, slipped into the White House last week to warn William P. Clark, Ronald Reagan's national security assistant, that they were about to drop a political bombshell on the president.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The bombshell exploded April 8 with their controversial proposal that the U.S. rule out "first use" of nuclear weapons. "First use" is the policy they themselves ratified 20 years ago as essential to prevent an attack against Western Europe by Warsaw Pact forces infinitely superior to NATO's conventional force.

The two top geopoliticians in the Kennedy administration told Clark their proposal, to be published one week later in the magazine Foreign Affairs, was not intended as an affront to Reagan or as an effort to polarize the West on the nuclear issue. In fact, however, that is precisely what the proposal may do: Embarrass embattled West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, a "first use" advocate despite the peace movement sweeping Europe; and fuel the nuclear-freeze movement now starting in the U.S.

GOOD NEWS-BAD NEWS

A secret poll by Robert Teeter for the House Republican Campaign Committee, headed by Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, shows the Republican Party declining to a point just above its post-Watergate nadir.

Party leaders and White House political aides downgrade the significance of that decline from a high point following Ronald Reagan's inaugural. Both parties are on the decline, these politicians believe, as voters more and more get their political input not from the two major parties but from television, direct mail and other mechanics of the new politics.

The good news in the Teeter poll, which was tabulated in late March, is a finding that among voters who have an opinion, two out of every three blame the recession on the Carter administration. Countering that, however, was the startling finding that most voters still are not aware that inflation has come way down in the Reagan administration — a knowledge gap that raises disturbing new questions about the administration's inefficient public relations operation, starting in the White House itself.

A CRANSTON FAILURE

In what looked like a blatant effort to replace Sen. Robert Byrd as the Senate Democratic leader next January, Sen. Alan Cranston, the assistant leader, called a hush-hush session of top-drawer Democratic senators March 31 in a move to compromise their differing approaches to the nuclear-freeze issue.

The session backfired when Sen. Henry Jackson, author of a hard-line freeze proposal, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, author of a soft-line proposal, started attacking each other's handiwork. That left Cranston with egg on his face, unable to carry out his mission of producing a unified party freeze-plan.

Unknown to the senators in Cranston's office, who also included John Glenn, Fritz Hollings and Gary Hart, Cranston had quietly alerted the press to wait outside his Senate office where, he believed, they would receive the good news of party unity from Cranston when the session wound up. Emerging into klieg lights, Jackson and Kennedy were stunned. Having just been at each other's throats, they had trouble keeping a seemly countenance in telling reporters they had nothing to say.

A REAGAN BLINK?

White House senior aides passed confidential word on April 8 that "the White House" had agreed to a cut of just over $6 billion in fiscal year 1983 defense spending and about $21 billion in contract authority, extending into future years.

But does "the White House" include the resident of 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue? Ronald Reagan has been misrepresented by his aides before, most recently on excise taxes in January, only to repudiate them. His position on his huge five-year defense-spending program has been adamant up to now: No reductions that cut into weapons programs.

Pressure for a revised budget, however, is growing. At lunch with Reagan April 5, the president's closest Senate friend, Paul Laxalt, quietly pressed for defense cuts. White House Chief of Staff James Baker III, empowered to negotiate for the president on a revised budget, is known to be pushing for three-year cuts totaling between $40 and $50 billion. If an overall deal is cut by Baker, no matter how the president really feels about it, it would be extremely difficult for him to reject it.

CHARLEY REESE

Bad advice weakening Reagan's lead

It's too bad President Reagan doesn't take my advice, which he can have for the price of a newspaper, rather than the advice of those $50,000 a year numbskulls he has allowed George Bush's boy, Jim Baker, to hire.

Charley Reese

I told the president some months ago in one of my columns that he was painting himself into a box by basing his Central American policy on backing Napoleon Duarte instead of on simply preventing a communist government from controlling El Salvador. Too bad he didn't read it.

Now, after having hailed and urged and insisted upon free elections in El Salvador, he's embarrassed, because a majority of the people in El Salvador decided not to vote the way the State Department, the New York Times, and the Washington Post wanted them to vote. More voted against Duarte than for him.

Duarte may yet be able to form a coalition government, but suppose he can't. Are the president and his smart guys then going to put the United States in the absurd position of threatening the people of El Salvador with a cutoff of U.S. aid unless they negate the results of the free election we insisted that they have? How stupid can somebody be and still wear a pinstripe suit?

Mr. Duarte may be an angel and Mr. Roberto D'Aubisson, the so-called rightwing leader, may be a devil. I can't tell because of the lousy job of reporting the American press has done. All I know about D'Aubisson is that Robert White, former President Jimmy Carter's leftist ambassador to El Salvador, thinks he is an extremist. Heck, White thinks Ronald Reagan is an extremist. To be disliked by Robert White is a recommendation in my book.

The point, however, is that it doesn't matter what we think of either Mr. Duarte or Mr. D'Aubisson. What matters is what the Salvadorean people think and 60 percent of those who voted think Mr. Duarte and his party should not lead the country.

If the president had taken my advice, he could be celebrating the big turnout and relatively fraud-free election and offering United States' assistance to any coalition government that is put together. Instead, he is sweating nervously over the results, afraid that a coalition government representing a majority of the Salvadorean people will boot Duarte out of the country and put an end to the land reforms the U.S. State Department forced on them in the first place. Then what? If the president elects to withdraw support from a right-wing government freely chosen by the people, not only will he make the United States look ridiculous but he will guarantee that a Soviet puppet government will eventually take over the country.

Either it's in our self-interest to prevent a communist takeover or it isn't. If it isn't, we should get the heck out of El Salvador. If it is, then it is of no consequence what other kind of government the people of El Salvador choose. As I tried to tell the president, he should not involve himself in the internal affairs of another nation except, in the name of our national security, to prevent the Soviet Union from setting up a satellite government.

We can kick the Soviet Union out of the Western Hemisphere; we can't govern the Western Hemisphere nor, for that matter, do we have any right to try. Ronald Reagan has listened to bad advice and consequently the posture of the United States is just as absurd and weak as it was under Jimmy Carter.

Here we have the United States trying to bribe the Nicaraguans and the Cubans and fretting over an election we insisted the El Salvadoreans had to have. As it was under the Carter Administration, it's becoming clear that the United States government has neither brains nor guts.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, April 13, the 103rd day of 1982. There are 262 days left in the year.

On April 13, 1961, the United Nations General Assembly condemned the apartheid policy of racial segregation, as practiced in South Africa.

On this date:

In 1605, Theodore II became Czar of Russia on the death of his father, Boris Gudonov.

In 1948, the Romanian constitution was remodeled along Soviet lines.

In 1973, Archbishop Makarios was ousted from the Cypriot Orthodox clergy on grounds he broke church law by serving as president of Cyprus.

And in 1976, a munitions plant explosion in Finland left 45 dead and seven injured.

Ten years ago: President Nixon flew to Canada for a three-day visit.

Five years ago: Spain's top military leaders agreed after stormy debate to accept a government decision to legalize the Communist Party.

Actor-producer Clint Eastwood testifies in support of a bill that would exempt owners of home audio and video equipment from being prosecuted for copyright infringement during a House judiciary subcommittee hearing Monday at UCLA Law School. Eastwood and Jack Valenti, right, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, joined others in predicting that the U.S. film industry faces destruction if Congress doesn't act to compensate producers for home videotaping of films.

'Dense Pack' MX deployment considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Another proposed method of deploying the land-based MX missile force — a deceptive basing system known as "Dense Pack" — is under serious consideration by the Pentagon, according to senior defense officials.

The new proposal, as were earlier ones, is aimed at minimizing the chances of an enemy being able to pinpoint and destroy the multiwarhead missiles, which are to be a major element in the nation's strategic defense system.

The "Dense Pack" plan, the officials said Monday, involves groups of 10 vertical capsules spaced 2,000 feet apart, nine of them empty and the other containing one MX missile.

Besides presenting Soviet defense experts the problem of not knowing which capsule contains the missile, Pentagon planners say the "Dense Pack" system could cause the Soviets concern over the chance that missiles they fired to destroy the MX force might blow themselves up.

In military jargon, the destruction by one incoming warhead of its "brother" missiles is called "fratricide."

According to Pentagon experts, the "Dense Pack" method could work as follows:

To be certain of destroying all 10 capsules in the configuration — the nine empties as well as the one with the MX — the attacking warheads would have to fly in tight formation. That would create the risk that the first warhead could explode and destroy its "brothers" before they reach their targets.

The idea, according to supporters of Dense Pack, is to undermine Soviet confidence in its attack system.

The Washington Post, in today's editions, quoted an Air Force document which said, "some Soviet warheads will destroy each other, significantly reducing Soviet confidence in the attack. Therefore, there is inherent survivability in the deceptive Dense Pack concept, with an inherent limit on the effectiveness of a Soviet attack."

The Reagan administration has been considering a number of possibilities for housing the MX missiles, including putting them aboard airplanes or in reinforced underground silos.

Former President Jimmy Carter recommended a system that would have required moving the missiles on tracks from one underground site to another across vast areas of Nevada and Utah.

That idea encountered strenuous objections from people who live in the two states and was rejected by President Reagan, who said it was too complicated.

During his 1980 campaign, Reagan charged that previous administrations had let U.S. strategic forces become vulnerable to attack, and promised to propose his own basing plan for the MX missiles.

Weapons experts who think the Dense Pack approach might be more palatable politically note that the spacing of the missile containers would be in a relatively small area and that most could be on military bases.

The Air Force is proposing a force of 200 MX missiles. That would require a separate pack for each, with a total of 2,000 of the missile containers.

According to the Post, the idea gained momentum after the Senate Armed Services Committee voted recently against letting the Air Force put the first MX missiles in existing Minuteman silos until a permanent basing system is approved.

Army's new standards keep best soldiers

By FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army, faced with an unexpected increase in re-enlistments, says it has toughened its standards so commanders will now be able to keep only the best soldiers.

"Successes in Army recruiting and retention, to include a significant increase in the number of soldiers who have re-enlisted, make such a quality move possible," the Army told members of Congress in a recent memorandum.

Among other things, the new rules bar re-enlistment to any soldier who fails to gain promotion at least to corporal or its equivalent, specialist fourth class, during his or her first three-or four-year hitch.

Commanders also have been given broader authority to weed out those soldiers with less than six years of service who are deemed to be "marginal performers or unsuitables," according to the Army.

Although much public attention has been focused on the Army's performance in recruiting new volunteers, officials long have been concerned about problems in retaining quality soldiers beyond their first enlistments.

BUT THE LATEST available figures suggest to Army officials that their re-enlistment problems are fading, at least for the time being.

Officials credit major pay boosts and bonuses for their claimed successes in re-enlistment, recruiting and upgrading the quality of Army troops.

Grudgingly, they also acknowledge that widespread unemployment in the civilian economy is helping the Army.

According to preliminary figures, a total of 45,660 men and women re-enlisted during the first six months of fiscal year 1982, which began last October.

This was 2,724 more than had been anticipated when goals were set last year.

Significantly, re-enlistments were at a higher level than expected in the combat arms — infantry, armor, and artillery — where the Army has experienced chronic difficulties since the end of the draft nearly a decade ago.

PRELIMINARY FIGURES for the six months ending March 31 showed 12,894 re-enlistments in the combat branches, compared with an objective of 11,654.

Major James D. Weiskopf, a Pentagon spokesman, said the Army had a re-enlistment rate of about 15 percent during the late 1970s.

Last year, 66.7 percent of the eligible personnel re-enlisted, Weiskopf told the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Gazette in a story published Monday.

Largely because of the better-than-expected performance in re-enlistments, the Army has lowered its goal for signing up new recruits this year by about 7,000 to a total of 125,400.

Meanwhile, Army officials reported improvement in their ability to attract male high school graduates into uniform.

As of April 5, Army recruiters had enrolled just under 61,700 male high school graduates this year, or 80.4 percent of the total.

THUS, THE ARMY is outstripping the standards ordered by Congress. Under the law, the Army must maintain a floor of 65 percent high school graduates in its recruiting this year.

The Army already has just about reached the 15,300-man limit it has set for itself in enlisting young men who lack high school diplomas.

All 15,132 women who volunteered so far are high school graduates, a slight increase over last year's 94 percent.

Coast Guard calls off yacht search

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Coast Guard called off the search Monday for two sailboats and four people missing since a wind-swept yacht race, after spotting wreckage believed to be from one boat.

Pilots of two helicopters and a cargo plane used in the search reported no sign of the sailors aboard the Sweet Omega and the Bad Sneakers. But the wreckage of a green hull spotted on a beach north of Bolinas at mid-day was "almost assuredly" from the Sweet Omega, Coast Guard master chief Dave Cipra said.

"We probably will not continue the search," said Cipra. "We have covered 5,500 square miles as thoroughly as they can be covered, and the only siting is the one on the beach at Double Point."

Aircraft had been searching the choppy waters since fierce winds disrupted a race to the Farallon Islands on Saturday.

Searchers could not immediately reach the 10-foot-long pieces, but they were "right in the area a wreck would have been blown. We have a very strong feeling that it is (the Sweet Omega)," Cipra said.

On Sunday, a life ring, raft and life jacket from one of the boats had been found floating off Point Reyes. But there was no sign of the people aboard the two boats.

An unexpected gale ambushed 127 boats in an annual race Saturday from San Francisco Bay to the Farallons and back, capsizing one boat and forcing four others aground.

The Coast Guard sent up a helicopter and an airplane to search a 4,200-square-mile area from Half Moon Bay, about 20 miles south of the Golden Gate Bridge, to Jenner, about 60 miles north.

The 22-foot Sweet Omega was skippered by Janice White and crewed by Larry Ohs, both of Portland, Ore. Aboard the 24-foot Bad Sneakers was skipper Gregory Maimone of Castro Valley and a crewman whose last name was listed by the Coast Guard as Benson.

Two hours after the race started Saturday morning, forecasters posted gale warnings and winds whipping up to 60 knots forced 72 boats to turn around. Four boats ran aground north of the Golden Gate, and a cataraman flipped over beyond the bridge. Their crews were rescued.

Despite the wind, more than 50 boats made it to the Farallons, about 30 miles offshore, and back.

The Coast Guard said a life jacket with Ms. White's name was found floating off Point Reyes, along with a life ring and raft from the Sweet Omega.

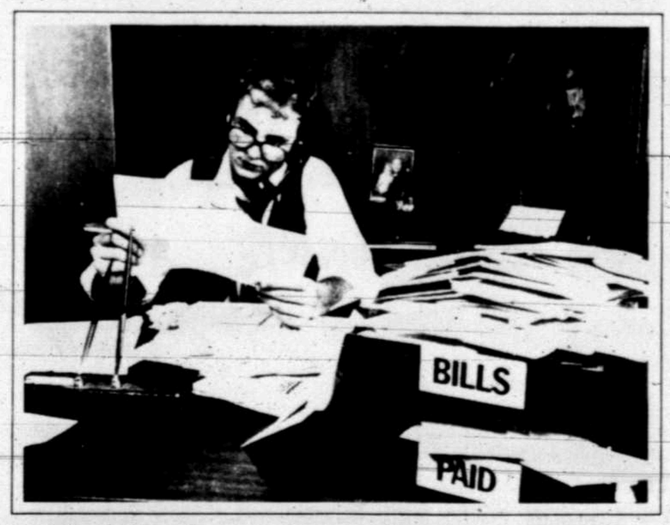

In a separate accident unconnected to the race, two sailors lost their lives when their boat collided with a freighter.

The 35-foot Kuhushan collided Saturday night with a freighter anchored off Bolinas, north of San Francisco.

The boat's owner, Colin Haskin, a copy editor for the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, swam to shore. But the bodies of his two companions, John Huber, 48, and John Stroble, both policemen from Davis, were pulled from the rough, 55-degree water late Saturday.

"I came up about 10 yards from them" Haskins recalled. "They were floating upright, talking to each other. They were hopeful, but they weren't really trying. I thought they were doomed. The last thing I remember was their flashlight flickering."

If you want to be famous, attend Kingston Historic Festival

KINGSTON, Ga. (AP) — The beauty queens and professional Santa Clauses offering to lend their special glitter to the annual town festival may not be the celebrities the mayor was looking for, but they'll be famous by the time they leave here.

The mayor will attest to it.

So many near-famous people responded to Mayor C. Vernon Ayers' plea last month for any "famous person" to attend the two-day Kingston Historic Festival that the mayor says he'll sign certificates declaring them famous whether they are or not.

The certificates will state that "when you leave here, you will have achieved celebrity status," Ayers said Monday.

Residents of Kingston, located in northwest Georgia, have printed T-shirts and buttons reading "I'm Famous" and "I'm Not Famous" so the 729 townspeople can tell celebrities and spectators apart at the festival, which begins Saturday with a parade, Ayers said.

He sent out his plea this year because senators, actors and governors have declined invitations since the festival began in 1980.

Former President Jimmy Carter, former U.S. Sen. Herman Talmadge of Georgia, Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy, Georgia Sens. Sam Nunn and Mack Mattingly, Georgia Gov. George Busbee and actor Burt Reynolds all have declined to attend, the mayor said.

Instead, Ayers got offers from dozens upon dozens of radio personalities, clowns, beauty queens and singers — even A. James Manchin, West Virginia's secretary of state.

Among those committed to attend is Wally Amos, creator of Famous Amos' chocolate chip cookies. He sent the people of Kingston five crates of cookies.

Ronald McDonald, the fast-food clown, will be here, as will Jay Thomas, who plays a deli cook on ABC-TV's "Mork and Mindy."

All the celebrities will pay their own travel expenses, and none will receive any pay, Ayers said, although motels in nearby Rome have agreed to provide free lodging and a radio station is sponsoring a dinner for the guests Friday evening.

Ayers said he was overwhelmed by the response. "It's captured the imagination of the country," he said.

But he said he doesn't believe all the excitement over the out-of-town visitors will overshadow the real meaning of the festival, which commemorates the 120th anniversary of Andrews' Raid, when Confederate soldiers recaptured a railroad engine named The General from a Union spy, James J. Andrews.

Andrews led 21 men through Confederate lines to Marietta, where they captured the engine and ran it northward. Ayers said the locomotive was delayed by southbound traffic at Kingston, and historians say the delay gave Confederate troops a chance to recapture The General.

"In all the frivolity, the meaning will remain there, because we remain very steadfast in our purpose," Ayers said. "The funds, if any are collected, will be earmarked for civic improvements and restoration of our two downtown business blocks."

Ayers said he's hopeful the Kingston festival has been put permanently on the map.

The day may come, he joked, when "to be famous, you've got to come to Kingston to be checked out."

Discord erupts over L.A. Philharmonic's desire to play in London

By JEFF BRADLEY

LONDON (AP) — Carlo Maria Giulini and the Los Angeles Philharmonic want to celebrate the 150th anniversary of Brahms' birth by performing a cycle of all his symphonies and concertos in London next year.

But a little-known rule restricts performances by visiting orchestras and has blocked the five-concert series, raising a note of trans-Atlantic discord which threatens London's musical reputation.

The Visiting Orchestras Consultative Association, which makes recommendations to the government, forbids touring orchestras to appear more than twice per tour at a major London concert hall.

"The Los Angeles Philharmonic is absolutely outraged," the orchestra's London agent, Jasper Parrott, told The Associated Press on Monday.

So is the American Federation of Musicians, which has told the British Musicians' Union there could be a ban on the London Symphony Orchestra's visit to Florida this July unless the L.A. Philharmonic is allowed to tour as planned.

The lack of harmony stems from the L.A. Philharmonic's plan to perform all four Brahms symphonies, his two piano concertos, violin concerto, double concerto and German Requiem at five concerts in London's Royal Festival Hall from May 31 through June 5, 1983.

It is a key part of a planned European tour including Paris, Vienna, Copenhagen and Florence.

Trouble surfaced when the Department of Employment refused to grant work permits for the L.A. Philharmonic.

"The object of the work permit scheme is to safeguard jobs in this country," said David Waddington, undersecretary of state for employment.

"London is the music capital of the world, we've got some absolutely fine orchestras, but there must be a limit to the amount of money which is available for spending on concerts.

"If you have an open-door policy, that must mean...less money to be spent at the box office for concerts staged by British orchestras," he said.

Parrott said he plans to meet Waddington this week to appeal the ban.

Thesaurus eliminates sexist words

By ROBERT GLASS

LONDON (AP) — A new edition of Roget's Thesaurus, the 130-year-old book of synonyms and antonyms, eliminates categories its editor says are sexist, biased, prejudiced, jaundiced, illiberal and narrow-minded.

"Mankind," becomes "humankind," a "countryman" is a "country dweller," and a "rich man" is a "rich person" in the first revision of the British reference book in two decades. Publication is Thursday.

"It reflects the language of the 80s," editor Susan Lloyd said Monday in a telephone interview from her combined home and office in the Norfolk town of Harleston.

"It makes much more explicit the existence of women. Before, they were just assumed."

Ms. Lloyd, a 41-year-old former librarian and teacher with a master's degree in French literature, is a homemaker and mother of two teen-agers. She spent 3½ years adding or reclassifying 20,000 words and phrases for the 1,247-page revised volume.

Ms. Lloyd said she did not attempt to eliminate all words that might be considered sexist, but rather changed keywords — the category headings — to make them "as wide-ranging and neutral as possible."

In addition to trying to eliminate sexist word groupings, she introduced scores of expressions that have gained currency in the past 20 years: anchorman, punks, solar panel, genetic engineering, test-tube baby, jumbo jet and multinationals, to name a few.

The revised volume also contains entries under the new headings of micro-electronics and data processing.

"Language undergoes enormous changes in 20 years," Ms. Lloyd said.

The Thesaurus has sold an estimated 20 million copies since it was first compiled by Dr. Peter Mark Roget, an English physician and lexicographer, and published in 1852 as the "Thesaurus of English Words and Phrases."

It classifies words according to ideas and can be used as a dictionary of likes and opposites or by those searching for a word they can't recall.

Under the keyword "drunkenness," for example, entries include "well-oiled, pickled, canned, bottled, stewed, fried, well-lubricated, smashed, sozzled and soaked."

The category is preceded by synonyms for sobriety: "water-drinker, teetotaler, abstainer, prohibitionist, pussyfoot."

Ms. Lloyd was hired by Longman publishers to edit the first revision since 1962 after answering an advertisement in the educational supplement of the London Times.

Although she had edited newsletters and other publications, it was her first attempt to edit a book. Ms. Lloyd said she sought "advice and help" from expert lexicographers but was given sole responsibility for the revision.

"Research has shown that if you say 'countryman,' people think of a man, not a woman. Hence, the change to 'country dweller' to include "men, women, dogs, what-have-you," she said.

Ms. Lloyd said she kept some masculine keywords, such as "master," because she could think of no suitable substitute. "'Mistress' has an entirely different meaning," she observed.

Asked whether some men might object to the changes, Ms. Lloyd said: "If men take offense, I suppose it's because they thought 'mankind' meant 'man' and not 'woman,' and that's the whole point."

Ms. Lloyd said she did not consider herself a feminist in the sense of someone active in the women's movement.

"I'm keen on women's rights and men's rights," she said. "I'm not making a statement. I'm just reflecting the changes in the languages."

The revised Roget's will sell in London for $14.30 or $21.50 for the deluxe edition.

Dallas unanimous choice for Republican convention

DALLAS (AP) — Republican Party representatives say they will use their third visit here to tour hotel facilities and talk to city officials as they plan the GOP's 1984 nominating convention.

GOP Chairman Richard Richards said Monday that members of the party's convention site selection committee unanimously preferred Dallas. But their recommendation must be ratified by the Republican National Committee when it meets in June.

Republican officials will remain in Dallas until Wednesday, when they plan to report to a meeting of the GOP executive committee here.

"We're not looking at any other cities," Richards told the Dallas County Republican Men's Club.

Richards also said committee members and White House officials selected the Dallas Convention Center as the site. He said GOP representatives were to talk to convention center officials about the selection.

Dallas Mayor Jack Evans said the city's choice was virtually assured.

"As far as I'm concerned and our city attorneys, we have our decision now," he said. "That's go."

If Dallas is chosen this year, it would be the earliest either party has made its convention choice.

"We want to button the thing up within 60 days," Richards said.

Evans said he does not forsee any problems in private contributors raising the estimated $5 million needed to host the convention without using taxpayers' money.

He said only minor "language differences" remain on the contract between the Republicans and city officials.

Percy to record book for blind woman

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Charles H. Percy will soon be sitting down in front of a tape recorder to read aloud Alexis de Tocqueville's 700-page masterpiece "Democracy in America" for a blind woman.

Before he is finished, the Illinois Republican plans to put the 140-year-old political science book onto cassettes for the use of Kathleen Brandt 24, of Kingsville, Md., and other blind people.

The recording sessions, beginning April 23, are sponsored by the New York-based Recording for the Blind Inc., a 31-year-old group that provides casettes of educational textbooks to 17,000 handicapped borrowers.

Percy, who has a hearing problem, has been thinking about becoming a volunteer reader for the program for some time, a staffer said. "I think the senator's own handicap makes him sensitive to other people's problems," another aide said.

Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was on an overseas trip and unavailable for comment.

Miss Brandt said she had heard parts of "Democracy in America" and wanted to listen to the whole thing. But she said she was stunned to learn one of the Senate's most powerful members would take on the reading task.

"I was surprised and very pleased," said the woman, who holds a degree in Russian and international relations from Goucher College outside Baltimore, Md. "He has done a very good job in the Foreign Relations Committee, and it's wonderful that someone of his stature would read for me and for others."

Miss Brandt said she was told Percy wanted to read "something that pertained to government." She added: "This would seem to be the perfect choice."

"Democracy in America" was de Tocqueville's 1840 report to jittery European aristocrats and businessmen on this country's experiment in what they saw as "radical" democracy. It is a classic that most serious students of American politics read.

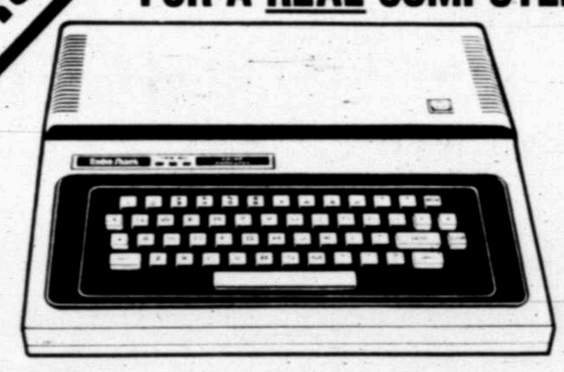

After Miss Brandt listens to the cassettes, they will be sent to other Recording for the Blind borrowers who request them, she said. Percy's recording sessions will be supervised by Harold Pfeffer, a retired attorney and Patent Office examiner.

Retired Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart last year made cassettes of a 255-page volume titled "The Rights of Aliens" at the request of a blind law student. He later was scheduled to make a recording of the 188-page New York penal code. Both were Recording for the Blind Inc. projects.

A Percy aide said that many years ago the senator made recordings for the Hadley School for the Blind in Winnetka, Ill.

Dodgers' run in 9th nips Cubs

SAN ANTONIO—For the third straight night San Antonio's Dodgers pushed over a run in the final inning to snatch a one-run victory from the Midland Cubs. The 5-4 win Monday night gave San Antonio a 4-0 edge in the season opening Texas League series with a final game tonight.

Midland relief pitcher Tom Smith came on in the sixth and retired 10 straight batters while Midland pushed over an eighth-inning run to tie it 4-4 and the teams seemed headed for extra innings again with one out in the ninth.

Dan Bellarda then singled to snap Smith's string. Smith then fanned San Antonio's Greg Smith, who delivered the winning blow in Sunday's 11-inning game, but German Rivera's bad bounce single over Dave Owen at short kept the threat alive and Lemmi Miller, who a year ago was playing for Arizona State University, hit Smith's first pitch for a game-winning single.

Midland scored twice in the first on an rbi single by Carlos Lezcano and an error. Tony Brewer's dented Tom Spino's left-handed service for an rbi single in the home first before Midland made it 3-1 in the second. This time it was a run-scoring single by Henry Cotto.

The Dodgers rallied for three runs in the second for a 4-3 lead with two runs scoring on errors by catcher Mike Diaz, first when his pick off to first was wild and another when he couldn't hold the relay back to the plate.

After the third, however, San Antonio didn't get another hit until the ninth.

Midland tied it in eighth on a Carmello Martinez single and had a chance to blow it open with only one out and the bases loaded. However, Brett Wise came out of the bullpen and with a leaping catch turned Larry Cox' liner up the middle into a double play.

After tonight's game, Midland returns home for its Texas League opener at 7 p.m. Wednesday against El Paso.

Diablos edge Sox

By The Associated Press

Mark Schuster got three hits in five plate appearances, including a home run, and drove in four runs as the El Paso Diablos edged the Amarillo Gold Sox, 11-10, in Texas League baseball action.

Other Texas League scores Monday night were Tulsa 8, Jackson 3; San Antonio 5, Midland 4, and Shreveport 5, Arkansas 4.

Al Lachowicz allowed only two hits and gave up one earned run to pick up his first Texas League victory as the Tulsa Drillers beat the Jackson Mets, 8-3.

Greg Baker doubled home the winning run in the eighth inning as the Shreveport Captains took a 5-4 victory over the Arkansas Travelers.

Torre suddenly bona fide genius

By WILL GRIMSLEY

ATLANTA (AP) — Among major league baseball managers, it's a short hop from "Who's Who" to "Who's He?" — and vice versa — and Joe Torre is enjoying the fruits of the return trip.

After five frustrating years with the anemic New York Mets, he now has the Atlanta Braves sizzling.

Overnight, the failure becomes a genius. It's the irony of the profession.

"We owe it all to the skipper — he's given us a winning attitude," says Brett Butler, the Braves' sensational rookie. "He's got us all playing our guts out."

"Torre has really turned this team around," adds the hard-hitting Dale Murphy, who is hitting balls out of the park.

Off to their fastest start in at least 52 years, the Braves have been playing the best ball in either league, sweeping through their first six games.

Baseball fever is boiling again in this land of "Gone With the Wind," and it's interesting that one of its stars is a rookie with a name similar to the rakish gun-runner Rhett Butler, played by Clark Gable in the movie of the Margaret Mitchell Civil War novel.

JUST COINCIDENCE. Brett's mom, we're told, never read the book or saw the movie.

Many of the thousands of fans who descended on Augusta, Ga., for the Masters golf tournament last weekend could hardly wait to get back to the hotel to catch the latest chapter in the exciting serial: "Joe Torre's Comeback."

A Braves star of the 1960s, Torre is finding it an exhilarating experience.

"It all started in spring training," Torre insists. "From the first day, our purpose was to put emphasis on attitude. We were going to get the work done but we were intent on playing every game to win.

"We had a good spring record — 18-7. What we did was carry this attitude and the momentum right into the regular season.

"Frankly, I am pleased with how it's all worked out."

Without much production from the team's top offensive threat, third baseman Bob Horner, the Braves nevertheless produced some airtight pitching and sparkling defensive play in their sweep over San Diego and Houston.

Rick Mahler pitched a two-hit shutout in the opening game and ran his goose-egg string to 18 Sunday when the Braves beat speedballer Nolan Ryan for their fifth straight victory. The score was 5-0.

BOB WALK and Tommy Boggs both had shutouts working until the late innings of the three games they started while reliever Larry Williams came to the rescue of rookie Steve Bedrosian in Saturday night's 8-6 triumph over the Astros.

"Our pitching staff was a question mark in spring training," Torre said. "With Phil Niekro injured, I had no idea what our starting rotation would be. But now it is jelling.

"And Niekro should be ready to pitch in 10 days."

Torre took over the reins of the New York Mets in 1977. With the front office disinclined to bolster the club through the free agent market, the team finished last his first three years, then fifth, finally fourth and fifth in the 1981 split season.

Although popular with players and the media, Torre got a reputation of being a "non-motivator."

AT ATLANTA, he took over a club that had been equally frustrated since winning the West Division of the National League in 1969, losing to the Mets' subsequent World Series champs.

Twelve years earlier, in 1957, as Milwaukee Braves, they started 5-0, which no other Braves team matched until this year, and went on to gain the World Series, beating the New York Yankees for the world championship.

"I hope this is a good sign," said Torre, who has now proven he can be a man of fire and inspiration. He has the Braves looking like a combination of the Pittsburgh "Fam-i-lee," with Willie Stargell, in 1979 and the swashbuckling St. Louis Gas House Gang of the 1930s.

They hit and run like crazy. They are bandits on the basepaths. They play with wild abandon and the zeal of college kids.

Oilers stay alive with 3-2 win over Kings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "We knew we had to win," Edmonton goalie Grant Fuhr said Monday night after the Oilers downed the Los Angeles Kings 3-2 to even their National Hockey League playoff series.

"Now we have to do it one more time."

The Smythe Division best-of-five semifinals, tied 2-2, returns to Edmonton Tuesday night for the deciding contest.

Pat Hughes and Glenn Anderson scored goals in the second period to snap a 1-1 tie and give Fuhr the cushion he needed in Game 4.

"It was a good game and Fuhr was the difference," said Kings' Coach Don Perry. "We lacked a little intensity, but the Oilers played well.

"It's going to be tough to beat them in their building."

Edmonton Coach Glen Sather said the Oilers must play their "style" and stay out of the penalty box if they're to win the series.

"We have to play like we did this game," he said. "The Kings tried to get us into penalties, but we haven't been that type of team all year. We've stressed staying out of fights."

Yanks pull a surprise

Reliever whiffs Ranger rally

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

As they have so many times in recent years, the New York Yankees turned to their bullpen to protect a lead and got a couple of much-needed strikeouts.

But — surprise! — it wasn't Rich Gossage. The Goose was unavailable Monday night, having worked an unaccustomed 31-3 innings Sunday in losing a 12-inning 7-6 decision to the Chicago White Sox.

So the Yankees turned to Shane Rawley, the other half of their 1-2 relief punch since the weekend deal that sent Ron Davis to Minnesota, and Rawley did a job that would have made Gossage proud.

Starter Dave Righetti and relievers Rudy May and John Pacella were seemingly trying to squander a 10-1 lead. The Texas Rangers scored four times in the eighth inning and twice in the ninth and had two long-ball threats waiting in the wings in pinch-hitters Leon Roberts and Bobby Johnson, both representing the potential tying run.

Rawley punched them both out to preserve the Yankees' first victory of the season, a 10-7 triumph that spoiled the Rangers' home opener.

In the only other American League games, the unbeaten Chicago White Sox made it three in a row by edging the Boston Red Sox 3-2 and the Toronto Blue Jays whipped the Detroit Tigers 9-5.

"In Seattle, it was good to win, but here, you're expected to win," said Rawley, who was acquired from the Mariners less than two weeks ago. "A win here goes to a better cause than it did over there."

He said he struck out Roberts and Johnson on fast balls.

"I mixed in a couple of sliders, but it was mostly fast balls," he said. "I was hoping I wouldn't have to go in, that one of them (the other relievers) would get them out, but I told them I would be ready if they needed me."

The Yankees chased Frank Tanana, making his Ranger debut after signing as a free agent, in 3 2-3 innings. They scored four runs in the second inning on singles by Lou Piniella, Graig Nettles and Rick Cerone, plus Randolph's homer.

Jerry Mumphrey delivered a two-run single in the fourth and Winfield clubbed his second home run of the season in the fifth off Jon Matlack.

A single by Piniella and a double by Watson gave the Yankees a run in the seventh and they got two more in the eighth on a single by Mumphrey, a two-base muff by right fielder Larry Parrish and Piniella's RBI double.

White Sox 3, Red Sox 2

The White Sox spoiled Boston's home opener, breaking a scoreless duel in the sixth when Kemp doubled, Tom Paciorek singled him home and scored on a double by Carlton Fisk. Carl Yastrzemski hit his 428th career homer for Boston, but the White Sox scored what proved to be the winning run in the seventh on an infield hit by Bill Almon, a forceout by Ron LeFlore, who stole second and came home on Tony Bernazard's double.

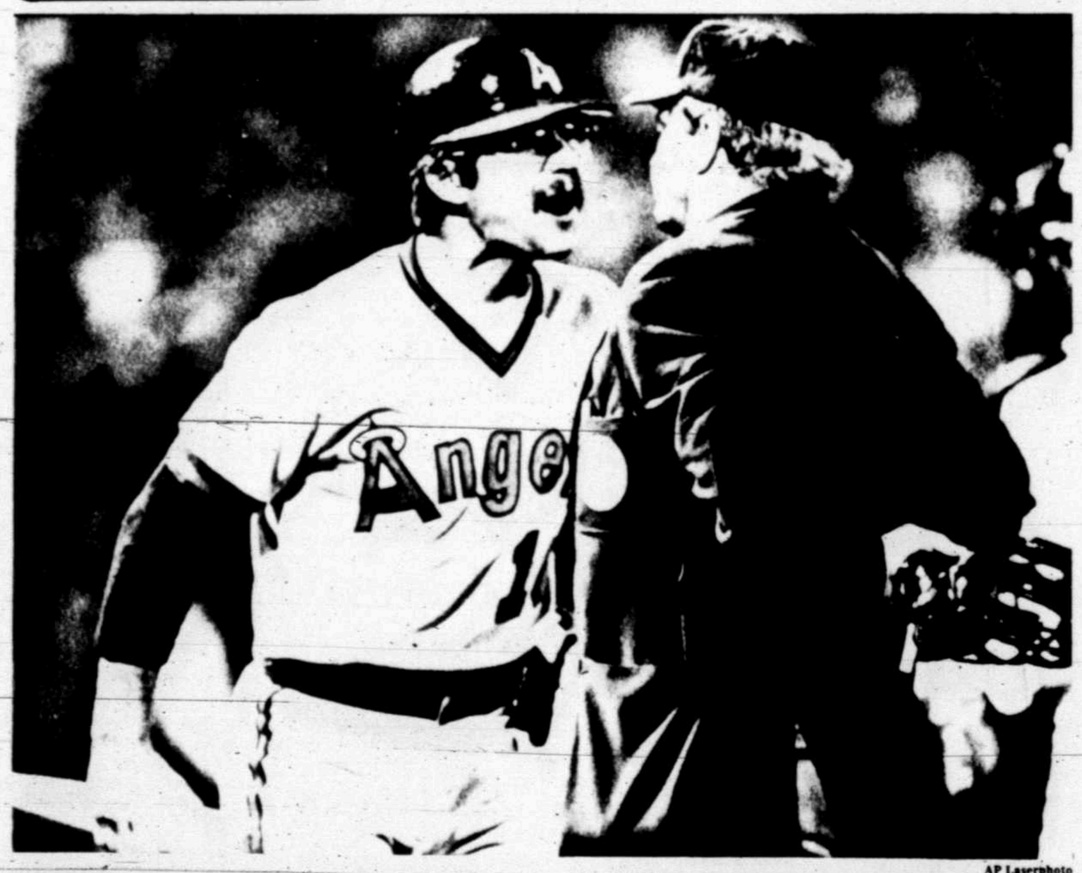

"I was more than just a little worried in the ninth," said Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa, who had to go to his bullpen twice in the inning to protect the lead.

"It's tough to sweat in this weather (50 degrees), but I sure did. Winning the first three games does build confidence, but we really haven't accomplished that much. The games we won could have gone either way."

Blue Jays 9, Tigers 5

Damaso Garcia drove in three runs, Luis Leal scattered seven hits in 7 2-3 innings and the Blue Jays erupted for five runs in the fourth. Garcia singled a run home in the second to give Toronto a 1-0 lead. The Tigers went ahead 2-1 in the third, but the Blue Jays chased Milt Wilcox in the fourth.

Garcia singled home the tying and lead runs, pinch-hitter Garth Iorg doubled another run across and Barry Bonnell's two-run pinch double capped the uprising. The Blue Jays increased the margin to 8-2 in the sixth on a walk, Iorg's triple and a single by Alfredo Griffin. Willie Upshaw homered in the seventh.

Penguins invade island in NHL comeback attempt

By BARRY WILNER

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — When last seen at Nassau Coliseum, the Pittsburgh Penguins were hurrying off the ice after their second consecutive embarrassment at the hands of the New York Islanders.

When the Penguins take to the Coliseum ice tonight, it will be without the slightest touch of humiliation as they seek to complete one of the more remarkable comebacks in National Hockey League playoff history.

After falling 8-1 and 7-2 to the two-time Stanley Cup champions, the Penguins seemed ripe for a sweep as the best-of-five Patrick Division opening round moved to Pittsburgh. But after taking a 2-1 overtime decision Saturday and a convincing 5-2 triumph Sunday the Penguins are primed for an upset.

"We have to go up there and play a tight game, not make any mistakes," said Penguins goaltender Michel Dion, who was superb in the weekend games in Pittsburgh. "We must take the body and hit them as much as we can. We know that when we don't take the body and interfere with them as much as we can, the scores are 8-1 and 7-2 against us."

But can they really expect to beat the Islanders, the team with the best record in the NHL this season, three straight games?

"Why not beat them three in a row?" said Dion. "We're on a roll now. Let's go!"

Dion is one of the main reasons they are on that roll. He made 38 saves Saturday and 24 — including several key stops after the Islanders began to take charge at the outset of the third period — on Sunday. Dion appears to have recaptured the form that made him an All-Star this season but which he rarely flashed against New York.

Intense Celtics-76ers rivalry has few equals in pro sports

An AP Sports Analysis
By WILLIAM R. BARNARD

The Boston Celtics-Philadelphia 76ers rivalry has few equals in professional sports.

The teams play each other with unbounded skill and intensity, and time and again the outcome isn't decided until the final minutes.

"Every game we have with Philadelphia is important, even if it has no meaning in the standings," says Boston Coach Bill Fitch. "We have a great deal of respect for one another, and in the last three years, this has been the best rivalry in pro sports."

Sunday's game, won by the Celtics by one point in overtime, was typical. The issue wasn't decided until a last-second shot by the 76ers missed, giving Boston a 4-2 edge for the year.

IN EACH of the previous two seasons, during which the two teams won 74 percent of their games, they split their regular-season series 3-3. They also split two playoff series.

The 76ers defeated the Celtics 4-1 in the Eastern Conference finals in 1980 and ultimately lost the NBA championship to Los Angeles in six games. Last year, Boston overcame a 3-1 deficit in the playoffs against the 76ers with three straight come-from-behind victories and went on to win its 14th league title.

Each regular-season game is played with playoff-level intensity, featuring each team's superstar forward, Boston's Larry Bird and Philadelphia's Julius Erving.

"I try to ignore it, I try to play every other game as if the Boston Celtics don't exist, but it won't go away," says Erving. "It's a remarkable thing. Not many of us will admit it, but the Celtics are always somewhere in the back of our minds."

"Julius is a great player and our games are always a little special," Bird says. "But I have to approach him like any other opponent. I have to play my game, and try to stop his."

THIS SEASON, the Celtics won three of the first four games with Philadelphia, and it appeared they might on the verge of tipping the balance of power in their favor.

The Celtics had an 18-game winning streak when they took the floor of Boston Garden March 28, but the 76ers broke the streak, the third-longest in NBA history, with a runaway victory.

"They didn't beat us because we were ahead in the standings and thought the game wasn't important, because we didn't feel that way," said Fitch. "They just went out and beat us."

Fitch said it's unfair to analyze a team off its performance against just one other team.

"When two great teams play each other, one can make the other look very bad," he said. "It's deceiving."

ONE NEGATIVE aspect of the Celtics-76ers rivalry is the contrast in support each team gets in its home city.

The 76ers rarely sell out at the Spectrum except for Boston games, while the Celtics always fill Boston Garden and are the darlings of the local media.

"When the Celtics talk about changing the 12th man on their roster, it's the biggest sports news in the city," said Bob Ryan, basketball writer for the Boston Globe.

Boston forward Rick Robey said the Celtics' support could be a deciding factor.

"It's just a shame they don't get the support they deserve," Robey said. "They might just get the extra edge they needed if they felt the community support we have."

RED HOLZMAN, who many believe will be asked to step aside as New York Knicks coach and perhaps become the team's general manager, at age 60 is still one of the brightest basketball strategists in the business, according to Fitch.

"Red Holzman is a fox," Fitch says. "I don't usually worry about the other team's strategy, but when you coach against Holzman, it's like having your pocket picked. He's a man of quality who has stood the test of time."

Sutter dazzles Bucs with new fastball

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Former Midland Cub pitcher Bruce Sutter has been tough enough for National League batters with his "split-fingered fastball." Now he's added something to his repertoire.

"It just makes the other pitch that much better," says the St. Louis Cardinals' reliever in reference to his current reliance on the plain, old-fashioned fastball.

Going to his fastball more often than usual Monday, the bearded right-hander pitched two strong innings in relief to nail down the Cardinals' 5-4 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I threw more fastballs than I did any time in my career," said Sutter, whose deliveries usually consist exclusively of split-fingered fastballs, a twisty fork ball which drops. "It seemed like a lot of guys were taking pitches."

ACTUALLY, SUTTER said, an alteration in his pitching style had been in the process long before preparation for the 1982 campaign.

"I've been around this league for six years," he said. "Everybody knows where the ball starts with the split-fingered fastball. It (the regular fastball) makes me much tougher."

Sutter said he was satisfied with his two-inning stint which was marred only by Tony Pena's triple in the eighth. The hit by the Pittsburgh catcher came with one out. Sutter responded by mowing down mountainous Dave Parker on a swinging third strike and afterward retired the Pirates' last four batters.

George Hendrick's two solo homers, two RBI singles by Keith Hernandez and a two-base error by Pittsburgh shortstop Dale Berra gave the Cardinals the lead before Sutter arrived.

"He's money in our bank," Hernandez said of Sutter following the relief star's first save of the season. "I'm never worried about Bruce Sutter. He knows what he's doing."

Braves 6, Reds 1

Bob Horner and Chris Chambliss smashed solo homers and Bob Walk and Rick Camp combined on a four-hitter to lead undefeated Atlanta over Cincinnati for the Braves' sixth straight victory.

The Braves' fast start topped the five opening wins by the world champion Milwaukee Braves of 1957, previously the best start of a Braves' team since records were kept in 1930. They had won no more than four opening games since moving to Atlanta in 1966.

Walk, 2-0, pitched shutout ball until the eighth inning, when the Reds scored their run on an RBI triple by Dave Concepcion. Camp came on at this point and nailed down the game for Atlanta. Walk helped his cause with an RBI single in the seventh.

"We've been able to cut down on our walks and make people hit the ball," Walk said. "And we're doing well."

Astros 2, Dodgers 1

Phil Garner's 11th-inning single scored Jose Cruz from third base with the winning run as Houston beat Los Angeles.

Cruz opened the 11th with a popup to short center field off losing pitcher Dave Stewart, 0-1. The ball fell in for a double between shortstop Mark Belanger and center fielder Ken Landreaux. Intentional walks to Denny Walling and Alan Ashby sandwiched around Dickie Thon's sacrifice bunt loaded the bases with one out. Stewart struck out Kiko Garcia before Garner rapped his third hit of the game.

Mike LaCoss, 1-0, earned his first victory since joining the Astros. LaCoss allowed one hit and struck out one in the 11th.

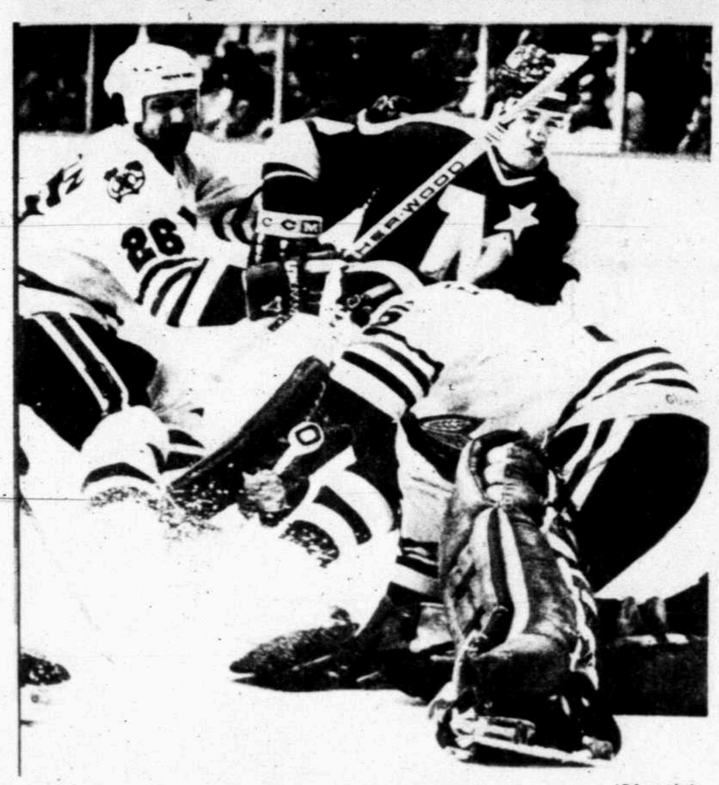

The Dodgers took a 1-0 lead in the fifth on Steve Sax's RBI single. The Astros tied the score in the eighth on a throwing error by Sax at second base that allowed a run to score.

Cubs 5, Mets 4

Keith Moreland drove in two runs with a homer and a single to lead Chicago over New York. Moreland delivered one of five singles in a four-run fourth inning and hit his third homer of the season in the sixth for what proved to be the winning run.

Chicago starter Dickie Noles was the winner, but needed help in the seventh from Bill Campbell. The loss went to Mets starter Craig Swan.

"I'm not a home-run hitter. I like to use the whole ball park and if I hit a few home runs that's fine," said Moreland. "I can drive in runs, I drove in over a hundred one year in the minor leagues. If I make contact and play all year I should be able to hit 20 home runs but I still wouldn't consider myself a home-run hitter."

ACU's Billy Olsen named T&F Athelete of the Year

BASEBALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Atlanta Braves' right-hander Rick Mahler, who pitched consequtive shutouts in his first two starts, was named National League player of the week.

Mahler blanked San Diego 1-0 on April 6 and Houston 5-0 on April 11. He struck out 12, wallked four and allowed just seven hits in the two games.

BASKETBALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Reserve guard Billy Ray Bates, who sparked the Portland Trail Blazers to four victories last week, was named National Basketball Association Player of the Week.

Bates scored 24 points on 11-of-13 field goal attempts in a 136-122 victory over Denver. He collected 16 points in 23 minutes, including the game-winning dunk with two seconds left, in a 106-104 triumph over Phoenix.

Bates notched a 22-point performance in 27 minutes as Portland beat San Diego 124-104, and he capped his week by scoring eight of the Trail Blazers' 14 overtime points in a 116-106 victory over Golden State.

TENNIS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mel Purcell and Tim Gullikson won first-round matches in the $200,000 Pacific Southwest Tennis Open at the Los Angeles Tennis Club.

TRACK AND FIELD

LOS ALTOS, Calif. — Pole vaulter Billy Olson and distance runner Mary Decker Tabb have been named Indoor Athletes of the Year for the 1982 season by Track and Field News.

Olson, of Abilene Christian University, raised the indoor best in the pole vault five times during the season. His top leap was 18 feet, 10 inches at the NAIA Championships in Kansas City.

Decker Tabb broke the women's indoor mile best three times, her fastest a clocking of 4 minutes, 20.5 seconds at the Jack-In-The-Box meet in San Diego.

NFL bargaining heats up

NFLPA warns NFL not to trade away their player reps

NEW YORK (AP) — National Football League club owners have been warned by the Players Association that there can be no new collective bargaining agreement if teams trade away their player representatives.

Put before the NFL Management Council, the owners' negotiators, Monday was an ultimatum: Halt the trading of player representatives and permit those already traded to return to their former teams, if they so desire.

"For our union to get this bargaining agreement," says Detroit Lions linebacker Stan White, a member of the NFLPA's executive committee, "the union has to be intact. They (the NFL) can't cut off our heads."

White said he made that clear at the start of the third bargaining session, which dealt with grievance procedures.

Speaking at a news briefing after the session, White specifically referred to the recent trade of linebacker Dewey Selmon, Tampa Bay's player representative, by the Buccaneers to the San Diego Chargers.

"There will be no agreement until he is returned to Tampa Bay, if he so desires," White said. He also said the Bucs had told the team's alternate player representative, safety Mark Cotney, that "he's about to be traded ... that he should try to make the best deal for himself he can." White said he couldn't be specific about which team official had told that to Cotney.

White also pointed out that the New York Jets had lost their player representative, running back Clark Gaines, when he was claimed by Kansas City after New York tried to reactivate him late last season.

Meanwhile, Ed Garvey, the union's executive director, said there was no progress in the talks aimed at agreement to replace the current contract which expires July 15. He again charged the Management Council with giving "no indication that it had any intention of bargaining in good faith," and insisted that the owners themselves join the talks.

Jack Donlan, executive director of the management unit and the owners' chief negotiator, said the union had proposed lumping player-vs.-club injury and non-injury grievances together under the same procedure.

But Garvey said that with the introduction of a salary plan based on a fixed percentage of the teams' gross revenues — the center of the union's demands for a new contract — there would be no such thing as a player vs. a club in injury grievances. He said, rather, that it would be "a player vs. the fund."

Garvey also said that last Thursday the National Labor Relations Board had ordered the Management Council to turn over to the union all forms of contracts — individual player contracts, television contracts and others — and that the owners' group had failed to cooperate.

Another session was scheduled for today.

Dempsey's illness remains a mystery

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack Dempsey, one of boxing's all-time great heavyweight champions, was in stable condition early today at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, according to a hospital spokesman.

Dempsey, 86, who was hospitalized Sunday, had been listed as critical Monday night.

Hospital spokesmen, apparently at the request of Dempsey's family, were reluctant Monday night to elaborate on the former champion's illness.

Dempsey, known as the "Manassa Mauler," fought several memorable fights. He won the heavyweight title July 4, 1919 when he knocked down 6-foot-6¼ Jess Willard seven times in the first round and stopped him after three rounds.

In a defense against Luis Firpo of Argentina, "The Wild Bull of the Pampas," on Sept 14, 1923, he was knocked out of the ring in the first round, then knocked out Firpo in the second.

His most famous fight was the "Battle of the Long Count" Sept. 27, 1927 in a rematch with Gene Tunney, who had taken away his title.

Phelps' charges jar college athletics

An AP Sports Analysis
By HAL BOCK

When Digger Phelps suggested that there might be some hanky panky going on in the high pressure world of college recruiting these days, it shook some of his colleagues right down to their gym socks.

Good, says Allen Sack, director of the Center for Athletes Rights and Education. The holier-than-thou world of the college sports needs to be shaken every so often out of its lethargy toward its most important commodity — the athletes.

Sack, who played defensive end on Notre Dame's 1966 national championship football team, is a professor of sociology at the University of New Haven on a leave of absence to work for the federally-funded athletes' rights organization. He wonders whether the abuses Phelps talked about are only the tip of a dangerous iceberg.

"FROM MY experience as someone close to college athletics for 20 years, I know that what Digger said is correct," Sack said. "There is widespread money given to athletes."

And the situation is nothing new, either. It was there before television networks were paying millions for broadcasting rights and coaches were being lured from one school to another by big money contracts, at a time when the drive to win was not nearly as compelling as it has become today. What worries Sack is that the athletes will get swallowed up in this morass.

"All too often, athletes are totally ignorant of what they are getting into," Sack said. "Athletic scholarships (the NCAA limit is tuition, books, room and board) should include employee benefits, because athletes are employees as well as students. In terms of their responsibilities, athletes are workers. In terms of their rights, they are amateurs."

Sack sees an inconsistency in that situation and his organization has called for a congressional investigation of the entire college sports situation in America.

"THE PROBLEM is, college athletics are pro sports with an amateur label. As we see it, there are two solutions. The first is to go back to a situation where there are no scholarships based on athletic ability. Use Ivy League or Division Three standards. That's unrealistic, of course, because of the levels college sports have reached. People love it. I love it. It's high calibre sports and America demands it.

"The second solution is to recognize openly that big-time college athletes are employees and students at the same time. We've suggested establishing a trust fund for athletes with 15 percent of the revenues of college sports going into it."

Sack's argument is that there are contradictory pressures on an athlete that are not-consistent with the demands of the classroom.

"A college football player in a bigtime school puts in as much time and effort as a player for the Philadelphia Eagles," he said. "And he is expected to carry at least 12 academic credits, too. It's an impossible demand."

THE RESULT, said Sack, is a situation where the student-athlete does not get what he contracts for — a total education.

"I didn't have the opportunity to share in all of the educational experiences available at Notre Dame," he said. "I understand that my compensation (for the time invested in athletics) was having my education paid for. But my scholarship didn't say 'as much education as is available under the circumstances.' Education is not just making it to snap courses to get by. It's going to lectures at night. It's being part of the sociology club. It's having time to go on field trips, to experience the total package. Athletes can't do that."

The solution, said Sack, is to redefine the amateur label.

"Coach Phelps was courageous to say what he did. But we should take advantage of it to go to the root of the problem and take action to rectify it, or else we're just on a witch hunt. Until we bring integrity into college sports, the fraud will continue and the under-the-table payments will continue."

If that happens, we've failed the athletes and they are the people who will suffer.

Angel fans hold verdict on Jackson

Yankee fans chant 'Reggie'

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON

Baseball has become a game of change — changing loyalties, changing teams and changing fans.

Witness:

Fans of the one-base-at-a-time New York Yankees already have begun to bemoan the loss of their favorite hero and-or villain, Reggie Jackson, who went to the California Angels as a free agent.

At the Yankees' home opener Sunday, a doubleheader loss to the Chicago White Sox, cheers of "Reggie, Reggie, Reggie" started in the stands. It mattered little that Dave Winfield, the Yankees' $21 million man, homered in his first game of the season after hitting only 13 last year. It was an opposite-field fly ball that barely made it into the right field seats. Hardly the type of clout Yankee fans are used to.

When Yankees owner George Steinbrenner traded power for speed, he also traded thrills for yawns. Going back to the days of Babe Ruth, and into the era of Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris, the Yankees and their fans have thrived on the long ball. Even when the Yanks trailed, the bleacher bums knew one swing of Reggie's bat could bail them out.

STEINBRENNER was uncharacteristically silent after the Yankees' two losses, but if there is one guarantee in baseball these days, it's that George's jaws will start flapping soon if the Yankees don't start winning.

The announced attendance for the Yankees home opener, delayed five days by a snowstorm, was 31,008, far short of the capacity of 57,545. Undoubtedly, some of those thousands who elected to stay home were waiting for New York's new bomb squad to open today at Shea Stadium, where George Foster and Dave Kingman were swinging away for the Mets.

Meanwhile, Jackson is off to an horrendous start for the Angels. In his first five games, Jackson hit .166 with four singles in 24 at-bats, one RBI and no extra base hits. He has been received with ambivalence by California fans, who have become accustomed to nonproductive superstars.

The word is out. Make these high-priced, fickle ballplayers earn their plaudits. No one realizes that better than Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodges, the Mexican left-hander who won the National League Cy Young award last year. In his first start of the season, Valenzuela was greeted with boos. The fans that made him the toast of Los Angeles last season felt cheated that he had held the Dodgers up for more money.

NORMALLY, A Cy Young winner is due all he can get from his club, but Valenzuela's situation was a little different. He won the Cy Young under somewhat dubious conditions during a rookie season that was shortened more than 50 days by a players' strike. He may have been onlythe second best pitcher in the National League. He finished with a record not as good as Cincinnati's Tom Seaver. Valenzuela was 13-7 to Seaver's 14-2 — the best record in the league — and Seaver's ERA of 2.55 was only .07 higher than Valenzuela's 2.48.

Major league owners learned the pitfalls of offering huge contracts to rookie pitchers in 1976. In that year, Mark "The Bird" Fidrych won 19 games as a rookie right-hander for the Detroit Tigers, then sustained a shoulder injury that ruined his career.

No pitcher is worth a million dollars at least until he has survived the sophomore jinx.

Fidrych has tried unsuccessfully several times to reclaim his career. With pitchers, it seldom works. Once they are through, practically nothing can save them. Vida Blue, newly acquired by the Kansas City Royals, may be one of the exceptions.

BLUE ALREADY has come back from serious arm trouble once in his career, successfully making the switch from the Oakland A's to the San Francisco Giants. Last year, however, the 32-year-old left-hander had an 8-6 record, despite a 2.45 ERA, and the Giants cut him loose after he was able to complete just one game. The Giants may have written him off too early.

On Sunday, in his first American League start since 1977, Blue pitched a complete game, a five-hitter as the Royals were losing 2-1 to Detroit. Unfortunately for Blue, four of the hits were doubles and the fifth was a George Brett homer.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, April 14, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Julie Christie was born on this date in Chukur, Assam, India. Also celebrating this birthday with you: country singer Loretta Lynn and actors John Gielgud and Rod Steiger. Business improves and your income increases when you welcome certain new technology. At work, you face less opposition when you emphasize the need for cooperation and teamwork. Do not be surprised if one romance ends, only to be quickly replaced by another. A personal relationship has been growing less rewarding for some time. Curb your participation in outside activities if mate or offspring feel neglected. Family life deserves top priority.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Job pressures must end before they cause domestic strife. Mate is understanding, but you sometimes expect too much from your relationship. Keep sporting bets within reason.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A small courtesy brings you and your loved ones many new opportunities. Change career directions and you will all be much happier. A large check could arrive in the near future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): How you look has a lot to do with your ability to get a job. If overweight, get your doctor's advice on diet and exercise. Romance is in a holding pattern.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You enjoy being in the driver's seat at work. Do your homework faithfully, however. Hasty decisions could prove disastrous. Keep your eyes open for special offers from abroad.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep your personal relationships and money in separate compartments. Romance looks brighter than in the past. You receive a special favor from a difficult individual.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friends could have a negative influence on your decisions today. Keep your distance. You and your children are in harmony now. Some news about an old friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Welcome a rare opportunity to get to know someone influential. Do not let another person's fears get you down. Seek the companionship of those who share your interests.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good day for planning your next financial moves. People at place of employment have little interest in your personal affairs. Concentrate on work!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take your time when making important choices. Deliberate more before deciding on career move. Loved ones will show greater understanding if you explain your state of mind.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Loved ones share a secret! Whether you work at home or in an office, use your time constructively. Consult experts who can show you how to market your ideas.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A self-improvement project will lift your spirits. Seek advice regarding financial matters. Romance will be pleasant but not too exciting. Nonetheless, you enjoy yourself!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Get your affairs in better order. A tip passed along by a friend could prove unreliable. Check the facts before investing money.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 NT	2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♣.

Our good friend Pierre Schemeil, captain of the French world champion team, has come up with some interesting hands. If you want to test your declarer skill, cover up the East and West hands with your thumbs and decide how you would play four spades after a club lead.

East's opening no trump bid showed 15-17 points. North's raise to game is a trifle aggressive, but it does give you the opportunity to show your ability.

Obviously, the contract hinges on not losing a heart trick. Since East is the no trump bidder, it looks as if we should play him for the queen of hearts. But before committing ourselves, let's see what we can find out about the holdings.

First, play the king of clubs from dummy at trick one. East wins the ace and continues with the queen of clubs. You ruff and lead the queen of spades. East wins the king and you can now virtually claim the contract. Whom do you intend playing for the queen of hearts, and why?

Since East cannot have a singleton spade, he must have started with the ace-king, so that's seven points. From the opening lead and play to the first two tricks, East has seven points in clubs, bringing his total to 14. And he must have a high diamond because West would surely have led the king of diamonds if he held the king-queen. Thus, East is marked with 16 or 17 points in spades, diamonds and clubs. Therefore, he cannot hold the queen of hearts as well.

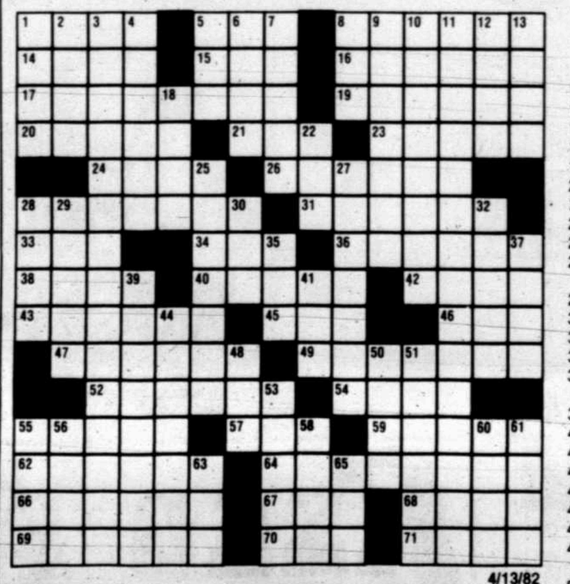

If you are a "hot-dogger," you can now announce that you are playing West for the queen of hearts and table your cards. Your audience will be suitably impressed. Or, if you enjoy rubbing it in to the opposition, you can play the hand very slowly, displaying great signs of mental anguish with each card you play. Either way, your contract is a lock, simply because you have the ability to add to 17.

Have you been running into double trouble? Let Charles Goren help you fnd your way through the maze of DOUBLES for penalties and for takeout. EXPLORATORY WELLS

ANDREWS COUNTY

Quanah Petroleum Inc., Dallas, will drill the No. 4 R Ward, 16 miles northwest of Frankel City.

It is 610 feet from the west, and 3,306 feet from the north line of section 5, block A-29, Public School Lands survey.

CRANE COUNTY

Amber Energy Inc., Midland, will attempt to complete a third well to the Edwards (Devonian, South) field, 15 miles north of Crane.

The No. 1 M.K. Carter Trust will be drilled to 10,500 feet.

Oil swap investigation begins

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A subcommittee of the U.S. House of Representatives sent two investigators to Louisiana Monday to check unconfirmed allegations that bargeloads of "slop oil" were substituted for good crude before being pumped into the federal Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

The alleged switch supposedly was made before the oil was pumped into the underground storage caverns at Bayou Choctaw, an SPR facility near Baton Rouge.

The investigation was ordered by Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., chairman of the House Government Operations energy subcommittee.

The investigators were expected to be in the New Orleans and Baton Rouge areas a week or more, but had not checked in by late Monday with Curt Johnson, project manager for the multi-billion dollar SPR.

Energy Secretary James Edwards said the only SPR crude delivered by barge to Louisiana was nine million barrels received at Bayou Choctaw during the early operations of the oil storage program.

Edwards said he expected to find some cheating, but merely a relatively insigificant amount in comparison to the overall picture.

Secretary Edwards said he considers the alleged infractions a relatively minor problem, considering the fact that the five SPR storage facilities now hold 250 million barrels of oil.

A lawyer for the subcommittee, who asked not to be identified, told reporters last week that Moffett instructed the investigators to get a general idea of the seriousness of fraud and waste accusations against the SPR.

The subcommittee counsel said the investigation in Louisiana will be conducted quietly.

The crude is inside huge caverns scoured out inside underground mountains of pure salt along the Gulf Coast — four of them in Louisiana, one in Texas.

A General Accounting Office report said there were allegations that SPR contractors used luxury cars at government expense, and that the project lacked adequate property control procedures for keeping track of government property, some of which has disappeared.

Deckard swallows his pride, invites Watt to host fund raiser

By DALE RUSSAKOFF
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Rep. H. Joel Deckard, R-Ind., has a common problem: he needs money to fight a strong Democratic challenger. So Deckard recently swallowed some of his conservationist image and did what many other Republicans in a pinch are doing these days. He invited Interior Secretary James G. Watt to host a fund-raiser for Deckard.

Watt's appearance at a $500-a-plate luncheon in downtown Evansville, Ind., April 5 brought a quick fix of $20,000 to Deckard's campaign kitty — much of it from wealthy mining and oil-industry executives who warm to Watt's pro-development policies, according to a Deckard aide.

But it may also have brought Deckard some trouble. "This could be like shooting himself in the foot," said Marion Edey, director of the League of Conservation Voters. The league, considered the nation's most potent environmentalist political-action committee, may now decide not to support Deckard for re-election, Edey said.

What happened to Deckard reflects the mixed political blessing that Watt has brought to the Republicans. Thanks to his controversial policies and sharp tongue, he is, according to national Democratic pollsters, "the most hated man in America." Yet he remains the most sought-after GOP fund-raiser except for President Reagan and Vice President Bush.

Watt returned Saturday from a two-week, cross-country swing in which, Republican sources estimate, he raised more than $750,000 for GOP groups and incumbents — leaving record crowds and protesting conservationists in his wake.

"Watt is a magnet. And like all magnets, he repels as well as attracts," said Douglas Baldwin, the secretary's trusted spokesman and longtime friend.

That magnet will be used selectively, but extensively, by the GOP and the White House in the hinterlands throughout this election year — most often in the West. Watt is now scheduled to spend almost half of the rest of 1982 outside of Washington stumping for GOP incumbents, in between official business trips, Baldwin said.

One reason for Watt's heavy campaign schedule, despite his high negative ratings, is a shortage of politicians in the Reagan Cabinet. Other than Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, whose duties keep them close to Washington, Watt and Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis are virtually alone as stump speakers. And Watt prides himself as "the most devout Reaganite" in the Cabinet, aides said.

Another reason he is in demand is that he delivers — a factor that even some moderate Republicans feel they cannot ignore. As Deckard's campaign treasurer, Charles Givens, explained, "When you're trying to raise $350,000 against a three-term incumbent mayor (Bloomington's Frank McCloskey), when after redistricting you wind up representing a district with 20 percent new voters, and you have to get your message out, you do what you can to raise money, short of anything illegal or immoral."

Watt dismisses criticism that his heavy political schedule interferes with his official duties, for which he is paid $69,630 a year. "The political hat is one of many hats that Watt validly wears as a presidential appointee and a Cabinet officer," Baldwin said.

In his last two weeks on the road Watt has most often worn a 10-gallon cowboy hat, styling himself as a Westerner taking on the Eastern establishment. "We are fighting those who have had privileged access to positions of power," he told one group.

He portrays his policies as part of "the Reagan revolution" against liberals and Democrats, citing his drives to open public lands to mineral, oil and gas exploration, to relax strip-mining regulations, to lease vast portions of the outer continental shelf for energy development. He apparently has refrained from statements as vituperative as some he made in the past — such as drawing distinctions between liberals and Americans.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Keep information about house for new owners

DEAR HELOISE:

When purchasing a home, my pet peeve is that the previous owners do not leave appropriate guarantees, warranties, maintenance manuals, and other pertinent information on such things as furnaces, water heaters, flooring and appliances.

Having moved seven times in 10 years, I keep a folder on house information for the next owners or renters.

That way, they have what they need to insure the proper care and maintenance of the things they now own.

I wish there was a law requiring homeowners to keep pertinent information on things sold with the home. After all, the water heater you installed may go out on the new owner, yet still be under warranty. He'd never know.

Same goes with carpeting and linoleum. They need to know the type (brand name), as well as how to care for it. Maintenance instructions are invaluable when that dishwasher or stove goes out.

We're doing a lot for ourselves these days and, if we have the proper manuals and parts lists, life can be a lot easier, and perhaps a lot less expensive. — Candi Drimmer

+++

Amen to that! Find a handy and secure place for such information, and KEEP IT THERE for quick reference.

If selling, leave it behind for the next grateful inhabitant. — Heloise

PACKING TIP

Dear Heloise: Ever arrive on a trip to find all your carefully packed neck scarves wadded in the bottom of your suitcase?

Next time, when packing, fold them carefully and place them between the sheets of a thin magazine.

This takes very little space in your luggage, but ties and ribbons, as well as scarves, arrive ready to wear. — Lucille Schutte

BREAD RISIN'

Dear Heloise: Add one teaspoon of ginger to every eight cups of flour in yeast breads. It is food for the yeast and enables it to rise faster on a cool day.

No flavor of the ginger is left in the baked bread. — Isabelle Boos

STICKER BUSINESS

Dear Heloise: Have a stamp that's lost its glue? I've always got stamps of animals, birds, etc., that come in the mail from a nature club (trading stamps could serve the same purpose).

If I need a little glue on the stamp (and have no other source), I just moisten one of the nature stamps and rub the postage stamp across it, transferring enough of the glue to allow the stamp to adhere to the envelope.

Glue from envelope flaps and packaging tape are good sources too. — Magdalen Bonewitz

LONGER LASTING

Dear Heloise: Instead of rolling your sleeves up before beginning a job, try rolling them under instead.

It's quicker and they stay put better and don't get in your way as much. — Anita Terwilleger

+++

Well, seeing is believing but, you know, this tip does work. Lasted all day for me. And I'm the worst for getting frustrated when, after I roll up my sleeves and get my hands good and soapy, here the sleeves come down again... no more! — Heloise

THAT TIME AGAIN!!

Dear Heloise: Have you bought a new mulching lawnmower yet? Well, don't!

You can do just as good a job with your old power mower.

Instead of pushing the mower in the usual counterclockwise direction, push it clockwise. The cut grass will naturally blow over the uncut grass and, as you make the next round, you will mulch the previous round's clippings.

Continue until all the grass is cut and mulched in the middle.

I haven't had to rake my yard in 20 years because of doing it this way. — Rudy Day

Send your favorite sew-easy tip to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she will feature the best sewing shortcuts received in her column.

DEAR ABBY

Great-grandfather is still ladies' man

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Harold (not his real name) and I will celebrate our 57th anniversary in August. I am 78 and Harold is 81. He was quite a stepper (ladies' man) in the early years of our marriage, but I was patient and understanding, and with God's help he settled down and became a good husband and a model father. We have five grown children, 17 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Our neighbors have a 20-year-old daughter who is expecting a baby in July. She is not married, and she's been telling everyone that my Harold is the father of her unborn child! Harold doesn't deny that he has had a recent fling with her, but he insists that it isn't possible for a man of 81 to father a child. Is it? I need to know. — GRANNY IN ARLINGTON, VA.

DEAR GRANNY: It's possible for a man in his 80s to father a child. And although it's rare, it's also possible for a man in his 90s to father a child, so if I were you, I'd keep my eye on Harold.

DEAR ABBY: I am 29, but look much younger because I am so small. I have stepchildren who range from age 10 to 17. Now, it is obvious that I couldn't have a 17-year-old child when I myself have been taken for a 20-year-old. But you wouldn't believe how many strangers stop me and ask, "Are you their mother?"

I wouldn't mind if the person were friendly, but most people are just nosy and demand to know in a very rude tone. I am tempted to tell these people that it's none of their business, but instead I always say, "No, I am their stepmother."

Friends I have told this to, and even the kids themselves, say I should just say yes and watch people's eyes bug out of their heads.

My question: Would that be wrong of me? How would you handle this? — TOO YOUNG TO BE MAMA

DEAR TOO YOUNG: I'd just smile and say, "No, I'm not their mother — but I wish I were."

DEAR ABBY: My daughter's divorce has been final for over a year (no children). She's 30, attractive, intelligent (college grad) and has a lot on the ball. She dates a little but not as much as she'd like to. (She's not the type to push herself.)

The problem: She's ashamed to go out in public unless she has an escort. We've had several arguments about this, but she won't listen to me. I've tried to tell her that she has to get out and socialize, and it's not necessary to have a date for every concert or civic event. She doesn't even want to go to family gatherings or celebrations unless she has a man on her arm. Lots of people in town don't even know she's divorced.

What is your feeling on this, Abby? Maybe she'll listen to you. — PORTLAND MOM

DEAR MOM: I can understand why your daughter would be reluctant to attend a "couples" affair without a date. But family gatherings and civic events do not require an escort. A woman who's interested in dating again after a divorce should get out where she can be seen. Visibility is essential to popularity.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Exhausted in Plattsmouth, Neb.," who thought she set a record in giving birth to three babies in 23 months and one week, that I did even better than that — twice!

My second, third and fourth babies were born in a period of 22 months and three weeks. But my first, second and third babies were born in exactly 20 months and one day! All four children made their appearances at St. Anthony's Hospital in Milwaukee, Wis.

None was a "preemie," and they were born in a period of 32 months and 20 days.

I'm Althea Phillips, formerly of Milwaukee, but, believe me, Abby, I am now ... POSITIVELY POOPED IN ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CHRIS IN CINCY: Don't send for the Salvation Army trucks to pick up your plaid clothes — further investigation (and a lot of mail) convinced me that plaids are ALWAYS fashionable.

Changing the oil in family car is both simple and important

By AL CARRELL

Although it doesn't fall into a true category for the home handyperson, changing the oil in your car is something anyone should be able to do. While I don't know all that much about cars, this is one of the simple chores that both Jean, my handy wife, and I will tackle. We do this for several reasons.

First, with self-service stations becoming more common, you often find that the service station will have only the number of employees needed to collect money and fill out charge tickets. (At least one big oil company has even done away with its charge card.) A garage, dealer or service station that can change the oil is usually so busy that you have to do it at their convenience, which isn't always the time you'd prefer. So doing it yourself can be at a time when you want to do it. It doesn't take long, so you don't tie up your car for half a day or longer.

Another reason to change your own oil is that it can save you a considerable amount of money. You can buy quality oil on sale for very little money. The proper oil filter will also cost much less than having someone do it. So you'll save big. Not only do they charge you for the labor, which they are certainly entitled to, they overcharge you for the oil and filter.

The first thing to do before changing your oil is to read your owner's manual. If you don't have one, contact a dealer and see if he can't get you one. Even an older car will be easier to take care of with this kind of help. In the oil change department, you'll learn about how much of what type oil you need.

Even if the owner's manual says you don't need a new oil filter with each oil change, or even if your Uncle Fred who is a whiz at cars says you don't, think about this. In most cars, the filter holds about one-fifth of the total amount of oil. Keeping the old filter means mixing 20 percent of dirty oil in with the new.

After you've purchased the proper filter and oil, keep these safety precautions in mind. Don't jack up the car for better access to the drain pan. Use the parking brake plus chocks to be sure the car can't roll. Don't let anyone get into the car while you're under there. Their weight can move the car down against you, particularly if you're a few pounds overweight as I am. Don't touch any hot engine parts or let hot oil get you.

Warm the engine up to operating temperature since this will suspend any particles in the oil for more complete draining. Also it thins the oil to let it drain quicker.

Put a low, flat container under the oil pan. Be sure it'll be big enough to hold all the oil. Many wrenches will remove the drain plug, but a proper sized socket wrench will be the easiest. Turn counterclockwise. Just incidentally, be sure you remove the plug from the oil pan and not the transmission plug, which in some cars isn't that far away or different. Clean off the plug.

Next remove the oil filter. You'll need a proper sized filter wrench for this. Turn counterclockwise. Sometimes the direction can be confusing because the filter may be out of the way, but try to visualize you are looking at the end not attached to the car to calculate counterclockwise. You may save some mess by having another container under the filter, and by slipping a plastic bag over the filter before clamping the filter wrench in place. Wipe the filter seat clean.

Give the oil plenty of time to fully drain.

Open the first can of oil and place a little on your finger and rub over the new filter seal. This helps assure a drip-free fit. Spin on the new filter. Be sure the threads are properly aligned. If there's resistance, they probably are not aligned. Tighten the filter by hand only.

Before adding the last quart of oil, start the engine for a short while, then check the dipstick reading. Add only as much more oil as is needed to make the dipstick read full.

Giving awards

By ERMA BOMBECK

I've been feeling strange this week and finally figured it out. It's been eight full days since I've seen the entertainment industry award itself.

There's no business like show business for handing out trophies to themselves. I've seen maybe 35 or 40 shows this year featuring tear-stained faces giving humble speeches that make monks look like braggarts.

There's the Golden Globes, People's Choice, Critic's Choice, Cannes Film Festival, American Movie Awards, the Oscars, Emmys, Tonys, Grammys, and enough country-Western awards to have Barbara Mandrell changing her dress every 15 minutes and giving an acceptance speech.

At first, I must confess I enjoyed the glitter of the event and razzle-dazzle of all those stars in one room. After awhile, it was like watching "The Wizard of Oz" for the 18th time. You start rooting for the tornado.

I realize I no longer love a winner unless they show up for the award. I used to anticipate someone falling out of her dress like the spectators of the Indy 500 waiting for someone to hit the north wall. I no longer care.

And I can no longer sustain my enthusiasm at 1 a.m. anymore for the man who won an award for laying the sound track on the black-and-white foreign documentary, "Midnight Escargot," and accepts the award in French.

I have begun to analyze why this industry has a curb on achievement and struggle. My plumber never got a "plunger" award for excellence in retrieving an iced tea spoon out of the disposal on Christmas eve.

My druggist was never rewarded with a statuette for interpreting illegible handwriting for 30 years. The school bus driver on our route has never been singled out for orchestrating 60 five-year-olds for 36 weeks . . . and allowing them to live.

What about the customs officer who is never thanked for shuffling through dirty underwear, and hairdressers who keep the suicide rate down in this country?

The entertainment industry has only one way to go: the ultimate awards show in which statues are given to the best award show. Who wrote it? Who produced it? Who hosted it? Who came out on time? Who had the highest rate of winners in attendance? Who was bleeped? Who took the longest time to get to the podium? Who got booed for promoting a cause?

I think I know the winner already. Barbara Mandrell!

Pulitzer-winning journalists react with disbelief, joy, champagne

By The Associated Press

There was a lot of yelling and a lot of kissing in newsrooms and one winner yelled "They made a mistake!" when the 1982 Pulitzer Prizes were announced.

"I won't believe it for a week or so because my mind rejects junk like that," Los Angeles Times clasical music critic Martin Bernheimer said Monday. "I'm very happy."

He said he knew he had won when the story "came over the wire and there was a roar and a lot of yelling and kissing."

"At my stage in life it is profoundly sweet," 64-year-old Saul Pett of The Associated Press said of his feature writing award.

"I can be as cynical as the next man," Pett said, "but I am living proof that Jack Kennedy was wrong: Life need not be unfair."

Jack Rosenthal of The New York Times, who won the editorial writing award, said when he was growing up in Portland, Ore., "there were two things I wanted in life: to play shortstop for the Yankees, and to win a Pulitzer Prize.

"Well, there are some people around here saying I'm too old to play shortstop. But I'm not too sure."

Rosenthal said his prize, the first time in 56 years the editorial page of The Times had won a Pulitzer, was a "sensational honor for the newspaper."

AP photographer Ron Edmonds, who was cited for his dramatic photos of the shooting of President Reagan, said, "I wish it had been for a picture that had not been of violence."

"They made a mistake! They did! They did!" said Sydney P. Freedberg in disbelief as she dashed down the state Capitol steps in Lansing, Mich., on her way to Detroit for a celebration by the staff of the Detroit News. The newspaper received the gold medal for public service for a series exposing the Navy's coverup of circumstances surrounding the death of a seaman.

Ms. Freedberg and David Ashenfelter pieced together eyewitness accounts showing that mental and physical torment inflicted during detention aboard the USS Ranger contributed to a sailor's death.

Rick Atkinson of the Kansas City Times thanked his newspaper for giving him the time to do the work for which he was honored. He said he had five months to research and write a series on water resource management.

"I owe that to them," he said. "We complain a lot about the people we work for, but we have to give them their due."

The staffs of the Kansas City Star and Times also won for coverage of the collapse of two skywalks at the Hyatt Regency Hotel on July 17. Editor Michael J. Davies said nothing compared to winning a Pulitzer.

"It's very special," he said. "The (Hyatt story award) one is even more special because almost everyone on both staffs was involved."

"I'm real excited," Ben Sargent, editorial cartoonist for the American-Statesman in Austin, Texas, said as plastic glasses of champagne were passed around the newsroom. He said he was "numb" after learning of his Pulitzer for editorial cartoons.

"I think an effective cartoon or effective editorial will make the reader mad, either with us...or against us," Sargent said.

Charles Fuller, the Philadelphia playwright who won the prize for drama, said the idea for "A Soldier's Play" came "out of my head."

"You can't set out to win the Pulitzer," he added. "Sometimes, you can do that when you're after a fellowship or a grant, but not this."

John Updike, who won the fiction prize for "Rabbit is Rich," said he hadn't expected the book "to be this much of a success."

"It's a story about middle age," said Updike, 50, who lives in Georgetown, Mass., "and like middle age, nothing much decisive happens in it."

Pulitzer prize-winning cartoonist Ben Sargent, right, and Austin American-Statesman publisher Jim Fain toast Sargent's cartooning award Monday. Sargent, who said he thinks an effective cartoon should make readers mad, has been with the Statesman as an illustrator since 1974.

'Maddening' cartoons bring Texan prize

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Ben Sargent, editorial cartoonist for the Austin American-Statesman, says an effective cartoon makes a newspaper reader mad. Sargent's cartoons make him glad, though. They won him a Pulitzer prize.

"I'm real excited," he said Monday, minutes after the prize was announced and plastic glasses of champagne were passed around the newspaper's city room. "I hope this means the return of the ideological cartoon."

Sargent won the 1981 Pulitzer prize for editorial cartoons with a portfolio of ten cartoons drawn on various national issues. His cartoons are distributed to several dozen newspapers throughout the nation by the United Features Syndicate.

"I think an effective cartoon or effective editorial will made the reader mad, either with us — or whomever we're mad at — or against us, if they disagree," Sargent said.

"Either way, their consciousness about that issue, for a brief instant, is raised and has engaged that issue. That process, repeated many times, is what keeps the political energy out there amongst the folks going," he said.

Sargent, a 33-year-old native of Amarillo, has been involved with newspapers most of his life.

He came to Austin in 1968 to attend the University of Texas and major in journalism. During college, he reported on the state capital for the late Stuart Long at Long News Service.

After graduating from Texas, Sargent joined the American-Statesman as a reporter and began "doing some drawings on the side," he said.

He also worked in the Austin bureau of United Press International and again for Long News Service before rejoining the American-Statesman in 1974 as a graphic artist and illustrator.

He soon became the paper's editorial cartoonist, drawing five editorial page cartoons a week.

Non-winning Pulitzer nominations listed

NEW YORK (AP) — Here is a list by category some of the other, non-winning nominations for Pulitzer Prizes.

A total 1,200 entrants in all categories were considered by specific nominating juries, which reduced the number to the nominees listed below. From this list, the Pulitzer Board selected its winners.

JOURNALISM

Public Service.

—Los Angeles Herald Examiner for its series on exploitation of illegal aliens in California's garment industry;

—New York Daily News for its series on the crisis in New York's subway system;

—Providence Journal-Bulletin for its series on hazardous working conditions in Rhode Island's jewelry industry.

General Local Reporting.

—Louisville Courier-Journal for its coverage of an explosion in the Louisville sewer system;

—Lucy Morgan of the St. Petersburg Times for her series on drug smuggling in Dixie County, Fla.;

—Ken Wells of The Miami Herald for his series on Florida's water problems.

Special Local Reporting.

—Joel Brinkley of the Louisville Courier-Journal for his series on abuses in Kentucky's coroner system;

—Sydney P. Freedberg and David Ashenfelter of The Detroit News for their series on the U.S. Navy's coverup. This nomination was moved by the Pulitzer Board to the Public Service category, where it won the prize.

National Reporting.

—Liz Jeffries, freelance and Rick Edmonds of The Philadelphia Inquirer for their series on live birth abortions;

—The United Press International Washington bureau for its coverage of the attempted assassination of President Reagan.

International Reporting

—Dan Fisher of the Los Angeles Times for his reporting from Poland;

—Ray Mosely of the Chicago Tribune for his series on the problems of black Africa;

—Bob Wyrick of Newsday for his series on the distribution abroad of American-made products in ways that would be held illegal or improper in the United States itself.

Pulitzer winners come from diverse backgrounds

NEW YORK (AP) — Here are profiles of some the individual winners of the 1982 Pulitzer Prizes:

—Paul Henderson, winner for special local reporting, joined The Seattle Times in 1967. He served in the Army from 1959 to 1962 in Korea, where he was a correspondent for the First Cavalry Division newspaper and Stars and Stripes. He majored in journalism at the University of Nebraska at Omaha and at Creighton University while working at the Council Bluffs (Iowa) Nonpareil, and at the Omaha World-Herald. Henderson, 43, is a native of Washington, D.C.

—Rick Atkinson, winner for national reporting, worked for the Pittsburg (Kan.) Morning Sun before joining the Kansas City Times. He had been the Times' suburban reporter and general assignment city desk reporter and is now a national reporter. The son of an Army officer, Atkinson, 30, was born in Munich, West Germany.

—John Darnton, 41, winner for international reporting, is the son of a New York Times correspondent who died in New Guinea in 1942. The younger Darnton joined The Times in 1966 as a news clerk, was promoted to reporter in 1968 and became a foreign correspondent in 1976. He worked in Nigeria and Kenya before being sent to Warsaw.

—Jack Rosenthal, winner for editorial writing, joined The New York Times in 1969 after stints at the Portland Oregonian, the Portland Reporter, Life magazine and at the federal departments of Justice and State. He is deputy editorial page editor for the Times and has also served as chief urban affairs correspondent, assistant Sunday editor and editor of The New York Times magazine. He was born in Tel Aviv in 1935 and grew up in Portland.

—Ben Sargent, winner for editorial cartooning, has been with the Austin (Texas) American-Statesman for the past eight years. His work is distributed to 70 newspapers nationally. The 33-year-old Sargent, a native of Amarillo, Texas, worked as a reporter for five years for the Corpus Christi Caller-Times, the Long News Service, United Press International and the American-Statesman. He is the author of "Texas Statehouse Blues," published in 1980.

—Ron Edmonds, 35, winner for spot news photography, joined The Associated Press in Washington in February 1981. He was bureau chief of United Press International Newspictures in Sacramento, where he was raised, before joining The AP. Edmonds began his photography career as a free-lancer in Sacramento and joined The Honolulu Star-Bulletin in 1972. He returned to Sacramento in 1978.

—John H. White, winner for feature photography, has won more than 100 awards for photography. He spent 10 years with The Chicago Daily News before joining the Chicago Sun-Times, and is the only four-time winner of the Chicago Press Association's Photographer of the Year award. White, 37, is a native of Lexington, N.C., and graduated from Central Piedmont Community College.

—Art Buchwald, winner for commentary, first began producing a humor column in 1949 for the International Herald Tribune. Born in Mt. Vernon, N.Y., Buchwald spent his childhood in a series of foster homes and served with the Marines in the Pacific in World War II. He studied at the University of Southern California before heading for Paris, where he lived for more than a decade. Buchwald has worked in Washington since the early 1960s, writes three columns a week and is the author of more than 20 books.

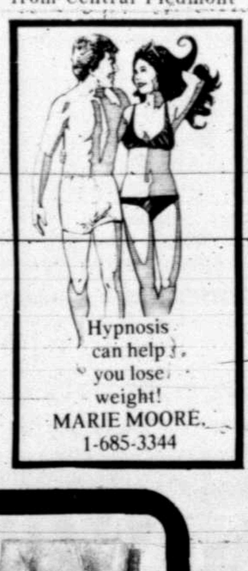

—Martin Bernheimer, winner for criticism, has been classical music critic for the Los Angeles Times since 1965. Bernheimer, 45, taught music at New York University and was a member of the music staff of The New York Herald Tribune from 1959 to 1962. He then became managing editor of the Philharmonic Hall Magazine, temporary music critic for the New York Post and assistant to the music critic of the Saturday Review. Bernheimer, who was born in Munich, earned a B.A. degree at Brown University and an M.A. in music at NYU.

Netherlands queen to visit U.S. to celebrate friendship

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — There's nothing unusual about Queen Beatrix touring Holland — after all, she's queen of the Netherlands. What's unusual is that she's leaving home to do it.

The queen will visit Holland, Mich., and several other cities in June to help celebrate 200 years of friendship between the United States and the Netherlands.

Beatrix

Amway Corp. Chairman Jay VanAndel, chairman of the Netherlands American Bicentennial Commission, said Monday the monarch's June 25-27 trip to Michigan was planned because of the large number of Dutch-Americans in the area.

The Netherlands-American Bicentennial marks the 200th anniversary of formal diplomatic relations between the two countries. Queen Beatrix arrives in the United States April 19 for a formal state visit, including an address to a joint session of Congress in Washington.

During her trip in June, the queen is expected to visit Detroit, Ann Arbor, Grand Rapids and Holland in Michigan, and Houston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlanta and Chicago.

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — The Rev. Thaddeus A. Garrett Jr. spends most of his time as a domestic policy adviser to Vice President George Bush, which means overseeing a staff of nine from a White House office.

But when he gets back in the pulpit, the politics stops.

"I don't preach politics from any pulpit," Garrett said. "That's absolutely forbidden as far as I'm concerned. The church is a place where one must feel a communion with the Holy Spirit."

Garrett

Garrett, 33, describes himself as "a very old-fashioned, down-home preacher." He is associate pastor at the 1,000-member Wesley Temple AME Zion (Methodist) Church in Akron, and devotes many of his Sundays to song and sermons at the largest black church in his hometown.

In Washington, his $60,000-a-year job requires him to provide Bush with analyses of issues ranging from pollution to taxes to civil rights.

As a black clergyman, he often meets black churchgoers who might not take kindly to Reagonomics. Garrett said Reagan is well aware of comments from black clergymen and civil rights leaders criticizing budget cuts in social programs.

"The president has indicated that it concerns him greatly, because he is a man who cares. He is a man of compassion," Garrett said.

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A foundation funded by Aristotle Onassis' fortune has hinted it might give up its charity programs in Greece if the foundation president, heiress Christina Onassis, is accused of defrauding the Greek state.

"The foundation was upset that its president, Miss Onassis, was portrayed as a tax evader," John Georgakis, administrator of the Onassis Public Benefit Foundation, told a news conference Monday.

Onassis

Georgakis, a former family adviser, said Miss Onassis faces a long legal battle with Greece over death duties claimed on the fortune left by her shipowner father.

"The case pending between Miss Onassis and the Greek state has dragged on for five years and I expect it will go on some time longer," Georgakis said.

Onassis' will, revealed soon after the shipowner's death in 1975, left his only daughter half his estimated $800 million fortune. Most of the remainder went to the foundation in memory of Onassis' son Alexander, killed in a plane crash at Athens airport in 1973.

Last February, the Socialist government billed Miss Onassis $45 million in unpaid inheritance taxes. Her lawyers said she was not liable for the taxes.

LONDON (AP) — The British music world's version of a restriction on foreign imports threatens to touch off an embargo on the U.S. side of the Atlantic.

The Los Angeles Philharmonic's London agent, Jasper Parrott, said Monday the orchestra is "absolutely outraged" because the Department of Employment refuses to permit the group to give five concerts in London next year to celebrate the 150th anniversary of Brahms' birth.

Giulini

The Visiting Orchestras Consultative Association, which makes recommendations to the government, forbids touring orchestras to appear more than twice per tour at a major London concert hall.

Carlo Maria Giulini and the LA Philharmonic planned to perform all four Brahms symphonies, his two piano concertos, violin concerto, double concerto and German Requiem at five concerts in London's Royal Festival Hall from May 31 through June 5, 1983.

But the Department of Employment refused to grant work permits for the LA Philharmonic.

Actor-singer Kris Kristofferson and his daughter Tracy arrive for the Los Angeles premiere of his film "Rollover" in December 1981. Tracy, 20, suffered internal and head injuries Friday night in a motorcycle accident near Lancaster, Calif., and was reported in serious but improving condition in a local hospital Monday. Gold-winning Olympic skater Eric Heiden, driver of the motorcycle, was slightly injured.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Infertility involves men as well

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother had six children and I can't even become pregnant although I've been married for three years. Is it possible that this is my husband's fault? — Margaret, Washington, D.C.

Dear Margaret: Problems of infertility may involve the man as often as the woman. That is why a semen analysis is essential in determining where the problem lies. Moreover, even in cases where a couple's infertility can be explained on the basis of some condition in the woman, there is still the possibility that the man may be infertile or subfertile.

However, I would not discuss infertility in terms of who is at fault. A couple unable to have children share a common problem, one that should not be approached on the basis of trying to allocate blame.

If you have not already done so, I suggest you ask your physician for a referral to someone who specializes in the problem of infertility.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 7-year-old son is being scheduled for a hernia operation. The doctor says he will be operating on one side only, but there is always a chance that another hernia will develop on the other side. Does this usually happen? — Mrs. N.H., Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Mrs. H.: The possibility of a child having a hernia on both sides decreases with age. Some surgeons have indicated that there is a 60 percent chance that a youngster under 2 years of age with an inguinal hernia will have a hernia on the other side. The incidence decreases to 48 percent for children between 2 and 4 years of age, and to 33 percent for those 8 to 15 years old.

Apparently your physician does not see any evidence of a hernia on the opposite side although, as he says, there is always the possibility that one may develop.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I saw on television where a person was thought to be mentally retarded, but later it was found out that he really was not. I have also read about all these new machines that can take pictures of the brain. Couldn't these machines be used to tell who is mentally retarded and who is not? — Mr. F.H., Frankfort, Ky.

Dear Mr. H.: The new procedures to which you refer, such as computerized tomography (CT) scans, have their limitations. One study of 23 severely retarded children resulted in 21 CT scans that were considered normal. Apparently there is no connection between a person's IQ and the findings on a CT scan.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Will your please help settle an argument that came up at our bridge club? Does a person eat more or less when depressed? — Nancy, Towson, Md.

Dear Nancy: One of the classical symptoms of depression is loss of appetite. However, this is not a universal finding, and some patients who were referred to me actually ate more and gained weight when they were depressed.

De Lorean reaches agreement to sell, lease cars

By TOM FURLONG
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

De Lorean Motor Co. reached an agreement in principle to lease 1,000 cars to Budget Rent-A-Car and is negotiating to sell another 1,200 cars to an Ohio-based liquidation firm, officials of the companies said Monday.

Bruce McWilliams, a De Lorean Motor official, Monday called the deals with Budget and Consolidated International Inc., Columbus, Ohio, "two very big hurdles" necessary to keep the company operating and liquidate its present inventory. However, he noted, the consummation of both deals is contingent on De Lorean's solving the mounting legal problems that have arisen from suits filed by unhappy creditors and ex-employees.

Budget wants to rent the De Loreans to customers at 30 airports across the country. Consolidated wants to buy the 1,200 cars that De Lorean Motor has in inventory in Southern California.

De Lorean Motor, based in New York, makes and manufactures the De Lorean automobile, named for company founder John Z. De Lorean. The De Lorean is a stainless steel gull-winged sportscar that is made in Northern Ireland and is sold in the United States for a minimum of $25,000.

After reaching a monthly sales high of 700 cars in October 1981, De Lorean Motor is now fighting what McWilliams describes as "a hellishly difficult time."

One major stumbling block has been a lawsuit filed March 9 by the Bank of America, one of the company's major U.S. creditors, in a dispute over who owns the cars De Lorean Motor has in inventory. San Francisco-based Bank of America succeeded in obtaining a court order that prevented De Lorean Motor from selling any of its cars until the dispute is settled.

A hearing on the matter is tentatively scheduled for next week, said a bank spokesman, who declined further comment. De Lorean Motor owes the bank an estimated $19 million.

The legal picture was clouded further last week when Orange County Superior Court Judge Phillip Petty froze De Lorean Motor's California assets — including the 1,200 cars it has in inventory in Santa Ana — until a hearing is held on April 29. The order resulted from a breach-of-contract suit filed by C.R. Brown, who until last month was chief of De Lorean Motor's Irvine, Calif.-based marketing operations. Brown claims he was illegally fired.

Daily News owner accuses Murdoch of trying to shut paper

NEW YORK (AP) — The owner of the New York Daily News on Monday accused New York Post publisher Rupert Murdoch of "a transparent attempt to destroy and shut down" the News, after Murdoch said he would be willing to take over and run that ailing paper.

Stanton R. Cook, president and chief executive officer of the Chicago-based Tribune Co., said Murdoch never expressed any interest in owning the Daily News until it became apparent Texas millionaire Joe L. Allbritton was "making progress in his negotiations with the unions" to take over the paper.

Murdoch told the city's newpaper unions Monday that, in order to save his own paper, he would be willing to take over the News.

At the same time, the unions asked for a resumption of job-reduction negotiations with Allbritton, who last Thursday suspended his effort to take over the News when the unions asked Murdoch to consider operating both papers.

Allbritton issued a statement Monday night that, while rebuking Murdoch for belatedly showing interest in the News, announced without setting conditions that he was "prepared to resume my negotiations with the unions upon their contacting us."

The unions, seeking to clarify the size of the financial crisis faced by the News, requested a copy of the letter of intent that gave Allbritton an option to April 30 to take over the morning tabloid and assume the risks of continuing its publication.

Cook's statement did not address the union's request to see the terms of the letter.

George E. McDonald, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council, said leaders of the 11 unions at the News sought to broaden the bidding by voting to talk "to any other potential buyer of the News."

Another union leader leaving the meeting told a reporter, "The situation is an unbelievable mess."

Murdoch stepped into the picture last week to remind the unions, after they opened negotiations with Allbritton, that their contracts stipulated that any labor concessions to the News would require comparable treatment of the Post, which he said Monday had lost close to $20 million last year and faced a similar loss this year.

The unions, seeking to preserve as many as possible of 3,800 jobs at the News, were still reacting to Allbritton's proposal to slash the equivalent of 1,600 jobs for what he said was a needed annual saving of $85 million.

They proposed to Murdoch that he consider taking over the News and running both papers.

In answer, Murdoch told the union leaders in a meeting at Automation House on Monday, "Yes, to save the Post, I would be prepared to run both. I think, with your help, and a lot of it, we can save both."

ABC tops in news, documentary Emmys

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC nosed out CBS and both left NBC far behind Monday night as the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences awarded its Emmys for news and documentary programming.

The academy, making multiple awards in most categories, gave ABC a total of 18 Emmys, CBS 17, and NBC six. The Public Broadcasting System also won six awards.

In the category of outstanding coverage of a breaking news story, the judges singled out of a field of nine nominees three winners — NBC News' "Magazine with David Brinkley" for its program "Inside AWACS," ABC "World News Tonight" for coverage of the Italian earthquake, and ABC's "20-20" segment on the Kansas City Hyatt Hotel disaster.

Awards for outstanding background analysis of a single current story went to CBS Reports for "Murder Teen-Age Style;" ABC for "Soldiers of the Twilight;" ABC's "20-20" for "Death in the Fast Lane;" CBS' "60 Minutes" for Andy Rooney's "Grain;" ABC's "World News Tonight" for a two-part special on Libya, and ABC's "Nightline" for "The War on Opium."

Out of 11 programs nominated as outstanding investigative journalism, only one, ABC's "The Gene Merchants," failed to get an award.

The winners were CBS Reports' "Nuclear Battlefield," and "The War Machine;" PBS' "The Hunter and the Hunted;" ABC's "Near Armageddon: The Spread of Nuclear Weapons in the Middle East;" PBS' "Why America Burns;" ABC's "Formula for Disaster;" CBS' "Killer Wheels;" NBC's "Rockets for Sale;" NBC's "Teen Models," and ABC's "Unnecessary Surgery."

Outstanding interview awards went to PBS for Clark Clifford on "Presidents and Power," PBS for George Steiner on "Literature, Language and Culture;" CBS for "The Last Mafioso" (Jimmy Fratianno), and CBS for Mike Wallace's "60 Minutes" interviews with Americans accused of supplying arms and training to Libyan terrorists.

Officials expecting large eagle hatch

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Maryland wildlife officials are watching 45 rare bald eagle nests around the Chesapeake Bay, hoping for the largest hatch since a state nesting survey began six years ago.

Eggs now being incubated will hatch later this month, said Kenneth J. D'Loughy, a state Wildlife Administration biologist who is monitoring the endangered birds.

"If all goes well," he said, "there's a good chance we'll match or even exceed last year's unusually high eagle hatch."

Last year, 51 young eagles were hatched from 49 treetop nests in Maryland's portion of the bay, the largest number ever recorded in the annual survey. The count is made each spring, as state and federal wildlife officials scan known haunts of the bald eagle from a low-flying plane.

D'Loughy said officials expect to find some previously unnoticed nests

Midland firemen Ray Sprague, left, and Steve Lyons work to extinguish flames on the roof of a home at 3916 N. Field Court this morning. According to fire department spokesmen at the scene, the blaze began when electricians soldering on an air conditioner line apparently ignited insulation in a wall of the recently-constructed home. The house sustained smoke damage, as well as extensive damage to the roof.

Some 'cranks' want to change phones

By PENNY PAGANO
By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BRYANT POND, Maine — When the residents of this New England village make a telephone call, they reach first for a small metal crank on an oak box and then for the phone. Turning the crank rings a bell at a switchboard in the living room of Elden and Barbara Hathaway's white shingle house.

If it is a local call, one of the two young operators at the switchboard promptly puts it through. If it is long distance, the operator gets the other on the line, then sets a timer by hand to record the minutes talked.

As a sideline, the operators sometimes take messages for customers who are not home when the phone rings. If it is an emergency and no one answers, chances are excellent that the operator knows where the absent party can be reached.

Bryant Pond, nestled in the lake-studded foothills of the White Mountains near the New Hampshire border, has the last hand-cranked magneto telephone system in the country — and its system seems doomed, despite friendliness and personal service.

THE HATHAWAYS SOLD their business last year to the Oxford Telephone & Telegraph Co., a bigger firm that wants to install dial phones, much to the indignation of Alice Johnson, head of a Bryant Pond committee to keep the crank phones.

The committee has hired a lawyer to advise it on tactics and has carried its case to officials in Augusta, the state capital. The committee even has a catch slogan: "Don't Yank the Crank."

"Part of the uniqueness of our town is the phone system," Johnson said recently. "We've got a very personal system. It's perfect for a town our size."

Historically, family-owned telephone companies such as Bryant Pond's have provided the backbone of phone service to many small communities.

Now, however, with changes in federal regulations, increased competition and the unknown effects of the government's settlement of its antitrust suit with American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the small independent telephone companies are entering a new era.

The nation's 1,483 independent telephone companies, those operated separately from the giant AT&T network, range in size from large holding companies such as General Telephone & Electronics Corp., with almost 16 million customers, to a tiny system on an island off Maine that has only a dozen phones.

All the independents face new challenges and uncertainties, but it is the smallest ones that are in the deepest trouble.

Not only are small independents economically vulnerable and limited technologically, but their proprietors also often lack the training and expertise that larger companies can call on to solve new problems.

TODAY'S WELTER OF arcane problems was not dreamed of when Alexander Graham Bell's exclusive patent for the phone expired in 1894 and independent telephone companies blossomed across the country. Many were in rural areas, where some companies even used barbed-wire fences to conduct the current.

At the turn of the century, there were almost 10,000 independent companies. AT&T, developing in more populated areas, subsequently acquired many of these family-owned businesses. The Great Depression wiped out others. Eventually, the lack of heirs to assume the family business, as well as the need for money, led some systems to sell out, reducing the total still further.

The merger-acquisition trend that gobbled many small companies has slowed recently as less-profitably independents were weeded out and bigger companies diversified into new areas, including satellites, cable television and data processing.

For the independents that remain, the demands are greater and the future less certain. By no means are all the small companies buckling under the challenge. Some are boldly moving to acquire the skills they need to survive and prosper.

One such forward-thinking independent is headed by Elanor Haskin, who took over the Waitsfield-Faystone Telephone Co. in Waitsfield, Vt., from her mother. Keeping pace in a growing ski area, she and her husband have added computers and digital switching and are moving into cable television. They plan to open a retail phone, computer and stereo store this summer, and their children are getting involved in the company.

WITHOUT DIVERSIFICATION and efforts to tap new revenues to offset increasing costs, Haskin said, "I see the independents being greatly reduced."

Back in Bryant Pond, where the white birch trees blend in with the spring snow this time of year, it was a combination of rising costs and greater demands for service that helped persuade the Hathaways to sell their company after 30 years.

Not a great deal has changed about the firm since the Hathaways paid their neighbors $2,500 for a system with 30 lines and 118 customers in 1951. The old Army field wires were replaced by more modern cable, and a second switchboard was added in 1971. But there has not been a rate increase since 1954, and basic service still costs about $5 a month.

Years ago, the Hathaways turned down loan offers to convert to dial telephones because they did not want to go into debt. Instead, they built an addition onto their house, and Barbara Hathaway and their four children worked the switchboard. Elden Hathaway still worked on the Grand Trunk Canadian Railroad during the day and did phone maintenance at night until he could afford to hire someone else.

"We didn't have money to do a lot new things," Elden Hathaways said. "We made do with what we had."

He and his wife kept their bedroom on the first floor so they could hear the switchboard ring at night. Hathaway said he still has dents in his shins from his wife kicking him out of bed to answer calls.

As the years passed, the Hathaways became the village's eyes, ears and information center. They gave directions in blizzards and fires, took sick children to the hospital, consoled a woman whose husband had just shot himself and gave summer vacationers church schedules and store hours.

As the phone company grew to 440 customers, demands for private lines and maintenance costs became more burdensom. "We used to know every voice," Barbara Hathaway said. "It's changed a lot."

Now the two day operators handle 1,500 to 1,600 calls per shift, including 350 toll calls.

And there's the rub. With that many calls, the purchasers of the Hathaways' company say the crank phones must go. It is all a matter of economics, new owner Robert Jamison, general manager of the Oxford Telephone Co., said.

"It's coming out, one way or another," Jamison said of the old crank system. "All we're trying to do is give Bryant Pond better service."

TOWNSFOLK, HOWEVER, are not willing to concede defeat without a fight.

"It holds the whole town together," said Alice Johnson, chairman of the committee to keep the crank phones. She cited a poll of the system's 440 customers that showed 72 percent of those responding preferred the old system.

With the crank system, Johnson said, she has the modern advantages of call forwarding and conference calls. The operators take messages, transfer calls and even tell her two young daughters where she is if they need her. Elderly residents never have to open a phone book for help.

"Those gals are really secretaries to the town," George Hooper, owner of the Village Store, said of the operators.

The crank-phone supporters also say that the magneto system will be replaced with outdated dial equipment and that there is no guarantee that residents who want new private lines will get them.

The state Public Utilities Commission so far has refused to grant the crank-phone committee a cease-and-desist order against Oxford to stop the conversion to a dial system. But the company has been warned that any steps taken before a final commission ruling would be made at its own expense.

Last February, a crowded PUC hearing in Bryant Pond lasted most of the day and night but no decision has been reported.

Meanwhile, the town has been inundated with calls and letters from well-wishers across the nation, and the Village Store has sold more than 2,000 T-shirts to help pay for the committee's lawyer.

But Hooper worries that time has run out for those like himself who believe the old crank-phone system adds a special flavor to everyday life.

"Once they take it out, he said, "we'll never get it back."

U.S. minerals picture changes depending on source

By ELEANOR RANDOLPH
By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Almost two years ago, Congress said it wanted to know how this country would survive a three-year conventional war if Zaire should cut off supplies of cobalt. Or if South Africa should refuse to sell it any more manganese, the substance that virtually converts iron to steel. Or if the Soviet Union should embargo sales of platinum.

Last week, as ordered, the Reagan administration unveiled a congressionally mandated strategic minerals plan designed to assure "minerals security" for a nation with an ailing mining industry and a heavy dependency on imported minerals — some from stable, friendly nations, some from countries either less stable or less friendly.

AND ALTHOUGH THE report was supposed to outline a long-range plan for ending U.S. dependency on foreign minerals, environmentalists and mining experts said the White House proposal was little more than a well-worded rehash of policies that had been in the works since President Reagan took office.

Terry Sopher, public lands specialist of the Wilderness Society, charged that the policy in essence "fabricates" a minerals crisis to justify easing restrictions on mining on public lands — a policy already being pushed vigorously by Interior Secretary James G. Watt.

A mining expert, J. Allen Overton Jr., president of the American Mining Congress, praised the tone of the administration report and called it "an excellent battle plan." But he added that the document, which had been due since last October, lacked specifics. In particular, the industry had hoped to see a promise to use federal funds to beef up the stockpile of "strategic" minerals substantially, especially now that mineral prices are low and such purchases would be a bargain.

Sources within the hard-rock mining industry, which has been in decline in some areas of this country for more than 10 years, said they had hoped the Reagan administration would put some federal money into price subsidies or loan guarantees for the mining industry as a matter of national security.

"Instead, we got flowery phrases," said Rep. Jim Santini, D-Nev., who is the chief congressional spokesman for the mining industry and proudly bears the nickname "Mr. Minerals."

"I am disappointed, frustrated and disheartened at the dismal failure of this administration to address a problem as serious as the minerals survivability of America in the international marketplace," Santini said. "As far as I'm concerned, we're right back where we started — nowhere."

SENT TO CONGRESS without fanfare during a week when most members had already returned to their districts for an Easter recess, the president's plan suggests that the United States could begin to remove restrictions on mining on some of the 40 percent to 68 percent of federal lands now closed to mineral exploration.

Although the policy makes clear that national parks and monuments would be closed to any new mines, mining experts and environmentalists say it is still unclear which lands would be opened to mining for the first time.

One possibility, they say, would be wildlife refuges set up in the early part of the century that might be opened to mining under a presidential order.

The president's policy notes that the stockpile of strategic minerals — those deemed necessary to sustain the country in case of a three-year conventional war — should be rejuggled. Some materials now held in excess supply, such as tin, silver and industrial diamonds, should be sold off, and others that are in short supply should be boosted. The policy says the stockpile needs $12.5 billion worth of some minerals and has an excess of $4.92 billion in other minerals and materials.

The minerals picture painted by the Reagan administration — and generally supported by the mining industry — is that the United States is caught in a "resource war" with the Soviet Union, as Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr. describes the fight for precious materials, most of them in the Third World.

At issue are from 7 to 24 key minerals (of 80 considered vital) that the United States buys in large part from countries that are either considered potentially unstable or likely to cut off supplies during an international crisis.

Among these minerals is manganese. Manganese now comes primarily from the Republic of South Africa and the Gabon.

TURN UP GREENS

Here's an early spring planting tip for an almost instant harvest of the finest variety of green lettuce.

First lay the groundwork by culling through the articles taking up storage space around the house or garage. Weed out those things which can be of good service to someone but which you no longer need. These could be such items as household goods, appliances, good old bikes, musical instruments, toys, or perhaps a sewing machine or typewriter.

Plant a few well-chosen words in the Classified Section. There are any number of people who dig a good bargain. They'll pay you in top-quality government-green lettuce.

For some good word-planting tips, consult our expertly-trained Ad-Visor.

LUXURIOUS TOWNHOMES...
AT AFFORDABLE PRICES? YES!

Located in Northwest Midland. Select from beautiful 2-story garden homes in 3 styles: Villa Del Sol, Royal Orleans, or Southern Mansion. Adjustable mortgages are now being offered that provide many benefits to prospective homeowners. 95% loans at approximately 10⅞% interest. Deferred interest program allows stable payments for the first 3 years. Reverts to adjustable rate mortgage after 5 years. Initial payments are lower and qualifying for a loan is substantially easier.

Payments as low as $790 per month. Total move-in cost less than $6000. From $71,500.

UNCLE SAM WANTS YOU...
TO KEEP PAYING RENT.

OUTFOX HIM!

Rent payments aren't tax deductible. Interest payments are. Town Plaza's low interest package plus the tax benefits of owning instead of renting result in net monthly payments about the same as apartment rental. The interest rate offered during April is 12.50%, and is guaranteed for three years. Minimum down payment 5%. Families welcome. One and two bedroom units $43,175 to $64,020. Let Town Plaza show you how to outfox Uncle Sam.
