Rattled Iran

RUDBAR, Iran (AP) — Strong aftershocks sent panicked residents rushing into the streets of northern Iran Saturday, and mass graves were dug for victims of an earthquake that some official reports say killed at least 40,000 people.

Efforts continued to rescue people trapped under piles of rubble in the mountainous areas of Iran's northwestern Gilan and Zamjan provinces that were devastated in Thursday's quake.

FRANKLIN, W.Va. (AP) — A man and two sons — lost in a cave without food, water or light for most of a week — were rescued Saturday, officials said.

Gary William Lutes, 37, and sons Gary Jr., 13, and Timothy, 9, of Tampa, Fla., were rescued at 2 a.m., then hospitalized for dehydration.

Lutes said the three became lost Monday when their lamps went out, leaving them in total darkness in New Trout Cave in Pendleton County in eastern West Virginia.

"We had been exploring for about an hour and a half, and we were supposed to have another half an hour," Lutes said in a telephone interview from a hospital in Harrisonburg, Va.

DANBURY, Texas (AP) — Celebrated Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan, who less than two weeks ago nabbed a record-setting sixth career no-hitter, apparently has other career plans.

Ryan

Ryan has bought the Danbury State Bank in Danbury, which is about 35 miles south of Houston and 13 miles south of his hometown of Alvin.

"It's the greatest thing that ever happened to this bank. I can't imagine us working for him," said Annette Mandola, president of Danbury's only bank.

"The reality of it all, I don't think it hit yet," Ms. Mandola said Friday. Danbury has about 1,500 residents.

Ms. Mandola said Ryan has been interested in buying the bank for more than a year.

CAF personnel like future home

■ Confederate Air Force colonels say the dry climate is enough of a reason to relocate to Midland, while director says move will create about 45 new jobs.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

When Ralph Royce looks across the acreage behind the Windecker aviation building at Midland International Airport, he sees something more than a mesquite-ridden expanse of sun-beaten desert.

The Confederate Air Force executive director sees hangars. Big ones. Housing perhaps the largest and best-preserved collection of operational World War II aircraft in existence.

WWII plane crashes at Dyess show

By David Morris
Staff Writer

ABILENE — A World War II-era fighter plane crashed Saturday during an air show at Dyess Air Force Base, killing the pilot.

Nobody on the ground was injured when the propeller-driven P-51 Mustang crashed next to a runway about 1:05 p.m., base spokesman Sgt. Nickie Forge said.

The cause of the crash was not immediately known. The rest of the air show was canceled.

Killed was 58-year-old Donald Vincent Knapp of Abilene. Although the Associated Press stated that Knapp was flying in support of a Confederate Air Force-sponsored show, CAF officials, who were in Midland Saturday, denied that report.

"We were merely providing some of the narration for the show," said CAF Executive Director Ralph Royce. "It was not a CAF plane, it was not a CAF show."

Royce, top CAF administrators, General Staff members and regional representatives were in Midland this weekend for their summer advisory board meeting.

It was not immediately known whether Knapp was a CAF member. Marie Pierson, a Midland CAF member, said Knapp's name was not on the rolls of the organization's West Texas Wing.

"But he could have joined as a member-at-large," she said.

Knapp's privately owned P-51 reportedly crashed nose-down while attempting a second pass down a runway.

"As he was turning back toward the field, the airplane appeared to lose control and it went into the ground," said Jack Morgan, a public address announcer for the show who witnessed the crash.

Mark Jeffries, an Abilene radio announcer covering the annual show, said the plane did not burn after it crashed.

One witness, who asked that his name not be used, said the air show crowd apparently did not realize the plane was in trouble.

"I don't guess the public really displayed any emotion to amount to anything," he said. "They probably didn't know what was going on."

The man, identified as a veteran pilot, said the absence of a fire after the crash indicated the plane did not have much fuel on board.

Reaction to news of the crash among CAF members gathered at the Midland Hilton Saturday was a mixture of sadness and anger.

Changing choices

As American attitudes change toward food so do the choices. During the past decade, food giants from Heinz to Kraft have been forced to introduce into the market low-calorie, low-fat products that meet consumer demands as well as taste good. The Calorie Control Council estimates that 93 million people now consume low calorie foods and beverages.

From fads to food, American dieters stir thriving industry

Driven to achieve the ideal slender physique, Americans are becoming big losers — of weight and more. From the seasonal shedding of a few pounds for a sleeker swimsuit look to radical starvation and fasting regimes for the seriously obese, dieters struggle to be a less sizable portion of society.

Today: An overview of the growing obsession with weight loss.

A THINNING OBSESSION

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Food and beverage processors across the nation are spending billions of dollars to get the fat out of thousands of products, in line with demands by health conscious consumers.

From the classroom to the operating room, franchise diet centers compete with each other as well as cosmetic surgeons in the lucrative weight reduction market, where millions of dollars are at stake.

For the severely obese, very low calorie diets from prescription programs — Medifast — to over-the-counter products — Thompson Medical Companies' Slim Fast — are taking the country by storm.

Losing weight.

According to the American Dietetic Association (ADA), 90 percent of Americans on diets at any given time are meal skippers who spend an estimated $32 billion on books, new food products, medically supervised programs and other assorted weight reduction gimmicks.

Despite all that's been said and written, Americans continue that elusive hunt for the one time, quick fix that will shed unsightly fat.

Some do it for vanity, others for health reasons. In the process, most will trade good nutrition for the opportunity to drop 5 or 10 pounds — only to put it all back on.

"Americans are eating in the dark," said Dr. Eleanor A. Young, a professor at Texas Health Science Center's School of Medicine in San Antonio. "Most people don't have a clue about dieting because they've never been taught it to any great extent."

According to a national survey by the Calorie Control Council in Atlanta, about one in four adults — 48 million people — currently are dieting, down from 60 million in 1986.

The council surmised that, while dieting itself has become less popular, more people are working to restrict the amount of calories many consume each day. In fact, an estimated 93 million Americans now regularly consume low calorie food and beverages.

And the availability is increasing.

From Healthy Choice low calorie frozen foods to the invention of aspartame, the sugar substitute now used in most diet drinks and foods, processors are slowly demonstrating they get the message.

For example, G.D. Searle's NutraSweet, a division of chemical giant Monsanto, recently received approval from the U.S. Food & Drug Administration to introduce Simplesse, a fat substitute made from egg whites, skim milk and vegetable gums.

Despite these advances, nutritionists, dietitians and physicians agree America is an obese nation — hooked on the fat of the land and spending a fat part of their paychecks to get it off.

The hunger for traditional American meals tends to outweigh the need to moderate the amount of fat and other components that contribute to weight problems, despite the best efforts of nutrition educators.

"I think the average West Texan could certainly use more information," said Lisa Tyrer, an outpatient dietitian with Midland Memorial Hospital.

"They have a lot of cultural habits out here that include eating fat, especially high-calorie foods."

However, those who understand diet, say it's not so much what Americans eat, as it is the king-size portions that many consume.

Midland's Dr. Dipak Patel, an internal specialist, said American eating habits are as rich as the country's history. "Americans have always placed an importance on food."

Patel also observed that the U.S.

Boy may not have acted alone in girls' murders

CONROE, Texas (AP) — A 16-year-old boy accused of slaying two Conroe girls may have tried to take the blame alone out of fear of his estranged father, investigators said.

They said they believe the father sexually assaulted one of the girls before encouraging the killings.

"I think the juvenile was scared of his father. I believe he's still scared of him," said Montgomery County Sheriff's Sgt. Tracy Peterson. "He and his father have never been very close."

The teen-ager originally told investigators he had acted alone in the June 13 slayings of Gracie Purnhagen, 16, and her 9-year-old sister, Tiffany. He reportedly had a stormy relationship with the elder girl and told investigators he had become enraged when she told him her family was moving to North Carolina.

But the boy later implicated his father, Dennis T. Dowthitt, 45, after the Humble used car salesman admitted to officers that he was present when the girls were killed in a wooded area in south Montgomery County, authorities said.

Peterson said the boy had lived with his mother near Oak Ridge North, a community south of Conroe, before moving in with his father and stepmother in Humble about three months ago.

"He had never seen the side of his father that he obviously saw that night," Peterson said. "It's my opinion that he (claimed he acted alone) because Daddy said to do it."

Investigators say the boy and his father met the girls at a bowling alley parking lot June 13.

According to a court affidavit, the boy and Gracie were behind Dowthitt's pickup when Dowthitt started chasing Tiffany from the cab of the truck. Dowthitt allegedly told his son they "had to kill the girls," the document said.

It further said Dowthitt then attempted to rape Gracie before sexually assaulting her with a beer bottle. He then cut her throat and stabbed her in the chest, while the son strangled Tiffany with a rope, investigators allege in the document.

Dowthitt remained jailed Saturday without bond on a capital murder charge stemming from Gracie's sexual assault and stabbing death, and in lieu of $100,000 bond on a murder charge in connection with Tiffany's slaying.

The boy, meanwhile, has been held at the juvenile detention center on capital murder and aggravated sexual assault charges without bail.

Report says TU rate request too high

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — TU Electric is trying to overcharge consumers by more than $5 billion for the construction of the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant, a utility consulting firm says.

A five-month $2.5 million analysis, commissioned by 70 of the utility's customer cities, says company shareholders should foot the bill instead of customers. The 1,400-page report was ordered in response to the company's 10 percent rate increase request pending before the Texas Public Utility Commission.

The cities are calling on the PUC to reject the request outright.

"It's scandalous," said Grand Prairie Mayor Duane McGuffey. "Any increases at all in rates for TU Electric would not be appropriate due to incompetence and mismanagement of TU people."

The study, filed with the PUC this week, conflicts with a recommendation by the commission's general counsel earlier this week that $1.1 billion of the costs be disallowed.

The report says TU Electric's mismanagement, not federal regulations, caused the costs of the nuclear power plant to skyrocket. The twin-reactor plant cost $9.45 billion — 11 times the original cost estimate in the early 1970s.

Only $4.44 billion of the plant's cost should be passed on to ratepayers, according to the study, performed by Technical Analysis Corp. of San Francisco.

An audit paid for by TU Electric and submitted to the PUC Monday found that the utility wasted about $712 million on plant construction.

"The cities are a lot less forgiving," said TU spokesman Dick Ramsey.

The report said TU Electric inadequately trained plant supervisors and ignored warnings of poor design and poor workmanship.

"TU Electric will vigorously oppose cities or any other party who suggests cost disallowances for Comanche Peak," TU spokesman George Hedrick said.

The study is in line with recommendation's made by the PUC's Office of Public Utility Council, which represents consumers in rate cases. The council is asking for about $5 billion in disallowances.

"I'm not critical at all of the cities' position, (but) the committee I doubt would do that," said Kingsberry Ottmers, director of the council. "They'll give (TU) what keeps the company in good financial position."

Pregnant woman falls to death

DALLAS (AP) — A pregnant Dallas woman fell at least 150 feet to her death from a West Dallas bridge Friday morning as her 7-year-old daughter watched.

The victim was identified as Marcedalia Sanchez, 25.

The woman's husband, Precsiliano Sanchez, said the couple's 7-year-old daughter said she was walking with Mrs. Sanchez on the bridge when a man hit her mother on the head and pushed her off the bridge. Police could not confirm the husband's account.

Sanchez said his family had been staying at a relative's house because their own residence was too hot. But he said Mrs. Sanchez, who was seven months pregnant, insisted on walking to her own home Thursday evening over his protests.

Tuberculosis cases increasing rapidly in Texas

AP Laserphoto

Pearlie Davis gets a free chest x-ray in the parking lot of an East Austin bar. Technicians Jerry Bordelon of Austin and Thomas Hayton of San Antonio operate the equipment. Public health authorities have gone out in the field to reach segments of the population at risk for tuberculosis. TB is rising rapidly in Texas.

AUSTIN (AP) — Tuberculosis cases in Texas are rising rapidly after years of decline, and health officials blame factors ranging from the AIDS epidemic to crowded jails.

In 1988, Texas led all but California and New York in the number of tuberculosis cases, state statistics show.

Adding to their consternation is that drug-resistant TB, which leaves many victims with no hope of cure, appears to be rising as well. Without treatment, tuberculosis is fatal.

Texas health officials cite several causes for the increase.

They say a strong link is growing between TB and AIDS, homelessness and the use of crack cocaine or intravenous drugs.

The flow of refugees across the Mexico-Texas border also spreads the disease. So do the state's crowded county and city jail cells and a lack of indigent health care services.

In 1989, state health officials found that 23 percent of all new TB cases were in foreign-born residents of Texas. The third-highest rate of infection was among jail prisoners. Not all prisoners were tested, but of those cases reported, prisoners were infected at a rate of 95 per 100,000.

For 25 years, the goal of the state's TB program was eradication. TB deaths dropped steadily from 4,550 deaths in 1931 to an all-time low of 107 deaths in 1985, despite population increases. The number of new cases dropped to a low of 1,757 in 1987.

But over the past two years, state health officials have seen a reverse trend. From 1987's low, the new cases rose to 1,915 in 1989.

"We had a downward trend of about 5 percent per year and then it sort of leveled off. Now it's increasing," said John Bybee, director of the state's tuberculosis control division. "At the present time it looks as though we have a 15 percent increase over this time last year."

In certain areas of the state, however, physicians report more severe problems:

— At the University of Texas Health Center at Tyler, Dr. Manuel Rivera has about 160 patients hospitalized with TB — a 24 percent increase over a year ago.

— About 30 percent to 40 percent of the TB cases Rivera treats are for drug-resistant TB.

— The six clinics of the UT-Tyler health center have recorded a 70 percent increase this year in positive TB skin tests over those recorded for a similar period last year, Rivera said. Skin tests aren't always accurate, but they are an indicator of the disease.

— In 1988, Houston had one of the highest TB rates in the nation, 27.6 cases per 100,000 residents. Only New York, Chicago and Los Angeles had higher rates.

— From 1987 to 1988, the rate of positive skin tests for tuberculosis in Austin doubled from about 400 to about 800, even though the population decreased, said Eryn Tatum, TB coordinator for Austin and Travis County.

— A recent three-week survey of Houston jail prisoners conducted by the Baylor College of Medicine indicated that 15 percent to 20 percent were infected with TB. Several had active cases.

Doctors also report that the disease is rising in nursing homes among the elderly.

Boy's choir needs funds to match grant

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Texas Boys Choir is singing for its supper for the first time in its 44-year history.

The Boys Choir is appealing to the public to help raise $100,000 in donations and pledges by June 30. The group must raise the funds to keep a $50,000 challenge grant donated several months ago by the Amon G. Carter Foundation.

Loss of the grant would force Boys Choir to reduce its schedule.

"We have high hopes, but the economic climate in this area is such that raising money is not as easy as it used to be," said Ric Haythorn, the choir's development director, in Friday's Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The Boys Choir asked corporations and groups that finance the arts for help in February. This month, it launched an extensive mail and phone fund raising campaign aimed at the public.

CAF: Site 'far superior' to Harlingen

(From 1A)

It's just a matter of time before the vision becomes reality, Royce told the 80 or so CAF colonels touring the CAF's future home site Saturday.

Royce predicted that a lease agreement between the city of Midland and the CAF could be signed within 30 days if city councilmen approve the deal at their Tuesday meeting.

After that, work can begin on converting the 42-acre Windecker site into the CAF's new headquarters and museum in time for a December 1991 grand opening.

CAF regional unit leaders and CAF staffers visiting the proposed headquarters and museum site seemed pleased by what they saw.

"It's a lot better than what we've got down there" in Harlingen, said Loretta Rodriguez, CAF executive secretary.

"There's really not much to compare," said 15-year San Antonio member Bud Rinehart. "What we have down there is old and not as spacious. This is far superior."

Clay Keen of the CAF's Lobo Wing in Albuquerque, N.M., said the Midland move was necessary to ensure the organization's future growth.

"If it didn't grow and expand, it would at some point go away," he said. "Non-growth is not a consideration."

Midland's somewhat out-of-the-way location shouldn't be a drawback for the museum, said College Station member Richard Mogle.

"I certainly don't think it's near as remote and out-of-the-way as it was in Harlingen," he said.

'We'll be able to tell them from firsthand experience what we saw out here and what we heard. I think it's very important. Until you actually see a place it's really very difficult to judge it very accurately.'

— Richard Mogle, College Station CAF member

Several members cited Midland's dry climate as reason enough to move the CAF here from its gulf coast facilities, where salt air contributes to the deterioration of the group's vintage warplanes.

"I think this will help preserve our airplanes ... and that's what the CAF is all about," Rinehart said.

Meanwhile, CAF unit leaders said they were looking forward to reporting what they saw in Midland to their local memberships.

"We'll be able to tell them from firsthand experience what we saw out here and what we heard," Mogle said. "I think it's very important. Until you actually see a place it's really very difficult to judge it very accurately."

The 8,000-member CAF, which has units worldwide, announced in April plans to move its headquarters from Harlingen to Midland. Midland is offering the group a $1-a-year lease agreement on the Windecker site in a debt-free package worth approximately $20 million.

Royce said a $2 million initial construction phase will include a 220-feet by 300-feet hangar to house vintage aircraft.

The existing Windecker hangar will be converted into a display area for dioramas and aircraft, and space will be provided for storage and "conservation and preservation areas," he said.

Much of the rest of the Windecker building will house CAF offices, Royce said, and more hangars are planned for eventual construction.

He said the site is about twice the area of the CAF's Harlingen facility.

"It gives us a lot of space — we have no space where we are," Royce said.

The number of planes on display at any given time will depend on how many are in air show tours and which are being serviced.

"That will vary," Royce said. "One of the things that makes the CAF museum unique is that it is a living museum. We're not just a static tomb of dead aircraft. ... Probably the least you would see here is 25 to 60."

About 200 planes will be on display during the CAF's annual headquarters air show, he said.

Although between eight and 10 CAF employees will relocate here from Harlingen, Royce said the CAF move will create about 45 Midland jobs.

Aircraft mechanics, administrators, secretaries, museum workers and maintenance workers all will be needed, Royce said.

The local economy should receive an immediate boost from construction work the new museum and headquarters will require.

"We're going to have a $2 million-plus construction budget — we'll use a lot of temporaries I'm sure," Royce said. "It'll be very active for two or three years."

Royce said this weekend's summer advisory board meeting, originally planned for Omaha, Neb., was a success. He said he hoped the tour would clear up any misconceptions CAF leaders were harboring about Midland or the proposed CAF site.

Keen said the Permian Basin's warm reception for CAF members is a good indication that the group is making the right move.

"Everybody in this part of the world is most hospitable and excited," Keen said. "It's a message of hospitality that is equaled nowhere."

CRASH: Pilots respond with sadness, anger

(From 1A)

Sadness over the loss of a pilot and a valuable aircraft, anger over what members called the wrongful association of the CAF name with a fatal crash.

"If it's a warbird, anywhere in the warbird community, it's automatically assumed that it's a CAF aircraft," said Baxter Allen, CAF deputy executive director.

The CAF owns about 145 restored WW II-era planes. CAF Executive Director Royce said the CAF owns three P-51s.

Royce said it hurts the CAF's image when the organization is associated with crashes.

"They're carrying our name through the mud," Royce said of the Associated Press. "This doesn't even have anything to do with us."

Early reports that Knapp's plane was CAF-owned were corrected after Allen contacted AP offices in Dallas.

Kansas CAF member Jack Kester said the crash was tragic, regardless of whether the pilot or the plane was associated with the CAF.

"Looking around the meeting today when that announcement was made, I know that there were many prayers said for the individual involved," Kester said. "Pilots, although we disagree with one organization or another, we're all brothers under the skin."

CAF General Staff Member John L. Kelley said the last CAF crash fatality was in October 1988. That was when retired pilot Max Gardner was killed when the CAF attack bomber he was flying crashed during a Harlingen air show.

Dyess Air Force Base officials and a base medical team look through the debris of a plane which crashed during an air show at the base Saturday. The World War II-era P-51 was piloted by Donald Knapp of Abilene.

Kelley, of Dallas, said the CAF has an excellent safety record and is extremely safety-conscious.

"We are very, very safety-oriented," Kelley said. "Our pilots have to meet rigid criteria and a series of 'check rides.' We're not in the training business ... but we check them thoroughly to see that they're qualified."

The CAF plans to relocate its headquarters and museum from Harlingen tp Midland. The Harlingen CAF museum is Texas' 10th most popular tourist attraction.

The Associated Press also contributed to the report.

Agencies urged to open foreclosed homes to poor

AUSTIN (AP) — The federal government should fight Texas' housing problems by doing more to make foreclosed homes available to poor people, officials and advocates for low-income Texans said Saturday in testimony to a congressional panel.

"The houses continue to stand vacant while homeless and ill-housed Texans continue to suffer," said John Henneberger of the Texas Low Income Housing Information Service.

"The average Texans looks at these problems and sees they can work together for an obvious solution — help the people that need the houses have the chance to get them," he said.

Hundreds of thousands of lower-income Texans live in overcrowded, substandard or inadequate housing, and thousands more are on the streets, Henneberger said in testimony submitted to the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

Meanwhile, tens of thousands of foreclosed residential properties remain vacant, he said.

The Texas Housing Agency estimates there are more than 35,000 single-family residential units under the ownership or control of the federal government in the state, including properties held by the Resolution Trust Corp., U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and other agencies.

The RTC is the federal entity created to redistribute the assets of failed savings and loans. In March, it listed more than 14,000 single-family units in its Texas inventory.

Single-family residential units include detached homes, duplexes, mobile homes and condominiums.

Henneberger had special criticism for the RTC's plan to provide affordable housing.

Among other items, he said there is no provision for financing and no good way of informing the poor and nonprofit agencies about the dwellings available.

He urged Congress to develop new policies for federal agencies that direct homes to be made available to the poor; create coordinated, low-income marketing efforts; and earmark some inventory for sale and donation to the poor.

Midland firm working on West Virginia prison

Associated Press.

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Plans are progressing to convert a former state hospital into a prison in Pocahontas County but a similar project in Roane County is temporarily bogged down, officials say.

In Pocahontas, the county commissioners voted unanimously to back a project in which Private Prisons of America Co., based in Midland, Texas, would turn the campus of the former Denmar State Hospital into a privately run medium security prison.

The company plans to incarcerate more than 2,200 inmates at the hospital, which will be shut down within three months. Gov. Gaston Caperton ordered the hospital closed as a cost-cutting measure.

About 70 people will be hired to convert the facility, which should house about 500 prisoners within 10 months, officials said.

The prison eventually will employ 600 and have a total payroll of $6 million, Private Prisons of America officials project.

In Roane County, meanwhile, a private company has proposed jailing inmates at the former Spencer State Hospital.

That project has been derailed, however, while officials for U.S. Corrections Corp. of Louisville, Ky., try to obtain contracts to manage incarceration of out-of-state prisoners.

Spencer officials want a lease agreement signed by June 30, but Jim McCulty of the Roane County Development Authority said the Kentucky company won't sign a lease until it has contracts for inmates.

"Things are moving very slowly," said Mike Montgomery of U.S. Corrections. He added, however, that negotiations have been encouraging recently.

Up to 1,000 out-of-state inmates would be held at the old hospital, eventually creating 350 jobs at a payroll of $5 million, officials have said.

U.S. Corrections initially scheduled July 1 as its start-up date, but Montgomery said the opening will have to be delayed.

"Once we get word that we have an (inmate) contract, we can get a section of the old state hospital up and running within 60 to 75 days," Montgomery said.

Crews battle forest fires in Southern New Mexico

Associated Press

Firefighters battled to contain a 700-acre fire northeast of the Trinity Site, while another fire blackened more than 600 acres west of Wagon Mound.

The fire near the Trinity Site was 50 percent contained late Friday as 124 people tried to choke it off, said Karen Stockie, a U.S. Bureau of Land Management fire information officer.

The fire, which is on BLM land and some private land between Bingham and Claunch, grew Friday, but Stockie said she did not believe any flames could be seen by late Friday night.

Trinity Site on White Sands Missile Range was where the first atomic bomb was detonated in 1945.

Wind blowing from 15-20 mph Friday hurt the efforts of 150 firefighters battling a 600-acre fire on the north side of Turkey Mountain, about 40 miles west of Wagon Mound, officials said.

The state Forestry Division crews used two bulldozers to fight the Turkey Fire, but there was no estimate on when it might be contained, said Fred Coe, U.S. Forest Service public information officer for the Santa Fe National Forest.

Firefighters were aided by four air tankers, which dropped about 15 loads of fire retardant on the lightning-caused blaze that was reported Thursday afternoon, he said.

The air tankers had been diverted from a lightning-triggered fire in the San Pedro Parks Wilderness.

Quick response by firefighters held the San Pedro fire at 273 acres Friday night, Coe said. About half the burned acreage was in the wilderness area, and about half was in the Santa Fe National Forest, he said.

The fire, which burned in dense mixed conifer forest, initially was reported Thursday afternoon about 14 miles west of Coyote. The blaze was spotted by an air tanker crew dropping slurry on a fire north of Cuba.

Secret rooms found under four hot tubs

AGUA PRIETA, Mexico (AP) — The continuing investigation into a drug-smuggling tunnel across the U.S.-Mexico border led Mexican authorities to discover secret rooms under hot tubs in four homes here, a U.S. official said.

"You would lift up the spa-type fiberglass tubs — they had removable drains — to gain access to subterranean rooms," said Tom McDermott, Arizona special agent in charge for the U.S. Customs Service.

"With all the tile work and the water spigots on the wall, you'd never guess that anything like that was there," he said Friday.

Owners of stranded satellite launch another

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A communications satellite similar to one that ended up stranded in a uselessly low orbit three months ago was launched to its proper altitude Saturday, officials said.

The Intelsat VI satellite rode into orbit on a Titan 3 unmanned rocket, which lifted off on time from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station. It was the same kind of rocket that had left the earlier Intelsat VI satellite stranded.

The satellite separated from the rocket 25 minutes after liftoff, bringing cheers and applause in the mission control room. A rocket wiring problem prevented separation after the March 14 launch.

"We're all very anxious to see this mission totally successful, and we're certainly expecting it to be that way," said Edward M. Browne, president of Martin Marietta Commercial Titan Inc. "When that thing went off (separation), we were all very happy and we naturally let our emotions show that."

A little more than an hour after liftoff, an on-board motor boosted the satellite to an elliptical orbit 22,300 miles above Earth. A series of firings over the next several days will put the spacecraft in a circular, stationary orbit.

Browne said the $270 million launch, which includes the cost of the $150 million satellite, was "super ... totally flawless."

The stranded spacecraft is orbiting about 345 miles above Earth, 22,000 miles lower than intended. That satellite and the one launched Saturday were not insured.

Intelsat's board of governors agreed earlier this month to pay NASA $90 million for a shuttle rescue mission in which space-walking astronauts will attach a motor to the stranded satellite to boost it up to its proper orbit. That mission is scheduled for 1992.

The satellite deployed Saturday joins 14 other Intelsat spacecraft in orbit. Once operational in early September, the 40-foot-long, 2-ton satellite will be capable of relaying the transmissions of three TV channels and up to 120,000 telephone calls simultaneously.

Intelsat, a Washington-based consortium of 119 countries, plans to send up its next two Intelsat VI satellites on the European Space Agency's Ariane rocket. Both launches are scheduled for next year.

The next commercial Titan launch, with NASA's Mars Observer spacecraft, is set for 1992.

Saturday's flight was the third commercial launch for the Denver-based Martin Marietta and came after what company officials said were exhaustive reviews of the March failure.

"It's a good way to end what seems now like a long campaign," said Vic Whitehead, company vice president.

Several men approached a man sitting in his car in an apartment parking lot about 11:45 p.m., Friday, said patrol Sgt. John Burns.

"Some of the men pulled a gun on the victim in an attempt to rob him," Burns said. "The victim pulled a gun after he was shot in the knee and shot one of the suspects in the chest and the other one in the back."

Shreveport Police Department investigators are withholding the names of the victims.

The suspect shot in the chest died shortly before midnight at the Willis-Knighton Medical Center emergency room. The wounded victims were taken to LSU and Schumpert Medical Centers.

No charges were filed in connection with the incident, Burns said.

Banners, crowds welcome Mandela to Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Ecstatic crowds welcomed Nelson Mandela on Saturday in Boston, a city he saluted as inspiring the kind of freedom he is trying to win in his native South Africa.

Mandela spoke to high school students in a predominantly black neighborhood, was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the John F. Kennedy Library, then went to the Esplanade for a concert to benefit his African National Congress. His busy public day ended at a fund-raising dinner.

Mandela and his entourage arrived at Logan International Airport from New York shortly before 11 a.m. to the chants and screams of supporters.

He praised Boston for its role in the American Revolution and its leadership in the anti-apartheid movement.

"It was here that the Boston Tea Party served notice that the citizens of this country would not live under domination by the British," Mandela said. "That was the establishment of a fundamental principle which has inspired democracies and democrats, freedom fighters, revolutionaries all over the world."

Flanked by Kennedy family members, including former first lady Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, Mandela praised the senator for pushing for sanctions against South Africa.

He cited Kennedy's trip to South Africa and his unsuccessful effort to visit Mandela in prison, which Mandela said nonetheless gave the "black prisoners in a white South Africa ... a lot of strength and hope."

Later, on the grassy Esplanade on the banks of the Charles River, Mandela danced to a song written in his honor before a crowd of 221,000.

He again thanked those in Boston and beyond for fighting apartheid.

"It was you who rallied around our cause at a time when we thought ourselves all alone. For all this we are very grateful to you in Massachusetts, in Connecticut and the entire new England area," he said, as thousands waved ANC flags and banners of black, green and gold.

After the speech, strains of a tribute to Mandela composed by Hugh Masekela rang out from speakers and Mandela danced, grinning broadly. Jackson Browne, Paul Simon and Ladysmith Black Mambazo also performed.

Mandela's wife, Winnie, led the crowd in chants and apologized for not appearing at a tribute held earlier at St. Paul's Cathedral.

"I understand one of the fascists telephoned and made a bomb threat. I'm very sorry," she said. Organizers of the tribute said someone had called a bomb threat into the cathedral at noon. A bomb squad swept through and pronounced the site safe before letting the audience in.

But the State Department told Mrs. Mandela through an ANC representative not to go to the event, said Judie Blair, a spokeswoman for a local anti-apartheid group, adding she did not know why.

The Mandelas' daughter, Zenani Diamini, 31, who lives in Boston with her husband, went to the cathedral without her mother. Mandela's daughter by his first marriage, Makaziwe, 36, who attends the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, did not attend Saturday's public events but was expected to meet with her father privately Sunday morning, said Janet Levine, a South African exiled writer who lives in Boston.

Earlier Saturday, Mandela urged students — who had been waiting several hours in a high school gymnasium without air conditioning to hear him speak — not to drop out of school.

He called education "the most powerful weapon which we can use in order to prepare our youth in their role as leaders of tomorrow."

"If there is any appeal I could make is that the young people of Boston and, indeed young people in the United States, must take it upon themselves to ensure they receive the highest education possible so they can represent us as future leaders," he told the cheering crowd.

Mandela collects $1.6 million for his cause during a busy three-day visit to New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Amid the emotional cheers, the swirling ticker tape and the three-day hero's welcome, Nelson Mandela had work to do — and the African National Congress leader did it very well — collecting more than $1.6 million for his cause.

"The minute he touched ground in New York, the ground moved," said Suzanne DuBose, who handled the fund-raising chores in New York. "We sold 20,000 tickets for Yankee Stadium in 24 hours. The phone lines were all lit up. It was a tremendous outpouring."

Organizers of the trip had hoped to raise $1 million during Mandela's first stop on his 12-day U.S. tour. But DuBose said that figure was easily surpassed during Mandela's three days in New York, with the total climbing toward $2 million.

"It's been tremendous. We're really pleased the ANC will get so much money," she said. Organizers had not set a fund-raising goal for the entire trip.

The majority of the money was collected Friday night at a pair of Manhattan fund-raisers featuring power brokers and star power. An estimated 200 business executives, at $2,500 a pop, met Mandela at the Upper East Side townhouse of film executive Matthew Krim.

A short time later, Mandela headed downtown to Robert De Niro's new film center for a fund-raiser with by Spike Lee, Eddie Murphy, De Niro and musician "Little" Steven Van Zandt as hosts. Each of the 252 guests paid a minimum of $2,500, although singer Michelle Shocked signed a $50,000 check and others contributed $5,000, $10,000 and $20,000.

"That $50,000 check put us all in tears," said Robin Chambers, De Niro's personal assistant. "We're pretty proud, since we've never done anything like this."

The Krim event meant around a half-million dollars for ANC coffers, while the De Niro crowd donated more than $600,000.

Support came from the unknowns, too: The Yankee Stadium speech, where tickets were priced as low as $5, was expected to produce more than $250,000 to fight apartheid, DuBose said. Shopping bags passed around a Harlem rally were filled with cash. One hundred Black Men, a service organization, passed the hat and collected $1,000 at their annual boat ride around Manhattan.

An undetermined amount of money was collected at a Riverside Church Service. Winnie Mandela got in the act as well, collecting $50,000 at a Brooklyn Academy of Music rally.

While the Mandelas were making money, the city was busy spending it. Police overtime for the trip's heavy security totaled $2 million, although the State Department promised to cover those costs, said mayoral spokesman Stanley Davis.

Loggers rally for jobs after spotted owl listed as threatened

AP Laserphoto

Loggers protesting the government's decision to list the northern spotted owl as a threatened species drive their trucks through Roseburg Saturday morning. By listing the spotted owl as threatened, many forests that are now being logged will be closed and jobs lost.

ROSEBURG, Ore. (AP) — Hundreds of trucks adorned with yellow ribbons rolled through the heart of Oregon's timber country Saturday, honking horns to protest federal logging reductions planned to protect endangered owls.

"I'm kind of blowing off steam," said Joe Trimble of Roseburg, who joined a column of 434 rigs that took an hour to pass through this western Oregon town. "For a lot of us, this might be our last show.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Director John Turner announced Friday that the northern spotted owl was given threatened species status because logging is destroying the birds' old-growth forest habitats in Oregon, Washington and Northern California.

Trimble said his gripe is with federal officials, not the nocturnal bird.

"I'm not mad at the owl," he said. "He's just there."

Turner said he didn't expect to see logging significantly disrupted this summer because nearly all timber sales on federal lands have already been reviewed by his agency.

Timber industry representatives have warned that tens of thousands of people stand to lose their jobs if the government puts millions of acres of timber off-limits to logging to save the owl.

People lined the streets wearing yellow hats, shirts and ribbons to show solidarity with loggers as the line of trucks rolled past.

Drivers threw candy to children, waved and smiled while blowing horns so loudly people couldn't hear each other talk.

Among those on the sidewalk was Carol Maples of Roseburg, wearing a yellow shirt and holding the youngest of her four children, Tenille, dressed in a yellow sweater.

Her husband Perry Maples is a lumberjack. She said everyone in her family either works in logging or is married to a logger.

"I'm just supporting the timber industry," Mrs. Maples said. "I don't know if it will do any good. They (environmentalists) have already got what they wanted."

"Everything here revolves around logging," she said. "There ain't much to do unless you move away."

The protest was part of Forest Celebration '90, a rally sponsored by timber industry support groups. Afterward, people gathered at Umpqua Park at the Douglas County Fairgrounds for speeches by political candidates, a forum on natural resources and a concert by Hoyt Axton.

NATION IN BRIEF

Former Rival executive killed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — An 83-year-old man who was president of the company that introduced the Crock-Pot electric slow-cooker was beaten to death, and his grandson was charged Saturday in the slaying, police said.

Authorities said they hadn't determined what started the argument Friday night between Isidore H. Miller and his 21-year-old grandson, Michael Miller, that ended in the elder man's death.

Michael Miller was charged in Jackson County Court on Saturday with second-degree murder and armed criminal action, said police Sgt. Keith Francis of the homicide unit. He was held pending an arraignment.

Francis said Michael Miller used his fists and a brass lamp to beat his grandfather to death.

Missing crewmen named

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Searchers on Saturday found the bodies of two Navy men missing since their helicopter crashed off the Virginia coast the day before, a Navy spokesmen said. Two crew members remained missing.

"The search will continue until dark, and resume Sunday," said Lt. Russ Greer, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet Naval Air Force in Norfolk.

The bodies were taken to the Portsmouth Naval Hospital, Greer said.

They have been identified as Petty Officer 1st Class Norman H. Geisel, 29, of Saint Mary's, Md., and Airman John W. Burkhardt Jr., 21, of Boyleston, Mass., the spokesman said.

Lt. Jane T. Paradeis, 26, of Rice, Minn. and Lt. j.g. Jason K. Skubi, 24, of Sandpoint, Idaho, were missing and presumed dead, Greer said.

Court stays execution

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A federal appeals court Saturday indefinitely stayed the "Black Widow" killer's execution to hear arguments that Florida's electric chair is faulty and cruel.

But the legal debate over the state's electric chair, which sent smoke and flames shooting from the head of Jesse Tafero in Florida's last execution May 4, will continue with death warrants pending against other inmates.

The decision by a three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta means that Judi Buenoano, 47, will outlive her death warrant, which expires at noon Monday.

Attorneys for Ms. Buenoano pressed their position before U.S. District Judge Patricia Fawsett that the chair is faulty. The judge lifted her stay late Friday after weighing claims that an electrocution would not violate the constitutional ban on cruel and unusual punishment.

Ms. Buenoano is known as the "Black Widow" killer because she poisoned her husband, drowned her paralyzed teen-age son and tried to murder a boyfriend with a car bomb. She attended the hearing, listening and watching attentively but showing no emotion.

Belt warning issued

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seat belt release buttons in 1.6 million Chevrolet Camaro and Pontiac Firebird cars should be checked for damage that could lead to belt failure, federal safety officials say.

And safety investigators have reopened a probe of loose seats in Ford Mustangs following a new spate of complaints.

General Motors Corp. will recall 1984 to 1990 model Camaros and Firebirds to replace or repair the belts free of charge, the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration said Friday. Damaged belt buckles should be replaced immediately, it said.

The problem is caused when the red plastic push-button weakens from prolonged exposure to radiation and heat from the sun, NHTSA said, adding: "This may cause the safety belt to latch improperly or not at all, greatly increasing the risk of injury in a crash."

If a safety belt on one of the affected cars does not latch or release properly, the car should be taken in for repair, NHTSA Administrator Jerry Curry said. If there is no damage to any of the car's belts, owners can await recall letters from GM, he said.

The government has been investigating the problem since last August, and GM is voluntarily conducting the recall, Curry said.

AIDS conference leaders join peaceful marchers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Thousands of chanting, whistle-blowing demonstrators marched Saturday with hundreds of delegates from an international AIDS conference in a call for more money and health care for infected people.

The peaceful march, which snowballed in size and snarled traffic as it snaked up Market Street, was in marked contrast to the week's worth of protests organized by the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, or ACT UP, that resulted in 299 arrests.

On Saturday, ACT UP activists were joined by leaders of the Sixth International Conference on AIDS who said they were in the battle against the disease together.

"The apparent divisions between us are not real," Paul Volberding, a conference co-chairman, told a crowd of about 20,000 gathered in Justin Herman Plazaat the end of the march. "We cannot tolerate it, and hopefully, this march will help end it."

March organizers said 20,000 people took part in the march and rally. Police put the number of people in the march at around 4,000.

Marchers carried signs with such messages as "AIDS Treatment Now" and "Increase Research Funding."

The march was briefly disrupted when hundreds of demonstrators led by ACT UP's Seattle chapter rushed into the San Francisco Centre, screaming, "We're here, we're queer and we're not going shopping!"

Some Centre shoppers applauded and others seemed shocked as protesters scattered leaflets through the atrium outside a Nordstrom department store. The demonstrators said they were protesting the dismissal of a Nordstrom employee in Seattle who tested positive for the AIDS virus.

Nordstrom said the former salesman left the sales floor on his own, and that the company had offered him other jobs that might be less physically stressful. The company said he declined those job offers.

Outside, marchers wore stickers emblazoned with a bloody handprint that read, "The government has blood on its hands — one AIDS death every half hour." A 12-foot death's head bobbed along at the rear of the crowd, where parents pushed toddlers in strollers and friends pushed the wheelchairs of the disabled.

"AIDS is sweeping the nation," said Maggie Duhl, 15, a member of a group of politically active children. "There needs to be more education about AIDS, especially in the schools. It seems the idea about AIDS is that it's a gay disease, and that's wrong."

"Many of these kids have someone close to them who has AIDS," said her mother, Barbara Duhl, who marched with her two children and a banner that read, "Kids Say Money for AIDS, Not For War."

"It's something that's going to be a part of their lives."

Speakers at the rally blasted what they said was a lack of funding and attention by the federal government and the slow process of research aimed at finding a cure for the disease. But many of the speakers struck a conciliatory tone.

"Not everyone out there is our enemy," said Martin Delaney, head of San Francisco's Project Inform. "We know who has been in the fight to save lives and who is in it to make money."

Dr. June Osborn, chairwoman of the U.S. National Committee on AIDS, urged the various factions in the AIDS controversy to come together.

The crowd was sprinkled with foreign delegates who took time from the AIDS conference to march and listen to the speakers.

Thousands of chanting demonstrators march alongside hundreds of delegates from the 6th International Conference on AIDS down Market Street in San Francisco Saturday morning in a unified call for more money and care access for infected people. Some 20,000 took part in the march.

AIDS triggering tuberculosis explosion

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — AIDS is triggering a global explosion of tuberculosis, especially in Africa, and at least 2 million people are already infected with the microbes that cause both diseases, a health official warned on Saturday.

Meanwhile, a top East German health expert cautioned that the opening of the Iron Curtain is likely to speed the spread of AIDS in Eastern Europe, which has so far largely escaped it.

Tuberculosis is already the world's single biggest bacterial killer, and experts fear that HIV, the AIDS virus, is likely to make the problem much worse.

"A serious epidemic of TB is occurring as a result of the HIV epidemic, especially in Sub-Saharan Africa," said Dr. Peter Eriki of the World Health Organization.

He said Africans "were unable to contain a relatively small tuberculosis problem before the arrival of HIV, and they are singularly ill-prepared for coping with a very large problem ahead."

Eriki, a tuberculosis specialist who formerly directed the TB Control Program in Uganda, described the problem at the Sixth International Conference on AIDS, meeting in San Francisco through Sunday.

About 1,000 conference delegates on Saturday joined thousands of whistle-blowing, chanting protesters calling for more money and access to health care for people with HIV disease.

The peaceful march was briefly disrupted when a large group of demonstrators led by the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power rushed into the San Francisco Centre, chanting, "We're here, we're queer and we're not going shopping!"

They said they were protesting the dismissal of a Nordstrom department store chain employee in Seattle who tested HIV positive. A Nordstrom store dominates the Centre. Nordstrom has said the former salesman was offered less stressful positions but he declined them.

Now, an estimated 1.7 billion people — one-third of the world's population — is infected with tuberculosis bacilli. Most of these people suffer no outward symptoms.

However, Eriki said that 20 million of the infected people are sick with TB, and 3 million die each year, most of them in the developing world.

In its rapid spread over the past decade, the AIDS virus now infects an estimated 5 million to 10 million people around the world. Eriki said HIV has emerged as the single most important risk factor for active TB disease.

HIV weakens the body's natural defenses against disease. This can awaken dormant TB infections that had been held in check.

Eriki said that HIV-infected people are also more likely than healthy people to catch the TB germ and to spread it to others.

He said that 1.5 million of the 2 million people infected with both microbes live in sub-Saharan Africa. In Burundi, 55 percent of TB patients also carry the AIDS virus.

As people become more aware of the link between AIDS and TB, "there is the potential that the diagnosis of tuberculosis will become a social stigma," Eriki said, "creating fear among health care workers, who may become reluctant to work in tuberculosis programs."

Sieghart Dittman, director of the Institute for Hygiene, Microbiology and Epidemiology in East Berlin, noted that the AIDS virus is still rare in Eastern Europe. The rate of AIDS cases is 45 times lower than in Western Europe, and the HIV infection rate in the general population is practically zero.

However, he attributed this differences in large part to the Iron Curtain and the Berlin Wall and cautioned that the removal of travel barriers is likely to speed the spread of AIDS.

"Now, when borders between Eastern and Western European countries have become more open, when in Germany the walls are broken down completely, the problem of the spread of HIV infection might become far more serious, and special attention should be paid to this threat," he said.

The international AIDS conference has drawn scientists from over the world, and has also sparked protests from AIDS activists seeking more money for AIDS research and treatment and an end to discrimination against AIDS patients.

Among other reports presented at Saturday's sessions:

—A survey of AIDS screening labs by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control shows most do a highly accurate job of spotting AIDS-infected blood. The report by Dr. David Cross found that the labs correctly identified 99.8 percent of samples that carried the AIDS virus and 99.4 percent that were free of HIV.

—Children of AIDS-infected mothers born free of HIV may still suffer developmental problems. Dr. Thomas Koch and others from the University of California, San Francisco, said their work suggests the virus in the mother's body somehow harms growth of the fetal nervous system, even if the virus is not transmitted to the baby.

—A University of California, San Francisco, survey of doctors in residency training found that two-thirds did not plan to treat AIDS patients when they started their own practices.

Secord to drop appeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iran-Contra defendant Richard Secord is dropping an appeal of his conviction on charges of lying to a congressional investigator, a federal prosecutor's office said Saturday.

Secord agreed to drop the appeal in court papers filed Friday,

A THINNING OBSESSION

DIET: Many 'eating in the dark'

is one of the most stressful countries in the world to live in.

"I think that factor is another reason they consume more. ... Americans as a whole tend to eat more saturated fat, compared to protein and carbohydrates."

While physicians and dietitians may not agree on all the reasons, they acknowledge one fact — 90 percent of diets attempted don't address the long-term goal of keeping off unwanted pounds once a target weight has been reached.

Then there's the darker side of dieting — namely the triggering of eating disorders among those with addictive behaviors.

For example, anorexia nervosa, an illness that can lead to death by starvation, strikes six of every 1,000 people, according to Jeff Lutes, program coordinator of eating disorders at St. David's Hospital in Austin.

"I'd say there's a lot of preoccupation with food, weight and dieting and there's a lot of compulsive exercising as well," he said.

Even more common is bulimia, an illness that strikes an estimated 5 to 10 percent of the population, primarily females between the ages of 12 and 30.

According to the ADA, 60 percent of those who diet extensively, or starve themselves, resort to the bulimic rituals of bingeing and purging, and may use laxatives or diuretics to keep weight off.

While many professionals say several factors underlie these disorders, they say our national obsession with weight loss may contribute to them.

Despite all that's known and some public awareness of what constitutes a proper weight reduction diet, health professionals feel they're banging their heads against a brick wall as they listen to patients recite advertising myths and false claims from food processors.

For example, in a recent Gallup Poll of children's mealtime favorites, pizza topped the list for 82 percent of respondents.

That came as no surprise to Barbara Luboff, a registered ADA dietitian.

"After all, that's the type of food children are being exposed to by the media."

Among weight-conscious adults, the message isn't food but image, as pushed by weight-loss programs and over-the-counter products.

"Remember, everybody out there is making overweight people out to be wrong. All the diet programs are making them wrong. All the magazines are making them wrong. All the grocery products are making them wrong," said Glyndon Kimbrough, a nurse and education coordinator at Wellness Professionals Inc. in Midland.

"Any program that tells you there's such a thing as bad food is setting you up to fail because that gives food a personality beyond caloric consequence."

Today's buzzword is behavioral modification — modification aimed at changing not just a person's eating habits, but his own view of himself.

"You have to combine good nutrition information with the behavioral component," said Kimbrough. "If you don't learn the appropriate ways to self-nurture, you're going to gain it all back."

Part of what she contends with each day is the controversial labeling of food — labeling now being challenged by the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

Bruce Silverglade, legal director for this Washington, D.C.-based lobbyist group, is pushing Congress for a bill requiring the food industry to label products with the consumer in mind.

Although 50 percent of the industry now does some kind of nutritional labeling, proponents of the bill are demanding more precise terms from "percentage of fat" to the use of the word "lite," which can mean anything from texture to color to calories.

Much of the blame for overweight America is placed on the fast-food industry.

In an era when both parents often must work, instant food has become a staple rather than an occasional meal.

Fast-food outlets are increasingly popular targets of consumers educated about the effects of saturated fats on weight and health.

Fast-food franchises and other restaurants are slowly making the change, looking at new preparation methods such as Procter & Gamble's much publicized Olestra — a fat-frying substitute.

But experts believe that's not enough.

"People can pretty much divide themselves into two categories," said Suzanne Bush, chief clinical dietitian at Medical Center Hospital in Odessa.

"People can live to eat or eat to live. ... Americans' obsession to be thin is the wrong reason to diet. I'd rather see the emphasis on health."

MONDAY: Alert marketers have capitalized on the nation's hunger for thinness to create multibillion dollar industries.

'Remember, everybody out there is making overweight people out to be wrong. All the diet programs are making them wrong. All the magazines are making them wrong. All the grocery products are making them wrong.'

The key to controlling weight, says Dr. Robert A. Vogel, is to do so gradually and to modify one's lifestyle.

Find 'sensible' program

Fewer calories, more activities usually does the trick

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

A two-year community study, the first of its kind aimed at developing a public health education program, has confirmed what professionals have been saying for years — a change in diet and lifestyle can have a profound impact on weight and health.

In the Wellsburg, W.Va., study funded by aspirin maker Bayer Co., 1,000 of the 4,000 residents of the rural community 45 miles southeast of Pittsburgh, Pa., agreed to reduce fats, salts and oils in their daily diet.

They lost an average of 3 pounds each by the end of the study. That may not sound like much, but to Wellsburg — a city described in a federal study as having the most obese population in the nation — it was a huge victory — the changes permanent for many.

"The bottom line is to modify your eating habits and increase your activity so you can benefit from gradual weight reduction," said Dr. Robert A. Vogel, a Midland internal medicine specialist.

"Dieting is mathematics. There are 3,500 calories in a pound of fat. Whatever means you choose, you have to have a net deficit of that number to lose a pound," he said.

Like many other physicians, Vogel does not advocate using liquid diets or other diet supplements and programs that promote a weight loss of greater than 2 pounds per week, except in cases where weight is an immediate health threat.

Family physician Dr. Joseph Rhode stresses physics to his patients with one simple equation — when more calories are expended than taken in, the body draws on stored energy and fat.

"That sounds simple enough. What makes it difficult is the psychology of it," said Rhode. "What I try to get my patients to understand is not so much not eating, but trimming down the edges."

Rhode is not a fan of rapid weight-loss programs, but he does believe in changing one's eating habits.

"I don't doubt a person can drop 10 or 20 pounds a month, but even if they've reached that, what have they learned? It's not a question of losing the weight, it's one of keeping it off."

In Wellsburg, that's just what residents did learn — long-term eating habits, that if continued, will bring about permanent changes, according to the American Heart Association, which monitored the experiment.

At Medical Center Hospital in Odessa, chief clinical dietitian Suzanne Bush said the problem with most Americans wanting to lose weight is that they lack the nutritional understanding to make rational food choices.

"What research that has been done as follow-ups to rigorous dieting has shown very low success rates in keeping it off — as low as 3 percent over a five year period," she said.

Bush and other dietitians interviewed for this series suggest the only way to take weight off and keep it off is through changes in lifestyle. That means more exercise, even if it's only walking, and reducing calories, particularly fat, to no more than 30 percent (10 percent from saturated fat such as beef) of a day's intake.

Dietitians and nutritionists also stress a diet with three meals a day that includes the basic staples — meat, grains, milk, vegetables and fruit.

Aisha Ali, a dietitian at Midland Memorial Hospital (MMH), said she believes there are too many fad diets.

"The problem with compulsive dieters is they tend to forget the basic food groups and needs of the body."

MMH outpatient dietitian Lisa Tyrer agreed.

"The bottom line is there's no magic and that's what everyone is looking for. They want something fast, that's painless and free of effort on their part," said Tyrer.

"But if you want the benefits of weight reduction you have to work hard at it. There's no special pills or special drinks. A standard diet is what we teach here."

"What they (patients) have been told is they can't eat red meat, but the fact is red meat has vitamins as well as being high in iron. What we tell them is instead of eating meat five or six times a week, cut it back to two or three," said Ali.

What most health professionals notice about patients with weight problems is that eating has become almost a secondary lifestyle — an afterthought for many U.S. families.

Dr. T.A. Reddy, a Midland internal medicine specialist, said he suspected 60 to 80 percent of all adults fall in the overweight category to one degree or another.

"My general belief is most people eat twice what they actually need. I tell my patients to cut in half what they normally eat."

Unlike dietitians, physicians interviewed for this series have mixed views on the consumption of saturated fat.

For example, Reddy tells dieting patients to avoid animal (saturated) fats like beef, as well as cheese and milk and to cut down on refined carbohydrates such as candies and sweets.

Despite the nation's reputation for being obese, a survey conducted by the Calorie Control Council found fewer Americans are dieting now than five years ago, although they are consuming more low-calorie products.

In its survey of 1,502 adults, the council also found that 75 percent exercise at least twice a week. Most also said health, not weight, was responsible for their changes in lifestyle.

And what do the nation's top nutritionists say about individual weight reduction programs?

As for those who are in need of serious weight reduction for health reasons, Vogel recommends a medically supervised program.

"People who are going on a serious weight reduction program need to be monitored. There are a lot of (health) problems you can get into."

Still, some, like Glyndon Kimbrough, a nurse and education coordinator at Wellness Professionals Inc. in Midland, believe people shouldn't kill themselves over dieting.

"What are you going to do, tell people don't eat this bad food or that? Those things happen in our lives. ... Fat isn't bad, even bad fat. It's how much we consume."

Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa is applauded by fellow Liberals and cabinet ministers after sharing his reaction to the failure of the Meech Lake accord.

Mulroney, Bourassa critical of reform effort's failure

MONTREAL (AP) — A gloomy Prime Minister Brian Mulroney went on national TV Saturday to apologize to Quebec for the failure of a constitutional reform that would have recognized the French-speaking province's distinct culture.

Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa bitterly criticized Newfoundland Premier Clyde Wells for killing the Meech Lake accord and said he would boycott future constitutional talks.

There has been widespread concern that failure of Meech Lake might lead the people of Quebec to push for independence, or more likely, some sort of sovereignty-association relationship with the rest of Canada. But Bourassa indicated only that his government is studying its future options.

The Meech Lake accord had to be passed by the federal government and the legislatures of all 10 provinces by midnight Saturday. But a decision by Wells on Friday to shelve debate in the Newfoundland legislature on the constitutional amendment effectively killed it.

Federal opposition leaders blamed the accord's failure on what they called Mulroney's lack of leadership and urged him to resign.

"The accord, which was drafted to achieve unity, became over three years a lightning rod for discontent about budget and interest rates, free trade and taxes," Mulroney said in his television address. "It attracted accusations of favoritism and sentiments of rejection, and stimulated regional rivalries and even linguistic tensions.

"Much of the discontent of Canadians found expression in hostility to the Meech Lake accord."

Mulroney said he would begin working Monday to find another approach to constitutional reform, and he tried to calm fears of political instability by telling foreign investors not to worry about Canada's present problems.

Bourassa, in a speech to his National Assembly in Quebec City, said that in the future he would only negotiate one-on-one with the federal government, not with the other provinces.

"The process of constitutional reform has been discredited and the government of Quebec will not agree to go back to the constitutional table," said Bourassa.

Strong aftershocks shake northern Iran

RUDBAR, Iran (AP) — Strong aftershocks sent panicked residents rushing into the streets of northern Iran on Saturday, and mass graves were dug for victims of an earthquake that some official reports say killed at least 40,000 people.

Efforts continued to rescue people trapped under piles of rubble in the mountainous areas of Iran's northwestern Gilan and Zamjan provinces that were devastated in Thursday's quake.

"Today we found eight people alive, but they will probably be the last we uncover," said Nassir Zadeh, an officer of the Revolutionary Guard helping search and rescue operations in the flattened city of Rudbar, about 140 miles northwest of Tehran.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency reported that "with the lapse of time," hope was fading that more survivors could be found alive under the rubble. Thursday's quake destroyed dozens of towns and villages Caspian Sea region.

Journalists flying over the area saw horrific scenes of devastation in villages where thousands of mud brick and concrete homes were reduced to rubble. No estimates of casualties were yet available from remote regions.

Numerous mountain villages remained cut off because landslides blocked roads.

In Rudbar, dozens of Iranian military helicopters flew supplies into makeshift airstrips on a small island in the river that flows through this agricultural center that once numbered 180,000 people.

Victims of Thursday's strong earthquake in northern Iran, flown by Iranian air force planes to Tehran for treatment, lie around the craft awaiting transportation to medical facilities.

The two-lane roads leading to Rudbar and neighboring Manjil were clogged with rubble from buildings and huge boulders dislodged from the surrounding hills.

Mile-long columns of buses, ambulances and flatbed trucks carrying bulldozers, cranes and other equipment had to wait for hours to reach their destinations.

Foreign relief teams and supplies began arriving in the region, as the world responded to the disaster.

There were conflicting death tolls. A national radio broadcast said more than 40,000 people were feared dead and 100,000 were injured. IRNA reported about 29,000 people killed.

In Rudbar, earthquake victims were buried in mass graves "without counting the bodies" because of the heavy death toll, IRNA said. The quake destroyed the only hospital there.

The quake destroyed or damaged about 95 percent of the city's buildings, and residents were reduced to living in thousands of tents pitched near the roads as temperatures soared to 105 degrees.

"Twelve members of my family died when our house collapsed," said a weeping woman, sitting in front of a tent pitched next to the remains of her home.

Amrola Mosadei, a carpenter, said, "I tried to grab my daughter's arm when the house started swaying, but then she was gone and the roof collapsed."

More than 200 aftershocks have hit the region, the biggest registering 4.2 on the Richter scale and rocking the Tarom-e Olia region about 125 miles northwest of Tehran, IRNA said. Thursday's quake was at least 7.3 on the Richter scale.

Another large shock jolted the northern city of Rasht early Saturday, "making panic-stricken residents take to the streets," it said. There was also a third powerful aftershock in the area.

"Aftershocks, which continue in the mountainous regions, are endangering the relief operation," the news agency said.

The toll surpassed a quake that killed 25,000 people in nearby Soviet Armenia in December 1988, and a quake in Iran in 1978 that also killed 25,000.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Gorbachev keeps party together

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev promised Saturday he would hold the splintering Communist Party together and remain its leader despite the growing division between conservatives and reformers.

The pledge came at the Communist Party congress in the biggest Soviet republic, which elected as its leader a hard-liner who is unacceptable to many reformist Communists.

Polozkov

Ivan Polozkov took office Saturday as the Russian republic's party chief after defeating a more moderate candidate the day before. Polozkov, 55, has rejected Gorbachev's appeals for the party to relinquish its control over the economy, urged strict party discipline and condemned informal political groups.

In Krasnodar, the southern Russian town where he is party chief, he cracked down on cooperatives — the private businesses introduced by Gorbachev.

On Saturday, he told reporters that he would work to unify the party and to show that "I'm not as terrible as I'm portrayed to be."

One party reform leader, Vladimir Lysenko, predicted that millions of Soviets would quit the national organization if conservatives are in control.

Gorbachev spoke out against the impending national party split between conservatives and radicals, expected to erupt at a key party congress that opens in eight days.

Arab boat attacked

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli patrol vessel destroyed a power boat carrying Arab guerrillas near Israel's northern border late Saturday, killing at least two attackers, the army said.

The guerrilla team fired rocket-propelled grenades and automatic weapons at a Dvora patrol vessel at about 10 p.m. off Ras al-Bayada, 2 miles north of the border and near the headquarters of the U.N peacekeepng force in South Lebanon, the military said in a statement.

"It was headed to destroy targets in Israel," a spokesman said on condition of anonymity. The army statement said the speedboat was traveling at 30 knots in the direction of Israel's border before it was intercepted by air and ground forces.

The military said at least two guerrillas were sighted in the speedboat before troops opened fire, sinking the boat.

Colombian police quit

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Forty policemen in the cocaine trafficking center of Medellin have quit because of a campaign by drug traffickers to kill them, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Two more law officers were assassinated Friday in Medellin, Colombia's second-biggest city, a police spokesman told The Associated Press by telephone. Their deaths bring to 125 the number of Medellin law officers killed by gunmen working for the Medellin drug cartel so far this year.

The cartel in April offered to pay $4,300 to anyone who kills a policeman.

The El Espectador newspaper, citing police sources, said the Medellin police department accepted requests from 40 policemen who had asked to resign during the past three months.

In the past two months, authorities have sent 1,500 soldiers and policemen to reinforce Medellin's security force. More than 4,000 policemen are now patrolling the streets of Medellin, which has about 3 million residents.

26 held in Cape Town

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Police on Saturday arrested 26 demonstrators who tried to march in protest of police actions in the black townships.

In a separate development, two offices of the ruling National Party were bombed Friday night but no one was hurt, police said. No one claimed responsibility for the attacks that occurred in a Johannesburg suburb and in Helderkruin, west of Johannesburg, police said.

The attacks came hours after police released 11 whites questioned about an alleged right-wing plot to assassinate President F.W. de Klerk and African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela.

In Cape Town, several dozen protesters sought to march on the Athlone police station just outside Cape Town, but police said the activists had not obtained the required official permission.

Police spokeswoman Lt. Denise Brand said 26 marchers were arrested after ignoring a police warning to disperse. The protesters resisted, and some were wrestled to the ground and put into a police van.

Haitians in mourning

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Thousands of factory workers stayed home and most stores and gas stations closed Saturday to mourn a union activist who was shot to death while attending a meeting of the governing Council of State.

Two leading politicians demanded the resignation of civilian President Ertha Pascal-Trouillot, who has been blamed for the army's failure to halt a recent crime wave.

Ms. Pascal-Trouillot has governed along with the 19-member Council of State since her appointment in March.

Early Saturday, sporadic gunfire rang out in the slums of Port-au-Prince, but most public buses were running and the capital of 1 million people remained busy. Street vendors sold their wares as usual.

Armed police stopped cars at checkpoints in a search for the perpetrators of Thursday's attack by four gunmen, including two in army uniforms.

Joint ballots favored

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's second-largest political faction on Saturday endorsed joint German elections in December, greatly increasing the chances that one government will be running a united Germany in six months.

East Germany's Social Democrats had said earlier that joint elections, and full German unification, should not take place until late next year.

Party chief Sabine Riebe said her party will meet with West German Social Democrats on Sept. 26 to merge their parties.

City struggles to maintain parched parks

■ A coalition of citizens has taken Cowden Park under its wing to improve their neighborhood and help the city out.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

City officials wish they had more horticultural guardian angels like the Cowden Park Community Association to watch over Midland's parks.

The coalition of about 200 neighbors in central Midland has plans for nearby Cowden Park, a little urban oasis of thick grass and trees, association member and local landman Richard Ganem said last week.

Rather than demand that the city use taxpayer dollars to renovate the park, the association plans to collect money on its own and buy swing sets, lights, benches, picnic tables and a paved walkway.

However, other sun-seared city parks this year haven't seen the tender-loving care that has been bestowed upon Cowden, where neighbors stop by daily to pick up trash.

Budget cuts, a manpower shortage, busted sprinklers and a meteorological bludgeoning from Mother Nature have left city officials with brown thumbs in a struggle to keep many Midland parks green.

Brown patches of dead grass dot almost every city park. Hogan and Windlands parks, two of the city's largest, perhaps have been hit the worst.

The ground at Hogan is almost completely covered by brown grass, while city crews at Windlands Park have been working to save about 30 trees, worth about $22,000, donated by Exxon Co. earlier this year.

"We're watering them every day," George Logan, Midland Parks and Recreation Department director, said last week. "We're doing the best we can with our hand watering method."

Logan said that like other city departments which have seen budget cuts during the 1980s, his department has had more work but decreased manpower and funds.

In addition, winter freezes and unseasonably hot temperatures this year have made it tough to keep grass, shrubs and trees alive, especially when manpower has been diverted to other park projects, he said.

Meanwhile, sprinklers have failed in parts of some parks, leaving the grass to die in the unwatered areas, he said.

Nevertheless, Logan said his department is gearing up for an environmental battle to resuscitate the parks.

Councilmen this week are expected to review a request for $18,000 in funding to repair sprinkler systems and attend to the dying foliage.

"Our goal is to get them green by July Fourth," Logan said. "If they're not green by the Fourth of July, we're going to have a forest fire. People are going to be lighting fireworks all over town."

Much of the problem has been understaffing, he said. Workers have had to spend their time building park facilities rather than maintaining them, he said.

During the 1987-88 fiscal year, the city had 10 temporary workers who helped maintain parks, especially during the summer months. Since then, those jobs and four full-time positions have been cut, reducing the department's staff to 42 employees.

Volunteer fighters

Women of the Northeast Midland County Volunteer Fire Department play an active role in firefighting in the county. Here they show off one of their tanker trucks. Women volunteers 'fired up'

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

"Don't get us wrong — we're not hoping for fires," Midge Graham said as she showed off the three water tankers that are the pride and joy of the Northeast Midland County Volunteer Fire Department.

"But if there is one, we're ready for it."

Mrs. Graham is one of the women who makes up the backbone of the VFD, despite her protestations to the contrary.

"We're not an all-woman VFD (volunteer fire department)," she said. "We'll have divorces on our hands if we say that."

Volunteering at the station on County Road 1130 is a community affair, with some 15 northeast Midland County families fighting fires, washing trucks, holding bingo games and teaching fire safety together. The youngest member of the team is 15; the oldest are in their mid-60s.

Brenda Chandler, president of the VFD, said the women had no idea that firefighting would get in their blood when the group started the station in 1984.

"When we first formed, we thought the men were going to be the firefighters, but they had to work, so we trained right alongside them and we help out during the daytime fires," Mrs. Chandler said.

Most became interested in firefighting out of a desire to help the community. Ellen Marquez, one of the newest volunteers, joined up after a fire at her home.

"I hadn't realized women could be firefighters," she said.

They take their responsibilities seriously, wearing their pagers at all times and keeping their uniforms in the trunks of their cars.

"I never know when I might be called out and it would waste time to have to stop by the station on the way to a fire," Mrs. Graham said.

She was one of several VFD women battling the flames of the Crowley Place Ranch prairie fire June 20.

"We do truck driving, fire-hose washing, some put on the air packs and enter buildings in structure fires. We do whatever we're asked to do," Mrs. Graham said, stressing that no jobs are closed to them on

'Bloody 100' bomber crew recalls wartime

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

When the crew of a World War II B-17 bomber got together on Saturday it was better than old times.

"It's the greatest thing since the invention of the airplane. We get together and have a good time," said Midlander Bill "Red" Crozier, 65, the crew's ball-turret gunner. Crozier organized seven of the 10 men from the crew to get together for a reunion in Midland this weekend.

The B-17 Flying Fortress crew was part of the 349th squadron of the 100th Bomber Group, Eighth Air Force. Based in Thorpe, England, the crew flew 30 missions between July 1 and Dec. 27, 1944.

"As far as the number of ships lost, the 100th was the highest. ... We were among the lucky 50 percent that came back," Crozier said, adding that because of the group's record they were known as tne "Bloody 100."

"From the combat standpoint it was a little bit hairy ... a bit dangerous," Joseph "Rick" Ricker, 69, the plane's pilot, said.

"Anti-aircraft battery flak was either light, medium or heavy," said Ricker, who now resides in Beaver, Pa.

Basin likely to be site of new oil technology

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin is being targeted for a pilot program to showcase technology that could boost the oil industry in the area, U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, who represents the 21st District, said at a news conference Saturday in Midland.

Smith

The Oil Research Program will bring together all current technology in the effort "to demonstrate to independent producers how to extract known reserves ... an exhibit to show the best of everything," Smith said.

The Department of Energy, which met Wednesday for the hearing on oil research, affirmed that the proposed project is moving forward, said Smith, who sits on the Sub-Committee for Energy Research and Development, said.

"The Permian Basin is the center of this project. ... $16 million will be spent over the next five years to bring this technology together," Smith said.

Although eight to 10 other sites are expected to be selected throughout the country, Smith said he doesn't foresee any problems with the Permian Basin being chosen.

Two oil fields, the McElroy field in Upton County and the Cowden North field in Ector County, have been targeted to demonstrate the technology.

The Permian Basin area was seriously considered because of known oil reservoirs that haven't yet been extracted and to prevent the further capping of wells in the area. Smith said a collective exhibit of present and future technologies would enable this to be accomplished.

"Hopefully, it will help vitalize your oil industry," Smith said.

"The next step is the Department of Energy to publicly an-

Can compassion win over revenge when it comes to Iran?

You've probably been keeping up with the major earthquake that hit Iran a couple of days ago.

Ott

Early reports said 10,000 people had died.

Later accounts took the number even higher. There has even been speculation that as many as 40,000 may have perished.

I hate to admit it, but I never know how to react to this kind of story, especially when it involves Iran.

Thousands of people are dead. That's got to be bad, right? After all, a human life is a human life.

Then my mind flashes back to 1979. Outside the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. Thousands of Iranians are protesting, shaking their fists at the cameras and screaming slogans like, "Death to Carter" and "America is Satan." All the while, American flags are being burned and Uncle Sam is hanged in effigy. As the whole world watches, the protesters shout their approval.

Ahhh, how the memories come flooding back. And, they're not pleasant.

I'm not one of those fervently patriotic flag-wavers who gets a lump in his throat every time the Star Spangled Banner is struck up, but doggone it, when some little hick country a-half-a-world away starts rubbing America's nose in the sand, well, then you've gone too far. As Merle Haggard once sang, "You're walking on the fighting side of me."

It almost makes you want to look at the devastation caused by the killer earthquake and say, "Take that Iran. You got what you deserved."

It's not unlike the latest news about Donald Trump having money woes. A part of your heart tells you to feel sorry for him, but the rest of you wants to break out laughing like a cartoon character and exclaim, "Hey, it couldn't have happened to a nicer person."

Which brings us back to Iran.

How should we — as red-blooded Americans — feel about the earthquake? Should we feel sorry for the people and their families? Should we offer our assistance? Our country's financial aid?

It's a tough call.

Again, the heart is torn — humanitarianism vs. revenge. Which way should we go?

After much consideration, I begrudgingly propose we err on the side of compassion. After all, these people probably didn't have anything to do with the embassy takeover. In fact, in most cases they likely didn't even know it was happening.

Besides, if you have ever seen the hurt in a mother's eyes when she has lost a loved one, then you know pain is pain, whether it is being experienced by an American or an Iranian.

The hurt does not diminish because of nationality.

So take a deep breath, America. It is time to feel sorry for an enemy, to heal the wounds, so to speak. We must put aside petty feelings of hatred and let our heart do our talking. Compassion must win out.

But, by Allah, the next time one of those sneaky little Iranians starts struttin' his stuff and making us look bad on worldwide television then all of this forgiveness is forgotten.

PARKS: City concentrating on new ones

(From 1B)

"We have to take from our full-time crews to do the work we used to do with our temporary crews," Logan said. "We've been doing things with a little bit higher priority. It's kind of hurting us on our maintenance.

"We just started mowing and irrigating too late, but we had to do these other projects."

The $575,000 Bluebird Park project, started in 1988, has been one of the biggest time-consuming projects. Two concession stands, landscaping, playground equipment, walking trail and little-league field lights are still in the blueprint stage.

"We can't be building all these parks and maintaining the others at the same time," Logan said. "It's one or the other.

"We don't see it as a problem. We see it as a challenge. With all these cuts at City Hall, each department has its own challenge."

One of the biggest gauntlets has been working with a decreasing budget over the past six fiscal years. The 1988-89 parks and recreation budget was $1.9 million, about $100,000 less than was earmarked for this year's budget. The budget was almost $2 million in 1984-85.

However, Logan emphasized that the community has been a major factor in keeping parks alive.

Groups like the Midland United Girls Softball Association, Midland Junior Baseball Association and Midland Softball Association have donated about 8,000 hours of work, Logan said.

"That's a saving of major bucks," Logan said. "They save taxpayer dollars out of the capital improvement budget."

Members of those groups plant trees, water and mow baseball diamonds and pick up trash, he said. "We call these people 'park angels,'" he added.

Logan said he wants to escalate that effort by creating an adopt-a-park program sometime in the future. Under the program, neighborhood organizations would monitor park activities, design facilities and keep the city aware of park needs, he said.

"The general public needs to take an active interest in their neighborhood parks," he said. "I don't know if the average citizen cares whether their parks are brown."

The department's goals for the 1990-91 fiscal year is doing more maintenance and less park building.

"I want to find a happy combination of capital improvements and a whole lot of maintenance projects," Logan said.

In addition, the department is considering awarding private contracts for park watering, he said.

However, next year's goals will have to be accomplished with only an estimated 2 percent expansion in the operating budget, he said. The increase does not reflect a proposed 4 percent to 5 percent across-the-board pay raise for all city staffers, he said.

Councilman Bill Williams said it isn't likely that the parks department will receive any special attention in the 1990-91 budget, which is expected to be hammered out this week.

"Obviously they're going to have to hang on," Williams said. "It won't be much of an (budget) increase."

Williams, though, said park improvements could be accomplished should the effort exhibited by the Cowden Park Community Association become contagious.

Ganem, who has lived near Cowden Park for 10 years, said his neighbors decided to take an active role in the park about a year ago.

The main purpose of the park, which is shaped like a shallow bathtub, is to collect water draining off adjacent streets. But water sometimes stays at the bottom of the basin, leaving it in a marshy condition.

"What the association has decided to do is to turn a good portion of the usable park into a good park," Ganem said. "Instead of burdening the city, we're trying to help the city out. We want to have a place where younger children and older people can walk around safe."

The association plans to seek personal and business donations as well as grants to renovate the park, including improving park drainage so that more of the area is usable, he said. Swing sets, walkways, lights, tables and benches also are in the plans.

"We're doing this as opposed to taking the attitude that our tax dollars should pay for this," Ganem said. "It gives people pride in their neighborhood and enhances the property values of the houses."

Nick Moreno, an employee with the Midland Parks Department, turns the water on a dry Hogan Park. City employees are hoping private citizens will help in maintaining the local parks.

CREW: Pilot says combat 'hairy'

(From 1B)

"Light, you could see it. Medium, you could hear it (exploding), and heavy, you could put your wheels down and taxi on it," Ricker said.

"We had a lot of battle damage ... lost an engine or two but nothing really serious," Ricker said about "Billy Boy," the name of their plane, named after his son.

Most of the missions the crew flew were to Germany and France, including Berlin and Frankfurt.

One bombing mission that Ricker said stands out in his mind was to Bremen, Germany. "When we left that thing it was the most beautiful fire I've ever seen," he said.

To Robert Dell, 65, the crew's radio operator who now resides in St. Petersburg, Fla., one of the most memorable missions was to St. Lo, France. "It was one of our worst ones because we went in at low altitude — 10,000 feet," Dell said. "We were prey to every 8 mm gun. ... We weren't designed to go that low," he said. "Bad, bad, very bad."

Albert Tong, 69, group bombadier, now living in Clearwater, Fla., recalls one mission where he was hit by flak on three occasions — but was unharmed because of a flak suit worn to protect him from the flying metal debris. Flying flak didn't stop Tong from his job, though. "I saw my target come in and creamed it," he said.

This weekend's reunion was the second since the crew flew together. The first was two years ago and only five crew members attended. Of the three that didn't attend this meeting, one couldn't make it because of a death in the family and the other two's exact whereabouts are unknown.

Although the crew said they didn't socialize much when they were a crew, they were out to have a good time this weekend.

"We stick together because our losses were so heavy," Crozier said. "Mostly we just sit around and shoot the bull," he added.

"And then one says 'No, that's not the way it happened,'" Adella Tussing, wife of co-pilot George Tussing, 66, was quick to add. Tussing, the only member of the group to pursue a career in the service, came to Midland with his wife from their home in Aloha, Ore.

All the crew members expressed their feelings that it was quite a surprise to be together again.

"I couldn't believe it," Bob Stahl said, recalling a time a couple of years ago when he got a letter with a photo of him and three of the others in Times Square during their service days. Stahl, 65, now living in Phoenix, Ariz., was the crew's tail gunner.

The initial reunion was organized by Charles "Chuck" Winters, 66, the right waist gunner, who now lives just north of Tolar, Texas. Winters said he was looking at a magazine a few years ago and noticed a 100th Bombers Group meeting. From the organizers, Winters said he was able to track down a couple of his crew and subsequently led to his forming a reunion.

Crozier said he and the rest of the crew hope to continue their reunions every two years.

OIL: House to vote on budget amendment, Smith claims

nounce the Permian Basin as one of the choices ... probably this fall," Smith said.

The final go-ahead will come when the project is added to the budget of the Department of Energy and is approved by congress.

Smith also announced at the news conference that the U.S. House will vote on or before July 23 on a constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

Smith said the amendment is important "because it will bring fiscal sanity to the free spending habits of Congress ... there's no other way to get a balanced budget unless we have a constitutional amendment to do so."

"We are going to have the first-ever balanced budget amendment vote," he added.

Previously the balanced budget amendment was "bottled up in a judiciary sub-committee for the last eight years," and was recently released after a majority of house representatives signed a discharge petition, Smith said.

If the amendment is passed in the House, it will then go to the Senate where it requires a two-thirds vote in the Senate and then a three-fourths state legislature approval.

Banks' lending criticized

DALLAS (AP) — Six Texas financial institutions that have received millions in federal assistance have neglected lending to minority neighborhoods, a Southern Finance Project study claims.

The independent research institute reported that in 1989 the six banks and savings and loans lent nearly $400 million to home buyers in four Texas cities, but less than 1 percent found its way into minority neighborhoods.

The report tracks loans made in the institutions' first year of operation in the wake of their federally-assisted takeovers in 1988.

"What we've have found is that banks in urban areas tend to lend to white, affluent sections of their community," said Tom Schlesinger, director of Southern Finance Project, based in Charlotte, N.C.

His group and ACORN, a coalition of community groups, found that of $388 million in mortgage loans made by the six institutions in 1989 to borrowers in Dallas, San Antonio, Houston and Austin, only $2.5 million went to minority neighborhoods — or 0.64 percent.

The project studied lending by NCNB Texas National Bank, First Gibraltar Bank, Guaranty Federal Savings Bank and American Federal Bank, all based in Dallas; Houston-based United Savings Association; and Austin-based Franklin Federal Bancorp.

Odessan convicted of auto theft

Staff Report

An Odessa woman who allegedly conspired to deliver a stolen car to a Mexican police officer was convicted by a Midland jury of auto theft in 238th District Court Friday, District Attorney Al Schorre reported.

Sara Rudy, 36, was arrested Sept. 21, 1989, as she attempted to drive a stolen Isuzu Trooper II through a border checkpoint near Presidio, reports stated.

Trial testimony indicated that Ms. Rudy planned to deliver the vehicle to an officer at the federal police station in Ojinaga, Mexico.

The vehicle was reported stolen from Perfection Honda in Midland. Schorre said two men in a car behind Ms. Rudy also were arrested in connection with the theft.

Judge John Hyde is expected to sentence Ms. Rudy Tuesday.

WOMEN: Work 'thrilling,' but exhausting

on the force.

"We're all firefighters," she said.

Opal Williams, a charter member of the VFD with many fires under her belt, said the firefighting is hot, smoky work, but thrilling. "The worst thing is the scorched eyebrows," she said.

The crew members hose each other off before and during the fire to keep from getting overheated. None of the volunteers have ever suffered a fire-related injury, Mrs. Williams said, "though the muscles get tired."

"Sometimes you come in from a mean fire so tired and hot you can't stand it and you're glad the volunteers back at the station are washing the truck and refilling it," Mrs Graham said.

Mrs. Graham also credits the Salvation Army for its support of the VFD. At the prairie fire they supplied cool water and soft drinks to the crews.

Ninty percent of the approximately 35 volunteers are certified firefighters and the other 10 percent are working on their 162 hours of course requirements, Mrs. Graham said.

After certification, they continue attending short courses sponsored by the Texas Forestry Service, Midland College, Texas A&M University, various oil companies and other city fire departments and VFDs.

Kids between 15 and 18 years old participate in the youth department and several plan to be city firefighters, Mrs. Graham said.

"Everything we do is fire oriented," Mrs. Chandler said. "You want to feel safe with the people you work with; you want to be able to rely on them."

"We're volunteers until the pager goes off, then we're all professionals," she said. "When we get out on a fire, we know what to do. If we can't help we're part of the problem."

The volunteers know how to cope with structure fires, hazardous materials, farm rescues and other perilous scenarios, but they most commonly face grass fires.

"I think the record was 10 fires one Fourth of July," Mrs. Chandler said. "But I can't really say what was the worse fire, they're all different."

With the tankers' cumulative 6,000-gallon water carrying capacity, they're indispensable at the big fires, assisting the Midland Fire Department.

"We and the city work real well together, but it doesn't take long for their 500 gallon tanks to get used up," Mrs. Williams said.

"Water is the key," Mrs. Chandler added. "In town they have hydrants and unlimited water, but out here we have to conserve it."

She said the VFD formed to help the city firefighters on remote blazes. "We started with air," she said.

The volunteers raised funds for their trucks and the five bay building through bake sales, dances, raffles and "Breakfast Bingo," still played at the station every Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m.

"We eat and play together, too," Mrs. Chandler said.

"We love it. We feel like we're helping out," Mrs. Graham said.

Businessman to move black college to Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Businessman Comer Cottrell said he and members of the Paul Quinn College's board of trustees will formally announced Monday the black liberal arts college is moving to Dallas from Waco.

Cottrell said the college will take over the campus of the defunct Bishop College. Cottrell bought the property in the Dallas section of South Oak Cliff four months ago.

"Bringing an already accredited college to the campus is the best move we could have made," said Cottrell, who is president of Pro-Line Corp. "My only disappointment is it won't be called Bishop-Quinn College.

Cottrell then explained Paul Quinn must retains its name to transfer its accreditation.

Quinn has ties to the African Methodist Episcopal Church, which it will retain.

Trustees told the Waco Tribune-Herald Friday that no one on the board opposes moving to Dallas.

Heatstroke may have killed motorist

DALLAS (AP) — A 53-year-old Dallas man, who died Friday, may have suffered fatal injuries in a car accident because of heat stroke, officials said.

Police said David Roberson, who died at Parkland Memorial Hospital, had been driving erratically Monday. Witnesses said he ran through a traffic signal, then was hit broadside by one car and collided with another vehicle.

Roberson stumbled from the car and collapsed at the scene. After being taken to Parkland, his body temperature was recorded at 110 degrees.

Barry's lesson learned too late

Marion Barry's "fall" hurts significantly worse than that of other politicians who have become role models in a short, brilliant burst of media attention only to have their human frailties revealed to the world.

It's tragic because Barry, elected mayor of the nation's capital in 1979, had the opportunity to become an example for that city's — even the nation's — young people at a time when they truly need positive reinforcement that the "good guys" do still win and climb to the top in this country.

Washington, regrettably, is known as the "crack capital" of the world and the murder capital of the United States, which doesn't give young people the value reinforcement they need.

Literally thousands of young blacks are tempted there by more than a few bad examples to start using drugs or to turn to a life of crime. Washington politicians who fall from grace because of their corruption, lack of morals or greed don't help matters either.

Barry had been held out as the shining example for poor blacks and others of a public servant who was battling problems of discrimination, hatred, violence and drugs.

But that was prior to his indictment on nine counts of cocaine possession, three felony counts of perjury and one misdemeanor count of conspiracy.

Barry's trial is now under way and a verdict is expected in the next few days. While Barry's innocence must be presumed until the verdict is in, the prospect of him beating the charges is not promising since he allegedly was videotaped smoking crack cocaine in a Washington hotel last January.

Recently Barry announced that he will not seek a fourth term as Washington's mayor. There's little doubt that his political career is over.

During his recent announcement Barry told Washingtonians that a "time for healing" has arrived. In that assertion he is absolutely correct.

The healing can only begin when individuals like Marion Barry recognize that their position as a leader extends to them certain privileges but also demands a greater degree of responsibility than even that borne by average citizens. They are examples for young people whether they like it or not and when they fail to live up to the standards of our society, we all suffer.

It's sad that Marion Barry is learning that lesson so late.

ANOTHER VIEW

Family leave bill should be vetoed

Congress has approved legislation requiring employers to give unpaid leave to workers caring for newborn and ailing relatives. And those who voted for the measure are predicting that because this is an election year, President Bush may drop his threat to veto the legislation. We urge the president to stick to his guns and veto the counter-productive proposals.

Certainly such legislation is well-calculated to earn brownie points for elected officials who can offer goodies to their constituents without raising taxes. They say let George do it, with George in this case being not only the president but businesses covered by the legislation.

Such firms are those with more than 50 employees at a single site. They would be required to provide up to 12 weeks of unpaid sick leave to new parents and to employees who must take care of sick family members. Employers would have to maintain the worker's health benefits during the period.

Supporters of the measure, which include labor and women's groups, contend that it is needed because of changing demographics that they say show that 60 percent of mothers work outside the home. The United States, they claim, is lagging behind most other industrialized countries in providing such benefits.

But such a "free lunch" benefit is a discretionary fringe benefit that should be a subject of collective bargaining instead of being mandatory. Employers groups point out that the additional cost burdens on business can only reduce their flexibility, and perhaps lead to reduction of other benefits that workers might prefer.

Supporters of the legislation contend that it would not be especially costly for business because employees on leave would not be paid. And the cost of maintaining their health insurance supposedly would average out to only $5.30 per year per covered employee.

But such figures don't take into account hidden costs to employers, such as litigation and training temporary employees.

"This bill is not going to be the doom of our economy," says Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas. "But it is another nail in the coffin of competitiveness and productivity."

If family leave legislation is enacted, we foresee Congress' next move down a slippery slope that could result in mandating employee health benefits as well. Congress must give up this penchant for killing the goose that lays the golden egg. Since that's not likely, we urge President Bush to veto this short-sighted legislation, election year or not.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On June 24, 1948, Communist forces cut off all land and water routes between West Germany and West Berlin, prompting the United States to organize a massive airlift of supplies into the city's western sector to counter the blockade.

On this date:

In 1509, Henry VIII was crowned king of England.

In 1647, Margaret Brent, a niece of Lord Baltimore, was ejected from the Maryland Assembly after demanding a place and vote in that governing body.

Bill would limit manufacturers' liability

WASHINGTON — To hear some in Congress tell it, Americans have no one to blame but themselves if other nations are outpacing the United States with innovative products such as new drugs or fancy widgets. If only we would stop suing when products blow up in our faces, then manufacturers would be free to let their imaginations run wild.

Anderson

That argument for fewer lawsuits comes out of the mouths of lawmakers who are sitting like wooden dummies on the knees of the manufacturers.

A bill is before the Senate that would narrow the rights of average Americans to sue over faulty products. The idea isn't new. The manufacturing lobby floats it regularly. But this time, the bill won committee approval after a heated debate and may be voted on by the entire Senate before the year is out.

We'll be the last ones to advocate more lawsuits. No one but lawyers wants lawyers to make exponentially higher sums of money while hogtying American commerce and courts. But the answer is not to hogtie the little guy to keep him from suing, especially when his only other protection from bad products — the federal regulatory process — is a bust.

In our ideal world, people only sue when they are undeniably wronged, the punishment always fits the crime and the lawyers give their fees to charity.

In our ideal world, the Food and Drug Administration never takes bribes to approve bad drugs and the Federal Aviation Administration never allows faulty planes into the sky.

But in the real world, bad products slip by the regulators and the only justice the little guy gets is from suing the manufacturers' socks off. Congress should not take away that avenue unless the federal government is ready to protect the consumer by doing a decent job of reviewing potentially dangerous products and by punishing the manufacturers when a bad product slips through the system.

In the current round of debate on product liability suits, the manufacturers really stretched their thinking caps to the limit to come up with the argument that American innovation is being stymied by lawsuits.

Sponsors of the bill, including Sen. Bob Kasten, R-Wis., have insisted all along that they aren't trying to curtail legal rights or promote shoddy products. They simply want to unleash industry to be more inventive without the threat of multimillion-dollar lawsuits.

The argument eventually comes down to how many millions of dollars an injured person should get. As the law now stands, a person can sue for compensatory damages because of an injury — lost wages or doctor bills. But the injured person can also sue for punitive damages — the monetary equivalent of a jail term for punishment.

The Senate bill would keep the compensatory damages in place but would severely limit punitive damages, including exempting some industries from any punitive damages at all if their product had been approved by a regulatory agency such as the FDA.

That would lift a multimillion-dollar burden from the shoulders of manufacturers, and it would also remove a multimillion-dollar incentive for being careful about what they sell. The bottom line is, should companies be punished for their carelessness or should they simply be billed for the damages?

Unless the federal government is willing to be a better consumer cop, Congress should not take away one of the few weapons consumers have to protect themselves.

Nantucket fog brings out cloudy discussion

This is the fog season in Nantucket, so the other evening we were all sitting on the porch down at Joy's place between the pond and the Atlantic Ocean admiring the fog when Rust observed that Carl Sandburg had been wrong about fog.

"Fog doesn't come on little cat feet," he said.

Baker

We all stared into the truly beautiful fog drifting over the pond, sipped a little and congratulated ourselves silently on not being in dreary and unfoggy places like Washington and Manhattan. Most of us, being cured liberals, didn't even feel guilty about that, either.

"The cat metaphor was absolutely wrong," Frank said.

"Sandburg didn't understand fog," Connie said.

"What's more," said Tom, "he was wrong when he called Chicago 'city of the big shoulders.'"

As you can see, it was a gathering of writing people. I though it safe to whack T.S. Eliot, too. Speaking of overrated poets, I said, Eliot didn't know anything about fog either.

"Nobody who understood fog could have written that Eliot line about the yellow fog that rubs its back upon the window-panes."

"The essence of fog is insubstantiality," I declared. "Therefore, it can have no back to rub upon anything. Moreover, fog is not yellow, it's gray."

At this instant the fog over the south end of the pond lightened, brightened and turned pale yellow. We all knew it was only the late afternoon sun forcing a few feeble rays through a thin patch, but we felt reprimanded.

You could sense it from the long silence.

It was Dora who turned the tide against the pleasure of the day. Dora's conversion from liberalism had always been suspect anyhow.

"There is still a lot of bleeding heart in Dora," David maintained even after publication of her acclaimed poem saluting the free-market system, "Hail to Thee, Blithe Market!"

Now she said, "It is disgustingly elitist for us to sit here in this sensitive and moving fog on this faraway and expensive island..."

Ignoring him, Dora forged onward. "...incredibly expensive island, sneering at underprivileged poets whose experience of fog was so much less lavish than ours."

"Ivory tower," said Rust. "You missed a splendid opportunity to call this faraway and incredibly expensive island an ivory tower."

Have I mentioned that Rust is a professor of cliche? Nothing distresses him more than literary critics who fail to say "seminal." It galls him when people in high dudgeon neglect to accuse their victims of living in ivory towers.

Dora said it was our elitism that made her ashamed to be one of us, doing nothing at all for humanity when there was so much to be done. And look at us: just sitting and sipping and staring at fog and putting down Sandburg and Eliot in this faraway, incredibly expensive ivory tower we infested.

Connie said hey, come on now Dora, she, Connie, had a "Save the Whales" bumper sticker on her car. And I said come off it, Dora, who is a bigger save-the-earth enthusiast than I? People wanting to save the earth, was that what she called doing nothing for humanity?

Frank put his finger on it next evening when everybody came to my place to admire the fog. Nobody was enjoying the fog, though it has rarely been better. Frank said, "It's because Dora shook us to the core by making us realize that we still haven't got far enough away from our old despicable liberalism to enjoy the elitism of being on this faraway, expensive, fogbound island."

The long faces spoke eloquently: the old odious liberal guilt had returned thicker, damper, sadder than the fog on Miacomet Pond.

GEORGE WILL

Prince Charles a counterpoint to Thatcher

LONDON — In conversation in his book-strewn Kensington Palace study, Prince Charles seems studiously mellow. But in public pronouncements, he says things like: Many developers are more destructive to Britain than the Luftwaffe was; it leveled buildings, but didn't replace them with anything uglier than rubble.

Will

Charles has reversed the politicians' practice of being more circumspect in public than in private. A steady stream of shrewd opinionatedness has made him the most consequential member of the royal family since his great-great-great-grandmother, Victoria. Of course, he is not a politician; he cannot be: The (unwritten) constitution forbids it.

In theory, the modern monarch is part of the "dignified" as distinct from the "efficient" aspect of the state, with rights only "to be consulted, to encourage and to warn." But by encouraging certain values and warning against others, Charles has become a large part of the nation's political conversation.

Charles, 41, is a spirited man in an often dispiriting job. He may be a grandfather before he is king. However, he fills his days by commenting, vigorously, on such matters as environmentalism, architecture ("the built environment") and falling standards of English usage. Non-political subjects, you say? Not so.

His Philippic concerning architecture began in earnest with a withering (and lethal: The project died) criticism of the "monstrous carbuncle" proposed as an addition to the National Gallery on Trafalgar Square.

His is a European sensibility, shaped by cities built before structural steel and elevators, when the necessity of climbing stairs and the load-bearing limits of stone limited most buildings to about eight stories. However, when he denounces London's "jostling scrum of skyscrapers," he also is disapproving of the culture of materialism that Thatcherism — celebrates.

The man and the moment met in the 1980s, when three tendencies converged. The mildly liberal social-democratic center collapsed. "Green" politics rose from real environmental concerns and from the collapse of the left's traditional agenda. And Thatcherism produced a politics of unapologetic materialism.

Charles represents the traditional Tory paternalism that Thatcher despises, but he also is a tribune of common opinion, as in his rejection of architectural modernism. He is both trendy green and Tory blue.

When he says man is "more than a mere mechanical object for making money" and he deplores the "fierce obsession about being 'modern'," some Thatcherites hear hostile chords. He is vulnerable to ridicule, preaching from a palace against materialism. But there should always be someone telling the political class that "no one generation owns the world."

As his architectural tastes are deeply traditional, so, too, are his strictures against the debasement of English, "the world's most successful language." He insists that when "Middlemarch" is dropped from school curricula because it is long and demanding, children lose literature's gift of a vocabulary of greatness. When Biblical revision renders "Harken to my words" as "Give me a hearing," he asks: By making the words less poetic, do you make them "more democratic"? He calls that assumption "patronizing."

The monarchy is in the magnificence business. It supposedly leavens national life with elevating spectacle, stirring sentiments that solidify society, affirming cultural continuity amidst the modern world's whirl of disintegrative forces.

But Charles, not content with a career of merely lending a dignifying presence, participates in the shaping of the public mind, which means politics. But what is politics?

It is the grand subject of how communities should live, what they should value. Politics is a particularly large subject in the Thatcher era because she regards statecraft as soulcraft; she aims to change the nation's values.

Charles' voice is not really raised in opposition, but sounds contrapuntal themes. He is a profoundly interesting paradox: a "young fogy" who is both a scold and a royal populist.

Article on survey too biased to ignore

On Thursday, June 14, I presented the results of the South Midland health survey to members of People Against a Contaminated Environment (PACE). This was attended by David Morris, staff writer for the Midland Reporter-Telegram, and an article appeared in the Sunday edition.

Instead of focusing on the survey results, the reporter chose to emphasize my part in this survey and did so in such a way that it seemed as if I had been unscrupulous and that the survey results were untrustworthy. Although I generally ignore misleading or incorrect statements that I find in the Reporter-Telegram, this last article was so off-base and so tilted toward a negative interpretation that I must respond to it.

The people of South Midland have banded together to address a perceived environmental health risk from an unknown source. At their request, I coordinated and interpreted a preliminary study to see if there was some justification to the general feeling that they were suffering a higher-than-normal number of ailments in their community. A preliminary study uses a little time and a little money to see if there is a reason to spend a lot of time and a lot of money on the perceived problem.

Unfortunately, I did say that I would not stake my reputation on this survey (no one would), but this should not be taken to mean that I lack confidence in the method or the results. The survey performed as intended, and the results indicate that the people of South Midland suffer a disproportionate number of cancers, digestive disorders, and severe headaches. As a result of this survey, I can say that the matter deserves a closer look and that the residents of South Midland are correct in thinking their health is endangered.

I do not like talking to reporters and afterwards living in dread of how my statements will be interpreted. I chose not to give Mr. Morris a copy of the survey results because of such reservations and not because the results are suspect. Copies of the survey have been given to individuals and agencies (locally and statewide) that understand the purpose and limitations of such a survey and can be expected to act responsibly with the information.

In the future, I must remember that Mr. Morris does not handle understatement very well. "The biologist admits he rounded off some statistics..." must have seemed like a great bit of investigative reporting when in fact I did not use any statistics other than percentages. The survey results were presented as a straight comparison without means, standard deviations, tests of significance and other confusing (to me and my audience) manipulations of the numbers.

There may indeed be unknown factors that affect the distribution of health problems in South Midland and these may come out in a more complete survey. However for the present and with the best data available, there is every reason to think that an environmental risk to health exists in this area. Morris' article suggests that the whole thing is fabricated. That is not a fair representation.

A Thinning Obsession: Readers Respond

In conjunction with "A Thinning Obsession," the five-part series which begins today, readers are invited to express their opinions about society's current fascination with dieting.

Do Americans really believe it's impossible to be too thin? Are Americans obsessed with losing weight? Does our society treat overweight persons like second-class citizens? What do you think?

Letters received by Tuesday, July 17, will be considered for publication in our new reader-participation feature, "Sound-Off." They should be addressed to Anntoinette Moore, Associate City Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, PO Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

The special community forum will be published Sunday, July 22.

Church gave precious gift to youngsters

Due to an act of tremendous generosity, members of the Boys and Girls Club were given an opportunity of a lifetime recently.

The kind and generous members and staff of the Golf Course Road Church of Christ provided the funds to put on a summer camp (Opportunity Camp West Texas) for the underprivileged kids of the Boys and Girls Club. About 80 of our kids were sent to Camp Butman, located between Abilene and Merkel, for an entire week during June 3-8.

Our members enjoyed a fun-filled week of activities, beautiful surroundings, carpeted cabins with super air-conditioning, three square meals a day plus snacks, and fellowship, guidance and love from the greatest group of counselors and directors anywhere. The kids had a wonderful time and they have some precious memories that they will carry forever.

The staff here at the club — Pete Ruiz, Meri Jo Strawn and myself — would like to express our gratitude to this caring church and the wonderful people who gave our kids a chance. Thank you from the bottom of our hearts and know that you have touched so many lives in a very positive way. We are extremely grateful and already looking forward to camp next year.

Legislation will open doors for disabled

Tuesday, May 22, was a momentous day for the disabled when the United States House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed the Americans with Disabilities Act.

At some time or another, most of the country's estimated 45 million disabled have been prohibited from entering a movie theater, refused service in a restaurant or not allowed to have our hair styled in the styling shop of our choice. Since most businesses are fair and honest, such instances of blatant discrimination are sporadic but still evident and ongoing. The recent expulsion of a visually-impaired man from three Chinese restaurants in Midland because of his seeing-eye dog is a prime example. The ADA is partially meant to prohibit such practices.

The act also is meant to allow smaller and larger firms up to two years to remove architectural barriers, such as narrow restroom entrances and inaccessible stairways. The disabled communities in each city are more than willing to offer advice to businesses about how to make their buildings and services more accessible. We hope those businesses are more responsive to our needs than certain local eating establishments have been.

Criminal, not officers to blame for mishap

Regarding the Sunday, June 10 letter by Ms. DeSalvo, entitled "Police should pay for woman's medical care," I would like to ask a question. What in the name of Sam Hill is she thinking?

Our officers deserved every reward they received, and they should not be held responsible for the accident. They did not, as she said, "initiate a high-speed chase," the criminal did that. All the cops could do was follow him and attempt to catch him, which they did.

Also, if high-speed chases were outlawed, how could any criminal be caught? All a criminal would have to do would be to drive faster than pursuing policemen.

My regards and regrets go out to Ms. Demaray, and I do feel sorry for her, but it was an accident. The only one to blame is the criminal, not the policemen.

Federal funds better than higher road tax

From what we are seeing in the media, our state Legislature is planning to levy a 10-cent per gallon tax on our gasoline in order to beef up our highway fund, etc.

According to a special financial report published in May of this year by our state comptroller, Bob Bullock, more than a $1 billion in federal aid is due Texas. These are dedicated funds for highways, airports and unemployment services.

It seems that these funds are being held in Washington as an "accounting trick" to mask the true federal deficit and to prevent funding cuts under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act. According to Bullock's report, funds collected from the federal gasoline tax are deposited in the Highway Trust Fund, with aid from such fund specifically earmarked for construction, maintenance and repair of the nation's highways. By the end of 1989, Congress had authorized Texas to spend more than $540 million from the fund, but did not appropriate the money from the fund.

Until the money is appropriated, Texas will not see a penny. Rather than dip into the taxpayers' pockets again by levying a 10-cent tax on each gallon of gasoline he buys, it seems to me that it would behoove our state representatives to attempt to extract from our federal government the $540 million it owes Texas for the repair of its highway system.

What do you, as a taxpayer, think? You might want to question your representative about this matter.

Lead-based paints not the only danger

In regards to your news article by staff writer Brian Pearson, May 25, "TWC tells City what to do with its waste," I agree that the barrels encrusted with lead paint should be disposed of. I also understand a home painted with lead paint is dangerous to our health.

In order that we keep our thinking open to all lead hazards to health we should not forget our wonderful stained glass windows that magnify our churches. I am sure any one church would have more lead exposed in their stained glass windows than you would find in those barrels or a house painted with lead paint.

Readers' views on: Flag amendment

'Old Glory' needs more protection

I agree that to stop the desecration of our flag a constitutional amendment is a little much, however, I know of no one advocating rescinding the previous amendments to the Constitution.

In your June 18th editorial I feel you're carrying free speech a bit far. This fellow I knew of was a dedicated atheist and when under the influence had to be restrained to prevent his burning the church houses in town as a means of expressing his free speech. As you can see, this free speech business could get out of hand if carried over into philosophy, politics and editorials.

At a tender age while serving in the Marines, my confidence was shaken by the death of President Roosevelt, our leader. Our flag replaced the fallen leader as a symbol for which many would fight and many die. To me, it is regrettable that a constitutional amendment has become necessary to re-establish "Old Glory."

First Amendment stance admirable

Your June 18th editorial opposing a constitutional amendment to ban flag burning took me by surprise. Frankly, I had assumed that the Reporter-Telegram would either support such an amendment, or be cowed into silence by Midland's conservative hierarchy.

I salute your courage, and your support for the First Amendment.

Readers views on: Need for talk show

Talk show makes easy listening hard

We are very fortunate to have a good "easy listening" music station in our area. Until recently I kept my radio tuned to it all day.

I found it very distressing when this station began airing a controversial talk show for two full hours each day from 3 to 5 p.m.

Most working people who keep a radio tuned to such a station do so for the soothing effect of the music. To change to an emotional-charge talk show in the late afternoon, when most office workers are beginning to feel the stress of the workday seems like poor judgment on the part of the station manager. Programs of this type should be scheduled in the late evening.

Also, whatever happened to the idea of "equal time?" When a program that is so very much slanted in one direction is aired, why not one giving listeners of the opposite view a chance to be heard?

With the loud, nerve-jarring noise passing for music on most stations today, it was a pleasure to listen to this station all day. I now miss that soothing music the last two hours of my hectic workday.

Controversial show really unnecessary

I have always loved KMND 1510 AM radio. It is listened to in our home from the time it comes on in the morning until it signs off at night.

Even the commercials, many done by marvelous Max Howard, are easy on the ears. Easy listening music is hard to come by in this stress-filled world and that holds true for the Permian Basin as well.

So I have to agree completely with the letter written by Vera Wecker in the June 17th Midland Reporter-Telegram. In my opinion, if there is anything we do not need, it is another confrontational, windy talk show host.

Please give us back our music-filled afternoons and leave the verbosity to the Phils and Geraldos of the airways.

U.S., U.S.S.R. relations have never been friendlier

Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Never before in the peacetime history of U.S. relations with Russia, including the reign of the czars, has there been such far-reaching, friendly cooperation as now exists under the leadership of Presidents Bush and Gorbachev.

Hearst

After American entry into World War II, there was limited military cooperation as we poured aid into the Soviet Union to help defeat Nazi Germany. Stalin showed little appreciation and less friendship. He complained bitterly that we did not open a second front in 1942 before we and our allies were sufficiently prepared for a liberation landing in Western Europe.

In violation of the 1945 Yalta agreement, Stalin imposed totalitarian subjugation on Eastern Europe, which led to the Cold War and the world's most dangerous nuclear arms race. Thereafter, every Soviet dictator up to Gorbachev considered America the enemy and sought to achieve overwhelming military superiority even though the cost, coupled with communist corruption and incompetence, wrecked the Soviet economy.

When Gorbachev came to power, he opted for revolutionary internal reforms, freedom for Eastern Europe, an end to the arms race and apparently genuine friendship for America — all in order to avert economic catastrophe. This has led to unprecedented peacetime U.S.-Soviet cooperation. It occurred to me that a brief summary of the outstanding cooperative actions might contribute to a cheerful Sunday for the readers of this column.

■ In one of the most amazing acts in the history of relations between great powers, Gorbachev appealed to President Bush during the summit meeting for advice on how to set up his new Kremlin office as president of the Soviet Union. He wanted to know how Bush runs the White House; who gets into the Oval Office; how does paper flow into his office; how does he handle relations with Congress.

President Bush, who had established a personal rapport of warm friendliness with the Soviet leader, ordered Chief of Staff John Sununu to give members of Gorbachev's personal staff an in-depth tour of White House administrative operations and those of four top Cabinet departments. He also offered to send Sununu to Moscow for a first-hand look at President Gorbachev's presidential operations and advise him on how efficiency could be improved. Gorbachev immediately accepted the offer and Sununu is expected to go to Moscow sometime this summer. The Wall Street Journal described this development as "an example of East-West cooperation that once would have been unthinkable."

We know, of course, that the two superpower leaders signed at the recent Washington summit an agreement in principle to conclude, probably before the end of this year, a treaty providing for a 30 percent cut in intercontinental missiles. When ratified by the Senate and the Soviet parliament, this treaty would set in motion the first reduction in the nuclear age of the ultimate weapons of destruction. That may well be historically the most important initial act of the new era of Soviet-American cooperation. Among other highlights of this Bush-Gorbachev personal relationship are the following:

■ In response to the urging of President Bush, the Soviet leader acquiesced to the end of communist domination of Eastern Europe.

■ After flatly rejecting unification of Germany, Gorbachev was persuaded primarily by President Bush to accept it.

■ After strongly opposing participation of a united Germany in NATO, Gorbachev has, in effect, accepted the advice of Bush and the major European allies that Germany in NATO would be better for Soviet security than a neutralized Germany. However, his final acquiescence depends on an agreement concerning Soviet security and economic interests.

■ After demanding equal American and Soviet troop levels in Europe, Gorbachev accepted Bush's proposal that the United States be allowed to maintain a 30,000 soldier advantage. The two leaders agreed in principle on a 195,000 ceiling on U.S. and Soviet troops in Central Europe. This would mean a 65 percent cut in Soviet troops and a 25 percent reduction of American troops.

■ Signing at the summit of a breakthrough accord to ban superpower production of chemical weapons and the gradual reduction of the U.S. stockpile of 30,000 tons and the Soviet arsenal of 50,000 tons to a level of 5,000 tons for each country by 2002.

Other cooperative agreements include joint efforts to create a new European security and economic order, a U.S.-Soviet environmental protection pact expanding cooperation into 45 areas and calling for an international conference on global warning proposed by President Bush, a new shipping agreement opening up 42 ports in each country to ships carrying the other nation's flag, establishment of routine travel across the Bering Strait, trade agreements including the sale of 1.5 million tons of U.S. wheat to the Soviet Union and diplomatic actions to encourage a peaceful settlement of the Baltic states' independence movement.

This remarkable record of cooperation in a relatively short period of time reflects President Gorbachev's expressed hope at Stanford University that our two countries would be "partners" in "the creation of a new civilization." It may be the destiny of the two compatible superpower presidents to lead the way.

Dallas gangs growing

DALLAS (AP) — Gang membership in Dallas is increasing, and a growing number of children as young as 11 years old are joining.

Steve Spradling of the Dallas Police Gang Task Force said there are 1,800 members in 143 gangs in Dallas. They commit a total of about 200 offenses each month, he said.

On recent raid by Dallas police was conducted on the home of an officer whose daughter was involved in gang activity. As police drove up, one gang member dropped a sawed-off 12-gauge shotgun in the grass.

The police department sponsored a conference Friday on gang activity in Dallas.

State District Judge Larry Baraka told conference participants that parents must step in to block their children from joining gangs.

"One of the reasons why we have gangs is not because kids go out to be evil," he said.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Time permits now available for second summer session

By H.A. Tuck

Persons planning to attend Summer II classes may obtain time permits starting Monday morning. These permits to register are issued in the Student Services Office, Administration Building, from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. tomorrow until July 5.

Tuck

Official registration for Summer II classes is scheduled on Wednesday, July 11, with classes beginning July 12. The session ends on August 15.

Since time permits assign specific time periods to come for registration, the earlier they are obtained the more likely you are to get the classes you want at the time most convenient for you.

Monday officially is the last day at Midland College for Dr. Hosni Nabi, who's going to Massachusetts to become Dean of Instruction for Cape Cod Community College. Everyone who knows Hosni, or his wife, Shea, knows what a loss this is for the college. Hosni was a great classroom teacher in biology and was a great division chair and dean. No less a loss is Shea, who was responsible for getting hundreds of students through biology.

But the good news is that former MC instructor and division chairman Dr. Richard Jolly has been selected to replace Hosni. Jolly was at MC for eight years before going to the Tarrant County Junior College system as an associate dean in 1984.

We wish the best to Hosni and Shea and enthusiastically welcome back Richard. His wife, Linda, is returning to the Midland school system as a counselor

The bookstore did get moved last weekend, thanks to the heroic efforts of the maintenance department and the bookstore employees. Not only did the thousands of items get moved, but could be located when the bookstore opened in its new facility last Monday morning.

Timing for the move was critical, since it needed to be done after late registration for the first summer session, for those buying textbooks; but it needed to be done so it wouldn't delay renovation of the original Student Center building. The move was done on time and workers now are busy with completing the new portion and renovating the older portion of the building. Completion is scheduled for late August.

A "residual" ACT exam is being offered at MC Friday, July 6. Those who wish to take the ACT, which is one of the standardized tests for admission to many colleges and universities, must sign up and pay the $20 fee not later than 5 p.m. July 5.

The exam is being administered July 6 from 5-9 p.m.

I hope we've not misled too many youngsters about the Cheerleading Camp that's being conducted by the MC cheerleaders July 30-Aug. 2. Only those in grades one through six are eligible to attend the camp, which costs $40 per person. Registration deadline is July 1, when half of the registration fee must be paid.

Applications are available from the Athletic Office in the Physical Education Building or by calling 685-4579.

Would you rather learn how to dance or how to manage a business? Think carefully before you answer.

Both activities are available this week through the Continuing Education Department. There are actually two dance classes, but they conflict so you can take only one.

Becky Speight is teaching Aerobic Dance on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-8:30 p.m. at a cost of $19. Frieda Crawford will be teaching Beginning Country Western Dance on Tuesday and Thursday from 7:30-9 p.m., also for $19. Both classes end July 12.

Holly Harvey will teach a one-day Retail Management class on Thursday from 1-5 p.m. for $15. Since this one-time class meets in the afternoon, you also could enroll for one of the dance classes.

Register for any of the classes on Monday in the Continuing Education office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 for more information.

College hosts GED commencement

Staff Report

Midland College is conducting its annual GED commencement ceremony at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium.

More than 90 persons who have passed the GED (General Education Development) exams during the past 12 months are eligible to participate. The GED is recognized as the equivalent of a high school diploma.

Speaker for the ceremony will be Albert Black, Texas Education Agency, Austin. The ceremony is open to the public and is followed by a reception honoring graduates, their families and friends.

Midland College provides free tutoring in its Adult Learning Center for those wishing to prepare for the five-part GED examination. There is a fee for the exam.

Midland College scholarships are provided annually for the ten graduates who complete the GED with the highest scores.

"Our GED graduates range in age from 17 to 81 this year. Many of them have indicated a desire to seek a college education and several of this year's graduates have already enrolled at Midland College," said Cynthia Turland, director of the MC Adult Learning Center.

She noted that 379,000 persons passed GED exams nationally in 1989 of the almost 683,000 who took the exams.

"With more than 51 million adults in the United States lacking a high school diploma, there are so many who aren't capable of reading help-wanted ads, of following written instructions, or even understanding warning labels or traffic signs," Ms. Turland said. "As technology increases, those without the minimum education of high school won't be able to function efficiently in tomorrow's world."

Adult Basic Education assistance is available both daytime and evening at several locations in Midland, through Midland College's adult Learning Center. Detailed information may be obtained by calling 685-4566 or visiting the Adult Learning Center in the college's Occupational-Technical Building.

Jilted bride chooses to make homeless happy

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — Saturday was supposed to be Kathleen Gooley's wedding day. But when the groom backed out and she got stuck with the reception bill, the jilted bride decided to give her party to the homeless.

The 41-year-old Gooley of Norwalk found herself thrust into the national spotlight when, after her fiance got cold feet two months ago, she and an intended bridesmaid decided to reorganize the event for 150 homeless people from southwestern Connecticut.

"We would have been doing this at this time anyway," Gooley said Saturday as she watched her guests dance to the music of a disc jockey who donated his time. "I hope somebody else in the same situation will do the same thing."

Busloads of homeless men, women and children from Norwalk and nearby Stamford and Bridgeport arrived at the pink-and-white decorated Canongate catering hall just after noon. Some were clad in jeans and T-shirts, others shirts and ties or dresses. Many hadn't had a hot meal in weeks.

"You're blessing us with your day," said Eugene Patenaude, 50, a recovering alcoholic and drug addict who sleeps in a Norwalk shelter. "We will never be able to repay you."

"This is Christmas in the summer for these people," said Marvin Minkler, who works with the homeless in the streets and escorted a group to the party. "This is a decent meal for them and they don't get it on a daily basis."

Donated flower arrangements and balloons adorned each table, and the guests sat down to an opening course of fruit cup and a tossed salad.

Waiters and waitresses served hors d'oeuvres: fried won tons, shrimp puffs, chicken wings, meatballs and egg rolls. The main course was stuffed chicken breast and string beans almondine, with cake, ice cream and coffee for dessert.

Tara Gooley, at 11 the youngest of Gooley's three children, left a photocopied note on each plate that read, "Hope you have a great day," with pictures of teddy bears.

"I've seen stories on TV about them (the homeless) and it makes me really sad," she said. "I'm very fortunate to have what I have now today."

The intended bridesmaid, Rinda Farnham, thought of giving the party for the homeless after the caterer refused to refund $4,000 of the $5,800 Gooley had paid, Gooley said.

She said she agreed because she and one of her chidren, then a baby, spent a night in a shelter 23 years ago.

Gooley's balance bought 118 dinners. Everything else was donated, including the buses that transported the guests. Members of the public who heard through the media walked into the reception and offered cakes, brownies and checks.

Gooley and Farnham appeared on Joan Rivers' TV talk show Tuesday — Rivers gave $500, which paid for 16 dinners. Canongate owner Ginger Sollazzo-Raymond contributed another 16 dinners, for a total of 150.

Ralph Blechner, an electrical engineer, walked into the reception and handed Gooley a $500 check.

"I saw it in the paper and I thought, now this is a great lady," he said.

Douglas not used to writer's 'role'

DALLAS (AP) — Some people never forget, says actor Kirk Douglas who has just had his first novel published.

Douglas

"I once said, 'If I want to lie a little, I'll write an autobiography. If I want to tell the truth, I'll write a novel.' It's coming back to haunt me," Douglas said.

Douglas already has written an autobiography, "The Ragman's Son," which hit best-seller lists when released in 1988. The 71-year-old star of such movies as "Spartacus" and "Lust for Life" was here last week to promote his new novel, "Dance With the Devil."

He said he is having trouble getting used to playing the role of a writer.

"I feel like I should have a beard, tap on my pipe, look out through thick glasses — it makes me laugh," he said.

He said he has discovered one weakness in his writing.

"Very often I write something too fast because I think more in terms of characters and dialogue and the senses," he said. "That's more of a visual thing, that's how I look at things. When I read a book, I'm not interested, unless it's Charles Dickens, who can write description so brilliantly. I don't want to know how the sun reflected off the varnished floor. I want to get on with it."

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Rep. Lindy Boggs beamed when the birth of her first great-grandchild was announced on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Congressional historians say the birth of Andrew Hale Boggs apparently made Boggs, 74, the first great-grandmother in Congress' 201-year history.

"I'm just very excited about it," Boggs, D-La., said after the announcement Tuesday in Washington, D.C.

Boggs is dean of Louisiana's House delegation, serving since March 1973 from New Orleans' 1st Congressional District. She succeeded her late husband, Hale Boggs, who died in an Alaska plane crash in October 1972.

Ten-day-old Andrew Hale Boggs, named for Boggs' late husband, weighed 8 pounds, 6 ounces at birth. The great-grandchild is the son of Hale and Jackie Boggs, both Los Angeles lawyers. Hale Boggs is one of eight of Boggs' grandchildren.

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Bob Seger's ex-wife says in a lawsuit the rock singer assaulted her after they divorced and pressured her into having an abortion.

Annette Seger's suit, filed Friday in Oakland County Circuit Court, alleges she told Seger she was pregnant about two weeks after the couple divorced on Nov. 8, 1988. It says Seger told her that he would make her life "a living hell" unless she had an abortion.

The suit also claims Seger, known for such hits as "Night Moves" and "Against the Wind," provided "no help or comfort to Ms. Seger before, during or after the abortion," although they were living together. The Segers were married in Las Vegas in November 1987.

The suit also claims that Seger threw his ex-wife against a cement wall on Jan. 26, 1989, after she walked out of an unnamed nightclub they had entered together.

Birmingham attorney Frederick G. Buesser III, who represented the rock star in his divorce, said he couldn't comment because he hadn't seen the suit.

Ms. Seger, who also says her modeling career has suffered, is seeking more than $10,000 in damages.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 16-year-old girl who says she was raped by crew members of rap musician LL Cool J after a concert last summer has filed a civil lawsuit.

The suit filed Friday by the girl and her parents names KDWB, the Minneapolis radio station where the girl won tickets and backstage passes; Jam Productions of Chicago, which promotes concerts; and Company Seven Inc. of Minnesota, which also produces and promotes concerts.

It also names On Point Security of New York, a security company for the rap musician; James Todd Smith of New York, who goes by the stage name LL Cool J; Christopher Tsipouras, a security guard; and crew members David Parker, Gary Saunders and Richard Walters.

Walters and LL Cool J were not charged criminally in the case.

Tsipouras, Parker and Saunders were tried on criminal charges; Tsipouras was convicted and the others were acquitted. Tsipouras, 22, is serving a 10-year sentence in Oak Park Heights prison.

Both Saunders and Tsipouras said the girl consented to have sex. Parker said he was the victim of mistaken identity.

The suit asks for the standard amount of damages in excess of $50,000 and said punitive damages will be sought.

NEW YORK (AP) — Most Americans believe obscenity or indecency is on the rise in the art world, but that parents, not government, should act to protect children from being exposed to it, according to a poll released Saturday.

About 71 percent of the 605 adults surveyed by the Gallup Organization last month for Newsweek magazine said they felt obscenity was on the rise, 3 percent said it had decreased, 22 percent said it had stayed the same and 4 percent said they didn't know.

Seventy-eight percent said it was more important for parents to take stricter measures to protect children from being exposed to obscene material.

Busey buys Holly's guitar

NEW YORK (AP) — Life really imitated art Saturday when actor Gary Busey, who played Buddy Holly in a 1978 film biography, paid $242,000 for an acoustic guitar owned by the late rock 'n' roll pioneer.

Busey was widely acclaimed for his portrayal of the bespectacled rocker in "The Buddy Holly Story." His winning bid — which was more than six times the pre-sale estimate of $35,000 — netted Busey a 1945 Gibson acoustic guitar with a leather cover hand-tooled by Buddy himself.

The 118 lots in the Holly sale, including a Fender Stratocaster guitar which netted $110,000 and a pair of his trademark black-rimmed glasses which sold for $45,000, brought in a total of $703,615, said Laura Stewart, spokeswoman for Sotheby's auction house.

Proceeds will go to Holly's widow, Maria Elena Holly, Stewart said. Maria Elena and the singer's brother, Larry Holley of Lubbock, Texas, attended the Manhattan auction.

The acoustic guitar, covered with four-color leather, has the words "Buddy Holly," "Love Me" and "Blue Days, Black Nights" hand-tooled across the top and "Texas" hand-tooled across the bottom. Busey made his bid by phone for the instrument, which Holly played during the mid- to late 1950s.

Holly's Stratocaster electric guitar attracted nearly double its pre-sale estimate of $60,000, and was purchased by an unidentified bidder. Holly was playing the guitar on the ill-fated tour which ended with his death.

A pair of the singer's black-rimmed glasses, which Holly wore at the end of his career, sold for $45,100 to the Hard Rock Cafe, Stewart said. The late John Lennon, another rocker who wore glasses, once said of Holly's shades, "He made it OK to wear glasses. I was Buddy Holly."

Another prominent buyer — Pat DiNizio, lead singer of the Smithereens — paid $14,300 for a reel to reel tape recorder and microphone which Holly used to compose new songs.

Holly burst into prominence in 1957, reeling off a string of hits like "Peggy Sue," "Rave On," "That'll Be The Day," "Maybe Baby," and "Not Fade Away." Holly, along with J.P. "The Big Bopper" Richardson and Ritchie Valens, died in a Feb. 3, 1959, plane crash when he was 23.

"This memorabilia from the personal collection of Buddy Holly provides a fascinating glimpse of the singer's boyhood and brief years of stardom," Sotheby's says in its auction catalogue.

Congressman's son arrested

AUSTIN (AP) — The 36-year-old son of U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, has been arrested after a woman accused him last month of sexually assaulting her in an Austin motel room.

Francio E. Gonzalez was arrested Friday at work in San Antonio, said Austin police sex crimes investigator Hector Reveles.

The 28-year-old woman told Austin police on May 14 that she had been sexually assaulted by Gonzalez on March 2.

"It took awhile to make the arrest because we were very deliberate and careful," Reveles said. "We wanted to be fair to everyone involved."

The woman had been in Austin to attend a seminar and they had eaten lunch together. After lunch, both had gone back to their own rooms.

When Gonzalez came to pick her up after lunch, she opened the door and picked up her purse to leave. She told investigators that Gonzalez then pushed her back into the room and sexually assaulted her.

First City confident

HOUSTON (AP) — First City Bancorporation of Texas this week watched its fourth large corporate client in a year file for bankruptcy protection.

But Chief Executive Officer A. Robert Abboud said he isn't worried about Washington-based Garfinckel's Inc. and believes the check is in the mail.

Garfinckel's filed for Chapter 11 protection Thursday, listing Houston-based First City as its largest creditor. Court documents say it owes First City $30 million.

First City officials said in a statement that they had loaned Garfinckel's $28 million, all of which is secured. The loans are backed by the retailer's inventories and receivables, a Garfinckel's official confirmed.

Court orders expensive

HOUSTON (AP) — While Texas is doling out billions of dollars to meet court orders on vital state services, court monitors and attorneys necessary to police the state's compliance also are sending the state huge bills.

Officials estimate at least $20 million has been paid on legal expenses and fees alone.

William Kilgarlin, the man appointed to write a school finance plan if state officials failed, sent state government a $18,688.35 bill last week. The attorney worked 98 hours during his six-week appointment and charged state officials $190 an hour.

Here are areas where the state is under judicial order:

— Since 1974, the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation has dealt with two lawsuits — one concerning treatment of state psychiatric hospital patients, the second involving state schools for the mentally retarded.

— In 1980, U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice declared the state's prison system unconstitutional following a lawsuit filed in 1972 by inmate David Ruiz. In 1981, Justice ordered sweeping reforms.

— In 1984, San Antonio's Edgewood Independent School District and 12 other property-poor districts filed suit against the state. In 1989, the state Supreme Court ruled the school finance system unconstitutional and ordered a new system.

Oil sheen dissipating

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A cargo vessel left the Norwegian supertanker Mega Borg Saturday as a second arrived to continue siphoning off millions of gallons of Angolan crude oil from the crippled tanker stranded 57 miles from Galveston.

Coast Guard officials, meanwhile, said a sheen of oil spilled from the vessel since it exploded June 8 had dissipated to the point that it was no longer easily visible in the Gulf of Mexico.

"The area where we were following concentrations of tar balls has broken up," said Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Glenn Wiltshire. "The oil continues to weather with time. In the sheen that we've observed, the oil is continuing to break down and evaporate."

Wiltshire said no oil has been spotted on the shore and the slick is believed to still be about 10 miles out in the Gulf between High Island and Sabine Pass.

He said skimmers had retrieved as much of the oil as possible by Thursday and most of the vessels had been released to leave the area.

Tark meets NCAA

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Jerry Tarkanian and UNLV officials met for almost three hours Saturday in secret session with the NCAA Committee on Infractions, which will now decide whether to take further action against the basketball coach whose case has dragged on for 13 years.

Tarkanian

A decision by the six-member panel, chaired by Virginia history professor Alan Williams, is not expected for at least 2-3 weeks.

"I'm not going to say a word, not a word," said Tarkanian, who has practically made a second career of his long, expensive battle with the NCAA.

Abbott bedevils Diablos

■ In a rare quality start by Midland pitching, Angel Kyle Abbott shut El Paso down for 7⅔ innings in a 7-1 Halo win.

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

Midland Angels pitcher Kyle Abbott has known success at every level since dad Larry started him off by slapping his hand every time he picked up a ball with his right hand in a successful effort to make him a left-handed pitcher.

After starring in high school, college, and his first year of pro ball, the 22-year-old lefty found out what life in the Texas League can be like by compiling a 1-5 record and a 5.40 earned run average in the first half of the season.

"It's been a big adjustment," Abbott said of his struggles.

But he's survived a rough half, and now he's starting to flourish — at the expense of the El Paso Diablos.

It turns out that a strong losing effort against the Diablos last week was only a prelude to perhaps the best outing by an Angel pitcher this season. Abbott threw 7⅔ innings of shutout ball to pace the Haloes in a 7-1 win over the Diablos Saturday at Angels Stadium.

Saturday's win was the first for the Angels in the fledgling second half of the TL Western Division race.

Abbott, 2-5, walked four during his longest stint of the season, but struck out five. And, the Diablos' two hits were hardly show-stoppers.

El Paso speedster Dee Dixon got the Diablos first hit on a seeing-eye chopper up the middle in the third inning. Bert Heffernan, who was been a thorn in Midland's side all week, got the other safety on a swinging bunt between the mound and first base in the seventh.

Oh, and Dixon was picked off first immediately after his hit. Abbott then retired 10 straight before Heffernan's "hit."

Abbott said mechanical adjustments made before a recent start against San Antonio have helped him master TL hitters.

"I've got a little more life on the ball now," Abbott said.

The Angels lost a chance at the shutout when former M-Angel (and Midland Cub) Jesus Alfaro slammed a solo homer in the ninth off reliever Mike Butcher.

The Diablos were in no danger of contending, however, thanks to some sock provided by Jim Aylward and Mark Davis.

Aylward and Davis produced the Angels' first run with doubles sandwiching a ground out by Dave Sturdivant that moved Aylward to third.

Davis' four-bagger was the beginning of the end for Monson, who had pitched respectably but was knocked out in the sixth after allowing another run.

The hosts exploded for four runs in the seventh off relievers Robinson Garces and Mark Chapman. Aylward greeted Chapman with a three-run homer to cap the rally, his fourth.

Davis, who had gone homerless since May 25, has been hampered by a sore shoulder. He missed a week earlier this month, and is still not ready to pronounce himself 100 percent.

But it's getting better, he said.

"It hurts to swing hard, but that will be good, because then I can't overswing."

Like Abbott, Davis has been tinkering with his game all season. Most recently, he received some specialized instruction from Manager Eddie Rodriguez on Saturday morning.

Emanuel "Manu" Sanon

Midland soccer gets boon

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

A local youth soccer club is going big time — in a big way.

The Midland Blast Football Club has lured former Haitian World Cup standout Emanuel Sanon to lead the multi-faceted Blast program.

Sanon, informally known as Manu, spent last week conducting a clinic for Blast players and will return early next month to conduct tryouts for the club's seven age-group teams. He expects to move permanently to Midland later this summer.

The club will fund the coaching position by charging monthly dues and securing sponsorships.

While Sanon has coached the Austin Capitols youth club since 1982, the 37-year-old native of Port-au-Prince spent the previous decade carving out an international reputation as one of the world's elite forwards.

He cut his competitive teeth for the Don Bosco club in Port-au-Prince. Then, young Manu was selected to join the Haitian national team at the tender age of 16 in 1969.

Sanon peaked during the World Cup year of 1974, when he scored the only Haitian goals in losses to perennial powers Italy and Argentina. After World Cup competition came six years as a first-division player in Belgium, first division being comparable to the major leagues, NFL or NBA.

In 1980, Sanon tried soccer American-style with the San Diego Sockers of the now-defunct North American Soccer League. The outdoor Sockers lost twice in the NASL finals, but Sanon led the indoor version to the first-ever Major Indoor Soccer League championship in 1981.

Sanon retired as a player in 1982 and moved to Austin, where he started working with the Capitols and conducting clinics under the auspices of Puma shoes. There, he earned a reputation as one of the top youth

■ This year's Midland United Girls' Softball tournament proves to be a showcase of talent for second-place teams — and lower.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

When is second place best?

Well, the Midland United Girls Softball Association provided the answer this week at Ulmer Park when three of the four city tournament championship titles went to teams that finished in second place during the regular season.

And then there was Alldredge Pharmacy, who won the other title after finishing in last place during regular season play in Division IV.

The Alldredge team went undefeated in city tournament action, beating White, 11-1, in six innings in the final as Heather Martin went the distance with a five-hitter. She also doubled in two runs in the first inning to give her team all the runs they needed.

Alldredge Pharmacy was only 3-6 in regular season play while Sundown Market won the Division IV (girls ages 16-19) regular season title with a 6-3 mark.

The Division III (ages 13-15) city tournament crown went to Sonics Drive-In, but the Sonics had to win three games Saturday to take the title. First, they beat regular season champion A-Team Precision Hair Cutters (13-0) by a 13-2 margin to gain the finals against Stanley's. The Sonics then survived the first meeting with Stanley's, 11-10, when they got out of a bases loaded jam behind the pitching of Christian Lance.

In the championship game, the Sonics won a 14-4 decision over Stanley's behind the pitching of Casi Madison and Lance. Madison had three singles in the game and Rebecca Campbell had a two-run double. Stanley's Trish Wyatt had two hits to lead the losers.

In Division II (ages 10-12), Bill Williams Tire, another second place finisher behind the regular season cham-

JIMMY PATTERSON

Welcome to Alabama — most of you, that is

The story rolled across the Associated Press wire sometime Thursday. A little problem apparently is in store for this year's PGA Championship, the story indicated.

Patterson

Just another sports story — until you read a little further.

Seems the country club in line to host the PGA's big event — the Shoal Creek Country Club in Birmingham, Alabama — won't allow blacks beyond the club's hallowed gates, nor are they about to change their policy, not even for the PGA.

It's amazing how, after all these years and all these tensions, thinking in Alabama (and Mississippi and Georgia, etc., etc. ...) remains as backwards as ever.

A few years ago, it seemed like we'd finally crawled out from underneath that ugly rock we'd been under for so many years. Finally — or so we thought — America was indeed a land of equal opportunity.

But within the last few years, the racism has raised its fool head again and we're on our way back to the ice age.

Of course, the sports world has been no great help. Men who speak before they think such as former Los Angeles Dodger executive Al Campanis ("Blacks don't have the necessities to hold a front office position") and Jimmy "The Greek" Snyder (who spoke on how breeding had a direct influence on why black athletes excel today) have dealt a great blow to racial relations in this country.

And now come the brilliant thinkers at Shoal Creek. Country Club livin', 'Bama style.

Alabama has never been on the cutting edge of race relations by any means. But bless their hearts, the Shoal Creekers apparently think they've accomplished their good deed for the decade by allowing other minorities to be a part of their revered club.

Italians, Jews, Lebanese — even women, for crying out loud — are included as Shoal Creek members. "But no blacks," said Hall Thompson, the club's founder, head neanderthal and, lest we forget, chief Good Samaritan.

"The country club is our home, and we pick and choose who we want," Thompson said. Letting blacks into his country club is, "Well that's just not done in Birmingham, Alabama."

Scary. The thought that power-hungry, money-hungry clubbers such as Thompson — and no doubt the club's directors and membership — have such a say in where black men and women can and cannot travel.

Don't blame the entire club membership, you say? If there are any members at Shoal Creek who are truly against the ban on blacks, they'd have quit and joined a club open to anyone and everyone, no questions asked or eyebrows raised.

You can also blame the PGA. They say they'll stick with Shoal Creek this year, but that future events at the club may be in jeopardy should the country club clan there not change its policy regarding blacks. By not taking a firm stand, the PGA itself is as mentally lacking as the club's narrow-minded members.

Golf has never been known as an equal opportunity sport. How many black golfers can you name? When's the last time you saw a black on a country club golf course? Thought so.

Golfers in general can't be condemned. It's the attitude of people in general. Golf, after all, is supposedly a rich man's sport. Blacks are baseball players, football players, and most of all, basketball players. Or so goes the consensus.

Like it or not, racism is still a problem today. And unfortunately, the sports world has done little — if anything — to help end the hatred.

It's Milla time for Cameroon

Associated Press

World Cup

He has gone from retirement to the World Cup. At 38, Roger Milla is the main reason Cameroon has made history.

The African champions became the first nation from that continent to reach the quarterfinals of the world soccer championships, defeating Colombia 2-1 in overtime Saturday. Milla, a non-starter, scored both goals, giving him four in the tournament, tied with Spain's Michel for the overall lead.

Milla turned a dull match into a one-man show. In the 106th minute, he broke through the Colombian defense, shook off a tackle from Andres Escobar and unleashed a hard shot that sailed over the head of goalkeeper Rene Higuita.

Three minutes later, Higuita recklessly ventured outside the penalty area to help clear the ball. Milla stole it from Higuita, headed for the goal and shot into the empty net.

Milla was hoisted into the air after the final whistle and went off the field a hero. He bowed to the crowd in thanks for their cheers.

"This victory is for my country ... and for all of Africa," Milla said.

The surprising Cameroonians will play either Belgium or England in the quarterfinals. The Indomitable Lions were considered as much as 500-1 shots to win the tournament.

Four minutes from the end of overtime, Bernardo Redin set up and finished a give-and-go with Carlos Valderrama for Colombia's goal. That made Higuita's mistake even more costly because it came on the deciding goal.

"Humans make errors," the often outrageous goalie said. "I made a mistake but I am not going to stop moving ahead.

"My teammates are not blaming me. They know I know I made an error. I took a chance. I admit my mistakes."

Few mistakes were made early in the match because few gambles were taken. Both teams were ultraconservative during regulation time.

Czechoslovakia 4, Costa Rica 1

Powerful striker Tomas Skuhravy scored on three headers to lead Czechoslovakia over Costa Rica in a second-round World Cup game.

The win propelled Czechslovakia into the quarterfinals for the first time since 1962, when it made the final, but was beaten by Brazil.

Skuhravy, who took the tournament scoring lead with five goals — he had two against the United States — headed Czechoslovakia in front in the 12th minute and also put in another in the 63rd minute after defender Ronald Gonzalez had tied it for the Central Americans in the 56th minute.

Lubos Kubik scored Czechslovakia's third goal with a curling free-kick in the 77th minute and Skuhravy rounded out the scoring seven minutes before the end.

The Czechoslovaks played quick, slick soccer for long periods, but were briefly jostled early in the second half, when Costa Rica tied it.

Playing in the World Cup for the first time, Costa Rica went into the match without star goalkeeper Luis Conejo, who was sidelined by a bruised thigh. He was replaced by Hermidio Barrantes.

Rozier named in suit

HOUSTON (AP) — A 23-year-old college student claims Oilers running back Mike Rozier is the father of her unborn child.

Pamela Gobert, who is four months pregnant, has filed a paternity suit against Rozier, seeking support and medical costs for the child.

"She is not claiming a common-law marriage or anything like that," said Glenn Lilly, her attorney. "Pam is a very nice person. She doesn't want anything for herself, only for her child."

AL Roundup

Ron Karkovice snapped a sixth-inning tie with a solo home run and the Chicago White Sox spoiled the return of Jose Canseco by defeating the Oakland Athletics 5-3 on Saturday.

The White Sox made it two in a row over the Athletics and pulled within two games of the American League West leaders. Karkovice hit an 0-1 pitch from starter Mike Moore (5-7) deep into the left-field seats to give Chicago a 4-3 lead. It was Karkovice's second homer of the season.

Canseco, activated by Oakland on Saturday after missing 14 games with a back injury, was hit by a pitch in his first at-bat and struck out three times, twice by Jack McDowell (4-4) and once by reliever Barry Jones. Canseco also popped out in the ninth.

Moore, a 19-game winner last year, has lost six of eight decisions over his last nine starts with a 4.11 earned run average during that span. He allowed the White Sox four runs on eight hits in 5 1-3 innings.

McDowell gave up eight hits and three runs, striking out seven and walking one, as he handed Oakland its fourth loss in five games. Bobby Thigpen got the last three outs for his 23rd save.

The White Sox added a run in the ninth when Karkovice was hit by a pitch, moved to second on a passed ball and scored on Ozzie Guillen's double.

Red Sox 4, Orioles 3

Dwight Evans' two-run homer in the 10th inning off relief ace Gregg Olson gave the Boston Red Sox a victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Evans' seventh homer of the season and second of the game brought the Red Sox back from a 3-2 deficit after Mickey Tettleton homered for the Orioles in the top of the 10th.

Tom Brunansky set up Evans' game-winning shot into the left field screen with a two-out single off Olson (3-2), who failed to record a save for only the second time in 17 opportunities this season.

Jeff Gray got the last two outs in the top of the 10th for the victory in his first major-league decision.

Clemens pitched nine innings for the third time in 16 starts, but failed in his bid to become the major leagues' first 12-game winner. He allowed six hits and a season-high five walks while striking out only four, boosting his American League-leading total to 103.

After Baltimore scored its first run with the help of a pair of errors in the third inning, Clemens made the final putout on a grounder to first base and in a fit of anger kicked dirt and spiked the ball.

The Orioles went ahead with another unearned run in the eighth on an error by second baseman Jody Reed. Tettleton walked, took second on an infield out and scored when Greg Walker's two-out grounder to the right of second bounced off Reed's glove.

Blue Jays 8, Yankees 4

Glenallen Hill drove in three runs with a bases-loaded double and Todd Stottlemyre won his fourth consecutive start as the Toronto Blue Jays beat New York, snapping the Yankees' four-game winning streak.

Stottlemyre, who beat the Yankees last Sunday in New York, allowed three runs and eight hits in seven innings to improve to 8-6.

John Olerud added two RBI doubles for Toronto and George Bell scored three runs as the Blue Jays evened their home record at 19-19.

The Yankees had a run home on Steve Sax' RBI single and the bases-loaded in the ninth inning when Tom Henke relieved Duane Ward with one out. Henke then struck out Don Mattingly and Mel Hall for his 12th save.

Hill doubled just inside the third-base bag to put the Blue Jays ahead 3-2 in the second against Tim Leary (3-10).

Toronto added three runs in the third when Tony Fernandez and Kelly Gruber scored on wild pitches by Leary and Fred McGriff added an RBI double to make it 6-2.

Twins 5, Royals 1

David West pitched six no-hit innings for his first victory since May 2 and and Greg Gagne doubled home two runs as the Minnesota Twins beat the Kansas City Royals.

West (3-5) lost his no-hit bid when Bo Jackson singled on a 2-2 pitch to lead off the seventh. West retired the next two batters before Pat Tabler and Mike Macfarlane singled to break up West's bid for his first major-league shutout.

He left after 7 1-3 innings with a career-high nine strikeouts. Jack Savage, making his major-league debut, pitched one-hit relief over the last 1 2-3 innings for the save.

Brewers 11, Indians 1

Dave Parker hit a three-run double and Rob Deer added a two-run homer in a seven-run second inning as Milwaukee rapped out 17 hits for Ron Robinson's first American League victory. Robinson (1-1) scattered seven hits in eight innings and the Cleveland run was unearned.

The Brewers knocked out Al Nipper (0-1), who was recalled from the minors on Thursday and was making his first major league start since 1988. All seven Milwaukee runs in the second inning scored after two were out. Parker also drove in a run with a sacrifice fly in the first inning.

Expos dethrone Bucs atop East with 6-1 win

NL Roundup

Montreal moved into first place in the National League East as Zane Smith pitched seven strong innings to help the Expos beat the slumping Pittsburgh Pirates, 6-1.

The loss was the Pirates' fifth in a row and dropped them one half-game game behind the Expos, who have won 18 of their last 26 games.

Most baseball experts picked the Expos to finish last in the East this season after losing free agents Mark Langston, Pascual Perez, Bryn Smith and Hubie Brooks during the winter.

Smith (4-5) scattered six hits in winning for for only the second time in his last 10 starts. Drew Hall pitched the final two innings, allowing no hits.

Montreal's Spike Owen had his single-season NL record for consecutive errorless games by a shortstop end at 63 games when he threw past first base in the fourth inning on R.J. Reynolds' grounder.

The Expos took a 1-0 lead in the first off loser Doug Drabek (8-3) when Dave Martinez legged out a double to left-center field, advanced to third on Owen's infield out and scored on Larry Walker's single through the drawn-in infield.

Astros 4, Giants 2

Left fielder Kevin Mitchell's two-base error on Glenn Wilson's single in the eighth inning allowed two runs to score as the Houston Astros rallied for a 4-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants, snapping a seven-game losing streak.

It was only the Giants' fourth loss in their last 21 games.

Trailing 2-0, the Astros' four-run rally started when Eric Yelding walked and scored on a double by pinch-hitter Franklin Stubbs off Steve Bedrosian (3-5).

After a walk to Craig Biggio, Mitchell attempted to make a play on Wilson's liner but the ball fell short of his glove and bounced past him for an error as Stubbs and Biggio scored with Wilson stopping at third. Ken Caminiti then singled in Wilson.

Mark Portugal (2-7) pitched eight innings giving up two runs on six hits and Dave Smith got the final three outs for his 14th save.

Cardinals 8, Cubs 7

Terry Pendleton drove in four runs and Jose Oquendo knocked in three as the St. Louis Cardinals held on to beat the Chicago Cubs.

It was the Cubs' third straight loss and their ninth in 11 games, driving them deeper into the National League East basement.

Bob Tewksbury (2-0) was the winner in making only his second start of the season since being recalled from the minors. Tewksbury, who was staked to an 8-2 lead after five innings, allowed five runs in six innings.

Former Cub Lee Smith, the fifth St. Louis pitcher, worked two innings for his seventh save.

Pendleton singled in two runs in the first inning and tripled in a pair in the third when left-fielder Dwight Smith misjudged his line drive. The Cardinals are 22-5 when Pendleton has an RBI this season.

Oquendo singled in a run in the fourth and tripled in two more in the fifth after Ozzie Smith had singled in a run. All three of the runs in the fifth were unearned as a result of a fielding error by third baseman Curtis Wilkerson.

Mets 3, Phillies 0

Dwight Gooden pitched a two-hitter for his first shutout in more than two years and streaking Darryl Strawberry hit a 430-foot home run, leading the New York Mets past the Philadelphia Phillies for their fifth straight victory and 12th win in 14 games.

Gooden (6-5) won his third consecutive start and went over .500 for the first time this season. He struck out seven, walked two and did not allow a runner past second base in his first shutout since May 21, 1988, a span of 55 starts.

John Kruk got both hits off Gooden, a leadoff double in the fifth inning and a single in the seventh. Gooden finished with his first complete game since late in 1988, and gave the Mets their major league-leading ninth shutout. It was Gooden's 20th career shutout.

Strawberry extended his hitting streak to a career-high 12 with his 15th homer, a two-run shot in the sixth off Pat Combs (3-6). In those 12 games, Strawberry has seven home runs and 19 RBIs and is batting .432.

Padres 7, Braves 5

Jack Clark broke an 0-for-27 slump by driving in three runs with a homer and a two-run single to lead the San Diego Padres past Atlanta, spoiling the return of Bobby Cox as Braves manager.

Cox replaced Russ Nixon, who was dismissed as manager on Friday. Cox previously was the Braves' manager from 1978 until he was fired after the 1981 season.

Winner Ed Whitson (6-5) gave up three runs and nine hits in six innings. Craig Lefferts pitched two innings for his 11th save, allowing four hits.

Mike Pagliarulo also drove in three runs for the Padres with a homer and two run-scoring singles.

Clark, who entered the game hitting .194, gave the Padres a 2-1 lead in the fourth when he connected against Atlanta starter Tom Glavine (3-5) for his seventh home run.

In the Padres' three-run fifth Clark added a two-run single with the bases loaded and Pagliarulo singled home a run.

Reds 11, Dodgers 6

Eric Davis homered and had two hits in Cincinnati's eight-run fourth inning as the Reds rallied to beat Los Angeles, ending the Dodgers' six-game winning streak.

The Reds sent 12 men to the plate in the fourth to overcome a 3-1 deficit against Tim Belcher (5-5), who failed to retire any of the six batters he faced. Davis had a single and a two-run double in the inning as the Reds went up 9-3.

Davis also had a solo homer in the second, his eighth of the season and 150th of his career. After hitting .178 through June 15, he has compiled an eight-game hitting streak (13-for-25).

Tom Browning (7-4) needed the big fourth inning to compensate for an off-night. He allowed five runs and 11 hits through the first five innings to win his fourth straight decision.

Irwin's birdies steal Buick show

PGA

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Hale Irwin, the U.S. Open champion who won't go away, birdied his last two holes and advanced into a tie for the third-round lead Saturday in the Buick Classic.

Irwin, 45, who won his third U.S. Open in a 19-hole playoff on Monday, made up two strokes with a 68 and completed 54 holes at 203.

He was tied at 10 under par on the Westchester Country Club course with Blaine McCallister, the second-round leader, who shot 70. McCallister retained a share of the top spot only with a 20-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

"I'm fighting fatigue," in the aftermath of his Open victory, Irwin said. "The adrenalin surge is gone now. I need to cycle in a new one."

It was three strokes back of the co-leaders to Paul Azinger, Ken Green, Jay Haas, Craig Stadler and rookie Kirk Triplett. Triplett shot 67, Stadler 68, Azinger and Green 69 and Haas a wildly erratic 72 that included six birdies, three bogeys and two double bogeys.

Loren Roberts and Jim Gallagher were at 207. Roberts had a 2-under-par 69 and Gallagher a 70.

Ray Floyd, 47, closed with the best round of the day, a 65, and was within reach of the lead at 208, four behind.

"There's a lot of players who still can win," Irwin said. "If I'm going to win again, I have to pick it up and not make some of the mistakes I made today.

"I had some loss of concentration. I had a bit of trouble finishing today."

The problems developed, he said, after a long wait — "at least five minutes," he said — in the 15th fairway.

He was three under par for the day at that point and "was playing quite nicely." But the wait "broke my momentum or something and I started hitting some bad shots."

He pulled a 5-iron approach into the left fringe on the 15th, chipped to about six feet and missed the par putt.

On the 16th, a 204-yard par-3, Irwin missed the green with a 2-iron, chipped to six feet and missed again for a second consecutive bogey.

But he gathered his dwindling resources on the 17th, played a wedge to 12 feet and made the birdie putt, then used two drivers to reach the par-5 18th in two and two-putted for birdie.

For a moment, he held the lead alone. Then McCallister, playing in the twosome behind Irwin, ran in a long birdie putt to share the lead.

Rangers sign pick

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers signed their No. 1 selection in the 1990 amateur free agent draft, lefthanded pitcher Dan Smith from Creighton University, the team announced.

Smith, the 16th overall selection in the draft three weeks ago, was assigned to Class A Butte in the Pioneer League. He will report to Butte, Mont., Monday after working out with the Rangers at Arlington Stadium over the weekend.

Scalpel readied as Astros prepare for facelift

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The question is, do the Houston Astros need new makeup or plastic surgery?

Hint: the surgeon already is quietly at work on a series of operations that will eventually change the club's composite face.

When the sutures are removed, Craig Biggio will be the second baseman, Eric Anthony will be a fixture in right field and Eric Yelding will add range at shortstop.

Glenn Davis, assuming he gets the contract he wants, will remain the power source at first base and Ken Caminiti will retain his ownership of third base.

Aside from that core, no other area of the team is safe from the surgeon's scalpel.

"I'll go on record as saying that in the future, Yelding will be the shortstop and Biggio will either be in the outfield or at second base," said assistant general manager Bob Watson.

That is the future. For the present, manager Art Howe is on a record course for shuffling his lineup and making double switches.

There were 50 lineups in the first 63 games, five lead-off hitters and six No. 5 hitters.

Yelding, Biggio and utility man Casey Candaele have been the primary moveable parts this season.

Yelding has played six positions and batted in five spots in the order. Biggio has played three positions and batted in three spots.

Candaele is on the team because of his versatility and has shown it at six positions.

"I think it's a positive thing for Art Howe," Watson said. "It gives him a lot of flexibility. The bench gets a chance to be used in a lot of areas."

The Astros prefer not to be called a team in transition but one that is using all its resources.

Biggio started the season entrenched as the catcher, but with his speed, the club saw his future elsewhere.

He has accepted his unsettled role.

"It doesn't bother me as much as it does some guys, but I haven't been doing it too long," Biggio said. "I'd like to eventually get settled in a position. Right now it's not a priority."

Error-prone veteran Rafael Ramirez is still the Astros' starting shortstop, leaving Yelding to play every position except catcher and first base.

"I don't care where I play so long as I play," Yelding said.

Glenn Wilson thought he'd be the everyday right fielder after he came to Houston in a trade with Pittsburgh last August for outfielder Billy Hatcher.

That hasn't worked out, and he's been utilized effectively on a platoon basis.

"Right, center or left field, I don't care; it beats sitting on the bench," Wilson said. "It adds to a player's worth if he can move around.

"More guys will do it because there's more money involved. Last year, the 24-man roster meant the guys who could play several positions were in demand."

The Astros' starting pitching staff is aging, and the team's current strength, the bullpen, could offer trade possibilities.

Hill ties Chi Chi at PGA Digital Seniors Classic

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — Mike Hill shot a 4-under 68 on Saturday and tied three-time winner Chi Chi Rodriguez for the second-round lead Saturday at the Digital Seniors Classic.

Hill, who won the Suncoast Classic in February for his only Seniors victory, was three strokes behind Rodriguez, but finished with a 135, 9-under, after 36 holes. Rodriguez, who won this event three-straight years from 1986 to 1988, followed his tournament course record of 64 on Friday with a 71.

Defending champion Bob Charles, who had been five strokes back and tied for tenth after the first round, also moved up at Nashawtuc Country Club with a 67 to tie him with Harold Henning at 136 for third. Henning fired a 70.

Lee Trevino, the Senior Tour's leading money winner, matched par for a 139 total, leaving him four strokes behind the leaders and tied for 11th.

Rodriguez was involved in a dispute with Henning on the 7th green about repairing marks where the previous day's cup was placed. Rodriguez then three-putted the hole for his only bogey of the day, offsetting one of his two birdies on the front side.

Alcott maintains lead despite double bogey

ROCHESTER, N.Y (AP) — Amy Alcott recovered from a double bogey on the treacherous 14th hole to maintain a two-shot lead Saturday after three rounds of the LPGA Rochester International.

Alcott, who broke a course record by standing at 10-under after 36 holes, established another on Saturday by completing 54 holes at 14-under-par 202. She shot a 68 on Saturday, as did her two closest pursuers, defending champion Patty Sheehan and Kathy Postlewait.

The previous record for three tours of the 6,162-yard Locust Hill Country Club course was 10-under, set in 1983 by Ayako Okamoto. Sandra Haynie set the 72-hole record of 12-under in 1982.

Alcott had three birdies in a flawless front nine and, after a bogey at No. 10, sank birdie putts at Nos. 11 and 12 to build a three-shot lead.

At No. 14, Alcott's second shot failed to clear a steep gully and bounced back into a muddy, rain-soaked river bank.

MANU: Mastering basics essential

From 1C

coaches in the nation after leading the Caps' under-19 team to the finals of the United States Soccer Federation tournament in 1988, and under-14 squads to the state finals last season.

Sanon says the key to soccer success is the ability to master basic skills.

"The first priority is to teach the basics," he said. "You want to allow them to fall in love with the game."

Competition for college scholarships starts getting stiff when the player reaches high school age. Unlike most other team sports, college coaches look to club rather than high school competition to fill out their rosters, though some top players play both club and high school soccer.

While Sanon did not say he would encourage Blast members to skip high school soccer, he did say that most of his Austin charges opted to play exclusively for their club.

"With the travel and exposure at the best tournaments, the kids have a better chance to get a scholarship (at the club level)."

Sanon says Midland is a largely untapped reservoir of top-flight soccer talent. "The talent is here, but there's no one to guide them to a higher level."

Blast president David Snyder agreed with Sanon's assessment. "We have a lot of athletes, but we haven't been so much into the competitive part of soccer.

"We're behind in our skills (compared to athletes in the larger metropolitan areas, but not in desire nor athletic ability," the local physician added.

Both Snyder and long-time Sanon associate Calvin Cross, who helped conduct the Blast clinic last week and is the head coach at California Lutheran University, said Sanon should be a perfect fit for the Midland soccer scene in general — and the Blast in particular.

"This is more than respectability," Cross said. "This man has played at the highest level.

Sanon said a lack of understanding has kept soccer from catching on as a spectator sport.

"It takes a long time to develop spectators," he said. "When I talk to people about it, they say they don't understand the game."

Sanon emphasizes that the development of North American soccer must begin at the youth club level.

"You have to start from the bottom and work up."

pion Mustangs, got a taste of revenge by beating the Mustangs 17-4 in the championship game.

The Mustangs beat Bill Williams Tire 10-8 in the first game, but Andrea Rodriquez came back with a four-hitter for the Bill Williams team while Jessica Gonzales had two inside the park homers and a single to lead the offensive attack that included a triple and two singles by Valarie Anderson and a triple, double and single by Shelly Rey.

Fina Oil and Chemical, who finished second to Chemical Blending in regular season play, went undefeated in Division I (ages 7-9) and beat GOBOCO, 11-8, in the championship game.

Jamie Seale's three-run, inside the park homer in the bottom of the fourth inning provided the difference in the contest.

MUGS also named its 1990 All-Star teams Saturday. Those teams will play in the UGSA national tournament July 14-17. That tournament will be hosted by Midland this year at Ulmer Park.

Musburger practices his ABC's

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Brent is back.

After a three-month exile, Brent Musburger returns to television Monday night with a new role, a new look and a new network.

Musburger

Musburger's first assignment for ABC is the "All-Star Pro Sports Awards," an Academy Award-style show for athletes featuring Clint Eastwood, Arnold Schwarzenegger and other celebrities.

As host of the live, two-hour telecast from Los Angeles, a tuxedo-clad Musburger will explain the voting process and interview the winners. His biggest challenge, though, may be getting his letters straight.

"I've been practicing saying ABC instead of CBS," he said. "I just hope I don't slip up on the air."

If he does, it would be understandable.

After all, Musburger was CBS' best known sportscaster for 15 years before getting fired April 1 on the eve of the NCAA basketball championship game — his final telecast for the network.

He wasn't out of work long.

One month later, Musburger signed a six-year, $11 million deal with ABC, where his first-year schedule will include college football and basketball, an NFL wild-card playoff game, the Super Bowl pregame show and the new World League of American Football.

Musburger will start slowly this summer with a couple of horse races and the Little League World Series, but he can't wait to get back to work.

"This is the most time I've had off since 1961, and I spent it all with my family," he said. "They're probably tired of seeing me around the house."

Despite some attractive assignments, Musburger won't be the omnipresent personality at ABC that he was at CBS, where he covered almost every major event. If he had stayed at CBS, he would have broadcast major league baseball this season. Instead, he'll be doing the Little League World Series on Aug. 25.

Have you always wanted to own a home that was different, but tastefully so, from other houses in the neighborhood? Does a one-of-a-kind interior that is very functional appeal to your lifestyle? Would a pool in the back yard help you survive the scorching days of late? If you answered yes to any of these questions, then a tour through this week's featured home is a must.

Sitting center stage in this uniquely designed home is a useable living area. Paneled walls that soar into an extremely tall ceiling and a marble fireplace are the amenities of this area. The spaciousness of this room allows for two or three arrangements of furniture — a conversation area in front of the fireplace, a desk along one wall and a game table inset in one corner. This room has four doorways that open onto a flagstone pathway that leads around this octagon-shaped room.

The appointments in the foyer — leaded glass windows which were designed by the owner, mirrored panels on a silk wallpaper and a flagstone floor — immediately attract a visitor into this three-bedroom and three-and-a-half-bath home.

The foyer extends to the right into the formal living rooms. Furniture can be arranged in a variety of ways, adding to the uniqueness of this home. A sectional sofa or a sofa and two chairs will furnish this room as formally or informally as a family needs. Two tall windows with shutters frame the front yard.

This room flows into the formal dining area and a china cabinet can be placed along one wall where it can be visible from both of these rooms. Two windows which are identical to those in the living room overlook the side yard. A crystal chandelier adds a touch of elegance.

ATTRACT: Unique design is highlight of interior

(From 1D)

The flagstone pathway leads past the formal living room into the carpeted kitchen. A Hotpoint cooktop is placed in the center of a large island which can accommodate four bar stools. This angled island welcomes everyone who enters this home, where family members will catch up on the days events and friends will enjoy a visit over a cup of coffee or a soft drink.

A Jenn-Air grill and griddle is inset in one corner of the room, adding to the appeal of this home. The other appliances include a Hotpoint self-cleaning oven and microwave, a Kitchen Aid dishwasher and a Compactall trash compactor. The stainless steel sink is placed under a window that views the side yard.

The breakfast room is situated to the left of the kitchen and a sliding glass door not only brightens this room, but it also leads onto a garden room. A wet bar is inset along one wall in the breakfast room and is conveniently located when entertaining guests — either formally or pool side. A huge, walk-in pantry and a rear-entry, two car garage with automatic door openers are also located off of the breakfast area.

A half-bath is located around the corner from the wet bar and is decorated in a peach and silver floral paper. The utility room is situated past the bath and has a door that leads to the garden room.

The garden room is enclosed with sliding glass doors which open onto a carpeted deck area that encircles the pool. The yard is highlighted by beautifully landscaped flower beds and owners will enjoy beating the summer heat with a refreshing dip in the pool. A bath house which contains approximately 400 square feet is adjacent to the pool area.

The flagstone corridor leads past the breakfast room to the master suite. Two floor-to-ceiling windows frame the side yard and a sitting area is warmed by lots of sunshine. A door provides access to the pool.

A peach wallpaper which is highlighted by teal, rose and white adorns the walls of the master bath. This gorgeous bath has an oversized tub that is placed in front of a bay window which views the back yard pool. Shutters can be closed for privacy. The bath has a two-sink vanity, a built-in shower, storage cabinets and two walk-in closets.

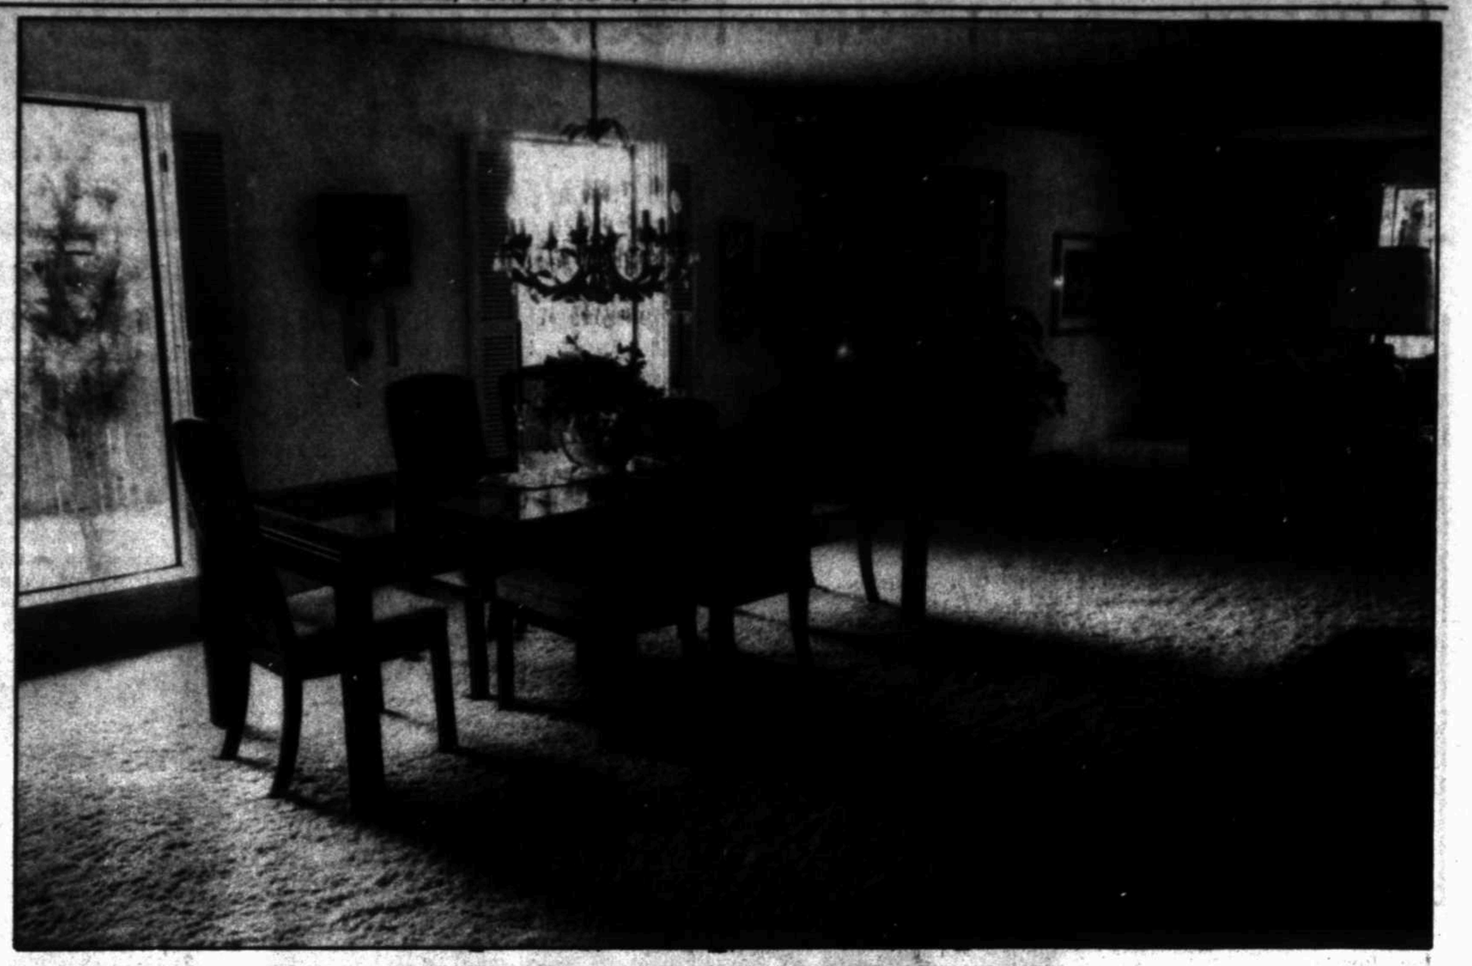
The second bedroom is located down the hall from the master bedroom and has two windows that overlook the side yard. A private bath features a tub with glass doors and is papered in a navy and tan wallcovering.

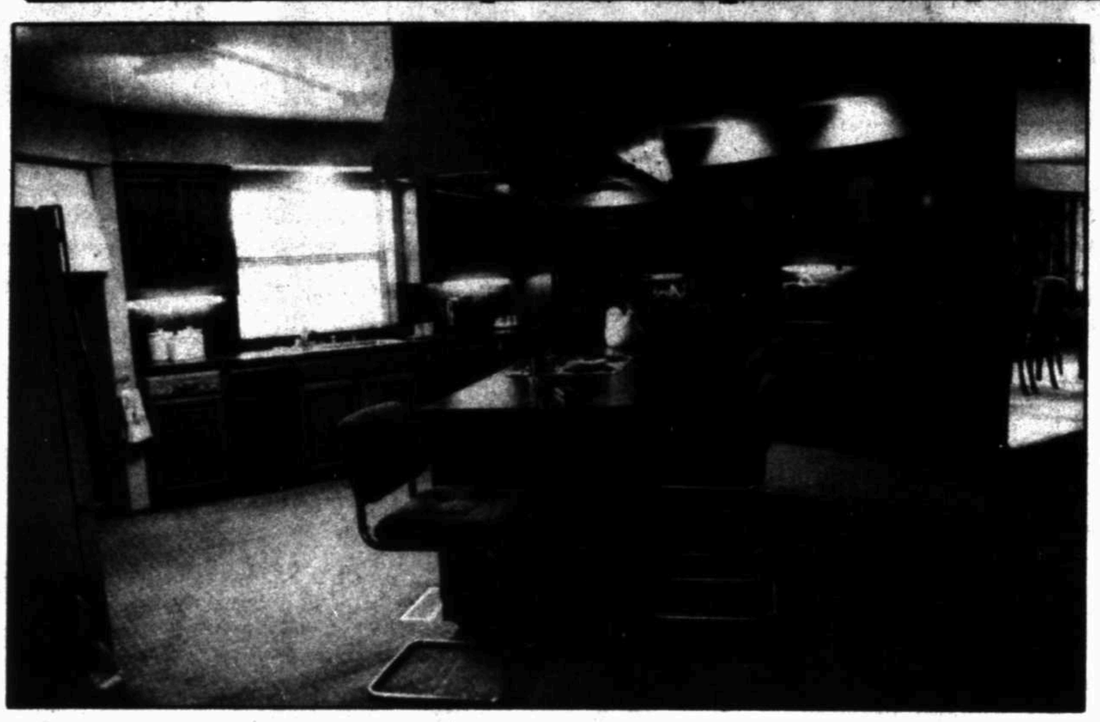
The pathway then leads to the third bedroom that has two tall windows that frame the front yard. This room also has a full bath which is decorated in navy blue.

The flagstone pathway completes its circular pattern around the family room and leads from the third bedroom back to the foyer. The flow of the pathway not only saves traffic on the carpeted areas, but it is one of the features that enables this home to be so unusual.

The other amenities of this over 3,600 square foot home are a sprinkler system, a humidifier, parking for a recreational vehicle and a large vegetable garden area.

Don Harvey, Realtors is offering this one-of-a-kind home for $189,000.





An appealing aspect in the home is the location of the formal living areas, above. Both the formal living room and dining room are separated from the family room by a flagstone floor.

Don Harvey

In the past, according to Don Harvey, president and owner of Don Harvey, Realtors, we have found ourselves struggling to find good news to report concerning Midland's real estate market. Since 1982, those positive tidbits have been too few and too far between. "Fortunately this has not been the case, so far, for 1990."

"A strong third and fourth quarter for 1989 helped to end an otherwise lackluster year with significant improvements in most categories. Many of the negative trends of the past seven years had leveled off or become slightly positive. This helped to provide a firmer foundation for the beginning of 1990," stated Harvey.

Despite the numbers of people that have been transferred out of Midland in recent years, the inventory of homes for sale has gradually declined. According to Harvey, this is because we have been fortunate to have the number of incoming transferees and first-time home buyers needed to absorb the oversupply and restore the balance between supply and demand.

Some key categories have provided market trend indicators when we compare the first five months of 1990 with the first five months of 1989:

- Total residential sales up 27.5 percent
- New home sales up 88.5 percent
- Existing home sales up 24.4 percent

In addition, Harvey notes, we have seen a slight decrease in the average number of days required to sell a home and a modest increase in the average sale price as compared to the first five months of 1989.

To confidently project market trends, your data base should include more than five months of activity. However, when we combine the year-to-date statistics with the final quarter of 1989, we begin to have sufficient data for at least a short range projection.

"According, we feel confident that the third and fourth quarters of this year will reflect a continuation of the same positive trends we've experienced so far this year. There are sufficient incoming corporate moves planned for the remainder of the year to give support for this projection," added Harvey.

As a company, Don Harvey, Realtors has shared these positive market changes with their customers and clients. Comparing the first five months of this year with the first five months of last year, Don Harvey Realtors have closed the following:

- Total listings closed — 170
- Total sales closed — 121
- Total dollar volume — 23.5 million

These numbers indicate an increase of 30 percent over last year.

As a present or future buyer in this changing market place, these trends present both positive and negative implications. On the negative side, the available inventory you have to choose from is diminishing and the prices are forming up. On the positive side, you may no longer be buying into a declining market. If prices continue to rise, this should more than offset the negatives.

The secret to making the right decisions in a changing market climate entails the following:

- Having the most current and comprehensive information about the market on which to base your decisions. A good Realtor should have this information readily available.
- As a seller, knowing your competition well and positioning your property to achieve the best market exposure possible to the greatest number of potential buyers possible.
- As a buyer, being able to use the market information to focus your search and effectively target those areas and properties that best fit your present and future objectives.
- As a buyer or a seller, having an established and experienced real estate company and agent to help you define and implement the most effective game plan.

These changing real estate markets have been an ongoing part of Midland's history as the oil industry has seen its rises and declines in the Permian Basin. "Many of us at Don Harvey, Realtors have worked through and gained experience from these markets. We are firmly committed to staying as current as possible with changes and trends and then offering that knowledge and experience for the benefit of our customers and clients," concluded Harvey.

Notwithstanding other claims in the market place, Don Harvey, Realtors has been for many years and remains the largest production company in terms of listings sold, sales transactions closed and total dollar volume.

Chaparral, Realtors has ideas for safe homes

Norma Pine

Each year thousands of children nationwide will be victims of household accidents. Many accidents around the home will be minor, while others may be of a more serious nature. As a result, an ounce of prevention should be practiced, advises Norma Pine, of Chaparral, Realtors.

"It's nearly impossible for adults to keep track of children's whereabouts all of the time. Thus, child home safety — particularly now when school is out for the summer — can become more of a problem," Pine noted.

Chaparral, Realtors is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, the nation's oldest and largest referral network of independent real estate brokers. The RELO network, headquartered in Chicago provides a wide range of relocation services to assist transferees and their families sell a house in one community and purchase a new home in the new community. The network is celebrating its 30th anniversary this year.

"It's widely known that most accidents happen in kitchens and bathrooms — the first places homeowners should look for potential dangers to children" cautions Pine. "Kitchen cupboards may look like an attractive place to kids, but household cleansers and chemicals stored there can be lethal.

By storing these chemicals on high shelves and placing tamper-resistant locks on the doors, the temptation for children is reduced and contents are not as readily available," she adds.

Pine also encourages adults to remove any potentially dangerous items such as medicines, cleansers and grooming items like razors from medicine cabinets. "Smaller children can't tell the difference between items — it's up to homeowners to take that responsibility."

Electrical outlets as well pose a serious threat to younger family members. Pine notes, "covers for electrical outlets can be easily installed, reducing the chance that a foreign object will be placed in the receptacle. Additionally, small measurers, such as using nontoxic houseplants for decoration and lowering the temperature so that water runs no hotter than 125 degrees, can further reduce the chance of injury."

In addition to parents, those grandparents, relatives and other people with whom children spend time should also take precautions. "Children move quickly — it only takes a few minutes of an adult's time to remove some of these hazards and reduce some of the worry," explains Pine.

Pine also encourages adults to take the time to teach small children what and why certain household objects are dangerous. She notes, "Children need explanation and constant reminders to better understand household dangers. Pre-school is an ideal age to start teaching them because these are the children most likely at risk."

The RELO network, of which Chaparral, Realtors is a member, is composed of nearly 1,400-member companies with approximately 4,000-member offices nationwide. The RELO network has representatives in 13,000 cities in the U.S. and in 19 foreign countries.

In addition to providing a wide range of relocation services, the RELO network has entered an agreement with the Dallas-based Associates Corporation of North America, allowing Chaparral, Realtors and other RELO members to further help homebuyers, as well as sellers by offering an array of financial services.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Good selection of properties on market

Langston

One of the concerns expressed at our recent presentation to the large group of transferees from Hobbs was that our market inventory might currently be low in some areas and price ranges. After personally showing-/previewing 60 plus homes last weekend priced from $85,000 to $140,000, I can confidently say that Midland has a wonderfully extensive selection of exceptionally nice mid-range properties.

And more Exxon transferees homes are coming into our office everyday. Jerry Holt just listed a real find of a five bedroom, four bath home and pool for only $124,000. Pat Paxton put a beautiful newer home in Trinity Meadows on the market for $138,500. Billie Sherman is the agent for a three bedroom, two bath nearly new, beautifully decorated house on Arrowhead for $104,000 and I've a gorgeous five-month-old Rasnick built home in Saddle Club South that is wonderfully priced at $129,900. These have just come in within the past few days to join our many other fine homes in these price ranges. So the selection is there — incoming transferees should be very pleased!

We have also been very excited about the large number of carefree patio townhomes that we can offer. I recently listed Dick and Mary Lou Hamm's beautifully decorated condominium in highly coveted and prestigious Oaklawn Park and can now offer it, along with Fritz and Ruby Breckenridge's equally exceptional condominium. Both homes are immaculate; with exquisitely beautiful decorating; three spacious bedrooms, each with its own private bath; large country kitchens with seating area, tons of cabinets; beautiful formal living and dining room; and unbelievable storage. The Breckenridges have a tremendously convenient and spacious office, perfect for the individual that wants to office at home or the hobby enthusiast. I've also two of the largest Wallace townhomes in this same area; one has a pool plus four bedrooms and three baths, the other has exceptional space in a country kitchen, workshop area, den plus living.

As a townhome owner myself, I can highly recommend this way of life for couples or individuals whose children are out of the nest, who like to travel and who lost this fascination for lawn mowing a long time ago!

In summation, let me once again emphasize that the market (and especially our office) has an extensive and beautiful selection of properties in every price range and style. I am amazed at the many offerings, the reasonable prices and, as always, the evident quality of construction that is found in Midland. Hobbs, as well as other transferees, should certainly have happy and successful hunting.

On a final note, we will be playing a part in the welcome to the CAF Staff Advisory Board for their first meeting in the city. We are entertaining them for dinner in our home Friday night, joining us as hosts and hostesses will be MoMo and Harry Miller, Judy and Jim Davenport, Vicki Baily, Donnette and Ron Schivesow, Robbie and Raymond Casey and Jo Anne and Rue Richards. The CAF is truly one of the most exciting things that has happened to our community — I know all of you are as eager as we for the big opening day!

Carriage Company, Realtors welcomes summer transferees

Louise Culver, president of Carriage Company, Realtors wishes to extend a personal welcome to the families moving to Midland during the summer of 1990. Whether it has been just one or two years or twenty years since your last transfer, preparing for a move can be stressful. "Most of us at Carriage have been through the transfer experience a number of times ourselves, and we have some suggestions that should help make your move to Midland a happier and more relaxed time for you," stated Culver.

Louise Culver

First of all, remember that you are moving to a delightful city of sincere, friendly people who share a lifestyle geared toward cultural and recreational attractions which are unique for a community that size. Take advantage of the time allotted to your home buying to sample some of the treasures of the Tall City. Little breaks in the serious business of deciding what or where to buy can clear away confusion and afford the relaxation necessary for you to make the best family decision.

Baseball is a national past time and we have an excellent summer schedule for the Midland Angles, Class AA, Texas League professional club. Home games are scheduled from June 21 through July 2; July 12 through July 21; August 3 through 7 and 13 through 22. Our long summer evenings provide surprisingly cool and insect-free time for spectator sports. In the past, Daryl Strawberry, Fernando Valenzuela and other major league stars have played minor league ball in the Angels stadium. You will likely see the All Stars of tomorrow. "Let us take you out to the ball game" while you are in town, explained Culver.

Another delightful evening should be spent at the Summer Mummers at the beautiful and historic Yucca Theatre located in downtown Midland. This year's melodrama is entitled "Mayhem at the Movieola" or "I Have a Nasty Film All Over My Body". A local, volunteer cast performs every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night from June 29 through September 1. Villians, heroes and heroines come to life on the stage in outrageous proportions. "Your attendance is guaranteed to give you a refreshed outlook on the more serious side of your trip. We will take you there and help you cheer the heroes — Tex Trueblood and Chasity Pureheart — and throw popcorn at the villans, Smedley Slythe and Mogul C. Stars," added Culver.

Don't forget the golfer in your family, cautioned Culver. "After a day of cruising our attractive residential areas, there will be plenty of time for at least nine or even 18 holes of golf at one our excellent clubs. We even have a spare bag of 'sticks' in case you leave yours at home. Between discussions of discount points, closing costs, etc., mix in a string of eagles and birdies. We have never heard of an avid golfer turning down an offer like this, so remember Carriage when you plan your trips. There is also an excellent miniature golf course for the entire family. Relaxation is guaranteed and you will be ready for the next day."

"Our word of welcome to our new citizens is to approach this summer as an opportunity to make new friends, to see new places and to enjoy yourself and we are confident that you will," concluded Culver. Carriage is celebrating its 21st year of service to the Midland community with pride in our professionalism and in our thoughtful concern for the public we serve. Call Carriage Company, Realtors collect at 915-684-5881 or FAX 915-684-3907. You will be glad you did.

Careful planning is a necessity when purchasing a new home

Many people are overwhelmed at the thought of beginning to search for a new home, says Bill Jackson, owner of Adobe Inc., Realtors.

Jackson

"Families looking into the housing market need to carefully consider their likes and dislikes, as well as think ahead to future family needs. One of the best ways for families to gauge housing needs is to ask themselves just how happy they are in their current area," says Jackson, whose company is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, the nation's oldest and largest referral network of independent real estate brokers, headquartered in Chicago.

Jackson adds that the question of living in an urban or rural setting is a primary consideration of families in their home search.

"While some families prefer the cultural opportunities of urban living, other families prefer the quiet open spaces provided by rural setting. Prospective homebuyers need to be realistic about the types and quality of services available to them in each type setting," Jackson emphasizes. "Of course, proximity to work may be a major factor in the home search process."

Jackson recommends that prospective homebuyers do some research of their own in advance of any planned move.

"Families need to look into transportation, the quality of school systems and convenience to shopping areas," he notes.

"Careful review of your likes and dislikes will put you in a position to save time looking for a home by presenting the real estate specialist with specific information and particular characteristics you desire in a home," Jackson says. "If a client comes in with the answers to these types of questions, it will give us a good idea of what homes to begin showing."

Jackson also says that careful consideration and planning for that new home will also help greatly to reduce the chances of prospective home buyers being shown properties that are not to their liking. "Since a home buyer's time is a precious commodity, this planning in advance will eventually pay important dividend," he explains.

Jackson notes that families should keep in mind their plans for the next several years. "Many families with children entering college years often find themselves with too much room. In other instances, elderly parents or other relatives are now moving in with their children in an effort to decrease expenses and improve lifestyles in their later years. Both of these examples need to be considered and carefully planned far in advance," he adds.

By carefully assessing every aspect of their lifestyles, potential homeowners are more likely to select a home which will satisfy the needs and desires of all family members, Jackson says.

In addition to providing a wide range of relocation services, the RELO network has entered into an agreement with the Dallas-based Associates Corporation of North America, allowing Adobe Inc., Realtors and other RELO members to further help homebuyers, as well as sellers by offering a variety of expanded financial services, including mortgage services, homeowners insurance and a special mortgage program for transferees.

Adobe Inc., Realtors has 15 sales associates and has served the Midland area for 12 years.

If you need assistance in your home buying or market analysis of your home, please call any of their 15 agents who are ready to assist you. Also pick up one of their Buyers Guide's at your local grocery store or at Adobe's offices at 3303 North Midkiff in San Miguel Square.

Adobe Inc., Realtors is very busy assisting transferees with Conoco and Chevron from Hobbs and other parts of the country. If you are thinking about selling your house this may be a good time to do so. If an Adobe associate can assist you give them a call at 694-9548.

Closing costs, terms are important when purchasing home

Many home buyers, especially first-time purchasers, are unaware of the cost to close on a property — but these terms and costs are important for both the first-time and the repeat buyer.

"First-time buyers probably have the toughest time with closing costs partially because they don't know what to expect. Closing costs can add up and, therefore, prospective home buyers need to plan ahead so they don't get caught with fees they hadn't planned for," says Dene Kelly, president of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors.

Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, the nation's oldest and largest referral network of independent real estate brokers, headquartered in Chicago.

Dene Kelly

The RELO network provides a wide range of relocation services to assist transferees and their families sell a house in one community and purchase a new home in the new community. It will be celebrating its 30th anniversary this year.

Ms. Kelly notes some of the closing costs that prospective home buyers should be aware of:

■ Appraisal — an expert judgment or estimate of the quality or value of real estate as of a given date.

■ Attorney's fee — the cost to receive legal counsel in order to complete the home-buying transaction.

■ Credit report — a statement of the borrower's credit history and ability to pay a bank loan. The cost is usually less than $75.

■ Discount points — set on a range of zero to four points, discount points reflect the difference between the loan's face value and it's current cash value. Each point is one percent of the loan.

■ Escrow — money or other valuables left in trust with a third party until the fulfillment of a specific art or condition.

■ Homeowners insurance — the cost of insuring a home is usually paid one year in advance.

■ Interest per diem — this reflects the prorated interest or mortgage payment which starts with the date of closing and runs until the first mortgage payment.

■ Mortgage insurance — protects the lender if the buyer defaults on mortgage payments. The premium for mortgage insurance varies with the type of mortgage.

■ Origination fees — this fee covers the lender's cost for processing a loan. The cost is usually one percent of the total loan.

■ Recording fee — the fee paid for making the real estate transaction a matter of public record.

■ Transfer taxes — the fee paid to a city for transferring ownership of property.

■ Title Insurance — protects the home buyer from any loss that may be incurred as the result of a defect in the title.

Ms. Kelly notes that fees for these various documents, transactions and legal assistance will vary upon the community, the property and other variables. "A good attorney will be able to assist homeowners in deciphering the route to purchasing a home," she adds.

In addition to providing a wide range of relocation services, the RELO network has entered into an agreement with the Dallas-based Associates Corporation of North America, allowing Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors and other RELO members to further help homebuyers, as well as sellers by offering a variety of expanded financial services, including mortgage services, homeowners insurance and a special mortgage program for transferees.

Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors has 18 sales associates and has served Midland for 12 years.

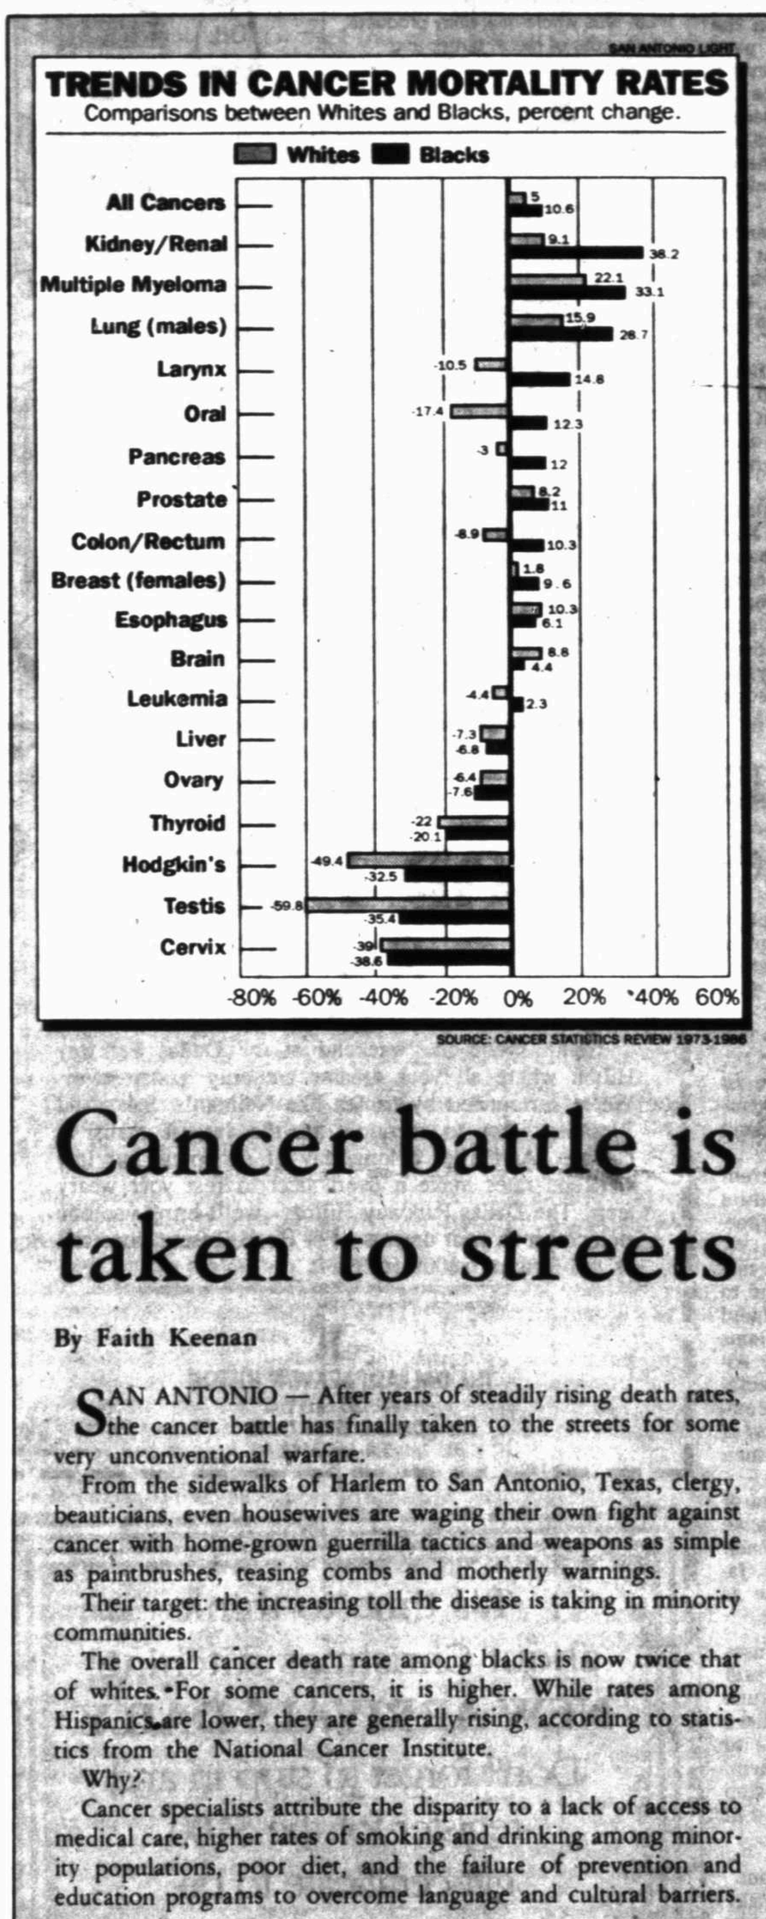
CANCER CHANGES THE WAY WE LIVE



Cancer battle is taken to streets

By Faith Keenan

SAN ANTONIO — After years of steadily rising death rates, the cancer battle has finally taken to the streets for some very unconventional warfare.

From the sidewalks of Harlem to San Antonio, Texas, clergy, beauticians, even housewives are waging their own fight against cancer with home-grown guerrilla tactics and weapons as simple as paintbrushes, teasing combs and motherly warnings.

Their target: the increasing toll the disease is taking in minority communities.

The overall cancer death rate among blacks is now twice that of whites. For some cancers, it is higher. While rates among Hispanics are lower, they are generally rising, according to statistics from the National Cancer Institute.

Why?

Cancer specialists attribute the disparity to a lack of access to medical care, higher rates of smoking and drinking among minority populations, poor diet, and the failure of prevention and education programs to overcome language and cultural barriers.

THE CANCER GAP is not new, but grassroots efforts to close it have only recently gathered momentum. Minority community leaders say the new push stems from the evident failure of traditional cancer control programs to reach minorities, and attention that federal officials have focused on the issue.

"The data has been there," said Dr. Lovell Jones, professor of gynecology at the University of Texas/M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston and editor of "Minorities and Cancer."

"It's just there are people in influential positions now who are more sensitive to those issues."

Jones referred specifically to Dr. Samuel Broder, director of the National Cancer Institute, and U.S. Secretary of Health Louis Sullivan, both of whom have publicly denounced the gap and called more attention to attempts to close it.

Meanwhile, some communities have taken matters into their own hands. San Antonio's "A Su Salud" — To Your Health — program, which the NCI funds, has won praise from prevention experts nationwide for its community-based approach.

The program has enlisted Hispanic residents to pass health tips on to their neighbors, relatives and friends, and encourage them to change unhealthy habits.

Forget sophisticated vocabulary and scientific rationale. Their message is simple: cut down on your smoking and drinking, keep the lard out of your tortillas, eat all the green peppers, oranges and carrots you like, and you will cut your risk of getting cancer.

Guadalupe Gonzalez is a 75-year-old beautician who works on the program's front lines. She gently counsels her customers about the evils of smoking and tries to convince them that tortillas made with low-fat vegetable oil are as delicious as those made with the

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth of a six-part Sunday series giving an in-depth look at the fight against cancer. The series is a special Hearst project which was written by Faith Keenan of our Washington bureau with photographs and graphics prepared by staff members of the San Antonio Light. The series has a wide scope, from stories on the state of medical research and the human suffering brought by the disease to the politics of federal research money.

Next Sunday's presentation will focus on the politics of cancer research and how it is competing with money and itellect now being directed at AIDS research. There also will be a look at "gene-mapping," a project that is 15 years from completion, yet controversy is already brewing over how society will use the information collected in the process of identifying 3 billion letters of genetic instructions.

SAN ANTONIO — Leave it to cancer to rob us of yet another truth, spoil a good drink and invade the plot of a favorite television show.

From pesticides to Perrier to hair dryers, it seems almost everything may cause cancer.

Worse yet, possible carcinogens seem to be everywhere — in tap water, auto emissions, apples, your favorite beer, even the electric alarm clock.

What mother teaches her child anymore that "an apple a day will keep the dentist away?"

Cancer strikes friends, family, even a character on the popular TV show, "thirtysomething." Cancer still is Hollywood's all-purpose villain.

Even those who don't have cancer live with it every day. It's the trend that never fades, the threat that always pervades. It can spoil dreams, cause endless headaches to industry and rally entire communities to fight city hall.

THE DISEASE'S awesome power lies in fear. Psychologists say that it is still the disease most dreaded by the general population. AIDS may be as menacing but more people will die of cancer in a week than of AIDS in a year.

"The first thing that pops into mind when cancer is mentioned is death, and often not a very pleasant death," said Dr. Gary Morrow, a behavioral psychologist at the University of Rochester Cancer Center in Rochester, N.Y.

Its scope is even more frightening, he said. The disease leaves few families unscathed.

"It touches one in four Americans. It's hard to find something that is more pervasive than that," said Morrow.

Some throw up their hands and seek comfort in fatalism. Others search for ways to cut their risk of getting the disease.

The most obvious is the anti-smoking campaign. In the quarter-century since the U.S. surgeon general issued the official warning about the deadly affects of smoking, cigarette companies have been forced to place warning labels on their packages and cigarette ads have been banned forever from television.

Communities have launched their own anti-tobacco campaigns by painting over billboards advertising cigarettes.

Non-smokers have shown they're not going to take it anymore, and the pressure has extinguished cigarettes in thousands of offices, restaurants, and other public places in San Antonio, San Francisco, Seattle, Houston, New York, and about 400 other cities nationwide, according to Americans for Non-Smokers Rights based in Berkeley, Calif.

The state of California has begun to attack cigarette ads with its own mocking ads that portray smoking as dumb and dangerous, not sexy and glamorous. Smokers are paying for

HAVE YOU HEARD?

'Cause for Paws' gets national mention

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

If you were watching "The Joan Rivers Show" recently, you might have been surprised, as was a friend of mine, when Ms. Rivers mentioned Midland's upcoming SPCA benefit, "Cause for Paws."

McKnight-Harrison

As it turns out, the talk show host and her faithful dog, Spike, are honorary co-chairmen of the event, which is set for July 20 at the Racquet Club. If you missed that announcement, you can still watch Joan make her plug for the cause in Public Service Announcements on KMID-TV.

Benefit chairman Jeanette (Mrs. W.T.) Probandt and co-chairman Julie (Mrs. Tom) Bultman say attendees will have a fun evening while helping a worthy cause. There will be cocktails, a buffet supper, dancing to the music of Rotel and the Hot Tomatoes of Austin, a silent auction and informal modeling by The Canopy. In addition, a special prize, a trip for two to New Orleans, will be awarded during the evening, compliments of Southwest Airlines and Omni Royal Orleans Hotel.

MARK YOUR CALENDARS now, ladies, for Sept. 20. That's the date the Children's Service League has selected for its benefit luncheon and fashion show.

The committee chairmen include Kathy (Mrs. Ron) Huse, decorations; Ann (Mrs. James) Walton, table reservations; Sarah (Mrs. Ron) Holcomb, invitations; Robbie (Mrs. Roy) Davidson, publicity, and Barbara (Mrs. Earl) Bruno and Betty (Mrs. Edward J.) Gemmill, invitation design.

THE RESIDENCE of Shirley Ireland was the focal point for family members and friends to greet her children, former Midlanders Floyd and Penny Ireland of Gillette, Wyo., and Kathy and Roger Hill of Palestine, Texas, and their families.

Floyd had recently returned from an assignment in Hong Kong, which involved offshore drilling.

Assisting with hosting duties were her other children, Paula and Greg Collins and Lee and Sherrie Ireland, all of Midland.

Additional get-togethers for the visitors included a swimming party at the home of Maggie and Mike Ryan and a Sunday brunch given by Sherry and David Mussett.

THE CHILDREN of longtime Midlander Ina June Green gathered in Midland last weekend to celebrate their mother's 80th birthday.

A party, featuring a barbecue dinner, was held at The Lakes Apartments clubhouse. Among those attending were five of her children, Ina Fay (Mrs. Dave) Weeks and LeRoy Green, both of Midland; Gloria Nell (Mrs. W.T.) Lewis of Oak Creek, Kenneth Green of Denver, and Colleen (Mrs. Clifford) Mullis of Spring, and their families.

Other family members' birthdays and anniversaries, as well as Father's Day, were celebrated while they were together.

Mrs. Green moved to Midland from Rotan with her husband, the late Joe Green, approximately 40 years ago. She is the mother of eight children and has 16 grandchildren and 16 great-granchildren. She was born June 27, 1910, and was raised in the Roby area.

THE MUSEUM OF THE SOUTHWEST was the place to be last Sunday evening when the museum hosted its season's opener of the popular Summer Sundays Concerts.

The program presented by the Midland Community Theatre Singers opened with "Cabaret" and closed with "Pippin," the title songs from two recent MCT productions.

Many of those attending arrived early and relaxed on the museum grounds while enjoying picnic suppers before the talented singing ensemble performed.

Among those spotted in the crowd were Patsy Yeager, Lydia Wilkinson, Helena Gaston, Rita and Floyd Wheeler, Dr. Gregory Bartha, Peggy and Bill Thorsen, Mary and Patrick Lipscomb, Anne-Marie Bachmann and her husband, Don, who is executive director of Midland Community Theatre, and Brooksie and Charlie Rentz. Charlie is manager of public and government affairs for the Mid-Continent Region of Texaco, Inc., which sponsors the MCT singing group.

The series continues tonight at 7:45 with a program of inspirational singing by Bridgette Benson and Diane Roach.

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

CHANGES: People are changing habits

the ads through cigarette taxes. Smoking was recently banned on all domestic airline flights. Desperate nicotine addicts dare not even sneak a puff in the bathroom — smoke alarms will expose them to all on board.

Diet is the next obvious area hit by the anti-cancer, pro-health surge. Products from cereal to crackers to cooking oil now advertise their purported health benefits to increase sales.

Labels scream — sometimes in two or three places — "Low fat" or "Extra bran added for high fiber." Instead of promoting prizes like lick 'n stick tattoos inside their boxes, cereals tout their grain's ability to cut the risk of heart disease and colon cancer.

Signs in one San Antonio supermarket produce section assured consumers that the store conducts "random daily testing for pesticide residues." What they really mean is: "Our apples and grapes are safe."

While some assurances are specific to cancer, many are fallout from the ongoing U.S. health craze.

"People in general are doing more positive things, but saying it's specific to cancer or to yuppies or the 'me' generation, I don't think we can sort out," said Morrow. "People are more interested in taking charge of their health than they ever were."

Other than the supermarket and standard fruits and vegetables, there are plenty of places to turn to for help. Crystals, macrobiotics, laetrile, multi-vitamin drinks are just a few of the fads that have capitalized on the cancer scare.

"These things are multibillion-dollar industries that make a small fortune on people's fears," said Morrow.

As cancer-fighting products continue to be born, it leaves some consumers remembering the days when you didn't talk about cancer if you had it and you certainly didn't write it in your obituary if you died of it.

"There are so many things now that cause cancer that a person doesn't know what to do," said Josephine Smith, an elderly shopper at a San Antonio supermarket.

"I loved apples, but I stopped eating them after I heard there were pesticides on them. I stopped eating grapes for the same reason. I haven't seen anything about broccoli, yet. I still buy that."

While the media is often blamed for fueling cancer phobia, cancer specialists credit Hollywood for taking a more positive, responsible approach to the disease than the movie industry has in the past. Gone are the days when megastars like Rock Hudson, Bette Davis, and Marlene Dietrich seductively smoked cigarettes on screen, or when cancer came on the scene to move the plot toward inevitable death.

By the late 1970s, TV's cancer message became more upbeat and shows weren't glorifying smoking. Scripts directed actors to talk about the disease more openly and without fear. The message was that people with cancer didn't have to die. Americans could discuss the disease, learn about it and act against it, according to an analysis by the American Cancer Society.

Shows like "thirtysomething," "Cagney and Lacey," and "St. Elsewhere" handle the topic more realistically, said cancer society spokesperson Joann Schellenbach.

"They show what a person goes through," she said. "They don't gloss over it, but show the practical and emotional things people have to deal with."

DIET CHANGES TO REDUCE CANCER RISK

Eat whole grain cereals, fruits, vegetables

Daily diet should include such items as beans and seeds, citrus fruits, dark-green and deep yellow vegetables, cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, brussels sprouts, winter squash and tomatoes.

Reduce fats

Drink less alcohol

Avoid salt-cured, salt-pickled and smoked foods traditional lard. High fat diets have been linked to a higher risk of developing cancer.

"There are a lot of dishes you can make without grease," Gonzalez says she tells her customers.

In Harlem, the Rev. Calvin Butts is trying to get the word across with a paint roller. The pastor of the Abyssinian Baptist Church — New York City's most prominent black pulpit — has whitewashed billboards in the black community that advertise cigarettes and liquor.

Butts said the companies responsible for the ads were trying to market unhealthy products in neighborhoods already overcome by poverty and disease.

Similar paint projects have occurred in Chicago, Detroit, and Dallas. Butts' ambush follows Secretary Sullivan's campaign to stop tobacco companies from trying to "sell death" to minority and blue-collar communities targeted in cigarette ads.

Dr. Harold Freeman, director of surgery at Harlem Hospital, is beginning a program to screen patients for cancer when they come to the emergency room for other treatment.

"The purpose is to triage those who are sick," he said. "They go to be treated, but those that aren't sick are offered certain examinations while they wait for their service."

But religious leaders — powerful forces in both the Hispanic and black communities — mainly form the vanguard of the movement that some consider the next frontier in the civil rights struggle.

"People believe in their ministers, so we get them involved," said Freeman. "Many may not go to the doctor, but they do go to church. Amelie Ramirez, assistant director of the A Su Salud Program, agreed.

"The priest is a very credible source" in the community, she said. "The doctor may be the most credible source of health information for Hispanics, but they don't get to see them that often."

Macho attitudes often prevent individuals in both communities from seeking medical help, Freeman and Ramirez said.

"It's more difficult to reach males," said Freeman. "They tend to see that they're indestructible and they don't respond to problems that aren't symptomatic." Although incidence of colo-rectal cancer is high in the black community, Freeman says wariness of rectal exams inhibits many men from being tested.

His tactic: change the name of the test. "We get more in when we call it a prostate exam," he said.

In the Hispanic community, fatalism and skepticism can be as deadly as poor health habits.

"People say everything causes cancer, that it's in the water," said Ramirez. "We're trying to turn this image around, saying there are risk factors that contribute (to developing cancer). We tell them, you can control your diet, stop smoking — we try to position it in a more positive light."

For Jones, larger issues loom.

"We have to do more than make people aware," he said. "We must put screening centers close to minority neighborhoods and figure out who's going to pay for it. It'll take some mind alterations outside of Washington to draw attention to those issues."

New combination of drugs approved for colon cancer

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration on Wednesday approved a new combination drug treatment that has been shown to prolong the survival for patients with advanced stages of colon cancer.

The therapy combines levamisole, a drug previously approved only for eliminating intestinal parasites in animals, with fluorouracil, already approved for treatment of several types of cancer.

FDA officials said the combination of the two drugs in patients who have undergone surgery for colon cancer that has spread to nearby lymph nodes has been shown to reduce tumor reccurence and death in some patients.

Michael Friedman, associate director of the Cancer Therapy Evaluation Program of the National Cancer Institute, said the combination drug therapy is "an important advance." But, he added, studies on it must continue to improve treatment and determine whether it is effective for other stages of the disease.

Colon cancer that has spread to lymph nodes is classified as stage 3, also referred to as stage Dukes' C. About 21,000 of the 110,000 Americans diagnosed with colon cancer each year are in this stage. About 40 percent live for five years or more after surgery, the FDA said.

The combination therapy was tested in two clinical trials sponsored by the National Cancer Institute that involved about 1,700 patients who had undergone surgery for stage 3 colon cancer.

Researchers found that the treatment reduced the death rate for these patients by about one-third and the tumor-recurrence rate by about 40 percent.

They don't know, however, how the five-year survival rate will be affected since they have not followed these test patients that long yet, said FDA spokeswoman Eva Kemper.

More than 4,000 patients with stage 3 colon cancer have received the combination therapy since May 1989 when it was approved under the FDA's Treatment IND (investigative new drug) program that makes promising experimental drugs available to patients with no other hope, the agency said.

The most common side effects of the treatment are nausea, occasional vomiting, headache, diarrhea, sores in the mouth and depressed blood count, the FDA said. Also, a blood disorder called agranulocytosis caused one death among patients in the cancer institute trials.

The therapy, which lasts one year, consists of levamisole tablets given orally for three consecutive days every other week and fluorouracil given intravenously once a week.

Scientists fight 'near epidemic' of melanoma

By Natalie Angier
N.Y. Times News Service

As the sun arcs toward the summer solstice and swarms of unregenerate sunbathers head for the beach, scientists are struggling mightily to undo the damage of profligate tanning.

They are racing to devise new therapies against malignant melanoma, the deadly skin cancer that is rising faster than any other cancer in the world.

At several recent cancer meetings, epidemiologists and dermatologists presented stark new figures that they said make melanoma the most troublesome cancer they now confront.

They reported that the incidence of the skin malignancy has doubled since 1980, and that it continues to soar by 4 percent or 5 percent a year worldwide.

In that same period, they said, malignant melanoma climbed from being the third most common cancer among women between the ages of 25 and 29, to its current status as number one for the group, and the ninth most common cancer overall in the United States.

Last year, 27,300 people were diagnosed with melanoma, and 6,000 died of the disease.

"It's a near epidemic," said Dr. Darrell S. Rigel, a dermatologist and melanoma specialist at New York University Medical Center. "To have something double in 10 years is really amazing. No other cancer has this rate of increase."

FACED WITH THESE statistics, many researchers are working to design new therapies against the disease. When caught early enough, melanoma tumors, which resemble moles, can be surgically removed and the cancer completely cured. But once the malignancy has spread from the skin to other parts of the body, melanoma is among the most aggressive and lethal of cancers, resisting traditional methods of chemotherapy and radiation.

Researchers now believe that a far more promising approach to treating advanced melanoma is to coax the immune system to recognize melanoma cells as deadly and to destroy them.

Some investigators have crafted vaccines that spur the immune system to recognize melanoma cells and to produce antibodies and white blood cells to fight them.

Several of these vaccines are in or nearing large-scale clinical trials. Other investigators are employing powerful hormones like interferon and interleukin-2 to stimulate an immune response in patients.

"Two years ago I wouldn't have said that I have much hope for new treatments," said Dr. Alan N. Houghton, chief of the clinical immunology service at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York. "But now we have a whole set of new agents and new approaches that I think are going to make a difference in the future."

Still other scientists are striving to understand why melanoma defies many of the rules that apply to other cancers. They are scrutinizing the enzymes in the tumor cells to determine why melanoma can infiltrate more organs than almost any other type of malignancy.

They also are learning how stray melanoma cells that have broken away from the original tumor can lie dormant in the body for 10 years or longer before suddenly exploding into a deadly tumor mass at a distant site.

SCIENTISTS BELIEVE such insights will lead to dramatically improved cancer therapies.

"One absolutely critical, important point that we have learned by studying melanoma is that we can use a biological approach to alter a patient's immune system and cause cancer regression," said Dr. Steven A. Rosenberg, chief of surgery at the National Cancer Institute, part of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

But dermatologists stress that new treatments for advanced melanoma are still highly experimental. They say that the best treatment for the disease is to catch it at its earliest stages, when surgery can rout it out. Better still, say doctors, is to avoid excessive sun exposure and to wear a strong sun block while outdoors.

"The best thing to do about melanoma is not to get it," said Dr. Fred T. Valentine, an immunologist at New York University Medical Center. "That's the lesson folks still have to learn."

Melanoma is a cancer of the melanocytes, the cells that produce skin pigment. It is less common than basal cell carcinoma, a relatively benign type of skin tumor that usually appears on the face or hands and rarely spreads beyond the skin.

Some scientists blame part of the melanoma epidemic on the use of industrial and commercial chemicals that are thought to be depleting the ozone layer, the stratum of the upper atmosphere that blocks out many dangerous ultraviolet rays.

But the theory is hotly contested, and most researchers believe that a more important cause is the recent obsession with tanning.

They say that the steep rise in melanoma began when the bronzed "healthy" look replaced the porcelain complexion as a physical ideal, a trend that began on a wide scale in the 50s.

"It's insidious because there's a 20- to 30-year year lag period before the sun damage becomes clinically apparent," said Rigel. "What we're seeing now are the cancers that were initiated in the 60s and 70s, when people were outdoors more than they had been 20 years before, but when strong sunscreens were not yet widely available."

BUTTRESSING THE LINK between melanoma and recreational sunning are the locations on the body where the first tumors usually appear.

On men, melanoma tumors normally show up on the back, shoulders or belly, places that are usually exposed to strong sun only sporadically.

On women, melanomas most frequently occur on the legs, although they increasingly are appearing on the torso, probably a result, say researchers, of the popularity of two-piece bathing suits.

Wherever they crop up, the tumors usually are dark brown or black, slightly raised, with irregular edges.

Researchers say that the most dangerous type of exposure is binge sunning, which frequently results in bad burns. According to the American Cancer Society, people who have had three or more blistering sunburns before the age of 20 have five times the risk of getting melanoma of those who have never been sunburned.

But researchers say that the unusual danger of a bad sunburn does not mean that gradual or mild tanning is harmless. "There is no such thing as a safe suntan," said Rigel.

Other risk factors include a family history of the disease, a fair complexion and blond or red hair, and a noticeably freckled back and shoulders, indicating excessive sun exposure.

The highest rate of melanoma in the world is in Queensland, Australia, where many fair-skinned people of Irish and English extraction live beneath the scorching sub-equatorial sun. But blacks and Asians also develop melanoma, although at a much lower rate than do whites.

Researchers recently have determined the precise size of the tumor that can spell the difference between life and death, Rigel said. When the vertical thickness of the tumor is less than a 0.75 millimeters, or a 1/32 of an inch, the removal of the tumor marks the end of the disease virtually 100 percent of the time. But if the tumor is thicker than an eighth of an inch — the width of a dime — it very likely already has metastasized, or spread.

METASTATIC MELANOMA is one of the toughest of tumors to treat. For unknown reasons, it is invulnerable to most types of chemotherapeutic drugs that kill other cancer cells.

Radiation is sometimes used to treat melanoma, but the therapy can do little beyond shrinking tumors enough to relieve a patient's pain.

But scientists are optimistic that melanoma may be more amenable to new immune therapies than are other cancers. They have found that a melanoma cell has an unusually high number of antigens, or protruding proteins, on its surface, which could provide easy targets for the immune system to assault.

Researchers do not yet understand the function of the surface proteins, but they are exploiting the bulging antigens to design new therapies.

"We believe that we can train the immune system to go out and destroy any melanoma that's been left behind after surgery," said Dr. Jean-Claude Bystra, director of the melanoma program at the New York University Kaplan Cancer Center.

Perhaps the most promising approach lies with a cancer vaccine, long a dream of oncologists. Researchers hope that by vaccinating a patient with telltale pieces of a cancer cell, they can spur the immune system to mount a fierce response against all cells in the body that bear those distinguishing marker proteins.

FURTHEST ALONG IS a melanoma vaccine developed by the team of Dr. Marc K. Wallack, chief of surgery at Mt. Sinai Medical Center in Miami Beach, Fla. They took a harmless version of the vaccinia virus, which causes smallpox, and infected melanoma cells with it in the laboratory.

They then pulverized the membranes of the infected melanoma cells, emerging with a combination of vaccinia particles and melanoma antigens. That mixture is injected into melanoma patients.

"The body knows how to react to viruses very well," said Wallack. "This vaccine calls attention to melanoma antigens, and therefore the immune system reacts to the melanoma proteins as well as to the viral proteins."

The researchers have found that, in responding to the virus-melanoma shot, the body generates a host of antibodies and white blood cells that recognize specific melanoma targets.

In early clinical trials, the scientists tested the vaccine on patients who had melanoma that had spread to their lymph nodes, which put them at great risk for a recurrence of the disease after surgery.

The researchers found that there was a 30 percent difference between those who received the vaccine and those who did not.

For example, in a group of patients with melanoma that has already spread to a lymph node, about half would be expected to remain free of melanoma for two years after surgery.

With the vaccine, about 80 percent of the patients survived two years without a recurrence.

The Florida researchers now are in the midst of a large, three-year clinical trial involving six institutions and, eventually, 210 melanoma patients.

They plan to use the results to improve their vaccine, with the hope that someday they can inoculate people who are at high risk of contracting melanoma before they get the tumor. At least half a dozen other anti-melanoma vaccines also are being developed.

ANOTHER IMMUNOLOGICAL approach that is being tested against melanoma is the use of hormones like interleukin-2 and interferon, which work in the body to stimulate proliferation of immune cells.

Most of these methods were developed by Rosenberg of the National Cancer Institute. He and his researchers have found that about 20 percent of patients with advanced melanoma who receive steady infusions of either interleukin-2 or interferon have notable regression of their tumors for anywhere from several months to over five years.

Interleukin-2 is now being used against melanoma at 38 institutions nationwide, and new studies are under way to determine if a combination of interleukin and interferon may prove more effective than either alone.

Rosenberg also has submitted a proposal to the National Institutes of Health to attempt treating melanoma with a highly experimental type of gene therapy.

Under that scheme, Rosenberg will isolate from patients a species of white blood cell, known as tumor infiltrating lymphocytes, that he has found is drawn to tumors and somehow is able to degrade them.

Natural stores of such lymphocytes are not sufficient in patients with advanced melanoma to defeat the cancer, but Rosenberg plans to grow batches of the isolated cells in culture.

To lend the cells extra anti-tumor strength, he plans to insert through recombinant DNA methods a gene that produces tumor necrosis factor, a natural cancer-killing agent.

WHEN REINFUSED INTO the patient, the high doses of the manipulated lymphocytes theoretically should seek out melanoma tumors, and, with the aid of the necrosis factor encoded within them, destroy the malignancies.

Rosenberg's proposal was submitted last month and must make its way through a long approval process, but preliminary tests in animals indicate the gene therapy technique has promise.

If it is approved, it will become the first example of gene therapy used to treat human cancer.

"Melanoma seems to be a responsive disease to this approach, so we've selected it as a model," said Rosenberg. "But melanoma will just be the beginning."

Other researchers study the basic mechanisms of melanoma in an effort to understand its unusual complexities. In several recent studies, scientists have learned that melanoma cells secrete a number of potent enzymes capable of dissolving collagen and other structural proteins in tissue that normally help to hold cells together.

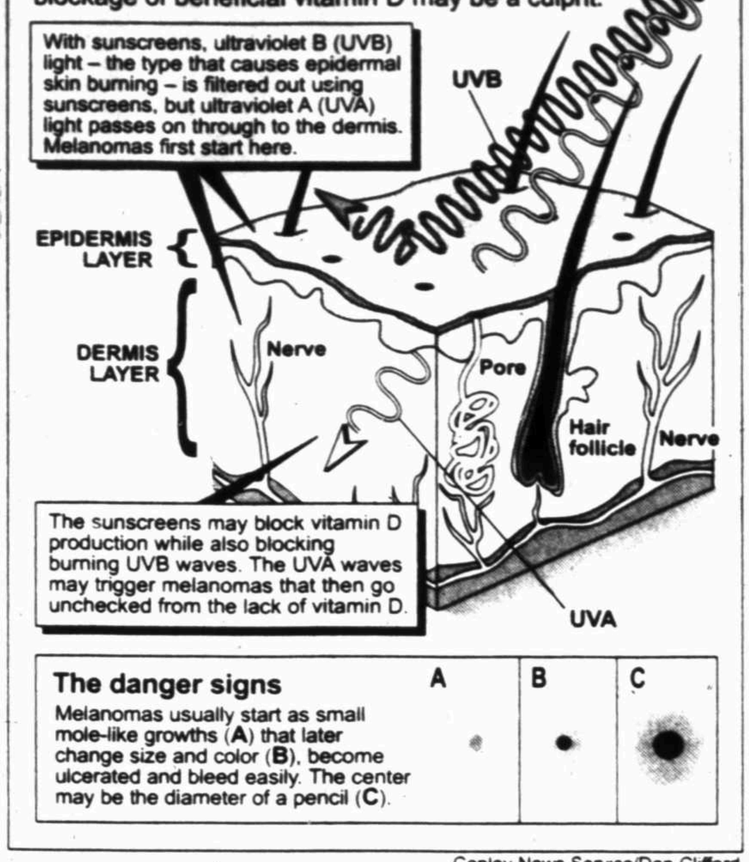
That talent may explain why melanoma cells seem to wrest free of a primary tumor mass when the malignancy is much smaller than most tumors that spawn renegade metastases.

Some scientists trace the ability to secrete enzymes to the early role of melanocytes. They have learned that during the early growth of an embryo, melanocytes move freely up and down the developing fetus, eventually covering the body as part of the skin.

"The normal cell has the ability to invade and travel," said Houghton, "so melanoma cells may be using this trait that the cells had during early embryogenesis."

That same built-in cellular wanderlust, he proposes, could explain why melanoma can spread to the lungs, brain, liver, bone and even the heart — more organs than most types of cancer cells can invade.

Researchers believe that if they can use an antibody to block the melanoma enzymes that degrade collagen, they may be able to defeat the cancer before it breaks free.



The melanoma mystery

Researchers are puzzled by findings that the risk of melanoma, the most virulent of all skin cancers, may be compounded by using sunscreens. The sunscreens' blockage of beneficial vitamin D may be a culprit.

The danger signs

Melanomas usually start as small mole-like growths (A) that later change size and color (B), become ulcerated and bleed easily. The center may be the diameter of a pencil (C).

Middle-aged love possible, complicated, author says

By Leslie Dreyfous

BOSTON (AP) — Frederick Busch first met Catherine Hollander and Harry Miller in a short story he wrote 14 years ago, when love's sad endings seemed less inevitable.

The author and his characters, who return with the recently published novel "Harry and Catherine" (Knopf, $18.95), are older now. They have lived more than a decade apart, nurturing separate careers and relationships.

When they reunite, nothing is simple. Theirs has become a middle-aged love story, one weighted with years of history.

"Adults know that (love) just doesn't always work out that well," Busch said during a recent stay in Boston. "You don't get to keep a lot."

But Harry takes a stab at keeping Catherine anyway, which for Busch is the heart of his character's stubborn charm. The slightly paunchy protagonist may know how the story will end, but he plays it out all the same.

"They stole a weekend out of time, and time always comes back," said Busch, who teaches literature at Colgate University.

This is grown-up love, with all its complications and shades of gray.

"The thing that is special ... is that a lot of people who are in their 40s stop believing in or don't care about the kind of passions that these characters are having," Busch said of his 14th work of fiction, which was published in March.

Catherine is Harry's passion. She is the woman he has been "leaving or left by for almost a dozen years." She is a willful, single mother raising two nearly grown sons and a vegetable garden in upstate New York.

Harry, an ex-newspaperman who is now a speechwriter for a liberal New York senator, can't seem to let her go. He wants "to know in my forty-first year of endless boyhood, if there's one more way for us, a chance, an accident we can force to happen, almost on purpose."

In a proposed shopping mall that would be built on the Civil War grave site of runaway slaves, Harry finds a chance. For his boss, who has presidential aspirations, the project provides a potential political platform.

For Harry, it provides a way back to Catherine, whose current lover coincidentally has a contract to pave the new shopping mall's parking lot.

Carter Kreuss, who lives part time with Catherine and her sons, stands to lose professionally. But where he really loses is in bowing out to let Catherine and Harry wrestle with their shared history.

"He did not have the courage of his passion and therefore, to me, didn't deserve her," said Busch.

Grown-up love is about courage, Busch said. It's about having passions and going after them, no matter how far out on a limb you're forced to climb.

Busch admits he's a bit in love with Catherine. It's perhaps for that reason he, like Harry, is having a tough time letting go of her.

"I pay tribute to her by being as greedy as Harry. ... wanting all of her the way Harry wants all of her," said Busch.

Facing the future

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

Jennifer Johnson of Midland is 9 years old, and like other children her age she goes to school, plays with her friends, is a big sister to 5-year-old brother Regan, enjoys team sports and complains about school cafeteria food.

"My favorite subject is art," Jennifer said. "My favorite hobby is art and sometimes reading." She enjoys tetherball, baseball and sometimes basketball. "When I go swimming in the summer, I go to a day care that takes us to Water Wonderland and all sorts of fun stuff."

But unlike most other children her age, Jennifer, who will enter the fifth grade this fall, is a spokesperson for a cause — the International Craniofacial Foundation Inc. (ICF), a non-profit organization that sponsors programs for information, research and care of those who have deformities of the face (facial) or skull (cranial).

Carolyn Johnson, Jennifer's mother, said she and her husband, Charles, have been involved in the organization "since its inception, back in the early '80s. ... We didn't find the group," Mrs. Johnson said, but they were one of the original members helping a doctor and wife team who started the organization. The Johnsons' interest in the group was Jennifer who was born "Aug. 25, 1980 ... with a unilateral (one-sided) cleft lip and palate," Mrs. Johnson said.

The group's goal, according to ICF information, is "to help facially deformed children live productive, normal lives."

The children ICF hopes to help include not only those born with birth defects, but victims of burns and other traumas as well, Mrs. Johnson said. And while the organization can and does find help for adults, "the emphasis is on children."

JENNIFER HAS had 15 surgeries in her young life, according to her mother, but "not all (Jennifer's operations) are specific to reconstruction." Her first surgery was Dec. 23, 1990, when she was only 4 months old.

When she was 2, "Jennifer was diagnosed with a skull deformity" and underwent surgery on her skull, Mrs. Johnson said.

Some of her other surgeries have included palatal closure and bilateral inguinal hernia repair, craniofacial reconstruction, rhinoplasty with cartilage graft and correction of torticollis and ventilation tubes, tonsillectomy, and cancellous bone graft to maxilla and pharyngeal flap.

Craniofacial deformities are more complicated than most people know. These children also are likely to have speech problems, hearing problems, and "ear infections and upper respiratory infections are common," Mrs. Johnson said.

"For babies, feeding is a horrible problem because they have a hard time sucking," she said.

And older children may have a problem with low self-esteem. "The misunderstanding is that people who have deformities of the head and face are retarded," said Mrs. Johnson. "That's not true in most cases. They are often understimulated" in learning situations. And after surgery, "there's immediate improvement — 'presto, chango,' like Jennifer says."

BECAUSE THERE is a certain amount of prejudice against people with craniofacial deformities, "some very uncaring things have been said, and even by people who mean well usually," Mrs. Johnson said. "I use humor, and I use the opportunity to educate people. She (Jennifer) does a lot of that herself.

"She heals them with her love. She's healed many a relationship, too — fixed it herself. We tell her when people are being rude, that's their problem, not ours."

Mrs. Johnson added, "Jennifer is really a champion for the underdog. It's very seldom that she would say a cruel word because she has a strong sense of emphathy for others."

Even though many of these children can be surgically helped, "occasionally you see adults who have never had surgery," Mrs. Johnson said. "There's no telling what they have gone through."

ICF was founded by a husband and wife team who "had a dream of starting an organization to help these people," she said. When the group was originally founded, it was a national organization, but it has since become international. "We were invited because they wanted parental input."

Parents of these children go through a whole range of emotions that most other

Jennifer Johnson was born with a cleft lip and palate (below photo). Now, nine years and 15 surgeries later, she is a healthy, active 9-year-old (above photo) whose lifestyle includes going to school, playing with friends, drawing, reading — and speaking to congressional leaders about problems faced by children born with craniofacial deformities.

In her own words:

As spokesperson for International Craniofacial Foundations, Jennifer Johnson, 9, of Midland, and her mother, Carolyn, are scheduled to go to Washington, D.C., in September to participate in congressional hearings and to petition the Senate Health Appropriations Committee for money to be used for research and assistance.

"I'm going to make a speech at the White House," Jennifer said. "I've already got my speech written."

Jennifer said that the idea of speaking in front of national leaders makes her only a little bit nervous, because "I've done plays and all that. I'm not really shy."

The following is the speech Jennifer has prepared to present at the White House:

Hi, my name is Jennifer R. Johnson. I came to help tell about the International Craniofacial Foundations. I was born with a cleft lip and palate. I also had a skull deformity. I have grown up with many problems. The Foundations have helped many people like me. I have many doctors that have helped me, but sometimes the insurance does not pay. We need laws that can help find babies with craniofacial problems and make sure that the Foundations are able to continue so that these people like me can live in happiness and have full lives. I have drawn cards that the Foundations sold, but we need your help. Thank you.

JENNIFER: Lifestyle includes play, school, speeches in Washington

new parents don't, Mrs. Johnson said. "I was an older parent when I gave birth (to Jennifer). The expectation was we would have a perfect child. When we didn't, we experienced a loss — for ourselves and our child — and some guilt."

But the Johnsons were not willing to give up. "I was already a medically inquisitive person," Mrs. Johnson said. "The more I learned, the more I wanted to know.

"In about 1982, I heard Dr. Ken Salyer (an expert in the field) speak ... I asked him some questions. ... It eventually occurred to me that you don't have to have a referral to go to a doctor, so I referred myself (to Salyer). In the meantime, we were getting medical care everywhere," including working with a team of doctors in Lubbock, where Jennifer had her first surgery.

Eventually Salyer became Jennifer's doctor, and has guided her progress since then.

And progress she has. In addition to enjoying the lifestyle of most 9-year-olds, Jennifer has shown a flair for art, and has even designed greeting cards for ICF. She began drawing when she was 2, her mother said, but when she was in the third grade, Jennifer said, "the foundation wanted me to draw some cards for the foundation to sell and get money ... to help kids. They had a contest. I got first and second place — and the (card with the) dinosaur holds a book that says the initials of the foundation."

"She has her own style," Mrs. Johnson said. "She developed fine motor skills early ... By the time she was about 5, the detail (in her drawings) was just incredible."

But parts of Jennifer's life are different from those of her friends. She, after all, has had 15 surgeries in just 9 years. After her last surgery, which was done this past April, Jennifer was on a liquid diet — and no strenuous activities — for several months.

JENNIFER SAID that even those restrictions had a positive side. "Sometimes when I was on the liquid diet, I spent more time with my friends instead of eating. I couldn't eat things like bread or it would ruin it ... where I had surgery.

"I didn't miss the cafeteria food," Jennifer said, adding that the other children sometimes wanted her milkshakes instead of their own lunches.

When the liquid diet ended, Jennifer was hungry for a hamburger. "I couldn't eat the pickles because I couldn't bite very good," she said.

Her mother laughed: "You ate your burger and the bread off my hamburger, and I was left holding a piece of meat and a tomato!"

As spokesperson for an international group, Jennifer has met some celebrities, including Dick Clark of American Bandstand fame, who is national campaign chairperson for ICF, and who will host a series of American Bandstand Show fundraisers for the organization in September.

And "in September, Jennifer and I are scheduled to go to Washington to participate in congressional hearings and petition the Senate Health Appropriations Committee for funds for assistance and research," Mrs. Johnson said. "We want to create a registry to keep track of births (of children with craniofacial defects). In most places these births are not logged.

"We are going to plead our case. Some babies have insurance — some have one insurance company. We hope to get funds for research and assistance, and maybe some legislature to help control medical costs."

Mrs. Johnson stressed the fact that these children "can have near-normal lives, but they are going to have to have some help to get there."

ONE OF the problems they face is the cost of their treatment. "The cost of plastic surgery is incredible," she said. "The cost is immense and we want people to be aware that this is a rising problem in the United States."

Another problem they face is gaining understanding and awareness. As a way of working toward that goal, Mrs. Johnson is developing a curriculum for use in schools "to teach kids who don't have the problem, and those who do," and to help teachers learn how to help those children most effectively.

"Awareness will go long way, and that's what we need," Mrs. Johnson said. "Awareness to get help, and awareness to get understanding.

"It's better to talk about it and do something about it that it is to hide it."

As Jennifer said, "People like me shouldn't be made fun of, because even though they have a problem, they are still human beings and we still should care."

'Dingadingas' and 'algorithms' not overlooked in new dictionaries

NEW YORK (AP) — Dictionaries have entered the age of specialization.

The general dictionary, which has been a reference workhorse for many years, is being augmented by specialized dictionaries that provide information on fields as varied as literature, food, mathematics and banking.

The "Dictionary of American Literary Characters" (Facts on File), for example, "concentrates exclusively on American Literature." Edited by Benjamin Franklin V, the hefty volume "spans nearly two centuries: from 1789, the date of the first American novel, 'The Power of Sympathy,' to 1980, when Norman Mailer's 'The Executioner's Song' won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction."

The book identifies, in alphabetical order, 1,100 characters from "significant American novels, in addition to those in some uncelebrated works and in a sampling of best sellers."

For example, a look under "Ishmael" shows he was the narrator and sole survivor "of the Pequod's pursuit of Moby Dick in Herman Melville's 'Moby Dick.' "

Other specialized dictionaries issued recently include:

■ "Webster's New World Dictionary of Media and Communications," compiled by Richard Weiner. This volume's aim is "to attempt to define specifically the terms from the many diverse worlds of communications." For example, a "dingadinga" is a "low-power spotlight," while a "polecat" is "a small support for lamps used in studio photography."

■ "Food Lover's Companion" (Barron's) by Sharon Tyler Herbst. The fat little book contains "comprehensive definitions of over 3,000 food, wine and culinary terms." A look at "chalazae" brings this definition: "Thick, cordlike strands of egg white which are attached to 2 sides of the yolk, thereby anchoring it in the center of the egg."

■ "A Concise Dictionary of Mathematics" (Oxford University Press) by Christopher Clapham. The book is designed to "guide readers through the often bewildering maze of equations and theorems encountered within the mathematical world." An "algorithm," for example, is "a precisely described routine procedure that can be applied and systematically followed through to a conclusion."

Flat tire deflates even best of intentions

By David Grimes
N.Y. Times News Service

A lot of people are intimidated by car repairs. Fortunately, this is not the case with me, as I demonstrated so aptly when my wife asked me to change her flat tire.

"Are you sure it's flat?" I asked her suspiciously.

"Of course it's flat," she said. "Can't you see?"

"Maybe it's just cold," I said, examining the deflated tire. "Let's let the sun warm it up for a couple of hours and see what happens."

"Change the tire, David," my wife said impatiently. "I'm late for work."

Having dealt with many flat tires in my time, I've found that the job proceeds much more smoothly if I follow this step-by-step procedure:

■ Stare at the flat and stroke your chin in a knowing fashion.

■ Open the trunk and locate the jack.

■ Attempt to remove the jack from the nethermost reaches of the trunk into which it has been diabolically wedged by sadistic Japanese automakers.

■ Issue three-second burst of profanity.

■ Place jack parts on ground.

■ Attempt to assemble jack parts according to Japanese instructions.

■ Issue five-second burst of profanity.

■ Place jack under fender and turn handle to raise car.

■ Continue turning handle.

■ Locate lug wrench and fit over lug nut.

■ Wonder who came up with the name "lug."

■ Apply counterclockwise pressure to lug wrench until lug nut loosens.

■ Apply more forceful counterclockwise pressure to lug wrench until lug nut loosens.

■ Apply extremely forceful counterclockwise pressure to lug wrench to the point that you feel your neck veins are going to rupture.

■ Sit on ground and pant for awhile before issuing 15-second burst of profanity.

■ Put wrench back on lug nut and try kicking it (the wrench) with your foot.

■ Feel something "give."

■ Realize that you have broken your toe.

■ Issue profanity of sufficient duration to cause flowers to wither and birds to drop from the sky.

■ Limp into house.

■ Call Triple A like you should have done in the first place.

AT WIT'S END

Colorful attire causes flap on court

By Erma Bombeck

In 1905, May Sutton, the first non-English Wimbledon champion, caused a flap when she rolled up her shirt sleeves on the court because she was "too hot." The corset and the petticoats she was wearing probably had a lot to do with it.

Bombeck

A few years later, Billie Tapscott played Wimbledon WITHOUT stockings. Get outta here! From there on, the dress code got out of control. Alice Marble wore short tennis shorts, Gussie Moran revealed lace-edged panties, and Billie Jean King, in her famous match against Bobby Riggs in 1973, wore a mint-green tennis dress with sky-blue collar decorated with a band of rhinestones and green sequins.

Tennis court apparel was destined to change. Andre Agassi, from Las Vegas, came head to head with the French Tennis Federation because he is a forerunner of the hot lava-Spandex age. When he appeared on the court recently dressed in glowing pink and black shirt, black denim shorts, pink cycling tights underneath and matching shoes and headband, the federation screamed "ban" and suggested a dress code for tennis players to be adopted by the United States and Australia.

When our young son was 8 years old, I entered him in a local tennis tournament because it would keep him busy for an hour while I went to the supermarket. The fact that he had never played a tennis game in his entire life was irrelevant. He drove me nuts at the store.

His court attire was plaid shorts down to his knees, a pair of black high-tops and a sweatshirt. His opponent was in white, had a headband and ("We are in deep trouble, kid!") a sweatband on his wrist. He probably squeezed a tennis ball in his sleep to strengthen his forearm. He had to tell my son where to stand to serve and when to change sides. I couldn't watch.

When I returned from the store, my son was sitting on the curb with a new can of tennis balls. His opponent told him he had won.

It's hard to get excited over what tennis players choose to wear on court. Good tennis is good tennis no matter how you dress it. What we should be getting excited about are the lack of manners and the foul language. It is not tolerated in any other sports event. Yet these super-brats are allowed to throw rackets, challenge decisions with profanities and make obscene gestures to the fans.

They can glow in the dark if they want to. Just knock it off with the theatrics and play tennis!

DEAR ABBY

Husband's new face upsets wife

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband (I'll call him Bill) and I have been married for four years after going together for three years. While we were going together, Bill grew a beard just to see how he'd look. We both liked the beard, so he kept it. His mother didn't like it, so he compromised and shaved the beard but kept the moustache. I didn't like the "baby-faced" look with no beard, so he grew it back again.

Van Buren

Bill was in construction work when his best friend offered him a job as a salesman. Bill did very well in his training period as a salesman, then his best friend asked him to shave off his beard. I didn't want him to, but his best friend won, and Bill was baby-faced again.

Abby, for two weeks I couldn't even bring myself to kiss him, let alone make love to him. He accused me of punishing him for going along with his best friend's wishes instead of mine, which was not true. I just find him much more appealing with a beard. Am I wrong for feeling this way? — BABY FACE'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: You are not responsible for your feelings, only your actions. Your husband has the right to wear a beard or be clean-shaven for whatever his reasons, so please don't turn this bristly issue into a power struggle between you and Bill's best friend.

DEAR ABBY: For the last two months, I have been talking on the telephone with a young woman whose company does business with the company I work for. (I am a 30-year-old single male.) I really like this woman's voice, her manner and sense of humor. I told her I liked her voice and she said, "What a coincidence. I like yours, too." I also told her I was 30 and unmarried — then she volunteered that she was 28 and unmarried. As you probably can guess, I would like to meet her. Her office is on the other side of town and a lunch date is not possible, so I'm considering asking her for a dinner date.

I room with another guy. He said, "You'd be crazy to make a dinner date with her — she will probably turn out to be a dog."

What do you think, Abby? — L.A. BACHELOR

DEAR BACHELOR: Ask her anyway. She's risking as much as you. But don't get your hopes up. She may think you're a nerd.

DEAR ABBY: I can top Dorothy Aliperto, who was born at The Swedish Hospital in Minneapolis in 1930. Her mother's hospital bill was $41.45 for a 10-day stay.

My husband was born in 1910 at the St. Francis de Sales Hospital in Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada. I am enclosing his mother's hospital bill:

DEAR MRS. KELLY: You win. I doubt if anyone can top this. Of course, this was 80 years ago, and in Canada. My, my, how times have changed!

P.S. The 75 cents discount for cash floored me.

DEAR ABBY: Apropos Tom's letter concerning his spanking by his father who said, "This hurts me more than it hurts you," my reply to my father under the same circumstances was, "Yeah, but not in the same place."

I read your column first thing every day and love it. Keep it up forever. — GODDARD DU BOIS, AGE 82

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." TRAVEL

In summertime, sample Saskatchewan's beauty

By Don Chapman
Copley News Service

If this ain't heaven, it's as close as it gets for thousands of country music fans who flock here in July.

This year they'll come to attend the eighth Big Valley Jamboree — a hand-clapping, foot-stomping hoedown featuring some of Nashville's biggest stars who perform in an incredibly appropriate setting, under blue skies or a canopy of stars on the vast Canadian prairie.

The festive atmosphere for this four-day event begins building several days before, when spectators stake their claims to camping spots in grassy fields adjacent to the fenced-in stage grounds. Soon they form a huge recreational vehicle and tent city several times larger than the tiny host town — population 300. Within a few hours smoke rises from portable barbecues and the sound of country music drifts from radios and tape decks, punctuated by the staccato bursts of pop-top cans.

With each passing day the crowd mushrooms. Vehicles sporting native Saskatchewan license plates are joined by others from the provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, Ontario and Manitoba. Soon they are flanked by registrations from Idaho, Montana, the Dakotas, Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin, transforming the jamboree into an international affair.

Those opting for more traditional accommodations make their base at one of several hotels in the Saskatchewan provincial capital of Regina and commute by car or bus the 24 miles to Craven.

From the moment the gates open on Thursday afternoon until they close for the final time around midnight Sunday, more than 50,000 people attend.

Dress of the day for men and women is boots, jeans and T-shirts, although some prefer shorts and athletic shoes. Most wear cowboy hats or caps to shade themselves from the warm summer sun.

Carrying lawn chairs and coolers full of beverages, many jamboree-goers line up early for gate entry. Once inside they claim positions as close as possible to the stage for the best view of their favorite performers. Others are in no hurry, opting for a seat in the grandstand or in the shade of a camera tower, content to get their close-ups from projections played on huge screens at either side of the stage. No matter where one sits, a superb sound system projects the voices of the entertainers with extreme clarity across the wide-open spaces.

Thursday the first performance gets under way at 4 p.m. with acts turning over every 60 to 90 minutes. Intermissions seldom last more than 15 minutes. Friday, Saturday and Sunday the performances begin at 10 a.m. with the headliner of the day taking the stage at 10 p.m. The 1989 closing acts included the Bellamy Brothers on Thursday, the Gatlin Brothers on Friday, George Strait on Saturday and Canada's own k.d. lang on Sunday. Other top attractions included Ricky Van Shelton, Highway 101, Don Williams, K.T. Oslin, Billy Joe Royal, Exile and Michael Martin Murphey.

On Main Street, an area behind the grandstand, booths and kiosks offer everything from souvenirs to concessions. The all-day menus include breakfasts of waffles, pancakes and sausages and lunch and dinner items of steak, hamburgers, pizza, submarine sandwiches, salads and corn on the cob. It's all washed down with beer or soft drinks and topped off with fresh fruit or ice cream. There's even a coin-operated shower and bath shop where campers can obtain everything from towels and soap to shampoo and a back-scrubber.

Once the final act leaves the main stage, those whose party spirit is still going strong make their way to the Fort Whoop-up Beer Garden at the end of Main Street. Here a carnival atmosphere prevails with games, tables and concession stands surrounding a huge dance floor where patrons kick up their heels doing the Texas Two-Step to live music that continues until 2 a.m.

While a good time is obviously being had by all, at no time does one have the feeling these people are out of control, thanks to the efforts of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

"Our approach has been to run the Jamboree a little loose but keep a lid on it. We do, however, crack down on drinking and driving," said John Baker, director of the police branch with Saskatchewan Justice in Regina.

Now recognized as the largest country music jamboree in the world, even attracting European tour groups, more than 4,000 volunteers from 55 non-profit organizations are required to attend the needs of the weekend crowd.

And the good times are for a good cause. All proceeds go to Canada's Bosco Homes, established in 1983 by Father Lucien Larre to provide treatment centers in Regina and Edmonton for children with serious emotional problems.

RANCH MEMORIES

"I've got about 250 head of cattle to move to new pasture. Wanna ride along?"

The words were music to the ears of this Midwesterner whose high school days in Chicago were joyfully tempered with summers spent working cattle on his uncle's ranch in South Dakota.

"You bet, let's get started," I replied.

Welcome to Forsyth Ranch, an 8,000-acre spread in the Great Sand Hills of Saskatchewan province. No dude setup here. This is an honest-to-goodness working ranch where cattle and wheat are raised. Here visitors can breathe some of the freshest air in the world, dine on real home cooking and get to know the wonderfully warm family of Ian and Irene Forsyth and their daughter, Karen.

And if you're of a mind, as I was, to tend to some cattle — well, that's all right, too.

"First you've got to come out and see my pets," Karen implored us. We ambled across the ranch's broad yard to a series of coops and pens where a menagerie of dogs, cats and chickens awaited.

"Why is this dog penned up?" I asked.

"He hasn't learned to mind his manners yet," Karen said. On a ranch, dogs earn their keep. This one was only starting to get the message, jumping excitedly when he saw the riders preparing for the roundup but circling slowly in the pen when it became apparent he wouldn't be in on the action.

Several friends had come to assist in the operation, and it was time to mount up. From the moment I climbed into the saddle of the Tennessee walker Ian selected for me, I knew we were going to be fast friends. Indeed, it was obvious early on that this horse had rounded up many a stray Hereford.

Working in tandem with a frisky and seemingly fearless sheep dog, the horse seemed to anticipate my every spur to its ribs or tug at the reins.

A few hours later the job was done and we rode back to the house. Irene fired up the barbecue, and thick, juicy steaks were soon sizzling over the coals.

After dinner we joined Ian for a tour of the vast spread on the edge of the Great Sand Hills, at the same time learning a bit about some of the economic tribulations that make earning a living in Canadian agriculture as challenging as it is south of the border.

The blue sky turned fiery orange and then to a deep purple during the lengthy twilight of a typically picturesque sunset in the northern latitudes.

"I wish we could get some rain," said Ian, eyeing a few scattered clouds sweeping in from the west. "We just haven't had enough precipitation this year."

Gray skies matched our mood the following morning as we packed, sorry the itinerary held no leeway for a little more time with the Forsyths.

As I carried a suitcase to the car the heaven's opened up. It marked the start of a wet day's touring for us. It was a wish come true for Ian.

CANADA'S RICH HISTORY

"Toto, I don't think we're in Kansas anymore."

Alas, had Dorothy been dropped onto the gently rolling prairies of Saskatchewan, instead of the Land of Oz, she might well have thought she was right back home.

The same Great Plains where Dorothy lived roll gently north across the Canadian border into Saskatchewan. It is a province of unique individual attractions, yet its inhabitants, through their land and history, share many common bonds with Americans in the U.S. heartland.

Perhaps that was one of the reasons why we found a week spent exploring southern Saskatchewan to be one of our most rewarding travel experiences.

It was in the spring of 1877 that Sioux Chief Sitting Bull and his followers sought refuge in Canada. They had defeated Custer at the Battle of Little Bighorn the previous summer.

The Indians were met by Maj. James Walsh of the North West Mounted Police, forerunner of today's Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who outlined laws to be followed while the Sioux remained on Canadian soil.

Although the Sioux lived peacefully in Canada, their intrusion resulted in tension with Canadian Indian tribes as once-plentiful buffalo herds disappeared from the prairies, causing starvation among all Indians.

Canadian authorities became increasingly anxious to be rid of the Sioux, leading to a series of negotiations that culminated in their return to the United States in 1881.

Some of the talks were held at Fort Walsh, named after the major and established in 1875 as one of several NWMP posts used in the battle against an illegal whiskey trade. Now a National Historic Park, the fort's whitewashed log buildings look much the same as they did between 1875 and 1883.

From Fort Walsh, you can board a horse-drawn wagon for the ride to Farwell's Trading Post. You'll learn about the infamous Cypress Hills Massacre of 1873 in which trappers up from Montana massacred 20 Assiniboine Indians in the belief the Indians had stolen some horses. Shortly after the gunfire ended, it was discovered the horses had simply wandered off and were grazing nearby.

Guides in period costumes recreate the atmosphere of the 1870s post, showing furs and trade goods in the store and inviting you to participate in daily chores or sample fresh-baked Indian bread cooked on a wood stove.

Rising abruptly from the plains that support wide stretches of farm and ranch land, the Cypress Hills are a geological oddity. Left virtually untouched by the powerful force of glaciers during the last ice age, the area contains some of the highest points east of the Rocky Mountains.

The unusual landforms and a rich variety of flora and fauna are preserved in Cypress Hills Provincial Park, where majestic stands of towering lodgepole pines and other alpine vegetation soar skyward and mule deer, white-tailed deer, elk and moose roam. Lakes abound with such wildlife as the trumpeter swan.

One of the park's most unusual features is the Conglomerate Cliffs, formed about 40 million years ago as sand, gravel and pebbles were brought from mountain streams and deposited on the plateau. Over time, they were cemented together with sand and calcium carbonate to form the hard, pebbly cliffs.

Driving across this Canadian breadbasket, one is almost certain to be in awe of the waving fields of grain and thousands of head of grazing cattle skirting the highways.

Imagine the surprise, then, as the rich agricultural land suddenly yields to shifting sand dunes — some as high as a two-story building.

The phenomenon began thousands of years ago when grains of sand were eroded from sandstone bedrock by moving glaciers, then deposited as deltas by streams entering glacier lakes next to the retreating ice sheets. Over the years, the sands have been reworked by the wind into shifting dunes, completely surrounded by otherwise productive farm land.

If everything's up-to-date in Kansas City, the same thing can be said for Regina, Queen City of the Plains.

From modest beginnings as a tent town on the vast prairie, Saskatchewan's capital city has blossomed into a modern cosmopolitan center of 180,000 with a strong base in business, industry, agriculture and education.

The city's most striking feature is the 2,300-acre Wascana Center, one of the largest urban parks in the world. Its focal point is manmade Wascana Lake, created in the early 1930s as a relief project for the unemployed and now the year-round home to flocks of Canadian geese.

Dominating the center is the Legislative Building, seat of the provincial government. More than 30 varieties of marble from Vermont, Quebec, Sweden, Ireland, Cypress and Italy were used in its construction.

For a close look at nature, visit the Saskatchewan Museum of Natural History. Along with dioramas of plants and animals that depict life in different regions of the province, you'll see over 100 showcases featuring geology, paleontology, archaeology, human history, conservation and zoology.

Montreal picturesque place to celebrate summer

By L. Peat O'Neil
Copley News Service

After the long slumber of winter, Montreal emerges from under the down comforter of its winter.

The largest French-speaking city outside of France, Montreal gives visitors from the United States a sense of adventure without having to leave the continent or grapple with a culture extremely different from their own.

Though French is the language most often spoken in Montreal, their tongue is a twangy North American French. Some citizens of France claim it grates on their ears like chalk on a blackboard. Nearly everyone also speaks English.

Generally, if approaching a Quebeccer, make the effort to say, "Bonjour" (bon-zhur) good day, or "S'il vous plait" (seel voo-play) if you please, then launch into English.

When Jacques Cartier landed at Mont Real during his voyages of the third decade in the 16th century (1535), he had to bridge a language gap with the local residents, Native Americans who received him, fed and traded with the newcomers and made them welcome.

The story goes: Jacques exclaimed, "Un mont royale," or something close to that, when viewing the city's mountain. Today, joggers scoot around Mount Royal Park, while lovers nestle under the trees.

THE PORT of Montreal was the most important city in Canada until 1959 and the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Down on Lake Ontario, at the far end of the seaway, Toronto expanded, losing its good gray lady reputation, and by the late 1970s, turned Montreal into Canada's second city. In the old days, Montreal was the largest grain port in the world, shipping out the wheat from the booming Canadian prairies.

Montreal has shrugged her chill by early summer and the tourists join the residents in celebrating. At the Montreal Botanical Gardens (4101 E. Sherbrooke St., (514) 872-1400), strollers are enjoying the first buds of summer. The park differs from many other city botanical gardens in its spaciousness — third largest in the world — and includes a Japanese garden, exhibition greenhouses, orchid collections and a train through the outer reaches.

Down on the waterfront, below Old Montreal, a summer-long festival is gearing up. The carriage drivers are repainting their buggies deep red and black, replaiting the nags' tails. Pavement crews are filling the potholes caused by winter snows. Window boxes of red geraniums are flowering. Rental bicycles and tandems allow visitors more mobility to see corners of Old Montreal.

Old Montreal is the early core of this city and though much of it has surrendered to tourism, a stroll through the narrow streets and the dense gray stone neoclassical buildings gives a sense of the old community founded in the 17th century.

HORSE-DRAWN CARRIAGES line up around Place Jacques Cartier for tours of the neighborhood. As the horse clip-clops along under the street lamps, you can easily imagine life a hundred years ago.

The streets of Old Montreal are also steeped in the hippie culture of the '60s and '70s. Beatniks and artists and artisans line the side streets off Place Jacques Cartier. Some are charlatans selling expensive junk. But many are genuine creative souls who have made the festive atmosphere of Old Montreal so enduring and enjoyable.

Roving musicians, jugglers and clowns add to the animated atmosphere in the quarter. When the fire eater on stilts starts swallowing, the crowd hushes and kids squat on their haunches, staring up with wonder. The hat is passed, coins and paper gratefully accepted.

Old Montreal's spiritual core might well be the city's oldest church, St. Marie, Notre Dame de Bon Secours (400 St. Paul St. East, (514) 845-9991). Building began in 1657 under the leadership of Marguerite Bourgeoys who came over to teach and ended up founding the powerful, well-landed Congregation of Notre-Dame nuns. The Bon Secours chapel is also known as the sailors' chapel and has an excellent view of the river from the upper chapel.

CNS Photo

The active heart of today's Montreal is the French Quarter, which runs along rue St. Denis and spills east to rue Berri and west to the Prince Arthur Street area. Come summer, the cafe doors stay open and tables stray into the street. Clumps of musicians gather to play guitar or flute, then pass the hat. Taste the fruits of the land by ordering Quebec cider, or Canadian ale.

Gentrified during the late '70s, Prince Arthur Street is closed to traffic between St. Lawrence Boulevard and rue St. Denis. Ethnic restaurants, cafe bars, record shops and clothes boutiques attract a progressive, young crowd. McGill University is just a few blocks further west of the Prince Arthur quarter.

THE MUCH-TOUTED downtown interconnected underground shopping mall is a necessity during the winter, but in summer, a stroll along Sherbrooke or St. Catherine streets, St. Lawrence Boulevard or rue St. Denis is far more interesting for people-watchers and shoppers.

During winter the cafe windows are fuzzed over with the fog of heated air and happy talk. During summer months, everyone lives outdoors, and the natives carry on quite late into theuebec winter. Visitors are warned that they will be drawn into the celebration. With song, wine, food, friends and talk, Montreal is in full bloom summer.

■ If you go: Citizens and documentod permanent residents of the United States are not required to have passports or visas to enter Canada. All visitors should bring identification papers, however, and permanent residents who are not U.S. citizens must carry green cards and bringing a passport is recommended.

■ Getting there: Montreal has two airports. Mirabel is the international complex, a lengthy bus or cab ride from downtown. Dorval is closer and served by city bus, limo-coach and cabs. Amtrak's overnight Montrealer service from New York City and Washington, D.C., is a comfortable alternative to flying or driving. Various seasonal discounts are available. The lowest adult round-trip summer Amtrak fare (after May 25) is $146.

■ Getting around: Montreal's metro and bus system is clean, inexpensive. Reduced-fare monthly passes and booklets of tickets are sold at booths inside stations, which also carry maps of the metro and bus system.

It's difficult to find a bad meal in Montreal, which has hundreds of ethnic and traditional restaurants with meals for all pocketbooks and palates. In the Prince Arthur Street area, try:

■ Restaurant Minerva, 17 Prince Arthur, has Greek and Italian specialties; $15-$20 per person.

■ Mazurka, 64 Prince Arthur, is known for seafood, soup, blintzes and Polish specialties; $10-$15 per person.

Other places to visit include:

■ Place Ville-Marie, Rene-Levesque Boulevard and University Street; (514) 861-9393. The I.M. Pei-designed office complex and underground city can be a shopper's delight. Miles of corridors lined with boutiques connect office buildings, theaters, a train station and hotels. The hyper-white of fluorescent lighting can wear on the nerves. A stroll outdoors along St. Catherine Street or Sherbrooke can be much more invigorating in pleasant weather.

■ Sherbrooke Street is the principal east-west street. St. Lawrence Boulevard divides the city into French east and English west sections. The Main, as it's called, is a gold mine of ethnic food stores, bakeries and restaurants.

■ Montreal Museum of Fine Arts (1379 Sherbrooke St. West; (514) 285-1600) is the oldest art museum in Canada and displays an eclectic collection of Canadian, contemporary, medieval and European paintings, sculpture, drawings and furniture.

■ Ile Sainte-Helene. Site of Expo 1967 converted to multipurpose amusement park with an aquarium, museum, historic fort, La Ronde children's wonderland and green areas; (514) 872-6093.

For more information contact Greater Montreal Convention and Tourism Bureau, 1555 Peel St., Suite 600, Montreal, Quebec H3A 1X6; (514) 873-2015.

BUSINESS DIGEST

A bit much

More than 16,000 pieces of fine china, 1,450 Baccarat crystal goblets and a serving tray large enough to hold a roast pig are among the excesses from CenTrust Bank to be sold at auction.

A preview of the luxury items that supplied an exclusive dining club set up by the bank's ex-chairman, David Paul, was held at CenTrust in Miami this week.

Regulators charge Paul with using the failed thrift as his "personal piggy bank."

The items for sale include small silver tongs for french fries and large silver tongs for ice cubes, a flat-slotted spoon for serving asparagus and a racked pan for holding asparagus.

Silver-plated grape scissors, bone holders, lemon squeezers and pate spreaders are among the odder implements for sale.

Big time crime

A congressman who has scrutinized Michael Milken's activities for years said he suspects there was more "criminal misbehavior" by the deposed junk bond king and his colleagues at the investment firm Drexel Burham Lambert Inc. than is known.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., who chairs the House Energy and Commerce Committee, said his renewed probe suggests that Milken and others committed "possibly 2,500 to 25,000 felonies" through hundreds of so-called "insider accounts."

U.S. income

Personal income edged up 0.3 percent in May for the second straight month, but personal spending was unchanged from the previous month, the government said today in another sign of consumer caution.

Consumer spending is considered a barometer of economic health since it accounts for about two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

The Commerce Department reported that incomes totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.70 trillion. The 0.3 percent gains followed three consecutive monthly advances of 0.8 percent and were the lowest since a 0.2 percent increase last September.

Consumer spending remained unchanged at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $3.66 trillion after seven straight months of gains, including 0.5 percent in April and 0.3 percent in March. But even the April and March advances were weaker than first thought. They were revised downward from 0.6 percent and 0.5 percent reported last month.

Oil Coop

Clean Gulf Associates, a cooperative formed in 1972 by oil operators in the Gulf of Mexico after a well burned for months south of Thibodaux, provides equipment to clean up Gulf oil spills.

The co-op had one of its sternest tests this month, when the Mega Borg caught fire and began spilling oil off the coast of Galveston, Texas.

Still, it earned high marks for getting its equipment to the spill site quickly. The cooperative's job is to deliver equipment on short notice.

Dried flowers mean big money

■ Midland-based Brush Across Texas is finding success making wild flowers and wild weeds into dried flowers for the floral industry.

Wild flowers and wild weeds.

Allergy sufferers blame them for causing their allergies. Farmers spend millions trying to kill them. Homeowners pull them for being eyesores among their well-kept lawns. Cities mow them down for obstructing views at stop signs.

But one Midland firm has found that there is money to be made from the misunderstood vegetation.

Tim Golson runs Brush Across Texas, a division of Dameron Manufacturing Corp. The company dries, bleaches and dyes flowers and weeds from across Texas — and the nation — for use in dried, silk and floral arrangements. And though the company has only been in operation since February, it is already earning a good reputation across the nation. In fact, Golson said, he expects it will gross $1 million

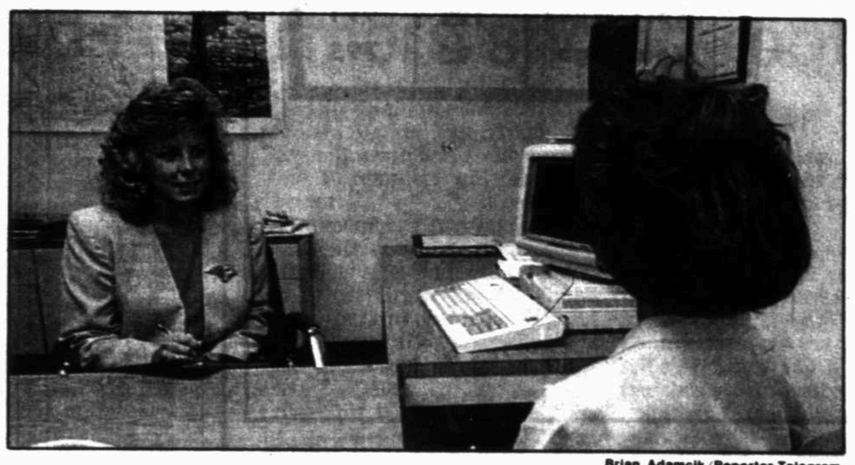
How much experience do you have? Can you work under pressure? Do you prefer working with others or working alone?

If you've had the gut-wrenching opportunity to be interviewed lately, these questions may sound familiar.

The techniques used to determine if a candidate is right for the job are a little different from those used in the past. Companies are trying harder to avoid costly "bad hires." Managers are being trained to better assess job seekers' performance prospects. Such techniques include behavorial interviewing, problem solving scenarios and stress panels.

Although most companies don't use the stress panel technique, interviewing is just that, says Roxanne Pebbley, staffing manager with Texas Instruments.

"We don't feel like it's stressful, but any applicant will tell you it is stressful."



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Pebbley says applicants are screened by telephone and asked to visit the plant if they are still available. "We try to spend as much personal time with them as possible," she says.

Pebbley noted that if they live out of town they are flown in, the interviewing process could take up to three days. "The first night we pick them up at the airport and take them to dinner. It is not intended to find out information, but to give information about what it's like to live in Midland. We want both parties to make an informed decision."

Pebbley says the second day the interviewee will have consultations with several managers and supervisors, each lasting 30 minutes to one hour. "The technique will vary depending on the interviewer, " she says.

Karen Herrmann, Associate Human Resources Representative with Marathon Oil Co., agrees that the interviewing technique will also vary depending

Interviewing tips

"Business Connection, The Art of Interviewing" featuring an Interviewing Techniques of Proven Effectiveness" is a booklet the TEC uses to educate their employees about interviewing. Some of the pointers include:

■ Deserve and gain the confidence of the person you are interviewing.

■ Be at ease and try to minimize any shyness or self-consciousness on the part of the person you are talking with.

■ Encourage the other person to give detailed answers, and help the person stay on track.

■ Carefully examine your voice and learn to control your predjudices.

■ Do not be too easily satisfied — be sure questions asked are answered completely.

■ Separate "facts" from "inference."

■ Use your interviewing time to gather information not already stated on the person's application.

■ Do not hurry or rush, carelessness is the usual consequence and mistakes promote inefficiency.

■ Do not imply the answers to your questions — most people tend to tell you what they think you want to hear.

■ Be as frank as possible — "Tell it like it is."

■ Ask challenging questions, but do it sparingly.

■ Don't leave the other person "up in the air" at the end of the interview.

Dinosaur exhibit takes Midland back in time

■ Midland — a town whose economy is fueled by fossil fuels — will learn about the source of crude when the Petroleum Museum-sponsored DinoSafari exhibit opens in Dellwood Mall Saturday.

Dinosaurs have been extinct for millions of years.

But, apparently a few survived and have made their way to Midland.

Actually, they're not real dinosaurs but a collection of eight robotic dinosaurs that are part of the DinoSafari exhibit opening in Dellwood Mall Saturday and will continue through November 25.

The exhibit is a project of the Petroleum Museum, assisted by First City Texas, Midland, Midland Reporter-Telegram, KMID-TV and the Odessa American. It is presented by Dinamation International.

"We had looked at a similar exhibit a few years ago, but it wasn't economically feasible," recalled Ed Rowland, director of the Petroleum Museum.

The museum has received a major contribution in terms of about 40,000 square feet of space for the exhibit from Mike Lewis & Associates. "We donated the space at Dellwood because we felt it was a good educational event," said Lewis. "It's good for the Dellwood tenants and the community. We hate to see the center inactive, and like to see people out there."

The eight dinosaurs in the exhibit are about half the actual size and are set among landscaping that represents their natural habitat, such as mountains and forests. Shown in various stages of young and adult life, the longest dinosaur is 30 feet long, and they range to 10 feet tall. There is also a life-size model of a Tyrannosaurus Rex head and a full-scale cut-out of a Tyrannosaurus leg, which is 10 feet tall, according to Rowland.

The exhibit also contains a great deal of educational material, including videos and material mounted on the wall. There will be games for children, and they can dig through a box of rice to find fossils. However, Rowland emphasized that this exhibit has something for everyone.

"This is for both adults and children. The subject is aimed at everyone, though children especially seem to be fascinated by dinosaurs."

He estimates between 70,000 and 120,000 will visit the exhibit, which will take approximately an hour. He went on to add that he expects schoolchildren from all over the Permian Basin to visit the exhibit before it closes in November.

The charge is $4 for adults, $3.50 for senior citizens, and $3 for children aged three to 12. Rowland says the admission will go to offset the cost of the exhibit. He acknowledged that it is a costly exhibit, with half the admission going toward renting the dinosaurs. The rest goes toward the lighting and the landscapes for the display. "The wiring alone cost $12,000" he said.

DinoSafari was created under the guidance of paleontologists Robert T. Bakker and George Callison. Callison, a professor of biology at California State University,will speak at a special presentation for exhibit sponsors Thursday.

The exhibit will open Saturday with a Ptero Ptrek, a fun run/walk from the museum to Dellwood Mall, followed by a ribbon cutting at 10 a.m.

PNM, Southern Union settle suits

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Public Service Company of New Mexico and Southern Union Co. of Dallas agreed Thursday to settle lawsuits between the two companies, including a longstanding dispute over gas purchase contracts.

The companies, in a news release, said they agreed to terminate all existing intrastate gas purchase contracts between Southern Union and PNM.

The companies instead will put into effect new gathering, operating, transportation and processing agreements that will allow Southern Union Exploration Co., a division of Southern Union, to deliver gas from its New Mexico wells to interstate pipelines.

Southern Union Co. had sued PNM over gas supply contracts in 1986, and PNM countersued in 1988, alleging the Texas company violated terms of its sale of Gas Company of New Mexico to PNM in January 1985.

The settlements call for cash payments between Southern Union and PNM to settle the litigation.

Diana Stauffer, a spokeswoman for Gas Co., said Thursday a confidentiality agreement between PNM and Southern Union prohibits the parties from discussing dollar figures in the settlements.

But, she said, "There would be no material effect on customers ... (and) stockholder earnings are not affected by the payment of settlements because reserves had already been set aside for the eventuality of a settlement."

She said the settlements involve six separate lawsuits over a variety of issues, including the gas purchase contracts and indemnity obligations arising out of the sale of natural gas-related businesses.

Texaco drills first documented horizontal well in Gulf of Mexico

NEW ORLEANS (SWN) — Texaco has successfully drilled and completed the first documented horizontal well in the Gulf of Mexico at a location about 200 miles southwest of New Orleans, it was announced today by William F. Wallace, vice president of Texaco U.S.A.'s Eastern Exploration and Producing Region.

The well, named OCS-G-0974 No. B-12, was drilled in 180 feet of water from the "B" platform in the OCS East Cameron Block 265 Field to develop shallow gas reserves from an unconsolidated sandstone formation at a depth of 1,700 feet. The platform is actually located on the northern edge of East Cameron Block 278, immediately south of Block 265. Texaco's horizontal development well covered a horizontal length of 670 feet within a vertical variation of 15 feet.

The well was tested and flowed at a daily rate of 11.0 million cubic feet of gas. Drilling was accomplished in 20 days from spud to completion at a significant cost savings when compared to a conventional high angle well. The company plans to continue testing and place the well on production once a compressor is installed.

Budget tries remote car rental booths

By John A. Bolt

DALLAS (AP) — It's almost like something from the Jetsons. You walk up to a television screen, punch a few buttons, talk with a rent-a-car representative hundreds of miles away and soon, a car key pops out from a slot and you're on your way.

The cars, however, still are earthbound, not the flying kind of the animated family of the future.

'It's an interesting balance between technology and customer service," says David Sparks, a vice president for Budget Rent a Car Corp., which is expanding a test of "remote transaction booths" nationwide.

For the last year, four of the 3-by-5-foot booths have been operating in locations around Dallas and Fort Worth. The results have led Budget, the nation's third-largest car rental company, to expand to seven cities by the end of the year. The company plans to be in 25 metropolitan areas by the end of 1991, Sparks said Wednesday.

"The (booths) allow customers to rent cars where it used to be impossible or impractical," Budget Chairman Clif Haley said.

Sparks said it costs about $100,000 to wire an area for the booths, or about $20,000 a location, significantly cheaper than the cost of establishing a manned location.

The booths can be located in office buildings, hotels, shopping malls, "any natural distribution point," Sparks said. All that's required is two telephone lines, electricity and parking for cars.

A customer sits down in the booth and picks up a telephone. A representative answers at one of Budget's existing reservation centers. The two communicate via phone and TV, with the customer holding up a valid driver's license that's verified by the representative.

"You're talking to a real person who can answer a question and can help you ... as opposed to just punching buttons," Sparks said.

After the transaction is completed, including payment via charge cards with magnetic strips, a car key is issued and the customer heads for a nearby parking lot where the cars are kept.

Cars are returned in similar fashion.

"This is a very efficient way to rent a car for us," Sparks said.

Although initially conceived as an inexpensive way to reach marginal locations, Sparks said demand has been strong enough at two of the Dallas spots to support a manned office.

"It's a great way to test an area," he said.

Sparks would not reveal how many cars had been rented via the booths, but said 42 percent of the customers had never rented from Budget, a privately owned company based in Chicago.

Neither of the top car rental companies, Hertz Corp. or Avis Inc., is considering similar marketing efforts, representatives of the companies said.

BRUSH: New company rises to top of industry

Golson is an expert on dried flowers, being in the business since he was six years old. He was reared in Novice, in Coleman County, where the only industry was a company that gathered wildflowers and weeds for processing. He recalls how he and his family would gather plants for extra money.

After working in the oil business and falling victim to its boom and bust cycles, he decided to start his own plant processing company. Unable to find financing, an acquaintance — Richard Salmon of the Texas Department of Agriculture — put him in contact with Roger Dameron, and the two became partners. Dameron persuaded Golson to relocate from Abilene to Midland, where he began setting up Brush Across Texas.

Currently the plant employs nine, most acquired through the local Private Industry Council's JTPA program. The atmosphere is relaxed and friendly, but the employees know how to pace themselves to meet a customers' deadline.

At the present time Brush Across Texas can process 15,000 lbs. a month, though Golson anticipates doubling that capacity — and increasing staff — within the next three months. He already has the foundation laid for a second bleaching facility.

The secret to Brush Across Texas' success is its bleaching process, according to Golson, who declines to reveal trade secrets. "Our bleaching quality is a step above the others," he insists. "We use a different process and use better handling." He praised Dameron for providing the research and development assistance to modernize and improve the bleaching process, saying this was an industry needing innovative processes and products.

It takes approximately a week to take a raw product from bleaching — which takes approximately three days — through drying to its being packed in a box for shipping.

The raw product is brought in — from Texas, California, Oregon or even The Netherlands — bleached, dried on the drying rack, gathered in bulk bundles that weigh a pound then to packagers who will grade the plant and package it in the size and bunches required for a specific order.

Plants such as broom bloom, wheat, teasil, and mini-gyp can be bleached white or then dyed one of nine designer colors. They can be shipped in bulk for wholesalers, and the company has just begun serving the retail — hobby or craft shop — market. Recently the company was busy filling an order from a distributor that would eventually be end up on Wal-Mart shelves.

Brush Across Texas also ships raw products overseas to companies performing similar work, and will custom bleach products.

Golson spends much time experimenting with various processes and dyes, making sure he can provide the best color or best quality dried flower he can before offering it to a customer.

Though the company has been in operation for almost five months, he sees nothing but success for Brush Across Texas, because of Dameron's backing, because it's a growing industry, and because retailers are calling for quality dried flowers.

"I see us becoming a leader in the industry," Golson said, with 200 to 250 employee, and perhaps a line of finished products — arrangements or wreaths.

Would-be farmers should root out facts first

By Worth Wren Jr.

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Before you put your nest eggs into the basket known as fruit and vegetable farming, you ought to think backward, say producers who sell at the Fort Worth Area Farmers Market.

"If you suddenly wake up one morning dreaming about how marvelous it would be to retire to some idyllic little meadow somewhere and grow peaches, first think about this: 'What am I going to do with 4,000 boxes of peaches?' " cautions farmer Hugh Simmons, 61, who has purchased the retirement dream with 2,000 peach trees near Bowie, northwest of Fort Worth.

Or in other words, a marketing plan should come before the egg, cucumber, peach, tomato or whatever.

Simmons and more than 80 other growers in the region have resolved their chicken-or-the-egg marketing questions by moving the bulk of their fresh produce through the Fort Worth Area Farmers Market Association.

The members' first market is in its seventh annual summer season with daily sales under the Henderson Street Bridge in the Tandy Center parking lot. Their second and newest market is scheduled to open this month in Addison, just north of Dallas.

The Fort Worth market is tallying seasonal sales ranging from $400,000 to $600,000 from late spring into the fall, they say.

But Fort Worth sales this year should top $600,000 because the region is harvesting its biggest peach crop in at least five years, says John Doak, a Bowie-area peach and vegetable grower, association founder and a past president.

"About the only thing the local farmer has going for him or her is freshness," Simmons says. "Our production costs are higher that the nation's major production regions."

Terry and Carolyn Western, third-year sellers of vegetables on the Fort Worth market, view 30 to 50 acres of their 75-acre Wise County farm as the pathway to self-sufficiency and a way of life that beats urban alternatives.

The Westerns, parents of four children ages 3 to 13, say they planned carefully for their gradual entry into the full-time commercial venture on inherited land. His skills in welding, carpentry, mechanics and farming have been keys to their success while using mostly 20-year-old equipment.

Nonetheless, formulating the best strategy to boost income "drives you nuts," Terry says at their home near Chico.

"If the Fort Worth market didn't exist, we probably wouldn't be doing this," he says.

They moved to the farm in 1981. Carolyn and the children raised, picked and sold their first vegetables in 1986.

The Westerns farm in the classic manner. They grow and sell vegetables, tomatoes and melons and preserve and can them for their own use. They raise a calf and-or pig for meat, chickens for eggs, bees for honey and goats for milk and cheese. They start most of their crops from their own farm's seed in a hothouse.

After starting with a large garden, they have expanded to close to 25 acres. They're aiming at 50.

"It's not something you can learn in a book," says Terry. "You don't just quit your job and go farm."

The couple estimates that they earn about 75 percent of their livelihood from sales of fresh produce and 25 percent from Terry's woodcraft creations and occasional small carpentry jobs.

Carolyn forecasts the farm's 25 to 30 best acres will gross at least $25,000 annually, with a potential of $50,000 riding on the tomato crop and price levels.

Without the Fort Worth market, where he will sell vegetables, tomatoes and melons this summer, Johnny Jordan's abrupt career change from beer to veggies might not have been thinkable.

And without his wife of seven years, Cindy, an experienced greenhouse worker, gardener and willing farm partner, it wouldn't have been possible.

"It's scary," says Jordan, 30. "There are a lot of nights I wake up in a cold sweat. ... Cindy helps a lot."

INTERVIEW: Techniques vary depending on position on the type of position open. An entry level engineer would usually be found through a college recruiter. A clerical ad in the paper would locate a secretary. Herrmann noted that the most important information about an applicant can be obtained through the campus visit.

"We look at grades, a college transcript, job experience, professional affiliations, but we try to get a picture of the candidate as a whole," she says.

Herrmann notes that grades and experience are more important than appearance. "It's important to look your best, but most at this level know that. An entry level engineer, for example, will talk to several supervisors and engineers from four to six hours," Herrmann says.

Credit reports are also being used as a screening tool, many times without the applicant's knowledge says a recent Wall Street Journal article.

Many banks and retailers that routinely consult credit reports before granting credit lines or loans have long used credit reports to screen would-be tellers and cashiers. But citing rising internal theft and concern about their liability for worker wrongdoing, a broader range of companies are using the reports to screen for all types of positions.

Employers using the reports, however contend that knowing how an applicant handles bills, loans and other financial obligations helps predict whether he or she is likely to steal, sell company secrets or otherwise act irresponsibly.

Melanie Bennett, vice president and cashier, Midland American Bank, says: "We do check credit history and it says so on the application. An applicant has to have stable credit to work in a bank. They must be above reproach and handle their finances well or they can't be expected to handle other peoples' money. But the credit search happens at the last stage of the interview," Bennett says.

She noted that neatness in appearance, a personable attitude and above all no gum chewing are important factors that every applicant should abide by when interviewing.

"I don't think people know how important appearance is. I've had people come for an interview in boots and jeans with their hair messed up. This is a public position," Bennett says. "I like people to come in personally rather than send a resume, it shows me that they have an interest in the job and the bank," she says.

Meris Kidd, Texas Employment Commission (TEC) manager of the Midland office says every applicant must take a merit test to qualify for an interview. "The top ten applicants from the test are then chosen to be interviewed. Everyone I interview is qualified for the job or I wouldn't be interviewing them," Kidd says.

She notes that her interviewing technique consists of asking problem solving scenario questions such as "Tell me your experiences in handling a hostile situation? Have you ever had difficulties getting along with others?"

Kidd notes that these kinds of questions give an interviewer insightful and important information from which they are able to asertain whether or not a person is right for a particular job.

So if you're gearing up for that all important interview remember that the right questions or answers could mean finding an employee that fits the position or a job that's right for you.

Are home equity loans a threat?

By Scott Burns

Burns

WASHINGTON. One of the Recurrent-"DREAM BECOMES NIGHTMARE" stories involves home equity loans — lines of credit obtained by hocking your house. Available in every state but Texas and the subject of intense marketing competition, the worry is that people will borrow their lifetime equity and blow it on fancy cars and trips to Las Vegas.

As soon as an economic slowdown comes along, the worry goes, there will be a deepening spiral of sinking home prices as the big spender/borrowers are foreclosed and dumped in the streets.

Glenn Canner disagrees.

The director of micro-consumer projects at the Board of Governors for the Federal Reserve System, Dr. Canner oversees consumer surveys and other research into our collective financial habits. That research tells a very different story. Listen:

"Let's start with the premise that Americans have had access to the equity in their homes for a long time: — you can sell your home and rent; — you can get a traditional second mortgage; — you can refinance.

"So consumers HAVE had ways to unlock their equity. The dramatic growth of credit is more recent and relates to technology changes. The flexibility of these loans has been improved.

"The growth trend accelerated just about the time the tax laws changed (in 1986). Consumers found home equity loans were tax deductible ways to consolidate consumer debt.

"Many people also found them necessary for certain expenditures... such as college tuition expenses. The end result is that many people found home equity loans were a good way to go.

"And remember, all this occurred after a period of good increases in (home) equity. A lot of homeowners had the equity built up.

"Another thing is the tremendous competition among financial institutions which has reduced closing costs, interest rates, etc.

"We did a series of surveys in '87 and '88 and we found that as many as 40 percent of the account holders didn't have an outstanding balance. People who borrow their money for a traditional second mortgage use the money right away. That isn't how people use lines of credit. Home equity credit lines are taken in anticipation of future needs...

"The typical user is fairly well heeled.

"For instance, the average home equity loan user had $139,000 in equity compared to the $83,000 of the traditional second mortgage user. The loan user also had more income: and average of $56,000 compared to $49,000 for the traditional second mortgage borrower.

"In both cases the typical person has a higher income and home equity than the non-borrower. One message I get from this is that the user is NOT a person in dire straits.

"There is a very strong regional aspect to the use of home equity credit lines. The Northeast is the most active, the Southwest the least. About 85 percent of all the lending comes from commercial banks and 11 percent from credit unions. Finance companies do very little (in home equity credit lines) although about one-third of all traditional second mortgages are done by finance companies like Household Finance, etc."

"The treatment of the unused credit line is favorable. Banks don't have to reserve for the unused portion (as they do for commercial loans).

"There has been substantial growth since '85-'86. It was slightly slower last year and this year. I can't speculate on whether there are tighter credit requirements but I suspect it is change in demand — there doesn't appear to be a diminished interest on the part of lenders. The competition here in Washington, for instance, is fierce. Most borrowers have owned their homes for a while, have secure employment, and good incomes."

From a banker's point of view, home equity borrowers have good collateral and lots of it. They also have more income to support the interest payments. Indeed, with a median outstanding loan balance of $10,000 and a median home equity of $83,000, it isn't difficult to see that most home equity credit lines are better risks than the typical new homeowner FIRST mortgage loan with a 10 or 20 percent down payment.

What's it all mean?

Simply this. While homeowner debt as a percent of home value has risen in recent years, visions of a Yuppie Apocalypse brought on by home equity loans are improbable.

Scott Burns' column, syndicated by King Features, is a new feature of the Reporter-Telegram business pages and appears every Thursday and Sunday.

Taiwanese get taste of hot dog business

By Katherine Scobey

CHICAGO (AP) — If you want to learn, consult an expert. So three Taiwanese entrepreneurs came to the Windy City to study the art of making the classic, Chicago-style hot dog.

"We think that the era of hot dog is now," said Ko Sheng Yaw, the 32-year-old president of Chicago Foods Co. Ltd. in Taipei.

After five days behind the counter at Wolfy's, a hot-dog joint on the North Side, Ko and his two associates will take their new skills home Wednesday with the plan to open five or six hot-dog outlets by year's end.

Western fast food is well established in Taiwan; McDonald's, Wendy's, Hardees, Burger King and Pizza Hut all have operations there, according to Ko.

But to Taiwanese, a hot dog is a pork or chicken sausage, normally without condiments or bun.

"What I've got to do is introduce the way the real hot dog is to my country fellows," Ko said.

But Ko said he'll leave behind the bright green relish Chicagoans favor.

To Taiwanese, he said, the color is "too vivid to be true."

The men planned to shop for souvenirs to decorate their restaurants — Chicago Bears paraphernalia, pictures of the Sears Tower — "to make it Chicago-connected," Ko said.

To steep themselves in American marketing and fast-food service, the men visited supermarkets and hot-dog stands, then spent five days working for 65-year-old Mickey Becker, who's run Wolfy's for 24 years.

In white plastic aprons and white paper chef's hats, Ko, his sales manager and deputy manager took their places behind the stainless-steel counter.

"We learn how to make the best quality for the customer," said the sales manager, Yang Yuncheng, 31, who manned the french-fry vats at lunch hour Tuesday. He has nearly mastered the wrist action necessary to flip the fries in the basket to check for doneness.

At about noon, a school group of about 150 teen-agers jammed the restaurant. And the orders started coming.

"This is real rush hour," said Ko, who has picked up the jargon, if not the precise syntax, of American English.

Ko told Chao Ming, his deputy manager, to put more hamburger buns in the toaster, then pulled a stack of cheese slices from the refrigerator. Yang salted french fries and scooped them into cardboard containers.

"Two tomatoes, two tomatoes," reminded Rita Rosenthal, a 13-year Wolfy's veteran, when Ko — by now splattered with ketchup and mustard — put just one tomato slice on a hot dog.

Ko also is vice president of Vienna Enterprise, which last year contracted with the Chicago-based Vienna Sausage Manufacturing Co. to sell Vienna Beef hot dogs in Taiwan.

By Peggy Fikac

AUSTIN (AP) — College students imitate pizza dough tossing with towels on Austin roadsides to spin up business for HWY Pizza, a company that takes carry-out to new heights of convenience.

For less than $5, motorists can buy a ready-to-bake pizza without ever leaving their cars.

Tired of the health club business, Kerry Wood defected to the other side of the battle of the bulging waistline and found out it more fun to push pizzas than pump iron.

"It's the nicest thing that's ever happened to me," said Wood, 37, who in late 1988 latched on to the idea of selling commercial-style, ready-to-bake pizzas from refrigerated trailers in parking lots near busy thoroughfares.

About 110,000 pizzas later, Wood has plans for a state and national franchise operation and undiminished enthusiasm for HWY Pizza.

"I just like the fact that we get calls every day, from customers saying how much they appreciate the value and the product itself," Wood said.

The $4.95 basic pizza kit includes a 14-inch crust in an oven-ready, disposable pan, tomato sauce and cheese. Each extra ingredient — pepperoni, black and green olives, jalapenos, mushrooms, canadian bacon, hamburger and Italian sausage — is 50 cents.

One pizza, Wood says, will "feed a husband, wife and two small children."

University of Texas graduate students studied HWY Pizza as a marketing project, but Wood said he already had a pretty good idea about the people who buy many of his pizzas — working women between the ages of 24 and 49, with children.

"I think we knew this prior to the study that it was real attractive to working mothers because of the convenience of picking it up, and the fact that they're doing it at home and the children like to help make it," Wood said.

"It's a lot of fun for them to make it. It becomes their dinner, and a way to help mom out," he said.

The biggest problem Wood said he's faced is getting people to try his pizza. For example, he cites difficulties he went through with the towels his vendors throw in the air like pizza dough to attract customers.

The towel tossers often drop them on the pavement. To Wood's dismay, some people initially thought the towels really were dough and found the spectacle unappetizing.

"They thought we were making them (pizzas) out on the street," he said.

Wood solved the mistaken identity problem by bordering the towels in red, but convincing people to try HWY Pizza still can be a challenge, he said.

"They have a tendency to think we might be making them in the back of our garage instead of in a health-approved commissary under the conditions that we have," Wood said. "We make them fresh every day, handmade. It's the freshest product that you can sell to the public."

Once people give the pizza a chance, they come back, he said, estimating that the 110,000 pizzas sold since late 1988 have been bought by 9,000 to 10,000 people.

His 11 pizza carts are open from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. seven days a week, Wood said, and a 12th cart will be added in July.

Today's teens are surging as consumers

By Mariann Caprino

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Jay Leno tells a joke about how a parent punished her teen-ager by sending him to his room.

Big mistake. The kid should have been sent to the parent's room, a place devoid of the accouterments of youth, like CD boom boxes or high-tech sneakers.

Leno delivers the punchline in a TV commercial for tortilla chips, but as an increasing number of businesses are discovering, today's teens are in a position to buy far more than snack foods. Controlling more cash than the thirtysomething set can imagine, many adolescents are downright affluent, and they're playing a part in big-ticket purchases like never before.

"They're not buying just fast food, soft drinks and dime-store makeup anymore," said Peter Zollo, who heads Teenage Research Unlimited in suburban Chicago. They are "significantly more confident in their ability to buy big-ticket items than they were just one year ago," he said.

Indeed, teen car ownership is up nearly 13 percent for new vehicles and 9 percent for used cars when compared with 1989 levels, according to Zollo's survey of more than 2,000 people between the ages of 12 and 19.

Nearly half of all teens own their own television sets, compared with just 29 percent a decade ago, and about 20 percent own video cassette recorders, the New York market research firm Rand Youth Poll found.

Gone are the days of $5-a-week allowances. Teens spent $55.9 billion last year just on their day-to-day needs, like food, entertainment and clothing, up from $25.3 billion in 1975, Rand studies said.

Michelle Moiger, a 16-year-old from New York's Long Island, said most of her allowance and babysitting money goes toward "makeup and hairspray."

But teens also are buying some of the family groceries — $31.7 billion worth last year alone, according to Rand — all while making critical brand decisions.

That hasn't gone unnoticed by corporate America. Weight Watchers and Lean Cuisine, for instance, have begun advertising their frozen entrees in youth magazines in the hopes that teen-agers will pick up a box or two while shopping for the family.

"We know teen spending is becoming incredibly more important," said Jane Fitzgibbon, senior vice president at the advertising agency Ogilvy & Mather's Trend-Sights division.

Some experts speculate that two-earner parents suffering guilt pangs over long hours at work tend to be more generous when it comes to giving their teens money. Others say that because couples are having fewer children, there's simply more money to go around.

But when it comes to earning power, demographics and economics have combined quite favorably for today's teens. For one thing, there are fewer teens out there, which means more jobs available.

The number of Americans between the ages of 13 and 19 has fallen 15.5 percent since 1980, to 22.76 million, according to Rand Youth Poll. Although the teen population is expected to be begin increasing in 1992, no substantial upturn will take hold until the year 2000.

Jamie Feno, 14, shops for compact discs at a record store in New York. Demographics and economics have combined quite favorably for today's teens, dramatically increasing their ability to earn money, and spend it.

"The changeover from a manufacturing to a service economy requires just the type of employee the teen-ager is," said Rand President Lester Rand. "And some (teens) do get premium pay because in many suburban areas there is a shortage of this type of personnel."

It is not unheard of for a high school student to bring in anywhere from $100 to $300 a week for part-time work, Rand said.

Beyond their own spending, teens have an incalculable ability to influence the purchases of their parents.

Zollo's survey said 57 percent of teens influenced the purchase of a personal computer this year, 69 percent had input when it came to making family vacation plans, 49 percent had a say in which car their families bought, and 43 percent helped parents pick out a TV.

Not only do young people influence family purchases, but they embrace the latest technological advances.

Postal Service planning fax service expansion

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — After several months of experiments in the Northeast, the U.S. Postal Service announced Tuesday that it was expanding its fax-machine experiment nationwide.

Postmaster General Anthony M. Frank said credit card-operated FaxMail machines have been installed in 263 post office lobbies for a one-year test of whether there is enough demand for them to be installed in even more postal facilities.

"If it's a success, there will be many multiples more than the 263," Frank said. "If it isn't there won't be any."

Frank said customer reactions were encouraging after machines were installed in 54 northeastern post offices last fall.

Customers at the 263 post offices will be given free use of FaxMail during the week of June 25 to July 1, said Edd Helms, president of Hotelecopy, Inc. His Miami-based firm supplied the machines, which use the MCI telephone network.

The FaxMail service is aimed at individuals and small businesses that do not own a fax machine, and at business travelers who wish to send or receive documents on the road.

The charge is $8.50 for the first three minutes of sending or receiving time and $1.50 for each additional minute.

Mica Bergman oversees the first attempt at floating a few hundred Gerber ducks in the Mabee Memorial Swim Center. Some 10,000 ducks will race July 4 in the Junior League of Midland's first duck races.

JUST DUCKY

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Duck-race fever is striking non-profit agencies hunting for a new blind to an old game.

"It was so crazy; it would work," says Rick Burgess, director of promotions for Loyola University, Shreveport, La. The duck race staged by the university was considered "one of the most successful special events that the city has ever had. We kind of became the envy of all non-profits because of all the promotions we got — the over 100,000 in promotion that we received. Free."

Economics being what they are in West Texas these days, area non-profits are searching for new ways to raise money.

Members of the Junior League of Midland were intrigued by the duck racing idea, but Midland had no river in which to stage the race.

The organization came up with an alternative — a swimming pool. Thus, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. July 4, the Mabee Memorial Swim Center, complete with electric fans, becomes the site of Midland's first duck race. The event, "Fab-DUCK-ulous Family Fun Fair," includes activities common to area residents as well as the not-so-common.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals need not be alert. Duck races are run with lightweight decoys, not real McCoys.

Participants adopt a rubber duckie for $5. The participant's name and number is entered into a computer. The same number has been scanned onto the duck's bottom.

"That's how we keep track of all those thousands of ducks and people's names," Burgess says. "When the race day comes, all ducks are dumped out of a dumpster on a crane into a river. Then they float down the river until they come into a chute. The first six popped out of the chute are the winners."

Approximately 45,000 fans watched Shreveport's first duck race, which had over 26,000 ducks in it.

The Mabee Center will not hold quite that many fans.

Burgess leased ducks from the Great American Duck Races, based in Phoenix, Ariz. Currently, the GADR has more than 175,000 in stock. None were available for rental when Midland's Junior League was in need.

"We had to purchase our 10,000 ducks from the Gerber Company," says Mary Blake, chairman of publicity for the event. "They arrived by freight line and fill a quarter of a huge warehouse. It's amazing."

Acquiring 10,000 ducks, even small Gerber ducks, creates its own problems.

"What we are trying to figure out is how we are going to transport 10,000 ducks from the Junior League headquarters warehouse over to the City of Midland Swim Center. Fortunately, the majority of Junior League members do drive the state car of Texas — a suburban."

The advantage of racing inside is the opportunity to run heats within each division.

"When they purchase a ticket, they have the opportunity to have the duck participate in an adult race, a youth race or a child's race," Mrs. Blake says. "The event will feature separate heats for corporations who will help sponsor the day."

Prizes will be awarded in each category.

The proceeds from the event go to the "Building for a Better Midland" Capital Campaign for Headquarters Expansion of the Junior League of Midland, Inc. The Junior League is working toward meeting a matching grant from the J.E. & L.E. Mabee Foundation, Inc.

"The money that we are raising right now is going to the expansion of our headquarters," Mrs. Blake says. "The expansion will then become available for the community and individuals to use."

Junior League is involved in 14 community service projects including Bedside Buddies, volunteers who visit hospital patients; Stand Tall, a drug awareness program in the third and fifth grades; Kids On the Block, a puppet program for kids which deals with special concerns; The Dental Clinic, volunteer dentists give their time with the assistance of junior league members; Perinatal Clinic, instructions to young mothers; and serving as docents for the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum, the Museum of the Southwest and the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

In addition to the duck races at the Mabee Memorial Swim Center and the family fair at nearby Windlands Park, the event includes the 28th annual July 4th Children's Sidewalk Parade, sponsored by the Daughters of the American Revolution, Col. Theunis Dey Chapter. Registration is at 9 a.m. The parade begins at 10 a.m.

Duck racing didn't originate in the United States.

"The concept of the duck race originated in Ireland in the early 1900s. Eric Schechter made it into a fund raising formula."

The first rubber duck races staged by the GADR in the United States was held in May of 1988. In two years, the organization has raised more than $100,000 in Phoenix, Ms. Brown says. She adds that now GADR has made inroads into more than 100 U.S. markets.

"We've had a few that didn't make the money, but overall they really do come out above," Ms. Brown says. "Our lease fee on a duck is 45 cents. The average of adopting a duck is about $5 so they really make some money on that. The only fee they are paying us is the leasing fee so it's really a good deal.

"We give them a 400 page manual which gives them guidelines on what has worked in the past. They can go ahead and follow those guidelines, or they can be more creative and come up with something else."

In addition, the organization offers the leasing nonprofit a basic computer program to use at no charge and holds a national conference in January for all of the racers. A more sophisticated computer program for the race can be purchased at $300.

"Our first choice was to rent ducks from the Great American Duck Company," Mrs. Blake says. "It costs more to buy ducks than to rent them."

Burgess, who leased his ducks from GMDR, recalls when he first read about duck racing.

"I am the development director. I'm supposed to come up with these ideas. My board looked at me as if I was crazy, but they smiled afterwards and said, 'Yeah, it will work. Let's try it.'"

When Mrs. Blake first heard the idea, she laughed.

"I thought it was silly," Mrs. Blake says. "And then the figures were brought out in the open, and I thought it was too good to be true. This event has the least amount of effort with the greatest amount of return, and the whole city gets to have fun doing it."

Gallery hosting 7th show

The show opens June 30 with a public reception from 7 to 10 p.m. The show runs through Aug. 2.

"The idea of multiple realities — inner perceptions versus outer surfaces, human potential versus human experience — is the thematic core of this show," says a release from Gallery 1114.

"Alpine artist Charles Bell's drawing, paintings and paper pieces mirror his Big Bend world as he sees it and feels it," the release says.

Buckley, a Midland photographer, says of his work, "A person's life can be made up of multitude of realities. I have attempted to combine my different visions."

Clifford, who has just completed his master's work at Texas Tech University, has mixed media serigraphs and collographs in the show. These works are, he says, "Childlike images derived from storybooks, nightmares and experiences within my adult life."

Phillips says his pieces, like many contemporary institutions, often express the worst of human nature.

Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., is an artist supported center for contemporary art. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

'Dick Tracy' was 'most wanted'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — A weekend raid by "Dick Tracy" netted an estimated $22.6 million in box office receipts, including $1.2 million in sales for T-shirts that served as tickets at midnight openings.

The total led all other movies for the weekend but was lower than the early receipts of some recent blockbusters. Disney stock fell on the news.

The "Tracy" debut put the cuffs on Warner Bros.' "Gremlins 2: The New Batch," which finished fourth with $9.8 million for its first weekend.

In second place behind "Tracy" was "Another 48 HRS." with $11.1 million, followed by "Total Recall" with $10.2 million, according to estimates this morning from Exhibitor Relations Co.

In fifth place was "Back to the Future III," with $5 million in ticket sales.

The debut weekend box-office championship remains with another comic-book crime fighter, "Batman," which cleaned up $40.5 million for Warner Bros. on a first weekend last summer.

"Dick Tracy" also failed to top the debut earnings of Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Total Recall," which earned $25 million in its opening earlier this month.

Investors regarded the "Tracy" results, as well as those for "Gremlins," as disappointing.

Common stock in the Walt Disney Co., bid up last week on the New York Stock Exchange on favorable reviews, fell by $3.37½ per share in midday trading today to $128.37½. Time Warner Inc. stock fell by $1.12½ to $105.37½ per share.

But Dick Cook, president of Disney's Buena Vista Pictures Distribution, said he believes "Dick Tracy" has staying power.

"It's never where you start, it's where you end," Cook said on Sunday.

"The way it's been reviewed, and the favorable way it has been received — it is going to do extraordinarily well," Cook said in a telephone interview Sunday. "And there's a lot of summer left."

And there are a lot of movies yet to be released too, including Tom Cruise in "Days of Thunder" and sequels to "RoboCop" and "Die Hard."

Nevertheless, Cook said "Dick Tracy" was a record opening for Disney and had all the signs of a summer winner. The movie, directed by its star, Warren Beatty, features Madonna and a thieves' den of other big-name actors. Reviews were mostly favorable.

Cook estimated a weekend box-office of between $22 million and $23 million and said "Dick Tracy" would get "double the amount of business that any other movie will do this weekend."

An industry observer who spoke on condition of anonymity said the opening was "not great — somewhere in between. ... It's not a bad opening."

Both noted "Dick Tracy" was opening against "Total Recall," "Back to the Future III" and "Another 48 HRS."

"Dick Tracy" opened at 2,223 theaters around the nation with a new Roger Rabbit cartoon, "Rollercoaster Rabbit." Admission for midnight Thursday openings was a T-shirt, sold by theaters for as much as $20 apiece.

Disney said it will include the price of the T-shirt in its box-office gross, despite protests from others in the movie industry that it would inflate the film's numbers.

"It is part of the box office, the ticket to the event," said Cook. "It didn't amount to that much."

One source placed the T-shirt boost at $1.2 million to $1.5 million.

Museum of Southwest seeks teen volunteers

Teens, ages 13 through 18 are invited to join for a summer of fun assisting with activities at the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum.

Participation in leading group tours, docenting an exhibition, helping with class activities and birthday parties are a few of the projects MTV will be involved with.

The group is now planning a community kite competition to be held in August and would like other teens to join them.

Wendy Stewart is MTV chairman and advisors are: Museum staffers Cynthia Corley, educator; Lisa Bedford Davis, education assistant; and David LeMaster, master-in residence.

"Teens will benefit", Ms. Corley says, "by their introduction to Midland's volunteer spirit of community service as they work in the Museum's public and educational programs. Volunteer work is excellent to list on a college or job application," she added. "Also, career choices toward teaching, working with children, or museum work could be influenced by observance of the children and of the behind the scenes work at the museum," she continued.

"Hit a Home Run for the Homebound," a celebrity charity softball game, will be held at 4:45 p.m. today at Angels Stadium.

The game will feature community leaders and celebrities from both Midland and Odessa in an exhibition softball game prior to the Angels' game against El Paso. The mayors of Midland and Odessa will serve as coaches for their respective teams. Corporate sponsors will have a team player and cheerleader who will present the company cheer.

A special drawing during the game will feature specialty items donated by area businesses. Surprises for both players and the audience will make this a fun family affair.

Proceeds from the event will be used to supply the basic needs of the senior citizens of Midland and Odessa. This includes the Meals on Wheels program, the Senior Centers and the Visiting Nurses program for the indigent.

Tickets are $3 per person. The price of the ticket includes admission to the charity baseball game plus the Angels vs. El Paso game immediately following.

The money collected for tickets purchased prior to the event will go to the community and senior services in the funding of these programs.

Cowabunga! Simpsons rated No. 3

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bart Simpson isn't even a real person, but he made television history this week.

"The Simpsons" — Bart's grumpy, animated family — was the No. 3 show on television, according to ratings released Tuesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co. The equally grumpy but unanimated family of "Married...With Children" was No. 4.

The proud parnts of both shows at Fox Broadcasting Co. were jubilant. "We're extremely excited about this," said Fox spokesman Michael Peikoff.

They should be. The results of the latest bout in the network ratings fight marks the first time that 3-year-old Fox has broken into Nielsen's top five.

It helps that the Big Three networks are knee-deep in reruns. It also helps that 10-year-old Bart Simpson's spiky head is on the cover of Rolling Stone magazine, thousands of T-shirts and the pages of national news magazines.

But Fox's victory was not sweeping. In the overall ratings, NBC was still the No. 1 network, receiving an average rating of 10.4. CBS was second with 9.7 and ABC was last with 9.3. Each ratings point represents 921,000 households.

In a top 10 where only one show — "The Seinfeld Chronicles" on NBC — was not a repeat, ABC's "Roseanne" was the top-rated program. The wisecracking bar crowd of NBC's "Cheers" was No. 2.

NBC's "The Cosby Show," which will face off against "The Simpsons" in the fall season, was pushed to fifth place. The network's "A Different World" and "Empty Nest" tied for the No. 6 spot. "Coach," on ABC, finished eighth.

"The Seinfeld Chronicles," NBC's "The Golden Girls" and "Designing Women" on CBS landed in a three-way tie for ninth place.

Games four and five of the National Basketball Association championship finals between the Detroit Pistons and the Portland Trailblazers ranked 13th and 14th, respectively, for CBS.

Here are the top 10 shows, their network and rating:

"Roseanne," ABC, 16.8; "Cheers," NBC, 16.7; "The Simpsons," Fox, 14.7; "Married...With Children," Fox, 14.5; "The Cosby Show," NBC, 14.2; "A Different World" and "Empty Nest," tied, NBC, 14; "Coach," ABC, 13.8; "Designing Women," CBS, "The Golden Girls," NBC, "The Seinfeld Chronicles," NBC, tied, 13.6.

There was no news in the network news ratings winner. ABC remained No. 1 by a wide margin, earning a 9.2 average. CBS ranked second with 7.8 and NBC was third with 7.5.

Heron works now hanging

Comprising 16 of Heron's original works in the mediums of pencil, watercolor and oil, this exhibit focusses on the military and ranching heritage of the West.

The works, "Rain Clouds, A Welcome Sight" and "Raid on Eagle Springs Run" will be on display provoking the imagination of visitors. Heron's work is noted for its dedication to historical accuracy in the time frame, geographical location and in the case of the military, accuracy in uniforms and accoutrements.

Born in Admore, Oklahoma, Heron migrated to West Texas in 1949 and settled in Odessa in 1967. Heron attended the Art Students' League in New York and has studied under water colorist Mario Cooper of New York and Bud Biggs of Dallas.

In addition to these works on display, two additional works of Herons' can be seen on permanent display in the museum's galleries. They include the portraits of Presidents Lyndon Johnson and Gerald Ford.

The Presidential Museum, located at 622 N. Lee, Odessa, is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Admission to the museum is free.

Shelly Duvall's changing role now casts hers as arts mogul

By Jay Sharbutt
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Once upon a time in Hollywood, an actress who wears quirky clothes went to a cable mogul. She carried two bags full of illustrated fairy tales and said she wanted to turn them into shows.

Why, sure, the mogul said. And this is no fairy tale.

It's how Shelley Duvall became a mogul herself when, fresh from playing Olive Oyl in the movie "Popeye," she got the OK in 1980 to produce "Faerie Tale Theater" for the Showtime cable channel.

A friend had warned her the major networks would be wasted time, she says, "so I walked into Showtime and the head of the company was laughing at me with my two cloth knitting bags full of books."

"But they gave me an order for three shows right off the bat," she said. "And thank goodness they had the courage to put their faith in Olive Oyl as the producer. Otherwise, I wouldn't have gotten here."

Duvall, who played Rapunzel in one "Faerie Tale," since has produced two other Showtime series, "Tall Tales & Legends" and "Nightmare Classics," and a cable remake last year of "Dinner at Eight."

Her latest effort, running on the Disney Channel, is a gently bent music special called "Mother Goose Rock 'N Rhyme." Like "Faerie Tale Theater," it also can be bought or rented in video stores.

As is the Duvall custom, the special does things differently. Its childhood-tale characters are played by a variety of performers you wouldn't normally see in your basic Mother Goose show — like ZZ Top, Debbie Harry, Little Richard and the ever-popular Pia Zadora.

Duvall, who also appears as Little Bo Peep, started that which led to her producing career while playing Olive Oyl to Robin Williams' Popeye in "Popeye," one of seven Robert Altman films she's done.

The film musical was filmed on the tiny island of Malta, and "since I'd been told we were going to be there a while, I figured I'd better bring a book," she says. "So I brought along a book of Grimm's fairy tales.

"I was reading 'The Frog Prince' one day, and thought, 'Oh, God, wouldn't Robin make a hilarious frog?' "

He wound up merrily croaking away in the first "Fairie Tale," directed by former Monty Python inmate Eric Idle. She enlisted similar top-name folk in subsequent efforts, appealing to their desire to do the offbeat.

This led to such pairings as Elizabeth McGovern and Vanessa Redgrave in "Snow White," Liza Minnelli and Tom Conti in "The Princess and the Pea," and, by golly, Ricky Schroder and Joan Collins in "Hansel and Gretel."

Duvall, now 40, was born in Houston, and her speech still retains a trace of Lone Star twang. She has continued acting in films, but not much. Her last work, in 1987, was in the Steve Martin comedy, "Roxanne."

Duvall the actress wants to emote more. But Duvall the producer still has more things to produce, among them a new version of Jack London's "Call of the Wild" for Ted Turner's new TNT cable network.

She also would like to tackle the Greek myths, which you don't hardly see on TV these days.

There also is a wild and crazy dream involving the late Jay Ward's "Rocky and Bullwinkle" and "Fractured Fairy Tales," those hip, literate and bad-pun cartoon series of TV's yesteryear.

She loves them, she says, always did, and "I would like to go back and get the same group that made them together again, and have them make some more."

LABOR FRONT: NBC, which had said it would implement a four-year "final" contract offer made in March to a major technicians' union at NBC, won't put the contract into effect now. In return, officials of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians will submit a recently modified NBC offer to its 2,373 members at NBC. They previously rejected NBC's first offer.

1990's Fort Griffin Fandangle performances begin Thursday

ALBANY— Tickets are currently on sale for the 1990 version of the Fort Griffin Fandangle set for performances Thursday through Saturday at the Prairie Theater, located just northwest of the Albany city limits.

Strains of calliope music, Indians adorned with war paint, cowboys and their horses and covered wagons loaded down with pioneers will soon be filling the theater as over 250 local residents prepare to celebrate their rich heritage.

Ticket sales for the annual outdoor show, which depicts the settling of the Clear Fork of the Brazos area through music, dance and narration, have been brisk so far, according to Fandangle Association Secretary Louann George. Ticket prices range from $3 to $10, depending on seat location.

Tickets can be purchased in advance through the Fandangle office in Albany. Phone orders can be placed by calling (915) 762-3642 or 762-3930. Ticket orders can be mailed to the Fandangle, Box 155, Albany, Texas 76430.

MasterCard, Visa and Discover cards are accepted for phone orders, or a check can be sent to the office. Tickets are not actually reserved until payment is received. Tickets, if available, can also be purchased at the gate on performance nights, but advance reservations are recommended.

The Fandangle continues to retell and keep alive the history of the settling of the Clear Fork area with old favorites and crowd pleasers.

Albany's outdoor pageant, which celebrated its 50th anniversary in 1988, was created in 1938 by local playwright Robert Nail as a senior class play. The production grew to include the entire community the following year and has been held almost on an annual basis since its inception.

The gates at the Prairie Theater open at 7 p.m. each performance night and visitors are welcome to come early and enjoy the calliope concert preceding the show. The outdoor musical will begin at dusk, approximately 8:30 p.m.

One of the highlights of the summer season, the Fandangle Parade, is set for Thursday, beginning at 6 p.m. in downtown Albany. The parade will include Fandangle performers in costume, horsemen, covered wagons, antique cars, floats depicting scenes from the show and Fandangle's replicas of the Butterfield Overland stagecoach and the Texas Central train, as well as the steam-powered calliope.

A special attraction at the parade this year will be Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams as parade marshall. Miss Texas will be present to help judge the parade.

PORTALES — This year for the first time, the Peanut Valley Festival of Portales is sponsoring a juried art exhibition.

Work will be juried for exhibition and cash prizes will be awarded to winners selected from the exhibition. Prizes will be awarded Oct. 19 and jurying will be done by members of the Eastern New Mexico Art Department.

Slides are due by Aug. 31, accompanied by a $5 jurying fee and a stamped self-addressed envelope. Those selected for exhibition will be notified by Sept. 20. Work selected must be delivered by Oct. 15.

The exhibition opens Friday, Oct. 19 and will show in conjunction with the 17th Annual Peanut Valley Fesitval. The festival features various homemade arts and crafts, food booths, peanut olympics and a wide variety of entertainment.

Send slides or requests for information to the following: Judy B. Bond, Art Exhibitions Director, CS32, Eastern New Mexico University, Portales, N.M. 88130, or call 1-505-562-2626.

Author to attend play's production

Ken Girard of San Marino, Calif., is the winner of the 1990 McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Contest, according to contest chair Mary Lou Cassidy.

"Always the Bride" beat 159 entries from all over the United States. A Readers' Theatre production of the winning play will be presented July 21 at 8 p.m. at Midland Community Theatre.

The author will be the guest of American Airlines and the Midland Hilton for the production. Don Bachman will direct. There will be no charge for the production, but donations may be made to the McLaren Memorial fund for next year's competition.

Girard wrote mysteries, dramas and comedies for Sears Radio Theatre, NBC Mystery Theatre and Mutual Radio Theatre from 1978 through 1981.

Girard has offered to give a mystery writing seminar for MCT members while he's in town for the Readers' Theatre. He had given workshops for the Writers Guild, the Dramatists Guild and Mystery Writers of America.

The seminar will be held July 21 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Midland Community Theatre. If interested in attending, please register with Janet George, 682-2544.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your patience and hard work will pay off. Forget past mistakes. A short delay in August will give you time to perfect an important skill. In October, influential friends push new business your way. Greater self-discipline will help you get through the Christmas holidays in good spirits. A New Year's Eve celebration could mark the beginning of a happy romance. Land deals are wise investments in February 1991. A yearly physical examination will help you nip a potential problem in the bud.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: golfer Billy Casper, boxer Jack Dempsey, journalist Norman Cousins, actress Michele Lee.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A personal relationship improves after a heart-to-heart talk. Discuss future career moves with your nearest and dearest. Much contentment can be found in relaxing with loved ones.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Reason your way out of a tough financial dilemma. Talk less and listen more. Your intuition is right on target where a new love is concerned. Mate has something surprising to say.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Set aside some time for quiet meditation. Although financial speculation should be avoided, creative enterprises can bring extra income. Look for ways to reduce everyday expenditures.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The companionship of old friends proves delightful today. Cater to the whims of your mate or romantic partner. A candid discussion with someone special will yield new insights. Romance could fool you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get out of that rut! Visit a nature sanctuary or take your favorite canine for a long walk. At dusk, dine out under the moon. Romance and soft music lift your spirits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concentrate on domestic matters and your personal goals. Loved ones are appreciative of your efforts but do not know how to show it. A last-minute invitation could lead to a valuable friendship.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 NT	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Nine of ♠ Controversy has long swirled about which card to lead from a worthless tripleton. Top of nothing is standard. Others advocate MUD (middle, up, down). The modern tendency is to lead the lowest. Had East-West been employing the latter carding method, they might have avoided this calamity.

The auction needs no comment. After North's one no trump opening bid, four hearts was a just expression of South's trick-taking ability.

As the cards lie, a diamond lead would have guaranteed the contract's eventual demise, but no one can blame West for being reluctant to lead away from an unsupported jack. East took the ace of spades and returned the deuce in the hope of eventually giving partner a ruff. Declarer decided to treat that as an honest card, showing an original holding of four cards in the suit. In that case, there was a way to guarantee the contract even if trumps broke 4–0.

Declarer overtook the jack of spades with the queen and cashed the king for a diamond discard. When both defenders followed to that trick, the contract had become unbeatable. The foolproof method was to lead the ten of spades and discard the remaining diamond from the closed hand!

Declarer did not mind that West ruffed this trick. That was only the second trick for the defense and, since there were now only three hearts outstanding, the only other trick the defenders could get was the ace of trumps.

Note that, as the cards lie, declarer will go down if he plays differently. Suppose he tries to draw trumps. West will win the ace of hearts and it will be obvious that the only side-suit trick still available to the defenders would have to be in diamonds. So switching to that suit assures that the defenders get their two pointed aces and two trump tricks.

Cuban art exempt, group's suit charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Art from Cuba is exempt from the trade embargo, say artists, galleries, scholars and a civil liberties group who are suing the Bush administration for banning it.

The lawsuit filed June 5 charged that the Treasury Department is violating a 1988 law that excludes paintings, sculpture and drawings by Cubans from the 27-year-old U.S. embargo against Cuba's goods. The suit said the department has infringing on the First Amendment.

"Paintings are as much a part of the First Amendment as books. They are not, as the administration would have it, commodities like Cuban sugar or tobacco," said Michael Krinsky, a lawyer for the National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee.

Casa Manana planning for 29th season

FORT WORTH — Bud Franks, executive director and general manager, and Charles Ballinger, executive director of the Playhouse Theatre School, announce the opening on Sept. 14 of Casa Manana's 29th season of professional theater for children and families.

The season of adventure begins with the classic story of "Jack and the Beanstalk," running Sept. 14, 15, 21 and 22. The play is about a boy who journeys to a land in the sky who meets a giant after selling the family cow for magic beans.

"Raggedy Ann and Andy," running Oct. 5, 6, 12 and 13, is the story of two rag dolls in search of the French ballerina doll and their encounter with a wrinkled camel and the magical Witchie Wiggle Woggle.

In "The Emperor's New Clothes," running Nov. 9, 10, 16 and 17, the fun begins when villains, conspiring to ruin the king, exploit their emperor's love of finery by stitching him invisible clothes.

The season's holiday show, "The Littlest Angel," is a heartwarming story of an angel who comes to learn the meaning of giving. This special presentation will run Dec. 7, 8, 14 and 15.

The holiday story will be followed by the story of a prince who is changed into a beast and the beautiful girl who chooses to be his servant in "Beauty and the Beast," running February 15, 16, 22 and 23.

"The Great Egg Caper," running March 22, 23, 29 and 30, is sure to delight the entire family. This original work by Deborah Brown and John Hanby promises to be adventurous and exciting, a show children will treasure this spring.

"Davy Crockett" will bring to life the legendary tale of the man in the coon skin cap who becomes "king of the wild frontier," April 12, 13, 19 and 20.

The final production of Casa Manana's 1990-91 Children's Playhouse season will be "The Wind in the Willows," May 3, 4, 10 and 11. This tale is about a toad whose love for driving lands him jail, but he must escape to save his home from the ruthless weasels.

Playhouse season subscriptions are now available at a 15 percent discount which entitles the subscriber to see the holiday show free.

A new performance time has been added on Saturday mornings at 10. The Friday evening show at 7:30 and the Saturday matinee at 2 will remain the same.

Single ticket prices are $5.75 for all shows except the holiday special, which will be $6.75. Single tickets will go on sale in August and are available through the Casa Manana box office at (817) 332-6221 and through all Rainbow-Ticket-Master outlets.

Six Flags begins its new season

ARLINGTON — Six Flags Over Texas has begun its summer season with attendance figures up substantially despite record spring rains in the Dallas-Ft. Worth area.

Park president Bob Bennett said more than 600,000 persons visited the Arlington theme park during the spring season, which began in mid-March.

"Our business was up more than 16 percent over last year," Bennett said in a news release, "and the trend has continued since we began daily operation on Memorial Day."

Bennett attributed the spring success to introduction of the massive Texas Giant wooden roller coaster and the celebration of Bugs Bunny's 50th birthday.

"We expected the Giant to be a popular ride, but the public reaction has surprised even us," Bennett commented. "Members of the American Coaster Enthusiasts tell us the ride has a very good chance of being rated the top wooden coaster in the country. Who could ask for more?"

The huge ride drew national attention when a park in Pennsylvania filed suit challenging Six Flags' claims that it was the tallest wooden roller coaster in the world. An out-of-court settlement of the dispute confirmed that the Giant, with a 143-foot tall first hill, was the tallest structure of its kind in the world.

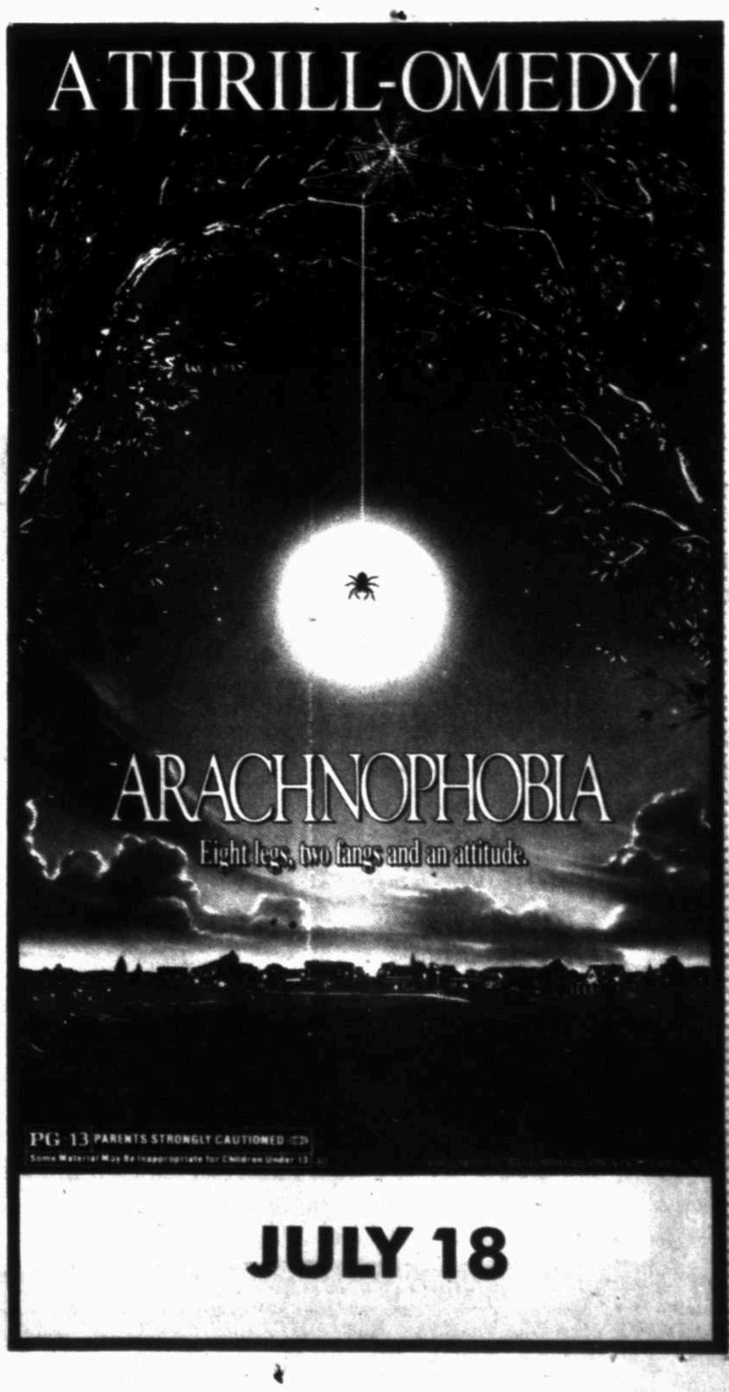
A THRILL-OMEDY!



JULY 18

By Mary Campbell
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — This really is a scary town. Just ask New Kids on the Block. They felt safe in their midtown hotel, confident their fans had camped out elsewhere, and even considered slipping out for pizza.

But it wasn't safe. Fourteen girls had staked out the right hotel. "Jennifer, I know they're in there right now," one girl said urgently to her comrades as they camped on the street.

Be brave, Kids; don't panic. In a few years, those girls won't even remember your names.

"By the time tonight is over, they'll catch on where we are and there'll be 100 girls out here," says Jonathan Knight, 21.

"We've had girls dress up as maids to try to sneak into our hotel rooms. Once, in Atlanta, I was on the 25th floor of a hotel, lying in bed, hearing girls screaming.

"I couldn't understand where it was coming from. I looked out. They had paid construction workers to take them up in a building being built across the street so they could look in our windows. I waved and shut my curtains. I think the police had to come."

Jordan Knight and Donnie Wahlberg, both 20, and Jonathan Knight agreed to an interview while Joe McIntyre, 17, slept and Danny Wood, 20, worked out at a gym. Jordan and Donnie arrived almost two hours late, ready to drop from the tight tour schedule.

"Today we hosted MTV and Saturday Night Videos and did a lot of IDs for different radio stations across America and for a lot of video outlets," said Jordan. "It was a busy day. Tomorrow morning we fly to London." They performed in four German cities, seven British cities and did promotional events in Madrid, Milan, Amsterdam, Paris and Rome.

NEW KIDS on the Block is the biggest-selling band in the land, with a new record and video and another leg of a seemingly endless tour. Columbia Records shipped a new single, "Step by Step," on May 9. It sold more than 1 million copies in less than a week.

The company's initial release of the "Step by Step" album on June 5 was more than 2 million. A 50-minute video also was released June 5, the biggest initial release in CBS video history, breaking the record of "Hangin' Tough Live," New Kids on the Block's last long-form video, which has sold more than 1.1 million copies.

The tiny tots who love to scream along with New Kids' tunes will have plenty of time to learn the lyrics because the group will be touring stadiums through Sept. 15.

The bucks are pouring in for the test-tube band. They're paid $125,000 per concert, and sell equally as much offstage in souvenirs. Merchandise licensed to 25 manufacturers can be found in stores. The group also will make commercials for Coca-Cola, will launch New Kids dolls in August, debut in a Saturday morning cartoon series in September and star in a movie in the fall.

"The cartoon people came out on the road with us for a month and learned our personalities and habits so that the cartoon is going to be a strong reflection of our personal lives," Jonathan said.

New Kids on the Block, the idea of Boston-based music entrepreneur Maurice Starr, who also started New Edition, is discounted by some as a "made" group, and derided by others as another example of white people taking black music and making the big money from it.

DESPITE ALL THE acclaim and fame (if they're too busy for television, then TV talk types will interview their mothers) and money, Wahlberg is bugged by the group getting what he considers a bum rap. They work hard, always have; they've been on the road for most of the last four years. Before they were famous, they toured as an opening act for Tiffany. They don't play instruments but dance and do their own singing. The group's top management people are black. So are on-stage musicians, presenting visible racial harmony.

Wahlberg eats oysters he has ordered from room service and launches into a lengthy monologue: "As I find myself growing up, I find myself focusing more on trying to speak out and fight more for things I believe in. I like to show older people I'm not just a brainless little puppet of Maurice Starr.

"I think the media has turned our image into the image of milk and cookies. I'm not necessarily about milk and cookies. I'm about positivity. I talk to writers who turn around and write articles of only criticisms about our young fans and how much money we're supposed to be making and selling a lot of merchandise and getting a lot of exposure; and we're clean-cut guys who've been marketed to suit whoever's needs, and nothing about the positivity of the group.

"I haven't been contrived, brainwashed or molded by anyone but my parents. I'm nobody's puppet.

"I think a lot of critics see us as Maurice Starr's brainchild and any success we have is ... not due to us. He writes songs. I wrote two songs on the album. I've written on every album. Jordan and myself produced two songs on Tommy Page's album. I feel like I shouldn't have to sit here and bring these things up and say I've done this and that to get critics' respect. If I don't write and produce every song, why does that irk people so much? Most actors don't write and direct their movies.

"If they say, 'These kids have no talent,' that's totally untrue. ... We have Maurice Starr, but every group has a mentor and started from an idea. U2 was somebody's idea. Starr isn't on stage every night. We work. To take so much heat and flack, sometimes it annoys me.

"I read reviews of the show and the first line says, 'those annoying girls.' "

Wahlberg, who says he reads newspapers every day, wants it known that he's interested in important things. "The issue I find myself dealing with most is racism. America isn't a racist society the way it used to be, but racism is still flourishing in our society. The most important thing anyone can do today is try to be open-minded and try to educate themselves on things like racism."

NEW KIDS often receive the same criticism as Elvis Presley, who sang black performers' songs and became far more famous than those who first performed them, such as Big Mama Thornton and "Hound Dog." But he paid to cut his first record, in the style he liked to sing, as a present for his mother.

Wahlberg says the New Kids grew up listening to black radio stations in Boston. "I respect the roots of the music I perform," he said. "I feel like I'm not stealing it. The music I do is music I grew up listening to."

Adolescent girls loved Elvis in the 1950s, the Beatles in the '60s and the Rolling Stones in the '70s; now they adore the New Kids.

But times have changed. Drugs and promiscuity are no longer in. The New Kids sing about romance, lasting love and self-reliance. Wahlberg says from the stage, "Thank you for staying drug free."

Three books about the band are on paperback best-seller lists, and fans salivate for every nugget about the quintet's personal lives. Wahlberg isn't in love at the moment. Jonathan Knight has the same girlfriend he had before the group started.

THE STORY of New Kids on the Block dates back to 1985 in Boston where Maurice Starr worked. He was a man of ideas as well as a facile songwriter, and had put together groups before, none meeting with wild success. First he thought he and his brothers could be another Jackson 5. Then he heard four young singers called the New Edition, signed them and shepherded them through their first album. They sued him for their release and won, on the basis that they were minors when they signed.

Starr put together a trio and managed a funk quartet. Next he had the idea that a white group, singing music like the New Edition, with choreography like the Motown groups in their heyday, could appeal to white as well as the New Edition's black listeners. He found four boys in Boston high schools, none of them aiming toward a show business career. He found 12-year-old Joe McIntyre last, younger and smaller than the rest, the Michael Jackson of the latter-day Jackson 5 idea he never abandoned.

New Kids wasn't an overnight success. Its first record was marketed by Columbia Records to black radio, which wasn't crazy about it. A station in Tampa, Fla., aimed at white listeners picked up on "Please Don't Go, Girl" from the second album, "Hangin' Tough," in March 1988, and the group took off.

Starr, however, isn't resting on his laurels. He put together a trio, Perfect Gentlemen, which opened New Kids' shows in the winter tour. "They're 12, 11 and 13," Knight says. "Just having them around brings back a lot of memories, stuff they're going through now that we went through. Their fans are younger than ours. We have fans from 4 to grandmothers but predominately it's 13 to 18."

During the two-week vacation before going to Europe, Wahlberg worked on producing two new groups, the North Side Boys and Marky Mark and the Funky Bunch, the latter his 18-year-old brother, Mark, who was in New Kids for six months then dropped out because he was more interested in basketball. Wahlberg also has three sisters and four brothers older than himself.
