Dollar/Gallon Gas Nears

Upward Creeping Prices Hit 90-Cent Range

By JOHNNY HOLMES
Avalanche-Journal Staff

MEMORIAL DAY 1979 may leave some rather unpleasant memories in the minds of motorists: gasoline prices in Lubbock this week reached record highs. In at least one instance, the price of gasoline was a scant penny away from the $1 a gallon mark.

As gasoline prices continued an upward march that began last fall, one independent marketer here posted premium fuel at 98.9 cents per gallon, with unleaded at 96.9 and regular at 91.9.

The average cost of a gallon of premium jumped from 79.3 cents per gallon at the end of April to its present 82.5 cents; unleaded went from 77.6 cents per gallon to 80.3 cents.

Regular gas remains in the 70s in most cases, but should it jump in June as it did in May, regular will average more than 80 cents per gallon by the Fourth of July holiday. Regular now averages 77.6 cents, as compared with its April reading of 73.7 cents.

The Mars self-service station at 2315 Fourth Street raised the price of its gasoline late last week from the 70-cent range to the near-dollar level. An attendant at the station Saturday told the A-J the almost 20-cent jump in prices was correct but said he did not know what prompted the price increase. Station manager Bennie Jester was not available for comment Saturday.

Lubbock's Still Cheapest

And to the north of Lubbock, one station in Plainview this week raised its price for unleaded gas to 95.9 cents per gallon and its price for regular to 89.9 cents.

Across the South Plains, gas less expensive than Lubbock's is hard to find. Almost without exception, every city within 200 miles in any direction of Lubbock is posting gas prices equal to or higher than in Lubbock.

The second-most expensive gasoline in the A-J survey was found at the Phillips 66 station at 50th Street and Memphis Avenue, which is selling unleaded for 88 cents per gallon, and regular for 85 cents. In the premium gasoline category, the Exxon station at 50th Street and Slide Road and the Texaco station at 34th Street and Quaker Avenue fell just behind the Mars station in pricing.

The cheapest gas in the survey is the 72 cent per gallon regular being sold at Gulf stations at 34th Street and Indiana Avenue and Fourth Street and University Avenue. The least expensive unleaded can be found at the Exxon Self-Serve at 19th Street and University Avenue, which also sells the lowest premium, now 79 cents per gallon.

Gasoline supplies showed signs of dwindling for the first time in 1979 as several stations, including the previously mentioned Exxon Self-Serve, displayed "Allocation Sold Out" banners several times during the month.

The reason most station operators are giving for the recent shutdowns is a switch from selling gasoline in monthly allotments to daily allotments. Under the daily plan, a station sells only a certain amount of gas before closing each day, rather than selling all it can and closing for several days when its month-

Cockpit Talk Recording Wiped Out Before Crash

CHICAGO (AP) — Almost all cockpit conversations aboard the ill-fated American Airlines jet were wiped out by a power loss in a recorder, leaving only the word "damn" on tape after the plane left the runway, a federal official said Saturday.

Meanwhile, the death toll from the nation's worst air disaster rose to 273, Saturday, after sheriff's deputies reported two persons on the ground were among those killed. One body was found in a truck and the second underneath the truck.

Two-Month Delay

Federal investigators said it would probably be at least two months before the exact cause of the crash was known. But Elwood "Woody" Driver, vice chairman of the transportation safety board, said in Chicago that a preliminary investigation indicated "there is no evidence of pilot error."

An official for American said the wide-bodied DC-10 that crashed in a fiery ball Friday had gone through a week-long "periodic" check in March at the airline's facility in Tulsa, Okla.

"There's nothing in the record that indicates any kind of a problem at all" with the engine that fell off the plane just after takeoff, said R.J. Masiello, vice president of engineering and maintenance for American.

The power loss occurred in one of the jet's two tape recorders, or black boxes, "a fraction of a second" after the nose wheel of the DC-10 left the runway of Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, Jim King, chairman of the safety board, said in Washington. The recorders were housed in the tail section of the plane and are built to withstand heat and impact.

Data Recorder Intact

Another board official said the flight data recorder remained intact and officials were getting valuable information from it, incuding the jet's heading, airspeed and altitude.

King said the cockpit tape contained "the normal checklist process" from the time the plane began moving down the runway to when it began to lift off.

After takeoff, "we heard only one word and that word was 'damn.' From that point we don't have any tape at all."

King said that the cause of the power loss was not known but that it could have been due to a number of factors, including a possible circuit break or break in a wire.

The two tapes were flown to Washington on Saturday, and federal officials immediately began examining them.

Investigators were also analyzing a ground-based air traffic controller tape, which contains conversations between the pilots and the airport tower.

Runway Offered

Warren Holtzberg, a safety board official in Chicago, said the tower tape showed that a controller at one point noted some problems with the plane and offered to clear a runway for it to land. But, Holtzberg said, there was no response from the plane.

All passengers, including many publishing officials on their way to a book sales convention, were killed when the DC-10 bound for Los Angeles lost one of its three engines and crashed in a field about 45 seconds after takeoff Friday from O'Hare International Airport.

Two other persons on the ground were injured by burning debris. One remained in critical condition Saturday; the other was in good condition.

Sheriff's authorities said John Craig, 41, of Addison, Ill., an employee of Courtney-Velo Excavating Co., was found dead in a company truck.

Body Under Truck

Later Saturday, Betsy Barstead, a spokeswoman for Cook County Sheriff Richard Elrod, said a second charred body was found under the truck. She said the body was "definitely" not an employee of the excavating company, but that identification could not be immediately released.

Investigators said it was much too early to say why the engine fell off — or even that the engine loss caused the crash.

Driver said it would take at least two months to make a final determination of the cause of the crash.

Of the possibility of pilot error, Douglas Dreyfus, another federal investigator, said, "We haven't absolved anyone or anything yet." He said investigators were "in the midst of the start of our investigation."

"We'll home in on the dropped engine," Driver said. But the lost engine may not have been "the first sequence in the accident."

In Washington, consumer advocate Ralph Nader called on the government to ground all DC-10 jetliners for immediate inspection.

"When an engine separates from an aircraft on takeoff ... a design defect affecting other DC-10 aircraft is possible," Nader said. "As is the practice in military aviation, such grounding for testing and inspection is the only prudent course of action" while the crash is being investigated.

In Dallas, the Airline Passengers Association, which says it speaks for consumers and claims more than 50,000 members, called for an inspection of engine mounts of DC-10s. The association said, however, it disagreed with Nader's recommendation that all DC-10s be taken out of service, saying grounding of the planes would be a "disservice to the flying public."

The crash demolished the jetliner, leaving only a piece of landing gear standing in a field of smoldering rubble. Many bodies still were missing or unidentified Saturday.

Rescue workers found 258 bodies, placed them in yellow and blue plastic bags and took them in police vans to a temporary morgue in an American Airlines hanger. Driver said the rest of the bodies were still buried in the debris.

About 20 forensic dentists from across the country were helping in trying to identify victims.

Neutron Bomb Ready In Europe, Says Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former President Gerald Ford says the United States already has a primitive model of the controversial neutron bomb deployed in Europe.

"We do have a neutron bomb in Europe, the only thing is that it is dirtier" than the new, high radiation weapon President Carter put on ice last year, Ford said in an interview with United Press International.

"If there was an attack in Europe, the president has a neutron weapon he could use. The one he turned down had less fallout and more focus on the enemy."

That being the case, Ford said, he "absolutely" would have ordered the neutron bomb into production rather than deferring that decision, pending consultation with NATO allies and the Soviets, as Carter did.

Ford is the first authoritative commentator to suggest that the neutron bomb — target of an international ban-the-bomb controversy — is merely the advanced model of a weapon already aimed at Soviet bloc frontiers.

Throughout the public debate, the popular assumption has been that the neutron bomb is an entirely new kind of battlefield weapon, still in the development stage.

Asked whether the United States already has an early model of the bomb deployed in Europe, a Pentagon spokesman said it does not.

'Different Thing'

"The neutron weapon the (NATO) alliance is trying to decide on now, and the U.S. Government is trying to decide on, is enough different that it constitutes a new and different thing," the spokesman said.

Area's Demos Doubt Carter 1980 Chances

By PAULA TILKER

THE PRESIDENTIAL election still is 18 months away, but among some local Democrasts there already appears to be splits in the ranks over support of President Carter.

An informal survey of Lubbockites active in politics shows widely divergent — and often unequivocably contradictory — views on the incumbent, his popularity and his chances for re-election.

The opinion in one camp is that Carter has made some mistakes in learning the Washington ropes, that he is not particularly popular on the South Plains and that the problem is the job, not the man.

But, this group asserts, many factors can shift the political winds between now and November 1980. And, they add, they believe that at the ballot box Carter will be the most attractive of all candidates.

Not so, contend the dissenters.

This group believes Carter is a bungler who does not provide effective leadership and who may not even secure the Democratic nomination.

Even if he is the candidate, says this group, crossover voting by Texas Democrats-gone-Republican — temporarily — will mean his defeat here.

The most moderate view offered is that the truth lies between these two ex-

Memorial Day Observance To Begin In City Today

AMERICANS have set aside this weekend to honor the country's war dead with the annual observance of Memorial Day, but Lubbockites are planning several ceremonies of recognition scheduled through the first half of this week.

Local veterans organizations will sponsor three ceremonial programs. The first will be at 3 p.m. today in City of Lubbock Cemetery.

On Memorial Day, services will be conducted at 10:30 a.m. in Resthaven Memorial Park and at 11:15 a.m. at Peaceful Gardens Memorial Park near Woodrow.

Sponsored by the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars and their auxiliaries, the ceremonies will be attended by the firing squad from Estacado High School's Junior ROTC and the Color Guard from Lubbock High School's

Two Classes Receive Diplomas

Estacado High School

PARENTS, TEACHERS and students were congratulated Saturday night at commencement exercises for the seniors of Estacado High School.

Jeanette Baker, one of three students who addressed the class, extended congratulations to all who helped make graduation a reality.

"Parents, as we all know, you laid the groundwork for our success in school," she said. "Teachers, you are our creators. You applied your talents to shape our lives."

Anna Diego and Willie Queenan Jr. also addressed the class theme, "Today's Dreams — Tomorrow's Realities."

Queenan said that as adults the class members were responsible for their own determination, energy, ambition and motivation.

He told his peers they were energetic individuals and to remember "experience is the only school from which no one ever graduates."

Miss Diego reminded the 209-member class that they had helped each other, laughed together and shared difficult times.

"And believe it or not," she said, "it was all worthwhile...As we look back we learn to appreciate the education that we have received, the laughs we had together and the bad times. Tonight we will each go our separate ways to fulfill our dreams."

She reminded the seniors they had waited for the chance to become someone and not just settle for what they have.

"We will strive for our goals and fulfill our dreams to face tomorrow's reality," she said.

"There will be times as we continue in our different fields of endeavor when we

Monterey High School

MORE THAN 600 Monterey High School graduates were urged to defy mediocrity by utilizing their youthful talents and realizing their individual worth at commencement exercises Saturday night.

Seniors Paul Hancock, Rynnea Darnell, Peter Harris and John Kim gave speeches on the theme, "We Make it Happen."

Graduates should beware falling into the "misty flats of mediocrity," Hancock told the 617 assembled Plainsmen. He said that problems like energy, human rights and worldwide health care would require each individual's commitment, but that there was a "greater urgency to fulfill the needs of the most precious of earth's treasures...the individual."

"Every human being has basic needs of the soul, the heart, the mind, the body," Hancock said. "As the educated of the world, it is now our duty to fill those needs."

Rynnea Darnell said members of the Class of 1979 would shape their futures by examining their goals and attitudes at graduation. "Our attitude can become the best medicine in the world...if we let it work for us," she said. "The learned use of our capabilities and the belief in ourselves will help us reach our worthwhile goals," Miss Darnell told the class.

Miss Darnell used a quotation from a poem by John Greenleaf Whittier to illustrate the choices the graduates must make. "We shape ourselves the joy or fear of which the coming life is made..."

Harris cited the accomplishments of the class in the past three years and asked

Egyptian Flag Flies Over El Arish For First Time In 12 Years

EL ARISH, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat proudly raised his national flag in this Sinai town Saturday as cannons fired and military bands played in festive observance of renewed Egyptian sovereignty won under the peace treaty with Israel.

The Egyptian leader, resplendent in a white admiral's uniform, was a shining symbol of Arab joy at having El Arish, the Sinai capital, returned after 12 years of occupation.

In Sidon, Lebanon, provincial authorities said shells from Israeli border gunners rained down on te neighboring port city of Tyre, sending residents fleeing. They reportd one child was killed and four persons were wounded, but Israel's military command denied shelling the area.

In Beirut, two newspapers reported Syria and Iraq were on the verge of proclaiming a federal union to field a joint army in case of another Middle East war with Israel. Plans for the union have been discussed since last fall.

Sadat made no public statement at Saturday's ceremonies, but he will speak Sunday when he hosts Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance in El Arish.

Jubilant Arabs danced, sang, chanted and thousands who lined flag-bedecked roads cried "Allah hu akhbar" — God is great — as his motorcade moved through town.

The celebration continues Sunday with the visit of Begin and Vance, who will hold talks here with Sadat before the three fly by helicopter 60 miles east into Israel for speeches in Beersheba, where talks on Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip began Friday.

The three also will board Sadat's plane to fly between Cairo and Tel Aviv in a symbolic opening of an air corridor between the two former adversaries.

Flocks of doves and thousands of balloons were released as Sadat slowly pulled the rope to raise the red, white and black Egyptian banner. The ceremony took place in a parade ground fashioned out of a freight yard where Israeli military vehicles had been maintained before Friday's handover.

Before he hoisted the flag, Sadat carried it around the perimeter of the square, stopping to let people kiss it as top leaders of his government had done when the ceremony started.

A brass band of 200 musicians played martial tunes, cannons boomed a salute and security helicopters fluttered overhead while the flag slowly rose up the pole.

Sadat's first act on arriving at the El Arish airstrip was to kneel on a prayer mat on the tarmac and offer special prayers of thanksgiving. After the flag-raising, he went to a mosque where two water buffalo were sacrificed and where he joined noon prayers.

The Egyptian leader often uses the word "sacred" to describe the Sinai Peninsula, and the return of the 425 square miles in the El Arish sector was the first tangible result for Egypt from the peace treaty with Israel.

Israel withdraws from the entire peninsula in phases over three years, and Sadat has said he wants to build a shrine to the Moslem, Jewish and Christian faiths on Mount Sinai, near the southern tip of the peninsula.

Forty Egyptians in wheelchairs — veterans of four wars with Israel — were present, and Sadat made a special point of placing a wreath at a monument to Egypt's war dead.

Aquarium's Residents Pay Way

BOSTON (AP) — Fats, Lover Boy and Paula the Penguin have their quirks, but freeloading isn't one of them. They earn their keep at the New England Aquarium by starring in commercials or making personal appearances.

Nigberg hired Fats to appear with a video display terminal being marketed under the trade name "The Beaver" by the Perkin-Elmer Corp. In exchange for Fats' services, Nigberg "adopts" the beaver for a year, paying about $650 for the care and feeding of animal.

Paula and Lover Boy, two of the aquarium's 19 penquins, earn their herrings and smelts in careers that have taken them as far as New York.

Paula appeared in a candy commercial for Peter Paul, while Lover Boy was once a special guest at a New York dinner.

"He was the guest of honor at formal dinner at the Natural History Museum ad, of course, he was already properly dressed," said Carla Skinder, an animal technologist who accompanies the critters on their forays into the wilds of Madison Avenue.

According to Ms. Skinder, the South African jackass penguins — named for their braying call — are real professionals, taking the commuter flight from Boston to New York in their stride.

"Lover Boy likes to fly," she said. "He was a big hit on the plane and was even invited into the cockpit."

In addition, Lover Boy once got $25 for appearing at a United Way fundraiser in Boston, clad in a T-shirt which proclaimed: "I give at the office."

TV Station, Gay Group, FCC Not Moved By Preacher's Plea

HURST (AP) — A television evangelist whose weekly program was pulled off a Dallas station after he made disparaging remarks about homosexuals is waging a national campaign to defend his right to preach the Bible.

JAMES ROBISON

Southern Baptist evangelist James Robison says he plans to take his case before the Federal Communications Commission and to the courts if necessary. And he has brought homosexual foe Anita Bryant and noted criminal attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes into the maelstrom.

But station officials at WFAA-TV contend they are not challenging Robison's right to preach the Word, the Dallas gay community wants out of the controversy and the FCC isn't interested.

The dispute flared up earlier this year when the station officials cancelled Robison's weekly 30-minute program on grounds he had violated the FCC's Fairness Doctrine.

During his Feb. 25 sermon, "A Nation that Forgets God," Robison called the gay movement "despicable" and a "perversion of the highest order."

Part of the picture painted in that telecast did not come from the Bible but from a "National Enquirer" magazine article that referred to seduction of young boys and homosexual murders, said station manager David Lane.

The Fairness Doctrine does not cover interpretation of scripture, Lane said. But it also does not allow broadcast ministers to step outside that boundary at will.

After reviewing the videotape at the request of a gay activist, the station's attorney concluded the total picture constituted treatment of only one side of a controversial issue and compensatory time had to be given to balance the issue.

"We have never said Robison could not deal with moral or controversial issues," Lane said at a recent news conference. "But we have said there must be some kind of discretion used. The mere mention that homosexuality is a sin did not violate the Fairness Doctrine. It was the total presentation of the broadcast that was questioned."

Since then, Robison — whose program is broadcast in 92 other cities — has criticized WFAA's interpretation of the Fairness Doctrine and has charged the station's actions were "as wrong as sin."

"This is the church's battle," said the fundamentalist preacher who presides over an expanding evangelist enterprise in this Fort Worth suburb. "The federal government has put a noose around our neck...and they're turning it and choking us."

He and Haynes plan to ask the FCC to conduct an administrative hearing on the matter. And if relief cannot be obtained, they will go to court to defend Robison's right to preach on controversial issues.

"We want to put a finger in the dike to prevent a flood of the kind of action that silenced James Robison," said Haynes, the flamboyant attorney who successfully defended Fort Worth millionaire Cullen Davis on a murder charge.

"We think that in this country the subject of a preacher's sermon should be dictated by the conscience of the preacher and not by the FCC," he added.

Meanwhile, members of the Dallas gay community claim they are being used to keep the dispute at a high emotional level.

"When I complained to the station following the telecast, it was in no way related to interpretation of scripture, only to slanderous comments about homosexuals in the United States today," said Campbell Read, a spokesman for the Dallas Political Gay Caucus.

"We support a minister's right to interpret the Bible as he sees fit, regardless of who disagrees with him," said Read, a statistics professor at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

"But we also believe Robison is asking for freedom to engage in slander of groups without restraint," he continued. "Our argument is that he slandered homosexuals with his comments about their role in America based on a magazine article and not from the Bible."

WFAA officials contend Robison's program probably would not have been cancelled had it been the first time he discussed a controversial issue in such a manner.

During the past eight years, Robison has received free air time on WFAA to broadcast more than 400 programs, Lane said.

On two previous occasions, Robison was questioned for remarks he made during his telecasts — once for calling the Christian Science and Morman churches "false faiths" and the other for denouncing a Fort Worth church that ministers primarily to homosexuals.

"The Fairness Doctrime imposes the sole responsibility on the broadcaster for determining what public controversial issues will be aired, the format for their treatment and the time they will be broadcast," Lane said. "That responsibility cannot be delegated to Rev. Robison or any other individual appearing on WFAA."

Lane acknowledged Robison has the right to appeal his decision.

But Belle O'Brien, a spokeswoman for the FCC in Washington, said the commission does not hold hearings on instances in which rebuttal time is requested or in which programs are removed by a television station.

In the meantime, a rally is being planned in Dallas next month to help drum up moral and financial suport for the preacher's cause.

Miss Bryant, who has actively participated in the anti-gay movement, had been invited to share the stage. But that invitation was withdrawn, Robison said, after a several threats were against thee singer.

In a statement from her Florida office, Miss Bryant said Robison believed it would not be wise for her to attend the rally because he said the militant homosexuals would use her appearance to cloud the real issue — freedom of speech.

But Campbell says Robison's accusations are "absurd."

"We had discussed what, if any, action would be taken if Anita Bryant attended the rally, and we all agreed to do nothing," Campbell said. "We have absolutely no desire to demonstrate against her coming to Dallas."

Texas Senate Axes Amendments To New Finance Legislation

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators refused to accept Saturday House additions to a measure that would require the state treasurer to invest more state funds in interest-bearing accounts.

The Senate voted 20-10 to appoint a conference committee on the measure (SB385) that underwent major revision in the House by Rep. Frank Hartung, R-Houston.

Hartung said his proposals would add $27 million in state revenues annually. He originally introduced a separate bill to revise the state's money management policy.

However, Sen. Bill Moore, D-Bryan, blocked Senate Finance Committee action on Hartung's own measure. By adding the changes to a Senate-passed bill, Hartung said he would bypass Moore in committee.

"I read a story in my local newspaper that he (Hartung) really put one over on me," Moore told colleagues in urging them to reject the House changes. Provisions representatives added to the bill would:

— Require banks to bid for state deposits.

— Allow the state treasurer to invest state money in U.S. Treasury securities.

— Require the state treasurer to set up a forecasting sstem for the state's ready cash needs.

Inspection Time Down At Customs Stations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department says it has been successful in its drive to reduce inspection processing time for U.S. citizens returning from overseas flights.

The department attributed the improvement to cooperation between its own U.S. Customs Service and the Justice Department's Immigration & Naturalization Service. It said the change in processing has enabled both agencies to better cope with massive increases in air travel.

Ill-Fated Airline's Cockpit Recorder Yields No Clues On Crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal investigators said Saturday they found almost nothing on a tape recording of cockpit conversations aboard the ill-fated American Airlines jet because of a loss of power in the recorder.

Jim King, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said the power loss occurred just as the jetliner with 271 persons aboard began to lift off the runway Friday at O'Hare International Airport.

The DC-10 bound for Los Angeles lost one of its three engines shortly after taking off and about 45 seconds later crashed into a field killing all aboard.

King said the cockpit tape contained "the normal checklist process" from the time it began moving down the runway to when it began to lift off.

A "fraction of a second" after the plane's nose wheel left the runway "we heard only one word and that word was 'damn.' From that point we don't have any tape at all," King said.

He said the cause of the power loss in the recorder was not known, but that it could have been a variety of malfunctions including a circuit break or a break in a wire.

However, a second tape aboard the plane, the flight data recorder, did function after lift-off and investigators said they were getting valuable information from it. That tape registers heading, airspeed, altitude, vertical acceleration and elapsed time.

The two tapes aboard the jetliner were flown to Washington Saturday and investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board immediately began examining them.

A board official said the second tape lasted about 30 seconds after lift-off, but also stopped recording when the plane was still in the ir. "It did not record the crash," the official said.

The official, who asked not to be identified by name, said investigators were getting "a better story" from that tape. But a detailed analysis would not be completed until Sunday at the earliest, the official said. No explanation was given for why the second tape stopped before impact.

Investigators are also analyzing a ground-based air traffic controller tape, which contains conversations between the pilots and the airport tower.

Warren Holtzberg, an NTSB official in Chicago, said the tower tape showed that a controller at one point noted some problems with the plane and offered to clear a runway for it to land. But, Holtzberg said, there was no response from the plane.

Both on-board recorders were housed in the tail section of the aircraft, encased in thick metal boxes about two feet high and 18 inches in diameter. The boxes are built to withstand heat up to 2,700 degrees Fahrenheit and impact 100 times the force of gravity.

Iowa Editor Describes Fatal Crash

By PHIL MARTY
Written For The Associated Press

I'd never seen anyone die. But Friday at 3:04 p.m., I watched as 271 people I never knew suffered a fiery death.

It was a story that all reporters seek, but no reporter really wants to write.

Through the television-like window of an Ozark Air Lines plane, I watched as American Airlines Flight 191, nonstop to Los Angeles, turned on its side and dropped to earth, bursting into a ball of orange flame and billowing black smoke.

As our plane rolled down the runway, my seatmate idly pointed out the big silver DC-10 taking off at a right angle to our left. I watched with only casual interest as the sleek jetliner lifted off, its nose jutting upward and tail dropping back in the familiar stance of departure.

But then, as the plane was just feet from the ground, something rolled over the top of the left wing. As the large metal piece hit the ground and burst into flames, I knew the left engine had fallen off.

It seemed like minutes that the jetliner hung there, clawing for altitude as smoke poured from the left wing. But it really was no more than 10 or 15 seconds.

The plane couldn't have been any higher than 500 feet, holding steadily, when it rolled to its left. From its almost graceful plunge, the jetliner smashed into the ground on its left wing, creating a giant ball of fire.

Then the inevitable black cloud of smoke rolled skyward. I looked at my watch. It was 3:04 p.m.

Inside our plane, the sound of the explosion couldn't be heard. There was only the excited babble of our passengers and the blank stares of our flight attendants.

I didn't need a newspaper or television to tell me the fate of those aboard the American Airlines flight. Deep inside, I knew they were all dead.

Crashed Airliner's Captain Described As 'Pilot's Pilot'

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Capt. Walter Lux, the pilot of the DC-10 that crashed in the nation's worst air disaster, was described by friends and relatives as "a pilot's pilot," a man who loved to fly.

"He was the one pilot I would trust my life to," said Thea Priebe, village treasurer in Twin Lakes, Wis., where Lux and his family maintained a summer home.

Lux, 53 years old and a pilot for American Airlines since 1950, was at the controls of Flight 191, which crashed Friday shortly after takeoff from Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, killing all 271 persons aboard.

He and his wife, Lora, and their 22-year-old son, Michael, made their home in Phoenix but spent much time at their summer home in Twin Lakes, about 50 miles from Chicago, where Lux was based.

Rolf Behr, a Twin Lakes neighbor, was working at O'Hare as an installer for Illinois Bell Telephone Co. when he learned Lux had piloted the plane.

"He loved his flying," Behr said. "He wouldn't do anything else but fly."

"He was one of the finest pilots I knew," said Dr. Fred Mayer, a Twin Lakes dentist and pilot.

A neighbor, Phyllis Formhals, said flying was a passion for Lux.

"If there were anything humanly possible that could have been done to prevent that crash, he would have done it," she said.

"He was a pilot's pilot," said American Airlines pilot James Brady of Twin Lakes.

The pilot's sister-in-law, Constance Lux of Franklin, Wis., said her husband, Robert, had telephoned Lux a few days ago.

"He said he was going to fly out on Sunday. I don't know why he was on this flight," she said. "He asked us to come down and visit him (at Twin Lakes) but we told him we were busy. He said he planned on coming up to see us next week."

Relatives said Lux seldom talked about the possibility of a crash.

Computer Audit Problems Slated For Commission's Consideration

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN -How to audit a bank's computer will be one of the matters for consideration of the State Finance Commission when it meets this summer, most likely in June.

Gov. Bill Clements has filled three vacancies on the commission, and the chairmanship of Michael Lallinger, Houston, expires July 1.

The Department of Banking plans to present the commission with its "electronic data processing examination program feasibility study report."

That report deals with the question of what the department should be doing, general counsel Archie Clayton says, in regard to audit of computers, which is becoming an area of concern as use of them increases.

In 1978 the department began looking at the way in which other states are handling the problem, and decided to use outside consultants.

The recommendations, Clayton says, are for the department to set up its own staff of professional computer programmers and auditors, or to train "generalists" to carry out audits with the aid of a check list.

The Savings and Loan Section of the commission anticipates a meeting in conjunction with the full commission to deal with regulatory proposals and personnel matters.

Economic conditions and continuing competition among insurers appears to be resulting in increased use of six-month auto policies, the State Board of Insurance (SBI) reports.

Willis McVey, manager of the SBI's casualty insurance division, says that the use of such policies offers advantages to the insured and the insurer.

Some 15 to 20 years ago, provisions requiring that six-month policies be written at 55 percent of the annual premium were eliminated, so that there is no rate difference on annual or six-month policies.

The insured is able, McVey notes, to pay for insurance twice a year, with smaller payments; the company is able to earn the premium in six months instead of having to wait a full year.

A number of direct writers of insurance have been using those six-month policies, but other companies are doing so because of the competitive advantages, he says.

In another matter relating to auto insurance, officials of the Texas Auto Insurance Plan report that assignments to that pool continue to lag behind the rate experienced last year.

Through April, the number came to 52,312, behind the 58,743 reported for the first four months of 1978. Premium figures for private passengers during that period were reported at $17,948,650 compared to $18,425,039.

Auto matters will be considered at the SBI's annual rate hearing Aug. 1, 2 and 3, and Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office has asked that private passenger and commercial autos be considered as separate items, saying that would "facilitate both our work as a licensed advisory organization to the board and the board's consideration of these recommendations."

Industries seeking to locate in Texas, or to expand existing operations, will come under new regulations regarding permit approvals under HB 726, changes in the Texas Clean Air Act, sponsored by Rep. Tim Von Dohlen, Goliad.

Called Session Of Legislature Almost Certain

AUSTIN (AP) — Jim Kaster, a puckish little man and Gov. Bill Clements' chief lobbyist, was on hand Friday night when the House washed its hands of the governor's initiative and referendum proposal.

He grinned impishly as he told reporters what he would advise Clements to give lawmakers for rejecting the cornerstone of the governor's "Taxpayers' Bill of Rights."

Clements had warned repeatedly he would call them back into special session if initiative and referendum — "I&R" to most legislators — went down.

Now the question was not if but when Clements would call a special session.

Kaster, a former El Paso legislator, told reporters he would recommend that Clements call a special session in November, December or January.

"That would give the people of Texas an opportunity to see their legislators in action on that issue just before the filing deadline," Kaster said.

Kaster joked that if Clements calls lawmakers together again in November or December, "maybe they could give the people a nice Christmas present and vote for initiative and referendum."

"If it goes down then, we could try April. And if it doesn't make it then, maybe September," Kaster said.

An April session would pull legislators away from their primary election campaigns. One in September 1980 would interrupt their races against general election opponents — chiefly Republicans like Clements.

Kaster said he was convinced Clements would call repeated special sessions until the Legislature submits an initiative and referendum constitutional amendment to the voters.

The final House vote on initiative and referendum was a 79-59 roll call on a motion by Rep. Carlyle Smith, D-Grand Prairie, to suspend rules and take up the measure. That was a majority, but House rules required a two-thirds vote.

Smith had failed twice before to persuade the required 100 House members to approve his measure giving voters the power to initiate proposals for action by the Legislature.

Some members figured a special session wouldn't be so bad, because it would give them another crack at a presidential primary bill, which conservative Democrat lawmakers want desperately.

But Smith relayed the gist of a letter in which Clements told him that I&R would "come up at a session devoted solely to initiative and referendum."

Auto Paperwork Fee Sent To Clements

AUSTIN (AP) — Automobile dealers could tack on a $25 paperwork fee for each car sold under a measure sent to the governor Saturday.

Senators voted 20-10 to accept a House change that lowered the fee from $35 to $25.

"Instead of taking $35 that they don't deserve, they're going to take $25," protested Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin. "There's no rhyme or reason for this except the Texas Automobile Dealers Association came down here and asked for this special interest legislation."

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Tom Creighton, D-Mineral Wells, said car dealers must include notices in purchase papers that the fee is not an official state assessment and that buyers can process the paperwork themselves.

"But the practical effect of this bill will be a state documentary fee," Doggett answered.

Nurse Charged In Murder Of Movie Character Actor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Detectives have arrested a 24-year-old nurse in connection with the March beating death of character actor Charles Wagenheim, police said.

The 84-year-old Wagenheim, who was found dead in his Hollywood apartment, appeared on such shows as "Gunsmoke," "Baretta" and "All in the Family."

Capt. Mark Kroeker, Hollywood chief of detectives, said Stephanie Boone, who had been nursing Wagenheim's wife, was booked Friday for investigation of murder.

House Passes Budget Control Bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Without a vote to spare, Gov. Bill Clements won House approval Saturday of his proposal to give governors limited power to control state spending between legislative sessions.

The 100-35 roll call sent the proposal to the Senate.

It gave the governor a badly needed victory after losing major parts of his program — wiretapping and initiative and referendum — in the House on Friday.

Senate approval of the budget execution proposal (HJR86) would set up a final decision by the voters on Nov. 4, 1980.

Speaker Bill Clayton cast the deciding vote after ruling that Rep. El Franco Lee, D-Houston, could not change his vote from "aye" to "no."

Lee had verified as voting "aye" on a name-by-name roll call after the House's voting machine showed the measure had cleared, 101-40. Lee said he voted "aye" by mistake, but Clayton ruled that once he had orally verified as an "aye," he could not change.

The House-approved proposal was much less than what Clements had ought — absolute management authority over funds appropriated by the Legislature.

Instead, his budget execution decisions would have to be approved by a Budget Execution Committee that he would chair. Other members would be the lieutenant governor, House speaker and chairmen and vice chairmen of the Senate Finance and House Appropriations committees.

Hilary Doran, a Clements lobbyist, said "it's close" in the Senate, where budget execution twice has fallen short of the necessary two-thirds majority.

Doran said there was reason for optimism because the chief Senate objections had been to provisions — since removed — allowing a governor to reduce spending items and veto riders in the general appropriation bill.

Budget execution would mean a governor and the special committee could shift money among agencies to meet unforeseen needs. They could block an expenditure and even force a balky administrator to spend as directed by the appropriation bill.

"The problem is that after we adjourn there is no real way that we can respond to changing needs. There is no way to cut off funds when we have overestimated spending. There is no way to prevent that wasteful spending," said Rep. Bob Simpson, D-Amarillo, the sponsor.

He told the heavily Democratic House that budget execution was "not a partisan issue" and urged representatives to "rise above personalities and consider this issue on its merits."

Rep. Bill Sullivant, D-Gainesville, called the measure "a fraud on the people" and "a farce" because the governor's budget execution decisions could be vetoed by the committee.

He said the lieutenant governor and speaker are "two men who almost always have an eye on the governor's job. ...This is going to be the worst political football you ever saw."

Brooks Tries Again For Medical Schools

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Sen. Chet Brooks will try one last time Monday to bring up his legislation providing State aid to teaching hospitals affiliated with seven medical schools, including the Texas Tech University School of Medicine.

The Senate failed, each time by one vote, to give Brooks the two-thirds majority he needed on Thursday and Friday.

Brooks had indicated he would attempt to get the bill, HB 169 by Rep. Chris Semos of Dallas, up for consideration once more on Monday, the final day of the regular 140-day session.

"We did the same thing last time," Brooks recalled. "It's like a nightmare relived."

The bill would provide $2.6 million over the next two years for teaching hospitals.

Redlining Credit Checks Object Of Agency Study

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate Banking subcommittee will hold hearings here June 4-5 to study the impact of a practice referred to as credit card redlining.

In announcing plans for the hearings, the subcommittee on consumer affairs explained the practice as one in which some companies rely heavily on neighborhood or zip code area rather than the credit history of a person making application for credit.

Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., chairman of the panel, cited a case of a black family here who was recently denied credit by a national oil company even though its income totaled $32,000.

New Monitoring Satellite To Join Twin In Space

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government says a new environmental monitoring satellite is set to join its twin in space in early June, completing an information-gathering system viewed as vital to national weather forecasting.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's spacecraft — to be known as NOAA-6 once it becomes operational — will be launched into near-polar orbit for the administration from the Western Test Range near Lompoc, Calif..

The agency said data from satellite primarily will be used by the NOAA's National Meteorological Center in Suitland, Md., to improve numerical weather forecasts, the basis for most National Weather Service predictions.

Better Safety Conditions Sought For Postal Workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. William Clay, chairman of a House postal subcommittee, is vowing to bring the U.S. Postal Service under the same safety and health obligations as private employers.

"It is inconceivable that the Postal Service, which has the highest accident rate of any federal agency, is able to hold itself above enforcement of federal safety and health laws," said Clay, D-Mo., who heads the House subcommittee on postal personnel and management.

Under existing law, he noted, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration may inspect and survey postal facilities only at the invitation of the Postal Service. Clay also pointed out that private employers are subject to inspections at the discretion of OSHA.

Lubbock Woman Abducted, Raped

A 21-year-old Lubbock woman reported to law enforcement officials Saturday morning that she and another woman, whose name she did not know, were abducted at different locations and raped in a field in the vicinity of a truck stop on Idalou Road.

Reports show the woman arrived at the truck stop northeast of Lubbock shortly after 6:30 a.m. Saturday, barefoot and with blood on her clothing.

The woman told sheriff's deputies that between 1 a.m. and 2 a.m. she was abducted from her car at 25th Street and Avenue T by a black male and forced into the floorboard of his vehicle. After driving a while, the woman said the man stopped the vehicle, told her to stay in the floorboard and abducted another female who also was told to lie on the floor.

The woman said they were driven to a field where the man raped her, and when he turned his attention to the other woman, the victim, who called the sheriff's office, fled the area on foot.

Police found the woman's abandoned car, the driver's door open and motor running, about 3 a.m. near the intersection where she said she had been forced from her vehicle.

Sheriff's deputies and Department of Public Safety troopers searched the area north and south of the truck stop by helicopter and on foot for several hours Saturday, but found no sign of the other woman. No missing persons reports matching her description had been filed.

The woman who reported the incident was treated and released from a local hospital. Sheriff's deputies are continuing the investigation.

A drummer from San Marcos, Larry Shaw, told police his $2,500 set of drums was taken from the stage of the South Park Inn club sometime between 3 a.m. and noon Friday.

A bank money bag, containing approximately $900 in cash and checks, was discovered missing from Toco Village Restaurant, 1712 3rd St., at 10:30 a.m. Friday. Owner Lupe Mejia said the money bag was in the restaurant office at 3:30 a.m.

Bryan Clayton Byee of 1812 18th St. told police that his $700 color television set was taken from his home between 1 a.m. and 8:30 a.m. Saturday. He said he found his front door screen had been forced open when he awoke.

Four wheels and tires from a customer's car parked at a body repair shop at 1312 Grinnell St. were stolen overnight Friday, according to shop owner Andrew Mendez. He said the vinyl roof of the Pontiac Grand Prix also had been slashed.

Shooting Attempt Case Continued

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The case against a man accused of plotting to kill President Carter has been postponed a second time, and the judge says he will dismiss the charges Wednesday if the government fails to obtain an indictment by then.

U.S. Magistrate Ralph Geffen ordered the preliminary hearing of Raymond Lee Harvey, a 35-year-old transient, continued until Tuesday. Geffen warned federal prosecutors Friday there would be no further delays. The government had sought both postponements.

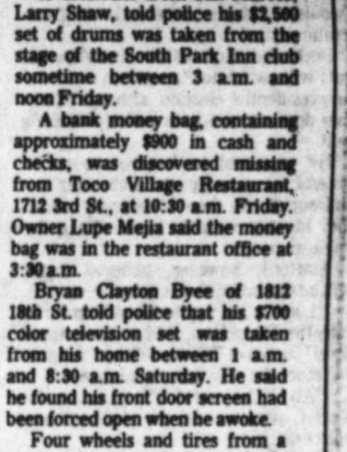

Harvey was arrested May 5 by Secret Service agents shortly before Carter was to speak at a Cinco de Mayo celebration.

By implementing this plan, stations tend to be closed more frequently, but never for more than a day at a time. Of course, not all stations use the daily allocation system, and closings lasting several days at a time could become common today and Monday and toward the end of coming months.

Since May 1, gasoline prices in Lubbock have risen nearly three cents across the board. Premium took the highest leap, its 3.2 cent escalation caused partly by major oil companies' decisions to make less premium in favor of diesel and unleaded gas.

Regular and unleaded also took hikes of nearly three cents on the average. Regular jumped 2.9 cents and unleaded 2.7 cents per gallon during the month.

By company affiliation, the most expensive gasoline found in the survey is sold at Texaco stations, which sell gas at an average price of 80.4 cents per gallon. Phillips 66 stations were next-highest on the average, selling gas at 80.2 cents per gallon. Exxon and Shell were third and fourth, both hovering right around the 80 cent mark.

The least expensive gasoline outlet in the survey is 7-Eleven convenience stores, which offer gasoline at an average price of 76.2 cents per gallon. Mobil and Gulf were the second- and third-least expensive across the city, with prices around 78 cents per gallon.

Mobil's prices jumped the most during May, an average of 4.5 cents per gallon, even though the chain remains relatively inexpensive. Gulf's prices also jumped more than the average for the month, and its four cent increase brings it more in line with the gasoline average.

Texaco's prices jumped only 2.4 cents on the average in May, but Texaco remains the most expensive distributor in the city. Phillips 66 and 7-Eleven gas also jumped comparatively small amounts of 2.5 and 2.7 cents respectively.

The jumps have come regularly, two and three cents at a time, since October, when self-serve regular generally was selling in the mid-50s range. Thus the increases in little more than six months have amounted to near 50 per cent and in some instances more.

Gasoline pricing, in Lubbock and across the nation, remains a puzzling and complex situation to which no one seems to have an answer. Wes Odorizzi, operator of College Mobil at Fourth and University Avenue, summed it up when he told the A-J, "We have no idea what to expect. We hold our breath with every truckload we get in."

tremes and that it is too soon in the campaign to determine the situation in 1980.

Representative of the Democrats who have given up on Carter are Lee Stafford, a Dolph Briscoe supporter who pushed for Gerald Ford in 1976, and Don Workman, also a Briscoe crony and unsuccessful candidate in 1978 for the Democratic nomination in the 28th Senatorial District.

Both men indicate disillusionment with Carter and say it seems to be a general feeling in West Texas.

"Carter doesn't carry a great deal of favor in Texas," Stafford said.

Workman agrees. "I would say he's not a popular president at this time, and I would say that's true even in the Democratic party."

Both said they believe many Democrats will switch to Republican ranks for the presidential election, although Workman does not see it as entirely Carter's fault.

He explained he believes people in general increasingly are embracing the philosophy of free enterprise, which they identify with the goals of the Republican party.

Stafford, however, believes Carter will be the cause of crossover voting.

"I see a big migration of Democrats into the Republican fold at the national level" because Texans will be "supporting more the man than the party now."

"And," he added, "I think it's the Carter situation at the national level that's doing it."

Stafford says he will support John Connally, a Democrat-turned-Republican and a candidate for the GOP nomination.

Workman, who puts Carter's chances for securing the Democratic nomination at 50-50 now and who agrees the GOP "has a good chance to carry Texas if they field a strong candidate," is less specific about his vote in 1980.

However, he said, "I would place the good of my country over party politics."

Workman sees Carter's lack of effectiveness "rather than the sides of issues he's been on" as the president's major problem. "He's been on the side of deregulation but he's not been able to push that through," explained Workman, adding that it shows ineffective leadership.

Stafford said the story he hears "from the common man to the corporate executive is that Carter has done nothing."

"I think people are just disinfatuated because he doesn't keep his promises," he said.

Workman offers a theory about why he believes Carter's brand of an ousider's approach to politics, which appealed to many in 1976, frustrates people in 1979.

"I think it was a larger job than maybe he thought it could be," Workman said. "In 1976, it sounded very good in theory . In reality, I'm not sure it's not a pipedream."

The two men concur that inflation and the energy situation will be crucial campaign issues. And, they agree, the Mideast peace situation will not garner many favorable votes for Carter among West Texans.

Three other prominent Democrats told The Avalanche-Journal they don't see the picture for Carter as grim as Workman and Stafford paint it.

The three — attorney Harvey Morton, county Democratic chairman Madison Sowder and attorney Byrnie Bass — acknowledge the president's unpopularity with South Plains voters.

"With respect to the area, there's no question but that President Carter would have a hard time," said Bass, who was cochairman of the county push to elect Carter in 1976.

Morton concurred: "I don't think Carter's popularity is high principally because he did exactly what he said he'd do when he ran — not be a professional politician."

Despite the griping, however, "When it comes to voting, I don't think anyone is more attractive," he added.

In fact, Morton said, he predicts that if there is any crossover voting, it will be from the Republican ranks to the Democrat fold.

Bass and Morton concur with Sowder's counsel that it is too soon to know the situation in 1980.

Events during the 30 days before the November election will determine the outcome, Sowder predicted.

He cited as an example of a variable factor the farming situation. "Good crop prospects next year will determine how farmers will vote next year," he said.

Bass and Sowder don't believe Carter's problem is his politics as much as it is the position of president in general.

Carter is enduring the "fallout from Watergate," explained Sowder. Congress, he said, "Is just not willing to let a president get hold of the kind of power Mr. Nixon had.

"It's the White House, not the man," he added.

Bass agrees. "I'm inclined to think it's the anyone-in-office syndrome."

In 1976, he explained, Carter "was a new face, a non-politician and not an insider."

"Now he's an old face, perceived as a politician and definitely an insider."

"He's trying to do things he perceives as good for the masses of people but he may be mistaken in what he perceives as what they want," added Morton.

The three men, who unhesitatingly advocate support of the party's nominee through the race, believe Carter will be the Democratic nominee.

They also concur with Workman and Stafford that the economic situation will be a crucial campaign issue.

"I think the major problem is dissatisfaction with the state of the economy," said Bass, adding people look at where the buck stops and that is with Carter now.

Carter either will have to turn the economic picture around in the next nine months or convince the people he is doing the job as well as anyone else could do in the circumstances, Bass said.

Worm Racing Born — And Possibly Buried — At Hale Center Fete

By TRAVIS BROWN
Avalanche-Journal Staff

HALE CENTER — America's newest spectator sport — worm racing — was born here Saturday. It also may have died here.

For when the order to "start your worms" was delivered at the beginning of the featured earthworm race during Saturday's first Worm Festival here, the racing field of 12 refused to wiggle.

Finally, after a little coaching, the wigglers slowly inched their way down the four-foot long track and a five-incher dubbed Spectacular Worm won the first race. He blazed the course in a record 10 minutes, 50 seconds.

Spectacular also captured the second and third heats, edging out Fast Eddie, Dirty Pearl and a plump wiggler nicknamed Off the Hook.

One of the ardent watchers was Worm Festival Beauty Queen Lucille Foraker.

"I knew someday I'd be some kind of queen," Mrs. Foraker, 65, said. "But this isn't exactly what I had in mind."

A major disappointment was the absence of racing silks on the competing worms. Worm grower Camille Landgraf had promised the worms would be sporting single-colored threads.

"Have you ever tried to dress a worm?" she asked.

But organizers of the Worm Festival count the event a success.

"I had my doubts about this worm thing," said one city father. "But I have to admit it's generated a lot of curiosity."

Party Query Nets Replies Poles Apart

Ask two West Texas Democrats about President Carter and politics and you'll get two poles-apart opinions.

For example, here is what two politically-active Lubbock Democrats say on the subject of Carter's popularity in the area — or the lack of it:

Lee Stafford — "I think people are just disinfatuated because he doesn't keep his promises."

Harvey Morton — "I don't think Carter's popularity is high principally because he did exactly what he said he'd do when he ran — not be a professional politician."

On party loyalty:

Morton — "It's too early to judge what might happen."

On whether Carter will try to drum up support in Texas:

Stafford — "I think Carter has pretty much written off Texas."

Morton — "No, that's not true as it looks right now."

On whether the Democratic Party machine statewide is organized for the presidential primary push:

Morton — "Yes" it is organized.

On the popularity of favorite son John Connally, a GOP candidate:

Morton — "I don't think Connally will run strong in Texas."

Do the two men agree on anything?

Stafford — Crucial campaign issues will be energy and inflation.

Morton — The major problem is inflation.

Neutron Bomb

anced nuclear warhead tor short-range battlefield artillery shells and missiles. It is designed mainly for defensive use against Soviet bloc tank forces in Central Europe.

It differs from standard tactical nuclear warheads in that it kills chiefly by high-density radiation while greatly reducing the blast, heat and fallout damage in the target area.

Critics dubbed it the "people killer" and say its very effectiveness at reducing damage to land, buildings and vehicles might tempt commanders to use it, and thus escalate a conventional war into a nuclear holocaust.

Carter announced in April 1978 that he would defer production of this weapon to give the Soviets time to offer some sort of military trade-off in return for its cancellation, and to consult with NATO allies on the issue.

The matter has remained in limbo since then, although Congress has authorized funds to continue development of the weapon and the United States has begun production of the modernized tactical missiles and howitzer shells that could carry the neutron bomb.

will want to give up," she said. "But instead we should take what works against us and make it work for us.

"We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing while others judge us by what we have already done."

Queenan compared the seniors' dreams with a seed which would grow into a tree. "That tree will be planted by you and me," he said. "And yet it will be for everyone, for all America, for all the world. And thanks to education the branches will spread their shelter and grow until all races and all people know their shade."

He encouraged all seniors to find a dream and hold onto it, and warned them not to let their dreams die.

"For if dreams die," he said, "life becomes like a broken-winged bird that cannot fly."

Mistress of ceremonies was Felisa Renee Johnson.

"There are times when you must work until various parts of your anatomy swell up, ache, lose all feeling or just feel like they are going to fall off," Harris said of goal-seekers. He said that although striving for success was not an easy task, "people have been working that way since the beginning of time."

The ability to create, cooperate and conquer were three facets of the "Spirit of Youth" cited by Kim in the final graduation speech.

He said that the new ideas of youth were useless if society could not be persuaded to accept them. "We enter a society that is at a crossroad, not only between decades, but also between conflicting moral issues," he said.

New ideas coupled with cooperation will bring about needed changes, Kim promised. "The concept of youthfulness will never be lost, yet it will take the unswerving devotion of all of us to maintain it," he said .

Principal Jerrell Snodgrass gave the introduction and recognized honor graduates. Tom Bevins was master of ceremonies and Sharon Collier gave the invocation.

Music was provided by the Monterey Cantores under the direction of Steve Davis and the Monterey band under Keith Bearden and assistant Mack Bibb.

OPEN MEMORIAL DAY 10 A.M. to 9 P.M.

Witnesses Describe Deadly Fall

CHICAGO (AP) — "I just walked around, trying to touch a body here or there. But I couldn't. It was too hot to do anything but administer the last rites."

The Rev. Ward Morrison's face was streaked with soot and his eyes were red with tears. He had just come from the debris-strewn, smoldering field where a DC-10 crashed Friday, killing 271 people.

"I said some prayers and gave a general absolution. I really could not tell if they were men or women," said the 70-year-old chaplain of the Elk Grove fire department.

He was among 10 clergymen who walked helplessly among the dead. They could only offer prayers. There was no one alive to comfort.

"You walked around just hoping somebody would move. There really wasn't much to do," said Morrison.

The Chicago Fire Department's Roman Catholic chaplain, the Rev. Mathew McDonald, said: "There were bodies or pieces of them everywhere. About all of them were burned. I don't think anyone suffered. It was quick and they must have died instantly."

Dressed in a black trench coat, Cardinal John Cody, archbishop of Chicago, moved across the scorched field. "I gave a blessing to the remains of them. I saw no whole bodies. I think the pilot was trying to avoid the populated areas. I think that. I asked the Lord to have mercy. To have mercy on all of them."

Rescue workers and firemen stuffed dismembered body parts into yellow and blue body bags to be taken to a makeshift morgue at the American Airlines hangar.

"We didn't see one body intact," said fireman Bruce Arbeit. "There were just bits and pieces. We can't tell whether they were an adult or a child, male or female because they were all charred."

Markers with streamers dotted the ground. Yellow indicated where two or three bodies had been found, red for a single body, and black where five bodies had landed.

Joe Robertson, 60, was just leaving work when he saw the big plane coming down. "It was so close I could see the passengers. Jet fuel was spilling out — in fact, some of it actually got on me. I was sprayed with it," he said.

Michael Laughlin, 24, a private pilot from Toronto, was inside the O'Hare terminal taking pictures and caught the plane's descent with his camera. "I had to force myself to shoot. I couldn't believe what I was seeing," he said. "The plane's left engine either flew or fell off, followed by what looked like steam or white smoke. The plane banked sharply to the left until it was approximately at a 90-degree angle to the runway. It continued to bank until it was perpendicular to the runway. It turned away from the runway, nose down, then it hit and exploded."

George Bliss, 30, was driving near the airport and saw the struggling plane. "There was this cartwheeling effect, much like a toy airplane," he said. "There was none of that loud, searing jet noise. It was just like it wasn't there."

Terry Sullivan, an assistant state's attorney, was one of the first to reach the crash site.

"A tragic bit of wreckage was a child's book entitled, 'The Beginning of Life,'" he said.

Passengers Had Front Row Seats

CHICAGO (AP) — The passengers aboard Flight 191 probably watched their DC-10's sickening dive toward the ground on closed-circuit televison, an American Airlines spokesman said Saturday.

The plane was equipped with a television camera mounted behind the captain's shoulder, allowing passengers to get a cockpit view of the takeoff — in this case a 45-second death ride, American spokeswoman Mary Rose Noel said Saturday.

A series of short films had been scheduled for the Chicago-Los Angeles flight, said Mrs. Noel. She said there were several screens in the passenger sections.

Passengers can see the take-off on television monitors and hear conversation between the cockpit crew and the control tower.

All seemed routine until the plane left the ground. The left engine fell off. There was a loud rumbling noise. The plane climbed to no more than 500 feet, rolled to the left at nearly a 90-degree angle.

The plane seemed to hang motionless in the air for a second. Then it plummeted nose-first into the ground on an abandoned small aircraft runway about one-half mile from O'Hare.

It lasted about45 seconds.

Authorities said 271 died, the worst aviation disaster in U.S. aviation history.

American spokesman Art Jackson said the camera is trained on the crews at takeoff and landing as a matter of practice, unless the pilot decides otherwise. He said the camera probably was operating Friday.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Neal Callahan said Flight 191's takeoff, into a 30 mph wind, was "normal." But seconds later, he said, an air traffic controller "saw that the flight was in trouble."

"The controller asked the plane if it wanted to come back and what runway it wanted," Callahan said.

"There was no answer."

Flight 191 'Routine' Until Liftoff

CHICAGO (AP) — A wind of 30 mph was blowing down the runway at O'Hare International Airport as Capt. Walter Lux of Tempe, Ariz., maneuvered his big DC-10 into position to take off to Los Angeles.

But wind is common in the Windy City and the sky was bright Friday as the former Air Force pilot, a veteran of 29 years in the cockpits of American Airlines, went through his routine checks with the control tower.

Except for a brief delay because of a crush of Memorial Day weekend travelers, everything looked normal aboard Flight 191. The same jet had landed at O'Hare at 1:05 p.m. CDT as Flight 630 from Phoenix, Ariz.

The 10 flight attendants busied themselves settling down the 258 passengers on the wide-bodied jet, which was scheduled for a 4:42 p.m. PDT landing.

Among the passengers was a group of publishers on their way to an American Booksellers Association convention. Four editors of Playboy magazine were looking forward to a party at the company's Mansion West in Holmsby Hills outside Los Angeles.

There was a child with a book titled "The Beginnings of Life."

Lux, his co-pilot and flight engineer fussed with their dials and switches. Presumably they turned on the television camera mounted behind the captain's shoulder to give the passengers a cockpit view of the takeoff from several screens in the cabin area.

The controller cleared Flight 191 for takeoff. The big plane sped down the runway, gaining momentum, its three huge engies screaming.

The sleek jetliner lifted off the runway, its nose jutting upward, its tail dropping in the familiar pattern.

Then an air traffic controller saw that Flight 191 was in trouble. He radioed Lux, asking if he wanted to return.

There was no answer. Lux was too busy.

With the jet only a few feet off the ground, its left engine tore loose. The plane, spewing gas from its left wing, climbed to no more than 500 feet and banked sharply to the left, its wings almost perpendicular to the ground.

It seemed to hang motionless in the air for a few seconds, then nosed into the ground on its left wing, disintegrating in a ball of fire. It had been loaded with nearly 22,000 gallons of high-octane fuel.

The time was 3:04 p.m. The journey of Flight 191 had lasted 45 seconds. Two hundred and seventy-one people were dead in the nation's worst aviation disaster.

The Rev. Ward Morrison walked later among the charred remains and twisted metal scattered around the abandoned private airfield in Elk Grove Township.

"I said some prayers and gave a general absolution," said the 70-year-old Roman Catholic chaplain of the Elk Grove Fire Department. "I really couldn't tell if they were men or women.

Pilots Explain Hoplessness Of Engine Loss

CHICAGO (AP) — The loss of an engine from the wing of an airplane in most cases makes recovery by the pilot almost hopeless, particularly at takeoff, according to two commercial pilots.

Witnesses said a wing engine fell off of the DC-10 that took off Friday from O'Hare International Airport and crashed, killing all 271 persons aboard.

"There is no set procedure a pilot can take when an engine tears loose from a wing and falls off," Capt. Robert Vogtritter of United Airlines said Friday night.

"There is a tremendous loss of weight that makes it difficult, if not impossible, to control," said Vogtritter, who said he has 28 years' flying experience. "There is no simulation in a pilot's training for the loss of an engine from a wing, just as there is no simulation, no procedure, for when a plane loses a wing."

Vogtritter flies Boeing 727 jets. They are smaller than the DC-10, but also have three engines.

Jim Tilmon, an American Airlines captain and weatherman for WMAQ-TV in Chicago, said that when an engine falls from a wing it is like a steering wheel coming off a car at 55 mph.

"How many drivers have been trained to handle that?" he asked.

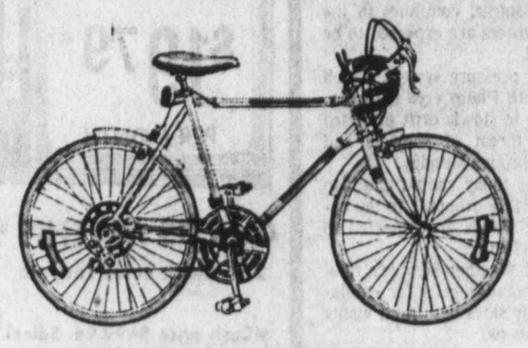

Tilmon recalled an incident in which a pilot successfully landed a commercial plane after an engine was wrenched loose while the plane was in flight at cruising altitude.

"But at 2,500 feet, or 250 feet, it would be impossible to handle it ... The plane (DC-10) was already inverted in the few seconds he (the pilot) had," Tilmon said.

Vogtritter said "the landing is the most difficult time for a pilot, but the takeoff is the most difficult time for the plane."

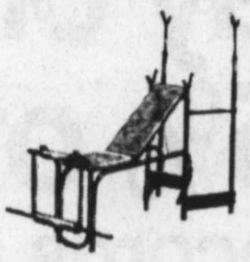

"The engines are at full power on takeoff, and that plane, because it was beginning a long flight to Los Angeles, was probably fully loaded with fuel, passengers and cargo, which complicates handling," he said. "It was probably at maximum gross weight, which makes it more difficult to control if an engine fails."

1979 Will See First Hurricanes Named In America After Men

WASHINGTON (AP) — A quarter century ago, Carol mauled the Northeast. In other years, it has been Hazel, Edna and Greta who've done the damage. But things will change this year, as Hurricane Bob makes his debut in the next few months.

That's right. After years of complaints from women, men finally will share equally the burden of having hurricanes named after them.

Bob will be the first Atlantic or Caribbean hurricane to carry a man's name, though the equality movement started last summer in the Pacific.

That seemed only fair, since the naming of hurricanes after women also started in the Pacific. Australian meteorologist Clement Wragge thought up the idea more than 80 years ago. It took his idea some time to reach the United States, however.

Looking back in history, it had been the practice to name Caribbean hurricanes after the particular saint's day on which the storm took place. This, however, could be confusing because storms named San Felipe struck both in 1876 and 1928.

To avoid confusion, a numbering system was tried, and in the early 1950s there was even a two-year experiment of naming hurricanes after the military phonetic alphabet: Able, Baker, Charlie, and so forth.

Meteorologists, meanwhile, had been happily using Wragge's system of women's names among themselves because it was so much easier than the formal latitude-longitude identification methods.

The use of easily remembered names greatly reduces confusion when more than one storm is in progress, so the use of the women's names became official practice in 1953.

In more recent years, however, the practice has generated criticism from feminists, particularly in the wake of the furious hurricanes Eloise in 1975 and Belle in 1976.

So the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration scrapped its prepared lists and established a new series of storm names covering a five-year period. When each set has been used the series will start again. For example, this year's names will be used again in 1984.

The letters Q, U, X, Y, and Z are not used because of the scarcity of names.

The crossed eyes of silent film comedian Ben Turpin were insured for $500,000 — in case they uncrossed.

Rain Chances Hover Over Plains Area

No significant change is expected in today's weather, as skies once again should be mostly cloudy and temperatures mild. Although a 40 percent chance of rain this afternoon, decreasing to 30 percent tonight, continues in the forecast, the showers are expected to be widely scattered.

A weak low pressure system, which entered the South Plains area Saturday, should continue to slowly drift eastward enhancing the threat of showers and thunderstroms through Monday.

Temperatures today should climb to the upper 70s before dropping to the upper 50s tonight. Winds are expected to be southerly at 5-10 mph.

A return threat of thunderstorms is expected Wednesday and Thursday and temperatures through most of the week should peak in the 80s before falling into the 60-degree range at night.

Texas skies were partly cloudy late Saturday with a few scattered showers reported in the northern Panhandle. A tornado warning was issued for Gray County, located northeast of Amarillo, where a funnel briefly touched ground west of Pampa. No damage was reported.

Temperatures averaged from the upper 70s to mid 80s across the state. Lubbock recorded a high of 79 degrees.

Texas 'Killer Bee' Story May Be Over

By BILL KIDD
A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN -As one observer noted, it had all the elements of a fairly good made-for-TV movie: chase scenes, narrow escapes and virtue triumphant at the end.

"It" being the flight of the "Killer Bee" senators, who returned amid the cheers and buzzing of the Senate gallery.

The incident undeniably had its amusing side — and it's serious side as well.

It depends, however, as to which side of the political fence one is on as to whether the 12 disappearing senators were duty-shirking obstructionists intent on having their own way, or Robin Hood-like figures, vanishing into Sherwood Forest to flee tyranny and injustice.

As Oscar Wilde noted, truth is never pure and rarely simple — and in this instance, as often is the case in politics, the truth likely lies between the two views set out above.

What started the row was a parliamentary maneuver by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to get action on a bill, which could reasonably enough be assumed to be a vehicle, for a presidential primary measure similar to that which the "Killer Bees" had been opposing.

Hobby later argued that he hadn't changed the rules of the game.

True enough. But he had started using some different rules.

Hobby was well within his rights to use those parliamentary tactics if he felt the measure being considered should have come up for consideration.

What happened was that Hobby was out-manuevered by use of another parliamentary tactic — unusual, but not unknown, and, as it turned out, an effective one.

Whether one finds the result good or bad depends on one's point of view.

If one favored a separate presidential preference primary, then the result was bad.

If one opposed a split primary, the result was good.

But if one was interested in some of the bills which were struck down, or which might not have been considered as a result of the standstill of the Senate...that is another matter.

But most of the bills which the Legislature won't pass — and that is the great majority of them — wouldn't have been passed, regardless of whether the "Killer Bees" had stayed.

One of the senators who remained commented that he agreed that the State may have been done a favor in that a number of measures were not passed, and that the Senate had been done a favor in not having to debate them.

They are simply a tool, like a hammer, which can be used to build, or to destroy, depending on the skill and intent of the instrument's wielder.

Had the five-day absence been used to defeat a bill on which the entire public agreed, a clear case could be made that the action was against the public interest.

But in a case as murky as that of a purely political issue, it's much less certain what the public interest may be.

The 12 "Killer Bees" say they took their action in support of their convictions that the split primary was against the public interest.

And on questions of principle, there is wide latitude in what may be right or wrong.

Frequently, there isn't a "right" or a "wrong" side on such issues, only a difference in philosophy and outlook.

Such differences are accommodated within the system, although the accommodations may tend to be a bit on the cramped sides at time.

The Senate's two-thirds rule serves to protect a minority, and to encourage compromise that tends to round off the extreme edges of positions and enable them to roll along a middle-of-the-road, consensus position.

Tyranny is not desirable, either by a majority or a minority.

Politics often involves trade-offs of various kinds, often to get a bill out of a committee where a minority of one can be enough to prevent a measure from ever coming to a vote on the floor — even though a majority of lawmakers may favor it.

At any given time, and on any given issue, some of those personalities are going to be in conflict.

But eventually the process tends to work out the differences, and use of parliamentary procedures are part of that.

The "Killer Bees" say they left because of their convictions. The "Worker Bees" say they stayed because of their convictions.

If that's so, the State of Texas was well-served, and constitutional duties were met by both sides.

Dead Newsman Reported Biographer Of Terrorist

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A West German newsman slain in Beirut was reported Saturday to have completed a book about the late Palestinian guerrilla leader Wadie Haddad, reputed godfather of international terrorism.

The leftist Beirut newspaper As Safir said Karl Robert Pfeifer, who was assassinated by unknown gunmen in Beirut's Moslem sector Thursday, called the book: "Wadie Haddad, the Prophet of Revolutionary Violence in the Twentieth Century."

Haddad, who died of a blood disease 13 months ago, masterminded history's most spectacular aircraft hijack in 1970

State Senate Okays Water Import Plan For High Plains

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate Saturday gave final approval to legislation for creation of a voter import authority for the West Texas-High Plains area.

The bill, HB 2205, sponsored by Rep. Bob Simpson, Amarillo, and carried in the Senate by Sen. E.L. Short, Tahoka, received final Senate passage on a 24-6 vote.

Following final action, Short said he was pleased that the bill needs only House acceptance of amendments added by Sen. Bob Price, Pampa, before the measure goes to Gov. Bill Clements.

Those amendments were added in the Senate Friday to clear up language on the types of water described in the measure and for rewording of some other sections, without, Short said, changing the substance of the House bill.

The measure includes most of the counties overlying the Ogallala Aquifer.

The district will be activated by action of the Water Development Board, after sources and a plan for import of water have been determined, Short noted.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — More than 5,000 Nepalese students and young people have fled to India, alleging persecution by Nepal's military, the United News of India reported Saturday from Patna, eastern India.

The report did not say if the refugees had begun returning to Nepal following Thursday's announcement of a referendum to determine the political future of the Himalayan kingdom.

THIS ONE'S FOR REAL — Although the Dallas session was a training session, not every ship emergency can be simulated. Four Naval Reservists were assigned the very real task of putting out a fire. (U.S. Naval Reserve Photo)

FINALLY OVER — Although most of the drills during the Naval Reserve's training session in Dallas this month were simulated, participants found there is no way to simulate the work required. Exhausted Seaman Manuel Solis takes a short nap as he awaits transportation home. (U.S. Naval Reserve Photo)

Lubbock Naval Reserve Unit Trains At Dallas Simulator

If the United States suddenly faced a wartime situation, the first called to active duty would be members of military reserve units who would supply the manpower necessary to support the armed forces for at least the first 90 days of an armed conflict.

Part of the training to keep naval reserve units ready for armed conflict is a $1 million shipboard simulator located in the Naval Reserve Center at Naval Air Station in Dallas.

The Lubbock Naval Reserve Unit went to Dallas May 19 and 20 to train at the simulator and Lt. Cmdr. Bill Poteet, commanding officer of the Lubbock unit, said the training was realistic and encompassed everything applicable the unit needed to operate a ship.

The only problem not simulated was firefighting. But that phase of training was handled outside the simulator, where a metal building was set ablaze and and the officers and crew extinguished the flames.

Not all cruises are simulated for reserve units. The Lubbock unit is assigned to and spends time saling the USS Barbey, home-based in San Diego, Calif. If a wartime situation arises, the Lubbock unit will begin work on the ship within two days.

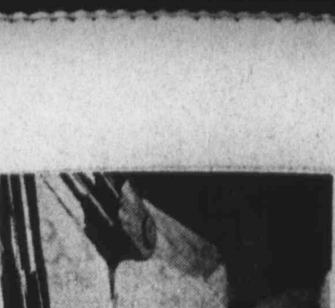

Ship cruises cannot teach crews how to work with wartime problems, such as mine fields. The simulator provides reservists with such experience.

Petty Officer 3rd Class Donna Peterson was one reservist who traveled to Dallas to train in the simulator. Mrs. Peterson works in Midland and trained at the simulator the same time as the Lubbock unit.

She was a phone-talker on the bridge of the simulator and knew nothing about phone-talking (a special type of shipboard communication) when she arrived in Dallas.

"I didn't know what to expect," said Mrs. Peterson, a reservist storekeeper. "I got a little briefing last month."

She said she was teased a bit because she was the only woman among 30 men, but she thinks she was accepted by the other reservists without question.

Some died in conflict with great courage and valor...some died simply because they were there.
Many were barely more than frightened children with very little understanding of the complexities of nations and war.
But, they were there, giving the most precious gift anyone could give to their country...to us.
We cannot...we must not forget.

Indy Drivers Poised For 'Difficult' Classic

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The mood prior to today's Indianapolis 500 is about as surly, cold and bleak as the unseasonable weather leading up to it. Most of the racing fraternity sense the 63rd running of the Memorial Day weekend classic is the end of an era.

After more than 30 years under the control of the Hulman family, Indianapolis Motor Speedway is for sale, and there is no shortage of prospective buyers. A quick sale is expected. The Hulmans reportedly are tired of the hassles, the lawsuits and the criticism of the purse of "just" $1 million.

Speculation on who might actually win the race has taken a back seat to court battles, subpoenas, fines, appeals and endless controversies. Attorneys even succeeded in getting time trials reopened for an unprecedented fifth round Saturday. Two more cars qualified, the first time there's been more than 33 starters since 1933.

Even the weatherman refuses to cooperate. Rain, a regular race day threat since 1973, is a possibility yet again.

It's especially difficult to pinpoint a likely candidate for victory this year. Will A.J. Foyt add an unprecedented fifth Indy triumph to his matchless list of career accomplishments? Will Al Unser successfully defend his victory and join Foyt as a four-time winner? Will one of the "overdue" drivers such as Tom Sneva, Danny Ongais or Wally Dallenbach finally win his first?

No one will even guess.

The impact of the myriad of rules changes since last year is unknown. Most of the field is comprised of entries from the rebel Championship Auto Racing Teams group, and they never have raced under the current U.S. Auto Club rules before.

The CART teams, including most of the sport's biggest names, are running here under court order to obey the USAC rules. No one is sure whether USAC, CART or some yet unformed group of survivors of that war will be running the show next year.

Even the USAC regulars don't really know what to expect because new rules have been added this month. A pace car will pack up the field during caution periods for the first time. The pacer lights which kept the intervals between cars under the yellow flag are gone, opening up the race to a driver other than the one who runs the fastest all day with the fewest problems.

If the rules favor anyone, it may be the ageless Foyt. He has won every USAC race this season, and 1973 winner Gordon Johncock was quoted as saying: "USAC's rules are rigged so no one but Foyt can win." It's certainly not a simple as that, however.

The best bets, as always, are the former winners — Foyt, Al and Bobby Unser, Johncock and Johnny Rutherford.

"There's nothing as hard to get as that first one," Rutherford said. "It's possible to know how to win races and still not be able to win here. To win one here for the first time, you have to have it all together — the car, experience, talent, a good crew, and an error-free race."

There are any number of starters who have most, if not all, of the ingredients — Ongais, Sneva, pole position starter Rick Mears, Mike Mosley. Even the slowest qualifier, Roger McCluskey, can't be completely ruled out.

Watson Leads Memorial

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Miller Barber, four shots back of Tom Watson going into today's final round of the Memorial Golf Tournament, saw little chance of overhauling the man Barber says is approaching golfing greatness.

"I think Tom can be one of the great players," said the veteran Barber, known to his fellow pros as Mr. X and now into his third decade of tour competition.

"He has the desire and he definitely has the swing. He has the temperament and the ability.

"There is something you can see in all the great athletes. I've seen it in Palmer, Nicklaus, Trevino and others.

(Memorial Scores, Page 4, Sec. B)

"And you can see it in Tom.

"All the great athletes have just something extra that the rest of us don't have."

Then he turned his attention to his chances of catching the front-running Watson.

"Believe me, he's playing extremely well," Barber said Saturday. "If anybody is gonna beat him, they're gonna have to shoot lights out."

Both Barber and host Jack Nicklaus took runs at Watson during the third round, Both eventually fell back. And Watson, with a round of par 72, was able to retain his commanding lead.

Watson, with a 54-hole total of 214, 2 shots under par, managed to finish the round as he started — 4 strokes in front of the frustrated field.

That lead twice dwindled to one when Nicklaus made his move on the front side. But he backed off with bogeys on three of four holes beginning on the 10th.

Then it was Barber, the chunky old pro they call "X," who made a move at the gritty Watson, the season's leading money-winner and gunning for a fourth title of the year. Barber ripped off four back-nine birdies, was within 2 strokes of the lead, then blew to a double bogey-6 on the 18th hole on the extremely difficult, 7,101-yard Muirfield Village Golf Club course.

The 48-year-old Barber finished second alone at 218, 2 shots over par, after a 71 in weather that remained cool and breezy, but was a distinct improvement of the horrible conditions that plagued the tournament Friday.

Nicklaus, with a 74, was tied for third at 220, 6 shots back. He shared the position with Lon Hinkle and Tom Kite. Kite also had a 74 while Hinkle matched par 72.

Cross-handed putter Bruce Lietzke and Lanny Wadkins, a two-time winner this season, were next at 221, 5 shots over par and 7 back of Watson. Lietzke had a 72 and Wadkins a 73.

Arnold Palmer shot a 74 and was at 230. U.S. Open champ Andy North had 76-231, PGA titleholder John Mahaffey 72-228 and Masters king Fuzzy Zoeller 71-224.

Watson, who has finished first of second in seven events this season has assured himself of becoming the first player in history to win $300,000 in thee consecutive seasons. All he needs to do is finish the tournament.

His lead appeared in danger when Nicklaus, the Memorial tournament founder, course designer, host and moving force, made a move early in the round. He birdied three of the first five holes and only was a stroke back when he got his second shot in the water and made double bogey-6 on the sixth hole.

But Watson came back to him. Tom also made double bogey. His was on the par-3 eighth hole where he was plugged in a bunker, came out long and 3-putted.

That cut the lead to one again, but Nicklaus took himself out of it with his string of bogeys beginning on the 10th.

It was about that time that Barber bewan to move. He birdied the 11th and 13th then 2-putted for birdie 4 on the 15th while Watson had to scramble out of the woods to make par. Now he was within 2 strokes of the leading Watson, who was playing in the same group.

O's Need 16 Innings To Subdue Tigers

DETROIT (AP) — Earl Weaver has his Baltimore Orioles soaring like eagles over the American League East, but he hardly has time to enjoy the lofty view.

"It's good to have a little cushion," Weaver said after the Orioles' 7-5 baseball victory over the Detroit Tigers in 16 innings Saturday. "But it's too early to even think about it.

"In this business, you can only think about tomorrow — and today we've got two more games to play."

Lee May ripped a tie-breaking, two-run single in the 16th inning to provide the Birds with the winning margin. Rookie Sammy Stewart, 2-1, pitched five innings of one-hit relief to get credit for the triumph.

He got out of his only serious jam in the 14th when Lynn Jones popped out on a 3-0 pitch with the bases loaded.

"I said 'thank you, Merry Christmas' when he did that," Steward said fn the dressing room.

Stewart and veteran John Hiller matched scoreless innings from the 12th until the 16th with Hiller, 3-3, taking the defeat.

The streaking Orioles have won 26 of their last 32 games and stretched their lead in the AL East to 3½ games over Boston while Detroit dipped into sixth place, one-half game behind Cleveland.

"I guess that's part of the game," said Arroyo, who had just been called up from the Tigers' farm club at Evansville, Ind. "That turkey just snuck right on through."

The Tigers tied the score 5-5 with two runs in the bottom of the ninth. Steve Kemp led off against Tim Stoddard with his sixth home run of the season. Rusty Staub followed with a single and pinch runner Jack Morris went to second on Jason Thompson's single.

Texas Advances In Regional

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' Jerry Don Gleaton clubbed a two-run homer to cap a four-run eighth inning that rallied the Longhorns to a 6-4 victory over Lamar University Saturday night. The win advanced Texas to the finals of the NCAA Central Region baseball tournament.

The upstart Cardinals had worked over Texas ace Keith Creel with a fence-rattling four-run third inning to take a 4-1 lead in the double elimination tournament.

Lamar must play Brigham Young Monday afternoon for the right to meet Texas again Monday night in the finals of the tournament.

BYU eliminated Pan American, 11-5, earlier Saturday.

Lamar, which dropped to a 44-15 record, shocked Creel, the most valuable layer in the recent SWC tournament with two triples, two singles and a double in their big third inning.

Kearney Duo Blisters Reese Golf Layout

By CHUCK McDONALD
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Walter Mitty must have been lurking in the shadows around the Reese AFB golf course on Saturday. In fact, he was probably standing around the beer truck on the seventh hole and just laughing his fool head off.

Because a couple of Lubbock golfers that had never been much of a force in local tournaments, Ron Hughes and Tom Miller, burst into the limelight in the first round of the Reese Partnership Golf Tournament by carding a 6-under-par 66. That put the duo in second place behind Jim Kearney and Jack McIntyre who sizzled to a 9-under 63.

Just as James Thurber's Mitty used to throw off his spectacles at the last moment and emerge as the unlikely man of the hour — Miller and Hughes snuck up on the other golfers at Reese.

"I don't know what happened," said Hughes. "We must have been unconscious. I shot the best round of my entire life today."

"If we shoot a 66 tomorrow," added Miller, "you'd better look out — because the world might come to an end."

Hughes had a career low round of 68 while Miller had a par-72 but chipped in two crucial birdies. Both men are regulars at Meadowbrook.

But if the success of those two was surprising, the championship flight leaders — Kearney and McIntyre — were about as much of a surprise as Nancy Lopez is every time she takes another LPGA championship.

Kearney was half of last year's team that won the Reese event with a 35-under score, and on Saturday shot a round of 64. All that his partner McIntyre had to do was chip in an eagle on the 15th.

"I just had a great round today," said Kearney. "But it's going to be hard to improve on a 64."

Even though Kearney and McIntyre lead the field there are still plenty of golfers that could give them a run at the championship.

The father-son team of Rick and Dick Alexander are at 67 and there are five teams tied at 68. Included in the group at 68 are Texas Tech golfers Mark Jarrett and Rex Robertson and Monterey seniors Clif Baggett and Brian Sheffield. Brian's older brother, Bucky Sheffield, and John Shepperson also turned in a score of 68.

All 12 teams in the championship flight are under par.

The competition is just as stiff in the other flights also. In the first flight only 4 strokes separate the best scores from the worst. All the scores went from par-72 to 76.

In the second flight it's even closer; all teams are between 77 and 80. And the rest of the field, from 81 to 90 is in the third flight.

The championship and first flights will tee off at 1:30 in the afternoon and the bottom two flights at 8:30 a.m.

But the talk in the clubhouse provided at least part of the explanation for the close field. The prevailing mood was that some of the golfers were sandbagging their scores on Saturday to get into a lower flight.

But no one could level that charge against Miller and Hughes.

"Nobody can say were sandbagging," said Hughes. "They'll just say we're stupid."

"But I'd rather get beat by the best than be out there in the lower flights like we usually are," added his partner Miller.

This is only the second time the two have played as a team — the other time was in this tournament last year. The best round the two could muster last year was a 76. So they realize they could be playing out of their league today.

"What the heck," said Hughes. "I'd rather be here, at least we'll get to watch some good golf instead of playing with the hackers."

But Miller wasn't so sure.

"We're just a couple of old boys who like to drink beer and smoke cigarettes," he said laughing.

Sonics Entertain Bullets Today

SEATTLE (AP) — A pass is tipped, the ball bounces free, there is a scramble and a Seattle player gains possession. Suddenly, even before the 24-second clock is set, Gus Williams is off and running, racing upcourt toward another opportunity basket.

"Our defense sets up our offense, and that's especially true for me," said Williams, the SuperSonics' backcourt leader whose 55 points and aggressive defense helped Seattle gain a split of the first two games of its National Basketball Association championship series against the Washington Bullets last week, on the Bullets' home court.

The best-of-seven playoff final resumes today at the Kingdome, where a crowd of about 35,000 is anticipated. The fourth game will also be played here, but at the 14,098-capacity Coliseum, because the Kingdome is committed to a baseball game.

Williams has led thr Sonics in scoring and assists the last two years, since coming over from Golden State as a free agent. What makes that so remarkable is that Seattle's offense is not geared toward him.

"Most of my points don't come by design," said the lightning-quick, 6-foot-2 guard from Southern Cal, a veteran of four pro seasons.

"I'm most effective in the transition game, especailly following loose balls and turnovers. I try to beat the defense downcourt. That way I can get the shot I want, not the one they want to give me."

Both coaches in this title series appreciate the value of a player like Williams, who has thus far totally outplayed his Washington counterpart, Tom Henderson.

"We like to run and we run better when Gus is in there to handle the ball and get things going," said Seattle Coach Lenny Wilkens. "When he's on the court, nobody stands around."

Containing Williams is just one of the keys to Sunday's nationally televised (CBS, 2 p.m. CDT) game for the defending champion Bullets. They've also got to figure out a solution to the double-teaming pressure defense Seattle threw at them in the second game, which held the Bullets to just 30 points in the second half as Seattle won 92-82.

"When your're playing against a zone or a zone-type defense," said Motta, "you've got to go right at it. You can't just stand around. You've got to push the ball upcourt and go right into the jaws of that defense."

The Sonics went to Washington hopeful of a split in the first two games of thr series, and they got it. Now it's up to the Bullets to do the same, or else find themselves on the brink of elimination once again, as they were in earlier playoffs against Atlanta and San Antonio.

"If they let us win both games here," said Paul Silas, the Sonics' veteran reserve forward, "there's no way they're going to beat us three straight. No way — and that's the name of that tune."

Rangers Edge Mariners

By The Associated Press

Jon Matlack checked Seattle on six hits as the Texas Rangers edged the Mariners 2-1 to snap a three-game losing streak.

Matlack, 3-2, struck out nine and did not walk a batter in his slick, route-going performance.

The Rangers also tagged Seattle's Glenn Abbott, 2-6, for six hits, including doubles by John Grubb and Al Oliver.

Seattle took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on a single by Willie Horton, a double by Leon Roberts and Dan Meyer's single. The Rangers tied it in the fourth as Jim Sundberg drove in Oliver with a single off Julio Cruz's glove.

BLUE JAYS 7, RED SOX 6

Roy Howell hit a three-run homer with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning, lifting the Toronto Blue Jays to a 7-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Howell's shot over the right field fence was his third homer of the season and came off reliever Bill Campbell, 2-2, who put down a Toronto threat in the seventh inning and had retired all seven batters he faced.

INDIANS 8, YANKEES 4

Bobby Bonds led off with the first home run of the season off Tommy John and added two doubles as the Cleveland Indians ended the previously unbeaten New York left-hander's winning streak at nine games by defeating the New York Yankees 8-4.

Bonds lifted John's second pitch in the bottom of the first inning over the center field fence — the first home run off John since last Sept. 3. Gary Alexander also homered off John, who was chased in the fifth inning and contrbuted to his own downfall with a throwing error that cost him two unearned runs.

ANGELS 8, WHITE SOX 4

Dan Ford smashed two doubles and Brian Downing and Rick Miller each delivered two-run singles to lead the California Angels to an 8-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Frank Tanana, 4-3, gained the victory but needed seventh-inning help from Mark Clear, who earned his fourth save. Rookie Fred Howard, making his major league debut, took the loss.

ROYALS 7, TWINS 4

Willie Wilson drove in three runs and Todd Cruz knocked in two as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Minnesota Twins 7-4.

The Royals had leads of 3-0 and 5-1 before Twins rookie John Castino slammed a two-run homer off Rich Gale, 4-3, with no outs in the seventh inning. Larry Gura replaced Gale and struck out four of the next six batters and later needed relief help himself.

REDS 3, DODGERS 1

Johnny Bench doubled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning and Fred Norman pitched a six-hitter as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the Los Angeles Dodgers 3-1.

The Reds, who had been held to only three hits through six innings by loser Don Sutton, 5-4, broke a 1-1 tie with two runs in the seventh.

METS 10, PIRATES 8

Steve Henderson lined a two-run homer to straightaway center field in the seventh inning, carrying the New York Mets to a 10-8 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Willie Montanez led off the seventh with a walk off Pirate reliever Kent Tekulve, 2-5, and was sacrificed to second. Henderson then lined a 2-1 delivery from Tekulve over the 410-foot in dead center for his second homer of the season, giving the Mets a 9-8 lead and putting them in front for the third and final time in the game. Joel Youngblood homered in the eighth for the Mets' final run.

CUBS 4, PHILLIES 1

Ivan DeJesus and Ted Sizemore singled home seventh-inning runs Saturday night to help the Chicago Cubs defeat the Philadelphia Phillies 4-1.

Dick Tidrow came on to pitch three hitless innings and pick up his first save for the Cubs. Dennis Lamp, 4-1, picked up the victory, allowing just five hits in six innings.

BRAVES 5, GIANTS 4

Gary Mtthews, who hit a two-run homer earlier, greeted Tom Griffin with a two-run single in the ninth inning, driving in the tying and winning runs and lifting the Atlanta Braves to a 5-4 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

BREWERS 8, A's 4

Cecil Cooper broke up a scoreless duel with a three-run, sixth-inning homer and Dick Davis followed with a bases-empty blast and the Milwaukee Brewers went on to beat the Oakland A's 8-4.

Loser Rick Langford, 1-7, was working on a two-hitter and had retired 13 straight batters before Jim Gantner singled with one out in the Brewers' sixth and barely made third on Robin Yount's hit-and-run single. Cooper belted the next pitch into the right field seats, his ninth homer of the year. Davis' fourth homer, five pitches later, chased Langford.

ASTROS 9, PADRES 0

Jeff Leonard drove in five runs and Joe Niekro gained his sixth victory of the season with a six-hitter as the Houston Astros beat San Diego 9-0.

The victory was the fifth complete game of the year for Niekro, 6-2, and his third shutout of the year. Niekro walked four and struck out five.

Houston battered starter Mickey Lolich and three Padre relievers for 13 hits. Lolich, 0-2, lasted only 1 2/3 innings while giving up four runs, two of them unearned, on six singles, a walk and an error.

Leonard had three singles in his first three at-bats to gain his five RBI.

Reds Watch EHS 14-Year-Old

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

All Vince Buffamonte could say was: "A baseball scout coming to the east side of Lubbock? Heck. There aren't even any pizza places over here."

So, it remains a mystery on how the Cincinnati Reds found out about Estacado's Hector Limon.

But last Monday, when Limon went to the mailbox, a letter on the Reds' stationery invited the Matador left fielder to a tryout camp at Texas Wesleyan College in Fort Worth. The tryout camp will be held Tuesday and Wednesday.

True, it is not uncommon for high school baseball players to receive letters from various major league teams inviting them to such tryouts. But Limon is only 14 years old, and because of his age, he may not be able to take part.

"I've got final exams in world history, science and English Tuesday," said Limon. "On Wednesday, I have to take math and art tests. If Coach Buffamonte can't talk the Reds into having the camp at a different time, then I'll just have to miss it."

So Buffamonte is trying to reach Reds scouting supervisor Larry Smith, the man fwho signed the letter Limon received. Buffamonte traced him to Enid, Okla., where he's conducting another camp but has been unable to reach by phone the past week.

"Even if I don't get the chance to go to the workout, the letter has sure helped my confidence," said Limon. "But I can't let it go to my head, even though I admit it already has a little bit."

While Limon has been suffering a little bit of a headache from the latest news, the Estacado freshman has also caused opposing pitchers to take a few aspirins with his bat this season.

Limon finished the season with a .451 batting average, which included eight doubles, three triples and two home runs. He was second on the team in run production with 31 RBIs.

"Coach Buffamonte changed my batting style this season," said Limon. "He moved my arms back and opened my stance. All I try to do is meet the ball. I think I could hit the long ball if I wanted to to, but this year I was trying more for average.

"The thing I need working on the most is base running. My body just doesn't react as fast as it used to a couple of years ago."

Before the Reds wrote him, Cincinnati was never one of Limon's choices of places he would like to play major league baseball one day.

"I've always been a Baltimore Orioles' fan," said Limon. "Now, the Reds are my second choice."

Though Limon was mostly used in left field during the district season, he actually played four positions last season, pitcher, catcher and shortstop.

"If I had my choice, I want to play shortstop," said Limon. "It just gives a good feeling making the long throw from there to first."

If Limon does get to go to the tryout camp, he isn't expecting expecting the scouts to run out an offer him a contract with a substantial bonus.

"I just want to show them what I can do," said Limon. I would expect that they would want to see what I can do with the bat and how strong my arm is."

"It got a little sore towards the end of the season, because I've never been used to playing 34 games. It needs to get stronger, and I think it will in time."

Is Limon really of major league quality?

"If he continues to improve, I really believe that with three more years under his belt, he'll be of major league quality," said Buffamonte. "But he's got to continue to improve and keep polishing his skills."

Stoll Reaches Finals

BERLIN (AP) — Unseeded Caroline Stoll of Livingston, N.J., advanced to the final of the $100,000 German women's tennis championships Saturday by thrashing third-seeded Virginia Ruzici of Romania 6-1, 6-1.

The 19-year-old Miss Stoll faces sixth-seeded Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia in today's final. The Czech scored the day's other upset when she toppled Evonne Goolagong Cawley of Australia 6-7, 3-6, 6-3.

Miss Stoll, who lost to Chris Evert Lloyd in the final of the Vienna tournament last week, moved out to a 3-0 lead in the first set before Miss Ruzici, 24, scored her only game of the set by holding serve.

Lifting her high, top-spin shots to within inches of the baseline, Miss Stoll pinned Miss Ruzici against the back fence where she was forced to hit overheads from difficult positions that often ended in the net.

Miss Stoll took the next six games for 6-1, 3-0 before she dropped her serve. She then continued, playing with maximum confidence and authority, to drop only three points in the next three games for the victory.

"I thought I played awfully well and Virginia, I think, was a little off," Miss Stoll said.

In the other semifinal match, Miss Marsikova, 20, who had never defeated Mrs. Cawley in four previous attempts, took the first set with surprising ease.

Mrs. Cawley, who had been playing erratically and making numerous unforced errors, steadied herself and began throwing in short balls to her opponent's forehand, which gave Miss Marsikova difficulty.

Mrs. Cawley, leading 4-3, broke Miss Marsikova's serve for 5-3 and then held easily for 6-3 to put the match into a third set.

Miss Marsikova never trailed in the final set, breaking serve for 4-2. She dropped her service in the next frame but, relying on her strong backhand passing shot, broke Goolagong once again for 5-3.

Tully Misses World Record In Pole Vault

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Pole vaulter Mike Tully cleared the 18-foot mark for the first time this season, but failed in three tries Saturday night to break the world record at the U.S. Track and Field Association's outdoor championships.

After Tully won the competition by being the only vaulter to attain 18-2, the pole was moved up to 18-8¾, one-quarter of an inch better than the world mark owned by Dave Roberts.

But the former NCAA champion from UCLA brushed the bar aside on two of the three tries, and the third was far short.

Tully cleared 18-8¾ at the Pacific-10 meet last year, but meet officials accidentally jarred the bar loose before the jump could be measured as an official world record.

Earl Bell, former Olympian pole vaulter who set a world record at Wichita three years ago, finished in a disappointing tie for fifth place at 17-6.

Pecos Claims Bidistrict Title, Faces Snyder

Borger won the first game 3-2 in 13 innings to even the bidistrict series but the visiting Eagles won the second contest 4-1 to move on up a notch and will face Snyder in the regional round.

In the long first game, the Bulldogs came to the bottom of the seventh trailing 2-1, but managed to tie the game after a collision at first base.

With one out, Borger leftfielder Mike Tuten singled and advanced to second after catcher Nathan Bailey reached on an error by Pecos third baseman Ren Molinar.

Centerfielder Mike Engel advanced the runners on a slow groundout beforeChris Ray, the Bulldog rightfielder, hit a hard grounder to shortstop Mark Dingler. Ray beat Dingler's throw to first and collided with Pecos first baseman Jimmy Galindo.

Galindo was momentarily stunned, and this enabled Tuten to score the tying run. Bailey also attempted to score on the play but Galindo recovered sufficiently to throw him out at the plate.

Tuten became the game's hero in the 13th when he singled in shortstop Wayne Wheeler with the winning run with two out.

Tuten quickly turned from hero to goat in the first inning of the second game when he lost a fly ball in left field with two out, allowing Pecos leftfielder Jerry Anchando to score from third.

MHS Tracksters Pick Wayland

PLAINVIEW (Special) — Monterey High School track performers Bart Tarleton and Richard Davis will compete for Wayland Baptist College next year. Both players have signed letters-of-intent with the school.

Tarleton, tri-captain of the Monterey squad, is a halfmiler. His best time in the 880-yard run is 1.58. Tarleton also ran on the Plainsmen's mile relay team the past two seasons.

Davis runs distances and cross-country. The National Merit Finalist received three letters in track and four letters in cross-country at MHS.

His best times in the mile and two mile are 4:33.7 and 10:16.2,respectively. Davis posted a 1:58.9 in the 880-yard run and a 15:34 in the three-mile run.

GARDNER LEADS SOONERS

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Former Monterey High standout Scott Gardner scattered five hits in leading Oklahoma to a 9-2 victory over Indiana State Saturday in a consolation bracket game in the NCAA Midwest Regionals baseball playoffs. Gardner went the distance, striking out eight for the Sooners.

TWU Ace Sets U.S. Mark

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Louise Ritter of Texas Woman's University broke her own American record of 6 feet, 3 inches Saturday by clearing the bar at 6-3½ in winning the high jump title in the finals of the 11th annual AIAW Track and Field Championships at Michigan State University.

The jump also broke Miss Ritter's 1977 Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women meet record of 6-3.

But it was California State-Northridge which walked away with the title for the second consecutive year, with 67 points. The runner-up was Arizona State with 58, followed by Tennessee with 32 and Miss Ritter's TWU with 26.

There were 55 teams that scored. In all, there were Ralph Young Field records set in 18 of the 20 championship events.

Debbie Esser of Iowa State became the first woman ever to win four straight AIAW titles in one event. She broke her own 1977 meet record time of 57.07 second in the 400-meter hurdles by covering the distance in 56.63. That time was not far off Marie Ayers' 1977 American record of 56.61.

"This was my last collegiate meet and it went like I hoped it would," she said.

Miss Esser is hoping the 400-meter hurdles is included in the 1984 Olympics. It is not among the events for the 1980 games.

In other finals, Stephanie Hightower of Ohio State upset Deby LaPlante, the American record holder, in the 100-meter hurdles by crossing the finish line in 13.2. The victory came as a surprise to Hightower, but the six-time Big Ten indoor and outdoor champion said she runs best in the cold weather — and it was cold.

Also repeating for the second consecutive year was Cathy Sulinski of Cal State-Hayward, who threw the javelin 184-3, bettering last year's 173-1.

Shot putter Kathy Devine of Texas won her third AIAW title by throwing the shot 52-7¾. With that throw, she broke a field record she set only a day before of 51-3¾.

Miss Devine also won the championship in 1976 and 1977.

Arizona State defended its title in the 440-relay with a time of 4:45.21. Kathy Crawford, Freida Cobb, Brenda Calhoun and Val Boyer comprised the winning team.

Valery Brisco of Cal State-Northridge took the 200-meter dash in 23.6. Brenda Webb of Tennessee won two titles, the 1,500 meter in 4:17.7 and the 3,000 meter in 9:15.8.

Yolanda Rich of Cal State-Los Angeles was the winner in the 400-meter dash. Her time was 52.6. The 5,000-meter title was taken by Julie Shea of North Carolina State in 16:05.9. In the 800-meter final, Susan Vigil of New Mexico narrowly won with a 2:04.1.

Morgan State won the mile relay in 3:37.37, while the two-mile relay was taken by Oregon State in 8:42.9.

Simpson Plans To Hang 'Em Up After '79 Season

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers look on the coming season as a time for a fresh start.

For O.J. Simpson, it will be the end. He says it will be the last season of his playing career.

"It's feasible that he could have a great season," coach Bill Walsh said at a gathering of head coaches from the National Football Conference's Western Division.

It's also possible, Los Angeles Rams coach Ray Malavasi said, that Simpson already has played his last National Football League season.

"I think he'll either be starting for the 49ers or he won't play at all. If he realized in training camp that he doesn't have it any more, I think he'd end up quitting," Malavasi said.

"O.J. hasn't talked about the possibility of not playing this year," said Walsh.

Simpson's salary, highest in the NFL, will be about $800,000 this season. But he's not hanging on just for the money, Walsh said.

"He wants to finish strong," the coach said. "A lot of great athletes, football players, boxers and others, have stumbled out at the end of their careers. O.J. is determined not to.

"He's not that kind of athlete."

Last season, Simpson's first with the 49ers, the running back could not regain the form that allowed him to rush for 10,183 yards in nine years with the Buffalo Bills. He gained 593 yards in 10 games, going over 100 yards just once, before suffering a shoulder injury.

"He's physically sound now. He wasn't last year, regardless of his general condition. His knee just bothered him too much. He couldn't move like he once did, accelerate like he used to," said Walsh.

"He seems fine now."

The 49ers' new coach was crossing fingers on both hands as he made the statement about the physical condition of Simpson, who underwent knee surgery midway through the 1977 season.

Walsh, as an assistant coach with Cincinnati and San Diego, saw Simpson at his best a few years ago. The appraisal of last year's running is based on game films. Walsh coached Stanford the last two years before returning to the NFL, taking over a team which finished 2-14 last season.

Simpson was running well at a 49ers' weekend training camp last month, according to Walsh, and so was Wilbur Jacksonn the veteran fullback who was injured even before last season started and never got to play with Simpson.

"We'd like to emphasize O.J., spotlight hm in our game plans," Walsh said. "He knows what he has to do, and I think we know how to use him.

"He could give us what we need to get a good start, to get a new program under way."

Kemper Open Bids Farewell To Charlotte

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — After 11 years in Charlotte, the Kemper Open golf tournament will be played locally for the last time this week.

Officials of the tournament announced in January that after the 1979 Kemper, the tournament will be moved to Congressional Country Club in suburban Washington, D.C. The main reasons for the move, according to tournament officials, are potential crowd size, course reputation and size of the host city.

Action starts Monday at the Quail Hollow Country Club in southeast Charlotte with practice rounds and qualifying. After another day of practice on Tuesday, a pro-am is scheduled for Wednesday.

Competition in the $350,000 tournament, which features a $63,000 first prize, starts on Thursday.

Andy Bean, playing in only his third year on the PGA tour, won the 1978 Kemper with a final round of 66, 6 under par.

Arnold Palmer, who owns a house on the 15th fairway at Quail Hollow, is a sentimental favorite of the Kemper crowd and he recruited an enthusiastic army last year when he led after Friday's round.

Palmer makes use of his house when he's playing in Charlotte, and the same is true of Joe Inman, who has a house in nearby Clover, S.C. After this year, it will be motel rooms or other accomdations instead of their own houses for the two during the Kemper.

"My family and some friends come down and people come by to see me," Inman said. "It makes it a little hectic but I like the idea of being able to play in one tournament a year where I can sleep in my own bed."

West Inks Pact

ENVER (AP) — Defensive back Charlie West, a 12-year National Football League veteran from Big Spring, has signed a new contract with the Denver Broncos for the 1979 season, team officials say.

West, a 33-year-old free agent from Texas-El Paso, signed the contract Saturday, the Broncos said.

West was acquired by the Broncos in a trade with Detroit prior to the 1978 season and became a free agent Feb. 1.

Hillcrest's Swinger Tops Tourney List

Even as the hours pass, several Memorial Weekend tournaments are still going strong. Several have at least 36 holes of action left before winners will be determined.

Maybe all the tourney action over this long weekend explains why there is a letdown of sorts this upcoming weekend on the South Plains.

Only one area men's partnership is on tap, there is an 18-hole junior tourney slated and the Gaines County Pro-Am will be held June 3 in Seminole. But that's about it for organized area play for the first weekend in June.

Of course, that one men's partnership is a biggie — the Hillcrest Country Club's annual Swinger Tournament. It's a member-guest affair that has been completely booked for over a month.

According to club officials, the 54-hole, three-day tournament is the highlight of the Hillcrest schedule. There will be 128 teams competing in eight different flights.

The teams will compete in four different divisions until after the second day (Saturday) when each division will be broken down into two flights depending on the scores after 36 holes.

Golfers competing in the Hillcrest Swinger will be able to take a practice round on Thursday and then the serious action begins at 8:30 Friday morning and should continue nearly nonstop through the weekend.

For high-school-age boys, the Lubbock Country Club will be the site of the first area junior tournament of the summer on June 4.

The event is open to boys 17 or under, and Lubbock CC officials envision a large group of entries for the 18-hole affair.

Quite a few local boys are expected to enter the event as well as a large number of Lubbock Country Club family members.

Also on June 4 will be the Gaines County Pro-Am in Seminole.

Scorecard Error Costs Rankin Share Of Lead

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Rookie Lynn Adams shot a one-under-par 69 Saturday and took advantage of an error on the scorecard of veteran Judy Rankin to move into the lead going into today's final round of the $100,000 LPGA Corning Classic golf tournament.

Miss Adams held a one-stroke lead over Mrs. Rankin of Midland; Donna Caponi Young of Los Angeles; Penny Pulz of Palm Springs, Calif., and Alice Ritzman of Kahispell, Mont., with a 215 total after three rounds of the 72-hole Ladies Professional Golf Association event.

Miss Adams said she would go out to win today although she says she does not believe she is ready to be a winner on the LPGA tour.

"I'm in my first year on the tour, and I don't mind admitting it. I am not ready to win. For some reason, I'm scared to win," said Adams, a 28-year-old Texas (Kingsville) pro.

"I will be going out there to win, but you have a feeling in your own mind when you are ready. When I do win, I want to win consistently. I just don't think my golf game is at the caliber right now to constantly shoot the numbers I am shooting," Miss Adams said.

Mrs. Rankin, who was the first player ever to win $100,000 in a season on the LPGA tour, remained in contention for her 26th tour victory. She lost the lead because she signed a scorecard indicating she bogeyed the 16th hole, a hole she actually parred.

"I don't see how that can be," Rankin said of the error. "I even added it up."

Because of the error, one stroke was added to her score.

Mickey Wright, one of the LPGA all-time winners, wasn't so lucky. She was disqualified for signing the wrong scorecard Saturday. Miss Wright was not a contender when the mistake occurred, eliminating her in the third round.

Amy Alcott of Santa Monica, Calif., Sally Little of Dallas, Sandy Spuzich of Indianapolis and Bonny Bryant of Palm Springs, Calif., trailed Miss Adams by two strokes going into the final round.

Susan O'Connor of Palm Springs, Calif., had shared the lead with Mrs. Rankin after the second round but faltered, shooting a 6-ver-par 76 to fall three strokes behind the ne leader.

The first two days of the tournament had been played in steady rain and Saturday's third round, although marked by periods of sunshine, was interrupted for an hour while a thunder and lightning storm passed over the Corning Country Club golf course.

CATHAY TRIUMPHS

GAMES SUSPENDED

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iranian sports authorities have suspended professional soccer games in Tehran until further notice following a riot at the city's Amjadieh Stadium that left several fans hospitalized, newspapers reported Saturday. The riot reportedly broke out Friday when two of Tehran's most popular teams, Esteghlal and Bank Melli, refused to come out of their locker rooms following a dispute over how the teams would share ticket income.

Ohio State Wins NCAA Links Crown

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C. (AP) — Ohio State, known more for its individual golf stars instead of great teams, captured only its second NCAA Golf Championship in history Saturday at the Bermuda Run Golf and Country Club.

Wake Forest, also known for turning out great individuals as well as great teams, saw Gary Hallberg win the individual championship with a final total of one-under 287.

The Buckeyes, starting the day tied for fifth place with North Carolina, played steady golf on the 7,023-yard, par-72 course. Though playing in stiff breezes and subseasonal temperatures, Rick Borg fired a one-over par 73 to lead the team to the top. Teammates John Cook and Mark Balen shot 74. Rocky Miller completed the low round with a 76.

In winning by only two shots over defending champion Oklahoma State, Buckeye coach Jim Brown said it took a great sales job to convince his team they could take home the trophy.

"We told them they were as good as any team in this field," Brown said. "When you play courses like we do, such as Muirfield and Scioto, our kids average 74 and 75, and they're good 74s and 75s."

Brown also said his team did not panic when it shot over-par rounds "because our guys are used to playing over par."

"Some of these guys lose it, when they get over par," he said.

Hallberg finished one shot ahead of Brigham Young golfer Bobby Clampett. He characterized his round as cautious, playing just to help Wake get to the top.

Wake Forest started the day in third and finished in the same spot with 1196. Brigham Young took fourth place at 1198. New Mexico dropped from fourth to finish fifth at 1202.

Oral Roberts and North Carolina tied for sixth with scores of 1206. The Tar Heels led the tournament through the first two rounds but fell into a tie for fifth with the Buckeyes at the end of Friday's play.

Hallberg, a junior from Barrington, Ill., fired the low round of the day. Bobby Clampett of BYU finished three strokes behind Hallberg at 290. He fired a 75 on the day.

Raiders Sign Women Athletes

Texas Tech has signed three women athletes to letters-of-intent to participate in swimming, track and golf.

Butterfly and freestyle specialist Lindy Lauderdale of Dallas Lake Highlands is swimming coach Anne Goodman's third signee for next season. A member of the Texas Age Group Swim Team (TAGS) every year since 1973, Miss Lauderdale has competed for six years with AAU swim teams around the state.

Tech's first track signee is Veronica Flowers, a sprinter-hurdler from Temple. A three-year regional qualifier in the triple jump, 440 and 880-yard relays, Miss Flower's best event was the 80-yard hurdles where she placed second in the Class AAAA state meet this year.

Field Set For 'World' Auto Race

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Cars fielded by the Wood Brothers racing team have settled into the pole positon in the last 11 straight NASCAR Grand National events at the Charlotte Motor Speedway, and the familiar red-and-white Woods' Mercury will be in that front row spot again when the green flag falls for the World 600 stock car race today.

But David Pearson, who coaxed the Mercury to a track record pole run of 161.355 mph for last October's National 500, won't be behind the wheel of No. 21 as he was in the other 11 races.

Pearson and the Wood Brothehrs parted ways earlier this year and, while Pearson watches the 600-mile chase as a spectator, Neil Bonnett will be riding for the Woods.

Bonnett, who was hired by the Stuart, Va.-based Woods after their split with Pearson, grabbed the third victory of his career for the Woods last week in the Mason-Dixon 500 at Dover, Del.

Bonnett, of Hueytown, Ala., put the Mercury on the pole Wednesday with a four-lap average speed of 160.125 mph on the Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"Bonnett did an excellent job in qualifying for his limited experience in the car and the pressure he was under," Cale Yarborough said after he qualified for the fifth starting spot in his Oldsmobile.

"But he didn't surprise me. I caught timed laps just before the track closed for qualifying and I knew what he could do," Yarborough said.

"I think Neil did a hell of a job," said Darrell Waltrip, World 600 defending champion.

"There's just no other way to put it. I know there were a lot of people who didn't expect him to do it, especially since he was slow in practice."

"But I've seen Pearson be a second off in practice and go out and do what Neil did. That's just how good the car is. They have something super going here and it looks like if any of us want to win a pole here, we'd getter get in No. 21," Waltrip said.

Richard Petty, in a Chevrolet, will have the other front-row spot for Sunday's race. Lining up behind Bonnett and Petty will be Waltrip, Benny Parsons, Yarborough, Donnie Allison, Bobby Allison, Buddy Baker and 3 other drivers.

Atotal purse of $363,000 is up for grabs in the Wold 600. At 600 miles, the races is the longest on the 30-race NASCAR Grand National circuit.

YALE TEAM WINS

Scheckter 'Steals' Grand Prix Pole

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — South Africa's Jody Scheckter in a "super smooth" Ferrari stole the vital pole position from his teammate Gilles Villeneuve Saturday to become a strong favorite for victory in his "home" race here Sunday.

Scheckter — a Monaco resident — goes into the 37th Monaco Grand Prix with an excellent record, second in 1974 and 1976, a win in 1977, and third last year.

"It's obviously a circuit I love to drive, and the Ferrari was super smooth today, with a faultless engine and perfect handling," Scheckter said.

Villeneuve, who was fastest in first qualifying Thursday, had a water leak problem in his race car Saturday and could use it only in the closing minutes. He improved his time slightly but not enough to catch the flying South African.

The Ligiers, the other top team so far this season — each has won three races — hauled themselves up the grid as drivers Patrick Depailler and Jacques Laffite recovered from injured hands. Depailler got third spot on the staggered grid, with Laffite fifth.

They were split by the Brabham-Alfa Romeo of Niki Lauda, who, with two victories and two second spots here in the last four years, must also pose a strong threat to the Ferraris.

In the world championship stakes, however, Laffite and Scheckter are the co-leaders with 24 points each and Villeneuve and Depailler are tied for third with 20 apiece, while Lauda has scored only one point during the season.

Defending champion Mario Andretti of Nazareth, Pa., was 13th on the seventh row of the starting lineup, fighting with a Lotus 80 which he never could set up to handle to his liking during the two days of qualifying.

The other top runners were the two Tyrrells of Frenchmen Jean-Pierre Jarier and Didier Pironi, confirming the team's long Monte Carlo experience with three victories, the latest with Depailler last year.

West German Jochen Mass in an Arrows had the eighth spot, ahead of Australian Alan Jones in a Williams, repaired after his Thursday crash.

The fierce accelerations and constant gear changes took their tolls on transmissions Saturday. Drive shafts broke on Emerson Fittipaldi's Copersucar, dropping him to the ninth row of the grid, and on the Renault Turbos of Jean-Pierre Jabouille and Rene Arnoux, who tail the field on the 10th and last row of the 20 starters.

The race is scheduled for 76 laps of the 2.058-mile circuit, a distance of 156.406 miles, in which the winning driver will change gear about 1,750 times.

Engines, Tempers May Boil At Indy Speedway

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) -"I hate to say it, but I'm afraid it's going to be a busy day for the hospital detail," said the leathery old veteran of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway racing pits.

"I've seen 30 of these things but none where tension was so high and tempers so short. Take my word for it, it's going to be an angry race."

Although the cars have increased their speed to near 200 mph, the Indianapolis 500, which has its 63rd race today, has been relatively free of fatal accidents.

The last driver deaths during the race were those of Eddie Sachs and Dave MacDonald 15 years ago — in 1964 — although there was a series of tragedies in 1973. That year, Art Pollard died in practice; Swede Savage cracked up coming out of the fourth turn, dying two months later of injuries; an emergency truck killed a crewman, and Salt Walther suffered multiple burns and cracked bones in a smashup in front of the grandstand during an aborted start.

"I hate to sound pessimistic, but I don't know when I have seen the situation as dangerous as it is this time," our trackside observer warned. "Look what's been happening the past few months. There's been a bitter break among the drivers. They're all mad as hell at each other. This feuding, law suits and summonses to court haven't helped matters.

"You're going to have 35 mad, hotheaded guys out there — the biggest field since 1933. They're not going to be patient men. They are going to be edgy, frustrated and fighting for every edge.

"On top of that, there is the new 'bunch-up' rule. That's bound to aggravate the situation. Frankly, I don't think it looks good."

The general chaos of the 1979 Indy 500 stemmed from a bitter break with the controlling U.S. Auto Club by a group of the leading car owners and drivers, who set up a maverick group known as the Championship Auto Racing Teams (CART).

The Indianapolis establishment stuck with the USAC. There were disqualifications, threats of boycotts and a rival race followed by a foulup in qualifying procedures, court suits, myriad affidavits and summonses which carried to the very eve of the big race.

"I've lost interest — I don't give a damn whether I run one lap or 200," said four-time winner A.J. Foyt, reflecting the attitude of many drivers.

The Indy will be staged for the first time this year under the "bunch-up" rule which eliminates the pacer lights — always a source of discord — and permits all the cars to bunch together in order during the yellow caution light.

"This eliminates the margin of the leader," our apprehensive friend said, "but the big danger is that it brings all the cars together again — all of these angry guys — and increases the chances of an accident."

THE THRILL OF VICTORY — El Paso Austin pitcher Cerjio Martinez (11) and shortstop Ray Macias (9) receive congratulations from teammates and followers after the Panthers won the regional baseball series at Lowrey Field Friday afternoon. Martinez gave up only five hits and 1 run in seven innings of work. Macias made a game-ending double play. Austin defeated Monterey 3-1 to win the Class AAAA series in two games. Moegle Foresaw Loss Before State Tourney

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

On Page 18 of the Monterey baseball press guide, the first paragraph lists the different championships; but, now, revise the district and bidistrict titles by one.

Monterey won its 18th district crown and 14th bidistrict title, befor bowing out in regional here last Friday.

Now, that's not as good as last season's state finalist team, but it's a whole lot better than coach Bobby Moegle thought the Plainsmen were going to do.

"I knew when we won district that this year's team wasn't good enough to play in the final tournament," said Moegle. "Last year, when we were mentally flat, we still could win games. But we just didn't have that kind of talent this year. When we're flat, we can't win."

Monterey had two breakdowns during the regional series against El Paso Austin and the letdowns cost the Plainsmen a chance to move on into quarterfinal play.

But, after watching Austin come out ahead on the scoreboard two consecutive times, Moegle declined an opinion about the Panthers' state championship chances.

"No, there is no way I could say how they will do from here, because I haven't seen the other teams in the playoffs," said Moegle. "Austin reminded me a lot of the 1976 Lubbock High district championship team."

What Moegle was referring to is that both teams relied on speed and quickness.

The Panthers took away two, up-the-middle grounders during Friday's game that normally would have sneaked through for base hits.

"I was impressed with how fast they could recover," said Moegle. "But their batting wasn't that good."

In the second game of the series, neither was the Plainsmen's. Monterey could only get five balls to drop, while Austin had three hits in the 3-1 win.

Asked if he was surprised that the second game was a complete opposite from Austin's 11-7 victory in the opener, Panther coach Leon Antwine replied: "It was just a case of the pitchers' controlling the game.

"I believe it was because the wind was blowing in and that the umpires were calling the outside corner a lot," said Antwine.

Monterey starter Steve Coleman had Panther batters eating out of his hand during the first five innings. After leadoff batter Polo Miranda linef a base hit to left field, Coleman set down the next 15 batters. He struck out the side in the second and fanned a total of seven Austin batters.

But in the sixth, Coleman's arm stiffened up, which forced him to leave the game.

"I don't know how he did it," said Moegle. "All of a sudden, he went lame."

Panther pitcher Cerjio Martinez, on the other hand, kept making Plainsmen batters hit the ball on the ground or pop up. Martinez got into trouble in the seventh as Monterey put runners at the corners, which brought Antwine up to the top step of the dugout.

"My belief is that I leave a pitcher in a game just as long as I think he's still got his control," said Antwine. "Martinez still had it. I was going to give him one walk before making a change."

Probably the most ironic thing about the regional series is that the Panthers didn't steal a base. Austin, which had been stealing other teams blind, didn't even attempt to run against Monterey.

Panther leftfielder Greg Quinn explained why.

"This series was very untypical of our team," said Quinn, the Panthers' best runner with 11 thefts during the district season and five in bidistrict play. "We usually jump ahead first. But we didn't in this series. However, our goal was accomplished."

The Lady's No Tramp Around Indy Anymore

"Hi, Janet," Gordon Johncock yells amiably, giving a wave to the white-suited lady in the golf cart in front of garage No. 38 in the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's renowned Gasoline Alley.

Janet Guthrie flashes her best smile and waves back.

Other drivers pause to swap small talk and best wishes. The grease-stained mechanics come up and confer with her seriously on technical problems. No other driver — not even A.J. Foyt or Al Unser — is more besieged for autographs.

The first and only female competitor to crash the hallowed Indy 500 no longer is a freak, a publicity-seeking woman trying to join the most macho fraternity in sports.

She has made the team.

Her appearance no longer creates flak and resentment. This marks her third time in the Indy 500 and she generally is accepted as a skilled and gutsy driver capable of surviving in the death-defying jungle of 200 mph speed demons.

It wasn't always so.

"In 1975, I had holes in my shoes, I had no money in the bank and no place to live — I thought I had had it in auto racing," Janet recalled Friday, a day when most of the action was centered in court instead of on the fabled old brickyard (actually asphalt).

"Then Rolla Vollstedt gave me my first chance to drive a championship car at Trenton (N.J.). It changed my whole life."

A newsman suggested that Janet must be exaggerating. After all, she owned a BS degree in physics from the University of Michigan, she served in the aerospace industry as a research and development engineer and once had even been considered for astronaut training.

"Of course, when I say I had holes in my shoes, that was partially superficial," she said. "But, honestly, I was ready for the poor house. Who is going to give a woman a job in the aerospace industry who is 40 years old and hasn't been doing that kind of work for nine years?

"I had spent 13 years trying to break into big-time automobile racing and, until Rolla Vollstedt gave me a car, I was at the end of my patience and my resources."

The 41-year-old Guthrie qualified for the Indy 500 in 1977, but went out after 27 laps because of a gear foulup. She returned last year to qualify at 191.002 mph, a women's closed course record. Then, driving with a fractured wrist which she had not previously disclosed, she finished ninth in the star-spangled field, behind Al Unser, who won his third 500.

Unser, hearing of Guthrie's injury, said she should have pulled out of the race. "She jeopardized my life and the life of every driver in the race," he said.

"That is the only complaint I've heard about my racing," Janet said. "Everyone else has been very nice.

"I remember when I drove my first oval-track race at Trenton, A.J. Foyt came around and offered any help I needed. Johnny Rutherford was marvelous. All have been great — except one."

Al Unser, younger of the two racing brothers who have won a total of five Indy races, hasn't softened his attitude.

"Have I apologized for what I said?" the defending Indy champion blurted when the question was put to him in his garage Friday. "Why should I? If she had a broken wrist, as she said, she had no business being on that track. She should have been disqualified."

Other drivers have adopted a more understanding stance, particularly two-time winner Rutherford, the tough Texan.

"Janet is different than most of the women who have been trying to crash this business," Rutherford said. "Most of them come out with fancy hairdos and painted fingernails and no intention to try to be a bonafide race driver. They just want the publicity and the chance to be around the guys.

"Not Janet — I really admire the woman. Not that she doesn't do her hair and fix her nails. Also she looks good in a slinky dress. But she's a very smart girl, very dedicated. She's in this business because she wants to win and thinks she can. There's nothing phony about her. She's genuine."

Guthrie qualified this year at 185.720 mph in her Lola-Cosworth, enabling her to start from the fifth row, and she admits she is not in the race for show.

"This is a much better car than I've ever had before," she said. "The car was a little loose in qualifying but that has been remedied. I have a wonderful crew. Yes, I think we have a chance."

Janet said, despite gains made already, there still isn't an "Open Sesame" attitude toward women in auto racing

"1977 was a banner year for me," she acknowledged. "I raced almost every weekend. I had 19 NASCAR races, six championship and a lot of stock and sports car races.

"In 1978 I lost my NASCAR sponsor. I had only nine NASCAR Races, one championship event, two sports car and only a few short tests. It still isn't open for women. When they want to race a car, they still want a guy.

"But some day a woman will win Indy — maybe I will. I have the potential."

Trainer Suspended By Suffolk Downs

BOSTON (AP) — A leading horse trainer at Suffolk Downs has been suspended indefinitely and banned from the track following a state finding that one of his horses was administered a powerful stimulant, the Boston Globe reported.

The track's three-man board of stewards suspended Jose Martinez, 38, after six months of testing on the horse Native Bend revealed it had been injected with fetanyl, better known as Sublimaze.

The trainer's case has been forwarded to the State Racing Commission, and all horses owned and trained by him are suspended until sold or transferred to other persons approved by the stewards.

The action by the track followed a finding by Bruce Aspelagh, the state's chief racing chemist, that Native Bend had been administered the low-dosage pain-killer last fall, the Globe said.

Striped Bass Numbers Increase

AUSTIN (Special) — Texas Parks and Wildlife Department hatchery personnel are well on their way to what appears to be the biggest production year ever for striped bass and hybrid stripers for stocking in the state's reservoirs.

Charles Gray, head of the statewide striper culture program, said barring unusual circumstances, his crews will meet their fingerling goal of 2.5 million stripers and 3.1 million striped/white bass hybrids.

Gray said Texas' 1979 production of the two species will far exceed that of all other state combined. "We have more fry in our ponds right now than we ever had before, thanks partly to the weather," he said. "With so much rain and high water this spring we were able to obtain plenty of brood fish."

Both the stripers and hybrids were spawned artificially by crews who collected mature stripers and white bass and stripped them of eggs and milt by hand. The fertilized eggs are kept in jars until large enough to be stocked in hatchery ponds.

Gray said the first shipment left the Jasper hatchery in East Texas this week and deliveries will continue through late June or early July. Pure stripers are scheduled for stocking 12 reservoirs, hybrids for 41, Gray said.

This year's expected production of hybrids, 3.1 million, is compared to 673,000 in 1978 and one million in 1977. For pure stripers, this year's total will easily beat the 1978 production of 1.1 million, and with luck may exceed the banner striper year of 1977 when 2.9 million were hatched.

Gray said this year's program was not without its difficulties, as erratic weather conditions appartently caused some brood fish to be "ripe" for ahead of others.

"We had some shipments where we found ripe femalles and completely spend females in the same group," Gray said.

However, high river flows caused large numbers of stripers to congregate below the Lake Granbury dam where crews with shocking boats were to collect them efficiently. A significant number of brooders also was collected from Toledo Bend Reservoir.

Lakes to receive stockings are determined by considering a number of priority factors, Gray said, including past stocking history, standing crop estimates, creel surveys and forage base.

In general, pure stripers are placed in lakes where here is some possibility of natural reproductions, while the hybrids are stocked on a put-grow-and-take basis in waters where reproduction is unlikely. Hybrid stripers seem to thrive in small power plant reserviors where there are warm-water discharges and high populations of shad and other forage fish.

Safety Session Held

SAN ANTONIO — The annual conference for hunter safety coordinators from the United States and Canada was held in San Antonio last week with a variety of subjects presented from the Alaska Wilderness Proclamations to hunter education.

"There were 38 states and five Canadian provinces represneted at the North American Association of Hunter Safety Coordinators meeting," said T.D. Carroll, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department huntere safety coordinators and immediate past president of the association.

"The conference heard many reports from various factions of the hunter and hunter safety community with most of the reports being presented by the various state representatives," Carroll continued.

The meeting was cosponsored by the National Rifle Association and many of their programs were updated such as a report on the training and success of the United States rifle team and a report from the legal branch of the NRA concerning recent legislative proposals in Washington.

Two hunting films, "Shoot, Don't Shoot" and "The Sportsman", produced for the NAAHSX by Madison Films, Inc. of New York City have won outstanding awards from two different film festivals during the past year.

White River Gets Stocked

CROSBYTON (Special) — Over 15,000 smallmouth bass were stocked into White River lake near here last week by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

"These fish were about one inch in length and came from the P&WD hatchery at San Angelo," said Joe Kraai, fishery biologist. "These smallmouths are from the Tennessee strain which seem to grow bigger in a shorter length of time and should furnish South Plains anglers with a smallmouth fishery in five to six years," Kraai continued.

Mackenzie Lacking Camp Facilities

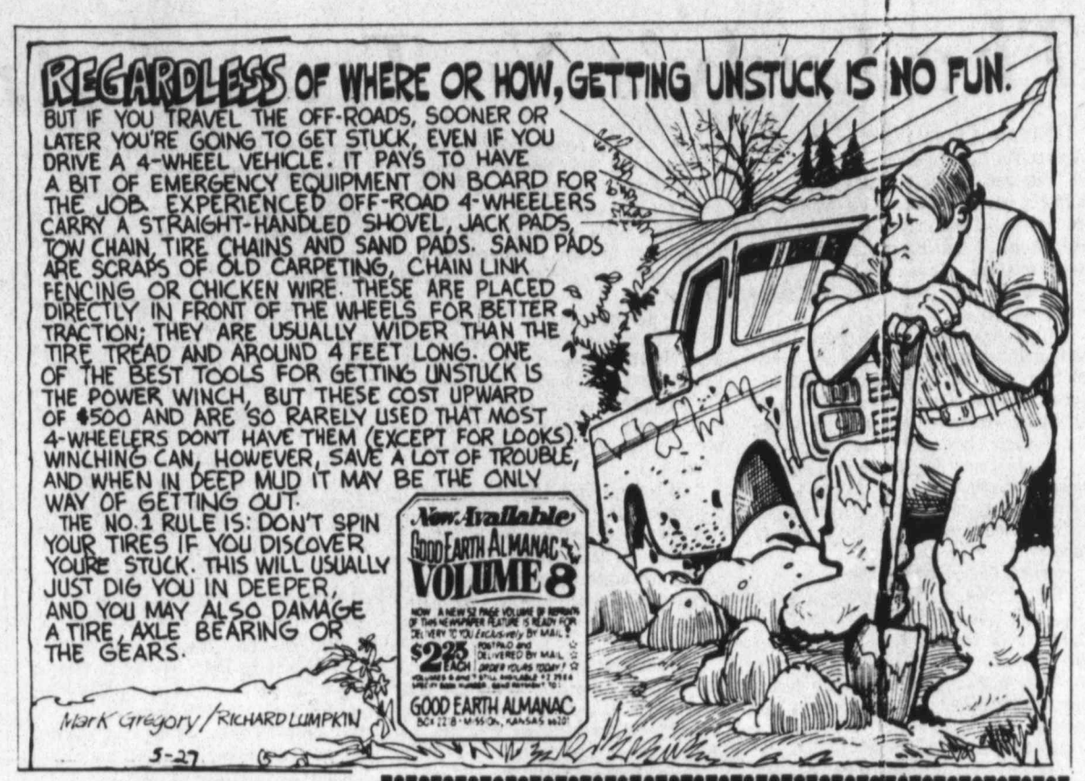

Campers are reminded that Mackenzie State Park in Lubbock has no camping facilities. Although the situation is considered temporary, there are no plans for any facilities during this camping season at the city operated state park.

Nearby locations with tent and vehicle camping are KOA and Buffalo Springs Lake. The public camping area at Buffalo Springs Lake (5 miles southeast of the city — 4 miles east of Loop 289 on FM 835) has 22 campsites with full hookups, 110 with electricity only, and approximately 250 primitive campsites. There are nominal fees.

Where They're Biting

Buffalo Springs Lake — Recent rains have made the fishing excellent. The crappie are spawning and are being caught mainly in the cat tails. Carp and channel cat are also biting, with catches of both ranging from 12-17 pounds. Bass up to 3½ pounds have been caught in the last week. Perch fishing is also reported to be good, according to Barnie Greenfield, at the concession stand..

White River Lake — Drew Scoggins, Eddie Scoggins, and Lloyd Perry of Lubbock caught a 50-pound yellow catfish Saturday while jug fishing with minnows. Last Sunday, Bob Newmar and Corley Baker of Sudan and Pete Templeton of Amherst caught eight bass that weighed up to 21 pounds. Later in the week, a man from Spur caught 120 pounds of carp.

Kennedy's Non-Candidacy Faring Well

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — The phantom presidential candidacy of Edward M. Kennedy is doing just fine, thank you. And the Massachusetts senator clearly wouldn't have it any other way.

Could Kennedy be in any better position if he were a candidate, as so many liberal Democrats would like?

It hardly seems possible.

What other politician in America could insist he supports Carter for re-election in 1980, and, at the same time, maintain his lead over the president in many public opinion polls?

Ask Kennedy about his denunciations of Carter positions on such domestic issues as energy and health, and he insists he is only trying to steer the president away from positions that would be politically disastrous, especially in New England, in 1980.

What would the senator do if the president doesn't take his advice and, in the face of continuing energy and economic problems, Carter's political standing dropped to the point he decided not to seek a second term?

"I really can't speculate," said Kennedy in a recent interview. "I've indicated the current realities and the current situation."

The efforts to draw him into the race continue. He is meticulous about discouraging each one. Kennedy aides call and tell would-be backers that the senator asks that they not promote his candidacy.

Somehow, the appeals always fail. The draft Kennedy organizations continue to proliferate; on Saturday, a county Democratic convention in Cleveland adopted a formal resolution urging him to run.

And the senator repeats his now familiar position: "I expect President Carter to be renominated and re-elected in 1980 and I intend to support him."

Kennedy's last disavowal came last week after a group of House Democrats launched a Draft Kennedy movement. It was characteristic of something often called the "Kennedy style," that the senator's staff took steps to be certain someone would be listening when the senator rejected their proposal.

They passed the word to television news bureaus that Kennedy would be outside his office to comment on the effort to draft him.

When the story broke, there was Kennedy on the evening news, getting the kind of exposure ambitious politicians dream about. Millions of Americans ate dinner that night while watching Kennedy do his best to get people to stop insisting that he run for president.

The large number of Republicans who dream of being elected president in 1980 would love to command that kind of media attention. That may explain why so many Republicans, including Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee and John Connally of Texas, say that if they get the nomination, they think the odds are good they'll be running against Kennedy, not Carter.

In the White House, the president says he believes Kennedy when the senator says he isn't running.

Carter also told a group of editors recently that "Senator Kennedy is a very popular and attractive man. If he becomes a candidate, he would be a formidable opponent for anyone else who ran."

Then, the president added that "if I decided to run, I wouldn't have any fear of meeting that kind of competition."

Texas Legislative Session Ends

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers went into the final hours of the regular 66th Legislature Saturday with Gov. Bill Clements' threat of a stiff special session hanging over their heads.

However, Clements hinted he might not schedule the special 30 days until the latter part of the year or maybe until politically active 1980.

The Friday massacre of Clements' legislative program spelled death to a plan letting voters initiate legislation, a bill to legalize wiretapping in narcotics cases, and a bill giving the governor more power over state agency budgets.

"I'm set in concrete on this," Clements said earlier when stressing that he was committed to a special session for initiative and referendum. He said he would include wiretapping in the same call.

Saturday and Sunday sessions were set for last chance consideration of measures that had been approved by at least one house.

Ten-member conference committees presented their proposed compromises on general appropriations, tax relief and school finances to their respective chambers for a final vote before the Monday midnight deadline.

Despite the loss of three crucial issues Friday Clement's scorecard was not all zeros.

He had in hand an approved bill that would let him consolidate three energy offices into one. Another Clements proposal to let the governor remove any of his appointees, goes to voters in 1980.

Amtrak Passenger Numbers Climb During May Gas Shortages

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amtrak, described recently as "the greatest traveling antique in the world," is carrying more passengers than ever as the warm-weather holiday season begins amid continuing gasoline shortages.

"A lot of people are trying to ride Amtrak this weekend," Brian Duff, a spokesman for the government-subsidized National Rail Passenger Service, said in a pre-holiday interview.

Despite increased ridership, which has been building since last October, the Carter administration is moving ahead with a plan to slash 12,000 miles of track from the 27,700-mile system on Oct. 1.

And despite increasing reliance on Amtrak at a time of fuel shortages, the rail system remains plagued by an aging fleet of locomotives and cars.

It was the equipment problem that provoked Alan S. Boyd, Amtrak's president, to describe the system as "the greatest traveling antique in the world," one that keeps its riders warm in the summer and cold in the winter.

Boyd gave that assessment on May 11 to a Senate appropriations subcommittee in making a plea for approval of a $374 million, two-year program of capital improvements.

That question remained unresolved as the Memorial Day weekend arrived, taxing heavily the ability of Amtrak to withstand the challenges posed by heavy ridership.

Duff said some passengers would wind up standing, and that extra trains were being put into service in the busiest regions, including a dozen on the heavily traveled Washington-to-New York corridor.

Amtrak is experiencing record numbers of riders and requests for information, and advance bookings are running 50 percent higher than at this time last year, he said.

The system's telephone reservation network was swamped with an estimated 2 million calls the week starting May 14 and only 332,235 of them could be answered, Duff added. Since then, he said, "the level of calls has not diminished" and Amtrak is putting on more clerks to answer the phones.

"If only half the calls were serious and wanted tickets, we couldn't possibly put them on the train" because there wouldn't be enough seats, Duff said.

In California, the state hardest hit by gasoline shortages, the number of riders between Los Angeles and San Diego totaled a record 107,260 in the first 23 days of May. The previous record was 98,837 in April, which in turn set a record over the previous high of 78,950 last August.

As of May 20, 49 percent of the coach seats on Amtrak's 260 trains nationwide were booked for a two-week period. On long-distance trains, advance bookings had been made for between 80 to 90 percent of the seats, Duff said.

"Some popular trains in the past peak seasons have seen figures in the 80s," he said. "We've never seen figures in the 90s. The popular trains are all flirting with those kinds of numbers."

Starting last October, Duff said, Amtrak ridership began climbing about 6 to 8 percent a month over the same period a year earlier. Preliminary figures show ridership increased about 12 percent in April, and 14.3 percent in the first weeks of May.

Amtrak spokesman Joseph Vranich said recently that Amtrak trains carried 6,494,000 passengers in the period between October 1978 and the end of January this year, compared with 6,091,728 in the same period a year earlier. The total ridership on any given day depends on a number of factors, however, including the number of cars per train and public demand.

Administration critics say the current system carries less than three-tenths of 1 percent of the nation's intercity travelers and that the rail system wastes energy.

Although higher fares are planned, the government now puts up a $2 subsidy for each $1 an Amtrak passenger pays for his ticket. The administration says the cutback plan will save $1.4 billion over the next five years, but that even with a scaled-down system, Amtrak will need $4.6 billion in aid through 1984.

Even if all the trains were filled, Amtrak could carry less than 1 percent of the intercity travelers, Transporation Secretary Brock Adams told a Senate hearing Friday.

Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., who lost a Senate battle Thursday to kill the administration plan, told Adams the United States has spent $442 billion on the highway system since World War II.

Weicker said the country should make the same type of commitment to passenger trains. "We're in the first year of a 20-year energy crunch," Weicker predicted. "You're not going to be able to take your car across country in a year or so."

The administration plan is being challenged in suits filed by California and Texas. In addition, congressional critics of the cutbacks are mapping a campaign to restore at least some trains through legislation later this year.

John Wayne In Hospital On Birthday

A member of Wayne's production staff said that Wayne's family, including his seven children and 17 grandchildren, planned a private gathering in Wayne's ninth-floor room.

Phone calls from fans and friends poured in from as far away as the French Riviera, said hospital spokesman David Shirley. Flowers and cards also arrived for the hero of over 200 movies.

However, there were no fans at the hospital.

Wayne has been hospitalized since May 2 when surgery revealed cancer in his intestines. Doctors had removed Wayne's cancerous stomach in January.

Hospital officials have said Wayne will begin an experimental cancer treatment program when he regains his strength. Wayne's condition is listed as stable and he is taking long walks down the hospital hallway.

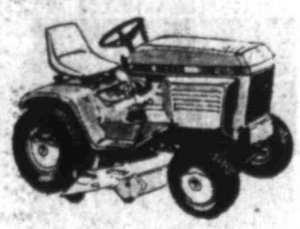

Wayne's fans have sent over 10,000 get-well cards since his latest surgery.

In Miami, the Duke's birthday was celebrated with a cake and ice cream party. For a $1 donation, fans got into the party, heard the Sweet Adelines sing "Happy Birthday" in four-part harmony and signed a huge birthday card.

The card and a cake shaped like the Alamo were to be flown to Wayne's bedside at UCLA Medical Center.

Congress prepared its own present earlier this week, approving the minting of a congressional gold medal — one of only 84 — to honor the unconquerable film hero. The inscription will read: John Wayne — American.

TO: All Interested Parties
Subject: Public Hearing: Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children — WIC
The Texas Department of Health is required by Federal statute to annually prepare a State Plan of Program Operation and Administration for the Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC). Federal statute also requires that a public hearing be held to enable the general public to comment on the draft plan and participate in its completion.
The proposed State Plan will include such items as: names and addresses of local agencies and applicants, a map identifying areas being served, an Affirmative Action Plan which names all areas (counties) of the state according to need and a description of the method used to determine rankings of areas, a description of the financial management and food delivery systems, fair hearing procedures, monitoring and auditing procedures, specific eligibility criteria for determining nutritional risk, and other sections required by Federal regulation.
We are committed to solicit a broad range of public comment on the proposed plan and, therefore, your participation and/or attendance at any of these hearings is invited.
If you are interested in presenting your views and opinions as oral testimony, please contact the Texas Department of Health within 10 days of the scheduled public hearing. A copy of your testimony is requested in advance of the hearing and should be received at the Department at least 3 days in advance.
Written comments from individuals who do not wish to provide oral remarks are also welcomed. Please submit these comments no later than June 4, 1979.
The public is invited to contact the State WIC office before or after the hearings for clarification of agenda items or discussion, interviews or general information.

PEOPLE PLACES THINGS

Duchess 'Slightly Improved'

PARIS (AP) — The Duchess of Windsor's condition "has slightly improved" following a blood infection that has confined her to hospital for the past two weeks, the hospital said.

DUCHESS

It is the second time this year that the Duchess, 82, has been admitted to the American Hospital in the suburb of Neuilly. In February she underwent surgery for an intestinal blockage.

The Duchess is the former Wallis Warfield Simpson, the twice-divorced American for whose hand in marriage King Edward VIII of England abdicated his throne in 1936. The Duke died in 1972.

Psst, Want A Brothel?

A clean criminal record and $200,000 will get you one of Nevada's more famous houses of ill repute — the Green Lantern in Ely.

Included in the deal is a cluster of mobile homes, a bar and a reception center. And it's listed in the classified ads.

But the new owner will have to find some new tenants. The house was repaired after a firebombing last summer, but employees departed, said Reno real estate agent Alex Gassiot.

However, recruiting of prostitutes in Nevada is illegal, while bringing women in from out-of-state runs afoul of federal law.

Prostitution is banned in Nevada's two largest counties, which include Reno and Las Vegas, but it is tolerated in most others.

Gassiot said he had received several inquiries about the property, but no buyers.

Sex Rapped As Factor

SEATTLE (AP) — Sex should not be the determining factor in choosing people for military combat duty, says the highest-ranking civilian woman in the Air Force.

CHAYES

"There's a bit of old-fashioned chivalry in this country that men should go off to war and women should stay home," said Antonia Handler Chayes.

"That's because there's never been a war on our soil, and I'd wager that if the draft were reinstituted there would be a lot of complaints from men about women not being drafted. More likely, there'd be lawsuits."

The 49-year-old acting undersecretary of the Air Force said the only restrictions should be physical ones, such as good eyesight for pilots or the ability to lift certain weights.

In a commencement address at the University of Puget Sound Friday, she said the Navy has taken "great steps forward" by placing women on ships that train for combat and in other military duties.

'Mannequin' Stuns Shoppers

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Shoppers at North Kent Mall do frequent doubletakes when they encounter Jim Bradley doing his job — as a live display window mannequin.

Bradley, 19, sad his part-time work in the window at J. Riggings, a men's clothing shop, requires him to stay still and stare blankly. "It's mainly just pure concentration," he said. "It's hard to explain exactly how I keep my pose, but it involves just focusing out the people. Their faces are right there, but I try to put them 20 miles away."

Shoppers' reactions to Bradley's work cover a wide range. "At times crowds glare in the window, some staring in awe and others trying their hardest to make me laugh and break my pose," he said.

Bradley had several years modeling experience before starting the mannequin job but still admitted some doubts about it because "I was a bit nervous having so many people staring at me."

Margaret Has New 'Buddy'

SYDNEY, Australia (UPI) — Margaret Trudeau, the estranged wife of former Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau says Britain's Prince Charles is her "buddy" and is "battling at every frontier" to defend her name and honor.

In a TV interview recorded in Los Angeles for Sydney's Channel 9 to be shown Sunday, Mrs. Trudeau called Prince Charles "my buddy."

"I'm his older woman," she said. "I'm a month older than he is. We've only met officially. We've never been alone for one second, although we have hidden behind a menu for a moment. He's wonderful."

Mrs. Trudeau said, "Just after I left Pierre, Prince Charles sent me a lovely letter from Kenya saying he understands what I've done and he's battling at every frontier for my name and my honor."

She added, "What woman could be luckier than to have a fine prince defending her honor?"

Mrs. Trudeau also said the description of her as "the world's most eccentric first lady" was "a good fit."

Conductor In Dough

TOKYO (AP) — A three-inch dough figure of Seiji Ozawa, Japanese conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is among 60 new dough figurines on display in the China Art Gallery, the official Xinhua (Hsinhua) news agency reported Saturday.

OZAWA

The exhibition is drawing some 2,000 visitors a day in Peking, Xinhua said.

The models, the Peking dispatch said, are by Tang Suguo (Tang Su-Kuo), son of a well-known modeller, "Dough-molder Tang."

Other models represent figures from the Chinese classics and characters from folk tales and traditional Chinese operas.

Xinhua said the art of making dough figures has a 1,000 year old history in china. The molding material is made in various collors and "the figures can incorporate intricate detail, and expressions and gestures are sometimes exaggerated for dramatic effect.

Vanderbilt Wins Rent Suit

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — Millionaire Louise Vanderbilt, who recently turned tenants' advocate, has won what may be the last battle in her year-long war with her landlord.

VANDERBILT

Superior Court Judge Thomas H. Needham ruled Friday that an eviction order served on Mrs. Vanderbilt dy Harry B. Casey, Newport's county sheriff and owner of the mansion in which Mrs. Vanderbilt rented two apartments, was invalid.

Casey tried to evict Mrs. Vanderbilt, 60, whose late husband's family built much of the nation's railroads, when she refused to pay a tripling of her rent from $950 per month.

"Justice wins out," Mrs. Vanderbilt, 60, said after the ruling was announced.

Mrs. Vanderbilt didn't need the order to keep a roof over her head. Last week she moved to another home in Newport, saying the apartment in the Mailands, a Victorian mansion worth $250,000, was "insufferable in the summer."

The squabble prompted Mrs. Vanderbilt to join a Newport tenants' association, made up mostly of low-income families. She said she would remain an active member of the group.

"I don't like to see people kicked around as I have been," she said.

Bishop Wants Shah Out

ST. JOHN'S, Antigua (UPI) — An Anglican bishop from the Bahamas has called on his country to end its asylum for the shah of Iran and his family.

Bishop Michael Eldon told reporters Friday at the close of a five-day Provincial Synod of Anglican bishops that the presence of the shah in the Bahamas has "exposed the entire country and the lives of its people to attacks from the outside which they cannot afford at this stage of development."

He said that although the church in his country had not yet taken a stand on the shah's presence, people were showing "great concern" and were opposed to the exiled ruler remaining in the islands.

'Silly' Sylvia Gets Degree

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Throughout Pauline Jaramillo's college years, her guide dog, Sylvia, was by her side.

It was no different Saturday when Miss Jaramillo, who is in her 20s, graduated from Westminster College. And when she received her degree, so did Sylvia.

Decked out in her own mortar board, tassel and white collar, the dog received a special "PP.T." — "Putting Pauline Through" — award.

Friends Thrown In Jail

EVESHAM, N.J. (AP) — Residents of this Burlington County community vied Saturday for the right to be thrown into jail.

For $2, they were able to issue arrest warrants as part of "Jail Day," a fund-raising activity sponsored by the Knights of Columbus to raise cash for the Marlton First Aid Squad. Marlton is a town within Evesham Township.

Arrest warrants were available on posters in local stores. To get out of jail, the "inmate" had to make a donation to the Knights in lieu of "bail."

"You can use your imagination in filling out the arrest warrants," said Frank Chrzanowski, chairman of the event. "You can charge your friends and relatives with borrowing tools, introducing you to your spouse or giving boring parties."

There was no limit to the number of warrants a person can fill out, but only township residents were eligible for arrest, he said.

Consumer Lobby Blames Oil Firms For Shortage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Did oil companies guarantee long lines at service stations by severely cutting gasoline production last year and drawing down fuel stocks?

Do similar cutbacks jeopardize diesel supplies or home heating oil needed later this year?

Energy Action, a Washington-based consumer lobby, says yes, and presents a detailed analysis to support its case. The oil companies say no, blaming the Iranian revolution and price controls for the shortages.

Economists at the American Petroleum Institute, an oil industry group, acknowledge that Energy Action's statistics are for the most part correct. But they say the consumer group's conclusions drawn from the statistics are unfair.

Gasoline and distillate stocks were drawn down, these economists say. But they add that crude inventories didn't rise sufficiently to justify claims that stocks were built up in anticipation of decontrol and higher prices.

The Energy Action study makes these assertions:

— Distillate stocks, used for diesel fuel and home heating oil, were drawn down nearly 47 percent from October 1977 to May 1978, compared with only 35 percent a year earlier.

— Gasoline stocks, from January to July 1978, were drained 32 percent compared with only 13 percent during the same period in 1977 and 20 percent in 1976.

— Meanwhile, demand for distillates was nearly 4 percent higher in the first half of 1978 than during the same period in 1977; gasoline demand was 3.6 percent above 1977's level.

— Refineries from March 1978 to September 1978 operated at 87.7 percent of capacity, nearly 3 percent less than the average between March 1975 and September 1977, and about 5 percent less than what is considered maximum use.

— Under-utilization of refinement capacity continues. From January through April, refineries have operated at only 85 percent of capacity.

— Crude oil imports, despite the Iranian slowdown, were about 97 million barrels higher from October 1978 to April 1979 than during the same year-earlier period.

Piecing these figures together, Energy Action concludes: "The failure to refine crude when both crude and refining capacity were available meant causing a future product supply problem, whether or not an interruption of crude oil in fact occurred later in the year."

The petroleum institute counters by saying that crude oil stocks rose only 3 million barrels, or about 1 percent, from Dec. 1977 to April 1978, and 12 million barrels, or 3 percent during the same period a year later.

Those buildups were less than during the 1975-76 and 1976-77 periods, and should indicate that shortages were due more to worldwide production cuts than to domestic refining decisions, the API claims.

It also asserts that continued underproduction is due specifically to oil shortfalls, adding that world oil production declined about 2 million barrels since the Iranian revolution.

Several economists attesting to the accuracy of Energy Action's figures say it made sense at the time for oil companies to draw down high inventories.

"No one had the faintest idea early last year what would happen in Iran," says Lawrence Kumins, an energy economist for the Library of Congress.

"These drawdowns were prudent economically," says Milton Lipton, of W.J. Levy Consultants, a prominent oil research group. "The industry began 1978 wih large stocks. No business wants to have too much inventory on hand. That was a major cause of the 1974 recession."

He adds: "Why would oil companies cut inventories if they expect supply shortages. The tighter world market would increase oil prices, and it doesn't make sense to use up inventories if you must replace them with higher-priced oil."

In January 1978, gasoline stocks were nearly 20 million barrels above levels of a year earlier, while distillates were 70 million barrels higher.

It wasn't until March 1978 that stocks fell below 1977 levels — months before the Iranian shutdown and weeks before another unexpected event — a dramatic upsurge in gasoline demand, despite higher-than-ever gasoline prices.

In May 1978, gasoline demand was running 700,000 barrels a day, or 22 million barrels a month, higher than a year earlier. "That could lead to a pretty rapid rundown," Kumins said.

Higher-than-expected demand has continued since, even as gas prices rapidly approach $1 a gallon.

The Iranian situation, Saudi Arabia's threat to cut its production, and Carter administration efforts to build up home heating oil have further hindered gasoline refining, these economists say.

Motorists Worldwide Facing Gas Shortage As Prices Increase

LONDON (AP) — Millions of motorists around the world are digging deeper in their pockets to pay for gasoline. Like some Americans, many are waiting in line at filling stations and others are forced to leave their cars at home.

In Greece, owners of cars with even-number registration plates are allowed to drive on one weekend and those with odd-number plates the next.

In many countries fuel prices have spiralled far above the dollar a gallon that motorists in the United States may be facing. But gasoline has been more than a dollar a gallon in many countries for years.

In Turkey, a gallon of premium gasoline is $2.80. Yet, the South American country of Colombia still has a bargain price of only 49 cents.

The crisis is worse even than the one in 1973 when oil prices rocketed and the economies of oil-importing countries stagnated, says Eiler Holterman, secretary general of the Norwegian Petroleum Institute.

Gasoline prices have increased sharply in many countries in the last month and the jump in a year in some cases has been staggering. Authorities in many countries warn that more price increases are coming.

The Turks, living through their worst economic crisis in 50 years, were paying $1.90 a gallon more than a year ago. They have been among the hardest hit by the current crisis.

Long lines at gasoline stations have become part of daily life in Turkey and farmers say shortages of diesel fuel are threatening agricultural production. Local government authorities have imposed rationing schemes for gasoline and diesel.

In Ireland, motorists are paying 79 cents more than a year ago for a gallon of gasoline, which now costs them $2.04. Last month it cost $1.85. Long lines of irate Irish motorists have jammed filling stations because of fuel shortages and the government has slapped a 12 percent increase on gasoline to try to curb panic buying.

In Greece, the price of gasoline rose the equivalent of 42 cents in a month to $2.72 a gallon, second highest price in the West European area after Turkey.

Norwegians pay the equivalent of $2.10 for a gallon of gasoline. So far there have been no restrictions on fuel sales in Norway but the government is urging voluntary savings. A month ago Norwegians paid $2 a gallon for premium gasoline. A year ago they paid $1.92.

Countries such as Britain, Italy and Finland which have done little or nothing are the exception.

Britain, where gasoline currently sells at $1.48 a gallon compared with $1.45 a month ago and $1.22 a year ago, is approaching self-sufficiency in oil from its North Sea reserves.

In Italy, where a gallon of gasoline has cost $2.25 for the last year, the government has been reluctant to see prices rise through fear of earning unpopularity before the country's June 3-4 Parliament elections.

A spokesman for the Finnish state oil company Neste commented: "At present, supply is no problem although prices are." Gasoline costs $1.86 a gallon compared with $1.80 a year ago.

Belgium claims to be the first Western nation to introduce compulsory controls to conserve fuel in the present crisis. On May 1 the government began rationing heating oil. But gasoline sales remain uncontrolled.

Denmark and Ireland are among countries that have lowered speed limits as a fuel-saving measure. Ireland cut the limit from 70 mph to 55 and Denmark from 70 to 62.

The French campaign is symbolized by a pot-bellied creature named "Gaspi" from the French word "gaspillage" meaning waste. Citizens are invited to kill the villain by such measures as inflating tires to correct pressures and easing up on sharp braking and acceleration.

Japan has launched a poster campaign featuring a resting camel and is urging filling stations to close Sundays and holidays.

In Sri Lanka, the state-owned bus company has introduced a "Golden Arrow" service with specially favorable fares to tempt car owners away from their vehicles. It has also banned the import of big gas-guzzling cars. Gasoline there has jumped in a year from 71 cents to $1.07 a gallon.

India, where the price has jumped 25 cents in a month to $1.85 a gallon, has slapped heavy taxes on fuel to meet import bills. It and the Philippines are among countries that have ordered government organizations to cut consumption.

South Korea has closed most filling stations on Sundays and public holidays and limited their trading hours on other days.

Little is known of the situation in the East Bloc, but Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, commenting last week on the energy problems in the West, said it is much more favorable in socialist countries. He added, however: "Even our countries cannot avoid stringent measures for the economy of oil and gas."

Dow Chemical Plant Explosion Kills Two, Dozens Injured In California

PITTSBURG, Calif. (AP) — An explosion ripped through a Dow Chemical Co. plant Saturday, killing two workers and injuring dozens of others, authorities reported.

Phillip Schneider, manager of media relations for Dow in Midland, Mich., said two workers were killed, 15 hospitalized and 40 others treated and released. They are all employees of Plant Maintenance Incorporated, a subcontractor headquartered here.

One worker was decapitated during the chemical explosion in a new unit being tested, said Bob Mayo, manager of employee relations for the small plant located 35 miles northeast of San Francisco.

A second worker was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Francis Hospital's burn center in San Francisco, where he was to be treated for burns over 50 percent of his body..

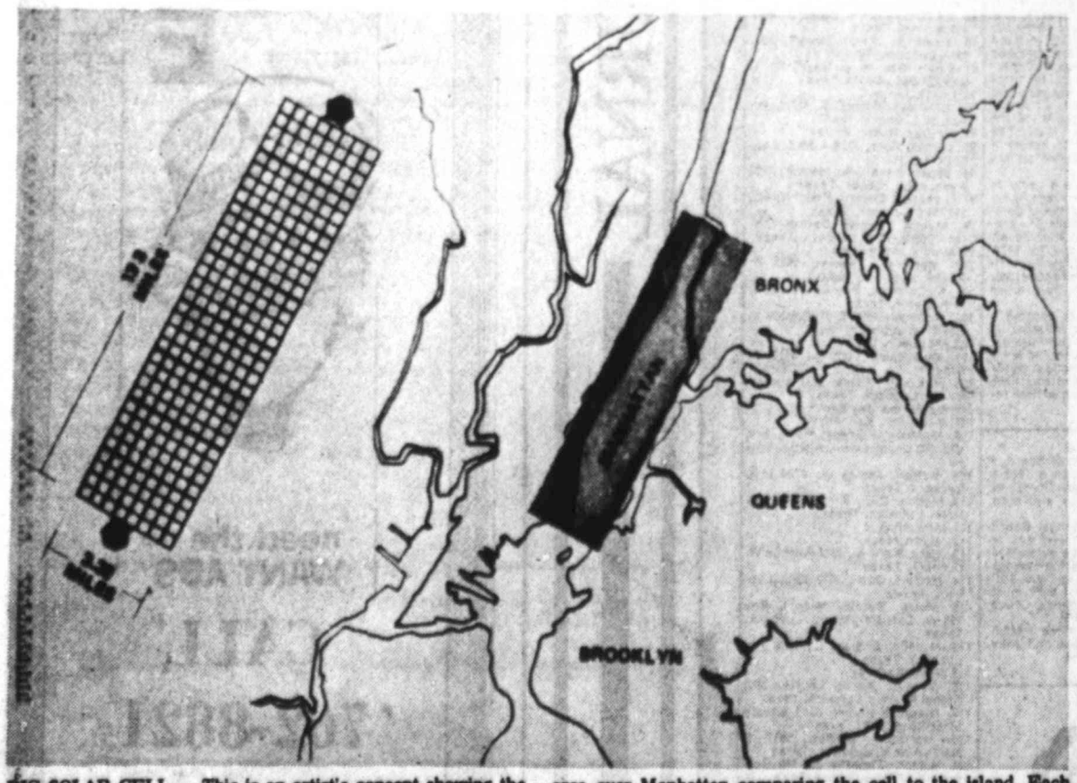

Mayo said the explosion occurred during the third test of a 600-gallon vessel in which iron powder and chlorine were being mixed to make ferric chloride, a catalyst in the manufacture of a pesticide.

The temperature, normally 284 degrees Fahrenheit, suddenly rose to 464 degrees Fahrenheit, Dow officials said.

"We don't know what happened chemically," Mayo added. "It should not have happened. There should not have been anything in there to cause a reaction like this."

The plant, which employs about 700 persons on a 400-acre site near the Sacramento River, manufactures agricultural chemicals, Mayo said. The equipment was being tested by employees of Plant Maintenance Incorporated, plant officials said.

Pittsburg fire officials said there apparently was no fire after the explosion. They said the road leading to the plant was closed for a time after the 8:30 a.m. explosion, but was re-opened later.

Sweet Revenge Makes Traffic Jam Palatable

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (UPI) — Even the most irritable motorist can take a 10-mile-long traffic jam if it is tinged with sweet revenge.

The holiday-bound cars were strung out along 10 miles of Route 22 near Bethlehem Friday night, but they loved it.

"No one seemed to mind. I was really surprised when I saw one guy get out, spread a blanket and start eating," said trooper Jeff Kotran.

No money changed hands, but it is a fair bet the jovial travelers were banking on the eight truckers against the two kids from Phillipsburg, N.J.

Driver Douglas Head and Kyle Colbe, both 18, were entertaining themselves around 9:30 Friday night by zigzagging their car around the 18-wheel trucks cruising along Route 22, police said.

The truckers were not amused. With a few messages on their citizen's band radios, the truckers rounded up eight drivers with their massive rigs and boxed the pair in along the road spanning the Lehigh River Bridge.

Head fled his corralled car on foot, yelling, "They are going to kill me!" Police found Colbe hiding in a storm sewer, refusing to come out until the truckers left.

Victor Blatnik, 28, of Mechanicsburg, Pa. admitted he and his trucking brethren were tracking the pair calling, "Come out, come out, wherever you are, we're going to kill you." But he was kidding, Blatnik said.

Appreciating the humour, police booked Head on hit and run charges for banging his car into the rear of Blatnik's rig.

THE LOCUSTS RETURN — The all-American version of the Biblical plague of locusts is surfacing now in seven Eastern states as millions of periodical cicadas, as seen in this 1973 file photo, end their 17 years underground. Stanley G. Gesell, professor of entomology extension at Pennsylvania State University says, "there's no need to worry, they don't bother people, animals or vegetable crops." (AP Laserphoto)

'Plague Of Locusts' Begins In America With Emerging Insects

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — The all-American version of the Biblical plague of locusts is surfacing now in seven Eastern states as millions of periodical cicadas end their 17 years underground.

"But there's no need to worry," says Stanley G. Gesell, professor of entomology extension at Pennsylvania State University. "They don't bother people, animals or vegetable crops."

The large, buzzing insects known as "17-year locusts" actually are not locusts at all. The misnomer apparently comes from frightened American settlers who thought they were witnessing a recurrence of the Biblical plague.

Periodical cicadas are found nowhere else in the world, Gesell said, adding, "In a year like this, when the cicadas emerge by the millions, it's easy to understand why the early Americans mistook them for locusts. The sight is spectacular and the sound is haunting and eerie."

To those in the know, however, "comparing cicadas to locusts is like equating a cow with a cat," Gesell said. "Locusts are a type of grasshopper ... Cicadas ... are related to scale insects, leafand tree-hoppers and aphids."

For 16 years and 10 months, the cicadas are underground, sustaining themselves with the juices of tree roots. When they surface for two months of breeding, they do not eat at all.

They just buzz and breed, buzz and breed.

When the time is right, in May or June, large numbers of cicadas tunnel up from their burrows, two to 24 inches deep, making a hole the size of a quarter on the earth's surface.

The emerging soft, white, big-eyed "nymphs," or nearly mature adults, then head for upright objects — trees, bushes, telephone poles or even blades of grass.

Clinging fast, they split and break out of their protective shells. Overnight, the inch-and-one-half-long nymphs harden, turn black and inflate little stubs into orange-veined wings. Their legs darken to a reddish color and their eyes turn glittering red.

Within a few days of this metamorphosis, they are ready to mate and the "music" begins.

The male cicadas produce their deafening, droning call to the females by flexing and relaxing two shell-like inflated drums on their abdomens.

The chorus begins at dawn and swells with rising temperatures to dominate the countryside until evening, when it subsides.

The sound will be familiar even to those who missed the cicadas' emergence 17 years ago. Similar sound effects are produced by the "dog-day cicadas" that appear every summer in much smaller numbers.

After mating, the females head for trees, where they slit open the bark on twigs, depositing between 400 and 600 eggs in batches of 24 to 28.

About a month later, in early July, the adults die. In a few more weeks, the eggs hatch and the new-born nymphs drop to the ground and burrow down to begin the cycle again.

Cicadas do some damage to trees while they are underground, but assessment is difficult, Gesell said.

"After all, the infestation will be over by the first of July — and in most areas, it will be years before the next 17-year brood comes up to have its few weeks in the sun."

There are two types of periodical cicadas, Gesell said — 13-and 17-year varieties. The 13-year batch is based mainly in southern states, while their 17-year cousins exist predominantly in the mid-Atlantic states.

Each group is made up of subgroups, called "broods," which have different territories, numbers and years of emergence.

Gesell said it is believed there originally were 13 broods of 13-year cicadas and 17 broods of 17-year cicadas — producing one brood, each year, somewhere. But some of the broods are nearly extinct, and with only 12 17-year broods left today, there are five fallow years.

But 1979 is the year of Brood II, Gesell said — one of the largest in both population and territory. This year's "plague" will hit sections of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina.

The various broods extend from eastern Oklahoma and Nebraska east, ranging as far north as Connecticut and as far south as northern Florida, Gesell said.

Marijuana Medicine Proposal Advances

AUSTIN (AP) — Persons dying of a cancer or in a coma could be treated with marijuana under a bill sent to Gov. Bill Clements Saturday.

On voice vote, the Senate accepted House changes to the bill by Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso. The sponsor said representatives added sections giving the Texas Department of Health authority over medical use of the drug.

Recession Indicators Increase; Inflation Remains Double Digit

NEW YORK (AP) — Signs are growing that the that long-predicted economic slowdown or recession finally is upon us.

The news coming out of Washington this past week showed April inflation once again in double-digit figures, personal income down and business orders for durable goods falling at their steepest rate in 11 years.

In addition to recent reports that new housing construction is slow, auto sales have slumped and industrial production dropped sharply in April. Many economists conclude that the recession signs are stronger than ever, if it has not already started.

Not everyone is convinced that the latest reports indicate a recession. Carter administration officials reinterated their position this past week that the economy could maintain "moderate" growth this year. And G. William Miller, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, declared: "Thre will not be a recession but rather a pause and a consolidation."

Still the prevalent view that the economy is slowing represents a reversal of what many had expected would be a "spring boom" showing a rebound from a winter troubled by strikes and bad weather.

"Over the past week, it would appear that we are finally getting confirmation that economic activity, if nothing else, has at least peaked. The teamster's strike and harsh winter weather are behind us and no longer seem to be the culprits for the declining economic data currently being released," commented Peter N. Goldsmith, of Merrill, Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith Inc.

"We have revised our forecast because we believe that the latest numbers clearly indicate an economy in trouble," said Michael Evans, chief economist for Chase Econometrics Inc. near Philadelphia.

Chase now sees no growth in the economy in the current April-June quarter, followed by a recession in the following quarter which would last through March of 1980.

Economists at Citibank in New York are not so pessimistic but figure its a safe bet that the current quarter will show only sluggish growth.

"The uniformly weak April economic statistics lay to rest the idea that there will be an economic surge in the spring. They also raise the question of whether the downturn might be beginning now," said a Citibank economic review, which concludes that it would be "premature" to declare negative growth this quarter.

The argument over slow growth and recession is really one of degree. But some economists have shifted to a more pessimistic view in the face of a series of gloomy statistics for April.

The accepted definition of a recession is two consecutive quarters of shrinking output of goods and services. The latest economic data showed growth in real Gross National Product in the first three months of the year at a borderline 0.4 percent, down sharply from exceptionally strong growth of more than 6 percent in the final three months of 1978.

Evans at Chase Econometrics points in particular to a Commerce Department report this past week that business orders for durable goods in April plunged 8.7 percent from March, the steepest one month drop in 11 years as the "clincher" in his shift to a more pessimistic view.

"The unexpected drop in new orders was partly the result of a general weakening in the economy and in business confidence," Evans said. "But the trigger seems to have been the psychological impact of the current gasoline panic and the consumers' perception that this crisis is going to last longer and cause more damage than the one in 1974."

Administration officials, who had hoped for slower growth in the economy to ease inflation pressures, still maintain that a recession is not in the cards and so do some in the private sector.

Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers said this past week he expected the economy to maintain "growth of a moderate amount" this year while inflation should ease from its current rate of about 13 percent.

And General Motors Chairman Thomas A. Murphy told stockholders he sees little evidence of the economic conditions that have preceded downturns in the past.

"We are not entering a recession. The economy still has considerable forward momentum — the rate of growth may be moderating but even so it continues," he said.

—Consumer prices rose 1.1 percent in April, which works out to an annual inflation rate of more than 13 percent. Oil prices were the big culprit in the jump in the Consumer Price Index. The government said gas prices rose 6 percent in April, or about six times more than the average prices in the index. April was the third month in which consumer prices have risen by 1 percent or more.

—The Labor Department said inflation and taxes had combined to reduce further the buying power of American workers. The amount of money workers have to spend fell 2.4 percent in April. So far this year, the decline was 4.5 percent.

—The nation's big three automakers said their sales dropped by nearly 28 percent in a 10-day reporting period in mid-May. General Motors said its sales were down 20 percent and Ford and Chrysler reported declines of more than 32 percent each. Uncertainty over the availability of gasoline was blamed. But GM's chairman Murphy later in the week predicted that sales would be "spurred on" this year by consumers who want more economical cars.

—The government's index of industrial production fell 1 percent in April, its biggest decline in more than four years. Some of that was attributed to a truckers strike, which held up transportation, and some weather problems. But the drop was surprisingly large and followed a modest climb of 0.7 percent in the index in March.

—New housing starts slipped 2 percent between March and April to 1.75 million units on a seasonally adjusted annual basis. That continued a trend that has seen new housing starts running about 13 percent below a year earlier in the first four months of 1979.

Takeover Frenzy Still Tops Market News

By J. L. HUTCHESON

J.L. HUTCHESON

The computer, defense, retail, tobacco, television and savings-and-loan issues finished higher. Steel and auto stocks moved lower.

Biggest performers in the merger arena were Interway and Reliance Electric. Geico has offered to acquire up to 2,040,000 shares of Interway, a transportation equipment leasing concern. Interway said it is talking over the possibility of merging with other companies besides Geico. Exxon is seeking to acquire Reliance, an electric motor producer.

Analysts said the market reflected the frustration of investors trying to interpret recent economic news. Many investors viewed recent news, such as declines in auto sales and steel orders, as signals of a slowdown.

Thursday, G. William Miller, Federal Reserve Board chairman, and Charles Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, both said that the nation should be able to avoid a recession.

Many investors believe stocks go down in the early part of a recession and most professional investors won't commit cash reserves to the market until they see convincing signs of a recession, which they feel is necessary to slow inflation and bring down interest rates.

It was announced Tuesday, that the April durable goods orders dropped 8.7 percent for their biggest decline in more than 11 years. Many investors viewed this as news that a recession had actually started, but other analysts said it was too soon to tell.

Analysts point to the high yields in competing money market instruments as being a difficult obstacle to overcome for the stock market. It is very hard for many people to invest in stocks when they can actually see the economy slowing and interest rates with little or no risk are so high.

A major research firm recently forecast a mild, two-to-three-quarter economic slowdown. If this is correct, investor perception of inflation may be considerably reduced in six to 12 months. This could spark an improvement in stock prices.

Budget Cut Just $.3 Billion

After weeks of committee hearings, debates, amendments and compromises, the Congress cut $.3 billion from the budget proposed by President Carter.

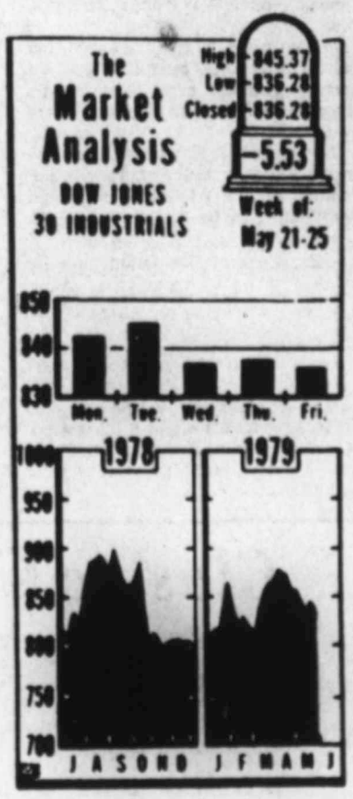

The result hardly seems worth the effort, much less the number of press releases. In order to make it look like they had achieved more, Congress raised their revenue assumption $5 billion above the president's. They did this so they might say that "a stringent budget had emerged from Congress."

Actually, inflation may pull the deficit figure down even lower. Since inflation is running at a higher rate than is assumed in the budget resolution, the tax revenues from people's being pushed into higher brackets by inflation will be higher than assumed. The progressive income tax assures that the government's revenues will rise faster than the rate of inflation.

Balancing the budget through higher taxes is not what the proponents of a balanced budget had in mind, but it is what Congress had in mind. The "austere" 1980 budget looks more like a temporary effort to hold down spending increases rather than the start of a genuine shift away from big government. All the various programs are still intact, and spending can resume whatever the Congress believes that public outrage over the issue is waning.

The United States is still without a Congress, or president, who actually wants to spend less and tax less. Until Washington changes its basic attitudes toward this issue, automatic tax increases from inflation and manipulation of economic policies will substitute for the real thing.

'Margin Debt' Climbs In Stock Market

NEW YORK (AP) — The use of borrowed money in the stock market is on the rise again, prompting some concern among analysts.

Total "margin debt" — loans outstanding from brokers using securities as collateral — has climbed in each of the past three months, according to New York Stock Exchange figures.

It reached $11.22 billion at the end of April — not far short of the record high of $12.4 billion set last year, just before a steep decline in stock prices that came to be known as the October Massacre.

In that two-week slide, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell more than 90 points. And brokers reported that forced selling as a result of "margin calls" was a major factor in the latter stages of the decline.

This forced selling can occur whenever the price of the stock or stocks used as collateral on a margin loan declines below a specified level.

At that point, the broker notifies the borrower that he must put up additional collateral, such as stock or cash. If the borrower is unable or unwilling to comply, the broker then must sell enough stock to bring the account back within legal limits.

At present the margin requirement, as set by the Federal Reserve, is 50 percent. In other words, an investor can borrow up to half the purchase price when he buys a stock.

The margin requirement has been at that level since early 1974, when the Fed reduced it from 65 percent. If only because it hasn't been changed for such an unusually long period, there has been some scattered conjecture lately that the central bank might soon raise it.

"Any change, given the current level of margin debt, would have to be up," the brokerage firm First Albany Corp. of Albany, N.Y., observed.

But several analysts expressed doubt late last week that such a move was in the offing, noting that margin-requirement increases usually come when stock prices are high amid heavy speculative activity. By most any measure, stock prces currently are not high at all.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed the past week at 836.28, down 5.63 from the previous Friday.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose .35 to 56.61. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose .35 to 185.45.

The primary purpose of margin debt is leverage — using borrowed money to increase the potential profit on an investment.

As Standard & Poor's Corp. put it in a recent report: "This is a speculative procedure, not suitable for all investors.

"If your security selections are good ones, the rate of return on your cash will be magnified. If the prices fall, however, you will lose more.

"Gains on the securities you choose have to be fairly substantial to make margin buying profitable because only moderate price rises can be more than offset by the interest you pay on the money borrowed from your broker.

"At a 50 percent margin rate, a fixed amount of money would get you twice as much stock as you would be able to buy on an all-cash basis. Any profits would be twice as large (less the interest on the loan); any losses would be twice as large (plus the interest)."

That interest currently runs at between 11 and 12 1/2 percent annual rates, S&P noted.

For investors considering using margin, S&P offered this suggestion: "Ask yourself whether you have (1) the temperament to assume the added risk, (2) the financial resources to meet possible margin calls, and (3) the time to closely monitor the price action of the securities."

Monkey Business Gets Out Of Hand For LA Woman

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Louise Newton expected to find a peeping Tom, but instead she found a monkey that chased her down the block, bit her leg and caused her to break her knee.

"It was horrible," she said. "He was really strong."

Mrs. Newton, 38, said that when she went out to investigate a noise Thursday night, she found a 3-foot, 15-pound rhesus monkey on the roof.

When the monkey chased her she jumped onto the hood of a parked car. But the monkey followed and began biting her. And when she took off a sandal and began hitting the beast, she lost her balance, fell off the car and broke a knee.

Despite the fracture, Mrs. Newton said, she was able to get to a nearby house, where a resident called police.

Police finally found the monkey and dropped a crate over him until animal control officers arrived to take him away.

Police said they don't know where the monkey came from.

NIXON'S NEW HOME — The gate at the far right in this photo of Calle Ariana, a street in the exclusive Cyprus Shore Development in San Clemente, Calif., marks the midway point of former President Richard M. Nixon's new five-bedroom home and is its entrance. The dwelling, which cost a reported $650,000, was paid for by long-time Nixon associate Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo. CAUGHT IN THE ACT — Avalanche-Journal Photographer Gary Davis caught Coronado High School graduating senior Janet Johnson in the act of making final preparations for Friday night's ceremony in the Municipal Coliseum. Like many of the city's graduates, Miss Johnson obviously thought the gown too cumbersome to wear on the way to the coliseum and too hot to be worn over anything but a shorts outfit. In the background, enjoying Miss Johnson's struggle to step into the gown are, left, her cousin, Sherry Symington and her mother, Beth Johnson.

Photo Contest Offers $55,000 In Prizes To Newspaper Readers

More than 200 picture-taking newspaper readers from the United States, Canada and Mexico will share in the $55,000 Kodak International Newspaper Snapshot Awards (KINSA) this year. If you enter The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal summer snapshot contest, you could be one of them.

All you have to do is send your best black-and-white or color photos to "Summer Snapshot Contest," c/o The A-J, Box 491, Lubbock, Texas 79408, between June 3 and July 14. Local winners will be announced each Sunday starting June 17. The four color and two black-and-white entries judged best at the end of the contest will be forwarded to Kodak for the international judging.

In the KINSA '79 finals you can win a $100 special merit award if your picture gets a vote from even one of the five judges. At least 200 of these awards will be given. If your picture makes it to the top 15, you are assured of winning at least $500. Ten $500 honor awards will go to photos that just miss the cash-and-travel prizes.

And the picture that makes the biggest impression on the judges, whether it be black-and-white or color, will receive the grand prize, best of show award — a 30-day around-the-world trip for two with $1,000 spending money, or $10,000 in cash.

Two other big cash-travel prizes will be awarded, one each for black-and-white and color. The first-place winners in each category will receive 21-day trips anywhere in Europe, plus $500 spending money, or $5,000 in cash. Second place winners can plan any type of 14-day trip to Mexico they wish, with $250 in spending money or receive $2,5000 in cash.

Special in KINSA '79, in appreciation of Kodak's role as official photographic consultant to the 1980 Winter Olympic Games, is a sports award in both black-and-white and color categories — a five-day trip for two to the Games in Lake Placid, N.Y., in February, 1980 or $1,500 in cash.

With local prize money coming up shortly and all these international prizes a possibility later, now is the time to start looking through pictures you've taken since July 1, 1978, and to start taking new pictures at every opportunity so you'll be ready to enter The A-J's snapshot contest as soon as it opens on June 3. Any amateur photographer is eligible to compete.

Local weekly winners will receive parchment certificates from The A-J and Kodak. The top four finalists in the color and black-and-white categories also will receive $50 each from The A-J.

Last year, 2,261 persons entered The A-J contest and one received a special merit award from Kodak.

Homebound Student Graduates From Coronado

By LISA PAIKOWSKI
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The day that Norma Malone never thought she'd see finally came Friday when she graduated — in a wheelchair — with her classmates at Coronado High School.

She has come a long way from an August day in 1975 when she was severely injured in a motorcycle-truck collision to the May evening when she received her diploma with honors.

She has managed, during four years of hopelessness and frustration alternating with optimism and cheerfulness, to improve both her mind and body injured in the accident.

Mentally, she progressed from having a mind that doctors thought would never function again to one that has grasped the knowledge of a dedicated student.

Physically, she has gone from total reliance on a wheelchair to the achievement of actually walking with some assistance.

She cited the three most important strengths in battling her handicap as God, her parents and her friends.

"All have been strengthened" since the accident, Norma said.

The collision left Norma unconscious for three months and in intensive care for a month and a half. Initially, she was not expected to live, but then doctors amended the prognosis to say that she would live, but that her mind would not function.

She also had to learn how to speak and eat again and above all, she had to work on improving her mental capabilities.

Norma and her mother, Emmy Malone, laud the aid and direction provided Norma by the Lubbock Independent School District's Homebound Program in continuing her education and improving the functions of her mind.

The program provides a teaching service to students too ill or crippled to attend regular school classes.

"The program is tremendous," said Mrs. Malone. "The teachers not only teach but they have to gauge their teaching to the well-being of the student on any particular day."

She said that unlike classroom teachers, Homebound educators may follow their pupils through different grade levels, and "they have to be dedicated to do that," she said.

"I have had the same terrific teacher for the last three years," said Norma, speaking of teacher Eileen Tinney.

"If I didn't understand something, she'd take the time and explain it to me until I knew it," she said. "She has the ability to bring out the best in her students."

Her reliance on and appreciation of God, her parents and friends came through repeatedly in Norma's conversation.

"I am not a fanatic," she said, but only someone who feels that God has been supporting her. "God is my strength and he has become more close," she said.

She added that "My parents have given me tremendous support. They've aided me in every way I could think of. And my friends have been good to me," she continued.

Norma spoke of the difficulty of carrying on despite the obstacles in her way, but said she has remained an optimist.

"Life hasn't been easy," she said. "There were many nights when I just wanted to crawl into a hole and die. There have been many a night when I was crying in bed. But when I'm crying in bed, I take comfort in talking with God.

She continued, "If not for the discomforts I would not have grown as much as I have."

And now Norma looks forward to the future. "I'm now not scared of the future and I'm looking forward to it," she said.

Norma, who is ranked 20th in a graduating class of 600, hopes to attend college as her next step.

She hopes to become either a psychologist or a counselor because she wants to "help people."

Her mother supports Norma's independence, and has, in fact, encouraged it. "We love her and we wanted for her to be a complete human being again," she said, "So we did what we thought was right."

She said that Norma, like all children, has had to "learn to stand on her own feet. We have had to make her self-sufficient enough to handle life on her own."

Gunmen Fail To Kill Khomeini Aide

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini blamed "superpowers and international criminals" Saturday for the shooting of one of his top associates, but said Iran's revolutionary movement would not be deterred.

In the northeastern city of Mashhad, an Islamic firing squad executed a former official of the disbanded SAVAK secret police agency, bringing to 223 the number of persons shot by order of revolutionary courts since February.

Scattered demonstrations against the United States continued near the U.S. Embassy, following anti-American demonstrations Thursday and Friday that drew as many as 100,00 persons.

Some 1,000 to 3,000 air force technicians demonstrated outside the embassy Saturday afternoon, and a proclamation was read denouncing a U.S. Senate resolution issued last week that criticized the revolutionary court trials and executions.

Khomeini's wounded associate, Ayatollah Hashemi Rafsanjani, was reported in good condition in a Tehran hosptal. Authorities said the 50-year-old Rafsanjani was shot in the abdomen as he struggled with three unidentified gunmen who came to the door of his house Friday night. The single bullet missed his liver, grazed a kidney and exited through his back, the officials said. Rafsanjani's wife was slightly wounded in the attack.

In a statement read by an announcer on state radio, Khomeini said he did not subscribe to the idea that the culprits were simply of Iranian origin.

He said, "From among the webs of these terrors one (can) see the footsteps of the superpowers and international criminals."

He did not elaborate, but called on the United States and other superpowers to notice that "our nation is alive ... the struggle is alive."

Rafsanjani is believed to be a member of the all-powerful but secret Islamic Revolutionary Council. A former pupil of Khomeini, he delivered a stinging speech Thursday against the U.S. Senate at a Tehran rally called to endorse the nation's revolutionary executions.

Forghan, an underground group opposed to Iran's religious rule, claimed responsibility for the attack. The group also has claimed responsibility for the killings of Gen. Mohammad Vali Gharani, the first chief of staff of the revolutionary armed forces, and Ayatollah Morteza Motahari, another revolutionary council member.

Newspapers Saturday reported that revolutionary militiamen had arrested two members of the Forghan group, believed to be an anarchist cell with Islamic leanings.

Tech Medical School Graduation Scheduled

Ceremonies will be at 2:30 p.m. June 3 in the University Center Theatre with Dr. Robert A. Good, president and director of Sloan-Kettering Cancer Research Institute of New York, delivering the graduation address.

Good alos is professor of pathology at the institute, a graduate of Cornell University Graduate School of Medical Sciences, adjunct professor and visiting physician of Rockefellor University, professor of medicine and pediatrics at Cornell University Medical College and professor of pediatrics at the University of Southern Alabama Medical College.

Good's honors include the Squibb Award of the Infectious Diseases Society of America, the Gordon Wilson Gold Award of the American Clinical and Climatological Association, the Tap Teen Award of the March of Dimes, the City of HoPe Award and the Borden Award of the Association of American Medical Colleges. He has served on national and international advisory panels.

Dr. Cecil Mackey, president of Texas Tech University and the university's School of Medicine, will preside at the convocation.

The Declaration of Geneva will be administered by Dr. J.M. Rankin, former president of the Lubbock Crosby Garza County Medical Society. Raymond M. Thomas, class president, will deliver the student response.

A highlight of the convocation will be the second presentation of the Gold-Headed Cane Award to a senior by the faculty. The award is based on the Hippocratic Standards of learning, sagacity, humanity and probity which have been moral and ethical guidelines for physicians for more than 2000 years.

Rabbi Alexander Kline, rabbi of Congregation Shaareth Israel, will deliver the invocation and benediction.

Including students who have selected flexible first-year programs, about 50 percent of the graduating class members will enter first-year training program in primary care disciplines (family p > tice, pediatrics and internal medici e). About 60 percent of the class members will remain in Texas for their first year of graduate medical education.

The graduation convocation will be preceeded by an awards convocation at 2:30 p.m. June 2 in the University Center Theatre.

Classic Cabinet Maker Pumps Gas Too

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass. (AP) — The sign says "North Family Joiners" and those are definitely wood-working tools in the window.

But the place is, unmistakably, a filling station.

"You take what comes along," Charles Caffall shrugged. "Pumping gas is a curse, but at least it pays the mortgage."

The real curse is that the Charles Caffalls of the world must sacrifice their comfort to their art.

"That's how it is," he said. "Any craft business, unless you go into production, is going to be hand-to-mouth. You have to accept that."

Caffall's craft is making furniture. Not just any furniture, but reproductions, down to the last hand-carved, dove-tailed joint, of the elegantly simple furniture of the Shakers.

"The Shakers lived plainly and made plain, honest, functional furniture," Caffall said. "They used the least amount of wood necessary, no ornamentation. The proportions are perfect.

"They probably didn't realize they were making classic country furniture — or maybe they did. I find it beautiful."

So do museum curators and rich collectors, who seek out 19th century originals, and countless others less wealthy for whom reproductions will do, but who still care about the beauty of hand crafting.

Charles Caffall is a 43-year-old artisan, built along the lines he admires most. He is as lean as a clothespin — a Shaker invention — and his only ornamentation is a full, reddish beard.

He and his wife, Nancy, fled the New York theater — he from the technical end, she from the stage — eight years ago, looking as much for a saner way of life as for a place for Charles to work at his first love, cabinet making.

They picked this corner of the Berkshire hills, not far from an old Shaker village, and became the North Family Joiners.

"The Shakers kept newcomers, novitiates who had not made a final commitment to the cult, on the north side of their communes, and called them North Families," Charles explained.

"When we started this business, we thought the name apt."

Perhaps. But if there was doubt of Charles' commitment, there was none of his skill.

The previous year he had measured, photographed and precisely reproduced two Shaker pieces in New York's Metropolitan Museum collection: a candle stand and a sewing stand.

When the museum's reproduction department saw his joinery, he was commissioned on the spot to make a dozen more of each.

He still makes nothing of his own design. Every piece he makes, on order, is a duplicate of a Shaker original that he has seen and measured.

"To do that I have to use tools the Shakers used, mostly molding planes, that you can't buy nowadays," he said.

"That got me in the antique tool business. I bought up collections to get what I needed and what I couldn't use I sold to dealers.

"Then I decided, why not be a dealer myself? It's not much trouble, it's interesting, and I can use the extra money. I guess it is strange, though, to stop at a gas sttion and find an antique tool display."

Charles' workshop is alongside the station. When the bell rings he puts down his molding plane, resignedly, and pumps gas.

"Some day," he said, a dreamy look in his pale blue eyes, "we will get rid of this gas business and move to a quieter place and I will make only the kinds of furniture I want to make, big pieces, lots of drawers, lots of cabinet doors."

It sounds as if North Family is no longer an apt name.

FINDS IT TOUGH MAKING SIMPLE FURNITURE — Charles Caffall sharpens a woodmaking tool in his Great Barrington, Mass., shop -located alongside a filling station. Caffall, whose craft is duplicating the elegantly simple furniture of the Shakers, must put down his tools and pump gas whenever the station's bell rings. "Pumping gas is a curse," he says, "but at least it pays the mortgage."(AP Laserphoto)

Accessibility Aids Many People In Addition To Handicapped

By BEVERLY O'BRIANT
Family News Staff

According to a recently published book on accessibility, "The disabled minority is not a closed society. While nobody will ever change his color of skin or place of birth, anyone can join the minority by accident, illness or advancing age. Disability does not respect age, sex, religion or social status. Every American should consider himself an ally for disabled people seeking a fair deal."

Trudy S. Putteet, assistant to the director of student life at Texas Tech University, agrees with that concept. Miss Putteet, who is herself handicapped because of an automobile accident, believes that a proper attitude toward disabilities is necessary to affect change. Many people do not think about the needs of a handicapped person simply through a lack of awareness, she explained. By neglecting the needs of the handicapped, people may be denying themselves the same services if they later find themselves in the same position.

The elimination of architectural barriers is important to handicapped students and others, but the rationale behind the changes made is the key to accessibility, according to Miss Putteet.

Because many colleges and universities rely on federal and state funds, they are required to provide access for the handicapped. The major mistake some of these schools make, according to Miss Putteet, is a failure to anticipate the need for accessibility when designing a new building. Designing architectural access into a new building is much more economically advantageous than trying to make structural changes years later.

For one thing, if ramps, elevators and other structural changes are made initially in the construction of a new building, there is no further cost. There is a prevention of barriers rather than a removal of barriers.

The double-cost factor is also removed when the rationale behind structural changes is considered. Many times, according to Miss Putteet, specifications for accessibility set by the government are minimal. If the purpose of a grip bar in a restroom is not clear to an architect or worker, that bar may be placed in such a way that it is not functional. If it is not functional, the effort is wasted. The workers will have to go back and correct the mistake, doubling the cost.

One of the roles Miss Putteet plays in her position is that of an advocate for the students. Some of those students are disabled, needing help to get into classes their degree plans may require. Frequently, that help is simply getting a ramp set up going into the necessary building, or adjusting facilities to meet special needs.

It is true that funds are limited to schools, said Miss Putteet. However, she pointed out, the "question is what gives most access per university dollar and what is most beneficial for everyone."

Accessibility is not something directed only at the disabled. Older faculty members, older visitors, pregnant women and cardiac patients have a need for easy access as much as the handicapped, said Miss Putteet. "We are not putting cost into a few people, but providing easy access for all."

Miss Putteet believes that with a change of outlook much of the problem could be eliminated. The lack of education concerning the needs of the handicapped on the part of the architect is part of the problem, she said. "They need to know what they are trying to achieve." Creative architectural designs with low maintenance and a conservation of energy could easily be evolved, providing easy access that is aesthetically pleasing, Miss Putteet pointed out.

Many of the buildings on the Tech campus are fitted with elevators, ramps and cut away curbs. However, the battle of accessibility is not over for the handicapped students there. The important thing, according to Miss Putteet, is that the administration at Tech is working to remove any barriers. The handicapped are seldom consulted about architectural changes that are made, yet they are the ones who are most immediately affected. However, she said, "they have made an effort to do so at Tech."

Miss Putteet believes the administration at Tech to be very open to suggestions concerning improved campus accessibility. A number of requests are turned down but the attitude of the administration is good, she said. The philosophy of the Tech administration seems to be that there is a lot to be done, not that it cannot be done, remarked Miss Putteet.

Slow, but continual progress in removing architectural and program barriers means more than instant accessibility, explained Miss Putteet. Because of the lack of necessary funds, a school can only do so much at a time to correct problems. Gradually, the situation will be corrected. However, Miss Putteet noted, "if the progress stops, I won't feel Tech is working to achieve accommodations necessary for its students."

"Architectural and other barriers often keep millions of Americans from participating in and contributing to our society." — Pres. Jimmy Carter, establishing the third week of May as National Architectural Barrier Awareness Week.

INTERNATIONAL SYMBOL — The International Symbol of Access may be found in buildings that are accessible to the handicapped, indicating to a handicapped person that its facilities have been adjusted or designed for his use. The emblem may also be found on cars, vans or other vehicles used by a handicapped person or may mark parking areas designated for use by the handicapped.

Lubbock Homes To Utilize Solar Power

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
Family News Staff

While for many of us the local use of solar energy may seem a long way off, one Lubbock construction firm currently is engaged in building homes which are part of a government-monitored solar power project.

Henry Huneke, owner of First Homes, said a very complicated process was involved in getting two government grants for construction of two groups of homes using solar equipment. One grant is for ten homes and the other for fifteen, he reported.

In April of 1978, Dr. C.E. Teske and Dr. Ernst Kiesling worked up two proposals which were submitted to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and to the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE). "We had no way of knowing if either of the proposals would be accepted," he explained," and we were especailly surprised that both were accepted."

The two sets of homes utilize solar equipment by two different manufacturers, but are put into homes with the same basic design and thus form a good control group for a study, he said.

"The government has two major concerns in giving us these grants," Huneke said. "One emphasis was to stimulate the use of solar energy and the other was to have a situation which could be evaluated for a five-year period to give them some data on actual use of solar power during normal family occupancy of a home equipped with this kind of system."

"After the grants were approved, an engineering firm hired by the government went over the plans very carefully and analyzed them listing 'areas of concern.' We could proceed with building before we answered these and the concerns on our plans were very minimal and modifications easily made," he said.

At present First Homes has one house occupied, another on site and being finished, and three more in construction at the plant at 96th St. and University Ave.

The use of solar power in these homes will be monitored by electronic equipment at the Space Center in Houston. Occasionally the occupants also will be asked to fill in written questionnaires supplying additional information.

One of the advantages of of having a home with solar equipment, Huneke said, involves tax breaks people receive for using it. The ad valorem tax has been eliminated on solar equipment, for example. Other tax credits are based on percentages of the costs. Buyers also receive some break from the grant funding.

The home which is presently occuplied includes solar collectors in the south-facing roof and an above-ground rock storage tank. Air is used as a conductor. It does have a complete back-up system.

"We tested the completed house for more than a week before we allowed the buyer to move in, and we were convinced that the equipment was functioning perfectly and, in fact, even better than we had projected," Huneke said.

Because all of the homes are built on the same basic floor plan and have the same area, 1280 square feet, they offer a good set of testing conditions for the use of solar energy, he said.

Drs. Keisling and Teske, Huneke, and Glenn Hill, First Homes architect, will be among the speakers at the "Solar Energy For Your Home" seminar which will be held Tuesday evening in the Hodges Community Center. The seminar is sponsored by the Home Energy Program of the Texas Agricultural Extenson Service and by the Texas Energy Extension Service.

Doctor Stresses Dangers Of Sunbathing

BY JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

A glowing tan acquired in the summertime means an attretive and healthy appearance to most people.

A Lubbock physician who specializes in diseases of the skin, said, "Everytime I go by Tech and see coeds sunbathing, I shudder to think what their skin will look like when they are 35. Perhaps I sound 'alarmist,' but I don't like to see skin damaged beyond repair or skin cancers."

"In West Texas, we have unusual amounts of bright sunlight, coupled with wind. And people jump in chlorine-filled swimming pools and get their skin dried out even more. So, in my opinion, it is not surprising that many patients come in terribly burned after they tell me how they got that way.

"All I can say is, if you have to sunbathe, stay in the morning sun a short time, building up time in the sun little by little. Remember that you will not notice how much tan you have, until after a few days.

"I am aware there are numerous commercial sunbathing preparations on the market. I'll remind you, however, that since I'm not in favor of sunbathing per se, I prefer not to recommend any of them."

From well-filled drug and department store cosmetic shelves, it is obvious that manufacturers expect people to disregard warnings concerning sunbathing. It is also evident the days of "iodine and baby oil" are over and that much more sophisticated choices are now available.

In fact, because of a report of a review panel of the Food and Drug Administration (held last August), guidelines for sun protector factor (SPF) may be mandated by law in the future.

SPF depends on skin type, how easily you burn and how tan you already are. On a scale from 2-15 (the lowest is the least strength of sunscreen), you can then choose a preparation suited for skin type that will not let you burn. But the whole matter becomes extremely complicated, at least from some manufacturer's information, and the consumer must spend a great deal of time reading the labels.

To sunbathe or not — the choice is yours.

Solar Energy Seminar Scheduled

The Texas South Plains area has an abundance of sunshine. The potential for harnessing that sunpower for use in your home will be the topic of a solar energy seminar here Tuesday.

The seminar will be held at the Hodges Community Center, 41st Street and University Avenue, beginning at 7:30 p.m. It is sponsored by the Home Energy Program of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"Heat from the sun can warm your home and produce hot water," said Jane Cohen, extension agent for home energy, the conference coordinator. "With predictable increases in the cost of energy, using energy from the sun in down-to-earth applications is becoming more economically acceptable."

Keynote speaker for the free seminar will be Russel E. Smith of Austin, executive director of the Texas Solar Energy Society. He will discuss the future of solar power. Smith will trace the history of the energy crisis and of solar power and outline advantages of using solar energy.

Also on the program are several faculty members and researchers from Texas Tech University and Texas A&M University, architects, a home builder, and an extension service housing-home furnishings specialist. Tech, several commercial firms, the Texas Solar Energy Society and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service will display exhibits of solar equipment and information beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Dr. Ernst W. Kiesling, professor and chairman of the Civil Engineering Department at Tech, will present an overview of solar energy for housing. He will discuss homes as a passive system, designed to make maximum use of existing weather conditions, and as an active system with specially constructed solar equipment.

Dr. C.E. Teske, professor of engineering technology at Tech, will look at energy conservation and solar economics. A specialist in energy conservation and solar design and economic analysis, he will discuss the major factors of building design, operation and maintenance. He also will analyze the costs of the life cycle of a solar home.

Dr. Bill Stewart, agricultural engineer with the extension service, will provide homeowners with some tips on quality standards and ways to evaluate the materials and workmanship of solar companies.

Carl Childers, professor of architecture at Tech, will discuss the home as a solar collector. His presentation will include such subjects as the home site and orientation, direct gain, storage walls, planning concepts, greenhouses, auxiliary fuel requirements, appearance, and some leagal aspects such as building codes and zoning regulations.

The family as a consumer unit in the implication of lifestyle on energy use will be discussed by Rachel Wortham. She is an instructor and research assistant in the Department of Family Management, Housing and Consumer Science at Tech.

Susan Mason, also a research assistant in the department of family management, will look at the attitudes of lending institutions toward financing solar housing.

Installing and maintaining solar homes will be discussed by Glenn Hill and Henry Huneke. Hill is architect and Huneke owner of First Homes, a Lubbock construction firm.

In My Corner

By FRANCES LOWE

Sitting at home on a rainy Monday morning, waiting for the repairman to arrive, I am likely to engage in philosophical musings which have the ring, at that altitude, of eternal truths.

Such as that the appliances are conspiring against me.

In my fantasies, I am content in a thatched-roof cottage in Wales, living on potatoes.

"Aha," says Himself, comfortable resident of this century, who cannot imagine life without a reclining chair, television, and a bowl of peanuts within reach, "you would not really like it."

A lot he knows. I have no affinity for mechanical things. Like strange dogs, they know that I am afraid of them. Let me think, "If one more thing goes wrong today I will scream," and they will clank to a stop, taking with them the entire electrical system.

In my thatched cottage in Wales I would have remarked, "I cannot wash clothes today; the creek is flooded," and we would have gone dirty.

"It doesn't like me," I complain to Himself.

"Nonsense," he says firmly. "It is not alive. It is an inanimate object. It will serve you for years if you take good care of it." Thereby contradicting himself.

"However did you manage?"

"I got up in the morning and put the diapers to soak. By then I had the wash on the line and the bread rising. By two, the pies and bread were baked; I was finished with my work and lay down with the babies for a nap."

"Wasn't it terrible?"

"No," she muses. "It was lonely, sometimes. But I think we were happier then."

An adversary has invaded, taken over our homes, and nobody is concerned. It wears heavy armour: appliance white, harvest gold, avacado green and, most recently, almond.

Who saw the need for colored appliances? Who, in her wildest dreams, desired gold trim on the shelves of her refrigerator? What housewife, on a rainy Monday, decided that all would be well if her oven had a black door?

"What is it for?" I ask the salesman.

He shrugs. "People want it."

What people? I have asked all my friends, and none of them has requested a black oven door.

Now and then, to lull us into a false sense of security, they do something sensible. Many a woman has sighed aloud for a self-cleaning oven. Like Phyllis Diller, I know that mine needs cleaning when the crust is so thick that I have to bake cupcakes one at a time. When I first met this oven, it cooked very quickly. I would put in the "burn and serve" rolls, and they would be done before I closed the door. Wonderful, I thought; it must be the altitude. One day a repairman came for some other reason and offered to check the temperature. The oven, he told me, was 200 degrees high, and adjusted it. Now it does not work at all.

My grandmother would thrust her hand into the oven of her black, wood-burning stove. "Just right," she would announce, and put in a loaf of bread. In the 20th Century I cannot find an oven which will do what I ask, although I may, if I wish, have one with a black door.

Our appliances take more care and feeding than our people. We choose them more carefully. Never mind what impels us to choose them. It is like laying up a store of nuts for the winter; we do it by instinct. But the choices you would like are not the choices offered.

"I would like a refrigerator that will last a long time. It should be cold and have shelves in it. It should not have plastic walls which peel and crack."

"We do not have that kind."

"Why?"

"They are not made any more."

"Why?"

"Because nobody wants them."

"How do you know?"

"Because nobody buys them."

You will, however, be offered choices you had not thought about. Colors. Gold or silver trim. Push buttons or dials. Seven or 12 wash cycles. Two doors or three. Horizontal or vertical. Built in or free-standing.

"I would like to buy an oven."

"One oven?"

"Yes."

"We will have to order it. Nobody buys single ovens."

"Will that cost more?"

"Of course."

More than a child, once you have it is yours forever. The responsibility is yours; the father will deny that he ever knew you. It is also your responsibility to send in the warranty. The company believes in its appliance, but only if the warranty is sent in. Soon, but after the warranty has expired, the complicated dial will fail, the plastic walls will splilt, the gold trim will fall off and the butter dish will have melted in the dishwasher.

"How do you start this thing?" Himself may ask.

"Set the dial to permanent press, spin cycle; hit it with your hand, and jiggle the switch."

He does not believe you. Men believe that appliances, like houses, wives and furniture arrangements, will stay the same forever, permanent, immutable. Didn't he buy it for you, or insist that you buy it, to make your life easier?

The theme of "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Racing," if I understood it, was that man must come to terms with a mechanical environment if he is to survive on this planet. It cannot be done. Already, their graveyards take up more room than those for people. If you think that by outliving one you have won, you are wrong. Dead, it is more difficult than alive. Nobody wants it. It will stand in the garage until you pay someone to take it away, to become someone else's problem. The person who made it should be responsible, to its final disposition. Perhaps then he would think twice about how long it should last.

Husbands and children are addicted to these times, to television and reclining chairs. And to cars. The upholstery in the car is nicer than that in the parlor, but there is no place to put a coffee cup. The interior is soft and luxurious, but when you empty the ash tray you will spill the contents on your lap. There is a stereo, but the children cannot see out of the windows. There is air-conditioning, but you cannot take a nap without spraining your neck. There is radio, but there is also a blind spot behind your right shoulder big enough to hide a station wagon.

My grandmother had a mop, a bucket and a broom, and her house was cleaner than mine. She had a black wood stove, and her food was better than mine. She had a horse and buggy and went wherever she wanted to go, and says people were happier then.

We are sitting in the den, reading and watching television. The cats and children are asleep. I hear murmurings in the kitchen.

"They are talking about me," I say.

"Nonsense," Himself says firmly.

Marital Improvement Class Focuses On Communication

The department of home and family life at Texas Tech University has announced a marriage improvement program to be offered during a weekend in June.

Darrell Farris, program coordinator, said the program will be open, free of charge to couples of all ages.

"Married couples today have more presure and decisions to face than ever before," Farris said in announcing the program. "There is growing awareness how these pressures can lead to difficulties in young marriages as well as established marriages.

"With the increasing reports of marriage failures in the news today, many couples are seeking professional help. Rather than allowing problems to destroy a marriage, couples can find effective ways to communicate and solve problems before they reach the crisis stage.

"If couples can learn more effective ways of communicating and solving problems, they can increase their marital satisfaction. Likewise, they can deal more effectively with many pressures and decisions which might otherwise lead to a strained relationship," he said.

The weekend Marriage Improvement Program is being offered through the department of home and family life at Tech. Farris is the program coordinator in charge of contacting couples who may wish to improve their marriage.

The program will consist of specialized training in communication skills and problem-solving skills, he said. It is especially designed to be offered over a weekend so that both marriage partners may attend without interfering with their work week.

Interested couples should call Farris at 792-1359 during the next two weeks in order to obtain additional information about the Marriage Improvement Program. There is no charge for participating in this program.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: I've been going with this 29-year-old man from Ireland. I'm 20. I love him dearly, and he loves me and wants to marry me, but, Abby, you would not believe how cheap he is!

He takes me out and spends money on me and has even bought me some nice gifts, but he will not spend a penny on himself. He lives with the barest necessities. I had to beg him to buy a kitchen table and chairs for his apartment because he felt as long as he had a coffee table and a couch he didn't need anything else. (He will drag the two chairs and coffee table from the living room into the kitchen.)

He doesn't have a bedroom set either. He sleeps on a bare mattress on the floor.

It's not that he can't afford a few pieces of furniture — he can; he just doesn't want to spend any money. I've had my dad and brothers and friends talk to him, but he's stubborn as a mule. That's why I'm writing to you.

I don't want to marry him in the hope that one day he'll change and spend some money. I want to be sure now, or else start looking for someone else. I want to get married soon.

Stuck On An Irishman

Dear Stuck: If you love this penny-pinching Irishman, make a list of everything he needs (within reason and within his means). If he gives you one of those fighting Irish battles, make another list — of eligible men you know.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: In 14 years of marriage, my husband has never said, "I love you." Yet I know he does. How do I know? Let me count the ways.

He appreciates my efforts as a wife, mother and homemaker. Although he's never told me so in so many words, he brags about me to others.

He never corrects me in public. He doesn't drink, gamble or try to make me jealous by flirting with other women in my presence. When he's wrong, he says, "I'm sorry." When I'm wrong, he doesn't keep reminding me of it. He never says "my" house or "my" children — it's always "ours."

I could go on and on. So what if he finds it difficult to put into words what he feels? There are many men to whom words come easily, but talk is cheap. Performance is what really counts.

Lucky In Love

Dear Lucky: Your husband is equally lucky to have a woman who understands his inability to articulate his feelings. I agree, actions do speak louder than words, but to some, words are the music of love.

• • •

DEAR ABBY: My husband insisted that Gary, our 12-year-old son, get a paper route to teach him responsibility and the value of money. Gary is our only child, a little spoiled and not the most ambitious kid in the world. He has a morning and Sunday route, so he has to get up at 4:45 a.m. to get those papers delivered. It's pitch dark at that hour and we're afraid to let him take his bike, so I get up and drive him in our station wagon while he throws the papers.

Lately, Gary stays up late studying and I haven't the heart to wake him up at 4:45 a.m. so I let him sleep and I deliver the papers alone.

Abby, I am 47 years and I don't need a paper route. I've asked my husband to let Gary quit his route, but he says, "No, it will make a man out of him." Meanwhile, it's making a wreck out of me. What do you suggest?

Helpful Mom

Dear Mom: Quit doing a single and wake up Gary. If he requires more sleep, he'll manage to get to bed earlier. It's generous of parents to help their kids with their paper routes, but where's papa?

LYING EYES

The eye is usually the first to show the effects of fatigue and missed sleep. There is the telltale dark circle. As a camouflage use a lighter, pinker base makeup below the eyes. But only nature can lay the lie to permanent rest. And that means rest. Naps help. When sneaking the proverbial forty winks, help nature with cotton eye pads soaked with witch hazel.

Food Safety Begins With Preservation

DALLAS (Special) — With a little extra time and care, you can stretch the wonderful flavor of homegrown fruits and vegetables throughout the year with home canning.

But, all your time, labor and money required for home canning may be lost if these foods are not properly processed, says the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Since 1925 some 700 deaths in the United States were traced to botulism poisoning caused by improper home canning, reports USDA's Food Safety and Quality Service.

Yet, successful home canning requires only proper sterilization and the exclusion of air. This is accomplished by heat. Undercooking is the real culprit in home canning.

Organisms that cause food spoilage — molds, yeasts and bacteria — are always present in the air, water and soil. Enzymes that may cause undesirable changes in flavor, color and textures are present in raw fruits and vegetables.

When food is heated hot enough and long enough, spoilage organisms are destroyed and the action of enzymes is destroyed. Heat drives out air and seals containers from outside contamination during storage.

When you can fruits, tomatoes or pickled vegetables the naturally high acid content of these foods will keep them safe when heated at the temperature of boiling water (212 degrees F.) for the time period recommended for the specific food.

For low-acid foods, such as meat and poultry, fish, string beans, beets, corn and some fruits, higher temperatures attained only by pressure-cooking (240 degrees F.) are required to kill potentially harmful spores.

To keep food safe you also must store it properly. Use jars and lids manufactured specifically for use in home canning. That way you can be assured of a correct seal, and that containers will be strong enough to withstand high temperatures and pressure during processing and cooling. Do not use very old canning jars, jars with nicks, dents, cracks or rust. It is better not to use half-gallon size jars. With large sizes, it is difficult to reach the recommended temperature in the center of the jar.

Botulism deaths from home canning could almost be eliminated by simply heating home canned meat and vegetable foods for 10 minutes at 212 degrees F. before serving.

Never taste questionable foods: foods in containers that leak, bulge, have cracks or some type of damage: canned foods that spurt liquid when opened.

Follow canning instructions closely to make sure you are canning in a safe manner, and you can enjoy good eating all year.

When toxin produced by the bacteria is ingested, signs of botulism may occur in a few hours or as long as eight days, some headache followed by double vision, impaired speech and difficulty in chewing and swallowing. Unless treatment is initiated promptly, the disease may result in death within three to seven days.

Juvenile Probation Officer Warns Parents About Dangers Linked To 'Glue Sniffing'

By JEANNE LIVELY
And FRANCES LOWE
Family News Staff

Juvenile probation officer Roy King says that there is a serious problem in Lubbock with children who are inhaling paints and paint thinners.

"In the past," King said, "we had a problem with glue-sniffers, but now youngsters are turning to inhaling paint and paint thinners instead."

The current fad, King says, is for petroleum-based paints in aerosal spray cans. "Canned" paints can also produce fumes with the same effect (as can gasoline, some kinds of glue, and other such substances), but water-based or latex paints apparently do not produce the same effect.

The physical effects of long-term sniffing, as King has seen them in the youngsters he works with, are loss of appetite, followed by weight loss, often severe, followed by anemia. The user may experience slowed reaction time and impairment of coordination, and liver damage may result from extended use.

One of the problems in dealing with the problem, King says, is that little research has been done on the exact chemicals which produce the high or cause the damage. Youngsters engaging in the practice may fail to see any immediate danger, and are often difficult to pursuade.

One danger of which King is personally convinced, however, is that the increased adrenalin production which produces the feeling of euphoria the youngster is seeking can, if the person engages in sudden strenous physical activity, result in sudden heart stoppage and death. King has seen cases where he believes this to have happened.

Although reluctant to estimate the number of youngsters in Lubbock who may be "into" paint sniffing, he feels his office may have a couple of thousand local youngsters on its rolls in connection with the problem.

Paint sniffing is not limited to boys, nor to a particular class, he says, although it is more prevalent in some neighborhoods than others. "Both boys and girls are in the group we are currently seeing. We are also seeing youngsters in all age groups with this problem. And these youngsters are coming from homes of all economic backgrounds," he said.

"Perhaps one of the most frustrating parts of my job is to see an increase in paint sniffing here," he said. "I know from experience that from an original group of abusers can come from 100 to 120 other children who will be initiated into the practice."

Youngsters frequently learn the practice from an older brother or sister or a group of peers in the neighborhood. "Frequently those not 'turned on' will hassle the paint sniffer in school or in the neighborhood and ostracise him," he continued. "On the other hand, a child who has been 'busted' and gone to jail is looked upon as some kind of celebrity."

Parents, King says, should be on the lookout for signs of paint-sniffing in their children, especially if other strange behavior is noted.

"Signs of paint, especially silver, on a child's shoes or clothing" are revealing, he said. "Frequently juveniles will reveal what they are doing by having paint on their hands, especially around the cuticles."

(Other signs listed by a bulletin from the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association on "Signs of Use of Substances for Drugging Effects," are excess nasal and eye secretions; poor muscular control, drowsiness or unconsciousness, increased preference for being with a group, rather than being alone, and plastic or paper bags or rags containing dry plastic cement or other solvent, at home, in locker at school or at work.)

"When I see these signs, I confront the child and ask him if he has been sniffing paint. Surprisingly, most admit it," King said.

"There are two classifications of abusers," King continued: a user, who may inhale several times a week, and the chronic user, who inhales every day.

"We do see people in their 20's," King continued, "who have been sniffing paint for years. The chronic user will often show obvious signs of slurred speech and may have a distinct paint smell to his breath."

Blood testing and counseling services are offered for those suspected of inhalant-abuse at Lubbock Regional MHMR Center. Appointments can be made either by writing 1210 Texas Avenue, 79401, or by telephoning 763-4213.

Sniffing of paint, gasoline, glue, paint-thinner or other such substances, is against the law in Lubbock. As juvenile probation officer, King is often the first person to have contact with a child after he or she has been picked up by the police.

King says it is difficult to enforce the law governing offenses involving abuse of inhalants, since a child almost has to be caught in the act. For this reason juvenile probation officers may see a child three or four times before he is ordered into court.

"One thing I believe will be helpful in our fight to curb a growing population of inhalant-abusers is the new juvenile detention unit. Now even juveniles know that if they are caught, they will be returned to their homes. When the juvenile detention unit is in operation, I think it will be a deterrent, as most children have strong feelings about being away from family and friends."

Tune In Tomorrow

By JON-MICHAEL REED

ALL MY CHILDREN: Tom laid into Erica when he learned she had tipped off Dan about Brooke and Mark. Dan pulled a disappearing act. Kelly fell for Phoebe's line that Kelly's not in Linc's league and she agreed to weekend with Eddie. Billy was released from jail and set out to win back Estelle. Eddie convinced Langley that Phoebe's bank account is healthier than Edna's. Myrtle threatened to knock off Eddie's head if he gets Kelly hooked on pills again. Erica reminisced about Nick and his possible return.

ANOTHER WORLD: Ted promoted Rachel's art career and introduced her to Kirk, who impressed her although she nixed having good times with him. Brian moved into Elena's guest house after splitting with Iris over her involvement with Buzz and Blaine's attempt to split the Cory's. Sally moved in on Joey since Eileen refused to date him because of Rita's objections. Angie went into a rage when she learned that Willis and Gwen went to New York on business. Janice declined moving into Mac's apartment. Scott told Alice that she resembles his deceased fiancee. Charges against Blaine were dropped and she made a divorce settlement agreement with Jaime. Phil threatened to snitch about Sally's being a thief unless she drops Joey. Paul spent time with Rose who held her emotions in check.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Lisa had chilly-willy experiences at the inn and was intrigued by a locked room. Dan's medical tests proved devastating and he kept the news from the family, except David who'd received the test information accidentally. Dana started the divorce ball rolling, but her husband's manager, Barry, arrived to discourage her. Jay agreed to find a job for Matt and his brother Chip. John blamed him for losing the cardiac project to Bob. (Correction from last week: Marcia had spotted Doug and Sandy dining, not Doug and Annie.) Marcia apologized for suspecting Sandy of hanky-panky. Grant advised Doug not to blow his divorce chances by allowing Marcia to live with him, but Marcia threatened that Doug won't see their son if he goes through with a divorce. Behind the locked door, Lisa found a portrait that resembles her.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Thanks to Laura's weird treatment, Julie was hysterical that she'll lose Doug if skin grafts don't work. Linda and Mary united against Stephanie, although Bob assured Mary it's strictly business with him and Steph. Hope added to Maggie's guilt feelings by blaming her for Julie's accident. Phyllis offered to sell her stock to Bob and noticed Stephanie's hold over Bob. Linda almost blew her amnesia cover in front of Phyllis. Amanda hesitated moving in with Chris. Laura tried to keep visitors away from Julie, who swiped sedatives in case she can't face the future. Laura hid her growing madness of visions of her mother, Carrie.

EDGE OF NIGHT: Shockeroonie fans, as it was disclosed to the audience that Winter was indeed Wade's murderer and Tank had doctored the tape to fool the jury. Tank tried to force Winter to leave town, but during a shootout with Deb and Steve, Winter pushed Tank to his death to keep her secret. Everyone thinks Tank was Wade's murderer. Margo paid off a real estate dealer to give April and Draper a "discount" house. Calvin remembered that Elliott's bartender, Mickey Dials, is the brother of a juvenile he'd once arrested. April urged Draper to defend heiress Paige Madison in a weapons-conspiracy charge.

THE DOCTORS: Maggie confided to Carolee she fears telling Matt she's pregnant since he'd admitted not wanting any more kids. Dr. Frankel advised Nola that if she induces premature labor she'll endanger her life as well as the child's. Nola cashed in her share of Luke's restaurant for a bribe bankroll. The memory of his own child's death brought on the chills for Colin while operating on Laurie.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Alan refused to believe Monica's story about Rick. Monica threatened to drag the Quartermain name into the mud if Alan continued to persecute Rick at the hospital. Susan rubbed it in that Mitch only sticks to Tracy for her money and political influence. Tracy doesn't care as long as she's got her man on a leash. Heather wants to adopt Jeremy because of his inheritance. But she plans to send him away once she drives Diane to the nuthouse and wins custody of P.J. Bobbi refused Roy's sexual advances but he snitched Laura's engagement ring from Scotty so that Bobbi can wear it in front of Laura. Edward asked for a new doctor because Rick has had bad luck on the operating table.

GUIDING LIGHT: Diane got Ben soused before seducing him. Adam admitted he no longer believes Roger is innocent. Rollowing Rita and Viola's advice, Eve reconciled with Ben, who didn't tell her about Diane or about kissing Amanda. Elizabeth told Justin that her feelings for Mike haven't changed. Ross forced Holly to reveal her previous sex life in court. Roger thanked Hillary for her unwittingly helpful testimony. Hillary tried to get Floyd to move out. Diane found Ben's wallet at her pad after their fling and stalled returning it.

LOVE OF LIFE: Tony feared that he's lost Bambi to Paul. Meg was depressed that Scott wanted a playmate instead of a wife. Steve Horback, who spent time in prison with Ben, arrived. Mia told Elliott that there's trouble between Betsy and Ben, while Ben tried to make amends to Betsy for his "almost" encore fling with Mia. Bruce objected to Van's job.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Carla tore up Ed's divorce papers and insisted she'll throw in their wedding towel when she's decided. Samantha's bloodied wedding dress was found. Ina and Mario convinced Karen not to return to the streets after her boss came on to her. Mario blackmailed the lecherous louse to give Karen severance pay. Herb asked Ed to run for lieutenant governor to aid Herb's governship campaign. Adam admitted that he has to cater to Dorian's whims since she holds the moneystrings. Hints were dropped that Faith isn't perfectly healthy when Ivan insisted she not do volunteer work at the free clinic. Carla helped Jack make an attempt to walk. Pat suspected that Dick's not dealing with a full deck.

RYAN'S HOPE: Dee loaned Johnny bucks in return for the bar as collateral. Rae offered Dee a money bribe if Dee gives Frank an annulment. Tom's eyesight began to return. Poppy almost popped her cork when Tom admitted he intends to divorce Faith once he's a naturalized citizen. Jill angered Seneca by insisting she doesn't want another child. Maeve frankly told Rae she's not the girl for Frank.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Laine blamed Ted's influence when Gary called it quits. Wendy convinced Jo to needle Stephanie out of her depression. Nick followed Liza after overhearing her arranging a meeting with Travis. Tom apologized to Sunny for saying she wasn't his type of gal. Carolyn tried to forgive Gary, who suggested Stephanie should consider reconstructive surgery.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Laurie spied to prove Jill's premarital affair and non-pregnancy. Vanessa and Leslie pulled Lucas in opposite directions, influencing him about taking everything away from Lance. Van told Laurie she won't change company bosses unless Laurie divorces Lance. Casey and Brock urged Nikki to come clean with Greg about her former promiscuity. Jill told Derek she'd accept Stu's money offer for their future.

Groups Merge To Aid Women

Women's Protective Services, which was formed in 1977 to aid battered wives and their children, and the Family Violence Task Groups, formed as a result of the Family Violence Conference held at First Christian Church in March, will unite as an enlarged Women's Protective Services organization.

It was noted at a joint meeting of the two groups that the main emphasis of Women's Protective Services up until now has been the establishment of a shelter for battered wives and their children. The Task Groups, on the other hand, have adopted the goal of providing services in the year-and-a-half to two year period before a permanent shelter will be available.

A steering committee has been appointed to develop a plan of organization which will provide for both of these needs. This committee will report to the next meeting of the enlarged group at 7:30 p.m. June 11 at Gloria Dei Lutheran Church, 1706 Slide Rd.

Area residents interested in dealing with the problem of family violence are invited to attend. For more information call Clark N. Ross, 747-4936 or 792-1046, or Jo Love Nelson, 795-0255.

MOBILITY RATES

Residential mobility rates reveal that the average American family moves fourteen times in a lifetime, reports a family life education specialist, Patricia Lamson, with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

QUEST SPEAKER — Susan Nethery, author of "One Year and Counting ... breast cancer, my world and me," will be the guest speaker at the Christian Women's Club meeting at 10:30 a.m. June 5 in room 107 of the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center. Reservations, which are due Saturday, can be made by calling Julia Meador, 799-3448.

By Jessie Lee Sharpley

Did you know that at the Hair Design Institute Jessie Lee's students receive such good training that they turn out almost professional-looking services every day? Well, they do!

You can relax and receive the latest in hair cuts for girls and women, boys and men. These cuts can be short or long, with a wide scatter of ends or with very little scatter, depending on what your hair should have. Our students study Jessie Lee's methods for giving accurate cuts which follow the growth direction of the hair and fit the size and shape of the head. While they are mastering cutting methods, students are constantly supervised by our instructors who advise them on haircutting decisions and help them with technique. With Jessie Lee's methods, our students become hair cutting artists while they are still in school. Can you imagine getting all this personalized consideration in executing a beautiful cut for only $3.75?

You really must have a Jessie Lee student and a Jessie Lee instructor plan, cut, and approve your very next hair cut. You'll be glad you did. "TAKE TWO TABLETS..." — Betty Lou Mahone, left, who directs the work of the Sick Baby Clinic of Second Baptist Church, dispenses medicine, under the watchful eye of a registered pharmacist, to Karla Riggins and her mother, Mrs. Gloria Riggins, during a recent clinic day. Because of the shortage of skilled medical personnel, the Clinic is in danger of having to drastically curtail its hours, at a time when its medical care and medicine for sick babies is critically needed.

TAKING NOTES — Mary Sharon Greene, right, a volunteer worker at the Sick Baby Clinic, takes medical history on Mark Ramirez, 10 months, and his mother, Teresa Ramirez during a recent clinic day. The clinic is dependent upon the work of volunteers like Mrs. Greene and others who give their time to maintain clinic hours; medical personnel is very much needed. (Staff photos by Dennis Copeland)

"HOW DID IT GO?" — Gary West, left, pastor at Second Baptist Church, drops by the Sick Baby Clinic to visit with one of the young patients, Joanna Garcia, 5, daughter of Magdeleno Garcia, during a recent clinic day. Volunteer, non-medical staff persons conduct the routine work of the clinic, and medicines are provided by the church and other interested persons; but the clinic is in need of professional medical assistance to maintain its services to the public.

Clinic Continuing Search For Volunteer Physicians

The Sick Baby Clinic, a ministry of the Second Baptist Church, is continuing its search for medical personnel to help it in its work with babies and young children needing medical care.

The clinic, which is supported and staffed entirely by the church and other interested persons on a volunteer basis, requires the assistance of physicians if it is to continue to provide services to families which frequently can afford no other medical care.

Betty Lou Mahone, administrator, says that by treating illnesses before they become severe, the clinic is able to relieve the pressure on other local medical facilities, and often to prevent more expensive and difficult treatment. Medical facilities for those unable to pay are very limited in the Lubbock area.

Examinations, medical advice and prescription medicine are provided to clients through the clinic, which also maintains a clothing exchange program.

Without the assistance of medical personnel, the clinic may be forced to curtail or even to end its services to the community, Mrs. Mahone says, which would inflict a severe hardship on the families which depend upon it.

Real To Reel

By William D. Kerns

A bit of this, a bit of that...

OK, let's get the big disappointment out of the way first. Doc Severinsen, trumpeter and orchestra conductor on NBC's "The Tonight Show," has just cancelled his announced appearance as guest artist with the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra's 1979 Summer Pops concert. There's no sense in calling names or shedding tears, and it will suffice to say that the symphony officials were all quite upset about Severinsen's decision. Lubbock is not the only city in which Severinsen has cancelled a commitment solely because grass appeared greener elsewhere, but it's saddening to think of respected entertainers treating fans so shabbily.

DANNY DAVIS
His Nashville Brass joins Summer Pops

In any case, the Lubbock Symphony was faced with quite a task last week. The Summer Pops concert is booked for the Civic Center exhibition hall on June 23 — a mere month away. That's not much time to book a major replacement act, but miracles have been known to happen. Luckily for all of us, a replacement has indeed been found in Danny Davis & The Nashville Brass.

Davis' band is an award winner which, despite a lack of prime time television exposure, has won the respect of the music industry. The Nashville Brass earned standing ovations at the South Plains Fair two years ago, and the promise of combining their sound with a symphonic influence promises to be a treat. The Summer Pops concerts have always been special events in Lubbock, drawing rapid sellout crowds. And there's no reason to expect this one to be any different. Cancellations are disheartening, but music fans can always sit back and relish the fact that entertainers need fans more than fans need entertainers.

Tickets were selling well for the Severinsen show, so apathy can not be blamed for the trumpeter's decision to cancel. But rest assured all should be forgotten when Danny Davis blows his horn.

Those desiring ticket information concerning Summer Pops should call the symphony's special phone line at 762-0339. Reservations are being accepted by mail at PO Box 64132, Lubbock, Texas 79464.

• • • • • • •

Rumors, rumors, rumors. My phone rings all the time with people asking, "Hey, I heard so-and-so is coming to town. When's the concert?" Believe me, folks, if we hear of a concert coming, we'll break it on these pages as soon as it becomes official. A lot of the rumors can quickly be dismissed, but talk of a Rickie Lee Jones concert in the city has been growing in intensity of late. So I decided it was time to take the bull by the horns and call Warner Brothers Records in Burbank, Calif. and ask for the popular songstress' itinerary. The answer: "Rickie Lee Jones is just finishing up her first tour. If she goes out again, no doubt she'll probably hit the Southwestern region. But no itineraries have been made up yet, and any rumors of a concert in your city are just that — unsubstantiated rumors."

• • • • • • •

OK, Severinsen isn't coming. Rickie Lee Jones isn't coming. So who is? Well, quite a few talented folks, actually.

Let's not forget that tickets still remain available for tonight's Civic Center concert by Ray Charles and Rick & Neal. The latter duo is admittedly easily available in Dallas, but only makes the rare West Texas appearance. And Charles is one of the few acts who lives up to his billing as a "living legend." Tickets have not been selling well, no doubt because half the city has disappeared for the Memorial Day weekend. (Bad planning on the promoters' parts.) But if you've got the time and the bucks, keep in mind that Ray Charles doesn't stop here too often and a portion of the profits is headed for the March Of Dimes.

On Wednesday, The Ohio Players will make a stop at DeCarlos Disco for two shows. Again, the rumor mongers have been spreading the word that this show will be but a tape or a film. After all, no major disco acts have played Lubbock before, right? Well, though I admire their imagination, these rumor spreaders are strictly out in left field. Promoters indicated last week that The Ohio Players, who have a current hit in "Everybody Up," will indeed be stopping by in the flesh for two shows. The first, at 3:30 p.m., is for fans under 18. And the doors will open at 7 p.m. for the final concert, which will be open only to those 18 and over. Tickets are on sale at the disco, Shallow Water Beds and both Flipside Records locations.

Then on Friday, look forward to one of the biggest country shows to hit a major stage in this city for quite some time. Jerry Reed, Margo Smith, Jim Ed Brown and Helen Cornelius — all enjoying fast rising popularity — will be entertaining at the Civic Center exhibition hall. All seats are reserved (a touch of class there), and can be purchased at the Civic Center box office.

Delbert McClinton and Joe Ely will be performing together at Rox on June 8 and 9, and you can bet your gasoline money the club will be filled both nights. McClinton has been in the public eye more and more during the past year, winning over the New York critics and recently opening shows for The Allmann Brothers. Ely, a Lubbock native with three MCA albums to his credit, has also earned respect from the New York and Los Angeles critics. Even so, he has not yet earned the total recognition he deserves.

Finally, on June 13, Canadian hard rockers Triumph will headline a heavy metal show at the Municipal Auditorium. The front band hasn't been decided yet, and tickets are not yet on sale.

So, as you can see, even with Texas Tech University students (the prime concert necessities) gone for the summer, we're not exactly hurting.

• • • • • • •

Still on the subject of music, I was in Dallas last weekend when news of The Bee Gees' June 28 performance at the Tarrant County Convention Center was announced. Tickets naturally sold out in just a short time and, if you'd like to see the show, you should start checking the want ads in the Dallas newspapers. Of course, you may have to pay up to $300 for a $15 ticket...

• • • • • • •

If you're heading for Dallas, may I suggest you check out the agenda at the Palladium? This is a rock club with intimate seating (a capacity of 700 with tables and chairs, and 900 with just rows of chairs), and yet it manages to grab some of the hottest acts in the business. After falling in love with Graham Parker's "Squeezing Out Sparks" LP, certainly one of the best of the year, I planned to make his June 23 appearance there. He ended up canceling, but the following schedule was confirmed at press time:

May 31, Mary Travers and B.W. Stevenson; June 1 and 2, Wayland Flowers & Madame; June 4, John Hall; June 10, Leon Redbone, Steve Goodman and The Roaches; June 11, The Rockets; June 13, La Reaux; June 15, Average White Band; June 16, Mose Allison; June 22, Melanie; June 26, The Amazing Rhythm Aces; June 29, Mitch Ryder; June 30, Chet Adkins; July 4, Hoyt Axton; July 7-10, The Kinks (tickets are already on sale for these shows); July 12, Dan Hicks; and August 5, Blondie.

Not bad, eh? If you'd like more information, call The Palladium at (214) 692-8878.

The reason I was in Dallas last week was to screen the new science fiction film called "Alien," which opens at the South Plains Cinema in Lubbock on June 22. If you like being scared out of your socks, this is the picture for you. It will most likely turn out to be the major cinematic event of the summer. The A-J participated in quite a few interviews with the film's stars, director and "alien designer," and we'll start publishing their comments in the June 17 entertainment section. Look for it.

• • • • • • •

The new Mann Fourplex was to open its doors June 29 with the following films: "Sidney Sheldon's Bloodline," "The Muppet Show," "Lost And Found" and "Golden Girl." However, theater officials indicate that the labor strikes and recent bad weather (the roof was not up when the downpour hit last weekend) may see the opening moved back. How that would affect present bookings could not be determined.

But if there is one reason to look forward to the opening of the new fourplex, located at Slide Road and Loop 289, it is because it will mark the debut of the first movie theater in Lubbock with "handicapped seating." Asked to explain, Mann Theaters manager Harold Lieck said, "Basically, what this means is the restrooms will be more readily accessible, with wider doorways and railings inside the stalls. And we'll also have a flat area at the back of each theater which will be big enough to accomodate three wheelchairs. The area will not be sloped.

"As it is, we get patrons in wheelchairs only very rarely, so we think the new theater will be appropriate."

• • • • • • •

And if you happened to miss "Superman" during its lengthy (five month) run at Showplace, you shouldn't have any trouble catching it this Friday. Theater officials plan to open it again in no less than three city theaters: the Village, Backstage and Golden Horseshoe Drive-In.

Entry Dates Set For Art Show

The Lubbock Art Association's 1979 membership show, slated for exhibit June 26 through the end of July, will accept entries from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. June 25 at the Garden & Arts Center.

Oils, pastels, acrylics, graphics, sculpture and fine arts crafts are all acceptable categories. Juror for the show will be James Howze of Texas Tech University.

Howze will choose three Merit Invitational winners, who then will be honored by LAA with a three-man show in August 1980. Thirty works will be chosen for citation and city circuit.

BOURNONVILLE REMEMBERED

COPENHAGEN (UPI) — The Royal Danish Ballet will present a special week-long festival Nov. 24-30 to mark the centenary of the death of the great French-Danish choreographer August Bournonville. Seven Bournonville works, some long absent from the repertory, will be seen, and a full program of lectures and demonstrations will be given.

Youth Chamber Orchestra Plans Concert Wednesday

The Lubbock Youth Chamber Orchestra will be featured in concert at 12:45 p.m. Wednesday on the lawn of the Lubbock County Courthouse, located at Broadway and Texas Avenue.

The orchestra, sponsored by the Lubbock Parks & Recreation Department, consists of 20 musicians specializing in the performance of string chamber music. Direction is by Mary Ken Hendrix.

Guest artist is Richard Meek, playing a Vivaldi concerto for bassoon and orchestra. Meek is an associate music professor and bassoon instructor at Texas Tech University. He performs regularly with the Tech Faculty Woodwind Quintet, the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra and the Roswell Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra will also play baroque music by Boyce, Handel, Pachelbel, Rameau and Susato, as well as contemporary music by Ernest Bloch and Peter Warlock.

Karon Joins Cast Of New Movie

NEW YORK (Special) — Richard L rron has been signed for the role of Sor..y, joining Anne Bancroft, Dom DeLuise, Candy Azzara and Ron Carey in the comedy, "Fatso," a 20th Century-Fox production.

Anne Bancroft will direct from her own original screenplay. Stuart Cornfeld produces. The eight-week shooting schedule will taker place in New York and Los Angeles.

Frank Carillo's 'Street Of Dreams' Labeled 'Entertaining Rock'

By DOUG PULLEN
A-J Rock Correspondent

Work as a session musician can be quite lucrative. A recent report in Billboard magazine showed that union musicians, who comprise the majority of session men, earned a total of $40.3 million in 1978. Such earnings are the reason for extensive studio work by famous backup men as Steve Gadd, Richard Tee, Andy Newmark, Willie Weeks and countless others.

Frank Carillo was once a member of those ranks, although the majority of his guitar work was used by rock talents such as Peter Frampton and Yvonne Elliman. Carillo struck out on his own a couple of years ago, releasing his first album in the summer of 1978. The album was a bit confused, as is expected with first efforts, partially because Carillo had no set band and had not established a suitable rapport with his producer.

Such is not the case of Carillo's new album, "Street of Dreams" (Atlantic). If the album has anything going in its favor, it's the sheer energy with which Carillo and new producer Jimmy Douglass have recorded it.

"Street of Dreams" is by no means the type of album which challenges the listener with risky and seldom heard musical embellishments. Nor is it the type of record which tries to make some profound sociological statement. "Street of Dreams" is nothing more than a simple rock album. The fabric is of a popular nature, not the sort of fine material which might attract more selective listeners.

But the mere fact that "Street of Dreams" is through-and-through a commercially designed album doesn't hinder the fact that it might be good — because it is.

Carillo plays with generous proportions of skill and fluidity. His lead guitar work, though technically adequate, draws most of its fire from the large degree of feeling Carillo combines with his dexterity. Some of the album's songs are simply platforms on which Carillo can showcase his guitar talent, a talent which is developed, but can stand more experience to further express the depth of feeling with which Carillo plays his guitar.

Still, despite the questionable spots, namely the syrupy ballads, "Street of Dreams" is a fine example of how good slickly produced rock can be. Characters such as Foreigner and Boston can content themselves with merely restating previous works, of their own and other musicians' origin. Carillo doesn't settle for such an easy avenue out. Instead, he opts to take his influences and assimilate them into a quickly changing style. His guitar playing sounds a bit like Frampton's, a characteristic derivative more of Frampton's ability than Carillo's desire to copy that style.

Carillo attempts to limit his lead playing in hopes of avoiding the typical dominance a lead guitarist can project over an effort which bears his name. His leads are short and sweet, especially in songs like "Familiar Stranger" and "Run Away With Me."

Actually, Carillo and his keyboardist Jan Mullaney seem more devoted to the assimilation of the various pop rock styles. The material comprising "Street of Dreams" can be broken down basically into rockers and ballads, though Carillo tries to take his music a step further by giving each song definitive character as opposed to simple restatements of one another. And he doesn't restrict the instrumentation to the same structure, a fact which adds to the variety with which Carillo has recorded his new album. Producer Jimmy Douglass' apparent empathy for Carillo's light rock serves to improve and diversify again what might otherwise be classified as boring pop.

Douglass' influence is most profoundly evident in the vocals, which are handled primarily by Carillo, though guest spots are made by former Stories singer Ian Lloyd and guitarist-singer Jimmy Mack, who, like Carillo, is a New Yorker who left a backup career to take a solo career into his own hands.

Carillo's rough voice is reminiscent at times of Joe Cocker's though he by no means sings with as much conviction or alacrity as Cocker. The very coarseness of Carillo's voice adds an air of authenticity to the album. Carillo proves his growing ability to sing and play different moods with an appealing ballad called "Emotions." His softly grating vocal is mixed with a tasty sax application by Michael Brecker and a Jimmy Haskell-arranged string section, both elements combining to give the song potential for success on AM radio stations.

Still, the ballads and the diversions aren't the meat and potatoes of "Street of Dreams." The real strength lies in the rockers. These are the songs in which Carillo sheds his coat of artistic restraint and rollicks with the joy and energy of any child at play. Rock 'n' roll is, after all, a form of play for anyone who really enjoys making rock music, so it's only natural that a guitarist like the 29-year-old veteran would have such a seemingly good time on songs like "Under the Gun," in which he shares vocals with Michael Bolotin, and "Rosa Lee," a Caribbean flavored rocker which lets loose towards the song's conclusion.

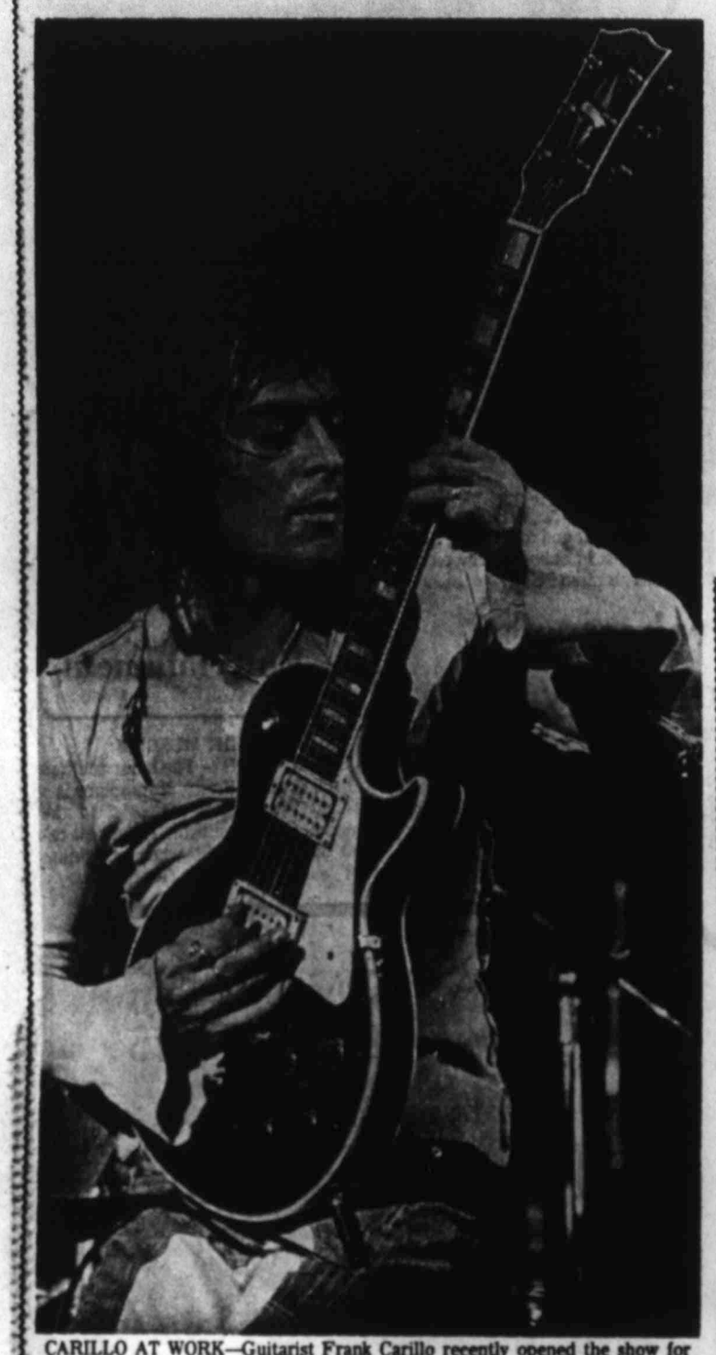

Most modern rock enthusiasts, the really serious ones, may fault the Carillo album simply for the mode in which he plays. This is light, entertaining rock, not serious or progressive. Carillo does not try to forge new areas, he simply expands upon the boundaries which have limited rock for more than 20 years.

The album's only overbearing shortcoming is the improper arrangement of the songs. The song order is an important element in the artistic and commercial success of an album. How else would "Jungleland" work on Bruce Springsteen's "Born to Run" album? How would The Beatles' "Abbey Road" or "Sgt. Pepper's" albums have worked? Probably not as well had the songs been placed poorly. Perhaps it's nitpicking, but Carillo and his producer should have better thought out the "Street of Dreams" song order. "Under the Gun," for example, would be a much better closing song than "Familiar Stranger." It is much more dramatic and has that reassuring tone with which an album like this should be finished. The flippant "What's Your Name" could have been better placed, say, at the start of side two. "Emotions" works well in that position, but might have been better placed in the middle of side one.

But song order on Carillo's second album is not as vital a factor as it is to the work of more established, accomplished and esteemed musicians. Carillo has a ways to go before he can come close to claiming such fame.

Novel Bought For Film

NEW YORK (Special) — In a literary coup of the first magnitude, Warner Bros. has acquired the motion picture rights of "The Four Hundred" — the most sought-after first novel of recent years — which will be brought to the screen by Daniel Melnick.

Melnick, who will produce the film version of "The Four Hundred" for Warner Bros. under his own banner, The Inde-Prod Company, enjoys a long-term contract with Columbia Pictures as an independent producer. Until recently, he was Columbia's President and Head of Production.

"The Four Hundred," a rousing high-style adventure entertainment, was written by British novelist Stephen Sheppard and will be published in the United States in August as a Summit Book distributed by Simon & Schuster. The film version of the novel will feature an international cast including three American leads and is slated to go before the cameras in 1980 on location in New York, London, Havana and Rio de Janeiro.

According to British literary sources, the subject matter of "The Four Hundred" has been under the tightest security imposed since the publication of "The Pentagon Papers."

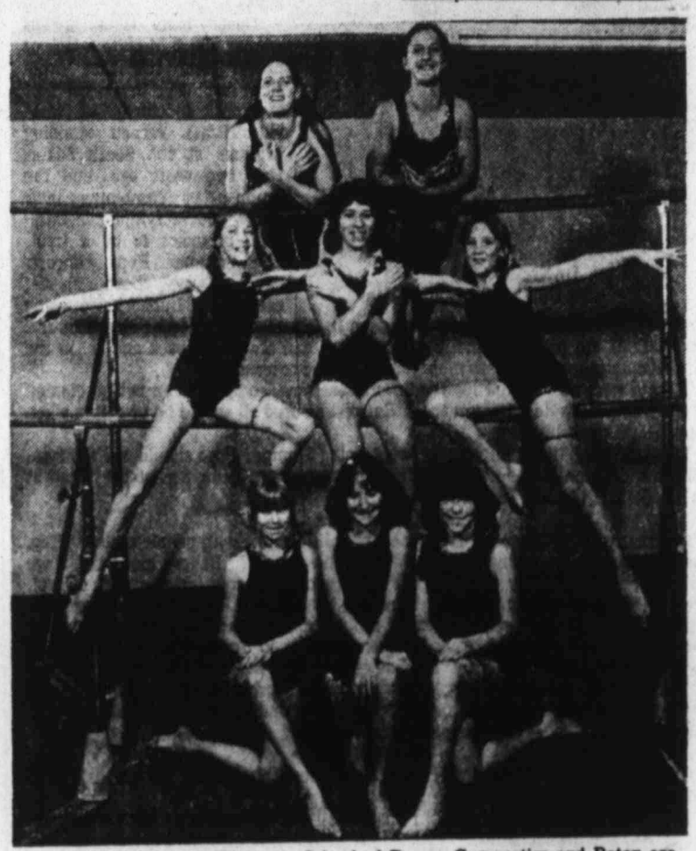

The forthcoming novel will be published by Summit Books, a division of Simon & Schuster, headed by James Silberman. Summit's first book, "The Women's Room" by Marilyn French, was also its first best-seller.

Playing a key part in the sale of "The Four Hundred" was Ed Victor, the American literary agent living and working in London, representing such clients as the William Morris Agency, Irving Lazar and Paul Reynolds.

Carillo Gives Up Sessions For The Spotlight

By WILLIAM D. KERNS
A-J Entertainment Editor

Frank Carillo appeared amazingly energetic for a man who arrived in town at 3 a.m., was awakened early to talk five minutes with a radio personality ("some AM jock named Sam; I forget the station") and still needed to prepare to open a Bad Company concert before close to 9,000 fans at the Lubbock Coliseum just a few hours later. Actually, hyper might be a more apt description, as the musician bounced and pantomimed his way through a 50-minute interview by the Holiday Inn pool. Odds are his energy was of the nervous sort, since the current version of the band (called, simply enough, Carillo) had only been together three weeks, performing songs composed over the telephone and then put on record by a group of guest musicians.

A pretty strange approach to stardom, to say the least — but Frank Carillo seems determined to make the breaks pay off.

Though the New York born musician has had his own band before, a group called Doc Holliday, there's no denying that those familiar with his name usually turn out to be the rock fans who read every name on the back of the album jackets. Carillo played lead guitar on Peter Frampton's first two solo albums, then moved on to play for the likes of Yvonne Elliman and Tim Hardin. There are those who insist Carillo had quite a lucrative future ahead of him as a session musician, but the guitarist sees his move into the spotlight as a "natural progression."

With his East Coast accent as apparent as his enthusiasm, he explained, "My manager just told me it was time to put my name on the line and give it a shot; he gave me the confidence I needed. It was just that I knew I could depend on me. Sometimes you have personality conflicts in a band. Everybody has their own little wavelengths and, when you get five or six guys who don't think alike trying to make decisions, it can take weeks. So I got Jan (Mullaney, a keyboard player) and a couple others and formed Carillo.

"Now, I'm Frank Carillo, but 'Carillo' is a band. It's developed, now that we've finally got Buffalo (Bill Gelbert) and Nelson Williams with us. I do the lead singing and the lead guitar playing. And my partner, Luke Spagnuolo, and I write all the songs. But I depend a lot on Jan. I rarely tell people what to play because, well, they're fine musicians and I'd be a fool to dictate to them."

Still, the band was at its best in concert that night when Carillo took center stage and commanded attention with his fluid guitar solos. And that may be due to the foursome's lack of experience as a unit, a problem which can be rectified. You see, despite the raves earned by his 1978 LP, "Rings Around The Moon," and his subsequent tour opening for The Bee Gees, Carillo felt his rhythm section still wasn't right. So when the time came to record his followup album, a new release titled "Street Of Dreams," Mullaney and Carillo called on friends and guest session men.

John Siegler, who can usually be found playing in Tod Rundgren's band, handled most of the bass work. Andy Newmark had just finished playing drums for the new George Harrison LP and dropped by to help out. Jimmie Mack offered backing vocals, and some tight saxophone solos were contributed by Michael Brecker.

The problem arrived with good news. When Bad Company heard the advance tapes for "Street Of Dreams," it designated Carillo its first choice for warmup act on the band's 1979 tour, a prestigious position for any group of young musicians. And according to Carillo, "The news just knocked us out. Jan and I were just so excited. Then, when we calmed down about 15 minutes later, we looked at each other and said, 'Wow. Guess we better get a band together if we're going to play in public.' All of a sudden it hit us that we played with a lot of friends on the album, and now we'd be going out to play big halls with one of the hottest rock acts in the country. And it's kind of hard to put on a high energy show with just guitar and piano."

There followed 10 days of auditioning, with Gelbert and Williams finally being signed to play bass and percussion, respectively. Mere hours before the Lubbock Coliseum show, Carillo, still somewhat animated and taking only an occasional sip of the beer in front of him, revealed, "We've only been together now for three weeks. And we opened live two weeks ago in Houston in front of 14,000 people. Getting a shot like this can be an incredible thing. It can make or break the album. And luckily, everyone — Bad Company, Concerts West, Showco — has treated us great. They've all been really helpful.

While in the midst of expressing his appreciation for practically everyone involved with the band and the tour, Carillo also took the time to describe Atlantic Records as a company which cares about its artists on a personal level. "The input off Atlantic is just incredible," he said. "They're not the kind of record company that leaves you alone or says 'go make your record' and then just looks at the sales figures. They're right with you from the beginning. So before we did 'Street Of Dreams,' we even went into the studio and cut 12 songs two-track and went up to (Atlantic Records president) Jerry Greenburg and asked for his feedback."

Carillo insisted the song selection (eight original tunes and a reworked version of The Rolling Stones' "Out Of Time" comprise the LP) was a participatory decision — but added, "If there was a song I really loved and believed in that didn't click with everybody else, I'd still keep it on the record. For example, not too many were really keen on 'Familiar Stranger' the first time they heard it."

"Familiar Stranger" and the seven other original songs were all penned by Carillo and a little known lyricist named Luke Spagnuolo. The two are cousins. "Actually, he's both my cousin and my best friend, and we've been writing together since 1968," he said.

OK, nothing strange about that. But consider the fact that Carillo and Spagnuolo are rarely together when "writing together." That is, they may be miles apart geographically. Spagnuolo is a writer who plays only a little guitar, stays at home and picks up the phone to call Carillo whenever lyrical inspiration strikes. Carillo might then devise a chord progression, and play guitar and "sing real loud" into the phone. Then both will take turns calling the other as new ideas arise and, presto, long distance songwriting!

Finishing his beer and leaning back in his chair to act out his story, Carillo said, "I remember one of my biggest songs was written during a $167 phone call. And 'Seven Come Eleven' was a Princeton, N.J. to Brooklyn phone call. I remember that because my mother-in-law freaked. She heard me playing into the phone and asked my wife, 'What's he doing in there?' She answered, 'He's writing a song, ma.' And my mother-in-law just walked away mumbling about rock musicians. She was great."

Like a lot of musicians, Carillo at age 29 is already a family man. He is married and lives with his wife and two-year-old daughter ("she's a rock and roller, too") in a small, quiet suburb just 20 minutes north of New York City. He loves trees and kids, but is quick to admit that he finds himself caught in the middle, able to put up with individual lifestyles for only restricted amounts of time. "I love performing, I love writing, I love recording. I love getting away from it all. But there's a time and a place for each.

"You can spend three months in a studio putting your guts into a record like 'Street Of Dreams,' and be really happy. But then you get buggy and start itching to get back on the road. Then, after touring three or four months, you want to go home and spend time with your family. There's times when you love talking with the friends you have in other bands, and there's times when you get tired of listening to 'music talk' 24 hours a day. There's times when you want to be on stage, and times when you don't even want to get near the crowds. Fact is, the only feeling that never stops is the desire to write."

Even on the road?

"Sure," he answered. "When you're doing the same songs every night, after awhile you don't want to listen to them when you're not performing. And to me, there's nothing that cheers me up like sitting on a bed with a guitar late at night and saying, 'Hey, how about we try this?' The newness of that part of the business never wears off. I never get tired of it."

CARILLO OFF STAGE — Frank Carillo brought his band to Lubbock recently to open a Bad Company concert at the Coliseum, a show which drew close to 9,000 fans. Before the concert, however, he met with A-J entertainment editor William Kerns to discuss his shift from session musician to headliner. A review of Carillo's latest album is printed today on page 4-E. (Staff Photo by Gary Davis)

Flipside Sells 'Jam' Tickets

Interest is rising in the Texxas Jam, to be held at 1 p.m. June 9 at the Cotton Bowl in Dallas. The thing is, people are having trouble finding tickets in Lubbock. Well folks, it seems you're just not looking in the right places.

Tickets are still available at Flipside Records on 34th Street. The Flipside location in Town & Country shopping center never had any tickets, so that may be throwing people off. John's Jeans carried tickets for a short while, but returned their allotment to Dallas when the Metroplex supply sold out.

The Texxas Jam will feature performances by Boston, Heart, Van Halen, Blue Oyster Cult, Nazareth, Sammy Hagar and TKO. The gates open at 11 a.m.. Seating is limited to 75,000 people in general admission, festival-type seating.

Cher A Pre-Packaged Product

By BRUCE MEYER
United Press International

"I don't want to be known exclusively as a singer. If I was, I think I could still go out and have hit records. But I really have a need to go out and use more than just my voice. I have to use everything I've got."

You'll rarely hear a neater or more honest bit of self-analysis than that comment from one of rock 'n' roll's greatest sideshows. Her name is Cher and she has been up and down enough in the pop music business to rate the all-time "Super Taco" award from Jack in the Box.

"In everything I've done," she says, "I've come out with a big bang, then faded, and then come back."

In an industry that pretends to be an art form, Cher is purely and simply a prepackaged product. And over the past 15 years she has turned up in a variety of packages, most of them wrapped and more or less neatly decorated by whoever she happened to be hanging out with at the time.

The first go-round was, of course, as gorgeous foil for Sonny Bono's simple pop songs and sloppy-dumb humor bit. And a lot of people still remember her best for their early tunes and wacko TV show.

"I thought the songs that Sonny and I did at the start were good songs — 'I Got You Babe' and 'All I Really Wanna Do' and all those. Sonny wrote in a very bubble gummy sort of way, but I thought it was real good music for what it was."

On the other hand, Cher has few good memories from what was really her most successful period to date as a solo artist — the rather sinister "evil woman" series of pop tunes of the early '70s, beginning with "Gypsies, Tramps and Thieves" and including "Half Breed" and "Dark Lady."

"I never liked that music and that was kind of a drag for me. I didn't pick the songs then and I was surprised every time one of them became a hit. It was like soap opera rock 'n' roll — and I wanted to be hipper than that."

Eventually she stopped doing such tunes — even turned down a chance to record "The Night the Lights Went Out in Georgia," which became a big hit for Vickie Lawrence — and that began another down cycle for her, punctuated by her brief, celebrated liaison with Gregg Allman.

Now Cher is making what seems likely to be another comeback as a pop star. Her friendship with science fiction fan Gene Simmons of Kiss ("We're not boyfriend and girlfriend, but best friends. When he comes to L.A., he stays with me.") has produced a new twist on her glamour image in the form of bizarre fantasy costumes inspired by the fantasy art of Frank Frazetta.

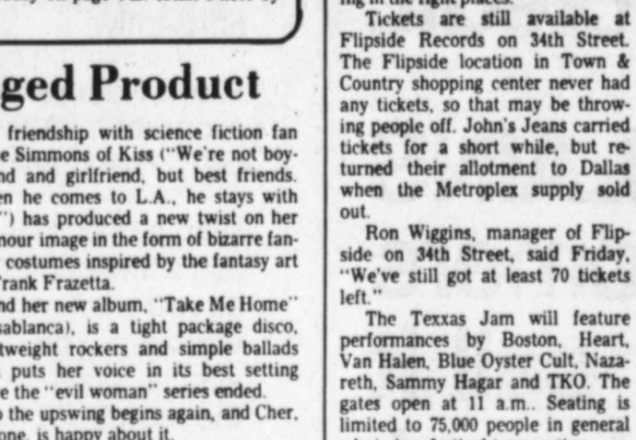

And her new album, "Take Me Home" (Casablanca), is a tight package disco, lightweight rockers and simple ballads that puts her voice in its best setting since the "evil woman" series ended.

So the upswing begins again, and Cher, for one, is happy about it.

Painters Saw Spots In work On Film

BURBANK, Calif. (Special) — The painting of spots was one of the biggest creative factors facing some 150 artists during three years of working on Walt Disney's cartoon-feature comedy-romance "101 Dalmations."

The film is due to return to Lubbock June 8 at the Cinema West.

In all, there are exactly 6,469,952 spots on the backs of 101 heartwarming dogs and puppies as they appear in 113,760 frames.

Pongo, the cartoon canine lead, wears 72 spots while his love, Perdita, has 68 on her coat.

The spots and all other color special effects required 800 gallons of very special paint weighing nearly five tons, enough to dress the exteriors of 135 average homes.

Using a secret process, the studio has always mixed its own color in its own laboratories for all Disney cartoons. For "101 Dalmations," 1,000 different shades were produced, 100 of them especially for this picture to achieve the subtlety and variety needed to handle the dogs and humans as they move through interiors and exteriors in summer and winter.

Producing the "white" for the dogs alone — Dalmations are white under the spots — required enough very light gray paint to make this category the predominant one in the picture's broad spectrum. Pure white, of course, would have been too garish, too difficult to define, especially against snow.

COBURN CAST

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — James Coburn will star in "The Baltimore Bullet," a comedy about two pool hustlers on the road, with Coburn's costar to be named in the near future. "The Baltimore Bullet" will be produced by FilmFair Inc., one of the world's largest producers of commercials.

A SPOT OF BAD LUCK — The spots belong only to the dog. Those on the man are from the pen of a dognapper hurled at him in this scene from Walt Disney's feature-length cartoon comedy "101 Dalmations." Adapted from the Dodie Smith novel, the film is slated to be re-released across the country on June 8. It will play in Lubbock at the Cinema West.

ART TALK

By LA WANDA MURFEE

Some physicians recommend that patients take up some art form as therapy for boredom, change of pace, depression, communication disabilities, physical handicaps. In producing art, an assertiveness comes through that might otherwise be squelched. With art, a person might achieve through emphasis on expression rather than the disability.

In becoming exposed to therapy of an art program, some clinics have introduced a program with trained personnel to help individuals find a means of expression. Hospitals, rest homes, churches, schools, as well as individuals are recognizing the need of personal declaration, the need to produce without criticism, the necessity to release thoughts in one form or another.

The professional artist channels his talent into the market after many years of development. The patient might seek a talent to develop. The physically impaired might discover the visual arts. If the arms or hands are damaged, patients can find ways to hold painting and/or sculpture instruments in the mouth or with the feet. Some successful careers have been launched after months of struggle. The emotionally disturbed who has bottled up many emotions, be it hostility, courage, hate or love, sentimentality or many others, can be released using paint or clay.

Art programs include drawing and painting as well as carving, sculpting and any one of the fine arts crafts. Most directors discourage kit assemblage, particularly with psychiatric patients. Through art forms the mentally disturbed patient can express hidden thoughts without ridicule or put down for having such mental pictures. He is simply given a means to execute the thoughts. The art therapist encourages any mode of expression.

It matters not if figures seem to float, distorted forms arise or dreamlike pictures with no semblance of reality are executed. Each item produced is a vivid formulation of what goes on in the mind.

No matter what the age of the patient art therapy can change an outlook. Once chambered expressions are set free, a new interest can develop that changes thought patterns and gives a new impression of oneself and swells pride in accomplishment.

COUNTRY CONCERT — One of Lubbock's biggest country concerts will take place at 8 p.m. Friday at the Civic Center exhibition hall. Featured entertainers for the show will include, from left, Jerry Reed, Margo Smith and the duo of Jim Ed Brown and Helen Cornelius. All three have proven very popular in the country field, and Reed has also branched out to attain some success in films, as well. (Moviegoers may recognize him as Burt Reynolds' partner in "Smokey And The Bandit.") The concert is being sold on a reserved seat basis, with tickets in two price ranges now on sale at the Civic Center box office.

Ron Wood's 'Barbarians': Sum Of Parts Greater Than Whole!

By ROB PATTERSON
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

F Entertainment
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal
Sunday, May 27, 1979

NEW YORK — Ron Wood is one Rolling Stone who'd rather not gather any moss.

"It's nice to keep the chaps up out in front of an audience," says Woody, whose idea of a little friendly tour is, at least on paper, the rock 'n' roll event of the year.

To promote his new solo album, "Gimme Some Neck" (Columbia), he's embarked on a tour with some rather heavy friends: Keith Richards; bassist Stanley Clarke; sax man Bobby Keyes; Ian McLagen, from the Faces, on keyboards; and drummer Ziggy Modeliste of the Meters.

The problem with this group, dubbed The New Barbarians with typical Wood wit, is that the sum of the parts is much greater than the whole. Clearly these are some of the best musicians in rock 'n' roll, but if it had been six unknowns on the state of Madison Square Garden, I'd have walked out early in the two-hour set.

Part of the problem is that Wood is a charmingly raw singer whose Dylan-esque voice just can't carry a whole show as a front man. And neither Keith's contributions as a singer nor rather long-winded instrumental jams could spark the show to become something special.

For Wood and company it was a chance to get out and play without all the pressures of being the Rolling Stones, but for this listener it was a tepid all-star jam with but a few inspired moments.

But part of the excitement that the show did generate is the dynamic relationship between Woody and Keith's guitar playing-the same surging force that made "Some Girls" a million seller.

"I thought I could do a good thing working with Keith," recalls Wood of his joining with Stones. "He had reservations before we ever played together. He thought our styles were too similar. But he dropped that attitude soon enough."

Another pleasant surprise of this strange aggregation was the presence of jazz bassist Stanley Clarke. "We'd met a few years ago in London, and found out we actually knew a lot about each other," says Wood. "We had a lot in common, so we just said someday it'd be nice to play together and left it at that.

"When he heard about this tour, he expressed some interest which I followed up on. I tracked him down in Miami, and he was coming back to L.A. the next day, so he said sure, let's get together and start rehearsing."

Maybe I'm too hard on Wood and friends, or maybe they didn't rehearse quite enough. It's great that Wood can get out and play with his friends (and sell out arenas to adoring audiences), but the long-winded, bluesy pace of the concert left this reviewer yawning.

"I like the live audience thing," says Woody," and I know Keith does, too. We just love to play."

Which I suppose gives audiences who may never see the Stones a big treat on this tour. Seeing a couple of Stones in a relaxed and informal context is certainly an interesting idea, but after this show, I'll wait for the real thing to come rolling down the pike.

NEW YORK (Special) — Martin Scorsese's new film, "Raging Bull," starring Robert De Niro in the role of Jake La Motta, former middle-weight champion of the world, has begun production in Los Angeles. It will be released by United Artists.

"Raging Bull" reunites Academy Award-winner Robert De Niro ("Godfather II") and Academy Award-nominee Martin Scorsese ("Taxi Driver") in this fourth film project. Earlier collaborations include "Mean Streets," "Taxi Driver" and "New York, New York." De Niro's most recent film credit was "The Deer Hunter," for which he received an Academy Award nomination for Best Actor.

In preparation for his role as the "Bronx Bull," De Niro spent eight months in training at a New York gym under the guidance of Jake La Motta, who is also acting in an advisory capacity on the film.

"Raging Bull" also features Joe Pesci as Joey La Motta and 18-year-old newcomer, Cathy Moriarty, who was selected to play the pivotal role of Vicki after a year's search by the director.

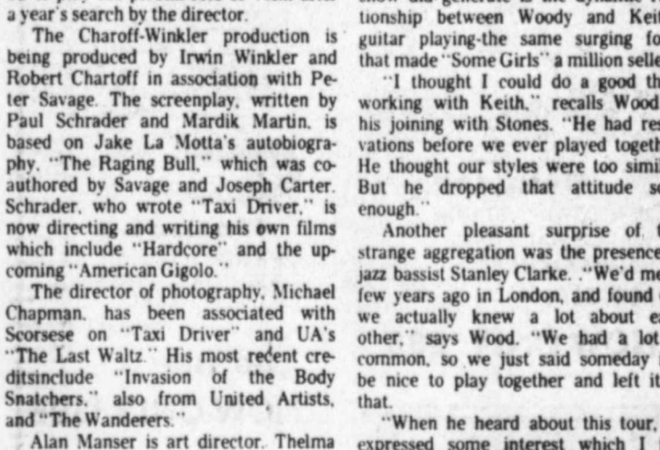

The Charoff-Winkler production is being produced by Irwin Winkler and Robert Chartoff in association with Peter Savage. The screenplay, written by Paul Schrader and Mardik Martin, is based on Jake La Motta's autobiography, "The Raging Bull," which was co-authored by Savage and Joseph Carter. Schrader, who wrote "Taxi Driver," is now directing and writing his own films which include "Hardcore" and the upcoming "American Gigolo."

The director of photography, Michael Chapman, has been associated with Scorsese on "Taxi Driver" and UA's "The Last Waltz." His most recent creditsinclude "Invasion of the Body Snatchers," also from United Artists, and "The Wanderers."

The production company moved to New York in mid-May for location shooting.

Country Notes

By Bob Campbell

Jerry Wallace has had some discouragement in his life but none so hard to deal with as when he was in the Navy and an officer sent him to a psychiatrist for saying he was going to be a singer and sell a million records.

"They thought I was crazy, so they sent me over to what they called the Section 8 ward in San Diego," he said in a recent interview at the Honky Tonk nightclub, where he was playing. "They didn't give me a Section 8, which is a mental discharge. He sent me back and said, 'Just learn plumbing.'

"About a year later I got out of the Navy, and I ran into this same commander, this psychiatric guy, in Buffalo, New York, and I played a club there called the Town Casino, and at that time my record 'Primrose Lane' had sold over a million and a half copies.

"He called me over, and he had tears in his eyes, and he said, 'Jerry, I am so sorry that I didn't believe in you.'"

"Primrose Lane" is still the biggest hit Wallace has had, but he kept his career going over two decades with other hits including "Shutters and Boards," "In the Misty Moonlight," "To Get to You" and "My Wife's House."

A small record company in Los Angeles released "Primrose Lane" in 1959, and it because a hit mainly because the late Bob Crane, a disc jockey at a major LA station who later became a well-known actor, liked the song and played it several times a day until other stations picked it up and its popularity spread from Los Angeles to across the nation.

His father was a Methodist minister, and he considers his widely respected talent "a God-given gift."

He was able to sing harmonies at age 5, he said, without really knowing how he did it.

Although he has had a number of songs on country charts, Wallace considered himself a blues singer when he started out, and his favorite singer then and now is Nat King Cole.

"I was raised on a farm and came up the hard way," he said. "Nothing's ever been easy for me. In fact, I've worked a lot of club dates and concerts and never been paid. But I don't let it bother me because I know I can always make a living.

"If I never make another hit record in the next 10 years — I feel I have about 10 more years left — I want to sing another five or 10 years years and then hang it up like a jockey does. I feel I may hang up my tack in another six or seven years."

Wallace regrets in a way that he was never as big, for example, as Elvis Presley, but in another sense he is content with the way his life has gone.

One of his biggest nights, he said, was about four years ago in Las Vegas when he met Presley backstage after an Englebert Humperdinck show.

"Elvis was in there at the bar — they had a private bar — and I was sitting there and we were talking, and my producer walked over to me and said, 'Jerry, you're taking up Elvis's time, and Humperdinck wanted to be with him.'

"You know what Elvis did? I got goosebumps as big as a grapefruit. He said, 'I'm talking to Mr. Wallace right now, and when I'm through talking to him I'll go over and be with Mr. Humperdinck.

"He said, 'The best song you ever did was 'To Get to You.' And he said he loved the song, and I'll never forget this: he said, 'I loved that song. In fact, when you sang that I was jealous because I wished I had had it.'

"Now that's a thrill. When you get somebody like the king, Elvis Presley, to tell you that he wished he had had a song that you had, even though I'm workin' for peanuts right now, it made my whole life.

"It surprised me. I didn't even know he knew who I was."

After Presley and his wife separated, the rock and roll star frequently played another Wallace song, "Don't Give Up on Me," at his Memphis mansion.

"My manager at that time was Ron Blackwood," he said. "Ron told me he one time that he went over to see Elvis at his mansion in Memphis, and he took a record of "Don't Give Up on Me." And here comes all of Elvis's bodyguards and tried to interrupt him, and he said, 'Shut up! I'm listening to this song by Jerry Wallace called 'Don't Give Up on Me.' He said, 'That's the story of my life.'"

Asked if he wished he had lived the same kind of life as Presley, Wallace said, "No, do you know why? Elvis was maybe four years younger than I am, but I'm still alive.

"I didn't want to recreate what he did. I didn't want to live that life because he was the most miserable guy in the world. He had the world, but he didn't have peace of mind. I've got peace of mind.

"Elvis was a very lonely man, and he was very insecure. A lot of people don't know that. They think he was really secure. Moneywise, he was secure, but as far as feeling secure of being loved, no, he wasn't."

'Dawn Of The Dead' Not A Pretty Sight

"Dawn Of The Dead." Written, directed and edited by George A. Romero. Photographed by Michael Gornick. Makeup and special effects by Tim Savini. Weapons coordinator: Clayton Hill. Explosive effects by Gary Zeller and Don Berry. Stars Scott H. Reiniger, Ken Foree, David Emge and Gaylen Ross. No rating (though no one under 17 will be admitted). At the South Plains Cinema Fourplex.

By WILLIAM D. KERNS
A-J Entertainment Editor

Publicity material states, "George A. Romero was born in the Bronx in New York City in 1940 and was brought up under the Archdiocese of New York." Psychoanalysts could no doubt have a field day with that revelation, since Romero's rebellious career as a filmmaker has centered on the horrific. In 1968, he gave us "Night Of The Living Dead," a black and white chiller which started out scaring families at the local drive-ins and wound up part of the distinguished film collection at the Museum Of Modern Art. He then made "The Crazies," which met with success overseas, and a widely acclaimed but little seen vampire story called "Martin."

Romero's religion is fear, a fact made painfully obvious through the release of his newest cinematic nightmare called "Dawn Of The Dead." I say painful because it often becomes physically discomforting to watch this film. Covering the recent U.S.A. Film Festival in Dallas, where the picture made its American debut, Dallas Times Herald film critic C.W. Smith labeled the movie "without a doubt the most horrific, brutal, nightmarish descent into Hell (literally) ever put on the screen." Prize-winning Chicago critic Roger Ebert used Smith's quote in his later columns, as well. And for good reason. Violence of this sort, the type which graphically shocks and immediately thereafter puts out roots in our memories, has never appeared before.

A-J FILM REVIEW

Indeed, if we had nightmares about being eaten by sharks after seeing "Jaws," then the best comparison would be to say we don't dare even fall asleep after seeing humans eaten by their counterparts here.

In that respect, "Dawn Of The Dead" is little more than an effective horror film — and one which can expect to be embraced by many as yet another example of violence as pornography. But Romero is out to satirize as well as frighten. And the film's underlying statements, not to mention its surprising sense of humor, grant an added dimension and importance. Indeed, amidst all the bullet-riddled corpses, the entrail-gnawing and the brain matter splattered on the walls, there exists an authoritative mirroring of human nature, an underlying effect which makes this extremely original motion picture very much worth seeing.

For those who missed "Night Of The Living Dead" (by accident), the conflict basically concerns the dead returning to life as walking zombies who rely on the flesh of the living for sustenance. No reason is given for the situation. The zombies are slow moving, primitive in their thinking processes. But they roam in packs and remain deadly; suffer one bite and you can kiss it all goodbye. And their numbers are ever-growing because once a person is killed by them (or by anyone else, for that matter), he soon rises again to stumble amidst their ranks. The only way to destroy one of the undead is to shoot it in the head, or in some other manner destroy its brain.

The 1968 picture ended with society having the battle well in hand; it was just a matter of mopping up. However, we find the situation has reversed itself as "Dawn Of The Dead" opens. The survival centers are overrun by the killer zombies, the major cities are falling. The living are losing control.

It is here that we are introduced to blonde Gaylen Ross as a TV technician and David Emge as her boyfriend. The two decide to escape the city by helicopter, joined by SWAT officers Scott H. Reiniger and Ken Foree. Romero gives us no buildup; subtlety was not in his game plan. Instead, our minds are blown by an immediate shove into the brutal fray, with bodies being blown in suspensful fashion. Even as a priest wanders in and tells the frightened men, "We must stop the killing or we lose the war," we see the bigotry and greed and hatred of the non-zombies and realize lessons aren't to be learned.

And rest assured: If you find your stomach churning during the opening moments, you'd best find an exit — because the shocking surprises only increase in number as time wears on.

Our four heros set down on the roof of a shopping mall (actually the $50 million Monroeville Mall in Pittsburgh), where they hole up and systematically elude the enemy until they earn total control of the complex. In society's mind, it's an idyllic situation. With complete access to all stores and power supplies, they have everything they need for survival. And their masterpiece is unraveled not by the zombies, but by their own lack of judgment — by human nature. Indeed, when Romero's scientists tell us the zombies will not respond to human emotion, we think he's warning us of the enemy.

But think of human emotions as hatred and revenge and greed and that statement seems aimed in the opposite direction. Who is the enemy?

Reiniger, the most likeable character during the early stretches of the picture, is the first to lose control when he begins treating an almost casual duty of blocking the doors as though he was John Wayne fighting on Iwo Jima. The reason? He had a close, admittedly harrowing encounter with the zombies in a truck cab — and now he's driven by revenge. He assigns personalities to the walking dead, and this is his downfall. Later, when security is broken by an invading motorcycle gang, marauders so despicably murderous that we actually root for the zombies to beat (eat?) them, our starring survivors could still escape but for their own greed.

"No. It's ours. We took it," says one as he begins firing his weapon and drawing attention to himself.

But possibly the most frightening aspect of the film is in its heros' rapid acceptance of the killing necessities. Eliminating zombies is not a dirty, dangerous job — it's fun! Look at our SWAT officers playing war games. Look at the motorcycle ruffians picking pockets and tossing pies before beheading the butts of their jokes. Look at the hundreds of farmers gathering on the back roads for the hunt, stopping to partake of doughnuts and coffee and crack a few jokes. Zombies are in season and there's no limit. Hey, put another notch on my rifle stock.

Thankfully, Romero also recognizes a need for humor in the midst of such an overpowering bloodbath. His talented actors make us laugh with their doubletakes and misunderstandings during the early portions, and later Romero depends on the mall and his system of overkill. Weakly satirizing our consumer drive, he has the zombies attracted to the mall because of "instinct." We're told, "This place was important to them." And as Romero turns on the power and the muzak, the stumbling enemy is reduced to a mindless horde of shoppers out window shopping on a Saturday afternoon. Visually, this part is hilarious.

The overkill, the literal non-stop annihilation process, also helps in that it strips away a shading of realism. We grow accustomed to the slaughter (which, upon reflection, may just be yet another frightening aspect of human nature).

As a writer, Romero manages to mix wit and satire with his savagery. As a director, he capitalizes on action. Though more than two hours long, "Dawn Of The Dead" is a fast-paced mixture of explosions and murder and fear which should keep most viewers' eyes glued to the screen. It is involving, with extremely impressive special effects work and makeup design. The plot may be implausible, but few will walk out saying the film was not realistic. And believe me, no one is going to fall asleep while "Dawn Of The Dead" is on the screen.

Instead, viewers will absorb the grave expanse of Romero's nightmarish vision. They will scream, perhaps cover their eyes, laugh nervously, maybe even panic and leave early. Some will undoubtedly suffer nightmares. They will, in short, be terrified. That's what horror is all about. But those who dare to think about such things afterwards may discover there is more to "Dawn Of The Dead" than blood squibs and ripped flesh. And that something extra is what sets it apart from the rest.

For two hours, the zombies in this movie will scare the loose change out of your pockets. Two days, three days, a week later, though, you may look back and decide the survivors who represented humanity were the most frightening characters of all.

Special effects turn star into gruesome zombie in "Dawn Of The Dead

ZOMBIES, ZOMBIES EVERYWHERE — There's a reason why George A. Romero's latest horror film "Dawn Of The Dead," currently playing in Lubbock at the South Plains Cinema, is running in Europe under the title "Zombies." It's full of them! The picture is a sequel to the 1968 classic "Night Of The Living Dead," and is probably the most gruesome film ever made. A-J entertainment editor William Kerns points out in today's review that the film has more to offer than sheer shocking brutality. He adds, though, that the film definitely is not lacking in that aforementioned brutality.

Prince To See 'Moonraker'

NEW YORK (Special) — His Royal Highness, The Prince Philip will be the guest of honor at the Royal World Premiere performance of "Moonraker" to be held at London's Odeon Leicester Square Theatre on June 26.

The gala event will benefit the newspaper charity fund "Old Ben", in aid of the sick and needy.

As a special feature at this event a large scale model of the "Moonraker" shuttlecraft measuring thirty feet in length will be erected outside the theatre. The shuttlecraft figures significantly in "Moonraker", eleventh in the series of James Bond adventures, which stars Roger Moore as Ian Fleming's agent 007 and Lois Chiles, Michael Lonsdale, Corinne Clery and Richard "Jaws" Kiel. Albert R. Broccoli produced and Lewis Gilbert directed from a screenplay by Christopher Wood.

Remember Copa Girls: They're Still Dancing

By FRED T. FERGUSON

NEW YORK (UPI) — Remember the Copa? And the Copa girls?

For 30 years, 1940 through 1969, celebrities sat at the Copacabana's best tables to be seen. Tourists spent big bucks for a chance to see them.

As much as the big name performers, the attraction was a parade of long-stemmed girls — it's debatable whether they danced as much as jounced — in the most daring costumes of the day.

But the girls survive. They were on stage again the other night at theannual reunion of their own little alumni club.

Take Raquel Welch, Martha Stewart, Olga San Juan, Janice Rule, June Allyson — Copa girls all.

You are less likely to recall the girls who showed up at the reunion. But you might recognize Lorraine Richter. After the Copa, she appeared in 40 Phil Silvers' "Sgt. Bilko" TV shows.

In silver lame, she came to the reunion leaning on a cane. She had torn a muscle playing tennis at home in Greenwich, Conn. But she danced anyway, with cane.

There were three Copa shows a year. Mostly, new girls were hired for each. But Lorraine stayed in the line two years, 1957-58. She had this unintentional way of getting laughs.

"The first night I became a Copa girl, they put me in the front line. My shoe flew off. It hit Sid Caesar in the head. He came on stage and put it on.

"Later, I was the last to kick off stage. One night I kicked the drummer. Knocked him over, drums and all. I ran over and bent down. You are not supposed to do that in those costumes. He was all right but the audience had hysterics.

"I got my first love note backstage. It read, 'I love you — Joe DiMaggio.' Later, he dated my best friend."

At 62, Harriet discoed with the rest at the new Stork Club, reminiscent of the one the girls frequented when Sherman Billingsley held sway and stagedoor Johnnies had lots of money. She wore a rouge tight top and layered ruffled skirt like the one she wore in that first gaudy review. Her headdress became part of the Copa's logo, a Carmen Miranda pile of fake fruit perched on a bright bandana.

"The stagedoor Johnnies would send back orchids and champagne," she remembered. "But we weren't allowed to drink it until after the show."

"I got roses and a gold necklace one night," said Joan Wynne, Copa '48-'49. "My mother made me give them back. But I dated the guy."

Harriet, a swimmer in Billy Rose' 1939 World's Fair Aquacade, later swam in Esther Williams films, danced the nightclub circuit, married a diplomat, then an advertising executive. Twice widowed, she spends much of her time in the Copa girls' charity drives.

Sisters Barbara and Sandy Baxter were among the last Copa girls, appearing in 1968.

Barbara: "We'd go to parties between shows. I remember undressing in a taxi caught in traffic to make a second show."

Sandy: "Milton Berle threw falsies on the stage. We were all looking down wondering which one of us..."

Both are legal secretaries now. Wearing sequined tights, ostrich plumes at the head and astern, they said they'd go on stage again anytime.

Sandy: "I do miss the life I Had."

Singer Terri Stevens, one of the few still in show business and nearly bursting the beaded top of her white silk gown, is president of the modestly incorporated World Famous Copacabana Girls of New York. "We really work hard raising money for charities," she said.

"We used to put 300, 400 tourists in the Copa every night," said Ed Blaine of New York's Gray Line sightseeing tours. "They'd come from all across the country and from abroad. They used to hold the show until the tour buses arrived.

"It was tough getting a reservation. Then you'd go and see empty tables. Suddenly, the place would fill up. The buses had arrived. It made some people mad."

Four Broadway Shows Suffer $2 Million Loss

By GLENNE CURRIE

NEw York (UPI) — Seldom has Broadway seemed so much like a revolving door.

Four recent Broadway shows played a combined total of seven performances, at a joint loss of some $2 million.

"The Goodbye People" opened April 30: one performance.

"Bosoms & Neglect" opened May 3: four performances.

"The Utter Glory of Morrissey Hall" opened May 13: one performance.

The first three were straight plays, dropping $400,000 or more apiece. "Morrissey Hall," a musical about an English girls' school obviously inspired (?) by Ronald Searle's St. Trinian's, lost twice as much.

"Morrissey Hall," at the Mark Hellinger Theater, had four things going for it: Celeste Holm as the headmistress, sopranos Marilyn Caskey and Becky McSpadden, and a chubby chorus girl named Bonnie Hellman.

For the rest, it was written in gelatine.

Its wit was exemplified by dressing up the musical director (male) in a wig and women's clothes, and loosing balloons and paper airplanes from the orchestra pit.

The plot had something to do with all-out war between the Fifth and Sixth forms, complete with planes and tanks, with some love interest and an offstage porno film thrown in.

For all intents and purposes, there was no book, no lyrics, and the music was mostly a melange of memories of Eric Coates, Sandy Wilson, Frederick Loewe et al.

The show originated three years ago in Santa Maria, Calif. Co-author Nagle Jackson was so attached to it that he took it along with him to the McCarter Theater in Princeton, N.J., when he was appointed the McCarter's artistic director. Three producers and two associate producers raised the cash for Broadway.

My sympathies were all with Haverfield, a Sixth Former, whose favorite expression was, "I could puke!"

"Getting Out," Marsha Norman's astonishing first play about a woman on parole adjusting to life outside, opened at the Off Broadway Theater de Lys May 15. It should top the list of shows to see for anyone interested in naturalistic plays and acting.

On a second viewing — it was premiered at the Actors Theater of Louisville and played later at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles and New York's Phoenix Theater — "Getting Out" seems less well constructed but richer in texture.

The young Arly (Pamela Reed) is an uneducated hellraiser, a rebellious young hooker and petty thief who has a child by her pimp, kills a gas station attendant in the course of a robbery, and winds up in an Alabama prison. She spends most of her time in solitary ("segregation"), gets religion from a visiting minister, cracks up and tries to stab the evil within her with a fork.

When she recovers, she becomes a model prisoner and in her new character — Arlene (Susan Kingsley) — is paroled after eight years and returns home to Louisville. She is torn between resuming a life of prostitution and thus able to take care of her son, and going straight without her child, washing dishes but conscience-free and free of the fear of prison.

One problem she faces is how to establish her independence, how to avoid being manipulated by men. This is made easier by the fact that both the men in her life — her former pimp and the prison guard who befriends her and almost rapes her — are weak characters, a fault in the writing.

But women will identify with this facet of "Getting Out" and men — often too prone to believe their women can't live without them —should be forced to see it.

The performances by Miss Kingsley and Miss Reed are shattering. MissKingsley is a gaunt and gangly Arlene, constantly chewing gum, giving only a hint of her former attractiveness, gradually realizing her own potential strength after breaking down in the arms of a neighbor. Miss Reed as the young Arly is hyperactive and defensive until the selfexamination forced by segregation proves more than she can handle.

"Getting Out" tends to preachiness; Arlene's religious conversion is hard to swallow; her child quickly disappears from her thoughts; the convention of having Arly and Arlene on stage at the same time, with attention switching from one to the other, reduces tension and sometimes makes it difficult to believe they are the same person.

But Miss Norman's play — partly based on her work in a state mental hospital — is a rich, sensitive piece of writing, and well served by Jon Jory's direction, though the pacing went awry at times on opening night.

"Talley's Folly" is part of a play cycle which began with "5th of July," and concerns the courting of Sally Talley by Matt Friedman in 1944, 33 years before "5th of July."

Matt, a Jewish accountant with a quick wit and a sublimated horror of his antiSemite childhood in Europe which leaves him unwilling to bring more children into the world, visits the Talley property in Missouri to ask Sally to marry him. After her brother runs him off with a shotgun, they met in a disused boathouse where Sally hides her gin and tries to persuade him she's not interested in marriage.

It turns out she is ashamed to marry because she cannot bear children, as a result of a bout of tuberculosis which infected her Fallopian tubes. (Yes, it can happen.)

All ends happily and in "5th of July" Matt is dead and Aunt Sally still is cherishing his ashes.

"Talley's Folly" doesn't sound funny, but it sparkles with wit, so much so that at times Matt sounds like a parody of the bitter, wisecracking Jew.

Judd Hirsch handles the unconventional role of Matt with sure comic timing and intonation, while Trish Hawkins, a popular Circle Rep regular, is despairing and appealing as the two peel away each other's secrets.

Marshall W. Mason is Wilson's favorite director, and it is easy to see why, as he moves his two actors around the boathouse and in an out of a decaying rowboat, putting Matt on iceskates in July and having him plunge a leg through a rotting floorboard only to withdraw it quickly when Sally casually warns him about snakes.

"Devour the Snow," at the Off Broadway Hudson Guild May 10-June 3, is a semidocumentary about the psychological effects of the grisly story of the Donner Pass, where pioneers resorted to cannibalism when trapped by snow in the Sierra Nevadas in the winter of 1846-7.

The incident was an important part of American frontier history and legend, and as such a prime subject for an American dramatist.

Abe Polsky has chosen to tell it through the frontier-type trial of a slander suit, brought by one of the survivors against former companions who accused him of murder.

The play is somewhat contrived and the chronology of events is very confusing. But Polsky's depiction of the horror and debilitation of the survivors — some of whom had their children eaten after they starved to death — is sensitive and rings true. Overtones of racism (the supposed "villain" is German) provide a message of sorts if any is needed.

One Off Broadway show you can skip is "Tunnel Fever," which opened prematurely May 10 at the American Place Theater.

RICK & NEAL TONIGHT — Opening tonight's Ray Charles concert at the Civic Center exhibition hall will be Neal Ford, left, and Rick Mensik. The duo once operated out of Lubbock, and now entertains in their own club in Dallas. Also on the agenda is Gary Laramore & Delaware The Dog. The concert is slated to get underway at 8 p.m., and tickets are still available at the Civic Center box office.

New Books In Review

ISLANDS. By John Fowles. Photographs by Fay Godwin. Little, Brown. 108 Pages. $10.95.

John Fowles is best known as a respected novelist so this long, wide-ranging essay is something of a departure for him.

Fowles uses Britain's Scilly Islands as his starting point but he quickly moves beyond them, observing that his book "is much more about the Scillies of a novelist's mind; and beyond them, about the mysteries, symbolic and real, of all similarly situated small islands; about their silences, their otherness, their magic and their mazes, their eternal waiting for a foot to land."

His reflections on islands and islanders lead to many places.

One of these is to a lengthy interpretation of the classic "Odyssey" from the point of view of the islands which appear in that book. During his leisurely and most interesting discussion of the classic, Fowles admits that he is "one of the heretics who believe the 'Odyssey' must have been written by a woman."

He then proceeds to document his case so convincingly that one would find it difficult to argue that the "Odyssey" was not written by a woman.

Fowles also has a number of interesting things to say about Shakespeare's "The Tempest," noting it is "a parable about the human imagination, and thus finally about Shakespeare's view of his own imagination: its powers, its hopes, its limits — above all its limits. The play's true island is our planet, in its oceanic sea of space."

William P. McGivern's massive novel, "Soldiers of '44," deals with World War II's Battle of the Bulge, and it is largely effective as it tells of the fierce fighting that took place before the Germans were stopped.

The book does have faults, however, faults that could have been corrected by some heavy editing. For McGivern at times, has a tendency to ramble and this detracts from the thrusting impact of his novel. This aside, the plot is a good, solid one, and McGivern has the talent to make the reader feel what it must have been like to be an American soldier fighting a desperate enemy.

McGivern, according to a publisher's note, "fought at Normandy and the Battle of the Bulge," and thus has the experience needed to describe war in general and the fighting in this battle in particular.

Shortly before Christmas 1944, the hard-pressed Germans mounted a massive counter-attack against the unspecting, invading Allied armies. McGivern's account deals lightly with the overall battle in the Ardennes, concentrating instead on one American gun unit led by Sgt. Buell Docker, a battle-hardened soldier who "was 27 but looked 10 years older; his eyes were hard and there were flecks of gray in the dark hair at his temples."

With the German attack creating massive confusion in the lines, Docker find himself and his men cut off and realizes it isup to him to find a relatively safe place from which to fight. He does but after a short period of calm a massive German tank finds him and his men, and the fighting is on.

The battle is brief, bloody and final. But the war is not over for Docker yet, for in the battle's aftermath the sergeant finds he has to take on the American brass in an ironic battle of wits over what constitutes heroism.

The 1960s: They were the best of times, they were the worst of times. In the final year of the decade, a man named Neil Armstrong "backed slowly down the LM's nine-rung ladder with some 528 million people watching, and what they heard him say was: 'That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind.'" That was one of the best things: Man had landed on the moon.

One of the worst happened near the beginning of the '60s, on Nov. 22, 1963. On that day, another man remarked to his wife, "If someone wants to shoot me from a window with a rifle, nobody can stop it."

And someone in a window in Dallas waited for John Kennedy.

In "The Angry Decade," Paul Sann, former executive editor of The New York Post, gathers together the many, many events — major and minor — and with journalistic skill weaves them together into the fabric that made up that unique period.

The assassinations — the brothers Kennedy, Martin Luther King — the war in Vietnam that dragged on and on, violence in the cities, the mass murders, the social unrest, all are skillfully recalled here.

But so, too, are the other things that made up the decade: the dances, the fashions, the books and the plays. In solid prose, aided by many, many photographs, Sann has captured a time that now seems so long ago. Could it really have been only yesterday?

GHOST STORY. By Peter Straubm Coward, McCann & Geoghegan. 483 Pages. $10.95.

"Ghost Story" may not be a terribly original title for a novel about spectral doings, but it certainly is an apt one.

In this tale, we meet plenty of ghosts and non-ghosts alike. Four men of the latter brand are respectable, well-to-do citizens of a small town. For years, the old boys have been meeting regularly and swapping ghost stories. Then, they slowly realize they are becoming involved in one.

They aren't however, by no means alone. A wide assortment of characters, mostly townspeople, are affected as some mysterious force tries to destroy the town and its people. After the identity of the ghost is unearthed and its motive revealed, the day is saved with the help of an old silent movie and a well-timed sneeze.

"Ghost Story" is an imaginative book, but one that is marred by characters who come and go and come back againn and by a plot so complex that it is sometimes a problem to keep in order. The narrative, though fairly well done throughout, is especially compelling when the old men are swapping tales and when the young novelist character (and eventual co-hero) is writing in his journal.

There are countless readers who tingle at stories of this type, and they won't want to miss this one. But it probably won't do much to change the minds of those readers for whom ghost stories are merely ink on paper.

MARGARET SANGER: A Biography of the Champion of Birth Control. By Madeline Gray. Richard Marek. 494 Pages. $15.

Today's young women may give credit to Betty Friedan, but their grandmothers know that it was really Margaret Sanger who opened the doors to women's liberation.

Defying harsh criticism and harsher laws, including the Comstock Law which subjected any person giving out contraception information to fines and imprisonment, she fought all her adult life to legalize birth conrol.

As a young girl she saw her mother die at age 49 after 18 pregnancies. As a midwife she saw a 27-year-old woman, who had tried to abort herself, bleed to death. She decided to devote her life to saving others by learning the facts about contraceptive methods and offering them — along with supplies she smuggled into the country — to women.

Madeline Gray has written a lengthy but always interesting account of this unusual woman, a beauty who continued till the end of her life at age 86 in 1966 to attract men, among them Havelock Ellis and H. G. Wells.

Her biographer interviewed numerous close relatives and friends and includes in her book previously unpublished letters to and from Sanger's loves and two husbands; diary excerpts, and letters in her campaign to push legislation. The subject emerges as a woman determined enough to go to jail for her cause but also egotistical enough to sometimes demand undeserved credit. She laid claims to coining the term "birth control" — later softened to "planned parenthood" — though an associate had actually originated it.

Sanger took flying lessons at 72; at 73, she traveled to Japan and on to India for a Family Planning conference; at 78, she was still lecturing and helping to raise funds for research on the pill. Miss Gray has written a fascinating book about a fascinating woman.

The leaders in East Germany would like nothing better than to be able to embarrass the American president during his historic visit. They decide to kidnap Father Sean Conlin, brainwash the old priest — who heads a network that specializes in getting people out of East Germany into the West — and have him state in a public trial that:

"...(his) actions were motivated not so much by Christian ideals as by political ones, if he could be made to admit to the world his involvement with the American CIA and their espionage activities directed against our republic, this would have the most damaging effect on Kennedy's visit..."

Father Conlin is seized, and the reader is once again plunged into a tale of adventure that zips along and carries him swiftly and most willingly to a stunning conclusion.

As he has shown in previous novels, such as "The Eagle Has Landed," Jack Higgins is a master at this sort of tale and "Day of Judgment" is even better than its very good predecessors.

With Conlin held inside a seemingly impregnable castle deep in East Germany, the Western intelligence men are temporarily at a loss as to just how to go about getting him out.

Bring in Simon Vaughan, a British soldier-of-fortune with a dark and violent past. Also bring out of retirement an aging but still brilliant American intelligence specialist. Put the two together and plunge into another superior Higgins thriller.

THE PIGEON PROJECT. By Irving Wallace. Simon & Schuster. 383 Pages. $10.95.

If you want a sure-fire plot, have a scientist come up with a formula that will extend human life to a healthy 150 years.

Irving Wallace has based his latest novel on this "Fountain of Youth" ploy and the effect it has on a group of men and women.

The scientist, Professor Davis MacDonald, makes his discovery during research in the Soviet region of Abkhazia, whose residents are famed for longevity.

When MacDonald makes his breakthrough, Soviet authorities try to make him captive so Russians will have sole access to the long-life formula. To be exact, they want it for top Soviet leaders so they can stay in power for a century and a half.

MacDonald finally makes a hair-raising escape to Venice under circumstances that strain the reader's credulity somewhat and goes into hiding with the help of an American engineer.

Despite efforts to keep a lid on the affair, news of the scientist's presence in Venice and his electrifying discovery leak out and Wallace shows how various characters react. A world-famous novelist who dreads the prospect of old age is willing to betray the scientist and his protectors to get hold of the formula. An aging movie star offers herself to a man she believes can get her the formula. And a priest is willing to help the scientists, provided the Vatican be given control over the formula.

The most convincing character is an Italian doctor who realizes that doubling the life span could have a devastating effect on humanity. The population explosion would cause widespread famine, he warns, and would eventually crowd mankind off the planet.

The plot is fast moving and intriguing, but Wallace who apparently is entranced with Venice keeps breaking off to give the reader a guided tour of the place. This is boring to anyone who knows the city of canals and confusing to those who have never been there.

TO BUILD A CASTLE — MY LIFE AS A DISSENTER. By Vladimir Bukovsky. Viking. 438 Pages. $17.50.

During his battle for individual rights in the Soviet Union, when he daily risked police harassment, beatings and arrests, no one doubted the courage of dissident Vladimir Bukovsky. "The bravest man I ever met or ever expect to meet" was how one acquaintance described him in 1971 just after his arrest for the fourth and last time.

Now we have his own account, written in exile in Britain, of how a product of Soviet schools and society became a dissident and fought for his views despite vicious and harrowing KBG tactics to dissuade him. Police bullying, mental hospitals, labor camps and prisons failed to break his resolve.

Bukovsky tells a fascinating story well. His description of the brawling, slum-like conditions of daily life in Stalin's Moscow is vivid.

Nikita Khrushchev's denunciation of once revered Josef Stalin stirred doubts in Bukovsky, then a bright teen-ager, and he began to perceive the Soviet system as riddled with incompetence, corruption, theft and selfishness — all in clear contradiction to oficial propagnda.

His first scrape with the law came in high school, where he was involved in producing a satirical magazine displeasing to the authorities. He was expelled, and his career as a dissenter began.

Between 1963 and 1971 he was arrested four times, charged with such offenses as possessing a forbidden book, helping organize a demonstration, leading a demonstration, compiling documents on Soviet abuse of psychiatry and sending them abroad.

For that last offense he was sentenced to 12 years, a term interrupted in 1976 by his forced exile from the Soviet Union in exchange for Chilean communist leader Luis Corvalan.

What made this bright student, who could have found a comfortable niche in the Soviet system, endure the punishment and brutality? Bukovsky answered the question with another: "If I don't do it, who will?"

LADD. By Beverly Linet. (Arbor House. $10.95)

Everyone loved Alan Ladd. Except Alan Ladd.

As a child, he was devastatingly poor. As a box-office attraction, he became fabulously wealthy. As an aging actor on the all-too-speedy road down, Ladd's life was pitiful.

Through painstaking research that included hundreds of interviews, a great deal of study and a personal knowledge of the actor over 15 years, Beverly Linet has produced an intimate portrait — "Ladd" — of Hollywood's "Greek God" of the late 1940s and '50s.

Ladd's life, she finds, is ful of love: for his wife, Susie; for his children; for his friends; for his fans. But his life also is full of tragedy.

The poverty of his youth drove him to accept — for the right price — roles that would tarnish his image. He had an obsession to acquire material things and to keep adding to his material wealth.

Eventually that destroyed him. The more he acquired, the more fearful he became that one day he would lose all.

Freckled Star Of 'The Champ' Snapped Up By Disney For New Film

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — It was inevitable that Ricky Schroder, the freckled nine-year-old star of "The Champ," would be snapped up by Disney, which is starring the moppet in "The Last Flight of Noah's Ark."

The tow-headed youngster resembles a Disney cartoon character come to life, but in truth he is a Staten Island kid with a Brooklyn accent, thanks to his parents, Diane and Richard Schroder who were reared in that hallowed borough of New York City.

Ricky is an uninhibited tot, unspoiled as yet by his newfound celebrity. His mother and father are determined to keep him that way.

During lunch on the studio commissary patio Ricky demolished a chocolate ice cream cone, anxious to be finished. He was chafing to return to the set where a collection of sheep, goats and chickens are among his costars. Also Elliott Gould and Genevieve Bujold.

"My favorite animal in this picture is Brutus, a great big bull," Ricky said. "I get to ride him. There's a cow named Melinda. She's Brutus' girlfriend."

Ricky, saints be praised, does not lisp.

"I like Brutus better than Shesalady, the horse in 'The Champ.' Race horses kick a lot, boy. She threw me three times. Once she bucked me straight up in the air."

Ricky is a movie-TV fan. He shook hands with the Fonz on the "Happy Days" set.

He met his favorite actor, John Wayne, backstage at the Oscars last month.

"I've seen Mr. Wayne's pictures on TV," Ricky said. "When we were introduced, I Said, 'How do you do, Mr. Wayne.' And he said, 'Call me John.'"

Ricky would like to meet Jaclyn Smith and Kate Jackson of "Charlie's Angels" but hasn't got around to it yet.

"I play an orphan in this movie," he said. "I'm not really an orphan, you know. I don't try to act like anybody but Ricky Schroder.

"I haven't seen the original 'Champ.' But I saw some scenes after I finished the picture. It was amazing how much Jackie Cooper and I did the same things. I even look like him when he was a kid."

Mrs. Schroder said, "We never intended for Ricky to work in movies. We were sort of tricked into having him read for 'The Champ.' They asked us to bring him in and I said no. We didn't want to sacrifice the family circle.

"Ricky was called to New York for a toothpaste commercial. Franco Zefirelli's assistant was there and gave Ricky a script of 'The Champ,' unbeknownst to me. The man said, 'Ricky is the child we've been looking for.'

"They called Zefirelli in Rome. The director flew to New York the next day. Ricky was a little fatter than he is now and Zefirelli asked him, 'What have we here, a little Chubby Checker?'

"Ricky grinned at him and said, 'You're not so thin yourself.' It was just the quality Zefirelli wanted. We flew Ricky to Hollywood for a screen test where we were told they had looked at 5,000 kids for the part.

"After that we felt obligated. We agreed to do 'The Champ' even if Ricky never did another picture. At least he would be able to tell his children that at the age of nine he starred in an MGM movie."

Mr. Schroder, a New York telephone company manager, said, "We don't want Ricky to sign any studio contracts. You lose control of your child that way. He's our son first, an actor second. He works only if he wants to work.

"Some peope think he is going to grow up to be a monster. We're as concerned as any parents can be about their children. So far he hasn't shown any adverse effects. Acting has been a learning experience for him."

Mrs. Schroder added, "I've been looking for changes in Ricky since 'The Champ,' but I haven't seen any yet. Everything's been positive so far.

"We're aware of the pitfalls of movie children, from Judy Garland to Shirley Temple. We'd like him to turn out like Shirley."

"He had nine months off between 'The Champ' and this picture," Mrs. Schroder said. "We want him to have time to be a normal child. It's Ricky's option whether he goes ahead with a third movie.

Alternative Energy Store Offers Variety Of Goods For Sale

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — If you happen to be shopping for a windmill, one of Canada's most unusual stores will sell you one for $3,685.

Wind power is just one of the items for sale at Western Canada's first alternative energy store.

It opened in September, but already there's a constant stream of customers into the elegantly decorated store stocked with everything from wood stoves and solar panels to organic toilets and water turbines.

The Solace Energy Center's store is operated by a company of the same name, established 18 months ago by three friends who decided to pool their talents and interest in alternative energy.

The three, in their 20s or early 30s, met at the University of British Columbia.

The company president is architect Bob Isaac-Renton, with Ed Martin and Vic Enns as partners. They are interested in development of the Third World as well as in alternative energy.

"We hope that eventually we can use the business as a jumping-off point to take our expertise to the Third World," said Martin in a recent interview.

"We are also concerned about the depletion of non-renewable resources so we want to offer a practical form of alternative energy to the average person in Canada.

"We want to make people aware how they are polluting the environment by using non-renewable resources."

Martin said the trio had spent a year researching alternative energy products before deciding what items to stock in their store.

"We compare laboratory tests for all the products we consider selling so that everything has been lab tested," he said. "We want to be in business for a long time."

Isaac-Renton and engineer Enns will also design alternative energy systems and installations for customers.

They are convinced that, although the initial outlay for alternative energy may be higher than for non-renewable energy such as oil and gas, the alternative systems will pay for themselves over a period of years.

Wandering through the store is like a visit to an international alternative energy bazaar.

The windmill is from Australia; the wood-burning stoves from Norway, Taiwan, Ireland, France and the United States; the organic toilets, which turn human wastes into compost, from Sweden; and the water turbine Pelton wheel is made here.

In the field of solar energy, the store has everything from solar panels to the black paint used on solar collectors.

"We have tried to get a range of prices and equipment," said Isaac-Penton. "We're working on a package unit for domestic hot water that can be fitted onto any existing house."

The store has dozens of books about alternative energy and even sells solar-kit toys for children.

The bright color of ladybugs, butterflies and some other insects is believed to remind birds that they are unpleasant eating.

Burns, Carney Sign For Roles

NEW YORK (Special) — George Burns and Art Carney have been signed for starring roles in Warner Bros.' serio-comedy "Stepping Out."

The film thus teams two Academy Awards winners — Burns, who won the best supporting actor award for "The Sunshine Boys," and Carney, who was honored as best actor for his role in "Harry and Tonto."

Scheduled to go before the cameras May 7 on location in Astoria, Queens, in New York City, with additional filming scheduled for Las Vegas, "Stepping out" will be directed by Martin Brest from his own screenplay, based on a short story by Edward Cannon Sr. Tony Bill and Fred T. Gallo will co-produce, with Leonard Gaines serving as executive producer.

Brest, 27, made his feature film debut as producer-director-writer of the highly-acclaimed "Hot Tomorrows." The film, made for $30,000, was his second-year project at the American Film Institute's Center for Advance Film Studies in Beverly Hills, California. A 1977 graduate of the Center, Brest has ben hailed by critics across the country, among them Gary Arnold, of the Washington Post, who has described him as "the next young American filmmaker with a potentially great future."

Bill previously brought to the screen such boxoffice successes as the Academy Award-winning "The Sting" and the critically-acclaimed "Taxi Driver." He also is executive producer of the forthcoming "Boulevard Nights."

Gallo, who will be making his motion picture debut as a producer, served as associate producer of "Annie Hall," "American Hot Wax," "The Bad News Bears In Breaking Training" and the soon-to-be-released. "Hide In Plain Sight."

Train Buff 'Crews' Own Railroad

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Frank Pollock is the president of a railroad. He's also the chief engineer, the main mechanic, the oiler and the man who occasionally sweeps out the place.

He was 57 when he up and quit his job as a sewing-machine salesman and bought himself some trains and track. Real trains and track.

Pollock has five miles of used track, a diesel engine, a couple of coaches and a steam locomotive in his one-man Florida Central Railroad.

Pollock, now 65, bought the tracks, the diesel and two cars in Oklahoma in the early 1970s and operated a profitable freight run, serving 17 businesses along his short route.

Then he ran the now-defunct Orange Belt Line Railroad in Pasco County, ferrying tourists along the scenic passenger run.

Recently, he was polishing and tuning, getting ready for a trek from Tampa to Brooksville, Fla., to make his film debut for public television which is doing a story about a couple traveling to Florida at the turn of the century.

Like most kids, Pollock was fascinated with trains. But for him the romance never ended.

Four Make Disney Debuts In 'Noah's Ark' Film

BURBANK, Calif. (Special) — In their debuts for Walt Disney Productions, Elliott Gould, Genevieve Bujold, Ricky Schroder, Vincent Gardenia and Tammy Lauren will star in "The Last Flight of Noah's Ark."

Filming began April 30 at Disney Studio under director Charles Jarrott ("The Other Side of Midnight," "Anne of the Thousand Days"), with location photography continuing in Hawaii. Producers Ron Miller and Jan Williams plan a 10-week schedule.

Gould plays a high-living pilot hired by prim evangelist Bujold to fly a rickety B-29 to her South Pacific mission. Supplies, farm animals and two stowaways are also aboard when the plane crash lands on a deserted island. Aided by two Japanese soldiers still waging World War II, the group converts the craft into a seaworthy boat for escape.

Based on Ernest K. Gann's story, the script was written by Steve Carabatsos, Sandy Clark and George Arthur Bloom. Buena Vista will release the color by Technicolor film in 1980.

Timely Suggestions Offered On Preparing Boat For Summer Wear, Tear

By BART KINCH
UPI Boating Editor

Spring is here and the armchair sailors of the winter months now are busy with the annual ritual of preparation and maintenance.

For those fortunate enough to own a "glass" boat with a gel coat (outer surface) in good condition, the job should be quick and fairly painless. Don Miller, marine market manager for Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., has a few timely suggestions:

First, make a careful inspection of your boat. "This could save you time, money and headaches later on," Miller said. List everything that needs to be done and stick with you check-off list.

Most repairs on a fiberglass boat — from simple gel coat crazing to holes in the hull — are within the capabilities of do-it-yourself boatowners.

After the initial inspection, wash down the hull with a good household detergent. If no repairs are needed, treat the hull with a fiber glass wax available at marine supply stores.

"Long hours in the sun tend to dull the shine of a fiberglass hull," Miller says, so a waxing every spring before launching protects the gel coat and smooths the surface, prolonging its life.

If the hull is extremely dull, a coat of paint may be needed. Epoxy paints currently are among the most popular. Consulting with the boat builder and paint manufacturers is advisable before application.

Before applying antifouling paint to the bottom, Miller advises "again wash the bottom with a good, strong household detergent. Then sand the bottom enough to rough it up so the antifouling paint has a good surface to adhere to."

After years of service, hairline cracks — called "crazing" — can appear in the gel coat of fiberglass boats.

"If the crazing is below the waterline, the antifouling paint will take care of it," Miller says. "Cracks above the waterline need a little more work."

These cracks should be opened up with a powered abrasive tool. A V-cut extending slightly into the laminate is best. Then, using a spatula, apply a gel coat paste (available from your marine supply store).

Miller suggests covering the patch with cellophane for about 20 minutes to aid curing. After that, the paste will have hardened and the cellophane can be removed.

The next step is to take a sharp putty knife or razor blade to trim and level off the patch. The area can then be fine sanded and compounded to fill any voids and bring back the finish.

If the hull has been damaged and a full patch is needed, Miller says "you should use the same resin and fiberglass used to make the hull. Contact your boat dealer. He should have the specifications or be able to get them for you. He, or you local marine supply store, can supply the resin and glass."

Resins require a temperature of 70 degrees to cure properly and if springtime temperatures are not high enough, infrared bulbs can be used to raise the temperature in the repair area.

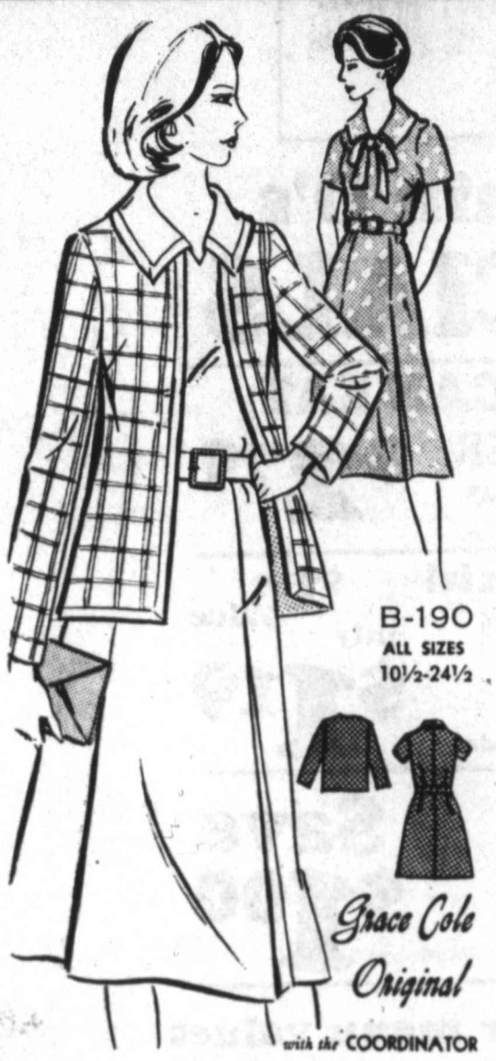

Work from inside the hull. Clear away jagged pieces of damaged fiberglass and bevel the perimeter of the hole or crack, Miller says. Then tape a piece of cardboard over the damage on the outside of the hull. This will shape the patch and give it a smooth surface.

Next, apply resin-saturated fiber glass in layers until the desired thickness is reached.

"The repair should be at least as thick as the original laminate and perhaps a bit thicker for added insurance," Miller believes.

After the resin has cured, remove the cardboard and apply gel coat to the outside of the patch.

Sheltering Street People: New Approach Offered

By MINDY YOCHELSON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter's closest neighbor on New Year's Eve 1977, a man bedded down on a steam vent cross from the White House, was the first guest of a group with a new approach to aid the capital's homeless street people.

In 1972, the Community for Creative Non-Violence opened a soup kitchen to serve the poor. Each Christmas Eve they kept it open all night for the homeless. After five years they felt once-a-year hospitality wasn't enough.

"It caused people to wonder why it was okay for people to freeze on other nights," said CCNV spokesman Mitch Snyder.

Members of the CCNV, Familiar to capital residents for their anti-war and anti-nuclear protests, drove around Washington the week between Christmas and New Year's 1977, talking to the people who live in abandoned buildings, garages, and laundromats or settle on heating grates to warm themselves in the rising steam.

"Finally, on New Year's Eve, we found a man by the Corcoran Gallery. He lived on a heating grate by the Old Executive Office Building. He happened to be the president's closest neighbor; and we brought him home," said the 35-year-old Snyder.

Home was the living room of the CCNV headquarters in the heart of the ghetto.

At that time Washington had two charity missions for homeless men with 164 beds. The Salvtion Army had 10 beds for women. They were constantly full, Snyder said.

Estimates on the number of homeless in Washington range up to 2,000. At least four-fifths of them are men.

Word of a warm place to sleep spread. "In less than a week, many more people came," Snyder said.

CCNV sent 1,100 letters to churches, sunagogues and mosques asking for shelter space. One church agreed to let the homeless use their basement. The next winter another church responded. CCNV discontinued the use of its living room and turned the first church into a women's shelter.

After the death of six men from exposure that winter and increased CCNV "political activity," Snyder said, the city's Department of Human Resources opened a men's shelter in January 1978.

But Snyder said homeless men and women often would prefer to take their chances in the cold than enter the "prison atmosphere" of a city-run shelter.

D.C. Mayor Marion Barry last Febriary appointed a 27-member advisory committee to serve as a bridge between the city and the homeless and agreed to turn over abandond buildings, mostly old schools, to be run as shelters by volunteers or, preferably, by a staff of "Guests." The city provides meals, supplies and utilities.

In addition to the origini two missions and the Salvation Army, there are now three shelters for men and three for women, some run by the city, others by private agencies or volunteers.

Until the residents can take over the management, Snyder and the men from CCNV spend each night at a shelter, along with other male volunteers.

Bureaucratic formalities of screening and registration, part of the cause of distrust at city shelters, do not exist at volunteer-run shelters.

"We don't view them as shelters, we view them as homes," Snyder said.

The men are served catered dinner. Then those who want to sleep are given pajamas and toilet articles.

"It's my job to be liked by everyboy so I can step in between two people if they're going to kill each other," said Snyder.

Sleep, like showers, is not mandatory. Some men sit up all night, playing cards, talking or watching television, while volunteers walk around making sure all is well.

Medical treatment is available at the shelter, and in the morning after breakfast, a bus will take some to the hospital, others to an employment center or various downtown locations.

"When you walk into a city-run sheltr, there's a desk, two women and a guard sitting there," Snyder said. "They ask your name and an i.d. ... They take their clothing and put it in a plastic bag. Everyone's wearing plastic gloves and little aprons so they won't get infected with the lice and bugs.

"Then they're herded together in a group. Everybody takes a shower, whether there's hot water or not. Then they're given little paper hospital gowns and sprayed with lice killer. Then they get 10 minutes to eat, one portion, no seconds. Then they're told to lay down and go to sleep. Eveything runs real smoothly," he said.

"When you comè to our place there's bedlam... The difference is that there's some freedom," Snyder said.

Albert P. Russo, director of the city's Department of Human Resources called Snyder's description "grossly distorted." He said there is a minimum of regimentation at the city shelters, and showers now are optional.

Acknowledged Killer Tells How He Found Jesus

By RICHARD H. GROWALD

PARIS, Ky. (UPI) — Louis Mastriana says he used to kill people and people tried to kill him.

The 57-year-old ex-convict undid two buttons on his sports shirt and displayed the chest scars showing how close he came to being killed.

"That was, of course, before I found Jesus," Mastriana says. "Call me 'Jesue Freak' or 'Bible Toter.' It's better than being called killer."

Mastriana almost delights in parading an awful past; it contrasts with his current profession of Jesus. He reached into a briefcase and pulled out a copy of a letter from a Justice Department official to Sen. Henry Jackson, the Washington Democrat who once was probing crime and Louis Mastriana.

The man of justice declared Mastriana a "homicidal maniac" and offered the hope he would never be released from federal custody. "I was a bad boy," Mastriana says.

He smiles at Don Lykins, the Paris, Ky., real estate man and prison missionary. Lykins, a Santa Claus in mufti, smiles back. They sit in Lykins' office, talking of a triumph of good over evil. Lykins the savior and Mastriana the saved.

A visitor asks Mastriana if he opted for Jesus as a way of getting out from behind bars. The smiling of Mastriana stopped.

"If I hadn't accepted Christ, for that remark I would break a baseball bat on your head," he says.

He has the muscles for it. And the past.

"I wasn't born Louis. It was Luigi. I was born in Sicily, 20 miles southeast of Palermo and came to the States with my grandfather, a great man. An uncle had come to the States and become a music conservatory teacher.

"Grandfather said uncle was a loser, because he was working for a living. Grandfather worked another way. With the, uh, syndicate. He was in olive oil and grapes and shylocking, loan sharking."

Mastriana says he was raised and schooled in New York, on East 113th Street, and sent to college to study labor and public relations. "I gave it up. What could I make in that — $50,000 a year tops? I went into business with grandfather.

"I collected on gambling and shylocking. Syndicate stuff. All the syndicate has is fear. It's enough."

He rubbed a finger on the canyon of a scar on his chest. "In 1940 I was set up to be killed. A girl friend said she'd meet me in a roadhouse near Schenectady. She'd been paid.

"In the roadhouse I was shot, with a .38. Here, and here, and here." He points to the canyon and beyond. Mastriana says he managed to crawl away, drive 14 miles to a doctor and, later, revenge himself.

Where, asks the visitor. Mastriana shakes his head: "There is no statute of limitation on murder."

He talks of other such burials and crimes and trials, including being imprisoned by John Sirica, the federal judge later to undo Watergate. But Mastriana said he never revenged himself on the girl friend who sold him out. It had nothing to do with Jesus.

"Oh, I saw her again. In New York. I did nothing. Grandfather used to say you lose your manhood when you hit a woman."

He looked toward Lykins. They nodded, as if closing a bad book.

"Thirty-one, give or take a few."

Mastriana spent almost 15 years in prison. Last year, in what he calls the federal "institution" at Lexington, he met Lykins who, with a band of reformed felons and other religious folk, goes into the cells and seeks converts.

Mastriana says, "I knew I was screwed up. Lost my wife and children and my freedom and nothing ahead. I had once been a Roman Catholic and in my cell I thought about God.

"In prison I met Don and he discussed my relationship with God. It was a one-way relationship then. Then, I don't know, something came over me. Me, called a homicidal maniac.

"It was something, the conversion. Like having a giant tooth extracted. I found myself praying. I had found myself. And Jesus Christ."

Ramblin' Rhodes

By Don Rhodes

LESTER FLATT DIED on a Friday afternoon. I think he would have likedthat.

It was on countless number of Friday afternoons that Flatt's big, white touring bus with "Martha White Flour" painted on the side pulled into festival sites throughout the nation for the Grand Ole Opry star to do what he loved best; making people happy with his music.

Flatt, who died recently in a Nashville hospital, loved his fans and he loved life. He fought back many times from serious illnesses, and fans who learned he had again entered the hospital, thought he would again recover.

LESTER FLATT

In July 1975, he underwent five hours of open-heart surgery. He managed to overcome that operation, and again hit the road with his "Nashville Grass" performing group.

Illness again struck him in 1976 when he was forced to undergo surgery for removal of his gall bladder, but again he fought back to good health.

At the beginning and at the end of 1978 he suffered very serious setbacks. The early part of the year he suffered through bouts of pneumonia and the flu, but he bounced back from that and was performing early that year.

THOSE APPEARANCES at festivals and shows throughout 1978 found Flatt too weak, however, he had to sit on stage on a tall stool. He only sang a few numbers, leaving most of the work to his band, and that special Flatt-top guitar ringing with beautiful music.

In late November, 1978, Flatt suffered a brain hemorrhage. Most people predicted he would never recover from his setback, but again the man who loved life and who loved his fans struggled against the odds.

HE WAS BACK on the Grand Ole Opry stage in March of this year. A weekend or two before that performance, I talked with him on the telephone. It was my last conversation with a performer I had known since June of 1971 and with a person I had come to respect.

We had enjoyed many good encounters over the years at various festivals and at the Grand Ole Opry house. He even honored me a few years ago by asking me to do the album notes for one of his releases.

In the telephone conversation, Flatt said he enjoyed an article I had done about him in a nationally-distributed bluegrass music magazine which had been published in February. He also talked about a visit he had in the hospital from his ex-music partner Scruggs.

The two had broken up their 20-year music partnership that took bluegrass music around the world in February 1969. They had only talked with each other once on the telephone in those 10 years of being apart with the conversation having to do with some bootleg tapes.

Scruggs, according to Flatt, said when Lester got out of the hospital, they would have to do another concert together. It never happened.

LAST OCTOBER, a month before his brain hemorrhage, I was privileged to spend four full hours in Flatt's suburban Nashville apartment doing another interview with him.

During that memorable session, he remarked, "To me, bluegrass music is popular because of the closeness of the fans to the people who play and sing the music. To my way of thinking, bluegrass music is where most of the different kinds of music today started. They can call it bluegrass or greengrass as long as people listen to it."

I asked Flatt that sunny October day how he would like to be remembered.

He grinned that special smile of his and replied, "As for me, I'd like to be remembered as someone who tried to play it straight right to the end with the sound I started with. I also want to be remembered for giving people a good clean show."

Center Hall Retained In Plan Designed To Reduce Costs

By HIAWATHA ESTES

To be realistic about it, shopping for a new home with limited funds is no cinch. Our eyes and dreams are nearly always bigger than our budgets. This home has been designed to help solve such a problem and offers an inaginative exterior plus an excellent floor plan.

When the size of a home is decreased, one of the first features to be eliminated is the center hall plan. This has not been done here. Opening to this hall are four closets. If more storage space is preferred, the water heater and furnace could be moved to the garage.

Both baths have pullman lavatories. The kitchen is quite long for a home of this size. The nook where most meals will be eaten is eight feet wide. Although three doors open to the kitchen, they have been located so there are no inefficient corner cabinets.

Complete working drawings for plan 41146 can be purchased for only $19.95 for the first set and $10 for each attitional set ordered at the same time. This plan will be available at these special prices until May 27, 1979. Please allow at least three weeks for delivery. A large reproduction rendering of the exterior is available for $4. Also available are six home plan books illustrating nearly 1,000 plans — a $13.00 value — for only $9.95 plus $1 for postage and handling. Send all orders to: Hiawatha Estes, P.O. Box 404-J, Northridge, Calif. 91328.

Outlook Not Bright For Students Looking For Summer Jobs

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

For millions of high school and college students looking for summer work, the advice of experts is to start early and look hard.

Some economists are guessing it may be twice as hard to find employment this summer as last because of a combination of economic factors.

Those include forecasts of a business slowdown reducing the need for additional workers. Inflation and a higher minimum wage may also pinch hiring plans.

Not everyone is so gloomy. Employment specialists say demand for workers with skills in clerical work, health services, drafting or accounting or other technical areas is likely to remain very strong. And college placement offices predict a bright job outlook for most graduates this year.

But amid a widely expected slowdown for business in general, many argue that for the young, inexperienced worker without special skills the job search may be difficult.

"They always have a harder time than anyone else for the very simple reason that they are young.

"Because they are young they haven't had as much time to develop skills and have a hard time getting jobs to get experience. It's the old Catch 22," comments Kenneth Goldstein, an economist at the Conference Board, a business research group.

Goldstein says his guess is that summer jobs won't be as plentiful this year as last, partly because of findings in a monthly survey the Conference Board makes of help-wanted advertisements.

The survey of ads in the classified sections of 51 major newspapers showed consistent increases in advance of last summer's strong hiring trend. But in the three months since December's peak, the seasonally adjusted index has been steadily declining.

Even gloomier is Jack Carlson, chief economist for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in Washington.

"My guess is that this summer it will be twice as hard to find a job as last," says Carlson. He bases that prediction on assumptions that business will fall off and inflation will further pinch hiring plans so that the number of extra jobs in the economy during the summer months will be less than half the amount last year's strong economy was able to provide.

Still Carlson and others hedge on the connection between temporary jobs and a business recession. One result may be that some businesses will seek out temporary employees rather than hire permanent ones, because of uncertainty about future orders and whether production will have to be cut.

Some businesses, of course, need summer workers and will get them regardless. For example, Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla. says its hiring plans will be about the same at last year.

But Arby's Inc., a fast-food restaurant chain based in Atlanta, has scaled back summer hiring plans to 5,000 workers, or about 1,000 less than it earlier planned.

"The increase in the minimum wage has meant that the industry generally is tighting its belt on labor," says spokeswomen Sylvia Bryant. But inflation, such as the rising costs of beef, is also putting a squeeze on the fast-food industry to cut expenses. The minimum wage last January rose to $2.90 an hour from $2.65.

Still generalizations are difficult. Employment trends vary from one region to another and from one industry to another.

William Dennis, of the Independent Federation of Small Businesses, says its surveys of business sentiment show a split between questions on the broad economy and specific plans for hiring and production.

"Their general feelings about the economy have been miserable," says Dennis, but when it comes to specific questions on their own hiring or investment plans businessmen tend to be more optimistic.

Manpower Inc., a temporary-help agency based in Milwaukee, says its quarterly survey, done in March, of the hiring plans of 6,000 businesses indicates no decline in hiring intentions.

"I sense right now that there is not a slimming down of hiring plans. It should be at least as good as last year, which was a good year," says Mitchell Fromstein, president of Manpower Inc.

Precise figures on how many young people look for summer work, or get jobs are difficult to find. The Labor Department says that last year 3.2 million youths between the ages of 16 and 21 found work in the months of April to July and another 709,000 looked unsuccessfully. But those figures may not show the whole picture because many students with part-time jobs before the summer aren't included in the summer workforce, even if they are trying for full-time summer jobs.

The Labor Department also sponsors special summer youth job programs, but with tight budget constraints, it may have difficulty matching the 2.2 million youth jobs provided through a variety of programs last summer. Those included about 200,000 year-round youth jobs. The rest were in summer in parks, libraries and other government operations.

The National Alliance of Business, a private group that seeks summer job pledges from companies, has increased its goal this year to about 270,000 jobs from 240,000 last summer, according to spokesman Charles Sonneborn.

"We're cautiously optimistic that things are going to go well," he says based on early indications of pledges.

In its survey, released last December, the College Placement Council forecast a 17 percent increase in hirings for college graduates this year and indications now are that it may have been conservative, says Jesse M. Smith, executive director.

While its survey of 700 employers deals strictly with permanent job offers, employment trends show that students with skills in high demand areas often have an easier time getting summer try-out jobs as well. The College Placement Council forecast large increases in hirings of students with degrees in engineering, science, math or other technical skills. Business, particularly accounting, is also likely to show increased job offers. But the survey indicated a sharp cutback in federal and state hiring could result in a decline in job offers for graduates with degrees in liberal arts or other non-technical fields.

SHORT BREAK

THE FCC SAID I WAS INTERFERING WITH TELEVISION RECEPTION, SO I HAD TO INSTALL A SUPPRESSOR!

Drive Seeks AM-Only Channels

By MIKE WENDLAND

The effort to get more channels for the CB band has spread to AM operators, who are now seeking their own expansion of the band below the current 40 channels.

Under a drive being spearheaded by the Citizen's Radio Lobby Assooiation (CRLA), petitions are now being circulated among various CB organizations urging the creation of a total of 80 AM-only channels.

The group hopes to send 20,000 signatures to the FCC this month.

The plan would be dependent on the creation of sideband-only frequencies, which now stands an excellent chance of FCC passage. Several FCC officials have voiced tentative support for such a pro-sideband move over the past several months.

Because AM and sideband transmissions interfere with each other when used on the same frequency, several nationwide CB groups have petitioned the FCC for a new 40-channel sideband allocation above the current 27.405 MHz band limit.

Such a move would thus separate the two competing transmission modes, thus making the CB band less congested.

If that happens, the CRLA wants the current band —now open for both AM and sideband use—to be given over to AM operators only. In addition, the CRLA wants a new 40-channel band tacked onto the bottom of the existing band.

If the various AM and sideband petitions were agreed to by the FCC, the CB band would, in effect, be tripled to 120 chanels.

This is the hour that CBers have been calling for, says a news release circulated by the Utah Sideband Organization Committee, which backs the CRLA plan. All the gripes about congestion, about noise, about strife between groups or individuals have never had any good solutions. Now a solid possibility for real help is available. A united effort can put over these petitions.

The FCC's deadline for comment on the proposals to create sideband-only channels expired last week (May 15). But comments from interested radio hobbyists received by the commission after the deadline will not be ignored.

Other areas in which the various CB associations want FCC action include rule changes that would allow:

—Conversion of existing 40-channel equipment to any new frequencies allocated to CBers by the FCC. When the FCC expanded the old 23-channel band to 40 channels in 1978, it specifically prohibited conversions.

—A slider capability of plus or minus 10 Kc. This would allow transmit frequencies to cover the area between channels.

—CB conversations over the present 150-mile limit.

Q. Will a fiberglass canoe mounted on the roof our car next to the CB antenna interfere with our CB's performance? —D. B., Walton, N. Y.

A. Not enough to seriously affect your transmit receive range. If the canoe were aluminum, I'd suggest moving the antenna.

CB Static: Readers Air Gripes

Dear Mike: Nearly every CBer I know of is a bootlegger of some sort. They nearly always identify themselves with phony names rather than FCC call-signs. Some run a kilowatt of power and illegally work skip all day. In my judgment, CB is the worst thing that ever happened to radio communicaton.—B. F., Apache Junction, Ariz.

• • •

Dear Mr. Wendland: I'm against any more CB channels. The new 17 they gave in 1979 didn't last long. They now sound as bad as the old 23 did. If they give us more, the same thing will happen again. Let's properly use what we have before spoiling any more airwaves. —T. T., Hokah, Minn.

• • •

Dear CB Static: I read your column on making TV manufacturers install better filters so their sets won't be so prone to CB interference. I think the shoe belongs on the other foot. I think the FCC should insist that CB manufacturers refine their gear. CBs interfere with TVs, not the other way around.—M. B., Brockport, N. Y.

The Voice of Business

By RICHARD LESHER
President of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce

By RICHARD LESHER
President, U.S. Chamber of Commerce

WASHINGTON — It's spring. America is in full blossom and the countryside grows more beautiful by the day. But this year, many Americans have been distracted from that beauty by an increasingly ugly reality — the enery crisis, which has given way to longer lines, higher prices and hotter tempers at the gas pumps.

The public is looking for explanations and leadership. But it's gotten little more than hot air — irresponsible rhetoric suggesting our energy crisis might disappear if enough Americans simply go after the petroleum industry with a hatchet, and if enough of them form vigilante groups to spy on each other and force down "unreasonable prices." I do not have all the answers, but let me share with you a few facts.

First, the oil companies are not creating a shortage to increase prices. A real shortage already exists. The seeds of that shortage were planted in late 1971 when the federal government — supposedly to "protect" consumers — decided to artificially control domestic oil prices. The effect was precisely the opposite because through its decision the United States government flashed the following message to the rest of the world: We don't care how much it costs to drill deep wells and explore for oil. (An offshore installation can cost hundreds of millions of dollars.) The price our domestic producers receive will remain fixed, and we're going to rely on the goodwill of foreign oil producers to ensure the balance of our energy needs at reasonable prices.

Result? As costs rose, domestic exploration predictably began drying up.

The United States became progressively more dependent upon the OPEC cartel, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. And OPEC has vividly demonstrated that it has the gift of grab. OPEC now jacks up prices (an increase of approximately 500 percent per barrel in six years), and manipulates supplies almost at will. The United States is dangerously vulnerable.

Our immediate problems pinpoint that vulnerability. The revolution in Iran led to a temporary but complete interruption in that country's oil exports. Those exports have now been resumed, but not at their prior levels. That means the United States is now receiving about 700,000 barrels a day less than it normally would, which represents a shortfall of about 3.5 percent of normal supplies. Not much you might says, and you'd be right. But look what else is happening to aggravate the problem.

While we are seeing a reduction in the supply of crude oil, we are also witnessing a tremendous increase in the demand for gasoline — demand for unleaded gasoline is up more than 20 percent over last year. The government has mandated the increased use of unleaded fuel, even though it gobbles up more oil per barrel in the refining process than does leaded fuel.

And to make matters worse, expensive government price and environmental regulations have sharply reduced our refining capacity. Only one major refinery has been built anywhere in the United States for six years, and none on the East coast for 20 years. What a way to run a country that runs on gasoline!

The federal government also insists refineries process a greater share of their crude oil into home heating oil than into gasoline stocks — just the opposite of what usually happens at this time of year. Hopefully this additional sacrifice of gasoline supplies will at least prevent schools, offices and homes from being without heat.

Finally, the oil companies have had to voluntarily reduce the amount of gas they deliver to their stations under contract to try to lessen the impact of the gasoline shortage. Stations are being allocated gas on the basis of the quantity of gas they sold during 1977-78, not on the basis of their overhead. That means self-service stations might receive more gas than full-services stations, even though the latter need to sell more gas to cover their high overhead and stay in business.

These are just some of the reasons why lines at service stations are lengthening and prices are rising. Still, even at 80 cents a gallon, gas costs less than half here than it does in much of Europe. In fact, since 1939, the price of gas has risen less than most of the food we eat, and a wage earner works fewer minutes to purchase a gallon today than his counterpart did in 1939.

Who really makes the money on the gas you buy? From the time the oil leaves the sand in the Mideast to the moment it fills up your tank as gasoline, all governments, both foreign and domestic, can take up to 65 cents of every dollar you pay. And after substracting costs for refining, storage, transportation, marketing and local dealers, the oil companies are left with about two cents net profit. The real question Americans should be asking is: Who's ripping off whom?

Infrared Photos Locate Trouble

PARSIPPANY, N.J. (UPI) — Infrared photography is being used to locate trouble spots that could lead to electric failures.

The heat-sensitive photographic equipment makes possible immediate repairs before power failures occur, explains Robert H. Sims of General Public Utilities.

The thermovision apparatus, as it is called, resembles a television camera or TV monitor. It can be used on mobile ground units or on helicopters.

GPU is using the equipment for inspection of transmission lines and substations as an added means of assuring its customers reliable electric service.

What does it take to feel secure?

1. A place to hang your hat.

Actually it's much more than a place to hang-up. Or hang-out. It's where the heart is, and whether a castle or a cottage, there's just no place like home.

2. A chicken in every pot.

In most cases, one chicken and one pot are sufficient. Unless, of course, you have a very large family. Then, a turkey in the pot is even better. Best of all — a brother in the grocery business.

3. First Texas Savings.

Security is more than peace of mind. It's a plan of action — designed to meet your needs today, and grow with your goals for tomorrow. And a savings plan at First Texas Savings can really help.

Our Regular Saving Accounts earn at the rate of 5.25% and keep your money readily available. Your account begins earning interest from the day of deposit. And, at First Texas, your interest also earns interest every day, to increase your annual yield.

For longer term investments at higher interest rates, Certificates of Deposit are ideal. Here too, First Texas gives you the benefit of earnings from day of deposit and daily compounding of accumulated interest. And you can choose from a variety of different terms and rates.

Certificates of Deposit*

Annual Rate	Minimum Term	Minimum Deposit	Annual Yield
5.75%	3-Months	$ 500	5.92%
6.50%	1-Year	$1,000	6.72%
6.75%	2½-Years	$1,000	6.98%
7.50%	4-Years	$1,000	7.79%
7.75%	6-Years	$1,000	8.06%
8.0%	8-Years	$1,000	8.33%

Certificates above are automatically renewable unless the Association gives written notice of cancellation at least 15 days prior to the maturity date. Earnings are compounded daily and paid quarterly.

Of course, your savings can be insured safe, up to $40,000 for single accounts, to $200,000 for couples, and to $560,00 for a family of four by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. And First Texas Savings makes it easy and convenient to save too. With services like postage-paid Save By Mail, direct deposit of Government Checks, Checkmatic money transfer to simplify loan payments, and Readi-Check, to put idle checking account funds to work, earning for you.

Why not get all the details from a First Texas Savings Counselor? It's the smart way to get your savings growing. And get the confidence that comes with real financial security.

OUR PLEDGE

We pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation, under God, indivisible, with Liberty and Justice for all.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

A Time To 'Keep Our Cool'

PART OF THE problem facing the American people this summer, and the months and years ahead, is to "keep their cool" in the midst of so much doom and gloom.

While we are a nation for the most part made up of optimists, those purveyors of signs bearing the omen, "The End Is Near" have been doing a land-office business in recent weeks.

Gasoline shortages, inflation, international challenges, you name it, we have it, in spades.

And instead of things getting better, the name of the game is to forecast something worse.

PERHAPS THE politicians, who like headlines and to see themselves on television, can be blamed for part of the syndrome.

But, the media and the average citizen have contributed to the doom and gloom talk also.

It doesn't have to be that way, and frankly is not justified.

While we have done our share of "viewing with alarm" on certain segments of the current administration's domestic and foreign policy, we haven't yet suggested that we all should throw in the towel and give up.

On the contrary, we have always held out the promise that things can be better. Otherwise, why waste words and research.

MUCH OF WHAT ails the nation has been caused by too many cooks, too many solutions, too many wild claims and charges.

In far too many instances, people who are not qualified to speak on controversial subjects—from nuclear power plants to conditions in Southern Africa—are given unbelievable space in the newspapers and on the air to spout what amounts to biased opinions, often not based on the facts.

We have been appalled by the fact that we seem to be drifting back toward making decisions and settling issues by "taking to the streets."

If there is anything we should have learned as a result of the Vietnam War protests, and the more recent misguided Iranian marches in this country, it is that those who engage in such things aren't always right.

PERHAPS IT IS time to take stock of where we really are....

The nation isn't going to run out of fuel like tomorrow, or at any other foreseeable point in the future. But, it is going to have to change the extravagant way it has been using one of its most valuable commodities.

Considering that little more than 40 years ago, we did "get by" and win a World War on a different life-style, there is no reason to think a cutback in our affluent way of life is impossible.

Talk of a recession, or perhaps even a depression, is just that, talk.

Actually, a slowdown of sorts is needed in order to help douse some of the fires of inflation. But, it would not be the first time for a business downturn, and there is no need to panic over it.

ON A MORE personal front, perhaps it is time, as Memorial Day and July 4 come up on the calendar, to remind ourselves that this nation has faced many challenges in its history.

And survived all of them, usually in good shape.

Today, we have the best health care, transportation system, housing, food and leisure facilities of any peoples on earth.

If we have to cut back on some or all of them in order to continue to enjoy them, and to pass them on for our children, then it will not be any different from what it has always been in America.

AN EDITORIAL:

Bilingual Ballots?

SEN. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., is trying to get Congress to repeal provisions of the federal Voting Rights Act that require bilingual ballots to be made available in counties in 30 states.

It's not just the cost of compliance that bothers the Japanese-American semanticist, although many election officials across the country have complained that such costs greatly outweigh any benefits involved.

Hayakawa says the requirement for bilingual ballots directly conflicts with U.S. naturalization laws—which require applicants for American citizenship to demonstrate knowledge of written and spoken English.

Says the senator:

"I firmly believe that all U.S. citizens, regardless of their heritage, need to learn to use English well enough to vote in this English-speaking country."

We could vote for that.

ART BUCHWALD:

Californians Are Okay, All Things Considered

Jerry Brown came to town
Riding on a pony.
Stuck a feather in his cap
And said rationing was baloney.

IT'S ALWAYS nice to have Gov. Jerry Brown come to Washington. Despite what he thinks of those of us who run the country, we have no ill feelings toward Californians, and we are not punishing them because Brown wants to be President.

Some of our best friends are Californians, and we were as heartbroken to see them on TV waiting in line for gasoline as they were when they saw us last winter trying to dig out of our blizzard.

To show that we wanted friendly relations with California, Washington went out of its way to make Jerry Brown feel welcome. We decorated all our lamp posts with the U.S. and California flags.

ELIZABETH TAYLOR, who now lives in Virginia, was elected "Miss Gas Crunch of 1979," and the U.S. Marine Corps band rehearsed "California Here I Come" for two weeks.

Blair House, where heads of state stay during their visits, was put at Mr. Brown's disposal, and all the furniture was taken out to make him feel at home.

Well, it was a glorious day. Gov. Brown landed on the White House Lawn on his own private rug, where he was greeted with a warm hug by President Carter and James Schlesinger.

President Carter read a statement vowing eternal friendship with the people of California, with whom the United States has had such warm relations over the years.

He said that although California has a different culture and tends to panic easily, Washington still considers the golden state a vital part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and he hoped that he could persuade Gov. Brown to let the United States set up monitoring stations in Burbank to verify the SALT II treaty agreements.

Gov. Brown, without notes, was less diplomatic. He said that for years Washington had been ignoring the people of California and had taken them for granted.

He felt that his state deserved all the gasoline it needed, and if it didn't get it, then he might rethink the alliance and become part of Mexico.

JODY POWELL, the President's press secretary, refused to say how the conversations went but rumor has it that during one exchange between Brown and Schlesinger, the governor broke the Energy Czar's pipe.

After the meeting, the President agreed to give California more oil as long as Johnny Carson remained with the Tonight Show.

Gov. Brown, in a separate press conference, said he was pleased as far as the talks had gone, but said there were still major differences to be resolved, such as how much lead the United States was willing to take out of California's next allocation.

PRESIDENT CARTER offered to give Brown a State dinner, but the governor refused, explaining he had to get back to Sacramento, because in his absence Republican Lt. Gov. Mike Curb was overthrowing his government.

It was a day all of us in Washington will remember for the rest of our lives. No one could recall a reception for a head of State like it since former Mayor Abe Beame came to town to bail out New York City.

Denver City Woman Hits U.S. 'Payment' To Israel

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Due to our government's commitment to furnish Israel oil for the next 12 years, the American people are ripped off in both their pockets and gasoline tanks each time Israel bombs the displaced Palestinian camps in Lebanon.

Those gas-guzzling bombers don't fly on thin air nor did they just happen to exist, but, in all probability, cost American taxpayers a vast sum.

To retaliate for our part in Israel's incinerating the Palestinians, the Arab oil-producing nations withhold production and raise the price of oil. It is due to our aid in Israel's bombing of the Palestinian camps, that has brought upon us the wrath of the Iranian government for Iranians are in sympathy with the Palestinians.

As for the energy crisis, which Washington has aided and abetted at great cost to the taxpayers, I am for rolling back to 1973 level the salaries of every congressman and senator who is for holding so-called old oil to 1973 price levels.

In fact, the government should be sued for denying to stockholders and royalty owners in pre-1973 oil wells their rightful income. It is about time we assert our rights, too.

Each time the President or any policy-making official blames business or the citizens for inflation, I wonder how stupid that person thinks we common peons are. All that is necessary to turn back inflation and restore the economy to a sound level is for the government to liquidate at least 75 percent of the tax-guzzling agencies that create nothing but hindrance for those who are trying to produce goods for the citizens.

Too much money and too little to buy is the cause of inflation. The salaries of those thousands of useless government workers contribute to that "too much money."

At least 75 percent of all government research grants could be abolished and the nation would go forward, not backward, without that tax burden on the citizens' backs. Government spending large sums of money to determine what children like to eat is just one of the "noble" issues involved.

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

It's ironic, during a war Catholics kill Catholics, Protestants kill Protestants and Jews kill Jews because their political and economic lives differ, while they all pray to the same God.

It's the twisted brains of government leaders actually saying I'll blow your cities to pieces; you blow my cities to pieces and after we're exhausted, the country with a gun that can still kill will be declared the "victor."

The "victor" usually finds a ruined country and a people so ragged, so sick and hungry, it costs almost the price of another war to rehabilitate the conquered.

Drawing on our memories of past wars, the American people must urge their senators to ratify the SALT II treaty without bobtail amendments attached to it. I know the United States runs the risks of the Reds cheating, but it's an attempt to halt runaway nuclear weapons buildup and to prevent a push-button atomic war.

I have a grandson. He's a robust, happy American youngster. I don't want him forced into fighting wars conventional or otherwise. I don't want him double-crossed by glowing wartime promises that are soon forgotten after the armistice is signed.

Carter's Refusal To Lift Sanctions On Rhodesia Hit

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

President Carter seems hell-bent on destroying the nation of Rhodesia. His continued refusal to lift trade sanctions and his unswerving support of the Marxist guerrilla leaders should convince even the most skeptical.

One of the primary goals of the Communists is the conquest of Africa. The actions of Jimmy Carter and Co. are helping them reach their goal.

He Says Maybe City Parks Have Become A Liability

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

Parks in Lubbock are obviously a liability instead of an asset. First Terrace, now MacKenzie; MacKenzie where all those weird little animals are—some two-legged and some four-legged.

Why not close the parks to the public and let each family, each individual seek their own area of play!

The city could save some money by doing this, money which might be spent on more worthwhile projects, such as, to cite on example, fixing the year-around potholes in the streets and/or otherwise keeping the streets in top-notch condition in the city.

I know that when I was living in town as a boy I played in our back yard, furthermore, considered myself lucky to have a yard to play in!

I'm not knocking change. Just stating facts!

Former Teachers Take Issue With Sex Education Critics

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

We cannot agree more with Mr. Jim Beck who in his letter published last Sunday, May 20, 1979, adamantly states sex education is the responsibility of parents.

That over one million unmarried teenage girls become pregnant each year producing more than 600,000 babies, most of whom with their mothers promptly go on our welfare rolls tells that at least two million pairs of parents (about four million persons) are not assuming this responsibility. We will go so far as to say that probably many of these parents do not know how to control the size of their families, communicate with their offspring and are unable to provide activities to redirect their sexually precocious young.

We shall appreciate Mr. Beck's sharing his ideas and plans to mobilize parents to meet their responsibilities for the successful sex education of their children. Perhaps, on sober reflection Mr. Beck will decide he can use the services of Planned Parenthood Federation, the National Alliance for Optional Parenthood, Zero Population Growth, Population Control and the Sex Information and Education Council of the United States —all financed by voluntary contributions.

Better still he might care to get together some of those interested and have those ministers and others who signed the May 13th letter arrange a special course in sex education for them.

Support For Run-For-Life By A-J Draws Applause

Editor, Avalanche-Journal:

It did my heart good to see the effort put out this past Saturday by scores of people who came out to participate in the Run for Life event at Maxey Park.

So many of these people were not experienced runners, and that is why it meant so much to see their commitment not only to this event but to the improvement of their own health and the setting of an example to inspire others.

As chairman of the local Run for Life event, but even more so as a person interested in helping other people to get interested in this wonderful activity, I thank you people at the newspaper for the splendid coverage and support which you have given this event.

I'm sure you will hear directly from the people at the American Heart Assn., but I simply could not fail to tell you how much all of us who worked in this program appreciated your cooperation.

Few things I have done give me greater satisfation than feeling that perhaps I may have helped somebody to take up this activity who might otherwise never have done so. It buoys my spirits every time I see a person out on the side of the road running or jogging along. I think your active participation through sponsorship of The Great Race and through the type coverage you have given these events recently merits many thanks.

VIRGINIA PAYETTE:

'Indecent' Exposure

OKAY, CLASS, line up for a lesson in the new "survival vocabulary." It won't make a rem's worth of difference in the long run, but it's always nice to know what did us in.

Take "rem," for instance. Technically, it is the biological effect produced by one roentgen of X-ray, a measure of how much radiation is absorbed by a human cell.

You can't tolerate too many rems. Scientists usually measure what is laughingly called "low-level radiation" in millirems, or one-thousandth of a rem. A dental X-ray of your whole mouth, for example, would rack up 910 on your absorption chart.

You collect millirems from all sorts of interesting places.

THOSE FOLKS who lived within a half mile of Three Mile Island picked up an extra 83 during the recent nuclear unpleasantness. A barium enema gives you 8,000. And radiation treatment for bone cancer packs a wallop of six million.

More and more we are beginning to catch on that, where low-level radiation is concerned, there's no hiding place down here.

If you aren't exposed on the job (and yearly occupational-exposure limit is now 5,000 millirems), you absorb it merely by walking past a rock formation or into a building made of granite.

A reading taken in a Senate subcommittee hearing room showed higher levels of radiation from the building than anything encountered downwind of Three Mile Island at the height of the excitement. But nobody suggested closing down Congress.

THERE'S NO hiding place in the clouds, either. That's where cosmic rays take over and they're full of radioactive baddies. On a flight from Los Angeles to Paris, you can pick up 4.8 millirems. Longer trips, like to the moon, will add 480.

Radiation experts are clinging to the belief that such low doses don't pose any significant threat of cancer or genetic malformation. Dr. Edward Radford, chairman of the National Academy of Science, offers up this comforting thought: "The risks are very small. There is a risk, but it's not the end of the world."

That should perk up those 2,000 people in Florida who have just discovered their homes are perched on top of reclaimed phosphate mines where radiation is close to the surface.

THE HEALTH hazard isn't immediate, environmentalists explain, but when radium starts to decay it gives off radon gas, and that's one of the most serious low-level radiation dangers in the country.

Corrective measures are available, but they can run up to $5,500 per house. The biggest controversy at the moment is over who will foot the bills.

Officials are hoping the federal government will be as generous as it was to homeowners in Colorado, whose houses were built with material from a government uranium mill which was exposing them to unacceptable levels of radon gas.

Then there's the problem of "radioactive sludge," the nuclear waste that's been piling up for the past 20 years. It's full of all kinds of deadly poisons that could remain dangerous for 25,000 years.

BY THE year 2000, scientists say, our atomic garbage pile could reach 100,000 tons. So far, nobody's come up with a leak-proof way of storing it, but President Carter wants to spend $10 million a year to work on it.

Not all our technological trash is underground. You haven't forgotten Skylab, have you? That's the rogue satellite that's out of control in outer space and is expected to crash, all 85 tons of it, somewhere among us in the next six weeks.

Where? Good question. If we're lucky, and some aerospace folks say we have a 75-percent chance, it will plunge harmlessly into an ocean. But if it lands on earth, it will leave what the Smithsonian Institute calls a "footprint of debris" 4,000 miles long and a mile wide.

NASA says the odds on its landing on somebody's head are 150-to-1, which is "small enough to live with."

THE BIGGEST—and scariest—addition to any doomsday vocabulary is "killer beam." Translation: a Buck Rogers-type weapon that harnesses man-made lightning bolts to shoot down enemy missiles.

There are those in high places who maintain that the country that develops it first will rule the world, and they're trying to convince the Pentagon that the Russians are already working on it. The Defense department has decided maybe it better look into it.

Stay tuned. If you keep your rem levels low enough, and if Skylab doesn't crash-land on your cranium, you may live long enough to get it from a "killer beam."

13 From Lubbock To Spend Week At Colorado Camp

Thirteen youth from Lubbock will participate in a week of camp at Frontier Ranch in Colorado this summer, according to Young Life area director Steve Cairns.

Young Life is a non-sectarian group which runs informal clubs and a camping program for high school-age people.

Cairns said, "Our purpose is to be friends with kids and give them an intelligent look at the Christian faith, in terms they can relate to comfortably. We have had about 35 kids involved in clubs during the school year.

Young Life in Lubbock is sponsored by an adult committee with Jay Eagan serving as chairman.

This year is the first for Young Life in Lubbock, according to Cairns.

Young Life was founded in 1941 by Jim Rayburn, a Presbyterian minister in Dallas, for the purpose of reaching out to high school age people who had dropped out of the church and who were not personally commited to or acquainted with the person and work of Jesus Christ.

Rayburn established informal, non-membership clubs for teenagers in order to provide an atmosphere in which to introduce the Gospel of Jesus Christ and through which he could establish personal, unconditional friendships with young people as essential in the proclamation of the Gospel.

Young Life encourages young people who are personally committed to the Christian faith to develop a Christ-centered life, to participate in the church and to develop a concern for the spiritual and physical needs of mankind.

Today all Young Life outreach is conducted through trained staff leaders in approximately 300 suburban and urban communities throughout the United States, Canada and several foreign countries.

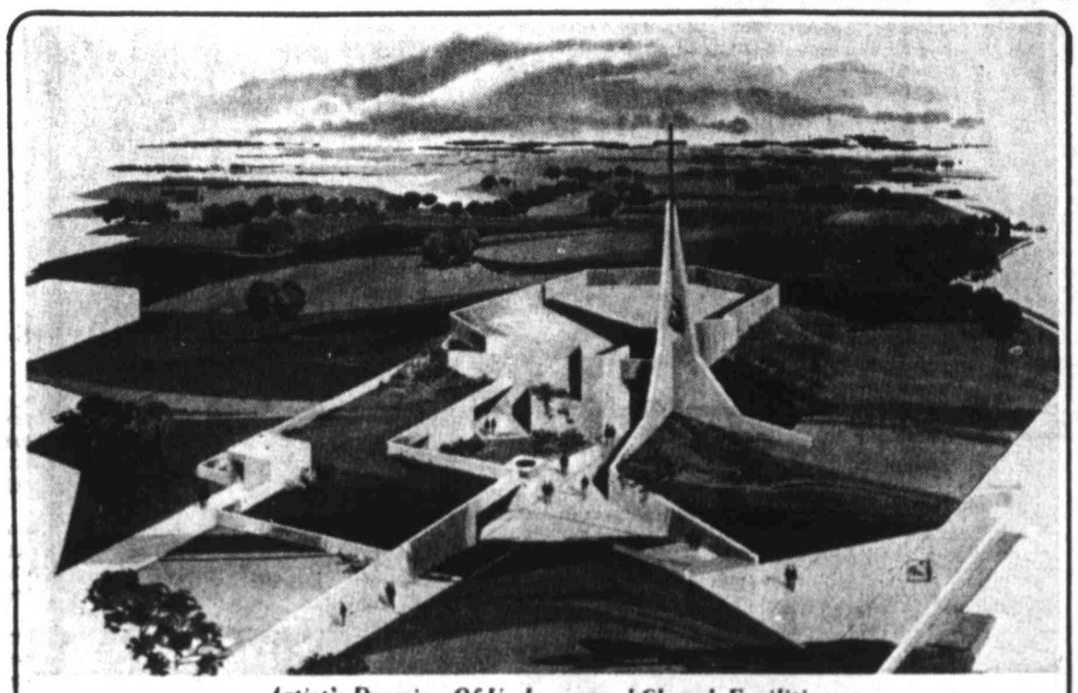

Young Life functions as a non-sectarian, nonprofit organization under the direction of a board of directors. It is sponsored on the local level by a committee of business and professional persons, who serve in voluntary capacities and who give assistance in local budgeting, fund-raising and community relations. Each area is self-supporting, with its own local budget and financial accountability.

Each week during the school year approximately 67,000 young people are involved in Young Life clubs. In one-hour informal livingroom sessions, they gather for fun, fellowship, singing and a talk by the leader.

Camping activities are an integral part of Young Life's outreach to urban and suburban young people. Seven major resort properties, located across Canada and the United States, are locations for the camping activities. Each summer young people travel into Malibu in British Columbia, Woodleaf in northern California, Frontier and Silver Cliff Ranches in central Colorado, Castaway Club in northern Minnesota, Saranac Village in New York's Adirondacks and Windy Gap in the Smokies of North Carolina.

Weekend and holiday camps throughout the year extend Young Life's outreach at the seven major properties and at smaller resorts in Oregon, Georgia and Florida and other states.

Further information about Young Life in Lubbock may be obtained by calling Cairns at 763-8106.

Artist's Drawing Of Underground Church Facilities

Church Facilities Going 'Underground'

The Parish of Saint John Neumann is constructing its future church facilities underground in order to maximize energy conservation.

The church, located at 22nd Street and Frankford, will accommodate more than 700 persons when completed in late October or early November. Construction has been underway since June, 1978.

Leroy Behnke, an ordained deacon of the church, said overall construction costs of expanded facilities at adjacent St. Elizabeth 's school plus the church-administrative area is expected to total $1.3 million.

A gymnasium and meeting rooms were added to the school as a part of the construction program.

The church and administrative offices, which will be underground, are expected to account for approximately $950,000 of the total, with cost per square foot estimated at $42.

The church building, while not entirely below surface level, will be finished with an earth berm to the edge of the roof for insulation purposes.

Heating cost for the underground facility is expected to be virtually nil, with cooling also expected to be minimal. However, gas heating and gas refrigerated air conditioning equipment will be installed to provide necessary adjustments.

Behnke indicated that a motivation for constructing the unusual facility was out of "concern for stewardship of resources."

He said the design is in harmony with creation by respecting resources.

The program should save up to 75 percent in heating and cooling needs, he said.

Ambient temperature without adjustment is expected to be within five degrees of 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

Walls are constructed of concrete, surrounded by earth, while the ceiling is equipped with manufactured insulation.

Construction cost trade-offs included the elimination of brick exteriors, with special equipment required for the underground design. A cistern is included to hold rain water which will be pumped out to street level.

The building also has been designed in order to take advantage of solar energy should effective cooling devices become available in the future.

Methodists To Convene Amarillo Meet Tuesday

AMARILLO (Special)—Balloting for delegates to represent the 92,904-member Northwest Texas Annual Conference at next year's quadrennial meetings of the United Methodist General Conference and the eight-state regional South Central Jurisdictional Conference is expected to extend over the three-day meeting of the annual conference, opening here Tuesday at Amarillo's Polk Street United Methodist Church.

The Northwest Texas Annual Conference, including the Lubbock, Plainview and Big Spring Districts, is one of seven

RELIGION NEWS

Methodist conferences meeting within a four-week period in Texas and New Mexico. The conferences are composed of an equal number of clergy and laity delegates.

The annual session will elect four clergy and four laity delegates to represent them at the denomination's lawmaking General Conference, scheduled April 15-25, 1980 in Indianapolis, Ind.

The General Conference sets the policy that determines the worldwide ministry of the 10-million member denomination for the following four-year period.

Another five clergy and five laity delegates will be elected by the conference to join the General Conference delegation, making a total of 18 delegates, and jointly they will represent the Northwest Texas Conference at the South Central Jurisdictional Conference, slated July 15-18, 1980, in Little Rock, Ark.

Five new bishops will be elected and consecrated by the South Central Jurisdictional Conference. Three episcopal areas in Texas and New Mexico, including the Northwest Texas-New Mexico Area, are scheduled to receive new episcopal leadership in 1980, due to the retirement of their bishops.

Either the newly elected bishops will be assigned to the Northwest Texas-New Mexico Area, the Dallas-Fort Worth Area and the San Antonio Area or, one or more of the active bishops presently serving in other episcopal areas of the eight-state jurisdiction will be assigned to the spots vacated by the retiring bishops.

In addition, balloting at the series of Methodist annual conferences across the nation usually determines the composition of the jurisdiction's Episcopal Residence Committee. The committee assigns the bishops to their episcopal areas. The clergy man and layman first elected by their peers in the annual conference balloting normally become the individuals who represent the annual conference on the committee.

Bishop Alsie H. Carleton of Albuquerque, N.M., the resident bishop of the Northwest Texas-New Mexico Area, is presiding at the Northwest Texas Annual Conference this week.

He will ordain the new deacons and elders of the conference in the closing worship service at 6:40 p.m. Thursday in the downtown Amarillo church.

Dr. Barry Bailey, senior minister of First United Methodist Church in Fort Worth, will serve as the conference preacher for the meeting.

As conference preacher he will deliver morning and evening sermons each day of the conference. His sermon topics include "Outside," "The Lord's Prayer," "How To Accept Help," "What About Suffering," and "How to Help Someone Who Needs You."

He preaches live on television Sunday mornings to a potential audience of approximately 2½ million people in six states. He has been selected preacher of the 1979 United Methodist series of the Protestant hour radio program. He will be heard on more than 1,500 braodcast outlets worldwide.

An Arkansas native, Dr. Bailey holds a bachelor's degree from Hendrix College, a master of theology degree from Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology, a doctor of divinity degree from Centenary College and a doctor of letters degree from Southwestern University.

He has pastored churches in Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. He serves on the board of trustees of Harris Hospital, the board of Texas Wesleyan College and the board of directors of the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce.

During the conference Bishop Carleton will announce new appointments of ministers to churches for the coming year during the meeting and a special presentation dealing with the International Year of the Child will be given.

Second Baptist Pastor Receives High Honor

Dr. Hardy Clemons, senior pastor of Second Baptist Church, has been certified as a diplomate by the American Association of Pastoral Counselors. Diplomate is the highest level of certification offered by the American Association of Pastoral Counselors (AAPC).

Dr. Clemons has been pastor of Second Baptist Church since 1967. He received his undergraduate degree from Texas Tech University in 1955 and his doctoral degree from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminar at Fort Worth in 1966.

DR. HARDY CLEMONS

He is a fellow in the Rockefeller Foundation for Parish Ministers, a clinical member of the American Association of Marriage and Family Counselors, a certified consultant for Bi/Polar Growth Seminars and was named to Who's Who in Religion 1975-77.

AAPC is a professional association designed to promote professional competence, support and growth among pastoral counselors through setting standards for certification and developing continuing education.

To qualify for diplomate, a pastoral counselor must demonstrate competence in supervision of ministers in pastoral counseling; have at least 1,325 hours in counseling, 250 of which must be supervised; have a doctoral degree or equivalent; contribute to the church and community; provide leadership in AAPC; have done research and publication; and teach or supervise pastoral care of counseling.

Dr. Clemons, who was named a fellow in AAPC in 1974, is currently the only diplomate in the state of Texas who is the pastor of a local church, according to a church spokesman.

Retail Theft Precautions Suggested

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration reports that some simple precautions could help retail businesses cut their losses to shoplifting and employee theft.

Small businesses lose 24 times more than large firms to these causes, according to a government study.

Shoplifters usually take small, easy-to-hide items, and the total loss to the nation's retailers was $1.9 billion in 1975, the study said.

According to LEAA most shoplifters are amateurs, one-third of them are between the ages of 12 and 17 and 85 percent of those arrested are female.

Some suggestions for cutting losses included:

—Valuable merchandise should be locked in display cases.

—Advertise that all bags must be checked at the counter when entering the stor.

—Make certain that employees can still observe the store while using the telephone.

But while these precautions can help, internal theft remains the most serious threat, the study said.

This is an area where it is often hard to identify the criminals, particularly among longtime employees. The study suggested watching out for persons who seem to be living above their means, ones who have problems with their personal finances, drug and alcohol abusers and gamblers and persons persistently requesting advances.

Suggestions to help avert the problem included:

—Inventory procedures and control of access to merchandise.

—Careful attention to cash handling and improved visibility through the store.

—Limiting the amount of cash that may be retained in a register and varying the routine for cash transfers.

Positive Thinking

By Norman Vincent Peale

A LITTLE OVER ONE 100 years ago, on a gloomy morning in 1857, a man by the name of Lanthier, living in New York City, boarded a horse drawn street car to go to his office in Fulton Street. On the way downtown he read the morning paper — it was probably the New York Tribune, edited by Horace Greeley. The news he read was that the country was in the grip of an economic depression — in those days, it was called a "panic." Businesses were closing down, one after the other. Wages were down. Factories were closed. Breadlines were formed. Thousands of people were walking the streets, out of work. Conditions were profoundly disturbing. Lanthier, along with many others, read these pessimistic and alarming reports and was worried.

Now, who was Lanthier? A great captain of industry? No. A big figure in politics? No. He was only a simple clerk in an office on Fulton Street. But there was one important thing about Lanthier; he was a man who believed one hundred percent in prayer. And, under the impact of the gloomy news in his morning paper, he got an inspiration.

That same day he sent a note to all his business acquaintances, telling them that, beginning the next day, there would be a prayer meeting in a certain office on Fulton Street daily at noon. He hoped that each of them would attend.

FOR HIS FIRST PRAYER meeting, he arranged twenty chairs in a circle. That first day only one chair was filled; its occupant was Lanthier himself. But that did not discourage him. Alone, he prayed that there might be a tremendous change in him and in America. The second day, a few friends joined him. The next day all twenty chairs were filled.

Day after day, those men met and prayed together. Soon, a similar prayer meeting was started on Wall Street; then one on William Street; then another on Broadway. The movement spread like wild fire to other parts of the country — Boston, Philadelphia, Denver, the South, the West Coast. Prayer groups sprang up everywhere. Soon there was a great religious revival and with it came a new upsurge in the moral and spiritual life of the people. It was followed by an era of sound prosperity and progress.

IT WAS ONE OF THE greatest demonstrations of the power of the united prayer and faith that this country ever witnessed. And it all began with one man, an everyday clerk, who released the tremendous power of prayer.

Lanthier's achievement was a demonstration of an age-old principle: that you can change your life, that I can change mine and that together we can change the world around us. Basically, all we need to do is to get hold of the power of prayer. Or, better still, let prayer get hold of us. There is positively no limit to what can happen to you, or to me, or to the world, through the power of prayer in depth — that is, real prayer.

Emerson once wrote, "Great hearts send forth secret forces that draw great events. In other words, you get back what you send out. If you only send a little forth, you get back something little. Send forth great faith and great results will return. Consequently, prayer in depth, faith that is of reality sincerely expressed, produces tremendous results. When we really seek the tremendous power of prayer we can help cure our perplexing social and personal problems and perhaps indeed transform our world.

Numbers Basis Of Language

By SANJOY HAZARIKA

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A former Indian businessman has devised a number-based language which he hopes will unite the world.

"Abasama," a word which has no meaning, is the name its originator, K.R. Gopalakrishna, 48, has given to both his language and to himself.

Pronouns like I, she, he or it have the same root number, 1,000. The zeros change to other figures to denote gender, case and whether the word is singular or plural.

"And numerical values are constant — they don't change," said the enthusiastic Abasama, who says he developed his language over the past 15 years.

So far, only Abasama himself has mastered the language. But more than 1,000 persons subscribe to a monthly magazine about it, he says, adding that some scholars have praised his system.

"You are a pain in the neck," is translated into Abasama as "1131 3310 1590 1654651 2250 1411237," which is pronounced: "Kacha chikom kupom kuntinduk gantom kingith."

All the words are found in a 2,500-entry English-Abasama dictionary. The inventor plans to expand it to more than five times the size.

"The greatest advantage of the dictionary is that since it is based on numbers, it gives the same meaning for a word no matter what language is concerned, which no other dictionary can," Abasama told The Associated Press.

He sees great advantages if his number script is used for data processing and computer programing.

"Any theory or project can be reduced to its numerical value and stored in the computer for ready use and translation into any language for any person who needs the knowledge," he said.

Abasama claims his language lends itself more to scientific usage than Esperanto, the first attempt at an international language, which uses Roman letters.

He also asserts that Abasama is ideal for communicating with possible intelligent life in outer space as it is "more logical" than other languages on earth.

Music Group Plays Ancient Instruments

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Back when violins were just street instruments, every family who could afford it had a chest of viols — the aristocratic instruments of their day.

"They were used for 500 years," explains Julea Stad Chapline, leader of the Philadelphia-based Society of Ancient Instruments.

The society, the oldest group of its kind in the world, is celebrating its 50th anniversary, and it's still almost all in the family.

Fascinated with older musical instruments, Mrs. Chapline's parents, Ben and Flora Stad, studied in Paris, learning how to play the viol d'amore and harpsichord.

Their son, Maurice, learned viola da gamba, as did Flora's brother, Josef Smit.

Meanwhile, Jo Brodo, godfather to several Stad children, took up a pardessus de viole, and together, these five dedicated musicians made up the original group, formed in 1929. Brodo and Smith were also longtime members of the Philadelphi Orchestra.

While others have taken the places of the Stad family in the group, Mrs. Chapline, who replaced her mother as harpsichordist after her death, is now the group's leader. Her husband, Joseph, is an organ builder and occasional guest artist with the group.

Owens-Corning Opens Fiber Plant In Amarillo

AMARILLO (Special) — Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. Thursday dedicated the world's largest glass fiber reinforcements plant in ceremonies held at Amarillo.

Fowler Blauvelt, executive vice president of Owens-Corning, cut the ribbon—appropriately woven of Fiberglas rather than cloth. He was assisted by C. Truett Smith, immediate past chairman of the Texas Industrial Commission, and Amarillo Mayor Jerry Hodge.

The Amarillo plant is Owens-Corning's 76th plant nationwide and its ninth in Texas. Owens-Corning also has a total of 12 sales offices, customer service centers and contracting offices in Texas.

"Owens-Corning has a major commitment in Texas," Blauvelt said. "Texas has a progressive attitude towards industry and this attitude was constantly in evidence as we planned the Amarillo plant."

Amarillo was chosen as the site for the new 500,000-square-foot plant because of its proximity to markets in the South and Southwest, and because of the availability of natural gas, electricity, labor and transportation, Blauvelt said.

The plant will produce glass fiber reinforcements for use with plastics in marine, land transportation, construction, consumer and recreational goods, appliance and business equipment, corrosion-resistant materials, electrical, electronic, aircraft and aerospace applications.

Annual capacity will be more than 200 million pounds of glass fiber reinforcements when the second production line is completed in 1980. The plant is located on a 259-acre site, south of Amarillo.

Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. employs 24,000 people, 600 of them at the new Amarillo plant. The company had sales of more than $1.85 billion in 1978. Corporate headquarters are in Toledo, Ohio.

Furr's Cafeterias Separate Operation From Grocery Chain

Don G. Furr, chief executive officer of Furr's Cafeterias Inc., has announced that because of the stated plan of Furr's Inc., a regional supermarket chain, to enter into a chapter 11 reorganization proceeding, and because of the similarity of the names of the two companies, it is necessary to distinguish between the two companies.

Furr's Cafeterias Inc. is a publicly owned company with 2,000 shareholders located throughout the United States and is separate and distinct from Furr's Inc., which is privately owned. Furr's Cafeterias Inc. is not a party to the reorganization proceedings.

The day-to-day operating management of Furr's Cafeterias Inc. is completely separate and autonomous from that of the grocery company, although, there are some common board members, officers and shareholders.

Furr's Cafeterias purchased approximately 15 percent of its raw product requirements in 1978 from Furr's Inc., for which it paid approximately $4.5 million. Furr's Cafeterias does not anticipate any difficulty in purchasing its food requirements from other wholesale grocers in the event that its food purchases from Furr's Inc. should be disrupted or discontinued.

Tourists Lured By Fishing, Forestry Of South Wales

SYDNEY, Australia (UPI) — A magnificent expanse of water and a mixture of past and present greet visitors to the fishing and forestry areas of southern New South Wales, 200 miles south of Sydney.

The fishing center of Eden is a town caught between two eras — a town of old whaling tales and new developments such as the Japanese chip mill complex on Twofold Bay.

An old museum captures some of the spirit of the whaling days. A drive through the forests will show travelers the ins and outs of the timber industry, now as important to Eden as fishing.

At First Bank Shallowater, we think it's time to quit dwelling on all the things wrong with our country and how bad everything is going to get.

Sure, we need to be realistic and face the facts, but the fact is—things are not as bad as some folks would have us believe, and, relying on the same positive attitude and work ethic that built West Texas, let's keep "loading the wagon".

At First Bank Shallowater, we feel that our area is the best possible place to be, good times or bad. We have a confident attitude about the future of West Texas and you'll see this confidence reflected in the way you're treated at the First Bank Shallowater, the little better bank.

Confusion Plagues New ATS Checking Accounts

By TIM CODER
United Press International

A woman who deposited money on promises of 5 percent interest —but not on the service charges that ate away at her profits —stalked up to the Charleston, W.Va., bank intent on venting her anger.

She flaunted a pair of scissors before startled bank officials and customers and, so the story goes, with relish nipped her checkbook into confetti.

"That's what I think of your service charge," she said.

Target of her frustration was the bank's Automatic Transfer Service authorized last Nov. 1 by new federl regulations. Better known as interest checking, the system allows a customer's savings account to glean 5 percent interest, with funds funnelled into a separate checking account as checks are written.

But a bewildering variation of plans, along with the computation of maintnance fees, transfer levels, transfer fees and other esoterica, can befuddle even the most mathamatical mind intent on gilding the checkbook balance.

Many banks are careful to note that ATS is not for everyone. Indeed, while interest checking can benefit more affluent customers, payday-to-payday customers are priced out of the market.

Minimum balances up to $2,500 and higher are required to eliminate service charges. With a balance consistently below the required level, profits are eroded or wiped out by such fees.

One bank executive, whose bank has heavily promoted ATS in the highly competitive Chicago market, said high minimum balances, and substantial fees imposed if they are not met, are necessary for banks to break even.

Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., chairman of the consumer affairs subcommittee of the House Banking Committee, is one of the most vocal critics of interest checking.

"The woman who stormed into her bank ... and cut up her checkbook exemplifies the frustration of customers who have been hit by high costs of ATS," he said.

"For most people, ATS is little more than giving with one hand and taking with the other. Some banks are imposing charges which could total well over $50 per year. For many customers, such charges can quickly eat up any interest earned under the plan."

Bank of America in San Francisco offers a typical ATS Program — 5 percent interest and no service charges if a $2,000 minimum daily balance is maintained. If it is not, a $3 per month fee is imposed along with a charge of 10 cents per check.

The customer who maintains a $1,000 daily balance and writes 30 checks per month does not fare well — receiving $50 interest for the year but paying $72 in service charges for a net loss of $22.

Like many other banks, Bank of America also offers free checking for the customer who maintains a $300 minimum daily balance. The customer able to maintain a $1,000 daily balance could sink $300 into a checking account, and put the remaining $700 in a Savings & Loan account drawing 5¼ percent interest to gain an annual net profit of $36.75.

A Bank of America spokesman said ATS accounts are being maintained well above the $2,000 minimum balance level.

"We're extremely pleased by the overwhelmingly positive response from both Bank of America customers and noncustomers alike," said Barry O'Donnell, marketing project manager of demand deposits.

The Harris Bank in Chicago offers a more intricate variation of interest checking which it attempts to explain in a news release:

"The customer will select a transfer level for his account. When the balance in his checking account reaches this level, funds will be transferred automatically from the savings to the checking account, in $50 increments.

"The monthly maintainance (sic) fee for the service is $1, when the service is used. There is a separate daily transfer fee of 25 cents. Customers who keep a $2,500 average balance in the savings account will be exempt from other checking account maintainance (sic) charges."

Michael Wixted, Harris' assistant vice president for convenience banking, said the program "is still a pretty quiet thing. There's not a great deal of interest. It's growing, but very, very gradually."

But can interest checking be that good a deal when it requires such high minimum balances to eliminate service fees, which in turn siphon away interest profits?

"I don't think so," Wixted conceded.

The minimum balances, he said, are needed for the banks to break even. "We think $2,500 is what it takes to meet our costs."

Because of confusion over their program, executives at New York's Chase Manhattan Bank produced a television commercial that asked people to come in so it could be explained by bank representatives.

Adding a twist to convenience banking was a recent federal appeals court decision that clouded the future of services such as interest checking. It said federal regulators illegally permitted the programs. It urged Congress to determine their future next year.

Customers have hardly beaten down bank house doors to apply for interest checking — despite glossy, Madison Avenue-style promotions. As of the first of the year, Annunzio said only 400,000 accounts were in force in the nation's 50,000 banking institutions.

Some banks increased prices for other services when they began offering interest checking.

Among them was the Charleston National Bank in Charleston, W.Va., (apparently not the scissor woman's bank) which passed on increases to better meet its own costs, a spokesman said.

The bank increased to $300 from $100 the minimum balance for free checking. When the minimum balance is not met, Charleston National charges $3 a month plus 15 cents a check. It previously charged 10 cents a check on balances below $100.

Charleston requires a $5,000 minimum balance for free interest checking, the largest of all banks surveyed. Dana Pitchford, senior vice president and director of marketing, said the response to interest checking has been good.

"We have had more response to the service than ... a lot of banks our size. We didn't think it would be a real barn burner."

But other banks have decided benefits of interest checking are not worth the trouble it would take to implement the system.

Row Belcher, first vice president for deposit services at the National Bank of Commerce in Memphis, Tenn.,, said an extensive marketing research study determined only lukewarm customer interest.

"We just thought every resource it would have taken to bring up ATS could have been channeled to more productive ways," he said.

A forerunner of interest checking is the so-called Negotiable Order of Withdrawal, NOW accounts, which were started in Massachusetts in the early 1970s. They spread through New England in recent years and last fall became available in New York City.

The NOW system consists of a single account, compared to separate accounts for ATS, and likewise draws 5 percent interest. Most bank officials seem to prefer NOW accounts because they are more easily handled.

But a Federal Reserve Board economist, who said the NOW Accounts were allowed as an experiment on the Eastern Seaboard, explained there usually is no practical difference in the two systems from the customer's standpoint.

"If the bank wants to," he said, "it can make either account identical from the customer's point of view, or can make them different."

Citibank, for instance, requires a $3,000 average monthly balance to eliminate a $4 monthly service charge. Bankers' Trust Co., which switched from ATS to NOW on April 1, requires a $2,000 minimum balance to skip the $4 monthly service fee.

Congress is expected to take its usual lengthy look at programs such as ATS sometime after the first of the year because of the recent federal appeals court decision in Washington.

THE U.S. AND YOU

William Steif

YOU'RE 62, HAVE WORKED all your life and decide to retire. You go through the paperwork with the Social Security Administration and are notified — in writing, as Social Security always does — how much you'll get each month.

You disagree, having figured out previously what you think you've got coming. You go the the Social Security district office to complain and get nowhere.

You're 33 and badly hurt in an auto accident. It appears you're disabled permanently. You apply for disability benefits under Social Security. Your application is rejected.

You're a widow, 68, with a very small pension from your late husbands earnings. The pension isn't enough to live on. You apply for a monthly payment under SSI, the Supplemental Security Income program run by the Social Security Administration. Your application is rejected.

The Social Security Administration, whose disbursements represent a quarter of the federal budget, has a separate appeals process surprisingly few folks know about.

IT IS POSSIBLE to get initial decisions of the Social Security Administration reversed. About 220,000 people did so last year. Here's how:

Step One — You have 60 days from the time you get the first notice of a decision to ask for a reconsideration at any of the nation's 1,300 Social Security offices — in writing. You can write the letter yourself or use a form available at any Social Security office.

Step Two — Your request for reconsideration is turned down. So you ask for a hearing before a presiding officer of the Social Security Administration's Office of Hearings and Appeals. Again, you have 60 days from the time you got notice of the rejection of your reconsideration request. Again, ask for the hearing in writing.

Step Three — The hearing officer turns you down. You then ask for a review by the Social Security Administration's Appeals Council. Again, you have 60 days to file, in writing. This time your plea won't be heard automatically — the Appeals Council will decide if it will bother to review the hearing officer's decision.

Step Four — The Appeals Council hears your plea and still disagrees with you. You have 60 days to file, or on its denial of a review of your case. In writing, of course.

You can be represented by a lawyer of your choice at any step. Social Security employees are supposed to help you prepare appeals. They also have free pamphlets for you explaining the process in more detail.

— Almost 3.6 million retirement and survivor's claims were filed with Social Security. Of those, 3,356,000 were allowed. Reconsiderations totaled 29,700, reversals 11,296. There were 5,000 hearings which resulted in 2,500 reversals.

— 1,141,200 disability claims were filed and 470,500 of those were allowed. This tells you that disability claims are harder to prove (and more subjective) than retirement and survivors' claims. Of the claimants rejected, 231,300 sought reconsideration; they won 48,400 reversals. Another 152,500 claimants sought hearings, and 79,000 won reversals. The Appeals Council reversed another 1,000 negative decisions.

— 1,027,426 SSI claims were filled and 483,822 persons went on SSI rolls.

Only a fraction of those rejected all along the line went to federal court, just over 8,000 cases in all. Most were people whose disability claims were turned down. These cases tend to drag through federal courts for years and often require legal expertise. Fewer than half are decided for the plaintiffs.

But, as you can see, it's entirely possible to get decisions reversed within Social Security's "judicial" structure.

Tub & Spa Opens In City

Lubbock Tub & Spa has opened for business in Lubbock, according to partners John Kenyon and Steve Moss.

The firm will initially market the California Cooperage tub, which is a home spa constructed in the classic tub design and made from fine redwood, cedar or mahogany, the owners said.

More traditional spas, are typically made from molded plastic or fiberglass. Unlike the molded versions, which must be encased or built in, a hot tub is structurally self-contained with its own heater, pump, filter and hydro-massage jets, according to Kenyon and Moss.

The hot tubs can be installed indoors or outdoors. However, the current trend is to install the tubs outdoors where they blend well with decks and garden settings, the owners said.

Lubbock Tub & Spa will specialize in sales, installation and servicing of California Cooperage redwood tubs. Each one is finished by hand at the Cooperage plant in San Luis Obispo, Calif.

The system carries a one-year warranty. Under normal conditions the redwood tubs last in excess of 20 years, according to Kenyon and Moss.

Extreme Obesity Surgical Problem

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Surgery, not diet or drugs, is recommended by a Mayo lecturer as the best way to handle extreme obesity that is endangering a patient's health.

In a speech at The University of Michigan Medical Center, Dr. Ward O. Griffen, Jr., said the treatment of extreme overweight should not be regarded as simply a cosmetic measure.

Griffen, a professor and chairman of surgery at the University of Kentucky, said his patients include persons whose weight aggravated existing illnesses, imposed serious health risks of its own, provoked emotional problems and even prevented some from holding jobs. One such patient is a truck driver who sought treatment when he could no longer get behind the wheel of his vehicle.

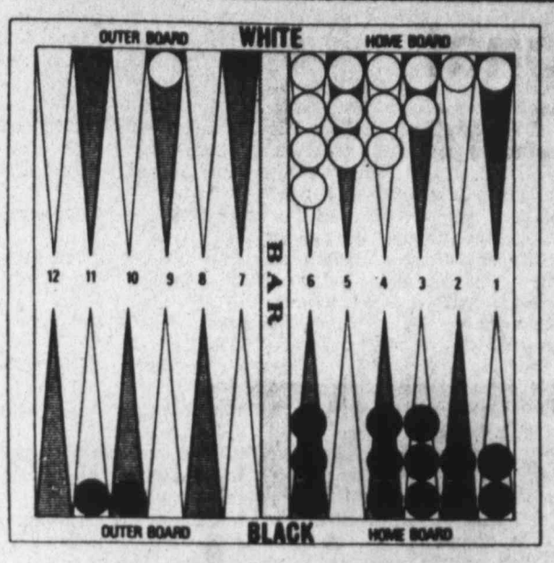

Griffen added most patients treated by non-surgical methods eventually gain back all the weight they lost. He said the usual success rate for such treatments seems to be less than 10 percent.

Backgammon

by Omar Sharif

Black Rolls 5—4. How should he play?

ANSWER TO BACKGAMMON PROBLEM

There are only two moves that come into consideration: 1) Bring the two men from Black's outer board to the 6-point; or 2) use the 5 to bring the man from Black's 10-point to the 4-point, and the 4 to move the man from Black's 11-point to his bar-point.

The advantage of the first move is manifest. It brings both of Black's men into his home board so that Black will be in a position to start bearing off at his next turn. But the move has an obvious drawback as well. It overloads Black's 6-point while leaving his 5-point barren. As a result, whenever Black rolls a 5, he will have to move a man from his 6-point to his 1-point, since he is unable to bear off a man.

When you are preparing to bear off, the overriding consideration is "diversification." Simply stated, that means putting men on as many points as possible and seeing to it that no point carries too heavy a burden. The first alternative goes directly in opposition to this principle. Putting a man on the 5-point helps achieve this objective.

Because you have to bear off an odd number of men (15), you are not really losing any time with this move. Assume that you are going to roll perfectly. If you have all 15 men in your home board, you will need eight rolls to bear them off. But you will need the same eight rolls if you have only 14 men in your home board and one on your bar-point (or most other points in your outer board).

HEALTH SCIENCES CENTER HOSPITAL

Technical Sophistication and Personal Commitment for Quality Patient Care

When the Health Sciences Center Hospital (HSCH) opened slightly over a year ago, 597 employees became participants in developing a new dimension of health care for South Plains residents. HSCH is the primary teaching hospital for the Texas Tech University School of Medicine (TTUSM). As such, its role is to provide excellence in patient care and, therefore, the forum in which medical students and resident physicians will experience the level of patient management needed to learn the broadest concepts of medical science and its art.

The challenge for employees was to develop the level of hospital services requisite to that care. Many goals set prior to opening have been met. These include family-centered maternity care, sibling visits in the post-partum and pediatrics wings, a pediatric intensive care unit, a neonatal intensive care unit and unstructured visiting hours. As programs mature, patient-care goals continue to be developed.

The road was not easy. State funding was in question and the delivery of critical equipment by the February 1st opening was uncertain. Withing two months, 512 of those employees were recruited, oriented to a new physical facility and began working to provide an atmosphere of constant inquiry and scrutiny by medical students, residents and physicians. Theirs were the problems inherent to a start-up operation.

The importance to HSCH success of preplanning and groundwork can not be overstated. This was the contribution of Lubbock citizens, the LCHD Board of Managers, the Lubbock County Commissioners, the Texas Tech University Board of Regents, legislators and others bound to the common goal of delivering quality patient care in the area's first major teaching hospital.

A teaching hospital is a place where skill in all types of critical care is concentrated; where scientific and technical knowledge is applied soon after its development. Inservice education in critical care nursing is ongoing and all employees participate in a "total" patient care philosophy. This requires considering not only physical needs, but individual needs including spiritual, psychological, social and rehabilitative.

HSCH growth came earlier than the most optimistic predictions. Twenty-seven patients were admitted on the first day. By the tenth day census reached 105. With 118 of the hospital's 273 beds opened, the hospital ran at 90 per cent occupancy during the first two weeks and has continued high. This far exceeds the 34 per cent projected occupancy and has required significant readjustment from employees.

Medical and surgical services developed rapidly. In the first 11 months, 1765 operations were performed with only 50 per cent of the operating rooms in service.

During the first month, 176 babies were delivered. By the end of the first year, 2740 babies had arrived at HSCH, representing three quarters of Lubbock's total deliveries.

This year, the infant mortality rate at HSCH has been 9.5 per thousand births as compared to the areas previous rate of 18.7, the highest in the state. This is a major success in the reduction of infant deaths and validates the goal of establishing a regional center for the care of high-risk mothers and newborns, a primary objective of hospital planners.

Faculty additions increased the types of physician specialists available in the South Plains and the number of doctors practicing at HSCH climbed to 174. Of these, 94 are community physicians with clinical appointments at TTUSM, indicating the interest of local physicians in the continuing growth and development of HSCH.

The primary characteristic of a teaching hospital is the presence of residency training programs. Accredited by the AMA and specialty academies, residencies provide three to five years preparation for medical school graduates in the specialty of their choice. Growing from 55 in '78 to some 90 resident physicians expected for the 79-80 year, these are physicians important to the future of medical care in West Texas. Studies show that a large percentage of physicians enter practice in the geopgraphic area where they complete their residencies.

When HSCH opened, residencies in family practice, orthopaedic surgery and ophthalmology were functioning. This year, residencies have been approved in obstetrics-gynecology, pediatrics, anesthesiology and surgery. Approval for internal medicine is expected by June. Neonatology is the first TTUSM fellowship for subspecialty training. Mature hospital services are prerequisite to residency accreditation in each specialty.

Medical students have been working in the hospital almost since the day it opened. Thirty sophomores first met patients during weekly classes on history-taking and physical examination. Seniors work full-time with residents and staff physicians, spending forty two student-months at HSCH this academic year.

Achieving these goals involved all departments. Many programs and equipment acquisitions were brought on-line during the year substantially increasing diagnostic assessment and response time for critical care. HSCH received HEW approval as a renal transplant center, paving the way for the first kidney transplant on March 21. In addition, HSCH developed a medical technology program to augment local shortages. Four registered technologists will graduate this summer and a capacity for ten students has been developed.

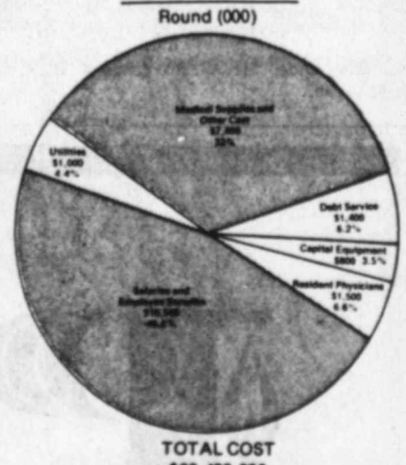

Volunteer efforts and philanthrophy were significant. These are the invaluable contributions of a community to health care. They are gifts made because individuals enjoy helping their fellow man and can not be measured in economic terms.

This year, auxiliary membership grew from 88 to 202 adult and 22 junior members contributing a total of 17,192 hours. Junior League members donated 294 hours. Thirty two Lubbock clergymen initiated a volunteer chaplaincy program providing 1150 hours in 24-hour rotations to serve preoperative and new patient admissions.

A kidney transfer unit was presented by the Alamo Chapter of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company Pioneer's Club. The Quaker Heights Homeowners Association donated money for the neonatal intensive care unit and Auxilians gave $9,750 for training LCHD EMTs as Paramedics. The West Texas Children's Foundation provided valuable lab equipment and financial assistance to the Department of Pediatrics.

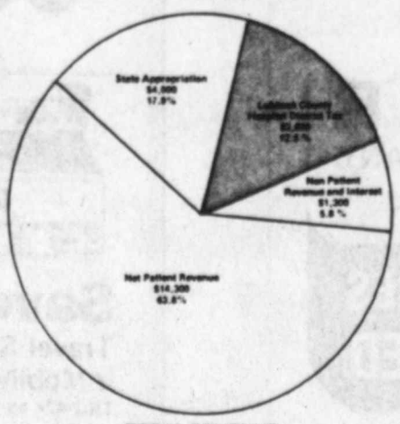

In just one year, HSCH, TTUSM and the Lubbock community have become participants in health care and education. They have met, solved and survived a number of critical problems. Their continued effort and dedication will insure the success which appears to be ahead.

TOTAL REVENUE
$22,400,000

During 1978, total revenue for HSCH was $15 million. This figure includes patient revenue, state funds and taxes, but does not allow for bad debts. Total expenses for the same period were $14.85 million.

Charts pictured above are for 1979 and depict sources of income and cost categories of $22.4 million. Tax revenue represents less than one-fifth of total income. The largest percentage of revenue must come from services to community and area patients who normally are covered by insurance, Blue Cross, Medicare, Medicaid, or who make arrangements to pay their bills themselves.

A significant percentage of salaries and supply expendatures result in dollars spent in Lubbock, thus making a significant contribution to the economy of the area.

The development of the Health Sciences Center Hospital was a process which was participated in by numerous people and groups: i.e., legislators, governors, business leaders, members of the City Council, Commissioner's Court, Board of Managers, the Chamber of Commerce, Texas Tech University and the Medical School, the Medical Society and its individual physicians and most importantly, the people of Lubbock County. I am proud to have shared with you a part of this process.

Our experiences in opening the hospital have been often exciting, sometimes painful, frequently rewarding, never neutral, but always satisfying in caring for people in need.

As we get further into the record year of operation, I invite each of you to redouble your commitment to participate in the process of the development upon each of you for its growth and strength to fulfill its commitments of service to the community for quality patient care and the environment for the education of physicians and other health personnel.

Our strength is you.

Gerald G. Bosworth
Executive Director
Health Sciences Center Hospital

There is no way to discuss the opening of the Health Sciences Center Hospital without complimenting many people for a job well done.

During the months surrounding opening, the Board of Managers were among the busiest volunteers in Lubbock. Chairman J.C. Rickman, Joe Stanley, C.B. Carter, Jack Flygare, Preston Johnson and Ben Robinson joined employees and representatives of Hyatt Medical Management, Inc. in developing the management logistics needed to open on schedule and function effectively.

A sincere thank you also goes to the many residents and state legislators who worked to obtain $8 million in state start-up funds; to new board members Gwen Stafford, Don McInturff and C. Wayne Smith; and to the County Commissioners and Judge Roy Shaw who have provided the backing needed to accomplish the job.

The new board is committed to opening the remainder of the hospital, to operating with fiscal responsibility and to cooperating with cost control guidelines. Board members will continue to be hard working volunteers committed to seeing that HSCH remains a source of pride for Lubbock County residents.

Thalidomide Tragedy: Painful 20 Years Reviewed

By ROBERT MUSEL

LONDON (UPI) — Elaine Dale, who is 18 and pretty, cuddled her baby with her feet and said, "The sheer joy of having her makes up for all the pain in the world."

UMMM...HELLO THERE!—Dane Talmage, a patient at Children's Hospital in Denver, looks up at one of two "Cyclons" who visited the hospital recently. The space characters from a current television program, were in Denver on a promotional tour and brightened the hallways of the hospital with their visit. (AP Laserphoto)

Elaine knows about pain. She was born without arms, one of the 8,000 victims of the drug thalidomide which began leaving a trail of deformed babies in 46 countries 20 years ago.

Before it was finally withdrawn from sale in most places in 1962, Elaine, armless though she was, was one of the luckier British survivors of the dreadful damage done to the fetus in the womb by what was marketed at the time as a safe treatment for morning sickness and other conditions.

Mothers screamed in agony when doctors showed them their terribly handicapped newborn. There were suicides, broken homes, mercy killings. In Belgium a couple freed of murder charges in the poisoning of their legless eight-day-old baby were cheered by a crowd of 1,000.

In addition to the physical distortions, there were the complications of epilepsy, autism and mental retardation that still torment thalidomide families today.

Some victims surrendered to their infirmities and are little more than vegetables. But Elaine and hundreds of others never stopped fighting and are living what they consider worthwhile lives. Elaine refused artificial arms and learned to drive a specially adapted car and do other tasks with her feet. She met her husband, Peter, a TV repairman, at a folk club. He insists he never even noticed she had no arms.

Their baby was the first born to a thalidomide victim in Britain. And when doctors were able to say that newcomer Sara was normal there were tears and smiles throughout Grimsby Maternity Hospital.

A new book, "Suffer the Children: The Story of Thalidomide" (Viking), claims the thalidomide tragedy could have been avoided, could happen again and may be happening right now. It says that the United States has overreacted to its success in banning the drug and thus delayed the introduction of beneficial medicaments since discovered in Europe.

The authors are "The Insight Team" of London's Sunday Times. Having unearthed what a member of Parliament described as "a great national disaster," they were prevented from telling what they knew by the tough British law against commenting on cases in the courts.

Thalidomide went on sale in Britain in 1958 and by 1962 there were more than 400 deformed births. Some doctors estimated at least twice that number died at birth from internal injuries. British parents of the surviving handicapped children sued for damages in 1962 and once that happened, says the book, the entire scandal was "sealed by the laws of contempt of court into a legal cocoon from which it did not emerge until 1977."

The book is the fullest account yet published of the thalidomide catastrophe and a journalistic triumph. In July 1977 the newspaper won a ruling from the European Commission of Human Rights that editor Harold Evans and his reporters had been deprived of free speech, putting the British government in the position of having to defend its laws of contempt before that body. The book suggests that Watergate could not have been exposed under current British law.

More than $100 million in compensation has been paid or put into trust for thalidomide victims in Germany — where the drug was developed — in Britain, the United States, Canada and elsewhere. The Distillers Company, the British licensee, dramatically increased its offer when Ralph Nader, the consumer crusader, wrote them stressing the importance of the American market to their well-known alcoholic products. This was interpreted as a hint of boycott and the market slashed $80 million in value from Distillers' shares in a single day.

The book makes the point that although Dr. Frances Kelsey of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) prevented marketing of the drug in the United States because she wanted proof it was harmless to the unborn (and thereby earned a gold medal from President Kennedy) some 2.5 million thalidomide tablets were distributed free by the American licensee to 1,267 doctors and given to 20,000 patients.

"At least 10, maybe 16 and possibly many more women — the number is uncertain because parents may not have realized that their child's malformations were due to Kevadon (the proposed trade name) — gave birth to thalidomide babies in the United States," the book says, adding that the FDA was unable to find all the doctors.

"The cases of thalidomide damage that have to date been traced in the United States must not, therefore, be considered as representing the full extent of the American tragedy."

Despite Dr. Kelsey's one-woman stand for better research, the book says it is possible the FDA's rigidly cautious approach to new drugs may be withholding life-enhancing drugs from Americans.

"No drugs were introduced in the U.S. between 1963 and 1974 for high blood pressure, chest pain and heart disease, or chronic lung diseases although several drugs for these had won acceptance in other countries," it says.

The authors appear to believe that FDA ought to approve drugs more speedily and initiate a system of monitoring their effects closely when they are in actual use.

Energy-Saving Test Enlists 10 Families

EDMOND, Okla. (UPI) —Saving energy is going to cost one American company some money.

A test program was begun here by Honeywell of Minneapolis with 10 families to see how much energy can be saved by setting thermostats back in the winter and higher in the summer to conserve air conditioning and heating fuel. Homeowners are tested on alternating, week-on-week-off cycles.

To insure that thermostats would not be set back when they should not in order to save on their bills, the energy controls firm decided to compensate the homeowners for the energy they wasted on the alternating weeks.

CLAMS—Clams and oysters in a tractor-trailer truck traveling near Interstate 35 and Interstate 635 near Mission, Kan., spilled out recently when the truck overturned. The driver was uninjured. (AP Laserphoto)

BLACK: N. Giffard, France
WHITE: John Peters, U.S.

The position after White's 36th move is:
WHITE: King on KRL, Queen on KR4, Rook on KN1, Knights on QR4 and Q6; Pawns on QR2, QN3, K5, KB4, KN2 and KR3(11 pieces).
BLACK: King on KN2, Queen on Q6, Rook on QB7, Bishop on K3, Knight on KN5, pawns on QR2, QN3, KB2, KB3 and KR2 (10 pieces).
White has just played 36.P-KR3, attacking the Knight. Now Giffard has the word. With a series of pins and needle moves, he puts Peters, in spite of his pawn up, in a difficult position and has his King on the run.

French Ready High Speed Train For Service In '83

PARIS (UPI) — The French National Railroad Company says its tests with its new high speed train are so successful the eight-coach train, bombing along at 160 mph, will go into service as scheduled between Paris and Lyon in October 1983.

While hailed by commuters between France's two largest industrial centers, the project is definitely displeasing another state-controlled transporter, the Air Inter domestic airline.

Air Inter officials said they anticipate a loss of 25 percent of their 7.2 million passengers. Switching to the train will get them to Lyon in two hours.

the COIN Box

By NORMAN DAVIS

WHY IS COIN collecting so popular a hobby?

The numismatist — that is, the collector and student of coins and related items — can tour the world, visit with history's great men and women, trace nations' histories, and build something of much beauty and value.

Sometimes it's the gift of a strange coin, medal, or token that sparks our interest. Sometimes it's a glance at a magazine's or newspaper's coin column.

And sometimes it's just that we decide to collect.

The collector of foreign coins is carried in a flash from Paris to Potosi, Berlin to Bogota, Nueva Granada to New Orleans. As your collection grows, you travel the globe.

While you're picking up a few words of the language, you also learn something of each country's culture. If you collect U.S. coins, you soak up some of the history of our own country.

We call new coins Uncirculated, nearly-new ones Extra Fine. If you can afford to buy "Unc" or "EF" coins that are scarce now or likely to be scarce later, then your collection should grow in both beauty and monetary value.

But even if you can afford only an occasional coin out of pocket change, that's still a start. And it can be a fasinating beginning.

You might start with one denomination and see how many dates you can assemble. Coins from the early part of this century still are circulating!

Take the time to visit the nearest library and one or two coin shops. Hundreds of books have been written about various coins, tokens, and medals. Take a look at the book list in the "Coin World Almanac."

Check local newsstands, too. There are several papers and magazines dealing with coin collecting.

As soon as you can afford it, buy a good magnifying glass, at least a 5X (5-power) one. This helps you "explore" your coins more fully.

Ask a coin dealer what he has in the way of coin envelopes and coin files. Coin envelopes protect your coins against dirt, rubbing, and scratches. The files are storage boxes that let you keep your collection in order.

Above all, let your collection be first and foremost a source of pleasure and growth. What counts most of all is that your hobby should bring you enjoyment.

How's Your News IQ?

(EDITOR'S NOTE: How much do you remember about the news of the week? If you score fewer than five correct answers, you had better read the paper a little more carefully. If you get eight or more right, you rate an "A.")

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

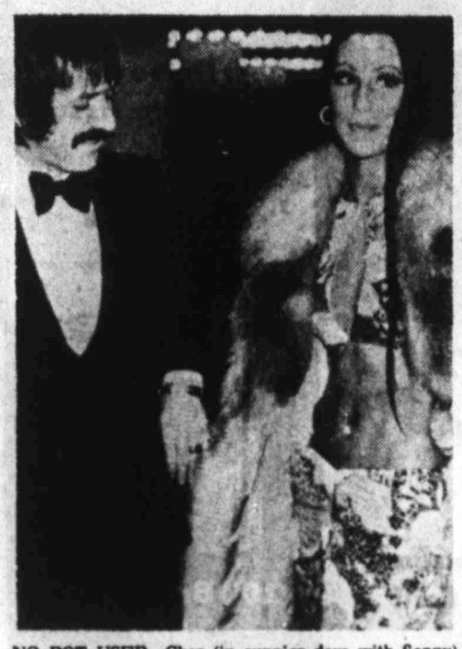

Glad You Asked That!

Q: When Cher divorced Gregg Allman, she said it was because he was a drug addict. Yet I remember when she was married to Sonny Bono and expecting their daughter, Chastity, she was quoted as saying she smoked pot daily. was this a fact? — Claire Rentall, Baltimore.

A: "No," Cher told us at the time. "That quote is a complete lie!"

"However," she added, "you may quote me to clear up my misquotes. I am not now, nor have I ever taken pot — nor any drug not prescribed by my physician...Sonny and I are avid fighters against drug abuse. We even made an anti-pot film for the Los Angeles Police Department which is being shown in every high school in our area."

Currently dating rock star Gene Simmons of Kiss, Cher insists they're just friends — not lovers. Gregg Allman is "the only man with whom I have been in love," she sighs. And about Sonny, she cracks, "He had this macho thing about keeping me in the background offstage."

NO POT USER—Cher (in sunnier days with Sonny) clears the smoke surrounding the rumor she smoked marijuana while pregnant with daughter Chastity.

Q: I heard there was an eerie coincidence connected with Emmett Kelly's death. Do you know anything about it? — A. Donaldson, Seattle.

A: Yes. The sad-faced clown died on the opening day of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus at New York's Madison Square Garden. An annual highlight for Kelly for many years, he'd frequently be seen sitting on the sidelines looking as though he was about to burst into tears.

Q: What's this new theory that the more good-looking you are, the better you do in life? — Robert K., Sacramento, Calif.

A: That's what University of Connecticut psychologist Amerigo Farina believes. And other psychologists, like Ellen Berscheid of the University of Minnesota, tend to agree. She adds that not only are good-lookers more successful in business, they're also presumed to be kinder, warmer, more sincere and more sociable than those who are not so good to look at.

Q: After everything they did to him, how come John Mitchell wants to let bygones be bygones as far as Charles Colson and John Dean are concerned? — Rod Campbell, Pittsburgh.

A: But he doesn't! Mitchell is still very bitter about them. Former TV news executive Ron Beasley, who served time with Mitchell, tells us the former attorney general blamed Colson for Watergate. "If it weren't for him, Watergate never would have happened," snapped Big John. "A born-again Christian? Ha! I'd take my chances with the lions," he growled.

And as for John Dean, Mitchell describes him as "the classic stool pigeon...All he had to do was keep his mouth shut. He knew what it was all about." Mitchell seems to dislike Dean more than anyone else, acording to our source. He was usually referred to as "that punk."

We'd like to nominate for the "Best Salesman of the Year" award — the husband who convinced his wife that "polyester" is the generic name for mink!

A: Yes, from his father, Vernon. Family friends claim he's a great singer. "Vernon could be walking around a suite singing his head off," Elvis' close friend Red West once commented, "particularly a gospel song like 'Where No One Stands Alone.' His voice was so good, sometimes you'd stop what you were doing and start listening to him. Then he'd get kind of embarrassed and knock it off."

Powder-Puff Mechanic's Course Suggested

By SGT. SIDNEY LYLE
Odessa Police Department

How well do you know the workings of your car? If you are driving down a long stretch of deserted highway and your car quits running for no apparent reason, would you know how to troubeshoot your vehicle and get it to running again?

Unfortunately, most people — especially women — know little or nothing about the combustion engine or a car's electrical system. Therefore, they are at the mercy of some Jack-Leg Mechanic that is willing to "Repair" the vehicle at a fee that is oftentimes determined by the motorist's degree of disadvantage and his ability to pay.

Certainly, we like to think that most are honest and reputable, but the fact remains that those who aren't, seriously dampen the esteem of those who are. A recent government report — for whatever it's worth — indicated that approximately 52 percent of all auto repairs charged for were either unnecessary of not performed.

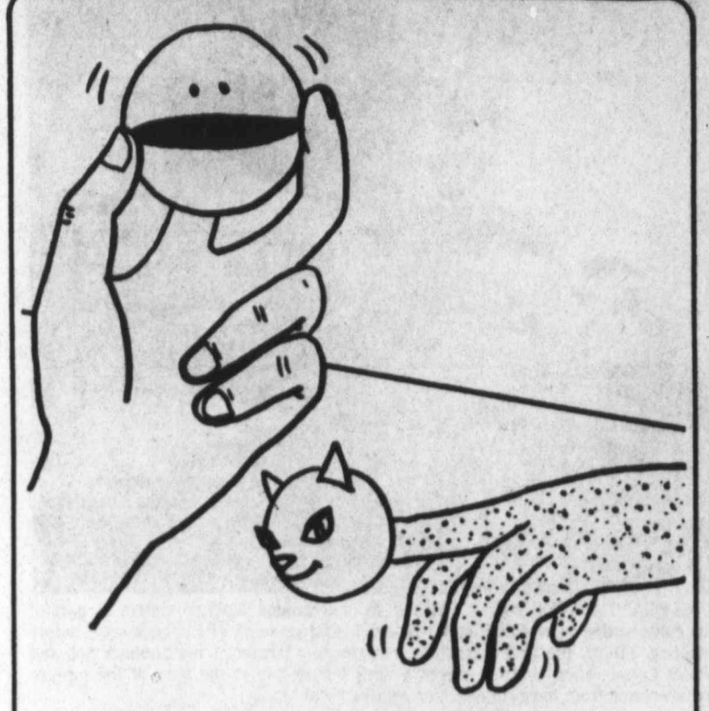

The ultimate responsibility for the safe and functional operation of a car lies with the motorist. Therefore, it is prudent that he learn the basics of vehicle operation in order to:

(1) Be able to get the car running again, at least long enough to get to a reputable garage.

(2) Know basically what the problem is so he won't be "snowed" by a silver-tongued salesman trying to turn a loose wire into a major repair bill.

There are two approaches to learning about your car, and both of them are equally effective. If you live near a college, or if your high school offers vocational training of students, you have 99 percent of the problem licked.

Simply get together with twelve or fifteen other interested motorists and ask the school or college to hold a short course in auto mechanics. The 10 hour course could be arranged as a club project, and many employers are developing such training for employees.

Tips Given On Making 'Kicky' Ball Puppet

By SHARI LEWIS

Give most folks a hollow ball, say "make a puppet" and what do they do? Cut a hole in the ball and stick their pointer finger into it. The thumb and middle fingers become arms and — poof! — it's a puppet. Now, I will admit that that kind of hand puppet is very workable, but it's not as kicky or funny as it might be.

Here's a kicky ball puppet: Put a glove on your hand. Cut a hole in the ball, plop it onto your middle finger (instead of the pointer) and stick it straight out. The other fingers of that hand walk on the table and become crawly legs that can prance, dance or kick (I said this puppet would be kicky). Add features and enjoy!

And here's funny one: Have someone not only cut a hole in the ball for your finger, but also cut a very big slit above the hole, to be the puppet's mouth. With felt-tipped pen, draw features. Put your pointer finger into the hole and hold your thumb and middle fingers out to the sides so that they become the puppet's hands.

Here's what makes this ball puppet especial funny! He makes himself open and close his mouth to talk by squeezing and releasing the sides of his mouth with his own hands (actually, your thumb and middle finger do the squeezing).

FRIDAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: A lady spent 35 cents for groceries. She handed the grocer a 50-cent piece. The grocer said, "I'm sorry, I can't give you change from 50 cents, but I can if you give me a dollar." What coins did the grocer have in his cash register?

ANSWER: He had a quarter and four dimes.

Shock Treatments Aid Beef

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Shock treatment for beef carcasses produces tenderer meat than traditionally chilled carcasses, say researchers at the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Scientists of the USDA's Science and Education Administration say a two-to three-minute shock applied by passing electricity between probes in each end of the carcass speeds up the onset of muscle stiffening and prevents excess shortening of muscle fibers that make meat tougher.

Other advantages, they said, include savings in labor and chilling costs and storage space, and fresher and brighter looking meat with more uniform color.

Electrically-shocked beef can be removed from the carcass in less than four hours, they said, instead of the 16-24 hour time lapse needed for conventionally chilled carcasses.

But electric shock works only if the cattle were calm at the time of slaughter. The researchers found the treatment had no effect on meat tenderness if the cattle were frightened or stressed before slaughter.

Electric Light Celebrating 100th Birthday

A re-enactment of the miracle of light will be staged Oct. 21 at Greenfield Village, near Detroit, where more than 85 original historic buildings re-create three centuries of Americana.

Among these is the Menlo Park, N.J., laboratory where Edison created the light bulb. Fifty years ago, auto pioneer Henry Ford brought Edison, then 82, President Herbert Hoover and some 400 dignitaries to the site to honor the inventor.

The scene will be recreated this fall when the century-old experiment is re-enacted for 400 leaders from the fields of business, science, education and the arts, and politics.

Ford and Edison were close friends, with the automaker describing the inventor to the nation's youth as a model. He pointed out that Edison not only invented the light bulb, but also the electric generator, electrical transmission equipment, the phonograph, power stations and other devices.

"The American spirit of endeavor as represented in its fullness by Thomas Alva Edison," said Ford, "is the real wealth of the nation."

Horror Exhibit Adds More Gore

LONDON (UPI) — There's a new load of gore and bloodsed at London's oddest tourist attraction, the London Dungeon.

New horror exhibits were added early this winter to the ones already showing people hanging by their thumbs, slicing other people to bits, people with arrows in their eyes or heads off or stretched over the headsman's block. The London Dungeon, at 34 Tooley Street, is open every day.

Terraces Retain Rain, Boost Dryland Yields

By KATHLEEN HARRIS
Avalanche-Journal Farm Writer

It was a droughty summer for the 1978 cotton crop in West Texas and area dryland crops suffered severely. But even though only one good shower fell on Bill Piercy's dryland acreage near Woodrow, the Lubbock County farmer averaged one-half bale per acre, compared with the one fifth bale per acre for other area dryland farms.

Piercy, the 1979 outstanding conservation farmer of the Lubbock Soil and Water Conservation District, was able to increase his yield simply by terracing the land to catch moisture.

The jovial, red-haired farmer revealed a proud grin as he recalled what he did to receive "the first award I ever got for farming."

"We finished the terracing in the late spring of 1977," Piercy recollected, "just in time for planting. With the increase in yield, I feel like the terraces paid for themselves in one year."

Piercy said the irrigation wells on the 220 acres were marginal and were shut down, leaving moisture caught by the terraces and internal blocks between terraces as the only source of watering the crop.

"This will be the third crop on the terraces," he pointed out. "They are settling now and are easier to cultivate."

In addition to the 220-acre dryland farm, Piercy farms two more Lubbock County farms for a total of 599 acres and also owns farm land in Hockley and Cochran counties. All have conservations plans on them.

"The contract for the Great Plains Conservation Program on my dryland farm will expire in December," Piercy noted, "but I will continue with the practices that have been suggested by the Soil Conservation Service."

Piercy, who has farmed in Lubbock County for 27 years, broadcasts wheat in the fall before stripping the cotton. The wheat is plowed under during March, serving as a blowing sand deterrent until that time.

"I put a whirlwind seeder on the back of a small tractor laying the seed on top of the ground," Piercy explained. "During the last cultivation of the cotton, the seed are covered somewhat."

Piercy said the wheat had to be plowed up no later than April 1 to avoid taking too much moisture out of the soil.

"The SCS helps farmers with the engineering necessary to improve the land," Piercy said. "I can discuss an idea with the SCS people and get the engineering know-how, even if I intend to pay for the treatment with my own funds."

Under the Great Plains Conservation Program, the SCS picks up 60 percent of the tab and the farmer pays the balance.

On his irrigated Lubbock County farms, Piercy had five irrigation wells tied together in one underground pipeline, concentrating five water sets into one.

"Not only does this cut down on labor, truck wear and fuel," he said, "but I can be watering on one side of the farm and plowing on the other. With different water sets, we would be locked down."

Piercy waters once before planting, irrigating every other row for 12 hours. Piercy waters on the same rows throughout the season.

"Even though the remaining conservation contract will be finished this year," Piercy added, "there is still more to do in the future, especially on the irrigated land.

"You have to keep in mind water, soil and energy savings," he said. "Expenses are getting so high, the farmer has to conserve."

Though the irrigated farm that produced an average of 1¼ bales per acre in 1978 is reasonably flat, Piercy pointed to a low area lake.

"I plant wheat in the low area to keep the weeds down and keep the crop clean, shredding it in May so it doesn't count as an allotment crop.

"But in the future I am considering digging a deeper hole to concentrate the water," he said, "and installing a pump to make use of the water."

Piercy also utilizes wheat around the turnrows to hold sand down and control weeds.

Since Piercy is strictly a cotton producer and there is no rotation program, the farmer said he spreads barnyard manure on about one-fourth of his operation each year to add humus to the soil. Piercy said a local feedlot applies the manure for about $3 per ton and he uses about 10 tons every four years.

A graduate of Texas Tech University with a degree in marketing and management, Piercy says farming has been good to his family, helping him and his wife, Jackie, raise and educate two boys and two girls.

With the use of conservation methods, Bill Piercy is trying to assure that natural resources will be passed on to future generations.

PRE-PLANT WATERING — Utilizing an underground pipeline system as part of his conservation plan, Bill Piercy irrigates his farms south of Lubbock once before planting. Piercy, the 1979 outstanding conservation farmer of the Lubbock Soil and Water Conservation District, places a thick burlap bag at the base of the pipe to avoid erosion from the gushing water. Hay Production Ranks High Among Valuable Field Crops

By RODERICK TURNBULL
Kansas City Board of Trade

KANSAS CITY — The feed grain business is inextricably tied to the livestock and poultry business. Livestock and poultry numbers and the prosperity of the feeders have a major impact on feed prices.

However, the available feeds include a lot of things besides the major grains — hay as an example.

And hay, while it often is overlooked in supply and demand discussions, turns out to be one of the most valuable crops in America.

In fact, even in the grain trade such as at the Board of Trade in Kansas City, where efforts are made to keep abreast of all facets of the business, it comes as somewhat of a surprise to learn, from U. S. Department of Agriculture reports, that in 1978 hay was the third most valuable field crop in the United States, being placed ahead of wheat, which stood fourth.

Values on crops are estimated on total production, rather than on sales. Corn is the most valuable crop and in 1978 the total production was worth $14,888,952,000. Soybeans were next at $12,244,852,000, then came hay at $6,579,701,000 followed by wheat at $5,280,467,000.

While most hay is consumed on farms where it is produced, sales values are determined by supply and demand just the same as on grains.

This year, because of livestock values, heavy rates of feeding, a lack of carryover of hay supplies, including alfalfa pellets, hay prices are starting off much stronger than a year ago.

Alfalfa dehydrators are noting that the cleanup on 1978-produced pellets is about the best ever. Some say that the cleanup on old pellets will be 100 percent before the new crop gets on the market.

The harvest is just getting well started on the harvesting and pelleting of the 1979 alfalfa crop. Prices started out about 25 percent higher than a year ago.

But, there won't be as many dehydrators at work this year because several closed down in 1978. In fact, dehydrator numbers, and capacity, have been on the decline for several years. The obvious reason, some dehydrator owners say, is that they weren't making enough money.

About 50 percent of the alfalfa pellets produced are fed to cattle, with the remainder going to other farm livestock and pets. Alfalfa pellets generally go to feed manufacturers, while baled hay is sold directly to cattle feeders or at least is farm-used.

Baled hay prices vary widely across the country, influenced greatly by local demand. But, within the hay and feed trade, the general basing point for dehydrated alfalfa prices is what is called Alfalfa Center in the Platte River Valley of Nebraska.

The Department of Agriculture's crop reporting service which reports on hay prices across the country starts its list each time with Alfalfa Center values.

This year early in May baled alfalfa prices were just about double those of a year ago-that is, $20 to $30 a ton last year, $45 this year in bale piles in the Platte Valley, Neb. area. In South Central Kansas prices a year ago were at $25 to $45, while this year they were $60 to $65. In Chino County, Calif., they were $65 to $75 a ton (delivered) a year ago, while this year the quotes were $108 to $110.

Quotes from other locations showed about the same range. In most cases, the recent price quotations were on the tag end of supplies left over from the 1978 harvests. Some cutting had started in Southern California.

A year ago, hay supplies were ample and cattle farmers were just coming off a poor year, traders in hay and pellets recall last winter there were some drought pockets, the weather was unusually severe and cattle prices were high.

Cow herd owners recognized the value of the cows and their calves so they were taking good care of them. They fed a lot of hay and that helps explain why the new season in starting virtually from scratch with most of the old crop already disposed of.

This doesn't mean that there's no hay left at all, the traders say, because some farmers always are holding for a higher price and often they hold too long. Also, some farmers keep reserve supplies on their farms as insurance.

Hay often is used to cheapen feed costs when livestock values are low. But the pellet producers say their sales are tied mostly to prosperous feeding operations rather than to maintenance programs. They are counting on this year being a prosperous one for cattle feeders and therefore a good year for the dehydrators.

In addition, bookings have been heavy this season for the export of alfalfa pellets from the 1979 crop. In fact, reports indicate that between 100,000 and 200,000 tons already have been booked, which is regarded as a very bullish factor because 200,000 tons would represent almost one-fifth of the total production this year.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

A BILL TO RAISE THE COTTON LOAN floor was approved last week by the House Agriculture Committee.

The bill would set a base minimum loan rate of 50.23 cents per pound on the 1980 and 1981 crops, up from the present floor of 48 cents. The new floor would be equal to the base loan for the 1979 crop.

One provision would require Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland to offer cotton growers special payments if they idle 10 to 20 percent of their acreage this year, including acreage withheld from planting because of weather-related conditions.

The Carter administration objects to the acreage provision on grounds that signup for 1979 farm programs ended April 30 and most of the cotton crop will have been planted before enactment of the bill.

THE COTTON MEASURE, ADOPTED by voice vote, also contains two special provisions for farmers hit by disasters.

One would allow cotton, wheat, feed grain or rice growers who are unable to plant their normal crop this year because of a natural disaster to plant a second, different crop.

They then still could receive a partial "prevented planting" indemnity payment on the first if the value of the second is lower than what a full disaster payment would be.

Present law disqualifies farmers from prevented-planting payments if they even attempt a second crop.

The new provision would ensure, for example, that a cotton farmer who planted a late soybean crop because weather prevented his normal cotton plantings would receive at least as much total return as he would have under the current disaster payments program.

If the return on the farmer's soybean crop is less than the total disaster payment he would have received for the lost cotton crop, he could collect the difference from the government in the form of a smaller disaster payment.

THE OTHER SPECIAL SECTION, aimed primarily at Californians, would allow 1978 cotton program disaster payments for farmers who can prove their feed grain crops were planted before the government announced 1978 production-control guidelines.

A farmer growing both cotton and corn, for example, now must comply with any acreage set-aside goals for both programs to qualify for deficiency payments, price support loans, or disaster payments under either program.

Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., said many California farmers lost cotton crops last year but were unable to collect disaster payments because the grain they planted before the feed grain program was announced violated those guidelines.

The cotton bill was introduced by Rep. David Bowen, D-Miss., chairman of the House Cotton Subcommittee. Bowen and Rep. Tom Hagedorn, R-Minn., introduced the disaster payment amendments, which would apply only to 1979 crops.

In a letter to committee chairman Thomas Foley, D-Wash., Bergland noted that Congress voted a cotton loan rate formula into the 1977 farm bill.

The intent of the formula was to set a minimum price support and guarantee a competitive price for U. S. cotton in the world market, he said. Under that formula, the loan level could drop from the 50.23 cents in 1979 back to the minimum 48 cents in 1980.

"The quick-fix approach of legislating higher minimum loan rates every time the loan rate would go down because of declining prices violates the original intent and purpose of the 1977 act," Bergland said.

Foley is said to be planning to send the cotton bill to the floor as a separate piece of legislation rather than as part of a broader bill, also approved by the committee earlier this month, to amend the 1977 farm act by increasing grain target prices.

Return Of Rustling Spurred By Increasing Meat Prices

Cattlemen say rustling has increased in recent months almost as fast as meat prices have soared in supermarkets across the country.

The problem has spread to the East. Truck-driving descendants of Old West cattle rustlers have invaded central Maryland, stealing and butchering livestock and prompting calls for frontier justice.

"There used to be a law that cattle rustlers would get hung," said 57-year-old Carroll County, Md., farmer Donald T. Folk. "They ought to hang a few now and wake 'em up a little bit."

The rustling problem is apparently also on the increase in Florida, Colorado and most other cattle-producing states, although statistics are virtually nonexistent and its extent is hard to pin down.

"Typically, we do have increased problems with theft when prices are on the upsurge as they have been the last couple months," said Bill Jones of the National Cattlemen's Association in Denver.

Cattlemen, who were losing as much as $100 a head back in 1974, have intentionally thinned their herds, thus increasing demand and forcing up the price of live beef on the hoof from 40 cents a pound in 1977 to an all-time high of about 75 cents a pound in recent weeks.

This is the same industry that as recently as five years ago saw some ranchers decide to shoot their own cattle rather than pay the cost of feeding them and then have to sell them later at a loss.

Although Jones said theft reports have been "rather isolated," he said "they have come all the way from Florida — clear across the country."

Don King, general manager of the 14,000-member Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association in Fort Worth, estimated that rustling in the Texas-Oklahoma area is up 30 percent in recent months.

"I suspect in your other cattle producing states it is pretty much of the same thing," he said. "There's a lot of ways of stealing cattle," he said. "We have them stolen almost every way you can imagine."

King's 102-year-old association is so intent on stopping rustling that it pays the salaries of 32 special Texas Rangers who investigate livestock thefts.

"This is a cattle state," he said. "We take a dim view of people stealing our livestock."

Neither police nor cattlemen say the rustling is out of control, although they say the financial impact can be staggering to the producer who loses several tons of beef on the hoof just before it goes to market.

Maryland farmer Folk said he was sound asleep one night this winter at his 180-acre farm near the Pennsylvania border when thieves slipped into his barn a couple hundred yards away and made off with nine Black Angus steers.

"If I had 'em now, they'd be worth a lot of money," Folk said.

The steers, which weighed more than a thousand pounds a piece, were collectively worth about $5,600 when they were taken and would bring about $8,100 now, Folk said.

Walt Bay, a Maryland extension agent, estimated that rustling in two central Maryland counties has affected less than 1 percent of the region's 3,000 or so farmers, but has unquestionably been on the rise since meat prices shot up.

"I think that has a whole lot to do with it," he said. "These animals are real valuable right now."

Newcomer, who thinks some of the rustlers may be carving up their booty to feed themselves, said with chagrin, "Everybody likes a good steak once in a while."

In Western states, cattlemen believe the best way to combat rustling is with a two to 10-year prison sentence, and the next best way is with a hot branding iron — a tradition often not followed by cowpokes in the East.

In Maryland, Folk, for instance, said branding would only help him if someone happened to recognize his brand on a stolen animal at a livestock market. Western states use much more sophisticated branding, registration and inspection systems.

In the East, police and local agriculture officials simply warn farmers to keep closer watch over their herds and their neighbor's property, and to report anyone near their livestock who looks suspicious.

They say cattle grazing in pastures out of eyesight or along major roadways are in the greatest danger of turning up missing.

The open road is equally advantageous to rustlers in Texas where King reports an increase in stolen livestock being taken out-of-state.

Insurance against rustling would simply cost too much, according to both King and Jones of the Cattlemen's Association.

"Unless it is on a real valuable herd sire or stallion or something, or racing type animal that has a tremendous value, then it probably would not be a feasible thing to do," said King.

Folk is one of several dozen Maryland livestock producers to discover in recent months that rising meat prices have made their livestock targets for rustlers.

Sometimes the animals are slaughtered and stripped of their meat right in the farmer's field.

"They leave the head and the hide and the hooves and the meat's gone," said Maryland State Police Det. Sgt. W. L. Newcomer of Frederick.

Folk, who in a lifetime of farming said he had never had livestock stolen before, has been forced to change his methods of operation.

"I got 'em locked up now," he said of his cows. "If you want 'em, you're going to have a problem to get 'em."

Avacados Plentiful; Price Drop Expected

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A 50 percent increase in California's avocado crop size this year means plenty of midshipman's butter to make into guacamole and use in salads and other dishes, and retail prices in the three, four or five for $1 range, says an industry spokesman.

The lowest prices are expected to start in California and spread eastward, reaching the Midwest and East. The crop totals 314 million pounds. The big jump is attributed to more trees.

The Florida crop, in markets from July through January, is estimated at 44 million pounds this year, up 46.5 percent from 1977.

Companies Starting To Rebuild Depleted Reserves For Winter

TULSA, Okla. (Special) -As oil companies begin the task of rebuilding depleted stocks in preparation for next winter and governments in the industrialized countries review plans for cutting consumption, Iran has reemphasized the volatility of global oil supplies and costs by announcing another rise in crude oil surcharges.

Throughout the industrialized world, reports the Oil and Gas Journal, there are growing signs for consumers and politicians alike that the Iranian shutdown was not an isolated event in the system that has been wiped out by partial restoration of supplies by the new revolutionary government.

In parts of Europe, opening of gasoline stations is restricted. There is widespread allocation of motor fuels and most types of industrial and commercial fuels.

Ministers from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meet again in Geneva soon. It's an odds-on bet they will raise the base price for the third quarter of the year and reaffirm the freedom of individual countries to levy any surcharge the market will stand, according to the Journal.

So far, there are no firm plans for a fall meeting of OPEC ministers to review prices for the final quarter of the year. But no one should be surprised if the next ministerial session sets the date for the meeting late in September followed by the traditional gathering late in December.

Whether prices continue to rise steadily for the rest of 1979 in response to tight market conditions depends on a number of interrelated factors, none of which is easily predictable.

Foremost is the willingness of the new Iranian regime to hold production at 4 million barrels of oil per day and the technical ability of National Iranian Oil Co. to keep exports flowing at the current rate of 3.2 million to 3.3 million barrels per day.

In addition, there are these thorny questions:

—Can the International Energy Agency achieve its proposed 5 percent (2 million barrels per day) cut in consumption, given doubts about U.S. ability to deliver the promised 1 million barrel-per-day curb on demand?

—Can oil companies rebuild stocks this summer so they start next winter with sufficient reserves to deal with worse-than-average weather conditions or another interruption in supplies?

—Will price increases already in the pipeline produce an immediate economic slump with a sudden drop in demand for OPEC oil?

—Will the wedge driven between the U.S. and Saudi Arabia by the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty finally persuade the Saudis to abandon what little influence they have left for moderation in pricing and other policies?

—Will OPEC countries which increased production when Iranian output slumped and finally disappeared turn up the taps again if Iranian exports falter once more?

—Will oil exporters finally tackle the complex issue of production programming, responding to reductions in demand from the industrialized countries with cuts in output that would maintain members' ability to levy surcharges and review prices every quarter?

The Journal points out that Iran's announcement of higher prices came out of the blue, just as OPEC sources were hesitantly forecasting that crude costs might remain stable until the next ministerial meeting.

NIOC said it will add another 60 cents per barrel—a 3.6 percent increase—to Iranian export schedules, bringing light crude prices to $17.17 per barrel and heavy crude to $16.64 per barrel.

Further price increases were in response to market conditions, said the state oil corporation.

The queue of companies that signed supply contracts running to the end of the year will have to pay up or back out. In the current tight market, it is doubtful whether any of the buyers can afford the luxury of rejecting higher prices.

More important is the effect Iranian action will have on other exporting countries in the Persian Gulf. So far, each new surcharge introduced by one of the producing countries on the gulf has been repeated by neighboring countries.

But Middle East sources say there is a chance some Persian Gulf states will delay action on higher prices until the OPEC ministerial meeting.

Only days before the latest Iranian move, Iraq became the last of the major exporters outside Saudi Arabia to bring its surcharge into the $1.80 to $1.90-per-barrel range.

There is no reason to believe that Kuwait, Abu Dhabi, Qatar, and Iraq won't realign their prices to the new benchmark from Iran.

Agency Maintains Low Profile In View Of Gasoline Shortage

By MAX B. SKELTON

HOUSTON (AP) — A spokesman for the nation's petroleum refiners says one federal agency with a direct responsibility for several programs being blamed for current gasoline shortages has been extremely quiet.

Urvan R. Sternfels, general counsel for the National Petroleum Refiners Association, said the Environmental Protection Agency has remained silent while the oil industry and the Department of Energy have been sharing most of the public's blame for the shortages.

"The Environmental Protection Agency has thus far successfully avoided most of the public criticism of its role in reducing gasoline production by maintaining a low profile," Sternfels said.

In a report to the trade group's membership, Sternfels said the EPA has not yet responded to President Carter's April 5 announcement that action would be taken to permit refiners to use additional amounts of lead in gasoline to increase gasoline production.

"As yet, no manifestation of the directive has appeared," he said.

"Spokesmen for the EPA have repeatedly suggested that publication of two actions dealing with lead additives, which would have as their objective increased gasoline production, was imminent."

Sternfels said the more immediate measure is reported to be a suspension of enforcement of the 0.8 gram per gallon average lead standard for those refineries presently contrained by the lead phasedown limit that would expire Oct. 1. After that date, he said, the second action under consideration would take effect.

"Presently, all but small refiners would be required to average no more than 0.5 grams per gallon of lead, over the entire gasoline pool, under the phasedown regulations," Sternfels said.

"EPA's draft proposal would extend the 0.8 grams per gallon limit for one year until Oct. 1, 1980. We are told that some form of certification or assurance that extra quantities of unleaded gasoline would have to result in order for a refinery to take advantage of either the short term suspension of enforcement or the one year extension of the 0.8 grams per gallon standard."

Sternfels said neither of the actions seem to raise such complex issues as to justify the EPA delay that has occurred.

"Some industry and government officials suggest that EPA is holding the proposed lead actions hostage in hope of extracting an early, favorable amendment to the DOE regulations on the issue of establishing a price differential between leaded and unleaded grades of gasoline," he said.

"EPA officials have denied that any such motive is behind the delay. We are told that 'questions have arisen,' which suggests that EPA feels no urgency, since the agency is not sharing the limelight generated by gasoline shortages."

The EPA has argued for a reduction in the price differential between leaded and unleaded, suggesting that "switching" by motorists was primarily encouraged by an average retail differential of 5 to 6 cents a gallon.

"Most observers believe that if unleaded supplies continue to be short, switching will become commonplace for a majority of drivers with catalytic converter equipped cars as a matter of necessity and not because of price or performance improvement," Sternfels said.

He said the EPA also has made no decision on a request by Tenneco Inc. for a temporary suspension of enforcement of the MMT Additive ban this summer. Tenneco estimates such action would allow the industry to produce an additional 340,000 barrels a day of unleaded gasoline at the expense of leaded regular.

"It seems the EPA, which has as its primary mission the protection of the environment, has become preoccupied with deliberating on how it can avoid any tacit admission its policies on gasoline additives are in part responsible for shortages," Sternfels said.

"As the summer progresses, and more emission control devices are irreparably damaged by lead, the clouds of pollution that ensue may harbor growing storms of protest from those concerned with the environment, who might well ask why EPA was busy developing alibis instead of positive solutions."

Sternfels said it is an irrefutable fact that no matter how much unleaded gasoline refiners produce without MMT the additive's use will provide significant additional quantities.

"And we suspect the motoring public will continue to demand all that we can supply," he said.

Railroad Commission Reports Discoveries

AUSTIN (Special) -Texas operators reported 45 gas and 17 oil discoveries during the May 1-15, 1979, period, according to the Railroad Commission's Oil and Gas Division.

In the year-earlier period, 60 gas and 24 oil discoveries were filed with the state's energy regulatory agency.

Through the first 4 1/2 months of 1979, Texas operators have reported 507 gas and 168 oil discoveries, against 362 gas and 169 oil discoveries in the year-earlier period. Successful exploratory and field completions in the 4 1/2 months of 1979 total 2,855 oil and 2,122 gas wells, against 3,008 oil and 1,983 gas completions in the same period last year.

Gas discoveries in the first half of May, 1979, included 17 in deep South Texas, 12 in Southeast Texas, five in West Central Texas, four in East Central Texas, three in the Refugio area, two in East Texas and one each in the Lubbock and Panhandle areas.

Oil discoveries included six in West Central Texas, three in deep South Texas, two each in the Midland, Lubbock and Panhandle areas and one each in the San Antonio and East Texas areas.

In the May 1-15 period, operators reported that 172 exploratory and field tests wound up as dry holes.

New applications for permits to drill oil and gas tests totaled 887 in the first half of May, compared with 900 in the same period of 1978.

Applications to drill, deepen, plug back and for service wells in the May 1-15 period amounted to 1,027 against 1,138 a year earlier.

Operators filed 214 amended applications to drill. A year earlier they submitted 230 amended requests.

There have been 6,874 applications to drill new oil and gas tests this year, against 7,258 in the same period of 1978. Applications to drill, deepen, plugback and for service wells so far this year total 8,091, against 8,760 in the first 4 1/2 months of 1978.

The commission also reported that Texas oil and gas wells produced 548,834,370 Mcf of gas in February, down 6.26 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 473,574,380 Mcf and reflected a 7.37 percent decrease from the February, 1978, volume. Marketed production is the total gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in February totaled 246,833,328 Mcf and included 72,742,970 Mcf of imported gas.

Exports of Texas-produced gas in February totaled 174,090,358 Mcf and reflected a 4.39 percent increase from the year earlier month. Natural gas Pipeline Co. of America was the month's largest exporter, moving 71,971,692 Mcf of gas of which 40,980,758 Mcf was Texas-produced gas.

Texas gas production in February came from 197,758 oil and gas wells.

In January, Texas wells produced 605,465,491 Mcf of gas. Marketed gas production in January totaled 524,849,208 Mcf.

Governor Appoints Keplinger To Post

HOUSTON (Special) -H. F. Keplinger has been reappointed to the Interstate Oil Compact Commission by Gov. Bill Clements.

Keplinger, president of Keplinger & Associates Inc., an international energy consulting firm, served on the commission in 1978. He was originally appointed to the post by Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

The Interstate Oil Compact Commission, headquartered in Oklahoma City, is made up of 30 petroleum producing states and this year is chaired by Gov. Jerry Brown of California. The organization was formed in 1935.

Keplinger, whose firm has offices in Houston, Tulsa, Denver and Casper, Wyo., is an acknowledged expert in the energy field. He is a graduate of the University of Tulsa and the University of Texas with advanced degrees in petroleum engineering. For the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, Keplinger will serve on the Geothermal Resources Committee.

THE IOCC is regarded as one of the most influential bodies in the U.S. concerned with oil and gas matters. Besides the membership, limited to the 30 producing states, seven additional states hold associate memberships in the organization.

THE ROUSTABOUT

By RAY WESTBROOK

COAL CONVERSION in Texas is expected to reach 195 million tons per year by the end of this century, according to the American Institute of Chemical Engineers.

A study presented at the organization's 86th annual meeting projected an increase in coal conversion to other energy forms from the current 24 million tons per year to a volume approximately eight times 1979's level.

Hal Cooper, author of a technical paper on the use of coal, expects an increasing shift towards lignite at the expense of Western coal because of applications of "best available control technology" on all new coal-fired power plants.

Cooper, environmental studies coordinator at the Austin Center of Energy Studies, indicated that Texas will spend about $23.3 billion for capital costs and $7.2 billion annually for operating expenses by the year 2000 in order to comply with control technology requirements.

JAMES L. KELLER of the science and technology division of Union Oil Co. says there is little doubt remaining that current fuels will have to be replaced by alternate sources within 10 to 20 years.

Speaking at a midyear refining meeting of the American Petroleum Institute, Keller described a variety of problems posed by two of the leading fuel candidates—ethanol and methanol.

Keller told the assembly that while the alcohols methanol and ethanol are among the several alternative fuels that could possibly be used as blending stocks or replacements for gasoline, "there are important differences between them which are often ignored."

He said that at present, methanol is virtually all made from natural gas, but that it can also be made from carbonaceous raw materials such as coal, wood or cellulosic wastes that can be converted to synthesis gas.

Approximately 93 percent of industrial ethanol is now made by hydration of ethylene and the rest by fermentation, in large part from byproducts such as paper plant sufite liquor, distress grain and other products.

"Both alcohols have a common problem in that they would separate from gasoline after contact with small amounts of water such as is usually found in the gasoline lines in most cars," according to Keller.

The result would be a layer of gasoline and a layer of water and alcohol.

"THE ALCOHOL-WATER layer tends to pick up dirt or sediment, it can stall the engine upon reaching the carburetor, and it is seriously corrosive to steel and to some metals commonly used for carburetor bodies and other fuel system parts," he said.

Keller points out that bulk prices for ethanol are about 2.5 to 3 times that of gasoline per gallon and that "economic analyses of gasohol, a blend of 10 percent agriculturally derived ethanol with gasoline—have been predominately negative.

"They include studies by the operator of a large Midwest grain-alcohol plant, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and several farm-state economists, one of whom compares blending fermentation alcohol with gasoline to stretching hamburger with filet mignon."

Keller cited a Department of Energy statement which estimated that "if all practicably available farm land were used for farm crop plantings in excess of those required for food production, the ethanol produced from the crops and crop residues would satisfy no more than eight percent of today's total liquid fuels energy demand."

THE AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE reports that crude oil, gasoline and heating oil stocks at the end of April were down sharply from the previous year.

API says crude oil stocks on April 30 amounted to 321.8 million barrels—6.2 percent less than the 343.2-million-barrel stock level of April 30, 1978.

Gasoline stocks stood at 232 million barrels—6.9 percent lower than the 249.1-million-barrel level of last year, while heating oil stocks were 14.5 percent lower—116.5 million barrels compared to 136.3 million barrels.

Refinery utilization, according to API, was 2 percent higher in April than during the comparable month of last year. For the month, U.S. refineries operated at 84.9 percent of an operable capacity of 17,384,000 barrels per day. In April, 1978, U.S. refineries operated at 83.2 percent of an operable capacity of 17,077,000.
