West Texas could be solar leader

By Michael Holmes

AUSTIN (AP) — West Texas could become home to a substantial solar energy industry if the sun's power is aggressively pursued, an energy expert says.

"There is every reason for that industry to locate right here in Texas," S. David Freeman said. "A good reason is that West Texas is a huge desert ideally situated from the location of large solar-thermal power plants that could transmit electricity through the state."

Freeman is general manager of the Lower Colorado River Authority, which provides electric power to 33 cities and 11 cooperatives in a 41-county area of Texas. He previously was an energy adviser in the administrations of presidents Johnson, Nixon and Carter, and board chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

His remarks came in the keynote speech Monday that opened the four-day National Solar Energy Conference, which will include presentations of a wide range of research projects, workshops and exhibitions.

"Frankly, there has been a tendency by energy companies in the past to label solar energy as a joke," Freeman warned the meeting.

"If we keep this up, the joke will be on us. We will see the Japanese come in and put photovoltaic cells on our roofs and solar-powered cars on our roads," Freeman said.

He said historians in the future may wonder why solar power wasn't investigated more vigorously during the late 20th century, while nations so heavily used such technologically difficult and environmentally risky power sources as oil and nuclear energy.

"The answer may be that modern civilization is so smart that it is dumb," he said.

"We choose to pursue the most technologically challenging path, such as the 40-year unsuccessful effort to perfect fusion power, rather than capturing the solar power that reaches the roofs of our homes without any effort by mankind."

Freeman said a solar-energy breakthrough is crucial to the survival of a high-energy civilization, particularly when U.S. oil imports are soaring and concerns are growing over global warming and other environmental problems.

"If one looks at the awesome problems posed by nuclear power, at its best, one must wonder why this nation has not long ago embarked on a 'Manhattan' type project to harness the sun," he said.

Freeman said he doesn't believe the solar industry needs the equivalent of the oil depletion allowance or other subsidies. "But we do need to be advocating pollution taxes to reduce pollution and to reduce the federal deficit," he said.

Freeman predicted that solar energy will become an increasingly important economic power.

"It is almost certain that the billions of people in Africa, Asia and other continents, as well as in the United States, will be obtaining

Smith back on stand in slander case

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Defense attorneys for former Midland County Police Chief Wayne Gideon chiseled away at previous testimony that suggested their client was directly responsible for the downfall of his accuser — former Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith.

Day four of the $4 million slander suit filed against Gideon found Smith back on the stand Monday following a three-day recess declared by Judge James Gregg last Thursday.

Gideon is accused of spreading wife-beating rumors that allegedly led to the demise of the two-term sheriff, who lost his bid for another term to Gary Painter in the 1984 Republican primary.

But Smith testified that the damage was done long before voters ever cast their ballots and that his reputation diminished rapidly just weeks before the actual primary election.

And that is where the defense took up, suggesting there were several other factors that brought about the Painter landslide victory — the least of which had to do with the so-called wife-beating rumor.

Attorneys Bill Wade and Bill Moss portrayed Smith as a man with a temper, who had other problems in his life, long before the wife beat-

Spring brings mixture of wintry trends

Staff Report

Clear skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with the low in the middle 40s and winds from the south at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday is expected to be partly cloudy and warm with the high in the upper 70s and winds out of the south at 15-20 mph and gusty.

Monday's high of 61 was 27 degrees cooler than the record high of 88 set for that date in 1976. The overnight low of 36 was 22 degrees warmer than the record low of 14 set for this date in 1965.

STATE

Sunny, dry and mild weather continued across Texas on Monday as high pressure settled in from the central plains. A band of clouds was moving into the Rio Grande Valley along a cold front. But skies were mostly clear across the state.

The high pressure system located over the central plains was producing north winds across the eastern two-thirds of the state, with south winds over the Panhandle

Williams carries his campaign to Washington

By Jim Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Clayton Williams, still savoring his landslide victory in winning the Republican nomination for Texas governor last week, came to Washington Monday to court national GOP leaders for advice, strategy and cash.

Mostly cash.

Even by Texas standards, the general election will bring an orgy of campaign spending.

"It's going to take $11 million to get the job done," Williams said Monday, meeting with national GOP officials.

Williams expects "a lot of help from the White House," mostly in fund raising and campaign appearances, according to Bill Kenyon, the candidate's press secretary.

Williams, 58, a cowboy-boot-wearing Midland oilman and rancher, spent $6 million of his own money to pay for his $8 million primary win, an amount that dwarfed spending by his three Republican opponents.

"If I put any more money in my campaign, not only will the press but also my wife, will eat me alive," Williams said.

With a hectic Washington agenda, Williams opened two days of meetings by chatting with Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, who said, "I think Claytie is going to be a great partner."

Republicans are not alone in referring to Williams as if he is already governor of the Lone Star State. A campaign spokesman in Austin said Monday that several Texas TV stations had mistakenly referred to Williams as "governor" already, an impression that his aides are only too happy to accommodate.

Kenyon said that Williams came to Washington to "get the jump" on rival Democrats, who face a nasty runoff election April 10.

"They're going to rip each other's guts out," said Kenyon, referring to State Treasurer Ann Richards and Attorney General Jim Mattox, the Democratic hopefuls.

Williams, meanwhile, was quickly making new friends in high places, as well as visiting old friends, like President Bush, who telephoned to invite him to come to Washington the day after his primary win.

On Tuesday, Williams is to spend some time with Bush, GOP national chairman Lee Atwater and Energy Secretary James Watkins.

After lunch Monday with Fred McClure, a fellow Texas A&M alumnus and White House congressional liaison, Williams met with national drug control policy director William Bennett, who endorsed the candidate's get-tough approach to fighting drug abuse.

"He (Bennett) agrees with me that the real success in the war on drugs is going to come from lowering demand through user penalties," said Williams. "He is also hoping that with my program, Texas can be a real role model across the United States."

Williams won national publicity during the campaign for his "bustin' rocks" policy, under which he would incarcerate convicted drug users in boot camp where they would actually pulverize rocks to build roads and campsites.

Williams said that Bennett "agrees with the boot camps we've enjoyed talking about, where I do plan to introduce them (drug felons) to the joys of bustin' up rocks."

The drug czar also pledged more help for Texas' war on drugs, said Williams, a battle that has become harder "as the drug traffic has moved away from Florida and into the Gulf coast of Texas."

Parker family plagued by dark history

EDITOR'S NOTE: Driven away by a family feud, Bruce Parker returned four years ago to the Texas Hill Country ranch of his youth, determined to make a fresh start. Parker and his dream died on a lonely dirt road that runs through the land he loved. His violent death, and its chilling aftermath, shattered a proud pioneer ranching family.

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press Writer

HARPER (AP) — Months later, sheriff's deputy Bill Beard could recall nothing unusual about his chance meeting with Bruce Parker that gray Sunday morning last autumn.

The two friends shared coffee and conversation at Dauna's Store, a favorite gathering spot in this tiny Hill Country community.

To Beard, Parker seemed in high spirits.

A former state trooper, Beard knew of Parker's problems with members of the Parker family and that his friend had returned only recently to rejoin the ranching clan.

Like almost everyone in town, Beard also knew the rumors of "bad blood" among the Parkers, an imposing but star-crossed family that traced its ancestry back to the Alamo.

And finally, Beard knew only too well the family's history of violence.

One thing the deputy sheriff did not know was that he soon would be drawn into a tragic family saga every bit as bizarre and confusing as anything that had gone before.

Adding to the mystery is the deafening silence that surrounds the case, and only in part because of a judicial gag order imposed for a murder trial that may never occur.

It was two days before Halloween when Beard dropped by Dauna's that Sunday morning last October, and the last time he would see his friend alive.

Before nightfall, Bruce Parker lay mortally wounded on a bluff overlooking Big Rock, a scenic and secluded area along the Little Devil's River in the heart of Parker ranchland.

Parker died of a gunshot wound in the upper chest. There were no known witnesses.

Authorities initially concluded the fatal shot was fired at close range and was accidental or self-inflicted.

The suicide theory was quickly discarded and in its place was something more ominous and disturbing. And that was only the beginning.

To some, the Parker family seemed larger than life, proud and private, linked by blood to the Alamo and Comanche Chief Quanah Parker and by legend to bandit queen Bonnie Parker.

James Henry Parker arrived in the rolling, brittle woodlands of the Texas Hill Country in the early 1870s, only a few years removed from his service as an officer in the Confederate Army.

With him was his young bride Matilda, or Tildy, a Crockett by birth and a grandniece of Davy Crockett, a name as famous as the Alamo itself.

The extreme temperatures across the state at 3 p.m. ranged from 51 degrees at Guadalupe Pass to 76 degrees at Kingsville.

Forecasters issued a freeze warning for the eastern third of north Texas for Monday night. Otherwise mostly fair skies were predicted statewide through Tuesday night. Highs Tuesday will be generally in the 70s statewide. Lows Tuesday night will be in the 30s northern Panhandle, 40s north and remainder of west, and 40s to 50s south.

Hike in aviation taxes sought

By David Briscoe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is asking Congress to raise taxes on aviation fuel and airline tickets and allow a new airport tax as part of a five-year plan for commercial aviation.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner included the $22 billion proposal in the Federal Aviation Administration's reauthorization bill sent to Congress on Monday.

The plan would add up to $12 in airport fees to a roundtrip airline ticket, increase the tax on tickets from 8 percent to 10 percent and hike aviation fuel taxes by 25 percent, which also likely would be passed along in higher fares. Congress is likely to make modifications, however.

It is the first proposal arising out of the administration's new national transportation policy, which calls for travelers to finance a greater share of national transportation systems.

The administration makes a distinction between "user fees" and taxes, which President Bush has promised not to increase. Skinner acknowledged last week, however, that transportation budget proposals include boosts in both local and federal levies.

The increases would add to an aviation trust fund that the FAA proposes to tap for 85 percent of aeronautical needs through fiscal 1995. Currently, 57 percent of federal aviation costs are covered by users via the tax-fed trust fund, with the remainder from general tax revenue.

FAA Administrator James B. Busey said the reauthorization bill would help meet the growing demand for aviation, allow modernization of the air traffic control system and increase aviation safety.

Overall, it would boost federal funding for aviation projects by 73 percent in the next five years, Busey said.

In addition to the plan for improvements, the FAA expects to spend between $22 billion and $24 billion on operations and maintenance over the next five years, including salaries of air traffic controllers, agency budget officials said.

"I believe this administration has put forward a comprehensive proposal to deal with aviation in the 1990s," Busey told a meeting of airport officials.

If approved by Congress, the plan would allow airports to impose taxes for the first time since the early 1970s.

The maximum initial tax would be $3 per departure, with travelers who make connecting flights paying at no more than one additional airport each way. The legislation would give the transportation secretary power to increase the maximum tax after fiscal 1991.

After the first year, collection of the tax would automatically decrease other federal funding available to airports. Some smaller regional airports might elect not to levy the fee, so it would not reduce funding under the federal Airport Improvement Program, said Mike Moffet, an FAA assistant administrator.

Each $1 collected in departure taxes would reduce federal funds available to an airport by 50 cents. Improvement funds that were freed as a result of the new tax revenues would go into a discretionary fund to help airports that need additional money, Moffet said.

If the nation's largest 45 airports imposed the ticket tax, collections would total an estimated $1 billion a year, he said. The collections could be used to obtain bonds for about $10 billion in airport projects over the five years.

Federal support for airport improvements would total $7.7 billion over five years, a 28 percent increase over amounts made available during the past five years.

Other funds under the reauthorization program would include $13.5 billion for facilities and equipment programs, a 130 percent increase over the previous five years; and $970 million for research and development, a 13 percent increase.

The aviation trust fund is expected to have a $7.6 billion balance by the end of fiscal 1990 on Sept. 30. The spending plan would decrease the fund to about $3 billion by the end of the five-year period, officials said.

SLANDER: Defense chips away story

ing rumors ever surfaced.

According to testimony, there was the problem with his ex-wife's father, Joe Mabee, who Smith admitted he didn't care for as the arguments with his wife escalated. In addition, it was suggested the former sheriff didn't take his opponent, Painter, seriously enough in the GOP Primary.

Smith's alleged temper and his apparent dislike for Gideon were brought up throughout the cross-examination by Moss.

Under one line of questioning, Smith admitted pistol-whipping a prisoner, but added it was only after one of his deputies had been kicked in the groin.

Moss asked Smith if he also didn't kick the prisoner.

"I kicked him in the arm when he was down on the floor," said Smith, "but I thought he had gotten a hold of one of my deputy's guns."

Moss pursued that line questioning, asking if any other excessive force was used after learning earlier that Smith and three deputies had escorted the handcuffed prisoner to the fifth floor of the county jail.

Smith said no, but qualified that by adding, "He was not treated gently."

Moss asked Smith if it wasn't true that he had threatened to plant drugs in the man's car.

"I heard that story...it was news to me then and it's still news to me," said Smith, who claimed he was told about the incident by John Hyde, his attorney at the time of his marriage breakup.

As to the alleged wife-beating incident itself, Smith agreed with previous testimony that he did, indeed, slam the door on his wife's hand during an argument, but that it was not intentional.

Smith said he confronted his wife in her home on Nov. 6, 1982 because he heard she was leaving town and taking the couple's three kids with her.

He also admitted taunting her with an emergency beeper that was a direct line to the police department. "She said she was going to call her father, and I said why don't you just call everyone. It was childish," he admitted.

Smith testified that he, himself, pushed the alarm to see just how fast the police would arrive.

"I've never beaten Gail. I never caused her to be in the hospital. And she's never had a miscarriage as far as I know. I filed this suit because I was branded a wife beater. I wanted to clear my name," said Smith. "This was the only recourse I had."

Smith said it was because of the rumor, and only the rumor, that his re-election bid failed.

But Attorney Wade disputed that claim, calling on the expertise of George Shipley, a professional pollster and political consultant to a number of campaigns.

Shipley, president of Austin-based Shipley & Associates, disputed previous testimony by John McLaughlin, who spearheaded two polls for Smith — one prior to the 1984 primary and one after.

McLaughlin, a vice president with Arthur Finklestein & Associates, told jurors last Thursday that in his professional opinion the wife-beating rumor had a direct bearing on Smith's lopsided defeat.

Shipley found a number of problems with both polls, particularly the use of "order questions," which he testified could have conditioned a response among those questioned. He also suggested the question could have planted the wife-beating rumor seed.

That question asked what phrase best described which candidate: Joe Carr, Gary Painter or Dallas Smith: "Didn't get along with Police Chief Wayne Gideon?" "Is being sued for pistol-whipping a prisoner?" or "Mistreated his wife?"

In addition, Shipley as well as Wade suggested there might have been other major factors that contributed to Smith's loss, including a certain over-confidence factor on the part of the sheriff

The trial, being heard in Midland County's 238th District Court, was scheduled to resume today.

'Unsolved Mysteries' re-enactment of bowling alley deaths different

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — A nationally televised re-enactment of a bowling alley massacre will differ slightly from previous accounts of the shootings that left four people dead and three wounded, police said.

The re-enactment of the Feb. 10 shootings will be filmed by NBC-TV's "Unsolved Mysteries" this week.

Las Cruces Police Capt. Fred Rubio said Monday that investigators now believe Steve Teran, a bowling alley employee who was killed along with his young daughter and stepdaughter, walked in with the children when the crime was in progress.

"That reinforces, to my way of thinking, that the killers didn't know they were going to have seven people in there," Rubio said.

He said the men presumably cased the bowling alley in advance for a robbery and planned to kill the one or two people they expected to find inside.

Police hope a viewer who knows or has seen the gunmen will watch the re-enactment and call officials or the show's crime hotline.

Teran, 26; daughter Valerie, 2, and stepdaughter Paula Holguin, 6, died along with Amy Houser, 13. Survivors included Stephanie Senac, 34, daughter of bowling alley owner Ron Senac, and her daughter, Melissa, 12, as well as cook Ida Holguin, 30.

The gunmen entered Las Cruces Bowl just before it opened for a tournament Feb. 10. They herded the seven victims into an office, forced them to get down on the floor and shot each in the back of the head.

Police said the men, who started a small fire in the office, wanted no witnesses to their robbery of $5,000 from the bowling alley safe.

Relatives of survivors say the victims are afraid and unwilling to talk to reporters for fear of reprisal. But they are expected to be interviewed by "Unsolved Mysteries" crew members.

Police also continue to talk with them for possible leads.

"We've had a psychologist interview a couple of the survivors and a couple of the witnesses and during that interview we also had a police artist from Houston come down," said Rubio, who is directing the investigation.

He said the Houston artist made only slight changes in the composites, "which makes us very proud of the composites (police artist) Gino Tafoya did for us."

Rubio said one of his detectives has returned with a psychological profile of the gunmen put together by 10 experts.

Parole facility guard arrested on drug charge

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A guard at the Central Texas Parole Violator Facility has been arrested on federal charges of brining heroin, cocaine and marijuana into the facility in an attempt to distribute the drugs to prisoners, authorities say.

Daniel Alfaro, 21, was fired from his job Monday after he was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Nowak.

Alfaro, who was charged with three counts of possession of drugs with intent to distribute them, was being held in the Bexar County Jail today in lieu of $50,000 bond.

SWBell rate case to resume

AUSTIN (AP) — A hearing on a proposed four-year, $1.2 billion settlement of Southwestern Bell's rate case is scheduled to resume Thursday, the Public Utility Commission said.

After the hearing, which could last up to two months, administrative law judges Kay Trostle and Shelia Kneip will make a recommendation to the three-member commission on whether the agreement should be approved.

In testimony prepared for the hearing that opened Monday, Bell vice president Thomas M. Barry said the agreement would create "the largest rate reductions in the history of Southwestern Bell."

"It offers total rate stability for basic service — plus refunds or credits if Southwestern Bell is successful in the marketplace. The agreement also would provide financial assistance to thousands of Texans who may not otherwise be able to afford phone service," Barry's testimony said.

Of more than 40 parties involved in the rate case, a handful have not agreed to the settlement.

Among them are Consumers Union; a coalition of 80 cities; and the Office of Public Utility Counsel, which represents residential and small commercial ratepayers.

The consumer groups say the proposed settlement does not include a reduction in rates for local basic service and should go further. The public counsel's office has recommended a $595 million annual rate cut for Southwestern Bell, saying the company is earning excessive profits.

Supporters of the agreement — including Southwestern Bell, the PUC general counsel, and a number of cities and long-distance companies — say customers would benefit if it were approved.

BLOODLINE: A new chapter in old feud?

from the Little Devil's River to build their new home, Tildy raised money for lumber by using the milk from half their 40 cows to make and sell butterballs.

According to a local history book, Tildy stored her dairy cargo in barrels of brine and drove them 100 miles by wagon to market in San Antonio.

The couple's remote two-story homesite is now known as the "Old Ranch." It is northwest of San Antonio and about the same distance west of the state capital in Austin.

Back then, outlaws and Indians roamed the rocky hills, along with mountain lions, wolves and wild hogs.

Even today, deer easily outnumber the 4,200 people of Kimble County.

The couple's original 160-acre tract soon grew to 12,000 acres and Jim and Tildy produced 11 children. Their progeny included a son named Jess, who, if not the best and brightest of the brood, was clearly the most enterprising.

In 1913, Jess married Lorena Milam, a "kinsman" of Col. Ben Milam, another history book hero who died in 1835 while leading victorious Texans against Mexicans in the battle for San Antonio.

Old Jess, called "Big Daddy," and Lorena, "Big Mama," were well known and generally admired across the Hill Country but theirs was the scarlet strain that would run so ominously through the Parker family.

In the late 1930s, Jess and Lorena moved into the "Old Ranch" home, and "Big Daddy" ran cattle until his death at age 97.

The couple raised five children: Doyle, Helen, Cecil, Raymond and Aubrey. Helen eventually married and moved to Kerrville, the most populous community in the region, but the four boys stayed around to ranch with their father.

"Big Daddy" set aside separate pieces of land for his offspring but, according to family members and others, life were not as harmonious as he wanted, particularly between sons Doyle and Cecil.

Deputy Beard, Kimble County Sheriff Pat Davis and District Attorney Ron Sutton heard the rumors of "bad blood" among the Parkers and suspected the feud involved land.

"It's a very ticklish and sticky situation ... that goes back many years, even before my time here," said Beard.

After cancer and a brain tumor killed Cecil Parker in 1968, his widow and family, which included Bruce and his two sisters, were all but banished from the ranch.

The outcast Parkers left not because of any specific act but merely the threat of violence. It was "Big Daddy" himself who reluctantly urged them to leave "before something bad happens," according to Bruce Parker's elder son Bart, now 24.

But at "Big Daddy's" death, the old man's will restored a parcel of Parker land to his grandchildren, and Bruce, with a beautiful new wife and a new outlook on life, jumped at the opportunity to return.

Less than an hour's drive east of Harper is Johnson City and "LBJ Country," the land of Lyndon Johnson, and the Parkers counted the late president among their friends.

Ironically, the same was said about former Gov. Coke Stevenson, who lost an infamous 1948 U.S. Senate race to LBJ by 87 votes, most of them cast from a South Texas cemetery.

The Parkers themselves never seemed much inclined to politics, although Linda Parker, with her husband Bruce's blessing, did run — and lose — a state legislative race in 1988.

Even so, she worried about ruffling family feathers.

But while the Parkers avoided the spotlight of public service, their heritage and their substantial ranch properties assured them exposure to people of money, power and influence.

At the same time, they seemed eerily doomed to uncommon and often violent tragedy — "some real bad luck," according to Kimble County Sheriff Pat Davis.

"They've had some family squabbles through the years," said Gillespie County Sheriff Milton Yung a bit blandly. "You know how people are."

Frederica Wyatt, Junction's city secretary and Kimble County's best known historian, was a little more blunt. Said she:

"There's something about this Parker thing that is not adding up at all. ... It just goes on and on."

When Johnnye Brown was a little girl growing up in Harper, one of "Big Daddy's" brothers, Dock Parker, and his wife Lela died in a double shooting. No motive was ever uncovered, but a note indicated the couple formed a suicide pact.

Ms. Brown, who now lives in Kerrville, remembers the 1935 shootings occurred in a car. "Their kids had to crawl over the bodies to get out," she said.

Ms. Brown's mother, who also was raised in Harper, considered the older Parker boys rowdy and a little mean and would not permit her to date them.

"But," Ms. Brown added, "the ones I grew up with ... I liked, and the Parker girls and I were the best of friends."

Five years after the double shooting, an offspring of Jim Parker's only daughter was slain by her husband, who cut her throat. Recalling that episode, Frederica Wyatt, maybe only half jokingly, said:

"How he mustered enough courage to kill a member of that family, I don't know."

In 1962, Kelly Coy Parker, 22, a great grandson of Jim and Tildy Parker, was shot and killed in a dispute over a girl he was dating. Some feared a harsh Parker reprisal.

There was none.

And though car wrecks and other accidents claimed the lives of several Parkers through the years, including two in 1988, it was a shooting death last summer that set the tone for the most recent violence.

Jesse "Jett" Parker, another of "Big Daddy's" ill-fated nephews, was gunned down on Parker ranchland June 10, an apparent robbery victim.

In retrospect, his death seemed a terrible omen of the months ahead.

Investigators said a warrant was issued for a fugitive "wetback" but no arrest has been made. What's more, there are those who privately doubt that a suspect Mexican alien did the shooting.

One such skeptic is Bart Parker, who said his suspicions are based on a series of incidents that occurred in the weeks prior to his own father's death later in the fall.

With trademark Parker reticence, he would not elaborate.

"But," said young Bart, "you have no idea of the events that happened."

Judge says Texas county violated a man's rights

TYLER (AP) — U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice has ruled that Angelina County violated the constitutional rights of a man who was forced to stay in jail because he could not pay fines on hunting and traffic violations.

The judge ruled Monday that Angelina County violated the constitutional rights of a man identified in court documents only as "John Doe."

Court records show the man was told "to make bond or pay, or ...stay" after he was arrested Nov. 2, 1987, by a game warden for hunting without a license, a Class C misdemeanor. Because he was unable to pay the $80.50 in fines and fees, Doe was jailed to "lay out" the financial judgment.

Officials discovered while the man was in jail there was an outstanding warrant against the man for failure to pay $268 in fines for a prior conviction of driving while intoxicated.

The man, who was unemployed and had no money when arrested, was jailed for eight days, receiving $45 credit per day toward his fines, which witnesses said was standard jail policy.

Justice's ruling did not cover a claim Doe made that he was sexually assaulted while in the jail.

The federal judge said that the defendant should have been taken immediately before a judge when he was arrested on the outstanding warrant.

Justice said testimony indicated that it was the county's policy to jail people who could pay fines in connection with Class C misdemeanor arrests without a hearing.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled it a violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution to put an indigent person in jail "solely because he is unable to pay his fines," the opinion says.

Justice said the government entity is required to hold a hearing to determine the reasons a person cannot pay the fine and offer "alternatives to incarceration."

The judge said the county deprived the defendant of due process of law, which is also assured in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution,

"The unchallenged facts in this case establish that officials of the Angelina County Jail immediately converted plaintiff's $268 fine into a jail sentence when he failed to pay the fine, Justice said.

Guam's new abortion law challenged

NATION

AGANA, Guam (AP) — Gov. Joseph Ada said a fetus is a human being in signing a bill creating the most restrictive U.S. abortion statute, but abortion rights advocates already are challenging the measure.

Janet Benshoof, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer, immediately violated the law by telling women in a speech where to go to have an abortion, and the territory's attorney general — who personally opposes the measure — pressed charges.

Territorial Attorney General Elizabeth Barrett-Anderson says prosecuting the case will be "a heavy burden," but a responsibility of her job.

Benshoof made a court appearance Tuesday, Guam time, but Superior Court Judge Ramon V. Diaz said he could not hear the case because he did not feel he could render a fair and impartial decision.

Benshoof is scheduled to be arraigned today.

The law, which passed despite a ruling by Barrett-Anderson that it is unconstitutional, makes it a third-degree felony for a person to perform or help in an abortion. Seeking or having an abortion or soliciting someone to have an abortion are misdemeanors.

The law also sets a referendum during the Nov. 6 general election for residents of this Pacific Ocean island about 1,500 miles east of the Philippines to decide whether to keep the law.

"In my heart, I believe that a fetus is a human being," Republican Gov. Joseph Ada said in signing the bill, which prohibits abortion except when the mother's health or life are endangered.

Benshoof said she immediately violated a provision of the law by advising women in a speech at the Guam Press Club later in the day to go to Hawaii to have legal abortions.

"I was very specific in my breaking of the law," Benshoof said. "The information that I gave, which is now a crime, came from the Honolulu Yellow Pages."

Barrett-Anderson filed a misdemeanor complaint charging Benshoof with violating the ban on soliciting someone to have an abortion. Benshoof faces up to a year in jail and a $1,000 fine if convicted.

"It's a matter of public record that I advised the Guam Legislature ... that in my opinion the bill was unconstitutional by operation of the Supreme Court's decision in 'Roe v. Wade,'" Barrett-Anderson said later in a statement.

"My advisory role has now shifted to one of enforcement. This is a heavy burden, but ... I will enforce this statute to the extent that the law allows."

Benshoof, who went to Guam to try to persuade Ada not to sign the bill, was not arrested but appeared in court voluntarily.

Guam's 21-member unicameral Legislature unanimously approved the bill March 8 after Archbishop Anthony Apuron threatened in an interview with a television reporter to excommunicate any Roman Catholic senator who voted against it. All but one of the senators is Catholic, as is Ada. However, most of the senators said they were unaware of the threat.

Among those hailing the new law was the National Right to Life Committee.

"This is great news," group spokeswoman Nancy Myers said in a telephone interview from her Washington office. "The people of Guam are largely pro-life as reflected by the unanimous vote in the Legislature, and they have made a strong statement."

Poindexter judge denies motion for mistrial

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Poindexter failed to tell the House intelligence committee about a presidential document that approved a 1985 missile shipment to Iran, and then-CIA Director William Casey said it didn't exist, the panel's former chairman says.

In a Nov. 21, 1986, meeting with the committee, Poindexter said "the U.S. government had not approved" and "did not know about" the shipment, Rep. Lee Hamilton testified Monday at the former national security adviser's Iran-Contra trial.

The trial was continuing today with the government's final witnesses. U.S. District Judge Harold Greene denied a defense motion for a mistrial Monday after some of Hamilton's testimony touched on statements that Poindexter gave Congress in 1987 under immunity from prosecution.

Hamilton said Monday that "almost the first words that Admiral Poindexter said" when he walked into the meeting were that "President Reagan ... wanted to tell the full story."

"When Mr. Poindexter was making statements about Iran arms you believed him?" asked Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb.

"I did," Hamilton replied.

Webb questioned the congressman about the presidential authorization document, called a finding.

"He didn't tell you at all about the 1985" document? Webb asked.

"I didn't know there was such a finding," Hamilton replied.

In a separate meeting the same day, Casey told the intelligence committee there was no document authorizing the shipment of Hawk anti-aircraft missiles to Iran, Hamilton said.

"Do you remember Casey in that testimony actually telling you there was no finding for that 1985 shipment?" Webb asked Hamilton.

"I do," the congressman replied.

Hours after Casey's and Poindexter's discussions with Congress, Poindexter destroyed the politically embarrassing presidential document. It depicted U.S. involvement in Iran arms sales as a straight arms-for-hostages deal.

The former national security adviser is accused of concealing from Congress Oliver North's military assistance to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua and the U.S. role in the missile shipment to Iran.

Earlier in the day, Webb inadvertently brought out some of Poindexter's immunized congressional testimony in questioning Hamilton about the presidential finding.

No part of the case against Poindexter may be derived from his testimony to Congress, given under a grant of immunity from prosecution.

It's an inexperienced security guard who protects nation's priceless art

By Tony Rogers

BOSTON (AP) — Despite predictions of more thefts like the $100 million-plus raid of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, many museums and galleries have inexperienced, poorly paid guards and inadequate security systems, experts say.

To make matters worse, there are only a handful of investigators trained to probe such crimes, officials said.

Guards are considered the weakest link in the security chain. Most are young and receive little better than the minimum wage to protect million-dollar paintings and sculptures.

"We've got to begin to hire career security people," said Steven Keller, a security consultant who was brought in to supervise security at the Art Institute of Chicago after thieves stole three Cezanne paintings in 1979.

In Israel and some European countries, security guards are typically highly-trained, well-paid professionals, Keller said.

"It's the exact opposite here. Security guards here are hired at the entry-level and leave their jobs to work at McDonald's or become janitors," Keller said.

In the robbery early Sunday at the Gardner Museum, two men dressed as police officers persuaded the two guards on duty to let them into the museum, then bound them with tape and disabled the security system.

The thieves made off with a dozen artworks, including priceless Old Master paintings, in the biggest theft in modern times since the looting of Germany's national bank at the end of World War II.

Several of the pictures and at least one Rembrandt were cut out of their frames, which were connected to an alarm system.

The pilfered works included two paintings and an etching by Rembrandt, three paintings and two charcoals by Edgar Degas; one painting each by Edouard Manet, Jan Vermeer and Govaert Flinck, and a bronze beaker dating from the Chinese Shang Dynasty, 1,200-1,100 B.C.

The thieves also tried but failed to take a third Rembrandt, a self-portrait, said museum spokesman Barry Wanger. He would not give details.

Museum director Anne Hawley said the guards, who had worked at the Gardner less than a year, were only doing their job and would not be disciplined.

Many museums have a lax attitude toward security, said Robert Spiel, a private security consultant and former FBI agent specializing in art theft.

"You're seeing a mentality where people assume that because an artwork is either too obscure or too famous, no one will steal it," Spiel said. "That leads to a low level of security."

Curators and security experts said that as the value of art soars at auction houses like Sotheby's, thefts are bound to increase as the illegal art market grows to a billion-dollar international trade.

"The average person thinks an art theft is an exotic thing that happens once every few years," said Donald Mason, a private security consultant for museums. "That's just not so."

Mason, who headed art theft investigations for the FBI nationwide from 1965 to 1976, said when he began he was the only agent in the United States assigned to probe incidents of stolen art.

Eventually he assembled a squad of five agents to probe art thefts, but the FBI has since disbanded the group.

This is a handout photo showing the stolen Rembrandt painting, "The Storm in the Sea of Galilee," which was taken by art thieves Sunday, along with other valuable artworks, from the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston. The value of the art taken has been estimated at more than $200 million.

Retired top brass back women-in-combat trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — A retired Army brigadier general and a former Air Force colonel have enlisted in the fight for passage of legislation to open Army combat jobs to women for a four-year trial.

"If we do have a test within the Army, I think finally there will be documentation to prove that women can perform as competently as men in the infantry and other combat areas," retired Brig. Gen. Evelyn Foote said Monday at a news conference sponsored by the National Organization for Women.

The Combat Exclusion Act, approved by Congress in 1948, bars women in the Air Force, the Marines Corps and the Navy from serving in combat positions. The Army has regulations similar to the law.

Women comprise about 11 percent of the total armed forces of 2.1 million.

The call for re-examination of the policy has grown louder since Army Capt. Linda Bray led troops fighting Panamanian forces during the U.S. invasion last December.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., and a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee, proposed legislation in January that directs the Army to conduct a test study allowing women assignment to combat positions.

Government falls silent on noise pollution

By Robert M. Andrews

WASHINGTON (AP) — The infernal racket of urban life can drive you crazy, but there's only one person left at the Environmental Protection Agency who can hear your complaints above the din.

EPA scientist Kenneth E. Feith is the guy who picks up the phone and listens to lamentations about noisy trucks, trash compactors and car stereos, shrieking jet planes and the banshee howl of the neighbor's lawnmower.

Feith, 58, says he is the "institutional memory" of the EPA's Office of Noise Abatement and Control, which once boasted a $10 million budget and more than 100 employees working to make America quieter and saner.

The office went out of business in 1982, the victim of President Reagan's budget-cutting deregulation campaign. It now ranks as a "non-program" without budget or staff.

Feith, who once wrote the EPA's anti-noise regulations, has other duties today, but he answers a couple of dozen phone calls about noise pollution every week as a courtesy to the public.

The noise, meanwhile, hasn't gone away. If anything, it's getting worse. Experts estimate that more than 20 million Americans are exposed daily to noise loud enough to cause permanent loss of hearing during a working lifetime.

That level is above 80 decibels, about the intensity of noise produced by a vacuum cleaner or electrical tools.

Studies also show that the stress of loud, sustained noise can cause high blood pressure, ulcers, headaches, insomnia, respiratory ailments, learning difficulties among children, job absenteeism, anxiety, irritability and anti-social behavior.

If the bells of Notre Dame drove poor Quasimodo nearly mad, the decibels are still giving us fits. To wit:

—A 69-year-old man living in a trailer home under a noisy airport flight path was arrested recently in Llano, Calif., after he allegedly took a 4-foot mirror outside and tried to blind pilots with reflected sunlight.

—An angry Bavarian mounted a catapult in his front yard and launched his wife's homemade dumplings at low-flying jet fighters from a nearby military base.

—A Japanese apartment dweller, distraught that a young girl ignored his repeated complaints about her loud piano playing, went next door and stabbed the girl, her sister and her mother.

—A woman was taken into custody in New York City for allegedly aiming a double-barreled shotgun at a maintenance worker outside her window, complaining that he was disturbing her and her pets.

The aggravation may get worse before it gets better, says Dr. Alice H. Suter, a research audiologist at the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health and a leading expert on noise pollution.

"My guess is that it's somewhat noisier than it used to be," she said in a telephone interview from her office in Cincinnati.

"The newly manufactured jet planes and heavy trucks are quieter, but the overall amount of noise is greater just because there's more of everything — construction, planes, traffic," she said.

The experts say noise pollution is easily ignored in an industrial society concerned with oil spills, garbage, smog and other more visible forms of pollution, but they say it is no less hazardous to health.

U.S. must assist Aquino's allies

Remember "people power" and the streets of Manila awash in yellow shirts as Filipinos faced down the tanks of dictator Ferdinand Marcos? That was only four years ago, although the rush of recent events makes it easy to forget.

The revolution in the Philippines, which helped set the stage for democracy's triumph in other parts of the world, also offers lessons for what comes next.

The most obvious lesson, four years after Marcos was sent scurrying, is that throwing out the rascals is the easy part. Since 1986, right-wing rebellions have tried six times to topple Corazon Aquino's fledgling democracy. In recent weeks her government faced yet another crisis as one of the plotters of the December coup attempt, suspended Gov. Rodolfo Aguinaldo, resisted arrest in northern Luzon and killed one of the government's top military leaders. Aguinaldo is still at large.

The problem facing the Philippines is a common dilemma for many Third World nations with a colonial past. The chances for democracy's survival and consolidation are linked to overcoming the political vacuum encouraged by authoritarian regimes.

Dictatorships stifle the common language of bargaining and compromise that are essential to democracy. As a result, the wealthy bribe, students riot, workers strike, priests pray and the military, those with the guns, end up running the show.

The United States cannot directly help the Aquino government gain control over rebellious sections of the military and their apparent patron, opposition leader Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile. But the United States, now involved in talks with the Aquino government over the continued presence of U.S. military bases in the country, can offer trade incentives and technical assistance in getting the nation's economy in order.

It is important that this country go the extra mile in helping Aquino and her democratic allies. Having backed Marcos while he was systematically looting the country, America bears a good deal of responsibility for the mess that Aquino inherited. Now is not the time for benign neglect.

Pell has 'eccentric uncle' side to him

WASHINGTON — After 30 years in the Senate, Claiborne Pell can hear some whispering behind his back these days. Some of his colleagues are beginning to think that the eccentric Democrat from Rhode Island is past his prime.

Anderson

At 71, with a long and distinguished career behind him, Pell is not the type of man that people lambaste publicly. He is a gentle, if somewhat odd, aristocrat and an earnest politician. The description, "sweet man," comes up often in polite conversation about Pell.

But there is that other side that his fellow Democrats don't know what to think about — the new-age Pell who befriends psychics and spoon benders, who is fascinated by mind reading and psychic phenomenon and who thinks the country would be better off if the senators meditated regularly.

In short, Pell is the kind of guy you want for an eccentric uncle, but he . nds out in the Senate like Shirley MacLaine at a convention of Southern Baptists.

Pell has particularly frustrated Democrats by his mellow chairmanship of the critical Senate Foreign Relations Committee. That has allowed ranking Republican, Jesse Helms, to pull the strings.

It all adds up to a rough campaign for Pell this year, as he runs for re-election. He didn't want to do it. Sources told our associate Scott Sleek that Pell was sorely tempted to retire and pursue his personal interests.

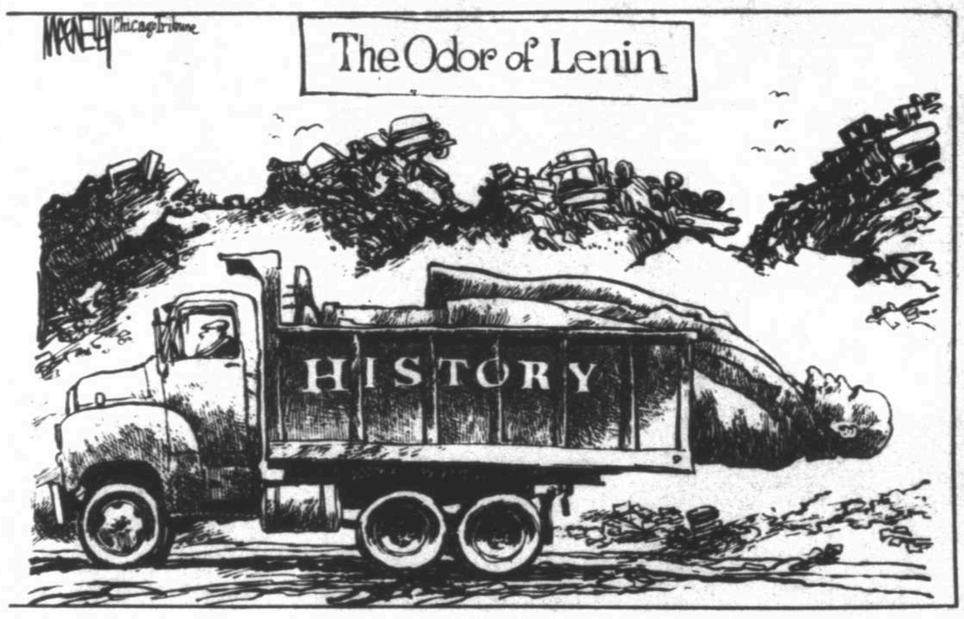

But fellow Democrats, as discouraged as they are about Pell, leaned on him to run again. The reason is that Rep. Claudine Schneider, R-R.I., wants to jump from the House to the Senate. She is a formidable candidate, and Democrats were convinced that only Pell can beat her.

Both candidates have promised no mud-slinging, but Pell's bizarre hobbies make him a large target. He is a fan of Uri Geller, the high-profile psychic and spoon bender. Pell has taken Geller along as his guest to perform mind-reading tricks at Washington gatherings — even at the arms negotiations in Geneva.

His offbeat interests have spilled into lawmaking. In 1988, Pell authored a bill to set up a National Commission on Human Resources — sort of a new-age approach to solving the ills of the world through a vague mission to help people achieve "full human potential." Pell held a hearing on the bill, trotting out experts in Zen, yoga and transcendental meditation. One doctor led the group in relaxation techniques.

The commission would have been privately funded. But even with no tax money involved, Pell's colleagues were coy about lining up with him. The bill is still languishing in the Senate. Schneider will have a hard time criticizing Pell for that bill, however. She co-sponsored the original House version, at Pell's urging.

ANOTHER VIEW

USPS inefficient

The U.S. Postal Service says its proposed 20 percent jump in the price of a first-class stamp — the largest single increase ever requested — is necessary because of the rising costs of delivering the mail. That is true, to a certain extent. But much of the postal service's fiscal problem is due to decreasing efficiency as well.

The service's board of governors has approved an increase in the price of a first-class stamp from 25 to 30 cents. The plan still needs approval by the independent Postal Rate Commission. But the increase, which would affect all classes of mail, is likely to take effect in less than a year.

Assistant Postmaster General Deborah Bowker asserts that, "if our service is good, consistent and reliable," Americans will not object to paying an average of $11 more in postage per year for the average household.

That's a mighty big "if." No one would begrudge the Postal Service reasonable increases if its service were improving. But its own statistics show that first-class mail moved 15 percent more slowly in 1988 than it did in 1969, and current Postal Service plans call for a further slowdown in the 1990s. Moreover, it is primarily because post office productivity declined during the 1980s that the cost of first-class postage is rising at twice the rate of inflation.

John Crutcher, a member of the Postal Rate Commission, has described postal workers as "the highest-paid semi-skilled workers in the world," earning an average of more than $20 an hour. He told a recent audience that the postal service was inefficient, costly and lacking in the work ethic. He should know.

The service is expected to suffer a record loss of about $1.5 billion this fiscal year. Commissioner Crutcher's common-sense answer is to open the Postal Service to more private-sector competition in order to increase efficiency. The place to start is by ending the postal service's monopoly on home delivery of junk mail. Private firms could be subcontracted, through competitive bidding, to run this and other services.

Also in need of a thorough overhaul is the bureaucratic structure of the Postal Service, which has slowed its adaptation to advances in electronic communications. And in the background, as always, is the problem of strong trade union control and a bizarre system under which almost all management salaries rise according to increases in union wages. Naturally, there is every incentive for management to condone large increases, for union workers and for themselves.

The rising cost of a postage stamp would be a lot easier to accept if the Postal Service were subject to the same competitive pressures that help to improve service and hold down costs in the private sector.

RUSSELL BAKER

Bush's 'read my lips' refrain continues

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski wants to raise taxes. He is a Democrat. He is also chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, always called "the powerful Ways and Means Committee" because it has a lot of say-so about taxes.

Baker

Nobody of course has as much say-so about taxes as the president of the United States. The president's power over taxes is so great that nobody has to call him "the powerful president of the United States."

Instead, he is called "Old Read-My-Lips." This is because of his hatred for raising taxes. His proper name is Bush. Naturally, he is a Republican. I say "naturally," because what else can a president be?

Just as naturally, he hit the ceiling when he heard somebody wanted to raise taxes. "Hasn't Rostenkowski read my lips?" he cried to brilliant presidential aide Richard Darman, always called "Dick" by press people to show they are good buddies with him, whether they know him or not.

"Come down from the ceiling, I prithee, good Read-My-Lips," urged Darman, "for I wouldst give thee cunning news."

Darman spoke the archaic style for the following reason:

Besides always being called "Dick," he was also always called "brilliant." Despite this, he was nobody's fool. He knew all too well the disastrous ends, sometimes including jail, that often befell White House big shots who started out by being called "brilliant."

He also knew that the worst fates seemed reserved for White House aides who were called not only "brilliant" but also "ruthless," "steely-willed," "hard-nosed" and similar terms applicable to insufferable martinets.

Being nobody's fool, Darman reasoned that by speaking Shakespearian he could hold onto his "brilliant" (who but the brilliant know what a bare bodkin is and why it's hard to bear fardels) and simultaneously avoid the deadly "ruthless."

What bloodthirsty despot speaks like Shakespeare, now that Macbeth is dead at Dunsinane? With Shakespeare you are talking Wimpspeak.

"OK," said Read-My-Lips, "fill me in on this tax-raiser."

"We must hie us to heap high with praise yon Rostenkowski ere those less apt for gulling smell the trap wherein ensnared he lies, and all his party roundabout, ripe for their quadrennial plucking."

"Dick, you're making me feel I'm in Shakespeare city without a dictionary. Cut the highbrow English and put it in words a Yale man can understand."

"He's a Democrat," said Darman.

"The tax-raiser?"

"Yes. Rostenkowski. A Democrat."

"You're kidding!"

"Honest injun. A Demo."

At this they both did the rolling-on-the-floor-with-laughter thing. When glee subsided the president gloated. Hadn't he told Darman all they had to do was keep saying "Read my lips" until the entire country was covered with moss?

Hadn't he always assured the whole party that the Democrats would be the first to break? And here was proof he'd been right: this chairman of the powerful — ha ha — Ways and Means Committee had just blinked.

How should they cash in on the public's insensate hatred for taxes and all who thought them necessary to operate a large nation?

Carried away by the triumph, the president said, "Dost my brilliant Darman concur that we must hurl ourselves once more unto the breach thing, there to unmask the Democratic parentage of this tax abomination while currying adoration of the crowd by crying, 'Read my lips' "?

"Stay," cried Darman, "and heed my plan."

A bit of money in the public coffers couldn't hurt a president, he observed, especially one whose coffers were always bare except when he needed billions galore to bail out victims of private speculators.

Why not let hapless Democrats lead the battle to enact a few taxes? Perhaps they would not have to be called "taxes." A tax by any other name — licensing fee, revenue enhancer, excise — would yield revenue just as sweet.

Therefore, said Darman with brilliance glinting from his smile, why not encourage this Rostenkowski by saying there was much good in his intention, though the president, of course, was still strictly read-my-lips on anything called taxes?

Thus it was decided after Read-My-Lips declared, "My good and brilliant Darman doth speak the wisdom thing."

CHARLEY REESE

Personal destinies entwined with that of U.S.

Everybody says they want the country run properly, but apparently we don't because, if we did, it would be.

Even the slimiest politician is expert at detecting what will cost him his job and what will help him get re-elected. Obviously, people don't care if the politicians give themselves outrageous pay raises plus other perks, official and otherwise; fail to balance the budget; and generally do nothing really useful. They get re-elected.

Reese

So long as that continues, the only change will be for the worse, for if you project into the future the present practices, the future looks as bleak as a West Texas road in August. Apparently too many Americans have forgotten or never learned the fundamental law of the sea.

That law is that when the ship sinks, the people on it sink, too.

I guess one of the most striking things I've noticed in people younger than me is an attitude that their personal destiny and the destiny of the country are entirely different and unrelated affairs. Many act as if they believed that should the country go bankrupt, they won't be affected; should the country be destroyed, they won't be. These Americans have become psychologically estranged from their own country.

That's one difference, I suppose, between Europeans and Americans. Europeans know from experience that what happens to their countries, happens to them. Nothing very bad has happened to our country in the lifetimes of the baby boomers and their offspring. I am slowly coming to the belief that the only things we really learn are what we experience. We can be taught the stove is hot and we can be taught the definition of the word "hot," but only after we've touched the hot stove does it all have meaning. Then we truly know.

This belief, a false belief, in separate destinies accounts for the lack of community. You have a sense of community when you identify yourself with the community and its fortunes, good or bad. When you think what happens to the community doesn't involve you, then there is no identification. The community is something separate, something outside yourself.

And this attitude leads to selfishness. A community of selfish individuals is an impossibility. A nation of selfish individuals is not possible. It will always self-destruct. To use the analogy of the ship, the ship would not survive the sea if each individual member of the crew acted only on the basis of catering to his own personal whims without any regard for anyone else. Everyone would be self-absorbed. No one would be looking out for the ship.

It's only when we realize that in addition to our particular personal interests, we also have additional, larger interests that we can together function as a whole unit.

Harry Browne, an author, is the only libertarian I've ever run across who faced this problem honestly. Browne said bluntly if you want maximum freedom, you must become an outlaw with no regard for your community, your country, or your fellow man. He is correct. What he didn't say, though, is that outlaws are never happy.

Responsibility to others is a limitation of our freedom. The parents who assume responsibility for their children limit their freedom. They can no longer go and come as they please. Their decisions take into account not merely their own wishes but also the welfare of their children. And so on up the line until you get to the guy whose responsibility to his country results in voluntarily accepting the ultimate limitation, death.

Ronald, Nancy Reagan asked to appear for Imelda Marcos at racketeering trial

NEW YORK (AP) — Jurors at the racketeering trial of Imelda Marcos and Adnan Khashoggi may hear Ronald and Nancy Reagan testify as character witnesses, according to an attorney for the former Philippines first lady.

Gerry Spence, Mrs. Marcos' defense lawyer, said Monday that the former president and first lady could be called because of their long, close relationship with the former Philippine president, the late Ferdinand Marcos, and his wife.

"Nobody knew the Marcoses better than the Reagans. ... They've known each other for years. They spent many days together with the Marcoses in their palace" in Manila, Spence said.

Asked if he thought the Reagans would agree to testify, Spence said, "I would hope so."

A spokesman for the Reagans, Mark Weinberg, said in a statement: "It is our longstanding policy not to comment on pending legal matters."

The trial of Khashoggi, a Saudi financier, and Mrs. Marcos is scheduled to begin today with jury selection. Both have pleaded innocent.

One hundred fifty prospective jurors have filled out a preliminary questionnaire asking them to describe positive and negative experiences with wealthy people, and whether they believe the rich are entitled to the same justice as the less well-to-do.

Mrs. Marcos, 60, is accused of taking part in the illegal transfer of more than $160 million from the Philippines treasury to buy Manhattan real estate. The indictment also alleges she defrauded $165 million from banking institutions to finance the properties.

She is charged with racketeering, racketeering conspiracy, mail fraud and obstruction of justice — which carry a maximum sentence of 50 years in prison and a $1 million fine.

Her late husband, who was the central figure in the October 1988 indictment, died Sept. 28 in exile in Hawaii.

Khashoggi, 54, is accused of helping the Marcoses hide their ownership of the Manhattan real estate.

The specific charges against Khashoggi are obstruction of justice and mail fraud, which carry a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a $500,000 fine.

At a hearing last week, Spence expressed concern about finding an impartial jury and asked U.S. District Judge John Keenan to expand his questioning of prospective jurors.

San Francisco jury acquits federal judge on racketeering charge, locks on others

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — U.S. District Judge Robert Aguilar, the first federal judge charged with racketeering, was acquitted of one obstruction-of-justice charge. But a jury deadlocked on seven other felony charges after seven days of deliberations.

Justice Department prosecutor William Keefer said Aguilar would be retried on the seven charges.

One juror, Joan McErlean of San Francisco, said after Monday's verdict that "the majority felt that the prosecution did not prove its case."

"There was no motive. They could not prove there was a meeting of the minds between the judge and anybody else."

Aguilar was acquitted of a charge that he improperly approached another federal judge, Samuel Conti, to seek favorable treatment for a friend and creditor, Ronald Cloud, in a pending bank fraud trial.

The jury reported it could not reach a verdict on the other charges. U.S. District Judge Louis Bechtle declared a mistrial and scheduled proceedings on a possible retrial for June 4.

Aguilar did not change expression when the jury's verdict was read, but puffed his cheeks as if to release tension. He declined to comment afterward.

Defense lawyer Patrick Hallinan said he was pleased that "the jury did not buy the government's allegations of racketeering and corruption in our courts."

U.S. District Judge Robert Aguilar, right, is kissed by an unidentified friend after Aguilar was acquitted on one obstruction-of-justice charge Monday afternoon in San Francisco. After the jury failed to reach a verdict on seven other felony charges against Aguilar, a mistrial was declared.

But Hallinan said he was disappointed Aguilar was not completely vindicated.

Ms. McErlean said the vote was 9-3 to acquit Aguilar of the charge that he used his office as a "racketeering enterprise" to obstruct justice. It was the first such charge against a federal judge.

However, she said nine of the jurors felt Aguilar had committed one of the illegal acts that was a part of the alleged pattern of racketeering: helping Vera Hoff, his friend and former legal secretary, remain a fugitive in Mexico, where she fled in 1979 after being sentenced to two years in prison for tax evasion.

The Hoff allegation was not charged as a separate count of obstruction of justice because the five-year legal deadline for filing the charge had expired when Mrs. Hoff was arrested in Mexico last year. But it was included in the racketeering charge, which required proof that Aguilar had misused his office to commit two specified criminal acts within 10 years.

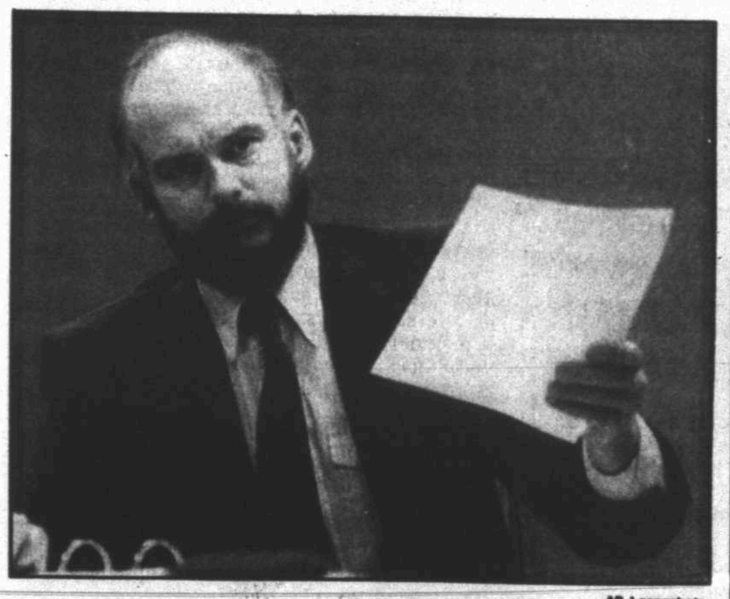

Aguilar remains free without bail pending a retrial. The 58-year-old judge from San Jose, who was appointed to the federal bench in 1980 by President Carter, can be removed from office only by Congress.

Aguilar's lawyers have accused the Justice Department of targeting him as a liberal who had ruled against the government in important cases. The department denied any political motivation.

Aguilar has issued rulings restricting factory sweeps by immigration agents, limiting aerial raids on suspected marijuana fields, and stopping the government from excluding people from the country because of homosexuality.

The counts on which the jury deadlocked included two against Aguilar's fellow defendants, former Teamster leader Rudy Tham and Abe Chapman, an 83-year-old ex-convict who was formerly related to Aguilar by marriage.

They and Aguilar were charged with plotting to use the judge's influence to seek a new trial for Tham on a 1980 embezzlement conviction.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Both sides in the trial of former Exxon Valdez skipper Joseph Hazelwood argued over final instructions for the jury, with defense lawyers losing a battle over a single word: "noticeably."

The defense wanted jurors to decide whether Hazelwood was "noticeably impaired" by alcohol the night the tanker ran aground, causing the nation's worst oil spill.

But Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone on Monday sided with the prosecution, and ruled that the panel would consider only whether the 43-year-old Huntington, N.Y., man was "impaired."

Final arguments were to take place today in the 7-week-old trial.

Hazelwood is charged with a felony, criminal mischief, and three misdemeanors: reckless endangerment, operating a vessel while intoxicated and negligent discharge of oil. If convicted, he could receive 7¼ years in prison and $61,000 in fines.

The Exxon Valdez ran aground on Bligh Reef on March 24, spilling almost 11 million gallons of North Slope crude oil that wreaked devastation over hundreds of miles of shoreline.

The intoxication charge is one of the most bitterly disputed points of the trial. The state contends Hazelwood drank before his ship sailed and was drunk when it hit the reef hours later. His attorneys say he was sober and in command.

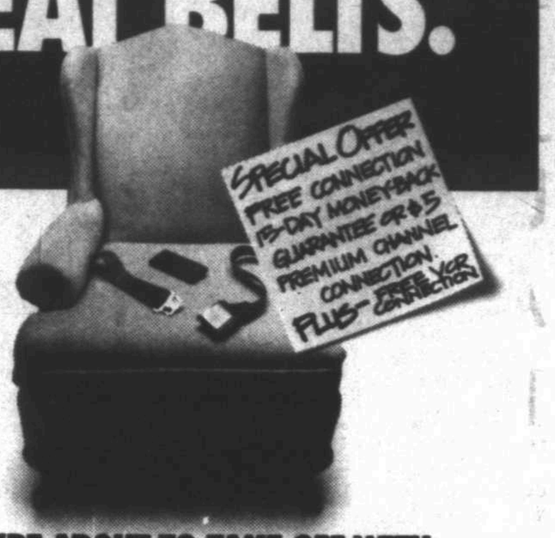

When officials tested Hazelwood 10½ hours after the grounding, his blood-alcohol level was .061, below the .10 Alaska minimum to be considered a drunken driver.

The judge on Monday refused to add a proposed prosecution instruction in which jurors would be told the Coast Guard's blood-alcohol limit for operating a commercial vessel is .04, well below the state law. Johnstone said the Coast Guard standard is a federal regulation, not state law, and has not been admitted into evidence at the trial.

Defense lawyer Dick Madson appeared stunned by the ruling, saying, "This is the first time I've ever heard of this."

"There are a lot of people who can mask their impairment," Johnstone told lawyers, explaining his decision to strike the word "noticeably."

U.S. Census takers will pair up for nightlong tally of homeless tonight

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Pairs of census takers, armed with flashlights and whistles, will troop through more than 22,000 street camps, church shelters and soup kitchens all night tonight in the nation's first effort to count all the Americans who have no homes.

The Census Bureau, seeking to minimize the risks of this far-reaching social experiment, instructed its 15,0000 part-time counters at training sessions across the country Monday that they shouldn't search inside abandoned buildings.

The enumerators were told to "wear sensible clothes" and leave their jewelry at home, a Census Bureau official said.

Police in many communities are putting on more frequent patrols. But, to prevent compromising the confidentiality of the survey, police will not be allowed by the Census bureau to accompany census takers.

The one-night census of the homeless comes a few days before the rest of the country will be blanketed with the census questionnaires that will be crunched through computers to form the decennial portrait of the nation. So far, only a small fraction of the country's estimated 250 million people have received their census forms in the mail.

Atlanta Police Maj. J. L. Mullins, who commands the downtown police district where most of the city's roughly 50,000 homeless people cluster, predicted that the count will go smoothly so long as the counters don't press too hard to obtain the names of street people.

"There are a lot of people on the street who don't want to give their names," said Mullins. "Some of them are very suspicious of someone who wants to write their names down."

Census takers are under instructions to ask the nation's homeless people seven questions: name, usual residence, sex, race, age, marital status and – for those of Hispanic background --their nation of origin.

AP Laserphoto

A group of homeless people huddle near the Federal Trade Commission building Monday. Census workers will be attempting to count the nation's homeless tonight, which is a census first.

On the eve of the census, problems were arising in all sizes and shapes. In the affluent ski towns of western Colorado, for instance, some municipal officials were complaining that the federal government was refusing to let them pay U. S. census takers $2-an-hour bonuses so they could attract workers.

Joe Sands, a county commissioner in Colorado, called the Census Bureau "the gang that couldn't count straight," and complained that it is paying census takers higher wages on the East and West Coasts. Nationally, census takers' wages range from $5 to $8 an hour, with variations based on the local labor market, according to Denver census officials.

Meanwhile in Washington, D.C., homeless advocate David Hayden said his group's downtown homeless shelter will deny admittance to census takers as a form of protest.

"We are destined for a gross under count. The resources they are devoting are too meager," said Hayden, who is an activist in the Community for Creative Non-Violence. "That sets up a scenario where the political consequences of the under count will be devastating to the homeless."

Cynthia Taeuber, Census Bureau specialist on the homeless population, said that most pro-homeless organizations across the country are cooperating, and that census takers have been instructed how to get as much information as possible without confrontations.

"If we only included (in the census) everyone who loved government or loved filling out forms, we wouldn't have a true picture of the nation," she said.

Logistically, the count will be broken down into three segments:

— 6 p.m. to midnight, persons in shelters and homeless-designated hotels.

— 2-4 a.m., persons on the streets.

— 4-8 a.m., persons emerging from abandoned buildings or other known sites of congregation.

Officials decided it is too dangerous for census takers to wander inside abandoned buildings or peer into trash dumpsters or vehicles, so they set up the 4-8 a.m. stakeouts.

Except for a few potential confrontations at homeless shelters, the most dicey part of the job will be counting people on the streets. Homeless people don't necessarily look like they're homeless, nor will they always admit it if they are.

"So we're telling the enumerators to count everybody they see — except people in uniform or those engaged in obvious money-making activities," Taeuber said. In other words, the bureau has decided that prostitutes won't be counted as homeless.

Around the country, census takers are being briefed on whom to approach and how to do it. In Dayton, they will be shown a video to sensitize them to the problems, said Gregory Gantt, district census director.

"We want the cooperation of the homeless to get a good count, so we want to be the least intrusive with their privacy as we can be," said Gannt.

The Census Bureau estimates that it will spend an extra $2.7 million to carry out what is believed to be the first nationwide homeless census any country has conducted.

Up to now estimates of the U.S. homeless population have fluctuated wildly, from 250,000 to 4 million.

The bureau will not publish a single total of homeless persons, but plans to release figures by categories, such as those staying in shelters.

By giving shape to a largely hidden problem, the census will frame a piece of the American political landscape for the coming decade. It could make homelessness a preeminent issue in the 1992 election campaigns, or it could consign the homeless to the status of political non-entities if the count comes in low.

NATION IN BRIEF

Florida police probe bombing

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A package bomb left in front of an apartment exploded when it was picked up Monday night, killing a 70-year-old man, police said.

The man was reportedly returning to his apartment with his wife and daughter when the incident occurred at about 8 p.m.

The blast was powerful enough to destroy the roof overhang of the two-story apartment building.

At first, the family stepped over the package and went inside their first-floor apartment, authorities said.

"He came back (out), picked it up and it exploded," said police spokesman Steve Weintraub.

The victim, identified as Sherwin Finley, was airlifted to University Hospital, where he was pronounced dead a short while later. His wife, Dorothy, 67, and 35-year-old daughter were not injured.

olice had no suspects or motive fo. the bombing. The FBI was investigating but had no comment late Monday.

Bad wiring costly

DENVER (AP) — A Martin Marietta Corp. rocket failed to deploy a $150 million satellite because the contractor's technicians wired the craft to carry two satellites when only one was aboard, company officials said.

The rocket's only payload was the 5-ton Intelsat communications satellite that was left stranded in space last week when it failed to separate from the Titan's upper stage.

Space analysts say the mistake may cost as much as $500 million, including lost revenue from transmitting telephone calls and television signals.

The satellite remains in an orbit closer to Earth than is useful, with little chance for recovery.

Teachers end strike

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Schools throughout West Virginia reopened after a nearly two-week teacher strike. Some held counseling sessions to ease tensions between teachers who walked out and those who crossed picket lines.

"I suspect there's a degree of animosity and maybe even bitterness for those who walked across the picket line," Bob Brown, executive director of the West Virginia Federation of Teachers, said as teachers returned Monday.

Teachers voted overwhelmingly Sunday to return to work — without settling the wage issue — after legislative leaders promised to ask Gov. Gaston Caperton to call a special legislative session to consider a long-term plan for West Virginia's education system.

The strike had spread to 47 of the state's 55 counties and affected more than 150,000 pupils.

S&L bailout short

WASHINGTON (AP) — The savings and loan bailout enacted last year will fall at least $30 billion and possibly as much as $162 billion short of the amount needed to clean up the industry, says a congressional report.

The bill passed last August provided $50 billion to close or sell failed thrift associations through 1992. However, $48 billion of that will be needed to cover losses at the 383 institutions seized by the government through March 5, concluded a report submitted by Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn.

Vento is chairman of an 18-member House Banking Committee task force tracking the performance of the new bailout agency, the Resolution Trust Corp.

Regulators expect the failure of an additional 225 to 295 S&Ls with losses of at least $32 billion to $40 billion, according to the report. In addition, 295 to 325 S&Ls are weak and may not recover on their own, it said.

Depending on the severity of the losses, the shortfall could rise as high as $162 billion, Vento said.

Bailout officials, however, say there is enough money to last into next year. If there's a shortfall after that, money intended to cover S&L losses after 1992 could be reallocated to cover earlier failures.

Cab companies not faring well

Twelve taxi franchises registered to operate in Midland

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

B.G. Lee had doubts about buying and reviving the defunct Yellow-Checker Cab Co.

It was 1978 when Lee visited the lot where the dormant Yellow-Checker cabs sat. He had come in search of something that might persuade him to return to a business which had provided a shaky income for him off and on since 1947.

As he toured the premises of the company that had served the city for 30 years, he was overwhelmed by the memories of giving rides to Hollywood stars, money-burning oil tycoons and little old ladies going to the supermarket.

Then Lee spotted a $20 bill lying on the steps of the abandoned Yellow-Checker offices, 610 S. Big Spring St.

"I thought it must be some kind of omen," Lee, 61, recalled last week of what finally prompted him to buy the company, which he moved to the 1200 W. Front St. lot where it stands today.

Lee soon left his job as an insurance agent and became Yellow-Checker's new owner. It was a time when taxi drivers scurried to keep up with those who needed taxi service in a booming city.

SINCE THEN, the cab business has less financial appeal than it did then, but Lee still enjoys the work, even if it means operating by the skin of his financial teeth.

Midland has 12 taxi franchises registered with the city. At least three of the companies have shut down their operations in the past two years.

But someone is always willing to give the business a try. City Council voted last week to allow yet another taxi franchise to be established.

Kirk Swinney, assistant city attorney, said the survival odds are against the newcomer. In an average year, five franchises will enter and another five will bail out of the cab business.

Thinking he was on the road to riches, Doug Smith Jr. about a year ago took over the two-car United taxi company, which has been in business here about 25 years.

"I wish I hadn't," said Smith, 59, who is the company's only driver. "Things are slow. You spend all your money and can't make any. I don't know what I'm going to do."

Lee, whose company has 10 cars and about 15 drivers, said skyrocketing insurance is the primary reason why franchises go broke. It can run as much as $2,400 a year per vehicle — and that's if the drivers haven't accumulated too many traffic citations, he said.

IN ADDITION, a franchise owner must pay the city of Midland $200 a year for each vehicle and an extra $25 a month to use the cab stand at Midland International Airport.

Car maintenance is also another cost factor, with the vehicles needing almost constant attention, Lee said.

The cars must have a decal showing that the Midland Police Department has inspected and approved the taxi. The department also screens the drivers, who must have a chauffeur's license, insurance and a good driving and criminal record.

Joe Lewis, driver for the one-car Western Taxi franchise, said he is not intimidated by the troubles that accompany cab driving. Lewis works weekends, while his mother-in-law, who owns the company, drives during the week.

The company picks up customers strictly from the airport, he said. Sometimes the wait for a customer at the cab stand can take as long as six hours on some days and seconds on others.

"I make enough to pay some of the bills," said Lewis, 26, who works as a diesel mechanic during the week. "If I didn't make a profit, I wouldn't be here. At times there's not enough cabs out here and other times there's too many."

Lee said he would rather stay out of the competition at the airport, where drivers wait in line behind each other to pick up customers on a first-come basis.

SWINNEY SAID a 1987 ordinance which tightened regulations for Midland's taxi businesses ironically resulted in more cab companies.

The ordinance required all taxis in the franchise to be the same color. Rather than repaint their cars, a number of drivers simply started their own one-man franchises, Swinney said.

"Troops of people came in here for franchises," Swinney said. "I'd say very few are left. There was a very high failure rate."

The maximum fare a taxi company can charge is $2.15 for the first mile and $1 a mile thereafter.

Swinney said many newcomers become intimidated by the costs and hassles of the business, such as the insurance, fees and yearly inspections. Few drivers lost their operating permits because of poor driving records, he said.

Midland Police Sgt. Mike Roberts has spent the last two years inspecting potential taxis and their drivers.

"I THINK for the most part they're safe drivers," Roberts said. "Every now and then we get someone who applies, because of their criminal history or driving record, we recommend to City Hall to deny his application. That doesn't happen very often."

Lee said a majority of his drivers have been steady employees for more than five years.

Yellow-Checker averages 300 customers a day, with his drivers sometimes traveling to out-of-town places as near as Odessa and as far Abilene and even Dallas.

DPS says traffic deaths down in '89

Staff Report

AUSTIN — Traffic deaths in Texas decreased by 1 percent in 1989 compared with 1988, a reduction in part caused by a substantial decrease in the number of motorcycle deaths in the state.

A total of 3,361 traffic deaths were reported in Texas in 1989, a decrease of 34 deaths from the 3,395 fatalities on Texas streets and highways the year before. Motorcycle traffic deaths dropped 18 percent, from 295 in 1988 to 243 in 1989.

"Texas had a slight increase in the number of traffic deaths in 1988, but the overall trend for the last decade has been downward," DPS Director Col. Joe Milner said. "I am every pleased to see that 1988's increase apparently was not the beginning of a sustained upturn in traffic deaths in Texas."

Milner also mentioned that there were no fatal traffic accidents reported in the state on June 13, 1989. "The last time this occurred in Texas was Jan. 5, 1977. We would like to have at least two deathless traffic days this year," he added.

According to data gathered by the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, a record 159.679 billion vehicle miles were traveled in Texas last year. Based on that data, the DPS has calculated a death rate of 2.1 deaths per 100 million miles driven in Texas — the lowest death rate ever recorded in Texas.

"When you consider that in 1935, when traffic records were first kept on a statewide basis, the death rate was 16.6 with far fewer miles driven, Texas is a vastly safer place for the motorist than it has ever been," Milner said.

"This is the result of heads-up traffic law enforcement, the declining social acceptance of drinking and driving, and progressive legislation, such as the safety belt law and the recently passed law requiring motorcyclists to wear helmets," Milner said.

These developments are supported by 1989 data, which show 1,306 alcohol related fatalities in 1989 (a 4.2 percent drop from 1988); a 3.7 percent decrease in traffic deaths in rural areas, and an 11 percent decrease in deaths on rural interstates.

"We are particularly delighted with the decline in motorcycle fatalities in Texas," said Henry Palma, manager of the DPS Motorcycle Safety Bureau. "The decline in motorcycle deaths began last year before the helmet law went on the books, but we think the debate that preceded the Texas Legislature's action served to raise public awareness of the extreme danger of riding on a motorcycle without a helmet."

Palma said that in 1989, 66 percent of the motorcyclists killed were not wearing a helmet, compared with 78 percent the year before.

"After looking at another year's data, we should be able to see for sure whether the helmet law has had the impact we think it has," Palma said.

Appreciation Pins acknowledging devoted service were given to Skip Allen, Virginia Conner, Susan Fulfer, Don Greenlee, Debbie Tuffly and Sue Wood, all of Midland; Jan Havens and Petra Tucker, both of Alpine; Lupita Rivera, Charlie Simpson and Josie Simpson, all of Marfa; and Camille Doss of Fort Davis, Rosa Carrillo of Fort Stockton, Don Cooper of Odessa and Gloria Calzada of Sanderson.

Plaques recognizing distinguished service to the council were presented to Midlanders Steve Selbe, Ross Roberts and Charles Tighe.

The volunteers' Extra Mile Award was given to Sally Steward and Anne Josefy, both of Midland.

Stephanie Lynn Johnson of Alpine earned the Gold Award in 1989, the highest achievement in girl scouting in the Permian Basin. Silver Awards were earned by Brenda Collins, Janna Fulfer, Christine Gentry, Mendy McBride and Laura Prothro, all of Midland.

Directors elected to the board at the meeting were: Beth Carr and Ludene Reeves, of Fort Stockton; Astrid Nunez of Marfa; Richard Galle, Don Greenlee, Ron Sullivan and Karen Washington, all of Midland; and Don Cooper of Odessa. Senior scouts serving on the board are Christine Florer of Midland and Courtney Johnson of Odessa.

Substance abuse facility for teen-aged boys to open

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

The youths will be taught living skills, how to select a peer group, how to avoid disruptive environments and simply how to say no to drugs and alcohol.

The upcoming opening of a home for teen-age boys with substance abuse problems may only be the beginning of a new fight against drug and alcohol abuse in the Permian Basin.

The Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation received a $435,000 state grant to build and operate Country Mesa, Clyde McLean, MHMR executive director, said Monday.

The home, which will initially house 12 boys from ages 13 to 17, is scheduled to open next week, McLean said. A ribbon-cutting ceremony for Country Mesa will be held Wednesday, he said.

The house, on Cotton Flat Road near County Road 140, has been in MHMR's plans for two years, McLean said. The project is a response to an estimated high percentage of Permian Basin youths with substance abuse problems, he said.

"They come from broken homes or even some homes that look like good homes on the surface," he said. "The parents have been unable to control them."

A majority of the boys will be referred to the program by school officials, parents, counseling agencies and even law enforcement authorities, McLean said. The home will serve boys from Midland, Ector and Pecos counties, he said.

Pam Bowerman, executive director of the Permian Basin Regional Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse, said substance abuse is a growing problem among Permian Basin youths.

A 1988 study by the council showed that 59 percent of all Permian Basin adolescents abuse alcohol and 29 percent use marijuana. About 30 percent of all males between the ages of 14 and 17 abuse either alcohol or drugs, the study showed.

"We need that treatment facility," Ms. Bowerman said. "We don't have a treatment facility like this right now."

McLean said the boys will stay in Country Mesa an average six months and receive intensive substance abuse education from counselors and psychologists.

The youths will be taught living skills, how to select a peer group, how to avoid disruptive environments and simply how to say no to drugs and alcohol.

"The point is to get them out of their current environment, whether it be their peer group they're running with or something else," McLean said. "Usually it's a combination of things."

In addition, the boys will receive homebound schooling from two Midland Independent School District teachers, who will hold class from 8 a.m. to noon Monday through Friday.

The state grant probably will be renewed on a yearly basis, depending on the program's success, McLean said. Success also will be a factor in determining whether the project is expanded, he said.

The initial staff will have a program director, two counselors, eight counselor assistants and a cook.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Clyde McLean sits on a bed in one room of the Country Mesa facility for boys, ages 13 to 17, with substance abuse problems. The home is expected to open next week.

Suspect says students willingly rode

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — One of three Mexicans jailed on a kidnap charge says the four Oklahomans making the charge willingly rode around Matamoros drinking beer with them last weekend.

Jesus Rangel Gonzalez, 21, driver of the alleged kidnapping car, told a Mexican judge Monday that the Americans could have left the car at any time because of the slow-moving traffic on Matamoros' busy Avenida Obregon.

Judge Manuel Ceballos Jimenez has until Thursday to decide whether to accept the prosecutor's kidnapping charges against Rangel, Oscar Garcia Velazquez, 17, and Olga Lidia Castillo, 20, all of Matamoros. The judge read the charges and took statements from the three Monday morning at the state jail in Matamoros.

It was also learned that the vacationing students last week paid more than $500 in fines for public intoxication and other offenses two days later at South Padre Island, police said.

The students, identified as Marland Crabtree, 25; his brother, Darren Crabtree, 19; and Kerry Ramsey, 19; and a friend, Jeff Jones, 21, were arrested at South Padre Island after police broke up a fight Saturday night, said Sgt. Homer Gonzalez with the resort town's police department.

All four are from the Oklahoma City area, police said.

Marland Crabtree, left, his brother, Darren Crabtree, center, and Jeff Jones are three of four Oklahoma City area students who said they were kidnapped in Matamoros, Mexico, last Thursday.

Jones and Ms. Ramsey each paid $42.50 in fines for public intoxication, said Yolanda Herrera, deputy court clerk. Marland Crabtree paid a total of $160 in fines for public intoxication and disorderly conduct, the clerk said. Darren Crabtree paid $277.50 in fines for public intoxication, disorderly conduct and reckless damage, the latter for damaging an automobile with a tire tool, Gonzalez said.

Darren Crabtree also was ordered to pay $200 in restitution to the owner of the damaged vehicle, Ms. Herrera said.

The four said they were abducted near an international bridge late last Thursday night and were taken on a wild ride around Matamoros before the Mexicans pulled up to a warehouse.

"At that point we thought they were going to kill us because last year those people got killed during spring break," said Marland Crabtree. "They were telling us that we better go in because they had a gun."

A police officer, suspicious of the activity at the warehouse, pulled up and arrested the three Mexicans.

But Rangel told the judge the incident began as a friendly encounter when the Mexicans invited the Americans to party with them and offered them beer.

"We were just driving around the city drinking beer," Rangel told the judge.

Parents may sue schools

HOUSTON (AP) — Parents of 166 high school students who were suspended after they walked out of class are threatening legal action against the school district, claiming their children have been treated unfairly.

The parents, whose children attend Reagan High School, met Monday night to discuss the mass suspension and the terms the district set for the students' return. They said a lawsuit is planned.

Houston Independent School District Superintendent Joan Raymond said the students could return to class as early as Monday, but she added they would face two weeks detention and would be excluded from extracurricular activities for the rest of the year.

The students, who are mostly Hispanic, walked out of classes Friday to protest the appointment of a black cheerleader to the mostly Hispanic squad. Parents and students claim the selection was made to appease black football players and bypass the election process.

The students also want more bilingual counselors and teachers.

Surgeons seek OK of heart assist device

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Heart Institute surgeons plan to implant a battery-powered heart assist device in a patient this summer if they get federal approval.

Successful use of the device would enable a patient to move freely and perhaps leave the hospital while awaiting a transplant, said Dr. O.H. Frazier, director of the Houston-based institute's cardiovascular surgical research laboratories and heart transplant service.

THI and Thermo Cardiosystem Inc. have applied for a Food and Drug Administration investigational device exemption that would permit them to use the battery-powered device in patients awaiting heart transplants, the Houston Chronicle reported today.

The battery-powered pump represents an important second step in the ultimate development of a permanent heart assist device to replace failing hearts in seriously ill patients.

THI and the Massachusetts-based bioengineering company have worked together on heart pumps for several years, and their experts believe the battery-powered device is an important step forward.

Currently, such devices are powered by large air-driven pumps, making movement cumbersome for patients.

"With this newer electrical pump, you do have a wire through the skin, but it's battery controlled," said Frazier.

The heart assist pump or left ventricular assist device performs most of the pumping function of a normal heart's left ventricle. Many patients can live for months with such a device in place. At THI, one man has lived 233 days with the air-driven pump replacing most of his heart's function.

The battery-powered pump is vented to the outside through a small tube, Frazier said. The only other part that passes through the skin is the wire that leads to the external battery worn under the patient's arm.

TAXI: Cab driving business may never be the same their fares, can make about $70 on a good day, he said. Drivers during Midland's economic boom during the early 1980s made as much as $900 a week, he said.

Lee said the cab business may never be like it was when he first drove taxis for a living. Fewer people had cars, the government rationed gasoline and franchises used the same radio frequency to dispatch drivers.

"It was a madhouse," Lee recalled. "When the radio dispatcher gave you a call, you had to get there quick because everybody in town would be headed there."

LEE SAID he doesn't feel the competitive edge today that he had back then.

"It's more subdued now," he said. "Now you drive up and down the street and there's two or three cars in front of every house and hardly anyone needs a cab."

Up until at least the late 1950s, cab driving was considered a career which carried a high sense of prestige and professionalism, Lee said.

"There's just a few of those old crows left," he said. "Now turnover is high and a lot of people come and go. A lot of people come down here and drive because they don't have anything better to do."

But Lee said the business hasn't lost enough of its romanticism to make him get out.

"It's like gambling once it gets in your blood," he said. "You don't know what's going to happen from one day to the next."

Lee said his drivers rarely face the dangers as those in larger cities, where the threat of robberies and even murder accompanies the job.

GARRY SINCLAIR, who has been a Yellow-Checker driver for four years, said it's the wide array of customers that makes his job exciting.

There are the regulars, such as airport goers, elderly shoppers and the handicapped, Sinclair said. Then there are the bizarre customers who sometimes do "stuff in cabs that you can't print," he said.

"Everything in your wildest imagination happens in a cab," he said. "Rich people do things crazy people wouldn't do."

Council approves resolution saying life starts at conception

LAREDO (AP) — An anti-abortion leader says his next move will be an attempt to get the Laredo City Council to pass an anti-abortion ordinance following his success in getting council members to approve a resolution stating that life begins at the moment of conception.

Rex Moses made the remark Monday night after the Laredo City Council approved the controversial resolution by a 4-0 margin with two council members abstaining.

"I didn't do it. You did it," Moses told Laredo residents who thanked him for traveling to Laredo from Corpus Christi, where he heads the Body of Christ Rescue.

Law professors, abortion-rights supporters and anti-abortion advocates have said they know of no other city in the nation to have passed such a resolution.

The next step, Moses said, would be for Laredo to pass an ordinance, or city law, that states life begins at conception. A resolution is merely an expression of the council's opinion.

"They took a big step tonight, although reluctantly," Moses said.

Several council members described an internal dilemma that plagued them as a result of this issue. Some said as Catholics they opposed abortion, but were uneasy in forcing their moral judgments on their constituents.

"Six years ago, after attending the Catholic Church for many years as a non-Catholic, I became a Catholic," said Councilman David Cortez, who abstained. "I made a choice. Just as I was given a choice, I want those women to have their choice."

Cortez said he would swear on a Bible he personally opposes abortion. "But I will not do it as a councilman," he added.

Cortez chided Mayor Aldo Tatangelo for allowing the resolution to come before the council.

"For you to have put us in this predicament is almost unforgivable," Cortez said.

Councilman Jacinto Juarez voiced similar concerns, but ultimately voted in favor of the resolution.

"I'm a practicing Catholic," Juarez said, adding that he was an altar boy for many years. "But I believe in respecting other people's beliefs."

The resolution would not take away anyone's rights, but would simply put the council on record about what they believe, Tatangelo said.

"We're not talking about the rights of a person," Tatangelo said. "Does a child have the right to be born and to live? That's the big question."

Laredo City Attorney Anthony McGettrick warned the council to be careful in passing the resolution, saying an ordinance would be the next goal of the anti-abortion advocates.

"I think you are being used," McGettrick said. "They're saying, 'Let's use the city of Laredo to be a patsy for this.' So, be careful when you do this."

Peggy Shearer, a Laredo registered nurse, told the council that as a Catholic she does not favor abortion, but believes women should have the right to choose whether to have the procedure.

"I have seen women mutilated. I have three friends in the cemetery," Shearer said, referring to illegal abortions. "I don't want to lose any more friends. Rethink it, please. I beg each of you."

Lawyers say picking of jury racially biased

DALLAS (AP) — Defense lawyers for an accused drug kingpin who has been charged in the slayings of five people in Texas and Oklahoma claim prosecutors used racial bias in jury selection for his capital murder trial.

Genaro Camacho, 35, is to be tried next month on a charge accusing him of killing a man who walked in on the kidnapping of a Southeast Dallas woman and her son in May 1988.

The bodies of the woman and her son were later found in a shallow grave in Johnston County, Okla.

Defense lawyer Julius Whittier, one of three lawyers representing Camacho, told District Judge Ron Chapman Monday that records show that eight of the state's 14 peremptory challenges were used to eliminate six black and two Hispanics from the jury panel.

"This reflects a discriminatory pattern of the state's use of its peremptory challenges," Whittier said.

Whittier claims that his violates a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that prospective jurors may not be rejected solely because of their race.

The jury, made up of six men and six women, contains only two minorities, two Hispanic women.

Assistant District Attorney Dennis Jones testified Monday that some of the minorities struck from the jury were disqualified because they could not assess the death penalty or did not believe in it.

The jury selected by Jones will be for the trial of Camacho in the death of David Wilburn, 32, who was shot to death when he walked in as Camacho allegedly attempted to kidnap a 31-year-old woman and her 3-year-old son May 20, 1988.

Camacho also faces a capital murder charge in Erath County in the slaying of Pamela Miller, a topless dancer who told friends she had witnessed the killing of the woman who had been kidnapped. The remains of Ms. Miller's body, which had been put through a tree mulcher, were found in a remote field outside Stephenville in August 1988.

Senate endorses education bill

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate on Monday endorsed a $1.2 billion public education package that Gov. Bill Clements already has said he would veto but Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby called "responsible" and "realistic."

During lengthy debate of the measure, senators added 25 mostly minor amendments but in only one instance considered lowering the amount of new state education.

That amendment, with a radically different dollar allocation formula than the one contained in the original bill, was tabled on a voice vote.

Clements said this past week that the bill's $1.2 billion, first-year price tag is too high, proposing instead $300 million in new aid found from within the existing state budget.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo and Midland's representative in the state's upper chamber, said he did not vote for the measure because of its high price tag.

"If the governor says the state doesn't have the nmoney and he's going to veto it, there's no point in sending (it)," he said.

The chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. James Hury, D-Galveston, said the Senate's bill would require "a mixture" of tax increases should it become law.

He mentioned as possiblities increases in "sin" taxes such as those on cigarettes and liquor and a three-quarter-to-one-cent hike in the sales tax.

The House on Wednesday will conduct debate on its own school finance plan, a $450 million proposal that was approved by the House Public Education Committee last Saturday.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said Monday that even a measure with that level of spending "would have a very difficult time passing" the chamber.

With time growing short in the current special session, "every day we delay, it's going to be more difficult to get a bill together," he said.

Hobby said he hoped a conference committee could begin negotiating a compromise by the end of the week.

The current session, which started Feb. 27, ends midnight March 28.

Hury said the choices facing lawmakers are becoming increasingly narrow if they do not want to re-direct state aid from richer districts to poorer ones.

To avoid such a situation, they will have to consider approving a statewide tax to raise the level of education aid to all districts, he said.

The Texas Supreme Court this past October ruled unanimously that the current public school finance system, in which districts pay for instruction with a combination of local property taxes and money distributed by the state, is unconstitutional.

Districts with below-average property values are unable to raise as much as wealthier districts, which amounts discrimination against students in the poorer locations, said the court, which set a May 1 deadline for the Legislature to set the situation right.

The Senate measure addresses the problem with progessively greater doses of state aid to equalize the amount districts spend on students by its third year in effect.

At that point, 95 percent of Texas school districts should have access to the same level of revenue as some of the state's wealthiest districts, provided they tax at a state-prescribed rate.

After a $1.2 billion infusion of cash in its first year, the Senate bill would contribute $1.6 billion toward equity in its second year, and top out at $2.1 billion in its third year.

The amounts are added to the current yearly state education budget of about $5.6 billion.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and a co-sponsor of the Senate bill, said the additional money would translate into "a dramatic drop-off" in the number of remedial course schools would have to teach.

The additional money would increase the state's literacy rate, lower the drop out rate and increase teacher morale, said Parker, who also chairs the House Education Committee. "It would be a giant step forward for the quality of education if this bill were to pass," he said.

The bill also contains dozens of accountability measures, such as an additional level of testing beyond the current TEAMS tests, which some legislators say are necessary if the state is to spend such a large sum of money.

Other provisions intended to promote efficiency in public education would reward the most successful campuses by cutting paperwork and freeing them from many regulations.

The Senate on Monday also endorsed selling $200 million in bonds for districts to use for building construction and renovation. The measure, sponsored by Sen. Bill Haley, D-Center, would satisfy another aspect of the Supreme Court decision.

Receiving tentative approval was a measure sponsored by Parker to re-apportion proceeds from the Permanent School Fund to public schools based on an equity formula developed by the Legislature.

Barbara Bush to be honored

AUSTIN (AP) — First lady Barbara Bush will be on hand March 27 to be inducted in the Texas Women's Hall of Fame for her volunteer work.

Gov. Bill Clements said Monday that Mrs. Bush will receive a special achievement award for her work in Texas and throughout the nation.

Sally McKenzie, chairwoman for the Governor's Commission for Women and sponsor of the event, said Mrs. Bush was a unanimous choice of the Hall of Fame awards committee.

"She has inspired a national resurgence in volunteer activities, ranging from literacy to AIDS education," Ms. McKenzie said.

"Long before the national spotlight was on Mrs. Bush, she worked tirelessly in community service programs in her home town of Houston, in Texas and across the country.

"This award is a fitting tribute to her past accomplishments and her ongoing commitment," Ms. McKenzie said.

Seven other Texas women who will be inducted at the ceremony at the Hyatt Regency Hotel are: Gussie Nell Davis of Kilgore; Margaret Swan Forbes of San Antonio; Terese Tarlton Hershey of Houston; Jane A. Wetzel of Dallas; Dr. Judith B. Craven of Houston; Lucia Rede Madrid of Redford and L. Ruth Guy of Dallas.

Murder plot goes awry

DALHART (AP) — Two men have been arrested in connection with an alleged murder-for-hire plot that went awry when the would-be victim found one of the men in her home, authorities say.

Carl Marcom, 26, of Dalhart, was being held in the Hartley County Jail on charges of burglary of a habitation and a firearms charge. Bond was set at $35,000, according to deputy Shane Rieken.

Dan Corbett, 59, also of Dalhart, has been arrested and charged with solicitation to commit capital murder, according to a spokeswoman for the Dallam County sheriff's office. Corbett is free on $15,000 bond.

Marcom was shot in the arm about 11 p.m. March 13 after a 58-year-old Dalhart woman said she heard a noise in her home and called Dalhart police.

Rieken said Marco was shot in the left forearm when he did not drop his firearm after police ordered him to so.

Corbett was arrested two days later, officers said.

Corbett, the victim's husband, allegedly conspired with Marcom in Dallam County to have his estranged wife killed, Rieken said.

Helicopter tips over

PEARLAND (AP) — National Transportation Safety Board officials are trying to determine what caused a helicopter to tip over during an attempted takeoff Monday, injuring the pilot and copilot.

The helicopter, which belongs to Houston Helicopters Inc., tipped over and the aircraft's overhead blade struck the ground, according to Pearland Police officer Bill Wagner.

"I don't think they fully left the ground and the blade struck the ground. The whole thing lasted about a second and a half," Wagner said.

The helicopter's pilot and copilot suffered facial and head injuries and were taken by LifeFlight helicopter to Hermann Hospital in Houston, Wagner said. Both were in stable condition, a hospital spokesman said.

Names of the victims were withheld Monday because their relatives had not been notified, Wagner said.

Father to be extradited

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said he expects the first extradition to the state of a person charged with failure to pay child support.

Mattox said Monday that investigators from the attorney general's special child support enforcement team and Caldwell County Sheriff's office are scheduled to bring the man to Austin from Sacramento, Calif.

Office will oversee U.S., Mexico affairs

DALLAS (AP) — The Department of State has decided to create a special office to help coordinate U.S.-Mexico border affairs.

Irwin Rubenstein, a Mexico specialist, will head the new border sub-unit within the office of Mexican affairs, the State Department announced Monday. The position is designed to improve bilateral cooperation.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen in May asked Secretary of State James A. Baker III to consider creating the special office.

The Texas Democrat said then that full-time experts were needed "who know about and are sensitive to those local issues that are international because of the existence of a legal boundary."

The unit will help coordinate relations between U.S. agencies and their counterparts in Mexico. Mexico has already established a director general for border affairs.

Rubenstein, a senior career Foreign Service officer, has served in Latin America for 30 years. He has spent his last eight years in Mexico, four in the Embassy in Mexico City and four in Guadalajara.

Before joining the State Department, Rubenstein served in the U.S. Army and spent a year fighting in Korea. He received a master's degree from the School of Advanced International Studies in Washington and speaks fluent Spanish.

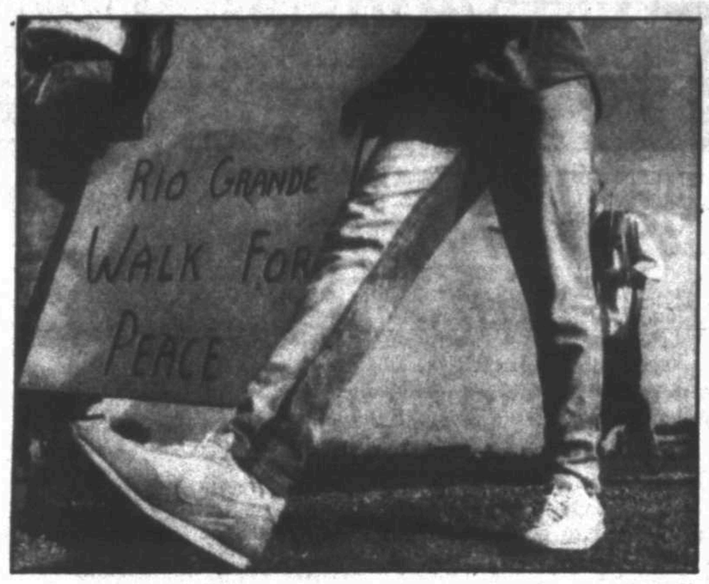

The State Department also is involved in initiatives to clean up pollution of the Rio Grande.

Baker has said he supports a plan to clean up raw sewage pollution of the Rio Grande. Congress last year authorized the State Department, acting through the International Boundary and Water Commission, to negotiate with Mexico to clean up the river.

Peace march

Seven people began a 400-mile march for "peace and healing" on Monday. The marchers plan to walk along the U.S.-Mexico border to Laredo, then return on the Mexico side and arrive in Brownsville by Easter, April 15.

Lewellen Construction Co. offers experience

Call now about March specials

Lewellen Construction Company customer Josephine Morris, left, and Joan Lewellen inspect some recent Lewellen Construction home improvements added onto the Morris home.

Take advantage now on several money-saving home improvements from Lewellen Construction Company.

With any siding purchase during March, receive three-fourths inch insulation absolutely free! Also in March, save ten percent on the purchase of a soffit and fascia system.

Not only will you be saving money on insulation, soffit and fascia, you'll benefit from the experience and the longevity of Bill and Joan Lewellen's company and their dependable crews.

A recent Lewellen Construction Company customer, Mrs. Josephine Morris, agreed. "We couldn't have been more pleased with the work. Their crewman, Frank Loewen, installed storm windows, trim, soffit and fascia."

"Frank is excellent," she said. "He is an aggressive working self-starter. He did everything for us."

Mrs. Morris and her husband, Mack, became aware of Lewellen Construction Company through newspaper advertising. But, she said what convinced them to contract their work to Lewellen Construction was the quality of the job that the company did for the Morris' church, Alamo Heights Baptist.

"Our job was done within the scheduled time. I have highly recommended Lewellen Construction Company to friends."

Joan and Bill Lewellen have recently added a new product, especially for those who live in mobile and modular homes and are tired of continual problems with roof maintenance and excessive heat in the summer.

You can put a stop to roof leaks while you insulate at the same time with Solar Cap® Insulated Roof Over System. Call Lewellen Construction Company today and enjoy the year-round benefits of the Solar Cap.

- No roof maintenance
- Reduced rain and wind noise
- Lowers utility bills
- Beautifies your home

In addition, another improvement to consider as spring approaches with dusty days and bad thunderstorms, is storm windows. As an investment, these offer excellent paybacks.

For example, your home and family are better protected from storms and hail penetration. Also, storm windows filter out outside noises. They help reduce air and dust infiltration.

Replacement windows are also a Lewellen Construction Company specialty, and a good idea to consider this time of year. Replace your old, worn out windows with aluminum and vinyl replacement windows.

All storm and replacement windows can be ordered with tinted glass to further cut down on energy costs. Also, all windows are custom built to fit the opening and they are available in bronze, white and mill finishes.

Call Lewellen Construction Company at 563-4520 or 686-8007 today for more information on the March specials or for information about the insulated roof over system.

Hilton banquet staff, meeting facilities cater to special events

Professional staff tailors events to customer needs

Hosting a reception or a function for your company doesn't have to involve endless hours of planning and checking over hundreds of small details.

Instead, let the professional banquet and meeting planning staff of the Midland Hilton — the city's only downtown hotel — cater to all of the needs for your special event.

According to Bill Goodroe, director of food and beverage, the Midland Hilton has extensive experience in hosting functions ranging from awards ceremonies, sports banquets and weddings, to corporate meetings, conventions and cocktail receptions.

"No event is too big or too small for the Midland Hilton to handle," said Goodroe. "We can tailor any function to fit your needs, including custom-designed menus prepared by our award-winning European chef and a complete foreign and domestic wine list."

The hotel has a variety of function rooms located in its two eleven-story towers. Nine meeting rooms and a ballroom, each with separate entrances, can accommodate from 10 to 1,000 guests, in classroom-style, banquet-style or reception-style configurations.

For corporate functions, the Midland Hilton can handle all aspects of the event, beginning with a boardroom-style meeting and ending with a dinner that can be as simple or elaborate as the occasion dictates. The hotel's services also extend to its comprehensive package of meeting equipment, including the most advance audio-visual equipment available.

"We've assisted a number of prominent local companies with their meetings when they've needed a private, off-site facility, as well as out-of-town companies looking for quality meeting space and sleeping accommodations in one convenient location," said Goodroe. "But we're also skilled in helping consumers and local social groups plan their own special events, including weddings, dinners and dances."

Goodroe said the hotel's ability to tailor an event to the customer's needs ensures that they can offer the best services at a price that can accommodate any budget. For example, the banquet and catering staff at the Midland Hilton has a complete planning checklist that helps brides plan every detail of their event. After meeting with the bride about the wedding requirements, the hotel will develop a proposal that outlines various options for the different components of both the ceremony and the reception.

"We like to think that our Hilton quality, combined with our Texas hospitality, creates a winning facility for any type of meeting or event," said Goodroe. "Add to that our downtown location across from historic Centennial Plaza, and you're assured of a most memorable event."

Speaking of a memorable event, Barry A. Smith, general manager of the Hilton, announced that Glinda Duke of Stanton has been chosen as the winner of the hotel's "Millionaire Weekend" package. The prize package was awarded from a drawing held during the Gourmet Midland event on March 1.

Ms. Duke will receive deluxe accommodations for the weekend as well as the Hilton's award-winning Sunday brunch. "We wanted to show our support for Gourmet Midland by offering something special to attract visitors to the event," said Smith.

"We're pleased that Ms. Duke will be able to experience the best that our hotel has to offer, and we look forward to showing her what our Hilton hospitality is all about."

The Midland Hilton is located at 117 West Wall — the corner of Wall and Loraine. For information about the hotel's facilities, please call 683-6131.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Put your spontaneity and decisiveness to work in the months ahead. Uncouple yourself from alliances that have sapped your energies. Diversification of investments brings new security. A separation that is painful at first will prove to be a blessing. A Scorpio could play an important role in your life in November. The winter months bring wider public recognition and a chance to travel abroad. You fall in love again!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do your own detective work to find the answer to a perplexing financial problem. A family member who embarks on a journey could return abruptly. Avoid an "I-told-you-so" attitude.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not be afraid to step into the limelight; you have earned it! Make your own "power play" today. Your views will be vindicated. A personal relationship gets back on track.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The emphasis today is on your ability to come through when the chips are down. Correct past mistakes and make necessary repairs. A surprise visit or phone call could lead to improved cash flow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your work routine needs an overhaul. Seek the cooperation of your co-workers instead of foisting your ideas or methods on them. Protect your reputation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Higher-ups applaud your ability to work well under pressure. A bonus or promotion is in the wind. Listen closely to a young person before passing judgment. Plan a special treat for mate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A loan could be withheld until a credit matter is cleared up. Do not panic. A member of the opposite sex could be stretching the truth. Protect your interests by getting promises in writing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Gather information from unusual sources and you will have the edge over your competitors. An influential person will be impressed. Recycle old projects to improve the bottom line. Romance is capricious.

SCORPIO (Oct. 2-Nov. 21): Despite your opponents' claims, you do have a fighting chance. Keep on top of all financial transactions; costly mistakes are possible. A legal dispute can be settled out of court. Put romance on hold.

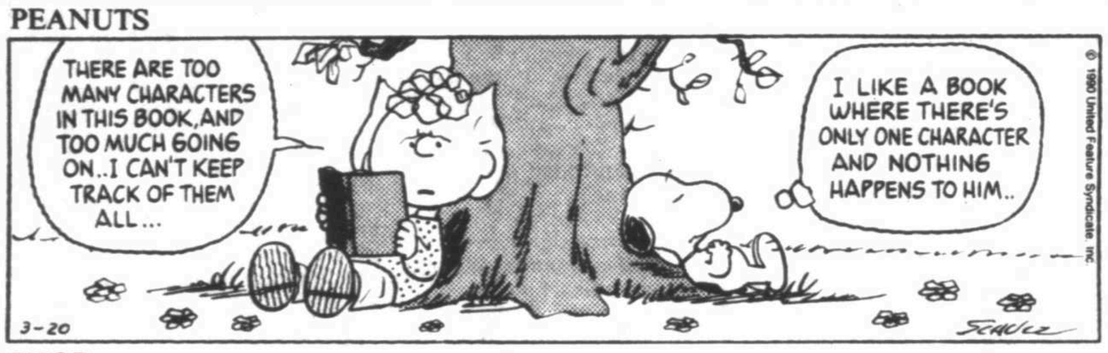

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A thorough search will help you locate a missing article. File important papers in a safe place. Membership in clubs and service organizations could increase business.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Originality counts big with "the powers that be." Take steps to make sure you get the credit you deserve. A financial matter requires your attention. Tell subordinates what you want done.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Exercise care if asked to co-sign a loan for a friend. You can aid others without obligating yourself. Books are a source of real inspiration. A relationship needs overhauling!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your personal life private by displaying a certain aloofness. An old friend many annoy you; refuse to go along with a silly scheme. Your health should be on the upswing.

American pairs did well in the Sunday Times Invitation Pairs event held at the end of January in London, finishing second and third. In the process of gaining the silver medal, Bobby Goldman of Dallas produced what is likely to be the defensive gem of the year.

We don't like jumping to two no trump with only a single stopper in the enemy suit. However, three no trump was the normal contract and indeed it was reached at the other tables. No other declarer failed to land the game.

Goldman led his top heart and declarer held up the ace until the third round. Since East had to be kept off lead, if possible, and the club suit had to be developed, declarer crossed to the king of spades and led the queen of clubs. That was covered by the king and ace and West dropped the jack!

Convinced he could score nine tricks without having to rely on the location of the ace of diamonds, declarer reentered dummmy with the ace of spades and took the "marked" finesse of the eight of clubs. Goldman retrieved the trick he apparently had sacrificed when he won with the nine and he removed declarer's last spade stopper by exiting in that suit, at the same time setting up the 13th spade in his hand.

Declarer had already lost two tricks in hearts and one in clubs. He had only eight fast tricks and needed a ninth in diamonds for his contract. But when he led a diamond West was able to rise with the ace and cash the long spade for the setting trick. Spectacular!

Winfrey finds her schedule hectic with additional TV role

CHICAGO (AP) — Oprah Winfrey says her life has become a balancing act as she tries to find time to be host of her talk show, star in her new television series and run her $20 million production studio.

Winfrey

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday mornings, she films her TV talk show. Wednesday afternoons through Friday evenings, she plays matriarch Mattie Michael of "Brewster Place," set to debut on ABC next month. On weekends, she attends to business at her new Harpo production studio in Chicago.

At night, she gets four, maybe five hours of sleep.

"I'm not trying to say it's been an easy thing," Winfrey said. "But I think that I have managed to handle this all very well because I have insisted upon having control."

NEW CANAAN, Conn. (AP) — A woman who once claimed David Letterman was a dominant figure in her life has broken into the talk-show host's home twice since she was released from prison for one of five earlier break-ins there, police said.

Margaret Ray, 37, of Crawford, Colo., was released Friday from Niantic State Prison for women, and on Sunday, police found her in Letterman's house after he called to report a broken window, police Sgt. Nick Warren said.

Police escorted her off the property and warned her not to come back, Warren said.

But early Monday, the host of NBC's "Latè Night with David Letterman" called police to report seeing Ray in the hallway of his home. Police found her near the tennis court on Letterman's property.

Ray was charged with first-degree trespassing, held overnight on $1,000 bond and taken to Norwalk Superior Court on Monday afternoon, where a psychiatric evaluation was ordered, a spokeswoman in the public defender's office said. Ray was taken back to the Niantic prison.

When Ray was released last Friday, she had served seven months of a nine-month sentence for trespassing at Letterman's home last August.

An NBC publicist, Rosemary Keenan, said Letterman had no comment on the arrest.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Filmmaker Robert Hendrickson, suing talk show host Geraldo Rivera for alleged copyright infringement, lost a bid to subpoena mass murderer Charles Manson to testify.

Hendrickson contends that Manson is the only available witness who can testify about his 1972 documentary "Manson," parts of which the filmmaker claims Rivera used without permission.

In a ruling released Monday, U.S. District Judge Ronald S.W. Lew declined to subpoena Manson, 55, who is in state prison in Corcoran, 190 miles north of Los Angeles. Lew said Hendrickson cited no authority empowering the court to issue the subpoena.

Hendrickson, 45, of Woodland Hills, filed the copyright infringement suit in May, a month after Rivera aired excerpts from "Manson" in the TV special, "Murder — Live from Death Row."

The trial is set for April 10.

Manson was convicted in 1969 of masterminding the murder of actress Sharon Tate and six others.

Wiesel

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Elie Wiesel, winner of the 1986 Nobel Peace Prize, will bring together other Nobel laureates, human rights champions and statesmen in a high-powered conference to evaluate the darker side of the spread of democracy.

Wiesel organized the conference to assess the risk of long-supressed hatreds surfacing in societies that abruptly became free. The gathering, set for Aug. 26-29, will be arranged with the Norwegian Nobel Instutute, a Wiesel spokesman said Monday.

Among 35 leaders to accept invitations so far are 1983 Peace Prize winner Lech Walesa of Poland, French President Francois Mitterrand, Czech President Vacel Havel, former U.S. President Carter and Harvard economist John Kenneth Galbraith.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The movie "When Harry Met Sally ..." and actress Julie Kavner took top honors at this year's American Comedy Awards, and veteran troupers Betty White and Art Carney received lifetime achievement trophies.

Kavner was a double winner in female supporting roles, getting awards for her role in the film "New York Stories" and the television series "The Tracey Ullman Show."

Meg Ryan and Billy Crystal each received a trophy for their starring roles in "When Harry Met Sally ...," the story of the relationship between a man and a woman over the years.

The award for funniest male in a series went to John Goodman, who plays Roseanne Barr's husband on the ABC show "Roseanne." Ullman won for funniest female lead in a series.

DUARTE, Calif. (AP) — Tight-wire acrobat Angel Wallenda takes the scariest walk of her life today when she steps into an examination room to await word on an operation that may leave her tied to an oxygen tank for the rest of her life.

Surgeons at the City of Hope National Medical Center were scheduled to decide today when to start removing the tumorous sections of her lungs. It could be the next day.

"They're kind of worried because if I wait any longer they won't be able to do it at all," said Angel, who turns 22 today.

Germans agree to end of benefits

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Cabinet today agreed to begin scrapping special benefits for East German settlers in an attempt to stop them from flooding into West Germany, a government official said.

The decision is aimed at encouraging East Germans to stay home and help rebuild their country and to relieve the burden East German resettlers are putting on West German social services.

About 500,000 East Germans have settled in West Germany in the past 14 months and the Kohl government is under increasing political pressure to stem the continuing influx.

The Cabinet move came two days after East Germany's first free election in which a conservative alliance allied to Kohl's party won. The winners are still negotiating on forming a coalition East German government that will help set the pace for unifying the two Germanys.

The Bonn government official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said that as of July 1, West Germany will no longer have a special program for helping East Germans who move west.

It was not immediately clear whether the decision means the settlers will receive absolutely no special benefits, but a closing of dozens of reception centers appeared to be in the offing.

The government official said details would be released later in the day.

As part of the current program, East Germans register for special benefits such as unemployment, and they also receive help in finding jobs and housing. They also are put up at special reception centers as they look for housing.

The exodus has seriously bled East Germany's economy and is straining West Germany's own housing and job markets.

In Sunday's elections, East Germans gave 48 percent of the vote to a conservative coalition actively backed by Kohl that promises quick unification. After the victory, Kohl appealed to East Germans to stay home. He repeated the message Monday night on West German television.

"Please stay home," the chancellor said in an interview with the ZDF network. "Unpack your bags. Go back to the factories and offices, and help in building up the country."

A new ZDF poll released hours after East Germany's election said only 13 percent of West Germans still welcome their compatriots from the East now that they have freely chosen a government.

Iranians say Lebanon key to hostages

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A majority of Iran's members of Parliament have asked that Iran distance itself from the fate of Western hostages in Lebanon, saying the Lebanese must determine the captives' fate, Tehran radio said today. In a statement issued late Monday and signed by the lawmakers, the Parliament also condemned what it called a Western media propaganda campaign to separate the hostage issue from other problems in Lebanon, the radio said.

"The fate of the Western hostages in Lebanon depends on what the Moslem people of Lebanon want — an end to the U.S. plots in Lebanon and the clarification of the fate of the Lebanese and Palestinian hostages in prisons in the West," Tehran radio quoted the statement as saying.

The pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem factions believed holding most of the 18 Western hostages in Lebanon have demanded the release of hundreds of Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners held in Israeli jails.

Israel is considered part of the West by many Middle Eastern countries.

The statement from the Majlis, or Parliament, was addressed to the Foreign Ministry. It was only the most recent evidence of an increasingly public battle in Iran over the fate of the hostages.

The debate, which began with a newspaper editorial in the Tehran Times in February saying the hostages should be released without preconditions, fueled speculation a hostage release was imminent.

Moderates led by President Hashemi Rafsanjani have said the hostage issue is moving toward a solution.

But the Parliament statement reflected the stance taken in a recent newspaper editorial by leading hard-line legislator, Ali Mohammed Mohtashemi, saying Iran would not interfere in Lebanon and encouraging the kidnappers to retain their captives.

Most of the 18 hostages in Lebanon are believed held by groups linked to Hezbollah, or Party of God, a Shiite Moslem organization heavily financed by Iran. They include eight Americans, four Britons, two West Germans, two Swiss, an Irishman and an Italian.

Tehran radio, monitored in Nicosia, said the statement was signed by 170 members.

Lithuanian says warning heralds talks with Moscow

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Lithuania's president denied Kremlin accusations that his Baltic republic plans to seize state enterprises and sell them to private owners, and called a harsh warning from Moscow a negotiating ploy.

Vytautas Landsbergis, speaking before the republic's parliament Monday, said he believed that the increasing tension between Moscow and Vilnius was part of the "difficult beginning" to talks on Lithuania's independence.

In a nationally televised broadcast late Monday, the Soviet government warned Lithuania not to erect customs posts, introduce its own currency or take over Moscow-run factories without Kremlin permission.

The announcement did not say what would happen if Lithuania ignored the warning, but Soviet troops in the past day have carried out military maneuvers in the republic that Lithuanians say are aimed at intimidation.

Landsbergis said Moscow's statements were based on mistaken information, according to television editor Eduardas Potashinskas, who monitored the session.

"It is not true that we are going to pass state-owned enterprises to private owners," Landsbergis was quoted as saying.

Lithuania's parliament voted on March 11 to secede from the Soviet Union and restore the independence it enjoyed before being forcibly annexed in 1940 along with the other Baltic states — Estonia and Latvia.

Four days later, the Soviet Parliament declared the decree invalid, but also did not specify measures Moscow might take to prevent Lithuania's succession.

"I regard the statement as a difficult beginning of negotiations, as an exchange of opinions that sometimes widely diverge and sometimes coincide," Landsbergis was quoted as saying.

In Moscow, Egidius Bickauskas, a Lithuanian legislator, said President Mikhail S. Gorbachev told him and other Lithuanian representatives about the warning when he met with them for 30 minutes late Monday.

Bickauskas and Lithuanian legislator Vaidotas Antanaitis delivered a letter from Landsbergis rejecting Gorbachev's deadline — which expired Monday — for returning to the Soviet fold.

Gorbachev has said he is willing to carry on a "respectful dialogue" with Lithuanian representatives.

The Kremlin Monday accused Lithuania of trying to "undermine its links" with the rest of the Soviet Union, which it said could have "pernicious consequences" for the national economy.

The Soviet statement ordered police, the KGB, and customs agents to resist any attempts by Lithuania to change the existing customs regime. It also directed the management of Soviet enterprises and agencies in Lithuania not to hand over authority to local bodies.

The announcement said the government was especially concerned about atomic energy plants in Lithuania, and ordered the guard over them increased.

Moscow said it sympathized with Lithuania's strivings for greater sovereignty, but this should be pursued only with "strict observance of Soviet laws and taking into consideration the mutual interests of the peoples of Lithuania and other republics."

French actress dies; Suicide suspected

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Capucine, the French movie actress whose leading roles included one with Peter Sellers in "The Pink Panther," died after falling from a window. Police said she committed suicide. She was 57.

The actress, born Germaine Lefebvre, died Saturday after plunging from her eighth-floor attic apartment and police inspector Claude Zbinden said an investigation left no doubt that she committed suicide.

The Lausanne newspaper Le Matin said she shared the apartment with three cats.

Midland College No. 2 golfer Dean Robertson.

For MC, there's no place like home

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

The Midland College golf team showed again that there's a lot to be said for playing at home.

Using their familiarity with the Green Tree Country Club layout to their advantage, the Chaparrals made up a five-stroke deficit Monday afternoon to take a seven-stroke lead going into today's final round of the Midland College Invitational.

The Chaps struggled to an 18-hole total of 294 in the morning round, but Coach Delnor Poss' team blew past morning co-leaders Grayson County and Bossier Parish (La.) after lunch. MC shot a 284 in the afternoon round to finish Monday with a team total of 578. San Jacinto held down second with a 585 going into today's play, while New Mexico Military finished Monday at 590.

Neither Grayson County nor Bossier Parish broke 300 in the afternoon after tying for the morning lead with 289's.

MC's Dean Robertson bounced back from a first-round 74 to post a 68 in the afternoon and tie NMMI's Robert Joyner for the individual lead at 142. Chaps Mark Kochan and Mark King were tied for fifth at 144 going into final round action.

Poss said the Chaps might have gained their advantage on the windy North nine, where unfamiliarity can breed a particular lack of success.

"I think the North is a more difficult course," Poss said. "It's longer, so when a player gets fatigued, he may lose concentration and get himself into trouble."

Poss also thought that the Chaps may have tried too hard in the morning round, coming off a disappointing performance at a recent tournament in Florida.

"I expected them to play well this morning, and they may have been trying too hard," he said. "But I felt like they came back this afternoon and showed some character."

In addition to Robertson's success, Midland High graduate Mike Johnson came off an 82 in the morning round to go four-under-par on his first 12 holes of the P.M. round before finishing at even-par 72.

"I hit terrible in the morning round, but my putter just got hot in the afternoon. I didn't make any long, snaky putts but I hit my irons really well and had putts from up close."

As expected, ball fans ready to forgive, forget

Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Morris Bailey leaned forward from his lawn chair to his walker, from the shade into the sun, so his eyes could take in both diamonds at once.

"Baseball," he said, breaking into a wide grin. "Real baseball is on the way."

And so it is. After 32 days, fans who have had to make do with less made plans to be on hand today when major league training camps open across Arizona and Florida.

In that regard, Bailey, 74, was ahead of most. He was assured tickets to San Francisco Giants home contests at Scottsdale Stadium because his grandson, catcher Mark Bailey, was invited to training camp after playing with the New York Mets' Triple-A Tidewater affiliate last season.

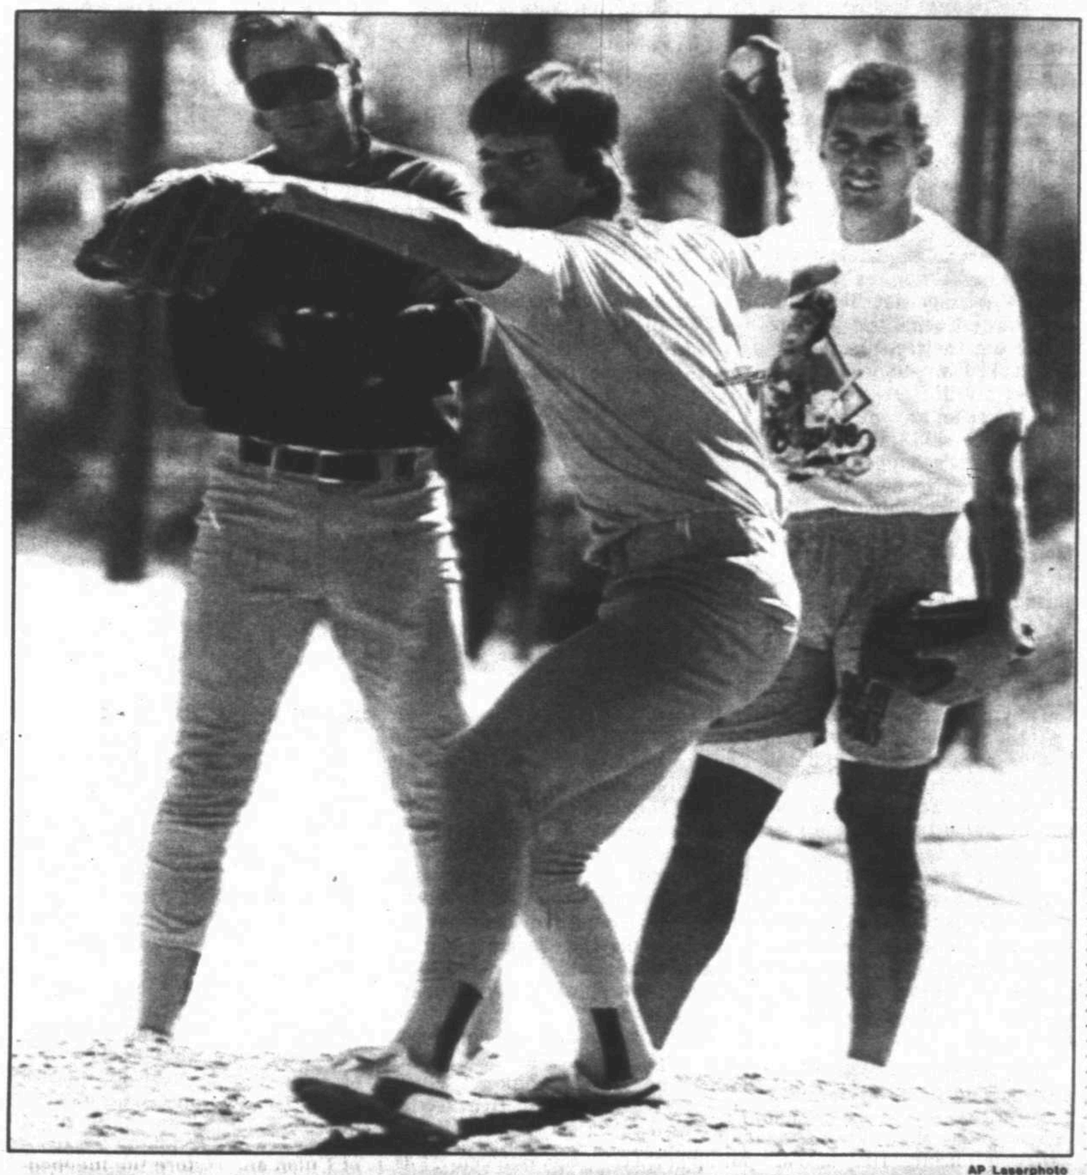

But he had other reasons as well. Mark Bailey spent the better part of three seasons on the big-league roster with the Houston Astros, and after kicking around in the New York Mets organization, he figured to get his best shot in a long time to return to the big show.

"And starting tomorrow," said Morris Bailey, a Springfield, Mo., native who retired from his job as a production supervisor in a factory 15 years ago and took to wintering in Scottsdale some nine years ago, "Mark will start drawing big-league pay."

On the other side of those same diamonds at Indian School Park, Giants manager Roger Craig crossed one lizard-skinned cowboy boot over the other, uncrossed them and cast a more dispassionate eye on the minor league prospects working out on either side of them.

AUSTIN — Now that Tom Penders has turned things around for the Texas basketball program, followers are wondering if his fancy isn't turning to another coaching job.

Penders returned to Austin on Monday after guiding the Longhorns to the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals and was immediately bombarded with questions about his future.

Penders is reportedly interested in the Florida job. The Dallas Morning News says Penders is the Gators' No. 1 choice, and that Texas will have to come up with a significant salary increase to keep him.

Texas athletic director LeDoss Dodds said he knew of Florida's interest in the 44-year-old coach and already was looking at increasing Penders' package of nearly $300,000 a year. The Morning News said sources indicate that Florida might be willing to put together a package approaching $500,000.

Penders refused to talk about the possibility of going to Florida.

"There's two rumors about coaches," he said. "One is he's going to get fired and the other he's leaving. I'd rather have them say I'm leaving instead of getting fired.

Hereupon is a sampling of some of the more memorable quotes of the 32 day lockout that caused the baseball season to be pushed back by one week, (along with some personal views thrown in for grins:)

Patterson

■ "I'm hopeful, but I can't tell you how hopeful. I'm hopeful because the Player Relation's Committee is hopeful," Texas Ranger majority owner George W. Bush, Feb. 14.

(Bush was so hopeful, as the Rangers' majority owner he played his part in letting the lockout drag on for over a month.)

■ "I just hope they settle it. I want to throw out the opening ball," convicted hotelier Leona Helmsley, Feb. 23, Day 8.)

(Better yet, let's just throw you out on opening day.)

■ "Both sides (should work) to get the matter resolved so the American people can hear that cry 'Play ball' again," President George Bush, March 14, Day 30.

(Let's see now, the Russians' main concern is more freedom and democratic reforms. In America, our top story for over a month was whining baseball players and stingy, billionaire owners. So, who has their priorities straight?)

■ "I'm beginning to wonder if I'll ever find out what 'normal' is like on this job," Baseball commissioner Faye Vincent, March 4, Day 20.

■ "I am asking the clubs to open the training camps in exchange for a pledge from the players not to strike during the 1990 season. In the meantime, the parties can continue to work toward the best of all results," Vincent again, March 8, Day 25.

■ "I do not suggest that I see an end to these discussions ..." Players' boss Donald Fehr, Feb. 17, the day before the lockout ended.

(Big Don, holding that good ol' union line til the bitter end.)

(Finally, someone makes some sense around here.)

■ "Just watch, as soon as we all get down there and get down to business, you won't hear anybody talking about the lockout or any of the arguments that were going on. It's back to baseball, just the way it's supposed to be," Ranger catcher Geno Petralli, on Monday.

(And everyone lives happily ever after. Until 1994, when the just-signed collective bargaining agreement expires once again.)

Strawberry one of first to report

PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. (AP) — Darryl Strawberry was one of the first New York Mets to show up for work after word came the lockout had ended.

He says he isn't going to cause controversy anymore.

Strawberry had the worst year of his career in 1989, and said on more than one occasion he wanted to leave the club.

"I look back at last year, and I really didn't have much motivation," Strawberry said. "I couldn't handle the pressure."

Strawberry hit .225 last season with 29 homers and 77 RBIs. Certainly not bad numbers, but not what the Mets expect from their clean-up man.

"I locked myself in a corner and let my life get out of control. Never let anyone get close to me," he said. "But I've accepted what's happened. Now I'm prepared to help the Mets win a championship."

"I'm not a controversial person anymore," Strawberry said.

At the start of spring training last year, Strawberry told the Mets he wanted to renegotiate his contract. The Mets said no, and he walked out of camp for a couple of days.

Strawberry's contract expires at the end of the 1990 season and he is eligible to become a free agent.

Mets general manager Frank Cashen said in order for Strawberry to join the $3 million club, he has to prove he deserves it.

"I'm just going to play the 1990 season and see what happens," Strawberry said. "I just want baseball to be fun again."

Strawberry isn't promising a monster year, just a good one.

"One thing I can say," Strawberry said, "is that the guys who wrote me off last year, the guys who said I would be traded, they'll be in for a big surprise. I'm not going to say anything else. But they'll be surprised."

SPRING: Sounds of cracking bats return

pions needs events to fill out his schedule about as much as Soviet chief Mikhail Gorbachev needs another republic declaring independence. But this season was different.

"I played a lot of golf for a while," Craig confided, "and let me tell you, playing every day is overrated. For a while, I was at loose ends. I felt guilty. I wanted something to do."

What he ended up doing was spending much of his time watching the Giants' minor leaguers work out. As productive as that seemed at times, Craig, like Bailey, couldn't wait for the real thing.

"Spring training is something special. You could mark time by it," he said, his voice lowering, "until now.

"You hear the bats popping, the leather popping, you smell the grass. We had that," he said, "but it didn't seem the same."

Will Hill understood. He showed up at Municipal Stadium in nearby Phoenix with 10-year-old son Marlos in tow Monday to pick up tickets. The 42-year-old postal inspector and his son have made Oakland A's contests a rite of spring for the past five years, and discouraged as both were by the lockout, they weren't about to let it go now.

"Little league kept him busy," Hill said, "but as soon as we heard this thing ended, I knew we'd wind up here today."

About a dozen others dotted the stands for the same reason. And if the sounds of lawn mowers buzzing and sprinklers hissing wasn't quite as reassuring as the thwack of ball on bat, it seemed like the next best thing.

"I'm still so mad I could burst," 71-year-old Bernie Bates said, her hand resting on husband Warren's shoulders. "But we're suckers for baseball. That's why we're here."

The Bateses have migrated to Phoenix each spring from their surburban Sacramento, Calif., home for the last 15 years. This year it cost them $225 plus electricity for a month to rent an apartment in nearby Mesa.

"And the way things work out, we're going to have to pick up one more day's rent just to get one game in," said Warren, 74, a retired car salesman. "Two days ago, we traded in season tickets at $183 and a parking pass, which set me back another $45, because we figured there wouldn't be any games."

Now, they were having trouble finding good tickets for the few games they would be around to attend.

Vandy scores big comeback

Commodores advance in NIT action

Associated Press

It took the Commodores less than 7½ minutes to erase a 16-point halftime deficit on the way to an 89-85 defeat of Tennessee Monday night in a second-round game in the National Invitation Tournament.

"It's a good thing there are two halves to a game," said Fogler, whose team trailed 47-31 at the break, then began the second half with a 29-6 run. "It was an unbelievable game. The first half we couldn't stop them, the second half our offense was unstoppable."

Elsewhere, it was Penn State 80, Maryland 78; New Orleans 65, Mississippi State 60 and Rutgers 81, Fordham 74.

Penn State will play at Rutgers and New Orleans will visit Vanderbilt in third-round games Wednesday night.

Derrick Wilcox scored 11 of his 26 points in the closing minutes for Vanderbilt, which trailed 37-20 late in the first half. Not to worry. The Commodores also rallied from a 17-point deficit to beat Louisiana Tech in the opening round.

Vanderbilt led 76-70, but Tennessee scored seven straight points to regain the lead with 2:58 left. Wilcox then took charge, hitting a jumper and a 3-pointer to give Vanderbilt an 81-77 lead. He also made six straight free throws to keep the Commodores in front.

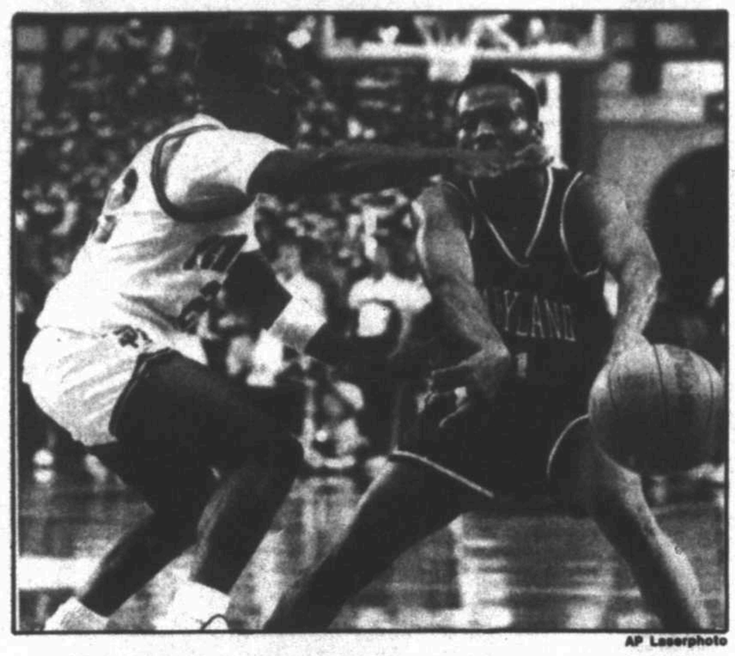

Allan Houston scored 31 points and Ian Lockhart 23 for Tennessee. Todd Milholland added 18 for Vandy.

"Our big guys were getting pushed around in the first half, and that bothered me," Fogler said. "The second half we were tremendous. We contested every shot and they started to become normal shooters."

Penn State 80, Maryland 78

The basket was actually ruled a 2-pointer but the scoreboard didn't reflect the correct 78-77 score until 16 seconds remained and Maryland didn't notice the change for another six seconds.

New Orleans 65, Mississippi St. 60

Tony Harris scored the Privateers' first eight points from the field and added nine of the final 11 from the foul line. He finished with 22 points. New Orleans led 51-44 in the second half but a 6-0 run brought Mississippi State to 54-53.

Rutgers 81, Fordham 74

Daryl Smith made a tie-breaking layup and added a free throw to cap a three-point play with 31 seconds left. The Scarlet Knights got 28 points from Keith Hughes and 23 from Earl Duncan, which were enough to offset a career-best 27-point, 22-rebound performance by Fordham's Damon Lopez. Duncan played despite a chipped bone in his ankle.

Fed-up Dickerson says he's through

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Indianapolis Colts general manager Jim Irsay says running back Eric Dickerson's statement that he's "through with football" is "a slap in the face to the organization and the fans."

"You won't see Eric back again," Dickerson said in an interview broadcast Monday by Indianapolis television station WFYI. "I'm through with football. They (the Colts) know it. I'm finished," the seven-year NFL veteran said.

"Before we made the trade with the Rams to obtain Eric, he gave us his assurance he would play out his contract. We are tremendously disappointed by his actions," Irsay said.

UT: Coach shows interest in Gator job

coach. I've got a five-year contract and I'd love to retire here, but these rumors are going to go on."

Penders had been scheduled to travel to Gainvsville, Fla., on Monday to discuss the job with Florida athletic director Bill Arnsparger, who had visited with Penders during the Southwest Conference tournament March 9-11 in Dallas, the Morning News reported. But the newspaper said the trip was canceled when Texas upset Purdue 73-72 in the second round of the Midwest Regional on Sunday.

The Longhorns (23-8) meet Xavier of Ohio (28-4) Thursday night at Reunion Arena.

Dodds said he didn't know if Penders would officially interview with Florida, but said that Texas was working to increase Penders' package. Penders is in the first year of a five-year contract, which Dodds indicated also could be rewritten.

"He has had a great year," Dodds said, "and I was going to do it anyway."

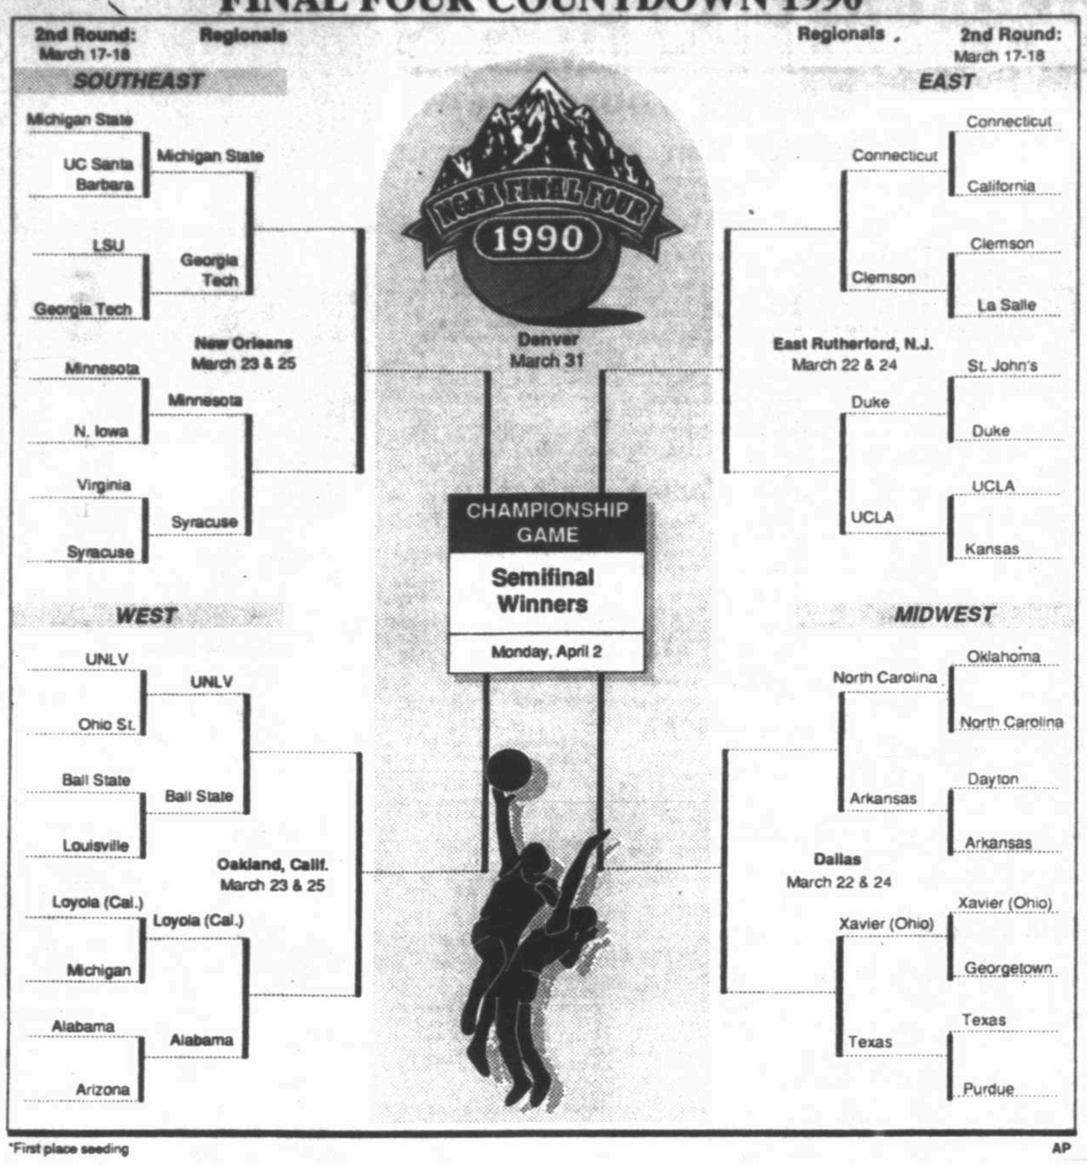

Under Penders, Texas is 48-17 and has gone to the NCAA tournament two consecutive seasons for the first time.

Florida has gone through two coaches in six months. Norm Sloan was forced out amid an NCAA investigation into his program, and interim coach Don DeVoe refused to submit his name as a candidate for the fulltime job.

Penders came to Texas after leading Rhode Island to a 28-7 record in 1987-88 and a surprising appearance in the NCAA round of 16. He is 318-236 in 19 years of coaching.

"I think he is happy here," Dodds said. "We are going to do what we need to to keep Tom Penders."

Xavier gets dirty fingernails to win

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Xavier's climb to basketball respectability can be traced to Coach Pete Gillen's blue-collar work ethic.

"You can do anything you want to do in life if you work at it," is Gillen's message.

A walk-on athlete at Fairfield University in Connecticut, Gillen was grateful to get a scholarship his last two years to take some of the burden off his father, who worked seven days a week to put three children through college.

After knocking off Kansas State and Georgetown in the Midwest Regional at Indianapolis, No. 25 Xavier (28-4) is going to Dallas to play Texas (23-8) on Thursday. It is the first time Xavier has made it to the round of 16, although Gillen has taken Xavier to the NCAA tournament each of his five years at the school.

"If you want to be a great program, you can do it, if you work your brains out," Gillen said Monday. "You've got to be lucky, yes; you have to have talent, yes ...

"College basketball is players; you have to have the players, and that's recruiting. It's chemistry, too. If you have chemistry, you have a chance to be successful."

Gillen was an assistant at Notre Dame and Villanova, and credits Digger Phelps and Rollie Massimino with teaching him how to be a coach.

"They helped me with the X's and O's," Gillen said. "I learned a lot of basketball from those people, but I also learned what you can do, that you can make it if you work at it."

Xavier is a Jesuit school with an enrollment of 3,900 undergraduates, one of many small, unknown college basketball programs waiting to be discovered in prime time.

It has twin towers — forward Tyrone Hill and center Derek Strong each are 6-foot-10 — and is second in the nation in rebounding margin. The Musketeers average 84 points a game, 12 more than opponents.

But Xavier hasn't gotten the all-important national television exposure and isn't well-known outside the Midwest. This year, with Hill and Strong inside and the 3-point shooting of Jamal Walker and Michael Davenport, Xavier is making its move.

"We have all the ingredients here to be a successful program. And I hope now people know we're in Cincinnati, or at least Ohio."

Former Red Raider arrested for hiring practices

HOUSTON (AP) — A former professional football player has been sentenced to 60 days in jail in a case that originated as one of the first prosecutions involving the conscious hiring of illegal aliens.

U.S. District Judge Kenneth Hoyt Monday sentenced Anthony L. Hutchison to 60 days in jail for his convictions on bribery, conspiracy with intent to commit bribery, two counts of presenting counterfeit government documents and one count of harboring illegal aliens.

CHAPS: Golfers overcome early deficit for lead

(From 1C)

For Robertson, it was just another afternoon on a course that he doesn't consider that tough to begin with.

"I don't normally shoot over par on this course," the young Scotsman said. "I was playing my normal round (in the afternoon).

"I didn't have any three-putts and I didn't knock it in the water."

King, the reigning Scottish junior champion, hit consistently farther than most of his competitors, but putting woes cost him in the afternoon after his first-round 71 tied him for the lunchtime lead.

"My putting was terrible," King said. "On the north side, I hit good iron shots but I was lipping the hole all day."

Oil futures gain some ground

April futures for West Texas Intermediate gained 10 cents in midmorning trading to reach $19.70 while posted price paid for a barrel of oil remains at $19.00.

Oil futures prices ended mixed Monday in fairly active trading, as crude oil and gasoline continued the downward trend started last week.

Crude oil pierced the $20 mark for the first time in more than three months as sellers went on a binge early in the session, analysts said. However, prices recovered from their lows shortly after midday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the April contract for West Texas Intermediate, the key grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 47 cents to close at $19.60 a 42-gallon barrel after sinking to $19.44 earlier in the session.

Dow Jones jumps 14.41 points

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. shares rebounded Monday in an impressive afternoon rally, shrugging off a steep decline in the Tokyo stock market to extend their recent advance.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials finished 14.41 points higher at 2,755.63, after hovering in negative territory most of the day. The blue-chip barometer had been down as much as 28 points earlier in the trading session.

Analysts said Wall Street was buoyed by positive market sentiment and continued strength in the dollar.

The dollar continued to climb against the Japanese yen, as dealers grew impatient waiting for the Tokyo government to raise the country's key interest rates, a move which has been expected for weeks. A Japanese news report late in U.S. trading said rate increases could be made Tuesday.

The U.S. currency was quoted late in New York at 153.05 yen.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

MEGA aquires Colony Energy Corp. stock

MEGA Natural Gas has aquired the stock of Colony Energy Corp., Midland, Texas from AlaTenn Resources, Inc., Florence, Alabama.

According to James R. Hays, Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of MEGA, "The purchase of Colony provides MEGA with additional natural gas gathering assets as well as substantial inroads into strategically important pipelines and markets. The combined assets makes MEGA one of the largest privately-held gathers and marketers of natural gas in the U.S. We are now purchasing and reselling over 500,000 MMBtu per day."

MEGA employs over 100 people in Oklahoma and Texas and expects annual revenues of approximately $300,000,000 in 1990. The purchase price was approximately $6,400,000 cash.

UAL Corp. announces $3.8 billion buyout

CHICAGO (AP) — UAL Corp.'s unions and biggest shareholder announced a $3.8 billion buyout offer for the airline company, a mostly cash deal worth about 40 percent less than a debt-financed effort that collapsed five months ago.

UAL Chairman Stephen Wolf — who helped lead last year's ill-fated buyout deal — issued a statement Monday saying the board would consider the offer, which shattered a lull in the maneuvering for the parent of United Airlines.

The outcome could help determine the shape of takeovers in the tight-money atmosphere that has prevailed since the collapse of the earlier $6.8 billion deal, which contributed to a plunge in the stock market.

Inflation up moderate 0.5 percent

By Dave Skidmore

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest one-month drop in fuel oil prices in 55 years offset a record gain in clothing costs and increases elsewhere, holding consumer inflation in February to a moderate 0.5 percent, the government said today.

The gain in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index followed a huge 1.1 percent rise in January.

A turn-of-the-year cold snap sent energy and food costs soaring in January. With warmer-than-usual temperatures in February, fuel oil prices recovered. However, food prices are taking longer to recover.

Taken together, the first two months of the year represent an annual inflation rate of 9.9 percent. However, most analysts expect a succession of milder reports this year and look toward a 1990 rate just under last year's 4.6 percent.

Energy prices overall were down 0.7 percent following a 5.1 percent gain in January.

The department said fuel oil, which advanced 26.3 percent in January, fell back 18.7 percent in February, a record since 1935 when the government first began tracking the price.

Gasoline rose 0.8 percent after a 7.7 percent rise. Natural gas and electricity rose 0.6 percent after a 0.3 percent increase.

Food costs rose 0.5 percent in February after a large 1.8 percent rise in January.

Dairy products rose 0.9 percent. So did fruit and vegetables, following a 10.2 percent rise in January after a freeze ruined crops from Texas to Florida.

Tomatoes jumped 30.7 percent in February. For the two months combined, they were up 129.4 percent.

There were declines for sugar and sweets and fats and oils.

Excluding the volatile food and energy categories, prices rose 0.5 percent. This "core" number is generally considered a better indication of underlying inflation pressures.

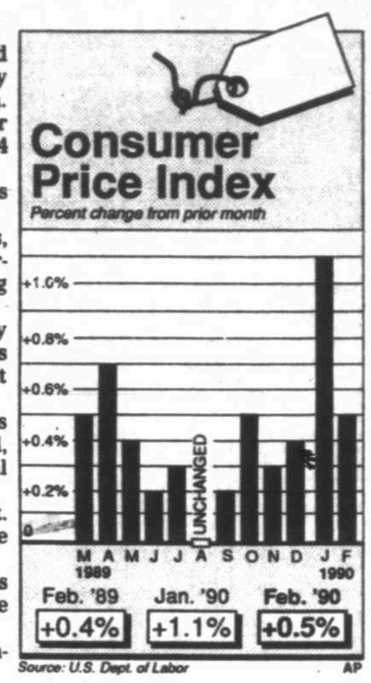

However, it was driven higher by an unusually high 3.3 percent rise in clothing and upkeep prices on a seasonally adjusted basis. It was the sharpest rise since 1947.

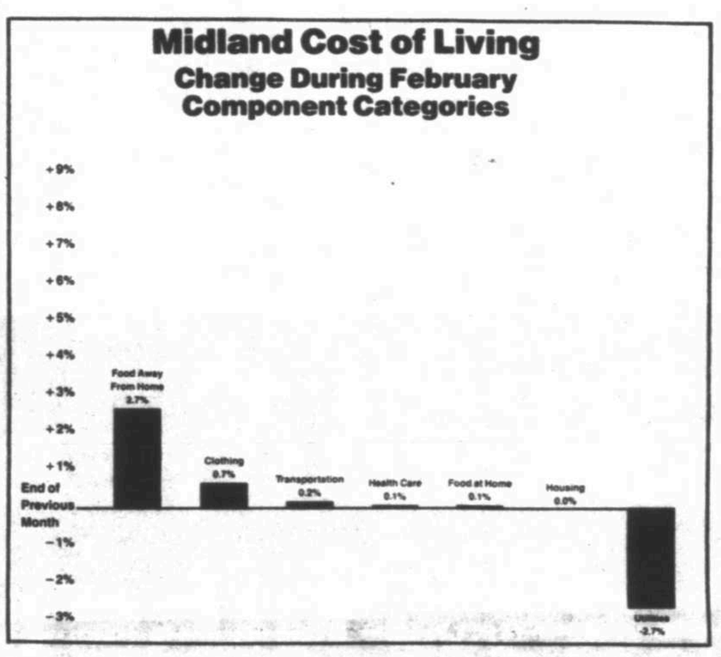

A department analyst said spring fashion lines were introduced earlier in the year than normal, throwing off the department's seasonal statistical adjustments.

Infant's and toddler's clothing rose 10.3 percent. Women's and girls' clothing was up 5 percent, while men's and boys' clothes rose 1.2 percent.

There was a 0.2 percent drop in new car prices as dealers tried a new round of incentives to stimulate lagging sales.

Midland cost of living up slight 0.1 percent

Staff Report

Living in Midland cost a little more in February, according to figures released today by ClayDesta National Bank.

The survey indicates Midland's cost of living rose 0.1 percent in February following a decline in January. Annualized, the increase would equal 0.9 percent.The rise was due to increases in costs for food away from home, clothing, health care, transportation and food at home, which offset a decrease in utility charges.

The only category to show a decrease last month was utilities, which fell 2.7 percent as higher electric and gas bills were offset by a 9.3 percent drop in water rates. Electric bills rose 1.5 percent and gas bills were up 0.5 percent.

Food away from home showed the sharpest increase in February, rising 2.7 percent due to higher prices for main dishes prepared with chicken and fish. Still, the cost of eating out in Midland has fallen 8.9 percent in the past year.

After falling in January, clothing prices rose 0.7 percent. For the second month, lower price tags for children's clothing were offset by higher costs for men's wear and women's apparel.

Chamber 'takes field' on membership drive

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Just as Major League ballplayers hit the field for spring training, members of the Midland Chamber of Commerce are taking to the field for their annual membership drive.

A breakfast at the Midland Hilton, sponsored by the Texas Institute of Sports Medicine, introduced members of the 22 teams to the rules of the drive, which is themed "Homerun 90."

Joanne Langston, Chamber chairman, said this year's goal is $55,000, which translates into between 250 and 300 new members. The chamber currently has 1,468 members. Last year's membership drive netted the chamber $48,600.

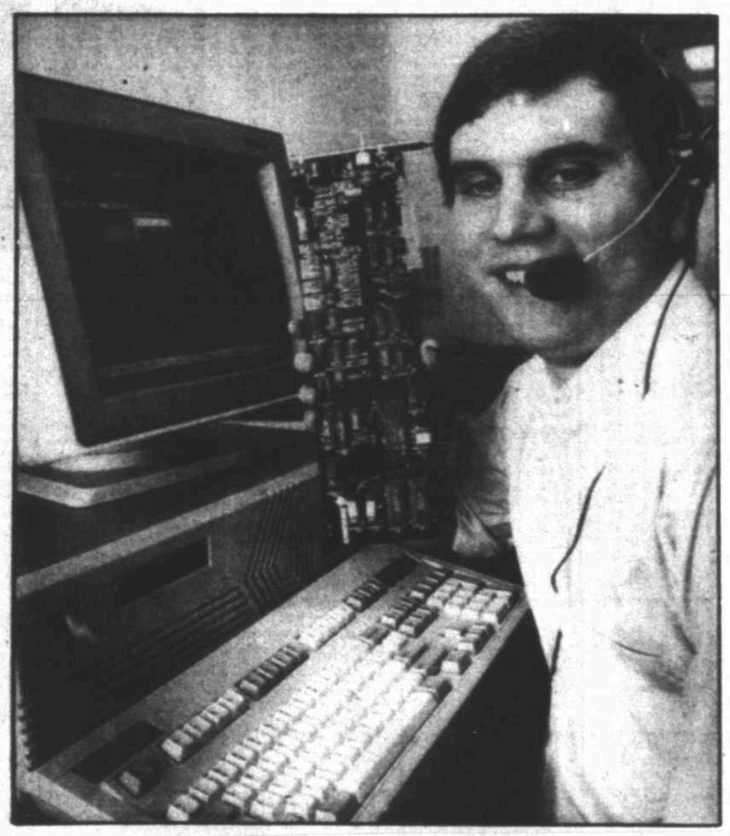

Each team consists of seven members — five salespersons and two "runners" who deliver membership packets and pick up the new member's dues.

The purpose of the membership drive is to increase membership and funds to help the chamber operate. The organization concentrates on three areas: Economic development, community development and membership development.

Besides selling memberships, "The idea is to have fun, meet new people and make business contacts," according to Mark Kimball of Executone, chairman of the sales drive.

Memberships, or annual investment amounts, are based on a company's size and type of business and range from $195 for a company with 1-5 employees to $1,085 for companies with 600 employees or more.

New membership dues are to be turned in by noon March 29. The drive concludes that evening with a Victory Celebration after-hours mixer at the Yucca Theater. The mixer is free to drive participants and new members.

TI, Japanese company announce joint venture

By David E. Sanger
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — In the latest move in a trend toward American-Japanese alliances in microelectronics, the most successful U.S. semiconductor maker in Japan, Texas Instruments Inc., said Monday that it would form a joint venture with Kobe Steel Ltd.

The companies said they would build a $350 million fabrication plant in Japan and begin making advanced logic chips for the Japanese market in 1992.

The deal gives Texas Instruments a badly needed way to expand its capacity in Japan, and it gives Kobe Steel an entry into the production of logic chips and other complex electronic devices.

Kobe will be a captive supplier to Texas Instruments, for all the chips produced by the joint venture will be sold to the American company.

None will be marketed through other suppliers or under Kobe's name.

The arrangement appeared to underscore a reality for American chip makers seeking access to the Japanese market: finding a Japanese partner may be the the only way to assure success in Japan, and it appears to be the only way U.S. companies can afford the huge cost of building chip-fabrication operations.

The companie declined to disclose financial details, although they said Kobe Steel would own a majority of the venture and would pay a majority of construction costs.

Texas Instruments, which already makes memory chips and other semiconductors in four separate plants in Japan, will contribute technology and make some financial contribution to the venture.

Company executives said they had made arrangments to "protect American technology."

Voice-activated typewriter unveiled

By Dana Kennedy

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — A new, voice-activated "typewriter" is a science-fiction dream-turned-reality that promises to boost productivity and open a world of opportunity for the handicapped.

The DragonDictate Voice-Typewriter, which was being formally unveiled today by Dragon Systems Inc., is billed as the first of its kind in the world.

"My only regret is that your product didn't come out 20 years ago," Frank Whitney, a quadriplegic Maryland computer scientist, told the company in a letter written on the system. Whitney has used the system for the past year.

The "typewriter," which consists of software and a speech-recognition circuit board for personal computers, allows users to create memos, manuscripts and other documents by speaking instead of typing. Users speak into a microphone and see text appear on a video screen at the rate of 35 words a minute.

The $9,000 system can recognize 30,000 words and adapt itself to individual speakers. Until now, voice-activated systems had not been able to recognize more than 5,000 words.

The commands are simple. To turn off the system, one says, "Voice Console: Go to Sleep." To turn it on, the command is "Voice Console: Wake Up."

Stock Market Gains

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were higher at midday today, taking in stride negative economic reports and another tumble in the Tokyo stock market.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was up 8.56 points at 2,764.19 at noon EST. Advancing issues slightly edged out declines on the New York Stock Exchange, with 677 issues up, 655 down and 503 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 85.28 million shares, up from 60.57 million traded by the same time on Monday.

Analysts said the market seemed to be shrugging off news that consumer inflation was 0.5 percent in February and the U.S. trade deficit worsened dramatically in January, climbing to $9.3 billion.

Wall Street also took in stride a sharp dive again today in the Tokyo stock market, as neither currency market intervention nor an interest rate boost by the central bank stopped the weakening of the Japanese yen.

The 225-issue Nikkei Stock Average, which plunged 1,353.20 points, or 4.15 percent, on Monday in its third-largest single-day fall, tumbled another 456.05 points, or 1.48 percent, today.

The Dow Jones average finished 14.41 points higher Monday at 2,755.63, its highest close since it stood at 2,760.67 on Jan. 11.

Today, the NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was up 0.19 at 188.85.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index had risen 0.15 to 364.27.

Among actively traded issues on the NYSE, IBM was up ⅛ at 109⅛, General Motors had risen ⅜ to 47⅞, Digital Equipment had jumped 3⅜ to 84½ and AT&T had gained ⅛ at 42½.

Amax was down ⅛ at 27 and Upjohn had declined ⅜ to 38⅝.

MIDLAND: Transportation rises modest 0.2 percent

(From 5C)

Transportation costs inched 0.2 percent higher as lower prices for gasoline — which had risen the previous two months — were offset by higher costs for automobile maintenance.

A second month of higher prices for non-prescription medicine helped fuel a 0.1 percent rise in health care costs.

Decreases in prices for meat and shelf items were offset by higher prices for alcoholic beverages and produce as food at home costs rose 0.1 percent, a second consecutive increase.

Housing costs were stable in February after rising the two previous months. This category has seen a 2 percent decrease over the last year.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Rule of 72' still rules

BY Bill Doyle

Q. I have been reading about the "Rule of 72" for many years. By dividing 72 by the interest rate your money is earning, that rule reputedly reveals how soon your money will double. That is inaccurate and too conservative.

I have enclosed an analysis showing that, with continuous compounding, the accurate name is the Rule of 69.4. Why did the Rule of 72 become so famous and persist so long?

Doyle

A. Because it is very simple and easy to use. Also, it is a rough rule of thumb based on interest compounded annually.

So that all readers know what we are talking about, here's an example. Let's say you have $100 accumulating interest at 8 percent, compounded annually. According to the Rule of 72, you should have $200 in nine years, because 72 divided by eight equals nine. Actually, your $100 would become $199.89 after nine years. That's mighty close to doubling — but not quite.

Anyone with a hand calculator, or even a sharp pencil, can prove this. Just multiply $100 by 108 percent, or 1.08, nine times. In normal use, however, the Rule of 72 can be worked out in your head. If you are getting 12 percent, it takes no great brain to know your money will double in about six years. That's the Rule of 72's big attraction. It's a snap to use. No one ever claimed it to be absolutely accurate.

The typewritten sheet of figures and analysis you sent along are precise and leave no room for doubt. Divide 69.4 by a continuous compound interest rate and the answer is the number of years and parts of years it takes for your money to double.

Despite its accuracy, your method is complicated. Dividing 69.4 by a continuously compounded rate of interest is not something most folks can do in their heads. Your Rule of 69.4 will never replace the Rule of 72.

Q. My husband is 72. I am 50. We own our home — no mortgage. He receives $723 a month from Social Security. We have $265,000 in 8.8 percent certificates of deposit maturing in July. My husband feels the CD investment in too conservative. He worries about my future, since I am younger than he. Where do you think our money should be invested?

A. Right where it is — or an equally safe place. By moving away from conservative investments, you would take on risk. It's clear you shouldn't do that, for the simple reason you cannot afford to lose any of your money.

CDs or U.S. Treasury securities are the type of rock-solid safe, interest-paying investments suited for people such as you. Just be certain not to exceed the federal deposit insurance limit of $100,000 per depositor per institution at any one bank or savings and loan association.

Your husband's concern about your financial future is understandable and commendable. However, a quick calculation shows your family annual income to be $31,996, with $8,676 from your husband's Social Security benefits and $23,320 from CD interest. That's higher income than most retired families receive.

Q. I notice that nearly every time the German mark, the Japanese yen and the Swiss franc go up, the British pound goes down and when the mark, yen and Swiss franc go down, the British pound goes up.

I am at a loss to understand this. Can you explain it?

A. If you follow newspaper foreign exchange tables, you will learn that "nearly every time" is too strong a statement. It happens frequently, but not nearly every time. And remember that foreign exchange quotations in this country measure the U.S. dollar against the currencies of other nations.

The West German mark, Japanese yen and Swiss franc are strong currencies of financially sound countries. The British pound no longer rates that accolade. When strong currencies go up, weak currencies often go down.

TYPEWRITER: Handicapped should benefit

(From 5C)

"The technology can address all segments of the workplace," says Janet Baker, who founded the company with her husband, James, in 1982 after stints in speech-recognition product development at IBM Corp. and Exxon Corp.

The system is designed for professionals who don't type well or who want to write reports and letters that otherwise would be dictated to a secretary, then transcribed.

"The only people who are really good typists are journalists, computer programmers and secretaries," said Baker. "Doctors, lawyers and a lot of other people often just hunt and peck or they rely on handing notes to someone to type up."

DragonDictate is also seen as a great boon to the disabled. Whitney and others with disabilities have used the system in test marketing around the country for the past year.

Is designers' bizarre haute couture meant to be worn?

By SUZY PATTERSON

PARIS (AP) — When designers parade bare-breasted togas or molded breastplates, clown suits or dresses shot full of holes like Swiss cheese, what is the point? Are these meant to be worn, or is this just hype?

The answer is not always obvious. Designers do show off to attract attention, but sometimes their "jokes" sell well and turn into real fashion.

A recent case in point is Saint Laurent's famous draped crepe Greek dress, which the model in his show wore with one shoulder pulled off to bare the breast.

"But that was just a wink for the audience," says house spokesman Clara Saint. "We certainly didn't expect anybody to go out on the street half naked. The dress is selling — but the way it was meant to be worn, firmly and modestly hiding the bosom."

Back in 1972, Saint Laurent's haute couture collection revived the 1940s look, featuring shoulder pads, platform-soled shoes and other oddities, evoking a cry of "ugly" from the Herald-Tribune's influential Eugenia Sheppard.

But what appeared on the streets a few months later? Platform soles, shorter skirts, even shoulder pads.

The pads really took off when fashion cowboy Claude Montana turned them into gridiron shapes worthy of Joe Montana. Not everyone went for the incredible hulk shape, but many agree even now that a bit of padding in the shoulders helps distract from too much natural padding on a woman's hips.

PARIS'S MOST notable jokester is Jean-Paul Gaultier, whose outrageous styles and zany shows keep the fashion press buzzing.

His sex-centricities have included Amazon breastplates, corsets and garter belts for party wear, concierges' aprons and knit skirts for men. A lot of this stuff has sold.

"I design clothes with an eye to what people want," Gaultier says. "If you see lacy garter belts, that's because I think that people want a sign of a return to sexier styles in general."

He explains that his exaggerations are to make a point. "What looks outlandish is kind of a resume of my whole collection," he says. "And I do design for people in the street. There are a lot of fat people out there, and I dress them up in my collections, too."

"I think designers are indeed making a statement with some of those way-out styles," says Carol Mongo, a professor at Parsons School of Design, Paris branch.

"For example, when they show transparent blouses without underwear, they don't necessarily advocate see-through nudity for everybody. The idea is to look for more feminine styles, light fabrics, a certain transparent effect."

She notes that "those draped Esther Williams bathing-suit dresses at Ungaro a couple of seasons ago were just pointing the way to shorter skirts."

And about Gaultier's metal-tipped clodhoppers, she observes: "Those funky objects resembling S-and-M jobs finally filtered right down to the marketplace in cheaper copies."

THE JAPANESE ARE notable for showing inscrutable fashions that excite the jaded fashion crowd but confound women on Main Street.

"But Rei meant that look to be taken seriously," says a former executive with the company who declined to be named. "This wasn't gimmickry. If she put holes in the clothes, it was part of her concept."

Christian Lacroix became a star comic creator when he pushed bustles, flounces and even raccoon tails onto runways at Patou in 1985. But his spirited bustle and ruffle looks brought fun back into fashion, and he was copied ad nauseam.

"I don't try to create shock waves just for effect," says Lacroix. "I'm simply trying to show clothes more as I'd like to see them on the street — which looks so sad nowadays compared with more daring styles paraded in past decades or centuries."

He denies trying to dazzle the fickle press, "who are totally blase, in any case."

But he adds that "we do feel we have to fill up a runway with the most spectacular clothes to attract a huge audience. That's why I've chosen to hold my ready-to-wear shows in my salon — to create a more cozy, couture ambience."

HE SAYS THAT what appears in magazines is often a distortion of what the clothes look like in real life. "You see extreme images, fantasies created by fashion editors and photographers, symbols of the era that are more cerebral inventions than reality."

It's Gaultier, however, who usually takes the cake for oddity. Even fashion guru John Fairchild, the headmaster of Women's Wear Daily and "W," who has seen it all, can be shocked at Gaultier's gall.

In his book, "Chic Savages," he wrote: "When I saw his models wearing bralike tops and garter belts, I felt distaste, for to me this was fashion bordering on the grotesque — like a show in some sleazy Hamburg bar."

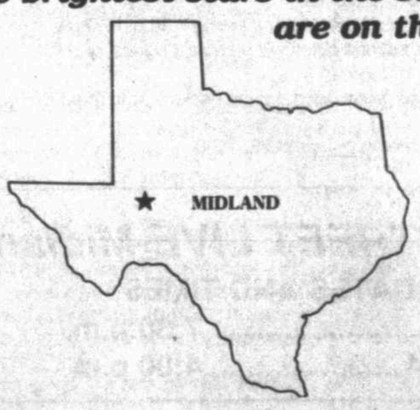

However, Fairchild modestly admitted, like many bemused fashion-watchers, "But then I'm a square, or so I'm constantly being told."

DEAR ABBY

On-the-job drinker needs on-the-job help

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A reader signed "Keeping Mum" hoped that her co-worker who was drinking on the job would get help — not fired. But management and colleagues wanted "Mum" to provide evidence against the drinker. You wisely counseled her to offer friendship — a powerful tool in breaking through the isolation in which many alcoholics find themselves — followed by a friendly confrontation and the suggestion that the co-worker attend a meeting of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Van Buren

Abby, "Mum" may also want to urge management to engage in an employee assistance program (EAP). EAP counselors are skilled at intervening and arranging appropriate help for workers who drink on the job. A call to the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence's toll-free 1-800-NCA-CALL will provide a local address or referral resource to find an EAP in the community.

Others who want to know how to deal with another's alcohol problems should read the excellent brochure, "What Can You Do About Someone Else's Drinking?" To obtain it, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope (25 cents postage) to: NCADD, 12 W. 21st St., New York, N.Y. 10010. Include a note saying, "I'd like the free booklet Abby advertised about 'Someone Else's Drinking.'"

Thanks for helping us help so many others. — GEORGE MARCELLE, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, NCADD-ORANGE COUNTY, CALIF.

DEAR GEORGE: Thank you for advising me and my readers about NCADD. Be prepared for an avalanche of requests for your pamphlet.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 70-year-old widow who has little occasion to dress up. I spend most of my time in slacks or skirts and sweaters. I indulge my love of silks and satins by wearing lovely nightgowns.

When I die, I would like to be buried in one of my beautiful nightgowns — high neck, long-sleeved. My children do not approve of this. Do you think it would be inappropriate? — MRS. W.W. IN N.Y.

DEAR MRS. W.W.: I see nothing inappropriate about your wish to be laid to rest in a beautiful silk or satin nightgown.

According to a spokesperson from Forest Lawn Cemetery in Los Angeles, there is nothing unusual or inappropriate about that request.

Morticians are expert at preparing the deceased for viewing, taking special care to avoid revealing anything that might be upsetting to the family.

DEAR ABBY: I can't tell you how happy I was to see that letter from "Home Alone a Lot." My husband takes many business trips, and I am constantly asked, "Why don't you go with him?" I get so sick of that question!

First of all, my husband travels for business reasons, and all his time is taken up calling on customers. I am not about to sit in my hotel room alone in a strange city. Often he flies into a city and checks into a motel near the airport and doesn't get near the heart of the downtown shopping area — or anywhere near the shopping malls.

Besides, while he's away on business trips, I have my own projects — my garden that needs tending, looking after our pets, and I also baby-sit our little grandchild. If I were to travel with my husband, I'd be more lonely with him on trips than I am at home.

Another detail: His company pays all his travel expenses, but if I were a tagalong wife, he'd have to pay for my travel out of his own pocket.

So, even though I, too, am "home alone a lot," I am neither lonely nor bored. There's plenty to do. — CONTENT AND BUSY

'Sock-it-to-me' lady takes another turn

By Erma Bombeck

For as long as there have been washers and dryers, women have been plagued by the Bermuda Sock Triangle. For every pair of socks put into the laundry, only one is returned.

Bombeck

In the '60s, I got a grant from the Mental Health Association to find out where all these socks were going. I talked with mothers who put casts on their children's legs, bought black stockings for everyone in the house — and to one woman who told her husband she was conducting a test to see if his "green" leg was less tired than his "navy" one at the end of the day.

We bounced around a lot of theories. Some thought socks were victims of a great cosmic force that demanded one be sacrificed like a virgin maiden. Others thought lost socks were reincarnated and appeared in your dryer as bras and panties that you had never seen before. The defection theory was suggested for "socks who wanted to get out of the pressure of living in Boston."

They were just speculations. The only person who had a reasonable solution was a man who bought two dozen pairs of new socks each year, tore them apart, and threw out one sock from each pair to save his wife the trouble of losing them.

Me? I just caved in and told my kids the other sock went to live with Jesus. They seemed to accept that.

The other day, I received a package from a woman in Plymouth, Md. "I know you have given up on the missing socks," she wrote, "but I just thought you'd be interested to know where one of ours went — one that had been missing a month or two.

"On Christmas Eve, I was preparing clam chowder in my Crockpot for company dinner. There was a strange odor in my kitchen all afternoon — not at all Christmasy, like evergreen or bayberry candles, but rather putrid. I knew I wasn't the world's best cook, but I wasn't that bad either.

"When it was time to serve dinner, we found a sock half-melted between the pot and the crockery. I thought of you that evening and wanted you to have it."

A charred-black, brittle piece of fabric fell out of the package. I didn't want to look at it. I promised myself 15 years ago that if I didn't stop writing about missing socks, I would end up on the pages of the National Enquirer next to a spaceship that gave birth. But I couldn't resist. I held the burnt sock up to a light and — here's the scary part — I have the mate to it.

'Store wars' challenges traditional retailers

By MARYBETH NIBLEY

NEW YORK (AP) — At the trendy Limited apparel stores around the country, winter-weary shoppers have turned to polka dots and vivid floral patterns in sprucing up spring wardrobes.

Other retailers report favorable responses to the warm weather fashions that started rolling out in late January. Racks and shelves are stocked with ample merchandise in the latest colors and styles.

Even most of the department store chains operating under bankruptcy court supervision — as is Bloomingdale's, Bon Marche, Lazarus and others — have adequate selections.

"No consumer will have to go to Church on Easter Sunday without a new dress or new suit," said Alan Millstein, publisher of a monthly newsletter for the fashion and retail industries. "There's no shortage of apparel around."

But traditional department stores face some of the toughest challenges yet in a continuing battle to maintain and build market share.

Specialty retailers boasting deep assortments of apparel have pulled once die-hard department store patrons and now are making an aggressive play for fashion-conscious adolescents, hoping hip youngsters will become devoted customers of the future.

Small shops are winning over increasing numbers of affluent consumers. Fed up with the lackadaisical service at big stores, they prefer the pampered attention boutiques offer.

OFF-PRICE OUTLETS selling national brands at discount, such as Marshalls, also have made lasting inroads into the department store customer base.

Mass merchandisers, which have beefed up inventories to supplement their house brands with widely known labels, are going after disillusioned department store shoppers.

"The department store isn't the primary channel of distribution for many consumers anymore," consultant Thomas Rauh said.

Rauh, director of retail consulting for the accounting firm Ernst & Young, said department stores formerly held a position of authority with the shopping public, dictating fashion trends and buying patterns. "In many cases, they have lost that authority position."

Some retailers are aiming to wield more power in the department store industry.

Thanks to a repositioning started a few years ago, J.C. Penney Co. Inc. has begun to attract people who previously wouldn't have thought about shopping at a Penney's store. The emphasis now is on apparel; gone are the paints, appliances and other "hard" goods that in the past might have distracted a career woman shopping for a business suit.

Over the past decade as specialty stores, particularly The Limited, increased their marketplace clout, department stores pared down their offerings. Washers, dryers and furniture no longer are standard fare at department stores.

"A lot of them are getting out of the business of trying to be all things to all people," said Newton Godnick, chairman of the fashion buying and merchandising department at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York.

WALTER LOEB, a New York-based retail consultant, foresees the process possibly accelerating. He said department stores may opt for greater depth and do away with breadth. More sizes and colors might be carried in a particular dress style but fewer styles might be carried overall.

Price competition also is rampant as department stores cater to shoppers now accustomed to the bargains at off-price chains.

Despite the challenges, department stores aren't dinosaurs. Godnick of the Fashion Institute of Technology said he thinks of them as elephants moving slowing as they change their approach in an effort to keep old customers and attract new ones.

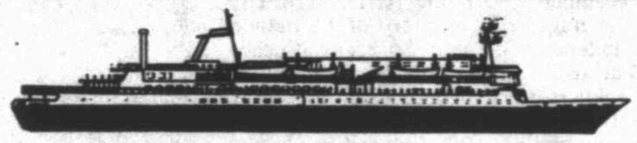

"My impression is that the department stores will weather the storm," he said. "But there is no question that they're having some problems."

Namibians count down hours to independence

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — Foreign leaders and diplomats streamed into Windhoek today, transforming the sleepy city into a mini-United Nations as Namibia counted down the final hours before independence.

Seventy-five years of South African rule was to end with a speech by South African President F.W. de Klerk before the South African flag was lowered for the last time and replaced by the red, green and blue banner of a new nation.

U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar was to swear in former resistance leader Sam Nujoma as Namibia's first president, marking the midnight transition of Africa's last colony into its youngest state.

"This is a great time. It means we have freedom. We are going to celebrate all night," said Nicholas van Wyk, 21, a hotel worker.

Nujoma's South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) had waged a 23-year war to oust the South Africans, who captured the former German colony on Africa's south-west coast during World War I.

In December 1989, South Africa agreed to grant the huge, arid territory of 1.3 million people independence under a regional peace plan that also calls for Cuba to withdraw its 50,000 soldiers from neighboring Angola by mid-1991.

In November, SWAPO captured 57 percent of the vote in free elections.

Representatives of dozens of nations attending today's celebrations were also using the occasion for some behind-the-scenes consultations, with the United States, Soviet Union and others holding an elaborate series of meetings.

Among the foreign guests attending the celebrations were U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze; Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak; Libyan President Moammar Gadhafi; the leaders of at least 10 African nations; and the foreign ministers of Britain, West Germany, Romania, Indonesia and other nations.

Shops and main streets were festooned with Namibian flags as workers put final touches on podiums, banners and other decorations.

Tens of thousands of Namibians were expected to take part in the celebrations, which include fireworks, choirs and traditional dancing that was likely to last through the night.

A parade through downtown Windhoek was expected to draw some 50,000 people Wednesday morning.

Many Namibians expressed hope that the new nation would solve past racial differences and overcome the economic and political problems facing many poor African nations.

"Other African countries have had disappointments after independence. I hope we have learned from those economic and political mistakes," said Simon Ekanjo, a student.

Some in the white minority expressed concern about the new black government, but said they wanted to support the new nation.

Said Barney van der Schynn, a 41-year-old businessman, "The economy could suffer and changes aren't easy, but we couldn't keep carrying on the way we were. Independence should have come earlier."

Earth Day big concern for Japanese

Hearst News Service

TOKYO — It was 20 years ago that 20 million Americans marched in the streets, sat in at the schools, "trashed in" at parks and sidewalks, leafleted businesses, barricaded cars from the roads and did whatever else they could to dramatize their growing concern with issues of environmental pollution.

That was Earth Day, April 22, 1970, and it helped lead to the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act and a new government agency to oversee environmental protection in the United States. The biggest change between then and now, say Earth Day organizers in Tokyo, is that the environment isn't just America's problem any more.

Earth Day 1990, this coming April 22, seeks to involve 100 million people worldwide.

"The 1970 concerns were local: air pollution in a given city, the water table in a given city, a landfill or a highway that was cutting through your own back yard," said Denis Hayes of Palo Alto, Calif., the organizer of the 1970 and 1990 events. "The new things that demand our attention are international in scope."

Global warming, disappearance of animal and plant species, acid rain, ozone depletion, international traffic in illegal pesticides – all are issues that "no one nation, no matter what it does, can solve," Hayes said. In fact, "there's no point even trying to solve them within one country's borders."

Japan's participation, as one of the world's major industrialized economies, is crucial.

Japan is generally considered at least "in the league with the United States as an environmental outlaw," Hayes said, because of its dependence on natural resources outside its borders and because its offshore enterprises are "driven by an almost pure concern for rates of return on investment."

Environmental groups here last year reported results of an investigation showing that Japanese logging interests are the single biggest factor in the destruction of rain forests in Southeast Asia.

One goal of Earth Day 1990 is to elevate the authority of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and Hayes voiced similar hopes for Japan's obscure Environmental Agency.

Efforts are under way to organize various Earth Day activities in Japan, including an event on Yumenoshima, an island in Tokyo Bay reclaimed with refuse from Tokyo's vast garbage dumps. About 50 groups, including environmental and consumer cooperatives, are involved in the planning.

WORLD IN BRIEF

MOSCOW (AP) — Supporters of democratic reform won victories across the Soviet Union, defeating Communists in runoff elections in the Slavic heartland and choosing independence activists in the Baltic republics.

In Latvia, the People's Front claimed victory Monday in the republic's first free elections in 50 years, and a spokesman said the group came close to achieving the parliamentary majority needed to press for independence.

Activists in Latvia and Estonia had hoped Sunday's parliamentary elections in the Baltics — annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940 — would follow the lead of nearby Lithuania and bring independence supporters to power.

But a spokesman for the Latvian opposition group, Kristian Rozenvald, said the People's Front probably will gain a majority in the next election round in April.

Reformers also claimed victories in crucial runoffs Sunday in Russia, Byelorussia and the Ukraine. The Soviet Union's Slavic heartland accounts for 80 percent of the country's territory and two-thirds of its population.

Mother shielding daughter

CHRISTCHURCH, New Zealand (AP) — The American mother of 7-year-old Hilary Foretich shielded her from the news media Monday and swore she would keep doing exactly that as she presses her fight for the girl in an international custody case.

Plastic surgeon Elizabeth Morgan of Washington, D.C., was reunited over the weekend with her daughter 10 days after the mother arrived in New Zealand to discuss the case with her lawyers.

She has accused the father, dental surgeon Eric Foretich, of sexually molesting the child and in 1987 began serving 25 months in jail for refusing to reveal Hilary's whereabouts.

War crimes probe launched

LONDON (AP) — The government said Monday it is setting up a special war crimes unit of police officers to investigate alleged World War II atrocities committed by people now living in Britain.

Home Secretary David Waddington said the British police had never investigated war crimes before and the unit would work in the same way the police investigated "any other criminal activities."

He said police, legal authorities and the courts would have the responsibility for prosecutions, trials and convictions and the government would not interfere.

How prison policies slash years off criminals' terms

It started with reports on crime. And the high incidence of parolee crime in Michigan. And ended by placing the blame for much of that crime on prison officials.

Officials who, in an effort to ease prison overcrowding, were themselves breaking the law.

It aroused public outrage and forced the state to make changes in the system.

Changes that wouldn't have occurred if a few reporters at a Detroit newspaper hadn't been looking for a story.

310 General Help Wanted

PART-TIME $$$$$ AVAILABLE APRIL 1

Effective April 2, the Midland Reporter-Telegram will become a morning newspaper instead of an afternoon newspaper. As a result we have several routes which will need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Due to this one-time large number of routes becoming available, now is the best time ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 50% adult and 50% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a part time job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $150 to $500 monthly! Some motor routes make even more, although currently none are expected to be available. Depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Some collecting in person will be necessary though.

When do the papers have to be delivered by?

6:00 am Monday - Friday, and 7:00 am Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
