Burger's will

WASHINGTON — Warren Burger, once the nation's highest-ranking judge, prepared a "woefully inadequate" will before he died, and it could cost his heirs plenty. The legal tangle is a cautionary tale for those Americans who have avoided proper estate planning. "This really is a sad example," said lawyer George W. Dodge in Arlington, Va. "Burger's estate of $1.8 million may face federal and state taxes of over $450,000."/10A

Norwest economist upbeat on basin growth prospects

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland and Odessa are seeing positive economic growth, according to Sung Won Sohn, senior vice president and chief economist with Norwest Corp.

The Minneapolis resident visited Midland Tuesday to discuss the area economy, the outlook for the state, for key industries and the national economy.

He pointed out the areas's low cost of doing business and the quality of life, which fits in with the trend of Americans returning from both costs to the Midwest in search of places to raise their children. Also, an influx of national retail and restaurant chains has given the area some economic stability, with Midland developing into a regional service center for retail, education and medical services.

Sohn forecasts a 2.3 percent increase in the area's non-farm employment in 1995, higher than the national average, and a Retired Gen. Colin Powell's record, philosophy, personal life and more all become grist the moment he runs.

Rivals to sharpen their knives if Powell becomes candidate

Associated Press

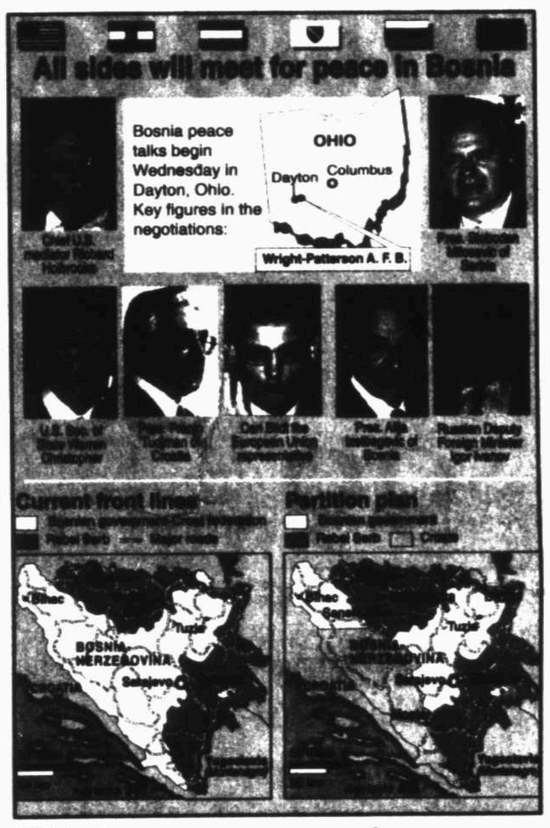

WASHINGTON — If Colin Powell becomes candidate Powell, the knives come out. Rivals are already looking over the retired general's vulnerabilities.

Powell's military record, philosophy and legendary caution, his reliance on powerful friends to rise as a "political general," his inexperience with the problems that confront a president every day, and now word that his wife has been treated for depression — all become grist the moment he runs.

Three quarters of those who have pledged to back him "walk away" if he declares, predicted Marilyn Quayle, wife of the former vice president. "He is not used to taking criticisms,' she added, "and he is used to people doing what they are told."

Powell says in his autobiography that he knows that if he jumps in, "I would quickly alienate one interest group or anoth-

Clinton on eve of peace talks: 'World is watching'

DAYTON, Ohio — Arriving to a red-carpet welcome Tuesday night, Serbia's president predicted that U.S.-run peace talks on Bosnia would succeed in ending the four years of warfare in the former Yugoslavia.

"I am an optimist," Slobodan Milosevic, said on the eve of the talks at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. "I believe the talks will succeed."

Milosevic arrives, predicts success

American mediator Richard C. Holbrooke was on the tarmac when the JAT Yugoslav Airlines Jet landed with the Balkan leader, considered pivotal in the U.S. peacemaking effort in three-way negotiations.

Stung by thin defeat, Quebec leader quits

N.Y. Times News Service

MONTREAL — Premier Jacques Parizeau of Quebec, leader of the separatist Parti Quebecois, resigned Tuesday, raising questions about the direction of the separatist movement a day after its narrow loss in an independence referendum.

His surprise anouncement — coming after an outcry about his bitter comments Monday night, blaming "money and the ethnic vote" for the loss — only underscored the divisive legacy of the vote.

Quebec Premier Jacques Parizeau announces his resignation.

Instead of resolving the issue of Quebec's future, the bare victory by those who want to preserve the Canadian union has led some separatists to vow to work all the harder for independence. But some of his own supporters attacked Parizeau for his efforts to blame immigrants and outside money for the loss.

"He clearly misrepresented what the sovereignty movement stands for," said Alain Noel, a political scientist at the University of Montreal, who voted for separation. "The modern sovereignty movement is broad, territorial, liberal, pluralistic and multicultural. It is definitely not

Woman believes film may show new angle on JFK assassination

DALLAS (AP) — It was fear that caused Patsy Paschall to hold back the film for almost 32 years, she says.

Mrs. Paschall shot the film out of a window of the old Dallas County Courthouse on Nov. 22, 1963, as President John F. Kennedy's motorcade rolled into Dealey Plaza. It resumes seconds after shots were fired and shows the chaotic scene in front of the old Texas Schoolbook Depository Building.

The Warren Commission concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald fired the shots from the old schoolbook depository building that killed Kennedy and seriously wounded then Texas Gov. John Connally.

She kept mostly quiet about the film until recently, when she says she felt safe enough to really go public with it.

"I used to think that someone would blow my head off," the 58-year-old city employee cheerfully offers. On a work break, she glances around the ground floor

Jury in Ortiz capital-murder case to begin deliberations

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel

AMARILLO — Closing arguments will begin this morning with the jury to begin deliberations immediately following to decide the guilt or innocence of Henry Lopez Ortiz.

Ortiz, 42, is charged with capital murder for the Feb. 10 kidnapping, sexual assault and murder of 10-year-old Julianne Powell.

Ortiz has pleaded not guilty and has remained in jail, held without bond. The trial was moved here because of extensive publicity. The state is seeking the death penalty in the case.

The defense rested its case Monday and the prosecution presented its rebuttal witnesses Tuesday. Among those witnesses were three of Ortiz's co-workers, a neurosurgeon and a psychiatrist-lawyer.

Courses tee off in federal court, ask: Is golf hole a trademark?

By Terri Langford
Associated Press

HOUSTON — It's a question more likely to be overheard at the clubhouse or the pro shop: Is a golf course hole a trademark?

The debate is hardly rhetorical as three of the nation's most famous golf courses — Pinehurst, Pebble Beach and Harbour Town — teed off in federal court in a highstakes gamble over whether the courses' holes are sacred, legally speaking.

The non-jury trial began Tuesday.

At issue is whether Tour 18 of Humble, just north of Houston, has violated trademark law by duplicating and repackaging some of the nation's most famous golf course holes.

"They are taking a free ride on what we have done over the years," plaintiffs' attorney Jim Gambrell said during his opening statement before U.S. District Judge David Hittner.

"The only value they had was in copying famous holes."

For between $55 and $70, a golfer can go to Tour 18 and play a replica of say, the "lighthouse hole" at Harbour Town (No. 18), or the "amen corner" from Georgia's Augusta National (Nos. 11, 12, 13).

But plaintiffs' attorneys say Tour 18 is making money on the other courses' reputations and designs and is confusing the golfer into believing permission was given by the venerable fairways.

"It is about copying our unique trademark, using our marks and names," Gambrell said.

Not so, says Tour 18's attorney William Durkee, who painted the three as "The Big Resorts" and labeled their attempt to shut down Tour 18 as squelching the little guy's "American Dream."

"We're not saying our hole is Pebble Beach," Durkee said. "We're saying our hole is a replica."

In fact, disclaimers are posted on the course, Durkee said. Pinehurst is located in North Carolina, Harbour Town is in South Carolina and Pebble Beach is in California.

In his opening statement, Durkee explained how Tour 18 emerged as the brainchild of Texan Dennis Wilkerson, who thought amateur duffers might want to test their mettle against holes similar to the ones played by the pros.

"The design of a golf course is not protectable," said Durkee, who said there is a clear distinction between copying a product and passing off a product as the real thing.

"Our free society allows the copying of

Tensions precede South Africa vote

MMABATHO, South Africa (AP) — Taxi drivers have threatened blockades and troops have been deployed to deter possible violence when North West Province joins most of South Africa in electing local officials Wednesday.

The nation's second democratic vote has uncovered long-simmering disputes in the province that is home to fervent African National Congress supporters and a party loyal to a former black homeland leader ousted last year.

A holiday was called today for elections at 12,000 polling stations nationwide to choose almost 700 local and rural councils that will replace the last vestiges of apartheid rule. President Nelson Mandela and his ANC came to power in the nation's first all-race election in April 1994, and most of the local councils also were expected to be black-led.

While many of the races have failed to ignite the passion of last year's vote that ended apartheid, and balloting was expected to be mostly peaceful, parts of North West Province were tense on election eve.

Much of the territory formerly was the Bophuthatswana black homeland, one of the puppet states set up by apartheid South Africa to strip blacks of South African citizenship.

Former homeland leader Lucas Mangope, ousted for trying to prevent last year's vote, and his United Christian Democratic Party continue to hold pockets of support in a province otherwise dominated by the ANC.

Mangope was accused of corruption and authoritarian rule during the years he led Bophuthatswana, with the government this week ordering him to pay back $5 million in missing public money. Still, he attracted larger rallies than the ANC in recent appearances.

Soldiers in armored personnel carriers patrolled Tuesday in Mmabatho, the provincial capital, and along the province's western edge where citizens complain the new border with neighboring Northern Cape province cuts their community in two.

Two taxi organizations operating in the province have called on members to blockade key routes to prevent people from voting. They are demanding an end to violence in the private taxi industry that serves most black commuters, and seek government subsidies.

Provincial officials urged the taxi operators to keep roads open, and the patrolling troops were expected to act against anyone trying to form blockades.

"We are aware that there are people bent on derailing this process, so we're not surprised the troops are there," said Willie Modise, spokesman for provincial Premier Popo Molefe of the ANC. "There are people not prepared to welcome the new democracy."

But some in Mmabatho believe Molefe and the ANC are acting undemocratically.

Tapes reveal drug agents' covert moves

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — U.S. drug agents operate more independently in Colombia than they've acknowledged, in one case searching a Cali cartel leader's farm for bodies, according to taped conversations between American officials.

On the tapes, which Washington privately acknowledges are authentic though possibly edited, U.S. officials also discuss efforts to have cartel figures and witnesses against them sent, or lured to, the United States for trial.

The revelations come as U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration operations are under increasing criticism by some Colombians.

Colombian Congressman Carlos Alonso Lucio released excerpts of the tapes in early October and later gave reporters copies of the tapes in full. Although Lucio said the tapes indicate the DEA operates with too much autonomy in Colombia, U.S. officials have accused the congressman of being an ally of the Cali cartel.

It would be in the interest of drug traffickers to diminish the DEA's role in Colombia, which supplies 80 percent of the world's cocaine and has a police force riddled with corruption.

Though the DEA officially claims its agents merely accompany Colombian forces on missions and provides intelligence, the taped conversations, elements of which were confirmed by U.S. Ambassador Myles Frechette, show they sometimes plan and lead operations.

The tapes also suggest that U.S. officials are making plans to bring captured drug traffickers to the United States, even though Colombia's constitution bars extradition of its citizens.

One conversation alluding to this point is between Robert Nieves, director of the DEA's International Affairs office in Washington; Tony Senneca, the DEA chief in Colombia; and a woman identified on tape as Mary Lee Warren.

Skepticism reigns in Mexico despite recovery efforts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Despite government measures to bolster Mexico's sagging economy, gloomy traders and investors sent Mexico's stock and currency markets tumbling Tuesday.

After recovering Monday, both stocks and the peso ended Tuesday sharply lower. On Sunday, President Ernesto Zedillo announced a package to spur employment, raise wages and encourage industrial growth.

Mexico has lost an estimated 2.5 million jobs since December, when the peso lost 40 percent of its value. Prices have climbed by 40 percent this year alone, and the economy has so far shrunk by 5.7 percent.

A $52 billion bailout package in March by international financial institutions, including a $20 billion loan from the United States, has staved off collapse.

But the peso remains under pressure and last Thursday it fell 6.2 percent to its lowest level against the dollar in seven months. It rallied 2.4 percent Friday and another 2.0 percent Monday, but lost around 2.0 percent Tuesday in very volatile trading.

Stocks closed sharply lower in light trading, with the market's key IPC index down 46.63 points to 2,302.01 — a drop of 1.99 percent. At the end of 1994, the IPC stood at 2,375.66.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, blasted the Clinton administration's aid package.

He said he may try to force the Treasury Department to release a confidential report by the International Monetary Fund, which is said to criticize the handling of the crisis.

"There will be a time in a not-too-distant future (when Mexico) will come quietly to the U.S. Treasury and make a deal for more money," said D'Amato, R-N.Y. "We should be prepared to make sure the next time we say no."

Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin defended the loan package, saying the United States is earning interest "sufficient to cover the risks."

Mexico has paid more than $490 million in interest so far. The loan is secured by Mexican oil.

Some U.S. and Mexican analysts said Monday they were still expecting a sluggish 1.5 percent to 2.0 percent economic recovery in 1996 at best.

Underlying the 10-month crisis are dwindling foreign currency reserves, inflation, very high unemployment, and sky-high interest rates.

Yeltsin seeks explanation on party bans

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin appeared to enter the electoral fray from his hospital bed Tuesday, demanding to know why some high-profile parties were barred from the December parliamentary race.

Yeltsin's demands, reported by his press service, appeared intended to calm a public uproar about the ban. It could also be an attempt to show that he remains forceful and involved despite his illness, which has raised questions about who is running Russia.

Yeltsin, 64, was hospitalized Thursday for heart trouble for the second time in four months. Doctors have so far let him see only his family and his bodyguard.

Top officials insist Yeltsin is still at the helm, making decisions, doing paperwork and consulting with his prime minister.

His chief physician, Dr. Andrei Vorobyov, said Tuesday that Yeltsin's condition didn't interfere with his "working abilities," but recommended that he remain in the hospital for another month.

On Tuesday, Yeltsin asked Chairman Nikolai Ryabov of the Central Election Commission why it barred several parties from the parliamentary election, the presidential press service reported.

"The president expects to receive answers as soon as possible," the press service said.

The commission's most controversial ruling was against Yabloko, the party led by Grigory Yavlinsky, a popular reformer and 1996 presidential hopeful.

Yavlinsky said Tuesday that he will appeal to the Supreme Court. If the court upholds the ban, the 43-year-old economist said he would immediately begin campaigning for next spring's presidential elections instead.

The ban on Yabloko outraged politicians across the spectrum.

Mideast summit ends with hope, new cooperation

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — The Middle East's biggest ever economic summit ended Tuesday with new signs of regional cooperation including the first large-scale business agreement between Israel and a Gulf state.

In the corridors of the conference hall, Israeli and Arab businessmen exchanged handshakes and business cards amid news that Qatar agreed in principle to sell gas to Israel through the U.S. energy company Enron.

The agreement underlined the increasing business contacts between Israel and Arab states as the Middle East peace process unfolds and a regional market slowly takes shape.

The Middle East-North Africa Economic Summit, which drew 60 nations and 2,000 government officials, businessmen and financiers, illustrated the improving relations in the region and its need for economic development.

Organizers discussed plans for a Middle East development bank with $5 billion in capital to finance huge regional projects such as roads, railways, airports and water schemes.

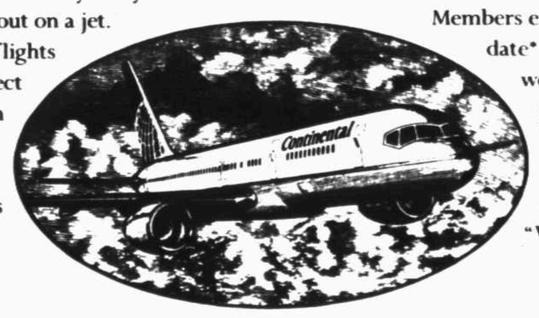

"There was the beginning of many joint ventures of great importance," Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres told a news conference Tuesday.

Look for high near 80, gusty winds

Staff Report

A wide, upper-level cool front pushed through Baja, Mexico and into West Texas late Tuesday, sparking scattered thunderstorms across the Permian Basin.

This "provided lift" for the formation of thunderstorms, utilizing moist air already settled over the western part of the state, according to a spokesman for the National Weather Service.

Lines of thunderstorms stretched from north to south most of the way across Texas. Most of the severe weather was centered near Crane County, he said.

The forecast for today calls for partly cloudy skies with a high near 80 and southwest winds at 10-20 mph and gusty. Tonight should be fair with a low near 50, according to the National Weather Service in Midland. Thursday should have increasing cloudiness and be cooler in the evening with a high of 65-70.

After an overnight low of 59, Tuesday's high reached 76, compared to the record high for that date of 89 set in 1934. The record low was 25 set in 1993.

Temperatures fell almost to zero Tuesday in Montana and snow was scattered over the northern Plains, while heavy rain fell in the Southeast.

ORTIZ: Both sides rest in capital-murder case

she went through a training program with Ortiz and he displayed no problems in comprehending and learning the material.

Defense experts testified Monday that Ortiz is brain-damaged from a 1977 head injury and has impaired mental abilities.

The co-worker also said she had contact with Ortiz away from work and viewed him drinking a beer on one occasion and an entire bottle of wine on another. She said she saw no problems with his speech or thinking processes following drinking.

Defense experts testified alcohol would intensify the brain damage.

Two other co-workers testified that Ortiz could follow instructions and had no impairments in his decision making. They said he interacted at work appropriately.

The neurosurgeon testified the results of brain damage come from watching the person and how well he functions in day-to-day life. He said judging from Ortiz's work and school records he assimilated he functioned well following the accident.

The psychiatrist-lawyer said his understanding of Ortiz and his background would lead him to believe Ortiz was goal-oriented and understood what was going on at the time he is accused of killing Julianne.

He said Ortiz should have the "known capacity" to understand his actions would lead to the death of Julianne. He agreed with the neurosurgeon that the results of brain damage are judged by how well the person functions in society.

The jury should have the judge's charge by lunchtime to begin its deliberations.

Depending upon when the jury returns its verdict, if Ortiz is found guilty by the jury today, it will begin hearing punishment evidence on Thursday.

Along with the capital murder charge will be lesser charges including murder and possibly others.

Attorneys on both sides anticipate another week's worth of witnesses for the punishment phase.

JFK: Film may raise more questions, some say

of City Hall. "I feel safe now."

She hopes to sell the four-minute film, she said. But some say the film may raise more questions than it answers.

Some say it might show a compelling puff of smoke coming from the grassy knoll and movement behind the picket fence at the rear of the knoll — something that might hint at a conspiracy. Others say the film has no new, stunning revelations.

Although versions and pieces of the film have floated in certain circles, the former court clerk from suburban Mesquite has kept it locked away in a safety deposit box.

Her attorney saw it, the FBI and the House Select Committee on Assassinations apparently viewed it, and Life magazine once borrowed a frame from it.

The general public has never seen the entire film, she says. Except for a dozen or so of her friends and associates, she says, no one has seen the complete version of what she sporadically captured with her little Bell & Howell camera.

The Dallas Morning News reported Tuesday that the jumpy, occasionally blurry film shows The motorcade passing down Main Street. The motorcade racing under the triple underpass. The frantic crowd scene in front of the Texas School Book Depository after the president had been shot.

"I had a view with a camera that no one else had," she said.

But unlike the famous film taken by Abraham Zapruder, the film does not show the actual shooting of the president. But she suggests that her film displays interesting views of the infamous grassy knoll as well as footage of Zapruder doing his filming.

Local amateur historian Mark Oakes finally tracked down Mrs. Paschall and her forgotten film last year.

He included a question-and-answer interview with her in a videotaped documentary, "Eyewitness Video-Real J.F.K. Facts," that is available at the Texas/Dallas Archives in the J. Erik Jonsson Central Library in downtown Dallas.

Oakes maintains that the film might show some sort of smoke near the knoll, as well as movement behind the picket fence.

He says he believes the film is worth $250,000 or perhaps "an unlimited price" if someone thought it offered evidence pointing to an assassination conspiracy.

Gary Mack, an archivist with the Sixth Floor Museum, says he doubts that it's worth as much as Oakes and Mrs. Paschall envision.

But he'd like to have it for the museum.

"It's interesting but not a crucial film," he says. "The film does not show the crucial shooting sequence, and that is far and away the most important consideration of any monetary values of film taken at Dealey Plaza.' he says.

Mrs. Paschall says she was so scared about the film that she decided not to stay at her house the night of the assassination.

She slept at her mother-in-law's home, called her attorney in the morning and had the film developed a few days later.

The film was turned over to the FBI a few days later and was returned to her a few weeks later.

A somber President Clinton, hoping to set the stage for a settlement, warned the leaders of Serbia, Croatia and Bosnia that they were undertaking what could be "the last best chance we have for a very long time" to end Europe's deadliest conflict since World War II.

The Bosnian Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic and Foreign Minister Mohammed Sacirbey arrived just before Milosevic.

Silajdzic also appeared upbeat about the talks. "I think we can do a lot here," he said. "We came with great hope. We came here to get what we don't have in Bosnia — justice and democracy."

Presidents Franjo Tudjman of Croatia and Alija Izetbegovic of Bosnia were scheduled to arrive separately after midnight for the talks.

Accused of starting the war in Bosnia 42 months ago, Milosevic was the focus of U.S.-peacemaking efforts. And as he left Belgrade, the ardent Serbian nationalist called for "a spirit of impartiality and objectivity," saying an accord should treat all sides fairly.

At the height of his eight-year reign of a shrunkeh Yugoslavia, Milosevic is thought by American officials to be capable of arm-twisting Bosnian Serbs to accept a peace treaty. The inducement for them is an ethnic republic covering about half of Bosnia-Herzgovina; for Milosevic, it is an end to a U.N. trade blockade that has decimated Serbia's economy.

The State Department's spokesman, Nicholas Burns, gave Milosevic credit for releasing 324 Muslim prisoners who were exchanged Tuesday for 125 rebel Serbs but was reserved in his praise.

"I don't think it's possible to say that someone who championed a war three and four years ago has gone through a process of complete redemption and is an entirely different person," Burns said in Washington.

The Bosnian Muslims, all civilian males, were taken into custody by Bosnian Serbs several weeks ago after being forced from their homes in Banja Luka. Thousands of others are still unaccounted for.

"So much is riding on the success in Dayton, and the whole world is watching," Clinton said at the White House in a send-off for Secretary of State Warren Christopher and U.S. mediator Holbrooke.

Holbrooke, author of a basic agreement on the division of Bosnian territory and postwar power-sharing, spoke cautiously about the chances for peace after four years of war.

"We have a very tough job ahead of us, we are not here to promise success but only our best efforts," he said on his arrival at Wright-Patterson.

Some of the toughest issues awaiting negotiators are map boundaries, the status of Sarajevo, practical steps that must be taken to separate hostile forces and procedures for free elections.

KNIVES: Record, philosophy would become grist

er and burn off much popular support."

So far, the attacks come from conservatives who don't want to hand the GOP to a moderate of the Nelson Rockefeller mold — one who supports gun control, legalized abortion and affirmative action and who opposes school prayer and aspects of the Republican welfare reform plan.

"Republicans rejected Rockefeller, why would they want a clone?" asks Lyn Nofziger, a former adviser to Ronald Reagan who supports Bob Dole.

Political observers tick off these fault lines that opponents might exploit in a campaign:

■ Powell's military record. He is no Dwight Eisenhower, who forged history's greatest battlefield victory. In the Persian Gulf War, Powell was reluctant to get in — he favored an extended economic embargo — and he acquiesced in ending the war before Iraq's Saddam Hussein was neutralized and the Republican Guard destroyed.

And in following a political route to the top, boosted by heavyweight mentors such as Caspar Weinberger and Frank Carlucci, Powell left detractors in the ranks.

■ His military philosophy. "The Powell Doctrine" opposes the use of troops unless clear conditions are met: a precise objective, public support, a will to throw everything at the enemy, an exit plan, the likelihood of low casualties. Apply those rules rigidly, retired Lt. Gen. Bernard Trainor said last week, and "you will never use military force for anything."

Worse, Trainor said, Powell's concept turns 200 years of civilian control of the military on its head: "The Powell Doctrine, rigidly applied as it has been, more or less tells the president when and when not to use military force. I would submit that that is not in the interest of the republic."

■ Powell's business dealings. His silent-partner investment of $100,000 in a Buffalo, N.Y., television station, said to have brought a profit of $150,000 within 10 years, is already under scrutiny.

■ Family matters. A Powell spokeswoman confirmed that Powell's wife, Alma — who does not hide her opposition to a Powell candidacy and fears for his life if he runs — has suffered from depression and takes medication to control a chemical imbalance. The Powells might not relish seeing that hashed out in a campaign.

■ Racial politics. They cuts both ways. If he became the first black to run as a major party's nominee, Powell could get 30 to 50 percent of the black vote in November, eroding President Clinton's baseline support, Nofziger estimated.

On the other hand, "there will be people who will not vote for Colin Powell because he's black and who will lie to pollsters about it," said Alan Hertzke, a University of Oklahoma political scientist. Powell offers "racial absolution to white America" and would attract votes from whites, he said. On balance, political observers say, race could be a plus, especially in states where Democrats and independents can vote in a Republican primary.

■ Powell's political innocence. He hasn't been subject to the rough and tumble and doesn't have a canned answer to questions that demand detailed knowledge.

TEE: Lawsuit asks if a golf hole's a trademark products."

Tour 18 claims the plaintiffs' lawsuit, which seeks to prevent the duplication of courses, has cost the Texas entrepreneurs some $20 million.

Before the Humble course opened, Wilkerson consulted the famous Fulbright and Jaworski law firm about his idea and was told it would not violate trademark laws, Durkee said.

An idea does not have be registered to be a trademark. If unique enough, some ideas or institutions are considered trademarks under American law.

Tour 18 recently opened its second course in Dallas and has plans for a third in Atlanta and eventually, a public stock offering.

Gambrell painted Wilkerson and his associates as unscrupulous businessmen who secretly videotaped different courses and made under-the-table payments to designers of the golf courses.

Durkee countered that Wilkerson legally obtained maps of the courses. Wilkerson did take video of the courses as he played them, but videotaping on the courses was not barred.

The trial is expected to continue through the week.

STUNG: Many separatists vow to work harder

anti-ethnic."

Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien now must seek ways to mollify the people of Quebec — half of whom voted for a new order — by searching for ways to give them greater autonomy that will be acceptable to the rest of the nation.

Despite the political uncertainties, relief at the rejection of separatism rippled through Canada's economy Tuesday, driving up the depressed Canadian dollar and the Toronto stock market.

Alain Gagnon, a political scientist and director of Quebec studies at McGill University, said federalists had to take the warning of a new referendum "in a very serious way," adding, "If they want Quebec to stay in the federation they must deliver on constitutional changes giving Quebec more autonomy."

A number of federalist leaders Tuesday urged quick action to meet the Quebec demands for constitutional renewal.

"Canada has a chance to rebuild," said Jean Charest, leader of the small Conservative Party, a Quebecer who played a key role in the federalist victory.

"There is a very broad consensus in the country that we should look at how we deliver services so that they will be closer to the people," he said. "We can move very rapidly on those things without changing the Constitution."

Clyde Wells, the premier of Newfoundland, said it was time to re-examine the country's institutions. "Clearly, the people of Canada indicated to the people of Quebec in the last 10 days or so that they are willing to sit down and look at changes," he said in a television interview.

But Quebec's demands have hinged on recognition in the Constitution of its distinct character, as a protection against efforts by English Canada to undermine its language, culture or special civil code of justice based on the French system.

It is something that many in English Canada have balked at giving because it implies different treatment for different provinces.

If Parizeau's reputation was diminished by the referendum, Chretien did not come through the ordeal unscathed.

UPBEAT: Norwest economist discusses economic growth in basin more moderate 2 percent growth in 1996, reflecting softer national and international economies.

But the native of South Korea cautioned that Midland and Odessa, while doing a good job of diversifying from dependence on the oil and gas industry, need to diversify even more.

He called for improving the balance between higher-paying manufacturing jobs and trade and service jobs. Manufacturing employs 7.7 percent of Midland and Odessa residents at present, compared to 13 percent statewide, 15 percent nationwide and down from 12 percent in 1978. At the same time, trade has risen from 32 percent in 1978 to 35 percent 1995.

And while he applauded the surge in retail and restaurant establishments, particularly along Midland's Loop 250, Sohn said, "I am concerned about a boom and bust in retail," questioning how many new restaurants and retail stores the area could support.

He cited Austin, with its success in attracting high-paying high-tech manufacturing facilities such as Samsung, and said he saw no reason Midland-Odessa could not attract similar facilities, particularly because of Austin's high real estate costs and wages, which are deterring some potential manufacturers. Sohn also said tax incentives and abatements such as a half-percent sales tax devoted to economic development would be a great benefit to the area.

He recommended targeting small manufacturers such as medical equipment, auto parts and housing — windows and molding. "I'm talking about a lot of singles as opposed to home runs," he said. "Home runs are nice but they don't happen that often."

And Midland and Odessa remain heavily dependent on the oil and gas industry, he noted.

Sohn is upbeat about the outlook for the energy industry, though he said that short-term, he is concerned about a possible downward trend in prices.

"OPEC produces 25 million barrels of oil per day while non-OPEC countries produce 42 million barrels a day, slightly exceeding demand and the reason prices have been on a downward trend. So non-OPEC production is the problem," he said. Technological advances have led to production increases in such areas as the North Sea, and the possibility remains that Iraq will be allowed to return to the market, he added.

Still, he and his colleagues foresee increased demand, due to both rising consumption because of the low prices and to developing economies. Thailand, for example, Sohn said, has 10 percent economic growth and 13 percent growth in energy demand, a situation closely repeated in China. Demand is also expected to rise in Eastern Europe and Latin America, he said.

Through 1996, he forecasts oil prices in the $16.50 to $18.50 range, rising to the $27-$30 range in real terms, adjusting for inflation, by 2010, if supply and demand growth continues as projected.

Natural-gas prices should follow that trend closely, he said, adding that gas prices are currently undervalued on a British thermal unit basis and should rise quickly to catch up with oil prices.

Though energy is 12 percent of Texas' gross state product, Texans — and Americans in general — can expect to see continued domestic production declines as the nation's wells mature and low prices discourage production of hard-to-produce reserves. About 65 percent of the world's reserves are in the politically unstable Middle East. Unless more oil is found or consumption is forced down, Sohn said, "In the future we'll have depend even more on oil from the Middle East."

Furthermore, he said, Midland and Odessa is heavily affected by the national and international economies, in effect losing control of its own destiny.

For the national economy, he presently sees the best of all worlds, moderate economic growth and virtually no inflation.

"The question is, how long will this soft landing last," Sohn said. The answer, he said, depends on how many internal and external shocks the economy suffers.

He said he has warned Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan that interest rates are too high, that the economy needs an insurance policy. Another shock could come from Japan, which has become an integral part of world economies. At present Japan is unstable with its economy suffering through a recession.

"What happens there will affect the U.S.," Sohn said, "and it's important to watch Japan and assist if necessary."

Barring any internal or external economic shocks, he said, this soft landing could last for some time — "just what the doctor ordered."

San Antonio's homeless wait, hope for '50 Dollar Man' to show

By Julia Prodis
Associated Press

He first made a money drop in August but didn't start doling out cash regularly until a month ago, when he pulled up in his new pickup and enlisted the help of four men living at the Salvation Army shelter to act as guards.

SAN ANTONIO — Hanging out among the rock piles and broken beer bottles under the Nolan Street Bridge, Larry and his homeless buddies waited for the 50 Dollar Man.

He'd been showing up at the homeless shelters on either side of the freeway overpass every Wednesday for the last three weeks, handing out stacks of $50s and $20s from the window of his pickup truck.

Larry and his buddies didn't want to miss him if he showed — but they were a little skeptical, especially after the melee that broke out last week.

As they passed around 40-ounce beers wrapped in brown paper bags on the warm October afternoon, their eyes darted to the Salvation Army a block to the east and the Christian Assistance Ministries shelter a block to the west.

"I can run either way," said gap-toothed Larry, a 47-year-old Vietnam veteran who asked that his last name not be used because he doesn't want his mother to know he's homeless.

The 50 Dollar Man — a homeless man who struck it rich — wants to remain anonymous, too. He will use only his first name, Mark.

"THE IMPORTANT thing is that I stay anonymous and then I can continue helping these people," he told the San Antonio Express-News this week. He declined an interview with The Associated Press.

The 36-year-old benefactor, a blond man with a neatly trimmed mustache, usually shows up wearing jeans, a casual shirt with rolled-up sleeves and silver-tipped black suede cowboy boots.

He said he was homeless for six months in Orlando, Fla., 14 years ago when he got laid off from a lumber yard: "I was helping out some street people and they stole the last $80 I had, and then I was out on the street."

He returned to the Midwest to join the family business — manufacturing boiler parts. Eventually he sold that company, and moved his wife, his two children and his aircraft parts company to San Antonio in April.

"I found God," he said, and wanted to use his wealth to help others.

He has become an angel to the street people on Skid Row, eight blocks from the Alamo and the River Walk of pricey shops and cafes.

Because of him, many homeless people walk around with new Walkmans and tennis shoes. Some pooled their money for a hotel room last weekend, watched football and ate pizza.

BUT A shelter administrator says the cash is causing trouble — street people are buying booze and drugs and the publicity is attracting those who aren't even needy.

"I guess it was OK until I found out all they did was have a beer party," said Irma Mellon, director of the Salvation Army shelter. "This has gotten out of hand. I wish it would stop."

The benefactor told the San Antonio newspaper that he didn't care what people did with the money.

But this week he switched from cash to $20 Wal-Mart gift certificates — and he handed them out on Tuesday instead of Wednesday, disappointing people like Larry and his buddies.

On Wednesday, instead of dispensing cash, the 50 Dollar Man delivered cases of diapers and toiletries to a women's shelter, wrote a check for $1,750 to pay the $40 weekly rent of people living at the Salvation Army and asked the kitchen staff if they needed another truck to deliver meals. He had slipped into the shelter after the waiting crowds had gone.

HE FIRST made a money drop in August but didn't start doling out cash regularly until a month ago, when he pulled up in his new pickup and enlisted the help of four men living at the Salvation Army shelter to act as guards.

As homeless people lined up, he began handing out $50 bills from the window, open just a crack. When he ran out, he went to the bank, got a stack of $20s and passed those out, too.

By the third Wednesday, a crowd of roughly 150 had gathered.

Fernando Garcia, a 34-year-old who ives on federal assistance because of his paranoid schizophrenia, was at the end of the line when chaos broke out.

"People were screaming, yelling, pushing. Then the man with the money went down. The line shifted around and people jumped each other and someone snatched the money from him," said Garcia, who eats lunch at the Salvation Army.

Michael Janiga, who works at the shelter doing laundry and helped hand out Wal-Mart coupons Tuesday, said the 50 Dollar Man's giveaways were getting out of control, "so now it's kind of a hit-and-run kind of thing."

So a day later, on Wednesday, dozens of street people congregated outside both shelters, waiting and hoping.

"WHERE'S THE money man?" they asked each other. "Is the money man coming today?"

Irene Avila, 18, left Michigan to find her baby's father and needed $138 for bus fare to get home. "My boyfriend is giving me trouble so I'm going to leave," said Avila, her back bowing under the weight of the carrier strapping her 4-month-old child to her belly.

In the shade of the shelter's eaves, two young men boasted about how much they've grabbed.

"I got $120 — two 50s and a 20. I jumped on the hood of his truck to get it," said Robert Walker, 28, who was wearing a diamond-encrusted gold-colored watch. He also got two Wal-Mart coupons: "I sold one to someone for $10 and gave another to a friend who needed clothes."

Irene Reyes, who brought her two daughters and granddaughters, was here two weeks ago trying to get the Salvation Army to pay her $189 water bill when a man pulled up and handed her a $50. She used it to pay the debt.

HER 20-YEAR-OLD daughter, Eren Saucedo, who has a 4-year-old and 6-month-old, said she could use money to buy a mattress but was getting tired of waiting.

"If you want to go, go," said Reyes, who says she's 35 and looks 50. "But I'm staying right here and getting my $50."

But like most of the others, she got tired and left by mid-afternoon and never saw Mark walk into the shelter and cut the rent check.

Under the Nolan Street Bridge, Larry was still waiting. He put aside his paperback mystery and thought about dinner and what he'd do with a little cash.

"I'd buy a big old jumbo beef Po' Boy sandwich with big jumbo fries and a salad," he said. "It costs $3.50 — according to my standards that's not cheap. Who can afford an 8-ounce steak on the streets?"

Study: Work can be dangerous for women

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Women face just as much danger as men from violent attacks at work, with nurses and teachers among those most at risk, according to a study released Monday.

Homicide is the leading cause of death of women on the job, and women in health care, education and social services face the highest risk of violence at work, the Center for Women in Government at the State University of New York at Albany concluded.

About 260,000 women annually are victims of workplace rapes, beatings and other forms of violence, according to the report. The study was commissioned by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and relied primarily on 1993 data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Workplace assaults serious enough to warrant time off from work injured 58 out of every 100,000 women in 1993. The comparable rate for men was 52 assaults, the study said.

"There's this perception that violence is a male problem. What we wanted to point out is that women have the same or greater risk," said Dr. Sharon Harlan, an author of the study.

Harlan said it's likely that many attacks are not reported, just like many incidents of domestic violence remain undetected.

According to the report:

■ Female government employees are several times more likely to be attacked than private sector employees;

■ The rate of non-fatal assaults against black women at work is twice the rate for white women;

■ Nurse's aide, nurse, police officer and secondary school teacher ranked among the most dangerous jobs for women;

■ Female food service workers, hotel workers, cashiers and taxi drivers were among those most likely to be killed on the job.

The study said two-thirds of the non-fatal attacks on women are committed by patients or residents of institutions such as hospitals and prisons.

Dr. Leslie Wolfe, president of the non-profit Center for Women Policy Studies in Washington D.C., said a lot of domestic violence spills over into the workplace.

"Men and women have different fears of violence and their employers need to realize that these fears are, unfortunately, quite legitimate," Wolfe said.

FBI profiler: Unabomber will strike again

By Richard Cole
Associated Press

'A person like this will find some other excuse, some other happening. It's not going to keep him satisfied. I would expect there to be another bomb before long.'

— John Douglas
retired FBI agent

SAN FRANCISCO — The Unabomber probably drives an older car but keeps it in good condition. He may have a wife or girlfriend, but she knows there's a certain part of the house — a basement, a special room — that's off limits.

In the same way other people might talk baseball, he likes to discuss the bombings — how stupid the FBI is, how smart the bomber is.

He probably visited the scene of his early bombings, talked to police, asked questions, maybe even offered advice.

He may have taken a trip this summer.

And he will kill again.

So says John Douglas, the now-retired FBI agent who developed the agency's psychological profiling techniques and drew up the Unabomber's profile when the bombings began 17 years ago.

Douglas, 50, discusses the Unabomber in his new book "Mindhunter," an account of his successes and failures, including the Green River killings and the investigation that inspired the book and the movie "Silence of the Lambs."

IN AN interview this week, Douglas offered insights into the Unabomber, who has killed three people and wounded 23 in 16 attacks since 1978.

The Unabomber is believed to be a white man now living or working around San Francisco. His first few bombings were at Chicago-area universities.

"I'm sure with those early bombs he hung around," Douglas said. "He would have been interviewed (by police), he would have been standing there, and he would have tried to inject himself into the investigation."

Douglas strongly favored publishing the Unabomber's 35,000-word manifesto, as The Washington Post did last month, calling it a good investigative tool. But he said no one should believe the Unabomber's promise in return to stop killing.

"A person like this will find some other excuse, some other happening," Douglas said. "It's not going keep him satisfied. I would expect there to be another bomb before long."

DOUGLAS WAS intrigued by the Unabomber's hastily withdrawn threat to blow up a Los Angeles airliner in June. He noted it came at the beginning of his three-month deadline to publish the manifesto.

"Why do you give somebody that long a deadline? Why not a week?" Douglas asked.

He suggested the threat's withdrawal and the long deadline were related.

"It's June — maybe he's off from school, he's traveling, he won't be available for the summer," Douglas said. "And since he's traveling, maybe flying, he realizes he doesn't want a hardening of security at the airports."

The manifesto reaffirmed for Douglas his picture of the Unabomber as now in his late 30s or 40s, meticulous — he spray-painted the inside of some of his bombs — underachieving, intelligent and relatively anti-social.

Based on the habits of other multiple killers he has studied, Douglas also thinks the Unabomber probably drives an older car and keeps it in very good condition.

He has trouble establishing romantic relationships, but there could still be a woman in his life.

"But it's a convenience-type of thing," Douglas said. "They may share resources. But if this woman is at his house, she knows there's a spot that's off limits — basement, cellar, a private room."

INSIDE THAT room, Douglas said, besides his work bench and bomb parts, the Unabomber probably keeps a scrapbook or diary of his deeds.

Douglas agreed with the FBI's recent focus on Chicago, where the Unabomber probably lived or went to school when the bombings began. He's more likely to have made mistakes early on, before he refined his methods.

"He also would be obsessed with the investigation," Douglas said. "While other people would want to talk about the Cubs, he would want to talk about the bombings, how badly law enforcement was handling them, maybe how 'it served so-and-so right'" to be bombed.

The Unabomber also would praise the intelligence of the person who made the bombs, Douglas said.

"Mindhunter: Inside the FBI's Elite Serial Crime Unit," published by Scribner, goes on sale Oct. 31. In it Douglas recounts how he parlayed his psychology degree into a job as the agency's serial crimes expert. He was the model for Agent Jack Crawford in "Silence of the Lambs."

IN REAL life, he correctly profiled the Trailside Killer near San Francisco, right down to the murderer's stutter. He predicted the Atlanta child murderer would be black, not a white racist as many feared, and correctly said the killer was tied to only 12 of the slayings.

To reach his insights, Douglas interviewed such killers as Charles Manson, Chicago nurse killer Richard Speck and David "Son of Sam" Berkowitz.

The caseload, the cruelty and the pressure almost killed Douglas during the still-unsolved Green River killings in Washington. In 1983, agents found him in his hotel room in a coma, partially paralyzed and almost dead of viral encephalitis. Doctors blamed the illness on stress, and it took six months before he was well enough to return to work.

Though he retired in June, he still finds himself watching over his daughters. He knows too well what can happen to the unwary.

"We've become desensitized," he said. "It's the increased mobility, the breakdown of the church, the breakdown of the family."

Governor faces creditors' cross-examination at bankruptcy hearing

PHOENIX (AP) — Gov. Fife Symington, a one-time millionaire who promised to run the state like his real estate empire, told creditors at a bankruptcy hearing Tuesday he has turned to his wife and mother to help pay his mounting debts.

The two-term Republican underwent a painstaking examination of his finances but offered little new in his first court appearance since filing for personal bankruptcy Sept. 20.

Though he comes from a family that traces its wealth to industrialist Henry Clay Frick, and is married to a wealthy heiress, Symington claimed assets of just $61,000. Other assets, including his townhouse in an exclusive gated community, are in the name of his wife, Ann.

Symington lost millions in Arizona's boom-to-bust real estate economy in the late 1980s and early 1990s.

He owes nearly $25 million, including more than $11 million to a consortium of union pension funds that financed a downtown shopping center that has attracted almost no shops or shoppers.

Attorney Michael Manning, representing the pension funds, questioned Symington for nearly two hours. He probed for details of family trusts that Symington said were established for him by his grandfather.

Manning also asked the governor to confirm figures included in a series of financial statements used to secure bank loans for some of his 13 real estate developments.

Creditors are expected to try to get money from the trusts or Ann Symington, and to try to prove Symington fudged the statements to get loans.

Symington responded vaguely to most questions, saying he could not recall specific details of transactions that in some cases were several years old.

Symington's temper flared briefly when Manning questioned him about a figure in a news release issued by the governor the day he filed for bankruptcy.

"Perhaps you're trying to embarrass me?" he said. The governor later called the question "pure politics."

Manning said that despite the sometimes vague answers, he was satisfied.

"It's the first round and it went like we expected it to," he said. "We gained a lot of information we needed. There's a lot of fodder to follow."

Symington said he has four family trusts which provide about $30,000 a year in interest. He said he also has received portions of the principal on a few occasions in the past.

"I have the ability to request a distribution from the trustees. They are totally independent. Sometimes they say yes, sometimes they say no," Symington said. He provided no details other than to say that some of the money from the trusts went to pay legal and accounting fees.

He said he doesn't know the total value of the trusts, though he has previously said they are worth less than $1 million total.

Symington also said his wife and mother have helped pay off legal bills that have amounted to over $1 million.

He was sued in 1991 by the federal Resolution Trust Corp. over his actions as director of a failed savings and loan that invested in one of his projects. He and other defendants settled the $200 million lawsuit for $12 million in an agreement that didn't require Symington to pay any money or admit wrongdoing.

A parallel criminal investigation by a federal grand jury continues.

In addition to legal fees, Symington said he owed about $1 million to the accounting firm Coopers & Lybrand and has paid part of it.

"Those fees were paid out of various sources, some of which I paid, some of which my wife paid," Symington said. He said his mother, Martha, also contributed $30,000 to $40,000.

Bare statistics show America in numbers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Homes without cable TV are a definite minority. One in three Americans is still exercising after 75. Rock music sales are twice those of country and 10 times those of jazz.

Here is America in bare statistics, devoid of interpretation. Stacks of stats. From labor force to labor rooms. The kind of stuff important to public officials, business analysts, educators, librarians, research workers, students and the merely curious.

Thirty-four percent of Americans 26 and over have smoked marijuana at some time in their lives, but only 3 percent are current users. Eight percent of households have herb gardens. A family of four pays more state and local taxes in Newark, N.J., than in other big cities. Lotteries racked up more than $25 billion sales.

Such minutiae abound in the new Statistical Abstract of the United States published on Tuesday. It is a book of more than 1,000 pages, some with enough facts for a game of "Jeopardy!" or "Trivial Pursuit."

You learn that lottery ticket sales totaled $2.3 billion in 1980 but $28.5 billion last year. That of 187.7 million adults in the 1993-1994 period, 69 million had no cable television.

That in 1992, there were 6.4 million pregnancies, 4 million births and 1.5 million abortions. The rest were miscarriages. Seventeen percent of women of childbearing age used contraceptive pills; 10.5 percent relied on condoms. Thirty percent were surgically sterile.

Also in 1992, there were 400,000 injuries involving beds, mattresses and pillows; 44,000 involving cleaning agents and 24,000 involving cigarettes. But the most injuries of all by far, 1.8 million, had to do with stairs, ramps, landings and floors.

The book is a set of statistics in itself, bringing together the most recent figures from the last year or two or three. The government has put it out since 1878, drawing on both public and private sources. The 115th edition adds 76 new tables for a total of 1,512. They include estimates of undocumented immigrants, use of computers, bond ratings for states and cities, union membership by state and home ownership rates.

It drops some, too. No more does the abstract list household pet ownership, medical device implants by age, sex and race, or summary of operations of intercity bus lines.

One of the new tables gives statistics on mothers who smoked during pregnancy. Nearly 18 percent of white mothers smoked during pregnancy and 14 per cent of black mothers did. Mothers who never attended high school or were high school graduates were less likely to smoke during pregnancy than those who finished their educations at grades 9 through 11.

A table on diseases reported by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta bears this notice, "Figures should be interpreted with caution," because some are incomplete.

Of reportable diseases, which include rabies, tetanus, tuberculosis and typhus, the largest number by far was for cases of AIDS, 103,691 in 1993. The second ranked was aseptic meningitis, 12,848.

On a less somber note:

■ In 1993, movies took in $48 billion, an increase of nearly $5 billion over the previous year. There were 2 billion books sold, 1.2 billion of them paperbacks. The 35-44 year-old age group bought more books than any other.

■ Amateur softball engaged 42 million Americans on 200,000 adult teams and 62,000 for kids. There were 24.6 million golfers, playing 498 million rounds; 22 million tennis players using 230,000 courts. Americans bought 13 million bicycles, 5 million of them imported.

And there was record attendance, 71 million, at major league baseball in 1993, the last year listed in the abstract. There won't be a record in the next edition for 1994. The season was truncated by a strike.

Separatist move would be mistake

Although the message from Canada's close secessionist vote Monday should reaffirm the importance of national unity, the decision that left Canada as one sovereign state will not necessarily be the final word on Canadian unity.

The vote margin reflected increasing sentiment in the French-speaking province of Quebec to break away from Canada to form its own nation. Quebec's separatists in 1980 lost in an independence referendum by a 60 percent to 40 percent margin. Monday, however, the margin was much closer — with Canadians favoring national unity by a margin of 50.6 percent to 49.4 percent for the separatists.

What that close vote means is that the mood for separatism will continue and likely be brought to another vote in the future. At that time, the separatists could win. Canada's future as a sovereign state is far from guaranteed.

Yet Canada's situation should serve as a case in point for other nations — including, particularly, the United States — which have found ethnic and cultural differences tugging at their national seams in recent times.

Problems relating to national unity have plagued many nations through the years, the most recent noteworthy examples being the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which broke apart due to the weight of 70 years as a Communist government and the democratic revolution in Eastern Europe, and the Canadian situation.

National unity, however, can only develop if different ethnic groups which come to settle in a country place the interests of their new nation ahead of even their own cultural and ethnic differences. It is a matter, if you will, of saying that you may have been born in a different country where you spoke a different language, but when you came to this country all that became secondary to your allegiance to this land.

For over two centuries, Americans of different colors, creeds, and religious beliefs have fought side by side to preserve the freedoms this nation guarantees to all people. They've not done that as Texans, or New Yorkers, or Carolinians; they've done it as Americans.

That does not mean that a person's heritage or background — is unimportant or that ethnic heritage should not be commemorated.

The United States is rich because of the cultural diversity of its people but new arrivals must continue to have as their goal the blending with Americans already here. Taking part in the daily life of the nation as full-fledged members of society must be accomplished as soon as possible even when that is not easily done. Blending, not separating on the basis of heritage or language, is what makes a nation of diverse peoples great.

In their rush to separate from Canada, the Quebec separatists appear to have forgotten that their country is "Canada" because of the diverse people and regions that comprise it.

Big HMO intimidates tiny research outfit

WASHINGTON — Insurance industry gadfly Martin Weiss has made a career of beating the system. But now the system is finally getting the better of him.

Health Net, one of California's largest health maintenance organizations, is suing Weiss and his company, Weiss Research, a tiny outfit based in Palm Beach, Fla. Health Net is suing because Weiss had the chutzpah to issue a report claiming, in part, that Health Net was "far too leveraged in its business operations" and that it didn't have enough capital to meet its financial obligations. In a financial review of the nation's 13 largest HMOs, Health Net was the only company to receive a "D" rating from Weiss.

Anderson

In reality, the Health Net case should send a chill up the spine of anyone who believes in the First Amendment and the right of the consumer to get independent advice and information before choosing something as important as a health care plan.

The official charge is libel, but common sense suggests the real purpose is to intimidate. So far, Weiss claims, the suit has cost him more than $350,000 in legal fees — though he has yet to set foot in a courtroom. Such legal fees can be petty cash for a giant corporation, but a king's ransom for a small insurance ratings agency whose chief revenue comes from selling reports on insurance company safety. Weiss has filed a motion to have Health Net's case declared a "slapp" suit — legalese for harassment — which could make Health Net liable for a portion of Weiss' legal fees.

David Olson, Health Net's vice president for investor and public relations, told our associate Jan Moller that the company is performing "brilliantly" in the marketplace. "Our basic position is that Weiss yelled 'fire' in a crowded movie theater and deliberately sought to frighten our members ...," Olson said. "(Weiss') numbers were not inaccurate, but the conclusion was."

Weiss Research pales in size when compared to its major competitors — Moody's, Standard & Poor's, and A.M. Best & Co. But the other companies receive revenue from the companies they rate, which creates an inherent conflict of interest. The other ratings agencies also give companies the right to suppress any ratings they don't like. Weiss takes no money from the industry; his only income comes from the customers who buy his reports. So far, it's a strategy that seems to have worked.

According to a three-year study of the insurance raters by the General Accounting Office, completed last fall, Weiss' ratings reflected financial vulnerability three times more often than A.M. Best in insurance company failures between 1989 and 1992. In a majority of the cases studied, Weiss warned which insurers were financially vulnerable about 15 months before its closest competitor, A.M. Best. And in the case of the largest insurance company failures — such as Executive Life of California and Executive Life of New York, Weiss was far ahead of the others in predicting disaster.

While there are many agencies that rate banks and insurance companies, the managed care industry remains relatively untouched by regulators and raters more than a decade after becoming a major player in the health care field. In reality, HMOs are just like any other health insurance — only without the scrutiny that insurance companies face.

Although most HMOs are in outstanding shape today, that was not the case just seven years ago. In 1988, there were 99 failures and forced mergers out of 581 operating HMOs — a rate of financial flops that rivals anything commercial banks and insurance companies have seen since the Great Depression.

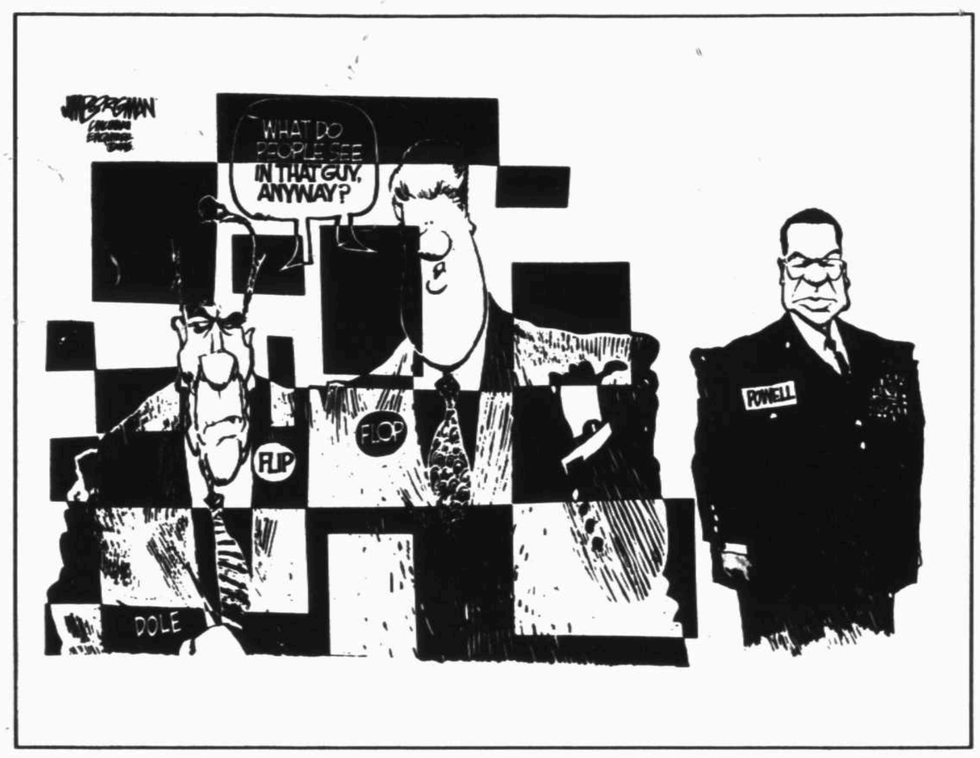

When a bank or an S&L fails, however, the only loss is financial. A weak HMO can spell trouble for patients — as Nelene Fox found out the hard way.

Fox was a cancer patient whose doctors told her the only chance for survival was a bone marrow transplant, but Health Net refused to approve the procedure. When her family sued after her death, Newsweek reported, the jurors found the HMO "guilty of bad faith, breach of contract and intentional infliction of pain." Her family was awarded $89 million, though that figure may have been reduced in a sealed settlement.

Health Net has a lot at stake in this fast-growing market, and a negative rating can be a black eye that's hard to recover from. But Weiss did not create Health Net's problems; he only reported them. And that's a right that should not be infringed by frivolous law suits.

Voters should get kick from quote

I thought all the thinking Midlanders would get a kick out of our Texas Attorney General Dan Morales' recent quote regarding our parenting abilities and rights and that those same thinkers would like to pass along that kick to ol' Danny Boy. He says in a recent court appeal Pasadena ISD that "parents do NOT have a fundamental right to direct the education and upbringing of their children." What do we think about that sinister view? Why don't we call him at 512-463-2100 or write to him in Austin and let him know how his quote has helped us better know him and we plan on using that information the next time his name hits a ballot!

Hospice gives care, comfort to families

After a long illness, my husband died where he wanted to — at home with his family. Despite many trips to the hospital, we were unable to "make him well," but with Hospice's help we were able to grant him that wish. Hospice of Midland gave him that opportunity with care and comfort and dignity, but even more — a loving, friendship relationship — like being nursed by family.

Since January 1995, I have had the privilege of serving on the Hospice board and I can assure you that our utmost interest is in the patient — not only those currently under care, but reaching out to those who need, but do not know about us or our services. This board has many professionals who give Hospice their time because this is an organization that they care about. We meet at noon (eating a lunch prepared or furnished by a fellow board member) and much of our time is devoted to discussing ways to invest funds safely to assure that Hospice will always be able to meet the needs of the community.

Please do not let the problems of hospices in neighboring communities cause you to have concerns about Hospice of Midland.

ANOTHER VIEW

Africa's troubled region is currently Nigeria

Nigeria, the most populous of Africa's countries and one of the world's biggest in numbers, just celebrated its 35th anniversary of freedom from Great Britain.

Although a major African oil producer with educated citizens and a developing infrastructure, Nigeria's "celebration" took an odd turn. Gen. Sani Abacha's military government decided to extend itself for almost three years, despite an earlier promise to leave this year.

Twenty-four of the country's previous years have been under military rule — eight regimes in all — and only one junta has ever restored civilian control.

The Abacha government is one of the worst, having jailed military, political and intellectual leaders; fought strikes; cut freedom of expression; and generally been a bad egg in human rights. These departures from democracy have reduced the cohesion of the country and damaged social and economic development to the point where the per capita income has plunged to $250, leaving Nigeria close to bankruptcy.

Although Gen. Abacha said he must create a climate for democracy before stepping down Oct. 1, 1998, his opponents are outraged. They don't believe he has any plans whatsoever to turn over power.

Africa needs an economically powerful Nigeria to lead it upward. Instead, Nigeria is contributing to the continent's teeming problems. It is time for countries with influence to switch their international outrage from South Africa to Nigeria.

Readers' views on: open campus lunch

Build fences, gates for closed campus

Regarding Bryan Broughton's letter of Oct. 15: I'm aware of the fact that you are against off-campus lunch. I support this position. The first goal to proceed for off-campus lunch to operate, is to build fences around the school and place security guards, gates at every exit. Not allowing students to leave would destroy the problems with students coming back to school drunk or high. The accident rates around the school would decrease, because of less traffic. The attendance rate for the students also would improve. If all the students ate lunch at school, the trash would be off the streets. In the case of bought food, it would be used instead of wasted. The students probably would get more time to eat in the hands of the school board, and then the school day could be cut shorter. One negative problem with closed-campus lunch would be the extra jobs that would have to be required for the school such as: security, more taxes and non-free time for students. By stating my position I hope I have enforced your ability toward stopping open-campus lunch.

Students aren't troublemakers

I am writing in response to Bryan Broughton's letter printed Oct. 15. I am in high school and have an open-campus lunch hour. I am insulted that Broughton would stereotype all students, making us all sound like troublemakers. Also that all of us are to be blamed for the conflicts that the "respected, educated and family oriented" people have at lunch. Sure, fast-food restaurants may be more crowded than if we weren't there, but it's not like we are in every restaurant. Can't you find somewhere that might not conflict with you?

As far as responsibility, we learn responsibility by having to be back at school on time. About littering, you can't honestly tell me that high school students are the only ones who litter. Everyone of every age has littered at some time.

Also, what on earth does having open-campus lunch have to do with a good education and becoming a family oriented business person? Broughton, are you trying to say that because you had closed campus it has made you a better person? If so, something is very wrong with our society.

Adrian Nobles
Midland

Lunch hour teaches responsibility

I am responding to the letter in the newspaper that Broughton wrote about teens not being responsible. If we had closed lunch then we wouldn't even have any lessons on being responsible. We have to be back in time for lunch so we have to learn to budget our money and time. I believe he was totally wrong, and not all teens are bad at lunch.

Sarah Luehring

Open campus brings money to community

I'm writing in response to the editorial written by Bryan Broughton. Since when did eating in the cafeteria or eating a sacked lunch make students more respectable, educated and family oriented? Working people don't have to schedule their lunches in a 50-minute interval between 11:50 a.m. and 12:40 p.m. Also, most working people don't go to lunch at fast-food places. If you do, I'm sorry you have to stand in line behind a high school student.

Open campus allows thousands of dollars to enter into the community. Going out for lunch teaches students responsibility in how to manage money and return to school on time. How can leaving school for lunch interfere with a good education? Leaving gives students a break from the hassles of school.

Open campus may cause traffic jams during lunch, but what about the traffic that is caused by all the working people when they get off work?

Please, give us a break and get over it. How is open campus harming you?

Shoppers head to Britain for cheaper 'test-tube' babies

IVF costs reflect the same factors that make medical care more expensive in the United States than in Britain. Americans demand more tests, doctors pay higher malpractice insurance premiums, and drugs cost more.

LONDON — Diane Clegg, a 35-year-old American, dearly hopes to become pregnant before she moves back to Atlanta in January. She can't afford it back home.

Clegg is having "in vitro" fertilization, the "test-tube baby" technique that costs more than twice as much in the United States as in Britain, where it was invented 17 years ago.

Though prices and success rates vary, one in-vitro fertilization (IVF) attempt typically costs about $8,000 in the United States compared with $3,500 in private centers here — and sometimes Britain's National Health Service covers part of the cost.

Many American clinics charge $10,000 or more.

IVF costs reflect the same factors that make medical care more expensive in the United States than in Britain. Americans demand more tests, doctors pay higher malpractice insurance premiums, and drugs cost more.

The chances of a successful test-tube pregnancy in either country is roughly one in five. Fertility treatment ranges from one to nine IVF attempts, or even more.

Clegg's American insurance covers three attempts. She has had two failures.

"If it doesn't work next time, we'll have to really think about it, but we probably won't do it on our own money in the States," said Clegg, who had her first child with IVF in London. "I might fly back here."

She's not alone.

"We do have a few patients who come from the U.S. They come here and have a mini-break, get down to London, and make a holiday of it," said Dr. Peter R. Brinsden, medical director of Bourn Hall Clinic in Cambridge, where the world's first test-tube baby was born in 1978.

"I've thought about setting up a package deal but we got a hostile reaction from the U.S.," said Brinsden. "It's very lucrative and competitive over there."

Treatments can be taken in long weekends.

The crucial days are around the time of ovulation, when patients get an ultrasound and then the operation to remove eggs for fertilization. Other blood tests or ultrasounds can be done by physicians in the United States.

Wendy Harding, 33, had one baby through IVF when she lived in London two years ago and will be flying back this month to try for another.

"I called the fertility clinics in the States and got the brochures," said Harding. "I had no idea about the costs."

If pregnancy was guaranteed, she said she might pay the U.S. cost. But given the odds, she said she would advise women to go to London.

"Any procedure will be higher in the U.S. ... Surgeons cost more, nurses cost more ... there's more technology in every department, but (for IVF) you are probably not getting better success rates," said Peter Neumann, a researcher at Harvard School of Public Health who has investigated IVF costs.

A month of fertility drugs costs about $2,000 in the United States compared to about $600 in Britain.

Pergonal, the leading fertility drug sold Swiss drug-makers Ares-Serono, costs about $25 an ampule in Britain compared with $65 in the United States. A woman may take between 20 to 40 ampules, or more, for one cycle of treatment — along with other drugs.

Cost-shifting is also a factor. Hospitals need profit-making departments to make up for profit-losing ones. And IVF is a money-maker.

Insurance will drive down the costs, said DeCherney. Ten states now require that insurance companies offer a policy that covers fertility treatments. However, employers do not have to choose that package, and the vast majority of women are not covered.

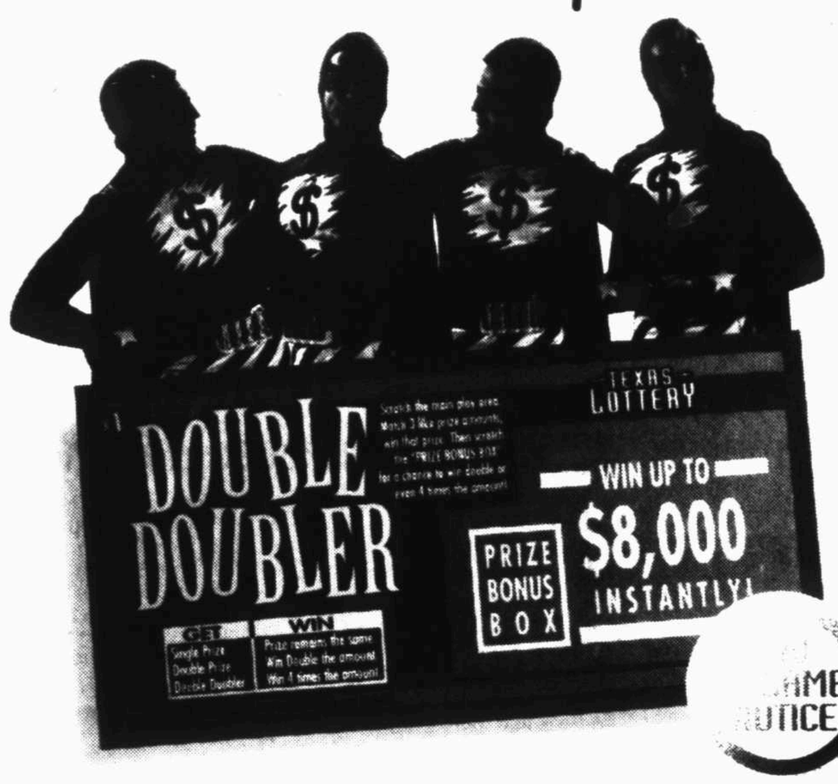

Katie Hallenborg, a 37-year-old American in London, has had three IVF children after 23 attempts. Her oldest son is adopted. She got pregnant without any treatment a few months ago.

"With my overall success rate — if we had spent $15,000 times 23 — I wouldn't have done it at home," said Hallenborg, who is from Chicago.

"I've told friends to come over here," said Hallenborg. "When it doesn't work, you can sort of justify $3,000 — you blow that on stupid clothes or an auction — but I couldn't rationalize $15,000, or even $10,000. How long does it take to earn that? It's just too devastating when it doesn't work."

Late chief justice's will leaves expensive legal tangle for heirs

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Warren Burger, once the nation's highest-ranking judge, prepared a "woefully inadequate" will before he died, and it could cost his heirs plenty. The legal tangle is a cautionary tale for those Americans who have avoided proper estate planning.

"This really is a sad example," said lawyer George W. Dodge in Arlington, Va. "Burger's estate of $1.8 million may face federal and state taxes of over $450,000. He possibly could have avoided all that."

Burger, who served as the nation's chief justice longer than anyone this century, retired in 1986. He died last June at age 87.

Just after his wife died in 1994, Burger used a computer to type a one-page will leaving one-third of his estate to his daughter, Margaret, and two-thirds to his son, Wade.

It appears the ex-chief justice prepared the will hastily, not bothering to check his spelling.

The document named Wade Burger and J. Michael Luttig, a federal appellate judge and a former law clerk and special assistant to Burger, as executors but misspelled the designation once as "exeuctors."

'This really is a sad example. Burger's estate of $1.8 million may face federal and state taxes of over $450,000. He possibly could have avoided all that.'
— George W. Dodge, lawyer
Arlington, Va.

More importantly, the document did not grant the executors any power to sell Burger's real estate. "That omission means they need a probate court's permission to dispose of the property. We're talking about unnecessary attorney fees and court costs," Dodge told The Associated Press.

In an article published in the Arlington County Bar Association Journal, Dodge called the will woefully inadequate.

The article noted that the will also failed to waive bond or surety, making it necessary to get a bonding company to insure the executors against any claims of negligence.

The will also does not appear to be "self-proving" under Virginia law, meaning that the two witnesses to Burger's signature could be required to testify in person that they did, indeed, see him sign it.

"All these will, or could, add unnecessary costs," Dodge said.

Burger did not protect his heirs from estate taxes. Dodge, assisted by the accounting firm of Murray, Jonson, White & Associates, estimated the federal estate taxes may be as high as $378,000 and Virginia's estate-tax bite as much as $78,000.

"If proper estate planning measures had been taken, it's possible there would be no estate taxes due," Dodge said. "Through trusts and gifts, he possibly could have saved it all — and that's a huge chunk of money."

How much would such estate planning have cost Burger? Dodge said a large Virginia law firm probably would have charged Burger $2,000.

Most Americans might not need such help because the federal estate tax exempts up to $600,000 in assets and many state tax schemes mirror that exemption.

"But virtually everyone needs a will," Dodge said. "It lets you control and direct where your assets go — to your spouse, children, charities."

The will and probate record of the former chief justice, a man who zealously guarded his privacy, is open for public scrutiny at the Arlington County Courthouse, in Deed Book 196, page 96.

A lawyer familiar with Virginia probate law could have told Burger how to keep the whole thing out of the public record.

School's melting pot creates success, teacher says

By Ann Bancroft
Associated Press

NORTH HIGHLANDS, Calif. — The math students were laboring over fractions.

Two girls from Mien tribes in Laos helped a newcomer from Vietnam. A Panamanian boy chatted in rapid Spanish with his seatmates from Mexico. Teacher Vladimir Gavrilov, a native of Latvia, answered a Russian student's question in that language, then scolded a noisy Armenian boy in heavily accented English: "You should sit down. Your discipline is bad."

Divide 23 high school students by the 10 countries they come from, add a babble of languages and what do you get?

Success, their teacher says.

"Some of these kids start with no school background at all," Gavrilov said, then added proudly, "Still, all my students from last year who took the math proficiency test passed it."

Amid the tract houses of suburban Sacramento sits a school named Highlands High. But with pupils from 30 countries speaking 24 languages, you could call it Melting Pot High.

Highlands High, where the mascot is the Scot, has 1,407 students, including immigrants from Russia, Ukraine, Laos, Vietnam, Thailand, Romania, Japan, the Middle East, Panama, Samoa, Moldova, Mexico, India and the Philippines.

Some 200 recent arrivals to the United States are taught with the help of aides and fellow Highlands students to deal with the academic and social rigors of high school.

The school doesn't recruit teachers from foreign countries, but has five foreign-born aides — two Russians and three from Asian countries — some of whom can teach in their own countries but haven't met California's qualifications yet.

Gavrilov is the only immigrant teacher, a physicist who taught graduate students before he came to the United States two years ago.

His students' English ranged from nearly fluent — the Armenian boy, who has lived in this country for five years — to almost nil, as in the case of two girls, one from Laos, one from Mexico, who didn't understand the question: "Where are you from?"

Highlands High is not unusual for having a large percentage of students who don't speak English as a native language, said Norm Gold, manager for bilingual compliance for the state Department of Education.

Twenty-four percent of California's 5.3 million students have limited proficiency in English. Spanish is the language of 78 percent of them, Gold said.

It's the variety of tongues that sets Highlands apart: Arabic, Armenian, Cantonese, Estonian, Farsi-Persian, Hindi, Hmong, Hungarian, Japanese, Korean, Lao, Pilipino-Tagalog, Polish, Portuguese, Punjabi, Romanian, Russian, Samoan, Spanish, Taiwanese, Thai, Tongan, Ukrainian and Vietnamese.

The fast-growing Sacramento area became popular with immigrants because of its mild climate and lower cost of living compared with the Los Angeles and San Francisco areas, said Minh Pham, bilingual counselor at the school.

The student body reflects several trends in immigration, starting with an influx from Central America and Mexico 10 years ago.

Two years later, many Vietnamese refugees arrived, followed by Mien and Hmong refugees who came in the late 1980s. In the past three years, immigrants began arriving from former Eastern bloc countries.

"Many of these students have suffered a great deal, and for most coming here is a super-shock," said Jerry Soto, chairman of the school's English as a Second Language Department.

"Mien students come from a culture with no written language, no educational background whatsoever, and are thrown into high school," he said. "Russian students come with a very different concept of freedom than what we're used to, and they test and challenge authority to the bare limits."

Parents from some cultures, he said, expect school authorities to provide more discipline than is legally or customarily practiced.

Working with such cultural differences is "definitely a challenge for us, and it's one that's going to continue in this state," said principal Constance Farias.

The school sponsors a multicultural club, noon performances of native dances and music, and a weeklong fair where students share foods, customs and historical information.

On a recent lunch hour, black, Hispanic and white students watched and joined in a demonstration of Filipino tinikling dancing, where students hopped between bamboo poles to the rhythm of music blasting from a boom box.

In the cafeteria, Russian-speaking students ate egg rolls and burritos. Students clustered with members of their own ethnic groups at lunch tables, but there was no palpable tension between groups.

"Things are pretty cool this year," said 10th-grader Dyanna Ross, sitting with a group of black students. The variety of students, she said, "is interesting, because you can learn some of what they know, and what they've been through."

Park construction to begin soon

■ First Association of Mexican Americans (FAMA) proposed development of property off Lamesa Road in 1992.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

More than three years after a local Hispanic organization proposed that a weedy 1.5-acre eastside lot be converted to a park, construction is finally expected to begin in the next few weeks.

"We are anticipating work to begin about mid-November. It's about a four or five month project," Assistant City Manager Rick Menchaca said.

The park — to be called Unity Park In Memory of Oralia Corrales — is located on a triangular-shaped piece of land off Lamesa Road at South and Mineola streets.

The city came into the property as a result of the realignment of Lamesa Road during the late 1980s. The odd shape and size made sale of the land for commercial development unlikely.

In early 1992, the First Association of Mexican Americans (FAMA) — composed of eight Hispanic organizations — approached the city of Midland and proposed a park.

An 8-year-old girl won a name-the-park contest to call it Unity Park; later the name was revised to include In the Memory of Oralia Corrales. Ms. Corrales, who died in May 1994, was an active community leader and active in the development and beautification of the Lamesa Road area.

The planned park will include a plaza area surrounded by trees and landscaped, city officials said. "We want to improve the aesthetics in the area," Menchaca said.

Since the realignment of Lamesa Road, the park area has been essentially a weedy lot. Menchaca likened the conversion to a park to Volunteer Park at Big Spring and Marienfeld streets. That park was also once a triangular-shaped weedy lot until the park was developed by Keep Midland Beautiful using state grant funds, he said.

Unity Park In Memory of Oralia Corrales will be built for $84,400 in city funds. The City Council recently approved construction bids for landscaping, irrigation, cement work and brick and masonry work; the city sought bids three times before officials thought costs were reasonable.

In addition to city dollars, $5,000 from the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, a $1,000 donated from U.S. Rep. Henry Bonilla and any funds from personalized-brick sales through FAMA will be used for any supplemental park costs, officials said.

City officials said construction of the park is part of a larger picture affecting east Midland.

"This is a component of the overall development of the Lamesa Road area," Menchaca said. That has included rezoning of areas along the roadway to be more inviting to business development and other beautification projects in the area.

Loop 250 project proceeds to next building phase, runway closing

From Staff Reports

Construction has begun on Phase IV of the Loop 250 project — from just west of Garfield to east of "A" Street, according to a Midland official with the Texas Department of Transportation.

Jones Bros. Dirt and Paving Contractors, Inc., of Odessa has begun work to close the southeast-to-northeast runway at Midland Airpark and construction of a parallel taxiway to the east-west runway at the municipal airport, said Mike Chetty, the TxDOT engineer in charge of the project.

"We had orginally planned to build an underpass in order to avoid conflict with air traffic using the runway that is being closed, but the City of Midland indicated its willingness to abandon that runway," Chetty said. That decision will enable TxDOT to build an overpass at Garfield Street, saving the state about $1 million in construction costs and future maintenance costs of a pumping station necessary to control drainage at an underpass.

Another overpass is to be built at the "A" Street interchange, along with main lanes from four-tenths of a mile west of the Garfield interchange to seven-tenths of a mile east of "A" Street. The project will cost $6.3 million and is expected to take about 18 months to complete.

"When we complete this project, we plan to move on to a subsequent project involving the State Highway 349 and Lamesa Road interchanges," Chetty said. The final section in the current development plan — from just west of SH 349 to east of Lamesa Road — is epxected to be put under contract in June of 1997.

"Assuming the funding continues to be available, we should have Loop 250 completed from Interstate 20 to Lamesa Road by early 1999," Chetty said.

When interchange construction is under way, traffic at the affected intersections may be rerouted or delayed briefly. While most of the construction activity will take place off of the right-of-way of the existing frontage roads, motorists are urged to observe warning signs and proceed with caution through the work zones.

Farm-and-ranch tour highlights plants to horses

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Race horse or curious ostrich, autumn flower or savory pecan, there is purpose in all things in nature. Maybe a touch of beauty and grief, and profit and incentive if your timing is right and your perseverance endures.

And the timing of things in agriculture was highlighted on Tuesday in the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) farm-and-ranch tour in Midland and Ector counties.

The tour ran the gamut from low-dollar xeri-scaping in bringing floral beauty to the Confederate Air Force's Memorial Gardens to the high-dollar stakes of gambling on ostriches and siring race horses based on the futurity performances of stallions at stud.

At CAF headquarters, CAF Col. Billy Barnhill "could envision something beautiful out here" in the former prairie and inspired the mission to bring xeri-scaping and the floral beauty of native plants to the landscape, noted TAEX horticulturist Deborah Benge Frost.

Master Gardeners volunteered their expertise in designing and grooming the gardens at the CAF headquarters and the American Airpower Heritage Museum.

"It's been a wonderful opportunity for us," said CAF Executive Director Bob Rice, who noted how the stands of redbuds, desert willows, autumn joy and autumn sages enhanced World War II ceremonies, including those commemorating the D-Day Normandy Invasion, Victory in Europe, Victory in Japan, and reunions of American fighter and bomber

Lawsuit continues against several law enforcement officers

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Although some parts of a civil rights lawsuit involving many area law enforcement officers were struck down by U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson on Thursday, other parts of the case will go on.

The original suit was filed on behalf of plaintiff Gerald Hall, a deputy with the Midland Sheriff's Department, against defendants Jess and Peggy Thompson (owners of the Bingo Barn in Midland), Bobby Welborn, Ron Sartor, Charles Blankenship, Ron Benton, the Fraternal Order of Police Lodge 11 (which leased the Bingo Barn on a part-time basis), Damon Shupp, Richard Czech and David Wilks.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation and the U.S. Secret Service were dismissed from the suit shortly after it was filed in 1994.

This suit is centered around a 1993 conversation between Hall and Leonard Hendon that was allegedly taped by Jess and Peggy Thompson on a Bearkat® scanner. The scanner was able to pick up the output of Hall's cellular phone, the suit reads.

In the conversation, Hall allegedly pointed out discrepancies in the operations of the Fraternal Order of Police's Bingo Barn that should be reported as corruption.

"After hearing several references to themselves and the Bingo Barn, Peggy Thompson began recording Gerald Hall and Leonard Hendon's conversation using a recording device previously attached to the scanner," according to filings in the suit.

Hall was later approached about the conversation and a piece of the tape played for him. "The plaintiff alleges that the defendant told him the tape was obtained lawfully through the use of a wire tap ... and threats were made against him if he did not be quiet," according to statements filed in the case.

Hall's suit claims that his civil rights were violated under several federal and state statutes in the incident. On Thursday, Furgeson was called upon to rule on several motions to dismiss all claims made by Hall.

In considering these rulings, Furgeson stated that "simply because a person is employed as a law enforcement officer ... it does not mean that he acts at all times pursuant to his official duty.

In Thursday's entered orders, Furgeson granted Jess and Peggy Thompson's motion to dismiss Hall's claims dealing with "breach of duty, good faith and fair dealings."

However, Furgeson denied a similar motion dealing with claims under a statute dealing with "intentional inflicting of emotional distress." These, therefore, remain unresolved in the lawsuit.

Furgeson granted motions to dismiss Hall's claims against Damon Shupp, David Wilks and Chief Richard Czech — entirely dismissing those defendants from the lawsuit, explained City Attorney Keith Stretcher.

LAWSUIT: Dispute continues despite judge's decisions

tor, Blankenship, Benton and the FOP in their official and individual capacities were dismissed by Furgeson.

Claims under the "breach of duty, good faith and fair dealings" statutes were dismissed in the official capacity of these parties — but were retained under the individual capacities of these parties and will be dealt with as the suit progresses toward trial.

A countersuit filed by some of the original defendants, however, centers around an alleged letter-writing campaign by Hall and others shortly after the original tape was played for Hall.

This letter-writing campaign to federal and state prosecutors did not result in prosecution, but did provide the stimulus for Welborn, Sartor, Blankenship, Benton and the FOP and the Thompsons to file a countersuit against Hall and fellow counter-defendants Ed Krevit, Rusty Hill, and Sheriff Gary Painter.

This countersuit alleges that the letter-writing campaign constituted slander and defamation, intentional interference with business relationships, civil conspiracy to deny civil rights by false allegations of criminal conduct and by coercing prosecution, plaintiffs in the suit state.

Furgeson denied motions by Hall, Hill, Krevit and Painter to dismiss claims made by the counter plaintiffs.

This countersuit therefore remains to be concluded as the lawsuits progress.

TOUR: Farm's stud horses sire many winners

groups.

At Winnermaker Farms, a stallion-at-stud enterprise owned by Midland-Odessa restaurateur Bobby Cox, Winnermaker manager Bill Melson alluded to the beauty and aesthetics of race horses, especially Quarter Horses with Thoroughbred bloodlines. "They are big, stout, strong animals but pretty fragile," particularly if they suffer from colic.

Melson's assistant, Kevin Kyzer, presented a parade of proven stallions maintained and coddled for breeding, via artificial insemination, with mares. His line-up included:

■ Special Task, 6-year-old quarter horse stallion, who won the West Texas Futurity and the West Texas Derby, ran third in the Rainbow Futurity and second in the Kansas Derby. Special Task earned $262,000 as a 2-year-old and 3-year-old racehorse. Special Task's sire was Special Effort, the only horse that won the Triple Crown for the quarter horses. Special Task's stud fee is $1,500, and his sale price would be $150,000 to $200,000.

■ Merganser, a 9-year-old quarter horse stallion, who made $1.37 million and all of that but $50,000 as a 2-year-old racehorse.

■ Zevi, a thoroughbred, who is "the leading living thoroughbred sire of quarter horses right now" and whose "daughters have earned more money this year than any of the other horses." His stud fee is $3,500.

■ Rebel Dasher, a quarter horse who is the son of Dash for Cash, who was twice world's champion in 1977 and 1978, earned a half million dollars, but his offspring have earned more than $38 million. His stud fee is $1,000.

■ Make Mine Bud, a quarter horse, who is a grandson of Dash for Cash.

"If any of these horses were to start producing runners, siring runners," their stud fee would soar, Melton said.

For example, First Down Dash produced a series of All-American futurity winners, Melton said, "and his stud fee went from $3,500 to $25,000.

"If they go to siring big runners, then their popularity goes up."

TAEX agent Earnest Kiker of Midland cited the importance of the horse industry in West Texas.

"The horses vary from just a pleasure horse plumb up to the racing horse. We've got cutting horses, team-penning horses, calf-roping horses, team-roping horses, buggy horses, quarter horses, thoroughbreds, Appaloosas and Morgans."

The tour included the John Sims Pecan Grove of 80 acres and 4,000 trees, mostly Western and Desirable and some Indian pecan varieties, including the Kiowa and Tejas, at Gardendale.

"The pecan crop kind of depends where you are," said TAES agent Jim Word of Odessa.

"John (Sims) has got a very heavy crop," Word noted, and the fruits of the harvest will reveal the "type of quality" following an "extremely hot, dry summer. The trees are very heavily loaded, so they did have a tremendous water supply" through Sims' drip-irrigation system.

South of Odessa, international entrepreneur Mike Enelezakis is building the first ostrich slaughterhouse in the United States for his Ostrich Products America (OPA) on his Yellow Rose Ranch.

In South Africa in 1982, he put in an ostrich slaughterhouse and tannery.

Enelezakis, who plans to have his OPA slaughterhouse in operation before year's end, is developing markets for the big bird's crop of feathers for feather-dusters and flair, hides for leatherwear and footwear, and meat for food.

"We have to use everything," he said. "Utilization is the name of the game. Nothing goes to waste."

In the marketplace, the ostrich won't "be competing with anything," Enelezakis said. "It will be food of its own."

While the bird's meat may turn into steaks, stews, fillets or hamburger for human consumption, the viscera may be used in dog or cat food, and the gizzards and the two-towed feet are in demand as delicacies in China.

Enelezakis, who now has 800 birds on the farm, would ship the hides to his African tannery for processing.

Meanwhile, he said, "the good thing is the European market is picking up."

And while he is readying his business, Enelezakis takes the time to enjoy the peculiarities of the ostrich. "The male puts on the make-up," he said. "They've got to look pretty for the girls instead of the girls looking pretty for the boys."

Police arrest suspect in shooting

HOUSTON (AP) — Police arrested a sixth-grader Tuesday in connection with a drive-by shooting in which eight people were injured when attackers opened fire with a shotgun outside a convenience store.

Police said the 14-year-old, who attends Sharpstown Middle School, has not admitted involvement in Monday's shooting, but will remain in custody pending further investigation. The shooting apparently was gang-related, police said.

The shooting took place at a store across the street from Jane Long Middle School, where security has been tightened and students were offered counseling on Tuesday.

Witnesses said a small red car carrying three men drove by the convenience store, and one of the passengers in the front seat aimed a short-barreled shotgun at them and fired several rounds. •

Study: Drug may delay heart disease in women and men

DALLAS (AP) — A cholesterol-lowering drug could delay a form of heart disease in women at the same rate it slows the disease in men, according to a new study.

Connecticut researchers studied the effects cholesterol-lowering drugs have on women. Even though heart diseases are among the leading causes of death for women in the U.S., studies of cholesterol-lowering drugs have rarely included them, the researchers said. Poor cholesterol levels have been cited as factors in heart diseases.

The results of the study were released today in Circulation, the Dallas-based American Heart Association's scientific journal. Researchers showed that the drug lovastatin slowed the hardening of the heart's arteries in 18 of 25 treated women.

Researchers for 16 weeks gave lovastatin to 25 women suffering from coronary arteriosclerosis. They also gave a neutral treatment to 29 women in a control group, and tested the diameter of coronary arteries after two years. Researchers determined the hardening got worse if the arteries' diameter had shrunk by 0.4 millimeters or more.

Dr. Margo Denke of the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, said the study is important.

"Just as many women as men get heart disease. From a therapeutic standpoint, the cholesterol-lowering hypotheses (has) only studied men," she said. "This study shows that cholesterol-lowering therapy should be equally effective in women as in men."

The tests found lovastatin:

■ reduced total cholesterol by 24 percent in the treated women;

■ reduced "bad" cholesterol by 32 percent; and

■ prevented additional hardening in 24 of the women.

Women in the control group had no more than a 3 percent drop in total cholesterol and in "bad" cholesterol and additional disease sites developed in 13 women in the control group.

Lovastatin produced similar results in a study of 245 men who were about five years younger than the women studied and were less likely to suffer from hypertension or diabetes, two contributing factors in heart diseases.

Meanwhile, new analysis of four previous studies found another cholesterol-lowering drug helped reduce heart attacks.

The review of the four studies of the drug pravastatin, conducted by researchers at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine in North Carolina, showed the drug helped reduce heart attacks by nearly two-thirds. Strokes also were reduced by the drug, the researchers said.

"It looks like that this drug given to people with documented heart disease could lower their risk of having another heart attack and also may reduce their risk of having a stroke," said Dr. Robert P. Byington, associate professor of epidemiology at Bowman Gray.

"It looks like you could benefit even if you had cholesterol as low as 200 milligrams per deciliter," he said. "Even if above the age of 65, you could benefit."

Jurors return guilty verdict in kidnapping case

FORT WORTH (AP) — Jurors took about 2 1/2 hours Tuesday to find an Arkansas man guilty of kidnapping and killing a teen-age girl as retribution for a $5,000 drug ripoff.

Orlando Hall, 24, showed no emotion as the verdict was read in U.S. District Court. He now faces the death penalty in one of the nation's first cases to be tried under new provisions in the 1994 Crime Bill. Among the federal crimes added to those punishable by lethal injection is kidnapping that results in death. The only other possible punishment is life imprisonment without release.

The jury found Hall guilty on four counts: kidnapping resulting in death, conspiracy to commit kidnapping, crossing state lines in an attempt to distribute marijuana, and using a firearm during a kidnapping.

U.S. District Judge Terry Means instructed jurors to return Wednesday to begin hearing testimony in the punishment phase of the trial.

Miss Rene's friend Nicole Williams, 18, said she was pleased with the verdict and hopes Hall gets the death penalty.

"That's just uncalled for. How could someone do that to a 16-year-old child? That's just ridiculous," Ms. Williams said.

Attorneys were unable to comment on the trial because of a gag order.

In closing arguments Tuesday, Assistant U.S. Attorney Chris Curtis said Hall "set this thing in motion" and described the 16-year-old victim, Lisa Rene, as "the one person who was completely innocent."

In a chilling plea captured on tape during a 911 call to police on Sept. 24, 1994, Miss Rene screamed in terror and begged an operator for help as men claiming to be FBI agents broke into her Arlington apartment and dragged her away.

Over two days, she was raped and repeatedly beaten with a shovel before she was buried alive in a shallow grave near Pine Bluff, Ark.

In his 15-minute closing argument, Curtis told jurors the evidence against Hall was overwhelming.

"Orlando Hall kidnapped Lisa Rene, had her transported to Arkansas for the purpose of getting back at Lisa Rene's brothers because he was cheated in a drug deal.

"This man decided Lisa Rene should die," Curtis said.

Defense attorneys, who rested their case without calling any witnesses, also presented no closing argument.

Prosecutors used the defendant's statement to authorities to argue their case, saying that although Hall tried to sugarcoat it, "he tells you he's guilty of kidnapping, he's guilty of murdering Lisa Rene."

Detective tracks stolen headstones

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 100 years after Hugh K. Holt and Walter A. Moore died, police detective Clarence Wood is still on the case.

From his office in the basement evidence room at Austin Police headquarters, Wood has waged a five-year investigative campaign to return stolen headstones to cemeteries from which they were taken by vandals.

"Tombstones are for posterity, so that people know that an individual once lived," Wood said. "When one is stolen, there's nothing left to show that they were here."

Since 1990, the detective and amateur genealogist has returned 18 headstones to their proper places in cemeteries and small, rural graveyards. Most were taken by young people, he said.

"Not all of them are university kids, but a lot are," Wood said. "They want them for Halloween parties or as a joke. We've found them in dormitory rooms or in a field or alley where they dump them."

Police investigated 13 cases of displaced monuments in 1993. Seven were reported last year and two have been reported this year.

Prosecutions are rare because most headstones are found after they have been abandoned by vandals. But Woods warns that destroying or stealing headstones is a third-degree felony, punishable by two to 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

"If you steal even one flower off a grave, you've violated a law called desecration of a venerated object. People need to know there are consequences," he said.

To reunite headstones with the proper graves, Woods sifts through computer and microfilm records kept on people buried in the five cemeteries owned by the city of Austin.

He also studies records in the Texas State Archives, and he consults with hobbyists who have amassed cemetery records for Travis and surrounding counties.

Council votes to settle lawsuit with payment

FORT WORTH (AP) — The City Council voted on Tuesday to pay $75,000 to settle a white lawyer's lawsuit, in which she alleged she was denied appointment as a municipal judge because of her race.

The council approved the payment by a vote of 8-1 without comment, said council spokesman Pat Svacina.

Council member Virginia Nell Webber voted against the payment, he said.

Katherine Smith alleged she was a victim of reverse discrimination.

A four-member council committee initially recommended that Smith be appointed in 1994. But the full council later voted, 7-2, to appoint Francine Lyles, who is black.

The Tarrant County Black Bar Association and the Black Women Lawyers Association of Tarrant County opposed Smith's appointment because it would have left the municipal courts without a black judge for the first time since 1977.

In defending their vote for Lyles, followed by the appointment of a Hispanic woman to another municipal court seat, council members cited a desire to have the bench reflect the ethnic makeup of the community. They said they believed that Lyles and Smith were both qualified.

Council members Chuck Silcox and Becky Haskin voted for Smith, saying they believed that the former assistant U.S. attorney was best qualified based on her legal experience.

Gary Ingram of Fort Worth, who represented the city in the lawsuit, advised the council that it probably gave "undue consideration" to the race of the applicants, as opposed to primarily focusing on qualifications.

Smith, 45, is now an assistant general counsel to the Texas Public Utility Commission.

Austin bans handguns from buses

AUSTIN (AP) — Capital Metro, which operates Austin's bus system, won't allow concealed handguns on its buses.

Anyone found carrying a concealed handgun on a bus or other transit system property, even those with a state gun permit, will be in violation of trespassing laws and ordered to leave, General Manager Michael Bolton said.

The Capital Metro board voted 4-1 Monday to impose the ban. Board member Stacy Dukes-Rhone said it was necessary to keep passengers safe.

She said that with increased security — the transit authority is considering a larger group of on-board security officers — passengers wouldn't need concealed handguns to protect themselves. "I think that should be our responsibility," she said.

Under a new state law, beginning Jan. 1 Texans who have passed a licensing course and background check may carry concealed handguns.

In September, Houston's Metropolitan Transit Authority passed a similar resolution after Texas Attorney General Dan Morales ruled that the state's new right-to-carry law doesn't prevent transit authorities from banning concealed handguns. Private businesses also have that option.

Capital Metro board member Paul Drummond, the lone no vote, said the ban would be "a civil liberty issue" since the state has made it legal for Texans to get permits to carry handguns.

Board member Scott Polikov echoed that concern before voting in favor of the ban.

Women acknowledge successes, lament hurdles

By Michele Kay
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — One of the women became the governor of Texas; another won a landmark case in the U.S. Supreme Court; yet another voted to impeach the president of the United States. Many more have become recognized and respected nationwide.

But when these women were interviewed recently, one theme emerged. While acknowledging their successes, they continue to lament the hurdles men put in their way. And while basking in the glory of past successes, they also recall the struggle to get around those barriers.

"This is Texas. We are a macho state. We just are," said former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan.

Former Gov. Ann Richards, former state Rep. Sarah Weddington and Jordan are among more than two dozen politicians interviewed by researchers at the Center for Study of Women and Gender at the University of Texas at San Antonio. They were featured on a 30-minute videotape shown at a banquet in San Antonio Friday celebrating the 100th anniversary of American women in elected politics. U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, the first female senator from Texas, was the keynote speaker.

IT WAS a century ago that voters in Colorado elected a woman to the state Legislature — a quarter of a century before women were even allowed to vote. In 1922, Texans first sent a woman to the Legislature. Since then, 77 other women have served in the Texas Legislature.

The videotape was the idea of state Rep. Sylvia Romo, D-San Antonio, who wanted to capture the stories of Texas women in politics. Romo hopes to make the tape available soon to schools and libraries statewide. (To obtain a copy, call her office in Austin at 463-0642 or in San Antonio at (210) 736-0642.)

The women tell different tales, but there is a common thread — their struggle for acceptance.

"Men still need to be enlightened. They don't relinquish power very easily," said Romo. Getting in the door

Frances "Sissy" Farenthold, the only woman in the Texas House between 1969 and 1973, remembers being barred from a committee meeting because it was held in a private club that did not allow women.

"I THINK in the beginning I could have been a pet. And I think there was a sort of pethood ordained for you, if you accepted it," said Farenthold, who was nominated for vice president at the Democratic National Convention in 1972.

She looks pained when she recounts an incident early in her political career.

"The first official event I went to after my election was to the opening of a state school down in Corpus Christi, and some man came up to me and shook hands and said, 'I voted for your husband yesterday.' And I said, 'Oh, it was I.' And he said, 'If I'd known that, I wouldn't have voted for you.'"

Weddington recalls a problem she had early in her career — a problem she later corrected with legislation during her tenure as a state lawmaker.

Weddington had just graduated from law school and was trying to get a credit card. But a banker told her she needed her husband's signature on the application.

"I explained that I was out of law school, I was a licensed attorney, my husband had come back from military service and I was putting him through law school. ... We were basically living on my salary and I didn't think I ought to have his signature.

"Our volunteers have discovered that helping people is its own reward."
Lou Brown
President, Westwood Medical Center Auxiliary

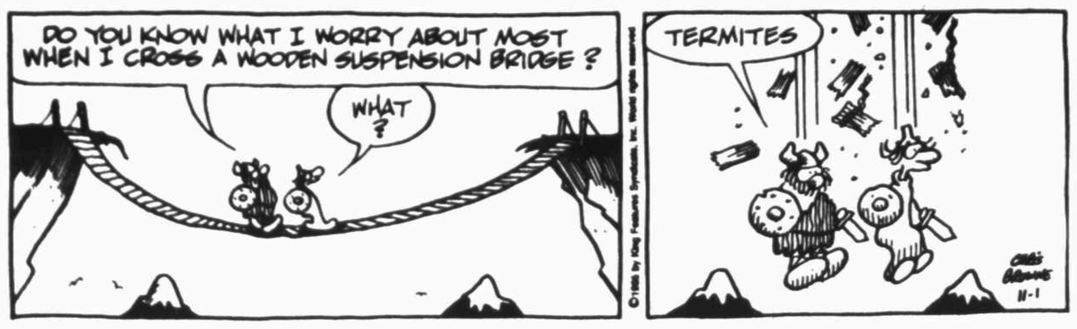

They bring patients newspapers every morning, deliver flowers, snacks and soft drinks, magazines and movies. The caring people who volunteer through the Westwood Medical Center Auxiliary have found a wonderful way to do community service, one that is rewarding for both the patient and the volunteer.
They're famous for their Room Service program. At the patient's request volunteers provide refreshments such as snacks or soft drinks that are allowed on the patient's diet. They bring magazines, games, stationery – even arrange laundry or dry cleaning if requested.
The auxiliary administers a movie library that includes recent releases, classics and children's favorites. Patients can check out two at a time, and the volunteer will provide a VCR for the patient's room.
If you or a loved one is planning a hospital stay, ask your doctor about Westwood Medical Center.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Fight for what you want, but do it openly. Integrity and dedication will pay rich dividends in the years to come. A wedding that takes place next month will enjoy special blessings. Someone may try to cut into your business profits. Welcome a chance to travel early in 1996. You need to be decisive when making overdue changes. Move with the times. Romantic bliss lies directly ahead!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A love relationship is teetering on the brink. Do not be afraid to speak out or make the first move. A parent-child dialogue becomes more rewarding. Gear up for a big push at work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Although a cash flow situation is better now, continue to curb extravagance. Approaching routine work assignments with greater creativity wins you praise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Develop a plan to expand your circle of business contacts. Joining a professional group or social club introduces you to potential clients or customers. Profits rise thanks to a partnership.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone could be in a difficult mood. Refuse to be provoked into quarreling. Accept an offer of help with grace and dignity. An unexpected development inspires you to try something new.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Use wit and wisdom when playing the money game. Set aside funds for legal advice if you have concerns about a tax or accounting matter. Investing in high-quality equipment helps guarantee reliable performance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pay attention to those seemingly small details that can spell the difference between success and failure. Catching and correcting a mistake right away will save both time and money.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Learning more about computers will hasten your career progress. An encouraging message will put a smile on your face! Partnerships formed today should prove highly successful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A pet project gets the green light from someone influential. A timely phone call moves you closer to realizing a dream. Your organizational skills are a tremendous asset.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Decisive action is the key to moving forward. Sitting on the fence is for the birds! Launch an exciting venture with confidence. Invest in quality when shopping for clothes. Classic styles will work best.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The emphasis today is on making a good impression. Withhold comment until you can research a situation thoroughly. Your excellent reasoning skills help you uncover facts that others have overlooked. Keep your own counsel in romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A give-and-take attitude will win you friends. An intelligent compromise helps you negotiate an important contract. A move to another location is possible. Try a different approach to romance. Act quietly confident.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day to buy or sell items of beauty. Stick to a sensible diet-exercise regimen; the results will delight you! Wear a happy face if going out tonight. Your mate is ready to confide secrets.

Opening lead: Queen of ♣

It is only rarely that a hand is simply a matter of finding the better percentage line. This is a classic case, reported by the late Scottish writer Hugh Kelsey.

North-South were using forcing two-bids, and the result was a simple, natural auction to the best spot. When North failed to make a second cue-bid, South decided that a 12-trick contract was enough.

West led the queen of clubs, removing declarer's only fast entry to the table. Possible losers were the queen of trumps and king of diamonds.

Let's consider the spade suit in isolation. The old dictum 'eight ever, nine never' tells us that the percentage play in trumps is to cash the ace-king, hoping to drop the queen. That will happen about 53 percent of the time.

What if the queen fails to drop? Then declarer will need to find a singleton king of diamonds, which adds another 6 percent. Is there anything better?

Yes, by a significant margin. Suppose that, instead, you parlay the finesses in trumps and diamonds. The combined chance of one of two finesses succeeding is 75 percent.

At trick two lead the jack of spades from dummy. If that wins, all is well. If the finesse loses, win any return, draw two rounds of trumps ending in dummy with the ten and run the nine of diamonds, repeating the finesse if necessary.

Former Motley Crue frontman Neil, neighbor have rock, Rolls troubles

MALIBU, Calif. — Former Motley Crue frontman Vince Neil and a neighbor are having a little trouble with socks and slugs and a rock and a Rolls.

Former Motley Crue frontman Neil, neighbor have trouble.

Neil and Gregory Cassidy are pointing fingers at each other in a two-day feud that started Sunday, when several of Neil's friends parked in front of Cassidy's house.

Cassidy confronted Neil at his house, they argued, and Cassidy allegedly tried to hit Neil, who then punched him in the face, said sheriff's Deputy Benita Nichol.

Cassidy was treated at a hospital and released.

The next morning, Neil heard glass breaking outside his house. He went outside and found a rock had been thrown through the windshield of his Rolls-Royce and Cassidy was walking away from the car, Nichol said.

He followed Cassidy to his house, kicked open his front door and threatened him, the deputy said.

Each called the sheriff's department, and deputies issued vandalism citations to both men. The battery allegations are being investigated.

AIKEN, S.C. — James Brown is in trouble again over an alleged assault on his wife.

James Brown is in trouble again over alleged assault.

Brown, 62, was charged with criminal domestic violence after his wife, Adrienne, called 911 asking for medical help, sheriff's spokesman Don Biermann said.

He was freed on $940 bond. His wife of more than 10 years was treated at a hospital and released.

Brown's lawyer, Buddy Dallas, wouldn't comment, except to say "it's just another story in the continuing saga of James and Adrienne Brown."

The soul singer was accused a year ago of shoving his wife during an argument, but charges were dropped when she refused to testify.

Brown served nearly three years in prison after he was arrested in September 1988 for leading police on a car chase between South Carolina and Georgia.

ASPEN, Colo. — Hunter S. Thompson is gonzo about politics, but that doesn't mean he wants to be a senator.

Rumors have been flying in Washington that the journalist will run for the U.S. Senate seat to be vacated next year by Hank Brown of Colorado. The scuttlebutt was even mentioned on CNN's "Inside Politics."

Thompson said the story is false. These days, the former Rolling Stone magazine correspondent and book writer is concentrating on local politics as a new member of the governing board of his neighborhood caucus.

"I don't dare turn my back on politics," he said. "It's the art of controlling your environment, and that's what we're trying to do here."

NEW YORK — Fellow writers saluted Arthur Miller on his 80th birthday, lamenting that he gets more respect overseas than at home.

"If it were up to the American theater, Arthur Miller would not have a career in it," playwright John Guare said Monday during a discussion of American writing.

The event was sponsored by PEN, the international writers' organization that fights censorship and supports freedom of expression. Miller is a past president.

Miller is famous for "Death of a Salesman" and "The Crucible." His latest work is "Broken Glass."

Miller told an audience of about 1,400 that criticism had a bright side: "If there's no resistance, you can't be telling the truth."

CAIRO, Egypt — Yasser Arafat wants more children, even though he's not too sure about the looks of his first daughter.

"She is pretty and looks like me," Arafat said of his daughter, Zahwa, born July 24 in France. "I would prefer it if she looked like her mother."

Arafat told the daily Al-Sharq Al-Awsat that his wife, Soha, complained that he hasn't spent much time with the baby. He said his work doesn't give him much leisure.

Still, the 66-year-old said he doesn't see himself quitting. Arafat has chaired the Palestine Liberation Organization since 1968 and also heads the National Palestinian Authority.

"I cannot imagine I will retire ever," he told the newspaper. "If I retired from my position I will seek another."

Selena's father objects to portrayal of daughter in painting

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The father of slain Tejano singer Selena said Monday he objects to a "trashy" painting of his daughter by a controversial artist.

The painting, by Donell Hill of Houston, depicts Selena among skulls and includes a singing skeleton holding a microphone.

At first titled "Selena's Silent Song," the painting's name has been changed to "The Silent Song" because of objections from the singer's family, Hill said.

"My intention was not to upset the family," she said.

Hill is to display the painting in a San Antonio gallery exhibit called "The Gift of Death." The Nov. 2 opening at Recuerdos de mi Madre gallery coincides with Dia de los Muertos, or Day of the Dead, a Hispanic tradition that commemorates loved ones who have passed away, she said.

"The hand of God holds Selena's face, the skulls and the white roses," Hill said, explaining her drawing.

"Maybe her family doesn't celebrate Day of the Dead, but there will be thousands of fans lighting candles in her memory," she said.

Selena's father, Abraham Quintanilla, described the painting as "trashy kind of art."

"My wife was very disturbed when she saw this skeleton with a microphone. My wife has gone through enough already," he said.

Hill had sent Selena's family an invitation to the exhibit and a copy of the painting.

Although a lawsuit had been threatened, a compromise reached Monday will allow the original artwork to be exhibited and sold at its asking price of $8,500 but will prohibit sales of reproductions of the painting.

"She (Hill) can draw this. It's her liberty," Quintanilla said. "And if she wants to, she can exhibit it. That's her prerogative. But once she starts selling copies, that infringes on Selena's estate.

"Anything with Selena's name, image or likeness, my family owns that," he said.

The artist argued, however, that Selena was a public figure and should be shared.

"I will not be censored," she said. "I wish Mr. Quintanilla would have as much compassion for the fans as the fans have for the family."

However, Quintanilla retorted, "What fans want to see Selena as a skeleton? We want to remember Selena as she was, as a beautiful young girl."

Last year, Hill was involved in another controversy, when the Catholic Church requested that her art exhibit titled "Spirituality, Sensuality, Sexuality" be pulled from a gallery sponsored by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word.

The gallery director, a nun, resigned. The exhibit, which depicted sexual themes as well as the plight of people with AIDS, closed three days after opening and moved to another San Antonio gallery. Among the Catholics upset by the painting was Archbishop Patrick Flores, who called the artwork "pornographic."

Cancer patient pursues GED diploma for sake of being example to children

By Susie Phillips Gonzales
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Stupidity, says cancer patient Antonio Talamantez Sr., is what caused him to walk out of the Fox Tech High School cafeteria more than two decades ago.

It was two months before graduation, and, he says now at age 45, he just didn't want to wear a cap and gown.

Neither did his friends.

It was lunch time, and the students were bemoaning the kind of ceremonial garb required of students receiving their high school diplomas.

"Beanie hats and a woman's nightgown — that's what we called them," Talamantez said. "A bunch of guys said they were going to quit. I was the main one. I led everybody out. Stupid is what I call it now. I regret what I did."

Four children and 60 jobs later, Talamantez is in a race against death to complete testing to receive his General Educational Development diploma.

He said during an interview at his near North Side home that he wants to be an example to his children and others about the value of education.

"My mijo, my son Tony, I don't want him jumping from job to job," Talamantez said. "I never stayed on a job longer than two years."

He tried truck driving, lawn care and apartment maintenance, among other jobs, some of which he never got or lost because he hadn't completed school.

"I tell other people, 'Why wait until you get sick?'" Talamantez said. "I'm not going to die until I get this education. When they give me my diploma, that's when I'll collapse."

Because of the advanced stage of his cancer of the lymph nodes, Talamantez requires a tutor from Project Learn to Read and a special chair and unlimited time when he takes the various GED tests.

"Mr. Talamantez is a very talented man," said Mary Cantu, manager of Project Learn to Read, whose volunteer tutors have helped more than 2,000 students overcome illiteracy or prepare for GED testing.

His next round of exams is scheduled for November, and he is polishing up his writing skills in preparation.

Pain and doctor's appointments have been a distraction to his studies, but he remains on course.

"He's fighting," said his wife, Janie, a teacher's aide at Agnes Cotton Elementary where three of the couple's four children attend. "His main focus is his GED for his children."

They seem to be getting the message.

Tony, 12, is learning Russian at Tafolla Middle School and tells his parents that he wants to live in a mansion one day and use his hands to write checks.

"I think education is very important because if you don't get an education, you won't get a good job," the youngster said.

Daughters Stephanie, 11, and Sylvia, 8, are on the honor roll at Agnes Cotton and say all their friends are, too.

"I've been on the honor roll since pre-K," Stephanie said.

Sylvia's twin, Sonia, likes social studies and is trying to match the accomplishments of her sisters.

Homework is the top priority for all the Talamantez children when they get home from school. Lessons are done and checked by mom before anyone eats dinner, reads a book or watches educational television.

Talamantez said some grades have suffered by after-school trips to the hospital for cancer treatments, but he said he never chastised his children on those occasions.

"I am proud to say that none of my children has ever brought me a D, and I don't think there's been a C, either," he said.

He acknowledged he may not live to see his children receive their high school diplomas but is confident they will earn them.

Talamantez said he explained his illness to his offspring by likening it to two dinosaurs fighting inside him, an analogy that seemed to speed acceptance.

He said he is grateful to those who have helped him in his quest for a diploma.

"The message I want to get across to teens is: Don't be a fool like me. Don't drop out," Talamantez said. "I want to set an example. If I did it, you can, too."

Olympic bonanza

WASHINGTON — The Atlanta Olympics will be a tourism bonanza for the entire country, not just the Southeast, Atlanta Mayor Bill Campbell predicted Tuesday.

Campbell told about 1,700 delegates to the White House Conference on Tourism and Travel that the Olympic torch relay through 42 states will be a unique opportunity to showcase America to the rest of the world.

The relay begins April 27 in Los Angeles and follows a 15,000-mile route around the country before ending in Atlanta in July.

One goal of the two-day conference is to find ways to attract more foreign tourists. Campbell said the Olympics and the 84-day torch relay will give U.S. communities the opportunity to do that.

Weber Classic

RICHMOND, Va. — David Ozio earned a $5,000 bonus Tuesday night as he overtook Norm Duke for the leading qualifier position in the Professional Bowlers Association $250,000 AMF Dick Weber Classic.

Ozio, a 10-time titlist and PBA Hall of Famer from Vidor, finished the all-match play event with a 30-17-1 match play record, a 227 average and 11,820 pins. The 41-year-old right-hander finished 31 pins ahead of Duke after spending the first five rounds of the tournament in second place.

Duke, the reigning IOF-PBA Player of the Year from Edmond, Okla., could only muster a 3-4-1 match play record in the final round and lost his grip on the top spot. The 11-time champion finished with a 27-19-2 overall match play record.

Qualifying third in the four-man field for the finals was Doug Kent of Canandaigua, N.Y., with 11,747 total pins. A 7-1 record in the final round pushed Kent from fifth to third. Kent, who will be after his first PBA national tour title, tied Ozio's field-best overall match play record of 30-17-1.

Lady Bulldogs fall in bi-district

■ MHS loses its aggressive play and tough hitting in dropping straight games to Amarillo Palo Duro 15-11, 15-7.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

BROWNFIELD — Midland High forgot to use what got it to the state volleyball playoffs in the first place.

Aggressive play and tough hitting helped the Lady Bulldogs recover from an 0-2 District 4-5A deficit and earn the third-place spot and a bi-district playoff game.

But on Tuesday night at the Brownfield gym, the Lady Bulldogs were not aggressive and they fell 15-11, 15-7 to Amarillo Palo Duro in a 5A bi-district volleyball contest.

"We didn't play aggressively," said MHS coach Terri McColloch. "Definitely not as aggressive as we have to be to win. We were a little too timid and you can't get to the playoffs and be timid because the teams are too good."

MHS, which also fell last year in bi-district, ended the season with a 20-10 overall record. Palo Duro (25-6) advanced to the area round and will play El Paso Eastwood at a time and site to be determined.

In the first game of the bi-district double header between 3-5A and 4-5A teams, Amarillo Tascosa (23-9) played almost flawlessly at the net and on serve receive to defeat Odessa High 15-2, 15-12. Tascosa, the third-place team, advances to the area round while Odessa, which finished second in league play, ends its season at 17-11.

The lack of aggressiveness on the part of the Lady Bulldogs kept them from putting together a consistent offensive attack.

MHS took an early 3-0 lead in the first game but allowed Palo Duro back in it when the Lady Bulldogs had trouble handling the serve of junior Camesha Wells. The Lady Dons reeled off six straight points to take a 6-3 lead they never relinquished.

"It was a bad day for serve receive," said McColloch. "They had a couple of strategic serves where they dropped the ball in a hole but for the most part, it was

SWC PLAYER OF THE WEEK

Here's to you, Mr. Robinson

■ Baylor senior safety Adrian Robinson has the brains to go with the brawn and was given the SWC's weekly award.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

WACO — Adrian Robinson, Baylor's senior safety, proves you have to have brains to match your brawn to be a success at his position.

In Saturday's 27-24 victory over Texas Christian, quarterback Max Knake tried to throw a touchdown pass over cornerback Joe Manor.

Luckily for Baylor, Robinson noticed that his man, tight end Brian Collins, was blocking on the play and not trying to be a receiver. Robinson left Collins and intercepted the pass, his second of the day.

For such alertness, Robinson was named The Associated Press SWC Defensive Player of the Week.

A Texas A&M tight end, Hayward Clay, did go out for passes and caught two of them for touchdowns in the Aggies' 30-7 victory over Houston. It earned Clay the AP SWC Offensive Player of the Week citation.

But back to Robinson, called by TCU coach Pat Sullivan "one of the premier safeties in the country."

Sullivan added "his play certainly did nothing to diminish that. I thought that his interception may have been the key play of the game. He came from way out in centerfield to make the interception. It was a tremendous athletic play on his part. Jason Tucker got by the cornerback and I'm sure Max just didn't see Robinson."

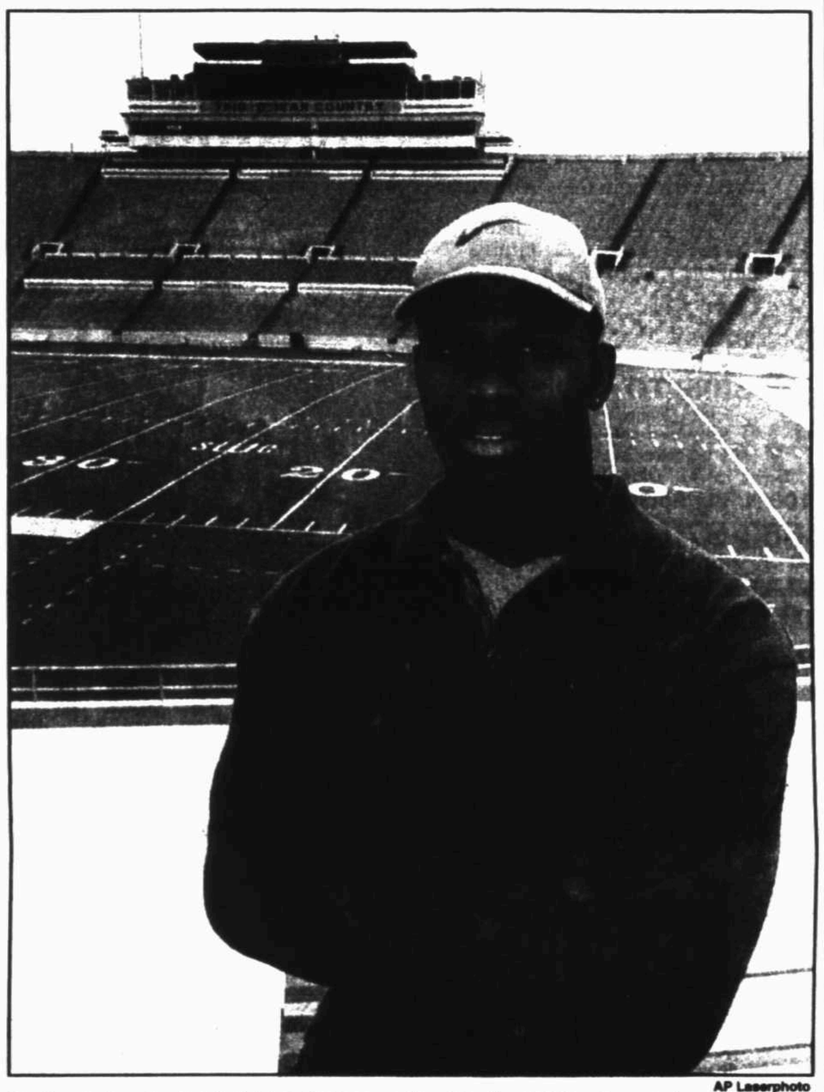

Baylor coach Chuck Reedy said "Adrian is an All-American player and he played like it."

Robinson also had six tackles and broke up another pass in the Baylor victory.

Robinson is the leader among SWC active players with 10 career interceptions. He is now tied for ninth in Baylor history.

Clay caught three passes for 36 yards including the two touchdown passes in the most productive day by an A&M tight end, James McKeehan, who caught four passes against the Sooners for 40 yards.

"They were overplaying our wide receivers so it left me open over the middle," said Clay. "Corey Pullig was right on target, too."

"I did the retirement thing. I did the summer activities and all that. It just got to the point where now it was time to go back and play baseball.

New kid Parchman makes 4-5A waves

Who is this guy, anyway? This John Parchman, who calls himself the head football coach at Midland Lee.

Isn't he the new guy on the District 4-5A block? What nerve he has, beating Odessa Permian in his first step on the field, unbeaten through eight games and ranked No. 7 in the state of the Lone Star.

Williamson

Doesn't he know that this is not acceptable behavior? One can beat Permian from distant time to distant time, but not in your first year. That's just not 4-5A etiquette.

Oh, Earl Miller did it, but Miller was never one for etiquette either. But this Parchman guy has taken even more liberties than Miller.

Parchman comes into town, trashes the legendary wishbone offense, scores points like a spinning roulette wheel, threatens to become only the second coach in Lee history to finish regular season play unbeaten and beats Odessa Permian.

We thought there was a rule in District 4-5A. The rule (I think it is rule 4-5A, paragraph 3, page 32 of the district rule book) is that the new guy must suffer before finding the land of roses. The only thing Parchman has suffered this year is using both hands to count his victories.

In the process of his rudeness, his Rebels are the only 4-5A team that has clinched a state playoff berth and at least a share of the district championship. The only other Lee team to finish regular season play unbeaten at 9-0 was Miller's 1987 squad, a team that finished up 11-1, losing to Arlington High in the regionals that year.

Of course, Lee will have to beat Abilene Cooper Friday at Memorial Stadium to turn that 9-0 record into a loop crown. Then Parchman will have his second suffering of the season when he tries to find a way to transport the district bell from Odessa to Midland. It's been in Odessa so long, the bell's wheels won't know how to turn toward Midland.

And he did this with a team picked to place third or fourth (depending on which newspaper rating you read). Everyone knew his Rebels would be good defensively with seven returning starters back, but no one knew his offense would ever be able to keep up with the Jones — or Permians.

And then Parchman beats Permian in his first year. The domination was helped in part by that offense with 17 first downs. Permian had seven.

Oh yes, the win was still controversial. The Phantom Catch and the early whistle. But there was also the possible out-of-bounds and the safety that Permian avoided. There was enough controversy to go around.

Still, controversy or not, Parchman stands at 8-0 with one game left with Cooper before the playoffs start. And wouldn't you just know it? It's looking more and more like it will be Lee vs. Amarillo High in the first round. If that happens, Amarillo will have to come to Midland for the bi-district game since the two played last year in Amarillo. Parchman strikes again.

Someone tell this guy to take a deep breath. Relax a little, John. You'll get a reputation. You've already been rude, changing a lifestyle and beating Permian.

Oh well, you just can't talk to this guy. He has his own ways.

But it does make one wonder what Year Two will be like — when he gets to know the 4-5A turf. We may just have to learn to live with rudeness.

Missing Mantle bust recovered

NEW YORK (AP) — A bronze bust commemorating Mickey Mantle's 500th home run was recovered after a former Yankees security guard tried to sell it on the Internet after the slugger died.

The bust had been missing for nearly 20 years, and Yankees spokesman Arthur Richman said the team was thrilled to get it back.

"It certainly has a lot of meaning to us, more meaning now than ever before," he said Tuesday. Mantle died Aug. 13 of cancer.

The FBI and private investigators hired by Major League Baseball recovered the bust and arrested Robert Pagani, 43, of Greenbelt, Md., after Pagani tried to sell it for $25,000, according to a statement by FBI Agent Jack Campanella.

Pagani, who worked at Yankee Stadium as a security guard from 1971 to 1979, was charged with interstate transportation of stolen goods.

If convicted, he could face up to 10 years in prison. He appeared in federal court in Manhattan Tuesday and was released on bail.

Campanella said a plaque was presented to Mantle during Opening Day ceremonies in 1968 to commemorate his 500th home run on May 4, 1967.

A bust of the Yankees outfielder was set in the plaque depicting the legendary outfielder from the shoulders up.

Some time in the 1970s during renovations of the ballpark, the plaque was stolen.

Its whereabouts were unknown until Aug. 23, when Pagani placed an advertisement on the Internet, offering the bust for sale.

Pagani said in the ad that he recently found the bust in Adamstown, Pa., recognized it and bought it immediately, the FBI said.

After his arrest, Pagani waived his rights and made a statement, admitting that he knew the bust had been stolen.

An investigator for Sutton Associates, hired by Major League Baseball, met Pagani at National Airport in Washington on Sept. 12 to arrange the purchase in a meeting that was videotaped and tape-recorded.

As negotiations continued, Pagani agreed to bring the bust to New York to have it inspected for authenticity, the FBI said.

Biggio files for free agency

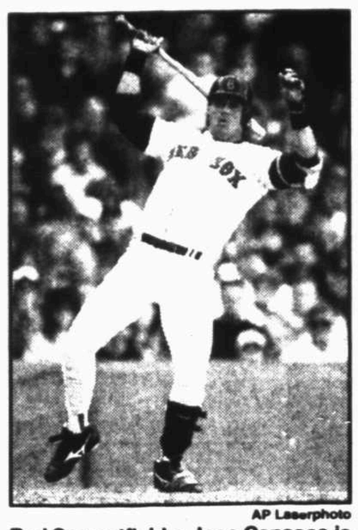

NEW YORK (AP) — Houston Astros second baseman Craig Biggio, Chicago Cubs shortstop Shawon Dunston along with star pitchers Jack McDowell, Jim Abbott, Andy Benes, Tim Belcher and Kenny Rogers were among 19 players who filed for free agency Tuesday, raising the total to 30.

Meanwhile, the Boston Red Sox declined to exercise a $4 million option for 1996 on reliever Rick Aguilera and decided instead to pay a $300,000 buyout. Aguilera then decided to file for free agency.

The Seattle Mariners exercised their $3.5 million option on AL batting champion Edgar Martinez rather than pay a $200,000 buyout.

And in a technical move, the players' association filed second baseman Ryne Sandberg for free agency. Sandberg, who had retired in 1994, then agreed to return to the Chicago Cubs, settling on a one-year contract.

Other players who filed Tuesday were Boston' Jose Canseco, Florida outfielder Jerry Browne, Seattle outfielder Vince Coleman, Cincinnati infielder Mariano Duncan, Detroit second baseman Scott Fletcher, Kansas City pitcher Mark Gubicza, Milwaukee catcher Joe Oliver, Chicago Cubs catcher Mark Parent, St. Louis pitcher Jeff Parrett, California outfielder Tony Phillips, Cincinnati catcher Benito Santiago and Atlanta outfielder Dwight Smith.

Red Sox outfielder Jose Canseco is one of the bigger names to file for free agency so far.

About 150 players potentially are eligible for free agency, and they can file through Nov. 12.

Toronto must decide Wednesday whether to exercise a $4 million option on designated hitter Paul Molitor or pay a $1 million buyout, and Oakland must decide whether to exercise a $2.25 million option on reliever Dennis Eckersley.

The New York Yankees had until Wednesday to exercise a $1.8 million option on outfielder Darryl Strawberry. The Yankees, according to a baseball official, asked Strawberry's agent, Bill Goodstein, to push back the deadline but Goodstein refused.

SERIES: Ratings lower in first hour but 3 percent below the 20.2 for the Blue Jays' six-game victory over the Braves in 1991.

It was the third-lowest rated Series ever, trailing only 1993 and the 16.4 for Oakland's earthquake-interrupted sweep of San Francisco in 1989.

Baseball officials were pleased, especially given the dropoff in attendance and ratings following the 232-day strike. The 12 regular-season network broadcasts averaged a 5.6 rating and 11 share, down 18 percent from the 6.9 rating and 14 share for the four games broadcast before the strike last year.

The World Series rating was 40 percent higher than the NBA finals' last season, which pulled in a 13.9 rating.

Molitor mulling over a move to Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS — Paul Molitor could be coming home to finish his career.

The seven-time All-Star recently had shoulder surgery to allow him to return to the infield — a good sign for the Minnesota Twins — and his agent said Tuesday he doesn't expect the Toronto Blue Jays to exercise their $4 million option on Molitor for 1996.

Molitor, the MVP of Toronto's second consecutive championship in 1993, is a graduate of St. Paul's Cretin High School.

CUBS: Ryno signed to one-year contract

(From 1C)

tant to me. I don't think it really left me."

But Sandberg — statistically the best fielding second baseman in major league history, a 10-time NL All-Star and the 1984 league MVP — left it.

In so doing, he walked away from the approximately $17 million he had left on his contract.

When he stunned Chicago with his announcement on June 13, 1994, his Cubs were in last place. In his opinion, general manager Larry Himes had ruined the team. And his personal life was in turmoil; his wife would file for divorce later that month.

A lifetime .289 hitter with 245 career home runs, 905 RBIs and 325 stolen bases, Sandberg was batting .238 with five homers, 24 RBIs and two steals in 57 games and was in a 1-for-28 slump.

Baseball was no longer fun. So he retired.

"That was something I had to do," he said. "I couldn't worry about what the public thought."

Some labeled him a quitter.

"He didn't like the front office, he didn't like losing, he didn't like the manager, he didn't like the things in his personal life," said Cubs first baseman Mark Grace, one of Sandberg's closest friends in baseball.

"It all just came to a head and he had to get out. I understand it. Whether I agree with it or not, who is Mark Grace to pass judgment on him? Yeah, we could have used him that year, but nobody could have saved that club. Ken Griffey Jr. or Barry Bonds couldn't have saved that club."

NBC, Fox close to TV deal

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC might keep on televising major league baseball after all.

The network, which angrily said said it would not televise the sport again until at least 2000, was closing in on a new contract to televise the sport for another five years.

Under the deals being discussed, NBC would televise the World Series in 1997 and 1999 and Fox would broadcast it in 1996, 1998, 2000. The two networks both would broadcast part of the playoffs each year.

NBC would televise three All-Star games and Fox would televise two. Fox also would televise a game of the week package each Saturday.

ESPN and Turner's TNT network also would be part of the package, with each cable network televising games during the first round of the playoffs. It would mark the first time baseball televised postseason games on cable television.

The television executives said the deal would be worth more than $1 billion or more during the five years, with Fox paying $100 million or more a year and NBC paying roughly the same amount.

NBC Sports spokesman Ed Markey and Fox Sports spokesman Vince Wladicka declined comment.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig declined comment when reached at his home in Milwaukee.

The status of the deals was confirmed by a pair of television executives and one baseball official, all speaking on the condition they not be identified.

All cautioned that NBC's involvement was not yet final.

POWER POINTS OFFICIAL RULES

1. Object of the game is to amass as many of the 136 possible points as you can. Simply review the week's schedule of games, listed on entry form, and decide which game you are surest of picking a winner in. Write the name of your projected winner on the 16-point line. If that team wins its game that week, you win 16 points. Write the name of your second-surest winner on the 15-point line, and so on down to the 1-point line, which game you figure to be a toss-up. Next, fill in Tiebreaker 1, the total points scored by both teams in the week's Cowboys or Oilers game. If this step fails to produce a winner, the judges will apply Tiebreaker 2, total offensive yardage from scrimmage in this game. If a winner still doesn't emerge, a drawing will be held among those contestants still tied. Decisions of the judges are final. The weekly winner of the contest will receive $1,000.
2. Any entry form that does not contain a legible name, address, etc., will be disqualified.
3. Entries that fail to forecast a winner from each and every game will be disqualified, as will entries that fail to distinguish between the Jets and Giants of New York and, when necessary, between the Houston Oilers and the Houston Cougars.
4. No points are awarded on tie games or in case any game is not played for any reason during its scheduled week.
5. Entering POWER POINTS constitutes permission by contestant for his or her name and photograph to be used for news and reasonable promotional purposes at no charge.
6. Employees of this newspaper and their immediate families are ineligible to participate.
7. No purchase necessary. Facsimile game entry forms will be accepted and are available at all outlets of participating co-sponsors. Enter contest by dropping entry form into POWER POINTS container at participating co-sponsors.
8. Weekly deadline for entry will be 2 p.m. Fridays except when noted otherwise on weekly entry form.
9. Neither this newspaper nor any co-sponsor will be responsible for illegible entry forms or those lost, stolen or damaged in any way.
10. Limit: one entry per person per week. Each entry must represent the original work of one entrant; "group" entries, "systems" or other attempts to enter multiple entries will be disqualified. Filling out extra forms and putting your friends' and relatives' names on them violates this rule. Any such entries are destroyed prior to grading.
11. Contestants must have reached the age of eight (8) years by the Sunday of any week's play.

For Longhorns' Brackens, the work just doesn't stop

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — The work never stops on a ranch.

Just ask Texas Longhorns star defensive end Tony Brackens, who spent the team's off weekend at his family's farm in East Texas herding cattle into a pasture for winter feeding.

While his teammates were relaxing, watching other teams play on television and challenging each other to video games, Brackens was on horseback, rounding up 150 cows and seven bulls into trailers.

And that's nothing for the junior from Fairfield, who found time during prolific high school basketball and football careers to make a little extra money in local rodeo competitions.

He no longer has to get up before school to bale hay, break a horse or rope an errant calf.

These days, Brackens just has to go to football practice and take on 300-pound offensive linemen on Saturdays.

"It's easier. Here, I have a time limit. When the whistle sounds or the buzzer goes off, I'm done," said Brackens, who began driving tractors when he was 8.

"When I was at home this weekend, I didn't finish until 9:30 at night. When you're doing ranch work, you finish whenever you get finished."

Pro scouts already are likening the 6-foot-4, 250-pound Brackens to Dallas Cowboys defensive end Charles Haley. Brackens uses quickness, leverage and uncanny instincts to consistently make his way to opposing quarterbacks.

He will get the chance to show his skills to a national television audience Saturday night, when No. 13 Texas takes on No. 23 Texas Tech in Austin.

As a true freshman, Brackens had 10 sacks while earning Southwest Conference Defensive Newcomer of the Year honors.

Last year, he repeated as a first team All-SWC selection, leading Texas in sacks (7), tackles for loss (10) and quarterback pressures (30) while becoming the focus of double teams.

A hairline fracture in his left leg kept him out of 3 1/2 games this season, but in his first game back against Oklahoma, he had two sacks, three pass breakups, two quarterback pressures, two other tackles for loss and blocked a field goal attempt.

"Tony forces teams to change their offensive scheme," said Texas coach John Mackovic. "He constantly draws double teams and still has success. You'll catch some guys resting on a play now and then. Tony never rests."

Brackens is quiet and humble, never speaking poorly of opponents and echoing Mackovic's one-game-at-time approach. He is modest about a future in the NFL, even though he and his father, Tony Sr., have talked about him entering the draft after this season.

"If the opportunity arises to turn pro, I am not going to tell them no," Brackens said. "If I don't go into the NFL, then it wasn't in my destiny. It wasn't in my plan."

Brackens gives credit for his toughness and success to his parents and a rural upbringing.

Tony Brackens Sr., a telephone company engineer who has turned a five-cow ranching hobby into a full-time cattle operation, says his son was taught to use his head to overcome obstacles.

"When Tony and his brother (Keith) were little they had to move square hay bales that weighed 65 to 85 pounds," he said. "I told them they had to come up with their own ingenuity to get the job done. They put the bales on a dolly and fed the calves.

"I told them, 'Don't let something stop you simply because it's difficult.' Tony applies those lessons on the football field."

The elder Brackens knew his oldest son was tough when he got on the wrong side of an angry 350-pound calf.

"Tony grabbed a hold of him, and the calf kicked and stomped and nearly tore the britches right off of him, but he held on," Tony Brackens Sr. said.

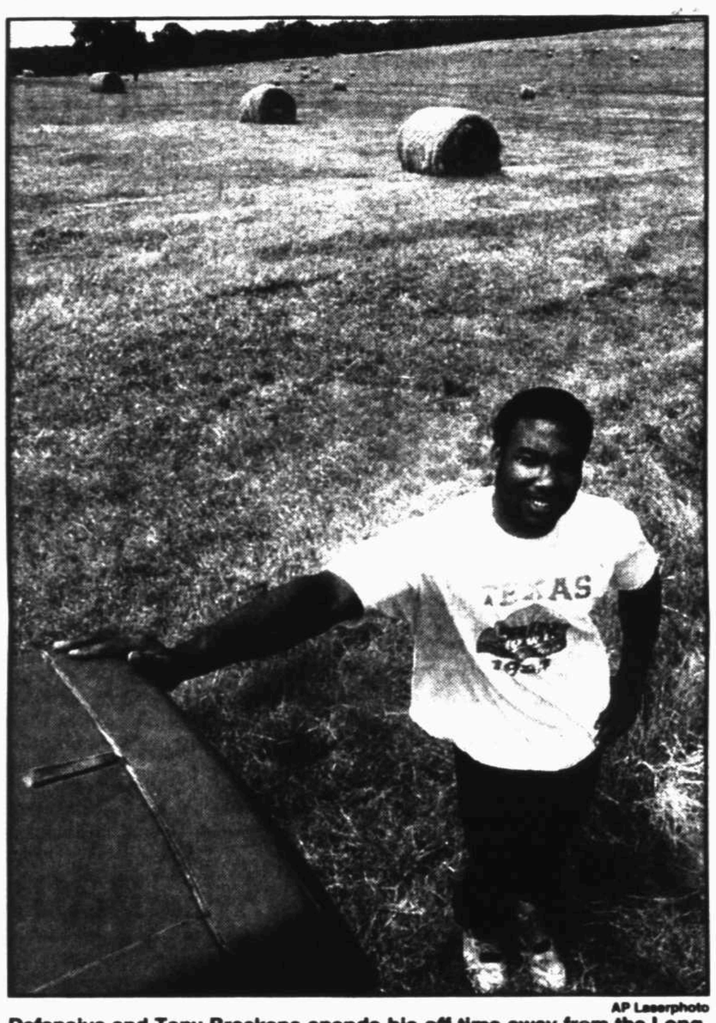

"I told him to turn him loose because the calf was on top of him, but he didn't and wrestled him down.

"Tony's been thrown from quite a few horses and has the scars to prove it. He's a tough kid."

In high school, Brackens and his brother, who plans to play football at Texas Christian next year, participated in weekend calf and team roping competitions, winning a few small jackpots here and there.

"It wasn't like we went professional in rodeo," Brackens said. "It wasn't the big time. We just went to rodeos in neighboring towns. It was fun."

Brackens recently was named to the All-American Farm Football Team by Successful Farming magazine. And with or without a career in the NFL, Brackens said he will return to his family's ranch.

Cates topped the field at the end of round robin play in the A Bracket. Lindsay Hanlon placed second while Christy Mares and Candice Fulgham finished in third and fourth place, respectively.

D'Ann Garza defeated Amy Pittman 6-3, 6-3 in the B Bracket finals. Casey Hanlon defeated Amber Raindl 7-5, 6-2 in the consolation finals.

Lassa foursome wins Mission's best ball

The foursome of Larry Lassa, Tony Travin, Jim Morris and Brian Smolik won the men's four-ball tournament at The Club at Mission Dorado this weekend with two-day total of 263.

Lassa's foursome beat out the group of James Newton, Don Cantrell, Richard Smith and Ted Smith, who placed second two shots behind.

Finishing third were the leaders after the first day.

Tommy Melton, Scott Wilson, Lane Holder and Jeff Stolz had a one- stroke lead after the first 18, but a 140 on the second day tied them with Benny Wilson, Everett McDougle, Randal Pampsan and Jeff Midkiff.

Both groups finished five shots back.

Canadiens stay hot, top Bruins

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Brian Savage, Patrick Roy and the rest of the Montreal Canadiens stayed hot Tuesday night as Savage scored his ninth goal in six games — all victories — and Roy stopped 38 shots to beat Boston 3-1.

The Canadiens opened the season with a five-game losing streak that cost coach Jacques Demers and general manager Serge Savard their jobs. But since then, they have not lost.

Flyers 2, Lightning 2

PHILADELPHIA — Brian Bradley and Petr Klima scored second-period goals as the Tampa Bay Lightning rallied for a tie with Philadelphia.

Eric Lindros scored his 10th goal and Legion of Doom linemate John LeClair his ninth to give the Flyers an early 2-0 lead.

Islanders 5, Panthers 4 OT

MIAMI — Bob Sweeney's goal with 1:04 left in overtime gave New York a victory over Florida.

Sweeney's second goal of the night capped a frantic finish. Florida fought back from a 4-2 deficit in the third period and was denied victory when a puck off the skate of Mike Hough was disallowed with 2:46 left in OT.

Rangers 5, Sharks 3

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Luc Robitaille and Niklas Sundstrom scored within a 24-second span midway through the third period, leading New York past San Jose.

Sundstrom and Robitaille each scored two goals Tuesday night, and each has five this season. Robitaille increased his scoring streak to eight games.

Oilers 2, Devils 1

EDMONTON — Jason Arnott's goal at 3:05 of the third period lifted Edmonton to a win over New Jersey, the Devils fourth consecutive loss and its second to Edmonton this season.

MHS: Lady Bulldogs take early exit nothing we should have been able to handle. Our pass kept us from being in the game."

MHS could only get points in small spurts - one or two at a time. But despite the lack of scoring, MHS stayed with the Lady Dons as seniors Jamee Stennett and Elesceeya King got several crucial blocks to force sideouts.

Palo Duro coach Rennaye O'Hair said her team's lack of change in their offense played right into the hands of the MHS blockers early in the first game.

"We kept going to the same hitter every time and I don't blaim them for sending the block," O'Hair said. "I would have sent three to the net in that situation. But we took her (sophomore Geronica Tucker) out of the game for a while and gave her a breather and when she came back in we had things stretched out enough so she had more room to move."

Wells served Palo Duro to a 14-8 lead in the first when MHS held off the Lady Dons with four sideouts on game point as they climbed back to 14-11. But confusion on the next serve from Palo Duro ended up in an MHS hitting error.

MHS again took the early lead in the second game, 6-3, but was still having difficulty in stringing several points together in the same rotation. An ace by junior setter Christy Trautman pushed MHS to a 7-5 lead.

But after several sideouts back and forth, Palo Duro's serving got the better of the Lady Bulldogs. Junior Jasmine Hawley reeled off six straight points as MHS committed five serve receive errors to give the Lady Dons a 12-7 lead. Another MHS error and a kill by senior Carrie Walters gave Palo Duro match point before a short serve from Terrie Walters fell in front of the MHS coverage and was returned out of bounds, giving Palo Duro the match.

After getting blown out in the first game, OHS seemed to get back into its groove in the second. The Lady Bronchos had leads of 3-0 and 6-3 in the second game before the Lady Rebels tied the match at 6-6.

OHS still stayed in it after Tascosa took the lead. The Lady Bronchos held off four match points before going down.

Handwriting expert deals King a blow in fraud trial

By Larry Neumeister
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — A handwriting expert testified Tuesday that a boxer's signature on two copies of a contract with promoter Don King were identical, supporting a government theory that King faked a contract to collect insurance.

The testimony came as prosecutors in federal court in Manhattan considered whether to rest after a month of testimony meant to prove King collected $350,000 illegally from Lloyd's of London. The trial will resume Thursday.

King is charged with nine counts of mail fraud in an indictment that alleged he faked a contract with Julio Cesar Chavez in 1991 so he could collect training fees that he had never paid to the boxer. If convicted, King could face up to five years in prison on each count.

The bout between Chavez and Harold Brazier was canceled after Chavez cut his nose.

On Tuesday, handwriting expert Gus Lesnevich testified that the signature of Chavez on one copy of the fight contract was identical to that on a copy that prosecutors allege King faked.

"A person never signs their name exactly the same more than once," he said. "Actually, if a person sat down and wrote their name five times in a row on a sheet of paper, each one would have a little variation from the one above it."

"We are not machines. We cannot reproduce things exactly the same way," he added.

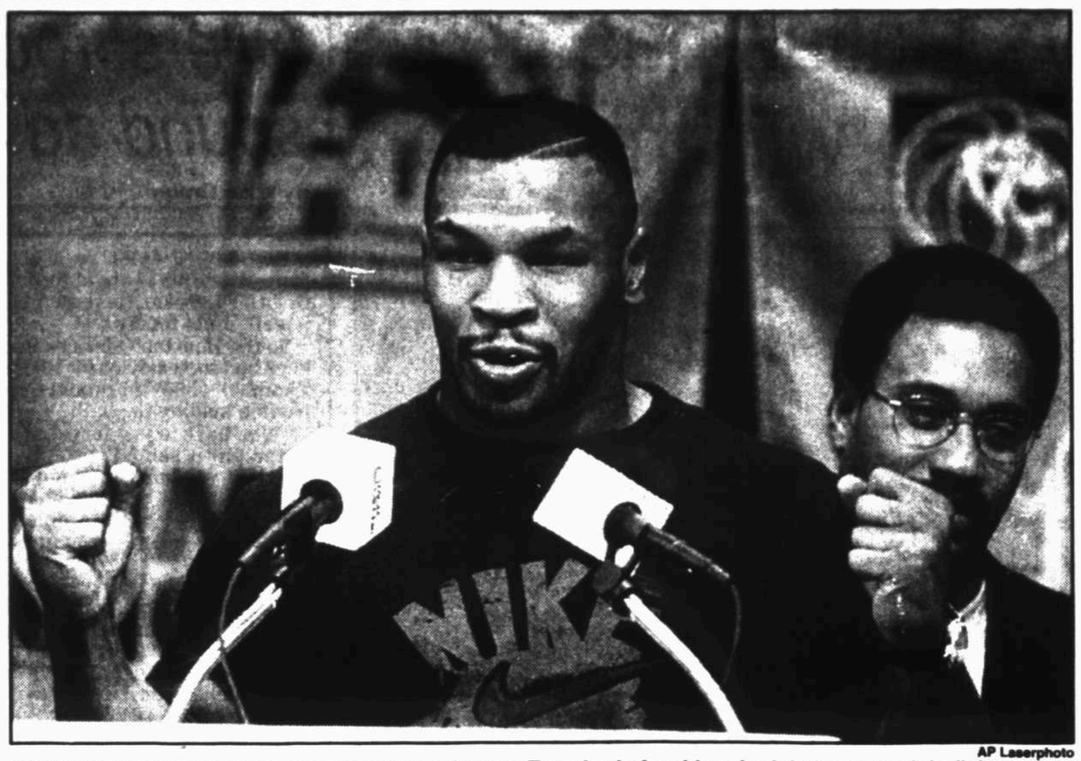

Earlier Tuesday, Internal Revenue Service Agent John Ryan testified that a review of King's finances in 1991 showed there was no $350,000 check written to Chavez for training expenses.

But during his cross-examination of Ryan, King lawyer Peter Fleming appeared to introduce a theory that someone other than King — perhaps his accounting department — might be responsible for the identical signatures.

He noted to Ryan that it appeared that a front page raising the amount to be paid Chavez from $1.5 million to $2 million had been added. And he said a phrase — "except as provided above" — had been added to the $2 million version to make it meet the requirements of the insurance policy that would reimburse King after the bout was canceled.

"Did you ever compare the words, 'except as provided above' with any typing prepared in the accounting department at Don King Productions?" he asked the agent.

"No," Ryan answered.

Mike Tyson answers questions at a press conference Tuesday before his scheduled heavyweight fight against Buster Mathis, Jr., in Las Vegas on Saturday was called off because of a hand injury.

TYSON: Hand injury stops contest

(From 1C)

Tyson initially injured his thumb about three weeks ago and aggravated the injury the last few days.

Tyson's doctors, Gerald Higgins and Gary Marrone, notified the hotel at 4:10 p.m,. Tyson would not be able to fight.

"The break is in the thumb between the main joint and the tip of the thumb," said Marrone, who confirmed the injury would take up to six weeks to heal.

Alex Yemenidjian, chief operating officer of the MGM Grand, said the entire Saturday night card was off. It was to have included three world championship bouts.

Marrone said Tyson injured the thumb about three weeks ago and saw Marrone and Higgins about two weeks ago. Marrone said he and Higgins thought the injury possibly could heal in time for the fight, but X-rays Tuesday "showed that the fracture that had begun to heal had refractured."

Tyson reinjured the thumb Monday or Tuesday — he sparred both days. Asked why he did not call off the fight when he first injured the thumb, he said: "I thought I could sneak through. I get paid to fight."

Tyson's purse was to have been $10 million. Mathis was to get $800,000.

"He said he wanted to fight no matter what," Higgins said. "In all morality, we can't let him participate in this fight."

At a news conference earlier in the day, Tyson was upbeat and confident of an easy victory.

"I feel good, I feel happy," he said. "Everybody knows I'm going to do my thing. I'm looking forward to this. I'm going to burn."

Mathis, a 20-1 underdog, was suspicious of the former champion's sore hand.

"I call it a fake," he said. "I don't think Mike is hurt."

Jay Bright, Tyson's trainer, hinted at the time there may be more to the injury than first thought.

"What we have to do is follow the doctor's orders," he said without elaborating.

John Horne, Tyson's co-manager, said Mathis is under contract to fight Tyson and the bout will be held on the Fox network, which was to have telecast Saturday night's bout. Fox had no immediate comment on the latest developments.

It was to have been Tyson's first appearance on commercial television since he knocked out Marvis Frazier in 30 seconds on July 11, 1986.

Tyson was asked if he might not decide to go straight into a March 16 challenge to WBC champion Frank Bruno of Britain, Horne interrupted and said, "That's not a question we're going to answer right now."

"I'm sorry for Tyson; that's a tough way to go out," said Rock Newman, manager of Riddick Bowe, who will fight Evander Holyfield on pay-per-view television Saturday night at Caesars Palace, a short cab ride from the MGM Grand.

"In a strange kind of way, I was looking forward to both fights," Newman said. "I just didn't think we'd be hurt (financially by Tyson's appearance on free TV)."

If indeed it is a postponement, it will be the fourth in Tyson's career. He also has had one cancellation.

Tyson was to have defended the undisputed title against Bruno in September 1988, but was in an auto accident and the fight didn't take place until Feb. 25, 1989, when Tyson stopped Bruno in the fifth round.

He was supposed to defend the title against Razor Ruddock in November 1989 in Canada but pulled out because of illness. Instead, he fought Buster Douglas in February 1990 and was stopped in the 10th round in a huge upset.

Tyson later fought Ruddock twice in 1991, winning both bouts.

The other postponement came when Tyson had to pull out of a fight against Alex Stewart set for September 1990 because of a cut eye. He fought Stewart on Dec. 8 of that year and stopped him in the first round.

The canceled bout was one scheduled for Nov. 8, 1991, against Evander Holyfield, then the undisputed champion. Tyson pulled out Oct. 18 when he suffered a rib injury in training.

A new date could not be agreed upon. Tyson then was convicted of rape and released from prison March 25 after serving three years. He did not fight again until he beat McNeeley.

No title on line for Holyfield, Bowe this time

By Tim Dahlberg
AP Sports Writer

LAS VEGAS — When they first met three years ago, Riddick Bowe and Evander Holyfield fought for the undisputed heavyweight title. In their rematch a year later, two pieces of the title were at stake.

When Bowe and Holyfield get together for a third time Saturday night, not even Bowe's lightly regarded WBO title will be on the line.

Many, though, believe the fight will crown the best heavyweight in the world, even while Mike Tyson is fighting the same night just down the street.

"This fight will validate who the heavyweight champion of the world is," claims Bowe's manager, Rock Newman. "There may not be a title here but this is for the real heavyweight championship."

Just how quick the championship fortunes of both fighters have plummeted is remarkable, considering that both have held all three major titles and between them have only three losses.

But in a division increasingly controlled by promoter Don King, independent contractors like Holyfield and Bowe have found themselves frozen out by the various boxing organizations.

While journeymen such as Bruce Seldon and Frank Bruno hold pieces of the fractured title and Tyson waits in the wings, Bowe and Holyfield find themselves fighting each other for little more than money and some recognition.

"Myself and Bowe don't plan to stay in boxing a long time and I see it as just a waiting game to wait two tough guys out," Holyfield said. "Nobody wants to face us for any amount of money."

Holyfield and Bowe will both make a lot of money Saturday night in the scheduled 12-round fight at Caesars Palace. Holyfield is guaranteed $9 million, while Bowe figures to make about as much depending on how the fight does at the gate and on pay-per-view.

But they are fighting a third time because there are few other name fighters available as opponents to make the same kind of money. With the titles locked up by King, the winner of Saturday night's fight can only hope to eventually lure Tyson into a fight.

"I can't speak for Mike, but I'm sure Mike will fight anybody Don King asks him to fight," Holyfield said. "I'm sure if Don King asked Mike to fight me or Bowe he would."

Bowe does hold the WBO version of the heavyweight title, although it won't be at stake in this fight. Holyfield refused to fight for the crown, hoping to keep his options open with the other sanctioning organizations.

If Holyfield were to win, the WBO title would be declared vacant.

"There's no question about it. You have the two best heavyweights in the world fighting in this fight."

For now, Bowe said he considers Tyson the third best heavyweight.

"You have got to give Mike an opportunity to better himself," he said. "We'll see in a couple of more fights when he's fighting better opponents."

Salaiz, Edwards to be added to state's best

By Jamie Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Forget trying to figure out which high school football players are going to have big impacts in college or which ones may wind up playing on Sundays.

However, if you're arguing over which players are the best compared with their high school peers this season, here's two names that belong on the list that you've likely never heard of: Petey Salaiz of six-man power Mullin and Chris Edwards of Northwest Academy, a Houston-area private school.

Edwards is coming off a six-touchdown, 417-yard game that was only one yard short of second-most ever in a game for a Texas private school player. He has 1,926 yards and 178 points in eight games with an average of about 13 yards per carry.

Salaiz (pronounced SUH-lease) has even more eye-popping numbers. He's approaching the unheard of figure of 10,000 career rushing yards, making him one of the all-time greats in six-man history.

His coach, Leonard Buffe, compares Salaiz to one of the greatest players ever to carry a football: Walter Payton.

"I'm not trying to say he's as good as (Payton) was, but he kind of runs like that," Buffe said. "He's got this little deal where he slows down and, about the time they're ready to tackle him, he's gone. In two steps, he's full speed. That's natural instinct."

At 5-foot-8 and 175 yards, Salaiz is a bit smaller than Payton was, although they both have thick, powerful legs characteristic of all great running backs.

Salaiz also isn't likely to be nicknamed "Sweetness" like Payton was. For Salaiz, "Toughness" would be more accurate.

Salaiz was one of many foster children who found homes in Mullin. The small West Texas community provided the structure and stability every teen-ager needs.

Salaiz also found football, and he was as good for the game as it was for him. He picked it up quickly, along with his teammates. Their eighth-grade team was so good that in an entire season they allowed one first down and "minus 200-something offense," Buffe said.

Things have been clicking ever since. Salaiz has been a starter since he was a freshman and he's improved every year.

■ HS Honor Roll

Although good six-man teams tend to produce basketball-like statistics, what Salaiz has done is still remarkable.

Consider just his last two games, when he ran 39 times for 527 yards against Zephyr, and against Blanket, which stacked the defense to stop Salaiz yet he managed 221 yards and three touchdowns on eight carries.

Buffe laughed as he described Blanket's vain attempt to stuff Salaiz on Mullin's first play. The play itself is no secret — Buffe uses the same one every game "to see if anybody can stop him."

"They had the whole team waiting for him and he went right through the middle of them for 61 yards," Buffe said. "Against Zephyr the week before they did stop him but he was already 40 yards downfield."

Statistics vary, but Buffe's numbers show that Salaiz has 9,646 yards. He's likely to get the remaining 354 yards to 10,000 against May this weekend.

"I don't think their defense is very good. He'll shred it apart," said Buffe, adding that he wouldn't leave Salaiz in during a blowout just so he can go after the milestone.

Should Salaiz hit the mark, the game would be stopped and he'd be given the ball. Not that it matters it to Salaiz.

"He told me at the first of this season, 'Coach, get all this stuff and put it away. At end of year, then we'll look at it,' " Buffe said.

The items Salaiz may find most interesting are recruiting letters, including one from the University of Colorado, which has been known to take six-man players.

If the Buffaloes are interested in Salaiz, it also could be for his abilities on defense. He's also a solid tackler at middle linebacker.

Despite being at a private school, Edwards also is drawing interest from many Division I-A schools. He's already turned down Louisiana State and his coach Ted Knapp is doing his best to market Edwards to Southwest Conference schools.

"We're putting together a highlight film and adding a full game film. The schools seem to like that," Knapp said.

There's little doubt which game Knapp will include. Expect it to be the 47-17 victory over Lutheran North, during which Edwards had his record peformance.

Player says punched ref used racial slurs

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The lawyer representing a high school football player who punched a referee said Tuesday that eight other students can corroborate the player's claim that the official referred to him with a racial epithet.

Leo Terrell also claims police investigators tried to bully a teammate who said he could back up Simmons' story.

"The Beverly Hills Police Department is covering its own tracks and protecting this referee," said Terrell, who represents both Simmons and his teammate, Vincent Brooks.

Simmons, 16, punched referee Kenneth Smoltrys in the face during an Oct. 20 game between Simmons' Centennial High and Beverly Hills High.

Simmons, who is black, claimed he hit Smoltrys, who is white, after the referee referred to him with a racial slur.

Brooks told police after the incident that he, too, heard Smoltrys use the epithet. Smoltrys has denied using the word.

Terrell said Tuesday that eight other students can back up Simmons' story, and Centennial coach Omar Bradley, who also is the mayor of Compton, has said several of his players told him they heard Smoltrys call them "niggers" during the game.

Simmons has been charged with simple battery on a sports official, a misdemeanor. A hearing is set for Nov. 7. He could face penalties ranging from probation to counseling to a trial, said Beverly Hills Police Lt. Frank Salcido.

During a Monday news conference, Terrell and Brooks' parents claimed police tried to intimidate the teen-ager into saying he did not hear the slur.

"These detectives tried to influence my son to change his mind. ... He was telling the truth and nothing but the truth," said Brooks' mother, Linda Lee.

"My son has been wronged," his father, Lugean Brooks, said. "His integrity has been questioned. These are the reasons why he came forward, and I back him 101 percent."

Police Lt. Frank Salcido denied detectives browbeat Brooks during a follow-up interview last week.

"We just met with him to clarify some inconsistencies in his statements," Salcido said. "He told police that he was pushed to the ground by Smoltrys before the punch. The videotape shows that didn't happen.

"He told our detectives last week that he didn't say he was pushed. So all we were trying to do was see which statement was right."

Smoltrys' attorney, David Heck of San Francisco, defended the Beverly Hills Police Department's handling of the case.

"I believe the Beverly Hills Police Department have unfairly been castigated by these people, making racial allegations from the get-go in order to have them convict this referee in the press for something he didn't do," Heck said.

Jones says Dallas has no excuses not to win this year

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Jerry Jones has spent most of the autumn challenging the NFL.

On Tuesday, he put the heat on his team, saying there can be no excuse short of catastrophic injury for not winning the Super Bowl this year.

"There can't be one acceptable excuse except for losing one of the triplets (Michael Irvin, Emmitt Smith or Troy Aikman)," said the owner of the Dallas Cowboys. "I still haven't been able to accept the fact we didn't win last year even with the injuries that we had. I wanted to win three Super Bowls in a row."

The Cowboys lost 38-28 to the eventual champion San Francisco 49ers in the NFC championship game. San Francisco went on to defeat the San Diego Chargers in Super Bowl XXIX.

"I know what three turnovers in the first five minutes can do," Jones said.

Jones said coach Barry Switzer will be safe even if the Cowboys fail to win the Super Bowl this year.

"No one gets fired if we don't win," Jones said. "The pain is enough. It was enough for me last year. Pain is all the penance I need.

"We've just got to figure out a way to do it this year. All we have to remember is how we're going to feel if we don't win."

Jones has been battling the NFL on two fronts, and there are reports of a third problem swirling about the franchise.

The NFL has sued Jones for $300 million over a property rights hassle and Jones has sued back.

The NFL has ruled Deion Sanders' $35 million contract invalid and the issue is now before a special master in New York City.

Now there are reports defensive lineman Leon Lett and cornerback Clayton Holmes have run afoul of the league's drug abuse policy.

Jones refused comment on the matter Tuesday, saying the NFL has yet to contact the club. Under NFL rules, a club can be fined $500,000 for comment on the drug issue.

"The area of drug abuse needs to be confidential, and I can live with that," Jones said. "I do think the leak for the (broadcast and published) reports had to come from a league source. I have yet to be contacted by the league."

Cowboys owner Jerry Jones has brought in enough talent and with the addition of Deion Sanders, Jones believes his team should be in Super Bowl XXX and win it this time.

On the Sanders matter, Jones said he didn't think anything would happen that would hurt the Cowboys for the 1995 season.

"Nothing is imminent and I have no concerns anything will affect this year," Jones said.

NFL owners will meet in Grapevine next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Club vice president Stephen Jones said he didn't think his father will be on the agenda.

"I know the schedule includes realignment and the issues with Al Davis," the younger Jones said.

Someone quipped: "Well, Jerry you have a week to work on it to get on the schedule."

The Cowboys play the Philadelphia Eagles on Monday night at Texas Stadium. The Cowboys, along with the Kansas City Chiefs, are 7-1 on the season and own the best record in the NFL.

The last time the Cowboys were on national television was the season opener, in which Jones paraded Nike president Phil Knight about the sidelines heralding a deal with the company he had signed with the shoe giant.

It angered numerous owners, who later filed suit over the agreement.

Oilers' rookie Thomas getting sound advice from veteran Butts

By Mike Drago
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Marion Butts made his share of fumbles as an NFL rookie. He remembers it well, if not fondly.

So the Houston Oilers running back had some advice for Rodney Thomas when the rookie had trouble holding the ball.

"You have to just forget about it and put it behind you," Butts said. "If you harp on it and stay focused on that, you're thinking, 'Oh my gosh, I can't fumble the ball,' and — boom — you fumble it."

Thomas, the Oilers' third-round draft pick from Texas A&M, has been impressive in his first season, leading the team with 103 carries for 376 yards and two touchdowns. He also has shown a propensity for fumbles.

He lost the ball five times through seven games, and opponents came up with the ball four times. In losses to Minnesota and Chicago, Thomas dropped his first carry of each game.

After that, coach Jeff Fisher gave Thomas' starting job to Butts. Though he didn't start, Thomas got a bulk of the carries in Sunday's 19-7 victory over Tampa Bay. He ran 23 times for 89 yards, propelling Houston's ball-control offensive scheme.

More important, the rookie got a grip.

Thomas, a 22-year-old who speaks with the self-assurance of a veteran, said his earlier mistakes never got him down.

"I never once doubted myself, and that's one thing that helped me to be able to look at myself and say 'Hey, Rodney, you can't doubt what you're capable of doing,'" he said.

"There's no limit to what I can do when put in a certain situation, when the guys around me are doing their job. There's no limit."

Fisher said the coaching staff worked closely with Thomas last week on three cardinal rules of ball-carrying: splitting the fingers over the tip of the ball, protecting it with the forearm and pressing it into the rib cage.

"There's three pressure points on the ball and if you can secure all three pressure points, the ball just doesn't come out," Fisher said, adding that Thomas wasn't holding his fingers properly over the tip.

"He worked on it hard all week. We've convinced him, he's convinced himself, that the ball-handling problem is behind him. (On Sunday), not only did he protect the ball but he was still able to break tackles and get into the secondary."

Even after the improvement, Thomas wasn't convinced that technique was his problem.

Crude futures were almost unchanged Tuesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange West Texas Intermediate for December delivery rose 2 cents to close at $17.64 a barrel.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar rally inspired by the federalists' victory in Quebec lost momentum on Tuesday over worries that Canada is far from united.

In late New York trading, the dollar fell to 1.3447 Canadian dollars, from 1.3600 late Monday. The dollar ended at 1.4082 German marks, down from 1.4098 late Monday, and rose to 102.06 yen, from 101.93 yen.

Meanwhile, the Mexican peso fell, losing the ground it had gained Monday on the release of a new economic stimulus package over the weekend.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Monday: 4.8810 French francs, down from 4.8890; 1.1359 Swiss francs, down from 1.1380; and 1,590 Italian lire, down from 1,596.

Coda bought

DALLAS — Coda Energy Inc. said Tuesday it has agreed to an approximately $196 million buyout by an affiliate of Enron Capital & Trade Resources Group.

Coda said it has reached a definitive merger agreement with Joint Energy Development Investments Limited Partnership, which will pay $8 cash for each of Coda's 24.5 million outstanding shares.

The acquisition is contingent on the sale of Coda's gas subsidiary, Taurus Energy Corp., on terms acceptable to JEDI.

The deal has been approved by Coda's board and a committee of outside directors, but still needs shareholder and government approval.

Stocks crumble

NEW YORK — Stocks gave up early gains Tuesday as investors sought profits in a late sell-off of technology and cyclical issues that had been supported by mostly positive economic reports.

The Dow Jones industrial average ended up 1.09 to 4,755.48. At one point, the stock market's best-known index was up as much as 42 points.

By day's end, most broad market indexes had fallen and declining issues led advancers by more about 10 to 9 on the New York Stock Exchange. Volume on the Big Board was moderately heavy at 377.51 million shares vs. 318.84 million on Monday.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.53 to 309.61. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 1.75 to 581.50.

The Nasdaq composite index was down 3.63 to 1,036.06. But at the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose 5.53 to 521.67.

The session surged after the opening bell, extending Monday's gains and benefiting from Quebec's rejection of a proposal to split from Canada.

In the afternoon session, the Dow average nudged above 4,800 and was approaching the all-time high of 4,802.45 set on Oct. 19. Analysts said that was signal for investors to sell.

Economy seen as vital, inflation-free

By John D. McClain
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Fresh signs of economic vitality without inflation appeared Tuesday as the government reported the second-highest new home sales of the year and the smallest employment cost increase on record.

Two private reports appeared to confirm a vigorous economy, with one reporting an expanding manufacturing sector and the other strong consumer confidence.

"Without inflation, the economy is encountering no real impediments and can continue on its present growth path indefinitely," contended economist Eugene Sherman of M.A. Schapiro & Co. in New York.

"They show solid growth without inflation, and that consumers are feeling pretty good about it," economist David F. Seiders of the National Association of Home Builders said of the reports.

The government had reported last Friday that the economy grew at a 4.2 percent annual rate during July, August and September, nearly three times the pace of the previous three months.

The latest reports sparked a rally on Wall Street, although Treasury bond prices were mixed in a narrow trading range.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that sales of new homes rose 3.3 percent in September, to 727,000 at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, from 704,000 in August.

The total was second in 1995 only to the 792,000 rate in July. It marked the first time in nearly two years that sales had topped 700,000 for four straight months.

The housing industry went into a slump earlier this year after mortgage rates topped 9 percent. But it has rebounded recently, with rates dropping to 7.5 percent last week. That would mean a savings of more than $100 a month on a $100,000 mortgage.

But most analysts expect sales to level off for the remainder of the year, and the regional sales mix appeared to suggest such a plateau. Sales were up in the Midwest and West, but fell in the Northeast and South.

Still, observers noted that sales remained at relatively high levels, which should spark still more growth in the economy.

"Housing is important in itself, but also for its echo effects," Sherman of M.A. Schapiro said. "Sales trigger a lot of consumer spending for household items, such as furniture, drapes, appliances and carpets, and for services — landscaping, electricians, plumbers."

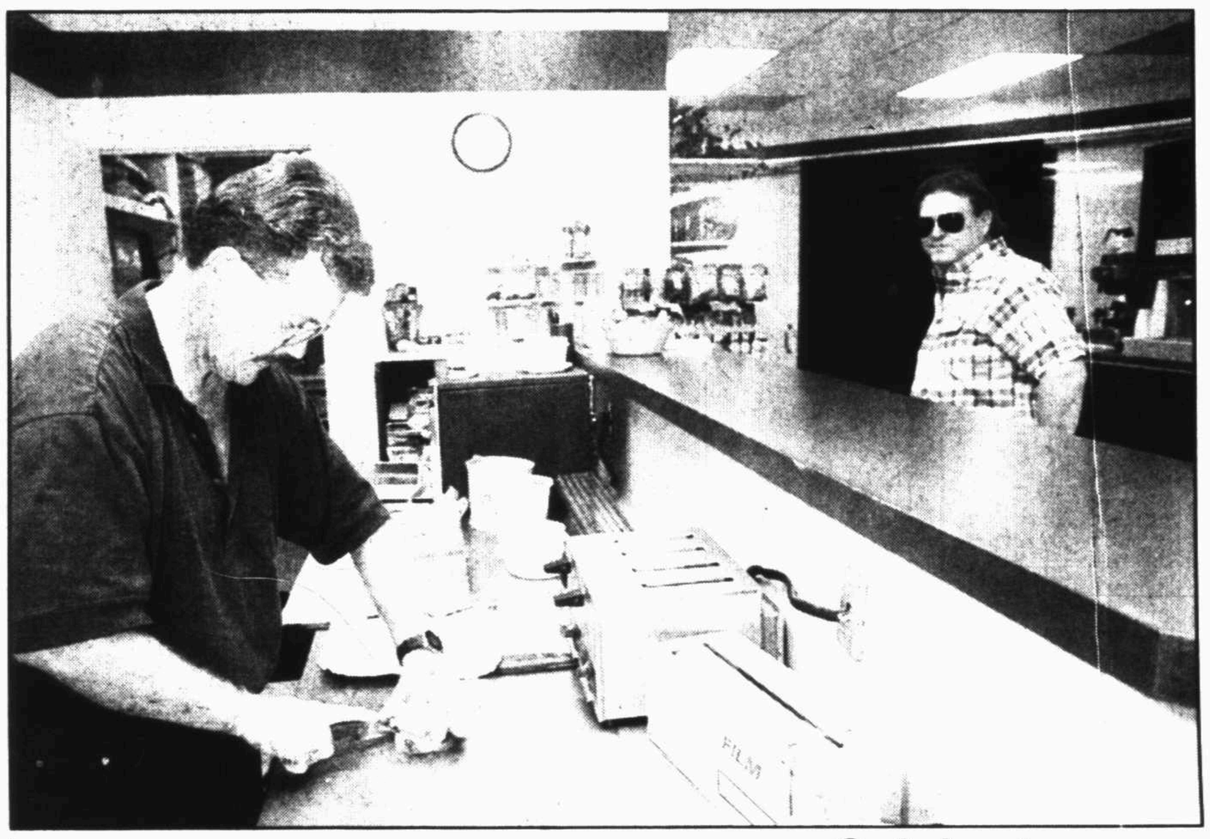

In a second report, the Labor Department said American workers' wages, salaries and benefits rose 2.7 percent in the year ended Sept. 30, the tiniest increase since it began tracking compensation in 1981.

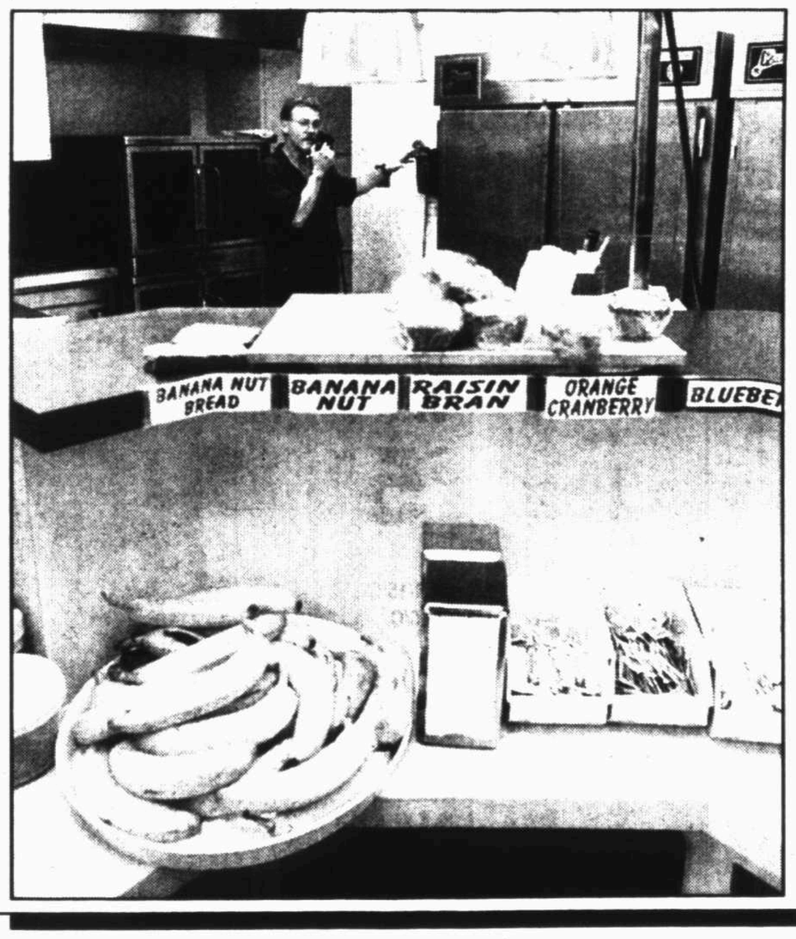

The Employment Cost Index is considered one of the best gauges of wage inflation pressures since compensation represents about two-thirds of a product's cost.

Wages and salaries — nearly three-fourths of labor costs — rose 2.8 percent in the year ended Sept. 30, even less than the 2.9 percent advance a year earlier.

Benefits increased 2.2 percent, down from a 3.8 percent advance a year ago and also the smallest gain on record. Benefit increases were held back in large part by declining health-care costs.

The report said employment costs for workers in private industry, the broadest measure of labor costs, increased 2.6 percent during the year ended Sept. 30, also the smallest gain on record.

Celebrates 20 years

Terry Urban, owner of Terry's Coffee Shop, 306 W. Wall St., makes a sandwich for customer Dan O'Neill, top. Left, he sets up a catering job. Urban and his parents opened the shop around Nov. 1, 1975 and has moved three times within the same building. Urban, who has been in the food service business since he was in sixth grade, said the shop has made his family a good living offering full-service breakfast and lunch that includes 15 different sandwiches, daily specials and special desserts. Each afternoon homemade cookies go on sale. Terry's also offers delivery and catering service, including catering for businesses he has worked with for 15 years or more. He credits long-term employees such as Daniel Hernandez, a cook for 19 years, Hernandez' wife Mary, Mary Nelson, a cook for 12 years, and his parents, Laura and Henry, who put both his and Terry's cars up for collateral and bought the location 20 years ago while Terry was studying at Stephen F. Austin University. "We're a close-knit group that I sometimes call Terry and the Houdinis," Urban joked. He also expressed gratitude to his long-time customers. Washington accused of hurting S&Ls

By Rob Wells
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — As Congress debates a rescue of the fund that insures savings and loan deposits, thrift executives say the effort might not be necessary if Washington had kept a funding promise six years ago.

Some S&L executives are accusing Congress and the Treasury Department of breaking a pledge to spend $8 billion to $11 billion in a 1989 thrift bailout bill to revive the Savings Association Insurance Fund, or SAIF.

"We would have been capitalized by now if they had done what they should have done," said Ray Williams, president and chief executive officer of Mineola Federal Savings and Loan Association of Mineola, Texas.

Industry executives say if Washington had kept its word, the thrift fund rescue now would be either unnecessary or much smaller in scope.

Williams asked congressional staff members this summer during a visit to Washington what had become of the money. "Nobody could tell me," he said in an interview last week.

House Banking Committee Chairman James Leach, R-Iowa, defended his role in the matter, saying he doesn't want taxpayers to pay any more for the thrift bailout, which now exceeds $100 billion.

"The feeling is the taxpayers have kicked in a substantial amount here," Leach spokesman David Runkel said.

Runkel noted the industry now enjoys near record financial strength and has "voluntarily" agreed to pay out more than $6 billion next year — almost a year's profits — to get the SAIF on sure footing.

A senior Treasury Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said former Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen in 1993 sought funding for SAIF, but Congress wouldn't go along.

While the S&L industry is now quite healthy, its deposit insurance fund is suffering from a smaller deposit base — down 25 percent in the past 6 years. The SAIF, which insures deposits of up to $100,000 at the nation's 1,500 S&Ls and savings banks, is in danger of insolvency if one major S&L fails.

A serious problem for the thrift fund is that S&Ls first must make payments to satisfy a bailout of the SAIF's predecessor fund before they can contribute to the deposit insurance fund. Those payments come in the form of interest on Financing Corp. bonds issued in the 1980s.

Both the House and Senate banking committees, with support from the Clinton administration, have passed bills that would have thrifts make the one-time $6 billion payment into the SAIF next year. Then, the fund would be merged with the separate bank insurance fund, which insures deposits at commercial banks.

Marlins' Sheffield survives robbery attempt, shooting

By Fred Goodall
AP Sports Writer

TAMPA, Fla. — Gary Sheffield felt blessed Tuesday for more than his ability to play to baseball.

The Florida Marlins slugger, who escaped serious injury when he was shot during what he and police described as a botched carjacking, was thankful for his life.

"Guns kill and I wasn't," the two-time National League All-Star said. "I'd say I'm more blessed than lucky."

Sheffield said he was shot Monday night by a teen-ager who ran up to his Mercedes at a stoplight in the east Tampa neighborhood where he and his uncle, New York Yankees pitcher Dwight Gooden, grew up and starred on Little League teams that won world championships.

The gunman fired a single shot through the driver's window, striking the player in the left shoulder. The 26-year-old outfielder said he was able to avoid further harm by turning away from the assailant and pretending he was dead, before pulling off.

Sheffield said he nearly opened his double-plated glass window to the gunman, believing he probably knew the teen because the slugger and his Mercedes are well known in his old neighborhood.

"I was getting ready to let my window down and that's when I saw something silver in his hand," he said.

The 1992 NL batting champion drove to a nearby barber shop and used a pay telephone to call for help. He was treated and released from St. Joseph's Hospital and is confident the damage to his nonthrowing shoulder won't affect his career.

"I have full range of motion. It's like it never happened. The only thing that's here is a mark. ... It was just a flesh wound, about the size of a dime," said Sheffield, who added he was in the neighborhood "killing time" while his 7-year-old daughter was at cheerleader practice.

He credited the window and a quick turn away to shield himself with saving him from worse injury.

Police said no witnesses had come forward and there were no suspects in the case. Sheffield provided sketchy information about the gunman but plans to meet with police again to assist in their investigation.

"Sometimes after the shock of something like this has worn off, people remember things that maybe they couldn't recall right after it happened," said police spokesman Steve Cole.

Sheffield said there were at least five cars at the intersection, including a vehicle stopped behind his.

Tarpley could be put on suspended list

DALLAS (AP) — Mavericks forward Roy Tarpley will either be placed on the injured list or the suspended list for the start of the regular season, president and general manager Norm Sonju said.

Mavericks officials hope to meet with doctors Wednesday to discuss Tarpley's status, according to The Dallas Morning News' editions Wednesday.

Tarpley has not been cleared to join the team because of questions regarding the inflammation of his pancreas. Including him on the 12-man active roster appears to be out of the question.

NBA clubs must set their rosters by 5 p.m. Thursday.

While on the injured list, Tarpley will be paid as he gets into shape. If placed on the suspended list, the club would pay nothing toward Tarpley's $3.9 million salary.

"Any physical in the United States for a basketball team, he is able to pass. He has passed," Tarpley's agent, George Andrews, contends. "The issue here is there is a legitimate concern as to how quickly they can bring him back in game condition.

"He had a serious problem, but it was not career-threatening. It seems to have subsided now. Everyone just wants to take care of this so it won't recur," he said

Chicken Pepper Pot Soup, New Orleans-style Muffuletta and Sweet and Spicy Brownies are sure winners for a football picnic.

Food for Football

Associated Press

Football picnics are great fun, whether served from a station wagon tailgate, an improvised table or a stadium blanket spread out on a patch of grass. The menu can be as simple — and hearty — as a flavorful chicken pepper pot soup, a New Orleans-style sandwich and homemade brownies. Serve with your favorite beverage.

You can transport the soup in a wide-mouth insulated container, the sandwich loaf and brownies snugly wrapped and packed in a basket with utensils, napkins, cups, plates and beverages.

CHICKEN PEPPER POT SOUP

2 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 large celery stalks, diced
1 large green pepper, diced
1 medium onion, diced
3 medium all-purpose potatoes, peeled and diced
3 tablespoons flour
5 cups chicken broth
2 tablespoons hot pepper sauce
½ teaspoon dried thyme
¼ teaspoon ground allspice
¼ teaspoon salt
½ pound boneless, skinless chicken breast halves
¼ cup fresh chopped parsley

In a 5-quart saucepan over medium heat, in hot oil, cook celery, green pepper and onion about 5 minutes. Add potatoes; cook 5 more minutes; stir occasionally.

Stir flour into mixture; cook 1 minute. Add chicken broth, hot pepper sauce, thyme, allspice and salt. Over high heat, heat to boiling; reduce heat to low. Cover and simmer 10 minutes.

Meanwhile, cut chicken breasts into bite-size chunks; add to vegetable mixture in saucepan. Cover and simmer 5 minutes longer until chicken and potatoes are tender. Stir in chopped parsley. Makes 6 servings.

MUFFULETTA

9¾-ounce jar green olive salad, drained and chopped
½ cup pitted black olives, chopped
1 large celery stalk, finely chopped
1½ teaspoons hot pepper sauce
8-inch round loaf crusty French bread or sourdough bread
3 tablespoons olive oil
¼ pound sliced salami
¼ pound sliced baked ham
¼ pound sliced provolone cheese

In a medium bowl, combine green olive salad, black olives, celery and 1 teaspoon of the hot pepper sauce. Cut bread crosswise in half; remove some of the soft inside from each half.

In a small bowl, combine olive oil and remaining ½ teaspoon hot pepper sauce. Brush mixture inside bread. Fill bottom with olive mixture. Top with salami, ham and provolone slices. Top with remaining bread. Cut loaf into quarters. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

SWEET AND SPICY BROWNIES

4 squares unsweetened chocolate
¾ cup butter or margarine
2 cups granulated sugar
3 large eggs
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon hot pepper sauce
½ cup semisweet chocolate chips
½ cup walnuts, chopped

In a small saucepan, over medium-low heat, melt chocolate squares and butter or margarine, stirring frequently.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 9x9-inch baking pan. In a large bowl, combine sugar, eggs, flour, hot pepper sauce and melted chocolate mixture until well blended. Stir in chocolate chips and chopped walnuts. Spoon mixture into pan. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 35 to 40 minutes until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool in pan on wire rack. Makes 16 brownies.

Torta is more than 'sorta' good

Associated Press

Zucchini, mushrooms, onion and fresh spinach leaves are among the vegetables that fill classic California torta. The vegetables are layered with Monterey Jack and mozzarella cheeses and cooked crab meat. Cut into wedges and serve warm, or let cool to room temperature.

CLASSIC CALIFORNIA TORTA

Preparation time: 35 minutes
Cooking time: 50 minutes
2 loaves frozen bread dough, thawed
1 tablespoon chopped fresh thyme (1 teaspoon if dried)
1 medium red onion, chopped
1 clove garlic, peeled and minced
3 cups sliced mushrooms
Salt and pepper to taste
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons chopped fresh dillweed
4 zucchini, sliced
½ bunch fresh spinach leaves, washed and dried
⅔ cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese
⅔ cup shredded mozzarella cheese
8 ounces crab meat, cooked and flaked

Heat oven to 375 degrees.

Combine bread dough and let rise until doubled.

On a floured surface, sprinkle with thyme and roll out to a 20-inch circle. Transfer to a greased, 10-inch springform pan, letting the edges drape over the sides.

Saute onion, garlic, mushrooms and seasonings in 2 tablespoons of the olive oil until tender, about 5 minutes. Stir in dillweed and set aside.

Saute zucchini in remaining oil until tender.

Layer half mushroom mixture, half zucchini, half spinach leaves, half cheeses and half crab meat into the dough-lined pan; repeat. Bring dough together over top, leaving a small vent for steam to escape; brush lightly with oil or beaten egg.

Bake in a 375-degree oven for 50 minutes, until golden brown and crusty. Cut into wedges and serve while still warm, or let cool to room temperature. Makes 10 servings.

Chef creates 'skinny tomato soup'

Associated Press

Almost nothing is as satisfying as a steaming bowl of tomato soup. Use skim milk instead of cream or half-and-half, and cut fat by as much as 75 percent.

Tomato-basil soup is a lean alternative to most cream-based soups. Sarah Stegner, chef at The Ritz-Carlton in Chicago, created the recipe. It offers 1 cup of skim milk per serving, which contributes 300 milligrams of calcium in exchange for 0 grams of fat.

TOMATO-BASIL SOUP

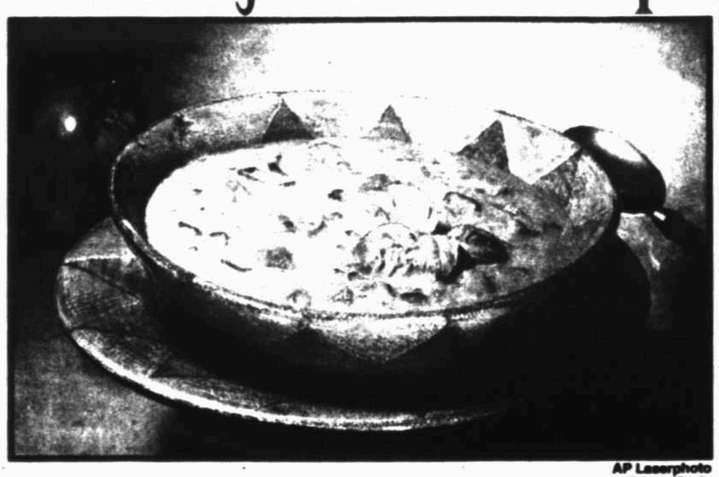

8 ripe plum tomatoes or 16-ounce can tomatoes, drained
1 large onion, chopped
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 cloves garlic, crushed
1 pinch ground red pepper
1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil or 1 teaspoon dried basil
2 cups skim or 1 percent milk
Salt
Freshly ground pepper
Fresh basil leaves for garnish, optional

In a large pot of boiling water, blanch the ripe tomatoes for 10 seconds. Transfer to colander; cool slightly. Peel off skin. Cut tomatoes in half; remove seeds and chop.

In a medium saucepan, cook the onion in olive oil over medium heat, stirring frequently, until golden brown, about 4 minutes. Add the garlic and cook 1 minute longer. Add the chopped tomatoes. Cook uncovered over medium heat for 20 minutes. Spoon three-fourths of the mixture into a food processor or blender container; puree until smooth.

Return to saucepan, add red pepper, basil and milk to the soup. Heat until hot but do not boil. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

WHAT'S COOKING?

Home cooking is best, cook says

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

Joan Stocks Nobles believes in homecooking, and that's what she does in both her own home and in her position as manager of Midland Woman's Club.

"I have hundreds of recipes!" she said, explaining that she spent more than 30 years in hotel restaurant management in San Angelo and Fort Davis before returning to Midland to "retire."

But that was almost four years ago, before the Woman's Club ladies called her and offered her the position of manager. "So much for 'retirement'!" she laughed.

"I had lived here a number of years ago," Mrs. Nobles said. "It has been wonderful being back."

Cooking — and cooking for crowds — is an art that she has been an expert at for most of her life. "I was born and reared on a ranch," Mrs. Nobles said, "and I have cooked all my life. At the ranch cooking for 20, 30 or 50 men was nothing."

All that experience in cooking she gained while living on the ranch has been expanded into a profession that she finds very satisfying.

"Cooking is so easy for me, where it would be difficult for someone else," said Mrs. Nobles.

Joan Stocks Nobles, manager of Midland Woman's Club, has cooked all her life and believes no food is as good as home-cooked food.

DEAR ABBY

Children get caught in middle of divorce

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I must disagree with your flip answer to "Ticked Off in Texas." It is clear that neither you nor any of your staff has ever been in the position of being a second wife where there are children from a prior marriage.

Van Buren

I agree, it is very important for the divorced parents to be able to discuss matters pertaining to their child (or children), but that is as far as it should go.

Buying items from the drug (or grocery) store for his former wife should not be his responsibility. As an adult, she should be responsible for her own shopping.

If this couple is such good friends, why did they get divorced in the first place? He has remarried, and his main responsibility is to his present wife. For you to mock the second wife for having the courage to express her feelings shows an unusual lack of understanding on your part. — ALSO TICKED OFF

DEAR ALSO: I stand by my reply. In no way did I mock the second wife for expressing her feelings. Hostility between former spouses hurts everyone — especially the children. It is much better when former spouses can be friendly and interact with their children.

Doing occasional favors and maintaining a reasonably friendly relationship does not mean that the second wife is loved less. In fact, a husband who does not have to contend with his former wife's anger is freer to pursue the good life with wife No. 2.

DEAR ABBY: When someone dies and the family requests that in lieu of sending flowers a donation be made to a fund established by the family, is it not unreasonable to expect an acknowledgment or a thank-you note?

In this particular case, only contributions in excess of $100 were acknowledged. Since when does the amount of the gift dictate whether or not someone's kindness is to be acknowledged?

We, and many others, feel slighted and bitter over the appalling behavior of the family of the deceased. Nearly five months have passed since "Mr. X's" death, and hundreds of people who lovingly made their donations in his honor will never be thanked because the dollar amounts did not meet the family's criteria.

What do you think, Abby? We think the family could use a course in human decency and manners. — SLAPPED IN THE FACE IN LONG ISLAND

DEAR SLAPPED: The deceased's family should thank everyone who made a contribution in honor of their loved one. Their failure to do so is inexcusable.

DEAR ABBY: My teacher gave us an assignment that has me stumped. Here is the question: What is the inscription on the Statue of Liberty, and who wrote it? — A FIFTH-GRADE STUDENT IN LEXINGTON, KY.

DEAR STUDENT: The inscription on the Statue of Liberty:

"Give me your tired, your poor,

"Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,

"The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.

"Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed to me.

"I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

The author, Emma Lazarus, was born in 1849 in New York City. She was a poet and philanthropist who organized relief for persecuted Jews immigrating to the United States from Russia. She died in 1887 at the age of 38.

Next time you are "stumped" by a homework assignment, go to your local library and ask a librarian for help. You'll be surprised by all that you can find there.

New Ritz Air Crisps are likable

By Linda Anderson

You know, it's amazing how eloquent people can be when it comes to crackers.

Anderson

Listen to this: "'Air Crisps is a major initiative that's designed to broaden the appeal for crackers to all ages. Air Crisps does this by combining the eating experience of a chip with the wholesomeness of a cracker,' says Nabisco Business Director Dora Lu. 'They add a new level of "snackability" and fun to the cracker category with their thin, crisp texture and munch-from-the-box great taste.'"

That's straight from a press release describing just how wonderful new Ritz Air Crisps and Cheese Nips Air Crisps can be. And all this time I thought they were just crackers.

I found some Ritz Air Crisps in my favorite supermarket, and couldn't resist taking a box to the office to see what the professional taste-testers at work thought. (I didn't see any of the Cheese Nips Air Crisps though, but I'm sure they are in the store by now.)

An 8-ounce box of Ritz Air Crisps cost $2.19, although Nabisco's suggested retail price is $2.39.

Label advertising says the "no cholesterol" product is "A delightfully thin, crispy snack with tiny pockets of air and great Ritz taste. Incredible thin, crispy and delicious — INHALE 'EM!"

I wouldn't take that last part literally, you know.

And by the way, don't most crackers have air pockets? And who wants to pay that much for air?

A 1-ounce serving of about 24 crackers contains 140 calories, with 40 of them from fat, according to nutrition information.

In the taste-test, most testers really liked the crackers, although some of them had to sample the crackers four or five times before they came to that decision.

The crackers don't especially look like Ritz, since they are smaller, thinner, a different color and a different taste. But they are round and they do have the Ritz name, so I guess they belong in the Ritz family.

I do have a question for the business director of Nabisco, though, who was so eloquent about these new crackers: If crackers were so "wholesome," as she said, why do companies keep coming out with new versions of them? You know, the "no cholesterol, low-fat" versions of old favorite crackers? If they were so wholesome, why do we need "healthier" versions of them?

Just asking...

COOK: Tasty pie recipes for holiday offered

(From 1D)

But cooking at home shouldn't really be that difficult, she added, and is worth the effort. "I love homemade food — that's how I was raised. Families have gotten away from preparing the food at home and eating it around the table, and I think they miss a lot."

Mrs. Nobles' three children were raised on home-cooking and have passed that legacy on to their own children — Mrs. Nobles' seven grandchildren. "We're a very close family," she said, "thank the Good Lord for that. They (her children) married three of the finest people I've ever met in my life."

Some of Mrs. Nobles' grandchildren are being raised here in Midland, so "every spare minute, I go to their games," she laughed, because "they are all involved in sports."

With the holiday season on the way, Mrs. Nobles wanted to share some of her favorite holiday dessert recipes.

"These are three of the finest pies — two of them you can make the day before (and) ... put in the ice box and not worry about," she said, adding that the Pumpkin Chiffon Pie is "the best pumpkin pie I've ever put in my mouth, bar none.

"Not any of them are difficult to make — they are simple and so good," Mrs. Nobles said, "and so much better than anything you can buy. They are cheaper to make, and I don't know why people don't take more time to cook their own food."

With these tasty recipes, maybe they will:

PUMPKIN CHIFFON PIE

Deep dish pie shell, 9½ inches
1½ cup pumpkin
½ cup sugar
½ cup milk
3 egg yolks
1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
½ teaspoon EACH ginger, nutmeg, cinnamon
Dash of salt
3 egg whites
½ cup sugar

Bake 9½-inch deep dish pie shell; cool.

In double boiler, cook pumpkin, ½ cup sugar, milk and egg yolks until thick. Dissolve unflavored gelatin in cold water. Add to custard with ginger, nutmeg, cinnamon and salt.

Beat egg whites until stiff. Gradually add ½ cup sugar. Fold into custard mixture and pour into pie shell.

FRENCH SILK PIE

Deep dish pie shell, 9½ inches
1½ squares unsweetened chocolate
¾ cup butter or margarine
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 eggs

Bake 9½ inch deep dish pie shell; cool.

Melt unsweetened chocolate in double boiler. Cream butter or margarine and sugar. Add chocolate and vanilla. Add eggs and beat an additional 3 minutes.

Pour mixture into pie shell and chill in refrigerater overnight.

To serve, top with whipped cream and garnish with semi-sweet chocolate curls.

LEMON CHESS PIE

½ cup butter or margarine
1½ cup sugar
1 tablespoon cornmeal
4 eggs
½ cup fresh lemon juice
Grated rind of 1 lemon

Cream butter or margarine and sugar until light and fluffy. Add cornmeal. Add eggs, one at a time, beating 1 minute after each addition. Add lemon juice and grated lemon rind.

Pour into uncooked pie shell and bake at 375 degrees for about 25 minutes.

SOUP: Skim fat out of tomato soup

(From 1D)

Divide the soup into warm bowls and serve immediately. Garnish with fresh basil leaves, if desired. Yields 4 cups, makes 2 servings.

NOTE: If using canned tomatoes, decrease cooking time to 10 minutes.
