Dog attack leaves seven-year-old Midland girl hospitalized

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

Mention the word dog and your mind can't help but conjure images of a faithful companion sitting at its master's feet or children running through the park with their best friend, a loving cocker spaniel.

For seven-year-old Lacey Stanfield the word will likely ignite similar feelings as Freddy Krueger or Jason Vorhies. Man's best friend, to her at least, has become something to be feared.

Lacey and her mother, Angela Stickney, had just returned to their home at 2616 Roosevelt Sunday night. It was 7 p.m. and Ms. Stickney was in the house washing dishes. Lacey was outside riding her bike in front of the house.

Ms. Stickney heard her daughter whimpering and went to inspect. She anticipated some minor injury common to a seven-year old. She didn't expect to see her child covered in blood.

When she saw her daughter she wrapped her up and headed for the door.

Lacey started crying, "Don't go out there Mamma. The dog will get you."

Lacey Stanfield

According to Lacey, two children were walking a pit bull when the dog went after the back tire of her bicycle.

She got off her bike and placed it between her and the dog," said Bobby Hennis, Lacey's grandfather. "Then he lunged at her."

The dog went for Lacey's head and succeeded in leaving large gashes across her face and almost bit her ear completely off.

"It took chunks out of her ear ... it practically mutilated her," Hennis said.

The child also was bitten on her arms as she attempted to fend off the dog.

Lacey is currently at Midland Memorial Hospital but her recovery could be a long road.

Her grandfather said she had 75-85 stitches in her face alone and, "It's possible she'll need three sets of reconstructive surgeries," he said.

Even then Lacey could have scars from the accident for the rest of her life. The child received more than 100 stitches overall.

The frightening thing is that this isn't the first time this animal has been involved in an attack.

According to Coy Willis, director of animal control in Midland, the animal was confiscated after an incident in March of last year.

"It involved a 10-year old girl that got scratched on the arm," said Willis.

Judy Rust lives next door to the owners of the dog — who could not be reached for comment on Monday — and she particularly remembers that incident.

"I remember one time he got out and chased a little girl," said Ms. Rust.

Customers flood into repair shops after deluge

By Rick López
Staff Writer

A few traces of Saturday's flash flood could still be found Monday.

Dingy water lingered in recesses of worn, brittle pavement. Mud-coated cars formed long lines around car wash driveways.

And at several towing agencies, the crackle of CB radios kept abuzz throughout the day. Almost all the calls, workers said, were requests to tow cars that had stalled during the four-hour downpour.

Dozens of vehicles — including a police patrol unit — were partially or totally submerged in flooded road dips. The storm also forced intersections to close and caused gullies to swell over bridges — an odd occurrence in Midland.

Dispatchers at B&B Wrecker Service answered at least 25 calls Monday morning involving stalled vehicles.

"We get a lot of these calls when there's inclement weather," said Joyce Evans, a dispatcher at B&B. "This is definitely one of those times."

To put things in perspective, B&B gets about five to eight calls for service on a typical weekend. Over the last three days, the business received more than 40 calls, Ms. Evans said.

But why would wreckers get more calls Monday that they did on Sunday?

"Many garages don't open over the weekend, so they (stranded motorists) just pushed their cars into a parking lot ... or to the edge of the street and left them sitting there over the weekend," Ms. Evans said.

Maynor said there are many reasons why cars break down in deep water. The most common culprit is oil contamination, which occurs when water seeps into the oil reservoir through a perforated gasket or loose oil cap.

"This causes you car to lose all its compression," Maynor said. "If you're lucky, all you need is an oil change to fix it."

Enrollment gain to pay off for MC with $1.4 million

By Daniel Arp
Staff Writer

As administrators in public offices across Midland County hammer out their budgets under ever-constricting parameters this summer, Midland College may be one of the few local entities enjoying revenue growth.

In a preliminary $19.3 million budget approved by the Board of Trustees last Tuesday, the college was able to put together a balanced budget while increasing salaries and pumping more money into instruction than ever before.

"I think it's a good budget. It maintains our fund balance," said MC President David Daniel.

The 1999-2000 budget has been bolstered in part by the continuing increase in enrollment. This past year, amongst community colleges, MC saw the state's second sharpest rise in contact hours — or, amount of student classroom time — behind only a recently opened college in fast-growing South Texas.

The higher contact hours mean more funds from the state — to the tune of nearly $1.4 million — constituting a large part of the reason for the $747,407 increase in unrestricted revenues in a year when local taxable values are dwindling.

"I'd say, largely, that's (the reason). Plus, the state has not been fully funding — I'd say 60 to 70 percent of what we've earned — in terms of contact funding," said Gay Hickman, vice president of administrative services for the college.

For about the past10 years, Hickman said, the Legislature has been whittling down its obligation to community colleges to fund contact hours 100 percent.

But this year, operating with a multibillion dollar surplus, the state began the process of bringing that percentage back to the original levels.

Contact funding this year is at about 71 percent — approximately a nine percent increase over the previous Legislative session, Hickman said.

The college for the most part has put the funds toward supporting an expanding infrastructure: a new dormitory and an Advanced Technology Center both require the hiring of additional staff and allowance for other expenses, Daniel said.

The budget earmarks 58 percent of unrestricted funds for instruction, compared to around 51 percent in 1998-99.

"This is the highest percentage of (money put toward) instruction in a budget that I've seen," said Daniel. "We put a lot of those funds right

Local brokers say stock market making normal corrections

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Watching the stock market reach record highs above 11,000 and then steadily retreat 700 points has some Midland investors wondering if a market correction is under way.

Monday, the Dow Jones industrial average finished 39.58 lower at 10,815.98 after recovering from an afternoon slide of nearly 100 points. Last week the Dow gained 365 points.

Local brokers, however, say they feel the recent ups and downs in the stock market are merely normal up and down cycles.

"My personal feeling is we go through these cycles where the markets rally and then back off," said Dave Becker, who opened his Edward Jones office in May.

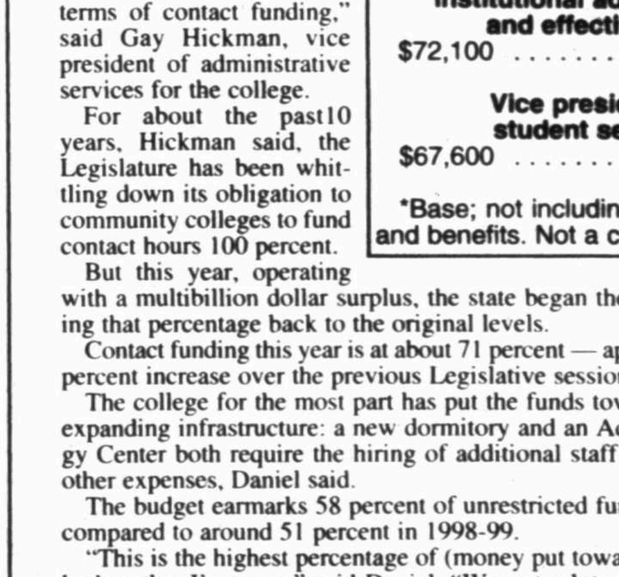

Odessa broker Dennis Elam said the market has been going through a normal correction.

"We went to the top of 11,000-plus and we've come down and successfully tested the 10,300-10,400 level several times and have good support," Elam said.

Economist M. Ray Perryman agreed that the markets have been recording normal ups and downs.

MC: Enrollment gain brings extra funds

where the action is."

Officials also had room under the higher revenue cap to raise salaries of all employees by an average of four percent, including a raise in the base salaries of administrators. Daniel, for instance, would receive a base salary of $128,360 compared to the $123,423 he received in 1998-99.

Richard Jolly, vice president for instruction, would receive a raise from $76,938 to $80,016 and Eileen Piwetz would receive about a $2,800 raise to $74,984 in her capacity as vice president for institutional advancement and effectiveness.

Administrators, however, are not the only employees set to receive raises.

"That's for everybody — from secretaries to maintenance personnel to faculty," Hickman said, though he added that some would be getting more than the average four percent and others less, depending on individual employees' positions on their pay schedules.

The new positions and costs being created also are accounted for in the proposed budget, including a recently posted $55,000 position for a director of the Advanced Technology Center — slated to open in the 2000-01 school year.

The new residence hall will carry with it $80,400 worth of budgeted expenses, including salaries for resident assistants, payment for utilities and capital outlay.

The increase in state revenues is somewhat offset by a few factors, Hickman said. In addition to the increased infrastructure expenses, the college projects a $250,000 drop in its tax base due to mineral value loss in the area.

The college also has contracted with a private company to supply textbooks, accounting for a projected major drop in revenues next year. In the 1998-99 budget, projected revenues for the bookstore were over $1.2 million. The college expects to generate only $100,000 from bookstore operations in 1999-2000.

Perhaps owing to the new dormitory, however, both student housing and food service revenues are expected to create a nearly $325,000 boost.

Overall, Daniel said the budget seemed solid to him, each projection representing a fair estimate of the cost Daniel said he would expect the college to incur.

"When I say it's a balanced budget, it's really a balanced budget," Daniel said. "I don't see any deep holes in there."

As for the increase in contact hours, Daniel attributes the growth to a hard-working faculty and staff and an "aggressive recruiting plan" the college has implemented over the past three years.

"We've just taken this whole matter very seriously, because we think there are many people who can benefit from what we have to offer," Daniel said.

ATTACK: Animal Control officers investigating

(From 1A)

Thirteen-year old David Gordon, who lives two houses down from the animal, said he had also had a close call with the dog. He was taking the trash out when the animal charged him.

"He started running after me and I just ran in the gate and shut it," David said, adding that the dog was barking and growling.

That time, the neighbors had left the gate open and the dog got loose.

Another time the dog was left unattended on the front porch. David's mother, Lori, was across the street.

"He started barking and growling and acted like he was going to come after us," said Ms. Gordon.

Luckily, a tragedy was avoided that time. Ms. Gordon yelled at the dog and he backed away.

Both neighbors said, however, that the dog has always been aggressive and gets particularly agitated whenever it sees anyone walking down the alley.

Willis said Animal Control is currently investigating the attack and will try to keep the dog until the matter is resolved. But euthanasia is not the only possible outcome.

"It's a possibility that it could be put to sleep," Willis said, adding that the dangerous dog statutes also allow for putting certain restrictions on the owner of the dog.

To put the animal to sleep would require a decision by a judge and Animal Control won't make any recommendations until it has fully investigated the incident. No charges have been pressed as of yet.

CARS: Flooding aftermath keeps mechanics busy

(From 1A)

Other times, high water levels causes the engine's computer to short. This repair can sometimes cost several thousand dollars, Maynor said.

Meanwhile, weather watchers said Saturday's rain finally pushed this month's rainfall over the "below-average" margin. Nearly 5.57 inches of rain have fallen this year as compared with 1.48 this time last year in Midland.

"It definitely got us over the hump," said Brian Curran, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Midland.

Since 1997, the year-to-date rainfall has lagged behind the normal figures. In March, the Permian Basin got its first break when a St. Patrick's Day downpour pushed the total precipitation from 0.39 inches to 0.73 inches.

This month alone, Midland has received 2.82 inches of rain — almost half of 1998's total rainfall of 5.41 inches.

"That's how dry we were last year," Curran said.

Saturday's rainfall caused flooding in Alpine, Grady, Goldsmith, Midland and Stanton. Storm spotters in Ector County reported four feet of water across Highway 158 between Goldsmith and Gardendale.

At his northside residence in Midland, Curran measured two inches of rain.

But do these measurements mean the basin is out of a drought?

"In some places of this region, we've seen a lot of water. Others wish they did," Curran said. "It's too early to say if we're out of the drought, but the rain has helped keep temperatures down some."

At this time last year, Midland was beginning a series of 100-plus-degree days, Curran said. In comparison, Midland has yet to see mercury rise to triple figures this year, he said.

Most of West Texas seems to be faring well, too, the Weather Service reports.

San Angelo, with Sunday's totals, has received 10.84 inches of rain this year; more than 2 inches above normal and double what the city had received through the same time last year when the Concho Valley was plagued with drought conditions.

To date, Lubbock has received just under 13 inches of rain this year. Last year, during the drought, Lubbock had .94 inches during the same period. Normal to this point is 4.21 inches.

Curran said the chance of rainfall will hover around 40 percent until Wednesday.

STOCKS: Brokers say market making normal corrections

clearly overvalued, as is the case with any new industry. But on the whole with the stock market as an indicator of long-term prospects, the prospects are good and I look for an upward trend. I tell my clients that if they look at where the market is today, six months from now it will be higher. It may go crazy in-between, but it will be higher," Perryman said.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, in recent speeches and congressional testimony, has intimated that the Fed may raise interest rates, Elam said, which has successfully calmed the stock market rally. The move, Elam said, is similar to one Greenspan made a couple of years ago when, in a speech he mentioned the stock market's "irrational exuberance" and sent the Dow tumbling several hundred points.

"He's interested in seeing the rally continue at a slower pace," Elam explained.

While some investors may be concerned, Becker said he advises his clients to consider buying high quality investments, particularly those companies who have seen their stock prices drop but are still well managed and have good earnings and are paying good dividends.

"I like Tommy Hilfiger shirts, but I'm not going to pay $90 for one at the first of the season," he said. "I'll wait until they're half off. They'll still be good shirts and I'll like them a lot better at half-off. Stocks are that way, too."

Some of his fellow brokers have told Becker they feel the market will go through a correction of some sort in the near future, "but even if it does, that's not bad. Even if the Dow falls to the 9,500 or even the 9,000 level, it's a great time to buy quality stocks."

Elam predicted that "whatever will happen with interest rates has already been factored in" and bond prices, currently yielding just under 6 percent, will advance. Once the Federal Open Markets Committee meets later this month, he said, "we should see the markets advance next month."

Perryman agreed that any interest rate increase, "which has been all but announced" will not be a shock to the markets "unless there's a series of them, and then the market will have a 'when will it end?' attitude."

Becker said that what concerns him are high-tech stocks, specifically those he calls volatile and overpriced, and the impending Year 2000 computer bug.

"We feel the Y2K problem will not be that big a deal," he said, "but public sentiment could impact the markets. People may get concerned about Y2K and pull their stocks and cash them in. When they panic and pull their stocks out to cash them in, it'll be at a time they should be holding them."

E-commerce panel weighs need for funds

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — A commission created to recommend future tax policy on Internet commerce struggled Monday to resolve how to solicit private money to operate and avoid a perception of bias.

When Congress created the 19-member Advisory Commission on Electronic Commerce last year, no federal money was provided. Instead, lawmakers directed the panel to figure out a way to accept private donations and in-kind contributions such as office space.

But at its inaugural meeting Monday, several members said an initial proposal for each member to contribute up to $150,000 each could lead to perceptions of bias against state and local governments in favor of well-heeled companies represented on the panel such as AT&T, MCI Worldcom and Gateway Inc.

"We don't want it to look like people are buying access, buying influence," said David Pottruck, president of Charles Schwab Corp. "It could become a quagmire."

Congress enacted a three-year moratorium on new e-commerce taxes last year when the panel was created. The commission is due to make its recommendations to Congress in April 2000.

A proposed budget of about $1.7 million is envisioned. Commission members are not compensated. Virginia provided $150,000 in startup costs.

The commission was delayed for months after organizations representing state and local governments filed a federal lawsuit claiming the initial appointments were illegally tilted toward business. The lawsuit was dropped after Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., replaced Netscape chief James Barksdale with a local government official from Oregon.

That conflict and the one over financing demonstrate the sensitive nature of the commission's work: How to ensure state and local tax collections don't suffer from electronic commerce while avoiding a new, heavy tax burden on the companies doing a fast-growing business on the Internet.

"Our goal would be to see that whatever solution comes out of this strikes the proper balance in a real and credible way," said Robert Novick, general counsel for U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky and a commission member.

Gov. Michael Leavitt, R-Utah, said the fund raising should be publicly disclosed and that it must be done in a way to ensure "no one interest overwhelms the process, so that our product is discredited at the end."

Stephen King faces year of major rehabilitation

LEWISTON, Maine (AP) — His body is broken after being struck by a van. But the mind that created best sellers like "Carrie," "The Shining," and "Pet Sematary" is intact, Stephen King's office said Monday.

King, who was undergoing surgery on his injured leg and hip Monday night, faces another operation Wednesday and major rehabilitation over the next year. In addition to fractures of his right leg, King suffered a broken hip, a collapsed lung and a cut on his scalp.

His office took care to note that his serious injuries were from the shoulders down.

"Mr. King's mental state is great," his office said in a statement.

The best-selling horror writer remained in serious condition at Central Maine Medical Center, where he will likely remain for two or three weeks.

King, 51, was thrown 14 feet when he was hit from behind Saturday afternoon by a minivan as he walked along the shoulder of a road in rural Lovell, where he owns a summer home.

"We have nothing bad to report. Things are going very well indeed," said Dr. Larry Hopperstead, director of trauma surgery at the hospital.

Hopperstead said King will be able to walk with assistance in a few weeks, and estimated it will be about nine months before he can walk normally.

Four killed in Kosovo; disarmament pact signed

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Peacekeepers clearing land mines, booby traps and unexploded ordnance from a school in Kosovo set off an explosion Monday that killed two Nepalese soldiers and two civilians — the first allied fatalities since the NATO-led force entered Kosovo on June 12.

Soldiers from the 69th Gurkha Field Squadron — riflemen from the South Asian nation attached to the British peacekeeping force — were helping clear ammunition in the village of Negrovce, 20 miles west of Pristina, when a mine or booby trap went off, NATO said. Two civilians also died and a third was injured.

President Clinton, who is in the former Yugoslav republic of Slovenia, telephoned British Prime Minister Tony Blair to offer his condolences, officials said.

British peacekeepers said they were investigating the cause of the blast.

In spite of the deadly explosion, the peace appeared stronger than ever, with Albanian rebels pledging in a disarmament pact with NATO to lay down their arms. The deal came just hours after the last of the 40,000 Serb troops had left Kosovo.

The 20,000 or so NATO-led KFOR troops now in Kosovo said they were moving beyond their initial attempts to quell the violence and beginning to look at the longer term — establishing security and laying the groundwork for democratic elections.

"Very soon, KFOR will be the only military security presence here. That is how it should be," peacekeeping chief Lt. Gen. Mike Jackson said Monday.

Hours earlier, he received two crucial documents. The first was confirmation from the Serb-dominated Yugoslav military that its forces, accused of atrocities against Kosovo's ethnic Albanian majority, withdrew from Kosovo to comply with NATO's midnight deadline.

The second, coming minutes after midnight, was a pledge by the Kosovo Liberation Army to put down its weapons, withdraw its fighters to barracks and join efforts to establish peaceful politics in Kosovo.

NATO officially ended its air campaign Sunday. The Belgrade government took a reciprocal step Monday, asking parliament to end the state of war it imposed on March 24, the state Tanjug news agency reported.

The state of war that was declared the day NATO began its air campaign banned men of military age from leaving the country, let the army take over key institutions and made the news media subject to censorship.

But at the same time there were new reports of a media crackdown: An umbrella group for Yugoslavia's fledging independent radio and television broadcasters said the government was forcing independent stations to replace their newscasts with those of the state-controlled networks.

The rebels agreed to a broad demilitarization that will require them to leave their checkpoints and halt any military activity unless the peacekeepers approve it first.

Although they can keep their personal weapons, they agreed not to use explosives, to put the remaining weapons in storage sites verified by NATO, and to clear minefields and booby-traps within seven days.

"The KLA has made a great contribution for freedom," rebel leader Hashim Thaci said in Pristina. "The KLA has been fighting to achieve what we have achieved today."

Thaci, making his first official appearances in Kosovo since the peacekeeping troops moved in, basked in the international recognition.

U.S. State Department spokesman James Rubin sat next to him as he signed the pledge and introduced him at a Monday news conference — then was spotted having coffee with him in a Pristina cafe.

Rubin said both Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and Clinton spoke to Thaci afterwards and expressed their admiration for his "act of political courage."

Already, many in the rank and file seemed to be complying.

"We received an order to return home and start a normal life with our families," KLA fighter Faik Reci, a teacher waiting for a ride home with his brother, said in Prizren, Kosovo's second-largest city.

The KLA regional commander there, known by his code name "Drini," gave German officers maps of minefields — most near the Albanian border — as required under the agreement.

Sergio Vieira de Mello, the U.N. official who essentially becomes Kosovo's governor under the peace deal, had expressed concern Sunday that KLA activities could undermine his authority.

On Monday, he praised the agreement and set about the work of building peace.

While Jackson is chiefly responsible for security, Vieira de Mello's tasks include getting electricity, water and other municipal services working again across Kosovo, re-establishing civilian courts and police forces, and preparing for elections.

Vieira de Mello said one of his first acts would be to issue strict gun-control orders. While the agreement requires KLA fighters to warehouse all heavy weapons, they are allowed to keep pistols and long-barreled, non-automatic rifles.

The KLA said its former fighters will apply for positions in municipal governments and on the police force. Rubin said they should receive "special consideration in view of the expertise they have developed" in police hiring.

Mexico City rattled by small earthquake; damage slight

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A small earthquake caused some Mexico City office buildings to sway and thousands of residents to rush out of their workplaces Monday, one week after a stronger temblor caused scattered damage and deaths in neighboring Puebla state.

There were no immediate reports of widescale damage or injuries from Monday's quake either in Mexico City, or around the epicenter of the quake in southern Guerrero state.

In Guerrero state, five houses were destroyed and more than 800 were damaged in the municipality of Coahuyutla, said the deputy mayor, Lorenzo Deloya Linares. There were no injuries.

The quake was estimated at a magnitude of 5.7 by the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden Colorado, which placed the epicenter in a sparsely populated mountain area 165 miles (260 kms) southwest of Mexico City.

Mexico's National Seismological Service placed the temblor's strength at 5.8. Either estimate would be much smaller than the 6.7-magnitude quake that struck central Mexico on June 15.

The swaying made many nervous because it came a week after the June 15 quake, which killed at least 17 people and injured nearly 200. More than 7,700 homes and numerous colonial-era churches were destroyed or damaged in the states of Puebla and Oaxaca.

Radio reports from Puebla indicated the quake was felt only slightly there. There were no reports on whether any of the structures damaged in last week's quake had been weakened further by Monday's temblor.

"These quakes are frequently felt more strongly in Mexico City than near the epicenter" because the city is built on an extremely unstable former lake-bed, said Bill Smith, a seismologist at the U.S. Geological Survey.

Office workers in Mexico City rushed from their buildings, some disturbed by the relative length of the quake; while the June 15th temblor lasted a few seconds, Monday's quake clocked in at 32 seconds of unpleasant swaying.

Jib's features new faces, same Texas-style food

"One thing I really like about Jib's," said Earl, between mouthfuls of tender, smoked St. Louis style ribs, "is that you always know what you're gonna get."

"YOU do?" Slim asked. "Every time you come in here you order something different. You say it's all so good, you don't want to miss anything."

"Well, I mean you always know what each thing you order is gonna taste like," Earl replied. "Take these ribs for example. You know they're gonna be slooooow smoked over mesquite, till they're just falling-off-the-bone tender and exploding with barbecue flavor. You know Jib's special made-from-scratch barbecue sauce is gonna set your mouth to watering just thinking about it. And you know you're gonna get buttery Texas toast, pinto beans, freshly crisp salad or Cole slaw and golden fries."

"It used to be like that at the bank," Earl continued. You'd go in, cash your check, and know what you were gonna get. Now, they give you these weird-looking bills that look like they've got some kind of cartoon character on 'em instead of a president."

Earl's speech was interrupted by the arrival at the table of a new face.

"Hi, fellas, I'm Jim Harrell," said the face. "How's the food?"

"This is the greatest place in the world for Texas home cookin'," Earl began. "Is this your first time in here?"

Jim smiled big and answered, "No. I run the place now. I really want to know if you enjoyed the food."

Slim stood up and shook his hand. "Earl was just saying how the food is always consistent quality—guess you're not changing that."

"We're not changing anything," Jim assured them. "Jib's has been doing it right for four years now, and there's no need to change what people like."

Slim studied Jim intently for a moment. "You look familiar," he said. "Didn't I see you at the pizza party for my nephew's soccer team awhile back?"

"It's quite possible," Jim smiled. "I did thousands of pizza parties in my former life."

As Jim moved on to meet other customers, Slim said, "I think he's gonna be okay, don't you?"

"Hey, do you think we should tell him we get a big discount because we eat in here so much? Maybe we could tell him we always get free fountain drink refills," Earl said.

"Earl, EVERYBODY gets free fountain drink refills," Slim countered. "Besides, the food here is already about the best value in town. How else do you think we could eat here all the time?"

Located at 3316 W. Illinois, just north of Dunlap's, Jib's features steak fingers, chicken fried steak, chicken strips, deep-fried pork chops, catfish, shrimp, barbecue, smoked sausage, St. Louis style ribs and more made-from-scratch Texas fare. Their hours are 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call ahead for carry out orders at 699-3008.

New Jib's manager Jim Harrell has kept all the quality food and great service Jib's is known for. Slim 'n Earl think he'll work out just fine.

Brides, let Fashion heirloom your wedding dress

Let Fashion Cleaners preserve your wedding dress with a careful process that includes this box displayed by Philip McCain.

In spite of all society's changes in recent years, June is still the most popular month for weddings. After your special day, let Fashion Cleaners help you keep your memories intact by heirlooming your treasured gown.

At Fashion, heirlooming involves a careful process. They check and treat your gown for any spots, then clean the gown inside a special bag, which assures no beads or ornaments are lost. Fashion then does any needed repairs. Next, they press and finish your gown, then place it in a preservation box filled with acid-free paper to reduce yellowing. This box is sealed in a plastic bag and placed in an outer box.

Fashion's Philip McCain recommends heirlooming your gown as soon as possible after the wedding. "Any stains get harder to remove the longer you wait," he notes.

Philip also reminds customers that Fashion's two locations will be in vacation mode the week of July 5-10. On the fifth, they'll be closed for Independence Day. On the sixth through the tenth the locations will be open for pickup and dropoff of clothing, but no additional cleaning will be done until July 12.

Fashion Cleaners has two convenient locations: 801 W. Wall and in the Imperial Shopping Center at Midkiff and Wadley. They do all kinds of cleaning and laundry, as well as alterations, reweaving and keepsaking of bridal gowns. Pickup and delivery are available.

Let Mid-West Glass turn your patio into a summer home

Have you always dreamed of having a summer cottage in a remote mountain hideaway, where you could enjoy the outdoors in comfort? While few of us can afford such a luxury, Mid-West Glass can help you turn your patio into a shady, breeze-controlled retreat, custom-made for enjoying cool West Texas summer mornings or balmy evenings.

Because it will have lots of windows, a patio enclosure from Mid-West Glass will let you enjoy your lawn. You can choose windows that welcome up to 75 percent ventilation to catch the cool breezes, opening them just a little when the West Texas winds kick up. Or, choose the simplicity of solid glass windows that give you a great view without opening.

If you plan to heat and cool your patio room, have Mid-West install insulated windows, which can help make the room even more comfortable.

Your patio "summer home" will let in the beauty of your landscaping while keeping out dust, blowing trash and flying insects that could spoil your little piece of paradise.

Mid-West's Brandon Herring says many customers fill the room with high quality padded lawn furniture, because it will be protected from the weather and, if you wish, from pets. Indoor-outdoor carpeting or tile are other popular decorative choices.

Along with enjoyment, a patio enclosure can add beauty and value to your home, at a fraction of what it would cost to add a complete room. It's easy to match your home's existing exterior colors. While white, bronze and mill finish are the most popular colors, many others are available. You're sure to find the perfect color for your home.

Along with enjoyment, a patio enclosure can add beauty and value to your home, at a fraction of what it would cost to add a complete room.

Your enclosure can make use of an existing roof. Or, if there isn't one, Mid-West can install a glass roof using tough, tempered glass that is hail resistant.

Part of the simplicity of a patio enclosure is its ease of installation. Mid-West can usually do the installation within three or four days, depending on the size of the project. It may take a few days for some specially-ordered parts to come in, but even then, you can be enjoying your summer place within two to three weeks of placing your order.

So why wait? Make a phone call and find out how little it can cost to create your own "summer home" in your very own back yard.

Mid-West Glass offers glass and windows for any use, as well as patio enclosures. Located at 906 W. Front, the phone number for a free estimate is 682-7373.

Clinton says China will forgive embassy bombing

BONN, Germany (AP) — China remains unconvinced that NATO didn't target its embassy in Belgrade, but President Clinton believes that Beijing ultimately will accept the bombing as "a truly tragic accident."

Clinton acknowledged Monday that the embassy bombing, which killed three Chinese journalists, had created "a difficult, painful period" for U.S,-Chinese relations.

But he said he remains hopeful that the difficulties will be smoothed out, and negotiations could resume soon on bringing China into the World Trade Organization by the end of the year. China suspended WTO talks with the United States after the May 7 embassy bombing.

"I'd still like to see it finish this year. And I think we'll work through this," Clinton said during a news conference with German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder following a U.S.-European Union summit.

"I think as they have time to review the information we gave them and they reflect on it, I think they will conclude that it was a truly tragic accident, that a series of very bad mistakes were made and a tragic accident occurred," Clinton said.

Last week, Undersecretary of State Thomas Pickering went to Beijing to present a detailed report to Chinese officials about the accidental bombing. NATO target planners had used an outdated map, which didn't show the embassy had moved.

China's state-controlled media dismissed Pickering's presentation as "deceitful talk" and said the United States possesses too much sophisticated reconnaissance technology to have made such a mistake.

Clinton said he thought it was "quite a positive sign" that state-run Chinese media highlighted reports about Pickering's visit for two or three days afterward.

The United States promised to compensate the families of three dead journalists, and to those injured in the incident.

In Washington, Defense Secretary William Cohen said Congress will soon get a report on what he called "intelligence failures and institutional failures" in the bombing.

"But I'm not sure how much more can be done to persuade the Chinese that this was in fact a serious mistake — a case of mistaken identity," Cohen said at a Pentagon press conference. "It will take some time, perhaps, for them to accept that, but that is in fact the truth."

Cohen said common sense dictates that the United States would not deliberately bomb a Chinese embassy, "because we were trying to establish a better working relationship, a better military-to-military relationship with the Chinese."

Indian medicine men preserve culture in city, ply their trade

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Taxis honk on the avenue below and venetian blinds block the glare of street lamps in the midtown loft where urbanites gather for a ritual until recently practiced only in the Amazon jungle.

One by one, jean-clad men and women kneel before the shaman in his striped poncho, parrot-feathered crown and boar's tooth necklace. Each downs a cup of bitter brown tea, then awaits its psychedelic effects to set in.

When a middle-aged schoolteacher begins shaking with fright, the healer rustles the branch in her face. For good measure, he spits a mouthful of licorice-flavored "firewater" over Beatriz's curled-up body.

"I scared away the evil spirits," explains Antonio Jacanamijoy, the 78-year-old shaman from the Inga tribe of Colombia's Amazon, later explains.

For decades, intrepid westerners trekked to the Amazon to find the reclusive men who made yage (ya-hey), the tea brewed from a jungle vine, Banisteriopsis Caapi. Anthropologists, botanists and drug enthusiasts braved the wilds for the drink also known as ayahuasca (eye-ah-wah-ska).

Beat generation writers Alan Ginsberg and William Burroughs published a book, The Yage Letters, about their often-frightening episodes under yage's influence in Colombia and Peru in the 50s and 60s.

Nearly a half-century later, the shamans are reaching out to the West, taking their healing rites to urban living rooms. In Bogota, they've built a following among artists, intellectuals and professionals as well as some doctors who believe in the tea's potential for treating maladies.

General practitioner Fabio Ramirez takes patients regularly to a shaman and has become the medicine man's apprentice. He calls yage a "great catalyst" capable of helping people see emotional problems at the root of their illnesses.

"It's not a panacea. It's a great tool," Ramirez said.

Users claim yage gives them visions, of jungle cats and technicolor landscapes.

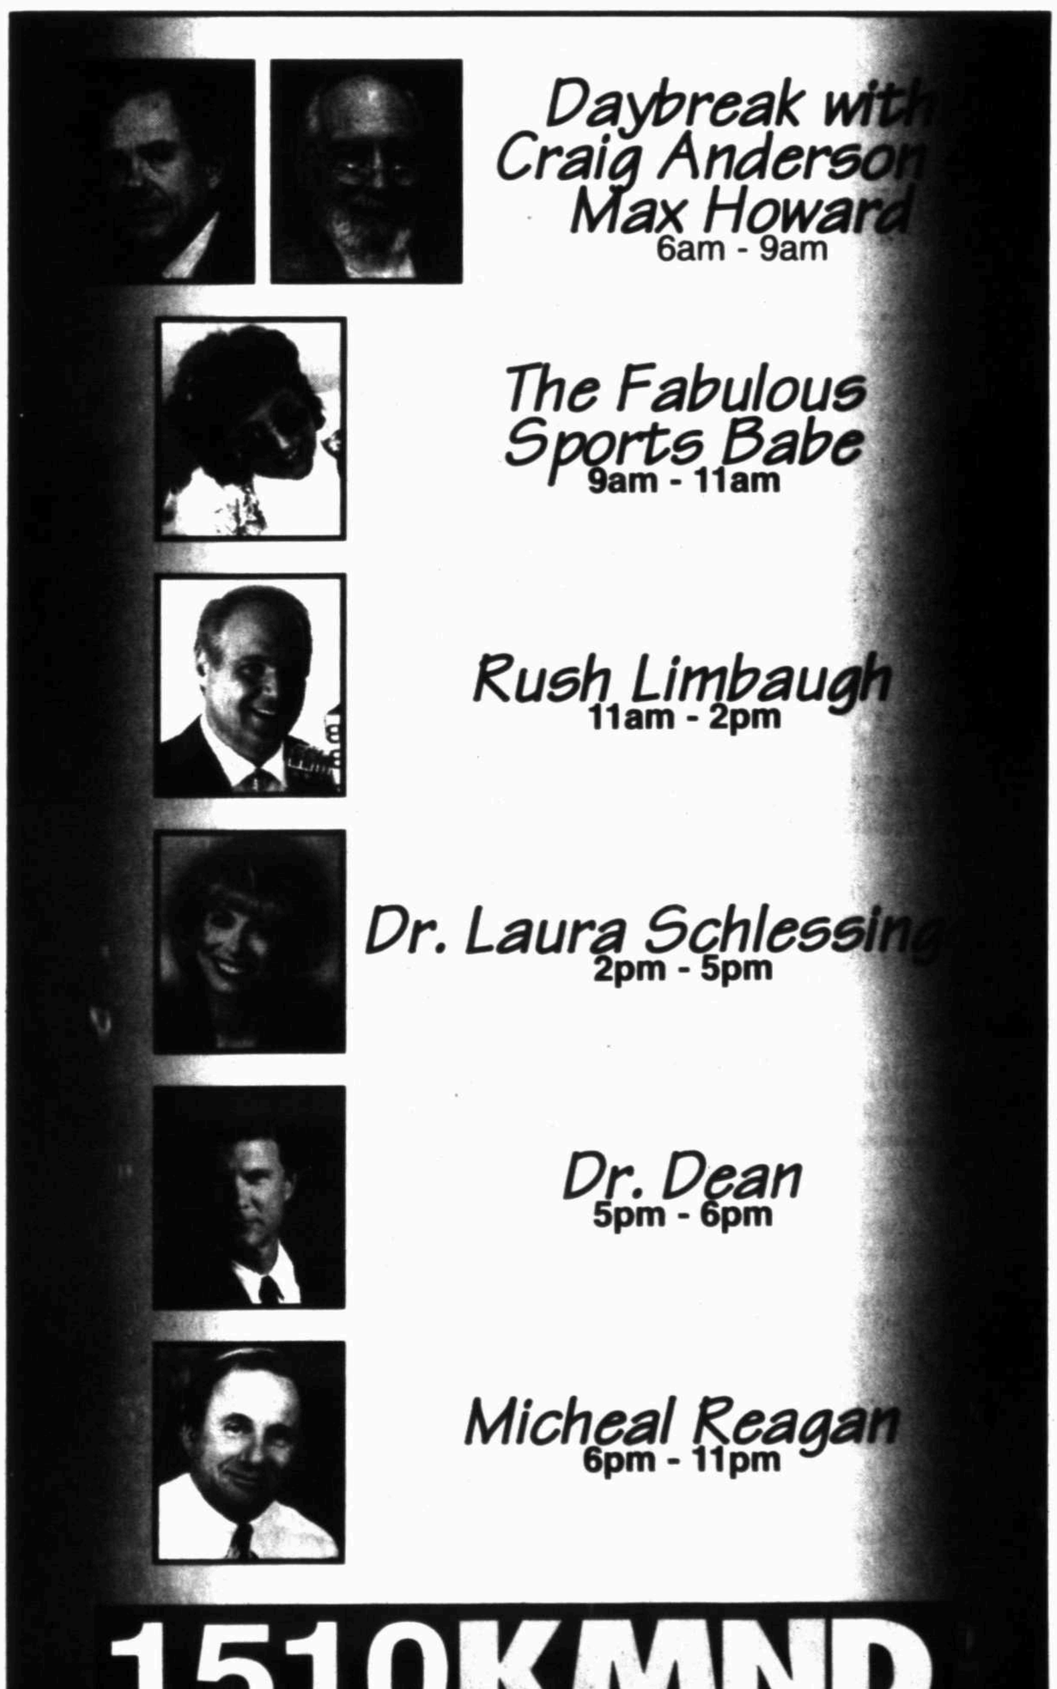

Colombia's leading news magazine, Semana, has declared the shaman-led yage sessions a Bogota "fashion." Among those taking it with Beatriz one Saturday night were a publicist, a medical intern and Andrea Echeverry, the nose-ringed lead singer of Aterciopelados, Colombia's top rock group.

For many of its new urban groupies, the weekly sessions may prove just a temporary fad. For the shamans — mostly elderly men spending months on end in a foreboding metropolis — they are a matter of personal and cultural survival.

Shamans using yage have spread beyond South America, holding frequent sessions in California, Colorado and the southwestern United States, said Dr. Andrew Weil, the U.S. alternative health guru, who tried the beverage in Colombia during the 1970s.

"There's tremendous usage of it in North America," he said.

But with side effects including severe vomiting and diarrhea, yage isn't likely to spread as a street drug.

North Korea stalls talks with South

BEIJING (AP) — A dispute over a fertilizer shipment led North Korea to postpone talks Monday with South Korea, a South Korean official said.

North Korea put off the talks, due to have started Monday in Beijing, until it receives the last of 100,000 tons of fertilizer that the South failed to deliver by a Sunday deadline, said Yang Young-shik, the South Korean vice unification minister.

It was not clear when the talks — the highest-level meeting between the two Koreas in 14 months — would start.

The delay added more uncertainty after tensions last week from a skirmish between the two Koreas' navies in a disputed part of the Yellow Sea. A North Korean gunboat was sunk and around 30 northern sailors were thought killed in one of the worst clashes in years.

North Korea late Sunday threatened retaliation for what it claimed were incursions by the South into its territorial waters.

South Korean officials said the North asked for a five-hour delay in the start of talks in a Beijing hotel Monday morning, then later brought up the issue of the shipment.

Yang said the 22,000 tons of fertilizer had been delayed because of rain and would arrive at the North Korean port of Nampo on Tuesday. The South's delegations will stay in Beijing, he said, in hopes of meeting on Tuesday.

"It's very regrettable that they are using the fertilizer aid as an excuse to delay the talks," Yang told reporters.

North Korean officials stayed away from Monday's talks and did not comment to reporters. Instead, the North's embassy in Beijing called a press conference to attack South Korea over the naval dispute.

Embassy counselor Li Gi Pom accused South Korea of sending warships into the North's territorial waters in a "reckless provocation" in standoffs earlier this month in the Yellow Sea.

County showing fiscal integrity with its budget

Midland County Judge Bill Morrow took over the reins of the county in January knowing full well that he would inherit a major financial debacle. The previous administration had saddled him with a falling revenue base and an $800,000 budget deficit.

But Morrow did not throw up his hands and quit. If anything, he looked at the situation somewhat philosophically noting that "you are always going to have money problems with government. The demand is always greater than the supply of money."

How true that comment is.

Yet that is an extremely important recognition for someone in the public sector to grasp and acknowledge publicly. Too frequently, those who call themselves public servants forget who is paying their salaries as well as the fragile trust that they hold, and begin to operate as though they are the keepers of the goose that lays the golden eggs. That can be a disastrous road for those in government to head down, however.

It's not even a wise practice in good economic times. But when the local economy turns sour, it is even more crucial for those in public office to be cognizant of the fact that they are not merely writing checks that someone else is paying for, but are running up debt that other people must eventually pay down. It is a tremendous responsibility and one that should urge frugality.

Judging from the recent comments of Morrow and those sitting on the current commissioner's court, they have a solid understanding of the fact that this is a difficult time for many Midlanders, and that the local oil economy shows no signs of turning around anytime soon.

As we've noted before, Midland families are having to restrict their spending as a result of this economy and local government should do the same. It's good to see that Morrow and the Midland County Commissioners are working toward that end. Other local governmental entities should do the same.

Flood of refugees calls for wider action

The world keeps track of Kosovo's refugees and offers them hope. Not so Colombia's. Or Sudan's, Angola's, or Afghanistan's. That must change. ...

Emissaries for the U.N. High Commissioner of Refugees visiting a makeshift camp of several hundred of these victims of civil war in northwest Colombia were shocked by what they saw and heard: Children playing in sewage, hacking coughs throughout, the hollow eyes and distended bellies of malnutrition. In Turbo, where some 3,000 people have fled, authorities packed people into a gymnasium. There were and are no TV cameras to broadcast their plight. ...

Much the same situation exists in Sudan, where 16 years of conflict between black southern Sudanese against Arab Muslims in the North has killed 1.9 million and uprooted 4.3 million people. ...

As in the Balkans, it is not sufficient to lament human tragedy when one has the means at hand to assuage it.

Unjust law could come back to haunt liberals

The Supreme Court's ruling last week (June 14) that Operation Rescue founder Randall Terry and other pro-life activists must pay about $600,000 in fines and attorneys fees for blockading New York City abortion clinics 10 years ago may be cause for the National Organization for Women Legal Defense and Education Fund to celebrate, but the ruling could come back to haunt them and other liberal causes.

Thomas

The Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (FACE), passed in 1994 by a Democratic Congress and signed by a Democratic president, unfairly singles out a single issue — abortion — and makes certain forms of protest against it a federal crime. Yet no federal restrictions were placed on blocking the South African Embassy in Washington during anti-apartheid demonstrations. If such a law had been in place during the civil rights movement, owners of segregated lunch counters could have sued for damages to their businesses by black customers who were refused service and would not leave. Vietnam war protesters might have been fined for occupying government buildings or sitting in at Dow Chemical, a company that made napalm used in bombs that burned the skin off human beings, as certain abortion procedures burn the skin off unborn babies.

State and local trespass laws are sufficient to deal with the occupation of private and public property, but because the Democratic Congress wanted to make a statement about abortion, it unwisely built a federal legal fence around abortion clinics designed to keep people who regard the procedure as murder at a distance.

Pro-choicers should be concerned about the future. Suppose Roe vs. Wade is eventually overturned. Suppose that a pro-life Congress and a pro-life president restrict pro-choicers from civil disobedience against new abortion restrictions. The courts and Congress might see a precedent in what pro-choicers did with FACE.

Nonviolent civil disobedience is part of America's heritage. It is a way to heighten awareness on issues with a moral component. When citizens observe people willing to give up their freedom, sometimes their lives, for a cause they regard as just, it can lead to changed attitudes and then changed laws.

Martin Luther King Jr. was a proponent of civil disobedience. He frequently wrote and spoke of the proper response to unjust laws. In "I Have a Dream: Writings and Speeches That Changed the World," James M. Washington, editor (Harper San Francisco, 1992), King noted: "Nonviolence offers a method by which (people) can fight evil with which they cannot live. It offers a unique weapon which, without firing a single bullet, disarms the adversary. It exposes his moral defenses, weakens his morale and at the same time works on his conscience."

No wonder pro-choicers had to shut Terry and his colleagues down. He was stealing their weapons.

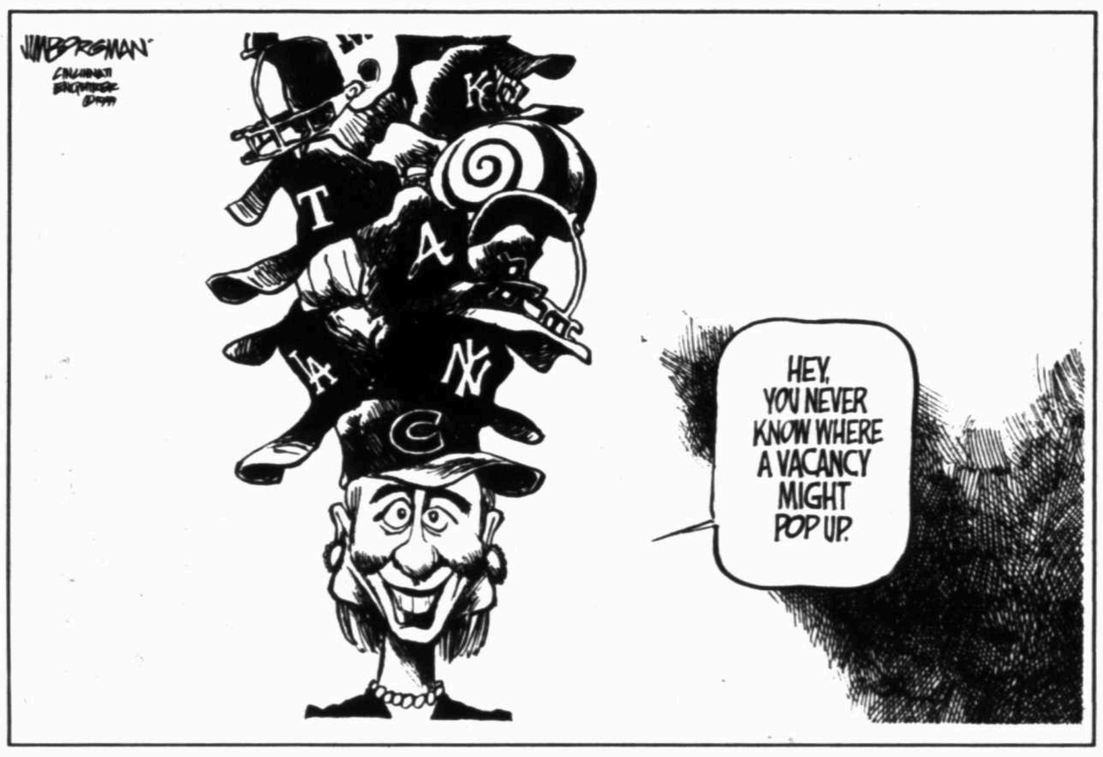

Elsewhere, King noted there are just and unjust laws. What's the difference? "A just law is a man-made code that squares with the moral law or the law of God. An unjust law is a code that is out of harmony with the moral law .... Any law that uplifts human personality is just. Any law that degrades human personality is unjust. All segregationist statutes are unjust because segregation distorts the soul and damages the personality."

The same could be said of those who are segregated from the human family (the unborn) or by the content of their ideology (pro-life civil disobeyers).

King also observed that, "from a purely moral point of view, an unjust law is one that is out of harmony with the moral law of the universe." But what if people are largely out of harmony with such a moral law? How do you appeal to conscience when, for example, the economy is all that seems to matter?

You may not agree with the substance of the arguments or the behavior of groups such as Operation Rescue. You may feel it is important to be cautious in actions of civil disobedience, so that they do not encourage others to violence. Yet singling out a radical band of pro-lifers for special penalties is unjust. The issue should be revisited not only by a Republican Congress, but also by those who successfully used civil disobedience to advance their causes. If not, the tables may be turned when their "out-of-favor" issues are questioned.

Administrative salaries border on ridiculous

Regarding the salaries paid to the MISD administrative staff — these salaries border on the ridiculous. Most of the salaries indicated in the newspaper of the administrative staff exceed the average medical doctor's annual net income. Additional perks, other than the excessive car allowance, have not been disclosed.

We, the taxpayers, deserve better representation in respect to the salaries granted to these administrators. I expect immediate action to align these salaries to comparable with other employment sectors.

If an oil company had this kind of salary structure they would have been in Chapter 11 or taken over by someone more responsible to the shareholders.

Preserving history gift for our future generations

I have lived in Midland since 1956 and I find it very interesting to read about the articles on revitalizing downtown Midland. How sad that the authorities did not have enough foresight before taking and destroying the most interesting and historical buildings — the old ice house, the depot, Scharbauer Hotel (What a beautiful building!).

I am certainly for progress when it is kept in balance. What is wrong about making do with what we have? Why can't there be some thought about saving the taxpayers some money, instead of "How can we spend the money?"

I recently visited my husband's hometown, Valley Mills, and I went through their museum. This museum is housed in the old depot (which they saved) and 150 years of history is displayed. Nearby is an old railroad car. Preserving our history is one of the greatest gifts that we can give to future generations.

Thanks to Good Samaritan who discovered money

I wanted to report a story that had happened back in November 1998 and express my gratitude to a Midland resident, Kelly Williams. My family was attending a high school basketball tournament in Midland when I discovered that I was missing a bank bag out of my purse that contained $12,000.

While I quietly panicked, my husband went to look in our RV, hoping the bag had fallen out in our vehicle. He came back and had not found the bag and I walked with him quickly back to the RV to see if he had overlooked it.

While on our way out of the school and into the parking lot, I saw a woman standing in the middle of the parking lot outside of the entrance to the school with my bank bag in her hand. She was holding it up and I ran up to her and claimed it as mine, embracing her and crying at the same time. She said that when she had looked in the bag, she had made up her mind, that she was going to stand there and not move until someone came to claim that bag! She realized how devastating it would be to lose that amount of money and wanted to ensure the owner got it back.

What honesy and integrity! Our character is what we are when no one is around and Kelly Williams is a woman of character! God Bless her!

CHARLEY REESE

Candidate Smith possesses unique political factors

Some time ago, James Carville — the meanest of Bill Clinton's junkyard dogs — said of Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., who's running for president, that while he disagreed with Smith's positions, the senator deserved credit for the sincerity of his beliefs.

Reese

Since that was the only time I've heard Carville speak positively of any Republican except his wife, I took the time to watch Smith give a speech and answer questions at the National Press Club on C-SPAN.

It was the first time I had seen him except on news clips, and I was impressed enough to re-register to vote. Smith reminded me of Harry Truman — though being a big man, he doesn't have the feisty personality of Truman. He does, however, have the same plain speaking style and the same firmness of beliefs.

Not once either in his speech or in answer to questions did Smith dodge an issue, evade a question or use a weasel word. Everything he said, he said plainly and honestly. So that's unique factor No. 1.

But while his positions would certainly be called extreme by liberals — uncompromising opposition to abortion, firm supporter of the Second Amendment, anti-tax, abolish the federal department of education, anti-internationalist — he stated his positions in a gracious and civil manner laced with humor. Not once did Smith speak ungraciously of anyone or of any group. So that's unique factor No. 2. The man is not a demagogue.

There was none of the meanness and stridency of Newt Gingrich, none of the soaring rhetoric of Pat Buchanan. No calls to arms, no declarations of war. He reminded me of a Jimmy Stewart character — here's where I stand, I'm not budging, but I respect your right to disagree.

Smith was asked if he would support the Republican nominee regardless of that person's positions on the issues and he said, "No, I will not." Smith, who puts principles ahead of party, said, "My career and the Republican Party are not what's important. What's important is the country." He said he did not mind debating Sen. Ted Kennedy, but he was tired of having to debate Republicans on conservative issues.

I checked and found that Smith puts his vote where his mouth is. He is not a poll-watcher or an opportunist; but at the same time, he is not a fanatic. He seems a very healthy-minded man. I'm tempted to say that's unique factor No. 3.

Smith's father was killed in World War II, and he grew up on the farm of his grandparents, worked his way through college, married his sweetheart, served in the Vietnam War on a ship and afterward moved to New Hampshire, where he taught in public schools coached and ran a small real estate business. He was elected to the House in 1984, to the Senate in 1990 and again in 1996.

So, if you are conservative, you might want to take a look at him. His Web site is www. smithforpresident.org. So far, he has not gotten much media attention, but he may do in the presidential race what Jesse Ventura did in Minnesota. You can judge how well he is doing by how viciously Republicans attack him. What I used to call the Rockefeller Wing of the Republican Party is fanatical in its determination to make sure the American people only have a choice between a Republican internationalist and a Democrat internationalist.

It's not yet clear what they contain and whether they are the Minsk files on the Oswald surveillance or files from Moscow containing the Soviet Union's own investigation of the assassination.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Documents given by Boris Yeltsin to President Clinton on Sunday could shed light on whether Lee Harvey Oswald schemed to kill President Kennedy while he was an American defector living in the Soviet Union, assassination researchers said.

Yeltsin's surprise gift to Clinton — declassified papers containing information gathered by Russian intelligence agencies about Oswald — are a "monumental breakthrough," said historian Kermit Hall, a former member of the Assassination Records Review Board. That federal panel, which went out of business last September, was created to gather all known records regarding the assassination.

Hall said the Russian records — which the board was unable to obtain when it sent Hall and two other board members to Russia in 1996 — could show what Oswald was thinking and doing in the years leading up to the 1963 assassination of President Kennedy in Dallas.

"It's really critical," said Hall, an Ohio State University historian. "This could tell us if he was scheming to do anything."

Oswald, a former Marine, defected to the Soviet Union in 1959 and renounced his American citizenship. That attracted the attention of the KGB, which bugged his apartment in the Belarus capital city of Minsk, paid neighbors to inform on him and kept Oswald and his Russian wife Marina under constant surveillance.

The KGB amassed a six-volume file on Oswald's activities in Minsk, Hall said.

Disenchanted with his life in Russia and his menial factory job, Oswald returned to the United States in 1962, settling in Dallas with his wife and baby. Some assassination researchers concluded that Oswald did not decide to kill Kennedy until he moved to Dallas.

The Warren Commission, which conducted the official U.S. government investigation of Kennedy's slaying, concluded that Oswald was the sole gunman.

Two days after the assassination, Dallas nightclub owner Jack Ruby shot Oswald to death as police were transferring him from the city jail to the county jail.

In Moscow, the Interfax news agency said Yeltsin gave Clinton 80 documents, which also detailed the Soviet government's reaction to Kennedy's assassination.

Although the assassination review board members were turned down when they sought copies of the files in 1996, writers Norman Mailer and Lawrence Schiller were allowed to examine some of them and used them for their 1995 book, "Oswald's Tale." The book, tracing Oswald's life, shed no light on whether he had plotted to kill Kennedy.

U.S. officials said the files, which Yeltsin gave to Clinton when they met Sunday in Cologne, Germany for the Group of Eight summit, are in Russian.

It's not yet clear what they contain and whether they are the Minsk files on the Oswald surveillance or files from Moscow containing the Soviet Union's own investigation of the assassination.

"We need to translate them first," David Leavy, National Security Council spokesman, said Monday from Slovenia.

Sandy Berger, Clinton's national security adviser, said Sunday in Cologne that the papers will be reviewed "and all interesting elements will be made public."

The National Archives, which oversees the collection and public release of JFK assassination documents, has been in touch with the White House about the KGB files, said Susan Cooper, a spokeswoman.

David Marwell, the review board's former executive director, said the KGB files are important for their historical significance and for what they might reveal about Oswald's life in Russia.

"Certainly records of his residence of Minsk would help in trying to understand him and what motivated him," said Marwell, who was part of the 1996 delegation to Russia.

Hall said the files could answer some lingering questions about Oswald's activities in Russia, providing fodder for or extinguishing theories about whether Oswald had contacts with U.S. intelligence officials in Russia.

"This would be extraordinarily interesting material," said Hall.

Other researchers doubt that the Minsk files will contain any blockbusters.

Gus Russo, a lead reporter for a 1993 "Frontline" television documentary on Oswald, said he has seen some of them and they contain "zero evidence that Oswald was a spy."

"It will be very anticlimactic," he said.

Top court to decide whether cable TV anti-smut law goes too far

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide whether a federal anti-smut law went too far in trying to keep families who do not subscribe to cable TV channels like Playboy Television from getting glimpses and earfuls of the raunchy stuff.

The Clinton administration is trying to revive the 1996 law, struck down by a federal judge on grounds it swept too broadly in trying to keep children from seeing sex-oriented programs on networks only partly scrambled for non-subscribers.

Society has an interest "in seeing to it that children are not exposed to sexually explicit materials," the government's appeal said.

Playboy Television lawyer Robert Corn-Revere said in a telephone interview that the law, which limited such programming to nighttime hours even for paying subscribers, was "unnecessary overkill."

The court set the stage for its latest word on cable television, expected sometime in 2000, as it neared the end of its 1998-99 term. The justices planned to announce more decisions Tuesday, and they could release all remaining decisions and begin the summer recess later this week.

The anti-smut law was enacted as part of the 1996 Communications Decency Act after complaints arose that even though sex-oriented channels are scrambled for non-subscribers, the picture and sound sometimes get through.

A Florida woman said she found her 7- and 8-year-old children and a playmate one afternoon watching the Spice channel, with scenes of a couple seemingly having sex with the "groans and epithets that go along," according to the government's brief.

The law required cable operators that don't fully scramble or block sex-oriented networks for non-subscribers to show those "indecent" programs only between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Playboy challenged the law in 1996 as a violation of the Constitution's First Amendment, which protects freedom of speech. Unlike obscene material, indecent material is constitutionally protected.

A federal judge in Delaware struck down the law last December, saying its provisions were too broad.

Another section of the law already requires cable operators to completely block any channel, free of charge, once a customer requests such action. The trial judge said giving customers adequate notice of that alternative would be a less-restrictive alternative to barring all daytime adult-oriented programming.

There are several types of technology for scrambling and unscrambling cable TV signals, and the effectiveness often varies depending on the weather, the quality of the equipment, its installation and maintenance.

An increasing number of cable television systems use digital technology, which easily scrambles signals fully for those who do not subscribe to a particular station.

The Clinton administration's appeal asked the justices to give the government broader leeway to regulate indecency on cable television, much as it regulates broadcast radio and television.

The invalidated law "imposes a very limited restriction on speech and is a very effective approach to the substantial evil it addresses," government lawyers said.

Government lawyers said there was no proof the individual-blocking alternative would be practical because the cost would add up if many customers requested it.

Playboy's lawyers said it was "far from obvious" that adult-oriented channels were more harmful than other premium channels that show movies with profane content. The film "Another 48 Hours," shown on HBO, averaged a profanity every 30 seconds, Playboy lawyers' brief said.

Corn-Revere, the Playboy network's lawyer, said the law requires "turning off Playboy Television for two-thirds of the day" even though two-thirds of American households don't have children. Many televisions these days have technology allowing the owner to lock out a particular channel, he added.

"Voluntary solutions are far more effective to block unwanted programming," the network's brief said.

The Supreme Court also took the following actions Monday:

■ Voted 5-4 to uphold a Texas killer's death sentence, ruling that jurors in capital-punishment cases do not have to be told about the consequences of their failing to agree on whether life in prison or death is the appropriate punishment.

■ Ruled, 7-2, that an Alabama county can collect an occupational fee from two federal judges who work there. Imposing such fees against federal employees is rare but the decision could encourage other counties across the nation to emulate the revenue-raising scheme.

■ Ruled in a Michigan case that new limits on attorney-fee awards to inmates who sue over prison conditions apply only to legal work performed after the federal law took effect in 1996.

■ Temporarily blocked the dismantling of a special public school district for disabled children in a New York community of ultra-Orthodox Jews. Granting an emergency request by state officials, the court postponed indefinitely the effect of a ruling in which New York's highest court said the school district's creation violated the required separation of government and religion.

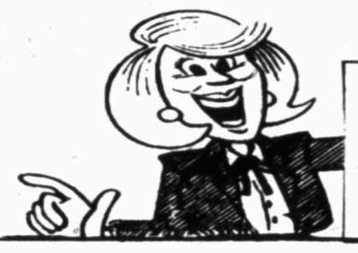

■ Refused to resurrect a ruling that shocked federal prosecutors last year by telling them it was unlawful to offer leniency in exchange for testimony. The justices, by denying review to a case from Kansas, left intact a federal appeals court ruling that removed any cloud of constitutional doubt from such leniency deals.

■ Said it will use an Arizona drug-trafficking case to decide whether some convictions must be overturned because of jury-selection errors. Prosecutors say a conviction was valid even though the judge failed to remove a potential juror who showed signs of bias, causing the defendant to use one of his limited number of automatic challenges to remove the man from the jury pool.

The Clinton administration's appeal asked the justices to give the government broader leeway to regulate indecency on cable television, much as it regulates broadcast radio and television.

City Council recognizes 'Doc' Dodson

By Matt Josefy

"Training is everything," Mark Twain once said, and in choosing this month's City of Champions Award the City Council recognized that fact.

James "Doc" Dodson is to be honored once again for decades of not just being an athletic trainer, but teaching athletes valuable lessons about life and family. Today, council members will officially recognize those contributions to the community.

Dodson served in an official capacity as head athletic trainer for Midland High School from 1959 to 1990. Now, he has "retired" and serves as director of rehabilitation orthopedic surgeons for the Southwest Orthopedic Center.

According to Dodson's own definition, a champion "is one who gives his best at the opportune time; when he reaches down and gives whatever it takes to become a winner on the scoreboard or on the field of life."

As to whether he is a champion, he would "like to think that I've been a part of a number of champions in Midland, and my family definitely falls into the category of champions."

Through the years, he has aided in the recoveries of countless local athletes, including both the handful who went on to the professional ranks and the multitudes that played sports for just a short time in their lives.

Family remains his highest priority. "Anytime you do something as a family it means so much to you," referring to what he considers his most prestigious award, Family of the Year. His two daughters, Kelly Hullender and Jamie Dodson, along with his wife, Gayle, comprised the rest of the winning 1982 Midland Family of the Year.

Mrs. Hullender has two young children who light up Dodson's life. In Dodson's words, "They have their granddaddy spoiled rotten."

Two very real thrills for him were seeing his daughters graduate from Texas A&M and then move on to become productive citizens.

In his current work he assists athletes from more that 16 high schools in this region. When asked about the greatest part of training, he named numerous citizens. "There are so many people that I was able to play a small part in their life."

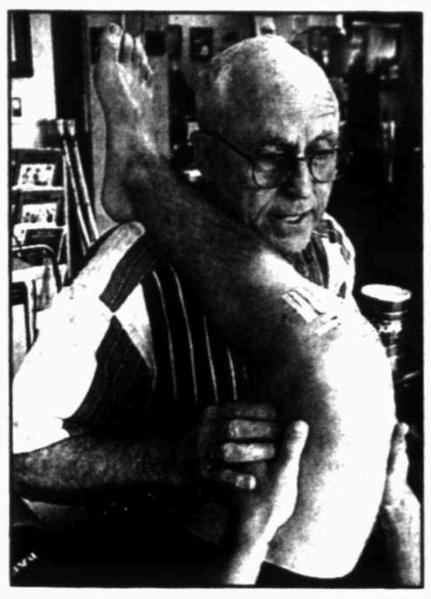

Dodson said the reason he became a trainer is simple: "As a sophomore in 1951 I was 4'11" and weighed 98 pounds." His position as a student trainer was the only one that he could secure on the football team.

At Texas Christian University, Dodson was an apprentice, so to speak, under Elmer Brown. After graduating from TCU in 1958, Dodson soon came to Midland High, the only local high school at the time.

Except for a few months in the service, he has been here ever since.

The end of his tenure came in 1990, but those who knew him could have guessed that this did

Big Spring 'babies' find help at wildlife rehabilitation center

By Johnnye Montgomery

BIG SPRING — They're still babies, drinking formula from a bottle every two to three hours, and the penalty for ignoring that schedule is a series of ear-piercing screeches guaranteed to bring the adult occupants immediately out of the deepest dream and out of bed. But once they're fed, they readily curl up inside their fuzzy towel-lined cage and sleep for another couple of hours, looking utterly cute and irresistible — as, indeed, all babies are.

And therein lies the problem, says Melanie Gambrell, state-licensed wildlife rehabilitator and custodian at present of the two baby raccoons on a round-the-clock feeding schedule.

"People see a baby 'coon or a fawn or a baby bird out by itself and they immediately want to take it home with them. What they don't realize is that in most cases those babies aren't abandoned, they're not orphans, and that their parents are nearby."

Furthermore, people who "rescue" and adopt wildlife

Please see WILD/3B

Bebe McCasland, federally and state-licensed wildlife rehabilitator, will take these baby kestrels (sparrow hawks) to Lubbock to the South Plains Rehabilitation Center, where they will learn to fly and prey on other wildlife.

Melanie Gambrell, state-licensed mammal rehabilitator must feed these baby raccoons by bottle with special raccoon formula every two to three hours around the clock until they're old enough to eat on their own. At that point, she will reduce her contact to a minimum, allowing them to return to a wild state, and then release them.

As tempting as it may be to rescue that young bird resting on the lawn, or that fawn you may find while wandering in the country, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department said to consider the following:

■ Unless the animal is in imminent danger, the best course is to leave it alone and leave.

If you see a nest with young birds in it, you can put the nest back into a tree or bush. Put fledging birds up in a tree or bush if you can, but if you can't do that quickly, just leave. (Be sure to take pets away with you.) The parents may be near. As young birds fledge, they can fall to the ground and then learn to fly.

■ Young mammals found lying quietly in the grass are awaiting the return of their mothers. The only reason for touching a young mammal is if the animal is in obvious distress and you can see that the parent is dead. In that case, call the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department or your local game warden. It's illegal to take animals from the wild unless you have a permit.

■ Adult birds and deer can become aggressive when humans threaten their offspring. Birds such as Mississippi kits and Western kingbirds will dive-bomb people who approach their nests, even when the nests are high in trees. Adult deer can be dangerous with their sharp hooves.

To report injured or abandoned wildlife, call the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department at 1-800-792-1112.

Local teen joins World Vision for tour of Tanzania

By Jennifer Cherry

"You can give food for a day or Jesus for a lifetime," was Andrew Petersen's philosophy when he endured 30 hours of fasting in February.

Peterson

This was not his first year to participate in the World Vision 30 Hour Famine. He has fasted once a year for the last three years.

In doing so, he helped raised money to feed starving children in Third World countries and qualified for a study tour.

"I felt called to do it," Petersen said.

The Midland College freshman is the first Midlander chosen for the annual tour, this year scheduled in Tanzania. He leaves Wednesday.

He began participating in the World Vision 30 Hour Famine with a group from Lee High School. The next year, he participated with his youth group at First Baptist Church.

"Andy is the most aggressive one (participant). He has a heart for doing that," said Charlie Dodd, youth minister at First Baptist Church.

"I felt like I shouldn't have anything with sugar in it," said Petersen, who only drank water during the 30 hours.

According to Dodd, this year was the fifth year for First Baptist to participate.

"It (the 30-hour famine) basically teaches them to experience hunger that others experience every day," Dodd said.

Usually, famine participants gather for the weekend at the church, Dodd said. They take part in group activities like watching videos sent from World Vision that describe the countries that the young people are helping. Petersen led one of the Bible courses that was offered during the "famine." Students also learn about Third World cultures and learn that when food is given to starving people, the word of God is spread, Dodd said.

At the end of the 30 hours, First Baptist participants eat a meal, usually much like what people in starving countries would have.

"We eat rice and bread and water," Dodd said.

In the past two years, students at First Baptist Church have raised $8,000, according to Dodd. Petersen alone raised $680 this year.

"Just a little bit of money makes a huge difference," Petersen said.

Petersen and three other students — Mark McIntire of Iowa, Tara Hensley of Michigan and Kelly McGill of Florida — were required to raise more than $500 each in donations in order to qualify for the trip.

Petersen said he raised money by visiting homes door-to-door and visiting past Sunday school teachers with a pamphlet explaining his mission. Petersen said contributors can give a certain amount of money per hour or an overall amount. Most gave an average of $10 to $30. One man gave $200, Petersen said.

Even though his mother, Carolyn Petersen, said that initially she didn't like him going door-to-door asking for money, she approves of what the money is to be used for.

After raising more than the required funds to qualify for the study tour, Petersen had to submit an essay to World Vision. There were four issues to choose

StarTek opportunity looks favorable

By T.E. Jenkins

BIG SPRING — Officials from Moore Development for Big Spring said Monday negotiations with the computer support corporation StarTek look favorable, with a final "yes or no" coming from the corporate giant at anytime now.

Pam Welch, executive vice president for Moore Development, said the ground floor has been laid in bringing the company, along with an initial 350 jobs, to the city of Big Spring.

"The ball is pretty much in their court right now," Ms. Welch said, who along with Kent Sharp, executive director of Moore Development, will complete their presentation of the matter to the Moore Development board of directors on Wednesday. "For some reason people have gotten the idea that the final decision from StarTek will be here by Wednesday, but that isn't the case.

"We've done everything possible to entice StarTek to Big Spring, and now the decision is theirs. We just have to wait and see, like everyone else."

Ms. Welch said the incentive package has been presented to the corporation, but the courtship between Big Spring and StarTek is still far from over.

"If and when they make the decision to come to Big Spring, that is when the attorneys will take over for the final negotiations," she added. "As we all know, anything can happen at that point, but we feel pretty confident the situation is favorable so far."

"We made it over the first hurdle, which was showing them we had the size and type of workforce that will allow them to be profitable here in Big Spring," Sharp said. "The second hurdle was providing them with a building where they could set up shop, and we've accomplished that.

"We're just at a point now where we have to wait and see what

Opinion: Life's greatest gift is being able to make people laugh

More rambling thoughts ...

— One man's opinion: Life's greatest gift is being able to make people laugh.

— There was a time, and it wasn't all that long ago, when just about everyone, even those who had office jobs, worked at least half a day on Saturday.

Ott

— Just a guess: Most people between the ages of 40 and 55 had parents who faithfully watched The Lawrence Welk Show every Saturday night, occassionally even breaking into an impromptu dance, causing the kids to roll their eyes. The father would then say, "Now, THIS is music."

— I've never had a job that required a uniform, although wearing a tie everyday sometimes feels like one.

— Overheard: "Words have a longer life than deeds." I don't know if that is good or not.

— Also overheard: "Imagination is more important than knowledge." Again, you could debate just how positive those words might be, if indeed they are accurate.

— Thomas Fuller once said, "That which is bitter to endure may be sweet to remember." That one, I like.

— It's true, people who struggle to find something to talk about often turn to the weather. And while we're on that subject, why do people ask the question, "Is it hot enough for you?" when it is 105 degrees outside? Of course, it's hot enough for me, but there's nothing I can do about it, so let's just drop it and talk about something more important.

— They don't make politicians like Bob Bullock anymore.

— Most people, I suspect, have a secret desire to be an outlaw of sorts. Not a real bad one, mind you, just a little bit shady.

— It always gives me the creeps to have to handle a pencil that another person has been chewing on.

— When traveling long distances, no companion is better than an irritating companion.

— It was Jane Austen, as I recall, who wisely noted, "Those who do not complain are never pitied." Of course, it can be overdone.

— It has been suggested that there is no such thing as "pure pleasure," but eating anything with gobs of cream gravy poured on top of it comes pretty darn close.

— Being labeled "a loser" might be the ultimate putdown.

— All things considered, I think it was better, and far more exciting, when parents didn't know the gender of their child until he, or she, was actually born.

— On many occasions, it seems to me, people, even those with the best of intentions, have a tendency to NOT practice what they preach.

— Great title for a book, especially one written by Jerry Jeff Walker: "Gypsy Songman."

— It can be terribly frustrating when it suddenly dawns on you that, yes, "the handwriting really is on the wall," and it does not contain good news for you.

— Too bad that in the real world things like good luck charms and four-leaf clovers don't have magical powers.

— It is hard not to make a sound of approval — almost a purring noise — when biting into something that tastes especially good, particularly if it is a sweet of some kind.

— And today's final quote comes from Tom Peters, who once said, "Advantage comes not from the spectacular or the technical. Advance comes from a persistent seeking of the mundane edge."

Police Reports

Double shooting

BIG SPRING — Even though one of the victims in Friday's double shooting was an officer for a local correctional center, suspects sought by authorities do not face charges of capital murder, officials said.

Javier Navarro, 22, and Antonio Miguel Armijo, 20, were shot to death in the 1000 block of Johnson Street. Their assailants have not been found as of Monday, said Steve Wright, detective with the Big Spring Police Department. No warrants have been issued.

Authorities say that Navarro was an officer at the Flight Line Unit, but was off-duty at the time of his death. Capital murder charges only apply when an officer is killed in the line of duty, Wright said.

Armijo's death comes less than a year after he was involved in a stand-off with police. Last November, Armijo was arrested after shooting up a body shop. He was upset with a price for repairs and threatened the shop's workers.

He barricaded himself with his father in his father's residence on Gunter Street. He surrendered four hours later.

Police have declined to discuss a motive in Friday's shooting. Wright said arrests probably won't be made immediatley.

Midland Police Department Monday

Burglary: James Dormandy of 4402 reported the 11 a.m. burglary of his parked vehicle. The police report did not indicate if anything was taken.

Theft: Wheels and tires were stolen from a vehicle at 3411 Sinclair, reported Patrick Channeu. The items were valued at over $2,000.

Midland County Sheriff's Office Monday

Vandalism: Eva Urias reported a complaint of vandalism to plants and yard items at 1304 W CR121.

Theft: An air compressor was stolen from the yard at 5403 E. CR83, Jackie Revilla reported at 3:10 p.m.

Anyone having information concerning these incidents should contact the Police Department at 685-7108 or Crime Stoppers at 694-TIPS.

STARTEK: Company says that Big Spring has made the grade

(From 1B)

StarTek's decision will be. The ball is in their court."

Kevin Cory, director of human relations for StarTek, said from a human resources point of view, Big Spring has made the grade.

"One of the most important aspects of opening a new center like this is to establish there is an available workforce to get things going, and keep them going," said Cory while in Big Spring. "The job fair put on by Moore Development has certainly established that the workforce is here, and that's why I made the recomendation to come here."

Ms. Welch said although a final answer from the corporation was expected sooner, there are just some things that are out of their control.

"We have to work on their time, and they have a lot of things going on to worry about," she said. "I'm sure we will know something from them as soon as they have time to make their decision."

not signal the end of his working with young people.

Some might ask whether he has accomplished all of his lifetime dreams. "With a family like mine, and a community to work in as I have, I couldn't have had a more perfect life."

What impresses many is his uncanny ability to remember every player that he has ever worked with. He admits "that he doesn't forget faces, but I can't always remember names." In reality, he more than likely remembers not only the name, but the injury, the family, and the background of the individual.

One of his most exciting trips as a trainer was one to the 1972 Olympic Games in Munich. He was the only high school trainer selected. Tragically, a few of the athletes who he performed physicals on were killed in the events that ensued, putting a damper on the experience.

When he returned, it was questioned how he could return to high school students after working with world-class athletes. But he thinks that the athletes of West Texas are the finest around.

Besides that, high school athletes still have innocence, unlike "so many spoiled professional athletes," he said.

"The biggest thrill I have is watching the young people grow up and become citizens. Knowing that I had a small part in their lives means a great deal to me."

Barbara Koch and daughter, Laura, a current member of the Midland High basketball team, are one example of two generations of a family who he has worked with. "Actually, my dad has knee problems, so Doc has worked with several generations of us," Mrs. Koch points out.

Miss Koch is impressed with Dodson, saying "The fact that he volunteers his time at no charge to high school athletes, it's really admirable that he would do that. There are a lot of people who would pay for that kind of thing."

Mrs. Koch recalls that Dodson was best friends with David Kent, her tennis coach, so he hung around the tennis courts quite often. "The neatest thing about Doc is that he's one of those people who remembers everybody's name, where he knew you from, and why he knew you. He just genuinely cares about everybody he knows."

She recounts that his little girls would wear MHS cheerleader outfits, as he was "a Bulldog through and through."

Mrs. Hullender remembers high school as being kind of funny. "He'd come in and get me out of my second period class to say hi, because he left so early in the morning," she said.

He even watched her drive off on senior skip day. "I didn't always have a lot of dates because I think everybody was afraid to pick me up with Dad there," she comments.

At times he can drive through town and look at the homes, revealing the name of the former resident and their family. Once during a trip to Rome, Dodson saw and recognized a former student, she said.

"The reason people like him is that they feel so good that he's going to remember who they are and make them feel important. He's just like a magnet to people," Mrs. Hullender said.

As to his astounding memory, Mrs. Hullender thinks it comes from the "way he gives to people and really cares. The first thing he asked for when he started working with (Southwest Orthopedic Center) was (time to work with) his freebies in the morning from 5 to 8 a.m.

"These awards are so neat and he appreciates them, but his main thing is he loves people; that's where he gets his reward, when he makes people smile. He's the kind of guy who can make a town like Midland feel like a small town."

City Councilman Juluis Brooks said that Dodson was an obvious choice for receiving the award. "He's a man who has really taken care of the athletes. There have been thousands who have been through the doors of his office. He's the type of person who cares about everybody. I can't explain in words what he's meant to the city of Midland."

Man dies in fight along Interstate 35

SAN MARCOS (AP) — An Indiana motorist apparently was beaten to death after confronting the occupants of two other cars along Interstate 35, sheriff's deputies said.

Dave Starr, 40, of Kendallville, Ind., died on the highway shoulder just outside San Marcos on Friday night, according to police. No arrests had been made by Monday, the Hays County Sheriff's Office said.

Autopsy results on Starr's cause of death were pending Monday, but officials believe he suffered blunt force trauma.

Starr was driving a construction company van with three passengers when he pulled over to the side of the road and got out. It wasn't clear why he pulled over.

A pickup truck with three men pulled in front of the van and a car with three or four men stopped behind it, officials said.

"There was some type of altercation between them and the occupants of two other vehicles," Sgt. Allen Bridges said. "The people in the van from Indiana have varying degrees of what happened because there was so much going on."

WILD: Expert says rescuing young wild thing is 'in effect' signing animal's death warrant

without first obtaining a permit from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department are committing an illegal act.

For licensed wildlife rehabilitators Bebe McCasland and Melanie Gambrell, every season has its hardships, but late spring and early summer are the worst. This is the time when young wildlife begins to emerge from the close scrutiny of parents.

Ms. McCasland, who is both federally and state-licensed, said that with more and more city dwellers moving to the edge of open land, coupled with the corresponding destruction of wildlife habitat, the problem of "orphaned" wildlife has increased drastically. Every year the number of animals coming to the rehabilitators increases.

"People just don't realize that when they rescue a young wild thing, they're in effect signing the animal's death warrant," she said, adding that simply being held and fondled by humans can sometimes be fatally stressful. "Then the next thing most people do is try to feed the animal food out of the refrigerator. And that would be fine if they had some mice, or crickets in the refrigerator, or special formula, not cow's milk.

"Animals need to eat what they eat in the wild. They also need a place to exercise, to gain strength and flight ability, and the strength and ability to find and kill food. As licensed rehabilitators, Melanie and I have the responsibility of seeing that the animals brought to us go back where they belong. That's our primary job."

Although Ms. McCasland's license covers a broad spectrum of wildlife, since she lives in town, she concentrates on birds, which are federally protected. To provide birds in rehabilitation with a safe place to learn to fly and hunt, she works with the South Plains Rehabilitation Center in Lubbock, where there are large flight areas available.

"A bird cannot be released until we know that it is self-feeding and able to fly and evade other predators, including other birds."

Ms. Gambrell's state license covers the handling of mammals in Texas; however, as an agent under Ms. McCasland's license, she can also receive and care for birds under federal jurisdiction. Ms. McCasland lives in the country, where rehabilitated animals can more easily return to the wild.

Wednesday, 2 P.M. — The women have met at Ms. Gambrell's pet grooming shop, where a great horned owl is resting in a covered, sequestered cage after being picked by Ms. Gambrell from a manufacturing yard at Big Spring's industrial park. The owl, an adult, is able to fly short distances but was apparently unable to gain enough altitude to get over the high fence of the yard. When plant personnel found it, they contacted Texas Parks and Wildlife's Big Spring game warden, Wayne Armstrong, who called Ms. Gambrell, since Ms. McCasland was on another call.

"There could be a number of reasons for this," says Ms. McCasland. "He may have been poisoned. Birds are constant victims of herbicide and insecticide poisoning. Their diet consists of things we poison for, and often they are caught in aerial sprays, which can blind or kill or sicken them. We'll just have to keep him quiet, observe him, feed him the proper diet, and see if he makes it."

As the two women remove the sheet and open the cage door, the owl begins to snap its jaws, a loud percussive sound that echoes in the narrow hall, and spreads its wings. To calm it down and for ease in transferring to the box Ms. McCasland uses to transfer it to her vehicle, they wrap it gently in a towel. Both are wearing thick leather gloves.

"This guy has the strength to tear your finger off," says Ms. McCasland. "When he flies, he's absolutely silent. He's one of the few predators who will kill a skunk. He also eats rabbits and mice."

Also in a box on their way back to her house are two young kestrels, or sparrow hawks.

"These kestrels will eat mice, too," she explains. "They're too young to eat them whole yet, so I have the pleasure of mincing mice."

Just as the owl gets settled in his box and the menacing clack of his jaws quiets, the baby raccoons begin to stir and stretch. Soon their cries are bouncing off the walls of the narrow room.

"This is one reason people soon realize they've made a mistake after they've adopted a baby coon," explains Ms. Gambrell. "They are so cute, and they are one of the few wild animals that can adjust, but they are really demanding. And then as they grow older, they're into everything, and they can be quite destructive. I have to hold them now, in order to feed them, but as soon as they can eat by themselves, I'll have to teach them that they are wild.

That's hard to do, especially when you've bottle-fed them, but their lives depend on being wild. They've got to learn they can't trust humans.

Thursday, 8 A.M. — The great horned owl has died. And now Ms. McCasland receives another call from the manufacturing yard. A second owl is caught in the confines of the yard.

"Maybe we'll have better luck with this one," says Ms. McCasland. "You can't win them all."

TANZANIA: Petersen says giving just a little helps a whole lot

from, Petersen said. He wrote about the issue of hunger and what points he would make about hunger to the American people if he were a spokesman for World Vision.

Petersen touched on the issue of food hunger and the hunger of the Gospel of Jesus, he said. He and his mother, a librarian, researched the background of hunger and used statistics they found to prove that there is hunger in the world.

"Giving just a little helps a whole lot," Mrs. Petersen said. Petersen also said he wrote what people could do about the problem and tied it into "spreading the Gospel overseas."

"As the process was going on, Andrew, at each stage was very excited," said Petersen's father, Gary.

Though he encouraged his son, he said "We kinda wanted him to keep his feet on the ground."

Only four students out of 280 were chosen for the trip.

Petersen will embark on World Vision's seventh study tour Wednesday and will return to the United States July 10. The first stop on the tour is at World Vision headquarters in Seattle, Wash. The next day students and two tour leaders from World Vision will fly to London.

Most students on these tours are between the ages of 14 and 18. "Andrew is the oldest on this trip," said Cathy MacCaul, World Vision spokeswoman.

"Students will spend two days in London to get them used to being in another country, even though London is very different than Africa," Mrs. MacCaul said.

Petersen said that it would be "cool" to take a red bus tour in London.

After their two-day stay in London, the students will fly into Dar es Salaam, the largest city and capital of Tanzania.

"This is really a shock," Mrs. Petersen said. "We're not sure what to take or what to pack."

In order to prepare for the foreign country, World Vision provided each of the students with notebooks containing information about the land, people and language. English and Swahili are the nation's official languages. The students must learn some basic phrases in order to communicate with Tanzanians.

Petersen said the other American students will each take a backpack full of candy, bubbles and other small trinkets for the Tanzanian children.

They will travel throughout the country, Mrs. MacCaul said.

"They will have the opportunity of seeing agricultural recovery programs and community development programs."

Because World Vision's priorities in Tanzania are to improve health, water and education conditions, Tanzanian World Vision employees will lead Petersen through primary education facilities where he can visit with children in the classrooms, Mrs. MacCaul said.

Petersen said he hopes to share the Gospel with children while touring the country.

Students will stay in the homes of Tanzanian World Vision employees at each project site and will try to put images on-line during their trip.

"They're going to have a true experience of living in the community," Mrs. McCaul said.

She said the students would be surprised at how they are treated in the country.

"The kids are going to be treated like honored guests," she said.

"They (the Tanzanians) know these kids have raised money to help world-wide hunger and they are always very gracious."

Students will attend several ceremonies and town meetings in their honor.

Upon return to their hometowns, these students will be spokesmen for World Vision. According to Mrs. MacCaul, students will speak to local organizations about what World Vision's purpose is.

Petersen said he would like to speak to his church about his experience in Tanzania.

Petersen said that "hunger and God" were the foundation for his involvement in the World Vision 30 Hour Famine.

"That is the driving force behind the trip," he said. "I wouldn't have applied if I didn't feel called to do it."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Tuesday, June 22, 1999:

Approach self-expression more creatively this year. Sometimes your own issues interfere with clear communication. Take time to go within and reflect. Understand yourself; then answers will come forward. Your ability to empathize adds to your popularity and your success. If you are single, you might find that once you conjure up your dream person, you become ambivalent. Could this possibly have interfered with past relationships? If attached, vulnerability, learning new communication styles and openness combine to deepen your relationship. You could have it all! LIBRA can be difficult to get an answer from.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Confusion surrounds you. However, your sense of humor carries you through. Your laughter is contagious. Another has high energy, and he helps you past difficult moments. Your vitality surges as a result. Listen and gather feedback. Tonight: Heat up the night.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Maintain a high work ethic. Stay centered, even when others are losing it left and right! Maintain a sense of humor, comb through information, confirm facts. Sort through another's opinion or even your own. Work on basics and be adaptable, and you'll succeed. Your energy needs direction. Tonight: Working late.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Loosen up; don't get locked into a rigid point of view. Your ability to get to the bottom of problems makes you a winner. Move past initial frustration. Your present ingenuity is unusual — even for you! Charge into problems; be determined to find the right solutions. Tonight: Whooping it up!

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Misunderstandings could cause you to regroup. Think through key decisions. On some level, they could be more costly than anticipated. You can't be too careful when dealing with others. Pinpoint what you want, then be willing to put in the hours to get it. Tonight: Happy at home!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Stay in touch with others, though getting through to them takes a lot of talent. Your positive attitude helps you over today's misunderstandings. Others aren't trying to give you a hard time. High energy and vitality merge. Though not intending to, you may say something a bit sharp. Tonight: At a favorite spot!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Financial matters need extra care; take control. A misunderstanding can come from nowhere. Listen carefully to feedback. You might not always agree with others, though how you convey this can make or break the situation. Tonight: Indulge yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ You are a force to behold — incisive, clear and direct. Others could feel that you have a hard edge. Be open to a softer style — at least for today! Clear up a misunderstanding at work. Confirm meetings; make sure everyone is hearing the same thing. Tonight: It's your call!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ Understand that news from a distance is not complete. Listen to feedback; gather more information. No one can do research as well as you can. Use your investigative skills. Anger and frustration come out, if not directed. Take a leadership role. Tonight: Get a good night's sleep — you'll need it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Adventurousness makes you a winner. Allow others to join you in pursuing the same goals. Your sense of humor comes out if jostled, but don't lose focus. Misunderstandings happen way too easily! Don't stand on ceremony or make unusual demands of others! Tonight: Where the gang is.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You are in the limelight; how you channel your energy is key. Others could cause problems, mainly because they can't or won't hear you. Be direct and confirm plans. Introspection helps you understand a boss or a supervisor. Wouldn't you do the same, if you were in his shoes? Tonight: A must appearance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ An overview helps you gain understanding. Walk in another's shoes. Understand more of what makes people tick. You make friends because of your insightful manner and your sense of direction. Tonight: Visit over Chinese food.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Close relating, combined with your desire to get to the root of problems, helps you get past any immediate obstacles. You may need to say something in more than one way. Tonight: Go for unity.

The bidding:

2♠	Pass	4♠	Pass

Opening lead: Nine of ◇

What is the best lead from three low cards in the suit? Some years ago, top of nothing was the accepted practice. However, leading the high card could prove expensive later in the play, or might give away too much information. West's choice on this hand was crucial.

The deal is from a team match, and both pairs reached a contract of four spades on identical auctions. Once North raised spades, South wasted no time in getting to game.

At the table where West led the nine of diamonds, South concluded that the king was with East. Declarer won the opening lead with dummy's ace and drew trumps in three rounds before leading the queen of clubs. Declarer was a tempo ahead, and the third club was set up for a heart discard before the top hearts could be removed. When the king of diamonds turned up in the East hand as expected, declarer lost only two clubs and a diamond.

At the other table the lead was a low diamond. Since it was quite plausible that the king was with West, declarer could not afford to rise with the table's ace, since that risked losing two tricks in each minor. South played a low diamond, and East made the most of the opportunity.

The defender shot up with the king of diamonds and shifted to ace and another club. West won with the king and returned a club for East to ruff away dummy's winner in the suit. Although declarer overruffed, there was no way to avoid losing a heart trick for down one.

Prince William rubbed out, digitally

LONDON — When the wedding photographer said "smile," Prince William didn't.

So Prince Edward ordered his nephew's unsmiling image digitally removed from the official photograph of family members attending his wedding Saturday to Sophie Rhys-Jones and swapped with an image of the young prince looking a bit more cheerful.

"Prince Edward said he didn't think Prince William looked absolutely his best, so digitally we were able to put in another picture of Prince William from one of the other shots where he is smiling and laughing," photographer Geoffrey Shakerley told ITN on Monday.

William turned 17 on Monday and received a car, the palace said. A palace spokesman refused to reveal what kind of car, except to say it was a "sensible" vehicle, not a sports car. British media reported it was a Volkswagen Golf.

NEW YORK — A judge threw out a $100 million lawsuit filed by a man who claims Jerry Seinfeld and his TV producers stole his identity for the character of George Costanza.

State Supreme Court Justice Harold Tompkins said Michael Costanza's suit was frivolous.

Costanza, a real estate agent who lives on Long Island, said his rights were violated when the show used his "name, likeness and persona" to create the neurotic and nutty George for "Seinfeld."

Costanza said the show portrayed him in a negative, humiliating light, and that "Seinfeld" co-creator Larry David defamed him when he called Costanza a "liar" and "flagrant opportunist" trying to cash in.

Tompkins said he found the lawsuit baseless and assessed sanctions of $2,500 each against Costanza, 43, and his lawyer, Jonathan Fisher.

SEOUL, South Korea — Michael Jackson arrived in South Korea on Monday for a concert to benefit needy children.

Mariah Carey, Boyz II Men and Elizabeth Taylor will join the pop star for the four-hour show on Friday in Seoul.

It will be Jackson's second concert in Seoul. His 1996 performance drew tens of thousands of fans.

Tickets this time are selling for up to $250 a seat, compared with up to $66 for local performers. Cheil Communications, the promoter, said about 60 percent of the 60,000 seats have been sold.

LAS VEGAS — Marilu Henner is headed for Las Vegas via Chicago.

Henner opens July 6 in the lead role of Roxie Hart in the stage musical "Chicago." She replaces Chita Rivera, who will be moving to London to star in the production there.

Henner has played the role on Broadway.

LOS ANGELES — The license of Monica Lewinsky psychologist Irene Kassorla, once described as "shrink to the stars," has been placed on probation.

The state Department of Consumer Affairs on Monday cited "repeated negligent acts" that included failing to keep notes on therapy sessions. Kassorla also admitted to referring a patient to her husband for a business consultation.

No further details of the charges were disclosed.

Kassorla agreed to a settlement that calls for an immediate three-year license probation. Kassorla must complete an ethics course and repay the state $6,000 in costs. A receptionist said she was on vacation in Turkey.

Kassorla, who counseled Ms. Lewinsky from 1992 through 1997, was told by Ms. Lewinsky about her sexual relationship with Clinton. She testified that Ms. Lewinsky suffered from depression and low self-esteem.

Kassorla has written several books and makes numerous television and radio talk show appearances.

Cisneros' ex-mistress takes the stand to discuss secret tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for former Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros sought Monday to keep prosecutors from using tapes secretly recorded by his ex-mistress, saying they constitute "tampered, inauthentic evidence" that shouldn't be allowed at his upcoming conspiracy trial.

"The tapes shouldn't come in," said Barry Simon, a member of Cisneros' legal defense team. "The bottom line is the government has advised the court already ... they were tampered with. End of story."

Prosecutor Mark Jackowski acknowledged that Linda Jones had deleted portions of her taped phone conversations with Cisneros, editing out passages where she threatened him or that dealt with their sex life or other people. But Jackowski said the tapes are "relevant evidence."

"She just edited out these offensive passages or what she believed to be offensive passages," Jackowski said, adding that she destroyed the originals after making copies.

He said only five of the 33 tapes the government intends to use at Cisneros' September trial were altered. The independent counsel's office wants to use the tapes to corroborate witness testimony that the former Cabinet member conspired with his one-time lover to conceal more than $264,000 in "hush money" payments to her.

Ms. Jones, who ran afoul of the Cisneros prosecutors and was put in prison in part because she misrepresented the tapes as originals, took the witness stand Monday. She provided details about the extramarital affair and her decision to begin taping Cisneros, on the advice of a friend, after the highly publicized liaison ended.

As Cisneros came under consideration for a Cabinet post and spoke with advisers to Bill Clinton in late 1992, Ms. Jones said she became increasingly worried that the payments would cease. She said Cisneros told her that Clinton officials in Little Rock, Ark., had cautioned him the support "looked like hush money, blackmail."

'I was just very insecure about everything. I knew at that point in time Henry could care less about me. He was focused on getting to Washington.'

— Linda Jones

"I was just very insecure about everything," she testified. "I knew at that point in time Henry could care less about me. He was focused on getting to Washington."

Ms. Jones, 50, said she was "devastated" by media reports in the fall of 1988 of her affair with Cisneros, then mayor of San Antonio. Her husband filed for divorce and the publicity cost her her career as a political fund-raiser, she said. "No one was going to hire me because I was the story," she said.

Ms. Jones said she and Cisneros, who was not in court, began to discuss financial support for her after he returned to his wife in late 1989. "I didn't have a way to support my daughter and I didn't see a way to do it," she said. Later, she added: "He knew all of the press stories were his fault."

She is serving a 3 1/2-year prison sentence at a federal medical facility in Fort Worth, Texas after pleading guilty last year to 28 counts involving fraud, conspiracy, money laundering and obstruction. The office of David Barrett, the government's special prosecutor, has suggested a willingness to support a reduction in her sentence and dismiss two pending counts depending on her level of cooperation at Cisneros' trial.

Cisneros, who served as HUD secretary from 1993 to 1996, was indicted in December 1997 on 18 felony counts of conspiracy, obstructing justice and making false statements to the FBI about his payments to Ms. Jones. He has pleaded innocent.

Although he acknowledged providing financial support, prosecutors contend he falsely told the FBI during his Cabinet background check that he never paid her more than $2,500 at one time or more than $10,000 annually. The indictment alleges that he paid her more than $264,000 between 1990 and 1993, in installments as high as $15,000.

DEAR ABBY

Kids visiting dad turn to mom for airfare

DEAR ABBY: I am an airline employee and have the privilege of giving my children (over age 25) discount airline passes. I am divorced, and their dad lives in Oregon. He is very wealthy.

Anderson

My children have asked for passes to visit him this summer. Abby, the cost will come out of my paycheck, amounting to $300. Also, these passes are standby, which means they may or may not get on the airplane. It seems to me that if he wants to see his children and grandchildren, he should pay for the airline tickets so that they will have assured seats on whatever flight they take.

How can I communicate this to my children without any hurt feelings or animosities? I have a good relationship with them, and I'd like to keep it that way. — IN A BIND IN TEXAS

DEAR IN A BIND: Explain your position to your children as you explained it to me. Tell them of the very real possibility that some of their party will be "bumped" if they try to fly using your passes, and that the cost of them will put you in a financial bind. Therefore, their father should be a good grandpa and spring for the tickets, since he can well afford to.

DEAR ABBY: I recently read in your column about children running wild in a restaurant. This situation is familiar to me because I am a server at a five-star resort.

Abby, I'm not against children — I have two of my own — but I strongly object to children running freely in a busy establishment.

Children are in real danger when they run loose in a restaurant. The trays we carry can weigh upward of 20 pounds when loaded with hot entrees, and the coffee in the pots would most definitely scald a child. Also, a server could be seriously injured were he or she to stumble over a child.

Of course, the parents would never admit the child caused the accident; servers are always made out to be the bad guys. I blame the parents for not protecting their children by insisting they sit at the table out of harm's way.

In the interest of child safety (and server safety), please print my letter. — MIKE ALLEN, ALDERSON, W.VA.

DEAR MIKE: I'm pleased to print your letter. In the interest of everyone's safety — including the establishment's — I'm surprised more of them don't post a disclaimer that the restaurant refuses to accept responsibility for injuries to unaccompanied children. It might serve as a reminder to parents who bring small children and then become so engrossed in conversation that they tune their little ones out.

Wise parents make sure they are prepared in advance when taking their child to an "adult" environment. They bring along children's books, paper and crayons to keep the little ones amused, because children have short attention spans and it's unfair to expect them to sit in silence through a long meal.

Parenthood is hard work. It takes patience, diligence and sacrifice to do the job properly. Parents who allow their children to run loose in restaurants are shirking their responsibility.

CASA DE AMIGOS
35th Anniversary

For thirty-five years, Casa de Amigos been making a dramatic impact on the quality of life for thousands in Southeast Midland through its mission of Helping People Help Themselves. Casa began in a tiny two-room grocery store building on North Dallas Street in 1964, and provided cooking and sewing classes, preschool activities, English classes, a teen girls and boys club, and a family planning program. It served needy clients who were not affiliated with any church and were not receiving help from any other source. Over the years the agency has experienced steady growth in programs and in the size of the facility.

Joe Mabee

Today, they have four program areas that include Education, Health/Dental Services, Social Services and a Senior Citizens Program. More than 300 Midlanders served every weekday through this curriculum. All ages are touches by Casa: tiny babies whose mothers attend parenting classes; school-age children who receive homework help; adults who attend ESL (English-as-a Second Language) and/or GED classes; and, elderly individuals who are brought in Casa vans each morning to participate in activities and have a hot meal. There are dozens of other classes and services in addition to those above.

The J.E. and L.E. Mabee Foundation gave Casa de Amigos a grant in 1984 to remodel and enlarge their building at corner of Garden Lane and Lamesa Road. And, in 1990 the foundation board was so impressed that it provided a much larger grant that expanded the facility to 18,000 square feet of space. This investment is paying countless dividends in helping people to help themselves. We congratulate Casa de Amigos in its 35th anniversary and salute the hundreds of dedicated volunteers and the fine staff who have made such an outstanding contribution to our community.

Midland RockHounds' Jeff DaVanon (right) slides into second base and breaks up a double play attempt by El Paso's Junior Spivey in Monday's game, which the 'Hounds won 9-5.

Huge eighth carries 'Hounds

■ Midland overcomes seven scoreless innings with nine runs in eighth to beat El Paso 9-5.

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

What started off as a pitching duel on Monday turned into another wild and wacky affair at Christensen Stadium.

At least this time it turned out in the Midland RockHounds favor.

Down 5-0 going into the bottom of the eighth, the RockHounds offense got into a contagious mode and rallied for nine runs on seven hits and three Diablo errors in the frame to post a 9-5 come-from-behind victory.

"It tells you a lot about our team," said Midland manager Tony DeFrancesco about the 'Hounds rally inning. "We've got a lot of pride over here and we can break out at any time. I was surprised that we were shut out until the eighth inning with the way we've been swinging the bats lately. Nine runs in one inning is tough to do. It was kind of exciting to watch that."

The 'Hounds being shut out until the eighth was due in large part to the pitching of El Paso starter Eric Knott, who shut down the 'Hounds for more than six innings. Knott was knocked out of the game in the seventh inning when Tim Garland hit a liner back to the mound. The ball hit Knott in the collarbone area and he went down in obvious pain. Knott was able to get up after a short time to the applause of the Christensen Stadium crowd. The report received from the Diablos clubhouse was that Knott should be all right, but he was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital for precaution.

"The first kid they had out there, Eric Knott, was pitching a heck a game and it was unfortunate the way he had to come out of the game," DeFrancesco said.

"(Knott) threw great pitches," said Midland third baseman Adam Piatt. "He was making pitches consistently and he didn't make too many mistakes. The few mistakes he did make, we weren't able to capitalize on it. He did a great job. Hopefully he's OK."

Matching up with Knott was Midland starter Luis Vizcaino who kept the 'Hounds in the game by pitching six solid innings of his own. El Paso scored a run off Vizcaino in the second inning when Adam Neubart reached with a double and then scored on a single by Julius Matos. After that run, Vizcaino retired the next 14 of the 17 Diablo batters he faced.

"(Vizcaino) had been having trouble with his nail in each outing and today he came up with a blood blister," DeFrancesco said. "That's something we've got to keep an eye on. He battled through it, made some quality pitches and went six solid innings."

NBA FINALS

New York's now back with hope

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — The NBA Finals aren't boring anymore, and the San Antonio Spurs no longer look invincible.

Behind 34 points from Allan Houston in one of the best games of his career, the New York Knicks defeated San Antonio 89-81 Monday night in Game 3, cutting their deficit to 2-1 in the best-of-7 series and handing the Spurs their first loss in 41 days.

The Knicks never trailed, never let the Spurs' numerous comebacks rattle them and played what was easily their best all-around basketball of the series in the comfort zone of Madison Square Garden.

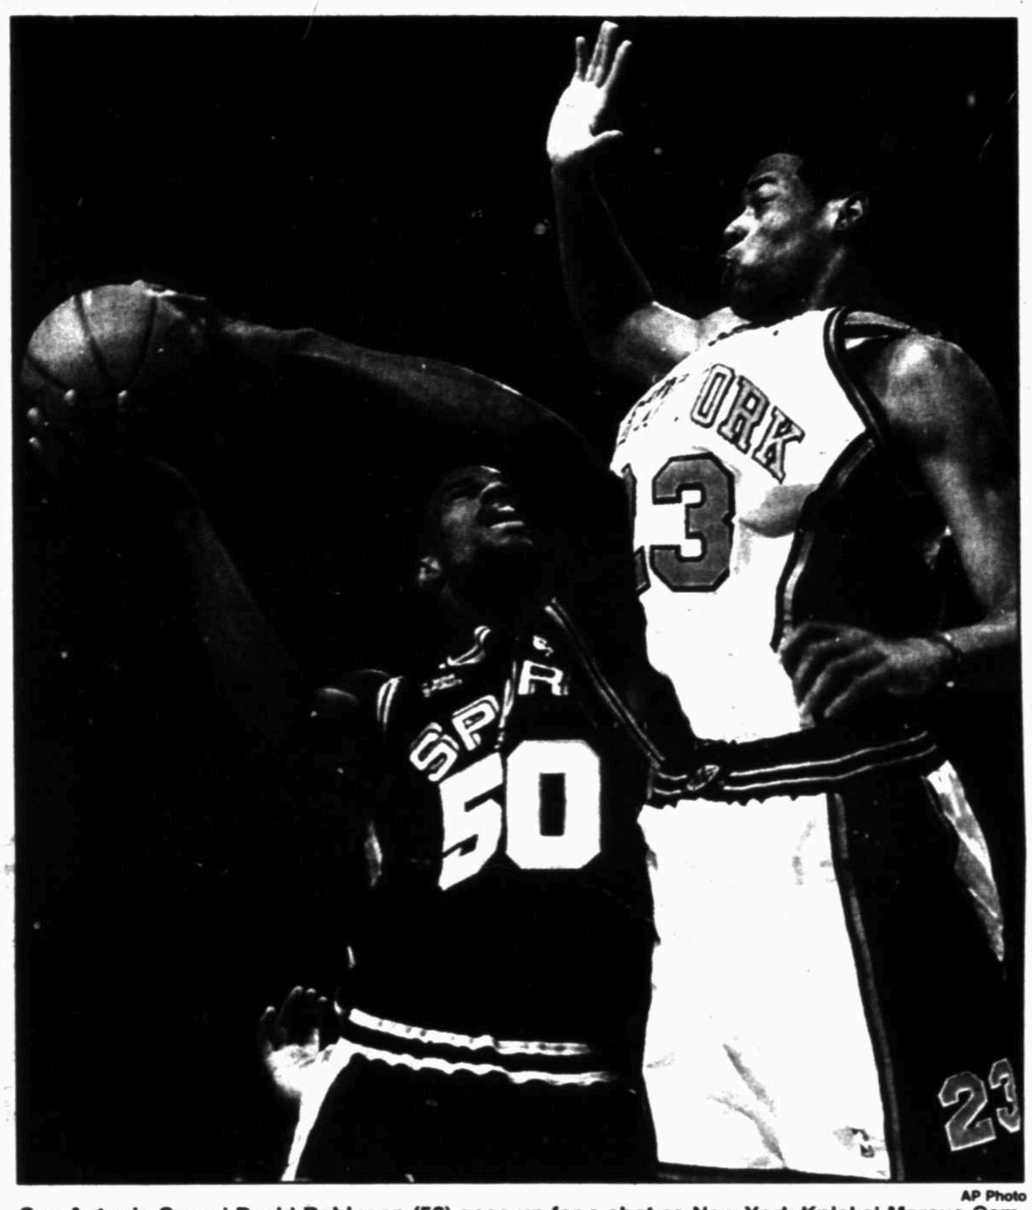

"Our true character was tested tonight, because this is first time in the playoffs that we lost the opener on the road and lost two in a row," Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy said. "You saw the true character of the Knicks. We hung in there when they were making runs and we were very resilient."

It was San Antonio's first loss since Game 2 of the first round back on May 11, and it ended the Spurs' NBA-record postseason winning streak at 12 games.

Game 4 is Wednesday night, and another victory by New York could make this once-lethargic, low-rated series as compelling as any. To do so, the Knicks will need another night like the one they got from Houston — an inspired display of clutch shooting on jumpers, drives and foul shots.

"Allan really had it rolling tonight," Van

NHL won't use replay on goals

■ League won't review videotape goals in crease even after Stanley Cup controversy.

By Ken Rappoport
AP Hockey Writer

NEW YORK — Less than two days after the Stanley Cup finals ended in controversy, the NHL said it will no longer use videotape replays to decide disputed goals when a player is in the crease.

Commissioner Gary Bettman said Monday's rule change had nothing to do with the goal scored by Brett Hull that won the Stanley Cup for Dallas against Buffalo in triple overtime early Sunday. The Sabres, who lost the game 2-1, said a replay showed that Hull's goal should have been disallowed because his skate preceded the puck into the crease before he shot it past Dominik Hasek.

Bettman said the league was more concerned the game would lose some of its spontaneity when play is stopped for a video review of a goal. He said the video replay situation had been discussed by the league's Board of Governors about a week before the controversial Game 6.

"We're relying too much on replay" for goal decisions, Bettman said.

Bettman said the man-in-the-crease rule will stay in place, but on-ice officials will decide whether goals count — without using replays. The rule usually disallows a goal if an offensive player has any part of his body in the goal crease.

Videotape replay will remain in use for all other existing circumstances, such as if the puck has crossed the goal line, if it is in the net prior to the goal frame being dislodged, or if it is in the net before time has expired.

Other than saying "the absolute right call" was made on Hull's goal, Bettman would not address the Game 6 controversy. He left that up to Colin Campbell, director of hockey operations, and Bryan Lewis, the NHL's supervisor of officials, who planned to discuss the issue at a news conference Tuesday.

"The rule (on Hull's goal) was absolutely, correctly applied," Bettman said. "Everyone understands it was the right call."

Buffalo coach Lindy Ruff said after the game that to reverse a goal that decided the title would be a "nightmare" for the league.

Bettman said he was unaware of any official protest by the Sabres.

The official response from the league after the goal was that it didn't matter that Hull had his skate in the crease, but that he had full control of the puck. Lewis said officials looked at the play probably six or eight times.

Stewart's putt will go down in U.S. Open lore

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

PINEHURST, N.C. — The putt was only for par. The distance was just 15 feet, a slight bend to the right.

Given what was at stake, and the history of the man on the green, it might go down as one of the most memorable shots in a major championship.

"When I looked up, it was about 2 feet away from the hole and breaking right into the center of the cup," Payne Stewart said after capturing the U.S. Open on Sunday. "I couldn't believe my eyes. I couldn't believe I had accomplished my dream."

And now that putt on the 18th green at Pinehurst No. 2 — made under the most excruciating pressure golf can offer — takes its place in the game's lore.

Right there with Tom Watson's chip-in for a birdie in the 1982 Open at Pebble Beach. Right there with Gene Sarazen's double eagle in the 1935 Masters. Right there with Ben Hogan's 1-iron into the eighth green at Merion in the 1950 Open.

This was the first time in the 99-year history of the Open that the tournament was won by a putt that long on the 72nd hole. In knocking in that putt, Stewart avoided an 18-hole playoff the next day with Phil Mickelson and provided the Open with one of its most riveting finishes.

"To question his toughness, I don't think would be fair. ... He's going to represent the United States well as our national champion," Mickelson said.

Stewart became only the 13th player to win the U.S. Open at least twice. It also was his third major championship — he won the 1989 PGA Championship and the 1991 U.S. Open.

That's one more than Greg Norman, just as many as Hale Irwin and Nick Price.

"Where it puts me in the golf world is, I'm a pretty good and accomplished player," Stewart said. "Nobody can ever take that away from me, no matter what's been written about me."

Lately, what had been written about Stewart had to do with failure.

Never mind that he won 1991 U.S. Open at Hazeltine by making up two strokes over the last three holes against Scott Simpson, first to get into a playoff, then to win the next day. He failed to put enough pressure on an inexperienced Lee Janzen in 1993. He blew a four-stroke lead against Janzen last year at Olympic Club.

No other player in the history of the U.S. Open — not Hogan, not Bobby Jones, not Jack Nicklaus — had led after any of the first three rounds as much as Stewart. All he had to show for it was one U.S. Open title.

His only victories since then were the Houston Open in 1995, where Scott Hoch virtually handed him the tournament, and in February at Pebble Beach, where the tournament was called after 54 holes because of rain.

Sampras feels good returning to Wimbledon's grass courts

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — A clay pigeon at the French Open as Andre Agassi made history, Pete Sampras fairly danced to the thrill of the grass at Wimbledon with a pirouette on match point of his first-round romp.

Not a ball had been struck on Centre Court since Sampras won his fifth Wimbledon a year ago, and the tattered brown field of that triumph was once again a rich green lawn when he returned Monday. For Sampras, a second-round loser on the dusty red clay of Roland Garros three weeks earlier, the sight and smell of all that green was almost intoxicating.

"I felt like I was back home on that court," Sampras said after disposing of Australian Scott Draper 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 in a mere 88 minutes. "I couldn't ask for a better start."

On a day when the only upsets were sunshine and a dry sky, Sampras cavorted with the friskiness of a colt let loose in a lush pasture, rollicking from the start and pounding out a dozen aces at up to 130 mph.

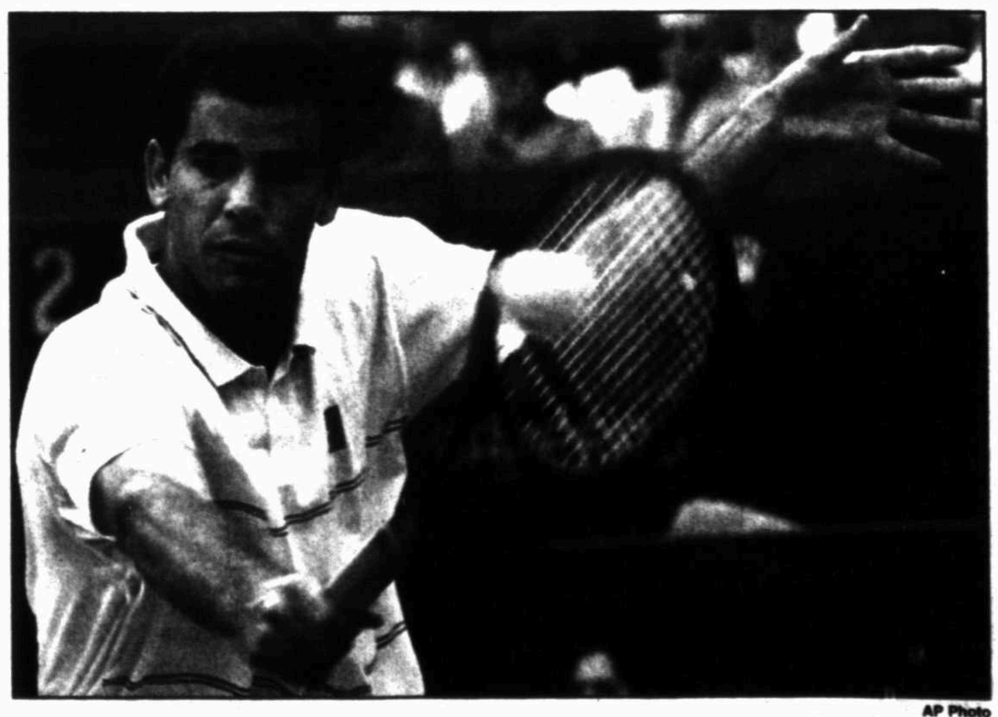

"It's the scene, it's the court," he said. "From the first point on, this is it for me. This is our big event. I was very keyed up and very eager to play well today, really get off to a good start in this tournament."

He leaped to put away an overhead at the start of the last game, powered an ace down the middle, stabbed a volley, and put match point away at love by spinning like a ballet dancer for a backhand drop volley that spun back toward the net. It was classic Sampras, his full repertoire on display.

The victory was also his 15th in a row at the All England Club, where his record since 1993 is 40-1.Sampras presented a much different performance from the one he gave at the French, where he posed an easy target for Andrei Medvedev's passing shots and lobs.

"Whenever I lose at the French, I get back home and I'm disappointed once again," said Sampras, who has never won the French in 10 attempts and has exit-

Stern defends state of NBA

NEW YORK (AP) — David Stern defiantly defended his low-rated finals and lockout-tainted season, even while announcing that a panel will recommend changes to improve the quality of NBA games.

"It was nice to have a season," the commissioner said Monday at his annual NBA Finals news conference. "We think the fans appreciated both the settlement of the collective bargaining negotiations and the fact that teams like San Antonio — the league's smallest market — have an opportunity to continue to compete."

Stern faced a stream of questions about the league's troubles — the huge drop in television ratings for the finals, the trend toward stagnant offenses and low-scoring games, players entering the league at a younger age and the fallout from the lockout.

The news conference was held several hours before the start of Game 3 of the finals between the New York Knicks and San Antonio Spurs.

"Obviously, there is an absence of the world's most famous person, no less that world's most famous athlete, Michael Jordan," Stern said.

FINALS: Spurs how hold 2-1 advantage

(From 1C)

Gundy said. "He has shown an ability to make critical shots. He has made several critical shots down the stretch, and that is a rare quality in this league."

Houston shot 10-for-24 from the field and 12-for-12 from the line as he tied his career playoff high. Latrell Sprewell added 24 and Larry Johnson had 16 for the Knicks, who have played their best all season just when things have looked most bleak.

Nothing would have been as daunting as facing a 3-0 deficit, and the Knicks played like they knew Game 3 was their only chance to give themselves an opportunity to win the series. New York came out fired up, opening a 14-point lead in a first quarter in which the Knicks debuted yet another new starting lineup, replacing Chris Dudley with Marcus Camby.

"We wanted to get off to a great start. In San Antonio, we were always trailing," Houston said. "We just wanted to stay aggressive. We got to the free-throw line tonight. We knew the shots would fall for us."

The Spurs quickly cut into their first-half deficit and finally tied the game midway through the third quarter, but Houston answered with several clutch shots to restore the Knicks' lead.

San Antonio made one final charge in the fourth, but never got closer than four. One big reason was the lack of production from Tim Duncan, who was scoreless in the fourth as he missed all four of his shots.

"(Larry Johnson) did a great job, between him, Kurt Thomas and Chris Dudley they didn't give me the shots I can usually turn and make," Duncan said. "They did a great job throughout."

Duncan finished with 20 points and 12 rebounds, doing little after the Knicks started triple-teaming him. Robinson led the Spurs with 25 points.

San Antonio shot 5-for-18 in the fourth quarter and committed six of its 20 turnovers.

"I don't know what you'd call this tonight," David Robinson said. "Our team absolutely hates to lose, and we always respond well after a loss. Always. Hopefully guys are going to take this personally and come back with some more focus and energy on Wednesday."

New York led 65-62 entering the fourth, and the lead grew to seven in the first minute as Sprewell scored on a difficult drive and Camby had a thunderous dunk off an offensive rebound for his first points of the game. A jumper by Houston gave the Knicks a 10-point lead with 6:31 left, and the score was 80-71 with the clock ticking toward four minutes before the Spurs made their final push.

A three-point play by Robinson and a 3-pointer by Sean Elliott made it 81-77 with 3:13 left, but the threat ended quickly as Houston hit a 20-footer, Mario Elie missed a 3-pointer and Camby converted a short jumper to give the Knicks an 85-77 lead. The Spurs had only one basket the rest of the way.

"We expected some adversity tonight, and we usually respond to that adversity," Robinson said. "We were kind of fighting uphill all night, and we had some opportunities, but they did what we usually do — held off every run and kept their composure."

The Knicks played just about as well as they can in the first 12 minutes, not getting much of a lift from Camby but benefiting from two personal fouls each against Elie and Jaren Jackson, and technicals against Elie and coach Gregg Popovich.

"That had nothing to do with why the game was won or lost," Popovich said.

The technical against Popovich came after the referees waved off a 3-pointer that would have cut New York's lead to 22-15. Instead, the Knicks steadily increased their lead to as many as 14, 32-18 on a 3-pointer by Chris Childs with 8 seconds left in the quarter.

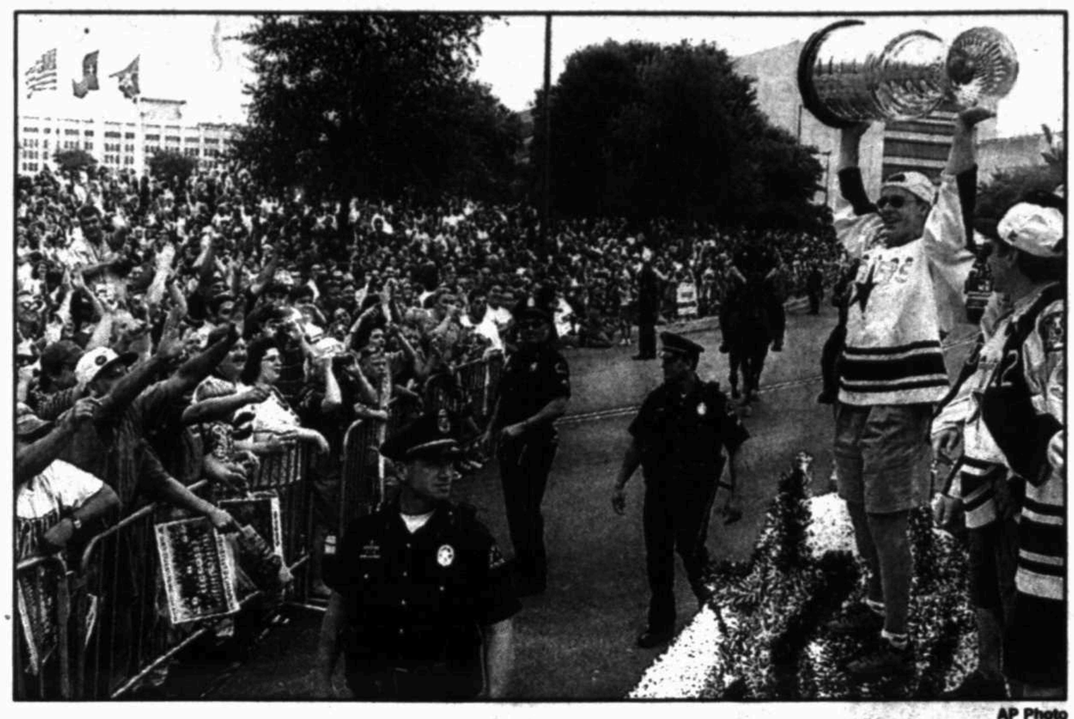

Antonio Daniels hit a 3-pointer just before the first-quarter buzzer, and San Antonio began the second quarter with a 19-10 run to pull within two, 42-40, on a drive by Elliott on which it appeared he traveled.

New York led 49-46 at halftime behind 18 points from Houston, 12 from Sprewell and 10 from Johnson. Robinson had 14 and Duncan 12 for the Spurs.

Camby went to the bench with four fouls early in the third quarter, kicking a chair as he arrived at the bench still scoreless, but Houston hit a pair of jumpers and a pull-up 3-pointer on the fast break — all in a span of 1:01 — for a personal 7-0 run that put New York ahead 56-47. The Knicks then missed their next 11 shots and allowed Duncan to tie it at 58 with 3:31 left in the third.

Houston then hit a 3-pointer as the 24-second clock expired and made two free throws with 1:41 left to reach 30 points, and New York took a 65-62 lead into the fourth.

"Every time we climbed in and could tie it or take the lead, something happened on the court where we couldn't get over the hump," Popovich said.

Dallas honors its shining Stars

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — With a tug of his pant legs, Dallas Stars owner Tom Hicks showed off the perfect symbol of a Texas team winning the Stanley Cup: black boots with the shiny silver trophy emblazoned on each shin.

Forward Dave Reid added to the image by wearing a black cowboy hat throughout a downtown parade on Monday and a Reunion Arena pep rally in honor of the NHL champions.

More than 75,000 people lined the streets for the parade. They saw the players ride by on four floats, the final one carrying the Cup.

"For them to see a team other than the Cowboys win something is fun," forward Guy Carbonneau said.

Truth is, Dallas fans have loved the Stars ever since they moved from Minnesota in 1993.

"You've been here with us for six years," captain Derian Hatcher, one of three remaining Minnesota North Stars, told the Reunion Arena crowd. "Now we have (the Cup) here and it looks good here. Hopefully, we can build a nice little house for it."

The Stars won the first title in their 32-year history and the first for a team in the Sun Belt early Sunday with a 2-1 triple-overtime victory over the Buffalo Sabres in Game 6. Although a controversy is brewing over the Cup-winning goal scored by Brett Hull while his left foot was in the goalie's crease, there were no references to it Monday.

After a 45-minute parade from City Hall to Reunion Arena, the players were introduced, each walking through a giant star-shaped metal structure.

The last player out was Hatcher, who ushered in the Cup beneath a shower of fireworks and a burning, revolving star. He placed the trophy on a 5-foot pedestal in the center of the stage.

"As long as we've got one of these, why not go for two?" coach Ken Hitchcock said. "Aw, hell, let's go for three!"

Each player got a turn hoisting the Cup and most of them kissed the trophy, Mike Modano doing so several times.

Goaltender Ed Belfour, who was serenaded by cheers of "Eddie! Ed-die!" throughout the hourlong show, savored the Cup the longest. He circled the stage while Hicks, team president Jim Lites and general manager Bob Gainey led a standing ovation.

Fans goaded Belfour into speaking and, with a voice hoarse from 36 hours of celebrating, he thanked the crowd for their support.

"This has been an unbelievable year," said Belfour, who inspired one fan to write "In Eddie We Trust" on the back of a car. "This is a great moment."

The clinching game in Buffalo ended around 12:30 a.m. Sunday — after many fans were asleep and too late to make some editions of the local newspapers. Only about 200 fans made it to the airport to greet the plane at 6:45 a.m. Sunday.

Also taking part in the celebration were the Reunion Arena Zamboni and the heavy metal band Pantera.

Band members are fans of the team and friends with several players. The group pounded out a song featuring only the words "Dallas! Stars!"

HOUNDS: Midland rallies from deficit

(From 1C)

Things started to turn sour for the 'Hounds in the top of the eighth inning when Midland relievers Juan Perez and Andy Kimball started to get into a little trouble. Perez allowed a Kevin Clark double and walked Chip Sell to put two Diablos on. Kimball was brought in and allowed a Matos infield single to load the bases. With two outs, Junior Spivey, cleared the bases and Christensen Stadium with a grand slam that sailed over the left field scoreboard to give El Paso what seemed to be a commanding 5-0 lead.

The 'Hounds responded quickly in the bottom of the eighth inning when Josue Espada, Jeff DaVanon and Adam Piatt loaded the bases. T.R. Marcinczyk then came only a few feet short of responding to Spivey's slam with a double off El Paso reliever Martin Sanchez (2-1) which hit high on the left field wall, scoring two runs and eventually starting the rock n' roll inning for the 'Hounds.

"I was just looking for a certain pitch and I got it, I just drove it hard," Marcinczyk said. "I just got everybody going and everybody came through with clutch hits. Everybody picked it up."

Knowing the offensive potential that the team has, Marcinczyk knew that the 'Hounds would eventually bust out for a big inning.

"I was talking to Adam (Piatt) in the dugout and it was 1-0 but we had three or four chances to score runs. It was really our fault," Marcinczyk said. "Our pitchers did a hell of a job of keeping us in the game."

The other big hit in the inning came from Piatt, who hit a three-run double down the left field line to make it 9-5 in favor of Midland.

"After that grand slam, it gave them (Diablos) the momentum and our hitters did a good job of just getting guys on. I don't think I've ever seen something like that happen," said Piatt who went 3-for-4 with three RBIs and a run scored.

Kimball (6-3) pitched a perfect ninth to get the win.

Marcinczyk said he's been around baseball long enough to see big innings like the one the 'Hounds had but it sure is special when your team is a part of it.

"It always feels good to win a game like that," Marcinczyk said.

NHL: Crease rule to be re-examined

(From 1C)

The rule, which was drawn up to protect goaltenders from injury, has been disliked by many skaters. Many goals have been disallowed even by infractions that are purely incidental to the play, such as a teammate's skate in the crease away from the action.

Campbell "is going to work on the interpretation over the summer," Bettman said.

In other action, the board approved a change in regular-season overtime in hopes of having a better chance to decide games that go past regulation.

When teams are tied after regulation, they will each receive a point in the standings. Then a five-minute overtime period will be held, with each team using four skaters instead of five. A winning team would receive another point.

The format was used by the American Hockey League this season on an experimental basis, and the league was satisfied with the results: Of the 44 games that went into overtime, 27 (or 61 percent) had the ties broken.

The board also approved an increase in the number of games officiated under the two-referee system to 700 from last season's 270.

The governors also approved the expected transfer of ownership of the Washington Capitals to a group composed of Ted Leonsis, Jon Ledecky and Richard Patrick from Abe Pollin.

OPEN: Stewart's putt slays demons

(From 1C)

Stewart said then he wanted to prove he could win over 72 holes. No one can question that now, and Stewart for once doesn't have to answer to anybody.

"What happened last year at the U.S. Open ... all my friends came up and said, 'Boy, you sure tried. It was a great effort. You're a great competitor,'" Stewart said. "I didn't want to hear that, and that motivated me."

After the tournament, Stewart sounded a lot like Nicklaus did before it began.

Nicklaus recalled his first chance to win a U.S. Open. He had a one-stroke lead in the final round at Cherry Hills until he three-putted the next two greens, missed two short birdie putts and watched Palmer charge from behind to win the 1960 U.S. Open.

"Every time you lose, you learn something," Nicklaus said.

Those are words with which Stewart can identify.

"I just think I learned a lot from last year," Stewart said. "If you can learn from defeat, then I think that makes you a much better player."

Now, Stewart shares something else in common with Nicklaus. Only four other players have won the U.S. Open the year after they were runner-up — Alex Smith in 1906, John McDermott in 1911 and Jones twice in the 1920s.

Nicklaus was the last player to replace a sour taste with a sweet victory. That took place in 1972 at Pebble Beach, where the U.S. Open moves next year.

Perhaps Mickelson will learn from his best run at his first major. Mickelson made his U.S. Open debut in 1992 at Pebble Beach, shot a 68 in the first round and then missed the cut with an 81.

Most people figured Mickelson would have won a major by now. After the way he played Pinehurst, it might not be too far off.

"I think it will be interesting to see if I'm able to break through when I get in this situation again," Mickelson said. "And it will be interesting to see how long it takes me to get back in this situation."

SAMPRAS: Defending champ wins

ed from it in the second round four times. "But through time, you've just got to put things behind you. I look at Wimbledon as my next goal."

Sampras came to London early, won a tune-up on grass at Queen's, and found the confidence he'd been lacking in a shaky year. He also regained his No. 1 ranking, and the top seeding at Wimbledon.

Agassi carved a spot for himself in tennis history at the French, becoming only the fifth man — and the first American in 61 years — to complete a career Grand Slam. Sampras has a chance here to claim his own distinction by becoming the first man this century to win a sixth Wimbledon, and the first man in the open era to win a dozen majors.

Australian Roy Emerson holds the record for Grand Slam wins, 12, but all those came in the mid-1960s before the open era of professional tennis began in 1968.

"I'd love to break (Emerson-'s record) one day, and it's something I believe is realistic that I can do in the next couple of years," Sampras said. "But I'm not sitting here putting pressure on myself.

"I need to have goals, but that's a goal I never thought would come true. As a 20-year-old kid, trying to make his mark, I never even thought I'd have won 11 majors by the age of 27. But now that I'm in this position, I'd love to do it."

Going after similar records is Steffi Graf, who is two shy of Margaret Court's mark of 24 Grand Slam singles titles and two shy of Martina Navratilova's record of nine Wimbledon singles titles. Graf, who turned 30 a few days ago, got off to an easy start with a 6-1, 6-4 victory over Ludmila Cervanova.

When Graf won her sixth French Open two weeks ago, she surprised everyone by saying that would be her last appearance at Roland Garros. She won't say now, though, whether this Wimbledon is her last.

"I don't know," she said. "I really don't. It's nothing that I think about right now. It (the French) is something that came in a moment after the finals — and it's nothing that I thought about any earlier than that."

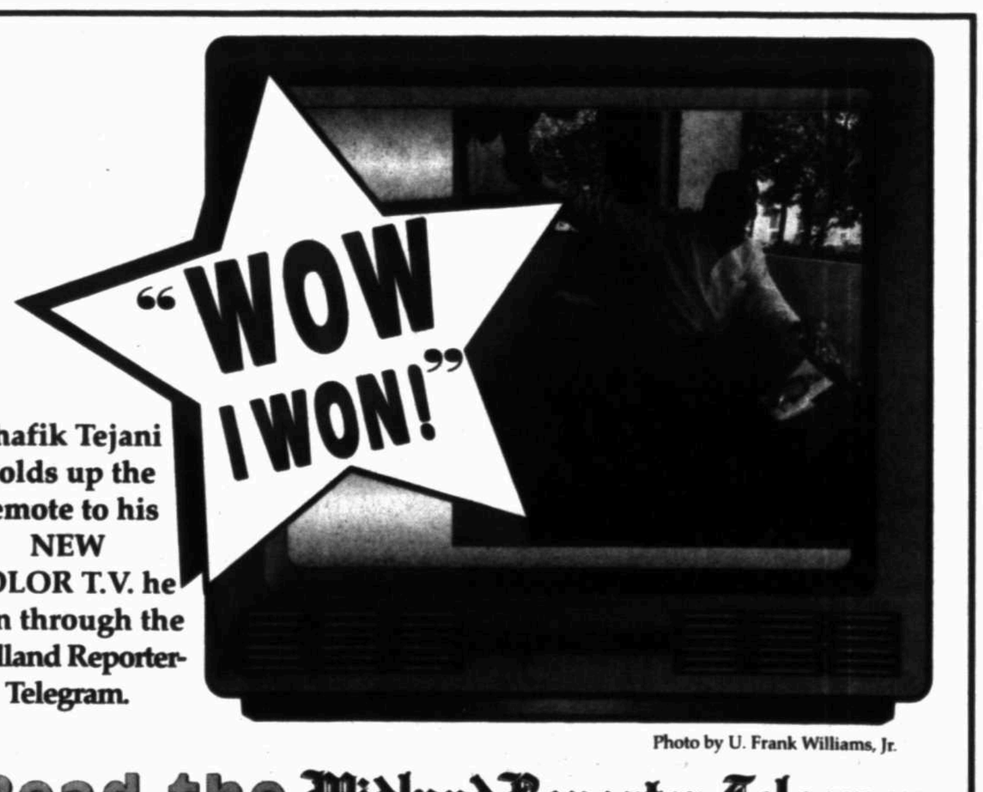

In other women's matches, Monica Seles, seeking the only Grand Slam title to elude her, defeated Cristina Torrens-Valero 6-3, 6-1. Venus Williams beat Miriam Oremans 6-1, 7-5. Anna Kournikova scored a 7-6 (7-2), 4-6, 6-2 victory over Barbara Schwartz, who upset Venus Williams in the fourth round at the French.

A match between Jennifer Capriati and Anke Huber was suspended at 5-5 in the third set because of darkness. Darkness also caused the suspension of a match between men's No. 3 seeded Yevgeny Kafelnikov and Magnus Larsson at 5-5 in the fifth set.

Britons, who have been waiting for a local hero to win the men's title since Fred Perry last did it in 1936, could stay hopeful for at least a couple more days as No. 6 Tim Henman beat Arnaud Di Pasquale in four sets and No. 9 Greg Rusedski downed Jason Stoltenberg in three.

No. 7 Mark Philippoussis, a quarterfinalist last year, served 28 aces in beating Xavier Malisse in four sets.

Associated Press

BOSTON — Ivan Rodriguez is outstanding at throwing out potential base stealers. He threw a ball out into center field Monday night, and it cost Texas the game.

John Valentin followed the error with a go-ahead single, and the Boston Red Sox beat the Rangers 5-4 for their third straight win.

"I double-clutched and threw it away," said Rodriguez, who has led AL catchers in percentage of runners thrown out for four straight years.

With the score 4-all, Jose Offerman walked with one out in the seventh, stole second and continued to third on Rodriguez's third error this season.

"He's human. We all make mistakes," Offerman said. "We're glad that it happened."

Nomar Garciaparra went 4-for-4 with two doubles, two singles and a stolen base, giving him a .382 career batting average against the Rangers.

Boston overcame a 4-2 deficit despite making more fielding mistakes than Texas, which took that lead with three unearned runs in the sixth. The Red Sox made two errors in the game.

Troy O'Leary tied the game with his 14th homer, a two-run shot in the bottom of the sixth off Rick Helling (6-7) after a single by Garciaparra.

"When you make mistakes, usually you don't win," Valentin said. "Obviously, we did make some today but Troy hit a big home run."

And John Wasdin, who started the season in Pawtucket, continued his amazing roll as he improved to 7-0 by allowing two hits in two scoreless innings. Tim Wakefield pitched the ninth to remain perfect in six chances.

■ AL Roundup

Texas lost for the eighth time in its last 10 games against Boston and has just three wins in its last 10 games overall. The Rangers have not topped four runs in nine games since an 8-7 loss to Colorado on June 12.

"We have the capability to score a lot of runs but we're just not doing it right now," Texas manager Johnny Oates said. "With our offense, we'll do better than that."

Helling, who lost for the first time in four career decisions against Boston, gave up five runs — four earned — and nine hits in seven innings. He had allowed just three earned runs in his previous 25 2/3 innings.

But he didn't face Garciaparra in those games.

"There's really no way to pitch to the guy," Helling said of the star shortstop, who trails New York's Derek Jeter by 7,931 votes in fan balloting for the AL All-Star team.

Boston had taken a 2-0 lead in the second on doubles by Garciaparra and O'Leary and a sacrifice fly by Trot Nixon.

Texas got a run in the fifth on Todd Zeile's RBI groundout. An error by Nixon in right advanced Rafael Palmeiro following a double.

Two more Boston fielding mistakes led to the three runs in the sixth off Brian Rose. Royce Clayton was credited with a double when his popup to short right field fell between Nixon and Offerman at second. Clayton took third on Mark McLemore's groundout and scored on a two-base error by Offerman, who let Rodriguez's grounder roll under his glove for his fourth error in five games.

Blue Jays 11, Royals 4

TORONTO — Tony Fernandez raised his major league-leading average to .414, and Shawn Green homered twice and tied a career high with five RBIs to lead the Blue Jays over the Royals.

Toronto, which won for the seventh time in eight games, took a 5-2 lead with five runs in the third. Homer Bush hit his first home run of the season, Green connected for a three-run shot off Chris Fussell (0-4) and Fernandez added a solo homer.

Fernandez, who has an 11-game hitting streak, went 2-for-3 with two walks and has 23 hits in his last 40 at-bats (.575). Joey Hamilton (1-4), got his first AL win, allowing four runs and nine hits in 5 1/3 innings.

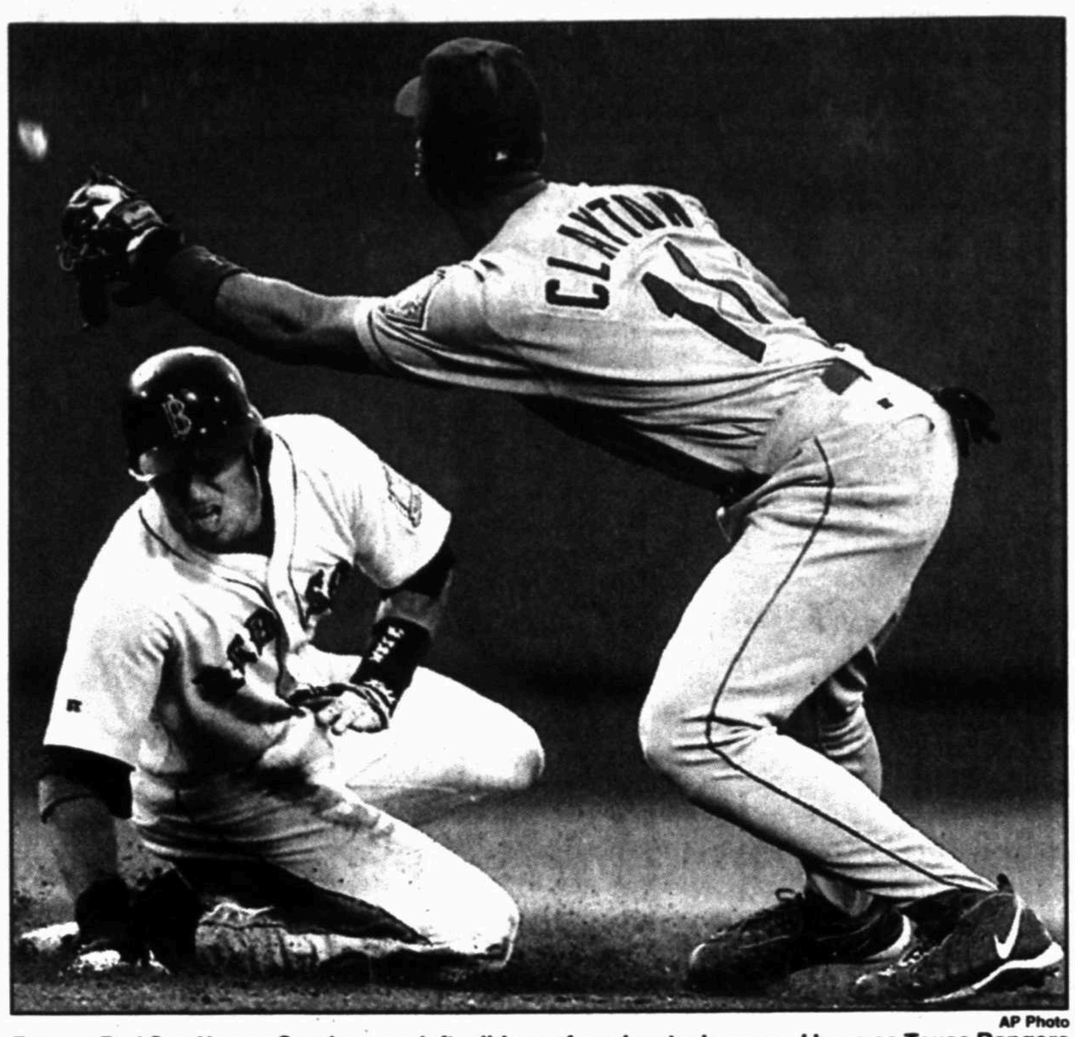

Tigers 13, Athletics 11

DETROIT — Tony Clark hit a three-run homer in the eighth as the Tigers rallied after wasting a 9-3 lead and falling behind 10-9. Juan Encarnacion's double off Brad Rigby (3-2) scored the tying run,

Dean Palmer also homered for the Tigers. Jason Giambi homered twice for Oakland, and Eric Chavez also connected for the Athletics.

Doug Brocail (2-2) pitched a scoreless eighth and Todd Jones finished for his 11th save.

MINNEAPOLIS — Jose Canseco singled to break a 2-all tie in the seventh as Tampa Bay won its third straight.

Ryan Rupe (3-3) allowed two runs — one earned — and four hits in seven innings. Norm Charlton pitched a hitless eighth, and Roberto Hernandez finished the five-hitter for his 20th save in 22 chances.

Rob Radlosky (0-1) was the loser.

CLEVELAND — Jim Thome scored from third on a wild pitch by Jose Mesa (0-2) with one out in the 12th, giving Cleveland its ninth win in 10 games.

With their 27th come-for-behind victory, the Indians improved baseball's best record to 46-21. Steve Karsay (7-1) pitched two innings to win his seventh straight decision.

DeShields on 15-day disabled list

BALTIMORE — Baltimore Orioles second baseman Delino DeShields was placed on the 15-day disabled list Monday with a strained right hamstring.

DeShields strained the hamstring Saturday while beating out an infield hit in the Orioles' 11-9 victory over the Chicago White Sox. He is hitting .274 in 55 games.

McGwire HR leads St. Louis by Astros

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Hours after Mark McGwire said he would never duplicate his 70-homer season, he put on another long-ball show.

McGwire homered for the third straight game, and Kent Bottenfield tied for the NL lead with his 11th win in the St. Louis Cardinals' 5-3 victory over the Houston Astros on Monday night.

McGwire, who began the night a month behind the pace he set in his record season last year, hit his 22nd of the season in the third inning off Sean Bergman (4-4). He's on a pace for 52 home runs.

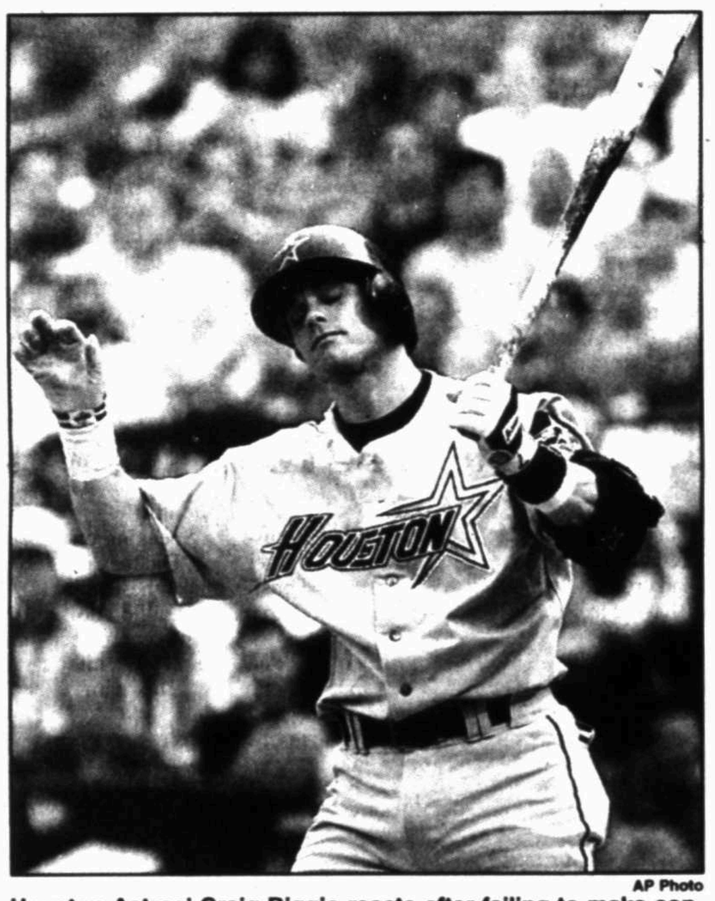

"He's not on 70-pace, but he's right there with the league leaders, and with RBIs too," manager Tony La Russa said. "I'd say he's doing outstanding."

The ball, which put the Cardinals ahead 4-0, cleared Big Mac Land in the upper deck and landed in the second tier, a drive estimated at 473 feet. It was his second-longest homer of the season, behind only a 484-footer that left Dodger Stadium in May.

"I just hit the ball and run; that's what I do," McGwire said. "You guys can talk about (distance). If I hit a ball and it goes over the fence, it's a home run. It doesn't matter if it's 331 or 552 feet."

Bergman didn't think much of his fastball, which went down the middle.

"It was a terrible pitch," he said. "You can't make pitches like that to him. It was an impressive home run."

Bottenfield (11-3), who never before won more than five games in a season, won for the third time in four starts and tied the Astros' Jose Lima for the league lead. After entering the season with an 18-27 career mark, he's starting to think about making the All-Star team.

"I realize there's a chance, but I also realize there's guys with bigger names right there with me," Bottenfield said. "My parents are trying to get vacation time just in case it happens."

Bottenfield allowed three runs — one earned — and four hits in seven innings. He helped himself with a two-run double in the second for his first RBIs of the season.

Ricky Bottalico completed the five-hitter for his 10th save.

Bergman gave up five runs and nine hits in four innings. He's lost three of four starts, allowing 15 earned runs in 20 2/3 innings.

"The only way I can explain it is I pitched terrible," Bergman said.

Brewers 8, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Hideo Nomo extended his mastery of the Giants, allowing five hits in seven innings and driving in a run with a double as the Milwaukee Brewers won 8-1 Monday night to stop San Francisco's five-game winning streak.

Many of Nomo's career highlights have come in San Francisco, where he is 5-0 with a 1.12 ERA.

Ex-Cub Santo has heart attack

CHICAGO (AP) — Former Chicago Cubs third baseman Ron Santo had a mild heart attack Monday and was hospitalized in Denver.

Santo, 59, a color commentator for Cubs' broadcasts on WGN radio, was stricken early Monday at a hotel in Denver, where the Cubs are to start a three-game series with the Colorado Rockies on Tuesday.

"Ron has spoken with members of the Cubs organization, and they say he is in good spirits," Cubs spokesman Benjamin De La Fuente said.

"He's comfortable, alert and resting," hospital spokesman Jeff Schwartz said.

The five-time Gold Glove winner played for the Cubs from 1960-73 and for the Chicago White Sox in 1974. Santo is in his 10th year as a color commentator for the Cubs.

"We are all very concerned," said Steve Stone, who announces Cubs games for WGN-TV. "The best news is that it is termed a mild heart attack."

Doyle resigns

Furr's Supermarkets president and chief operating officer W.R. "Buz" Doyle has resigned his position to pursue other business interests. He had been with the company eight years, serving in his present position since 1993. Jan Friederich, chairman and chief executive officer, will assume the additional duties of president and chief operating officer.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK — The dollar rose against the yen Monday as Japan yet again intervened to prop up its currency and lower the risk of prematurely cutting short any nascent economic recovery.

The dollar also rose against the euro as Italy's prime minister made unsettling remarks that traders thought damaging to the euro.

"It was just a demand for dollars," said Ralph DelZenero, a foreign exchange marketing vice president at First National Bank of Chicago's hometown office.

In late New York trading, the dollar rose to 122.42 Japanese yen from 120.44 yen Friday. The euro was quoted at $1.0345, down from $1.0384.

European Commission President-designate Romano Prodi was reported to say that Italy might have to leave the Economic and Monetary Union because of its economic problems. Already, the European Union has allowed Italy to default on its first-year obligation to lower the debt to GDP ratio.

"The market took it as an undermining of the euro," said DelZenero. When Prodi later tried to clear up his remarks, "the market shrugged off the clarification," DelZenero said.

Stocks slip

NEW YORK — Blue-chip stocks pulled back slightly Monday, but technology shares rallied for a fifth straight session, pushing the Nasdaq market toward its first record high since late April.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished 39.58 lower at 10,815.98 after recovering from an afternoon slide of nearly 100 points.

The Nasdaq composite index jumped 2.6 percent, finishing 66.84 higher at 2,630.28. The index has now rallied 232 points, or nearly 10 percent, in just five sessions, and sits just 22 points from its all-time best close of 2,652.05 set on April 26.

The Dow, which last week gained 365 points, remains about 200 points below its May 3 closing record of 11,014.69. Still, the measure of 30 blue-chip companies holds a surprising gain of more than 1,600 points, or nearly 18 percent, for 1999.

Broader stock indicators were mostly positive Monday, but posted slimmer gains than the tech-dominated Nasdaq market.

Technology shares fell sharply in recent weeks amid fears the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates to slow the economy and contain inflation. But with investors now expecting Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan to seek only a small increase in rates, the discounted prices in the technology group are looking more attractive.

"The conventional wisdom is that interest rates are a done deal, based on what Greenspan said last week" in an appearance before Congress, said Richard Dickson, a market analyst at Scott & Stringfellow in Richmond, Va.

Clerks sometimes hard to find

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

U. Frank Williams Jr./Reporter-Telegram
Kent-Kwik Human Resources Director Vicki Bailey poses outside the Kent corporate offices.

Vicki Bailey has a tough job: As human resources director for Kent Kwik, she must not only find and hire, but also retain people who will fill a position that, in the industry, traditionally keeps its workers for just four months.

Convenience store clerks, for whatever reason, are hard to find. At least ones who stay around for awhile. But Kent's hiring philosophy emphasizes getting employees to realize their importance, their self-worth and perhaps most of all their potential as both a worker and a person.

To help retain employees with the company, Kent includes assistance with child care, tuition, and morale-building incentive programs.

"We have an interesting challenge in that we are kind of a mid-size company," Bailey said. "We have around 300 employees and we are so different from most industries in this part of the country. The oil industry, though they are probably not bragging very much right now, have profit sharings that are huge. Their profit margins provide employee benefits that are huge. If you sat down and looked at the benefits of working at any convenience store or any fast oil-change center or a major oil company and had offers at both places, it'd be a no-brainer probably."

Bailey said Kent has trimmed the 300-percent turnover rate that is standard in the industry to one-third that number through the company's personnel incentive programs.

"That's a frightening statistic," Bailey said of the turnover rate. "We really feel like we've turned that around. To do that, you have to imagine doing it with the profit margin you make on a Twinkie. We try to use a lot of creativity to get there."

Some of that creativity includes a just-finished program: a Quality Service Olympics, held at the Kent-owned Avis Lube locations. Oil-change workers compete in the cities where Avis Lubes are located in preliminaries, then they come together for the final event, which was held last Saturday. The winning team was based on speed, accuracy and quality customer service, several factors that the judges looked for throughout the competition.

"An interesting dynamic occurs here," Bailey said. "A guy who goes to work at somewhat above-minimum wage, but certainly not for wages you find in the oil field or many other places, now has a chance to show how well he does what he does. It builds morale and a teamwork situation that you need in that kind of situation."

Such a Quality Service Olympics, Bailey said, teaches values and culture and other aspects of work and business much better than classroom settings that the company also provides. Achieving a goal was another incentive for those workers competing in the Olympic game. Last year's winning team became part of Kent's pit crew at an NHRA race in Memphis, Tenn. This year's winning team won a trip to a Dallas Cowboy game with the company's owner, Bill Kent.

This year's company wide winner was a team consisting of Ray Parker, Albert Tercero, Ron Sisson and Steve Wright, who work out of the Avis Lube at Midkiff and Loop 250. On the finals day of the Quality Care Olympics, the team handled 59 of the store's 194 changes that day.

"We worked a lot on our speed," said Parker, the team's manager. "We had four guys in there and we just kept doing it over and over. It was a great thrill to win, to overcome that hump."

Last year, Parker's team came in second.

"You've just got to get your teamwork going," Parker said. "I'm an ex-Army man. It's all in the teamwork. We had Ron downstairs draining and greasing; Albert and Steven were vacuuming and checking tires. I was checking under the hood and filling it up."

Kent Kwik stores are located in Midland, Odessa, Big Lake, Monahans and Kermit. Avis Lubes are found in Wichita Falls, Abilene, San Angelo, Big Spring, Midland, Odessa and Phoenix, Ariz.

Judge: Microsoft's intent holds key to verdict

WASHINGTON (NYT) — As the last witness in the Microsoft antitrust trial took the stand Monday, the presiding judge said the verdict could well turn on whether Microsoft's indented to turn Windows into a predatory monopoly.

Microsoft's intended behavior would prove crucial in deciding the landmark case, U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson suggested to Richard Schmalensee, dean of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology business school and Microsoft's final witness in the 21-week-long trial.

"You know that's what courts do every day," Jackson told Schmalensee, who had just testified that, when it comes to measuring pricing policies, economists typically cannot successfully measure corporate intentions.

"You can see for the court's purposes that intent might be relevant," Jackson said, engaging Schmalensee in an unusually spirited and prolonged dialogue over the basic issues in the trial.

"It's what we call a smoking gun," Jackson declared.

"That's rare, of course," Schmalensee shot back.

The exchange took place during a courtroom discussion of "predatory" behavior that turned on whether Microsoft had crossed the line between aggressive business tactics that are legal and anticompetitive actions that are not.

However Jackson should rule, his findings of fact and law will serve as the basis of an expected appeal that's likely to be ultimately decided by the U.S. Supreme Court. As a consequence, both sides have sought to wind up the testimony phase of the trial by presenting theirs strongest possible arguments.

For Schmalensee, that meant showing Microsoft's business practices had benefited consumers or, the very least, had caused them no harm.

Where Schmalensee saw Microsoft's decision to embed Internet browser technology in the widely used Windows operating system as the natural and normal flow continually seeking to improve the product, David Boies, the Justice Department's lead lawyer, saw matters quite differently.

Speaking outside the courtroom, Boies said:

"Did they intentionally set out to lose money? Did they make these hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars — a billion dollars perhaps — (in designing the Internet Explorer browser) with any business plan that they would very recover it other than through the price of Windows?

"This witness," Boies concluded, "came very, very close today to saying that the only way they were going to recoup was through the price of Windows. That's exactly what the government's theory is. They can get their money back by maintaining their Windows monopoly."

Boies plans to cross-examine Schmalensee on this key issue Today.

The Justice Department and 19 states contend that Microsoft abused its Windows monopoly power for personal computers, thereby stunting innovation and keeping prices high. Microsoft claims it has done no wrong in a dynamic industry where vigorous competition remains the watchword.

Cooler temperatures push gas futures lower than expected

The Associated Press

Natural gas futures fell sharply Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange as cooler weather across the eastern half of the country reduced demand from utilities.

Unleaded gasoline and crude futures also retreated.

Natural gas futures tumbled as temperatures in the Northeast and Southeast returned to normal or fell below-normal, during a period when temperatures usually are on the rise.

The moderating temperatures took the steam out of a rally that saw prices jump nearly 30 percent in the past three months on fears supplies in storage will not meet summer cooling demand.

Natural gas is used to power turbines for utilities, who see increased consumer demand for powering air conditioners and fans during the summer months. Some analysts also noted that supplies in storage appear to be ample for the coming months.

Natural gas prices also were pressured by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission's release late Friday of a report detailing investors' positions in the market. That report showed speculative positions made up a large share of recent futures purchases. Such a stake leaves market participants vulnerable to a sudden selloff.

The outlook for unleaded gasoline led to additional weakness in energy markets. Investors continue to fret about summer driving demand despite a recent sharp increase.

Gasoline inventories, however, have maintained a year-over-year surplus. Investors also speculated that cheap imports soon may come to market as sales in the United States continue to fetch greater profits.

Natural gas for July delivery fell 7.1 cents to $2.237 for each 1,000 cubic feet; July crude fell 29 cents to $17.70 a barrel; July unleaded gasoline fell 1.12 cents to 51.18 cents a gallon; July heating oil fell .58 cent to 43.89 cents a gallon.

In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude oil for delivery in August fell 13 cents to $16.37 a barrel.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Shared-housing units may be ideal for first-time buyer

By Eric Tyson

Q: I'm getting ready to buy my first home. Actually, I'm not sure if it will be a traditional type of home or a condo. I've heard there are condos, co-ops and town houses, and I don't really understand what these are. Can you explain? Do you think one type is better than another?

Tyson

A: In some areas, particularly in some higher-cost, urban neighborhoods, single-family housing is not the norm. Other common types of higher-density housing include condominiums and town houses.

Condominiums are generally apartment-style units that are stacked on top of and side by side one another. Many condo buildings were originally apartments that were converted into condominiums by offering for sale the ownership of separate units. When you purchase a condominium, you're purchasing a specific unit as well as a share of the common areas.

Town homes are attached or row homes. Think of these as being between a condominium and a single-family house. Town homes are condolike in that they are attached (generally sharing walls and a roof) and are homelike in that they often are two-story buildings and come with a small yard.

Cooperatives are buildings much like apartment and condominium buildings. When you buy a share in a cooperative, you own a share of the entire building, including some living space. In this respect, co-ops are a bit like a mutual fund. Unlike a condo, you generally need to get approval from the cooperative association to remodel your unit or rent it to a tenant. In some co-ops, you must even gain approval from the association for the sale of your unit to a proposed buyer. Co-ops can be difficult to sell and finance, so I don't recommend them.

Such shared housing offers two big potential advantages. First, this type of housing generally gives you more living space for your dollars. This makes sense because with a single-family home, a good chunk of the cost for the property is for the land the home sits upon. Land is good for decks, recreation and playing children, but you don't live "in" it the way you do with your home. If you want to maximize living space for the housing dollars you spend, shared housing is the way to go.

Another benefit of shared housing is that in many situations, you're not personally responsible for general maintenance because the owners' association (which you pay for, directly or indirectly) takes care of it. If you don't have the time, energy or desire to keep up a property, these types of shared housing can make sense. They may also provide you with better safety than a stand-alone home and access to shared recreation facilities.

So why doesn't everyone purchase this type of housing? First, as investments, single-family homes generally do better in the long run. In a good real estate market, single-family as well as other types of housing appreciate, although single-family homes tend to do better. Shared housing is easier to build and to overbuild — the greater supply tends to keep its prices depressed.

Single-family homes tend to be more attractive to potential buyers, especially those who like more privacy. Most people, when they can afford it, prefer a stand-alone home.

If you can afford a smaller single-family home instead of a larger shared-housing unit, buy the single-family home. Shared housing makes more sense for people who don't want to deal with building maintenance and who value the security of being in a larger building with other people. Also know that shared-housing prices tend to hold up better in already developed urban environments. If possible, avoid them in suburban areas where the availability of developable land makes building a lot more units possible.

Churchill suspends trainer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — D. Wayne Lukas, trainer of Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner Charismatic, has been suspended by Churchill Downs for 10 days after one of his horses failed a postrace drug test.

The suspension most likely will be upheld by other state commissions, meaning Lukas will not be permitted on the grounds of any recognized race track in the country as long as he is suspended. The suspension is scheduled for July 6-15.

The stewards made their decision during an informal hearing Sunday at Churchill Downs, giving Lukas the minimum sanction for a positive test.

The 2-year-old horse tested positive on May 16 for benzenemethanol, which is present in most analgesics and antihistamines. Dance Master, a 3-5 favorite in the maiden race, finished second. He was disqualified from the purse money.

D. Wayne Lukas, trainer of Charismatic, looks on as the horse is given a bath. He has been suspended by Churchill Downs for 10 days after one of his horses failed a postrace drug test.

Bernie Hettel, the chief state steward and executive director of the Kentucky Racing Commission, said Lukas told the stewards that he will not appeal. He could not be reached for comment Monday at Santa Anita Park in Arcadia, Calif.

Hettel said benzenemethanol is widely used for minor breathing problems and skin diseases but it is not permitted in a horse's system when it races.

It is "a therapeutic medication used on horses with regularity and necessity," Hettel said, adding the substance is not a stimulant.

Dr. Larry Bramlage with Rood and Riddle Equine Hospital in Lexington said benzenemethanol was not in the list of veterinary drugs or controlled substances. He said it was most likely a solvent of some kind found in many topical medications such as liniment.

Lukas was not in Kentucky for the May 16 race, which came a day after Charismatic won the Preakness. But racing regulations say a trainer is the "primary responsible party" for his horses.

On June 5, the day after Charismatic lost his Triple Crown bid in the Belmont, Dance Master won by four lengths at Belmont. He is to run in Saturday's Bashford Manor at Churchill Downs.

Five sentenced in point-shaving

By Jolyn Okimoto
Associated Press Writer

PHOENIX — A former Arizona State player and four other men who admitted involvement in a college basketball point-shaving scandal were sentenced to federal prison or probation Monday.

The scandal caused harm to the university, the students, the fans and to the coach, U.S. District Judge Robert C. Broomfield said. "This scandal leads to cynicism about what college sports is all about."

Prior to sentencing, former Arizona State guard Isaac Burton Jr. apologized to his coaches, "all ASU fans, classmates and whoever," saying he didn't realize what he was getting involved in.

Burton, Vincent Basso, Joseph Gagliano, Joseph Mangiamele, Dominic Mangiamele, admitted they were involved in a point-shaving scheme allegedly masterminded by former Arizona State student Benny Silman during the 1993-94 season.

More Sports/1D

Silman, 28, is serving a 46-month prison sentence for getting Stevin "Hedake" Smith and Burton to shave points in games so the team wouldn't beat the point spread.

"At no time did (Burton) do anything intentionally that would cause the game to be affected in any way," his lawyer, James Logan, said before sentencing.

Calling Burton's apology heartfelt and saying he gained little and lost a lot by his involvement, Broomfield sentenced Burton to two months in jail, six months of home detention and three years' probation. Broomfield said Burton's jail sentence need not be continuous and he did not rule out the possibility that Burton might be able to travel outside the country during his probation.

Five Arizona State games were bet on in Las Vegas between December 1993 and May 1994 and four were fixed successfully, prosecutors said. The bettors lost all their money in the last game of the scheme — against Washington — when Arizona State beat the point spread.

Gagliano was sentenced to 15 months in prison, three years parole, 100 hours of community service and fined $6,000.

Joseph Mangiamele was sentenced to three months in jail, eight months of home detention and four years' probation. He will also have to pay a $5,000 fine and complete 100 hours of community service.

Dominic Mangiamele, Joseph's father, a former Chicago trucking executive, was sentenced to three months' probation, which includes four months of home detention, a $5,000 fines, and 100 hours of community service.

Basso, of Buffalo Grove, Ill., was sentenced to 1 1/2 years in prison, $27,000 in fines — the amount he profited from betting on a game between Arizona State and Southern California — and three years' parole.

Judge defers change of venue motion in suit against Lubbock

By C. Bryson Hull
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — A federal judge deferred a change-of-venue motion Monday in a $30 million civil rights lawsuit against Lubbock, sending the black plaintiffs' case before another judge in the city where they claim police illegally detained them because of their race.

But the decision by U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer does not mean the case of Hampton University women's basketball coach Patricia Bibbs and two others will be decided in the West Texas city. Buchmeyer's decision places the case in the hands of U.S. District Judge Sam Cummings in Lubbock, who has the discretion to move it.

The lawsuit stems from a Nov. 16 incident. Lubbock police officers detained Mrs. Bibbs, her husband Ezell and then-assistant coach Vanetta Kelso outside a Wal-Mart in response to a customer's complaint that someone scammed her.

The three were handcuffed and held for several hours, until police cleared them of all charges. Ms. Kelso, who was pregnant at the time of the incident, claims she was threatened by an emergency worker after she vomited.

Monday's hearing was at least a temporary victory for the defendants, who wanted the case moved to Lubbock. Six police officers, unknown emergency services workers and the city are named in the lawsuit, which was first filed in Wichita Falls.

And the win came in spite of the best efforts of plaintiff's attorney Johnnie Cochran, whose residual fame from the O.J. Simpson trial attracted a flotilla of cameras outside the Earle Cabell Federal Building. Cochran said he expects the case to be moved.

"If you listen to what the judge said, it probably won't be tried in Lubbock," Cochran said after the brief hearing.

Cummings probably would look at Abilene and San Angelo as possible sites for a trial if he rules there cannot be a fair trial in Lubbock, Buchmeyer said. The defense argued that a fair and unbiased jury pool could be found on their home turf, and if not, in other Western District cities.

"Both of their (defense) experts said a fair trial could be had in Lubbock," said George Thompson, a lawyer for the city of Lubbock.

Layden resigns as Utah Starzz coach

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Frank Layden's tenure as coach in the WNBA didn't even last one year.

The 67-year-old Layden, a former NBA Coach of the Year, unexpectedly resigned Monday because of the long workdays and traveling.

Layden said he leaves with more respect for professional women's basketball than the men's game. The women, he says, have superior work and team ethics.

"It gets old," said Layden, who was replaced by 42-year-old assistant Fred Williams, formerly the coach of Southern California. "I was getting tired. Time is a precious commodity right now."

Layden's resignation, however, was abrupt. His comments about the team were invariably optimistic and less than two weeks ago, he told a sportswriter that taking over the team gave him a newfound purpose in life.

He will remain president of the NBA's Jazz — the Starzz' big brother. He came to Utah as general manager of the Jazz in 1979 when the New Orleans team was moved to Salt Lake City.

He coached the Jazz for eight seasons (277-294) and was named NBA Coach of the Year in 1984. He retired from coaching in 1988.

A decade later, in July 1998, he took over the Starzz team, replacing coach Denise Taylor. Layden won just two of 11 games in his first season.

But the team was revamped for this year and is 2-2 after beating Sacramento on Saturday. There is reason for optimism, especially with the addition of Natalie Williams, the former MVP of the defunct ABL, who is averaging nearly 18 points and 12 rebounds a game.

Williams' first game as head coach will be Thursday when the Starzz again play the Monarchs.

"It's a dream for me. I didn't think it would come so soon," said Williams, who has been with the Starzz since 1998. A year before, he coached the Southern California women's team to a 20-9 record and the second round of the NCAA tournament.

Sparks Trade Wideman To Cleveland

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Los Angeles Sparks traded point guard Jamila Wideman, who is on injured reserve, to the Cleveland Rockers on Monday for seldom-used guard Jen Howard.

The Sparks then waived Howard to remain at the WNBA's 11-player roster limit.

Wideman was the Sparks' first-round choice in the inaugural WNBA draft in 1997, the third overall selection, after helping lead Stanford to three consecutive NCAA Final Four appearances from 1995-97. She started the Sparks' first 14 games, then was used as a backup to Penny Toler for the remainder of the 1997 season and all of 1998.

After averaging 2.5 points and 3.0 assists and shooting 24.8 percent over two seasons, Wideman's future with the Sparks became tenuous after they drafted Ukari Figgs, the NCAA Final Four's MVP from Purdue, and signed standout Yugoslavian point guard Gordana Grubin this spring.

Figgs won the starting point guard position from Toler in training camp. Wideman sprained her right knee during an early June practice and was placed on the injured reserve list June 9. She has not played in a regular-season game in 1999.

Wideman, 23, will serve as a backup to 32-year old Suzie McConnell Serio with the Rockers, the WNBA's lone winless team at 0-5. Howard, 24, played 15 minutes in four games for Cleveland.

Miracle 80, Mercury 76

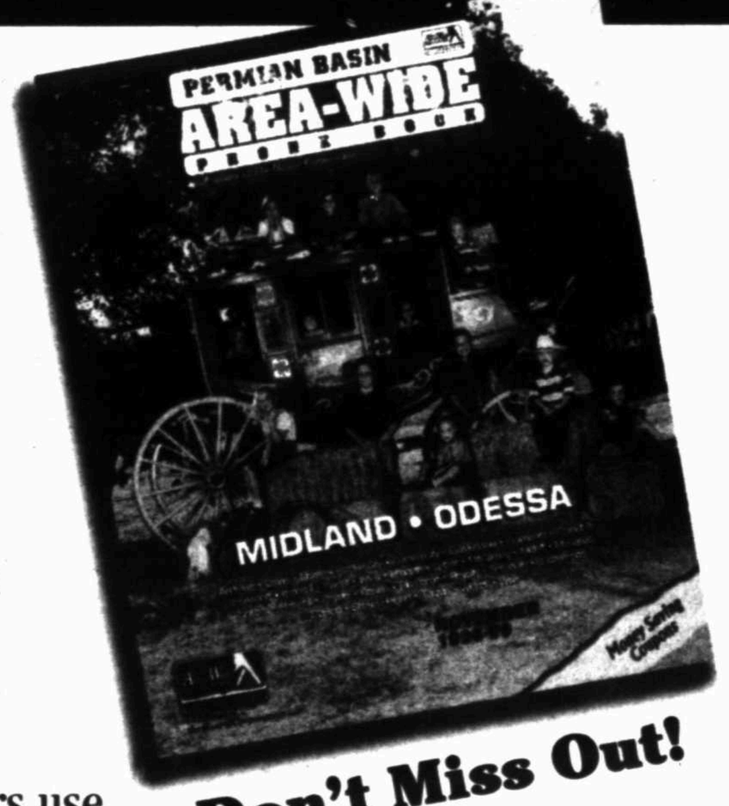

ORLANDO, Fla. — Nykesha Sales and Sheri Sam each scored 20 points and the Orlando Miracle held off a late rally for a victory over the Phoenix Mercury.

Orlando led by as many as 16 points in the second half, but Michele Timms led Phoenix's comeback with two late 3-pointers to cut the lead to 76-73 with 1:01 remaining.

World Cup women juggle soccer, parenting

By Barry Wilner
AP Sports Writer

As Joy Fawcett wandered the hallways at the U.S. national team's hotel, she ran into Carla Overbeck. The two standout defenders looked at each other and laughed.

"I have a lot of time on my hands and I spend it looking for things to do," Fawcett said. "If someone tells me to sit down and relax, I have a hard time with not doing something."

It comes with the job of being a soccer mom. Except that Fawcett, who has two daughters, and Overbeck, who has a son, have taken the concept to an extreme.

Both players took a leave of absence from the team to have children. And both came back despite the physical and emotional demands parenthood can have on a full-time elite athlete. Now they're playing in the Women's World Cup.

"I get a lot of help," said Fawcett, whose older daughter, Katelyn, is 5, and younger daughter Carli is 2. "My mom and dad are around, my husband Walter is great and very supportive, but it can be hard. If the girls are with me for training, they are away from their father. Or I am away from my family. But we are committed to doing it."

Talk about commitments. Look what Fawcett had on her plate in 1997.

She coached the UCLA women, who made the NCAA quarterfinals, and a youth team, while also playing for the national squad and handling motherhood. She resigned from UCLA at the end of '97, but said she'll consider a return to coaching after she retires as a player.

The hardest part for the 31-year-old player/mother was not finding enough hours for everything. Fawcett struggled most with getting fit enough to recapture her place on the national team.

"The toughest thing was the speed," she said. "When you get pregnant and gain that weight, you get a little slower. I don't know if it is age or the childbirth, but there are a few players on the team who are faster."

There's only one who can sympathize with Fawcett's family situation, though. Overbeck, the team captain, gave birth to son Jackson in August 1997.

"I didn't realize the time commitment it requires to have a child," said Overbeck, also 31. "Every second of the day is devoted to him.

"But it puts things in a greater perspective. No matter how tough a day you have at practice or how tough a game you have, he's there to cheer you up."

There's an added benefit of being a mom on the national team.

In Orlando, Fla., Fawcett had a live-in nanny, Nicki Richards, who also traveled with the team. So both daughters accompanied Fawcett.

Overbeck did not have a nanny, but Richards would take care of Jackson whenever mom was training or playing soccer.

"It's harder when we're not in residency, trying to find time to work out," Overbeck said. "I had to change my lifting schedule to fit a better schedule for Jackson."

Both players had doubts about the decision to have children and continue playing.

"You always wonder if you are jeopardizing your career," Fawcett said. "But it's what I wanted to do and we said we'd go for it."
