SHOULD TEXAS GET THE COTTON LABORATORY

State's geographical location and cotton leadership, plus acuteness here of problems affecting the industry, combine to make Texas the logical site, Dale Miller explains

Texas will make an active bid for the proposed $1,000,000 Federal Research Laboratory when it sends to Washington next Saturday, May 28th, a delegation of from twenty-five to fifty prominent citizens to present the State's well-founded claim as the most logical site for the institution. This "Cotton Research Laboratory Expedition", as the undertaking has been officially designated, is being organized under the leadership of the Texas Cotton Committee and will consist of Texas cotton farmers and representatives of all allied cotton industries of the State. In Washington the Texans will present to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace an exhaustive brief setting forth reasons why Texas should be the site of the contemplated laboratory, and will likewise discuss agricultural problems pertaining to the Southwest with other government officials.

The trip represents the fruition of many weeks of activity on the part of the Texas Cotton Committee to awaken in the minds of the people of the State an appreciation of the ills confronting the cotton industry and of the necessity of seeking and applying an effective cure. With regard to the cotton research laboratory, other Southern States have been active for some time in campaigning for it, at least one State offers as much as $750,000 in State funds to supplement the Federal appropriation. Texas has done nothing of this kind as yet, and is presenting its case strictly on its merits as the most appropriate location.

It is extremely doubtful if any other State can support so logical a claim. In the first place, Texas is the largest cotton producing State, but more important than that is the significant fact that Texas, once the westernmost cotton producing State, is becoming more centrally located because of the movement of cotton culture westward. Production is increasing substantially in Arizona and California, for example, and a research laboratory located in East Texas would be admirably situated between the old cotton regions of the South and the new cotton areas of the West. Nowhere else could the complex problems of both sections be so effectively treated and their respective needs studied and met.

In the last analysis, however, a cotton research laboratory should be located where the need for such a laboratory is greatest. It goes without saying that the need for such a laboratory has been greatly emphasized, if not actually brought into existence, by the virtual collapse of American cotton markets abroad, for without such a collapse it would not be so necessary now to discover and experiment with new uses for cotton. Texas, of course, has suffered to a much greater extent than any other State because of the decline in cotton exports. The Southern States east of the Mississippi River have customarily supplied the domestic market, because of their geographical proximity to Eastern mills, and Texas has habitually provided most of the cotton going into export channels, the percentage of the Texas cotton crop consumed abroad being normally about 90 per cent. Consequently, it should be clear that a cotton research laboratory, designed to discover new uses for cotton and thus alleviate a critical situation confronting the industry, should be located where the need for such new uses has been rendered most acute by the alienation of export markets.

Although the contemplated laboratory was originally intended to be confined to the problems of the cotton industry, the belief is growing in official circles that it should be established as a general research laboratory and its scope extended to include other fibers such as wool and mohair, and perhaps other crops such as wheat, rice, and grain sorghums. If this comprehensive view of the project prevails, it can scarcely fail to strengthen Texas' already strong claim as the most appropriate site for the laboratory, since Texas provides more nearly a cross section of diversified agricultural and livestock production than any other Southern State. As the Dallas News explained in its lead editorial last Tuesday:

"As the nation's foremost producer of raw materials Texas commands a unique position among the States. It is not only the leading cotton producing State, but is so strategically situated that it at once combines the soils and farming methods of the Southwest with the highly mechanized, large-scale farming operations of the West and Southwest, as well as a distinct prairie and plains cotton culture and also the most modern irrigation practices. Texas, in short, is a cross section of the American Cotton Belt, to say nothing of its other varied types of production embracing practically all crops from the temperate to the sub-tropical zones. . . . Texas is the logical location for a Government laboratory that is to serve cotton and probably other farm commodities which experience periodic surpluses and consequent distress."

Regardless of the attractive inducements which have already been offered by other States, and which may be offered by Texas when the Legislature next convenes, it seems reasonable to take the position that the cotton research laboratory, an institution of tremendous importance to American agriculture, should be located only where it is needed most and can function best. In any event, whatever disposition is ultimately made of this problem in Congress, it is clear that the Texas Cotton Committee has presented a sound and persuasive brief in behalf of the State, and its efforts merit the approbation of all who hold an enlightened view of the problems of the cotton industry.

"IT'S SMART TO DRIVE SAFELY"

Connecticut has just held her first state-wide highway safety conference, under the sponsorship of the Connecticut Highway Safety Commission. A pioneer in the field of highway safety, her efforts have been rewarded with a steady decline in traffic fatalities within the state during recent years.

During the conference, Burton W. Marsh, director of safety of the American Automobile Association, declared: "If the record of Connecticut could have been extended to the rest of the United States, 59,000 lives would have been saved since 1928."

Especially stressed at the conference was the vital necessity of educating drivers, young and old, to the fact that "it's smart to drive safely."

Education is strictly a local problem, and as President Hoffman of the Studebaker Corporation, said: "It can only be solved successfully by creating the right mental attitude toward safe driving. There must be a social taboo on the 'fix.' There must be a social taboo on drinking and driving. There should be a social taboo on young girls going out driving with young men who have had even one drink." In short, drivers must learn that, instead of being smart and sophisticated when they mix drinking and driving, they are enemies of society—potential murderers!

Every state in the Union must follow the example set by Connecticut if the nation's highways are ever to be made safe.

Possum Kingdom Project

On May 20th, the Federal Power Commission authorized the issuance of a major license to the Brazos River Conservation and Reclamation District to construct, operate, and maintain an hydroelectric project on the Brazos River, known as the "Possum Kingdom" project. This project consists of a dam, a water power plant, and a reservoir having a storage capacity of approximately 750,000 acre feet. The dam and power plant are to be located on the Brazos River, approximately 18 miles northwest of Mineral Wells, Texas, and will be 154 feet high, as measured from the bed of the river. The power plant will contain two units each of 10,000 kilowatts capacity with provision for an additional unit of 10,000 kilowatts making a total ultimate installation of 30,000 kilowatts, equivalent to about 40,000 horsepower. The dam will be financed in part by a Government grant of $4,500,000, the remainder of funds will be raised through the issuance and sale of bonds. Thus endeth another fight lost by the Power Trust, through dissolution of an injunction by the Supreme Court, on the decision rendered in January of this year. Cities desiring cheap electricity for their citizens should place themselves in line and communicate with the Brazos River authorities at once.

The Cotton Program

The heart of the 1938 farm bill made two principal changes in existing law, outside of simplifying procedure and giving the small farmers more benefit payments. First, payment of benefits for diverting a percentage of their acreage from cotton to some soil building crop, and second, imposing drastic marketing quotas on cotton, tobacco, wheat, corn and rice with a penalty for planting above the acreage allotment. Marketing quotas under the law were not effective until approved by 2-3 of the farmers. It will be remembered that the cotton belt voted on their marketing quota March 12th, with an overwhelming percent of the cotton producers favoring the imposition of marketing quotas. The vote by counties in my district was as follows:

County	Yes	No	T	F	V
Archer	168	39	207	81.2
Baylor	350	77	427	82.0
Clay	670	141	811	82.6
Cooke	884	498	1382	64.0
Denton	1445	430	1875	77.1
Foard	257	49	306	84.0
Hardeman	663	85	748	88.6
Jack	199	74	273	72.9
Knox	725	112	837	86.6
Montague	856	167	1023	83.7
Throckmtn.	139	178	317	43.8
Wichita	306	152	458	66.8
Wilbarger	825	135	960	85.8
Wise	679	183	862	78.8
Young	635	193	828	76.7
Total	8801	2513	11314	77.8

Even with marketing quotas in effect because of the enormous carry-over of cotton last year and the world carry-over this year being the largest on record, even though we have reduced our production over 4,000,000 bales under the new program, still the world supply of cotton will be the largest on record, and it will be hard to maintain a reasonable price for cotton under these conditions. It is to be hoped that appropriations will be made at this session, before adjournment, that will give the farmer parity for the crops he produces.

War on Accidents Shifts to New Front As a Nation-Wide Survey is Launched

A nation-wide study to ascertain the extent to which lack of emergency lighting facilities is responsible for accidents in homes and industry has just been launched by the Light for Life Foundation, Inc. of New York.

The survey will cover an accident field about which very little is known, officials of the Foundation said. It is expected to provide fresh ammunition for the attack being waged by the Foundation and other safety organizations on America's huge toll of death and injury from preventable accidents.

Under a survey scheme worked out by the Research Committee of the Foundation, thousands of accidents occurring in the next months will be investigated thoroughly. The cooperation of a large and diversified group of industries—including a steel plant, a rubber plant, a packing plant and a shoe manufacturer—as well as Red Cross chapters, Y.M.C.A. branches, hotels, hospitals and camps, has been promised.

These organizations will furnish the Foundation with reports showing how lack of emergency lighting entered into accidents as a causative factor, as well as such data as the type of injuries, the cost to individuals and employers and the number of working hours lost.

Thomas Fansler, a member of the Foundation's Research Committee and director of the research department of the Division of General Education of New York University, said the decision to make the survey was reached after an examination of the accident records of police departments, insurance companies and other agencies showed that the precise cause of accidents is rarely noted on many existing report forms.

"For example," said Mr. Fansler, "a report of an automobile accident may state that the cause was the car going off the road. In a sense, that may be correct, but to the safety investigator the statement is virtually worthless. What he wants to know is why the car left the road—what human or mechanical deficiencies were really responsible. Similarly, a report of a home accident may show that the victim fell down the cellar steps. We want to know why he fell, and if emergency illumination probably could have prevented the accident."

Thomas Fansler

"We know that lack of proper emergency illumination may be the cause of a large percentage of accidents. In a study of insurance reports, we found the case of a woman who, arising at night to take some medicine and not wishing to turn on the overhead lights and perhaps awaken her children, went to the medicine chest in the dark and took poison by mistake. In this case a small hand light or cabinet light undoubtedly would have saved her life. There are indications that a small amount of preparedness would prevent many tragedies."

Serving with Mr. Fansler on the Research Committee of the Foundation are W. Graham Cole, director of safety of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; Harold F. Enlow, Director of First Aid and Life Saving of the American National Red Cross, and Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, National Director of the American Junior Red Cross.

Miss Hazel Griggs of New York City judged the students. She is considered one of America's foremost concert pianists.

Campaign Started Against Disease

"Servants in the home can be a potent source of disease transmission," states Dr. Geo. W. Cox, state health officer, "unless they are examined periodically by a physician so they can be rendered non-infectious of the communicable disease should such diseases exist."

"There is a State law requiring food handlers in public places to have health certificates but this law exempts domestics. So the responsibility falls upon the employer."

Persons of all races are employed in Texas as cooks, maids, nurses and laundresses. As such they come in intimate contact with the grown-ups and children in the family. If the servant harbors any communicable disease the health of the employing family is endangered.

Diseases transmittable in this manner are: tuberculosis, syphilis, typhoid fever, dysentery, diphtheria and other acute contagious diseases. A typhoid carrier can easily infect an entire

Children Need More Dental Work

Only seven per cent of pre-school children in the average large American city receive adequate treatment of teeth necessary for dental health in later life, according to figures revealed by Rollo H. Britten, senior statistician for the United States Public Health Service, in the May issue of the Journal of the American Dental Association.

The figures as reported in Britten's article are based on a survey made in Detroit, Mich., supplementing the National Health Survey in that city, conducted as a project of the Works Progress Administration.

The canvass, most recent American survey, was made in the winter of 1935-36 and covered a period of about five months. A cross-section of the Detroit population was covered, representing some 20,000 families and a total of 70,554 persons, excluding those under three years of age.

Two questions were asked—when the persons canvassed had last seen a dentist, apart from visits for cleaning of teeth only;

With thirty-seven National Youth Administration youths working part-time assisting in conducting the Kokomo 4-H club Building in Eastland County, the structure is nearing completion.

PHILIP MEETS A NEW SITUATION
JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY

Philip is six years old and attends the university elementary school a mile and a half from his home. He goes on the streetcar, transferring at the downtown station.

It was during the first cold snap in November that he arrived at school one morning and found the door locked. Bobbie, whose mother had just let him plied Bobbie. "Mama always comes for me."

"Oh, maybe we can phone her," suggested Philip. "My mother won't be home for she takes my Brother to the kindergarten and goes to her classes. Let's go in the schoolhouse. There's a phone in the office, I know."

"But the door's locked," said Bobbie, tears gathering in his eyes.

"Yes, it's locked," said Philip as he turned from fumbling the handle. "Oo-oo! It's cold!" The boy, with only a light overcoat for protection, shivered in his socks and short trousers. "Bobbie," he said, "I don't know the way home, do you?"

"No, I never went home alone," and Bobbie began to cry.

Although Philip knew Bobbie only as he had seen him in class, it never occurred to him to use his own nickel and go home, leaving Bobbie alone.

"Oh, stop crying," said Philip, on the verge of tears himself. "I don't know what to do—but we have to do something. Kid, or we will freeze. Say! why can't we follow the streetcar track? The car that always takes me has to go on that track. I know where your house is when I'm on the car."

He grabbed Bobbie's hand and they began their long trudge back on the sidewalk beside the rails, down through the town where Philip always transferred and then along by the other car line. They were very cold and the bitter northwest wind hindered their progress.

"Oh, what are you doing here?" exclaimed Bobbie's mother as the boys appeared.

"The door was locked. There wasn't any school," cried Bobbie.

"But how did you ever find your way home?"

"Why, we just followed the tracks 'cause that's the way the cars go," said Philip in a matter-of-fact tone.

Our Mother's Club has been much interested in Philip—his independence, grit, self-assurance, frankness and mature reasoning.

"Have you educated Philip with the idea of making him self-reliant?" we asked the mother.

"No, I think that was done in kindergarten," she answered, smiling, "but his teacher felt that his father and I had helped him by avoiding the development of fear. When learning to walk, he sometimes fell. Then we would

My Home Town—Burkburnett
By Miss Virginia Vaught

Burkburnett, the most talked of town for its size in the world, was founded in the late 19th century. It was a great barrenness of sand and waste land.

A long time ago in the 15th century some Spanish monks were in the Wichita mountains trying to convert the Indians. While they were there, they found gold, and on their way back to Mexico, they were attacked by Indians, and so, to prevent the Indians from taking their gold, they buried it north of the townsite of Burkburnett and the Red River.

They intended to return and get the gold, but, as the story goes, they never returned and the gold is still buried there.

My home town actually had its beginning about 1897 when a small trading post was established near Gilbert Creek and called Nesterville.

It was established by Mr. John G. Hardin. Mr. Hardin was one of the people poured in and the oil flowed out.

About 1924 to 1925 the town began to settle down, and civic pride began to develop. The oil derricks were removed and more stable and sturdy buildings were built to replace the shacks and frame buildings. Those few years were a clean-up period for my home town.

In 1929, the depression hit, and the oil companies moved some of their people away, but in 1930 the population was 3,281.

This town, like all other towns, has stores, schools, and churches. But my home town owns its own water and light system. The Hardin municipal light plant is a standing monument to Mr. Hardin.

Burkburnett has three brick school buildings, one of which is to be replaced by a very modern building in the near future.

My home town has a winning football team; the Burkburnett Bulldogs were regional champions this past year.

Through the generosity of Mr. Hardin, Burkburnett owns three brick churches, which is most unusual for a town of this size.

Burkburnett is served by three paved highways, railroads, motor express and busses. Burkburnett is really the northern gateway to Texas.

The three main industries are: cattle raising, farming, and oil.

One thing Burkburnett is particularly proud of, is the Chamber of Commerce. It has helped the city in some great way every year.

The celebration of November 5, 1927, is one to be remembered. It celebrated the opening of the free bridge connecting Texas and Oklahoma.

An example of its best work was in the 25th and 30th anniversaries that brought trade to the merchants, and brought old settlers and citizens who moved away, back to the city. This was a work of the Chamber of Commerce, which was planned and put over so successfully.

As a little town that has seen money, men and oil come and go, it still lives on with this as its slogan: "Yesterday good, today better, and tomorrow greater."

As a certain amount of crying each day helps develop a tiny baby's lungs, the normal crying of an infant should not occasion worry.

family. A syphilitic cook or nursemaid is able to transmit the venereal disease through contact with food, unsterilized dishes and in playing with children. Tuberculosis is very easy of transmission.

The Texas State Department of Health recommends that all employers have their family physician examine their house servants from time to time to eliminate any danger of contracting these diseases. Treatment should be instituted promptly when the servants are diseased. The cost is negligible when compared to the cost of illness and family death," said Dr. Cox.

A Lesson in Physics—For Drivers

A new word, "turnability," has been coined by The Travelers Insurance Company in an effort to picture for drivers just what happens in the higher brackets of speed. A page of the company's new highway safety booklet entitled "Death Begins at 40" is headed "A Lesson in Physics for Drivers" and makes use of this term for the first time.

"The first law of motion," the booklet states, "is that a mov-driver's "turnability" has been cut to one-ninth that when he was traveling at 25. If he tries to turn more sharply than this law of physics allows, he is certain to turn over."

ing body tends to continue in uniform motion in a straight line. The energy of a moving body is in proportion to the square of its speed.

"At 25 miles an hour, however, a car can make a fairly sharp turn. At 50 miles an hour, you can make only one-fourth as sharp a turn as you could make at 25. This explains many accidents in turning and passing at higher speeds."

"And at 75 miles an hour, the

All too often, Beer is just the decoy...

...yet, all too often, Beer gets the blame!

Beer is an honest drink... mild, wholesome, refreshing. There is nothing more promising to combat the evil of too much alcohol than the opportunity of drinking good beer.

And we brewers are with you 100% in every honest effort to improve conditions under which beer is sold. We are against sales to minors, or after legal hours; we are against use of beer licenses as screens for selling illicit liquor or for operating illicit resorts.

We offer our cooperation... and we invite yours!

Existing laws can curb these evils... help us by demanding their strict enforcement.

Restrict your own patronage to legal, respectable retail outlets. Give preference, if you will, to products advertised under the symbol of the Brewers Foundation, shown below.

VIRGINIA VAUGHT

of the first and most important characters in the history of my home town. He later found oil here and financed many worthy causes in the city.

He became one of the most noted philanthropists in the entire state of Texas, having given money to many colleges and universities in Texas.

Another important character was the rancher, Burk Burnett, for whom the town was named.

President Theodore Roosevelt, a close friend of his, suggested naming the town Burkburnett.

In 1907 the sale of town lots was held, and Mr. Hardin was appointed the first postmaster.

Not only was there gold here, but "black gold." Oil played an important part in the story of my home town.

In 1912 the first oil well came in, and the following appeared in the "6666 Star."

"The long expected has at last happened. Burkburnett has oil, real, black, greasy old crude oil. The kind that made Beaumont famous and the dope that makes cities in a day and transforms the graveyards of business inactivity into scenes of thrift and hustle."

In 1914 the population was 2,000, in 1919 it was estimated as 35,000.

People came to Burkburnett from everywhere. It was the place to get rich. The little barren place in the road became, overnight, the scene of a mad scramble of mud, men and oil.

Burkburnett survived the boom without a disastrous fire, the only city in the history of petroleum to hold such a record.

Oil was not prorated during that time and 50,000 barrels flowed daily. Slowly but steadily

Rabbit Creek

May 22, 1938

May morning the creek neighborhood with a 2 inch rain. Until 10:45 a. m., the heaviest rains that this neck of the woods for several weeks. The rain was accompanied by a very strong wind and some hail but the hail was very small. Some gardens were damaged slightly.

It's feared by several who had just got through planting their cotton that it will all have to be planted over, due to the big rain which came early Sunday morning, as the hard beating rain put too much dirt over it.

R. L. Baldwin, one of the leading threshers in the Big Rabbit Creek community started threshing the first of last week. His first threshing was for Ossie Brown, who owns the old Owens family homestead. R. L. threshed oats, the 1938 crop.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Woods' son, Donald, for several weeks past has been having nervous spells, so his parents have put him under the treatment of Burkburnett's best chiropractor, one of the best in northwest Texas. The young man has only taken a few treatments and he is much better. Just a few more treatments and young Donald will be an entirely cured boy. His host of friends will rejoice over his speedy recovery.

Believe it or not, this neck of the woods has more baby grasshoppers to the square inch than any other part of the county. It is the opinion of Hawkeye that quite a few farmers have already started to put out grasshopper traps to kill them. When walking through the grass and weeds, they fly up and hop away by the thousands. It's just a sight. If something isn't done to kill them off, it's just going to be too bad for the old clod hoppers.

The Big Rabbit Creek has sure had her rising clothes on all day. She just lacked about one foot of getting out of her north banks and about 1 1/2 feet of being as high as she was on the 22nd of March.

Well, sir, you know that Hawkeye has thought this over in his head a great many times, especially when he is over in Our Friendly Little City, Burkburnett, on Saturdays when there are thousands of people in the city and on the streets—that everyone big and small, especially the women, are so quiet and peaceable and so sociable in such a great mass of people, but it's true, as everyone has a pleasant word and great big smile for everyone. Hawkeye saw all the Laws Saturday and they hadn't a thing to do or to worry themselves about, only to stand on the streets and shake hands with their host of friends and say "Howdy" to everybody. Folks, it's nice to live in a city like that, also to do your shopping there.

Just before Hawkeye left the city for home with his old friends and neighbors, he happened to think about getting some lister point bolts. Of course, Hawkeye knew just where to get them. That's Thaxton's, the up-to-date and most modern hardware store in northwest Texas. When he got to the door to enter, he had to stop to let out three old farmers who are big grain raisers. Each one had a 50 lb. sack of Plymouth binder twine on his shoulders carrying it out to his car. They were getting everything ready to start their binders Monday morning. They knew their onions and were wised up in getting the best binder twine that has ever been placed on the market, and that is the Plymouth, as Hawkeye and his brother have used the Plymouth and found that it won't kink up or knot up. It's all smooth twine. Finally Hawkeye got back to where the bolt box was and he had to wait on himself, as all of the six clerks, besides Mr. Thaxton, were so busy selling Plymouth twine and all kinds of binder repairs as the Thaxton Bros. carries everything from a barrow tooth to a stationary engine. The Thaxton Bros. sells two carloads of Plymouth twine a week.

You know, folks, Hawkeye, while walking down the street on the north side, met his old friend John Ashton. While Hawkeye was talking to his friend John, a guy stepped up to John and says "I want to borrow a 'five' just for a short while." So Brother John hesitated for a second or so, finally putting his hand down in his pocket and brought out the 'five' (pennies) and handed it over to the guy saying to this guy, "If you never pay me back my 'five' it won't break me up." The guy went off with his 'five' rejoicing.

Fletcher Babers and family were shopping over in the Friendly Little City, Burkburnett, Saturday. Also they attended the big cash drawing of sixty bucks.

Mr. and Mrs. George Upchurch and daughter and son, Mr. and Mrs. Birdie Nason, and two daughters, motored down from Randlett Friday evening to the Owens family and visited with them until a late hour.

Mayor's Proclamation POPPY DAY, SATURDAY May 28th

WHEREAS:

Memories of those who made the supreme sacrifice of their lives in the World War bring thoughts of those who did not die but who came back, doomed to years of hardship and suffering, sometimes worse than death.

In the movement to have disabled war veterans make Memorial Poppies was found a way to link together the paying of tribute to the dead with service for the living victims of the War.

The poppy has been adopted as the memorial flower of the American Legion and Auxiliary and the veteran made poppies which are to be sold through the agencies of these organizations in Burkburnett on Saturday, May 28th are made to serve a two-fold purpose in enabling veterans in the government hospitals to use their time and skill and occupy their minds with a task which not only gives them a small remuneration for their families but also helps, through their sale on poppy days to provide needed help for widows and orphans of their departed comrades.

THEREFORE:

Inasmuch as the American Legion Auxiliary has the exclusive right to sell these poppies on designated memorial days, I hereby proclaim and set apart Saturday, May 28, as Poppy Day, and call upon the citizens of Burkburnett to do their part in this important work in behalf of disabled veterans and their families.

Given under my hand and seal, this, the 20th day of May, 1938.
