Sandinista government may try American man

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government may try an American captured when a cargo plane laden with supplies allegedly bound for Contra rebels was shot down over Nicaragua, an official said.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Alberto Fernandez said late Tuesday it had asked the government to allow an embassy representative to visit the captive American, Eugene Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis.

"We have done all we can do at the moment," Fernandez said. "We asked to see him a long time ago — this morning — so they have had plenty of time to think about it. We are still waiting for a response."

Defense Ministry spokeswoman Capt. Rosa Pasos, at a news conference where Hasenfus was shown briefly to reporters, and spokesmen for President Daniel Ortega all said they did not know where the American was being held.

Three other men aboard the plane were killed when it was shot down Sunday, and the Nicaraguan Defense Ministry said Tuesday two of them were Americans while the fourth was of "Latin origin."

■ U.S. response; Related stories — 3D

The government said the Americans were all identified by documents found on them or in the plane as U.S. military advisers in El Salvador.

The United States has 55 military advisers in that country, where it supports the government in a guerrilla war with leftist rebels.

Officials in Washington denied any connection between Hasenfus and the U.S. government. An official of the anti-Sandinista Contra rebels in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, also denied that it had anything to do with the plane or the crew.

Lt. Col. Roberto Calderon, chief of the southern military district where the C-123 was shot down, said Nicaragua's leftist government was deciding whether to put Hasenfus on trial, but did not specify what charges were under consideration.

Oil cartel resumes strategy talks

GENEVA (AP) — Indonesia's chief delegate says most OPEC oil ministers appear ready to extend the cartel's temporary production controls in a bid to boost the price of oil from $14 to $20 a barrel by the year's end.

Ministers from the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries resume meeting today for a third day of talks on a strategy to reverse oil prices that bottomed out this summer at $7 a barrel.

The ministers decided Tuesday to split into two groups to discuss a new allocation of production quotas for the member countries and to study ways of unifying the cartel's pricing policies.

Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto told reporters Tuesday evening he saw little chance that a permanent allocation of production quotas could be worked out at the current meeting.

He said OPEC probably would be forced to renew a temporary accord, reached Aug. 5 and due to expire Oct. 31.

"I think the majority of ministers see that that is something to do because it has benefitted member countries," Subroto said.

Since that accord on production controls, oil prices rose from the $7 to $12 a barrel range to the present $14 to $16 a barrel.

Subroto and other ministers stressed that OPEC would attempt to agree on an iron-clad system of production quotas that would be adjusted automatically during the year in line with seasonal changes in demand for the cartel's crude oil.

But it appeared increasingly likely that the Geneva meeting would fall short of completing such a deal. Most of the ministers appeared willing instead to accept a one-time renewal of the current arrangement.

Minister Harald Bredesen, standing beneath a bright American flag, shares his words with a crowd of 1,500 Midlanders who turned out Tuesday night for the "God and Country" rally at Midland College's Chaparral Center.

Belief in 'God and Country' celebrated at local rally

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Nearly 1,500 Midlanders celebrated life in the Tall City Tuesday evening with songs of America, prayer, and the spirit of community at the first ever "God and Country" rally.

Community leaders, including Mayor Carroll Thomas, city council member Oralia Corrales, and former Chamber of Commerce President Joan Baskin appeared at the rally and spoke to the crowd.

Ms. Baskin, quoting Daniel Webster, told the crowd "Whatever makes men good Christians makes them good citizens."

Local minister Joseph Williams, Jr., said "It is my belief, that despite our hardships... through faith in God, we as a community and as a nation will again be a vital economic and spiritual force."

The crowd joined singers in songs like "Statue of Liberty," "God Bless the U.S.A." and "America the Beautiful."

Everett Bender of Big Spring, who organized a similar event there that led to the Midland rally, told the crowd he had seen the despair of hard times in the Permian Basin, and he saw that the people needed a lift.

In his introduction of the guest speaker for the rally, he said he had seen businesses go out of business, and their owners turn to the downward spiral of drugs and alcohol.

"People need something real," Bender said. "We need someone who knows God and speaks to God."

Guest speaker Harald Bredesen, sporting a blue suit and bright red tie and handkerchief, told the crowd that hard times could be overcome by belief in the "God of the Impossible."

Bredesen, a globe-trotting minister who is on the board of directors of the Christian Broadcasting Network, said he realized Midland's economy and its people had been "clobbered."

Iranians fail in takeover of West German Embassy

BONN, West Germany (AP) — At least 100 Iranian demonstrators tried unsuccessfully today to storm the West German Embassy in Tehran to protest the closing of an Iranian exhibit at the Frankfurt Book Fair, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

The demonstrators, shouting "Revenge for Frankfurt," tried to force their way in with iron bars and saws, said the spokesman, Hans Schumacher.

"They retreated voluntarily after they failed to get in," he said. "No one was hurt, there was no harm done."

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, said the protesters were students belonging to the fundamentalist Hezbollah, or Party of God, and that they demanded the Tehran government take firmer action against West Germany.

The agency said the students were protesting the book fair exhibit's closing and the arrest of a "number of supporters of the Islamic Republic" in Frankfurt, but did not elaborate.

The demonstrators distributed a statement saying "though the fascist and inhuman German government tries to show a friendly face, it cannot hide its enmity towards the Islamic Republic of Iran," the agency said.

Iran's stand at the Frankfurt Book Fair was closed last week following fistfights between supporters and opponents of Iran's revolutionary leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Economist's forecasts included in TEC's labor surplus petition

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A forecast by a Midland-Odessa-based economist that shows total wage and salary employment decreasing to about 43,000 jobs in Odessa by mid-1987 is one of the documents supporting a petition filed by the Odessa Texas Employment Service office for a Labor Surplus Area Designation (LSAD).

Ron Norris, Odessa TEC manager, says forecasts developed by Jim Williams, who operates the Midland-based Texas Business Forecasts, a consulting firm, were included in the petition that was submitted to the U.S. Department of Labor.

Approval of Odessa as a LSAD would mean favored treatment in the granting of subcontracts by prime contractors on federal contracts.

Joe Hatcher, Midland TEC manager, said Monday he is considering seeking LSAD status for the Midland area, but will wait a couple of months to see what happens to the unemployment rate.

Man plunges from airplane he'd chartered

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A man wearing a white dinner jacket hired a notary and two video cameramen to accompany him on a chartered flight then opened the door at 10,000 feet and toppled from the plane, a witness said.

It was not known if the man was wearing a parachute.

Metropolitan Police searched unsuccessfully Tuesday northeast of Las Vegas for the man, according to a desk officer on duty who spoke only on condition of anonymity. Homicide detectives confiscated the video tapes and questioned witnesses, he said, but would not comment on the investigation.

"I just couldn't believe it was happening," said Charlotte Richards, the notary who was sitting next to the man. "He just opened up the door on the right side of the plane and just fell out of the plane."

Mrs. Richards said she patted the man on the back seconds before he jumped from the plane and was fairly certain he wasn't wearing a parachute.

"It was just horrifying," she said, still trembling from Monday night's experience. "I just don't know what to think. If he's committed suicide, what a horrible thing to experience. If he did it as a hoax, he better not reappear around me."

Mrs. Richards said her first thought was the man was a stuntman and would reappear. When he didn't, she said, her friend tried to get the pilot to go down in the darkness and to look for him.

Reporter pulled into ruckus over campaign bugging

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A Capitol reporter has become caught in the crossfire between media consultants for the state's two gubernatorial candidates over the electronic bug found in the office of Bill Clements' top strategist.

Aides to Clements, the former governor and Republican opponent this fall to incumbent Democratic Gov. Mark White, said state and federal law enforcement officials interviewed them Tuesday on a variety of issues related to the bug. White aides said no authorities had asked to interrogate them but that they were "certainly willing to cooperate fully."

Clements' press secretary, Reggie Bashur, said Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and Texas Department of Public Safety officers asked him about his conversation Sept. 30 with Sam Attlesey, political writer for the Dallas Morning News.

Questions Attlesey posed to Bashur during that conversation led the Clements' campaign to order the electronic "sweep" of their offices over the weekend. Investigators found the bug Sunday night in the office of Karl Rove, Clements' top political consultant.

Byron Sage, agent in charge of the FBI's Austin office, would not comment on possible suspects in the case. Sage said the FBI lab in Washington began analyzing the match-book-sized bug Tuesday for fingerprints and "the capability and origin and sophistication of the device."

Rove said the details of Attlesey's questions — involving the possible hiring of Washington political consultant Lee Atwater and an increase in television advertisement purchases — had been discussed only during a possibly overheard phone call he had placed from his office to Clements' campaign manager George Bayoud the day before.

"Sam told us that the information came from (White media consultant) Harris Diamond," Rove said.

Attlesey said he "received some information from the White campaign and ... called the Clements camp to check it out." Asked whom he spoke with on White's staff or whether FBI and DPS officials had questioned him Tuesday, Attlesey said, "For competitive reasons among you guys, I don't want to say much more."

Clements staffers refused to release Attlesey's name Monday when they first disclosed the bug's discovery. They released it only after the Morning News printed the connection in its Tuesday editions.

Diamond said Tuesday he had discussed Clements' increased ad purchases with Attlesey and other reporters, but that he had obtained that information from the firm that buys advertising time for White. "We track their media buying every week," Diamond said.

The problem with that explanation, Bashur and Rove said, is that Attlesey specifically asked about the Clements campaign increasing its ad purchases to 650 gross rating points, a measurement of advertising time and audience. Rove said that is an incorrect number he mistakenly used only in that one phone conversation with campaign manager Bayoud.

"I don't know that I ever used 650. I don't really recall," Diamond said when asked what information he gave Attlesey. "The number I thought they had was 700, and it was also several weeks ago."

Bashur said the Clements campaign was also concerned about the mention of Atwater, a Washington-based consultant whose primary client is Vice President George Bush. "I knew that was a very sensitive matter," he said.

Diamond said the first mention he heard of Clements possibly hiring Atwater was when he read Tuesday's newspaper accounts of the bugging incident. Mark McKinnon, White's campaign press secretary, said the White staff had heard of Clements considering hiring Charlie Black, Atwater's partner.

"That talk was all over Washington, D.C.," McKinnon said.

Heavy rains take toll on farmers

Associated Press

Heavy rains and floods that battered the Midwest have saddled thousands of farmers with soggy fields at harvest time, damaging crops and causing hundreds of millions of dollars in losses.

The storms that swept the nation's Farm Belt during the past three weeks and forced mass evacuations in Oklahoma, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas have left hundreds of thousands of acres of soybeans, corn and wheat drenched in water.

Officials in Oklahoma fear the state's winter wheat crop is all but lost to flooded fields and washed out seed beds. Farm officials in parts of Missouri and Kansas also report extensive cropland flooding.

"I'm sure some farmers are going to be 100 percent out," said Mike Kraemer, Missouri Department of Agriculture spokesman.

Officials in the Midwest and Great Plains say they can't fully assess financial losses caused by the storms until the waters recede. But in Michigan alone, weather-related agricultural damage has been estimated at $240 million.

Weather problems prompted Michigan Gov. James Blanchard and Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft to lobby in Washington on Tuesday for their waterlogged states.

Also on Tuesday, President Reagan declared parts of northern Illinois federal disaster areas, clearing the way for low-interest loans.

Dry weather across much of the nation's heartland early this week allowed some farmers to resume harvesting, and agricultural experts say several days without rain should help salvage some crops.

But the storms already have devastated many areas, rotting crops and idling farmers at one of the busiest times of the year.

Oswego, Kan., residents Tim Hucke, left, and Butch Westall use a handfull of hay and a stout rope to coax two horses to higher ground.

Missouri officials say farmers in 54 counties suffered substantial crop damage. In southeast Kansas, 340,000 acres of farmland flooded, causing $50 million to $60 million damage, said Gary Kilgore, extension service crops specialist in the region.

In Illinois, where statewide damage was estimated at $30 million to $40 million, about 17,000 acres of cropland were flooded.

And in Oklahoma, agricultural experts say 48 counties suffered "unusual damage." They say most of the counties affected are in the state's primary wheat-producing areas, where 80 percent of the grain may have to be replaced.

Bart Brorsen, executive director of the state's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office, said "the largest, most prevalent damage is soil loss. That's irreparable and irreplaceable."

Warm, moist conditions also have caused crops to deteriorate in the field — corn germinating on the cob and soybeans spouting in the pods. And because of harvesting delays, stalks weakened by age and insects fall easily and grain is lost.

Other losses will result from spoilage of grain left outside without covers because storage areas already were filled by bumper crops.

Though many may be able to recoup losses in coming weeks, the bad weather could be a final blow to struggling farmers.

"Some haven't had a good crop in the last few years," said Ed LeValley, extension agricultural agent in Sumner County, Kan. "They've already borrowed money to keep the crop out. Some are stretched to their limit. They have to start making some payments before they can borrow more money."

This, he said, "is just another nail in the coffin."

LABOR

Odessa's request is being supported by Lubbock U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, who met with Labor Secretary Bill Brock Sept. 30 and urged the secretary to grant LSAD status for Odessa.

"I sincerely believe that Ector County meets the exceptional circumstances criteria for designation as a LSAD, with a staggering unemployment level that topped 19.6 percent in June," Combest said. "It is clear that economic diversification is necessary in the Permian Basin to reverse the downward trend in the city's economy."

Williams developed two forecasts that were included in the TEC petition for LSAD status. One, projecting wage and salary jobs trends without the impact of federal tax reform legislation, shows a job loss by mid-1987 of around 4,000 jobs from the current wage and salary workforce of around 47,819.

Depending on the impact of tax reform on the oil industry, Williams says, wage and salary employment could drop as low as 39,000. How drastically Odessa's, as well as Midland's, job market is affected, he said, will depend on the degree of impact of tax reform legislation on investment capital and whether it will be further dried up.

"The rest of 1986 and at least the first half of 1987," Williams says, "will be a fairly rough ride."

The Midland-based economic consultant said, however, his forecast model does indicate "a slight pickup in wage and salary employment" in both Odessa and Midland by about the end of 1987.

Williams said he expects to complete a comparable forecast for the Midland area by about the end of the week. He said his forecasts are predicated on a per barrel price of crude oil in the $17 to $19 range.

Hatcher, who took over the Midland TEC office only recently, said he will be interested in seeing Williams' forecasts for the Midland area. He added that he plans to monitor Midland unemployment rates for about another two months and, if rates remain in excess of 10 percent and forecasts show them likely to remain at or above that level, he will seek LSAD status for Midland.

Figures provided by Norris and Hatcher show that through August of this year, Midland's unemployment rate has averaged 10.1 percent.

In June, Midland's unemployment rate hit a record high of 14.2 percent, with 7,600 workers unemployed. Odessa's unemployment rate also hit an all-time high, recording 19.6 percent.

August TEC figures showed Odessa's unemployment rate had decreased to 17.3 percent, with 10,500 workers out of a workforce of 60,600 unemployed. Midland's unemployment rate in August was nearly 12.3 percent, with 6,500 out of a workforce of 52,900 unemployed.

The petition seeking LSAD status for Ector County was hand-carried to Washington D.C. last week by Permian Basin Bid Center Director Dave Thaver.

He said he believes Ector County has "about a 99 percent chance" of receiving LSAD status, which would mean that contractors receiving federal contracts would be required by law to give qualified Ector County firms an opportunity to bid on subcontracts.

In addition to urging LSAD status for Ector County, Combest asked Brock to give high priority status to the funding request from the Private Industry Council for displaced oil and gas workers due to the severe unemployment and economic conditions currently facing the Permian Basin.

In a Sept. 10 letter to Brock, Combest had suggested funding assistance be granted to retrain unemployed oil and gas related workers.

Following his Sept. 30 meeting with Brock, Combest said in a news release, "Secretary Brock informed me he was painfully aware of our current economic plight and that he was presently reviewing the funding request. Brock indicated he would give his undivided attention to this matter," Combest stated.

As of the end of 1985, Ector County's total workforce stood at 67,300 and Midland showed 64,400, according to TEC figures. August figures show Midland's total workforce down to 52,900 and Odessa stands at only 60,600.

The double-digit unemployment is nearly unprecedented in the Midland-Odessa areas. At the height of the downturn in 1983, Odessa's unemployment rate climbed to to 10.1 percent in June of that year, which meant 7,600 workers were without jobs. Midland's previous historical high occurred a year earlier, in June 1982, when the city's unemployment rate climbed to 7.5 percent and 5,100 people were out of work.

TEC figures show that throughout 1985, Midland's unemployment rate averaged only 5.4 percent and Odessa was 6.5.

The Midland average in 1984 was 4.4, compared to Odessa's 5.7. In 1983, Midland's unemployment rate averaged 6.5, while Odessa's climbed to 9.7. The average 1982 unemployed rate in Midland was 4.1 percent and Odessa's stood at 5.5 percent. In 1981, Midland and Odessa's respective average rates were 2.0 and 2.3 percent. The rate for Midland in 1980 was 2.4 percent and Odessa was 2.7 percent.

PLANE

Calderon identified the two other Americans as pilot William J. Cooper and co-pilot Wallace Blaine Sawger. A translator said the name Sawger was taken from a document and was assumed to be a misspelling of Sawyer.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Pete Martinez said he had no information about either man.

Calderon said Hasenfus carried an identification card issued July 28 by the Salvadoran air force giving him access to restricted areas of the Ilopango air base in southern El Salvador, where Hasenfus told reporters Tuesday he had boarded the C-123.

Another captured document was an identification card issued to Cooper by a company called Southern Air Transport, Calderon said. That company, which reportedly has flown supplies to the Contras, said Tuesday it knew nothing about Hasenfus or the flight.

The plane carried 60 AK-model Soviet-made rifles, 100,000 rounds of ammunition, dozens of rocket-propelled grenades and other military equipment, Calderon said. Nicaraguan authorities said the supplies were destined for the Contras.

Nicaraguan troops were working Tuesday night to recover the three bodies from the wreckage, located in dense jungle about 91 miles southeast of Managua and 30 miles north of the Costa Rican border.

Calderon said authorities were also deciding whether to return the bodies of the Americans to their families.

Hasenfus was flown by helicopter Tuesday from San Carlos to Managua for a news conference at the Government Press Center.

Dressed in the mud-spattered denim clothes in which he was captured, Hasenfus was on the stage for about 20 seconds before being led away.

"My name is Gene Hasenfus. I come from Marinette, Wis. I was captured yesterday in southern Nicaragua. Thank you," he said in a shaky voice.

Reporters complained at not being allowed to question the American, whom Calderon repeatedly called "the prisoner."

Earlier, speaking to local journalists in San Carlos near the crash site, Hasenfus said the plane began its journey in Miami, picked him up in El Salvador, then took a Nicaraguan aboard in Honduras and entered Nicaraguan air space from Costa Rica.

Carlos Icaza, a leader of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force guerrilla group, told The Associated Press in Tegucigalpa that "our planes are intact, as well as our pilots." He said the Contra group had nothing to do with the matter.

The group has a small fleet of propeller-driven aircraft used to drop supplies to its men in Nicaragua.

Several groups of rebels called Contras have fought the Sandinistas for 4½ years. The United States supports them and a bill authorizing $100 million in aid is pending in Congress.

Congress has barred using U.S. military personnel in support of the Contras, including U.S. advisers on Nicaraguan soil.

No American servicemen have been reported captured or killed in combat in Nicaragua since the Sandinistas ousted the U.S.-backed regime of President Anastasio Somoza in July 1979.

OIL

In its newsletter today, the Kuwait-based Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries, seven of whose 10 members also belong to OPEC, called for an extension of the accord on production cutbacks.

Apparently referring to the recent rise in oil prices, the newsletter said: "The positive reaction to the last OPEC consensus, we believe, confirms a change of attitude that is helping OPEC to reassert its role as a major force in determining the oil price despite previous reversals."

The cost of failing to agree at least on an extension of the August accord is so high for OPEC that a total breakdown of the meeting seemed unlikely.

Each $1 drop in the price of a barrel of oil costs OPEC $5.5 billion in annual revenues, based on current production levels.

Economists say downward pressure on oil prices is building, mainly because of an extraordinarily large oil glut that has developed as a result of high OPEC production in July and August.

The cartel agreed on Aug. 5 to return to an abandoned system of production restraint. It set an overall output limit for 12 of its members at 14.8 million barrels daily.

Iraq was exempted from a quota, but its production of about 2 million barrels a day brought OPEC's total to 16.8 million barrels daily.

That was down from an August production peak estimated by the International Energy Agency at 20.5 million barrels a day.

The atmosphere in this week's OPEC talks appeared to improve after the United Arab Emirates — which had been exceeding its production quota — announced Tuesday it was cutting production by 25 percent, to 950,000 barrels daily, as a gesture of goodwill.

The UAE was the main violator of OPEC's current accord. The reduced production figure was what the country was assigned under the quota system.

While Subroto said he hoped for a price near $20 a barrel by the year's end, Rilwanu Lukman, the oil minister of Nigeria and president of OPEC, said Tuesday that the cartel appeared united in seeking $18 or $19 a barrel by Dec. 31.

RALLY

"You are on that cliff, and you do see those jagged rocks come up toward you; but if you've committed yourself to the Lord, the brawny arm of omnipotence is undergirding you."

Bredesen recalled his own rocky road of ministerial experiences, from preaching in a reformatory in Pine Bluff, Ark., (he termed it a "hellhole") to near-poverty in Mount Vernon, N.Y. He said every time he was down and out, prayer and belief spurred him on.

Bredesen, who was publicized before the rally as a "world statesman," also mentioned his friendships with President Ronald Reagan, former President Jimmy Carter, and the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. He said he had prayed with each.

Bredesen, in his closing remarks, said he knew what had happened to the economy in Midland.

"One of the reasons Satan is hitting this town so hard," he said, "is that God wants to release all of the oil riches."

"The pilot just went straight to the airport and said not to talk to anybody or do anything until the FAA got there. They came and the police came. We were questioned until 4 in the morning."

An employee at Hughes Executive Air Terminal, where the flight originated, confirmed that authorities were on the scene after the plane arrived.

"It's not a hoax," said the employee who spoke only on condition that his name and specific title not be used. "Whether or not the guy had a parachute or not, no one knows. The newer design ones are really flat. You could wear them under a jacket."

He said no flight plan was necessary for a local scenic flight.

Mrs. Richards said the man, who identified himself as a 35-year-old doctor from Germany, approached her in the wedding chapel she owns in Las Vegas last week, and asked for the services of a notary.

Mrs. Richards said she brought a friend. The two, along with the two cameramen and the pilot, filled the single-engine Cessna 210. Before departing, the man stood with a microphone in front of the plane and identified her, himself and the pilot before the camera.

"He had everyone sit in certain places," she recalled. "We took off and he was looking out of the plane continously. Then he sat down and took off his watch and handed it to me. The next thing I know, he said 'Will you marry me?'"

The wedding chapel owner said she laughed and patted the man on the back.

"It was real spooky," she said. "After a moment he said 'I don't know if I have enough time.' He just sort of opened the door and fell out."

Young Conservatives back Clements, Lewis' opponent, Hobby's opponent

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — The Young Conservatives of Texas are endorsing House Speaker Gib Lewis' Republican opponent, saying they are disappointed that Lewis supported sales and gasoline tax hikes during the recent special legislative session.

The group said Tuesday that Lewis, D-Fort Worth, was too quick to abandon his anti-tax stance and vote for $872 million in temporary tax increases to help solve the state's fiscal crisis.

For that reason, the Young Conservatives are backing K. Wayne Lee in the 89th Texas House district, said Richard Munisteri, vice chairman for political affairs.

"The true test was this latest issue on taxes. We are disappointed that he (Lewis) did not pursue other available reductions and inefficiencies in state government," Munisteri said.

Rather than insist on deeper budget cuts, Munisteri said, Lewis "allowed himself to be swayed by pressure from (Lt. Gov.) Bill Hobby and (Gov.) Mark White. That's definitely the cutting point."

The criticism was leveled as the 1,200-member organization announced endorsements in this year's elections.

While generally favoring Republicans, the Young Conservatives did back two Democrats for statewide office.

The group endorsed Republican Bill Clements against White. Munisteri said the former governor's fiscal management abilities are sorely missed by the taxpayers of Texas.

Republican David Davidson got the nod in the lieutenant governor's race, Munisteri said because "the incumbent, Bill Hobby, is the individual most responsible for increased taxes."

Other Republicans backed for statewide office were attorney general candidate Roy Barrera and agriculture commissioner hopeful Bill Powers. Democrats endorsed for statewide office were Sen. John Sharp of Victoria, who is running for the Railroad Commission, and Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez.

Man says God told him to run for president

Adkins

DALLAS (AP) — On Feb. 13, 1980, when he was aboard a light plane that developed mechanical trouble over New Mexico, God first spoke to him, telling him to become a candidate for president, Gordon Adkins says.

A "small, still, inner voice" said, " 'Fear not, for that which is occurring I am allowing for you to go to (a friend) and tell him I've instructed you to announce for the highest office in the land,' " said Adkins, who lives in Dallas.

Initially, he had interpreted God as wanting him to be elected in 1980, but the voice returned to him later with a campaign slogan, "The White House will be mine in '89."

Adkins, who will be 50 later this month, is the only candidate of the People's Party, a name also provided by God, he said. He has chartered airplanes to make forays into 28 states, calling press conferences in dozens of airports, expounding — largely to reporters and church congregations — on a political philosophy that rings loudly with the sound of scripture.

"Trust in the Lord" is the foundation of his campaign platform. If elected, Adkins promises to:

— Eliminate all defense spending, because God instructs us all to love our neighbors;

— Forgive the debts of all those who owe our country money and can't afford to pay;

— Remove most women from the work force — some belong, he said, but most should be home taking care of their children;

— Make public welfare a function of churches instead of government.

Adkins is a preacher. He's also a former supersalesman, an ex-convict, an ex-business owner and an ex-alcohol abuser.

He has been planning a run for the presidency for the past six years, but his plans were derailed in 1982 when he wound up in prison in Huntsville.

"The official indictment was theft over $10,000," Adkins said, "but the truth of the matter is I was sent to prison for non-payment of a bill."

He failed to pay for $37,000 worth of oilfield equipment he had bid for at an auction in 1975, he said.

Similar, but less severe, incidents plagued him later, he said. There would have been no problem, he said, if various debtors had not discovered he had a criminal record and reneged on promises to extend him credit.

While he was spending three years and five months in prison, before his parole in December 1984, his wife divorced him, Adkins said. They have three grown sons.

At one time, he said, he owned expensive cars and a brokerage business. Now, he owns a single suit, two dress shirts, one tie, and one pair of shoes.

STATE IN BRIEF

Puerto Ricans quarantined because one has meningitis

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — More than 200 Puerto Rican students at Lackland Air Force Base were placed under limited quarantine after one was diagnosed with bacterial meningitis and two others displayed symptoms of the potentially fatal illness, officials said.

The 18-year-old diagnosed as having the disease is listed in serious but stable condition at Wilford Hall Air Force Medical Center while the other two are being tested at the hospital, Air Force officials said Tuesday.

The 210 students quarantined are studying English at the Defense Language Institute so they can enter Army basic training, said Jim Sandefur, base spokesman.

"We don't have an epidemic," Sandefur said.

Dr. Martin Evans said the situation is under control and the students are being restricted to the academic area of the institute.

Wilford Hall doctors do not yet know if the disease was picked up here or brought from Puerto Rico. The group arrived Aug. 5.

Three people die in wreck

MAGNOLIA (AP) — Three people who paid a man to drive them to Houston died when the car hit a tree, authorities said.

Debra Chamberlain, 30, her stepson Brian Roger Chamberlain, 18, and his friend Todd Liestman, 18, died in the accident, said Texas Department of Public safety trooper Charles Haight.

The driver, James. C. Watkins, 26, of Magnolia, was rescued from the burning car by two other motorists.

He was in critical condition Tuesday at the John Sealy Hospital in Galveston, hospital spokeswoman Brenda Long said. Watkins has third-degree burns covering 67 percent of his body, she said.

Haight said Watkins lost control of the car when he took a curve too fast on a farm-to-market road near the Waller-Montgomery County line.

He said Ms. Chamberlain agreed to pay Watkins to drive her and the teen-agers to Houston after she had argued with her husband. She met Watkins in a tavern while telephoning relatives, the trooper said.

Chemical tanker derails

JOSEPHINE (AP) — Several houses were evacuated Tuesday morning after 20 cars of Burlington Northern freight train derailed near this southeast Collin County community, authorities said.

Nobody was hurt in the derailment, which took place at 11:15 a.m., said sheriff's dispatcher Jack Groves in McKinney.

Four or five homes were evacuated as a precaution since one of the cars was a tanker carrying a hazardous chemical, he said.

There was no spill and the tanker was not leaking, Groves added. He identified the chemical as an aromatic concentrate containing benzene.

The accident took place on Southern Pacific tracks between Josephine and Nevada, he said. Josephine is about 40 miles northeast of Dallas.

Heart patient has seizures

HOUSTON (AP) — A 14-year-old Clovis girl who underwent two heart transplants last month is now battling the affects of two minor seizures.

A spokesman for Methodist Hospital in Houston said Tuesday that Dawn White suffered the seizures Monday night. She remained in critical but stable condition, and her heartbeat condition also was stable, David Blackshear said.

The New Mexico teen-ager underwent a second heart transplant operation Sept. 25 after her body rejected her first transplanted heart and she suffered cardiac arrest.

She had received the first heart transplant at the Houston hospital Sept. 3. She suffered a seizure Sept. 17, but doctors had said she was recovering well.

'Red tide' spreading

AUSTIN (AP) — The "red tide" on the Texas coast has appeared in the Port Aransas and Rockport areas of Aransas Bay, the state health department said Tuesday.

The department said the tide caused by a marine microbe now extends from the mouth of the Colorado River to Port Aransas and may move into Corpus Christi or Copano bays.

Shultz sees no final summit agreement on weapons differences

By HENRY GOTTLIEB

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the narrowing of U.S.-Soviet differences on how to control medium range missiles, Secretary of State George P. Shultz envisions no final agreement on the issue at the Iceland summit.

"The particular differences have been winnowed out and are pretty well understood," Shultz said Tuesday. But he added: "It's also true that as in most negotiations the issues that come at the end tend to be among the most difficult.

"So just because there are only a few left doesn't mean it's a piece of cake," he said.

The best that President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev are likely to do at their summit in Reykjavik on Saturday and Sunday is give "some additional impulse and guidance to our negotiators in Geneva to see what they can do toward an interim INF (intermediate nuclear forces) agreement," he said.

Shultz's statement, at a White House news conference less than two days before Reagan's Thursday departure for Iceland, was the latest in a series of administration efforts to dampen expectations of dramatic breakthroughs at the summit.

The secretary of state also said the Soviets might announce withdrawal of some of their troops from Afghanistan before the superpower meeting. But he warned that it may only be a "publicized event" and that the troops would be replaced by other Soviet forces.

Rozanne Ridgeway, assistant secretary of state for European affairs, also downplayed the chances for important progress at Reykjavik in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs committee, saying an arms control agreement is unlikely.

Another administration official said "There's a feel that there may be the political will" now to settle the medium-range missile portion of the U.S.-Soviet arms control agenda.

Without being specific, the official said, "there is substantial motion" on some long-time sticking points.

The Soviets have at least for the time being dropped their insistence on counting British and French nuclear missiles as part of the U.S. medium-range arsenal.

Reagan, meanwhile, issued another appeal Tuesday to Congress to erase restrictions on his nuclear weapons program, arguing that the summit "can only succeed if our government is, united."

He told congressional leaders at a White House breakfast that House-passed barriers to his arms buildup make it "exceedingly difficult for me to enter into discussions with the Soviets when legislative restrictions apply to the very areas that are under negotiations with the Soviets."

"I ask you not to tie my hands. Don't undermine my negotiating position. Each of you are key to any chance we have of proceeding with a united government. I appreciate very much your efforts to help make this trip a success."

The House has approved a budget measure that would ban nuclear tests, prohibit testing of anti-satellite weapons, require adherence to the unratified SALT II treaty, freeze financing for "Star Wars" anti-missile research and block production of binary chemical weapons.

In recent months, the superpowers reportedly have narrowed the gap on medium range missiles in Europe — the 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles the United States is deploying in five North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries and the hundreds of roughly comparable Soviet weapons, notably the 3,750-mile-range SS-20s.

Air Force moves up SALT II date on missiles limit

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force is moving up to Nov. 11 the date for exceeding the SALT II treaty limit on strategic bombers carrying air-launched cruise missiles, administration and congressional sources say.

That might mean scuttling a key provision of the most recent major U.S.-Soviet arms control accord before President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev could hold a full-scale summit here.

They will meet in Iceland on Saturday and Sunday, but the Reagan administration describes the session as a preparatory one, with no major arms limitation agreements to be signed. A decision on when to hold the Washington summit is expected to be reached in Reykjavik.

December is considered the most probable month for Gorbachev to visit Washington. In fact, the summit may slip over to 1987, although Donald T. Regan, the White House chief of staff, said Tuesday that a November summit also was possible.

Congressional critics of the Soviet Union are apt to be pleased by the SALT II decision, but it could put another chill on superpower relations.

Initially, the Air Force was scheduled to equip its 131st bomber with cruise missiles in November, thereby surpassing the SALT II ceiling of 1,320 on multiple warhead missiles and bombers that carry cruises.

However, in August, for what the administration called "technical reasons," the schedule for the 131st bomber was slowed down to late December. That raised the possibility of holding a Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting in Washington with the treaty still intact.

In the last few days, however, the date was shifted again, to Nov. 11. "The Air Force told us it's firm," an administration official, who demanded anonymity, said Tuesday. A key congressional aide, who also spoke on condition he not be named, confirmed the change.

The 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty was never ratified by the Senate. Although Reagan campaigned against it, he pledged as president to observe its terms — until last May.

Accusing the Soviets of violating the treaty, Reagan at the same time said the United States would retire two Poseidon nuclear submarines in order to stay below a ceiling of 1,200 on missiles with multiple warheads. But he said the combined limit on such missiles and cruise-bearing bombers would be breached unless the Soviets changed their behavior.

A senior U.S. official, who briefed reporters Tuesday under rules cloaking him with anonymity, said nothing has happened to date to change Reagan's assessment of Soviet actions.

Sens. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, and Ernest B. Hollings, D-S.C., urged Reagan in a letter last Friday to crack the SALT II barrier. "Delay would be completely contrary to your May decision to abandon SALT II by mid November as a proportionate response to the Soviet SALT violations," they said.

Otherwise, the senators said, Reagan would give the appearance of "condoning" Soviet actions.

The defense authorization bill now before Congress calls on Reagan to observe the treaty, which imposed limits on various categories of U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, missiles and submarines.

EPA bans herbicide due to danger to farmworkers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency says it is imposing an immediate ban on dinoseb, a widely used herbicide, because of the danger of birth defects and sterility it poses to farmworkers.

Normally, the agency proposes a pesticide ban and orders hearings, but this time, EPA said the risk was too great. It estimated that 25,400 farm workers, 1,300 of them females, could be exposed during the several months that hearings would require.

In the course of a year, about 45,000 workers will normally be exposed to 7 million to 11 million pounds of dinoseb.

EPA said there was no hazard from eating food treated with the chemical. "The dangerous routes of exposure are inhalation and skin absorbtion by people who apply the pesticide," agency Administrator Lee M. Thomas said in a statement Tuesday.

Phone bills under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration wants to see if it can lower telephone bills by finding a cheaper way for government to regulate phone company profits.

Small telephone companies say it often costs them $4 per subscriber every time they have to justify their rates to the regulators, said Alfred C. Sikes, the assistant secretary of commerce for communications and information.

Larger companies, able to spread the costs over a larger number of customers, would have lower per-customer costs.

The current way of setting phone rates is called "rate of return regulation." It allows companies to set prices to cover all expenses plus earn a predetermined profit level on their investment.

"We want to determine if there is an alternative system which provides equal or better ratepayer protection against excessive prices with less cost to society," Sikes told the U.S. Telephone Association meeting in Seattle. A copy of his remarks was released in Washington, D.C.

Rose made national flower

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan made the rose the national flower before an audience that included a rose queen, a senator and his wife and the chairman of the House subcommittee on census and population.

With a flourish of the presidential pen on legislation passed last year by the House and a few weeks ago by the Senate, the rose became a symbol of the United States along with the bald eagle, the Star-Spangled Banner and the national motto that begins, "In God We Trust."

Those, too, among other symbols, have been officially designated over the years by Congress.

Men starve over Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four men who are fasting on the steps of the U.S. Capitol against American aid for the Nicaraguan Contras have rejected an appeal from lawmakers to end their fast. The leader, Charles Liteky, said they preferred death to American involvement in a Central American war.

"It's bodies we are destroying down there, and we have got to stop it with our bodies," he said Tuesday.

Liteky, 55, who is in the 37th day of his fast, received the Medal of Honor for heroism during the Vietnam war as a Roman Catholic chaplain. He renounced his medal in July to protest the American role in Nicaragua.

About a dozen senators and House members appeared with Liteky and the other fasters at a news conference at which the lawmakers voiced sympathy and argued that the United States was starting down the path toward a Vietnam-type conflict in which Americans will die for a questionable cause.

Government workers up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of government employees increased by more than a quarter-million last year with the federal government showing the largest gain, the Census Bureau reported.

Employment by federal, state and local governments grew by 254,000, to a total of 16,690,000 as of last October, the Bureau said Tuesday in its annual study of public employment.

That total was about 1.5 percent more than in October of 1984.

Included in the total were 4,416,000 school district employees; 3,984,000 state government workers; 3,021,000 federal civilian employees; 2,467,000 municipal workers; 1,891,000 county employees; 519,000 employees of special districts, and 392,000 town workers.

Senate meets secretly to decide fate of imprisoned federal judge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate meets secretly today to debate whether Harry E. Claiborne, imprisoned for tax evasion but vowing to "fight until my good name is cleared," should become the fifth federal judge in history to be impeached and removed from office.

The first order of business was to decide whether to grant a defense motion to delay completion of the first impeachment trial in a half-century until after the Nov. 4 elections — possibly until next year.

It was unclear when the Senate might cast its historic vote on Claiborne's fate. Under the Constitution, a two-thirds majority of the 100-member Senate is required for conviction at an impeachment trial.

In an impassioned speech in his own defense, Claiborne stood in the glare of television lights in the well of the crowded Senate chamber late Tuesday and declared, "I kind of feel like a piece of meat that is thrown out to a couple of dogs." But he refused again to resign.

"I could not walk away because I have not violated a single law of the United States," he said in a hoarse but ringing voice. "I have not defrauded the government. I have not been corrupt in my office."

Claiborne, who is still collecting his $78,700 salary while serving a two-year sentence in a federal prison camp in Alabama, said he had been urged to "resign and do my time and get back to my people and start to pick up the pieces of my shattered life, but I could not do it."

To resign would leave the impression he was guilty of something he didn't do, he said. "So I chose to fight. ...If I lose here, I'll continue to fight until my good name is cleared.

"The only legacy I'll be able to leave is a legacy of courage, because I have been stripped of everything else."

During daylong final arguments, Claiborne was vilified by House prosecutors as a convicted tax cheat who "has drawn scorn on himself and the federal judiciary he represents" and "does not deserve to be a federal judge."

He was defended by his lawyer, Oscar B. Goodman of Las Vegas, Nev., as a hard-working, outspoken judge who was framed by vengeful government agents who targeted him for prosecution, and victimized by sloppy accountants who bungled his income tax returns.

Claiborne, 69, the chief U.S. district judge for Nevada, was nominated by President Carter in 1978. He was convicted in August 1984 on two counts of failing to report $106,651 in legal fees as income on his 1979 and 1980 tax returns. He has exhausted all avenues of legal appeals, including the Supreme Court.

Sen. Gary Hart moves toward 'likely bid' for '88 Democratic nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart, closing down a 12-year Senate career, is moving toward a likely bid for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination with a nationwide, state-a-day campaign blitz on behalf of other candidates.

But he is being delayed at the starting gate by the failure of Congress to keep its scheduled adjournment date.

Hart, generally perceived as the early Democratic front-runner for 1988, had planned to campaign for more than 30 Democratic candidates in 15 states on a non-stop basis through the Nov. 4 election.

He is trimming back that agenda, but plans to hit the road immediately after adjournment.

The burst of partisan activity comes near the close of a year that began with the Coloradan saying he would not seek a third Senate term — a decision that left him free to concentrate on presidential politics.

Now, after leading in most opinion polls all year, his staff says he is near a formal announcement of his candidacy.

"People are beginning to announce now," said Kevin Sweeney, Hart's spokesman. "Hart will have to announce shortly after the first of the year."

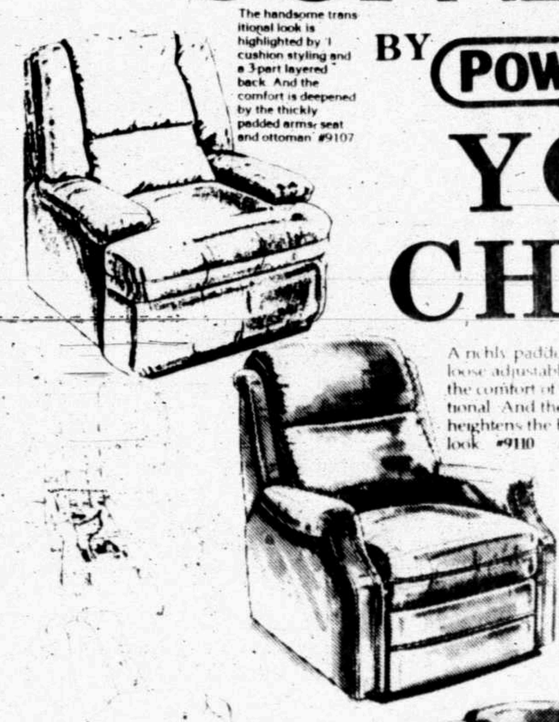

In an interview earlier this year, Hart said the Democrats' 1988 nominee "will be someone who can unite traditionalists with futurists."

"The nominee will be the one who can bridge the different groups," he said. "I'm not threatened or frightened by anyone."

Soviets hope 'Cold War ice' melts

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party daily Pravda today expressed hope that the superpower meeting in Iceland will thaw the "Cold War ice" in U.S.-Soviet relations, and underscored Moscow's desire that the session focus mainly on arms control.

The article, written by Pravda chief editor Viktor Afanasyev, was mostly optimistic about prospects for the two days of talks between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in the Icelandic capital of Reykjavik.

But Afanasyev also criticized Washington for continuing space weapons research and nuclear testing, and its professed willingness to abandon limits set by arms control treaties like SALT-I and SALT-II unless alleged Soviet cheating ends.

"Mankind hopes that Cold War ice will start melting away in cold Reykjavik and that the U.S.S.R.-U.S. relationship and international relations will become warmer," the article said.

But, it said, while the hopes fixed on the Saturday and Sunday meeting in Iceland are great, "the concerns, worries and apprehensions are perhaps just as great."

"The White House does not intend to abandon its 'Star Wars' program and embarks on a policy of undercutting the SALT-I and SALT-II and (Anti-Ballistic Missile) treaties, without going (on) to terminate nuclear testing," Afanasyev said.

The article was similar in tone to a Pravda commentary last week hailing the summit as a sign of hope for "a drastic change for the better" in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Pope senses Catholic revival on France trip

ROME (AP) — From outdoor altar to lonely monastery in the manicured French countryside, Pope John Paul II drove home what he described as the pressing need to rebuild France's declining Roman Catholic Church.

But he returned home Tuesday night from his four-day French pilgrimage with a sense that a revival may not be far away for Catholicism in France.

"A new spiritual and apostolic vigorousness is possible for the church in France," John Paul concluded in remarks before departing from Lyon, the regional capital of southeastern France.

"The young people showed a beautiful confidence (in the church)," he said, referring to Sunday's rousing reception from French youth in a Lyon soccer stadium, which aides described as a particularly poignant moment for the 66-year-old pontiff.

In his meetings with French bishops, priests, nuns and other church figures, Jonh Paul repeatedly counseled strict adherence to the faith, saying doubt and "intellectual temptations" from outside the church could prove "ruinous."

But overall, he said those visits showed the French church's "sons and daughters have not forgotten their Christian history, their vocation, even surrounded by the fog of religious indifference, of doubt."

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro, speaking on the return flight from Lyon to Rome, noted that the pope had often expressed hopes for a French spiritual "springtime."

SAYING THE pope was pleased by his trip, Navarro added. "Now we're not sure whether it's spring or full summer."

French observers weren't sure whether the trip would reverse the steadily dwindling numbers of priests and seminarians, or ensure obedience from an often skeptical flock.

But most agreed that the hundreds of thousands of Frenchmen who turned out for the pontiff's Masses and other public appearances — despite fears of terrorist attacks — spoke eloquently for his continuing charisma and popularity.

The newspaper Le Monde cited polls showing French Catholics like John Paul but don't widely obey him on moral issues such as birth control and abortion.

Yet faith, the paper added in its Tuesday edition, was tough to measure by purely scientific means.

And, Le Monde said, "the crowds don't seem to have showed up just for affection's sake...and weren't dissuaded" by worries of terrorism after last month's wave of bombing attacks in Paris that killed 10 people and wounded 162.

Such fears sparked a massive security effort that employed 10,000 policemen in the Lyon area and 30 personal bodyguards for the pope, the latter identifiable by their blue Pierre Cardin suits.

POLICE sharpshooters set up nests on tiled roofs, while rows of gendarmes lined routes where members of the papal entourage were to pass by, peering out from cornfields and cow pastures.

At his airport speech before leaving, the pope thanked French civil authorities for discreetly and smoothly fulfilling the "burdensome" task of protecting him, and prayed the country would successfully defeat terrorism.

"I hope first of all that France will know the peace to which it has a right, sheltered from the troubles of an international terrorism that must be disapproved by all of humanity," John Paul said.

The pontiff launched his French sojourn Saturday with a dramatic flourish, announcing he would seek a one-day truce among the world's warriors on Oct. 27. It is to coincide with an interfaith day of prayer for peace in Assisi, Italy on the same day.

Navarro said John Paul had "carefully avoided" publicly mentioning the truce effort because he did not want to detract from the chiefly pastoral nature of his visit to France, where the pope feels a special sense of mission because of the country's solidly Catholic tradition.

"But it (the truce) is very much on his mind," Navarro said.

Behind-the-scenes efforts currently are under way to deliver personal messages from the pope to world leaders ranging from prime ministers to guerrilla chiefs, inviting them to stop fighting for at least a day.

Rejudging Burr

Aaron Burr unquestionably was a schemer and an adventurer, but perhaps no more so than Alexander Hamilton, the man he fatally shot in that celebrated duel July 11, 1804 on the heights of Weehawken, N.J.

It is fitting, therefore, that the descendants of Aaron Burr should finally own up to their ancestry and express the hope that a new historical appraisal be made of the man who served as vice president of the United States under Thomas Jefferson. That is what 50 assorted cousins of varying degree did in early September at a melancholy ceremony in Princeton, N.J., commemorating the 150th anniversary of the death of their common ancestor.

Generations of American school children have been led to believe that Burr was a spiteful blackguard, who not only murdered the popular Hamilton, but later became involved in a plot to separate western United States from the republic. The latter charge was disproved, and in a subsequent trial for treason, Burr was completely exonerated.

Elementary school textbooks give Burr scant credit for his heroic Continental Army service in the Revolution. He was an excellent officer who shared in the agonies of the 1777-78 winter at Valley Forge and later distinguished himself as a field tactician and brigade commander with George Washington. As U.S. vice president, he proved to have a keen sense of perception while serving as presiding officer in the Senate where he formulated procedures that endure to this day.

Burr's greatest error may have been to fling down the gauntlet for the Hamilton confrontation. Had the challenge come from the other side, history might have judged the results differently. In any event, this complex and controversial personality is entitled to his day in the court of American opinion.

Another View:

Farm credit problems

The farm-credit system is in deep trouble. Almost everyone recognizes that sooner or later it will need a bailout. The politicians, for all the usual reasons, would rather it be later.

The rescue bill that was hastily passed when the system's difficulties were disclosed last year required that the administrators first shift around the assets of member banks, using the stronger to shore up the weaker. Only then would the government step in.

In the meantime the banks would have to modernize the easy lending and accounting practices that, along with the slide in farm income and land values, helped produce the present problem.

It now turns out the administrators may not be able to shift assets among member banks as easily as the bill supposed.

In theory this power has always existed, but it has been rarely, if ever, invoked. Prospering farmers and banks in one region are not accustomed to thinking of themselves as the guarantors of the debt of less fortunate brethren somewhere else.

They say the pooling policy is neither sensible — they could be dragged down in turn — nor fair.

In several parts of the country lawsuits have been filed and restraining orders granted. The administrators have halted further use of the device until the matter can be cleared up. Congress has meanwhile been asked to rush through an alternative.

Critics note wryly that the request comes just as Congress is preparing to adjourn, which conveniently compounds the air of urgency. There are only a few days left to act, then Congress may be gone until next year, which could be too late.

But a large infusion of cash continues to be out of the question. The administration remains opposed on both philosophical and fiscal grounds, while many in Congress think too much is being spent on farmers already. And the money isn't there anyway, given the size of the deficit.

So the bill would resort essentially to accounting tricks. The system would be permitted to refinance and stretch out its debt to the money markets. Member banks would also be allowed 20 years to write off bad loans, instead of having to make provision for them all as they went sour.

But these steps would improve the system's condition much more on paper than in fact. Though the system of accountancy would no longer acknowledge it, the member banks with too many non-performing loans would still lack the resources to meet their obligations — "sick chickens," a congressional aide called them the other day.

The bill will pass anyway. It buys time, though not much else. The government's farm-support costs are already extraordinarily high. They will go higher when the losses of the credit system are recognized and factored in. But that will be next year's problem.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Oct. 8, the 281st day of 1986. There are 84 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 8, 1871, the Great Chicago Fire began in Mrs. O'Leary's barn. However, the popular story that a cow had kicked over a lantern is untrue. By the time it was over, the fire had claimed more than 200 lives and burned more than 2,100 acres.

On this date:

In 1869, the 14th President of the United States, Franklin Pierce, died at the age of 64, 12 years after leaving the White House.

In 1918, Sgt. Alvin C. York almost single-handedly killed 25 German soldiers and captured 132 in the Argonne Forest in France.

In 1934, Bruno Hauptmann was indicted for murder in the death of the infant son of Charles A. Lindbergh.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman announced that the secret of the atomic bomb would be shared only with Britain and Canada.

Pentagon may control computer files

WASHINGTON — Civil libertarians are already worried about military encroachment on civilian law enforcement in the "war" on dope traffickers. But little concern has been shown over a White House directive that would give the Pentagon control over the confidential files that government agencies have on millions of Americans.

Jack Anderson

This revolutionary intrusion of the military into traditionally civilian areas was sanctioned by a White House national security decision directive, NSDD 145, issued two years ago. It recently survived an attempt by House critics to modify its most offensive Big Brother features.

NSDD 145 was a Reagan administration response to the lack of security for government and industry communications, which were vulnerable to penetration by the Soviets or anyone else with reasonably sophisticated interception equipment. Vast amounts of information, from Internal Revenue Service records to business secrets, are stored in computers that can be "accessed" by foreign agents, industrial spies or snoopy hackers.

The directive authorized a government-wide system for computer system security. But it put the National Security Agency — which reports to the Pentagon — in charge of security for all government computer systems, and many private industry systems as well.

"Under National Security Decision Directive 145, the Department of Defense could control the access to not only classified information, but also to any information which it considered sensitive," said Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee. "In my view, this is an unprecedented and ill-advised expansion of the military's influence into our society."

One thing that worries critics of the directive is that the NSA is a super-secret agency that is subject to neither public nor congressional scrutiny. Another is the agency's track record. Until then-Attorney General Elliot Richardson put a stop to it in 1973, the NSA collected data on thousands of Americans, which it proceeded to pass on to other agencies, including the FBI. NSDD 145 reverses the information flow, conceivably giving the NSA access to the computer files of the Social Security Administration, the Veterans Administration, the Internal Revenue Service and every other civilian agency.

NSA access would be guaranteed, its critics say, by giving the agency authority to approve, disapprove and monitor the other agencies' computer security systems. This function has been handled by the National Bureau of Standards, a small civilian agency whose chief concern is uniformity of industrial measurements, not security.

Legislation sponsored by Brooks and Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., would have mandated civilian control of computer security under the Bureau of Standards, rather than military control under the NSA. It failed to pass after strenuous lobbying by the administration, including Assistant Defense Secretary Donald Latham, to whom the NSA reports. The bill could be reintroduced next year.

One of the NSA's first moves under NSDD 145 was to pressure industry into adopting a new data encryption standard — an expensive change that industry experts say is not necessary. Some critics suspect the NSA's intention is to enforce a new, universal encryption standard that would be too tough for most computer snoopers — but not for the NSA. Government officials deny this.

COLD COMFORT: After five years of computation and cogitation, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has finally come up with an acceptable "goal" for fatalities in nuclear power plant accidents. The death risk to neighbors of nuclear plants should not exceed "one-tenth of 1 percent of the sum of prompt fatality risks resulting from other accidents to which members of the U.S. population are exposed," the NRC concluded. An NRC source explained that this boils down to about 100 early fatalities, while a similar formula arrives at about 450 cancer deaths resulting from the accident.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: The Reagan administration wants to help the Afghan guerrillas fighting Soviet troops — but it's having a hard time figuring out which guerrilla groups are the right ones. The backbiting and infighting among rival Afghan groups in Washington, all looking for money and weapons, have hurt the common cause they all claim to support: ouster of the Soviets. The State Department and the CIA would dearly love to see a unified resistance movement, but it doesn't seem to be in the cards.

FAINTHEARTED FIDEL? Cuban dictator Fidel Castro has slowed down visibly over the last three years, and Dr. Peter Bourne thinks he knows why. Castro suffered a heart attack that has been kept secret. Bourne, a former Carter administration official, has recently published a biography titled "Fidel," and he says the evidence since then is even more persuasive. "Not only has he continued to follow the sort of strict medical regimen any doctor would recommend to a heart attack victim," Bourne told us, "but he has also aged dramatically in the last two years." Bourne said Cuban officials he showed his book to did not deny his theory.

MINI-EDITORIAL: How nice for some Republican fat cats that they can use the American Embassy in Switzerland as a convenient hotel, three-star restaurant and guided tour service simply by contributing a few tax-deductible bucks to the embassy's "representational fund." The fund is supposed to be used to help entertain foreign dignitaries, but Ambassador Faith Ryan Whittlesey seems willing to stretch a point when it involves Republican contributors. This reminds us of former Interior Secretary James Watt's use of an Arlington Cemetery mansion for private parties. He eventually paid up; so should the embassy freeloaders.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Fray should help uncover, correct mistakes

WASHINGTON — The CIA, feeling mischievous this summer, provided the State Department with conversations it overheard when Sen. Jesse Helms visited Chilean President Pinochet.

William Safire

Officials at State, smacking their lips at the chance of embarrassing its most annoying critic, interpreted something Helms said as a breach of confidence and complained to the new chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., has pleased CIA and State by keeping intelligence-savvy aides of hard-line senators off the staff of his intelligence committee. He obliged State and CIA by asking the Justice Department to investigate Helms.

They all backed into a buzz saw. Jesse Helms promptly exposed and denounced the probe, which has fizzled. Recently, William Casey of the CIA discovered the quiet power of the Senate Republicans' "4-H Club" — Helms, Hatch, Humphrey and Hecht — which other senators know will be growing in influence long after Casey, Shultz, Weinberger & Co. are gone.

What caused Casey to express extended ire to Helms was the addition of information-prying amendments to the annual secret CIA bill. As Stephen Engelberg of The New York Times revealed, the senator had the temerity to ask for a new "Team B" — a group of outside experts to evaluate intelligence, as done a decade ago, to the nation's benefit — which Bill Casey evidently sees as a throwback to the days of agency weakness.

In this opening sally, Helms did not get a Team B to pose a fresh challenge to what he considers the CIA's inclination to minimize the Soviet threat. He did, however, legislate a secret question that is driving some spooks up the wall; further, the Helms pressure caused the publication of a list of questions that puts the agency on notice that company blunders, if not family jewels, are still subject to examination.

The Senate is demanding to know everything the CIA has found out about the beheading in February of Hugo Spodafora, a critic of the Panamanian leader, Gen. Manuel Noriega. If the CIA has information about the repressive activities of "the F-8 paramilitary force" of our Panamanian ally; its publication might stimulate human rights protests. The same types who pass around the intelligence on Pinochet are now required to cough up the reports on Noriega.

The other calling card left by Jesse that is causing apoplexy at Langley is the list of 32 "intelligence problems" published in the Congressional Record of Sept. 24. Like Poe's purloined letter, this eye-opening compilation has been ignored by the media because it is out in the open, but spooks unaware of the range of senatorial staff sources are calling it "The Revenge of Mike the Pill."

The list calls for "competitive analysis" (not a Team B, but the inclusion of in-house dissents on key judgments in footnotes) of everything from "the role of Soviet bloc intelligence services in the international drug trade" to "the extent of Soviet Active Measures, disinformation and forgeries inside the United States."

Many items on the list are boilerplate queries ("The reasons for the continuing underestimation by CIA of Soviet strategic forces") or retaliatory needles ("The possibility that the CIA and the State Department have been penetrated by the KGB.").

But then comes Item No. 32, and the gulping can be heard across the Potomac: "Reasons for reported CIA long-term underestimation of Soviet submarine capabilities."

All I know about subs is what I read in "The Hunt for Red October," but this item suggests that one member of our National Foreign Intelligence Board — presumably Naval Intelligence — was caught napping on a development profoundly affecting our security. One deduces that we now know that Soviet subs can do what we thought they would not be able to do for many years, and that our expectation of early warning was misplaced. (Wasn't the Walker spy ring involved in the sale of submarine-detection secrets?)

Most of us don't want to know all the details of this lapse, or of its effect on the vulnerability of our Trident retaliation. But it is urgent that the proper oversight crowd in the Congress, outside the defense establishment, be forced to learn everything about it.

That's why the seemingly petty crossfire between the 4-H Club and the folks across the river is so significant. When proud power centers get piqued at each other's prerogatives, national defense secrets get a hard new look, and terrible mistakes can be recognized and corrected.

ART BUCHWALD

Oh my trenchcoat! It's a blinking spy swap

The most important question to be answered about the Daniloff affair is: which side blinked first?

This was what the press asked President Reagan when he announced that the reporter was being released by the Soviets.

Art Buchwald

The President replied with a stiff upper lip. "They blinked.... We didn't give in."

I believe President Reagan. What is distressing is that the President's right-wing supporters do not. They have been trumpeting charges that the United States caved in and gave Moscow a victory.

The question of who blinks first has become more important than arms control as far as the superpowers are concerned. Some people even say that the survival of the human race hangs on it.

Even amongst the country's foremost blinking experts there is disagreement about the eye movement of the leading players.

The White House Blinkmanship expert told me, "Daniloff was not swapped for Zakharov. There is no link between the two men. The Soviets gave up Daniloff because they knew they were wrong, and we gave up Zakharov because he was getting to be a pain in the ear."

I pursued this. "The President says he didn't blink. Is it possible Secretary of State George Shultz blinked in his place?"

"George Shultz doesn't blink without Reagan's approval."

"I've seen him blink on television coming out of negotiations with the Soviet foreign minister."

"He was blinking because of the TV lights — not because of his meeting with Shevardnadze. The reason why people think that Shultz blinks is because he always looks as if he's dozing off at his own press briefings."

"Nevertheless, the right wing says because the United States blinked, the Soviets no longer believe we'll use the bomb."

"Well, the right wing is wrong."

I decided to find out how the Daniloff release was playing in Moscow. I called the Kremlin collect.

"I understand you people blinked in order to get your spy back," I said.

"U.S.S.R. never blinks," the Red expert said. "Is U.S.A. that blinked. We could have held Daniloff for 30 years."

"Yes," I said, "and we could have held Zakharov just as long."

"Who cares? Do you think we would blink with the U.S. over inept Soviet spy?"

"When the deal was made by the Kremlin big shots, were you in the room?"

"Yes, I was there."

"And can you swear to me on your honor as a Communist government flunky that Gorbachev did not blink?"

"He did not blink. He scratched his head, but he did not blink."

The line was cut off. The last call I made was to Professor Walter Lowen who holds the chair of Regis Blinkmanship at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

"Professor, you've been studying the swap. Who do you think blinked first?"

"I'm looking at the films now," he said. "They blinked at exactly the same time."

"Why would they do that?"

"So they could both get a free trip to Iceland."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Woman testifies against ex-lover in bombing case

LONDON (AP) — A Jordanian accused of planting a bomb in his girlfriend's luggage that would have killed her, their unborn child and 375 passengers on an Israeli jet sat impassively as his former lover broke down in court.

"I could kill you! I hate you, I hate you! You bastard you!" Anne-Marie Murphy shouted at Nezar Hindawi as he sat in the dock at the Old Bailey criminal court Tuesday.

Hindawi, 32, is charged with attempting to smuggle a bomb on board an El Al jetliner by planting three pounds of high explosives in Miss Murphy's hand luggage before she boarded the Tel Aviv-bound flight at Heathrow Airport on April 17.

He has pleaded innocent.

The 32-year-old Irishwoman, who until her outburst had not once looked at Hindawi, said she believed she was flying to Israel to marry the defendant there. She recently gave birth to a daughter.

Vietnam postpones talks

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam temporarily postponed this week's round of regularly scheduled talks on accounting for Americans missing in the Vietnam war, but gave no explanation, a U.S. official said today.

A four-member team of U.S. military specialists had been scheduled to fly to Hanoi today for three days of talks with Vietnamese officials aimed at resolving the fates of nearly 1,800 Americans listed as missing in action in Vietnam.

Col. Joe Harvey, commander of the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center and the U.S. team leader, said his delegation was told by the Vietnamese Embassy in Bangkok Tuesday that the talks were off.

The casualty center, based in Honolulu, Hawaii, is entrusted with resolving the MIA issue.

"We were offered no reasons or explanations. We were told it was a temporary postponement," Harvey said. "There have been other temporary postponements."

Sudan won't repay debt

UNITED NATIONS (NYT) — The prime minister of the Sudan announced Tuesday that his country would not pay back all of its $10 billion foreign debt.

In a speech to the General Assembly, the Prime Minister, Sadiq al-Mahdi, said of the debt that the first step was "to distinguish between that which is legitimate and that which is not legitimate."

"However," he said, "we will not be in a position to deal with all our external debts according to the customary commercial basis."

Mahdi said his country, the largest on the African continent, would allocate part of its export earnings to pay part of its foreign debt.

"We will pay what we can in a manner that does not disturb the norms of life of our people while bearing in mind the need to provide them with the necessities of keeping up with the requested level of development," he said.

Mahdi came to power after elections last April with the support of such big donors as the United States and Saudi Arabia.

Rebels linked to killings

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The government news agency today reported that Communist rebels had killed 600 suspected government agents in an "unprecedented bloody purge" on northern Mindanao island.

The Philippine News Agency quoted Brig. Gen. Mariano P. Adalem, regional commander for northern Mindanao, as making the disclosure during a meeting of area military commanders Tuesday.

South Africa detaining 22,400, group claims

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The number of people detained without charge since the government imposed a state of emergency jumped from 2,400 to 22,400, and most are anti-apartheid activists, a watchdog group said.

The Detainees' Parents' Support Committee, in a report issued Tuesday, said the number detained so far this year is more than twice the number of people detained in 1985.

The government has declined to regularly release totals of those held either under the June 12 emergency declaration or standing security laws.

Meanwhile, Defense Minister Magnus Malan warned neighboring Marxist Mozambique of possible reprisals if there were further incidents like a Monday land-mine blast near the border that wounded six South African soldiers.

Malan said that following last week's enactment of U.S. sanctions against South Africa, the country "can no longer afford to be caught in a pincer between two superpowers — namely economic war from the United States and a revolutionary war from the side of Soviet Union."

South Africa has blamed the African National Congress black guerrilla organization for a series of land-mine blasts since November in border areas near Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Botswana.

The ANC says it operates from within South Africa, not from neighboring countries.

Under a 1984 pact, Mozambique promised South Africa not to harbor ANC guerrillas.

Mozambique has repeatedly accused South Africa of violating the pact by continuing to support anti-Marxist rebels who have caused havoc in the Mozambique countryside.

The detainees' support committee, a private group formed in 1981 by parents of detainees, has in the past proved accurate in its estimates on the number of people held. Figures are compiled by branches around the country and from government statistics where available.

The group said an estimated 20,000 people have been detained since the emergency declaration in June. A month ago, it had placed the figure at 16,000.

Another 2,400 people were previously detained this year under various provisions of the Internal Security Act, some allowing short-term detention and others indefinite detention without trial, it said.

Of the 2,400, said the report, 181 were still in custody as of Sept. 30. It did not say how many of those detained under the state of emergency were still in custody.

The report said most of those detained were anti-apartheid activists.

The Detainees' Parents' Support Committee said that in 1985 more than 7,000 people were held under a previous state of emergency, and nearly 4,000 others under the Internal Security Act.

In August, the government said about 9,800 people had been taken into custody under the emergency powers but did not say how many were still in custody. No official figures have been released since then.

Angels take 1-0 lead in ALCS playoffs

Let Clemens have Cy Young, Angels want World Series

By DAVE O'HARA

BOSTON — As a former catcher, outfielder Brian Downing of the California Angels knows pitching — and he's already conceded the Cy Young Award to Boston's Roger Clemens.

But that was all Downing conceded Tuesday night, as he and right-hander Mike Witt led the Angels to an 8-1 victory over Clemens and the Red Sox in the opener of the best-of-seven playoff for the American League pennant.

"It is nice to get the first one out of the way and get some runs early off the Cy Young pitcher," Downing said after California rode a four-run second inning to an easy victory.

"I think a lot of the fans think that he (Clemens) is invincible and normally he is," said Downing, who capped the second-inning outburst with a two-run single and then drove in two more runs with a single off reliever Bob Stanley in the eighth. "But we get a lot of timely walks and two-out hits."

Clemens was charged with all eight runs, seven of them earned, on 10 hits in 7⅓ innings. Clemens had not given up more than six runs in any start this season.

WITT, AN 18-game winner but beaten twice in little Fenway Park during the regular season, said the decisive second inning settled him down. He flirted with a no-hitter until Wade Boggs beat out an infield chopper with two out in the sixth and finished with a five-hitter.

"I was very excited, like I never was before," Witt said. "I was ready to pitch yesterday. This was the first time in a game that I was a headline pitcher. The four-run lead did calm me down and I got into a groove. They hit a lot of balls hard, though. I didn't skate through the game."

Witt, who walked Boggs leading off the first inning, then retired 16 straight batters before Spike Owen walked with two outs in the sixth and Boggs singled. Marty Barrett followed with a single for Boston's only run.

"I'm human, I gave my best effort," said Clemens, who refused to use a sore elbow bruised when hit by a line drive a week ago as an excuse.

Clemens, who led the major leagues with 24 victories, including three without a loss against California, said he didn't "feel my control was that far off."

After striking out the first two batters in the second, though, he walked Bob Boone and Gary Pettis, the No. 8 and 9 batters in the California lineup.

Then he was tagged for a run-scoring single by Ruppert Jones, an RBI double by Wally Joyner and Downing's two-run line single to left.

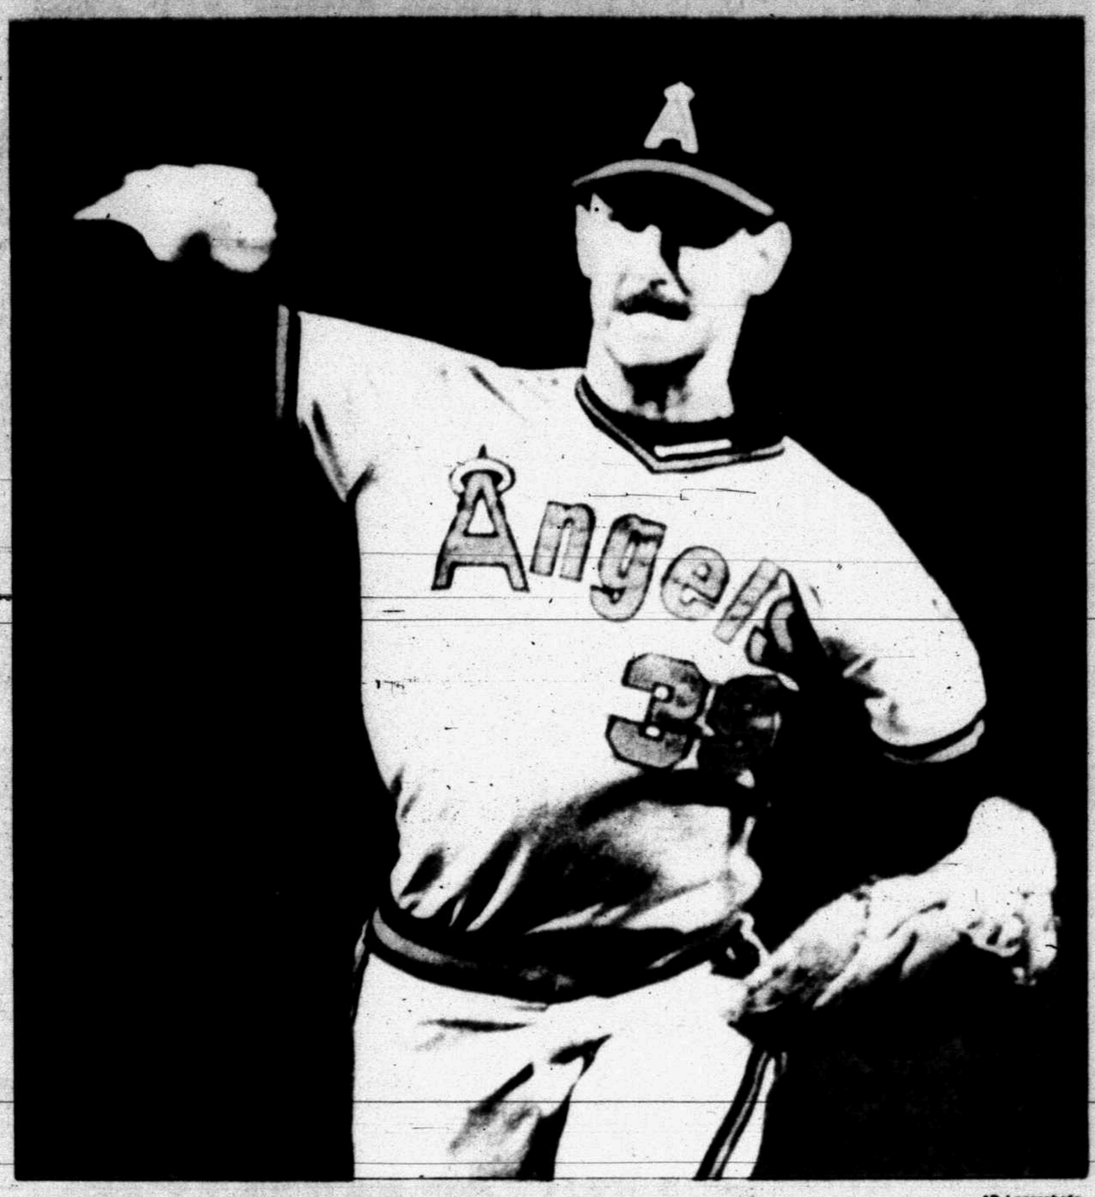

"I had a pretty live fastball (including 46 clocked at 95 mph or better in the first two innings), but I got behind and I had to come in with pitches," Clemens said.

"I felt strong," he added. "I made some good pitches. I had good stuff, but they hit it where we weren't.

"You can't walk people. You can't walk guys at the bottom of the lineup. It's frustrating to put men on base like that. Walks will always kill you."

Asked if he may have been "squeezed" by plate umpire Larry Barnett calling some close pitches balls rather than strikes, Clemens said:

Mets' Gooden knows how to beat Astros

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Dwight Gooden made his major-league debut in the Astrodome and that victory started the New York right-hander's domination of the Houston Astros.

Gooden, the 1985 Cy Young Award winner, has won eight of nine decision against the Astros and he will try to extend his domination tonight when the Mets face Houston's Mike Scott in the first game of the best-of-seven National League playoffs.

"The thing I remember about that game is my first strikeout of Dickie Thon and getting the win," Gooden said of his debut on April 7, 1984.

Gooden, 17-6, has been one of the most dominating pitchers in baseball over the last three years and the Mets think he will provide the difference in the opening game.

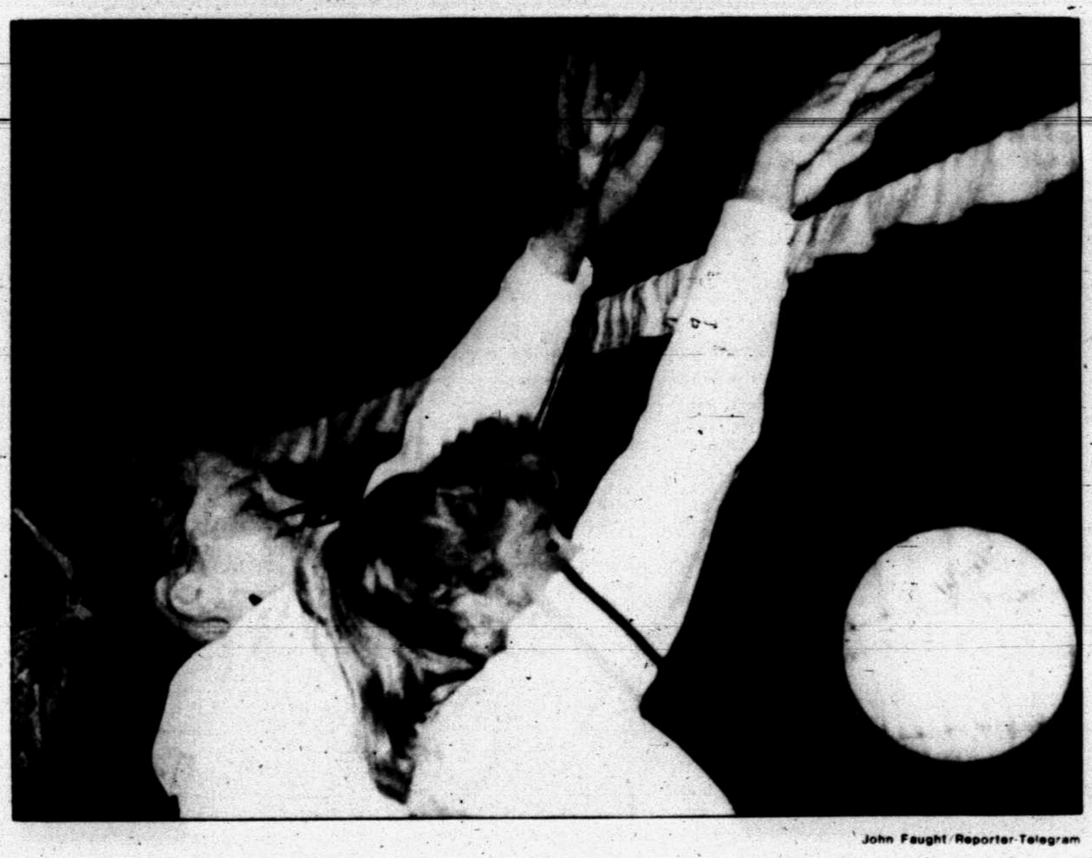

"I think we have the edge there," Mets Manager Dave Johnson said of the Gooden-Scott confrontation. "This year he came off the Cy Young Award and signed a big contract.

"I think because of that, he came out and tried to do too much. It's remarkable that he overcame that and stayed within himself."

Gooden struck out 200 batters for the third straight year, was second in the NL with 12 complete games and fourth in earned run average at 2.84.

"The Cy Young last year was a nice individual award but the playoffs are better because it brings together what we've accomplished as a team all season," Gooden said.

Lady Rebs 'tired of losing'

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's Daphne Rhoads had a simple explanation for the Rebels' 15-4, 16-14 District 4-5A volleyball victory over Abilene High Tuesday night at the MHS gym.

"Basically, we're tired of losing," commented Rhoads.

She added, "Really, we were confident going into the game after Monday's practice. We usually have a bad practice on Monday, but we had a good one this week. I wasn't at practice, but I heard about it.

Rhoads didn't play like she wasn't at practice. She had two key spikes down the stretch to lead the way to a straight set victory.

Trailing 14-10 in the deciding set, Lee got six straight points off the serve of Dana Jones while Rhoads had two blistering spikes and Susie Dunn added a key dink that had AHS defenders falling all over themselves.

Lee won the first set on only three change-of serves. Pam Hutson served for 10 straight points while the Rebels rolled to a 10-0 lead while looking like a Mac truck running down a dead chicken on I-20. Rhoads then served five straight points for the 15-4 decision.

"I've never in my life served 10 straight points," noted Hutson. "But coach (Janice) Baulch helped a lot. She told us that if we missed a serve, we were going to run six sets of lines. That was motivation for me. Still we were ready to play. We had a hard practice, Monday."

Lee jumped to a 3-0 lead in the second set before Abilene's Susan Morgan and Didi Doss began to take control of the game. AHS took a 6-3 lead and eventually built that to a 14-10 margin before Lee took on the look of that Mac again.

Michelle Lant and Michelle Lance both had a good spiking game while Kristi Shelton was strong in the backcourt and Jones did an excellent setting job.

"We played very well in the first set and thought it was going to be easier than it was. We came back and played well late in the second set," said coach Baulch.

THE REBELS climbed to 3-3 in 4-5A play with the win while AHS fell to 1-5 as the first half of the loop race ended.

The Bulldogs the Rebels will host Midland High to open the second half Saturday at the Lee gym. That game will follow the junior varsity outing, which begins at 2 p.m.

Will the Rebels be ready Saturday for the Bulldogs, a team that rolled to a 6-0 start in district play?

"We'll be ready," says Rhoads. "Our problems have been mental this year and not on the court. If we get our bodies to go with our minds, we'll be OK."

Baulch said: "We've worked ourselves into a one game at a time situation and we haven't thought about Midland High. Certainly Midland High has everything going for them right now, but it will still depend on who plays in that game. I don't plan to do anything different than when we played them the first time."

Midland High defeated Abilene Cooper 15-2, 15-4 Tuesday in Abilene to finish the first half with a perfect 6-0 record, one game ahead of San Angelo, which defeated Odessa Permian in a 15-5, 6-15, 15-5 win.

"We were real concerned about playing them last night but we played really, really well and they never got anything going," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "We're real excited about finishing 6-0."

In junior varsity action Abilene High won a 16-14, 12-15, 15-4 win over Lee. For the MHS JV, it was a 15-2, 15-12 loss to Cooper.

'Rich' Rebs find 'Sterling' silver lining

Prior to last Friday's Midland Lee-Odessa High game, Lee offensive coordinator Van Tom Whatley sat in the Lee Fieldhouse wondering aloud, "I'd feel a lot better about this game if I knew how my junior was going to do."

Whatley's "junior" was backup quarterback Geoff Rich, who had been penciled in as the starter in place of senior Rodney Johnson, who is without a doubt one of the best quarterbacks in District 4-5A, but suffering from a badly bruised shoulder.

All "junior" did was pass for 150 yards and three touchdowns in his backup role in Lee's 40-14 win over the Bronchos. He also rushed for 51 yards, ran the option like he designed it and pushed his Rebels to scores three of the first four times they touched the ball. As icing, he punted four times for an average of 34.5 yards, his best night in that category.

Prior to Friday, Rich was a little known Rebel commodity. By Saturday morning, he was the toast of the town. If he had wanted Carroll Thomas' job of mayor, he could have had it.

Rich's claim to fame prior to Friday was that he was considered as an overall athlete. Lee head coach Earl Miller and Whatley knew they needed good backups at quarterback because backups have played major roles on Lee playoff teams the past three years. Remember, Johnson had to start three games for Lee a year ago when Texas Tech bound Tuey Rankin went down to injury.

Rich and Danny Elliott were called to fill that backup role this year for Johnson. Elliott went down to injury against Midland High with a dislocated elbow on one arm and a fractured wrist on the other. That left the call for Rich when Johnson was injured in the MHS game and Dudley Jordan was called up from the junior varsity to be still another backup against Odessa High.

Rich and Elliott were groomed for defensive roles. Lee coaches felt the two were too good just to play backup on offense. Rich is a backup linebacker and Elliott was a backup in the secondary. Coaches felt that would add to the Lee depth.

Johnson will return as the starter when the Lee coaches feel his shoulder is ready, but his injury probably has helped the coaches to relax a bit. It's nice to know you have people in the background that can come in and contribute in winning fashion.

And even with Rich's performance, he won't be the automatic starter next year. Both Jordan and Elliott will be back and all three have factors going for them that keep the Lee coaching staff looking at all three.

LEE TURNED rich with Rich, but found a "Sterling" sliver lining from halfback Dennis Sterling in the same game.

Sterling has often been referred to as the "other back." With halfbacks Joe Woodard and Durian Jenkins in front of him, Sterling's work has come in fill-in roles.

Some fill-in. Sterling now leads the team in rushing with 353 yards and pass receiving with 129 yards. Friday, Sterling had 164 yards rushing and 51 yards in receptions and two touchdowns.

Sterling is averaging 10.7 yards per carry and has scored six times this year.

Whatley explains, "We think of Dennis as a starter just like we think of Joe and Durian as starters on our team. If you look at it, they're all good backs. In fact, we don't run plays geared to an individual on our team. We run plays geared to the opponent's defense. So if Dennis is in there, that doesn't mean he's going to get the ball, but he got it a lot the other night.

"That's one thing that we've had to convince our kids about. We stress the team concept and I think all three have accepted that fact. As a result, we don't have any individuals with great statistics, but they all contribute in a tremendous way to our offensive scheme. The results are there to see."

Other teams could try that formula, but Rich and Sterling do prove that there is no substitute for productive depth in 4-5A.

1908 — The Chicago Cubs won the NL pennant over the New York Giants when Hooper cal Brown beat Christy Mathewson 4-2 in the playoff of the disputed game where Fred Merkle failed to touch second base.

How quick game can change!

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — The inning began innocently enough for Roger Clemens, very much like so many others had in the Boston right-hander's dominating 24-win season.

Calfornia's Rob Wilfong led off and waved futilely at a 95 mph third strike. He was clearly overmatched.

Dick Schofield was next and was blown away with more smoke, swinging and missing at a third strike. It was no contest.

Clemens was cooking, undisturbed by the crisp New England night air in this opening game of the American League playoffs. If there was any lingering soreness in his right elbow, frighteningly struck by a line drive in his last start of the regular season, you could never prove it by the way he handled Wilfong and Schofield in the second inning Tuesday night:

"I felt strong," Clemens said. "I made some good pitches, I had good stuff in the bullpen. I was doing the things I wanted to do. I had a pretty lively fastball."

Two out, nobody on. The bottom of the Angels batting order coming up. No problem.

Then, all at once, everything came apart for the big right-hander. In a matter of moments, he had given up two walks, three hits and four runs, putting the Red Sox in a hole from which they never could escape, and laying the groundwork for California's 8-1 opening-game victory.

The sequence was eloquent testimony about just how slender the margin is between success and failure in this fascinating game.

Clemens walked Bob Boone, the No. 8 hitter, on a 3-1 pitch and looked suitably disgusted over that development. Then he walked Gary Pettis, the No. 9 hitter, on a 3-2 pitch that was oh-so-close to being strike three.

Did he think home plate umpire Larry Barnett was squeezing the strike zone just a bit?

"No comment," Clemens said, "I've got to pitch again."

Well, then, did he think he had Pettis struck out on the pitch that was called ball four?

"Like I said, I thought I made some good pitches."

Having opened the door a crack, the Angels charged right through. Ruppert Jones singled for one run. Wally Joyner doubled for another and Brian Downing singled for two more.

By the time Clemens struck out Reggie Jackson to end the carnage, he had thrown 45 pitches in an inning that began with consecutive strikeouts, and was trailing 4-0.

It was only the second time all season that Clemens had given up four runs in a single inning. He had two-strike counts on Joyner and Downing before surrendering damaging hits to both of them. It was uncharacteristic to say the least.

"It happens," Clemens said. "I'm human."

Until now, folks weren't always so sure about that, not with the kind of season he's had. It started with the record 20 strikeout game against Seattle in April, continued with 14 straight victories, and was punctuated by three perfect innings and the MVP award at the All-Star Game. The achievements will fit nicely on the Cy Young plaque.

It all went so smoothly for him that it became almost automatic. Then Tuesday, he violated the first rule of pitching — walking batters who seemed to pose no threat — and that cost him.

"You can't walk people," he said. "Walks will always hurt you. You get behind and come in with good pitches and you get hurt."

During his magic season, Clemens had averaged just over two walks per game. This time, he matched that on consecutive batters, the last two hitters in the Angels' lineup. Both swinging with two out.

"It was frustrating," Clemens said. "Early on, I might have been jumping too much but I had a good fastball. It was running away from the hitters."

An inning later, Boone and Pettis hurt Clemens with consecutive singles that delivered an unearned run. Then, quite mysteriously, the Red Sox ace found the groove, retiring 14 of the next 15 hitters and looking again like baseball's best pitcher.

He worked into the eighth inning, and when he left the game after throwing 143 pitches and allowing season-highs of eight runs and 10 hits, it was to a standing ovation from the Fenway Park fans.

New Zealand rallies for Cup victory

FREMANTLE, Australia (AP) — Both Chris Dickson of New Zealand and Marc Pajot, skipper of French Kiss, agreed that big wind shifts played a key role in New Zealand's comeback victory today in the first round of the America's Cup challenger elimination series.

Dickson, the youngest skipper among the 13 America's Cup challengers, admitted he blew the start. Previously unbeaten French Kiss led by 59 seconds at the second mark, but New Zealand began to nibble away at the lead, gaining ground at every mark — including 21 seconds during the final downhill run.

New Zealand got away to windward while rounding the final mark, and a fierce tacking duel ensued, as New Zealand put a hard cover on the French boat and won by 40 seconds for its fourth straight victory, handing French Kiss its first loss after three wins.

Pajot said the wind shifts did not allow him to keep a tight cover on New Zealand and, as a result, it got away.

New Zealand will face America II, another undefeated boat, in Thursday's race.

McHargue picks good time for seventh ace

From Staff Reports

Midland's Paul McHargue recently recorded the seventh hole-in-one of his golf career and it came at a good time.

McHargue, who is 88 years old, aced the No. 7 hole at the Hollytree Country Club in Tyler during the Texas State Seniors golf tournament. The ace helped him win the Old Tigers flight.

McHargue, playing out of Midland Country Club, used a seven-iron to ace the 105-yard hole.

Former San Angelo player Greg Thomas was named SWC Offensive Player of the Week for his efforts in Arkansas' victory over TCU.

Former Bobcat receives SWC offensive honor

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — The University of Arkansas, trailing Texas Christian University 17-13 early in the third quarter, had third-and-nine on its own 5.

A year ago, with Greg Thomas at quarterback, it might have been time for the white flag. Saturday, Thomas faked into the line and spotted running back J.R. Brown headed up the right sideline. Thomas showed good touch and 34 yards later the Razorbacks were out of trouble.

"I'm standing there watching the play, Greg could not have put the ball in there any better," said Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield.

After an exchange of punts, Arkansas went 48 yards for the go-ahead touchdown. Appropriately, Thomas' 20-yard pass to James Shibest on second-and-12 got the drive going.

In the fourth quarter, Thomas ripped off scoring runs of 42 and 25 yards as the Razorbacks opened Southwest Conference play with a 34-17 victory. Despite 25 yards in losses, Thomas netted 88 yards on 17 carries. He also completed 14 of 20 for a career high 198 yards. For his performance, Thomas was named The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week in the Southwest Conference.

Reserve end Keith Rose, who plucked a fumble out of the air and returned it 45 yards for a touchdown that sparked Baylor to a 27-13 victory over Houston, was named the Defensive Player of the Week.

David Lee, who coaches the Arkansas quarterbacks and fullbacks, says the staff has much more confidence in Thomas' passing.

"He was so embarrassed after the Texas A&M game. That really hung with him through the winter."

In last year's 10-6 loss to A&M, Thomas completed one of seven passes and threw his only two interceptions of the season. The loss eliminated Arkansas from the Cotton Bowl chase.

"During the summer, he sweated six days a week throwing on the turf with some of the guys," Lee said.

SMU starting to feel impact from sanctions

IRVING (AP) — The way Coach Bobby Collins sees it, the NCAA sanctions that swept away all of Southern Methodist's new football scholarships this fall have made their first impact on the Mustangs.

"The most disappointing thing is the special teams," Collins said after the Mustangs held on for a 31-29 win Saturday night against Boston College.

Collins said that the missing 25 scholarships have cut down the number of potential specialists on the kickoff and punting teams.

"Most schools have 95 scholarship players," he said. "We have 70."

The no-scholarships penalty is part of some of the toughest NCAA sanctions ever handed down for recruiting violations. The Mustangs also are barred this season from live telecasts, bowl games and from competing for the Southwest Conference championship.

An 85-yard punt return for a touchdown by the Eagles' Kelvin Martin, followed by Martin's reception of a two-point conversion pass nearly swiped the win from the Mustangs. Ahead 31-14 in the fourth quarter, Martin started the comeback by catching a 32-yard scoring pass.

But SMU engineered a drive that ran out the clock.

"You can't make it much closer than this," Collins said. "We have them down, but let it slip away with the punt return. I was really proud of the way the offense never gave them the ball."

Boston College Coach Jack Bicknell said the punt to the speedy Martin was unexpected.

"I'm shocked that they punted the ball to Kelvin Martin," he said. "I though they would try and punt it out of bounds, because Kelvin almost broke the last one (before the 85-yard TD return)."

Collins said special teams would be a prime concern as the Mustangs prepare to face Baylor in Waco on Saturday.

Collins isn't ready to make any predictions concerning who is the toughest conference opponent awaiting the Mustangs, now 3-1.

ANGELS

"No comment. I have to pitch again."

BOSTON MANAGER John McNamara said that Clemens "could have been overstrong early" but he gave no thought of replacing him "because in this park five runs (California added an unearned tally in the third) are not that much.

"The real problem was we just did not get enough hits off of Witt," McNamara said.

"We beat his 'A' stuff, his hard stuff," California Manager Gene Mauch said when asked about Clemens. "His curve was not breaking. He was tougher later on."

After Pettis drove in a run with a two-out single in the third, Clemens retired 14 of the next 15 batters, including 10 in a row.

Then, with one out in the eighth, he surrendered singles to Dick Schofield, Boone and Pettis, giving California a 6-1 lead. The Angels added two more runs on Downing's single off Stanley.

"I don't think he ever really developed his rhythm," Boston catcher Rich Gedman said. "I think he may have been a little anxious, maybe too much nervous energy. He never got in the right direction. But he wasn't that far off."

"It was a big game," said Joyner, who also doubled in the first inning. "We scored four runs with Witt on the mound and that is a big hill for the Red Sox to climb.

"It was very important to win the first game, and doubly important to beat him (Clemens)," Joyner added.

Scott is completing his second successful season with the Astros since developing an effective split-fingered fastball that helped him throw a no-hitter on Sept. 25 that clinched the division title for the Astros.

Scott's sinking pitch has been so good some players and managers have accused the right-hander of doctoring the ball with sandpaper.

"It's been suggested by you people (media) and by some managers but I haven't seen Scott thrown out of a game this year," Astros Manager Hal Lanier said.

Scott doesn't object to the talk. In fact, he likes it.

"If they are going to think about it, it gives me another pitch," Scott said. "If it bothers them, it's that much better for me. I don't care what Gary Carter or anyone else says."

Carter, the Mets' eight-time All-Star catcher, had earlier said he thought Scott doctored the ball.

Johnson said he will leave the matter to his hitters.

"His ball does move a little funny sometimes," Johnson said. "My way of handling it will be if one of my hitters doesn't like the way the ball moves, he can ask the umpire to look at it."

Scott led the majors with a 2.22 ERA in 275 1/3 innings pitched and with 306 strikeouts.

"After we had clinched the title and I had 298 strikeouts, I did go out and try to strike out two more guys," Scott said. "It was the first time this year that I tried to strike out anyone."

The Mets were favored to reach the playoffs before the season started and they made all the predictions come true, winning 108 games, the most victories since the Cincinnati Reds won 108 games in 1975.

The Mets clinched their division title on Sept. 17 and then won 14 of their last 18 games.

Houston started the season under new General Manager Dick Wagner, new manager Lanier and predictions of a low finish in the West.

But they started the season strong and took the lead for good shortly after the All-Star break. The Astros clinched the title on Sept. 25 on Scott's no-hitter, which came in a string of six shutouts in eight games.

Denny Walling, platooned at third base with Phil Garner, and right fielder Kevin Bass each hit .311 to lead the Astros and Glenn Davis provided long-awaited power with 31 home runs and 101 runs batted in.

Wally Backman led the Mets with a .320 average, followed by Keith Hernandez .310 and Len Dykstra .295.

Spurs open NBA exhibition season with win over Mavs

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — In the NBA's first exhibition game of the season, the San Antonio Spurs defeated the Dallas Mavericks 115-95 Tuesday night in a contest that featured heavy substitutions on both sides.

The game marked the head coaching debut of the Spurs' Bob Weiss, who was assistant to Dallas Coach Dick Motta last season.

Tyrone Corbin, Alvin Robertson and Mychal Thompson scored 12 points each for San Antonio. Rolando Blackman led the Mavericks with 14.

The Spurs never trailed in the game. They led 21-18 after one quarter, but outscored Dallas by 13 points in the second quarter en route to a 54-38 advantage at intermission. The Mavericks pulled to within 85-78 after three quarters, but San Antonio pulled away again.

The Spurs used 17 and the Mavericks 15.

Replay idea: Put light atop 30-second clock

IRVING (AP) — Tex Schramm, the NFL's stoutest defender of instant replay, has a bright idea to prevent the terminology confusion that occurred during Sunday's Kansas City-Los Angeles Raiders' game.

"We could put a light on top of the 30-second clock," Schramm said Tuesday. "The official in the press box could turn the light red if replays show something is wrong and green if the play is OK."

On Sunday, umpire John Keck thought replay official Jack Reader said "pass is complete" instead of "pass incomplete" on a Raiders' pass into the end zone to Dokie Williams. The touchdown stood and the Raiders won 24-17 although there was a question of whether Williams had stepped out of bounds.

"I think this proves we have to have something we communicate easily from the press box to the field," Schramm said. "A light on the 30-second clock would be one way."

Schramm, the chairman of the NFL's Competition Committee, said he felt the bugs would be worked out of the system.

"I'm still confident that at the end of the year the instant replay will have proved its value by saving plays and games," Schramm said. "Of course, the game in Kansas City was a perfect spot to show why we have the replay. It's beyond me how it could have been fouled up."

Schramm admitted he was perplexed that things hadn't gone better for instant replay in its first season.

"I'm tired of defending something I don't have anything to do with — and that's making it work," Schramm said. "The NFL has been referring calls to me. They say 'Call, Tex, he's a proponent.' Well, the league office is supposed to make it work. Where is the commissioner?"

Coryell not happy with calls refs made against Seahawks

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Chargers Coach Don Coryell said a review of game films shows San Diego was victimized by officials' bad calls in its 33-7 loss to the Seattle Seahawks.

The Chargers didn't challenge the calls during Monday's game, as NFL rules allow, because they didn't immediately realize the errors, Coryell said Tuesday.

"At the time, we didn't know, but after looking at the films we sure found out," he said. "They (the calls) really, really hurt us."

First, Coryell said replays showed San Diego running back Buford McGee had scored on a second-and-goal play from the 1-yard line during the third quarter. Officials ruled McGee's knee touched the ground for no gain. Two more San Diego running plays resulted in a loss of three yards and Seattle gained possession of the ball.

"I just can't understand it. He was a yard or two in the end zone," Coryell said of McGee.

Coryell said replays also showed that the first of Lionel James' two fumbles should have been disallowed. The third-quarter turnovers led to two Seattle touchdowns in 13 seconds.

"Maybe they (the officials) didn't have a clear view, but that was not a fumble. His knee was definitely down. That cost us two touchdowns," Coryell said, referring to the fumble ruling after a 6-yard run by James. Seattle safety Kenney Easley hit James and the Seahawks recovered at the 50.

Three plays later, Seahawks quarterback Dave Krieg threw a 46-yard scoring pass to Byron Franklin. After James fumbled the ensuing kickoff at the San Diego 15, Krieg promptly threw a touchdown pass to Steve Largent.

Coryell admitted the errors were no excuse for the Chargers' loss and said he still supports the use of instant replays.

"It's not going to catch all the mistakes, but even if it catches one or two it will satisfy it's purpose," Coryell said.

Dollar steady

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar turned in a mixed performance on foreign exchange markets early today. Gold bullion prices were also mixed but little changed.

Currency traders said the dollar remained under pressure from unfavorable U.S. economic indicators. But they said concern over possible intervention by West Germany's Bundesbank was keeping the dollar from falling significantly.

Also, movements from the British pound to the dollar were helping to underpin the U.S. currency. The pound has been hit by uncertainty over a possible rise in British interest rates.

The British currency lost just over 1 cent against the dolla trading at $1.4270, down fro $1.4372 dollars late Tuesday.

Other midmorning doll rates compared with levels Europe late Tuesday:

—2.0020 West German mar up from 2.0010

—1.6320 Swiss francs, dn from 1.6325

—6.5575 French francs dn from 6.5650

London's five best bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $440 a troy ounce, up from $8 late Tuesday but slightly oday's opening bid of $440.

A London trader said that there was some heavy selling from the Middle st during the first hours of trading, but that the market settl down later.

Gold was quoted at a bid of $439.50 in Zurich, down from $440.50.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid $437.76, down from $443.73.

Silver bullion traded in London at a bid $5.68 an ounce, down 2 cents from late Tuesday.

Icahn increases stake in USX to 11.4 percent

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Carl C. Icahn, the New York investor who announced an $8 billion bid for the USX Corp. on Monday, disclosed Tuesday that he had bought additional four million shares, raising his stake to 11.4 percent.

That disclosure came in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Mr. Icahn, who sent his bid directly to the USX board on Monday, said he bought the new shares that same day at $26.50 apiece, for a total of $106 million.

There had been speculation that Icahn, who has offered $31 a share for all of USX's stock, was the buyer of the four million shares that were traded last Monday. But there had been uncertainty as to whether those shares were included in the 25 million that Icahn said he owned on Monday.

The new purchases increased the pressure on USX, which Tuesday would say only that it planned to study Icahn's proposal "at the appropriate time."

The recently acquired block of stock may also help convince the financial community that Icahn is capable of taking on USX, a company that remains the nation's largest steel producer and is a force in the energy business.

Tuesday, some doubts were expressed about Icahn's intentions, causing USX's stock to rise only moderately. Trading volume, however, continued at a torrid pace as investors and speculators alike weighed the announcement.

In trading on the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday, USX shares rose only $1.125, to $27.625, but led the most-active list with 4.1 million shares traded. Because a long and bitter takeover struggle is likely to develop, speculators were unwilling to bid USX stock any closer to the $31 offered price, believing that profits will not be realized for weeks at best.

The investment community's biggest question about Icahn's intentions, it seems, is whether he is dedicated to taking over and running the troubled steel and energy company.

"The bid isn't that real because everybody knows he just wants a recapitalization," said one speculator, who appeared to be expressing the opinion of a large number of his colleagues. "That's the way it will probably end up. He's there just to make sure it's a good recapitalization and not a bad one."

USX, formerly the U.S. Steel Corp., said last month that it thought the price of its stock was too low and that it had hired advisers to study the matter. While it never named the advisers, Goldman, Sachs & Co. and the First Boston Corp. are believed to be studying the company's options.

At the time, USX used the word "restructuring" to describe the chore it had given to the advisers. But Wall Street generally believes that USX is really looking into a recapitalization involving the repurchase of its own stock with money that was either borrowed or received from asset sales.

USX declines to respond to Icahn bid

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — USX Corp. declined Tuesday to respond immediately to an $8 billion takeover bid from corporate raider Carl C. Icahn, indicating that it may wait as long as two weeks before giving the offer consideration.

In its only formal statement regarding the $31 per share offer that Icahn made Monday, the giant steel and oil company said it would respond "at the appropriate time." Since USX hired two investment banks Sept. 22 and gave them 30 days to recommend a corporate restructuring, Icahn has said that he would leave his offer open until Oct. 22.

In documents filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and in interviews, Icahn said he proposed to make USX's steel business profitable by negotiating union contracts that offer workers equity considerations or profit-sharing plans in return for wage and benefit cuts. He said he would consider withdrawing his offer if USX management produced a plan to improve the value of the company's stock, perhaps by selling off underperforming assets.

At United Steelworkers headquarters in Pittsburgh, Icahn's offer was regarded with some skepticism.

"It's just bar talk as far as we're concerned," said Russ Gibbons, a spokesman for the union. Noting that Icahn has been regarded as less of an industrialist than as stock investor interested in trading profits, Gibbons said: "He's the last kind of guy in the country who wants to be a new steel man. He wants to make money."

Amoco buys ARCO part in Headlee

From Staff Reports

Amoco Production Co. has entered into a formal agreement with ARCO Oil and Gas to purchase ARCO's 36.5 working interest in the Headlee Dehydrian Unit in Ector and Midland Counties, said Amoco sources today.

Amoco said it would purchase interest in 113 producing wells and 37 water injection wells in the unit as well as ARCO's interest in the Headlee Cryogenic Gas Plant at Loop 338 and Interstate 20 in Odessa. Amoco's net share of liquids production from the plant and condensate production from the wells will be approximately 4,600 barrels per day.

Gross production from the Headlee unit is 200 million cubic feet per day of wet natural gas, which yields 11,000 barrels per day of liquids at the plant and 4,600 barrels of condensate. The dry gas is reinjected into the unit.

Amoco said the agreement is the result of competitive bidding, and while the exact purchase price was not revealed, Amoco confirmed the price was in excess of $100 million.

Greg Clock, Amoco spokesman, said the purchase was part of an ongoing effort by Amoco to purchase quality production in those areas in which the company is already active.

IBM gets good news, bad news

NEW YORK (AP) — International Business Machines Corp. introduced four mid-size computers it hopes will fend off competition from minicomputer makers.

A piece of bad news for the company took the spotlight off the introduction on Tuesday as IBM said it expects to report a decline next week in its worldwide orders and shipments.

The new 9370 computers belong to the same System 370 family as IBM's successful line of big, powerful mainframe computers and run many of the same programs but are much smaller and cheaper.

The smallest, the Model 20, is a bit larger than a two-drawer filing cabinet and starts at $31,000 for the processor alone. Operating software and memory devices are extra.

Pilot installations are scheduled to begin in the second quarter of 1987, and IBM said it does not expect to begin large-volume shipments until the second half of the year.

The main target of the new computers is said to be the surging Digital Equipment Corp., which has capitalized on the lack of compatibility between IBM computers.

"I don't think it's going to kill DEC, but it could make IBM more competitive," analyst Steve Milunovich of First Boston Corp. said of the new line.

"It could have more effect on the secondary players like Data General." Despite Tuesday's announcement, "We have still a very formidable challenge for them and a real

Heating oil stocks rise, gasoline stocks decline

NEW YORK (UPI) — The nation's ample home-heating oil stocks rose again last week as production and imports increased, the American Petroleum Institute reported Tuesday.

Gasoline inventories declined for the first time in six weeks but still remained well above year-earlier levels, the oil industry trade group said.

The high level of home-heating oil and gasoline supplies should mean continued bargains for consumers, analysts said.

Refiners continued to cut production, which could eventually reduce the U.S. fuel surplus if fewer petroleum products are released onto the now-glutted market.

In the week ended Oct. 3, stocks of distillate — used for home-heating oil and diesel fuel — climbed to 150.9 million barrels from 147.8 million barrels in the previous week and were more than 30 million barrels higher than the 117.7 million barrels on hand in the same week last year.

Refineries normally build distillate inventories at this time of year in preparation for the peak winter heating season, but analysts contend supplies already are abnormally high.

Distillate production rose to 2.9 million barrels a day from 2.8 million barrels a day in the prior week and 2.7 million barrels a day in the comparable 1985 week.

Distillate imports picked up to 198,000 barrels a day from 176,000 barrels daily in the preceding week and 164,000 barrels a year ago.

Gasoline inventories dropped to 228.7 million barrels from 234.3 million barrels the week before but outstripped the 221.5 million barrels in storage in the year-earlier week.

Unleaded fuel, which accounts for more than 65 percent of the domestic gasoline market, declined to 121.3 million barrels from 126.6 million barrels the previous week but was above the 109.4 million barrel level of last year.

Gasoline production tapered off to 6.7 million barrels a day from 6.8 million barrels daily in the preceding week but eclipsed the 6.3 million barrel-a-day rate a year ago.

Gasoline imports fell to 230,000 barrels a day from 333,000 barrels daily the week before and 338,000 barrels a day last year.

Houston firm to supply oil to SPR

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Houston oil trading firm will be supplying about 30 percent of the crude oil going into the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, the Energy Department announced Tuesday.

The firm, Transworld Oil USA, offered to meet the specifications for crude entering the Texas and Louisiana salt domes of the reserve for a base price of $14.95 per barrel, to be adjusted to reflect market prices at the time of delivery.

Transworld will supply 3.7 million barrels, about 10,000 barrels a day, for the next year. All of it will come from domestic wells, the department said.

The authorized rate of filling the reserve is 35,000 barrels a day. Currently, it holds 506 million barrels.

Gas leak could focus attention on safety equipment

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — When the Permian Basin Oil Show opens next weekend a hydrogen sulfide leak that forced the evacuation of 1,000 residents could focus attention on safety equipment, a show official said.

Only nine spaces for exhibitors remained Tuesday for the four-day show that is expected to draw up to 200,000 people.

But on the minds of many will be a hydrogen sulfide leak last week at a well in north Odessa that forced residents out of their homes and had to be capped by a special crew, said Jay Alvey, show director.

The leak sent more than 20 people to a local hospital complaining of burning eyes, nausea and other gas poisoning symptoms.

The leak occurred when a rusted pipe in the well ruptured while a crew was working at the well last Friday. The well was not capped until seven hours later, sending a smell of rotten eggs throughout the area.

Some local residents have suggested alarms should be placed on wells to give them more warning if a leak or other accident should occur.

The first two days of the show, Oct. 15 and 16, will be open to oil industrialists, while the general public will be admitted Oct. 17 and 18.

Among the guests will be seven Chineese delegates whose visit was arranged when Midland and Odessa officials visited China last summer to set up a "sister city" relationship between Midland and Dongying.

Dongying is a northeast China city located in the nation's second largest oil field.

BENNIGANS, located at Loop 250 and Midkiff, is offering the Express lunch — lunch served in 15 minutes, or it's free. According to service manager Darryl Gelfan, "We've taken away the fear of not getting back in time. If it takes us more than 15 minutes, we'll buy it." And the offer includes every item on the menu, and is available from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily.

He said that response has been excellent, even attracting some airport employees — who were served in time. The Midland restaurant began the service about a month ago, and now the rest of the company is following suit, beginning the express lunch Nov. 18, according to Gelfan.

Gelfan said the success is due to intensifying service, from the wait person to the cook. "If anything, the quality is improved because we've intensified it so much."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Gift to minors can never be taken back

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have $35,000 invested in a certificate of deposit for my son. The CD is registered in my name, as custodian for my son's name, under the gift to minor act and has his Social Security number on it.

I have been told there eventually will be problems, because the CD will mature in two years and is in gift to minors act form. What are these problems and how can they be solved?

Doyle

A. Assuming you are an honest citizen, the only "problem" will be that your son will have to pay higher income taxes after this year.

When the CD matures, it can be renewed. Or, as custodian for the gift to minors account, you can invest the money as you choose — always in gift to minors act form. You have a fiduciary responsibility to invest the gift to minors act property for the benefit of your son.

Then, when your son reaches the age of majority, which varies from 18 to 21 from state to state, you are required to have the account registered in your son's name alone and turn it over to him. Let's hope you are aware that everything put into a gift to minors account is an irrevocable gift. If you take it back, you'll be stealing from your son.

It is rumored some parents shift money to children, so that the interest and/or dividends earned will be tax liabilities of the kids, who often have such low income they pay little or no income tax. The new federal tax law will put the kibosh on that dodge.

One provision of the new law says that a minor's so-called "unearned income," such as interest and dividends, that exceeds $1,000 annually generally will be taxed at the parents' tax rate. This rule is scheduled to take effect for 1987 and applies to gifts to minors from parents.

The new tax law has two federal income tax rates, 15 and 28 percent. Let's say you end up in the 28 percent bracket and your son in the 15 percent bracket. Under the complicated rules, your son will pay a 28 percent tax on the CD interest that exceeds $1,000.

Q. I set up two gift to minors accounts for my grandchildren, ages 8 and 11. Because the income in each account is more than $1,000, I've had to file income tax returns for the youngsters.

How can I best turn these accounts over to the children's parents? I would like to do so this year so I won't have to file income tax returns for them for 1987.

A. You can resign your custodianship of the gift to minors accounts and name the children's parents as successor custodians. Under the rules, there is one minor and one custodian for each account.

Unfortunately, the procedure for naming successor custodians varies widely, depending on the state in which you live. All 50 states and the District of Columbia have their own gift to minors laws. The bank, brokerage firm or other organization which you have the gift to minors accounts should be able to help you. If not, consult a good attorney.

However, you don't have to file income tax returns for your grandchildren, even if you continue as custodian. Their parents can — and should — file those returns.

Q. I own 3,000 shares of stock, which has increased so much in value the tax would be terribly high if I sold. I am 79. My will specifies that the stock is to be divided equally among my 10 nieces and nephews. My lawyer says this is OK. But I wonder. Won't it be very expensive to have all my stock certificates canceled and new certificates issued?

A. No. That chore will be handled by the stock's transfer agent, which is paid by the company whose stock is involved. There will be no extra cost to your estate.

You're wise to keep that stock, rather than sell and get hit with a big tax at this stage in your life. When your nieces and nephews inherit the stock, their "basis" — cost for tax purposes — will "step up" to the value placed on the stock when your estate is settled. Normally, that's the market value on the date of your death.

Woman buys her old school

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb. (AP) — Patsy Harpster has a lot of memories connected with her old school. So she bought it.

"We hated to see anything happen to it," Mrs. Harpster said. "We'd like to keep the way it is."

Mrs. Harpster, a fourth-grade teacher, and her husband, Gary, bought the old District 54 Camp Creek school during an auction Tuesday. She said she had a special interest in the building because at least six members of her family attended classes there.

People Express in need of cash

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — People Express Inc., faced with paying more than $13 million in interest Oct. 15, said it may have to file for bankruptcy protection if the federal government doesn't approve its acquisition by Texas Air Corp. by then.

The Newark-based holding company for People Express Airlines and three smaller carriers also said Tuesday it needs concessions by holders of its public debt issues to survive a cash crisis.

People Express said it is asking the U.S. Department of Transportation to approve its sale no later than Oct. 14 so it can avoid facing by itself interest payments of $13.4 million due the next day.

Without additional cash infusions from Texas Air, which has vowed no further help until the sale is approved, People Express said it may be unable to make the interest payment.

Asked if the sale could fall through, People Express spokesman Russell Marchetta said, "It could come to that."

Texas Air announced last month it would buy People Express and the assets of its grounded subsidiary, Frontier Airlines, for about $300 million.

People Express said Tuesday there was a "dramatic decline in traffic during September," with only 44.9 percent of airplane seats filled, far below levels last year.

The airline has offered two three-day sales of half-price tickets to bring in cash.

People Express said the cash shortage is worsened by debt service requirements of $31 million that are due through the end of the year.

Financing pledged by Texas Air must come before 1987, People Express said.

About $30 million has been forwarded by Texas Air to People Express thus far. Another $19.5 million has been pledged as the merger nears, and the Houston-based carrier has said it would provide $100 million in working capital to People Express until it is assimilated into another Texas Air carrier.

In addition to DOT approval, the sale is also contingent on an agreement by holders of two-thirds of People Express' publicly held debt securities. Those debtholders must also agree to reduce the interest rate on the $474 million in public debt issues to save at lease $12.6 million this year for People Express.

Marchetta said the holders have until Nov. 5 to make their decision.

In its statement, the airline said, "People Express stated that, if the requisite number of debtholders do not agree to the proposed modifications and, as a result, the merger agreement is terminated by Texas Air, People Express may well be required to seek protection under the bankruptcy laws."

No reason for judge to leave case, attorneys say

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Lawyers representing the 23 banks owed money by the billionaire Hunt brothers say the withdrawal of Dallas attorney Charles Storey has eliminated any reason U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders might have for disqualifying himself.

The lawyers said, too, that no reason for Sanders' disqualification existed even before Storey's withdrawal as the lawyer for the First National Bank of St. Paul, Minn.

Placid Oil Co. and the William Hebert Hunt Trust Estate have asked the 5th Circuit to force Sanders to disqualify himself — something Sanders has twice refused to do.

Lawyers for the Hunts contend that Sander's investments, a long-standing political feud with the Texans and ties to Storey should disqualify the judge from supervising the case.

Storey withdrew as the bank's counsel Monday in a bankruptcy suit filed by the Hunts, denying charges he had ties to Sanders.

In a petition, the Hunt lawyers told the federal appeals court, "Charles Storey was the treasurer and one of the largest personal contributors to Judge Sanders' 1972 campaign for the United States Senate."

In their response Monday, the banks' lawyers told the 5th Circuit that claim — and others made by the Hunts — weren't true.

"Respondents respectfully submit that this petition is simply a continuation of an orchestrated attempt by petitioners to remove a judge who they do not want to try their cases," said the banks' lawyers.

If Sanders is required to step aside, the banks' lawyers said, it "would set a precedent that would wreak havoc with the fair and impartial administration of justice and, indeed, would undermine the public's confidence in the ability of the judiciary to withstand baseless attacks."

In his affidavit before the appeals court, Storey said, "To avoid any possible claim of impropriety now or in the future, no matter how frivolous it may be, and in order to permit these proceedings to go forward in an orderly and efficient way ... I and my firm have withdrawn as counsel for First National Bank of St. Paul."

"I have had no communication with Judge Sanders," Storey said, adding that he was only one of approximately 100 lawyers working on behalf of the defendant banks in the cases.

He also noted that First National Bank of Saint Paul was characterized in a petition to the court as "one of the major defendant banks."

Storey responded, "In fact, First of St. Paul is the bank with the smallest loan to the Hunt interests. First of St. Paul's Loan amounts to less than half of 1 percent of the total Hunt indebtedness to the 23 banks."

Furthermore, Storey said, he attended only one hearing in the case and merely sat as an observer.

The Hunts have gone to court against 23 banks, which want to foreclose on $1.5 billion in past due loans. The attempt to reorganize under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy laws originally was filed in New Orleans, but Sanders ordered it moved to Dallas and the 5th Circuit agreed.

Houston home auction nets VA $3.8 million

HOUSTON (AP) — Some 220 abandoned homes auctioned by the Veterans Administration netted $3.8 million, an average of $17,270 for each house, officials say.

The lowest price paid was $3,000 for a three-bedroom, one-bathroom home in northeast Houston, while a four-bedroom, 2½-bathroom southwest Houston home had the highest pricetag of $62,000, auction officials said.

About 1,300 people attended two-day auction of Houston area homes this weekend.

The auction, which included properties throughout the Houston metropolitan area, was one of the largest auctions of single-family homes ever held in Houston," said Larry W. Latham, president and chief executive of Latham Auctioneers, which handled the event.

Another VA auction is scheduled next Sunday in San Antonio where about 100 properties will be up for sale, auction officials said.

The last VA auction in February netted $5.7 million on the sale of 250 homes.

alternative for our customers and their customers," said William Johnson, the company's vice president for distributed systems.

IBM's stock dropped $5.37½ a share Tuesday to $128.12½ in consolidated New York Stock Exchange trading, reflecting nervousness over prospects for its earnings report next week.

"Our business outside the U.S. while still growing, is beginning to moderate," IBM spokeswoman Pamela Hawkins said in a statement in response to questions from reporters about the stock decline.

Although the U.S. business is stable, IBM expects its worldwide orders and shipments for the first nine months of 1986 to fall below the same period in 1985, and pressures on the company's margins to continue, she said.

Most analysts expect IBM to report a decline in profits for 1986, marking the first time that has happened two consecutive years since the Depression.

USX

The union's reaction reflected doubt about Icahn's plans and motivation that spread throughout Wall Street as well. For it was only a month ago that USW officials all but welcomed an Icahn-style attack on the USX management, which has refused to bargain with the union since its 22,000 steelworkers struck USX on August 1.

"Our view is that things are at such a terrible low point in our relations with management that any move for change would be in our favor," union spokesman Gary Hubbard told the Los Angeles Times in September.

Steel industry analysts on Wall Street noted that pressure from Icahn might inspire USX, which was formerly known as U.S. Steel, to bargain with the union on the reasoning that a contract settlement resembling that won by USW units at other integrated steel companies would be so costly that it would drive Icahn away from the company.

Some questioned Icahn's resolve to acquire USX, which is expected to lose almost $500 million this year. "Just by talking about offering $31 a share, he's boosted the value of his holdings by about $40 million," remarked Robert A. Hageman, steel industry analyst for Kidder, Peabody & Co.

ICAHN

By doing this, USX would reduce the number of shares it has outstanding and thus increase the value of the remaining stock. If the stock price is raised enough, a corporate raider like Icahn would be unable to afford to bid for the company.

Icahn has spent $652 million on his USX stock purchases. Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., his investment adviser, has said that it can provide another $6.4 billion, with companies affiliated with Icahn putting up another $1 billion.

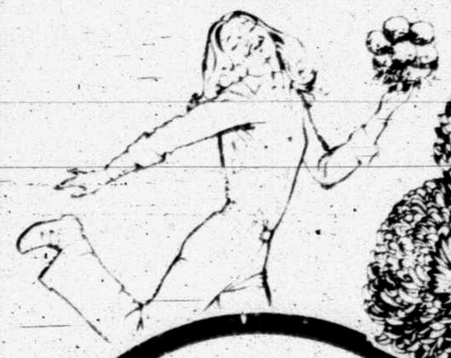

Tuesday, USX had little to say about the Icahn proposal. The company would only confirm that it had received a letter from Icahn in which the $31-a-share acquisition offer was mentioned. USX said it "will evaluate this letter and will respond at the appropriate time."

The Icahn offer came against a background of intensifying problems for USX, which lost $235 million in the first six months of this year. Its steelworkers have not worked for more than two months in a labor dispute that reflects the slump in the American steel industry. USX's other principal business, petroleum, has been hurt by declining oil prices.

Company more like caring neighbor than corporate giant

DALTON, Mass. (AP) — Back in 1935, when Oscar Sabin desperately needed money for medical care for his 11-year-old son who had been accidentally blinded by a BB gun, the cash was advanced by his employer, Crane & Co. When the sightless son turned 21, the company hired him, too.

That son was Herb Sabin, and to him and many others in this company town, the Cranes are not corporate giants in executive suites but caring neighbors who have made paper here for seven generations.

"They gave me a chance," says Sabin, now in his 41st year with Crane, best known for making stationery and the paper for U.S. dollars.

"It was very hard for any blind people to get jobs in those days. ... They gave me an opportunity to raise a family. They gave me a sense of independence."

Sabin, now 62, works at the plant wrapping envelopes for shipment. He and his wife raised two daughters and two sons.

The name Crane has been synonymous with this charming town in the Berkshire hills since 1801 when Zenas Crane built his first paper mill in Dalton.

The Cranes built the town hall, library, museum, opera house, and community and youth centers, and donated the land for most of the schools, a cemetery, an 18-hole golf course, a state park and a hunting preserve. They set up a college scholarship fund for needy students and gave workers paid time off to train as emergency medical technicians with the fire department.

It is hard to find anybody who has anything bad to say about the Cranes.

"I've lived here 35 years and I've never heard a derogatory remark about them," says Alice Andrews, the town clerk. "I'm in a position where I have 7,000 people who can say anything they want to me and I can't talk back."

"They've done such a multitude of good and always in a quiet manner," says Milt Geer, who retired from the company last year at age 70. "They've been involved so heavily in people. They're involved in the environment. They invested millions in cleaning up the (Housatonic) river long before it was mandatory."

According to a company history, Crane installed a pollution control system in the mid-1950s for the discharges from its mills.

George Hamilton, chairman of the Life Sciences Department of Berkshire Community College in nearby Pittsfield, says, "They were leaders in environmental pollution controls, very active very early on and very cooperative with the environmental program at the college."

Maggie Kelly, who with her husband, Harry, retired from the company 13 years ago, recalled that when a fire destroyed their home in 1965, the Cranes provided them with housing and furniture until they rebuilt. The Cranes also matched a cash collection taken up by friends and neighbors.

"When people were sick, they worried about them, took care of them," Mrs. Kelly said.

Rarely does Crane lay off any of its roughly 1,000 employees. Production workers make an average of $10 an hour, and they share in the profits that can mean as much as $3,000 more a year. There is a company-funded medical insurance plan.

Frederick Crane Jr., left, of Crane & Co., stands with Herb Sabin in front of the company's offices in Dalton, Mass.

The company rents about 50 homes to its workers, many of them duplexes like the one for which Charlie Wellspeak pays $167 a month. It has seven rooms, a basement, attic and yard. Crane once owned more than 100 homes.

Wellspeak, 56, went to work for Crane while still in high school, following his mother, father, grandparents, uncles and cousins into the company. In the 36 years he has worked for the company, he can't recall being laid off for more than a week.

Last year when Crane made more than $15 million in pre-tax profits, Wellspeak picked up more than $3,000 in the company's profit-sharing plan.

"I think it's a great place to work," he says. "There's no union. Normally, if you have a grievance you settle it by just talking to someone."

That someone could be Frederick G. Crane or Winthrop M. Crane III, board members, or the chairman and chief executive officer, Benjamin J. Sullivan.

They say their doors are open to all employees with gripes that can't be settled at lower levels. Everyone from switchboard operator to board member is on a first-name basis.

Crane's homespun style of doing business — none of the seven executives, including the chairman, has his own private secretary — has paid off handsomely. The company had its highest sales and profits ever last year, topping $100 million in sales for the first time. That included $24.5 million from the government for making paper for U.S. currency.

Family members Chris, David and Tim Crane work for Sullivan, who last fall became the first outsider elected chairman.

"We thought he'd do a better job," says Frederick Crane when asked why Sullivan was selected over a Crane. Fred Crane, as he is called, took himself out of the picture when he took early retirement at age 62 at the end of last year after 37½ years. He had been vice president in charge of research.

The headquarters is in a pair of two-story red brick buildings. The executives and headquarters staff, fewer than 100, go to lunch from noon-to-1, many of them to their nearby homes.

"It's not a bunch of prima donnas," says Fred Crane. "It's always been a very informal operation. My father used to work in this office and he always brought his dog with him."

Crane himself is apt to show up on winter days in ski pants, ready to take off for the slopes.

The Cranes have also served in public office, from town hall to Congress.

W. Murray Crane, grandson of the founder, was governor of Massachusetts from 1900 until 1903 and a U.S. senator from 1904 until 1913.

Fred Crane is chairman of the three commissioners of the Dalton Fire District. His wife, Joyce, was one of the founders of the town conservation commission.

There's little evidence of Dalton being a mill town. Crane's half-dozen red brick mills are set back on the banks of the Housatonic River and blend in with the colonial appearance of the community of about 7,000. The typical cost of some of the colonial homes is $125,000, according to real estate agents.

Sugar and red maple trees surround the mills and line Dalton's well-kept streets.

Texas receives $3.2 million in lease auction

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — Texas received $3.2 million in bids for 18,000 acres of land Tuesday in the state's semi-annual oil and gas lease sale, said Land Commissioner Garry Mauro.

Mauro said $2.4 million was received on 45 bids for 9,845 acres of land dedicated to public education. The highest single bid, by Ultramar Oil & Gas Limited of Houston, was $500,025 for 1,440 in the Gulf of Mexico for an oil and gas lease.

Other bids included $597,565 for two Texas Department of Corrections' tracts and $180,002 for a 412.9-acre tract owned by the Texas Indian Commission.

The land office is responsible for managing 16 million acres of state land dedicated to education and depositing that income in the Permanent School Fund, which totals about $7 billion.

First shopping mall celebrates 30th birthday

EDINA, Minn. (AP) — Americans by the millions eat in them, hang out in them, and shop, shop, shop in them.

It's been 30 years this week since the indoor shopping mall made its debut, and retailing hasn't been the same since.

Southdale Center opened Oct. 8, 1956, as a totally enclosed, climate-controlled complex of shops, stores and restaurants in this well-to-do Minneapolis suburb.

"People came in and looked and their mouths opened. The impact was phenomenal. There was nothing like it," said Herman Guttman, who supervised Southdale's construction and worked with the architect, the late Victor Gruen.

Before Southdale, shopping centers usually were built along a strip, with stores facing the street.

After Southdale, thousands of suburban malls sprang up across the country and changed the shopping habits of a nation.

"The mall is Main Street in a space ship. It's an attempt to recreate the nostalgic Main Street within a totally controlled environment," said William Severini Kowinski, author of "The Malling of America."

A few developers had tried two-level centers before Southdale opened, such as Baltimore's Mondawmin Shopping Center and Northland in Detroit, Kowinski said in his 1985 book.

But the modern mall was invented at Southdale, he said.

"After Southdale it was clear. The shopping center was going to be the center of everything for suburbia," writes Kowinski, who has criticized malls as "selling machines."

About 3,000 enclosed malls the size of Southdale operate in the United States and 100 in Canada, according to John Riordan, executive vice president of the International Council of Shopping Centers.

Altogether, there are between 26,000 and 27,000 malls and shopping centers in North America, he said.

In 1985, malls and shopping centers accounted for $600 billion in sales, or 55 percent to 60 percent of all U.S. retail sales, excluding automotive sales, Riordan said.

Shopping mall construction peaked in the early 1970s, when 50 or 60 a year were built in the United States, Riordan said. Last year, only 18 malls were built.

"A large regional mall takes a lot of space," Riordan said. "There aren't that many sites left that are totally new sites."

Shopping malls also have become a cultural phenomenon, a place for teen-agers to hang out and senior citizens to exercise by walking laps in the enclosed area before shops open. Malls offer everything from weight-reduction classes to concerts.

"COMFORT FOODS" WITH CONTEMPORARY TEXAS TASTE

"Comfort foods" — the foods that trigger fond memories of childhood — are making a comeback. Kid pleasing classics such as creamy, cheesy macaroni and Mom's Sunday meatloaf have strong appeal to adult emotions today. Their blandness, however, may be a let-down to sophisticated "grown-up" tastes. When the flavors of formerly favored foods prove dull, look to tricks of Texas cooks to revive the appeal of cherished dishes.

In the Lone Star State, where spiciness is revered, old standards are given a zesty, fresh flavor boost with picante sauce.

Made from only the freshest tomatoes, onions, jalapeño peppers and seasonings, this lively all-purpose sauce adds garden-fresh taste appeal to a wide range of foods. With three seasoning levels from which to choose — mild, medium and hot — the desired degree of tongue-tingling jalapeño pepper "heat" is easy to achieve.

A zesty update of an all-American childhood favorite, Macaroni and Cheese Casserole boasts true Texas taste. The easy addition of picante sauce, used as an ingredient and a bright spoon-on topping, makes the original version pale in comparison.

When hearty, satisfying, "comforting" main dishes are what's needed, Picante Pot Roast and Meatballs and Spaghetti Olé are ideal. They may look like the dishes mother used to make, but their lively, spicy flavors are an unexpected delight.

Contemporary cooks with an eye on the clock will appreciate Tex-Mex Mini Meat Loaves, individual servings which cook far faster than the standard loaf. A "crowning glory" of picante sauce and shredded cheese makes them extra tasty and picture perfect.

As a snack or a casual supper, Texas Long Loaf is sure to rate raves. A Tex-Mex version of popular French bread pizza, it boasts hearty, spicy south-of-the-Rio Grande flavor.

Add flavor, pizzaz and fresh appeal to "comfort foods" with PACE® picante sauce, the way it's done in the Lone Star State. Lively interpretations of childhood favorites, Picante Pot Roast, Pace Macaroni and Cheese Casserole, Tex-Mex Mini Meat Loaves and Meatballs and Spaghetti Olé are "spiced up" Texas style to suit contemporary tastes.

Picante Pot Roast

3 to 3-1/2-pound beef chuck pot roast
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
2 medium onions, cut into 1/2-inch wedges
1 can (8 ounces) tomato sauce
1 cup picante sauce
1-1/4 teaspoons ground cumin
1/2 teaspoon oregano leaves, crushed
2 garlic cloves, minced
1 green pepper, coarsely chopped

In large skillet over medium heat, brown meat in oil; drain. Sprinkle onions over meat. Combine tomato sauce, picante sauce, cumin, oregano and garlic; pour over meat and onions. Reduce heat, cover and simmer gently about 2 to 2-1/2 hours, adding green pepper during last 15 minutes of cooking. (Begin checking meat for tenderness after 1 hour and 45 minutes of cooking.) Remove meat to serving platter; keep warm. Bring sauce in skillet to a boil; cook, stirring frequently, until sauce is thickened, about 5 minutes. Skim fat from sauce. Serve sauce and additional picante sauce with meat. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Pace Macaroni & Cheese Casserole

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour
2 cups milk
1/2 cup picante sauce
3/4 teaspoon ground cumin
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 cups (8 ounces) shredded sharp cheddar cheese
1/2 pound elbow macaroni, cooked and drained (2 cups uncooked)
1/2 cup chopped green pepper (optional)

Melt butter in 2-quart saucepan over medium heat. Stir in flour, cooking until mixture is smooth and bubbly. Remove from heat; gradually add milk. Stir in picante sauce, cumin and salt. Bring sauce to a boil over medium heat, stirring constantly until sauce thickens. Boil and stir 1 minute. Remove from heat; add 1-3/4 cups of the cheese and green pepper, stirring until cheese melts. Add macaroni to cheese sauce; mix well. Pour into a greased 1-1/2-quart baking dish; top with remaining 1/4 cup cheese. Cover and bake at 350°F. about 15 minutes; uncover and continue baking 5 minutes. Serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 4 to 6 main dish servings.

Meatballs & Spaghetti Olé

1 pound ground beef
1 cup picante sauce
1/2 cup fine dry bread crumbs
1/4 cup finely chopped onion
1 egg, slightly beaten
1-1/2 teaspoons ground cumin
1 teaspoon garlic salt
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 can (28 ounces) whole tomatoes, undrained
1 can (6 ounces) tomato paste
4 to 6 servings hot cooked spaghetti
1/4 cup chopped fresh cilantro (optional)

Combine meat, 1/4 cup of the picante sauce, crumbs, onion, egg, 1 teaspoon of the cumin and garlic salt; mix well. Shape to form 20 meatballs. In large skillet, brown meatballs in oil; drain. Combine remaining picante sauce, tomatoes, tomato paste and remaining cumin; break up tomatoes with spoon. Pour over meatballs in skillet. Cover; simmer 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Uncover and simmer 10 minutes or until sauce is desired consistency. Arrange meatballs over spaghetti; sprinkle with cilantro. Serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 4 servings.

Tex-Mex Mini Meat Loaves

1-1/2 pounds ground beef
1 cup picante sauce
1/2 cup very finely crushed tortilla chips or corn chips
1 medium onion, finely chopped
1 egg, slightly beaten
1-1/2 teaspoons ground cumin
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup (4 ounces) freshly shredded sharp cheddar or monterey jack cheese

Combine meat, 3/4 cup of the picante sauce, chips, onion, egg, cumin and salt; mix well. Shape to form 6 oval-shaped meat loaves; place on rack of broiler pan or on rack in large shallow baking pan. Bake in preheated oven at 375°F. about 25 minutes or to desired doneness. Spoon remaining picante sauce over meat loaves; sprinkle with cheese. Serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 6 servings.

Texas Long Loaf

1/2 pound ground beef
1 medium onion, coarsely chopped
1 garlic clove, minced
1 can (15 ounces) pinto beans, drained
1 cup picante sauce
1 teaspoon ground cumin
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 French bread loaf (approximately 3-1/2 inches in diameter and 16 to 18 inches long)
1-1/2 cups (6 ounces) shredded cheddar or monterey jack cheese
Chopped cilantro (optional)

Brown meat with onion and garlic in medium skillet; drain. Add beans, picante sauce, cumin and salt. Bring to a boil; reduce heat and simmer 5 minutes. Cut bread in half crosswise; cut each bread half in half lengthwise. Hollow out bread halves, leaving about a 1-inch shell. Place on baking sheet; broil until golden brown. Spoon meat mixture into bread halves; top with cheese. Broil until cheese melts. Top with additional picante sauce and, if desired, cilantro. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Spicy Scrambled Eggs

1/2 cup chopped red or green pepper
1/3 cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
6 eggs, lightly beaten
1/4 cup picante sauce
Salt and pepper, as desired
1 package (3 ounces) cream cheese, cut into 1/2-inch cubes
Avocado slices and tomato wedges (optional)

Sauté pepper and onion in butter in 10-inch skillet. Combine eggs, picante sauce, salt and pepper; add to skillet. Cook over low heat, stirring frequently, until eggs begin to set. Add cream cheese and continue cooking, stirring occasionally, until cheese is melted and eggs are set. Top with avocado and tomatoes, if desired. Serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 4 servings.

Barbecued buffalo wings

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — It was a quarter of a century ago that Teressa Bellissimo first barbecued some soup pot chicken wings at the Anchor Bar and started a food fad among the beer-and-a-shot crowd.

Today the popularity of the tangy tidbits that came to be called Buffalo wings has spread far and wide, along the way winning the acclaim of people like writer Calvin Trillin in "The New Yorker" and food editor Craig Claiborne in "The New York Times."

Some Southerners and others might argue that the Anchor Bar didn't invent barbecued chicken wings. But none can dispute that a late-night experiment at the Buffalo watering hole prompted a lot of other restaurants to put wings on their menus.

Today the Anchor Bar and its heritage are in the hands of 64-year-old Dominic "Rooster" Bellissimo, whose parents founded Frank and Teressa's Anchor Bar and Italian Restaurant in 1935. It has been at its present Main Street location since 1940.

Bellissimo was invited by Macy's in Manhattan to show its patrons how to put the zing in a wing.

And by mayoral proclamation, each July 29 in Buffalo is "Chicken Wing Day."

It all began on a Friday night in 1964. Bellissimo — "most beautiful" in Italian — recalls that he was tending bar while his father, who died six years ago at 84, was serving meals in the dining room. His mother, who died last November, also at 84, was in the kitchen.

"I had about six or seven of my buddies drinking," Bellissimo recalls. "In those days — we still do, if I think somebody is spending a good buck — I'd bring out some little hors d'oeuvres and give it to them on the house.

"Since it was a Friday night and all the boys were Irish, all Catholic, they couldn't eat meat. So I told my dad, 'See if mom can come out with an idea, a little hors d'oeuvre.'"

Since the restaurant had fresh-plucked broilers, Mrs. Belliussimo took wings usually consigned to soup or spaghetti sauce and split and barbecued them. She served the wings on a plate with celery — on hand for antipasto — and bleu-cheese dressing.

Since then, the sauce used to coat the wings has been diversified into mild, medium, hot and suicidal versions. A fifth was recently added, kamikaze, after radio commentator Paul Harvey discussed wings on his program and misnamed the suicidal version, Bellissimo says.

So important are the sauces — which rely on Georgia long red peppers — that Bellissimo mixes them at a secret location because he says he fears one of the restaurant's 65 employees might take the recipe to a competitor.

In a recent survey of restaurants by a local business weekly, the Buffalo area's 25 largest sellers reported they move a total of 34,570 pounds of wings each week. The Anchor Bar sells 23 percent of that total, almost twice its nearest competitor.

'White Trash' country cooking

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Let's get the name out of the way first thing. It's "White Trash Cooking," $12.95, by Ernest Matthew Mickler, and Ten Speed Press can scarcely print copies fast enough.

Mickler now has a New York literary agent and plans for more books. This one is on best-seller lists, and not just in the South.

Soon there will be 185,000 copies of the spiral-bound book in print, and its down-home recipes and irrepressible style have captured endorsements from Helen Hayes, Jesse Helms, cookbook author Barbara Kafka and other celebrities.

Publishers at first refused the book because of the title. The New Yorker added to the controversy by refusing an advertisement for the book because of the possibly offensive title, and Roy Blount Jr., who has been known to wax poetic on the subject of grease, opined: "Well, that just goes to show you how much the New Yorker knows about anything involving gravy."

Mickler grew up in back of a country grocery store in Palm Valley, Fla., and later sang country music with his best friend, Petie Pickette, and the likes of Faron Young, the late Patsy Cline, Roy Orbison and Maybelle Carter.

As a caterer in Key West, Mickler cooked all kinds of food, including some of the recipes in the book.

The recipe collection includes combination salad (lettuce, tomato and mayonnaise), "pore folks' soup" of warmed milk with Saltines crumbled in it, and peanuts in a bottle of Pepsi.

For years, Mickler collected recipes, pictures and country names. His favorite country name, Betty Mae Swilley, was found on a tombstone.

Mickler's memories of growing up a "hick" — as one classmate wrote in his yearbook — are fond. "I've taken something that could have been unpleasant," he said, "an unpleasant title and unpleasant experiences, and made it into something affectionate. It's easy to make something elegant out of shiny, glittery stuff."

He has tried, he said, to make his book "simple and clear and really real." Lots of folks, Mickler added, may "buy it in a smug way as a joke, and I think once they get it home and read it, they discover it isn't. If they have any soul at all, they do."

As for the book title, Mickler tries to define White Trash in the introduction, by writing that "where I come from in North Florida you never failed to say 'Yes ma'm' and 'No sir' ... never opened someone else's icebox, never left food on your plate ... And we always cook enough food for unexpected company."

Three-pepper filling used for sausage

Associated Press

Cool fall weather always makes me hungry for savory dishes such as this sausage and pepper sandwich filling.

Arrange all the peppers and onion rings around the sausage. In a screw-top jar combine the beer and prepared mustard; cover and shake well. Pour mixture into skillet. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Apples tasty ingredient in many dishes

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

The approach of autumn turns many people silly. In balmy weather, they long for the scratch of wool against their skin. They sit inside, tinkering with their fireplaces and looking in the Yellow Pages under "wood."

Nothing, though, gets to them like apples. Adults who can no longer go back to school seize the red, yellow and green orbs as symbols of rejuvenation and youth.

Apple pies, apple sauce, apple breads, cakes and cookies pile up in the pantry until the wild-haired cook collapses and puts away all baking utensils until Christmas.

The exhaustion, no doubt, comes from the apples' versatility. They lend themselves just as well to savory dishes as to sweet concoctions. apple and cheese gratins, chicken with apples and cider, curried apple and banana soup are all hardy recipes, yet with a sweet tinge.

Apple cider, apple sauce and spicy apple butter could keep even the most prolific cook busy.

Apples are also a great health booster. For their 75 to 85 calories, you get Vitamins A and C, calcium, phosphorus and potassium, among other good things.

Their fruit sugar provides quick energy, while their bulky pulp fills you up. At 85 percent water, they are naturally thirst-quenching, too.

To store apples, keep them in a covered container in the refrigerator to maintain proper humidity and prevent them from absorbing other food odors. If you buy them in perforated polyethylene bags, keep them in the same bags; they allow the air to circulate, enabling the apple cells to breathe.

So while some of us are still barbecuing big steaks outside on the patio, autumn worshippers will be delighted with the recipe below. With only butter, salt and pepper in their pantries, they'll be ready for the express lane.

Express lane: apples, brown sugar, lemon juice, bread crumbs, chives or scallions (optional), chicken, mustard, apple cider, whipping cream or creme fraiche.

CHICKEN PIECES WITH CIDER AND APPLES

2 tart apples, peeled, cored and sliced
5 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup fine dry bread crumbs
2 tablespoons chopped fresh chives or thinly sliced scallions (optional)
2½ to 3 pounds chicken parts
2 tablespoons dijon mustard
Salt and pepper to taste
¾ cup apple cider or sparkling apple cider
½ cup whipping cream or creme fraiche

Saute the apples in 1 tablespoon butter, brown sugar and lemon juice until apples are tender, about 3 minutes.

Mix bread crumbs and chives or scallions together on a plate. Cover the chicken with mustard and then roll in bread crumb mixture. Saute about 10 minutes on each side in remaining 4 tablespoons butter. Season with salt and peppar.

Remove chicken pieces and keep warm. Stir cider into saute pan, scraping up any bits of chicken and boil to reduce slightly. Stir in cream and heat through for about 1 minute.

Spoon the cooked apples over the chicken and pour over the sauce.

Study: Inflation low, prices hold

NEW YORK (UPI) — Inflation remained at low levels in the first half of 1986, with consumer prices rising only 3 percent, compared with an increase of 4 percent in the same period last year, stated a marketing research report published in Progressive Grocer magazine.

Prices for food consumed at home also have been held in check, climbing a modest 2 percent during the period, said Nielsen Marketing Research's 1986 Nielsen Review of Retail Food Store Trends.

Medical care price increases continued to outpace other areas of the consumer price index, rising 5 percent the first part of this year.

"The good news for the consumer is that retailers have been able to virtually hold the line on prices. Total index prices are running only 2 percent above a year ago, and that's mostly due to coffee category price increases," Nielsen spokesman Michael Spindler said.

Other findings of the report included:

- Transportation costs actually decreased 1 percent for the first six months of 1986, as lower gasoline costs were passed on to the consumer.
- Total U.S. retail sales grew 6 percent in 1985, to a total of $1.4 trillion, but growth rate slowed slightly, to 5 percent for the first half of 1986.
- Grocery store sales climbed to $271.6 billion in 1985, 4 percent above the previous year, with chain stores increasing their share of the grocery business to 71.1 percent the first part of this year, up from 70.4 percent.

WHAT'S COOKING

Knowledge, judgement needed in cooking

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Jennifer Cooper has taught homemaking for 15 years. As a teacher at San Jacinto Junior High School in Midland, she instructs her students in the basics.

"It's designed at the entry level, but of course some students do a lot of cooking. Others don't ever see the inside of a kitchen," she said.

Because of the different levels of cooking experience among her students, Mrs. Cooper said that "some of the students can help each other."

Mrs. Cooper tries to guide her students through the reality of today's world, and sometimes she finds old methods are no longer useful.

"If there's not any sense in doing something, I don't do it just because that's the way I was taught," she said. "Judgment comes with cooking ... I try to teach them some judgment."

Preparing nutritious meals involves more than just cooking, however. Mrs. Cooper said her course includes lessons in consuming. "I try to do a lot on food shopping, and comparing time verses money and comparing the end result as well. These kids are going to buy a lot rather than fix from scratch. I want to teach them to be intelligent consumers."

One innovation that has proven useful in saving kitchen time is the microwave oven, she said. "It's not to take the place of (a conventional oven), it's an additional tool. Some things it doesn't make sense to cook in a microwave. It's still an extra, not a necessity because we got along without them just fine. It's just a way to help save time."

The following recipes are some proven favorites of Mrs. Cooper.

India's middle class exceeds 100 million

Copley News Service

India today has a very substantial middle class that didn't exist 30 years ago. The Indian publication India Today says the middle class exceeds 100 million people, "more than the total population of most developed countries."

Included among them are "twice as many doctors as a decade ago, even though the population of the country has grown by only 25 percent," entrepreneurs, prosperous farmers, teachers, factory workers and an increasing number of professionals, workers in the Persian Gulf and graduates of "an unprecedented doubling of engineering colleges."

Banana muffins created by Swiss chef working in Puerto Rico

—DORADO, Puerto Rico (UPI) — Bananas are an important part of everyone's vision of the tropics, so in a way it's not surprising to see a banana muffin recipe from a place of balmy breezes and sandy beaches.

The fact is, this recipe might just make the best banana muffins you'll ever put in your mouth.

The formula comes from Gerard Messerli, the Swiss-born executive chef at the Hyatt Regency Cerromar Beach on Puerto Rico's north coast. Messerli discovered the area as private chef to the Rockefellers and played his cards so he never had to leave.

The chef says that if you don't have enough bananas to make the muffins today, you can peel, mash and freeze the ripest ones until you have enough. The baked muffins freeze well too, he says.

MESSERLI'S BANANA MUFFINS
2 cups all-purpose flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup butter, softened
1 cup plus 1 tablespoon sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups mashed very ripe banana, about 1¼ pounds
¼ cup milk
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Butter a 12-cup muffin tin and preheat the oven to 375 degrees. On a piece of waxed paper, combine the flour, baking powder and salt. Set aside.

In a large bowl with an electric mixer at medium speed, cream the butter and 1 cup of sugar until light and fluffy. Add the eggs one at a time, then beat in the vanilla.

Combine the bananas and milk. On low speed, stir the flour into the egg mixture alternately with the bananas, stirring until just combined. Spoon into the muffin tin.

Combine remaining 1 tablespoon of sugar and cinnamon. Sprinkle over the muffins. Bake for 30 minutes, or until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool in the pan for 5 minutes. Makes 12 muffins.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986 Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Thursday, October 9, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: New successes lie ahead. Do not lose sight of the fact that you are your own best investment! Complete an artistic project and you could discover a wonderful way to supplement your income. Friends will not necessarily make good business partners. Go slow on making commitments. Travel abroad is a distinct possibility. Encourage mate to join you in self-improvement activities.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Actor Edward Andrews, Angels outfielder Brian Downing, singer Jackson Browne, author Bruce Catton, singer John Lennon, evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson, Los Angeles Dodgers patriarch Walter O'Malley, actors Donald Sinden and Alastair Sim, hockey's Garry Peters.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): On-going projects deserve top priority now. New trends enable you to capitalize on recent gains. Your powers of concentration are excellent. Show greater respect for mate's opinion and romance will flourish.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Consult experts regarding a financial problem or investment. Your creative energies are at an all-time high. Success beckons! Move ahead with confidence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Move with the times and you will make important new business contacts. Do not allow someone's petty behavior to get to you. Reassure loved ones by showing more affection. Stay home tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An excellent day for making changes or a new start. Forge ahead! Employment conditions should soon show substantial improvement. New contacts are important to business expansion. A romantic partnership could become permanent.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The domestic scene is less turbulent than in the past. Steer clear of speculative ventures -- secret transactions are likely to fail. Keep things out in the open.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An excellent day for accounting and bookkeeping. Unfamiliar people and events may affect your finances in a surprising way. A romantic interlude could prove very expensive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Double-check your facts and figures before submitting a proposal. Let family members know exactly where they stand. Be honest. Romance will blossom when you least expect it. Let partner take the lead!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A lucky day for employment matters. A promotion or raise is a real possibility. Seek favors from an influential person. Your colleagues will be impressed by your forthright approach.

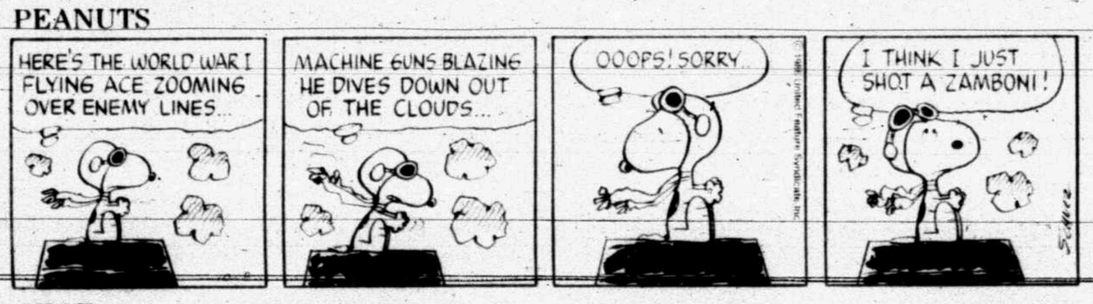

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your powers of concentration are at a peak today. Tackle those tasks that require careful attention to detail. Come to grips with a creative project or special assignment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Listen closely -- valuable advice is coming your way. If you follow it, you will be financially rewarded. Romance provides the brightest spot of your day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Ration your time and energies very carefully. Think in terms of long-range objectives. Share expenses to avoid feeling obligated.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An unexpected opportunity is coming your way. Seek mate's opinion before making that important decision. Be patient with your loved ones.

It may be a bit late in the year, but The Bridge World is having a spring cleaning. As a result, a selection of old issues of the magazine are available at great savings—$10 for 10 random issues; $20 for 24 issues; $40 for 52. Since the single issue price was $2.50, you can appreciate how many hours of bridge entertainment you can buy at bargain prices. (Available from: Oldies, The Bridge World, 39 West 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025.)

This brilliant deceptive play was published in 1980. According to the magazine, East and West had been arguing about it for more than 30 years.

"South's irregular four-heart opening and his outrageously optimistic redouble of West's penalty double were both expressions of ego. South was the best player at the table, and he was out to prove it. Indeed, the result made criticism impossible!

"West, with control of trumps, led his singleton diamond. East naturally withheld his king and South won with the ace. Trumps came next. West took the ace of hearts; he cashed the king of spades. East dropped the queen, showing the jack, so West dutifully underled his spade ace to put East on lead.

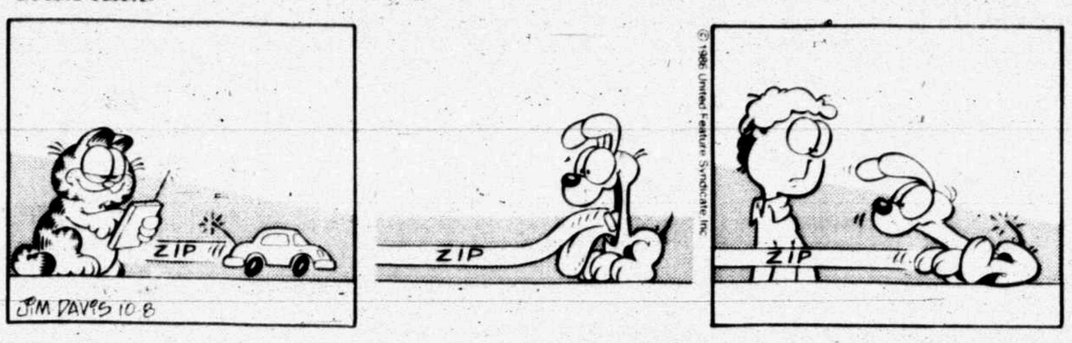

"From this point, king and another diamond would have set South two, redoubled, and perhaps led to a critical inspection of South's bidding. But East was not up to that. It was West's fashion to lead low from any three cards, and East simply could not visualize South with any more diamonds. He tried a club. South claimed!"

We claim you won't regret making a small investment.

Actor Vincent says he 'absolutely never' touched woman accusing him of battery

Vincent

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actor Jan-Michael Vincent says he would have caused serious injury had he in fact hit the woman accusing him of felony battery.

The 41-year-old Vincent, who starred in the "Airwolf" TV series, testified Monday that Chenoa Lee Ellis, 35, actually hit him after he spurned her offer to have sex.

"I absolutely never ever touched her," the actor said.

Ms. Ellis said Vincent beat her on Sept. 6, 1985, when she tried to talk to him about his then-girlfriend, Joanne Robinson, 26, with whom the actor had been arguing.

Vincent said Ms. Ellis' injuries, including a broken nose and a cut that required 16 stitches in her lip, came when she tripped over a phone cord and hit a door frame after slapping him.

"If I had hit her, the damage would have been so brutal and so far beyond that wound she had in her accident," he said. "If I had struck her, I would have done horrible damage to her. It's brutal what a man can do with his fists."

JACKSON, Tenn. (AP) — Miss America Kellye Cash, will perform with her great-uncle, country singer Johnny Cash, in her first visit home since winning the pageant, organizers say.

"We sold out so quick, we decided to sell balcony tickets," said Tom Hensley, president of the Miss Tennessee Pageant, which is organizing the Oct. 16 dinner show. "They will get to see the same show they just won't eat dinner."

Five other Miss America contestants also will appear on the program at the Jackson Civic Center.

Miss Cash will appear the day before at a reception at Memphis State University, where she was a student before winning the title in September.

Wallis

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — Hal B. Wallis, the pioneering movie-maker whose films won 32 Academy Awards, was remembered as the engineer behind the careers of Humphrey Bogart and Bette Davis and as one of the last all-around producers.

Wallis, who produced or supervised more than 400 films, including "Casablanca" and "The Maltese Falcon," died Sunday at age 88 at his Rancho Mirage home from complications of diabetes. He was buried in a private service Tuesday at Forest Lawn Cemetery here.

"He knew everything about every facet of the business," said Walter Seltzer, Wallis' publicity director for 16 years and later a producer himself.

"He had an uncanny sense for talent. He was a great script doctor and a marvelous editor of script and film. He knew how to work with directors and actors and he was an expert at advertising.

"Above all, he was tough," Seltzer said. "He may have seemed self-effacing to the public, but he could be tough with his staff."

At Wallis' request, announcement of his death was delayed until after Tuesday's funeral, said Marge Giddens, his longtime administrative aide.

Tuesday's service was attended only by Wallis' wife, actress Martha Hyer, his son, Brent, from a previous marriage, his accountant and a few other employees.

Wallis was never a self-promoter like Hollywood moguls Samuel Goldwyn and David O. Selznick. But some of those whose careers he fostered gave him the proper credit.

Miss Davis, given only minor roles at Warner Bros. in the early 1930s, was rescued by Wallis.

"It was Hal Wallis, as head of production at Warner Bros., who raised my status as regards scripts and directors," she wrote in 1974. "'Jezebel' was the real beginning of my box office years as a prestige star. He hired William Wyler as director. He gave me a superb cast. For the next five or six years, he brought me one great property after the other."

Miss Davis won an Oscar for "Jezebel," in 1938.

The 32 Oscars for Wallis' movies are a record for any one producer, as is the 121 Academy Award nominations.

But, as he admitted in later years, it wasn't always easy to persuade the actors to appear in his movies.

"I hunted all over the country for Gary Cooper who didn't want to do 'Sergeant York,'" he said. "And Jimmy Cagney sent his brother to explain why Jimmy didn't want to play George M. Cohan in 'Yankee Doodle Dandy.'"

Cooper and Cagney won Oscars for their efforts.

Other Academy Award winners in Wallis films included Paul Muni, "The Story of Louis Pasteur," 1936; Paul Lukas, "Watch on the Rhine," 1943; Shirley Booth, "Come Back, Little Sheba," 1952; Anna Magnani, "The Rose Tatoo," 1955; and John Wayne, "True Grit," 1969.

Another Warner Bros. actor who was grateful for Wallis' support was Ronald Reagan.

In his autobiography, "Where's The Rest of Me?" Reagan wrote of his dilemma over two scripts — one in which he would be the star and another in which he would co-star with Errol Flynn.

He left the decision to Wallis, who said he favored the Flynn picture, "Desperate Journey."

When Reagan admitted he leaned toward that film but was worried that Flynn might improve his role by having the script rewritten, Wallis responded, "I promise you, the script will be shot as it was written."

Despite Flynn's efforts to diminish Reagan's role, Wallis kept his word.

In one instance, however, Wallis ruled against the future president.

Reagan had been cast to play Rick Blaine in "Casablanca," but Wallis decided on Bogart instead.

Garn

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — U.S. Sen. Jake Garn says his donation of a kidney to his daughter was a "gift of life" that required no second thought.

"There was never any decision to be made," the Utah Republican said Tuesday. "The thing that is really special is to see her feeling so much better."

Garn, 53, who is still recovering from the surgery, appeared on KSL-TV with his daughter, Susan Rhae Horne, 27, whose own kidneys were failing because of a chronic condition.

"I feel very good. Everything has just gone very well. I'm getting more and more energy," Mrs. Horne said from Washington. "It's a very special thing that has happened."

Garn, who flew on the space shuttle, underwent the surgery Sept. 10 at Georgetown University Hospital in Washington.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Almost five years ago we suffered the loss of our newborn baby. I later called the hospital, hoping the photographer had been there before he died, but was told, "We take pictures only of the healthy babies, not the sick ones in case they die." (They are the ones that should be taken first, in case they do die!) We grieved not only for the baby but also because we didn't even have a picture of him to keep. Then one day a picture arrived in the mail unexpectedly — a nurse had taken one, and a doctor who knew we had been asking about it sent it to us. How elated we were, and how grateful to that dear nurse!

I have written the following to her, not only to thank her, but also to encourage other nurses in newborn nurseries to do the same. (A picture can always be left in the baby's file if he dies, and if the parents don't want it right away, it would be there for them if they changed their minds later.) We have met many parents now who'd give anything for a picture of their babies who died, but nobody thought to take one.

If you would print this, Abby, it might mean that hundreds of families will have pictures of their babies who might not otherwise. They, too, will be grateful to nurses, and to you. Sincerely, ELSIE SIEBEN, BROCKTON, MASS.

THANK YOU TO AN UNKNOWN NURSE

Somewhere there in the newborn nursery you go about your work unaware that someone you have never met has thought of you in gratitude a thousand times. You took the only picture of a dying baby (or maybe it was after he was already dead).

Perhaps nobody required you to do it, but you did it anyway, because you knew it might be important to someone. Maybe you knew his parents would want at least a picture of the baby they would never get to take home. You might have known his mother was in another hospital recovering from his traumatic birth, that she hadn't had a chance to really see him yet and maybe never would. Or maybe you just thought he deserved to be remembered.

Bless you, nurse. That was my baby, and I will be eternally grateful to you. You have given my husband and me the opportunity to see our son, to count his 10 little fingers and 10 little toes as all new parents do, and find the features he inherited from each of us. Otherwise we'd never know he had his father's chin and long, tall body, and my eyes and poker-straight hair, or that his little toe was crooked.

The picture has allowed us to see ourselves in our child as we would have done for a lifetime had he lived; without your thoughtfulness, that chance would have been lost to us forever. You have acknowledged our precious baby, and in so doing you have given us a priceless gift we will treasure for the rest of our lives. Thank you, nurse! — A Very Grateful Mother

DEAR ELSIE: Thank you for sending me that letter to share with my readers. It could bring everlasting joy to countless mothers who left the hospital with empty arms and heavy hearts.

DEAR ABBY: I just received an invitation to a bridal shower luncheon. It's being given by the mother of the groom. On the printed invitation was added a handwritten line that said: "Fee $18."

I called the hostess and asked what the $18 fee was for. She replied, "The fee is for the food and drinks, of course."

Abby, I have never been invited to a shower where the guests were asked to pay for their own food and drinks. What do you think of this? The real question is whether I should accept or not. — SHOCKED IN SACRAMENTO

DEAR SHOCKED: I think it's either a case of insufficient funds or ignorance, or possibly both. Go only if you can afford an $18 lunch plus a shower gift, and don't mind getting soaked.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

STUFFED-SHIRT STEAKS

2 beef top loin steaks, cut 1 inch thick (about 1 pound total)
Non-stick spray coating
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
2 tablespoons chopped onion
2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
2 tablespoons shredded carrot
1 small clove garlic, minced
¼ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Dash dried thyme, crushed

Make a pocket in each steak by cutting horizontally into the steak from one side almost to the opposite side. Spray a saucepan with non-stick coating. Add mushrooms, onion, green pepper, carrot, garlic, Worcestershire sauce and thyme. Cook and stir about 4 minutes or until vegetables are tender.

Spoon half the mixture into each steak pocket. Place steaks on a rack in an unheated broiler pan. Broil 4 inches from the heat until desired doneness, turning once.

Luncheon meat homemade

By MERLE ELLIS

Most American kitchens are wonderfully well equipped for all manner of meat processing. If you have a food processor, you have a piece of equipment not very dissimilar from a "silent cutter," one of the standard pieces of equipment in a commercial sausage kitchen used for the fine emulsions necessary for making products like bologna, mortadella, olive or pimento loaf. If you have an electric mixer, chances are that you have, or can get, a meat grinding attachment and a sausage stuffing tube to go with it. It's very probable that you might also have an old-fashioned hand grinder that your grandmother left you, gathering dust in some dark forgotten corner of your kitchen cupboard. It's almost a certainty that you have some pots and pans and mixing bowls. A stove and refrigerator are assumed, and your stove probably has an oven. With that, you have the basics of a meat processing plant and there is no end to the marvelous meat products you can make.

One of the basic products in most meat processing plants is what is called in the trade a "non-specific loaf." It's one of those all-purpose mixtures that lends itself to all manner of variations. It's the basic mix from which hot dogs are made, and if you stuff the same stuff into larger casings, it's called "bologna."

NON-SPECIFIC LOAF

1½ pounds boneless beef chuck
1 pound pork shoulder, not too lean
¾ pounds ice (10-12 cubes)
2 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon salt
5 teaspoons corn syrup
⅔ teaspoon white pepper
⅛ teaspoon nutmeg
¼ teaspoon paprika
⅛ teaspoon L-ascorbic acid (vitamin C)
⅛ teaspoon sodium nitrate (saltpeter)
3 tablespoons nonfat dried milk (optional)

Cut beef and pork into 1-inch cubes. Toss together with about half the ice. Put in bowl of food processor and sprinkle on salt.

Grind for a few seconds (about 15) until meat is about the consistency of hamburger. Add remaining ice, corn syrup, pepper, nutmeg, paprika, vitamin C, nitrate and dried milk. Grind until mixture is consistency of smooth paste (about 30-45 seconds).

Pour mixture into greased bread pan or pate mold. Place in preheated 325 degree oven and bake for about 1 hour and 45 minutes to internal temperature of 155-160 degrees. Use thermometer to be sure.

Remove from pans while still warm, cool at room temperature for 20-30 minutes. Place in freezer section of refrigerator for about 25 minutes to chill completely. Wrap in foil or plastic wrap and refrigerate. Use within 10 days or freeze.

This basic "non-specific loaf" recipe yields a product very like bologna. Here are a few ideas for turning it into other types of loaves:

■ Mortadella loaf: Add ½ teaspoon sugar to mix along with the other seasonings and stir ½ cup small (¼-inch) pork fat cubes into mixture before placing in loaf pan.

■ Olive loaf: Eliminate nutmeg and paprika from seasoning mix and add instead ½ teaspoon onion powder, ½ teaspoon ground celery seed and ¼ teaspoon allspice. Stir ½ cup small pitted olives into mixture before baking.

■ Pickle and pimento loaf: Replace olives in above mixture with ¼ cup diced pimento and ¼ cup diced sweet pickles.

Regional cooking popular

Associated Press

When America was young, a family's larder was limited to what they could raise, catch, shoot or swap in the area around their homestead. What each cook did with these ingredients depended largely on ethnic background as she tried to produce the remembered foods of the old country using the ingredients of the new land.

Imaginative cooks found new ways to use their limited store of ingredients. Eventually, certain recipes became associated with a particular valley or town. These regional foods predominated until refrigeration and rapid transportation multiplied the number of foods available to American grocery shoppers.

Now, according to Country Home magazine, creative cooks are rediscovering the flavors of regional cuisine by choice, not by necessity.

Some food authorities credit California's wine industry with initiating the revival of interest in regional food. For some time restaurants in the wine-growing valleys have featured California vintages and chefs have developed recipes showcasing local wines. This has increased awareness of the other dining delights the area offers — raisins, nuts, salad greens of all kinds, goat cheese made by local producers, and a dozen kinds of fruit, to name a few.

To "regionalize" the foods you cook, view a recipe as a guideline, not a rule, and adjust it to use foods in season.

Substitute broccoli for fresh asparagus in chicken rolls when the asparagus season ends. Feature tender peas, then fresh green beans from your own garden when each crop is at its best. Make potato salad with tiny new potatoes still in their jackets. Don't be afraid to substitute one kind of berry for another in tarts, one herb for another in a stew, or to add fresh wild greens to a salad.

If your country lifestyle stops at the garden gate, watch farmers' markets and roadside stands for seasonal produce.

Grill' fish or seafood without grill basket

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — No grill basket? Don't despair. You can still cook your favorite fish or seafood over an outdoor grill, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

Place a piece of greased heavy-duty foil over the grate. With a sharp knife, make holes or slits in the foil to allow the drippings to drain away from the fish or seafood.

Use grill tongs to turn the food, to prevent piercing the surface and releasing flavorful juices. If you don't have tongs, use a wide metal spatula. Slide the spatula between the food and foil, then turn.

Creole seasoning flavors pork roast

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

From its New Orleans home to restaurants and dinner tables across the country, Creole food is getting around. A melding of French and Spanish with a little Indian and African stirred in, Creole food is savory and full-flavored like Cajun, its close cousin. Tomatoes, onions, sweet green peppers and hot peppers are used with a generous hand.

CREOLE-SEASONED PORK ROAST

1 tablespoon butter or margarine
¼ cup chopped green pepper
¼ cup chopped onion
2 teaspoons Creole Seasoning
1 4-ounce can mushroom stems and pieces, drained
½ cup tomato paste
1 4- to 5-pound boneless pork loin roast, with string removed
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
¼ to ½ teaspoon Creole Seasoning

In a small saucepan melt butter; add green pepper, onion and 2 teaspoons Creole Seasoning. Cook until vegetables are tender; drain. Stir in mushrooms and ¼ cup of the tomato paste. Unroll roast; spread vegetable mixture over surface of roast. Roll meat and tie securely with string. Place meat on rack in shallow roasting pan. Roast at 325 degrees for 2½ to 3 hours or until thermometer registers 170 degrees. Remove meat to warm platter; keep warm.

Skim and reserve fat from pan juices; measure juices. Add water to juices to measure 1½ cups. Return 2 tablespoons fat to roasting pan (add oil if necessary to make 2 tablespoons). Stir in flour, ¼ to ½ teaspoon Creole Seasoning and remaining tomato paste. Add juices. Cook and stir until bubbly. To serve, slice roast, removing strings as meat is cut. Spoon some gravy over roast; pass remainder. Makes 12 to 15 servings.

Creole Seasoning: Combine ¼ cup ground red pepper, 3 tablespoons salt, 1 tablespoon chili powder, 1 tablespoon paprika, 1 tablespoon ground coriander, 1 tablespoon pepper, 2 teaspoons ground cloves and 1½ teaspoons garlic powder. Store tightly covered in a cool place. Makes ¾ cup.

Experts: Hot check writers' handiwork can be spotted

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

According to local law enforcement officials, the hot check writer is no better than a common thief; to merchants, a bane. But according to experts in the check protection business, hot check writers and their handiwork can be spotted.

Earl Francell, consultant and former owner of the InstaChek check protection system, said the depressed economy in the Permian Basin has cultivated more hot check writers.

"There are considerably more people passing checks now," Francell said. "And they are hard to collect."

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman, whose office handles hot checks written up to $750, said in the first six months of this year, the dollar amount of hot checks processed was greater than that in any previous year. He said his office will prosecute the offender unless the offense was the product of an honest mistake.

"It's no different if they went in there and stuffed their pockets with your merchandise," Dettman said.

Both made their comments at a seminar Tuesday by InstaChek on how to spot forged checks, and on the legal process that deals with offenders.

Dettman said his office has two full time employees, a full-time investigator during the summer and part-time otherwise, working solely on hot checks. He said his office emphasizes, above all else, restitution for the merchant.

Dettman said the drivers' license is the most important tool for identifying hot check writers. He said although some people feel this is obvious, any doubt to check and verify a drivers license is played by the crafty thieves.

"One of the usual tricks is to have a drivers' license number already printed on the check, and when a clerk asks for a drivers' license, the person questions why," he said. "And of course, a clerk that is younger and can be intimidated is likely to be picked. And, the drivers' license number, though it's on the check, does not exist."

Dettman said another usual maneuver is to ask for check numbers that begin, say, in the 1100s, instead of at 100. When a clerk sees check number 1142, the usual reaction is that the customer is well-established.

Bill Dunn, a check collection expert from Hobbs, said the hot check artist is a professional at casing a community such as Midland, ripping its people off, and skipping town.

He said the Midland area is ripe because it is relatively affluent and has many working people, and many of those move around constantly.

Dunn said a typical pro might come to town in a nice car, pulling a small two-wheel trailer. The pro takes an apartment, gets a phone, sets up just like any other newcomer Midland has seen so often. Then, he finds the biggest employer in town, and might get a job there to collect a payroll check or two.

"Relatively quickly, he knows what the check looks like, what kind of paper it is on, who signs it, everything about it," Dunn said. "Now he goes to that trailer, where he has his own printing press and paper, and goes to work."

Dunn said enough checks can be generated and cashed successfully that the pro can make $50,000 to $60,000 before he leaves the area.

He said merchants should pay attention to certain numbers that appear on every check, and can tip off its authenticity. He said at the bottom of every check, there is a number from one to 12, representing the 12 Federal Reserve banks in the country. Any check drawn on a Texas or New Mexico bank, Dunn said, will have the digits "11", which corresponds to the Federal Reserve Bank in Dallas. Any check drawn on a bank in one of those states that has a different "transit code" is phony, he said.

Midlanders to be at drug conference

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Texans are making a grassroots attempt to fight drug abuse in the schools and workplace.

With that in mind, Midland's own Council Against Substance Abuse Inc. and Prevention Using Student Help delegates will join other Texans Thursday in addressing problems of drug abuse at the Texans War On Drugs Annual Adult Leadership Conference in San Antonio.

Midlanders slated to attend the conference include Betsy Robinson, Becky Hardy, Pat Cobb and Steve Russell.

Theme for this year's conference is "Celebrate Texas. Create a Drug Free State."

Conferees will hear speakers discuss drug problems and attend workshops to share ideas on how to keep young people free of drugs.

Dr. Richard A. Hawley, author, poet and educator, will speak on "A School Answers Back" and "Schools Say No."

Hawley, headmaster of University School in Cleveland, Ohio, has written several papers and books on the role of the teacher, the effects of television on the adolescent and the impact of marijuana on the school.

Dr. Lee Crawford of Arizona State University will address the issue of "Drugs in the Workplace" and its effects on the national, state and local economy.

"Marijuana's effect on our personal pocketbooks is worse than that of income tax evasion and worse than the prime lending rate. Finacially, drugs are killing us," Crawford said in a prepared statement.

Calling drug abuse a national epidemic, Mrs. Hardy said chemicals have moved from the college campuses to the workplace to elementary schools.

One way to begin solving the problem is through local efforts by such organizations as CASA and PUSH, she said.

CASA is comprised of citizens and representatives of local organizations intent on eliminating substance abuse from the community.

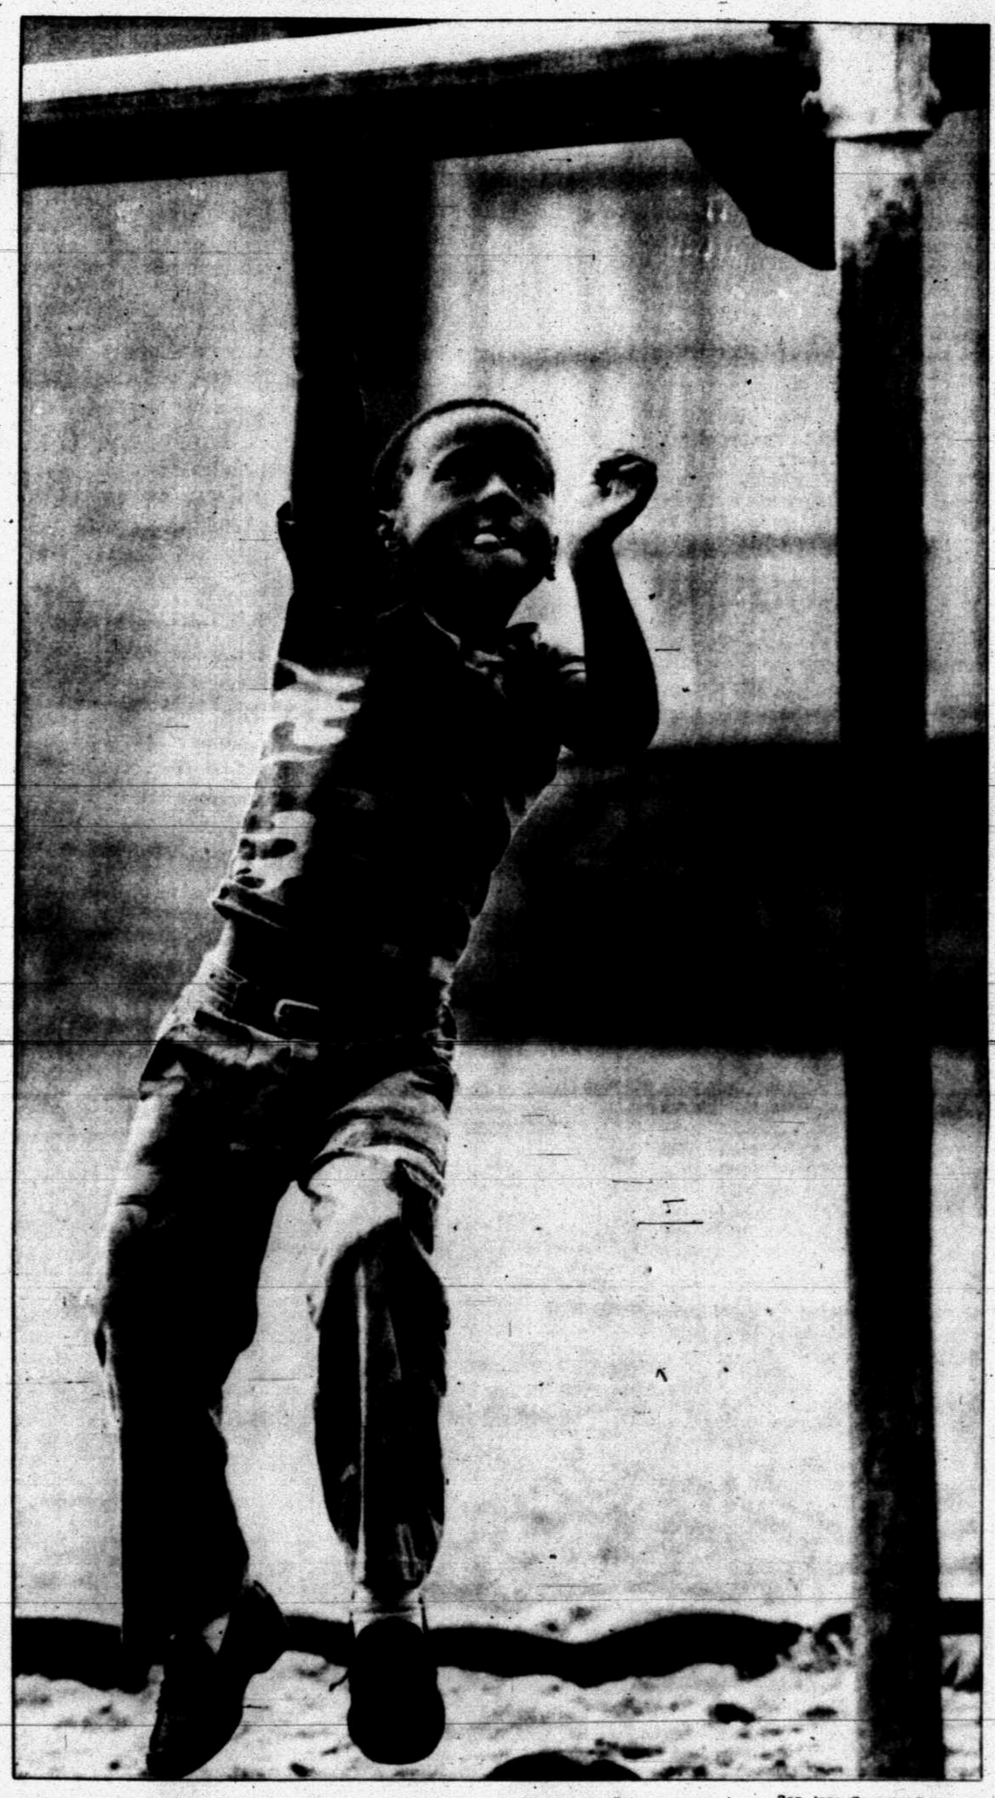

Its short-term goal, said Mrs. Robinson, is to develop a series of ongoing seminars, forums and discussion groups to further the momentum created by intervention programs.

The work of CASA also is designed to facilitate a greater exchange of ideas and programs between local substance abuse interevention and prevention programs, improve training facilities and equipment, develop relevant printed material and brochures, coordinate more effective operating guidelines and ensure necessary representation and active participation by its board of directors.

Mrs. Robinson said she anticipates the adult and student community will better realize the severity of substance abuse and be better equipped to recognize, deal with and react to the problem when it occurs through a concerted volunteer effort.

CASA and PUSH delegates will present the Midland plan to fight drug abuse at several seminars at the conference.

The organizations also will sponsor a "Say No to Drugs" rally for Midlanders at 1:30 p.m. Oct. 25 at ClayDesta Plaza.

B1B bomber will fly by during local aerobatic air show

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The world's largest operational aircraft, jet fighters, World War II "warbirds," and aerobatic aircraft will be featured in the Saturday, Oct. 18, air show sponsored by the West Texas Aerobatic Club of Midland-Odessa.

And a low-level fly-by is scheduled on the eve of the show by the supersonic Rockwell International B1B bomber, which is replacing the B-52 as the nation's primary defense bomber.

Aerobatic pilots will demonstrate aerial ballet if the azure West Texas sky prevails over clouds, rain, wind and storms.

The show will begin at 1 p.m. at Midland Regional Airport.

"Aerobatics is a safe sport, and it is precision flying — not stunt flying such as flying through barns, wing-walking and things like that," said Paul Erdmann, president of the West Texas Aerobatic Club, which is sponsoring the event.

"Precision aerobatics is one thing, and stunt flying is another," he said. "We do not do stunt flying."

World-class aerobatic pilots who are to perform in the show include Gene Beggs of Midland-Odessa and Dr. Julie Pfile of Albuquerque, N.M. Beggs and Ms. Pfile, who fly the biwing Pitts Special S1T, are members of the U.S. World Aerobatic Team. They fly in the unlimited — "the ultimate" — category of aerobatics.

Other aerobatic pilots who are to fly in the show include Ole Olsen, Pat Day, Dale Sorensen, Fred Miehna and Richard Osborn, all of Midland; James Jones and Carl Bingham, both of Odessa; Kirk Fulton of Lubbock; Gene Smith of El Paso; and John Goble of San Angelo.

Also to be featured in the show will be Sweetwater's Bob Sears, a touring aerobatic pilot who appears as "The Avenger" — a black costumed super-hero who sets the world right in his "daring feats" and in his carrying out "law and order" and ensuring the pursuit of happiness, said Erdmann.

Erdmann noted that Ms. Pfile "is the second best woman pilot in the world." In the World Aerobatic Championships in England last August, she came in second among the women pilots. Winning first was Liubov Nemkova of the Soviet Union. She flew the Sukhoi Su-26M monoplane. A French aviatrix came in third place.

The show here will be opened by a skydiving performance by Jim Fowler's Parachute Club, which is based at Eagle's Nest Airport. In their descent, the skydivers will do aerobatic maneuvers.

Afterward, the aerobatic pilots will take to the air. Their flying routines will include hammerhead stalls, loops, snap rolls, rolling 360s, Cuban 8s and tumbling acts, Erdmann said.

> "Aerobatics is a safe sport, and it is precision flying — not stunt flying, such as flying through barns, wing-walking and things like that. Precision aerobatics is one thing, and stunt flying is another. We do not do stunt flying."
> — Paul Erdmann president West Texas Aerobatic Club

Erdmann said that the B1B, which is based at Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene, was not authorized to land here but would do some low-level flying over Midland on Oct. 17.

It will be flying around town on Friday (Sept. 18), Erdmann said. The B1B is going to make passes to support our show.

On static display during the show will be the Lockheed C5-A Galaxy, the United States Air Force's largest transport, which frequently flies over the Midland-Odessa area and makes "touch and go" landings and take-offs at Midland Regional Airport. The Galaxy is based in San Antonio.

Spectators will be allowed to tour the C5-A but will not be permitted in the cockpit because of the world-wide threat of terrorist activities, which makes sense, Erdmann said. "It's a $100-million airplane."

Other U.S. Air Force aircraft flying to Midland Regional Airport for the show will include the McDonnell Douglas F-15 Eagle, and the General Dynamics F-16 jet fighters and the Northrop T-38 Talon. The T-38, when modified for combat, is known as the "Freedom Fighter."

Also on display will be Confederate Air Force World War II warbirds, including George Steding's BT-13 Vibrator and Bill Coombes' SNJ.

Outside the static display of aircraft, the "ground show" will feature exhibits and booths by the Armed Forces recruiters — U.S. Army, U.S. Air Force, U.S. Navy and the U.S. Marine Corps.

No admission will be charged to the show, said Erdmann. However, donations at the gate will be accepted to benefit West Texas Aerobatic Club, which is Chapter 71 of the International Aerobatic Club.

Worker, ex-worker file shigellosis-related claims

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The number of shigellosis-associated claims has grown larger with the filing of two workman's compensation claims made on Sept. 11 by Odessa Taco Villa employees.

Ruff Adhers, an Odessa attorney, said this morning he is representing one former and one current Taco Villa employee in claims they have filed through the Industrial Accident Board against the Workman's Compensation Insurance Co.

Ahders explained he believes the two may have contracted shigellosis after eating at the Taco Villa restaurant in Odessa where the two were employed.

However, one may not claim damages against his employer initially, Adhers said, and must go through the proper channels with the Industrial Accident Board in Austin.

"We are waiting for a hearing with the Industrial Accident Board right now," Ahders said.

"They would be asking for lost wages associated with their coming down with shigellosis, but we need to prove they did in fact contract shigellosis from their employer," he added.

Ahders said the employees would in essence, have been injured on the job, and one may not sue the employers until he has first gone through the Industrial Accident Board.

Numbers have now crept up to 129 shigellosis cases in Midland County and 210 cases in Ector County, health officials from both counties said.

Dr. Harold Davis, an epidemiologist with the Texas Department of Health in Austin has closed the book on the investigation in Midland and Ector counties, but could not be reached for comment this morning.

Entire family gets into the act at San Angelo's civic theater

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Five years ago, when Clayton McLucas was 8 years old, his ballet teacher asked if he would join the cast of "Oklahoma" then rehearsing at the Angelo Civic Theatre.

Clayton, now 13, said yes. His lively family of five, headed by C.J. "Mac" McLucas decided to get into the act. While Clayton sang and danced, the rest of the family, Jessica, 16; Chris, 15; Lillian, 14; and mother Debbie McLucas worked on the set and volunteered for other backstage chores.

The McLucas clan has contributed to 17 productions since. They have acted, built sets, worked the sound and light system, ushered and staffed the ticket booth. Five family members played in Archibald McLeish's "J.B." In 1982, the Georgie award was presented to the entire family for "Blood, Sweat and Tears," because they had attended every workday that season.

McLucas is stage manager for the upcoming production "Man of La Mancha," Oct. 16-19 and 22-25. Family members are helping with the set design, he said. Mrs. McLucas will abandon her usual spot in the ticket booth. She is a recent nursing graduate, and her work hours often conflict with production dates, she said.

Over the years, the family has developed expertise in theater techniques. Clayton and Chris have become good carpenters on the backstage crew, McLucas said.

"I would not hesitate taking this family into any theater in the United States and say I've got a technical crew," McLucas said.

The acting bug bit McLucas and Jessica. McLucas recalled his first acting role. "It was in 'South Pacific.' Somebody said something, and I did a double take. The audience chuckled. I got a high I'd never experienced before." Since then, McLucas has had his share of uplifting — and deflating experiences.

McLucas recalled how he once waited for his cue to stride onstage. As he shifted weight, McLucas discovered his spurs had hooked into the hem of his blue jeans. "I hear my cue line for the third time, and I've got my feet hooked together," McLucas said with a chuckle.

Besides providing a good family activity, the theater has given McLucas and Jessica something to share, McLucas said. "The boys and I hunt and fish together...but what do you talk to a 17-year-old girl about? We have a common ground to close the generation gap." Father and daughter attended several theater productions in New York City on a vacation together this summer, McLucas said.

"We do just as well as Broadway here. We saw 'Arsenic and Old Lace' and ACT will do that in December. I have no doubt we'll be at the same quality of performance," McLucas said. "I've heard people who traveled to Boston for business say they spent $40 to see the same thing they can see here."

Trailers evacuated when gas tank leaks

From Staff Reports

Two trailer houses in west Midland County were evacuated late Tuesday after propane gas started leaking from a just-filled tank, but the tank was emptied about 2 a.m. today and the area declared safe, fire officials said.

There were no injuries reported.

Two fire units responded to a report of a propane leak just before 8 p.m., at a trailer house on County Road 123W, just east of CR1313N.

Randy Scannell, who reported the leak, told fire officials a 250-gallon tank had just been filled, but was leaking due to a broken valve.

"The valve was on the end of the tank, and we couldn't plug it," said Eddie Klatt, fire batallion chief. "Upon arrival on the scene, we evacuated the trailer behind the tank, and another trailer to the west. And we cautioned everyone in the area against any actions that might have caused any ignition, whether it be lighting a match or flipping an electrical switch."

Klatt said the danger to the area was real, and deputies from the Midland County Sheriff's office blocked off the area.

"Propane does funny things in cool weather," Klatt said. "It is very flammable, of course, and it tends to lie and collect in low areas. One match, or something like that and we could have had a flash."

Klatt said the tank finally emptied by itself about 2 a.m. He said officials from Phillips 66 had been called in to watch the leak.

Pastor trying to decide whether to surrender to authorities

Son accepts warrant for Otwell's arrest

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Rev. W.N. Otwell, embroiled in a legal conflict over operation of an unlicensed boys' home, was at an undisclosed location today trying to decide whether to turn himself in to authorities who seek to arrest him, his son said.

Three sheriff's deputies, carrying an arrest warrant, went Tuesday to Community Baptist church in the southeast Fort Worth suburb of Forest Hill, but the minister was not there.

The church grounds were protected by a steel cable and patrolled by guard dogs when the deputies arrived about 9:30 a.m.

"We don't know where he is, and I don't have any way of contacting him," Rocky Otwell, 27, said shortly after the deputies left the church grounds.

"He's trying to decide whether it is worth it to go to jail," said the younger Otwell, associate pastor of the church, who said he would continue operating the boy's home if his father is jailed. "He's praying and trying to decide what is the right thing to do."

Otwell said he expects his father to contact the church, through some means, to let his supporters know his plans.

Earlier, the younger Otwell had met the three sheriff's deputies in front of the church and was handed a warrant for his father's arrest.

The warrant was issued by a state district judge in Austin, who ordered Otwell's arrest Monday after Otwell left a courtroom before a hearing on a contempt-of-court charge. Otwell has been fighting the state over his refusal to seek a Texas license for his home for troubled boys.

Otwell's son and other supporters who met the sheriff's deputies wore "sackcloth" sweaters of burlap over their clothing.

The sackcloth, mentioned in the Bible in connection with mourning, symbolizes "the death of religious freedom in Texas," said Jack Finkle, one of the church's supporters.

Otwell's son said nine people are being fined daily and the total is now more than $400,000. His father has said he won't pay the fine, the younger Otwell said.

His father preached both services Sunday at Community Baptist, he added. "His theme was that the price of freedom is great, but the price of slavery is greater," Otwell said.

Attorney General Jim Mattox said he was not surprised that Otwell skipped the hearing.

"He has a disdain for public authority and he has repeatedly proven that he is an outlaw within our society," Mattox said.

But the attorney general said he would stick with the cautious approach he has chosen in the case, a course aimed at avoiding a confrontation at the church.

"Rev. Otwell has said if we go up there, there's going to be blood running in the streets," Mattox said.

"In the name of God, people have committed violence all over this world for many centuries. So I do not at all doubt that they have that kind of potential," he said of Otwell and his supporters.

Mattox said the court-ordered survey of the church property will be conducted, and the property will be sold to pay the $100-a-day penalties ordered by State District Judge Paul Davis of Austin, who Monday said Otwell owed $13,400.

"I could just throw him in jail," Mattox said. "But the fact is he wants to be made a martyr of, and I'm not interested in creating martyrs. I'm interested in enforcing the law the best we can.

"We've seen people do rather irrational things in our society, lock themselves in facilities with guns and armaments," he said.

Mattox said "by and large, most of the children" have been removed by their parents from the church home.

Physical therapy lobby seeks to change referal law

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texans suffering from back, sports and other injuries are spending millions of unnecessary dollars by having to seek physician referrals to physical therapy, the Texas Physical Therapy Association said Tuesday.

To change that, the association will lobby to amend an "unnecessary and outdated law" that prevents people from seeking physical therapy without referral from a physician, dentist, chiropractor or podiatrist, said Susan McPhail, president of the 2,000-member association.

"This would give patients greater accessibility to health care and provide lowers costs for health care," Ms. McPhail said.

Unnecessary referrals for physical therapy cost patients and the state between $3.9 and $10 million annually, she said.

Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, who said a law that allows direct patient access could help "curtail the spiraling costs of health care," said his Committee on Health and Human Resources will conduct public hearings on the issue when the Legislature convenes in regular session in January.

But the Texas Medical Association opposes the idea, saying that only licensed physicians are qualified to diagnose physical injuries.

"In order for physical therapists to provide correct therapy, they need a correct diagnosis," said TMA spokeswoman Lisa Stark Walsh.

Ms. McPhail said 12 states recently have passed laws to allow patients access to physical therapy without referrals.

Although physical therapists welcome referrals on many injuries, Ms. McPhail said, training of therapists has advanced to where "there are many cases that we can treat right off the streets."

Physical therapists treat a variety of physical injuries, including fractures, strokes, sports injuries and back injuries, which are most common, she said.

Someone who hurts his back can come to us directly to relieve the pain," she said.

Brooks said an amendment to the Texas Physical Therapy Act, which was passed in 1971, could "achieve significant cost containment."

Tree seedlings to be available for erosion protection

From Staff Reports

Midlanders who wish to protect their land from wind erosion may obtain windbreak tree seedlings through the Midland Soil and Water Conservation District, according to Dick Hagelstein, district conservationist.

The district is taking orders for the windbreak-tree seedlings in its continuing efforts to reduce wind erosion.

The trees, both hardwoods and conifers (evergreens), will be delivered in late February 1987, Hagelstein said.

"Trees are to be used to protect farmsteads or any rural or suburban area that may be subject to wind erosion," Hagelstein said. "The trees are for windbreak planting only and are not to be purchased for re-sale."

The conservation district will provide information on how and where to plant the trees.

Hardwoods to be made available to Midlanders include Russian olive, pecan, Burr oak, desert willow, Green ash, and Skunkbush sumac. Conifers include Afghanistan pine, Arizona cypress, Austrian pine, Ponderosa pine and red cedar.

Hagelstein said the sale price for the seedlings is very reasonable.

Hardwoods, which mature to a height of 20 to 25 feet, will sell for $40 for 100 seedlings. Conifers will sell for $40 for 30 seedlings.

Those who wish to plant windbreak trees may want to consider installing water systems to ensure survival of the trees, Hagelstein said. He said that the conservation district can design trickle systems and will have information on water systems available when the trees are delivered in the last week of February. Orders should be made "as soon as possible" due to the short supply of some species.

Order forms may be obtained by telephoning the U.S. Soil Conservation Service (SCS) Office at 684-8722 or by visiting the office at 1348 S. Fairgrounds Road.

Man jailed for driving through apartment complex gate

From Staff Reports

Midland police have a 19-year-old Midland man in jail today after he allegedly drove a car through the gate at a local apartment complex.

Police received a report that a car had driven through a gate at the Saddle Club Apartments, 5101 N. Ave A, just before 3 a.m. today. The man was arrested on a charge of felony criminal mischief shortly afterward near the intersection of Avenue A and Loop 250. Police said he was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital but was not seriously injured.

Police are investigating several burglaries, including one that netted burglars percussion equipment valued at more than $2,000.

Eddie J. Livingston, 4506 W. Dengar Ave., told police that 11 cymbals valued at $1,500, 11 cymbal stands valued at $1,100, two foot pedals valued at $270, a snare drum valued at $235, a leather cymbal bag valued at $65, and other accessories valued at $250 were stolen from his residence. Reports said the items were stolen Tuesday between 2:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m.

A paint sprayer valued at $1,099 and accessories valued at $220 were reported stoen from a residence in the 2900 block of West Kentucky, police said. According to reports, the items were taken sometime between Aug. 1 and Oct. 7. Police have a suspect in the burglary.

Police are also investigating the burglary of a local residence of tools valued at several hundred dollars. According to reports, several wrenches, ratchets, and other tools were stolen from a residence in the 2900 block of West Kentucky, sometime between Sept. 29 and Oct. 7.

In other reports, a radar detector valued at $300, an amplifier valued at $200, and two speakers valued at $150 were stolen from a residence in the 1100 block of East Maple Ave. Reports said the items were taken Wednesday between 2:30 a.m. and 4:15 a.m.

People abducted from Valley home

AUSTIN (AP) — A drug deal could have been involved in the abduction of seven people from a Rio Grande Valley home, an incident which has resulted in the arrest of three Mexicans, including one with state police credentials, authorities said.

Two women and five children were abducted Sept. 11 from a residence in Donna, and taken to a residence in Brownsville, David Wells, a Department of Public Safety spokesman, said Tuesday.

The seven were kept in Brownsville for a day and then released, according to investigative reports. None was harmed, Wells said.

"They went back to Donna and contacted local police down there. Donna police got assistance from Texas Rangers and investigators from the Cameron County District Attorney's office," Well said.

FAMILY

Jessica, a senior at San Angelo Central High School, has decided to major in theater in college. "I want to be a producer, director and an actress. I told Alan (Justice, director of ACT) that I wanted his job in 10 years. He said, 'Show me a Ph.D., I'll walk out.'"

Lillian, Clayton and Chris said they prefer to work backstage. They spend their Saturdays building sets. The youths are good carpenters, according to Richard Nance, assistant director of ACT.

"We've watched them all grow up," he said. "I'm crazy about them."

The McLucases say Nance and Justice made them feel welcome and found tasks for each family member. As the years passed, Nance and Justice taught them more difficult lessons in stage techniques and acting methods.

McLucas, a retired Army sergeant turned accountant, said he has enjoyed "a new way of thinking." Instead of consulting manuals and following procedures, McLucas likes to find his own way. For example, he was once told to build a rock. "There are no plans to build a rock; I had to figure it out," he said.

Also, the family has enjoyed the communal life of the theater volunteers. "They're like a family. It's like having more than one mom and dad or big brothers and sisters," Jessica said.

Lillian recounted a prank the backstage crew played on Jessica, who was in charge of props for "You Can't Take It With You." One of the items was a small plastic alligator. The crew bought another, identical alligator, cut it up and pasted the parts onto an empty Spam can. When Jessica spotted the altered alligator on the prop table, "It scared her so bad..." Lillian recalled.

One of Lillian's customary tasks was to hang the letters announcing the show on the theater marquee. "I didn't mind climbing the high ladder," she said. Lillian said she changed the marquee for about 16 shows. A new marquee that does not require Lillian's nerve was installed two years ago.

CHECKS

Dunn said it is possible, using the technology of color copiers, to copy checks. He said merchants should beware of these, and should look for two things: paper dullness and perforation.

He said that the magnetic ink used on checks is dull, but when it is photocopied, the characters appear shiny. Also, all checks should have some indication or mark of perforation. Check artists cut their checks, he said, leaving no such mark.

Dettman said the first and simplest rule of thumb for accepting checks is also the most effective.

"The drivers' license is the most important thing you have, and it is the most important thing we must have," he said. "It is an individual identifying characteristic, something that sets someone apart."

U.S. denies official link to downed plane

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials are insisting that an American-manned cargo plane shot down over leftist-ruled Nicaragua had no connection to the U.S. government, despite claims that the surviving crewman had ties to the CIA.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, the White House and the Central Intelligence Agency rejected charges from Nicaragua's Sandinista government that three Americans onboard — two of whom died — were on a CIA mission.

But confusion over the flight grew Tuesday as private American aid groups that have supported the Nicaraguan Contra rebels also denied involvement, the survivor's relatives linked him to the CIA, and the administration clearly withheld some information about the incident.

The survivor of the crash was identified as Eugene Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis. Nicaraguan army officers said one of the dead crew members was a Nicaraguan and the other two were Americans identified as Wallace Blaine Sawger Jr. and Bill Cooper. Their hometowns were not available.

In an interview, Shultz said the plane had been "hired by private people" who "had no connection with the U.S. government at all." But he did not identify the private individuals.

A U.S. intelligence source who insisted on anonymity said the CIA also knew that the flight originated at El Salvador's Ilopongo military airport, traveled down Nicaragua's west coast, crossed into northern Costa Rica and then turned northward into Nicaragua where it was shot down.

The source said the munitions on the flight were intended for rebels belonging to the Honduran-based Nicaraguan Democratic Force, FDN, operating in south-central Nicaragua.

The FDN was organized and supplied by the CIA from 1981 until 1984 when Congress cut off aid and banned U.S. government assistance to the rebels. Last summer, however, Congress reversed itself and approved President Reagan's request for $100 million in military and other aid.

Kathy Pherson, a spokeswoman for the CIA, denied that the agency had any involvement with the incident, noting there are continuing "congressional restrictions on aid to the Contras and we do not violate those restrictions."

Retired Maj. Gen. John K. Singlaub, who has raised private aid for the Contras, and Civilian Material Assistance, a paramilitary group which has sent trainers to the rebels, denied responsibility for the plane.

In an interview from New Orleans, Mario Calero, the brother of FDN leader Adolfo Calero and head of FDN supply operations, said "this has not anything to do with Jack Singlaub."

NBC News, citing unidentified Contra and administration officials, reported Tuesday night that the plane was piloted by American mercenaries and financed by a foreign government friendly to U.S. interests.

Contra officials told NBC each man got several thousand dollars a flight and that at least two flights a month were made from a secret base in El Salvador.

Meanwhile, conflicting information emerged about Hasenfus, the survivor of the crash.

David Holliday, spokesman for the Senate Intelligence Committee, said Hasenfus' wife, Sally, called the State Department "and said her husband worked for CIA (but) CIA says that's absolutely untrue."

I.W. Stephenson, a retired pilot and aviation executive, said Hasenfus told him more than 20 years ago that he was going to work in Vietnam for Air America, then a corporation secretly owned by the CIA.

"One day, he (Hasenfus) said he was going back to work for Air America as a loadmaster," Stephenson, who now lives in Menominee, Mich., said in an interview. "He said there was good money in it." A loadmaster readies supplies for airdrops.

Stephenson said Hasenfus' brother, William, later confirmed that Eugene was working for Air America in Indochina and was "making more money than the law allowed." William could not be reached to comment about Stephenson's statement.

In other Nicaraguan developments Tuesday:

— Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, called for a House investigation into the Nicaragua crash and another one in Texas on Saturday to determine if they were sponsored by the CIA. The Texas crash killed three civilians on what Gonzalez said appeared to be a mission to supply the Contras.

— The chairman and vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, Sens. David Durenberger, R-Minn., and Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said they accepted CIA assurances that the man had no connection to the agency.

"It makes no sense for them to mislead us now," Leahy said, "because the truth will come out. It always does."

Both senators, however, questioned the administration's encouragement of private efforts to aid the Contras or disrupt the Sandinista government.

"It will bother me if this turns out to be connected with adjunct soldiers of fortune sent out there with a wink and nod or a shrug as a way of getting around our foreign policy or the law," Leahy said.

Durenberger added: "I share the concern that once you issue a credit card for so-called freedom fighting you get a lot of people who want to use it."

— Also on Capitol Hill, four men who are fasting against Contra aid rejected an appeal from lawmakers to end their fast. The leader, Charles Liteky, said they preferred death to American involvement in a Central American war.

As for Hasenfus, Defense Department files show he served with the Marines from 1960 to 1965 as an air delivery specialist trained as a parachute rigger for equipment drops — "missions similar to the one into Nicaragua."

But the official records show him never leaving the United States and stationed at Camp Pendleton in California. His brother William, other relatives and his acquaintance, Stephenson, said Hasenfus served in Vietnam.

William Hasenfus added that Eugene, who was unemployed for several months this spring, went to work for a Florida air freight company during the summer, but he did not know the name.

Officials for Southern Air Transport in Florida and MarkAir Inc. of Alaska — two firms that reportedly have flown supplies to the Contras — denied knowing Hasenfus or having any information about the Sunday flight.

The Nicaraguan Defense Ministry said the plane believed to have been a C-123 tactical transport was shot down with a Soviet-made surface-to-air missile at 12:45 p.m. Sunday. The ministry said the plane carried at least 50,000 rounds of ammunition for AK-47 automatic rifles, dozens of rifles, an unspecified number of rocket-propelled grenades and other equipment for the Contras.

But The Washington Times, quoting unnamed Contra sources, said in today's editions that the plane was not shot down, but crash landed. Contra officials believe three members of the crew were killed by Sandinista soldiers on the ground.

Eugene Hasenfus, left, a 45-year-old American who survived when the cargo plane in which he was riding was shot down by Sandinista soldiers, speaks to newsmen in Managua Tuesday. Above, Hasenfus is led away from the crash site Sunday.

Brother calls Hasenfus 'adventurer'

MARINETTE, Wis. (AP) — An American man who was aboard a plane shot down over Nicaragua is an adventurer who "goes looking for trouble," his brother says.

And the father of Eugene Hasenfus said he didn't approve of the work that brought his son to Central America.

Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, was being held by the leftist Nicaraguan government today, three days after the cargo plane he was in was shot down. Three people died in the crash.

Hasenfus told reporters in Nicaragua he was an aviation specialist, but did not say if he was a civilian or in the military.

Officials in Washington said the plane did not belong to the U.S. government, and a CIA spokeswoman denied Nicaraguan claims that Hasenfus worked for the agency.

William Hasenfus Sr. said Tuesday his son came out of the Marine Corps more patriotic than when he entered.

"He was a different boy when he came out of the Marines — he wanted to do more for what he fought for," the elder Hasenfus said. "He was more patriotic, I guess you would say."

The younger Hasenfus' wife, Sally, was secluded in her home Tuesday trying to learn about her husband. The couple has three children.

"I don't know where he is and what he's doing," she said in a telephone interview. "I only know what I see on the TV, too, and I really don't know any more."

William Hasenfus Jr., of Oshkosh, said his brother was working for Southern Air Transport Co., an air freight company in Florida. He said he and his brother once ran a parachuting school.

Eugene Hasenfus "was the type of guy who goes looking for trouble," his brother said.

Their father, who said he hadn't seen his son since May, when he left home to work in Florida, saw Hasenfus on televisidn Tuesday haggard-looking, unshaven and surrounded by soldiers.

"He looks scared," said Hasenfus, 69. "With all those guys around him with guns and all that."

Hasenfus said he had never heard that his son was involved with the CIA or in any kind of undercover work.

"I really disapprove of this," he said. "I didn't think he was going into it this far."

Incident revives talk of 'southern front'

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The downing of a plane laden with supplies apparently destined for anti-Sandinista rebels has sparked new speculation about a southern front in the U.S.-supported war against Nicaragua's leftist government.

The plane was shot down by Sandinista army gunners Sunday about 25 miles north of the Costa Rican border in an area of southern Nicaragua that has seen very little fighting in more than a year.

Three crewmen aboard the aircraft died and a fourth, identified as Eugene Hasenfus, 45, was captured. The Sandinistas said the plane was flying a supply mission to the Contra rebels.

"My name is Gene Hasenfus. I come from Marinette, Wis. I was captured yesterday in southern Nicaragua. Thank you," the red-haired man said during a 20-second appearance at a Tuesday news conference in Managua, the capital of Nicaragua.

The Sandinistas said two of his crewmates were Americans and the third a Nicaraguan.

The origin and destination of the C-123 were not known, but the fact that it was shot down in a remote, jungled and relatively tranquil area of southern Nicaragua fueled fresh speculation about Contra plans and activities.

The only rebel group known to operate in southern Nicaragua on a regular basis is the Nicaraguan Revolutionary Armed Forces, known by its Spanish-language initials as FARN.

It is affiliated with the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, or FDN, the largest of several guerrilla groups trying to overthrow the Sandinistas.

The FDN, which operates out of base camps in southern Honduras, Nicaragua's northern neighbor, claims about 20,000 men. Most observers, however, say FARN fields no more than 500 and has been largely inactive since its founding about two years ago by Fernando "El Negro" Chamorro.

The FDN has confined its fighting primarily to northern and central Nicaragua although small patrols of FDN guerrillas have ventured as far south as the Costa Rican border on occasion.

Two acknowledged FDN guerrillas surrendered to Costa Rican authorities in July after a firefight with Sandinista troops along the border.

"It's difficult to say what the plane was doing in southern Nicaragua, whether it was bound for someplace farther north or was resupplying FARN or perhaps even FDN forces in the south," said one diplomatic source.

"To my knowledge there is no major rebel force in southern Nicaragua, although I don't think it is any secret that the FDN would like to open a southern front," the source said.

American priest expelled while visiting his mother in Nicaragua

MIAMI (AP) — An American priest who traveled to Nicaragua to see his dying mother was detained, interrogated and then kicked out of his native land, he said.

The Rev. William Muniz, who left Nicaragua in 1978 and became a U.S. citizen, heads the anti-Sandinista "Coalition for Freedom in Nicaragua" in the United States, a fact he said Nicaraguan officials Sunday obviously knew.

"They detained me, interrogated me, intimidated me and moved me around from place to place," the Episcopalian priest told The Associated Press Tuesday.

Muniz, who also directs Hispanic Ministries for the diocese of the Rio Grande covering New Mexico and West Texas and serves as rector of the San Clemente de Roma parish in El Paso, Texas, said he was not physically threatened.

But he was never allowed out of the airport.

"They told me flatly I am not welcome in Nicaragua, not today, not tomorrow, not ever," he said.

His interrogators did not allow him to call the U.S. Embassy or anyone else, he said.

Congressman urges probes of plane crashes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. congressman on Tuesday called for a House probe into two air crashes that occurred within the past week in Texas and Nicaragua to determine if they were part of a covert CIA operation aimed at toppling the Sandinista government.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, charged that a civilian cargo plane that crashed at a Texas military base was on a secret CIA mission carrying weapons to American-backed rebels in Nicaragua.

A smaller plane that reportedly crashed inside Nicaraguan near the Honduran border was also on a CIA-backed mission, Gonzalez said at a late afternoon news conference.

In letters to Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services; and Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, Gonzalez asked for an investigation into whether the CIA was linked with the crashes.

"Under the authorization granted to the CIA in 1947 there is nothing to allow them to operate as a paramilitary operation," Gonzalez said.

He also said pilots were being hired to fly aircraft for civilian aviation companies contracted by the CIA to carry out missions in support of covert operations based in Honduras for the Nicaraguan Contra rebel forces.

Those civilian air transport companies are not being regulated by the federal government nor by the military, which results in many aircraft being flown that are not airworthy, Gonzalez said.

"You have these aircraft operating in a twilight zone, that not only continue to menace the military bases, but the citizens and communities living in the vacinity," Gonzalez said.

"Naturally if they were a military craft they would not be eligible to pilot that craft, but the base commander has to allow them to land."

In a related development, Gonzalez said that the CIA is offering $25,000 to Spanish-speaking Texans for a year's duty in Central America through the Texas Employment Commission and the Veteran's Service Officer.

"It's all tied together," he said.

Gonzalez first made the accusation about the CIA and the ill-fated cargo plane that crashed at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio on the House floor Monday and he held a new conference Tuesday to discuss his allegations.

"In San Antonio, the Texas Employment Commission, through its veteran service officer, is attempting to recruit 1,000 Chicanos, Spanish-speaking, for unaccompanied tours for one year in Central America," he said at the news conference. "(People) who have a background of experience in small arms and communications."

Gonzalez produced copies of an internal memo from the TEC describing a job in which employees would be sent to Central and South America for training in "small arms procurement, field medical, ... physical security, aircraft maintenance ... Must pass security clearance."

Asked if he was saying mercenaries are being recruited, he earlier replied, "That's what it amounts to."

Gene Brieger, supervisor of placement field services for the TEC in San Antonio, said Tuesday that the agency received an order from Central Texas College in Killeen and is trying to fill it.

He said in a government contract, companies are required to list jobs with state employment agencies.

"They're required by federal orders to place orders with us," Brieger said. "Receiving this is not any big deal."

He said the order asks for 1,000 people to be trained in different subjects for jobs in Central and South America, including radio communications, wheel, vehicle and aircraft maintenance, small arms and weapons procurement with prior military experience and fluency in Spanish.

The pay is $25,000 per year for one year, including food and lodging, Brieger said.

"Obviously (Gonzalez) has information we don't have," Brieger said.

He said he did not know where the college got its order.

Alvin Ornstein, deputy chancellor at Central Texas College in Killeen, did not return phone calls to the AP on Tuesday.

However, in a written statement released to the Killeen Daily Herald, Ornstein said, "Marketing preparations were made in anticipation of a project that didn't materialize. The Texas Employment Commission was asked to assist in this effort, and they did publish information about employment opportunities with the AEC (American Educational Complex).

"Unfortunately, TEC personnel were led to believe that the AEC had a contract already, and this recruiting effort was to meet the requirements of this contract," the statement said.

"The TEC was asked to discontinue its efforts because the project was closed down. No contract existed at the time of the recruitment effort and none is now anticipated," the statement said. Ornstein said that since the Gramm-Rudman cuts took place, the Department of Defense has curtailed some of its contracting activities and has not solicited the teaching services of the AEC.

The plane that crashed early Saturday at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio was owned by Southern Air Transport, a Miami-based company which Gonzalez said has a history of CIA involvement.

The three-man crew aboard the Lockheed 100 Hercules L-382G, a civilian version of the C-130 cargo plane, was killed when the aircraft struck a hangar and the Base Operations Building shortly after takeoff.

Bill Kress, marketing director for Southern Air Transport, said Gonzalez' accusations are unfounded.

"We don't know where he's getting his information from," Kress said. "We're just having to categorically deny all his accusations. Any word coming out of his mouth is ludicrous, totally false."

Gonzalez' comments followed claims by the Sandinista government in Nicaragua that its troops had shot down a Contra rebel cargo plane, killing three Americans on board and capturing a fourth.

The Nicaraguan defense ministry has said the surviving American identified himself and the dead men as U.S. military advisers based in El Salvador.

Secretary of State George Shultz has denied that the plane was on an American mission.

But Gonzalez said the plane was working on behalf of the CIA.

"In the case of the crash in Nicaragua, there's no question that that again is part of the use of American experienced personel, by the CIA," he said.

"It's just tragic," Gonzalez said. "I have been predicting that sooner or later we're going to have American soldiers shot at or killed."
