Midland County wants to turn dog-bite cases over to city

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland County government, in an effort to reduce expenses, is asking Midland city government to consider taking over the county's rural dog-bite cases, for a fee.

The county, said Commissioner Louisa Valencia, is willing to pay a "reasonable" fee for what it views as a part-time job dealing with an average of seven dog bites a month in the summer and fewer in the winter.

The Midland County Commissioners' Court does not operate an animal-control department similar to the city's.

Until earlier this year, the county's litter-control and rabies-control officer was Scott Welch, a former county commissioner who now is a civil-warrants deputy for the sheriff. But the county lost its grant money for funding much of Welch's former functions.

The county, Mrs. Valencia said, had invested about $5,000 a year in buying rabies tags for veterinarians to use when vaccinating dogs and cats against the rabies virus and to pay for quarantining animals after they had bitten a person.

"That is our duty: To see that the (possibly rabid) animal is quarantined for a period of 10 days to be checked for rabies," Mrs. Valencia said.

After Welch's leave, the Commissioners' Court assigned the rabies-control duties on a rotating basis to the Road-and-Bridge Department foremen. However, that arrangement did not work out, Mrs. Valencia said.

In the 1980s, then-Constable Tom McGinnis took charge of rabies control for the county, but current Constable Ron Rice has declined to assume those duties, she said.

"We do not have any kind of ordinance out in the county," Mrs. Valencia said Thursday night. "And the majority of the dogs are being dumped here (in rural Midland County) by the city people — the ones (the dogs) that are roaming.

Other than those, she said, "Most all of the people out in the county will have a dog for protection. That's about the only protection the people out in the county have, and that's dogs."

While Texas law requires pet owners to vaccinate their dogs and cats against the deadly rabies virus, the Commissioners' Court can only "ask them to do it," Mrs. Valencia said. "And we don't enforce it."

Ortiz trial

AMARILLO— Jury selection in the capital murder trial of Henry Lopez Ortiz is moving swiftly, and the trial will likely start on schedule, according to the presiding judge in the case, John G. Hyde. Hyde scheduled the trial to begin Oct. 18. He said Thursday morning that a jury would be seated and ready to hear testimony either Oct. 18 or 19. Ortiz, 42, is accused of capital murder in the Feb. 10 sexual assault, kidnapping and slaying of 10-year-old Julianne Powell. He was arrested following the discovery of the girl's body in a laundry hamper in a spare room of his apartment. The state is seeking the death penalty in the case. The trial was moved to Potter County because of extensive pretrial publicity.

School shooting

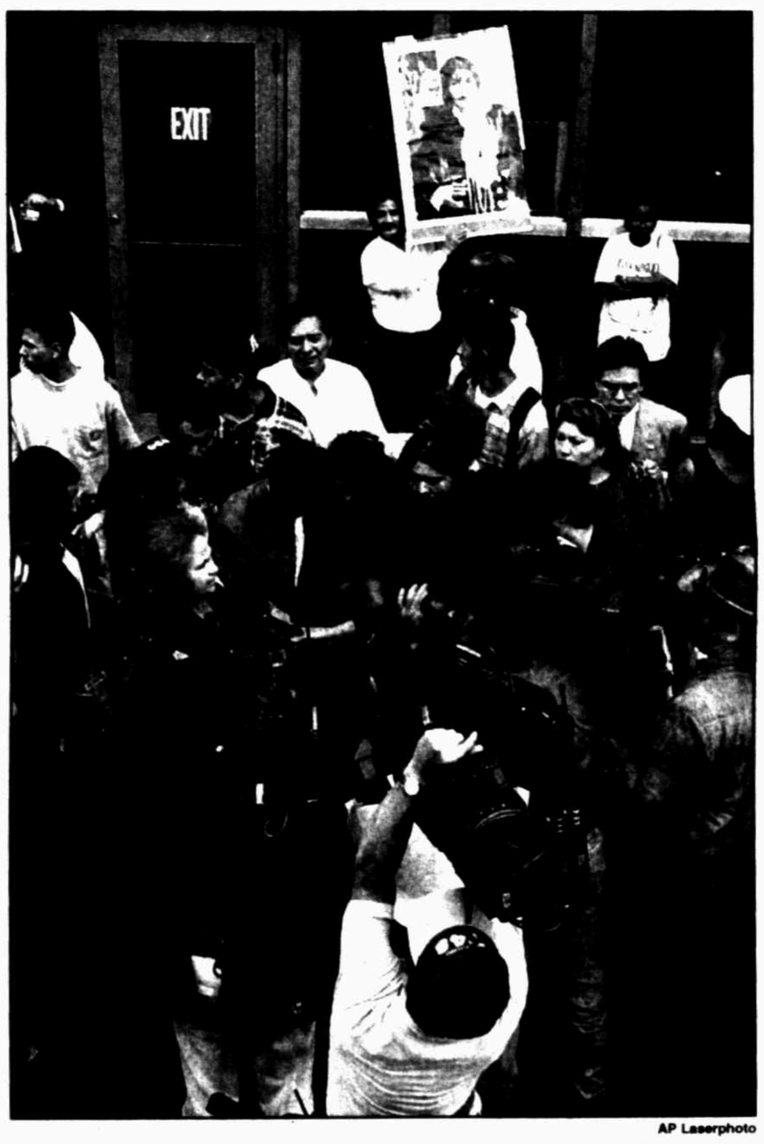

BLACKVILLE, S.C. — A suspended student whose father said he sometimes got picked on because he was small walked into his high school Thursday, shot and seriously wounded a teacher, then killed himself, oficials say. TV cameras surround Selena fans who were admitted by lottery drawing into the Harris County Courthouse Thursday to watch the trial of Yolanda Saldivar, who is accused of killing Tejano music star.

Second day of testimony draws description of Selena's shooting

HOUSTON (AP) — Three motel employees testified Thursday they were startled by a loud noise, then watched as a screaming and fatally wounded Selena ran outside the motel pursued by a calm woman pointing a gun at her.

Trinidad Espinoza, 55, identified the woman with the gun as Yolanda Saldivar, 35, who is on trial for fatally shooting the Tejano singing star.

"She was pointing it at her," Espinoza said under questioning from prosecutor Carlos Valdez.

"She was running back of Selena and pointing the gun at her — in her right hand," added Norma Martinez, a motel housekeeper, who also identified Ms. Saldivar. "She just yelled and called her: 'Bitch!' She just put the gun down, turned around and went to the door."

"She seemed calm," said Sandra Avalos, another housekeeper who described the scene.

Ms. Saldivar is accused of murdering Selena and could face punishment of up to life in prison if con-

Education panel looks for leeway in textbook rule

■ State board wants to see if new education law still allows it some regulation of content.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — After testimony raising concerns about communist writings and the potential for "giant genitalia puzzles" in classrooms, a state education panel Thursday put off action on proposed textbook rules.

The State Board of Education's Committee on School Finance wants to look at whether a new education law still allows the board some leeway to regulate textbook content, said board member Will Davis of Austin.

The law is meant to give local school districts more power, including more authority to decide what textbooks they buy with state funds.

"We're trying to decide whether or not there is more room in Senate Bill 1 for us to have discretion in making rules than might appear from just reading it as it is," Davis said, citing a desire to foster such concepts as patriotism and to keep out "a lot of offensive language."

He said board members would look at the law's legislative history, including testimony when it was being drafted.

State Sen. Bill Ratliff, author of the new education law, previously said the Education Board is limited to ensuring books are error-free, meet physical specifications and contain essential elements that Texas children are to be taught.

But Thursday, he said he was willing to meet with board members to discuss a way to keep out obscene or vulgar language.

"I think surely we can come up with a mechanism. In talking to the commissioner (Education Commissioner Mike Moses), it appears he has some review capability now with regard to that kind of problem," said Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant.

Some Republican board members elected with support from religious conservatives said last month they believe they have authority to review textbooks for content they consider objectionable.

Davis, a Democrat, is co-chairman of the School Finance Committee, which heard testimony from people including Stephanie Cecil of the conservative Texas Eagle Forum.

Clinton uses GOP strategy to his advantage in battle over Medicare

WASHINGTON (NYT) — When the Clinton health care proposal died in Congress last year, the administration belatedly realized that it had allowed opponents to define the terms of the debate, using television, lobbying and grassroots politicking to capitalize on the public's fear of change.

Now, taking a lesson from that defeat, the White House is using the same tactics against the Republicans who control Congress, fighting their plans for Medicare and Medicaid with political commercials and speeches around the country by the president and members of his Cabinet.

White House officials believe this campaign, which has been under way since August and is plotted in daily White House sessions, is having the desired effect. Several recent polls show Clinton at some of the higher approval ratings of his presidency, the Republican Congress sliding sharply in voter esteem and Americans losing their enthusiasm for a balanced budget if it means tampering with Medicare.

The president's aides are elated. One says he cannot remember such unity in strategy and purpose since the days leading to Clinton's election victory three years ago.

The decisive finale of the budget battle, of course, is still weeks ahead, and the stakes are rising every day. How it plays out will certainly affect the tone of the presidential race next year. It will be a benchmark in the record Clinton presents to the voters. And it could determine whether he looks like a man of principle or a vacillator.

Speaker Newt Gingrich, daring the president to use his veto, has threatened to attach the huge budget bill, of which

By Marc Rice
Associated Press

ATLANTA — When Rebecca Stafford's July Visa statement showed a $2,122 charge for Olympic tickets, she cheerfully emptied the family vacation savings account to pay the bill.

Months later, Mrs. Stafford is not getting any tickets, and she really misses her money.

"For them to have my money all this time — it's ridiculous," said the Windermere, Fla., woman. "I just want out of this deal."

Long after sports fans sent in their payments for an Olympic ticket lottery, Games organizers are hanging on to people's money, hoping that those who couldn't get the tickets they really wanted will buy leftovers or souvenirs.

The advance payments are in the bank, earning $3 million in interest so far for the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games.

ACOG defended the advance payment procedure as the only way to ensure that tickets were distributed fairly.

Still, ACOG's holding of the money has drawn the attention of some consumer affairs groups.

As part of the process for buying tickets, full advance payment was mandatory. Orders placed from May 1 to June 30 went into a lottery that picked the sequence in which requests would be processed. After that came the processing of orders, and confirmation letters went out in late September.

All the while, the checks, money orders and Visa charges from more than 300,000 customers were making money for ACOG.

Tropical Storm Roxanne batters Mexico's Pacific coast

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Downgraded from a hurricane, Tropical Storm Roxanne punished Mexico's southern Gulf coast with torrential rains and surging tides Thursday, flooding small towns and wrecking crops.

Roxanne was the 10th hurricane of the busy Atlantic storm season when it roared over the Yucatan Peninsula this week with 110-mph winds. But even as it lost its punch, the threat of flash floods and mudslides rose.

Forecaster Bill Frederick at the U.S. National Hurricane Center said Roxanne remained a dangerous storm.

"The forecast is that it won't be over open Gulf waters long enough to regain hurricane strength, but it will be very close," said Frederick, speaking by telephone from Miami.

"Right now there are a lot of heavy showers and thunderstorms associated with Roxanne. They are contained in bands of storm clouds over the Yucatan peninsula and other portions of southern Mexico," he added.

There have been no reports of deaths or injuries since Roxanne barreled ashore Tuesday evening off Mexico's Yucatan Caribbean coast.

At its strongest, Roxanne batted down palm trees, shattered hotel windows in Cancun and left the Yucatan resort isle of Cozumel incommunicado for two days, stranding hundreds of tourists. Cozumel ferries began running again Thursday.

At 8 p.m. EDT, Roxanne was about 245 miles east-northeast of Veracruz, the National Weather Service in Miami report. Roxanne was nearly stationary but was expected to begin moving slowly westward in the next 24 hours.

Maximum sustained winds had dropped to 50 mph, but the hurricane center warned that some strengthening was possible and that tropical storm-force winds still extended 175 miles from the center.

A tropical storm warning and a hurricane watch were in effect all the way north to the Mexican port of Tampico, below the Texas border.

Many residents still struggling to recover from the ravages of Hurricane Opal last week face flash floods and mudslides. Battering waves and tide levels 4 to 6 feet above normal were expected to pound the Gulf coastline of Tabasco and Campeche states.

High winds knocked down trees and power lines on the Yucatan Peninsula on Wednesday night. People waded through waist-high water in Campeche, and two rivers in neighboring Tabasco state flooded.

Damage was heavier in dozens of small Mayan Indian towns in the Yucatan jungle after the storm wandered across the peninsula, stripping corn from fields and grass-thatched roofs from humble homes.

"The corn harvest is completely lost for the year," said Victoria Santos, who spent the day carrying buckets of waters from homes in Quintana Roo state in the center of the Yucatan Peninsula.

"Even the animals of the jungle are going to suffer because all of the wild fruit has been blown from the trees," added Santos, speaking by telephone.

In the Gulf coast state of Campeche, civil defense spokesman Sergio Romero Olivera said towns were flooded, classes suspended and 15,000 people housed in shelters for a second day.

"We are getting rain on top of rain," sighed Romero Olivera, noting that Campeche still was on an emergency footing since the last hurricane, Opal, flooded out some 200 towns last week.

But he said Thursday's flooding was in rural towns and less severe.

Some 3,500 oil workers were evacuated from Gulf offshore rigs Wednesday but were prepared to return once Roxanne passed, said the Mexican oil monopoly Petroleos Mexicanos.

Several parts of southern Mexico were being walloped by rain as authorities reported that seven inches of rain had fallen already in the Gulf Coast state of Tabasco.

Flooding was reported in Indian squatter camps around San Cristobal de las Casas in the poor southern state of Chiapas. Rain fell continuously for 21 hours in some parts of Chiapas.

Cave-ins on Chiapas highways forced traffic into one lane in many spots as tractor-trailers and buses filled with passengers crossed crumbling mountain passes.

On the resort island of Cozumel, the hurricane blew away dreams of a perfect honeymoon for Julie Shadd Kennedy of Chicago.

"We had originally planned to go to St. Thomas," she said. "But the house we rented was flattened by Hurricane Marilyn. We made out plans to come here at the last minute."

Instead of romantic strolls on the beach, Kennedy and her husband, Ken, spent most of Wednesday looking for a restaurant, a grocery store, anywhere they could buy any kind of food.

The island was slowly returning to normal on Thursday. About half the businesses were open and cars formed a long line at the island's only gas station.

Tourists stranded on the island packed every every available flight leaving after the airport reopened Thursday morning. Others crowded on ferry boats to Cancun in hopes of catching a flight there.

Bosnia mostly quiet, although some fighting reported in Northeast

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's most hopeful cease-fire to date quieted almost all battlefields Thursday, but the government insisted Serbs must do more to lift the siege of Sarajevo before peace talks can start.

After weeks of heavy fighting, U.N. officials called Thursday's cease-fire violations insignificant. The government and rebel Serbs accused each other of new attacks in the bitterly contested northwest, but sat down to discuss how to firm up the U.S.-brokered truce, scheduled to last 60 days.

With Washington leading the peace drive, this cease-fire is given more chance than previous truces in the 3 1/2-year war.

"There are good reasons to believe that we are approaching peace in Bosnia," so long as the world remains firm with the Serbs, Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic said in Brussels.

"The cease-fire has more chance than previous ones, because the readiness (for it) is greater than before," said Momcilo Krajisnik, a Serb leader.

'The cease fire has more chance than previous ones, because the rediness (for it) is greater than before.'

— Momcilo Krajisnik, Serb leader

But the Bosnian government warned it would boycott peace talks, due to begin Oct. 31 in the United States, unless further conditions are met. The talks may lead to an international peace conference in Paris.

Foreign Minister Muhamed Sacirbey said the Serbs must open a road to the eastern enclave of Gorazde and another road out of besieged Sarajevo.

A U.N. aid convoy tried to reach Gorazde from Sarajevo on Thursday on the main road through Serb-held territory. The convoy had to turn back because of mines.

Serb soldiers at a checkpoint on the road indicated they would not clear the road — a condition of the cease-fire agreement.

A Serb soldier, Miroslav Cvoko, said Serbs would inspect any U.N. convoys to make sure the government wasn't using them to smuggle weapons to Gorazde.

Restoration of gas and electricity to Sarajevo was a key condition of the truce, which took effect just after midnight (7:01 p.m. EDT Wednesday). While access to Gorazde was part of the truce agreement, an open road out of Sarajevo west to Kiseljak was not.

The truce has not ended the siege of Sarajevo, and its residents cannot travel freely in and out of the city because the roads, which cross through Serb-held territory, can be dangerous or barricaded.

Sacirbey said it was vital for Sarajevans, after 3 1/2 years of Serb siege, to "feel freedom and safety again."

"We will not attend the next round of peace negotiations if the roads from Sarajevo to Kiseljak and Gorazde are not opened," he told the Croatian weekly Globus.

In recent weeks, the government has had to drop similar demands under pressure from Washington to keep peace talks alive.

The United Nations said it registered 15 cease-fire violations across Bosnia on Thursday — two detonations in a Sarajevo suburb and 12 in northeastern Bosnia.

The United Nations has no presence in northwestern Bosnia, where the government and its Croat allies reported grabbing two Serb-held towns, Sanski Most and Mrkonjic Grad, in heavy fighting this week.

The Bosnian army accused the Serbs of breaking the cease-fire around Sanski Most. The Bosnian Serb army responded that government and Croat forces were jeopardizing the cease-fire in unspecified ways.

U.N. officials suggested skirmishes would not necessarily jeopardize the peace efforts.

"We cannot militarily expect people who are within 200 meters of each other fighting suddenly to put their rifle in the air and say, 'Thanks very much, I'm walking backwards,'" said U.N. military spokesman Lt. Col. Chris Vernon. "It doesn't happen like that."

Aid workers were concerned Thursday with the fate of up to 400,000 refugees chased from home over the past three months. Most are Serbs routed from Croatia and northwestern Bosnia.

"We are very, very concerned now what is going to happen to many of these people during the winter," said John Sparrow, spokesman for the international Red Cross. "It is quite clear that there will be insufficient accommodation and people will be dying this winter as a consequence."

The Serbs, meanwhile, are rushing to expel up to 20,000 non-Serbs from Serb-held northern Bosnia, aid officials said.

Draft-age men were being separated from their families, and there were reports of rape, robberies and executions, U.N. officials said.

Five arrested in murder of Palestinian-American

JERICHO, West Bank (AP) — Five Palestinians, including security agents, have been detained in connection with the death of a Palestinian-American while in custody last month.

Investigators plan to exhume the body of Azzam Musleh to determine the cause of his death, Attorney General Khaled Kidreh said in an interview Thursday.

Palestinian security agents initially said Musleh died of a stroke, but an Associated Press reporter who saw his body before he was buried saw signs of beatings, including welts, cuts and bruises on his face.

Musleh's son, Shaheed, said his father also suffered cigarette burns over his back and legs.

Musleh, 52, immigrated to the United States in 1970 and owned a supermarket in Dallas. He returned to his West Bank hometown four years ago and was picked up by Palestinian security agents on Sept. 27 while playing cards in a coffee shop in his home village of Ein Yabroud.

Within 30 hours of his arrest, Musleh was dead. His body was returned to his family on Sept. 29 and buried the same day.

Kidreh said at the time that Musleh was questioned about suspicions that he headed a West Bank burglary ring and about the killing of a clan member in 1992.

U.S. consulate officials in Jerusalem demanded the Palestinians investigate Musleh's death. Consulate spokeswoman Lea Perez had no comment Thursday.

Kidreh said Thursday that five Palestinians, including security agents, were detained for questioning in connection with the case but would not identify them further. he would not say when they were detained or how many of them were security agents.

"We are still investigating the case. We can't say whether those under arrest are responsible or not responsible," Kidreh said.

Kidreh said Musleh's body would be exhumed for an autopsy, a practice often opposed by observant Muslims.

The West Bank security chief, Jibril Rajoub, said six security agents were sentenced Wednesday to two weeks to one month in jail for mistreating a detainee.

Rajoub would not give details of the case, and it was not clear whether the sentencing of the six was connected to Musleh's death.

Musleh was the fifth Palestinian to die in Palestinian detention since Palestinian self-rule began in the Gaza Strip and Jericho in May 1994.

WEATHER WATCH

Mid-80s in store for area today

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny with a high near 85 and south winds at 10-15 mph, becoming north at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be mostly clear with a low near 45, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be sunny with a low near 75.

After an overnight low of 57, Thursday's high reached 87, compared to the record high for that date of 98 set in 1979. The record low was 37 set in 1986.

STATE

Tropical Storm Roxanne brought clouds and thunderstorms to South Texas and the lower Gulf coast on Thursday. But high pressure allowed the rest of Texas to enjoy mostly sunny skies as a blue norther approached.

Because of the storm, coastal flood watches were posted for South Texas.

Temperatures were warm with highs generally in the 80s. However, readings at 4 p.m. ranged from a rain-cooled 72 degrees at Brownsville to 93 degrees near Del Rio.

Winds across North Texas were mostly light and variable in the east and south at 10 to 15 mph across western sections. Winds ahead of a trough in the Panhandle were blowing out of the southwest at gusty levels of 15 to 25 mph. Elsewhere, winds were generally light and variable.

Forecasters expected a strong cold front to move across the Panhandle today morning, propelled by blustery northerly winds. Low temperatures Saturday could reach freezing, they said.

The forecast for North Texas is for partly cloudy skies today with windy and cooler conditions in the west. Highs should range from 82 to 88. Cooler tonight with scattered showers ending in the east. Lows in the 50s.

South Texas is to be partly to mostly cloudy today with isolated showers and thunderstorms. Highs in the upper 80s. Lows in the 60s.

Forecasters said West Texas will have sunny days and fair nights through Saturday. Highs today and Saturday in the 60s and 70s with 80s and 90s along the Rio. Lows today in the 40s and 50s.

NATION

Widely scattered light rain fell in Idaho and western Montana on Thursday, while showers and thunderstorms lingered in the Southeast.

The Great Basin saw some gusty winds and high clouds and braced for temperatures expected to plummet by 15 to 20 degrees.

Showers caused some flooding problems in north-central Florida — Interstate 75 had some standing water, and one section was closed because of a sinkhole that developed after several days of rain.

Weatherbank Inc. forecasters called for a system to make its way across the northern Rockies, bringing light showers across much of the northern Intermountain region, with some snowshowers in the higher elevations of the western Montana Rockies.

Strong, gusty winds along with it were expected to blow across Montana and Wyoming, reaching 50 mph.

The Pacific Northwest should get a chance to dry out as a high pressure area builds off the Oregon coast.

Showers and thunderstorms are forecast across the Southeast as tropical moisture will remain in place. Some isolated thunderstorms could dump as much as 2 to 3 inches of rain across southeastern Georgia and northern Florida.

High pressure should remain in control across much of the East.

Education panel considers algebra end-of-course test

AUSTIN (AP) — Seventy-six percent of Texas students would fail an Algebra I end-of-course test under a 70 percent passing standard being considered by the State Board of Education.

The board's Committee on Students voted Thursday to approve the standard effective this school year, said Texas Education Agency spokeswoman Debbie Graves. The full board is expected to vote today.

Board Chairman Jack Christie of Houston said he expects the 70 percent passing standard to be approved by the board, but with a phase-in period so students and teachers have a chance to polish their skills.

"We knew these scores were going to be in this realm, but our job is two years down the road, how many of these children will be at the 70 percent standard because we're holding to a high standard and not watering that down," he said.

The predicted 24 percent passing rate on the exam, given a 70 percent passing standard, comes from a benchmark administration of the test given to 226,372 students in grades 7-12 in May 1995.

Education Commissioner Mike Moses is recommending the 70 percent passing standard on the test, which beginning in 1998-99 can be used by students in combination with other end-of-cours exams to meet testing requirements for graduation.

Currently, students must pass the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills in order to receive a diploma. The end-of-course exams will give them another option.

An end-of-course test already is being administered in Biology I, and Moses said a 70 percent Algebra I standard would put it on par with the Biology I test and the TAAS.

Christie said students have "some catching up to do" in math because state standards have been raised.

The Education Board beginning in the 1992-93 school year said below-grade-level math courses — such as Fundamentals of Math and Consumer Math — could no longer be used to earn state graduation credit.

"We knew that this would happen. We knew the scores on a benchmark would be low. But we were willing to make that hard choice because these children need these type of courses to compete in tomorrow's world," Christie said.

"At the same time, you have teachers who are probably used to teaching Fundamentals of Math that are not ready to teach Algebra I. We need the staff development. We need the commitment as low as the elementary school grades," he said.

A phase-in of the 70 percent standard is likely "because it would be unfair for a poorly trained teacher or a poorly educated student to be put at this high standard from day one," Christie said. "If these children aren't getting the tools, then there's no way they can fix the engine."

TEXTBOOK: State board seeks interpretation of new law

(From 1A)

She said proposed rules aren't strong enough and that she believes the law allows the Education Board to continue regulating content.

"If rules being proposed ... had been in effect last year, Texas students would be calling homosexual hotlines, looking at pornographic pictures, reading Dr. Kervorkian's book on assisted suicide, writing their own obituaries and assembling giant genitalia puzzles on the classroom floor," Ms. Cecil said.

Davis said of her comments, "I'm not the least bit apprehensive about that occurring or the board permitting it to occur. She's obviously looking for the most inflammatory thing she can to attract your attention and the public's, but I don't believe this board would tolerate that for an instant."

Among others commenting on textbook rules was Eleanor Hutcheson of the Texas Society of Daughters of the American Revolution.

She suggested the board consider adding a section saying, "Since proven Communist writers, artists, singers etc. have proclaimed to overthrow this country, the United States of America, by any means possible, their material shall not be permitted to indoctrinate the school children of Texas by being acceptable in the instructional resources from K-12 unless so indicated."

SELENA: Motel workers describe Tejano star's shooting

victed. Testimony in Judge Mike Westergren's court began Wednesday.

Thursday's testimony disputed defense claims that a hysterical Ms. Saldivar shot the Grammy-winning Selena Quintanilla Perez March 31 by accident while waving the .38-caliber revolver.

Espinoza, referring repeatedly to an aerial photo of the Days Inn motel where the slaying occurred, described to jurors in a Houston courtroom what he saw about noon March 31.

Espinoza, who worked at the motel, said he was repairing a clothes dryer when "I heard a loud boom. At first I thought it was like a flat tire."

He said then he saw a young girl, whom he later learned was the 23-year-old singer.

"She was wearing a kind of jogging suit," he said, describing her as having "loose hair."

"She was running and screaming. I saw another woman chasing her. She had a gun."

Asked if he could identify the woman with the gun, he pointed across the courtroom to Ms. Saldivar.

Espinoza said Ms. Saldivar did not appear excited and that he expected to hear another gunshot.

"She just walked up, stopped," he said, adding that she then lowered the weapon. "She walked back to the room," he said.

Asked if she looked sad, angry or excited, he replied, "No, just normal."

Espinoza said he went to the motel lobby where he found other employees huddled around the fallen body of the singer.

Ms. Martinez's testimony was nearly identical as she told of a calm Ms. Saldivar carrying "a cowboy gun."

"I saw it real big," she said.

She said she also went to the lobby in hopes of helping Selena and described the singer falling to the floor as a desk clerk was trying to find out from her what happened.

"She said the lady in (Room) 158 — Yolanda — had shot her," Ms. Martinez said. "She was just screaming 'Help! Help!'"

Ms. Avalos said she saw Selena in the motel courtyard toward the back of the swimming pool. "She was running and screaming, 'Somebody help me,'" she said, describing the singer as bleeding from the back.

Ms. Martinez said she spotted a police officer who arrived at the motel and told him that Ms. Saldivar had climbed into a red pickup truck and was driving in the parking lot toward the lobby.

"I told the policeman, 'Hurry, hurry!'" she said. "I didn't want for her to escape.

"When the officer got in his car Yolanda parked. He parked right in back of her. He wanted to get close to her truck. Yolanda was screaming that she didn't do nothing."

That was the start of a standoff between police and the armed Ms. Saldivar, who finally surrendered more than nine hours later.

Both Selena's mother and Ms. Saldivar's mother left the courtroom during the maintenance man's testimony, the first to describe the shooting scene.

Earlier Thursday, a manicurist testified that the day before the slaying, Selena told her she planned to dismiss Ms. Saldivar, who was running some of Selena's non-music businesses.

Manicurist Celia Soliz said Selena expressed concern about Ms. Saldivar's shoddy record-keeping and told her the night of March 30 while getting her nails done that she planned to fire Ms. Saldivar.

"She was very upset," said Ms. Soliz, who works at Selena Etc., the singer's Corpus Christi boutique.

The same evening, Ms. Saldivar, toting a corporate American Express card belonging to Selena Etc., checked into the Days Inn in Corpus Christi.

Late the next morning on March 31, a supervisor at Doctors Regional Medical Center in Corpus Christi said Selena and a sullen Ms. Saldivar showed up at the emergency room for treatment because Ms. Saldivar reported that two men had raped her the previous day in Mexico.

"I didn't see any evidence to indicate that she had been assaulted," Patricia Biggs, the hospital's emergency room supervisor, testified.

A second nurse who examined Ms. Saldivar also said she could find no serious injuries although Ms. Saldivar had reported she was beaten repeatedly about the back and stomach with a bat.

Ms. Saldivar, dressed in a fuchsia jacket and white shirt, showed no reaction to the testimony Thursday.

Prosecutors are trying to show Ms. Saldivar, who over the years advanced from groupie to fan club president to business overseer, had changed her story repeatedly about an attack they believe never happened and was attempting to find an excuse for missing business records.

Selena's father, Abraham Quintanilla Jr., her husband, Chris Perez, and her sister, Suzette Quintanilla Arriaga, all testified Wednesday they had concerns about Ms. Saldivar's bookkeeping.

Selena was meeting with Ms. Saldivar to retrieve records when she was shot.

Prosecutors contend the slaying was premeditated. Defense attorneys argue the killing was an accident and that police left out Ms. Saldivar's claims that it was unintentional out of her confession.

BITES: County, city don't have similar animal control

(From 1A)

County government has no leash law and does not require dogs and cats to wear collars or their rabies-vaccination tags. However, rural pet owners may be required to show proof that their dogs and cats are vaccinated against the virus.

Mayor Bobby Burns said that the city wants to cooperate with the county.

"We hate to see duplication of services when it is not necessary," he said. "We sure don't want to duplicate services if we can avoid it. We've got to be frugal with the (taxpayers') money."

But the city's animal control did not recommend that Midland assume the county's dog-bite cases, he said.

Contracting with the county for those rabies-control services would not be economical for the city because expansion into the county would require additional manpower, another truck and, possibly, expanded animal-control facilities.

"The expense is what has got us worried," Burns said. "Really, the council never made a final decision" on the county's proposal.

Unlike the county, the city has leash-collar laws, enforces the leash laws for dogs and cats and requires those animals to display their proof-of-vaccination-against-rabies tags.

"If they (animals) bite a person, and you don't have them vaccinated for rabies, you might get in trouble," Mrs. Valencia figured. "I don't think that there is anything that enforces it (getting dogs and cats vaccinated against rabies)" in rural Midland County.

Mrs. Valencia, who lives in the county, said that she would never agree to a leash law in the county and would not recommend mandatory collars and tags for pets.

"I would recommend highly that they (dogs and cats) be vaccinated for rabies and that the owners have proof of those vaccinations," Mrs. Valencia said. "That doesn't necessarily mean they have to wear (collars and tags)."

In recognizing that "the city has got that expertise" in dealing with rabies control and rabid animals, Mrs. Valencia said that the city is "already taking care of our health problems. We supplement the (Midland) Health Department for various things."

STRATEGY: GOP's techniques pay off for president the Medicare overhaul is a part, to legislation that would raise the nation's debt limit above the current ceiling of $4.9 trillion. That legislation is needed to keep the federal government from defaulting on its obligations by mid-November.

Clinton on Thursday was equally adamant in saying he would not sign budget bills he could not live with.

"I would gladly, gladly terminate my tenure here if the price of continuing it was just shelving everything I believe in about this country," he said after a conference call with small-town hospital administrators in which he denounced the Republican budget as "especially devastating to rural hospitals and rural families."

For now, the administration is convinced that it has momentum on its side. That explains why the White House was privately far from displeased — despite a public round of partisan finger-pointing — when Gingrich and the Senate Republican leader, Bob Dole, abruptly cut off days of exploratory talks with the White House chief of staff, Leon Panetta, over whether a budget compromise was in sight.

Although the political dynamics could change if the budget dispute threatens messy government shutdowns and a federal default, the administration believes it has everything to gain by playing a waiting game on negotiations.

Officials say the daily repetition of accusations that the Republicans are hurting the elderly and working people has brought the country close to a pivotal moment of political definition comparable to that in the late summer of 1994, when a large swath of the American public decided that the president's health-care plan would amount to government intrusion into their private lives. The Democratic National Committee has extended for another week a television ad campaign against the Republicans' Medicare plans.

"Medicare has become a metaphor for the entire Republican revolution, and the debate over Medicare is really a values debate," said George Stephanopoulos, senior adviser to the president. "It says volumes about who we are, who we're fighting for, and who they are and who they're fighting for."

If that idea takes hold, White House officials argue, it will put increasing pressure on the Republicans to compromise, cause fractures in their ranks and also inoculate the president against blame if the budget battle brings days of crisis. At that point, they hope, large segments of the people will perceive Clinton as their defender.

OLYMPIC: Consumer affairs groups look into process

(From 1A)

People who lost out on tickets or didn't get all the ones they asked for received a form on which they can ask for a refund or order left-over tickets or souvenirs.

For Mrs. Stafford, the decision was a no-brainer.

"I was willing to spend $2,000 with them. Now, I'm not willing to spend anything," she said.

ACOG received $326 million worth of ticket orders and was able to fill orders for $124 million, said ticket director Scott Anderson. About 180,000 re-order forms have come in so far. About 53 percent of those are asking for other tickets, and 47 percent want a full refund.

The first batch of refunds will be mailed on Saturday, Anderson said.

Any consumer-affairs action against ACOG appears unlikely.

The New York City Department of Consumer Affairs, for example, recently complained about the ticket system and suggested to ACOG that checks and credit card authorizations should not have been banked until ticket orders were confirmed.

ACOG responded that the system was fair, said Rich Loconte, a Consumer Affairs spokesman.

"Unfortunately, we cannot go any further. What they've done is not illegal. We just believe it was unfair," he said. "To try to challenge the Olympic committee would be a large feat."

The Atlanta office of the Better Business Bureau has received a few complaints, said Ed Smith, president of the organization's Atlanta office.

"The dominant nature has been: A, we ordered tickets. B, we didn't get any. And C, they've got our money," Smith said.

Smith has asked ACOG for an explanation of the lottery system, but he declined to say whether the bureau might seek action. "I've only heard one side. I'd like to hear from the committee before making any wonderful pontifications," he said.

ACOG spokesman Dick Yarbrough said that with immense demand for Olympic tickets, a pre-paid lottery was the best way to process orders. The fact that about 30,000 orders had to be thrown out because of problems with credit cards or bad checks proved the need for advance payment, he said.

"The only way to make sure that the tickets were distributed absolutely fairly was to have the clear knowledge that ... everyone who wanted those tickets in fact had dollars in their wallet to pay for it," Anderson said.

"It makes you mad and it's frustrating," said Nancy Bubeck of Dillsburg, Pa., who is getting a $200 refund after getting part of her family's $600 ticket order. "But was there another way they could have done this fairly? I don't know if there was."

Iraq condems U.N. weapons inspector

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq's vice president on Thursday accused the chief U.N. weapons inspector of lying when he said Iraq misled the world about the size of its weapons programs.

Iraq also condemned the United States for saying the presidential referendum that Iraq will hold Sunday is a sham because Saddam Hussein is the only candidate on the ballot.

Posters and pictures of Saddam have been put up on buildings across central Baghdad encouraging Iraqis to vote for the 58-year-old leader and give him seven more years in power. One poster says, "Life is meaningless without the leader."

At the United Nations on Wednesday, Rolf Ekeus, the chief U.N. weapons inspector, said Iraq tested toxins on animals and misled U.N. monitors about the size of its weapons programs.

"Iraq's efforts to conceal its biological weapons program, its chemical missile warhead flight tests and work on the development of a missile for the delivery of a nuclear device led it to provide incorrect information concerning certain of its missile activities," Ekeus said in a report.

The United Nations imposed economic sanctions on Iraq after its 1990 invasion of Kuwait. U.N. Security Council members have repeatedly said they will not consider easing the sanctions until Iraq fully cooperates with the weapons monitors.

James P. Rubin, a spokesman for the U.S. mission at the United Nations, said the report shows Iraq's "vast deception effort" and how difficult it will be to prove it has complied with U.N. Security Council resolutions.

Iraqi Vice President Taha Muhieddine Maarouf on Thursday denied the charges at a ceremony at Martyr's Monument in Baghdad. The ceremony honored about 20 children Iraq says were killed when their nearby school was destroyed by missiles during the 1980-1988 Iran-Iraq war.

Dozens of elementary school children marched in a parade around the monument, singing songs and chanting "We are prepared to sacrifice our souls and selves for our leader, President Saddam Hussein."

Asked about Ekeus' report, Maarouf said: "He's lying, you see, about this." He said Iraq has fully cooperated with U.N. inspectors since it lost the Gulf War in 1991.

After the ceremony, the Ministry of Information condemned a U.S. comment about Iraq's referendum.

In Washington, Nicolas Burns, a State Department spokesman, said Wednesday that Iraq has had no democracy since Saddam took power in 1979.

"The idea of an election in which you get to vote for one person and no one else is really a mockery of democratic principles," said Burns.

In a statement, Iraq's Information Ministry said: "The comment ... shows the level of nervousness and the state of fiasco that the American administration has reached in dealing with Iraq."

West Texas Imaging Center

Sajjadul Islam, M.D.

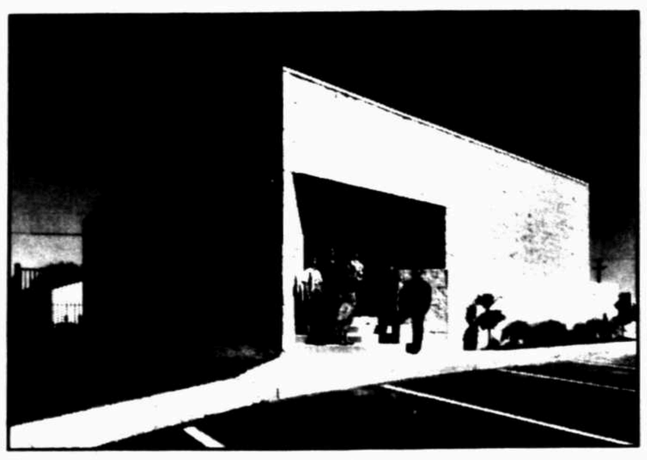

...is pleased to announce the establishment of a new Magnetic Resonance Imaging Center at Fourth Street and Muskingum in Odessa.

The Sigma® Advantage™ system, produced by General Electric, is state-of-the-art in every way, enabling physicians to see inside the human body in ways never before possible.

Because the system is considered non-invasive, it offers fewer risks than some diagnostic alternatives. In some instances, it may reduce the need for lengthy hospital stays, thereby holding down healthcare costs.

The addition of this new equipment greatly enhances the range of services currently available at West Texas Imaging Center.

West Texas Imaging is a full service facility providing CT scans, nuclear medicine, X-ray, fluoro and sonograms.

Sajjadul Islam, M.D., and staff are proud to bring this new service to physicians and residents of the Permian Basin.

Austrian government falls apart, Right wing stands to gain

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Austria's governing coalition fell apart Thursday, paving the way for December elections that could bring to power a right-wing populist who campaigns heavily on anti-foreigner sentiment.

After six days of late-night negotiations and mudslinging over the 1996 budget, the conservative People's Party of Vice Chancellor Wolfgang Schuessel ended its partnership with the Social Democrats of Chancellor Franz Vranitzky.

The two parties had governed Austria for nine years. Parliament was to dissolve Friday, with new elections expected Dec. 17.

Joerg Haider, who gained international notoriety in 1991 by praising Nazi employment policies, stands to gain the most from the debacle. The two leading parties share a distaste for the telegenic, 45-year-old politician who leads the right-wing Freedom Party.

The Social Democrats and People's Party joined together after elections a year ago in which Haider's party took votes from both of them.

But, after struggling over an austerity package, the governing parties could not overcome basic differences for the 1996 budget. The Social Democrats favored more taxes to help close $5 billion deficit, while the People's Party sought more cuts in Austria's generous social security net.

Haider's party had 5 percent of the vote when he took over in 1986. Last year, campaigning on an anti-foreigner, anti-corruption platform, Haider won 22.5 percent.

His party is now even with the two leading parties, with all three hovering between 25 and 29 percent in public opinion polls.

Political analysts predict a dirty, polarizing election fight this fall, saying Haider could come to power through an alliance with the People's Party, or Vranitzky could hang on, possibly in a coalition with smaller parties.

Critics see Haider as a dangerous right-winger who uses language, xenophobia and calls to law and order have right-wing overtones that appeal to neo-Nazis.

Just last week, Haider suggested that Austria should quit the European Convention on Human Rights rather than change its own strict anti-immigration laws to allow foreign residents to bring families with them.

Also, a leader of the Greens party won a supreme court ruling allowing him to call Haider "the foster father of right-wing terrorism."

"My God, the Austrians will give the right answer to that," Haider countered in an interview Thursday with the newsmagazine News. "They're not going to put up with it."

In the interview, Haider outlined plans for streamlining the national government from 21 ministers and state secretaries to seven, and developing an immense national security ministry.

Pirated American goods being produced in record numbers

BEIJING (AP) — Pirated copies of American software, compact discs and movies are being produced in record numbers despite an accord China signed earlier this year pledging to end the illegal practice, U.S. businessmen said Thursday.

While praising Chinese authorities for raiding retailers and seizing pirated goods, the businessmen said little has been done to halt production. They warned that China could face a renewed threat of U.S. trade sanctions.

The two countries were on the brink of a trade war before China agreed in February to specific measures to end piracy. U.S. Assistant Trade Representative Lee Sands is in Beijing this week for a regular review of China's progress in carrying out the agreement.

Also meeting with Chinese officials were representatives of the Software Publishers Association, the International Trademark Association, Warner Music and International Intellectual Property Alliance.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Chen Jian said Chinese authorities are making headway in implementing the accord.

"This is for all to see and is also recognized by the U.S. side," he told reporters.

But the Americans said only one of China's 27 to 33 compact disc manufacturers has stopped producing pirated goods.

Eric Smith, president of International Intellectual Property Alliance, said the production of pirated CDs has risen to record levels of 45 million discs annually.

Instead of music CDs, most now are more valuable CD videos, CD-ROMs and other computer software, he said.

Most of the pirate factories are located in southern China, but their low-cost copies can be bought off the street and in computer stores in most major cities throughout the country.

Many of the facilities also produce copyrighted materials under license and use the same production lines and molds to make pirated versions.

For music and movie CDs, the quality of the copycats is identical to the genuine article. Representatives of the computer software industry say pirated versions are more likely to contain viruses and defects.

Honors continue for boy hero

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Another day, another honor for Larry Champagne III, the 10-year-old who's been feted by celebrities, politicians, broadcasters and reporters.

On Thursday, it was another all-school assembly with gifts and special visitors to honor Larry, a fifth-grader who took control of his school bus Oct. 3 when the driver suffered a stroke.

"As Larry has said, a hero's work is never done," the principal, Dr. Kenneth Russell, said as he called Larry to a special seat by the podium.

Larry squirmed, smiled at his Bellerive Elementary School classmates and stifled a yawn after taking his seat.

But he was all grins when representatives from Laidlaw Bus Co. presented him with a hefty St. Louis Rams jacket, a hat and tickets to a game.

They also announced a $10,000 donation to the Larry Champagne III college education fund, to a chorus of "wows" from the audience.

Will it ever get back to normal?

"I don't know," said his grandfather, Jerry Baker. "It's been a whirlwind week. We're getting calls from all over."

Larry was riding to school on Bus No. 3 last week when he saw the driver, Ernestine Blackman, slump down and slide from her seat. He raced to the front of the careening bus from his seat halfway back, stomped on the brake and brought it to a halt. Other students then came to his aid.

Blackman remains hospitalized but is doing much better, school officials said.

At the assembly Thursday, Gov. Mel Carnahan congratulated Larry and ribbed him about being a celebrity. Larry had just returned from trips to New York and Los Angeles, where he appeared on NBC's "Today" show, "Nightly News," and "Tonight Show with Jay Leno."

I'd like to take this opportunity to tell you something about myself and this revolutionary method of auto repair.

Midland has been my home all of my adult life. I've been in the Air Conditioning business since 1981 and started my own business "Air Control" in 1989. Four years ago The Paintless Dent Repair System came into my life. When I saw this amazing method of Dent Removal, I had to learn it. This method does not use ice or heat. I have specially designed tools to go behind the metal and work the dent out slowly to where it vanishes before my very eyes. What is so great about this is that you do not have to repaint and are able to keep your factory paint. Where you might have your car stay at the regular body shop for one to two weeks, I can do it in two to four days, unless damage is severe. Thus, you do not have to worry about paint mismatches or body fillers cracking a year or two later. All in all the bottom line is that you will spend 30% to 50% less to have your vehicle fixed and brought back to original form.. All work is 100% guaranteed.

With the recent hail storm there has been an influx of out of town hail damage repair businesses moving in. After the hail storms have passed, all damage repaired and the others are long gone, I will still be here. You can count on the Dent Angel now, and in the future.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Jim Sicard

Prep school teacher faces more evidence in child sex scandal

DOVER, N.H. (AP) — Prosecutors said Thursday they have evidence that a former Phillips Academy teacher charged with nearly 600 counts of child pornography used the same ruse on children in Maine eight years ago.

David Cobb was arrested Aug. 23 after allegedly trying to lure three Farmington children into his car by offering them jobs at a nonexistent camp.

Police said he had pictures of naked adults and children in his knapsack, along with a pumpkin head mask and a list of sexual acts to be performed on the "Pumpkin Man."

Prosecutor Lincoln Soldati alleged that in both the Maine and New Hampshire cases, Cobb approached young teens and asked them to help retarded youngsters take off their bathing suits.

In Maine, Cobb allegedly approached three boys and girl on his BMW motorcycle, saying a retarded youngster had sand in his suit and needed help rubbing lotion on his body.

Soldati said Cobb persuaded two of the children to follow him down a wooded lane and told them to wait there for the retarded boy.

He also told them, Soldati said, that the boy would be wearing a pumpkin mask because he wanted to be anonymous, and he could not talk.

"Mr. Cobb disappears into the woods, and low and behold, a couple of minutes later, out comes a ... male dressed in nothing but a swim suit and a pumpkin mask," he said.

The person gave one of the boys the lotion, pulled down his bathing suit and was fondled by a boy.

"The Pumpkin Man then disappears back in the woods. A few minutes later, Mr. Cobb reappears, thanks them for their help with the retarded child and takes off," Soldati said.

The encounter in Farmington in August was "extraordinarily similar, too similar to be more coincidence," he said.

Cobb initially was arrested on charges he tried to kidnap the three Farmington children. He was freed on bail on those charges, which the state decided not to pursue after he was charged with one count of sexual assault and 595 counts of child pornography. He has not been charged with the Maine case.

At Thursday's bail hearing on the assault and pornography charges, Judge Joseph Nadeau denied Soldati's request that Cobb be held on $1 million cash bail. Nadeau set bail at $200,000, and Cobb was free by afternoon.

At the hearing, defense lawyer Philip Utter asked for a $20,000 bail, saying his client would not flee and $1 million bail was "completely out of line."

The sexual assault charge alleges that Cobb offered a 12-year-old boy $20 to accompany him to a secluded area.

FBI expands search for saboteur to include neighborhood, Amtrak employees

HYDER, Ariz. (AP) — The FBI broadened its search Thursday for the saboteur who derailed an Amtrak train, checking tire tracks in the desert several miles away, knocking on doors in the sparsely populated area and interviewing railroad employees.

About 40 of the 90 agents who have been working near the site of Monday's crash fanned out to interview residents and others, said Robert Walsh, the FBI agent running the investigation.

About 20 other agents were sent back to their home offices from the crash scene 55 miles southwest of Phoenix, where Amtrak's Sunset Limited derailed on a sabotaged stretch of track and tumbled into a gulch. One crew member was killed and at least 78 people were injured.

The saboteur unbolted a bar that holds two rails together, loosened or removed spikes and used a wire to bypass a system intended to warn crews of a break in the track.

Several copies of a letter alluding to the federal sieges at Waco, Texas, and Ruby Ridge, Idaho, and signed "Sons of Gestapo" were found at the scene.

One of the sleeper cars that was lying on its side in the stream bed was hoisted by a giant crane and set upright on the tracks. The 65-ton coach appeared largely undamaged; even the windows that had been against the ground were unbroken.

The FBI has been given access to Amtrak personnel records, according to the railroad. Walsh refused to comment on that, but said agents were interviewing employees of the rail company and Southern Pacific Railroad, which owns the track.

He cautioned against interpreting that to mean investigators have fixed on the theory the saboteur was a disgruntled railroad employee.

"That would be quite a stretch. If they really wanted to target the railroads, I think that's what they would have focused on more in the letter," Walsh said.

Agents also have collected information on anti-government militia groups, he said, again warning against concluding the FBI is leaning toward that theory.

"It's very broad. It's still open to everyone," Walsh said.

Agents even copied the subscriber list of an obscure railroad magazine that published an article detailing a 56-year-old case of track sabotage in Nevada that paralleled the Amtrak case down to disabling the warning system.

The magazine, Southern Pacific Trainline, which has 30 subscribers in Arizona and 1,800 total, was put in the mail in Kansas on Oct. 3, less than a week before the wreck.

On what was expected to be the FBI's last full day on the scene, agents in vehicles and on foot traveled several miles from the site to a spot where tire tracks were spotted from the air. They took plaster casts of the tracks and returned to a command post; Walsh described the actions as routine.

Investigators were hampered by temperatures that reached 114 — causing at least one case of dehydration — and the normal hazards of the desert.

"You have to tell them how to avoid rattlesnakes, how to avoid cactus, and how to avoid injury," Walsh said.

Attorney General Janet Reno again appealed for public help. The FBI has set up a hot line for receiving tips.

She refused to discuss what evidence had been uncovered and said it would be premature to guess the motive for the sabotage.

"Those who perpetrate such incidents must be told loud and clear," Reno said, "that every federal resource will be put to the effort to find and punish them to the full extent of the law."

She declined to say whether the death penalty would be appropriate in this case.

Suspended student kills self, two teachers

BLACKVILLE, S.C. (AP) — A suspended student whose father said he sometimes got picked on because he was small walked into his high school Thursday, shot and seriously wounded a teacher, then killed himself.

A second teacher died, although authorities were unsure whether she was shot or suffered a heart attack.

Toby R. Sincino, 16, was expelled early last school year but was back on probationary status. He was suspended again Wednesday after making an obscene gesture on a school bus and faced another expulsion.

On Thursday, he walked through a back door at Blackville-Hilda High School armed with a .32-caliber revolver. He strode by two classrooms and entered a third where he fired the gun at math teacher Johnny Thompson, 38, investigators said.

Sincino continued down the hall where he apparently confronted another math teacher, 56-year-old Phyllis Senn, who was later found dead in a teachers' work room, State Law Enforcement Division spokesman Hugh Munn said. No wounds were visible on her body and an autopsy would be conducted Friday to determine how she died.

Thompson was in serious but stable condition, said Rubenia Hammond, a spokeswoman for Aiken Regional Medical Centers.

Sincino's father, Randolph, said his son was a small boy who sometimes was picked on by other students in this rural town of 3,000 people about 45 miles south of Columbia.

"The only time he had a temper is when somebody kicked at him. I know a couple of times when he tried to stand up for his rights," the father said.

A cousin, Eric McCrary, said other children would lock Sincino, who was less than 5 feet tall, in lockers or dump him upside down in trash cans.

Sincino's sister, Mary Ann, a high school sophomore, said her brother was a private person.

"Toby always kept secrets. He always kept to himself. All we know is how his behavior was (and) it was good," she said.

Mexico still needs political reform

Two years of upheaval in Mexico has cracked a once-monolithic political establishment, but the transition from authoritarianism to democracy is incomplete. President Ernesto Zedillo, who met with President Clinton on Tuesday, has demonstrated more commitment to political reform than any recent Mexican leader. But he has run into strong opposition within his own, ruling party.

The Clinton administration can help him by demonstrating that the United States attaches as much importance to his desire to free Mexico's politics as it does to opening its economy. Mexico's economic and social stability will be increasingly at risk until an outdated system of unaccountable political power is transformed.

Washington has always offered rhetorical support to Mexican democracy, but its private messages have been ambiguous. Successive administrations have known that elements of Mexico's ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party or PRI stole elections and protected drug traffickers. But as long as Mexican leaders promoted market reform and presented themselves as guarantors of stability, Washington raised no protest.

The PRI in its present state, however, is no longer a force for stability. Its original 1994 presidential candidate was assassinated, and rogue elements of the PRI are suspected of involvement. Its secretary general was gunned down in Mexico City, and the brother of former President Salinas is accused of masterminding the crime. Armed rebels in Chiapas won widespread support by demanding a more democratic political system.

Zedillo won the presidency last year in the least tainted election in decades. Though thrown off balance by an inherited financial crisis, he took promising early steps to cleanse the political system, for example appointing an independent attorney general to probe last year's assassinations. But Mexico still has a long way to go. Judges are not independent. Police torture of suspects is common. Recently the assassination investigations have stalled. Opposition from ruling party barons may be just too powerful.

Zedillo must break through this impasse. He must thoroughly separate the ruling party from the machinery of government. Without this, there can be no fair multi-party competition.

Debate on Mexico in this country has focused on the North American Free Trade Agreement, which despite the setback of the peso crisis is working reasonably well, and on this year's loan guarantees, which Mexico is paying back.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, or you may fax to 682-3793.

Today in History

Today is Friday, Oct. 13, the 286th day of 1995. There are 79 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 13, 1792, the cornerstone of the executive mansion, later known as the White House, was laid during a ceremony in the District of Columbia.

On this date:

In A.D. 54, Roman emperor Claudius I died, after being poisoned by his wife, Agrippina.

In 1775, the United States Navy had its origins as the Continental Congress ordered the construction of a naval fleet.

In 1944, during World War II, American troops entered Aachen, Germany.

In 1981, voters in Egypt participated in a referendum to elect Vice President Hosni Mubarak the new president, one week after the assassination of Anwar Sadat.

GOP Medicare reform means backsliding

WASHINGTON -- The GOP plan to "reform" Medicaid amounts to the federal government playing the role of Robin Hood in reverse.

Anderson

While the poor and disabled will be forced to dig deeper into their pockets to pay for their health care, the GOP plan will make it easier for Medicaid providers to line their own pockets at taxpayer expense. For although the $169 billion-per-year Medicaid program needs to be brought under fiscal control, there is virtually nothing in the GOP plan that would curb the 10 percent of Medicaid spending that is lost to fraud, waste and abuse each year.

Clinton administration experts warn that the GOP plan would actually weaken the few laws that help law enforcement officials fight Medicaid fraud. Money would be stripped from federal law enforcement agencies that are already fighting a losing battle against unscrupulous care providers. And the number of criminal convictions would likely go down, as GOP provisions would make it harder for the government to prove that fraud has been committed.

Under current law, the government only needs to prove that a doctor or nursing home has failed to use "reasonable diligence" in making sure Medicaid claims are true and accurate. Under the Republican plan, doctors would only be liable if they were found guilty of "deliberate ignorance" or "reckless disregard" for the truth.

Even so, by turning virtually the entire program over to the states in the form of "block grants," the GOP may be imposing an enforcement burden that will prove too great for some localities to contend with. Even without the current cutbacks, state officials have complained for years that there are too few cops chasing too many Medicaid robbers.

A recent report by the General Accounting Office sums up the problem: "Officials in many states told us that most leads are not pursued, cases take too long to resolve and penalties are light even for those convicted. Most say that lack of adequate resources limits oversight, investigative and prosecutorial efforts."

As a result, many fraud cases tend to slip through the cracks. In California, for example, GAO investigators found a pharmacist who was dispensing improbably high volumes of drugs. For three years, the pharmacist was billing Medicaid for as many as 20 prescriptions per day for a single recipient. Nevertheless, his actions never triggered a state investigation.

In Florida, the state agency that administers Medicaid estimates that 90 percent of its fraud referrals are rejected by the federal government for a lack of resources. And when cases are opened, they tend to become marathon probes that yield light convictions. Government investigators found that in Florida fraud cases, it took almost three years before offenders were kicked out of the Medicaid program and more than five years before most perpetrators lost their license -- if they did so at all.

One of the favorite targets for Medicaid scams has been prescription drugs. Schemes include pharmacists routinely adding medications to customers' orders and clinics inappropriately providing Medicaid recipients with completed prescription forms, or scrips, that may be sold on the street to the highest bidder. Some pills costing 50 cents at the pharmacy have been resold for as much as $85.

In Florida, some pharmacies have also accepted the scrips in exchange for tennis shoes, TV sets, toaster ovens and a grandfather clock.

CHARLEY REESE

Transfer burden of welfare into private sector

What's wrong with providing $8 billion to pay for child care for welfare mothers, as the U.S. Senate voted to do?

Reese

If you don't know the answer, then you probably don't understand the immorality of the welfare state.

What's wrong with providing $8 billion to buy child care for welfare mothers is that the $8 billion must be taken from the labor of mothers and fathers who are working hard to stay off welfare.

Thus these people, families and single moms must not only pay for their own child care, their own housing and their own medical care, but they must also pay for the child care of women on welfare. And they are already paying for the welfare recipient's housing, medical care, food stamps and monthly check.

The inescapable truth, since government has no money of its own, is that a welfare state turns morality upside down. The welfare state rewards indolence and taxes labor; it rewards irresponsibility and punishes (with taxes) responsible behavior; it subsidizes dependency and punishes independence.

In other words, when you live in a welfare state and play by the traditional rules of working hard, saving, postponing gratification and taking care of yourself and your family, then you lose.

The welfare state puts a millstone around your neck so that you must not only support your family but other people's families as well. And, if you complain, you will be called selfish and other bad names.

This sordid confiscation and redistribution of the fruits of labor is bad enough, but then we have to listen to the odious rhetoric of senators pretending to be great, compassionate philanthropists.

"We must do this and we must do that," they thunder. Well, OK, you do it, senators. Take the money out of your checking accounts and provide these things you call necessities for welfare moms. Most of you are millionaires anyway.

Certainly from the look of Sen. Ted Kennedy, one of the worst of the pseudo-philanthropists, anything that would discourage him from eating and drinking his ample personal fortune would be beneficial to his health.

But don't take this money out of the hides of hard-working men and women and then regale us with hot-air speeches about your generosity. Wage earners, too poor to take advantage of loopholes and to hire fancy tax lawyers, are being taxed to death by the phony compassion of welfare-state socialists.

The present tax system -- an inescapable part of the welfare state -- is especially vicious because it taxes the same labor over and over. People are taxed when they earn; when they spend, they are taxed again; if they save, they are taxed again; if they invest, they are taxed again; and when they die, they are taxed again. When their children inherit -- if they inherit -- they fall victim to the multiple taxing system.

Americans have been duped into adopting a vile, unjust system by being fed pap about compassion not only by politicians but by the welfare industry and by the press.

Government is not human and therefore cannot deal in either charity or compassion. As a Western judge once said of corporations, the government "has no pants to kick or soul to damn."

Government can apply force (its main function) or refrain from applying force. It can confiscate money and award money. But it cannot practice charity, because to take from one at the point of a gun to give to another is theft, not charity.

Welfare should be an entirely private function, and the government should end the practice altogether at the federal level and do it only for the truly disabled at the state level.

Otherwise, pols will continue to enslave one group to buy the votes of another.

People should support CAF with air show ticket sales

After attending the air show this year, I came home and switched on the TV to catch the news. I was surprised to find Channel 2 had interviewed several individuals that watched the air show from outside the airport fence along Business 20. As the Channel 2 reporter asked why they watched the show from the roadside, each person in turn extolled the benefits of their vantage points.

The sponsor of the show (the Confederate Air Force) is a non-profit organization and uses the revenue gleaned from the air show to finance their museum and various community events. It seems to me that Channel 2 is doing the CAF and the community a disservice promoting ways in which people can get a "freebie" at the CAF's expense.

It should be remembered that the purpose of the CAF is to restore and maintain World War II aircraft and to assure that Americans do not forget the sacrifice, sometimes the ultimate sacrifice, that many of our mothers and fathers made during those trying times.

This whole matter is singularly distressing in light of the recent B-26 incident and Channel 2's advertisement. Do we think of the friends and family of those involved, or do we only think of the profit line? Veterans and the CAF should be supported, not exploited.

"Lest we forget."

Don't put any money on O.J.-related items

Kudos to Bob Darlington for his excellent letter on the O.J. Simpson trial (Opinion, Oct. 8). If you agree with his analysis (as I do), then do not put one dime of your money in the pockets of O.J. Simpson, the jury members, the attorneys, etc. It seems to me that to do so would be comparable to dancing on the graves of the two victims.

Guilt concept stops many parents from doing right

Having had the opportunity to observe some parents, I want to pass along some unsolicited advice. Like other parents who would be honest about it, I admit I made mistakes. But I also recognize by the lives of our sons, that my husband and I did some very right things.

I am deeply concerned with a trend I now see in some parents. Evidently, some techniques they use are found in books written and espoused by some pseudo-intellectuals.

This idea of "hitting your kids teaches them to be violent" is pure nonsense! This guilt-laden concept has stopped many parents from doing what is right. Properly done, a spanking will instill self-control in the child until he learns this for himself or until you can reason with him. One only need look at the many negative behaviors today, much of which is attributed to the generations raised on the concepts of Dr. Spock and his ilk, to see what this "hands-off" policy has reaped.

Of course, there are extremes to everything and I would never advocate slapping or beating a child. That action definitely could lead to violence. But if you love your children, you will see that they behave themselves and not cause others grief or discomfort. They won't hate you for spanking them; they'll love you for caring enough to help them learn to act right.

School district bans Halloween festivities

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — There will be no Halloween parade in the schoolyard this year. No 9-year-old witches haunting the halls. No jack-o'-lanterns colored by earnest first-graders — unless they're offered a non-satanic alternative.

Halloween has been banned from the Los Altos schools to comply with the policy that already bans Christmas carols, Hanukkah songs and Easter eggs. The future also looks doubtful for those paper dragons used to celebrate Chinese New Year.

Some parents in the wealthy community overlooking Silicon Valley see the no-Halloween policy as political correctness gone mad.

Patrick Ferrell's 7-year-old daughter came home from school and said the teacher told them "the Halloween parade would feed the devil" — or at least that's how she understood it, he said Thursday.

"She's confused. I'm confused," Ferrell said. "We sanitize our schools and then wonder why our kids come out politically corrected, with less of a sense of identity, of values. It's a damn shame."

But the school board president, Phil Faillace, who informed parents of the rule, sees it as just the opposite. The board discussed it at the Oct. 2 meeting and interpreted the holiday policy to include Halloween.

"We're restoring values to the schools," Faillace said. "We're saying the value is in understanding and learning about a variety of beliefs about religious issues, not just one side."

Faillace said that since January, the board has examined the curriculum to eliminate practices that appear to favor any one belief. Some devout Christian families see Halloween as a satanic holiday, and complained that their children were forced to participate in the celebration.

"The board has to acknowledge Halloween's roots in Druid ceremonies and in a Celtic festival for Samhain, the Celts' god of the dead," Faillace said in the Bullis-Purissima Elementary School bulletin informing parents of the no-Halloween rule.

The policy means no Halloween parties on school time and no parades. Teachers can hand out coloring pages with jack-o'-lanterns on them, but they must have alternatives such as faceless pumpkins, too.

That's too much for Mark Euchner, whose three sons attend Bullis-Purissima School, as well as the First Baptist Church.

"Halloween was a fun time — you can't take that away from kids," he said. "If someone has a problem with that, they can maybe teach their kids better at home."

Some see promotion for Farrakhan in march on Washington, D.C.

BOSTON — For some Bostonians, the mass march of black men on Washington Monday will be a much-needed first step toward self-determination, a clarion call for black men to save their communities despite racism and social ills.

But to others, the Million Man March, the brainchild of Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, looks like cheap window dressing and the "coronation" of a self-promoter.

Local dissension mirrors national debate over the march and its merits. National figures such as Rev. Jesse Jackson and the Congressional Black Caucus support it while some mainstream organizations, such as the National Urban League and two major black religious groups, the National Baptist Convention and the Progressive National Baptist Convention, which together consist of more than 10 million people, do not.

The march strikes an especially harsh chord with black women who criticize its all-male character as exclusionary. Other black women support and embrace the effort.

The march is expected to draw some 3,000 Boston area black men, Minister Don Muhammad, a local Nation of Islam leader, said this week. They will travel by bus Sunday from Grove Hall to Washington.

Opinions for and against the march, its format and its creator, are on the lips of almost everyone in Boston's black community.

Darryl Jackson, 30, of Roxbury, said he wanted to march, but his responsibilities to his young son, Darryl Jr., would keep him home.

"This march will reunite brothers and sisters," he said as his son played at his knees on Blue Hill Avenue. "Maybe crime will stop. Maybe the killings will stop. Maybe young people will get a good look at what's going on."

But Tony Cheeks, 27, an unemployed man who can't afford the $45 that organizers are charging for the bus ride, observed: "For me, this march is going to do absolutely nothing."

In Grove Hall after his daily search for a job, Cheeks said, however, that "For America, it's going to let them know that black Americans exist."

Despite misgivings, the event appears to enjoy a groundswell of support in Boston. Few question the validity of its stated goal of galvanizing black men to take control of their communities.

"There's a spirit out here for self-development, where black folks have finally gotten to the point where we realize that we have to look internally for our own development," said Sadiki Kambon, chairman of the Million Man March Mobilization Committee for Greater Boston.

The march aims to gather as many as 1 million black and Hispanic men to collectively acknowledge past wrongs to their own communites and families and to commit themselves to working toward solutions to a host of pres-sing social problems.

It may lead to the formation of a political action committee and a voter registration drive that may pull in millions of heretofore uncounted black votes, theoretically giving blacks in the United States greater political leverage, organizers say.

Minister Don, who heads Nation of Islam Mosque No. 11 in Grove Hall, said the area men who have signed up to go will be inspired to come back to Boston and work to improve the black and Hispanic neighborhoods of the city.

State Sen. Dianne Wilkerson (D-South End), said she senses in the black community the same electricity that pervaded the air before the historic March on Washington in 1963, where Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his "I Have a Dream" speech.

"I can't be there but that's OK," she said from her State House office.

Wilkerson recently sent letters to black women, urging them to help send off the busloads of men.

Farrakhan has urged women to stay home from work, to teach their children at home and to refrain from making purchases in stores as a show of support.

In a show of support, members of the Boston Chapter of the Coalition of 100 Black Women will pack lunches for the men.

But other black women have expressed displeasure with Farrakhan and the march.

In a letter to the Washington Post, Mary Frances Berry, chairwoman of the US Commission on Civil Rights, called Farrakhan's views "despicable."

"Mr. Farrakhan routinely expresses the most despicable anti-Semitic, racist, sexist and homophobic attitudes imaginable," she said.

Locally, Rev. Eugene Rivers, who is viewed by many as a liberal thinker, and Rev. E.W. Jackson, who is considered a conservative, each had reservations, saying that the march's outcome may be compromised by its controversial creator.

"This is Farrakhan's attempt to have himself crowned emperor of black America," said Rev. Rivers, pastor of the Azusa Christian Community and a member of the Ten-Point Coalition, a group of activist ministers who have harshly criticized Farrakhan.

Rev. E.W. Jackson, who said he has discussed the march on his radio show and will be speaking about it at a lecture in Washington on Monday, said he was "disturbed" by the march because it might bestow greater power and legitimacy on Farrakhan.

"It seems to me you can't give a sugar pill which coats poison and say it's good for people," he said.

"The sugar is personal responsibility and family and entrepreneurship," he said. "Louis Farrakhan adds a very sinister element... his continued preoccupation with bitterness, hatred and viewing all white people as the enemy."

Distance learning links classes

UTPB teachers to use 'classroom without walls' concept

■ 2-way television allows colleges to pool resources and offer courses not otherwise available to students.

Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The classroom of the future has arrived in the Permian Basin. Soon, University of Texas of the Permian Basin teachers will be able to teach classes and respond to students at area community colleges through a two-way television system.

Billed as "classrooms without walls," the concept will be made possible by interactive televisions with the technology of REACH (Regional Electronic Academic Communication Highway) for West Texas.

"REACH will be testing the waters with a calculus class," said UTPB spokeswoman Teri Brooks. "Students from another campus can take the course at their campus, taught by UTPB faculty, and get credit at their college."

According to REACH Program Center interim director Doug Hale, the concept of distance learning allows an instructor at one site to both see and hear students at other sites by way of video cameras and monitors. Plans call for the class to be broadcast from each campus at least once during a semester.

"REACH will link classrooms across the Permian Basin, offering more educational opportunities to students," said Midland College President David Daniel.

Ms. Brooks said the televised classes will allow students at community colleges to take a course that might not otherwise be offered at their campuses in cases where not enough students sign up for it. "It's one way of pooling resources," she said.

"The distances in West Texas will be shorter with this state-of-the-art technology," said Howard College President Cheryl Sparks. "This is a new educational frontier for our colleges."

In addition to two-way capabilities, the high capacity network created by REACH will allow all partner schools full electronic access to library resources and Internet connections. Once in place, REACH could also make it easier for the transfer of student records between participating schools.

The first two-way course to be offered is a third-semester calculus class. It will be offered in January 1996.

REACH is being offered through efforts of the Permian Basin Higher Education Consortium. Members of the consortium include Howard College in Big Spring, Midland College, Odessa College, and UTPB.

The 74th Legislature approved more than $700,000 for REACH over the next two years. Additional funding for REACH is available through the $150 million annual Telecommunications Infrastructure Fund created by House Bill 2128. Projects being given priority are collaborative efforts between universities, public schools and libraries.

City of Midland to fill vacancy of council seat

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The city of Midland will accept applications for the vacant District 4 City Council position through November 2. Interested individuals may pick up applications at the City Secretary's Office located on the fourth floor of City Hall.

The City Council is scheduled to conduct public interviews on Nov. 9 and make an appointment at its regular meeting on Nov. 14.

The selected individual will serve in the position until June 3, 1996. Although council terms are two years, replacements serve only the remainder of the unexpired period.

The public service of sitting on the council — which regularly meets twice monthly — is rewarded with a $25 per month stipend.

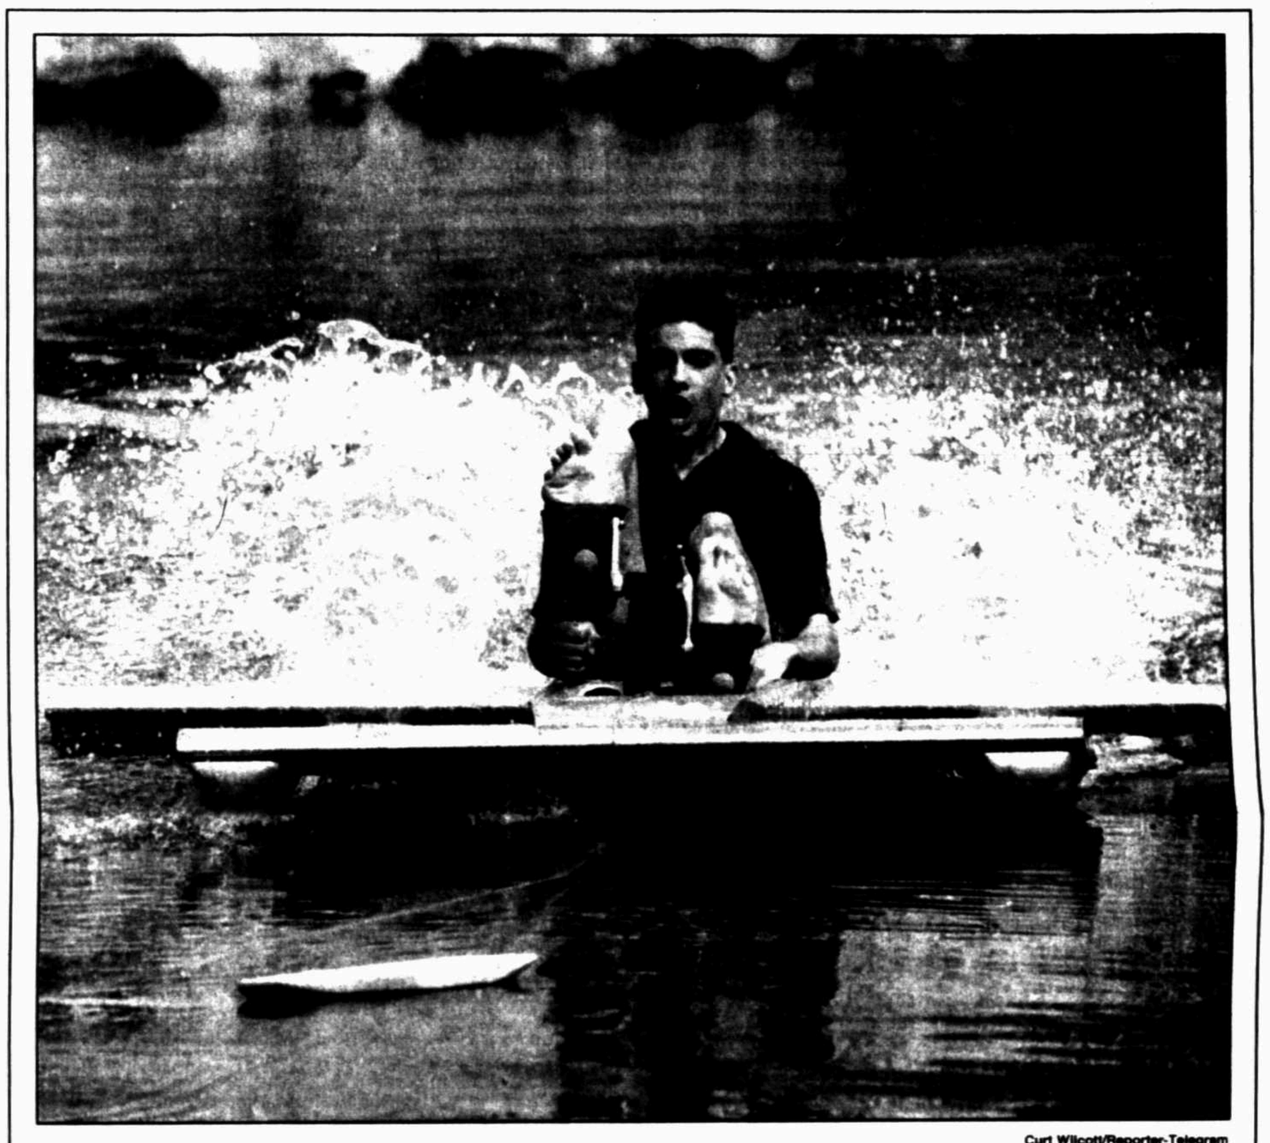

District 4 generally covers southwest Midland. The area is bounded on the east by Midkiff Road, and Midland Drive north of Cuthbert Avenue; bounded on the south by Business 20 and on the north by Wadley Avenue; and extends west to the city limits.

Eligibility requirements include being a resident of the district, a qualified voter, mentally competent and not a convicted felon unless legally excused as stated under city provisions.

Applications include questions about one's education, current employment, public service experience and prior public offices held. Other questions address perceptions of the role of the council, any prior business before the council, main issues facing the city, goals for the city, and reasons for seeking the position.

The District 4 seat was recently vacated by Claudia Egan, who resigned from the council due to personal reasons and because she was moving outside of her district.

Ms. Egan represented that district for about three and a half years. She successfully ran against incumbent Tom Johnston and James E. Radtke in 1992, then ran unopposed in May 1994 for a second term.

First Steps volunteers work to prevent child abuse through positive parenting

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

ODESSA — Working to prevent child abuse before it happens is the goal of volunteers for the First Steps program at Medical Center Hospital.

"First Steps is set up as a positive parenting program to help mostly young families," said First Steps Coordinator Anna Garza.

A nationwide program, First Steps utilizes volunteers to follow up with new parents, focusing on teens and other at-risk parents, although any new families will be eligible to participate, Ms. Garza said.

The program is designed to provide support, information and education for new parents via a trained staff of volunteers.

"Parents who have this type of support and information are more likely to establish child relationships and environments that promote healthy growth and development of children," according to First Steps information.

Volunteers are required to attend two training sessions and spend a minimum of 20 hours per month for at least three months with the new parents they are matched with.

The volunteers will be trained in areas to coincide with the goals of the program.

The goals include personal support for new families, reinforcement of the skills and strengths needed for quality parenting, facilitation of emotional preparation for parenthood, increased awareness of the available community resources, prevention of child abuse and neglect by helping to reduce isolation of new families, and identification of families with the potential for problem parenting and early referral to appropriate supportive services.

Volunteers are screened and must meet certain qualifications including maintaining confidentiality, accepting differences in a non-judg-

Popular Olive Garden Italian restaurant opens soon

A sign announcing that Olive Garden is hiring is attached to the restaurant chain's sign on Loop 250. The eagerly-awaited restaurant will open Monday.

Of the numerous restaurant openings in Midland in the last 18 months, perhaps the most anticipated is that of the Olive Garden restaurant, located on Loop 250 just west of Garfield St.

Hungry diners only have to wait a few more days, as the Orlando, Fla.-based restaurant chain plans to open its newest location on Monday, Oct. 16.

"We are excited to be in Midland," said Olive Garden spokeswoman Cathie Weinberg, adding that the company had considered Midland for some time before choosing a location and constructing its restaurant. "We choose communities that will support our business and we get involved with and support the communities we enter."

The Olive Garden will employ between 100 and 150 Midlanders.

When Olive Garden opens this coming Monday, it will employ between 100 and 150 Midlanders.

The large, trattoria-style restaurant is decorated with al fresco murals in a garden setting. The menu features dishes from northern and southern Italy, from soft toasted garlic breadsticks to appetizers such as toasted ravioli, calamari and bruschetta to entrees such as lasagna, manicotti and Chicken Marsala, Steak Tuscany, fettuccine Alfredo and capellini pomodoro. Italian wines are served by the glass or bottle and the restaurant offers unlimited refills on non-alcoholic drinks, house salad, breadsticks and homemade soups. Full bar service is available along with a dessert menu and espresso or capuccino.

Prices are moderate, with lunch averaging $5 to $8 and dinner $10 to $13. Hours are 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Employees of the restaurant chain live by the golden rule of "Hospitaliano," described as an attitude of caring for the customer and for each other. It is exemplified by helping other employees and making sure the customer comes first, from opening the door when the customer enters and leaves to bringing a basket of soft breadsticks to the table when the customer first arrives.

Olive Garden has locations in 46 states and three in Canada.

Comptroller appeals decision in state franchise tax case

By Michael Totty
The Wall Street Journal's Texas Journal

AUSTIN — Texas Comptroller John Sharp is back in court, trying to prevent a possible billion-dollar run on the Texas Treasury.

In a case pending in Austin's Third Court of Appeals, Caterpillar Inc. is challenging the way the comptroller treats retirees' medical benefits when figuring a company's state franchise tax.

So far, the Peoria, Ill., heavy-equipment maker has won the first round. In March, an Austin District Court judge sided with Caterpillar, which argued that the comptroller's policy violates a federal law that forbids state interference in federally approved employee-benefit plans. The comptroller — the state's chief tax collector — appealed.

Although only about $3.5 million is at stake in the case, dozens of other companies have mounted their own challenge to the policy. The comptroller's office estimates that if Caterpillar prevails, the state might have to pay more than $1 billion in refunds to thousands of companies.

The effect on future tax revenue wouldn't be as great, because of changes made in 1991 in the way franchise taxes are assessed. Still, the comptroller's office says losing the appeal would cost Texas tens of millions of dollars in revenue annually.

"It's a pretty important issue, with potentially significant fiscal impacts," says Bill Allaway, executive vice president of the Texas Association of Taxpayers, a business lobby group on tax issues.

The franchise tax is the primary state tax on business activity, bringing in about $1.4 billion a year. Before 1991, Texas assessed franchise taxes based on a portion of a company's taxable capital— basically, assets minus liabilities. In the case of a multinational company such as Caterpillar, the figure is adjusted to reflect its business presence in Texas. (Since 1991, franchise taxes have been based on either a company's taxable capital or its "earned surplus" — derived from its adjusted net income in Texas — whichever is larger. About three-quarters of the 327,000 franchise-tax payers in Texas use the capital formula, but it now accounts for only about a quarter of total franchise taxes.)

Caterpillar, which has extensive overhaul and warehouse operations in Texas, filed suit in 1993, seeking a refund for part of the franchise taxes it has paid since 1988, when a new franchise-tax law took effect.

The law was designed to close several loopholes that threatened to gut franchise-tax collections. Among the loopholes: counting long-term contingencies, such as employee benefits, as debt in reducing taxable capital.

Caterpillar argues that it should be allowed to deduct from its franchise-tax base more than $1.2 billion in anticipated payments to current and future retirees for medical and life-insurance benefits. It contends that the actuarial estimates of the amount are as certain as any other debt. (In fact, since 1990, national accounting rules have required companies to treat postretirement health benefits as liabilities on their balance sheets.)

Other companies have taken the state to court on the long-term-debt issue. J.C. Penney Co., for instance, has claimed that future vacation pay, deferred compensation for directors and promised corporate-relocation expenses should be treated as debt in figuring franchise taxes. Union Pacific Resources Co., a unit of Union Pacific Corp., has attempted to count long-term contractual commitments and litigation reserves. Both companies have filed suit in Austin district court seeking franchise-tax refunds.

What gives Caterpillar's position clout is its contention that the comptroller's policy penalizes companies that provide retirement medical and insurance benefits — a practice barred by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act.

"The statute, on its face, singles out employee benefits," says James George Jr., an Austin attorney representing Caterpillar in the case.

The comptroller's office maintains that since Caterpillar can freely change its policy of providing retiree benefits, it shouldn't be permitted to use the number to trim its franchise-tax liability.

"We're all familiar with situations where a company will modify its plan and not provide benefits as generous as it once did," says Ray Bonilla, the comptroller's general counsel.

What's more, the comptroller's attorneys point to a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling — handed down after the Austin district court's decision — that permits some state actions that affect benefit plans, as long as the states don't regulate how the plans are administered.

"We find a lot of reason for optimism now that the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled," Bonilla says.

George, however, dismisses the comptroller's reliance on the Supreme Court decision. "It doesn't have anything to do with this case," he says.

Officers involved in gun-wielding dispute to be dismissed

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press

AUSTIN — A Texas Ranger and a state trooper involved in a pistol-wielding dispute over a woman have been notified of their dismissal, the Department of Public Safety confirmed Thursday.

However, neither Ranger Marcus Hilton nor trooper Michael Coleman has been formally fired, and the individual cases are in different stages of appeal.

"The long and short of it is that while their personnel cases are being processed, neither has been finally discharged at this point," DPS spokeswoman Sherri Deatherage Green told The Associated Press.

The officers were notified of their discharge Oct. 6 but "the administrative process is not complete," Ms. Green said.

Only an appeal to the three-member, policy-making Public Safety Commission could rescue Hilton's job. Col. James Wilson, the DPS director, could reinstate Coleman, who was discharged for violating DPS policy and procedural violations, Ms. Green said.

Neither of the Houston-based officers could be reached for comment.

At the time, DPS spokesman Mike Cox said:

"This incident stems from a domestic situation involving the Ranger, the trooper and another party. Ranger Hilton was restrained by other DPS officers but was not arrested and has not been charged with any criminal offense."

Hilton subsequently was charged with aggravated assault.

Although attempts to contact Hilton were unsuccessful, he previously told the AP he felt his dismissal was imminent. He did not, however, consider it fair.

'The long and the short of it is that while their personnel cases are being processed, neither has been finally discharged at this point.'
— DPS spokeswoman Sherri Deatherage Green

A DPS colleague said then that the Rangers' handling of the Hilton episode "stinks" and that "they should have let a third party investigate the case."

Hilton reportedly fell out of favor with his superior officers during an investigation earlier this year of a racial incident at an overnight Ranger outing in southeast Texas.

Hilton is Black, as is Coleman.

Hilton's account of the racial matter conflicted with the recollections of others attending the March 1994 meeting.

Hilton backed up former Ranger Cheryl Steadman's contention that a racist slur was uttered by a Ranger and that ranking officers, including Maurice Cook, the senior Ranger captain, did not reprimand him.

Cook and others told DPS investigators they could recall no racial comment.

Hilton was promoted to Ranger from the DPS ranks in 1993 and spent his abbreviated career in Houston's headquarters company. That company has been under scrutiny the last several months because of allegations of sexual harassment by Ms. Steadman.

Ms. Steadman was one of the first two women ever to serve in the unique crime-fighting agency but she resigned last year and has taken her complaints to the human rights commission.

She is now assigned to the DPS Motor Vehicle Theft unit in Houston.

When Hilton was suspended last summer, Cox said suspension with pay was the first step in a process that could end with dismissal.

But Cox pointed out that such action in the 172-year-old agency is extremely rare.

"I am not aware of any previous instances where a Ranger has been fired," he said. "Most Texas Rangers retire or die in the line of duty. It is very unusual for a Ranger to even be suspended."

However, the AP later learned that two members of the state's elite law enforcement group were suspended last year for allegedly making racial and sexual slurs against a black female officer stationed in Waco.

mental manner and being able to make a commitment to the program, among others.

"The training involves basic information on labor and delivery as well as helping the volunteer serve as a friend to the new mother," Ms. Garza said.

Volunteers must commit for a year and give 20 hours of their time a month, she added.

Carol Fletcher, who is a single mother, said she heard about the program and wanted to help work against child abuse.

"As a single mom, I can understand what they're gonna go through," she said of the women she hopes to work with.

Ms. Garza said 350 families of newborns expected to be born in 1995-96 make up the target population to benefit from the program.

Most of these families will be referred to the program through other agencies or in-house services at the hospital.

She said part of her job as well as the volunteers' jobs will be to monitor the women who come in to deliver and making visits with them in the hospital to offer the services to them.

The program instigated at Medical Center Hospital is the only one of its kind in the area, Ms. Garza said.

It will be funded by a grant from the Children's Trust Fund of Texas and through the support of the Odessa Junior League.

The program will serve any mother who delivers at Medical Center, but those mothers may be limited by volunteers in their area, whether it be Midland or surrounding towns.

Volunteers are still needed for the program which begins training sessions from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on both Nov. 4 and Nov. 11 in the Medical Center Hospital Auditorium. For more information call Ms. Garza or John Riddle at 1-915-335-1164.

Murdered woman's family wants closure of case

WACO (AP) — After her disappearance exactly one year ago, Emilita Reeves' body was found in a shallow grave near Lake Whitney. Now her relatives say they want closure.

They have no interest in the forgiveness she sought in a prayer scribbled on a scrap of paper her family in the Philippines found in 1992 after she returned to Texas, the Waco Tribune-Herald reported in a copyright story Thursday.

"Dear Father in heaven, forgive us our sins and the sins of my husband. Amen," it said.

Relatives want justice for her ex-husband, Jack, whom they believe killed Emilita.

"I won't have any sense of closure until the trial's over and he is convicted," said Ron Barr, who is married to Emilita's cousin and lives in Wichita Falls. "I want to see him injected and I want to be there."

Closure, however, may be long in coming. Although law enforcers say Reeves is a suspect in her homicide, he has not been arrested or charged. A hunter discovered the 26-year-old woman's remains Oct. 1 in remote Bosque County.

He does face a murder charge in another ex-wife's death. Reeves is free on bond awaiting a Jan. 22 trial in the 1978 death of 34-year-old Sharon Reeves of Copperas Cove.

His third wife, Myong, 29, drowned while the two were fishing on Lake Whitney north of Waco in 1986. Reeves ordered the body cremated a short while later. Hill County authorities have been investigating the case, but say they are following no additional information or new leads.

In all cases, Reeves has maintained his innocence. His attorney, Wes Ball, said he doubts that Emilita's family has heard the truth.

"I don't know how accurate the information they've been given is," Ball told The Associated Press on Thursday. "It's not surprising to me that they may think that. There may be another version, though. There's no charges against Jack on that deal."

Emilita's relatives say they believed Jack was still mourning when he and Emilita became pen pals in 1986. Eventually, Reeves proposed marriage.

"She was attracted to Jack because of his kindness and the way he wrote his letters," Emilita's sister, Ramona Zilla, said. "He was very good."

In March 1987, Reeves went to Cebu for a brief courtship and the couple soon married. In 1988, Emilita moved to Texas but remained in close contact with her family, Ms. Zilla said.

Relatives say they believe Emilita's letters, however, left out details of the couple's disagreements and quarrels.

"She didn't want the family involved," Barr said. "She was so afraid of Jack that she thought she was protecting the rest of us."

Family members say Reeves allowed Emilita to attend church only sporadically and didn't want her to work.

While relatives thought things were improving when Emilita returned from having her baby in her homeland, they said the close-knit family image was a false one. Ms. Zilla said that during a telephone call in June 1994, Emilita told her Reeves had hit her over the head with a chair.

On Oct. 5, 1994, Ms. Zilla got a letter from Emilita asking her to call immediately. When she got through a week later after several unsuccessful attempts, Reeves answered and said Emilita had disappeared, Ms. Zilla said.

In the following weeks, Reeves even said Emilita may have been kidnapped, she said.

Reeves never reported Emilita missing to police, although he did distribute fliers and offer a reward for her return. He filed for divorce soon after her disappearance and said in court papers that she had abandoned him and their 3-year-old son.

Texas Million Man marchers hope to bring back sense of collective strength

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

DALLAS — The Rev. Derrick Harkins is excited about being among the black men from around the country planning to fill Washington on Monday for a peaceful protest against the negative stereotypes they constantly face.

But for the Million Man March to have a lasting impact, Harkins said, the participants must bring the momentum and lessons of the gathering back home so they can continue working towards those goals every day.

"The hope of the Dallas Organizing Committee, as well as all of those who are committed to this march, is that we will return to our communities with a sense of collective strength and resolve," said Harkins, spokesman for that local committee.

"We've already crystallized many of the issues. When we return to Dallas, we're talking about bringing back a sense of empowerment and a sense of enactment. I know my church (New Hope Baptist Church) already is committed to taking the enthusiasm we're talking about and putting it into action."

Harkins was among many black civic leaders who attended a news conference Thursday to discuss the building excitement for local participation in Monday's event.

City councilman Al Lipscomb speaks at a press conference by the Dallas Million Man Committee on Thursday in Dallas.

Dallas County Commissioner John Wiley Price, also a local committee spokesman, estimated that several thousand men from the Dallas-Fort Worth area are headed to Washington. Harkins said at least 700 of them will be from Dallas.

Houstonians also are expected to have a large contingent. Officials there estimate between 1,000 and 3,000 black men will be making the trip this weekend.

McLennan County Commissioner Lester Gibson said he expects about 500 people from the Waco, Killeen and Temple areas to also join the march.

The Million Man March is the brainchild of Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan. The goal is to bring positive publicity to the much-maligned black male through the visual image of a large number of black men who stay in school, work hard and care for their families.

It also is described as a call for black men to come together to end the inner-city spiral of crime, drugs and unemployment, the conditions that feed media images of black men.

"It's time to turn to us and for us to take a leadership role we should've taken a long time ago," Gibson said.

Because this march is sponsored by the controversial and often alienating Farrakhan, many blacks are against it.

Dallas Mayor Ron Kirk, for example, said he believes in the concept yet he's against the organization. He can't make it Monday anyway because he's hosting President Clinton, said Kirk's assistant Kristi Sherrill.

March supporters said they hope people can put aside their political and spiritual differences in support of a greater cause.

"I'm a Baptist minister, but I'm not so insecure in my theology that I cannot affirm the sociology of all who are concerned about the progress of our people," said the Rev. Frederick D. Haynes III. "That's why I'm going to Washington, D.C."

For those who back the march but cannot make it to Washington, many Dallas churches plan to have local gatherings.

Ernest Muhammad, leader of the Houston group Brothers Dedicated to Make Man, said interest has picked up dramatically in recent days, apparently spurred by word that Muhammad Ali and other celebrities plan to attend.

"The word is out that O.J. Simpson will be present, too," Muhammad said. "So the enthusiasm is great. I just don't know how many people may try to come in the last day or so to get a bus trip. The phone's been ringing off the hook this morning, but it had been kind of slow earlier."

"That kind of thing, you can't measure until it happens."

Muhammad said his broad-based Muslim and Christian group plans to leave for Washington at midnight tonight. He has arranged for 20 buses but expects to fill only about eight.

Judge promises to limit pumping of San Antonio aquifer by Jan. 1

AUSTIN (AP) — Frustrated with bickering over the Edwards Aquifer, a federal judge has ordered an Oct. 20 meeting in his Midland court after saying he intends to impose pumping limits on San Antonio's sole source of drinking water.

"The buck stops here," U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton said in an order issued in Midland.

The judge's order came as lawyers in Hondo, 35 miles west of San Antonio, argued over the constitutionality of the state's latest plan to regulate the aquifer.

Bunton presides over a 4-year-old lawsuit filed by the Sierra Club that seeks protection of five endangered species that depend on the aquifer.

The Sierra Club, citing the federal Endangered Species Act, argues that if the aquifer is overpumped, the species could become extinct.

The Austin American-Statesman reported Thursday that Bunton's order, signed Friday and made public Wednesday, said the judge had grown tired of inaction.

He ordered all sides to meet in his court in Midland on Oct. 20 to begin working out details.

Bunton said he intends to have pumping regulations in place by Jan. 1.

'Once again, this court seems to be the only recourse for ensuring the proper enforcement of federal law, protection of designated species and preservation of the ... Edwards Aquifer.'
— U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton

The judge said state efforts at regulating the aquifer, a huge underground river that spans several central Texas counties and provides water to 1.5 million people, have stumbled repeatedly.

A law passed in 1993 setting up the Edwards Aquifer Authority was struck down in a dispute over the legality of a nonelected governing board. A new law took care of that problem but now is being challenged in state court in Hondo. A local water district and cattle ranchers claim the law unconstitutionally deprives people of property rights.

"Once again, this court seems to be the only recourse for ensuring the proper enforcement of federal law, protection of designated endangered species and preservation of the ... Edwards Aquifer," Bunton wrote.

Ken Kramer, director of the Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club, said he was pleased by Bunton's order, which came in response to the environmental group's motion seeking implementation of pumping restrictions.

"We are asking for this not because it's our preference that a federal agency manage the aquifer but because legal actions in state court prevent the Edwards Aquifer Authority from going into operation," Kramer told the American-Statesman.

Besides being the source of drinking water for San Antonio, the aquifer provides irrigation for farmers and ranchers in six counties. The underground river runs from just south of Austin to Kinney County, 100 miles west of San Antonio.

Texas firm drops bid for British utility

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Energy Partners pulled out of a bidding war for a British utility Thursday, saying the price had gotten too high.

North West Water PLC raised its bid for Norweb PLC to $2.83 billion Wednesday, above the offer the partnership of Houston Industries Energy Inc. and Dallas-based Central and South West Corp. had made.

North West Water's revised offer "is at a level where we see no merits for our shareholders in continuing to compete for Norweb," said Lee Hogan, Houston Industries president and chief operating officer.

That leaves the field clear for North West Water, which made the first bid for the Manchester-based regional electric company on Sept. 28. Its last offer of $18.37 per share valued the company at $2.87 billion.

Houston Industries, the parent company of Houston Lighting & Power, and Central and South West, which operates utilities in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas, offered $2.73 billion, or about $17.03 a share in cash, for Norweb.

Norweb, one of Britain's 12 regional electric companies, serves 1.9 million customers in northern England.

"We do not believe that it is in the interests of our shareholders for us to continue to compete for Norweb with North West Water, who illustrated again (Wednesday) morning their determination to secure control of Norweb, even at a very full price," said Tom Shockley, CSW president and chief executive officer.

North West Water this week raised $220 million through a stock offering to help fund the new cash offer of $18.17 per share.

As an alternative to its cash bid, North West Water offered Norweb shareholders a combination of cash and stock worth about $18.36 per share, including a special dividend of $2.37 per share.

The special dividend would mean an additional tax benefit to big shareholders equal to another $2.37 per share, the company said.

Britain's electric industry has seen a rush of takeovers this year. Last Friday, Scottish Power PLC claimed victory Friday in its hostile $1.8 billion bid for Manweb PLC.

Days earlier, another regional electric company, Southern Electric PLC, recommended shareholders accept a takeover offer by National Power PLC in a deal valued at $4.4 billion.

The Anglo-American industrial conglomerate Hanson PLC agreed to buy Eastern Group PLC for $4 billion earlier this year. And Southern Co. of Atlanta agreed to buy South Western Electricity PLC for $1.7 billion.

Prices slump

NEW YORK — Oil gained early Thursday on evidence of dwindling domestic stockpiles and supply disruptions, but the rally fizzled quickly in a selling spree that left prices lower for the second straight day.

Traders said the market's behavior reflected a pessimism about the short-term outlook for crude petroleum prices, which have been stuck in a trading range of about $16.80 to $19 since midsummer.

A burst of buying interest lifted prices on news that the Department of Energy's weekly inventory report showed domestic stockpilies fell to 298.7 million barrels in the week ended Oct. 6 from 302.6 million the week before.

The DOE's figures conflicted with a report released earlier by the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group, that showed an increase in crude stockpiles for the same week.

The price for November-delivery crude settled at $17.12, off 17 cents from Wednesday.

November natural gas settled at $1.735 a 1,000 cubic feet, down 2.6 cents.

One-stop fill-ups

CHICAGO — After more than a year of experimenting, McDonald's Corp. and Amoco Corp. have concluded that consumers like one-stop fill-ups for their gas tanks and stomachs.

The two companies on Thursday announced plans to develop retail sites that combine Amoco gas stations and convenience stores with McDonald's restaurants throughout most of the central, mid-Atlantic and Southeastern United States.

Amoco and McDonald's plan to open up to 75 dual-service sites in the next year, in addition to the 12 now operating, and to add hundreds more in the years to come.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar weakened against leading currencies Thursday, weighed down by renewed buying interest in the German mark and Japanese yen.

In late New York trading, the dollar ended at 100.18 yen, down from 101 yen Wednesday. It fell to 1.4185 German marks from 1.4260 marks and 1.1465 Swiss francs from 1.1495. The dollar weakened to 4.9475 French francs from 4.9670.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday: 1.3390 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3358; and 1,600 Italian lire, down from 1,607.

Sterling was quoted at $1.5765, down from $1.5719.

Stocks gain

The Dow Jones industrials rose 29.63 points to 4,764.88.

Advancing issues led decliners by about 11 to 6 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume was moderately heavy at 343.95 million shares, up from 340.72 million on Wednesday.

The NYSE's composite index rose 1.86 to 312.37. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 3.64 to 583.10.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 14.06 to 1,015.63. The American Stock Exchange's market value index rose 4.26 to 531.80.

Economists unconcerned by price rise

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Labor Department reported Thursday that prices paid to U.S. producers rose in September by the biggest amount in eight months, but economists dismissed the jump as the result of only temporary factors and quirks, not accelerated inflation.

The Producer Price Index for finished goods rose three-tenths of 1 percent, but economists said that it mainly reflected short-term surges in the cost of vegetables and other food as well as the effect of seasonal adjustment.

"I don't see anything here that's bothersome," Maury N. Harris, chief economist at Paine Webber Inc., said of the report. "I don't think we've got an inflation problem."

Indeed, goods at the intermediate stage of production, like bolts of cloth, posted their first decline since late 1993 and raw materials other than food and energy tumbled 2.1 percent.

"Inflation fundamentals look as good as they have in 30 years," said Daniel Friel, senior economic analysts at Nationsbank in Charlotte, N.C.

Producer prices are the prices that manufacturers and farmers charge for the products they sell to retailers, distributors or other buyers.

A spot check of corporate executives confirmed that the ability to raise prices has largely vanished in many industries and seems unlikely to return anytime soon.

"We're having a very difficult time" passing along even small cost increases, said Carroll D. Curless, vice president and controller of Eagle-Picher Industries, a Cincinnati producer of various industrial products. He said pressure to hold down prices was the most intense in at least two decades, particularly in the automotive industry where about 60 percent of Eagle-Picher's output is focused.

In a separate report, the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta found that business activity in the Southeast ebbed a bit last month, while the number of companies getting lower prices expanded to balance those getting higher prices. The proportion of companies paying higher prices, though still a majority, shrank.

A second set of Labor Department figures Thursday showed that first-time claims for unemployment benefits rose by 6,000, to 348,000, in the week ended Saturday, the second straight increase following a large decline for the week ended Sept. 23.

The rise in producer prices, which was the first for finished goods since May, brought the annual pace for the third quarter to nine-tenths of 1 percent, the same as in the April-June period.

But excluding the erratic food and energy components, prices eased to a 2 percent pace in the July-September quarter compared with a 2.9 percent pace during each of the first two quarters of 1995.

Texas Utilities considers two acquisitions

DALLAS (AP) — Expansion-minded Texas Utilities Co.'s plans to pursue Austin's municipal electric utility and an Australian power company may be for naught.

There are chances the state's dominant power company may not complete deals to acquire either one.

The Dallas Morning News reported Thursday that Texas Utilities — whose TU Electric unit serves more than 2 million customers mostly in the Dallas-Fort Worth area — is looking into the acquisition of the two electric companies, a deal that could total several billion dollars.

But some people familiar with the company's plans told the newspaper it may not close any deals because Austin's utility may not be for sale and the Australian company has many interested buyers.

Utility executives are concerned that new legislation may force them to compete with independent power producers. As a result, TU and others have turned to foreign utilities and other new areas for growth.

The larger of the two possible acquisitions, the Austin utility, would give the company a stake in one of the state's most lively economies. Austin's fast-growing technology industry doesn't rely on real estate or oil.

'If Austin were to decide to pursue the sale of the electric utility system, we want to be a player. We're interested in the whole thing if they want to put it up for sale..'

— Eddie Watson,
TU Electric vice chairman

"If the city were to decide to pursue the sale of the electric utility system, we want to be a player," said TU Electric vice chairman Eddie Watson. "We're interested in the whole thing if they want to put it up for sale."

Austin is still determining whether to solicit bids. And residents would need to vote to approve any sale.

TU officials declined to comment on their interest in the Australian utility. But industry analysts confirmed at a regulatory hearing Wednesday that the company was looking at one of several recently privatized utilities in that nation, the newspaper said.

"I think they may look elsewhere. They may look at the U.K.," an unnamed industry analyst said. "They're trying to find more growth."

A TU official said the Australian venture could be worth "very close" to 50 percent of the company's retained earnings after it takes a write-off analysts estimate could be as high as $800 million.

The proposed value of the foreign utility could be more than $400 million since TU has $1.6 billion in retained earnings.

The Austin system has been valued at $3.4 billion.

'Soak the rich' philosophy threatens 401-K plans

By Bill Doyle

Q: Boy, am I mad! Since Americans are the worst savers in the world, you would think our government would encourage savers like me to put the maximum contributions allowed into our 401(k) retirement plans.

Doyle

However, the enclosed letter from my employer — stating that we failed the 401(k) "nondiscrimination" test — shows this is not the case. The letter states I have been putting too much into my 401(k) account and must reduce my contributions from the maximum of 15 percent to only 6 percent. Talk about reverse discrimination!

How can this happen in America? Are there any laws on the books to reverse this horrific trend? I want to invest the max for my future's sake, since our government will not be able to support me with Social Security.

A: The situation you describe developed because of the "soak the rich" attitide so prevalent in Congress during past decades. Hopefully, it will be reversed by the current Congress.

The 401(k) plans now in effect at thousands of companies are grand because they permit employees to set aside part of their salary toward retirement. That money is automatically deducted from your salary and contributed to your retirement account. You don't pay income tax on that money or the money it earns in interest, dividends and capital gains until you retire and make withdrawals.

Better yet, most companies "match" all or part of those pre-tax employee contributions. And that's the problem with your company's plan.

When the dim bulbs in Congress wrote legislation authorizing 401(k) plans, they understandably set a $30,000 limit on the amount each employee can contribute annually. But they went way out into left field and included a provision preventing higher-paid employees from socking away big chunks. That was accomplished by decreeing that "highly compensated" employees — those earning more than $66,000 a year — cannot make pre-tax 401(k) contributions at a higher percentage than lower-paid employees do.

As that letter you sent along notes, your company's lower-paid workers are not contributing the maximum 401(k) amounts they are allowed. So, you and other better-paid people at the firm are being forced to reduce the money you put into your 401(k) accounts.

Q: Since neither my wife nor I have been covered by a company retirement plan, we each have been investing $2,000 annually in separate tax-deductible individual retirement accounts. We have already done so for 1995.

Our combined gross income is in excess of $75,000.

My wife has been a temporary employee but will become a permanent employee next month and therefore eligible for a retirement plan. She can start contributing to the plan next month or wait until May. In either case, her employer will begin contributing 1 percent of her salary next month.

Will this disqualify us from taking tax deductions for our 1995 IRA contributions? If so, this seems to be a severe penalty.

A: It will disqualify both of you. And, yes, it is a rough blow.

Under the rules as they are now in effect, you are not eligible for IRA income-tax deductions, because your income is too high and because one of you will be an active participant in a retirement plan before this year is out. In this context, the definition of "active participant" is quite broad and includes anyone who is in such a plan for even one day of the year. It will include your wife, because her employer will make 1995 retirement plan contributions for her.

Q: My brother-in-law says that one must draw down IRAs between ages 59 1/2 and 70 1/2, and that the Internal Revenue Service imposes a 50 percent penalty if a certain amount isn't withdrawn.

I thought the 50 percent penalty tax was imposed only if one does not draw down on IRAs after age 70 1/2. Can you explain the correct procedure?

A: Your brother-in-law is wrong. You are right.

After passing 70 1/2, you are required to make minimum IRA withdrawals based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary.

FAMILY MATTERS

Teenager's rebellion causes upheaval in whole family

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: Our 16-year-old daughter has become a tremendous problem for us. She has become so rebellious that we just don't know what to do with her. My husband said to write you and see what you could tell us that we could do.

May

It all started when she got her car and a boyfriend. We're not really sure which actually happened first, but the problems started about that time. We think that it's more the boyfriend than the car. Before she got the boyfriend, she usually did what we told her to do, usually when we told her. She met him in June after school was out and started dating him. He's her first real boyfriend and we were glad at first.

What's happened since then is that he's influencing her more and more. He comes from a good family, but they don't set any curfews for him. He's over here until we make him go home every night, and then he calls her when he gets home. There is a big fight just about every night to get her off the telephone and to make her stay off the telephone. We suspect that she goes over to his house after school, but she swears she doesn't. We know that they're together doing heaven only knows what at lunch.

We try to get her to come home by midnight on Friday and Saturday nights. She never makes it by then anymore, and I usually fight with her about that. I try to ground her but she REFUSES! Have you ever heard of such a thing? I tell her she can't go out and she just marches out the door and drives off. If my husband is here she won't leave like that, but she'll go to her room and slam her door so hard you'd think the walls are going to fall, and stay in her room the rest of the time. Plus, she will be just horrible to live with. She gets rude and puts us down.

She is our only child. I was an only child and my husband only had brothers. Neither of us ever treated our parents like she treats us. So we have these questions: Is it normal for a teenager to act like this? If not, what can we do to make her stop? If it is, what can we do to keep our sanity? HELP US QUICK

DEAR HELP: The way your daughter is behaving is not "normal," although it may be typical of some teenagers. Regardless, her behavior is not acceptable.

First, you and your husband sit down and draw up a set of House Rules for your daughter. Each rule should have a consequence for non-compliance. For example:

- No one in the family slams doors. If you slam your door, then we will remove your door for three days each time.
- Your telephone curfew is 10 p.m. on weeknights and midnight on weekends. Any failure to meet the curfew will result in your telephone being removed from your room immediately for 24 hours.
- Your car is a privilege and its use is contingent upon your following the rules of our home. If you leave after we have told you that you cannot go somewhere, you will lose the use of your car for one week. We will take you to and from school if you cannot find a ride.

These are just examples of a rules/consequence system, but this is the idea. If you and your husband are not going to enforce the consequences, then I suggest you not to bother. A rule without a consequence is only a wish — for example, "I wish that you would get off the telephone."

While I believe that teens should have more and more decision-making authority as they get older, they must demonstrate that they are responsible with that authority. The primary way to show their responsibility is to be trustworthy — that is, follow the rules that are presently in place and negotiate changes as trust is built.

Your daughter needs stronger rules in order to keep her from taking actions that are potentially detrimental to herself — for example, unsupervised unlimited time with her boyfriend.

THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS FOR PARENTS ONLY ARE OFFERED BY THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES:

- Do I spend time with each child?
- Do I listen carefully to what they say?
- Do I take time to enter their world, ask them questions, know their friends, know what is important in their lives?
- Do I often tell them what I like about them and the strengths I see?
- Do I criticize more than I appreciate and praise?
- How often to I say something to hurt my child's self-worth?
- Do I go out of my way to do something special for my child?
- Do I touch, hug, hold and kiss my child?
- Do I say I love you?
- Do I set a good example myself?

Quirky food preferences appear to be common condition

By Teresa S. Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

WACO — Nearly all of us have at least one. We might hide it. We might sneak around to indulge in it. We might even deny it.

But nearly everyone has some quirky food combination they love, even though it makes their friends cringe, their mates gag, their children roll their eyes.

Yet, fortunately for me as the writer of this piece, there are those who don't mind letting the world know about their more unusual food preferences.

But before you pass judgment on these odd combinations, think about the things you put in your own mouth.

■ Peanut butter and pickles: When Carri Gibbs was a child, a friend dared her to eat the grossest thing she could think of, which happened to be a peanut butter and sweet pickle sandwich. Gibbs not only ate it, she actually liked it.

"Even now, every couple of months, I get a craving and just have to have one," she said. Her husband, friends and kids may think it's gross, but Gibbs thinks it's delicious.

■ Peanut butter and syrup: Linda Goelz's 5-year-old son Ryan ate his first peanut butter and syrup sandwich at a neighbor's house. Now syrup is all he wants to pair with peanut butter.

■ Frosting on crackers: Jeanne Barron of Rosebud, at least according to her daughter Mary Barron who called this in, likes to spread vanilla frosting, preferably homemade, on saltine crackers, Jeanne's daughter is a long way from inheriting this quirk from her mother. "I think it's nasty," Mary said.

■ Cereal & ice cream: Judy Steward eats Rice Crispies for breakfast. What's unusual is that before she pours milk over the cereal, she adds a scoop of vanilla ice cream.

"The ice cream makes the milk smooth and really cold," Steward said. It also adds a touch of sweetness. "But the cold is what I like most."

■ Cake and ice cream: "My wife likes to eat cake and ice cream," Wayne Mooney of Waco called in about his wife, DeeDee, "which isn't that unusual, but she has to blend the two together until it becomes mush."

When he tells her she's ruining the flavor of each, she says mushing them creates a new flavor of its own.

■ Experimenting with leftovers: Leftovers can lead to some interesting experimentation, Dorie Gilbert of Waco has found.

One day she'd made a grilled cheese sandwich, then thought of the enchilada sauce she had left over from the night before. She dipped the sandwich in the sauce and found she like it.

"It ... sort of like a French dip," she said.

Another night she came home late and found the only leftovers were mashed potatoes. That's when she began eating mashed potato sandwiches.

She'll fry a mound of the potatoes in oil until it has a brown crust, then she puts it on toasted bread with a slice of American cheese.

"It think it tastes pretty good, but my daughter laughs every time I make it," Gilbert said.

■ Chip substitute: Lois Warren of Waco eats salted peanuts rather than chips with a sandwich.

The habit started when she was a teen-ager and worked downtown at McCrory's. For lunch, she'd usually grab a sandwich at the Orange Oasis, where there was a big jar of peanuts on the counter. She got "hooked" on pairing peanuts with sandwiches then and she's been doing it ever since. She's now 62.

■ Fries and syrup: Betty Brown of Waco always poured syrup on her fried potatoes just like all the other family members on the farm where she grew up. "It seemed like everyone did that," she said.

"I never thought it was weird until I went to Kansas when I was 15. I ordered a hamburger and french fries at a restaurant where I was eating with six other people. When I poured syrup over my fries, I thought they were going to pass out."

Brown, 56, said she's tried the more traditional french fry condiment of ketchup, but "it just doesn't taste as good."

Leota Kuykendall of Waco also eats fried potatoes with syrup. "When I was growing up, every night for supper we had hash browns with syrup poured over them."

Kuykendall says she suspects the practice started in her family because potatoes were plentiful on their farm and Karo syrup was always on hand. "This was before the days of ketchup, at least out in the country," she said.

She said there was one variation from this every-night dish. Her family sometimes poured canned peaches over the potatoes instead of syrup.

■ Mustard and eggs: Wynn Stanwood, 74, of Temple, eats mustard on her fried eggs. "My mother and father did it, so I grew up eating them that way," she said.

What's strange, said the Minnesota native, is that she met and married a man in Phoenix who also liked mustard on his fried eggs.

■ Pass the pepper: Ronnie Smith of Hewitt puts salt and pepper on sliced peaches and cantaloupes.

"I learned it from my daddy when I was growing up," she said. While it tastes good to Smith, she said she gets odd stares when she peppers up her fruit when she goes out to eat.

Also mixing sweet with peppery is Margaret Patterson of Eddy. She puts black pepper on ice cream and claims there's a practical reason for doing so.

"You know how when you eat ice cream, especially when it's really hot outside, you'll get a headache? When you use pepper, that never happens," Patterson said. She says you don't taste the pepper.

■ Peas and crackers: While black-eyed peas and cornbread are a Southern tradition, Hazel Gowdey of Waco prefers to pair the peas with crackers.

"I was eating black-eyed peas in a restaurant that I knew didn't make good cornbread so I asked for crackers." She liked it so much she's continued to pair the two.

■ A pinch of mustard: According to John O'Neal, you can take the worst bowl of gravy you've ever tasted, stir in one teaspoon of mustard and it will become the best bowl of gravy you've ever tasted. "The mustard makes the taste change all together," he said. O'Neal said he learned the trick when he was 5 years old from a 90-year-old man with whom he spent a lot of time.

■ My own confession: It would be unfair to expect readers to come clean with their quirks without revealing a few of my own.

I put ice cream in my coffee, a habit I started years ago when I opened my fridge one morning and discovered I was out of milk. I hate black coffee, so I began looking for a milk substitute. I plopped in a scoop of vanilla ice cream and found it gave the coffee a creamy texture and slightly sweet taste. You can use just about any flavor of ice cream, though, from past experience, I don't recommend strawberry.

'Helping others' is man's goal in life

By Lana Cunningham

"I regret that I'm only one person. I wish I could split myself into many parts — there's so much to be done."

One person has only 24 hours in the day to talk to patients and staffs at nursing homes, to monitor senior citizen centers, to work on numerous committees at church on the local and state level, and to be a husband, father, grandfather and great-grandfather.

Price

Carlton Price doesn't have much free time these days. He serves as an ombudsman for the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging. It's a volunteer job that takes about five to six hours of his time each week but stays on his mind even longer.

This is not the same Carlton Price who took an early retirement in 1984 from Dow Chemical. After being on 24-hour call for 15 years and working in snow and sleet in the middle of the night, Price decided he deserved some time in his easy chair. He almost never got out of it again. "Arthritis came on me and I was laid up in bed for a month."

Barely able to walk on crutches, he finally went to his doctor. "He worked with me for about a year. I haven't used those crutches since that first visit," he recalled.

"I realized it wasn't good for someone who had been active in his work to just go to an easy chair. I had seen others who retired before me who had the same condition. But I said it wasn't going to happen to me," he said with a low chuckle coming from deep within his spirit.

Price began to visit people in the hospitals and nursing homes, offering his ear to listen and his friendship. Soon, he was asked to become a board member of the Area Agency of Aging. Then he was asked to serve as an ombudsman, or someone who investigates citizens' complaints.

"I didn't want to do it," Price said, "but they kept after me."

As a board member, he monitors senior citizen centers in surrounding cities, such as Pecos, Rankin, Odessa, Big Spring, Andrews and Monahans.

"We have to inspect all the kitchen facilities and the building and go with the people delivering the Meals on Wheels. We have to check the temperature of the food before it's taken out of the van and given to the person. This is written down on a report, and then we turn the report in to the center's person in charge. We explain what we found that wasn't right."

When Price finally decided to become an ombudsman, he studied in Austin before becoming certified. It is this program that propels him into the nursing homes and patients' problems.

A quiet man, his compassion flows through his voice. "I talk to the patients about how thay are being treated. Some won't talk; they say the administration will put pressure on them or have them transferred. I have encountered many problems since being associated with this position."

And he talked of two situations involving patients and poor care they had received.

"I see so much of it," he said of his volunteer job looking into patients' problems. "It used to bother me until I became strong. I accepted the responsibility and it's not always pleasant. I go out of my way because I want to help people."

Price served as chairman of the ombudsman board for two years and has been off almost a year. Bill Smith, who heads up the Area Agency on Aging Advisory Council, would like to see Price return. "He was very dilligent and conscientious and went the extra mile."

"I made a vow to do the best I can," said Price. He starts visiting nursing home patients on Sunday afternoon. In addition, he meets each week with the facility's director of nurses and staff, reviewing patients' records.

"The time is not up to me. I give what I have, whether it's three hours or six. If I help somebody, it's all I have."

That same attitude is carried over into his work at Greater St. Luke's A.M.E. Church. He now serves as first vice president of the layman's organization, steward, assistant treasurer and member of the finance committee. "If I see something that needs to be done in the church, I go do it."

In1991 Price received the first Man of the Year Award at the Northwest Texas annual church conference for his "contributions to the African American People." He also was recognized for his work at the church's lay organization Biannual Convention in Columbus, Ohio. "I had served as an officer of the state lay organization for 13 years. I never thought anyone noticed anything I was doing." And he hasn't missed a state lay organization meeting since 1973.

At 72, Price knows he won't always be able to maintain his hectic pace. But he wants to stay busy. "It helps my mind, helps me to focus on positive things."

Like helping patients get the best care they deserve in a nursing home.

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

When it comes to adopting health-promoting exercise habits, growing numbers of older Americans are putting their younger counterparts to shame.

While the overall share of adults who are physically active has not increased in about a decade (about 30 percent are completely sedentary, and nearly 60 percent participate in fewer than three 20-minute exercise sessions a week), men and women 65 and older are gradually getting the message and becoming more active.

In fact, based on the latest federally sponsored state-by-state analysis of physical activity among older Americans, they are coming closer than younger adults to achieving the surgeon general's goals for the year 2000.

One of the national health objectives established by the surgeon general in Healthy People 2000 is to reduce to 22 percent the share of adults 65 and older who engage in no leisure-time physical activity.

In 1987, when 32 states and the District of Columbia began collecting annual data about residents' exercise habits, 43.2 percent of older people were completely sedentary. Five years later, in 1992, the percentage of older residents who engaged in no physical activity had dropped to 38.5 percent.

These promising findings come from the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System of the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention; the results were reported in September in the CDC's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

In 19 states that gathered annual data, there was a moderate overall improvement in the share of older residents who reported some leisure-time physical activity. In three states — New York, Maryland and New Mexico — and in the District of Columbia, there was a consistent annual decline in the share of respondents who were completely sedentary.

Perhaps older people are more willing to take up exercise because many have retired and have more time. But the most common excuse younger adults give for not exercising — "I don't have time" — is belied by the fact that 84 percent watch at least three hours of television each week. If that time were spent exercising, the result would probably be significant improvement in the nation's health and a decline in health care expenditures.

Regular physical activity comes closer to being a fountain of youth than anything modern medicine can offer. Researchers have documented many improvements in the health and well-being of older Americans who take up exercise, and they have shown that it is never too late to start. The major areas of benefit are these:

■ Heart disease and stroke: Physical activity can halve the risk of developing heart disease or suffering a stroke. Exercise helps to reduce the risk of these vascular diseases by lowering blood pressure, raising the level of protective HDL cholesterol, reducing the risk of developing blood clots and diabetes and countering weight gain.

■ Cancer: Exercise lowers the risk of developing cancer of the colon, one of the leading causes of cancer deaths among men and women. In animals, exercise protects against breast cancer.

■ Osteoporosis: At any age at which exercise is begun, it can increase the density of bones and reduce the risk of fractures. Furthermore, there is growing evidence that exercise need not be weight-bearing to foster bone density; stationary cycling and water aerobics may help as well. Older people who become active also experience improvements in balance, strength, coordination and flexibility, which all help to prevent the falls that can result in debilitating fractures.

■ Diabetes: Older people who are physically active are less likely to develop diabetes than sedentary people. Physical activity increases the sensitivity of cells to insulin, which, in turn, lowers blood sugar and the need for insulin.

■ Weight: Exercise helps people maintain a normal body weight or, when combined with a moderate reduction in calories, fosters weight loss. Most important, exercise helps people lose fat and gain muscle. That makes it easier to maintain weight loss because muscle tissue burns more calories than fat does. Even in those of normal weight, exercise can counter the age-related loss of lean muscle tissue and the deposition of body fat, especially the heart-damaging accumulation of abdominal fat.

■ Immunity: Exercise increases the circulation of the immune cells that fight infections and tumors. Physically fit people get fewer colds and other respiratory infections than people who are not fit.

■ Arthritis: Nearly everyone over 65 has some arthritic symptoms. Studies suggest that regular moderate exercise combined with stretching can reduce arthritic pain and the need for medication.

■ Depression: Exercise has long been known to help people overcome clinical depression, so it is not much of a stretch to conclude that it can help to prevent the depression that is so common, albeit often hidden, in older people. The emotional benefits of exercise are likely to be greatest if the chosen activities bring older people in contact with others.

■ Gastrointestinal bleeding: Regular physical activity decreases the risk of severe gastrointestinal hemorrhage in older people, probably by improving circulation to the digestive tract.

■ Memory: Even brief periods of mild exercise can result in immediate improvements in memory in older adults. Exercise also fosters clearer thinking and faster reaction time by helping to speed the transmission of nerve messages.

■ Sleep: A study by researchers at Stanford and Emory Universities showed that in older adults who were initially sedentary, regular exercise, like brisk walking, improved sleep quality and shortened the time it took to fall asleep.

Anyone over 40 who decides to increase physical activity should first have a thorough medical checkup. Even if with a clean bill of health, it is wise to start slowly and build up gradually.

With the guidance of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports, the American Association of Retired Persons has published a 32-page guide to fitness activities for older adults. Called "Pep Up Your Life: A Fitness Book for Mid-Life and Older Persons," the booklet can be obtained, at no charge for single copies, by writing to the American Association of Retired Persons, Fulfillment Department, 601 E Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20049.

The National Association for Human Development has prepared three booklets on exercises — basic, moderate and advanced — for people over 60. Each one costs $3 and can be obtained from the association at 1424 16th Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Yablon Enterprises Inc., in collaboration with Creative Fitness Inc., a company that develops fitness programs for older adults, has produced "Senior Shape-Up," which consists of two audio tapes and a 41-page manual and is available for $36 postpaid from Yablon Enterprises Inc., P.O. Box 7475, Steelton, Pa. 17113.

Elderly borrow medical equipment from company

By Luna I. Shyr

SUN CITY, Ariz. (AP) — For residents of this retirement community, getting medical equipment can be as simple as checking out a book at the local library.

Hospital beds, wheelchairs, bath supports and lift chairs are just some of the items available for loan at Sunshine Service Inc., which has served this town on the outskirts of Phoenix for the past 30 years.

A signature promising to return the items and an optional donation are all that are required in return.

"I would be in the poor house if it wasn't around," said Ruth Clark, 81, who borrowed a hospital bed, walker and wheelchair while caring for her sick husband for eight years.

"I'm afraid if I had not had that, I would have had to put him in a retirement home."

Sunshine Service subsists entirely on donations, many of which are left in the wills and trusts of Sun City residents.

"The wills and trusts keep us going," said administrator Tom Denning. "If it wasn't for that, we'd have to shut the door."

Denning declined to disclose the company's annual budget, but said the average donation from residents at the door is $25.

It's estimated that the service saves residents more than $1.5 million a year in rental costs.

Nestled near the entrance of this community marked by lawns of cactus and painted rocks, Sunshine Service offers everything from surgical shoes and mattress raisers to playpens and diaper pails for visiting children.

There's no limit on the checkout period for medical equipment, and some items have been on loan for almost 10 years, Denning said.

Convenience items, those used for family visits and house guests, must be returned within 30 days.

The high chairs, strollers and rollaway beds usually disappear quickly around Thanksgiving and Christmas, Denning said.

Willis Reineman, 82, and his wife, Marian, 82, have used Sunshine Service throughout their 17 years as Sun City residents.

"It dates back to our grandchildren," Reineman said. "We had cribs, strollers, everything you could think of to take care of their needs when they were here for a week or two."

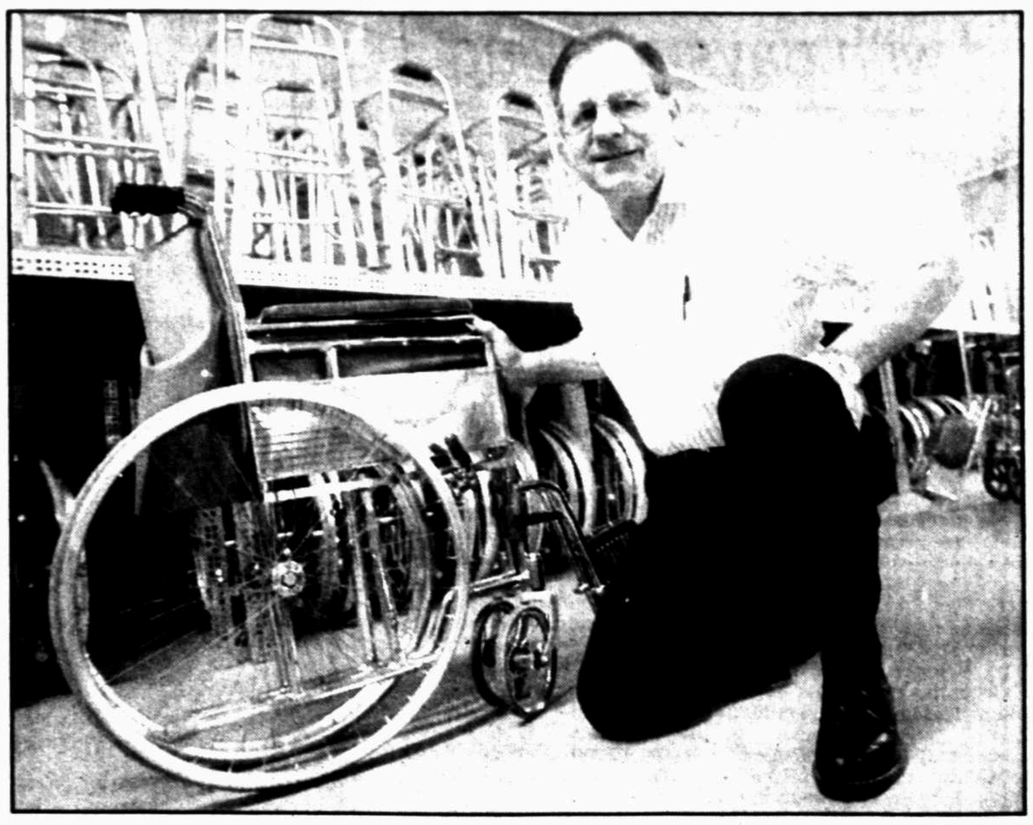

The company started as a tiny operation in 1961 out of the home carport of the Rev. Duane Thistlewaite, who offered hospital beds and wheelchairs to residents unable to afford the $35 monthly rent for such equipment.

The operation quickly blossomed and became Sunshine Service, Inc. in 1964.

The company moved into its current 22,000-square-foot warehouse in 1973.

Its inventory, which includes 1,160 wheelchairs and some 800 bath benches, is neatly stacked and numbered on rows of shelves that line the warehouse.

The company rarely has problems with people failing to return borrowed equipment, which are sanitized and fixed up at the warehouse before going back on the shelves.

Advances in eye surgery make seeing into believing

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

Seeing is believing, and believe me, the recent advances in cataract surgery make me a believer in the profound accomplishments of modern medicine.

Page

Less than a quarter-century ago, cataract removal consisted of a prolonged, painful process accompanied by blood, gore and blowsy eyelid.

The patient perforce had to lie still in bed with his head immobilized between sandbags, and his convalescence persisted for several weeks and finally climaxed by the wearing of eyelasses almost ½-inch thick.

As a model of the present day state of the art, let me narrate my own recent, personal experience.

Diminution of vision in my left eye was becoming an impediment to my way of life, and its correction was therefore indicated.

Midland is blessed with several able eye doctors, of which I chose Ronald Ingram, perhaps in part because of his training and teaching at that opthalmologic Mecca, the Wills Eye Hospital in Philadelphia.

He evaluated my own particular situation by visual examination, soundings, measurements and also EKGs and lab testing.

Reporting on the "big" day proved to be a pleasant experience, with the operative crew's friendly demeanor, unlike the flat, icy stare one frequently encounters on entering some doctors' offices. Apparently they realize that patients are people too.

First you lie on a comfortable mobile bed and are then launched on a quasi-assembly line, somewhat like that inspired by Henry Ford. All this involves the administration of various eye medications, application of monitoring devices, and installation of an IV drip.

Next you talk to the anesthesiologist and then to the "professor" himself — the surgeon.

Within three hours from entering, you find yourself walking out the door with a new lens and youthful vision.

The only untoward effect is the increased facial maturity noted on gazing into the mirror! Aside from putting drops in your eye for a couple of weeks, you can resume all normal activity.

Cataracts form a sort of "iron curtain" retarding the flow of visual contact with the outside world.

This assumes critical importance for senior citizens who require positive stimulation to prevent withdrawal into an unresponsive and depressing state.

Improved vision will hone one's brain to its accustomed sharpness and prevent premature senility.

In summary, Let's "ham up" Hamlet:

To see or not to see, that is the question.

Whether 'tis better to undergo the slings and arrows of surgery

DEAR ABBY

Mom's years of smoking end with days of dying

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing in response to "Gail H. in Georgia," the woman who is now paying the price for being a smoker. She now breathes with the help of a respirator.

When I read her sad letter, I cried. My mother also tried to quit smoking. She tried hypnosis three times at $60 a pop. Her resolve lasted only 45 minutes after each session.

Van Buren

For as long as I can remember, my two brothers and I pleaded with Mom to quit — not only for her health but ours as well. My brother, Brett, had constant earaches, and I had constant throat problems due to her smoking.

I was afraid I would lose not only my mother, but my best friend. Although I hounded her about her smoking for years, I failed. She was diagnosed with lung cancer on Sept. 7, 1993. After two weeks of testing, cancer was found all through her body.

Even though she was on oxygen at the hospital and could barely breathe without it, she was sent home with only "pump" treatments. As soon as she finished her treatments, she'd ask someone to light a cigarette for her. She was furious with me because I refused. She could no longer sit up in a chair without support, yet I continued to argue with her about smoking. Everyone said, "Give it up, Tara. Let her do what she wants — let her be happy."

They say that she was dying. How could she be dying? She was only 49 years old. I was her youngest — her 16-year-old daughter. Besides, the doctor told us she had six months to two years — not 37 days! She stopped smoking when she died of cancer on Oct. 11, 1993.

Two years ago, I was crying out to my mother and to God! Now I'm crying out to every smoker. Mother started smoking when she was 16, but she never intended to smoke her entire life. Many teens have the same idea. They think they'll smoke "for now" — then quit without a problem. My mother's death is proof that it's not that easy. If teen smokers could have seen what my mother went through, they wouldn't even start.

I think Mother's history should be included in the health education classes offered to students. Also, in order to pass the class, students should have to spend at least one week with a dying cancer patient and his or her family. It's a living hell. Once they saw that smoking eventually makes one incapable of moving, breathing and living, they would feel the heartbreak that I felt.

Another thing I don't understand is my father. He was there every day, watching Mother die. He has now remarried — and would you believe to a smoker! She's not allowed to smoke in our house, so she smokes outdoors. I may not be breathing her toxic fumes, but my father is. I thought he'd have known better after seeing one wife die from cancer. Dad has a bad heart condition, and breathing in smoke is bad for him. I love Dad with all my heart, and can't bear the thought of losing him — especially to secondhand smoke.

Abby, your column reaches millions. I hope my letter will make a difference. If it prevents just one person from smoking, it will be well worth it. You may use my name. —TARA ESTHER LIBBENS

DEAR TARA: Thank you for a powerful letter. It's unfortunate that we will never know how many lives will be saved because you took the time to write.

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Marketers discover seniors are moving into cyberspace

DALLAS (AP) — A Phoenix-based corporation says when it makes a new marketing push to sell retirement homes to the over-55 crowd in Texas, it will cater to a growing attachment among older citizens for computers.

Beginning this summer, retirees buying a home in the new Sun City Georgetown retirement community north of Austin are able to pick out a computer to go with the house much as they choose the wallpaper or kitchen tile.

"Just like they use their oven, they're going to be using their computer," Connie Watson, a spokeswoman for Del Webb Corp., was quoted in a recent edition of the Texas Journal of The Wall Street Journal.

In launching more seniors into cyberspace, the company is betting that older Texans are keeping pace with the information age, and that computers will be as indispensable in their homes as telephones.

She may be right. John Kale, general sales manager for Micro Center computer stores, a division of Micro Electronics Inc. in Columbus, Ohio, with several big Texas outlets, says it's common to find seniors browsing the aisles.

"We see a lot of retirees picking up computers as a hobby," he says.

About one-third of the people taking the company's introductory classes for new computer buyers are 55 and older. So is a house a home without a computer?

Jennie Ling, vice president for Henry S. Miller Real Estate Co. in Dallas — who is over 55 herself — says she would have thought so 10 years ago.

But today: "Having them come with your home may be the wave of the future," she says. "Why not? I sell a house a week, and most every home I sell, they're moving a computer in."

— Connie Watson,
Del Webb Corp. spokesperson

Death of spouse often raises financial questions

DENVER (AP) — Making financial decisions following the death of a spouse is difficult at best. It's even more difficult if there has been little or no advanced planning, or if unscrupulous or even well-meaning people pressure the surviving spouse to make quick, but sometimes inappropriate, decisions.

To help surviving spouses make timely, rational choices, Gregg Parish, an academic assistant at the College for Financial Planning, a division of the National Endowment for Financial Education (NEFE), provided answers to some of the more commonly asked questions.

Q. What should I do first?

A. The first concerns, of course, are making funeral arrangements and, if so desired, seeing to any tissue and organ donations, says Parish. After that, it's essential to see what financial shape you are in, especially if you have not been closely involved in the day-to-day handling of your finances.

Parish says you should find the will first. Then collect and review all bills, life insurance policies, investment records, estate planning documents, bank statements, pension and Social Security records, tax returns, and so on.

Determine what cash resources, such as checking accounts, money market accounts, insurance proceeds and Social Security benefits, you can depend on. "When someone dies, you'll need a lot of extra cash," says Parish. "Income may slow or stop, and there'll be funeral expenses, estate settlement expenses and other one-time expenses."

Q. How do I collect on my spouse's insurance policy?

A. Generally, you'll have to fill out an insurance form and provide proof of death in some form, such as a certified death certificate. Parish recommends that you do this as quickly as possible since it will take at least four to six weeks to receive a check or first payment. You may have to decide whether to take the proceeds in a lump sum, interest-only payments or regular annuity payments.

Q. Are insurance benefits income taxable?

A. With few exceptions, they are not taxable.

Q. What do I do about my spouse's pension?

A. Notify the plan administrator of the death and find out what survivorship benefits exist. You'll probably have to choose a settlement option, such as continuing pension payments or taking them in a lump sum. Most of these issues must be decided by certain deadlines, which should be monitored closedly.

Q. What should I do about our investments?

A. "Don't change your investments — at least not immediately," cautions Parish. Unless there's reason to believe your investments are tied up in something excessively risky, there's no reason to make changes immediately.

Furthermore, Parish adds, "Don't be in a hurry to lock up all your money in long-term investments because there's often an immediate need for a lot of cash. Long-term investments can be made later when life is more settled."

Q. Do I need to do anything about our jointly titled property?

A. This will depend on the state in which you live, but in most cases, the property will pass to you immediately. You'll be able to continue to write checks on a joint account, for example, or drive the family car.

However, some unscrupulous people scour the obituaries for opportunities and may try to write a counter check or commit other financial fraud using the dead spouse's name. So as a safety precaution, banks, the department of motor vehicles and other appropriate authorities should be notified of the death as soon as possible.

Q. What about our credit cards?

A. You can continue to use them as before, but you may want to put them into your name only to help establish your own credit. The only drawback of doing this, says Parish, is that the credit card company may lower the credit limit if the deceased was the main income-earner.

Q. Should I hire an attorney or other professional financial adviser to help settle the estate?

A. If the estate is simple and small, you may be able to do it yourself, especially if you have the help of your family, says Parish. Many states have set up procedures so that a lay person can settle a small estate. Many estates, however, may be more complicated, particularly if the deceased owned a business.

And sometimes a surviving spouse simply may not want to take the time to settle an estate. In these situations, an attorney specializing in estate matters can be of immense help, not only in getting the estate through probate but in making sure all other deadlines, options and paperwork are handled appropriately. To find an attorney, contact your local bar association for a referral or ask friends who may have used an estate attorney. It also may be beneficial to seek the objective services of a qualified financial planner to help you make sound financial decisions.

Thanks Partner

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — Sports broadcaster Pat Haden has reason to thank new partner Verne Lundquist.

Lundquist performed the Heimlich maneuver on Haden when Haden choked on some food during lunch Wednesday. The two are in St. Louis to broadcast tonight's Rams-Falcons game nationally on TNT cable.

They were having lunch with a St. Louis Post-Dispatch reporter and a publicist when Haden began to choke on a piece of broccoli.

Lundquist, 55, leaped up and performed the Heimlich on Haden, 42, freeing the food.

Haden said he felt lucky his partner was so quick to respond.

"I was in trouble," he said. "I'm not sure what I would have done if I was at home by myself or if I hadn't known anybody in the restaurant. Nobody was running to help. But then again they didn't know what was wrong, if I was having a heart attack or what."

Lundquist said he had never performed the Heimlich before but had seen it done once.

Lundquist and Haden have been paired for only a few weeks, but they left the restaurant arm in arm.

"Thanks, partner," Haden said.

Almost half of the 16-player field of the WTA Championships has been set after three more players qualified this week. The three latest qualifiers are Mary Pierce, the Australian Open champion; Gabriela Sabatini, the defending champion, and Kamiko Date. They joined Steffi Graf and Monica Seles, the co-No. 1 players, Arantxa Sanchez Vicario and Conchita Martinez in the year-ending event, which will be held Nov. 13-19 at New York City's Madison Square Garden.

Cameras barred

LUMBERTON, N.C. — A judge has ruled that cameras will be barred from the upcoming trial of the man charged with killing Michael Jordan's father.

Superior Court Judge Gregory Weeks made the decision Thursday during the second week of pretrial proceedings for Daniel Andre Green.

Cameras have been excluded from the courtroom during this round of pretrial proceedings for Green, charged by police with murder in the death of James Jordan in 1993.

The elder Jordan's body was found in a South Carolina swamp in August 1993.

Prosecutors contend Jordan was robbed and murdered as he slept in his red Lexus along a Robeson County highway nearly three weeks earlier.

Green, 20, is charged with first-degree murder and robbery.

Midland vs. Odessa Part I

Lee seeks to end Odessa High jinx

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Call it a quirk. Call it a jinx. Call it looking forward. But no matter where you place it, playoff rich Midland Lee can't seem to beat Odessa High.

The Bronchos have beaten the Rebels three years in a row and four of the last five, making Lee's playoff run a difficult task. In fact, a Lee loss to the Bronchos last year almost kept the Rebs out of the playoffs. Only an Abilene High upset over OHS on the last week of the season saved Lee, a team that went all the way to the state quarterfinals.

And that stubborn crossroad has been reached again. Lee faces its major District 4-5A nemesis at 7:30 p.m. today in Memorial Stadium. Lee is undefeated at 5-0 and OHS is 3-2 on the season. However, OHS is 0-2 in league play, again entering this affair as a dangerous and wounded animal with its back to the wall.

It was the same scenario a year ago, but Lee lost the game. This is where Lee needs to throw away its band-aids for stubbed toes.

In a way, first year Lee head coach John Parchman is caught in the middle of this woeful Lee stretch against OHS, a series that is tied at 17-all. However, he has been an assistant coach at Lee when the Rebels fell to OHS.

"I haven't even lost to them yet," Parchman says smiling before adding, "I don't really know what the reason is why Lee has played so poorly against Odessa High. But after the game with Midland High, it's only logical that you start looking forward to that other team (Permian) in Odessa."

But Parchman says that won't be the case this year.

"It's a big mistake to look past Odessa High and San Angelo, which happens to be our next two opponents," says Parchman. "We've always felt that those two teams have always had the size and talent that you shouldn't overlook. I hope we don't make that mistake this year."

The Lee players are well aware of the losing skid to Odessa High in recent years, according to Parchman.

Midland High's back up against high Ratliff wall

■ Odessa Permian, fresh off the Carter win, will host Midland, which it has beaten 21 straight times.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

The Midland High Football team runs into the most unenviable situation at 7:30 p.m. today, Friday the 13th.

The Bulldogs must travel to Odessa's Ratliff Stadium for a District 4-5A match up with the biggest black cat in Texas, otherwise known as Permian.

Midland High, 2-3 for the season and 0-2 in district, will go into Ratliff where the Bulldogs have never won. In fact, the Panthers, 5-0 for the season and 1-0 district, have won every game in the series since 1973. That is 21 games in a row with 10 shutouts along the way. Midland also knows that this time around will not be any easier.

"This is a tough one," said Midland High head coach Ronnie Reeger. "They are well-coached and we are excited to play them. We have to stay in the game physically and mentally. We have to play our best game of the year."

To stay in the game, the Bulldogs have to contain the running game of the Panthers. Permian, ranked No. 2 in the state, used that running game in last week's 14-13 win over then No. 3-ranked Dallas Carter, gaining 222 yards on the ground against a team that had given up only 160 total yards a game.

The district's leading rusher Ja'Quay Wilburn is the top gun in Permian's backfield with 667 yards on 83 carries. Backfield mate L.C. Ward, who rushed for 1,454 yards last season, also gives Permian another rusher capable of 100-yard days, and he, like the rest of the fundamentally sound offense, is an excellent blocker in Permian's wing-T offense.

Mariners' "Big Unit" relishes lead role for ALCS Game 3

By T.R. Sullivan

CLEVELAND — Orel Hershiser, 6-0 in nine postseason games, added to his reputation as a big-game performer by pitching the Cleveland Indians past the Seattle Mariners in Game 2 of the American League Championship Series.

Hershiser is among an elite group of pitchers who have demonstrated the ability to be at their best in the playoff spotlight.

Mariners lefthander Randy Johnson eagerly seeks the same reputation, and from his teammates' viewpoint, there's no better time to earn it. Johnson is scheduled to pitch tonight against Indians righthander Charles Nagy in Game 3 of the ALCS.

Randy Johnson will lead Seattle into Cleveland. The series is tied 1-1.

"I think that's a responsibility I took on when I became the pitcher that I am," Johnson said. "It's the same responsibility that I think a Greg Maddux, a Dave Stewart, Orel Hershiser or Roger Clemens have. Those guys are leaders on their pitching staffs, and that's a responsibility you want as a pitcher."

Beyond taking a 2-1 lead in the series, both teams have much to gain by winning tonight.

A victory for the Mariners ensures a return to the Kingdome for Games 6 and 7 if needed. That has been their goal since they began the ALCS with a pitching staff depleted by the five-game divisional series with the New York Yankees.

Jones plans to fight NFL over Deion's contract

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas — Jerry Jones plans to fight the NFL's questioning of cornerback Deion Sanders' $35 million contract, the Dallas Cowboys owner said today, adding that he considers the league's position an attack on his team.

"This is suspicious to me. It's so transparent that the NFL is being selective," Jones said.

"They're trying to intimidate the Cowboys, they're trying to be a bully. We will not let them intimidate or bully us."

The league told the team to renegotiate its seven-year deal with Sanders to fit under the salary cap. The league has conditionally approved the deal but held that it violates the spirit of the $37.1 million-per-team cap, said Harold Henderson, the NFL's director of labor relations.

Jones said the contract follows the salary cap rules completely.

"This is not about Deion, what this is about is sticking it to the Dallas Cowboys. This is very disturbing," Jones said, adding that he expects to win the fight.

Technically, Sanders will make the NFL base salary of $178,000 for the first three years, but his pay will average $5.5 million per year including his nearly $13 million signing bonus.

Nothing but a intercity rivalry

Midland vs. Odessa. Those are enough words to bring out the goose bumps — especially if you live in Odessa.

When Midland teams step on the field with Odessa teams in football, there is a certain amount of passion that rises in the throat, but for Midland teams in the current decade, it has been a swim in a shark infested barrier reef.

Williamson

Midland's Bulldogs and Rebels take another swim in dangerous waters tonight, and they would like to take that swim without thinking about the facts.

Since 1990, Midland owns a meager 2-18-1 record when playing against Bronchos and Panthers. Midland High is winless over that stretch with an 0-10 mark even though the Purple Pack came within a hair of upsetting Odessa Permian a year ago. Midland Lee, a team that has been to the state playoffs in 11 of the last 12 years, has only posted a 2-8-1 record against Odessa teams over that span of time.

Lee has lost three games in a row to Odessa High and four of the last five meetings with the Bronchos, a team the Rebels face tonight in Memorial Stadium. OHS has only been to the state playoffs twice since 1983 when the Rebel playoff string started, but consistently gives Lee fits in this seemingly unnatural rivalry.

Midland High faces what appears to be even a tougher task since the Bulldogs own a woeful 2-11 overall mark in Ratliff Stadium, the site of tonight's game with Permian. The Bulldogs haven't won a game at Ratliff since 1987, beating Odessa High.

And just in case you think this is a just a slump period, there are some other facts to consider. The Lee-OHS series is deadlocked at 17-all. Considering the overall success (playoff appearances) of the two teams, this is one of the most shocking revelations of all. Especially considering OHS' recent successes against Lee is what has tied the series up.

MHS trails Permian in the overall series 33-3. The last time the Bulldogs won this game was in 1973. Those kids have high school kids now.

And there is more. Including last season, Odessa teams have swept Midland (winning all four games between cities in a single season) a total of eight times. Now here's the catch. Midland has never swept Odessa. There is also one other season where Odessa teams won three of the four meetings while Lee and Permian tied. That makes it nine times that Odessa teams have not been beaten by a Midland team in a season.

With a 23-6 (.793) record in the 4-5A picking game, here is how the Midland-Odessa weekend goes down.

Midland Lee 35, Odessa High 14: A dangerous pick considering the Rebels' track record in this one, but it's high time for the jinx busters to arrive.

Odessa Permian 45, Midland High 6: You don't get many chances to win against Mojo and the Bulldogs had that chance a year ago, falling a foot-and-a-half short.

San Angelo 21, Abilene High 17: The Bobkitties are on the rise and will be 2-0 in district play after this one. San Angelo owns a 24-8-2 lead in the overall series since 1961.

Baseball's ratings fall

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ratings for the second night of the baseball playoffs were down 4 percent from Game 1.

Regionalized coverage of the AL and NL games Wednesday night got a 14.0 rating, Nielsen Media Research said Thursday — down slightly from the 14.6 for the series openers, which had the highest playoffs rating in seven years.

Once again, the cities with teams involved in the games had the highest ratings.

The Indians 5-2 victory over the Mariners got a 53.3 rating in Cleveland, up from the 45.8 rating for Game 1. Wednesday night's game got a 72 share in Cleveland.

In Seattle, the game got a 47.5 rating, a little less than the 47.9 for Game 1. The broadcast on ABC attracted a 72 share.

The rating is the percentage of televisions in the market watching a program and the share is the percentage tuned in among those televisions on at the time. Nationally, each ratings point represents 959,000 homes.

The Braves' 6-2, 10-inning victory over Cincinnati got a 34.5 rating in Atlanta, up from a 30.2 for Game 1. In Cincinnati, the game received a 30.4 rating, down from a 31.6.

Among large markets, Game 2 got an 11.9 in New York (up from 11.5), a 13.0 in Los Angeles (up from 12.1). Among other cities eliminated in the first round of the playoffs, the game got a 14.4 in Boston (up from 12.3) and a 9.4 in Denver (down from 11.9).

Thus far, regionalized coverage has boosted ratings — as baseball and television officials predicted. Two years ago, primetime playoff games averaged an 11.8 rating.

The next four nights of playoffs coverage will shift to NBC, the other network that is part of The Baseball Network. ABC would broadcast any seventh games.

Mariners take World Series momentum to state capital

The Associated Press

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — While the Seattle Mariners carried their World Series hopes to Cleveland, state legislators met in emergency session Thursday to debate a $320 million stadium proposal aimed at keeping the team from moving.

Leaders predicted speedy, bipartisan approval in the state Senate, but a tough battle in the House, where many of the conservative majority ran on a platform of no new taxes.

Lawmakers are being asked to dip into the state surplus for $20 million, donate some sales tax receipts to the project and give King County local taxing authority to raise its share of the tab.

The state and county would each put up $127.5 million, with the Mariners adding $45 million in cash.

Gov. Mike Lowry, a strong backer of the stadium plan, headlined a noon rally on the Capitol steps and later pitched the proposal to legislative hearings.

"Saving the Mariners is a winner for the entire state of Washington," he told several hundred fans who chanted the team's new rallying cry, "Refuse to Lose!"

The Mariners are tied 1-1 with Cleveland in their American League playoff. Game 3 is Friday night in Cleveland.

"People want the Mariners to stay ... they don't want the government to do it," said Rep. Joyce Mulliken, a leader of the conservative opposition.

Support for the plan drops precipitously outside the Puget Sound counties near the stadium, she said.

"They are called the Seattle Mariners, not the Washington Mariners," she said.

The ballclub has lost an estimated $67 million in the last 3 1/2 years, even with the Mariners having their most successful season in their 19-year history.

The Mariners blame the losses on their current home, the concrete-roofed, multipurpose Kingdome. They insist a baseball stadium, with a retractable roof and luxury boxes, would make the franchise profitable.

Last month, King County voters narrowly rejected a local sales tax increase to finance the new ballpark and Kingdome improvements demanded by the NFL's Seattle Seahawks.

The Mariners gave the state until Oct. 30 to find an alternative, and the ultimatum had many legislators grumpy.

"People feel jammed," said House Speaker Clyde Ballard. "This is one of the biggest issues we've ever voted on in this state — $300 million is a lot of money. And they say we've got to do it in two weeks or they'll leave the state."

Vote-counters said only 35 or 40 votes were firm in the House; it takes 50 votes to pass a bill.

Said Paul Isaki, vice president of the Mariners: "I think we're in striking distance."

Larkin to Reds teammates: We need to relax

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Barry Larkin, the Cincinnati Reds' extraordinary shortstop and acknowledged leader, took several teammates aside Thursday and delivered a message.

Have fun, he told them. Loosen up. Don't squeeze the bat so tight. Don't play like the season rides on every at-bat, even though it does.

And one more thing: Remember there's still time. Even though the Reds trail the Atlanta Braves 2-0 in their best-of-7 playoff and face three-time Cy Young winner Greg Maddux on Friday night, they still have a chance if they can relax and win.

"I think the situation now is we have absolutely nothing to lose and everything in the world to gain," Larkin said during a workout at Fulton County Stadium. "I talked to a couple of players and asked them what they thought of it."

They agreed that there's still hope. They also conceded no one else thinks so.

"I think everybody (outside the team) feels that with us coming down here facing Maddux down 2-0, we don't have much of a chance," Larkin said. "I think that fact alone will add a little fire under some guys, make them test themselves and challenge themselves that we can do the unspeakable, the impossible."

There are two reasons to think the Reds could become the first team to reach the World Series after losing the first two games of the league championship series on its home field.

They opened the season 1-8, one of the worst starts in franchise history, by stumbling around the same way they have in the playoffs. A comeback win over the New York Mets turned everything around and started a six-game winning streak.

"We know we have the type of ballclub that can pull off anything. We've done that this year," outfielder Ron Gant said.

The playoffs could take an abrupt turn if Gant (two infield singles in nine at-bats) and cleanup hitter Reggie Sanders (one infield single in nine at-bats) start making contact.

"They can change real quick," manager Davey Johnson said. "They just need to relax and do it."

"Usually when I'm a little cold, he's been hot and vice-versa," Gant said. "Never at one time have we both not hit. And it's frustrating because we know we are the power of the ballclub. But all it takes is one game and one swing for both of us."

The other factor is the Reds' confidence against Maddux, who has a losing career record against Cincinnati (9-10, 3.54 ERA in 28 appearances). The Reds handed him his most lopsided loss of the season Aug. 9 in Atlanta, piling up eight hits and five walks in 6 2-3 innings for a 9-3 victory.

They respect the three-time Cy Young winner, but know they can handle him.

"We feel confidence facing Maddux," Sanders said. "We've faced him a lot and beaten him a couple of times."

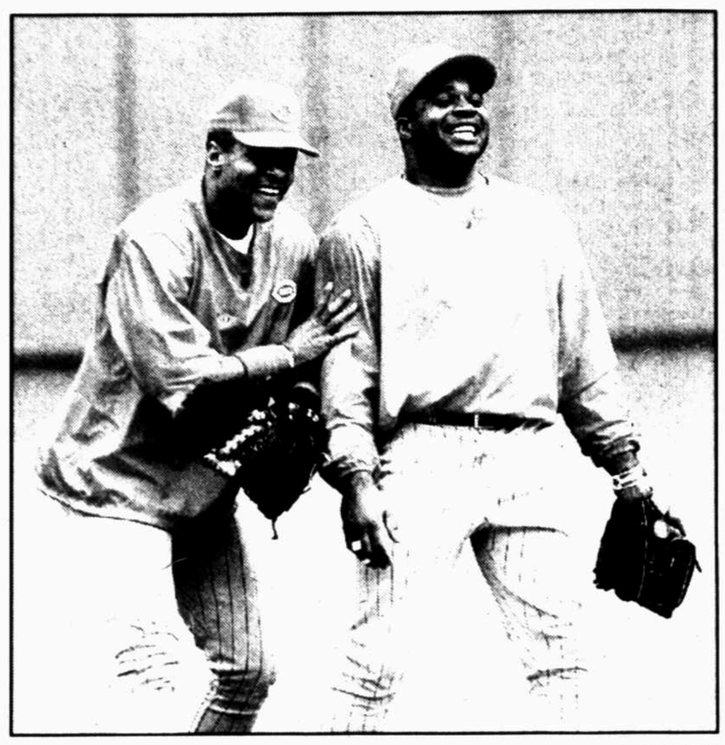

Maddux got even by dominating the Reds last Sept. 16, giving up just four hits over seven shutout innings of a 6-1 victory at Riverfront Stadium. The Reds fell behind in counts and then swung at bad pitches.

The strategy this time will be to relax and swing away.

"I think if we can get him early in the count and get those pitches that he gets over for the first strike, and get a couple of base hits here and there and run around the bases, we can take him out of his ballgame pretty early," Gant said. "But we're going to have to be aggressive."

Above all, they're going to have to remember what Larkin told them about believing.

"That's what this game is all about: confidence," Sanders said. "Against Maddux, we've done the things we have to do in key situations, so the confidence is there."

AP Laserphoto

ALCS: Seattle 28-3 when Johnson starts gives them a chance to wrap up the series at Jacobs Field. They're scheduled to send Ken Hill to the mound in Game 4 and Dennis Martinez in Game 5, against Andy Benes and either Bob Wolcott or Chris Bosio.

For the Mariners, the game seems so much more crucial. As manager Lou Piniella said, "We have to get this series back to Seattle for Game 6."

That brings forth Johnson, who beat the California Angels in the one-game division playoff and won twice against the Yankees, once as a starter and again in Game 5 as a reliever.

"I like to think I've risen to the occasion every time this year," Johnson said. "My last three starts (including a 5-2 victory against the Rangers on Sept. 28) have been in situations where we as a team had our backs to the wall. If we don't win those games, we wouldn't be here right now. It just so happens I was pitching in those games."

Like other AL hitters, the Indians don't relish the matchup. Third baseman Jim Thome remembers one memorable at-bat against Johnson a few years ago in spring training.

"When he was on the mound, he looked like he was landing on top of me," Thome said. "The thing I remember about that at-bat was I tried to check my swing and I tore a ligament in my hand. I had to go on the disabled list."

Thome didn't have to worry about finishing the at-bat.

"It was strike three," he said.

The Mariners are 28-3 this season when Johnson starts, including his 5-3 victory against Cleveland on July 7 at Jacobs Field. That was his only start this season against the Indians, and he pitched a complete game, striking out 13 and not walking a batter.

His presence in Game 3 is why the Indians, after losing the opener, felt such a sense of urgency to win Game 2. But a team that won 100 games during the regular season is not backing down against anybody.

"I don't think that anybody has told Randy that if you throw your glove out there, you're going to win," Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove said. "Randy goes out there to bust his butt to win and he's got a lot of talent. If you talk to Randy, he would tell you that there is no guarantee that he's going to win when he steps on the mound.

"You can't start changing your thinking where you start trying to do things to allow for the fact that you're going to lose (against Johnson). If you do that, you never get to the point where you're trying to win."

One factor that might swing the advantage toward Cleveland is Johnson's recent workload. Johnson, who was experiencing shoulder problems in early September, has made his past two starts on three days' rest, then pitched three innings in relief on one day's rest against the Yankees.

"It's a concern," Piniella said. "That's why we added a 10th pitcher for the playoffs. It's why we're giving him the full five days instead of pitching him (in Game 2). I do think of players. I don't want anyone hurt because of a decision I made. Randy is perfectly fine. He'll be ready to go."

Amused by the concern about his arm, Johnson walked into an interview room Wednesday bent well over to his left side, his arm dangling almost to the ground.

"It feels longer," Johnson said with a smile.

On a more serious note, Johnson refused to express concern that his heavy workload might have a long-term effect.

"I don't believe so," Johnson said. "I threw 214 innings in the regular season with two postseason appearances now. Two years ago, I threw 250 innings in the regular season, so I'm not even there yet as far as innings. I felt fine the following year.

"As a team, we've put ourselves in a position where aches and pains are left in the locker room. I think the adrenalin and the excitement of what we're playing for will overtake any aches and pains."

College hoops start gets face lift

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — This weekend's Midnight Madness, the first practice session for the 1995-96 edition of the Razorback basketball team, will display a new look, Coach Nolan Richardson said Thursday.

"The teams that I've had the last three years were some of the best shooting teams I've ever coached," Richardson said. "There were more than four or five guys that could hurt you. I do not see that in this basketball team."

But Richardson said athletic ability should make up for some of the shooting skills missing from his new team.

"This team would probably outrebound last year's team, be a much quicker team, and possibly play more of a 94-foot game," Richardson said. "So, you're looking at a totally different basketball team than you saw a year ago. You're looking at a very athletic group of guys.

"Hopefully, between our practices and what we feel we can get accomplished, we can somehow come up with some guys that can stick it in the hole."

After winning the national championship in 1994, the Razorbacks made it to the NCAA championship game again last spring before falling to UCLA.

The Arkansas coach said fans might not be able to see three recruits in action Saturday. Sunday Adebayo, Jesse Pate and Marlon Towns are awaiting clarification of their eligibility status, he said, and won't be able to practice with the team until that is cleared up.

"Of course, if the status of any of the three is cleared before Saturday, any or all of them could be available for practice," he said.

Richardson said the team expected a big crowd to show up at Walton Arena at midnight Saturday night.

"I think we had over 20,000 last year, and maybe we can get even more this year with all of the new players," he said.

Members of this year's team appear to have gotten themselves in good shape in pre-practice conditioning, Richardson said. "Their body fat is down and their conditioning seems to be probably a little better at this point than it was a this stage last year," he said.

Richardson said he was looking forward to working with his new team.

"It'll be fun," he said. "The guys I had the last three years were great, and three of those guys are back, and two of them were on teams that won a national championship and were runners-up for another one. Now they're playing on a team that's totally different.

Steffi Graf situation keeps changing

N.Y. Times News Service

FRANKFURT, Germany — Her father and her tax adviser sit in jail. She was grilled for eight hours last week by German tax officials. Her agent and a major sponsor are fighting with each other. She has dropped out of tournaments, emotionally drained and suffering from a back injury. There is endless speculation that she will leave professional tennis, move away from Germany or be arrested.

The Steffi Graf tax-evasion case has riveted the German public since Peter Graf was arrested on Aug. 2. It is a tale of a greedy, domineering father whose search for riches not only ruins his life but that of his daughter as well.

And authorities are just beginning to piece together the complex web of finances set up by Steffi Graf's father over the past decade that has become a public riddle. How much money does she have? Where is it? Who is managing it? How much does she owe the German government in back taxes? How much does she know about her finances?

Although Germans still want to believe that Steffi, who is 26, knew nothing about her father's alleged tax-evasion schemes, her case strikes at that heart of a burning issue here. Can Germans continue to pay the enormous costs for an extravagant social net that has kept crime and social disorder to a minimum while maintaining their standard of living, currently among the highest in the world?

For single wage earners with incomes of $85,000 a year or more, 56 percent vanishes in taxes. The average German household pays almost as much, an average tax rate of 48 percent. And Germans seem to have reached the breaking point.

Over the past three years, the country has been plagued by tax-evasion schemes. Middle-class Germans have carried untold billions of dollars in suitcases across the border into Luxembourg and other tax havens. The country's cash economy — out of the reach of taxes — has mushroomed.

Against this backdrop, the government has begun to crack down, raiding offices of the country's largest banks to find evidence of tax-evasion schemes. Peter Graf, who is 57, should have expected no less.

Thus, the image of the super rich avoiding taxes, either by moving their residences to Monaco or other tax havens, or in Steffi Graf's case, simply not paying taxes, riles a society that believes in following the rules.

According to private estimates by those close to the case, the Grafs paid about $7 million in taxes since 1983 on income estimated to be more than $100 million. Put another way, they may owe as much as $50 million in back taxes.

Currently, there are far more questions than answers, including claims that Peter Graf reached agreements with key state authorities for preferential treatment. His lawyer has confirmed reports that in 1993, Peter Graf and tax authorities in his home state of Baden-Wurttemberg agreed that Steffi Graf's taxable income was $1.9 million while in fact it totaled almost $12 million. State officials deny making any such deals.

The Graf family did not file tax returns for four years, 1989 through 1992, and never received demands for such filings. This is odd in a country known for bureaucratic efficiency.

As early as 1991, officials of the German government in Bonn had notified local tax authorities that something was wrong, but it took years for any action to be taken. In Germany, tax collection is handled at the state level.

"It is clear that an extraordinarily favorable treatment was given here by local officials and that has to be fully investigated," said Dieter Puchta, finance committee chairman of the Baden-Wurttemberg state legislature.

According to prosecutors, when the tennis star's earnings started to skyrocket in the mid-1980s, Peter Graf set up a murky chain of shell corporations outside of Germany to handle the family finances.

The key investment company, prosecutors said, was Sunpark B.V. in Amsterdam, set up in 1987. Into that company, Steffi's major sponsors, including Adidas, Opel and Sudmilch, paid fees totalling more than $3 million a year, according to German officials.

"It was clear from the beginning this was set up solely to avoid paying taxes," Puchta said. He added that prosecutors will also have to determine whether they believe any of the sponsors might have engaged in misconduct by paying into such a shell corporation.

But the money was not just parked in the Amsterdam account. From there, the authorities said, it was sent to another shell corporation in the Netherlands Antilles, Sunpark N.V., and then it could be transferred to shell corporations in other tax havens like Liechtenstein.

According to published reports, just before his arrest, Peter Graf had given orders to transfer $30 million out of his Amsterdam account to accounts in Monaco, Switzerland and Guernsey, as well as Liechtenstein. The transaction was stopped by the Dutch government upon fears that it was part of a money-laundering scheme.

Stars outshoot Blues but St. Louis wins 3-1

The Associated Press

■ NHL Roundup

DALLAS — Grant Fuhr turned aside 35 shots to record his 292nd career victory and Brian Noonan snapped a 1-1 tie with a second-period power-play goal as the St. Louis Blues continued their domination of the Dallas Stars with a 3-1 victory Thursday night.

The Blues (2-1-0) were outshot 36-19 but they beat Stars goalie Andy Moog three times on their first 13 shots en route to their 13th victory in 16 meetings with the Stars.

Meanwhile, St. Louis got strong goaltending from the 32-year-old Fuhr, who allowed seven goals in two periods last season in his previous visit to Reunion Arena while a member of the Los Angeles Kings.

Only Moog has more career victories than Fuhr among active goaltenders with 313. Fuhr and Moog were the goaltenders on the Edmonton Oilers' Stanley Cup championship teams in 1984, '85 and '87. The Blues signed Fuhr as a free agent in the off-season.

The Stars had scored 12 goals in their first two games but only Mike Modano was able to get the puck past Fuhr with a first-period shorthanded goal.

Noonan gave the Blues the lead for good with the man advantage, then defenseman Chris Pronger took advantage of a two-on-one break with Brett Hull on a shorthanded situation and beat Moog from close range at 12:57.

Dallas (1-2-0) took a 1-0 lead after only 2:55 had been played when Modano stole the puck from defenseman Al MacInnis and fired a shot between the pads of Fuhr.

St. Louis tied the game 4:02 later when Denis Chasse knocked a rebound past Moog.

Devils 4, Jets 1

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Steve Thomas continued to do his best to make New Jersey fans forget playoff MVP Claude Lemieux by scoring twice to lead New Jersey to a victory over Winnipeg.

Denis Pederson scored his first NHL goal in his first game and Martin Brodeur stopped 29 shots as the Stanley Cup champions won for the second time in as many games.

Mike Eastwood scored for the Jets, who played most of the game without center Alexei Zhamnov, who sprained his right knee in a collision with Devils defenseman Scott Stevens 1:35 into the contest.

New Jersey dominated most of the opening two periods, outshooting the Jets 29-13 in opening a 3-0 lead.

Thomas, who was acquired just before the season in a trade for the disgruntled Lemieux, put New Jersey ahead 2:29 into the game, knocking the rebound of a Stephane Richer shot past Jets goalie Tim Cheveldae.

Pederson, who was called up from Albany on Monday because of an injury to Bobby Holik, took a pass from Mike Peluso and beat Cheveldae from between the circles at 12:12.

Thomas, who had an assist in his first game, got his second goal midway through the second period with New Jersey skating with a two-man advantage. Defenseman Tommy Albelin took a shot from the blueline and Thomas deflected it past Cheveldae, who played well in making 30 saves.

The only question after that was whether Brodeur would get his second straight shutout. However, Eastwood took a pass from Dallas Drake, faked a behind-the-net move and then beat Brodeur with a backhander in close for his second goal of the season.

Brodeur had gone 97 minutes, 16 seconds without giving up a goal.

The Jets, who rallied in the third period in dropping a 6-4 decision to the New York Rangers, outshot New Jersey 17-5 in the final period. Devils defenseman Jason Smith got the only goal, scoring into an empty net for his first NHL goal.

Lightning 3, Canadiens 1

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Petr Klima scored twice as the Tampa Bay Lightning continued their home-ice domination of Montreal with a two-goal victory.

The victory improved the Lightning's home record against Montreal to 5-0-1 in their four-year history. They also hold a 6-3-1 overall series advantage.

Trying to snap back from embarrassing 7-1 and 6-1 losses to start the season, Montreal outshot Tampa Bay 17-11 in the first.

Blackhawks 5, Penguins 1

CHICAGO — Jeff Shantz took advantage of a mistake by Mario Lemieux to score shorthanded and Patrick Poulin had two goals as the Chicago Blackhawks won their home opener over Pittsburgh.

Mario Lemieux ruined Belfour's shutout bid by scoring shorthanded with 8:11 to play but otherwise struggled.

Lemieux nevertheless has eight points in three games after missing most of the last two seasons with a back injury.

The Blackhawks made it 2-0 at 11:35 when Tony Amonte set up Suter's power-play goal.

Hico team leaves opponents guessing

The Associated Press

DALLAS — Hico coach Kevin Hall really enjoyed seeing his players line up in all sorts of goofy formations, trying every imaginable gadget play and still gobbling up yards and points.

How kooky were the Tigers? They had 80 formations in their playbook and used as many as 40 in one game. Everybody had fun with it, especially because Hico usually won.

But this past offseason Hall realized a change was needed. His roster had thinned, the stars who fueled that high-powered offense were gone and to remain successful the new emphasis would have to be on defense.

So far, it's worked. Hico is 4-0-1, ranked No. 10 in Class 1A and has the stingiest defense among the lowest three classes in the area, according to the latest statistics compiled by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"I won't know until about 10 o'clock Friday night," he said.

Their showdown is one of many this weekend that could go a long way in determining district titles as teams across the state head into their first full weekend of district play.

Although Crawford-Hico is the only game pitting ranked teams, there are plenty of others worth watching. The best of the rest may be 5A's No. 2 Odessa Permian looking to extend its decades-long winning streak against crosstown rival Odessa.

Crawford (4-1) has won the last three games against Hico. Those also are the only three meetings between the schools, which were thrown into the same district in 1992.

Getting past Hico helped Crawford take the district title and run with it the last few years. The Pirates reached the quarterfinals in 1992, the semifinals in 1993 and the finals last season.

Crawford began this season ranked 10th and moved as high as No. 5 before losing 14-7 to 2A Valley Mills in the third week. The Pirates have bounced back by beating Waco Reicher 26-6 and last weekend taking out Abbott 46-0.

"We've got a real young team," said Crawford coach Robert Murphy, who is using 10 sophomores and one freshman to replace the 11 seniors from last year's team. "Every time we just about think we've found team, we've had to readjust. I don't think we're as good as we're going to be later in the year."

Murphy has seen the tapes of the revamped Hico offense and he's surprised. He even looked back at last year's scouting reports and can hardly believe the changes.

"In the past, it was multiple formations, spread you out and every formation known to mankind," Murphy said. "It almost got to the point where they'd rather trick you than get a first down.

"But once upon a time, they had the players to do it with. Now, it's almost like that coaching staff left and a new one came in."

Almost. Hall is still there, he's just decided that he can no longer outscore other teams so he's better off trying to shut them down.

"We used to be explosive," Hall said. "Now, three yards and a cloud of dust is our goal."

He's stripped the offensive playbook down to four formations, none more complicated than two tight ends and one wideout. His biggest strategy is rotating three quarterbacks and five running backs.

Hall's reasoning is more logical than tactical. Rather than trying to confuse opponents, his goal is to keep those players fresh for defense.

Another byproduct is sustained offensive drives. No more quick strikes that force the defense back onto the field.

"Our kids are frustrated that drives are taking 13, 14 plays," Hall said. "They think they're not doing their job without any big plays. But the difference is we're not trying for them."

LEE: Rebels haven't won since 1991

(From 1C)

the situation, then you would be wrong," Parchman said. "We talked about it in the locker room after the Abilene High game and they know that Odessa High has rained on our parade lately. It's time for us to turn it up a notch and I think we will."

OHS coach Bill Barron says that he owns no jinx in the series, or in the current win streak.

"There is no secret. We've just been plain fortunate," Barron says. "We've gotten some great breaks against Lee that we just haven't been getting against some other teams. Things like two scores in 10 seconds."

OHS is coming off a heart-breaking 28-21 loss to San Angelo in a 4-5A game that was won in the final 12 seconds. The Bronchos, leading 21-20, fumbled the ball to give the Bobcats the chance at victory with just over 20 seconds left in the game.

"It was a tough pill to swallow and I feel bad for our kids. The deserved to win that game," Barron said. "I've heard a lot of comments on how we should have taken the knee (down the ball) and punted but I've never seen anyone in football do that in all my coaching career. We elected to go for the first down with the second safest play we had. The only thing safer would be to take the knee, but we would have had to punt."

Barron's Bronchos have been in this position with two league losses and Lee on the schedule before. It is that fact that is the calling card again tonight.

"We've been here before and we know that you still have a chance in this district if you can beat Lee," Barron said. "We'll do our best to prepare the kids for that task, go back to work and head for the top. That's all we can do right now."

Both coaches feel this game presents a challenge, and that, too, isn't new when these two meet in football.

"Odessa High has great team speed," Parchman said. "We felt all along that they were one of the teams to beat in this league. We'll have to play a sound game."

Barron is impressed with the unbeaten Rebels.

"This is the finest team Lee has had since I've been here," Barron said. "They just don't have any weaknesses. We've seen their kicking game and both sides of the ball and they have it all. If there is a weakness, we don't know where it is. Maybe one of their kids has 80 percent body fat or something. There's bound to be some kind of weakness over there.

"We're going to have to play mistake free football and we haven't done that the past two weeks. You can't give up things and beat good football teams. We need to eliminate the mistakes to win this one."

Parchman seems more concerned about keeping an even keel for this matchup and others on the schedule. So far, Lee has done a good job of that taking on one opponent at a time. Lee is averaging well over 40 points per outing and has become Lee's all-time scoring leader through five games, replacing the 1991 team.

"We can only worry about what we do," Parchman said. "A lot is being said about this game, but we are preparing for it in a business-like manner. We don't want to create obstacles for us that shouldn't be there.

But the obstacles are there. The result may say a lot about how both teams end this season. That alone should be enough to make the heart pump a little faster. Stand-up time has arrived in 4-5A.

MHS: Bulldogs lost 20-19 in 1994

(From 1C)

"They have great speed outside and power inside," said Reeger. "They are more like Lee because they can do both. There is no secret formula for them."

Odessa Permian coach Randy Mayes says that a great deal of the teams success running the ball comes from the offensive line. Mayes also says the running game will be going full throttle this week.

"It's just a basic running game and the credit goes to the offensive line," said Mayes. "We're going with that basic game plan that we used last weekend."

What makes Permian's ability to run the ball so scary for Bulldogs supporters is that MHS has allowed 850 yards of the its 1,059 total on the ground. Last week, the Bulldogs lost to Abilene Cooper 42-7. That followed a 43-3 loss to Midland Lee to open district play. In addition, MHS has given up 200-yard individual rushing performances in consecutive games.

During the course of the season, Bulldogs have also lost their top 3 fullbacks — Leighton King, Tom Paul Howard and Demitrius Lee — to injury. This has hampered a team that tries to make its living on the ground. Reeger knows that his team must overcome adversity and get those much-needed wins, making every game left on the schedule a big one.

"Everybody we play will be critical," said Reeger. "We're struggling terribly. We have to get off the floor and make a big effort. We need a win."

Permian is coming off last Saturday's non-district win over Carter, but Mayes, who feels a competitive non-district schedule will make his team stronger down the line, says an emphasis on 4-5A will make his team ready for Midland High.

"The kids understand that (Carter) was a big ball game with the media," said Mayes. "But that doesn't mean as much as this one. This is a district ball game and it's very important. We need to win it."

Last year, Midland High was 18 inches away from completing a two-point conversion that would have beaten the Panthers. MHS senior Roy Coats fell short of the goal line and Midland High suffered a 20-19 setback at Midland Memorial Stadium. It was the closest loss for MHS since Permian started its winning streak 21 games ago, but falling short in what could have been a huge win for the Bulldogs just doesn't sit well with Reeger.

"Last year, we we're in the same situation," said Reeger. "We came close but we need to do better."

Midland High does come into the game as big an underdog as any game of the season. But on Friday the 13th, where mythically strange events seem to happen, anything can happen and Reeger wouldn't mind if the occult shows its ugly head.

"It has to work for somebody," said Reeger. "Why not us."

Mavericks have improved by light years

By Richie Whitt
1995 Fort Worth Star-Telegram

DALLAS — Entering their preseason opener a year ago, the Mavericks had a retired-turned-revitalized coach, a rookie point guard, no proven backups and the lingering stench of consecutive 11- and 13-victory seasons.

"We've come light years," said Mavericks coach Dick Motta, who begins his NBA-record 24th preseason tonight when the Mavericks visit the Indiana Pacers at 7:30 in Indianapolis' Market Square Arena.

"We've got players who believe in the system and players who aren't afraid to work hard to learn how to win. We've still got more light years to go, but we're so much closer to having all the pieces of the puzzle."

Motta, who once cut a player during stretching exercises, has appeared downright mellow through the first 14 practices of training camp at SMU's Moody Coliseum. He has yet to raise his voice and said he likes what he sees in all directions.

Guard Jason Kidd has a veteran backup in Scott Brooks. Guard Jim Jackson has the same in Lucious Harris, and forward Jamal Mashburn in George McCloud. And then thered are rookie centers Cherokee Parks and Loren Meyer, who give the Mavericks something they lacked last season: big men who can shoot.

"In Dick's offense, having a center who can shoot makes all the difference in the world," player personnel director Keith Grant said. "We think we've found two who can do it."

If nothing else, Parks, the Mavericks' top draft pick, has proved during camp that he can consistently make the 15- to 18-foot jumpers. He has, however, shied away from physical contact and has started to wear down.

"The style is totally different than college," said Parks, a Duke graduate. "Everybody's so physical, and everybody's so strong. It's not a place for the weak. I'll tell you that."

Motta said he plans to use Parks, who turned 23 Wednesday, and Meyer at center and power forward, though he doesn't know which one will start tonight's game.

"We're going to treat it as another practice," Motta said. "I'm anxious to see both of them at both positions. So far, I like what I've seen."

Parks and Meyer haven't appeared to have any trouble fitting in with the Mavericks' veterans. Motta said Parks has been accepted readily because he makes less money than most veterans, thanks to the new collective bargaining agreement.

"There's no jealousy because of money," Motta said. "Add that to the fact that (Parks) plays a position we badly need some help at, and it was evident early that these guys have taken him under their wing."

With the illness-related absence of Roy Tarpley and injuries to Donald Hodge (thumb) and Lorenzo Williams (finger), Parks and Meyer are expected to get more minutes than usual for rookies.

"I'm excited and a little nervous," Parks said. "I think I know the offense and what to expect. Now I'm ready to see how I stack up and what I can do."

Whether it's Parks, Meyer or the improved and matured Tony Dumas, Motta said he's eager to include more players in his rotation.

BRIEFLY

Tarpley is scheduled to undergo a procedure today that should pinpoint the source of stomach cramping caused by pancreatitis. He is expected to be able to practice seven to 10 days after the hospital procedure, meaning he will miss all of training camp. The Mavericks' last practice at SMU is Tuesday.

Motta said that he doesn't know who will be his fifth starter tonight, but that assistants Kip Motta and Brad Davis will determine lineups and minutes played. Kidd, Jackson, Mashburn and Popeye Jones are expected to start. "I told the players not to read anything into anything we do," Motta said. "It's another practice to me."

Phoenix signs Danny Manning for six years

The Associated Press

PHOENIX — The Phoenix Suns signed unrestricted free agent Danny Manning to a six-year, guaranteed contract Thursday, taking a chance that Manning's surgically repaired knees will last until he's at least 35.

Manning, who played in 46 games last season before he tore his left anterior cruciate ligament Feb. 6, also was allowed to buy one share of the limited partnership that will run the Arizona Diamondbacks, a 1998 baseball expansion team.

Suns president Jerry Colangelo, the managing partner of the baseball team, said the $5 million share was a separate arrangement.

Terms of the contract, which could run seven years with an option, were not disclosed, but it was believed to be worth between $6 million and $8 million a year. It includes provisos that void it if Manning hurts himself jet-skiing or riding a dune buggy, part of the Suns' hedge against career-ending injuries.

Ron Grinker, Manning's agent, said the deal was better than a seven-year, $35 million offer Manning turned down in the summer of 1994 to join the Suns.

Last year, Phoenix was able to squeeze out just $1 million under the salary cap to sign the 6-foot-10 forward, the No. 1 pick in the 1988 draft, but Manning accepted with the understanding that he would be well-compensated in the future.

Grinker said there was no fear when Manning's knee blew out, because he trusted Colangelo to make good.

"There was never any question as to what would happen," Grinker said. He said he and Colangelo didn't start negotiating until Sept. 29, and the talks were little more than a formality.

"It's never been about money," said Grinker, who told Manning about Chris Webber's six-year, $59 million contract and got little reaction.

Grinker pointed out that Manning originally committed to play in Phoenix for $500,000 until the Suns traded Mark West and found more room under the cap.

"It's of no concern to Danny what any other player makes. He would not have signed this if he wasn't pleased. There was very little negotiation, because there didn't have to be," Grinker said.

Issac Bruce leads way for Rams' 21-19 win over Atlanta

The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Isaac Bruce wouldn't let special teams mistakes and turnovers stop the St. Louis Rams.

Bruce caught 10 passes for 191 yards and two touchdowns, his third 100-yard receiving day in four games, sending the Rams past the Atlanta Falcons 21-19 Thursday night in an unlikely battle for first place in the NFC West.

A sellout crowd of 59,700 watched what could be the final NFL game played at Busch Stadium. A news conference is scheduled for Friday to announce whether the $260 million Trans World Dome will be ready for the Rams-49ers game Oct. 22, but it's likely the Rams (5-1) will have one more game at Busch.

Bruce has caught six touchdown passes in his first year as a starter. In the last two games, he has totaled 372 yards receiving. He set up one of the scores when he ran 51 yards off a lateral on a punt return from Todd Kinchen to the Falcons 9 late in the first half.

The Rams have been successful on that play the last two games, but special teams, a big plus in their 4-0 start, nearly did them in this time. Kevin Ross returned a blocked field goal attempt 83 yards for a score in the second quarter and Eric Metcalf returned a wobbly Sean Landeta punt 66 yards for a score in the third quarter.

The Rams also had a fumble and an interception. After committing no turnovers the first four games, they've had four the last two games.

Tony Zendejas' second field goal of the game, from 45 yards with 11:58 to go, cut the gap to 21-19. But the Rams ran out the final 6:36.

Chris Miller completed 27 of 38 passes for 328 yards for St. Louis and Jerome Bettis had his best day of the season with 88 yards on 19 carries.

Jeff George was 16 for 30 for 160 yards for Atlanta (4-2).

The Rams dominated the first half, outgaining Atlanta 292 yards to 109, but an 83-yard return on a blocked field goal attempt by Ross kept the Falcons in striking distance at 21-10.

St. Louis was in positiion to make it 17-0 on a 27-yard kick by Steve McLaughlin but Roger Harper got his arm on the ball, Ross picked it up, and evaded a couple of tackles to score down the sideline with 3:05 left in the half.

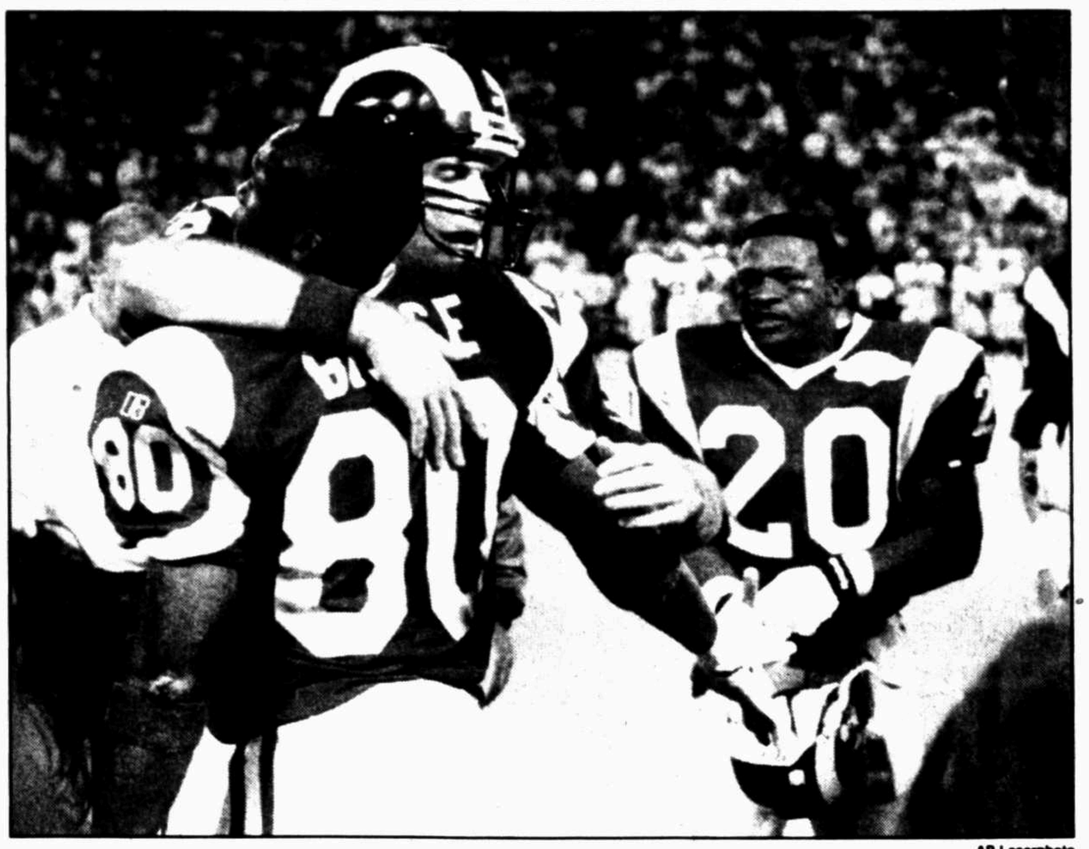

The Rams had a reply, with Kinchen executing a lateral on a punt return for the second time in as many games. Kinchen skipped the pass to Bruce on the opposite sideline, but Bruce scooped it up and returned it 51 yards to the 9. Bruce caught his second touchdown pass from that distance with 41 seconds to go in the half.

The Rams answered on Miller's 9-yard pass to Bruce with 41 seconds left in the half. The Falcons had enough time, though, to set up a 40-yard field goal by Zendejas on the last play of the half.

Miller's first pass of the game was dropped by Pat Carter, then he hit 11 in a row. The Rams took the lead with 1:45 left in the first quarter when a backpedaling Miller connected on a 59-yard touchdown to Bruce.

They made it 14-0 on Johnny Bailey's 12-yard run on a pitchout with 11:09 left in the half. Bailey ran behind a convoy of three wide receivers and tackle Wayne Gandy, and scored untouched.

Game Notes: Prior to Thursday's game, the last time the Rams and Falcons played when both teams had winning records was exactly nine years ago — Oct. 12, 1986, in Atlanta. The Falcons won that game 26-14. ... Think Chris Miller has a strong arm? On his first-quarter touchdown pass to Isaac Bruce, Miller threw the ball 40 yards in the air side-armed and backpeddaling. ...Bruce caught 10 passes for 191 yards, his third 100-yard game in the past four. ... The last time a Rams field goal attempt was blocked and returned for a touchdown was December 1976 by Minnesota.

■ Texas A&M has lost back-to-back games for the first time since in 1988 and R.C. Slocum is hearing about it.

The Associated Press

DALLAS — Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum is making some unusual adjustments this week.

Instead of discussing Xs and Os, he's been forced to discuss Ls — the first consecutive defeats by the No. 22 Aggies since 1988, including their first loss in the Southwest Conference since 1990.

Almost a week after the latest disappointment, a 14-7 loss to Texas Tech, Slocum's players are still having trouble handling an overall record of 2-2 and a conference mark of 0-1.

"They're down ... because they're not accustomed to losing," Slocum said. "It's shocking when (we) lose. Devastating. Fans say, 'What's wrong?' Players say, 'What's wrong?'

"I look at it and say we played our first conference game this past weekend and had every chance to win. We're not far off in what we have to do to get back in this thing. We just need to come back and have a good game this weekend."

The Aggies have plenty of frustrations to take out this weekend against Southern Methodist (1-4, 0-1 SWC).

Not only do they want to bounce back in a big way from the consecutive losses to Colorado and Tech, but there's also the matter of avenging last year's 21-21 tie with the Mustangs.

The league's other two ranked teams also have something to prove. No. 18 Texas — now the SWC's highest-ranked team — plays No. 13 Oklahoma in their annual showdown in Dallas, and Texas Tech must prove it deserves to again be No. 25 when it plays host to Arkansas State.

The rest of the conference action is head-to-head games, both in Houston. Rice gets its first home game since Sept. 16 by hosting Texas Christian, and Baylor will face the Cougars.

While the Aggies fret over their poor start, Slocum is playing the role of Zig Ziglar. He's sending out good vibes and promising everyone that another bowl appearance is still well within A&M's grasp.

"I'm not at all disappointed over our situation," Slocum said. "We need to get more consistent on offense and defense and we'll be fine. It's really early. We have well more than half our season left.

"I think we just need to hang in there with each other and we'll be OK."

They should get much better by pounding the Mustangs, whom they no doubt must respect after last season's embarrassment in San Antonio.

But SMU appears even less likely for an upset this year. The Mustangs haven't been close in any game since the season-opening shocker over Arkansas.

"I think we've probably got as many or more problems than A&M right now," SMU assistant coach Clovis Hale said. "I've heard R.C. say he's sure his team is down, but I'm gonna tell you I think they have one of the best defenses in the country."

On the flip side of A&M's depression is the elation being spread through West Texas by the Red Raiders (2-2, 1-1) and coach Spike Dykes.

But Dykes is warning his folks against getting too excited.

"You got to get back down to Earth and I really believe we've done a good job of doing that," Dykes said. "We've got a long way to go. I don't think we've arrived."

Tech still should have no problem Saturday. The Red Raiders' defense has allowed only two touchdowns over its last three games and Arkansas State has not won a road game in two seasons.

To Dykes, the key to Saturday's game will be tuning up for the rest of the SWC race.

"If we can continue to maintain our consistency, then I think we'll be decent," Dykes said. "The thing you can't do is play decent one week and horrible the next."

The Longhorns (4-1, 2-0) are still somewhat struggling to find consistency.

Victories the last two weeks over SMU and Rice have helped, but the real test will be the next two weeks against the Sooners and No. 19 Virginia.

"The second half of the season is the crunch time," UT coach John Mackovic said. "For us, the next two weeks are important to a national picture and then we come back to finish the conference schedule."

Arkansas State worried about loaded Tech team

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas State University coach John Bobo was making notes for his news conference when he noticed a theme about Texas Tech.

"I noticed I was writing a bunch of 'S' words — speed, size, strength, scheme," he said. "That's four pretty good 'S' words. They have tremendous speed, size, strength and an excellent scheme in all phases of the game."

ASU (2-4) meets Tech (2-2) Saturday night in Lubbock.

The Raiders are ranked 25th after beating Texas A&M 14-7 last week. ASU is coming off a 33-9 loss to Southwestern Louisiana.

"With this game, you're dealing with both ends of the spectrum," Bobo said. "We're dealing with a disappointing loss. Even though we lost to one of the best teams in our conference, we felt like it was a game we could have won and should have played much better than we did.

"And on the other end of it, Texas Tech is dealing with the emotional high of beating one of the best teams in the country," he said. "It boils down to this — if you've got any pride, we'll find out about it real quick in this game.

"This one has the potential be real ugly. The only way we can prevent that is go out and play as hard as we can play and scrap and claw and kick and fight and all of those things you have to do to play as well as you can."

ASU has lost three straight. The Raiders lost at Penn State, 24-23, in the season opener and then beat Missouri 41-14. Tech lost at Baylor, 9-7, before beating the Aggies.

Bobo said Tech's offense starts with quarterback Zebbie Letheridge.

"He reminds me of Tracy Ham," Bobo said. "He's a tremendous athlete and a much better passer. He's a threat when the protection breaks down and he turns into a scrambler. He's also a threat to execute the play as it's designed and make it happen."

USL made 26 first downs and 482 yards against ASU. Bobo said end Gary Jackson was the only player on the Indians' defense who graded out a winner against USL.

"Offensively, it was the same story," Bobo said. "We had only two guys grade out winners — Corey Walker and Austin Tinsley."

ASU had 11 first downs and 273 yards against USL. The Indians' only touchdown came on a 72-yard run by Tinsley.

"That's what I'm looking for, guys who give effort," Bobo said.

He took the blame for the Indians' performance against USL.

SWC takes measures against bad officiating

The Associated Press

DALLAS — The Southwest Conference on Thursday said it has taken "corrective measures" against the officiating crew that worked last weekend's Texas A&M-Texas Tech game.

One controversial call nullified an A&M touchdown in the game, won 14-7 by Tech. Another nullified an A&M fumble recovery early in the game.

The Red Raiders' victory snapped the Aggies' streak of 29 conference games without a loss.

The SWC issued a brief statement:

"The Southwest Conference office has taken corrective measures as a result of errors of judgment and officiating mechanics made by its officiating crew," the league said in a brief statement. "... No further comment will be made regarding the matter."

Wendell Shelton, SWC supervisor of officials, did not immediately return calls to his office Thursday by The Associated Press.

In the fourth quarter, Tech backup quarterback Sone Cavazos appeared to fumble the ball, which was scooped up by Reggie Brown and run in for a score. The play was called back when officials ruled the ball dead. TV replays showed the ball popped loose before Cavazos was down.

On Tech's first possession of the game, A&M recovered what appeared to be a fumble by Tech's Zebbie Lethridge, but officials ruled the ball dead.

Don Kapral of Plano, the head linesman for the game, declined to comment on the matter Thursday. The other officials either could not be reached for comment or did not return telephone calls to their homes.

Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum declined to comment on the matter Thursday. However, earlier in the week he said he had "sent my comments into the (SWC) office as well as (game) tapes that go with it."

He added that officials should be held accountable for calls, pointing to the recent one-game suspension by the Southeastern Conference of an officiating crew that worked the Sept. 16 Arkansas-Alabama game. That crew failed to penalize Arkansas for having 12 men on the field during its game-winning drive.

Tech coach Spike Dykes said he wanted to stay out of the controversy.

"I just have always tried to stay away from officiating," he said. "We've had some calls go for us and some against us. That's part of football."

The most famous such controversy in recent years was Colorado's "fifth down" game against Missouri that kept alive the Buffaloes' drive to the 1990 national championship.

In that game, officials mistakenly allowed the Buffaloes an extra down in their game-winning drive that kept Colorado unbeaten.

The crew that worked that game received a one-game suspension, said Tim Allen, a Big Eight Conference spokesman.

DEION: Jones will not be initimidated by NFL

avoid counting under the salary cap a very large portion of the compensation which Deion is to receive for his services during the early years of his contract," the NFL's Henderson said.

"In this respect, Deion's contract stands apart from every other in the league. In our view, the contract as currently structured involves salary cap circumvention."

The decision was immediately opposed by the NFL Players Association, which said the league has "no basis for challenging the contract in any way."

"Our agreement specially states that anything permitted by the collective bargaining agreement cannot be considered circumvention," said Richard Berthelsen, the union's general counsel.

Although the NFL is willing to let Sanders play immediately, his left ankle will keep him out of action Sunday.

"Deion is working on a limited basis. He's not going to play against the Chargers," Dallas coach Barry Switzer said Wednesday.

Sanders is recovering from surgery to remove bone chips in his ankle. He is tentatively scheduled to make his first appearance as a Cowboy Oct. 29 at Atlanta, where he used to play before signing with San Francisco before last season.

While Sanders is expected to play some as a receiver for the Cowboys (5-1), Switzer said the star's first task is to learn the defense.

"Obviously he won't open on offense," Switzer said. "He'll be a defensive player first. As we move along, if we can work him in the kicking game and in our offensive package, we'll do that."

The Chargers' power running and multiple-tight end offense isn't a good place to debut Sanders, Switzer said. The Pro Bowler is known as a premier coverage back but a poor tackler.

Sanders punctuated San Francisco's 38-15 win at San Diego on Dec. 11 when he intercepted Stan Humphries and returned it 90 yards for a touchdown with 32 seconds left, then danced in the end zone. Sanders said a fan poured a beer on his head after the game, and he vowed never to sign autographs in San Diego.

Sanders intercepted Gale Gilbert in the fourth quarter of San Francisco's 49-26 Super Bowl rout of the Chargers.

The Cowboys could be facing Gilbert because Humphries sustained a bruised right rotator cuff in San Diego's 29-23 overtime loss at Kansas City on Monday night. Humphries is listed as questionable, meaning he has a 50-50 chance of playing.

Stan Humpheries might not make game with Dallas

■ Chargers quarterback is still unsure of status going into Sunday.

The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Stan Humphries was unable to throw at practice Thursday because of his bruised right shoulder, and the team likely will decide Friday if the San Diego quarterback can play this weekend against Dallas.

"I've got a little bit more range of motions with it, but it doesn't have the strength it needs to have," Humphries said. "I think what we're going to try to do is basically rest it a bit, and hopefully it will progress a little bit more for (Friday).

"What the trainer doesn't want to do is have it getting better, then go out there (Thursday) and take it all the back to step one."

Humphries said he'd try to throw in Friday's practice. However, it's starting to look more and more doubtful he can play at home Sunday against the Cowboys.

The Chargers (3-3) have lost two straight road games. The Cowboys are 5-1.

Humphries bruised his right rotator cuff toward the end of a 29-23 overtime loss at Kansas City on Monday night. The plan was to rest him when practice resumed Wednesday, then have him try to throw Thursday.

Said coach Bobby Ross: "I think we were being optimistic earlier in the week."

Ross said a decision on Humphries' status likely wouldn't be delayed until game time.

"It could, but I don't know if it will," he said. "It depends on how far he comes in the next day and a half."

Ross said Humphries might be able to get by on a minimal amount of practice.

"What we've got in the game plan is nothing different than what he's ever seen before," he said. "He knows reads by now, and timing is pretty good. That wouldn't be the problem. It would be a matter of what his arm is like, more than anything."

But, said Humphries: "I'm a person that likes to practice to be able to play in a game. Some people say you can sit out all week long and still line up on Sunday and play. Some positions maybe you can. But I think in this position it makes it tough, and you might be hurting your teammates more than helping them."

Ross said Humphries could be the emergency third quarterback, behind Gale Gilbert and rookie Craig Whelihan. He said wide receiver Tony Martin, a quarterback in junior college, will not take snaps at quarterback.

If Humphries can't go, Gilbert will be making just his fourth start in his 10-year career. He's thrown only 206 passes, completing 114, for 1,241 yards and nine touchdowns, with nine interceptions.

Humphries had one of his best games on Monday, going 24 of 34 for 315 yards and one touchdown.

Humphries said he learned two years ago not to push his return from injury. He sustained a deep bruise in his right shoulder in the final exhibition game, tried to play through it and finally was benched after four games to let it heal.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A desire to express yourself through the arts grows stronger. Look for a way to showcase your talents. A certain amount of risk-taking is favored this December. An end-of-year bonus will come in handy. Early in 1996, your domestic arrangements change for the better. Capitalize on your impressive professional or social connections. Host a public event.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: football star Jerry Rice, actress Kelly Preston, figure skater Nancy Kerrigan, singer Sammy Hagar.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A lucky meeting could lead to a financial bonanza. Attitude plays a key role in your success; stay upbeat! Shared experiences are binding. Be smart. Spend more time with your children or parents.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Civic duties take priority today. Later, discuss an important issue with your relatives or neighbors. Improvisation is the keynote when unexpected visitors drop by. Get moving on a business matter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Steer clear of business operations in which you do not have an assigned role. Overheated conversations should be cooled! Guard your professional reputation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The next few days could be critical for a partnership. Avoid demanding more than you are willing to give in return. Entertaining at home enjoys favorable influences. Keep the guest list short and select.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A new relationship needs more time to mature. Stop dwelling on the past. Give your heart a chance to mend. Financial gains come through wise investments. Set aside some money for your retirement years.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Collaborative efforts and contractual relationships are favored. Say "yes" to any reasonable propositions. You sense your mate or partner's needs. Change negative spending patterns; do not enrich others needlessly. Listen to a child's concerns.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Although travel could be expensive now, there may not be an alternative. Do what you must to expand a business. Your excellent reputation will give you advantages and opportunities your competitors do not enjoy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Rendering someone a service deepens your understanding of their plight. Note publications dealing with diet, nutrition and exercise. Someone decides to share a secret; you could benefit both emotionally and materially.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A better day for research and study than for action. Proceed with your plans for counseling, organizing and scheduling. Take any disappointments or delays in stride; they could end up working to your advantage.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Resist the temptation to divulge secrets. A friend is well-intentioned but possibly misguided. Someone's services may not meet your expectations. To protect your good name, keep your comments civil. Be polite but firm.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Tend to routine tasks in the morning, emphasizing your desire to be of service. Romance keeps you guessing. Moderate your demands on partner. Follow precedent at work, acknowledging the important role that tradition plays.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An excellent day to study and evaluate a controversial plan. Go through channels if you want to register a complaint or criticism. Others are willing to hear your ideas. Kind gestures forestall problems with the neighbors.

At any stage in the play, one of the defenders usually poses more of a threat to the contract than the other. The way to neutralize the threat is to keep that hand off play, if possible.

The auction is straightforward. Unfortunately for the defense, it gave away the lie of the cards and enabled declarer to land a contract that would probably have been defeated had West not opened the bidding.

West led a low heart, and declarer captured East's queen with the king. The ten of hearts was a positional stopper if East could be denied the lead. Had there been no bidding, declarer would surely have gone after clubs at trick two; there was too great a danger that East held the ace of spades and would be able to revert to a heart through the ten. Since West could not have opened the bidding without both the aces of spades and hearts, however, declarer spotted a way to guarantee nine tricks against any lie of the cards or club division. The solution was quite ingenious.

At trick two declarer led the nine of spades, inserting the jack when West followed low. The entry to the table was used to run the ten of clubs, and declarer did not mind if that lost to West's jack — hearts could not be continued profitably. When the ten held, declarer led a club to the ace and then the queen of spades. The best the defense could do was to take two hearts and a spade, otherwise declarer would win two spades, one heart, two diamonds and six clubs for two overtricks.

Note that, had West shot up with the ace of spades at trick two and cleared hearts, declarer was still home. South would have collected three clubs and two tricks in each of the other suits.

O.J. dream team's Scheck gets legal troubles of his own over illegal U-turn

NEW YORK — Barry Scheck got in a jam all his own Thursday when a police officer spotted him making an illegal U-turn.

Scheck, a member of O.J. Simpson's legal dream team, was driving with an expired license and improper registration, police said. He got three summonses.

"I made an illegal U-turn dropping off a friend at his Manhattan hotel," Scheck said. "I can't believe this is a story."

He won't contest the violations but "will investigate the license matter" to see if there is legal ground to fight it.

Scheck said his license expired during the Simpson case. He said the officer who gave him the ticket kept him sitting in his car for 55 minutes while he checked his paperwork.

Asked if he thought it was deliberate, Scheck said, "Lord knows what he was doing."

TULSA, Okla. — Miss America Shawntel Smith came home to Oklahoma for the first time since winning the crown last month.

Miss America Shawntel Smith makes trip home.

"I have been counting the days until I came back to Oklahoma," the 24-year-old Miss Smith told a crowd of 300 Wednesday that included her aunts, uncles and friends.

Her tiny hometown of Muldrow on the Oklahoma-Arkansas line is throwing her a parade Saturday. The number of floats has increased from 25 to 85 in the past two weeks.

"My mom told me they would have to double up the entries so it won't take two to three hours," she said at a news conference Thursday.

Gish, who died in 1993, created the honor in her will, stipulating that it go to a person "who has made an outstanding contribution to the beauty of the world and to mankind's enjoyment and understanding of life" through the arts.

Linn Ullmann, Bergman's daughter with actress Liv Ullmann, collected the award Wednesday on his behalf. She read a statement from him thanking Gish and noting that, at age 9, Bergman fell in love with the actress after seeing her in a film.

"Ever since that Monday night in March, nearly 70 years ago, I have tenderly preserved my young love for Lillian," Bergman said.

"There were all these people in these outrageous outfits," she said of an army of extras.

"And half of them, that's the life they live. Those are the hours they're up anyway. I mean, you would think these extras would be exhausted, but they seemed to be perfectly comfortable with that after-hours kind of living."

Bassett, whose portrayal of Tina Turner in "What's Love Got to do With It" won an Oscar nomination, said she was pleased with "Strange Days."

"Just as an actress, and then as a black actress, to be this hero for the 21st century in this big action thriller, that's pretty amazing and exciting," she said.

AMHERST, Mass. — Dave Pallone, who wrote a book about his 10 years as a gay umpire, wants his job back.

"I was fired because I was gay," he told about 750 people Wednesday night at the University of Massachusetts. "If they say I retired, then I want to come out of retirement."

Pallone, 44, said he was forced out of Major League baseball in 1988. He said he hasn't filed a lawsuit, hoping instead to persuade league officials to rehire him.

His book, "Behind the Mask," was published in 1990.

Janzen shows his stuff at World Match Play

■ It is no Ryder Cup, but America's best player not to make the team wants to show he should have been there.

The Associated Press

VIRGINIA WATER, England — This is Lee Janzen's Ryder Cup.

Janzen, left off the U.S. team by captain Lanny Wadkins, showed his ability at match play golf with a 7 and 6 win over Japan's Katsuyoshi Tomori in the opening day of the World Match Play Championship Thursday.

European Ryder Cup teammates Bernhard Langer, Colin Montgomerie and Costantino Rocca — key players in beating the United States last month to regain the Cup — won the three other first-round matches.

Langer beat Sam Torrance of Scotland 5 and 4, Montgomerie won 2-up over American David Duval, and Rocca defeated Vijah Singh of Fiji 4 and 3.

"I feel like if I can play well this week ... it will make me feel better about not being on the team," Janzen said. "I feel like I should have been picked.

"If I can prove I do well in match play against the world's best players it strengthens my argument even more. ... I wish I would have been on the team, but I didn't want to distract the team by creating controversy.

"Next year and the year after I'm going to dedicate myself to making the Ryder Cup team."

Janzen played like he's already begun his drive to make the 1997 team and prove he should have been picked ahead of Curtis Strange and Crenshaw. He is trying to become only the second American in 15 years to earn the $270,000 first prize — the richest in Europe this season. Corey Pavin won in 1993.

Els, meanwhile, is trying to become the first to win in his first two appearances in the grueling event that calls for 36 holes daily.

Janzen was 3-up after 18 holes and dropped a 15-foot eagle putt to end the match against Tomori after 30 holes.

Janzen was only 1-up after 15, but won the 16th and 17th when Tomori missed makeable putts. Janzen then birdied two of the first four holes on the second 18 to go 5-up.

Langer was 4-up after after the first 18 against Torrance — a lead he built after the first eight holes with the help of birdie putts of 20, 9 and 7 feet.

"He (Torrance) didn't make many putts, and that's been his strength all year," Langer said.

Langer is No. 3 on the European money list with one event to play that counts in the final standings — the Volvo Masters this month in Spain. Montgomerie is No. 2 and Torrance is No. 1.

Rocca played the first 18 in a flawless 65, with five birdies and an eagle. Singh managed five birdies, but had two bogeys.

Singh got within two holes after 25, but then faded when Rocca birdied the next two holes — the ninth and 10th — to regain a commanding four-hole advantage.

Montgomerie was five holes up after 27 holes but Duval rallied with two straight birdies and an eagle.

Montgomerie won the next hole to go 3-up again, but then three-putted from 12 feet to lose another, then lost the next with a bogey to Duval's birdie.

Crenshaw goes into Friday's match against Rocca at a big disadvantage.

He arrived Thursday from the United States after flight delays and a kidney infection that kept him home for two days. Crenshaw said his doctor gave him the go-ahead to play.

"When you come this far, you want to get here and practice," Crenshaw said. "You don't want these kind of things to happen — you feel underprepared.

Cook, Tway share lead in lead in Las Vegas

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS (AP) — John Cook, trying to make up for a miserable year at a tournament he won in 1992, shot an 8-under-par 64 Thursday and shared the second-round lead of the Las Vegas Invitational with Bob Tway.

Cook and Tway were at 13-under, topping a field of pros who had another field day on the three desert courses that again proved most accommodating to low scoring.

They had plenty of company, though, with Billy Mayfair, Mark Brooks and Curt Byrum a stroke back at 12-under and five others in at 11-under with three rounds left in the $1.5 million pro-am tournament.

First-round leader Joe Ozaki was two shots back after losing ground with a 3-under 69 at the home TPC Summerlin course.

Cook, whose last tournament win came in this event three years ago, hit every green in a round that could have been even lower except for two missed putts of less than 2 feet.

"I've had a year that's been just awful," said Cook, whose father, Jim, is the tournament's manager. "There hasn't been one thing happen that's any good."

Cook birdied the first four holes of his round, and finished with birdies on the last two holes at Las Vegas Country Club in perfect weather, with only light winds.

"The fairways are fast and the greens are hard," Cook said. "All year we've been playing soggy, soft fairways and greens. It's been frustrating. I drive it decent length but only on courses where it's running."

But after making some recent swing changes and finding some courses to his liking, he is beginning to think he has his game back.

"My 1995 ended six or seven weeks ago," Cook said. "This is really the start of my new year."

Tway, who beat Cook in a playoff to win this tournament in 1990, shot his second straight 65 to gain a tie for the lead. Tway's round came at the TPC Summerlin course, where the final two rounds of the five-day tournament will be played.

"Anytime you shoot 65, you're pleased," Tway said. "I have been extremely pleased with this whole year. This is my most fun year on tour."

Tway predicted the low scoring would continue if winds remain calm on the courses, which were playing much shorter than the scorecards showed because of the fast fairways and high desert altitude.

Last year's tournament was won by Bruce Lietzke, who was 27-under-par in similar conditions.

Also in contention after two rounds were Curt and Tom Byrum, brothers who have struggled since both won PGA tournaments in 1989.

Curt Byrum shot a 7-under 65 at TPC Summerlin to get to 12-under, while his brother was 11-under after a 67 at Las Vegas Country Club.

"I can't remember the last time we were both up there in the lead," said Tom Byrum, who is fighting to get in the top 125 for a tour exemption next year. "It will give us something to talk about at dinner tonight."

Slims field closer to capacity

N.Y. Times News Service

Almost half of the 16-player field of the WTA Championships has been set after three more players qualified this week. The three latest qualifiers are Mary Pierce, the Australian Open champion; Gabriela Sabatini, the defending champion, and Kamiko Date. They joined Steffi Graf and Monica Seles, the co-No. 1 players, Arantxa Sanchez Vicario and Conchita Martinez in the year-ending event, which will be held Nov. 13-19 at New York City's Madison Square Garden.

Murphy ready to defend at Senior Gold Rush

■ Bob Murphy returns to the site of five-hole playoff win of 1994. He is looking for his fifth win of 1995.

The Associated Press

In last year's tourney, Murphy beat Dave Eichelberger in a five-hole playoff.

That triumph helped launch Murphy to his highly successful 1995 season. He finished last year's tour with two wins in the final four events, including the Gold Rush.

"My goal this year was to win three tournaments and a million dollars," Murphy said. "It looks like I can skip Rancho Murieta."

Murphy was joking, but not about his play.

He has surpassed his expectations. He's won four tournaments this season, finished second at the British Senior Open and tied for third at the U.S. Senfor Open.

"I tried to have a heart-to-heart discussion with myself," Murphy said. "I had to convince myself that I could save a shot somewhere each week to win."

In the nine months before last year's Senior Gold Rush, Murphy placed second or missed being in a playoff by one shot six times.

"Finishing second that many times, finishing third twice, I asked myself: 'Did I waste some shots? Did I start like I should? Was I not tough enough?' Murphy said.

"I decided I had to be a little more golf-minded on Friday than I had been in the past."

Whatever, Murphy's golf touch has been nothing but golden since. He enters the Senior Gold Rush with $1,079,931 in 1995 earnings.

Abilene Cooper tennis is just about perfect

■ Cooper will play Midland Lee Saturday with the hope of making it 50 in a row.

By Ted Dunnam
Abilene Reporter-News

ABILENE, Texas — As Abilene Cooper prepares to win its 50th consecutive team tennis match, one gets the feeling that it's the fear of losing more than the concept of winning that has kept its two-year-plus streak intact.

After all, the Cougars are going to lose someday — maybe this year, maybe not. Eventually, it will happen and no Cooper player wants to be part of that experience.

The Cougars, the No. 1 ranked tennis team in Class 5A, are bidding for a third consecutive state championship, and they've won 49 consecutive matches entering Saturday's match at Midland Lee.

It doesn't appear, either, that head coach Leanne Scott's team has a realistic chance of losing until it reaches the Region I-5A final. That match would pit the Coogs against either El Paso Franklin — the No. 2 ranked team in the state — or cross-town rival Abilene High.

The Cougars have planned a small celebration in honor of what should be a milestone victory Saturday, but players and coaches of the team know that win is meaningless if a third straight state title isn't achieved.

"We won state the first year and went 19-0," Scott said. "And then we went 17-0 the next year and won state. We never even added up the wins until after the second state title when we wanted to make bumper stickers. That was the first time we ever put a number to it."

The numbers in the streak are remarkable. Of the 49 wins, 15 have been by shutout, and of those which haven't been shutouts, most have been lopsided.

In the 1993 state tournament, Cooper routed Sugar Land Clements 16-2 in the semifinals and put away Spring Klein 9-2 in the championship match.

"It was one of those matches you don't like to experience very often," Thames said. "Cooper was extremely solid and extremely well-coached. We knew we were the underdogs, but we felt like we could be competitive.

"We're a perennial top-10 team in the state, but Cooper is a definite exception to the top 10. We were just absolutely dominated. The thing I remember most is that their No. 6 guy ranked comparably to our No. 1 player.

"That says a lot about your program. Cooper also had a great deal of support up there. In addition to that, I was very impressed by their sportsmanship. To be that good on the court and to be as nice as they were, those are the things that you aspire to be."

What makes Cooper so good? Granted, they have a very good player at No. 1 girls singles in senior Kathryn Scott, daughter of the Cooper head coach and a talent that is being strongly recruited by several Southwest Conference schools.

The Cougars also have the Class 5A boys defending state singles champion in senior Ryan Hughes. No doubt, those are the two biggest pieces of Cooper's puzzle.

While they are the two most talented players on the team, they can't win an overall match by themselves.

The reason Cooper wins: depth, depth and more depth.

While Scott and Hughes may struggle to win at No. 1 singles, or even lose periodically, it's their teammates that pick them up on that rare occasion when they fall. Every team has at least one good player. Cooper, like rival Abilene High, usually has eight to 12.

Hughes has been sidelined much of the year with an injured back. He didn't play against San Antonio Churchill earlier this year, a match Cooper won 9-8 despite his absence.

With Hughes out, every Cooper male player had to be moved up a notch higher and the Cougars paid the price — Churchill won 8 of 9 nine boys matches. However, the Cooper girls saved the day, winning all eight of their matches, and then needed to win only one set of the remaining match on the court.

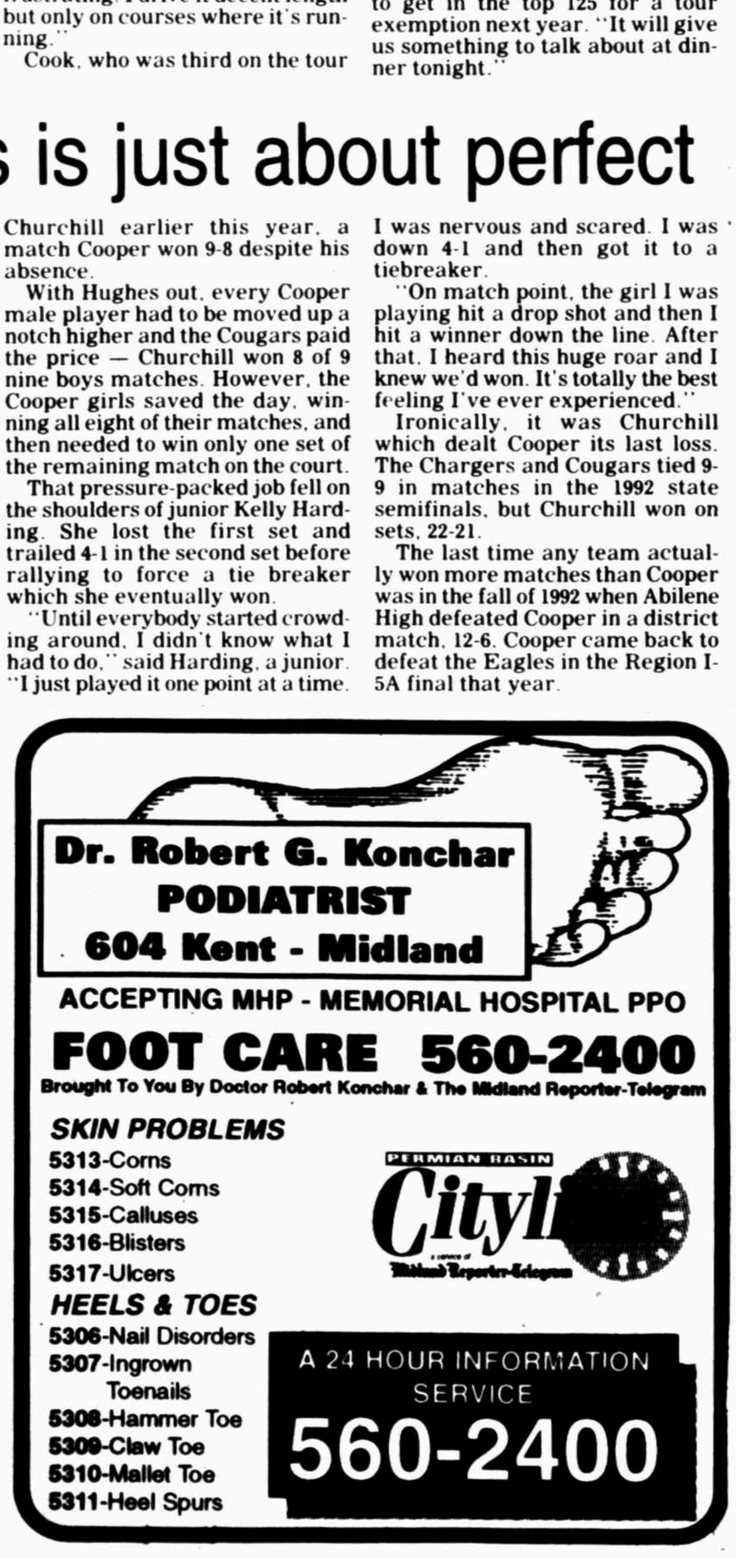

That pressure-packed job fell on the shoulders of junior Kelly Harding. She lost the first set and trailed 4-1 in the second set before rallying to force a tie breaker which she eventually won.

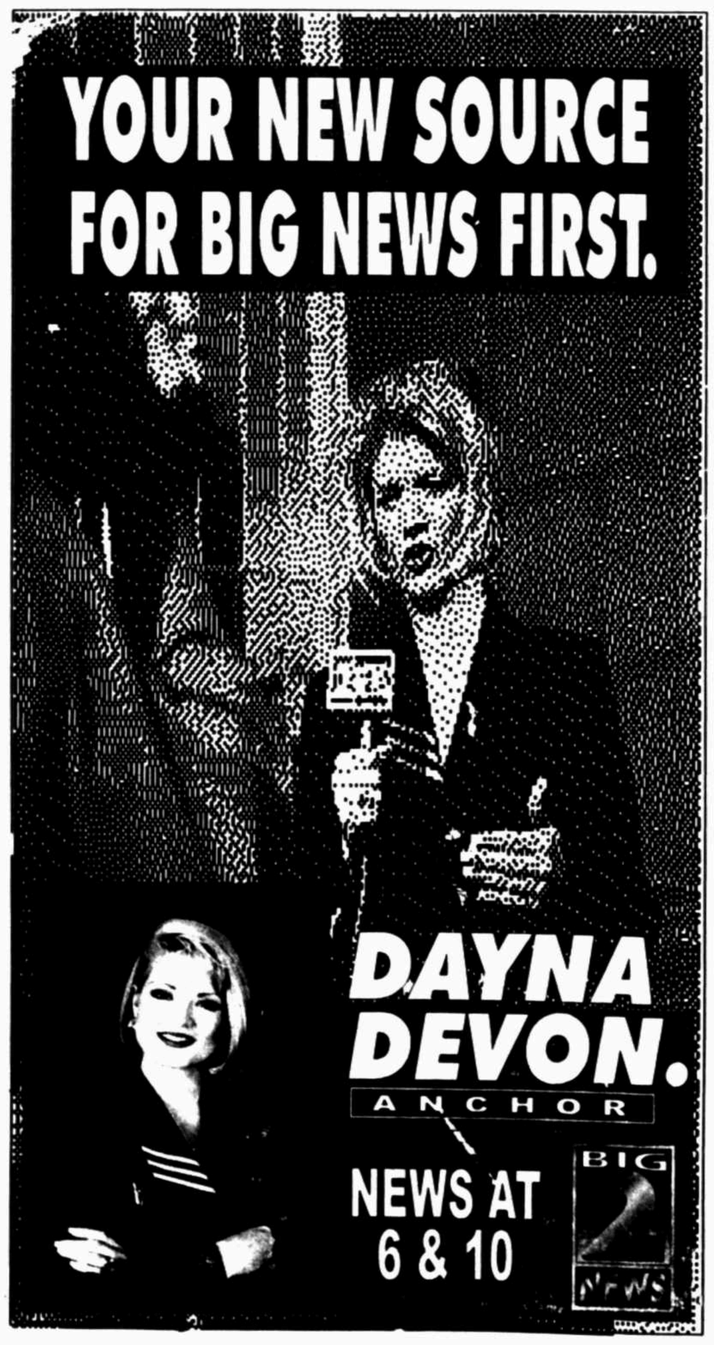

"Until everybody started crowding around, I didn't know what I had to do," said Harding, a junior. "I just played it one point at a time. I was nervous and scared. I was down 4-1 and then got it to a tiebreaker.

"On match point, the girl I was playing hit a drop shot and then I hit a winner down the line. After that, I heard this huge roar and I knew we'd won. It's totally the best feeling I've ever experienced."

Ironically, it was Churchill which dealt Cooper its last loss. The Chargers and Cougars tied 9-9 in matches in the 1992 state semifinals, but Churchill won on sets, 22-21.

The last time any team actually won more matches than Cooper was in the fall of 1992 when Abilene High defeated Cooper in a district match, 12-6. Cooper came back to defeat the Eagles in the Region I-5A final that year.

NBC says it sought no profit from Simpson on 'Dateline'

Brokaw says he and Couric were ready for tough interview

By Ray Richmond
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Tom Brokaw says that he and Katie Couric were ready for O.J. Simpson.

That may have been the problem.

"Katie Couric and I were very well prepared," Brokaw, the "NBC Nightly News" anchor, told reporters Wednesday in a telephone interview after their planned interview for "Dateline NBC" was canceled by Simpson.

"The two of us had gone through the entire record of the trial," Brokaw said. "We had worked up our line of questioning, had written follow-ups, had interview scenario models provided for us.

"We were going to ask all of the tough questions about the DNA evidence, about spousal abuse, about the timelines."

In fact, said Brokaw, he and Couric had composed a 14-page question script that "pulled no punches" and spared no controversial area.

"Maybe that was the problem," he said in assessing why Simpson, on the advice of his lawyers, called off the interview.

Simpson, acquitted last week of murder in the slayings of his ex-wife and her friend, said in a statement that he believed the network was out to "retry me" and had agreed only to "a conversation, not a confrontation."

The interview was announced Monday, giving time for the anchors to prepare.

"To be very immodest, we were very ahead of the curve in our preparation for this one, and that perhaps affected the Simpson team's perceptions of what this interview would be," Brokaw said.

"When they asked us if we were going to get into time lines, we did assure them we planned to begin with those questions," he said. "To be fair, Simpson at first indicated those were the kind of questions he welcomed. But then his lawyers convinced him of his need to protect himself in a civil lawsuit."

Was Brokaw surprised at the last-minute change of heart?

"Not at all," he replied. "You could see it coming beginning (Tuesday) night when the phone calls started, expressing the concern. They never asked us for specific questions, but it was clear they had misgivings about certain areas.

"(The Simpson team) was also greatly concerned about what would have been the third hour of the telecast, when we invited on analysts to react to what Simpson had said. There was worry about the negative statements that might arise during that hour."

By Frederic M. Biddle
N.Y. Times News Service

NBC strongly denied O.J. Simpson's suggestion Wednesday that the network wanted to "retry" him on "Dateline NBC," and that they had "distorted his stipulation that 'there be no commercials or revenues produced as a condition of my appearance.'"

NBC claims it never made such a distortion. In fact, NBC News president Andrew Lack, in an telephone interview with TV critics on Tuesday, had made clear that the proscription against commercials had been Simpson's idea — albeit one that NBC itself would have insisted upon.

NBC had planned to broadcast three hours of "Dateline" from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. Two hours would have have been devoted to the trial. Simpson's interview would have come in the second hour of the show.

In another interview Wednesday, Lack described a Tuesday-night scenario in which Simpson's attorneys, increasingly nervous at the public uproar over the interview, expressed fears that NBC anchors Tom Brokaw and Katie Couric, who were under intense pressure not to allow Simpson to turn "Dateline" into a prime-time forum to rehabilitate his public image, would ask questions that might devastate Simpson in pending wrongful-death lawsuits, as well as his imminent custody battle for Sydney and Justin, his children.

"What stopped him from doing the interview, plain and simple, was the civil litigation pending," Lack said. Another key to Simpson's reversal, Lack said Wednesday, was that he and NBC West Coast president Don Ohlmeyer, a friend of Simpson's who had arranged the interview after Simpson's acquittal, had not consulted Cochran.

At 1 a.m. EDT Tuesday, Lack said, he received a call from Cochran, who "said, 'Andy, I've got a problem. This problem revolves around pending litigation my client is facing,'" Lack said. Ultimately, both sides agreed "to sleep on it," Lack said, but Wednesday morning at 1 p.m. EDT, Cochran and Simpson called and in a 15-minute conversation said "clearly there was an atmosphere developing where Mr. Simpson would face us as prosecutors instead of journalists and we would cross-examine him instead of question him."

Simpson, however, said that he "still wanted to do it," Lack said, adding that neither Simpson, his attorneys nor NBC ever proposed changing the "no holds barred" condition under which NBC had publicly advertised the interview.

Lack denied rumors that Simpson's attorneys had balked at specific questions Brokaw and Couric planned to ask. Such a list was "never" given to Simpson's side, Lack said.

Although Cochran also said Wednesday he did not specific questions NBC planned to ask, Brokaw was quoted in an interview with Chicago radio station WBBM as saying: "They did say, 'Well, are you going to get into timelines?' And we said, 'That's how we're going to begin.'" Brokaw couldn't be reached for further comment last night.

The collapse of the "Dateline" interview caused a chain reaction at one competing network, which had yanked its planned Wednesday shows rather than have nobody watch them. Although Fox stuck with its substitute broadcast — the movie "Beethoven," which replaced "Beverly Hills, 90210" and other programming. CBS aired original episodes of its ailing Wednesday lineup instead of reruns.

NBC reverted to its regular schedule, which included a normal, hourlong installment of "Dateline" that discussed the day's turn of events.

CCR's original name? The Golliwogs

■ When rock bands start searching for a name, there are few — if any — rules.

By Adam Dolgins
N.Y. Times News Service

What's in a name? In the case of rock bands, everything from hastily chosen inside jokes to carefully selected literary allusions. Some band names are straightforward, like Abba, an acronym formed by the members' first initials.

Others, like ZZ Top, are deliberately obscure. The group's guitarist Billy Gibbons originally chose the name hoping to evoke the image of a bluesman, like B.B. King or Z.Z. Hill. His later reluctance to explain the name's origins led fans to jump to their own conclusions. One popular theory was that the band named itself after Zig Zag and Top brand rolling papers, while another held that it was a reference to the worst row of seating in a concert hall.

Like the music itself, few rules apply when it comes to rock names. Here are some examples.

CREEDENCE CLEARWATER REVIVAL ditched the name the Golliwogs in 1967, as well as the paisley uniforms and the acid-rock sound that had been the group's manager's idea. The band members renamed themselves Creedence after their friend Credence Newball (misspelling it to avoid possible legal problems). Clearwater after an Olympia beer ad, and Revival for their own rebirth.

THE GRATEFUL DEAD was planning to change its name from the Warlocks when Jerry Garcia opened up a Funk & Wagnalls folklore dictionary and picked out the term "grateful dead," which refers to "the motif of a very widespread group of folk tales." Garcia remembered the source as an Oxford dictionary, but he was stoned at the time.

JEFFERSON AIRPLANE named itself after a dog, called Blind Thomas Jefferson Airplane, who belonged to a friend of the guitarist Jorma Kaukonen. The singer and guitarist Paul Kantner recalled that it was "just a name we could use until we chose a real name, a respectable name." Nine years later the group became Jefferson Starship.

LUSCIOUS JACKSON named itself after the 1970s basketball star Lucious Jackson, whose name was misspelled in a sports record book.

NIRVANA was named by the band's leader, Kurt Cobain, who observed in 1991, "In Webster's terms, nirvana means freedom from pain, suffering and the external world, and that's pretty close to a definition of punk rock."

PINK FLOYD began as the Pink Floyd Sound, in tribute to the American bluesmen Pink Anderson and Floyd Council.

PROCOL HARUM was the accidentally misspelled pedigree name of the group's drug dealer's Siamese cat. Some self-styled language experts among the band's fans mistook the name to be a Latin translation of the phrase "far out."

THE RAMONES took their name from a pseudonym that Paul McCartney used briefly in an early incarnation of the Beatles.

STEELY DAN was the name of a sex toy in the William S. Burroughs novel "Naked Lunch."

THE VELVET UNDERGROUND, like the Grateful Dead, were briefly called the Warlocks, a name also reportedly considered by Cobain. The Velvet Underground was the title of a paperback, found on a Bowery sidewalk, that claimed to expose the seamy sexual underside of "normal" America.

SCARLET: Sex scenes overdone

(From 12C)

Enough hints are dropped as to the overbearing nature of this absent husband, that any indiscretion on Moore's part is supposed to seem perfectly all right.

In a broad amplification from the novel, Gary Oldman plays the Rev. Arthur Dimmesdale, whose ardor for his new parishioner will drive a village to a witchhunting frenzy. Oldman's is a nobler, more risk-prone character than the Hawthorne version — one for whom Hester would risk much. Their offspring is played, or rather voiced from off-screen, by Jodhi May, who narrates the whole shebang as an extended flashback.

Robert Duvall plays Roger Prynne, the husband whom Hester had hoped deceased, as precisely the malicious jerk he needs to be. Duvall has played so many gentlemanly, edge-of-retirement types of late (in "The Paper" and "The Stars Fell on Henrietta") that we tend to forget he is in his prime of robust vigor and can be one tough son-of-a-gun when the situation calls for it.

Duvall is terrific as an angrily displaced Puritan, torn between civilization and savagery.

Joan Plowright is splendid as a substantially original character, a free-spirited townswoman who finds herself on trial for witchcraft.

On the debit side: The romance between Moore and Oldman suffers from overobvious hints, from their first "meeting cute" scene en route to church, to his demure refusal to plant a smooch on her lest it lead to something more.

In an uneasy contrast, the lovemaking routines show far more than is needful, earning an R rating that effectively makes "The Scarlet Letter" a forbidden temptation to schoolkids — who might otherwise find the film a valid introduction to the literature of a bygone era.

"The Scarlet Letter"
Director: Roland Joffe
Featuring: Demi Moore, Gary Oldman, Robert Duvall, Joan Plowright
Rated: R — nudity, sexual activity, violence, coarse language

JADE: Intelligence of movie impressive

play, which starts with a torture-murder (off-camera, which makes things more unnerving) and ends with an astonishing confrontation that might or might not be in the service of justice.

Eszterhas' recent, more notorious screenplays — "Showgirls," "Sliver" and "Basic Instinct" (1992-95) — have tended toward moral ambiguity, sympathizing perhaps as much with the "misunderstood" sociopath as with any unfortunate victims. His "Jade" scenario, however, harks back to Eszterhas' earlier period of conscience-driven righteousness.

Caruso is a genial bundle of nerves and dedication as David Corelli, a smart lawyer who toils as an assistant district attorney while Palminteri, as a private-practice chum from 'way back, lives it up as a member of San Francisco's high society. Fiorentino, who registered strongly last year as a lethal lady in "The Last Seduction," plays Palminteri's wife — an old-time sweetheart of Caruso's and a likely suspect as well.

All Caruso needs to do, it seems, is learn the identity of a mystery woman called "Jade."

The San Francisco setting, of course, renders some precipitous, high-speed auto chases inevitable. Friedkin, a master of such action, puts Caruso's character's neck on the line in these scenes, and Caruso rises to the occasion by doing some of his own stunt driving. The Chinatown sequences are especially riveting in their wealth of kinetic detail and colorful pageantry.

Thrills aside, it is the intelligence of "Jade" that leaves the more lingering impression. Friedkin and Eszterhas simply assume the audience is with them (or even ahead of the game) and keep the developments clicking along.

En route to a harrowing conclusion, we encounter such incidental rewards as a tragic beauty (Angie Everhart) who may hold keys to the mystery; a state governor (Richard Crenna) who seems too friendly to be trusted; and a no-nonsense senior investigator who turns out to be a real-life police inspector, San Francisco's Kenny King, proving himself a natural before the cameras.

(From 12C)

Ralph Fiennes, as the nominal good guy, calls himself "the Santa Claus of your subconscious" — a trafficker in virtual-reality kicks. He wouldn't be caught dead peddling virtual violence, but still he harbors few enough qualms about dealing in forbidden sensations.

This is an especially bleak look ahead at the future of high technology for such artists as Cameron and Bigelow, whose very careers depend on the application of advanced computer science to filmmaking.

As a commentary on voyeurism, "Strange Days" risks becoming voyeurism itself, dwelling on scenes of sex and/or violence that will make many viewers cringe.

The plot juggles apocalypse with soap opera. Fiennes' character pines away for his missing sweetheart, played by Juliette Lewis, even as the turn of the century threatens to bring civilization to a halt. Much of the 140-odd minutes' running time is spent in pursuit of Lewis, with Glenn Plummer, Michael Wincott, Brigitte Bako and Angela Bassett along to account for various helpful and menacing elements.

Bassett, in what we might call the Arnold Schwarzenegger role, often steals the show from Fiennes, whose presence is more subdued. Bigelow's directing style combines a seething restraint with a genuine feel for action, plus the good sense to let ideas overwhelm sensations here and there.

"Strange Days"
Director: Kathryn Bigelow
Featuring: Ralph Fiennes, Angela Bassett, Juliette Lewis
Rated: R — violence including acts of rape and murder, harsh language including bigoted expressions, nudity, adult situations

Bochco's new drama tests America's legal savvy

By Andy Messler
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Steven Bochco, the creator of "Hill Street Blues," "L.A. Law," and "N.Y.P.D. Blue," among many other shows, is perhaps the most powerful and innovative writer and producer in prime-time television. His friend and former employee David E. Kelley ("Picket Fences," "Chicago Hope") is not far behind.

Over lunch a few months ago, the two spent some time discussing another long-running television drama. "We were talking about Marcia Clark," Bochco recalled recently in his office suite at 20th Century Fox Studios. Ms. Clark, of course, is the chief prosecutor in the O.J. Simpson murder trial.

Bochco and Kelley agreed that she was facing serious story problems in a crucial episode ahead.

"Specifically," Bochco said, "we talked about the daunting task that she was going to have, assuming she did the closing argument, of pulling together the massive amounts of testimony and evidence and contradictions in the case, and stitching it into a coherent theory of the crime to present to the jury in a persuasive way."

It was decided half-jokingly that Kelley — who was a practicing lawyer until 1986, when he joined the writing staff of "L.A. Law," the definitive legal series of the 1980s — should write Ms. Clark's closing argument for her.

The point being, of course, that the world of legal fact and the world of legal fiction have increasingly overlapped and that a summation penned by a former lawyer whose primary business is now drama might help the prosecutor win the hearts and minds of the jury and her television audience of millions.

A slightly less obvious proposition — one on which Bochco is staking his considerable reputation, as has been widely noted in the last several weeks — is that a television drama might likewise gain from this blurring of the lines.

As televised spectacles, the Simpson trial and, before it, the trials of the Menendez brothers and William Kennedy Smith have drastically increased the public's fascination with the American legal system.

Hence, the greater-than-usual intensity of discourse surrounding "Murder One," Bochco's latest test of the prime-time envelope. As even people who haven't tuned in to it yet know, it is a series with several very big twists.

The biggest is that instead of concerning itself with a new case each week — or, a la "L.A. Law," with several cases through interwoven story lines — it will, during its entire 22-episode season, depart from a landscape of regular tidy endings and concern itself with only one murder investigation and the resulting trial.

"Murder One" is certainly the most talked-about series of the fall season, in large part because it is the first unabashedly post-Simpson-trial offering to hit the pop-culture marketplace. "Well, obviously we are," said Bochco.

In several interviews given before the show's premiere two weeks ago, the producer insisted that "Murder One" was not inspired by the Simpson trial, that his original idea for the series preceded the ex-football star's arrest in the killings of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald L. Goldman.

Nevertheless, Bochco, who has spent most of his adulthood experimenting with and capitalizing on the themes of crime and punishment, acknowledges giving in to temptation.

"I'm a real Court TV junkie," he said. "I mean, it's the best show on TV. I'll admit we have absolutely no shame that in 'Murder One' we have, some might say, ripped off Court TV. I say we've made them a little homage."

It is Bochco's contention that cable coverage of major trials, plus hairsplitting media analysis, has unavoidably exposed the American public to murky legal maneuvers and philosophical questions far beyond the range of legal dramas like "Perry Mason," "Matlock" or even "L.A. Law."

"It's the camera," he explained. "The camera that just watches very dispassionately what goes on in the courtroom. And reveals so much more than what we've ever revealed before. You know, in an episode of 'L.A. Law,' let's say. It's educated the public as to what goes on below the waterline. And there's a lot that goes on. And so I think people are more appreciative of the complex nature of the legal proceeding."

As significant as any of its plot or subplots is how "Murder One" tries to co-opt the hypnotic fascination of live televised trials while skirting the accompanying tedium and the disgust with the whole legal process.

At first glance, the series seems to be a rather conventional weekly legal drama. It centers on a brilliant defense lawyer (played by the relatively unknown actor Daniel Benzali), his officeful of bright and sometimes overly ambitious young lawyers, and, in the corrupt world outside, drug-abusing celebrities, wealthy socialite sociopaths and sniveling public officials.

If its first two episodes are any indication, "Murder One" will dip frequently into the old legal briefcase for sex, melodrama, juicy subplots and good-looking litigants. But it will also dispense with many of the traditional tasks of the television defense lawyer: i.e., solving crimes and exonerating framed, idealistic, victimized clients.

To fill that chasm, the series is concerning itself with more disturbing, open-ended subjects like reasonable doubt and burden of proof; the role of the news media in the American justice system, and the ethical, personal and professional forces that work on a defense lawyer — and not a starry-eyed public defender, but an expensively suited hired gun — who is defending a client who, in all probability, is guilty.

In the opening episodes, Theodore Hoffman (Benzali), a middle-aged Los Angeles-based criminal defense lawyer, has been pitted against an old rival, Detective Arthur Polson (Dylan Baker), in the circuslike atmosphere surrounding the murder of a 15-year-old girl, the younger sister of a prominent fashion model.

So far, Hoffman has in quick succession been engaged to represent both prime suspects in the case, a prominent local businessman and philanthropist and an arrogant, drug-stuffed movie star.

(To underscore the show business-legal world connection, Bochco had originally persuaded the show's legal adviser, the prominent Los Angeles criminal defense lawyer Howard Weitzman, to recap the action in each episode, playing himself as a "legal commentator" on a fictional news show called "Law TV." Interestingly, Weitzman was forced to quit the role abruptly when he was appointed to a top executive post at MCA-Universal.)

So far, no one is close to finding the truth. Viewers have been drawn into a sinkhole of rumor, doubt, wild theorizing and disinformation. No exit is in sight. "I love that," said Bochco.

"I love the time it takes to unfold in its own way. I'm so used to manipulating everything into a small, neat, tight, nearly unrealistic little package that to see it play out in its own maddeningly, meandering way is absolutely terrific."

In fact, Bochco says enthusiastically that he and his writers are at the moment as much in the dark about the outcome of the case as his viewers. (At this point, only eight episodes have been filmed.)

Whether the viewing public will continue to share his enthusiasm — and, in the long run, buy into this new method of storytelling — remains to be seen. But even allowing for the usual early-season hoopla, the reaction to "Murder One" has been overwhelmingly positive.

"When Steven first told me about this, it seemed a stretch," said Ted Harbert, president of ABC Entertainment. "But having seen it, the format makes all the sense in the world to me."

Steven Brill, the founder of Court TV, said after viewing the "Murder One" pilot: "I like it very much. I think it's a natural progression."

Betsy Frank, executive vice president and director for strategic media resources of Zenith Media Services, wrote in her widely read annual preview of the fall television season, "This show is simply too good for viewers, especially men, to ignore."

Ms. Frank's main doubt about the series, one shared by other industry insiders, is whether it can survive in perhaps the toughest network time slot, against the hit of the 1994-95 season, "E.R."

This may be something of a red herring, though. To give "Murder One" a running start, ABC placed the first three episodes in the Tuesday slot normally occupied by "N.Y.P.D. Blue."

If "Murder One" attracts enough demographically significant viewers, ABC says, the network will either share the audience with "E.R.," as NBC's "Frasier" does with ABC's hit "Home Improvement," or move it, as CBS did last year with "Chicago Hope," originally an "E.R." opponent.

Moreover, if anyone can afford to go out on a limb, it is Bochco. "Murder One" is the eighth production in a $50 million, 10-series deal the producer signed with ABC several years ago. When that deal expires, CBS will get first crack at his shows under a similarly lucrative deal he struck this year.

Bochco, 51, revolutionized series television with the heightened realism and overlapping story lines of "Hill Street Blues," which had its premiere in 1981. Not all his succeeding shows have been hits — the song-and-dance police show "Cop Rock" being the most often cited example — but a good number of them have been.

And almost all, like "Doogie Howser, M.D.," about a child-prodigy physician, the raw-edged "N.Y.P.D. Blue" and even the half-hour half-drama half-comedy "Hooperman," have stood out in some way.

"L.A. Law," which started in 1986, had a shrewd mix of social commentary, materialism and yuppie angst. But by the early 1990s it was showing its age.

"I remember quite distinctly when I realized that," said Brill of Court TV. "It was the day the William Kennedy Smith trial ended. It was a Thursday. I'd watched our coverage of the verdict that day, and I watched one of my favorite shows, 'L.A. Law,' afterward. That night, the show felt totally flat to me. It just seemed so unreal, and one of its virtues when it was launched was that it felt real."

Several years into "L.A. Law," in fact, Bochco had proposed to his writing staff that one case be threaded through an entire season. The idea was ultimately rejected, mainly on logistical grounds. "But the idea was obviously banging around in the back of my brain on some level," said Bochco, "though I wasn't really conscious of it because it popped out of me again, almost whole, again earlier this year."

Bochco set aside a proposed medical show he had been working on and pitched "Murder One" to ABC instead. He chose Channing Gibson and Charles Eglee, associates of his on "N.Y.P.D. Blue," to be executive producers.

He then cast as his lead Benzali, a Brazilian-born, New York-based actor who has had an eclectic career, including a starring role in the London version of "Sunset Boulevard" and a stint as a mob-connected lawyer on "N.Y.P.D. Blue."

"He's not the conventional leading-man type," said Bochco, "but he popped out for me. I found him utterly riveting, and that's why we brought him back."

He will be around for a while if Bochco has read the tidal shifts correctly.

MURDER: New program has fared well so far

(From 12C)

a heavy ABC on-air promotional campaign urging viewers to "tape 'ER' and watch 'Murder One.' "

"Realistically, we're gonna get killed," Bochco said. "A show that's as popular as 'ER' is that popular for reasons that go far beyond the lack of competition. It's naive to assume we can cut into their viewership in any measurable way."

So far in its short life, "Murder One" has fared well, ranking 18th for the season to date with a 22 percent share of the audience. It has twice won its time period and generated a significant buzz for its format (following a single murder trial throughout an entire season) and execution as well as for its intense star, Daniel Benzali.

Despite that, ABC has been forced to relegate "Murder One" to the least desirable time period in all of TV due to a lack of available 9 p.m. slots on the schedule, as ABC Entertainment president Ted Harbert told reporters last summer.

"We just don't have the stomach to let 'ER' run unopposed," Harbert said. "... We must hold down 'ER.' It is not to our advantage to let that show be a 38-40 share every week.

"Now you could also discuss, should 'Murder One' be on Wednesday night, say? But 'PrimeTime Live' does very, very well on Wednesday night. It's the highest-rated — in terms of the 18-to-49 demographics — newsmagazine on the air. So it makes no sense to move that. But it does make sense to put a big gun against 'ER.' "

Bochco said he understands why ABC has had to put "Murder One" in the Thursday night death slot, even if he doesn't like it.

"From their point of view, it makes sense," he said. "But from our perspective, it's terrible."

Yet Bochco said he fully expects that when all is said and done, "Murder One" will be back next season — if not on ABC, "then someplace else."

Country's television viewers have another programming choice to make on Thursdays

Daniel Benzali, left, and Dylan Baker star in the critically-acclaimed Stephen Bochco drama "Murder One," now seen Thursdays at 9 p.m. on ABC.

LOS ANGELES — Thursday night was the night Steven Bochco had been dreading: "Murder One," the show he co-created and co-executive produces for ABC, locked horns for the first time with NBC's "ER" at 9 p.m.

In case you haven't been paying attention, "ER" is the most popular drama to hit television in 20 years.

Not only is "ER" the top-rated prime-time series, it is averaging 40 percent of the available viewers of television — a figure not approached by any program since the days of "The Cosby Show" at NBC.

To give "Murder One" a chance to gather some steam prior to the showdown, ABC aired it for two weeks in the 9 p.m. "NYPD Blue" slot on Tuesdays and then at 8 p.m. on Oct. 3 — rescheduled at the last minute to accommodate a same-day ABC News special on the O.J. Simpson verdict.

Everywhere Bochco looks, it seems, there is a booby-trap waiting. And he has no illusions that "Murder One" stands much of a chance of pulling viewers away from "ER" in spite of

Of Puritans and heavy romance

By Michael Price
N.Y. Times News Service

Take pity upon the harassed middle school teacher who could really use a field trip to see a movie tied in with a genuine literary classic. Well, now, isn't this "Scarlet Letter" thing based upon the beloved Early American masterpiece by Nathaniel Hawthorne? And couldn't we arrange for class credit?

And — oops! — isn't this new movie rated R for a couple of acres of naked flesh and enough violent action to make you wonder whether Sylvester Stallone is about to make an entrance?

Well, scratch the field trip. But don't be so quick to write off Roland Joffe's revamp of "The Scarlet Letter," a film so sumptuously mounted and lavishly photographed that even the occasional dull stretch is nice to look at.

The Hawthorne original, first published in 1850 and usually read in the form of "Cliff Notes," gets a drastic revision from director Joffe and scenarist Douglas Day Stewart. Demi Moore stars as a fiery and indignant Hester Prynne, newly arrived in Colonial America to await her husband and of course quite vulnerable to the prospect of an adulterous affair.

■ "The Scarlet Letter" is playing at Midland Park Mall.

'Strange Days': Future thrills, future kills

By Michael Price
N.Y. Times News Service

"Strange Days," Kathryn Bigelow's commanding interpretation of a script co-written by her husband, James Cameron, plays like a combination of the grimmest pillow-shredding nightmares of George Orwell.

The picture is that literate, and that sharply attuned to prophetic literature. But "Strange Days" is also an entertaining popcorn movie that delivers the harsh thrills on the spot, then gives the customer something to take home and think about.

The original story by Cameron, creator of the lucrative "Terminator" franchise, seems to be coming off a perception of America's great cities as battle zones — a tack that fellow filmmaker John Carpenter used in "Escape from New York" almost a generation ago, and that figures in such current films as "Dead Presidents" and "Clockers."

But where Carpenter was expanding upon sociological fantasy as pitched in the likes of Orwell's twice-filmed "1984" and H.G. Wells' twice-filmed "Things To Come," Cameron finds his fantasy bolstered by the violent realities of the Rodney King case and the exposure of Mark Fuhrman as a bigot in authority.

The worst has happened: On the eve of the 21st century, rogue cops, militant minority groups and nihilistic punker gangs have transformed Los Angeles into the meanest hell-hole on Earth. As though real violence were not enough, advanced technology has found its crassest level in the creation of "virtual violence" — an addictive thrill that lets the user pretend to be committing someone else's rapes and murders.

Caruso sets sail in new adventure

N.Y. Times News Service

So David Caruso is inspecting the scene of the crime at the start of this new crook thriller called "Jade." He finds a cuff link shaped like an anchor, and next thing you know he has ordered a dragnet to haul in Popeye the Sailor.

Just kidding. But really, stuff almost that outlandish and astonishing happens all through "Jade," which just might be director William Friedkin's most audacious effort since the glory days of "The French Connection" and "The Exorcist" a generation ago.

Ignore that anchor clue at your own peril, for it's more than just window-dressing. It's (literally) the anchor that will keep the attentive viewer from drifting into the treacherous rocks of Joe Eszterhas' tempestuous screen-

Willie concerts: An authentic slice of Texas

If ever forced to answer the question "What's your all-time favorite song?" the answer is actually a lot simpler than I first expected. Only problem is purists may consider my answer to actually be five songs. Technically, I suppose the purists would be correct.

Patterson

But make no mistake about it: "Whiskey River/ If You've Got The Money I've Got the Time/ Crazy/ Stay A Little Longer/Night Life" is really one song. Any veteran Willie Nelson concert-goer can tell you that.

For as long as most anyone can remember — Willie included, more than likely — he and Jody Payne, Mickey Raphael and sister Bobbie have tied those five songs together into just about the best 15-20 minutes of concert-going you can find in Texas.

When Willie lays into the opening chords of "Whiskey River" and the Texas flag is unfurled, it just doesn't get any more Texan than that.

Even with all of us being tucked here in the middle of West Texas, it's still hard to imagine something so authentically and uniquely Texan taking place in the intersection of Loraine and Texas streets.

But such was the case again last Thursday night.

Inexperienced concert goers may think that seeing the same five-song opening again and again for 15 or 20 years may be a bit redundant, but Willie concerts are so rich in Texas musical heritage that attending one is like watching a part of history.

Willie gives all at his concerts, whether they be a sold-out Dallas date from the '70s or '80s or, by comparison, a sparsely-attended fundraiser for the Fraternal Order of Police which was the case last week downtown. Willie seems like the kind of guy who would sit down with a guitar in front of two strangers and play for two hours minimum.

It is difficult to pick out one or two highlights from a Willie Nelson concert, but judging from the audience's reaction, "On The Road Again"and "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Cowboys" remain his most popular in these parts.

Another high point is when Willie puts his spin on Kris Kristofferson songs. The two have long been the perfect marriage of country singer and country songwriter. Willie flat knows how to interpret "Help Me Make it Through the Night" and "Me and Bobby McGee."

And there's "City of New Orleans," written by the late Steve Goodman and made into a classic recording by Arlo Guthrie. When Willie sings it, it's all his.

Even when he sings "Always on My Mind" at his concerts, he transforms it from crossover pulp to country classic.

Willie's pop standards, such as "Stardust," "All of Me" and Georgia on My Mind" are three other highlights that can't be forgotten.

In fact, there are usually only a couple of things that are ever really wrong with Willie concerts: Since he has such an array of hits from which to choose, the songs are often shortened. The other low point would have to be the last song, which no one ever wants to hear when enjoying his music.

Willie went 11 years between Midland visits, far too long for fans of genuine Texas outlaw country. His concerts are worth every penny and seeing him perform today much the same way he did 10 or 15 years ago makes you appreciate his enduring contribution to country music.

Willie Nelson has transcended Texas tradition and is now simply a legend. Everyone who was lucky enough to see him last week knows exactly why.

LOCAL SPORTS

Midland High JV falls to Permian

The Odessa Permian junior varsity football scored with eight minutes left in the game to beat the Midland High JV 21-17 Thursday night.

All of the Bulldogs' offense came in the first half as Camar Jackson scored on two touchdown runs and Zack Inman added a field goal.

Midland Christian JV takes game

John Robert Moore and Trey Goodwin both scored two touchdowns Thursday night to lead the Midland Christian JV football team to a 42-32 win over Buena Vista.

The Mustangs (4-0) also got touchdowns from Kody Matthews, Matthew McLane and Ryan Hellums who ran back an interception for a score.

Lee Freshman White wins

Winston scored on a 25-yard pass from Ryan Wright, a 25-yard run and also ran back an interception 65 yards for another score.

Wright led the team with 121 yards rushing and also scored a touchdown himself as the Rebels rolled up 382 total yards.

The defense also did its part, holding the Bulldogs to 62 total yards. Winston led the group with two interceptions while Craig Johnson and Jay Witcher pitched in with two sacks each. Jerrod Shaw and Eldon Hill also had strong defensive games.

The win improves Lee to 5-1 on the season. Midland High fell to 3-3 with the loss.

SJ 8th wins 30-0 improves to 6-0

Josh Kapchinske led the attack with a 75-yard touchdown run as San Jacinto gained 254 yards in total offense and got scoring plays from five different players. Chris Langley had a 7-yard run, Joe Vasquez a 12-yard scamper and Aaron Hamblin broke free for a 50-yard scoring run. Chris Hicks also hit Chris Oldham on a 45-yard touchdown pass.

Defensive standouts included Edward Olgin, Vasquez and Dadrick Clay.

The Alamo 8th-grade B team got a 75-yard touchdown run from Terry Segovin in its win over Abell. James Williams also scored on a 2-yard run as Alamo B improved its record to 2-1 on the year.

SJ White 8th wins match

San Jacinto White lost the first game but came back to win the final two and beat Alamo Gray 14-16, 15-9, 15-8 in an 8th-grade volleyball match Thursday in the Midland-Odessa Conference tournament.

In other tournament finals, Alamo White defeated Abell Maroon 15-7, 12-7 and San Jacinto White defeated Alamo Gray 13-15, 15-9, 15-8.

Christina Carver led Alamo Gray with six points while Shawn Hayes and Fulvia Gonzales each contributed 10 digs. Lindsey Mills also had four kills.

The loss dropped Alamo Gray to 0-5 on the season.

Crystal White had five points as Alamo White improved to 4-2 in district play this year. Shanna Cox also had a solid game for Alamo.

Abell Maroon was led by Jill Holley and Heather Magalski.

Katie Gilmore scored 12 points to lead San Jacinto White (5-1) to the three-set victory. Rebecca Nobles had eight points and Brooke Chandler had six.

Alamo 7th Red takes victory

Jessica Thompson and Rosana Martinez combined for 17 points as Alamo Red 7th-grade came away with a three-set, 8-15, 15-12, 15-11 volleyball win over Goddard Red Thursday.

In other 7th-grade action, Alamo Gray was defeated by Goddard Black 12-7, 4-15, 14-11 and San Jacinto Green beat Abell Blue 15-13, 15-12, 1-15.

Thompson scored 10 points and Martinez seven as Alamo dropped the first set before coming back to win the final two and take the match. The win improved Alamo Red to 4-2 in district play.

Edena Rogers and Sabrina Spencer did a good job setting and hitting for Goddard Black as they picked up the win. Alamo Gray was led by Kylie Yonts and Marissa Prude on serves and April Adamson for all-around play.

Alamo Gray's record is now 5-5.

Mandy Goode and Steffanie Vernon each scored nine points to lead Abell Blue but San Jacinto Green took the first two sets in close scores to win the match.

Trinity Middle scores shutout

ABILENE — The Midland Trinity Middle School football team scored a 27-0 shutout win over Abilene Christian Thursday. The offense was led by quarterback Chris Howard while the defensive standout was Daniel Valles.

Correction

David Archer throws four TD's, Texans win 43-30

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Quarterback David Archer tossed four touchdown passes and running back Mike Saunders scored three times Thursday to lead the San Antonio Texans to a 43-30 Canadian Football League victory over the Ottawa Rough Riders.

Archer, who completed 18 of 29 passes for 288 yards, tied a club record with his scoring passes of 36, 4, 5 and 13 yards. Two of those went to Saunders, who also scored on an 8-yard run in the opening quarter.

Archer completed 10 of 14 passes for 181 yards in the second quarter as the Texans (10-6) scored 23 points and grabbed a 33-0 halftime lead. The Rough Riders (2-14) lost their eighth road game in as many starts.

After building a 33-0 halftime lead, the Texans were up by as much as 43-7 before a late fourth-quarter Ottawa scoring surge of 23 points.

Ottawa quarterback Sammy Garza took over for starter Andre Ware in the third quarter and completed 12 of 16 passes for 126 yards and two scores.

Rockets wins exhibition opener with new uniforms

HOUSTON — Newcomer Mark Bryant scored 14 points in 14 minutes and Clyde Drexler finished with 20 points, leading the Houston Rockets to a 114-103 exhibition victory over the San Antonio Spurs on Thursday night.

The Rockets took a 56-51 halftime lead and then made the first big run of the game with a decisive 11-0 spurt early in the third quarter for a 71-59 lead with 7:52 left in the period.

Bryant signed with the Rockets as a free agent after playing seven seasons at Portland.

Vinny Del Negro led San Antonio with 15 points, and David Robinson scored 10 points in 12 minutes.

CHULA VISTA, Calif. — Benita Fitzgerald, the gold medalist in the 100-meter hurdles at the 1984 Olympics, was appointed director of the U.S. Olympic Committee's ARCO Training Center on Thursday.

She will begin her new job Nov. 1. The ARCO Training Center, located south of San Diego and the first warm-weather training site in the country, has facilities for soccer, archery, track and field, rowing, tennis, field hockey and canoe and kayaking.

Fitzgerald currently is a program director for the Atlanta Centennial Olympic Properties, the marketing division of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games.

REALTOR IS ANOTHER NAME FOR RESOURCE.

The decision to buy a home can be intimidating. That's why many prospective buyers and sellers turn to one of the best resources around: a REALTOR®.

As a member of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS®, each REALTOR® has access to the most current real estate-related education and research.

This gives REALTORS® a strong working knowledge of the intricacies of buying and selling property--from financing and market values to closing procedures.

And a REALTOR®'s commitment to provide service for both buyers and sellers, give you confidence when you make one of the most important purchases for your family.
