COME TO BAND PRACTICE!

By Band Reporter

Mr. Leeds is anxious that the summer band rehearsals be well attended. An especial invitation is extended to those individuals who are no longer in school. The McLean band is a municipal organization as well as a school organization. Let's get the instrument out of the dust-covered case and get the lip back in shape again. Don't worry about how little you feel you will be able to contribute to the band. Your presence will help.

If you are one of those individuals who cannot play an instrument at present, but who is interested in learning one, provision is made for you at the beginners' band rehearsals. Mr. Leeds also announces that he is ready to give private instruction on any of the band or orchestral instruments.

The summer band rehearsals are scheduled as follows:

Advanced band, Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 p. m.

Beginners' band, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 8 a. m.

Rehearsals will not interfere with the theatre program, for the band will be dismissed in ample time to attend the theatre.

Again, it be urged that you come out and help your band. It is in dire need of additional members, and you will derive as much pleasure and profit from it as anyone.

ORDER IN THE COURT!

By Delectus

"Let me not be thought as intruding anything derogatory to the profession of law or to the distinguished members of that industrious order. Sooner would I throw this trusty pen into the flames and cork up my inkbottle forever, than infringe even for a nail's breadth upon the dignity of these truly benevolent champions of the distressed."—Washington Irving.

Strolling through the country church yard with his dad, the little boy stopped to read the inscription on a tombstone. "Here lies a lawyer and an honest man," he read aloud. Turning a questioning face to his father, he asked, "Dad, why did they bury two men in one grave?"

You've heard that story, no doubt. It's as old as the law itself. But it fits in as a starting point for the subject I am about to discuss—lawyers.

Lawyers have always been the butt of jokes and humorous stories, most of them reflecting against their probity. Though generally respected, it can hardly be said that they have ever been held in the same high esteem by the populace as other professional men, such as teachers, authors, doctors. The reason is clear. The author uses his talent and intellect to inform or to please the minds of thousands; the teacher uses his knowledge to educate; the doctor uses his skill to relieve pain and cure disease. The lawyer, however, uses his talent, his knowledge and his skill to protect the interests of his client, and, in equal measure, to destroy those whom he opposes in the interests of his client. Indeed, Washington Irving as far back as a century ago, deplored "the blessings of innumerable laws" and "the class of men who rose to expound and confound them," he himself having been nearly ruined by a lawsuit which had been decided against him and his ruin completed by another which had been decide in his favor.

The curious thing about the legal profession is that the laws under which we live, are made by lawyers. Yet, there is hardly a law in the penal code that cannot be trampled down by the very lawyers who created them. To the puzzled lay mind, it seems incomprehensible that justice should be balance on so tiny a pivot as a comma—that the letter of the law should prevail over the spirit in which the law was written. And this, I believe, accounts to a great extent for the lack of esteem towards lawyers in general.

The lawyer, paraphrasing the adage of "My Country," believes that "my clients, may they always be right but right or wrong, my clients." Even though he knows his client to be in the wrong, he feels in duty bound to use every artifice at his command to conceal the truth. And so he must necessarily condone the acts of thieves, robbers, racketeers and murderers, and he uses his skill that they may go free either on a technicality which the lawyer found in the law that he himself may have helped to put into the code, or by reason of an ability which he possessed, to outsmart the lawyer on the other side.

There are a good many stories told of lawyers who, by trick and artifice obtained acquittals for clients whom they knew to be guilty of the charge against which they were hired to defend the offender. One such case that comes to mind is that of the lawyer engaged to defend a man who was being tried for murder. The facts in the case are not clear in my mind but they are substantially as I tell them. The man on trial was accused of having put poison in a biscuit which he passed to his wife at the breakfast table. The remains of the biscuit was the evidence upon which the guilt or innocence of the defendand rested. There was no denying that the defendant did pass the biscuit to his wife and that she did die after having partaken of it. Throughout all of the examination and cross examination, it seemed that the evidence would surely lead to an elevation of the culprit to the gallows. But when the time came for summing up, the lawyer for the defendant, instead of addressing the jury, nonchalantly picked up the biscuit, calmly took an ample bite, swallowed, and then asked the astounded jury whether they wanted more conclusive proof that the evidence about the biscuit being poisoned was bosh. Of course, the verdict returned was "not guilty." But nobody in that court room, except the lawyer himself, knew that in the anteroom, a physician was waiting with a stomach pump and an antidote to counteract the effects of the particular poison with which the biscuit was saturated.

* * * *

And it is such tricks, and such artifices that make lawyers whom we characterize as "great." Yet, Judge Davis, who presided at the celebrated trial of Boss Tweed, accused of grafting, said, in lecturing Tweed's lawyers held for contempt of court, that "good faith in a client never can justly require bad faith in your own consciences,and however good a thing it may be to be known as a successful and great lawyer, it is even better to be known as an honest lawyer."

Although the Tweed trial took place in 1863, there is no evidence to show that the many thousands of lawyers who have since come into being, have in any way been influenced by the wise words of that distinguished judge.

In the legal profession, there are many specialists, such as the criminal lawyer, the corporation lawyer, the patent lawyer, the bankruptcy lawyer. These specialists are, in turn, subdivided into branches, such as lawyers who prepare cases for trial, those who try cases, and those who appear in cases brought on appeal to the higher courts.

The trial lawyers, as a rule, are those who, when they have a weak case, can pick a moron for the jury, who have a strong voice and can bluff and bluster at a witness who is not allowed to sass back, who have the forensic ability to sway a jury and, if necessary, even bring a deluge of tears from their own sad eyes.

The corporation lawyer looks with contempt upon trial lawyers. He is gifted with a microscopic mind that can find a loop-hole the size of a needle's eye and magnify it to the size of Boulder Dam.

The counsel who specializes on appeal cases is in the best racket that the profession affords. He is usually selected by the lawyer in the lower level not because of his knowledge of legal lore but because of a prestige which he has acquired through politics or because he is presumed to know the ropes through having served on the bench and failed in reelection. He gets the biggest part of the fee and does the least amount of work, as the case comes to him fully prepared by the lawyer who engages him and requires little more than reciting the brief before the higher court.

* * * *

And now, having had our little fling, it is about time that we turned a bit magnanimous and admit that in the face of all the criticism that can be heaped upon the legal profession, the fault is not so much with the lawyers as with the laws. Fundamentally, lawyers as a class are no less honorable, and their scruples are no lower than those of the general run of men engaged in business, banking, or most other professions. It would seem that if we were to correct the existing abuses, as here but lightly touched upon, we should have to wipe the slate clean of all laws and start over again from the scratch. That is what Soviet Russia has done and although they have gone through the depths of hell in the process and have still a long way to go before they are out of inferno, the experiment, if ultimately successful, will have been worth the cost. Meantime, we will continue to hobble along with our laws and our lawyers as they are, and be thankful that bad as they may be, they are as the fresh air of the open fields is to the tainted air of a prison cell in the concentration camps, when compared to the laws under which people are forced to live these days in so many other countries of the world.—Heavy Stuff

A DREAM

(Reprinted from "Adventures of Bill Bright.")

Last night I had a dream about accidents. I dreamt that I came into a great big room and there, sitting in rows, were lots of people. They were all catalogued with numbers—1, 2, 3, 4, etc. There were men, women and children. Some were numbered with one number, some another. There seemed to be no plan by which the numbers were given out. The people seemed to be like sheep or chickens in a pen.

I asked a strange guard about them.

"These," he said, "are people who will be killed and injured next year in accidents. Do you recognize any of your friends and relaitves among them?"

He gave me a catalogue. I read: "Those marked

"No. 1 are to be killed outright.

"No. 2 are to be injured and to die later.

"No. 3 are to be permanently disabled.

"No. 4 are to get well after a long time.

"No. 5 are to lose a right hand."

The list ran on for eyes, fingers, feet, etc.

I asked: "Who condemns these people?"

The guard answered: "Carelessness, Take-a-Chance and Intemperance are the three tyrants who take turns at condemning people."

I woke up with a sense of horror. And the worst part about it is—that dream will come true!

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Foster and son, James, of Pampa visited relatives here over the week end.

OLD AUTOS SAFEST

Those nice new and shiny autos might look the best and get you there the fastest, but apparently the old cars are the safest. That much at least is indicated by a survey conducted by the Automobile Trade Journal. Reporting the results of that survey the Cleveland Trust Co. says the investigators studied the records of nearly 500 accidents which took place in a large eastern state in the two closing months of 1935, and in January of this year. They classified the accidents according to the ages of the cars involved in them. Then they found what percentage of these cars were in each age group, etc. The results turned out just opposite to what people have always assumed—that it is dangerous to drive an old, worn-out car, while the new and latest model contains all the latest safety gadgets and is therefore the safest. This survey showed that the latest models of cars were found in disportionately large numbers of accidents while the old models of 1925 were involved in only one-third of their expected share.—Pathfinder.

But I watch an' pray an' reap an' sow,

A JOINT RESOLUTION

proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the State of Texas fixing the salaries of certain constitutional officers by amending Section 5 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas, fixing the salary of the Governor at Twelve Thousand ($12,000.00) Dollars per annum; by amending Section 22 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas fixing the salary of the Attorney General at Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars per annum; by amending Section 23 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas fixing the salary of the Comptroller, Treasurer and Commissioner of the General Land Office at Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars per annum; and by amending Section 21 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas fixing the salary of the Secretary of State at Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars per annum; providing for its submission to the voters of the State of Texas as required by the Constitution, and making an appropriation therefor.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF TEXAS:

Section 1. That Section 5 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

"Section 5. The Governor shall, at stated times, receive as compensation for his services an annual salary of Twelve Thousand ($12,000.00) Dollars and no more, and shall have the use and occupation of the Governor's Mansion, fixtures and furniture; provided that the amendment shall not become effective until the third Tuesday in January, 1937."

Section 2. That Section 22 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

"Section 22. The Attorney General shall hold office for two years and until his successor is duly qualified. He shall represent the State in all suits and pleas in the Supreme Court of the State in which the State may be a party, and shall especially inquire into the charter rights of all private corporations, and from time to time, in the name of the State, take such action in the courts as may be proper and necessary to prevent any private corporation from exercising any power or demanding or collecting any species of taxes, tolls, freight or wharfage not authorized by law. He shall, whenever sufficient cause exists, seek a judicial forfeiture of such charters, unless otherwise expressly directed by law, and give legal advice in writing to the Governor and other executive officers, when requested by them, and perform such other duties as may be required by law. He shall reside at the seat of government during his continuance in office. He shall receive for his services an annual salary of Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars, and no more."

Section 3. That Section 23 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

"Section 23. The Comptroller of Public Accounts, the Treasurer, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall each hold office for the term of two years and until his successor is qualified; receive an annual salary of Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars, and no more; reside at the Capitol of the State during his continuance in office, and perform such duties as are or may be required by law. They and the Secretary of State shall not receive to their own use any fees, costs or perquisites of office. All fees that may be payable by law for any service performed by any officer specified in this Section, or in his office, shall be paid, when received, into the State Treasury."

Section 4. That Section 21 of Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Texas be so amended as to hereafter read as follows:

"Section 21. There shall be a Secretary of State, who shall be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall continue in office during the term of service of the Governor. He shall authenticate the publication of the laws, and keep a fair register of all official acts and proceedings of the Governor, and shall, when required, lay the same and all papers, minutes and vouchers relative thereto, before the Legislature, or either House thereof, and shall perform such other duties as may be required of him by law. He shall receive for his services an annual salary of Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars, and no more."

Section 5. Said proposed Constitutional Amendment shall be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of this State at the next general election to be held throughout the State on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1936, at which election all voters favoring such proposed Amendment shall write or have printed on their ballots the words:

"For the amendment to the State Constitution fixing the salary of the Governor at Twelve Thousand ($12,000.00) Dollars per annum; the salary of the Attorney General at Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars per annum; the salary of the Comptroller, Treasurer, and Commissioner of the General Land office at Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars per annum; and the salary of the Secretary of State at Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars per annum."

And those voters opposing said proposed Amendment shall write or have printed on their ballots the words:

"Against the amendment to the State Constitution fixing the salary of the Governor at Twelve Thousand ($12,000.00) Dollars per annum; the salary of the Attorney General at Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars per annum; the salary of the Comptroller, Treasurer, and Commissioner of the General Land office at Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars per annum; and the salary of the Secretary of State at Six Thousand ($6,000.00) Dollars per annum."

If it appears from the returns of said election that a majority of the votes cast are in favor of said Amendment, the same shall become a part of the State Constitution.

Section 6. The Governor of the State of Texas is hereby directed to issue the necessary proclamation for said election and to have same published as required by the Constitution and Laws of this State.

Section 7. The sum of Five Thousand ($5,000.00) Dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the State Treasury to pay for the expense of said publication and election.

Bloody Civil War Rages in Spain

CIVIL war, desperate and bloody, broke out in Spain, and though the government in Madrid declared it was in control of the situation, such news as got through the censorship indicated that the struggle was by no means ended. On one side were the Fascists and royalists led by Gen. Francisco Franco; on the other were the loyal troops and the workers, Communists and Socialists. The rebels started the game in Spanish Morocco and the Canaries and were soon in control there. Then Franco, who is only forty-three years old but a dynamic character, crossed over to Algeciras, followed by the Foreign Legion and a lot of Moors, Moroccans and black African troops. After a sharp batttle at La Linea, close to Gibraltar, these contingents began a march northward toward Seville and Cadiz. There was severe fighting in San Sebastian, where the American embassy is located in summer, and in other border towns. Malaga was reported to be in flames.

L. Companys

Commanders of the rebels asserted their aim was to "save the republic," to keep order and to destroy the Marxists. In Barcelona their attack was directed especially against Luis Companys, president of the Catalonian parliament, who was said to be besieged in his offices.

Jose Maria Gil Robles, leader of the Catholic C. E. D. A. (Confederation of Autonomous Right Parties) fled to Biarritz, France. An aviator who escaped the rebels in Morocco declared Gil Robles had instigated the revolt.

Premier Santiago Casares Quiroga resigned in favor of Diego Martinez-Barrio, speaker of parliament, but the latter held the office only a few hours. Then Jose Giral, former minister of marine, formed a cabinet with General Pozas, who has the support of both the powerful Civil Guard and Republican elements of the army, as minister of war.

The rebels sent word to the government that unless it capitulated they would bomb Madrid from planes.

Olympic Torch Started to Berlin Games

IN OLYMPIA, Greece, scene of the first Olympic games, a torch was lighted by the rays of the sun and a Greek runner seized it and started it on a 12-day relay to the sports field in Berlin where the Olympic flame is to be lighted on August 1. Five thousand distinguished persons were selected to carry the torch, these including King Boris of Bulgaria, King Peter of Jugoslavia, and a long list of princes, statesmen and sportsmen. On the last leg it was to be borne by S. Loues of Greece, winner of the marathon in the games of 1896. A hundred thousand Hitler youths will accompany Loues in a triumphal parade to the stadium.

Five thousand torches to carry the flame were donated by the Krupp works, so each of the bearers will retain one as a souvenir.

Hot and Dry Spell Broken by Rains and Cool Winds

RELIEF for the drouth-stricken regions in the Middle West came with rains in many sections and cooling winds that sent the temperature down toward normal. However, it was too late to save the crops in many states, and prices of foodstuffs continued to advance. The farmers began to receive aid from the government in the form of cash, and no one could deny that they needed this help.

Dr. Tugwell

Loss of life throughout the United States from the unprecedented heat wave exceeded 3,850, an all-time high.

Agronomists in Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio expressed apprehension over the outlook for the corn crop unless general rains should develop rapidly.

Arriving at Bismarck, N. D., to help co-ordinate drouth relief enterprises, Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, was informed that approximately 60,000 farm families in the state were among the needy. A conference of state and federal officials in Bismarck developed a three-fold plan for the relief of dwellers in the desolated areas of the Dakotas, western Minnesota, eastern Montana and Wyoming. These included:

Immediate advancement of money to needy families, repayable out of WPA earnings; granting of funds to farmers desiring to keep small livestock herds for the purchase of feed and subsistence to be repaid by work on WPA projects; loans and grants to owners of large scale cattle enterprises to cover the cost of shipping animals to other states for feeding.

Nazi Decrees in Danzig Crush Opposition

UNLESS the protests of Poland are effective, all opposition to Nazi power in the Free City of Danzig is due to be crushed. Dr. Arthur Karl Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, which is controlled by Nazis, has issued administrative decrees ordering:

1. Dissolution of any organization whose members, with knowledge of its executive board, spreads news "endangering the state interest."

2. Prohibition of review by the courts of police measures of a political nature, including those aimed at the right of assembly, the press, and free speech.

3. Prohibition of Jewish ritual slaughtering for food purposes.

4. Imposition of three month protective custody on persons declared to be "endangering the public peace."

Thus the city's constitution is virtually set aside, and the Poles especially, having extensive economic interests there, are indignant.

Doings of Towsendites in Their Convention

AN ALLIANCE between Dr. Francis E. Townsend, Father Charles E. Coughlin and Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith in the interests of a third party was announced at the Townsendite convention in Cleveland, attended by 12,000 followers of the California doctor who advocates pensions of $200 per month for every person over sixty.

Dr. Townsend

In an address before the convention, Father Coughlin bitterly denounced the present administration and President Roosevelt and called upon the delegates to follow Dr. Townsend in endorsing the candidacy of William Lemke for the presidency on the Union ticket.

Lemke himself appeared before the convention before it adjourned and made a speech in which he pledged himself to "stand four-square behind the old age pension movement" and denounced the present administration as "national lunacy." The delegates applauded the first statement, but otherwise were rather apathetic toward the Union party leader. Doctor Townsend made no plea for him but merely urged his followers to concentrate on the election of senators and congressmen.

Nanking Troops Take Control of Canton

REVOLT of the Cantonese against the Nanking government has collapsed and latest reports say government troops have entered Canton and taken over maintenance of peace and order. There was no opposition and the city was quiet.

Chen Chi-tang, the Canton war lord, deserted his followers and fled to Hongkong on a gunboat. There was a scramble to find Chen's alleged silver hoard, said to amount to many million dollars, but much of it is believed to be deposited in foreign banks.

The Nanking government gains possession of Kwantung province's fleet of more than 300 fighting planes, and also of extensive armaments. These latter include quantities of heavy artillery, field artillery and machine guns, nearly half a million rifles, numbers of anti-aircraft guns, tanks, the southwest's navy, two arsenals and one airplane factory.

Turkey Given Right to Rearm the Dardanelles

EIGHT signatories to the Lausanne post-war treaty have granted to Turkey the right to remilitarize the Dardanelles, and they, with Turkey, have signed a convention covering the matter. Only Japan made slight reservations because it is no longer a member of the League of Nations.

The convention grants complete liberty to merchant marine passage through the straits in peacetime and wartime, even with Turkey at war, provided the commercial vessels do not assist the fighting powers.

The Russian navy is granted complete freedom in peacetime to leave and enter the Black sea through the straits, but nations outside will be subjected to limitations on passage of fighting ships through the channel.

During wartime belligerents will be prohibited from using the straits unless acting for the league.

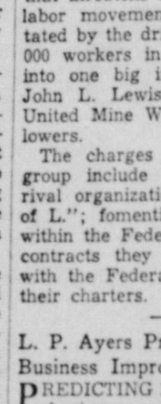

Communist Campaign to Open on August 5

NATIONAL campaign headquarters of the Communist party have been opened in New York city and it is announced that Earl Browder, candidate for President, will start his speechmaking in Denver on August 5. From there he goes to Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Butte, Bismarck and Minneapolis. All his speeches will be broadcast.

James W. Ford, colored, the Communist party's candidate for vice president, will open his tour August 5 with an appearance in Scranton, Pa.

Attempt to Kill King Edward of England

THE attempted assassination of King Edward VIII of England in London brought great alarm to the English speaking world. The attempt was made near Hyde Park and the monarch's life was saved by a woman bystander who grappled with the would-be assassin and wrested a pistol from him.

King Edward

The king was returning to Buckingham palace from Hyde Park, where on horseback he had presented new colors to six battalions of the Grenadier, Coldstream and Scots guards.

In Paris, the celebration of France's national holiday, Bastille day, saw the Champs Elysees a scene of rioting with rightists and leftists in combat with each other and the police. The disorders began when leftists were returning from their own parade in the eastern section of the city.

Lewis and Others Are Summoned for Trial

IMMEDIATE splitting of the American Federation of Labor into two rival groups was averted by the action of the Federation's executive council in voting to bring to trial on August 3, the union leaders led by John L. Lewis on charges of "dual unionism." It had been reported earlier that the council had voted to suspend the 12 unions grouped as the Committee for Industrial Unionization.

The council's action was looked upon as a peace move in the crisis that threatens open warfare in the labor movement. It was precipitated by the drive to organize 500,000 workers in the steel industry into one big industrial union by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and his followers.

The charges against the Lewis group include "competition as a rival organization with the A. F. of L."; fomenting an insurrection within the Federation; violation of contracts they have entered into with the Federation when granted their charters.

L. P. Ayers Predicts Big Business Improvement

PREDICTING 1936 will be the best business year since 1930 and "possibly since 1929," Colonel Leonard P. Ayers, economist of Cleveland, declared that statistics on all important business had shown substantial and "healthy increases" since the first of this year. Strikes, drouth and other difficulties have not affected increases in employment, markets and security exchanges, the economist said.

"More steel has been produced in the first half of 1936 than in all 1932," he pointed out. "A major factor in the increased steadiness of business has been well sustained employment among the factory workers making durable goods. Workers in the durable goods factories suffer most from lay-offs and shut-downs, but such has not been the case in the first half of this year and of last year."

Henry Ford Has Vision Concerning Foods

HENRY FORD, approaching his seventy-third birthday envisioned the eventual decline of farm animals as a source of the world's food and predicted that grains and other crops will largely be substituted for them.

Henry Ford

"We can, I believe, get a more plentiful supply of food cheaper and better," he said, "by processing the products of the soil instead of asking cows and chickens to do it for us. In the future farm animals of all kinds will decline in numbers. We won't need them."

Army to Get Many New Fast Fighting Planes

PERFECTED plans of the War department for procurement of airplanes provide for the acquisition of 60 new fast fighting planes every month during the rest of this year. This has been made possible by the smooth functioning of a new purchasing plan started by Harry H. Woodring, assistant secretary of war.

Before the end of the year, 500 new planes will be ready for action, officials said. Plans have been made for the purchase of more than 600 planes of various types in 1937.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club

Hello Everybody!

"Too Much Courage"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

SOMETIMES it's a fine thing, boys and girls, to have one of those cast-iron, copper-plated nervous systems that don't get all in a jitter the minute something happens.

Steeplejacks have them—and so have structural ironworkers who spend most of their working day twenty stories above the street, balanced on a ten-inch iron beam, playing baseball with red hot rivets. I've always sort of envied birds like that for their courage.

And again, at times, I've been glad I don't have nerves like theirs. After all, our nerves are about the best warning signals we have—and you know what usually happens to the guy who doesn't pay any attention to the signs.

Take the case of Bill Woods, for instance—William H. Woods of Brooklyn, N. Y. Bill isn't an ironworker, but he's got an ironworker's nerve. Put him in a burning building, and my guess is that he wouldn't begin to get excited about it until the fire actually began creeping up his coat-tails. I'm judging him now from the way he acted in that restaurant in Brooklyn on April 30, 1934.

This Adventure Starts With a Cup of Coffee.

It's quite a story, boys and girls—a story that starts out with a walking tour through the streets of Brooklyn. Bill and his friend, Charley Young, had been taking an evening stroll, and eleven o'clock found them at Boro Hall park. Charley suggested that they drop into a cafeteria for a cup of coffee before they hit the hay. Bill agreed, and they crossed the street.

They went into the cafeteria, took their checks from the machine at the door and went over to the long counter. They ordered coffee, and the counterman turned to get it. But no sooner had he turned than he swung back toward the door and said: "What's the matter over there?"

That's the first intimation Bill and Charley had that anything was wrong. They looked in the direction in which the counterman was staring. Several men were scuffling over near the door. Then, suddenly from the center of that milling group came the sound of a shot!

Bedlam Breaks Loose in Cafeteria Following Shots.

"In the moment that immediately followed," says Bill, "no one stirred. Everyone in the place had stopped eating and all eyes were turned toward the door. That moment of indecision didn't last long, however, for suddenly another shot rang out, loud and deafening in that enclosed space. No one knew what had happened, but you couldn't mistake that sound."

The Man Fell Over Backwards and Was Still.

At that second shot, bedlam broke loose in the cafeteria. Women screamed. Men jumped up from their seats. Tables were overturned. Everyone thought of just one thing, and that was getting under cover. Everyone was running about in frantic haste to get a door between them and that revolver—everyone, that is, but Bill Woods. In all the hullabaloo he alone kept his head. And it nearly cost him his life.

Bill looked around for Charley. He was gone—evidently into a milling crowd of people who had run toward the back of the cafeteria and were trying to crowd into the washrooms. Those who weren't there were crawling on their hands and knees, trying to get under a table. Bill noticed that and decided to get under cover himself. There was a radiator with a screened grill in front of him and he dropped down behind that. There followed a brief silence punctuated only by the sounds of struggling men, then another shot reverberated through the room. That was when Bill's curiosity and his nerve got the better of his common sense. He stood up to take a look.

Bill Made a Fine Target for the Man With the Gun.

Over by the door, a man, gun in hand, was standing, back up against the cashier's counter, while half a dozen younger men tried to wrestle the gun away from him. "One of the younger men," says Bill, "picked up a heavy sugar container and hit the older man over the head. I saw the glass break and the sugar scatter over the floor, but the man with the gun seemed invincible. They couldn't beat him down. They were too many for him in the end, though, and finally he fell behind the cashier's desk. And then, thinking all danger was past, I walked over to the counter."

Bill walked over until he was within ten feet of the fallen man when, to his amazement, the man started to sit up. The gun, still in his hand, rose until it pointed straight at Bill's midriff. Too late, Bill began to wish he'd been one of those nervous individuals who had taken refuge in the washroom.

He stood petrified—afraid to move. He drew in a deep breath and waited to feel the bullet bite into his flesh. At that distance, the man on the floor couldn't miss.

Timely Arrival of Copper Saves Bill's Life.

Then, the only thing that could save Bill's life happened. Through the restaurant door came a police sergeant with a drawn pistol. He got the situation at a glance, took deliberate aim at the man with the gun, and shot him through the stomach. That was the end. The man fell over backwards and was still. A red circle of blood slowly widened beneath him.

More policemen came. They began asking questions. The cashier of the restaurant had been creased over one ear by a bullet, and one young man, shot through the shoulder, was leaning against the counter, trying to staunch the flow of blood.

They told the story. The man with the gun, they said, had been drunk. He had walked over to a table and accused another man of laughing at him. An argument started and the drunk drew a gun. That was when Old Lady Adventure stepped in and started shaking up thrill cocktails—one for everybody in the house, and a deadly one for the man with the gun.

Women Wore Men's Shoes

During Ohio's yesteryears the forests were so swampy that women could scarcely walk to church or to other gatherings in their pretty footwear. So instead they wore the rough heavy shoes used by the menfolk. Close to their destination they would deposit the rough shoes in a fence corner or some other near-by place and put on their dainty shoes to wear inside. Thus their Sunday footwear lasted years and years.

Montreal's Historic Crosses

Many of the historic crosses in Montreal were raised by the pioneer inhabitants to commemorate being spared from the St. Lawrence River's ravages before it finally was brought under control. Founded by the man who erected its first and most famous cross, Paul de Chomedy, le Sieur de Maisonneuve, Montreal is frequently called the "City of Crosses." Maisonneuve' cross was erected almost 300 years ago.

Considering how fine this railroad transportation is nowadays, you can't travel any cheaper. Fares lowest in history—substantial savings on round trip tickets. So why not take the train? It's safer. It's more dependable.

You can't beat the improved travel comfort in coaches and sleeping cars. It's a good thing movies don't have such restful seats—most folks would sure fall asleep.

Ever hear about the new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight? It's a great convenience to shippers and receivers alike. Western railroads pick up at the door, ship by fast freight, and deliver to door at no extra charge.

Railroad trains are running on faster schedules these days. Seems like the iron horse wants to show these new streamlined diesels that he can step out, too. Both passenger and freight schedules have been speeded up.

What's more, the railroads believe in "safety first." Last year not one passenger was killed in a train accident on western railroads.

Talk to your local railroad agent. He's full of information about traveling and shipping.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

Many have asked us what is the matter with the grocery men the reason they quit advertising. Your guess is as good as ours, brother, also your reason, and we have heard dozens of them advanced. CHAPTER VI
—12—

Deborah walked slowly back to the house. The shadows were beginning to lengthen; the sun was already dropping down toward the western hills. In the garden the men had turned on the spray of the new watering system that had been installed, and the water spread up in a wide jewelled fan against the orchard green.

From the road outside the wall came the steady hum of an approaching motor. The motor slowed. The gate was open; the car turned in and came cautiously up the drive not with its usual swift rush to the house.

It was Mr. Forbes.

"Here I am," he said cheerfully. "Don't say you don't remember me!"

"Of course I remember you," Deborah said, smiling. "It's only a little more than two weeks."

He took her outstretched hand. He smiled down at her, the warmest and most comfortable kind of smile. "Where's Bryn?" His eyes searched her face, and she flushed faintly as she answered.

"He's gone to town. You must have passed him there."

"Well, he'll come back," Tubby said with assurance, and turned to the man who had come with him, still sitting in the car. "It's the place, all right," he said, and the man began to climb out. Tubby turned back to Deborah. "I've brought the new butler."

"Oh." Deborah's eyes flickered over the grave and dignified mien of the new butler. She nodded to him. "I'll call Gary," she decided, turned, stepped inside the kitchen and called out "Gary! Oh, Gar-eee!"

In a moment he came, puffing, red faced, his coat only half on. He was fumbling for the sleeve. "Never mind your coat," Deborah told him, and took it away from him. "This is Gary, Mr. Forbes," she told Tubby. "Mr. Forbes is . . . is Bryn's best friend," she informed Gary. "He has brought us a butler. You will take care of him, Gary, and Mr. Forbes, too, I must run and tell Grandmother." She smiled again at Tubby. "She will be wondering."

"Who was that, dear?" Grandmother inquired as Deborah reached the foot of the steps. "Not gardeners, surely. They seem quite different."

"It's . . . a Mr. Forbes, Grandmother. I told you about him. He was at my wedding. Bryn calls him Tubby. Because he is so pink and plump, I suppose. And the man with him is the new butler. Gary is taking care of them."

Grandmother sighed contentedly. "I can scarcely believe it," she murmured.

Footsteps sounded in the hall inside the open door, and Tubby appeared in the doorway. He hesitated, and Deborah went to his side.

"Grandmother, this is Mr. Forbes," she murmured, and Tubby crossed the porch to bend over the wrinkled hand held out to him. He looked very nice indeed in a suit of gray-blue, a perfectly tailored suit.

"I am so glad you have come," Grandmother was saying. She settled herself again into her pillows and drew the thin Paisley smooth over her knees. "I have suggested to Bryn any number of times that we might have some of his friends come and visit us, but as yet we have been so busy putting the house and ourselves in order."

Tubby was frankly staring at her. "Do you call him Bryn, now?" he inquired.

"Yes. He explained it to me, and asked me if I minded. Of course I did not mind. I have become very fond of him, even in this short time. It doesn't matter what he is called. You have known him a long time, Mr. Forbes?"

"Yes." Tubby was beginning, comfortably. He settled down in his chair.

A stately figure appeared in the doorway. It was the butler, bland and serene, with a small silver tray holding a bell. He looked at Tubby and waited.

"Oh," Tubby said. "Mrs. Larned, this is Burch. I think he will be able to make you comfortable."

"How do you do, Burch," Grandmother said gently. Burch bowed, and murmured an acknowledgment of the introduction. He advanced slowly and put the bell down on the small table at Grandmother's side. His movements were quietly majestic. He began to withdraw.

"Hi," Tubby called after him. "Bring me my bag, will you, Burch?"

"Yes, sir."

In a few moments he returned with a heavy pigskin bag which he set down before Tubby on the porch. He went away again. Tubby fumbled in his pocket for a key ring. He opened the bag. He looked at Deborah.

"I've brought you some wedding presents," he said with his fascinating lisp. "There wasn't time to tell anyone before you left San Francisco. Bryn made me promise I wouldn't tell, anyway, as if it could have been kept quiet. The city is buzzing."

"Oh, dear," Deborah said faintly.

Nobody heard her. Grandmother was looking very proud. "His is a very old family, of course," she said. "Even in San Francisco the wedding was certain to be a matter of comment. Nobody there will remember us, but I am pleased to think that Bryn is well known."

Tubby drew forth a tissue-wrapped box. "This is from my sister Sally," he explained, handing it to Deborah.

Deborah unwrapped the tissue paper. Inside was a long velvet jeweler's box; she opened it, and there, in the white velvet lining, lay a whole suite of rose-colored crystals, exquisitely cut. The long strand of the necklace dropped to her waist; the earrings were pendant on silver chains; there were two sparkling bracelets and a beautiful ring. Deborah looked at them.

"Is your sister Sally . . . is she a very great friend of Bryn's too?"

"Yes, indeed. They've adored each other for years. When Sally and Simon used to quarrel, it was always Bryn that Sally went to for sympathy. He'd let her cry it out on his shoulder, and pat her—you know, the way men do," Tubby said to Grandmother with camaraderie . . . "and then he would slip off and telephone Simon, give him a good wigging, and tell him where Sally was. . . . I don't think they'd ever have got through at all if it hadn't been for Bryn."

"Who is Simon?" Deborah heard herself saying.

"Simon? Oh, he's Sally's husband. They're crazy about each other, you know, and always were, but they did quarrel until they were married. Now, here," Tubby went on, rummaging with one hand and holding out a flat round parcel with the other. "This is from me. It's the only way you'd ever get it. I thought you'd appreciate it," he muttered, his head in the bag.

Deborah unwrapped the parcel silently. Inside, looking out from a beautiful heavy silver frame, was

"All the Girls Are Crazy About Bryn."

Bryn's face. The gray eyes twinkled up at her; the mouth was firm and quiet. She looked at it. She handed it across to Grandmother. "You will like this," she said.

Grandmother took it and held it silently before her. After a moment Deborah saw her fumbling for her handkerchief. She wiped her eyes surreptitiously. She loved him. She loved him as much as that.

"There," Tubby said, lifting a fiery red face. "There, right at the very bottom, of course. Now this is from Madeline."

It was a most exquisite rose-colored silk shawl covered with pale-blue embroidered flowers in small perfect stitches, and a long pale blue fringe. "It's to match the crystals," Tubby explained, quite unnecessarily. Deborah's hand caressed the heavy silk. "I love it," she told him gently. "Is Madeline your sister too?"

"Well, no," Tubby said, with what seemed to her a hint of embarrassment. "Not exactly. She's Simon's sister, so of course she's practically in the family. She's an extremely nice girl."

"Has she been a friend of Bryn's all his life, too?"

"Well, yes. Practically."

"Do they . . ." Deborah stopped. Her violet eyes were fixed on his face. She waited.

Tubby coughed. "You know how it is," he explained with a wave of his hand. "All the girls are crazy about Bryn. Always were. They're bound to be a little upset to think he's married now and gone."

"Is Madeline upset?"

Tubby laughed heartily. "Oh, I don't think so," he said. "She's too sensible for that."

"I see," Deborah said quietly.

Grandmother looked up from the shawl and lifted the picture again. "Would it be possible to have another copy made of this?" she inquired.

"I'm sure I can get any number," Tubby said at once. "They're Bryn's graduation pictures. He's wearing the gown and hood there. I can get 'em from the photographer in Palo Alto."

"Palo Alto?"

"That's where Bryn graduated, of course, at Stanford."

"Stanford?" Grandmother repeated with wrinkled brows. "Isn't that rather strange?"

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

An Immortal Oration

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.—The future has a rotten trick of mussing up the judgments of the present. What a pity it is that we can't wear our hind-sights in front.

When I read where some ponderous performing pachyderm of the literary elephant quadrille says, "This story will live forever," I get to thinking about a time-yellowed copy of a metropolitan newspaper I saw once, a paper that was printed on November 20, 1863.

Irvin S. Cobb

It devoted great gobs of praise and nine solid columns very solid—to the eloquence of the Hon. Edward Everett of Massachusetts, who, on the day before, after months of preparation had, on a battlefield down in Pennsylvania, spoken two hours and turned loose enough oratory to fill about nine gas balloons. But of the subsequent and incidental remarks of another man, an awkward, shy man from Illinois, who had spoken just two minutes, it said, "The President was also heard briefly. The applause was formal and scattering."

Prejudices of Critics.

OFTEN, 'twould seem, the professional reviewer makes up his mind beforehand that he doesn't like you and behaves accordingly.

A friend sent me a clipping from a small city—it dealt with the opening of the picture, "Everybody's Old Man." The writer was quite severe in his analysis. He didn't like the film. Passionately, he didn't care for me.

The joke was that the theater where the picture was to have been shown burned down just about the time the paper went to press, and the picture wasn't ever shown in that town.

The next best illustration of the point I'm making dates back years ago. I was discussing various novelists with that gentle wit, the late Oliver Herford.

"Ollie," I said, "what do you think of So-and-So's books?" "My dear Cobb," he softly murmured, "something I once wrote about him—in a critical way—so prejudiced me against the man I could never bear to read any of his books."

Self-Anointed Dukes.

OUT here we're waiting for that Spanish baron and that French count back in New York to form the mother branch of their Noblemen's club for the protection of holders of genuine titles in America and, presumably, as a guarantee to our own home-grown heiresses that, when they marry foreign princelings or what not, the goods will be as described. There's been a lot of title-legging, you know.

As soon as the organization gets started we're going to open the Hollywood division. Since only the authentic nobility may qualify, it's figured that the active roster will be confined to a very limited group.

The State of the Nation.

FAR be it from me to turn alarmist right on the heels of the hot wave, but I feel it my duty to warn my fellow-Americans that this fragile and crumbling republic is doomed. That is, it's doomed if you can believe what comes out of our sainted political leaders in the way of predictions.

Hark to the quavering chorus which already has started up: A crisis exists. Every professional crisis-breeder in the land openly admits it. I can't remember when a crisis wasn't existing. But they come larger in campaign years. We are facing a dread emergency which has had no parallel since the last occasion when we faced a dread emergency. This very hour the nation totters on the brink of an abyss.

Miracles and Misdemeanors.

ONCE upon an early time there was a man so holy that even the wild creatures would not harm him. He drew a thorn from the paw of a tame lion and the grateful beast followed after him. So he became a saint.

Only the other day in a court in Tanganyka, which is in Africa, a black man—a savage by our definitions—was on trial. It seemed the lions were raiding the stock, so the native authorities set traps for them. The accused found a lion in one of these traps and made a ladder and went down and helped the great brute to escape.

Being arrested, he explained simply that the lion was his friend. So they fined him $12.50. In the olden times it was a miracle. Nowadays it's a misdemeanor.

Strange Hobby

An Australian, at Sydney, Australia, has a queer habit. He buys up barrow loads of fruit—then takes delight in selling out everything at a penny a dozen. This light-hearted philanthropist says that he has been wanting to do this sort of thing ever since he was a child. He has been the center of attraction. "I don't know why I do it, except that I feel happy," he says. "Sometimes I'm walking along and see a fruit-barrow, and before you can say 'How's your uncle?' I've bought the lot."

Smiles

Unskilled Labor

"Did you hear that Maud had married a self-made man?"

"Yes. And now she's wishing that he'd employed an architect."

Fell Out

Passer-by (to owner of antiquated car)—Engine trouble?

Owner—Well, I can't tell until I walk back and find the engine.

Round and Round

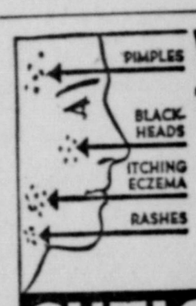

"At twenty-six you left the farm and came to the city. And for 30 years you've been working like the dickens. What for?"

"To get money enough to live in the country."

There Is Now No Prince of Wales

The title of "prince of Wales" disappeared when King George died recently and his son, Edward VIII succeeded him as sovereign. The Prince of Wales must be the son of the ruler of England at the new king, being a bachelor, there is no one to claim the title.

Incidentally, Edward VIII is the first bachelor king to occupy the British throne in 176 years. The last bachelor king was George II. However, George married during his reign. Since the time of William the Conqueror, there have been only two adult British princes who remained unmarried throughout their reigns.—Capper's Weekly.

His Change

A planter in Alabama hadn't seen one of his former workers for a year, until he saw him in Montgomery one Saturday. "Well, Well!" the planter exclaimed. "What are you doing now, Uncle Mose?"

"Ah's done gone to preachin'," the venerable negro replied.

"What! You preaching?"

"Yes, suh!"

"Well, well! Do you use notes?"

"Naw, suh! At the fust Ah used dem; but now Ah has to have cash!"

Competition

An enterprising young florist, in order to increase his trade, displayed this sign in his window:

"We give a packet of flower seed with every plant."

His competitor across the street promptly sought to meet the competition by placing in his window the following announcement:

"We give the earth with every plant."

Interest in the elections will soon be over and we can turn our thoughts to other things; however, it would be better if the average citizen would try to keep in touch with political affairs at all times rather than just at election time. It is claimed that the next big sales campaign will be on automobile trailers. These moving homes are becoming more and more evident along the highways and in camps.

Perhaps it is but a natural step for the traveling public to take the comforts of home right along with them—just another argument for those who claim that one should own a car first and if there is money enough a home is all right.

APPRECIATION

The gallantry of an old-time western reporter is recounted in a story which recently appeared in several publications. It concerns the late great actress, Sara Bernhardt, and the late Sam Davis of the Carson City Appeal.

Mme. Bernhardt and her company were playing in the West, when Davis was requested by the San Francisco Examiner to meet her in Reno and accompany her to the then metropolis of California, and he did so.

After several days of acquaintanceship, during which Davis naturally showed the actress every attention, the time came to part, whereupon "the divine Sara" expressed her appreciation of his kindness by kissing him on either cheek and then on the mouth, saying:

Nothing daunted, Davis made the polite suggestion: "Madam, I also represent the Associated Press, which serves 380 papers west of the Mississippi River."

Whether he received the additional expressions of appreciation to which he appeared to be entitled, the story does not state.—Farmer City (Ill.) Journal.

ZIPPING TAXIS

We used to get all worked up over the Wild West cowboys who dashed over hill and dale on their wild mustangs. But compared to the New York taxi-driver, the cowboy might be riding on a corousel. So sure of themselves are these taxi-drivers, that, with the least encouragement from the passenger, and, no doubt with the thought of an increased tip, they will zip through a street at a 60-mile speed (if no cop is in sight) and stop at any given point without a noticeable slowdown. Unless you have a strong heart, never encourage the New York taxi-driver to make time, as did the gentleman from the West who wanted to make a train. As the taxi in which he was seated came to one of those angle intersections with which the lower West Side is plentifully supplied, another taxi-driver at the same high speed hove into view. Neither driver attempted to slow down for the other. To the passenger it seemed that within the next moment he would be climbing the Golden Stairs. Closer and closer came the one to the other. Just as the crash appeared inevitable, a screeching sound of grinding brakes from the other cab rent the air. The passenger leaned back in his seat, pale and trembling. As his cab continued on with unabated speed, the driver half turned his head and spoke reassuringly to his fare. "Say, buddy," he said, "I knew dat guy was yellow."

Bill—Have you ever realized any of your childhood hopes?
Pete—Yes; when mother used to comb my hair I often wished I didn't have any.

IS MY FACE RED

I've been back home less than 35 hours from a flying trip made to Fort Worth to see the preview of the Frontier Centennial, especially staged for the newspaper fraternity of the Southwest. If I have had one man I have had 20 ask me if I saw "Sally Rand."

It ain't right . . . and you fellows shouldn't orter cast any such aspersions at me. I had even forgotten that Sally appeared on the program . . . and her appearance was one of the scantiest and the most abbreviated number on the program of some 4 hours.

Just to relieve your mind and the general public . . . the kind of Sally you have in mind doesn't live there any more. Despite the publicity, the Rand appearance is nothing like a so-called "peep" show and has none of the vulgar nasty dirty surroundings that go with that filth that some people enjoy.

Right here and now I want to thank Fort Worth in general and Amon G. Carter in particular for a good time and the keenest program I have ever seen.—Honest Bill in Spearman Reporter.

THE BLUSHING BRIDE

This happened not too recently at a church wedding in a not too nearby town. The young bride walked slowly down the aisle. As she reached the platform before the altar her dainty foot brushed a potted flower, upsetting it. She looked at the stilled church gravely, then raised her large child-like blue eyes to the sedate face of the minister. Then in clear bell-like tones that reached every part of the auditorium distinctly, she said, "That's a hell of a place to put a lily."—R. J. Schutz in Emington (Ill.- Joker.

A GOOD WADER

The crowds at Coney Island, on a summer Sunday, are so great as to require a small army of life guards. Considering the vast number of men, women and children, the number of drownings during a season is very few. Aside from hte foolhardy young blades who want to show off to their gals and swim far out, the greatest danger is with the youngsters who, following the elders and disregarding the life-ropes, wade out beyond their depth and become frightened when they are submerged by a breaker.

Among the applicants for the job of life-guard was a young man about six-foot-six in height. The officer in charge sized him up admiringly. After taking his name, address, age, etc., he asked the prefunctory question: "Can you swim?" The young giant socke up with the confidence of one sure of getting the job. "No," he replied, "but I can wade to beat hell."—Heavy Stuff.

we are on the subject of silk chiffon and its imin the summer style picmight be well to mention w skirts of black chiffon are the smartest ever for worn with a tunic or blouse done in flamboyantly flowered print. These are cut full circular and their hemline measures yards. Yet with all this fullness you are not made aware of the fact as the skirt is styled to fit about the hips in slenderizing sleekness gradually and gracefully leading into soft undulations about the hemline. You will find a skirt of this description to be a real asset in your summer clothes collection. Have in reserve a shirtwaist blouse of black net, also a decollette bodice of self black chiffon—an economical way to acquire a wardrobe of smart formals for varied occasion.

If you have an urge for color you will find joy in a costume that poses a redingote of dubonnet red silk chiffon or organza over a slip of gorgeous flower print. The color effect is beyond the telling in word or picture. It requires the evening lights to glorify it.

Could anything in the way of a daytime costume be smarter and more to be coveted than the jacket-and-dress twosome to the left in the illustration! If so we have not discovered it. You may be interested in knowing that this ensemble is of royal lineage in that it is a creation by no less a noted designer than the personal dressmaker to Queen Mary. It came over on the R. M. S. Queen Mary as did a whole fashion load of stunning modes. The dress is perfect for afternoon wear on warm summer days, made as it is of cool Tudor-brown twytex net. The finely pleated and tucked jabot is of white silk net, and the loose coat is of brown crossbar twytex.

The story of net as it unfolds in the summer style program is proving a most fascinating one. Nothing smarter or more practical has centered the style stage than the jacket dresses tailored of cool and comfortable and chic looking nets either in black or the stunning new rich dark colors.

Plants Cannot Go in Quest of Food

Use Fertilizers Where Roots Can Reach Them or Value Is Wasted.

By DR. GEORGE M. McCLURE, Agronomy Dept., Ohio State University. WNU Service.

The time when fertilizers are applied and the position they are placed in relation to the roots of the plants may have considerable effect upon the value obtained from the use of fertilizer.

Plants can use the fertilizers only when they become dissolved in the film of water that coats the tiny soil particles which are in contact with the roots. It is a common opinion that all fertilizers dissolve rapidly and are dispersed throughout the feeding zone of the plant roots, but this is not true in many cases.

There is a decided difference in the way two common types of nitrogen carriers react after they are applied to the soil. Nitrate of soda goes into solution quite rapidly if it is applied in the fall in orchards or on fall grains, it may be carried below the zone where the roots feed before growth begins in the spring. Sulphate of ammonia reacts with the soil constituents and does not go into solution rapidly so it can be applied in the fall without loss.

Potash salts also react with the soil and are not readily lost by leaching. The fact that they are slowly soluble indicates that potash fertilizers must be distributed rather thoroughly through the soil by the method of application if the crop is to get the maximum benefit from them. Phosphorus also should be worked into the soil to make it available for use of the plants.

When phosphate fertilizers are used on grass crops, the application should be broadcast and then worked deeply into the soil with a disk. When used with row crops, such as corn, the phosphate should be applied in the rows or hills a few inches from the seed. The phosphates used for fertilizers react with the soil and this type of fertilizer may not move more than an inch from its point of application in several years.

Lighter Work Horse Is Likely in Near Future

Lighter draft horses are in the picture for the future, believes J. O. Williams, in charge of horse investigations in the United States Department of Agriculture. In the cities, motor trucks in most cases have taken the place of the heavy horse.

On the farm mechanical power has relieved the horse of the heaviest operations—such as plowing and harvesting—that usually have to be done quickly and in hot weather. The general farm work that remains, the lighter draft horse handles more easily and quickly, meanwhile keeping in good condition on less feed. A greater increase in prices for light draft horses in comparison with other types at the big markets, reflects the new demand for the light types.

The fact that mules from lighter draft mares usually are a little more active and better suited for both farm work and most markets, is another factor in the trend toward lighter work horses.

Air Fertilization

Smithsonian institution scientists have discovered how to make wheat greatly increase its yield without adding anything to the soil, notes Pathfinder Magazine. They fertilize the air instead. Since plants use atmospheric carbon dioxide and water in the presence of light to manufacture their substance, Dr. Earl S. Johnston, of the division of radiation and organisms, increased experimentally the amount of this heavy gas in the atmosphere around a miniature wheat field until the carbon dioxide content was four times that of ordinary air. As a result the wheat showed marked increases in growth.

Sunflower Put to Work

Life isn't the same for the old Kansas sunflower these days. They've tamed it and put it to work. Planted in gardens along with beans, the sunflower makes an excellent "pole" for the bean vines to climb up on. The sunflowers grow tall enough, so that picking bean pods isn't any trick at all and the sunflower seeds are fairly good chicken feed, too.

QUILTED COATS FOR BEACH WEAR LATEST

A coat which looks as though it were made from the family's heirloom quilt will go a long way toward creating a sensation on the beaches. Dressier versions that have intricate quilting patterns are destined for wear over summer formals.

Large floral motifs which have bright colors on white or pastel backgrounds are the most fashionable for beach wear. Some of these coats are made of printed cottons which have the designs outlined with quilting, while others are pieced together in the regulation quilt manner.

The quilted coat of plaid woolen, very light of weight and quite gay in its color combinations, is shown for vacation wear, while the taffeta and hand-blocked linen versions are evening favorites.

Flowers Are Dramatic

White flowers on a black gown are dramatic; and on a white gown they emphasize an effect of simplicity. A spot of brilliant scarlet on a white gown is gorgeous. Color harmony may be achieved by wearing flowers that blend into the general tone of the costume, or with a contrasting complementary color.

Look Outward On Your Vacation

There is no other rejuvenator equal to a vacation taken in the right spirit. If you go away with your mind filled with your business, your profession, your household cares, your studies, or your plans for the future, and if you keep thinking of those things, you might as well stay at home. If your eyes look inward instead of outward; if your ears still hear the hum of the factory and the noise of the busy streets; if you carry with you the burdens and perplexities which have been pinning you down and robbing you of sleep and comfort, you will gain nothing from your outing.

21,000 Miles Less than 2.00 for Repairs

Temple, Oklahoma
June 24, 1936

Ford Motor Company,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

Gentlemen:

I have driven my 1936 Ford V-8 truck 21,000 miles, practically all over unpaved roads hauling 9,500 pounds and have spent less than $2.00 for repairs.

There are several outstanding things I like about the Ford V-8 over the other make of trucks. The brakes are much safer and better. I have never had a minute's trouble with the rear system. With the other make truck breaking rear axles was a constant source of trouble and worry. I did not drive it nearly as fast as I drive the Ford truck.

No oil is ever added between changes. I get about thirty per cent better gasoline mileage than with the other make.

Yours very truly,

VACATIONS

By A. Hoyt Levy

The man who boasts of never having taken a vacation is a fool. Every man who works, physically or mentally, should knock off a week or so, once or twice a year. Then, when he gets back on the job, he will find that his organs, which had been out of tune, are in the right key again and playing in perfect harmony.

So far, so good.

But just when is a vacation that kind of a vacation?

There are those who spend their vacations fishing and hunting, others who go out on extended hikes, and still others who carry their household—lares and penates—in a trailer attached to an old flivver and set out for the wide, open road. But these are in the minority and have little bearing on the discussion of how to spend your vacation.

To some people in one stratum of society, a vacation means going to a farm and breathing in the scented air of a nearby pigsty and an ever steaming manure pile. Here you find yourself in company with a bunch of city slickers with whom you've got to become on friendly terms and take part in their games whether you like it or not, lest you be set down as a crab; you enjoy all of the discomforts of a wobbly, makeshift bed in a thin-walled room and you wash in a cracked bowl with cold water from a cracked pitcher. The food is ample enough and for the most part canned, although you are expected to believe that it comes fresh from the attached farm. You look forward to the big Sunday dinner and you are not supposed to notice that the soup is cold and the ice cream is warm. But as I said, the food is ample so you don't mind the Sunday supper of cold ham and tea. And all during your stay, you try to show a superiority over the farmer and his family while they look down on you for the empty-headed dub that they take you to be. If you are not too particular you won't notice these things and you will finish your vacation feeling pretty good over it.

Not everybody goes to a farm-house for their summer vacations. Some go to the seashore and find abode in shacks which have been misnamed "bungalows" but to which the appellation "floppalows" would be more fitting. The rooms in the shacks are patterned after those in Bowery flophouses, except that they are much dirtier. But as they are used only for sleeping, the occupants spend most of their time on the litter-strewn beach where they sprawl in a bathing suit, frying in the sun all day and try to believe that they are enjoying the sweaty and blistering discomfort when, if truth be told, they feel as sloppy as they look.

For those who do not care for the seashore or the farm, there are the mountains. Here you can spend your time getting close to nature, lying under a tree and letting the ants crawl over you. Or you can snooze in the sun and let the mosquitoes play their favorite game, "stick 'em up" with you as the stooge.

The mountain boarding-houses for those folk in the lower stratum, and the hotels for those in the higher strata, differ from those at the seashore. Here, all of the boarding-houses and the cheaper hotels have such fanciful names as Lakeview or Forest View, or Grand View. It makes no difference that the only view of the lake would be from the chimney-top or that the nearest thing to a forest view from the house of that name would be an old, mangy tree across the way. Or that the grand view from the Grand View is that of a pasture in which the one contented cow lies chewing her Spearmint. A name, when applied to summer boarding-houses and hotels need not be what the name implies. It sounds well in the descriptive flolders and brings the customers. That's all that matters.

But I haven't touched upon the ritzy hotels in the mountains, and ritzy folk have as much right to vacations in this land of the free, as those in the mid and lower strata.

The ten, twent' and thirt' dollar a day hotels have the finest locations, either atop ahigh hill or surrounded by well kept lawns. No hotel of the ten-twent'-thirt' caliber is without a magnificient golf course. These hotels are patronized mainly by those who come in big cars loaded down with trunks, suit-cases and golf bags. Guests are closely scrutinized and rated by the bell-hops, the waiters and other employees, as to how much they are good for in the way of gratuities. The model of the car and the presence or absence of a chauffeur is an important factor in arriving at the rating. If you should be so crass as to arrive by bus, you are rated as "small change" and the attention you get is commensurate with that rating.

At these expensive hotels, vacationing means getting up late and retiring in the early hours. Much of the idle time is used for dressing—golf togs, afternoon flannels, dinner dress. At night you assemble in the grill to booze, dance and be merry and then retire to sleep off the booze and make ready for another day, little unlike the day before.

And there you are—vacations for the proletarian, the plebian, the patrician, the burgeois, the plutocrat—each according to his stratum. But the thought occurs that the classic vacation of the letter-carrier who spent the week taking long walks, may, after all, beat other vacations by a mile.—Heavy Stuff.

HOW RUMORS GROW

Here is a little tale which it would be well for each one of us to remember in any time of international crisis.

It is an illustration from "The Power of the Press for Peace and War," by Florence Boeckel, of the way in which exaggeration develops a monstrous falsehood out of a tiny germ of truth.

The following wartime statements were made by responsible European newspapers:

Cologne Zeitung (Germany)—"When the fall of Antwerp became known, the church bells were rung." (meaning in Germany).

Matin (Paris)—"According to the Cologne Zeitung, the clergy of Antwerp were compelled to ring the church bells when the fortress was taken."

The Times (London)—"According to what the Matin has heard from Cologne, the Belgian priests who refused to ring the church bells when Antwerp was taken have been driven from their places."

Corriere della Sera (Italy)—"According to what the Times has heard from Cologne via Paris, the unfortunate Belgian priests who refused to ring the church bells when Antwerp was taken have been sentenced to hard labor."

Matin (Paris)—"According to information to the Corriere della Sera from Cologne via London, it is confirmed that the barbaric conquerors of Antwerp punished the unfortunate Belgian priests for their heroic refusal to ring the church bells, by hanging them as living clappers to the bells with their heads down."—London Tit-Bits.

"Is this a healthful town?" inquired the home-seeker of a native.

"Yes, certainly," was the answer.

"When I came here I hadn't the strength to utter a word; I had scarcely a hair on my head; I couldn't walk across the room, and I had to be lifted from my bed."

"You give me hope!" cried the home-seeker with enthusiasm. "How long have you lived here?"

"I was born here," replied the native."
