British begin air, sea blockade of islands

By The Associated Press

Britain's total air and sea blockade of the Falkland Islands went into effect today, but a Defense Ministry spokesman in London said "there is no sign of the Argentine fleet moving into our operational area."

He refused to disclose the whereabouts of the British armada, but when asked if British warships were ready to block any attempts by Argentina to penetrate the war zone, he replied: "I won't disagree with that."

There was speculation in London of an attack later today by British carrier planes on the airfield at Stanley, the Falklands capital and the bridgehead for Argentina's airlift to the estimated 9,000 troops occupying the British island colony.

With Argentina's ruling military junta refusing to pull back from the islands its forces seized April 2, Britain set the countdown clock running Wednesday with the announcement that it was expanding its 200-mile maritime blockade around the Falklands to the skies over the area at noon today — 7 a.m. EDT.

See related stories, Page 10A

Thursday night with an immediate embargo against British ships and aircraft within 200 miles of the Argentine coast and for 200 miles around the Falklands and its dependencies, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands.

It said British violators of these zones would be "treated accordingly."

A spokesman for British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said the Argentine declaration "does not change Britain's position one iota. We are sticking to our plans for a 200-mile total exclusion zone."

The British on Sunday recaptured South Georgia, 800 miles east of the Falklands, putting one of Argentina's four submarines out of action, and the Sandwich Islands have not been touched by the conflict so far.

Mrs. Thatcher was urged again Thursday by the opposition Labor Party in the House of Commons to hold back t he fleet and pursue diplomacy, and again she refused.

"It would be highly dangerous to bluff in that way," she replied. "Gentle persuasion is not going to make the Argentine government give up what it seized by force."

She said the two-week-old sea blockade of the islands had been completely successful and after today's introduction of the air exclusion zone, the Argentine forces on the Falklands will be totally isolated — "cut off by sea and air."

"It was the Argentine invasion which started this crisis and it is Argentine withdrawal that must put an end to it," she declared.

Baby boom is big news

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

In the 32 years that Midland Memorial Hospital has been in operation, the maternity ward has never experienced the number of births that have occurred this month.

Not even in the 1950s baby boom did Midland's birth rate come close to the 222 babies, including three sets of twins, born in April.

As a result, the 30-bed labor and delivery unit has been constantly full, causing a lack of bed space and many extra hours for the maternity staff, according to Maudie Rains, director of maternal and infant care at MMH.

The labor and delivery ward has 21 post-partum, five labor, two recovery and two high-risk beds. Ms. Rains said all the beds have been utilized.

"We've got the mothers spread out all over the hospital. After delivery, patients have been transferred to post critical care and surgical/medical beds," she said, adding that one doctor even made his rounds on the orthopedic floor.

At Thursday's Board of Trustees' meeting, Al Kelm, vice president of patient care services, said that the obstetrics department usually has the most beds available, but at MMH "we've only got one crib left and we're looking everywhere to see if we can locate anymore."

Ms. Rains said the transfer of mothers from the maternity unit means a separation from their babies, but they are brought back to the nursery during feeding times.

"We have a family-centered maternity department," Ms. Rains said, referring to the inconvenience the baby boom has caused on the patients and their families. However, fathers have been able to participate in the labor and delivery.

"But the mothers have been so cooperative, especially those who are in the stork club room," she said.

Other complications have occurred from the number of drop-ins the hospital has experienced. Ms. Rains said a drop-in is a pregnant woman who has not received any pre-natal care. These patients are at a higher risk for complications.

Dr. Walter Parks, MMH medical staff, reported to the board of trustees Thursday that there have been 28 drop-ins so far for April.

Overall, Ms. Rains said the usual two- to three-day hospital stay for normal delivery has remained the same throughout April.

On April 24, nine babies were born in an eight hour period. Fourteen babies in

Referendums could attract Republicans to primary polls

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of a four-part series examining the candidates and issues in Saturday's primary elections.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

If nothing else, the Republican Party's five referendums in Saturday's primary election may attract more voters than would otherwise line up to vote in an election marked — or marred — by apathy.

"I think, as you know, that referendums are a classic manipulative ploy used by political parties to get single-issue voters to come vote in the primary elections," said Darrell F. Smith, chairman of the the Midland County Democratic Party.

"It's true," verified William T. "Bill" Shaner, the Republican Party's counterpart. "It means absolutely nothing. It has no bearing; it will go nowhere."

But, noted Shaner, the outcome of the statewide vote on the referendums may send a message to the Texas Legislators, who simply may ignore it.

"It doesn't mean a thing," he said. "The Legislators will do whatsoever pleases them."

THE REFERENDUMS, as they appear on the ballot, ask the Republican voters to answer "aye" or "nay" to these propositions:

—No. 1: "Are you for or against passing a law in the next session of the Texas Legislature permitting parimutuel wagering on horse races by local option?"

—No. 2: "Are you for or against mandatory jail time for repeat drunk-driving offenders?"

—No. 3: "Are you for or against initiative and referendum as a way for the public to vote directly on issues and make law in elections rather than depending solely on state legislative action?"

—No. 4: "Are you for for against passage of a law that would ban the private ownership of hanguns?"

—No. 5: "Are you for or against the Texas Legislature abolishing the Texas Sunday closing laws, commonly referred to as Blue Laws?"

Shaner didn't dare predict the outcome of the vote on the referendums, but he did, however, note that Republican Gov. William P. "Bill" Clements Jr. has been urging passage of a measure to let the electorate pass on proposed laws drafted by the Legislature, which is the essence of Referendum No. 3. "We're for it," Shaner said. The Legislature hasn't been so amenable.

AND SHANER admonished voters to be aware of the functions of primary elections: "Primaries are purely and solely for the purposes of a party to decide on the best, most qualified, and winnable nominee in the general election. All we (Republicans) care about is who we go up against in the fall."

Though he recognized the principle

Reagan wants voters to 'do it again' for budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is launching a new budget campaign with a call to the voters to "do it again" and convince Congress to line up for his economic program.

The president summoned congressional Republicans to the White House today and planned to meet with prospective Democratic allies Monday in an apparent attempt to reassemble the coalition that delivered his first round of tax and budget cuts last year.

In a nationally broadcast address Thursday night, the president told the public to let "your representatives know that you think this is no time for politics as usual — that you, too, want an end to runaway taxes, spending, government debt and high interest rates."

"You did it once — you can do it again," Reagan said.

With the first budget Reagan submitted to Congress this year all but forgotten — and efforts to find a bipartisan alternative to it in shambles — Reagan said he intends "to forge the beginnings of an acceptable budget initiative."

Congressional Democrats, however, said Reagan's strategy will not work this year and will succeed only in tying Congress in knots.

Rep. Richard Bolling of Missouri, giving the Democrats' broadcast response immediately after Reagan's speech, said the president was being too political and making an appeal that threatens to deadlock Congress on the budget issue.

"If we work together effectively we can produce something that's good for you and good for the country and good for the future of the country," said Bolling, responding without a prepared text.

He said the budget problem is neither Republican nor Democratic and "it's very important that we have bipartisan cooperation all the way through."

Later, Bolling told reporters the president's speech "almost assures it will tie up the Congress in a situation where we don't get a result."

He added that he had pushed for budget negotiations with the administration rather than confrontation this year "because I feel so strongly that we've got to be able o function this year, in one way or another."

But Reagan declared in his speech that his Democratic critics only "want more and more spending and more and more taxes."

The president also urged enactment of a constitutional amendment to require balanced federal budgets. Although ratification could take years, Reagan said it is the only way to "stop government's squandering, over-taxing ways and save our economy."

Reagan's address and the Democratic response came a day after the president and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., were unable to reach a budget compromise during a face-to-face meeting in the Capitol.

The president blamed the failure on Democrats, saying he had offered "our best efforts to achieve a fair compromise."

But Bolliing said he omitted from his broadcast remarks his view about the lack of flexibility on Reagan's part.

"You notice I didn't say the real reason we couldn't make the agreement," Bolling said. "The president's more of an ideologue than many of his leaders (in Congress)"

Collins denies $19,000 tax deduction

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Jim Collins denied that he had included a $19,650 tax deduction on his 1981 tax returns during a news conference Thursday in MGF's oil yard on West Highway 80.

Collins hit the Midland-Odessa area on a last-minute tour before the Republican primary Saturday. It was his opponent, State Sen. Walter Mengden of Houston, who had charged earlier in the week that Collins took the congressional deduction.

The Dallas congressman who is seeking to unseat Democrat Lloyd Bentsen in the U.S. Senate replied that he hadn't filed his income tax return yet.

"I voted against the tax credit. I never keep any of my salary. Half goes to taxes and the other half I give to charity." Questioned further about a statement made last week to the Dallas media that he would take the deduction, Collins replied, "I said I normally take all the deductions I can. I don't plan to take this one."

Speaking to a crowd of more than 200 persons lured to the affair by the promise of a free barbecue lunch sponsored by R.O. Majors, Collins predicted he would carry every section of the state, including Mengden's home ground territory of Harris County. "We'll win with 58.7 percent of the vote," he said. "Even in Harris County our polls show us ahead with 51 percent."

Jim Collins

He also pledged to abolish the departments of energy and education. "We would improve education. We would let local school boards run the school system and not follow the federal regulations."

And enforcement of school busing also would disappear. "It didn't accomplish one thing."

Welfare needs to be reduced, said Collins, who proposed cutting out the abuse and waste.

Collins contended he would support President Reagan's budget, although he believes Congress should pass a constitutional amendment forcing a balanced budget. But Collins said he was "determined to stick to the tax cuts as they are. If your taxes went up 17 percent last year, we've got to do something."

However, he said he was reluctant to accept changes in the minimum corporate tax and hadn't studied legislation proposing this move.

A few weeks ago, Collins had advocated a $4 per barrel tax on imported oil and his opponent criticized the comment, claiming it would raise the price of gasoline at the pump.

But Collins still supported it, saying that with the soft petroleum market, the foreign countries importing oil into the U.S. would be able to absorb the additional cost and not pass it on to the consumer.

"I don't think it would go up," Collins said of the price at the pump. "If you don't put a tax on foreign oil what alternatives do you have?"

Collins described the Midland-Odessa area as the third largest stronghold for Republicans in the state.

"When you're a conservative and you get to the end of a campaign, you go to Midland-Odessa. It's so exciting out here. It's like a revival," he said. "People tell you everything can be done."

Reagan makes appeal for economic program

By DAVID ESPO

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is trying to duplicate last year's legislative triumphs by appealing to all Republicans and just enough "responsible" Democrats to pass this year's installment of his economic program.

But some of his toughest bargaining lies ahead as his fellow Republicans argue over which programs to cut and which taxes to raise to get the budget deficit to an acceptable level.

"We're getting ready to go with the same people and repeat last year's success," one administration official said this week, even before efforts at a compromise with House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and the great bulk of House Democrats failed. "The Democrats are in disarray."

A year ago, Reagan built a winning coalition in Congress among Republicans in the House and Senate and conservative House Democrats — known as "boll weevils" — by promising immediate improvement in the economy and a balanced budget by 1984.

This year, the economy is mired in recession and the promise of a balanced budget has been replaced by the prospect of enormous deficits — up to $233 billion in 1985.

"The president shouldn't feel as comfortable, I think, as he did last year because I don't think his troops are disciplined as they were last year. ... If the president and his administration was as comfortable this year as they were last year they would not have invited us to negotiate," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee.

Even Republicans admit Rostenkowski is correct about that.

In the current election-year session, it will be tougher to persuade many Republicans to back the kind of spending cuts Reagan wants and avoid the tax increases he opposes — and still not be able to promise a balanced budget at any point in the future.

At the same time, congressional inaction on any spending and tax changes will guarantee deficits that will grow "by staggering proportions" over the next few years, according to the Congressional Budget Office. That is a problem every politician wants to avoid.

As a result, Reagan is counting on a combination of his skills as a leader and a bleak outlook to prompt politicians to vote in ways that would be unthinkable in other circumstances.

In his speech Thursday, Reagan provided a a preview of what is likely to be a months' long appeal to patriotism.

He told Americans to let their representatives know "that this is no time for politics as usual — that you, too, want an end to runaway taxes, spending, government debt and high interest rates."

He even offered a promise of a balanced budget of sorts, if only the same voters would demand passage of a Constitutional amendment to finally end those terrible deficits — probably after he has left office.

Thunderstorms forecast for weekend

With a continued probability of showers and thunderstorms through Saturday, with some possibly locally heavy tonight, Midlanders may see the 1.39 inches of precipitation recorded for the year jump dramatically.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the chance of precipitation will remain at 90 percent throught tonight, decreasing to 60 percent for Saturday.

The low tonight will be in the lower 50s with the high for Saturday expected to reach near 70.

Winds will be easterly at 10-15 mph tonight and easterly to southeasterly at 10-15 mph Saturday.

Thursday's high of 85 was 10 degrees below the record high of 95, set for that date in 1947. The overnight low of 62 was 21 degrees warmer than the record low of 41, set in 1960.

Odessa man dies in shooting incident

ODESSA — Three apparently unrelated shooting incidents Thursday — two of them involving Permian Mall again — have left one man dead, a woman injured and a restaurant damaged.

Police said Michael Edward Rheams, 29, of Odessa, died while undergoing treatment at Medical Center Hospital shortly after being shot as he sat in a car at Woodson Park on East Murphy Street about 5:30 p.m. Thursday. Rheams was found slumped in the front seat of the vehicle.

He had been shot in the head, neck and chest with a .41 caliber magnum handgun. A 33-year-old Odessa man later turned turned himself in at the sheriff's office and formal charges are being prepared. Police said four spent shells were found at the scene and no motive was immediately established.

About the same time Thursday, Mary Ann Norwood, no age available, suffered a superficial gunshot wound to the thigh as she and her husband were walking near the Whataburger Restaurant in Permian Mall — the fourth incident in a two-week string of violence at the mall.

Norwood told officers she heard a shot and felt a sting in her leg but could not tell where the shot came from. Two and a half hours earlier, another shot rang out on the mall's parking lot and a bullet shattered the plate glass window of the Whataburger. Police said the gunfire was apparently random in both cases.

Two weeks ago, a the body of a cleaning woman who worked at the mall was found in a culvert behind the mall. The victim, 65-year-old Velma Nesset, had been stabbed in the neck. And police are still searching for a shoe salesman who worked for the J.C Penney Co. in the mall.

Happy Howry, 68, disappeared about 1 p.m. Sunday after going to an Andrews Highway fast-food restaurant for lunch. His car was discovered abandoned in Big Spring Wednesday night and police supsect foul play in the case, which they say is not related to the Nesset case.

Police also say there is no apparent link between the murder, the disappearance and the two shootings which have involved the mall in the past two weeks.

Shooting victim doesn't file charges

A man injured in a shooting incident Thursday morning suffered only superficial wounds and refuses to file charges against his assailant, according to police.

Adam Gonzales, 25, of 938 Dallas St., was shot in the chest with a large caliber weapon in front of Julio's Paint and Body Shop at the intersection of Illinois Avenue and Dallas Street about 10 a.m. Thursday.

One of two men in another car, which apparently had pursued the vehicle Gonzales was in, fired several shots at him. Two or three stray bullets hit a customer's car parked in front of the shop and one bullet struck the Carter Furniture Store across the street.

The shooting apparently stemmed from an argument the night before, and police said it was a coincidence that it took place near the body shop.

Two Hobbs residents die in car accident

From staff and wire reports

ANDREWS — Two Hobbs, N.M., residents died early this morning when their car veered in front of a tractor-trailer 19 miles west of here, authorities said.

Floyd Dempsey Jr., 26, and Linda Susan Dial, 22, were pronounced dead at the scene by Andrews County Peace Justice Jay Williams.

Dempsey's 1979 Mercury coupe was traveling westbound on Texas Highway 176 when he "ran off onto the right shoulder, overcorrected and came across the center stripe and hit the truck head-on" about 1:30 a.m., said Texas Department of Public Safety trooper Buff Angel.

a 24-hour period was the highest number recorded for the month, according to Ms. Rains.

And the labor and delivery staff has had the highest productivity, or more overtime hours than any other department in the hospital.

Ms. Rains complimented not only these staff members, but also the medical and nursery staff.

"The nursery staff has been fantastic. With this many babies, there's bound to be some with complications," she said, referring to those cases where critical babies had to be watched carefully.

She added that the 36-bed nursery has been fully utilitzed during the month.

Ms. Rains said she has a chart showing the peak birth periods.

One peak begins in 1953 with 1,640 deliveries, increasing to 1,684 births in 1957 and decreasing to 1,636 babies born in 1959. Then a sharp decline occurred in 1966 with 831 deliveries which dropped to 815 births in 1972.

However, about ten years later another peak has occurred. There were 1,894 deliveries with an average of 128 births in the first six months and 169 during the last six months of 1981.

"I have predicted 2,050 births for this year," Ms. Rains said, adding that Midland's economy and population growth are the main factors of the boom.

Ms. Rains said she can remember that in 1972 when the oil companies moved their offices to Houston, the birth rate dropped.

But, she added, with all the out-of-state license plates around town, "I don't think that will happen again."

Referendums may draw voters to primary polls Saturday

behind the primary elections, Smith suggested that more voters than not are really independents, regardless of how they define their conservatism, and will "split" their votes in the November general election.

The Democratic Party chairman, who observed that he's not shy on giving opinions, ventured comments on the statewide GOP referendums.

No. 1, on legalizing parimutuel betting by local option: "Reason doesn't prevail; prejudice prevails. It's an emotional issue." The horse-race proposal will be knocked down "overwhelmingly." "I guess it'll be the good church people who will go and vote it down."

No. 2, on jail time for drunken drivers: "That's another emotional issue," which Smith predicted will get the "aye" vote. But, he ventured, it's not the drunken driver who speeds down the highway at "120 miles per hour, looping side to side. He's driving 10 miles per hour...in a ditch...in a straight line."

But Smith said many voters may become incensed over images of a drunken driver running over and killing an innocent child and vote for jail time for persons convicted of driving while intoxicated (DWI) for the second time. "Each case should be decided on its own merits," said Smith, who's not for such of an ironclad law.

No. 3, on referendums as a means of effecting laws: "It will pass overwhelmingly." Smith reasoned that the voters will conclude that those who vote ought to have a say-so on laws and government.

No. 4, on banishment of the private ownership of handguns. "Everybody wants to have a handgun and would feel comfortable if no one else did."

No. 5, on abolishing the Sunday closing law: "I think every one of them (referendums) is a deliberate attempt to get the church people to go out to vote. If the Sunday Blue Law is not a religious issue, what is?"

HOWEVER THE referendum vote turns out and however the Texas Legislature may or may not respond to it, the five referendums may "lure" voters to the polls to vote on the issues and then they will vote for candidates. Thusly, Smith conjectured, the voter will be bound to vote for the party's nominees in the November general elections.

Use of the referendum to entice voters to the polls is not a new or novel technique, Smith observed.

"Parimutuel betting, liquor by the drink and abortion have been used by political parties to manipulate (people) to get out and vote," he said.

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is prepared for a U.S.-Soviet summit this year, even if he has to meet with a substitute for ailing Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

That is the word from Norman Bailey, deputy to Reagan's White House national security adviser, William Clark. Bailey said earlier this week he would be willing to bet there would be an East-West summit in 1982, with or without Brezhnev.

The concept outlined by Bailey followed by one day Secretary of State Alexander Haig's declaration that the United States faces an "historic opportunity" to influence the Soviet Union as the Kremlin enters a period of change and possibly becomes "more amenable to the virtues of restraint."

If there is to be a summit session, Bailey told a group of reporters, it may have to be with Soviet Prime Minister Nikolai Tikhonov, 76, who would not be considered a threat to Brezhnev or other Kremlin leaders who hope to succeed Brezhnev.

The national security aide described Tikhonov as "a likely alternative if Brezhnev can't make the trip."

But, Bailey emphasized, the United States cannot say to Moscow "since your national leader is on his death bed or moribund, don't send him; send the people who are likely to take over after him."

Reagan originally had proposed that he and Brezhnev meet at the United Nations in June. But the 75-year-old Brezhnev, whose health has been declining, countered with a proposal that they confer in October.

Bailey said that "theoretically" it could be a good idea for Reagan to meet with someone other than Brezhnev, since it is likely that the Soviet president's period of leadership is drawing to an end.

He described the Soviets as anxious for a summit meeting and said Tikhonov "is not one of the contenders for succession".

But it also was obvious from Bailey's words and Haig's speech before the U.S. Chamber of Commerce that the United States also is anxious for such a get-together. Reagan said in an interview with a group of reporters last December that he expected to meet with Brezhnev sometime in 1982.

A precedent for a meeting between Reagan and Tikhonov can be found in the June 1967 session between President Lyndon Johnson and Soviet Premier Aleksei Kosygin at Glassboro, N.J. Although Brezhnev, as general secretary of the communist party, was the true head of government, Kosygin was empowered to conduct with Johnson two full days of discussions ranging over all the major problems of the world.

At Glassboro, Kosygin was accompanied by Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, who retains the same post and could be expected to join Brezhnev or Tikhonov at a summit conference with Reagan and Haig.

Texas owns bird watching record

HOUSTON (AP) — It took trained ears, alert eyes, fast cars and an airplane, but a bird watching team says it set a new American Birding Association record by identifying 235 species in a single day.

"The important thing was to get to the hot spots," said John Paulk of the National Audubon Society, who followed the four-man team from the Lower Rio Grande Valley to the middle Gulf Coast as an observer.

He said the largest variety of birds was seen at High Island.

"That's the first batch of trees in range after the birds have crossed the Gulf of Mexico from Yucatan. They literally fall out of the air, like long distance runners, into those trees," Paulk said.

The Texas record edged the previous high for North America of 231 species of birds identified in 1978 in California, where Paulk said most previous records have been held.

"It's the first time this record has been established in Texas," he said.

The Texas expedition began Tuesday at 1 a.m. in McAllen and ended up in Port Bolivar, near Galveston, about 10 p.m. that night.

Paulk said the birders rushed from place to place in a station wagon in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, ending up at the Falcon Dam before taking a private plane to Bolivar, where the team boarded a van for the rest of the trip.

He said two species, including a hawk, were seen in the air from the plane. "You never stop looking in this business," Paulk said.

To qualify as an identified bird species, 95 percent of the species listed must have been verified by all four team members.

Paulk said the rarest bird spotted by the group was Swainson's warbler, a tiny brown bird with a white belly and a distinctive stripe over his eye, which was seen on High Island.

Paulk said the rare warbler had wintered in Mexico and was probably en route to his summer home in Oklahoma or northern Texas.

Floridians gambling on winning gaming controversy this time

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Drubbed at the polls four years ago, Florida proponents of casino gambling regrouped and are now trying their luck again in a fight to legalize crap tables and slot machines in the Sunshine State.

In 1978, casino backers financed their $3 million effort largely from the fancy, oceanfront hotels of Miami Beach that would have been the big winners had voters approved game houses for a 23-mile strip of the Gold Coast.

This time it's a low-key, grass-roots effort that's shying away from the big-time corporate guns, says Miami Beach publicist Jay Kashuk, who helped organize the unsuccessful 1978 drive.

KASHUK WANTS TO put two proposals before voters — a local option to allow casinos anywhere in Florida, unlike the Las Vegas-style strip sought the last time, and one to begin a state lottery.

Fifteen states now run lotteries; only Nevada and New Jersey have casinos.

So far, Florida gaming backers have gathered about 130,000 signatures on each of two petitions to put the initiatives to the November ballot, Kashuk said. About 300,000 signatures are needed on each.

While casino backers regrouped, opponents lined up, too. Leading the bipartisan foil are former Gov. Reubin Askew, who led the 1978 opposition; Gov. Bob Graham, Jack Eckerd, the drugstore magnate and unsuccessful Republican candidate against Graham in 1978, and the Rev. S.S. Morris Jr., a Jacksonville minister.

The arguments on both sides are the same, but in four years, the state's crime and economy have worsened, providing new fodder to gambling proponents.

Kashuk rejects arguments that casinos will bring more crime, saying lawlessness is rampant already "and we don't have casinos in the state." Instead, proponents say casinos will help the war on crime by adding millions to state coffers for law enforcement.

The Florida Legislature this year raised the state sales tax by a penny per dollar, to 5 percent, partly to raise money for crime fighting.

Last year, Nevada clubs and casinos raised $131.7 million for the state, while New Jersey casinos produced $86.5 million — and three Atlantic City casinos were not open all of 1981.

AS NICE AS EXTRA money would be to fight crime, Graham said, "We need to encourage the best qualities in our people, not pander to the weakest."

John F. Brown, a former New Jersey lawmaker and now a South Florida resident and gambling supporter, questions whether Graham's job includes responsibilities as moral leader of the state.

"The whole key in this campaign is going to be, don't let anyone dictate to you what your destiny is," he said. "We're going to bring that message to the people. We're going to make it a people's campaign and keep it there."

That wasn't the case in 1978 when the the casino initiative lost in each of Florida's 67 counties, collecting only 29 percent of the vote.

Askew, the popular ex-governor who is currently "testing the waters" for a possible Democratic presidential bid, says casino backers should have gotten the message in 1978, when he headed No Casinos, Inc.

This time, Askew has handed the anti-casino reins to Graham, to the dismay of Republican casino opponents who fear Graham's anti-gambling role will help his likely bid for re-election.

The two parties have entered into a fragile agreement aimed at keeping the campaign bipartisan.

Publisher says June issue last 'Book Digest'

NEW YORK (AP) — Dow Jones & Co. has announced that it will cease publishing Book Digest after the June issue, which has just gone to press.

The 8-year-old publication, with a monthly circulation of 400,000, had been offered for sale by the company prior to the closing. At that time, Dow Jones said the magazine was not self-supporting and it was "reluctant to invest the additional sums required" to cover future deficits. The company bought it from the Book Digest Co. in 1978.

Dow Jones Chairman and Chief Executive Warren H. Phillips told the magazine's 38-member staff Wednesday that discussions with potential buyers were unsuccessful.

Dow Jones said shutdown expenses would be more than offset by elimination of Book Digest deficits for the year. Angela Santoro, corporate relations associate for Dow Jones, said efforts were being made to place the Book Digest employees in new jobs.

The Manhattan-based magazine once boasted a circulation of 1 million, but deliberately reduced it in an effort to use a higher quality readership to attract advertisers.

Book Digest published excerpts and digests of best-selling novels and articles about writers and authors.

Legislators want merit to merit consideration

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Two House members said this week they will introduce a resolution that would put the Legislature on record in favor of state employee layoffs based on merit rather tnan seniority.

Rep. Paul Moreno, D-EL Paso, said "layoffs based on 'last hired, first fired' discriminate against minorities and women."

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

'Embryo,' 'fetus' time-connected

Dear Dr. Solomon: My sister and I are having an argument that we would like you to settle. What is the difference between an embryo and a fetus? — Sara, Akron, Ohio

Dear Sara: Both terms apply to the developing human being before birth. From conception until the eighth week of pregnancy, it is called an embryo. After that time and until delivery, this developing organism is called a fetus.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My boyfriend said that if I drink water while I'm running, I will get stomach cramps. Is this true? — M.N., Tulsa

Dear M.N.: It used to be common practice not to drink during a competition, and the established thought was that the liquid would lead to cramps. Now, physicians recommend that runners drink water frequently in order to replace lost body fluids. This will also prevent heat stroke.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A close friend of mine lost a daughter through crib death. If a child is seriously sick, the parents can learn to accept the fact that it may die. But when a child is healthy, they keep asking themselves what they might have done to cause it. How can anyone explain how a healthy child can die so suddenly? — Mabel, Durham, N.C.

Dear Mabel: A great deal of research into the causes of the sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) is currently underway. Your question assumes that a baby who dies of SIDS is healthy prior to death, but this may not be the case. Researchers at the University of Maryland Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Institute say it is not certain that victims of SIDS are healthy before their deaths. Their investigations are continuing, and many of the perplexing questions surrounding this disease should eventually be answered.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Our youngest child is away at college, and my wife is making waves about returning to work. I may be old fashioned, but I'd like her to stay at home and have my dinner on the table when I get there. We can always use more money, but it isn't that essential. I tell her that all she'll get out of working are ulcers and maybe a heart attack, but I'm not getting through. I'd appreciate your opinion. — Mr. T. O'D., Bakersfield, Calif.

Dear Mr. O'D.: I'm going to restrict my comments to the medical aspect of employment for women. I make it a point never to become involved in family arguments.

There is no evidence that a woman's health is adversely affected when she takes a job outside the home. Dr. Estelle R. Ramey, of the Georgetown University School of Medicine, says that successful women outlive their counterparts in the general population by about 29 percent. The stress that you suggest results from outside employment does not stem from the pressure of the job itself, but from a feeling of lack of control over a situation.

Whether or not your wife takes a job outside the home is something you and she will have to work out, but I don't believe you can use the risk of adverse health effects to support your argument.

Uneven beat risk increaser

BOSTON (AP) — People who have a kind of irregular heartbeat called atrial fibrillation face a substantially increased risk of death from cardiovascular disease, a study says.

The research, conducted by the Framingham Heart Study, found that about 2 percent of all men and women have this disorder.

The study found that atrial fibrillation is most likely to develop in people who suffer from heart failure, rheumatic heart disease and heart disease caused by high blood pressure. However, 31 percent of the victims had no obvious heart disease.

The researchers based their findings on exams conducted on 5,191 people over 22 years. Their findings were published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

The research, directed by Dr. William B. Kannel, found that atrial fibrillations appears with equal frequency in men and women.

The disorder occurs when the walls of the heart's atria stop contracting rhythmically and twitch irregularly.

Development of the disorder doubled the overall death rate, they found. Victims died an average of six years after the irregularity was discovered.

Pallbearers carrying the coffin of Archbishop John Cardinal Cody leave Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago Thursday following the Mass of Christian Burial for the 74-year-old Catholic leader. Cody died Sunday.

Cody laid to rest in traditional rites

CHICAGO (AP) — Civic and church leaders bade farewell to Cardinal John P. Cody, who was buried during a ceremony heavy with tradition and pomp "because we think he deserves all this," a mourner said.

Cody, who headed the nation's largest Roman Catholic archdiocese for almost 17 years, was eulogized at funeral services Thursday as a man with "a great heart full of love."

Thousands of priests, bishops and cardinals, civic leaders and the Vatican's apostolic delegate to the United States joined in an emotional tribute to the controversial prelate, who died Sunday of heart failure at the age of 74.

President Reagan sent a message saying Cody's "long and distinguished service to his church and to his country is now part of our history."

At a private ceremony before the funeral at Holy Name Cathedral, his ring and red cap were removed from the body before the casket was sealed. The ring will be passed on to Cody's successor, and the hat will lie near the altar for one month. On May 25, the hat will be raised to the rafters of the cathedral, beside three others.

Helen Dolan Wilson, Cody's lifelong friend and step-cousin, was among the mourners. She sat in the front pew of the cathedral with her son, David, and wiped away tears during the service.

A federal grand jury was investigating charges that Cody diverted up to $1 million in tax-exempt church funds to Mrs. Wilson. Both denied wrongdoing although they never addressed specific allegations.

The Very Rev. John J. Fahey, an urban vicar and pastor emeritus at St. Luke's Church in River Forest, called Cody a man of faith, devotion, compassion and concern.

"He was a man with a heart, a great heart full of love," Fahey said.

"He was cautious. But it was a caution that came not from cowardice but a caution that came from concern," said Fahey, who was the first pastor appointed by Cody when he became archbishop in Chicago in 1965.

Looking at the casket, he concluded: "Old friend, we say farewell.... May God give you the peace and the happiness that your great heart and your great life deserves."

Cardinal William Baum, a Vatican official, delivered his condolences from Pope John Paul II, saying, "The Holy Father is very mindful and grateful of the friendship of Cardinal Cody."

Cody, a native of St. Louis, celebrated his 50th anniversary in the priesthood last December but was in failing health during the months before his death. He was expected to retire as head of the 2.5 million member Chicago Archdiocese on Christmas Eve, his 75th birthday.

Also attending the Mass were representatives of the College of Cardinals from across the nation, John Burgess of the White House staff representing Reagan, and state and city leaders including Mayor Jane M. Byrne and Gov. James R. Thompson.

Eight policemen on motorcycles led the funeral motorcade to Mount Carmel Cemetery in suburban Hillside, where Cody's body was placed in Bishops' Chapel, which holds three of his five predecessors.

"We love him — we think he deserves all this," said mourner Martha Benesh of Westchester. "He's a great man."

Douglas Haubert of Villa Park, who sat on the grass at the cemetery, said he came after watching the funeral on television.

"I was sitting at home, watching the funeral Mass and I started crying," the unemployed 23-year-old said. "I didn't even know the man, but I finally realized I was crying for the church, for the church we believe in."

Hundreds of people — from youngsters on bicycles to senior citizens — lined the roads leading to the domed chapel. An honor guard of 15 sailors from Great Lakes Naval Training Center stood at attention, and about 30 Knights of Columbus, a Catholic men's group, raised their sabers in salute as the motorcade came to a stop.

DEATHS

Velma 'Mo' Smith

Services for Velma "Mo" Cummins Smith, 73, of 700 S. Scharbauer Drive, will be at 1 p.m. Saturday at the Christian Church of Midland with Robert Blazek, minister, officiating. Graveside services will follow at 3:30 p.m. at the Monahans Cemetery in Monahans under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Smith died Thursday at a Midland hospital following an illness of several months.

She was born April 8, 1909, in Grandfalls, where she grew up. She married the late James W. Cummins Dec. 26, 1929, in Las Cruces, N.M. They later moved back to Grandfalls where they resided until 1946 when they moved to Iraan. In 1977, they moved to Midland. She was a member of the Christian Church of Midland.

Survivors include two sons, James W. Cummins of Odessa and Arnold E. Cummins of Andrews; a daughter, Patsy R. Cummins of Midland; two brothers, George Brown of Cyanosa and Archie Brown of Grandfalls; three sisters, Sue Moore of Phoenix, Ariz., Pauline Wilson of Imperial and Margie Chandler of Houston; and five grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be made to the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center or Hospice of Midland.

Anne Miller

Anne Miller, 61, of 2000 North L St.,died Wednesday in a Midland hospital following a short illness.

Memorial services were to be at 2 p.m. today in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Father Cliff Blackburn of St. Ann's Catholic Church officiating, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Vaccination side effects seldom last, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new study says children who develop seizures or fever following vaccinations have only a slight risk of suffering permanent brain damage or disability.

The government-sponsored study reported Thursday said seizures related to immunizations for such childhood diseases as whooping cough and measles represented only 1.4 percent of the 2,766 seizures seen in 40,000 children.

Of the 39 children with vaccine-related seizures, only one appeared to suffer any physical, mental or intellectual defect when tested seven years later, researchers said at the annual meeting of the American Academy of Neurology.

SEIZURES or tremors affecting all or part of the body are considered indications of possible brain or central nervous system injury, and some vaccines have been linked to seizures.

One girl in the study suffered a moderate speech defect when tested years after experiencing a lengthy, severe seizure following a combined vaccine shot, they noted.

"Our study tends to confirm that the incidence of serious neurological problems (from childhood vaccines) would be very, very small," said Dr. Deborah G. Hirtz, a consultant with the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke.

THE STUDY by Ms. Hirtz and Dr. Karin B. Nelson of the institute comes at a time of renewed discussion about the safety of some vaccines. Of particular concern is the diptheria, pertussis (whooping cough) and tetanus (DPT) vaccine recommended for pre-school children.

Reports that the pertussis part of the DPT vaccine may cause brain damage and other serious complications coneern some parents. But government health officials say the benefits of the vaccine far outweigh any known risks.

Ms. Hirtz and Ms. Nelson said their study did not address the incidence of seizures after vaccinations, but only the outcome of children who actually suffered seizures.

If seizures do occur, Ms. Nelson said in an interview, "Our results allow one to reassure parents that unless the seizure was lengthy, the children are OK."

IN THE STUDY, 10 of the vaccine-related seizures came within two weeks after DPT shots, 10 following measles vaccines and the rest were associated with other types of injections.

Dr. Alan Hinman of the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said serious complications such as brain damage and Sudden Infant Death Syndrome have been noted in a few children after vaccinations. But he said it is unclear if the DPT vaccine was directly responsible in each case or if the link was coincidental.

The U.S. Public Health Service said there are currently fewer than 3,000 cases of whooping cough in the U.S. each year, resulting in 5 to 20 deaths. Before the vaccine, there were about 265,000 cases annually and 7,000 deaths.

Without immunization, total cases would increase an estimated 70-fold and deaths would quadruple, the service said.

PERTUSSIS, a leading cause of infant mortatity before the vaccine, is a highly contagious bacterial disease of children that can lead to pneumonia and brain damage. Victims are plagued with fits of coughing and gasp for air with a whooping sound.

Mistrial declared

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A mistrial was declared today in the murder trial of Pamela Ruth Fielder, accused of shooting to death her gynecologist husband last summer.

State District Judge Gordon Gray said he granted a motion for a mistrial by defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes because prosecutors "inadvertently" failed to turn over to Mrs. Fielder's attorneys all oral statements they planned to present in the case.

The motion followed testimony outside the jury's presence by former police officer Michael Wayne Horn, who said Mrs. Fielder told him she shot her husband, Dr. Darwin Fielder, because he was crying and she couldn't stand to see him suffer.

WHO HIJACKED THE REAGAN REVOLUTION

The Eastern Republicans! That's Who!

Those who were never really for Reagan in the first place. They only jumped on the Reagan bandwagon after he got the Republican nomination. But somehow an awful lot of them wormed their way into key positions:

—on the White House staff!
—in the Cabinet and Federal Courts
—and in far too many other places in government.

That's why the massive tax and budget cuts originally proposed by Reagan have been chopped in half. And that's the key reason the economy is in the shape that it's in.

The Johnny come latelys just don't believe in the Reagan revolution—and their half measures just don't work.

Can we do anything about it? You bet! Elect men to office who have been supporters of Reagan from the beginning,

men who can't be stampeded by the TV networks or influenced by the New York Times, the Washington Post, or the Eastern liberal Republicans.

You can elect such a man this Saturday, May 1st—in the Republican Primary—for the U.S. Senate. The man who'll help

He's solid conservative—a staunch Reagan supporter in both Texas presidential primaries in 1976 and 1980.

In 1976 Texas gave Reagan his first big Primary win—he won all 100 delegates from our state. That got his presidential campaign rolling. Texas can get the Reagan revolution rolling again in 1982 by electing Walter Mengden U.S. Senator—

Saturday! May 1st! 7 AM to 7 PM!

In the Republican Primary

MMH board talks about day care

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Day care for employees' children, the 100-bed expansion and an update on the chemical dependency certificate of need application were all discussed Thursday at the regular monthly meeting of Midland Memorial Hospital's governing boards.

The boards also discussed financial matters and patient responses to a hospital survey on the emergency room. In the board of directors' meeting, the two newly-elected directors, Pat Estes and Tevis Herd, were sworn in by Judge Barbara Culver.

The hospital's planning committee reported to the board of trustees that the possibility for the hospital's own day-care center is in the discussion stage.

Margaret Purvis, trustee, said a day-care center could help with the retention and recruitment of nurses which has been an ongoing problem for MMH.

John Dorn, trustee and planning committee chairman, said there is a need for the center. Nurses with children have expressed a need for convenient day care so they could work. The committee has a house under consideration for the center and if the plan is implemented it will available to all hospital employees.

Wanda Mohr, director, said, according to studies, out of 100 employees the center should be utilized by 20 to 25 percent of them.

Ms. Purvis added it is estimated that out of the 600 hospital employees, 60 children would be the norm, and it takes at least 100 to break even.

Another recruitment tool for nurses is the possibility of employee housing. The planning committee reported that the housing search is still active.

Dorn also said the planning committee is currently meeting with TriBrook, the hospital's management firm, about the 100-bed expansion. He said a meeting to work on the certificate of need application for this project is scheduled today.

However, Ray Branson, MMH president, said he does not know when the application will be submitted.

Dorn reported that other needed expansions in the hospital are the exisiting cafeteria and the fire alarm system.

In an update on the chemical dependency hearings, Branson said a decision could be made by June 25.

He said each of the three applicants' — MMH, Southwest Health Inc., and Parkview — attorneys will submit a finding of facts, or summary to the Texas Health Facilities Commission hearing officer. The hearing officer will then give a recommendation to the three-member commission which will make the final decision.

"But I've been told the commission does not have to abide by the hearing officer's recommendation. We certainly know that the local HSA recommendation didn't hold any weight," Branson said, referring to a favorable recommendation that MMH was given by the local health systems agency which was not accepted at the THFC hearings in Austin.

Dorn noted that this process has "cost the hospital district and taxpayers about a quarter of a million dollars."

Branson added that he thought Dorn meant that this included the entire process which began as a study in 1980 and the expenses for MMH's witnesses.

In an interview after the trustee meeting, Dorn said the figure was an "off the cuff remark" and Branson added the figures are not complete as of yet to verify the $250,000 estimate.

Another concern that carried over into the board of directors' meeting which follows the trustee meeting was the hospital's emergency room.

Dr. Walter Parks, trustee, said after reporting "glowing patient responses last month" there has been an increasing number of dissatisfied patients, especially with the nursing care in the emergency room.

Parks said the complaints were "under full investigation."

Ed Magruder, director, said he is "hesitant to give any validity to complaints from people who do not pay their bills."

Parks noted that the comments make up a 12 percent return, but this has been consistent with the reply rate each month.

Pat Estes, director, asked if the the Minor Emergency Medical Center located across the street from MMH had anything to do with the type or number of patients the emergency room was seeing.

Approximately 2,000 patients went through the MMH emergency room in March.

A.C. Buchanan, MMH vice president of operations, said the emergency room has an overlapping of staff between noon and midnight. There are six medical personnel in that department and two clerical workers, Buchanan noted.

Mrs. Estes expressed a concern that this "is a large number of patients for only nine people."

But, Buchanan, Branson, and Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance, all assured Mrs. Estes that this was not a question of short staffing versus quality staffing.

In financial matters, the directors signed two checks totaling $182,204.43 for indigent care. Miller said $54,802.57 of that amount was paid to Lubbock General Hospital for a transfer patient. This leaves a balance of approximately $150,000 budgeted for indigent care the next five months.

Craig receives more money than other contested candidates

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The contested candidates — Republicans all — in Saturday's political races had received almost $10,000 in contributions in the last reporting period a week ago.

Receiving the most money and more named supporters than the other candidates in the two GOP races was C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, the 58-year-old real-estate broker and former Midland school trustee who is seeking the Republican Party's nomination for Commissioner of Midland County Precinct 2. His opponent in the race is 43-year-old Carma Durham, a Greenwood housewife. Both want the chance to oust and succeed the incumbent, a 56-year-old Democrat and farmer, Charlie Welch, who has held the commissioner's job since 1969.

Craig had received $4,975 in donations from 24 contributors, according to records in County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry's office. His expenditures totaled $1,437.98 up until the last week leading to the primary election.

Ms. Durham's contributions added up to $1,750 from three supporters. Her expenditures totaled $1,694.10.

In the race for the GOP nomination for district clerk, Vivian Wood, 43, reported $1,525 in contributions from a dozen well-wishers. Her expenditures added up to $1,521.03. Pat Cobb, 40, who also is bidding for the GOP nod to seek to dispose of Madge Wallis, 58, a Democrat who has held the district clerk's job since 1975, reported $1,380 in contribtions, including a $1,000 loan from her campaign treasurer, from four supporters, and $980.50 in expenditures.

Most expenditures were for paying for newspaper and broadcast advertisements, posters, calling cards, brochures, letters and postage. Funds expended this week will be reported following the election.

Contributors to each candidate and the amounts given were:

MADGE B. WALLIS
District Clerk
Midland County Courthouse
Midland, Texas 79701

April 29, 1982

Dear Friends:

In two previous elections, you have given me the opportunity to work for you as District Clerk of Midland County, and I am so grateful to you because I think it is the best job in the world and I know I work for the finest people in the world.

Although I am unopposed in Saturday's Democratic Primary, I must run in the November election. If being a dedicated and hard-working employee means something to you, then I hope you'll elect me to another term. Supervising the work of 12 deputies requires the experience and know-how which 8 years of service as District Clerk has given me.

The work of this office has almost tripled since 1975, but we have been able to keep up with it and stay within our budgets. The judges who handle your business in the courts depend heavily on the District Clerk, and there is no room for error. Our staff of trained, courteous deputies are doing an outstanding job, and we want to continue to do so.

Please consider my qualifications, the importance of this office to you and to the judicial system. If you believe the conduct of this office means more than just politics, then please help me in this campaign for re-election. I need and will deeply appreciate your support!

Gratefully and sincerely,

Madge B. Wallis

The Village: Best place to be in spring

By JOYCE WADLER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Spring came suddenly to the neighborhood last weekend, taking us seemingly overnight from the snowfall of two weeks ago to a Saturday in July, and for many in the neighborhood, that meant getting over to the Shanvilla Grocery store, where the petunias had just come in, and putting up the window boxes.

We don't have a lot of acreage in the Village. Folks with a backyard are considered DuPonts, and a row of window boxes is a treat. That, perhaps, is why when the petunias and geraniums and marigolds and ivy arrive at the Shanvilla, it creates such a stir.

Village couples with their babies in denim Snuglis spend a long time discussing this shade of purple petunia or that. Village dogs — which unlike other dogs wear red or blue bandanas around their neck with the coming of spring — loll about on the warm pavement and stretch. The selection of flowers for the window box — flowers that may bloom until early November — is a moment to be savored. The other morning, a gentleman in black leather pants and a black T-shirt with the sleeves torn off stood in front of the plant stand at Shanvilla for a very long time, holding in one hand a pot of red geraniums, in the other pink, much the same as you would see anywhere, except for his uniform.

There were as well, last weekend, other signs of spring: The unicycle man making his appearance after the winter freeze; the stepped-up sale of dope in Washington Square Park; the Jamaicans, in dreadlocks, showing off with a soccer ball. Boy couples and girl couples and even heterosexual pairs strolled hand in hand, basking in the famous Village live-and-let-live. One hopes it will not be sexist to report that the one spat viewed was a traditional pair-off. A man and a woman, undaunted by spring, yelling at one another deep in the West Village on Horatio Street.

"Don't get into the car, if you don't trust me," he said, but she did.

It's a curious neighborhood, Greenwich Village, so much legend about it, some of it true, some not. Seeing the patisseries where the Valentine hearts say 'Beat Me' and the jewelery store advertises 'Ears pierced — With or Without Pain,' tourists are likely to get the wrong idea, viewing the neighborhood as Bohemia.

In fact, it is too expensive for that. One-bedroom studios, which were $125 in the '50s when the beatniks really did exist, now are $900. Even so, the Bohemian tradition of prideful tolerance — and a preponderance of artists — remains.

The unofficial mascot of the neighborhood is Rollerina, a transvestite who wears a long ballet skirt, black ankle-height roller skates and a platium wig, and who skates about blessing everyone with her magic wand.

The neighbors from whom one borrows a cup of coffee beans are unlike the neighbors elsewhere. In the last building I lived in, when I was locked out, I was obliged to knock on the door of downstairs neighbors, the gay priests, who wore lavendar shirts with stiff white collars. The building also included a writer named Levinson, who cranked out potboilers at $500 a shot for an outfit he called "Toilet Bowl Books." They were poor about paying Levinson. "We got a million starving writers out there," they told him. "Sometimes we never pay them and they never even call. Maybe they die."

Levinson could not endure spring. The arm-in-arm of the streets made him morose. "Love, your magic spell is everywhere," he'd say, walking down Bleeker at midday. Then he'd go to his room.

"How is the Village?" a refugee asked the other day. "Is The White Horse Tavern still there — have things changed?"

It was my sad duty, as a Villager for 17 years, to report that the White Horse — the legendary watering hole of Dylan Thomas — now had cafe tables with umbrellas that said Cinzano out front; that stores that once sold paint were restaurants with hanging plants.

And yet, on the other hand, even with the rents, it was possible that same of the essential heart of the Village remained. There were many strange faces at the Lion's Head, where the clientele's dust jackets line the wall, but lacking a doorman — as most Villagers do — you could still use the bar as a mail drop.

The Peacock Cafe had lost its lease, and had been forced to move, but the same waitress, in her own good time, eventually brought you your lemonade.

On a pleasant night, spring through summer, you could take a stroll and find a musician — a handwritten note in the guitar case — singing in the street for change.

This occurred, in fact, Saturday night, as two other villagers and I, technically middle-aged, were walking toward the old symbol of the Village, Washington Square Park. Italian food — old Village-style red tomato sauce Italian food — was on their minds. Monte's on MacDougal Street; Il Ponte Vecchio on Thompson. All were considered and with the places there were memories — the visit to Bob Dylan's house when he lived on MacDougal, Phil Oakes singing downstairs at the Limelight, a guy named Dave when he lived in the neighborhood with a beard to his chest. He's an editor at Newsday now.

Crossing the street, at the corner of Sixth Avenue and West Fourth, there was a musician, an old guy, and about him a small crowd. His guitar case held a few dollars, which he had unquestionably placed there himself, and he was singing a very old song. The middle-aged Villagers, recalling it when it was new, listened and laughed. Ponte Vecchio, down past the chess parlor, was full, so they settled at Raffaela's, at Houston Street. It was very old style; with waiters in white shirts, a picture of Sinatra.

U.S. firms watch worsening situation

Washington Post News Service

Although they are watching the worsening situation carefully, U.S. firms with plants in Argentina said earlier this week that they are trying to operate normally as the South American country drifts toward war with Great Britain.

In response to a State Department advisory that U.S. citizens exercise "special prudence" in Argentina, some companies say they have restricted travel by their employees to the country.

However, most say their operations there are run by Argentine citizens and can continue despite the diplomatic tension between Argentina and Great Britain.

"Our people report that things seem fairly normal," said Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. spokesman John Perdine. Goodyear, which has been manufacturing tires in Argentina since 1931, employs 1,700 workers three, but only three of them are U.S. citizens, he said.

"We are just following the situation and trying to do business as normally as possible," said John Tome, a spokesman for Ford Motor Co., which sold 80,900 vehicles last year in Argentina, and which has the largest U.S.-based operation in the South American nation.

Although U.S. businesses have been active in Argentina for more than 65 years, investment there has grown rapidly since December 1976, when Argentina enacted new trade laws that made it one of the most liberal Latin American nations in allowing foreign-owned businesses.

The Department of Commerce ranks Argentina as the world's 15th-largest host to U.S. direct investment and the fourth-largest in Latin America. Direct investment includes ownership of 10 percent or more in a company.

By the end of 1980, the most recent year for which figures are available, U.S. direct investment in Argentina was estimated at $2.45 billion, up from $1.8 billion in 1979 and $1 billion in 1970.

Most of the recent investment has been in the energy, automotive and financial industries, the Department of Commerce said.

None of the U.S. firms contacted by the Los Angeles Times said they planned to evacuate U.S. citizens stationed in Argentina.

U.S. ready to side with Britain

WASHINGTON (AP) — With its marathon peace effort apparently in tatters, the Reagan administration is prepared to cast off its mantle of neutrality and side with Britain in its dispute with Argentina over the Falklands Islands.

A U.S. official told The Associated Press that a statement supporting Britain was being drafted Thursday night and all that remained was a final decision to make it public.

That could come as early as today.

Dean Fischer, the State Department spokesman, said he would have "no comment" on such a possibility.

The decision to draft the statement appears to have been made after Argentina reacted coolly to the latest plan from Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. for settling the dispute without further bloodshed.

MEANWHILE THURSDAY, the Senate, with only Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., dissenting, approved a resolution calling on the administration to "further all efforts" to secure withdrawal of Argentine troops from the Falklands. Language urging support for Britain by "all appropriate means" was deleted before the 79-1 vote.

The official cautioned that even though a statement of support for Britain was being drafted, Haig might try to use it as leverage in one last attempt to get the Argentines to agree to his plan.

If such a strategy were successful, it would not be necessary to release the statement, said the official, who insisted on not being identified beyond a "U.S. official."

But there also was no doubt the administration had decided it must side with Britain, long regarded as the United States' closest ally, in the event of an outbreak of hostilities with Argentina.

Officials felt the U.S. position of apparent neutrality was not being understood by many Americans, who questioned why the administration was being even-handed in a dispute involving democratic Great Britain and a military dictatorship in Argentina with one of the world's worst human rights records during the past decade.

THE PREPARATION of the statement clearly was timed to coincide with Britain's imposition of a 200-mile zone of war around the Falklands at 7 a.m. EDT Friday, an event that could prove a flashpoint in the crisis.

U.S. officials were deeply pessimistic late Thursday about the prospect of averting renewed fighting that neither Argentina nor Britain seemed to want and that Haig worked tirelessly to avoid, flying over 31,000 miles in dual visits to both London and Buenos Aires.

Fischer said Haig remained ready to fly to Buenos Aires or London again if the secretary of state thought it would facilitate a peaceful solution.

But Walter Stoessel, the deputy secretary of state, said in a speech Thursday: "The prospect for hostilities is coming very close indeed. The proposals which we have made and supported for a peaceful solution so far have not been accepted, so it appears the outlook is not an optimistic one."

Haig's latest plan would postpone a decision on whether Argentina or Britain is entitled to sovereignty over the Falklands and leave this for an international commission to resolve. In the meantime there would be joint administration of the islands, including participation by the United States.

ARGENTINA WOULD withraw its troops and Britain would halt the advance of its warships under the plan, an official said.

The plan to let a commission decide the sovereignty issue to provide "breathing space" for both nations has so far been unacceptable to Argentina, the U.S. official said.

Argentina's foreign minister, Nicanor Costa Mendez, said in a letter delivered to the State Department Thursday that, in effect, Argentina "cannot return to the pre-April 2 situation," the official said. April 2 was the date Argentina invaded the islands and declared its sovereignty.

Sovereignty "is the sticking point; it always has been," said the official.

The Argentine Embassy released a statement Thursday night saying it had not rejected the Haig proposals but was only commenting on them.

However, British diplomatic sources said the Argentines apparently were stalling for time, which they said was unacceptable to the government of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

"It sounds to me like they are playing for time, and we are not in the business of playing for time," said the source, who didn't want to be identified. "We have a fleet down there in rough seas and every hour we postpone a decision saps British strength. We need real negotiations and a real diplomatic solution. Playing for time won't do it."

The source said the British always have been confident that when the chips were down, "America would make it pretty clear which side it would be on."

The administration's preparations for siding with Britain were undoubtedly influenced by pressures in Congress.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee Thursday approved a resolution saying the United States should provide "full diplomatic support" to Britain. It described Britain as "a loyal ally that has stood by the United States during the Iranian hostage crisis and numerous other disputes." The resolution is expected to go to the House floor for a vote next Tuesday.

Although preparing to take Britain's side, it wasn't clear whether the administration was prepared to adopt economic sanctions against Argentina.

'Ordinary person' now leading British fleet

LONDON (AP) — The Royal Navy took "an ordinary person who lives in suburbia" away from a desk to command Britain's mightiest battle fleet since World War II.

Red-haired Rear Adm. John "Sandy" Woodward, a 49-year-old submarine specialist, was the desk-bound director of naval planning until Argentina seized the Falkland Islands April 2 and he was sent to recapture them.

He sailed April 5 aboard the aircraft carrier Hermes and told British correspondents aboard the 28,700-ton flat-top: "I'm very astonished to find myself in this position. I've been a virtual civil servant for the past three years, commuting into London every day. I don't see myself as the hawk-eyed, sharp-nosed, hard military man, leading a battle fleet into the annals of history."

DURING HIS assignment at the Defense Department, the biggest vessel Woodward commanded was his 14-foot sailboat on the tranquil waters of the Thames River near his home at Teddington.

"You can always spot Sandy," said Phil England, the commodore of the local yacht club. "He's usually out front. He wins races."

Now he's out front with a battle fleet of 27 warships and 37 support vessels crammed with troops, guns and tanks.

Retired Capt. John Moore, once Woodward's commanding officer, said he's "a bold thinker, very intuitive. They couldn't have picked a better chap for the job."

DESPITE THE firepower of Woodward's fleet, his 3,500 troops will face an estimated 9,000 dug-in Argentine soldiers. That's the reverse of orthodox military doctrine which says attackers should outnumber defenders 4-1 to have any chance of success.

His small force of 20 Sea Harrier jets also is outnumbered by Argentina's 145 combat planes, backed by another 45 counter-insurgency strike aircraft.

"Any assault will call for some bold initiatives — and a lot of luck," one defense source commented. "But Woodward has a good team and a well-honed force."

The British fleet won the first skirmish last Sunday, recapturing South Georgia Island, 800 miles east of the Falklands, and knocking out one of Argentina's four submarines.

Woodward signaled navy headquarters in London: "Be pleased to inform Her Majesty that the White Ensign (of the Royal Navy) flies alongside the Union Jack in South Georgia. God save the Queen."

CRITICISM followed congratulations when he predicted in an interview that an invasion of the Falklands would be a "walkover." Unconfirmed reports said the defense chiefs ordered him to moderate his statements.

Woodward called a news conference aboard the Hermes and said: "I'm in no doubt that unless people say, 'Let's stop,' it will be a long and bloody campaign. I become very emotional talking about it. I feel very strongly about it. It would be with great reluctance that I would put anybody in the front line unless I'm totally prepared to go there myself."

Election of Salvadoran banker brought about by rightist split

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A split in the rightist coalition in the Constituent Assembly made possible the election of a banker favored by military leaders, the Christian Democrats and the United States as provisional president of El Salvador.

The National Conciliation Party broke with the assembly's ultra-rightist speaker, Roberto d'Aubuisson, and sided with the centrist Christian Democrats to elect Alvaro Magana, 56-year-old head of the National Mortgage Bank for the last 17 years. He is a political independent who is considered to have moderately conservative views.

The vote in the assembly Thursday was 36-17 with seven abstentions.

The assembly also elected three vice presidents, one each from the Christian Democrats, National Conciliation and d'Aubuisson's Republican Nationalist Alliance, or ARENA.

Although the Christian Democrats are the largest party in the assembly and ARENA is second, National Conciliation's Raul Molina got the first vice presidency and will become acting president if Magana dies, travels abroad or is incapacitated.

Dr. Gabriel Gutierrez Castro of ARENA was elected second vice president, and the Christian Democrats' Dr. Paulo Mauricio Albergue got the third vice presidency.

Magana and the three vice presidents will be sworn in Sunday at a ceremony that will terminate the U.S.-backed civilian-military junta that has headed the government since a coup in October 1979.

"The principal thing for El Salvador will be economic recovery, and that will create a climate of confidence," Magana said in a recent interview. "The provisional government should create this climate so that the constitutional government has it available."

U.S. Ambassador Deane R. Hinton said in a statement that the election of "a government of national unity is good news for El Salvador."

"The Salvadoran people today took another highly significant forward step in the democratic process so overwhelmingly endorsed last March 28 by over one and a half million free Salvadoran voters," he said. "Democracy is at work."

Magana, one of three nominees put forward by the military commanders after the Christian Democrats and the rightists could not agree, has said little about the war between the government and leftist guerrillas in which an estimated 33,000 people have died in the last two and a half years. But he has been described as flexible toward the land reform program and bank nationalization which the junta president, Jose Napoleon Duarte of the Christian Democrats, put through in an attempt to get the support of the peasants away from the leftists.

The rightists condemned the reforms during the election campaign. But after they won the majority of seats, U.S. officials warned them that if they rolled back the land redistribution program, Congress would probably refuse to continue financing the war against the guerrillas.

The next test of rightist unity will come when Magana submits his cabinet to the assembly, which voted earlier this week to give itself the veto over his choices. Once the provisional government is approved, the assembly is to begin writing a new constitution and preparing for the election of a president and a legislative assembly.

Iraq disputes Iran's claim of capture of large area

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran said its forces captured a "large area" from Iraqi troops in a major offensive in the Iranian oil province of Khuzistan today, but Iraq said it crushed the drive and killed 2,500 Iranian soldiers.

Iran said Iraqi war prisoners were being evacuated from the battle scene to be paraded in Tehran, but Iraq reported "hundreds of enemy captives are being evacuated to Baghdad," the Iraqi capital.

Iran said it captured 770 square miles of territory from Iraq in Khuzistan last month, and Iraq conceded a tactical retreat at that time. The size of the territory claimed seized in the latest offensive was not known.

War claims could not be independently verified because Iran and Iraq ban reporters from regular battlefront coverage.

Conflicting communiques were broadcast by the state radios in Tehran and Baghdad amidst a fanfare of martial music and patriotic songs reminiscent of the ferver that surrounded the Sept. 22, 1980 outbreak of the war between the two Persian Gulf nations.

Iranian mosque preachers called on worshippers to volunteer for combat or pray for a speedy victory in the new offensive to drive the enemy completely out of Khuzistan, the main theater of operations on the southern end of the 300-mile battlefront.

A communique from the Iranian joint chiefs of staff said Iranian forces punched across the Karun River and "liberated" sections of the vital road linking Khuzistan's provincial capital of Ahvaz to the Iraqi-conquered port city of Khorramshahr on the tip of the disputed Shatt al-Arab waterway 70 miles to the south.

Kaunda's philosophy evident in talks

An AP News Special

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press Writer

LUSAKA, Zambia (AP) — President Kenneth Kaunda, one of Africa's few remaining pioneer black nationalists, is a missionary's son who expresses a belief in the goodness of human nature — which helps explain why he's talking today with Prime Minister P.W. Botha of South Africa.

Kaunda's fellow black leaders in southern Africa have remained silent or, like Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe, cast doubt on the usefulness of the Botswana border summit with Botha.

Kaunda's reply: he'll try to "pump sense" into Botha, leader of a white-minority government that poses the last obstacle to black rule across Africa.

It's a dramatic gesture characteristic of Kaunda, whose feelings are never far from the surface. He often cries during his speeches, and he once impulsively vowed to resign unless Zambians stopped drinking so much.

They didn't, and he didn't.

Overcome with emotion, Kaunda dropped to his knees in prayer on an airport red carpet last year, when he arrived in Uganda to meet Milton Obote, an old friend restored as Uganda's president. Obote, surprised, slowly sank to the macadam beside Kaunda.

In the racial conflicts that have wracked southern Africa for a decade, few noncombatant countries have suffered more than Zambia. Kaunda has paid a price in lost popularity for the shortages and white commando raids that have afflicted Zambians.

As Soviet East-bloc influence has grown in the region, Kaunda has muted his opposition to Cubans in Angola, and has accepted Soviet arms. But he has remained adamant that only a peaceful solution could avoid an "explosive situation" in which everyone would lose, and it's on this subject that he is meeting with Botha.

Their agenda includes the region's two most explosive issues — racial discrimination in South Africa and South African control of South-West Africa, also called Namibia.

Kaunda claims that his 1975 meeting with Botha's predecessor, John Vorster, helped to hasten the end of the black nationalist war in Rhodesia, and to bring the British colony to independence as Zimbabwe.

Like some other black African leaders, Kaunda promulgates a kind of socialism based on the sharing customary in African extended families. He learned the practice as a boy at a Church of Scotland mission in northern Zambia, where his father was a clergyman.

Kaunda's first political battle came in 1945, when at 21 he led a students' strike against school regulations requiring them to wear round-necked shirts.

Trained as a teacher, Kaunda spent much of the early 1960s as a nationalist organizer, bicycling to meetings in remote bush areas. British colonial rulers put Kaunda in prison as an agitator but, when independence came in 1964, he took over as president.

During the struggle, Kaunda became a non-smoker and teetotaller — habits he said would make any future prison term easier to bear. He gave up eating meat to protest the treatment of African women customers at colonial butcher shops.

Acquaintances claim it was hard work and Biblical zeal that carried Kaunda to the top, rather than talents as an orator or a theoretician. But over the years he gained stature as a spokesman for the continent in the nonaligned movement, and on racial issues.

He also learned to balance the rivalries of Zambia's more than 70 tribes through carefully judged appointments to the Cabinet and top posts in the ruling United National Independence Party.

Leftist hijackers hold 28 hostages for second night

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Four leftist hijackers held 28 hostages including eight Americans for the second night aboard an airliner at the Tegucigalpa airport, but the Vatican ambassador negotiating with them showed some optimism.

The armed guerrillas reduced their demands three times Thursday and allowed the pilot's children to visit him on board. But the government insisted it would do no more than fly the men out of the country in exchange for their captives.

"The negotiations are on the right path," said Monsignor Andres Cordero Lanza, the papal nuncio to Honduras, after his fourth visit to the plane since the four leftists seized it during a domestic flight Wednesday.

He said the gunmen were talking about going to Mexico or Panama.

The prelate said the hijackers, who on Wednesday threatened to kill American hostage Gregory Bascom of the Standard Fruit and Steamship Co. and blow up the plane, cut their price from $1 million to $250,000, then to $150,000 and then to $100,000.

An adviser to President Roberto Suazo Cordoba said the men abandoned a demand for the release of 52 political prisoners after the government denied it was holding any of those listed.

A crowd of 300 gathered outside the airport Thursday night demanding that the government take action against the hijackers. The government doubled the number of soldiers and police at the airport to 400 and refused to let the demonstrators onto the airport grounds. The demonstrators left after several hours.

The U.S. Embassy said in addition to Bascom, the Americans held hostage included NBC-TV correspondent Brian Ross and U.S. Army Spec. 4 Frank Hubbard, from Fort Ord, Calif., who with his wife and infant son had been visiting his wife's Honduran family.

The hijackers released 16 hostages Wednesday, including Bascom's wife, Hubbard's wife and child and three other Americans. The embassy said then that Hubbard also got off, but later it said the soldier was still aboard.

Government officials said the hijackers were members of the Revolutionary Popular Forces-Lorenzo Zelaya, named after a student killed by police in a 1976 demonstration. The group claims responsibility for 15 terrorist attacks in the last two years, including a machine-gun attack on the U.S. Embassy three weeks ago in which nobody was hurt.

Recognition troubles plague candidates

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

KINGSVILLE, Texas — The students of Texas A&I University are having an outdoor barbecue on a chilly Wednesday night here when Bob Armstrong, the Democratic land commissioner and a candidate for governor, arrives. Hardly a head turns.

A day later, several hundred members of the Texas Senior Citizens Council are eating dinner in a San Antonio hotel. Almost obscured behind a group of madrigal singers stands Texas railroad commissioner Buddy Temple, a solitary figure barely noticed at the head table. Temple is here campaigning for governor.

In the northeast Texas town of Greenville, state Attorney General Mark White has just finished a reception in the county courthouse. He enters the main hall, where a group of prospective jurors are taking a break. Hardly anyone comes forward to meet a man who wants to be the next governor of Texas.

The scenes are typical of the campaign here. Only a day remains before the primary Saturday, but the Democratic candidates for governor are having trouble getting the voters' attention. One reason is Republican Gov. Bill Clements.

FOR THE FIRST time in modern memory, Democrats will vote in a primary without any confidence that their nominee will be elected governor in November. Four years ago, Clements spent $7 million to break a century-long Democratic stranglehold on the governor's office, and he is prepared to invest that much again to hold onto it.

As a result, the Democratic gubernatorial primary, once the scene of divisive and decisive campaigns, is today an uninspiring warm-up among three statewide officeholders, each trying to prove that only he can defeat Clements.

White is the leader in the polls, followed by Temple and Armstrong. White has said he might win the nomination outright on Saturday but most experts expect the nomination to be decided by a runoff June 5.

"The Kentucky Derby isn't being held in May this year," White said of the apathy about the primary. "It's in November. People have a different attitude toward the race because of it."

Some powerful Democratic groups decided to sit out the primary. The Texas AFL-CIO and the Texas State Teachers Association did not endorse anyone in the gubernatorial race, preferring to unite behind whoever is the eventual nominee.

Money is scarce, as some major contributors await the outcome of the primary and others line up behind Clements. "Giving to a Democratic nominee doesn't guarantee you'll be with the winner," Armstrong said.

All three major candidates have borrowed to finance their campaigns. Temple lent himself $1 million of an estimated budget of $1.4 million. White will spend about $1.2 million and Armstrong up to $500,000. Last fall, some experts predicted the primary campaigns would cost between $2 million and $3 million each.

The Democrats also seem to be looking over their shoulders. "The candidates are a little scared," said Joe Gagen, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party. "They don't want what they say to come back and haunt them in the fall."

BECAUSE OF ALL this, the public has refused to become interested. Polls taken on behalf of several candidates showed roughly half the prospective Democratic voters were undecided in early April.

White, 41, is the most conservative of the three and argues that his conservatism is the key to beating Clements. "I'm not vulnerable on the magic issues of crime, taxes and labor," he said.

A Houston lawyer, he was appointed secretary of state by former Gov. Dolph Briscoe, then ran for attorney general in 1978. He upset a liberal candidate in the Democratic primary and went on to defeat James A. Baker III, now White House chief of staff, in the general election.

White has clashed repeatedly with Clements over the handling of a federal lawsuit against the Texas prison system and other issues, and as a result he is the Democrat whom Republicans would most like to beat up on in the fall.

Armstrong, 49, a former state representative, was elected land commissioner in 1970 and has built a record of balancing the interests of environmentalists and the oil and gas industry. He argues that he has the best record to match against Clements and the personal popularity to motivate regular Democrats to work in the fall campaign.

A well-liked and tireless Democratic Party worker, he was co-chairman of George McGovern's campaign in Texas in 1972 when most other Democrats refused to get involved. Since then, he has tried to live down charges that he is a liberal.

His work in behalf of the party prompted the London Economist to tag him a Democratic George Bush. "I went out and applied for a Brooks Brothers credit card," he joked.

Temple, 39, served four terms in the Statehouse before defeating an incumbent Democrat to gain a seat on the Texas Railroad Commission in 1980. He jumped into the governor's race a few minutes before the filing deadline in February, claiming the other candidates had not generated any enthusiasm. "We haven't lit any fires either," his campaign manager Tony Proffitt conceded.

A moderate, Temple believes he would be most acceptable to the various factions of the Texas Democratic Party.

The appearance of money is both his greatest strength and biggest liability. He is the son of Arthur Temple, a major stockholder of Time Inc. and head of the timber and paper conglomerate, Temple-Eastex Industries. Many Democrats assume that, if he wins the primary, Temple will dip into the family fortune to match Clements dollar for dollar in the fall, but he has denied it.

"I have neither the ability nor the inclination to do that," Temple said.

IN PUBLIC, THE three sound as if they had based their campaigns on the same analysis of public opinion.

Detroit center stays above water

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post NewsService

DETROIT — Renaissance Center, the $357 million riverfront office-hotel complex that symbolized Detroit's effort at revival and then was threatened with insolvency, has been sold to a Chicago-based group of investors.

"The other alternative was to go broke," said Henry Ford II, the retired Ford Motor Co. chairman who helped conceive the project and personally raised most of the money for it in the early 1970s.

The center, five glass towers on the Detroit River, includes a 73-story hotel, four 39-story office towers and dozens of retail shops and restaurants. It has been victimized by the automotive recession that threatens the entire area and has lost an estimated $140 million since it opened in 1977.

Officials went looking for a buyer after they were unable to get additional financing from anyone else, including the center's original 50 partners, whose fortunes are largely tied to the ailing auto industry.

NEITHER THE PRICE NOR the identity of most of the new investors was divulged. The managing partner is Theodore Netzky, 39, a Chicago lawyer. Two Detroit businessmen, Mickey Shapiro and Spencer Patrich, are also involved.

Most of the money came from outside Michigan but all the investors are from the United States, Netzky said at a news conference earlier this week in the center's Westin Hotel.

The Ren Cen, as it is called locally, has been variously hailed as the catalyst for the city's rebirth and attacked for its design and architecture. It was designed by John Portman, an Atlanta architect.

A circular maze of lobbies, spiral stairways and cylindrical concrete pillars either attracts or repels visitors, and many, including Ford himself, routinely have trouble finding their way around the complex.

Ford said the new ownership signaled the end of his involvement in the project, but cracked, "I'll have a hell of a time getting out."

The woes of the center are a direct reflection of the troubles of the auto industry, the resulting double-digit unemployment in southeast Michigan and the spread of economic ills throughout the local economy.

The center attracted exclusive national retailers, but poor business prompted such boutiques as Cartier, Courreges and Lanvin to move out. The recession took its toll on other shops, and retail occupancy has fallen to 65 percent.

The hotel has had to discount heavily to attract guests, and hotel employees were called upon to make wage concessions. Ford himself has criticized management of the hotel for overemphasizing convention business, leaving it all but empty at times.

The four office towers boast a 96 percent occupancy rate, though many firms vacated older buildings in downtown Detroit to make the move.

By early last year, the partnership was near default on its $197 million first mortgage and managed to restructure its debt. Over the last several months, the owners tried unsuccessfully to raise $50 million in new capital to reduce their debt.

FORD CONTENDED THAT the complex did what it was intended to do. The center moved 10,000 workers downtown, generated $40 million in local taxes, and helped bring such events as the 1980 GOP Convention and the Super Bowl to town, he said.

Ford himself had knocked on corporate doors throughout Detroit and, according to some of the original partners, all but threatened them with the loss of Ford Motor's business unless they invested in the Renaissance project.

The Detroit News several years ago quoted an unnamed partner as saying, "The logo of the Renaissance Center should have been a twisted arm."

Ford Motor and its various subsidiaries were said to have directly or indirectly put up about $112 million — nearly one-third of the construction cost. Ford said the auto company would continue to occupy an entire office tower in the complex. Ford Land Development Co., a Ford subsidiary, will continue to manage the complex.

Netzky, who expects to complete the transfer by June 30, said the new owners were prepared to lose money for up to five years.

Ernest Angelo
Making Texas work. For us.

There's only one proven leader in the race for State Senate. Republican Ernest Angelo.

As a former Mayor, Ernest Angelo has seen government first hand. He's made government work. Through sound, conservative management.

By applying the principles he learned while building his own business, Ernest Angelo cut red tape and increased productivity. To solve problems, not create them.

Ernest Angelo. As our Republican State Senator, he'll make Texas work. For us.

- Ernest Angelo and his wife Penny, a former public school teacher, have been married 23 years. They have four children — Helen, Tricia, Ernest, and Clifford — and are active members of St. Ann's Church.
- Ernest Angelo was appointed by the Governor to a seat on the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System. He also served as President of St. Ann's School Board.
- Ernest Angelo is active in the community. He has served on the Board of Directors of the Midland United Way, Boys Club, and Chamber of Commerce.

Weinberger agrees Soviets have edge

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger is backing President Reagan's statement that the Soviet Union has a "definite margin of superiority" over the United States in nuclear arms.

Weinberger was challenged about the president's March 31 news conference remark as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee opened a three-week series of hearings on the arms race Thursday.

"It is unfortunately true," the defense secretary said of the president's assessment.

Reagan, at his televised news conference, said, "On balance, the Soviet Union does have a definite margin of superiority, enough so that there is a risk." In response to another question, he said that "the Soviets' great edge is one in which they could absorb a retaliatory blow and hit us again."

Former Secretaries of Defense James Schlesinger and Harold Brown, who served in the Ford and Carter administrations, were to appear before the committee today.

Weinberger told the committee, "The Soviets will continue to have a substantial lead in most of the customary measures of strategic forces — total number of systems, total number of ballistic missiles, and total destructive potential.

"The one area in which the U.S. still retains some advantage is in total numbers of deliverable warheads," he said.

"But, the Soviets may equal or surpass us in the total number of warheads during the 1980s as they continue the rapid expansion of their strategic nuclear arsenal."

"This does not mean that we have lost our ability to deter a Soviet attack on the United States and on our allies," Weinberger said.

But he added, "If this trend is not reversed, it will lead to a marked Soviet strategic advantage which will seriously undermine the credibility of our deterrence in the mid-1980s."

Asked by Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., about the president's statement, Weinberger said, "They now have an edge and a momentum and unless we do something about it, then we will be in a situation where we can not confidently advise the president that we have the ability to deter an attack."

Percy then asked Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, whether he would prefer to have the Soviet deterrent power or the U.S. deterrent power.

"I would be willing to switch ICBMs (intercontinental ballistic missiles) but not the bombers and submarines," Jones replied.

Weinberger also told the committee the Soviets "are beginning to think they could win a nuclear exchange and emerge with what they might term manageable losses."

Under these circumstances, he said, there was apprehension that "they might try to make a first strike under some type of new leadership" that would succeed ailing President Leonid I Brezhnev.

In response to questions by Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., Weinberger said he agreed with statements by Adm. Thomas B. Hayward, chief of naval operations, and Gen. Lew Allen, Air Force chief of staff, that they would not trade the U.S. Navy and Air Force for those of the Soviets.

Nevertheless, he told Tsongas, the president's press conference statement was correct.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., pressed the point, saying that in February Weinberger told the committee he would "make every effort to prevent the Soviet Union from acquiring nuclear superiority."

Weinberger replied that such factors as the ability to deliver lethal warheads must be taken into account in determining which side has the nuclear advantage.

"It is not just counting up the number of warheads on the two sides," he told Dodd.

Former ambassador to U.S.S.R. says common man bringing America to its senses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thomas J. Watson Jr., former chairman of the IBM Corp. and a former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, says the common man, in demanding an end to the nuclear arms race, is bringing America to its senses.

"There is a great and encouraging movement taking place in America; the country is changing the way it thinks about nuclear weapons," Watson said Thursday in a speech on arms control.

"The average man — who has so often brought us to our senses in the past — is doing it again. The average man once aroused may well be the great secret of our American system."

Watson said because this country relied too much on experts it finds itself locked in a world where the danger of nuclear war is increasing.

"We are the victims of experts who thought in theoretical terms, and who convinced us they knew best, that an edge in nuclear capability would pay off in greater security," he said.

"I would say that our policy in retrospect has been a total failure," he added. "Further, in retrospect, it looks like sheer insanity. Happily, American citizens at large are now rapidly reaching these same conclusions."

Watson was ambassador to the Kremlin in the Carter administration and served as chairman of the general advisory committee on arms control and disarmament. He made his remarks in a speech to the Women's National Democratic Club.

He proposed creation of a panel of distinguished citizens to offer advice on difficult policy questions. If their advice was ignored they "could take their case to the people."

Such a commission, he said, should consist "of knowledgeable individuals of Supreme Court stature, appointed for long terms and free of current political pressures.

He said America must build up its conventional forces to withstand a Soviet thrust in Europe, but that spending billions more on new nuclear missiles would be wasting money.

In a related development, retired Adm. Noel Gayler, who commanded U.S. forces in the Pacific from 1972 to 1976, proposed that the Soviet Union and the United States give up their nuclear weapons, one at a time, for conversion into electric power plant fuels. He called his plan a swords-into-plowshares proposal that would be practical and verifiable.

Manges not understand why money refused

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Clinton Manges, the Freer banker-rancher who is breaking state records for campaign contributions, has not been able to find willing takers for all the money he wants to give away.

Manges

Manges has found donees for about $450,000, but a $50,000 contribution to gubernatorial candidate Buddy Temple was returned, as was a $25,000 gift to land commissioner candidate Pete Snelson.

San Antonio lawyer Pat Maloney, who oversees Manges' political spending, said it was difficult to figure out why Temple and Snelson returned the money because they had asked for it.

Spokesmen for Temple and Snelson said it didn't happen exactly that way.

Manges has been in and out of the headlines during his 20-year rise from high-school dropout to millionaire recluse. He was convicted in 1965 for making false statements on a Small Business Administration loan application. His bank holdings also have drawn suspicious looks from authorities.

In 1975, a $15,000 Manges donation to then-Gov. Dolph Briscoe was returned because Briscoe said he didn't know Manges well enough to take that much money from him.

This year Manges is being generous beyond precedent in Texas politics.

Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong, the least-well-financed of the three major Democratic gubernatorial contenders, has taken $270,000 from Manges for his political action committee (which, as of Thursday, had not filed its required report). Manges' money makes up about 40 percent of Armstrong's total campaign chest.

"Lefty Morris (Armstrong's campaign manager) is a dear friend of mine and he told me they were not going to have any last-week television," said Maloney. "Clinton thought that was a shame and said he was going to cure that problem."

According to Maloney, Temple solicited a Manges donation through campaign manager Luther Jones.

"It was Luther who designated exactly the sum he was asking for, and when he wanted it," Maloney said.

Jones said, "No, I didn't. I don't know how the contribution was solicited, or who solicited it, or any of that. All I know is that I picked the contribution up, and gave it to Buddy (last) Friday morning and Buddy decided not to take it. He asked me to return it."

Temple did not want to take that much money from anyone outside his wealthy East Texas family, according to Jones.

Maloney also said Snelson was the one who "named the sum of money" and personally accepted the check in San Antonio.

Snelson acknowledged he picked up the $25,000 check, but said Manges had invited him to come by for a donation.

He said the donation was excessive, although, "In our relationship he has never asked me for anything and certainly I would have no problems accepting a check from Mr. Manges."

Jim Mattox, an attorney general candidate who took $10,000 from Manges, was criticized Thursday by Jack Ogg, another candidate in the four-man race for the Democratic nomination.

"There are several surprises in Jim Mattox' closet that will come out during the runoff," said Ogg, predicting the runoff will feature himself against Mattox.

Maloney said there is nothing sinister about Manges' contributions.

"What I think is sinister is the attempt to cut up Bob Armstrong and Clinton Manges," he said.

Chagra's lawyer to play newscasts in court

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A defense attorney trying to keep secret parts of a bond reduction hearing for a man accused of conspiring to kill a federal judge says he'll show the court examples of news coverage in the case.

Charles Roberts, a defense attorney for El Paso lawyer Joseph Chagra, says he plans Monday to play in court a collection of newscasts aired over the last three years about the slaying of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. and the investigation into the slaying.

Roberts told Chief U.S. District Judge William Sessions during a hearing Thursday that he will need equipment to play the cassette tapes during a Monday hearing on a motion filed by four newspapers.

Attorneys for The San Antonio Express, The San Antonio News, The San Antonio Light and the Fort Worth Star-Telegram demanded and received the evidentiary hearing under the Gannett Decision, which requires parties to prove the necessity for closing court procedings from public view.

The Dallas Morning News and KENS-TV of San Antonio joined the others last week in formally objecting to U.S. Magistrate Robert O'Connor's conducting part of Chagra's bond reduction hearing "in camera."

Roberts had asked that the hearing be closed on grounds evidence about negotiations Chagra had with the government would jeopardize his Fifth Amendment rights against self incrimination and his Sixth Amendment right to a fair trial.

Roberts said Thursday he plans to display during Monday's hearing "most of the newscasts filmed on the Judge Wood case over the past three years."

He would not say where the defense obtained the cassette tapes.

In other action Thursday, Assistant U.S. Attorney Ray Jahn agreed to comply with Roberts' motion that the government provide in the bond hearing a complete FBI report and all notes of an interview agents had with Chagra on March 20, 1981.

Roberts had filed two motions requesting that the government introduce the FBI report and all notes concerning the interview, rather than exercerpts as Jahn had originally proposed.

Chagra, 35, has been jailed since April 15 in lieu of $1.6 million bond on grand jury charges that he conspired to murder Wood and to obstruct justice.

His brother, imprisoned drug trafficker Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra, and convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson, 43, were indicted for the May 29, 1979 murder of Wood, conspiracy to kill the judge and obstruction of justice.

Jimmy's Chagra's wife, Elizabeth Chagra, 28, also was indicted for conspiracy to murder the judge and obstruction of justice. Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann, 41, has been indicted for obstruction of justice and five counts of perjury.

Judge to decide which psychiatric witnesses will testify

WASHINGTON (AP) — The judge in John W. Hinckley Jr.'s trial will hold a hearing to determine whether key government witnesses can be called to testify that the defendant was sane when he shot President Reagan.

U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker set the hearing for Saturday to decide whether three psychiatrists and a psychologist concluded Hinckley was sane after examining evidence that has been barred from the trial.

The defense has challenged the medical experts' prospective testimony because of their exposure to the banned evidence.

Parker's decision to hold a Saturday session came as lawyers trimmed the jury pool to 36 late Thursday. Actual selection of a jury of 12 members and six alternates will start when 43 people are in the pool.

The process of picking the pool, which began Tuesday, was continuing today.

The suppressed evidence includes handwritten notes taken from Hinckley's cell last July and a half-hour oral statement he gave law enforcement officers March 30, 1981, the day Reagan was shot outside the Washington Hilton Hotel.

Also wounded in the attack were White House press secretary James Brady, a policeman and a Secret Service agent.

Parker ruled in November — and the decision was upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals — that Hinckley's constitutional rights were violated when the notes were seized and the statement obtained.

Hinckley has admitted he fired the weapon, but contends he is innocent by reason of insanity.

However, chief prosecutor Roger M. Adelman has told the court, "None of the government psychiatrists thinks there is a serious mental problem at all. No government psychiatrist thinks he's psychotic."

Make a difference

Voters who go to the polls Saturday will be starting the long political process that, after several months, will put elected representatives in many levels of local, state and national offices. As we've noted numerous times in past elections, it is a responsibility that should not be taken lightly.

Individuals who complain about how "the government" is not responding to the needs of the people have an opportunity to take some action to remedy that situation Saturday. Good government truly begins at home in the United States, just as does bad government. A failure to get involved in the political process is apathetic approval of the actions of government.

What difference can your vote make? All the difference in the world. We've all heard plenty of stories about how elections have been decided by just one vote. Hundreds of political candidates are all too aware of the difference that just one vote can make. But a vote can change government in more ways than simply determining the outcome of an election. Candidates who win by a "landslide" traditionally feel more of a vote of approval for the platform on which they ran. Those who win by only a vote or two are well aware of the fact that if they don't watch their Ps and Qs in office, the next time they run may result in a different outcome.

Ronald Reagan's election to the presidency in 1980, along with numerous other national Republican officials, was heralded as one of the most significant political "shifts" toward the conservative philosophy in this nation's history and, some political observers say, truly has affected to a degree how the Congress does business.

November will bring the general election in which voters will choose between the Domocratic and Republican nominees chosen in Saturday's balloting. But those nominees will not get to November if voters do not get involved in the political process Saturday.

Please take an active part in your political process. Cast your ballot for the candidates in the party of your choosing Saturday, but most importantly get out and vote. Remember, your vote can and will make a difference, whether you choose to exercise it or not.

Make it make the right difference Saturday. Vote!

An outstanding choice

The race for the Democratic nomination for commissioner of the General Land Office in Saturday's primary features four candidates, but we believe one of the four stands head and shoulders above the rest.

We gave our endorsement to State Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson back on Feb. 21 and in the two months since our conviction has only grown stronger. Sen. Snelson, a 20-year veteran of the Texas Legislature, has all the qualifications — he's experienced, he's honest, he conducts the affairs of public office with integrity.

Pete is from Midland, but even if he wasn't our endorsement would be his because he has already proven he is the kind of public servant this state and this nation needs. He is respectful of his office and his constituency; he serves the best interests of the people he represents, which in the General Land Office will be the people of the State of Texas.

The position of commissioner of the General Land Office is an extremely important one in Texas because income generated by the more than 22 million acres of state lands produces an enormous amount of money for Texas school children through the public school fund. Management of the state's beaches, submerged lands and wetlands in coastal areas also is highly important.

The land commissioner should have a good working knowledge of oil and gas operations, farming and ranching, navigation and port operations, and recreation and wildlife resources. He should be keenly aware of investment ability and possess a working knowledge of the legislative process.

As we noted in February, Pete fills the bill. To put it simply, he is the most uniquely qualified Democrat seeking the nomination. He should be the choice of voters in the Democratic Primary.

Another View:

Shortage of honesty

With Congress struggling to narrow the yawning federal deficit, President Reagan drew attention the other day to a major untapped source of potential revenue — the millions of Americans who chiseled the government out of about $95 billion in owed taxes last year. "As we struggle to trim government spending," the president said, "it's hard not to think of how close that unpaid tax could come to wiping out the deficit."

Catching up on some of that unreported income would require stamping out the illegal activities that give rise to it — you can't expect a thief to incriminate himself on his tax return. But the great bulk of tax evasion — about $87 billion worth last year — came from apparently otherwise honest citizens doing themselves a little favor at tax time.

The instinct to cheat on one's taxes is no respecter of income or class distinctions. It appears that the probability of cheating varies only with the opportunity to do so. Wage earners are the most honest taxpayers, but they don't have much choice because taxes are withheld on their wages. The biggest class of offenders is made up of owners of small businesses, independent contractors, salesmen and professionals. Tips are the worst-reported source of income, and their beneficiaries have relatively low incomes; but the generally well-heeled recipients of capital gains, dividends and interest don't distinguish themselves by their honesty either.

The administration hasn't come to grips with the fact that it not only needs to restore the cuts in IRS staff made last year but also to expand that staff considerably, but it has submitted proposals to Congress to tighten up on tax collections. The administration has a powerful ally in its efforts in Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole, who has added some proposals of his own. Thus far, however, the rest of Congress has maintained its traditional indifference.

Congress has, in fact, shown so little interest in promoting honest tax collection that you might guess that it considered the tax laws too unfair to enforce. Since Congress has ample opportunity to amend those laws — and since they are regularly applied to honest taxpayers at every income level — a better explanation is that the obvious and only proven remedy for tax evasion is requiring withholding of taxes on heavily underreported sources of income. This activates several powerful lobbies that claim withholding is an insupportable administrative burden — a claim so unconvincing in this electronic age as to arouse suspicion that their financial fortunes are heavily dependent on the opportunity to cheat.

Congressional vulnerability to these lobbies, however, is increased by the fact that the members hear little objection from the other side — the side presumably peopled by the honest taxpayers. Perhaps that's because too many people have become complicitous, if not active, participants in tax-dodging — agreeing to pay for services in cash, smiling at tales of tax evasion. That's not a healthy attitude for the country generally, and it is especially unfair to the honest citizens who now have to foot the tax freeloaders' bill.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan shooting was followed by confusion

WASHINGTON — As John Hinckley Jr. is finally being brought to justice, recently uncovered tapes of a conversation between two of Vice President George Bush's aides — one in Washington, the other on board Air Force Two — reveal the chaos Hinckley caused in the White House when he shot President Reagan.

Jack Anderson

A big part of the problem, the Washington aide reported, was Secretary of State Alexander Haig, who "has been talking as if he were in charge" — an apparent reference to Haig's excited announcement at a press conference that he was "in control" and ready to take over in Bush's absence. This suspension of the constitutional line of succession was an embarrassment that dogs Haig to this day.

Bush was in Texas on a political swing that Monday, March 30, 1981. By the time Hinckley shot the president, White House press secretary Jim Brady, a District of Columbia policeman and a Secret Service agent, the vice president's plane had already taken off from Austin.

The first hint Bush had that something was wrong was a guarded report from Haig, who knew Air Force Two's phone was not secure. "I think you should come directly back to Washington," Haig told Bush. "There's been an incident."

Minutes later, a coded Telex message informed the Bush party that Reagan had been shot in the back.

About an hour into the flight to Washington, Bush's Senate liaison, Robert Thompson, called his own chief assistant, Susan Alvarado, at her Senate office. Their four-minute conversation reflects the urgency and confusion of those first hours after the shooting.

Thompson first asked if the Senate had recessed.

"Bob, originally the Senate was going to stay in session until the vice president's plane landed," Alvarado reported. "But now Senator (Howard) Baker (the majority leader) has decided, under the circumstances, that that might create a more panic situation. So as a result, he's going — he's getting ready to go out shortly and recess until 9:30 tomorrow."

Thompson asked about the president's condition.

"We understand that he has come out of surgery and that he's in stable — good condition," Alvarado replied. "A bullet, according to television reports, has not come up. In other words, they cannot find the bullet in his body ... Frankly, we don't know what to believe."

Thompson said: "Okay, the latest is — out of the situation room, is that Brady's in very critical condition but he's alive. So we're going to be in about 6:30, helicopter to the (vice president's) residence and motorcade to the White House."

The decision not to helicopter from Andrews Air Force Base to the White House lawn, which is normally reserved for the president, showed Bush's awareness of the delicacy of his position. Unlike Haig, he did not want to appear to be usurping the authority of an incapacitated president. In fact, the vice president's calm and stability were commendable throughout the period of confusion.

According to the tapes reviewed by my reporter Jeff Nesbit, Sen. Baker also behaved with aplomb that day. He had originally planned to meet Bush's plane at Andrews, but decided not to "because it might look like the president's condition was more serious than it is in fact," Alvarado told Thompson, adding:

"But it might be good for the vice president, once he obviously goes through the rounds, to call the majority leader and inform him that he is on the ground and, you know, back in charge, because Secretary Haig, of course, has been talking as if he were in charge and, in fact, said he was in the line of succession, which was confusing everybody ... People are saying that we really do need the vice president back to straighten everything out."

Footnote: It was Haig's near-panicky behavior that day, among other things, that reportedly led President Reagan to lose confidence in him, as I wrote last November. The report caused Reagan to call me personally and assure me that he had complete confidence in Haig. However, my White House sources say Haig still has one foot on a banana peel.

RUBBING IT IN: Six weeks ago today, 19-year-old Orlando Jose Tardencilla mortified the Reagan administration by telling the press that his story about Nicaraguan interference in El Salvador had been forced from him under torture. The State Department would like to forget Black Friday, but the Nicaraguan government won't let this happen.

Nicaragua has sent Foggy Bottom a list of nine questions regarding possible criminal violations in U.S. handling of the young Sandinista guerrilla. Privately, Nicaraguan diplomats use the world "abduction" to describe the way Tardencilla was spirited out of a Salvadoran prison and brought to Washington.

Officially, the State Department claims Tardencilla entered the United States on a non-immigrant visa, but no such document has been produced. In fact, the Nicaraguans say the youth had no papers at all when he was turned over to them that day on a few minutes' notice. Apparently only the publicity of his amazing press conference saved him from being sent back to El Salvador.

Meanwhile, Tardencilla is contentedly lecturing Nicaraguan schoolchildren on his experience. He told my reporter Jon Lee Anderson he is happy to have "cleared things up for Americans about Nicaragua."

INSIDE REPORT:

Staff 'backbiting' evoked Reagan's ire

WASHINGTON — At the very moment Secretary of State Alexander Haig most needed support from the White House for his debut in big-league mediation, he was degraded by staff backbiting that provoked even President Reagan to "blow up."

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

That degrading has had little impact on Haig's arduous mission to prevent America's closest ally from getting into all-out war with a lesser but still important ally. Indeed, the progress of Haig's mission, which Reagan himself launched with phone calls to Buenos Aires and London, is where he and the president planned it to be this week (except for one weather-induced setback).

But Haig's success in maintaining the U.S. as mediator acceptable to both sides has come despite nasty personal cracks more reminiscent of precinct politics than the lofty heights of the White House. The hostility raises anew this question: Can Reagan make his foreign policy succeed when White House aides (described in The New York Times as "senior" advisers and suspected at the State Department of including chief of staff James Baker) are renewing an old campaign to drive Al Haig from the State Department?

Reagan arrived at a White House lunch with his senior aides carrying a copy of Newsweek magazine's Periscope column which one aide told us provoked the president into an angry "blow up" against Haig's detractors. The item attributed to Haig's "inner circle" the fear that his failure in the Falklands mediation might "end his career" because "the White House is gunning for him."

Members of Haig's "inner circle" not only denied making such a ridiculous forecast but specifically fingered White House staffers for planting the hatchet in Haig's back. That comported with the self-defeating White House backfire against Haig's decision not to take a second-class Air Force plane without windows or, more important, sophisticated communications gear on his 30,000-mile shuttle diplomacy.

Friendly foreign governments were surprised when the White House grumbled about supplying a first-class plane. They were stunned on learning further that senior advisers were passing unattributable word to the press that "Haig needs a win badly." They could not believe that the president's top domestic aides would go out of their way to tear down the secretary of state, whose mediation would spell glory or defeat for Ronald Reagan.

Until last winter, the suspected source of White House animus against Haig was then national security assistant Richard V. Allen. But Allen's ouster and replacement by William P. Clark, Haig's colleague as deputy secretary of state, has not ended the anti-Haig sniping.

That points the finger at Jim Baker, who from the first day of the Reagan administration has openly regarded Haig as a disruptive force rampaging out of control. Close associates in the White House deny Baker's involvement in the current harassment of Haig. But inside the State Department, there is no doubt that Baker is Haig's tormentor.

Leaders of U.S. allies, including Great Britain, have agonized over the recent effort to get Haig. Published leaks that Haig has played too even-handed a role in his mediation are ridiculed in London. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government knows that premature alienation of Argentina would have doomed Haig's mission, a matter that Reagan and Thatcher personally discussed in undisclosed phone conversations.

Whatever the obstacles, the U.S. and Britain substantially agreed on the course of that mediation. Haig had hoped the British would recapture South Georgia Island by April 23 instead of April 25 — assuming no deal by then. The timing, caused by unexpectedly bad weather and huge seas, delayed by two days Argentina's exposure to British power.

The greater problem for U.S. foreign policy is the poison oozing from the White House. Although it has not seriously impaired Haig's vital work in the Falklands crisis, it underlines the graver question of the Reagan administration's fitness to govern.

CHARLEY REESE

Corporations abandoning Americans

Neither Republicans nor Democrats are addressing three areas critical to salvaging the American economy.

Charley Reese

One is that massive cuts in government spending must be made. Otherwise there are only two alternatives, high taxes or monetized deficits which will generate more inflation.

As I have pointed out, despite the purely partisan hue and cry about Reagan's budget cuts, Reagan's budgets are bigger than Jimmy Carter's, reflecting an increase not only in defense spending but also in social spending.

Another area is the Federal Reserve, which must be abolished or drastically reformed. This private central bank is a scientific engine of inflation-deflation. The monetary system belongs to the people and it should be taken out of the hands of private bankers who manipulate it for their own profit.

The third area is the outrageous con game perpetrated on the American people by the multinational corporations. When early libertarians argued for free trade, they had no way of envisioning behemoth corporations which encircle the globe, operating in 50 countries, and loyal to none of them.

With millions of Americans unemployed, the multinationals are investing $50 billion — overseas. Just as manufacturers once moved South to find cheap labor, these corporations are moving out of the country to find cheap labor and lower taxes.

At the same time, they massively lobby for "free trade" to make sure they can import these products back into the United States. American jobs are being dismantled and shipped overseas. You want to buy an American-made color television set? Sorry, there aren't any.

No American textile worker can compete with Chinese slave labor; no skilled American worker can compete, on a price basis, with Mexicans, Koreans, or Taiwanese. These people are in countries where there is such an excess of labor that they are desperate to work at whatever wages they can get.

But American campaigns won't work. The financiers who control these corporations know they can sell a product with an American brand name but manufactured overseas. Zenith competes with Panasonic but neither set is manufactured in the United States.

What we must do is to discourage multinational corporations from exporting American jobs. Not only are our fellow Americans being thrown out of work, but those of us still working are having to pay the social costs for the unemployed as well as contribute to the profits of those corporations which created the unemployment. Furthermore, it is not in our national interest to lose our industrial and manufacturing capacity which we may need in the worst way for defensive purposes.

All of us should lobby the Congress to erect tariffs against finished goods manufactured overseas by American-based multinationals. In other words, put the high tariff on the Zenith made in Mexico but not on the Japanese set made by a Japanese-owned company. If Zenith doesn't want to make sets in the U.S., then they shouldn't be allowed to sell them; if they want to compete with the Japanese for a share of the American market, then force them to make their sets in the U.S.

You see, if we make the products of American-based multinationals noncompetitive in the American market, we will discourage them from abandoning American workers but we won't give any foreign country any excuse to erect tariffs against American products, though in fact most of them do anyway.

If we have to buy foreign-made products, then let's buy those made by foreign-owned corporations, not those made by American-owned corporations which have abandoned American workers to make higher profits by exploiting foreign labor.

I think this is a lovely idea. It has such an element of justice in it.

Secret tapes missing from Kennedy archives

By DOYLE MCMANUS
Washington Post News Service

BOSTON — Seven of the secret tape recordings made by President John F. Kennedy during his last 16 months in the White House appear to be missing from his archives, the Los Angeles Times has learned.

The tapes, apparently of presidential meetings between September 1962 and August 1963, are listed on the official log of Kennedy's clandestine recording system, but researchers at the Kennedy Library have found no tapes for seven log entries.

"That's the way we got them," Kennedy Library Director Dan H. Fenn said Wednesday. When asked if someone removed the tapes before they were turned over to the library in 1976, he said: "We don't really know."

The Kennedy family had legal custody of the recordings, which consist of 125 reels of tape and 27 dictation belts, from 1963 until 1976. The tapes, however, have been stored in government buildings since Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D.-Mass., President Kennedy's last surviving brother, said through a spokesman that he did not know any of the tapes were missing. "He has absolutely no idea about that," Larry Horowitz, the spokesman, said.

"I don't know what happened, but I'll tell you what I think," said Burke Marshall, a professor at Yale Law School who is chairman of the Kennedy Library's committee in charge of the tapes. "I don't think it was a matter of tapes that existed and then vanished. I think it was a matter of there being no tape to start with."

BUT EVELYN Lincoln, who controlled the recording system as President Kennedy's personal secretary and compiled the log of tapes after his assassination, said all the recordings in the log existed once.

"I had them until 1967," she said. "I don't know what happened to them after that....I don't know whether they've taken them out, or whether they were unaudible. There probably wasn't any need to keep them."

One log entry lists a conversation on Nov. 20, 1962, concerning the National Security Council, and a meeting the next day between Kennedy and James E. Webb, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. A handwritten notation next to the entry reads: "No Tape."

Another entry lists a Dec. 14, 1962, discussion on the Congo, where United Nations troops were then battling a regional uprising. A typewritten notation reads: "No tape for above. Note in index says 'inaudible.'"

Mrs. Lincoln said she listed the tapes in chronological order, with no gaps in he rnumbering. The five tapes without detailed entries appear, from their locations in the log, to have been made during September and November, 1962, when the Kennedy administration was preoccupied by its confrontation with Cuban President Fidel Castro; parts of May and June 1963, when Kennedy was negotiating a nuclear test ban with the Soviet Union; and Aug. 15, 1963, when the president met with Henry Cabot Lodge, his new ambassador to South Vietnam, where the United States was becoming increasingly involved in a war with Communist guerrillas.

THE RECORDINGS were made on an ordinary tape recorder that Mrs. Lincoln turned on when Kennedy switched on a red light. Telephone conversations were recorded with a Dictablet system. But, the retired secretary said, some of the recordings turned out to be useless.

"The system we had then wasn't as sophisticated as we have now," she said. "The first one they put in under the Cabinet table, you got a lot of kicking of feet and so on."

Several of the tapes were inaudible, but she did not discard them, she said. In addition to the four tapes listed as missing and inaudible, eight more reels appear on the Kennedy Library log as present but inaudible or "just background noise."

Mrs. Lincoln said she moved the recordings and Kennedy's papers to the Executive Office Building after his assassination, and then, in 1964, to the National Archives. In 1967 they were moved to the Federal Records Center in Waltham, Mass., to await the opening of the Kennedy Library in 1979.

The only people with access to the tapes before 1976 were Mrs. Lincoln, Burke Marshall and members of the Kennedy's family, Marshall said. "I don't know of any case where any member of the family has actually had access to them," he added.

Since 1976, researchers on the staff of the Kennedy Library have been transcribing the recordings in preparation for their release. Some transcripts may be released as early as this summer, Fenn said.

Israelis whoop it up on independence day

By SHELBY SCATES
Hearst Feature Service

JERUSALEM — The Israelis, Jews regathered as a nation of Western ideals in an Arabic setting, took time out this week to honor their war dead, dance in the streets, party all night and celebrate their 34th year of independence.

It was release from a sea of troubles, an occupation turning nightmarish, increasing isolation in the Third World, and the nagging problem of numbers — too many Arabs, too few Israelis. So they lived it up in Jerusalam.

To know this ancient city is to love it; the cool air, sweet blossoms, and architecture that just about spans the civilizations of man, the three major religions and their multitude of sects, and the people, Jew, Arab and Christian.

There are no strangers in Jerusalem. Everybody has a niche. The mixture is potentially explosive. But not this week. Everybody seemed to be celebrating this time and place, marking the accomplishments of their extraordinary and paradoxical nation.

At the center of the "new " city, Israelis joined hands and kicked steps to their folk music. It was their Fourth of July with fireworks, a Mardi Gras without booze. That would come later at parties at private homes. Streets were jammed.

Kids roamed about bashing adults with plastic hammers that make a clicking sound on forceful impact. It's an Italian invention, imported here 10 years ago, an instant hit.

At parties old friends meet to hug, to toast and talk. No people are more self-questioning or as diverse in their answers. They are unanimous in their desire for security and peace, dreams not necessarily compatible. But how? A thousand answers.

A foreign visitor is taken to a huge lawn party of Israelis of mostly American, British and South African extraction, many of them faculty members of Hebrew University, few of them in favor of the government of Menachem Begin.

From a long evening of camaraderie and questioning, I distill some impressions. Israel is more theocratic and nationalistic than before, a reflection of the increasing numbers of non-Western Jews and the parliamentary clout of religious parties to whom Begin bows in order to hold his narrow majority.

On the Sabbath here it is impossible to use a telex machine or to purchase a slug to operate pay telephones at the Hilton Hotel. I tried and failed. Soon El Al airlines may be forced to cancel flights on the Sabbath.

Israelis sense an increasing isolation and blame the press, both foreign and local, more than the bombing of Beirut and the gunbutt occupation of the West Bank. Israel, no less than Palestinians, is running a "shoot the messenger" syndrome.

Problems, yes. But that strays from the larger point emerging from this celebration. The Israelis are healthy, democratic folk who have created a nation which in most respects ought to be the envy of the world. Their standard of living is beyond the reach of all but the most industrialized nations. If they fail in their ideals, the Israelis are the first to criticize — not the foreign press. If they are overly sensitive to security, by god, they had it. One may walk the streets without tension, congregate freely. They have fought themselves a secure, civil place.

"It's hard work being a small nation," a diplomat friend sighed the other evening. Vigilance is the price of liberty.

On Independence Day in a small park beneath the walls of the old city, they staged a reception for Jerusalem's mayor and symbol of unification, Teddy Kolleck. It was a sight only to be seen here, Arab muhktars, black-robed princes of the Orthodox, Roman Catholic and Coptic churches, big mamma evangelical with accents of bible-belt America, and robed shiekhs. Kolleck transends lines. He makes Jerusalem work.

LARRY DYKE WILL BE AT MIDLAND GALLERY THIS SATURDAY 1:00 to 4:00 p.m.

HE WILL BE SIGNING PRINTS AND MEETING COLLECTORS AT THIS TIME· COME EARLY TO AVOID LONG LINES·

THE PUBLIC IS INVITED TO AN EXHIBIT AND SALE OF LARRY DYKE'S ORIGINAL PAINTINGS AND LIMITED EDITION PRINTS THIS SATURDAY.

Although born in Minnesota, Larry Dyke calls himself a native Texan, having moved to the State when he was "too young to remember". He grew up in Borger, A Panthandle Community where one develops an appreciation for the pure, simple beauties of life and strength of character.
This outlook finds its way into his art. Whether in the form of a rural landscape or an abandoned relic, a Dyke painting is thought provoking, not so much by offering symbolic clues to life's mysteries, but by creating a welcome restful mood that unclutters the mind and makes room for thought.
It is after the painting is complete, colors blended to contrasting hues, detail glued to the petals of flowers or the blades of a windmill, that thought begins for the aspect of his art which has come to be known as his trademark. Each Larry Dyke painting bears as its title a passafge from the BIBLE a reference which brings an added dimension to his art. The particular passage chosen is one which may reaffirm the viewer's interpretation or perhaps offer him an entirely new perspective of the painting.

The artist's religious beliefs have greatly influenced his life and, in fact, have instilled in him the dedication and determination necessary to develop his talent to the fullest. He views his artistic ability as a gift, a blessing through which he can give something to others. It is his hope that the Biblical references will serve not only to help others find a greater source of interest in his art, but also helo acauaint them with the Scriptures. Larry Dyke wishes his art to be something that anyone can enjoy, yet watch, can have a special meaning to those who possibly find the same source of inspiration as he has.
A person of extrordinary ability in many aspects of life—a football and baseball player who attended Baylor on an athletic scholarship, an English major who also studied for a career in medicine, and a former high school teacher, he did not realize until his mid-twenties that fine art would be his true calling. Not until 1976 did he turn to painting full-time as a career, other than a few hours of college art courses, his technique is self-instructed, although influenced by many other artist.

...A Dartmouth College junior from Midland has been cited by a professor of geology for outstanding academic achievement during the past term.

He is Carrick McAfee Eggleston, son of David and Helen Eggleston, 1605 W. Tennessee.

He was praised for his "excellent understanding of the techniques and principles of optical minerology." He has previously been cited for superb performance in both a geology course and a Chinese course.

He is a geology major at Dartmouth. He was ranked in the third honor group of his freshman class.

He is a 1979 graduate of Midland High School...

...HIKE-BIKE sponsored by the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens will be Saturday.

Beginning at 8 a.m. at the National Guard Armory, 3900 N. Lamesa Road, the hike has, in past years, been composed of hikers, bikers, joggers, horseback riders, unicyclists and marathon runners.

Prizes will be given to the top money raisers. Everyone who participates will receive a hike-bike t-shirt. Persons under 18 years of age should have their parents or guardians sign a waiver so that they can participate. They are to bring these forms to the walk Saturday.

Participants should report to the armory anytime after 7:30 a.m. for registration. Horses should report to Wallace Grocery three miles east of the County Exhibit Building.

Lunch will be provided to all participants.

Hikers are encouraged to wear good walking boots or comfortable shoes. They should not wear sandals nor walk barefoot.

Cars will patrol during the event. The Texas State Guard and the Sheriff's Department will bein charge of the route. Rest stops and check points will be available throughout the route.

Award night will be May 17 at the Opportunity Center. Action begins at 7 p.m. with an ice cream party...

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Vacuums need special care

HI THERE!

Vacuuming — a way of life! Such a boon to keeping a house livable.

The more you vacuum, the longer your carpeting and flooring will last. Grit and dirt are a carpet's worst enemy as it breaks down the fibers. Daily vacuuming of traffic areas will prove to be time and energy well spent when that beautiful carpet you just put down is still beautiful years from now.

So, that vacuum cleaner, if used to its full capacity, is going to require special care, just like the carpet it cares for.

Did you know there is a drive belt that makes that beater brush, or agitator, work, and that it needs checking every now and then?

If this belt becomes stretched or broken, then you're in a sad state of affairs. The belt is usually under a cover plate, which is located in different areas, depending on your style of vacuum cleaner. Your instruction manual will help you locate it.

If it needs replacing, check with your local dealer. If it just needs readjusting, your manual should help you there, too.

Be good to that appliance and it'll serve you faithfully for many years. — Heloise

BUREAUCRAT'S TIP!

Dear Heloise: Here's a pretty way to fancy up your bureau or dressing table.

Take a pretty, small glass dish, tray or plate, and glue four marbles on the bottom for feet to protect the table finish. Use a glue that is made for glass or china.

This may be a good way to utilize that one-of-a-kind dish, or extra piece from a broken set. — Carrie Hayes

SLOW SHOWER

Dear Heloise: Whenever my showerhead starts getting clogged up with lime deposits, and dribbles instead of sprays, I just fill a plastic sandwich bag with vinegar and tie it up around the showerhead.

I let it soak in the vinegar overnight, and come morning I once again have a free-flowing shower. — Kelly Whittier

ROLL UP BAGS

Dear Heloise: Being a new mother with two children still in diapers, I appreciate any helpful hints I can put to use.

My grandmother shared a goody with me the other day. She keeps all of her plastic vegetable bags or bread bags, rinses them out, lets them dry, then rolls them up in a roll like plastic-wrap.

I keep a roll in my diaper bag for dirty diapers and have never again been caught up town or at a friend's house with nowhere to put a wet diaper. — A Reader

Great hint! They would also come in handy for those of you that use disposable diapers. — Heloise

RING-G-G-G!

Dear Heloise: Got your hands in the meatloaf or mixing dough, and the phone rings?

Slip a plastic bag over your hand and you can catch it on the next ring... — Pam

FLOWER FUN

Dear Heloise: Feeling rather fancy at one of my dinner parties, I wanted to put some fresh flower sprigs in an arrangement of fresh fruit.

How do you keep fresh flowers fresh while stuck in a fruit arrangement? I got some small balloons and filled them with a little water, stuck in the sprigs of flowers and secured them with rubberbands.

I then hid the balloons in among the fruit, and they were very pretty, I thought. — Connie Beach

Liz Pauley, left, and Bonnye Bradley, members of Midland Rose Society, inspect a possible entry in the Society's Spring Rose Show, to be held Sunday at First National Bank. Anyone interested in entering a rose in the show is welcomed. Roses may be entered in the show from 7 — 10 a.m. Sunday. The show will be open to the public from 1 — 5 p.m.

Rose show marks 25th anniversary of Midland Rose Society

The Midland Rose Society will hold its annual Spring Rose Show Sunday at the First National Bank. Entries will be accepted from 7 — 10 a.m. Any interested person may enter a rose in the show. Schedules and entry cards will be available Saturday from 2 — 3 p.m. at FNB, Colorado Street entrance. Members of the Rose Society will be on hand to assist anyone who wishes to enter a rose. Vases will be provided. To enter a rose, the entrant MUST know the correct name of the rose, and the rose should be shown 1/2 to 3/4 open, with adequate stem and foliage.

The Rose Show will be open to the public from 1 — 5 p.m. on Sunday. An information desk will be available and members of the Rose Society will answer any questions during the show.

The show is divided into two horticulture sections — full sized roses and miniature roses. There will also be an artistic division, according the Jim Galyean, past president of the Midland Rose Society.

For further information about the Rose Show or the Midland Rose Society, call Jeanette Van Auken at 694-0356 or Jim Galyean at 684-9680, after 7 p.m.

Large market for little animals

By DAVID TOMLIN
AP Writer

INMAN, S.C. (AP) — Animal breeder J.C. Williams ignores the warnings and fools with Mother Nature, producing little beasts for big bucks.

Over the past quarter century, Williams has built a reputation as one of the world's largest short-order animal breeders — short horses, short donkeys, short goats, short sheep and now short zebu cattle.

Last year he peddled $500,000 worth of miniature mammals, most of them to rich people around the globe who crave the pitter patter of tiny hooves in their yards or even their houses.

"This year we've already sold $200,000 worth, and the year's just begun," he says.

The horses are by far the biggest little item. Williams' horselets begin life at about 17 inches from hoof to withers, and grow to a maximum of 34 inches, smaller than the smallest pony.

They sell for as much as $35,000 each. Williams sees the price rising before too long to $100,000 or more.

Williams' 120-acre Dell Tera Mini Horse Farm outside of Inman in northwestern South Carolina is now aswarm with close to 400 horses and another 200 other wee beasties. His feed bill runs more than $150 a day.

Formerly an automobile dealer and construction contractor, Williams has loved little animals of all kinds since his rural youth. He got into the selective barnyard breeding business quite by accident.

"Anything little just always fascinated me," he says. "We always had big cows and big mules. I kept telling my dad I wanted something little. I never got anything, not even a blamed bicycle."

So Williams promised himself his own children would fare better, and when they asked for a little horse, he bought a few and began breeding them as a hobby.

About 10 years ago, one of his mares produced a 12½-inch foal — still a world record as far as Williams knows — and he invited the National Enquirer in to make some pictures.

"From that day on, we've gotten mail by the pickup load," he says.

"We didn't know what they were worth," he recalls, "so we started selling them for $300. It wasn't long we were getting $3,000. It's grown by leaps and bounds ever since."

Of the estimated 200 adult horses of 30 inches or smaller in the United States, Williams claims to own 50. Having conquered the size barrier, he concentrates now on producing exotic colors — pintos, apaloosas and the like.

The miniature goats, donkeys and sheep are also popular items, but Williams has great hopes for his newest line, the African zebu cattle, miniature hump-backed versions of what is known in this country as the brahman.

'Friendly' church has different congregation

By ELAINE WARREN
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — When God gazes down on the churches of the world for His Sunday-morning survey, He must break into a bemused grin when He catches sight of Hope Chapel in Hermosa Beach.

There is no altar, no stained-glass window, no pulpit, no cross. Just lots of people — many of them surfers — and a minister who looks like a hip Pat Boone and does his baptizing in a huge Fiberglas hot tub.

Naturally, you say. This is California.

But the church is doctrinally in the mainstream of fundamentalism, part of the International Church of the Foursquare Gospel — the denomination that firebrand faith-healer Aimie Semple McPherson founded in 1919. But as the church's 36-year-old pastor, Ralph Moore, admits: "We're probably a far cry from what she had in mind."

Moore began Hope chapel in 1971 with a small group of friends. He arrived at the easy-going beach community "with a white sidewall haircut and a suit, wondering what I was doing surrounded by all these people."

Moore loosened up, grew his hair and eventually learned to surf. Soon his church became known as a friendly place where surfers and hippies mingled with hardhats and bikers, comfortable in their communion with a common God. It also gained a reputation as the local singles' church.

The congregation now, Moore says, is an outgrowth of that original group, reflecting Hope's philosophy that it will open its doors to everyone. The church has made a point, he says, of accepting those whom other churches turned away.

"Theologically we're very conservative," Moore notes, "but in terms of outward mechanics of church work, we are relaxed. We don't have a choir because we're really into people participating themselves rather than watching someone else.

"We don't have symbols hanging all over the church; we were going to put a cross up at one time, but we just didn't get around to it. People got upset that we didn't have a cross, so we said that means they're into symbols more than they're into the Lord."

Having quickly outgrown its first two buildings, today Hope Chapel occupies a massive converted bowling alley — the hall of worship situated where the bowling lanes used to be. Moore has hired five associate pastors to help him, and now half the staff surfs. About 2,000 people show up each week.

Because about 40 percent of the membership is between 18 and 35, many of the church's functions cater to the young. A special Friday night service features a "Christian rock concert." The church's 23-year-old minister, Randy Sanford, has been given the title of "singles minister."

On Friday evenings, cars begin streaming in and the parking lot fills up early. Teenagers rush in as though they were about to be late for the junior prom. Couples arrive together on dates. Mothers come with their children.

Ralph Moore steps up to the microphone, tells the crowd they can't save empty seats for their friends, then announces a "triple billing" for the evening by offering a few simple words: "God, please anoint the music and play and movie we are about to see."

The two-hour service begins: first a Christian folk-singing duo followed by a Christian play, then a Christian movie — the sixth in a series of filmed lectures by a San Fernando Valley woman testifying to her religious life.

Mark Reynolds, 26, sandy-haired and freckled, is studying for the ministry at Hope Chapel. "Surfing was my god for six or eight years," he recalls, and then zealously launches into the oft-told story of how he was led astray.

His generation, he says, is particularly vulnerable, having long ago become "burned out on what the world had to offer." He trafficked in cocaine and wandered back and forth between Hermosa and Hawaii.

What Hope does best, perhaps, is simply make people feel at home in an otherwise alienating world. "We have a healthy acceptance of people here," says associate pastor Perry Ching. "They come in here with wet hair and sandals and Levi's, but no problem. If your heart is real and you're motivated, that's all that matters."

Refinishing wood floors

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I am getting ready to refinish the wooden floor in our living room. Many years ago I did a similar job in another house, so I know I can handle the stripping part of it. What I can't make up my mind about is the kind of finish to use. I want something that does not scratch too easily, if that is possible. I am also considering whether to use something that is not too glossy. What is your advice?

A. — You have described the qualities of penetrating floor finish, which is a kind of sealer that goes into the wood and does not leave a shine. Another asset of it is that, once an area gets a little worn, it can be retouched without doing the entire floor. Because the sealer does not leave a surface coating, it does not scratch. That does not mean the floor itself cannot be scratched, such as when walked on with spiked shoes, but it prevents the kind of scratches that can occur on a surface coating.

Q. — I put up a wooden fence last year. Before doing so, I soaked the wooden slats in a preservative for several hours, since I had been told this was a better way of preserving the wood than by brushing on the liquid. I saved the container in which the wood had been soaked and covered it with some plastic wrap. Now I have another fence to put up. I intended to use the leftover preservative, but a neighbor says this is not a good idea, as the liquid may have picked up some impurities from the wood. Is he right?

A. — That's the first time I have heard that theory and have no idea what impurities your neighbor means. Professionals use the same wood preservative over and over again. You can do the same.

Q. — I recently took some bed sheets from a closet where I had stored them for the winter. Some mildew had formed on them. What did I do wrong and how can I prevent this from happening in the future?

A. — Mildew forms where there is dampness. It forms more rapidly when the dampness is accompanied by warmth and lack of ventilation. The conclusion is that your closet must have been damp and without ventilation. The dampness was probably the result of high humidity. Next time you store anything that might be susceptible to mildew in a confined area, provide ventilation; in the case of a closet, you could keep the door open. However, this would be insufficient and even self-defeating if the humidity is high for a protracted period, so some kind of dehumidifying material kept in the closet would be necessary.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," available by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

Family Services of Midland announces implementation of new policies

Family Services of Midland recently announced several new policies. James R. Gamble Jr., Southwest Region cousultant for Family Services Association of America from San Antonio, was in Midland to meet with members of the staff of Family Services of Midland about these new policies, including a reduction in counseling fee scale. Reviewing client evaluations of service with Gamble, center, are Garland Lichty, left, executive director of Family Services of Midland, and David Hickman, counselor.

Family Services of Midland has recently reduced the cost for those persons seeking individual and family counseling services at the United Way agency. "This became necessary due to the effects of inflation and increased daily living costs which have discouraged some residents from obtaining the services they need," said Garland Lichty, executive director of Family Services of Midland.

The recommendations to lower fees and obtain more adequate group meeting facilities were made by the Council on Accreditation of Services for Families and Children, Inc., the standard setting organization for Family Service agencies throughout the United States and Canada.

Lichty said, "Agency plans for a study of effectiveness of services to clients will be reviewed as will be the community support of Family Services of Midland, which observes its 25th year of service to Midland in 1982."

Recent studies at the agency show that the usual person or family seeking counseling services require an average of only three or four interviews to obtain the help they need with a problem, Lichty added. Approximately 20 percent of the residents served have incomes of less than $10,000 annually, 50 percent have incomes between $10,000 and $25,000, and the remaining 30 percent have incomes over $25,000.

"Counseling services for individuals and families deal with any aspect of living and relationships. Family and step-family issues are the major reasons for seeking service, whether with the adjustments of the marital relationship, parent-child concerns, or the desirability of the total family receiving service," said Lichty.

In 1980 an estimated 752,000 different families were served by Family Service Association agencies throughout the country, in counseling, educational or self-help programs. Seventy percent of the agencies in the Southwest Region provided services to business and industry. Efforts to reduce conflicts and stress through counseling show significant success in a majority of cases, Lichty said.

Fellow police officers also husband and wife

AP Writer

MEDFORD, Ore. (AP) — Elmer Kammel is 6 foot 4, a self-professed "hot dog," likable and street smart. Shirley Peters is 5 foot 4, blonde, meticulous and a quick wit.

Both are police officers in this southern Oregon town. They patrol in separate cars, but ride home together at the end of the working day. They are married.

"But there's nothing sensational about it," says Ms. Peters. "We're just a couple that happens to have the same profession."

They both prefer working the swing shift — 4 p.m. to 12 midnight — and not because they like listening to each other on the police radio or passing each other during their patrols. On the swing shift, the workday goes much quicker because there is more action, they say.

"We don't worry about each other," Kammel says. "We don't have the time to worry about each other."

They have dramatically different styles on the job.

"I like to go into a situation where you don't know what's going on, and everything happens so fast, it's like fastballs coming at you," says the 35-year-old Kammel.

"I like to go into a situation prepared," the 29-year-old Ms. Peters says. "I can handle a fastball but ..."

LeRoy Neiman

NEW YORK (AP) — Artist LeRoy Neiman has designed a poster for the second annual Great Irish Fair to be held in Brooklyn June 5-6.

The artwork is a sketch of a Broughham, a typical Irish closed-in, horse-drawn carriage in shades of green and blue. Neiman has donated it to the Diocese of Brooklyn, which is sponsoring the fair that is expected to draw some 2 million visitors to its one-mile stretch of waterfront along the Brooklyn side of the East River.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I met a man who said he was a top photographer for a famous magazine. He asked me to pose for him, saying I would get $100 for every picture. I agreed, and he came over on a Sunday with his camera.

I posed with nothing on but a policewoman's hat. He also took a lot of pictures of me naked in the shower with the water running. Then we drove to the beach and he got some shots of me on the beach and in the water. It took all day.

About halfway through, he ran out of film and didn't have his wallet, so I loaned him $30 for more film. Later we got hungry, so he borrowed $15 from me to pay for the food.

He promised he'd call me after the pictures were developed, but I haven't heard from him. I don't know how to get in touch with him. I want my $45 back, but I'm afraid to go to the police because I said I was 21 and I'm only 17, and I don't want to get into trouble for being underage and posing like that. Thanks for any help you can give me. — NO NAME, PLEASE

DEAR NO: My guess is that the "photographer" is a phony. You could write to the magazine he claimed he works for, but don't be surprised if the people there never heard of him.

I can't help you get your $45 back, but I have some valuable advice for you: DON'T pose for any more strangers. You could lose a lot more than $45!

DEAR ABBY: A woman I know carries around a small bottle of breath freshener, and right in the middle of a conversation she whips it out of her purse, opens her mouth and sprays!

I find that repulsive, and many others have commented on it.

Is there a nice way to tell her that this is something that should be done in private? Or am I mistaken? — REPULSED

DEAR REPULSED: You are not mistaken. After this hits print, you could mail it to her.

DEAR ABBY: Someone who served with Gen. George Patton wrote that the general had entertained some visiting dignitaries at an elegant dinner in his headquarters in Germany. Later that evening an aide reported that two place settings of Hitler's monogrammed gold dishes, goblets and tableware were missing!

I would like to know how Patton came to have these things in the first place. I thought only Nazi generals stole other people's property. — CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: In time of war, when property changes hands, they don't call it STEALING — they call it CONFISCATING.

DEAR ABBY: A co-worker was ordered to quit smoking in the office after several of us complained to the boss. (She was a chain smoker.) Now she chews bubble gum instead, and the constant cracking and popping of her gum is driving us crazy. Can you believe a woman in her 40s chewing bubble gum all day in an office? I think she does it just to bug us.

When we ask her to please keep the noise of her gum-chewing down, she says, "What do you want from me? I can't smoke because you complained, and I have to do something!"

Any suggestions? — GOING CRAZY

DEAR GOING: Complain to the boss about bubble gum. A person has no more right to subject co-workers to irritating noises than to air pollution.

CONFIDENTIAL TO LONER IN FORT WASHINGTON, PA.: To thoroughly enjoy something, you must have someone with whom to share it!

WARDROBES THAT WORK

Fabric that wears well

By MARY T. MILLICAN
Fashion Consultant

Dear Mary,

When looking for clothing that will wear for several years and still look good, what fabrics should I be buying? For this climate are there any wools that can be worn year round? Cotton and silk seem to be everywhere — how do they hold up?

Silk is a wonderful fabric and it not only wears well (if taken care of properly) but it feels as good as it looks. One hundred percent cotton will last for a long period of time, but it has a tendency to look "worn" after a couple of seasons of washing. A better choice in that area is a cotton blend, or perhaps linen. Some cotton blends are truly lovely and may be worn for many seasons. As for wool, the lighter weight wools are O.K. for this climate (not year-round though), but wool crepe can be worn for a much longer period of time. If you are not familiar with this fabric, ask a salesperson to show you a suit or jacket made out of wool crepe — you'll be pleasantly surprised!

Dear Friends,

It seems that every year the stores receive fall and winter merchandise earlier and earlier. This year will be no exception. In the retail world summer is over and fall is upon us! You'll begin seeing heavier weight clothing and darker colors within the next few weeks. What I would like to do is hear comments or questions you may have on the past columns I have written, and especially what you — the reader — would like to see in this column in the months to come. Are you more interested in information concerning color, fabric, forecasts or individual questions? What are your ideas and thoughts on Midland retailers? What would you like to see in the stores and how do you feel about today's fashions? This column is for and about you! Please share with all of us your opinions, comments and questions. I'll be looking forward to your letters, and will be "introducing" you to the fall fashions in a few weeks. In the meantime, spring and summer will still be a "hot item!"

TUMBLEWEED CHAPTER, SAGA

A slide show from the 1981 annual convention in Birmingham, Ala., was presented. Plans were made for a group from the Midland chapter to attend the 1982 convention in Memphis, Tenn.

SAGA is a rapidly growing association organized by and for persons interested in smocking, an old and beautiful type of needle artwork. Since its beginning in 1979, SAGA has grown from 85 to more than 2,000 members, and now has 30 chapters throughout the United States and the world. SAGA chapters promote the craft of smocking by exchanging ideas among members, conducting workshops and promoting the organization and craft.

WESTSIDE EXTENSION HOMEMAKERS CLUB

Reports were given by four members who attended the District 6 convention held in Big Spring. The club received a certificate of recognition for outstanding volunteer service.

The club has sent $25 to the Special Olympics.

BETA ETA CHAPTER, ESA

Event at Chaparral Center will benefit Midland Community Theatre

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

Thirty-six exhibitors from throughout the United States are displaying a variety of fine antiques at this weekend's Act IX Antique Show at Chaparral Center.

The show was launched Thursday with a black-tie preview party. Approximately 350 persons attended the event.

All proceeds from the show, party and accompanying lecture series will benefit the Midland Community Theatre. Act IX is a support group to the Theatre.

The antiques are all of high quality, and range in variety from Oriental exhibits, to Americana displays to fine prints and paintings. Also on exhibit are antique furniture, accessories and rugs. Jewelry exhibits are frequently seen and were one of the favorites of observers and buyers at Thursday's preview party.

The party was sponsored by Sakowitz Inc. and Robert Sakowitz, chairman of the board of Sakowitz, is honorary show chairman.

Robert Sakowitz has long been involved with Houston's cultural affairs, and has become supporitive of Midland's activities since his store's opening last year. He was the first person to simultaneously hold the chairmanship of both the Houston Municipal Arts Commission and the Cultural Affairs Committee of the Chamber of Commerce. He is associated with the American Institute for Public Service, the American Council for the Arts, the Foundation for the Joffrey Ballet, the Houston Municipal Art Commission and the Houston Symphony Society.

Thursday's preview party featured an early peek and opportunity to buy objects on display, cocktails, catered food by Karen Hilliard and music from the "Permian Consorts" at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Other sponsors of the show activities include Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr. who have made available the lecture series held in conjunction with the show. The final lecture in the series will be presented Saturday at 10:30 a.m. in the Chaparral Center.

At that time, Milton Barnes, a partner in Hastings House Antiques of Essex, Conn., will conduct a walking tour on "Decorating With Antiques." His studies of history, art, psychology and sociology have played an important part in the formation of his philosophy of design. He prefers an eclectic approach, always reflecting the personality and lifestyle of his client. His design projects have ranged from formal American interiors and contemporary corporate offices to folk art interiors. His design expertise has been enhanced by his studies of architecture, formal and primitive art, and textiles—both old and contemporary.

Other lecturers, most of whom are exhibitors at the show, have been Malcolm Stearns, Edith Frankel, Barry Greenlaw and Milly McGehee.

The show will continue today and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m and Sunday from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. Tickets, good for all three days, are available at the door for $4.

A tea room catered by Bah Humbug will be open during show hours, serving a light menu and refreshments.

Honorary advisors to the show are Dr. Brent G. Blonkvist, Mr. and Mrs. Craig, Mrs. L. R. French Jr., Mrs. J. Harvey Herd and Mrs Perkins D. Sams.

Members of the show executive committee include Mrs. Gus L. Waterman, chairman; Mrs. William B. Browder III, secretary; Mrs. Geoffrey Barnett, treasurer; and Mrs. James L. May, assistant treasurer.

Boise State to graduate 12-year-old

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — A professor of a senior-level college math course says he's had bright, young students before, but none like 12-year-old Jay Luo — who is about to become the youngest university graduate in U.S. history.

In June, Luo will receive his degree in mathematics from Boise State University. He is already planning to do post-graduate work at Stanford University.

Luo enrolled at Boise State at age 9. In three years he has exceeded the requirements for a bachelor of science degree, maintaining a B-plus average, said Boise State spokesman Larry Burke.

The boy's father, Zong Luo, a computer engineer for Hewlett-Packard in Boise, enrolled him at the university after reading an article in 1978 about exceptionally gifted students. The elder Luo, an American citizen of Taiwanese ancestry, sought out Boise State's Dr. William Mech, a former president of the National Collegiate Honors Council.

Mech has been the boy's adviser and a guiding force in his life for the last three years, and has been thrust into the role of the boy's spokesman because Luo's father has refused to allow his son to be interviewed.

"It's scary, it really is," Mech said of the boy's quick progress. "But somewhere, somebody has to take a stand and I believe this makes sense."

Luo scored in the 98th percentile in mathematics and in the top 80 percent in verbal skills in the Scholastic Aptitude Test. He began his college career by taking two part-time courses in May 1979. By the end of the year, he had skipped junior and senior high school and was carrying more than a full load of college courses.

Luo's rapid development has raised some unanswered questions about his future emotional and social well-being, Mech said.

"We had some other young students before, but nothing like this," Hughes said, but added: "I treated him like an adult and nothing really wild ever happened."

Alabama takes country music honors

BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — The rocking country band called Alabama was the big winner at the 17th annual Academy of Country Music awards, taking two honors in addition to being named entertainers of the year.

Barbara Mandrell was named top female vocalist Thursday, Merle Haggard won top male vocalist, and the duo of David Frizzell and Shelly West won top vocal duo and song of the year, for "You're the Reason God Made Oklahoma," in the ceremony at Knott's Berry Farm.

Alabama, which less than two years ago was playing a bar in Myrtle Beach, S.C., claimed "Hat" trophies for top vocal group and album of the year for their "Feels So Right." A year ago the band won the top vocal group award.

"I think the academy just kind of leads the way," said lead singer Randy Owen. "It's a great honor. Last year we did 300 days (on the road) and we're glad all the people listened."

"All this in one week — it's been an amazing week," David Frizzell said backstage.

Dottie West got her first glimpse of her new granddaughter, Tess Marie Frizzell, during the program as co-hosts Mickey Gilley and Conway Twitty introduced a videotape of the baby and her parents.

Miss Mandrell's top female vocalist award marked her fourth honor from the Los Angeles-based academy. "You've been very, very good to me for a very long time," the blond singer told the audience of 2,000 at the amusement park.

Haggard was not on hand to claim his best male vocalist trophy — his 14th Hat trophy and his sixth for male vocalist.

Juice Newton was another absentee winner in the best new female vocalist category. But Ricky Skaggs said, "Thank you, Lord" as he collected his award for best new male vocalist.

The Oak Ridge Boys, gospel singers turned country, won the single record of the year award for "Elvira." The song is the subject of a $10 million federal lawsuit by members and survivors of the Rivingtons, who claim that the "Oo-papa-mau-mau" refrain of "Elvira" was stolen from a Rivingtons hit.

However, in accepting the best single award, Oak Ridge Boy Joe Bonsall said without referring to the lawsuit that the band had first heard "Elvira" sung by a group in Texas a few years ago.

Winning entertainer of the year, top vocal group and album of the year honors were, from left, Randy Van Owen, Mark Herndon, Teddy Gentry and Jeff Cook.

"If we knew the name of that little group in Texas we'd buy them a Cadillac," Bonsall said.

The Clint Eastwood film "Any Which Way You Can" became the first winner of the newly-created Tex Ritter award for country motion picture of the year. That award was presented by Ritter's sons, "Three's Company" star John Ritter and his brother Tom.

The pioneer honorary award for innovation in county music went to Leo Fender, inventor of the solid-body guitar which bears his name. Music publisher Al Gallico won another trophy, the Jim Reeves memorial award for furthering country music throughout the world.

AIC lists honor students

Gibson

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Rhea Seddon Gibson — the first member of the U.S. astronaut corps to become pregnant — says she will take maternity leave to have her first child late this summer.

Mrs. Gibson, 34, declined Thursday to reveal the exact date her child is due. She and her husband, Robert, who also is an astronaut, were married in May 1981 in her hometown of Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Gibson, 35, is a Navy lieutenant commander from Lakewood, Calif. He is expected to pilot a future space shuttle mission and Mrs. Gibson, a physician, hopes to serve as a mission specialist.

BOSTON (AP) — Her performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra canceled, actress Vanessa Redgrave says she'll appear in a concert tonight sponsored by an Arab group.

At a news conference Thursday announcing the substitute concert, Ms. Redgrave said she'll file a breach of contract lawsuit against the symphony for canceling her $31,000 contract for narrative performance.

The symphony, which declined further comment Thursday, has said it called off the Redgrave concert series after receiving complaints about the 45-year-old actress' support for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"I am suing the Boston Symphony Orchestra not just for breach of contract but in defense of my civil and constitutional liberties and rights," said Ms. Redgrave, who won a best supporting actress Academy Award for "Julia."

The National Association of Arab Americans is sponsoring Ms. Redgrave's appearances, including a private show for the group Saturday.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Gov. John Y. Brown Jr., and his wife, sports commentator Phyllis George, will host 1,000 celebrities at a Kentucky Derby breakfast with an eclectic guest list.

Among those invited are artist Andy Warhol, Gov. and Mrs. Charles Robb of Virginia, actress Cathy Lee Crosby, economist Alan Greenspan, and Brig. Gen. James Dozier, newly appointed deputy commander of Fort Knox after being held hostage by the Red Brigades in Italy.

Other guests will be folk singer Waylon Jennings and his wife, singer Jessi Coulter; comedian Foster Brooks; Barbara Walters of ABC and NBC president Robert Mulholland; and former CBS anchorman Walter Cronkite.

The traditional breakfast will be held at the Kentucky Horse Park in Lexington. It caps a week of pre-Derby celebrations that will end with the "Run For The Roses" Saturday afternoon at Churchill Downs.

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A federal judge has ordered country-western singer Johnny Paycheck to appear in court within 20 days to answer questions about his personal and corporate taxes.

The Internal Revenue Service is seeking more than $100,000 in back taxes from Paycheck and about $50,000 in various taxes from Johnny Paycheck Enterprises, based in Destin.

The singer failed to appear in court Thursday.

For Hoboken, it's a whole new world

EDITOR'S NOTE: The image is of docks and ramshackle houses, the movie "On the Waterfront," the birthplace of Frank Sinatra. That's Hoboken, N.J., in the eyes of many Americans. But Hoboken has changed — and continues to change. Urban renewal is transforming the city's face, fortunes and future.

HOBOKEN, N.J. (AP) — Ask any editorialist, playwright or comic who ever chucked Hoboken's chin: The Cleveland and Buffalo jokes come and go, but the one-liner springs eternal in Hoboken, the perennial punchline to the national snicker that goes by the name of New Jersey.

"We could talk about Hoboken," he said amiably. "But there's always so little to say."

But seriously, folks. There is plenty to say about Hoboken these days, and to the 42,000 who live here, a mere 2,000 yards from New York, much of it seems far from funny.

A DECADE AGO, A new breed of social scientist descended upon "America's Urban Laboratory," as Mayor Steve Capiello dubbed his city, to conduct an experiment called urban renewal.

The experiment had succeeded elsewhere — in Washington's Capitol Hill, Philadelphia's Queen Village, Brooklyn's Park Slope. But Hoboken? HOBOKEN?? There was plenty of reason to wonder.

How bad was Hoboken? It was so bad that there was talk of turning it into a highway. So bad that city officials once barred photographers from taking pictures of it. So bad that jokes about how bad it was became stock stuff for every Borscht Belt comic struggling to make his way out of the Catskills.

But this time, this once, Hoboken laughed last. The experiment worked, and the city has been transformed — from a place people wanted to leave into a place people want to call home.

Along with transforming Hoboken, however, some say urban renewal did something else. It created "a Frankenstein" in the view of resident Steve Block, who says "nobody thought about what happens when the middle class actually comes back and takes over."

Hobokenites are giving that lots of thought, now that the tax base has dwindled, unemployment tops 16 percent, and poor people claim they're being pushed out of town.

HOBOKEN WAS HOBOKEN when Musella was growing up, riding scooters, stealing apples and dodging cops on its gaudy, gritty streets. Today, he sees those streets sprouting gourmet food shops and antiques stores, and he's starting to feel like a stranger.

Oh, you can still get a cake shaped like Puerto Rico at Valencia Bakery, Italian figurines on lay-away at Il Faro Italiano, and an argument from the dry cleaner when you bring him an item he insists you can wash yourself. "Whatayawanna waste money for?"

But you can also munch chocolate mousse cake at Lesley's Delicacies, order veal sweetbreads with lobster and cream sauce at the Brass Rail and dress up in antique finery from Second Performance.

The old and the new collide on almost every block, transforming the shopping district into a surreal hash of dry toast and crumpets, baked beans and coquilles St. Jacques.

It wasn't that long ago when there was very little hope for Hoboken, the city where Americans lapped their first ice cream cones, brewed their first beer and attended the nation's first recorded baseball game.

"There was even some talk about turning it into a highway between the Lincoln and Holland tunnels," recalls neighborhood preservation director Sal Santaniello.

IT'S HARD TO pinpoint when Hoboken hit bottom, but some say the late 1930s and early 1940s were among its lowest ebbs.

In 1936, Vilas Poyles told New York Post readers how graft from gambling rackets and legitimate businesses had lined Mayor Bernard McFeeley's pockets to the reputed tune of $3 million. "A city rots while its mayor waxes rich," read the headline.

Five years later, a now-defunct magazine called "U.S. Camera" sent two photographers to the Hudson's left bank, where they found "a city of fine traditions decaying from within," thanks to "the ruthless graft of corrupt politicians."

They also brought back 16 pages of photographs — a rare coup, since city fathers had passed an ordinance forbidding any Hoboken street, dock or building from being recorded on film.

As was the case in many other American cities, the middle class hightailed it out of Hoboken during much of the '50s and '60s, when the American dream meant a house in the suburbs.

Many industries left, too, in search of more space or more modern facilities. Much of Hoboken's shipping trade had already set sail for Elizabeth and Newark, and the emergence of air travel had long since done away with the passenger steamships.

As a hero-informer named Terry Malloy, Marlon Brando fought union corruption "On The Waterfront" here in the mid-1950s, transforming Hoboken into that ultimate geographical nowhere, Palookaville.

People who remember the city as it was then don't mince words: "A real dump," says the mayor.

THEN, A DECADE ago, the federal government decided it wasn't too late for Hoboken to become a prime battlefield in the ongoing war against poverty.

The city's crumbling core was named a Model City by officials who launched one program after another: Subsidized housing for low-income tenants, grants to reduce interest rates for homeowners, programs to gut and restore the interiors of rundown tenements while leaving their fancy facades intact.

"We turned the city around — from a place that was about to become Slumsville to a nice place in which to live," Santaniello says.

As it stands, about 4,000 of the city's 15,000 housing units have been rehabilitated — nearly all of Hoboken's central core.

But work continues on the city's extremities, and it's hard to walk down a Hoboken street without hearing a hammer. Meanwhile, prices continue to climb.

When she came to Hoboken in 1970, "people laughed at me," Realtor Maureen Singleton says. "I couldn't afford to buy in Hoboken today."

Three-family brownstones that could be had for $15,000 to $20,000 the year Mrs. Singleton moved to the city are selling for $100,000 to $175,000 now, and an apartment that would have rented for $350 two years ago today fetches $500 — beyond the reach of many Hobokenites.

"Trendy suburb" is the latest in a series of disparate identities assumed by Hoboken, the city where Stephen Foster once dreamed of Jeannie, the city that gave Frank Sinatra those little town blues.

Hoboken served as a resort for rich New Yorkers during the mid-1800s, as the jumping-off point for thousands of doughboys during World War I, as the wettest town in New Jersey during Prohibition.

"To people in New York City who say things like 'Where is New Jersey?' the Hudson just might be the widest river in the world," muses Fred Bado, Hoboken's community development director.

But others are rediscovering that the Hudson measures just 20 football fields between Manhattan and Hoboken, which is tucked between the yawning mouths of the Lincoln and Holland tunnels. Lately, more and more New Yorkers are spilling out of those tunnels, clutching the want ads and hunting for brownstones.

What they find when they get here are stained-glass transoms and grinning gargoyles, wrought iron railing and carved wooden cornices, parquet floors and mahogany mantles.

These and other objects of urban lust — fireplaces, archways and shutters — adorn symmetrical rows of three- to five-story buildings whose faces of brick and brownstone glow from 10 years of scrubbing.

"IT'S A DOMINO theory," Mrs. Singleton says. "Foreign money and rich suburban money have been buying the East Side of Manhattan. From the East Side, people move to the West Side or Greenwich Village.

"Once they get priced out of the Village, they go to Chelsea. Then, they find themselves getting priced out of Chelsea."

You'd be hard-pressed to find anyone in Hoboken these days who hasn't figured out where New Yorkers go next. And the renaissance that has resulted seems to be getting folks down.

Some say the city has never looked better. But nobody says hello on the bus anymore.

"When one or two new people move into a town every week, they see the local people saying hello on the bus and they learn to say hello too. That's assimilation," Mrs. Singleton says.

"But when dozens of people move into a place, pretty soon it's all newcomers on that bus. Suddenly, there's no one to learn from.

"My question is whether or not we can assimilate so many people. I fear we're reaching past the point where we can."

Little things like bus manners still count for a lot in Hoboken, a predominantly Italian and Hispanic community where old women in kerchiefs sweep sidewalks in front of their houses, where grocery owner Ed Tori trusts customers to keep track of how much they owe him.

Those were among the small-town trappings that attracted Kate Smallwood, who moved here with her husband and young son. But less than a year later, Mrs. Smallwood already is looking for new quarters. Like many Hoboken natives, she dislikes what gentrification has wrought.

"The jinx is still with me," she says, adding that this marks the third time she has moved to a working-class neighborhood only to watch it turn "glittery."

Ex-justice changes mind about old incident

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Retired U.S. Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart says he was shocked when he learned that Justice Louis D. Brandeis paid a law professor to advance his public policy views, but now believes there was nothing wrong with the arrangement.

Stewart, in an interview at Yale University, said he was initially "very surprised and shocked" when a book titled, "The Brandeis-Frankfurter Connection: The Secret Political Activities of Two Supreme Court Justices," was published in February.

No acting Supreme Court justice has commented on the book, which was written by Bruce A. Murphy, an assistant political science professor at Pennsylvania State University.

THE BOOK SAYS Brandeis paid Felix Frankfurter, a Harvard law professor who later was appointed a Supreme Court justice himself, more than $50,000 to arrange for publication of Brandeis' views in unsigned articles in legal journals.

"I soon began asking myself: 'What is so shocking about it?' " Stewart said. "I know by reputation, and at least by history, that Justice Brandeis remained a strong ideologue and maybe it was better for him to do these things indirectly and not by direct action.

"It would have been quite wrong of him to use his office to be influential. And that he held the office, maybe it was right not to do so in any public way. So maybe I was wrong to be shocked," Stewart said.

Brandeis died in 1941; Frankfurter died in 1965.

Stewart, who retired in July after 23 years on the high court, is in residence at Yale for two weeks.

On other issues, he said he fears that conservative pressure to limit the powers of federal judges in emotional issues like abortion, school busing and school prayer could succeed and upset the constitutional balance of powers.

Legislation pending before Congress would limit the ability of federal judges to use busing to achieve racial desegregation, curtail the availability of abortion and even limit Supreme Court jurisdiction to ban prayer from the classroom.

"As a citizen, I'm against all such legislation because it distorts the balance of the functions of the three branches (of the federal government) which has been accepted by the American people since the days of Chief Justice John Marshall," Stewart said. Marshall was chief justice from 1801 to 1835.

Stewart said it was "almost an insult" to give justices liberal or conservative labels. He contends justices never set out to establish policy, but sometimes can't help doing so because of the nature of the law and the issues they must decide.

"I THINK TO SAY one is a great liberal judge or a great conservative judge is almost a contradiction in terms. You can't be a great judge if you allow your ideology to distort your views and duty as a judge," said Stewart, who graduated from Yale College in 1937 and Yale Law School in 1941.

"I never thought that I, as a justice of the Supreme Court, was making policy except so far as necessarily any judge, whenever he decides any case, is doing so. Nor did I think the majority of the court was.

"Every time you decide a case that results from an ambiguity in the law, in the statutes or in the Constitution, you are making policy because you're filling in one of the interstices. However you decide the case, whether you fill it in this way, that way or the other way, you're making policy."

Stewart also said he never experienced political pressure on the Supreme Court.

"The intellectual and professional pressures and the pressures of conscience were very great, but political pressure was totally absent," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half the kids in America are so out of shape that they flunked a standard fitness test, a study shows.

The analysis by the Amateur Athletic Union also showed that in some categories the average teen-ager's performance declined after age 14.

For example, the typical 15-year-old boy takes 13.3 seconds to sprint 100 yards while 14-year-old boys cover the distance in 12.6 seconds. The typical 17-year-old girl can do only 38 modified push-ups in two minutes, compared with 43 performed by an average 12-year-old girl.

Dr. Wynn F. Updyke, associate dean for graduate studies at Indiana University's School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, attributed the falling off — or leveling off — after age 14 to the fact that many schools drop compulsory gym and physical education after the eighth grade.

At a news conference earlier this week, Updyke made public the analysis based on the performance of 7,600 youngsters who were chosen at random from four million children given the tests during the last two school years.

"Although the basic standards are designed to be attainable by the average healthy youngster in each age and sex group, only 43 percent of participants were able to achieve them during the 1979-80 and 1980-81 academic years," a summary said.

Updyke said there were no significant differences in test results by geographic region and the scores in 1980-81 were no better or worse than those the previous year.

Something fishy up aquaculturists' sleeves

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Although politics will doubtless be involved, this revolution will not be a political revolt but will come instead at the nation's dinner tables, where traditional steaks, pork chops and chickens will be displaced by massive, steaming catfish harvested just down the road, or by large but still-delicate trout raised in West Virginia aquariums.

Instead of pot roast, Americans may soon choose farm-fresh lobster from Utah. Meatloaf and hamburgers may give way to such exotic creations as the "splake," the "grass carp" and the Tilapia or "St. Peter's fish" — "the fish to feed the masses," its champions say.

SPURRED BY DWINDLING supplies of fish from the world's rivers, lakes and oceans, and by rising consumer demand for finned delicacies, the United States stands on the verge of a fish farming boom, a blue revolution in "aquaculture," according to federal officials and independent experts.

"The aquaculture business here is just about to take off. It's ready to blow in this country," Buterbaugh said. He is associate director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which has been raising game fish for sportsmen for almost 100 years and has now begun to study commercial fish farming.

Among cost- and calorie-conscious consumers, the shift is already underway. In the last 20 years, the average American has increased his consumption of fish from 10 pounds a year to 13.4 pounds. "We expect it to triple in the 1980s," says Hougart, who is aquaculture coordinator for the Department of Agriculture.

But among the nation's farmers, officials say, there is still much to be done to catch up with China and Japan in the difficult art of fish cultivation.

As things stand now, the United States finds itself importing 54 percent of the fish consumed or used — at a cost of $2.7 billion a year, or about 5 percent of the annual trade deficit.

Concerned about this shortfall in domestic fish production, Congress passed the National Aquaculture Act in 1980 to encourage U.S. farmers to pay more attention to fish as a cash crop, through the use of improved breeds and new methods of raising large numbers of fish in special ponds and other facilities.

Currently, only 8 percent of all U.S. fishery products are raised through aquaculture, compared with 25 percent in China.

What is needed, Congress decided, is for the government to start treating fish farmers like other farmers by supporting them with research, information, guidance and — eventually — subsidies, such as those for corn, soybeans or sugar beets.

One way the government already is trying to help these farmers is by developing exotic breeds — potential super fish that could grow quickly into adulthood while shrugging off the deadly array of diseases that can devastate a fish pond more swiftly than a freeze can kill a tomato crop.

The fish farmer's greatest fear is that he will walk out to see his trout one morning, after nurturing them for almost two years, and find the entire crop dead, overnight victims of a swift virus or a mysterious lack of oxygen.

AT THE NATIONAL Fisheries Center in Leetown, W. Va., scientists are trying to find ways to "vaccinate" fish against diseases like one caused by a parasite that came to U.S. streams almost 30 years ago, when contaminated frozen fish from Europe were fed to trout in Pennsylvania.

On the other side of the expansive fisheries center, which one aide calls "the equivalent of Paris, France, to a fish expert," are breeding tanks where experts have cultivated such specimens as rainbow trout that grow 86 times faster than ordinary stock.

"Fish farmers sometimes do their own breeding, but often it's a sort of haphazard business where they take the two biggest fish and mate them," said Willie Barnes, who helps run the Rainbow Trout Genetic Center at Leetown. "But the problem is that the two big ones are probably brother and sister, and the offspring turn out to be pretty weak."

Other researchers, some at universities around the country and a few at private companies, have been looking at more exotic possibilities.

Among them is the Tilapia, sometimes called the "wonder fish" by those hoping it will someday provide huge quantities of protein for the nation and the world. Tilapia, imported from Africa 20 years ago, was brought to Florida to help rid canals and rivers of excess algae.

Floridians found, however, that the blue Tilapia very quickly grew fat in their gentle climate, and there have been efforts to farm and market the fish as "African perch," according to Hougart, or "St. Peter's Fish — the fish to feed the masses."

Our problem is that sometimes they reproduce so fast, you find yourself with a pond full of fish, all one inch long."

Grandparents lobby for rights

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Donna Sullivan says her 8-year-old granddaughter's question, "Ma-Ma, why can't you come see me anymore?" is tearing her up inside.

Mrs. Sullivan says neither she nor her husband, Jerrel, can give a good answer to young Stacey. The southeastern Illinois couple has been denied permission to see their two grandchildren since their son died and their daughter-in-law remarried.

The Sullivans went before the Legislature for help in their two-year battle to win the right to visit Stacey and 5-year-old Shawn.

Her voice breaking at times, Mrs. Sullivan testified Wednesday before the state House Judiciary Committee in favor of a bill expanding grandparents' visitation rights.

The bill would guarantee grandparents the right to visit grandchildren when one parent dies. State law now guarantees such visits only if both parents are dead.

The Sullivans once lived with their 24-year-old son, Rick, his wife and the two children, Mrs. Sullivan told the panel. But Rick was killed two years ago in a car crash, and his wife remarried and moved four counties away. The new husband has refused to let the Sullivans visit the children, she said.

The Sullivans have seen the children three times in two years, she said, but only briefly and without parental approval.

The most recent visit was the week before Christmas. The Sullivans saw a newspaper story about a school pageant in which their grandchildren were to appear, she said. They had taken out a subscription to the children's hometown paper hoping for such news.

They drove two hours for a glimpse of Stacey and Shawn, and spoke briefly with them after the play. It was then that Stacey asked why she could not see her grandparents anymore, Mrs. Sullivan said.

"It's pretty hard not to cry. But we try not to around them (the children)," Mrs. Sullivan, 43, said after testifying.

Ombudsman suggested for FDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration should have an "ombudsman" to help resolve disputes that slow the approval of new drugs, a federal study commission recommended today.

The average FDA approval time is more than 30 months, while the average in other developed countries is a little over 18 months, said the 26-member Commission on the Federal Drug Approval Process in its 106-page report to Congress.

"The goal of drug regulation is to protect the public health and safety," the report said. "But it should also be recognized that the public is not well served if useful medicines are kept off the market."

The study panel recommended that the FDA set up new ways of resolving disputes that slow the approval process.

"An ombudsman function should be established in the (FDA) commissioner's office, where administrative or procedural problems can be taken when they cannot be satisfactorily or promptly resolved with line management," it said.

It also recommended that FDA adopt less formal proceedings, make greater use of outside experts and allow more streamlined presentations of data to support an application. And it suggested a less restrictive conflict-of-interest policy on outside advisers in the drug approval process.

The hurdles a manufacturer must clear to win approval of a new drug have been credited with keeping thalidomide off American markets in the 1960s. This drug caused malformed babies after it was allowed on the market in other countries.

Federal law requires that drugs be shown to be safe and effective before they can go on the market.

"In no way does the commission suggest cutting corners to get drugs approved faster...A faster drug review process does not necessarily mean lower standards," the study panel said.

It noted with approval that the FDA and the drug industry have had a less adversarial relationship in recent years and encouraged more cooperation between them. It also suggested changes within FDA intended to encourage drug innovation.

The study panel cautioned that none of its suggestions would have any immediate impact on the drug review process.

"The burdensome nature of the regulatory system was built up incrementally over many years. Similarly, improvements will come from a multitude of separate actions, the cumulative impact of which can be great," it said.

The panel consisting of government, medical, industry and academic representatives was organized by Reps. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., and Albert Gore, D-Tenn.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, May 1, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: "Tonight Show" pioneer Jack Paar and folk singer Judy Collins celebrate this birthday with you. Today is also the running of the Kentucky Derby. In the months ahead, business ventures enjoy greater success and romance is happier than ever before. You find that you are more productive at work and finally are given compensation equal to your talents. Count on receiving double value for the time and energy you invest in a romantic relationship. Loved one returns your devotion with growing ardor. Generous and outgoing, you have many friends. Beware of those few individuals who seek to take advantage of your good nature.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Take family members into account when finalizing your weekend plans. A hectic pace could prove too much for some of them. Be candid when discussing sensitive matter with mate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Say "no" and mean it when approached with a get-rich-quick scheme. Others try to cajole you, but you should not give in. Creative individuals reap a real bonanza today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You have good reasons for calling loved one today. Do not forget it! Jealous romantic partners must not be allowed to disrupt your relationship. Join a new social or athletic group.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Adopting a more realistic attitude towards finances will free you from worry. Work goes well. You get interesting answers without having to ask questions!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A remarkable change of attitude on the part of a loved one leaves you curious but happy. Do not rock the boat! You and your friends understand one another despite a disagreement.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Welcome the opinions of those older and wiser than yourself. Your willingness to listen is rewarded with new friendships. Small groups provide the most fun this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A change in your financial situation brings welcome relief. Be diplomatic and avoid forcing an issue. On important matters, you and your loved ones are on the same wave length.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The parental influence is strong today. Rebelling will only aggravate an already difficult situation. Later today, you reach a reasonable agreement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Youngsters look to you for leadership. Shed outdated attitudes. Mate helps you gain fresh insights. Listen more and talk less.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your devotion to hard work makes family members feel that it is difficult for them to measure up. Get some rest. Delegate more responsibility.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Although money is coming in, too much of it is going out. Try to save more cash for that proverbial rainy day. Take advantage of time-saving household devices.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You make a difficult choice and life becomes happier for everyone involved. Take the initiative and work to improve your relationships with other family members.

One of our more pleasant evenings was spent reading "Play a Swiss Teams of Four with Mike Lawrence" (by Mike Lawrence. Published by Max Hardy, 4680 W. 181st St., Hawthorne, Calif. 90250. Paperback, 99 pages. $6.95. Available from the publisher.) Here's your chance to sit next to one of the best players in the world and have him explain to you why he made a particular bid or play. You follow his fortunes through an eight-match Swiss team event of seven boards a match, see how he judges the progress of each match, and how it affects the many decisions he had to make as the event moves along. The hands are all interesting and the book will make you a better player, no matter what form of bridge you prefer.

Lawrence sat West on this hand. After South bids three spades, Lawrence comments: "I don't think they can make this, but I pass and LHO bids four spades. When this gets around to me, I double. Enough is enough. Note that this double is based primarily on strength in RHO's known suits. I do not expect to score a lot of heart tricks. Hoping that partner has short clubs, I start with the king of clubs and a somewhat discouraging dummy comes down.

"Partner plays the club two. It is not difficult to work out what is happening here. Declarer has six or seven spades, five clubs, else she would have rebid spades first, and the ace and king of diamonds. This means she is 6-0-2-5. If I don't lead a trump, she will ruff three clubs in dummy and will lose two spade tricks. If I lead a trump, she will ruff two clubs and lose a club, and will have but one trump loser. Fortunately, there is an answer. By my leading the king of spades, sacrificing perhaps all my trump tricks, the defense will still come to four tricks. If declarer ruffs clubs, I will come to two trump tricks plus another club, and if declarer draws trumps, I get four club trucks. It turns out that the setting trick is the eight of spades."

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Memories haunt families years after war has ended

EDITOR'S NOTE: AP Special Correspondent George Esper covered the war in Vietnam and remained there after the American evacuation to report on the earliest days of the communist victory.

By GEORGE ESPER
AP Special Correspondent

WOBURN, Mass. (AP) — Charles McMahon got up from the sofa in his living room and walked into the kitchen to hide his tears. Vietnam made them flow again.

Seven years ago Thursday, McMahon's son, Charlie, was one of the last Americans killed in Vietnam. He was struck down at random in a war and a country where no one wanted to be the last to die. It was, his father said, just bad luck, a "bummer" riding on the imprecision of a North Vietnamese rocket that could have landed anywhere.

"It could have been the boy next door, the boy down the street, it could have been any of them," says his mother, Edna McMahon.

"It just happened that our boy was there, that's all," says McMahon.

AT NOON the next day, April 30, 1975, the guns fell silent across Vietnam. The American evacuation had ended. Saigon had fallen to the North Vietnamese. It marked the end of 30 years of American involvement at a cost of 57,661 dead, more than 300,000 wounded and $150 billion.

Today, McMahon is 51 years old. His wife is 52. He still works at a gelatin processing plant, the same job he has held for more than 30 years. Mrs. McMahon has been driving a school bus for 19 years.

Their son was 21 when he was killed along with another Marine, Darwin Judge, 19, of Marshalltown, Iowa, in a rocket bombardment of Tan Son Nhut airport during the final evacuation of Americans.

McMahon and Judge were embassy guards who had only recently arrived in Vietnam and were assigned to the U.S. defense attache's compound at Tan Son Nhut. They were believed to be the last two Americans killed on Vietnamese soil. Two other Marines were killed the following day when their helicopter plunged into the South China Sea during the evacuation.

NEITHER THE McMahons nor Judge's parents, Henry and Ida Judge, are bitter, even though they suffered the agony of having to wait nearly a year before the bodies of their sons were returned home for burial. They say their sons wanted to be Marines and enlisted.

"Maybe it would have been different if he had been drafted and sent over there without really wanting to go," says Mrs. McMahon.

"What makes you feel bitter," says McMahon, "is the ones who went to Canada."

The McMahon family endured triple tragedy. Three months after Charlie's death, their youngest son, Scott, also a Marine, was in an auto accident in California that left him a paraplegic. In October of that year, Mrs. McMahon's father died, shielded because of his illness from the news that Charlie had been killed.

Scott, now 25, lives in California and has been in and out of the hospital. Another son, Michael, 26, and a married daughter, Susan, 31, live in Woburn.

WHAT WOULD things be like today if Charlie were alive?

"Sometimes you wonder," says McMahon. "You could project what they would be, but you'll never know, if you know what I mean."

"I just wonder," says Mrs. McMahon, "what he'd be doing now, if he'd be married and have any children, and if he would still be living in Woburn. Things like that. Whether he would have stayed in the Marine Corps, because he did love it."

But her son, says Mrs. Judge, was doing what he wanted.

"SO YOU have to be very proud of him," she said.

Time has helped ease the pain for both families.

"It's like that life has to go on," says Mrs. Judge. "Some days are good, some days are bad. Last June we had a terrible phone call that started my nerves and stuff all up again.

"The operator wanted to know if we'd accept a collect call from Darwin. And I said, 'Well, Darwin was killed.' Then all of a sudden I heard this horrible voice that said, 'Hello, Mom, I love you.' And that was all there was to it.

"It was a horrible experience to go through. I called the Marines right away and they said it was probably a crank call. My nerves were pretty well shot for a long time."

> "Maybe it would have been different if he had been drafted and sent over there without really wanting to go... What makes you feel bitter is the ones who went to Canada."

MCMAHON says "things get smoother and smoother all the time, but when people talk about it, it does upset me. You get used to it after a while, but when everything starts flooding back at once, it's hard."

Charlie McMahon was home on leave, here in Woburn, a 30-minute drive from Boston, less than two weeks before he was killed.

"He told me he'd be home," recalls Mrs. McMahon. "When he left, he said, 'I'll be back.'"

Mrs. Truckle (Toni Botary) tells Judge Bastardson (Bill Shaner) she wants to forget the entire episode as she testifies before his court in this scene from Midland Community Theatre's current Theatre I production, "Sly Fox," written by Larry Gelbart and based on Ben Jonson's "Volpone." A limited number of seats are still available for today's and Saturday's 8:30 p.m. performances. The show closes Saturday. Reservations may be made by calling the theater's box office at 682-4111.

'Barney Miller' to bid adieu

By JAMES BROWN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Yes, this is a wrap party with a lot of good times to go over. Yet underneath all the conviviality, there's a sadness. And toward the end of the day, a few tears.

After eight seasons and 170 episodes, "Barney Miller" will roll before the cameras for the last time.

Unlike most television shows, "Barney Miller" has chosen its own time to die. Danny Arnold, who co created, produced, directed, wrote and generally mother-henned the show through its eight years, decided that the time was right to move on to something else.

"It's primarily going off the air because it's just too difficult to maintain the quality," Arnold says. "I've given my all; everyone has. But it reaches a point where there are diminished returns. We did 170 shows we're proud of. And we don't want to do anything that would hurt the quality of that work."

Actually, Arnold was prepared to close down "Barney Miller" at the end of last season. He'd undergone heart surgery the year before; his chief lieutenant, Tony Sheehan, had left the show. Arnold felt at the time that his restricted work schedule simply wouldn't permit him to oversee the show as he had done in the past. However, ABC exercised a contractual option to renew the show, so "Barney Miller" did continue for another year. But that, everyone knew, would be its last.

"It just got tough to do physically," says Hal Linden, the New York musical stage star who opened up a whole new career for himself as the star of "Barney Miller."

"With Danny's health problems and Tony Sheehan leaving the show, it became a matter of replacing people who had eight years' history with us. We probably would have gone on, but it would be like starting all over again. And I think everyone was just too tired to go through that."

The final three episodes of "Barney Miller" (the last of which airs May 20) will parallel these goodbye scenes on Stage 79. The 12th precinct, where Capt. Miller and his detectives have presided all these years, has been declared a historical landmark.

The staff has all been reassigned — Wojo (Max Gail), Harris (Ron Glass), Dietrich (Steve Landesberg), Levitt (Ron Carey), Inspector Luger (James Gregory) and Barney Miller himself — all preparing for the moment when they'll have to say goodbye.

"We're not going to rehearse that scene at all," Arnold says. "We tried it before and it got too emotional. So we're just going to shoot it and see what happens."

"It's been difficult all week long. We try not to talk about it, but it's hard to fight the depression of leaving all this behind. On the other hand, we still have a show to do. It's been tough."

Lindsey takes 'Hee Haw' on the road

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Hee Haw," the TV show that Fred Silverman once said you couldn't kill with a stick, is taking its music and corn on the road.

The "Hee Haw" stage show was tried out at Knotts Berry Farm in Southern California and in Spokane, Wash., where it drew 90,000 people in four days. In May, the stage show will visit Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina.

"It's simply one hour of 'Hee Haw,' the songs and the sketches, just the way we do it on the air," says George Lindsey, a co-star of the show for the last 12 years. "I do the special guest spot at the end of the stage show. It's part of my night club act."

"Hee Haw" is a television phenomenon. CBS hastily threw it on the air in June 1969 after canceling "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour." It was meant only as a summer show, but it was so popular the network brought it back. It was finally axed by CBS in July 1971, when Fred Silverman, then with the network, got rid of all country-oriented programs.

The producers hocked everything they owned to put the show into syndication — a smart move, since "Hee Haw" is television's most successful weekly syndicated show. It's seen 52 weeks a year on 200 stations in this country and in Canada.

Lindsey, perhaps best known as Goober from "The Andy Griffith Show" and "Mayberry RFD," says, "I'm a jack-of-all-trades on 'Hee Haw.' I do my own wardrobe, I write my own material. I've been given carte blanche, or, as we say on 'Hee Haw,' carte grits. I do my savers — that's what you do to save a joke. I pour milk over my head or whatever. We don't make any bones about the material being terrific."

"Hee Haw," which is taped in Nashville, takes up only a small part of Lindsey's time. He has a nightclub act in Las Vegas and Lake Tahoe, his own celebrity golf tournament, he has a comedy album just out, he recently taped a special for cable TV, and he makes frequent guest appearances on such shows as "M-A-S-H" and "Herbie the Love Bug."

Gaither's inspiration from daily life

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

In 1959 he was teaching high school English, literature and journalism. In 1962 he married Gloria Sickal, who taught French and English in the same high school. She graduated cum laude from Anderson College. He has a bachelor of arts from Anderson College and a master's from Ball State University. Together, they began singing in churches throughout the Midwest.

To date, they have recorded more than 25 albums and won two Grammy awards, two Dove awards and nominations for many others. Tuesday they will bring their music to Midland's Chaparral Center for an evening of family-based contemporary Christian music.

Concert time for The Bill Gaither Trio, the New Gaither Vocal Band and special guest artist Sandi Patti is 7:30 p.m. The third member of the Gaither Trio is Gary McSpadden, formerly of the Oak Ridge Boys before founding, with Jake Hess, the Grammy-winning gospel quartet known as the Imperials.

Tickets, priced at $7.50 reserved seating and $6.50 general admission, may be purchased at Endless Horizons and Rudd's Christian Bookstore, Midland and Odessa; Sonshine Corner, Midland; Music Haul and Flipside Records, Odessa; Robbie's Bookstore, Andrews; and Abundant Life Christian Bookstore, Big Spring.

"The gospel field is different from the secular," Gaither said in a recent telephone interview. "In the secular field you have to find avenues, but you start gospel where you are."

In the 1960s when the Gaithers were singing their Christian music in their local church, out-of-town church visitors would say, "I like this. Will you do that in my church?" And they did. Thus their reputation grew and they recorded their first album in 1964.

They write most of the music they record.

Gaither's writing "came out of a need. We were performing and I was directing a choir." What Gaither wanted to say had not been said before in the manner in which he wanted to express his thoughts. That's "the way all creativity starts. The man who invented the car was probably tired of riding behind two horses," Gaither said laughing.

"The message of the gospel is always the same, but each generation translates that to others in words of the time," Gaithersaid. Using Shakespeare as an example, Gaither said, "The things he said were so profound and true. We keep translating the truth."

The inspiration for their songs comes from "their daily lives. We have good days and bad days. Whether we are sad, angry or happy, we respond with a song."

Gaither then told a story about a friend making him angry. Gaither said one of the comments his friend made, "I'm really getting into the word," provided the inspiration for the beginnings of a song — "I'm glad that I heard you're getting into the word, but is the word getting into you?"

"Songs come out of experiences; good and bad, happy and sad."

Gaither recommends that those who want to be songwriters can get ahead in the game if "they go to college and major in English, making sure they get some poetry in their background."

For Gaither, "no matter what style it (music) is, people respect it if it's done well. A lot of people have heard classical music not done well," so they think they don't like it. The important thing in a musical performance is that it is done well and the effort to communicate is made, Gaither said.

Unlike many stars who have reached the top of their particular field and prefer to keep the stage to themselves, the Gaithers have, through the years, shared the spotlight with a number of new and growing talents.

"I come from the old school that says, 'If the team wins, we all win.' I don't care who carries the ball," Gaither said, adding, "I guess I'm still a teacher at heart."

For example, "if we as parents do our jobs well, we finally work ourselves out of a job."

Sandi Patti is the fifth performer to have a solo segment during the Gaither concerts. Lillie Knauls, a black singer from Oakland, was the first, followed by Don Francisco, who "found a new, fresh way to tell Bible stories." Next Amy Grant was brought to Gaither's attention by his daughter, Amy, who told him, "Daddy you ought to hear this record." Then Cynthia Clawson performed several dates with the Gaithers.

"Music is a young person's business, finding a better and better way to say it." Each of these young people have brought a "different kind of approach to the gospel. I'm just glad that we could have been involved with them, and hopefully, that we have been of some help to them."

Performing at Chaparral Center at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday will be, clockwise from bottom left, The New Gaither Vocal Band, the Bill Gaither Trio and Sandi Patti. The winner of two Grammy awards and two Dove awards, the Bill Gaither Trio has recorded such well-known Christian songs as "He Touched Me," "Something Beautiful," "Get All Excited," "Let's Just Praise the Lord," "The King is Coming," "There's Something About that Name," "Because He Lives" and "I Am Loved."

El Baba favored over Kentucky Derby survivors

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Cupecoy's Joy, a fast-working New York-bred filly, Saturday will test 18 colts — including a one-eyed runner — and a gelding, survivors from a Kentucky Derby field that has been stripped by illness and injury.

In 107 previous Derbies at Churchill Downs, only two fillies have won — Genuine Risk in 1980 and Regret in 1915.

Cupecoy's Joy, who ranked sixth on the money earning list which determined the field at a maximum 20 3-year-olds, also had been entered in today's Kentucky Oaks for 3-year-olds.

HOWEVER, AFTER Cupecoy's Joy drew the favorable No. 1 position for the richest Derby ever with a gross purse of $527,600, owner Roberto Perez said, "We're in for the big one. If we had drawn on the outside, we would have scratched immediately and run in the Oaks."

Bettors, perhaps remembering that Genuine Risk paid $28.20 for a $2 win ticket here, don't figure to get that high a payoff on Cupecoy's Joy since she will be part of the parimutel field with seven others because there can be only 12 betting interests.

The parimutuel field was listed at 8-1 in the early line, which favored El Baba, winner of eight of 10 starts, at 5-2, followed by unbeaten Air Forbes Won, the Wood Memorial winner, 7-2, and Muttering, the Santa Anita Derby winner at 4-1.

Cupecoy's Joy, to be ridden by Angel Santiago, has four victories — all against New York-bred competition — five seconds and four thirds in 14 starts, earning $213,420. Royal Roberto, a 20-1 outsider, is the other New York-bred in the field for the 1¼-mile first leg of thoroughbred racing's Triple Crown.

No New York-bred has ever won the Derby which has been dominated by Kentucky-breds who have won 81 times.

The bay daughter of Northerly-Lady Alba made her last start in the Spiral Stakes at Latonia March 27 where she finished third. She has been impressive during her workouts here this week.

MRS. JOE W. Brown's El Baba won the Louisiana Derby and ran second to Hostage, who fractured a sesamoid earlier this week, in the Arkansas Derby. The son of Raja Baba-Hail to El, tops the money winners among the Derby field with earnings of $384,863.

El Baba, who won twice here as a 2-year-old, will leave from the No. 4 post position with Don Brumfield aboard.

"Good," said trainer Dewey Smith when he heard his colt's post position. "That's just good, couldn't be better. I'm very happy."

Edward Anchel's Air Forbes Won will go from post No. 7 under Angel Cordero Jr., who rode the golt's sire, Bold Forbes, to victory in the 1976 Derby. "Sitting on him is like sitting on his daddy," said Cordero after a workout earlier this week.

Air Forbes Won didn't go to the races until March 4 this year and has won all four starts. The last horse to win the Derby that didn't race as a 2-year-old was Apollo in 1882. He also was bred in Ohio which has produced only one Derby winner, Wintergreen in 1909.

Muttering, owned by the Tartan Stable, heads a contingent of five who prepared for the Kentucky Derby on the West Coast. He has raced only twice this year but has earned $317,299 off a career record of four wins and two seconds in nine starts.

There is plenty of curiosity here over 20-20 Stable's Cassaleria, who lost his left eye in a stall mishap shortly after his birth. Because he is claustrophic, according to his trainer, Ron McAnally, he has been stabled here in a special outdoor pen.

CASSALERIA AND Water Bank, who will run as a McAnally-trained entry, were listed at 20-1. Cassaleria has earned $355,670, second highest in the Derby field, with three victories, two seconds and six thirds in 12 career starts.

Bill Shoemaker, who has won three Derbies, will be riding in his record 22nd Derby aboard Star Gallant, the undersized colt who finished second in the Derby Trial last Saturday and ran second in the Florida Derby to Timely Writer, the early Derby favorite who was withdrawn last week after intestinal problems and surgery.

The absence of Timely Writer, Hostage and Linkage, the Blue Graavor of the May 15 Preakness at Pimlico, prompted a rush to Churchill Downs for Saturday's race.

ABC will provide both radio and television coverage. TV coverage will be from 4 to 5 p.m. CDT. Posttime is 4:38 p.m. CDT.

Los Angeles Dodgers' Steve Sax is safe at home after a single by Dusty Baker as Philadelphia catcher Bo Diaz is late with the tag. Los Angeles blanked the Phillies, 4-0, behind Burt Hooten.

Murphy, Horner hit back-to-back homers again

By The Associated Press

Thursday night, he really had something to be happy about.

"I'm just happy I got a good, solid game under my belt," said Hooton after pitching a one-hitter to lead the Dodgers to a 4-0 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies. "I felt like I had things in control all the way. I felt like I was throwing consistently well all game."

Hooton retired the first 10 Phillies he faced before Ivan DeJesus lined a 1-2 pitch to center for a clean single in the fourth inning. Pete Rose then drew the only walk the Phillies got, but Hooton was able to pitch out of trouble.

DeJesus's hit came on a mistake, Hooton said.

"It wasn't a pitch that I wanted to throw, I wanted to bounce it, but I didn't," he said of the knuckle-curve. "I guess you'd call low and inside a good pitch to a lot of hitters, but he chokes up a lot and can handle that pitch."

"I have been a notoriously slow starter," he said. "I've had games like this early in the season, but I haven't usually put them back-to-back until the second half of the year.

"I haven't really been confident all year. When you aren't as confident as you should be, it throws your control off. I was sharp, but I've been sharper."

Hooton, recording his first complete game of the season in his fifth start, walked one and struck out two. He brought a 4.43 earned run average into the game.

The Dodgers got their first run in the first inning off loser Dick Ruthven, 0-3, on Steve Garvey's sacrifice fly. They made it 2-0 in the third on a sacrifice fly by Dusty Baker and wrapped up their scoring with two more in the fifth as Hooton triggered the uprising with a double.

Braves 3, Cubs 0

Dale Murphy and Bob Horner hit consecutive home runs in the eighth inning to lead Atlanta over Chicago.

After Chicago veteran Ferguson Jenkins and Atlanta rookie Joe Cowley had battled for seven scoreless innings, Claudell Washington singled off Jenkins, 2-2, with one out in the Braves' eighth.

Washington stole second and took third on Chicago catcher Keith Moreland's throwing error before Murphy hit a two-run homer for the game's first runs. Murphy's homer, his sixth, increased his league-leading RBI total to 22.

Gene Garber, 2-1, who relieved Cowley after seven innings, got the victory.

"It was a slider Murphy hit," Jenkins said. "I was just trying to get the pitch in against Horner and it was up."

Pirates 9, Astros 6

Tony Pena hit a three-run homer and Dave Parker added a solo shot to power Pittsburgh over Houston. Pena put the Pirates ahead 4-1 in the first inning with his homer off Houston starter Bob Knepper. Bill Madlock had singled in the first Pirate run.

The Pirates extended their lead to 6-2 with a pair of fourth-inning runs, one on a wild pitch by Knepper and the other on Dale Berra's sacrifice fly.

Houston chased Pirate starter Don Robinson during a four-run fifth inning that tied the game at 6-6, but the Pirates moved back ahead with a run in the fifth off loser Mike LaCoss, 1-1, on Madlock's RBI single. Parker blasted his home run in the seventh off Randy Moffitt.

"We had a few guys who got off to bad starts, but we knew they were going to hit," said second baseman Johnny Ray, who went four-for-four in the 14-hit Pirate attack.

Giants 7, Expos 3

Darrell Evans hit a three-run homer, climaxing a five-run, first-inning rally that propelled San Francisco over Montreal.

Montreal starter Ray Burris, 0-4, went into the game with a sparkling 1.17 earned run average, best in the National League. But it climbed to 3.12 after three innings of work in which he gave up all seven San Francisco runs.

Rookie Alan Fowlkes, 3-1, was the winning pitcher, allowing 12 hits and striking out seven in his first complete game.

Padres 6, Mets 0

Tim Lollar limited New York to five hits in hurling his [illegible] shutout and belted his [illegible] run of the season as San Diego beat the Mets.

The Mets, who ended the Padres' 11-game winning streak with a 15-inning 5-4 victory Wednesday night, managed just four singles off Lollar, 2-0, who walked two and struck out five.

Lollar, batting .556 at the start of the game, drove in a pair of runs. His homer, the third of his major league career, was a solo shot off Mets starter Charlie Puleo, 2-2.

"I've already hit a home run before, but I've never had a complete game or a shutout, so I'm more excited about that," said Lollar.

Jays' Martinez haunts KC

By The Associated Press

Where Buck Martinez and Paul Splittorff are concerned, familiarity breeds ... well ... how about a home run?

But when they take the field these days, they are temporary enemies in different uniforms. Martinez hammered a three-run homer and an RBI single to lead the Toronto Blue Jays to a 7-0 victory over the Royals and Splittorff Thursday night behind Dave Stieb's five-hit pitching.

"We talked an awful lot about hitting and pitching the years we played together," Martinez recalled. "Maybe subconsciously in the back of my mind I might be expecting something (a certain pitch) from him because we played together so long."

White Sox 3, Tigers 2

Ron LeFlore collected three hits, including a towering two-run homer, while winner Dennis Lamp and Salome Barojas combined on a three-hitter. Lamp held the Tigers hitless through four innings and gave way to Barojas with one runner on base and one out in the seventh after yielding two hits. Barojas finished to increase his league-leading total to six saves.

The White Sox scored their first run in the second inning on Carlton Fisk's single, a passed ball, an infield out and Bill Almon's single. Chicago increased it to 3-0 in the fifth when Almon led off with a single and LeFlore ripped the first pitch from Larry Pashnick into dead center field for his second home run of the season.

Angels 2, Yankees 0

Geoff Zahn pitched a seven-hitter for his second shutout of the season and Bob Boone lined a tie-breaking single in the ninth inning. New York's Dave Righetti pitched into the eighth but reliever Shane Rawley hit Reggie Jackson with a pitch to start the ninth. Fred Lynn sacrficed pinch runner Jose Moreno to second and Rawley walked Tim Foli intentionally. Boone had a 3-2 count when he lined a pitch up the middle with the runners moving, scoring Moreno and sending Foli to third. Brian Downing followed with a sacrifice fly.

The victory was the fourth without a loss for Zahn, who walked two, struck out four and said he throws so many off-speed pitches that he no longer has "any on-speed stuff."

A's 9, Orioles 6

A bases-loaded sacrifice fly by Dwayne Murphy drove in the first of three Oakland runs in the ninth inning after the A's had blown the last of a 6-1 lead when the Orioles scored three times in the bottom of the eighth. Oakland loaded the bases in the ninth on a single by Mike Heath and walks to Fred Stanley and Rickey Henderson. After Murphy's sacrifice fly broke the tie, the A's added two more runs on a wild pitch and Tony Armas' single.

Dan Meyer drove in four runs with a grounder and a three-run double to help the A's build their 6-1 lead. Davey Lopes homered for Oakland, while John Lowenstein connected for Baltimore. Ken Singleton had a game-tying two-run single for the Orioles in the eighth.

The Orioles outhit Oakland 14-9, but the A's drew seven walks and stole four bases. Five of the seven batters who walked came around to score, prompting Manager Earl Weaver of the Orioles to call a 45-minute closed-door meeting with his entire staff after the game.

Weaver declined to discuss what transpired, but Ross Grimsley said the pitchers were told to "throw the ball over the plate."

Indians 5, Mariners 1

Toby Harrah hit his sixth home run and Andre Thornton rapped a two-run single to support Lary Sorensen's five-hit pitching. Sorensen, who picked up his first victory in four appearances since the Indians acquired him from St. Louis in an off-season trade, walked one and struck out four.

Thornton delivered his two-run single off Gene Nelson with the bases loaded in the first inning. Harrah homered leading off the third and the Indians added another run on a walk to Thornton, a double by Von Hayes and Ron Hassey's grounder. Hayes doubled again in the seventh to score Mike Hargrove, who singled.

Spurs hope trend continues at home

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — HemisFair Arena has not been kind to the Seattle SuperSonics, and the San Antonio Spurs hope the trend continues tonight when the teams resume their best-of-seven National Basketball Association playoff series.

Tipoff for the game between the teams, tied 1-1 in the Western Conference semifinals, is set for 7:10 p.m. today. The fourth game is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. here Sunday.

The SuperSonics lost the first game of the series and their homecourt advantage to the Spurs in Seattle by a 95-93 score Tuesday night, then roared back to tie the series with a 114-99 victory on their homecourt.

But going into tonight's game the Sonics have won only one of 13 contests in HemisFair Arena since the Spurs entered the NBA six years ago, and were dominated by San Antonio 4-1 in this year's regular season series, with the Sonics' only triumph coming in Seattle.

"These are the playoffs and it's different," said John Johnson, the oldest player in the NBA at nearly 34. "To be a championship team, you have to win on your opponent's court. That's what we did when we won the championship (in 1979)."

Johnson and fellow NBA oldster, "Downtown" Fred Brown, a 10-year veteran, helped key the win in which the Sonics befuddled the Spurs with a pressure defense.

Brown said he was not aware of the Sonics' 1-12 record in San Antonio.

"I don't think in those terms," said Brown, who came off the bench to hit a season-high 25 points, 17 in the second quarter, in the Seattle win. "You can't look at it like that. You have to look at it as one game at a time."

"We have to shut him down in the future," said Johnny Moore, San Antonio's point guard who guards Brown. "We've got to keep him from getting the ball because when he does, he most often makes the shot."

Jack Sikma, who contributed 25 points to the Seatle win Wednesday night, agreed with his teammates that San Antonio should not become overconfident about its new-found homecourt advantage.

"This year we were not ever close to them in games there. But the playoffs are different. We've got to get one of those (two) games down there. You don't want to come back home down 1-3. I'd like to grab the game Friday. That would put the monkey on San Antonio's back," Sikma said.

San Antonio coach Stan Albeck was obviously pleased with the split in Seattle, but he complained that officials were not providing adequate protection to shooting star George Gervin who he said was mauled by Bill Hanzlik, Gus Williams and other Sonics.

"I thought they (Seattle) played excellent defense, but I find it hard to believe that Ice (Gervin) cannot get to the foul line in this series. It amazes me that the league's premier offensive player can get pounded like that and not get to the line."

In the win, Gervin scored 31 points, including the winning basket with 5 seconds left. In the loss he managed 24 points on 9 of 19 shooting from the field. He was six for six on free throws in game two.

Perry goes for 299 against Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — Gaylord Perry, the oldest man playing major league baseball, realizes that he is best known as the pitcher with the illegal pitch.

Whether or not he really throws it, he is hoping that victory No. 300 will help erase some of that image.

"I'm known nationally for some pitches," he says cagily. "Three hundred wins might override that some. It will mean that I have pitched well over an entire career."

Perry, 43, broke into the major leagues in 1962 with San Francisco and his career has spanned 20 years with the Giants, Cleveland, Texas, San Diego, the New York Yankees, Atlanta and now Seattle.

He is two victories away from that magic mark that will put him into the Hall of Fame. He could win No. 299 tonight at Yankee Stadium when he opposes right-hander Doyle Alexander.

"I'm throwing as well as I have in the last four or five years," said Perry, who was released by Atlanta last season and did not sign with Seattle until March 27.

"I know what it's like for a hitter to get 3,000 hits," he said Thursday at a news conference at Yankee Stadium. "No pitcher wants to give up that 3,000th hit. I'm beginning to think no one wants to lose that 300th game."

Perry came into the season with 297 victories. He came into tonight's game with a 1-2 record, although he has pitched well. "I've had some close games," he said. "I lost 4-3, I think (actually 5-3), and 3-2. But we had a good homestand, our defense is improving and we have some good, young talent."

Perry said he was never worried about signing with some club, even though it wasn't until March that he was invited to try out with the Mariners.

"I thought I could help a lot of clubs," said Perry, who will be 44 before the season ends. "But a lot of clubs thought they had enough. I feel very lucky, but I always knew I'd be playing baseball somewhere."

Perry signed a one-year contract with Seattle, but he says it actually is a month-to-month deal. "It's not a great contract, but it's the best I could get," Perry said. "But I know I can pitch. I don't want their money anyway if I can't earn it."

If Perry wins his 300th game, he will be the first man to attain that plateau since 1963 when Early Wynn did it. Perry will be the 15th 300-game winner in major league history.

Perry says he probably would have been back on the farm in Williamston, N.C., 10 years ago if he hadn't developed the spitball.

But now, he says, "All I have to do is put the thought in their heads. You don't have to tell Graig Nettles, Oscar Gamble or Bobby Murcer very much, and they believe you. I just walk up and shake their hands with a little grease in my palm."

George Archer takes a big swing in the Byron Nelson Golf Classic in Dallas, but bogeyed the 18th hole to fall into a tie with Curtis Strange for the first round lead with a 5-under-par 65.

Target golf opens Byron Nelson play

DALLAS (AP) — There was no wind and the normally fast greens were soft. It was strictly target golf in the opening round of the Byron Nelson Classic with George Archer and Curtis Strange stealing the par-breaking show.

Archer, who still holds the PGA record for fewest putts in a 72-hole tournament, used a new blade to one-putt 10 times Thursday for a 5-under par 65.

Strange matched Archer's heroics over the tame Preston Trail Golf Club with another 65, including six one-putt greens.

Lietzke shot 1-under 69 Thursday and trailed 14 other players.

Bruce Fleisher, Vance Heafner and Eric Batten cruised home in 4-under 66. Three were at 67 and six, including U.S. Open champion David Graham, were at 68.

"We got a break in the weather," admitted Strange. "The wind didn't blow and the temperature (mid-70s) was perfect. The overnight rains softened the greens."

Strange added "par is never a bad score here over 72 holes. The course always catches up to the players. Watch what happens if we get a little wind."

Archer, who used only a record 94 putts when he won the 1980 Sea Pines Heritage Classic, tried a Bullseye putter and the change worked magic.

"It's the kind of putter I used when I was a kid," the 41-year-old Archer said. "I'm not as good a putter as I once was ... I can't concentrate like I used to. But I only had 26 putts ... that's pretty good."

Islanders make charge toward finals

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Bob Bourne had a halfway complete description of why the New York Islanders are two victories away from qualifying for their third straight Stanley Cup finals.

"We're a cool team," said Bourne. They also have a hot goaltender.

That combination — the Islanders' ability to remain calm even when they're being outplayed and Bill Smith's spectacular play in goal — sparked the two-time defending National Hockey League champions to a 5-2 victory over the Quebec Nordiques Thursday night. The Islanders lead the best-of-seven semifinal series 2-0 with the third and fourth games set for Quebec City on Saturday and Tuesday nights.

LED BY Mike Bossy's two goals, a goal and two assists by Bourne and the netminding of Smith, the Islanders subdued Quebec even though they weren't at their best for the first two periods. At the end of 40 minutes, New York was on top 3-2 and the Islanders totally shut down the Nordiques' high-powered offense in the final period.

"This team scares me," Bourne said of the Nordiques, who upset Montreal and Boston to get to the Wales Conference finals. "They are explosive and I'm afraid if we let down, they could get up 5-1 or 5-2 on us and kill us."

The Nordiques certainly had their chances Thursday but Smith was superb. And the Islanders didn't panic.

"We were sloppy in the first period and we realized in the second period that they were playing their game and we were letting them.

"But we settled down. We have the experience and ability to do that. We take a fresh attitude into every game and every period."

"Smith made five or six key saves," said Nordiques Coach Michel Bergeron. "We had 17 shots in the second period and he stopped everything. Smith was just tremendous but he needed to be because we had the chances."

Smith was beaten once in the second period on a nifty goal by Peter Stastny. Otherwise, he stoned the Nordiques, including three outstanding saves within 30 seconds on Wilf Paiement, Stastny and Paiement again.

"I'd have to say this was my toughest game so far (in the playoffs)," said Smith. "I didn't really expect to be playing Quebec but I'm not surprised. I knew when Montreal played them the Canadiens would have a lot to handle. And the series with Boston was a tossup.

"They're playing well at the right time. Even though we're a tough hockey team, we have to worry about every game. Quebec showed us that tonight."

The Nordiques outshot and outskated the Islanders for most of the first two periods. But it's a sign of the strength of the champions that they still were ahead 3-2 entering the third stanza.

Wayne Merrick had gotten the Islanders started with a goal at 7:46 of the first period — courtesy of Nordiques goalie Daniel Bouchard. Islanders defenseman Gord Lane sent the puck off the end boards behind Bouchard and it ricocheted in front. The goalie chased after it, lost his stick and fell, handing Merrick a wide-open net. Merrick put in a wrist shot.

Marc Tardif tied it at 11:04 when he took Pat Hickey's drop pass and, as Hickey took Islanders defenseman Dave Langevin out of the play, Tardif put the puck past Smith.

"That was a case of his having no room to shoot at and the puck still going in," said Smith. "I think it hit the post, hit the back of my pad and the post again, then went in."

Hawks 'fight' back to even NHL series

CHICAGO (AP) — "I can't be intimidated, I'm not scared, I have to play my game," said Denis Savard who scored two goals Thursday night to lead the Chicago Black Hawks to a fight-marred 4-1 victory over the Vancouver Canucks.

The triumph came in a game in which 188 minutes of penalties were called by Referee Bob Myers including 150 minutes in the final period.

The playoff record for penalty minutes is 267 set by the New York Rangers and the Los Angeles Kings on April 9, 1981.

Savard broke the game open with his first goal at 4:42 of the final period shortly before the first major eruption of the game in which Myers cleared the ice by calling three 10-minute misconduct penalties against each team plus a pair of majors for fighting and two minors for roughing.

"There'll be a lot of scrapping throughout this entire series," said Savard, who now has 10 playoff goals. "It's tough to explain."

Chicago Coach Bob Pulford, pleased with the way his team set the tempo for the game, said he didn't know if the fighting would continue through the best-of-seven series which is now even at a triumph for each team.

"I don't think there's any place for that in hockey, it's immature," said Pulford. "It should be handled by the president of the league."

"I thought some of the penalties were unfair," said Neilson. "The fighting is not what beat us and in our opinion it did not get out of hand. What beat us was we made key mistakes by not hitting Glen Sharpley on two occasions. Once when he came around the net and punched in a rebound and again when he got the pass out to (Dave) Feamster.

"Also, we have to concentrate on Savard," added Neilson.

Animals near MIASL crown after 4-3 win over Hot Spurs

The Midland Independent Adult Soccer League enters the final weekend of the season Sunday with the Red Animals close to capturing the league title.

Last Sunday, the unbeaten Animals (5-0-1) held onto their streak with a 4-3 victory over the Blue Hot Spurs (2-4). Mike Smith led the way with two goals while Hans Zelisko and Azhir Noormohamed both added goals. Greg Reed, Mike Rodgers and Frank Prokop scored the Spurs' points.

The Green Gators (3-2-1) fell out of championship contention with their second consecutive defeat, 5-2, at the feet of the Orange Thunderducks (2-4). Ray Harland, Frank Davies, Mike Beard (2) and Lisa Knight paced the 'Ducks while Larry Connolly scored both goals for the Gators.

The Gold Nuggets, who remained in the thick of the championship hunt with a 5-1 record, defeated the winless 0-6 Blue Max by a 4-1 margin. Dan Verrillo led the way with three golas and John Laskin had the other. Bill Bledsoe scored in the losing cause.

The 4-1-1 Maroon Mavericks, who still have a slim shot at the title, got back on the winning track last weekend by downing the 1-4-1 Black Sundaes by a 7-2 margin. John Bergman scored three times while Lalo Castillo and Tom Frantes had two goals each. David Stall and Don Schieber both scored for the Sundaes.

Bear expects road to be easier in '82

NEW YORK (AP) — Now that Amos Alonzo Stagg's record for most coaching victories is out of the way, Bear Bryant expects the 1982 season to be much easier for him and the Alabama football team.

"Last year was the most difficult year I ever went through," says Bryant, who posted the record 315th triumph last November. "I thought I was strong enough to handle it, but I wasn't. I wasn't bright enough. I was so afraid the staff, the players and the people would think I was selfish thinking about the record. As a result, it made my job more difficult.

"THERE WERE so many people looking over our shoulder that everything became a mountain instead of a molehill. At this time last year I didn't even have time to go home and eat once a day. I guess it'll always be that way now because we'll break a record every time we win, but now it'll be our record."

The 68-year-old Bryant was in town Wednesday for the premier of a 30-minute film entitled "Nothin' But a Winner" in which he shares his thoughts on how to develop a winning attitude among employees, The film was produced by the Carlson Marketing Group Inc., the nation's leading incentive-motivational company.

It will be available to American business, which spent more than $9.5 billion last year on incentives and motivation. In the film, Bryant is interviewed by Dr. John Geier, a behavioral scientist for Performax Systems International, on the importance of setting goals and having a winning attitude and a plan in all phases of life to be successful.

"The people you're surrounded with make or break you," Bryant says in the film. "My philosophy is to get people that football means something to — and not just assistant coaches, but secretaries, ticket-takers, everybody. I want assistant coaches who are brighter than I am. If they're not brighter, I don't need them. I know how to win.

"I don't know how to define a winning attitude, but I can tell if somone has it on and off the field. You can learn a lot on the football field that isn't taught in the home, in the church or in the classroom. I'm a pretty good example of that," adds Bryant, who rose from the Arkansas bottomland to the top of the college football world.

"I USED to be one of the best (coaches), but now I'm not even a good coach anymore ... but I know what it takes to win. A lot of coaches do a better job with great players than I do, but those in-between players ... I'm a great coach with them."

Bryant looks well, but said he is tired from the excitement in the wake of his record-breaking victory, plus Alabama's recent spring practice, and plans to take the month of June off.

"Sure I look fine," he said. "I'm supposed to look fine with all those pills and things.

Lendl nears suspension

DALLAS (AP) — Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, who agreed at different times to play in two tennis tournaments being run simultaneously next week, is being threatened with suspension and a fine because he has withdrawn from one to play in the other.

"Lendl entered the World Team Cup last November, through his agent, (when he led Czechoslovakia to victory)," Butch Buchholz, the executive director of the Association of Tennis Professionals. "He confirmed personally and through his agent (Jerry Solomon of ProServe, Inc.) many times during the past six months that he would be representing his country in the World Team Cup" next week in West Germany.

BUCHHOLZ RELEASED the text of a letter dated Nov. 11, 1981, written by Solomon. It confirmed Lendl's entry in the World Team Cup and said, in part: "Ivan hopes you will feel free to take advantage of his early entry by using him to help you promote the event."

"Then," Buchholz went on, "after winning the World Championship Tennis tournament at Dallas Monday night, he (Lendl) announced that he would be playing a WCT tournament in New York that same week."

Buchholz said the switch by Lendl damaged the ATP's reputation and has seriously hurt the sport because tournaments, sponsors and fans would not be able to believe future player commitments.

Lendl, ranked third among the world's players by the APT computer but regarded by many as the best after his fourth consecutive victory over top-ranked John McEnroe last Monday night in Dallas, is charged by the ATP with conduct detrimental to professional tennis which wants him suspended indefinitely and fined $10,000.

SUCH ACTION has never been sought in the ATP's 10-year history. In order to suspend Lendl, a heading must be held and the suspension must be voted on by two-thirds of the ATP's 11-member board, made up of fellow tennis players.

"Players must sometimes withdraw from an event because of injuries, but to withdraw a week before one tournament to play in another does irreparable harm to the credibility of the sport," Buchholz said. "I am saddened beyond words at having to ask the ATP board to fine and suspend a promising young player like Ivan. However, there are generations of players coming up in tennis who need to know that with the rewards of pro tennis go the responsibility to the game. Lendl has disappointed us all."

Lendl was in Madrid Thursday. Neither he nor Solomon, based in Washington, had a comment.

Pleasure Maker Sunland surprise

SUNLAND PARK, N.M. (AP) — Fast-food restaurant owner and horse racing newcomer Bobby D. Cox was understandably skeptical when he got initial reviews on his then untested 2-year-old thoroughbred filly Pleasure Maker.

"My trainer told me she was a nice filly and could run, but then they tell you that all the time," said Cox, an Odessa, Texas, businessman who heads Mexican food and hamburger restaurant chains.

The filly made her debut at southern New Mexico's Sunland Park racetrack last week in the trials for the $327,651 Riley Allison Futurity and romped to a 12-length victory.

The victory in her first trip to the starting gate put Pleasure Maker into the field of 12 horses that will battle for the $157,237.40 first place purse in the 19th running of the futurity here Sunday.

The total purse also is the richest ever for a race at Sunland Park, which is closing out the most successful season in its 23-year history.

The Riley Allison has grown in stature in recent years, and the winner of the race two years ago, Bold Ego, went on to race in both the Kentucky Derby and Preakness last year.

This year's race figures to be a wide open sprint over the five furlong distance.

Only one of the 12 horses in the futurity field has had more than two outings. But based off their performances in the trials, Pleasure Maker, along with colts Sand Digger, Running Bucket, Broken Stirrup and Valient Avenger figure to get most of the fans' backing.

PLEASURE MAKER and Sand Digger, who won his trial by 8½ lengths, each was clocked in 59-seconds flat. Running Bucket, also a first-time starter in the trials, also won going away.

Broken Stirrup has won both of his races this year while Valiant Avenger scrambled to a six-length win in the trials.

The rest of the field that is made up of six colts and six fillies includes Mini Stick, Lt. Pearle, Cue Me First, Twist Her, Tudor Sol, Rhonda's Rainbow and Bad Man's Bluff.

Second place in the futurity is worth $62,894 while the third place horse will earn $37,736.

Lazy lobs lifts Jaeger to victory

GRENELEFE, Fla. (AP) — Using lazy baseline lobs, second-seeded Andrea Jaeger defeated amateur Lisa Bonder 6-1, 6-3 in the quarterfinals of the $200,000 United Airlines tennis tournament.

Jaeger was to meet Wendy Turnbull in a semi-final match today. In the other semifinal match, top-seeded Martina Navratilova is set to meet No. 3 seed Mime Jausavec.

Jaeger, 16, hammered five straight winners to avoid a service break and grab a 5-3 lead in the second set. She won the match Thursday with a few more of her high, lazy baseline lobs which have been nicknamed moonballs.

Earlier, fourth-seeded Turnbull struggled for 2½ hours, but Navratilova coasted as each won her quarterfinal match.

Turnbull blew triple match point before rallying to defeat No. 5 seed Pam Shriver 7-6, 6-7, 6-3. Navratilova coasted past Brazilian Pat Medrado 6-3, 6-3. Jausovec needed three sets against gritty Barbara Potter to advance 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Turnbull thought she should have won in straight sets and blamed a premature mental victory celebration for needing a third.

"When I was serving for the match at 6-5, 40-0, I was right where I wanted to be," she said.

Ivie won't play; Astros call Loucks

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros decided to release Mike Ivie because the reserve first baseman announced he no longer wanted to play defensively, club officials say.

Manager Bill Virdon said Thursday that Ivie and his agent met with team General Manager Al Rosen last week.

"Mike told Al he couldn't play on the field," Virdon said. "Once he said he couldn't play, I decided I couldn't use him in any capacity, because I've got others who want to play and who can help us throughout the season."

Ivie was released Thursday. The Astros recalled outfielder Scott Loucks from their AAA farm club in Tucson to fill the opening on the roster. Virdon has praised Loucks' speed and defensive play.

"You'll be seeing me with another club before too long," Ivie said.

Gifford leads qualifiers

Three golfers from Midland and another from Odessa won berths in the Texas State Golf Association's Texas State Amatuer Championship after a qualifying round at Midland Country Club this week.

Richard Gifford of Midland led the four qualifiers from this area with an 80 while Odessa's Ron Jumper had an 81. Midlanders Jim Ward Jr. and Ernest Swart both had 82 for the other spots.

The four will now move Lufkin, June 9-13, for the TSAC tournament, which will be held at the Crown Colony Country Club.

Take life a little easier this year with a John Deere Riding Mower. Choose the 5-hp 65 or the 8-hp 68. The 65 has a 3-speed transmission and 28-inch cutting width. The 68 has a 5-speed shift-on-the-go transmission, 30- or 34-inch cutting width, and recoil or electric start. All have color-coded controls, padded seat, and wide nonslip footrests. The 68 has a fully enclosed engine for a quieter ride.

1982: A season for baseball streaks?

An AP Sports Analysis
AP Sports Writer

The 1982 major league baseball season is only four weeks old, and already it has distinguished itself as a season of streaks.

The Atlanta Braves won their first 13 games, then lost five in a row. New Manager Joe Torre's players credited him for much of their success when they were winning, so he should take some of the blame for the skid.

The real blame, however, must be found among Braves pitchers, who yielded 30 earned runs in the five losses. The big disappointment was right-hander Bob Walk, who gave up six of those runs in 92-3 innings.

The St. Louis Cardinals won 12 in a row, and the San Diego Padres won 11 in a row. The Cards feel they got the bettev of the shortstop swap this spring that sent Garry Templeton to San Diego for Ozzie Smith. Smith is hitting .305 for the Cards and has two homers, two-thirds of his career total. Templeton is hitting only .232, but he has scored 14 runs.

Carl Yastrzemski, who will be 43 in August, has five homers and 15 RBI for Boston, and sophomore left-hander John Tudor was 3-0 before losing his first game of the season Wednesday night.

A couple of journeymen are paying off for the White Sox. Tom Paciorek, acquired from Seattle, has five doubles and eight RBI, while Ron LeFlore, a free-agent acquisition in 1980, has nine RBI and six stolen bases.

The Tigers have overcome a flock of injuries to players such as infielder Rick Leach, catcher Lance Parrish and outfielder Kirk Gibson. While healing his troops, Manager Sparky Anderson has done a fine job of juggling. Shortstop Alan Trammell is the only Tiger who has played every game at the same position, while Anderson has used seven DH's, five right fielders and four different players at third base and center field.

The Baltimore Orioles lost nine in a row as their pitchers struggled. Dennis Martinez, 2-2, and Scott McGregor, 1-2, are the only starters with victories. Martinez, McGregor, Mike Flanagan and Jim Palmer have seven losses among them, and Steve Stone is on the disabled list.

Eddie Murray has been without fault, though. The switch-hitting Orioles first baseman had an 18-game hitting streak — including the final four games of 1981 — snapped on Wednesday night in the fivst game of a doubleheader. He hit home run No. 5 in the second game and now is hitting .468 with 16 RBI.

NEW YORK Yankees owner George Steinbrenner kept alive a streak of sorts as the team changed managers for the eighth time in nine years. Earl Weaver, meanwhile, remained the dean of major league managers by entering his 15th straight season with the Orioles, a season he says will be his last before retiring.

Pitchers Steve Carlton, Nolan Ryan and Tom Seaver each started the season with personal losing streaks. Carlton, the Philadelpia left-hander, and Ryan, right-hander from Houston, lost four atiece before winning a game. Cincinnati's Seaver is 0-3, one more loss than he had in all of 1981, when he went 14-2 and should have won the National League Cy Young Award.

—As of last Wednesday, Jeff Ledbetter of Florida State had 34 home runs, 97 RBI and 89 hits (all NCAA single-season marks), according to the newspaper "Collegiate Baseball."

Phil Stephenson of Wichita State led the nation in stolen bases with 59; he has been caught just twice. He also was hitting .456, ninth in the nation.

—Reliever Ed Farmer of the Philadelphia Phillies says it takes him only eight or nine pitches to warm up, but if it's cold, "like it was during the first two weeks of the season, then maybe I'll need 15 or 16 warmup pitches before I'm ready."

Unfortunately for Farmer, it has taken the Phillies much longer to warm up. While the Phillies were losing 12 of their first 16 games, Farmer was able to compile just two saves and had a 1-1 record.

—George Foster, the new New York Mets' slugger, says he has added a new dimension to a club that hit only 57 home runs last year.

"We have a comeback team," Foster says. "Five or six runs won't get us down. The opposition has to realize we have the capability of coming back, and they can't relax against us."

Last year, the Mets averaged 3.3 runs per game, the lowest in the National League. Through 17 games this season, the average was up to 4.4.

Yastrzemski bat still smoking

BOSTON (AP) — A couple of years ago, during a casual conversation, a Boston writer suggested to Carl Yastrzemski that an obscure milestone was impossible to achieve because of his age.

Yaz became almost defiant as he stared directly into the writer's eyes and said: "Look, don't ever tell me something is impossible or that I can't do it unless you're ready to eat your words."

Today, approaching 43 in his 22nd season with the Boston Red Sox, Captain Carl is more relaxed, laughing at critics while defying Father Time with a bat that shows little sign of easing up on rival pitchers.

The only American League player ever to achieve 3,000 hits (now 3,214) and 400 homers (now 431) and ranked among baseball's all-time leaders in most offensive categories, Yastrzemski still has the confidence and desire of a brash youth.

"I've been hearing wisecracks and jokes about my age for four or five years, so they don't bother me a bit," he said in an interview. "The big thing that helps keep me going is confidence. I just know I can do the job, help this ball club."

Until the 50-day player strike last summer, Yaz had intended to make a decision in the fall on his playing future. However, the strike changed his mind and he was more determined than ever to come back this year.

"I didn't want to go out with the type of season I had," he said of his 1981 figures of .246, 7 homers and 53 RBI. "I worked harder than ever during the winter and had no doubts whatsoever when I reported to spring training.

"I know what I can do and I'll know when the time comes to pack it in. Nobody will have to tell me when it's time to quit. I won't embarrass myself or the ball club. And I'll do anything that Ralph Houk wants. He's the best manager and greatest guy I've ever played for."

Grand Prix problems remain

Bernard Ecclestone, president of the Formula One Constructors Association of independent teams, and Renault team manager Gerard Larrousse returned to Europe after an emergency meeting broke up early Friday morning.

Most FOCA teams boycotted the last Grand Prix at Imola, Italy, last Sunday. The next race is scheduled in Zolder, Belgium on May 9.

Ecclestone said FOCA would meet in London in the next day or two discuss the crisis.

All the major sponsors in Grand Prix racing would "react very firmly" if there was another boycott, said their reresentative, John Hogan of Marlboro.

Sheehan roots for upstarts

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Patty Sheehan says it would be wonderful to win two straight Ladies Professional Golf Association tournaments. But last week's Orlando winner said if she couldn't do it, she'd like to see an upstart pick up the $15,000 first-place check in the Birmingham Classic.

A wide range of candidates will by trying to do just that when the $100,000 tourney opens at the Green Valley Country Club on Friday.

Things haven't been going well for Young. After 10 tournaments, she is 89th in money winnings. Her $3,683 in winnings isn't enough to pay the expense of playing. And her ranking is so low that she didn't qualify to play in Thursday's pro-am.

But she said Thursday she believes her luck may be changing. Her game has never been that far off, but "It seems I was playing only 15 holes instead of 18. It was always those two or three holes that killed me.

"Last week at Orlando, I triple-bogeyed the first hole, but I still managed to make the turn at only two-over. That one hole destroyed me."

Spurs ink U.S. Reed to three-year pact

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Former Arkansas Razorback U.S. Reed has signed a three-year contract to play basketball for the San Antonio Spurs.

Reed played in the minor league Continental Basketball Association this season. He was drafted by Kansas City in last year's draft, but was released before the season started.

Reed guided Pine Bluff to the 1977 overall state championship. He was a three-year starter at the University of Arkansas.

Phils reactivate Schmidt

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Third baseman Mike Schmidt of the Philadelphia Phillies has been reactivated, and rookie infielder Len Matusek has been placed on the 15-day disabled list.

Schmidt, the National League's Most Valuable Player for the past two seasons, injured his lower left ribcage April 13, in his first at-bat in a game against the New York Mets. He went on the disabled list the following day.

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer
A sports potpourri.

Back in New York in the midst of still another Yankee soap opera — isn't it interesting that they still go on even though Reggie and Billy Martin are long gone from the New York scene — Jackson was bending under the burden of a .173 batting average.

But you could see the competitive juices flowing at his two pre-game press conferences. He needed two of them to accommodate newsmen busy with the football draft. And Reggie always was an accommodating guy.

Jackson confessed to having butterflies, a very human condition in the kind of situation he faced. Anybody with even a fleeting feeling for drama would write a script calling for Reggie to celebrate his return to Yankee Stadium with a home run. Most appropriate.

But you don't just order homers up from room service, especially when the other guys have a tough left-hander like Ron Guidry on the mound. It seemed too much to ask, even from so heroic a figure as Jackson.

Not to worry. Reggie didn't just hit a home run. That would be too ordinary. He punctuated his return with a thunderous Reggiematics shot that rattled off the third deck facade in right field, a shot that had to be one of the most satisfying he's ever hit.

"I don't know how I did it," he said later. "I'll never forget that one."

Neither will New York.

You know how it goes. One live round in a revolver surrounded by empty chambers. Then click away until you win or lose. It makes almost as much sense as the National Basketball Association mini-playoffs.

The NBA sends its 23 teams through a gruelling 82-game schedule, qualifying 12 of them for the playoffs. The division champs get a first round bye and the rest play roulette. Getting though that minefield of a season should earn a team a better chance at survival than the two-losses-and-you're-gone pattern of the mini-series.

All the good established in the October-to-April grind can be wiped out in no time. Shouldn't a team's season-long accomplishments earn it more margin for error than that?

The National Hockey League, which spends 80 games eliminating only five of its 21 clubs from the playoffs — hardly ideal — seems to have a better approach to its first round, making them a 3-of-5 series.

Historically, teams winning the first game in the best-of-three generally win the series. Going into 1982, there had been 24 such series in the NBA and only three teams ever recovered from first game losses to win these shotgun series. Phoenix became the fourth when it turned the tables on Denver last week.

To the NBA's credit, though, is the fact that all of its playoff teams had better than .500 won-loss percentages during the regular season. Sadly, the same can't be said for the NHL where one of the Stanley Cup finalists will be a team that lost more games than it won this season.

FOR YEARS, one of the secrets of those dedicated souls who run marathons has been to indulge themselves in forkfuls of spaghetti on the eve of the race. The theory was that the pasta's protein content provided needed energy for the gruelling 26 miles, 385 yards ahead. The problem there, though, is that too much pasta can make it tough to fit into your sweatsuit.

Dr. Beering heads basic research for the International Sports Science Institute at IU. The Institute could be strengthened by the addition of the prestigious International Federation of Sports Medicine, which, at Dr. Beering's suggestion, is considering moving its headquarters from Stockholm. That would really put Indianapolis in the forefront of sports medicine and the accompanying research.

Part of that research includes juicing up the juices that athletes routinely drink before races so that the competitors can avoid stuffing their faces with spaghetti. And the research is so refined that Dr. Beering says the juices can be dispensed in packets of soluble powder prior to a race.

What if a runner prefers grape juice instead of orange or lemon instead of apple?

No problem. The research is working on creating four flavors. Now that's modern science for you.

Rams, Raiders could coexist

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles Rams owner Georgia Frontiere says the Dodgers and the Angels split the area's major league baseball fans so there should be no reason the Rams and the Raiders would have attendance problems in pro football.

"We have a lot of people here," she testified Thursday in federal court in the antitrust trial against the National Football League. The Raiders are suing the league because it blocked the team's move to Los Angeles.

Under cross-examination by Raiders' attorney Joseph Alioto, Frontiere was asked if she were afraid a Raiders' move to Los Angeles would hurt her team. She answered: "No, I don't think so ... We have our fans and the Raiders would have their fans. There are Dodgers fans and there are Angels fans."

Asked if she thought Los Angeles could support two professional football teams, she replied: Probably it could. Yes, I think it could."

Tex Schramm of the Dallas Cowboys is scheduled to testify today as the final witness for the defense. The case is expected to go to the jury next Thursday.

Frontiere denied she conspired with the NFL to keep the Raiders out of the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Baylor Bears ink Westark's Mays

WACO, Texas (AP) — Baylor closed its 1982 basketball recruiting season by signing forward Glen Mays of Westark Junior College in Fort Smith, Ark., officials announced Thursday.

The 6-foot-5 native of Kansas City, Kan., was all-conference and all-regional for his two seasons at Westark.

His freshman year, his team was 33-5 and national junior college champions. Last season, Mays helped his team to a 32-5 season with an average 15.2 points and eight rebounds a game.

Westark lost to national champion Midland College in the first round of the national JUCO tournament at Hutchinson, Kan., last March. Mays scored 18 points in that loss.

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Benny Parsons figures a 200 mph qualifying lap is like money in the bank, so he's not worried if he'll keep the pole position for Sunday's Winston 500 Grand National stock car race.

The 41-year-old driver from Ellerbe, N.C., set an all-time stock car qualifying record Thursday, touring the 2.66-mile, high-banked oval at Alabama International Motor Speedway at an average speed of 200.176 mph.

However, just when he appeared to have the top starting spot locked up for Sunday's race, an afternoon rain stopped the first-day time trials with nine cars still waiting in line for a qualifying shot.

Among the remaining competitors who appeared to have a slim shot at the pole — based on practice speeds — were Terry Labonte, the youngster who currently leads the Winston Cup point standings; former Talladega pole-winner Buddy Baker, Dale Earnhardt and Joe Ruttman.

"I got the first 200 (mph lap) here, so I guess I've gotta be happy with that" Parsons said shortly before NASCAR officials decided to postpone the rest of the first-day time trials until today. "Really, it's pretty exciting to get it because there's been so much talk about 200 the last few years. I'm sure there's going to be a lot of conversation about it for a while.

Gilbert inks with A&M

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Jimmie Gilbert of Huntsville High School has signed a letter of intent to play basketball for Texas A&M University, school officials said Thursday.

The 6-foot-9 power forward and center was named to the Class 4A All-State team and First All-Region team this year.

He averaged 12 points and 15 rebounds a game and led his team to two district titles and one zone championship in the last three years.

Coaches accuse Stoglin of rule violations

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Two coaches have accused newly appointed Southern University basketball Coach Andy Stoglin of violating NCAA recruiting rules by talking to high school underclassmen.

NCAA rules forbid any college coach to have any contact with a high school player until after the youngster has completed the 11th grade.

"Personal contact was made with at least two of my 11th-grade AAU players by a gentleman who was introduced to me as Andy Stoglin," said Tom Bissell, coach of the Audubon Ford Wildcats, one of the teams in the tournament.

Coed's claim is 'credible'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A Florida State coed's claim that an assistant basketball coach paid for her to recruit a player is "credible," but other allegations against the Seminole program aren't substantial, a university committee says.

In its long-awaited report, the special committee suggested the former cheerleader's statement that an assistant coach paid for her trip to Chicago to recruit a prospect should be investigated further.

Former Seminole guard James Bozeman, whose allegations prompted FSU President Bernie Sliger to name the five-member panel in January, was criticized in the 30-page document for refusing to speak to the committee.

He made several public appearances to outline his charges of under-the-table money, racial discrimination, poor medical treatment and irregularities in recruiting and academics, including a highly publicized New York press conference.

Bozeman, a 6-5 senior guard who averaged 7.7 points in his three-year career at FSU, quit in December because he said he was given drugs so he could play with an injury.

CONTACTED AT his home Thursday, Bozeman said the panel's report was not surprising. "It's just what I expected it would be," he said. "It's right down the middle of the road."

Head Coach Joe Williams had no comment on the contents of the report, saying any statement would be "inappropriate" until the university's athletic board studies the document an makes recommendations to the president.

"Based upon its evaluation of the evidence available to it, the committee finds that the charges of improper medical attention, academic irregularities, mental harassment, discrimination and athletic libel and slander are not substantiated," the report said.

"As to the charge of financial exploitation, the committee finds that there is a sharp difference in the evidence as to who paid the travel expenses for the FSU coed's trip to Chicago.

"The committee finds the coed's testimony credible and is of the opinion that this charge requires further investigation," the report said in conclusion.

Robinson told the committee how she had met Raymond McCoy, who now plays for DePaul, at a basketball practice when he visited FSU as a prospective player in late 1978.

She said the two maintained a relationship by telephone and she then went to visit him, accompanied by Gilmore.

Gilmore has denied paying for the trip. He told the committee that he saw the young woman at a game at Bloom Township High School near Chicago, but didn't know how she got there.

Robinson also said that either Gilmore or Williams told her she would not have to pay for her ticket or hotel on the weekend trip. She said she didn't remember which one had told her.

"There is considerable variance between the statement of facts presented by Ms. Robinson and Ms. (Mahshid) Meskoob (her roommate), and the inability to "recall" facts by Mr. Gilmore," the report said.

"The main issue is who paid for Ms. Robinson's trip to Chicago (the trip is an undisputed fact), and whether she was used for recruiting purposes ... The committee finds Ms. Robinson's testimony to be credible."

The fact-finding committee's report was submitted to university President Sliger and Florida State's Atlethic Board. Board Chairman James P. Jones said a subcommittee will study the report and the full committee will meet in late May or early June to make recommendations to Sliger.

Some 40 people were interviewed by the fact-finding committee during several weeks of testimony. Athletic official systematically denied the charges.

Hockey team given suit

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A damage suit has been filed against a member of the Dallas Blackhawks hockey team by an Indianapolis man who says he was hit by a hockey stick after the player was ejected from a March 19 game.

No specific amount was mentioned in the Marion County Superior Court suit filed Thursday by Richard Swain, 32.

Also named in the suit were the Blackhawks team, Pinkertons Inc., and the Indiana State Fair Board, which provides security at Indianapolis Checkers games and the games at played at the Fairgrounds Coliseum, which is leased from the fair board.

Murphy leads Tulsa to 4-3 win

By The AP

Dan Murphy doubled home two runs in the bottom of the ninth to boost the Tulsa Drillers to a 4-3 Texas League baseball victory over the Shreveport Captains.

In other Texas League action Thursday night, San Antonio edged Amarillo, 6-5, and Arkansas beat Jackson, 6-1.

MURPHY'S shot got through left-center field and rolled to wall as Shake Moore raced home from second and Carmelo Aguayo beat the throw to the plate as he scored from first.

Ed Amelung had a two-run homer and German Rivera had a solo homer as the San Antonio Dodgers edged the Amarillo Gold Sox, 6-5.

Luis Ojeda and Don Moore had homers as the Arkansas Travelers beat the Jackson Mets, 6-1.

OJEDA had a two-run homer in the first inning when the Travelers jumped out to a 3-0 lead. Arkansas picked up two more runs in the third inning on Moore's two-run homer after Andy Van Slyke walked. The other Arkansas run came in the second when Tom Nieto tripled and came home on a single by Peachy Gutierrez.

Officials expect 16,000 runners

LONDON (AP) — Chris Brasher, an Olympic gold-medal marathoner 26 years ago and now director of the London Marathon, says he expects 16,000 starters — which would make it the largest marathon field in history — for that event May 9.

And he said the course, devoid of the kinds of hills which exist in Boston and bridges such as those in New York, is likely to provide a fast time.

Brasher said 18,000 entries have been received but that injury or illness should keep about 2,000 of them out of the race. There were 7,000 entries for last year's inaugural London Marathon.

Proposed military pay raise may bite dust

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — With the sharp drop in the rate of inflation and a huge federal deficit in sight, President Reagan's projected 8 percent military pay raise for fiscal 1983 faces almost certain reduction, congressional and administration sources said this week.

A check of executive branch and Capitol Hill officials produced the consensus that, barring an unexpected resurgence of inflation over the next six months, the raise slated for Oct. 1 probably would be cut substantially.

For the first three months of calendar year 1982, the Consumer Price Index (CPI) rose at a surprisingly low 1 percent seasonally adjusted annual rate. It was up 3.2 percent for the first six months of fiscal 1982, which began last Oct. 1.

William Schneider, associate director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), said a whole range of possibilities on federal pay raises, military and civilian, were being considered, but that no final decisions had been made.

He said consideration of smaller raises — "pay restraint" — involved more than the drop in inflation.

The administration's latest estimate on inflation is for a 6 percent rise for the full fiscal year. A number of private economists, however, say the CPI could drop to 5 percent or lower. It was 8.9 percent in calendar year 1981 and 12.4 percent in 1980.

Congressional sources agreed with Schneider that the projected 5 percent raise for civilian employees of the Defense Department would also be a likely target of a cut.

The president tentatively requested in January a total of approximately $4.3 billion to cover the pay raises for the 2.1 million military personnel and the nearly 1 million defense civilians in 1983.

A reduction to 5 percent for the military would result in savings of about $1 billion, while a cut to 4 percent for the civilians would net another $325 million for the year.

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Mexico's ambassador to the United States has said that proposed legislation to prevent illegal aliens from obtaining jobs in the United States could cause economic problems in Mexico.

But Ambassador Bernardo Sepulveda, in his first interview since arriving in Washington a month ago, said Mexico's expanding economy may be able to absorb workers who otherwise would have found jobs in the United States.

Sepulveda also was skeptical of the proposed law's effectiveness. He said the desire of some Mexicans to work in the United States and the U.S. economy's need of foreign workers may "overrule legal restrictions."

ON OTHER ISSUES, Sepulveda said Mexico's economic growth will depend in large measure on being permitted to export more to the United States, that the recent devaluation of the peso will boost exports and tourism and spur domestic manufacturing to replace suddenly expensive imported goods, and that the turmoil in Central America could improve communications between Washington and Mexico City.

Sepulveda, 40, is in his first ambassadorial post. He has been a close adviser to Miguel de la Madrid, who is expected to win Mexico's presidential election in July and succeed President Jose Lopez-Portillo.

Sepulveda has held several top posts, most of them dealing with international matters, since 1968. As Mexico's ambassador to the United States, he succeeds Hugo Margain, who has returned to Mexico to seek election to the Senate.

Sepulveda, like all Mexican officials reluctant to comment publicly on pending U.S. legislation, implied that the Simpson-Mazzoli bill to control both legal and illegal immigration fails to address adequately the long tradition of American employers relying on Mexican labor.

"The U.S. economy seems to need additional workers, many of them Mexicans," he said. "There is a long history of this. We have the feeling that sometimes economic forces overrule legal restrictions."

There is a difference, he added, between "formal legal rules and economic realities," referring not only to the "pull" factors in the U.S. economy but also the "push" factors of a Mexican economy that has been unable to provide enough jobs fast enough to meet its rapidly growing population.

SEPULVEDA SAID Mexico has been creating some 1 million new jobs annually since 1977, and that it would prefer to retain all labor "energy" for Mexican economic growth.

He said effective U.S. enforcement of a new law to bar illegal aliens from U.S. employment "could be a problem" to Mexico, but he said the effect could not be predicted.

Sepulveda said Mexico's economic growth will depend in large measure on obtaining greater access to U.S. markets. Trade between the two countries presently is built on a complex network of separate agreements for each commodity, designed to protect producers from damaging competition in each country.

Referring to U.S. protectionism, Sepulveda said increased efficiency by Mexican producers, which means cheaper products, is met by increased trade barriers in the United States.

"For long-term planning as an exporter...we have to work out something which allows an easier access to U.S. markets on a long-term basis," he said.

Sepulveda said Mexico's sharp devaluation of the peso in February makes Mexican products even cheaper in other countries.

The devaluation is expected to help Mexico's foreign trade and lure more tourists to Mexico, where foreign currencies now buy more, he said. And with imported goods now costing more in Mexico, devaluation is expected to stimulate domestic manufacturers to fill consumer demand.

THE DEVALUATION PLAN also included price controls and salary increases. Sepulveda said government controls to keep investment funds from being sent out of Mexico to protect them from devaluation "never were envisioned" since the experiences of other countries showed exchange controls to be ineffective.

Sepulveda said the political upheavals wracking several Central American countries have created "a new awareness that there has to be an enormous amount of understanding and communication" between the United States and Mexico if Washington is to play an effective role in solving problems in the region.

Mexico, he said, has a better understanding of Central America because it shares a common culture and has been through a revolution in this century.

"Central America is very many different countries with many political aims, with many economic aspirations, with differences in cultural traditions and political systems," Sepulveda said.

"I think that has just been realized (by the United States), and realized the hard way — through conflict and revolution.

Radio battle possible

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Some motorists near Memphis International Airport are being caught up in a battle of the airwaves between a Texas radio station and the sultry voice from a "talking billboard" wooing customers to topless nightclubs.

"This billboard talks — turn now to AM 1200," says a huge billboard off Interstate 240 near the airport. The sign also features a pouty lipped blond.

BY DAY, motorists who tune their radios to AM 1200 hear a pitch for four local topless nightclubs — Danny's, Follies, Gigi's Angels and the Pink Garter.

"In Memphis there are now four exciting and provocative places for you to enjoy a few of life's little pleasures," the billboard says. "Remember, we are looking for that special someone who is both bold and courageous enough to try something unique, just like you tried out this talking billboard."

But by night, the glib billboard must compete with radio station WOAI in San Antonio — on whose frequency the billboard is apparently legally infringing. The billboard's message is interrupted by Spurs basketball games, newscasts, down-home Texas music and soft drink commercials originating from WOAI.

"THIS IS the first report of a talking billboard that I've heard of," Fred Broce, a spokesman for the Federal Communications Commission in Atlanta, said earlier this week.

"We haven't had any complaints...and we always get plenty of complaints.

"It is within the realm of possibility that it's legal. I would assume that it's legal without any information to the contrary."

By twist of history, Britian, Argentina may be at war

By DIAL TORGERSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — The British have long prepared for a war with the Soviet Union, the Argentines for a war with Brazil or Chile. But now, by a twist of history, Britain may find itself fighting Argentina in the South Atlantic.

Britain is advancing toward the Falkland Islands with what is, essentially, a defensive force. And Argentina must meet it with what is basically an attack force. By military logic they should swap fleets.

But, naval experts here say, the deciding factor may turn out to be which side is best able to operate in the worst of whether. Some of the harshest weather in the world is about to close in around the fringes of Antarctica, and it is there the action will be decided.

Sailors who know these far-south seas say there may be two weeks before the winter storms come to stay in the Southern hemisphere. Which side will the bad weather help? Britain's all-weather ability — learned in the North Sea — may be decisive, some observers say.

"It is not a place for planes," said an Argentine naval captain, "And, once the storms come, it is a terrible place for ships as well. Storms, high waves, constant clouds, for the rest of the year."

The two fleets were chosen for other opponents. No one here thought that when Argentina fought its first war since the Paraguay war of 1865-1870 that it would be against Great Britain. Argentina's theoretical foes have always been Brazil and Chile.

Since the turn of the century, the three "A.B.C." countries have been trying to match navies. In 1912 Argentina, which had already ordered two battleships from the United States, almost bought a third "Dreadnaught," as they were then called, because Brazil had two. But, a naval historian noted, "Disarmament leftists in the Congress defeated the plan."

The two battleships, each requiring a crew of 1,200 served until the 1950s, never firing a shot in anger. After World War II, the nations changed to carriers. Now, both Brazil and Argentina each have one former British attack carrier of what is called the Colossus class.

"After all the years of preparing for war with us, they find themselves going to war with Great Britain," said a Brazilian diplomat, barely suppressing a smile, at a Buenos Aires cocktail party.

Chile, because it feared it might fight a war with Argentina in the Beagle Channel of Tierra del Fuego, at the continent's stormiest southern tip, opted for a modern Swedish cruiser instead of a carrier.

"Chile felt planes would be of less use there than a cruiser, because of the weather," a local historian explained. Chile also has two World War II-style cruisers similar to the one owned by Argentina.

The nationalism that inspired the battleship races of the early century, and the continuing costly investment in naval hardware, has left Argentina in a position theoretically superior to Britain in the present war threat.

As both the British empire and the British defense budget shrank, Britain sold its attack carriers to nations such as Brazil and Argentina, and invested in anti-submarine craft that could protect its sealanes in case of war with Russia. The two carriers it sent south, the Hermes and the Invincible, are both designed primarily for defense against submarines, and carry helicopters and a small number — normally five — of all-purpose Harrier jets. These jets can land on the short decks of small carriers, much like a helicopter, by changing the direction of their jet engines' thrust. (One of the two carriers, in fact, had already been sold to Australia, but delivery was delayed).

What the British may face is the Argentine attack carrier 25 of May, of British design, which can carry 20 high-performance fighters and bombers that have greater range than the Harriers.

Britain's escort ships are modern destroyers, frigates and corvettes equipped with missiles. But the missiles are designed primarily for shooting down aircraft or sinking other ships, not for shelling an island in preparation for a landing. The destroyer Exeter, which shelled the defenses at the South Georgias prior to Britain's landing there Sunday, had to do so with only one gun. The rest of its weaponry is in expensive missiles.

Argentina, on the other hand, has World War II-style destroyers with six guns each, the sort that shelled the beaches at Normandie and Iwo Jima. Those would seem better suited for the kind of action the British appear ready to attempt. Since there were no casualties in the South Georgias, the intent of the British shelling apparently was psychological — and six guns can frighten defenders more than one.

But if Britain could use some of the old-fashioned equipment now in the hands of the Argentines, the British would have a definite advantage in electronics. Naval experts stationed here say that the all-weather capability of the harriers, designed to operate in the worst storms, means they can fly when Argentina's jets will be grounded.

Neither fleet was designed to fight each other. But the more modern British fleet was designed to fight in worse weather. And, say the experts, given the time of the year, this may prove a deciding factor in the South Atlantic.

Look out for 'Dear Friend' letters

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — I got a "Dear Friend" letter from Betty Ford the other day.

Actually, hardly a day goes by that the postman doesn't bring a cry for help from the rich, the famous, the powerful. Most of them begin on an apocalyptic note. Something obviously is terribly wrong. Their tidings are never glad.

And like people who just can't seem to remember your name, the famous ones usually begin their letters, "Dear Friend."

The one from Mrs. Ford was no different. It's been more than five years since she and her husband moved from the White House and the former first lady sounded upset.

"Dear Friend," she began. "You and I could just give up."

What has Mrs. Ford upset is that time is running out for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment.

"Although we are just three states short of victory, this simple declaration of equality for women that we support will fail if you and I let it," she wrote.

"Dear Friend:

"Each day, three to five new nuclear warheads are constructed on this small planet."

"Dear Friend,

"You may be in for a big surprise...a disastrous surprise."

Or this from actor Judd Hirsh?

"Dear Friend,

"I am writing to you because I'm worried. I'm worried about the radical right's success in eliminating our best friends in Washington, one by one."

Conservatives worry, too.

"I've enclosed a legal document for you to look over," wrote John T. Dolan, chairman of the National Conservative Political Action Committee, the group that most upsets Hirsch.

"What it says," continued Dolan "concerns you personally, me, and everything NCPAC stands for.... I have discovered evidence that there is a network of liberal Senates, Congressmen and media representatives who are conspiring to keep NCPAC's commercials off the air."

"I am writing to you today to ask for your help and support in my effort to restore our economy and rebuild the national defense of the United States," said the letter signed, "Ronald Reagan."

What the president thinks would move things along is the election of more Republicans to Congress. He'd like his "friend" to send money to the Republican National Committee.

"I hope you will become a 1982 Sustaining Member by sending the most generous contribution you possibly can," wrote the president.

"I hesitate to suggest a specific amount for you to contribute," he continued "but I know the committee needs desperately many $25, $50 and $100 contributions. I know they also depend on many $150, $250 and $500 contributions to counter fully the power and influence of Labor Bosses and other narrow special interest groups."

The postman is a non-partisan civil servant. One day's delivery of an appeal from the Republican president might be followed soon after by a counter appeal from the Democrats.

Stain test detects cancer cells in healthy tissue

By LEO BOWLER
Copley News Service

LA JOLLA, Calif. — Surgeons who must decide how much tissue to remove from a cancer victim may soon get help from a test that can detect a single cancer cell in otherwise healthy tissue — until now, an unheard-of accomplishment.

The test should help increase the cure rate for breast and other cancers, yet leave the patient with less disfigurement and disability.

The technique has been developed here through research that uses the most advanced techniques known, including gene splicing, and promises to push scientific knowledge far beyond its present state in the fight against cancer.

Using the research as a basis, scientists are driving toward the goal of stopping the spread of cancer entirely, through manipulation of tiny bits of protein both inside the cells and on their surfaces. The basic research is at the molecular level, and has the potential of one day saving an untold number of cancer victims.

The work is being done at the La Jolla Cancer Research Foundation on North Torrey Pines Road, in cooperation with the University Institute of Pathological Anatomy in Copenhagen, Denmark. Dr. Erkki Ruoslahti and Dr. Eva Engvall are spearheading the effort here.

Ruoslahti is a Finn whose scientific credits include membership on the team that discovered fibronectin, a protein that glues human cells to one another. It was discovered 10 years ago while Ruoslahti was doing research at the University of Helsinki, Finland. Since then, he has continued studies in cell surface proteins, first at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena and more recently at La Jolla.

Fibronectin and another cell glue, laminin, are thought to play a large role in the spread of cancer. Cancer cells manufacture the material, but it does not appear on the surface of the cancer cell as it does in normal cells.

"Normal cells are surrounded by this glue," Ruoslahti said, "so they have no incentive to go elsewhere. On the other hand, cancer cells don't have it on their surfaces, so they have the ability to attach themselves to another cell, then, perhaps, detach and move further away.

"We don't think that this is the only thing that makes cancer spread through the body, but we think it is an important factor."

Doctors refer to the process a cancer goes through when it appears at a point in the body distant from its place of origin as metastasis. Ruoslahti says that a lot more study at the molecular level of basic chemical reactions in the body must be done before metastasis can be stopped or manipulated, but researchers at the foundation have made a monoclonal antibody to laminin, a probe that will seek it out and stain it so that it can be seen under a microscope.

This is the basis of the test for cancer cells, and although the researchers have been working with breast cancer, the test will be useful for other cancers as well.

"Breast cancer almost always spreads to the lymphatic system first," Ruoslahti says, and this makes the test particularly valuable. Lymphatic tissue has no laminin, so after using the antibody stain, if the tissue shows the stain, cancer is certain.

On the other hand, if the tissue remains clear, the test will stay the surgeon's scalpel.

Another important factor in the research into metastasis is the dissolution of a structure called basement membrane by cancer cells. The membrane stops cells from moving through it, so they sometimes use its laminin to attach themselves, then dissolve the tissue that stops their movement.

The use of the antibody stain can give the physician a clue as to the invasiveness of a cancer and tell him how fast it is likely to spread.

When a cancer cell uses the bloodstream as a means of transport from one one cell to another, as is done in metastasis, it is necessary for the cell to attach itself to a bit of basement membrane in a capillary blood vessel at the point of origin.

Then the cell must dissolve that membrane before it can get into the bloodstream. When it leaves the blood at another location in the body, it must again attach itself to membrane and dissolve it to get through the wall of the blood vessel. Detecting these points would be a boon to diagnosis, but finding a method of keeping the cell from making the attachment in the first place would be of even more therapeutic value.

Scientists at the foundation have used gene splicing to produce a monoclonal antibody to block cells from attaching to fibronectin on another cell's surface. It appears that the antibody attaches itself and covers the molecule of fibronectin so that it is no longer available for attachment by other cells.

Ruoslahti says the work is very promising, but much more study of basic reactions must be done.

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — They came together a year before Pearl Harbor. Just as they were getting to know one another, war broke out and permanently altered their idyllic campus life. Yale College's Class of 1944 scattered to places like Normandy and Guadalcanal, and not all of them could come back for their degrees.

Forty years after World War II separated them, the Class of '44 has come together again — not in quiet college courtyards, but in the arena of American politics with an extraordinary parade of U.S. senators, governors, Cabinet members, mayors and ambassadors.

Even at Yale, where blase professors sometimes meet news of renowned graduates with a shrug or a yawn that translates to, "Oh, it's just another congressman," the Class of 1944 is considered an amazing political success story.

THE CLASS OF '44, which boasts a growing network of prominent Republican politicians, rivals classes such as 1778, which produced lexicographer Noah Webster and Oliver Wolcott, who was George Washington's secretary of the Treasury, and 1915, which featured Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson and the late poet and statesman Archibald MacLeish.

"We realized this was an exceptional class almost from the first month when we were freshmen," Baldrige said. "Everybody was out doing something and doing it to win."

—John V. Lindsay, former mayor of New York City and, after changing parties, a Democratic presidential aspirant in 1972.

—William G. Milliken, three-term governor of Michigan.

So far, members of Yale '44 have run for more than 25 major offices — about half the time successfully — and four are campaigning this year in Connecticut, Ohio and Rhode Island. Not bad, notes Chafee, for a class of about 800.

While acknowledging, as Bush said, that, "We have an extraordinary class that will stand up against any other," members of the class don't agree on roots of their political zest.

SOME, LIKE BUCKLEY, insist it was merely a coincidence that so many public-minded people started college at the same time. But others argue that there was something remarkable about spending a smooth year in ivy-covered halls and then being thrust into what Lindsay calls "a war worth fighting."

"We were old enough, going into the war, to have that make a real impression on what we wanted to do for the rest of our lives," Baldrige recalled. Lindsay added, "After three years of combat, I was determined to do something for the naive, old-fashioned reason that this shall not happen again."

Lindsay finished six months before the rest of his class, in 1943. Milliken didn't graduate until 1946. Baldrige and others went to school during the summer and got diplomas when Yale forgave them their final six months. Bush finished college in three years but never formally graduated.

But even before the war, those in the class had been pursuing different paths.

For Buckley, Yale meant editing the yearbook and being tapped for membership in Skull and Bones, the most exclusive "secret society" on campus. Milliken played basketball and Chafee wrestled. Baldrige was on the student council.

None seemed really devoted to politics at the time; only Seth Chase Taft, this year's leading Republican candidate for governor of Ohio, was an officer of the Yale Political Union.

"I don't think you can say that all these guys were that political or that they were intimate buddies at college, because they weren't," asserted David Gile, the New York banker who serves as class secretary. Gile — himself a Republican city councilman in Rye, N.Y., — urges members to "pony up" for this year's candidates.

CLASS MEMBERS MAINTAIN they've grown close over the years both because of their mutual experiences in the war and because of the common bond of Republican politics. That bond, Baldrige suggested, surfaced at Yale when, "We were all disenchanted with the New Deal."

"If you had polled the class at graduation as to their political preference," Gile added, "I think it would have been overwhelmingly Republican, probably reflecting the background of the people in the class."

Politicians from Chafee to Bush acknowledge their campaigns have received strong support from classmates. "There's a great cohesiveness and pride here," said Chafee, who is seeking re-election this year. "We all tend to trumpet what our class has done."

Other prominent 1944 graduates include Frederick B. Dent, secretary of commerce under President Nixon; Walter Beckjord, a Cincinnati councilman running for a U.S. Senate seat in Ohio; Walter Curley, former ambassador to Ireland; William B. Macomber, former ambassador to Jordan and Turkey and now president of New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art; and Charles Whitehouse, former envoy to Cambodia and Thailand.

Also on the roll is conservative syndicated columnist Rowland Evans, who enrolled with the Class of '44. And the class can even lay a jocular claim to the presidency — or at least to James Whitmore, the actor who has portrayed Harry S. Truman in one-man shows all over the country.

The class may have been clearly Republican, but even Democrats like Lindsay rank political allegiance second to the ties of '44.

Democratics find Republicans behind them

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — In the increasingly emotional struggle by Congress to chart a course toward Soviet-American nuclear arms reduction, the indisputable leaders of the two opposing camps are Senators Henry Jackson and Edward Kennedy.

Both are Democrats who in the past have bid unsuccessfully for their party's presidential nomination. Both are influential Senate power brokers who vote almost in unison on domestic bread-and-butter matters.

Both were vocal critics of Jimmy Carter's presidency. Some of Jackson's backers even worked behind the scenes in 1980 to help Kennedy in his fruitless effort to defeat Carter for the Democratic nomination.

YET, IRONICALLY, IN the current battle of rhetoric and resolutions, they stand as captains of conflicting armies.

The Kennedy proposal for an immediate "freeze" of United States and Soviet nuclear arms, says Jackson, would "freeze the balance of terror" rather than eliminate the cause of that terror.

The Jackson resolution to impose a "freeze" after America has achieved nuclear equity with the Soviets, says Kennedy, constitutes "a serious and dangerous escalation of the arms race" because it would require a further buildup of forces.

But a remarkable aspect of the situation is that two Democratic senators should exercise such leadership over a major national and international issue at a time when the Republicans control the Senate and Ronald Reagan sits in the White House. The reason would appear to lie in the fact that Jackson, during his 30 years in the Senate, has established impeccable credentials as an expert on national defense and as an advocate of nuclear arms reduction rather than simply nuclear arms control, and that Kennedy continues to reign as America's most eloquent and influential spokesman for liberal causes.

Among Senate backers of the Jackson plan, there is strong belief that Kennedy sees leadership of the growing anti-nuclear movement as a means of propelling himself toward the presidency in 1984. Even Kennedy himself concedes that the nuclear question will be a major issue in 1984 unless serious negotiations begin to halt the arms race.

UNLESS SWIFT AND DECISIVE action is taken to curtail the nuclear buildup, says the Massachusetts senator, all presidential candidates in 1984 will support his call for a "freeze."

Yet, Kennedy also concedes that if the Senate were to vote today, the Jackson-Warner resolution, which has more than 60 co-sponsors, would prevail over the Kennedy-Hatfield resolution. Oddly enough, several senators — including Democrats Alan Cranston of California, Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, Daniel Inouye of Hawaii and Dale Bumpers of Arkansas — have co-sponsored both proposals.

Although Reagan has announced his support of the Jackson-Warner resolution, Jackson is quick to point out that he and his longtime national security aide, Dorothy Fosdick, drafted the proposal without input or instigation from the White House.

Jackson also is quick to express his concern over war developing between the two superpowers "by miscalculation or accident."

For that reason, he proposed last week that the United States and the Soviet Union establish a permanent joint command post to gather and evaluate intelligence that might otherwise lead to a confrontation between them.

Despite the fact that they are both prominent national Democrats, it is not surprising to find Jackson and Kennedy on opposing sides of a national security issue. In the jargon of Washington, Kennedy is "dovish" and Jackson is "hawkish."

Yet Jackson's ties to the Kennedy family stretch back over many years, to the days when he and John Kennedy were dashing young congressmen and bachelors about Washington.

China uses flower power in cola game

PEKING (AP) — China has developed its own "cola," a health drink made from peony roots that could turn into an international best-seller, the People's Daily reported Saturday.

The Communist Party newspaper said the drink has been sampled by more than 18,000 foreign tourists, and claimed they found it distinctive yet similar to other cola drinks.

"Overseas, 'Coca Cola' sells in the billions of dollars annually," the paper said. "If our exports of peony root drink only reached one-tenth of 'Coca Cola's,' it would become a big item among our export products."

In its blurb for the drink, the People's Daily said peony root is good for the blood and liver and "drinking it for a long period brings only benefit and no harm to health."

Girls reportedly getting older younger

BOSTON (AP) — A survey of records on 220,000 girls confirms the long-held belief that the age of puberty has gotten progressively lower during the past 1½ centuries.

The latest survey, conducted at Harvard, reviewed 218 reports on puberty in the United States and Europe dating back to 1795. In general, it found that the age of puberty in girls has declined by two or three months each decade.

The researchers said the work supports the idea that the start of the first menstrual period, known as menarche, is delayed by poor nutrition and hard labor.

The study was conducted by Drs. Grace Wyshak and Rose E. Frisch and was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

In Europe, they found, the greatest rate of decline was in the Scandinavian countries, where the age of puberty has fallen 3.2 months each decade. The smallest rate was 1.1 months per decade in France.

In the United States, the age of puberty has fallen at about two months per decade over the past century.

58 polls will be open for Saturday's primaries

The 58 polling places in Saturday's Democratic Party and Republican Party primary elections will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The party-by-party listing to follow is according to the 29 voting precincts in each political party. In each case, the old two-digit voting precinct number is in parentheses immediately following the current three-digit voting precinct number.

The 38,704 Midland County registered voters who have the 1982-84 salmon-colored voter registration certificates should note the three-digit precinct numbers on their cards. The first digit indicates in which of the four county commissioners's precincts in which the voter resides.

Those voters who still have their old white voter certificates for the 1980-82 period and who, due to a move or other reasons, do not have their new certificates may cast ballots in their former voting precincts by signing affidavits of residency. Texas state law prohibits the U.S. Postal Service from forwarding voter-registration certificates.

Action on Voting Rights Act delayed

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee may begin working nights in part because conservative Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is using Senate rules to delay action on a measure extending key provisions of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

Committee chairman Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., unsuccessfully attempted to get a vote on the measure for three days this week.

Twice, Helms invoked a little-used provision under which committees are allowed to meet for only two hours while the full Senate is in session unless special permission is obtained. The objection of one senator can force the committee to adjourn and Helms objected.

Another North Carolina Republican, Sen. James East, on Tuesday delayed the measure by invoking a requirement that 10 committee members be present to continue the meeting. The meeting was called off because not enough members were in attendance.

Enforcement provisions of the voting rights measure expire in August and Senate liberals say they are worried that time is running out because Congress will be tied up with a number of issues between now and then.

"We are going to have some real problems," said Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, if there is continued delay.

Biden, the senior Democrat on the committee, urged Thurmond to convene the committee in the evening next week to permit quick action.

Thurmond replied that night sessions were likely and said he expected the committee to finish work on the measure by the end of next week.

Although Thurmond currently opposes the voting rights extension urged by civil rights groups, he has attempted to bring the issue to a vote in the committee.

Senate sources have said the version of the bill that is backed by civil rights groups and opposed by the Reagan administration has the support of a majority of the 18 judiciary committee members.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., has been leading an effort to broaden support for the extension by urging a compromise which some conservatives on the committee could accept.

Dole's version calls for a 25-year extension of the law, under which more than one million blacks have been registered to vote over the last 17 years.

It would also prohibit any requirement for racial quotas in the makeup of city councils, school boards or other non-federal legislative bodies.

There is general agreement in the Senate that the voting rights law should be renewed.

The debate centers on what kind of evidence should be required to prove that local or state officials discriminated against black or other minority voters.

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. and Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md., are pushing a standard of proof under which a judge could consider just the effects or results of discrimination to rule a violation of the voting rights law.

Attorney General William French Smith and Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, are urging that civil rights lawyers be required to prove that local or state officials intended to discriminate when they drew voting districts or set voting rules. Senate liberals contend that would require proving what politicians, some of them dead, had on their minds.

Utility asks for rate hike

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Public Utility Commission hearing examiner will be asked to approve a $72 million rate hike for Texas Power and Light as part of a settlement agreement.

Ronna Martin, PUC spokeswoman, said the settlement was worked out Thursday by lawyers for TP&L and 12 intervenor groups that planned to put on evidence at a rate hearing. The lawyers notified Hearing Examiner Rhonda Ryan of the agreement. Ms. Ryan suspended the hearing which had started Monday.

The settlement must be approved by the hearing examiner before it is passed on to the full commission for review.

Details of the agreed rate hike, which would go into effect July 1, were not available Thursday, and might not be publicized before Monday, according to Ms. Martin.

Profits down; little relief seen

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The oil glut splashed a drop or two of red ink on the U.S. oil industry in the first quarter this year, and even the giants of the business suffered their biggest profit drops in seven years.

The arithmetic involved in the earnings reports released over the last two weeks was not complicated. Many of the companies were paying about $34 a barrel for oil that, once refined and sold as products such as gasoline and home heating oil, gave them a return of $29 a barrel or less.

The price of oil products plunged mainly because of an oversupply caused by conservation and recession in the industrialized countries. Retail gasoline prices, for example, fell nearly 28 percent from a year earlier, although prices have stabilized in recent weeks and have even risen a bit in some areas.

While the companies were earning less on pumping oil from the ground, they continued to sink millions into new exploration projects. For many, however, higher natural gas prices helped offset the drop in oil prices.

Amerada Hess Corp., which ranks as the nation's 17th largest oil company, reported a $16.2 million loss for the first three months of the year. The New York-based company said it was the first time it had lost money in any first quarter since it started doing business.

Ashland Oil Inc., a major refiner and the 18th biggest oil concern in terms of sales, lost $11.6 million. The company attributed its loss to "near-chaotic conditions in crude oil and petroleum product markets."

While the bigger companies avoided falling into the loss column, the size of their profit declines was substantial. Standard Oil Co. of California, for example, said its earnings plunged $436 million from a year earlier to the lowest level for any period since 1977's first quarter.

To illustrate the magnitude of that decline, it represented more money than the combined earnings of Amerada Hess and Ashland for all of last year.

Exxon Corp., the nation's biggest company, said its profit was $360 million lower than a year ago. Mobil Corp., the No. 2 company, reported a $314 million drop, and Texaco, the third largest oil concern, said it earned $291 million less.

The nation's six largest oil companies — Exxon, Mobil, Texaco, Standard of California, Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) and Gulf Oil Corp. — reported a combined profit of $2.90 billion. That was a drop of 31 percent from the $4.24 billion earned in last year's first quarter. The decline for those six companies was the largest for any first quarter since the recession year of 1975, when their combined profit dropped 31 percent to $1.46 billion.

The companies with large international operations were hit particularly hard, while those concentrating on U.S. markets fared somewhat better.

Standard of California, with a 65 percent profit decline, suffered the most of the four American partners in the Arabian American Oil Co. that produces most of Saudi Arabia's oil. The other partners are Exxon, Mobil and Texaco.

"It is absolutely shocking," Constantine Fliakos, a Merrill Lynch & Co. analyst, said of Standard of California's results. "They truly are depressed."

The Aramco partners were squeezed harder than most other companies because they were obligated to buy Saudi oil at $34 a barrel, the official benchmark price of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, while yields were running about $5 a barrel less.

Companies buying from other OPEC members either received discounts or stopped taking the oil. The Aramco partners chose not to sever their ties because Saudi Arabia, with a government friendly to the United States and oil reserves larger than any in the world, is a reliable source.

There were a few winners among the oil companies. Union Oil Co. of California reported a 9 percent increase, Atlantic Richfield gained 5 percent and Sun Co. was up 3 percent.

The biggest gainer was Indiana Standard, with a 25 percent earnings gain from a year earlier. But even that was not particularly heartening for the Chicago-based company because the improvement was centered mainly in its U.S. marketing and refining operations that had lost $179 million a year ago. This time it turned a profit of $13 million on that business, far from robust.

John Swearington, chairman of Indiana Standard, said the company expects its second-quarter results to be at least 15 percent lower than in 1981's second quarter. And he said results for the full year are expected to be lower than in 1981 when the company earned $1.92 billion.

Despite the gloomy outlook, signs are emerging that oil prices have hit bottom, following OPEC's decision in late March to sharply reduce production.

Spot market prices for crude oil have risen, and many oil companies have raised wholesale prices for gasoline over the last two weeks. Also, some oil-product distributors reported last week that major oil companies are restricting supplies of gasoline for the first time since last year.

The oil companies have been struggling to reduce their inventories because of the high cost of storing and financing the excess supplies. Some analysts believe the drawdown of stocks has peaked and will contribute to a further strengthening of prices for crude and refined oil over the summer.

February offshore production down

AUSTIN — State leases in bays, inlets and the Gulf of Mexico produced 69,052 barrels of crude oil during February 1982, in contrast to 47,638 barrels in the same month of 1981 and 77,052 barrels in January 1982. So far this year, state leases have produced 146,530 barrels of crude oil offshore.

Gas well gas production from state leaes amounted to 15,907,569 Mcf in February against 18,476,664 Mcf a year earlier, 17,649,852 Mcf in January, and 33,557,421 Mcf so far this year.

In February, offshore curde production was less than 0.1 percent of total estimated crude production in Texas. Offshore gas well gas production was approximately four percent of the state total.

CITATION BY PUBLICATION
THE STATE OF TEXAS

YOU ARE HERE BY COMMANDED to appear before the Honorable District Court, 238th Judicial District of Midland County, Texas at the courthouse in Midland, Texas at or before 10:00 a.m. of the first Monday next after the expiration of 42 days from April 15, 1982, the day of issuance of this citation, by filing a written answer to plaintiff's petition that was filed in said court on February 9, 1982, numbered 30,729 on the docket of said Court and styled Martha Madsen, plaintiff v. L.H. Adams, defendant.

Trespass to try title and for quieting title in Martha Madsen on real property described as Lots 15 & 16, Block 2, Greenhill Terrace Addition, an Addition to the City of Midland, Texas. L.H. Adams claims some right or title to said property by virtue of being a stockholder in Green Hill Terrace Company, a Texas Corporation, which owned the property in question at one time.

If this citation is not served within ninety (90) days after the date of its issuance, it shall be returned unserved.

The officer executing this writ shall promptly serve it and make due return thereof according to the requirements of law, and the mandates hereof.

ISSUED under my hand and seal of said Court in Midland, Texas, on the 15 day of APRIL, 1982.
