Shultz leaves door open in Daniloff affair

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz has left the door open to another meeting with the Soviet foreign minister as the superpowers consider a two-stage U.S. proposal for the return of American reporter Nicholas Daniloff, officials said.

The proposal, made shortly after Daniloff's Aug. 30 arrest in Moscow, calls for the newsman's immediate release and for a Soviet citizen charged with spying in New York to be tried. The Soviet, U.N. employee Gennadiy Zakharov, was arrested a week before Daniloff.

If Zakharov is convicted, he would be exchanged for an unspecified number of Soviet dissidents, according to the proposal.

"We're working on it," Shultz said Wednesday of the Daniloff case. Other U.S. officials described the negotiations as active and said they might require another session between Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze. The two men, in New York for a special session of the U.N. General Assembly, met twice Tuesday.

The talks, which Shultz is conducting with the assistance of a few State Department specialists in Soviet affairs, apparently now are concentrated on how many dissidents would be freed.

The British foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, appealed to the Soviets today to resolve the case in the interest of easing East-West tensions.

"The Daniloff affair has once again shown how the long haul of building confidence and predictability into East-West relations can be held hostage to unacceptable Soviet behavior," he said at a news conference.

"Just when things seemed set for lift-off to a summit, the arrest of Daniloff has halted the countdown," Howe said.

Reagan administration officials publicly refuse to equate the Daniloff and Zakharov cases, saying the correspondent for U.S. News & World Report magazine is innocent. They also rule out any trade.

But privately, they acknowledge the two-step exchange proposal has been put to the Soviets.

An administration official in Washington, who demanded anonymity, said Wednesday the Soviets still demanded that Daniloff be tried. But U.S. officials stressed that would be unacceptable.

The Washington Post reported today that the Soviet Union offered to release Daniloff — apparently without putting him on trial — if the United States modified the expulsion order for 25 members of the Soviet U.N. mission, some of whom already have left. The report quoted unidentified non-Soviet East-bloc sources.

The New York Times, quoting unidentified Soviet sources, also said Moscow wanted "relief" from the expulsion order, and said the United States was willing to let Zakharov leave before being tried.

In Moscow today, Foreign Ministry spokesman Boris Pyadyshev would not comment on the reported U.S. proposal to free Daniloff.

Energy secretary endorses bill to aid oil, gas industries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary John Herrington on Wednesday endorsed broad legislation being pushed by lawmakers from energy-producing states to help the depressed domestic oil and natural gas industries.

"I believe the legislation is a balanced and effective market-based approach," Herrington said in a written statement. "Its solutions are both reasonable and workable."

The legislation was introduced in the Senate on Tuesday by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas; Don Nickles, R-Okla.; and James McClure, R-Idaho, and in the House on Wednesday by Rep. Beau Boulter, R-Texas.

The sponsors say the package, developed in cooperation with the Reagan administration, will help the industries and push the nation toward reversing the upswing in oil imports caused by this year's drop in world petroleum prices.

The legislation includes provisions to:

— Repeal both the windfall profits tax on oil companies and the fuel use act that requires new electricity generators to be capable of burning coal.

— Assure that domestic and Canadian natural gas are competitive in interstate commerce.

— Require the transportation of natural gas on a nondiscriminatory basis.

— Require that at least half the oil purchased for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve come from U.S. wells.

The bills also call upon the Commerce Department and the National Security Council to make a comprehensive study of the economic and national security effects of oil imports.

"Becoming overly dependent on foreign oil has some national security costs this nation just can't afford," Boulter told a news conference.

Ex-associate says McCright didn't disclose interests in corporation

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A former business associate of ex-banker William "Hoyle" McCright Jr. testified Wednesday in federal court that McCright never disclosed his interests in Midland West Corporation to the directors of the failed First National Bank of Midland "because he was afraid that the bank would not make a loan if it would have been in his name."

Pete Estap testified Wednesday that McCright, former executive vice president and director of FNB, was part owner of Midland West Corporation to which McCright loaned more than $1,925 million in bank notes.

"Hoyle was trying to get the bank to help us out. He was the only one at the bank who seemed to be willing to help us out," Estap testified.

McCright was indicted July 22 by a federal grand jury for embezzling $1.925 million from a loan to Midland West Corporation. Further, he was charged with sharing and receiving $330,000 through the $1.925 million loan.

The grand jury also alleged McCright provided "an inaccurate listing of his affiliated and related interests" in his executive officer-director questionnaire forms for the bank's 1982 proxy.

The government claimed McCright failed to note his 6.25 percent working interest in the Atkins prospect oil field investment; did not include his reversionary interests in oil field properties managed by Wood and Locker Inc. of Midland; and did not list his one-sixth right to collateral — the H.G. Bedford Ranch — which secured an FNB loan of $2.444 million to Pen-Dee Corp.

Prosecuting the McCright case is Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Blankinship.

In cross-examining Estap, McCright's co-defense attorney, William Monroe Kerr, suggested McCright "never" loaned money to CEK.

Estap indicated that was correct.

"He (McCright) always loaned money to Sam (Conner) and to you. Is that correct?" Kerr asked.

"Uh-huh," Estap replied.

Couple, four children found dead

HOUSTON (AP) — A couple and their four small children apparently were dead for two days before authorities found their bodies in a home still filled with traces of carbon monoxide, police said.

"There has been no note found to indicate to us that this was a suicide," police spokesman Danny Turner said. "But there is no visible sign of force to say it was a murder either."

The family appeared to have died from carbon monoxide poisoning, homicide detective Chris Andersen said. An autopsy was pending.

Police found the bodies Wednesday afternoon after co-workers of Joann Robbins went to the house and smelled foul odors, authorities said.

Mrs. Robbins, 37, was found sitting on the passenger's side of a car with the ignition on in the attached garage, police said.

Her husband, Thomas L. Robbins, 39, was found in nightclothes in front of a television still on in the den of the brick-and-wood home, police said.

The children were also dressed in nightwear and were found on mattresses or on the floor of one room, investigators said. Police identified them as Astrid, 7; Drake, 5; Emma, 4; and Elizabeth, who was almost two years old.

Police have not estabished a motive for the deaths, Andersen said.

Members of the family were last seen Monday, neighbors said. Andersen said they apparently died that day.

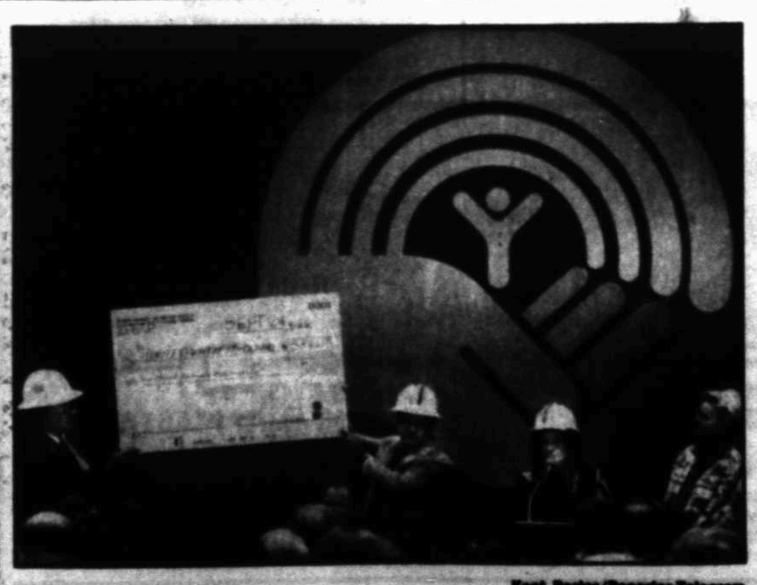

The bodies were found Wednesday afternoon after two of Mrs. Robbins' co-workers drove past the house to find out why she had not shown up for work at a real estate office where she had just been promoted from a secretary to agent.

United Way campaign gets off to good start

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

United Way preliminary fund-raising figures show a surprising increase over last year's of the same period, a United Way official said Wednesday.

"Things are alive and well in Midland," said William Morrow, president of this year's campaign.

Morrow attributed the increase to the fact that "Midland is a city of love."

This year's campaign does not have a specific goal. Instead, local leaders say they want to raise as much money for Midland's needy as possible.

The results were presented to those attending the United Way's general Kick-Off Luncheon, held Wednesday at the Midland Center.

The luncheon, held at the beginning of every campaign, hosted employees and directors from the 19 "pilot" companies — those which had agreed to participate in a preliminary fund-raiser to get the campaign off the ground.

Pilot companies began the fund-raising drives eight weeks ago, Judy Davenport, United Way campaign assistant director, said.

The three biggest contributors and their approximate donations in the pilot company program included Republicbank First National, $88,000; Southwestern Bell Telephone, $53,000 and Texas Instruments, $52,000.

West Texas cafe owner wins reprieve from park

PINE SPRINGS, Texas (AP) — A 71-year-old woman has won a federal reprieve for her Pine Springs Cafe, a nine-stool campers' oasis that her parents opened in the West Texas wilderness nearly 60 years ago.

Mary Glover Hinson's cafe, which is on Guadalupe Mountains National Park land, was to be closed Nov. 1 because park officials said it and other aging structures once used to link New Mexico-Texas oil operations no longer fit in with the park.

On Wednesday, Interior Secretary Donald Hodel ordered the National Park Service to let Mrs. Hinson keep her 58-year-old cafe for another five years, Hodel spokesman David Prosperi said.

"I can't believe people can be so good to me," Mrs. Hinson said from her home outside the tidy, white-washed cafe Wednesday night. "There's so many people I want to thank — like Secretary Hodel."

The pine-paneled cafe on U.S. Highway 180 stands in the shadow of 8,751-foot Guadalupe Peak, Texas' tallest mountain and part of a rugged chain that millions of years ago formed a barrier reef to a huge sea. In front of the cafe are a few gas pumps and nearby are the rock-walled ruins of an old Butterfield stage line stop.

The sand-colored mountains, dotted with patches of green, are at the edge of a gigantic plain that forms one of the largest oil fields in the world.

"My father built these buildings in 1928 to accommodate the Standard Oil pipeline from New Mexico to El Paso," Mrs. Hinson said. "There wasn't a service station between El Paso and Carlsbad, N.M., and they asked my father if he would run one. My mother said, 'Yes, and we'll feed you, too.'"

Walter Glover died in 1973, and his wife, Bertha, nine years later, Mrs. Hinson said.

Lewis bypasses commitee with new tax bill

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In a surprise move Thursday, Speaker Gib Lewis sent a new tax bill to the House State Affairs Committee, bypassing the reluctant Ways and Means Committee.

"We're running out of time," Lewis told House members Thursday morning.

State Affairs is expected to hold a hearing on a "simple" temporary tax plan Thursday afternoon. Lewis said the special session could end as early as Monday.

House veterans said Lewis made "the least painful and probably the smartest move" by trying a new committee.

Trouble raged on tax affairs Wednesday when a new state tax proposal drew fire from all corners and Lewis warned Ways and Means Committee members that he had the power to replace them if they would not move a tax bill to the House floor.

Trying to compose a tax package that would attract majority support, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Salado, unveiled a far-ranging, three-year plan that would affect sales, gasoline and property taxes and impose a new tax on bingo operations.

"There's no theory, it's real simple politics," Schlueter said when asked why he picked those taxes to help solve the $2.8 billion state deficit. "You've got to find out what the people want and you've got to give it to them until you've got 76 votes, that's just the way the system works."

Seventy-six votes comprise a majority in the 150-member House.

Lewis and Gov. Mark White, however, criticized Schlueter's plan for covering a three-year period. Both men support a temporary tax increase automatically ending Aug. 31, 1987. "I've asked for a temporary tax, and that is what I expect," White said.

Schlueter maintained that White's temporary 1.125-percent sales tax increase would pass neither his committee nor the full House without "a few other little provisions to get some more votes."

In a letter to Schlueter, Comptroller Bob Bullock wrote that his proposed 1.375-percent sales tax increase would move Texas from 27th to eighth among the states in sales tax rates. The bill dedicates 0.25 percent of the increase to prison projects.

"We estimate that this boost will fall unevenly on Texas wage eanrers since low income persons spend a higher proportion of their income on taxable purchases," Bullock wrote. "This regressiveness is only heightened because the bill deals only with rate and not the tax base."

Schlueter's provision allowing medium- and small-sized cities and counties to impose an additional 0.5-percent sales-tax increase in exchange for lower property taxes would add to the burden on the poor, especially blacks and Hispanics, Bullock wrote.

"I wouldn't have expected him to say anything positive," Schlueter said of Bullock's letter. "There's no tax you can pass that's not going to be burdensome on somebody, that's the nature of taxes."

Ways and Means Committee member Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, said the House must pass a tax bill by Tuesday to allow time to settle differences with the Senate.

If not, Morales predicted, "The session will end in disaster."

After meeting with Schlueter, the 75-member Conservative Coalition released a statement maintaining its opposition to a special session tax bill. "Now is the time to take control of the appropriations process and the revenue process to exercise truly responsible and conservative government," the statement read.

Conversion of budget bill would net UTPB $110,000

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate Wednesday turned a $25 million House budget cutting bill into an $18 million lost-tuition-reimbursement program for state universities, a plan that would net the University of Texas of the Permian Basin almost $110,000.

The House sponsor of the bill, originally designed to transfer $24.6 million in Highway Department savings to general state treasury, said he did not know whether he would accept the Senate's revision. Senators also made the entire bill subject to an increase in gasoline taxes.

"One really has nothing to do with the other," Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, said of the Senate changes to his bill. "It's like bailing water out of the boat but making the hole at the bottom bigger."

With no opposition, the Senate voted to amend Wolens' bill to help the state's senior academic institutions make up the $39.1 million they had lost through less-than-expected tuition receipts in the 1985-1986 school year. University officials attributed the state's poor economy and the new higher tuition rates for the drop in enrollment, which produced the tuition shortfall.

House-Senate budget negotiators Tuesday agreed to a formula that would distribute $21.25 million of that lost tuition back to the universities as a compensation for the 4.5 percent cut from their 1986 budgets and the 6-percent 1987 reduction. Those cuts came as part of a package of spending reductions applied toward the $2.8 billion state deficit.

"I've always tried to tell people that these cuts of 4.5 and 6 are not 10.5 percent, they're 10.5 plus" the lost tuition, said Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, who sponsored the amendment. "If all this money was adopted and they got the shorfall back, it would make it a 10.5 cut."

Glasgow noted that no one has attempted to make up any possible losses for this school year.

For UTPB, the Senate bill would add about $108,000 to the $77,000 the budget negotiators agreed to Tuesday.

Feds 'crack down' on drugs entering state

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The federal government will use sophisticated planes, advanced communication systems, more agents and tough new laws to crack down on drugs entering Texas along the Mexican border.

William von Raab, U.S. Customs commissioner, said here Wednesday that federal authorities are setting up networks for different law enforcement groups to communicate with each other and are installing a "BE ALERT" hotline for citizens to report drug smuggling.

Also, Raab said, new guidelines will make it easier for customs agents to confiscate planes and cars used by drug smugglers. For example, while agents previously had to find at least 50 pounds of marijuana to confiscate a vehicle crossing the border, now they must only find one ounce, he said.

"We are putting the hammer down on all drug smugglers — big or small," von Raab said. "And my warning to all of them is the same: If you bring drugs across the border, and we catch you, you lose your car or your plane or your boat. It's that simple. The customs service means business."

The law enforcement coordination effort, called Operation Alliance, will keep agents across the 1,900-mile U.S.-Mexican border in touch with each other, von Raab said. The Reagan administration has allocated $7 million in radio equipment to Operation Alliance, and the military will provide $400 million in equipment, including state-of-the-art AWAC planes for radar detections, he said.

Col. Jim Adams, head of the Texas Department of Public Safety, said one-third of the heroin, cocaine and marijuana enters the United States through the U.S.-Mexican border. About one-third of that amount — more than 10 percent of all drugs in the country — come across the Texas border, he said.

"We are putting the hammer down on all drug smugglers — big or small. ...And my warning to all of them is the same: If you bring drugs across the border, and we catch you, you lose your car or your plane or your boat. It's that simple. The customs service means business."

— William von Raab

The customs service has used a drug smugglers "hotline" in Florida for about a year, von Raab said, with cash rewards of up to $250,000 for people who report drug trafficking. The hotline — 1-800-BE ALERT — opened Wednesday in Texas, Arizona, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

If callers remain anonymous, they are eligible for cash rewards of up to $2,500 — or $250,000 if they come forward, use their name and aid law enforcement officials, von Raab said. In Florida, he said, "We found that while 90 percent of the more than 1,400 callers wished to remain anonymous, roughly two-thirds of them did not want any cash reward."

Mattox files suits on high-level Panhandle nuclear waste dump

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox filed two new lawsuits Wednesday against the U.S. Department of Energy over locating a high-level nuclear waste dump in the Texas Panhandle.

One of the suits challenges the department's decision to postpone work on a dump site in the eastern United States, and the other objects to the agency's May announcement that Deaf Smith County in the Panhandle is suitable for a dump site.

"DOE needs to start over while there is still time, get a new work crew and do this thing right," Mattox said. "That's what our goal is in these court battles."

White opposes gambling, leaves decision to voters

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White Wednesday left legalized track betting to the voters, saying he strongly opposes gambling but that Texans should decide the issue at the polls.

Despite previous warnings of a veto, White allowed the bill legalizing pari-mutuel wagering on horse and dog racing to become law without his signature, urging people not "to waste hard-earned dollars on sheer luck."

"If my decision were only a matter of personal preference, I would have vetoed this immediately, but it is not. My deep personal opposition is not the issue..." White said.

"The issue is the right of every person to decide, and the issue is my duty to serve all the people of this state."

Before Texans can start placing bets, voters must approve the bill in a statewide referendum in November 1987 and again in local option elections.

"The victory party starts at 12:01 a.m.," said Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas and sponsor of the bill. Without White's signature, the bill became law at midnight.

House Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, said both backers and opponents of the wagering bill, which legislators have debated since 1983, are ready for the issue to be settled at the polls.

"All the governor has done is let us come out of the starting gate," said Berlanga, sponsor of the bill in the House. "The race has not been won yet...and in 1987 we hope to have a big victory."

White said legislators made a good-faith effort to include the three safeguards in the bill he requested: Provisions for a statewide referendum, protection against organized crime and local options for voters to decide if they want a track.

But the bill could become law without the referendum if that portion of the legislation is challenged in court, opponents say.

Other opponents, including religious groups, say gambling will foster crime, break down morals and exploit those in financial straits.

"It is disturbing Governor White has let a bill become law that is as odious as this one," said Gary McNeil, legislative assistant for the Christian Life Commission, the lobbying arm of the Baptist General Convention of Texas.

"With no guarantee of a statewide referendum, without adequate protections against organized crime, and with no revenue to help the state's budget crisis, the pari-mutuel bill is a sham through and through," he said.

White first threatened to veto the bill because lawmakers were not making progress on the state's $2.8 billion budget crisis.

"I don't think (White) ever realized or recognized the magnitude of support from all quarters across the state for pari-mutuel wagering until he indicated the possibility of vetoing it," said Berlanga, who broke the news of a possible veto on Sept. 3. "Obviously, it stirred a lot of support."

Legalized betting will help diversify the economy and eventually could bring in as much as $200 million a year for the state, supporters say. The bill gives the state 5 percent of all horse racing bets and 6 percent of dog racing bets.

It also will help boost agriculture by creating a market for hay and oats and horse breeding, they say.

The bill gives voters in each county local options to decide if they want a horse track. Only Galveston, Cameron and Nueces counties may have dog tracks.

An eight-member racing commission, six appointed by the governor and two advisory members, would regulate the industry.

The bill's sponsors said they are confident the referendum portion of the bill can withstand a court challenge. If the referendum is thrown out, the bill still becomes law.

Berlanga promised he would take action if necessary during the 1987 regular session to ensure that voters will have their say.

White said he also allowed the "divisive" issue to be placed before voters because it has taken up too much time and energy in the legislative process.

"I am convinced that unless the will of the majority is allowed to be expressed, this divisive issue will come back again to tie up, and even plague, future sessions of the Legislature," he said. "We don't want that, it isn't good for Texas."

Book on race relations canceled by publishers

DALLAS (AP) — A publishing company canceled publication of a book on race relations, citing sluggish advance sales and fear that the subject might raise hostile reactions in the community.

Taylor Publishing Co. has decided not to publish "The Accommodation," a book about race relations in Dallas by Jim Schutze.

"They are giving us back all rights to the book and we're going to sell it in New York," said agent Vicki Eisenberg, who represents Schutze.

Robert Frese, a senior editor at Taylor, said only 450 copies of the book were advanced.

Wedding turns into funeral

DALLAS (AP) — A man who was married on a pontoon boat died later in the day when he fell out of a ski boat at the wedding party, authorities say.

Thomas Arnold and his bride Lynn took their wedding vows on Lake Lewisville Sunday afternoon. Just before sunset, Arnold, a 32-year-old jet mechanic, drowned after a boating accident, investigators said.

Arnold was riding with a friend in a ski boat and was about 75 yards from shore when the boat turned abruptly to avoid the wedding party boat. The two men lost their balance and fell into the water.

Texas Parks and Wildlife Game Warden Charles Dillard said Arnold was knocked unconscious by the boat propeller.

AIDS victim bites officer

DALLAS (AP) — Police are monitoring the condition of an officer who was bitten on the hand by a man who exhibited AIDS symptoms.

Dallas County epidemiologist Charles Haley said Tuesday it is unlikely that the officer will contract the disease. The 31-year-old officer was bitten during a struggle with a man in a July arrest.

At the time of the incident, the 33-year-old man told the officer he had AIDS, said Assistant Police Chief Leslie Sweet.

DANILOFF

"A mutually acceptable solution can be found," he said. "However, to achieve a compromise, we believe one needs a calm situation...We do not believe publicizing this problem on the front pages of newspapers will help resolve it."

Shevardnadze told reporters Wednesday that "there is a possibility" of a settlement.

"The chances still remain," he said during a break in a series of meetings with foreign ministers attending the General Assembly.

Shultz was continuing with a busy schedule that called today for meetings with foreign ministers from Tunisia, Britain, Costa Rica, India, Pakistan and Morocco.

Daniloff, 51, was released from Moscow's Lefortovo Prison on Sept. 12 into the custody of the U.S. ambassador. He remains confined to Moscow while preparations for his trial on espionage charges proceed.

Zakharov, who was released the same day into his ambassador's custody, is due for a pretrial hearing in U.S. district court in New York City on Oct. 3.

Brazil's growth rate high

Brazil recorded an estimated growth rate of 4.5 percent in gross domestic product in 1984, the third highest in Latin America behind Costa Rica and Chile, according to the Inter-American Development Bank. This compares with a 3.1 percent annual rate of growth for Latin America as a while.

Man honored after breaking hand-gun band

OAK PARK, Ill. (AP) — A gas-station owner charged with violating the town's handgun ban after he pursued and shot at two armed robbers has been honored with a bravery award by a police organization.

Don Bennett was robbed of $1,200 in cash and jewelry in March when two armed robbers came to his Oak Park station and put a gun to his head.

Bennett followed them through a dark alley and fired at their car with a .45-caliber handgun, but they escaped.

Two days after Bennett reported the crime, he was arrested for breaking the village handgun ordinance that prohibits private citizens from owning or carrying handguns.

If convicted, he could be imprisoned six months and fined $2,000.

Oak Park's handgun ban was approved by trustees in April 1984 and took effect six months later. Voters defeated a November referendum to repeal the ordinance.

"This is incredible, a tremendous award," said Bennett, 46, who lives in nearby Hanover Park and faces a court hearing Monday. "It means a lot knowing the law-enforcement community is behind me."

The American Federation of Police on Wednesday presented Bennett with its highest civilian honor.

"We stand behind this man today and issue this award in recognition of his bravery and...his fortitude, in defending not only his right to bear arms, but of every law-abiding citizen in this state and in the nation," said Dennis L. Martin, president of the 68,000-member organization.

Since 1980, the federation's Golden Eagle award has been awarded to 14 people, including President Reagan. Vice President George Bush received the trophy last week, said Martin, a deputy sheriff in Saginaw, Mich.

A gun-control advocate said he was outraged about the award.

"For a police group to give an award to a man who broke the law is ludicrous," said Henry Hulseberg, a spokesman for the Citizens Committee For Handgun Control.

"No one's for crime in any form," he said. "But when you have a man running down an alley shooting at people, such a vigilante and Wild-West kind of scenario is ridiculous."

The federation does not condone breaking the law, Martin said, "but the moral issues here outweigh the circumstances."

Gas station owner Don Bennett holds an award that was presented to him Wednesday by the American Federation of Police for bravery, after he chased two men who held up his Oak Park, Ill., gas station and fired at their fleeing car. They escaped, and two days later Bennett was arrested for breaking the village hand gun ordinance.

French minister certain family behind bombings

PARIS (AP) — Interior Minister Charles Pasqua said today he was certain the family of Georges Ibrahim Abdallah was behind Paris bombings that killed nine people and injured more than 160 in a 10-day period.

Pasqua, the head of the police, and Premier Jacques Chirac insisted no negotiations would be held with the bombers, who seek Abdallah's release from prison. The reputed terrorist leader is serving a four-year sentence for possessing weapons and false documents.

Meanwhile, French police arrested a Palestinian sympathizer suspected of having terrorist contacts, but it was not clear if the arrest was linked to this month's bombings.

Chirac was in New York to attend the opening session of the United Nation's General Assembly. Speaking on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" program, he said his government did not suspect any country of involvement in the attacks, but that "groups from the Middle East" were believed involved.

"Who they are, we still don't know," he said. "If we have the proof that somebody is involved in terrorism in France by really helping or by commanding the Abdullah clan, then we shall do what is necessary to punish them."

Asked if that meant taking retaliatory measures, Chirac said, "We'll see. But we have quite a lot of means."

Chirac's spokesman in Paris, Denis Baudouin, said Cooperation Minister Michel Aurillac met Wednesday with Syrian Vice President Abdelhalim Khaddam for talks about terrorism and bilateral economic matters. Baudouin gave no further details of the meeting in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

There have been suggestions in the French press that Syria might be involved, suggestions denied by Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Sharaa.

A group calling itself the Committee for Solidarity with Arab and Middle East Political Prisoners has claimed responsibility for the five bombings beginning Sept. 8.

The group is demanding the release of three Middle East prisoners, including Abdallah, the reputed leader of the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions terrorist group. Police believe the Committee for Solidarity is an emanation of that group.

Abdallah is awaiting trial on charges of complicity in the 1982 murders of an American military attache and an Israeli diplomat.

Pasqua said in a radio interview, "We are certain...it is the Abdallah group that committed the attacks in Paris. And each day that passes, the proof confirming their guilt accumulates."

He added, "It is very improbable that they were able to act alone and without support on the (French) national territory."

Four of nine suspects sought by police in the bombings are Abdallah's brothers. The brothers and two other suspects have surfaced in northern Lebanon since the last attack, Sept. 17. The brothers have denied involvement.

Pasqua denied reports in a satirical and investigative weekly newspaper, Le Canard Enchaine, that the government had negotiated with the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions to exchange Abdallah for an end to the attacks.

"We don't negotiate, we don't treat, we don't discuss," he said. "The terrorists will remain in prison, the government will not compromise."

Chirac told "Good Morning America" that his government's position was "no compromise, no discussion of any kind with terrorists."

Baudouin said that Monsignor Hilarion Capudji, the former Greek Catholic patriarch of Jerusalem who met with Abdallah in his prison cell Wednesday, "is charged with no mission by the French government."

French news reports said Wednesday that Capudji urged Abdallah to call for an end to the bombings. Baudouin said Capudji was "Christian like Mr. Abdallah, (and) could pass a certain number of messages to him."

SBC to study links with public affairs committee

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (NYT) — Southern Baptist officials have taken a step that may lead the 14.5 million-member Southern Baptist Convention eventually to pull out of America's oldest religious freedom lobbying group.

In a series of votes, the SBC's Executive Committee, which wrapped up three days of meetings here Wednesday, set up a "fact-finding" group to study the denomination's links to the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs in Washington.

With a staff of only 10 people, the Joint Committee, as it is called, is the smallest, but one of the most highly visible targets in the ongoing fight between Southern Baptist conservatives and moderates.

Conservatives have mounted an increased attack on the Joint Committee, accusing the agency of focusing on liberal causes.

Under its executive director, James Dunn, the Joint Committee's lawyers and lobbyists have concentrated on church-state separation issues, opposing tuition tax credits to parochial schools and government plans to tax religious bodies.

Dunn did not criticize the decision to set up a fact-finding group. But he said most Southern Baptists support the Joint Committee's work, and they also believe in the need to cooperate with other U.S. Baptist groups.

The 50-year-old Joint Committee represents eight other Baptist denominations, although Southern Baptists contribute 80 percent of its annual budget — $400,000 of a total of $500,000. "Southern Baptists need to do things officially and up front with black Baptists, American Baptists, German Baptists, Swedish Baptists," Dunn said.

But conservatives have contended that cooperation is less important than taking stands on certain social issues and that Southern Baptist money ought to be used to lobby against abortion and in favor of school prayer, for example.

Conservatives at the Baptists' annual convention in June in Atlanta launched a major — and nearly successful — push to cut off the Joint Committee's funds, with the money to go to a new exclusively Southern Baptist lobbying organization. That effort led the executive committee to set up the fact-finding group this week.

Dunn acknowledged that the group, which will present its report at next year's annual convention, may recommend "defunding" the Joint Committee. But he disputed claims by conservatives that this would kill off the Joint Committee.

"There are plenty of other ways" to raise the money, he said, suggesting the Joint Committee could turn to state Baptist conventions and individual churches for support.

In fact, he said, by cutting off money, conservatives actually might help the Joint Committee by prompting other Southern Baptists to raise more funds for the lobbyists. "We'd probably flourish," Dunn said. "I think we'd do better if funds were cut right off."

Victim of hoax dies from AIDS

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — An AIDS patient who nearly died when a man posing as his physician telephoned to prescribe a change in medication has died of complications from the disease, officials said.

Edward Lebowitz, 48, died Wednesday of complications related directly to acquired immune deficiency syndrome, according to a one-sentence statement issued by St. John's Hospital and Health Center.

No official cause of death was given.

Police will continue to investigate whether the death was a homicide, Lt. Jim Dawson said late Wednesday.

Before his death, investigators said they had found no motive for the hoax, in which a man who said he was a doctor called the hospital late Saturday and prescribed insulin.

Lebowitz, who was not identified until after his death, began to fall into a coma after the insulin severely lowered his blood-sugar level.

Mercy killing has not been ruled out, but Detective Shane Talbot said "we're not focusing in on it as a particular motive." He said "whoever attempted to kill the victim is an acquaintance."

Lebowitz had told detectives he had no idea who might have made the call, Talbot said.

The caller was well-acquainted with Lebowitz's case and hospital procedures, said hospital spokesman Armen Markarian, adding that the hospital will make undisclosed changes in procedures nurses must follow in taking phoned orders from doctors.

"Apparently, (Lebowitz) was under some new, experimental treatment, and the so-called doctor told the nurse it was important to keep his blood sugar down, so he was administered insulin," Talbot said.

"When the person was questioned, the response was that there was some new evidence that if you reduce the blood-sugar level of an AIDS patient, the treatment would work better."

Ms. Davenport said there were almost 50 percent fewer pilot companies in the preliminary drive this year, but donations had increased by about 5 percent.

She added that 34 pilot companies last year raised $394,000, but this year, 19 pilot companies raised $413,700.

Ms. Davenport said that all pilot companies had either maintained or increased their giving in relation to their donations last year.

Tom Wageman, United Way campaign executive director, told the group of about 550 luncheon guests, that "this year was the most challenging ever."

"We are the warriors who must do for our fellow citizens what they can't do for themselves," Wageman said.

"Our weapons are love, care and concern.

"When people say 'no' to us, they are saying 'no' to a bruised and battered mother and her children," Wageman said.

He added that the goal was to raise every dollar possible.

"We hope God is smiling on us and that we will hear 'yes' more than we hear 'no.'

"Our support and involvement will shape the future," Wageman, president of RepublicBank First National, said.

Other pilot companies and their approximate contributions included: City of Midland, $14,000; ClayDesta National Bank (partial), $3,000; Compressor Systems, Inc., $2,000; Elcor Corp., $24,000; First City National Bank (partial), $16,000; HBF Corp., $7,000; Lynch, Chappell, Allday & Alsup, $8,500; Magantex Corp., $5,000; Mervyn's, $7,000; Midland Memorial Hospital, $20,000; Midland Reporter-Telegram, $23,000; Pennzoil, $8,000; Petroplex Savings, $8,000; Sun Explorations and Production, $27,000; Texas American Bank, $12,000 and Texas Electric Service Co., $32,000.

While McCright was a partner in Midland West Corporation, Estap testified that McCright — in the capacity of FNB loan officer — loaned the company $1.925 million to develop Greentree Country Club and the Greentree subdivision.

Estap testified that "Had it not been for Hoyle, there may not have been a Greentree."

He went on to say that on or about July 28, 1981, he, McCright and Conner sold their interests in the company to John Wood of Wood and Locker Inc.

Each received $330,000 from the sale of the stock, Estap said.

Wood, another government witness, told the six-man, six-woman jury that "When he (McCright) got any project started in the city of Midland it furthered the interest of the First National Bank.

"If you don't think he (McCright) had a great deal of influence on the money that came into the First National Bank you're mistaken."

Radiation experiments valuable, doctor says

WALLA WALLA, Wash. (AP) — Radiation experiments performed on state prison inmates in the 1960s produced valuable findings about the effects of radiation on the male reproductive system, the doctor who conducted the research says.

"I feel good about the way the program was carried out," Dr. C. Alvin Paulsen said Wednesday. "I appreciate that it is controversial, but I treated these men as I would any other of my own patients."

Police stung by pigeon-drop

SOUTH HOUSTON (AP) — The South Houston Police Department repaid a local bank $5,000 lost during a foiled attempt to catch a pigeon-drop artist, authorities say.

The embarrassing episode occurred Sept. 11 when an undercover officer and three of his colleagues were left holding a paper bag stuffed with newspapers instead of money a bank official had quickly loaned to them, police said.

"I think we all learned a lesson from this," said Mayor Al Thiel, who delivered the check Wednesday to Southern State Bank. "We need to be more cautious in the future."

City Council voted Tuesday to take the money from the police department budget's general fund.

Police said the man, claiming to be from South Africa, told potential victims how blacks lost their money by depositing it in South Afrcian banks. He would offer to pay them handsomely if they would withdraw their own money to show him how they make deposits, police said.

Robertson combats first controversy of campaign

By JACK NELSON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — As he moves closer to seeking the GOP presidential nomination, television evangelist Pat Robertson is struggling to resolve a budding controversy over his claim to be a combat veteran of the Korean War and accusations that he pulled strings to avoid front-line duty.

Responding to the accusations that he never saw action and used the political influence of his late father, Sen. Willis Robertson, D-Va., to avoid it, Robertson has circulated a military document and a letter from Sen. John W. Warner, R-Va., to show he served as a Marine in Korea during the conflict there.

Aides say Robertson was appalled at the accusations and was preparing a detailed report on his military service, which he will make public soon. Meanwhile, they say he refuses to comment further.

Questions about the nature of his war record have persisted, however, in part because the Departrment of Defense says Robertson's military records reflect duty in Korea but show no actual combat service. Marine records show he was an assistant adjutant of the First Marine Divison.

According to the Pentagon, Robertson was awarded the Korean Service Medal "with three bronze stars for participation in Communist China Spring Offensive, United Nations Summer-Fall Offensive, and Second Korean Winter." The bronze stars denote that he was in Korea during the fighting, not that he participated in it.

Robertson's autobiography, "Shout It from the Housetops," and material issued by his Christian Broadcasting Network refer to his "combat" service in Korea. Apparently relying on those sources, news accounts of Robertson's interest in seeking the Republican presidential nomination have often described him as a combat veteran.

Warner, in the letter being circulated by Robertson supporters, wrote the minister that he had seen press accounts questioning his military service and recalled one night when both were serving as lieutenants in Korea: "As we talked you could hear the distant rumble of...artillery fire."

However, a spokesman for Warner later said the senator could not verify that Robertson was ever actually under fire.

The controversy over whether Robertson avoided combat service through his father's intervention was touched off by former Rep. Paul N. "Pete" McCloskey Jr., R-Calif., an ex-Marine who was awarded the Navy Cross, the Silver Star and a Purple Heart after being severely wounded while leading six bayonet charges as a platoon leader in Korea.

According to McCloskey, he and Robertson, both young second lieutenants at the time, left San Diego in January 1951 aboard the U.S.S. Breckinridge bound for the Far East. McCloskey says he distinctly recalls that Robertson spoke frankly of asking his father to intervene to keep him out of combat and was subsequently assigned to a base in Japan while most of their fellow officers continued on to Korea — where many were killed or wounded.

McCloskey, now a Los Angeles attorney, gave his account of of Robertson's military service in a letter to Rep. Andy Jacobs Jr., D-Ind., another Korean combat veteran. Jacobs released copies to several columnists, and the account recently appeared in columns in hundreds of newspapers throughout the country. In a telephone interview, McCloskey told the Los Angeles Times, "I would swear under oath what I wrote in the letter."

McCloskey, who wrote the letter at Jacobs' request, made a similar accusation about Robertson to reporters in Orange County, Calif., in February 1981, but the matter received little attention outside California. At that time McCloskey told The Times that he questioned the minister's "preaching about patriotism" because Robertson had avoided combat service through his father's influence.

In his 5½-page typewritten letter to Jacobs, McCloskey said that before the Breckinridge reached Japan, Robertson "spoke frankly of his desire to avoid combat and to have his father...intervene on his behalf."

McCloskey said he recalled "a lot of good-natured ribbing of Pat and equally goodnatured response on his part before we docked at Kobe....Something was said about a 'six-minute life expectancy for platoon leaders in combat' or words to that effect..."

Most of his fellow officers thought he was joking when he said he intended to telephone his father and request transfer off the ship, McCloskey continued, but Robertson eventually did make two telephone calls.

"My single distinct memory is of Pat, with a big grin on his face, standing on the dock at Kobe after his second phone call, saying something like, 'So long, you guys — good luck,' and telling us that his father had gotten him out of combat duty," McCloskey wrote.

McCloskey said the following June, a little more than four months later, he encountered a fellow officer, John Gearhart, who said he had been one of three other second lieutenants "who had been pulled off the ship with Robertson at Kobe, in Gearhart's mind solely to disguise the political nature of Robertson's case."

McCloskey said Gearhart told him that he and the other two officers were "not happy about their assignment." He added that Gearhart had pointed out to an aide to the Marine Corps commandant that there were four second lieutenants who had seen no combat duty.

"The next day all four were flown to Korea post haste," McCloskey said. "Upon arrival Robertson had been made the divison 'liquor officer,' the other three had all been sent to rifle companies. As I recall, John Gearhart had already been wounded twice and was on his way back to his company when I met him that day in June."

Ex-Republican senator may return to fold

By DAVID ESPO

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., a former Republican who flirted with switching back to the GOP in 1982, says he's being wooed anew by President Reagan and other party leaders.

But Zorinsky is setting a steep price for a conversion that could help the Republicans retain control of the Senate. He wants the chairmanship of the Senate Agriculture Committee, a reward that would require moving the current chairman, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

In recent months, Zorinsky said, he has been courted by Reagan, GOP party chairman Frank Fahrenkopf and several Republican senators.

Reagan told him in a telephone call six months ago that Republicans "have more room on their side of the aisle if I want to come over," Zorinsky said.

He said he discussed a possible switch with Fahrenkopf at the Kentucky Derby in May and at a recent pro football game in Washington. But Terry Wade, a spokesman for Fahrenkopf, said the chairman "has had no discussion with Zorinsky on that matter." Wade said Fahrenkopf recalled talking with Zorinsky about the switch the senator made a decade ago.

Zorinsky, a 57-year-old former Republican mayor of Omaha, won election to the Senate in 1976, running as a Democrat after GOP party leaders refused to support his candidacy. He has established himself as a maverick in the Senate, often supporting Republican initiatives.

Some Democrats, speaking on condition of not being identified by name, suggested Zorinsky's comments on party switching, which first surfaced in an interview with The Omaha World Herald late last month, may be part of an attempt to secure his own political future. They noted that outgoing Gov. Bob Kerrey, a Democrat, has been mentioned as a possible Senate candidate in 1988, when Zorinsky's term expires.

A switch to the GOP might involve more than a highly unusual shift by a senior elected official. Potentially, control of the Senate could hang in the balance while Zorinsky makes up his mind.

Republicans hold a 53-47 majority in the current Senate, but must defend 22 of the 34 seats at stake this year, and Democrats are mounting a determined bid to regain control.

If Democrats can switch four seats, they would have a 51-49 majority — unless Zorinsky became a Republican. If he did, there would be a 50-50 tie, with Vice President George Bush available to break the deadlock in the GOP's favor. Republicans then would retain effective control of the flow of legislation and of committee chairmanships.

But fulfilling Zorinsky's desire to become a chairman could be complicated.

"I would like to be chairman" of the Senate Agriculture Committee, he said on Tuesday, adding, "I try to keep all options open."

In a brief conversation with reporters, he said his committee elevation would be a precondition of any switch to the Republicans.

Helms has been chairman of the Agriculture Committee since the Republicans won control of the Senate in 1981, and would have to surrender the post for Zorinsky to take it as a Republican.

For Helms to give up his chairmanship without receiving another one would be unheard of, and aides had no immediate comment on the subject.

The only other panel where Helms would have the seniority to become chairman is the Foreign Relations Committee. That is headed by Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., whose spokesman said, "Lugar intends to be chairman next year. Under the rules it is not Senator Helms' for the asking."

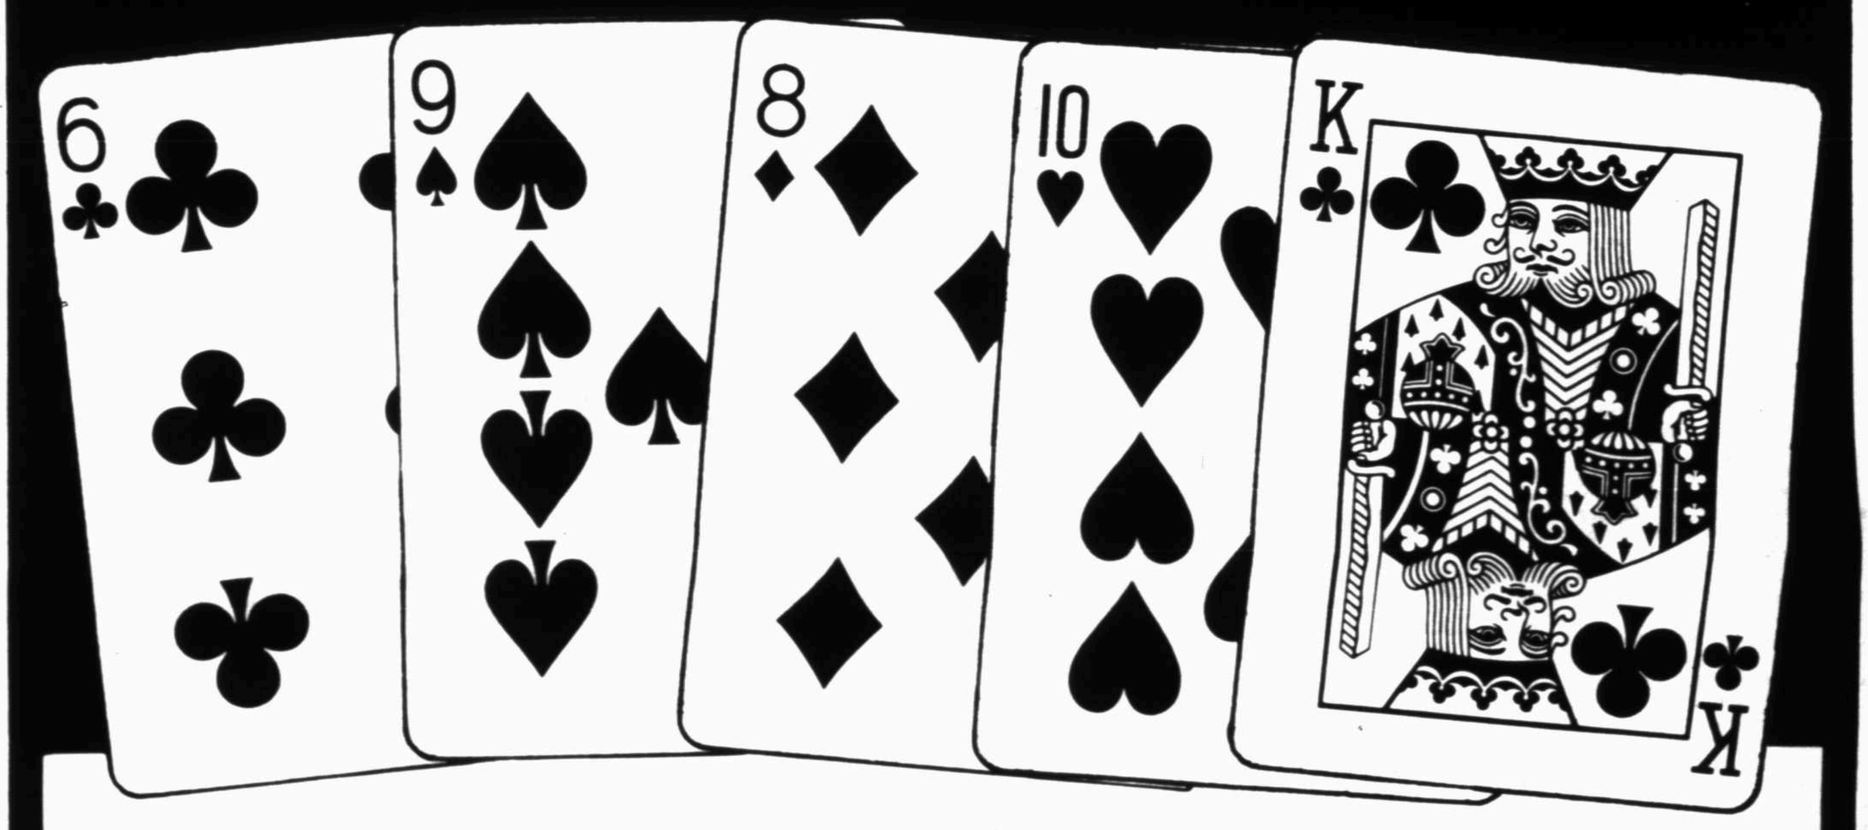

The road seems no less blocked if Zorinsky remains a Democrat.

In the normal course of events, the senior Democrat, Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, would become chairman of the panel if Democrats win control of the Senate. A candidate for re-election this fall, Leahy has stressed his claim to the post during his campaign.

Rostenkowski predicts 'avalanche' for tax bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — As lobbying continued down to the wire, a chief architect of the most sweeping tax code revision in four decades predicted today the legislation would win House approval by a comfortable margin.

"I think we could comfortably win this by 30 to 40 to 50 votes," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Once the voting begins later today, he added, "you'll seen an avalanche of votes supporting it."

Rostenkowski, interviewed on the NBC-TV "Today" show, also commented that "now we see many of the members that were leaning yes are starting to tell us that they're going to vote yes. A lot of the undecideds are coming over (because of) pressure from the White House (and) my friends in the House whipping their membership."

House passage would send the compromise legislation to the Senate, where Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., has predicted there are sufficient votes for final congressional approval Friday, Saturday, or next week. President Reagan then would be expected to sign the bill into law next month.

The last major threat to passage of the measure evaporated Wednesday when House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois told his GOP colleagues he would exercise his prerogative as leader to offer a motion to send the legislation back to the House-Senate negotiators who drafted the final package.

Only one such motion is allowed on the bill. Thus, Michel's action ended an effort led by Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, to make a more detailed motion to force specific changes in the bill.

The idea was to piece together proposals that together might have drawn enough votes to force new negotiations on the bill. Michel's action to offer a motion without instructions took away any incentive to vote for it.

Indeed, Rostenkowski said this morning that he thinks Michel "is doing his motion to recomit more to protect the president."

After the closed session of Republicans, which several participants described as strained and tense, Michel issued a statement saying Archer's motion presented "a risk that the entire (tax-overhaul) effort could be scuttled" without the House ever taking a yes-or-no vote on the substance of the bill.

"Many of us in the House would like to have our own particular instructions (for what should be in the bill), and if we all get what we want, we're back to square one," Michel said. By presenting his own motion, he added, "We can assure the president and the American people of a simple up-or-down vote on the entire proposition."

Budget writers expect compromise on deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capitol Hill budget writers expect a quick House-Senate compromise on deficit reduction, but Congress still has less than a week to resolve a host of urgent money matters for the new fiscal year.

By a vote of 309-106, the House on Wednesday followed the Senate and approved plans to trim the fiscal 1987 deficit below the $154 billion limit in the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law.

In separate measures, both the House and Senate avoided deep spending cuts or significant tax increases. They both opted instead to:

— Sell off government assets, such as the Conrail freight railroad and loan portfolios.

— Raise fees for government services.

— Raise penalties for tax evasion and hire more IRS agents, to cut down on tax cheating and bring in more money.

— Shift around government revenues and expenditures to give the balance sheet a one-time fix.

"Everyone acknowledges that in this package we are not solving the structural problem of the deficit," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., as the House passed its $15.1 billion measure. It was "not one of the most glamorous moments of the congressional budget process," he said.

The Senate's version passed last week was "85 percent the same," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Budget Committee. Both he and Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House budget panel, said they would begin meeting today and quickly resolve their differences.

Reagan administration officials lodged a protest Wednesday, warning in a message to Congress they would recommend a presidential veto of the House version. But Gray expressed confidence that the compromise would be acceptable to the president.

The basic package for both bodies was worked out last week in talks with White House Budget Director James C. Miller III.

"I think the letter was quite short compared to past years," Gray said of the administration's response, which listed 17 concerns including a $1 billion spending cut divided between domestic and military programs, and a new 0.5 percent tariff on imported merchandise.

Enactment of the budget bill might help meet the Gramm-Rudman law's limits and avoid the need for confronting across-the-board spending cuts that the law would call for otherwise.

But to do that, spending programs must be held within budget. And although it's currently within those guidelines, the government will be forced to shut down next Wednesday if there's no agreement on the enormous $567 billion spending package for government agencies scheduled for House action today.

Congress, under normal procedures, would pass 13 separate appropriations bills that authorize the agencies to spend money during the fiscal that begins Oct. 1.

This year none have been passed, and lawmakers are wrapping them all into a package known as a continuing resolution — making it the largest spending bill ever.

House leaders Wednesday night removed one Reagan administration objection to the package — a plan that would have added $3.4 billion to save the revenue sharing program with local governments.

But the administration has listed dozens of other objections that could provoke a veto, ranging from arms control initiatives to domestic spending priorities.

House chairman: Speed limit bill faces dead end

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee chairman is warning that a Senate-passed increase in the top speed limit to 65 mph represents a potential anchor that could sink a $52.3 billion highway program in the final days before Congress adjourns.

"I don't know how anyone can vote for legislation that would result in so many deaths, paralyzing injuries and other injuries," Rep. Jim Howard, D-N.J., said Wednesday after overwhelming Senate approval of the bill.

The House Public Works and Transportation Committee chairman said he was unsure "whether we're going to go to conference on this as long as that is in the bill."

Refusal to convene a conference committee to resolve differences between House and Senate versions of the plan would leave work on the measure, which envisions $12.35 billion in federal highway aid annually, unfinished by the Oct. 3 target date for congressional adjournment.

It also would prevent the plan, which would allow state legislatures to raise the speed limit from 55 mph to 65 mph on interstate highways outside areas of 50,000 or more in population, from reaching President Reagan's desk.

Westerners are the major advocates of raising the 55 mph speed limit, saying it makes no sense in the vast spaces of their region. Defenders, chiefly from the Northeast and Midwest, say lives are being saved by the 1974 restriction imposed to save energy at the time of a severe gasoline shortage.

The speed limit increase was adopted 56-36 on Tuesday night and the Senate then approved the bill itself 99-0 on Wednesday.

But the House on Aug. 8 rejected a five-year trial increase in the speed limit by a 218-198 vote.

Despite attention riveted to the speed-limit issue, a number of other thorny matters would have to be resolved by a conference committee.

The Senate approved its version after deleting, 65-32, an provision by Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., that, in effect, would have denied federal highway funds to local governments that awarded contracts to companies doing business with South Africa.

An expected push on the floor to knock out a Senate plan to spur the removal of billboards from the nation's roadsides never materialized.

The Senate plan, favored by environmentalists, would ban further billboard construction and free local governments from a restriction that bars them from removing the signs without cash compensation of the owners.

Under the Senate version, billboard owners could "amortize" their investment for up to five years before compulsory removal of the signs.

The House balked at such a provision, yielding to arguments that it was similar to confiscation and thus economically unfair to the outdoor advertising industry. It replaced the provision with a "freeze" on billboard construction, a provision that has come under fire from environmentalists.

Claiborne asked to surrender license

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — U.S. District Judge Harry Claiborne, fighting impeachment proceedings before the U.S. Senate, has been asked to surrender his law license in his native Arkansas.

The judge will face disbarment proceedings if he doesn't give up the license in 30 days, according to a letter from the state attorney general's office mailed to Claiborne at the federal prison camp at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Ala.

Spokesman says Daniloff compromise 'still possible'

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) — A Foreign Ministry spokesman today said a compromise is still possible in the case of American newsman Nicholas Daniloff, but declined comment on reports the United States has proposed a two-stage plan for the reporter's release.

The spokesman, Boris Pyadyshev, said only that U.S.-Soviet contacts on the Daniloff case were under way in New York, where U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze met twice on Tuesday at the United Nations.

U.S. officials said Wednesday that the United States proposed freeing Daniloff, who has been charged with espionage and is now restricted to Moscow, while the trial of Soviet U.N. employee Gennadiy Zakharov on spy charges would proceed in New York.

If Zakharov were convicted, the physicist would be exchanged for an unspecified number of Soviet dissidents, under the proposal.

The New York Times and Washington Post have quoted U.S. officials as saying that in exchange for Daniloff's release, the Soviets wanted some relief from the U.S. expulsion order for 25 members of the Soviet mission to the United Nations, some of whom have already left.

Asked if he had any new information on the progress of negotiations over Daniloff, or comment on the press reports, Pyadyshev said:

"We in the Soviet Union do not believe that the problem cannot be resolved by some compromise. ...A mutually acceptable solution can be found."

"However, to achieve a compromise, we believe one needs a calm situation, without dramatizing the case. We do not believe publicizing this problem on the front pages of newspapers will help resolve it," said Pyadyshev.

On Wednesday, First Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli Vorontsov accused the U.S. press of blowing the case "out of all proportion."

Pyadyshev did not elaborate on the negotiations over Daniloff and did not take any more questions.

Daniloff was detained by the KGB in Moscow one week after Zakharov was arrested in New York, and U.S. officials say the U.S. News & World Report correspondent's arrest was intended to give the Kremlin bargaining leverage in the Zakharov case.

The Soviets deny any link between the two cases and contend Zakharov was framed by the FBI. Daniloff says he was set up by the KGB and is innocent of spying charges.

Publicly, U.S. officials refuse to equate the cases, saying Daniloff is innocent, and rule out any trade.

Referring to the charges against Zakharov, Pyadyshev said, "We in the Soviet Union are indignant about the attitude in New York toward our citizen Zakharov."

'Cory' home, says she'll review peace strategy

By ROBERT H. REID

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino returned today from a U.S. visit that "exceeded all my expectations" and, faced with calls for a tougher stance against communist rebels, said she would review her peace strategy.

Following a Cabinet session held shortly after her arrival, Mrs. Aquino told reporters she was distressed by recent clashes between the armed forces and the communist New People's Army.

The flareup of the 17-year-old insurgency during her nine-day absence left at least 12 people dead and prompted calls for a more forceful counter-insurgency policy.

She said she would meet soon with military leaders and government negotiators to study measures for ending the rebellion.

"Any killing bothers me," she said. "That is why it is necessary for us to sit down and discuss the matters thoroughly to decide what measures we will take."

Ramon Mitra, minister of agriculture and member of the government team negotiating with representatives of the communist-dominated National Democratic Front, said Mrs. Aquino was determined to achieve a cease-fire before discussing other communist demands.

"The whole idea boils down to the question of whether they are capable of agreeing on something at all," he said. "This (the cease-fire) is something that is basic. The president's feeling is that if we can't agree on this, we can't agree on anything."

During an address last week to a joint session of the U.S. Congress, Mrs. Aquino vowed to pursue all avenues to peace but warned she would unsheath "the sword of war" if the rebels spurned her peace overtures.

Representatives of the front have met twice with government negotiators but have rejected a call for an immediate, 30-day cease-fire.

Mrs. Aquino described her American visit as a resounding success and gave no indication of any differences with the U.S. administration.

"It was just great and exceeded all my expectations," she said.

About 50,000 people lined the streets, chanting "Cory, Cory" and showering Mrs. Aquino's van with confetti as her motorcade covered the 30 miles from Manila International Airport to the presidential palace.

Mrs. Aquino, 53, told reporters after the Cabinet meeting that she received a report on the insurgency from Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel Ramos.

Vice President Salvador Laurel had earlier told reporters the military would present her with a proposal for "a more decisive policy."

At a televised airport ceremony, Mrs. Aquino told her compatriots that her American visit had won "a sympathetic understanding" of the Philippines from President Reagan, Congress and the American people.

"We were met everywhere with great warmth and much respect for what we Filipinos have accomplished," she said. "Poor as we are, we already have that for which great nations bend their greatest efforts: The admiration of the world."

Mrs. Aquino said before the trip that her main goals were to develop a "personal rapport" with Reagan, a friend of her predecessor, Ferdinand E. Marcos, who ruled the country autocratically for 20 years before being ousted in February in a civilian-military uprising.

She also had said she hoped to encourage more private investment, more aid and better credit terms.

She obtained, among other commitments, a recommendation from the International Monetary Fund for release of a $508 million credit, final World Bank agreement on a $300 million loan and a pledge by the bank for an additional $300 million from private investors.

The House of Representatives approved a supplemental aid package worth $200 million, but the proposal faces an uncertain future in the Senate.

Soviet-made nuclear plants being built in Cuba 'may not be safe'

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — U.S. Energy Secretary John S. Herrington said Wednesday he was concerned that two Soviet-made nuclear power plants being built in Cuba may not be safe.

"We would like to know who is regulating the construction in Cuba, who is building them and what features are being used," Herrington told reporters. "They (the Soviets) need to share more information with us."

Herrington was in Vienna as head of a U.S. delegation to a special three-day meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The U.N. agency was slated to adopt proposals later this week asking member countries to notify each other early and provide assistance in case of a nuclear accident.

Nuclear experts worked out the proposals in response to the April 26 accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Union.

Herrington said he had recently toured a Soviet-designed reactor in Finland that was similar to the ones being built in Cuba. Herrington said he was not convinced the design was safe.

Members of the U.S. delegation said the Cuban reactors were 400-megawatt water-pressurized models.

WORLD in brief

China's Communist Party adds 6.3 million people

PEKING (AP) — China's Communist Party has added 6.3 million people to its rolls since 1981 and now has 44 million members, the official Xinhua News Agency reported today.

It quoted an official of the party Organization Department as saying many of the new members were well-educated, younger professionals.

In the past the party admitted predominantly workers, soldiers and peasants.

China's total population tops 1 billion.

Games watchful of crime

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — More than a quarter-million Koreans were detained during a 100-day anti-crime drive that preceded the Asian Games, police said today.

The operation ended Sept. 17, three days before the opening of the sports festival that will run in Seoul through Oct. 5.

A police announcement said that of the total of 263,564 people picked up, 48,333 were placed under arrest on various charges and 76,312 referred to summary courts.

The others were released after warnings or turned over to "pertinent agencies or organizations" for possible action, police said.

Police listed 191,297 of the detained as hoodlums or gangsters, 33,107 as thieves and 1,049 as pickpockets. They did not categorize the others.

Police said the drive was aimed at people who might be involved in acts "detrimental to the Asian Games."

Government crooked?

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — The auditor-general's office said in its annual report released today that the government has misused, squandered and stolen millions of dollars, and the prime minister ordered an urgent probe, a spokesman said.

The report said some cases involved forged cheques, misappropriation of aid money and theft at postal agencies.

In a letter to Charles Walker, the acting finance minister, Prime Minister Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara said the reported irregularities should be investigated as quickly as possible and those responsible disciplined, the spokesman said.

The government of this South Pacific island nation, which is preparing for upcoming general elections, has portrayed itself as efficient and well managed.

Driver loses top of bus

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — A bus driver was fired Wednesday for losing the top of his doubledecker bus when it passed under a railway bridge.

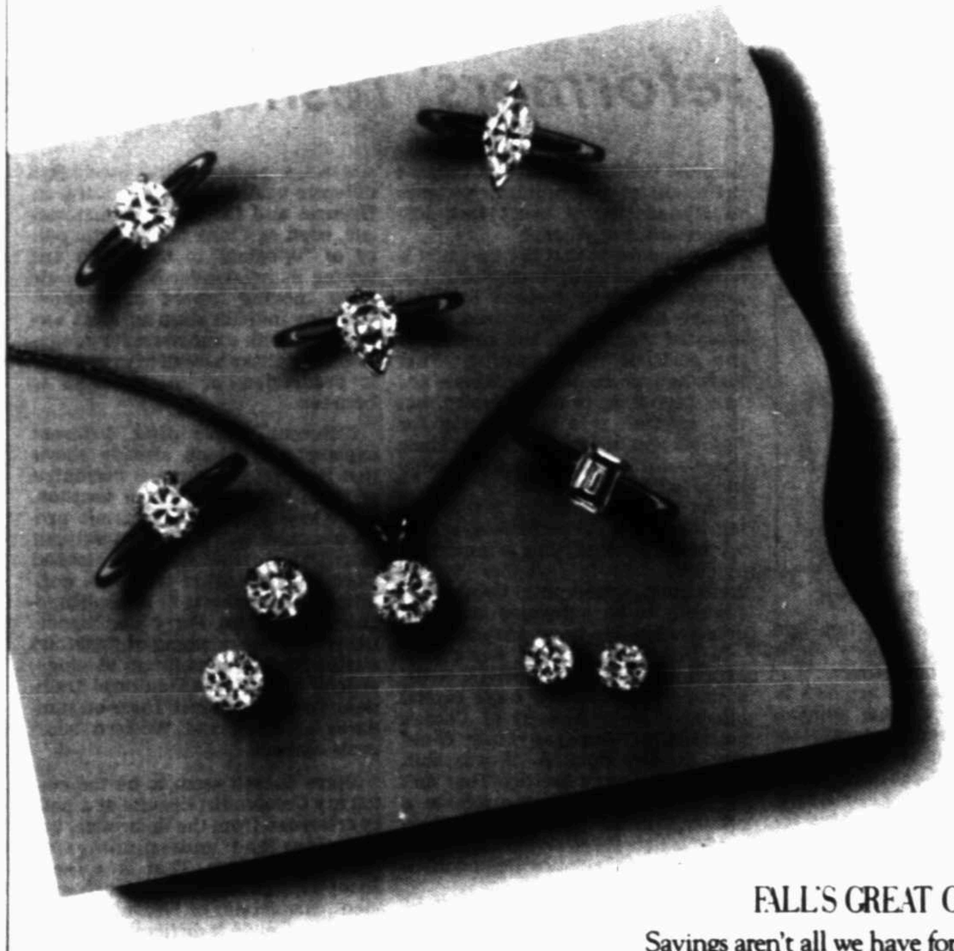

Donald Randall was sacked for "gross misconduct" after losing his appeal to a disciplinary hearing by the West Midlands Passenger Transport Executive.

Randall was suspended last week when the top deck of his 14-foot 6-inch bus was ripped off as he drove under a railway bridge with a 14-foot clearance.

There were no passengers on the bus at the time, and Randall was believed to have been taking a shortcut to the bus garage when he hit the bridge.

Crime's cost high

Releasing lawbreakers from prison early can have rehabilitative benefits in particular instances. But what can prove a trendy rehabilitation tool for the non-violent can be murder, literally, for prisoners serving sentences for violent crimes.

In fact, it seems to accomplish little for the Legislature, in one breath, to pass get-tough laws for fighting crime and, in another, to take steps that only promise to open the prison gates to more ne'er-do-wells. The situation really gets muddied when a fiscal crisis comes along, like the one Texas is currently encountering. It's on these occasions that legislators are tempted to throw caution to the wind and to opt for the "easy fix" rather than to hold out for the permanent solution.

Maybe not this time, though. The problem behind releasing violent prisoners was recognized earlier this week when the Texas Senate passed a package of bills that eventually could make it more difficult for such criminals to return to society. At the heart of the bills is the state recidivism rate which deals misery to local law enforcement agencies, innocent individuals and which turns the court system into a virtual revolving door for violent criminals.

Of course, prison was never intended to be an alter-society for those who simply cannot get along in mainstream life, but to an extent it has become that and the recognition was confirmed when the Senate passed the measure which would allow the state parole board to deny freedom for a prisoner convicted of a violent crime even though he may have served his full sentence with "good time" added in. Currently, the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles must release a prisoner regardless of his crime once he has served his full sentence.

Under the bill the Senate passed, the board can consider the kind of crime committed and whether the prisoner is a "good risk" for supervised release.

The problem stems from prison policies that allow prisoners to accrue good time which, when applied to their full sentence, can qualify them for release early. The awarding of "good time" is a beneficial rehabilitative tool, but it ignores a simple fact of life some penologists already recognize: Some "model" prisoners are far from model in the outside world. They go through the revolving door court system and end up back in prison, leaving human misery, agony and sometimes death in their wake. The bill approved at least allows the board of pardons and paroles to consider the potential impact of releasing certain prisoners.

The story doesn't end there, of course. Prison statistics show that up to 40 percent of the Texas Department of Corrections' 38,000 inmates are serving time for violent crimes. Under the approved bill that could mean holding some prisoners for longer periods of time and, consequently, incurring prison overcrowding or the need to construct more prison units.

Those considerations are vital, particularly in light of the state's fiscal crisis. But crime has a cost to society regardless of the manner in which it is felt.

The bill was still justified merely in the respect that it recognized a problem the state eventually must address.

GEORGE F. WILL

Budget bill's an 'economic Daniloff'

WASHINGTON — If Congress' disposition is surly, that is because its situation is embarrassing. Congress is being praised for a tax-reform bill the contents of which are as mysterious as Mongolia to many members who are primarily interested in something they would rather not talk about, thank you: "transition rules." Regarding deficit reduction, members fully understand that the cooked books and other dodges by which they are complying with the Gramm-Rudman law would get people in the private sector sent to prison.

George F. Will

What is going on? Self-indulgence, on a stupendous scale. But what Congress is doing in domestic policy is analagous to what the executive branch has done in the Daniloff affair. The common thread running through recent actions is the purchase of immediate satisfaction by spending principles and mortgaging the future.

Secretary Shultz says: "I was amazed at the outcry over making arrangements to get Mr. Daniloff out of a 6-by-10 cell into a more congenial environment while this was being struggled with." Amazed? The administration vowed that there would be no swap, no linkage of the Daniloff case and that of the spy Zakharov, no acceptance of the equivalence of the cases. Then came the swap. The cases were linked as equivalent as the men were simultaneously placed in the custody of their governments' officials.

It was self-indulgent of the administration to set a dangerous precedent merely to satisfy its understandable desire for Daniloff to have a "more congenial environment." The administration's idea of success in this crisis is simple — the return of Daniloff. Because the Soviet Union has no desire to keep him forever, the administration will perhaps soon be claiming "success." And as the President said when Jesse Jackson collaborated with Syria to enable Syria to avoid dealing with the U.S. government concerning release of a U.S. airman, "You can't argue with success."

But you can and should argue with it when it involves self-indulgent preoccupation with the immediate. Speaking of which, the tax-simplification bill — 925 pages of relentless simplification — will pass, partly because of "transition rules" designed to mitigate the agony of "fairness" as it falls on certain friends of certain senators and congressmen.

The more than three hundred of such rules exempt particular corporations and other interests from the rigors of reform. For example, tax subsidies (reformers will be opposed to such things in general, just as soon as these hundreds are enacted) are retained to enable nine communities to build stadiums to attract or retain teams. (A 10th such project, for the Baltimore Orioles, is different ... well, just because.)

Without the transition rules — without a stupendous shower of pork — tax reform (a.k.a. The Slaying of Special Interests by the Gleaming Sword of Virtue) might have died.

Passing appropriation bills is too banal an activity for a Congress that is busy bringing justice to South Africa and stadiums to needy cities. Therefore we have government by continuing resolution. Soon the President will be presented with a yes-or-no decision on a nearly $600 billion bill to keep government — the whole thing — ticking over. Perhaps he should veto it, to show how much an executive branch run by Republicans detests the sin of spending.

Except ...

Shultz is cross because Congress is cutting the administration's foreign-aid request. He is right to be cross: such cuts will dangerously diminish U.S. influence abroad. But he is wrong to be, as he seems to be, surprised.

Shultz is the adviser the President trusts most. Where was Shultz when the President was wrapping himself in Gramm-Rudman, as in the flag? It was predictable that Gramm-Rudman, combined with the President's taxophobia, would mean severe cuts in foreign aid. Such cuts are the least-risky choices for a Congress attacking the deficit only by shrinking spending, not increasing revenue.

And speaking, as we are, of the predictable consequences of self-indulgent Republicanism: Is Shultz really surprised that foreign aid is not faring well in an era that reflects the effects of 30 years of Republican rhetoric about how "government is the problem, not the solution to problems," etc.?

Congress has complied with the Gramm-Rudman law with a mixture of fudged figures and one-time sales of assets. The savings of $13.3 billion is just enough to avoid across-the-board spending cuts.

Because Congress resorted to arithmetic gymnastics to achieve just $13.3 billion, Congress is apt to be even more self-indulgent next year, when hitting the deficit reduction target will require cuts of about $80 billion.

Perhaps Congress will indulge in a small "perfecting" amendment, just changing a number. The current Gramm-Rudman requires the deficit to be reduced to zero in five equal increments by 1991. Perhaps the perfected Gramm-Rudman will require 55 equal increments. Congress probably could succeed in cutting one-fifty-fifth of the deficit and, hey, you can't argue with success.

Another View:

Obstacle still exists

Two days of intense talks between Secretary of State George Shultz (and President Reagan) and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze concluded with Nicholas Daniloff still a prisoner.

Shultz reported that despite hard American concentration on the case, it still was not resolved and still stands in the way of a fruitful summit.

Shevardnadze hinted at a possible solution "without pain in the interest of both countries" and added: "Please give us a chance through diplomatic channels."

None of this is especially encouraging. As the days go on, however, with Nick Daniloff still not a free man — he is no less a prisoner for Moscow's having made the American ambassador its surrogate jailer — one thing has to be kept in mind.

Some observers of the case are taken by the evident similarity of some circumstances of the arrest of Mr. Daniloff and the Soviet picked up in New York.

For instance, both had documents planted on them. But there is a deeper, truer difference, and it is that the Soviet was unquestionably a spy who was going about the business of espionage, and Nick Daniloff was unquestionably an innocent journalist. The Soviet suspect knew what documents he was going after: Nick Daniloff did not.

Swaps of spies are a familiar enough feature of Soviet-American relations. But Daniloff is not a spy: President Reagan gave his personal word on it.

In grabbing him, the Soviet government created a whole new category of trading bait. The effect is not simply to chill the Western press corps in Moscow.

It is also to aggravate the risks of all innocent foreigners there. In that sense the Daniloff arrest went far to steal foreigners' passports and to leave them exposed to the same total official arbitrariness that Soviet citizens must bear all their lives.

"Diplomacy" is still at work in the Daniloff case and also, it seems, in respect to the 25 Soviet diplomats Washington recently ordered out of the Kremlin's United Nations mission as spies. Already and on its own, the Soviet Union protests, it has met the new ceiling on U.N. staff that Washington set last March.

Shevardnadze termed the expulsion order "a block to the summit." He appeared to be indicating that even though preparations for a summit otherwise appear to be moving along, Moscow would first have to determine that its interest in its U.N. mission had been satisfied.

The terms of reducing medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe and Asia are said to be coming within mutual reach. In Stockholm, an East-West agreement (it would be a Reagan first) is virtually complete on adding a layer of international notification and on-site inspection (this would be a Soviet first) to the measures that East and West already take to learn of the other's military movements in Europe. The Geneva nuclear talks are active.

These various things are important, in different degrees. In normal circumstances there would be reason to pursue them with all deliberate speed.

But the framing of Nick Daniloff is not a normal circumstance. It would be a great loss if the Kremlin's obstinacy in lowering the obstacle it alone raised, by arresting an innocent American, got in the way of these other projects.

But of course it would be a greater loss if it did not.

Chinese 'reformers' reshaping revolution

PEKING — The Chinese Communist Party's Central Committee meeting this week has been prepared to mark a new step in the process of fundamental but carefully controlled reform.

Flora Lewis

Deng Xiaoping has launched a drastic series of economic measures, starting with agriculture and moving on now to industry, that have already brought extraordinary changes in everyday life. People eat, talk and breathe more easily. Nobody wants to go back to the hard times.

But the questions now are how to go on, at what pace, what political changes are required to consolidate and assure economic progress. There is already awareness that the tightly hierarchical Communist structure, copied from the Russians, needs adjustment to be brought into step with economic reform.

What does this mean? China has been fiddling boldly with Marxist economics, at least in its first applied model, which was the Soviet Union. Is there now to be a turn away from Leninist politics so that the Chinese definition of Communism becomes so diluted that it won't look like Communism anymore?

The answer is that the question is wrong, or certainly premature. The important point is that political change has been recognized as an essential element in the success of the goals of modernization. What kind, how much, leading where, are only beginning to be discussed, but that in itself is a big opening for Chinese who have been taught since the revolution that such issues have been firmly settled.

The news from China is that certain aspects of the political structure are being debated. This is important in itself, but it certainly doesn't mean that monolithic Communist power is to be jettisoned or that a new system has been shaped.

Seven years ago there was a brief experiment with "democracy wall," a single place in this huge capital inhabited by 1 percent of China's population where anybody could post up any opinion. It was shut down quickly and harshly. That isn't being repeated. Now the debate is primarily inside the Communist Party about how the determining role of the party can at once be modified and maintained.

It is notable that the Central Committee's agenda puts the issue in the ambiguous term of "spiritual civilization." That could be taken in opposite ways, as bolstering ideological defenses against foreign cultural influences and the surge of materialism, even as China pursues the policy of "opening" to the world and raising living standards. Or it could mean moving toward more allowance for individualism in ideas and opinions, with some room for competition in politics as well as in economic production; or many stages in between.

Different people offer different explanations, which already shows that internal argument is permitted and the issue is far from decision. Some say flatly that economic progress cannot be guaranteed without more "democratization," a loaded word but impossible of precise definition in the context of unchallengeable Communist Party dominance. Others say the meaning of "spiritual civilization" is to maintain ideology, official idealism and cultural traditions against too much focus on standards of living and Western bourgeois appeals.

There doesn't seem to be the customary Communist dispute at a policy crossroad from the theoretical implications and underpinnings of conflicting stands. That is a Deng Xiaoping innovation and achievement. His maxim of "learning from facts" has made it difficult for party theologians to assert dogmatic certainties, in any direction, and made it easier to concentrate on practical measures.

It also helps to rip away some of the veils used to defend privilege and power on the grounds of ideological purity in opposition to reform. The Soviet Union, in comparison, has not begun to admit that troubles stem from the very structure of the power pyramid rather than just inadmissible or inadequate personal conduct at each level.

But China is experimenting, still far from conclusion. For now, political reform doesn't seem to mean much more than personnel policy inside the party, getting rid of superannuated diehards, vetting promotions, trying to decentralize operational decisions while keeping a firm hand on policy. It means up with reformists, down with theoreticians, and watching how the wind blows.

This is a long, long way from changing the system. It is exciting because it is open-ended, but it should be assessed with the same wary prudence with which Chinese leaders are proceeding. They certainly haven't abandoned their revolution. They are re-examining how better to reap the fruits of their convictions.

ART BUCHWALD

When God says no, He means what He says!

The last time I talked to God about politics was six years ago. I interviewed Him concerning an endorsement the Moral Majority claimed He had given to Ronald Reagan. At that time God told me He did not endorse political candidates who were running for high office. He told me, "If I endorsed anyone I wouldn't be God."

Art Buchwald

The reason I got in touch with Him last week was that the Rev. Pat Robertson said he was throwing his hat in the presidential ring in "accordance with God's wishes."

"Any truth to that?" I asked God.

"I categorically deny it. I never ask anyone to run for President of the United States. When it comes to the White House it's every man or woman for himself."

"Then why would Rev. Robertson say that You wished he would run?"

"People say many funny things when they're running for political office. God may be a big issue in 1988, with everyone claiming they are closer to Me than their opponents. The Rev. Robertson is obviously trying to tie up the God vote early, but it could backfire on him, particularly when I don't show up at any of his fund-raising dinners."

"Is Robertson going for the money so early?"

"It seems that way," God said. "I have nothing against him doing it as long as he leaves Me out of it. If there is anything that bugs Me it is when somebody uses My name to raise political dollars."

"I am sympathetic with the way you feel, God," I said. "Have you told Robertson to knock it off?"

"I've tried to. But every time I call he asks Me to go on his TV show. I don't do television talk shows. If I appeared on the 700 Club program it would be the same as giving an endorsement. It's ridiculous for anyone to think I am for Robertson when there are so many other God-fearing people running for the office."

"In what party?"

"BOTH. How can I choose between George Bush, Bob Dole, Howard Baker, Jack Kemp, Mario Cuomo, Gary Hart and Joe Biden – all who have asked Me to answer their prayers?"

"Do You have any problem with a fundamentalist preacher in the Oval Office?"

"I do if every time he does something he says, "God made me do it."'

"You know what? I think you should tell Robertson exactly how You feel before it gets out of hand."

"What should I tell him?"

"Put out a statement that You are not giving Pat Robertson Your political blessing because You look down kindly on all political creatures great and small running for President of the United States. And further state that You would not allow Your name to get mixed up in American politics because it would mess up the greatest country in the world."

"It sounds good to Me," God said. "If that doesn't do it I'll send a bolt of lightning down on his campaign headquarters. Sign it, "Dictated but not read."'

WEATHER SUMMARY

Warm, sunny skies forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Sunny skies and warm temperatures are called for in the forecast for Friday by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. A high in the upper 80s is expected.

A slightly cooler low is forecast for tonight by the NWS. The low should be around 60 degrees. Southwesterly winds at five to 15 mph will accompany fair skies. Friday, southwesterly winds will increase to 10-20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 90 was 11 degrees below the record high set in 1977. This morning's low was 16 degrees above the record low of 46 set for this date in 1984.

STATE

A cold front moved across western portions of the low rolling plains of West Texas early today.

The front extended southward at dawn to the Trans-Pecos area of Southwest Texas.

Elsewhere, a few showers and isolated thunderstorms were reported over the coastal waters, near the Red River in North Texas and along the Texas-Louisiana border in Southeast Texas.

Forecasts called for a chance of showers and thunderstorms over most of the state through Friday.

There was a chance of showers and thunderstorms over eastern and western portions of North Texas, the Concho Valley in West Texas and over most of South Texas. Elsewhere it was to be partly cloudy and breezy.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 50s and 60s over West Texas and in the 70s elsewhere. Highs Friday will again be mostly in the 80s and 90s.

Early morning temperatures were in the 50s and 60s in West Texas and in the 70s and 80s elsewhere. Extremes ranged from 50 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains of Southwest Texas to 84 at Corpus Christi.

NATION

Rain dotted the nation from New England to the Plains today, while rain changed to snow in the Western mountains and hampered travel.

An intense low pressure system over southeast Montana sent severe thunderstorms into South Dakota. Drenching thunderstorms also rumbled across northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin, and a flood watch was posted in southern Minnesota.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across New England, and from the upper Ohio Valley across the Great Lakes and upper Mississippi Valley into the Plains.

Low pressure systems over Idaho and Utah spread rain, which changed to snow at higher elevations.

Life changes in fight to save the rail

LAKEVIEW, Ore. (AP) — Orval Layton fondly remembers the days before he wound up leading the drive to save Lakeview's railroad.

"I used to fish every Thursday afternoon until this railroad thing started," he said. "It just eats you up.

"If anything goes wrong now, I get called," he said. "One Sunday they were switching cars and they blocked the highway too long. Some irritated person called and said, 'Hey, Layton, your train's blocking the highway.' "

But without him, this town of 2,755 in the high desert of eastern Oregon stood to lose the 55-mile shortline to Alturas, Calif., and the four lumber mills that depended on the railroad for shipping.

Besides being Lakeview's postmaster, Layton was chairman of the transportation committee of the Economic Development Commission when this railroad thing started on April 23, 1984.

"In a town this small, you know how rumors fly," he said. "Somebody came in and said, 'They're going to shut down the railroad.'

"I called Tom Hauptman, who was the manager of Lakeview Lumber — I was associated with him through the Lions Club — and he called Southern Pacific and then called me back and said it was true," said Layton.

"I said, 'What the hell are we going to do about this? We can't let it go down the tubes.' And Chuck said, 'You're the chairman. What are you going to do?'

"So that's how I got involved."

Now he's chairman of the Railroad Commission.

But Layton always has been the kind of person who gets involved. He's chairman of the Utility Commission, chairman of the Library Board, served 10 years on the Lake County Planning Commission (two years as chairman), was president of the local United Way drive for four years and has led the local hunters' safety program for 25 years.

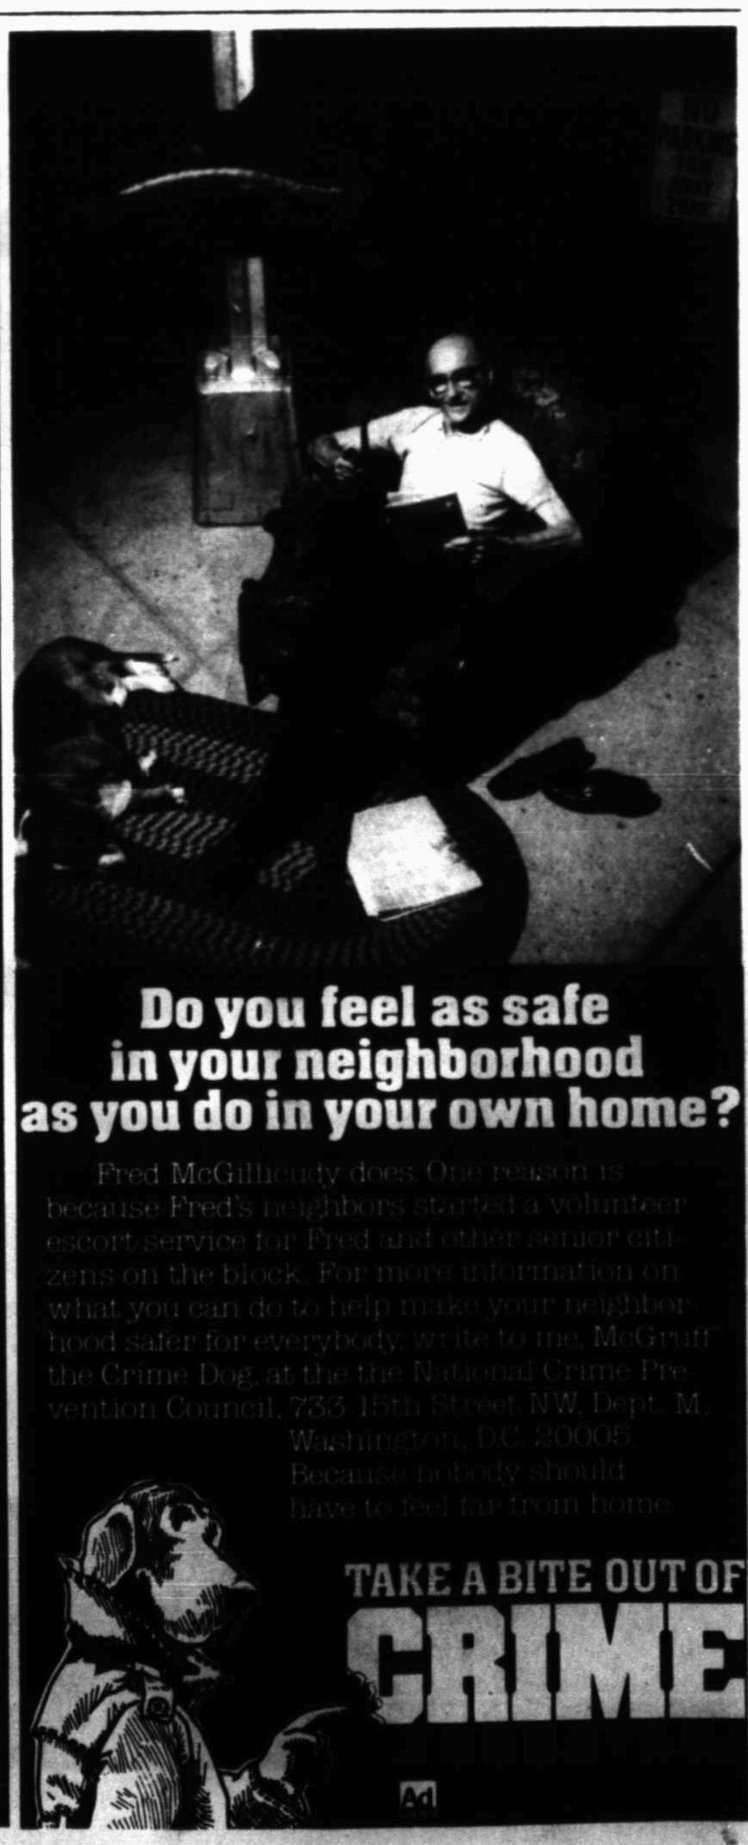

"Sometimes you kind of back yourself into a corner where you feel obliged to do something if you are available to do it," he said.

The Nevada, California & Oregon Railway came in 1912 to Lakeview, the end of the line for the narrow-gauge railroad out of Reno, Nev.

Losing money, the railroad tried to abandon the entire line in 1922, but the California Railroad Commission wouldn't allow it, saying the line was vital to the ranchers and mills in the area.

It was bought by Southern Pacific in 1928 and expanded to standard gauge.

Midland football fans greeted the sun Wednesday morning to purchase tickets for the Midland High-Midland Lee game, which is set for 8 p.m. Friday at Memorial Stadium. All but 200 tickets were purchased during the first day of sales.

Football fever hits Midland fans

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Football fever hit Midland with a furry Wednesday as fans purchased all but 200 of the available adult reserved seats for Friday night's District 4-5A matchup between cross town rivals Midland High and Midland Lee.

Long lines greeted the Memorial Stadium ticket office early Wednesday morning and kept office staff busy throughout the day. The remaining 200 tickets were to be offered to the general public throughout today and until Friday noon, if needed.

"I think you can say that this game will be a sellout," said Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, after Wednesday's turnout. "We didn't really know what to expect, but fans were lined up early outside the office Wednesday morning."

Edwin Nixon, assistant athletic director, said, "We had about 200 adult reserved tickets left after Wednesday and we don't know if they will last through today or not."

Season ticket holders for Lee and MHS had a chance to purchase tickets for this game last August, leaving just over 2,700 adult reserved seats available to the general public. Over 2,000 of those tickets were gone by 11 a.m. Wednesday.

"The people kept us busy all day," noted Janelle Dozier, athletic office secretary. "It took us until around 10:30 (a.m.) to get the line down and then it was steady the rest of the day."

Bartosh noted that there would definitely be no sale of student tickets at the gate Friday night. "The schools are handling most of the student ticket sales and you can say they are gone. We won't be selling any student tickets at the gate Friday and if we run out of the 200 we have left, we won't have any of those either by Friday night."

The news pleased both MHS coach Doug McCutchen and Lee coach Earl Miller.

"I'm hoping the game will be a sellout," said McCutchen. "I think this type of game is a treat for Midland. I really don't see any reason why it wouldn't be a sellout. After all, we have two undefeated teams in town."

Miller responded, "I didn't know how people would respond with the way the economy is, but I expected a lot of interest. A sellout would be great for the kids, but we're going to play whether it's a sellout or not. However, the kids have worked hard and deserve a good turnout."

This is the first time the two teams have met when both were undefeated and the earliest meeting during a season. Since 1961 when the series started, all but two previous games have been played as the season finale.

"I liked the idea of playing Lee last, but I'm not sure that this isn't going to create a lot more interest for the fans. I know our kids are excited about playing," said McCutchen.

"I don't care when we play, Midland High will play a great game. We just have to approach the game thinking that Midland High will play their best game against us," said Miller.

Lee has won nine of the last 10 meetings, but the margin of victory has been less than 10 points in eight of those Lee victories. Midland High last won in 1982 with a 14-6 decision.

But the past has very little to do with the present and both unbeaten squads have high hopes entering Friday's encounter.

Franklin leaves Midland College

MC's Reggie Franklin
...gets Louisiana call

Reggie Franklin began his coaching career at the top, joining Midland College head coach Jerry Stone in time to win the 1982 National Junior College Athletic Association tournament in Hutchinson, Kan.,

"You could say his coaching career has gone downhill from there," joked Stone on the day Franklin announced he was ending their four-year coaching relationship.

But rather than going downhill, Franklin is simply taking another step up the coaching ladder, accepting an assistant coaching job at Southwestern Louisiana on Wednesday. Southwestern is an NCAA Division I school and former member of the now dismantled Southland Conference.

"This time of year, you're really not looking for a job," Franklin explained, "but I got a call last Thursday about this position and I interviewed Friday. Everything happened so quick, it was one-two here we go.

"But career-wise, it's the best move I could make right now. Like most assistants, I have a dream of being a head coach someday."

FRANKLIN HAS spent his life in basketball working toward that goal. He graduated from Houston Yates, played at New Mexico Military Institute against the Chaps for two seasons, then moved on to Southern Methodist where he earned All-Southwest Conference honors. Before coming to Midland College, Franklin spent two years touring the world with the Harlem Globetrotters.

Franklin, who just turned 30, will work for Marty Fletcher, newly named head coach at Southwestern Louisiana, as his No. 1 assistant. Fletcher was named to the post Sept. 8 after four years as a head coach at Virginia Military Institute.

"Recruiting is an essential aspect of college athletics and we're excited about our first signee... Reggie Franklin," Fletcher said from his office in Lafayette, La. "This is big-time college basketball and we've got a winning tradition here."

The Ragin' Cajuns play in the 12,000 seat Cajun Dome and have a schedule that includes Texas Tech, Houston, SMU, Washington State and Auburn.

"They're basketball crazy down there," Franklin said. "Of course, West Texas is football country, and I like football as well as the next guy. But basketball is No. 1 in Southestern Louisiana."

Recruiting will remain Franklin's primary area of concern under Fletcher, as it did under Stone, and Texas will be his stomping grounds.

"I'm hoping we can get something going with Jerry that he can help feed us and we can feed him," Franklin said. "I've already talked to all the sophomores here and to some of the freshmen about coming to Southwestern. I'll be back in Midland. You'll see this face around here."

FOR STONE, beginning his 10th year at MC, Franklin's absence is double trouble — professionally and personally.

"Reggie's always acted in a professional manner and been loyal to me as a head coach, but he's been more than that. He's been a best friend, too," Stone said. "Whoever replaces him has some very large shoes to fill. We're going to find the best man we can...we're not going to take the first one that walks in the door.

"If we can find somebody by Christmas, we'll be in good shape."

But finding someone with the recruiting skills of Franklin could be a tough trick for Stone, but it's something head coaches have to expect from time to time when they have a good assistant.

Franklin is widely known for his recruiting skills and is a big reason the Louisiana school sought his services.

Franklin, who will remain with the Midland College program for a few weeks to ease the transition, leaves Midland with regrets.

"I love this place. Midland is a great city and I appreciate everything we have here at MC, from the water girls on up," Franklin said. "Jerry Stone is the best coach I've ever been around and I've learned a lot from him.

"The most rewarding thing here for me was watching the freshman class of Vernon Coleman, Teviin Binns go 21-11 one year, then go on to finish fourth in the nation the next. They really showed a lot of guts, determination and character."

Of course, they were learning from two of the best, Jerry Stone and Reggie Franklin.

Ryan flirts with no-hitter as Astros near title clincher

Associated Press

The Houston Astros have been limiting the number of pitches Nolan Ryan throws ever since he returned from the disabled because of a sore elbow.

But there are times for exceptions — like during no-hitters and the National League playoffs.

Ryan, who has been held to 100 pitches by Manager Hal Lanier since June 24, pitched no-hit ball for 6⅓ innings Wednesday night as the Astros clinched a tie for the NL West championship by beating the San Francisco Giants 6-0.

One more Houston victory or one more loss by runnerup Cincinnati will give the Astros their second division title, the first since 1980.

Ryan, who holds the major-league record of five no-hitters, had another one going until rookie Mike Aldrete grounded a clean single to left in the seventh inning. That was the only hit Ryan allowed in his eight innings.

Ryan, 11-8, struck out 12 and finished his night by striking out the side in the eighth. He walked three.

"He threw 108 pitches tonight and we wanted to see him stretch it out a little," Lanier said. "When you get into the playoffs, you can throw that 100 pitch figure out the window, unless he's tired."

Said Ryan: "I was ready for tonight. I wasn't planning on having an off ight. This is probably the best I've had since I came off the disabled list."

Ryan, who has nine career one-hitters, said he has learned to overcame the discomfort in his elbow.

"I've dealt with it so long that I almost forget the pain," he said.

Reliever Charlie Kerfeld gave up one hit in the ninth.

Billy Hatcher and Kevin Bass each drove in two Houston runs and Glenn Davis hit his 30th homer of the season.

Bass had an RBI single in the first off Mike LaCoss, 10-13, and a run-scoring double in the fifth. Hatcher hit a two-run single in the fourth. Davis connected in the seventh.

Baseball Roundup

Reds 4, Braves 1

Max Venable connected for his first home run in two seasons, a three-run shot, and Ted Power shut out Atlanta on four hits for 7⅔ innings as Cincinnati beat the Braves.

Power, 8-6, won his fourth straight game and is 4-1 in eight starts after 229 consecutive relief appearances since 1983. John Franco allowed a run in the ninth, but still got his 25th save.

Venable homered in the third inning against Rick Mahler, 13-17. It was Venable's first home run since Aug. 16, 1984, while with Montreal, and his first in 264 at-bats for Cincinnati.

Cubs 8, Mets 2

Drew Hall pitched a six-hitter and won his first major-league game and Ryne Sandberg drove in three runs, leading Chicago over New York.

Hall struck out eight and walked two. He is 1-1 since being promoted from Class AA. Hall also got his first major-league hit in the seventh and Chico Walker followed with a two-run single.

Sandberg had an RBI single in the fifth and a two-run single in the seventh. Rick Aguilera, 8-7, took the loss.

Former Midland Cub Shawon Dunston hit his 17th homer for the host Cubs, and Gary Carter hit a two-run homer, his 22nd, for the Mets. It was the Mets' 139th homer this season, tying the team mark set in 1962, when they went 40-120.

Cardinals 7, Phillies 1

Danny Cox scattered seven hits and John Morris and Andy Van Slyke homered as St. Louis beat visiting Philadelphia.

Cox, 11-12 struck out five and walked one in his seventh complete game of the season.

Morris led off the second inning with his first major-league homer, off Kevin Gross, 11-12. Van Slyke opened the third with his 11th home run.

Pirates 2, Expos 1

U.L. Washington's RBI single with two outs broke an eighth-inning tie and gave Pittsburgh its victory over Montreal.

Barry Bonds drew a walk from Bob McClure, 2-4, and reliever Jeff Reardon got Tony Pena on a force play. Jim Morrison and Washington followed with singles.

Don Robinson, 3-4, got the win with two innings of scoreless relief.

A vote for Roger Clemens

Last year Dwight Gooden was the Most Valuable Player in the National League and they gave it to Willie McGee because the St. Louis Cardinal outfielder played on the pennant winner.

Our dueling adversary in the controversy MRT sportswriter Eric Schurer nods with the years of wisdom. "As it should be. Players on pennant winners should be MVP's.

AND THE Heisman trophy is for running backs and quarterbacks. After all, linemen have the Outland Award, right?

Wrong. If a player is most valauble, he has the right to the recognition.

Decreeing the MVP must come from the pennant winner, means Ernie Banks would never have won, although his presence on the Chicago Cubs was the difference between finishing in last place and Keokuk, Iowa.

This year the American League award will go to either Wade Boggs or Jim Rice, if the Schurer rule prevails.

In the National League, Gary Carter, a .244 apparently, is the front runner. He may be the favorite of the writers and fans, but there is a strong anti-Carter faction among teammates, who think he overrated and point to the Mets' 12-3 record when he was injured as evidence.

FOURTEEN Game-Winning RBIs are submitted as one of the strongest arguments in Carter's favor, although the GW RBI probably is the most meaningless statistic in the game.

Anybody who knocks in the run that puts his team ahead for good gets credit for a GW RBI. A first inning RBI in a 20-0 rout receives the same GW treatment as the grand slam with two out in the ninth to pull out a 5-4 win.

A batter is credited with a GW RBI if he bats in the first run of a game and his team never falls behind, althought the final score may wind up 20-19 and a teammate knocked in the 20th run in the last of the eighth. According to those who devised the GW RBI, that 20th RBI has no significance on the game's outcome. It was all decided by that first RBI back in the first inning.

Gooden should have won the MVP last season as well as the Cy Young in both leagues. He had that kind of year.

YOU HAVE already guessed my MVP choice in the American League. Roger Clemens is having the kind of year for the Red Sox that Gooden had for the Mets in 1985, the main difference being that Boston will win the American League pennant.

Those who favor the every day ball player over the pitcher for MVP like to employ the criteria "Where would his club be today without him."

Case closed. Last year the Red Sox had both Boggs and Rice and were no where. This year they are going to win the pennant with 24-game winner Clemens, who notched 14 of those wins after Boston losses.

What good is the MVP award if the most valuable player is ineligible?

New York Yankees reliever Dave Righetti failed to convert a save opportunity for the first time in 25 games, but hung on to be the winner in a 5-3, 10-inning victory over the Baltimore Orioles Tuesday night.

With the bases loaded in the eighth inning, Ladd induced pinch hitter Pete Incaviglia to pop up and then struck out Scott Fletcher to end a Texas threat. "No one really wants to come into a bases-loaded situation, but someone has to," Ladd said.

Ken Phelps drove in two runs with 24th homer and a sacrifice fly as Seattle halted a three-game winning streak by Texas.

The Mariner victory reduced rained-out California's magic number to three. Texas begins a three-game series with Angels on Friday and also plays the final three games of the season at home against California.

Yankees 4, Orioles 1

New York's Don Mattingly regained the American League batting lead by going 2-for-4, driving in two runs.

Mattingly, the 1984 batting champ, started the game in a tie with Boston's Wade Boggs at .350 and finished at .351. He singled in the first inning to extend his hitting streak to 23 games, the longest in the major leagues this season and the longest of his career. Boston's game at Milwaukee was rained out.

Royals 2, Twins 1

Minnesota's Bert Blyleven didn't have a word to say afterward. That in itself gave mute testimony to the frustration he must be feeling.

Blyleven, 15-14, struck out 14 batters and walked none. But he came out a loser because Kansas City's Frank White hit a solo homer in the top of the ninth inning — the 46th surrendered this season by Blyleven, tying a record set in 1956 by Hall-of-Famer Robin Roberts.

White's homer, his 20th, gave him three of the nine hits allowed by Blyleven.

The 35-year-old Blyleven is 227-197 for his career.

Blue Jays 8, Tigers 2

Toronto's Cecil Fielder was filling in for first baseman, Willie Upshaw, who has a sore right knee. But, despite hitting a three-run homer, Fielder wasn't thinking about anything permanent.

"This ain't no Wally Pipp story," he said.

Pipp had a headache one day, so the New York Yankees started Lou Gehrig. They kept him there for the next 2,130 games.

Fielder's home run, his fourth, and one by Tony Fernandez to open the game, highlighted a six-run Toronto first inning against Dan Petry, 5-9. Dave Stieb, 7-11, scattered seven hits over seven innings, struck out six and walked one.

A's 4, White Sox 2

The wind was blowing out in Oakland, and Joe Cowley, coming off a no-hitter against California in his last start, was the victim because all three hits he allowed left the park.

"On a normal day, all of those are routine outs," said Cowley, who pitched 6⅔ innings as Oakland completed a three-game sweep of Chicago. "But but other than that, I have no excuses. I pitched well."

The A's went ahead in the seventh when Alfredo Griffin hit the right field foul pole with his fourth homer, a two-run shot. Consecutive home runs by Carney Lansford and Dave Kingman pulled the A's into a 2-2 tie in the fourth. Kingman's was his 34th, tying him with Toronto's Jesse Barfield for the league lead.

Chap cagers give sneak preview

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

In the sports world where the attitude is one of "What have you done for me today?", Midland College basketball Coach Jerry Stone has a lot of explaining to do.

Sure, his Chaparrals won 33 straight last season, but the current losing streak has lasted longer than that winning streak and it has another six weeks to run before Stone and his Chaps have an opportunity to win one.

Still, Stone gave MC followers a sneak preview of what was to come at Wednesday's Meet-the-Chaps scrimmage at Chap Center. Disappointingly, only five players return from the team that gave local fans so many thrills before losing in the playoffs to national champion San Jacinto in Fort Worth last March.

Encouragingly, the Chaps have a 17-player squad, which is unusual for this late in practice. "We've usually run a bunch off or they've gotten homesick and quit by now, but this has been a good, hard-working, receptive group," Stone says.

The season opens with the Chaparral Classic Nov. 6-8 and offers one of the better fields ever rounded up for the event. Odessa College, Howard College, South Plains College, Barton County, Kan., Garden City, Kan., Cisco and Grayson County are in the field.

"South Plains could be the favorite to win the conference this year," said Stone, "And the Kansas teams will be good, too."

The Western Junior College Athletic Conference season opens Dec. 1 against Clarendon and prior to that MC will play in the Blue Dragon Classic, Hutchinson, Kan., Nov. 20-22 and the Odessa Tournament, Nov. 27-29.

Returnees from last season are 6-1 Daron Blaylock, Garland; 6-0 Todd Duncan, Lubbock; 6-3 Lincoln Minor, Houston; 6-7 Bruce Smith, Leakesville, Miss.; 6-4 Mike Smith, Cocoa, Fla.

Newcomers are 5-8 Stewart Barnett, New York City; 6-4 Nathaniel Curvey, Houston; 6-6 Rob Cunningham, Roundrock; 6-7 Tracy Davis, Washington, D.C.; 6-2 Wilbur Griffith, El Paso; 6-6 Herman Henry, Dallas; 6-8 Juan Hewitt, New Orleans; 6-4 Clifton Jones, Texas City; 6-2 David Martin, Lexington, Ky.; 6-3 Matt Sears, Midland; 6-5 Billy Ray Smith, Dallas; and 6-7 Alex Stanwood, New Orleans.

Thurman trying to sever Dallas ties

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Dennis Thurman can't call home.

He is afraid he won't know what to say. He is afraid someone will say something that might spark memories of the good times.

Dennis Thurman, who at 5-11 and 179 pounds earns his living as a defensive back in the NFL, is afraid the pain might be too great.

Thurman, who after eight seasons as a Dallas Cowboy was told in August that his services were no longer required, has not talked to buddies Everson Walls, Michael Downs, Ron Fellows, Bill Bates or Victor Scott since he received the word from Tom Landry.

Too bad. Once they were as thick as thieves.

Thurman does talk to Dextor Clinkscale. But they share a common pain. Neither any longer enjoys the camaraderie they once shared with the rest of the Cowboys' secondary.

Thurman did try to call Tony Dorsett the day after seeing his old roommate limp off the field with an ankle injury in the Monday night opener against the New York Giants.

No one answered.

Thurman never tried to call back.

"I'm just trying to sever that part of my life as quickly as possible," Thurman said earlier this week, seated on a chair in an office in his new home at Busch Stadium. "Don't get me wrong. I'm not trying to sever the friendships, just the old ties that binded us."

Dennis Thurman

Time, however, appears to running out on Dennis Thurman's resolve.

Monday night, Thurman, who now plays for St. Louis, will see his old friends face to face when the Cowboys visit the Cardinals. There is always time during pre-game warmups for some friendly chitchat.

"There will be a game to be played and I will have a job to do," Thurman said. "Very seldom do I talk to players on the other team before a game. I wouldn't want to do anything different just because we are playing the Cowboys. Maybe we'll talk after the game.

"But the best time would be after the season."

Dennis Thurman, who is 30 years old, says he was not hurt when Landry called him into his office after practice on the last Monday in August and told him he was being replaced by younger, faster legs.

"He must have had his reasons. Coach Landry is a very logical man," said Thurman, who adds he doesn't understand Landry's logic in this situation.

Thurman is quick to point out that although he had been relegated to second-string status after the 1984 season and had received most of his playing time only when the Cowboys went to their seven-back, 4-0 pass defense, he still intercepted 10 passes over the past two seasons.

He is quick to point out that the defensive backfield adopted its "Thurman's Thieves" nickname in his honor because he was the on-field and off-field spiritual leader of the group.

He is quick to point out that he had been told in the past that he was too small and too slow to play football and always has proven those prophets of doom incorrect.

Robinson, Camarata meet for GTCC title

From Staff Reports

Mary Robinson and Pam Camarata moved into the championship finals Wednesday in Green Tree Country Club's women's match play club championship golf tournament.

Crane boss turns white over Loboes

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

CRANE — If Crane's Rickey White looks a little worried this week, he probably is.

The sixth-year head coach of the Golden Cranes takes a 1-2 record and a host of injuries into Friday's non-conference contest with Monahans at 8 p.m., and what concerns him is how the Cranes will look on Saturday after the game.

"We've gotten beat around pretty good so far," White said, "I'm just hoping we can get some people well by the time district season rolls around."

The Cranes, playing in District 4-3A, a six-team district, won't have to worry about that until Oct. 10. For now, White is concerned with getting past the Loboes and their explosive offense and their physical defense.

The Loboes, 2-0, present White with one of West Texas' toughest challenges on offense: How to stop the unstoppable.

FULLBACK DANA Amos teams with tailback Charles Thompson in a backfield that White calls "the most explosive I've ever seen in Class 4A. Of course I haven't seen top-rated Lubbock Estacado either."

Area Football Feature

Amos, a second team all-stater and an all-West Texas pick last season, was the highlighted back in first-year coach Bren Holland's Wing T offense and a 1,200-yard rusher last season. But in two games this season, Thompson, a slick 150-pounder has shown up the more well-known Amos.

Thompson has carried 33 times for 317 yards in two games, while Amos has traveled 251 yards on 35 carries as the Loboes have exploded for 78 points in two games.

Seniors Jeremy Denman and Eric Bishop have split the quarterbacking duties, but "you can't tell a dime's worth of difference when they're in there." And with speedsters like Amos and Thompson in the backfield, Holland has kept the Loboes churning up yardage on the ground — to the tune of 400 yards a game.

"We're what you'd call an infantry regiment, not an air force," Holland says.

Perhaps the biggest question about this Monahans team is how they've managed to remain out of the Associated Press Top 10.

"I think we're still kind of an unknown quantity, we've only played two games," Holland said. "It's where you end the season that counts anyway."

THOUGH THE Cranes are beat up with injuries and their record is a disappointing 1-2, don't expect them to lie down when Holland brings the Loboes into town.

Crane has a few offensive weapons of its own. Despite a cast on his thumb that inhibits his ability to carry the football, tailback Gerald Mitchell could still be a major factor in Friday's game. Mitchell, touted as one of the best runners in the state, carried the ball just five times last week for 78 yards. But all came on the game-winning drive to the goal line, including a 61-yard gain that took the ball to the one-yard line.

And despite some injuries on the offensive line, the Cranes still boast some size and experience in front of quarterback Mark Allen.

Also a threat for Crane is young sophomore Sharod Vaden. Vaden has carried much of the load for White and the Cranes since Mitchell was hurt. But Vaden is just 14-years-old and White can't expect him to take the pounding of running into the Monahans defense 25-30 times a game.

Midland College netters take on professionals Sunday

From Staff Reports

Five Midland College tennis players will square off Sunday (Sept. 28) against five professionals at Midland Country Club. Matches begin at 1:30 p.m. and are open to the public.

"We think these will be fun to watch, since we know that MC coach Joe Williams has a powerhouse men's team this year. We older' players will have to rely more on skill and cunning against the younger guys," said Derek Edmonds, tennis pro at Midland Country Club and himself a former NJCAA All-American player for Midland College.

The professionals include Neil McClung, former MC coach and former pro at Midland Racquet Club; Rex Elmore, professional at Greentree Country Club in Midland; Joe Dan McBeth, pro at Midland Racquet Club; John Lanier, pro at Odessa Country Club; and Edmonds.

Matches will be best two of three sets with tie-breakers used in each set as necessary. Williams has two sophomore All-Americans back this year, plus an experienced sophomore transfer, and a couple of talented freshmen.

Jean Roussel, who won the conference and regional No. 1 singles titles and advanced to the NJCAA quarterfinals, heads the returning players. He played No. 3 doubles, winning conference and regional before losing in the national semifinals. Roussel is from Paris, France.

The other returning letterman is Eric Lingg of Tournai, Belgium, who won conference and regional No. 2 singles titles and advanced to the NJCAA quarterfinals. Lingg also took conference and regional No. 1 doubles crowns and made the national quarterfinals.

Lars Nordmark transferred this fall from Indiana State University, where he played No. 1 last year, winning the Missouri Valley Conference title. He's from Lidingo, Sweden. Johan Dysholm of Sundsvall, Sweden, is ranked among the top 15 among Swedish junior players. Bret Campoy graduated from Austin Crockett, transferring from Casa Grande, Arizona, high school where he won all his matches. He holds a win over Bill Sandlin, ranked in the top 10 in Texas.

Take the Clara Johnson Test.

In Alamance County, North Carolina, Honda lawn mowers are assembled from the wheels up. Then, each mower must pass rigid quality control standards before we ship it.

The final test is a critical performance check to ensure easy starting. We call it the Clara Johnson Test. At the end of the assembly line, each mower is started or it doesn't ship.

Come in and give the whole line of Honda mowers the Clara Johnson Test yourself. Each one will start easily, or it wouldn't be a Honda.

Chisox may ax Harrelson

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago White Sox operations chief Ken Harrelson will not return next season, a newspaper reported today.

The Chicago Tribune, citing unnamed sources, said Harrelson could learn of the decision today during a meeting with team owners Jerry Reinsdorf and Eddie Einhorn.

An official announcement was expected by the end of the week, the newspaper said.

"Jerry, Eddie and myself are going to talk about my situation," Harrelson told the Tribune. "Otherwise I have no comment."

Harrelson, whose official title is vice president-baseball operations, is the subject of growing dissatisfaction within the American League club, sources told the newspaper.

His boasts that the club's minor league system is in excellent shape have been met by skepticism from others within the organization who say some young players promoted to the major leagues are not being taught fundamentals, the Tribune said.

The White Sox are a half-game out of last place in the American League West after dropping a 4-2 decision Wednesday in Oakland.

Westlake kicker shines

One field goal shy of tying record

Associated Press

Austin Westlake's Andy Locke may have wanted to tackle his own teammate to prevent a touchdown last week.

With the final seconds ticking away, Locke already had kicked four field goals and was eager to try a national record-tying fifth three-pointer.

Westlake drove to the Austin Lanier one yard line before Westlake Coach Ebbie Neptune could call time with three seconds to play.

Locke trotted onto the field and kicked the field goal for a 15-0 Westlake victory and a spot on The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll.

"When you get close to a record like that, you had to let him go for it," Neptune said. "I think he was afraid we were going to score a touchdown."

LOCKE, A senior 190-pounder, kicked a 24-yarder in the first half and added kicks of 40, 20, 25 and 21 in the second half.

Locke missed two other field goal tries from 51 and 48 yards before finding the range.

"I knew I was working on some kind of a record," Locke said. "I never lost my confidence. I knew we had to keep on kicking field goals to win the game."

"We just couldn't get it in there (touchdowns) but Locke pulled us through each time," Neptune said. "He had a great game."

Locke also has averaged 46.4 yards on 12 punts this season but has shown the greatest improvement in his field goal kicking.

Locke is the second promising kicker at Westlake in recent years. Current Texas kicker Jeff Ward is a graduate of Westlake.

"Anytime we cross the 40, I'm thinking about kicking," Neptune said. "I can compare him favorably to Jeff. Andy has a stronger leg but he doesn' have the confidence yet that Jeff has."

Wichita Falls Hirschi safety Daryle Gould played offense for the first time and caught a 27-yard touchdown pass in a 21-0 victory over Denison, ranked No. 10 in 4A last week.

Gould also maintained his defensive duties with 15 tackles and two interceptions.

IN OTHER outstanding performances:

— Odessa Permian's Shawn Crow rushed 255 yards on 18 carries and scored on runs of 8, 18 and 65 yards in a 42-20 victory over Amarillo.

— Springlake Earth's Jerry Spencer gained 297 yards on 21 carries and had three touchdowns in a 59-0 rout of Motley County. Spencer has 562 yards on 42 carries this season.

— Bells linebacker James Duffee had 10 unassisted tackles and 7 assists in his team's 6-0 upset of Celeste, ranked 10th in Class 2A last week.

— Kingsville free safety Jimmy Filla intercepted two passes, recovered a fumble and contributed to 10 tackles in a 36-0 victory over Corpus Christi Moody.

— Willie Mack Garza of No. 1 2A state ranked Refugio caught only three passes but all were touchdown catches of 40, 52 and 48 yards in a 35-0 victory over Taft.

— LaMarque's Milton Frank gained 196 yards on 30 carries in a rugged 32-27 victory over state ranked Sugar Land Willowridge.

— Alvin's Craig McFarland completed a halfback pass to Shawn Huffman with 46 seconds to play that covered 80 yards for the winning touchdown in a 14-10 victory over Pasadena Dobie.

— Wharton's Anthony Ray rushed 198 yards on 31 carries to lead the Tigers to a 13-7 victory over Hempstead, which suffered its third straight loss.

— Ivory Lee Brown led Palestine to a 35-23 victory over state-ranked Tomball with 266 yards rushing on 18 carries and touchdown runs of 64, 33 and 53 yards.

— Flatonia's Donnie McMurry rushed 259 yards on 39 carries and scored four touchdowns in a 26-18 victory over Marion.

— Port Arthur Jefferson's Kary Vincent scored all four of his team's touchdowns in a 28-14 victory over Baytown Lee. Vincent rushed for touchdowns of 5, 15 and 2 yards and caught a 55-yard touchdown pass.

— Kirbyville senior running back Dexter Thomas rushed 30 times for 248 yards and had touchdown runs of 31 and 1 yard in a victory over Anahuac.

— Lumberton receiver Will Lytle caught nine passes for 154 yards in a 40-26 loss to Livingston.

— Wichita Falls Highs' Eric Chatman had his third straight 100-yard plus performance, gaining 188 yards on 17 carries and scoring touchdowns on runs of 35, 9 and 3 yards in a 55-8 victory over Fort Worth Paschal.

— Chillicothe's Michael McKnight had 229 yards rushing and four touchdowns in a 32-26 victory over Snyder, Okla., raising his total after three games to 744 yards and 13 touchdowns. The 5-11, 170-pound junior, who scored seven touchdowns and rushed for 369 yards the week before, scored on a 90-yard kickoff return and runs of 75, 23 and 12 yards against Snyder. He had two other kickoff returns of 45 and 40 yards on which he did not score.

Lewis retires after injury

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Green Bay Packers cornerback Tim Lewis huddled with doctors and remembered the case of Darryl Stingley, an NFL player paralyzed by a football injury several years ago.

"When I think about the Darryl Stingley-type cases, there's not much you would have to think about," Lewis said Wednesday after deciding to retire from pro football because of a neck injury.

Lewis jammed his neck in Monday night's nationally televised NFL game against the Chicago Bears.

"It has been determined that he should not play any more football, period," Coach Forrest Gregg said. "After examinations by our team doctors and doctors in Milwaukee, it was determined that it's a structural factor that makes it extremely dangerous for him to continue."

"I've got my arms and I can still move," Lewis said. "I think I cherish that more than the dollars and cents that can be made playing professional football. You've got to roll with the punches and get on with your life."

Teammate Tom Flynn said Lewis, who has a degree in economics, need not worry about finding an alternative career.

Lewis was injured as he lowered his head to tackle wide receiver Willie Gault in the second half of the Bears game. He was taken from the field atop a stretcher, and he temporarily lost feeling in his arms.

Gault said he was sorry about the outcome of the collision.

"My only real comment is that it's very unfortunate for Tim since he's my age," Gault said Wednesday "It's also unfortunate since he's a great individual, a great player. He wasn't a cheap-shot guy. He played the game clean, and he played the game the way it was supposed to be played. He always treated me with respect.

Legislation would put 'rigs to work, create jobs'

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

A state senator from Victoria who wants to move from the Senate to the Texas Railroad Commission has introduced legislation he says would put more drilling rigs back to work and create more jobs in the oil industry.

Democratic Sen. John Sharp, in a news conference at Midland Regional Airport Wednesday, said, "It is time for the State of Texas to stop taking our oil and gas industry for granted."

The Victoria Democrat said Texas has been treating the oil industry like "a reliable old milk cow that you don't treat until it's sick."

While he doesn't see the proposed legislation as a complete cure, he does believe it would provide some much-needed relief and create jobs for unemployed Texans.

Sharp said he and Rep. Stan Schlueter of Salado, who is chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, have formulated a measure during the special session that would grant oil and gas producers four-year exemptions on discovery wells and a two-year exemption on infield or extension wells drilled within six months after the enactment of the law.

He said he has introduced the legislation in the Senate and State Reps. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, and Tom Craddick, R-Midland, have introduced the exact same bill in the House.

Sharp said the proposal is comparable to legislation enacted in Louisiana except that the exemption "window" has been shortened from one year to six months.

The Victoria representative estimated the proposal could cost the state as much as $20 million in oil and gas severance taxes but, he said, "I believe our proposal possibly will produce as much gain to the general fund through increased drilling activity as we would lose in severance taxes. We are still looking at the numbers," he said.

Terming this "a time for bold incentives," Sharp said, "This proposal will be a first step toward finding incentives to encourage more drilling activity in Texas. If the numbers prove feasible, this can be incorporated in a possible tax bill or a separate bill," he said. "What is important is that we get rigs running and put Texans back to work."

Asked how many jobs he felt might be created if such legislation is enacted, Sharp said there is really no way to tell but he believes if even 100 people were put back to work it would be worthwhile. He added, however, that he expects the number would be far higher that that.

Sharp said the House Ways and Means Committee staff has been asked to study whether the proposal is feasible and to estimate its potential cost. If study shows the measure would be feasible and cost effective, he said, it will be added on as an amendment to whatever tax bill is sent from the House to the Senate.

Concerning the current state of the domestic oil industry, Sharp said, "The only thing that is going to solve the problem is when the price of oil gets at a level that can sustain American production."

Regarding those who don't want oil import fees because they don't want government controlling the price of oil, he said, "Governments do control the price of oil, it's just not our government. Seventy-nine percent of the oil produced in the world is produced, not by oil companies, but by governments, the governments of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Iran and Iraq," he said.

Sharp suggested the state ought to do for the oil and gas industry what has been done for the microelectronics industry in Austin, take the research and development funds of the majors, the big independents, the available funds at Texas A&M and the University of Texas and "put them together under one roof and do the research that's necessary" on tertiary and secondary recovery.

This would require two kinds of research, he said, the on-paper kind and the on-site drilling kind that might be done at UTPB because of its location in West Texas where there's more oil to recover that will require new methods.

Police say death still suspicious, witness won't talk

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midland Police are still investigating the suspicious shooting death of a Midland woman in June, and the detective in charge of the case said Wednesday the eyewitness to the shooting will not talk to police.

Det. Sgt. David Garcia said police are trying to solve the June 25 shooting of Christina St. John, 23. Garcia said Ms. St. John was shot in the temple following an argument with a man at his residence in the far northwest part of the city.

Garcia said the shooting occurred shortly before 11 p.m. He said according to the man's initial statement to police, the woman shot herself with his gun after the two had a violent argument. He told police he was attempting to take the injured woman to his car to take to the hospital when a cab arrived at the residence.

Police found a large packed suitcase and a paper sack on the driveway, apparently placed there by someone anticipating the taxi's arrival, Garcia said.

Garcia said Ms. St. John had called a taxi because she was "going to meet someone." He said she had just landed a job at a nursery in Lake Worth, Fla., and had talked fondly of the opportunity.

Garcia said there are "certain discrepancies" in the case that can't be cleared up as long as the man refuses to talk.

"He is the only eyewitness we have," Garcia said. "As far as I'm concerned, there are still a lot of unanswered questions that only he as an eyewitness can answer."

Garcia said the man retained an attorney, James Bobo of Odessa, the day after the shooting. Since his initial statement the night of the shooting, he has refused to talk to police, Garcia said.

But Bobo was critical of police, and said Garcia's case was too weak to merit indictment by the Midland County Grand Jury.

"He obviously does not have a case," Bobo said. "What he is trying to do, quite frankly, is make something out of nothing.

"If there was sufficient amount of evidence to believe there was a tryable case, then the grand jury would do it," he said.

Bobo said as long as police considered his client a prime suspect in a murder, he would not talk to them.

"He's talked to them once, and they should have asked whatever questions they were going to ask — he (Garcia) has looked at the case and there are a few things about it that he doesn't like. But that's tough."

Garcia said after interviews with people who had been with or talked to Ms. St. John just before the shooting, he is convinced she was not in a suicidal frame of mind.

"Based on that, and some other evidence we have we're not satisfied with the case," Garcia said. "As long as this case is assigned to me I'll keep it open."

Garcia said the Midland County District Attorney's office agrees with his assessment of the case.

"They agree there is something to the case because of the missing link which is the eyewitness — they agree that it needs further investigation," Garcia said.

District's relocation designed to save taxpayers money

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Midland's central taxing district is picking up and moving in hopes of saving taxpayers money, said Chief Appraiser Roland Wilkinson.

The Midland Central Appraisal District hopes its move to a new building will save the district between $12,000 to $15,000 a year, Wilkinson said.

"The whole purpose is to reduce the liability to the taxpayers of Midland County," Wilkinson said.

"If we can reduce the annual budget by $12,500 to $15,000, that ought to benefit all the taxing entities and taxpayers of Midland County."

The district may move to 1.89 acres at the corner of Woodcrest Drive and Andrews Highway and construct a new $450,000 building, Wilkinson said.

However, the taxing entity is also seeking a vacant one-to-two story building.

If an existing building is bought, the $150,000 lot would probably be sold, he said.

"We're looking at all available existing space that would be suitable for our needs.

"If we're going to own our own facility, we have to have access for the handicapped and elderly. It's going to require at least a ground floor area," he said.

The building also needs at least 50 parking spaces and additional spaces for the public.

The district will move out of the Dellwood Mall, 3303 West Illinois St., by next Sept. 30, when its seven-year lease runs out.

Dellwood Mall has proposed a 10-year lease at another space with 8,500 square feet for $62,050 a year.

But if the district continued to rent, it would pay $620,500 over the next 10 years.

The district entered into the mall lease in 1981 when rents were high during the boom and they have been paying $60,000 a year for rent at the mall, Wilkinson said.

"Every month we occupy this space we're throwing $5,000 out the window," he said.

If the district decides to construct a new building, they would pay $45,000 a year on a 10-year loan at a 5 percent interest rate, Wilkinson said.

"It was just a realization of what the real estate market is in Midland now. It's a buyer market now," Wilkinson said.

If the district chooses to construct a building it will be twice as large as the space the district is renting now.

The district is accepting bids on a 10,000-square-foot building at a lot on Andrews Highway. The space the district rents is 5,400 square feet.

Religious heads 'disappointed' on gambling issue

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Midland religious leaders said today they are disappointed with Gov. Mark White's action Wednesday night to allow the gambling issue to go to the voters.

"I'm dissapointed. I was hopeful the governor would veto the action of the House and Senate," said Dr. Daniel Vestal of First Baptist Church.

"I come from the perspective that pari-mutuel gambling is bad for the state of Texas, economically and morally. I'm disappointed the governor didn't recognize that and prevent the possibility of that happening," Vestal said.

White allowed a bill on horse and dog racing to become law by neither vetoing it nor signing it. Voters will decide the issue in November 1987.

Doug Parsons of the Golf Course Street Church of Christ said, "I feel like it's a cop-out on one hand, but it's a political decision.

"White's decision was strictly political. I think it shows a lack of moral courage. He gave in to political forces to establish his re-election credibility.

White said he opposed gambling and would vote against it, but he wanted Texans to be able to decide the issue.

"In the long run it will cost him more. If he's opposed he should have vetoed it," Parsons said.

The bill is being introduced to fill up the shrinking state coffers.

Jack Riley of St. Marks United Methodist Church, said "I think Texans may look at this as an easy way out of a financial dilemma and there is no easy way out.

"No party has gotten us into this financial pinch. The only way we'll get out of it is to do some re-evaluation of taxes," Riley said.

"I come from the perspective that pari-mutuel gambling is bad for the state of Texas, economically and morally."

— Dr. Daniel Vestal

Parson said he also didn't think the bill would solve the state's financial problems.

"In the long run there's just an 'X' amount of money and there's only certain discretionary funds people have to use.

"Those things will have to suffer in order for them to have more money to gamble. I don't follow the logic of it rasing more money," Parsons said.

Vestal said, "Even if you could prove it produced revenue for the state treasury, the bottom line is not revenue for the state treasury. There are more important considerations to take into account."

All three men agreed the vote will be controversial next November.

"I think it will be a close issue because we are looking for an easy way out. A lot of our people will think this is the easy way out. But there are probably enough conservative Christians in Texas to give it a good run for their money," Riley said.

Parsons said the bill will probably eventually pass.

"Generally in the liquor and gambling interests there is a lot of money involved and they pretty well get their way in the long run," he said.

House Bill 72 blamed for state's teacher loss

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Texas Classroom Teachers Association could not unconditionally support 1984 public school reform "because it tested our teachers," its president told Midland educators Wednesday.

"We've lost a lot of administrators across the state because of House Bill 72," Eva Jo Kasinger said.

What's sad, she said, is that "We are all classroom teachers, who don't make a lot of money and work long, hard hours. We make an investment in our future every day just by being in the classroom."

Ms. Kasinger told members of the Midland Classroom Teachers Association — meeting at Alamo Junior High School — that teachers will be tested again this year with the implementation of the teacher appraisal system.

However, she added that they shouldn't be concerned.

"I don't want you to worry about it, because we're all good teachers," she said.

Ms. Kasinger said the appraisal system "could be logical" if it was designed in such a way that teachers and supervisors could sit down and discuss strengths and weaknesses.

However, the self-appraisal instrument "is not logical, I think it's humorous," she said.

Ms. Kasinger said the instrument "is a classic example of a document devised for education that should have been revised before is was devised."

She suggested teachers copy verbatum the answers provided on the sample instrument by the Texas Education Agency.

Candidates relying on negative ads

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The bitter enemies keep attacking with bitter advertisments.

Incumbent Gov. Mark White and his challenger, former Republican Gov. Bill Clements, have aired a series of negative television ads so far, and more are coming.

This weekend, White will begin running a black-and-white ad with cowboys riding across the wild west looking for Clements' "secret plan." His most recent spot, which began Wednesday, shows a girl reciting the alphabet (White touts his education reforms) and later the same girl who cannot recite the ABCs (his attack on Clements' stand on education.)

Clements, meanwhile, has aired his share of negative ads, including one that starts today. It has a picture of White on the screen and asks: "What's up with Mark White? Well, school taxes are up, property taxes are up, gasoline taxes are up, franchise taxes are up, crime is up, tuition is up, car registration is up, driver's license fees are up, vehicle inspection fees are up, utility bills are up, state spending is up, the budget deficit is up, unemployment is up, small business failures are up..."

"Texas politics is pretty rough and tumble," said George Christian, a longtime political consultant and press aide to several governors and former President Lyndon B. Johnson. "If White is as far behind as the polls show, then his political advisors are right, he needs to be bringing out Clement's negatives.

"White, although his folks deny it, does rely too much on polls and he hasn't been a strong leader, and Clements is sure letting people know it," he said.

Clements has run advertisments that consistently portray White as a indecisive leader, while White has dug up old remarks from Clements that he hopes will portray the former governor as insensitive.

Army Air Base 'buzzes' with WASP reunion

By GAIL REDDEN

SWEETWATER (AP) — The only all-female Army Air Base in American history, located in Sweetwater during World War II, will again buzz with the activities of WASPs at their reunion beginning here today.

From 1942 to 1945, 2,000 Women Air Service Pilot trainees left their civilian lives to converge on Avenger Field under the leadership of a famous American flier, the late Jacqueline Cochran. The colonel in charge of the WASP made her mark in aviation history before the war as a racing pilot with a number of air records to her credit before and after the war.

Known during World War II as Cochran's Convent because it was off-limits to nearby male flying cadets, Avenger Field is located three miles northwest of downtown Sweetwater, and is now the home of Texas State Technical Institute and the City's Municipal Airport.

About 400 WASPs who earned their silver wings in this central West Texas town are expected to attend the reunion, to relive and reminisce on the days of their grand experiment.

WASP pilots flew 60 million miles in every airplane operated by the Army Air Force and 38 WASPs gave their lives in service for their country, says Vicki Christianson, Sweetwater Chamber of Commerce coordinator of local reunion publicity. Ms. Christianson says WASP trainees paid their way to Sweetwater, and if they "washed out," they paid their way home.

Another famous WASP was champion golfer Helen Dettweiler, one of 25,000 who sent applications to Ms. Cochran and one of the 1,830 who were accepted.

Over the next four days WASP veterans, guests and families will tour Dyess Air Force Base near Abilene, 38 miles of here, and be honored with a day at Sweetwater's Nolan County Museum, where an entire room is dedicated to WASP memorabilia.

Perched in the foyer center of the Nolan County Courthouse, downtown, is a statue of Fifinella, ready to greet the WASP vets for which she served as mascot. Designed in the fall of 1942 by Walt Disney, Fifi is a shapely female gremlin wearing a short red dress and red boots, gold tights and helmet and blue goggles with two bright blue wings spread behind her. It is said that Disney's model for Fifi was Marilyn Monroe.

Most of this week's activities will center in the Sears Building on the TSTI campus with coffees, barbeques, photo sessions and social hours as WASP veterans talk over old times.

As a salute to the WASP vets, the A-10 Solo Jet Demonstration Team from Louisiana's England Air Force Base will perform Saturday at the Municipal Airport. The jet's performance will culminate the "Salute to the WASPs of Avenger Field" at the annual Sweetwater Air Fair.

The U.S. Navy's Official Parachute Team, the "Leapfrogs," also will perform this weekend at the Air Fair.

WASP trainees served as military pilots in almost every capacity except combat. They were considered civilian government employees rather than military, and not until 1977 Congress pass a bill to award WASPs benefits as military veterans.

WASPS were required to be American citizens standing at least 60 (later raised to 64) inches tall, and to pass the high standards of the Forum Sixty-Four physical exam by a flight surgeon. They were required to have at least 200 (subsequently reduced to 35) hours of logged, certified flight time.

The training program required 400 hours of ground school with instruction in aircraft design and theory of flight, engines and propellers, mathematics, physics, navigation, instrument and instrument flying, weather, code, calisthenics and close order drill.

Training was rigorous, and many did wash out, but by V-E Day over 1,000 women had earned their wings and were providing many essential flying services for the Armed Forces.

WASP Winifred Wood, in her 1945 book, "We Were Wasps," described her arrival in 1942 in Sweetwater: "Mesquite bushes and flat stretches of wasteland showed me from the window of my crowded, day coach....there didn't seem to be any water, ever.

DEATHS

Almedia Gregg

ABILENE — Almedia Gregg, 88, of Abilene died Wednesday morning at an Abilene hospital following a lengthy illness.

Funeral services are scheduled for 3 p.m. today at the McCracken-Allen Chapel with the Rev. Paul Kenley and the Rev. Ira Harrison officiating.

Burial will be in the Elmwood Cemetery in Abilene.

McCracken-Allen Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Gregg was a resident of Clyde from 1930-1944. She formerly was a schoolteacher in Rogers and Tuscola. She retired in 1963 as a seamstress from T.S. Lankford and Sons and was a member of the Southwest Park Baptist Church in Abilene.

Pride of State Fair midway closes from liability insurance problems

By MICHELLE LOCKE

DALLAS (AP) — The Comet roller coaster, once the pride of the State Fair of Texas midway, has rumbled to a halt because of problems with obtaining liability insurance.

"It's kind of a sad day for me," says Bob Allen, 65, who began working as a ride operator in 1953.

Allen, who during fair time lives with his wife in a house beneath the old-fashioned wooden roller coaster, says it won't be quite the same when the fair opens Friday.

"I just love it," he said. "I've seen probably three generations come through here."

Allen said the ride was popular with high school seniors and he has seen teen-age riders return to the ride with children of their own.

"I've even seen them come back with grandkids," he said. "I'm going to miss that."

Fair spokeswoman Nancy Wiley said the ride was closed this year because of difficulty in getting liability insurance.

The fair's overall package requires that each individual ride have its own liability insurance and since the state fair owns the roller coaster, it was impossible to get the extra coverage.

"Premiums have shot up, but they've also changed the requirements. There's no way that we, the State Fair, can get the insurance to be that front-line carrier," said Ms. Wiley, the author of The Great State Fair of Texas, a history of the park.

She said state fair officials would reopen the ride if insurance became available.

Allen said he was working at a corny dog concession stand when the 59-foot-high roller coaster opened in 1947 with the flourish of a smashed bottle of champagne.

"It was like a homecoming," he said.

A ride on the Comet meant plunging down breath-taking drops and then rocketing around curves on a wild and bumpy course, Allen said.

"I guess it's because it's made out of wood. It just has a thrill about it. It's kind of hard to describe," he said.

Allen said he was fascinated by steam engines as he grew up in Nacogdoches, but by the time he was old enough to go to work, the steam engine had faded. Instead, he turned to the intricacies of the amusement park rides.

Allen began working on the Comet in 1953, under Paul Grissom, the original ride operator.

Grissom built a house underneath the roller coaster and lived there until his death in 1975. Allen said he lives in the house only while the fair is in operation.

He said the sound of the ride rattling above his head isn't a problem.

"It sounds like sweet music to me. It's just something I love," he said.

Another unusual feature of the Comet is the sheep that graze on the grass growing beneath the ride.

The Comet was built by Sammy Bert Sr., who came to the fairgrounds in 1919. Bert also invented a motor-driven snow cone machine and popularized the crushed ices at the fair. He sold the ride to fair officials in 1976, Ms. Wiley said.

Ex-Midlander gets comedy pair honorary recognition in New York

From Staff and Wire Reports

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. — Dick Van Dyke and Mary Tyler Moore, who made Rob and Laura Petrie New Rochelle's best-known residents, have been proclaimed honorary citizens of the city in Westchester County.

The action was prompted by a campaign begun by former New Rochelle resident Mark Lewis, who was living in Midland at the time. He now resides in San Antonio.

The New Rochelle City Council voted unanimously Tuesday night to bestow citizenship on Van Dyke, 60, and Miss Moore, 48. They played the Petries on the "Dick Van Dyke Show," the 1960s situation comedy about a TV comedy writer who commuted to Manhattan and his suburban wife.

The TV couple and their son lived on Bonnie Meadow Road, a real New Rochelle street.

Lewis, who grew up in New Rochelle, said that when he left his hometown, he found that everyone associated it with Rob and Laura.

Lewis proposed a monument to the Petries and suggested a giant ottoman, similar to one that Rob often tripped over during the show's opening credits. City officials didn't trip over each other to build the monument, but Mayor Leonard Paduano proposed making the two actors honorary citizens.

Moore Dyke

He said Tuesday night that he would like to have an official ceremony to formally bestow the citizenship, but that no arrangements had yet been made.

Police investigating theft of more than $1,400 in electronic goods from business

From Staff Reports

Midland Police are investigating the theft early today of more than $1,400 in electronic equipment from a local business.

According to reports, a 19-inch color television set valued at $265 and five videocassette recorders valued at approximately $1,150 were stolen from Balie Griffith Tire Co., #33 Dellwood Mall. The complainant, Jerry R. Lawrence, told police the items were taken sometime between 3:30 and 4:05 a.m. today.

A videocassette recorder was also among the items stolen from a residence in the 1600 block of E. Pecan Court, police said. A stereo valued at $1,500, videocassette recorder valued at $350, a 13-inch color television set valued at $300, a ladies' ruby and diamond ring valued at $200, and a plastic garbage can were reported stolen. Reports said the items were taken Wednesday sometime between 7:30 a.m. and 4:10 p.m.

A 13-inch color television set valued at $225, a cable box with remote control valued at $200, an AM-FM cassette stereo with turntable valued at $100, a speaker valued at $10 and $20 in groceries and cash were reported stolen from a residence in the 4200 block of Garfield Street, police said. According to reports, the items were taken Wednesday, sometime between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m.

In other reports, police have two suspects in custody in connection with the robbery and assault of a Midland man outside a local nightspot. Kent Porter, 24, told police he was assaulted and his wallet stolen about 12:30 a.m. today just after he left Garfield's, 4519 N. Garfield St. After talking to several witnesses in the area, police went to a nearby apartment complex and questioned two males about the incident.

One of the men was arrested for disorderly conduct and the other for public intoxication and outstanding traffic warrants. Both were taken to city jail, and police said they were still investigating the robbery.

The wallet was recovered.

Police Roundup

In two other burglaries reported to police, furniture valued at $1,900 and a bicycle valued at $465 were stolen.

The furniture, a love seat and sofa valued at $1,000, two end tables valued at $600, and a dinette set with four chairs valued at $300 were reported stolen from a storage building in the 3100 block of W. Industrial.

A 23-inch 10-speed bicycle valued at $465 was reported stolen from a residence in the 1200 block of Bedford Drive. The victim, Rip Hockey, told police the bike was taken sometime Wednesday.

Odessa man remains jailed on aggravated robbery charges

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 20-year-old man remained in municipal jail today in lieu of a total of $30,000 in bonds on two charges of aggravated robbery.

Rodney Darnell Hendrix, 505 Wabash, was arrested about 7:10 p.m. Tuesday by police on a warrant issue by Peace Justice Virgil Lumpee. Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly set bond for Hendrix at $15,000 on the aggravated robbery charge.

Hendrix is accused of the Aug. 14 armed robbery of the Depot convenience store-delicatessen, 2701 Kermit Highway, during which Anita Loy Johnson, 44, was shot once in the thigh. The robbery occurred about 10:15 p.m. Aug. 14, according to police spokesman Cpt. John McAhon.

Hendrix also has been charged with aggravated robbery in an earlier incident at a storage building in the 1300-block of West Loop 338, during which a gun was discharged.

McAhon said Jimmy Richardson was working in a shop in the storage building when he was accosted about 10 p.m. Aug. 14 by two men who demanded money. A scuffle ensued and a gun was discharged, Richardson told investigating officers. Bond for Hendrix on the second aggravated robbery charge was set at $15,000 by Municipal Judge Otis Moore.

McAhon said a second man, Arthur Donald Stephen, also has been charged with aggravated robbery in connection with the Depot robbery. Stephen, who was arrested Sept. 10, had bond set at $15,000 on the charge.

"White's a clever politician and we've got to stay on top of all this stuff he's trying to pull out," said Reggie Bashur, Clements spokesman. White's negative ads, Bashur said, are a sign that the governor is "desperate."

On the other side, Mark McKinnon, White's campaign spokesman, said, "This is not a love feast. We're not going to pull any punches. It's not patty-cake and we've known that all along."

Christian said candidates have run strong negative ad campaigns before but ususally focus on accomplishments and positives as election day nears. But, he said, many voters could be turned off by the negatives and decide to stay away from the polls.

"It's easy to run a negative campaign, for either one to do it," Christian said. "I think either one can be faulted for being error prone. Neither one of them is the best-loved politician in Texas."

Pilot tries to prove alcohol safe, economic fuel for aviation

WACO (AP) — Using an airplane named "Spirit of Independence," a Baylor Univerity mathematics professor planned to prove a point with a transAtlantic flight: Alcohol is a useful fuel that could help break dependency on oil.

"Flying across the Atlantic will show alcohol is a dependable and economic fuel for aviation," Dr. Max Shauck said.

"Alcohol burns cleaner and is cheap, abundant and renewable. In addition, this is a product that could stabilize grain process in the agriculture industry," he said last week on the eve of his scheduled departure on what was billed as the first flight across the Atlantic using alcohol fuel.

Shauck, 50, planned to fly a 6-seat, twin-engine Piper Azteck modified to fly on alcohol fuel. He outfitted the plane with survival gear in case of engine failure over the Atlantic.

John Russell, a fuels engineer with Southwest Research in San Antonio, was to accompany Shauck on a trip expected to last three to five days and cover 6,000 miles from Waco to Montgomery, Ala., Greensboro, N.C., and Long Island, N.Y., and from there to St. John's, Newfoundland, to Paris.

The "Spirit of Independence" can use blends of ethanol and methanol or can fly on 100 percent of either fuel, Shauck said.

He said he would make this flight on a 50-50 blend of methanol and ethanol for fuel. The flight marks the latest action by Shauck to publicize use of alcohol for aviation fuel.

In 1982, Shauck made a cross-country flight on alcohol fuel.

"There's been a campaign to discredit alcohol fuel by the oil companies," Shauck said. "That's because there's been a rise in the use of blends of gasoline with 10 percent ethanol."

While grain exporters have been trying to discredit the use of alcohol fuels, the farmer would benefit from market created from alcohol use, he said.

"The reasons we're doing this is to show that alcohol is not only reliable fuel but economical," Shauck said.

Alcohol fuel costs 75 to 85 cents a gallon, compared to $1.80 to $2 for aviation fuel, Shauck said.

State Rep. Bill Carter (R-Fort Worth), left, shows off the idea of Roy Championont at the State Capitol Monday. Championont wants to provide gold-plated license plates to motorists for $500 a year. The state would get $300.

Gold-plated auto plates a budget balancing plan

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston foundry owner is pushing a plan to help balance the state budget by selling gold-plated license plates to the ultra-vain for $500 a year.

"It's the ultimate, the gold card in license plates for the people who still have a couple of dollars to spend to help the state," said Roy Championont.

The solid bronze tag weighs two pounds and bears raised letters and numbers that are gold-plated. Under Championont's plan, the state would get $300 of the $500 annual fee for the plate. He would keep the rest.

For a second year, the plates would cost only $300. The price would go down to $200 for the third year. The purchaser would own and keep the plate after it expired.

Texas legislators currently are in a special session trying to combat a projected $2.8 billion deficit caused mainly by the sluggish oil economy.

"This is an idea that would make immediate money for the state of Texas when we need it so badly," Championont said Monday.

Rep. Bill Carter, R-Fort Worth, likes the idea and spent part of Monday introducing the foundry owner to lawmakers. Today, the two planned to discuss the idea with state highway officials.

"It's the ultimate, the gold card in license plates for the people who still have a couple of dollars to spend to help the state."
— Roy Championont

"It has a chance to have a lot of appeal for those that want the ultimate in vanity and exclusivity of being able to have something that nobody else has got," Carter said.

Championont said, "In the week I've spent on this, in talking to half a dozen people, about three of them already said they'd buy them."

"I went to several Mercedes places and they said a lot of their customers would do it," he added.

A related problem involves keeping the valuable plates on cars. Championont is working on that.

Cat food's cobalt required by cats

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. I have been feeding a stray cat that stays in my garage. I read the ingredients in cat food and they are sickening. One of them is cobalt. Isn't cobalt used in X-rays, and isn't this a cancer-causing substance? — B. Bernstein, Wheeling, Ill.

A. The director of pet food product development, L.G. Miller, Ph.D., of Calreco, Inc., manufacturers of Fancy Feast cat food, explains that there are nine forms of cobalt. Each of the nine forms has a different weight. The form of cobalt that is used in cat food has a mass of 59. The radioactive form of cobalt used in diagnostic procedures, such as X-rays, has a mass of 60. Cobalt-60 is indeed radioactive, but cobalt-59 is not. Cobalt-59 is the natural form of cobalt.

Cobalt-59 is required by the cat in its metabolism, and is a component of vitamin B-12. Cobalt is therefore added just in case the cat's diet becomes deficient in this vitamin.

Q. My family loves Top Ramen Noodles from Nissin Foods. I have often wondered about their nutritional value but have been unable to obtain any facts on this. Can you help? — Sheri Jordon, Security, Colo.

A. According to a nutrition analysis sent by Nissin Foods, a 3-ounce package of Top Ramen Noodles contains about 400 calories. Going on the basis of what the government says an individual requires every day, called the U.S. RDA (which, incidentally, is currently in the process of being revised), a 3-ounce package provides about 15 percent of protein, 4 percent of vitamin A, 2 percent of vitamin C, 30 percent of vitamin B-1, 10 percent of vitamin B-2, 15 percent of niacin, 2 percent of calcium and 15 percent iron.

Additionally, each package contains about a teaspoon of salt. This is 10 times the amount of salt you actually require for each day.

The package consists of both noodles and a powder with many ingredients, including monosodium glutamate (MSG), cottonseed or palm oil, sugar, citric acid and caramel coloring. The flavors are naturally derived — that is, from plant and animal sources as opposed to artificial sources.

In short, this is a highly processed, salty food. Anyone concerned about sodium intake should not make a daily habit of it.

Q. Could you please tell me what urea is? I have noticed urea in hand creams and other cosmetic items. — Annette Stuart, Upland, Calif.

A. Urea functions as an antiseptic and deodorizer. You can find it in shampoos, lotions, hand creams, roll-on deodorants, dentifrices, mouthwashes, hair colorings and various other drugstore products.

You can also find it in human urine, or the urine of any mammal. When you eat protein and it breaks down in your system, one of the end products is urea. Urea is produced in the liver and then carried by the blood to the kidneys, where the urea is removed from the blood and excreted in the urine.

This doesn't mean that the urea in your hand cream is made from urine. Rather, it's synthesized in a factory by combining carbon dioxide and ammonia, emerging as colorless, odorless crystals. Urea is also used, oddly enough, to "brown" baked goods such as pretzels. It has no known toxicity.

Urea's largest use is as a fertilizer, and in the manufacture of resins and plastics.

Q. Can you please tell me where my mother can buy 100 percent cotton quilts? She has looked from Florida to California with no luck. Hope you can help. — D. Horwath, Fresno, Calif.

A. Offhand I know of two sources. One of them is the woman who made my futon. Futon is the overall Japanese term for bedding. The futon I sleep on is constructed of a cotton batting to which some wool has been added, and it's covered with a thick muslin material.

This person will custom make all-cotton quilts to your specifications. If you are sensitive to chemicals of any kind, the muslin used is not chemically treated.

Write to Judith Jantz, 502 Bonnardel, Sebastopol, Calif. 95472.

Another source is Essential Alternatives, 38 Center Street, Rutland, Vt. 05701. In addition to cotton quilts they sell futons, bed frames, pillows, bolsters, comforters and mattress pads. Ask for their catalog.

BETTER BUSINESS

Autoline helpful

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Recently, Dean Determan, vice president of the Council of Better Business Bureaus, was a member of a panel before the American Bar Association's special committee on alternative dispute resolution. He pointed out:

- The BBB Autoline Program is the largest dispute settlement mechanism in the country in terms of budget, staff and case load.
- The average cost to the taxpayer for an action filed in civil court in the United States is $1,800; auto is free.
- In one week, the BBB system had more buy-backs of autos than ordered by the courts in the past three years.

Speaking of buy-backs, many consumers want to make use of the Texas Lemon Law. The following comparison may help in your decision which route to choose:

- TEXAS LEMON LAW: Consumer must show the Motor Vehicle Commission: that a defect in his vehicle breaches an express warranty and that the defect "substantially impairs the use and market value of the vehicle"; that the vehicle has been out of service for a total of 30 days during the warranty period or within one year of delivery; or the dealer has attempted to repair the defect four or more times during that same period.

Time required to complete the case: Right now it is taking the Texas Motor Vehicle seven months or longer to hear a case. Then the decision must be reviewed by the commission who may agree with the arbitrator's decision-recommendation or reduce the decision or deny relief to the consumer.

- BBB PROGRAM: Warranty issues on buy-back are basically the same as the Texas Lemon Law. However, the vehicle does not have to be out of service 30 days nor require four or more attempts to repair. Consumers can request a buy-back for any unresolved problem during the warranty period. Also, if the problem is a consent order problem, owner can request a buy-back, regardless of age or mileage. Time required to complete case: Warranty issues, 40 days; non-warranty issues, 60 days, consent order cases, 75 days. Decision of arbitrator is binding on manufacturer, not consumer.

If you think your auto problems are covered by the BBB Autoline Program, call 563-5264

Soft 'ice cream' stored in home freezer

By LINDA ANDERSON

When I was a kid, "going out to eat" meant going to the local hamburger shop, where we would crawl under the table, play with the buttons on the jukebox and in general embarrass our parents (there were four of us kids and only two parents — it's a wonder they ever survived).

If we were lucky, dad would buy each of us an ice cream cone — one of those soft vanilla swirled ice cream cones that start to melt almost before you get it to your mouth and taste like heaven is in your hand (and down your arm, if you don't eat fast).

General Foods has recently introduced Soft Swirl, a freezer dessert designed to bring home the taste and texture of soft ice cream. The usual adult, teen and children tasters checked out the product for taste, price and advertising accuracy. (Well, it's a tough job, but somebody has to do it!)

Soft Swirl comes in 32-fluid ounce boxes of eight "cones" each (each cone being four ounces, of course), and in flavors of chocolate, strawberry and vanilla. All eight cones can be bought in the same flavor, but our box was the variety pack with all three flavors. (And the cones aren't really cones, either. They are cone-shaped paper containers, so what you really get is nothing but the swirled dessert.)

Each 8-serving box costs $2.99, which means each cone costs about 38 cents. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

According to label advertising, Soft Swirl is an ice milk product which provides "the taste of soft ice cream right from your own freezer ... rich, creamy, smooth taste ..."

Nutrition label lists each cone as having 120 calories (except strawberry, which has 110), 3 g protein, between 18-22 g carbohydrate, 3 to 4g fat and 55-95 mg sodium.

As expected, the product didn't contain significant amounts of good, solid nutrition, but each cone is listed as containing 10 percent of the calcium and 8 percent of the riboflavin and the phosphorus suggested in the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance. Strawberry cone is even listed as containing 10 percent of the vitamin C suggested by the U.S. RDA.

Also as expected, the younger taste-testers loved Soft Swirl. They squeezed it up and smooched it around and had a fine time (and made a big mess, too). The teen was a bit more sceptical, however. She said it was too expensive and didn't taste enough like real soft ice cream should.

She may be right. Besides, taking an ice cream cone out of the freezer is not as much fun as going out and embarrassing your parents.

Researchers say bees use sun to navigate

United Press International

Honey bees use the sun to navigate, but how do they find their way on cloudy days?

If there is a tiny patch of blue sky somewhere visible, the bees can use the angle of polarized sunlight to work out where the sun is, according to two Swiss researchers, Samuel Rossel and Rudiger Wehner of the University of Zurich.

Rossel and Wehner said it's all in the bees compound eyes.

The scientists explained that each of the units making up the eye has a different sensitivity to the angle at which light is polarized, the way it scatters in the atmosphere. Once the bee finds where the pattern of polarization is brightest, it knows it is facing directly away from the sun.

Carefully read labels for information on fat, sodium

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

People who are trying to cut back on salt and fat in their diets should carefully read the labels on the frozen plate dinners and entrees they buy.

A recent study by the U.S. Department of Agriculture shows that store-bought frozen dinners and entrees have high levels of fat and sodium.

Sodium content ranged from 900 to 1164 milligrams in the five national brand products tested, while 100 to 3300 milligrams of sodium is estimated to be a safe and adequate daily intake for adults.

The fat content of frozen dinners included in the study ranged from 14 to 24 grams per serving for dinners and two to 16 grams per serving for the entrees. The lighter entrees contained two to five grams of fat per serving.

This amount of fat in frozen dinners and entrees represents a substantial part of the recommended 65 to 75 grams for persons consuming about 2000 calories a day.

Judging the nutritional adequacy of frozen plate dinners and entrees is no easy task, even with the help of nutrition labels. But it's especially important that people on low-sodium or low-fat diets make the effort. Consumers might use nutrition labels to make comparisons among the products.

Look for those that contain higher percentages of the Recommended Dietary Allowances for the most nutrients. Also look for products that contain fewer grams of fat, or a lower percentage of total calories as fat, and fewer milligrams of sodium.

When you buy a convenience product that is low in certain nutrients or higher in fat or sodium, you can compensate by adjusting what you eat during the rest of the day. Also compare the nutrient content of the frozen meal to the foods you typically eat.

If the convenience product contains about the same amount of meat, vegetable or fruit and rice or pasta you normally eat at a meal, it probably will make a similar nutritional contribution to your day's food intake.

Senses of taste, smell linked

WASHINGTON (UPI) — What you smell is often what you taste. If you hold your nose while eating or drinking chocolate or coffee, you may find it difficult to identify the flavor.

This and other information about the important "chemosenses" are contained in a "Fact Sheet on Smell and Taste Disorders" published by the National Institute on Neurological and Communicative Disorders.

The fact sheet reveals that the nerve cells responsible for the ability to smell are located in a tiny patch of tissue high up in the nose. The sense of smell is most accurate between the ages of 30 and 60, and after that, it begins to decline.

More than 10 million Americans have disorders of their chemical sensing systems, according to the publication, and these smell and taste losses have many causes, including dental problems, prolonged exposure to insecticides and other chemicals, seasonal allergies and certain medications.

Many people ignore chemosensory losses — or assume they are imaginary — and deprive themselves not only of the pleasure of tasting food but of an early warning system that alerts them to fires, poisonous foods and spoiled foods.

The fact sheet also reports that many smell and taste problems can be solved by eliminating or modifying the underlying cause. Anti-allergy drugs, for example, can sometimes improve smell and taste.

DEAR ABBY

Parents suffer son's jail sentence

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: From a Florida reader came the enclosed item, originally published in my column in 1972. Please read it and pay special attention to the last paragraph.

DEAR ABBY: Recently a 17-year-old Florida boy pleaded guilty to possessing hallucinogenic drugs. He had also been charged with violence toward a Miami Beach police officer.

Judge Alfonso Sepe sentenced the youth to one year in the county stockade and four years' probation. The comments of the judge so impressed me that I ordered the transcript from the court reporter so that I may read it to my own children.

Your column is so widely read I am sending you the "lecture" Judge Sepe gave that boy in the presence of the grieving parents. I hope you will publish it and give it the national forum I think it deserves. — MRS. A.A. CATES, MIAMI

DEAR MRS. CATES: Rarely do I devote an entire column to one letter, but I agree, this is worth it. Here it is:

Judge Sepe spoke directly to the youth and said: "Do you know who is going to serve that year? Not you, your mother and father will serve that year. That is what's wrong. THEY get sentenced. They get sentenced for a lifetime. You serve a year. Your body is in the stockade for a year, but their souls are tormented for a lifetime. Why? Because you are a selfish, spoiled boy, that's why.

"There is no punishment in the world that I could inflict upon you that could in any way compensate for what you are doing to your mother and father. I have not spent 5 cents raising you. I don't know you from Adam. But your mother and father have put their lives, their hearts, their sweat, their money and everything else they have into bringing you up. And now they have to sit in this courtroom and listen to a total stranger who had nothing to do with your upbringing scold you and put you in jail.

"This is at a time when phony kids your age are yelling, 'You adults have your alcohol, we want our drugs; you have polluted our water and our air, you have polluted this and that,' and all the rest of the garbage that comes out of your mouths. Meanwhile, you put yourselves above everybody else. I feel sorry for you.

"I want you to think of this for one year, and the reason why I say it: If you are sick, a doctor will treat you and he won't be on drugs. The lawyer who represents you won't be high on drugs, and the people in whose custody you'll be won't be on drugs. Your astronauts are not on drugs, and your president is not. And your engineers who build the bridges that you drive across and the tunnels that you drive through are not on drugs, and those who build the planes that you fly in and the cars that you drive are not. Neither are those who build the bathrooms that you stink up with your lousy, rotten drugs. None of them have been on drugs, and this is because of people like your mother and father.

"But in the world of the future the same may not be true. Teachers, doctors, lawyers, legislators — products of the new drug-oriented generation — may well be high as kites. You won't know whom to send your child to, or whom to trust your life to."

Sepe sighed and closed the case file. "Let's see what kind of world you leave to your children before you talk about the world that we left to ours."

Well, readers, did Judge Sepe have a crystal ball? Because recreational drugs are illegal, there are not accurate statistics. But it would appear that this country is facing a major drug problem of unprecedented proportions and that the judge's worst prophecies have been fulfilled.

The solution: If everyone swept his own doorstep, the whole world would be clean.

Supermarket customers list major shopping complaints

NEW YORK (AP) — Slow lines at the checkout counter and a shortage of parking facilities are two of the major complaints voiced by the nation's supermarket shoppers in a recent survey.

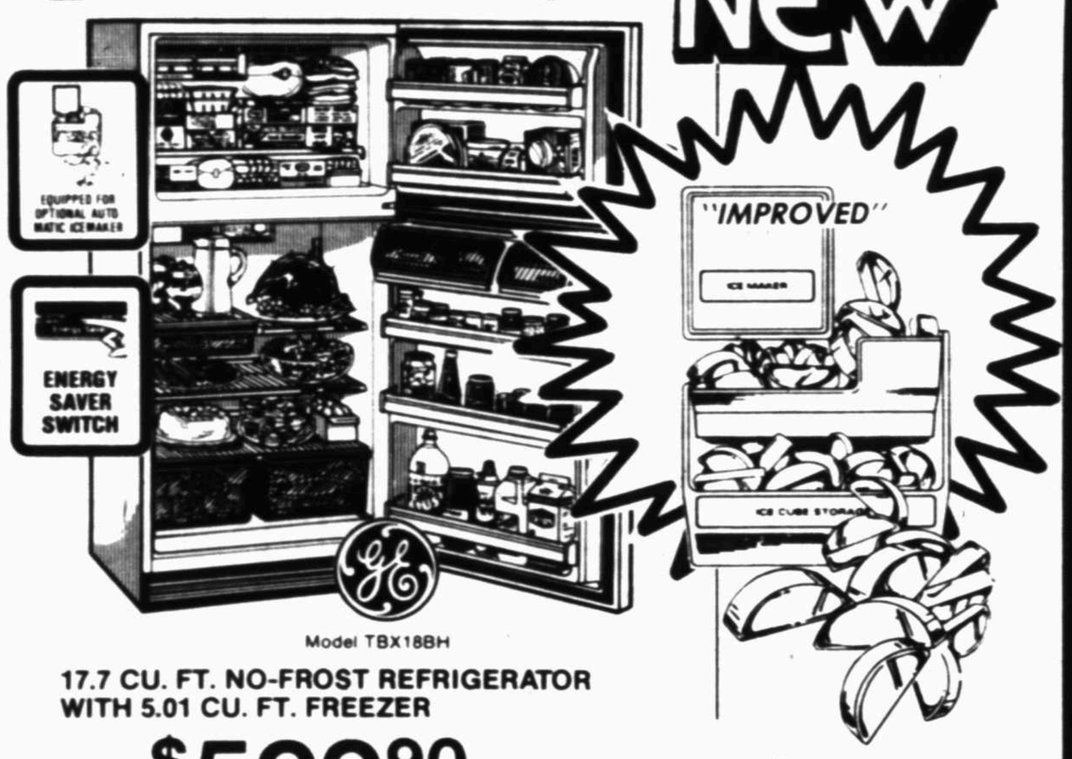

More than four of every 10 female shoppers under age 35 told the Howard-Marlboro Group they would seriously consider changing supermarkets permanently to get guaranteed faster checkouts.

Men under 35 were even more impatient with slow checkouts, with 48 percent reporting they would change stores if they could find one that would get them out faster.

A major annoyance to all shoppers is the lack of adequate parking facilities, according to the survey.

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar turned in a mixed performance in Europe early today. Dealers described trading as thin but volatile.

Gold bullion prices drifted lower in Europe after losing more than $5 an ounce in Hong Kong.

Currency traders in Frankfurt said technical factors mainly were responsible for the dollar's modest rise against the West German mark and most other major currencies.

One trader said the market was unsettled by confusion over a flurry of statements by U.S. officials concerning the dollar. General sentiment for the dollar, however, appears bullish in the near term, he said.

Another trader said many market participants were unwilling to take up strong positions ahead of multilateral economic talks scheduled in Washington this weekend.

Selected midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Wednesday:

—1.6620 Swiss francs, up from 1.6595

—6.7075 French francs, down from 6.7080

—2.3184 Dutch guilders, up from 2.3150

—1,415.50 Italian lire, up from 1,414.75

—1.38875 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3875

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $432.25 a troy ounce, down 25 cents from late Wednesday.

In Zurich, the metal was bid at $431.75, down from $433.

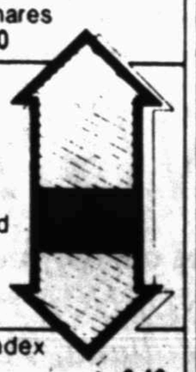

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $5.22, closing at a bid $428.54 from Wednesday's $433.76.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $5.89 an ounce, down from $5.92 late Wednesday.

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — Sales of new American-made automobiles rose 1.7 percent in mid-September from record levels last year, the nation's major manufacturers reported here Wednesday. Aggressive consumer incentive programs, in the form of below-market-rate financing, propelled the sales this year and in 1985.

Deliveries of 294,636 new cars, or 32,737 daily, topped last year's record sales of 289,582, or 32,176 daily. There were nine selling days in the Sept. 11-20 period both this year and last. The seasonally adjusted annual selling rate for cars was 11.5 million units, up from 11 million a year ago but down from the frantic 18.5 million pace set early this month after the incentive programs were announced.

Light-truck sales of 137,320 jumped 44.2 percent from the corresponding period a year ago, bringing total sales of light vehicles, including cars and light trucks, to 431,956, up 12.2 percent.

Jack V. Kirnan, an auto analyst with Kidder, Peabody & Co., said there was good news and bad news in Wednesday's report.

"Clearly the programs have been very successful in paring down inventories," he said, referring to the programs that offer 2.9 percent and lower annual financing rates.

Kirnan added that domestic manufacturers were likely to experience resistance in the marketplace over the higher prices on 1987 models. "I think the payback effect from this round of programs is going to be substantially stronger than from other programs because of the lower rates on '86 models and higher prices on the '87's," he said.

Cut-rate financing on 1986 model cars will squeeze the General Motors Corp.'s third-quarter earnings and steal some sales from the fourth quarter, but should not mean a fourth-quarter sales slump, according to Roger B. Smith, the company's chairman said.

G.M. reported Wednesday that its car sales in the mid-September period were about even with last year, up only 0.2 percent. The company delivered 157,534 new cars and 58,749 light trucks, a 38.6 percent jump from the period a year ago. G.M.'s share of the domestic market declined, however, to 53.4 percent, from 63 percent early this month.

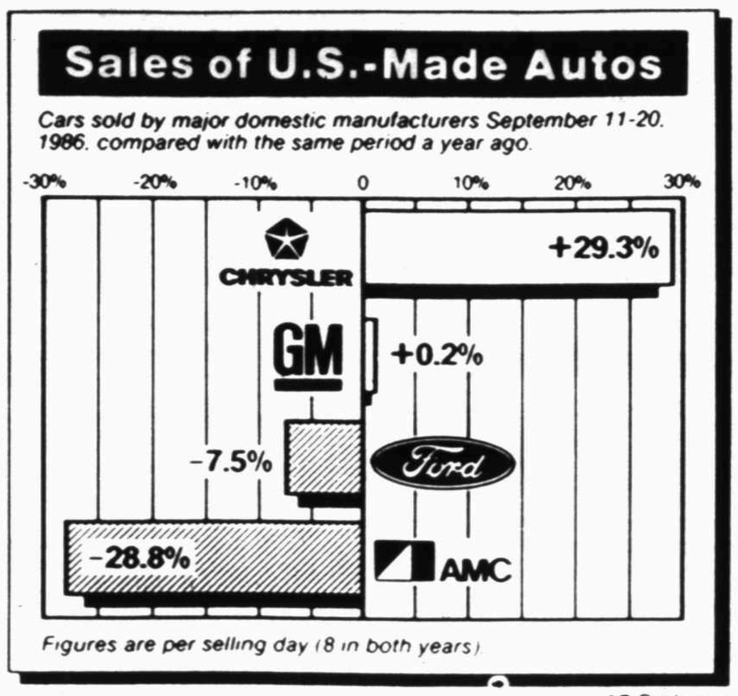

The Ford Motor Co. said its car sales of 77,224 sagged 7.5 percent from very strong sales last year. Light-truck sales, however, soared 72.7 percent, to 51,901. Ford has been very successful this year in promoting its light trucks.

Chrysler reported the most improvement in car sales among the Big Three with deliveries of 47,666, up 29.3 percent. Its sales of domestically produced light trucks rose 10.5 percent, to 15,778.

An estimate of sales by the American Motors Corp., which is offering short-term car loans with zero-rate financing, fell 28.8 percent from last year, to 2,580. Jeep sales almost doubled in the period, however, with estimated deliveries of 7,300, up 92.1 percent.

Volkswagen of America Inc. reported sales of 2,087 new cars, down 18.7 percent, while the American Honda Motor Co. said its car sales of 5,550 were 60 percent ahead of the 1985 period.

The Nissan Motor Corp., which recently resumed building cars at its plant in Smyrna, Tenn., said it sold 1,995 autos, down 16.1 percent from the 1985 period. Domestically produced truck sales by Nissan were also down, by 23.7 percent, to 3,592.

Chrysler Motors Chairman Lee Iacocca presents the Chrysler 1987 models to the media gathered at Texas Stadium in Irving Wednesday.

Iacocca says incentives will take toll on sales

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Chrysler Corp. chairman Lee Iacocca said his company broke a 19-year-old record with its best mid-September 10-day sales period ever, but he warns that the incentives fueling car sales will soon take their toll.

"It will be one hell of an interesting period between now and Oct. 10," Iacocca said Wednesday of the remaining incentives. "And then I would expect the showrooms won't have a soul in them on the morning of the 11th. Not one."

In late August, General Motors set off an industrywide round of car-loan incentives by offering 2.9 percent loan rates. The programs brought buyers out in droves and tipled the annualized sales rate.

"If there was any pent-up sales demand left, we sucked it up. It's gone," Iacocca said. "As for how long it's gone, I would imagine we'll get into Thanksgiving and Christmas and we'll all cry a little bit."

GM chairman Roger D. Smith expressed similar concerns in Detroit Tuesday, when he said the incentive program would squeeze the No. 1 automaker's earnings and cut into fourth-quarter sales.

Smith's next move is crucial to the smaller Chrysler and Ford Motor Co., said Iacocca, who was in Texas Stadium with Chrysler's 11 new 1987 models lined up in a football offense formation behind him.

"GM will decide it," he said. "If they have a continued problem and keep their production schedules as high as they have to meet that overexpanded capacity of theirs, there'll be hell to pay again."

Venezuela denies reports it's exceeding production quota

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — Energy Minister Arturo Hernandez Grisanti Wednesday denied published reports that Venezuela was exceeding its OPEC-assigned production quota.

Reports published in the local press said Saudi Arabia, in the current issue of the Middle East Economic Survey, had accused fellow OPEC member Venezuela of using inventories to boost exports above its production quota. MEES, an authoritative oil journal based in Nicosia, Cyprus, has close ties to the Saudis.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed to return to output quotas set in 1984 to implement its decision to cut production in September and October in an effort to reduce the global oil glut and bolster prices.

Hernandez Grisanti told reporters last week that Venezuela would observe its production quota of 1,555,000 barrels a day but might also use inventories to maintain its level of exports.

According to reports published internationally, Saudi Arabia allegedly threatened to do the same if Venezuela continued the practice.

Hernandez Grisanti on Wednesday said he "categorically denied" suggestions that Venezuela was not abiding by its production quota.

"OPEC does not have any export quotas, just production quotas, and Venezuela is complying with its production quota.

"Venezuela is complying strictly with its commitment to maintain a production quota of 1,555,000 barrels a day," he said in comments made at the presidential palace.

"Venezuela has acted correctly as a sovereign country to favor its own interests," Quiros Corradi said in the daily newspaper El Nacional.

Policy makers wrangling over value of dollar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government economic policy makers are at it again, wrangling over the dollar in a dispute that pits the Reagan administration against Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker.

The administration, led by Treasury Secretary James Baker, says it may be forced to push the value of the dollar lower unless America's major trading partners do more to pump up their economies and provide markets for U.S. exports.

But on Wednesday, Volcker said he felt that the dollar, which has lost about one-third of its value against some key currencies in the past 18 months, has declined far enough.

The central bank chief said any further drop could trigger serious economic problems such as renewed inflation in the United States and weaker, not stronger, growth overseas.

The dispute is popping into the open as Volcker and Baker prepare to meet their counterparts from Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada for critical meetings aimed at keeping the current worldwide economic recovery alive.

Baker's comments were aimed directly at officials in West Germany and Japan, who, the administration believes, have not done enough to promote growth in their countries.

The administration would like both countries to cut interest rates further as a way of stimulating their economies, in the belief that faster growth would provide more markets for American products and thus help to alleviate the huge U.S. trade deficit.

But Volcker, in congressional testimony Wednesday, warned that the United States must put its own economic house in order and should not rely on further declines in the value of the dollar to alleviate the trade deficit, which is expected to top $175 billion this year.

After Baker's comments last week, the dollar staged a two-day decline, falling to a five-year low against the West German mark. However, over the weekend, countries of the European Community said they would fight back, intervening to prop up the dollar in order to preserve their U.S. markets.

Asked Wednesday to assess the situation, Volcker said, "I don't want an overly depressed dollar either. If we rely solely on changes in the dollar to try to correct the (trade) situation, we are going to run into a lot of other problems."

Volcker said further declines in the dollar run the risk of igniting inflation in this country and also would depress economic growth in foreign countries where the United States is hoping to expand export sales.

"At this point, I am not sure any further adjustment (in the dollar's value) is necessary," he said. "I would put the emphasis on other policies."

Volcker said the United States must begin to depress domestic demand, through changes in government fiscal policy, including further reductions in the budget deficit, while promoting higher sales of American goods overseas.

"What we are going to have to do is consume less and export more," he said. Volcker conceded that such an effort would depress the standard of living in the United States, but he said painful adjustments were needed.

"We have been living in a false paradise here," he said. "We can't carry the economy along by expanding consumption forever at the expense of rising trade deficits. We have been lucky to get by with it for five years but we are not going to get by with it much longer."

An administration official, briefing reporters on condition that he not be identified, sought to minimize any difference between Volcker and the administration.

"I don't think there is any real difference between (Secretary Baker) and Chairman Volcker on this," he said, noting that both the administration and Volcker have called on Japan and West Germany to do more to promote domestic growth.

But the official, unlike Volcker, did not state that he believed the dollar had fallen enough or that a further drop would risk igniting inflation.

Volcker and Baker disagreed earlier this year on whether the dollar needed to decline further, although both men later insisted that their positions were not as far apart as had been portrayed.

The finance ministers and central bank leaders of the top industrial countries are scheduled to meet Friday and Saturday in Washington before the start of the annual meetings of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund.

Inman takes job as head of Westmark

DALLAS (AP) — Adm. Bobby R. Inman, who said earlier he is resigning as chief of the MCC research consortium, says he will become chairman of the board of Westmark Systems Inc., a new Texas-based defense industry holding company.

Inman will become the company's chief executive officer on Jan. 1, when his term expires as president and chief executive officer of Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. in Austin.

"I found Westmark a unique opportunity to build a company dedicated to the integrity, quality and outstanding performance so critical to America's future," Inman, 55, said Wednesday.

Westmark Systems is a privately owned company. Mason Best Co., a Texas-based merchant banking company founded by Elvis L. Mason and Randy Best, is the sponsor and principal shareholder.

ALLEN E. HOWLAND

Do Not Go Gentle into that Good 'byte'

I'm feeling a lot of sympathy for the bulk of American goods created over the past decade or so. The empathy comes from my newly developed first-hand experience with planned obsolescence.

Not yet 30 — but getting there awfully quick — I feel like a founding member of a New Lost Generation.

Nothing so grand as the Lost Generation of Gertrude Stein, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Ernest Hemingway partying the 1920s away in Europe, but a mundane group that came along a little too late to be mainstream baby boomers, but who got here a little too early for the vaunted computer education revolution in our schools.

Alas, I was hit squarely in the face with the consequences of not being a member of the "computer literate" generation on my recent excursion into shopping for a computer.

As a relatively informed human, I felt reasonably comfortable with my decision to test the waters of personal computing for myself. Boy, was I in for some eye-opening surprises!

Computer sales folks, as helpful as they may try to be, don't speak a language that in any way resembles English. It's all 'Mega RAM hard-drives and floppy DOS default commands.'

To the untrained ear, it might as well be Aida sung in its native Italian by Alvin and the Chipmunks.

Not yet dissuaded from my pursuit of my own piece of the computing rock, I sat down with a knowledgeable and helpful young lady who, with even doses of hand-holding and spoon-feeding, managed to figure out why I even started looking in the first place, and what might best suit my humble needs.

THE EASIEST WAY to turn this 'shrewd shopper' off is to try to sell me more than I really have any need for. My personal Compu-Sacajewea guided me through the complex process of selecting a system, only after determining my intenteded uses and then making suggestions based on them.

When she said, "Well, for word processing and basic computing, you really don't need color capabilities," it was music to my ears, and my wallet.

What a refreshing change from, "But for only another $899, you can get this state-of-the-art, top-of-the-line 20-color processor and printer that lets lets you play video games in 3-D with stereo sound," or something equally preposterous.

From that moment on, I was hooked. She carefully steered me around the landmines of $500 software systems I couldn't learn how to use in my lifetime, but explained the shortcomings and limitations of the cheaper systems available.

She explained the value of a "surge protector" and "static insulators" and the need for "double sided, dual-density floppy diskettes," all in language I could understand.

Within the hour, I had made numerous decisions about system configuration, software and peripherals (that's computerese for a printer and a modem, which allows the computer to hook up to a phone line).

The amazing part about all of it was that I felt comfortable with my decisions, and when I got home — although considerably lighter in the wallet — I didn't feel a minute of buyer's remorse.

NOT EVEN AFTER struggling three days trying to figure out why my computer didn't want to talk to the Reporter-Telegram computer.

Not even after spending the better part of a half hour trying to break out of a loop of commands that were getting me nowhere fast, interrupted only by intermittent messages that "there is not sufficient available memory storage to create a new word processing file," was enough to make me regret the purchase.

I've regularly cursed my lacking education and understanding of computer logic, but not enough to give up.

I'll keep struggling along, making it work and understanding it on my own terms, but I'll continue to owe a debt of gratitude to a salesperson, patient enough and skilled enough at her job to put the customer's needs ahead of making a buck's commission.

It's like Tennessee Williams' Blanche duBois said, "I've always depended on the kindness of strangers."

OIL & GAS REPORT

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Field producer flows 483 barrels

From Staff Reports

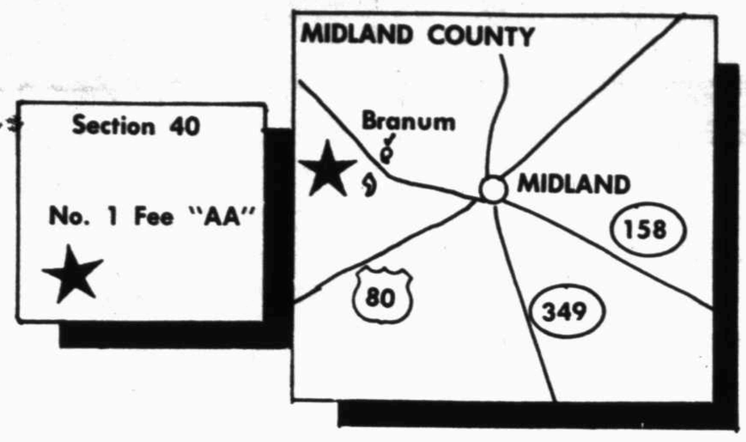

BARBARA FASKEN has added a new Fusselman producer to the Branum field of Midland County with completion of the No. 1 Fee "AA".

On potential test, the well flowed 483 barrels of 49.9 gravity crude, 797 Mcfd and no water on an 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 850 psi. Production is from perforations 12,684 to 12,777 ft., which had been acidized with 17,350 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 400,000 gallons of gel. Gas-oil ratio is 1,650:1.

Drilled to 13,310 ft., the well was plugged back to 13,192 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 10,055 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,894 ft., include the Devonian at 11,943 ft., Fusselman at 12,679, Montoya at 12,794, Simpson at 12,974, and the Ellenburger at 13,252 ft. Pay was topped at 12,684 ft.

Location is 800 ft. from south and 467 ft. from east lines of Section 21, Block 40, T-1-S, T&P survey, five miles southwest of Midland.

Glasscock producer flows 227 barrels oil

The Dewey Lake (Wolfcamp) field of Glasscock County gained a new producer as TERRA RESOURCES, INC. completed the No. 2 Lois Blalock in the field.

The well was tested to flow 227 barrels of 42 gravity crude, 247 Mcfd and two barrels of water on an 11/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 590 psi. Production is from perforations 8,310 to 8,400 ft., which had been acidized with 10,000 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 11,100 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 8,478 ft. Pay was topped at 8,300 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from east and 1,320 ft. from south lines of Section 7, Block 35, T-1-S, T&P survey, 13 miles northwest of Garden City.

Dollarhide field gains two new producers

The Dollarhide (Devonian) field of Andrews County gained two new producers as UNION OIL CO. OF CALFORNIA continues activity in the Dollarhide Unit.

The No. 5608D Dollarhide Unit was finaled to pump 110 barrels of 37.9 gravity crude, 109 Mcfd and 367 barrels of water from perforations 8,082 to 8,252 ft.

Union Oil also completed the No. 1101D Dollarhide Unit to pump 17 barrels of 39.7 gravity crude, 16 Mcfd and 389 barrels of water from perforations 7,888 to 8,132 ft.

Andrews strike pumps five barrels crude oil

LBJ OIL & GAS, INC. has completed a modest new Wolfcamp producer in the Hutex (Dean) field of Andrews County.

The No. 1 University Lands was potentialed to pump five barrels of 34.2 gravity crude, one Mcfd and 140 barrels of water from perforations 9,846 to 9,857 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of NeFe acid and fractured with 750 gallons of frac. Gas-oil ratio is 9:1.

Scheduled as a 10,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,000 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 9,980 ft.

The well topped the Spraberry-Dean at 9,828 ft., and the Wolfcamp at 9,846 ft. on ground elevation of 2,983 ft. Pay was topped at 9,846 ft.

Location is 2,000 ft. from south and 660 ft. from east lines of Section 8, Block 7, ULS survey, 18 miles northwest of Andrews.

Exxon completes four wells in Means field

EXXON CORP., Midland, has completed four new wells in the Means field of Andrews County, all three in the Means San Andres Unit.

The No. 1756 Means San Andres Unit was potentialed to pump 325 barrels of 29 gravity crude, 236.9 Mcfd and 149 barrels of water from perforations 4,332 to 4,500 ft.

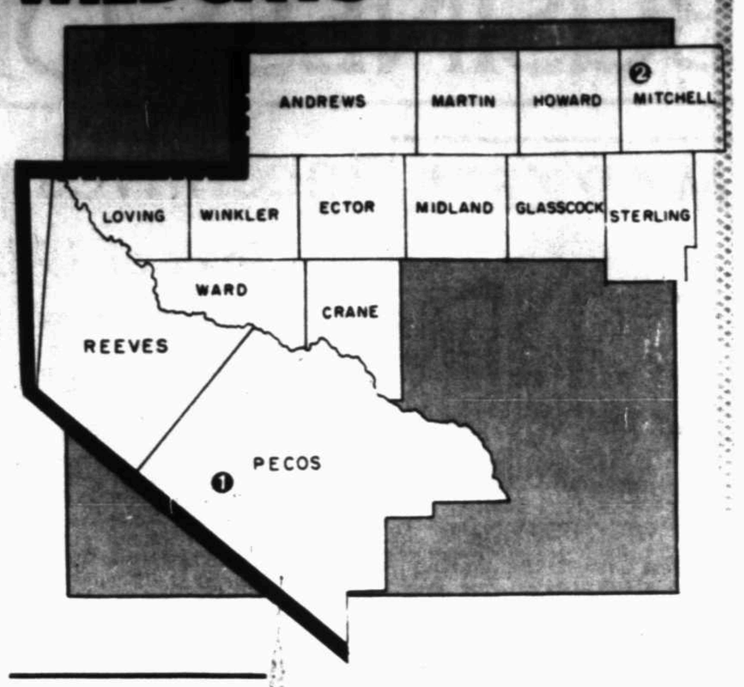

Exxon finaled the No. 1556 Means San Andres Unit to pump 314 barrels of 29 gravity crude, 161.3 Mcfd and 491 barrels of water from perforations 4,305 to 4,600 ft.

On potential test, the No. 1856 Means San Andres Unit pumped 103 barrels of 29 gravity crude, 115.9 Mcfd and 359 barrels of water from perforations 4,360 to 4,559 ft.

The fourth, the No. 2156 Means San Andres Unit, was completed to pump 49 barrels of 29 gravity crude, 71.3 Mcfd and 489 barrels of water from perforations 4,351 to 4,562 ft.

The first two are located in Section 8, and the remainder are located in Section 13 of Block A-35, PSL survey.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Mitchell, Natural settle suit out of court

THE WOODLANDS (SWN) — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. and Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America announced that a lawsuit filed earlier this month by Mitchell has been settled.

The companies stated that their agreement "was a mutually satisfactory resolution of the litigation, in light of the difficult and currently unpredictable environment in the oil and gas industry." In addition, the companies said that a number of outstanding operating issues were resolved.

The settlement agreement involves Mitchell's gas production in the Wise County area of Texas. The gas is gathered by Natural and transported to and sold in the Chicago area.

Shell suspends Nova Scotia drilling program

DARTMOUTH, Nova Scotia (UPI) — Shell Canada Ltd. says it will halt east coast offshore exploration because of depressed petroleum prices, leaving only one operator still with an active drilling program off Nova Scotia.

Shell said it would phase out operations in Dartmouth and Halifax in the next few months, after completing its last offshore well, despite significant finds of natural gas.

Shell has spent the Canadian equivalent of $530 million drilling 63 wells off Nova Scotia, a small Canadian province east of Maine. A spokesman said Shell has discovered reserves totaling about 1.5 trillion cubic feet of natural gas in three finds, all in the same general area around Sable Island on what is known as the Scotia Shelf.

Hunt Oil to build Arab Republic pipeline

Hunt Oil Co., Dallas, will provide for construction of a 430-kilometer pipeline from the Alif oil field in the Yemen Arab Republic to Ras Isa near the Red Sea port of Salif.

The contract was signed by Yemen Hunt Oil Co. and a consortium of companies including: Consolidated Contractors International Co. of Athens, Greece; Saipem of Miliano, Italy; and Mannesmann Anlagenbau Aktiengesellschaft of Dusseldorf, West Germany.

Texas Eastern, Norton finalize joint venture

WORCESTER, Mass — Texas Eastern Corp. and Norton Co. have completed a previously reported agreement to form a 50/50 joint venture between Texas Eastern directional drilling subsidiary Eastman Whipstock, Inc. and the petroleum drilling products and measurement-while-drilling business units of Norton, subsidiary of Norton Christensen, Inc.

Baker signs agreement with Wyoming company

Baker Tubular Services, Inc., has signed a manufacturing and service agreement with Grey-Mak Pipe, Inc. of Casper, Wyoming.

The agreement provides for Baker to supply, from Grey-Mak's facility, all of the Baker tubing and liner threading product line up to seven inches in diameter for customers in the Rocky Mountain drilling and producing area.

Texaco consortium reports Angolan find

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — An international consortium led by Texaco has made a new discovery of crude oil in a wildcat well off the northwest coast of Angola.

The wildcat, Cavala-1, located 17 miles offshore on a one-million acre tract in Block 2, flowed at an average rate of 2,674 barrels per day of 30.9 API gravity crude oil through a 3/4 inch choke from a Cretaceous dolomite reservoir below 8,200 ft. The well was drilled to a total depth of 9,655 feet in 96 feet of water.

Firefighters rush to quell Mexican oil well blaze

FRONTERA, Mexico, (UPI) — Dozens of oil emergency workers fought to control a 100-foot-high raging fire in an inland oil well that exploded over the weekend just as the new well was about to be capped.

No victims were reported in the explosion and ensuing blaze.

A spokesman for Petroleo Mexicanos, the state oil monopoly known as Pemex, said high winds have fueled the 100-foot-high fire in the well, which exploded while perforation tubes were being withdrawn.

The well is located near Frontera, 420 miles east of Mexico City, in the state of Tabasco, located on the crook of the Yucatan peninsula.

The Aguila Co., a private firm in charge of drilling, has not reported estimated material damage at Luna II.

Army soldiers and Pemex security men have cordoned off the well on unpopulated pasture land in the petroleum-rich state of Tabasco on the Caribbean coast. Reporters have not been allowed near area.

The explosion Saturday is the second fire that Pemex has suffered in the region this year. In February a gas leak caught fire in the Cactus petrochemical plant. No victims were reported.

Crude oil pollutes south Texas beach

FREEPORT, Texas (UPI) — U.S. Coast Guard officials continue to look for the source of about 500 gallons of heavy crude oil that washed ashore in Matagorda County.

"We're continuing our investigation, trying to locate the source of the pollution," said Coast Guard Lt. Bill Burns. "It's still suspected of being a tanker lightering offshore. But we wont find that information out for several days.

"There was no oil in the water as of our last two overflights. All the oil has impacted the beach that's going to impact. We anticipate ... that less than 500 gallons was spilled and landed on the beach."

The crude oil washed ashore Tuesday in patches and globs along 6 miles of Sargent's Beach near an environmentally sensitive area of the southeast Texas coast west of Freeport, but east of the mouth of the Colorado River.

The Coast Guard, which classified the spill as minor, was trying to determine the source of the oil and was consulting environmental and state officials about whether to clean up the crude and possibly damage the area's vulnerable ecology, or to leave the gooey substance alone.

"There's a large number of biologists and environmental planning groups that recommend we do not go onto the isolated area and do cleanup," Burns said. "The make up is light clay with sand and shell on top. If we were to remove the oil, that would require us to shovel up this sand and shell mixture, exposing the soft clay, which most probably would cause massive erosion."

Such erosion would allow salt water to intrude into sensitive estuaries and possibly into Matagorda Bay and the San Bernard National Wildlife Refuge.

Officials have found no evidence of fish or birds harmed by the oil.

At least four large tankers have transferred crude onto smaller vessels in the area in the past few days, Burns said. Federal law requires notification of the Coast Guard when such a spill occurs.

Business specialist thrives on corporate adversity

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Bert Wallace is at his best when businesses are at their worst. In fact, his career thrives on adversity in the corporate arena.

Wallace is a "turnaround specialist" whose Atlanta-based consulting firm has transformed a litany of businesses from skid row candidates to money-making ventures.

Mostly, however, he is the quintessential businessman with a keen sense of logic and a lust for entrepreneurial challenges.

"Businesses just aren't that different," said Wallace, who has spent the last year in New Orleans helping the world's largest Ramada Inn recover from Chapter 11.

"I like business. I like doing it. I like reading about it. I breathe and eat business. I've had a really fun, interesting business life."

He credits much of his success to mentor John Goodwin of Dallas, with whom Wallace worked at Lederle Laboratories, a division of American Cyanamid Co. of Pearl River, N.Y.

Wallace characterizes Goodwin as "a great manager. Somehow he got me interested in being an executive."

The resume of Wallace's career reads like a compilation of rags-to-riches business stories.

Since his 1957 graduation with a business degree from Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Wallace advanced from salesman for Lederle to president and director of Racquet Clubs of America Inc.

After taking over that ailing company he supervised construction of tennis facilities across the nation, acquired two corporations and produced a $300,000 profit in the company's fourth operating year.

He also served as a consultant for business development, marketing, sales and operations for a variety of other concerns, including a position as special project representative to the commissioner of the American Basketball Association and special representative to the Seattle Supersonics.

He went on to serve as president of Big Canoe Corp., a 7,000-acre residential and resort community in Georgia. The development was floundering when he took over in 1977 and in just two years the business had made a $1 million improvement, the first positive cash flow in its history.

In his first year as president, he reduced personnel by a third, overall expenses by $500,000 and increased total real estate sales by 300 percent.

He says success in business is adhering to the basics.

"I like to break everything down to its simplest part," Wallace says. "(Success) is no mystery. You work hard. You work 14 to 15 hours a day. You never leave it. You stir up things every day and you don't ever let anybody rest."

A key ingredient to the success of any venture, he says, is establishing a line of communications between top management and all levels of a company's employees.

"It's people that make things go," he says. "You've got to find the eagles — they're always there. You've got to listen to the employees. They know the business."

Part of the trick to raising sinking businesses out of red ink is to restructure not only the financial operation but the thinking of the employees and management, Wallace said.

"People (involved in failing businesses) are used to losing," he says. "It's the same thing with Vince Lombardi. It's the same thing with (Coach) Jim Mora and the (New Orleans) Saints. They're used to losing."

To turn a faltering business around, a turnaround specialist has to get the "team" on a positive track and educate them about the logical way to force profit and loss problems down as far as they go, he said.

Beaumont entrepreneurs have everything covered

NAVASOTA, Texas (AP) — When two Beaumont entrepreneurs say they have everything covered, they are probably talking about the furniture in your living room.

Tom Combs and Ben Walker have just bought Sorrell Manufacturing, a Navasota furniture manufacturing company that they hope to turn into a statewide business, using a unique public-private partnership for the financing.

Now called Sorrell of Texas, the company makes new furniture for retail stores such as Star and Gallery in Houston and Howell's in Beaumont and Port Arthur.

"We deal strictly in new furniture, sofas, loveseats and chairs and ottomans with no reupholstry or factory sales," Combs said. The two partners drew on their business and government experience to combine the public-private funding with their investment to buy the company.

Combs, 36, had been a Beaumont city councilman from 1978-82 and had worked with the Beaumont Chamber of Commerce and as an associate with the John Gray Institute. Walker, 23, was a business major at Baylor University who returned to Beaumont after graduation.

This is the second venture for the two partners. The first was the creation of Spindletop Property Services, a parking lot and street sweeping company, last fall.

When Walker went to talk to Combs about finding a job, they decided to combine their talents to start some businesses. "I said to myself 'This guy is going to make somebody some money,' and it might as well be me," Combs said.

When they became partners last September, Sorrell was for sale. Combs said he had wanted to get back into the manufacturing business after working as general manager of two Beaumont firms early in his career.

The men talked about the purchase but did not start working on it until January when they contacted the owner, Jack Waldman. Then they began working on the financing.

Waldman provided seller financing for the $750,000 project while Combs and Walker contributed a $50,000 down payment. The two also received a small loan from the First National Bank of Navasota, which provided some working capital, and a $290,000 loan from the city. The city got the $290,000 from an Economic Development Grant from the Texas Department of Community Affairs.

"You can't do a deal now like you would have five years ago," Combs said. "It's hard. Cash is just too tight." Combs said they had to make the deal fit the state grant program because the financing had to work or the purchase could not go through.

Both men said they were impressed with the enthusiasm and helpfulness of the city and bankers in Navasota. "They were really helpful because it looked like we would come in and create jobs for the people," Combs said. "They were concerned about the general welfare of the community."

Gregg Barfield, director of the Midland Minor Emergency Centers, displays the Medical Cash Card, which is intended specifically for medical services.

Medical credit card available in Midland

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Commercials for American Express, Mastercard and Visa show the card being used to buy gourmet meals, exotic trips and other luxuries. There's a new credit card that Gregg Barfield, director of the Midland Minor Emergency Centers hopes customers will use to pay for medical services.

"This is just like any other credit card, but it's special because it can be used in emergencies, especially if you have a family," Barfield says of the Medical Cash Card. "Suppose your son breaks his arm. That can cost $100 or more, and if you didn't have the cash, you could use the card and see the doctor right away."

He states that "people who have Visa or Mastercards don't like to use them for medical purposes. For one thing, medical costs are high, and they might be near their limit. And, they don't think of using Visa anywhere but restaurants or stores. This card gives you a convenient way to pay for medical services or prescriptions."

According to Barfield, the card is an especially good idea in light of the current depressed economy. "If you've lost your job or your benefits and need medical help, the card can be an alternative."

The concept was created by a Dallas-based company and is financed by BancOhio National Bank of Columbus, Ohio. Individuals can get one of two cards: a red one, which can be used only at the place it's issued, such as Midland Minor Emergency Clinic. Or there's a green card, which can be used anywhere it's accepted, such as Allen's Pharmacy and Boyd's Chiropractic Center. "If you have a red card for a year, you'll automatically receive a green card," he says. Barfield says he's been very busy trying to form a network of doctors and pharmacies that cardholders can use.

There's also a special card that a company can get, where the company will take care of the bill. "It's a benefit to the employees, just like health insurance. It can be better than insurance, because you pay only when you use it. There's no insurance benefits."

The card can be used to satisfy the insurance deductible or to pay the percentage the insurance won't pay, according to Barfield. Cardholders have three months to pay five percent of the bill or $10, whichever is higher, then pay out the balance monthly.

"You can get instant credit," Barfield says. "You come into the clinic, fill out an application, we'll call and get a number right away. You won't have to wait to see the doctor, and you'll get the card in the mail later."

He notes that the concept is also convenient for doctors, since BancOhio handles credit checks, billing and collecting. "It's just like cash to the doctors. They send in the slips and get reimbursed. They don't have to pay for the supplies. All they have to pay is a discount fee, like for Visa or Mastercard."

Applications have been mailed to all Midland Minor Emergency Clinics, and the response so far has been good, according to Barfield. "We're getting applications back, and we've had people call, wanting cards for their friends and family. The idea's very big in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio. I know it'll be very popular here, too."

Don't tell — Hasbro has Cooties

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Don't spill the beans, but Hasbro Inc. — the largest toy company in the country — has Cooties.

Hasbro said Wednesday that it has acquired from Tyco Toys Inc. the game Cootie and three other classic games that have been a staple of children's play for more than a generation.

Through its subsidiary Milton Bradley Co., it has arranged with Tyco Toys Inc. to purchase the games Cootie, Don't Break the Ice, Don't Spill the Beans and Ants in the Pants from manufacturer Schaper Toy Division of Kusan Inc. of Minneapolis.

Tyco is in the process of acquiring Schaper but is selling off the four games to Hasbro. Terms were not disclosed.

John Campbell, a toy analyst for Pemberton Houston Willoughby Inc. in Vancouver, British Columbia, said that Hasbro's acquisition was not financially significant in light of the company's $1.2 billion in annual revenue. But he said that the purchase highlights a nostalgic trend in the toy industry that has embraced toys and games remained a rite of childhood.

Knudsen Foods tentatively agrees to sell nearly half of its operations

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Struggling Knudsen Foods Inc. said Wednesday it has tentatively agreed to sell for an undisclosed amount nearly half of its operations to Kraft Inc. and Hughes Markets Inc.

The transaction, which involves most of the company's western division operations in California and Nevada, must be approved by the U.S. Bankruptcy court.

Knudsen, the largest dairy in the West, filed for bankruptcy protection last week seeking protection from creditors claiming the dairy owed more than $300 million.

The combined offer involves Knudsen's operations in California plants located in Los Angeles, Visalia, Modesto and Fresno and also the Las Vegas, Nev. facility.

Knudsen also said it is seeking to sell additional facilities, although no agreements have been reached.

Kraft will buy Knudsen's cottage cheese business at the dairy's Visalia plant, the yogurt and sour cream business at the Santee plant and the ice cream business at Knudsen's Los Angeles plants.

"Kraft looks forward to this new presence on the West Coast," said Tom Herskovits, president of the Kraft Dairy Group, based in Glenview, Ill.

"We recognize the difficulties involved in this complicated financial situation but believe that Knudsen remains a very strong business that offers some exciting opportunities," Herskovits said.

Hughes will purchase the milk, buttermilk and juice businessess at the Santee plant, the ice cream and cream cheese products business at the Modesto plant and the milk business at the Modesto, Fresno and Las Vegas plants.

Fred McLaren, president of the Los Angeles-based supermarket chain, said he is "delighted" with the transaction.

"Once this agreement is finalized and approved by the court, it will help keep the fine Knudsen and Foremost products on our shelves," McLaren said.

John Brincko, Knudsen's president and chief executive officer, called the transactions "a major step forward in our efforts to solve the business problems facing Knudsen."

"The proposed purchase of our facilities will assure the continued supply, under the Knudsen and Foremost names of products, which made both companies famous," Brincko said.

Winn Enterprises, the parent company of Knudsen, purchased the San Francisco-based Foremost Dairies Inc. last year for $50.1 million.

Hunts contiue to seek judge's removal

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Lawyers for the billionaire Hunt brothers say a federal judge's investments, his ties to a defendant's lawyers and a longstanding political feud with the Texans should disqualify him from supervising a bankruptcy suit filed by the Hunts.

Placid Oil Co., a subsidiary, and the William Herbert Hunt Trust Estate asked the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to make U.S. DIStrict Judge Barefoot Sanders get off the case — something he has twice refused to do.

Although a bankruptcy judge will hear arguments, they said, Sanders supervises that judge.

The 50-page writ filed Wednesday says Sanders shouldn't be allowed to stay on the case because his $250,000 worth of stock in Allied Bancshares of Houston would be worth a lot less if the Hunts win, even though it's not one of the banks trying to collect from them.

"The bank defendants ... have stated that should the plaintiffs succeed in their action, the effects on the banking industry 'would be disastrous,'" the lawyers said.

In addition, they said, Sanders has close ties of business and friendship to lawyers for one of the 23 banks owed money by the Hunts.

"The court's ongoing business dealings with counsel for the defendants, in violation of the Judicial Code, coupled with its financial interest in the outcome of the litigation, are matters which cannot be ignored since they undermine the very heart of the judicial process — the necessity of a fair and impartial trial in appearance as well as fact," the plea said.

It said Sanders did not mention any possible conflicts, and that the lawyers had to go through his financial statements to track them down.

The Hunts also complained that Sanders gave their lawyers less than 30 minutes' notice of a contempt hearing and rejected their request that he step down within 24 hours and without a hearing.

This indicates that Sanders may be trying to punish the Hunts for their longstanding political opposition to him, the lawyers said. It dates back to 1958, when the Hunts backed Republican Bruce Alger's winning U.S. House race against Sanders.

The lawyers said they did not claim that Sanders should step down because of the political disagreement, but felt the 5th Circuit should realize it could color other questions.

"In essence, (Sanders) is presiding over the possible dismantling of these plaintiffs' business operations," said lawyers for companies owned by Nelson Bunker Hunt, William Herbert Hunt and Lamar Hunt.

"Should the district court's actions later be overturned by the Court of Appeal on the basis of his interests and actions, it will be too late to put back together the various pieces of the plaintiffs' business."

A regular kibitzer at a famous New York club, many years ago, was given to pontificating after the fact. So much so that, in time, he acquired the nickname of The Rabbi. One of his more famous dicta has become known as The Rabbi's Rule: "When the king is singleton, play the ace!"

North-South reached three no trump in quick time. Since his hand was perfectly balanced, South eschewed showing his shabby four-card suit in favor of two no trump. North's raise to game was automatic.

East correctly played his queen of spades under the king at trick one. Declarer took the club finesse, losing to the king. West knocked out the remaining spade stopper and, when West showed out on the second club, declarer had only seven tricks. He tried to establish two tricks in diamonds, but West had the ace and three spade tricks for down one.

The Rabbi would have made the contract, and so should a careful bridge player. With five fast tricks, declarer needs only four from the club suit to get home. Therefore, the correct play at trick two was a low club to the ace. When the king drops, it is a simple matter to set up a fourth trick in the suit while there is still a spade stopper on the table.

What if the king of clubs does not drop? Since declarer can afford to concede a trick in the suit, he crosses to dummy with a heart and leads a club to the jack. All is well if the suit breaks 3-2, regardless of who has the king. And what if the suit breaks 4-1? If West has the four clubs, declarer can still make enough tricks in the suit. If East has the club length, declarer will have to hope that East, not West, has the ace of diamonds.

Newark Mayor James thinks it's cartoonist's strip, not city, that stinks

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Cartoonist Mort Walker said he wasn't surprised to hear someone was offended by his Beetle Bailey cartoon that implied New Jersey's largest city has a less-than-delightful odor.

"You're bound to offend somebody, every day, somewhere," he said Wednesday from his Stamford, Conn., home.

But Mayor Sharpe James says this time Walker has offended Newark's 320,000 residents with a cartoon that had a "disparaging remark" about the city, and he wants an apology.

James wrote Walker to complain about the strip, in which one character is shown saying, "What stinks in here?" Another character replies "That's my perfume...This is 'Eau de Newark.' It set me back $3 a bottle."

Walker, whose cartoon strip is frequently criticized by feminists, said he didn't mean to offend Newark but chose it because he thought the city had a sense of humor.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A University of Texas at San Antonio professor who writes a biweekly column for the San Antonio Light was awarded the H.L. Mencken Writing Award for three humor columns, the newspaper announced.

Steven G. Kellman was given the award, presented annually by the Baltimore Sun to newspaper columnists who capture the spirit of the Baltimore journalist.

Baltimore Sun Managing Editor James Heuck was expected to present Kellman with a plaque and a check for $2,500 at a luncheon today at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C.

Kellman, 38, received the citation for satirical columns on the U.S. visit of Prince Charles and Princess Diana; the arrival of television to Papua, New Guinea and a column that castigated those who abuse the term "classic."

Kellman, a professor of comparative literature, was chosen from a field of 143 columnists for his writing, which judges said "reflects the fire of H.L. Mencken."

"The writer uses humor adroitly to soften the bite of strong social commentary," the judges said.

Kellman's column has appeared in Sunday editions of the San Antonio newspaper for about three years.

"For that kind of column to get that kind of national recognition speaks exactly to what we're trying to do here — first in quality, the one to read," said San Antonio Light Editor Ted Warmbold. "Now the whole world knows what we have known for three years."

Past winners of the award include Chicago Tribune columnist Mike Royko, when he wrote for the Chicago Sun-Times, and Tim Giago of the Lakota (S.D.) Times.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actress Heather Thomas, whose legs were broken when she was hit by a car last week, will remain hospitalized until surgeons operate for a third time, her doctor said.

Thomas

"Further surgery may be expected within the next week to two weeks," Dr. Steve Hoefflin said in a statement Wednesday read by St. John's Hospital spokeswoman Mary Miller. The orthopedic surgery was needed on her left leg, he said.

Miss Thomas, 29, co-star of the canceled ABC-TV series "The Fall Guy," was crossing a street on Sept. 16 when she was hit by a car traveling about 15 mph to 20 mph, Los Angeles Police Officer Victor Curti said.

She has already undergone plastic surgery and orthopedic surgery on both legs.

BOSTON (AP) — Former pitcher Luis Tiant says he never tried to cheat on his state taxes, and his lawyer says the Boston Red Sox star of the 1970s is angry his name was included on a list of deadbeats.

Attorney Christopher Muse acknowledged Tuesday that Tiant owes Massachusetts $20,000 in back taxes, but said the debt was the result of an accounting error and not a refusal to pay.

Tiant's name appeared along with 1,476 others last week on a list released by the state Department of Revenue.

Department spokesman Harry Durning said an agreement is being arranged with Tiant.

NEW YORK (AP) — An impressive trio of plays has opened the Young Playwrights Festival, a yearly effort by theater professionals in New York to encourage new writers for the theater.

This year that encouragement has handsomely paid off. The three new works, running through Oct. 12 at Playwrights Horizons, offer hope that there may be life left in that most endangered of species — the new American play.

Take Evan Smith's "Remedial English," the most fully realized of the three one-act efforts. The 18-year-old from Savannah, Ga., has written a warm, human and very funny comedy about a precocious Catholic high school student named Vincent.

Vincent is wildly enamored of Rob, a hunky, but dumb football player. They are thrown together when a slightly dotty English teacher named Sister Beatrice assigns Vincent to tutor Rob. The young tutor ends up learning more about himself than he does about the object of his unfulfilled desires.

In asides to the audience, Vincent discusses his homosexuality. It's not maudlin or sensationalized. Instead, he talks in a witty, slightly self-deprecating manner about growing up gay in the relentlessly macho world of an all-boys' high school.

NEW YORK (LAT) — Carolyn, a 47-year-old gorilla who was a prime attraction at the Central Park Zoo for nearly 40 years, died of natural causes at the Bronx Zoo Wednesday.

She had been the senior member of her species in an American zoo since 1982, when the Philadelphia Zoo's gorilla Massa died. Carolyn was acquired by the Central Park Zoo in 1943 and was kept there until four years ago, when she was moved to the Bronx Zoo in anticipation of rebuilding of the Central Park Zoo.

College students trying to win release of Jews in Russia

By DONNA GEHRKE

HOUSTON (AP) — Two college students are lobbying government officials and news organizations in a campaign to win the release of a Jewish family from the Soviet Union.

The efforts of David Harberg and Sylvia Mayer already have won a pledge from Secretary of State George Shultz to place the family on a priority list of Russian Jews denied immigration visas.

"It is determination," Harberg says. "We won't give up."

"By being young and naive, you can go in and be charming and say, 'Here's what I want,'" Ms. Mayer said.

But the pair, both 21 and of Houston, say their campaign may be too successful.

They recently heard the Soviets cracked down on the family — Michael and Faena Fainberg and their two teen-age sons — by denying one of the sons a military deferment.

If 19-year-old Michael is drafted, his family's chances of obtaining a visa are slim for at least 10 years, says Tom Neumann, national director of intergroup affairs for the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith.

The Soviets refuse to allow military personnel to emigrate immediately after their service ends and have used the rule to refuse visas for Jewish families with military-age men, Harberg said.

He says the Soviets arbitrarily may have ended the deferment as the result of a bureaucratic mix-up or Russian officials may be responding to the students' efforts.

"We are certain that the Fainbergs' last hope lies in our ability to gain national publicity for their worsening situation," they say.

The two, friends and neighbors since childhood, met the family during separate trips to the Soviet Union last spring.

"I was absolutely entranced by them," Ms. Mayer said. "They really are wonderful people."

Harberg agreed, although he could only spend one evening with the Fainbergs.

The father is a well-known mathematician who has been published in the United States. The mother is an English teacher. Both, however, lost their jobs when they applied to leave the Soviet Union in 1979.

Their two sons, Michael and Andrew, are students. Michael enrolled as a computer science major at Moscow Railroad Institute, the only university open to Jews denied departure visas.

At that time the college students met the Fainbergs, the family was not on any international list of the 15,000 or so Russian Jews who have been denied permission to leave.

Since then, Ms. Mayer and Harberg have given up summer jobs to raise international attention to the family. Their families have paid for their expenses.

Their campaign included a trip to Washington this summer and discussions with five congressmen and aides to five senators, urging them to work for the release of the family, Neumann says.

Those meetings yielded a televised small congressional meeting on Soviet Jewry and the family's plight, as well as the attention of Shultz, the two said.

Shultz pledged the Fainbergs would be placed on the State Department's priority list that will be presented at a possible summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet Secretary General Mikhail Gorbachev.

The two also have waged a postcard campaign, sending 1,500 of them to Reagan and urging the release of the family and other Russian Jews.

They also have obtained public service air time on television stations in Miami, Chicago and Philadelphia and have had their commentary on the family's plight published in newspapers.

"We have done a lot," Ms. Mayer said. "We knew nothing but we've managed to do some remarkable things"

In November, when Harberg is at Tufts University in Medford, Mass., and Ms. Meyer at Washington University in St. Louis, they will kick off a national writathon.

"The Soviets can't afford any bad publicity, especially if they're coming up to a second summit," Harberg says.

Courthouse immortalized in public mural

By DOUG WINTERMUTE

COOPER, Texas (AP) — From the rubble of a torn-down building comes a work of art that displays community pride and an appreciation for history.

What was an eyesore of weeds and rubble at the southwest corner of the square in Cooper has been transformed into a "minipark," complete with neatly trimmed green grass, trees, flowers and benches.

On the south side of the small park, a plain, brick wall has been transformed into a wall-size artist's canvas, painted the blue of a clear summer sky.

In the middle of the wall, painted brown, is the rectangular outline of a building with two small eagles painted at the top of two spires. Work on the project is still going on, but it catches the eyes of motorists driving by the park on Dallas Avenue.

The painting is of the old Delta County Courthouse which was located in the middle of the square, but torn down around 1939 to provide work for the Works Progress Administration, which then constructed the current courthouse one block west of the square.

The artist is Foy Burns, a local accountant, who said he agreed to paint the mural because "Someone asked me to do it."

The "someone" who asked Burns to paint the mural was a member of the Professional Women's Club, a local organization which is sponsoring the project originally as part of a Texas Sesquicentennial project.

"It started back last year kind of as a project of the Sesquicentennial group," said Nell Hardy, president of the Professional Women's Club. "We tried for some time — and it took us about a year — to get down to the point where we could get approval because that is a privately owned lot. So we had to get permission to do what we have done with it."

Mrs. Hardy said the owner of the lot is James Garrard, who lives in South Texas and gave permission for the project when contacted by a club member.

The minipark was built first on the 70-foot by 25-foot lot last spring, and then the idea of the mural was presented and accepted.

Mrs. Hardy said the club started with a $500 donation toward the project from the Delta County Chamber of Commerce, and the rest of the approximately $2,000 used so far has come from donations.

Burns, who is president of the Delta County Chamber of Commerce, said he wanted to become involved in the project.

"Anything they (the professional women's club) do is of interest to us (the chamber), of course, and when one member asked if I would paint something on it, I told them I'd be glad to paint something on it," he said.

He said the mural helps improve the town's image. "I'm a local businessman," he said. "If we don't do something, this little town is going to just dry up and blow away. Really, the only businesses that are left here are virtually service businesses, mostly, and without them, we wouldn't have anything at all."

Burns said being a local businessman isn't the only reason he is involved in the project, though. "I'd probably be involved in it if I worked (in Paris). I'd probably be involved in it anyway."

Burns also views his work realistically, and said it will probably fall victim to vandalism. "I think we would be fortunate if it will last until Christmas," he said.

But even with that in mind, Burns said he wants to finish the project. "If we didn't put it up there because we thought somebody was going to tear it down, we never would do anything."

Burns said he has spent about eight hours working on the mural and estimates it will take until the end of September to complete because of the many, intricate details of the old courthouse.

"The large part is basically finished," he said. "It's the little parts that really add up to the time. I've got as much time in the eagles as I have in the whole building. They're hard to paint. You've got a small brush, and the texture is so rough that it's just difficult. But we'll keep on working here until we get it."

But Burns said he is willing to make the sacrifice.

"It's worth it," he said. "It's just personally worth it. I paint watercolors mostly — flowers and floral arrangements — but this is the first time I've ever tried to paint the side of a wall, and certainly not anything that big."

THC may cause brain to age prematurely

WASHINGTON (AP) — The active ingredient in marijuana causes a loss of brain cells in rats similar to that attributed to aging, raising a new concern about the popular illegal drug, a researcher says.

Dr. Philip W. Landfield of Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., said Wednesday that animal research indicates the marijuana compound, a chemical called THC, may affect the structure of the brain in the same way as aging.

While the researcher said it is too soon to say that THC causes brains to age prematurely, he said the animal studies raise a concern that should be explored more fully.

At a briefing sponsored by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, other researchers testing cocaine in animals said the anesthetic effect of the illicit drug can make the brain more sensitive to later, potentially fatal, seizures from small amounts of the chemical.

Researchers at the National Institute of Mental Health in Bethesda, Md., said studies with rats show that cocaine can have a "kindling" effect that makes the brain more sensitive to the drug over time.

The researchers, Drs. Robert Post and Susan Weiss, said their work indicates the brain may be more susceptible to developing lethal convulsions from repeated cocaine use than from a single large dose, which also can cause fatal seizures.

Cocaine is unusual in that it is both a stimulant like amphetamine and an anesthetic similar to the drug lidocaine, they said. Post and Weiss said they did their study to find out which of these major properties of the drug caused particular side effects.

Because of the kindling effect, the anesthetic aspect of cocaine increases sensitivity to the drug to such an extent that what was once a normal dose for a user can become a fatal one, Post said.

Repeated doses of lidocaine in rats kindled non-fatal seizures similar to those induced by cocaine, which can be deadly. The researchers said cocaine's stimulant properties may contribute to the more severe consequences of the drug's anesthetic-induced convulsions.

Post said the stimulant effect of the drug appears responsible for side effects such as paranoid psychosis, hyperactivity and mood swings. The anesthetic properties, on the other hand, appear responsible for sensory alterations, anxiety, irritability, aggression, panic attacks and seizures.

U.S. media accused of giving Soviets vital data

WASHINGTON (AP) — Central Intelligence Agency Director William J. Casey says the U.S. news media is handing vital information to the Soviets "on a silver platter" when it publishes leaked secrets, and he wants tougher laws to punish the press for such disclosures.

But Sen. Dave Durenberger, the chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, said the Reagan administration is itself to blame for news leaks that have damaged U.S. spying efforts.

Both Casey and Durenberger, who traded barbs over the issue of leaks last fall, were part of an unusual colloquium Wednesday night that included two prominent investigative reporters, including James Polk of NBC-TV.

Casey asked the Justice Department last May 21 to consider prosecuting NBC for broadcasting a brief Polk report on the background of the Ronald Pelton spy case.

Before the evening was out, Casey told Polk he wasn't really a candidate for prosecution, and the spy chief assured the other reporter, Bob Woodward of The Washington Post, that he wasn't tapping any journalists' phones — including Woodward's.

"My daughter will feel much better," said Woodward, an assistant managing editor of the Post, who is completing a book on the CIA.

"Ask him about senators' (phones)," Durenberger said.

Casey told the 140 people at a meeting of the Washington chapter of Sigma Delta Chi that he will press for tougher laws to punish both government employees who leak secrets and the news media for willfully publishing sensitive information.

"The KGB and other hostile intelligence services every year spend billions of dollars trying to acquire this information. But the unauthorized publication of restricted information hands to them on a silver platter information that their spies, their researches, their satellites are working 24 hours a day to uncover and use against us," Casey said.

But Durenberger, a Minnesota Republican, said the administration itself let sensitive information slip on several occasions earlier this year to bolster support for the bombing of Libya and aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

He cited the leak of a message from Libyan officials that was intercepted before the bombing of a Berlin discotheque last April 5, and a leak about U.S. spies within the Sandinista government that resulted in the arrest of three Nicaraguan officials.

Durenberger said Casey himself emerged from a White House briefing a few months ago and revealed that Soviet pilots were flying reconnaissance aircraft in Nicaragua.

"Though the damage in some of these cases is considerable...I really don't know of any effort to restrain or to punish the officials that were responsible in each of these cases," Durenberger said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Marijuana more potent than in '70s, study says

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Marijuana has become more potent in the last 12 years to satisfy users who have developed a tolerance to it, researchers say.

Studies done by the University of Mississippi Research Institute of Pharmaceutical Sciences, which tests samples of marijuana seized by enforcement officials, show that the average content of tetrahydrocannabol, the active ingredient in marijuana, has risen from 0.5 percent in 1974 to 3.5 percent in in 1985.

"Smoking one marijuana cigarette now is equivalent (to) smoking seven (marijuana) cigarettes nine or ten years ago," said Mahmoud Elsohly, assistant director of the institute.

"It just means that the people are getting more addicted so they need more of the active ingredient just like any other drug," he said in a telephone interview.

"We have seen examples of marijuana with more than 10 percent THC content," said Elsohly.

Elsohly said the institute, which has issued quarterly studies on marijuana since 1968, also attributes the increase to a greater sophistication among marijuana growers.

Crack use 'exaggerated'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Crack is used widely in many major U.S. cities, but media exposure of the highly potent cocaine derivative may be exaggerating its importance on the drug scene, the Drug Enforcement Administration says.

In a study based on reports from its offices around the country, the DEA said Wednesday that crack is "readily available" in Atlanta, Boston, Detroit, Houston, Kansas City, Miami, New York City, Newark, San Diego, San Francisco, Seattle and St. Louis.

DEA field offices reported that in Detroit, "crack availability and use were widespread. In Houston, crack is reported to be preferred over all other drugs. Crack is highly available in Miami."

In Detroit, said the DEA, there are smoke houses where the user, for a fee, is given a room and equipment with which to smoke crack which has been purchased at another location.

DEA offices reported that the drug is available to a lesser extent in Dallas, Denver, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Phoenix and Washington.

Nuclear tests defended

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Pentagon official, defending nuclear tests against a House effort to sharply limit them, says underground blasts were needed to help correct flaws in a third of the U.S. atomic weapons developed since 1958.

"We test exhaustively for this purpose. This is a very important issue, and it goes not only to the ability to ensure that nuclear weapons work when they're supposed to, but just as importantly that they don't work when they're not supposed to," said Frank Gaffney, deputy assistant defense secretary for nuclear forces and arms control policy.

NOTICE OF SALE

NOTICE is hereby given that on the 1st day of October, 1986, at the hour of 10:00 a.m., the undersigned Special Master will at the front (main) door entrance) of the Chaves County Courthouse in Roswell, New Mexico, will sell at the right, title and interest of the Defendants in and to the hereinafter described tracts or parcels of real estate to the highest bidder. The property is near Roswell, New Mexico, commonly known as the Titan Enterprises. The legal description of the property is:

ROSWELL II PROJECT: Mortgage and Indemnity of Trust dated March 1, 1983, in favor of First Interstate Bank of Albuquerque, Trustee, executed by City of Roswell, as the amount of $1,750,000 recorded March 23, 1983 in Book 378, Page 823 of Mortgage Records, Chaves County, New Mexico securing in the estate in Tracts I and II the Roswell II mortgage;

ROSWELL III PROJECT: Mortgage and Indemnity of Trust dated May 1, 1983, in favor of First Interstate Bank of Albuquerque, Trustee executed by the City of Roswell, in the amount of $1,750,000 recorded May 23, 1983 in Book 382 Page 12 of Mortgage Records, Chaves County, New Mexico securing in the estate in Tract III and a one-half undivided interest in Tract V the Roswell III mortgage;

ROSWELL IV PROJECT: Mortgage and Indemnity of Trust date May 1, 1983 in favor of First Interstate Bank of Albuquerque Trustee executed by City of Roswell, in the amount of $1,750,000 recorded May 23, 1983, in Book 382 Page 73 of Mortgage Records, Chaves County, New Mexico securing in the estate in Tract IV and a one-half undivided interest in Tract V the Roswell IV mortgage;

The sale will be made to satisfy a Decree of Foreclosure rendered by the above Court in this action on July 31, 1986 based on actions to foreclose a mortgage on the above-described three parcels of real estate. A copy of said Decree may be examined, or obtained from either the Court Clerk at Roswell, New Mexico, or from the Special Master's office at the date of the sale. The property is more particularly described in the Decree of Foreclosure. The right is hereby reserved to reject any and all bids and to apply all or any of the proceeds from the purchase price at law, in cash. For all other bidders, the terms and conditions of the sale are cash within two hours of the date of the sale.
