Reagan 'optimistic' as date set for talks

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The United States and the Soviet Union announced Saturday that a new round of negotiations on nuclear and space arms will begin in Geneva, Switzerland, on March 12, ending a 13-month suspension of arms control talks.

President Reagan said he was "optimistic, not euphoric" about hopes for an arms control agreement during his second term but would not guarantee it "because I know how long some negotiations have taken."

Simultaneous announcements by the White House and the Kremlin said the Soviet negotiating team will be headed by V.P. Karpov, a 55-year-old career diplomat who also headed the Soviet delegation at the previous round of talks aimed at curbing long-range nuclear missiles. Those talks broke down in the Swiss city in late 1983.

Also on the Soviet team will be Yuri A. Kvitsinsky, the chief Soviet negotiator for medium-range missiles in the previous talks and one of the architects of a tentative accord, known as the "Walk in the Woods" agreement, which failed to reach fruition.

The other Soviet negotiator will be Alexei A. Obukhov, deputy chief of the U.S. desk at the Soviet foreign ministry, who also took part in the previous long-range missile negotiations.

The U.S. delegation, which was announced Jan. 18, will be headed by Max Kampelman, a lawyer who has most recently been Reagan's representative in talks aimed at reducing East-West tensions.

Other members are John Tower, former chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, who will be responsible for dealing with long-range missiles; and Maynard Glitman, a career diplomat who was on the U.S. delegation in the intermediate-range missile talks. Reagan met with the three men last week to discuss the U.S. posture for the upcoming talks.

In an interview with radio reporters shortly after the announcements in Washington and Moscow, Reagan said he "certainly going to try" for an agreement in the term that began with his inauguration on Jan. 21.

But he added, "I certainly would not want to confine it to four years, because I know how long some negotiations have taken."

"I tend to be . . . optimistic, not euphoric," Reagan said. "We intend to stay there at the table with the hope that this time we can arrive at an actual reduction of weapons."

Reagan said he did not whether the reported illness of Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko would affect the talks, but the fact that the Soviets have named their negotiators "would indicate that they plan to go forward."

Paul H. Nitze, who headed the U.S. delegation in medium-range missile talks previously, and Edward L. Rowny, who headed the long-range weapons delegation, will serve as advisers.

New arguments prepared for annexation fight

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Attorneys for residents of Ridgewood subdivision have introduced new arguments in defense of their request for a rehearing to annex a section of Midland County into Ector County Independent School District.

The arguments were filed in response to an order that the petitioners present "evidence" of "legitimate interest" in the more than 4,000 acres of land they seek to be detached and annexed, according to Texas Education Agency hearing officer Mark Robinett.

The Ridgewood group asked the agency to rehear the case after Interim Commissioner of Education W.N. Kirby, in denying the request, ruled in December the petitioners sought to "transfer an unreasonable amount of uninhabited territory in which they clearly have no legitimate interest."

Ridgewood attorney Margaret A. Cooper of Bunton, Nolan, Ode and Cooper, an Austin law firm, wrote in defense of the group, saying "there simply existed no statutory or case law requirement that a 'reasonable relationship' geographical standard was applicable" at the time the petition for annexation was filed.

"He (Kirby) is not using what is required in the legislative statute (section 19.261 of the Texas Education Code). Instead, he's setting up a whole new statute which, up until now, no one knew existed," Ms. Cooper said. Also, the commissioner's ruling supports the "contention that it was imprudent to submit evidence on the point in advance of its adoption," she said.

Ms. Cooper added to the argument that the land is not all uninhabited since "a portion of the land is already platted, with homes under construction, with residents living in the area; and the rest is part of an overall planned community development."

MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi, however, reiterated the district's argument the land was uninhabited when the petition was filed.

Utility bills may fuel decision not to buy TESCO building

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Unexpected figures on projected utility costs may have killed Midland City Council's plans to purchase the former Texas Electric Service Co. building at the southwest corner of Texas and Colorado streets.

A special 9 a.m. Monday council session was canceled late Friday afternoon after Deputy City Manager Fred Poe produced utility costs for that building that were double what the council had expected, according to Mayor G. Thane Akins.

Since December the council has been pursuing the proposal by owner Jack Wilkinson to buy the former TESCO building for $1.1 million with Certificates of Obligation. At a Jan. 11 special session, the council voted 4-to-2 in favor of buying the building. With a 14-day waiting period to give the public a chance to respond ending on Jan. 25, the council had scheduled the Monday session to finalize the sale.

"We got some numbers that took the thing out of the ballpark for us," Akins said. "We had been using some average numbers of office buildings downtown. We checked with TESCO and the actual utility bill was almost twice what we had figured. The $5,200 utility cost took the bloom off the bush."

The mayor said the sale was dead unless some other figures could prove the investment worthwhile.

While a majority on the council favored buying the building as a site to locate City Hall employees when the current structure becomes crowded in the future, some property managers and real estate persons objected to the idea.

Under the plan worked out with Wilkinson, the city would seriously consider buying the building only if a tenant had signed a contract before the sale. On Tuesday, Texas American Bank signed a lease for the first floor and basement of the three-story building.

"We got some numbers that took the thing out of the ballpark for us. ...We checked with TESCO and...the $5,200 utility cost took the bloom off the bush."

— Mayor G. Thane Akins

The first floor had been turned into an 1890s-style bank at a cost of $1.1 million — an idea that was masterminded by Charles Fraser when he was president of the First National Bank of Midland. It was to serve as a second facility for FNB, according to Councilman Gordon Marcum II.

In October 1983 FNB was declared insolvent, the institution was bought out by RepublicBank and the name changed to RepublicBank First National of Midland. The doors remained closed on the brass- and oak-furnished street corner bank.

TAB President and Chief Executive Office Charles Grimes said he had signed a 10-year lease with an option for an additional five years. On March 1, the former FNB facility — complete with stained glass Eagle logo — will become the site of TAB.

Marcum, who along with Councilman Steve Davidson had opposed the council's move to buy the building, said TAB was locked into that lease for only 43 months. "They have all sorts of options to get out of it," he said.

But the mayor said he couldn't see any reasons why Texas American would want to get out of that prime downtown location unless it would be to construct another building.

"Texas American is pretty stout, it's a large bank. I just don't know of any bank that size that's going into a facility and then pull out of downtown after 43 months. I think it's a safe proposition they'll be there for the duration. And if they did pull out our liability would be a little more than $4 a square foot."

Under the plan, if TAB stayed in the building 15 years its lease payments would have covered the payments on the Certificates of Obligation, according to the mayor and Councilman Bart Hotchkiss.

The councilman said payments on the CO's the first two years would be $110,000 each year. Then the bill would be about $125,000 each year for the next 20 years.

TAB's lease calls for $10,000 a month, or $120,000 a year, for the five years. The next five the payments would go up to $13,000 a month, or $156,000 a year. And if the bank stays on at the final five year option, the lease payment is $16,900 a month or $202,800 a year.

"WE BREAK EVEN the first two years, lose $17,000 a year average for the next three and gain $30,000 a year for the next five. And if the third five year option is exercised, it's a sweet deal," Hotchkiss said.

NASA still close-mouthed on shuttle

New York Times News Service

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, being kept in tight rein by the Defense Department, continued on Saturday to give no information on the secret flight of the space shuttle Discovery other than repeating that it was "performing satisfactorily."

There were unofficial reports, which could not be confirmed, that the Discovery's secret payload was released Friday morning, the second day of the mission, and boosted toward its destination in high orbit.

Public information officers for the Air Force and the space agency would not comment on the reports. But it was unlikely that the astronauts aboard the Discovery would wait until late in the mission to conduct their most important task. On all previous missions the deployments of satellites were scheduled for the first two days. The duration of the mission, however, is also a military secret.

The Discovery's payload is widely reported to be a $300 million electronic intelligence-gathering satellite that was to be sent to an orbit 22,300 miles above the equator south of the Soviet Union. There it would monitor communications related to Soviet missile tests and other military activities.

The Discovery, launched Thursday afternoon, was expected to remain in orbit at least five days. The Air Force will allow NASA to give 16 hours' notice on the scheduled landing of the shuttle here at the Kennedy Space Center.

The only announcements concerning the satellite deployment are expected to come toward the end of the mission. The Air Force has promised to report at that time whether the rocket system that was to boost the satellite to its operational orbit fired successfully.

The solid-fuel rocket, known as the inertial upper stage, failed the last time it was used to launch a satellite from the shuttle. Its performance is a matter of considerable concern because a similar rocket is to be used on the next shuttle mission, set for Feb. 20.

Asked if the satellite had been deployed and if the inertial upper stage fired properly, William Rice, a representative of the Boeing Aerospace Co., the rocket manufacturer, replied: "I can't say anything."

All that Charles Redmond, a NASA public affairs officer, would say was: "We'll know in the next couple of days."

On board the Discovery are Capt. Thomas K. Mattingly of the Navy, Lt. Col. Loren J. Shriver of the Air Force, Lt. Col. James F. Buchli of the Marine Corps, and Maj. Ellison S. Onizuka and Maj. Gary E. Payton, both of the Air Force.

In effect, they have not been heard from since they embarked. All communications between the crew and Mission Control are encoded and blacked out to the public. Every eight hours the space agency releases a brief status report, each of which reads much like the one before.

At 1 a.m. on Saturday, the report said: "The space shuttle orbiter Discovery, her crew and other elements of the space transportation system continue to perform satisfactorily." This was the full report.

At 9 a.m., the wording differed only in saying the shuttle and crew "are still performing satisfactorily."

According to Redmond, there was concern that seemingly innocuous information about crew activities, such as wake-up calls and meals and reports on non-secret experiments, could betray their working cycle and hence the mission operations.

The Discovery is carrying two small non-secret experiments in the crew quarters. One experiment, developed by Dr. Leopold Dintenfass, an Australian medical researcher, involves a study of the behavior of blood in weightlessness. The other is a test to see how weightless fluids behave when transferred from one tank to another.

Missing girl's aunts organize search independent of police

MESQUITE (AP) — The family of a missing 5-year-old girl say they began conducting an independent search Saturday after waiting in vain for authorities to find Christi Lynn Meeks.

"It's been a week. We've just got to look," said the girl's tearful aunt, Teresa Rogers.

Ms. Rogers and another aunt, Teresa Scott, said they could no longer sit around doing nothing while police continue the exhaustive search for their niece, who was reported missing last Saturday while playing outside the apartment of her mother and stepfather.

"Christi's disappearance is tearing us up inside and we plan to search every inch of the wooded areas in and around Mesquite," said Ms. Rogers.

So the two aunts began organizing a citywide citizens search Saturday morning, asking residents of the Dallas-Fort Worth are to join them in looking for the girl.

STATE

Mesquite Police Lt. Larry Sprague said the family's search is likely to cross many of the same fruitless paths already explored by police.

Sprague said many officers have worked 14 to 16 hours a day on the case.

"I go to bed thinking about it," he said Friday. "We've got nothing new."

Ms. Rogers said the family asked people willing to help search to meet Saturday at a shopping mall.

"We just feel like it's time that we get as much of the city combed as possible," she said.

The little girl was last seen on the evening of Jan. 19. following an unidentified man to a gray compact car near her stepfather's Mesquite apartment complex, police said.

Two of Christi's playmates told police that a man parked a gray compact car near where Christi was playing and when one of the girls walked away, the man ran with Christi toward the car.

The FBI has been assisting the Mesquite police and a representative of a local dairy offered to post the child's picture on milk cartons.

Records of state senator, ex-mayor subpoenaed in condominium probe

DALLAS (AP) — Federal investigators looking into questionable condominium loan practices have subpoenaed the financial records of over a dozen people, including a bank president, a state senator and a former Garland mayor.

The subpoenas identify the subjects of the investigation for the first time, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

They were issued to First Bank of Rowlett and Peak Investments Corp. by a federal grand jury in Dallas. in connection with an investigation into loans made for condominium developments along the Interstate 30 corridor near Lake Ray Hubbard.

A federal grand jury is investigating allegations that the value of property was inflated and used for collateral on loans from the failed Empire Savings and Loan Association of Mesquite.

The subpoenas ask for financial records of bank president C.E. Vaughn Jr. and Danny Faulkner, the original promoter of the condo developments.

The grand jury has demanded documents from 213 bank accounts, including those of Faulkner and Vaughn. The subpoenas ask for copies of checks, deposit tickets, wire transfers, monthly statements and corporate resolutions for each of the accounts.

The subpoenas also ask for bank records of state Sen. Ted Lyon of Mesquite, former Garland mayor and Faulkner associate James Toler, developer Clifford R. Sinclair, former Empire chairman Spencer H. Blain Jr., former Empire president Carolyn Seabourn, land appraisers Paul Tannehill and Art Formann, contractor H. Wailen York and Thomas M. Gaubert, a close friend of Faulkner's who contributed heavily to the campaigns of Mattox and Gov. Mark White.

Lyon, an investor in the condos who also did some legal work for Sinclair, told the Times Herald that he had been interviewed by FBI agents about the case. He said he has given them "everything they've asked for in terms of my personal investment."

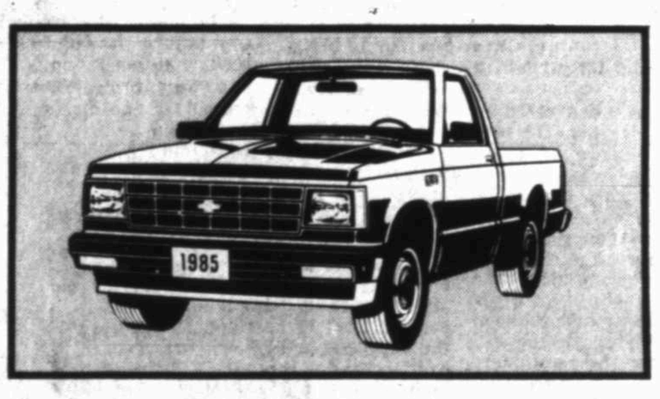

In addition, the grand jury has asked for financial, travel, tax and other records from Peak Investments, the company used to market the condos. Peak officials said last week accused federal prosecutors of using the subpoenas for a "fishing expedition" with the subpoenas.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

As usual, state legislators starting to file amendments to constitution

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — As happens every legislative session, scores of proposals on changing the Texas Constitution are starting to appear; in some cases, they're appearing the same as in several other sessions.

Proposals filed thus far during the session are a blend of the familiar and novel, although the bulk of the propsoals have been proposed, at least in some form, to other groups of legislators.

Thus far, 269 amendments have been adopted to the state's charter, and indications are that when the 1987 Legislature convenes, that total will be still higher. One proposal which has been talked of before is contained in HJR 28 by Rep. Steve Carriker, D-Roby, who proposes to limit the number of terms which a legislator may serve.

The proposal would limit senators and representatives by providing they would not be eligible for election if they had served "in that office for more than nine consecutive years immediately preceeding the time of election" (with service before Jan. 1, 1987, not counting towards that limit).

Carriker also has proposed HJR 29, to increase from two years to four years the terms for representatives, with half of the House members to be elected every two years. Dick Burnett, D-San Angelo, also is proposing four-year terms.

HJR 29 also provides the same limits on the number of terms for senators and representatives as does HJR 28.

Rep. Terral Smith, R-Austin, is offering HJR 32, which would allow the Legislature to provide by "special statute" for the consolidation of political subdivisions, including a county government, located "primarily within the same county," and including constitutionally created offices.

Initiative and referendum is being proposed again by Rep. Carlyle Smith, D-Grand Prairie, who has offered that proposal several times before.

Rep. Don Lee, D-Harlington, also is sponsoring "I&R" legislation.

Several proposals that deal with games of chance are being offered, including legislation for a state lottery, and to provide for charitable raffles.

Approval of the lottery amendments seems to be in the "long shot" category at present, but sponsors (led by Rep. Larry Evans, D-Houston) are keeping an eye on California's state lottery, which starts operation this spring, in hopes the experience there could encourage approval for Texas.

HJR 10 by Sam Russell, D-Mount Pleasant, would permit two fund-raising events in any calendar year for charitable purposes by religious organizations, volunteer fire departments, veterans' or fraternal groups, or similar non-profit organizations, using raffles.

Several other propsoals concern tax matters, including proposals for homestead property tax relief, and HJR 13 by Rep. Kae Patrick, D-San Antonio, to prohibit personal and corporate income taxes.

Then there are election matters.

Sens. Grant Jones, D-Abilene; Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, and Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, are promoting changes on selection of judges for Texas' courts, proposing to go to a "merit selection" method.

Similar proposals have been offered a number of times — and has had the backing of many members of the state's judiciary.

Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill, in his "State of the Judiciary" address to lawmakers, indicated his desire to see some changes in the judiciary, to eliminate the problem of judges being defeated due to "the mechanism of sheer party voting."

Sen. Lindon Williams, D-Houston, and Rep. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio, are proposing an additional $500 million in bonds under the Veterans Housing Assistance Program.

And a family farm and ranch bond program is being proposed by Rep. Pete Peterson, D-Brookston.

Changes in Texas' homestead law to provide for second mortgages is being offered by Rep. Bill Hammond, R-Dallas.

Various criminal justice matters also are due for consideration, including restrictions on bail in multiple offenses, magistrates for district courts, and placement of inmates in other states' prisons.

Other proposals include expanding the Water Development Fund by providing for another $600 million in bonds, changes in local precincts and abolishing some local offices (such as the Collin County county surveyor), and setting out provisions for the Texas Supreme Court to consider certain Federal law questions.

By the time the Legislature ends, the number of amendments being proposed — and the range of topics — will have doubled and probably tripled.

And while most won't ever be on a ballot, some will — and will help to change the total of changes to Texas' charter by the time the process starts again in 1987.

Bill Kidd is a columnist for the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

Lewis: Water plan best we can devise

AUSTIN (AP) — Speaker Gib Lewis told representatives from 1,100 Texas water districts Saturday that the statewide water plan is not perfect but that "it is the best we can devise."

Lewis also told the Texas Water Board Directors Association that he was sure the measure would be changed from its present form.

"I anticipate it will be revised and changed as it goes through the legislative process because that is the legislative process form," he said. "I ask your support as we work these things out."

The TWBD met just three days after the House began committee hearings on the statewide water proposals supported by Lewis, Gov. Mark White and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

"Our most precious natural resource is water," Lewis said. "Most of the time when we need help with water we look to the heavens. Unless we help ourselves this time, heaven's help may not be enough."

Lewis noted that other statewide water plans had been presented to the Legislature and voters before but that they were defeated.

"If a plan succeeds this time in both the Legislature and with voters, we must get all the factions working together," he said.

"There is plenty of give and take in this package."

The package supported by Lewis, White and Hobby includes a state constitution change that must be approved by both the Legislature and by voters. Still another legislative law must be passed to put the change into effect.

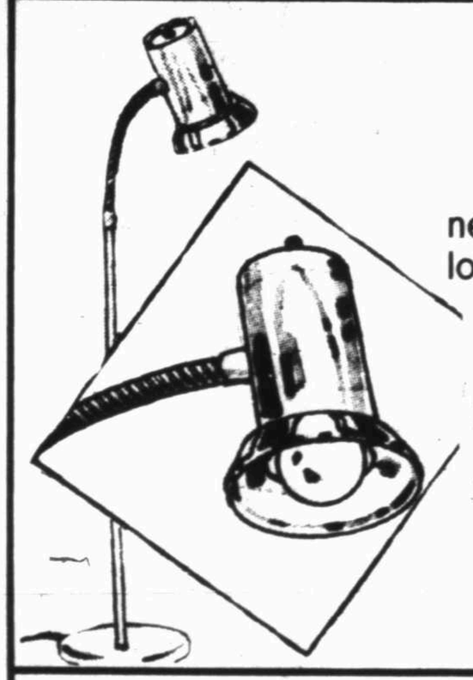

The measures presented last Wednesday and Thursday before the House Natural Resources Committee include authorization of $600 million in state bonds to fund water projects amd a $250 million bond guarantee to help local governments build water projects.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

Parts of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and New Mexico could receive rain today, while snow is forecast for parts of the Great Lakes states, according to the National Weather Service.

Chilly temperatures expected in Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Chilly temperatures will prevail across West Texas today, but Midlanders can expect to see clouds decreasing and the skies becoming sunny by Monday.

The forecast, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, calls for mostly cloudy skies today with a 20 percent chance of showers. The high is expected to be in the mid-50s with winds north to northeasterly at 5-15 mph.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with the low near 30. Monday will be sunny with the high near 50.

Saturday's high of 56 was 25 degrees below the record set in 1953. The low of 34 was 25 above the record set in 1948.

STATE

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms covered West Texas and part of the Rio Grande Valley Saturday, prompting some cool temperatures and chilly winds.

Some of the rain stemmed from an upper level disturbance over Mexico and a weak surface low northwest of the Panhandle, according to the National Weather Service.

Mostly cloudy skies were common statewide except in Northeast Texas, where scattered high level cloudiness was reported. South to southeast winds at 10 to 20 mph breezed across the state.

Temperatures were in the upper 40s to mid 50s across most of North and West Texas. Middle 50s to lower 60s were common over South Texas and along the coast with a few lower 70s in the lower Valley.

Temperature extremes at 4 p.m. ranged from 72 degrees at Brownsville to 44 degrees at Childress, Tyler, Wichita Falls and the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

In the forecast, skies were expected to be cloudy through Sunday night with rain likely in most areas of the state, the weather service said.

Sunday's high temperatures were expected to be in the 40s and 50s, with some 70-degree readings in South Texas. Overnight lows should dip mostly into the 20s and 30s.

The cloudiness was expected to begin diminishing Monday as high temperatures rise into the 50s and 60s, except for some 40s in North Texas.

NATION

Snow pounded the central Appalachian mountains Saturday, snow and hail-bearing thunderstorms pelted parts of the desert Southwest, and new record lows were set or tied in four cities in the Southeast.

Travelers' advisories were in effect Saturday afternoon for the mountains of northern West Virginia, extreme western Maryland and southwest Pennsylvania, where snow combined with gusty west winds to cause blowing and drifting snow.

Police probe assaults, burglaries

From Staff Reports

A Midland man was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital early Saturday for treatment of injuries he received in an assault by unknown suspects at Reds Drive-In, 1807 E. Front St., according to police reports.

Police said Jose Villa Leon, 38, 1400 S. Loraine St., was found lying on the drive-in parking lot about 4:15 a.m. He was taken to MMH Emergency Room and was reported in guarded condition.

In other complaints, Chim Sheikh, 4201 Andrews Highway, told police he was assaulted by someone Friday at Al and Sons Welding, 2306 Garden City Highway.

According to the report, the assault reportedly occurred about 4:25 p.m. in the office of the business. Sheikh was not injured.

Someone climbed through a roof vent Saturday to gain entrance to the office at Tommy's Supermarket, 1806 Rankin Highway, and took an undetermined amount of cash, police reported. The burglary occurred about 5:30 a.m., according to reports.

Midland Fire Department officials Saturday extinguished a blaze which caused extensive damage to a mobile home belonging to Manual Tercro, County Roads 349 and 118. The fire broke out about 6 a.m. The exact cause and origin of the blaze is unknown, according to firefighters.

Jessie Fennell, 1911 Nash, reported the theft of his 1978 Buick Skylark while it was parked between Nov. 1, 1984, and Jan. 25 at 2119 Butternut, police said. The vehicle's value is estimated at $2,000.

A stove ventilator, furnace, water heater and air conditioning unit, together valued at $1,930, were reported stolen between Jan. 11 and 25 from the Jim Reynolds residence at 1925 English Drive, according to police reports.

A color television set, cable television converter, cassette player, 35mm camera, .410-gauge shotgun and various silver coins were reported stolen between Wednesday and Friday from the Herman Jefferson residence, 707 S. Atlanta St., according to police.

The exact time of the burglary is unknown, according to police reports. Total value of the property was estimated about $1,230.

More than $700 worth of property was reported stolen Friday from a vehicle belonging to Arlen Fisher, 3319 Maxwell, police reported. The burglary is believed to have occurred between midnight and 7 a.m. while the vehicle was parked in the garage at the residence. Taken were stereo equipment, a digital clock and cigarette lighter. Entry to the vehicle was gained by pushing open the left vent window, according to the police report.

A color television set, diamond necklace and earrings, worth about $600, were reported stolen either Thursday or Friday from the Salley J. Covarubias residence at 503 N. Lee, police said.

Police said someone entered by breaking a window located on the west side of the residence. The exact time of the burglary is unknown.

Ramone Flores, 414 E. Pine, reported the theft of stereo equipment, valued at more than $300, from her residence Friday, police said.

According to the report, Ms. Flores reported the burglary Saturday after discovering someone broke into the residence between 7 and 9 p.m. through an unlocked front door.

About $300 cash was reported stolen Friday from the Judy James residence at 5009 Rio Grande, according to police reports.

Police said the burglary is believed have occurred between 7:15 a.m. and 7 p.m. Entry to the residence was gained through a window located near the front door.

Texans' desire to 'fight back' stirs lawmens' fears

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Several people "fed up with criminality" fought back last week, leaving three men killed and two others wounded, and causing lawmen to fear that citizens are starting to take the law into their own hands.

The dead included a man fatally shot while attempting an auto burglary and another who was killed after allegedly attempting to rob a tavern. A third victim was killed while trying to prevent the tavern robbery.

Houston citizens are becoming more combative toward criminals, according to Harris County District Attorney John Holmes.

"People are fed up with criminality," Holmes told the Houston Post. "They are tired of worrying about whether their property will be there when they come home at night."

Lt. Allen Tharling of the Houston Police robbery division said more citizens are fighting back when confronted by criminals.

"It is dangerous and we're scared by it," said Tharling. "We're frightened for their (the citizens') safety."

Two people, including an innocent citizen, died early Friday during an attempted robbery at a bar. Police said two suspects, one carrying a shotgun, entered the tavern. The man with the shotgun fired one round into the floor and Mark E. Walton, manager of the club, fired back. A customer, Ronald Perry Ervin, struggled with the second suspect.

The armed robber was killed, as was Ervin. The second suspect fled.

In another incident, a robbery suspect was shot on Thursday while taking money at gunpoint from customers at another bar. A customer shot the man in the back and he is listed in poor condition and has been charged with aggravated robbery.

In yet another incident, Darrel W. York, 18, was shot and killed on Wednesday night in the driveway of the home of Laird Roy Roberson, 28. Another man, Jerome Levell Marshall, 19, was wounded.

Police said Roberson fired shots from his second floor bedroom window after seeing two men burglarizing his car.

Sgt. Earl Campa of the Houston police homicide division said citizens last year killed 16 persons caught in a criminal act. Five of the dead were robbery suspects, he said, and most of the others died while attempting burglary.

Under Texas law, it is justifiable homicide to kill persons committing arson, burglary, robbery, aggravated robbery, or persons committing "theft during the nighttime and criminal mischief during the nighttime," according to Holmes.

Inmate 'fair' following spearing

LOVELADY (AP) — A 27-year-old convict wounded by a homemade spear hurled by another convict was in fair condition at the prison hospital Saturday, a Texas Department of Corrections spokesman said.

Albert Buckhana was hit in the abdomen by a homemade spear at about 7:15 p.m. Friday as guards were taking him from the showers to his cell in the disciplinary section of the TDC's Eastham Unit, said prison spokesman Charles Brown.

The incident was the 18th knifing inside Texas prisons this year, Brown said.

BUILDING

Hotchkiss said the tenants, other than the bank, would be someone in the public sector providing a service "which benefits the people in the city. No way would we be competing for tenants in the downtown market."

In addition to questioning the city's "impropriety" in attempting to buy the building, Bonner said he had heard a report the council was going to sell the building in a few years for a profit.

Akins denied the charge. "No, no, no. We would not be selling the building. Not only would it be speculative, but it might be illegal in buying it with the C.O.s."

First Assistant City Attorney David Reagan said the law controlling the use of C.O.s in purchasing buildings requires the city to show a need. "It's based on a need of office space. The law says they can't buy it right now with the present intention of selling it in a few years."

Bonner said he and others questioned the city's need for additional space.

Before the council looked seriously at the offer, City Manager James Brown conducted an office space needs survey. The results indicated that city departments will need another 3,320 square feet of space in two years; 4,964 square feet in five years; and 9,808 square feet in 10 years, Brown said.

IN SEPTEMBER 1983 a two-floor, 13,000 square foot addition to City Hall was completed and was expected to handle city employees' needs for 10 years, according to Brown. "We thought it would take us 10 years," he said.

Before the utility figures came in, the mayor had said the aspect about the offer that attracted the council is that the purchase would have given additional office space without the taxpayers having to fund construction of another building.

"We expect Midland to grow and at some point in time, whether it's three years or five, it's one way to have office space available to us at no cost to the city," Akins said.

Hotchkiss pulled out a report from Sales and Marketing Management magazine in which Midland is predicted to grow a total of 22.3 percent between 1983-88. That placed it as number three in the category of fastest-growing cities in the United States for that period.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce pegged Midland's growth in 1984 at 3 percent.

Hotchkiss, who calls himself an optimist about Midland's growth, recalled the recent City Hall addition cost the taxpayers $1.1 million. Since the construction consisted of adding two floors to an existing building, he said the city didn't have the additional costs of putting in a foundation, buying more land or putting in a parking garage.

WHEN CITY HALL needs to be expanded again, he said, the only alternative is to put the addition in a parking lot north of the building. "We must put in a foundation and build a parking facility. This would cost us, conservatively, $2 million. For the benefit of the city, do we buy 26,000 square feet of space today for $1.1 million or wait a few years and get 13,000 square feet for $2 million?"

At $1.1 million, the former TESCO building figures out to be $4.27 a square foot, he said. "We can't lease extra space for that price."

A Midland chamber spokesman said a recent office survey showed space in the older buildings was leasing from $9.50 to $11 a square foot and from $15 to $18 a square foot in new structures.

One argument from property managers centered on the elevator in the middle of the TESCO building and their queries as to how other tenants could get to the second and third floors after hours. Grimes said the lobby would be open from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. "After hours or on weekends they have a stairwell. From a convenience factor, we'll make sure they have access," he said, adding that plans have been drawn to eliminate the public coffee room to make a separate entrance to the elevator when it is required.

ACCORDING TO Bonner, some property managers had viewed the purchase as a speculative real estate deal and wondered if the city could legally get involved in it. Akins compared it to the land swap the council approved to get a site for relocating Midland Air Park. For 94 acres of Air Park and Air Terminal land, the city received 2,600-plus acres northeast of the city.

"We have an adequate airport with Air Park. But if we want something for the future with longer runways, with the value of the land we thought it prudent to trade the land. There was no cash involved. It was, in a sense, speculative. We may not move Air Park and we would have 2,600-plus acres of land we'd have to get rid of."

He viewed the TESCO building purchase as a chance to prepare for the future. "This appeared to be a low-risk project for future needs. And with a tenant in place paying the costs to amortize the loan, we saw good in it for the taxpayers of Midland," Akins said.

BONNER POINTED to the $22,000 tax bill paid on the building last year that would be eliminated if purchased by the city. The tax rolls between 1983 and 1984 reflected a 5 percent real growth, according to City Finance Director Troy Gifford.

In 1983, the city's taxable property was valued at $2.690 billion and the tax bill was $11.835 million. In 1984 the valuation was pegged at $3.461 billion while the tax bill is estimated at $12.731 million.

His figures show Midland experienced a 5 percent "real growth" each of the past two years and he is expecting a 3 percent increase each of the next two years.

Bonner said he wasn't opposed to the deal if the city planned to fill the space with its employees, but he was against buying the building without the public's approval.

"I'm all for competition," Bonner said, "and it's all around me. But I don't want competition that isn't paying taxes."

The mayor countered: "We feel that as a council we ought to plan when we can for long-term needs, whether it be for office space or streets."

Among the vocal opposition is Blake Bonner, project manager of the property management division of The Horne Co. If the situation changes and the council buys the building in the future, Bonner contended it would create an unfair environment. Taking that building off the tax rolls would eliminate a yearly payment of $22,000 a year. That tax-exemption would put the building into a different category than those in which the owners must pay taxes.

"The $1.1 million could be better spent on sewage lines and street repairs," he said.

"IT'S UNFAIR for us to pay taxes and for them to be across the street and offer the same commodity as us," said Bonner of his Western United Life Building location. The Horne Co. also manages the Permian Building, Gihls Tower West and One Petroleum Center.

"The bank is not going to the efforts of moving downtown with the intentions of turning around and closing," he added. "The downtown location will attract more business for them than where they are now." Texas American is located at Wall and Garfield streets.

ANNEX

"If they start considering new situations then they (the TEA) should consider the new (monetary) values," he said.

The residents more than a year ago sought to have the land, much of which already is within Odessa city limits, annexed into ECISD so their children could attend Odessa schools tuition-free. The area, located about five miles from Odessa and 15 miles from Midland, includes Mission Dorado subdivision, Ridgewood and a trailer park.

The Ector County school board and county commissioners approved the proposed annexation, while Midland county and school officials opposed it, disputing that the detachment would result in an immediate loss of more than $17 million in tax revenue and a considerable long-term tax loss.

Ms. Cooper said the group's "legitimate interest" in the area stems from the fact the petitioners "consider themselves citizens of the city of Odessa, where they reside, where they are employed, where they attend church and where they conduct the majority of their daily activities."

In addition, "the Midland City Council adjusted their extraterritorial jurisdiction boundaries to exclude the area in order for Odessa to provide basic city services. They (MISD) have shown no particular interest in the area but they want to keep it as a tax base," she said.

Furthermore, MISD has constructed no schools outside the Midland city limits, Ms. Cooper added. "The Ector County schools are located nearer to the territory sought to be detached and annexed than are any schools in the Midland ISD. A majority of the qualified voters currently residing in the territory...have stated their preference that they attend school within the Ector County ISD and that their school district residence be that district."

Economic forecast gloomy for farmers

DALLAS (AP) — Debt, drought and depressed prices continued to plague Texas farmers in 1984. And without a continuing decline in interest rates, agricultural economists say the outlook for 1985 is not much brighter.

There is not much hope for improved farm prices, since bountiful worldwide harvests are keeping prices low.

And many Texas farmers may never recover from the havoc wrought by months of drought in West Texas.

"In the drought areas, 1984 farm income was down substantially," said Vern Peckham, senior vice president of RepublicBank Corp. "In those areas that received rainfall, farm income was flat at best."

Carl Anderson, an economist with the Texas A&M University Research and Extension Service at College Station, said the number of farmers leaving agriculture due to financial reasons is expected to increase this year.

"They have been under severe financial pressure from 1981 to 1983. If they had a crop failure or near failure because of weather in 1984, many of these producers do not have a chance," Anderson said.

Bank economists say Texas farmers owe 15 to 20 times as much money as they will reap in profits from 1984 crop and livestock sales.

The amount owed by Texas farmers for mortgages on land, plus loans for livestock, farm equipment, fertilizer, pesticides and seed, topped $13.6 billion in 1983. That was the highest Texas farm debt load in history and 50 percent greater than the amount owed in 1979. In contrast, farmers earned only $990 million in 1983.

The Texas Agriculture Department estimates farmers will take in about $1 billion this year, but RepublicBank said the net loss could total $1 billion.

Peckham said lower interest rates would help farmers out of the crisis, but to make any real difference in the farm crisis, he said this must be combined with lower prices for fuel, insecticides and other agricultural inputs — plus better market prices.

Peckham said farmers generally pay prime plus two or three percentage points in interest on operating loans. He said real estate mortgage loans average about 12 percent to 13 percent interest.

Anderson, however, said lower interest rates, causing the price of the dollar to drop on international markets, could make Texas farm exports cheaper and boost sales.

He said each percentage point farm interest rates drop is estimated to boost farm income by 10 percent — wiping out at least $100 million of what farmers would otherwise earn.

Anderson said Texas farm debt dropped from $13.6 billion to $13 billion in 1984 "because some of that debt was called in. It represents people forced out of business."

Peckham said he believes at least 10 percent of the northwest Texas farmers on the High Plains, around the Lubbock area, who were in business in 1981 will have been driven out of farming by 1986. Other economists say that figure is too conservative.

"I feel like you've got darn near a third of our producers (nationwide) carrying a debt load that's more than what they should have," one Texas agricultural economist said.

That economist estimates 10 percent have no future in farming, another 10 percent are on the edge of disaster, and yet another 10 percent will wind up in trouble if 1985 turns out to be a bad year.

It was the push to produce for the export market in the early 1970s, spurred by the Nixon administration, that led many farmers to expand and take on heavy debt.

Peckham said most of the farmers in trouble are people "who took on a heavy debt load either to get into farming or to support expansion when the economy was good.

"With the combination of high interest rates, low commodity prices and drought, they could not produce a cash flow that would allow them to service the debt. And the outlook remains grim," Peckham said.

Heather Ball, Texas Department of Agriculture economist, said that in 1973 farmers reaped a 22 percent return on investment in land, equipment and what it costs of plow and plant.

That dropped to zero in 1984 and may wind up in the negative numbers, Ms. Ball said.

"If returns to equity are negative in 1984, that's going to mark the fourth straight year of negative returns. We haven't seen a four-year decline like this since Herbert Hoover was president," Ms. Ball said.

"Texas was hurt in two ways last year," said Bill Nelson, executive vice president of the Texas Wheat Producers Association in Amarillo. "Much of the state has been a drought area and had low production, but nationally there has been overproduction, which has kept prices low."

Bank analysts said the drought that began last year has continued to cause problems in large areas of Texas. Although recent rains have helped some parts of South and West Texas, they came after ranchers had sold much of their livestock.

For 1984, that meant an abundance of beef on the market and lower prices for consumers. But in 1985, livestock prices for ranchers who want to rebuild their herds will increase. That could mean higher meat prices.

Meanwhile, the prospects for export of Texas agricultural products remains poor.

"We depend very heavily on exports for most of our major commodities. Because of the trade deficit and the high value of the dollar relative to other currencies, our farmers are getting low prices," said Ken Stokes, economist at the Dallas office of the A&M Extension Service.

Texas mystique focus of PBS series

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The Texas mystique and the nearly 500 years of history behind it are being packaged in an eight-hour television documentary for national viewing.

The $750,000 project is the work of KEDT-TV, the local Public Broadcasting Service station.

A first of its kind endeavor, it is scheduled to be aired on PBS for eight weeks beginning in October.

Titled "Lone Star, A Television History of Texas," the documentary is the inspiration of Paul Pope, special projects coordinator at KEDT.

Pope said he got the idea to do a video history of the state when he took a course in Texas history at Corpus Christi University.

Pope, experienced in television production, had done a video history of Corpus Christi.

"It was so much fun doing that it seemed like the logical thing to do to go on to the history of Texas," he said.

Pope is basing the program on Lone Star, a history of Texas written by T.R. Fehrenbach.

The book, he said, was very influential in his decision to do the documentary.

"It is a well-written, interesting way to present Texas history. It got me excited about the subject," he said.

Fehrenbach, considered an authority on Texas, is the chief consultant for the eight-part series.

The film crew has been to every city of any size and to almost every county in a quest to cover Texas from Texline in the Panhandle to Port Isabel in the Rio Grande Valley, said producer Roy Hammond.

The camera crews have captured on film scenes from Palo Duro Canyon, the swamps at Caddo Lake, skylines of Dallas and Houston, the King Ranch and the forests of East Texas.

"The series starts with the Texas image — the Texas mystique in the nation and in the world," Hammond said.

"We talk about the stimulus for that image, like the urban cowboy. Then we go back and start with the land," he said. "Fehrenbach's book is based very much on land and how Texas is its land."

After an entire episode on the Texas mystique, the remaining seven programs discuss Texas as a Spanish mission area, as an independent republic, after statehood, in the cowboy era, the oil boom, modern politics and Texas today.

"We hope to tell the real story of Texas to people around the country and in other nations as well — people who may have a distorted view of Texas," Pope said.

Police release man questioned in assault cases

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police released a free-lance photographer from jail Saturday night after he was questioned for two days about a series of rapes, slayings and disappearances of young women, officials said.

Fort Worth Police Sgt. P. Attebery said no charges were filed against Remsen Newbold Wolff, 44, and that Wolff was released at about 6:30 p.m. from the city jail.

Police spokesman Doug Clarke said his department's policy is to release a suspect if no charges have been filed within 48 hours.

"He was released because the 48-hour period was up. He was released to his attorney," Clark said. "The investigation is continuing."

Wolff, a 1964 Harvard graduate, was arrested at about 6:45 p.m. Thursday in connection with a 1984 sexual assault after the victim identified him as her attacker.

After his release Saturday, Wolff left the jail alone, walked two blocks and caught a taxi, KRLD radio reported, adding that he would not say where he was going.

"We picked up that man up on the basis of the rape case," Police Chief Herbert Hopkins said earlier. "The victim identified him in the lineup... that means it's the strongest case we have against him.

Police also had said they had little to link Wolff to the other crimes.

Wolff was arrested Thursday night in the lobby of a dinner theater. He had been held in lieu of $500,000 bond on a police complaint of aggravated sexual assault in connection with the 1984 rape.

Wolff's trial on a charge of sexually assaulting a 4-year-old boy on Oct. 20, 1983, was scheduled for Monday but has been delayed. Wolff was arrested two days after that assault occurred and was released on a $20,000 bond.

Following his arrest Thursday, authorities said Wolff was being questioned in as many as seven rapes and in a series of disappearances of young women over a seven-month period.

But police said they had not narrowed their search for a suspect.

"We have suspects, but no one we've narrowed it down to," said police Lt. Ray Armand, chief of a police task force investigating the crimes.

According to an affidavit, police were searching Wolff's apartment for photos of rape victims and "one automatic, Polaroid-type camera."

In the rape cases, police said the victims were photographed by their attacker.

The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday that an unnamed source close to the investigation said a search of Wolff's apartment after his arrest Thursday turned up no evidence connecting him to the slayings.

Bomb scare forces airliner back to airport

HOUSTON (AP) — A Honduran 737 jetliner was forced to land minutes after takeoff Saturday after an anonymous caller said a bomb had been hidden on board, officials said.

The Tan Sahsa flight, carrying 89 passengers and a crew of six, left Houston Intercontinental Airport en route to Tegucigalpa, Honduras, about 1:30 p.m., said Tina Ceppi, spokeswoman for the Houston Department of Aviation.

Shortly after the plane was in the air, Ms. Ceppi said, someone called the airline's ticket counter and said that a bomb had been planted inside the carrier. The jetliner, which also was scheduled for stops in Managua, Nicaragua, and San Jose, Costa Rica, returned to the airport five minutes later, Ms. Ceppi said.

The plane was parked in an area away from the airport terminals and the passengers and crew were evacuated, she said.

The craft and the passengers' baggage were searched by specially trained dogs, but no explosives were found, she said.

The flight was cancelled because planes cannot land at night at an airport in one of the Central American countries, Ms. Ceppi said. She was uncertain whether the flight would be rescheduled for Sunday.

Court reporter found stabbed with scissors

ALICE (AP) — Lawmen on Saturday were investigating the stabbing death of a 79th Judicial District Court reporter who was found in his office with a pair of scissors in his chest.

Alice lawyer Allen Ramirez said he found the body of Ben Sala, 55, a court reporter for 37 years, at about 3:45 p.m. Friday in Sala's Jim Wells County courthouse office.

John Mullen, a lawyer and longtime friend of Sala who arrived at the office shortly after Ramirez, said Sala "had a big pair of office scissors in his chest."

Mullen added that nothing else in the office seemed disturbed and that Sala kept no money or valuables in his office.

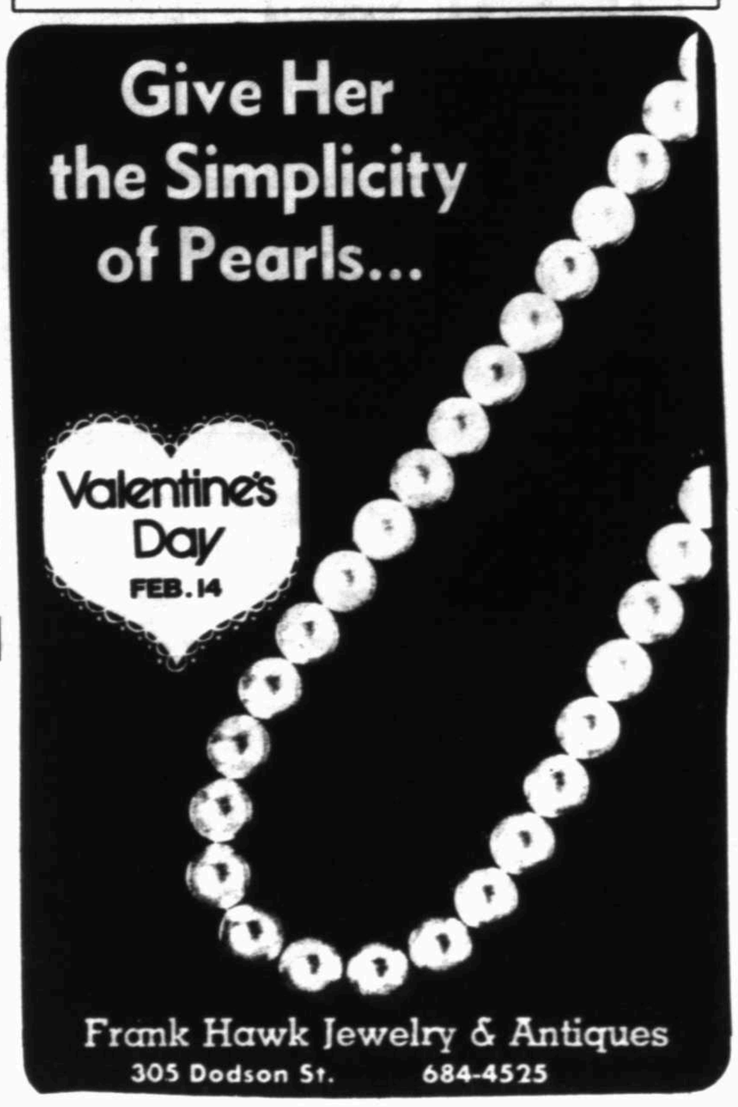

Texas Rangers, the Jim Wells County Sheriff's Department and the Alice Police Department would only confirm that Sala was found dead and would give no other details.

Sala had been the official reporter for the 79th Judicial District court, which includes Brooks and Jim Wells counties, since 1957.

Defense spending stalls GOP budget

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — An effort by Senate Republicans to assemble their own deficit reduction package and get a jump on the White House is snarled in battles over defense spending restraints and a freeze on Social Security benefits, a week before President Reagan is to submit his budget to Congress.

As the Feb. 4 deadline approaches for Reagan's 1986 budget — expected to contain a deficit of about $180 billion after $50 billion in spending cuts — the Senate GOP initiative seems no further along than when it began three weeks ago.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., has asked committee chairmen to come up with individual spending cut plans by next Friday, a deadline that has already slipped by more than a week.

Republican leaders concede there is no longer any way they can reach their initial goal of having their package completed, even in rough form, before the president's budget arrives. Dole now says he hopes to have a plan to reduce the deficit by about $50 billion by the end of next month.

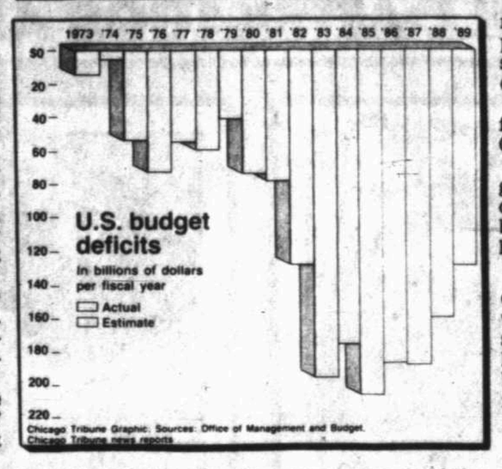

Nearly all the activity on Capitol Hill on the budget has been among Senate Republicans. Democrats, who control the House of Representatives, are allowing Republicans to take the initiative while awaiting the president's budget.

The Senate GOP initiative began after the administration said it could not reach its goal of halving the deficit to $100 billion by 1988, a target Senate Republicans then adopted as their own.

However, little agreement has emerged over ways to achieve this target, despite a high level of activity on the part of the Senate GOP group. And the initial centerpiece of the Senate plan — an across-the-board freeze on all government spending — now seems unlikely.

The biggest stumbling block is a dispute over whether military spending should be subject to the same kind of budget restraints as other programs.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger so far has resisted strongly any suggestions to hold the growth in defense spending.

Dole said many Senate Republicans felt that Weinberger's decision to "sit out" budget trimming negotiations would make it almost impossible to win support for freezing domestic programs like Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security.

Senate Republican leaders hope to meet with Weinberger this week to try to negotiate a compromise — but the defense secretary has shown no signs of relenting, and aides claim he even plans to "take his message" against defense spending cuts to the country in a speech on Monday on cable television.

Weinberger has agreed to trim $8.7 billion from a proposed $286 billion defense budget, but GOP lawmakers claim this is not nearly enough.

Key Senate Republicans and White House Budget Director David Stockman have said that some compromise must develop on defense spending between the White House and the Senate, but it has yet to surface.

Complicating the matter for Dole is the refusal of Chairman Barry Goldwater of the Armed Services Committee to back a freeze on military spending. Goldwater, R-Ariz., said last week that he would not not participate in Dole's budget-restraint plan until he sees what defense figures the president will propose.

Republicans are also divided on whether a spending freeze should include cost-of-living benefits for Social Security recipients. Senate leaders support such a freeze — one that could save $6 billion next year — but the proposal has received a chilly reception by the minority-party Republicans in the House.

Some Senate GOP members also have expressed misgivings about any change in the Social Security formula. The president himself has said he will not even consider freezing Social Security benefits in the absence of a "strong mandate" from Congress.

Goetz may avoid jail term, lawyer says

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernhard Goetz, indicted for firearms offenses by a grand jury that declined to charge him with assault or attempted murder in the shootings of four youths on a subway, may avoid a jail term even if convicted, a prosecutor said Saturday.

Meanwhile, the city's two mass-circulation tabloid newspapers split in their opinions of Friday's grand jury action, with the Daily News calling it "outrageous" and the Post saying it was "a victory for common sense and self-defense."

Normally, New York law would have Goetz, 37, serve a minimum of one year in jail if convicted of the most serious of three weapons charges against him, third-degree criminal possession of a handgun, a felony. The charge carries a maximum penalty of seven years in prison.

However, the law allows judges to consider mitigating circumstances, especially when the defendant is a first-time offender.

"Under the law, if a person is found guilty, then the judge could possibly not send him to jail because of mitigating circumstances," said Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola.

"Whether a judge would call what Goetz (experienced) mitigating circumstances, I can't say," Merola said. Prosecutors with jurisdiction over Goetz's case in Manhattan could not immediately be reached Saturday.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau could not say whether Goetz should go to jail.

"That's a matter for the courts to decide," Morgenthau said Friday, after the 23-member jury returned indictments on the third-degree possession charge, and two counts of fourth-degree possession.

The fourth-degree counts were for two guns — a .38-caliber revolver and a 9mm semiautomatic pistol — allegedly found in a search of Goetz's apartment.

The third-degree charge was lodged against Goetz for allegedly carring a loaded pistol Dec. 22, the day the youths were shot after reportedly confronting Goetz on a subway train and asking for $5.

Goetz, who had no previous offenses, had sought a gun permit after being injured by a mugger in 1981, but was turned down.

Morgenthau said the jurors considered — but rejected — four counts of second-degree attempted murder, four counts of first-degree assault and four counts of first-degree reckless endangerment.

Newsday reported Saturday that more often than not, sentences are reduced under New York's gun laws, which were said to be among the toughest in the nation when they took effect in 1980.

Citing figures from the State Division of Criminal Justice Services, the newspaper said only 23 percent of those convicted of weapons-possessions charges were sentenced to as much as a year in prison, and that nearly half served no time at all.

In Saturday's editions, the Daily News, in an editorial headlined "It's Not Dodge City," said it was "emotionally understandable" that a crime-weary public would identify with Goetz. But it added:

"Boiling beneath the self-defense argument, however, is the clear message that...the shootings were justified even if the four men were doing no more than harassing or intimidating him — that a citizen is justified in shooting his way out of a casual shakedown."

The Post disagreed, saying in an editorial that "The same result that a trial would have reached has been reached more quickly and with less expense."

Bombing retributions planned, Reagan says

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday the United States still plans retribution for terrorist bombings in Beirut but will say no more because that would be "like the policeman warning the killers that he is on his way.

"Right now, one of the things that has kept us from retaliation is the difficulty in getting definite information as to who they (the terrorists) are and where they are," the president said in an interview with seven radio correspondents.

Reagan said the United States also wants to make sure it does not "risk doing the same they are doing, killing innocent people in an effort to get at them."

He said the United States has stepped up exchanges of intelligence information with friendly countries in an effort to locate the terrorists responsible for bombings of the Marine barracks and the U.S. Embassy in the Lebanese capital.

"I can't go much beyond that in talking about specifically what we are doing because then that is like the policeman warning the killers that he is on his way," the president said.

"I can only tell you it is very much a problem for us that is being dealt with," he said. "We are not just sitting back and saying it's too bad."

Four years ago today, welcoming 52 American hostages home from Iran, Reagan vowed "swift and effective retribution" if terrorists struck at the United States again. Similar warnings were issued after the Beirut bombings.

There has been no outward sign of U.S. retribution, however.

When a reporter asked Reagan if he was saying that the case is not closed in Beirut, that there is still a very active search for those responsible and that there would still be retribution, the president replied: "Yes. The answer to all of that is yes."

On another subject, the president suggested that criticism of his policies by black leaders may be coming from organizations created to correct a wrong that no longer exists.

"There is a tendency to keep the people stirred up as if the cause still exists," he said. "And I think there is some of this going on."

He did not name the groups or leaders.

Responding to other questions, Reagan:

— Said he intended to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II in Europe as "the day democracy and freedom" began to emerge — and not concentrate on the war itself. Other U.S. officials said that while Reagan is in West Germany in May he would avoid commemorations with the Soviet Union, which joined with the United States to defeat the Nazis. While not giving details, Reagan revealed that following the Bonn economic summit he will stay on in West Germany for a state visit.

— Said he was not "euphoric" about prospects for a U.S.-Soviet agreement to reduce nuclear weapons and could not guarantee an accord would be reached during his second term. But, Reagan said, "we're certainly going to try."

— Said he would offer Jeane Kirkpatrick, who is stepping down as the chief U.S. representative at the United Nations, a new post, but declined to say what it might be.

— Declined to pledge continued U.S. observance of the limits placed on U.S. nuclear weapons under treaties with the Soviet Union when new Trident nuclear submarines are ready to be put to sea. "We are approaching a point where if we abide by the limits, we would then have to find other weapons to eliminate," he said.

— Said that "very possibly" the leftist government of Nicaragua has received "some help in training and in certain types of munitions" from Iran.

Government paid lawyers $50 million, journal says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Private lawyers, some charging as much as $285 an hour, have collected at least $50 million from the federal government in the past two years, the National Law Journal says.

The report in the journal's Monday editions comes at a time when Edwin Meese III, President Reagan's nominee for attorney general, is asking taxpayers to foot the bill for more than $700,000 in personal legal expenses.

The request for reimbursement has touched off a controversy because some Justice Department lawyers — whose boss Meese soon may be — are questioning whether the fee rate is exorbitant.

The money would pay lawyers who represented Meese in a recent investigation of his finances by a special court-appointed counsel.

Meese, Reagan's White House counsel at the time of the probe, was charged up to $250 an hour by his principal lawyers, Leonard Garment and E. Robert Wallach. The Justice Department is challenging those fees, and a special three-judge federal court has ordered Meese to furnish more documentation to substantiate the request.

Ironically, the Reagan administration is proposing a law that would place a $75-an-hour limit on fees paid to attorneys who successfully sue the government and are entitled to taxpayer reimbursement.

The report by the National Law Journal said that hiring of private lawyers to represent federal agencies is commonplace even though the government has 17,000 lawyers on its payroll. The average fee paid to non-government lawyers by nearly all federal agencies exceeded $100 per hour, the report said.

The newspaper cited one case in which a New York law firm was paid $285 an hour to represent the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. In another example, a different New York firm was paid $205 an hour by the comptroller of the currency to challenge rent charged.

Man paroled for slaying arrested for alleged theft

NEW YORK (AP) — A man paroled after serving nine years for the slaying of a 78-year-old woman during a holdup at her home has been arrested in the latest of a recent rash of similar thefts, police said.

Steven McGauley, 27, was arrested Friday afternoon after allegedly robbing a 70-year-old woman in her apartment in the New York City borough of the Bronx, said police Sgt. Raymond O'Donnell. The suspect allegedly followed the woman home and forced his way inside as she tried to close the door, O'Donnell said.

Fifteen to 20 similar "push-in" holdups have occurred at the apartments of elderly women since Dec. 1, O'Donnell said. McGauley, who was paroled in 1983, was charged with one count of robbery, and O'Donnell said line-ups were planned with other elderly victims Saturday.

Woman, sons die in fire

DECATUR, Ga. (AP) — A woman and two of her children died Saturday in a house fire that started when combustible material was stored too close to a space heater left on to keep a puppy warm, investigators said.

"Apparently they were all asleep when it started," said Lt. J.W. Pless, commander of the DeKalb Arson Squad. The three victims were in upstairs bedrooms and apparently became confused, heading away from a stairway and eventually becoming trapped by the smoke and flames.

The victims were identified as Nellie Elizabeth Thomas, 28, and her sons, Steven Edward Jackson, 13, and William Matthew Jackson, 9.

The dead woman's husband, Bernard Thomas, 47, plunged through a window, then kicked in the front door to rescue two other children, Pless said.

Couple sues nursing home

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill. (AP) — A couple has filed a $1 million lawsuit over a nursing home's failure to contact them until 10 days after their retarded son had died and been cremated.

Elmer and Betty Seaton of Mount Carmel contend the American Beauty Nursing Home showed "malicious and wanton" disregard for their rights.

"I just want to see that this doesn't happen again," Seaton said Thursday. "It isn't right for any family to have to go through what we did."

Their 22-year-old son, Melvin, institutionalized since age 5, apparently choked to death at the West Frankfort home on Feb. 9, 1983, Seaton said.

Melvin Seaton's representative from the Illinois Guardianship and Advocacy Commission, Saundra Allen, said at the time of his death that nursing home officials had made numerous attempts to contact his family before the cremation.

Raid leads to 209 arrests

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A three-day sweep intended to get petty drug dealers off the streets led to 209 arrests, including 55 people alleged to be marijuana dealers, police said Saturday.

The raids by a 65-member task force organized by the department's Central Bureau Narcotics Division began Wednesday and ended Friday night, Detective Cleon Jones said.

"I don't think we're gonna solve the problem," police Lt. Bill Costleigh said. "But we're making the point to dealers and we're letting residents know that we're here and we're doing all we can."

Police said all the dealers arrested were selling small quantities of marijuana, PCP, heroin and other drugs. One handgun was confiscated, and one person was booked for investigation of felony battery on a police officer.

Girl's cancer 'incurable'

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Doctors said they will not treat new cancer tumors found in 14-year-old Pamela Hamilton, who received court-ordered treatment in 1983 despite her family's religious objections.

After consulting with doctors at St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Dr. Frank Haraf "decided that the tumors are not curable and no further treatment is recommended," said Pat Kelly, spokeswoman for East Tennessee Children's Hospital here.

In a case that went to the Tennessee Supreme Court, judges ordered treatment for the Ewing's sarcoma tumor that had swelled the girl's left leg to the size of a football. Doctors testified that the rare bone cancer meant certain death if left untreated.

Larry Hamilton, the girl's father and a former minister with the Church of God of the Union Assembly, fought treatment because the fundamentalist Christian sect forbids members to take medication.

Orangutan has twins

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — An orangutan at the Audubon Zoo gave birth to twins Saturday, a significant event because "orangutans are very endangered and...because there have only been five other occasions of twin orangutan births (in American zoos) in the past 17 years," said Carol Lentz, a zoo spokeswoman.

The apes were born about 5 a.m., but zookeepers said an examination of the newborns would have to wait until their 14-year-old mother, Sarah, stopped cuddling them.

Refugee movement at crossroads, activists believe

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The movement to provide sanctuary in this country for Central American refugees has reached a crossroads, with activists meeting this weekend to discuss whether to turn their loosely organized humanitarian efforts into a polished political drive.

"It's very much like a kind of cake that has to get baked," said Daniel P. Sheehan, an attorney with the Christic Institute in Washington, D.C. "The question is, is it baked yet? What kind of cake is it going to be?"

The 3-year-old church-inspired movement that began here has been in the spotlight lately as a result of indictments, trials of movement members and a public symposium last week that attracted more than 1,000 people.

On March 24, 1982, the Southside United Presbyterian Church in Tucson publicly declared itself a sanctuary for Central American refugees.

Since then, an estimated 200 to 220 churches and synagogues and an estimated 50,000 to 60,000 Americans have followed suit, opening their doors to people from El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras whom many believe to be victims of civil war or oppression.

The movement has provided haven for 2,500 to 3,000 refugees using an "underground railroad" that brings Central Americans through Mexico, a small part of the estimated 500,000 Central Americans now in this country.

The activists say they are providing sanctuary on the premise that international and U.S. laws, including the 1980 Refugee Act, grant legal asylum to refugees who are fleeing political persecution and violence.

But the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Justice Department contend that Central Americans entering this country without documentation do so for economic reasons. Those apprehended face deportation.

In the past two weeks, events have snowballed:

— In Arizona, 16 people were indicted, including six members of the clergy, on the basis of evidence the government says came through church infiltration by undercover informants and agents using recording devices.

— Religious leaders and groups have attacked the Reagan administration for such tactics and endorsed "the moral rightness of sanctuary." They include the heads of the National Council of Churches, the Lutheran Church in America, United Church of Christ, U.S. Catholic Mission Association, American Baptist Church in the U.S.A. and the Rabbinical Assembly.

— The government unsuccessfully prosecuted sanctuary worker Jack Elder in Texas. He faces further charges stemming from his alleged role in the movement.

Until now the movement has been largely grass-roots, involving white, middle-class, religiously committed Americans. But activists were meeting here Saturday and Sunday to wrestle with its evolution.

Sheehan, who represents Stacey Lynn Merkt, a Texas sanctuary worker facing a federal trial Feb. 5, said that among the issues under discussion at closed sessions were:

— Whether those providing haven for refugees want to keep a low profile or become more visible "with a view toward transforming public opinion."

— Whether to embrace congressional support or take a more confrontational stand against the federal government.

— Whether to retain an amateurish structure and style or adopt a more polished approach through some "sort of national, centrist professional group" focusing on public relations and legal efforts.

U.S. economic and military aid to El Salvador and U.S. involvement elsewhere in the region have contributed to the refugee problem, movement members say. As a result, the movement "does take on the tones of becoming a politically motivated action," said Dana Cooper, who was a press spokesman for the symposium.

But Rabbi Joseph Weisenbaum of Temple Emanu-El, site for the symposium, said, "This is not a political game being played by anti-Reagan forces or by Marxists. It's a spiritual response to human needs."

He added, "Whatever happens in the courtroom, they (federal officials) cannot kill an idea."

Special Assistant U.S. Attorney Donald M. Reno Jr. in Phoenix said the acquittal of Texas sanctuary worker Jack Elder would have no impact on the Arizona prosecutions.

On Tuesday, author Elie Wiesel, speaking at a dinner kickoff for the symposium, urged Congress to investigate the fate of Central Americans deported by the United States.

Freeze devastates citrus growers

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

Jerry Chicone

Duke Crittendon

MASCOTTE, Fla. — When Lena Hughes saw the leaves on the orange tree in her front yard curl up and sag like withered fingers, she took it as an evil omen. "I knew I was finished," she says. "This freeze did me in. It's over."

Other Florida citrus growers, relying more on hard facts than auguries, also say they're calling it quits, or at least leaning that way. Others are still too staggered to contemplate much of anything beyond their wretched luck.

The billion-dollar freeze that swept across Florida last week with 75 percent of the citrus crop still on the trees wiped out perhaps half of this year's harvest. That was loss enough. A worse loss, one that would ordinarily determine a grower's future, won't be known for at least two weeks: How many trees were killed? Even so, many growers, especially those with small, family-sized operations, are already saying the risk of another setback isn't worth the expense.

Last week's three-day onslaught of record low temperatures was the fourth killer freeze in five years, and the wickedest. Last Monday, the coldest day, temperatures dropped to 18 degrees in the central Florida town of Lakeland, the hub of Polk County which once produced more citrus than all of California. It was 20 in Orlando and 22 in Tampa, also in the heart of the citrus belt. When temperatures drop as low as 27 degrees for four hours or more, damage begins in the citrus groves.

Of the state's 32 citrus producing counties, the previous three freezes limited major damage to the 11 across the northern tier of the citrus belt. This freeze, as one veteran grower put it, was "more democratic." It turned oranges rock hard in groves as far south as Palm Beach. "Why are the gods so angry?" Mrs. Hughes asks.

She is typical of many of the central Florida growers.

First of all, she is not, by nature, a quitter. She and her husband began growing oranges on 75 acres in Lake County in 1935. Her husband died 10 years later and, alone, she added new groves, saw them through the freeze of '45, the freezes of '57, '62, '77, saw then through attacks of various vermin and ailments, and attacks of other frustrating plagues to growers; the Interstate wiped out 30 acres.

THEN CAME THE latest freezes. Last winter's killer left her remaining 149 acres with too few oranges to bother to pick. Last week's freeze finished the job. Could it not at least have spared the tree in the dooryard of her home in Orlando, a purely ornamental tree? Angry gods, indeed.

There is nothing superstitous, though, about Mrs. Hughes's arithmetic. "I'm 73," she says. "If I replant, it will take 10 years — without freezes — to show a profit. I don't think I'll make it."

An added tragedy of the freeze of '85 is that if the direst predictions come true and orange groves vanish from north Florida, something precious will be lost from the Sunshine State, something that can't be replanted.

"This area is the soul of the citrus business," says Jerry Chicone, whose groves are 12 miles from Orlando. This is where it all began.

"The growers in this area live on their land, most of them for generations. My father came here in 1920. I rode with him in the groves when I was still a baby. Now my son is in the business with me. Same land, same groves. Why not move south? I can't move south. This is our home, where our roots are. There are a thousand other families just like ours.

"Besides," he says, "The citrus business in southern Florida is entirely different. Here we talk about 40-acre groves. Down there they talk about 640-acres, 10,000 acres. Down there it's agribusiness. Some of the owners don't even see their groves except on visits. There's no soul to growing fruit there, no pride, no heritage."

So what will Chicone do?

"After last year's freeze we got busy right away, pruned, set out 6,000 resets, spent $80,000 to rehabilitate our groves so that in five or six years they would produce again. Oranges aren't like row crops where if you lose one harvest you just lost one harvest. It would take 20 years for some of my trees to grow back to where they were.

"NOW, AFTER THIS last freeze, all that work and investment was wasted. We're back where we were. My father — he's 83 — took one look and said, 'Let's not move so fast this time.' He's right. No way we can take another freeze.

"Never, never have we even considered not replanting. Citrus is our life. Or was. Now it's foolish to consider replanting. The end of an era, I guess.

"I don't know what I'm going to do. I picked up a real estate license once. I never used it but I still have it. Maybe I'll use it. I know I'm not moving south."

The whole of Florida's citrus belt contains 750,000 acres. The 11 northern counties, all above an east-west line across the state marked almost precisely by Route 50, contain about 250,000 acres.

Driving among the groves south of Route 50 in the days after last week's freeze, the damage was evident. Green, crisp leaves had turned brown and shriveled. Crews hurried to get the fruit off the anemic looking trees. Trucks, burdened to the limit — and beyond, for weight restrictions were waived in the emergency — labored down country roads to processing plants where extra help, if it could be found, worked three shifts to squeeze out the juice. Freeze-damaged oranges still give good juice, just less of it, and the sooner you squeeze them the better.

North of Route 50, sort of a concrete River Styx, the sight of most groves is enough to make grown men cry, and had.

Some groves resemble an impressionistic Judgment Day. Barren trees rise grotesquely from dry brown dirt, row upon row, bark peeling from upthrust branches like skin falling from chalk-white bones of skeletons. Those groves, left last year for dead, mocked those struggling for life after last week's freeze.

The latter trees had been pruned severely, thick branches amputated down to the trunk. The new growth that had pushed out, shoots as thin as clothespins, appeared wilted and lifeless; whether the trees themselves were dead remained to be seen.

EACH OCTOBER, when the picking season begins, citrus agents survey the state and estimate the year's crop. Before the first freeze in the succession of four, the estimate was 215 million boxes. (A box is a standard unit of 90 pounds.) The estimate for this year's crop had dwindled, year by year, to 119 million boxes, nearly all of the decline centered in the northern tier of the citrus belt. What the actual yield after this year's freeze will be is just a guess. Early guesses range from 60 to 100 million boxes.

But last October the agents didn't even bother to estimate a yield for the devastated 11 northern counties. They figured there would be none. Like Chicone, the growers who stuck it out were pruning and replanting, not growing and picking.

In one county, Lake, which had been second only to Polk in citrus acreage, growers had already abandoned 30,000 acres of groves, about 25 percent of the county total — and 40 new subdivisions immediately leaped into construction.

The pattern was similar in the other 10 counties. No wonder last week's freeze sounded to many like a death knell. To some growers, it only confirmed a decision they couldn't bear to make last year: quit.

Still, Earl (Duke) Crittenden is unworried. He can afford to be.

Crittenden, who is 54, was born and reared in neighboring Orange County. He is friendly, generous, outgoing, and in those respects, but none other, a typical north Florida citrus grower.

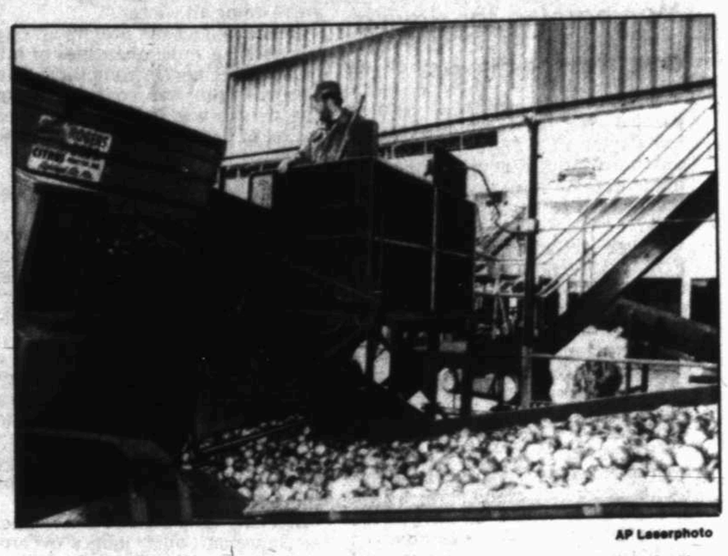

His office, here in Mascotte, Lake County, in the heart of the northern groves, runs a $40 million citrus operation strung out over six counties.

"THE CITRUS business is going through enormous change," he says. "If you don't change with it, you aren't going to survive. I've changed with the times and had my share of success."

The succession of freezes has cost him about 1,000 acres of trees, leaving him about 3,000.

The biggest change, he says, has been the abrupt switch from a fresh fruit industry to a frozen concentrate juice industry. Concentrate now gobbles up 90 percent of Florida's orange production. Further, Florida processors, including Crittenden, import as many gallons of juice from Brazil as they produce at home.

"Labels no longer say 'Florida orange juice,'" Crittenden observes, "but 'orange juice from Florida,' and I see no evidence that consumers care.

Panel urges ban on cigarette ads extend to print

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fourteen years after cigarette advertisements disappeared from television broadcasts, a federal advisory commission has recommended that the government extend the ban to newspapers, magazines and billboards.

The National Advisory Council on Drug Abuse adopted a recommendation on Wednesday that the government "totally eliimnate" cigarette advertising in the United States, arguing that smoking each year kills seven times more Americans than died in the Vietnam War.

The recommendation goes to Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret M. Heckler. Mrs. Heckler's office said the letter containing the recommendation had not arrived and there would be no immediate comment.

"We wish to communicate to you, and through you to the administration and the Congress, our strong belief that legislation should be implemented to totally eliminate the advertising and promotion of cigarettes in the United States," said the council's letter.

The chairman of the council's subcommittee on prevention, Lloyd Johnston, said cigarettes are the most widely advertised product in America, with the industry spending some $1.5 billion a year on advertising. The Federal Trade Commission has estimated that half of all billboards in America advertise cigarettes.

But with smoking estimated to kill about 350,000 Americans each year, he argued, the advertisements could be compared to ads advocating suicide.

"The scale of human loss and suffering is absolutely enormous," he said.

A total advertising ban would follow the 1970 decision to ban cigarette advertising on TV. That law took effect in January 1971.

The council's recommendation also would ban such promotional activities as sponsoring athletic contests.

The council does not consider such an advertising and promotion ban as an imposition on people's freedom of choice, Johnston said.

The council's letter argues that most people begin smoking as teenagers. With the exception of smoking, he said, society generally does not allow people to make life or death choices because of a lack of maturity.

Most adult smokers want to quit but are addicted, the letter says, and thus already have lost the freedom of choice.

Pope begins South American visit in Venezuela

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Pope John Paul II arrived here Saturday, beginning his 12-day South American tour by becoming the first pontiff to visit Venezuela.

Soldiers with automatic weapons stood guard throughout the capital and along the 20-mile, flag-lined route the pope's motorcade was to travel from Simon Bolivar Airport to Caracas. The city was decorated with flags and red-and-yellow flowers.

About 12,000 police and soldiers were to provide security during the 72-hour tour, which will take him to Caracas, the oil center of Maracaibo, the Andean city of Merida and the southeastern steel town of Ciudad Guayana.

The Pope's 25th trip abroad — and his sixth to Latin America — also will take him to Ecuador, Peru and Trinidad and Tobago.

John Paul arrived here at 1:56 p.m. CST after a 5,192-mile flight from Rome. He is scheduled to return to Rome on Feb. 6.

On Friday night, a "dry law" went into effect, barring all sales of alcholic beverages in the capital and in the three states the pope will visit. The Interior Ministry suspended permits to carry firearms throughout the country, except for those issued to private security guards.

AP Laserphoto Map

Pope John Paul II is visiting South America. The numbers indicate the order he will visit each location.

Newspapers in Caracas carried color photographs Saturday of the pope with large headlines that read: "Welcome."

President Jaime Lusinchi, who along with members of his Cabinet was to receive the pontiff when arrived, announced Friday he would pardon 26 criminals. The presidential palace said in a statement that the pardon was "in homage to His Holiness."

Despite the plans for a warm welcome, church officials estimate that only about 10 percent of Venezuela's 16 million people are regular churchgoers. Disputes between church and state dating back to the 19th century have denied the church the influence it has in other Latin American countries. There are only 2,063 priests in Venezuela, or one for every 7,755 people. Half of those priests are members of foreign missionary orders.

Television news programs and newspapers outlined rules of behavior for the Mass the pope will celebrate this morning in the Caracas neighborhood of Montalban, which sits below a hillside of slum dwellings. The site was turned over Friday to the military, which has responsibility for maintaining order among the estimated 1 million people — one-fourth of the population of Caracas — who were expected to attend.

Men set up plastic chairs and armed soldiers helped women and children arrange the flowers and ferns lining the huge red-carpeted altar steps.

In order to restrict movement among the crowd, the 130-acre field was cordoned off into sections, where groups of 4,000 people will be seated. Advertisements told the faithful to eat heartily and dress comfortably before going to the Mass, and to drink plenty of liquids to prevent dehydration.

"I hope I can get into the Mass," said Lesvia Cardinas, whose two children tugged at her hands. "But I have mixed feelings about this visit. The nation can't afford this."

John Paul's visit to Venezuela comes while the nation is suffering an economic crisis, brought on largely by the drop in world prices for oil, the main export.

Officials say unemployment is 14 percent, although private estimates put it at 20 percent. Venezuela has a foreign debt of about $35 billion. The government has said it will pay the costs of the pope's trip, estimated at about $5.6 million.

The government and Roman Catholic Church officials have said the pontiff will bring a "message of hope" to Venezuela's 16 million people.

Despite the economic problems, Venezuela's standard of living is still the highest in Latin America; and the country recently celebrated 27 years of uninterrupted democratic government.

Woman recalls time spent in Auschwitz

By CHARLES J. GANS
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — Vera Kriegel recalls vividly how she and her twin sister, Olga, hid beneath their mother's skirts as bullets flew overhead during the infamous Jan. 27, 1945, "Death March" to the Auschwitz concentration camp.

"We knew we were going to die and prayed, 'Oh, God, watch over us,' " said Mrs. Kriegel, who was 5 years old in 1943 when her family was taken from its village in Czechoslovakia to Auschwitz.

"The Nazis were shooting at the backs of people and I told my mother, 'Run faster, I don't want to die.' Then all of a sudden the Germans fled — and from death we passed into life again."

Mrs. Kriegel, now 46, has come back here from her home in Dimona, Israel, to mark the 40th anniversary of the liberation of Nazi-held Auschwitz by Soviet soldiers.

Today, she and other surviving Jewish twins subjected to Nazi medical experiments conducted by Dr. Josef Mengele, the "Angel of Death" of Auschwitz, will return to the concentration camp in southern Poland for the first time since they were freed.

They will retrace the two-mile "Death March" in which thousands of emaciated prisoners marched through the snow from the Birkenau extermination camp to Auschwitz just before the Soviet troops.

The twins also plan a Feb. 3-6 meeting in Jersusalem that will include a mock trial of Mengele, long sought on charges that he killed thousands of Jews in medical experiments at Auschwitz.

He is believed living in Paraguay. The survivors hope the publicity will lead to his capture.

Mrs. Kriegel said her mother and sister chose to stay in Haifa, Israel, rather than relive the horrors of Auschwitz, where 4 million people died.

"I have to be strong to go through with it and return," she said. "I have a mission because I survived to go back to this hell and build a bridge to a better future by showing the world what Auschwitz was."

Out of 750 pairs of twins selected by Mengele for his genetic experiments aimed at creating a master race, only about 180 children survived.

Mrs. Kriegel said she still suffers from anemia, spinal problems, blood and urinary tract infections, and fits of depression. Because of poor health, she has not been able to hold a steady job. However, she runs a nursery for plants in Dimona, a southern Israeli town where she lives with her husband and two children.

"Doctors don't even have any effective treatment for us, because we still don't know what Mengele pumped into us with his injections," she said. "We were never able to talk about it at the camp because they would beat us."

In 1983 and 1984, Jewish twins who survived the experiments formed an organization called CANDLES — Children of Auschwitz Nazis' Deadly Lab Experiment Survivors. It has more than 100 members.

"A lot of us could not cope with everyday life," said Mrs. Kriegel, a founding member. "We had to form a group to take care of ourselves because no one seemed to care about us."

"I have to be strong to go through with it and return. I have a mission because I survived to go back to this hell and build a bridge to a better future by showing the world what Auschwitz was."

— Vera Kriegel

As part of the trip back to Auschwitz, Mrs. Kriegel will return with nearly a dozen other surviving twins to the ramp of the Birkenau railway station where she met Mengele for the first time in 1943.

"He selected which new arrivals would be sent to the gas chamber, and with a flick of his finger sent my father to the left to die," she said, her voice rising with emotion.

With her mother and sister, Mrs. Kriegel was transferred to Mengele's laboratories at Birkenau because he was interested in their genetic features.

"Mengele was like a monster," she said. "We were given all kinds of injections and every inch of our bodies was marked for his experiments. Later large amounts of blood were taken from us for wounded German soldiers."

"I remember terrible things like a pit of fire into which children were thrown alive. I thought maybe I was in hell and all the Nazis were devils."

Mrs. Kriegel said that when she arrived in Poland on Wednesday for the anniversary ceremonies, she saw snow for the first time in nearly 20 years and instantly recalled the moment during the "Death March" when the Nazi guards fled.

"There was all this shooting and then the silence was so frightening. We were left by ourselves in the middle of nowhere and only saw kilometers and kilometers of white snow."

When she arrived at the main camp at Auschwitz, she found the prisoners had taken over from the fleeing guards.

"We were greeted at the gate by an angel of a man, who took us aside and gave us black coffee," she said. "He had lost all his family at Auschwitz and later married my mother. For me the march was death and life combined."

Maoist sermons 'useless,' Peking official says

PEKING (AP) — Maoist sermons about class struggle do not strengthen anyone's faith in Marxism and should be discarded, Peking's propaganda chief was quoted Saturday as telling a group of local Communist Party officials.

Wang Daming told 5,000 municipal political officers to drop their bossy image and try friendly chats instead.

"Cadres should convince people by reasoning, and win them over by sympathy, not by coercion," the official English-language China Daily quoted Wang as saying.

Party workers have used too many useless Marxist phrases and political slogans in the 35 years since communists took power in China, Wang said.

Mao Tse-tung's directives to "take class struggle as the key link" and "put politics above everything else" proved harmful during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution and could not strengthen faith in Marxism, he said.

Despite China's rapid economic liberalization since Mao's death in 1976, most workers still attend Saturday afternoon political study sessions. Local party officials retain considerable power, and many tend to lecture rather than listen.

As an alternative, Wang cited the example of Quan Xueqian, the 48-year-old propaganda chief at a Peking motor vehicle plant. Fellow workers visit her home regularly to tell her what is on their minds, and seek help solving problems, he said.

Party organizers should be liked, and make it known that their work is in the interests of the people, he said. They should read novels and watch more films and drama to tune in to common concerns, he said.

He said cadres should encourage sports, culture, quizzes and other popular activities, and allow people to hold their own opinions.

Wang told officials to allay public fears that impending price reforms will lead to spiraling inflation, and to counter the idea that allowing some people to get rich before others is bad.

Wang's statements appeared to be linked to Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping's three-year campaign against leftists who joined the Communist Party during the Cultural Revolution.

Many zealous recruits were groomed during the Cultural Revolution on Mao's little red book of revolutionary quotations such as "political power grows out of the barrel of a gun" and "under no circumstances should one forget class struggle."

India's Republic Day marked by parades

New York Times News Service

NEW DELHI, India — As usual, elephants in billowing satin blankets carried children who had won awards for heroism. Helicopters flew by, showering the delighted crowd with marigold and rose petals. Tribal dancers marched to the music of bells and drums.

Hundreds of thousands of people lined the streets here on Saturday as military bands in scarlet uniforms paraded by. Tanks were followed by rocket launchers and missiles. A caravan of camels wearing brass anklets carried men in white tunics and red turbans holding semiautomatic rifles.

But at the annual Republic Day parade in the Indian capital, there were also signs that the national unity being celebrated was being tested as never before. Security was tighter than it has ever been, according to people who have been coming to the parade for years.

In the past, for example, the Indian president has arrived in an open horse-drawn carriage to take his place at the reviewing stand. This year, President Zail Singh drove up in a six-door bulletproof Mercedes-Benz limousine.

In another departure from tradition, the tanks did not turn the barrels of their guns toward the reviewing stand, where Singh sat with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and other dignitaries. Instead, the tanks raised and then dipped their guns straight ahead as they rumbled past.

In addition, every person in the huge crowd was frisked or made to walk through a metal detector before the parade.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi waves on his way to the Republic Day Parade.

The security was a sign of the uneasiness that has lingered after the assassination on Oct. 31 of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi by gunmen identified as Sikh members of her bodyguard.

Many veterans of the Republic Day parade said they observed far fewer Sikhs than usual at Saturday's event. By all accounts, hostility between Sikhs and Hindus remains corrosive, months after the rioting ended.

Singh, a Sikh, is a former chief minister of Punjab, where a Sikh-led separatist movement has been suppressed by the Indian army.

Because he is an ally of Gandhi, Singh has been under particular attack from Sikh leaders who feel he has betrayed their cause. This apparently accounted for the especially tight security around him.

In an address to the nation on the eve of Republic Day, Singh appealed for an end to the "scourge" of sectarian violence. "This country belongs to all of us, irrespective of religion, language, color, or creed," he said, "and we are all its proud citizens."

Throughout the country, there were parades and festivities to commemorate the day 35 years ago on which India adopted a constitution establishing itself as a republic. Traditionally Republic Day is India's biggest day of national celebration.

In Bhopal, where a chemical gas leak led to more than 2,000 deaths in December, floats and marching bands moved through the streets. In other cities and states, governors and ministers spoke of the need for national unity.

But many people at the parade in New Delhi said that the mood was somewhat subdued. Brij Mohan, a 26-year-old factory worker who rode for four hours on a bus to the capital on Friday, said the parade was less boisterous than the last one he attended in 1980.

Many also came to catch a first glimpse of the 40-year-old prime minister, who scored a huge election victory last month. "I like him because he's young and a leader of young people," said Ratnakar Shet, a 30-year-old teacher from Goa. "I think he will do anything for us."

Gandhi, who was thrust into his post after the death of his mother, sat quietly at the reviewing stand on Saturday.

The parade had a dizzying array of contrasts. Early on, a military helicopter flew by decorated as an elephant, with stubby legs dangling and a big trunk stretched out in front.

There were several floats with national heroes, including India's first astronaut and the first Indian woman to climb Mount Everest. Elephants and camels mixed with rockets and radar equipment.

One float contained a tableau featuring a model of a Hindu temple and a huge hydroelectric plant. Another was shaped like a barge with a prow sculpted in the form of a bird.

The parade concluded with the roar of several jet fighters flying overhead in formation. But even the flyover had an erratic quality. Saturday evening, the Press Trust of India, the country's leading news agency, reported that a pilot flying a Jaguar bomber had collided with a bird, rupturing a fuel pipeline on the plane.

Lebanese minister tenders resignation

New York Times News Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A widely respected political figure resigned from the government Saturday in a move that could threaten the collapse of Prime Minister Rashid Karami's Cabinet.

Sunni Moslem leaders in West Beirut were trying Saturday night to persuade the official, Education Minister Selim al-Hoss, to take back his resignation.

But Hoss, a former prime minister, has spoken privately in recent weeks of his increasing frustration and his desire to leave the Karami Cabinet. He has held back, Lebanese sources said, only at the insistence of Lebanon's chief Sunni religious leader, or grand mufti, Sheik Hassan Khaled.

The resignation comes as the government faces two crises: the imminent collapse of the once-resilient Lebanese economy and the beginning of the Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon.

Hoss was described by political sources as "fed up" and in "total dismay" over the inability of Karami's nine-month-old government to accomplish anything significant. He had become convinced, these sources said, that President Amin Gemeyal, a Maronite Catholic, was not making an effort to revision the system by which political power is apportioned among religious sects.

Changes were vaguely agreed to in principle at meetings of the factional leaders in Switzerland last winter. In September, a weeklong session of the Cabinet, described then as the "last chance for Lebanon," was held in Gemeyal's hometown of Bikfeiya. A huge committee was named to draw up changes, but it has never met.

In addition, associates say, Hoss has become increasingly upset over the continuing anarchy in West Beirut and over the collapse of the economy.

The resignation of Hoss, an economist with a reputation for integrity who served as prime minister from 1976 to 1978, was not officially announced, and he made no public statement. News of the resignation was broadcast on various private radio stations and confirmed in telephone calls to his family and political associates.

Hoss narrowly escaped death in September when a huge car bomb exploded as he arrived to escort Mufti Khaled to a religious ceremony.

The traveling exhibition, entitled "Treasures of an Ancient Mayan Civilization," includes various figures, stucco masks, whistles, incense burners, urns and vases, plates, anthropomorphic sculptures and other objects.

WORLD in brief

Teacher, 28 students injured in gas explosion

CARTAXO, Portugal (AP) — Education Minister Jose Seabra on Saturday ordered an "urgent and rigorous" inquiry into the causes of a gas explosion at a high school that injured 28 teen-agers and a teacher.

Seabra said the school in this central Portugese town would be closed until absolute safety could be ensured following the blast Friday which hurled children through windows and damaged an 80-square-yard area of classrooms.

Fire officials said initial inquiries indicated a leak in the gas supply that caused a build-up of gas in a classroom above the school science lab.

Five students and a teacher, all suffering from burns in their respiratory systems, were in intensive care Saturday at the Sao Jose hospital in Lisbon, 43 miles southwest of here, the hospital said.

Flood kills 43 Filipinos

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A flood caused by a giant cloudburst swept through eight villages in the central Philippines and killed 43 people, the Office of Civil Defense said Saturday.

The government's Philippine News Agency said 60 families were left homeless after a storm Jan. 20 caused the Tanjay river to overflow its banks.

Party, media host contest

PEKING (AP) — A month-long beauty and talent contest for young men and women is under way in the southern city of Canton, sponsored by local news media and the Communist youth league.

The event represents a turnaround in policy from late 1983, when young people were urged not to wear Western fashions or grow their hair long.

Shen Yi, a party propaganda official, was quoted Saturday by the official English-language China Daily newspaper as saying the contest will promote the "new way of life" popular among young people.

Paper: Sikhs to assassinate

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A pro-government newspaper said Saturday that Pakistan's military intelligence has sent Sikh terrorists to assassinate Indian leaders, including Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

The Hindustan Times, quoting reports by Intelligence Bureau, India's domestic security network, said the terrorists entered India a week ago armed with "highly sophisticated secret weapons," including anti-aircraft portable missiles.

The paper said intelligence officials could not locate their whereabouts and did not know when they would strike.

The Pakistan embassy's spokesman, M.H. Askari, described the report as "a disinformation effort designed to sabotage efforts for normalization of relations" between the neighboring countries.

Libyan diplomat refused

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — The new chief of the Libyan diplomatic mission has left after Bangladesh refused to accept his assignment, press reports said Saturday.

AIDS scare surfacing in West Texas

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

It's no longer a disease of the homosexual bath houses and dark urban corners of cities like San Francisco and Houston.

In growing numbers, Acquired Immuno-Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) has surfaced in respectable communities across the country, claiming victims of all races, ages, social and economic statuses although it remains largely a disease of male homosexuals.

The announcement last week by the Ector County Health Department of the first known case of an AIDS diagnosis and suspected cases by the Midland health officials brought home the reality of AIDS — a disease that has killed more than 6,000 men, women and children since the Center for Disease Control first gave it national attention at the turn of the decade.

"Out here in West Texas, you think that you're immune," said an oil company accountant, a homosexual who asked not to be named. "You think 'it can't happen here.' "

"Everyone is saying that there is going to be a widespread outbreak," said another man, a florist.

In the gay habitats of Odessa, fear of the disease may be hurting business.

"It's been slow at one other bar as well as here," said the owner of a nightclub that caters to gay clientele. "I don't know whether it's the AIDS scare or not."

But gays are not alone in their malaise.

"I've heard discussions about the disease among members of the church," said Dr. Daniel Vestal of the First Baptist Church. "There is a lot of fear."

"I do think the congregation members are frightened of it," echoes the Rev. Joseph Schley Jr. of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church. "And I think that everyone who works around it is also scared."

Indeed, fear seems to be the gut reaction to the intrusion of the disease into a community seemingly far away from the problems of the megalopolitan areas. But this most basic of human reactions is not limited to Midland or Odessa.

Steps are being taken internationally to curb the disease with legislation designed to lock up AIDS victims.

The Ministry of Health in West Germany announced in mid-November that it would propose legislation in Bonn that would allow the state to imprison up to three years anyone diagnosed with AIDS who continued having sexual contact, according to a Jan. 8 article in The Advocate, a gay news magazine.

Further, the article said, the agency is considering some way to make testing for antibodies (in effect, exposure) to the AIDS virus mandatory for members of risk groups, such as gay men and intravenous drug users.

Although differences between the two factions are expected, the strangest twist, perhaps, of the AIDS scare is the gay community's reaction to its presence in the Permian Basin. While some church members are fearing the homosexuals, the homosexuals are fearing each other.

Strong protests were lodged by gay and lesbian groups from all over Western Europe and North America and activists within West Germany sounded alarms about what their own people did to them in concentration camps in World War II, said the article.

Legislation is also being enacted in the Australian state of Queensland, said the article, that "will allow the government to charge with manslaughter a blood donor whose blood leads to a fatal case of AIDS. A large fine and a two-year jail term are also possible for a blood donor who is diagnosed with AIDS and who does not mention the diagnosis.

Closer to home, a six-month battle between gays and the city of San Francisco resulted in the closure of gay bath houses, out of fear that they may be "incubators of the killing disease." Similar reaction is expected in New York City, according to the article.

And while the fear locally stems from only one reported case in an area with an estimated population of 200,000 people, there are signs that the problem is larger than what appears on the county health department's report to the Texas Department of Health.

"We're not having a problem," said Jim Davis, a laboratory director for the City of Midland Health Department. "But we do have some people who need to be watched. This means that they are exhibiting some of the symptoms, but haven't been diagnosed yet."

And from a physician:

"I have one guy who probably has it," said Dr. Walter Hewell recently. "But I just can't diagnose it yet."

Hewell is an internist who has attended intensive review clinics on AIDS in New Orleans, held by Oschener Clinic and the Louisiana State University and Tulane medical schools. Recently, he gave a conference to the medical staff at Midland Memorial Hospital on AIDS.

Hoffman hanging on to his '60s ideals

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

The wild curly mop that infuriated America's parents and barbers during those furious Yippie years is gone.

Abbie Hoffman's thinning head of hair now looks well kept.

The disappearance of the long hairdo — the most recognizable symbol of the radicalism of the '60s — hints at how the years have changed one of America's most renown radicals.

Hoffman still stands against the establishment and continues to insist he has avoided the switch to materialism that others — such as his debate opponent Jerry Rubin — have embraced.

"A lot of people think I'm rich," he has said, "but I'm not. I don't even have health insurance."

But the man who once said, "I never work. Work is something you do for money, isn't it? That's a dirty four-letter word," is being paid for Wednesday night's debate at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. He and Rubin split $5,000 at each stop of the nationwide tour.

At 48, Hoffman no longer bristles with the same youthful animosity. The irreverent man who has been arrested 41 times and is touted as the subject of 2,600 pages of FBI files now refuses to attack those who have traded the trappings of radical ideologies for sports cars and three-piece suits.

"I'm not going to insult all the people who made important contributions to social movements, then went on to mainstream life," Hoffman said. "That could still happen to me."

The conflict drawing his ire has changed, as has the tact chosen for his protest.

During the Vietnam years, Hoffman rode the crest of activism of the anti-war movement, participating in demonstrations and sit-ins.

In response to U.S. involvement in Central America, he is working to mobilize those in opposition, but demonstrations have not been planned. Sit-ins are no longer among his favored ways of protest.

Still, he is vocal in his opposition. "An entire generation has been deceived about the (Vietnam) era," he said. "I feel it should be taught over and over or we will be doomed to repeat the mistakes in Central America."

Hoffman has turned to environmental issues. During seven years living underground as a fugitive from justice, he organized community efforts that defeated a project threatening the St. Lawrence River in New York.

He criticizes the current system used to transport hazardous wastes across the country. "The waste is transported in tin cans called casks or caskets," he said. "The casks are then chained on a flatbed truck with a cowboy riding shotgun right past your door."

Known for the slogan: "Don't trust anyone over 30," the 48-year-old now recommends, "Don't trust anyone under 30."

Rubin's goal progresses into 'establishment'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

In the '60s, Jerry Rubin wanted to make a new world; in the '70s, he wanted to make himself into a new person. Now, in the '80s, he wants to make himself a few bucks.

This is supposedly the prototypical Yuppie progression, from social activist to seeker of self-awareness to seeker of self-enrichment. For Jerry Rubin, ex-Chicago Seven defendant, ex-psychic therapist, now a successful Yuppie businessman, it was the only way to go.

"The ideas of the '60s are still alive — they exist within the business world and the establishment," said the 46-year-old born-again capitalist during a telephone interview Friday from New York. "We're now doing it through achievement, through amassing enough power and money."

Rubin will be at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin at 8 p.m. Wednesday for a "Yippie vs. Yuppie" debate with Abbie Hoffman, with whom he co-founded the radical Yippie Party back in the '60s. Hoffman accuses Rubin of selling out their old ideals. Rubin accuses Hoffman of living in the past.

"The collective excitement of the '60s is gone," he said. Not that he regrets such past actions as organizing the 1967 March on the Pentagon and the 1968 protests at the Democratic convention in Chicago.

"It was very appropriate for the '60s. We were fighting repression. Now it's time to take responsibility for government."

Rubin, who is originally from Cincinnati, was drawn into radical politics by the Free Speech Movement at Berkeley in 1964. He was soon hobnobbing with Che Guevara in Cuba, organizing anti-war protests and writing rabble-rousing books like "Do It!" He served nine months in jail for various offenses, including an inciting-to-riot conviction in the Chicago Seven trial that was eventually thrown out on appeal.

But in the '70s, after the war had ended and Richard Nixon had resigned in disgrace, Rubin began to feel unfulfilled. Without skipping a beat, he segued from the anti-war movement to the human-potential movement, immersing himself in a succession of self-improvement techniques.

After going through EST, yoga, health foods, bioenergetics, rolfing, sex therapy, Arica, massage, Fischer-Hoffman Psychic Therapy, gestalt, Reichian therapy, hypnotism and acupuncture, he emerged in 1980 as the marketing director for a Wall Street investment bank.

The following year he began promoting his brainchild, the business networking salon, where groups of young professionals can meet and exchange business cards, phone numbers and infectious diseases. Rubin had found his new cause: the Yuppification of America.

"A Yuppie is someone who's into self-improvement, achieving, health and technology awareness, someone who sees their life as one that's evolving in a progressive way."

Successful arguing takes both art, artifice

In the book, "Life Its Ownself," Billy Clyde Puckett, the main character and a hero of mine, makes the following observation: "Clandestine activity was a course I flunked as far back as high school. You could drop me behind enemy lines and the first farmer who came at me with a pitchfork could find out the location of our airfields and all the schedules of our troop trains. No man ever caved in to torture any quicker than I did. I would confess to things I hadn't even thought of if it would prevent an argument."

Well put, but allow me to elaborate. There are two types of arguments to consider — social and domestic. The former, which is usually over something terribly important like "Who was Elizabeth Taylor's third husband?" or "Should white people be allowed to play professional basketball?", are fun.

The domestic kind, on the other hand, can be, as Billy Clyde said, sheer torture. Brutal is another way of putting it. That's because the opponent is a member of the opposite sex and their primary weapon is something called "mind games," which, when used properly, can be a devastating tool that invariably will leave you with your tail tucked snugly between your legs. Permanently.

Let's take a closer look at the two types.

First, social arguing. As mentioned, this can be a fun yet simple endeavor. Intimidation is the key. You can be an effective social arguer by following three easy rules.

1) Talk loud.

2) Throw out a lot of facts and figures. (NOTE: They don't have to be accurate, just make sure you sound like you know what you are talking about.)

3) Interrupt frequently.

An example: You are in the midst of a heated argument regarding gun control laws. You have taken the liberal view (don't panic, this is make-believe). The opposition has just made a very sound, logical point. Your response should go something like this:

"My God, surely you don't really believe that. Anyone with a brain larger than an English pea knows 95 percent of all murders are committed with unregistered Saturday Night Specials. If handguns were outlawed we could reduce the murder rate by 70 percent, maybe more. It's mindless reactionaries like you who are responsible for all those deaths. I hope you can sleep at night."

Remember, it is important that you shout the words, and it helps if you shake your fists for emphasis and laugh in a condescending manner when your opponent attempts to correct one of your "facts."

At that point, you label him a Nazi and dismiss the remainder of his argument with a wave of the hand.

Domestic arguing, unfortunately, is a different sport, altogether. Intimidation is useless. In fact, I can't provide you with any helpful hints because I've never won one of these arguments. I can, however, let you know when you are in deep trouble and at what point, for safety sake, you should wave the white flag and take a nice long ride in the country.

A large number of these arguments focus on personal finances so there is an excellent chance you will be termed a "cheapskate." That in itself is not so bad. Indeed, it may be true. It is the hatred with which the word is uttered that is so frightening. And chilling. Some people (usually women, but not always) possess an unique ability to drop the room temperature by a good 30 degrees just by snarling that word.

My ex-wife, for example, was at least partially responsible for a mild blizzard that hit the Panhandle several years ago when I questioned the logic of purchasing a $2,000 bedroom suite. (Actually, it looked quite nice once it was moved in.)

Another tactic used in domestic squabbling is the silent treatment, perhaps the most painful of all forms of hell. It usually follows a great deal of yelling and screaming and slamming of fists into innocent walls. Just when you think you have made a strong point, you will be hit with the phrase, "I don't want to talk about it."

It figures. You are on a roll, having scored consistently with an impressive array of tasteless insults and not-so-subtle innuendoes, and all you get in return is a curt, "I don't want to talk about it."

You will, however, get a look of hurt that will make you cringe with guilt.

So, what do you do?

I'll tell you what you do. You send a dozen red roses and take Billy Clyde Puckett's advice — lie, steal, cheat, admit to anything short of infidelity, just avoid a domestic argument.

You are out of your league.

Research concentrates on viral link

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Researchers are working at many major U.S. universities, national health institutes, French research clinics and even in the jungles of Africa trying to come up with a cure for Acquired Immuno-Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), a disease that has killed thousands of people since it first came to light in 1979.

"They're pretty sure it is caused by a virus," said Dr. Walter Hewell, a Midland internist. "It seems to be the Human T Lymphocyte Virus III in most cases. They have found that most people with AIDS show up positive on a test for HTLV-III."

The test, a recent product, is "yet to be commercially marketed," according to Katherine Lord, a spokeswoman for the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. "The test is being developed under the auspices of the Department of Health and Human Services and should be available early this year."

"This does not mean that we will definitely have a test for AIDS," she said. "After all, they are not absolutely positive on its cause yet."

Hewell insists the test is available to those who really want to get it.

"Oh, you can get it," he said. "All you have to do is order it."

WHILE THE procedure, (which involves the testing of antibodies to HTLV-III) is a breakthrough, research into other possible causes of the disease continues.

"Most people believe that HTLV-III and the LAV virus that is under research at the Pasteur Institute in France are similar," said Ms. Lord.

The LAV virus was first linked to AIDS last year, she said.

Another possible cause is being researched in Zaire, formerly the Belgian Congo. There, according to an article in the Nov. 23 issue of Science Magazine, a team of U.S. scientists working with Zairean physicians in the capital city of Kinshasa (Leopoldville) is looking into possible links between AIDS and several parasitic diseases, including sleeping sickness.

Zaire has reported cases of AIDS since 1977, before it emerged in the United States, according to an article from the Nov. 8 issue of Nature magazine. It is estimated that 5 percent of Zaire's population now has the disease.

The U.S. scientists, including some from Johns Hopkins University, are examining a protozoan parasite called a trypanosome that causes sleeping sickness. The illness' effects are similar to those of AIDS in that it deranges the body's immune balance, the article reported.

Still further developments are the introduction of new drugs to be used on AIDS patients.

A drug called suramin will soon be tried on people who have the disease, according to the Advocate article.

"Investigators at the National Cancer Institute believe that this drug may slow replication of HTLV-III," said the article.

Another drug, DMFO, is being praised by researchers at the University of California at San Francisco. "The drug appears to be effective in dealing with Pneumocystis carnii pneumonia, an infection that kills more AIDS patients than any other end-stage disorder," said the article. DMFO is an experimental drug in the United States and is made in Strasbourg, France.

THE ENIGMA OF how to cure AIDS continues. But progressively, more and more is being discovered about the nature of the disease.

"There are several symptoms," said Hewell. "Severe fatigue, night sweats, fever, unexplained weight loss, chronic diarrhea, shortness of breath and generalized swelling of the lymph nodes are some of them.

"But even if a person has all of them, it doesn't mean he has AIDS," he warned. "AIDS is very difficult to diagnose."

An article from the February issue of Annals of Internal Medicine, a trade publication, lists three categories of the disease. Opportunistic infections (infections that "take opportunity" of a person at a bad time, according to Hewell) such as pneumocystis pneumonia; Karposi's Sarcoma (a tumor-related illness that leaves blue or brown nodules and lesions on the skin) and the third category — "other" lymphoid malignancies.

By far, pneumocystic pneumonia hits hardest, infecting 51 percent of all AIDS patients. Karposi's Sarcoma affects 27 percent and another 16 percent get other malignancies. Seven percent contract both the pneumonia and KS, said the article.

The outlook for anyone who currently has AIDS is grim. It is estimated that 38 percent of all cases will die, but if broken down according to the year of diagnosis, it well approaches 100 percent, said the report.

"It really is bleak," agreed Hewell. "There is some chemotherapy for KS and a couple of drugs available for the pneumonia, but they have adverse affects."

TO DATE, 6,993 cases of AIDS have been diagnosed nationally resulting in 3,342 deaths. Texas has reported 316 cases of the disease with 154 deaths.

Although reported cases of the disease show that anyone can contract it, the medical profession has identified five "risk groups" — homosexuals (71.1 percent of all reported cases), intravenous drug abusers (16.9 percent), Haitians (5.2 percent), hemophiliacs (0.7 percent) and an unknown class consisting of "a heterogenous mix of patient population" (6.1 percent.)

Most AIDS victims are between the ages of 20 and 49 years, the majority are white (58 percent) and very few (130 cases as of August 1983) are women, said the article.

AIDS

Reports from the gay community suggest other cases go unreported.

"In January 1984, a group of three guys moved down from Lubbock," said the owner of an Odessa gay bar. "One of them got sick and died in the hospital three months later. Everyone knew it was AIDS.

"They didn't even embalm the body," said the bar owner. "They just put him in a 'crash bag' and straight into the casket."

A Midland funeral director suggested the allegations could be true.

"There is no law requiring the embalmment of a body," said the director, who asked to remain anonymous. "Some funeral home policies allow that, should they be called upon to serve the family of an AIDS victim, then they could put the body into a 'disaster pouch' without embalming it."

The steps funeral homes are taking to prevent contamination from AIDS sounds like a scene from the movie "Silkwood."

"We have outer protective clothing, a helmet and a respirator to wear and we would try to disinfect the room with a spray disinfectant," said the funeral home director. "We then would remove the body to the funeral home and then use further disinfectant before doing the embalming. After that, the danger is lessened."

The precautions are "recommended procedure" from the National Funeral Directors' Association, he said.

"Years ago, it was polio," he said. "But I would say that this is the only situation that I know of where we take such precautions. You just have to use extreme caution when you don't know anything about the disease."

A leading medical official, however, warns of over-reacting to the AIDS epidemic.

"Of particular importance is maintaining a rational approach to the disease and to the risk groups by persons who are not in the risk groups in order to avoid unnecessary ostracizing of persons merely because they fall into a risk group," said Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, of the National Institute of Health in Bethesda, MD.

Still the fear is there.

"There is a general feeling that the disease is a result of sexual sin — a violation of God's laws," said Vestal of the First Baptist Church.

"The 'straights' think it's a blessing," said a gay florist. "They think it's the power of God come to wipe us out."

Although differences between the two factions are expected, the strangest twist, perhaps, of the AIDS scare is the gay community's reaction to its presence in the Permian Basin. While some church members are fearing the homosexuals, the homosexuals are fearing each other.

"I think the gay community should be made aware of who this AIDS patient is," said the bar owner. "We need to be protected. Anyone with AIDS should be reported and they should have to tell who they have sexually been with. When you're dealing with something this dangerous, you have got to take all the precautions you can.

"I saw what it did to an organist at a church in Dallas," said the florist. "I wouldn't even shake his hand."

"We were romantic, headstrong, foolish and disrespectful," Hoffman said, "but we were right. And America is a freer, more tolerant, and more democratic society because of the risks we chose to take."

Yuppies like Rubin represent a "designer brain culture," according to Hoffman.

"There's more to life than watching 'General Hospital,' playing Trivial Pursuit and throwing up on your sweatshirt after the big game," he said.

At the same time, the longtime activist said, "I admire entrepreneurship. I want my MTV along with every other sucker out there."

Given the choice between Yuppie and Yippie, Hoffman predicted children of the '80s will side with his one-time partner. "This is not the moment to flee the streets for the protective womb of the business establishment," he cautioned.

Not beyond calling for a resumption of the activism of the Yippie days, he suggested "Go into your local communities and fight poverty and injustice."

Defining America as "everything from the South Pole up to the North Pole," Hoffman suggested this country is "about sharing what we have with people who are less fortunate, and building toward a world community instead of going back to that same old rat race."

Though mellowed, this Yippie lives on.

RUBIN

Hoffman accuses Yuppies of being self-centered, "But everyone is self-centered," said Rubin. "You can help others more by helping yourself."

Rubin's gospel of self-reliance and free enterprise is similar to the views of the conservative Republicans he once despised. But Rubin said he is "disappointed" in the Reagan administration, which he feels spends too much on defense and not enough on education programs for the poor, and hasn't tried hard enough to negotiate a nuclear-arms agreement with the Soviet Union. And he predicts a "Yuppie uprising," if Reagan sends troops to Central America.

The Yuppie generation has a "responsibility to the planet" to provide equal opportunity for all, Rubin said, "But that doesn't mean you have to suffer, be poor, fail. You can have it all, and you don't have to be guilty."

His series of debates with Hoffman "is changing people's lives," Rubin said. "They cut right into the psyche of everyone who attends."

Hoffman's psyche remains unreconstructed, but Rubin still thinks there's hope that his old comrade will someday see the light.

"Almost everyone I know from the '60s has been Yuppified — except Abbie Hoffman. But the longer he stays on the stage with me, the closer he gets to becoming a Yuppie."

General admission to the debate is $3 per person.

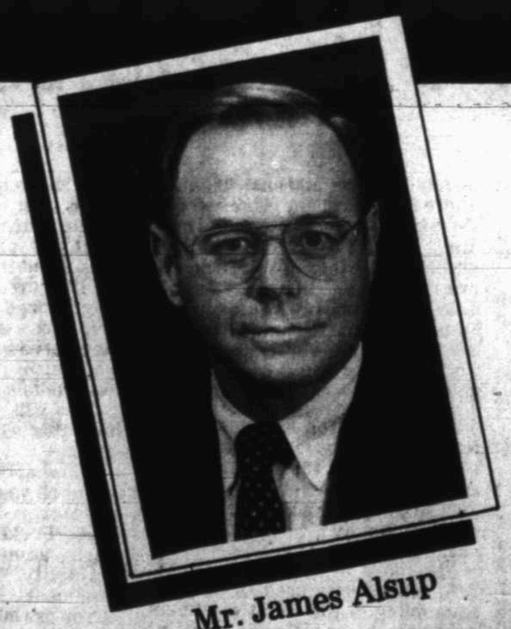

Man dies in South Texas Nuclear Project mishap

BAY CITY, Texas (AP) — A 35-year-old iron worker died Saturday at the South Texas Nuclear Project after a 12-foot-square sheet of metal broke loose from some bolts and toppled onto him, officials said.

Gregory Malone Briggs of Missouri City, Texas, was pronounced dead at 10:18 a.m., said Matagorda County Sheriff's spokesman J. Paul Cleveland.

Cleveland said officials were not immediately notified of the accident, which was believed to have occurred about 9:45 a.m. on the grounds of the South Texas Nuclear Project, about 25 miles south of here.

People of our community who make a difference.

Mr. James Alsup

Twenty years ago Mr. James Alsup, current president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, was living in East Texas doing research on growth patterns for one of our state agencies. Mr. Alsup knew that it was time to move his law practice to Midland when the studies revealed that West Texas was the fastest growing area of the state. That, he confesses, was the sum of his knowledge concerning what life for the Alsup family would be like in this area when he packed his bags and headed west.

After twenty years of practicing law, serving in community organizations and raising two sons in Midland this attorney says that he just can't think of a better place to live. Mr. Alsup explains that Midland has good weather, a high quality of life and best of all wonderful people.

Since he came to Midland, Mr. Alsup has made it a practice to try to give back to his community by serving as a volunteer in a number of organizations. In the past he was involved in the Boys' Club, the American Cancer Society, High Sky Girls Ranch and a host of other organizations. Now, he is on the board for Family Services and the Mental Health and Mental Retardation board. He is also an elder at First Presbyterian Church.

As an attorney and president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Alsup keeps a busy schedule. Any one day, he says, his responsibilities at the Chamber of Commerce may bring feelings of frustration, as well as excitement and satisfaction.

A strong growth pattern brought this commited leader to our community, and now he works to bring continued growth to Midland. As from the beginning, Mr. Alsup is still watching the growth pattern of the Permian Basin. Today, he explains, is a time of steady, healthy growth. Though many profited from the boom, that era was one of reacting more than of planning. It seemed to take everything the community had just to handle the oil business. Thus, diversification efforts had to be put on the back burner. As president of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Alsup is helping Midlanders plan for continued growth.

Planning, dedication and performance are why Mr. Alsup makes a difference in Midland.

Gramm outlines committee choices at city gathering

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Aware that he won't be chosen to fill the single vacancy on the Senate Budget Committee, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm has selected five other committees on which he feels he could represent Texas' interests, he said Saturday afternoon during a stopover at Midland.

Gramm, who had served three terms in the U.S. House as first a Democratic congressman from College Station, and then a Republican, won the Senate race against Democratic opponent Lloyd Doggett. The Republican returned to Midland to voice his thanks to supporters gathered at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum.

Explaining that Senate committee assignments are based on seniority, he said, "I'm 52nd in seniority out of 53 Republican members. Five Republican members have said they plan to choose the Budget Committee. There are five other key committees that have broad and important jurisdiction for Texas."

Those five are:

— Armed Services. "We have a lot of military bases and a lot of military construction in Texas. We need a tight-fisted hawk in the U.S. Senate."

— Energy. "Energy is our number one employer in the state." This committee also handles off-shore leasing.

— Banking. "If oil prices continue to decline a lot of banks in Texas will need a friend in Washington."

— Commerce. This handles all regulatory agencies.

— Agriculture. This committee regulates the state's second ranking industry — farming and ranching.

"I hope one or two will be available when my turn to choose comes. It took John Tower 10 years to get on the committees he finally served on the next 15 years," Gramm said of his predecessor.

A member of the powerful House Budget Committee during his three terms and co-author of the Gramm-Latta spending-reduction budget bill, Gramm said he has spent the past five weeks working on a budget outline that should be ready by the time the Budget Committee meets.

He said he took the "mandate in 1984 that the American people said they didn't want government to go on spending. I believe we have a short time frame on that mandate. We need to do it in the next eight to 12 months."

One man in the audience asked Gramm if someone was going to question the military budget "and tell people the truth."

Gramm said he wanted to "get at the waste and inefficiency so the American people know what they're buying."

The flat rate tax system proposed by former Treasury Secretary Donald Regan "has some real problems, such as the treatment on taxes on mineral extractions," he said. "It's catastrophic to domestic oil and gas production. We don't oppose a simpler system. But we do want to be sure the petroleum industry is treated fairly."

As a senator, Gramm said he will follow the same procedure he used in the House: "Start earlier, work harder and know more about the issues than anybody else."

And he promised to return to West Texas on a fixed schedule to hold town hall meetings.

Young Democrats seeking repeal of blue law

From Staff Reports

The Midland Young Democrats are backing a resolution calling for "immediate repeal" of the Texas blue law.

The club contends the law is not practical or conducive to free enterprise.

In other action, Young Democrats passed a resolution at a recent meeting asking Texas Legislators to exercise restraint of "non-essential" expenditures during times of budget tightening.

Also, the club elected officers for 1985. They include: Michael Higgins, president; Chris McCormick, vice president; Toni Moore, treasurer; Julie Smith, secretary; and David Mandell, chosen to serve as representative to the State Executive Committee.

LOOKING FOR BUILDING LOT?

Not everyone wants to buy an existing home. Some prefer to buy land and build their dream house on it. If you are worried about building lot availability-don't. There is land to build on nationally and locally.

Want to talk big figures? The total land area in the United States amounts to 2.26 BILLION acres. This can be broken down into 703 million acres of forest, 587 million acres of grassland and ranges, 471 million acres of farmland and 345 million acres of urban land, deserts and swamps. Sixty percent of all the land is privately owned, 33% is owned by the federal government and 7% by state and local governments. Of all this land, only 5% is devoted to housing, manufacturing, shopping and transportation. Even though our population has tripled since 1900, 95% of all the available land is still undeveloped. That's a lot of land.

If you are looking for a building lot in this area, we may have lots available in various price ranges. Let's talk about it.

(Purpose or Nature of the Project)

Midland, Midland, Texas
(Location - City, County, State of Project)

$15,490,000

Finding of No Significant Impact

It has been determined that such request for release of funds will not constitute an action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and accordingly the above named City of Midland has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (PL 91-190).

The reasons for such decision not to prepare such Statement are as follows:

The adverse impacts are short-term, construction-related. The provision of affordable housing to low-moderate income persons will help stimulate growth and provide other benefits to area.

An Environmental Review Record respecting the proposed project has been made by the above named City of Midland, Midland County, Texas, which documents the environmental review of the project and more fully sets forth the reasons why such Statement is not required. This Environmental Review Record is on file at the above address and is available for public examination and copying upon request at Room 310, City Hall, 300 N. The City of Midland will undertake the project described above with Community Development Block Grant funds from the Department of Housing and Urban Development under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. The City of Midland is certifying to HUD that the City of Midland and Mayor G. Thane Akins, Chief Executive Officer consents to accept the juridiction of the Federal courts if an action is brought to enforce responsibilities in relation to environmental reviews, decision-making, and action; and that these responsibilities have been satisfied. The legal effect of the certification is that upon its approval, the City of Midland may use the Block Grant funds and HUD will have satisfied its responsibilities under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Late registration period closes soon at MC

By H.A. TUCK

Late registration for spring semester credit courses at Midland College ends Tuesday. So those who want to enroll for one, two or three classes must do so either Monday or Tuesday.

Registration is handled in the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. both days.

The enrollment count has been running slightly ahead of the 1984 spring semester figures and, when the last students are counted, the final number could be very close to the all-time spring semester record of 3,266 in 1983. In the spring of 1984, the count was 3,227.

Chaparral Center has two interesting events this week to go along with their regular slate of abasketball. Today is the lst day to see the Midessa Boat Show. Coming up next Saturday and Sunday is a "Custom Car and Hotrod Show." Hours for that event are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. both days.

• • •

And tickets go on sale tomorrow for a scheduled concert by Ronnie Milsap on Saturday, Feb. 16. Tickets are $11.50 and may be purchased at the Chap Center box office or Endless Horizons in either Midland or Odessa.

• • •

While you are out around the campus for any of these events, you should stop by the McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building to view the show of Leonard Baskin's Indian drawings. They are extremely interesting and worth your time. Baskin is an American contemporary artist who became interested in Indains many years ago and began to spend much of his time portraying them.

The exhibit, which is on loan from the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth, may be seen Sundays from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., Fridays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The show remains in Midlnd through Feb. 27.

There's a home game for the MC Chaparrals at Chap Center Monday against Western Texas College. WTC is the defending Region V champion and always a tough foe for the Chaps. Tip-off is 8 p.m. After the game, students will have a free pizza party and sock hop — complete with DJ — to carry out a theme of the 50s. It's sponsored by the Student Senate, with assistance from the Respiratory Therapy Club.

Fans at Monday's game can register to shoot for 500 gallons of gasoline, or to be selected for a 30-second Cash Scramble to pick up as many dollar bills as possible, or for three-months use of a new Pontiac Fiero sport car. The last will be selected at a drawing during the last game of the season.

The WTC game ends the first half of conference play. On Thursday, MC travels to Clarendon for its second game against the Bulldogs.

All the Chap games are carried on KCRS Radio, 550AM, for the fans who can't get to the games.

We spent some time last week wandering through the new Health Sciences Building, which is quite near cmpletion. It's scheduled for completion early this spring and will be used this ummer for pre-school children in the Child Care Center. Next fall, it's to be occupied by the Associate Degree Nursing, Voactional Nursing, Respiratory Therapy, Fire Technology, and new Radiologic Technology programs. The building includes a 100-seat lecture hall, which we think is likely to get a lot of use from the public when it isn't required for instruction purposes.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

MC spring enrollment sets record

From Staff Reports

Spring enrollment at Midland College has surpassed previous figures with 3,397 currently registered.

Enrollment for the 1983 spring semester was 3,214. The college reported its highest enrollment was 3,515 in the fall of 1984.

Part of the reason for the increase was attributed to the relatively large number of extension courses created by MC-Fort Stockton campus, where 161 students enrolled, according to Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar.

Windsor also indicated that slow late registration the previous two weeks was partially due to poor weather conditions.

Persons still may sign up for credit courses between 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday and Tuesday at the Midland College Student Services Office in the Administration Building.

Information about course openings may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 166, or by visiting the Office of Student Services.

CORN AND CALLUS REMOVERS

Few pains are as intense as that of a toe-top O-corn. It is a hard, thick overgrowth of skin encircling a soft center. A bewildering selection of treatment preparations including adherent films, creams and salves, and medicated pads, disks and plasters, are available to relieve O-corns and other painful and annoying calluses and corns. Researchers who have studied over-the-counter and callus treatments recommend salicylic acid as a safe and effective treatment. This acid is a keratolytic agent, a drug that eats away the bonds between the cells of the hard, outer portion of skin, causing it to peel. Those corns and calluses that fail to respond to non-prescription medications should be treated by a podiatrist.

When you're looking for the best overall source of both prescription and non-prescription medication around, come to SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & Scharbauer (682-2519). Our pharmacy sercices are completely computerized for insurance and tax records, and in addition we have computer programmed information on all drug interactions. We offer city-wide delivery. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Visa, Mastercard, & charge accts. accepted.

HINT:

A vote for safety

It took an agonizingly long time — several years and several major snowfalls — for the Midland City Council to recognize the wisdom in applying for a federal grant to be used in the purchase snow removal equipment. Now that the decision has been made, though, it will mean greater safety for air travelers using Midland Regional Airport and that airlines can choose more frequently to land here in snowy conditions.

The vote on the application for the grant which, if approved, will pay for 90 percent of the cost of the equipment, was opposed only by Mayor G. Thane Akins, who has made his feelings on the issue well known. The mayor said time and again he did not believe the expenditure of the money was justified due to the infrequency of occasions each year on which planes cannot land or take off at Midland Regional because of snowfall.

No one can fault Mayor Akins for his opposition to the expenditure on those grounds. The equipment, which is expected to cost $200,000, will not be used regularly because of the small amount of snow that typically falls each winter here. The mayor is a frugal public servant and is looking at the "bottom line" for the taxpayers as he should. Furthermore, the mayor's opposition to acceptance of federal funds in most instances because of the strings" attached is well known. We understand and respect his stance on that issue.

In this particular instance, however, extenuating circumstances justified the expenditure in our minds. One was the rules under which certain airlines operate that tell pilots when they can and can't land due to runway conditions. According to Aviation Director Vic White, some airlines will not permit their pilots to land if as little as a half-inch of snow is present on the runways. Snow removal equipment can remove that amount of snow, of course, so there will be future days on which planes can land at Midland Regional that aren't possible with the current lack of equipment.

Another reason favoring the purchase of the equipment is the fact that Midland is a corporate city. Numerous businesses here have their headquarters or other offices in cities around the state and nation. The nature of the oil industry necessitates frequent travel and, of course, many businessmen come here from elsewhere in West Texas because of the good flight connections.

All that lends greater import to keeping the airport operational as much as possible.

That doesn't mean the purchase of snow removal equipment will result in the airport being operational 365 days a year. There still will be times when heavy snowfalls or icy conditions will make landings and takeoffs unwise. But it does increase the argument for keeping the airport flying as frequently as possible.

Of course the greatest argument for purchase of the equipment was to increase safety for passengers and crews using Midland Regional during periods of inclement weather.

Since the remaining 10 percent of the cost of the equipment is to be borne by the various airlines, and since that cost undoubtedly will be passed along to air travelers through higher air fares, it makes sense to opt for safety and buy the equipment.

Another View: A better system

In agreeing not to predict election results in any state until the voting there ends, the three major broadcasting networks have given political participation the nod over technology. Though that step won't have a major impact on elections, it's welcome nonetheless.

For the past several elections, early reports from the Eastern states have kept some Western voters home, thus influencing outcomes in close congressional and state races. And the networks' use of exit polls to predict outcomes effectively tells those who vote late in the day that they're merely going through the motions, ratifying a decision that has already been made. That's unhealthy for a political system whose legitimacy rests, in good measure, on citizen participation.

The networks' promise breaks a political stalemate. After the 1980 elections, there were rumblings in Congress about measures to stop the networks from conducting exit polls or broadcasting results; but such steps would quickly — and, likely, successfully — have been challenged as an assault on First Amendment protections. The advantage of adopting uniform balloting hours nationwide to limit the impact of reporting early returns, an idea also bruited in Congress, would have been nullified by those exit poll reports.

Now, however, a uniform poll-closing time makes sense. Among the alternatives under consideration by Congress, the soundest approach would end voting at 11 p.m. EST. That plan isn't without its shortcomings. It inconveniences voting registrars in Eastern states, who would be counting until the wee hours of the morning, as well as voters in Hawaii, whose polls would shut at 6 p.m. But to go further, mandating a 24-hour polling period causes more dislocation of election procedures, and would cost states more money than the problem warrants.

The networks have made a solution to the problem of early election calls possible through their self-restraint. If Congress follows through, a uniform poll-closing time should give a modest boost to the rule of "one person, one vote."

Peasants victims in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON — Like any civil war in this century, the Nicaraguan conflict has its share of ideologically inspired atrocities, and neither the Sandinistas nor the U.S.-backed "contras" can make a convincing case for strict adherence to the rules of war.

Jack Anderson

In the see-saw battle for remote areas and villages — and for the hearts and minds of the peasants who live there — both sides are reluctant to leave behind "enemy" sympathizers when they are forced to withdraw. So they take the hapless suspects with them.

Most contra sympathizers abducted by the Sandinista forces reportedly wind up in prison, though a certain number of disappearances indicate that at least some of the anti-government civilians are executed. But the contras, having no jails, routinely execute captives whom they deem to be "irrecuperable" Sandinistas.

It's difficult for Americans to appreciate what kind of life it is for the peasants on whom both sides' hopes and ambitions ultimately rest. They grow the crops that sustain the warring armies and provide the mostly unwilling recruits who do the actual fighting. Helpless to defend themselves against the armed marauders, they are like the wretched villagers in "The Magnificent Seven" — but with no gunslinging good guys to come to their rescue.

It's a safe bet that most Nicaraguan peasants want only to be left alone, to survive without the oppression of Somoza's National Guard, Sandinista press gangs or contra guerrilla warlords. But for six years now, their country has been torn by the chaos of civil war, with no end in sight.

The story of "Marta," a 29-year-old nurse, illustrates the numbing futility of trying to be neutral in the kind of ideological battleground that Nicaragua has become. A real-life Dr. Zhivago, she was kidnapped because of her medical skills and has managed to survive by stifling any spoken thoughts that might cause her captors to doubt her trustworthiness.

My reporter, Jon Lee Anderson, encountered Marta in the rebel camp of "Dimas," one of a dozen regional field commanders of the FDN, or Nicaraguan Democratic Force. Dimas and the 1,000 guerrillas under his command are the law for some 14,000 civilians in the area of Jintoega , where he operates. He is the supreme authority — judge, jury and executioner if need be.

Marta traveled with Dimas' headquarters, nursing the sick and wounded and keeping her mouth shut — until my associate showed up. Taking advantage of a quiet period in the camp, when few of the rebels were within earshot, she poured out her anguish. Here is the harrowing story she told, breaking down in tears from time to time:

In November 1983, an FDN lieutenant named "Macondo" arrived with a company of guerrillas in the village where Marta lived with her husband and two daughters. Because of her nursing skills, she was dragged away from her family along with 16 other villagers.

Her two little girls clung to their mother's legs in terror and were torn away screaming. Her husband was tied to a tree and threatened with death if he dared to report her abduction to the authorities after the rebels left.

Marta and the other captives were made to walk barefoot on a forced march to the rebel camp. Her feet bled, and she recalled with indignation that she had been forced to wash and cook for the entire company on the long march.

"Macondo wanted me to be his woman," she said. "He wanted me to lie with him."

When she refused, Macondo brought up one of the villagers who had been kidnapped with her and slit his throat in front of her. The guerrilla chieftain told Marta this would be her fate if she didn't sleep with him.

Marta was finally spared from Macondo's lust by the intervention of others in the guerrilla band. They eventually reached the camp, run by Dimas' brother. Dimas happened to be visiting the camp, and he "saved" Marta, taking her away to his own camp.

Marta was lucky. Of the 16 villagers abducted with her, six had their throats cut or were stabbed in the heart by Macondo after he had interrogated them on their political allegiances. Six others managed to escape in the first two days of the forced march. Like Marta, the rest, she says, "decided to join the FDN."

Ever since then, Marta has lived with Dimas' rebel force. Because of her nursing skills, she is treated as a person of rank. Seeing no way out, she is resigned to her lot, taking care not to make too obvious her desire to leave the rebels. There is another element in her despair: She is afraid her husband would reject her if she were allowed to go home. So for now, she is a pathetic slave to Dimas, cooking and nursing for him, even washing his socks.

Dimas is probably an enlightened guerrilla field commander compared to some. Though he derided the FDN's high-ranking officers, who "sit and watch" from the safety of the rear echelon while the combat commands risk their lives in the jungles, he also made guarded references to "the abuses" of some of his fellow field commanders.

"I have to treat the civilians well if I want them on my side," he explained. "But some of the others don't understand this."

The basic problem with a guerrilla war is that it is carried out by relatively small units operating on their own in hostile territory. Each field commander, fit or unfit, becomes a law unto himself.

GEORGE F. WILL

A case for rearranging furniture

WASHINGTON — Many senators are so impatient for the rectification of the world's ills that they have not taken time to notice that the Senate itself needs some attention. However, Dan Quayle has noticed, and has some proposals, to which I add this one: Rearrange the furniture on the Senate floor.

George F. Will

Quayle is in the fifth year of what will be, if God is willing and Indiana is wise, many terms in the Senate. A lissome young Republican of 37, he looks 27, and during his 1980 campaign he was accused — yes, accused — of looking unfairly like Robert Redford. (When will the Federal Election Commission issue regulations to correct the unfairness of candidates not looking equally splendid?)

Quayle has a number of ideas to improve two things: the conduct of business on the Senate floor, and the committee system in which most Senate business is done. He would reform the rules governing the Senate floor to make it more difficult — it is now simple — for one member to bring the Senate to a standstill by dilatory devices (frivolous amendments, filibusters, etc.). And he would reduce the size of committees and the number of subcommittees.

If the Senate is to be what it is pleased to be called — "world's greatest deliberative body" — it must be disposed to, and able to, deliberate. But deliberation takes time, and a certain rhythm of institutional life. Deliberative senators can not live like dray horses in harness, driven by staff from one hearing to another. But for 30 years the number of senators has remained constant, as has the number of hours in the day. Neither number is apt to change soon. The number of committees and especially subcommittees has grown rapidly as senators have sought new opportunities to hire staff and make news.

When Jim Buckley left the Senate after one term representing New York (1971-76), he said the work load had doubled during his six years. One reason the load is so heavy is the proliferation of subcommittees. That has multiplied the burdens of the executive branch. When William Ruckelshaus first served as head of the Environmental Protection Agency 15 years ago, he had to report to 15 committees and subcommittees. When he returned to that job in 1983, the number was 44.

Quayle's ideas are sound, but not sufficient. The Senate should rearrange its desks and chairs, for Churchillian reasons.

When a German bomb destroyed the House of Commons, the chamber could have been rebuilt along various lines. But Churchill insisted that its traditional physical features be reproduced because they sustain particular political principles.

He wanted the chamber to be oblong, with benches on two sides, facing each other, rather than with individual seats arranged in a semicircle. And he was adamant that the chamber be only big enough to seat about two-thirds of the members. He warned against "semicircular assemblies with buildings that give to every member not only a seat to sit in, but often a desk to write at, with a lid to bang" — a description of the U.S. Senate.

Churchill believed that the oblong shape was "a very potent factor in our political life" because it buttresses the rule of two durable and disciplined parties. Semicircular assemblies, he said, encourage loose assemblages of lesser groups in constantly shifting coalitions of weak principles. He said the semicircular assembly encourages "the group system" because it does nothing to encourage party identification, party discipline and clarity of principle. He said a strong two-party system, and a government capable of vigorous action, is nurtured by an oblong chamber. The physical fact of confrontation concentrates minds on the reality of two competing blocs, and the act of voting with the other side becomes more momentous.

Churchill thought a legislative chamber should be so small that it can not contain all its members without overcrowding. Otherwise almost all debates will be conducted in the dispiriting, trivializing atmosphere of an almost empty chamber. He thought good legislative rhetoric should be conversational, not haranguing, and the conversational style requires a small space. Furthermore, on great occasions crowding gives a sense of urgency.

It will be said that Americans should not want the Senate to sit in a smaller chamber (with, say, 50 chairs — 25 to a side) because party cohesion and conversational, cut-and-thrust rhetoric are not important to American goals. But perhaps they should be. And Churchill's theory — call it architectural determinism, or the Seating Arrangement Theory of History — is easier to ridicule than refute.

Don't trust women with credit cards

From a Newsweek story on Yuppies: "When American Express found that women were not responding to their overwhelmingly male 'Do You Know Me?' series, it launched its 'Interesting Lives' campaign, which features up-to-date activities such as (a woman) taking a man out to dinner to break in her card."

Art Buchwald

I've seen the ads on TV and I've been impressed with them. But I've always wondered what happens after the girl shows her charge card to the good-looking guy in the lobby of the skyscraper, and they go off to a very expensive restaurant.

The maitre d'hotel presents the menus.

Woman with credit card to male guest: What is your pleasure?

He: Why don't you order for the both of us?

She: Pasta verdi with pesto sauce, steak Diane, souffle potatoes, endive salad with the house dressing, and a bottle of the nouveau Beaujolais, slightly chilled. Kiwi souffle for dessert.

He: You certainly know your food.

She: You have to if you're on the fast track.

He: I usually don't go to dinner with married women.

She: Come on, loosen up. We're out to have a fun evening.

He: I just didn't want you to get any ideas because you're buying me a meal that it will lead to something later on.

She: What kind of upwardly mobile person do you think I am? Have some more wine. Let's drink to having it all and having it now.

He: Having what now?

She: Did anyone ever tell you that you have beautiful eyes? Talk to me a little about yourself.

He: It's nothing exciting. I was raised in Iowa and came to the Big Apple to make a name in advertising.

She: I have some influential friends on Madison Avenue that might help you. They all owe me favors. Here's my card.

He: Please don't do that.

She: Do what?

He: Hold my hand. I'm not that kind of guy.

She: What kind is that?

He: You know. Someone who sleeps around with any woman who has a gold credit card.

She: Let me refill your glass.

He: You're trying to get me drunk, so I won't know what I'm doing.

She: How can you say that? I wouldn't be a vice president of marketing if people didn't trust me.

He: Let's talk about your husband. What kind of person is he?

She: Let's just say he doesn't understand me. He's boring. All he wants to talk about is having children.

He: And you don't want children?

She: They don't issue gold credit cards to women who buy Pampers.

He: Please take your hand off my knee.

She: I was trying to find my napkin. Here, have another glass of wine with your steak Diane. Do you find me attractive?

He: Very much. But can't we just have a nice dinner and be friends?

She: We are friends. I genuinely like you for your mind. What health club do you go to?

He: I'm starting to feel tipsy. Maybe you better take me home.

She: If that's what you want. We could have a nightcap at your place.

He: No way. I told you not to get any ideas about the evening.

She: But we're the "Me" generation, and we have the whole night ahead of us.

He: I vowed never to get involved with a married woman.

She: Why on earth not?

He: Because I don't want to be the "other man," waiting for the phone to ring while you're buying your husband dinner with your gold credit card.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1962, the United States launched the Ranger 3 spacecraft to land scientific instruments on the moon. The probe, however, missed its mark by some 22,000 miles.

In 1979, former Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller died in New York at the age of 70.

In 1983, Paul "Bear" Bryant, the winningest football coach in college history, died in Tuscaloosa, Ala., at the age of 69.

Ten years ago: Vice President Nelson A. Rockfeller said he believed the Presidential commission he chaired would find that the Central Intelligence Agency had violated its charter by engaging in activities within the United States.

Nuclear arms race fueled by greed, mistrust, hatred

Bill Modisett

There's a young woman I know who represents the typical liberal view in regard to nuclear warfare. She doesn't understand why the superpowers can't simply lay down their arms, dismantle their nuclear arsenals and disavow use of the weapons, thus, she believes, rendering the world a much safer place. She doesn't understand why there is an arms race.

A lot of people the world over share her view of nuclear warfare and the arms race, I believe, and that forms the basis for the primary misunderstanding of the difference between a fairy tale world and the real world in which we all live.

Please don't misconstrue my point. I want peace as much as any person who hopes to live a full life in the presence of my family and friends. I don't want to ever experience the predicted nuclear winter some say would follow a nuclear exchange or to die in a nuclear war or watch my family die. I am not an aggressor and not disposed to go looking for trouble. The young woman tells me she is looking for much the same from life.

But it's at this point in the discussion where our philosophies part company. She apparently believes that it would be much more conducive to the goal of world peace for the United States to begin dismantling its arsenal to encourage the Soviet Union to do the same. I consider that the height of idiocy. Here's why:

In making simple determinations of how to achieve world peace, too frequently proponents base their decisions on misinformation, ignorance or ill-placed confidence.

Those decisions invariably show that the persons proposing them do not grasp fully the complexities of the nuclear situation. You see, it's not merely a matter of laying down arms and vowing to live peacefully from this day forward. Do I ever wish it was!

It isn't, though, because of a number of factors: Greed, mistrust, downright hatred. For example, one of the themes present in The Communist Manifesto is world domination. Would you lay down your rifle if the guy sitting across the room from you had vowed to gain control of your life for his purposes and still held his gun? If you did you wouldn't have to worry about the arms race anymore — in this life.

So it isn't such a simple matter of laying down arms and expecting the Soviets to follow suit. To believe that represents the height of naivete.

Rather, it's a complex situation wherein a nation of free people is attempting to co-exist with a regime dedicated to world domination. It's inherent in this situation that the two parties represent archenemies. Their philosophies cannot co-exist and naturally breed mistrust.

Mistrust, of course, is the reason for the arms race and will continue to be the reason for as long as the Soviet Union is a Communist state and the United States of America is a nation of free men and women. A nation in which people enjoy individual freedoms cannot exist in harmony with a nation dedicated to the end of individual freedoms.

When someone tells you the two nations should lay down their arms and co-exist peacefully, determine and understand in what context they are speaking. Know their "agenda." Know where they rank the necessity for maintaining personal freedom. Mine is simple: I want world peace and will support all efforts to achieve it so long as individual freedom is retained for the people of the United States of America. Period.

That isn't going to be possible as long as the Soviet Union remains communistic and aggressive. That's why I support the concept of peace through strength.

Readers' views on: Abortion

How can one be blind to facts of abortion?

After reading the letter on abortion in the newspaper Jan. 6, I found myself furious! How can anyone be so blind to the facts about abortion? Yes, no one can dictate the activities of a woman, but the woman makes her own decision when she decides to have sex.

Being aware of the possibility of getting pregnant, it is at this point where she makes her decision. If she doesn't want children it's up to her to use contraceptives, not wait until she's already pregnant and carrying a life inside her. At this point her decision has already been made.

Because from the point of conception the woman's life is not the only one involved. There is a second life involved. The so-called "fetus" is a living being. He or she is a miniature of his parents. Most pregnancies aren't even detected until the sixth week. By then, the baby's heart has been beating for three weeks, brain waves can be read, the nervous system has been complete for about two weeks and he or she is about to begin moving, although the mother will not feel it for 3½ months more.

By the eighth week the baby's skeleton, head, face, arms, legs, fingers (with fingerprints), toes, circulatory and major muscle systems are complete, and all of his or her bodily organs are present in rudimentary states.

By the 12th week the baby already show a distinct individuality in both appearance and behavior, with facial expressions resembling those of his or her parents.

By the 16th week the baby's eyelashes have grown. By 16½ weeks all 20 milkteeth buds are in place. By the 20th week hair appears on the baby's head. By the 22nd week the baby can open his or her eyes.

The baby can feel pain as early as eight to 10 weeks gestation, and definitely by 13½ weeks. The baby can feel pain! In the educational distribution Life Cycle, Professor John T. Noonan of the University of California at Berkely was quoted for having said, "Whatever the method used, the unborn are experiencing the greatest of bodily evils, the ending of their lives. They are undergoing the death agony. However inarticulate, however slight their cognitive powers, however rudimentary their sensations, they are sentient creatures undergoing the disintegration of their being and the termination of their vital capabilities. That experience is painful in itself."

Scientist and doctors tell us the "fetus" can feel pain and is a human in many respects; pictures of his or her development during a pregnancy show us a tiny human. How does this tiny life just get explained away with opinions and legal debates? How can you call this "fetus" inside the mother's womb anything but a human?

As far as unwanted children becoming abused, this is not true. Dr. Edward Leoski, Professor of Pediatrics at U.S.C., showed in a recent study of 674 battered children that 91 percent were planned pregnancies and 90 percent were legitimate.

Walker said that the Bible does not address abortion. It doesn't say word for word, "thou shalt not abort," however there are scriptures in which the child in the womb is referred to as a child. And the Bible does say, "Thou shalt not kill." Walker said that God spoke of humans and that the "fetus" was not a human. However the Bible uses the same word interchangably for both prenatal (Luke 1:41,44) and postnatal babies (Luke 18:15-17). The word brephos means "an unborn child, embryo, fetus; a newborn child, an infant, a babe." Also in Psalms 139:13-16 the "fetus" is spoken of as a human.

Abortion is not a matter of opinion. There are facts to be considered. Last year over 1.3 million infants were put to death before they saw the light of day. Get the facts and then you decide, life or death for tomorrow's unborn.

Stop the murders of 15 million babies

Let's put a stop to the murders of 15 million babies since 1973, and save our nation while there is still time.

If these innocent lives are being destroyed because they are unwanted, who do you think may be next on the list of unwanted people? Maybe next it will be the old people (your parents or you) who have become a burden on society or whomever they may choose to eliminate. How tragic.

Wake up America and Christians. So many sit back and say, yes, we have a problem, but refuse to take the responsibility, like it belongs to someone else. Still others say, we're concerned but let's not get political or make waves like taking a stand outside the courthouse. We'll just pray about it and not be bothered.

I thought it was so sad when so many people were contacted about the ceremony for the 15 million murdered babies and only about 150 in all of Midland cared enough to show up.

But we can rejoice with the 70,000 that did stand up in Washington in freezing snow and ice.

Because I cannot support an agency like Planned Parenthood that promotes abortion (killing babies), free sex, contraceptives to minors without parental consent, homosexuality, family destruction and population control or even Girl Scouts who have endorsed ERA I would have to agree with the bumper stickers that United Way is not the way.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since 1979, Planned Parenthood has received no United Way funding locally.

Unborn babies can both hear and feel

I used to try to write to your letters column and got turned down over and over. In all the 17 years I took your paper, I only had two letters printed, while certain people here were getting letters printed every week — prominent ones, of course. But I have been reading letters lately pro and con on abortion and I just wonder if that man Walker ever read the Bible. And does he know unborn babies can both hear and feel?

Does he know the Bible tells of Mary going south to the hill country to her cousin's house, John the Baptist's mother, before he was born? When she told his mother, her cousin, about what the angel told her about being pregnant with the Christ, John's mother said he leaped in her womb.

Also does Mr. Walker know that Jesus told a man here on earth that he knew him when he, the man, was in his mother's womb? Of course, Mr. Walker, being a man, has never been pregnant and experienced a baby hearing and feeling. But I have, being a mother of two sons.

I am sorry there can be people on this earth that can be so ignorant of God's work. And what will become of the ones that are taking unborn lives, even if the law here does give them a right to take unborn lives.

Pity the doctors and lawyers.

Who but God can take or give life?

I would like to know who but our truly great God has the right to take and give life? It's only when a nation would become so heartless and wicked that civilized people would legalize an act of killing innocent and helpless babies that can't defend themselves.

This is not the mother's body but the body of another human person. Abortion is not a means of birth control but a means of killing.

An unwanted pregnancy does not necessarily mean an unwanted baby after delivery. Instead of destroying life, we should destroy the conditions that make life intolerable. Then every child regardless of capabilities or circumstances of birth could be welcomed, loved and cared for.

On a radio talk show many people were calling in saying they were for abortion in the case of rape. One lady called in and said years ago her mother had been raped by a man. The doctor and neighbors pleaded with her to have an abortion. But she said, "Thanks to my loving Father who refused to hear of her having an abortion. I am so glad because, you see, I am the product of that rape."

The legalizing of abortion (killing) homosexuals, drugs, prostitution, ERA, and sex education are all a part of a big plan to destroy us as a nation. And if we don't stand up now and fight for what we believe in and freedoms we'll be like all the other once free countries that were taken over by Communism where the silent majority didn't speak up.

Bombing of clinics is correct response

Seeing as how you have given plenty of coverage to the vast majority of people who either are in favor of legal abortions or who are against abortion but are also unwilling to endorse the bombing of clinics where they are performed, it seems appropriate that you now publish a defense of the bombings. I will in no way attempt to convince people who believe in legalized abortion that they should change their minds because one's position on abortion basically reflects one's opinion on the rights and obligations of all people and, thus, to change them would probably require an argument concerning a wide variety of other issues.

If one considers himself to be in opposition to abortion then he must contemplate several thing. Is abortion the killing of a human being? Is abortion murder? If one considers the fact that an infant in the womb is incapable of doing any wrong then it becomes clear tht that same infant is supremely innocent. And, of course, abortion is a purposeful and planned act, so the only thing left to consider in proving murder is whether the unborn deserves presonhood and equal protection under the law.

If one believes that the unborn are equal persons then by the aforementioned reasoning it becomes apparent that abortion is murder! If one cannot follow that reasoning and thus believes the unborn are not full persons, but nonetheless abortion is still wrong, he reduces his arguments to the level of the gore haters who denounce scientific experimentation on animals.

However, if the belief is accepted that abortion is murder then the person who believes this and also believes that bombings of abortion clinics are wrong, he is most likely very inconsistent or a believer in the most absurd of pacifist dogmas.

It would seem obscene to society if a person fully capable of doing so failed to stop the murder of a mature adult. And yet it seems that many people find it perfectly acceptable to say "abortion is murder" than to condemn or fail to defend those who would use their capability to stop that murder. It is a sad state of affairs when violence is to be condemned simply because of what it is, when the fact is violence is neutral and achieves evilness or goodness depending on how it is used, and against whom.

If a man robbing a store shoots a clerk and seconds later is shot by the store manager, it is incomprehensible how a sane person could equate the two are moral equals. Many of the "mainline" pacifist types say that the bombers do a disservice to the anti-abortion movement, but, it is actually the anti-bombing forces that do the disservice because by their actions and words they imply that unborn children do not deserve the same consideratin that an adult would get.

Those who say that violence is not the appropriate response to abortion certainly have a twisted set of values because all their laws, if they are ever passed will not do a damned thing for the babies who will die tomorrow!

Remember the lives which have been taken

Being as Jan. 22 was the National Day of Mourning for the over 15 million babies who have been aborted, I would like to comment to the readers on the importance of keeping that day to memory.

Few people showed up for the memorial service that was held outside the Midland County Courthouse Tuesday night, but the pro-lifers were very glad to have the small support that they did. It told us that at least somebody cares enough to protest this hideous slaughter of innocent children. The sad thing about all of this is the fact that many do care, but they are just too lazy or too busy to stand up and be counted.

The problem is not whether this is a moral thing to do or not; that is not debatable if you are a Christian, or if you just have moral standards which you live by. The big problem is waking up the majority of people who are for life. That is where we should focus our attention.

By our voting Ronald Reagan to a second term this past November, we showed the world that this country's majority is pro-life. So where are all these people? Where were you when the Roe vs. Wade decision became law in 1973? I was sleeping, as I am sure most everyone was. That has been almost 12 years ago, and we have still been sleeping for the most part.

Thank God for the advertisement put out by those concerned or I would probably still be a believer in abortion. But as I become more and more aware and educated on this "simple little procedure," I become even more convinced that this is murder. Not only murder, but torture! That tiny little baby they call a "mass of cells" feels when it is cut up or sucked apart limb by limb, and it feels when it is put through the agonizing pain of chemicals burning its body (saline solution).

People, if you do believe in life, get out there and make your voice heard. Tell people who are ignorant of this issue about the facts, support pro-life organizations, go to the meetings and demonstrations, and most important, go to the voting booths during election time.

For those who still feel that they "jut don't have the time," let me leave you with this scripture from the Bible; "He who knows the good that he should do, and doesn't do it, this man sins." (James 4:17).

Abortion won't end abuse of children

I felt I must respond to the letter of Jan.6, in reference to K.P Walker.

If abortion is the answer to child abuse, why does child abuse rise with every rise in the abortion rate? The greatest fallacy of abortion is the argument that abortion helps prevent child abuse. Every study and all statistics have demonstrated the exact opposite conclusion.

In the days of Moses, abortion was not practiced, hence the omission in the Bible. However the Bible is full of references of God knowing people "while they were still in their mother's womb." (It never uses the term fetus).

Abortion doesn't prevent childbirth. Abortion either burns or rips apart an unborn child which artifically produces the expelling of the child from his mother. Birth control, on the other hand, prevents conception. This indeed should be left entirely to the woman's discretion.

K.P. Walker apparently knows nothing of the procedures of abortion nor the timetable at which an unborn child can experience pain, to state that it is merciful.

Simply because the child cannot scream (lacking oxygen in the lungs) does not indicate that they do not feel pain.

Twilley Young
Odessa

Morals come from heart, not theologian

K.P. Walker has voiced his or her opinion twice in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, and twice he or she has failed to change my opinion on abortion.

Now I would like K.P. Walker to read my opinion. First of all, this "well known theologian" overlooked the sixth commandment that says "thou shalt not kill." This passage does not contain the words murder, manslaughter, homocide or suicide, but these words all mean the same — and so does abortion. To abort a fetus is to kill.

Go to the city slums and you may find unwanted children, but the children are not the criminals. The crime is poverty, the irresponsibility of the parent, and the restrictive adoption policies. The majority of abortions performed have nothing to do with poverty. Abortion is a big business, and it takes money to have one performed. Women who can afford abortions are usually those who choose to do away with the "burden" of a child.

I could ask you (K.P. Walker) where you would be if your mother did not want you, but I am sure you would consider that immaterial. You obviously do not know the difference between contraceptives and abortion.

Finally, I do not expect to change your mind with this letter, but I must ask you this: If you received or performed an abortion, would you feel good about yourself afterwards?

Opinions that truly come from the heart are called "morals" and morals are stronger than any theologian or Supreme Court decision.

Many will answer for bloodied hands

The 15 millions of babies aborted was not only uncalled for but there will be many to answer for the blood of these innocent victims on their hands. Most of these when aborted are alive and put in trash bags and left to die. This is tragic. So many childless couples would give anything to have a child.

The ironic thing is if someone kills a three-month-old baby it's called murder, but three months ago it would be called abortion.

A woman who has had an abortion not only has many physical and psychological problems, but many have committed suicide because of the mental torment of regret, feeling a great loss or helplessness in knowing what has happened.

Planned Parenthood never discusses the after effects of what a woman will go through for years. Planned Parenthood gets funding from United Way on the national level and also through referrals of many organizations they sponsor. Regardless of what nationality, denomination, church or doctrine we may be, we have got to stand up against issues like abortion. There once was a man who decided to find out what made America so great. Was it her wealth, the people or what? It was at that time he discovered that America's greatness is in her goodness and he concluded if America ever ceases to be good, she would cease to be great.

Reagan stands firm in committment to 'Star Wars'

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — High on his agenda right after the inaugural President Reagan conferred with a revamped team of arms negotiators that will lead a three-panel discussion with the U.S.S.R. to reduce weapons. He emphasized that arms control is a major goal of his second term and held fast to a longheld presidential view that the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) is not negotiable. American critics of the system sneered at the concept as "Star Wars" which the Soviet Union immediately picked up.

The Soviets have criticized SDI as a roadblock to any arms negotiations even before they agreed to preparatory talks with us in Geneva for the longer, more difficult negotiations ahead. To date the U.S.S.R. drags its feet on setting a time and place for the negotiations which they broke off 15 months ago. The other day the president urged the Soviet Union to resume arms talks in Geneva during early March but Moscow still stays silent.

PRESIDENT Reagan, treading his way carefully but firmly as he did by adhering to his economic game plan, is doing the same in a dialogue with Moscow. He won handsomely on the economic scene and his refusal to kowtow to Kremlin demands about abandoning SDI actually made the Geneva talks possible.

The Soviet Union, you see, fully realizes that they must deal with President Reagan four more years and takes into account, too, that he won 49 of 50 states in our last election. A New York Times-CBS poll the other day revealed that nearly two-thirds of Americans interviewed view President Reagan most favorably.

His present team of arms negotiators is seasoned and well versed in the tricky details of SDI, which President Reagan went to great lengths to correct a questioner calling the idea "Star Wars." His new team is on the record publicly in favor of SDI.

Today's New York Times Magazine has a sound bipartisanship article presenting the case for SDI. It is co-authored by Max Kampelman, head of the president's negotiating panel, a conservative Democrat; Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was national security adviser to former President Jimmy Carter, and Dr. Robert Jastrow, a Dartmouth University professor. Each author contributed sections to the piece which they edited and rewrote jointly. What emerges is strong support for SDI.

AS A REPORTER and editor, I was glad to be among the first who supported SDI originally proposed by Lt. Gen. Daniel O. Graham, USA ret., which he calls "High Frontier." He wanted a system that could defend because we don't have one. Instead, we have the concept of Mutual Assured Destruction, or "MAD" for short. That guarantees that an adversary firing nuclear-tipped missiles against us would suffer retaliation.

Some system! Gen. Graham, who isn't a scientist, gathered knowledgable people together and presented the idea to President Reagan. After listening to pros and cons, the president told fellow Americans about "High Frontier" which he asserted must be thoroughly researched. He also provided seed money of $26 billion to back up the project and appointed Gen. Jim Abrahamson, USAF, to direct the program.

THE CRITICS of SDI and the president's present team of arms negotiators are in full cry again, trying to be scornful of his efforts which the president declared in his inaugural address would render nuclar weapons obsolete. The SDI would be, asserted the president, a "victory for human freedom" and help demilitarize arsenals on earth. Critics responded by essentially favoring the "MAD" doctrine.

They are led by ex-Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara, who helped sell "MAD"; McGeorge Bundy, national security adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson; George F. Kennan, former ambassador to the U.S.S.R., and Gerard Smith, chief of Strategic Arms Negotiations under President Nixon. Smith hankers aloud to win a Nobel Peace Prize.

Nearly all the criticism centers on what may be the great cost to the American people if SDI goes beyond the research stage. We are fully supported by British Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher for research because Britain is nearly broke. Mrs. Thatcher realizes that arms control is urgent and defense is a sovereign right of any nation, great or small. The United States is responsible for protecting our allies through NATO and our friends in farflung areas and close to our own soil. We cannot leave them naked.

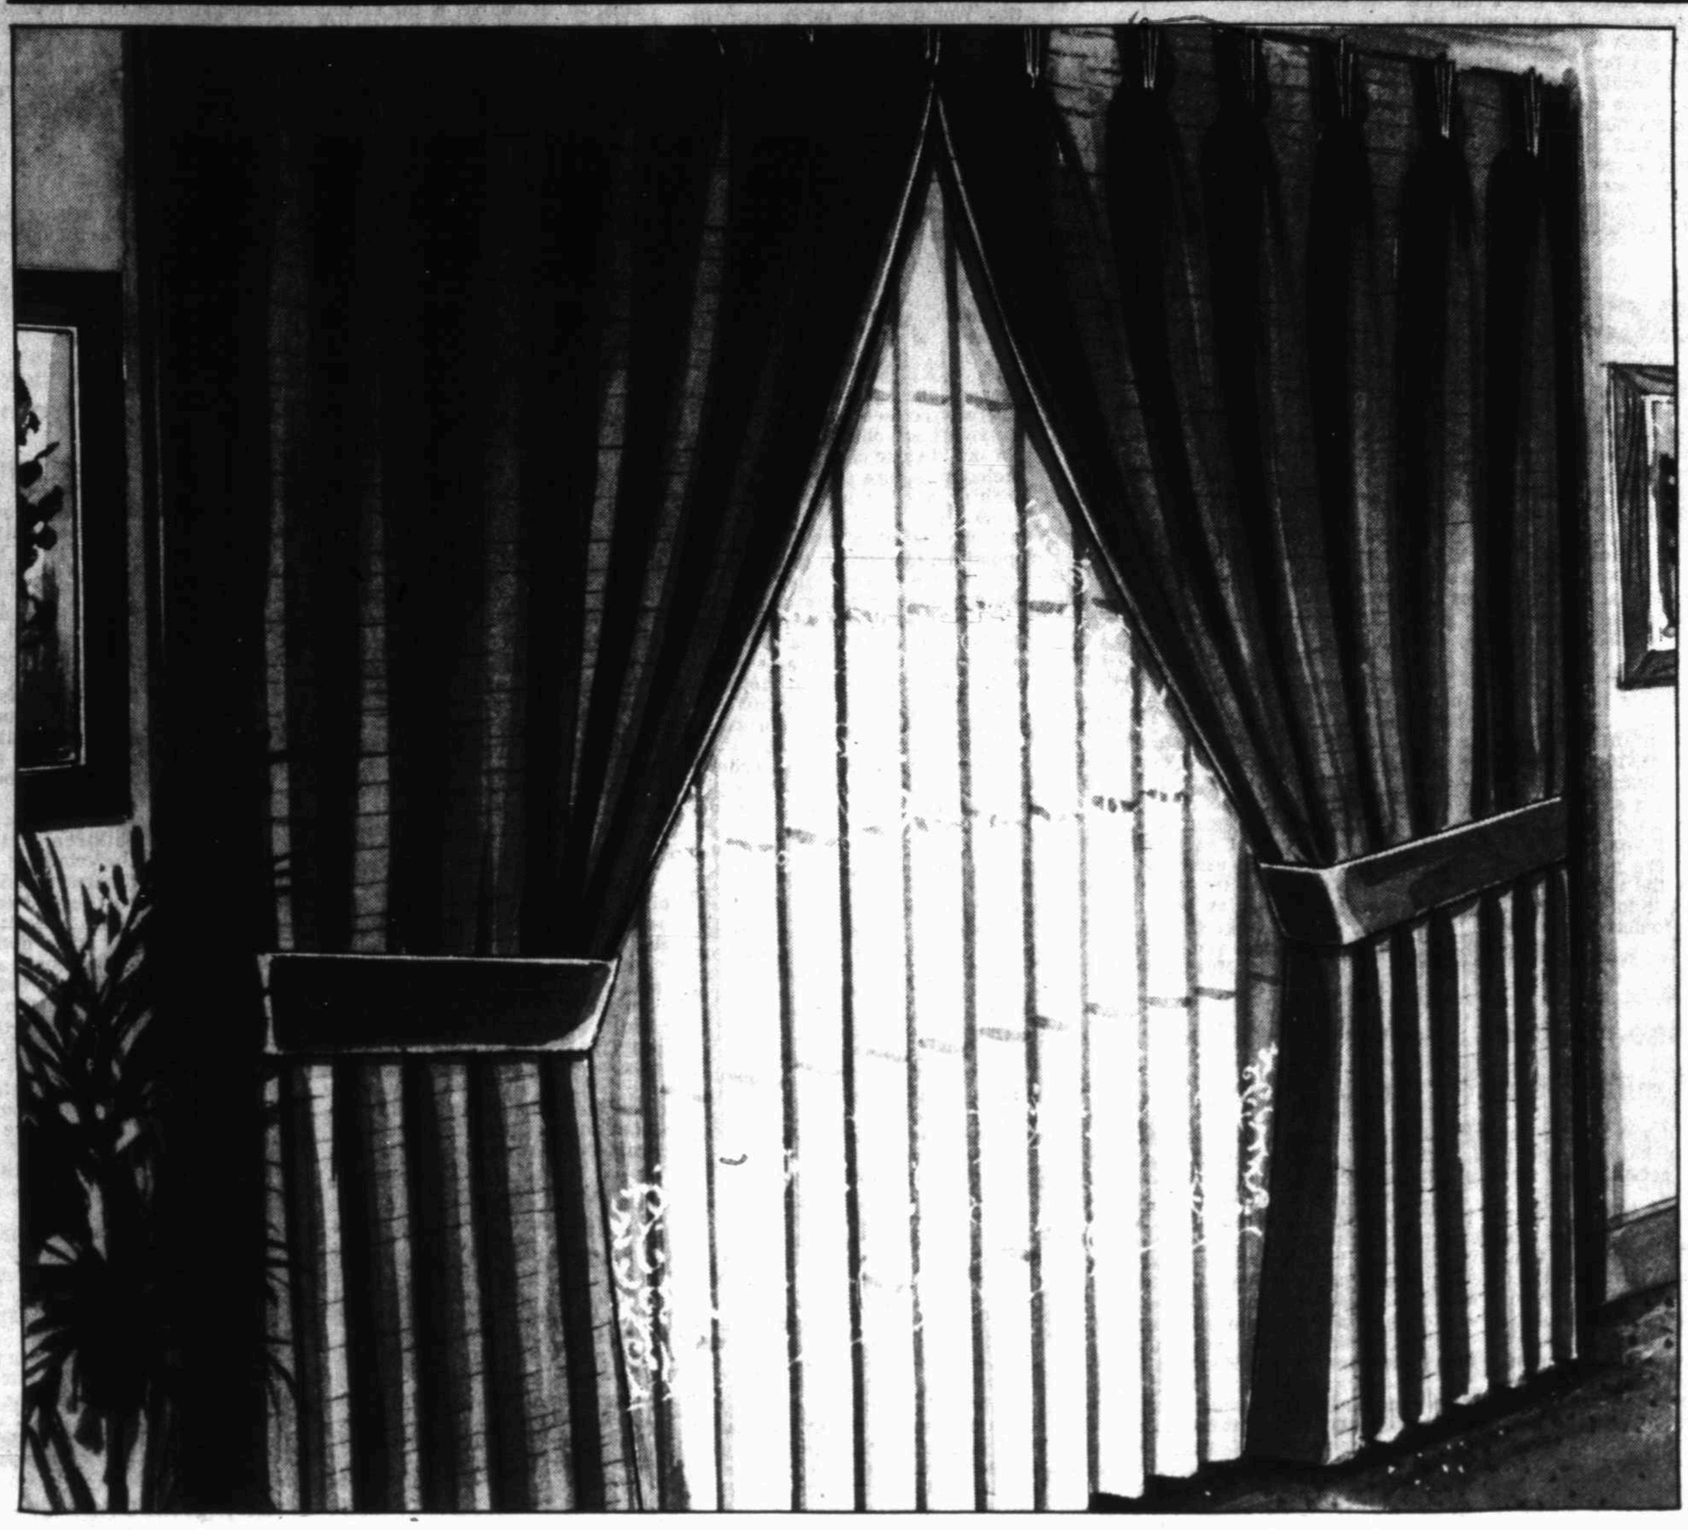

PRESIDENT REAGAN made this point clearly so that Castro's Cuba and the Communist junta running Nicaragua cannot miss the meaning. They do the proxy work for the U.S.S.R. in Central America and seek to spread armed subversion throughout all South America where seven nations have recently turned to democratic, civilian rule.

In a revealing statement late Thursday President Reagan disclosed that Iran, under the Ayatollah Khomeini, is the latest to aid the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua. President Reagan also mentioned that Libya, led by Khadafy, and the PLO had been active with the Sandinistas. Therefore the president intends to ask Congress to reinstate aid for the anti-Sandinista fighters as a matter of "self-defense" for the United States and within the rights of the charters of the Organization of American States and the United Nations.

"Today, human freedom is on the march," President Reagan noted, "and nowhere more so than in our own hemisphere."

I particularly liked the president's paraphrase of Sir Winston Churchill's remark saying he was not re-elected president of the United States "to preside over the dissolution of the Americas."

School nurse has varied role

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter Telegram

School nurse Nancy Shaw examines eighth-grade student Kevin Teel for scoliosis and other spinal abnormalities during National School Nurses Week at Alamo Junior High School.

The tiny world of aspirin and evil-smelling cots has forever changed.

And with it has changed the ideals of the school nurse.

The school nurse of the 1980s is a combination Dr. Kildare, psychologist or shoulder to cry on — all for one low teacher's salary.

In a way, they stand as idols, on neutral ground where a student won't be handled roughly if the "cold" they went in for turns into questions about pregnancy or worries about an alcoholic parent.

In addition, nurses are there to accomplish a number of legally mandated chores.

Immunizations, hearing and spinal checks, sex, drug and alcohol education, and first aid fall under their wide umbrella. So does the all-too-typical student who wanders in and asks, "Am I normal?"

Many times the job includes counseling parents and children and often results in referrals to other agencies and hospitals.

"We don't try to take the place of the child's parent. We work with them. Often, we find referral services if a problem is large enough to require professional help," said Ruth Mitchell, school nurse. "Much of our time also is spent finding medical and dental care for those who can't afford it."

Eight school nurses currently serve the Midland Independent School District, all of whom lock themselves up in a tiny cubicle to listen to the joys and tears of their adolescent patients.

Children haven't changed over the years. They're still scared and intrigued by the wonders of their expanding lives, Ms. Mitchell said. Their attitudes reflect the attitudes of society.

"If people on television are talking about homosexuality, abortions and drugs, the kids talk about the same things in the same direct way," she added.

Of course, nurses' experiences vary with the ages of the children with whom they work.

There is range of problems, not the least of which is that of young girls entering high school and falling prey to older, more experienced high school boys.

Often, the questions fielded are highly personal.

"A lot of the time they'll tell us problems they won't tell anybody else. Other times they're just looking for someone to listen," she said.

In short, the youngsters are trying to digest culture's prime points of insanity while their bodies are growing and changing and their desire to rebel against authority is at its peak.

The key to the job is an ability to clue into the intense feelings of youth.

It's exhausting work, the doing of which was summed up by Ms. Mitchell this way: "We're there so they can come in and get a little extra tender loving care. I love school nursing. I wouldn't be here if I didn't love the work and care about them all."

Redmen end Hoyas' streak

Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. — Chris Mullin scored 20 points including three key free throws and third-ranked St. John's withstood a frenzied rally by top-ranked Georgetown to end the Hoyas' 29-game winning streak with a 66-65 Big East Conference basketball victory Saturday.

The Redmen, who led by as many as 18 points early in the second half, were hard-pressed to extend their winning streak to 10 and raise their season record to 15-1.

Georgetown made only 11 of 22 free throws, including two straight misses apiece by Billy Martin and All-American center Patrick Ewing after Georgetown had cut the lead to 59-51 with seven minutes to go. Ewing was held to just nine points but had 15 rebounds.

It was first loss for the the defending NCAA champions since last Feb. 21, when St. John's beat them 75-71, also at the Capital Centre.

ST. JOHN'S winning margin came with 25 seconds left when Mullin hit the second of two free throws to make it 66-61. Michael Jackson scored with 18 seconds left and again with six seconds left for Georgetown's final four points. Mullin then held the ball out of bounds before throwing it in just as time ran out.

When the Redmen beat Georgetown last year, they did not have Walter Berry, who was attending San Jacinto Junior College. But Saturday, Berry added 14 points and grabbed 13 rebounds as the only other St. John's player in double figures. David Wingate's 16 points paced Georgetown.

St. John's led by 14 points late in the first half and walked off with a 40-30 lead at intermission.

College Basketball Roundup

Berry, a 6-foot-8 sophomore who had spent the last 13 minutes of the first half on the bench after picking up two fouls, contributed three field goals in a 10-2 spurt that gave the Redmen a 55-37 lead with 12:04 remaining in the game.

Wingate's three-point play then capped an 8-0 Georgetown run that reduced its deficit to 57-47. The Redmen went up again 59-47 on a jump shot by Mullin, but St. John's began to fold under Georgetown's relentless full-court defense and the Hoyas scored seven straight points to pull within 63-60 with 1:23 remaining on a basket by Wingate.

Mullin then scored on three foul shots, while Jackson got the Hoyas' last five points.

St. John's took over the Big East lead with a 7-0 record, while Georgetown dropped to 18-1 overall and 7-1 in the conference.

Willie Glass added 11 points for St. John's, while Jackson had 12 and Martin 10.

Memphis St. 89, Va. Tech 79

BLACKSBURG, Va. — Keith Lee scored 37 points and hauled down 12 rebounds Saturday to propel Memphis State's fourth-ranked Tigers to a Metro Conference victory over Virginia Tech.

Lee, a 6-foot-10 senior averaging 20.5 points a game, broke a three-game scoring slump in which he scored a total of just 27 points. The victory raised the Tigers' record to 15-1 overall and 5-1 in the conference. Tech dropped to 13-4 and 4-1.

The Tigers and Hokies exchanged the lead 10 times in the first half, but the Hokies took a 40-38 halftime lead behind the scoring of Perry Young and Dell Curry, each with 12 points.

Young kept Virginia Tech in the game early in the second half, scoring 12 of 14 Tech points during a four-minute period to give his team a 60-57 lead with 11:43 remaining.

But Young committed his fourth foul and was removed from the game with 9:30 left, and the Hokies went cold. During the next 8½ minutes, Tech managed just six points, all by Curry, to 16 for the Tigers — Lee getting nine of them.

Curry finished with 30 points and Young added 27 points and 10 rebounds. William Bedford backed Lee with 17 points and 12 rebounds and Baskerville Holmes added 16 points and 10 caroms.

Duke 100, Clemson 83

CLEMSON, S.C. — Duke forward Mark Alarie scored 21 points as fifth-ranked Duke claimed an Atlantic Coast Conference victory over Clemson.

The win lifted Duke to 4-3 in the conference and 14-3 overall. Clemson is 10-7 and 2-5 in the league.

Reserve forward David Henderson scored 19 points for the Blue Devils and guards Johnny Dawkins and Tommy Amaker had 18 each. Chris Michael paced Clemson with 22 points.

Duke outscored Clemson 32-11 at the foul line as the Tigers were whistled for 33 personal fouls. Clemson, playing without starting center Glen McCants who was attending a funeral, lost four starters to fouls. Duke lost center Jay Bilas and forward Dan Meagher.

Dawkins hit a basket to pull the Blue Devils ahead 70-69, and after the score was tied twice, Dawkins put Duke ahead for good, 74-72, with 9:54 to play.

Syracuse 80, Pittsburgh 75

PITTSBURGH — Dwayne "Pearl" Washington scored 30 points as Syracuse rallied from a seven-point second-half deficit for an Big East Conference victory over Pittsburgh.

Rafael Addison scored 12 of his 16 points in the second half as the 11th-ranked Orangemen, trailing 55-48, reeled off eight consecutive points to take a 56-55 lead with 8:30 remaining.

After seven lead exchanges, Syracuse, 12-3, took the lead for good when Addison hit a running one-hander in the lane with 2:49 to play, giving the Orange a 70-68 edge.

Andre Hawkins connected on a three-point play 39 seconds later and Greg Monroe hit one of two free throws to boost the Syracuse lead to 74-68 after the Orange wound more than a minute off the clock following a missed Curtis Aiken jumper for Pitt.

Alexis came off the bench to score 13 points for Syracuse, all but two in the second half, as the Orange won for the fourth time in seven Big East games.

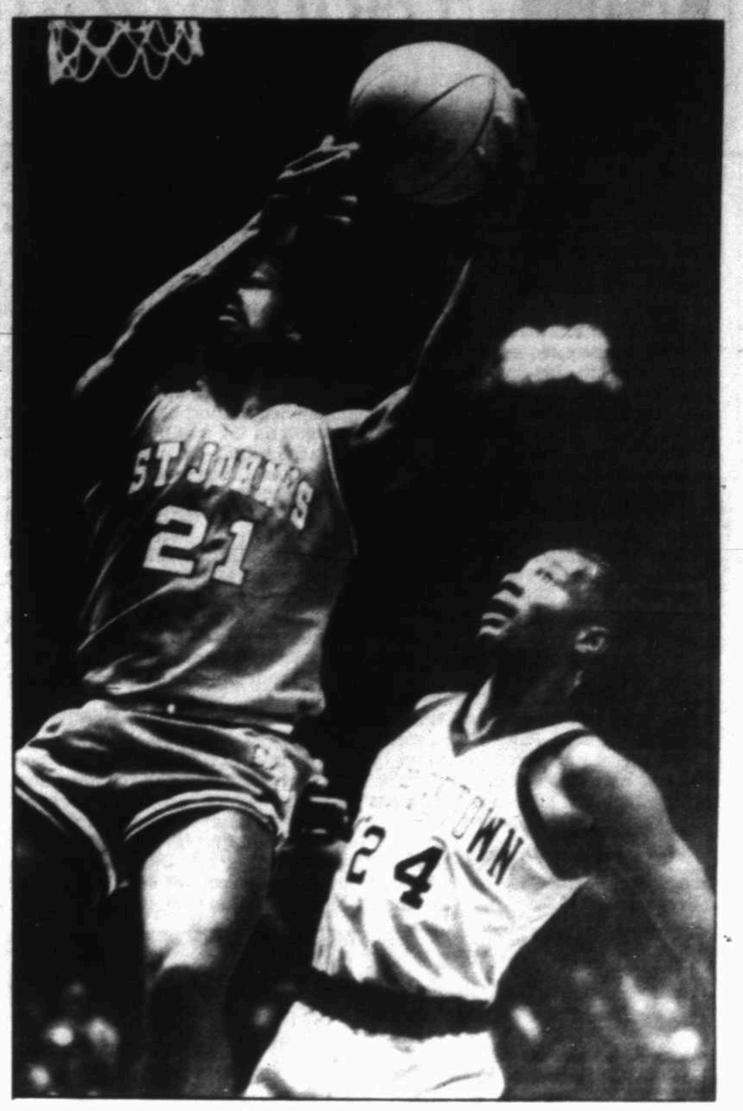

Louisville 84, N.C. State 78

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Jeff Hall scored a career-high 22 points and Louisville survived a late dry spell to down North Carolina State.

The nonconference victory improved Louisville's record to 10-8 and prevented the first five-game losing skid at the school in 41 years. The Wolfpack, losing for the second time in six games, dropped to 11-6.

Senior Lorenzo Charles scored 17 points and Ernie Myers added 14 to lead N.C. State.

Tech's Benford stuns No. 2 SMU in final seconds

Associated Press

LUBBOCK - The second-ranked Southern Methodist Mustangs saw their chance to move higher in The Associated Press poll die in raucus Lubbock Municipal Coliseum Saturday.

Texas Tech's Tony Benford hit a 10-foot baseline jumper with three seconds to play to carry the Raiders to a 64-63 Southwest Conference ambush of the Mustangs.

"It's difficult to go undefeated on the road and have everything go your way," said SMU Coach Dave Bliss. "We had our chances and missed some free throws at the end. We had our opportunities.

"It was a typical road game."

The Mustangs had to play the final 6:48 without start center Jon Koncak who fouled out with only six points.

"We made some foolish fouls but still could have won if we hit all our free throws," said Bliss.

Tech Coach Gerald Myers said "Our guys had it won, lost it, then came back and won it and that's the important thing."

Tech blew an 11-point lead but came back at the end on Benford's critical bucket.

Myers said "This definitely has to be one of the greatest victories since we've been here but the importance of the game will be determined by how we use it down the line."

He added "Bubba Jennings played a great game. We did a good job on stopping Koncak inside."

The defeat was the first in SWC play for the Mustangs against six victories. It was only their second loss of the season with 15 victories.

The loss also cost the Mustangs a shot at the No. 1 Associated Press ranking after top-ranked Georgetown fell to St. John's earlier in the day.

SWC Basketball Roundup

BENFORD'S SHOT came after the Red Raiders had blown an 11 point lead late in the second half.

Carl Wright led the Pony comeback with a bucket and four free throws as SMU took a 63-62 lead with 47 seconds to play.

After Benford hit his shot the Mustangs threw the ball away but Vince Taylor missed a free throw.

Larry Davis, who had 25 points for SMU, grabbed the rebound and hurled the ball the length of the floor and it hit the glass, bouncing harmlessly away.

Jennings hit 13 of 15 shots for the Red Raiders to score a game-high 26 points as a sellout crowd of 8,174 jammed Lubbock Municipal Coliseum, watching Tech increase its SWC record to 5-2. The Raiders are 12-5 for the season.

Koncak fouled out with 7:34 to go in the game with only six points.

Tech ran up a 58-47 lead but the Mustangs came back behind Butch Moore and Wright. Tech scored only three buckets in the final six minutes of the game. Jennings was unstoppable in the first half despite a box-and-one defense by the Mustangs who had Butch Moore follow his every step.

Henderson sets three records

El Paso swimmer has four-victory showing

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Just in case you were wondering, El Paso's Kevin Henderson is alive and well in the West Texas swimming world.

Henderson, swimming for the El Paso Aqua Posse, set three pool records and won four events overall Saturday as the McDonald's City of Midland Swim Team Winter Invitational swim meet concluded its second day of activity at the COM pool.

The meet, which is the largest in the history of the COM pool with over 425 entrants on teams ranging from Fort Worth to El Paso, concludes today and is slated to heat up again at 9 a.m. until conclusion.

Henderson was by far the show on Saturday as he went on his record busting pace in the 13-14 age group. He won the 500 freestyle in pool record time of 4:52.97 to start his record surge. Henderson also recorded pool records of 22.87 in the 50 free and 2:11.44 in the 200 backstroke, beating a record that had stood intact since 1973.

To complete his four-win performance Saturday, Henderson also won the 100 butterfly, but in less than record time.

Henderson set a slew of records a couple of years ago in the 11-12 age group in a Midland meet and now he is back at the top of his class in the 13-14 division and apparently going strong.

COM Winter Meet

But Henderson wasn't the only swimmer to gain a hold on the moment's glory. EPAP's Elin Bartell also set a pool record with a 25.51 in the 13-14 50 girls 50 free and another pool mark fell in the 200 medley relay in the 200 medley boys relay when the Tarrant County Aquatic Team entry posted a team effort of 2:16.37, beating out the second place team from COM.

Another pool record was also discovered from Friday's competition where EPAP's Carrie Candler fo EPAP set a pool mark in the 1650 free with a 19.38.7, making six pool marks that fell through the first two days and first 60 events of the scheduled 122.

EPAP also showed a lot of team depth in addition to the record wave as they posted 635 points through 60 events to take the team lead. TCAT was second with 604 while COM stands in third with 270 points. The team race today will be between EPAP and TCAT.

Fort Worth's TCAT team got a big boost from tiny Kyla Hagan in the 10-under division. She won five events Saturday, the most by any individual in the meet. Hagan won the 200 free, 100 back, 50 back, 100 free and 50 fly.

TCAT's Johnny Renko matched Henderson in the victory totals, winning four events in the 10-under boys competition. Renko won the 200 free, 100 back, 100 free and 50 fly.

Laura Abbott of the Odessa Aquatic Club was a three-event winner, winning the 25 free, 25 back and 50 free in the 8-under competition. Terry Witherington of the Fort Worth Water Works was also a three-even winner in the 11-12 boys division, winning the 200 free, 100 back and 100 free.

TCAT also had Karen McNear (11-12 girls) and Chrissy Planje (15-18) to pick up double victories. McNear won in the 100 back and 50 back while Planje won the 500 free and 100 fly.

COM's only victory Saturday came from Jacob Anderson in the 8-under boys competition with a 20.56 in the 25 back. Anderson also had a third in the 25 free and 50 free and teammate Nathan Reed was third in the 25 back.

COM garnered most of its points in the 10-under division where both the boys and girls had some strong performances. Carrie Henry placed second in the 100 back and 100 free and third in the 200 free while the girls also placed third in the 200 medley relay.

The 10-under boys of COM, in addition to second in the record 200 medley relay, got seconds from Shannon Guignon in the 200 free and 100 back while Matt Welch was second in the 50 back. Guignon was also third in the 100 free.

The only other top three finisher for COM was Jane Marker with a third in the 200 breaststroke.

Young golfers wising up to Lady Golf's tricks

Golf is the cruelest of sports. Like life, it's unfair. It's a harlot. A trollop. It leads you on. It never lives up to its promises. It's not a sport, it's bondage. An obsession. A boulevard of broken dreams. It plays with men. And runs off with the butcher.

Take the L. A. Open of 1982, the opening round. The fickle goddess of golf is at her wickedest. She has chosen an unknown innocent, Terry Lynn Mauney, to lead down the primrose path this day. She is blowing into his ear, mussing his hair. She has him helpless, like a lovesick schoolboy.

He has just shot the lowest score ever at Riviera Country Club, lower than Ben Hogan, Byron Nelson, Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus or even Bobby Jones ever shot here. Visions of Cadillacs are dancing in Terry Mauney's (pronounced Mooney's) head. Wherever he looks he can see fame and fortune.

He is leading the L.A. Open by four shots with a 63. He is six shots better than Tom Watson, five better than Johnny Miller and 20 ahead of some competitors. He is on the late news, the A-wire, Page 1. The world is waiting to hear what he thinks of the tax laws, the Middle East crisis or how he holds his hands at address and what his golfing secret is.

HEADY STUFF for a 31-year-old pro from North Carolina who has never dazzled the golf world before, in fact who has never won a tournament and who amassed, if that's the word, only $15,341 the year before and has shot his way into the tournament in a five-hole playoff for the last qualifying spot. He can't believe this beautiful lady could pick him, of all people.

So, this bitch goddess of golf success continued to smile on him, you ask? You don't know this bawd. By the next days, he was shooting 73s and 74s. Watson was rushing right by him to the championship.

By September, he was in a station wagon on his way home. He had lost his tour card, he needed $31,000 in about two tournaments to stay on the road. The painted tramp had left him standing in the church with confetti in his hair, the orchestra playing, the preacher waiting — while she was off sweet-talking some other poor soul.

Today, Terry Mauney is a sports anchorman at WBTV, Channel 3 in Charlotte, far from the siren of golf, safe from her blandishments ever again.

An isolated instance? Hardly. This bedizened lady has lavished her false favors on generations of poor saps in cleats who fall for her phony allures. In 1950, an out-of-work pro from Alabama, one Lee Mackey Jr., electrified the golfing world by breaking the U.S. Open record with an opening score of 64 at the storied Merion Cricket Club in Philadelphia.

NOT TO worry. Hogan won the tournament. Mackey shot an 81 the next day and has become just another trivia question and another conquest for the whore of the fairways.

In 1966, a totally unknown Texas pro named Rives McBee (a former assistant pro at Midland Country Club) tied the Open record again with a 64 in the second round. Unfortunately, he surrounded it with 76, 74 and 78. Chalk up another for the shady lady from shady lanes, i.e., the deep rough.

The L.A. Open at Riviera is a favorite pickup joint for her. They should nail her for soliciting, lewd conduct.

IN 1975, she batted her eyes at an unsuspecting pro named Pat Fitzsimons. In his case, the courtship was more torrid. At one stretch, he chipped in out of a trap at 9, birdied 10 and eagled 11 on the way to a 64. She even let him win the tournament.

It was the last one he would win. Not many years later, he was back in Coos Bay, Ore., wondering what had become of the lady with the hourglass figure, the come-hither eyes and the glass slippers.

In 1977, she picked this guileless kid from Phoenix. Tom Purtzer had never won anything either when he followed the veiled lady to the championship with rounds of 68-76-66-72. She stayed with him longer than most but he was also to find a note on the pillow and the closets emptied before very long.

It took him seven years to win another tournament. But he was lucky. He's still on the tour and playing in L.A. again this year. She didn't ruin him, only hypnotized him for a little bit. Tom got over her.

Jerry Lanston Wadkins is getting her divided attention at the L.A. Open at Riviera this year. Lanny tied the course record of 63 in his opening round Thursday.

But don't look for Wadkins to fall for the silken hose and painted cheeks and high heels and plunging neckline. He knows this old coquette has seen better days. He knows what she looks like in the morning. He knows she'll take his money, rob his pride and leave him for the first gigolo or sailor off a tanker who comes along.

LANNY'S NOT your basic rube in the city. He knows golf for the fraud she is. He has seen the bright lights and the glitter before. As far as he is concerned she's nobody's sweetheart now. He doesn't fancy her somehow.

Lanny's no virgin at golf. He's been up and down the circuit. This would not be his first tournament win. It would be his 14th. He's not going to be standing in the rain wondering where everybody went.

The old girl may be losing her touch. She better run to the mirror and see if the lines are showing around the eyes, if the hair is black at the roots, if the net stockings have a hole in them.

They may be getting wise to her. She may go tottering around on her spiked heels wondering, "Whatever became of those nice, innocent, good-looking young boys who had never been to town before? Whatever became of boys like that — what was his name? Mooney?"

All she gets now is guys who tell her: "Get outta here before I call the cops!"

Hal Sutton and caddy Eugene Dozier line up a putt on the 14th green during the 59th Los Angeles Open golf tournament.

Double bogey on 18th fells Sutton

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

LOS ANGELES - Hal Sutton fell victim to a three-putt double bogey on the 18th hole and handed Lanny Wadkins a 2-shot lead Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 Los Angeles Open Golf Tournament.

Sutton, whose last victory came on this same course in the 1983 PGA national championship, was tied for the top spot when he played his second shot on the difficult finishing hole at the Riviera Country Club course.

But he got it well up a hill on the left, pitched poorly to about 30 feet from the cup, then — with Wadkins watching from the scorer's tent — three-putted for the double bogey that finished off a round of 70.

Wadkins, playing in the group ahead of Sutton, had a 4-under-par 67 and completed 54 holes at 13-under 200.

Sutton's problems on the last hole dropped him back into a tie for second at 202 with Corey Pavin and Gary Koch. Pavin, a hometown boy, said the ovation he received for his spectacular, 7-under-par 64 "is something I will remember a long time."

Koch, tied with Sutton and Larry Mize after 36 holes, also had a 70.

Mize, who shot a course-record 62 in Friday's second round, had to work hard to match par 71 in the mild, partly-cloudy weather. He was tied at 203 with Scott Simpson and Chip Beck. Beck and Simpson each had a 66.

L.A. Open

That left seven players locked within three shots of the top going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson were well back. Nicklaus birdied the 18th for a 70 that left him at 208. Calvin Peete, winner of last week's Phoenix Open, also was 70-208. Watson, making his first start of the season, had an erratic 72 for 209.

WADKINS, WHO won the Bob Hope Classic that opened the PGA Tour season, was one shot off the pace when the day's play started.

He scored a 2-putt birdie-4 on the first hole, scored from 12 feet on the third, had a share of the top spot and wasn't headed again.

He birdied the 11th from about six feet, rolled in a 12-footer on the 13th, made his only bogey on the 14th where he missed the green, then got the shot back with a 20-to-25 foot birdie putt on the 15th.

Wadkins, a former winner on this course, parred in from there. His day's work done and the ball in his pocket, he took 2-stroke command when Sutton made the decisive 6 on the final hole, completing a round that included six birdies, three bogeys and a double bogey.

It put Wadkins in the position he wanted, in front of the pack.

"You always want to lead," Wadkins said, "but two shots is not very comfortable.

Bradley fights off Stephenson to gain one-stroke advantage

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Pat Bradley fired a 4-under-par 68 and emerged from a back-nine battle with Jan Stephenson to take a one-stroke lead Saturday after three rounds of the $200,000 Mazda Classic at Deer Creek Country Club.

Bradley, who won this Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament in 1983, finished 54 holes over the 6,079-yard course at 8-under 208.

Stephenson, annoyed by a tournament marshall's order to speed her play, lost a chance to tie for the lead when she missed a 3-foot putt on the final hole. But despite her persistent putting problems, Stephenson turned in a 67 Saturday.

Ayako Okamoto, the second-round leader, shot her second 73 of the tournament to fall to third place at 211. Japan's top woman golfer, who shot a 65 one day earlier, struggled Saturday, double bogeying the 5th hole and adding bogeys at the 10th and 17th.

COLLEGE

Hall, a junior from Ashland, Ky., had a previous best of 21 points. Forwards Billy Thompson and Mark McSwain chipped in 15 and 14 points respectively for the Cardinals, while Herbert Crook and Mike Abram had 10 apiece.

Maryland 77, Notre Dame 65

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Len Bias scored 16 of his 18 points in the second half, taking the scoring burden off Maryland's guards, as the Terps held off a Notre Dame rally to defeat the Irish.

Bias and Adrian Branch, Maryland's only scorers in double figures for the season, had only two points apiece in the first half. But the Maryland guards, led by Keith Gatlin with 12, teamed for 19 points and a 29-18 Maryland lead. Notre Dame shot only 21 percent in the opening 20 minutes.

Ken Barlow led Notre Dame with 16 points, Donald Royal had 12 and freshman guard David Rivers scored five, 10 below his season average.

Gatlin finished with 14 points for the Terps, now 15-5, and Tom Jones and Jeff Baxter each had 10. Branch managed only six points, ending a streak of 30 consecutive games in double figures.

Kansas 70, Colorado 68

BOULDER, Colo. — Calvin Thompson canned two free throws with 16 seconds left and popped in a jumper at the buzzer as No. 15 Kansas squeaked past Colorado in a Big Eight Conference game.

The Jayhawks, 15-3 overall and 3-1 in league games, broke a 68-68 tie as time expired when Thompson swished a running 15-foot jump shot.

Colorado, which dropped to 7-10 and 1-3, had knotted the score five seconds earlier on a Michael Lee jumper from the top of the key.

The Buffaloes jumped out to a 33-29 advantage at halftime and increased the lead to 41-31 four minutes into the second half. But Kansas came back to grab the lead at 46-45 on a hook shot by center Greg Dreiling.

Ala-Birm 66, Va Commonwealth 62

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. Guard Steve Mitchell scored 25 points, including two insurance free throws in the final 11 seconds, as Alabama-Birmingham defeated 19th-ranked Virginia Commonwealth in Sun Conference action.

Virginia Commonwealth led by as many as eight points in the first half until Alabama-Birmingham took a 30-29 lead with two minutes remaining on a steal and reverse layup by Mitchell.

Alabama-Birmingham, which outshot its rival from the field 50 percent to 43 percent, led by 32-31 at intermission.

With 8:27 remaining in the second half, Mitchell stole the ball and put in another reverse layup to break a 47-47 tie and put Alabama-Birmingham ahead for good at 49-47.

Dayton 65, DePaul 64

DAYTON, Ohio — Center Dave Colbert's disputed shot at the buzzer lifted the University of Dayton to an upset of No. 7 DePaul in a non-conference game.

Colbert rebounded a missed shot by guard Sedric Toney and put in a short bank shot as the buzzer sounded. DePaul players and Coach Joey Meyer contended the shot came too late.

Dallas Comegys had a game-high 24 points for DePaul, including a jumper for a 64-63 lead with just 10 seconds to play. Toney brought the ball upcourt and missed with a shot off the backboard, but Colbert pulled down the rebound and put up the game winner.

Both teams now have 13-4 records.

Arizona St 83, Oregon St 82 (2OT)

CORVALLIS, Ore. — Chris Sandle scored 13 of his 15 points in the second half including a game-winning free throw as the Arizona State Sun Devils defeatd the 10th-ranked Oregon State Beavers in double overtime in a Pacific 10 Conference game.

For the Beavers, who were led by A.C. Green's 24 points, the loss snapped a 10-game win streak and a 17-game home floor string. It was the Beavers first loss in Pac-10 play as they fell to 5-1 in the conference and 15-2 overall.

Oklahoma 94, Kansas St. 75

NORMAN, Okla. — Two-time All-American Wayman Tisdale broke out of a mild scoring slump and tallied 37 points to lead ninth-ranked Oklahoma to a Big Eight Conference romp over Kansas State.

Tisdale, a 6-foot-9 junior from Tulsa, had his highest scoring total of the year since he scored 55 points in an offensive explosion earlier this season against tiny Southwestern of Texas.

Tulsa 66, S. Illinois 60

TULSA, Okla. — Steve Harris scored a game-high 19 points to lead No.17 Tulsa to a victory over Southern Illinois in Missouri Valley Conference action.

SWC

Texas started the game with an offensive flurry as forward Mike Wacker scored 6 of the Horns' first 8 points. Wacker finished with a game high 18 points and 13 rebounds with John Brownlee the only other Longhorn in double figures with 12 points.

Sophomore forward Carven Holcombe paced TCU with 15 points and 9 rebounds, but it was the play of 6-11 Grissom which rallied the Frogs. Grissom hit five of seven field goal attempts, three of four from the line and grabbed seven rebounds.

"I guess it's about time I started to play like that," Grissom said. "I just started looking for the shot. Texas would roll off of me every time I met a screen, and our guys found me open underneath."

Dennis Nutt, who scored 14 points for the Horned Frogs, said TCU was rushing its offense in the first half and was shooting too quickly.

"But in the second half, we passed the ball better, and our offense began to work. It's always good to get the inside punch (from Grissom). It helps open us up on the outside. You have to have all-around scoring to win in this league, and we're really glad that Greg is starting to come through."

TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth said both teams were playing such good defense in the second half.

"We did a good job of keeping them out of the middle (on defense) and not letting them get the ball into the big guys. That was the key to the ball game, that and the way Grissom came through for us."

Baylor 65, Rice 56

HOUSTON — Baylor's Carlos Briggs scored 23 points and the Bears held off a late surge by Rice to end a nine-game losing streak and beat the Owls 65-56.

Baylor, which also ended a 15-game road losing streak, was outscored 10-0 over a 4:24 span of the second half before holding on to improve its record to 8-10 for the season and 1-6 in SWC games.

Baylor broke from a 32-32 deadlock early in the second half and took a 46-35 lead on a 16-3 spurt for a 50-37 lead with 9:32 to play.

The Owls, who dropped to 8-9 and 1-6, then scored the next 10 points, narrowing Baylor's lead to 50-47.

Rice then went cold and the Bears rolled to their first conference victory of the season, with additional help from freshman Michael Williams with 17 points.

Tony Barnett led the Owls with 13 points and Greg Hines added 12.

THE BEARS hit five of their first six shots to start the second half and appeared on their way to an easy victory before the Owls' 10-0 streak that provided some tense moments for Baylor Coach Jim Haller.

"That's when I started hollering," Haller said. "But we regained our composure and came back to preserve the victory. This was very critical because if we'd lost that game, it really would have deflated us."

Baylor also had to overcome 22 turnovers while the Owls added 23 turnovers.

"Maybe we grew up a little on this road trip because I think we played a couple of pretty good games," Haller said. "We did something Lamar, Tulane and TCU couldn't do and that's beat Rice on their home court."

Rice Coach Tommy Suitts said the Owls' second half surge came too late.

"Once we got behind by 13 points we played well," Suitts said. "We were active on defense and more aggressive on offense, but we just had too far to come."

Miners squeeze by Lobos, 71-69

Associated Press

EL PASO — Junior center Dave Feitl scored 21 points, including two free throws with 31 seconds remaining, to lead Texas-El Paso to a 71-69 Western Athletic Conference victory over New Mexico Saturday.

The win improved the Miners' record to 15-5 overall, 7-1 in the WAC and gave them sole possession of first place in the conference. The Lobos, who went into Saturday's contest a half game behind Texas-El Paso in the WAC standings, fell to 12-6 and 5-2.

Feitl canned both ends of a one-and-one with 31 seconds remaining to put the Miners up 70-69. New Mexico had a chance to score in the final seconds until junior Juden Smith intercepted a pass from Lobo Hunter Greene with :03 left.

Smith, who was fouled by Greene, then hit the first of two free throws to give the Miners the two-point win.

The two teams traded buckets during the opening minutes of the first half until Feitl and Smith ran off six consecutive points to give the Miners a 10-6 lead.

New Mexico, led by Greene with 22 points, came back with four unanswered points of its own to tie it and the game see-sawed for most of the period.

The Miners went in at the half up 35-32. Sophomore guard Kelvin Scarborough opened the second period for New Mexico with two consecutive buckets to give the Lobos a one-point advantage.

The Lobos stretched their lead to as many as seven points during the second half. But after being down 59-54, the Miners had six unanswered points and took the lead again, 60-59, with 4:15 left in the game.

Contributing to the Miner win were senior guard Luster Goodwin with 16 points and Smith with 17.

Other Lobos hitting in double-figures were junior Johnny Brown with 18 points, senior George Scott with 12 and Scarborough with 11.

Lamar 72, Louisiana Tech 64

BEAUMONT — Jerry Everett scored 21 points to lead the unranked Lamar Cardinals to an upset victory over the tenth-ranked Louisiana Tech Bulldogs.

A school record crowd of 8,317 watched as the Cardinals, 10-7, handed the Bulldogs their second loss of the season in the Southland Conference clash.

Kari Malone had 13 points and 11 rebounds in a losing cause for Louisiana Tech, now 16-2.

Wichita St. 99, W. Texas St. 86

CANYON — Xavier McDaniel scored a career-high 44 points and grabbed 16 rebounds to lead Wichita State past West Texas State in Missouri Valley Conference action.

The Shockers raised their season record to 10-8 and 6-1 in MVC play, while the Buffaloes fell to 8-10 and 1-7.

In the first half, the Buffaloes made a game of it behind guard Earl Davis' 14 points and 11 from Eric Carmon. But the Shockers jumped ahead 10 points with 13:23 left in the half and never again relinquished the lead.

Besides McDaniel's career-point high, he continued his streak of 13 straight games of 20 points or better. And in 67 of the last 76 games, he has been in double figures in both points and rebounds.

Other Shockers in double figures included center Henry Garr with 15, Aubrey Sherrod with 14, Gus Santos with 11 and Mike Arline with 10.

Earl Davis led West Texas with 22, followed by Tommy Johnson's 16 and Eric Carmon's 11.

Alcorn St. 82, Texas So. 80

HOUSTON — Forward Michael Phelps made both ends of a one-and-one with six seconds left in overtime to give Alcorn State a victory over Texas Southern.

Texas Southern forced the overtime period when Andre Applewhite made a layup with 30 seconds left in regulation. Forward Stephenfon Standfield blocked a desperation shot by Phelps at the buzzer to put the game in overtime.

Phelps led all scorers with 32 points. Standfield led the Texas Southern charge with 20 points and 15 rebounds.

The win upped the Alcorn's record to 12-4, while Texas Southern fell to 6-10.

Hardin-Simmons 79, Georgia St. 66

ABILENE — Hardin-Simmons overcame a 31-point performance by Georgia State's Chris Jackson to take a win over the Panthers in Trans America Athletic Conference play.

Jackson hit 12 of 21 shots and kept Georgia State alive for much of the game. But Hardin-Simmons, ahead 56-51 with 8:46 remaining, exploded in the final minutes and coasted to the win.

Hardin-Simmons upped its record to 7-11 on the season and 3-4 in the TAAC. Georgia State fell to 2-16 and 0-7.

McNeese 82, N. Texas 64

DENTON — Jerome Batiste and Joe Dumars combined for 50 points to lead McNeese State to a victory over North Texas State in Southland Conference action.

McNeese upped its record to 10-7 for the season and 3-2 in conference play; North Texas dropped to 2-15 and 0-5.

Vincent Greene led North Texas with 17 points. Larry Banks and Todd Warren were the only other Eagles in double figures with 11 points each.

Samford 82, Houston Baptist 65

HOUSTON — A streak of 14 straight points carried Houston Baptist to a victory over Samford behind the 22 points of Matt England.

The victory before a packed house of 2,526 raised the Huskies' record to 14-4 for the year and 6-1 in the Trans America Athletic Conference, where they are in a tie for first.

Craig Beard and Darryl Hagler each scored 15 points for Samford, which fell to 12-8 and 3-4. England hit six of eight shots from the field and all 10 of his free throws. Anicet Lavodrama, who added 17 points, was 7-of-9 from the field and grabbed a game-high 10 rebounds.

S.F. Austin 68, SW Texas 49

SAN MARCOS — Guard Darnell JeanLouis scored 17 points to lead Stephen F. Austin University to a win over Southwest Texas State in Gulf Star Conference play.

Stephen F. Austin is now 12-4 while Southwest Texas dropped to 4-12.

Abilene Christian 81, East Texas 66

ABILENE — John Robinson scored 22 points to lead Abilene Christian to a Lone Star Conference victory over East Texas State.

The victory kept Abilene Christian atop the LSC standings with a 3-0 record. The Wildcats are 12-8 overall. Jerome Broadus scored 19 for the Lions, now 9-11 for the season and 1-2 in conference play.

San Antonio 81, Arlington 62

SAN ANTONIO — Texas-San Antonio fended off a comeback attempt to overpower Texas-Arlington in non-conferencel action.

Derrick Gervin paced four Texas-San Antonio players in double figures with 21 points as the Roadrunners raised their season mark to 10-6. Texas-Arlington fell to 10-9.

Sam Donnell, who hit a last-second basket to beat Texas-San Antonio earlier this month, led Texas-Arlington with 16 points.

Texas-San Antonio had exploded to a 42-26 halftime lead on 68 percent shooting from the field.

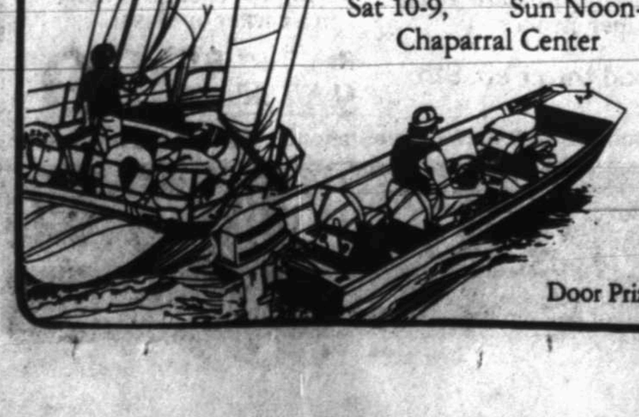

Angelo St. 75, Texas A&I 70

SAN ANGELO — Senior forward Dicky Winter had 18 points and 7 rebounds to lead the Angelo State Rams to a Lone Star Conference victory over the Texas A&I Javelinas.

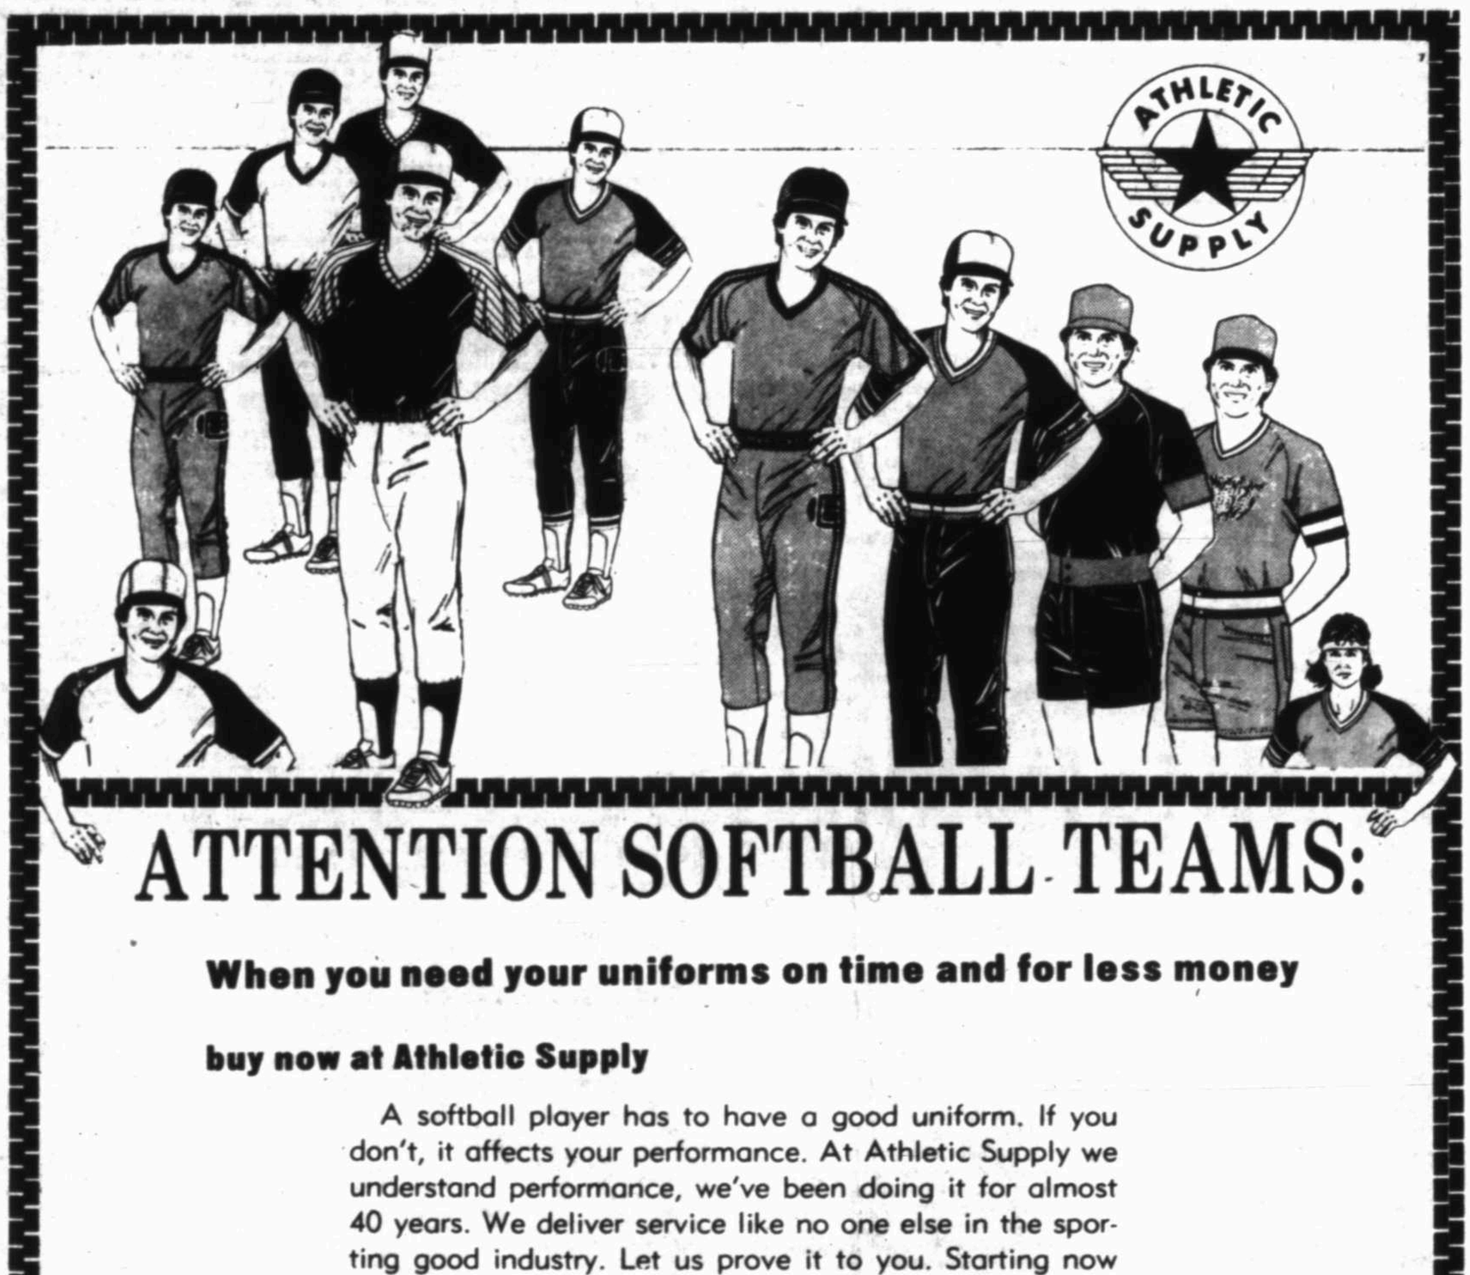

The victory lifted ASU's record to 13-9 overall and 3-0 in conference and keeps the Rams tied for the conference lead. A&I, lead by Alton Jackson's 19 points, falls to 2-7-11 and 1-2.

Flutie helps ticket sales

Sipe not ready to vacate QB job

SOUTH HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — New Jersey Generals ticket personnel had a "very hectic" Saturday with a significant increase in sales and inquiries on the day after Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie announced he would sign with the United States Football League team, a team official said.

Meanwhile, New Jersey residents reacted favorably to the anticipated signing of the former Boston College quarterback to a five-year contract with an estimated value of $5.6 million, and his future teammates, training in Orlando, Fla., said the news was not unexpected.

"Whatever (Generals owner) Donald Trump wants, he usually gets," said Brian Sipe, the team's starting quarterback last season. "It doesn't change what I am doing here. I signed for three years and I will play for three years."

Despite Sipe's vow to put up a fight for the starting position, fans said they were looking forward to seeing Flutie in action.

"He's given me so many thrills over the years, like the Miami-BC game, so it will be great to see him play in person at the Meadowlands," said Terry Gyorfy, 27, of Edison.

IN ONE of college football's most memorable plays this past season, Flutie connected with teammate Gerard Phelan on a "Hail Mary" touchdown pass in the closing seconds to give the Eagles a 47-45 victory over Miami.

Seymour Eckstein, the Generals' vice president for business, said the team beefed up its ticket sales force on Saturday.

New General Doug Flutie

"It's been very hectic day. There has been a significant increase in the number of sales and inquiries," he said.

"We have not put the numbers together yet, but they are exceptional," said Eckstein.

Steve Ferguson, a 21-year-old Seton Hall University student, said that having Flutie "will give the league new respect."

"I think it will help the league media-wise," he said.

Ferguson added that he looked forward to the possibility of the Generals signing of wide receiver Phelan, Flutie's college roommate.

"Flutie and Phelan will be an explosive combination, better than anything the Jets and Giants had last year," he said, referring to the two National Football League teams that also play at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, the Generals' home field.

ALAN McCANDLESS, another Seton Hall student, had a different opinion.

"I think it's terrible," McCandless said. "I hate the USFL. I'd rather see him (Flutie) go to the NFL, the real league."

Flutie will become the second Heisman Trophy winner the Generals acquired through a big contract in the last three years. They signed running back Herschel Walker of Georgia for more than $1 million a year following the 1982 college season.

Dave Lapham, a starting offensive guard for the Generals said he did not think any players on the team would be upset with the size of Flutie's contract.

"If he handles it as diplomatically as Herschel did, everything will be all right," Lapham said.

Sipe, who is in the second year of a three-year contract that will pay him about $800,000 per season, said he anticipated a "very competitive situation," when the rookie reports to training camp, probably in the middle of the week.

Sipe has a contract clause forbidding the Generals to trade him without his permission.

"I picture myself as an intense competitor. That's what got me where I am," he said. "I fought very hard for I've got. I don't plan on rolling over for Flutie or anybody else."

Autry plans Midland visit

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

California Angels owner Gene Autry, who swapped a saddle for a luxury box, is coming to Midland Friday to take a look at his latest minor league farm acquisition.

Accompanying the one-time singing cowboy star of the movies will be Mrs. Autry, Angels' General Manager Mike Port, Joe Bavasi and Angels field manager Gene Mauch.

A reception, at which the public will be welcome, is schedule from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. at the Midland Hilton...

Midland fans also will have an opportunity to meet the Angels' manager for 1985, Joe Maddon, who will be scouting West Texas before reporting to spring camp in Mesa, Ariz...

Maddon managed the Angels to a pennant in the Arizona Fall Instructional League with a 22-10 record...

MATT PERRY has joined the Midland Angels' front office staff as Director of Promotions.

A native of Holdredge, Neb., Perry, 24, graduated from Southern Illinois University at Carbondale in Dec. 1982 and took his masters in Sports Administration at Ohio State University.

Perry already is hard at work, helping to line up promotions for the Texas League season, which will open in Midland April 14, and completing work on the program.

Hot Stove League

"Our program will be eight pages larger than last year and we are going to a better stock paper," says Perry. "It will contain more reading material.

"I will be primarily involved in concessions, but will be doing a little bit of everything."

Perry served an internship with the New York Yankees' Columbus Clippers farm club of the AAA American Association. "And, yes, I met George Steinbrenner and he's extremely nice."...

Perry joins assistant general manager Bill Davidson as new additions to the Angels' front office. Davidson last year was in the front office at Wichita, Class AAA, American Association...

THE ANGELS will be returning to the Texas League after a four-year absence, coming to Midland from Nashua, Eastern League, N.H. The Chicago Cubs, Midland Texas League residents since 1972, meanwhile, move to Pittsfield, Mass., in the Eastern League.

Pittsfield has been out of pro baseball for several years, but is located in the picturesque western section of the Bay State at the foot of the scenic Berkshire Mountains. The franchise was shifted from Buffalo when Wichita purchased the franchise and moved Buffalo up to triple A status.

Interestingly, Pittsfield's run in the Eastern League will be a one-year shot. The club will be moved to Binghamton, N.Y., in 1986...

The Angels had three 18-game winners at the Class A level last year.

IN THE second half of the season, every time Mets' rookie pitcher Dwight Gooden started, the crowd averaged 33,000 fans. That's 9,000 more than in the first half of the season...

It's hard to understand why the Texas Rangers are in the market for a catcher. Ned Yost, Donnie Scott and Marv Foley combined to throw out 40 of 167 runners last year...

San Diego pitcher Tim Lollar drove in 15 runs last season, two fewer than Chicago shortstop Larry Bowa. Of course, Lollar batted 68 times and Bowa 391...

Jim Piersall calls Harry Caray, his former Chicago White Sox radio partner, "one of the great people. He's sick now, and I hope everything comes out OK for him because he's important for Chicago."...

Ernie Banks claims his "feud" with Leo Durocher was a figment of an overactive imagination. "he was the best manager I ever saw. We never played as well for anyone as we played for Leo. I loved watching all the moves he would make. Sometimes, it was like we were playing with 10 men against their nine because of Leo."...

Mecir to face McEnroe in finals

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Unseeded Miloslav Mecir, a three-year pro from Czechoslovakia, stunned second-seeded Jimmy Connors, 5-7, 6-4, 6-3, Saturday to face John McEnroe in the final round of the $300,000 U.S. Pro Indoor tennis championship.

McEnroe, 25, ranked No. 1 in the world, advanced Saturday after defeating Scott Davis 6-2, 6-4.

The 20-year-old Mecir closed out the match in the ninth game of the third set when Connors, leading 40-30, missed a cross-court shot over the sideline, was passed with a backhand shot and then overshot the baseline.

Mecir, ranked 60th among the world's tennis pros, defeated sixth-seeded Joakim Nystrom and 13th-seeded Ramesh Krishman to reach the semifinals of the 24th annual tournament.

Mecir said that after a few games, he decided the 32-year-old Connors wasn't as dangerous as he looked.

"Tweleve years ago he was a hero to me," Mecir said. "Today, I saw he was just like other people."

Connors placed the blame for the loss on his mistakes rather than on Mecir's ability.

"I didn't have any zip on the balls. Ninety-five percent of my shots were falling inside the service line," said Connors, ranked No. 2 in the world.

"Mercir played well. I think my shots falling short gave him a chance. Nothing happened from his side. It all happened from my side."

In the final of the best two-of-three set match in this week-long tournament, Mecir broke through Connors in the third game for a 2-1 lead. Connors sent a forehand wide of the left sideline in a 4-1 game. Mecir held his service in Game 4, despite falling behind 0-40. He won the last three points by forcing errors with deep driving.

Mecir, playing Connors for the first time in his career, broke again in Game 5 to lead 4-1. Connors was ahead 40-30 when he double-faulted for deuce. Mecir then got the advantage on a backhand placement and won the game when Connors backhanded across the sideline.

Ailing Jordan paces Bulldog swimmers

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — Top Midland High qualifiers participated in the elite Texas Interscholastic Coaches Association swim meet here on the University of Texas campus Saturday with over 46 teams from across the state.

Andrew Jordan, who is still suffering from sickness, turned in the best finish of the Bulldog entries, placing third in the 50 freestyle with a 22.53 seconds.

Jordan was also fifth in the 100 free with a 49.82 and swam a leg on the 10th place 200 medley relay team with Sam Perry, John Brenner and Ricky Perkins.

Perry was ninth in the 100 backstroke with a 57.76 and 14th in the 200 individual medley with a 2:09.58. Jay Green was 12th in the 200 free with a 1:55.96 and Doc White was ninth in the one-meter diving with a score of 308 and 11th in the three-meter diving with a 282.15.

Bicky Simpson had an excellent outing for the Bulldogs, placing sixth in the 500 free with a 5:25.62 and eighth in the 200 free with 2:02.26, a lifetime best.

MHS coach Jesse Marsh said, "We didn't stay around for the team totals, but I'm sure it was a Top 10 finish. We were looking at getting back to Midland around 4 a.m."

The Bulldogs will compete next in the District 4-5A swim meet in Odessa, Feb. 14-15.

Once again it's Navratilova vs. Lloyd in finals

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert Lloyd breezed into the finals of the Virginia Slims of Florida women's tennis tournament Saturday night, setting up another championship match in a rivalry which has been one-sided lately.

In the semifinals, Navratilova routed Sweden's Catarina Lindqvist 6-2, 6-3 and Lloyd romped past unseeded Peanut Louie 6-2, 6-1.

Navratilova has beaten Lloyd 13 straight times and 16 of the past 17 times they have played. But Lloyd said she is as ready to take on her nemesis as she has been in quite some time.

"I'm looking forward to playing Martina," she said. "I've had a very good week. My three matches I've played this week are three of the best I've had in a while."

Navratilova said she also is excited about Sunday's 1 p.m. final at the Sheraton Royal Biscayne Racquet Club.

"If she plays well and I play well, then I think I should win," Navratilova said. "If she plays well and I don't play so well, then she has a very good chance. But I've been able to beat her even when I haven't played that well."

LLOYD ISN'T the only one Navratilova has dominated over the past three years. She has lost only six times during that period.

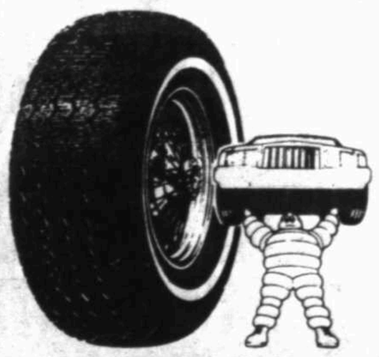

In her 55-minute thrashing of Lindqvist Saturday, Navratilova seemed to have more trouble with the windy conditions than with her opponent. Although the Swede broke Navratilova's serve on her first two opportunities, she wasn't able to hold her own service at all in the first set.

Lloyd needed just 54 minutes to dispose of Louie, utilizing sharp ground strokes to keep her opponent pinned to the baseline until she could hit a winner.

Good boots key to skiing success

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Some skiers think the most important part of the equipment is the fit of the pants, especially the slopeside girl-watchers.

It's all a part of skiing that dates back to just after the herring bone was invented. Trousers of the subject under surveilance are rated on the basis of snugness from the usual one to 10.

An average, acceptable score is around a five. Really tight, around a seven or eight.

After that it becomes more technical and demands concentration. If you can see the dime in the hip pocket, I am told, it's a nine. If you can tell whether it's heads or tails, 10.

But take it from the voice of experience, limited though it may be, the fit of the boots is the difference between a treat and a treatment at Taos, Purgatory, Aspen or Breckenridge.

IT WAS three or four years before I discovered that toenails that turned black and dropped off in May or June were not the inevitable price one had to pay. Skiing and pain were not necessarily conspirators whose mission was to determine whether the victim was willing to pay the price.

It was at Wolf Creek, Colo. After three days of skiing, my ankles had been rubbed raw by too tight boots. My shin bones, where the edge of the boot hit, were nasty, open sores. My feet ached from toes to instep in vice-like grips that showed no mercy.

My surrender came less than a half hour into the morning of the fourth day. The pain was such that I couldn't even control my skis for the simplest maneveur. I took off the boots and retired from skiing...forever.

I got out the camera and started taking pictures of a family of first timers. It was entertaining for a while. Then, a gentle snow began to fall and I had to try again, pain or no. Exchanging the rent boots for another pair, I shed that extra pair of thick socks, returned to the slopes and, amazingly, for the first time ever, skied without pain.

Funny thing, I've never had a boot problem since. Some say it was the fit of the boots and others contend it was the extra pair of socks. I understand some even ski without any socks just for the "feel of the boot", but how much can you "feel" with frozen feet?

THE THOUGHT of a broken leg scares off a lot of people who might enjoy the sport and when I took it up back in the 1970s at an age when most people are giving it up, Sam Cox, then Midland Schools Athletic Director, counseled before my first trip, "Don't do it. You are too old. And you'll break a leg."

Perhaps, realizing that he sounded negative, before I left, he encouraged, "Whatever you do, don't buy any crutches. We've got plenty of them around here."

Somehow I've managed to escape the broken leg or serious injury. Perhaps worse, is the cruel and unusual punishment to which my dignity has been subjected, particularly on a one-on-one wipe out under a chair lift.

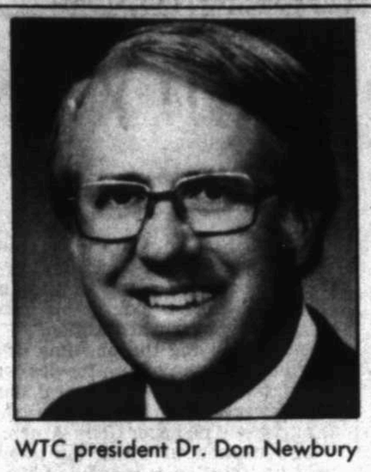

Back in the early days, I had trouble getting on and off chair lifts. In settling in one time at Taos on the Kachina Basin lift, I fell off. The lift stopped and several chairs ahead, one son said to another, "I bet that was dad, again."

Another time a young skier the next chair ahead fell in a heap upon getting off the lift. You know how quickly the slope drops way from the chair line. I had to pass the disembarkation point, resulting in what amounted to a ski jump, to get off before the trip back down the mountain. It came so unexpectedly that I must have been relaxed enough to survive.

However, avoiding injury is a matter of learning to do it right and skiing within your capabilities and under control. Take a lesson and then use some common sense.

Skiing is knowing how and then when. It's also a state of mind.

I find that new challenges are best attacked early in the day. As the shadows grow long and the skis become rebellious and slow to respond to command and thoughts linger on the jacuzzi and sauna at day's end, it's time to find the easy to handle trails.

WTC president Dr. Don Newbury

Lee holds annual football fete

From Staff Reports

Dr. Don Newbury, president of Western Texas College, will be the guest speaker at the Midland Lee football banquet Wednesday at the Midland Center.

Newbury is a much-in-demand speaker at educational meetings and after-dinner functions. He has been president at WTC since April 1981.

Prior to that he was assistant director of college information and instructor of journalism at Howard Payne from 1961-63 and was director of college information and journalism instructor at Sul Ross State from 1963-67. From 1967-81, he was director of communications at Tarran County JC.

A native of Early, Dr. Newbury graduated from Howard Payne, received his journalism masters from the University of Texas-Austin and Doctor of Philosophy in higher education administration from North Texas State.

Among honors received, he was the initial recipient of the Dr. J.C. Matthews award for Excellence in Higher Education (NTSU 1984) and Howard Payne distinguished alumnus award in 1972.

The annual fete will honor the Midland Lee football team, which reached the state quarterfinals in Coach Jack Tayrien's first season as head football coach.

Tickets are $7 per person.

Lee finished the season with a 12-2 record, the best winning percentage in the school's history. It's 9-1 regular season mark was matched by only one other Lee team in 1976. In 1983, Lee was 13-3, earning its first berth in a state championship game.

NFL concludes season with Pro Bowl in Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) — The National Football League, which reached its emotional peak last week when the San Francisco 49ers beat the Miami Dolphins in Super Bowl XIX, concludes its six-month season Sunday when NFC and AFC squads loaded with members of those teams meet in the Pro Bowl.

But the annual all-star game, to be televised nationally by ABC starting at 3 p.m., figures as usual to be more a polite showcase for the NFL's most talented athletes than high-powered football at its best, an exhibition between two groups of athletes who have spent more time this week socializing than practicing to destroy each other.

Many of the 82 players have their wives and children here, and most have spent at least half of each day touring together, participating in golf tournaments or attending receptions.

"I think the exciting thing is that it's a game in the spirit of fun," said Brian Holloway of the New England Patriots, who will start at right tackle for the AFC squad coached by Pittsburgh's Chuck Noll. "You get to meet players from other teams just like yourselves and meet them in a family atmosphere."

There is one new development for this year's Pro Bowl, which features 10 players from the 49ers and seven from the Dolphins, including quarterbacks Joe Montana and Dan Marino. That's a switch from the 4-3 defense to the 3-4 that most of the NFL's teams now use.

The rules also require that an outside linebacker must blitz on each play, which means that some of the NFL's most devastating athletes will be aiming at Montana and Marino.

They include the league's linebacker prototype, Lawrence Taylor of the New York Giants, and such up-and-comers as Rickey Jackson of the New Orleans Saints, Andre Tippett of the New England Patriots and Mike Merriweather of the Pittsburgh Steelers. Among them, they had 57 sacks this season.

The 3-4 rule also makes alternating nose tackles of two of the NFC's best defensive linemen, Chicago's Dan Hampton and Dallas' Randy White, both of whom normally are defensive tackles in a 4-3.

UT women rip TCU

FORT WORTH (AP) — Freshman guard Yulonda Wimbish came off the bench to score 20 points to lead the second-ranked University of Texas women's basketball team to a 95-53 victory over Texas Christian University Saturday.

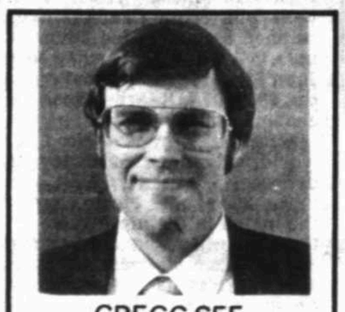

Texas is now 8-0 in the Southwest Conference and 16-2 for the season.

Richardson keys Nets win over Mavs

DALLAS (AP) — Micheal Ray Richardson poured in 11 straight points during a crucial second-half stretch and finished with 24 points to lead the New Jersey Nets to a 103-93 victory over the Dallas Mavericks in a National Basketball Association game Saturday night.

Dallas had cut a 12-point New Jersey lead to 74-70 on a dunk by Mark Aguirre, who led all scorers with 38 points. Richardson hit a pair of free throws, then followed with four straight baskets over the next five minutes.

He capped the string with another free throw after a technical foul on Dallas' Derek Harper to give New Jersey an 85-76 lead with 9:47 remaining.

Honor Roll Report

MIDLAND IS NOW 100 YEARS OLD. Historians tell us that a few years prior to 1880, Lum Medlin, a lone hunter, made what was later to become Midland his home. Researchers studying this area tell us that Lum was one of the first white men to settle in this area. Early in 1880, R. N. Garrett arrived here with a flock of sheep being driven to market. Like many of those who followed, Garrett took an immediate liking to the surroundings and settled here permanently. Shortly thereafter, his California family joined him.

In those early days the railroad people dropped off a box car to service the growing community as depot, post office and general store. On February 2, 1885 Midland County was established; 26 days later Midland was designated a city.

The old, middle-aged and young enterprises of Midland have contributed immeasurably to the progress, pride and prosperity of our city. You will be interested in reading this list of leading firms and organizations whose names have been arranged by the number of years they have served Midlanders and other West Texas residents.

As soon as you enter the spacious entry in this home, you will be struck by the unorthodox traffic routing. You can step directly into the efficient U-shaped kitchen, or go right to the bedroom area. But the big surprise comes when you note that the tile floor of the entry extends as a band completely across the width of the living room, along the fireplace wall. This very efficiently spaced and very efficiently insulated Spanish style home features 6" walls, custom built cabinets, and many other amenities too numerous to mention. Come by 2003 Abbey Place in North West Midland and talk to us about this great buy at only $64,600. We also have others.

"I don't want to kill myself anymore," said John, 21, who is recovering from drug abuse.

"I didn't see any other alternative before I got into the program but suicide."

Although drug abuse is one of the most treatable illnesses, said Bob Savage, director of the Midland Palmer Drug Abuse Program, it is the third leading killer in the United States ranking behind only heart disease and cancer. "Of those with an alcohol or drug abuse problem, 95 percent are fatal, one percent end up in insane asylums and four percent get help and begin a recovery process."

According to Savage, among the causes of death are car accidents, overdose and suicide. "They die tragic and violent deaths." He said the number one cause of death for 15- to 19-year-olds "is a direct or indirect result of alcohol or drugs."

Those who seek help through organizations such as PDAP or Alcoholics Anonymous "have a 60 to 80 percent chance of recovery."

Eighty-five percent to 90 percent of 12- to 17-year-olds "just got into the wrong peer group," Savage said, and they can be taught to live a chemical-free life. The other 10 percent to 15 percent have a predisposition to have a drug or alcohol problem. Unless they remain in a program throughout their lives, the problem will most likely kill them.

For persons 18 years old or older it is just the opposite, he said. "Eighty percent to 90 percent will need to remain in a program." That is why he urges parents "not to wait until their young people are in jail or strung out."

"I was 11-years-old when I got into drugs," said John, who asked that his real name not be used. "My brother turned me on. I never felt like I was worth anything and I had a big deal with trying to be accepted. Getting high was something I could do to be accepted by one of my brothers and his friends."

John said when he started to smoke marijuana with them he felt he became recognized as one of their friends. "I was one of the guys and that's what I always wanted to be."

Although his drug problem began with marijuana, he later became a heavy drinker, mainly because liquor was easier for him to get.

By the time he sought help, he was 16. He was unable to eat anything without getting sick. He was sleeping only two hours a night. He was physically exhausted by the lifestyle he was living. "I was beginning to feel miserable loaded and miserable when I wasn't loaded," he said.

"The quickie friends, the dishonesty with all the quickie friends and all the shallow relationships were getting to me, too."

John's decision to get involved in PDAP was a quick one. It was the last thing he knew to do and, out of desperation, he vowed to try it. He attended his first meeting more than four years ago and, as he proudly pointed out, has led a chemical-free life since.

According to PDAP's philosophy, the program is a "fellowship of young people and parents who share their experience, love and understanding that they may solve their common problems and help others to recover from the effects of mind changing chemicals."

PDAP works on the principle of a 12-part plan based on concepts of the steps used by Alcoholics Anonymous.

The recovering drug abuser can follow a basic guideline in his attempt to maintain sobriety and change his life.

Denial among obstacles in road to abuse recovery

By JUDY JAMES

Recovering chemical abusers take the first step toward a recovery process by admitting there is a problem. Once they begin a recovery process they expect understanding and support from family and friends. Instead, many recoverers discover friends and family deny the problem ever existed.

"Denial," according to Bob Savage, director of the Palmer Drug Abuse Program in Midland, "occurs within a majority of families." He believes this is evidenced by the 3-to-1 ratio of young people to parents in the program. "Since statistics show there are two children to every set of parents, it should be the other way around," Savage said.

"It's almost imperative parents attend the parent meetings in order that the transition be made," Savage said. "If parents don't attend there is only a five percent chance of recovery. If the family is involved with the recovery there is a 50-50 chance. It's a family illness — it impacts the whole family — there's a family recovery process.

Some excuses used by parents absences from the meetings are "I'm too busy," "there isn't a problem," "it's a stage I went through and look at me today," "I didn't want anyone to know I was there," Savage said.

"When I first told my mother about me going to PDAP she asked why. When I told her about my involvement with drugs and alcohol she didn't believe me and outright denied I was doing it," said 22-year-old Danny (not his real name), a recovering drug abuser.

"I didn't really have any kind of support from her at all."

He believes the lack of support was because "no one in my family had come out and said yes, I get high, I drink and I have a problem with it and I'm doing something about it."

Failure as a parent is another reason Danny believes his mother denied that a problem existed. "Once she said, 'you may have had a drug problem when you were living with your father but not with me.' She wasn't willing to accept that I was responsible for my own actions and that if I did have a drug problem then that was my responsibility and not her fault."

Although his mother won't admit it, he believes she still feels responsible for him even though he moved out of the house three years ago and "as long as I still have a drug problem then that's a mark against her."

While his mother never discouraged him from attending meetings, Danny said she never encouraged him either. "She asked me a lot why I went, why I continued to go. When I started working for PDAP she asked me why I was doing that. It wasn't just an information-seeking question, it was more like 'I can't understand why you're doing this' type thing. I just didn't feel anything positive from her about what I was doing with my life."

When he and his family get together many of the situations are like they were before he entered the program four years ago. "There's a lot of family illness that has never been dealt with and whenever we get together everyone falls into their old roles of the way they were doing things when I was getting high. There's no change on the family part where there's change on my part.

Not receiving any support caused him frustration and anguish. "I wanted to reach out and grab her and shake her and say look, believe me and trust me. I was hurt a lot because I didn't feel any trust on her part — I still don't. But just remembering where she's at and accepting her for who she is helps a whole lot.

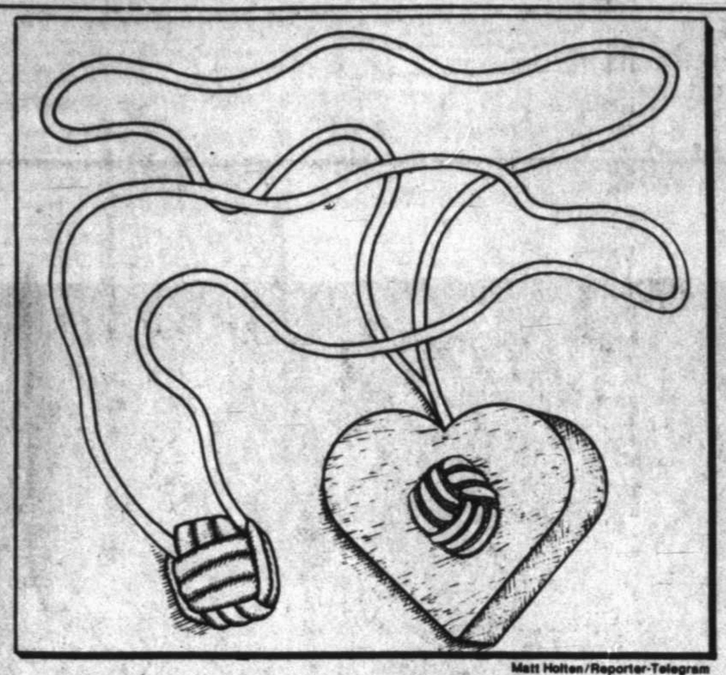

"It all depends on am I going to do the best for me or the best for everyone else," he said.

"The decision I made right before getting sober was that if nobody was going to like me, if everybody was going to abandon me, I was okay with that because I was going to do what I felt was right.

"I just got willing to do whatever I was going to have to do. A lot of times I just had to grit my teeth and listen to what my family had to say or what my friends had to say and just know that they're coming from their own place and it's not where I want to be. I want to be sober and I want to be feeling good about myself.

"I found out I can do that no matter what my family wants, no matter what my friends want, so it's just a matter of pleasing me, not the rest of the world."

A monkey fist, symbolic of a mariner's tool used in docking a ship, is awarded to recovering drug abusers in the Palmer Drug Abuse Program; a wooden heart is awarded to their parents.

PDAP awards symbolize hope

Symbolic awards are given to recovering drug abusers and their parents involved in the Palmer Drug Abuse Program.

The recovering drug abuser is awarded a monkey fist after a given time for his accomplishment; his parents who participate in programs are awarded wooden hearts with a monkey fist carving.

Fists & Hearts, a book published by PDAP - National, Inc., explains the fist is a mariner's tool used in the process of docking a ship. On the first contact the ship makes with dry land, a baseball-size knot attached to lines is thrown to a crew on land. The crew secures the lines to the dock and pulls the ship in.

To PDAPers, the miniature fist is a symbol of the drug abuser's first contact with "dry land."

"When I first got my fist it was a symbol of an accomplishment. I had done something that was mine, that no one else could claim," Conn Carson, younger group counselor said. "Later, it became a symbol of what my life meant to me. I knew everything would be okay because I was sober. It gives me hope and through that hope it helps."

The wooden hearts given to parents have a fist stamped in the middle as a symbol of the PDAPer in each parent's heart.

ABUSE

The steps include admitting there is a problem, recognizing a higher power, making amends for any wrong doings and carrying love and understanding to others.

"The people here just took me in," John said. "They accepted me and loved me but didn't want anything out of me. They showed a genuine interest in how I was — something that was totally different as far back as I could remember."

Involvement in PDAP is not always easy, especially when the chemical abuser is just starting his attempt at a chemical-free way of life.

According to Savage, when people first begin the program the main problem they encounter is "difficulty in releasing their "friends" — those they have been running around with."

Other problems include the nuclear as well as the extended family and the community — job and church — understanding the difficulties facing the chemical abuser. "This puts a lot of pressure on the abuser, more than letting go of getting high."

John admitted it becomes difficult at times but said he's never really wanted to go back to a life of drug abuse. "I feel better now than I ever have before.

"I'd hang out with them and I guess my attitude changed simply because I was hanging out with people who had better attitudes," he said of PDAP. "There's a lot of work involved. It means cleaning up a lot of stuff in your life and not all of it feels real good."

He acknowledged his main problem was a lack of self-esteem.

"The longer I'm in PDAP, th more self-worth I gain which come from people loving me when I can love myself."

Although peer pressure and lac of self-confidence are commo causes of drug abuse, Savage sai other reasons are "a biological o chemical difference, to rebel agains parents or authority, feelings o rejection, feelings of hopelessnes excessive pressure to perform, cur osity and experimentation, to rid o inhibitions and shyness, relief o pain, either physical or psycholog cal, and boredom."

When attempting to spot a chem cal dependency problem, parent "should not look for red eyes or major weight gain or loss. Instea look for attitudinal or behaviora problems," Savage said.

Other signs are failing grades running away, fighting, secretiv activities, separateness from famil and rebellion from family.

If a family member or friend sus pects a loved one of having a chemi cal-dependency problem, he should "seek professional guidance from specialist in substance abuse. A spe cialist would be able to determine i the behavior is drug related, or i it is normal adolescent or stress related behavior," Savage said.

Counselors in PDAP are each a product of the program. They were at chemical-abusers at one time so they know first-hand some of the problems facing drug abusers. To become a counselor, one must maintain sobriety for at least one year and attend counselor training programs. They are certified by the Texas Certification Board of Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

PDAP's only requirement to become involved in its program is the desire to live a chemical-free life.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

I enjoyed a visit with Patricia Wettstein on the eve of her departure for Washington, D.C., and the many Presidential Inaugural festivities. But more about that later!

Over the holidays, Patricia and her daughter, Laura, who is now working in Austin, attended the International Debutante Ball in New York City. Patricia's niece, SMU student Holly McIntire, was one of 40 young women from around the world to make her debut. She is the daughter of Janey and Blynn McIntire of Dallas.

Laura enjoyed renewing her friendship with another of the Texas debs, Leslie Allspaugh of Amarillo. The two have known each other since their Camp Mystic days.

The ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria was beautifully decorated for the occasion in soft pinks and a myriad of twinkle lights, and Lester Lanin provided the music. Mrs. Edwin Meese III, wife of the Attorney General designate, was honorary chairman, and Dana Lynn Meese was one of the debs.

Staying over for a few days after the ball, the Wettsteins enjoyed the Broadway shows, "Noises Off" and "The Tap Dance Kid," as well as a memorable evening, which included cocktails at the Harvard Club and dinner at the Algonquin, with old friends.

Patricia tells us that only one Midland girl has been presented in the ball's 30-year history. Katie Leede put our city on the international map when she made her debut in 1981. Now a senior at Dartmouth, she is the daughter of Margaret and Edward H. Leede.

IN HONOR OF THEIR son, Stephen's recent engagement to Susan Morgan of Fort Worth, Ginger and Jimmy Floyd entertained last weekend with "Le Picnic Midland-Style." In keeping with the picnic theme, a typical West Texas sandstorm blew in just before the party started, but it did not diminish the guests' enjoyment of the celebration.

As assortment of sandwiches and other finger foods were served from tables decorated with miniature winter scenes depicting Texas' recent snowstorm.

Special guests included Susan's parents, Dorothy and Clyde Morgan of Fort Worth; Stephen's grandmothers, Mrs. Ray Lane of Sterling City and Mrs. L.B. Floyd of Fort Worth, and a number of the honored couple's Alpha Delta Pi sorority sisters and Beta Theta Pi fraternity brothers from UT-Austin.

The house party included Stephen's sisters, Angela Floyd and Renee (Mrs. Scott) Rogers, and his brother, Jay Floyd; Susan's brothers, Reece and Ross Morgan; Wendy Witherspoon, Corinne (Mrs. A.T.) Carleton, Sue (Mrs. Bill) Cole, Edna (Mrs. Bill) Green, Mrs. Mary Helm, Nelda (Mrs. Bill) Johnson, Shirley (Mrs. Randall) Johnston, Virginia (Mrs. Bob L.) Jones, Anelle (Mrs. Jim) Mack, Raylene (Mrs. Dean) Smith, Gwen (Mrs. Don) Sparks, Mrs. Kaye Spence, Schatzie (Mrs. Charles) Tighe and Marge (Mrs. Dell) Woods.

Susan and Stephen have announced plans for an April 20 wedding in Fort Worth.

A SOCK HOP, where guests wore rolled up blue jeans and bobby sox and slicked back their hair, was given last weekend by Linda and Fred Koontz. Some 50 persons came dressed in '50s and '60s garb to the fun party at the Hogan Park Activities Center.

Entertainment included an Elvis Presley imitation by Buzz Cupp and a Supremes-type act by the "Three Jennings Sisters," (a.k.a. Linda Koontz, Judy Gibson and Kathy (Mrs. Tony) Pistoria.) Fred, impersonating radio personality Wolfman Jack, was the evening's M.C. and also the DJ for dancing.

IT WAS GOOD to hear news of former Midlanders Pat and Bill Hayes recently. They just celebrated their seventh Christmas in The Hague, Holland, where they have lived since leaving Midland. They are enjoying Europe's many cultural and travel opportunities and particularly sharing them with friends from the States.

Not surprisingly, the Hayes continue to see many of their Midland friends overseas. It was "Old Home Week" for them with so many from Midland at the international geological conference in Geneva, Switzerland, last summer. In August, the couple enjoyed traveling with local residents Winnie and T.B. O'Brien and Mimi and Bob Beggs throughout Holland and Germany.

A vice president with Pennzoil, Bill is in charge of its North Sea operations. Pat stays involved in the American community with club and church work. She recently added the Petroleum Wives Club to her list of activities. Since more than half the members are not Americans, she says it gives her a whole new set of friends from all over the world.

Exhibit begins history month

In celebration of Afro-American History Month, the Negro Business and Professional Women's Club will sponsor the exhibit "Black Odyssey" from Detroit. The exhibit will be displayed from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Feb. 16 at Carver School.

Black Odyssey depicts the historical and contemporary struggles of black Americans. It presents a view of black life and explores the lives and contributions of prominent and of ordinary people.

The exhibit has been presented in many cities, colleges and universities across the country. It was shown on the battleship USS Independent, in many Air Force bases in the United States and in the Panama Canal Zone, at state fairs, museums and libraries.

Lloyd Letters Jr., chaplain, United States Navy, said, "Black Odyssey is the finest and most effective method of creating a climate of racial understanding that I have ever experienced and encourages all men to reach out to each other because of their common humanity."

The exhibit is free and open to the public. For more information call Mamie Williams, president Negro B&PW, 682-2627 or 694-9641, or any member of the organization.

Institutions' census taken

WASHINGTON (AP) — The vast majority of Americans living in institutions are in homes for the elderly, and their number is growing, a new Census Bureau report shows.

Overall, nearly one out of every 90 Americans is institutionalized, new figures from the 1980 national head count disclosed recently.

Of the nearly 2.5 million people in all types of institutions, nearly 1.5 million reside in homes for the elderly, the report said.

And with medical care extending Americans' lives and the aging of the baby boom generation in coming years, this population is liklely to grow sharply.

The 1,426,371 people in homes for the elderly is up from 928,000 in 1970 and only about 470,000 a decade before that.

A distant second in the number of institutionalized residents were the nation's prisons, with 466,371 inmates. That's up from 328,000 in 1970.

Overall, the Census Bureau counted 2,492,157 people institutionalized out of a total U.S. population of 226.5 million.

In addition, the bureau counted another 3,246,266 people living in non-institutional group quarters such as college dormitories.

Besides homes for the elderly and prisons, other institutions with large populations in the count included 255,284 people in mental hospitals and residential treatment centers, 149,421 in homes for the mentally handicapped, 41,945 people in training schools for juvenile delinquents, 17,469 residents of juvenile detention homes, 10,255 in tuberculosis hospitals, 1,623 in homes for unwed mothers and 38,281 in homes for dependent and neglected children.

Of the nearly 2.5 million institutionalized people, the biggest share, 200,759, were aged 20 to 24. The 25-29 age group was second with 167,450.

There were 2,016,721 white people and 390,949 black people in institutions. In addition, there were 96,146 people of Hispanic origin, who can be of any race.

There were 1,182,107 men and 1,235,715 women over age 15 in institutions. Of the males, 271,855 were married, 51,973 separated, 169,417 widowed and 135,352 divorced. For the women, 127,592 were married, 20,513 separated, 741,434 widowed and 66,215 divorced.

Furniture rentals on rise

Associated Press

Some Americans have always been willing to pick up their lives and relocate to another place for better land, a new job, or the novelty of the unknown.

Today, however, instead of traveling in a wagon train with all their belongings or having the things sent in a mover's truck, some individuals are leaving the furniture behind and renting new household effects when they arrive at their destination.

Corporate employees on short-term assignments, college students, and those who maintain seasonal homes are among those helping furniture rental firms expand, according to the Furniture Rental Association of America which claims over half a million homes in this country are furnished with rented furniture.

THE GROUP recently intitiated a toll-free telephone number to provide information on the location of 450 rental furniture showrooms across the country and is also offering a brochure with the list and general information on renting furniture.

According to Jonah Sherman, a spokesman for the trade group and its past president, there is a new sophistication in the business, reflecting the growth of affluent clients who rent for convenience, not because they can't afford the cost of a houseful of new furniture.

Sherman has been in the rental business since 1961 when he converted his family's retail appliance and furniture store in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., to a rental firm.

Today, he says, it is not uncommon for rental firms to employ interior designers and to solicit business as creative consultants to builders, furnishing model homes and apartments and to provide guidance on interior fittings. Most rental firms maintain showrooms stocked with fashionable furniture and accessories, all available for rental by the month.

Services to corporations are also growing. Sherman, for example, furnished 50 apartments for a corporation with household appliances and linens as well as furnishings. The firm supplies weekly cleaning service, as well. Tenants stay for periods that range from one week to six months and when they leave, Sherman refurbishes the apartment for someone else. The corporation saves about 50 percent of the cost of putting the employees up in a hotel and can offer them a better quality of life in the apartments, he said.

WHILE NOT all renters are affluent corporate types — military personnel, students, victims of household catastrophes, and blue collar workers also rent furniture — this type of client is on the increase.

"We found that over 90 percent of our customers are college graduates. The average size of the renting household was 1.4 persons and income levels were $30,000 on average," said Sherman.

While as many as 75 percent of renters express an interest in acquiring the furniture they rent, only 5 to 6 percent actually exercise this option which is offered by most rental firms.

The typical agreement provides furniture for a living room, bedroom and dining area and costs the renter about $100 a month.

However, packages of preselected furniture start as low as $59 a month and go up to $300 or $400. At the higher prices, people are probably renting more furniture.

A free copy of "Answers to Your Questions About Renting Furniture" is available from the Furniture Rental Association of America, 444 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, IL 60611. The toll-free number to all is 1-800-FOR-RENT, or 1-800-367-7368.

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Winter harsh on houseplants

Hearst News Service

This is the season when houseplants begin to show the trauma of winter months spent in captivity indoors, where conditions range from ho-hum to terrible. Perhaps worst for the wear are the lucky plants that spent the summer of '84 outdoors, grew vigorously and now find the skids put on continued growth.

There are two schools of thought on carrying houseplants through the winter. One teaches that winter is a time for hibernation; that the plant's minimal needs be met and that growing be reserved for warm weather when the plant can bask in bright sunlight and bountiful natural humidity. The other reasoning compensates for poor winter conditions with artificial lighting and forced humidity.

Whatever approach you choose, be aware that plants simply will not grow as well now as in April. Trying to force unnatural growth is harmful to the plant.

The hibernation folks recommend the plant be stationed in a cool room where there is plenty of light. Water is held back just to the point before the plant wilts. No fertilizer is provided. The idea is to stop growth until better conditions come around in the spring. Then routine water and fertilizer schedules return. The plant grows with exceptional vigor for about six months and then is again held back.

There are a few drawbacks. There is little enjoyment from the plant, especially if it is shoved into an unused room. Many people enjoy fussing over plants, and this method snatches that pleasure. The biggest drawback deals with watering. It is easy to shock the plant if water is withheld too long and wilting occurs. A vigorously-growing plant will bounce back; a near-dormant one may not.

Compensating for poor indoor winter conditions keeps plants growing year around. This usually means providing a very sunny window or artificial light to trigger blossoms in flowering houseplants.

Watering is a big factor. Since the air indoors is usually dry and hot, the soil may dry out quickly. The best way to read soil moisture is to stick a finger into the soil about one inch deep. If the soil is dry at that depth, it is time to water. Some plants should be watered before the soil dries to that depth.

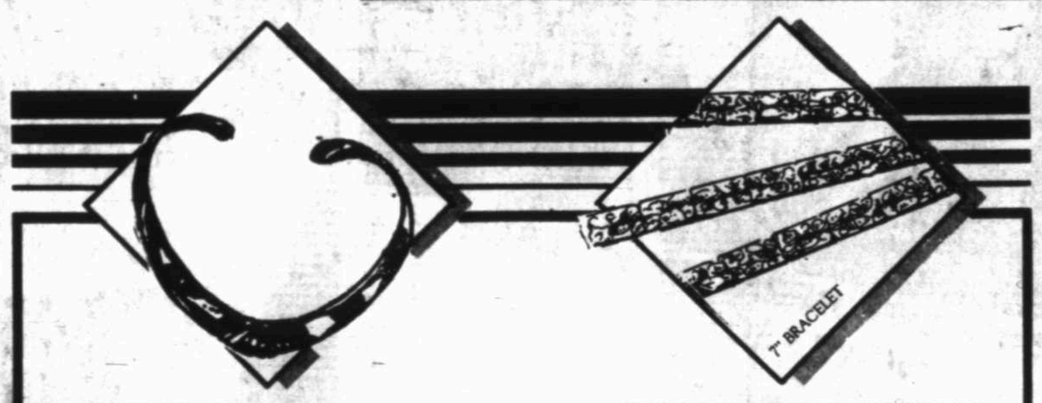

Keeping air moisture up is easiest done with an efficient room humidifier.

TEENAGE DESIGN AND DECOR
Most teenagers need a place to sleep, relax and study. Decoratively speaking, age twelve or thirteen may be the time to move away from the bedroom look. Beds can be transformed into studio couches with slipcovers and contour pillows. On a bed with a headboard and a footboard, roll pillows at both ends can make the bed look more like a couch. Floor pillows are inexpensive and almost essential since teenagers seem to spend so much time on the floor. Three big square pillows will stack into a pile that looks like an ottoman. For studying, a large sturdy table makes a fine work surface and, if necessary, can be shared by two teenagers. Or, old partners desks can still be found in antique stores.
Look to WINDOW DECOR for all your window decorating needs. Coverings can be made from our fabric, or yours and done to your individual requirements in our own workshop. We also handle custom bedspreads, top treatments and all kinds of wall coverings. Our showroom is located at 30 W. Industrial Loop, Tel. 685-0875. Open: Mon thru Fri 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m., and by appointment.

'Do-wah-do' tries hard

By ERMA BOMBECK

Basically, there are three groups of people in this country.

There are the Do-ers. These are the disciplined people who have order to their lives, make goals and live by their commitments.

There are the do-nothings, who are disorganized and stumble through life putting everything off until next week.

And then there are the Do-wah-do's. The Do-wah-do's have motivation right up there with Lee Iacocca. They have the goals of Mother Theresa. They have the fire and enthusiasm of a Sunday morning electronic minister. But they conduct their lives like a maestro with a rip in his pants and a zipper that is stuck. He doesn't know which way to turn.

The Do-wah-do dieter is a classic. He or she will order a large pizza with everything and swill it down with a 2-liter bottle of Tab. He will park illegally in a handicap parking spot while he is buying jogging clothes. He will eat a glazed doughnut with a cup of black coffee with three tablespoons of Nutra-Sweet.

When a Do-wah-do person stops smoking, it's never cold turkey. His first words to everyone he meets is, "I've stopped smoking. Feel just great. You should try it. I can taste food now and don't wake up with a bad taste in my mouth. By the way, could I bum a cigarette? I just like to have something in my hand."

I've met a million Do-wah-do housewives in my time. They have fresh flowers on the table, guest towels lined neatly in a row in the bathroom and their countertops are straight from the model home.

But the oven looks like a smoking volcano, there is dirty underwear under the bed and don't even think of opening a drawer or you'll never get it shut again.

With them, hope always springs eternal. By their bedside there will always be a copy of something written by John LeCarre. On top of it will be a copy of "Hollywood Wives" by Jackie Collins.

You are probably wondering how I know so much about the Do-wah-do's. There is one in our family. I have no intention of telling you which one it is. I will only say that I bought one of those handbags that has 36 compartments for bringing order to my life. There was a hook for my car keys, a slot for a flashlight, a pocket for all my credit cards, a place for loose change, a clip for folding money, an insert to hold my checkbook, plus marked areas for my lipstick, nail clip, glasses, comb, nose tissue and road maps.

One day I rested my gum on the holder for the pen and it stuck the top of the handbag together.

The best thing you can say about us is we try.

AT WORK

Teen suicide an increasing problem

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D

Teenage suicides seem to be in the headlines more and more every day. This past semester at UCLA, for example, there were four students who took their own lives. Four represents a terrifying statistic. People all across the country are asking "Why?"

Psychologists and educators may have their own theories, but as a career strategist, a work expert, I have my own framework. I have come to realize that unless we feel connected to others, loved and useful, we are in desperate trouble. Work is one of the areas of our lives where all those qualities — connection, usefulness, and appreciation — are demonstrated. And it is precisely in that area that a young generation has been deprived. Absurd sounding, but true.

The last two decades have brought with them a different way of perceiving young people's roles. In the '30s, '40s, and '50s, teenagers worked not for their own development, but to support their families. They were bound together even if only economically.

But in the more recent, so-called more progressive past, we have deliberately overprotected and isolated our kids so that they could taste a different leisure, one close to that of royal families. Tennis lessons, rock bands and a new, unsupervised hanging-out (that often pivoted around a new activity, drugs) became the fashion.

In the early '70s I managed the first experiment in drug prevention sponsored by the National Institute of Mental Health. For research, I interviewed college students I was teaching at the time about what they perceived as the positive effects of drugs.

They revealed that taking them gave them 1) an instant community that anyone could join; 2) a shared item, drugs, in an otherwise non-sharing place, college; 3) the chance to tell about experiences, trips, that could be good or bad, but never wrong, and 4) a chance to be pioneers in a too-known world.

When I later interviewed great achievers, I found their reasons for success astonishingly similar; yet they were working in positive fields, not taking drugs. They too experienced real community, shared goals and trials, as well as unlimited opportunity. Interestingly, some of them grew up on farms where they said they first learned what it was to work together for a common goal and value each one's contribution.

So there is was again and again — working, sharing, validating each other's contribution based on real need. Maybe our teenagers feel useless because they really are. Families don't need them to survive. What people do when no one depends on them is to invent their worlds.

Kids are not just using drugs, but they are in many cases actually stealing from their families to buy them. In direct opposition to supporting their families, they are now destroying them. It's complicated to say who's to blame. But faced with this dilemma, one man, Melvin Wasserman, has created a new kind of school to deal with this problem.

At the Rocky Mountain Academy in Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and Cedu, in Running Spring, Calif., the key concepts are work, confrontation and appreciation. These schools require teenagers to help build the facilities literally, prepare the meals, and take care of the grounds. Then they insist on honest dealing with each other in group process, led by trained facilitators who are also their teachers. And they are taught to love each other, and demonstrate their care with hugs and good works.

Connection is what we all crave. Maybe the suicide flag is really about the waste of young, talented, untried lives who have no training in being connected. And maybe, just maybe, what we all need is to be taught love and connection and usefulness. These may be the skills we need to develop for a civilized community.

DEAR ABBY

Drugs may affect fatherhood

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband is involved with drugs, and I want to have a baby. Will you please check with your medical experts and let me know if his involvement with drugs could affect the health of my baby?

I have never used drugs of any kind, but my husband has smoked marijuana for about 15 years, and he still smokes it daily. He also uses cocaine, quaaludes, amphetamines, etc.

Please let me know. — ANONYMOUS

DEAR ANONYMOUS: You are wise to ask. However, no medical expert would venture an opinion without having examined your husband thoroughly.

Much would depend on his general health, the extent of damage he has already sustained, and the degree to which he is addicted to cocaine, quaaludes, amphetamines, etc.

If it is determined that the use of drugs could "affect the health of your baby," it may be nature's way of giving you an important message: A man who spends much of his time in an altered state of consciousness is a poor candidate for fatherhood. Think about it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a U.S. soldier stationed in the Republic of Korea. I work in an office with a 35-year-old technical sergeant named Harry. He's one swell guy, but he never gets any mail. He once said he would even welcome a bill rather than face another empty mailbox.

If some of your readers would like to cheer Harry up and send him a letter or even a postcard, it would make his day. His address is:
Harry Nevins, TSgt.
PSC Box 1576
APO San Francisco 96366-0006

Thanks, Abby. Sign me "Harry's Pal," or ... JOHNNIE DUDZIK

DEAR JOHNNIE: After this hits print, your pal Harry will be so cheered up he won't be able to handle the mail, so please ask him to share it with some of his equally neglected buddies.

DEAR ABBY: I live in Florida, which is a haven for retirees. I happen to be one of them. Whenever I go to a shopping mall, I see many little old men driving with their nice little old wives beside them in the passenger seat.

I suppose it makes a man feel more macho to drive rather than let his wife drive, but he doesn't realize that he is doing her a terrible disservice.

Women whose husbands have always done the driving are usually not very good drivers. Women need practice to drive confidently on highways, in congested areas, in heavy traffic and on country roads. They need to know how to read a road map and maintain a car in case they become widowed one day — as many do.

Fortunately, my husband made me do 50 percent of all the driving. He also made me learn as much about a car as he knew. At the time I felt put out, but now I realize that he did me a big favor.

He died last year, and thank God, now I can get into my car and drive anywhere with confidence.

Please print this, Abby. It may wake up a lot of people. — YOUR FAN IN FLORIDA

DEAR FAN: Your suggestion is excellent, but it should be extended beyond a woman's expertise in driving. Because one elderly mate must eventually leave the other, all men should know how to cook a meal, do the laundry, keep house and sew on a button. And all women should know how to change a tire, balance a checkbook — and a budget — read an insurance policy and look after their own finances. And the time to teach each other is now.

Nylon stockings first introduced in 1939

NEW YORK (AP) — Although nylon stockings were introduced at the 1939 New York World's Fair, a whole year of testing took place before they were sold in stores. On May 15, 1940, the first nylon stockings were sold at the Wilmington Dry Goods store in Wilmington, Del.

Soon after, World War II diverted nylon to the military, where it was used for parachutes. At war's end in 1945, nylon was produced for civilian use, and by 1949 new shades and embroidered styles of stockings were sweeping the country.

On Oct. 28, 1959, the DuPont Co. introduced "Lycra" spandex, a new extra-stretch, lightweight, strong and durable fiber first used in foundations and swimwear. Giorgio Sant' Angelo's 1964 "Lycra" collection of bodysuits, skirts, bikinis, dresses and tights marked the beginning of that fabric in fashion.

During the 1960 "miniskirt decade" the hosiery industry responded to the need for legwear that wouldn't show garters with pantyhose, which by 1968 were being worn for all occasions.

Since that time, pantyhose have changed radically and today they are sheer, gossamer-light and come in a range of colors, from palest pearl to midnight black.

Statistics show fewer marriages

WASHINGTON (AP) — Statistics show that the number of marriages declined in 1983 for the first time since 1975, and researchers are wondering if the drop will continue this year, says the American Council of Life Insurance

The figures, from the National Center for Health Statistics, show that the 2.4 marriages of 1983 translates into 10.5 marriages per thousand people, a decline from 1982's 10.8, which was the highest rate since 1972.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE
Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.
IS A BRIDGE NECESSARY?
QUESTION: Is it really necessary to replace an adult's missing teeth with a fixed bridge or partial denture?
ANSWER: If you want to save your remaining teeth it is. The loss of just one tooth, if not replaced by a fixed bridge or partial denture, will ultimately cause the loss of more and more teeth. When a tooth is lost, the adjacent teeth (and those above or below) lose their support. The remaining teeth will be subject to drifting, abnormally exposed decay-prone areas and, worst of all, periodontal disease-the single largest cause of tooth loss in adults. Your mouth must have a minimum of 28 teeth (real or unreal) to function properly and keep your mouth healthy.

A WALK THROUGH HOUSTON'S ART DISTRICT

TEXT BY DAVID LEE FORREST

Houston: a huge hodgepodge connected by vast stretches of congested freeways that grow ever longer as the city continues to annex outward.

Houston is daunting to pedestrians.

There is, however, in the very heart of bustling, hustling Houston an area ideal for visitors who prefer to spend time on long, pleasant strolls rather than dodge traffic on over-crowded freeways.

The section of south central Houston with the Texas Medical Center, Rice University and Hermann Park is an island of shade-covered sidewalks and green grass amid the city's sea of skyscrapers. This is Houston's art district, packed with leisure possibilities to be enjoyed without spending hours driving across town.

A walking tour of the area could begin near 6400 S. Main Street, the southern edge of the Rice University campus.

Rice University's buildings — Romanesque with Mediterrean touches — look so purely collegiate it is almost impossible to mistake Rice for anything other than a college campus.

The metal-walled Rice Museum and Media Center, which is on the southeastern side of the University, next to the football stadium's huge gray parking lot, has won design awards even though to a non-architect's eye it looks suspiciously like a pre-fabricated metal barn. The museum does often have interesting art exhibitions.

The small campus has a surprisingly quiet atmosphere considering how close it is to downtown Houston. In the cool Saturday morning air, students gather on the common for slow graceful Tai Chi exercises, while others read studiously underneath live oaks which line many of the streets.

Streets along the outer edge of the campus are popular with local runners and are among the few in Houston where large numbers of bicyclists are common. Many large, old homes with elegantly landscaped yards surround the campus area.

A few blocks west of Rice is the Village, a rambling shopping area in the aggressive and sometimes painful process of "yuppification," — as evidenced by stores with "Lost Our Lease" signs in the windows.

Rundown buildings are being remodeled for new boutiques and upscale cafes take the place of old businesses. The Southampton Hardware store, for example, has been replaced by Southampton Delicatessen.

One can't help but notice the Mercedes-Benzes, Volvos, BMWs and Saabs that dominate the Village's busy streets.

Clothing stores in the Village serve both ends of the trendy spectrum — preppy and New Wave. Import shops — British, Irish, Oriental and French — set next door to throughly American antique stores. Art galleries, restaurants, a bakery and, of course, a fresh pasta shop also pepper the Village.

So much concentrated trendiness may make visitors dizzy after a while, but they can retreat to one of the Village's older, funkier establishments, such as Burgerville No. 2, for a greasy hamburger to maintain a grip on reality.

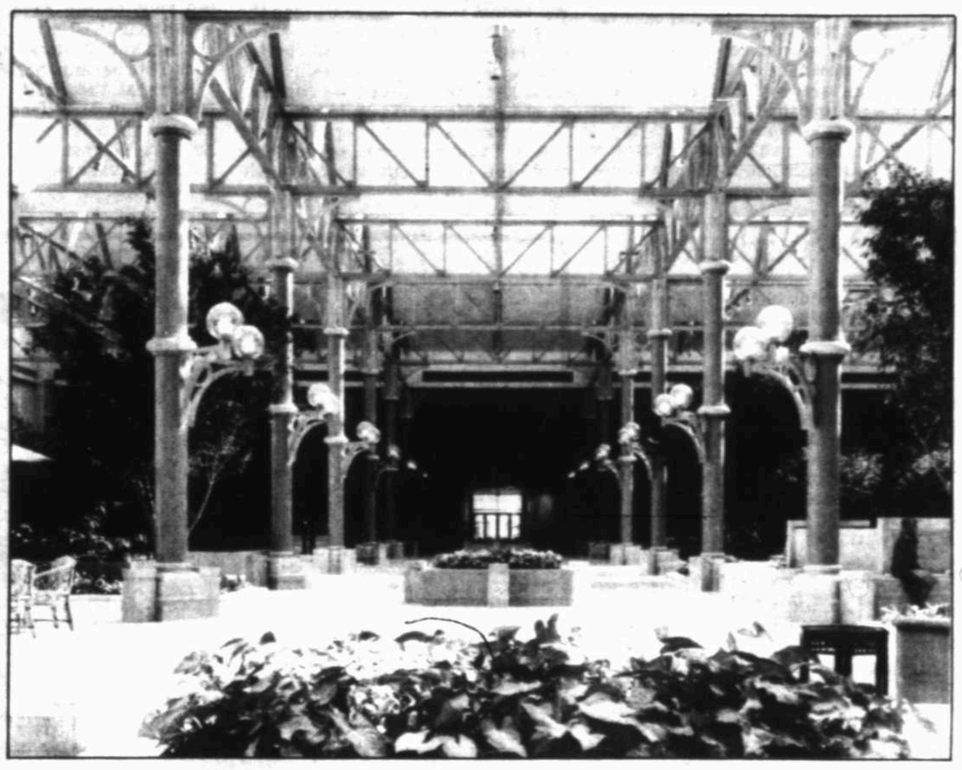

On the other side of Rice University, the Texas Medical Center complex is very much in touch with the harsher realities of life such as cancer, heart disease and physical rehabilitation. The 355-acre center has eight inpatient hospitals, two medical schools and numerous clinics.

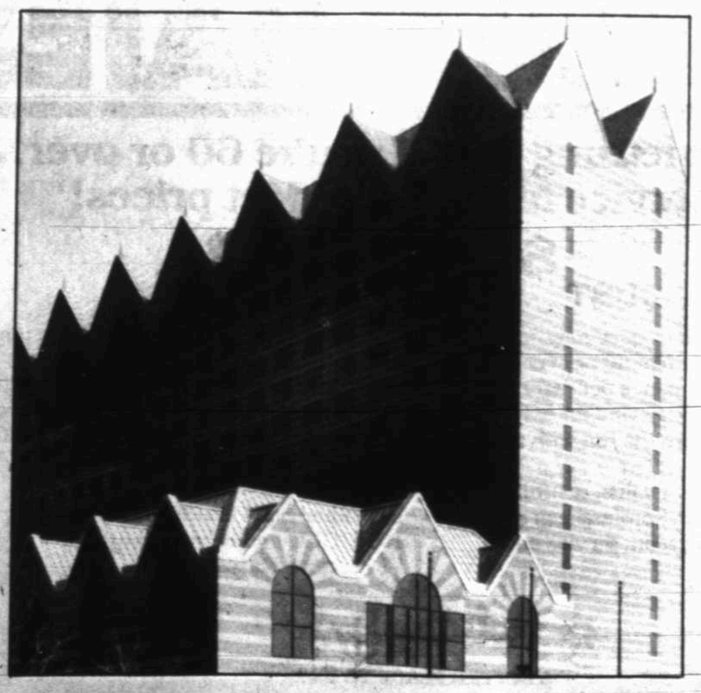

The maze of medical buildings can be confusing to follow. The Visitor Information Center at 1522 Braeswood can provide information on touring the area.

Adjacent to the Texas Medical Center and Rice University is Hermann Park. With trees and ponds, the park is great for picnicing, jogging and just strolling.

If one's feet need to take a break, it's possible to tour the park on a tiny train that runs along two miles of track.

Please see HOUSTON, Page 2F

HOUSTON

There is plenty of playground equipment to keep children busy. The most popular slide among kids is rocket-shaped, which reminds adults of the heady days in the 1960s when Houston billed itself as "Space City" and every other new business in town seemed to be calling itself the "Astro-" something or other.

Educational opportunities abound in the park. The Burke Baker Planetarium is larger than Marion Blakemore Planetarium, but, unfortunately, isn't free like Midland's planetarium.

It adjoins the Houston Museum of Natural Science, which has exhibits ranging from dinosaur skeletons to submarines, although these displays are arranged with a slightly annoying lack of logical continuity.

The Medical Science Museum contained in the same building is geared to inform children about how their bodies work, but most adults probably also can learn from the "hands-on" exhibits. The lung capacity test, for example, which involves breathing energetically into a tube, is an almost irrestible attraction to young and old alike.

THE 42-ACRE Houston Zoo, located on the southern end of Hermann Park, is not an especially spectacular zoo, but it does have some outstanding features. The birdhouse is constructed so visitors may walk through what looks like a tropical rain forest while colorful birds fly freely around them.

There is also a special children's zoo where youngsters can actually pet many furry animals from around the world.

Next to the zoo, the Hermann Park Municipal Golf Course covers the east side of the park.

Near the north end of the park is the Miller Outdoor Theater. The stage is sheltered by a wing-like arch that is seven stories tall at its peak and covers a city block. The amphitheater faces a large semicircular knoll on which the audience can set up folding chairs or spread out blankets to watch the show.

Proceeding up Main Street, a pedestrian will pass Houston's own version of the Arc de Triomphe, an arch topped by an equestrian statue of the city's namesake, Gen. Sam Houston.

The general overlooks Mecom Fountain, which has three jets of water shooting skyward and sits in the middle of a traffic circle that is probably the closest thing Houston has to a busy British "roundabout."

JUST BEYOND the fountain, at 5600 S. Main Street is the Fine Arts Museum. The large museum's exhibits range from primitive art of other cultures to contemporary photography exhibits.

The Fine Arts Museum's one major flaw is its winding layout. It's possible to accidentally circle through the same gallery two or three times and yet completely miss an entire exhibit in another part of the building.

The museum is now showing off the talents of 44 of Houston's most prominent artists with "Fresh Paint: The Houston School," which opened yesterday and continues through April 7.

In front of the Fine Arts Museum is the museum's Glassell School of Art. The school, a building constructed of unusual translucent glass bricks, houses classrooms and art studios.

THE CONTEMPORARY Arts Museum is a shiny metal trapezoid sharply in contrast with the more sedate Fine Arts Museum across Montrose Street. Inside is a high-tech, minimalist exhibition space used for diverse smaller displays by contemporary artists.

Early spring is probably the best time to visit Houston's art district on foot; the summer's staggering subtropical humidity can suck the strength from visitors unaccustomed to it like jungle leeches.

One can briskly walk the eight blocks from the southern edge of Rice University to the Fine Arts Museum in just a few minutes or he can spend days exploring this oasis tucked in among Houston's rugged glass and concrete canyons.

Houston's hotels 'wheel and deal' for guests

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Few neon "No Vacancy" signs illuminate the Houston night these days. Instead, to drum up business in the sluggish, overbuilt market, Houston's hotels are battling for guests by offering special deals.

The Wyndham Hotel Travis Centre, located across the street from the Texas Medical Center, opened in late August, long after the oil boom in Houston had dried up and left the city with a glut of empty hotel rooms.

The hotel has so few occupants that its staff members often seem startled when they encounter a guest in the otherwise empty hallways.

Vacant elevators in the 19-floor hotel arrive almost instantly after pushing the button.

Bellhops apparently have enough free time that they practically pounce on anyone walking through the lobby to ask if there's anything they can help him with.

THE 185-ROOM hotel's occupancy rate once dipped as low as 15 percent, although general manager Bernard Wagner said he expects it to start averaging around the 40 percent bracket.

Most Houston hotels, he noted, have occupancy rates from 35 percent to 50 percent.

When large conventions — such as the Offshore Technology Convention — come to Houston, Wagner said his hotel, as the others in town, fills up, "but in between we have to get out and fight to keep our rooms occupied."

He said his hotel has an edge since it's targeted at a specific group — people who need to stay near the Medical Center, including doctors, patients and relatives of patients.

According to Wagner, famed Houston heart surgeon Denton Cooley is among the chief investors in the hotel.

ALL BUT 40 rooms in the hotel are large suites designed to accommodate up to four people comfortably for an extended period of time.

For health-conscious people, the hotel has many features such as a heated pool surrounded by a jogging track, a health club with separate mens' and womens' dressing rooms, saunas and whirlpools, an exercise room with Nautilus weight equipment and two treadmills.

The hotel also has a special low-sodium, low-cholesterol and reduced-fat menu.

Wagner believes his hotel's health-emphasis has appeal beyond doctors and the ill.

"Everyone is so health-conscious now," he said.

Meanwhile, the hotel has a number of special deals to attract clients, including an "Intermezzo" honeymoon package for $85 a night in one of the suites (normally $120 a night) with 1½ baths, two television sets, three telephones, two double beds and a sofa in the living room that opens to a queen-size bed. A bottle of champagne and breakfast also are included.

ACROSS TOWN is its sister hotel, the Wyndham Hotel Greenspoint, located eight miles west of Houston's Intercontinental Airport and across the street from Greenspoint Mall.

This 473-room hotel is aimed at business and convention travelers, according to sales manager Patti Miller.

She said her hotel also has an occupancy rate in the 40 percent range, but she is almost relentlessly optimistic about airport area hotels making a comeback.

"They're enjoying a renaissance nationwide," she said.

The Greenspoint hotel looks much busier than the Wyndham Hotel Travis Centre, but, interestingly, was specifically constructed to look busy.

The hotel's central gallery is connected to the Four Greenspoint Plaza office building at one end — the hotel is, in fact, the main employee entrance for the office complex — and opens into a small shopping center on the other end.

This arrangement was designed to create a heavy flow of traffic through the lobby.

"People like to stay at hotels where there are other people," Ms. Miller explained.

The hotel is also managing to keep its two ballrooms busy with local wedding receptions and similar functions.

"We've had a very positive response from the community," said Ms. Miller.

THE PARK TEN Crowne Plaza in far northwest Houston is offering one of the stranger promotions to increase patronage.

A guest who brings in an advertisement the hotel is running in Southwest Airlines and Continental Airlines in-flight magazines is entitled to "The Date is the Rate" package. If he checks in on first day of the month he pays only $1 for that night, if he checks in on the second of month the rate is only $2, and so on until Feb. 28, when the offer expires.

"It's to increase our marketing base," said Mark Yardis, the hotel's rooms division manager. "Competition is very tough here."

The unusual low-price offer is designed to introduce people to the hotel.

"It's a long-term investment," Yardis said. "Once they try us, they'll come back to us because we offer superior service."

THE WESTIN Galleria, located in the famous Galleria shopping mall, has a special food and drink offer to keep occupancy high on weekends.

For each night a guest pays the $95 per day rate, he receives $40 worth of free food and beverage credit to be used to purchase food from room service or in any of the nine restaurants or three lounges in the Westin Galleria and the Westin Oaks.

The hotel also gives guests a free discount coupon book that can be used to save as much as $1,000 in purchases from merchants in the Galleria.

The offer — intended to increase business on weekends — is only good on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

"Traditionally, most hotels are slower on the weekends," said Dick Barton, director of public relations for both Westin hotels in Houston.

Barton said the Westin Galleria does, however, have a higher occupancy rate than most Houston hotels.

"The city-wide average is in the high 40s. We're above that," he said, with an occupancy rate in the high 60 percent range.

"Part of that is the product we offer and part of that is being actually in the Galleria," he noted.

As long as the Houston hotel wars continue, travelers benefit from these types of special deals and reduced rates, but the hoteliers don't enjoy it much.

As the general manager of the Whitehall Hotel, Brian Snell, recently told Texas Monthly, "This isn't a game of make money. This is a game of lose less."

Savannah blessed with small but elegant inns

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SAVANNAH, Ga. — I've never consciously wiped my feet before entering a hotel — never, that is, until I entered Savannah's elegant Foley House. But, like entering the home of a good friend, convention and tradition dictate you wipe your feet, brush off your overcoat, and dry your umbrella.

The Foley House is a hotel. Just like a Hyatt or a Holiday Inn, it is in business to give you a comfortable place to stay in return for your money. But there the similarity ends.

The Foley House is small, only 20 rooms. It is also very personal: tea is served from a handsome silver teapot upon your arrival, a hand-written welcoming note from general manager Suzanne Davis awaits you in your room, as do lush bathrobes.

Each room in the inn differs; some have oversized jaccuzi tubs in the bathroom, some overlook a city square and others a charming courtyard. All are furnished with antiques and antique reproductions, and all are perfumed by fresh flowers. Special services (a chocolate is placed on your pillow each evening, your shoes are shined as you sleep) one usually associates with a private home well staffed with servants, are provided. A limousine will take you to the restaurant of your choice, a concierge will arrange reservations, theater tickets, or a tour of historic Savannah.

MOST OF THE SMALL inns in Savannah were once private homes, and the owners of these accommodations are stylish (and smart) enough to continue to treat their customers as houseguests. Staying in one of Savannah's guest houses or inns — a place like the Foley House, the Stoddard-Cooper House, the Remshart-Brooks House, or Mary Lee's — is a perfect introduction to this most southern and hospitable city.

Savannah has its share of Hyatts and Hiltons and the like, but to truly appreciate this fine old town; to experience a warmth of hospitality that is pure southern comfort; to enjoy its ageless, gracious architecture, you should stay in one of the small inns — for it is there the character of this charming city is revealed.

It was during one cool winter's evening in the Foley House I received an insight into this southern belle. I was having a drink in the fine old sitting room, its fire warming those of us who sat and chatted about the usually inane things strangers talk about — football games, politics, and a child's cholic.

Our hostess, who had spent all her life in Savannah, was asked what made this city so different, so inviting to strangers.

"We Georgians have a saying," she replied. "In Atlanta they ask you what your business is; in Macon they ask you what your religion is; in Augusta they ask you what your grandmother's maiden name was; and in Savannah they ask you what you drink."

With that she smiled and said "And I believe you drink bourbon, Mr. Carlton," and poured me a large measure.

In 1966, the entire downtown was named an historic district and 1,100 of its buildings declared to be architecturally important.

More information on lodging, dining and touring Savannah is available from the Savannah Area Convention and Visitors Bureau, 301 W. Broad St., Savannah, GA 31499.

Rates at the Foley House range from $85 to $175 per night for two. For more information write the hotel at 14 West Hull St., Chippewa Square, Savannah, Ga. 31401. Phone 912-232-6622.

'Romantik Hotels' historic

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Jens Diekmann has been barnstorming across the United States, stirring up business for the Romantik Hotels group that he heads in nine European countries — Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Italy and Britain.

"Tell us where you would like to go and we'll plan your entire route and reserve your hotels," Diekmann said.

These are small, historic little hotels-restaurants. Each is managed personally by its owner.

Joining Diekmann on his tour of the U.S. is Conny Scholl, 22, whose family operates the cozy little Hotel Post (circa 1697) in Nagold, Germany (on the approach to the Black Forest) with rates of singles, $25-$30, doubles $40-$50. And you can tell the folks back home you stayed where Napoleon slept. The hotel even has a suite named for the little warrior.

Armor still made in Wurzburg

Associated Press

Heinz Schneider turns old cars into new suits of armor.

Schneider is one of only a half-dozen couturiers of metal modes practicing their art today, according to an article in the February issue of Connoisseur, and there's a big demand for his product.

Knights in shining armor went out of fashion at the end of the 17th century when the increasing use of guns and cannon made heavy bodily protection impractical and obsolete.

But Schneider, a West German who lives in the Bavarian city of Wurzburg, has found a good modern market among museums, collectors, owners of castles and, above all, theaters and movie studios.

For one film alone, "Wallenstein," which dealt with the Thirty Years War, Schneider produced 100 complete suits of armor.

Schneider's suits of armor are not fantasy creations of tin. He uses cars that have been scrapped as junk — the rustier the better — to fashion carefully researched, precisely-made replicas of museum originals.

True to form, the metal plates can be as much as one and one-quarter millimeters thick, with a total weight of about 55 pounds.

Schneider is a former salesman who backed into the armor-making business. He had always been fascinated with the lifestyle of the Middle Ages, and was looking for a suit of armor to decorate the hallway of his Wurzburg home.

New Mexico skiing conditions reported outstanding

From Staff Reports

Current ski conditions in New Mexico are better than those of the past six winters, according to information from the State of New Mexico Economic Development and Tourism Department.

The department reported the National Weather Service in Albuquerque, N.M., found snowpack to date in the Rio Grande Basin to be 110 percent to 150 prcent above normal.

The exceptional snowpack was a result of the storm tracks this winter being much farther south than usual, the department reported, making the New Mexico snowpack surpass Colorado's, a situation which hasn't happened in eight winters.

For a complete ski report call the Associated Press in Albuquerque at (505) 243-7857.

A recorded ski report can be heard by calling the Ski New Mexico Inc. Snowphone at (505) 984-0606. The two-minute recording is changed twice weekly. Snowphone is available 24 hours a day each winter from Thanksgiving through March 31.

Colorado dude ranches remote

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Colorado is out to woo summer vacationers with its dude ranch program, featuring wide-open spaces, plenty of fresh air and rooms without telephones or TV. Some ranches unlatch the gate as early as May.

One called Ah Wilderness can be reached only by the 100-year-old Durango and Silverton Narrow-Gauge Railroad. The nearest road is five miles away. It's smack on the Animas River, surrounded by San Juan National Forest and has thirteen cabins, ranch-style meals, a lodge with a lounge, a general store, hot tub and 30 head of horses.

For a brochure listing Ah Wilderness and 39 other ranches, write to the Colorado Dude Ranch Assn., P.O. Box 300, Tabernash, Colo. 80478.

PASSPORTS

When planning to travel to a country that does not require that you have a passport, it may be a good idea to take one anyway. For example, after a week of touring the ruins in Guatemala (a country that does not require a passport), you might decide to move on to Honduras (which does require one). Also, in case you ever find yourself in a situation where it is important that your American citizenship be establishd, the passport does so better than any other document. It is proof of your identity and nationality, where-as a driver's license may be proof of your identity but no proof at all of your nationality.

When traveling to distant lands it is important to be aware of local customs and legal requirements. Likewise, one's journey and enjoyment can be enhanced by being prepared with proper clothing, currency and other arrangements. For a happy and enjoyable trip, around the corner or around the world, we invite you to visit the travel professionals at LONES GREAT DESTINATIONS, 319 W. Texas, Street level in the Permian Bldg. 'Nutritionists' not always helpful

NEW YORK — In this fitness-conscious era nutrition advice has become an extensive and highly lucrative business. Uncertainty about the safety and adequacy of the diet, coupled with a justifiable distrust in the nutritional competence of physicians, has prompted millions of Americans to seek dietary advice from people they presume to be experts.

Unfortunately the advice many people are getting is often useless, sometimes dangerous and nearly always needlessly expensive. Typically, it is based on inappropriate tests of nutritional needs and is characterized by irrational dietary restrictions and generous doses of costly supplements, often sold by the purveyors of the advice.

FEW PEOPLE realize that since there is no legal definition of the profession, virtually anyone can set up as a nutritionist. That includes Sassafras, a dog owned by Dr. Victor Herbert, a nutrition scientist and chairman of the department of medicine at Hahnemann University in Philadelphia. Sassafras was awarded membership in the American Association of Nutrition and Dietary Consultants, with a diploma "suitable for framing," after mailing the Los Angeles organization a check for $50. In addition to those who receive diplomas in nutrition after studying a few months, if at all, at unaccredited institutions, thousands of people pretend to nutrition expertise when their credentials have nothing to do with the subject.

Before seeking the advice of a nutrition counselor, at least two important factors should be considered: first, what you hope to gain from dietary guidance and what such guidance can realistically offer, and, second, how you can find a counselor who is properly trained and offers sensible, scientically based advice.

THREE CONCERNS prompts people to see a nutrition counselor:

— The development of a disease, or fear of developing one, that necessitates dietary changes to maximize the chances for good health.

— Various symptoms, such as aches and pains, fatigue or sinus congestion, that have not yielded to traditional medical diagnoses and treatments.

— A fashionable new consumerism that seeks nontraditional personal services, from hair analysis to psychic predictions.

In nearly all cases only the first concern justifies seeking nutrition counseling, if, that is, it will help people in planning a diet that will optimize their chances for good health. Every year millions of Americans discover that they already have or are at risk of developing illnesses that are affected by diet and they are told by their doctors to change their eating habits. The doctor generally hands the patient a list of do's and don't's or a printed menu plan. Rarely does the doctor indicate how the patient is supposed to put the plan into effect.

Too often, failure to tailor the dietary suggestions to individual needs and to take living patterns into account results in quick abandonment of the diet. Many patients who try to follow a menu often misinterpret it, assuming, for example, that the words restrict and avoid mean "eliminate" or thinking that "eat red meat only occasionally" means every other day, since, at the time, meat has been eaten daily.

IN GENERAL a well-trained nutrition counselor should be able to help with the following diet-related problems, among others: weight control (loss and gain), heart disease, diabetes, high blood pressure, hiatal hernia, high blood cholesterol, food allergies, gout and digestive disorders. People may also wish to consult an expert about the overall nutritional adequacy of their diet — whether they are consuming enough calcium, iron, B vitamins, fiber, protein or any other nutrient or food category of concern. They may want to adopt a vegetarian diet but are not sure how to go about it in a nutritionally sound way. Or they may simply want to consume more or less of certain foods — more dried beans, perhaps, or less red meat — but do not know how to make the proper substitutions.

A NUTRITION counselor can help put desired dietary changes or a doctor's recommendations into practice, within the limitations of your particular circumstances. (Adhering to a special diet can be considerably more difficult for a business traveler than for a freelance writer who works at home.)

A nutrition counselor should quiz you extensively about how you eat and how you live, including who does the shopping, cooking and clearing of the table, what foods you especially like and dislike, and work schedules and current meal patterns.

Clients may be asked to keep a food diary of everything eaten for a week to clarify patterns that may be adding to nutritional difficulties. Most people are notoriously poor at recalling what they eat throughout a day — even what they ate yesterday — and they are even worse at estimating amounts.

It does not matter whether a diet history is taken down in writing or entered into a computer; a history can only be as good as your memory. Do not assume that because a nutritionist advertises "computer analysis" you will end up with a more accurate assessment and sounder advice. Some computers are programmed to recommend supplements sold by the nutritionist but of little value to the client.

Be wary of anyone who uses hair analysis to assess nutritional needs. Hair contains no vitamins; it picks up many minerals from outside sources such as hair dyes. Hair is dead tissue that, at best, can reflect past exposure, not current deficiencies or excesses. Blood and urine tests coupled with a diet history are far more accurate ways of assessing needs.

AFTER A PROPER assessment you may be given a suggested diet to try for a week or two. During the next visit the counselor should review any problems you have had while following the program and make adjustments in the diet or in how you follow it.

Throughout, you must maintain realistic expectations of what good nutrition can do. The right diet can help control or even prevent such diseases as heart ailments, cancer, diabetes and stroke, but it cannot cure them. Be mistrustful of anyone who promises such a cure unless your symptoms are a direct result of a particular nutrient deficiency.

Also be wary of anyone who tries to solve a health problem by cutting out whole classes of foods you have long believed to be nutritious, such as all dairy products (unless, of course, you are allergic to milk), or by advising you to eat only certain combinations of foods or by prescribing large doses of supplements.

WITH SO MANY self-styled experts, it is difficult to recognize one who is trustworthy. Two guidelines are useful: If you want a medical doctor look for a member of the American Society of Clinical Nutrition; membership indicates special interest and training in nutrition. Do not assume, because a nutritionist identifies himself as a doctor, that he is a medical doctor.

Bypass surgeries decrease

Hearst News Service

MONTEREY, Calif. — Although physicians continue to recommend coronary bypass surgery at an unprecedented rate, there are signs that the trend is slowing, the American Heart Association reports.

The surgery, used to bypass clogged heart arteries that pose a risk of heart attack, is itself being bypassed in favor of new clot-dissolving drugs and less severe surgery, the association announced here at the opening of its three-day meeting.

In 1982 — the last year for which complete statistics are available — U.S. physicians performed 170,000 bypass operations. Although that is a 7 percent increase over 1981, the association notes that the popularity of the operation had been growing much faster. Use of the surgery increased 16 percent between 1980 and 1981.

The decrease parallels increasing scrutiny of the operation, which at $20,000 apiece became a lucrative trend.

'Best friends' can share sexual relationship

By DR. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. There is a young man who lives down the street from my house whom I've known for three years. We are very close and I consider him my best friend, since we can talk to each other about our deepest feelings.

What concerns me is that I've begun to have different feelings for him now, sexual feelings. I'm scared because I've never felt so strongly about going to bed with someone before, but I don't want our friendship to change.

A. The best loving and total relationship is based on friendship.

That means trusting each other so you can share your deepest secrets and know you each have each other's best interest at heart. If you have that, you have a gift.

There are many people — especially men — who contact me complaining that they cannot get women to be sexual with them. In their desperation to "score," they don't realize that the other person is sensing, even subliminally, that they are being used. Those men would be better off treating the women as a person first rather than as a sexual object.

Men who do this are often petrified to be as open as you say you are. They have sex instead of sharing. Being sexual is a way to hide from being emotionally vulnerable.

I'm very glad you and your friend have your priorities straight and are on the right track — friendship leads, sex follows. But now, you have another problem. You fear that if you add the sexual dimension, your friendship will be jeopardized. It doesn't have to be. In fact, it can be better.

Examine your expectations about what will happen when you add sex to your friendship. Will you become more possessive? Keys to making love last include not holding on to it, not forcing it, not panicking, not suffocating someone, not being afraid to grow and change.

If you change the way you relate to your friend, if you become more afraid of losing him, more calculating about how you behave and more critical about how he behaves, yes, you will spoil what you have.

Of course being sexual with someone may mean to you that you have made more of a commitment. But instead of thinking "Now I have given him my body as well as my soul; it better work out, or I'll be more devastated, or I'll be jealous if he talks to someone else," think, "Now we are sharing all parts of ourselves, and adding another dimension to our giving to one another and expressing our love." Trust and focus on the foundation of love, not fear.

One note of caution: Don't decide to add the dimension of sexuality to your relationship to prove something — for example, that you are wanted. Self-satisfaction and needing to fill yourself up is not glue for a lasting loving exchange. Decide instead that the two of you want to feel as close to one another as possible: to give rather than to take.

Letting your caring and sharing be expressed in touches and caresses can only add to your friendship. Your joy will increase immensely. You are lucky. Enjoy.

WE ALL PLACE a different priority on sex, especially at various stages in life. Thus my answer to the following older woman's letter from Dannville, Illinois is slightly different than the above.

Q. I met a wonderful man four months ago. We get along exceptionally well, in all areas. We have the same interest in most things, respect each other and are good friends, but I don't feel we love each other as deeply as I know people can. He wants me to relocate to a farm 800 miles away. Can we have a long-term relationship under those circumstances?

A. Yes, depending on what you decide to do and what's important to you. If you decide that companionship is most important and satisfying for you now, even if passion is missing, go for it.

Like the younger woman whom I answered above, I cheer you that you have a good friend. Love can grow from that! If you can't have what you think is ideal, love what you have. Decide to enjoy being loved and wanted. Experience love from the person who gives so much to you. Open yourself up to learn a new way. You can give in to it and grow to be as committed as he is.

One note of caution here too: Don't give in out of desperation. Commit to this person because you care about him and feel good together, not because you fear you have no alternatives. Otherwise you will only resent him and yourself in the long run.

Love and sexual attraction is partly inexplicable chemistry. Sometimes, one person feels it more than the other. But it is also based on sharing and trusting. One person's strength of commitment can inspire the one who appears to "feel less" to give in to it. A lot of attraction is also in your mind and your idea of what should be. Decide that it is good and it will be better than you think.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cataracts not uncommon condition among older population

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is waiting to be called for a cataract operation, and I would appreciate some information on the subject. For example, do all older people eventually get cataracts? And how can a person tell if he is getting one before going to the doctor? — John, Casper, Wy.

Dear John: The most common cause of cataracts is the aging process, and the cataracts caused by the degeneration of the lens as a result of age are called senile cataracts. In one study, 15 percent of people between 52 and 85 years of age had some visual deficit as a result of cataracts.

According to Dr. Lawrence F. Jindra, of North Shore University Hospital in Manhasset, N.Y., most people over 70 years of age have some cataract formation. Both eyes are almost always affected, but the stage of involvement in each may be different.

Patients in whom cataracts are developing generally begin to report a gradual loss of distant vision, and may complain of glare or bright lights. At the same time, some patients experience an improvement in near vision; however, both near and far vision diminish as the cataract mature.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am taking insulin for diabetes and my doctor has recommended that I enroll in an exercise program. He says he can't promise that it will help reduce the amount of insulin I need, but he says it will make me feel better. Do you agree? — Mr. W.E., South Bend, Ind.

Dear Mr. E.: Exercise does appear to improve psychological functioning in diabetic patients even when it has little effect on insulin requirements or other aspects of physiologic functioning. In one small study, a group of patients who took part in an exercise program showed a lessening of depression, anxiety, and hostility when compared with a control group.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I do not get sneezing fits or a runny nose, but I do get headaches during certain times of the year. My doctor says that I might have hay fever and he is referring me to an allergist. Is it possible to have hay fever and not sneeze? — Charlie, York, Pa.

Dear Charlie: Hay fever (or allergic rhinitis) may exist even when the classic symptoms of hay fever are absent. A person who gets frequent sinus headaches may actually have hay fever, and a referral to an allergist is advisable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When people talk about taking a drink, how much alcohol are they talking about, and what does it mean in terms of an actual drink? — Moe, NYC

Dear Moe: One common classification of alcohol use is to consider a drink to consist of 0.5 ounces of alcohol. This is the amount contained in 12 ounces of beer, four ounces of wine, or 1.2 ounces of 80-proof liquor.

For Grace, Washington, D.C.: Emotional stress, as well as loss of weight and strenuous exercise can cause a woman to stop menstruating. Such stress can occur in a weekend athlete as well as in an Olympic athlete.

Relationships revealed by survey

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

When columunist Ann Landers published the results of her sex survey last week, she provided some fresh ammunition in the battle between the sexes and aroused the interest of sex researchers who are still attempting to explain why more than 60,000 American women prefer cuddling to "the act."

Experts label the one-question survey ("Would you be content to be held close and treated tenderly, and forget about 'the act?' ") unscientific. They point to the problem of "self-selection" — polling only people who felt moved to respond — and they find the columnist's methodology rather crude.

But the fact that 90,000 women bothered to answer is "a real outpouring," they say, although they note that the size of the response is "not as large as might be expected." But no one thinks the reaction uninteresting.

"Perhaps the message from the Ann Landers survey might be this," says retired sociologist Clyde Martin, who cowrote the historic Kinsey Institute study on sexual behavior. "So much has been written about sexuality today, and yet I think that some of the fundamental differences between males and females are somewhat ignored."

BOSTON UNIVERSITY biologist James Weinrich and his colleague Richard Pillard have described these differences as the Pink and Blue Sex Theory. "Our theory says that there are two kinds of sex drive, and both exist in men and women," Weinrich says.

The pink drive "is more closely identified with romance and pair bonding and holding someone close," he says. "The blue drive is more oriented to coitus." Pink describes the sexual response that occurs "with someone you feel more comfortable with and already know," while blue is the casual encounter or the one-night stand.

"In men, the blue is the drive and the pink is the response; for women it's the opposite," Weinrich says.

Two examples of how blue and pink exist in society are the pornography industry and the romance novel market. "The pornography industry satisfies men's blue drive," Weinrich says. "Pornography is very repetitive and obvious, and it's incomprehensible to people who are not aroused by it."

Women buy a type of written pornography — the romance novel. "It's very repetitive, very obvious and, like pornography, produced in mass quantities and incompehensible to people who aren't aroused by it," Weinrich says.

MEN BUY THE visual pornography. Women purchase the written version. The gap, Weinrich says, is merely in the communication between the sexes.

"We like the theory because it's a good way of showing how men and women are the same at some fundamental level and how they are different."

"We see the response as much less of a reaction to a sex question than as a reaction to a question about relationships and affection," says June Machover Reinisch, director of Indiana University's Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction. "Also, her question implies that the 'act' is unemotional ... and it perpetuates the idea that sex is dirty, animalistic and a thing that males want and females don't want.

"Neither the question nor the answers indicate in any way that sex, including intercourse, is a great vehicle for communication, love, caring and emotion within a couple. It's like asking the question, 'When did you stop beating your wife?' It elicits a certain kind of response from a certain kind of person."

AS FOR THE WOMAN who wrote in to complain that her husband "raped her five times a week," or the woman whose husband is now impotent as a result of his alcoholism, or the woman who complained that her boyfriend "never says a word" — these women, Reinsich says, are "really expressing dissatisfaction with their relationships and partners and not with sex per se.

"Would they want these men to cuddle them?" she asks. "No, they would probably want new partners."

"It's important that Ann Landers does this," Reinisch says. "I'm not criticizing her, I just want people to understand what she did."

Part of the complaints expressed to Landers may also relate to other problems. "It doesn't surprise me at all that teen-age women would report dissatisfaction," says sociologist Ira Reiss, who does sex research at the Univeristy of Minnesota. "Teen-age men and teen-age women are just learning the sexual script; it takes time to learn how to satisfy each other."

The women who wrote to Ann Landers "are a very select group," Reiss says. "All of our evidence on marital intercourse suggests that rates are going up, that the proportion of intercourse which leads to orgasm for married women is higher."

Warnings due on aspirin bottles soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Warnings of a link between aspirin and the often fatal children's disease known as Reye Syndrome will begin appearing on supermarket shelves this week, but some critics say the industry's voluntary notices are not enough.

The government announced Wednesday that the aspirin industry has agreed to a warning campaign including posters and shelf stickers in stores and supermarkets and public service ads on radio and television.

The warnings will tell parents not to give aspirin to children or teen-agers suffering from chicken pox or influenza unless a doctor is consulted first.

The warning is based on a study by the Centers for Disease Control that indicates children treated with aspirin for those ailments may face a 25 times greater risk of contracting Reye Syndrome than children who have flu or chicken pox but do not receive aspirin.

Reye Syndrome is a fast-developing sickness that occurs in children and teen-agers following a viral infection such as flu or chicken pox.

It is characterized by a sudden onset of vomiting, often with fever. Other symptoms include lethargy, severe headaches and sudden changes in behavior. The illness can progress rapidly to convulsions, delirium and coma.

Of the 190 cases reported in the year ending last November, about one in four died, and many of the survivors suffered brain damage.

The aspirin industry's leaders have agreed with the Department of Health and Human Services to spread word of the possible link voluntarily, although industry leaders have said they still do not feel the evidence is conclusive.

But the public health activist who originally released the study to the public says the industry does not go far enough because aspirin products now on the shelf — some of which recommend aspirin for children suffering from the flu — would remain on the shelf through this winter's flu season.

Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe, director of the activist Health Research Group, said companies "should be required to put a strong, uniform label on and should be required to take steps until then to either remove unlabeled products from the shelves or put warning stickers on. ...

"The question is how many children will die or suffer brain damage before the government orders a more thorough response," Wolfe said.

HHS Secretary Margaret M. Heckler announced the aspirin industry's campaign in a statement Wednesday, commending the Aspirin Foundation of America for "its prompt and responsible action, which will be getting the message to Americans within a week."

One Washington-based supermarket chain — Giant Food — plans to have posters in place Thursday, Mrs. Heckler's statement said. Other posters will be distributed by aspirin company sales representatives beginning next week.

Some stores will put warning stickers on store shelves next to the aspirin bottles, the department said. Radio and television commercials also will be broadcast as public service announcements beginning next week.

But new aspirin labels warning of the association will not appear on store shelves until after this winter's flu season is over.

Lamar Muse gets back in the pilot's seat

By AGIS SALPUKAS
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — M. Lamar Muse, who has spent 36 of his 64 years in the airline business, says he would like nothing better than to call it quits, and spend the rest of his life in his condominium in Austin and at his summer home in Vancouver, Canada, where he can fish for salmon.

"I'd rather be doing that than sitting in hot Dallas this summer trying to make this airline work," the garrulous executive said.

Yet, he added, he has little choice but to try to save Dallas-based Muse Air, founded by his son, Michael L. Muse. The airline, which is in a dogfight with rival Southwest Airlines, has never made a go of its flight operations — its profits to date are the result of tax credits. In the first nine months of 1984, Muse Air lost $9.3 million.

The elder Muse, who, despite his reluctant unretirement, has his own reasons for relishing a fight with the bigger Southwest Air, staved off a recent crisis in December only through the intervention of a friend, Harold C. Simmons, chairman of the Amalgamated Sugar Co., who pumped $16 million into the carrier.

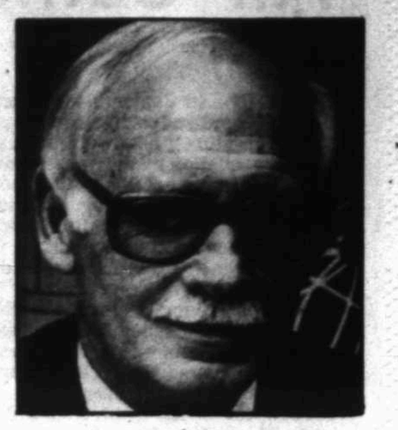

In return for the $16 million, however, Simmons wanted his friend, whom he described as "unusually capable and intuitive in marketing and scheduling an airline, and running the whole thing," to again take over as chairman of the airline, a post he had turned over to son last May. So Lamar Muse took the reins Dec. 18.

Simmons, who will also get 2 million shares of new convertible preferred stock, estimated that the airline's fleet of six McDonnell Douglas Corp. MD-80 aircraft and five DC-9-50 planes — and Muse's valuable gates at various airports — are worth far in excess of his investment.

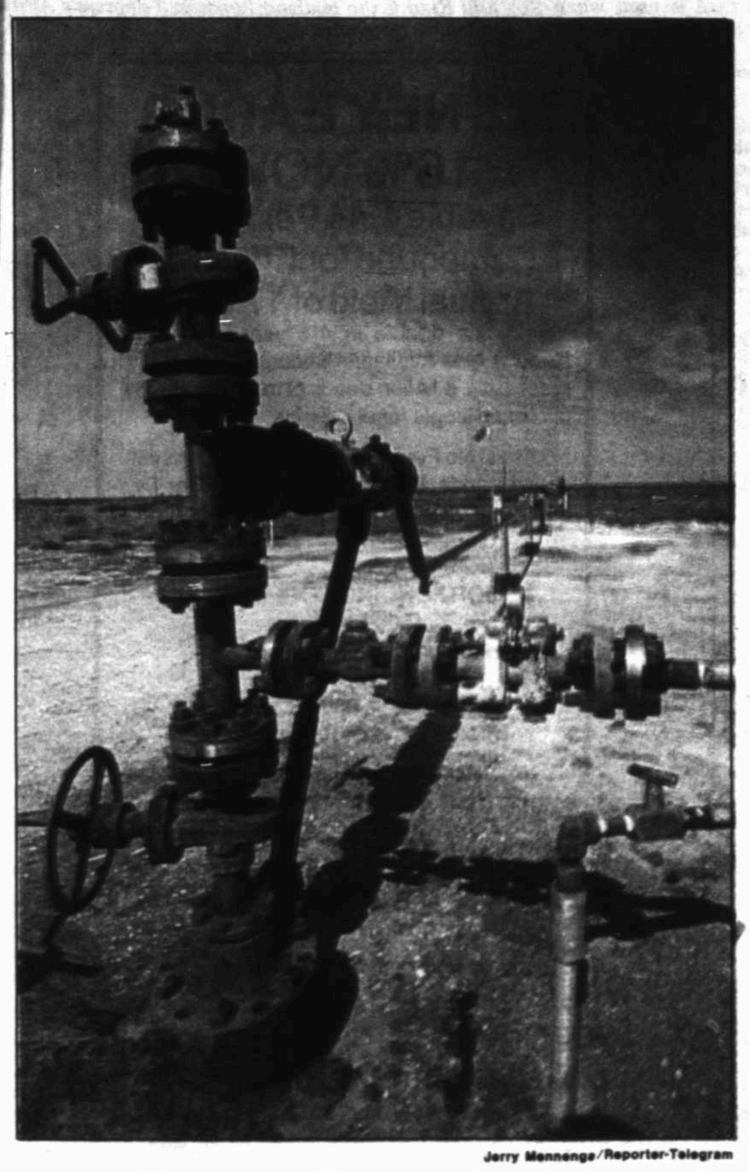

During his long aviation career, Muse has become somewhat of a legend in Texas aviation. He began his career in 1948 when he joined Trans Texas Airways as treasurer. But it was as chief executive of Southwest Airlines from 1971 t0 1978 that he earned his reputation as a crafty executive, engaging in bitter fare and route wars with rival Braniff and Texas International.

He made Southwest, whose main route was between Love Field in Dallas and Hobby Airport in Houston, into a profitable "love airline" — complete with miniskirted stewardesses and bare-bone fares. He even gave away bottles of Chivas Regal to full-fare customers.

Carbon dioxide is currently being injected into the Amoco tertiary project at the rate of 135 Mmcfd.

Largest tertiary project underway

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

After 20 years of research, carbon dioxide injection into the largest tertiary oil recovery project in West Texas was made formal recently by dedication ceremonies in Brownfield for Amoco's giant Slaughter District carbon dioxide project.

The event was commemorated by royalty interest owners, state and community leaders, and Amoco employees. Said Larry McVay, Slaughter District manager: "This is a milestone for Amoco Production Co. It was about 20 years ago that our researchers began experimenting with carbon dioxide recovery at our Tulsa Research Center."

According to McVay the laboratory research work in Tulsa was followed by extensive engineering analyses and several tertiay projects in the Slaughter District.

The Slaughter District tertiary project includes the Central Mallet Unit, Slaughter Estate Unit and Frazier Unit of the Slaughter field and the Wasson ODC Unit of the Wasson field. Ground breaking for the projects was celebrated in September 1983.

Amoco has a 100 percent working interest in the Central Mallet and Frazier Units; a 98.5 percent working interest in the Slaughter Estate Unit and a 24 percent interest in the Wasson ODC Unit.

The magnitude of the project required 270 miles of various size pipe to "plumb" the project, the installation of 390 aluminum bronze injection wellheads, 350 miles of injection tubing and 74 new satellite battery and central tank battery vessels.

Gap seen in production records

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Department of Energy's recently released figures showing that new crude oil reserves jumped over 1.5 billion barrels during 1983 is really a reflection of oilpatch activity in the late 1970s and proves that there is a long lead time between discovery of a well and actual production, reports the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA).

Writing in the current issue of Petroleum Independent Magazine, the Association's bi-monthly publication, IPAA economist Deborah Rowell notes that the figures could be misleading to those unfamiliar with industry operations because they give the impression that "crude oil reserve additions would increase so dramatically in a year of soft oil prices."

"Actually," says Rowell, "it has taken this long for the drilling boom in the late 1970s to translate into additional reserves. It is imperative that policy makers recognize this inherently long lead time when acting on issues involving America's energy security."

"Those are points IPAA has been trying to drive home in Washington and with the public for years," says IPAA executive vice president Lloyd N. Unsell. "Changes in tax policy affecting the industry or regulatory changes impact directly on production and lawmakers and regulators often forget that the decisions they make today will directly impact the amount of production in the future."

Reprinted from December 1984 Petroleum Independent

"As a rule of thumb," Rowell notes, "about one-fifth of crude oil reserve capacity is reported at the time of discovery. It then takes roughly five more years before the remaining reserves can be verified through development wells and more testing. Clearly the industry is only now reaping the benefits of increased reserve additions as a result of its advance drilling program in the late 70s."

The IPAA staff economist, however, notes that the situation with natural gas reserves is exactly the opposite. "The majority of gas reserves," she says, "are reported initially, with the remaining added in subsequent years. Therefore, the drop in gas reserve additions that began in 1981 is fairly indicative of the decline in gas well drilling since then."

British firm buys 50 percent, Geo-Search

Staff reports

Rodney M. Robinson, founder and Chairman of the Board of Geo-Search Corp. has announced that Geo-Search, a leading supplier of seismic and other geophysical services, has joined forces with Simon Engineering, PLC, an international engineering group with headquarters in England.

The transaction involves the purchase by Simon of 50 percent of the outstanding stock of the privately held Geo-Search for an undisclosed sum. The management team and staff of Geo-Search will remain in position, and the company will continue to operate as an autonomous member of Simon's Oil Services Group. The announcement was made at a reception held earlier this week at the Midland Petroleum Club.

"This is an ideal partnership," said Robinson, "and we are extremely pleased eo ally ourselves with a firm of Simon's global stature. The geophysical contracting business is extremely capital intensive due to constant changes intechnology. Simon will be a stalwart of financial backing so we can remain competitive and continue our history of growth and profitability. Simon's network of international markets will also provide us an entree to geographic expansion when the appropriate time comes," Robinson added.

Joining in the announcement reception were Chairman of the Board of Simon Engineering, PLC, Harry Harrison, and head of the firm's Oil Services Group, Peter C.H. Cook, both from Simon's home offices in Stockport, England.

Said Harrison: "Simon has been searching for suitable additions to its oil service interests, and views this as an important move which will give Simon and Geo-Search a basis for further expansion in this very key area of the world energy industry."

Geo-Search Corporation provides integrated geophysical services to companies exploring for oil and natural gas in the Southwest, Midwest, and Rocky Mountain regions of the United States. Formed in 1973, Geo-Search has achieved a record of substantial sales and profitable growth.

Among the services provided to clients are seismic data acquisition and processing, data storage and retrieval, and data brokerage. The company also acquires and sells speculative seismic data to aid its clients in the location of potential oil and gas reserves. The headquarters offices of Geo-Search are located in Midland, Texas, with field operations centered in Lubbock. Division offices are located in Midland, Denver and Dallas.

Computers will treat ill oil wells

LAFAYETTE, LA-Medical doctors have begun to use computers to diagnose human ailments; soon oilfield engineers will have a computer program to treat arthritic oil wells.

Two chemists and three chemical engineers at the University of Southwestern Louisiana have undertaken an 18-month research project to devise a computer program which will predict the corrosion rate of oil well.s

Corrosion costs the oil industry billions of dollars annually, says Dr. James Garber, head of the USL chemical engineering department, who heads the researchproject. "Let's say you're a major company with 1,000 producing wells. Which ones do you need to concentrate your corrosion mitigation efforts on? And where in those wells do you have the highest corrosion?"

eFifteen oil and chemical companies have each contributed $5,000 to support this research: Amoco, Arco, Chevron, Conoco, Baker Treating, Exxon Chemical, Gulf, Kerr McGee, Pennzoil, Petro-Canada, SOHIO, Tenneco, Texaco, Union Oil of California, and Union Texas.

The USL team will develop a program capable of running on a microcomputer, that would allow an oil company employee to enter parameters from a well(pressure, flow rate, pH, and so on), and arrive at a profile of corrosion within that well.

"After calculating the temperature and pressure profile of the well, we must determine the amount of water and oil at any point in the production string," Garber explains. "We'll also develop a high pressure phase equilibrium program to handle the special case of a gas condensate well."

"If the production string tubing is water wet, we must then determine thecorrosivity and scale tendency of the water being produced. From this we can calculate a pitting corrosion rate as a function of depth. Then we can predict the life of the production string."

Southwest has record net

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines announced this week that its 1984 net income rose to a record $49.7 million, a 22 percent increase from the $40.8 million earned in 1983.

The regional carrier said primary earnings per share were a record $1.69, compared with $1.40 the previous year.

In the fourth quarter, ending Dec. 31, net income rose to $11.4 million from just over $11 million in the final three months of 1983.

The airline said last year's results showed an increase in average passenger fare and average length of passenger haul. But Southwest's yield per passenger mile was almost unchanged at 11.12 cents.

Southwest also said it filled about 58.5 percent of available seats in 1984, down from a load factor of 61.57 percent.

Southwest chairman Herbert D. Kelleher said the airline's gains came "in spite of increased competition and yield pressures."

Kelleher said he is optimistic about the current year, as Southwest adds fuel-efficient Boeing 737-300 jets and implements cost-control measures.

Understanding value of oil no easy task

Trying to understand oil pricing and what a barrel of it is really worth can be an exercise in futility.

Sometimes held artificially low by government policy and artificially high at other times by those who can push it high and keep it high, it has been generations since we have known what a barrel of oil is worth on the open market. But, we are probably about to find out, as the price-fixing power of OPEC wanes.

What is a barrel of oil worth? Because of the far-reaching, poiitical, social and economic impact of energy prices, I have a suspicion it is not merely what someone is willing to pay for it.

For example, in the oil business one person's good fortune in oil pricing is almost always another's disaster.

Declining oil prices are a boon at the national level, as lower energy prices leave more money to spend, resulting in a growing economy.

But low oil prices are a disaster in Texas, where Mother Oil has nurtured the good life longer than most of us can remember. Presently about 23 percent of the state's revenues supporting excellent public schools and other public services comes from the oil and gas severance tax, and each dollar-dip in the price of oil robs Mother Oil's kids of another $40 million in services.

AS THE ENERGY importing states delight in their new low oil and gas prices, energy producing states can only continue to suffer.

The suffering could be severe. Victor Arnold, Ph.D, director of business research at the University of Texas, says that oil price cuts are putting the pillar of the Texas economy on very "shaky" ground. He says if oil prices decline much below $25, it will cause a 5 percent drop in employment in the oil industry.

"What we need in Texas is a strong OPEC," said Arnold. Another OPEC? Isn't it strange how time flies and tunes change.

IT SEEMS only yesterday that I was sitting in The Spot Cafe, listening to just about every oilman in town slurp black coffee, swap lies and cuss the "blasted, A-rab, OPECer, gangsters" for ripping-off America and ruining the national economy by price extortion.

With jutting jaw and a bit of indignant chest pounding, the industry swore that we must rid ourselves as soon as possible of the Arab robber barons.

"Energy independence" was the rally cry. "We can never again let ourselves be controlled by the whims of international extortionists," we were warned.

Isn't it ironic that we in the Permian Basin are now watching OPEC nervously every day, wondering if they can hold the line on prices a bit longer. Yes, because of oil prices, we pray for the "gangsters" we once cussed.

It was just about 10 years ago that I asked a prominent Texas oil and gas leader, in a newspaper interview, what it would take for the oil industry to bring about energy independence.

"Eleven dollars a barrel," came the confident reply. "Give us $11 a barrel and we will find all the oil and gas this country needs."

IT DIDN'T HAPPEN at $11 a barrel. It didn't happen at $20 a barrel or even $35 a barrel. The only time we even began to seriously approach energy independence was when the talk was about $50 oil.

It was about that time that I wrote in a newspaper column that a return to cheap oil would be the worst thing that ever happened to this country. Not because high-priced oil is good for Texas or the oil industry, (I wasn't in Texas or the oil business at the time I said that), but because it would put a halt to the intense research into alternative energy, conservation, and synthetic fuels that could have made us truly energy independent.

As an energy consumer — not a producer — I would rather have seen the price of oil go to $50 a barrel than the other way. Because of declining oil prices, synthetic fuels and oil shale projects have been closed. Alternative energy and energy conservation research programs have been castrated. Energy independence has become a lost dream.

AND BECAUSE we are not energy independent, we remain entrenched in the intrigue, treachery and madness of backward, 5,000-year-old developing nations. Make no mistake about it. Sooner or later, America will go to war in some godforsaken corner of this world to keep the oil flowing, and there goes another 50,000, 19-year old American boys. Given the current parameters, it is almost unavoidable.

How much is a barrel of oil worth? If $50 oil could save America the tragedy of a Viet Nam in the Middle East, would it be worth it?

Pricing oil is, indeed, a complicated affair, when you add the human element to it.

John Paul Pitts is the Business-Oil Editor for the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Air Control Board reviewing fees charged to industries

By Bill Kidd

AUSTIN - Air Control Board members are reviewing fees charged industries for permit fees, in view of the Legislature's need for increased revenues, and a recommendation by the Sunset Advisory Commission.

SAC recommended the ACB recover 25 to 50 per cent of the cost of permitting facilities — although ACB staff members say deciding just how much will be recovered depends on how much of the agency's budget is assigned to permitting, and how a "facility" is defined.

A special committee of the ACB, which is looking at alternative fee schedules, was told there is no uniform definition of a "facility" at present.

SAC calculated the ACB currently recovers only 11 percent of the cost of permitting.

A report to Air Control Board members came up with $2 million of the $12 million agency budget as related to permitting costs; however, board members indicated they felt that figure was low, and the staff agreed that the Legislature would "expect" $3.9 million to be recovered.

That would mean an increase in fees to industries, which resisted the current fee structure.

No decision has been reached on the amount of changes in fees to be requested.

Rep. Paul Ragsdale, D-Dallas, has introduced legislation providing for use of savings and loan associations as school district depositories.

HB 297 would amend current law which provides for banks to be used as depositories.

State and federally chartered associations both would be eligible, but associations would have to have their deposits insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

The bill also changes the list of approved securities for such depositories, by broadening the types of U.S. securities which would qualify as collateral.

Two bills dealing with operation of the State Fire Marshal's Office have been introduced by Rep. Gene Green, D-Houston.

HB 253 deals with reporting and use of information through the Texas Fire Incident Reporting System.

The measure provides that the chief fire official of a fire department report information to the fire marshal regarding "all fires to which the fire department responds," with the information to be analyzed (and an annual report issued through the State Board of Insurance).

HB 254 provides for creation of a fire safety education program in the fire marshal's office, aimed at increasing public awareness of fire problems.

The fire marshal would be authorized to appoint an advisory committee "chosen from various fields of fire safety and from any other state agencies or groups" appropriate to assist with the program.

Rep. Terral Smith, R-Austin, has introduced legislation to make fraudulent use of a debit card a third degree felony under the Texas Penal Code (punishable by two to 10 years in prison, and a fine not to exced $5,000).

HB 220 defines a debit card as "an identification card, plate, coupon, book, number, or any other device authorizing a person or bearer to communicate a request to an unmanned teller machine."

An offense would occur if the card is used when expired, revoked, cancelled or stolen, or without the effective consent of the owner.

The bill sets out a presumption regarding notification to an owner of a card on revocation or cancellation (including notice in person, by telephone, and by registered or certified mail).

Legislation relating to damages on dishonored checks has been introduced by Rep. Anita Hill, R-Garland, as HB 246.

The bill provides that the holder of a dishonored check "may send to the drawer by registered mail demand for payment of the amount of the check" with payment to be made in cash within 30 days.

Failure to make such payment would result in damages (in addition to the amount of the check) of $100 for checks of $33.33 or less, three times the amount of the check for amounts greater than $33.33 and less than $166.67, and $500 for checks of $166.67 or more.

Texas Automobile Insurance Plan reports asignment of private passenger risks dropped by more than 60,000 in 1984 compared to 1983, with 133,474 compared to 196,488.

EOR

Carbon dioxide injection into the Wasson ODC Unit began last November 17, and injection into the three Slaughter field units began last December 19. Amoco is currently injecting 135 Mmcfd of carbon dioxide, which will increase to 250 Mmcfd by mid-1985 when 390 wells will be on line. The majority of the carbon dioxide gas is being supplied from the Amoco-owned Bravo Dome Carbon Dioxide Gas Unit in northwestern New Mexico, near the town of Clayton. It is being transported by Bravo Pipeline System, a 20-inch, 218-mile pipeline.

All of the units in the project were discovered in 1936 and remained on primary production until the early and mid-sixties when waterflooding was initiated in the fields. Maximum carbon dioxide injection is expected to occur in 1988 in the Slaughter Estate Unit; 1994 in the Central Mallet Unit; 1989 in the Frazier Unit and 1996 in the Wasson ODC Unit. That will give the units about a 13 year injection term in the Slaughter, 22 in the Mallet, 12 in the Frazier and 43 in the Wasson. At the height of carbon dioxide injection, the Mallet and Frazier Units will be taking on about 50 Mmcfd of gas, while the Slaughter will be injecting 100 Mmcfd and the ODC 200 Mmcfd.

Amoco expects to recover an additional 15-25 percent of the original oil in place with the tertiary project, which was completed under budget and four months ahead of schedule, according to McVay.

MUSE

But in March 1978 Muse made a gross miscalcuation. He asked the Southwest board to choose between himself and one of the airline's founders, Rollin King. The board was stunned, and returned the favor by ousting a shocked Muse.

So Muse bought himself a Yamaha and tore down Texas highways. He also bought a small trucking company, and learned to drive an 18-wheeler rig.

But Michael Muse, 35, who had lost his job as a counsel at Southwest when his father was shown the door, dreamed of getting back into the airline business. On Jan. 30, 1980, he incorporated Muse Air, and floated a public stock offering in April of 1981.

The airline began operations in July with 28 flights daily between Dallas and Houston, a market dominated by Southwest Airlines. Muse then had a fleet of two DC-9-80s.

The elder Muse, who was asked to become chairman of the board by his son, did so reluctantly. The year 1981 was one of heavy losses for airlines. He recalled he told his son: "There are so many easy ways to make money. Why kill yourself with an airline?"

Michael Muse, now vice chairman, said the reason he began to fly from Houston to Dallas against such a formidable competitor was that existing carriers could not handle all the traffic. But that first year, when the strike by the air controllers prevented Muse from expanding, it lost $3.91 million.

In 1982 the airline went on a major expansion. It sold more stock and bought six MD-80s and began flying into Midland and Odessa, Texas; Tulsa, Okla., and Los Angeles. That year, the airline earned $11.5 million — solely from the sale of tax credits for plane purchases.

Even though the route structure and number of passengers grew, the airline started losing money. Its stock price on the American Stock Exchange has slumped from a 52-week high of 15⅛ to the current 5⅝.

Hans Plickert, an analyst for E.F. Hutton & Co., said that with the elder Muse — who he described as a genuis at scheduling and finding market miches — at the controls, Muse has a fighting chance. Plickert said that Michael Muse sought to compete directly with the stronger Southwest Airlines on too many routes. "He was trying to prove that he was better than Southwest," he said. Southwest has a fleet of 54 planes, and Muse has 11.

Michael Muse said there was nothing wrong with the strategy of providing a better class of service than Southwest, at matching or slightly higher fares.

GUIDE TO SMALL BUSINESS

Small firms can win research contracts

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series on the Small Business Administration and its policies.

Can small hi-tech firms still try to win federal research contracts through the Small Business Research Program? They sure can.

Under the program, 11 federal agencies with sizeable R and D budgets must direct a certain percentage of their R and D work to small firms. These agencies soon will be inviting proposals on the second general round of contract awards.

Any small firms interested in submitting a proposal can get the necessary information by writing to the U.S. Small Business Administration,which supervises and monitors the program. Write to SBS, SBIR, 1441 "L" Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20416. SBA does not award the contracts; the agencies do. But SBA can provide information on when solicitations will be made by the agencies.

In Fiscal 1983, the first year SBIR was in operation, the 11 agencies directed almost $45 million to small firms through SBIR. This year, that total is expected to reach $106 million.

I recall that a relatively new federal law requires Uncle Sam to pay his bills on time or face financial penalties. How's the law working? Very well.

Federal agencies are paying the bulk of their bills on time, to the benefit of many small businesses who do work with the government.

A survey by the Office of Management and Budget shows that the 20 major federal agencies being monitored regularly shelled out only $1.46 million in interest penalties during the first three quarters of 1983. The faster Uncle Sam pays his bills, the easier are cash flow problems faced by small procurement contractors.

Although the record under the Prompt Payments Act is still short, it does appear that the law has succeeded in reducing the incidence of late payments to small firms doing work for the government.

As a small business owner, I get the feeling that I pay a higher interest rate than large businesses. Any truth to this? Not only are you paying enywhere from three to four percentage points higher now, but that figure may still go higher.

A Small Business Administration report recently noted that smaller firms end up paying higher interest rates than big businesses. Some of the blame, experts say, can be placed on bank deregulation, whereby banks are now hotly contesting each other for business, mainly from the large corporations.

The net result is that in order to get the larger accounts, banks are willing to provide discounts to major corporations to lure them to the bank, a practicethey will not, or cannot, provide for small businesses.

Bankers also claim that as a result of the number of bankrupticies by small firms, banks should be able to charge a higher rate in the event the smallbusiness goes under. Bankers also claim it takes longer to analyze and process loan applications for a small firm.

What's the answer? Like in most purchases, it is best to shop around for the best bargain, and read the fine print, closely.

My small business is expanding and I can't make all decisions myself any more. How do I best go about delegating authority? First, decide to whom you will delegate authority. The people you choose should be competent in technical areas for which you will hold them responsible. These people should be managers or capable of becoming managers. They should possess the three"I's" – initiative, interest and imagination.

Next, spell out the delegation. Competent people want to know for what they are being held responsible. If you are delegating authority to several persons, make sure each knows the exact areas of responsibility -- production, for example, or customer service and delivery of orders.

When you manage through others, it is essential that you keep overall and ultimate control. Do so by holding subordinates responsible,while checking results of their actions and decisions. Require periodic reports from your managers.

Remember that if delegation of authority is to work, the top boss must allow managers to manage. Not everyone will carry out tasks the exact way you would do. Judge managers by results, not methods.

As a new small business owner, I have become more and more aware of the potential problems in business disputes. Since these can be both damaging and expensive, do you have any suggestions.? In a word – prevention. More and more small businesses are beginning to realize that proper preparation can help them avoid messy legal situations.

William Hart, director of a Chicago-based company specializing in conflict-management, stresses the need for trying to preent legal problems eahead of time especially recurring problems, instead of attempting to cope with them when they arise.

One of the best methods, Hart suggests, is to arrange for a lawyer to review your outstanding business contracts and agreements and attempt to foresee potential problems such as licenses, product liability and employee descrimination.

Once the company papers have been reviewed, proper language and stipulations can be rewritten intothe contracts and agreements.

You may also want a lawyer to review your past history of litigation to analyze your practices and recommend changes in your operation to avoid future pitfalls.

Small computers are becoming more commonplace in the home and in small businesses. Any tips on how best to utilize a small computer in my small firm? Talk to other small business persons to learn abou their experiences in buying and using small computers. Ask about initial costs, maintenance and the various clerical, bookkeeping, payroll, tax, accounting and inventory control functions which can be performed by and stored in a computer.

Also ask about computer programming and training. Visit as many computer sales outlets as possible. Talk with sales persons about costs, uses and future expansion.

AT&T schools don't give grades, pay — just make superior workers

By KATHLEEN BIRD
Associated Press Writer

HOPEWELL TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Students enrolled in any of the 270 courses offered at the AT&T Technologies Corporate Education Center take no tests, get paid while they learn and have a dress code at dinner.

Recent hires and long-time employees alike come here to improve their job skills in engineering, computers and such non-technical professions as accounting.

"We're not looking for them to get A's. We don't give tests. What we do is provide a learning experience so that when they get back on their jobs, they perform in a superior way," said Donald Conover, general manager of education and training for AT&T Technologies, the non-regulated sector of American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

This learning facility is one of some 400 such sites called colleges, universities, institutes or education centers around the country. Most were set up to introduce workers to company customs and procedures or to update skills.

At the AT&T center, most courses last a week, with students arriving Sunday evening and leaving Friday. Titles include "Digital Integrated Circuits," "Cost Management and Control," "Managing Professional Growth," "Personal Effectiveness Workshop" and "Laser Technology and Applications."

The corporate approach to learning differs from traditional college education.

"Where a university program is a collection of courses leading to a degree, most of our programs are needs-driven. Our education is to help a person become a superior performer," said Conover.

"The philosophy for adults to learn is different. ... We focus on performance improvement," he said. "They come here wanting to learn because it is in their self-interest. We don't have to create artificial stimulants."

Customers from around the world who buy AT&T products such as personal computers and advanced telephone systems also take courses at the center in this rural community bordering Princeton and about 10 miles from Trenton.

Opened in 1969, it is one of three corporate education centers in the country run by AT&T Technologies, based in Berkeley Heights, N.J. The others are in Lisle, Ill., near Chicago, and Dublin, Ohio, near Columbus.

There are also nine regional training centers, satellites of the campus here.

"Instead of the instructor being the source of all knowledge, he has to draw out students who bring experience from their jobs. There's a lot more interaction between instructor and student, and students and students," said Conover.

The 215-acre campus has a 300-capacity residence hall, 30-classroom building, a jogging track, four outdoor tennis courts, a basketball court and free-roaming deer.

In the residence hall, students get private bedrooms with double beds, lounge chairs, televisions and small desks.

"Our purpose is to provide comfortable accomodations. We think adults learn better that way," said Conover.

Computer worker makes spaghetti-like tangles become working equipment

Hearst News Service

To most people, the clatter of printers, the neck-pinching tilt of display screens and the spaghetti-like tangle of cables sprouting from their back panels are the inconvenient but inevitable price of a computerized office.

But to Dean Hovey, those annoyances are avoidable. And if computer equipment makers won't fix them, he will.

"The training I had said, 'Be sensitive to the product opportunities in annoyances.'"

Following that advice to its logical conclusion, the 30-year-old entrepreneur founded a company -- his fourth -- and set about designing accessories to "make the computing experience easier and more comfortable."

The current offerings from his Trace Systems Inc. of Mountain View, Calif., silence printers, control desktop computer clutter and guard the machines from theft or tampering. More are in the offing.

The SoundTrap, an acoustical enclosure for computer printers, was born when an office full of computers and printers made it "hard to hear myself think," Hovey said. Station II, a case that fits over an Apple II computer, locking it to the desk and supporting a monitor and two disk drives, came into being after Hovey noticed that a monitor sitting on the keyboard unit was too low for viewers. "So we set it on a stand and decided to apply some organization to the jumble of cords and cables."

Hovey traces his business activities back to his junior year in high school, when he decided to run his own bicycle repair shop rather than merely work in one.

When he got his degree in 1978, Hovey and a friend, David Kelly, formed the Hovey/Kelly Design consulting company to turn the prototype into a commercial product. The instrument is no longer on the market, because government limits on the cost of the blood test made a $10,000 product "hard to justify even though it made the job more efficient and comfortable."

One of Hovey/Kelly's first contracts was for an automatic book reading device for the blind. Then a chance encounter in Palo Alto, Calif., with an alumnus of Stanford's design program brought the company to Apple Computer Inc. After doing some preliminary design work on the Lisa computer, the consultants designed the Apple III case and the "mouse" that's one of the hallmarks of the Macintosh personal computer.

"Apple opened us up to the concept of computer accessories," said Hovey, and he turned the idea into Trace in 1981.

Decline in public construction leaves needs unmet

WASHINGTON, D.C.-Public construction has been declining by almost 9 percent per year in the 1980's, the Associated General Contractors of America (AGC) revealed. As a result of declining spending the public sector has left a number of major capital needs unmet.

The trends in public construction spending were analyzed as part of a study of the economic links betweenconstruction spending and the U.S. national economy commissioned from Data Resources, Inc. (DRI) of Lexington, Mass.

The value of public spending on construction in each decade from 1950 to the present was adjusted for inflation, and the average annual rate of growth was calculated. The study documented the dramatic decline in public construction from the 7.3 percent growth rate in the 1950's to the sharply dropping 8.8percent in the early 1980's.

AGC is extremely concerned with the effect of declining spending on the nation's already deteriorating infrastructure. The country's public facilities are the basis of our economic system, and must be maintained and expanded to keep up with society's requirements. The trend in public construction highlighted by this study cannot continue without serious consequences for the economy.

In those circumstances said AGC President Doug Pitcock, a Houston-based highway and bridge builder who is president of the 32,000 member firm association, "It makes no sense, not common sense or economic sense, that any government entity, be it federal, state or local, should propose, or anylegislative body should approve, any cuts in infrastructure spendng.

Stefanie Powers...

...more than just a pretty face

By FRED ROBBINS
King Features Syndicate

Titian-haired Stefanie Powers has been an audience favorite for 24 years, headlining in 27 movies and three television series, including the long-running, vastly popular "Hart to Hart," and recently starred in CBS-TV's seven-hour, $15 million mini-series, "Mistral's Daughter."

Her accomplishments as an actress have made her both rich and famous. However, considerable as they are, they provide no more than a charcoal sketch of the "real" Stefanie Powers.

She is a world traveler, spending much time in Kenya as a director of the William Holden Wildlife Foundation, and jetting often to Hong Kong where she has a home, with side trips to Asia, the Middle East, South Africa and New Guinea;

She is fluent in Spanish, French, Italian and Polish (in which language she addressed the Pope in a recent audience) and can "get by" in Arabic, German and Japanese;

She has fought 700-pound bulls in mock bullfights in Mexico;

She plays polo, is a partner in an Arabian horse-breeding concern and owns a wild-animal farm in California's Orange County;

She adopted 22 children in an orphanage outside Rome, one of whom, when grown, she brought to Hollywood and sponsored his career as a restaurateur;

She has written, co-produced and co-starred in a well-received television movie, "Family Secrets," and has a half-dozen more such projects in the works now;

She heads her own production company, Karoger (Swahili for "stirring it up");

And with Judith Balaban Quine, she has penned (and posed for its exercise-demonstrating photos) a diet-beauty-health book, "Stefanie Powers' Superlife."

When these facts are remarked upon, she says, "Some people have a great misconception of me — that I'm somehow unique. But I am not in any way exceptional. I am not an extraordinary person. What I do have is an extraordinary curiosity. I was born with it..."

"...We must never, at any time, harbor an exalted opinion of ourselves. In the totality of the universe, after all, we are only a little speck on the face of history. But, while we're here on this planet, life can be a great adventure if we do not become too self-involved, and if we make the effort to expand our horizons."
— Stefanie Powers

She laughs as she says that she does have at least one thing in common with such a genius as Buckminster Fuller, inventor of the geodesic dome and other designs making it possible for man to live comfortably in space.

"I once spent an evening with this great man," she says, "and was startled to have him assure me that he was just an ordinary person. I protested, citing his accomplishments, and asked, 'How could you possibly say you're ordinary?' And he said, 'But I am. I just have an extraordinary curiosity.'

"That serves to remind me that we must never, at any time, harbor an exalted opinion of ourselves. In the totality of the universe, after all, we are only a little speck on the face of history. But, while we're here on this planet, life can be a great adventure if we do not become too self-involved, and if we make the effort to expand our horizons."

From an early age, Stefania Zofja Federkiewicz, the Hollywood-born daughter of Polish parents, has lived in the belief that "the elixir of life is the search, not the discovery."

This quality, accounting for her perpetual growth, has made her fascinating to talk with. Certain aspects — her honesty, warmth, inner glow and lack of vanity — remain constant.

"Mistral's Daughter" director, Doug Hickok, says, "The breadth that Stefanie exhibits as an actress in this is incredible. She goes from youth to age without striking a wrong note..."

Ms. Powers is considering proposals for four different new projects. Obviously, despite ABC's unexpected cancellation of "Hart to Hart" (evoking a ton of protest mail from loyal fans of the show), the actress will hardly be lacking for work.

"Being told that Jennifer and Jonathan Hart wouldn't be coming back for a sixth season was quite a blow," she admitted. And you can readily believe that it isn't just the $50,000 per episode that she will miss.

"Working on "Hart to Hart" was a joy, and I wish it could have carried on for years. R.J. (Robert Wagner) is such a grand human being, a great friend and a wonderful professional. The chemistry between us, which some have commented on, was a very happy accident. We were lucky. When people have a good friendship, it does not always follow that they will have rapport as actors."

Then, more forthrightly than most stars would dare, Ms. Powers said, "Without R.J.'s insistence, I probably would not have been in the show. ABC didn't want me. They didn't care for me. They wanted someone else. Well, I was not the most in-demand actress in town at the time. My last televsion series ('Feather and Father') was less than a smash hit, and after all the films I'd done, it got to a point where there were no parts for me.

"But when it came to 'Hart to Hart,' R.J. was very much my champion. Without him, I would never have been Jennifer Hart." "Hart to Hart," Ms. Powers noted, made more things possible for her, such as her own production company and her new career as a writer-producer.

"I really had no credibility before the success of the series," she explained. "My position was that of a working actress, which was very nice. Everybody thought I could do a job. But doing anything else, or expanding my horizons, was out of the question because I didn't have the financial viabilities.

BETWEEN THE LINES

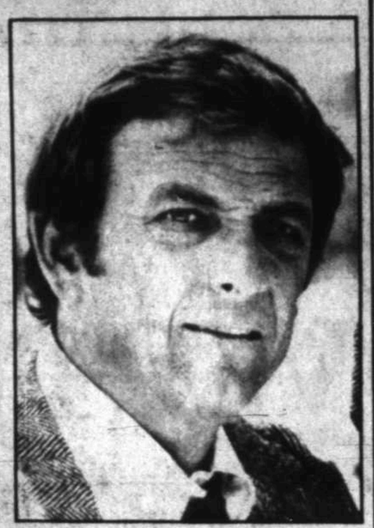

Q. For a long time, I've been a fan of television actor Monte Markham, but because he's not a major star, it's hard to find information on him. Could you give me some?

C. Fielding
Mississauga, Ont.

A. He's 48, from Manatee, Fla., a graduate of Palm Beach Junior College and the University of Georgia. He continued his academic career by getting a master's degree at Stephens College in Missouri and then stayed to teach in the drama department.

His stage credentials are impressive, including stints with the San Diego Globe Shakespeare Theater, the Ashland, Ore., Shakespeare Festival and at the other end of the spectrum, a Broadway debut singing and dancing with Debbie Reynolds in "Irene."

His main visibility, though, as you mentioned, has been on TV, through series like "The New Adventures of Perry Mason," "The Second Hundred Years," a running role on "Dallas" a few seasons back and scores of guest appearances on other series.

Monte Markham

Now, though, he's back on a series, but it's in syndication and may not have reached you yet. It's a five-times-a-week nighttime soap called "Rituals."

Q. I'm a fan of Sting's. Could you tell me how old he is, what his background is, what he's doing and if he's involved with anybody?

Pam Turner
Lawrenceville, Ga.

A. Gordon Matthew Sumner — the name "Sting" is the result of a yellow-and-black jersey that he wore to a performance when he was 17 — is 33, from Newcastle, England, the oldest of four children of a milkman and his wife, a hairdresser.

He was the recipient of a Jesuit education which, he once explained, is "responsible for my venomous nature." After that education, he taught English for two years (the experience is reflected in the song "Don't Stand So Close to Me") and played bass in a jazz group at night before being discovered by Stewart Copeland, leading to the formation of The Police.

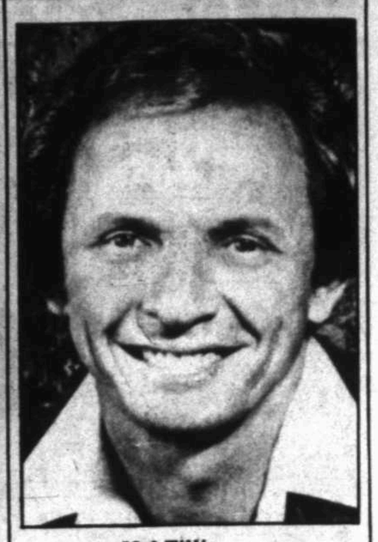

He had other forays into show business before that, however: TV commercials. All three Police members, in fact, originally dyed their hair blond for a 1977 Wrigley's chewing gum commercial and took a bit of razzing for it when they released their first album in 1978.

Outside of the group, Sting has also been in a number of films: "Rock 'n' Roll Swindle," about the Sex Pistols, "Quadrophenia," "Radio On" and "Brimstone and Treacle."

Now, as you're probably aware, he's in the current epic "Dune" and has two more films: "The Bride," in which he portrays the screen's sexiest Dr. Frankenstein to Jennifer Beals' bride of, and "Plenty," in which he plays the young English tough chosen by Meryl Streep to father her children. On the subject of children he has three: two with ex-wife Frances Tomelty and one with current girlfriend Trudie Styler.

Mel Tillis

Q. I would like an update on Mel Tillis.

Leah Brown
Raymond, Calif.

A. He's been busy in recent weeks filming "Uphill All the Way," a comedy with Glen Campbell and Roy Clark, in Texas. Also, over the past year, he wrote his autobiography, "Stuttering Boy," with co-author Walter Wager. It was published last month and reveals quite a different Mel than you're accustomed to seeing.

As we go to press, he's also in the process of finalizing the itinerary for a concert tour that should run from winter to early spring. "Mel never," explains an associate, "stays off the road too long."

Q. Please help! Is Jack La Lanne alive or dead?

Gary Bishop
Pensacola, Fla.

A. Very much alive. He just celebrated his 70th birthday, in fact, and to commemorate the occasion, he performed a feat of strength as he does every year on his birthday. This time, he swam a mile with hands and feet bound, while pulling 70 rowboats, each containing at least one person. "At 100, I'll still be exercising," he maintains. We believe it.

If you want to find out how he does it, you can check out his new videotape, "The Jack La Lanne Way." It must be working.

Bart Conner

Q. Could you please give me some information on Bart Conner? I'd like to know his age, birthday and where he lives. I saw him at the Olympics and thought he was very cute.

D.C.
Baton Rouge, La.

A. You're not alone. Bart has been much in demand since the Olympics. You may have seen him in the series "Highway to Heaven" and "Diff'rent Strokes" (with the other members of the men's Olympic team), but there is a lot more coming. He's done a TV movie, "Triathalon," with Penny Marshall and a feature film, "Flips," which has a gymnastics background.

Another film, "Looking Good," has nothing to do with gymnastics and is instead the story of a couple of fraternity brothers who put together a calendar of pinups. He has planned a stint as a CBS sports commentator, starting with the American Cup gymnastics competition in March, and a book, "Bart Conner: Winning the Gold" is due in June.

Now, where he lives: He has been living and training in Oklahoma, but getting back home in Morton Grove, Ill., whenever he could. He's now in the process of relocating to Los Angeles, not surprisingly, to be closer to the film and television industry. His birthday is March 28 and he's 26.

STEFANIE

"Having a hit TV series opened all doors, and our first production, 'Family Secrets,' was a winner. So now, well, it's just the best of all possible worlds."

When you refer to the world-wide personal success that she achieved in "Hart to Hart," Ms. Powers, ever the pragmatist, promptly corrects you.

"Let's not say success," she says. "Let's say recognition. 'Hart to Hart' was seen in 62 countries. That's lovely, wonderful. But it's not really success. It doesn't follow suit that, with the series off the air, the people in those countries are going to remember me. They're going to be interested in the next person in the next television series that is appearing in those 62 countries."

Adopting her terminology, you ask what enabled her to handle the overwhelming "recognition" that came to her overnight in this high-styled action adventure series.

After a reflective pause, Ms. Powers said, "The defeats. I've been up and down so many times. This rather sharply underlines the fact that any so-called success in this business is illusive and ephemeral. So, therefore, you must use your failures as well as your winners as the base for the way in which you conduct your life."

Her hazel eyes shining with laughter then, she lightly added, "My attitude is take it when you can get it! So I'm getting it right now and I'm terribly happy about it. There is nothing more rewarding to an actor than consistent work."

Interestingly enough, this is one star who insists that, as a youngster, she never entertained dreams of being an actress.

"I FELL into this career," she says. "Oh, I'd studied dancing and I always loved the movies, loved the theater, loved, most of all, the musical stage. But I never superimposed myself on it. I never went to a theater and said, 'I'm going to do that.' Certain things did happen that put me in those places finally, although I was, I suppose, available for that opportunity."

What happened was that the Hollywood High swim-team member and cheerleader found herself being tested for a minor dancing role in the movie "West Side Story." While someone else got the part, a young producer-director, Tom ("Billy Jack") Laughlin happened to see the test and signed her for the lead in the low-budget feature "Among the Thorns."

This led to five years and many films while under contract at Columbia Pictures, then to her first television series, "The Girl from U.N.C.L.E."

Her new-found career also brought along a well-publicized romance with singer Eddie Fisher, post-Debbie, post-Liz. (Their brief fling fizzled after she reminded him, "When you first made a hit singing 'Oh, My Pappa,' I was riding a tricycle.")

Then there was a marriage to actor Gary Lockwood when she was 24, which ended in divorce after eight years.

In recent months, Ms. Powers has been linked with several prominent men, including TV exec Tom Mankiewicz, French director Just Jaeckin and one of her leading men in "Mistral's Daughter," Timothy Dalton.

She is reluctant to discuss this part of her life. Yet, as she appears now to be in a particularly buoyant state, it seems appropriate to ask if she is happiest when she's in love.

"I'M VERY happy when I'm in love, yes," she responds. "But happiest? I don't know. Love doesn't come without a price tag. There is that agony that goes along with it. So I don't know if you can say 'happiest,' because sometimes it's pretty painful!"

She does not rule out a second marriage, but she says, "I just haven't found anybody right now for me. I certainly hope that one day I will. But the choices I've made in my life preclude a really good relationship at this point because I'm working 12 hours a day, and I have other responsibilities which are very important to me."

She readily acknowledges that when you combine marriage and career, something has to give.

"Listen, where does it say we're going to have it all?" she asks. "Nobody gets everything. If you work a lot, you don't get to have a private life. You may have a great private life if you don't work, but you have nothing else. If you have this, you don't have that. There's a price to pay for every decision you make. For now, I choose to work."

Asked if she regrets not having had a child, Ms. Powers says, "Yes, sometimes. It would be nice. I may yet have one, so who knows? If it doesn't happen through natural circumstances, I'll adopt. Giving birth, you know, has nothing to do with being a parent. Most any woman can give birth.

"But the egotism of parenthood is not something in which I'm really interested. Being a parent is feeling that you want to share some of the things you've been fortunate enough to have received with a person who may have been less fortunate. That's the essential thing — the sharing and passing on of those things that were passed on to you."

When Ms. Powers had completed filming "Mistral's Daughter" in Paris, she headed to Kenya for the opening of the education center at the William Holden Wildlife Foundation.

She and the late actor were companions for nine years prior to his death in 1981. In that time, they traveled the world over but most often went together to their favorite retreat, his 1,200-acre Mount Kenya Game Ranch, 125 miles from Nairobi.

The preservation of endangered species of wild animals had been a cause of Holden's from his first visit to Africa in 1958. Particularly, he wished to establish a wildlife education center for the children of the Kikuyu and other tribes in the bush. His theory was that the only hope for the animals' continued existence was by enlightening the people who hold the future of these creatures in their hands.

DYING BEFORE the center could be built, Holden bequeathed his land holdings in Africa to his foundation. He also left Ms. Powers $250,000 in his will, almost assuredly in the knowledge that every cent of it would be contributed to the fulfillment of his dream. It was, along with much of her own savings plus still other funds that she has raised.

Now, nearly three years after his death, Ms. Powers can at last speak with ease about Holden.

She said, "It took a while to find a perspective on everything. When someone dies, it's so final. But you don't stop loving or caring about someone because they don't seem to exist in our space any more. You don't cut that feeling out of your heart. So what one arrives at is a comfortable place for them to live inside you — because they do. The caring is still there. It only has a different perspective."

Is she now sorry that they didn't marry?

"Well," Ms. Powers replies, "it was a committed relationship, and a happy one. Oh, we had our problems, as anybody in any relationship does. I suppose neither of us felt the need of the formalities of marriage. We had both been married, unsuccessfully, unhappily. Each of us had some bruises, some unpleasant memories, which made us hesitate. In hindsight, I think that we might have made a mistake."

MS. POWERS' eyes clouded as she unburdened herself of something that surely had been festering in her heart for some time.

She said, "I do realize one thing now, and this is a lesson I had to learn under very difficult circumstances: The world is not ready to accommodate relationships that exist outside a marriage situation.

More positively now, she mentions "the tremendous, indelible impact" William Holden had on her life. And you ask what impact she feels she had on his.

"I hope I brought him some happiness," she says.

SANTA FE — The Orchestra of Santa Fe announces that soprano Nancy Shade, star of the Santa Fe Opera and international performer, will headline the ninth annual Bach Festival, set for Wednesday through Feb. 3.

Other guest artists scheduled to perform are organist Peter Planyavsky, Vienna, Austria, and guitarist Sharon Isbin.

This year's festival celebrates the 300th anniversary of the births of Johann Sebastian Bach, 1685-1750, and Georg Fridrich Handel, 1685-1759. Miss Shade, who portrayed the Soldier's Wife in Henze's "We Come to the River" in Santa Fe last summer, will sing Bach's Cantata No. 202, "The Wedding Cantata," with the orchestra during the festival concerts, at 8 p.m. Feb. 2 and 3 p.m. Feb. 3 at the Lensic Theatre.

Also, on the festival concert program will be Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 1 in F Major and Handel's Concerto in B Flat Major with soloist Rosalind Simpson, harp, and Water Music Suite.

The festival will open at 8 p.m. Wednesday with Bach's Musical Offering presented in its entirety by the Ensemble of Santa Fe at St. Francis Auditorium. The performance will be preceded by a lecture and discussion moderated by artistic director William Kirschke.

At 8 p.m. Thursday in St. Francis Auditorium, Miss Isbin will give a guitar recital of works composed by Bach. She will perform Lute Suite in E minor, Lute Suite in C minor, two Preludes and Lute Suite in E Major.

Miss Isbin was featured in the April 1984, issue of "Guitar" magazine and has earned three top prizes in the world's most prestigious guitar competitions: the 1979 Queen Sofia in Madrid; the Munich International in 1976; and the Guitar '75 International Competition in Toronto. She records for Pro Arte Records, Denon, Sound Environment and Sine Qua Non.

Planyavsky will give an all-Bach recital at 8 p.m. Friday in St. Francis Auditorium. He will perform Concerto in G Major, Fuga in B minor, Chorale Preludes, Prelude and Fugue in D Major, Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Partite Diverse sopra "O Gott, du frommer Gott," Trio in D minor and Prelude and Fugue in G Major.

He has won the Municipal Music Award of the city of Vienna, the Sandoz Fine Arts Award in 1976 and several international competitions in organ improvisation including Graz, Austria, and Nuremberg, Germany.

Tickets priced in a range from $12.50 to $7.50 depending upon the event, may be purchased at the Orchestra of Santa Fe Box Office on the mezzanine of La Fonda. For more information call 1-505-988-4640.

Thouvenel's performance outstanding

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Temple

The Thouvenel String Quartet performed an outstanding evening of chamber music for close to three-fourths full house this week at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

The selections on the program complemented one another. Works performed included Franz Joseph Haydn's Quartet in G Minor, Opus 74, No. 3, known as the "Rider" Quartet; Gabriel Faure's Quartet in E Minor, Opus 121 and Ludwig van Beethoven's Quartet in C Major, Opus 59, No. 3.

The most prolific composer of quartets of the three composers was Haydn. Only a small portion of Haydn's music is performed today; however, he wrote 83 string quartets and 104 symphonies.

Born in 1732, Haydn was a small child when the Baroque period was coming to an end. When he died in 1809, the world of the arts was getting ready for the outburst of personal feelings known as Romanticism, led in music by Haydn's one-time pupil Beethoven. It was between these two great periods that Haydn played a major role in establishing the classical style of music.

The fertility of his ideas and his genius for musical construction brought the classical sonata, the symphony and the string quartet to such a peak that he is often referred to as "the father of the symphony and the string quartet."

A turning point in Haydn's life was meeting a young composer whose genius Haydn recognized at age 25 — Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. Mozart opened Haydn's ears to new, delicate melodic writing, and Haydn taught Mozart the craft of putting together symphonies and quartets.

Thus, Haydn's quartets became more intricate than ever. All instruments took part in the music on an equal footing.

Such is the case with "The Riders" Quartet, which derives its nickname from the galloping rhythms so evident to the listener. The mood was heightened in this week's performance by cellist Keith Robinson's animated facial expressions, particularly during the Allegro con brio.

Beethoven wrote 17 string quartets. The selection performed, his ninth string quartet, is the third of the three known as the Rasoumovsky quartets, written in the middle period of his compositional life.

Beethoven never composed quickly; he hammered away with tones like a sculptor working in stone. He refused to use a theme until he had made it as nearly perfect as he could.

In contrast to Haydn's outpouring of string quartet music and Beethoven's creations, Faure wrote only one quartet in his lifetime. He did not attempt one until he was approaching 80 years old; and it was the only major form for which he had not written.

A composer and teacher, he is best remembered for his vocal and chamber music. His music has the simplicity of a polished gem. It is always exquisitely done, full of gentle experiments. His quartet has a wistful, elusive quality, beautifully captured by the Thouvenel during the performance.

In fact, the Quartet's admirable execution of all three selections made for a most delightful evening.

'That's Dancing' clips of other films

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

"That's Dancing" isn't so much a real movie as it is a Readers' Digest condensed version of other films.

"That's Dancing" is a compilation of dance numbers beginning with silent movies and early talkies through Busby Berkley's beautifully surreal musical productions right on up to "Flashdance" and Michael Jackson's music videos.

This is all linked together by sketchy and often silly narration by such distinguished performers as Gene Kelly, Sammy Davis Jr., Ray Bolger, Liza Minnelli and Mikhail Baryshnikov (who is a great dancer but, with his thick accent, a lousy narrator).

On one hand, the film has much the same effect as those "Stars on 45" records of a few years past in which ltlle snippets of popular songs were linked together like one song. Film purists may very well be offended by the idea of taking little pieces of movies and sticking them together out of context.

On the other hand, since "That's Dancing" is almost nothing but dance numbers, it is obviously not a good film for people who become annoyed when a musical number interrupts a movie's plot.

The film does have some oddities in it that one is not likely to see elsewhere. There is a Ray Bolger (who played the Scarecrow) dance number that was cut from "The Wizard of Oz," which is somewhat interesting. Since the wires used for some stunts are plainly visible, however, it's easy to see why it was dropped from the film.

There is also some brief but rare footage of Isadora Duncan. Unfortunately, the old film was so poorly shot it's hard to identify her, much less tell how good her dancing might have been.

Almost everyone will find that some favorite dance numbers are not included. This reviewer, for example, wished there had been something from "An American in Paris" and was very disappointed that Bob Fosse's choreography received short shrift (no scenes from "All That Jazz") and that Twyla Tharp's name wasn't even mentioned (no scenes from "Hair").

The filmmakers do deserve kudos for trying to make it clear that Marine Jahan deserves credit for the dancing in "Flashdance" which Jennifer Beals is often mistakenly credited with.

"That's Dancing" is by no means a great movie, but by watching it a person can at least discover great movies that he'll want to seek out and see in their entirety.

Also, "That's Dancing" does help remind one that before the advent of film there was really no way to capture and preserve the fleeting wonders of the human body in motion.

"That's Dancing, rated G, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Dungeonmaster' basic concept weak

By far the most interesting thing about "Dungeonmaster" is the way it was directed.

The film is made up of seven different segments which are loosely-connected by a rather odd storyline.

Each one of the separate segments was written and directed by a different person.

Multiple directors in a film of this type isn't exactly an original idea. It has most recently been seen in 1983's "Twilight Zone — The Movie" and in the 1981 animated film "Heavy Metal."

This approach, of course, has its good and bad points. It allows the audience to see a variety of different approaches to a particular concept — sort of like getting seven views for the price of one.

However, it also means that the movie is going to have a serious lack of continuity and that the quality of the material is going to vary greatly.

The quality, however, doesn't vary all that much in "Dungeonmaster." Almost all of it is dumb.

The film appears to be an attempt to be more creative than usual with the basic low-budget action-fantasy film. Unfortunately, it is far from successful, primarily because the basic concept is so weak.

The film's hero is a young California computer whiz, played by Jeffrey Byron, who, because of some vague experiment never explained in the movie, is mentally linked to his unusually powerful home computer.

Abruptly, he and his live-in girlfriend, played by Leslie Wing, are snatched out of their apartment by the evil superbeing Mestema, played by Richard Moll.

Mestema — apparently a low-rent incarnation of the devil — forces Byron to face seven challenges.

These seven challenges are the brief action vignettes made by the seven different directors. For the most part, the scenes lack any serious impact.

Byron, with the help of his trusty computer, battles a giant walking statue, some dead ghouls, a rather nasty heavy metal rock band and a mad slasher murderer, among other threats.

Some of the sequences show flashes of talent but there is no originality anywhere in the film.

The statue segment is obviously inspired by a scene from "Jason and the Argonauts," the mad slasher scene is entirely too much like the Jack the Ripper plot in "Time After Time" and many of the other sequences could have been in any recent low-budget sword-and-sorcery movie.

The acting and dialogue is so bad that one wonders whether or not the filmmakers were deliberately trying to camp it up a bit. After one long monologue about some particularly gruesome animal torture, for example, Mestema deadpans, "Animals can be such fun."

Actually, almost the only genuinely pleasant surprise about going to see "Dungeonmaster" is that it is preceded by a short subject on "Sports Bloopers."

While the 10-minute blooper film is only mildly humorous, it is a rare chance get to see a short subject along with a feature film these days.

"Dungeonmaster," rated PG-13 for violence, is now showing at North Park Cinema.

LONG JOHN SILVER'S SEAFOOD SHOPPES

If life hands you lemon, make lemonade

By JANET LORIMER
King Features Syndicate

There's a saying that if life hands you a lemon — make lemonade. That's one way to handle excessive amounts of lemons, but when they go on sale and you buy them in bulk (as I did the other day) there's more to this lovely fruit than lemonade.

To begin with, lemons can be juiced and the juice frozen in ice cube trays. The "lemon cubes" can then be kept in the freezer box or bag. The next time you remember at the last minute that you need a lemon, just grab a lemon cube.

* * *

FRUIT KABOBS

¼ cup freshly squeezed orange juice
⅛ cup lemon juice
1 teaspoon honey, or to taste
24 fresh strawberries
24 purple grapes
24 melon balls
12 chunks of banana
12 wooden skewers

Blend juices and honey. Pour over mixed fruits and chill. Just before serving, alternate fruit pieces on skewers and serve with Lemon Dip.

Lemon Dip:
1 cup yogurt
1 tablespoon honey, or to taste
½ teaspoon lemon rind, grated

Combine all ingredients and chill before serving.

Makes about 1 cup of dip.

The fruit kabobs go nicely with another lemon dish:

LEMON CHICKEN PIES

2 cups steamed, boned, skinned chicken cut into bite-sized pieces
⅔ cup low-sodium soy sauce
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon honey
2 to 3 tablespoons white wine
Pastry Dough
Lemon Sauce

Prepare chicken by steaming it for about half an hour or until juices run clear when meat is pricked with a fork. Cool, debone and skin steamed chicken. Cut chicken into bite-sized pieces.

Prepare marinade by mixing soy sauce, lemon juice, honey and wine. Pour marinade over chicken pieces and toss thoroughly till chicken is well-coated with marinade. Allow mixture to chill, covered, in refrigerator for about 3 to 4 hours.

Pastry Dough
2 cups whole-wheat pastry flour
⅓ cup butter
About ⅓ cup cold water

Cut butter through whole-wheat pastry flour till mixture resembles coarse peas. Add enough water to make a dough that is easy to work with. Mix dough and roll out into a sheet about ¼-inch to ½-inch thick. Divide dough into four portions that are roughly rectangular in shape.

On one end of each section, carefully arrange about ⅓ cup marinated chicken an inch from the edge. (Avoid adding excessive marinade that will soften the dough). Fold dough over the chicken and crimp the edges to seal, creating a small pie. Prick the top with a fork to allow steam to escape. Place on baking sheet and bake at 400 degrees for about 20 minutes or till pies are browned. Makes about 4 pies.

Lemon Sauce:
1 tablespoon salad oil
1 tablespoon honey
1 tablespoon cornstarch
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 cup chicken broth

Heat salad oil over medium heat in small saucepan. Slowly add honey and cornstarch, stirring well with wire whisk after each addition. Add lemon juice and chicken broth. Continue to stir over medium heat, till mixture is thickened. Makes about 1⅓ cups sauce.

Spoon hot lemon sauce over hot chicken pies just before serving.

JEWEL SALAD

1 envelope gelatin
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon water
Dash paprika
1½ cups lemon-lime flavor soda
2 medium carrots, grated
1 stalk celery, grated
1 medium green pepper, grated
½ small onion, grated

Clean vegetables and grate by hand, food processor or in blender.

(To grate vegetables in blender, cut vegetables into chunks and place in blender with ¾ to 1 cup water. Blend on medium-high speed for about 10 seconds or till vegetables are finely grated. Pour vegetable-water mixture through colander or sieve to thoroughly drain vegetables. Save the water to use later.)

In saucepan, mix lemon juice, paprika and water (You can use 1 tablespoon of the vegetable water you saved.) Cook over medium heat almost to boiling.

Remove from heat and add gelatin, stirring till thoroughly dissolved. Add soda and stir till well mixed. Pour into a bowl. Add grated vegetables. Chill in refrigerator till firm. Can be served on lettuce leaves and topped with a dollop of mayonnaise and a sprinkling of paprika.

Here's a different sort of marinade for barbecued turkey, which, by the way, is good any time of year. This marinade recipe is for a 6-to-7-pound turkey. Adjust the measurements for a larger bird.

BARBECUED LEMON TURKEY

¼ cup cooking oil
¼ cup low-sodium soy sauce
¼ cup onion, finely chopped
1 teaspoon honey (or to taste)
1 teaspoon ground turmeric
1 teaspoon ground ginger
½ teaspoon lemon peel, grated
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Mix all ingredients and marinate turkey for 24 hours, turning and basting now and then. Turkey may be cooked on the barbecue or cooked in the oven.

STEWED PRUNES

1 package dried prunes
Juice from one lemon
Lemon peel curls
Water

Cook dried prunes in water according to package directions, adding the lemon juice and a few lemon peel curls while prunes cook. May be served hot or cold.

Lemon juice makes many a drink a mite more refreshing. Here are two of my favorites.

LEMON GRAPE PARTY PUNCH

1 bottle grape juice (about 24 fluid ounces), chilled
1 bottle sparkling water or 1 28-ounce bottle lemon-lime soda (chilled)
Juice from half a lemon
Lemon slices and mint leaves

Mix grape juice and soda together. Add fresh lemon juice to taste. Pour into tall glasses and garnish with a wedge of lemon, thinly sliced, and a sprig of mint.

LEMON WINE COOLER

Sparkling water, chilled
White wine, chilled
Ice
Lemons

For each glass, mix 1 part wine and 1 part sparkling water. Pour over ice cubes. Add about 1 teaspoon fresh lemon juice and garnish with a twist of lemon peel.

So, you see, you can do more than just make lemonade when life hands you a lot of lemons.

Lemon drinks

There's nothing trivial about this game

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. (AP) — When it comes to the popular board game Trivial Pursuit, there is nothing trivial about the enthusiasm at Mount Holyoke College.

Students at the western Massachusetts school layed out a tennis court-sized game board on which students outfitted in colorful uniforms played game pieces.

A five-foot square cube of foam rubber replaced the die, and instead of plastic wedges, students in different-colored sweatsuits will climb into giant game pieces when a team answers a question correctly, said facilty member Oliver Allyn.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Audience growing for magazines with 'alternative' focus

By BARBARA TILLMAN

One type of magazine is becoming increasingly difficult to catagorize. These publications best come under the heading of "alternative."

The focus of alternatives is usually forms of energy, appropriate technology, ecology, holistic medicine, and the back-to-the-land movement. Although several new periodicals have appeared on the scene in recent years, the rising costs of publication have forced some older titles out of business.

However, the audience for alternatives seems to be increasing. Many people are re-thinking the issues of the 1960s and 1970s and are opting for another way to solve our country's problems. The concepts of energy and technology are on everyone's minds today and we are searching for cheaper and safer methods of producing the desired ends. Creative ideas are not taken so lightly these days and more and more people hope the new ways will be the ultimate answer.

ALTERNATIVE SOURCES OF ENERGY is the title of one such publication. It began in 1971 as a mimeographed newsletter and has grown into a useful, slick-covered magazine that explores renewable energy resources. There have been recent articles of solar, wind, and hydro power which give examples and possibilities on how to produce these facilities. The articles point out that some communities are organizing to better meet the growing needs. The magazine offers a calendar of national conferences and workshops as well as book reviews and a list of new tools and hardware.

In this publication, the energy problems are presented with a positive approach which many readers should find enlightening.

Another often read title is WHOLE EARTH REVIEW, formerly Co-Evolution Quarterly. This publication can be enjoyed by the general adult audience as well as high school and university students.

It was originally published as a supplement to the WHOLE EARTH CATALOG series, but has evolved into an independent collection of articles, book reviews, fiction, and lists of resources. There are first-person accounts which provide some of the magazines' most effective material. Appropriate books for further reading are mentioned in connection with many of the articles.

The standards of writing and editing are excellent and have been consistently maintained.

MOTHER EARTH NEWS has a back-to-basics appeal for almost every age group. Articles take the approach of "doing more with less." This is perhaps the reason that the magazine is so popular. We can certainly attest to its popularity through our circulation statistics. Detailed graphics and color photographs add to its interesting and informative projects. Energy, food, health, shelter, and hobbies are all represented in very readable form.

There is now a section called "Mother's Children," which extends the readership to grade school and junior high age levels.

ORGANIC GARDENING is published by the Rodale Press, an empire which has many titles to its credit. Feature articles contain valuable information for those who do not want to use the chemical approach to gardening. Special features offer details on cooking techniques, recipes, nutrition, and news of organic discoveries. Also included is a wll detailed garden calendar.

This publication is definitely for individuals who seek a more self-sufficient way of life.

Mystery author called 'spiritual' descendant' of Twist

"Ross MacDonald," by Matthew J. Bruccoli; Harcourt Brace Jovanovich; $14.95; 147 pp.

A Review

By ROSS THOMAS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There is a photograph in this fine, brief biography of the late mystery novelist Ross Macdonald that answers the questions most frequently asked of a writer. Although the order may vary, the questions themselves are numbingly the same: When do you write? Do you write every day? Do you use word processor, typewriter or pen?

The photograph by Jill Krementz shows Macdonald, pen in hand, neatly dressed and shaved, seated by a bedroom window in a leather armchair, his shod feet up on an ottoman, a writing board across the chair's arms, a spiral notebook on the board, a slight smile on his face, a spaniel at his side. It seems to be late afternoon. It is also a portrait of the most contented-looking writer I have ever seen.

The man who once wrote that he wanted "to become the world's best mystery writer" was born Kenneth Millar in California in 1915; he was reared in Canada by a series of relatives after his father deserted the family when Millar (or Macdonald, as I shall call him) was only 3 years old. The desertion and its Dickensian aftermath affected Macdonald for the rest of his life. It also resulted in the recurring theme for most of his 24 novels; awful family members do terrible things to each other.

Biographer Matthew J. Bruccoli believes Macdonald is the "spiritual descendant of Oliver Twist and Jay Gatsby," a curious claim that sent me back again and again to that photograph of the serene man with the spaniel at his feet and the warm Santa Barbara sun streaming through the window. I may have detected a little of the Oliver Twist who finally has come into his expectations, but of that ex-bootlegger Jay Gatsby, not a trace.

Bruccoli also risks the game of literary ranking, elevating Macdonald to "one of the three American writers of detective fiction — along with Dashiell Hammett and Chandler — who achieved critical attention." It's a judgment call that some might wish to quarrel with.

However, Ross Macdonald himself was always quick to acknowledge the debt he owed Hammett and especially Chandler — although the apprentice eventually turned on the master. In a letter to Alfred Knopf, Macdonald defends one of his early novels and charges that for Chandler "any old plot will do — most of his plots depend on the tired and essentially meaningless device of blackmail — and he has stated that a good plot is one that makes for good scenes...I am interested in doing things in the mystery that Chandler didn't do, and probably couldn't."

It's an interesting and even absorbing literary likeness that Bruccoli sketches of the doctor of philosophy who wrote his dissertation on Coleridge's literary criticism, was extremely sensitive to criticism of his own writing, and enormously pleased when he learned that his pre-written New York Times obituary would describe him as both "author and environmentalist."

It was also an apparently quiet life that Macdonald and his wife, mystery novelist Margaret Millar, lived in Santa Barbara. He was a birdwatcher and a cyclist. They both liked to attend trials. He wrote in the afternoon; she in the morning. He underwent therapy for a time, felt the better for it, and once described his own work in book jacket copy that he himself wrote as "creative, subtle, compassionate, literate, meaningful."

The portrait that finally emerges in this album-biography (for there are at least six dozen illustrations) is that of a sensitive, intelligent, likable man with a rotten childhood who happened to write detective novels for a living and wrote them far better than most. Acclaim and money came to him late in life, but not too late for him to enjoy them.

In 1981 he was diagnosed as having "irreversible presenile dementia" — Alzheimer's disease. Macdonald, "as well as his character," Bruccoli observes, "had engaged in a search for lost time. In the end he was marooned in the present."

Macdonald died July 11, 1983. He was 67 years old.

Book delineates Jefferson's life

Jefferson — Autobiography, Notes on the State of Virginia, Public and Private Papers, Addresses, Letters: The Library of America; 1,600 pages; $30. Thomas Jefferson was the author of the Declaration of Independence and the third president of the United States. He campaigned for general education instead of education for the few, for religious freedom, for social justice. This handsome book delineates the life of one of America's authentic heroes — from what he said to why he said it. This volume is one in an exceptional series of books on American literary and political leaders. — CNS

The Six of Hearts had a scornful air as he addressed the rest of the pack. "Your hands are all so pedestrian," he lamented. "Either you win tricks or you lose tricks, or you get discarded. One hand looks pretty much like the other.

"Now if you are really interested in a good hand, let me tell you of the time I helped win a world championship by not being played at all! I was part of a hand that could, at best, be described as mediocre, but see how the play developed.

"My expert won the ace of diamonds at trick one and shifted to the ten of clubs. Declarer ducked, our partner won the queen and cashed the ace to complete the defensive book.

"Now all dummy's clubs were high, and declarer's only problem was the trump suit—he no longer needed the spade finesse. If he could pick up the queen of trumps, he would bring home the contract.

"The percentage play was to try to drop the lady, but declarer tried to pull a fast one. He won West's spade shift with the ace, and immediately led the jack of clubs. Had East used poor, lonely me to ruff, it would have been all over. Declarer would overruff and lay down the king of trumps, and when East showed out the finesse would be marked.

"Fortunately, my young man was made of sterner stuff. He discarded a spade, as did declarer. Declarer tried one more time. He led another high club. Again East refused to ruff, and declarer shed his last spade.

"The moment of truth had arrived—declarer was down to nothing but trumps. He reasoned that East had refused to ruff to protect his trump holding. So, not unnaturally, he cashed the ace of hearts and led toward his king, only to learn that it was West's trumps that East was protecting. Down one."

It may be while before Knitters' Bowl catches on

By MARTHA LARCHE LUSK
King Features Syndicate

Incredible though it is to my husband and son, I'm not thrown into a state of football ecstasy during the season (which is now eight or nine months of the year).

Once, when my son asked why I didn't like football, his father answered, "Your mother doesn't actually dislike it. But do you get involved in, well — for instance, knitting?"

"No. But I will the day knitting draws 50,000 fans to a bowl game!"

A bowl game for knitters? Well, why not, why not...?

It's pregame time at the Knit Bowl. A sellout for the annual feminine clash between two Federal Knitting League teams — the Worsteds and the Synthetics. Down on the playing field are the two giant featherweight aluminum needles ready to be put into play.

Throughout the Knit Bowl is a kind of fever — knitting fever. Fans are flushed with excitement and anticipation. They speculate loudly among themselves about this game, critically rehash previous games.

Lively band music augments the fever. One of the tunes is "A Stitch in Time," complete with sing-along words flashed on the scoreboard. Vendors work their way through the stands — "Get your official FKL programs!" "Souvenir knitting needles!" "Now's the time to buy your tape measures!"

Game time nears. The flag is raised. A soprano sings the national anthem. The Synthetics win the coin toss, and they elect to receive the cast-on stitches. With professional skill and speed the favored Worsteds cast on the 20 regulation stitches using, of course, only one silver needle. (Only amateur competition allows the two-needle cast-on.)

Suddenly there is silence throughout the stands as the fans in mute unison await the first play.

Both teams line up at the cast-on needle.

"Knit!" The snap back; the second needle is brought into play. Synthetics receive the yarn. They knit a stitch, and the needles click.

Silence ends in the stands. The crowd bursts to life.

Worsteds are using the old standard knit-one-purl-one defense, which at this early point in the game appears to be the wrong choice. There is no stopping the Synthetics. Knit. Knit. Knit. The Synthetic line knits stitch after stitch, play after play. The fans are going wild.

It's the five-stitch line. Synthetics' needle.

"We want an RD," Synthetic fans chant. "We want a row done."

Worsted fans are vocal, too. "Block that stitch." "Block that stitch."

The giant silver needles flash in rhythm. The four-stitch line. The three-stitch line. And the whistle blows. A holding penalty. Synthetic needle gauger was holding the yarn too far from the line of knit. A five-stitch penalty. Knit is resumed on the eight-stitch line.

When the big needles next move, when the yarn is passed, Worsteds intercept.

It's now the Worsteds' needle. Their line knitters swing one needle around. The yarn is passed to the Worsted cable stitcher who dodges Synthetic defense, breaks free, and purls the 12 stitches to the end of the row. A worsted RD. The first RD of the game.

Worsted fans yell and clap. Synthetic fans moan.

Will the Worsteds make the extra point? The lineup. A mixture of yells from the stands. "Block that increase!"

The point is good. The stitch gauge sails over the crossbar, between the yarn-covered goal posts. At the end of the first quarter Worsteds lead by their one RD.

A few seconds into the second quarter the announcer, in the best of sporting tradition and with a public-address-system-metallic echo, says, "There are only about 14 minutes left in the quarter." And they are 14 minutes of scoreless knitting in spite of superb yarn passing by cable stitchers. The score remains 7 to 0.

Half time.

Entertainment time. The Sew-Sew Babes, clad in mini costumes, prance and twist through their routine which climaxes with their marching formation of a dress pattern outline. About 20 of the Babes form a pair of giant scisssors which snips through the middle of the dress pattern.

A yarn juggling act ends the half-time activities.

Knit resumes. Midway in the third quarter, time is called when the needle gets caught in the wig of a Synthetic line knitter. Clutching her head and sobbing, Number 37-23-36 runs off the field.

Late in the third quarter, Synthetics complete a daring pass from the needle holder to the cable stitcher. The line of knittage is the one-stitch line. Knit resumes. Worsted defense flounders. Synthetics score but fail to convert the extra point. At the end of the third quarter Worsteds still lead, but only by one point.

When the fourth quarter begins, it is clear the Worsteds are trying desperately to strengthen that one-point lead. They try too hard and are chalked up with penalties totaling 15 stitches — five each for stitch dropping, illegally clipping the yarn, and unsportswomanlike conduct (in this instance going after the ambidextrous fingers of Number 39-24-36, the Synthetic ribber).

Six minutes remain in the fourth quarter. Synthetics score their second RD. And once again their try for the extra point is not good. Synthetics now lead, 12 to 7.

Clock is running out. Five seconds left. Knittage is on the two-stitch line. Time for one play.

It's Worsteds' needle. They'll have to pass; it's the only way to score. Huddle. The Worsted cable stitcher gives the signal. Positions. It's the panic formation, the p.s.s.o., the most daring of all knits. Not only does a slip stitch have to be executed, but then that slip stitch has to be passed over. But in this particular situation, if the knit were successful it would put the Worsted cable stitcher in row-end position. An automatic RD.

Worsteds slip the stitch. The click of the needles is the only sound in the hushed Knit Bowl. It's as though the crowd has drawn in a single breath to hold. Now. Pass the slipped stitch over. This last knit, this p.s.s.o., will decide which team will be victorious. The Worsteds? Or the Synthetics?

Synthetic defense moves in. The Synthetic slip stitcher snags the yarn just as Worsteds pass it. Synthetics block the Worsted RD attempt.

The final gun sounds. It's a win for the Synthetics.

Midland Building Specialties helps you cope with Old Man Winter

Midland Building Specialties is now open on Saturday till 1 p.m. at their new location, 2400 W. Front. Go by and see how their storm doors and windows can help you cope with Old Man Winter. Be sure to check out their weather stripping center while you're there.

Old Man Winter is here to stay for a while. Low temperatures and cold winds are the norm instead of the exception. Weather stripping alone can't take care of all of this. You may be wondering how else you can protect yourself and your electric bill?

If you think that all you can do is bundle up in masses of blankets or take out a loan to pay your utility bill, you're wrong. Midland Building Specialties has a better way to help you keep warm, lower your utility costs and even save money on your income taxes. If this sounds like a solution that you could use, read on.

Midland Building Specialties has storm windows and doors in a variety of colors at no extra charge. A tax credit is possible on most homes. So, you can see that storm windows and doors are not only aesthetically pleasing but are economically beneficial as well.

Storm doors and windows also offer many other benefits. They are very useful as insulation to keep the cold temperatures on the outside. The additional insulation helps keep noise outside for a quieter home inside. Last but not least, storm windows and doors help protect you from the mess that can be made as a result of a West Texas dust storm.

If you need replacement windows, Midland Building Specialties is the place to go. These windows are designed to replace old wooden windows.

Midland Building Specialties also carries Stanley replacement doors. So when it's time to get rid of your old wooden exterior doors, check out the wide variety of colors which Stanley offers. You could find a gold mine of a tax credit. These doors are designed with the do-it-yourselfer in mind, yet M.B.S. will be glad to install yours for you.

Siding from Midland Building Specialties will also add extra insulation to your home. This well established, local company offers high quality Revere steel siding which is well known for adding extra insulation, being incredibly durable, and offering a wide variety of colors as well as a guarantee. Likewise, the Mastic vinyl siding which they carry is a great value. Mastic siding is guaranteed to never crack, bend, rust or scratch. It provides an easily cleaned, paint-free exterior in a number of colors. The extra insulation it gives is also something to consider. So, before you paint your home again or purchase siding from a company you don't know, call Midland Building Specialties.

Midland Building Specialties guarantees their work. They offer free estimates and job references. You can also speak to other satisfied customers and find out about the savings they've experienced by installing storm windows, doors, and siding.

In addition, Midland Building Specialties sells Levolor mini-blinds and interior wall planking. The wall planks are used to replace wood paneling.

Midland Building Specialties is at their new location, 2400 W. Front. Go by anytime Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. or Saturday before 1 p.m. For more information or a free estimate call them at 683-2184. Their key to success is service and reliability.

Locally owned Temp Time offers exceptional benefits

Beth Slaton, owner of Temp Time, says that their key to success is the personal attention that they are able to give both their customers and their temporaries. She says, "I have an open door policy both for temporaries and customers."

Because Temp Time is locally owned, the company can respond much more quickly to the unique needs of Midland firms. It can also make work much more pleasant for temporaries.

If you've been considering becoming a temporary you will be surprised at what all Temp Time has to offer. You probably expect the scheduling to be flexible so that you can choose to work full time or part time, but there are so many other benefits at Temp Time.

Being a temporary does not mean that you have to give up vacation or holiday pay. At Temp Time you have the opportunity to earn those benefits. You can also be part of their group insurance plan and receive bonuses for referring friends to Temp Time.

Because Temp Time is locally owned and has a local payrolling system, there's no long wait for a paycheck. Just imagine not having to worry about the check getting lost in the mail between some far off headquarters and Midland.

Beth Slaton is also concerned about the intangibles of temporary placement. Using thorough testing to matching a temporary's skills with the job requirements is only part of the placement task.

Another consideration is the personality of the office and of the temporary. How will they fit together? Will this temporary be as comfortable as possible in this setting, or is there another assignment that might be better? What about the scheduling? Can the temporary be there during the hours that the office needs them? There is so much to consider and Temp Time's professionals don't overlook a thing. This kind of personal care benefits Temp Time's customers as well as the temporaries.

Whether you are qualified with years of bookkeeping experience, have the skills of an executive secretary, or are prepared to take on the task of a receptionist or file clerk, Temp Time offers you exciting opportunities.

To find out more give them a call at 687-1545 or go by this locally owned business at 2500 N. Big Spring. At Temp Time you'll be treated as an important individual not just a number.

Temp Time's owner Beth Slaton (left) and sales representative Gayle Miller are proud to be able to offer Midland firms and temporaries personal attention. Because Temp Time is LOCALLY—OWNED, they understand the unique needs of Midland businesses. To find out more about using their services or becoming a temporary dial 687-1545 or drop by their office this week at 2500 N. Big Spring.

Pharmacist Wesley Graham (left), Doris Graham, and pharmacist Paul Keele are ready to serve you at Graham Rexall Pharmacy and Gifts, conveniently located at 319 Dodson Street. You'll enjoy their old fashioned friendly service and free delivery.

Redskins' Super Hogs form corporation

By SHARON FLYNN
King Features Syndicate

The five of them together weigh 1,375 pounds. When they breathe, the earth shakes. RFK Stadium sways beneath the thunder of a thousand stomping feet. The center snaps the ball, and hundreds of fans leap into the aisles, screaming and chanting, with pink rubber hog masks pulled over their faces. "LOVE THEM HOGS!"

Joe Jacobi, Russ Grimm, Jeff Bostick, Mark May, and George Starke: quarterback Joe Theismann's suit of armor, and worth about $125,000 each during the season but much, much more as a team. Them hogs pull in hundreds of thousands of dollars off the playing field. Movie contracts, publicity contracts and superhot hog paraphernalia.

They swear the story is true: For the first meeting with her new clients, Cathie Hartnett had to stand on a chair to come close to eye level with them.

The clients, some of the largest men around and once described as "walking soda machines," are the offensive line of the Washington Redskins, better known as the Hogs. Ms. Hartnett at 4 feet, 11 inches is a good foot shorter than the least of them.

The outcome of that first meeting was Super Hogs, Inc., a corporation including Redskins' captain Starke, linemen May, Rick Walker, Don Warren, Jacobi, Grimm and Bostic — and Ms. Hartnett as full partner and manager.

If you need a Hog for any reason other than to play football, you must see Ms. Hartnett. She is in charge of product endorsement, personal appearances, commercials, charity work and media.

She does their scheduling, negotiates nonfootball-playing contracts and fees, decides with Starke which products they will endorse, keeps an eye on vendors who illegally try to use the Super Hog logo, and talks with the National Football League about Super Hog activities.

According to Ms. Hartnett, there are now some 17 products being sold stamped with the smirking pig with feathers sprouting from his head and ear. After winning Superbowl XVII, over half a million dollars worth of merchandise was sold, and while the loss in Tampa did affect sales, this season holds much promise. Ms. Hartnett predicts gross of several hundred thousand dollars on products this year. Ms. Hartnett gets a salary, plus a percentage of the profits as a partner.

Although it may seem football players earn a lot of money and, compared to many of us, they do, there are a number of considerations. According to sportscaster and Washington area referee Annie Butler, the average career span for a football player is 3.7 years.

"If you look at their longevity, the toll on their bodies, the pressure, the lack of training to do anything else, and the fact that they could end their football career in one day with a serious injury, the pay is not exceptional," says Ms. Butler.

"Linemen like the Hogs are not paid the exorbitant salaries other more well known players like Theismann and (running back John) Riggins get. For them, Super Hogs is an investment for the future, giving them both name recognition with some financial return."

"No one has ever done this before," says Stark. "Lots of people were making money off Hog products; consequently, I decided we should incorporate. I believe the idea has changed the media image of linemen as well as being profitable for us."

First, Ms. Hartnett and their attorney, Jonathan Schiller, had to tackle the NFL to allow Super Hogs to exist and to give them a license to sell properties. Initially, Super Hogs planned to market their own products but found it too time-consuming and decided to go to straight licensing agreements.

What has this meant for the Hogs and for Ms. Hartnett?

"Individuals in football like Theismann and Riggins can always command high fees," says Ms. Hartnett. "But as a result of forming Super Hogs, there has been a dramatic increase in the amount of money these guys can make."

Before Super Hogs, Inc., the players would get about $200 for an appearance. Now they get $1,000. During football season radio station WMZQ ran a "Hog Report" recounting amusing incidents during the games or practice sessions. Ms. Hartnett got them twice what they normally would receive for a radio segment.
