EPA expected to propose weaker air standards

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, under attack for lax management of its hazardous waste program, is about to propose weakening the standards for one of the country's most prevalent air pollutants, informed sources say.

The agency will propose allowing the level of particulate pollution to increase. One analysis done for the agency, however, warned the weakened standard could lead to hundreds of extra deaths each year.

The agency disputes this contention and says the looser standard has received the blessing of its Science Advisory Board as being well within the limit needed to protect public health.

Particulates are small particles suspended in the air. Included in this category is dust from dirt roads and soot from utility coal furnaces. Two-thirds of particulate pollution comes from industrial sources and 18 percent from autos.

It is particulate pollution that accounts for the grime prevalent in many cities and is the pollution which aggravates problems of people suffering from respiratory illnesses.

Of the 218 counties the EPA put on notice in January for failing to meet national air standards, 89 are violating particulate levels.

Many counties — by some estimates 45 percent — would comply with the loosened standards, thus removing the threat that they could lose millions of dollars in federal aid and face bans on certain types of construction.

Administration sources, who talked on condition that they not be named, said EPA Administrator Anne M. Burford approved the proposed new standard in February and is expected to put it out for public comment sometime this month.

As part of the change, the agency is scrapping its current program which measures total suspended particulates — all particles in the air. In its place, the agency would propose controlling only those particles measuring one-2,500th of an inch or less — 10 microns.

The agency contends that it is the small particles that do the most harm because they can penetrate deeper into the lungs.

Environmentalists do not dispute this contention, but they say that in choosing to monitor only the small particles, the agency has not selected an equivalent standard but one that is much looser.

The EPA is proposing setting the national health limit for particulates at 180 micrograms per cubic meter measured over a 24-hour period.

Environmentalists argued that instead of 180 micrograms the agency should pick 153 micrograms. They say the proposed EPA standard represents an 18 percent weakening of the 24-hour standard and weakens the annual average by 41 percent.

The Natural Resources Defense Council made available tables from a report of a private consultant working for the EPA. The consultant estimated that there could be as many as 416 increased deaths annually from the looser standard compared to all areas meeting the current standard.

"This change would be an environmental and public health disaster," said David Doniger, an attorney with the environmental group.

An administration source, who talked on condition he not be named, said the study, done for the EPA by Mathtech Inc. of Princeton, N.J., used various health studies which have been attacked as inaccurate.

Probe expands to include alleged 90-name 'hit list'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is investigating what one lawmaker calls a "hit list" containing the names and political leanings of scientists who served as advisers to the Environmental Protection Agency.

The list, which includes 90 names and comments such as "deep-six him," surfaced in two congressional subcommittees Tuesday as the probe of EPA's activities expanded. The investigation was continuing in closed sessions today.

Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., chairman of a House Science and Technology subcommittee, released the list of names, which carry no title or other identification. Several of the names are those of people who were appointed to EPA technical advisory boards before President Reagan took office in 1981.

"I have received very disturbing information regarding a so-called 'hit list' at EPA which largely deals with members of (the EPA's) scientific advisory board," Scheuer said.

Scheuer's staff would say only that the list came from an EPA employee whom they regarded as reliable.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., confirmed the existence of the list and said it would be part of a broadening probe by his House Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee.

Asked whether she had anything to do with the list, EPA Administrator Anne M. Burford responded: "Absolutely not." EPA spokesman Rusty Brashear declined further comment, saying the authenticity and origin of the list had not been established.

Louis J. Cordia, a special assistant in EPA's office of federal activities who served on the Reagan EPA transition team after the 1980 election, said he had not seen the list but that it sounded similar to lists that were mailed to the transition team, unsigned and unsolicited.

"No one on the transition team ever used that type of information," said Cordia, who worked for the conservative Heritage Foundation in 1980.

Loeffler, industry leaders favor natural gas decontrol

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Initial reaction to President Reagan's proposal to deregulate the natural gas industry has been favorable both in Washington, D.C., and Texas, oil industry sources say. More will be known next week, when details and ramifications of the bill surface, they add.

Texas Congressman Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, called the bill introduced to Congress Monday a vehicle to "eliminate...regulatory lunacy we have experienced for 29 years."

Under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, prices for some types of gas were to be decontrolled in a phased fashion through 1985. Reagan's bill takes a different tack: it would decontrol new gas and old gas under renegotiated contracts immediately.

No cost increases, beyond those caused by inflation, could be passed through to the consumer until Jan. 1, 1986.

"We anticipate there will be a lot of amendments" to the bill, said Judith Kerr, a spokeswoman for Pioneer Corporation in Amarillo.

Control of natural gas has disrupted the market, industry spokesmen say. It affects Pioneer's subsidiaries, Energas and Sharp Drilling Company, as it has other utilities, distributors and drilling companies in Texas.

"This industry doesn't want to lose its market," Ms. Kerr said, "and we must cover our costs — for those in the pipeline business, utilities, and consumers. When you have price sensitivity, you see it has accomplished conservation on the part of the consumer.

"The regulatory lunacy we have experienced for 29 years is in the process of being dismantled."

— U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler

"At the same time, we need freedom in the marketplace."

Hearings are scheduled to begin March 9 in the Senate, and a week later in the House, Loeffler said.

"If they handle it (the bill) properly, it's probably going to be what we have wanted them to do all along," said Ed Thompson, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Thompson and several other PBPA members are leaving for Washington today to attend industry conferences and meet with the Congressional delegations from Texas and New Mexico. The decontrol legislation tops the agenda, he said.

The President's proposal has some incentives in it, said Texas Railroad Commission chairman Mack Wallace, "and some things I'm not quite ready to expound on."

Those incentives include immediate decontrol of prices for gas which has never been under contract with a pipeline before and is now under a newly-executed contract, and all old gas covered under re-negotiated contracts. These two categories of gas would be immediately exempted from the previous price controls, and from non-pricing regulations.

Wallace said he was not sure yet if Texas Railroad Commissioners will be called upon to testify in Washington on the decontrol bill.

The bill is based on economic assumptions similar to those which lead to the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, just in reverse, Wallace said. The NGPA set up an elaborate system for pricing 23 separate categories of "old" and "new" gas.

Under Reagan's plan, prices for all new gas and any old gas under renegotiated contracts would be decontrolled.

"The NGPA was based on a shortage of natural gas in 1978, and this bill is based on a surplus. But, it is an aberration," Wallace said. "When the economy is not good, you have a surplus, and I think the economy is going to turn around."

Decontrol 'nothing to fear'

By JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

"We have nothing to fear from gas decontrol, and in the long run we have everything to gain, as consumers," a local professor said Tuesday.

On Monday, Donald P. Hodel, President Reagan's energy secretary, pushed Congress to pass the president's decontrol plan. Hodel claimed the plan would bring consumer gas costs down.

Local views on the plan have ranged from nebulous to very strong. "Some people feel there's no upper limit on natural gas prices. There is: The upper limit is the price of its competition," Odessa professor Dr. Waylon D. Griffin said.

Griffin is chairman of management and marketing, College of Business Administration, at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. He teaches a course in oil and gas marketing.

"If there is decontrol: First, the oil and gas industry will be better able to predict production needs," Griffin said.

"Second, there would be less administration costs associated with pricing gas," as the 23 categories of gas prices would be eliminated under full decontrol.

Third, Griffin believes there will be equilibrium in the market. If gas prices go up, many industrial users can switch to residual fuel oil. This would drive demand for natural gas, and gas prices, downward.

Importantly, fuel oil is a direct competitor with gas for industrial use. About 33 percent of the gas sold in the U.S. is thought to be consumed by industries which have a "dual-fuel" capacity. These industrial users switch from gas to fuel oil, or another energy source, when natural gas prices are on the rise.

This means industrial customers are the marginal users of natural gas, Griffin said. If industries cut use, gas prices will fall, he said.

Industrial gas contracts (there are none in Midland) are regulated by the Texas Railroad Commission.

Griffin thinks removing gas price controls is timely and necessary. Under control measures, he said, "...if the federal government inhibits an industry from growing, what it means in the long run is higher prices — because there will be less of a product produced."

More regulation makes a product harder to produce and sell, Griffin implied.

"There is evidence that gas producers would produce more — under decontrol — than we can consume," he said, "and prices would go down.

Severe storm batters California coast

More than 7,000 people fled flooded neighborhoods as heavy rain and high winds pounded California for a second straight day, battering oceanside houses, blocking roads with mudslides and sending two freak tornadoes through Pasadena and downtown Los Angeles.

The wind and rain stretched the length of the West Coast, from San Diego to Seattle, but the Golden State took the brunt of Tuesday's storm. Nine people were dead in weather-related accidents since the weekend; two other people were missing.

Winds gusted up to 84 mph, up to 10 inches of rain fell in places, power was knocked out to 220,000 homes and businesses and parts of the Sierra Nevada were smothered by 7 feet of new snow.

Meanwhile, two minor earthquakes rattled the Los Angeles area, adding to the confusion but causing no major damage.

"I understand March is supposed to roar in like a lion, but this is getting a little ridiculous," said Inglewood, Calif., police Lt. Dan Cooke.

The weather also delayed Queen Elizabeth II's progress up the California coast, as she canceled today's plans to cruise to San Francisco in the royal yacht in favor of a flight from Long Beach.

The queen and Prince Philip needed a four-wheel-drive vehicle for a steep climb up a flooded lane to reach President Reagan's mountaintop ranch in Santa Barbara on Tuesday for a lunch of enchiladas and tacos.

The storm was moving eastward today, with heavy snow forecast for the southern Rocky Mountains and rain expected for the rest of the nation's western third, the National Weather Service said.

Alex Cunningham, California's director of emergency services, said 2 more inches of rain were forecast today for state coastal areas, with 4 to 6 inches expected in the mountains.

"California is like a sponge at the present time and just simply can't hold any more water," he said.

"We're looking at continuing bad weather into Thursday," said Nolan Duke, of the National Weather Service's Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Reserve Officer Stuart Tiara was killed and two other police were seriously hurt when their helicopter patrolling a tornado-damaged section of south-central Los Angeles hit power lines and crashed Tuesday night.

And an airplane carrying two men disappeared from radar shortly after the pilot radioed he was experiencing problems with the weather, the Civil Air Patrol in Bridgeport, Calif., said.

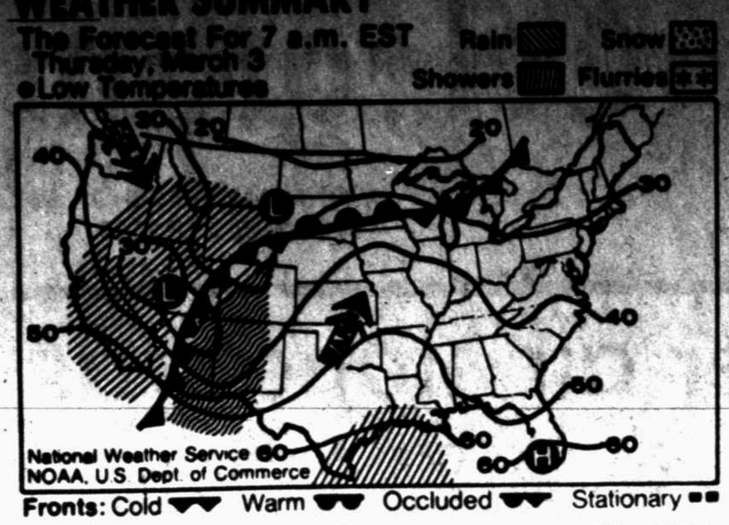
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Rain and showers are forecast through Thursday for most of the West, according to the National Weather Service. The eastern two-thirds of the country will be mainly sunny and warm, with cold weather predicted for the Northwest.

Warm, windy, possibly wet nights due

Warmer nights, gusty winds and a chance of rain are sure signs that spring is just around the corner.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, there's a 20 percent of showers or thunderstorms through Thursday.

Although the Rocky Mountain region should knock some of the wind out of the storm that's sailing this way from the West coast, southwesterly winds are expected to gust through the Tall City at 15-25 mph.

Partly cloudy skies should drop the temperature tonight to the low 50s, while the high Thursday is expected to climb to the upper 70s.

Tuesday's high of 79 was in the ball park range of the record high of 85 set in 1976, while the overnight low of 44 was eons away from the record low of 9 degrees set in 1980.

Freak tornado injures about 25 persons

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A terrified hospital patient "screamed and screamed" as a freak tornado smashed windows and tore down walls when it cut a three-mile path of destruction through Los Angeles.

"It went black and everything went flying through the air outside — huge pieces of wood," said Patricia Goodman, 52, bedridden at Orthopaedic Hospital after hip surgery. "Just like 'The Wizard of Oz.'"

More than 100 buildings were damaged Tuesday and 25 people suffered minor injuries as a rare California twister careened through the southern downtown area.

"There's a boat in the backyard and we don't know where it came from. I'll take an earthquake any day," said Johnny Bradford, who was visiting his mother just a few blocks from the University of Southern California when the twister hit at 8 a.m. USC is at least 10 miles from the sea.

The howling winds also propelled towering surf into the already storm-battered coast, further damaging piers at Santa Monica and Seal Beach and crashing through the windows of a popular Malibu restaurant and slightly injuring one customer late Tuesday, authorities said.

Forty miles away in Pasadena, another twister lifted a car carrying one motorist at least 15 feet in the air, eyewitnesses said, while the National Weather Service said a third tornado may have touched down in Santa Ana.

"It's unbelievable," said Gerald Baker, a resident of the tornado-ravaged section of Los Angeles. "You know we worry about earthquakes, but never this."

The Los Angeles twister caused at least $2.5 million in damage as it struck the huge Convention Center roof and Orthopaedic Hospital.

"It looks like a war zone," Police Chief Daryl Gates said.

Although tornadoes occur every year in Southern California, National Weather Service specialist Dieter Crowley said they are "very rare. Everything has to be just in the right sequence."

No one was killed by the twister itself, but Los Angeles reserve police officer Stuart Tiara, 26, was killed and two others were injured when a helicopter apparently hit a power line and crashed while taking off from an emergency tornado command post Tuesday evening.

More than 200 officers spent the night patrolling a 250-block area that was closed to all but residents and businessmen, and police Officer Sergio Diaz said the department planned to send in officers on horseback this morning. However he said there was only one confirmed report of looting, at a shoe store, and no arrests.

Meanwhile, about 60 to 70 people, including one woman nine months pregnant and another who is epileptic, bunked down in an evacuation center at the girl's gym in Manual Arts High School after eating fried chicken from a fast food restaurant, said Red Cross spokesman Joe Coria.

The search for victims continued today.

"There are people living out there in homes without power and utilities, and we'd like to get them in here," said Chris Coe, another Red Cross spokesman at the disaster center.

"We've got some people who are pretty shaken up," Coria said. "We've had volunteers talking to them and keeping their children active."

"Our house is just torn down," Kenneth Kirkland, who also lives near USC, said at the disaster center. "We don't have no place to stay."

"The sky suddenly turned black," said Barbara Lee, who also lives near USC. "It was like night. There was debris, roofing and trash in the sky swirling around and around. I grabbed hold of the wrought iron fence and felt the thing passing by.... A large dumpster went bounding down the street and a large beam from next door landed on my car."

Mrs. Goodman, 52, bedridden at Orthopaedic Hospital after hip surgery, said she was chatting calmly with her daughter by telephone when the tornado-force winds battered the building.

"I just closed my eyes and screamed and screamed and by the time I opened them the whole room was plaster dust, and there was a ceiling tile on the pillow next to my head. I was terrified it would start again."

Mayor Tom Bradley declared a local state of emergency and said he asked state and federal officials to declare the commercial and low-income residential section a disaster area.

The tornadoes occurred amid a storm that dumped 2.94 inches of rain on downtown Los Angeles and more than 10 inches on Mt. Wilson, about 10 miles to the northeast.

The tornado struck the 162-bed, six-floor hospital on Flower Street shortly after 8 a.m, said Anita Bennett, director of public relations.

It smashed 18 large, tempered glass windows and two glass doors, buckled acoustical tiles in top-floor rooms, flung a sheet-metal shed about like a toy and damaged eight or nine cars in the parking lot.

Nurses and attendants, drilled in emergency procedures, rushed to the sixth floor, which was hardest hit, and evacuated 20 bedridden patients into the hall.

The hospital's 80-foot aluminum spire, its "symbol of hope" for more than 20 years, was twisted at a 90-degree angle, half its length dangling crazily over the edge of the roof. Of its three metal layers, two had been shredded.

After more than four hours, workmen managed to unbolt the broken monument and place it on the roof, where it will be cut to pieces and removed, officials said.

Loeffler favors gas deregulation bill

Loeffler said Tuesday the Reagan bill is "a vehicle for decontrol which eliminates 23 categories of gas we have had to go through. The regulatory lunacy we have experienced for 29 years is in the process of being dismantled."

He said he has heard no mention of anyone adding an excise tax, or a "windfall" tax on profits, for natural gas, to the proposal. The possibility of such a tax inspired fear in the oil and gas industry.

In spite of his general optimism about Reagan's plan, Loeffler said he has three major concerns which he hopes will be addressed in coming weeks.

These involve: pricing for tight gas sands, the sanctity of legal contracts between producers, pipeline companies and distributors of gas, and automatic pass-throughs of gas purchase costs to consumers.

"With respect to pricing of tight sands now and between Jan. 1, 1985, when all controls are scheduled to go off: the initial policy statements I got from the Administration three weeks ago would've placed tight sands in an even lower bracket than where they currently have it, which is a step forward.

"I believe it should be at the same price level as other higher-cost gas."

Loeffler said he was concerned that the bill "basically violates the sanctity of the contract theory we all live by. I recognize the political pressures in other areas of the country, but the independent producer is in a position where he is giving a great deal to achieve decontrol."

Take-or-pay clauses and indefinite price escalator clauses in current contracts run the risk of being killed by the proposed new law.

Loeffler's third concern is that changes being proposed in the purchase gas adjustment (PGA) clause would slow down efforts at total decontrol immediately. "It restricts a more ready time frame for decontrol," he said. "The purchase gas adjustment moratorium is a problem from the producer's side, there's no question about it."

Loeffler said those Congressmen who understand the natural gas pricing issue have generally reacted favorably to Reagan's proposal. "There are others who have had the same knee-jerk reaction we've seen for the last 15 years."

Decontrol 'nothing to fear,' local professor says

"In the Permian Basin we could get on with business and have a more stable business, and be better able to predict the market," he said.

"A free market is the best pricing mechanism and is the best way to encourage energy conservation," Griffin said. He pointed out that rising energy costs have prompted real efforts to conserve fuel among consumers.

Consumers of natural gas here purchase it from Energas, a subsidiary intrastate distribution company that is part of Amarillo's Pioneer Corp.

Energas has no gas production, but contracts with various gas producers to adequately garner gas supplies.

The current gas purchasing contracts which Energas has with its suppliers will provide 10 to 11 years of present-level gas service, said Pioneer spokeswoman Judith Kerr on Tuesday.

But these supplies could be threatened, she said, by a provision in Reagan's new decontrol bill that would encourage pipelines to renegotiate — at higher rates — several "old gas" contracts and other gas supplies.

"This is where we might have a concern," Ms. Kerr said, noting that her employer would have little official comment about the bill until it reaches their office in an accurate, final form.

Being an intrastate (Texas only) gas company, Pioneer's Energas subsidiary answers to Texas cities for determination of rates, and secondly, to the Texas Railroad Commision.

The Commission has the authority to oversee gas utility services and rates — under the Cox Act of 1920, its supplements, and the Public Utility Regulatory Act (PURA) of 1975.

Transmission, distribution and sale of gas by intrastate companies is regulated.

When a town or city and a gas company don't agree on a rate, the Commission is the appeals body — customers affected by a rate change take part in public hearings along with the service company itself.

"Energas Company is an intrastate distribution company," Ms. Kerr said. "We principally buy from producers and transmission companies within the state of Texas, and our gas charges in Texas are a third to one-half lower than other utilities. We try to buy gas at a reasonable cost, contracting, to supply our customers, very prudently."

The NGPA, our country's present natural gas policy, doesn't affect Energas much. The law mostly regulates interstate gas supplies, Ms. Kerr noted.

So the gas utility here sees its customers and business associates as being affected little by the Hodel/Reagan gas decontrol plan, when and if it is enacted.

The only part of the Hodel/Reagan package that seems to bother Energas is the encouragement of contract renegotiation for "fair market" rates. This provision could cause trouble for the utility — bringing too rapid a rise in fuel costs, which under the presidential diagram could not be charged to consumers until 1986.

Two killed in laundry room explosion

GREENVILLE, N.C. (AP) — An explosion in a laundry room flattened part of an apartment complex early today, killing two people, injuring 11 and trapping several in debris, authorities said.

The explosion occurred at the Village Green Apartments shortly before 6 a.m.

Capt. John Briley of the Greenville Police Department confirmed there were two fatalities. He said rescuers were still searching through rubble at 8 a.m.

"There's several injured, but to the extent and number, I don't know," he said.

A section of the complex was flattened.

Pitt Memorial Hospital said 11 people were brought in for treatment.

Correction

In Tuesday's edition of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, a headline mistakenly stated that 89-year-old Carrie Eaton, killed in a traffic accident in Odessa Monday afternoon, was a resident of Odessa. She had resided in Comanche. The car's driver, 67-year old Grace Lacy Dudley, also of Comanche, and two other passangers were slightly injured in the three-vehicle mishap.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Weather again interrupts British queen's schedule

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II, who braved the worst weather Southern California had to offer to visit President Reagan's ranch, once again has had her sailing plans foiled by the severe storm.

The queen initially was set to cruise today from Long Beach, Calif., to San Francisco aboard her elegant royal yacht, the HMS Britannia, but the White House announced late Tuesday that the royal party would fly instead.

Eric Rosenberger, the spokesman, said the queen, who was on her yacht, had no public schedule today but was planning to take off from the Long Beach airport in late afternoon.

It was the second time this week that the fierce Pacific storm, which caused a tornado in Los Angeles, forced the Britannia to stay put. Instead of sailing to Santa Barbara near the Reagans' ranch, the queen flew.

Keeping a stiff upper lip, the queen sloshed through pouring rain — abandoning her limousine for a Navy bus at one point — and rode a four-wheel drive vehicle up to the president's mountaintop retreat for a luncheon rendezvous Tuesday.

"She's a real trouper and a good sport," presidential adviser Michael Deaver said after the queen and Prince Philip arrived at the end of a treacherously foggy road that leads to Reagan's Rancho del Cielo.

Their journey up the mountain over, the Reagans and the royal couple posed for pictures in the downpour, their clothes dripping.

The queen, dressed in a raincoat and rubber boots and a blue felt hat, smiled grimly. The prince bantered with members of the royal staff, pointed to a small signpost fastened to the Reagan's house that read, "The Reagans, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue."

He admired a statue of a stableboy dressed in red silk holding a lantern and the black horse weather vane on the tiled roof.

"You have seen this weather before," Reagan said to the small group of reporters and photographers, reminding them that the only other time press had been permitted to see the ranch the weather was also foggy.

Reagan was dressed in a blue jean jacket and Western string tie. Mrs. Reagan wore a red raincoat and black cowboy boots.

If the queen was disappointed that the long-planned horseback ride with Reagan had been cancelled by the storm, she didn't say so publicly.

There, they shared a Mexican lunch of tacos and refried beans. The only other guests were Reagan's chief of staff and his wife, James and Susan Baker, and British Foreign Minister Francis Pym and his wife.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Nothing special can be done to get rid of cellulite

Dear Dr. Solomon: I see advertisements in the magazines telling you how to get rid of cellulite. Do you have a special diet or other recommendations that would help eliminate it? — Mary, Chapel Hill, N.C.

Dear Mary: You obviously are under the impression that cellulite is something special and requires special treatment. The fact is that fat is fat, and the so-called cellulite really is nothing but fat.

Some people maintain that the orange-peel texture of cellulite makes it different; but when you look at it under a microscope, it turns out to be nothing more than just plain, ordinary fat.

Getting rid of cellulite, then, requires the same sort of approach and perseverence that is required of all people who seek to lose weight — diet and exercise. The use of creams and other gimmicks to remove excess weight will only make you lighter in the pocketbook, not on the scale.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband has colitis. Is there any special diet I should prepare for him, or any special foods he should stay away from? — Mrs. S.L., Dallas, Texas

Dear Mrs. L.: According to the National Foundation for Ileitis and Colitis, patients generally do not require special diets. However, some patients tolerate a bland, low-fiber diet better than one that contains a lot of fiber and includes spicy foods, particularly when the disease is active. The reason is that a low-fiber diet causes fewer intestinal contractions, and this can help control abdominal cramps and diarrhea.

In general it is the overall nutritional adequacy of the diet that is important, but food preference should always be weighed against the possibility of its producing symptoms, such as cramps and pain. Individual experience appears to be the best guide in the selection of foods.

I assume your husband has been told about the importance of good nutrition for patients with colitis. Many of these patients simply do not feel like eating very much and, as a result, their nutritional needs may not be satisfied. They may also experience loss of nutrients because of recurring bouts of diarrhea and problems with absorption.

The restoration of good nutrition is extremely important, and your husband's physician should be kept informed of his progress and of any problems that might develop.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that ordinary table salt is sodium chloride, and I also know that it is the sodium that I have to stay away from. But how much of sodium chloride is sodium? — Fred, Little Rock, Ark.

Dear Fred: Ordinary table salt is 40 percent sodium.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My wife recently gave birth to our first child, but instead of being happy as you think she would be, she's been down in the dumps. She has been going to her obstetrician and talking it over with him, but what I'd like to know is why this happens and how long it will last. — Mr. H.V., Hartford, Conn.

Dear Mr. V.: Your wife's experience is not unusual, although that does not mean it should be ignored; some studies suggest that almost half of all women experience some emotional problems after giving birth. Usually, these are brief and of relatively minor significance.

According to Dr. Steven R. Lee, of the University of South Carolina School of Medicine in Columbia, the depression that follows the birth of a child does not appear to be related to the mother's age, previous physical or obstetric problems, complicated labor, social programs, race, or marital status. In other words, the condition has no apparent predisposing factors.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to have elective surgery done but do not have the money. Can elective plastic surgery be obtained free, or at reduced rates? — Mr. A.C., Kent, Ohio

Dear Mr. A.C.: Most plastic surgeons are involved in the treatment of needy patients who may be unable to pay a full or even a greatly reduced fee. Check this out with a plastic surgeon of your choice. Surgery at reduced rates is also available at a variety of institutions, such as at universities and other teaching hospitals, children's hospitals, burn treatment or cleft palate centers, or in municipal, county and state hospitals. In your community contact any large hospital, university affiliated or not, that has a training program for plastic surgeons, or you may contact your state's equivalent of vocational rehabilitation or crippled children's services. It may not be possible to do purely cosmetic surgery under the above mentioned circumstances with the same ease of arrangement as in the case of hand injuries, burns, treatment of cases of cancer of the head and neck, or treatment of congenital defects.

For Ruth, College Park, Md.: You are correct in your statement that many of the substances to which many people develop allergies are basically harmless. Pollen from flowers and trees, for example, is not dangerous in and of itself; neither are foods and food additives or various cleansers that are used around the house. We come into contact with a number of these allergens almost every day.

However, people with allergies have an allergic reaction when exposed to these substances and, within that context, they can no longer be considered harmless.

For Clara, Minneapolis, Minn.: Some studies seem to support the contention of migraine patients that some of their attacks are precipitated by the foods they eat. One such study conducted in a London hospital implicated chocolate and cheese as contributing to attacks of migraine. I found similar results in my patients.

Spot vehicle checks proposed

Bill would eliminate yearly inspection

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill to strike down Texas' automobile inspection law and leave it up to highway troopers to conduct spot checks for safety violations has been introduced by state Rep. Jim Horn, R-Lewisville.

At a Capitol news conference Tuesday, Horn said his proposal also would raise driver's license fees to replace the revenue lost from the inspection fees and fines.

Horn introduced similar legislation last session, but it failed to gain final House passage. He said he has higher hopes for its approval this time because the idea is not so "new and exciting" any more.

The bill would get rid of the current requirements for yearly inspections by mechanics and leave it up to the discretion of Department of Public Safety highway troopers to spot and ticket automobiles in need of repairs.

Law enforcement officers already have the authority to cite motorists for faulty equipment on their cars.

Horn said the proposed increase in driver's license fees would pump an extra $3 million into general revenues.

Under Horn's proposal, an operator's license would cost $13 instead of $7, a duplicate license would be $3 instead of $1, the chauffeur's license fee would go up to $22 from $13, and a commercial license would be $19 instead of $10.

Elimination of the inspection sticker in combination with the higher driver's license fee would save the average Texas motorist $3.50 per year, Horn said.

Twenty-nine states have eliminated periodic inspections snd found spot checks to be more effective, said Horn.

"There were 30 deaths in Texas in 1981 due to defective headlights," said Horn. "That's more than the total number of deaths in California because of any kind of mechanical failure."

He said there currently are 118 DPS officers doing paperwork in the inspection division. Those officers would be transferred back onto highway patrols if the bill becomes as proposed.

Horn said $2.25 instead of the current 75 cents from each driver's license fee would go into the law enforcement and custodial officer supplemental retirement fund, providing an additional $977,000 a year.

Rep. Jim Horn

Senate OKs decal for 'special' drivers

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate has approved a bill calling attention to drivers who have received a special license after their regular license has been suspended.

Texans carrying "essential need" licenses would be required to place a special decal on their car window under a bill sponsored by Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Hereford.

Sarpalius' bill would require a judge, in granting the special license, to issue a court order specifically outlining the routes and times the operator could drive his vehicle.

Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, suggested placing the decal in the glove compartment or making a note of it on the driver's license rather than "boxcar letters on the windshield."

Washington voted against the bill, which was sent to the House on a 27-1 vote.

Groups want expansion of Interstate 30 stopped

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two groups have asked the federal district court to halt further planning for expansion of the elevated portion of Interstate 30 in downtown Fort Worth from four to nine lanes.

The request was contained in a suit filed on Tuesday by Citizen Advocates for Responsible Expansion (I-CARE) and the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

They contended that federal and Texas agencies had violated numerous federal laws in planning and approving the expansion.

In a statement, the groups said the expansion would bring the freeway to within six feet of the Water Gardens public park designed by architect Philip Johnson and to within 30 feet of historic commercial buildings.

"State and federal highway officials have engaged in a shell game, which has effectively precluded any meaningful environmental review or public participation," said Jon Nelson, chairman of I-CARE, which says it is supported by 15 Fort Worth organizations.

National Trust is a non-profit organization dedicated to historic preservation.

In the suit, which was joined to two Fort Worth residents, the groups asked the District Court to halt continued planning and funding for the expansion until officials have complied with all federal laws regarding environmental review, public participation and protection of historic sites.

One year ago, today, a $100,000 home would cost $1408.28 per month. Today that $100,000 home would cost $1106.20 per month.*

Graphoanalyst: Handwriting holds personality secrets

OAK PARK, Ill. (AP) — When David Grayson thumbs through his students' homework papers, he doesn't look for errors. The graphoanalyst reads between the lines, searching for secrets to their personalities.

Grayson claims he can unravel the mystery of a 7-year-old's temper tantrums, spot a budding artist or scientist, or even pinpoint a sullen youngster contemplating suicide — just by looking at a page of their school work.

Grayson, assistant principal of Longfellow Elementary School, is one of the few graphoanalysts in the nation specializing in the study of scrawls and scribbles of children.

He's convinced the crossbar of a 't', the loop of an 'm,' or the dot of an 'i,' are parts of a penmanship puzzle. If pieced together, they're a "window to a personality."

As an educator, Grayson says that window can be an eye-opener.

Handwriting shows "the way a child learns and how to get the most out of them," Grayson says.

A rounded "m" or "n" is telling, Grayson says. "It shows a cumulative thinker. They learn one step at a time, very logically."

A slow learner, Grayson says, often writes with a combination of large and small letters and the words may run together.

"The main thing to look for in helping a youngster is lack of self-confidence," Grayson says. And there's no better way to spot that than focusing on the 't.'

Just as in analysis of adults' writing, the way in which a child crosses his 't' reflects his personality. If the 't' bar is low, he probably does just enough work to squeeze by, Grayson says. If it's very high, chances are the child's a dreamer.

Handwriting, too, can be a tipoff to talents. An artistic child probably uses wide loops, while an aspiring engineer might be detected by examining the flat tops on the 'r's' in his writing.

Just as penmanship gives clues to moods and personality quirks, it can reveal serious problems.

For example, a tiny loop at the beginning of a letter can show a "youngster who has a fear of not being loved," Grayson says.

"I will tell the parents to give that child a lot of physical touching," he said. These loops, Grayson said, "creep up after a separation, a divorce or a new baby in the family."

In another instance, Grayson looked at a second-grade girl's paper and immediately became worried.

It was blank — except for rows and rows of printing bunched up on the left-hand corner of the page. Some writing was heavier than others.

"It was a sign of extreme low self-esteem," he said of the near-blank page. "You're trying to hide from the world."

The heavy markings, he said, indicated "someone liable to hurt herself" by banging her head on the wall or ripping her clothes to shreds.

Grayson suggested the girl's parents seek help for their daughter. They did.

Graphoanalysis can also detect drug or alcohol abuse, with tight, pinched or muddy writing, Grayson says.

Mary Lou Shadle, Longfellow's social worker, also says Grayson's graphoanalysis has been able to "confirm things we already suspect.

San Antonio councilman no stranger to controversy

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — When Councilman Bernardo Eureste and a young woman other than his wife were attacked at 4 a.m. in a city park, he immediately contended the San Antonio police had sent "paid assassins" to kill him.

Some police officers countered with "I mugged Bennie" T-shirts, the mayor called him a liar and the incident became, as one newspaper bannered it, "the talk of the town."

Eureste, 39, since has resigned his professorship at Our Lady of the Lake University, a Catholic college, and told his wife, "I owe you one."

Now facing the three-term embattled councilman, whose district lies in this city's mostly Hispanic west side, is a tougher re-election campaign.

Eureste and his office aide, 23-year-old Kerry Pruett, were parked at Brackenridge Park early Feb. 18 when three youths attacked the couple. Eureste's left hand was severely cut by a knife wielded by one of the attackers, and Ms. Pruett was beaten up and raped, police said.

Three youths since have been taken into custody, and police say the trio has signed statements admitting the attack.

But Eureste hasn't completely dropped his allegations against the police department, despite a conciliatory meeting with Mayor Henry Cisneros, a fellow Democrat.

Eureste's constituents are criticizing the married councilman more for running from his three attackers — and leaving Ms. Pruett — than for being at the park with her after hours.

A local businessman is circulating cards readings, "Vote for ANYONE except BENNIE the CHICKEN." The city elections are April 2, and the councilman faces at least three opponents.

Eureste says he ran because he was convinced a police-based cadre of "disciplined, organized" assassins was going to kill him.

"I think I'm a marked man because of the controversies I've taken on," he said.

The week before the early morning mugging, Eureste had stepped up his criticism of the police department, accusing officers of widespread brutality against Mexican-Americans. He suggested citizens take the law into their own hands for revenge.

San Antonioans have grown accustomed to seeing the councilman's name in the newspapers since he took office in 1977.

When a local "madam" was forced by the city to close her brothel, Eureste waved — for the benefit of cameras — a purported list of its influential and well-known "customers" and threatened to disclose its contents. He never did.

Eureste also wrote a expletive-riddled letter to a constituent on city hall stationery — and then mailed copies to local newspapers.

He likes the label pinned on him by the media: "champion of the underdog."

Eureste apologized for the embarrassing incident to the local AFL-CIO chapter last week and received their endorsement in his re-election attempt.

After initially telling reporters he and Ms. Pruett were "fooling around," he now contends they were merely talking when they were attacked. The pair had been drinking at local clubs before driving to the park, he says.

Emily Goodfellow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David M. Goodfellow, was chosen as Outstanding Girl for the Month of February by the American Association of University Women. Louisiana considers new economy based on fisheries

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Long before the heyday of offshore oil and gas, Louisiana had its shrimp and oysters and fish — a bountiful resource which has been shared openly with fishermen from other Gulf Coast states.

But as the state's economy grows tighter with the drop in oil and gas revenues, fisheries are being considered again as the possible answer for a new economic base.

"Newcomers to the state are amazed to find that a portion of Louisiana-harvested blue crabs are routinely trucked to Maryland and Virginia for processing," said a report prepared at Louisiana State University.

"Plaquemines Parish oysters are shipped to Alabama for shucking, and shrimp landed in Delcambre are hauled to Mississippi for packing."

The report, issued less than two months ago, noted that state fisheries provide 42,600 jobs and economic benefits estimated at $750 million.

Until that report came out, said Sam Nunez, acting president of the state Senate, no one in state government knew how many jobs were related to the industry, partly because many of the jobs are seasonal.

"It is hard to keep up with," he said. "Many of these people are trapping for furs when they're not fishing."

The dockside value of shrimp, oysters, crawfish and finfish harvested in Louisiana in 1980 was estimated at over $615 million.

Louisiana fishermen led the way, coming in at $193.5 million, followed by Florida with $172.7 million, Texas at $174.8 million, Alabama at $44.1 million and Mississippi at $30.2 million.

The report said, "With secondary sales and employment, the value of Louisiana fisheries could exceed $1 billion."

That does not include the benefits from sports fishermen, who buy licenses, tackle and gasoline. However, sports fishermen offer some underhanded competition to commercial fishermen by selling their offshore catches.

In addition, the report noted Louisiana doesn't take advantage of finfish for processing, while the other states do.

"You can go to Tampa and along a five-mile stretch there's nothing but giant processing plants," Nunez said.

In 1980, Louisiana had 117 processing plants while the west coast of Florida alone had 176 and the east coast, another 58.

"In general, particularly in Florida and Texas, they invest money university-wise and in promotion of seafood," he said. "You have to have venture capital."

LSU, a seagrant university with experts in the field, admitted in its lengthy, technical report that the university hasn't done what it should.

"The university has several programs that deal with fisheries problems, but they are administered autonomously, they address problems in a piecemeal fashion, and they are neither coherent nor coordinated," said the report.

It asked for another $1.4 million to provide a complete report on the industry — a hard request when the governor, facing a deficit, wants to cut out half of the $600,000 the university gets for various programs involving fisheries.

Retired OU professor's kinetic art jingles, jangles, shimmers and shakes

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — A silver raindrop slowly descends from a silver cloud, past a photograph of a cloudy sky and into a copper tank. Water is forced from the tank's spout as the Ink Spots sing "Into Each Life Some Rain Must Fall."

"If you're feeling blue and down, I defy you to watch that and not get a kick out of it," says Dale McKinney, an early practitioner of kinetic art and the man who made the whimsical piece.

In his living room, McKinney flicks a switch and a section of wall becomes a slowly moving, changing, dissolving light picture. "I made that 30 or 35 years ago," the retired art professor says. "I don't know of any that were made before that."

Another switch is thrown and chrome drawer pulls begin a beguiling dance against the matte black of a wooden backing. Another switch, and a surrealistic red guitar begins plinking chords.

The modest home just north of the Oklahoma State University campus is a monument to McKinney's lifelong interest in and obsession with art. Works that jingle, jangle, shimmer, shake, make music or just entertain fill all the space in his gallery in a geodesic dome outside the house and tumble over into the living quarters and the upstairs studio.

"I try to get the people involved in my art," says McKinney, who retired from the OSU faculty in 1977. "Many of the objects have to have some people-power to make them work.

"I produce sculpture that can run and do things and turn people on and then when it's not running, it's still a piece of art."

Ranged around the circular wall of his gallery are prime examples of his theory. Shiny metal bars, rods and wires built on the framework of ancient sewing machines shimmer in the light and then burst into magical action when someone sits down before them and begins pumping on the treadle.

"I produce sculpture that can run and do things and turn people on and then when it's not running, it's still a piece of art... It's energy in action."

"It's energy in action," McKinney says as the creations dance and jiggle. "Look," he says as he points to the spinning metal on one of the works. "That's 'The Chorus Line.' It's kind of like a little ballet troupe, but not as well synchronized, of course."

A few steps away is what McKinney calls his "pride and joy," a 6-foot-tall concoction of 18 gallon-wine bottles upside down in three rows against a backing. Plastic tubing twines from bottle to bottle and eventually to a row of faucets. To one side is a boggling array of wooden clothespins dangling between pieces of wooden dowel, each a different size and length.

A flip of a switch and the clothespins begin a frenzied dance, bumping the dowels and making a sound like a brook babbling over stones. At the same time, red lights inside make-believe drops pushing out of each faucet flash on and off in synchronious time to the sound.

The red creation standing in his living room is a "self-programming, self-playing guitar."

When it is turned on, a wooden disc with nails spaced around the perimeter begins tilting backward and forward. Two inch-thick ball bearings roll around on the disc, touching the nails and making electrical contact.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ◇.

There are some situations where declarer has to guess the location of the opponents' cards. But in the majority of cases, the cards will be marked by the play to earlier tricks.

North's hand revalued to just enough to qualify for a jump raise of his partner's one heart opening bid. Besides the 11 HCP and 1 point for distribution, the queen of trumps must be upgraded 1 point, bringing the total to 13 points.

West led his fourth-best diamond and declarer played low from dummy. East made the correct technical play of the jack, which won the trick, and then exited with a trump. How should declarer proceed?

Declarer has a sure loser in each suit outside of trumps. Therefore, it might seem that the contract hinges on the club finesse, and a glance at the diagram shows that his majesty is offside. Thus it might seem that declarer must go down one.

However, there is a second line available to declarer, and the opening lead makes it an almost sure thing. It is unlikely that West has underled the ace and queen of diamonds at trick one, so East surely has one of those cards. And in that case, declarer can guarantee his contract.

Declarer should win the trump return in dummy and lead the king of diamonds. East must cover with the ace, and declarer ruffs. Declarer gets back to dummy with a trump, in the process drawing the last of the defenders' trumps. Now declarer leads the ten of diamonds from dummy, and he doesn't really care which defender has the queen of diamonds.

If East produces that card, declarer ruffs and he can then discard a club from hand on the established nine of diamonds. The club finesse can be tried for a possible overtrick. But when East follows with a low diamond, declarer simply discards a club from hand. As the cards lie, West wins the queen and shifts to a club, but declarer simply rises with the ace and discards his last club on the nine of diamonds. Either way, declarer cannot lose more than two tricks in the minor suits—either one in each, or two diamonds and no clubs.

How do you choose the best opening lead? Charles Goren has the answer. For a copy of "Winning Opening Leads," send $1.85 to "Goren-Leads," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, March 3, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Inventors Alexander Graham Bell and George Pullman, blonde bombshell Jean Harlow and baseball great Wee Willie Keeler were born on this date. Celebrities sharing your birthday include: football's Randy Gradishar, singer Gia Scala and Jackie Onassis' sister, Lee Radziwill. You tend to analyze problems extensively and that sometimes prolongs them. Deal with impediments quickly and in a practical manner. An unusual financial opportunity presents itself. Make the most of an offer of assistance. Romance needs more time to mature. Business considerations lead you to alter some travel plans. Pay closer attention to detail and profits will rise. Influential person rewards your dependability.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A move may prove lucky. You cannot rely on others to get you out of commitments you made long ago. Salary discussions with the boss could net you a small raise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You gain the respect of your peers, but find friction in unexpected areas. Job changes could add to your power. A refresher course helps you stay ahead of your competitors.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Hang in there. You are about to receive cash from an unlikely source. Do not mix friendship with finance. Higher-up is impressed by your recent work, but may not say so.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance and business look more promising now. A good period for negotiating agreements, raises. Larger profits can be made in the future if you invest now in new technology.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Try to work out how much tax you owe so you can start raising the necessary cash. Romance is mostly happy, but work requires extra imagination. Familiar surroundings help you relax.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An excellent day for starting new projects. You may have to cancel a date to get work done on time. Do not try to mix business with pleasure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be on the lookout for an unusual job opportunity. Several hidden factors work to your advantage in romance. Do not be afraid to make new investments after consulting experts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You impress higher-up by unearthing hidden talents. Children, pets bring good luck. Take advantage of a friend's moneymaking scheme. A short business trip could improve the bottom line.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Career conflicts evaporate if you adopt a more positive approach. Jump at an opportunity to travel for amusement or business. Romance receives a helping hand from an old friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good day to sign contracts, patch up differences. Say "yes" to new travel experiences. A relationship that looked promising fizzles. You need to curb a tendency to manipulate others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use your intellectual gifts wisely. Ride out a crisis with confidence. Something that happens far from home opens up new social vistas. A strong romantic attachment begins to develop.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Romance is lively. Be more tactful. Your loved ones deserve special treatment. Both your professional and personal life undergo change. Your friendship with someone influential helps you through a difficult time.

Vogel threat to Kohl

BONN, West Germany (AP) — "I am neither a Brandt nor a Schmidt man. I am Hans-Jochen Vogel," the bookish-looking former mayor of West Berlin told reporters three months ago.

Today, Hans-Jochen Vogel has no need to identify himself.

As the Social Democratic Party's candidate for West German chancellor, Vogel has attracted the support of millions of West Germans and drawn the attention from abroad with his talk about new U.S. nuclear missiles and how he is not sure they should be deployed here.

Such comments have prompted accusations that the tall, soft-spoken former justice minister favors neutralism for West Germany and claims that such talk could wreck the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

BUT THE polls say he also has attracted votes and given a scare to Helmut Kohl, the Christian Democrat Vogel hopes to unseat in the March 6 elections here.

"We have a real chance to end the neo-conservative transitory game and once again to take over the leadership of our land," says Vogel, who served as justice minister under Helmut Schmidt, the chancellor unseated by Kohl.

In mid-February polls, Vogel's Social Democratic Party had moved to within 5 percent of the 48 percent popularity rating held by Kohl's conservative Christian Democrats.

That was a suprise. After Schmidt was ousted as chancellor last fall, the Social Democrats, who bend toward socialistic policies, were in disarray and support ebbed to as low as 30 percent in the polls.

Few expected Vogel, 57, to be able to pick up the pieces in time for this election.

BUT VOGEL, a former mayor of Munich as well as West Berlin, has managed to regroup and reunify the Social Democrats in a way Schmidt and former Chancellor Willy Brandt, also a former mayor of West Berlin, had not been able to do.

Combining old-style, worker-oriented Social Democratic economics with talk about halting the arms race, Vogel has managed to attract support from both the right and left wings of his party and steal support from the Green Party, which campaigns on anti-nuclear and environmental issues.

Vogel has come to the aid of his party before. In January 1981, under heavy party pressure, he left his job as justice minister in Bonn and went to West Berlin to become mayor.

AS WEST Berlin mayor, Vogel opened a dialogue between the city and the sometimes-violent youthful squatters occupying vacant houses and demonstrating against city policies.

But Vogel's recent rapprochement with leftists is a change from his combative style two decades ago when he was mayor of Munich. He earned a reputation then as a "law and order" man who constantly clashed with the young leftists in his party.

Vogel became mayor of Munich in 1960 at age 34. He was mayor for 12 years and although his popularity didn't wane, he finally left because of fights with party leftists.

He went to Bonn in 1972 to take over the housing portfolio under Brandt and became justice Minister when Schmidt came to power in 1974.

AS justice minister, Vogel led the successful campaign to lift the statute of limitations for Nazi war criminals. He also resisted conservative demands for tough anti-extremist laws during the Baader-Meinhof terrorist crisis of the late 70s.

At the beginning of the current campaign, his attitude toward the fledgling leftist Greens Party was one of toleration. The Greens could help elect Vogel chancellor if they make it into the Bundestag, West Germany's parliament.

'Refugee residue' remains

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — They have been called the "refugee residue," — the unwanted Indochinese left over from the more than half a million who fled to Thailand since the communists took over their homelands in 1975.

The 160,000 Cambodians, Laotians and Vietnamese wait passively behind barbed wire enclosures, hoping that Western countries will reconsider their pleas for resettlement.

Many of them have spent two, three or more years in the United Nations-assisted refugee camps here with no other future in sight. Thailand insists they must leave eventually.

The United States and other Western countries have accepted responsibility in resettling many of the more than 1 million refugees who have fled Indochina since 1975.

Global recession and stricter interpretation of who is a refugee are seen as two of the reasons for a sharp drop in resettlement from Thailand last year.

THREE case histories compiled here by the United States Refugee Office give some idea of the plight of the rejected:

— Chanty Thippavong, 35, worked as a clerk for the Ministry of Justice in Vientiane, the capital of Laos, for six years before the communists came to power in 1975. After that he worked as a communal farmer with his family for three years before he was arrested in 1978.

He said he was sent to "seminars" in two detention camps but escaped to Thailand after two years and four months.

Last December he was denied resettlement in the United States because he did not meet the definition of a refugee.

— Luu Van Rang, now 24, and his family were sent to one of Vietnam's new economic zones after the Viet Cong-North Vietnamese victory in 1975 because his brother was a sergeant in the defeated Saigon army.

ONE DAY, he struck and knocked unconscious an official who he said was physically abusing his mother and sister. Rang, then 16, got six months in jail, followed by three years in a "re-education" camp.

He was drafted into Vietnam's army and sent to Cambodia in August 1980. Four months later he deserted and escaped to Thailand.

Rang has been denied resettlement because of his conviction for attacking the economic zone official.

— Soeun Chhoeun, 39, was a Cambodian housewife whose husband was executed by the communist Khmer Rouge regime in 1977 for being a military officer in Cambodia's previous, pro-West regime. She and surviving members of her family were forced to into hard labor because of the military connection.

She feared being sent for "re-education" and being separated from her son. The two fled to Thailand and have been in a refugee camp for three years, four months.

SHE WAS denied U.S. resettlement for not meeting the definition of a refugee, and like the other cases has been passed over by other recipient countries.

According to U.S. officials here, the U.S. Refugee Act of 1980 followed United Nations guidelines in defining a refugee: a person holding a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion.

But one official said officers of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Thailand were invariably stricter in their interpretations. The service had approval rates of less than 70 percent for resettlement from Thailand while the rate for other Southeast Asian countries was around 85 percent, he said.

The United States is the major recipient of Indochinese refugees.

An independent spirit

The problems Texans face today aren't even remotely similar to those faced by settlers of the Lone Star State 150 years ago. But it will take the same blend of dedication, courage and resourcefulness exhibited by the state's founders to forge the path of the future.

Texans declared their independence by signing the Texas Declaration of Independence on March 2, 1836, and reaffirmed that commitment at the Alamo and the Battle of San Jacinto. Now, 147 years later, their descendants and the thousands of others who've chosen to become residents of the state are awaiting what has been predicted as a golden future.

During recent decades, Texas has experienced tremendous growth and by the year 2000 the state's population should grow to 21 million. Midland and Odessa have undergone rapid growth during the past two or three years but so have many points throughout the state.

That growth is bringing some challenges to Texas along with significant opportunities. In coming years, experts say, Texas will need to deal with a water shortage, highway expansions, social service and education tests. The demands for insightful leadership will be constant.

Texans have always met the challenges of the day, from the moment William Barret Travis wrote from inside the Alamo that "the enemy has demanded a surrender at discretion, otherwise, the garrison are to be put to the sword, if the fort is taken — I have answered the demand with a cannon shot, & our flag still waves proudly from the walls — I shall never surrender or retreat."

Of course Travis didn't surrender or retreat. He died along with the others who had sworn to make Texas an independent land.

That spirit lives today in the Lone Star State. It will take Texas boldly into the future.

Tougher drinking rule

The U.S. Supreme Court recently strongly reinforced the ability of local jurisdictions to convict drunk drivers and thereby to reduce the death and mayhem they are causing on the nation's highways.

The court simply said that any driver who refuses to take a blood-alcohol test will have this fact used as evidence against him in a criminal trial. Obviously, this will strengthen the successful prosecution of those who violate the tough new drunk-driving laws in some states.

Had the court sustained the South Dakota decision that held the use of this evidence violates a driver's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, prosecutors would not have been able to tell juries that defendants had refused to take the tests. And who under these circumstances, except cold-sober drivers, would ever submit to such a test?

Arguments that refusing the test is a right protected by the Fifth Amendment are completely spurious. In applying for and accepting a motor vehicle operating license, citizens tacitly give the government authority over driving that would be inappropriate interference in other aspects of their lives. The clear reason for this derives from the potential threat posed to other persons by every driven vehicle.

Moreover, the Supreme Court decision was a logical extension of its 1966 ruling that permitted police to force drivers to take a blood-alcohol test. Most states, however, have refused to force the tests on drivers to prevent violence between drunken motorists and police.

The court's new ruling is especially appropriate inasmuch as the 25,000 Americans killed annually by drunken drivers represent approximately half of all American servicemen who died during all of the Vietnam War.

Another View:

Workers with pride

If this country is going to make it in the future, Americans are going to have to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps.

The Conference Board, a business group, conducted a survey of 508 companies, which found that 63 percent of them are using some foreign-made equipment in their plants. The disquieting note is that the companies reported they purchased imported equipment primarily because of its quality. Price and unavailability of some equipment in the United States were among other reasons cited.

The slogan, "Buy American," alone will not save U.S. businesses. U.S. workers will have to be "born again" and return to the days of old when tradesmen had pride in the quality of products they manufactured. It's a different story today, unfortunately. With the recession finally coming out of its prolonged tailspin, many workers seem to be placing their primary emphasis on pay raises.

That approach won't cut it when it comes to selling products abroad. The strong dollar and higher prices due to higher wages pushing up prices of the products made in this country will be a handicap for U.S. exports. Nor can exports be brushed off as easily as some quarters try to make out. It is estimated that 80 percent of all new manufacturing created in this country between 1977 and 1980 was linked in some manner to exports.

In that year, 4.7 million U.S. jobs were related to the export of manufactured products. Despite growing exports (from 4.3 percent of the GNP in 1970 to 8.2 percent in 1980), this country's trade deficits have continued to climb: Last year it was $42.7 billion in the red. U.S. exports amounted to $233.7 billion in 1981, a year in which 18 percent of goods made in the United States was sold in foreign lands.

Last year, 21 states had an export volume that exceeded $5 billion — a larger amount of trade than generated by such countries as the Philippines, India or Israel.

More than 60 percent of firms surveyed said this country is being technologically outpaced in some areas. Foreign companies that are ahead of, or gaining on, U.S. firms are involved in aircraft, autos, computers, electronics, machine tools, robotics and steel-making.

This country's problems have been pinpointed quite well by the survey. Solving them isn't impossible or terribly difficult, but effort and pride are required.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Wilson said to have ordered killings

WASHINGTON — The murky world of ex-CIA agent Edwin Paul Wilson was one of constant intrigue and murder-for-hire. His indictment for plotting murders in prison isn't his first encounter with assassination.

Jack Anderson

According to my own lengthy investigation of Wilson, he ordered the liquidation of at least a dozen onetime associates, including his former business partner, Frank Terpil, himself an ex-CIA man and a flamboyant cutthroat in his own right. "Hit" lists traced to Wilson also included one of my reporters and ex-President Carter's rambunctious kid brother, Billy.

Since he was tricked into the U.S. Marshals' clutches from his Libyan hideout, Wilson has already been convicted of smuggling arms and explosives to Libyan dictator Muammar Khadafy. He is now on trial for another explosives incident. He also faces charges that he offered $1 million for the murder of a Libyan dissident and $1.2 million for the murder of two federal prosecutors and six former associates who testified against him.

My associate Dale Van Atta, whose own name was on one Wilson hit list, located the man who was supposed to rub out Billy Carter. The killing, intended to punish Billy for reneging on a deal with Khadafy, was to have been accomplished by sending the presidential brother a literally explosive oil painting.

Another Wilson enforcer has come forward and traces his ex-boss' assassination orders back to 1975. He asked that his identity be protected, so I'll just call him Hit Man.

He was hired by Wilson to investigate three employees who had disappeared one weekend with some important files. Wilson found dozens of canceled checks indicating embezzlement, and told Hit Man: "Take care of the files, and then I want the S.O.B. dead." He was referring to the ringleader, an elderly man.

So the hired gun, armed with a .38 and accompanied by a sidekick carrying a lead pipe, waited outside the ringleader's Virginia apartment. But the assassins chickened out at the last minute, went to a bar and got thoroughly drunk.

Hit Man then lied to Wilson the next day, telling him they had been unable to find the old man. He subsequently stalled Wilson until the kill order was forgotten.

Hit Man's next target was Douglas Schlachter, whom Wilson once treated like a son, but who apparently got too big for his britches. As Hit Man remembered it, Schlachter decided to "ease out of the operation." Schlachter and a former high CIA official began "talking openly about murdering Ed and taking over."

Hit Man added: "Because I was the one that Ed trusted the most, they wanted me to call him in London and lure him back home so that we could kill him."

Hit Man put through the call, arranged to meet Wilson at Dulles Airport — and promptly told him all about the plot. Wilson, he said, handed him a wad of cash, appointed him his bodyguard and said: "If any of those (expletive deleted) even looks like he's going to do me harm, I want you to blow him away." Wilson promised the hit man protection from the law, saying: "Nothing's going to happen to you. I'll take care of the consequences."

Wilson then set up a meeting with Schlachter at a restaurant in downtown Washington. Hit Man's orders were to wait outside; if the conversation didn't go well, Wilson would signal Hit Man as they emerged from the restaurant, and Schlachter's doom would be sealed.

But when they came out on the street, Wilson glanced in Hit Man's direction and shook his head no. "I don't know what happened between them, but it saved Doug's life," said Hit Man.

Wilson next became disenchanted with Terpil, a friend from CIA days, who had been the original contact with Khadafy. Several Wilson associates speculated that there may have been nothing specific, that Wilson simply felt compelled "to screw every person who ever became a business partner of his."

At any rate, Wilson told Hit Man to kill Terpil — and for once Wilson would be in on it himself. Hit Man followed Wilson and Terpil as they drove toward Terpil's home near CIA headquarters in Langley, Va. But their car got a flat tire, and Wilson managed to signal the trailing assassin to keep going, that the hit was off. Wilson never reissued the order. (Terpil and Wilson broke up after they both jumped bail; Terpil was last reported hiding out in Beirut.)

The macabre footnote to Hit Man's story of aborted assassination is that he and Wilson eventually had a falling-out. The hit man and his family were threatened by Wilson, and his was one of seven names that showed up on a list found on his apparent successor.

DONOVAN PROBE SPINOFF: Attorneys for the Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force in Brooklyn are presenting evidence to a grand jury that could lead to perjury indictments stemming from last year's investigation of Labor Secretary Ray Donovan.

The grand jury is hearing evidence that two officials of Blasters Union Local 29, Louis Sanzo and Amadio Petito, lied to Special Prosecutor Leon Silverman when they claimed no knowledge that "no-show" employees had been paid by Donovan's former firm, Schiavone Construction, on a tunneling job.

Silverman concluded that "perjury and similar violations of law were committed by persons involved in the no-show scheme." Because Donovan wasn't involved, Silverman turned the case over to Justice.

At least 10 witnesses have testified so far, and last week Sanzo provided samples of his handwriting for comparison to signatures on payroll records.

CHARLEY REESE

Abuse of power dissolving confidence

Examples of judicial abuse of power are so common these days, they are almost boring, but U.S. District Judge Henry Werker of Manhattan has provided us with an exceptionally clear example of how to abuse judicial power.

Charley Reese

Health and Human Services has issued a new rule which simply says that birth control clinics which receive federal funds must notify parents if they prescribe birth control pills or a fitted birth control device to a minor.

Judge Werker, responded to a suit filed by the humanist crowd, issued an injunction to prevent the rule from going into effect. Now a judge could do that if the rule violated the Constitution or if the rule clearly contradicted federal law enacted by Congress.

The Constitutional issue was not even raised. The Congress has never passed legislation which said parents must be notified or which said parents should not be notified. On this topic, the Congress has been silent.

On what basis then did Judge Werker issue the injunction? Well, the good judge decided that if the rule were enforced, more teenage girls would become pregnant. Since, by voting funds to provide birth control information, it is obvious (to the judge) that Congress does not want teenage girls to become pregnant, then the rule on parental notification "thwarts the intent of Congress."

What the Congress should do is impeach Judge Werker.

The Constitution did not intend for judges to be legislators. It is the job of the legislatures to determine the social consequences of laws. If the Congress doesn't want parents notified when federally-funded agencies dispense prescription birth control, then all it has to do is say so.

What you have here is a clear case of a politician in a black robe stretching reason out of shape in order to come up with a political decision that fits his own prejudices.

Some other federal judges recently used this same bit of trickery to overrule the Department of Transportation which had revoked an earlier rule requiring safety bags in automobiles The Congress has never passed a law requiring safety bags. The judges just decided that the Congress intended that the Department of Transportation require them, primarily because when DOT did require them, the Congress didn't protest.

Here again, this is a case of using the federal court to short-circuit the democratic process. If the Congress wants safety bags in cars, all it has to do is pass a law requiring them. It's clear, however, that those people who want safety bags and who brought the suit didn't think Congress would agree with them so they went shopping for some lousy judges and found them.

The intent of the Congress can be relevant, when the issue before the court is interpretation of a statute Congress enacted. When you're trying to figure out what they actually said, it is certainly pertinent to determine, if you can, what they intended to say.

But to apply that principle to a bureaucratic rule when the Congress has never specifically addressed the issue raised by the rule is to go beyond the proper bounds of the court's authority.

Unfortunately, the federal bench is now riddled with political activists thanks to one of the most disgraceful partisan acts the Democratic Party has ever pulled. During the administrations of two Republican presidents, the Democrats in Congress deliberately held up authorizing new district judges because they didn't want those judges to be appointed by a Republican president. Never mind that the case load was intolerble and that people in need of justice were denied it by long delays. Only when a Democrat got to the White House did the Congress authorize 150 new positions.

It was a terrible coincidence that the Democrat happened to be Jimmy Carter who made 150 of probably the worst appointments in the history of the Republic and all of them, of course, are for life.

I get upset when the court system goes haywire or is abused because there is no more important branch of government than the courts. More people come into contact with government via the court system than through either of the other two branches, the influence of which are felt for most people indirectly. Whether we have a just or unjust society depends on the courts. Whether government functions even depends to a large extent on the courts.

As long as people have confidence in the courts, they will have a basic trust in their government. When they lost confidence in the courts, then the government itself is in deep trouble. And I think our government is on the razor's edge of being in deep trouble.

ART BUCHWALD

Honesty can't happen in Chicago!

Americans can get used to almost everything — except Chicago holding an honest election. It's more than anyone can absorb. If the last successful Democratic political machine in the country can't elect its chosen candidate, then the party is in a lot more trouble than anybody thought.

Art Buchwald

The question is, why couldn't the machine deliver Mayor Byrne the nomination as promised? What happened to Richard Daley Jr., whose father ruled Chicago with an iron hand?

The answer is that Cook County for the first time in history had to change its election rules.

In one polling place on the North Side Dino Pinowski showed up at noon to cast his ballot.

The clerk said, "Dino, you already voted once this morning."

"So?" Dino said.

"You see that fellow over there? He's a federal poll watcher and he's insisting on a one-man, one-vote policy."

"But I always vote more than once in an election," Dino said. "Remember in 1960 when I voted four times?"

"Not so loud, Dino. He might hear you."

"What will my precinct captain say to me if he hears I only voted once today?"

"You'll have to tell him it wasn't your fault."

"He doesn't accept excuses like that. I have to show him three voting receipts or I won't be able to keep my city job."

"You'll have to tell him that due to circumstances beyond my control I could only let you vote once."

"He won't believe me. You're going to have to give me a note to that effect."

"I can't give you a note, Dino. But ask him to call me at home and I'll confirm it."

"I don't believe it. My family has been voting three times each in an election for 30 years. My father always told me the more you voted the better government you get. He said one person's vote isn't going to change anything in this country."

"Your father was right, up to a point. But because the Feds got into this election, we had to change the qualifications. I don't like it any more than you do, but I don't want to go to jail."

"Okay, as long as I'm here, do you want me to load up the ballot boxes and hide them in my garage?"

"I can't give you the ballot boxes, Dino. I have to turn them over to the vote counters."

"You mean you're counting the votes right away? What the hell kind of election is this? Suppose the precinct goes against our candidate? We'll all be up the creek. Give me the ballot boxes for a couple of hours, just so I can tell how we're doing."

"Dino, they won't let us take the ballot boxes out the door. They're grabbing them as soon as they're full."

"I can't believe this could take place in a free country. I thought something like this only happened in Russia."

"Dino, you're holding up the line."

"Well, if I can't vote more than once for myself, can I vote for these people?"

"What people?"

"The list you told me to get from the graveyard. I only took the names of people who died in the last 15 years, like you told me."

"Will you shut up, and get out of here?"

"Look, I took the day off at my own expense. If I can't vote more than once, can I bring in some people from downstate to cast their ballots in our ward?"

"They have to be registered voters in Cook County."

"Since when?"

"Since they sent the federal marshals in. You're a loyal precinct worker, Dino, and someday you will be a captain. But right now there isn't a thing you can do to help our candidate win. For the first time the voters are going to have to decide for themselves."

"That's one helluva thing to say on election day. I'll tell you one thing, Kelly. This would have never happened if Mayor Daley was alive."

Natural gas request 'tragic error,' White says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has been asked by the National Governors' Association to pass a law allowing pipeline companies to cancel their contracts with natural gas producers if markets can't be found for the gas.

The proposal was one of several on natural gas made by the NGA on Tuesday, as it adopted by a voice vote changes in its natural gas policy position.

After the vote, Gov. Mark White of Texas, a major gas producing state, called the NGA action "a tragic error" and said it would foster "regionalism and factionalism" between states.

"I think it's a mistake for a national association to adopt a policy that will regionalize the country, and I think that's what they, in a sense, did here today," said White.

The NGA asked Congress:

—To prevent increases in natural gas purchase costs from being automatically passed on to consumers.

—To require that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission hold at least five regional hearings to find ways of insuring the "lowest possible" consumer gas prices.

—To approve legislation including so-called "market out" clauses in natural gas contracts that provide for indefinite price increases or require a pipeline to accept gas whether it pays for it or not.

The "market out" clause would allow the pipeline to refuse to take the gas and renegotiate the contract if there were no market for the gas.

White and governors of several other gas producing states opposed the association's policy position on Monday during a meeting of the NGA Committee and Energy and Environment.

They tried unsuccessfully to substitute a more general policy position which called for Congress to "remove the market distortions" in the natural gas supply but did not suggest specific steps.

The more general statement was rejected 13-6 by the committee, the membership of which was dominated by states that are primarily consumers rather than producers of natural gas.

White said Tuesday that gas producing states did not revive the issue before the full NGA membership because "we fought that issue yesterday, and every vote that we had on that position was in that committee."

On another issue, the NGA approved by a voice vote a change in its policy position on immigration. It called for a ban on employment of illegal aliens, a ceiling on immigration and a delay in any program that would legalize the presence of aliens now in the country.

White abstained from voting on the proposal in committee on Sunday. He explained Wednesday that he planned to appoint a special committee in Texas to study the entire immigration issue "and for that reason did not take a position."

Governors endorse economic package

Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The architects of the economic package endorsed by the National Governors Association modeled it after the bipartisan spread-the-pain bailout program for Social Security.

They said only strong bipartisan support for slashing long-term deficits will enable the fledgling economic recovery to flourish–and this will require offending both the White House and home-state constituencies. But they vowed that it must be done.

Whether the Social Security bailout package proves an apt model or not has yet to be seen. There, the blame-placing and accusations were overpowered by universal fear that the giant retirement system could run out of money unless Congress and the president jointly acted to rescue it.

Despite appeals from the bipartisan congressional budget leadership for deficit-slashing support from the governors, the climate is far different than it was on Social Security. There are conflicting signs about whether the economy now is recovering. So the argument persists about whether Reaganomics caused the worst recession since the 1930s — and whether its final stages of the billion-dollar tax cut must be repudiated and abandoned as part of the cure.

During the governors' budget debate, 10 Democrats voted for a far stiffer measure proposed by newly elected Wisconsin Gov. Anthony Earl than the bipartisan package. When that failed, they bolted from the bipartisan package, leaving no margin for Utah Gov. Scott M. Matheson, who eked out his first victory as chairman with the bare two-thirds vote required to pass, 30-10.

Afterward, Texas Gov. Mark White damned the resolution as ill-conceived, confused and "namby-pamby," failing to "strike to the heart of the problem. Let's get people in this country back to work — and then this economy will swing again."

Matheson and the chairman of the GOP governors group, Illinois Gov. Jim Thompson, argued that the governors could exercise valuable clout in Congress and at the White House if they rallied behind an admittedly imperfect economic plan which rebuffed both President Reagan on his defense-increase insistence and liberal Democrats on their open-ended spending programs for social welfare and retirement plans.

"We all talk to voters about the 'American dream,' but I doubt there is a single governor here today who could explain to them where it is today...because it's gone," said Thompson. "The real question today is how to get it back."

Matheson called the economic vote "courageous" and predicted that more of the same will be required in the months ahead if fundamental changes in spending are to occur to control soaring long-term deficits, in order to allow the fledgling economic recovery to flourish.

The governors' action was a coup for the blue-ribbon budget coalition organized last year by former Commerce Secretary Peter Peterson, which recommends cutting the budget by $202 billion by 1985, through a combination of $60 billion in new taxes and reductions both in defense and the giant retirement and health programs. Peterson is now a consultant to the state executives, advising them how to shape their own plan — and how to take the heat for it.

The governors rejected President Reagan's insistence on increasing the growth in defense spending by as much as 10 percent, saying the growth should be no more than 4 percent to 6 percent.

They also called for changes in automatic increases for Social Security and a fundamental alteration of Medicare, the health plan for the elderly. Senate Budget Chairman Pete V. Dominici said Medicare could go broke within two to three years, not five years as forecast last year — and then plunge into the red by $300 billion very swiftly.

Although some governors had objected that they had no expertise in defense matters, they all got strong encouragement to state their views from the congressional budget chairmen, Dominici and Democratic Rep. Jim Jones. The pair indicated they agreed with sharp cuts in the growth of defense, probably in the 5 percent range targeted by the governors.

Illinois' Thompson said the resolution would "reinforce" members of Congress — "those who say they won't tolerate a cent of defense reductions, others who won't tolerate cuts in entitlements."

Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste, a newly elected Democrat, said the resolution was not "fair enough, clear enough and does not go far enough."

French family has held mayoralty for 128 years

LA NEUVILLE DU BOSC, France (AP) — Christian Conard is running for mayor in this tiny Normandy village of 360 people. That's not surprising since he has held the post since 1936, his father was mayor for 25 years before that, and his grandfather before him.

In fact, the mayoralty of this pretty little town nestled in a forest between two river valleys has been a family affair since 1855 in what Conard says is a rare, but not unique dynasty.

But the 74-year-old mayor says he doesn't expect voters here to be sending any signals to national political analysts who are calling France's municipal elections March 6 and 13 the first national test of President Francois Mitterrand's Socialist government.

"In small villages like this, we are not interested in political ideas," said Conard, gesturing at the town through a second-floor window in the City Hall built by his grandfather, Manasses Conard, who was mayor from 1870 to 1911.

"I don't even know exactly the political opinions of the 11 members of the City Council. I know their abilities. That's what's important. Being a communist or on the extreme right is not what makes us good administrators. Politics does not enter into the preoccupations of the voters here."

On a national level, most of the attention is focused on the 219 cities of more than 30,000 population, where the political affiliation of candidates is important. But of France's, 36,414 communities, more than 28,000 of them have fewer than 700 inhabitants.

"Like much of France, La Neuville du Bosc is divided in two," says Conard, a vigorous man with a gray beard and mustache. "Half is more or less right and half left. But in a town like this, you can't be an administrator for half of the community. You must be an administrator for all of it."

The first family member to run Neuville was Jean-Baptiste Avisse, Conard's great-uncle who was elected in 1855. Conard's own great-grandfather, Louis Conard, never had time to dabble in politics.

"He spent most of his life running around the world fighting for Napoleon I...He came home after the fall of the empire with nothing but four wounds and a Legion of Honor."

His grandfather, Manasses Conard, became mayor just as the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 was starting. His father, Raoul, followed and then came Christian.

"The heads of our family have always been, I say modestly, good managers who did a lot for the community over the years," Conard says, pointing to the City Hall, the school, the post office and other projects carried out by his family.

Under Christian Conard's mandate, Neuville was electrified, in 1937, and got running water, in 1960, among other things.

"What have water and electricity got to do with politics?" he asked. "It's the same for all villages of this size. They have their political feelings, sure, but that doesn't affect the municipal administration.

Appetite suppressant may help autism, doctors say

GALVESTON (AP) — An appetite suppressant being tested here and at five other medical centers may lead doctors to a method of treating autism, a disorder that causes children to ignore their surroundings, an investigator says.

"I'm not convinced that an appetite suppressant will be a breakthrough in the treatment of autism, but if we're lucky it will be the first step in a line toward the eventual breakthrough," said Dr. Gerald August, who is directing the year-long project at the University of Texas Medical Branch.

August said the chemical fenfluramine has been found to increase intelligence quotients and reduce aggressive behavior in three children in a pilot study.

August told The Galveston News it is too early to tell how effective the drug will be. He said little is known about autism.

"We've only started to get a handle on this bear in maybe the last five years," he said. "But treatment for the most part has still been symptomatic, consisting primarily of intensive behavior modification."

The study, launched at the University of California at Los Angeles, will also involve researchers at the University of Chicago, Oregon University, Yale University and the Texas Research Institute of Medical Sciences in Houston.

Dr. Edward Ritvo of UCLA, who conducted the pilot study, first tested the substance on rats and found that it reduced the level of a chemical frequently found in abundance in the brains of austic children.

The chemical, serotonin, helps achieve equilibrium in the brain between one system that controls movement and motor responses and another that controls emotional behavior, August said.

Ritvo said about 40 percent of all autistic children tested show an unusually high level of serotonin.

August said the chemical imbalance prevents autistic children from processing impulses that enters their brains.

"They become bombarded by a constant influx of information and the resulting behavior is retreat, which the patient uses as a defense mechanism," he said.

Autistic children are likely to demonstrate a resistance to change, realistic behavior and a preoccupation with inanimate objects, August said. The condition occurs about five times in 10,000 births and is three times more common in boys than girls.

August said some autistic children develop "splinter skills," showing great aptitude for certain subjects. August said one of his patients, a 10-year-old, "played the entire Warsaw Concerto on the piano when he couldn't read the music to 'Three Blind Mice.'"

August said the nationwide study, which began in January, aims at producing conclusive evidence that fenfluramine minimizes or eliminates those symptoms.

Participating agencies received special permission from the Food and Drug Administration to use the substance because of the encouraging results of Ritvo's study.

Senior citizen joins Peace Corps

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Don McLean didn't think the Peace Corps would be interested in him after he turned 70, but the retired hardware dealer found out he was just the kind of nuts-and-bolts person they needed.

McLean recently left Spokane for two years in the Philippines, where he has been assigned as an agro-forestry specialist.

"I guess you can just say that I got bored with retirement," said McLean, who ran a hardware business with his brother, Bob, for 30 years and who raises trees as a hobby.

"I heard there was a Peace Corps recruiting team in town last June, so I went down and talked to them," he said. "By golly, they were interested in me. I signed up."

The Peace Corps "very much encouraged me," said McLean, who holds a commercial pilot's license.

McLean will be taking his fishing rod and camera with him, and also hopes to do some flying.

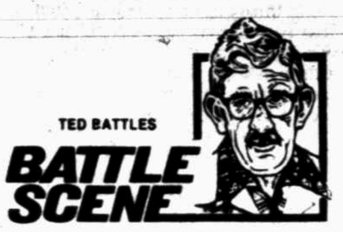
Cotto better make Cubs' AAA team



If Henry Cotto knows what's good for him, he'll make the triple AAA club at Des Moines.

Last year, Cotto roamed center field and impressed everybody with his speed on the paths. Must have stolen 50 bases.

After listening to Chicago Cubs farm director Gordon Goldsberry and Tom Harmon, the new Midland manager, 50 stolen bases will get Cotto the tag of "slow poke" if he returns to Midland.

Goldsberry and Harmon bandy figures like 60, 70 and 80 around like they'll be commonplace this summer.

"It will be a different type club than the one that played in Midland last year," says Goldsberry, who is preparing for the influx of minor leaguers at Chicago's spring base in Mesa, Ariz.

"THIS TEAM won't have the power last year's team had, but it will have more speed and the pitching should be stronger," says Goldsberry. Pitching, of course, rates top priority in the Chicago organization.

Goldsberry sounds as though he has a pretty good idea of the players that should make the Midland club this year, based on last year's performance. Of course, you can never tell what may happen in spring training.

One year, Ray Burris, not yet a year out of college and with only six weeks of pro ball at Midland under his belt, was scheduled to return to Midland for more seasoning. He looked so good in spring training, they took him to Chicago.

A few seasons back, after a .326 season at Midland, was ticketed for Wichita, and showed so much at Scottsdale that he was in center field at Wrigley Field for the National League opener.

ON THE subject of former Midland Cubs, Chicago General Manager Dallas Green intimated that some aren't too far away.

From last year's club, Green gives outfielder Joe Carter a chance to make it, although he thinks the 1981 College Player of the Year from Wichita State, probably will wind up in AAA at Des Moines.

"Joe could make it in spring training, but I think he needs at least a half season in triple A. Then I think he'll be ready to do the job for us."

Righthander Jon Perlman is another that could make the big club with a good spring. Jon had an impressive season at Midland and Green feels, "he could sneak in and do the job for us. Starting pitcher is an area where we need help.

Green is high on first baseman Carmello Martinez and catcher Mike Diaz, who still must polish his defensive skills.

AS FOR Mel Hall, who played in Midland two years ago, complaining all the time that he belonged in the majors, Green is counting on the youngster with the penchant for acrobatic catches to play center in Wrigley this year.

"It's time for Mel to step forward. He complained last year that he needed the opportunity in order to produce. Well, Mel is getting his opportunity. Now he must produce."

A starter at Midland, Lee Smith has become a relief pitcher with Chicago and one of the best in the National League. Last year, the Cubs did employ the big hard throwing Louisianian as spot starter, but it was when he went back to the bullpen that Chicago compiled one of the best won-lost records in the NL over the final two months.

"With Bill Campbell and Dick Tidrow faltering, we needed someone to stop a rally. Lee came in and shut the door. He's the kind of relief pitcher every team is looking for, a guy who could give you that one good inning that gets you out of trouble."

El Paso Eastwood's Johnny Gipson (25) and Larry Thompson (51) battle San Angelo's Jack Carsner (23) for a rebound during Tuesday's Class 5A Area playoff at Chaparral Center.

El Paso gains two Region I berths

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

El Paso will have two shots at a state Class 5A basketball berth Friday and Saturday in the Region I high school tournament at Chaparral Center after posting twin victories at the Chap Tuesday night.

El Paso Eastwood knocked District 4-5A's San Angelo out of the playoffs with a 72-67 win while El Paso Bel Air thumped Amarillo Caprock 70-59 in Tuesday's Area matchups.

The El Paso schools return to Midland Friday for the start of the Region I tournament. Eastwood will meet Fort Worth Paschal, a 65-52 winner over L.D. Bell Tuesday in Fort Worth, while Bel Air will take on Fort Worth Dunbar, a 73-45 Area winner over Irving MacArthur Monday. Those games Friday have 3:30 and 5:15 p.m. starts.

Both El Paso schools are from District 2-4A. Bel Air was the district champion despite losing two of three games to Eastwood this year.

Neither team, however, had any trouble Tuesday in gaining the Region I berths.

DESPITE THE narrow five-point victory margin Eastwood finally produced over the Bobcats of San Angelo, the Troopers could have demolished their opponents if they had wanted to.

Coach Bobby Lesley emptied his bench in the third quarter with a 60-30 lead. San Angelo looked to be drowning in despair. But the Trooper reserves couldn't hold the fort, so Lesley had to put the regulars back in with 1:50 left to save the game. The final five-point margin was as close as the Bobcats could get despite a torrid 31-point fourth period.

"We were not surprised to get the big lead on San Angelo because we knew that this particular year their district was not that strong. We played Odessa High, their league champion, earlier this year and led 18-0 quick," Lesley said.

"What disturbed me most was that some of our kids got a chance to play and didn't perform well. I had to put the starters back in when it got to within seven points. I didn't want to take a chance on getting anyone hurt after that 30-point lead when we have some bigger bears to play down the road."

Eastwood's Johnny Gipson put on the night's best shooting display with 32 points, hitting 14 of 22 shots from the field and four of five from the charity line. Gipson did not score in the fourth quarter and played only 1:50 of that period. San Angelo's Lorand White had 26 points, hitting 15 of 26 from the field. White scored 14 points in the fourth period and 26 in the second half.

San Angelo never led in the game after Eastwood rolled to a 22-8 first quarter lead. The Bobcats had trouble starting the first two periods, missing nine of 10 shots to open the game and missing five in a row to start the second period. Eastwood broke out of the gate with a 14-2 lead.

Eastwood hit 11 of 18 shots to open the game while San Angelo hit on four of 15. The Bobcats hit only three of 15 attempts at the free throw line.

BEL AIR had a much more balanced attack in its win over Caprock. Highlanders Phil Larkin and Zeak Williams each teamed for 18 points while Robert Parham and Jaime Gallinar each canned 13. Caprock's Troy Fry was the game's big gun, however, with 23 points and Scott Brewer had 13.

"Caprock is a better team than most people give them credit for," said Bel Air coach Bob Haack. "They played hard and they are bigger than us inside. I feel we were fortunate to win the game. We played a good game, but I felt like we had to earn it."

The Highlanders led by as many as 15 points over the Caprock Longhorns, 66-51 with 2:18 left in the game. They held a 35-27 lead at the half.

Bel Air, who won the Tall City Invitational earlier this year, enters the Region I tourament with a 27-2 record, both losses coming to Eastwood. The Troopers own a 27-4 mark. San Angelo leaves the playoffs with a 23-12 record while Caprock ends with a 17-13 record.

Chaparrals begin quest for repeat national title

Region V tournament action gets underway Thursday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland College begins its quest for a repeat national junior college basketball championship Thursday at Chaparral Center with seven other hungry teams looking to dethrone the widely hearlded Chaparrals.

The quest starts with what is known as the Region V tournament, and in the past, this exercise in all-out hardwood war has put heart beats in overdrive. Lose once and the dream of a national title is gone.

It's where the near-nobodys come to make a name while the favorites scratch and claw to keep from falling apart. It's cardiac history at its best.

Action begins at 2 p.m. Thursday at the Chap with Clarendon facing Southwest Christian. That is the first of four games Thursday, the last coming at 9 p.m. when Midland College takes on Ranger JC. In between, Amarillo College meets Cisco JC at 4 p.m. to end the first session while McLennan JC takes on Howard College at 7 p.m. to begin the second session.

Tickets for the tournament are $4 for adults and $2 for students for each session. Full tournament tickets can be purchased for $12. Friday's semifinal session begins at 7:30 p.m. with the winner of the MC-Ranger game going against the Clarendon-SW Christian winner. The other semifinal match comes at 9:30 p.m. with the Howard-McLennan winner taking on the Amarillo-Cisco winner.

The tournament finals will be at 7 p.m. Saturday.

WITH MIDLAND College being the host tournament team and owning the defending Region V and national titles, this tournament has almost become a city festival. Large crowds are expected to turn out for all three days of action and MC athletic director Delnor Poss is posting a warning for Midland fans.

"We are expecting large crowds through the tournament and we are urging people to buy their tickets in advance. We expect some long lines at the ticket windows at Chaparral Center. We are also hosting the Region I high school tournament at Chaparral Center Friday and Saturday and that is going to add to the crowd situation," Poss said.

"We expect work to be completed around the Midland College entrance and that should aid traffic flow. We also expect the back exit of Chaparral Center on Wadley to be open for all three days. But we would like everyone to know that tickets will be on sale prior to the tournament and I think it would be wise to get tickets in advance."

COACH JERRY Stone's Chaps go against a team they beat by 15 points earlier this year. MC blasted Ranger by an 84-69 margin at Chaparral Center during the Chap Classic in early December.

At first glance, this would look like a cakewalk for MC in the first round, but nothing seems to come easy at this stage of the junior college playoffs.

Ranger finished fourth in the Northern Conference race and have the same dream at this point as the 28-3 Chaps.

One only has to look at last year's Region V play to see the hazards. Cisco, who is the No. 3 Northern squad, came into last year's tournament as the No. 5 team. They advanced to the finals where the Chaps escaped with an 83-81 win to vault into the national tournament in Hutchinson, Kan.

MC opened the season against Cisco this year and again had trouble in pulling out a victory, winning by a 59-52 margin. Cisco dumped Northern champion McLennan out of the Region V tourney last year in the semifinals.

But Stone's troops seem ready to bust out of the gate.

"Let's throw the ball up," Stone said Tuesday night. "I think our kids are ready to play. They are tired of practice right now and are at each other's throats.

"I feel good about our team, but I wish we would start playing right now. Everyone wants this thing to get started."

MC'S BIG advantage in this year's Region V play is the return of six players who helped the Chaps win their first national title last year. The mainstays are Spud Webb, the 5-6 dunk specialist, and Chester Smith, the 6-7 post who played against bigger opposition nightly in the national tournament. Jerome Crowe, Rodney McChriston, Justin Morett and Chuck Robinson also return. It will be those who will have to offer leadership in the pressure days ahead.

But MC also has produced some impressive freshman this year. Nate Bufford led the team in scoring, Jackie Phinnessee has become a crowd favorite with his physical play and Ervin Williams and Brian Essary give added depth. Many believe that the Chaps are a much stronger team than a year ago when they won the national title with eight players.

McLennan again reigns as the Northern champion and they have what could be a stern test in the first round when they face the Howard Hawks. Howard owns one of the victories over MC this year, a 102-96 win in Big Spring during the OIL Classic.

HOWARD, HOWEVER, didn't earn a berth into the Region V tournament until Monday when they defeated New Mexico Junior College, 103-96, in a playoff game.

Clarendon is also a late entry into the tournament. Clarendon had to defeat South Plains College, 73-62, Monday to gain a berth.

Amarillo College is another dangerous team, finishing second in the Western conference behind MC. The Badgers handled MC its only conference loss on Jan. 10, winning by an 87-79 margin. The Amarillo-Cisco match at 4 p.m. could be one of the best in the first round.

Things will not be quite as simple for this year's Region V winner. Last year, Region V had an automatic berth to the national tournament. This year the Region V winner will have to play an additional Bi-Regional contest to gain a national berth.

Angelina, an unknown, eliminated Henderson County for the Eastern Region berth and San Jacinto defeated Laredo JC in the Southern conference. Laredo had been ranked as the No. 1 JC team in the nation most of the year, but is already out of playoff contention. Angelina and San Jacinto will play a best two-of-three playoff to determine who meets the Region V winner in the Bi-Regional, which will have to be played early next week.

The Bi-Regional winner will earn the national tournament berth in Hutchinson, where a team has to win four straight games to gain a national title. So for MC to repeat as the national champion, the Chaps must win eight games, starting Thursday.

MHS, Lee players, coach honored

Seven Tall City basketball players and one coach were honored Tuesday by the league coaches in selecting the All-District 4-5A team.

In individual honors, Midland High's Sheila Christian was named the league's Most Valuable Player while teammate Denise Lanz shared the Sophomore of the Year Award with Abilene Cooper's Leisha King.

Christian, led the Lady Bulldogs in scoring throughout the season with a 13.9 average. Lanz, scoring only 5.2 points per game, was more noted for her contributions defensively than for shooting. The two helped lead Midland High to second place in the district race and to a berth in the state playoffs where MHS defeated Plainview before being eliminated by El Paso Eastwood.

The team that beat out Midland High for the 4-5A crown was guided by the league's Coach of the Year, Shirley Stephenson.

Stephenson's Midland Lee Rebels posted a 13-1 4-5A record and went 24-5 on the year before losing in the bi-district playoffs to Lubbock Monterey.

From her 4-5A championship team, three Rebels were named to the All-District team: senior Yshun King, and juniors Felicia Farias and Stacy Harmon.

Midland High added two to the elite unit: senior Rebecca Caton and junior O.J. Johnson.

Joining the Tall City players for All-District honors were: Pam Allen, senior, Odessa High; Tracy Scott, junior, Cooper; Melissa Harrison, senior, Permian; Bonnie Smith, junior, San Angelo; and Shell Rutledge, senior and Monette Wise, junior, Big Spring.

On the Honorable Mention squad were: Monica Bradley, junior, San Angelo; Sylvia Randle, senior, Big Spring; Karen George, senior, Odessa High; Pat Seldon, senior, Cooper; and Carolyn Gibbs, junior, Permian.

Midland High's Christian led all of the Tall City scorers with 432 points in 31 games for a 13.9 per game average. Caton had a 10.2 average with 317 points after a strong finish. She averaged 17 points per game over her last eight outings. Johnson had a 9.4 average with 264 points while Lanz had 161 points for her 5.2 mark.

Farias led Lee with a 14.0 per game average over 28 games with 392 points. King averaged 12.4 over 30 games with 373 points. Harmon averaged in double figures most of the year, but ended with a 9.9 average with 298 points.

Lee and Midland High made history in 1983 by becoming the first two District 4-5A teams from the same town to make the playoffs in the same year and in the same sport.

Both teams should be strong again next year with Farias and Harmon returning to Lee and Johnson and Lanz to MHS.

Northern Generals raid Confederacy

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Strike up a little "Marching Through Georgia" music, professor, please. Add a little "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory..." Never mind "Dixie." Folks down there are soon forgotten. Look away.

Fot since Sherman's March to the Sea have Yankee Generals wreaked more havoc on the Confederacy. Atlanta is burning, for sure. No more than Athens. Scarlett O'Hara must be wringing her hands someplace today. Prissy is boiling water. Rhett Butler is looking amused as if he knew it all along.

Herschel Walker, it seems, is shaking the red clay of Georgia from his toes forever, and heading North. The underground railway is still working. Marse Vince Dooley can't even call out the dogs.

BUT, HAS the United States Football League preserved the Union? In plucking Herschel Walker out of the ranks of innocence where the sweet magnolias blossom 'round everybody's door and they go to the Sugar Bowl every year, and transporting him to a place where he'll have to make due with the occasional Rolls-Royce or mink rug, have they solidified the American Dream by making Walker a General? What have they done for pro football?

An upstart league always tries to find overnight credibility. The old AFL did it with Joe Namath. The NFL did it with Red Grange and the Four Horsemen.

But therein lies the rub. You see, pro football has the greatest grift in the world going. It pays not one red cent for its raw material. By the time it gets its product, i.e., four-second halfbacks or 270-pound linemen, it has been refined, polished, advertised, sleek, new, a showroom model ready for instant sale. At no cost to management.

HERSCHEL WALKER is an immediate saleable commodity. The buying and selling of him is headline stuff from coast-to-coast. It pushes multiple murders, war in the Mideast, presidential campaigns right off the front page. It leads the 11 o'clock news from Key West to Anchorage. If you never heard of the U.S. Football League, you have now.

But who made Herschel Walker a $16-million dollar man? You. Me. The taxpayers of Georgia. The colleges of the United States. We're all part of this giant conspiracy that pro football is the beneficiary of. I voted for Walker for the Heisman. My colleagues discuss learnedly whether he's greater than Grange, the Four Horsemen, Jim Brown. Shucks, whether he's greater than Gen. Sherman. We're all part of the hype. We got him off Tobacco Road and onto Park Avenue.

You see, he runs pretty good. But if he only did that in the Olympics, he'd make a nice living selling spiked shoes or insurance. But he does it on the football field, and he's worth $16 million.

To get him, the new league broke its own rules, and pro football's rules. They say now, piously, that it's a "one-shot thing, an extraordinary circumstance."

THEY'D LIKE it to be. I mean, would U.S. Steel interfere with a system that got it free iron ore refined into steel ingots before it hit their docks? Other industries pay dearly for their unrefined product. Baseball, for instance, maintains a widespread – and costly – farm system for its material to be processed. Pro football's farm system is the American university. Pro football franchises get $14 million apiece from television for fielding teams that have Marcus Allens and Freeman McNeils, Joe Namaths, and, yes, Herschel Walkers on them.

It would seem to behoove them not to upset this delicate balance in nature. The colleges willingly collaborate in this cynical scheme of things. That's because they get the use of the product to swell their coffers for four years. The athlete willingly consents because he understands that four years of peonage will pay off in a pro contract. So, the colleges compromise their integrity, their reputation, and their credibility to participate in this charade.

Will they do it now if they're going to lose their player after his freshman, sophomore or junior year? Does a college need to maintain a coaching staff of 14, a publicity office, a stadium seating 80,000, if its players are going to wear the old school tie only long enough to sign up with the New Jersey Generals?

YOU BET THE USFL wants to assure everybody this is a "one-shot" breach of the rules. But that's like a guy who's taken the last seat in a lifeboat telling the stranded pass3ngers he's sorry. He's not going to do it again. He doesn't have to.

The symbiotic relationship between the pros and colleges is so mutually beneficial, the USFL has as vested an interest in keeping it going as the NFL. Or USC. But the door is wide open now for any college player, bored with the fiction he's a student, suing the pros to buy him the minute he makes the AP All-American or wins the Heisman or the Sugar Bowl. The USFL may have interfered with one of the sweetest arrangements known to science or commerce. Like Sherman they may have raped more than Georgia. Like Sherman, they may find out war is hell.

Sixers need 20 victories to break Lakers' record

By The Associated Press

The Philadelphia 76ers are winning so often that they could slow down their pace for the rest of the season and still finish with the best record in the history of the National Basketball Association.

Their 106-94 victory Tuesday night over the New York Knicks, who had been playing their best basketball in 10 years, gave the 76ers a 50-7 record, the fewest losses ever for a team with that many victories.

If Philadelphia wins at least 20 of its remaining 25 games, an .800 percentage compared to its current winning average of .877, it will become the first NBA team to win 70 times, surpassing the 1971-72 Los Angeles Lakers' regular-season record of 69-13.

Julius Erving, who has led the 76ers to the NBA finals three times since 1977, only to see them lose on each occasion, said this year's team "was not the best I've ever seen in training camp. But now it could begin to rate with the best I've every played on."

The closest anyone on the team comes to being concerned at all about the 70-victory milestone is Moses Malone, the all-star center who led the 76ers with 25 points and 13 rebounds against the Knicks.

"We want to play sound ball," Malone said. "If we have a chance (for the record) with 12 games to go, maybe we'll go for it. But now, we just want to keep playing the way we're playing."

"Winning 70 games was not a training camp priority," Coach Billy Cunningham said. "If we get to that point, it's just a regular game for us. I won't play Moses any more to win a game and lose the war. Seventy wins is something I hear from the press."

Bucks 101, Bullets 99

Sidney Moncrief scored 33 points, including Milwaukee's last nine, to lead the Bucks over Washington. Moncrief had six of his points in the last 31 seconds of the game to break a 95-95 tie. Jeff Ruland finished with 25 points for the Bullets.

Lakers 114, Bulls 111

Los Angeles broke a three-game losing streak as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 31 points and Jamaal Wilkes 26, including four baskets each down the stretch.

Spurs 119, Sonics 104

Mike Mitchell scored 33 points and George Gervin 25 to pace San Antonio over Seattle. Gervin and Mitchell both had 15 points in the first half as the Spurs raced to a 57-45 lead, and then Gervin scored six straight during a 10-0 run that put them ahead 85-63 late in the third quarter.

NBA

Celtics 129, Kings 111

Robert Parish and Danny Ainge led a 40-18 third-quarter blitz that lifted Boston past Kansas City. Parish had 17 of his game-high 31 points in the period while Ainge, who finished with 21, added 13. Ray Williams scored 24 points to lead the Kings.

Nuggets 132, Cavaliers 121

NBA scoring leader Alex English had 31 points and guard T.R. Dunn added a season-high 20 as Denver won its fourth straight by beating Cleveland. The victory put the Nuggets at the .500 mark for the first time since the second game of the season.

Mavericks 123, Rockets 115

Dallas outscored Houston 23-6 in the first five minutes of the second half and extended an 11-point halftime lead to 103-77 as Jay Vincent contributed 10 of his 27 points in the third period. The Rockets retaliated with a 35-12 spurt in the fourth quarter to cut the big deficit to 117-112, but that was as close as they could get.

Jazz 127, Clippers 105

Darrell Griffith scored 22 points and Rickey Green added 20 as Utah blitzed San Diego. The Jazz led by as many as 33 points in the fourth period before the Clippers narrowed the deficit.

Hawks 109, Pacers 106

Dominique Wilkins had 26 points and Eddie Johnson hit three free throws in the final nine seconds to keep Atlanta ahead of Indiana. It was the fourth victory in a row for the Hawks while the Pacers are winless in their last seven outings.

Pistons 114, Warriors 103

Kelly Tripucka and Vinnie Johnson led six Detroit players in double figures with 19 points each as Detroit handed Golden State its fourth straight loss. Tripucka contributed a three-point basket to a 9-0 streak by the Pistons after the game was tied 92-92. Joe Barry Carroll led all scorers with 27 points for the Warriors.

NBC bids $1 billion for sole baseball broadcasting rights

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC Sports, already holding broadcast rights to half of major league baseball's games, has bid $1 billion to become baseball's sole network broadcaster. The Associated Press confirmed Tuesday.

Both NBC and baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office announced Tuesday that they had signed a five-year agreement, beginning in 1984, for the rights to half of baseball's telecasts. The contract is worth $500 million, sources said. ABC holds right of first refusal for the other half of baseball's telecasts.

The $1 billion offer was reported in the Chicago Sun-Times Tuesday.

In his statement, Kuhn confirmed that NBC had offered to buy the broadcast rights to the rest of baseball if neither ABC nor CBS came up with an appropriate offer. Sources within the television industry said NBC's offer was an additional $500 million, or $1 billion total.

Kuhn's statement said ABC first would be offered a chance to renew its deal "as the present rights-holder and pursuant to its contract rights." If ABC cannot come up with a matching offer, baseball then would approach CBS, with NBC waiting with its $1 billion offer.

JIM SPENCE, senior vice-president for ABC Sports, said: "We are in the process of making our decision."

Asked if ABC's payment would have to be the same as NBC's, Spence said, "That's a pretty good assumption."

Neal H. Pilson, the president of CBS Sports, declined to speculate whether CBS would bid if ABC declined to exercise its right of first refusal.

In his statement, Kuhn called the deal "an outstanding agreement," adding, "I'm delighted to see our clubs get the very substantial financial benefits of this deal."

The contract with NBC extends through 1988. It replaces a four-year deal with the network that expires at the end of the 1983 season. ABC's contract expires at the same time.

The contract also contains a new clause which gives NBC exclusive rights to its 30 Saturday games in each year of the contract. The commissioner's office said the clause will prohibit local telecasts of games during the NBC time slot but will not affect cable and pay TV outlets.

Under the contract, NBC also has exclusive rights to two prime time games each year as well as the opportunity to do eight more each in prime time and during the afternoon.

THE CONTRACT gives NBC the World Series in 1984, '86 and '88 and the American and National League Championship Series and All-Star Game in 1985 and '87. NBC also is lobbying heavily in support of the Major League Baseball Executive Council's approval of a seven-game playoff format to replace the five-game system, thus producing more revenue. That change still must be approved by the players' union.

If a deal is made with ABC, that network would have rights to the World Series, playoffs and All-Star Game in those years not covered by the NBC contract. Another plum in NBC's attempt to take over all of baseball's broadcast rights are the Monday night games currently done by ABC.

The Sun-Times said if NBC's $1 billion offer is agreed upon, it would pay each of the major leagues' 26 teams $7.5 million a year, up from $1.9 million in network television revenues currently received.

Cronin, Banks named honorary All-Star captains

Joe Cronin and Ernie Banks, a pair of stellar performers at shortstop, were named the honorary captains of the American and National League sides, respectively, for the 1983 Baseball All-Star game at Comiskey Park. He also served as AL President for six years and was the starting shortstop in the 1933 mid-summer classic. Lee splits with Coronado, Monterey beats MHS twice

LUBBOCK — Overall, the opening of the 1983 baseball season for Midland Lee and Midland High is not going to be cause for much celebration as the two Tall city teams dropped three of four games against Lubbock Monterey and Lubbock Coronado here Tuesday.

Midland Lee came away with a split from its two games, defeating Coronado 10-3 in the opener only to be shut-out in the nightcap, 11-0.

Craig Ray went the distance for Midland Lee giving up only three hits while the Rebel lineup came away with nine, including doubles by Brian Willis and Steve Woodley and a triple by Steve Nichols.

In the second game, Coronado's Bret Marshall hurled a two-hit shutout at the Rebels, allowing only Barry Blackwell and David Fuentes to reach base cleanly. Each stroked triples for the Rebels but couldn't make it home.

MIDLAND HIGH couldn't find the right combinations against Monterey as the Bulldogs dropped both ends of the doubleheader, 8-4 and 9-5.

Coronado's Kevin Short, with relief help from John Bradshaw in the sixth inning, posted the victory against Midland High's Tim Davis.

Of the five hits the Bulldogs collected in the first game, four were doubles from different players: Tim Davis, Wade Perry, Jeff Magness and Mike Foulds.

Mike Eckles, who relieved reliever Chris Segrist in the third, gave up only one run in the final four innings to collect the victory in the nightcap.

On Friday and Saturday, Lee and MHS will travel to Big Spring where they will take part in the Pre-District Tournament.

Syracuse steals one from Villanova

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

By The Associated Press

Syracuse's Erich Santifer stole a ballgame for the Syracuse Orangemen — literally.

Santifer not only scored his team's last basket after his sixth steal of the game, but twice connected on a pair of clutch free thows in the last 79 seconds as 18th-ranked Syracuse, playing at home, upset fourth-ranked Villanova 79-70 in a Big East Conference basketball game Tuesday night.

"It was a special win; it gives us a little momentum for the end of the season and it's important to have momentum going into the Big East tournament," Santifer said.

In the only other contest involving a member of The Associated Press Top Twenty, Jon Sundvold scored 22 points, including a game-winning 20-footer with one second left, as No.13 Missouri staved off an upset bid and clinched its fourth straight Big Eight title with a 49-47 victory over Kansas State.

The Syracuse victory ended a frustrating string of losses for the Orangemen against three of their key conference rivals — Villanova, St. John's and Georgetown.Syracuse improved its record to 19-6 overall and 9-5 in the conference and kept Villanova, 21-5 overall and 12-3 in the Big East, from clinching the title.

Villanova's John Pinone led all scorers with 23 points, but Syracuse took a 63-55 lead with 5:02 remaining when Santifer, who paced his team with 21 points, stole the ball from guard Gary McLain and drove for a slam dunk. That was the last basket for the Orangemen, who connected on 16 of 21 from the free-throw line down the stretch.

"Down the stretch, a different guy made the key play every time, but Erich was the difference," said Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim.

At Manhattan, Kan., Sundvold's bucket capped a second half in which there were eight lead changes and seven ties. Kansas State's last lead was 47-45 with 4:43 to play on a Tyrone Jackson jump shot.

Sundvold tied the score 47-47 with a 20-footer with 1:47 remaining, and Missouri, 22-6, regained possession for the winning shot when Kansas State guard Jim Roder threw the ball out of bounds with 51 seconds left.

"A lot of people thought our kids would play lackadasical tonight, having already clinched a tie for the championship," said Missouri Coach Norm Stewart. "But I don't think we did. Our kids were intense; they just played great. I'm so proud of our ballclub — all of them...you have to enjoy the moment, and this is great."

At Milwaukee, Marc Marotta scored the go-ahead points on a jump shot from the key with 3:52 left in overtime and Marquette held on to defeat Stetson 69-66.Glenn Rivers, held to one field goal in the first 32½ minutes, finished with 15 points to lead Marquette, 18-8. Stetson, 18-9, was topped by Mike Reddick's 16 points.The game was tied at 60-60 at the end of regulation and Marotta's jumper put the Warriors ahead to stay 62-60. Stetson's Roland Rucker sent the game into overtime with a desperation 30-foot shot at the buzzer.

At Auburn, Ala., Odell Mosteller scored 20 points and Charles Barkley had 17 points and 17 rebounds as Auburn crushed Mississippi 82-59 in a game that gave idle Kentucky the Southeastern Conference championship.Kentucky had clinched a title tie on Sunday and Ole Miss was the only team that retained a mathematical shot at a tie.

Auburn was in control the whole way, bursting to an 11-0 lead as Mosteller scored seven points and Barkley the other four.Auburn's biggest lead of the night was 80-52 with 1:23 left.

At New York, Randy Cozzens scored 26 points, including 19 to lead a second-half surge, as Army upset Manhattan 74-69 in the opening round of the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference playoffs.

At South Orange, N.J., Earl Kelley scored 25 points to lead Connecticut over Seton Hall 78-67 in a Big East game.

Big wheels from 'Big Red Machine' back together, this time as Phillies

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Pete Rose, Joe Morgan and Tony Perez, once big wheels in Cincinnati's feared Big Red Machine, were reunited as teammates Tuesday for the first time in seven years, this time in Philadelphia Phillies' uniforms.

"This is going to be a fun year," Rose, 42, said as he stroked line drives in a batting cage.

Rose, Perez and Morgan haven't been on the same team since 1976, when they led the Reds to a second straight world championship and a four-game World Series sweep of the New York Yankees.

"I wanted the Phillies to get Perez last year," Rose said. "He and Joe are going to add a lot of class, a lot of leadership and a lot of positive thinking to this team."

PEREZ, 40, and Morgan, 39, were the last Phillies on the field for the team's first full squad workout of spring training. Rose flashed them a smile as they began doing calisthenics.

"Piece of cake, right Tony?" Rose said.

Perez then stepped into a batting cage and rifled a shot on his first swing.

"Still can hit right out of bed," Morgan said, laughing and smiling. "And they say he's too old."

A couple of Phillies then asked Morgan about Perez, who hit .260 with six home runs as a part-timer player for the Boston Red Sox last season.

"They say he's quiet," Morgan said with a smile. "He's not. He's crazy."

ROSE, IN the adjacent batting cage, stopped swinging for a few moments to watch Perez hit.

Close friends, Perez and Rose now share not only the same team uniform but the same position, first base.

But Rose, who prefers to play every game, didn't seem upset that he and Perez would divide playing time.

"Hey, Tony, I've figured out who you can have," Rose said.

"You can have (Steve) Rogers, (Nolan) Ryan, (Mario) Soto and the Niekros (Phil and Joe). I'll take the rest."

The Phillies, one of baseball's most veteran teams last year when they finished second to St. Louis in the National League East, became even older with the off-season acquisitions of Morgan and Perez.

PHILLIES PRESIDENT Bill Giles said Perez and Morgan were acquired as much for their leadership abilities as their athletic talent.

"They help you in the clubhouse," he said. "They're going to help the adrenalin of this ballclub."

Morgan, who hit .289 with 14 homers and 61 runs batted in with the San Francisco Giants last season, expects even better results now that he's out of wind-swept Candlestick Park in San Francisco.

"I feel I can hit 15 to 20 homers and hit from .280 to .310," said Morgan, whose orange and black Giants' shoes clashed with his red and white Phillies' uniform.

He then spotted Rose interviewing Perez for a Philadelphia TV station.

"I've got to hear this," he said, striding over to listen to the interview.

"Since we both play first base, which one of our sons is going to play first in the father-son game?" Rose was asking Perez.

"I think mine will play third," Perez said, laughing.

Oil price drop could hit state hard

HOUSTON (AP) — A steep drop in world oil prices may be good news for consumers, but bad news for companies and banks heavily involved in oil production.

Lower oil prices may mean lower fuel costs for motorists and, eventually, lower prices for products made from petrochemicals.

But for the Texas oil industry, a drop in world oil prices may bring on hard times.

OPEC oil ministers are to meet in Europe this month to set new, and probably lower, oil prices. The postings are expected to dip below the current $30 a barrel. Most predict the price could drop to $27 or lower.

Most Texas bankers and oilmen believe the state's industry could easily adjust to a price of $26 to $27, but a drop to $25 would cause a serious belt-tightening, financial experts say.

"All bankers I've talked to agree that $25 is a break point," said Tony A. Martin, chairman of the First City National Bank in Midland, Texas. "Below that and even some of the better oil credits will have to have extended payments of existing loans."

Banks and oil companies consider proven oil reserves to be assets that can be used for loan collateral. If, for instance, a company has a million-barrel reserve and oil is priced at $30 a barrel, then the company has at least $30 million to use for a collateral.

But the collateral's value would drop if the oil price drops, and the oil company's line of credit would be reduced.

Oil company executives said a drop in the value of company assets would cause a cutback in the riskiest of the oil exploration activities. Wildcat wells would be less likely to be drilled.

Texas companies that deal in oil well services — drilling, equipment manufacturing, rig operators — would have less work. Workers would be laid off and rigs put into mothballs.

In extreme cases, banks could end up holding worthless loans and find themselves in trouble.

Martin and others say that even a drop to prices of $25 a barrel will not seriously disrupt the state's oil business because most companies and banks have already made an adjustment. The industry enjoyed boom times in 1980 and 1981, but then rode a "bust" starting a year ago.

"Some drop in price has already been anticipated by the larger companies," said James Dyer, chief economist of Texas Commerce Bank of Houston.

George Mitchell, president and founder of Mitchell Energy Co., said the industry has already gone through a shakedown that forced 80 percent of the inefficient companies out of the business.

"We'll lose the other 20 percent at below $27 (a barrel for oil)," said Mitchell. "You'll shake out a lot of groups who shouldn't have been in it (oil) to begin with."

Mitchell said the costs of drilling has dropped by 25 percent in recent months and good operators can still do well.

The drop in oil prices will cost the state budget about $40 million for every dollar decline in the price for a barrel of oil.

John Moore of the division of tax information of the State Controllers Office said that projected oil tax revenues for Texas were based on $29.60 oil. Revenue estimates, he said, have now been revised downward by a billion dollars for the current two-year budget period.

"We were expecting $5.1 billion in new (increased) money," said Moore. "We cut that estimate to $4.1 billion."

Moore said the state will still enjoy a surplus, however, for the two-year budget period ending Aug. 31, but he noted that revised projections are expected next week.

For the consumer, a drop in the oil prices could be reflected directly at the gasoline pump. Experts estimate that gasoline prices could decline by 2.3 cents per gallon for every $1 reduction in the per barrel price of oil.

Braniff officials await court's decision

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Officials of Braniff International and Pacific Southwest Airlines waited today for three federal appeals judges to decide on the fate of a proposed operating agreement between the two carriers.

"We are obviously disappointed that there has not yet been a decision," said PSA spokesman Bill Hastings. "But we will back Wednesday for the decision."

A Tuesday deadline had been set by PSA officials, who said that they would abandon their plans for a division based at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport if the agreement still awaited approval by the three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The panel on Monday ruled that U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon of Fort Worth was within his jurisdiction in approving the package deal by which PSA would operate some of Braniff's planes and hire former employees of the grounded airline in a new Texas division.

Mort Rible, PSA general counsel, said Tuesday that the company would continue to wait until the ruling. PSA has said its deal with Braniff was off unless it could be closed in time for the new Texas division to be flying by June 15.

"We have already committed $1.5 million in costs to this venture," Rible said. "We spend that even if the deal falls through. So obviously we will have to continue to wait."

Still undecided by the federal panel is whether the package approved by Mahon would include "time slots" for landings and takeoffs once held by Braniff.

The Federal Aviation Administration argued that it alone has jurisdiction over the issuance of the slots and a federal judge cannot treat them as property to be conveyed by contract.

Judge Thomas Gibbs Gee of Austin said the panel would rule promplty on the issue of landing and takeoff slots.

PSA proposes to lease 30 of Braniff's 62 idle jets and hire about 2,000 people — most of them former Braniff employees — in extending its service to 16 other cities, including such major routes as Washington, Newark, Chicago and Miami.

Braniff collapsed under the weight of its $1 billion debt last spring and filed for protection from its creditors in federal bankrutpcy court in Fort Worth.

A Fort Worth federal bankruptcy judge said that with the Pacific Southwest takeover, Braniff would be able to pay 12 cents on the dollar when liquidated — instead of the 9 cents that could be paid without additional revenue.

"It will take 90 days after the deal is closed to get into operation," Hastings said earlier.

If the time slots are not made part of the packet, the deal is off, Hastings said.

And, if 5th Circuit rulings are appealed to the high court and the justices stop the transaction pending a final decision, that would also scotch the deal.

"If there is a stay, the deal is dead," Hastings said.

American Airlines opposed the takeover, arguing that the U.S. District Court erred in getting into the case because only a federal bankruptcy court has jurisdiction in bankruptcy cases.

Department of Justice lawyer Eloise Davies said the government agreed that neither the law nor Supreme Court rulings ever intended to invalidate the primary jurisdiction given to federal district courts.

BBB's Betterbook to be delivered to homes soon

The Better Book, a publication that features listings of Midland businesses that belong to the Better Business Bureau here, will appear on your doorstep sometime after March 12.

The yellow pages-style book contains business listings — both by alphabet and by category of merchant. The listings are free to BBB-Permian Basin members, who also bought advertising to help pay for printing and disseminating the Better Book.

Mayor G. Thane Akins will participate in the new book's arrival by declaring March 13-19 "Better Business Bureau Week."

The Better Book actually has several different parts, says the BBB. It begins with a section that explains the Better Business Bureaus' functions and operations. The fact that BBB can help with certain "marketplace difficulties" is covered.

The second portion of the book will deal with marketplace savvy, a needed attribute with so much marketing and advertising bombarding consumers every day.

"Some of the areas covered are how to shop effectively, laws concerning consumers, and door to door salesmen, charitable solicitations, and warranties on consumer goods," said BBB chief Linda Truitt on Tuesday.

"A lot of people make a contract for an item — like a car — and then they think 'I can break it if I want, they have to take it back.' A person cannot just break a sales or service contract because they want to," Truitt said, commenting that this is a frequent problem people come to the BBB to solve.

The third part of the Better Book, according to the BBB, will be the alphabetical and classified-like listings of the member businesses in Midland and Odessa.

"At last count, there were about 1400 member businesses in this area. They are all listed in the new Better Book," she said.

The free copy delivered to Midland households will be dropped off by a Midland or Odessa high school band student, who will be paid for each book delivered. The bands will use the income to pay for trips to out-of-town contests and events.

Fewer 7-Elevens heldup

DALLAS (AP) — Crediting the help of a former armed robber, the Southland Corp. has announced a sharp decrease in the number of holdups at its 7,165 7-Eleven convenience stores since a new robbery prevention program was instituted in 1976.

The number of robberies at 7-Eleven stores decreased 25 percent last year and more than 55 percent since 1976, the Southland Corp. announced Tuesday.

Ray Johnson, a convicted felon, now uses his expertise for crime prevention within the convenience grocery chain. Johnson suggested physical store changes such as increased lighting, removing signs from windows and obstructing escape paths.

Gold bullion up $18 in Europe

LONDON (AP) — Gold bullion, which lost 10 percent of its value earlier in the week, gained nearly $18 dollars in brisk European trading today.

The U.S. dollar fell against all major currencies except the British pound, which hit an all-time low in London.

European traders attributed the dollars overall weakness to rebounding gold prices. Investors had bought dollars as a refuge while gold was being hit by panic-selling.

FTC agrees to Borden settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed settlement of charges that Borden Inc. illegally monopolized the reconstituted lemon juice market has been agreed to by the Federal Trade Commission.

Borden, under the proposed settlement, would not be allowed to sell its ReaLemon reconstituted lemon juice for less than the product's variable cost, the FTC said Tuesday. Variable costs are those that fluctuate with changes in production.

The FTC charged in 1974 that Borden used its dominant position, size and economic power to frustrate the growth of smaller reconstituted lemon juice producers and distributors, to reduce their opportunities for business survival and to lessen competition.

In 1978, the commission ruled that Borden had monopolized the market through the use of predatory pricing — pricing ReaLemon at a low level with the intention of driving competitors out of the market. It prohibited Borden from selling ReaLemon at "unreasonably low prices."

Borden's appeal of the 1978 order affirmed by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court in 1982 is now pending before the Supreme Court. The FTC said it would ask the court for a 60-day extension to allow public comment on the proposed settlement.

James McCrory, Borden's director of public relations, said in a telephone interview that the 1978 FTC order would have required the company to maintain uniform national prices. "It would have prohibited us from lowering prices where we had competition," he said.

He disputed the FTC's claim that Borden had monopolized the reconstituted lemon juice market.

Under the proposed settlement, Borden would be barred from pricing ReaLemon so that the net revenue from the product for any fiscal quarter in any sales district is less than the variable cost for that quarter and district. Variable costs, according to the order, could include labor and materials, such as bottles, labels and ingredients.

In announcing its approval of the settlement, the FTC said its 1978 order "may discourage dominant firms from vigorously competing" because it "did not adequately weigh the competitive advantages of Borden's product differentiation" or the promotion of interbrand competition.

Commissioners Michael Pertschuk and Patricia P. Bailey voted to reject the proposed settlement. Pertschuk called the agreement "a retreat to a legal standard that is extremely lenient in allowing future predation by a monopolist, unduly ambiguous and at odds with sound reasoning in recent court opinions."

Ford recalls '83s with transmission problem

DETROIT (AP) — About 140,000 1983-model Ford vehicles with automatic transmissions are being recalled because they may remain in neutral instead of "park" or fail to show correctly which gear they are in, the company says.

In a statement released Tuesday, Ford Motor Co. said no accidents were reported regarding the problems, which were discovered by Ford employees.

Specifically, more than 100,000 cars, trucks and vans are being recalled because of incorrectly heat-treated retainer pins on parking actuating rods on vehicles with automatic overdrive transmissions, the statement said.

The vehicles — Ford Crown Victoria, Thunderbird and LTD, Mercury Grand Marquis, Cougar and Marquis, Lincoln Town Car, Mark VI and Continental cars, F-series light-duty trucks and E-series vans and club wagons — might remain in neutral when shifted into park and could roll if the parking brake is not applied, Ford said.

The problem was discovered in company-operated vehicles and in two vehicles at assembly plants.

The other recall, of some 40,000 cars with column-mounted automatic transmissions, results from improperly hardened clips on the steering column assemblies.

The clips could loosen causing the cars — 1983 Ford Crown Victoria, LTD and Fairmont, Mercury Grand Marquis, Marquis and Zephyr, and Lincoln Town Car, Mark VI and Continental cars — to fail to shift into the gears indicated in the selectors, Ford said.

The problem was noticed at an assembly plant, the company said.

Transformer defect shorts TI's earnings

DALLAS (AP) — A defect in a transformer sold with Texas Instrument's popular 99/4A home computer is expected to reduce the company's first-quarter earnings by $50 million, company officials said.

TI halted all shipments of the 99/4A on Feb. 17 and announced five days later that it was discussing with the Consumer Product Safety Commission "the remote possibility that, in the case of transformer failure, the operator of the TI/4A home computer could be exposed to the hazard of an electrical shock."

TI officials said the month-long interruption "will have a very severe impact on first-quarter 1983 results because of the rapid buildup of costs to support plans for a much higher level of home computer shipments than can now be realized."

Human rights chief lauds administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — Heading Americans for Democratic Action at Harvard and supporting Hubert Humphrey for president are not the usual ways to a sensitive, top policy job in the conservative Reagan administration.

But it's the course traveled by Elliott Abrams, who heads the human rights bureau at the State Department, and he says he is completely comfortable, especially with the top men in the administration: President Reagan, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and William P. Clark, who heads the National Security Council.

"The key people in foreign policy beyond the president — Bill Clark and the secretary — both have an excellent understanding of the whole human rights policy and the program, and are tremendously sympathetic," Abrams said in a recent interview.

"I couldn't ask for a better setup."

The 35-year-old neoconservative issued the State Department's annual report to Congress and the public recently on the beatings, jailings and other degradations common to a majority of countries around the world.

"No other government does anything like this, nothing like it at all," Abrams said of the human rights assessment.

Quietly, throughout the year, the United States tries to exert its influence on regimes from the left to the right, occasionally enlisting the president or Shultz to write a letter or make a personal appeal to spring a dissident from jail, he said.

AP Laserphoto

Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams said, during a recent interview in his State Department office, that he is completely comfortable with the top men in the administration.

"In this job you are always butting your head against a stone wall," Abrams said as he reflected on his more than two years as Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights and Humanitarian Aid.

The aim, he said, is to have "a moral presence" — not to sermonize but to mix common sense with idealism. "The guy you get out of jail today may be the foreign minister 10 years from now," Abrams said.

But Patricia Derian, who was in charge of human rights under President Carter, says the administration has been "wrapping the flag around dictators" and using arms sales and transfers "to give material aid and symbolic support to governments which are anti-democratic in every regard."

She said Shultz "still hasn't focused" on abuses in Central America, Asia, Africa or the Indian subcontinent.

"The fact is, the office of human rights is functioning, but it is functioning in a policy vacuum that was deliberately created by the administration," she said.

Jerome J. Shestack, a Philadelphia lawyer who is president of the International League for Human Rights, dismisses Abrams as "well-meaning but largely ineffective."

Shestack, who was the Carter administration's representative to the United Nations Human Rights Commission, said Abrams is frequently overruled by Thomas Enders, the assistant secretary of state on Latin America and "really gets little support."

Candy bar czar makes liqueur-spiced treats

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — After a lifetime of chocolate, Forrest Mars hungered for more. So the 74-year-old candy bar czar moved to the desert and started making cocktail chocolates to please the tourist palate.

The new Mars venture, Ethel M Chocolates, is geared to appeal to the 12 million tourists who visit this desert city each year.

Ethel M produces the only liqueur-spiced candies in America with the exception of Kentucky's bourbon balls, says Dean Musser, the company's administrative director and a 30-year Mars employee.

"It's an old idea in the candy business," Musser said. "Liqueur-filled candies have long been very popular in Europe. It's just that the idea had never expanded to the United States."

Mars had built his father's Mars Candy Co. into a $3 billion annual enterprise on the strength of the candy bar. He headed for Las Vegas four years ago after five years of retirement on his Virginia estate.

Mars headed west with his mother, Ethel Mars, Musser and another assistant, Alan Thomas.

In February 1981, the first chocolates began pouring from rows of white, sanitized machines.

Ethel M makes 24 different chocolates, and only five are liqueur-filled. But they are the star attraction at nine Ethel M shops in Las Vegas, Reno and Lake Tahoe.

Karen Grover, an Ethel M spokeswoman, says there is less than a normal-size drink in a one-pound box of the cocktail chocolates, which sell for $10.

The liqueur chocolates come in five flavors: bourbon cremes, creme de menthe, cafe au liqueur, scotch creams and cherries jubilee.

The liqueur candies can be sold only in Nevada. The other 19 varieties currently are sold in a Phoenix store and shipped to points around the country from November through March.

The desert heat prevents shipping in the spring and summer months.

Musser says Mars, who is unavailable for interviews, worked two years to design the $6 million plant and machinery to build the chocolate.

Junior aids team in victory

WOOSTER, Ohio (AP) — A cerebral palsy victim who dreamed of lifting his basketball team to victory spent just 30 seconds on the court — but it was time enough to sink two free throws and help win the game for Wooster High School.

"I'll eventually put it away in the back of my mind," said Jody LaBant, 18, a junior who has had seven eye operations. "But I'll pull it out 20 years from now and say to myself, 'I don't believe I did that.' I'll never forget it, that's for sure."

LaBant took the floor and made two free throws with five seconds remaining in a 61-44 Wooster victory Feb. 12 over Lodi Cloverleaf.

LaBant said he began wanting to play for Wooster High 14 years ago, and he started working to make the team as a sophomore.

"He never asked for favors, never accepted any," said Coach Mark Alberts. "He'd run the auditorium steps with the others during conditioning drills. Sometimes he'd fall, but he'd never quit. He'd get up, keep going. He was an inspiration to us all."

LaBant became team manager as a sophomore and was manager again this year until near the end of the regular season.

"It occurred to me several months ago that Jody would be too old to play next year," Albert said. "So I decided to allow him to dress for the last four games of the regular season, hoped there would be some way to get him into a game."

The opportunity came in the next-to-last game against Cloverleaf after Wooster had taken a comfortable lead.

"LaBant, get in there," Alberts said.

The play was set so LaBant would get an open shot, but it fizzled.

Cloverleaf Coach Rick Hewit, however, knew why LaBant was in. With 10 seconds left, he ordered one of his players to foul LaBant.

As LaBant moved to the free-throw line, a teammate put an arm around him and whispered, "You've waited a long time for this."

"Yes," LaBant said. "Fourteen years."

LaBant's first shot slammed against the backboard, but dropped into the basket.

"The second shot hit nothing but net," LaBant said.

Mexican fleet embargoed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's tuna-fishing fleet is virtually paralyzed because of a U.S. embargo, according to an industry spokesman.

The spokesman said earlier this week that prices have dropped following a 1979 U.S. decision to stop buying Mexican tuna. The U.S. action was to retaliate against Mexican seizures of American tuna boats inside its claimed territorial waters.

Capitalism taught to Chinese

WELLESLEY, Mass. (AP) — In teaching the mysteries of capitalism to a group of Chinese factory managers, educators from the United States said they first had to reintroduce their students to an old concept — profit.

"It was something completely foreign to them," said Melvyn Copen, vice president of academic affairs at Babson College. "The concept of profit was completely washed out of the society. For years the goal was to reach your quota. They were doing that, but very inefficiently."

Copen is one of five professors at the Wellesley business school who traveled to China last June to instruct 56 students and officials in the ways of management, marketing and employee motivation.

The small school, which encourages students to run their own campus businesses, has continued its Chinese connection by being host to Chinese students and scholars.

But last summer's mission provided a glimpse at the differences in the way Americans and Chinese take care of business.

COPEN'S GROUP was invited for a month's stay in Peking and Shanghai at a time when the Chinese government was launching a limited experiment with the practice of free enterprise.

"It was announced that people could sell 20 percent of their production on the open market," he said. "That created problems. Many of these managers who wanted to do a good job didn't know what it meant."

The Babson group was asked to explain the American system. But Copen and his fellow instructors first had to resolve some cultural differences.

The American professors were used to discussing and debating business theory with students. This ran counter to the way the Chinese way of learning.

"In China, the scholar is revered," Copen said. "They feel the scholar is there because he knows the subject and will include everything you need to know. To ask something would be discourteous."

So when the Babson group persuaded a few students to pose questions, "you would get angry mumbling in the class," said Copen. "We found there was a major ideological battle among the students over the issue."

BUT ONCE THE students accepted the Western practices, the professors learned the Chinese were budding capitalists.

"I'd love to have some of those people on my staff if I was running a U.S. company," said Larry Isaacson, a professor of marketing. "We were amazed how easily they got into it."

Copen said the Chinese had their weaknesses when it came to Western-style business practices. The Chinese, used to chronic shortages, keep massive inventories of both raw materials and finished goods, a practice that would make their American counterparts shudder.

"There are an enormous amount of people involved in a Chinese enterprise," he said. "A factory supplies housing, schooling, food and medical care for its employees and their families. If you were to compare a textile factory in this country and China, I would guess you would find a difference of output between a factor of five and 10 times.

"FRANKLY, THERE is a lot of inefficiency and non-automated practices. That's why they are very interested in motivating people."

But the professors gave their students high marks on organizing skills.

In one exercise designed to show the ways business goals are reached the class was divided into different groups and told to organize duties.

Copen said when the exercise is conducted among Western businessmen, much of the time is used deciding who will do what. The Chinese were much faster.

"Literally within 15 seconds, a group leader was picked and organized the groups," he said. "It was like someone had dropped oil on water.

Visitors are dwarfed by the monument to a fallen Russian soldier in Volgograd (formerly Stalingrad), U.S.S.R., in honor of the 40th anniversary of the Battle of Stalingrad. Legend has it that the soldier portrayed by the statue, ignited by his own firebomb, fell on a German tank with a second firebomb and was incinerated along with his target. The German 6th Army was defeated at the Battle of Stalingrad, and its surrender on Feb. 1, 1943, marked a turning point in Germany's attempted conquest of the U.S.S.R.

Migrants return to Turkey

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — In the 1960s, Turks by the hundreds of thousands streamed to West Germany, where jobs beckoned and the nation basked in an "economic miracle." But the good times are over and the Turks are steaming back — some willingly, some not — to a homeland that may not be able to provide for them.

"It's no good in Germany," said Musa Yilmaz, 20, who cleaned commuter trains in Stuttgart for two years, saving only enough money to bring home a color television set. "I'm going back to farming again, if I can find a job." With unemployment for Turks in West Germany running at 17 percent, the official 20 percent unemployment rate in Turkey no longer seems so daunting. More and more of West Germany's estimated 2 million legal and illegal Turks are opting to face the economic crisis at home rather than remain in what they believe is an increasingly hostile climate.

About 60,000 left their "little Istanbuls" last year, and even more are expected to repatriate this year.

"Everyone wants to go back to Turkey," said Ergun Ulucak, 40, who was returning to his rural town of Malatya after working for Siemens, the giant electronic company, in Regensburg for 15 years.

"I got laid off and decided to retire. If you're going to live off a pension, you might as well do it at home. At least no one calls you names."

The issue of pensions, however, remains a problem for those who want to leave West Germany.

"I was invited to work in Germany," said Mulayn Elbasan, 48, a locksmith from Izmit who worked in Dortmund for 12 years.

"I lost a finger on the job and never received a pfennig for it. Now my employer is trying to get out of paying me my pension."

Some of the returnees charge that some West German employers are trying to buy off the pensions in lump sums, or in certain cases denying payment altogether.

The current acrimony is in marked contrast to the optimistic beginnings of the era of the "gastarbeiter" (the German for guest worker) in West Germany during the early 1960s, when the nation's economic miracle was in full swing and foreigners took up jobs Germans no longer wanted — in the mines, cleaning streets.

Professor Ekmel Zadil of Istanbul University, who was instrumental in recruiting labor during the early years, said: "Nearly 90 percent of all those who went were single men, or men who had left their families behind in hopes of working two or three years and returning to Turkey with a nest egg. Now around 90 percent of Turks in Germany are families who plan to spend their lives in Germany."

Invitation withdrawn for Koch to visit Beirut

NABATIYEH, Israeli-occupied Lebanon (AP) — New York Mayor Edward Koch says the Lebanese government has withdrawn an invitation for him to visit Beirut because he entered southern Lebanon in an Israeli army helicopter without Lebanese permission.

Edward Koch

John Reid, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, the Lebanese capital, confirmed today that the invitation had been withdrawn "after he (Koch) went to southern Lebanon under Israeli auspices."

However, Reid added, "They said government officials here would meet with him if he came on his own."

Koch, who visited Israel and toured Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon Tuesday, has scrapped plans to see Beirut, Reid said. "We regret he decided not to come."

Koch's spokesman, Victor Botnick, told the Associated Press the mayor would fly back to New York Friday instead of spending a day in Beirut.

Escorted by a heavy Israeli Army guard, Koch flew here from Israel Tuesday in an Israeli Air Force helicopter. He met with dignitaries in this southeastern Lebanese town, shook hands with its residents and staunchly defended Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

Koch later flew to Sidon and Tyre, the Mediterranean port cities of southern Lebanon, and was to travel to Beirut on Friday by way of the U.S. aircraft carrier Nimitz, after the State Department asked him not to travel there directly from Israel.

But in a telephone interview with City Hall reporters in New York, Koch said that because he entered southern Lebanon in an Israeli helicopter without clearance from the Lebanese authorities, the Lebanese government canceled an invitation to go to Beirut.

He said Lebanese authorities told him he could still visit Beirut, but only as a private citizen, without any official meetings.

"This would not be as productive," Koch said. Without the opportunity to meet a cross-section of leaders in Lebanon, he said, he felt he might as well go back to New York.

The State Department had warned Koch last week that his initial plan to cross the Israeli-Lebanese border under Israeli army auspices would be "a derogation of Lebanese sovereignty."

The State Department offered to provide the personal helicopter of special U.S. envoy Philip Habib to Koch so he could fly to Beirut by way of the U.S. aircraft carrier Nimitz.

Koch accepted last Thursday, but said Tuesday that his acceptance did not mean he could not also visit southern Lebanon, a separate trip which he said had been arranged and announced eight days ago before the Lebanese government extended its invitation.

The New York mayor told Lebanese reporters here, "I am not here to defend the Israelis other than to say that Lebanon had to have help to control the PLO, and when they are removed, the help should be removed."

Ivory-encrusted pistols have checkered history

NEW YORK (AP) — A pair of gold- and ivory-encrusted pistols, once the property of Catherine the Great, have been returned to their modern-day owner after a year of tracing by police.

The pistols, on display at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, belong to John M. Schiff, who lost them when his Manhattan apartment was robbed in 1971, his son David said Tuesday.

Police Sgt. Thomas McCabe was assigned to find the rightful owner of the guns, valued at $100,000 apiece. He followed a twisted trail that led him to relatives of the late Shah of Iran, aides to the King of Sweden and the wife of composer Irving Berlin, before David Schiff came forward after reading a newspaper article.

"This is a telephone case. We really didn't do much," McCabe said Tuesday.

But the guns that once belonged to the 18th-century Empress of Russia had a checkered past, McCabe discovered.

After John Schiff's apartment was robbed, the valuable weapons turned up during a a South Bronx drug raid in 1972. However, police had no inkling of the pistols' history or value, so they were put away and forgotten.

But 10 years later, when clerks in the police property room were about to melt down scores of illegal weapons, they realized these ornate guns were special.

The first clue was a brass tag on each gun, which referred police to the Brooklyn Museum. There, they discovered that the guns had been loaned to the museum in 1933 by Gustav Diderrich, a chef from Pennsylvania.

Diderrich, a gun collector, was chef to the Vanderbilts and then to the Wideners, a wealthy Pennsylania family.

After "30 or 40" phone calls, McCabe was led to the records of Abercrombie & Fitch, the now-defunct sporting goods store and Diderrich's broker for the guns. These records in turn led him to many other collectors, including relatives of the Shah and representatives of King Carl XVI Gustaf of Sweden.

Someone who knew Diderrich referred him to the chef's widow, who lives in New Jersey. He went through her papers and found a letter from Clarence Mackay, offering to buy the Catherine the Great guns.

Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph Co., bought the guns in 1939. Mackay, who died in 1945, had a daughter, Ellin, who married Irving Berlin. McCabe called her to see if she knew anything about the guns. She referred McCabe to her brother but at that point, David Schiff came forward to stake his claim.

Soviet sentenced for writing about anti-Semitism

MOSCOW (AP) — Valery Senderov was sentenced to a labor camp for writing about Soviet anti-Semitism and responded by standing up in the courtroom and denouncing the "outrageous, cruel and hypocritical" communist state, his friends said.

The 38-year-old dissident's sentence handed down Tuesday calls for seven years hard labor followed by five years of exile to a remote part of the Soviet Union, they added.

Senderov, an author of a study alleging official discrimination against Jews at Moscow State University, was convicted Monday of "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" after a one-day trial which was closed to Western journalists and diplomats, his friends said.

"What we have seen here exposes the outrageous, cruel and hypocritical system in this country," the friends quoted him as saying after Tuesday's sentencing. "If I am ever released from prison, I will continue to fight."

Senderov received the maximum sentence possible on the charges against him, which him were based on the discrimination study distributed to Western correspondents in Moscow.

The charges were also inspired by a leaflet Senderov wrote and circulated last spring urging rejection of a government appeal for voluntary work on Saturdays.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said Senderov pleaded guilty and admitted being connected with "the foreign subversive organization People's Labor Alliance and perpetrating anti-state activities...on its instructions."

Senderov, Boris Kanyevsky and two other scholars prepared a report in 1979 claiming that Jews who applied for admission to Moscow State University, the country's most prestigious institution of higher education, were given especially difficult examinations to reduce the number who qualified.

Kanyevsky, a Jewish mathematician, was sentenced last month to five years of internal exile for "defaming the Soviet state and social system." Dissident sources said he testified about the leaflet Senderov wrote urging the work boycott.

Medicare's 'new era' confusing

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Speculations about a tax and budget package that will reduce Medicare reimbursement dollars left local physicians scratching their heads in bewilderment Tuesday night.

During the two-hour presentation at Midland Memorial Hospital, Randy Kurtz, a representative of the Dallas-based Arthur Andersen & Co. accounting firm, outlined the challenges and strategies of the "new era for Medicare" brought on by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA) of 1982.

Before this law, the government Medicare program based reimbursement to hospitals on cost. Physicians recovered Medicare dollars based on charges of medical services. The Medicare program pays for medical services to 26 million aged and 3 million disabled persons in the U.S.

"Uncle Sam has a problem — he says health care costs are too high," said Kurtz, whose firm audits MMH.

IN OCTOBER 1982 the federal government enacted TEFRA, which mandates a $12.5 billion cut in Medicare reimbursement during the next three years.

While TEFRA has "monumental implications to the hospitals," it also will affect physicians who provide services to hospitalized patients.

But, according to Kurtz, the Health Care Finance Administration (HCFA) — developer of the new reimbursement system — has revised some of its provisions. Kurtz said the revisions were to be ready today. He did not know exactly what would be changed, but speculated some TEFRA restrictions on reimbursements to doctors would be modified.

Kurtz said HFCA has devised a system that groups diseases, determining a flat rate for each group that Medicare will reimburse to hospitals. This is expected to begin in the fall.

Although physicians expressed concern with the overall impact of TEFRA, they zeroed in on the disease-related groups (DRGs).

"WILL DRGs DO away with utilization review?" Dr. Dorothy Wyvell asked, referring to a type of checks and balances committee.

"No," said Kurtz. "Utilization is important because the government is worried that hospitals will discharge and re-admit five days later," he said, explaining that HCFA has proposed that reimbursement be paid on a prospective basis, depending on the patient's diagnosis.

Although a patient who complains of a stomach ache may be admitted to the hospital with diagnosis of an ulcer, the doctor may find the patient has cancer, Kurtz said.

Responding to a question about a patient with four or five DRGs, Kurtz told Dr. William McGavran III that "this is one of the major criticisms" of the system.

Dr. James Humphreys questioned whether Kurtz saw a problem with physicians administering less patient care to cut costs.

"You could speculate," Kurtz said. "Yes, you'd like to give optimum care, but maybe you should give adequate care (to get the patient discharged from the hospital sooner). Yes, this is a possibility."

Residents to have chance to become poll's 'public'

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland and Odessa residents will get their chance next week to become the mysterious and seemingly invisible "they" so often quoted in public opinion surveys.

Beginning Tuesday and continuing through March 13, area adults will contribute their "two cents" to the Merit Report, a bi-weekly survey which since 1981 has solicited more than 150,000 opinions in 85 U.S. cities.

A Merit Report spokeswoman said that while the two-part survey helps build "name awareness" for its sponsor, Merit Cigarettes, it also allows people the opportunity to participate in an opinion poll instead of merely hearing the results.

Lisa Thompson said results of the Midland-Odessa survey — along with the findings of a nationwide telephone poll of 1,200 people — will be released to local news media within a week after the poll.

Ms. Thompson said the survey format allows residents of a specific locale to weigh their responses against the nation's sentiment reflected in the telephone poll.

Since its inauguration in September 1981, the Merit Report has quizzed Americans on topics ranging from the economy to sports and from nuclear war to the battle of the sexes.

In New York and Los Angeles, Miami and Milwaukee, respondents pondered questions as varied as "How do you compare the nuclear weapons strength of the U.S. to that of Russia?" and "How do you feel about the mini-skirt coming back in style?"

Ms. Thompson said area participants will face questions drawn from two broad topics: morality and weight control. She said the morality questions will include whether the respondents cheat on their income tax returns and how seriously they view violating the 55 mph speed limit, engaging in extra-marital affairs and cheating on business expense accounts.

The local "pulse" will be measured using the Merit Opinion Center, a 30-foot motor coach equipped with three computer terminals.

Participants will punch the appropriate button on a keyboard in response to a series of 13 questions which appear on a video display screen.

Ms. Thompson said that as they leave the Opinion Center, participants will receive printed sheets offering a comparison between their responses and those of others who respond to the area poll.

The Opinion Center computer stores the answers and relays them to a central computer in New York City, where the results of both surveys are compiled.

Five Texas cities, Austin, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio, have already been polled for previous Merit Reports.

Surveys in Midland and Odessa will be conducted at the following locations and times:

— Tuesday and Wednesday, March 8-9, from 11:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., at Permian Mall, 4101 E. 42nd Street, Odessa.

— Thursday, March 10, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., on Colorado Street near Wall Avenue in Midland.

— Friday, March 11, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., at Gibson Discount Center, 2419 W. County Road, Odessa.

— Saturday, March 12, from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., at Midland Park Mall, 4511 Midkiff Road N., Midland.

— Sunday, March 13, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., at Gibson Discount Center, 3111 Cuthbert Ave., Midland.

Man charged in murder of San Angelo woman

Midlander in jail under $25,000 bond

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A young Midland man remains jailed after being charged with murder in the bludgeon death of a San Angelo woman whose nude body was found along the south shoulder of the old Bankhead Highway near Midland Regional Airport early Monday afternoon.

In the county jail today under $25,000 bond set Tuesday by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine was 18-year-old Dennis Goff of 2501 Harvard Ave.

He is charged with killing 31-year-old Mickey Berry, who originally was from San Angelo. She had been in Midland about a month, according to sheriff's department investigators, and had gone to work as a sales clerk for The Shoe Tree in Oak Ridge Square last week.

She listed her address on her employment application as 4318 Cedar Springs Drive, according to store manager Lonetta Courtney. She worked Thursday through Saturday and was to have reported for work again at noon Monday.

Instead, Ms. Berry's nude and battered body was discovered by a passing motorist shortly after noon Monday. She was found sprawled face up near the equipment yard of Stewart & Stevenson Services Inc. on West Highway 80.

The old Bankhead Highway is a dirt road to the north of the company, which faces U.S. 80 about one-and-a-half miles west of the airport.

Preliminary autopsy results indicate she died of massive brain damage and apparently was killed at the scene sometime early Monday morning. The murder weapon — some type of blunt instrument — has not been recovered, according to Sheriff Dallas Smith.

Goff was picked up late Monday night at the airport, where he reportedly was to have boarded a flight for El Paso to take an Army physical sometime this week.

Smith said Goff was brought to the courthouse for questioning and later charged with Ms. Berry's death. He declined to say if Goff gave investigators a confession or if a motive has been established in the case.

Her car was found parked at Bojangles Lounge at 2709 W. Wall Ave., according to Smith, and witnesses told investigators they had seen Goff and Ms. Berry leave the club together about midnight Sunday.

Smith said a laundry mark on a blouse found in a pile of clothing near the corpse led to initial identification of the body. Fingerprints later confirmed the identification.

In addition to investigators from the sheriff's department and District Attorney Vern Martin's office, Texas Rangers, the Department of Public Safety and the Midland Police Department worked on the case.

Services for Ms. Berry are pending at Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Eighteen-year-old Dennis Goff, left, of 2501 Harvard Ave., has been charged with murder in the beating death of 31-year-old Mickey Berry, a former San Angelo woman who went to work for a Midland shoe store last week. Goff is shown here being led back to the county jail following his arraignment before Justice of the Peace Robert Pine Tuesday afternoon.

Stage West TV files suit

Company alleges fraud by signal supplier

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Stage West TV, which bills itself as "The Movie Channel" (TMC), has lodged a $7.5 million lawsuit in Midland federal court against the New York microwave-transmission suppliers of the video service.

Stage West TV, which offers its video programming to hotels, motels, apartments and other residences in the Midland, Odessa and Wichita Falls areas, is alleging that Microband Corp. of America and Microtex Communications committed fraud by misrepresenting the scope and quality of their services.

In turn, Microband and Microtex have filed a $120,578.39 counterclaim suit in seeking to collect back payments for services supplied to Stage West TV. The defendants deny the fraud allegations posed by Stage West TV.

While the suit was pending, Stage West TV secured a court injunction which stopped Microband and Microtex from severing their transmission to Stage West TV. Microband and Microtex had notified Stage West TV that they would discontinue their service to the movie outlet in early February unless Stage West TV paid its bills.

Stage West TV is operated by HRS Enterprises Inc. and MDS TV Inc., according to the suit's petition, which initially was filed in 70th State District Court in Odessa but which was transferred to federal court in Midland upon motion of defendants Microband and Microtex.

Stage West TV is alleging that Microband and Microtex misrepresented their services on the start-up date of transmission, on maintenance and repair of microwave equipment, on supplying 24-hour maintenance service, on the quality of the microwave signal, on location of the antenna, on the breadth and scope of a clear signal and on the number of potential customers in the Midland-Odessa-Wichita Falls area.

The microwave transmission service offered by Microband and Microtex is known as Multipoint Distribution Service (MDS).

In the petition, Stage West TV noted it has been withholding payments to Microband and Microtex and has "expended thousands of dollars" on equipment, personnel and advertising. Stage West TV paid a $20,000 security deposit to Microband, which supplies the signal to Midland-Odessa, and a $10,000 deposit to Microtex, which supplies the service to Wichita Falls, in contract for the microwave movie service in 1981 and 1982.

Stage West TV owes Microband $85,222.28, and Microtex $35,356.11, the defendants contend.

Microband and Microtex provide movie services to 35 markets in the U.S., according Stage West TV's petition.

In its petition, Stage West TV notes that "for a programmer's business to be viable, it is essential that the defendants provide a transmission system which delivers an acceptable signal to a large number of potential subscribers in the market area."

Some see proposal as pro-drug

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Bill Blanton says his bill is merely an effort to keep the police on the street, but Texas War on Drugs members say it's a "strong do-drugs message to our youth."

At the request of Dallas officials, Blanton, R-Farmers Branch, filed a bill to allow police to give some misdemeanor offenders a traffic-like ticket instead of taking them to jail. Although the suspects would not be jailed, they would be subject to the current penalties for the offenses, including possession of two ounces or less of marijuana.

Instead of being jailed, they would have to promise to appear in court at a later date.

Dallas County Commissioner Jim Tyson told the House Criminal Jurisprudence Committee on Tuesday that 7,500 hours of police time — now spent booking misdemeanor suspects — could be saved through Blanton's bill.

The suspects involved "just don't pose a threat to the public safety," said Tyson.

The offenses covered by the proposal include homosexual conduct, disorderly conduct, prostitution, gambling and possession of two ounces or less of marijuana.

Sondra Buckner of Garland, a War on Drugs supporter, testified that young Texans would interpret the bill as condoning marijuana use.

"Let's not weaken our laws," she said, calling the bill a "strong do-drugs message to our youth."

Blanton does not want to reduce the penalty — up to two years in prison and a $1,000 fine — for misdemeanor marijuana possession.

Truck wheels crushed man, witnesses say

A Midland man killed in a truck-pedestrian accident Sunday jumped aboard the flatbed trailer of a moving 18-wheeler, slipped and was crushed under the rear wheels, according to a police report.

Officer David Shearod of the police department's traffic division said witnesses watched Sylvester Deary Stinnett leap atop the trailer as it traveled northbound in the 300 block of Lee Street late Sunday.

Shearod said witnesses saw Stinnett, 20, slip as the two-tone blue truck turned northeast on Front Street. Stinnett reportedly clung to the trailer's side as it traveled about 130 feet, then slipped and was run over by the trailer's rear wheels.

Stinnett of 1709 N. Edwards St. died at about 3:20 a.m. in Midland Memorial Hospital during surgery for multiple injuries. He was admitted to MMH at 11:06 p.m. Sunday.

The unidentified truck driver drove away from the scene, apparently unaware of Stinnett's presence, according to Shearod. He said police are still searching for the driver, but do not intend to file any charges in connection with the incident.

Houston-based supplier files suit against Midland oil firms

The Houston-based Kurt Orban Co., which says it supplied oilfield pipe and casing to Midland's Tahoe Oil & Cattle Co. and Tahoe Drilling Co. in 1982, has filed a suit to collect $136,032.70 from K.A. Freeman, who, the petition says, operates the two Tahoe companies.

The suit was filed in Houston's 234th State District Court but has been moved to Midland's 238th State District Court.

Orban claims it has acquired a lien on interest of Freeman's oil and gas wells, buildings and pipeline and leasehold interests in Martin County and seeks a foreclosure on the lien.

Freeman and the two Tahoe companies deny they are obligated to pay the Orban billing and deny Tahoe Drilling Co. does business as Tahoe Oil and Cattle Co.

Through its vice president, James W. Farrell, Orban is alleging that it sold to the defendants 4,431.70 feet of 2⅜-inch casing in 144 pieces; 2,018.70 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in 50 pieces, 2,508.30 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in 62 pieces, 284.30 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in seven pieces, 1,094.90 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in 27 pieces, 2,019.90 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in 50 pieces, 2,543.90 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in 63 pieces and 243.20 feet of 8⅝-inch casing in six pieces. All of the casing met American Petroleum Institute standards, Orban claims.

Houston-area school to halt its morning paryer practice

HOUSTON (AP) — The day at Willie B. Ermel Elementary School once started with a prayer on the public address system, but no more. Principal Rose Clifton said she is stopping the practice because of a complaint.

Ms. Clifton, who said she knew the prayer violated federal law, said she permitted it for years "because I'm a Christian.

"I had been meaning to stop it before now," she said. "We do have a lot of people who want it here, but we do have a lot who have come in from schools where it is not a tradition."

New Medicare regulations bewildering to some doctors

KURTZ EXPLAINED some of TEFRA's implications. Prior to the law, Medicare reimbursed the physician for 80 percent of the "reasonable charge" of a medical service and the patient paid the difference.

The reasonable charge, determined by Medicare, was based on charges of physicians working in various settings, such as an outpatient clinic or a private office. The payment included overhead, Kurtz said.

Hospitals were also allowed to recover overhead in the form of cost (actual hospital costs, not patient billing). But now, the government contends it has been paying twice for the same overhead.

"The government's presumption is that certain physicians are receiving excessive compensation," Kurtz said. "You've got to understand the government's mentality when it was forming this bill."

Under TEFRA, hospitals can continue to receive reimbursement for outpatient clinic overhead, but the reasonable charge of physicians treating patients in such clinics will be reduced to eliminate the overhead component.

KURTZ EXPLAINED the implications of this will result in substantial reduction in Medicare payments to physicians who treat patients in hospital clinics. It is estimated that 40 percent of a physician's fee relates to overhead and TEFRA may prompt physicians to see patients in their offices, rather than clinics, or to renegotiate contracts with hospitals.

Turning to specific regulations for hospital-based physicians, Kurtz said, "Then came the physicians working out of the hospital — radiologists, pathologists and anesthesiologists."

Kurtz said this is a very controversial area that deals with separate charge levels for services in a hospital versus a private office.

"For example, if the test, say a chest X-ray, could be performed in the office, the physician (radiologist) can only bill (Medicare) 40 percent (of the service)," Kurtz said.

Pathologists bill Medicare for clinical and anatomical services. Many clinical services, such as blood tests, can be done by non-physicians. But anatomical procedures, such as dissection, are performed by the pathologist. These physicians are upset about TEFRA's changes. Kurtz said because the government contends that most clinical services can be performed by non-physicians, reimbursements will be made on a cost rather than a charge basis.

"The College of American Pathology has a lawsuit prepared to challenge this new law," Kurtz said.

Overall, Kurtz said, there are no exact answers. "What should you do?" he asked. "(Hospital) administrators and doctors will have to sit down and see how it (the revised provision) will directly impact you."

Branson discusses TEFRA

MMH won't cut community services

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Although a federal budget and tax program is expected to slash hospital's Medicare reimbursement dollars, Midland Memorial Hospital officials do not plan to cut back on community service programs.

But, according to MMH President Ray Branson, there is a possibility that room rates will be increased to make up the lost dollars.

During a news conference this morning, Branson said the Medicare reimbursement cuts "will not only involve decreasing costs, but also increasing revenue."

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA), which was enacted in October 1982, is expected to reduce MMH's Medicare reimbursement dollars by $500,000 this year.

Branson said the hospital's finance committee will meet this month to consider room rate increases.

"This may be brought up for discussion in the next (March) board meeting," Branson said.

Yet the impact of TEFRA will not affect the hospital's plans for new services.

"We're not going to cut all new programs," Branson said. "We're going to continue to meet the community's needs."

One of those "needs" is a pastoral program at MMH. The program should be in full operation in the next couple of years. Meanwhile, Branson said the hospital is considering candidates for a chaplain position.

"(The chaplain) will be much like an ombudsman," Branson said. "This individual will visit with patients, seeing that the needs of the patients will be met."

Branson said the chaplain, who is expected to be selected in 30 to 45 days, is important to the holistic approach to health care.

"Besides providing medical services, (the hospital) will provide emotional needs to the patient through the chaplain. Additional support will be given to the patient's family and the chaplain will work closely with physicians."

Because a patient's minister is not always available, Branson said "the chaplain will be here full time for the patient, but he will also be available to the staff and the hospital's needs in the community."

During the selection process, it will be important to choose a person "who is sensitive to the fact that he will not be representing one denomination," Branson added.

The Midland clergy fully supports the board-approved pastoral program, Branson said.

Bill would make harming police animals a crime

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland has introduced legislation that would make it a crime to interfere with or harm police animals.

The proposed law, House Bill 274, would make it a misdemeanor to interfere with a police dog in the performance of its duty and a felony to harm one.

A House committee has sent the bill to a subcommittee for further study after some members of the Legislature expressed concern that the proposal doesn't go far enough, while others fear it goes too far.

Democratic Rep. Debra Danburg of Houston, for instance, would like to see it encomapass horses used by police in Houston. Joe Hernandez, D—San Antonio, meanwhile, is apprehensive about making it a felony to harm a police dog.

"Misdemeanors I don't mind," said Hernandez, "but felonies worry me."

Craddick outlined the bill to the committee and presented Midland Assistant City Attorney Robin Smith as a witness in support of the bill.

Smith told the committee that violence against police dogs is an increasing problem and cited one case about two years ago in which a burglary suspect hit a dog "across the head with a crowbar."

The dog was not seriously injured and the burglary charge against the suspect was later reduced to criminal trespass after he said he had entered an unlocked door of the building, a southside furniture warehouse, because he needed a place to sleep.

Lewis says focus in Austin changing

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' leisurely legislative session is the result of a new fiscal awareness and is part of a nationwide trend, says House Speaker Gib Lewis.

Lewis said lawmakers have put off "pet projects" and filed much less legislation this session, allowing committees to spend more time on important measures.

The House has declined to suspend the 60-day rule, which prohibits the House from bringing to the floor major legislation other than that declared by the governor to be an emergency.

Lewis said that as of Monday, the 50th day of the Legislature's regular session, only 1,081 House bills had been filed, compared with 4,093 bills filed as of the 50th day of the 1981 session.

He said the National Conference of State Legislatures recently reported that state lawmakers nationwide have filed 10-30 percent fewer bills.

Texas senators have filed 622 bills, compared with 801 bills this time last session, Lewis said.

'Best Idea' career workshop scheduled

Career decisions are a concern to most everyone, especially during economically depressed times. The wrong choice may result in a financial and emotional catastrophe.

"Many times a person makes a haphazard decision about his career without considering his needs as a whole person," explained Dr. Stephen Southern, assistant professor of Counseling Pyschology at Temple University in Phildelphia, Penn.

Southern brings his career development workshop to Midland next month. The "Best Idea" workshop is scheduled for four Saturdays in March, 9 a.m. — 1 p.m. at the Petroleum Club. Participants attend only one of the Saturday sessions.

The workshop is designed for anyone who wants to facilitate his career development, Southern said, including the high school student entering college or the job market, or any individual considering a career change.

"The approach involves first assessing the personal strengths and career development needs of individuals who may be involved in activities at any point in the career development process," Southern said.

"These strengths and needs are then used to design personal career development strategies, which should include a variety of individual and group techniques drawn from the fields of counseling and human development," he continued.

"Best Idea" is an acronym derived from the factors used in asessing an individuals strengths: behavior, emotion, self-talk, thought, interpersonal relations, developmental level, economic and societal facotrs and alpha factors (diet, drugs, etc.)

Group activities, informative presentations and personal assessments address factors, in the workshop, such as how well-suited the individual's personality is to his chosen career, how relationships affect career growth, the role of fantasy in achieving career goals, programming thoughts to succeed in a life career, career changes and relation of a person's health to his career.

Southern, and Dr. Robert Smith, president-elect of the National Vocational Guidance Association, has presented numerous workshops and papers throughout the U.S. on the same method of career development.

They are co-authoring a book based upon research in working with a variety of people, including students, mid-life career changers and professionals in business and industry.

For information about the workshop and registration, contact Glen Walton, coordinator, 682-6800.

Equinox brings official beginning of spring, fall

On March 20, at 10:39 p.m., spring officially beings in the Northern Hemisphere and fall begins in the Southern Hemisphere.

This is the time of the vernal or spring equinox when the sun crosses the equator going northward; nights and days are of equal length and the sun rises due east and sets due west. March 21 is the first full day of spring.

Because of discrepancies in early calendars, the date of the vernal equinox varies considerably. The earth's rotation, the apparent motion of the sun and moon, served as foundations for determining our calendar. The calendar we now use was derived from the Roman calendar.

The earliest Roman calendar consisted of a 354 day year of 12 lunar (29 1/2 day) months with a short month added every two years to keep in step with the seasons. However, this calendar was not well kept, and when Julius Caesar came to power, spring was starting in December.

To rectify this, Caesar decreed that an extra 89 days be inserted in the year 46 B.C. and that a solar year of 365 1/4 days be adopted. To accomodate the quarter day, a leap year, of 366 days every fourth year, was included.

Because the length of the year is 11 minutes, 14 second shorter that 365 1/4 days, another correction was needed to keep the civil calendar synchronized with astronomical events. These extra minutes accumulated to 10 days by 1582 and spring was starting on March 11. Pope Gregory XIII rectified this descrepency be decreeing that the day following October 4, 1582 would be October 15. This brought the equinox back to March 21 and to keep it from slipping back again, the rule for determining leap year was changed. The Pope ordained that century years not evenly divisible by 400 should be ordinary years rather than leap years.

The adjustments made by Pope Gregory made the calendar year only 26 seconds longer than the astronomical year, so a more recent modification has been to eliminate the years 4000, 8000 and 12,000 as leap years. This last modification will keep March 21 as the first full day of spring until after the year 20,000.

Sulfite enhances crispness in foods, also raises questions

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — When Andrew Sackett walked into a Rockville, Md., pizza parlor last summer, it didn't occur to him that he would be carried out on a stretcher.

The Bethesda, Md., resident recalls, "I started feeling kind of flushed," after eating a salad that had been dunked in a preservative solution containing sulfite — to which, he discovered, he is allergic and about which there is considerable controversy.

Sackett, who had never experienced breathing problems before, approached the manager, who called the emergency medical service. "Then I remember I kind of collapsed and woke up in the hospital," said Sackett.

Several different compounds containing sulfite are used to prevent fruits and vegetables from turning brown as well as to enhance their crispness, and often are added to wines to prevent them from turning vinegary and to keep white wines white. While these chemicals would be listed on the labels of processed foods sold commercially (such as dried fruits), liquor traditionally has required no labeling and ingredients in restaurant preparation are virtually never revealed.

The Food and Drug Administration has recently reviewed sulfite's status on a list of food substances that are Generally Recognized as Safe (GRAS). The GRAS list, which consists of those substances that don't have to go through the formal FDA approval for additives, was established in 1958 and includes many food ingredients that were presumed safe and were in common use at that time. In 1971 the FDA began a review of the 500 substances on the GRAS list, among which were sulfite compounds. In July, the agency issued a proposal recommending that the preservative maintain GRAS status with exigent minor restrictions.

Yet sulfite compounds can cause life-threatening reactions in hundreds of thousands of asthmatics, according to Dr. Michael Jacobson, director of the consumer group Center for Science in the Public Interest. A spokesman for the FDA says that non-asthmatics also are reporting ill effects. Jacobson, introducing relatively new information which discusses these health problems, has suggested that the FDA not include sulfites on the GRAS list.

Sulfite-containing preservatives are used commonly in restaurants on foods that many people, like Sackett, wouldn't think contain food additives. The lettuce at salad bars, for instance, is dipped in a water-base solution containing the preservative. This helps it maintain its crispness and volume (for maximum yield) and retain its color. "This sulfite stuff is literally permanent," says Mary Custer, consumer safety officer with the FDA.

"I would imagine that every major wholesaler in the area sells (sulfite preservatives)," says a marketing specialist for a Washington-area restaurant supplier, who added that a look into industrial-use antioxidants revealed none without sulfites. "The use is widespread (in restaurants), like putting butter on toast."

Amelia Catakis, a dietitian with the Marriott Corp. in Bethesda, Md., says that company has used sulfite-containing preservatives for the 18 years that she's been there. Catakis says that the preservative Marriott uses to keep salads fresh-looking and crisp contains less than one-tenth of 1 percent sulfite, and that salad samples that have been tested for residue have measured about 50 parts per million.

Custer says that ironically, the agency has set no limits for sulfite use in salad bars. Although it cannot be used in meats (because it could be fraudulently used to unnaturally preserve the color) and primary sources of vitamin B-1 (because it destroys the vitamin), there are no other restrictions for using the chemical in food. Winemakers, however, must keep the content of added sulfite below 350 parts per million.

John DeLuca, president of the Wine Institute, which represents 460 domestic winemakers, says that many of the sulfur compounds in wine are a natural part of fermentation, but they also are added to many wines.

Make most of inexpensive lamb blocks

By MERLE ELLIS

Lamb blocks are among those cuts of meat (like London Broil) that seem to change from one market to the next. One never knows for sure what one is apt to get when one buys one, does one? They are, nonetheless, often a very good buy.

Lamb blocks usually are some portion of the shoulder of lamb, cut thick. No matter which portion of the shoulder of lamb the blocks come from, they are very likely to be one of the least expensive cuts of lamb in your butcher's meat case. They are also one of the most versatile.

During the summer, when folks are thinking barbecue, lamb blocks often are featured as inexpensive cuts for the grill — and they are adequate for that. But to my mind, when lamb blocks are at their best is in mid-winter, prepared Moroccan style.

For years, one of my family's favorite Bay Area dining spots has been the Mamounia, a Moroccan restaurant. It is a marvelous place to take friends, particularly out-of-town guests, for a memorable dining experience.

Mehdi Ziani, the chef-owner, does marvelous things with lamb blocks. Here are a few recipes inspired by years of dining at the restaurant and several sessions of looking over Ziani's shoulder while making note of his magic. They are surprisingly similar in their simplicity, but totally different in the taste of the finished dish.

LAMB AND ONIONS

3 tablespoons olive oil
2 pounds lamb shoulder blocks
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon powdered ginger
1 teaspoon coriander
1 pinch saffron
2 cups water
2 medium white onions

Heat oil in a heavy pot. Add lamb, salt, pepper, ginger, coriander, and saffron. Brown meat well on all sides over medium heat. Pour the water over the meat, cover and simmer (do not boil) for 1 1/2 to 2 hours. Peel the onions, and cut into 1/2-inch slices. Add to the meat when it is half cooked.

To serve: Place the lamb in the center of a large platter, surround with onions and pour the sauce over both. Serves 4.

LAMB WITH HONEY AND ALMONDS

2 pounds lamb shoulder blocks
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon pepper
1 pinch saffron
1 teaspoon powdered ginger
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
1 onion, minced
1 tablespoon butter
2 cups water
2 ounces blanched almonds
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 cup honey
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg

Brown lamb in hot oil in a heavy pot. Add salt, pepper, saffron, ginger, cinnamon, minced onion and butter, continue cooking over medium heat until the onions are soft and lightly browned. Add water, cover and simmer for 1 1/2 to 2 hours, until lamb is tender. Meanwhile, saute almonds in 1 tablespoon of oil over low heat until they turn a nice golden brown. Drain and set aside.

When the meat is cooked, remove it to a large platter. Pour off all but approximately 1/4 cup of the sauce, add honey and stir in nutmeg and the sauteed almonds. Pour over the lamb. Serves 4.

LAMB AND EGGPLANT

2 pounds lamb shoulder blocks
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 onion, minced
1 or 2 cloves garlic, crushed
1 teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon powdered ginger
1 pinch saffron
2 cups water
1 medium eggplant
Salt, pepper, flour
1/4 cup olive oil

Brown lamb in hot oil in a heavy pot. Add onion, garlic, pepper, salt, ginger and saffron. Continue cooking over medium heat until onions are soft and translucent. Add water, cover and simmer for 1 1/2 to 2 hours, until the lamb is tender.

Peel the eggplant and cut into 1/2-inch slices. Dust with flour, salt and pepper and saute in 1/4 cup of olive oil. Brown nicely on both sides. Arrange sauteed eggplant on a large serving platter; place cooked lamb in the center and pour sauce over both. Serves 4.

Misspellings abundant in recipe books

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Present-day American cooks who enjoy trying ethnic recipes have their predecessors. American cookbook writers of a century and more ago sometimes gave recipes for foreign dishes — but often misspelled their names. They were also known to misspell the names of American recipes. Here are some examples.

MISSPELLING: Chile Con-Cana. This spelling mistake was made in her comprehensive cookbook, by a 19th century lady who conducted one of the best known and most successful cooking schools in the United States. I'm glad she didn't brush up on her Spanish because the error is so amusing.

The correct spelling is, of course, chili con carne. There are as many versions of the dish as there are chili freaks. On my bookshelves right now are about half a dozen cookbooks giving hundreds of different recipes for chili. Nevertheless, according to Webster, chili con carne is "a highly spiced stew of chopped or ground beef and minced chilies or chili powder, usually served with beans."

MISSPELLING: Jambolaya. The same honorable lady who created Chili Con-Cana in her cookbook managed a double-whammy one page later. Not only is the name misspelled; the recipe for this pride of Louisiana cookery appears in a section of her book entitled "A Group of Spanish Recipes."

The correct spelling is Jambalaya. Only three ingredients — rice, liquid and chili peppers — appear in all recipes for it. Meat, sausage, poultry, game and shellfish as well as onions, celery, tomatoes and virtually the entire spice rack are other recorded additions to this adaptable dish. Jambalaya seems to be limited only by the state of your desires and bank account.

MISSPELLING: Sabylion. This appeared in a recipe booklet published at the turn of the century by a New England apothecary company to tout its new patent medicine.

The correct spelling, in both English and French, is sabayon, which evolved from the Italian zabaione or zabaglione. Originally Italian, sabayon is a dessert sauce of egg yolks and sugar beaten together over hot water until very thick. It is flavored with a wine such as Marsala, or with orange or lemon. Warm, it may be a sauce for fresh fruit, especially strawberries; cold, with whipped cream folded in, it makes a heavenly foamy custard dessert.

MISSPELLING: Mint Julip — as the words appear in a charming small cookbook, "Suggestions for Charleston Tea," published in South Carolina at the turn of the century.

The correct spelling is Mint Julep. A mint julep is a "tall drink consisting of bourbon, sugar and mint served in a frosted tumbler filled with finely crushed ice." To my, and perhaps your, surprise the recipe in the oldtime South Carolina book calls for adding rye whiskey rather than bourbon to this drink.

MISSPELLING: Penotchie. Another of the famous 19th century cookbook authors is responsible for this boo-boo. And she made another: she allowed that the word could also be spelled "Penuchie." Too bad, because the word may be spelled seven ways — but none of them as above.

The correct seven spellings are: penuche; panocha; panoche; penuchi; pinoche; pinochi; or penoche. However it is spelled, penuche is a luscious fudge made usually of brown sugar, butter, cream or milk and nuts. Worth making and tasting.

DEAR ABBY

Virginity still good buy in marketplace of love

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Many letters in your column have touched me, but none moved me as much as the one from "Holding Out and Proud of It."

Hooray for her! And hooray for you for printing it. More people need to know that there are still some women around who don't jump into bed with every John, Mick and Murray. I know I have lost lots of guys because I wouldn't give in, but it was better to lose them than lose my self-respect.

I, too, saved myself for marriage, and so did my husband. We've been married for 10 years and neither one of us has ever regretted our lack of premarital experience. I'll admit we didn't know much, but we learned together, and our love grows stronger every year.

Tell "Holding Out" to stick to her principles. I hope her letter will prompt more young people to do the same. — HELD OUT AND GLAD I DID

DEAR ABBY: Tell "Holding Out" that she is not alone. I'm also holding out. It hasn't been easy for me because I'm a fairly nice-looking, normal, healthy guy who enjoys an active social life.

I'm into sports and run five miles a day, rain or shine. I regard my body as my "temple," and as such I have never defiled it with tobacco or drugs of any kind. I consider sex habit-forming and choose not to risk falling into the habit until I have found the person with whom I can establish an exclusive lifelong commitment.

Please don't think I'm an oddball. I'm not. I'm just saving myself for the person I marry. And in case you're wondering — I'm straight, and I'll be 38 on my birthday. — SAVING MYSELF IN SAN ANGELO, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the 27-year-old, "Holding Out and Proud of It," could have been written by me 25 years ago. Not only was I a virgin, I married one. Never in all my years of marriage was I unfaithful, and I had my chances.

After 23 years of marriage, my husband decided he wanted "out," so he left two years ago. To this day my attitude about sex outside marriage hasn't changed — but my body has! Now, at age 48 I find that I am much more passionate than I was when I was a 23-year-old virgin. I was able to exercise control back then. (I didn't know what I was missing.)

As immature as this may sound, I'm not so sure that I will be able to exercise that control now, so I just refuse to date until my divorce is final and I can marry again.

I feel very corny writing this, but it's a real dilemma because I am a Christian, and the Scriptures are very clear concerning sex outside marriage. However, my sex drive is at odds with those Scriptures! I am not sure how I am going to whip this one. Help me. — HOPING THE DEVIL WON'T MAKE ME DO IT

DEAR HOPING: The devil won't make you do it, but the first man you find irresistible might. Pray for strength and avoid temptation.

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Holding Out and Proud of It," I am only 12 but I have decided to save myself for the man I marry.

There are some my age that have already tried it and are sorry. Not me! Sign me ... STILL GOT IT, GONNA KEEP IT

Check out new savings options

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

If you are confused about all the new savings options available at the bank, you are not alone. Because Congress began to phase out restrictions on bank interest rates and balances in 1982, savings institutions now offer more choices to consumers. Deregulation is intended to make banks more competitive with money market funds.

The most recent deregulation allowed banks to offer super NOW and money market accounts, which have enticed any savers back to the banks.

Before investing in super NOW and money market accounts, consumers should be aware of both their advantages and disadvantages. Both super NOW and money market accounts have any common features. Each requires depositors to maintain an average monthly balance of $2,500. If the average monthly balance drops below the amount, the account will earn only 5-1/4 percent interest applied to regular NOW accounts.

Boh accounts are also federally insured up to $100,000 and allow check writing and telephone transfers. However, money market accounts limit the number of transfers and checks you can write each month.

Banks are allowed to guarantee an interest rate on both these accounts for up to one month. Some of the banks are planning to tie their rates to a market index. The security and convenience of these accounts might entice you but keep in mind that neither account is ideal for everyone. Unless you regularly maintain a checking balance of $2,500 for example, you would probably do better with a regular NOW account.

But money market accounts could be the right move if your savings has been idling away in a 5-1/4 percent passbook account. It may also be attractive if you have invested in a regular money market fund but prefer the federal insurance and personalized service provided by the banks.

If you decide to use one of these new savings options, investigate thoroughly. Read the fine print in the ads and brochures promoting these accounts. Be sure that fees and penalties won't cost you more than the higher interest rates merit.

Shampoo may bring new hair

Copley News Service

If you're a male between 18 and 65 whose head and hair have reached a parting of the ways, don't resign yourself — necessarily — to competing in the next Kojak look-alike contest. Your condition may not be permanent.

Although the Food and Drug Administration has ruled that there are no over-the-counter potions that will make hair grow, a trio of researchers at the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine is intrigued enough by the possibility to conduct an experiment. The objective: to see if polysorbate 60 — a harmless food additive found in mayonnaise and a commercial salad dressing — can encourage the growth of scalp hair.

The additive is found commercially in a potion that has been endorsed by health researcher Durk Pearson, among others, in his book "Life Extension."

"I've also seen some dramatic anecdotal reports — from people in police departments and high office," said Howard Groveman, M.D., an assistant professor of community and family medicine at UCSD.

The reports have so aroused Groveman that he and two other researchers at UCSD, Theodore Ganiats, M.D., and Melville Klauber, Ph.D., have obtained enough quantities of the potion from its manufacturer to test its efficacy in a double-blind situation.

Wanted: 200 male San Diego residents between the ages of 18 and 65 who have visible frontal scalp baldness, have not had scalp surgery and have no serious medical scalp conditions. Before and after photographs will be taken.

"Half of the 200 men will apply the potion and half will apply an inert ingredient," said Groveman. "We'll follow them over a 16-week period. By that time the results, if any, should show up. We'll also examine them after eight weeks.

"I'm not sure it has ever worked, but I feel it is important enough to try. We try to keep an open mind in family medicine, which perhaps separates us from the medical establishment. We're not trying to be charlatans, but this is an issue that affects so many people."

There is a product sold over the counter that contains polysorbate 60, said Groveman. He would not divulge its commercial name, however, saying only, "I don't want it to appear that we're advocating it. We wouldn't want to give them business and encourage people to go out and buy it until it is adequately tested.

"It's remarkable to me that it would work. The only way to find out is through a study such as this. I would be excited if it does work."

Groveman said he chose to experiment with this particular chemical because "I've never seen others presented with such strong anecdotal evidence."

Groveman said there are no known side effects to polysorbate 60.

"Some hair-growing products on the market have had side effects," he noted. "The application of female hormones to the scalp, for example."

Minoxidil, a drug manufactured by Upjohn Co. of Kalamazoo, Mich., was found in some patients to produce hirsutism (random hair growth in such places as the ear, arm, face and stomach). The drug has been prescribed by physicians to reduce hypertension — a treatment for which it was approved in 1979 by the FDA.

Fiber hair implants also have resulted in complications, according to a study published in the Journal of the American Academy of Dermatology. Of 41 persons treated for complications as a result of the implants, each developed moderate to heavy swelling and headaches.

On the other hand, hair transplants (hairs taken from the back of the patient's head and transplanted in the bald places) have proved safe and effective, according to medical researchers.

Cooking terms often confusing

From Wire Reports

Q. Can you please explain the full meaning of these two cooking terms: mirepoix and beurre manie? I found some recipes that had these terms but with no explanation of their meanings. Also I have not been able to find them in any of my cookbooks.

A. These cooking terms are frequently used by French chefs in restaurant cooking. Mirepoix (pronounced meer-re-pwah) is a combination of aromatic vegetables that are added to stocks, soups, sauces and meat and vegetable dishes. Onions, carrots and celery are the usual vegetables included in the modern mirepoix but mushrooms and leeks are sometimes added. In the old mirepoix these and other aromatic vegetables plus other flavoring ingredients such as bacon, ham or sausage and one or more fresh herbs were included.

Mirepoix vegetables are usually diced or chopped coarsely into relatively even pieces. The size of the pieces will depend on the length of cooking time. For instance, for meat stocks that require hours of cooking for flavors to develop, the vegetables may be cut in 1- to 2-inch pieces.

The generally recommended proportions for 1 pound of mirepoix are 8 ounces of onions and 4 ounces each of celery and carrots. They are usually added in the beginning of stock making before simmering and in brown stocks, they are either browned with the bones or separately. After cooking, the liquid is strained and the mirepoix discarded.

The second term, beurre manie (burr mah-nee) is a thickening agent comprised of equal parts soft butter and flour stirred together to form a smooth, rather dry, paste. The beurre manie is added at the end of cooking to thicken and give a sheen to the sauce. It is added in very small pieces and dropped into simmering sauce while stirring with a whip until smooth and thickened.

Beurre manie is the opposite of a roux, (roo) which is a cooked mixture of equal parts of butter (or margarine, chicken fat, beef drippings or lard) and flour. The roux is made by first melting the fat, then stirring in the flour and cooking for a few minutes. A liquid is then beaten into the roux or the roux added to a simmering liquid, then the mixture is simmered until thickened.

Q. I have quite a lot of raw peanuts that are hard and tasteless, and I would like to know how I can roast them in the oven. Do they have to be treated in some way, such as soaking, etc.?

A. Raw peanuts in the shell can be roasted in a single layer on a shallow baking pan at 350 degrees for 25 to 30 minutes, stirring occasionally for even roasting. Sprinkle with salt if desired. Shelled peanuts, both with skins and skinless, can also be roasted using the same method but reduce the baking time to 15 to 20 minutes. Sample nuts during the last few minutes of cooking time to ensure roasting to desired color.

To skin raw peanuts, place in a saucepan of boiling water and let stand three minutes. Drain, slide skin off with fingers when cool enough to handle, then spread nuts on absorbent paper towels to dry. Roasting three minutes or freezing will also allow easy removal of skin.

To ensure freshness of raw peanuts keep them in tightly closed containers and refrigerate up to nine months or freeze at zero degrees. Peanuts roasted in the shell at home may not taste the same as the commercial salted type. This is because commercially the peanuts are subjected to a vacuum-pressure method in which the salt is introduced through the shell, followed by hot air roast, leaving a salt residue inside the shell. Commercial shelled dry-roasted peanuts also have flavorings added before roasting by a dry-heat method.

Composer's music only sounds like end of the world

AUSTIN (AP) — It's a rotten toe-tapper, wretched for sing-alongs and a hopeless candidate for the Top 40.

But composer Barton McLean, master of the electronic music center at the University of Texas, is captivating audiences with a new tune. It's a haunting musical composition that is more likely to evoke tears than cheers.

"This piece is something no one ever forgets," McLean said. "It's been played at 10 or 12 concerts, and in several where I could see or hear the audience's reaction, I could actually see people crying."

The work, entitled "The Last 10 Minutes," is McLean's musical interpretation of a nuclear holocaust, the final moments of humanity.

"It's a reflection of the agony of the human spirit," says the composer, who adds he is "not a political person."

His music, McLean said, reflects "the horror and the terror, the poignancy and the sadness" of a nuclear war.

Audiences who have heard "The Last 10 Minutes," which is 11 minutes long, have no trouble understanding the point of the music, McLean said.

"They're not going to hear anything like bomb blasts," he said. "It's a piece of music. But on the other hand, there is no doubt in your mind what it's about."

Low, deep crying, sudden shrieks that rise and then disappear quickly, the ominous thud of something dropping down a deep stairwell, and the winds that, at the end, have nothing left to blow away are some of the sounds in "The Last 10 Minutes."

McLean said he took a year to compose the piece and record the sounds that a computer blends, stretches and contorts.

Barton McLean

"We play it in the dark, and we've had small children get frightened," McLean said. "They (the audience) talk about it at the end. A lot of them don't clap much after it. I think that's good. It's not that kind of piece. Usually, they just sit there."

Although McLean says his work is primarily a musical event, he hopes it contributes to the anti-nuclear movement.

"I hope it does something," he said. "I would be delighted if some anti-nuclear organization was interested in it. I would make it available to them."

Bill would tax-exempt some boats

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Gulf Coast senators have introduced a bill that would exempt pleasure boats from personal property taxes.

"There is no good reason why personal recreational boats, not used for the production of income, should be taxed," said Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, who is sponsoring the measure with Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur.

"Pleasure boat owners are constantly threatened with taxation because there is no clear exemption in the (State Property Tax) Code at this time."

Brooks said passage of his bill "would end the long-standing dispute between county tax assessors and the State Property Tax Board" over taxation of the state's estimated 500,000 pleasure sail and motor boats.

Singing songs in her head Harris' 'secret weapon'

NEW YORK (AP) — Jean Harris was a "middle-aged Sleeping Beauty" when she met Herman Tarnower, but her sweet dream of romance soured when she had to tolerate his "lollipop" affairs, says a new book on the woman convicted of killing the Scarsdale Diet doctor.

"If you're really in love with someone, and he finds himself a little lollipop, a little Tootsie Roll, and that's what he wants — what do you say?" Mrs. Harris said. "I thought I was handling it rather elegantly by being cleverly snide..."

Shana Alexander's "Very Much a Lady" is the third book on Mrs. Harris to appear since the highly publicized 1981 trial but it is the first to have her cooperation.

Ms. Alexander interviewed the woman many times and says they are now friends. Her book, to be published March 30 by Little, Brown and Co., provides new details about Mrs. Harris, now serving 15 years to life in prison for second-degree murder.

The book tells how Mrs. Harris, 59, has adapted to her new home. The mink jacket she wore when she shot her lover is allowed to remain as a rolled-up bed rest in her cell, and she has turned her prison shirts into preppie button-downs by re-sewing the collars and adding pearl buttons.

"I've a really cozy room...and it's blissfully peaceful and quiet," she told Ms. Alexander.

Peace is new to the former girls' school headmistress. Her 14-year affair with Tarnower was evidently a tortured battle with her own sexual double standards.

But she learned long ago to control her emotions.

As Jean Struven growing up in Ohio, almost anything could make her cry. The only way she found to hold back the tears was to sing a song to herself in her head. She tried folk songs, show tunes, even hymns.

She finally found the perfect song when she saw Rita Hayworth in "Gilda" smiling provocatively and singing "Put the blame on Mame, boys..."

At her wedding to James Harris, a carburetor salesman she later divorced, Mrs. Harris sang the lyrics to herself throughout the ceremony. The song became her secret weapon.

Jean Harris

"She got so good at it that...she was able to sing the song in her head and carry on a conversation at the same time," Ms. Alexander says.

The proper, mannered headmistress was 43 when she met Tarnower, a lifelong bachelor she saw as wealthy, sophisticated and a "wonderful snob."

Mrs. Harris said Tarnower — who would make a housecall for a bee sting if the patient was rich enough — once told her, "If you want to own a rich man, save his life and don't send him a bill."

But it was his womanizing, not social climbing, that hurt.

Putting on a front was easy for the woman with the magic song, and tears never came in public. But she carried on.

"I think there are probably many women who spend their lives crying themselves to sleep and get up and are very jolly and funny the next day," Mrs. Harris said later. "You just don't talk about it."

The author says Mrs. Harris allowed herself to be a mistress to restore the sense of womanhood she lost as a working mother.

As the head of school and family, Mrs. Harris was boss of "every aspect of her life" except love and welcomed Tarnower's domination.

Leasing cargo ships more expensive, study shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional study says the Navy's agreements to lease 13 cargo ships will cost the government about $270 million more than if the ships were purchased.

The Navy negotiated contracts for the ships that promise to protect shipbuilders from any loss if more than $2.7 billion in tax benefits are challenged by the Internal Revenue Service.

The Joint Committee on Taxation released a study which said its analysis of the contracts "indicates that the government's cost of leasing a (cargo) ship exceeds the purchase price by 11.7 percent."

That means the government would pay an extra $270 million by leasing rather than purchasing the ships, said the study, prepared for the House Ways and Means Committee's oversight subcommittee.

Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, criticized the tax benefits as "government subsidized tax avoidance."

But William A. Long, deputy under secretary of defense, defended the decision to lease under the agreements, rather than to buy. He said the Pentagon's analysis of the contracts "was close enough to a wash...that the transaction ought to go forward."

Involved in the dispute are Navy contracts for 13 cargo ships that would be used as floating warehouses to store arms, ammunition and equipment for the nation's Rapid Deployment Force.

The companies involved would provide the services called for in the contracts, such as manning and maintaining the ships.

David Brockway of the tax committee told the oversight panel it is not possible to say at this point whether the companies involved in the service contracts would qualify for the tax benefits suggested under the arrangement.

Under the arrangement, if the shipbuilders should win in a fight against the IRS over tax benefits, the Navy would pay all the legal costs. If the shipbuilders lose a decision, they still wouldn't lose money — the Navy would give them all the tax benefits plus any penalty and interest.

J. Gregory Ballentine, deputy assistant secretary of the Treasury, said that provision appears to be "consistent with the normal business practice of insuring that the benefit of the bargained-for tax deductions and credits are availble as anticipated by the parties."

The tax benefits include a 10 percent investment credit for the ships, recovering the costs of building the ships through depreciation, and immediate deduction of interest on bonds used to finance construction.

Cobbler: Clowns are fussy

BAYTOWN (AP) — Jack Haas says those guys who put on heavy makeup and hand out laughs from the circus floor can get real grouchy when they're upset.

So Haas, who says he's one of seven cobblers in the country who makes outsized shoes for clowns, requires his clients to mail their ideas, with a sketch of the shoe they want and their foot sizes, before he starts to work. He never designs a pair without a specific order.

"I don't like to do that because, boy, are they fussy," he said.

Haas' business booms every October as students graduating from the Ringling Bros. clown class in Venice, Fla., bury him with orders for the extra-big brogans.

Haas, who has been a cobbler for 10 years, said he makes about 300 clown shoes a year. Those sales account for half his profits, he said.

Most of the clowns order a big version of a basic shoe, like a wingtip. But Haas remembers getting one order modeled on the scarecrow's shoe in "The Wizard of Oz," a boot 33½ inches long.

Haas takes about 30 orders in the last week of October, when the graduating clowns decide what kind of costumes they will wear. He must have the shoes ready by November.

"That's when I get everybody down here working," he said. His wife, Arla, and daughters Melissa, 15, and Nancy, 11, join him in the rush to meet the deadline.

"He cuts the pattern and I sit here and sew them up," said Mrs. Haas. She pointed to a huge sewing machine with three spools of thread, each a different color.

"When I first started working, I never realized how many clowns there are," Mrs. Haas said.

Haas said it takes between 10 and 15 hours to make a "regular" pair of shoes. Unusual requests take longer. The minimum price for the leather shoes is $100.

First Haas makes the inner shoe, which fits the clown's foot. Then he adds the top portion, stuffing horse- and hog-hair in the toe. Finally he glues the leather sole to the bottom.

Astronauts practice under water

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Employees of a special swimming tank here are especially attentive when they watch space shuttle flights — they could be called on to tell the space agency how to conduct a rescue if anything goes wrong.

The Weightless Environment Training Facility, where astronauts don their spacesuits to practice spacewalks under 25 feet of water, is designed to produce a condition as near to weightlessness as is possible on the Earth's surface.

"If there's a problem in space (in a spacewalk), we can simulate it here and try to help work it out," said Luellen Fain, the facility's associate engineer.

Jim Gimbel, the facility's section supervisor, said the underwater training is important because it gives an astronaut nearly unlimited time to practice working in the spacesuit.

The heart of the training center is the pool, which is 33 feet wide and 78 feet long. Water is maintained at 93 to 94 degrees.

Employees submerge payload bays, which are filled with training devices representing the cargo a specific mission will take into space. Mission specialists for the sixth flight, for instance, have trained extensively around mockups of the Tracking and Data Relay Satellite they will deploy.

Two safety divers watch the astronaut closely. If a problem develops, they must be able to act within 45 seconds to move the astronaut about 50 feet to a platform that will lift him to the surface.

Paulsen campaigns for organ donation

Pat Paulsen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Comedian Pat Paulsen, who once ran a tongue-in-cheek campaign for the presidency, still found a use for political commentary when he came to Capitol Hill.

Paulsen was passing out cards which asked people to become kidney donors, as part of a national campaign by the National Kidney Foundation to increase public awareness on the importance of organ donation.

Among the 100 people who signed up Tuesday was Sen. Alan Cranston of California, a candidate for the Democratic nomination for president. LONDON (AP) — More gossip from Buckingham Palace: the Queen Mother is keen on cricket.

The disclosure was made by sports commentator Brian Johnston, who was at the palace Tuesday when Queen Mother Elizabeth, 82, made him an Officer of Order of the British Empire.

He said the great-grandmother, filling in for daughter Queen Elizabeth II who is visiting America, told him she's "a bit worried" about Britain's losing 2-1 cricket performance against Australia in this winter's test series.

"She asked me if I had been out in Australia, adding that it was no good worrying about it and that we must find some new people," said Johnston, author of several books on the sport.

He said the queen mother apparently used to play cricket as a child with her brother David.

'M*A*S*H' finale could beat out 'Who Shot JR?'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The final episode of "M-A-S-H" could be the highest-rated show in television history, topping the "Who Shot J.R.?" episode of "Dallas," according to statistics compiled by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

The 2½-hour episode ending the CBS series "M-A-S-H" on Monday night overpowered the opposition in a six-city overnight report. In San Francisco it had a rating of 63.7 and a share of 82.

The final tally for the "M-A-S-H" finale should be available today.

Here are the results in the other cities: New York, 56.4 rating and 72 share; Chicago, 55.4 and 72; Philadelphia, 51.2 and 70; Los Angeles, 51.6 and 67; and Detroit, 57.5 and 73. The rating measures the percentage of all TV sets that are tuned to a show and a share measures the percentage of sets in use that are tuned to the show.

The high-scoring "Dallas" episode had a 53.3 rating and 76 share in 1980.

In ratings for the week ended Feb. 27, "9-to-5," a comedy about three secretaries and their chauvinistic boss, grabbed two places in the television ratings Top 10, one on CBS and one on ABC.

The original movie starring Jane Fonda, Lily Tomlin and Dolly Parton was the No. 1 show on CBS. The ABC series, starring Valerie Curtin, Rita Moreno and Rachel Dennison, was in a three-way tie for seventh place.

The special movie presentation of the hit comedy film helped carry CBS to victory for the week.

CBS finished first in the national ratings with 20.1. ABC was second with 17.3 and NBC was third with 15.3. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute 20.1 percent of homes with television were tuned to CBS.

It was CBS' second straight victory in the February sweeps. It won the past two weeks after the ABC miniseries "The Winds of War" carried that network to the top during the first two weeks of February.

"Dallas," placed second in the ratings for the past week and the "M-A-S-H" episode preceding the final show was in fifth place. "60 Minutes was third and "Magnum, P.I." was fourth. Both are on CBS. ABC's highest-rated show was "Three's Company," in sixth place.

ABC's "The Love Boat," the second part of the NBC miniseries "Rage of Angels" and the ABC series based on "9-to-5" all tied for seventh place. The Grammy Awards on CBS were tenth.

CBS' "The Dukes of Hazzard," aided by the return of John Schneider and Tom Wopat, climbed to 13th place. It was the show's highest rating since September. Schneider and Wopat had not appeared in any of this season's shows until last week's episode because of a legal dispute, which has been resolved.

The week also found two former "Charlie's Angels" opposing each other in the ratings. Jaclyn Smith starred in NBC's "The Rage of Angels," which was in a tie for seventh place. Cheryl Ladd starred in the Monday-night competition, ABC's "Grace Kelly," based on the life of late Princess Grace of Monaco and former movie actress. That movie was in 21st place.

Here are the Top 10: CBS Special Movie Presentation, "9-to-5," a rating of 28.6 or 23.8 million households, CBS; "Dallas," 25.4 or 21.1 million, CBS; "60 Minutes," 23.7 or 19.7 million, CBS; "Magnum, P.I., 23.6 or 19.6 million, CBS; "M-A-S-H," 23.1 or 19.2 million, CBS; "Three's Company," 23.0 or 19.1 million, ABC; ABC's "The Love Boat," NBC Monday Night Movie, "Rage of Angels," Part II, and ABC's "9-to-5," 22.1 or 18.4 million, three-way-tie; The Grammy Awards, 21.6 or 17.99 million, CBS.

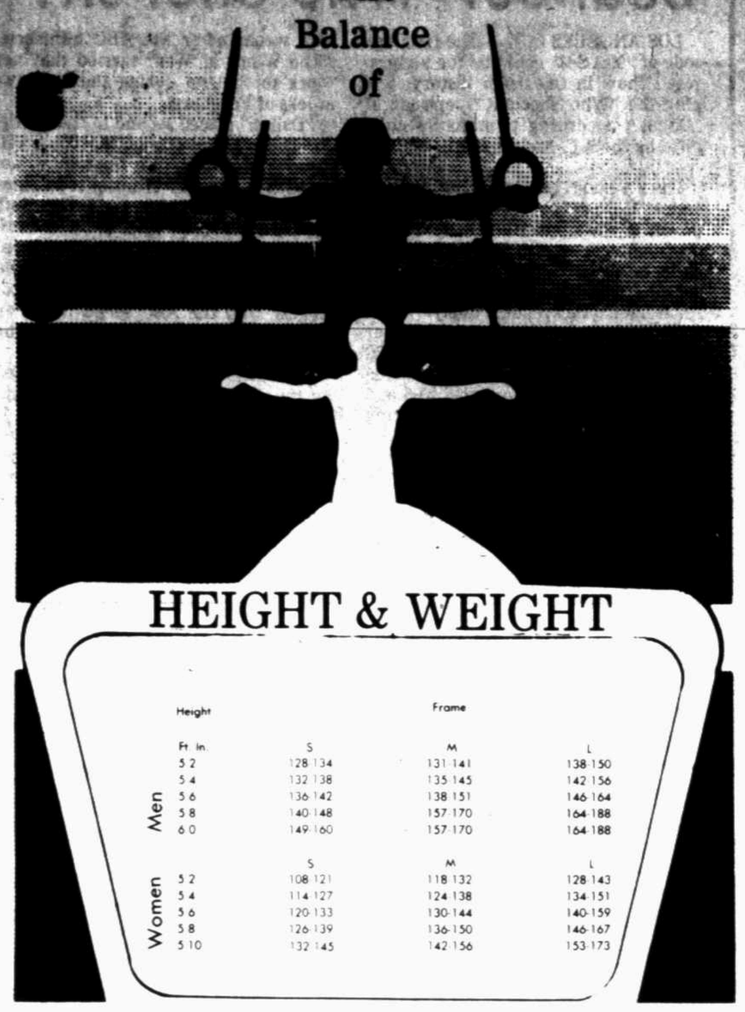
Figures up some from 1959



By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK — A major insurance company says the weights at which people are likely to live longest have risen slightly since 1959, but the American Heart Association says that's no reason to fatten up.

New height-weight tables, released by Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. of New York, do not specify ideal or recommended weights, the AHA said in a statement Tuesday.

"When used as guidelines, the new tables will imply that — for many Americans — putting on weight may actually improve their health. Few health problems are improved by gaining weight," according to the statement.

But the company explained that the tables indicate only which weights are statistically linked to longest life. Company officials said the tables serve as the standard for the insurance industry and the health professions.

"Fatter people are able to live longer because other risk factors are being reduced. But that doesn't mean they wouldn't live even longer if they were thinner," Dr. W. Virgil Brown, chairman of the heart association's nutrition committee and author of the statement, said.

Brown, who is also professor of medicine at Mt. Sinai Medical Center in New York, said many factors influence health and length of life, and the best weight for many people could be outside the weight ranges specified in the Metropolitan Life tables.

For example, he said, a person with high blood pressure might live longest by keeping his weight under that listed in the table for his height.

The 1983 tables were computed from insurance records of 4.2 million people provided by 25 companies. Similar tables were first assembled by Metropolitan Life in the early 1940s, and have not been revised since 1959.

A direct comparison of the 1959 and 1983 tables is not possible, because of differences in the way the figures were calculated, company officials said. But the officials did provide some indication of the changes.

For men and women of medium heights, the weights associated with longest life have climbed 5 percent to 7 percent.

The differences were greatest for short people. Between 1959 and 1983, the weights associated with lowest mortality for short people were up 8 percent to 13 percent.

Tall people showed the least change. In their case, the weights were raised only 1 percent to 4 percent.

The tables apply only to people between the ages of 25 and 59.

In the past, the tables have been labelled as specifying "ideal" or "desirable" weights, but those labels have been dropped from the new revision because they gave rise to misinterpretation, said Dr. Paul Entmacher, vice president and medical director of Metropolitan Life.

"They (the tables) do not tell us what the best weight is for turning in a good job performance or for looking your best," Entmacher said.

The differences between the 1959 and 1983 tables are probably due to changes in living, Entmacher said. Such things as greater attention to diet and increased concern with fitness alter many things that affect lifespan — such as cholesterol levels and blood pressure, he added.

More changes sought in relief legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressmen, sensitive to criticism that a $4.6 billion recession-relief bill contains "pork-barrel" provisions, are seeking changes that would add health care for the unemployed and more money for mass transit.

Quick congressional action seems certain on the legislation, which includes money for public works projects, repair of federal buildings, road improvements and emergency relief for jobless persons.

Votes are scheduled Thursday in the House, and Majority Leader Howard Baker says the Senate will go to work on the appropriations bill early next week.

Before then, Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the Transportation and Public Works Committee, is expected to urge $300 million above the $100 million now in the legislation for mass transit.

Rather than have the money go to the districts of specific members of the appropriations committee, Howard will seek to have it distributed more evenly around the country.

Some Republicans are trying to kill all parts of the legislation which do not help areas of high unemployment. They say congressional districts that don't suffer from high joblessness shouldn't qualify for public works projects included in the bill.

One likely addition to the bill would come from Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., who wants about $200 million in public service health care for recession victims whose health insurance has run out.

Sources, speaking on condition they not be named, said Tuesday that House leaders will probably agree to add the health care money. Obey's proposal was rejected by leaders of the Democrat-controlled appropriations committee last week.

There are also likely to be efforts from members of both parties to restore cuts in food stamps and aid for persons unable to meet mortgages on their houses.

Some Republicans have complained the jobs bill contains too many pork-barrel projects. "This is a piece of paper for everyone who has a pet project," said Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass. "We are going to pour dollars down a rat hole like corn."

The House acted on another jobs bill Tuesday, approving 301-87 legislation creating an American Conservation Corps, a New Deal revival designed to produce 100,000 jobs for young people in federal parklands.

Those who sign up would be paid the minimum wage for both full-time and summer jobs.

Under the legislation, $300 million would be spent annually over five years on an project similar to the Civilian Conservation Corps approved 50 years ago during the Depression under Franklin D. Roosevelt.

"This is real. It is not make-work," Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio, said of the legislation.

Reagan and other Republican critics say it will add to the budget deficit, and do little if anything to provide long-term jobs to reduce the 10.2 per cent unemployment rate.

Wilson's third trial begins today

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former spy Edwin Wilson, preparing to argue again that he was motivated by patriotism and not profit, will be judged by a jury of five men and seven women on charges of conspiring to kill a Libyan dissident.

Opening arguments in Wilson's trial were scheduled this morning in U.S. District Court.

It is Wilson's third trial arising from his dealings with Libya. Both earlier trials ended with his conviction and sentences totaling 32 years in prison and fines of $345,000.

WWII crash victim to be buried

HONOLULU (AP) — Thirty-nine years after his plane crashed in a remote area of New Guinea, a World War II Air Force flyer is to be buried at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific, officials say.

Second Lt. Robert E. Allred and others aboard a B-24D bomber disappeared on March 22, 1944, on a flight between Port Moresby and Mazdab, New Guinea, said an Army spokesman.

The flight was over 12,000-foot mountains.

When the aircraft failed to arrive, search planes failed to locate the wreckage of the plane, the spokesman said.

One killed in pickup-bus crash

RIDGECREST, N.C. (AP) — A pickup truck going the wrong way on an interstate highway collided with a Trailways bus Tuesday night, killing the truck driver and injuring three bus passengers, the highway patrol said.

The accident occurred on Interstate 40 about 17 miles east of Asheville, the patrol said.

Pronounced dead at the scene was Charles Anders, 78, of Black Mountain, said Buncombe County Medical Examiner Dr. H.E. Hinman said.

Three women on the westbound bus, which was en route to Asheville from Winston-Salem, were treated for minor injuries at Asheville's Memorial Mission Hospital and released, said Norman McGee, a Trailways spokesman.

Group to take on Nestle product

WASHINGTON (AP)— A group which has boycotted Nestle Co. products for six years because of the corporation's infant formula sales practices is shifting its focus to one product: Taster's Choice coffee.

Douglas A. Johnson, national chairman of the Infant Formula Action Coalition, said Tuesday the group will direct its boycott at Nestle's best-selling product because the company still isn't complying with a United Nations international code for marketing baby formula in the Third World.

Las Vegas college evacuated

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Authorities evacuated 3,000 students, faculty and staff from the University of Nevada-Las Vegas after a caller told police that a bomb was planted somewhere on the 300-acre campus.

The bomb threat Tuesday night was the latest in a series of threats made since three dynamite bombs were found at three Strip hotels early Monday.

Man held in Alaskan shootings

GLENNALLEN, Alaska (AP) — A man with multiple stab wounds was being held for questioning today after six people were shot and killed in the remote Alaskan mining town of McCarthy, police said. Two others were wounded.

An injured survivor, Christopher Richards, said a man came to his cabin for a cup of coffee Tuesday, then fired two shots "out of the blue."

Socialist re-elected in Vermont

By The Associated Press

The socialist mayor of Burlington, Vt., winning a second term by a surprising 52 percent margin, says his margin of victory "indicates a lot of support for what we're trying to do."

"I would say it's a mandate," Bernard Sanders said at his victory celebration Tuesday night. "The victory was more than we thought."

Sanders' supporters called the outcome proof that his election in 1981 was not a fluke, but reflected local distaste for the political establishment.

In a handful of other elections Tuesday, Columbia, S.C., elected E.W. Cromartie II as its first black city councilman in more than 100 years and re-elected Kirkland Finley Jr. as mayor.

A mayoral primary in Kansas City, Mo., left Republican Mayor Richard Berkley and former Mayor Charles Wheeler, a Democrat, in first and second place, respectively. They face a runoff March 29.

And in Montpelier, Vt., 11 communities adopted tough regulations governing shipment of nuclear waste.

Soviet ship leaves Galveston for home

Marshal Khukov not just any foreign ship

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — You can tell you're on a Soviet ship when you enter the captain's quarters to find a large portrait of Lenin staring at you.

That and the unmistakable mark of the Proletariat — the hammer and sickle and the red flag — are clear indications you are not on just any foreign ship.

Yury Kaminsky

The Marshal Zhukov, 103,307-ton carrier almost as long as three football fields, left Galveston recently for the home port of Novorossiysk on the Black Sea after her first visit to the island.

It takes 20 days of continuous sailing under the best weather conditions to reach port.

The Marshal Zhukov came to Galveston from Leningrad and encountered very bad weather in the Atlantic, said Capt. Yury Kaminsky.

A three-day stop at the Farmarco Dock to load American wheat gave a few people an opportunity to visit the ship.

It was Kaminsky's first trip to Galveston.

He was an amibable man who spoke English well. Dressed in casual clothes, he didn't appear the stern taskmaster that his uniform makes him out to be in photographs.

Instead, he was rather quiet, shy and unassuming.

Kaminsky refused to discuss the Soviet-American grain trade policy or any other topic related to politics. He also declined to have a copy of the story about him sent to his home.

"I am a little person. I do my job," said Kaminsky. "Ask me anything about the ship."

Kaminsky has been a seafarer for 25 of his 49 years, with 17 years as captain of one vessel or another, including tankers and other cargo ships.

To be a sailor was a dream he had as a child growing up in the port city of Tuapse on the Black Sea coast.

But being captain of such a large vessel and roaming the Earth's seas from port to port has its price.

It takes him away from his wife and two daughters in Tuapse eight months out of the year. Usually he sees them only for one or two months at a time.

Kaminsky's hobby at sea is fishing, and when he's at home, it's watching television. He prefers sports programs, especially hockey.

His ship makes regular calls at ports in France, Italy and other European countries, Canada and the United States. Houston will be the ship's port on its return call.

Loading the huge ship takes about 46 hours.

Built at the Gdansk shipyard in Poland, it can carry 91,000 tons. But in Galveston Channel, that cargo was restricted to 65,000 tons for fear the huge vessel would scrape bottom. Seven of the nine holds were filed with grain.

The ship can reach a top speed of 15 knots, and once it reaches that speed, it takes about 12 minutes to come to a complete stop.

The ship has 43 crew members, including three women.

One of the two 19-year-old stewardesses on board, Luba Slis, was stricken with appendicitis. She spent two days at John Sealy Hospital, where doctors removed her appendix, and then rejoined her comrades. The third woman was the ship's doctor.

Remarking on his impression of Galveston, Kaminsky said, "People here are very friendly, good and cooperative, especially the stevedores and shipping agency."

Kamaninsky wouldn't disclose how much a Soviet sailor is paid, saying a proper comparison of seamen's pay cannot be made between U.S. and Soviet workers.

He cited benefits that are included in Soviet seaman's salary, including free medical care and education and cheap accommodations.

Soviet seamen and Galveston longshoremen worked in close cooperation while loading the vessel.

"They're damn good seamen," one longshoreman said of the Soviets.

The 103,307-ton grain ship, Marshal Khukov, leaves the Port of Galveston for its home port of Novorossiysk on the Black Sea. The ship, which is almost as long as three football fields, loaded 65,000 tons of American wheat at the FarMarCo grain elevator. The voyage home will take 20 days of continuous sailing.

Whale to be reconstructed

DALLAS (AP) — Bob Slaughter will have a whale of a tale when he returns from Egypt.

Slaughter will lead a group of Southern Methodist University scientists to Egypt next month to discuss reconstructing a huge, ancient whale that 42 million years ago swam in an ocean that covered what is now a desert.

Slaughter, director of the Shuler Museum of Paleontology at SMU, said the group will to discuss rebuilding the whale with officials of Cairo's new Museum of Egypt.

"This will be the largest animal ever reconstructed both skeletally and the way it appeared when it was alive," Slaughter said.

"I feel it is time to get away from the traditional Halloween-type musuem skeleton and try to bring this magnificent animal to life for museum visitors," Slaughter said.

The Texas scientists plan a month-long expedition to Egypt's Western Desert, where the remains of the whale were found.

The desert was once covered by an ocean. Remains of sea creatures 42 million years old have been found in the desert, dating to a time when most of North Africa was covered with sea water.

Ancient remains of whales, sharks, sea turtles, and sea cows have been found in the desert.

The whale to be reconstructed for the museum is about 50 feet long. The remains were discovered in the Western Desert last spring during an expedition led by Slaughter.

The artists and palentologists plan a two-sided display of the whale, one side showing the animal's actual skeleton, the other side presenting a fiberglass representation of the animal's appearance when alive.

The casting work will be done in Dallas. The whale will be assembled in Cairo. Dallas artist Juliana Bernier is investigating the possibility of making a stylized "wave base" of molten glass to support the huge reconstruction.

"I hope that seeing the ancestor of our modern whales 'in the flesh' might instill appreciation of this animal that is being driven close to extinction by modern whaling techniques," Slaughter said.

The expedition into the desert is funded by the Institute for the Study of Earth and Man at SMU.

Census questions unanswered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau says many companies are not responding to government efforts to collect information on the nation's manufacturing, mining, trade, service and construction activities.

The deadline for returning 1982 economic census questionnaires was Feb. 15, but the bureau reports that many of the forms have not been mailed back yet.

Genetic testing needs guidelines commission says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential commission says impending development of tests for the most common lethal genetic diseases has created an urgent need for national guidelines on ethics in genetic counseling.

The President's Commission on Medical Ethics said that plans for ethics involved in genetic screening tests and the use of their results are needed before new genetic tests and genetic counseling become widespread.

It said its basic conclusion after studying genetic testing and counseling was that they are valuable services when accompanied by sound legal and ethical guidelines.

Genetic testing involves checking blood and other body fluids, or using advanced instruments, to determine which persons are at risk of inherited diseases such as sickle cell anemia or Down's syndrome.

Genetic counseling is discussion of these results with people to help them understand and adjust to the information, and decide what they might do about it.

Guidelines such as the ones the commission suggests in its report would guard against potential abuses of genetic information, which might include violations of privacy or depriving individuals of facts they should have.

The commission recommended that state and federal governments, working with professional organizations, should establish rules or guidelines for genetic testing and counseling.

The commission said the issue could come to a head with cystic fibrosis, an inherited disease that attacks glands and the respiratory system. A screening test for the disease "is on the horizon," it said.

Cystic fibrosis is the most prevalent inherited lethal disorder in the United States, the commission noted. Among white people, one person in 20 carries the gene for cystic fibrosis and one in every 1,500-2,000 infants is born with the disease.

"If a test becomes available to identify these carriers, the demand for genetic screening and counseling could quickly become overwhelming," said the commission.

The following are further recommendations on genetic testing that the commission says should be considered in guidelines:

—To protect privacy, genetic information should not be given to unrelated third parties, such as insurers and employers, without explicit consent of the person tested.

—Confidentiality can be overridden and genetic information given to relatives only if those persons would suffer serious harm without the information and reasonable efforts to get permission for voluntary disclosure failed.

—Adoption laws should be changed to allow information about serious genetic risks to reach adoptees or their biological families while still maintaining confidentiality.

—Genetic information should be required of men donating sperm for artificial insemination, and this should be passed on to recipient women.

Pope calls Central America tour 'triumph of love, concord, peace'

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Pope John Paul II, en route to a nine-day tour of Central America, said today the first papal mission ever to the strife-torn region would be "a triumph of love, of concord, of peace."

While his plane from Rome refueled at Lisbon's Portela Airport, the pope told thousands of well-wishers that a successful tour would mean "peace among spirits, peace among men and peace among peoples."

High Vatican officials say this journey is among the Polish-born pontiff's most politically sensitive of his 17 trips overseas.

During his 10-minute address, John Paul, the leader of the world's Roman Catholics, indirectly referred to the violence that has plagued parts of Central America in recent years.

"My heart suffers with all the hearts that are wounded by the evil of violence in any part of the world," he said.

Thus, the pope said he was making the trip to meet "my brothers in countries very beloved to my heart" and show that "love is stronger than sin and stronger than death."

The pontiff thanked the people of Portugal for the warm welcome and called his visit last spring to the Portuguese shrine Our Lady of Fatima in this country "unforgettable."

During that trip, an estimated 1 million Portugese attended an outdoor Mass he said in Lisbon and almost as many came to see the pontiff during the annual Fatima pilgrimage. That journey was marred when, from the throng, a Spanish renegade priest lunged at John Paul with a bayonet. The pontiff escaped injury.

The incident happened exactly a year after another unsuccessful assassination attempt was in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981 when a Turkish gunman shot and wounded him.

Among today's crowd was Portugal's President Antonio Ramalho Eanes and Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao.

The special Alitalia DC-10 carrying the pope and an entourage of Holy See officials, bodyguards and reporters left Rome's Leonardo da Vinci Airport at 8:22 a.m. (2:22 a.m. EST).

After the refueling stop, the plane lands next in San Jose, Costa Rica.

The 62-year-old pontiff will visit eight countries in nine days. All are overwhelmingly Roman Catholic. Four are experiencing severe internal strife and one — Guatemala — has reported anonymous death threats against the pope.

John Paul, wearing a white overcoat over his white vestments and a white skull cap, was seen off by top Vatican prelates including Cardinal Carlo Confalonieri, dean of the Sacred College of Cardinals, and Cardinal Paolo Bertoli, who will be in charge of the Vatican during the pope's absence.

Diplomats accredited to the Vatican and Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni also bade farewell to the pope.

He is succeeding Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero who was slain three years ago while serving Mass. The pope is leaving today for an eight-nation Central America visit, including El Salvador.

The pontiff was accompanied on the plane by Vatican Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, Deputy Secretary of State Spanish Archbishop Eduardo Martinez Somalo and other officials.

In addition to Costa Rica, the trip will take John Paul to Nicaragua, Panama, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Belize and Haiti in his 17th overseas journey as pope.

Holy See sources disclosed that in preparation for the pontiff's trip, top Vatican officials conferred earlier this week with a special U.S. envoy sent to brief them on U.S. policy in Central America and elsewhere.

U.S. Ambassador at large, Vernon A. Walters, a former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, met with high-level officials at the Vatican Monday, Vatican and U.S. sources said.

The meeting coincided with a controversy in Congress over President Reagan's policy on El Salvador and the administration's request for an additional $60 million in aid to the country.

El Salvador policy remains same

WASHINGTON (AP) — A review ordered by President Reagan will propose no dramatic shifts in U.S. policy toward El Salvador, despite warnings of a deteriorating military situation there, administration officials say.

Instead, it will urge the United States essentially to "stay the course" by providing more military aid for the Salvadoran army and continued support for social and economic reforms, according to the officials, who spoke only on condition they not be named.

"If you can't stay the course, you can't beat" the leftist guerrillas, said one official. "We've got to get serious about this."

On Monday, Reagan asked Congress for $60 million in new military aid for the embattled Salvadoran army and a senior administration official said the president was considering increasing the number of non-combat U.S. advisers in El Salvador above the current ceiling of 55.

Meanwhile, a top State Department official said Tuesday that Cuban-backed unrest would spread toward Mexico and the Panama Canal if Washington lets El Salvador's government be "knocked off" by leftist guerrillas.

"The struggle would go on, but on battlefields where the stakes would be much higher. We cannot permit that," Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, told a House panel.

"Major national interests of the United States are at stake," Enders said. "If we allow a government that is reforming itself into a democracy...to be knocked off by guerrillas who don't have the people with them, then no government in the isthmus will be safe. Nicaragua's Cuban and Soviet-supported 'revolution without frontiers' would spread."

Administration officials also confirmed that U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick returned from a recent trip to El Salvador with a sobering assessment of the civil war, which has seen the insurgents on the offensive for the past four months.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick's assessment was "gloomy from the point that it (the war situation) doesn't seem to be going anywhere...But not gloomy from the point of view of going down the drain," said one Pentagon official.

He added that the Salvadoran army had failed to capitalize on the "promising" situation after the elections one year ago, when large numbers of Salvadorans turned out to vote despite guerrilla calls for an election boycott.

Now, he said, "The army is in a defensive mode and above all is the very poor economic situation."

But the official said he saw little likelihood of a guerrilla victory.

"Unless the government just disintegrates — which I don't think will happen — the guerrillas are not just strong enough to win," he said.

Officials said that with additional aid, the United States could train more Salvadoran troops in the kind of small-unit, aggressive tactics that U.S. military strategists say are needed to defeat a guerrilla movement.

To accomplish the training, the officials said a modest increase in the number of U.S. advisers might be needed.

There are now 45 U.S. military trainers in El Salvador, about the same as last year's average, according to Pentagon officials. The advisers are working in communications, operations, logistics and management.

Mother convicted of killing daughter's killer

LUEBECK, West Germany (AP) — Marianne Bachmeier, who shot and killed a man on trial for sexually molesting and strangling her 7-year-old daughter, was found guilty of manslaughter Wednesday.

A Luebeck court sentenced the 32-year-old woman to six years in prison.

The former barmaid went on trial for murder in November, accused of pulling a pistol from her handbag and pumping seven bullets into the back of 35-year-old Klaus Grabowski.

The shooting took place March 6, 1981, before a stunned court where Grabowski was on trial here for abducting and killing Mrs. Bachmeier's daughter Anna in May 1981.

Grabowski, a balding, bearded former butcher, had a long criminal record including sex offenses against young girls.

In 1973 he was put on a year's probation after trying to strangle a 6-year-old girl.

Mrs. Bachmeier's lawyers had argued she was under severe emotional stress and was not responsible for her actions at the time.

The verdict capped a four-month trial that attracted widespread attention in West Germany and Europe. Mrs. Bachmeier was touted in some circles as a symbol of citizen frustration over coping with rising crime.

The prosecution last week reduced the charge of murder to manslaughter and asked that Mrs. Bachmeier be sentenced to eight years in prison.

Prosecutors contended Mrs. Bachmeier had acted out of revenge and was in command of her faculties at the time.

The attractive brunette's case suffered a serious setback in December when Guenter Kroeger, the judge at Grabowski's trial, said he heard the woman express satisfaction after the shooting.

"I wanted to shoot him in the face, but I only got him in the back. I hope he's dead," the judge quoted Mrs. Bachmeier as saying.

Anna was Mrs. Bachmeier's third and youngest illegitimate child. She had given up the other two before Anna's birth.

Defense attorneys argued that Mrs. Bachmeier had had a troubled life and was mentally unstable.

In a lengthy series of articles that appeared in West German media, Mrs. Bachmeier recounted how as a teenager she had been kicked out of her home and raped at a disco.

West German police arrest terrorist

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Police swarmed into a railroad station and overpowered an armed woman identified as one of West Germany's top terrorists, the Interior Ministry reported.

The statement said no shots were fired during the arrest Tuesday of Gisela Dutzi, 30, although she was armed with a .45 caliber pistol.

Officials said Miss Dutzi's capture in Darmstadt, 90 miles southeast of here, linked the ultra-left Red Army Faction to the 1977 kidnap of millionaire Austrian industrialist Walter Michael Palmers.

She was carrying fake identity papers and a $100 bill that was part of the $2 million ransom Palmers' family reportedly paid for his release several days after his abduction.

A $20,800 reward was posted two weeks ago for Miss Dutzi's arrest, but there was no word on who led police to the fugitive or whether the reward would be collected.

Mexican deportation doubles

MEXICALI, Mexico (AP) — The deportation of Mexican immigrants from the United States via Tijuana has doubled this year, the director of the Center for Information and Migratory Studies says.

Luis Perez Canchola, interviewed by the official government news agency NOTIMEX, said that more than 60 thousand Mexicans have been deported monthly so this year, while last year that number averaged 30 thousand per month.

He said about nine thousand Mexican immmigrants are deported every month via Mexicali.

Perez Canchola says the U.S. Naturalization and Immigration Service has quadrupled it vigilance in San Diego Country, where he estimated about one-third of all Mexican farm workers cross into the United States.

Alleged Nazi war criminal Walter Kutschmann, who has lived in Argentina under the name Pedro Olmo since 1947, is captured on film just before he closed the door on journalists at his home in the city of Miramar. Two more American cohorts of Gritz surrender to Thai authorities

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The action: middle-aged American civilians band together for a dangerous, secret mission to rescue comrades they believe are still alive in communist Indochina, the place where they fought as young, jungle-wise Green Berets.

James Gritz

Ronald Reagan

The cast of characters: James "Bo" Gritz, a Vietnam war hero willing to risk his life for what many say is a lost cause. Lynn Standerwick, a young woman searching for a lost father. Clint Eastwood, macho movie star, alleged money man.

The dialogue: "It's a good day to die...It takes action and both Teddy Roosevelt and John Wayne are dead... I'm afraid only God, the mothers, the wives who remained true and the Special Forces want them back."

A Hollywood war movie? Maybe one day. But for the time being the tale of "Bo" Gritz and his attempts to rescue GIs he believes are being held in Laos is very much real-life.

Clint Eastwood

William Shatner

On Monday, Gritz — a 44-year-old former lieutenant colonel in the elite U.S. Special Forces — walked into a police station along the Thai-Laotian border and was arrested.

He was charged with possession of an illegal high-powered transmitter and is being held in lieu of $6,500 bail. A hearing was scheduled for next week for Gritz and two others arrested earlier on the same charge; two more Americans surrendered to Thai authorities today.

Gritz, a highly decorated soldier whose father was killed in World War II, retired from the U.S. Army in 1979. He claims he was approached by a Pentagon superior who asked him to retire in order to undertake a "sensitive assignment as a private citizen."

True or not, Gritz has since been obsessed with rescuing American soldiers he believes are still alive in Indochina and bitter that the U.S. government has done little to save them.

"Many of those who served in Vietnam still feel lost. We have hollow places in our hearts," he said in a 1982 interview with Penthouse magazine. "We basically bugged out of Vietnam, and we did it without resolving the case of our people. There are still 2,497 MIAs (missing in action) over there."

In March 1981 Gritz assembled 25 other ex-Green Berets in central Florida to prepare for a rescue mission inside communist Indochina. The mission was later called off. He described it and other efforts as "private-sector operations with tacit U.S. government approval."

Several U.S. intelligence agencies, Gritz claims, supplied him with sensitive data on Indochina and sightings of Americans. Gritz and others in the POW-MIA movement went out to collect funds.

Sponsors, according to Gritz, have included Dallas multimillionaire H. Ross Perot; Litton Industries; actors Eastwood and William Shatner and a lot of "little old ladies in tennis shoes."

Gritz and some of his men may have staged one foray into Laos in 1981.

Then last November, Gritz, three other Americans and a number of Laotian guerrillas fighting communists in their own country slipped into Laos from Thailand. The operation was code-named "Lazarus."

"It's a good day to die," Gritz reportedly said as his team prepared to cross the Mekong River which separates the two nations.

He almost did.

Accounts of the raid vary but all agree that the group attempted to penetrate the rugged area along the Laotian-Vietnamese border, was ambushed and fled to Thailand.

A document made available to the Associated Press, which knowledgeable sources say is the operations plan for "Lazarus," talks about reaching a 150-mile "target-belt" where "several hundred live American POWs are scattered."

The plan, which contains what is believed to be Gritz's signature, shows a detailed knowledge of Laotian resistance activity and assumes the U.S. government is tacitly behind the mission. It talks about the possibility of American or Thai jet fighters and helicopters being used.

"It is time the POWs came home," the plan concludes. "It just needs to be finished and if I and my people don't do it, I don't know anyone in Washington who will. It takes action and both Teddy Roosevelt and John Wayne are dead."

The November setback did not stop Gritz. He said he left Thailand Jan. 1 and returned later in the month, but refused to comment on newspaper reports that he and other Americans had been in Laos on another operation.

On Feb. 13, Thai authorities in Nakhon Phanom raided a house owned by a Vietnamese Gritz described as a "dynamic, intrepid, dedicated man willing to commit everything in his fight against communism."

They seized a radio transmitter and arrested Edward Trimmer, an ex-Green Beret, and Ms. Standerwick, whose father was shot down over Laos in 1971.

Today, David Scott Weakly and Gary Goldman surrendered to Thai authorities in Nakhon Phanom. Both were wanted on charges related to illegal possession of a transmitter.

Gritz has promised to tell all in court.

The Los Angeles Times reported last week that President Reagan was told of the Gritz mission in advance by Eastwood but followed the advice of his senior staffers not to get involved.

In Washington, Henry Catto, a Pentagon spokesman, dismissed as "guerrilla theater," Gritz's efforts to find the missing military men but said the U.S. government would act if Gritz came up with "clear, hard evidence.

"We'll follow up any leads from any source that might lead us to Americans who are missing," Catto told reporters Tuesday.

Thatcher urges Begin to change ambassador choice

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher secretly sent an emissary to urge the Israeli government to withdraw the appointment of ex-guerrilla Eliahu Lankin as ambassador to London, an Israeli magazine reported today.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's choice of Lankin provoked outrage in Britain because of Lankin's background as a commander of the Irgun Zvai Leumi, the right-wing underground that fought the British army in Palestine for Israeli independence. The British regard Lankin as a former terrorist.

The weekly Koteret Rashit said David Wolfson brought a message from Mrs. Thatcher warning that the appointment would harm British-Israeli relations.

It said she reminded the Israelis that she had recently incurred Arab wrath by refusing to receive a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) on the grounds that the PLO is a terrorist organization.

The magazine said Begin understood that to be a hint that if Lankin's appointment went through, Mrs. Thatcher would feel free to meet the PLO delegate.

Afghan guerrillas kill 25 lask week

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan guerrillas last week killed 25 Soviet soldiers and Afghan troops and civil servants in some of the heaviest recent fighting in the Afghan capital of Kabul, Western diplomatic sources said here.

The insurgents launched several attacks on Afghan government and Soviet military posts and installations February 21-22, the sources reported Tuesday.

The action marked the third anniversary of the Soviet massacre of scores of schoolchildren who were protesting the 1979 Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

Western military sources estimate there are 105,000 Soviet combat troops stationed in the rugged, landlocked nation to fight the widespread insurgency.

Western diplomatic dispatches seen here said the rebels launched a major rocket attack on the twin military posts of Kote Sangi and Fazil Beg in Kabul on February 21, killing 12 government troops.

The Soviet-backed Babrak Karmal regime acknowledged on February 27 that three people were killed by insurgents during the February 22 attacks.

PEMEX wants to create honest image

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Petroleos Mexicanos and the Union of Petroleum Workers of Mexico will work to create an image of "efficiency and honesty" within PEMEX, the state petroleum monopoly has announced.

A statement issued this week emphasized recent pronouncements by PEMEX director Mario Ramon Beteta and union leader Joaquin Hernandez at a dinner run by the union in Poza Rica, Veracruz.

"We who work in petroleum are the jealous guardians of the integrity of this resource and are responsible for its intelligent use," said Beteta. He spoke of the need to eliminate corrupt personnel within the enterprise, but contended that "the number is very small."
