Texans pass 5 amendments

By SALLY CARPENTER
Associated Press Writer

An 82-year-old farmer won, but some of the state's top politicians lost Tuesday as Texans approved five of seven amendments to the 105-year-old Texas Constitution.

Jesse Johnson of Leon County can keep the farm he bought 40 years ago, but the two proposals backed by Gov. Bill Clements — for long-range water development and state budget management — failed to convince those who voted.

As of early today, the total vote statewide was 762,223, or slightly more than 11 percent of the state's registered voters. At 1 a.m., 238 of 254 counties were complete and 249 had reported.

Also approved were proposals for homeowners' tax exemptions, by 70 percent; livestock tax exemptions, 67 percent; a veterans' land program, 65 percent, and redevelopment tax exemptions, 58 percent.

A WHOPPING 79 percent voted to adopt the proposal that will allow Johnson to keep his farm despite a 140-year-old title defect.

Had the measure failed, he would have been forced to buy the farm again — this time from the state. The amendment permits the state land commissioner to grant titles to land held in good faith for at least 50 years but for which no legal title was obtained. It takes effect immediately and lasts through 1986.

"I feel really good — I sure do," Johnson said after the results were announced. "I thank all of them (voters), too. I was really glad. I thought maybe they might come in and help me out."

He said he will throw a victory barbecue — "the biggest one I can have."

Less fortunate was House Speaker Bill Clayton, who sponsored the amendment to dedicate half the state's revenue surplus to water development. The program, which failed by a 42 percent margin, also would have raised the interest rate on state water bonds and allowed the state to guarantee $500 million in water development bonds issued by local governments.

THE PROPOSAL had divided many of the state's politicians, with Republican Clements and Democrat Clayton behind it and Lieutenant Gov. Bill Hobby and former Gov. Allan Shivers, both Democrats, against it.

Clayton said the low turnout and voter confusion contributed to the amendment's failure.

"I am disappointed because it was a unique opportunity for the people of this state to take care of a crisis they will face in the future," he said from his Springlake home.

The amendment, which primarily would have helped arid West Texas, lost by 59 percent in metropolitan areas, 58 percent in urban areas and 52 percent in rural parts of the state.

Midland turnout only six percent

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midlanders apparently are still slightly wary of giving the governor any type of spending power as local voters turned down Proposition 3, but approved a controversial water bill in Tuesday's constitutional amendments election.

Voters throughout the county turned out in sparse numbers — only 2,598 out of 44,162 registered voters — to decide on the seven amendments. This was barely a 6 percent turnout.

Proposition 3 was barely defeated by Midlanders with a vote of 1,245 for and 1,251 against. It called for setting up a state finance management committee which would have the power to decide how certain appropriated funds would be spent. Specifically, that team would have been composed of the governor, lieutenant governor, speaker of the house, and chairmen of the Senate Committee on Finance, the Senate Committee on State Affairs, House Committee on Appropriations and House Committee on Ways and Means.

THE GOVERNOR would sit as chairman, and the committee specifically would have been charged with dispersing the federal block grant funds that will be distributed soon to Texas. Proponents of the amendment had noted that with the federal funds needing to be distributed, a committee should be set up to deal with it, rather than calling a special session of the legislature.

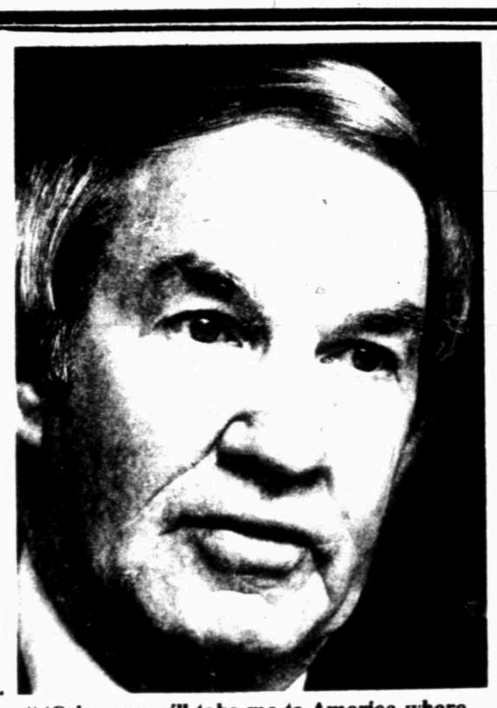

Six voting places turned down this amendment: Senior Citizens Center, Fire Station at Midland Drive and Thomason, Greenwood, County Exhibit Building, Public Safety Building and Midkiff.

Proposition 4 elicited more heated arguments around the state than any other amendment and was billed as a way to meet future water needs. This four-part amendment called for setting aside half of the state's excess revenues for a water trust fund, raising the interest limit on water bonds from 6 percent to 12 percent or higher, using $500 million of the state's credit to guarantee loans for water projects and authorizing a program to retire state bonds.

Statewide, voters rejected the water amendment. But in Midland County, voters backed the issue by a tally of 1,600 in favor and 958 against. Late last week and on Monday support of the issue came from area

" 'Coke, you will take me to America where there's God and country.' I'd look down at him and say, 'Sure Charlie.' "

— Coke Sharp

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Coke Sharp was 17 years old when he connived the Marines to let him join up toward the end of World War II.

"Everybody said 'Join the Marines and see the world.' I didn't know they'd take me to China and dump me off," Sharp says. But that was the beginning of a relationship with a small Chinese boy nicknamed Charlie Two-Shoes. The memory of Charlie has tugged at Sharp's mind and heart for 34 long years until about a year ago when a fellow ex-Marine received a letter from Charlie.

"Do you remember your old buddy in China," Charlie wrote William Bullard in Autryville, N.C. Before concluding the letter, Charlie, now 46, expressed a desire he's held since he was 11 of coming to the United States to live.

That letter, received by Bullard in July 1980, began the wheels rolling to bring Charlie and his family — a wife, two sons and a daughter — to the U.S. Sharp, though, wasn't aware of what was happening back East and was considered one of the missing Marines in Charlie's small gang of American friends. But that changed when his wife saw a broadcast on CBS News recently about Bullard's efforts to bring Charlie to the U.S.

"I'VE TOLD HER the story about Charlie so many times that when she saw this on TV, she knew immediately who it was," Sharp said. He got on the phone to North Carolina and finally tracked down Bullard, who gave him the details of the project.

Now Sharp is involved, trying to get donations to assist in bringing Charlie and his family to North Carolina.

Pulling out a photograph of four Marines with a young Chinese boy, Sharp — with a mixture of laughter and tears — tells his part in the saga.

Gathered around Charlie-Two-Shoes, sitting on the right in the front row, are his American buddies, a group of Marines based at Tsingtao, China in 1946. Sitting with Charlie is Midlander Coke Sharp. Standing, from left, are Robert D. Brooks, Jimmy Parks and Preston Lee Roberts.

The story begins in 1946 when he and the First Marines, Sixth Division, were deposited at Tsingtao, China. It was after World War II had ended.

China, however, was in turmoil with the Japanese battling it out with the Communists while the Nationalists were caught in the middle.

"We were responsible for sending the Japanese back to Japan," Sharp recalls. "We were guarding the airfields from the Communists and helping Chiang Kai-shek get the Nationalist troops to Formosa (Taiwan). At night you could see flashes from the big guns where they were fighting in the hills."

Poverty was severe, he says, and people were starving. One day while a group of Marines was out on a dirt road, a woman ran up and handed a boy about 11 years old over to the soldiers and left.

"FOUR OR FIVE of us decided we would take care of him if the captain would let us," Sharp says. "Capt. Charles S. Robertson was very understanding; I was his Jeep driver."

With that group of soldiers, none of them much over 18, Charlie Two-Shoes, whose real name of Isui Chi Hsii was too hard to pronounce, got his indoctrination into the American culture.

Sharp remembers Charlie as a "very much undernourished" youngster who was very bright and picked up English by living with the soldiers.

Charlie was special in everyone's eyes — possibly because he was like a younger brother — but maybe more so to Sharp. The youngster not only stayed in the same room with Sharp and some other soldiers, but it was next to Sharp's bed that he slept.

"I was responsible for getting him into missionary school," he says. The men pooled their money out of the $60 a month salary they received to come up with the $12.50 a month to get Charlie into school.

"And we'd see that he went to church."

The Marines managed to scrape together enough bicycle parts to build a two-wheeler for Charlie, which he rode to school on his first day.

"When he came home that day from school he was riding so fast that he didn't stop at the guard gate. Hundreds of Chinese kids were following him, pulling at his bike and his clothes."

SOLDIERING DIDN'T take 24 hours a day, and the men soon were caught up in entertaining

United Way still short

With barely a week remaining in Midland's United Way campaign this year, contributions were almost 20 percent short of the organization's $1.35 million goal at today's noon report meeting at the Yucca Theatre.

Campaign Chairman George Bush had urged voluteers last week to strive for completing 85 percent of their goal by today. Although they fell short of that target, tallying 80.2 percent, that figure represented a 15 percent gain over last week's 65.02 percent and put fundraising efforts over $1 million at $1,083,396.40.

Bush said he was happy with breaking the $1 million mark, "But I want our volunteers to realize we are still more than $265,000 short of our goal.

"With only a week remaining, I am confident we can reach our goal, because many accounts remain to be solicited. I know our voluteers will do the jobs they agreed to do, and I am confident that Midlanders will continue the generous support they have shown in the past," Bush said.

The Major Oil Section (Dan Mendell, chairman) exceeded its objective of 85 percent this week by posting 100 percent of its projected total.

Coming from behind, however, to join the lead was the Education Section, which jumped from 2.3 percent complete only a week ago to 100 percent complete today. Midland public schools accounted for the jump, and Bill Jackson, education section chairman, pointed out several other education units still have not reported their contributions.

Contributions by MISD employees were up 16 percent over last year, Jackson added, which is the overall increase sought in this year's campaign.

Other sections which reached their objectives this week were Professionals (Jane Wolf, chairman) which totalled 90.9 percent complete, and Advance Gifts (Jack Steele, chairman) which posted 85.2 percent.

Shuttle launch postponed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Launch of the shuttle Columbia was scrubbed today because of an oil pressure problem that arose after a computer failed to respond in time to a change in the countdown command.

The countdown clock stopped cold, 31 seconds before liftoff. Another launch attempt will not come until Friday, at the earliest.

Astronauts Joe Engle and Richard Truly were strapped in their cockpit seats, ready to fly, when the clock stopped at 7:48 a.m.

There was an effort to reschedule the launch for mid-morning, but at 9:35 a.m., launch director George Page called it off because of a problem with a lubricating device in Columbia's on-board auxiliary power units which steer the ship on launch and stabilize its landing.

A last-minute problem also halted the first attempt to launch Columbia on its maiden flight last April 10; the problem then was with communications between computers. It was fixed quickly and the ship launched two days late.

Columbia, filled with half-a-million gallons of volatile fuel, entered its "terminal countdown" flawlessly today at sunrise as excitement mounted here for the ship's never-before accomplished return trip to space.

THERE WERE minor delays due to a weather watch and the first hint of pressurization troubles, but the real problem began with the clock at 0:00:31.

"We were not able to restart the countdown clock. We do not know why," said Launch Control spokesman Hugh Harris. The clock, like Columbia itself, is controlled by computers; it automatically commands a shutdown if it senses any malfunction.

A little more than two hours later, the launch teams gave up. The astronauts, in the ship for more than four hours, were being taken from the Columbia and back to their crew quarters.

"We are going to scrub the launch for today," Harris said. "A minimum of a 48-hour turnaround will be necessary for another launch attempt."

National Aeronautics and Space Administration specialists tracked down the problem and said a message to lower the acceptable pressure threshold in two fuel tanks got to the computer too late.

While efforts were made to correct this problems, a lubricating device in the auxiliary units overpressurized and the launch window was slammed shut for today.

Elizabeth Taylor to appear on 'General Hospital'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The regular cast of "General Hospital" was nervous at the thought of working with an international star before Elizabeth Taylor took on her role as the sinister Helena Cassadine, an ABC spokeswoman says.

Taylor

But it turned out Miss Taylor "was as much in awe of the cast as they were of her," spokeswoman Kim Rowley said Tuesday.

Miss Taylor, who stars in "The Little Foxes" at the Los Angeles Music Center, makes the first of her special guest appearances on the immensely popular ABC soap opera Nov. 10.

The two-time Academy Award winner had asked to be a guest at the wedding of the characters Luke and Laura, to be broadcast Nov. 16.

In the role created for her by producer Gloria Monty, Miss Taylor plays the widow of Mikkos Cassadine, the power-hungry force who tried to destroy Port Charles, the serial's fictional setting.

The character Miss Taylor plays "has some sinister ideas that will be revealed," Miss Rowley said.

Miss Taylor taped her role on Oct. 12 and 13 and it will be shown on five episodes over a two-week period.

Tony Geary had an intensely emotional scene with Miss Taylor in which the actress' line was, "So you did see some good in my husband."

Geary forgot his lines and said, "I don't know what I saw." He said later, "I got lost in her violet eyes."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A jury's verdict that actor Chad Everett didn't father the 8-year-old child of one-time actress Sheila Scott is "an insult to motherhood, to fatherhood, to all women in the world," Miss Scott says.

Everett

The 10-2 verdict was reached Tuesday in Los Angeles Superior Court after two days of jury deliberations.

Everett, 45, star of the now-canceled "Medical Center" television series and other TV shows and films, denied ever having had sexual intercourse with Miss Scott. She was an extra on "Medical Center" in 1972 when the alleged intercourse took place.

The actor said he saw Miss Scott off-set only once, on Aug. 16, 1972, and only for 15 minutes when he looked at paintings in her apartment.

Miss Scott, 44, appeared calm as the decision was announced, but slumped in her seat.

"I just feel sorry for my son, for eight years he's borne the cross of not having a legal father," Miss Scott said outside the courtroom. She said she would appeal.

Everett's attorney tried to show there were two other men in Miss Scott's life who could have fathered the child.

Early in the eight years of litigation, Everett agreed to pay monthly support payments for the child, although he never acknowledged paternity. Miss Scott pursued the case, saying the child has a right to court determination of whether Everett was his father.

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — When costume caretaker Terry Clarkson examines the opulent wardrobe of his boss, entertainer Liberace, does he look for loose threads? No, loose beads.

"Every day I go over his costumes and coats and catch any loose beads," said Clarkson, 29, of Dayton. "Take a look at the buttons on this jacket — those are all real diamonds spelling his name. The buttons cost $1,000 apiece when they were purchased 15 years ago. I'd hate to think how much they're worth today."

One of Liberace's outfits, a white fox fur coat with a 16-foot train, is valued at $300,000. The 62-year-old entertainer often wears half a dozen glittery ensembles during an evening's performance.

On stage, Liberace likes to show off the sequin-studded clothes that are as much his trademark as the candelabra atop his piano.

"Well, look me over," he told an audience in Dayton. "I didn't dress like this to go unnoticed."

Walesa to discuss crises with premier, archbishop

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa will discuss Poland's economic and labor crises with Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski and Archbishop Jozef Glemp today after failing to unite Solidarity's leadership behind a ban on wildcat strikes.

The leader of the independent labor movement told Solidarity's national committee, the Country Commission, he was not meeting with the premier and the Roman Catholic primate "as an official representative of the union but as a Pole."

The meeting with Jaruzelski is Walesa's first since the premier was named head of the Polish Communist Party three weeks ago. He also is defense minister.

It was not known whether Walesa would meet with the premier and the cardinal together or separately. Glemp, the spiritual leader of Poland's 32 million Catholics, has frequently acted as a moderating force between the government and the 9.5-million-member union.

With wildcat strikes mushrooming around the country to protesting food shortages and local grievances, Jaruzelski pushed a resolution through the Sjem, or Parliament, on Saturday calling for an end to the job actions and warning of tougher action if the strikes continued.

Walesa also opposes wildcat strikes and succeeded in getting 120,000 workers in Tarnobrzeg to end a two-week strike. But 12,000 striking women textile workers in Zyrardow and 150,000 strikers in Zielona Gora defied his efforts to get them back to work.

In an attempt to regain control of the union for the national leadership, Walesa asked the 107-member commission at a meeting in Gdansk Tuesday to create a disciplinary committee with the power to expell members who ignore no-strike orders from the commission.

Cody story in error

CHICAGO (AP) — The Associated Press erroneously reported Tuesday that the Chicago Sun-Times had published a story saying a federal grand jury had subpoenaed the financial records of the Archdiocese of Chicago from five banks.

The newspaper reported that the grand jury was widening its investigation of the finances of Cardinal John Cody and that the subpoenas for the documents of the five banks sought records of an unidentified third party not under investigation.

The newspaper said that by going through a third party, federal prosecutors avoided a possible church-state legal collision over the cardinal's alleged failure to provide information to investigators.

The Sun-Times reported in September that the grand jury was investigating allegations that Cody had diverted up to $1 million in church funds to a lifelong friend and relative by marriage, Mrs. Helen Dolan Wilson.

Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, left, reaches out to shake the hand of Quebec Premier Rene Levesque at the start of Monday's conference with 10 provincial premiers in Ottawa.

Trudeau seeks contitutional compromise

OTTAWA (AP) — Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau was hoping today to persuade some of the provincial premiers fighting his constitutional proposals to embrace a compromise put forward by Ontario Premier William Davis.

Trying to mediate between Trudeau and eight opposing premiers, Davis at the start of a constitutional conference Tuesday suggested that the prime minister agree to the process for amending the constitution proposed by the premiers in exchange for their acceptance of a slightly-modified version of the bill of rights Trudeau wants entrenched in the constitution.

Trudeau's Cabinet reacted favorably Tuesday night to the compromise, which would require Parliament and seven provinces comprising at least 50 percent of the population to ratify any changes in the constitution.

However, the Cabinet rejected another proposal by the premiers of British Columbia, Alberta and Nova Scotia because it would have watered down Trudeau's bill of rights.

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque, fighting to preserve his populous province's veto over constitutional change as well as its special language laws which would be nullified by Trudeau's bill of rights, claimed that the latest round of negotiations would fail if Trudeau rejected the proposal by the three premiers.

But Premier John Buchanan of Nova Scotia, one of the eight opponents of Trudeau's original proposals, said the negotiations were "going very well on all fronts."

But because tradition requires unanimous consent by the provinces to any constitutional changes and they have almost never been able to achieve unanimity, Trudeau wants the British Parliament first to incorporate a less restrictive amending process and a charter of rights. All of the provinces except Ontario, the most populous, and New Brunswick opposed these changes because they would reduce their powers.

Official outlines prison costs

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — The Texas Department of Corrections is willing to make improvements in the prison hospital, but the work will cost the state several million dollars, a prison official says.

Dr. Ralph Gray, assistant director for medical services, outlined an extensive plan Tuesday to improve sanitation and treatment.

He said the cost of the improvements would be added to the $2 million Gov. Bill Clements already has approved for changing the Goree Unit — which formerly housed women — into a regional medical facility.

A brief TDC officials filed in a Houston federal court responded to seven suggestions of San Francisco attorneys William Bennett Turner and Donna Brorby at the order of U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler.

The attorneys represent inmate David Ruiz, whose longstanding suit against TDC Director Jim Estelle led to Justice's sweeping reform order last year.

Justice lifted a Nov. 1 deadline last month for downgrading the hospital to a clinic if improvements were not made. He also ordered TDC officials to consider the attorneys' proposals.

Other parts of Justice's sweeping reform order to ease overcrowding in state prisons were stayed last week by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, pending a full appeal.

The TDC brief followed criticism of the hospital by the state Department of Health and a New York doctor hired to inspect the facility. Both reports criticized the hospital as unsanitary and said the quality of treatment there is poor.

Among the suggestions presented to TDC officials were to have an emergency room physician on duty 24 hours a day, to place terminally ill inmates in a non-prison environment and to stop performing major surgery.

Farah sues El Paso bank for $256 million

EL PASO, Texas (AP) -- State National Bank of El Paso and three other lenders are being sued for as much as $256 million by Willie Farah, who claims the banks nearly pushed his company into bankruptcy in 1977 and 1978.

Lawyers continued to question prospective jurors Tuesday in preparation for a district court trial, which is expected to last at least six weeks.

Farah filed the lawsuit soon after regaining control of Farah Manufacturing Co. in 1978. He says creditors who loaned the clothing company $22 million conspired against him and were responsible for $86 million in losses suffered by the company.

He also is asking for up to twice the amount of the losses in exemplary damages.

State National Bank is the only named defendant but three other institutions have agreed to share any losses resulting from the suit: Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust, Republic Bank Dallas, and Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

Farah's lead lawyer, Tom Thomas of Dallas, said the case may result in a landmark decision defining the boundaries of involvement by lenders in the management of indebted corporations.

In 1976, Farah, now 62, turned control of the company over to William Leon.

Indian-summer qualities will be evident

Indian-summer qualities again should be evident in weather conditions for the next couple of days.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport expects mild days and cool nights along with moderate winds through Thursday. The low tonight is expected to dip into the mid-40s, while Thursday's high should reach the mid-70s.

Tuesday's high of 73 degrees compared with the all-time record for the date of 83 established in 1948, while the low of 44 doubled the 22 recorded in 1936.

No rainfall is forecast, and the yearly total stands at 17.55 inches.

Ector County Sheriff's Department is investigating 26-year-old girl's death

ODESSA — Ector County Sheriff's Department investigators this morning were piecing together evidence surrounding the death of 26-year-old Yolanda Herrera Huxley, whose nude body was discovered on an Ector County pumping unit lease Tuesday afternoon.

The woman's body was found by an oil field treater about 2 p.m. He then called the sheriff's department, according to a department spokesman. A physician estimated the woman had been dead 12-18 hours, but sheriff's department officials stressed that time span is only "a guess."

A department spokesman said there were no visible signs of injury on the woman's body other than "a few abrasions." No clothes were found on the body or in the immediate vicinity.

The body was lying outside a fence surrounding the pumping unit about a half-mile south of Odessa, officials indicated.

An autopsy has been ordered by Peace Justice Manuel Valles.

The investigation is being headed by investigator Mark Fluitt, Lt. Herbert Gibson and Capt. Gene Kloss.

No traces of pilot after collision of two F-15s

EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — Rescuers have found wreckage but no trace of a pilot whose F-15 crashed into the Gulf of Mexico after colliding with another F-15, which limped back to base.

An Air Force helicopter crew on Tuesday spotted a horizontal stabilizer and fuel-soaked foam floating in the Gulf about 40 miles southwest of Cape San Blas, said Petty Officer Michael Parks of the Coast Guard's Rescue Coordination Center in New Orleans.

He said the debris from the Monday night crash was picked up by the Coast Guard cutter Point Lobos of Panama City, which confirmed that it had come from an F-15.

The search for Maj. John Clifton Booker Jr., 37, of Universal City, Texas, continued into the night Tuesday with crews going aloft in hopes of spotting a flare, Parks said.

The Air Force, meanwhile, put armed guards around the second F-15 Eagle involved in the collision, which suffered superficial damage. The Air Force began assembling an investigation board.

Lt. Craig McDaniel, the wing's public information officer, said the Capt. Mike Lee, 31, of Greenwood, S.C., was unhurt and managed to get his plane back safely.

"Apparently it turned out to be a fairly routine landing, under the circumstances," McDaniel said.

McDaniel said the investigation board was being assembled from another base and that the cause of the crash wouldn't be disclosed until the panel finishes its work in "several weeks."

Each sophisticated jet costs about $16 million, carries a single pilot and is capable of flying up to 2½-times the speed of sound.

The two planes, both attached to the 33rd Tactical Fighter Wing at Eglin, collided at 22,000 feet after they had been refueled by a KC-135 tanker from Blytheville Air Force Base, Ark., McDaniel said.

The accident occured near the same area where an Air Force F-4 Phantom was accidently shot down by a missile fired from another Phantom in April. The two-man crew ejected and was rescued from the Gulf 47 miles south of Panama City.

Midlanders approve five amendments

mayors and the Midland City Council.

The final results showed that only three voting spots didn't like the idea: Greenwood, North Side Fire Station and Public Safety Building.

Proposition 1 was approved by Midland voters with a total count of 1,425 for and 1,096 against. This amendment would allow a city to establish zones for tax increment financing and tax abatement. Specifically, both are designed to encourage private development and investment in blighted areas of a city through the means of tax breaks.

VOTING PRECINCTS going against the amendment were the fire station at Midland Drive and Thomason, Greenwood, County Exhibit Building, Public Safety Building and Midkiff.

Proposition 2 slid by the voters by a vote of 2,166 for and 372 against, with all precincts favoring it. This will allow the General Land Office to issue patents for free public school land held by one owner for more than 50 years and who has paid the taxes every year on that tract.

More specifically, a landowner in East Texas who has paid taxes on his property for more than 50 years will be able to retain it. Without passage of the amendment statewide, the state could reclaim the land. The farmer was unaware until recently that he never held a clear title to the land.

Proposition 5 was designed to appease farmers, but this oil business city apparently felt it was the right way to go as voters approved it 1,703 to 867.

This amendment will exclude all livestock and poultry from being taxed. While they had been exempt for years, the tax exemption status was removed in 1976. But proponents of the amendment argued that it was a headache to try to count livestock or poultry and was an unfair method of taxation.

PROPOSITION 6 also is a tax exemption, but this time for homesteaders. Midlanders approved it in a similar manner as the previous amendment. This time the vote was 1,713 for and 809 against.

The amendment is set up to allow taxing entities to give owners of residence homesteads exemptions to allow them time to adjust to enactment of the Peveto taxing bill. Under that law, all homes must be appraised at fair market value and taxed at 100 percent.

The first exemption can be as high as 40 percent and run from 1982-84. It should drop to 20 percent by 1988 and thereafter.

Proposition 7 flew by Midland voters without much opposition as it passed on a vote of 1,605 for and 926 against. It allows the state to sell another $250 million for the Veterans' Land program and to increase the interest rate allowed on bonds from the current 6 percent up to 10 percent.

These last three amendments passed in all voting spots, including absentee ballots.

The highest voter turnout was seen at Lee High School with 674 people pulling the levers on the machines. This site included precincts 15, 18, 19, 26, 28 and 29.

Next highest number was seen at Bowie Elementary School with 489 voters. Precincts here included 12, 14 and 23.

The voting station at Midkiff saw the least number of voters — 13.

Absentee votes amounted to 96, and these people went in favor of all seven amendments.

Charlie, or, vice versa.

"We'd spend hours and hours with him; we had nothing else to do."

Charlie wanted so badly to be a Marine that the men bribed the supply sergeant to give them an extra uniform, which they had cut down to Charlie's size.

And they had to bribe the Chinese laundryman to do Charlie's clothes. "The Chinese were jealous of him because he was getting special treatment," Sharp explains.

Because of that jealousy, Sharp often had to take Charlie to and from school in the Jeep so he wouldn't be attacked by other Chinese.

Each day was a new episode — sometimes funny, sometimes not — with Charlie.

One day, recalls Sharp with a chuckle, he and a lieutenant were in the Jeep to check posts. As usual, Charle was along. They spied a stray horse and Charlie wanted to ride it.

"We chased that horse all over the mountain in the Jeep and on foot and got lost. We didn't have time to check out the guard posts," and when they returned it meant big trouble for the two men. "We got in so much trouble," he adds with another laugh, "and all because Charlie wanted to ride a horse."

IT WAS CHARLIE'S passion for horses that led to the photograph of the four men with Charlie, taken at a studio in Tsingtao.

"Someone had found some horses somewhere and set up a riding stable on the edge of town and Charlie wanted to go," he says of that day. "We rented a rickshaw...you could get one for 10 cents for the whole day. It was a Sunday afternoon," and at some point the men found time to have the photograph taken.

But the giving and the love didn't come all from the Americans. Charlie gave back as much as he received.

While the men fed him, clothed him and educated him, Charlie shined their shoes, cleaned up their rooms, sewed on their buttons and pressed their clothes when they couldn't afford to have it done.

And, most importantly, Charlie entertained them. "He's all that got us through at night when we couldn't go on liberty or get a pass. Charlie kept us out of a lot of fights between ourselves."

The men used to kid Charlie and say they would bring him to the States and have him marry an American girl. "But will I ever be tall enough?" he used to reply to their laughs.

Several times on a slow Sunday afternoon, Sharp would offer to take Charlie to visit his family. "But he never wanted to go," the former Marine remembers. "He said they lived in a one-room house with a dirt floor and there were a bunch of kids. Charlie would say, 'I want to be a Marine and I want to be an American.'"

HE USED TO LOOK at his Jeep-driving buddy and say, " 'Coke, you will take me to America where there's God and country.' I'd look down at him and say, 'Sure, Charlie,' "

After 19 months in Tsingtao, the inevitable day came for Sharp and the rest of his group — known by chance as Love Company — to leave for the States.

"We didn't tell Charlie. But when we started to pack our bags, he knew we were leaving," Sharp says of that cold November day when the Marines — and the United States — saw its last glimpse of China before the door swung shut on communications between the two giant countries.

Tears floating up to his green eyes, Sharp says, "That's the saddest day in my memory. That's the day the Marines cried. We didn't think we'd ever see Charlie again."

It wasn't that the men didn't want to bring Charlie back to the States with them — they had tried. "But you had to be an officer and there was so much red tape," he explains.

The red tape part hasn't changed, they have discovered. The North Carolina Marine has set up a house on his farm land for Charlie's family. And a visa has been arranged. But they are yet uncertain as to whether or not China will let Charlie and his family out. Sharp said that Charlie was to check Oct. 28 with Peking about passports.

NEWS IS SLOW to come, despite the increasing number of Americans allowed into China. Sharp says that Bullard has had only three letters from Charlie in 1½ years, and it is evident that each one has been heavily censored.

Another requirement the ex-Marines are trying to meet is the Chinese stipulation that they must purchase four round-trip tickets. And that's why they are needing the money.

Sharp is attempting to get donations, which will be sent on to Bullard. Sharp, an employee at Friendly Pontiac, said his address is Route 6, Box 1000, Midland, 79701, 694-9770 or 684-7101.

And if the red tape continues, Sharp says he will call on Texas senators to assist and possibly Vice President George Bush.

Looking back on China's troubled years with the Communists in command, Sharp admits that at times he never thought he would see his small friend again.

"I just thought Charlie would be killed" because of his close association with the Americans. "It has troubled me all these years."

But as he thinks of the impending meeting with Charlie some day in North Carolina, the wrinkled brow smoothes out and a smile crosses his face. "Charlie has shown us what living in that country can do with faith and undying hope."

Five additional military controllers arrive at Midland Regional Airport

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Five military air traffic controllers arrived at Midland Regional Airport Monday as part of 42 Army controllers who were added to the 162 already working at Federal Aviation Administration facilities throughout the United States.

All five reported to the Midland facility and are presently in an estimated 10-day training session, according to Bill Hill, FAA control tower chief at Midland Regional Airport.

The new group of controllers is part of the restaffing plan to replace Professional Air Traffic Controllers who were fired by President Reagan Aug. 5 after disobeying an oath that prohibits federal employees from going on strike.

Eighteen Midland PATCO members walked off their jobs during the nationwide Aug. 3 PATCO strike. Two PATCO members chose to return to the tower before Reagan's dismissal deadline and one retired, leaving 15 Midland PATCO members fired.

Until recently Midland's air traffic control tower has been manned by PATCO members who chose not to participate in the strike, according to Hill.

The Army controllers are trained and certified by FAA standards, according to the U.S. Army communications command. The controllers come from the Army Aviation Center and School for air traffic controllers and fixed wing and helicopter pilots in Fort Rucker, Ala.

"The U.S. government certifies all military controllers, meaning they meet FAA standards," Hill said. "These people are dressed in green, but they are air traffic controllers.

"There will be an adjustment in the type of aircraft they control," he said, adding that "in the past the military controllers have worked with helicopters and high-performance aircraft. Now they will be exposed to a variety of aircraft."

According to a spokesman for the military controllers, the major difference between the Army controller and an FAA controller in an FAA facility is experience at that facility.

But, Barry Vaughn, president of Midland's PATCO Local 428, said, "I highly disagree. I was an Air Force controller before I worked as a FAA air traffic controller. The difference is like day and night. The way an Air Force controller and an Army controller works is different and there is even a bigger difference between the military controller and FAA controller."

According to Vaughn, prior to the strike it took six months to work through the Midland facility, adding that the current rotation system of controllers puts additional stress on supervisors and working PATCO members who must man the radar position, considered to be the most stressful and strenuous job. "This will accelerate the controllers burnout rate if this continues," Vaughn claimed.

Koch is grateful for his re-election

NEW YORK (AP) — Flush from a record setting vote percentage, Mayor Edward Koch says he is grateful for his re-election and will do all he can to "ease racial tensions, heal wounds, to unite this city."

Koch, who captured almost 75 percent of the vote while carrying endorsements of the Democratic and Republican parties in a seven-candidate field, led a team of incumbents to victory Tuesday in city elections totally devoid of upset.

Koch's campaign staff said the previous high vote in a mayoral election here came in 1957, when Robert F. Wagner polled 69.2 percent of the vote.

Other easy incumbent winners were City Council President Carol Bellamy, Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin, all five borough presidents and district attorneys in Manhattan and Queens.

Former Congresswoman Elizabeth Holtzman won the Brooklyn district attorney's post vacated by a retiring Eugene Gold.

City Council district elections were barred by the U.S. Justice Department on the ground that reapportionment of council borders was discriminatory and violated the Voting Rights Act.

"Winning is always better than losing and winning big is better still," Koch told a cheering crowd at a hotel in midtown Manhattan. "I love this job and I'm proud of what has been accomplished."

Koch also said, "While I do not intend to abandon principle or fiscal realism, I believe I have an obligation to reach out and ask those who have been dissatisfied with my record, who have opposed me in the past, to join in finding acceptable ways to end discrimination, to offer hope for the poor, to pull the city together."

Koch, the first ever to win both major-party endorsements for mayor, faced six other candidates in his drive for re-election, including Conservative Assemblyman John Esposito and Assemblyman Frank Barbaro, who ran on the Unity Party line after losing to Koch in the Democratic primary.

With 99 percent of the vote in, Koch had 918,989 votes to Barbaro's 161,392 and Esposito's 62,962.

Ms. Bellamy defeated Guy Velella, a Republican state assemblyman, 848,711 votes to 191,177, or 79 percent to 18 percent, with 99 percent of the vote counted.

In another three-way race Goldin, running on the Democrat and Liberal lines, easily defeated Republican real estate man Richard Bernstein, 820,938 votes to 171,111, or 78 percent to 16 percent, with all but 10 of the 4,850 election districts reporting.

The borough president race that drew the most attention had been in Manhattan where incumbent Andrew Stein faced City Clerk David Dinkins.

Dinkins, who lost to Stein in the Democratic primary, ran on the Liberal Party line this time. With 98 percent of the vote counted in the four-way raee, Stein had 151,500 votes, or 59 percent, to Dinkins' 85,981 votes, or 34 percent.

Young elected to third term

DETROIT (AP) — Mayor Coleman A. Young has won a third four-year term as leader of the nation's sixth-largest city.

With all but 110 of 1,262 precincts reporting, the 63-year-old incumbent received 156,291 votes, or 64 percent, to 86,668 votes, or 36 percent, for longshot challenger Perry Koslowski.

Young, the city's first black mayor when first elected in 1973, said he believed his victory in the election Tuesday was assured following the June 23 referendum when voters approved a Young-inspired increase in the city income tax to help balance Detroit's budget.

"It took unity of all the people to move forward together," he said.

Koslowski, a 31-year-old white senior accountant with the city, said he was disappointed he lost and said he might run again in 1985.

Young took office in 1973 when he narrowly defeated the heavily Democratic city's white police commissioner. He was re-elected to his second four-year term in 1977.

Weinberger pushing for updated defenses

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger, pushing the Reagan administration's plan to modernize the nation's strategic defenses, says the Soviets apparently would use multiple missile strikes in a nuclear war.

He says the United States, therefore, "must have the kind of capability that will enable you to respond."

Weinberger gave that assessment Tuesday at Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings on President Reagan's $180 billion, six-year plan to dev$lop and deploy MX missiles, B-1 bombers and other strategic weapons systems.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was to testify today at the hearings on foreign policy implications of the president's strategic arms plan.

"We do think the Soviets by their actions have indicated they must think (nuclear war) is winnable," Weinberger told the committee.

He had been asked by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., whether either the United States or the Soviet Union believes it could win a nuclear war.

"I have seen nothing that indicates the Soviet Union does not believe it could win," Weinberger replied.

"When you look at the arsenal they have amassed over more than 21 years, I have to conclude that that is the assumption which underlies all of their thinking."

The United States, he said, views nuclear war "as something that we should make every effort to deter."

Weinberger was saying, in effect, that he did not believe Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's statement in an interview published over the weekend that Brezhnev thinks limited nuclear war is impos.

The German magazine Der Spiegel quoted Brezhnev as saying a nuclear exchange "would inevitably and unmistakably take on a worldwide character."

"Even though there are some who hope a nuclear war could be contained on European territory...a limited nuclear war is not possible," the magazine quoted Breznev as saying.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del, asked Weinberger if he thought it was realistic to think of a nuclear war "that would involve strikes beyond several days."

"I don't know if it is realistic," the defense secretary said. "But if this situation is what we are faced with, you cannot hope to meet it or to deter attack unless you have the kind of capability that will enable you to respond."

"It appears that they (the Soviets) are at least planning on more than one strike," he said.

"The Soviets...have a virtually unlimited supply (of nuclear missile silos) with a refiring capability," Weinberger said. "It appears that they are at least planning on more than one strike. There will be a necessity for us to be able to respond to that kind of an assault.

"I do know that if we do not have an ability to have more than one strike and the Soviets have this capability, we are going to have a very difficult time either to maintain the peace or to secure any effective kind of arms limitation," he said.

State Department refuses to face up to conditions leading to Jonestown tragedy

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House Democrat, seeking answers about the mass murder-suicide in Jonestown, says the State Department has refused to "face up to the institutional breakdowns which helped produce" the tragedy in Guyana.

Rep. Andy Ireland of Florida said Tuesday that he and other lawmakers would focus on the People's Temple tragedy when a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee began two days of hearings today into U.S. consular services for Americans abroad.

People's Temple cult leader Jim Jones and 912 of his followers died, most of cyanide poisoning, during the ritual murder-suicide on Nov. 18, 1978. Hours earlier, Rep. Leo J. Ryan, D-Calif., three journalists and a cult defector were shot to death at a nearby airstrip.

Diego C. Asencio, assistant secretary of state for consular affairs, was to testify today about the overall problem of providing adequate services and emergency aid for U.S. citizens living or traveling overseas. He was to be joined at today's hearing by Richard McCoy, who had served as chief consular officer at Georgetown, Guyana, prior to the Jonestown tragedy.

"It's clear to me that the State Department has refused to face up to the institutional breakdowns which helped to produce the Jonestown tragedy," Ireland said.

He said he believes the department has failed to fully assess responsibility for problems in its handling of the Jonestown affair. "We hope through these hearings to analyze in detail who knew what at State, when they knew it and what they did about it," he said.

Ireland added that "until I get some frank answers from State on these questions, I will continue to believe that they are covering up for failures of their performance — then and now."

An earlier committee staff investigation found that the U.S. Embassy in Guyana did not respond adequately to "progressively mounting indications of highly irregular and illegal activities in Jonestown."

Attacks on 11 persons may be linked to slaying of nun

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — The brutal rape of a 77-year-old woman and attacks on as many as 10 other persons may be linked to a nun's weekend slaying, members of a newly-formed investigating team say.

The latest victim emerged from a coma Tuesday at an Amarillo hospital, police said Tuesday. Investigators were questioning several persons to see if the same person was involved in her attempted rape and the death of Sister Tadea Benz, 76, at St. Francis Convent on the city's northeast side.

The two women were attacked within the same time period late Friday or early Saturday.

Captain Jimmy Davis, head of the police detective division, said that no suspects had been identified in any of the cases.

Police said the 77-year-old woman was attacked in her home near the downtown area between 8:30 p.m. Friday and 1:30 p.m. Saturday. Sister Tadea was found beaten and strangled to death on the floor next to her bed at the convent in northeast Amarillo.

An autopsy showed the nun had been raped. Police said the other woman was found by a friend at about 2 p.m. Saturday. She had been beaten in the head, face and shoulders and was incoherent, investigators said.

Police said Sister Tadea had been killed about 4 a.m. Saturday.

The other woman's injuries were apparently inflicted with fists, police said. She is in satisfactory condition at Southwest Osteopathic Hospital.

Your cup of tea may be from the South

By JONATHAN W. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — To tea lovers, a cup of their favorite beverage can call to mind exotic names and faraway places. Darjeeling. Oolong. Ceylon. India. China. Summerville.

Summerville?

Indeed. Summerville, S.C., is the home of the Pinehurst Tea Plantation, an anomaly in American agricultural history.

At the turn of the century, the 100-acre plantation produced tea so fine that it beat out centuries-old Oriental blends and took first place at the 1905 St. Louis World's Fair.

Pinehurst tea was sold in New York and as far west as Chicago. Pinehurst even developed "tea tablets," a forerunner of instant tea, for use by campers and travelers.

Now all that remains of the great Pinehurst plantation are several rows of tea bushes at the Coastal Experiment Station of Clemson University and scattered bushes in the yards of Summerville residents.

Still, Pinehurst represents proof to tea experts that the plant can be grown in this country.

"I do believe firmly that quality tea in quantity could be produced in South Carolina," Ron Robbins, a Clemson horticulture professor, said. "I think that coastal areas from South Carolina on through Louisiana and maybe Texas would be ... suitable areas."

There's only one obstacle, say agricultural scientists — tea would be far too expensive to grow here in competition with the Far East and Africa. Foreign tea is cheap because the labor needed to handpick tiny little tea leaves is cheap.

As far back as 1899, the then-owner of Pinehurst, Dr. Charles Shepard, noted the cost of producing tea in America would be high because of the "comparative dearness" of labor.

Shepard wrote, "At Pinehurst, colored children do the picking, and very satisfactorily. A free school is maintained for them: every pupil of suitable age and size is required to pick; others are excluded from the gardens.

"The older children earn from 30 cents to 50 cents a day; the younger ones in proportion."

Robbins noted, however, that "U.S. labor was inexpensive at the time" and that "child labor was not looked down upon as it is now."

Tea's South Carolina connection goes back to 1800, when French botanist Andre Micheaux planted tea at Middleton Barony along the Ashley River, about 15 miles northwest of Charleston.

In 1848, Dr. Junius Smith, convinced tea was a crop that would work in the South, bought a farm near Greenville to experiment with tea cultivation. He was badly beaten three years later during a robbery and died of his injuries two years after that, but not before he had brewed and enjoyed tea from his plants.

After that, according to a recent article by Robbins in the Clemson publication Agri-Search, the federal patent office and Department of Agriculture "imported tea seeds and plants throughout the South for trial."

"The U.S. government went so far as to send Robert Fortune, Britain's primary authority on the tea industry in China, to collect tea seeds from the Orient," he wrote.

In 1880, Congress appropriated money for an experimental tea farm near Summerville. But the experiments were discontinued when a less enthusiastic commissioner of agriculture took office.

At the same time, Dr. Charles Shep-ard had started his own Pinehurst Experimental Tea Garden near Summerville. Shepard belonged to the Agricultural Society of South Carolina, which had been trying to stir interest in tea.

Federal agriculture people began working with Shepard, and his tea garden became the Pinehurst Tea Plantation.

Shepard described the leaves of one tea variety, his black tea, as having a deep cherry red color.

Actor Redford's New York apartment hit by robbers

By CINDY JOSEPH
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Two burglars came through the bathroom window of Robert Redford's spacious Fifth Avenue apartment early Tuesday as the actor, his wife and 9-year-old daughter slept.

But the intruders roused Mrs. Redford by knocking over a flowerpot and fled emptyhanded while she summoned help, police said.

Two 17-year-old suspects were captured unarmed on the roof and were charged with burglary.

The arrested pair also live on Fifth Avenue, but about three-quarters of a mile north at 110th Street — figuratively the other side of the tracks, where the swank avenue becomes part of Harlem.

Without waking her husband, Lola Redford sneaked a look into the bathroom at about 2:20 a.m. and saw the back of one intruder, according to police officer Allan Somlinsky, one of the arresting officers.

Mrs. Redford then went across the apartment, which takes up the seventh floor,and alerted the doorman via the intercom. The doorman called police.

But before he did, Smolinsky said, the burglars raced up the fire escape to the roof of the 14-story building.

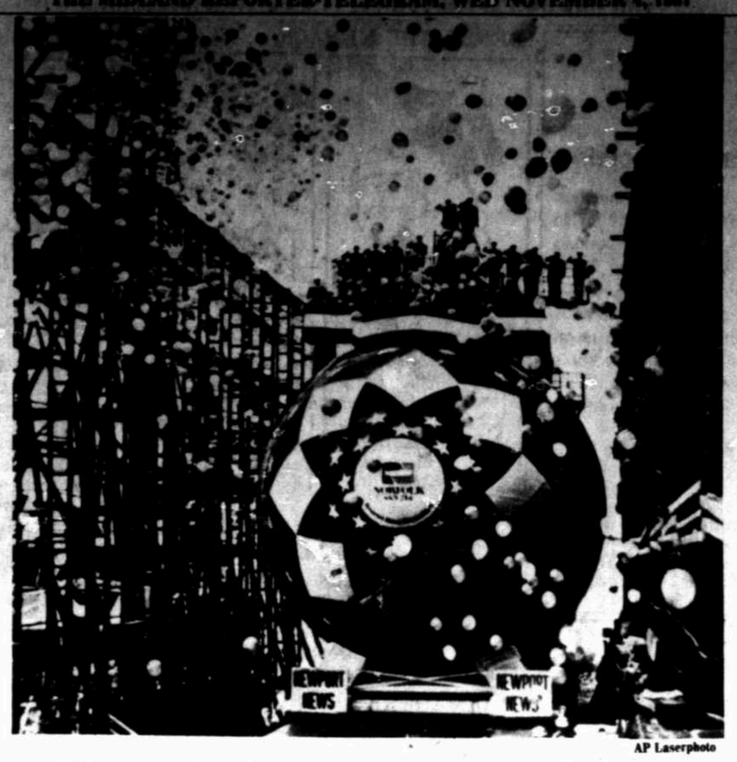

One of them told the officer later, "We saw the lady and then split," Smolinsky said.

He said they did not know until they got to court to await arraignment that it was Redford's apartment. It was "a crime of opportunity," with the burglars going up the fire escape until they found an unlocked window, said Smolinsky. He said a woman on a lower floor had seen the robbers going up.

On the roof, Smolinsky said, his flashlight illuminated what looked like a black bag behind air-conditioner ducts.

"When the bag moved, I grabbed it," he said. He said after a brief struggle, he and his partner, Robert Linardo, subdued the black-jacketed teen-ager and his suspected accomplice, who also was hiding behind the ducts.

Brought back to the apartment, where a calm Redford now was awake, one suspect was identified by Mrs. Redford and the other was identified by the neighbor from below, Smolinsky said.

Opening lead: King of ◇.

One of the fascinating aspects of duplicate bridge is that the same hand gets played many times, giving us the opportunity to study the expertise of a variety of players. We followed this hand at several tables at a recent tournament.

Four hearts was the popular contract, reached on an auction such as the above. Almost invariably, the king of diamonds was the opening lead, won by the ace. After cashing the ace of spades, most declarers led the king of hearts, and few Wests could resist the temptation to grab the ace.

Now declarer was able to make the contract with careful play. He could force an entry to the table by leading a low trump to the eight-six, conceding a second trump trick, and the defenders could do no better than win two trump tricks and a diamond—declarer's club losers would be discarded on dummy's spades.

A few Wests managed to defeat the contract. They held up the ace of trumps for one round, won the second heart, cashed the queen of diamonds and exited with the nine of trumps. That meant that declarer was cut off from dummy, and he had to lose three club tricks for down two.

One declarer found a way to make the contract without any assist from a defender. He won the ace of diamonds, cashed the ace of spades and exited with the jack of diamonds. This simple stratagem had the effect of end playing West at trick three. In fact, had West returned any suit other than a club, declarer would have made an overtrick. After a club return, however, West was able to ruff the third club with the nine of hearts, thereby holding South to ten tricks.

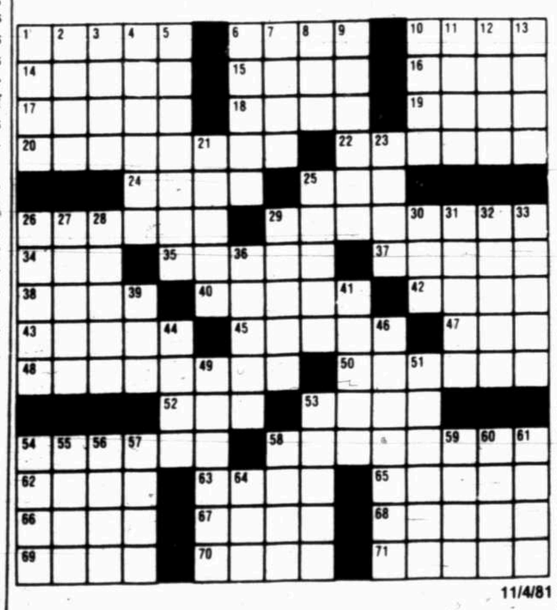

It is perhaps one of the flaws of duplicate that the only player who found the winning line in four hearts received no greater reward than those who got home thanks to a defensive error. But he does get a pat on the back from us.

Presley was fed a smorgasbord of medications

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — When Elvis Presley went on tour with his rock 'n' roll show he followed a daily drug diet drawn up by Dr. George Nichopoulos that included a smorgasbord of medications, the physician testified.

Nichopoulos ended more than two days of testimony Tuesday in his Criminal Court trial on charges of over-prescribing drugs to Presley, who died in August 1977, rock 'n' roller Jerry Lee Lewis and other patients.

Final arguments were scheduled today by defense and prosecution attorneys before the case goes to the jury.

For the past month, the jury has been listening to testimony about the 54-year-old internist's medical practice and his treatment of Presley and Lewis, who were dependent on various prescription drugs.

The indictment charges Nichopoulos with nine counts of prescribing amphetamines, barbiturates and narcotics "not in good faith to relieve pain and suffering and not to cure a physical infirmity or disease."

Two counts of the indictment charge him with prescribing addictive drugs to Presley and Lewis without making a good-faith effort to cure their drug dependence.

If convicted, Nichopoulos could be sentenced to two to 10 years in prison and fined $20,000 on each count.

Nichopoulos said he was trying to become his patients' sole source of drugs in an effort to reduce and eventually eliminate their drug dependence.

During final questioning Tuesday afternoon, Nichopoulos described a drug plan that called for administering medication to Presley when he got up, before he performed, after a show and before he went to bed.

Nichopoulos testified Presley's drug plan called for injections of an unknown medication prescribed by another physician, vitamins, appetite suppressants, medicine to stimulate his bowel, diuretics, antihistamines for itching, medicine for dizziness, tranquilizers, painkillers and other drugs.

But Nichopoulos testified that harmless substitutes were given for many of the drugs. He said at least 80 percent of the medications listed were not controlled drugs.

During earlier testimony, patients told of obtaining prescriptions from Nichopoulos. Doctors called by the state were critical of his use of drugs in treating drug-dependent patients.

Dr. Forest Tennant Jr., who heads a series of drug abuse clinics in Los Angeles, testified for the defense that in his treatment of patients," Nichopoulos was unwittingly using methods that have only recently been validated by research.

He said Nichopoulos' attempts to win his patients' confidence, become their sole source of drugs, and then gradually reduce the drug intake was probably the most effective way to treat drug dependence.

California trio hunts for dinosaurs in African jungle

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A trio of Californians who went to Africa to search for dinosaurs may already have reached their destination, a swampy jungle lake that according to pygmy lore harbors huge, mysterious creatures for centuries.

When last heard from in an Oct. 22 message that arrived by cable Tuesday from the Republic of the Congo, Herman and Kia Regusters of South Pasadena, cameraman Darby Switzer of Reseda, five African officials and 15 hired pygmies were about to embark on the last leg of their journey, a four-day, 50-mile trek through hazardous jungle swamplands.

"So that would mean that either they're at Lake Tele or they've been eaten by a snake and stomped on by a leopard or whatever," quipped John Sack, an associate of the explorers who stayed behind in Los Angeles.

Regusters, a 47-year-old consulting engineer, and his wife left for Africa in early September to try to photograph what the pygmies call the mokele mbembe, a very large, brontosaurus-like animal.

Stories of the creature in the swampy Lake Tele area have been handed down by the pygmies for 200 years. In 1776, a missionary reported seeing animal tracks 36 inches in diameter. There have been other, similar stories and last year one explorer came back with film of what observers say looks something like a dinosaur neck and head sticking out of a river.

Scientists say the last of the dinosaurs died 60 million years ago.

The Regusters, who are paying for the four-month expedition themselves, spent several weeks in Brazzaville, capital of the Congolese republic, before flying to Epena, a pygmy village 500 miles inland and the site of the nearest airstrip to Lake Tele, Sack said.

After about two weeks in Epena the explorers had originally planned to complete the trip to the lake in 18-foot dugout canoes equipped with outboard motors.

"Everyone assumed it was a 90-mile journey up one river and down another," Sack said.

But he said they got only as far as Boa, a tiny village of pygmies 40 miles from Epena "and 100 miles from the nearest telephone." They then found their maps were wrong and they would have to travel the remaining 50 miles on land, "going through the jungle, going through the swamp on foot through a very dangerous area," Sack said.

"It's not so much the leopards and the elephants there as it is the poisonous snakes," he added.

Sack said the reason it took so long for the Oct. 22 message to arrive was that it had to be taken by boat from Boa to Epena and then flown to Brazzaville where it was cabled to Los Angeles.

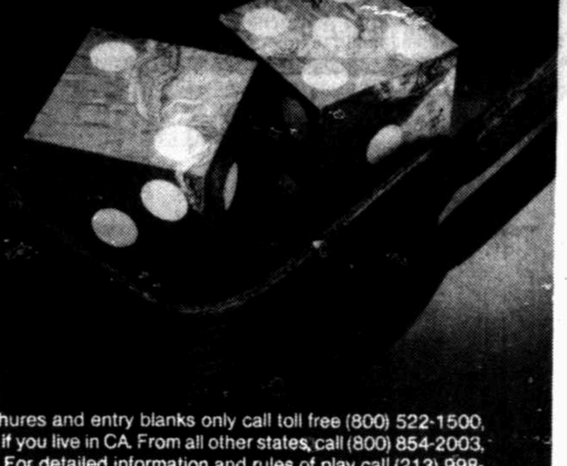

"The pygmy who was carrying the message back to Epena wouldn't have a canoe with an outboard motor, I don't think," Sack noted, and the Epena-Brazzaville plane only runs once a week.

He said he hoped Regusters would send back another message via pygmy, boat and air when the expedition reached the lake, but that he wouldn't worry about the Regusters unless they hadn't returned by New Year's Day as scheduled.

Future Farmers of America state president visits MHS

By DEBORAH MASHBURN, DARA PERRY and JENNIFER RAMSEY

Future Farmers of America (FFA) participated in the State Fair in Dallas Oct. 19-23. MHS sent 15 students and their 17 animals. Fourteen of the animals won ribbons.

State FFA President Rafe Foreman, from Idalou, Texas, will be at Midland High School Thursday at 11 a.m., which is a real honor for our FFA Chapter. The district leadership contest will be at Odessa High School on Nov. 16. MHS will be represented by four or five leadership teams.

The drama department recently held auditions for any MHS students interested in performing in the upcoming production of the musical, "Pippin." Leading characters will be portrayed by Candy Baimbridge, Don Stroud, Jennifer Ramsey, J.J. Baskin, Leslie Fort and Ben Glenn.

Members of the chorus are Jennifer Bales, Cindy Besek, Lisa Caldeway, Teresa Coleman, Liz Calvin, Chris Conner, Cindy Davis, Molly Franklin, Lisa Garrett, Christa Garlitz, Julie Griffith and Penny Holleman. Also singing and dancing will be Carlette Jones, Diane LaBouff, Tracy Lewis, Judy McDuffey, Marta McNabb, Paige Paker, Bert Robinson, Suelyn Szuba, Karen Tabor, Pam Tatsch, Lorraine Wallace and Laura White.

Boys in the production are Ben Cox, John Dalton, Darren Harris, Sheffie Hilliard, Gary Lyons, Jim Martin, Ken Meckley, Walter Paul Miller, Otis Preston, Drew Richards, Wayne Sims and Merlin Whitten.

Don Stroud was honored today by the Downtown Lions Club. He is very active in theatre arts and frequently plays leads.

Rotarians selected Braxton Glass and Karen Price.

Mark Seery, physics teacher has applied to National Engineer Aptitude Search for MHS to become a testing center. The test compares math skills for those students desiring to become engineers.

The Student Council has reopened voter registration; all voting will be done by machine in the future. Voting booths will be scattered around the school to avoid crowding. Be sure to register today or Thursday in the cafeteria or in the trophy room either before school, during lunch or after school.

Photography club recently held its first meeting to discuss sponsors, officers and club activities. Sponsor is Kerry Davis, German teacher at MHS. The club, however, does need another sponsor. Present goals include increasing membership and setting up a dark room.

MHS Girls' Golf team finished second at the Plainview Invitational on Oct. 30, with a team total of 378 points. Kelle Mobley was the first place medalist with a top score of 78, and one point behind at 79 was Janice Littlefield, second place medalist. Other members on the team are Melissa Baldridge and Shelley Parker, seniors and sophomore Erin Shelly.

Congratulations to the football team for your 26-24 victory over Odessa High. Keep it up this week against Cooper.

To LHS, congratulations! You did a great job against Permian.

Saturday, the JV Bullpups travel to Abilene for a game against the Cooper JV. Good Luck!

All you pool players get ready for the 2nd Annual Youth Center Pool and Team Snooker Tournament. Information is available at the YC. Today is the deadline, so if you haven't signed up, hurry over and do so. The tournament will be on Saturday, Nov. 21

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Taste of foods does not indicate sodium content

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been told to restrict my intake of salt, but some of what my doctor told me just doesn't make sense. He not ony suggests I go easy on the pizza, but that I stay away from chocolate pudding, too. Since when is chocolate pudding salty? — Tom, Newark, N.J.

Dear Tom: The taste of a food does not necessarily indicate its sodium content, and it is the sodium that you want to avoid. One-half cup of instant chocolate pudding contains 470 milligrams of sodium, compared with about 450 milligrams in an average slice of cheese pizza. Foods with a very high sodium content include lobster, dill pickles, and tuna to which salt has been added.

If you must restrict your sodium intake, don't do it on the basis of taste, alone.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine used to take large doses of vitamin C which he claimed was good to prevent colds. Now he's into vitamin E, and he says the more you take, the better. I don't know what vitamin E is supposed to do, but large doses of anything seem dangerous. Do you have any information on the subject? — Craig, Medford, Ore.

Dear Craig: Some physicians do claim that large doses of vitamin E can be taken with no ill effects. However, Dr. Hyman J. Roberts of the Palm Beach Institute for Medical Research, disagrees. He says he has seen patients in whom high doses of vitamin E caused hypertension, fatigue, and breast tumors, in addition to other conditions.

In general, I do not favor the idea of a person taking large doses of any vitamin except under a doctor's direction. The notion that "if a little is good for you a lot ought to be better" should be discarded.

Dear Dr. Solomon: In one of your books you mentioned that both diet and exercise are important in increasing the amount of good cholesterol in the body; but is it necessary to exercise and follow a certain diet? I'm still a meat-and-potatoes man, and I don't cut away any of the fat from my steak because I like the taste. But I do work out regularly, and I run three miles a least three times a week. Do my eating habits reduce the value of my exercise? — Randy, Brooklyn

Dear Randy: As you indicate, both diet and exercise are preferable to either one alone for people interested in maintaining their health; however, sticking to one is better than doing neither.

One study suggests that exercise may be even more important than diet in increasing high-density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol (good cholesterol). Researchers from the Baylor College of Medicine investigated the effect of diet on HDL in three groups — marathon runners, joggers, and inactive men. HDL levels were about 50 percent higher in the marathon runners than in the sedentary group, while the level for the joggers was somewhere in between.

Caring truly shows

During the past year numerous improvements were made in the operation of Midland Memorial Hospital, improvements all Midlanders can view with pride because they translate into better health care for all of us.

Those improvements were highlighted for the hospital's board of trustees last week by MMH administrator Ray Branson, who celebrated his first year with the hospital on Sept. 30.

Efforts by Branson and other hospital officials have led to changes at the hospital that have reduced the employee turnover rate somewhat and resulted in an improvement in morale. That is important to stability at the hospital and although Branson noted that morale at the facility hasn't recovered as far as he would have liked, several policy changes appear to be helping.

The emergency room operation definitely was a bone of contention with the public some months back and there, too, significant changes appear to be improving the situation.

A "Nurse Triage System" has been implemented, resulting in improved communications with emergency room patients to adequately assess the severity of their illness or injury. Most individuals who go to the emergency room expect quick treatment, not fully realizing that other, more seriously injured or ill, may require the attention of medical personnel first.

Under the triage system, those who have injuries or illnesses of less severity may be required to wait for awhile as emergency room personnel treat the more seriously ill.

A study conducted in July and August this year showed that 49 percent of emergency room patients had a total ER time of an hour or less while 34 percent had a total time of one to two hours and eight percent were required to spend two to three hours in the emergency room.

Emergency room personnel have a difficult job to do and the public can make that job a little easier by understanding that doctors and nurses will see them as quickly as humanly possible under the circumstances.

Numerous other changes have been made in the total operation of the hospital. We believe those changes have been beneficial and will continue to improve the hospital operation.

Branson is to be commended for his efforts at making Midland Memorial Hospital a finer health care facility. But many others have contributed to the improvements at Midland Memorial. All who have contributed to the improvements deserve commendation for their efforts.

It takes the work of many to improve a situation like the one that existed at Midland Memorial. The caring of Branson and other hospital officials and employees truly shows.

Too little teaching

The national decline in pupil performance may be at root the result of nothing more complex than too little teaching.

An eight-year, $4 million-plus study of a cross-section of public schools shows that some elementary schools spend as little as 18.5 hours on instruction while others spend as much as 27.5 hours.

As for the controversial downskid in basics, most elementary schools, no matter how else they manage their time, spend about the same amount of time daily on reading and writing, 90 minutes, and on mathematics, 54 or 55 minutes.

The exhaustive project, "A Study of Schooling," was financed by the Kettering Foundation, 10 other private institutions and two federal agencies, and will be released next fall.

A preview was given by its author, John I. Goodlad, dean of the UCLA School of Education, who told the National Commission on Excellence in Education that the teaching average for all grade schools was 22.5 hours, or 4.5 hours a day. That is just not enough, he said, urging that 25 hours be made the standard.

The schools that spend more time in teaching do not have longer hours but simply use time more efficiently, Goodlad said.

"We have heard a great deal about equality of education opportunity in this country, but one of the most glaring types of inequality seems to have escaped our attention. And it has nothing to do with income or race," said Goodlad.

Bully! we say. This critique should give the taxpaying public and school officials a good yardstick for measuring school performance anywhere.

Schools that fall far short in teaching are wasting money. But worse, they are cheating the pupils and planting bad seeds that will harm society in due time.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Jogging shoes nearly ended assignment

WASHINGTON — Deep in the craggy mountains of Afghanistan, the world's most rugged guerrillas are playing a deadly game of hide-and-seek with the Russian invaders. The fiercest guerrilla of them all is Mullah Jallalludin.

Jack Anderson

I sent my roving reporter, Peter Grant, into Soviet-occupied Afghanistan to interview him. Grant disguised himself as an Afghan mountain man in a weathered turban, baggy pants, knee-length shirt and vest. But he refused to give up his made-in-America Adidas jogging shoes for stiff, uncomfortable native sandals — a decision that almost blew his cover.

The enterprising Grant experienced the dangers and rigors of guerrilla fighting against the Russians with their superior fire power and helicopter gunships. He shared with the guerrillas the hardships of combat. He observed the siege of a Soviet outpost in the barren outreaches of the border regions.

The border crossing was a story in itself. It began with a Kiplingesque trek to the Pakistan frontier with Grant garbed as a Mujahidi guerrilla. A full beard completed his disguise.

He passed through six checkpoints without arousing suspicion, his Adidas shoes notwithstanding. At one stop, the guerrillas were detained for a day near a Pakistan military base. To reduce the risk of detection, Grant hid out in a grubby, sweltering fly-filled room, without a toilet or running water. It was the most elegant quarters he was to see for the next several days.

"My Afghan hosts occasionally brought me sweet tea and tasteless food," Grant wrote. "It was better than anything I got afterwards."

Peeking through a crack in the door, he watched the guerrillas load a truck with about 20 boxes of arms and ammunition. He snooped outside after dark and discovered a warehouse filled with about 300 boxes of munitions.

The guerrillas picked up two other Westerners, Richard and Christian Mouy, a French medical team, who would also be smuggled across the border. Because they had no beards to camouflage their pale faces, they covered their heads with chaderis.

Explained Grant: "The Pakistan government prohibits the Red Cross from getting any closer than 30 miles to the Afghan border. Many wounded Mujahidin die on the grueling, five-day donkey trip for medical help."

So the Mouys, devout French Muslims, had volunteered to bring medical help into the battle zone.

The three Westerners were crowded as inconspicuously as possible into a van with nine Mujahidin fighters. "At the last roadblock," Grant reported, "the border official swung open the back door and for a full 30 seconds, I could feel his eyes staring at my Western jogging shoes. I felt them growing to the size of boxcars.

"He grabbed my shoulder and demanded, 'Do you speak English?' Like an idiot, I grunted no, realizing too late that an uneducated Afghan shouldn't even have understood the question.

"He began screaming and waving me out of the van. I was about to make a dejected exit when he suddenly disappeared with the guerrilla escort leader into a nearby hut. I sat and wondered was I going to be arrested? Deported? To come so close and ...

"My favorite Mullah emerged, and 10 minutes later we were across the border in Afghanistan. He explained that he had solved the problem with a bribe of 3,000 rupees or about $300.

"That leaves me with another problem: How to write this off on my expense account."

Meanwhile, my reporter, his Adidas still conspicuous beneath a guerrilla outfit, was in forbidden Afghanistan. Next episode: Grant finds the most wanted man on the Soviet enemies' list, the terrible Jallalludin.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: The Department of Energy has fallen into the disturbing habit of commissioning the industries it is supposed to regulate to write its official studies. An internal memo prepared by the White House budget office, for example, warns that the DOE inspector general will soon release a report which "reveals that the electrical utility industry (provided) technical data and analysis that formed the basis of a critical chapter" in a study about the industry's plans for energy emergencies. "There are no assurances that industry bias is not present," the budget office memo concluded.

— In the past, the FBI has routinely transferred its future managers from post to post as a means of broadening their experience. But each such transfer costs the bureau some $12,000. The agents themselves have also begun complaining because mortgage rates are so high that they cannot find buyers for their old homes or afford new ones. So the FBI is reducing management transfers. Last year, there were 320; this year, there will be about 100.

— Education Secretary Terrel Bell got a pat on the back from President Reagan when he spoke up in a Cabinet meeting in support of budget director David Stockman's proposed 12 percent slash in funds for 1982. Soon thereafter, Bell was informed by Stockman that the Education Department would have to absorb a 27 percent cutback. The stunned education secretary dashed off a letter to the budget director. "I am convinced that you are not aware of the magnitude of the budget authority cuts required to meet the budget outlay targets" that had been set, wrote Bell. Stockman's edict, added the education secretary, had put him "in a position of considerable embarrassment."

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

President Reagan makes an offhand remark about nuclear war being possible in Europe and hundreds of thousands of Europeans take to the streets. What's the matter with those hotheads — no sense of humor?

●

If Edwin Meese III or James Baker III or Alexander Haig I had said anything like that, I could understand the Europeans holding anti-American demonstrations. But our genial host is only assigned breezy quips, so what's all the excitement about?

●

We Americans don't like to pick up the morning paper and see our president mocked and ridiculed by a bunch of German youths who are free today because George C. Scott didn't take nothin' from nobody.

●

The French would all be speaking German if John Wayne didn't march the 101st Airborne under the Arc de Triumph and eventually link up with Karl Malden to make Europe safe for Marlene Dietrich.

●

Listen, Europeans — ask your parents to tell you what your homeland was like before it was liberated by the Screen Actors Guild.

ART BUCHWALD

Christmas calls for a paper gift!

Every time you pick up the newspaper, you see advertisements screaming the words 'TAX FREE' at you. I'm not knocking it since the ads pay my salary, but it seems to me that with high interest rates and inflation, Americans are now trading in pieces of paper instead of things.

Art Buchwald

The other day I got a call from my accountant who said, "I've got good news for you. If we give your bank 5,000 pieces of paper, it will give you back almost 6,000 in six months."

"I saw an advertisement the other day that said if I gave a savings and loan institution 5,000 pieces it would give me 6,000 pieces AND a toaster."

"Big deal. The toaster probably cost them three pieces of paper."

"But I could use the toaster more than the paper," I told him.

"Look, if you don't want to go for the bank's deal, I can get you into a money fund which will pay 7,000 pieces of paper for every 5,000 you give them, unless the interest rates go down."

"Why can't I take the 5,000 pieces of paper and put them down on an automobile?"

"Because an automobile wears out. In three years you'll be lucky to get 900 pieces of paper for it."

"Yeah, but you can't get around town on a piece of paper."

"Believe me, this is no time to get out of paper. If you don't want to put your money in notes, put it in stock. It's more of a gamble, but it's still paper."

"What kind of stock?"

"There is a company called A&C which is rumored to be buying out the P&Q Company. The buyers have offered 65 pieces of A&C paper for each P&Q certificate, which is only worth 30. If you buy, and the deal goes through, you'll make a paper profit of 35 certificates."

"What does the A&C Company do?"

"Who knows!"

"Is the P&Q Company making any money?"

"No. That's why A&C wants to buy it. You see, P&Q had a bad year and has huge tax losses. A&C had a good year and made a lot of profits. So, if it buys the losing company, A&C will be able to offset its profits against P&Q's losses, and then it won't have to pay any taxes to the government."

"Sounds like a good deal. Would it be all right to buy a dishwasher this fall? Ann says the other one is falling apart."

"This is no time to buy a dishwasher. I need all your cash to put into an All Savers Account so you can get tax-free interest."

"Great. But what do we do with all the dirty dishes?"

"Let them pile up until the loan rates go down."

"I don't think Ann's going to like that."

"She will when you show it to her on paper."

"My wife was never much for paper. She likes to buy things like chairs and lamps and clothes."

"Most of my clients' wives are like that and, believe me, it doesn't make my life any easier. But you just have to hang tough and explain that the more pieces of paper you can put away right now, the less you'll have to worry about your future."

"What do I give my grandchildren for Christmas?"

"How about some nice, safe municipal bonds?"

A CHANGING WORLD

Ron Nessen doesn't think press treats Reagan unfairly

WASHINGTON — The White House has not complained but some of President Reagan's supporters have claimed that the press, particularly the Washington segment, is treating him unfairly.

John Pinkerman

An expert on the subject disagrees. Ron Nessen, veteran newsman, for two and one-half years press secretary for then President Gerald Ford and now senior vice president of one of the nation's top public relations firms, has some interesting observations on press behavior — and what a president might do to maintain a favorable newspaper-radio-television image.

"There always will be a certain amount of adversary attitudes regarding the press' coverage of the White House and the president," Nessen said in an interview, "and that's not all bad. But, what happens sometimes is that presidents as public figures get too concerned about what the papers say about them; about how they will look in the papers and on TV.

"If presidents make wise decisions there is no need for them to worry much about what the press says about them. I remember when I was in the White House (1974-77), a slogan that Don Rumsfeld (Ford's chief of staff) had on his desk. It said, 'The best press policy is to be a good president.'

"It's as simple as that. A president can't get good stories without good decisions."

Nessen said that President Reagan is acting in a manner that should make for good relations with the press. "He has the type of personality," Nessen said, "that doesn't allow tough questions to get under his skin. He has people on his staff who understand the reporters."

Even Mr. Reagan, however, is experiencing a more or less traditional response from a more or less traditional press, according to Nessen. "There is a pattern," he said. "First, a new president, and Reagan is no exception, enjoys the euphoria of a honeymoon. Then, the pendulum swings in the other direction. The adversary attitude of the press surfaces. But, this will settle down, it almost always does, and the press will get to full coverage of the issues as the skepticism changes to full attention on hard and solid coverage of the government."

While enjoying his present position with Marston and Rothenberg, a firm much concerned with national issues, and his 20 years as an award-winning news and TV correspondent, Nessen recalls with nostalgia his brief time in the White House with Ford.

"I guess that in my time at the White House the press skepticism was at its height," he said. It was right after the disasters involving President Nixon and Vietnam and all this made the press' attitude understandable and justifiable.

"I do think, however, that Ford — and I have considerable personal pride in this — made a genuine contribution to the restoration of a good relationship with the press. Ford liked reporters, based on his 25 years in Congress and in the vice presidency. He understood their jobs. He visited their homes, he had them in (the White House) for evenings and he had frequent news conferences. He initiated the follow-up question which helped reporters a great deal and he had frequent news conferences outside Washington where we could get a real feel of what the people and the press across the country were thinking.

Nessen had particular praise for editors and reporters in small and large cities throughout America. "They ask different questions than the Washington reporters," he said, "more concerned with issues that touch the people directly, like mortgages, than the business of chasing leaks that Washington reporters are concerned with much of the time."

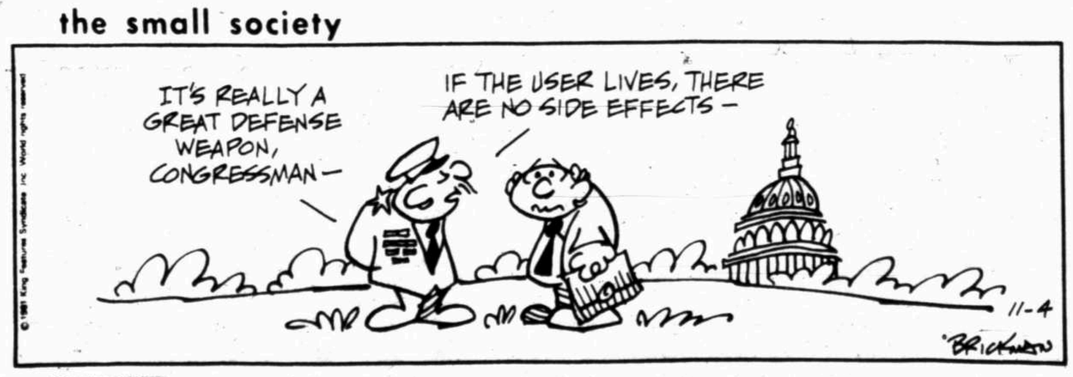

In the end, Nessen believes that a president's perception of the press, whether he knows it or not, much depends on his own good, ordinary or bad performance in the Oval Office.

Nessen has been where the action is. He nearly lost his life in Vietnam in 1966, on camera before millions of TV viewers, when he was struck in the chest near the heart by a Viet Cong hand grenade fragment. He has covered several presidential election campaigns and served in the White House. He is the author of two books and two more are near publication time.

Nessen is fully qualified to analyze the perception of a president that the public gets through the press. His views thus are of more than passing interest to those of us who sometimes wonder if we are getting a "true" look at the operations of the presidency.

Cured of cancer, author has a 'Second Life'

AP Laserphoto

Author Stephani Cook browses through some volumes in the library of her New York City apartment. Her new book, "Second Life," chronicles a disease and a life gone haywire from a rare form of cancer.

By NANCY SHULINS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Cancer invaded Stephani Cook's body at a time when those who knew her thought of her as a beautiful mother of two, a Barnard College graduate and former model married to a successful Wall Street investment banker.

She was all those things.

She was also a 27-year-old woman who wanted to die.

The story of Stephani Cook is not just a story about outwitting death. It is a story about learning to survive life.

She tells it in a new book called "Second Life," which chronicles a disease and a life gone haywire, an illness and a recovery from a rare form of cancer — and a more common malady: "a lifetime of indecision, fear, guilt and paralysis."

As a young woman, she dreamed of a passionate husband but chose a pragmatic one. As a young wife, she felt like a failure and blamed herself for her unhappiness.

She couldn't seem to do anything about it.

When she first brought her shoulder and chest pains to her doctor, he responded with kindly skepticism and fatherly advice about the dangers of self-indulgence and the importance of getting enough rest.

"My resolve, my impulse to insist, faltered once I had been examined and found myself across from Dr. G in his tastefully decorated office," she wrote. "I smelled patronization coming on. Even upside down I could read the word 'Librium.'"

She interpreted her pain as punishment for her inability to do what other women seemed to manage so easily: to accept life's limitations, to abandon romantic notions, to grow up. She vowed to try harder to make herself happy.

But the symptoms persisted. The doctors poked, probed and puzzled, then attacked with tests and operations, most of which were painful, debilitating — and unnecessary.

She wasn't getting any better.

And she couldn't seem to do anything about it.

"I could hardly get out of bed in the morning; how then could I get new doctors and start with them all over again, complaining, apologizing, convincing?" she wrote.

Finally, in November 1971, Ms. Cook's illness was diagnosed as cancer of the placenta — a disease that can be spotted with a simple urinalysis, a disease that developed during her second pregnancy.

Until recently, 90 percent of its victims died within a year. By the time it was discovered in Ms. Cook, she'd had it for two years.

She had also undergone open heart surgery and a radical hysterectomy in which doctors removed her uterus, both ovaries and her cervix.

"What if this is it? Right here? What if my last view of the world is the cracked ceiling, the peeling green paint, instead of the sky and the trees and the Hudson (River) in the late-afternoon sun? What if I have long since eaten my last heavy, dark, moist chocolate cake? with a glass of sweet cold milk to go with it?...What if I die?" she wrote. "What if I die?"

After four months of chemical warfare, doctors cured the cancer. After a lifetime of psychological surrender, Stephani Cook cured herself.

The dark, silky curtain of hair that fell out during chemotherapy has grown back; the beauty believed lost to disease has returned. The cancer has not, and she is "basically very healthy," she says.

"Second Life" grew out of short articles she wrote for "The Journal of Current Social Issues" and "Glamour" magazines. It is "neither revenge nor self-therapy," she says now. "It started because my experience appeared potentially helpful to other people."

Houston mayoral candidate Kathy Whitmire waves to the crowd at her headquarters Tuesday night as early returns showed her to have a commanding lead over the other contenders.

Controller, police chief in Houston runoff

By JAMES R. KING
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Kathy Whitmire, an accountant who promised to run the city like a businesss, and Jack Heard, a career law officer who promised to curb urban crime, won runoff berths in Tuesday's election and will face each other Nov. 17 to decide Houston's next mayor.

Incumbent Mayor Jim McConn, a veteran of two terms who was blamed for this boom town's problems, was far behind the two leaders in late returns. He bitterly denounced the news media for what he called "unfair treatment."

In early morning tabulations including 374 of 396 precincts, or 94 percent of the vote, Mrs. Whitmire had 97,949 votes, or 36.3 percent, and Heard had 66,376 votes or 24.6 percent. Former City Councilman Louis Macey had 36,954 votes or 13.7 percent, and McConn had 36,571 votes or 13.5 percent.

Justice of the Peace Al Green was running in fifth place with 8.9 percent, and attorney Noble Ginther had less than 2 percent. The other nine candidates shared the remaining votes — about 1 perceent.

MCCONN, 53, said he received "unfair treatment" by the press and said his political career was probably over.

"The allegations and the innuendoes in the media have to stop," he said. "It destroys the integrity of that person. I have more integrity than anybody I know in the media. I dont think I'd want to subject myself to this again."

The runoff election promised to be a battle between a youthful woman who has appealed to liberals and moderates and a veteran crime fighter who has strong conservative support.

Mrs. Whitmire, a 35-year-old widow who has served a city controller for the past four years, challenged Heard, a 63-year-old former chief of police, to a televised debate even before all the votes were counted.

"We spent the least amount of money of any of the major candidates and we are very proud," said Mrs. Whitmire, who relied heavily on volunteers during the campaign. "We have already sent a telegram to Sheriff Jack Heard inviting him to join us in a televised debate."

HOUSTON, the nation's fifth largest city, has never had a woman mayor.

Heard promptly agreed to the debate and reminded voters of his tough, anti-crime stance. "We are going to dedicate ourselves to making this city what we want to live in, to feel safe in," he said.

Endorsements could become an issue for both runoff candidates. Mrs. Whitmire said she was comfortable with the support she won from the Gay Political Caucus for her denouncement of discrimination against homosexuals.

But Heard said he did not want any help from the local Ku Klux Klan, which endorsed his candidacy and handed out Heard campaign literature while dressed in ceremonial robes. Heard said the Klansmen were "a bunch of clowns."

VOTERS also defeated a proposed limit on city property taxes. With 94 percent of the vote counted, the measure was losing, 77,118 to 69,900. It would have clamped a maximum rate of 50 cents per $100 valuation based on 100 percent market value. The current rate is 84 cents.

Former City Controller Leonel Castillo, who gave up the job in 1977 to serve as commissioner of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service for two years, appeared to have narrowly won a runoff spot against City Councilman Lance Lalor. With more than 95 percent of the votes counted early today, Lalor had 48.9 percent to Castillo's 33.7 percent in the four-man race.

Houston voters also elected a 14-member city council and helped decide the fate of seven proposed amendments to the state constitution.

McConn's opponents blamed him for traffic jams, mass transit failures, crime and pollution plaguing this fast-growing port city and oil refining center.

ANOTHER blow to his re-election effort came last February when a federal civil court jury found he had participated in an anti-trust conspiracy in awarding cable television franchises. He was held liable for part of a $2.1 million damage award.

A federal judge later overturned the jury's finding on a point of law, but in his ruling he criticized McConn as an "active co-conspirator" in an alleged scheme to award the lucrative franchises to cronies and business associates.

"So what about that?" McConn said after the election. "I won the cable TV suit (but) you wouldn't have believed it" from press accounts. "There was unfair treatment" in media coverage, he said.

"I'm disappointed in the way the media handles their business. They were obviously disappointed in the way I handled mine. So I guess we're even," he said.

Austin votes against nuclear project

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Austin residents voted Tuesday to hang a "For Sale" sign on their share of the long-time controversial South Texas Nuclear Project.

The final vote showed about 60 percent favored giving the city council authority to sell the city's 16 percent ownership of the regional nuclear power plant designed to solve future energy problems.

The vote was the sixth in nine years on Austin's participation.

"It was predominantly an economic issue," said Peck Young, a member of the city electric utility commission. "The project has proven itself to be too costly, a bad investment."

How the city will go about shedding its 16 percent in the multi-billion dollar project is still to be decided. There was nothing about that on the ballot.

Dr. Charles Urdy, city council member, said the council first would offer Austin's one-sixth ownership to the other partners — Houston, San Antonio and Corpus Christi power groups.

"If they do not want it, then that will be a longer, harder project.

Robb elected Virginia governor

By The Associated Press

Off-year elections for governor offered no clear message to President Reagan or his opposition today as Democrats celebrated a comeback in Virginia and both parties awaited the final count from a near dead-heat in New Jersey.

Charles S. Robb, the politically conservative son-in-law of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, restored the Democrats to control of the Virginia governor's office with a surprisingly easy victory Tuesday over Republican Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman.

But in New Jersey, where Reagan's budget and tax cuts were major issues, the race between Republican Thomas H. Kean and Democratic Rep. James J. Florio hinged on the tally today of absentee ballots from about half the state's 21 counties.

With all 5,647 precincts reported, Kean led Florio by 2,060 votes out of more than 2.26 million cast.

The unofficial totals pending completion of the absentee ballot count were 1,137,076 for Kean, 1,135,016 for Florio — the closet gubernatorial election in New Jersey in a century.

Both candidates expressed confidence they would emerge the winner to succeed Gov. Brendan T. Byrne, a Democrat barred by law from seeking a third four-year term.

"We think that lead is going to hold up," said Kean, who campaigned in favor of Reagan's economic plan and proposed a similar business tax cut for the state. 'I think I'm going to be the next governor."

"I'm convinced that when the final certification comes in, we're going to win," said Florio, who openly called for turning the election into a referendum against Reagan's domestic policies.

BOTH CANDIDATES asked election officials to take security measures to protect the ballots, apparently in anticipation of a possible recount request, and Byrne ordered state police protection for both men.

In Virginia, where Robb and Coleman differed hardly at all over Reagan's economic goals, unofficial returns gave Robb 769,422 votes, or 53.7 percent, to Coleman's 662,788, or 46.3 percent.

That ended 12 years of Republican control of the governor's office.

Both parties had hoped for decisive victories that would enable them to claim a public mandate either for or against Reagan's economic program.

The Democrats were anxious for a sign that they were rebounding from their drubbing one year ago at the hands of Reagan and the Republicans. The GOP was anxious for evidence that the president's program represents the wave of the political future in America, and Reagan campaigned for both Coleman and Kean.

Neither party got its wish. Aides at the two national party headquarters were geared up Tuesday night to issue victory statements, but as the night wore on they found themselves with nothing to say.

Nominations encouraged for 'Family of Year'

Somewhere in the Tall City, there's a Family of the Year.

And that family will be named Nov. 20.

Nominations are being accepted through Friday for the Midland Family of the Year, according to John Mullen, chairman of the steering committee which is coordinating the first annual contest. The event is being sponsored by the Midland Wards of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, whose members arenot eligible for nomination, according to Mullen.

Mullen feels that the family unit is being weakened by society today.

"We are interested in recognizing families active in the church and the community—those who have high moral standards and exhibit fmily solidarity," he said.

He added that "we want the people to be more aware of the importance of a close family unit."

Persons who would like to nominate a family should fill out on a sheet of paper the name of the nominated family, their phone number, address and comments as to why they think this family qualifies for the award.

Persons making the nomination should also fill out their name, address and phone number.

Nominations should be sent by Friday to "Family of the Year," P.O. Box 914, Midland, TX, 79702.

Midland Mayor Thane Akins will present the award Nov. 20 at the chapel on 2101 Tarleton St.

Program begins at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited.

The presentation will kick off National Family Week activities Nov. 22-28. National Family Week was established by President Jimmy Carter in 1979 as an annual event.

"We are hoping to promote closer family ties," said Mullen. "The family is the basic strength of any free society."

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: How do you cope with a next-door neighbor who grabs you and talks your ear off every time you step outside your front door?

She catches my husband and me every chance she gets. On the average, I'd say 20 minutes per day is wasted on listening to this woman talk. On weekends, it's at least an hour! She does all the talking. No one else can get a word in edgewise.

We usually speak our minds, but we hate to hurt her. She's a nice lady — just talkative. My little trick of saying there's someone on the phone in an effort to rescue my husband when she traps him is getting old. We don't want to live this way. We are sick of hiding in the shadows and pulling down the shades. Please save us from future years of ... HIDING OUT

DEAR HIDING: Your neighbor is obviously very, very lonely if she must grab someone to talk to every chance she gets. Plan on giving this pathetic woman just 10 minutes of your time when she snares you. (Call it your good deed for the day.) Quell the anger in you and listen patiently for only 10 minutes, then say, "Sorry, dear, I must run."

It takes more energy to duck her than face her. Besides, hiding is childish; it's also more wearisome than listening for 10 minutes. Try a little compassion, and thank God you aren't in that poor woman's shoes!

DEAR ABBY: I have a "friend" I have known for nearly 35 years. The last time we were together, she told me that a mutual friend had made some very disparaging comments about me, then she proceeded to tell me some of the terrible things this friend said about me. She went on and on and seemed to get a lot of pleasure out of telling me all these terrible things.

When she finished, I asked, "And what did YOU say?"

She replied, "Oh, nothing. I was too shocked to say anything."

Abby, it seems to me that nearly every time I am with this so-called "friend," she says something to hurt me. I feel that the time to stand up for myself has come.

What should I say to her the next time I see her? — LUMP IN MY THROAT

DEAR LUMP: Two words. "Hello" and "Goodbye," and make them as close together as possible.

DEAR ABBY: I'm all for sharing, but how about this? Recently I was asked if I would lend my wedding gown to a girl I have never met. (Her mother is a friend of my aunt.)

It seems the bride's parents are putting on a big, formal wedding with all the trimmings, and believe me, they can afford it, but they want to "cut a few corners."

My wedding gown was expensive and exceptionally beautiful, and I hope that someday one of my daughters will wear it. I had it cleaned and boxed professionally in order to preserve it properly.

Abby, I don't want to appear selfish, but I just don't want to let a stranger wear my wedding gown. I'm concerned about careless people with food and drinks, or someone with a cigarette accidentally bumping into it. Also, it might require a few alterations that the bride might consider "minor," but which I might consider major.

When I was approached about letting this girl wear my wedding dress, I reacted negatively and mentioned all the advantages of renting bridal wear — a wide selection, no worrying about alterations or damages — but they didn't take the hint.

Am I being selfish to refuse? And what should I say? — SELFISH OR NOT?

DEAR OR NOT: Selfish? No way. Be honest. Say, "Sorry. It's boxed and put away until one of my daughters wears it."

Often overlooked now: Red wine is to drink

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Three cheers for drinkability.

Some wine makers may have forgotten that red wine is to drink, not to paint the side of the barn. Many of these inky offerings are pitch black, smell like they've been stirred with an old pine tar-covered baseball bat and taste like library paste.

In Chardonnay, high alcohol and excess oak can make a wine a sledge hammer instead of a jeweler's diamond mallet. In red wine, high tannin produces comparisons to rusty switchblades.

Tannin produces the rough, drying effect on the roof of your mouth. It makes your mouth feel it just hosted a Rolling Stones concert. But red wines made to age for years or decades need some tannin to act as a preservative. When a red wine has been aged for many years, it's the remaining tannin that helps give balance, so the wine doesn't feel flabby and fall apart in the mouth.

But excess tannin is a killer. Recently I've seen a lot of older, highly tannic wines collapse under their own weight. The fruit fades, the tannin remains, and the result is a mouthful of tannin. This is not a great taste treat.

But wines that are drinkable when young rarely are favored by connoisseurs, many of whom equate tannin with greatness and overlook fruit, balance and drinkability.

That last word is, to some, a negative description in a young wine. Anything described as drinkable usually is confined to the scrap heap.

Why? Isn't the purpose of wine to drink it? Is there some magic quality in a wine just because it's old?

The other day I tasted two red wines from Foppiano, the old family-operated, Sonoma County winery. They were a 1978 Petite Sirah and a '78 Zinfandel, both $5.50, both superb. The Petite Sirah was rich yet not coarse, as are so many wines from this grape.

I asked Louis M. Foppiano, outspoken son of the owner, if he was doing anything differently.

"We've been making the same old wine we always have," said young Louis, puckishly. "It's just that you guys are finally waking up. Our wines are overlooked a lot because they don't jump up and grab you."

Foppiano's white wines show well, too — such as a '79 Sonoma Fume (Sauvignon Blanc) at $6.50, and a relatively dry '80 Chenin Blanc, $4.50.

Speaking of drinkability, I recently had a superb Cabernet value — the newly released 1977 Christian Brothers ($8). It offers green olive character and plenty of fruit-spice.

A clarification of a note here some weeks ago about Mondavi's 1974 Reserve Cabernet.

In that column I wondered how Mondavi could sell his award-winning '74 Reserve to Geoffrey Roberts in London, to be offered at a price well below what it sells for in the United States.

In response, Mondavi said just 31 cases of the '74 Reserve were sold, to be offered "at a price somewhere between wholesale and retail. ... We allowed Geoffrey to buy this wine in spite of U.S. demand because we believe that in time the export market will be important and we want to be represented, and represented with our best."

Probably more than anyone else in history, Mondavi has elevated California wine to connoisseur class. Using science as his partner, he made the business of wine an art. His Chardonnay, Cabernet, Fume Blanc and Chenin Blanc, in particular, are outstanding wines.

Mondavi also is a great promoter — of his wine, of the Napa Valley, and of all California wine.

For example, it was Mondavi who formed the now-famous joint venture with the Baron Philippe de Rothschild to produce a Cabernet Sauvignon in the French manner. Recently, I received a press release noting that Mondavi himself would conduct tastings and seminars on a Galveston-to-Curacao cruise. And in the annual Christmas catalogue of the Houston department store Sakowitz, one of the prestige "gifts" one may buy is a week of gourmet delights at the Mondavi winery. Only $10,000.

So it's understandable Mondavi would want to offer his best "claret" to an audience that truly appreciates Bordeaux — the British. Just another way he can spread the word of Mondavi and the Napa Valley.

PDAP consultant to appear

John Bradshaw of Houston, national consultant for the Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP), will be featured speaker for Midland's PDAP's second birthday celebration Saturday at Green Tree Country Club.

The event, which begins at 7 p.m., is open to the public. For ticket information, call 685-3645.

Bradshaw lectures regularly at Palmer Episcopal Church in Houston, speaking on a variety of subjects, from "Coping With Stress" and "Understanding Your Dreams" to "Resentment and Forgiveness."

Besies his Sunday morning lectures, he leads a diversified life. He is a practicing marriage counselor of 12 years, a therapist, and an alcoholism counselor. He has also taught a theology series in over 200 churches and synagogues. He conducts psychology and communication workshops given in an industrial setting to the elite Houstonian Club. And he is on the board of directors of a Texas petroleum company.

A typical working week for Bradshaw recently included a lecture series on "The Middle Age Crazies" Monday in Spring, Texas; teaching a course on "Changing Personal Histories" Tuesday; "Trapping New Sources of Creativity" teaching series on Thursday; and, finally, conducting an "Intimacy Weekend."

His speeches are often on the period of time when he was an alcoholic and, from his own admittance, only concerned with where his next drink was coming from. He feels that with his ability to change came his calling in life to give out his message of good mental health.

He has a master's degree in philosophy and a bachelor of sacred theology degree from the University of Toronto, and has done extensive graduate work at Rice University.

Wheeler-dealers are bad news

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

A year ago, real estate wheeler-dealers were buzzing about the potential of "no down payment" purchases.

Now, this same group of exploiters is focusing on the "cash to buyer" transaction. In both cases it's usually bad news — sometimes disasterville — for the property seller. In a "cash to buyer" transaction, the purchaser not only pays no down payment, he actually receives cash. Surprisingly, there are sellers who go along with this kooky setup, not realizing what a vulnerable position they put themselves into.

Most of these deals are basically set up like this:

The buyer arranges for the largest "first" or "second" mortgage loan he can find to finance the purchase. He then persuades the seller to carry back a large junior note (mortgage or trust deed).

The combination of the new outside loan and seller carry-back loan usually far exceeds the current market malue of the property.

Such an arrangement is sometimes called a "buyer walk-away" transaction by regulatory officials, because that's what often happens. The buyer simply takes his money and walks away. The seller is stuck with the loss.

For example, in a case now under investigation by the California Department of Real Estate, the seller had an equity of $237,000 in a home valued at $275,000.

The seller accepted an offer calling for a new institutional "first" loan of $165,000 and for the seller to carry back a promissory note from the buyer in the amount of another $165,000, secured by a second trust deed.

In return for the seemingly high price (on paper), the seller agreed to share the cash received from the new first loan with the buyer.

Predictably, after the transaction closed, the buyer made no payments on either his first or second loan. The seller did not have suficient cash to reacquire the property at the trustee's sale. His net loss was about $184,000.

The walk-away buyer was a fellow who had been involved in several previous "cash to buyer" schemes.

This is not an isolated or small-potatoes problem. It started to emerge as a significant trouble-spot in the real estate market about a year ago. It has grown ominously.

"The incidence of 'cash to buyer' problem cases has increased markedly in recent months," reported the California Department of Real Estate. "We are currently investigating more than 20 such cases."

The department noted that one key cause of the growing problem is the increasing number of books, speakers and seminar sessions that focus on methods to acquire real estate with no down payment, or with a "cash to buyer" bonus. The subject seems to effectively sell books and guarantee seminar attendance.

These promoters overlook the moral and ethical aspects of the methods they espouse. In many cases, it's simply a con game against unknowledgeable property sellers

It's a problem that is causing increasing concern among many ethical real estate professionals and government regulators. The best solution is probably more and better consumer education on the subject.

Q. Does England have relocation services like those in the United States?

A. Yes, and the largest relocation service organization in England has just merged with All Points Relocation Service in the United States. The new organization includes 1,200 offices throughout the British Isles and 20 other foreign countries.

Q. Is the number of home sales still dropping, and is the slowdown forcing some real estate practitioners out of business?

A. The volume of home sales is now down to the lowest level in six years, according to the National Association of Realtors.

The slow market is indeed, forcing some practitioners out of business. But these are usually the newer or less serious operators. The seasoned professionals, who know how to creatively structure solid transactions in a difficult market, are surviving well and prospering.

Champagne brunch now available at New York's only automat

NEW YORK (AP) — The champagne brunch, once a dining tradition of the elite, is now available at New York City's only remaining automat.

The Horn & Hardart Automat at 42nd Street and Third Avenue began serving the brunch Sunday.

Although the buffet-style meal was served in an elegant style amid the Art Deco surroundings, it was reasonable in price, keeping with the restaurant's long-standing tradition of helping New Yorkers stretch their money. Patrons shelled out $6.95 per adult, $3.95 per child.

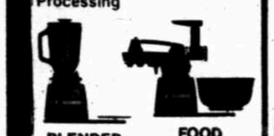

The coin-operated cafeteria decided to try the champagne brunch in an attempt to upgrade its image and attract new customers.

Customers who take advantage of the offering will be asked to add their signatures to a proposal nominating Horn & Hardart for historical preservation. At one time there were as many as 55 such cafeterias in the city.

Secret to good vegetable garden is soil

By TOM STEVENSON
The Washington Post

The secret of a good vegetable garden is good soil.

For a better garden next year, plant a cover crop of annual rye this fall. In the spring plow or dig it under. It helps improve all soils, and particularly those predominantly clay or sand.

In addition, the cover crop reduces the amount of soil lost during winter by splash erosion and surface runoff. Splash erosion is caused by the impact of raindrops on the soil surface. Each drop, falling as a tiny projectile, breaks small particles from the soil mass that are removed by surface runoff during heavy rainfall.

Grass plants are among the best natural soil conditioners known. They produce an extensive system of small roots that thoroughly penetrate the spoil.

Before seeding the rye, spread ground limestone and 5-10-5 fertilizer at the rate of 8 pounds per 100 square feet and mix them with the top 6 inches of soil. It will get lime and phosphorus down into the root zone for next year's crops. Apply 2 or 3 pounds of annual rye per 100 square feet.

Apple scab and cherry leaf spot overwinter on the fallen leaves of these trees. Raking and removing all of them will help reduce infection of new foilage next spring.

To help in the control of fruit rots and insects that attack apples, peaches and plums, destroy all fruit that fell to the ground and remove fruit mummies from the trees.

Iris borers (pink caterpillars) hatch from eggs laid by moths in the fall on old iris leaves and nearby debris. Pull off the old leaves and rake up trash and put them in the garbage can.

Organisms that cause hollyhock rust live through the winter on old leaves and stems. They should be cut off and removed from the garden.

Cut off the stalks of peonies and remove them. Make the cut with a sharp knife about one-fourth inch below the soil surface. It helps to contol botrytis blight with peonies, which causes flower buds to turn brown or black and fall open.

Powdery mildew is one of the worst pests of phlox and zinnias. The disease organisms survive the winter on the dead tops. Cutting them off at the ground level and getting rid of them will remove a source of infection in the spring.

Dead rose canes should be cut off and removed. Tall stems that might be wipped around by winter winds should be shortened to keep them from loosening the roots in the soil. Piling up soil around them for winter protection may do more harm than good.

Crisis: Face it, recover

By SHARON HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Face crisis and recover from it. Crisis demands action. Unless individuals and families know how to combat an upset in life's routine — and what feelings to expect, it can create an unresolved crisis. When an upset happens, most people go through three broad states: Disorganization, recovery and reorganization.

DISORGANIZATION

When crisis strikes, so does disorganization — as the person begins to feel. Many suffer bewilderment. A few remain calm, and a few express their strong feelings in outbursts of fury or screaming. In most cases, tension rises, and most people feel helpless.

RECOVER

When people emerge from this stunned condition, they must cope with a different future life — one changed by the traumatic event. They have two choices — to hide from the event or face it and fight back. Those who choose to hide may escape into fantasy or worry, or they may retreat within themselves. Some people become resentful. Guilt feelings are common. Also, many will deny what has happened.

To start recovery, it is important to face the crisis, not hide from it. As a person begins to face a crisis, he can start to measure it realistically and start to get organized. Many times, people cannot rebound by themselves. This is when they should ask friends or trained professionals for help in dealing with the situation.

REORGANIZATION

Reorganization is the final step. It begins once the person decides what to do and starts to accomplish the tasks.

FAMILY CAN HELP

A crisis can affect individuals — and entire families — emotionally, socially and physically. Crisis means a change in lifestyle. Old habits may become no longer appropriate, and this strains the individual and the family resources. All families face various hazardous circumstances, but not all families view the same events as unresolved-crisis events. A family's resources for meeting each situation will, in many cases, determine whether or not it is an unresolved crisis.

Taffeta and chiffon highlight Fiandaca show

NEW YORK (AP) — The bride at Fiandaca wore flame red from net veil to chiffon train, but what preceded the finale was more conventional and wearable.

The evening clothes at the Fiandaca show Monday ranged from crystal pleated beige taffeta in layers of petaling to bugle beaded chiffon.

Without the red veil, the wedding dress was a fiesta-like wraparound of three chiffon layers held up by spaghetti straps above a ruffle. It hit the top of the knee in front and dipped to the ground in back.

The day clothes featured double-faced blue and white herringbone over blue and white stripe crepe de chine, white crepe suits whose cardigan jackets were edged in braid and tiny print red and blue silk chiffon and crepe dresses.

The only sore point, architecturally speaking, in the Fiandaca collection was a "pinwheel" shape that appeared in dresses and hip- and waist-length jackets. It resembles a straight bell whose outward flare turns inwards about five inches from the garment's bottom. It is a rigid shape that conceals the body.

The most pretty and unusual group was a pair of lacquered silk taffeta raincoats in pink and lavender that reversed to ivory mohair.

Earlier, Dimitri showed a fun sports collection, opening with a subtly striped knit playwear group that seemed cool and comfortable.

He topped rolled up shorts with hooded silk jackets lined in a contrasting color, an unusual and pretty cover up for cool nights.

Other jackets were loose and kimono sleeved, with mandarin or shawl collars.

An interesting touch was the jodhpur sleeve he put on many tops and paired with pants or skirts for daytime suiting.

Ermagaard Lamoureaux adjusts the shoulder straps of a self-designed bullet-proof vest in her small shop in Miami. Mrs. Lamoureux has designed everything from bras to jeans in her long career. She began designing vests after the Miami race riots and finds her best customers are doctors, pharmacists, news photographers and police officers.

Miami business designed to produce protection

By ANNE S. CROWLEY
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — A 70-year-old woman who spent much of her career designing bras and jeans is offering crime-ridden Miami a new line of vests custom-fitted for comfort and stopping hot lead.

Ermagaard Lamoureux makes bulletproof vests for anyone who wants one — and that means police officers, potential victims of violent crimes or even reporters pursuing a story where bullets may be flying.

Mass-produced vests available in gun stores and issued by police departments often fit poorly, Mrs. Lamoureux said, and that can be dangerous.

"No vest is any good if it's in a man's locker or the trunk of a car," she said. "And if it's not comfortable to wear, that's where it's going to wind up."

Customers of her Body Armor Inc. have included a 90-pound policewoman — "just a little bitty thing" — ans a man who stands 6 feet, 7 inches, and weighs 375 pounds.

"Some clucks...figure that just because they make vests in three sizes — small, medium and large — they have to fit everybody, but that doesn't necessarily have to be true," said Mrs. Lamoureux. "Three sizes of shoes don't fit everybody."

Her vests, priced from $225 to $275, are made from bullet-resistant Kevlar, a fiber invented and manufactured by Du Pont. They're flexible, comparatively lightweight — 1¾ pounds to just under 3 pounds, depending on the model — and, if properly fitted, difficult to detect under a lightweight shirt, Mrs. Lamoureux said.

"It's very important that the attacker not know that the victim is wearing a vest," she said. "If they know the victim is wearing it, they'll aim at the head or some other part of the body."

Each vest comes with two outer shells so one can be washed while the owner wears the other, so there's no excuse for not wearing the vest, she said.

The former designer and pattern maker said she first checked out bulletproof vests after the Miami race riots in May 1980, when several businesses in her northwestern neighborhood were burned. For the most part, she says, manufacturers sold few vests retail, preferring to concentrate on police departments and other wholesale markets.

Then she discovered how poorly the vests fit and that officers dislike wearing them because they're hot and often uncomfortable. That's when she decided to go into the business.

"We learned to wear shoes, and I'll bet the first ones were uncomfortable," she said. "At this late date in my life, if I can help save anybody's life or any suffering, I feel my life has been well-spent....

"I'm just trying to do my bit toward keeping more of us here — alive and unscarred."

Officials trying to trace guns

GRATERFORD, Pa. (AP) — Inmates who held six state prison workers hostage for five days settled into new cells in a federal prison Tuesday as officials began trying to find out how they got guns into Pennsylvania's largest maximum-security facility.

The seven inmates, including alleged ringleader Joseph "Jo-Jo" Bowen, a three-time killer, were taken by bus to the federal prison at Lewisburg on Monday night.

Two hours earlier, the last of dozens of people taken hostage after an aborted escape attempt Wednesday were released unharmed.

Officers began a search of all cells and work areas at the state Correctional Institution at Graterford on Tuesday. Correction Bureau spokesman Ken Robinson said he was not sure how long the search would take, but inmates would remain locked in their cells until it was done.

Officials had hoped the search of the 2,000-inmate prison would provide clues to how the convicts got the two pistols and two shotguns they used to hold police at bay.

The siege began when at least four inmates tried to scale a 30-foot wall and a tower guard fired a warning shot, officials said. The inmates fired three shots, fled to the kitchen and took 38 hostages, including 32 inmates, three kitchen workers and three guards.

Twenty-nine inmates were released or escaped over the weekend, but three others chose to remain with the captors, authorities said.

On Sunday, the governor's office called in Philadelphia Daily News columnist Chuck Stone to act as an intermediary. He negotiated the release.

The drama ended as dramatically as it started. The hostages were released after the inmates fired their weapons to empty them of ammunition.

Stone said the noise from the .22-caliber revolver, the .38-caliber revolver and double-barreled and single-barreled shotguns "sounded like cannons."

The hostages then emerged, carrying the weapons. The inmates, who had demanded they be granted safe passage to a federal facility, walked out with their hands raised over their heads.

After the surrender, the captors were stripped naked, searched and put in coveralls. Within two hours the seven were en route to Lewisburg. One convict aboard the bus was seen smiling and waving his manacled hands over his head.

The freed hostages returned to their families after being examined. A prison physician, Dr. Kemal Dincer, reported that "everybody's perfect."

One of the hostages, kitchen supervisor Wesley Lowrey, 57, of West Chester, said it was "my 21 years in the Marine Corps and the work of God that pulled me through."

"When you see people with guns, you know they mean business," he said. "And I faced those guns for five days."

Policeman unknowingly halts kidnapping

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — A policeman who stopped a speeding car unknowingly halted a kidnapping that began in Texas and wound up 400 miles away in Shreveport with the arrest of two teen-agers, police say.

City Detective Jimmy Jeter said the suspects confessed to abducting Dennis Samples, 20, and girlfriend Melinda Righter, 19, and taking them on an all-night journey from Brownwood, Texas, to Shreveport.

Arrested were Leslie S. Freehling, 17, of Union, Ohio, and Robert E. Morgan Jr., 17, of Covington, La.

A patrolman clocked the car at 72 miles an hour on Interstate 20 at about 7:50 a.m. Tuesday, Jeter said.

"He pulled the car over, and he ordered the driver of the vehicle out of the car," he said. The driver was Samples.

When they got back to the officer's patrol car, Samples said in a desperate whisper: ' "I need to tell you something, but don't look up into the car,' " Jeter quoted.

"'We have been kidnapped, and the man in the car is holding a rifle on my girlfriend,'" Jeter quoted Samples. "If you make any wrong moves, he is going to shoot her.' "

The patrolman called several backup units. Then a swarm of officers moved in on the car, arresting the suspects and freeing Miss Righter without incident, Jeter said.

Samples and Miss Righter were identified as students at Howard Payne University in Brownwood. Neither was physically assaulted, Jeter said.

The couple told police they were sitting in Samples' car Monday night in a Brownwood park when Freehling and Morgan approached, wielding a rifle, Jeter said.

"The subjects ordered them out of the car, and then had them get into the back seat and they drove off," he recounted. "They've had them with them since last night."

The couple also was robbed of $38 Jeter said. He said warrants on aggravted kidnapping charges were issued by authorities in Brownwood.

Pruett to be arraigned Friday

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Marion Albert Pruett will be arraigned in federal court Friday following his indictment Tuesday by a federal grand jury on robbery and kidnap charges.

Pruett was earlier indicted by a Hinds County grand jury on a state capital murder charge in the death of Peggy Lowe, who was kidnapped during a robbery of the Jackson savings and loan where she worked.

He pleaded innocent to the charge on Monday on the advice of his court-appointed attorney Bill Kirksey of Jackson.

The federal indictment was served on Pruett, 32, of Gastonia, N.C., in his cell at the Jackson city jail, where he has been held without bond since his extradition from New Mexico last week.

Motions expected before Williams goes to trial

ATLANTA (AP) — A Superior Court judge probably will allow attorneys for Wayne B. Williams to file additional motions before the 23-year-old black freelance cameraman goes on trial for the slayings of two young blacks, a court spokesman says.

Judge Clarence Cooper, who will preside over Williams' trial when it begins Dec. 28, issued an order last month barring the filing of any further pretrial motions without his permission.

The order came after prosecutors charged that Williams' attorneys, who have filed 42 pretrial motions, were trying to delay the trial.

Inhaling powder may cause illness

NEW YORK (AP) — Baby powder can cause coughing spells, vomiting or pneumonia in children who inhale it, says a pediatrician specializing in poison control, and he is advising his patients not to use it.

Dr. Howard Mofenson, director of the poison control center at the Nassau County Medical Center near New York City, said 92 cases of baby powder inhalation were reported to the center in the first six months of this year.

Mofenson, who is also former head of the accident prevention committee of the American Academy of Pediatrics, had counted 40 such cases in the first six months of 1980. A study showed that almost all of the incidents occurred when the infants were having their diapers changed.

Most of the babies grabbed the container of powder and tipped it into their mouths, said Mofenson.

He is trying to draw attention to the problem, because he thinks incidents of powder inhalation are more frequent than doctors have thought.

Mofenson's study of the 40 cases reported last year showed that most of the victims were under 2 years old.

"Most parents think it reduces moisture," Mofenson said in a telephone interview. "I don't know of any study that shows that. I think it's more of a tradition. I'm not sure it's essential for the baby's skin."

The largest maker of baby powder is Johnson & Johnson. The company says that baby powder would not have sold as well as it has if it didn't do some good.

Drug may cure flu virus

HOUSTON (AP) — An experimental drug that appears capable of killing influenza virus within 24 hours could be especially effective in preventing deaths from the disease, according to a medical specialist.

"We believe this therapy ultimately offers great promise in treating influenzal pneumonia, which is the lethal form of the disease, especially for people with heart failure or emphysema," Dr. Vernon Knight, chairman of microbiology and immunology at Baylor College of Medicine's flu research center, said Monday.

The drug, ribavirin, must undergo more extensive clinical testing before it can be prescribed by doctors or sold over-the-counter.

But tests indicate it may be important breakthrough for the elderly and for people already weakened by other illnesses, Knight said.

Ribavirin is already marketed in Mexico. Studies conducted with oral forms of the drug are inconclusive.

Doctors first used an aerosol version of ribavirin last January during a flu epidemic at Texas A&M University at College Station. The results of the test are being published in the current issue of The Lancet, the British medical journal.

Doctors at A&M's student health center randomly selected 14 students to receive the treatment and 17 others to be treated with an ineffective aerosol saline solution.

The 14 students who received ribavirin had to wear facial masks 12 hours a day for several days. They inhaled a mist containing tiny particles of ribavirin that spread through the respiratory tract and penetrated the lung tissues.

A Soviet submarine which ran aground near Sweden's Kariskrona naval base last week lies safely in a protected bay near the base Tuesday. The sub was refloated Monday to prevent weather damage to the vessel.

Submarine skipper sticks to stranded Soviet ship

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The skipper of the Soviet submarine that ran aground in Swedish waters is refusing to leave his ship for further interrogation. Swedish officials say his explanations about the incident are "unlikely."

Meanwhile, Foreign Ministry spokesman Jonas Hojer said today tht the Swedish government has instructed its ambassadors worldwide not to attend Soviet National Day celebrations on Nov. 7, the anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution.

The move "is an expression of Swedish disapproval over the Soviet submarine incident," Hojer said. Lower-ranking diplomats, however, would attend, he added.

Hojer also said that Sweden's ambassador to Moscow, Carl de Geer, had been called to the Soviet foreign department twice this week "to hear the Soviet views on the submarine incident."

Lt. Gen. Sven-Olov Olsson, the head of the military command in south Sweden, said of the incident, "We must stick to a clear-cut and firm Swedish stand and not give in to the Soviet demands to hold all sessions aboard the submarine."

Olsson said such technical matters as the functioning of the sub's navigation equipment could be sorted out best aboard the submarine, which Swedish tugs refloated Monday and towed to an anchorage in inner Gaase Bay.

Defense headquarters said Swedish Naval experts would conduct the technical investigation today aboard the sub.

But Olsson said the question of how and why the sub entered Swedish waters south of the Karlskrona naval base last Tuesday should be discussed elsewhere because "to talk about these matters in the cramped quarters of the submarine will be difficult; we would prefer to hold such sessions in private."

There were indications that the Soviet government was growing impatient with the detention of its aged undersea craft. Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Yakovlev called on Foreign Minister Ola Ullstein to "convey Soviet views on the handling" of the incident, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

The captain of the sub, Lt. Cmdr. Pyotr Gushin, continued to claim that a "mistake in navigation due to faulty equipment and fog" caused him to run aground eight nights ago in an archipelago off the southeast coast. But Olsson said this was "unlikely and not a credible answer."

The Swedish government has said the sub and its crew of about 56 men would not be released until it received a satisfactory explanation for the violation of Swedish waters.

Guerrillas agree to two conditions

SALISBURY, Zimbawe (AP) — Black nationalist guerrillas have agreed to two South African conditions for an independence plan for South-West Africa, it was reported today.

Delegates from five Western nations, meanwhile, met with officials in Lusaka, Zambia, to discuss the independence plan for the South African-administered territory.

Moses Garoeb, secretary of the South-West African People's Organization, said his guerrilla group has agreed to South Afrcain demands that 1,500 South African troops remain in South-West Africa during the election of a constitutional assembly, according to the semi-official Zimbabwe Inter-African News Agency.

However, Garoeb was quoted as saying that the soldiers had to remain on their bases.

The so-called "contact group" from five Western nations — the United States, Canada, Britain, France and West Germany — proposed the election before beginning its nine-nation tour of southern Africa last month.

Garoeb was also quoted as saying that SWAPO has also agreed to allow South African police and civil servants to remain at their posts after the elections and until full independence.

SWAPO has been fighting a 15-year bush war to oust South Africa from the arid, mineral rich territory also known as Namibia. South Africa has ruled the former German colony since World War I under a League of Nations mandate repudiated by the United Nations in 1966.

"We are absolutely serious in our search for peace in Namibia and have already made concessions," Garoeb was quoted as saying.

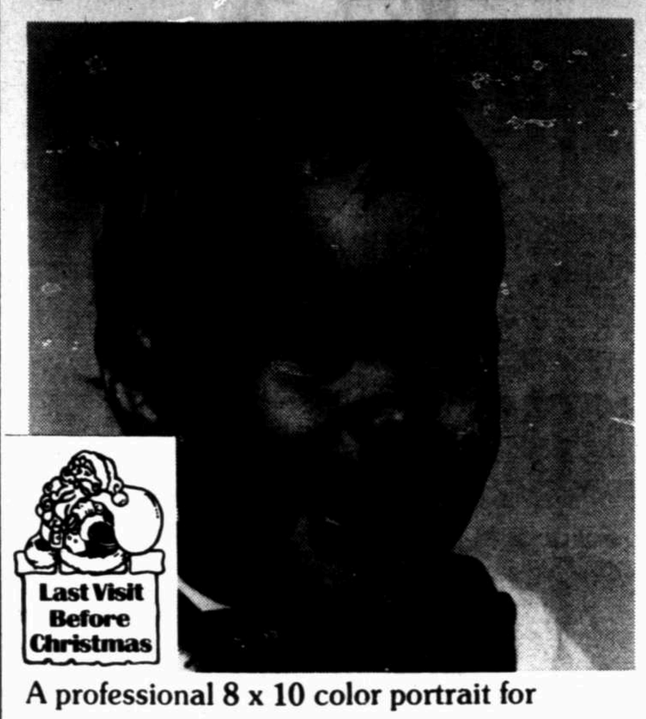

But he told the news agency that SWAPO was not completely satisfied with the independence proposal advance by the contact group to end South Africa's rule over the territory's 900,000 blacks and 110,000 whites.

The contact group has already visited Nigeria, Angola, South-West Africa, South Africa, Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Botswana.

AWACS 'blacklist' refuted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reports of a White House blacklist for senators who voted against the sale of AWACS radar planes to Saudi Arabia are untrue, says Senate GOP leader Howard H. Baker Jr.

And, says the Tennessee Republican who helped President Reagan defeat efforts to block the $8.5 billion arms deal, no trades or deals were made to win votes.

In a Senate speech Tuesday, Baker said his statements were based on conversations he had with Reagan and top administration advisers.

The sale of five Airborne Warning and Control System radar planes and F-15 jet fighter weaponry to the Arab nation was cleared on a 52-48 Senate vote last Wednesday after extensive lobbying by Reagan.

"There were no trades at all by the president, by me or by anyone else in exchange for a vote," said Baker. "There were no deals, none were undertaken, none were made and there were no blacklists. I speak with personal knowledge, after consultation with the president and his principal advisers."

Specifically, said Baker, Sens. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., and Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., are not on a White House blacklist because they opposed the sale.

The New York Post said Tuesday that D'Amato was on a White House blacklist because of his opposition.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak said in a column published Monday that Packwood and Boschwitz are not on a blacklist, but that unidentified White House aides believe Republicans should make them "suffer a little" for rallying votes against the president's program.

But Baker said Packwood and Boschwitz "certainly are on nobody's blacklist nor have they diminished their status with the president."

The new firetruck, a 1981 model, replaces a 1973-model truck totaled in a traffic accident in Midland last summer. Whereas the old truck had only four-wheel drive and a 1,500-gallon capacity water tank, fire department officials say the new truck features six-wheel drive and a 2,000-gallon water tank.

You likely won't see the view

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The arrow on the faded campus map on the low wall around the edge of the University of Texas Tower observation deck says, "You are here."

But you probably never will be.

The panoramic vista of a growing campus and a changing Austin is a forbidden view, stolen from sightseers by a series of suicide leaps and a disturbed ex-Marine who used the deck as headquarters for his one-man war against the world.

Several student groups say it's time to reopen the Tower deck, closed in 1975 by UT regents.

"The Tower observation deck is a resource of the state of Texas, a resource which can provide enjoyment, visual refreshment and uplift to its people," said student Julie Tindall in a campus newspaper column.

Miss Tindall offered some suggestions for making the Tower deck — 231 feet above the ground — a more secure place.

"We have learned the hard way that it is a resource which, like most resources, cannot be left in its natural state: it must be altered if humans are to safely use it," she said.

In the early 1970s UT officials looked for ways to make it safe for humans. Robert Mettlen, vice president for administration, said the estimates ranged from $50,000 to $150,000. The ideas included a glass shield, iron bars and other barriers.

"I suspect they found the proposals for remodeling were far from satisfactory," Mettlen said of the Regents' decision to close the deck.

Mettlen came to UT a month after Charles Whitman killed 16 people before police killed him in 1966. The building walls on the deck still show evidence of the shots fired at Whitman.

It was that incident, coupled with several suicides, that prompted the closing of the popular tourist spot. The remodeling proposals were discounted, and the "closed" sign went up.

"It was a simple answer to a difficult problem, and perhaps it was the right decision for its time," said Miss Tindall.

However, she said the 1982 UT Centennial celebration would be a good time to reopen the deck. She called for student letters to President Peter Flawn in support of the change.

It's not likely, said Mettlen. UT does not need a tourist attraction in the middle of the campus, on top of a busy office building.

"The Tower has ceased being our main library. It's a working office building. For us to now make it an obvious and substantial tourist attraction would be to visit upon a central and congested part of the campus a flow of visitors that would be quite disruptive," he said.

Miss Tindall suggested letting tourists in only on weekends and at night, in order to avoid a major disruption.

Mettlen said it would be an expensive change, requiring some security measures.

"The concern about people taking their life from the Tower is a very real concern. And again, the middle of the campus is not the place to bring hundreds of visitors to gaze at the Capitol or the Hill Country," said Mettlen.

MMH sets third session for elderly

Midland Memorial Hospital will sponsor its third session in the free 16-week program for Midlanders 55 and over at 10 a.m. Thursday in MMH.

This week's 90-minute session is part of the "Good Health — the Key to Happy Living" program. It will focus on the second part of the Oct. 29 topic, "Common Sense Approach to Emergencies."

The session will include what to do and how to look for chest pains, shortness of breath, unconsciousness, a fracture and numerous other emergencies.

According to Cathy Engstrom, in-service program director, the sessions may be attended every week or periodically. Participants should gather in the hospital lobby. Transportation to and from the hospital is provided by Mid-Tran courtesy of Midland National Bank.

Convict fears for life

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A convicted drug trafficker says his life is in danger because of news stories that implied he testified against El Paso gambler Jimmy Chagra during an appearance before a grand jury investigating the assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Calvin Wright, 32, in a letter released this week in San Antonio, said federal officials warned him he was in danger because of his appearance and subsequent news reports.

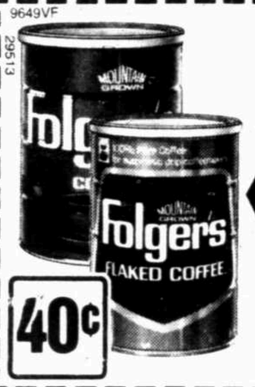

Wright said the news articles "implied" he had testified against Chagra, who authorities have identified as a target of the Wood investigation.

Former hostage trying to escape attention

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Kevin Hermening says he's still trying to escape the attention thrust upon him after he and other Americans were taken hostage by Iranian militants at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran exactly two years ago.

"I would like to go out someplace and not have people pointing at me and whispering," said Hermening, 22, of suburban Oak Creek. "I can't go any place. If I went out for a pizza, people would just come right up and plop themselves down and start asking me questions.

"I go to a ball game and people plop their kids down on my lap and ask if they can take a picture," he said. "What am I supposed to do? You don't want to say no to people."

Hermening was a 20-year-old Marine guard at the embassy at the time of the takeover Nov. 4, 1979, and he was the youngest of the 52 Americans held by the militants for 444 days. The hostages were freed Jan. 20, the day President Reagan was inaugurated.

Hermening left the Marines Aug. 28 and has been speaking at high schools and civic gatherings while considering what to do with his future.

"I have 60 speeches set up in the next month and a half. I get calls daily for speaking. All I require are my expenses," he said. "I'm satisfied with what I'm doing now. So far, I have spoken to 350 high schools and 100 civic clubs."

His father, Richard Hermening of Cudahy, said he, too, is often recognized on the street because of the media attention he received while the hostages were held.

Ambitious goals set for Columbia pilots

By KATHY MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A picturebook launch and a pinpoint landing provided a spectacular debut for the shuttle Columbia. The second mission is a more ambitious demonstration of the ship's durability and usefulness.

NASA has established ambitious goals for astronauts Joe Engle and Richard Truly. They are to flex the shuttle's muscle and stretch its limits. All Columbia's systems will be exercised more vigorously than last April.

The ship will be heavier; its launch ascent will be more abrupt, as will its reentry for landing. It will carry its first cargo and the crew will excercise a crucial piece of equipment — the bionic "Canadarm."

On the maiden flight in April, the shuttle's 60-foot cargo bay was practically empty. Simply opening and closing the bay doors was the major test.

This time Columbia's doors will open to reveal the 50-foot, Canadian-built robot arm — designed to deploy and retrieve satellites in space. Over three days, Engle and Truly will spend 22 hours testing the device.

Also, the shuttle carries a 5,347-pound package of sensors that will be aimed at Earth, mapping terrain, monitoring pollution, and seeking out mineral deposits and deep-water ocean fishing grounds.

At close hand, in the cockpit, is a sound movie camera with which the astronauts will photograph lightning from above, something the space agency says has never been done and could lead to more reliable storm warnings. Officials say the crew won't have any trouble finding lightning — there will be some on every orbit.

The crew for mission II has more work to do and more time in which to do it. The flight is scheduled to last 5 days, 4 hours and 10 minutes, more than twice as long as the first one.

Columbia's flight in April subjected the ship to no more than 580 pounds pressure per square foot. This time the ship will be launched at a more abrupt angle and it will hit by 640 psf — about what engineers expect on an operational flight.

There will be a total of four test flights before the space shuttle is declared operational. The plan is to work the ship and its systems harder on each succeeding mission.

The shuttle piloted by Engle and Truly will orbit earth at 157 miles altitude, closer to that of an operational flight. In April, the Columbia cruised 172 miles high.

Astronauts John Young and Bob Crippen flew manually through part of the re-entry, but mostly it was automatic. Engle and Truly plan several tests of the way the ship handles during re-entry. They will make a series of rolls, pitches and yaws to check dynamic stability.

They also have a choice of two runways at Edwards Air Force Base in California. If one has crosswinds, they will aim for it, to gain experience with the kind of conditions they will encounter when the shuttle lands at Cape Canaveral beginning with the fourth test flight.

Columbia is designed to make 100 trips to space. No other ship was made even two. So, while the flight is designed to demonstrate the ship's operational capabilities, the primary goal remains a successful launch, re-entry and landing.

"We are still in the front end of a very complicated flight test program," Truly says. "Our mission rules are very conservative. If we have a failure and our rules tell us we have to come home early, we will do that. In that case I would call it a successful flight if we get the spacecraft home safely with some solid data on the arm and from the experiments."

Officials were aware of milk scheme prior to investigation

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Two Mission school officials charged with defrauding a school lunch program knew of irregularities in the central cafeteria two years before the FBI started investigating, a former school worker has testified.

Juanita Ochoa, who was fired in June 1979 as a secretary in the central cafeteria, testified Tuesday that her boss, Michael Jon McCarthy, and Assistant Superintendent Robert Wicks were told of the problems.

Miss Ochoa said she was present when McCarthy, food services director, learned of a phony milk delivery invoice scheme in November 1978.

"Mr. McCarthy asked a few questions and then he just walked away, said Miss Ochoa, who testified as a government rebuttal witness in he federal trial.

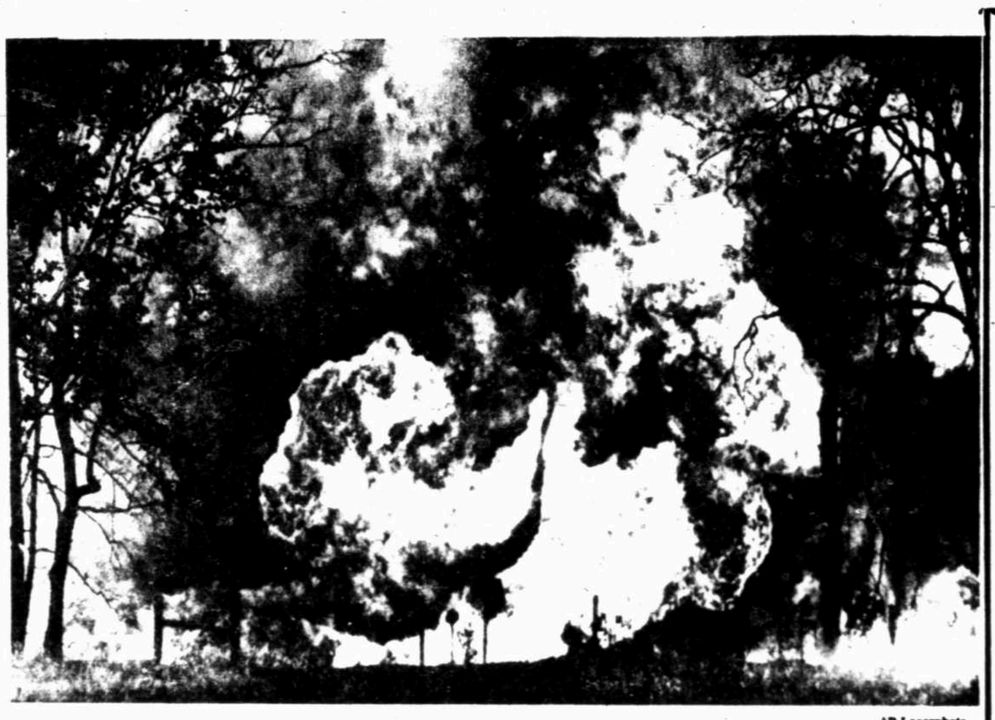

She said another former secretary, Margarita Moreno, told McCarthy how school workers asked the Golden Jersey Creamery in Edinburg to make up fake tickets for half-pints of milk.

Miss Moreno and other witnesses have testified that the school district would pay for the fake tickets but would get credit for the payments in a "special account" kept at the dairy. The school system would purchase ice cream, cottage cheese and other dairy products with the credit balance.

Indictments returned this summer charge the school district with receiving $486,000 in federal reimbursement for meals that did not contain the necesssary half-pints of milk. The phony invoice scheme, prosecutors contend, was designed to prove the district had purchased enough milk when it had not.

McCarthy testified Tuesday under cross-examination that he did not learn of the fake tickets until late 1980 although he said he learned of the "special account" in March or April 1980.

Miss Ochoa said she went to Wicks' house in the summer of 1978 to explain some problems in the central cafeteria.

A cloud of natural gas liquids exploded Tuesday morning three miles south of Snook, Texas, when workmen accidentally ruptured a six-inch pipeline carrying it to a nearby gas plant. No one was injured in the explosion, which engulfed a five-acre pasture before it burned itself out six hours later. A truck at the scen was destroyed.

Vietnam veteran draws attention by taking newspaper employees hostage

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — A 32-year-old man was charged with kidnapping and criminal confinement today after briefly holding six workers hostage at gunpoint in the Muncie Newspapers Inc. building, police said.

No one was injured in the standoff, which ended after a police negotiator talked the man into surrendering at about 4 a.m., said police Sgt. Norman Irelan.

Jay Stader of Muncie was being held on a $40,000 bond at the Delaware County Jail, police said. Stader said he was a Vietnam veteran and wanted to draw attention to the plight of Vietnam veterans, Irelan said.

Irelan said Stader allegedly disarmed a security guard at the offices of the Muncie Evening Press and Muncie Star at about 3 a.m. The sergeant said the guard, Terry Tomey, and five other workers were held at gunpoint for about an hour in the downtown building.

Stader called an Indianapolis television station, WTHR, and asked for anchorman Cameron Harper to come to talk to him. Police said the incident ended before Harper arrived.

Brian Walker, managing editor of the Evening Press, said newspaper officials were unsure of the identities of all the employees who were held. They were being questioned by police early today, he said.

Walker said the suspect apparently entered the building through an alley entrance and fired a shot through an elevator door to "get attention."

No editorial workers were present when the incident occurred, he said.

Girl tosses new born baby out of dormitory bathroom window

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A homesick college student who gave birth alone in a dormitory bathroom has been accused of putting the newborn girl into a brown paper bag and dropping her out of a second-story window, police said.

The baby survived, and Lisa La France, an 18-year-old freshman from Los Angeles, was charged with attempted murder and felony child abuse, police said.

Miss La France was discharged Tuesday from Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley, where she was arraigned Monday. Hospital spokeswoman Sue Piper said Tuesday the 5-pound, 13-ounce baby was in good condition.

Miss La France was arrested early Monday in a women's dormitory at the University of California, hours after she gave birth in a dormitory bathroom, said university information officer Roy Colvig.

The baby was discovered earlier that day after Leora Goren, 18, woke up her roommate, Katherine Byrnes, 23, to investigate a noise that sounded like an injured animal outside.

"Suddenly it stopped the wailing and really started crying and we realized it was a baby" inside a bag lying on a concrete gutter, Ms. Byrnes said.

Police said the umbilical cord was still attached to the baby, and there were blood stains in a second-floor bathroom directly above the spot where the newborn was found.

Ms. Byrnes later visited the baby at the hospital.

"We both feel really close to the baby," Ms. Goren said. "A doctor told police that if it hadn't been for us, the baby wouldn't have made it."

Pitcher Rollie Fingers winds up on the mound for the first time with the Milwaukee Brewers during spring training. Fingers went on to win the American League Cy Young award after joining the club from San Diego.

Fingers captures AL Cy Young award

Switch from National League pays big dividends for fireman, Brewers

NEW YORK (AP) — Rollie Fingers says every pitcher who has ever won the Cy Young Award will tell you the same thing, "that everything went right during the whole year."

Fingers, cagey 13-year veteran with a handlebar mustache, was voted the 1981 Cy Young winner in the American League by the Baseball Writers Association of America, the BBWAA announced Tuesday.

The Milwaukee Brewers right-hander said he was surprised because he was a reliever and "being a relief pitcher, it doesn't happen that often. It makes winning even more gratifying."

Sparky Lyle, then with the New York Yankees, was the only other AL reliever to win the award, in 1977. Bruce Sutter of the Chicago Cubs in 1979 and Mike Marshall of the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1974 won it in the National League.

"I feel this was my best season ever. Very few guys get a chance to have a year like I had," Fingers said when he learned of the award after arriving in Las Vegas, Nev., for a visit. "Every guy on the ballclub played great behind me, that's one of the main reasons I won.

"I gave up 10 runs all year, and every one of them was earned," he said. "The defense didn't give up a run when I was out there."

Fingers paid special tribute to shortstop Robin Yount and second baseman Jim Gantner for "getting me out of several jams."

He also said he was helped by the experience of catchers Ted Simmons and Charlie Moore, especially on "how to pitch to hitters I didn't know."

Fingers, 35, won six games and had 28 saves with a 1.04 earned run average in 47 appearances for Milwaukee. He worked 78 innings, striking out 61 and walking only 13.

He finished well ahead of Oakland's Steve McCatty in balloting by a special panel that consisted of two writers from each of the BBWAA's 14 franchise cities.

Fingers received 22 of 28 first-place ballots and finished with 126 points. He was the only pitcher named on every ballot. McCatty had the other six first-place votes and finished with 84½ points. Jack Morris of Detroit was third with 21 points.

Milwaukee won the second-half title in the AL East but lost to the New York Yankees in five games in the miniplayoffs.

"Awards at the end of the season are fine, but it's playoff wins and the World Series that really matter. We were shooting for a World Series and I sure would have liked to have gotten there," said Fingers, who broke into the major leagues with Oakland in 1969.

Fingers was an essential part of the A's World Series victories in 1972, '73 and '74. He was the Most Valuable Players of 1974 Series against Los Angeles, winning one game and saving two with a 1.93 ERA.

"I guess it just wasn't to be this year, but we'll do it next year. We just missed it this time. If we had any breaks in that fifth game of the playoffs, we might have won," Fingers said. "I just want to get into another World Series."

Fingers left the A's in the first free agent re-entry draft in 1976, signed with San Diego and worked four seasons for the Padres. San Diego traded him to St. Louis last December during the winter baseball meetings, and St. Louis sent him to Milwaukee two days later.

In his first two seasons with San Diego, he set NL records with 35 saves in 1977 and 37 saves the next year. He also holds two World Series records, for relief appearances with 16 and career saves with six. He was named NL Fireman of the Year three times, in 1977, '78 and '80, and he repeated in the AL last year, becoming the only man to win the award in both leagues.

Dodgers shun drafts for farm talent

NEW YORK (AP) — The World Champion Los Angeles Dodgers and four other teams will be skipping the bidding war for baseball's premier players in the next three re-entry drafts.

Joining the Dodgers on the sidelines for the only four Type A players in this year's draft will be the Seattle Mariners, Minnesota Twins, California Angels and Boston Red Sox, Blake Cullen, administrator-director of public relations for the National League, said Tuesday.

"I think the theory is, as it has been all along, that the Mariners are a team that grows through the farm system," said Melody Tucker, Seattle's public relations director. "That has been the club's philosphy all along and continues to be (owner) George Argyros'.

"He wants to get into the free agent market actively when it gets to a point where one or two players will make the difference — put you over the top."

ACCORDING TO Tucker, seven teams asked not to participate in the Type A player re-entry draft. But only five teams could be listed as "excluded clubs," according to the formula worked out at the end of this past season's 50-day strike. Cullen would not reveal the names of the other two teams opting out.

Type A players are those in the top 20 percent in a computerized category of all major league players. Players who have been in the major leagues for 10 years and with their last team for at least five years, and those who have gone through the re-entry draft before are excluded from the computer listings.

The only players in that category who have opted for free agency this year are left-handed pitcher Ron Guidry of the New York Yankees, right-handed pitcher Dick Tidrow of the Chicago Cubs, relief pitcher Ed Farmer of the Chicago White Sox and outfielder Ken Griffey of the Cincinnati Reds.

Infielder Phil Garner would have been listed as a premier player, but he signed a contract with the Houston Astros on Monday.

The five exempt teams will not have to make available a list of 26 players who will go into a compensation pool for the draft. However, the five will be able to participate in other phases of the draft.

Clubs losing a Type A player will receive a player from the pool as compensation.

"We have decided to 'opt out' because we have a great deal of confidence in our farm system," said Dodgers Vice President Al Campanis.

HAYWOOD SULLIVAN, Boston executive vice president and general manager, said: "The Red Sox will participate in the draft, but not for the premier player."

"We do not want to go in and sign a $1-million or $1.5-million player," Sullivan said. "We feel the player wouldn't be there if somebody else thought he was worth that kind of money.

"Our goal is to remain competitive and to stay solvent." Cullen said teams have until midnight Nov. 9 to sign their own Type A free agents. Immediately following the draft, the teams losing those free agents can retain rights to talk to their former players.

There is a period — from midnight Nov. 9 until the draft is completed — when no teams may sign any free agents, Cullen said.

Fiesta, Gator bowls licking at No. 1 chops

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

If things stay the way there are — Pitt No. 1, Clemson No. 2 — forget about a national championship college football shootout in the Cotton, Orange, Rose or Sugar Bowls.

Are you listening, Fiesta and Gator Bowls?

You bet they're listening.

"We've talked about it, obviously," says Bill Shover, a member of the Fiesta Bowl's Board of Directors. "As far as we're concerned, NBC would have to come up with a lot of money. It's up to them. I can't speak for the network. But a matchup like that would make the other bowls look anticlimactic."

Says George Olsen, head man of the Gator Bowl: "We've discussed the possibility within our committee and we've reviewed with ABC the possibility that it might come up. They were noncommittal and said they'd keep it in mind. I don't think it will come off, though."

The Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla., is scheduled for Monday, Dec. 28, at 8 p.m. CST. The Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., becomes a fifth New Year's Day game this year at 12:30 p.m. CST Jan. 1, going head-to-head on television with the Cotton Bowl.

The problem is money. The Fiesta paid Penn State and Ohio State $465,000 apiece last year and is guaranteeing $675,000-700,000 this time, the TV loot having been increased because of the switch to Jan 1. But the game is sold out and any additional payoff would have to come from television.

"I think it would take $1 million-$1.5 million per team to work that possibility (Pitt-Clemson) out," Shover says.

The Gator Bowl paid Pitt and South Carolina $450,000 apiece last year and goes to $500,000 this time. Almost all tickets have been sold except for the allotment put aside for the competing schools.

But suppose network money was available to put the Fiesta or Gator Bowls in the ballpark with the so-called Big Four? That question was put to Pitt Coach Jackie Sherrill.

"We'd have to go," he said.

Morris Brown investigating player abuse with ax handle

ATLANTA (AP) — Morris Brown College officials are investigating allegations that football Coach Lambert Reed struck players with an ax handle, according to the athletic director.

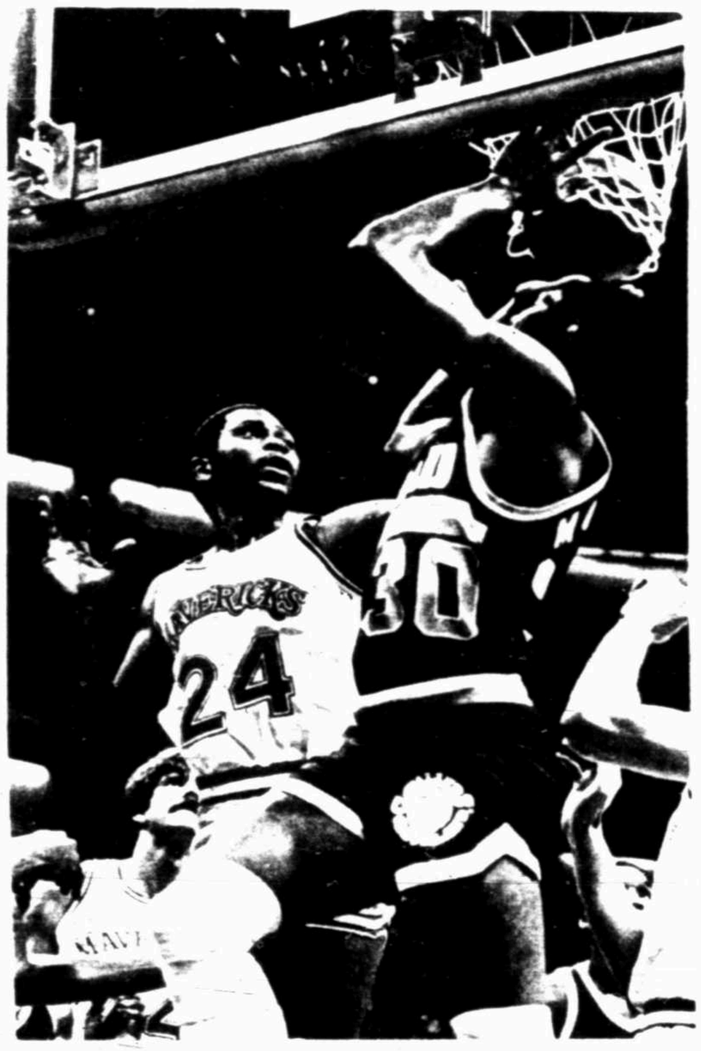

"The incidents did happen, and right now we're conducting an in-house investigation," said Athletic Director Earnest Ross.

"Upon conclusion of that investigation, a recommendation and appropriate action will be taken."

There was no elaboration on how Ross knew the alleged incidents occurred.

Scott said the 6-foot-4, 240-pound Reed "came down across my back with that stick" in the locker room in front of other players.

"I grabbed the stick then because I knew the man was going to hurt me," Scott said. "I figured I'd better defend myself. That's when I went under him and slammed him to the floor."

Mike Mitchell (30) of the Cleveland Cavaliers and Dallas rookie Mark Aguirre (24) go head-to-head in NBA action Tuesday night in Dallas. Mitchell won this battle by scoring.

Playing Bullets is like exhibition for Julius Erving

By The Associated Press

There was something peculiar about playing the new Washington Bullets, Julius Erving said.

"I felt like it was an exhibition game," the Philadelphia 76ers star said. "I kept looking over my shoulder for Wes Unseld and Elvin Hayes."

With the two longtime Bullets gone from the team, the 76ers built a 20-point lead in the first half behind Erving and Bobby Jones, then whipped Washington 112-99 Tuesday night.

Unseld retired and Hayes was sent to Houston after the Bullets finished third in the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division last season behind Boston and Philadelphia. Coach Gene Shue has been trying to find a winning combination ever since.

"It's tough with a new group playing against the best in the league," said Shue, whose Bullets have been beaten by Boston and Philadelphia in their first two games this season.

Bullets guard Kevin Grevey said the absence of Unseld and Hayes had made things much tougher offensively.

"I missed Wes setting those picks and Elvin tipping in missed shots," Grevey said. "We're trying to learn from our mistakes, and we certainly made enough of them."

Erving, who has led Philadelphia in scoring in its first three games, all victories, scored 19 points. Jones, a supersub turned starter this season, added 15.

The 76ers opened a 58-38 halftime lead, at one point outscoring the Bullets 13-1. Jones had seven of those points.

Don Collins led the Bullets with 17 points, and Grevey had 16, seven in a short-lived burst that pulled Washington within 12 points, 62-50, in the third quarter.

Bulls 104, Hawks 96

Rickey Sobers and Ray Blume, reserve guards, helped Chicago rally in the fourth quarter, and Dwight Jones and Reggie Theus each added a pair of late free throws as the Bulls won their first game.

The Bulls trailed 72-61 late in the third quarter before Sobers and Blume combined on nine straight points for Chicago. With Chicago leading by four points, 94-90, Jones sank a pair of free throws, and after Atlanta rookie Rudy Macklin scored a basket, Theuslsank two free shots with one minute left.

"I was the most surprised player on the team when I came in to start the fourth quarter ...," Blume said. "I had two bad preseason games, and in practice I haven'tlbeen doing well. But I know that I've got to be ready at all times."

Jones paced the Bulls with 20 points. Dan Roundfield led Atlanta with 22.

Cavaliers 125, Mavericks 110

Mike Mitchell scored 33 points, and Bob Wilkerson added 28 as the Cavaliers evened their record at 1-1 and gave new Coach Don Delaney his first victory. Mitchell scored 14 points in the third quarter and had 10 in the fourth, during which Cleveland outscored Dallas 33-14.

The Mavericks led 64-61 at halftime. Rookie Mark Aguirre scored 27 points for the Mavericks, and Brad Davis had 24.

Suns 111, Spurs 88

Kyle Macy scored 18 points to lead seven players in double figures as Phoenix recovered from two straight losses with its first win of the season. Suns rookie Larry Nance scored nine of his 13 points in the first quarter as Phoenix took the lead for good eight minutes into the game.

Phoenix led 62-50 at the half and led by as many as 22 points.

Rockets 101, Knicks 98

Hayes and Moses Malone combined for 10 points late in the game to snap an 88-88 tie and produce a 98-93 lead with 1:47 left as Houston got by New York. Hayes and Malone each hit four straight free throws, and Hayes added a layup in the un.

Malone finished with 29 points and 13 rebounds, and Hayes had 18 points, 12 from the free throw line.

Randy Smith led New York with 19 points.

Blazers 102, Lakers 100

Kelvin Ransey hit an 15-foot jump shot with 25 seconds to play as the unbeaten Trail Blazers held off the Lakers. Portland led by as many as 11 points in the second period, but the Lakers eventually cut the lead to two points, 100-98, on a sky hook by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Ransey's jumper extended the lead to four, making a Jabbar layup with 18 seconds left meaningless.

Jabbar scored 18 of his 33 points in the fourth quarter as the Lakers overcame a 78-68 deficit while both Portland centers, Mychal Thompson and Kevin Kunnert fouled out.

Jay Ciaccio wins Junior tennis title

Jay Ciaccio won the Boys 16 singles and Shawn McMaster took the Boys 13-under singles in the Midland Tennis Association's Junior Tournament over the weekend. Ciaccio beat David Rogers 6-2, 6-1 in the finals while McMaster won over Justin Hoffman, 6-3, 6-2.

Boys 16 Semifinals—Jay Ciaccio d Mark Brackens 6-3, 6-1; David Rogers d Jess Ciaccio 7-5, 5-7, 6-1. Finals—Jay Ciaccio d Rogers 6-2, 6-1. Consolation—Richard Petterson d Michael Womack 6-2, 6-2. Boys 13-under semifinals Shawn McMaster d Kevin Moore 6-2, 3-6, 6-3; Justin Hoffman d Robert Rogers 7-5, 6-1. Finals McMaster d Hoffman 6-3, 6-2. Consolation—Clint Hamilton d Derrick Milner 6-1, 6-1.

Hurricanes knocked from bowl lists

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Within days of scoring its biggest football victory in 55 years, the University of Miami has suffered one of its most telling setbacks.

The university announced Tuesday the NCAA has placed the 13th-ranked Hurricanes on probation for two years and barred the team from accepting a bowl bid this season.

The university was found guilty of 66 of 107 recruiting violations that allegedly occurred between 1976 and 1980 while the Hurricanes, now 5-2 after a 17-14 upset of then-No. 1 Penn State Saturday, were struggling to rebuild their program.

BESIDES FORBIDDING postseason play before Nov. 1, 1983, Miami is restricted to 20 new scholarships for the 1982-83 school year, instead of the present 30.

The Hurricanes will still be allowed to appear on regional and national television and share in TV revenues.

Two players, whom the NCAA said violated regulations, were ruled ineligible immediately, while 14 others will be ineligible for postseason play for the rest of their collegiate careers. The two players, who weren't identified by officials, are appealing.

UM President Edward T. Foote said school officials were notified of the NCAA's action Oct. 21, but had 15 days to decide whether to appeal the penalties.

"We concluded we would accept the findings and accept the imposed penalties. These matters go back five years and at least part of the thinking of those of us involved in making this decision was that it is time to get on with it. It is time to put this chapter of university history behind us," said Foote.

FOOTE SAID the school wouldn't appeal because officials felt chances of reversing the findings or penalties would be "virtually nil." He admitted that the UM football program "broke the rules."

"I'm glad the investigation is over. I feel we've been on quasi-probation the last two years," said Coach Howard Schnellenberger, who took over the football program in 1979 when Lou Saban, now an executive of the New York Yankees, resigned to become head coach at Army.

Schnellenberger said he felt the program's progress has been impeded by the investigation, but "now we stand ready to go for the national championship."

THE UNIVERSITY chose not to contest about half of the alleged violations, which involved such things as use of rental cars to drive recruits during visits to campus, improper recruiting contacts, improper entertainment of recruits and providing small loans to recruits who ran out of money during visits.

The NCAA also cited one violation in which "a representative of the university's athletic interests loaned a student-athlete cash, which the student-athlete used as a downpayment on an automobile."

Pittsburgh carries No. 1 cautiously

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh Coach Jackie Sherrill carries the nation's No. 1 ranking cautiously. He knows it's meaningless unless the Panthers finish on top at the end of the season.

"You want to be there at the end of the dance, not the beginning of it," Sherrill said Tuesday after Pitt became the sixth different team to hold the top spot in this topsy-turvy year.

The Panthers survived with a 29-24 win over Boston College last week after a less-than-impressive 23-10 victory over Syracuse. Nevertheless, Sherrill figures Pitt is the best team in the land.

"I don't think anyone else deserves it over us," he said.

But Sherrill is concerned about what he calls "playing not to lose" in discussing why Pitt was so conservative in its last two games.

"When you play to win, you're reckless and you make things happen. When you play not to lose, things happen to you. It was very evident Saturday. We were playing not to lose," Sherrill said Tuesday.

"The pressure's going to be there. We have to handle the pressure if we're going to keep it rolling. Right now, the pressure is bothering us and we're not playing relaxed football," he added.

But the Pitt coach discounted any curse or jinx associated with the top spot, even if this is the first time in the 46-year history of The Associated Press poll that six different teams have been ranked No. 1.

"Maybe the right team hasn't been ranked No. 1 yet," Sherrill laughed.

Meanwhile, defensive coodinator Foge Fazio welcomed the news. It marks the first time Pitt has been ranked first since the national championship year of 1976.

"When we got the word, there were chills going up my spine and I felt great elation, because we've been down. You could just see a lift in the lockerroom," said Fazio after the ratings were released.

"I hope we can interpret that rating as a rejuvenation, a new direction to go in," he added. "I'm glad we're No. 1."

The Pitt defense is still the stingiest in the country against the run, allowing just 49.9 yards per game.

But freshman quarterback Doug Flutie of Boston College burned the Panther secondary for 347 yards and a pair of touchdowns last week, cuasing some worrisome moments.

"After the game Saturday, I was sick. I was depressed. I had a headache. I thought I was going to die," Fazio said. "But I got well in a hurry when I found out we were No. 1. When you're No. 1, you have to look like No. 1."

Cougs hope Sims puts pants on one leg at time

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston Coach Bill Yeoman wants to make it clear it is not out of disrespect for Texas' mammoth defensive tackle Kenneth Sims that he is not devising some exotic offense to contain the senior from Groesbeck.

The Cougars expect enough trouble from Sims without making him mad.

"We didn't do anything different for Billy Ray Smith (Arkansas defensive end) and we won't have anything new for Sims either," Yeoman said. "All that does is screw up your offense. Hopefully, he puts his pants on one leg at a time too.

"That doesn't mean we think less of him, just that you don't go around changing your offense. What you might do is take a stronger blocking scheme for the tackle just like in another game you might have a stronger scheme for the linebacker."

The Cougars and Longhorns meet in the Astrodome Saturday night in a battle of struggling offenses and granite defenses. The Sims-led Longhorns rank No. 1 nationally in total defense and the Cougars are 12th.

Texas has a 3-1 Southwest Conference record, while UH is a step back at 3-2.

The youthful UH offense, however, will be preoccupied with Sims during this week's preparations. Yeoman will make sure of that.

"I remember last year (Terald) Clark broke loose, faked the safety to the ground and then Sims ran him down for a 14-yard gain," Yeoman said. "He's got that great speed that you just can't get away from."

The key for the Cougars, Yeoman said, would be to eliminate the turnovers that slowed them down in last week's 20-16 victory over Texas Christian. All of TCU's points followed a UH turnover.

"We've talked a lot about throwing the ball on the ground and that's something we can't do this week," Yeoman said.

The Cougars have lost 16 of 29 fumbles this season and UH quarterbacks have been intercepted 16 times.

Yeoman said the Cougar offense was still involved in a learning process with sophomore Lionel Wilson.

"It's not often you get to work with your third quarterback and your third running back, but we're getting things worked out," Yeoman said.

Wilson inherited the quarterbacking job after a series of quarterback injuries, and sophomore Robert Durham will start against the Longhorns in place of injured Eddie Wright.

Texas will take a 4-2-1 lead into the brief but intense series with the Cougars trying to win for the first time ever against UT at home.

Northwestern's Wildcats shoot for NCAA record

CHICAGO (AP) — Almost everybody is feeling sorry for Northwestern's Wildcats, who this week are in position to set a major college football record of 29 straight losses which would break the mark they share with Kansas State and Virginia.

Without a victory since the second game of the 1979 season when they defeated Wyoming 27-22, the Wildcats have won only three games in the last five seasons and their last Big Ten victory was a 21-7 triumph over Illinois in the final game of the 1977 season.

The situation has reached a point where even the opposition is beginning to feel sorry for Northwestern. And Michigan State Coach Frank "Muddy" Waters, himself an admitted sympathizer, could be the man to tag Northwestern, a 52-0 loser last Saturday to Wisconsin, with the record.

"It's an unenviable position," Waters told the Chicago Football Writers Tuesday in a telephone interview. "I have mixed feelings about it. We don't want to be a party to that record but if we lose that's worse.

"There's no joy in seeing anybody set that kind of record," he said. "It's too bad people have to keep track of things like that.

"Northwestern hasn't found the magic formula and lacks experienced personnel," Waters said. "Still, we are not in a position to be overconfident. We're still hungry. We will not be down for Northwestern."

As Waters spoke, Northwestern rookie Coach Dennis Green listened ad took little consolation in the fact that the Wildcat streak had reached 20 defeats before he took the coaching reins.

"I didn't think of the 20-game losing streak when I took the job," said Green. "Not that that would have made any difference. Sure this team is only 0-8, but somebody has to mop up.

"We've lost 28 games for a reason," Green said. "The program is not where it should be in this conference. I'm proud to be at Northwestern. By no means did I take the job with my eyes closed. We have to keep our nose to the grindstone. We have to make an effort every week."

Clemson's ACC hopes hinge on play against Tar Heels

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — For the past couple of weeks, Coach Danny Ford has predicted that Virginia, Duke and Wake Forests could give Clemson more trouble than it could bear.

And for the past couple of weeks, the second-ranked Tigers have kept on rolling toward an undefeated season.

When Ford held his weekly press conference Tuesday, he had the perfect opportunity to say it again — this time with real meaning.

But he didn't, apparently feeling he didn't need to about a game that should decide the Atlantic Coast Conference championship, as well as where eighth-ranked North Carolina and Clemson spend their post-season holidays.

It's obvious.

The Tigers are 8-0 and have every major bowl not already committed watching them.

"It's a game we've got to win if we want at least an opportunity to win the ACC championship," Ford said of the upcoming match at Chapel Hill. "If we don't win, we probably can't even get a share of it."

If North Carolina wins Saturday's regionally televised contest, the Tar Heels will have the conference lead with a 4-0 record and games against Virginia and Duke remaining. If the Tigers win, they'll strenghthen their lead to 5-0 with only Maryland left to play.

"Our No. 1 goal has always been to win the ACC championship," Ford said. "That's what's important to us this week."

North Carolina, 7-1, lost only to South Carolina, 31-13, in the seventh game of the season.

North Carolina has been bothered by injuries in the past few weeks. Running back Kelvin Bryant was lost to a knee injury in a game with Georgia Tech.

Dodgers show signs of discontent beneath Series ecstacy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Beneath the ecstacy of the past week, there were quiet signs of discontent as the Los Angeles Dodgers enjoyed what Manager Tom Lasorda would call the fruits of their ultimate victory.

And now, with their first World Series triumph since 1965 tucked away, there's considerable uncertainty as the Dodgers look ahead to next year.

"There'll be some changes," said General Manager Al Campanis, not long after the Dodgers defeated the Yankees 9-2 last Wednesday night to win the Series 4-2. "But we always make some changes in the off-season in areas we think we need improvement.

"As far as changing the club ... I have a friend who's an architect and he took me to his home. It was a beautiful home. You think, 'How could anyone want a better home?' But he's telling me, 'I need more storage room, this bathroom has to be changed.'

"That's the way it is with a ballclub. I don't think you're ever satisfied. You want to improve it."

As noncommital as ever, Campanis didn't say whether those changes will take place from within the club's framework, where such young standouts as second baseman Steve Sax, first baseman-outfielder Mike Marshall and outfielder Candy Maldonado, among others, are anxious and perhaps ready for extensive playing time.

Even as the Dodgers were toasted by the city of Los Angeles at a parade Friday, trade rumors were already flying. One had Pedro Guerrero, a standout in the Series, going to San Diego for shortstop Ozzie Smith. Another, mentioned previously, had shortstop Bill Russell and pitcher Bob Welch involved in a deal for St. Louis shortstop Garry Templeton.

The infield of Russell, second baseman Davey Lopes, first baseman Steve Garvey and third baseman Ron Cey has been together on a regular basis since the middle of the 1973 season. How ironic if it should be broken up after the long-sought championship is finally realized.

Sax is considered the Dodgers' second baseman of the future and he played well while Lopes was injured in late August and early September. It would be surprising if Sax, 21, doesn't get a shot at the job next spring.

Nobody on the roster seems capable of taking Russell's spot right now, but a trade for Smith or Templeton would end any mystery there.

Garvey and Cey seem set, although Garvey's six-year, $2 million contract ends after next season.

"I don't know what's going to happen," said Campanis when asked about Lopes. "I will say this: I don't make decisions and Tommy (Lasorda) doesn't make decisions. The player, by his performance, makes the decision on who's going to play."

Lopes, apparently expecting to lose his job, said after the Series: "They can break us up, they can tear us apart, but they can't take away that ring."

Campanis said he's happy with Russell, "especially if the doctor says he's going to be all right. He played good shortstop in the series, but for a while, he was limping around, you didn't even know if he could play."

Other players who may or may not be back next year include outfielders Rick Monday, Jay Johnstone and Reggie Smith — all of their contracts expired after this season — and pitchers Rick Sutcliffe, Dave Goltz and Bobby Castillo.

Campanis indicated the Dodgers want Monday and Johnstone to return. As for Smith, who has been hampered by a shoulder injury, Campanis replied, "That I can't tell you," when asked if the club would try to resign the veteran switch-hitter.

Sutcliffe might have sealed his fate when he tore up Lasorda's office when informed he wouldn't be on the club's post-season roster. Goltz has a rich long-term contract but that didn't stop the Dodgers from letting Dave Stanhouse go last spring. The bottom line is Goltz hasn't been effective. And Castillo has blown hot and cold, mostly cold.

Steve Yeager, who shared the Series' most valuable player award with Guerrero and Cey, has repeatedly asked to be traded. Following the series, he indicated he hasn't changed his mind.

Yeager batted only 86 times during the 1981 regular season while being platooned with Mike Scioscia at catcher and hasn't hidden the fact that he wants more action.

"I don't know how much longer we'll be together, but we're not too old to play," said Russell. "We've been together so long, you hate to see it broken up. We all know it's going to happen sometime. We just hope it's not now."

UIL members face vote

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Legislative Council of the University Interscholastic League has voted to let its member schools decide whether spring football training should be abolished in Class 5A, the only division that holds it.

The council also agreed to allow its members to vote on whether private and parochial schools should be permitted to join the UIL. In placing the proposal on the February referendum, the council recommended that it be rejected.

Also placed on the February referendum were proposals that would:

— Set up state tennis playoffs by teams, rather than just having singles and doubles competition.

— Divide Class A basketball schools into those that play football and those that do not.

Phillies eye Pat Corrales

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pat Corrales, the former Texas Rangers' manager, was expected to be named today as manager of the Philadelphia Phillies.

Unless something unforeseen happened, Corrales appeared to have a lock on the job.

Bill Giles, who put together a group which bought the National League baseball team last week for $30.175 million, said there was a 60 percent chance that Corrales would get the post.

Giles, the sole operating head for the new owners, talked with Corrales Tuesday night to clear the way for the announcement.

Giles and General Manager Paul Owens settled some differences on selection of coaches and came to terms on salary and length of contract.

The Phillies narrowed the field for the job to Corrales and Bobby Wine, a coach with the team the past 10 years.

Corrales, 40, managed Texas the final game of the 1978 season and the following two years.

Corrales originally signed with the Phillies' organization as a catcher out of a Fresno, Calif., high school in 1959. He was in the Phillies' system through 1965, and then played for the St. Louis Cardinals, Cincinnati Reds and San Diego Padres.

He was a journeyman catcher, usually a backup type. At St. Louis, he was the favorite catcher for Bob Gibson, now in the Hall of Fame. Gibson requested Corrales because he liked the receiver's strong arm.

Corrales' final year as a major league player was in 1973. He finished with Hawaii in the Pacific Coast League in 1974. In '75, he managed Alexandria of the Texas League, a San Diego farm.

The next three years he was a coach with the Rangers. After being fired as manager at Texas, he became administrative assistant to club General Manager Eddie Robinson.

Wine, 43, has been been asked to return as a coach, and said he would consider it after talking with Corrales. A major league shortstop for 12 years, Wine played with the Phillies and the Montreal Expos.

The past two seasons he was the No.1 aide to Manager Dallas Green, who resigned last month to become vice president and general manager of the Chicago Cubs.

Wine met with Giles and Owens for several hours Monday night, and said he left with the feeling Corrales' was the team's choice.

"I'm not very optimistic," said Wine. He had believed he was heir apparent to the job when Green left.

Green upset Wine by recommending Corrales to the Phillies as his successor.

There was a possibility that Wine could become a manager elsewhere, perhaps in Montreal if Jim Fanning decided to return to running the farm system. Fanning replaced Dick Williams, who was fired, late in the 1981 season.

Landry says there are no dominant teams in NFL

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Coach Tom Landry says there are no dominant teams in the National Football League.

"The whole league is balanced now," he said. "We know if we slow down at any time we can get beat.

"There are fewer bad teams. There is a lot of talent out there," Landry said.

And he said the Cowboys are playing a team Monday night in Texas Stadium that ranks with any in the NFL.

"Chuck Knox has done a great job at Buffalo and the Bills are quite a challenge for us with their explosive offense," he said. "Chuck has blended the old with the new very well. And Buffalo has drafted well. They have excellent players."

The Cowboys have won three games in a row and, after downing Philadelphia 17-14 Sunday, are tied with the Eagles for the lead in the National Conference Eastern Division.

"Buffalo will finish up a four-game stretch for us against contenders," said Landry. "Buffalo is the strongest of the teams we've played."

Dallas has beaten Los Angeles, Miami and Philadelphia in the last three weeks.

"Buffalo is very strong ... very devastating with lots of striking power," said Landry. "And their defense is very capable."

Landry had said he would take a 2-2 split of the four games. But Cowboys quarterback Danny White pulled out the Miami and Philadelphia games in the fourth quarter to spoil his coach's calculations.

Landry said the Cowboys' only advantage now is "we've got 'em (the Eagles) coming to Texas Stadium, if that means something.

"All we could hope for when the season started was a split. Well, we've got the one-half of that split on our side. Philadelphia is still pretty much the same team it was last year. They have a strong defense."

Popular Raftery leaves Seton Hall

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — Dan Callandrillo was stunned and bewildered, perhaps more than any of his college basketball teammates at Seton Hall.

Less than three weeks before the season opener, the Pirates lost a coach and good friend in Bill Raftery.

The easy-going head coach quit Tuesday after compiling a 154-141 record in 11 years, citing lucrative job offers in private business.

Raftery, who broke the news to his Big East squad after Monday night's practice, said he will decide in 10 days where he will carve a new career.

Callandrillo, team captain and the player closest to Raftery, was choked up as he discussed Raftery's resignation, which is effective the end of November.

"It was a shock to all the players. We were waiting for him at practice, and he showed up half way through and told us," Callandrillo said.

"I understand him leaving, but it's hard to realize it's actually taking place. Its kind of like moving away from your family. I feel like I'm lost now. If I had a problem, I could always go see Raf. People even teased me about Raf being like my father. It's the little things I'll miss," added Callandrillo.

"The hardest thing was for me to tell the players, and then at home to tell my daughters," Raftery said.

Horace "Hoddy" Mahon, an assistant coach for the past nine seasons, was named interim head coach. Athletic Director Richard Regan said he expected a permanent coach to be appointed in midseason.

Raftery's resignation represents the second major coaching change announced in the last six weeks at Seton Hall.

Ed Mannigan, the football head coach, stepped down Sept. 14, opening day of the season, citing personal reasons. Later, he expressed dissatisfaction with the program.

"I approach this with mixed emotions," said University president Edward R. D'Alessio.

"When Billy came in to say he was resigning, I can't tell you what I said under my breath. However, one of the things you learn in the university is we are training people for other pursuits.

Boner nearly costs Reeves

DALLAS (AP) - Tom Landry says Danny Reeves will know better next time.

The Dallas Cowboys' coach was watching on television Monday night when Denver Coach Reeves made a decision that almost cost the Broncos a National Football League game against Minnesota.

Reeves ordered his team to go for a first down on fourth-and-one at the Bronco 40 with three minutes remaining.

Denver led 19-10 at the time. The Broncos didn't make it and eventually held on to win 19-17.

"Danny got off lucky," Landry said with a big smile Tuesday. "Usually the lesson you get on something like that is a little more painful...you lose."

Reeves played under Landry and was an assistant coach before he was hired this year by Denver.

Weaver loses driver's license

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — Baltimore Orioles Manager Earl Weaver will lose his license for 60 days because of his failure to submit to a blood-alcohol test, according to the state Motor Vehicle Administration.

MVA spokesman Steve Horwitz said an agency hearing officer Tuesday ordered the suspension of Weaver's license starting Nov. 17.

Horwitz said Weaver, the 51-year-old veteran baseball manager, did not plan to appeal the suspension.

Weaver was stopped by Baltimore County police Aug. 31 and charged with driving while intoxicated.

Queen opens new session of Parliament

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II, with the traditional glittering pageantry, formally opened a new session of Parliament today, reiterating the Conservative government's stark economic message.

Her speech, written by Conservative ministers, pledged no bending from the anti-inflationary, monetarist policies of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's administration — despite its increasing unpopularity midway through the government's five-year term.

The 55-year-old monarch arrived at the House of Lords from Buckingham Palace with her husband, Prince Philip, in the horse-drawn Irish state coach.

Prince Charles and Princess Diana joined the horse-drawn royal procession, accompanied by mounted Household Cavalry and Lifeguards, recalling the spectacle of the last great royal occasion in London — their wedding on July 29.

Diana and Charles sat together on the monarch's right as she read the eight-minute speech, wearing spectacles along with a glittering crown and long, white evening dress. The queen's second child, Princess Anne, 31, and her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, sat as usual on the monarch's left.

"My government attaches the utmost importance to maintaining progress in reducing inflation by the pursuit of firm monetary and fiscal policies," the queen told the packed assembly, including bishops, judges and diplomats.

The speech, outlining Mrs. Thatcher's legislative program for the next year, also pledged new labor union legislation — which government spokesman said was aimed at curbing union power — and crackdowns on high-spending town halls, mainly controlled by the opposition Labor Party.

Both measures are expected to provoke fierce opposition from Labor and uneasiness among moderates in Mrs. Thatcher's own government, already fearful her policies will cost them the next election.

Other domestic measures outlined in today's unusually brief speech included bills to sell off to private enterprise parts of Britain's nationalized oil and gas industries and a state-run haulage firm.

The speech pledged increased defense spending, but gave no details, while including expressions of hope for the success of forthcoming U.S.-Soviet arms limitation talks.

Mrs. Thatcher and opposition leader Michael Foot, stood behind a barrier at the foot of the chamber with other members of the House of Commons, barred by protocol from entering the House of Lords.

The queen said a bill will be introduced on "employment and labor relations."

Scotland Yard said full security was in operation inside and outside Parliament because of the spate of Irish Republican Army bombings. Police asked the crowds to watch for anything suspicious. Hilda Zerfahs, a grandmother from South London, said, "My husband asked me before I came what I would do if I saw a suspicious person. I told him I'd give them a jolly great wallop."

Classes, journals offered via satellite

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Instructional courses and a "video journal" soon will be offered to eye doctors via satellite in an experimental program unveiled here during the American Academy of Ophthalmology's annual meeting.

The "EyeSat" system will be offered to hospitals, universities, medical buildings and physicians' homes equipped with a receiving "dish," said Dr. Francis E. O'Donnell Jr., medical director of the Bethesda Eye Institute in St. Louis and director of the non-profit project.

About 400 subscribers are expected to have the necessary satellite and video recording equipment to receive the hourly programs, which will be offered once a week beginning in February, O'Donnell said Tuesday.

A national editorial board of 18 ophthalmologists will prepare the programs, which will include lectures and surgical demonstrations to keep subscribers abreast of current developments in the field, O'Donnell said.

"The programs are completely developed from scratch and no more than three months in advance," he said. "We could do it live, but the quality of the program would suffer."

In addition to surgical instruction from the nation's top eye surgeons, EyeSat subscribers also will get a monthly "journal" much like the medical print journals, O'Donnell said.

EyeSat "can serve as a primary means of keeping abreast of both accepted practice and new contributions in ophthalmology," he said.

The declining cost of satellite technology and the increasing cost of "continuing medical education" makes EyeSat feasible, said O'Donnell, who also is chairman of the ophthalmology department at the St. Louis University School of Medicine.

About 20 states now require eye doctors to take a certain number of hours of continuing medical education, and others are considering similar regulations, O'Donnell said. EyeSat often can fulfill that requirement cheaply, he said.

"It's not unusual for a doctor to spend $4,000 a year on continuing medical education," O'Donnell said. "Hospitals can fulfill the CME (continuing medical education) requirement for everyone on their staff with one installation.

"The costs have come way down. It's economically feasible to use satellite communications for CME courses. And other groups besides ophthalmologists will come along and use it too."

It now costs between $5,000 and $8,000 to install a satellite "dish" and buy a video tape recorder, he said. Individual subscriptions rates for the courses are $300 for individuals for 52 hours of programming, or $1,200 for institutions.

The video journal will be offered as a separate service once a month for $50 for individuals and $200 for institutions.

Libyan troops are being evacuated from Chad

PARIS (AP) — Libyan troops and equipment were being airlifted out of Chad today, with full evacation of about 10,000 troops expected to take about two weeks, according reports reaching Paris.

A correspondent from the French news agency Agence France-Presse reported from the Chad capital, N'Djamena, that he saw the airlift operation underway at the city's airport. He said it began Tuesday.

The correspondent quoted the Libyan commander in Chad, Col. Radwan Salah, as telling journalists that all Libyan troops would be withdrawn from the capital and the Chari-Baguirmi region surrounding it for 180 miles within two or three days. All Libyan troops would be evacuated from Chad within two weeks, Salah was quoted as saying.

Salah made the announcement of the withdrawal Tuesday, saying he had direct telephone orders from Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy.

Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei, who invited the estimated 10,000 troops into the country in December 1980 to help win a 16-year civil war, called last week for their immediate and total evacuation from the N'Djamena region, and from the whole country by the end of the year.

It was not clear if this included the northern Arzou Strip, claimed and occupied by Libya for a decade.

Diablo Canyon studies to be conducted

By G.G. LaBELLE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff wants three new independent studies of the controversial Diablo Canyon atomic power plant, but the governor of California is questioning whether they will be truly independent.

Harold Denton, NRC director of nuclear reactor regulation, ordered the studies Tuesday after plant operators outlined steps they've taken since September, when a design error was discovered after the plant was already licensed to test its reactor.

Several executives of Pacific Gas & Electric Co., the operator of the plant, outlined a plan for PG&E to do its own studies of "quality-assurance" at the plant on procedures before and during the period when the design errors were made in 1977.

Denton said the three studies would have to be completed before the NRC can grant the plant a license to generate electrical power.

Noting he wanted "independent" studies, Denton said he means "independent of those who did the original work."

But Herbert Brown, an attorney representing California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., questioned whether the studies would be truly independent since PG&E will hire the consultants to do the work.

Gov. Brown had written to the NRC last week, asking for an independent study of the plant's problems but insisting that consultants be hired by a steering committee representing all parties in the dispute, not by PG&E alone.

Herbert Brown questioned Denton about whether his ruling represented a rejection of the governor's proposal, but Denton insisted it was only a staff opinion.

Denton said the NRC and its staff will meet Monday to discuss Diablo Canyon's problem and he said he assumes some of the questions raised will be discussed then.

Plans to test the reactor at the Diablo Canyon plant, controversial since an earthquake fault was discovered nearby in 1977, were halted after discovery of the new problems in September.

PG&E officials insisted that problems don't compromise safety at the plant, located on the Pacific Ocean northwest of Los Angeles. This view was supported by Robert Cloud, an independent consultant, and Wilmer Gangloff, a representative of the Westinghouse Co., contractor for the Diablo Canyon reactor.

Denton said the three studies he was ordering should be similar to an independent study now underway by Cloud on earthquake-related consulting work done before 1978, when the company changed its procedures for dealing with consultants.

PG&E officials have said most problems trace to wrong information given a consultant before 1978, which were not caught by company procedures.

One study Denton ordered would be on safety-related consulting work before 1978 not directly related to earthquakes, a second would be on PG&E's own design process at that time.

Doctor will fight North Dakotan extradition

HAZEN, N.D. (AP) — Saying "I'm a good doctor and I'm going to stay here," a physician indicted in New Jersey on a charge of plotting to kill his son says he'll fight extradition from North Dakota.

"I've discovered some friends here that are standing by me," Dr. James Morrison said in a copyright interview with KBMR-KQDY Radio in Bismarck.

He said the charges against him are false.

Morrison was being held under guard on $50,000 bond Tuesday in a Hazen hospital, suffering from a heart ailment. He was arrested last Thursday in nearby Beulah, hours after a New Jersey grand jury indicted him on one count of conspiracy.

He had been practicing in Beulah since mid-September and was the town's only full-time doctor.

The indictment alleges that Morrison enlisted the aid of an undercover New Jersey state trooper in a plot to kill his son, James Morrison Jr., and his daughter-in-law, Lori Morrison.

"Until he (the son) went into the service, he lived with me," Morrison said in the interview. "I fed him and I took care of him. Now, this is six months after the conspiracy to kill him was supposed to have taken place."

The indictment alleges that Morrison, 54, planned to kill his son after James Morrison Jr. testified in a 1980 case concerning the firing of two rifle shots into the home of a black family across the street from the Morrisons' house in Barnegat, N.J. No one was injured in he shooting.

James Morrison Jr., along with his brother Aaron, who was a Ku Klux Klan organizer, and Klansman Karl E. Hand Jr. of New Orleans, were charged with assault with a deadly weapon and possession of firearms.

Aaron and Hand pleaded guilty and received three-month jail terms. James Morrison Jr., who testified for the prosecution, received a $100 fine and a suspended sentence.

When police searched Morrison's home, they found a large cache of weapons. Since Morrison had been convicted of a narcotics charge in 1970, he was charged with illegal possession of a pistol by a convict.

High interest rates causing increase in business failures

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The burden of high interest rates on American corporations large and small is reaching a critical stage, many financial analysts believe.

The evidence is abundant: lower third-quarter earnings, surprise announcements of dividend cuts and reduced debt ratings. Perhaps most dramatic is the huge increase this year in the number of reported business failures.

Because high borrowing costs are cutting into their profits, many companies find themselves in the vicious circle of having to borrow still more to repay maturing debt.

"THEY'RE HAVING to run to stay in place," says David Jones, a financial economist at the Wall Street investment firm of Aubrey G. Lanston & Co.

To make matters worse the economy is in the early stages of a recession that some economists believe will curtail business profits through mid-1982.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain the financial pinch and its implications for the economy:

Q. Why do companies borrow money?

A. MOST FREQUENTLY they borrow to pay for equipment or expansion projects and to maintain a level of inventories that is neither too small nor too large. Retailers, for example, must keep a stock of goods that is a cushion against changes in demand. Usually that inventory is bought on credit.

Q. How long have interest rates been high?

A. Rates have been high, by historical standards, for two years. The period began in the fall of 1979 when the Federal Reserve Board did an about-face in its approach to curbing inflation. Instead of keeping a cap on interest rates, the Fed decided to focus its attention on growth in the money supply. Its reasoning was that too fast growth in the money stock was overheating the economy and compounding the inflation problem.

Q. Is that strategy working?

A. In recent months the Fed has had notable success in restraining growth of the money supply. At the same time inflation has abated somewhat, but not as much as the Fed had planned. The price the economy paid for the lower money-supply growth has been extraordinarily high interest rates.

Q. IF RATES HAVE been high for so long, why is the business-failures problem only now becoming critical?

A. The resilience displayed by businesses earlier this year was deceptive. Many companies were obtaining short-term loans to finance the repayment of long-term obligations. Figuring rates soon would fall, they intended to re-enter the bond market and issue long-term debt at reasonable rates. But rates did not fall. As a result, they were forced to continue borrowing in the short-term markets where rates are subject to wide fluctuations.

As evidence of the mounting reliance on short-term debt, Salomon Brothers, the Wall Street investment firm, estimates that interest payments of non-financial corporations in the first half of this year amounted to 30 percent of their operating profits, after adjusting depreciation and inventory for inflation. That is a big increase over the 19 percent share the corporations allocated on average in the decade of the 1960s.

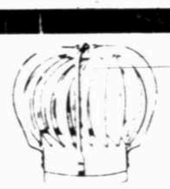

Q. HOW FREQUENT are business failures?

A. According to Dun & Bradstreet, the economic research firm, failures of commercial and industrial concerns totaled 459 in the final week of October, up 51 percent from the corresponding week last year. For the first 10 months of the year through Oct. 29, business failures totaled 14,-118, a 41 percent increase over the same period in 1980, Dun & Bradstreet said Monday.

Q. Will it get worse?

A. Jones, the Aubrey G. Lanston economist, told a subcommittee of the House Banking Committee last week there is a good chance the rash of business failures will continue.

Mexican maverick mayor making mark in Matamoros

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — A radio station owner with a grandfatherly face, a handlebar mustache and an easy smile is turning this border city upside down with his maverick brand of populist politics.

Since taking office Jan. 1, Mayor Jorge Cardenas Gonzalez has closed cantinas on Sundays, donated his $12,000 salary to illuminate crime-plagued neighborhoods and told barkeeps in the infamous "Boys' Town" redlight district to move out or shut down.

His campaign slogan was "Jorge es el cambio" — "Jorge is the change" — and he says he's trying to change everything wrong with this city across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, Texas.

"When we started the campaign, we found out that Matamoros was a sick city, politically, morally and financially. It was terribly bad," he said.

CARDENAS, 55, challenged the candidate backed by Mexico's establishment party, Partido Revolucionario Institucional — the party of President Jose Lopez Portillo and most elected officials in this country.

Cardenas bolted PRI several years ago to join the opposition PARM, Partido Autentico de la Revolucion Mexicana. Despite his middle-class background and ownership of grocery stores, import-export companies, orange groves, a hotel, a rope factory and two radio stations, he has become a folk hero to many impoverished supporters — "Jorgistas" who helped elect him by a 2-to-1 margin.

His popularity contrasts starkly with feelings about his predecessor, who three years ago was dragged from his office by a mob enraged over the death of a teen-ager while in police custody.

The mob burned the municipal palace, which houses the mayor's office. Cardenas remodeled the office. He tore out a wall, replaced it with glass "to let everyone see who is here" and removed all door locks.

He promised an open government and has set aside daily "office hours" to meet the public. On a daily talk show on one of his radio stations, he takes questions and complaints from listeners.

"WE WANT THEM TO know how money is invested, what is going to be done with money, what errors are committed in city administration and how we messed up," he said.

Cardenas ran three times for mayor before winning his three-year term. He cannot succeed himself, so he has little to lose politically in his reform projects. Top priorities for the city of 210,000 are street and drainage improvements, he said. Some areas now turn into lakes after a heavy rain.

"We are going to close the redlight district or move it out of town," he said. "The club owners came to see me and I firmly told them that this year we have to make a move or we close it. It is causing a very serious problem where it is now."

Shootings and knifings within the "zona roja" have alarmed the surrounding residential areas.

"We're going to run a socially moral city, that is my aim," he said.

LOCAL LEADERS learned Cardenas was beholden to no one when police arrested several sons of influential families during raids on a popular drinking and marijuana-smoking hangout.

"I don't care if you are rich or poor. Everyone is going to get the same treatment — jail," he said at the time.

Legendary corruption and favoritism among Mexican officials is another of Cardenas' targets.

"I'm going to tell you the truth," he said, breaking into a wide grin. "If we had to put them (corrupt officials) in jail, we wouldn't have the jail space. They would not fit. That is just the plain truth."

He blames much of the problem on dismal salaries that encourage people to take money under the table.

"When I started, a policeman was making 3,250 pesos ($130) a month. Now a policeman makes 7,350 pesos ($294), which is above the minimum wage, with all kinds of benefits," he said. "I don't doubt that some of them would be corrupt. But I can sincerely say that 95 to 99 percent of public officials here are honest."

CARDENAS KNOWS Matamoros depends on tourism for revenue and has exempted tourist-oriented bars from the Sunday closing law. Tourists are not, however, exempt from random gun searches the Mexican army conducts in restaurants and bars. The pistol checks are aimed at reducing the number of barroom shootings.

The mayor doesn't worry that the checks might drive tourists away: "On the contrary, this will help tourism. I've never said it's the tourists who carry pistols. It is other people, residents of Matamoros and others who are armed and I am certain by the end of the year, things will be back to normal."

The joyous frenzy that filled Plaza Hidalgo when Cardenas won the election last December has an opposite, frightening side. The mayor says he continues to receive death threats that started during the campaign.

But he is philosophical. "There is a saying in Spanish. 'Pero que ladro no meurde (a barking dog doesn't bite),'" he said. "While they're barking, there's no concern for me."

Mexican campaign brings riches

APATZINGAN, Mexico (AP) — Until the kickoff of Mexico's presidential election campaign, the 60,000 people of this poor cotton-growing town lived in obscurity.

Then suddenly they had a federal project worth $1.6 million — twice the town's budget. In seven days 130 men built a 4,265-foot airstrip and a small terminal building. The road running to the main plaza was smoothed out and lane lines repainted.

Finally, on Oct. 14, each worker in the town and surrounding villages was given a tortilla lunch, a sun visor, the equivalent of $8, a day off from work and a truck ride to the plaza. There they were handed banners proclaiming solidarity with the stocky visitor responsible for the sudden largess.

His name was Miguel de la Madrid and, until his Sept. 25 nomination by the long-ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party as its presidential candidate, few in Apatzingan had heard of him. But here he was, promising "justice, equality and social advance" in a town where half the children are listed as suffering from intestinal diseases and most families lack running water and electricity.

The scene will be repeated in dozens of cities and towns across Mexico over the next eight months as de la Madrid, a career bureaucrat with no previous political experience, goes out to meet the people before his certain election next July to lead them until 1988.

It is a ritual played out every six years in Mexico. After months of infighting among party rivals, the incumbent president chooses a successor and the party, unbeaten in national elections in its 52 years, unites around him.

This campaign is expected to be livlier than past ones. The conservative National Action Party, which stayed out of the 1976 race, has nominated a businessman, Pablo Emilio Madero, to oppose de la Madrid, and a coalition of three leftist groups, including the Communists, are expected to unite around a single candidate next month.

Although his victory is a foregone conclusion, de la Madrid is undertaking a grueling campaign to build an image as a politician and assert his control over the party as the party reasserts its grip on the country.

De la Madrid's two-hour appearance in Apatzingan showed the party's vast electoral machinery at work in a town where its influence has been slipping. To some here, it raised hope in the candidate's promise to spread around Mexico's vast new oil wealth.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Treating child depression difficult

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

QUESTION: Do children normally suffer from depression? I had never heard of this until recently. How common is this among children?

ANSWER: Children do indeed sometimes suffer from depression which is severe enough to require professional care. The diagnosis of depression in children is usually more difficult than in adults because there may be other symptoms or problems which serve to mask the depression. These other symtoms may include over-activity, delinquency, problems in school, or complaints of bodily illness. In other children, there are clear symptoms of depression to include sleep disturbances, eating disturbances, feelings of sadness or worthlessness and apathy.

Some children develop depressive symptoms folowing the loss or sense of loss of attention from someone upon who the child is quite dependent for care and nurturing. This loss may result from death, divorce, emotional withdrawal, or separation. This kind of depression usually responds quickly after the child begins to receive the attention and love which he needs in order to thrive. A short period of therapy for the child and his family is often the only professional care which is needed.

Other children are apparently chronically depressed without there being any specific apparent reason for the depression. In such children there may be genetic factors involved or chronic environmental stesses or both. The parents of such children suffer disproportionately from mental health problems such as alcoholism, chronic depression, manic-depressive illness. There may also be chronic, debilitating physical disease in at least one parent. It is quite inportant for such children and their families to obtain professional help in treating the depression. Untreated depression of a chronic nature rarely goes away by itself. It is more likely to turn into other problems, possibly more severe, later in life.

The frequency of occurrence of depression in children is not well documented because many such children are treated for the other problems which mask the depression. Any child who seems to be suffering from persistent depressive symptoms or other problems which are interfering with his ability to function well at home or in school should be properly evaluated by a professional so that treatment may be begun as soon as possible. As always, treatment is much more effective when begun early than if it is put off in the hope that the problems will just go away.

Active sex life may decrease risk of future heart attacks

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elderly people usually can and should resume their sex lives 12 to 16 weeks after a heart attack, and that actually may cut the risk of another attack, the National Institute on Aging says.

"The risk of death during sexual intercourse is very low," the government institute says in a new publication.

The institute also said stroke victims should not fear adverse effects from sex. "Stroke rarely damages physical aspects of sexual function, and it is unlikely that sexual exertion will cause another stroke," it advised.

The institute, part of the National Institutes of Health in the Department of Health and Human Services, issued a fact sheet on "Sexuality in Later Life" to dispel some myths and provide some tips for senior citizens.

"Although a doctor's advice is needed, sex usually can and should be resumed an average of 12 to 16 weeks after a heart attack, depending on physical conditioning," the institute said. "An active sex life may in fact decrease the risk of a future attack."

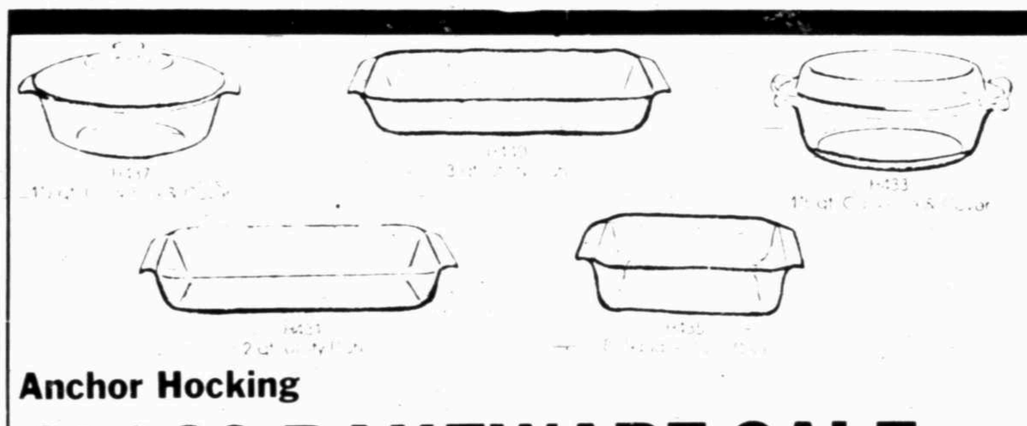

The report said most older people "want — and are able to lead — an active, satisfying sex life. With age, women do not ordinarily lose their physical capacity for orgasm, nor men their capabity for erection and ejaculation.

Simon's book again dooms the doomsayers

Iconoclastic economist offers 'The Ultimate Resource'

By WARREN BROOKES
Hearst Feature Service

Just as Gary Trudeau was about to impeach Interior Secretary James Watt in Doonesbury, relief appeared in a new Princeton University Press book that is sure to keep the environmentalists busy for years.

The book is called "The Ultimate Resource," and it is written by one of the most powerful nemeses of the "limits-to-growth" people yet to appear — Dr. Julian Simon, an iconoclastic economist from the University of Illinois.

Simon achieved national prominence last winter when he skewered the Carter administration's nationally applauded, gloomy Global 2000 report with a sharp, fact-filled article in Public Interest Quarterly.

It wasn't the first time Simon tackled the doomsayers.

In 1980 Gov. James B. Thompson of Illinois issed an executive order proclaiming that "the amount of Illinois land dedicated to agriculture has steadily declined at an average rate of approximately 100,000 acres per year," and called for measures to stop this loss.

Immediately Simon called the governor's attention to the fact that the Census of Agriculture showed that the Illinois cropland harvest had risen by over a million acres from 1974 to 1978.

Simon's book is full of denunciations of popularly promoted environmental myths, which have so dominated the press in recent years:

"The per capita food situation has been improving for the three decades since World War II. Famine has progressively diminished. Human nutrition will continue to improve into the indefinite future."

"Our supplies of natural resources are not finite in any economic sense. If the past is a guide, natural resources will become less scarce and less costly. The future of our energy supply is at least as bright as that of other natural resources."

Simon backs up his rosy predictions with tables and charts, including one which shows that the known reserves for every major mineral resource are many times larger today than 20 years ago.

Why then are there so many gloomsday prophecies of future resource scarcity? Simon argues that we have been talked into analyzing the future by the engineering method, rather than using historical economic analysis.

"With the engineering method, you forecast the status of a natural resource by estimating the presently known physical quantity of the resource on or in the earth; predict the future rate of use . . . and subtract the successive estimate of use from the 'physical' inventory."

The problem, Simon says, is that no one knows what the real present inventory is for any resource, nor can they predict the discovery either of unexpected new resources or "the substitution factor," -- the arrival of altogether new products to displace old ones.

"The economists' approach," argues Simon, "extrapolates trends of past costs. "They look at actual history of demand, supply and prices." Simon does this for mineral after mineral, and shows their real costs plummeting steadily in terms of wages and prices.

"This fall in the costs of natural resources decade after decade and century after century should free us from the idea that scarcity must increase sometimes," Simon remonstrates.

The "ultimate resource," for Simon, is to be found in human imagination, knowledge and growing understanding.

Anyone for football?

Special from Reader's Digest

Several years ago, as a second lieutenant in the Texas National Guard, I was attending my first summer camp at Fort Hood. The tent area for my platoon was next to that of a group from Dallas. I noticed that they spent all their free time throwing a football around, so one day I approached their captain with the proposal for a football game between his men and mine.

He studied his group for a moment, then turned to me and said, "Well, lieutenant, I'm sure my men would enjoy it, but I'm not so sure that yours would. You see, when my men are not at guard camp, they're called the Dallas Cowboys."

-- MAX D. JOHNSON, N.M.

As we went through the mess line on the USS Hamul one night several years ago, a crew member chided the cook: "I told you it wasn't fit." The usually placid cook surprised me by snarling, "Shut up!"

I understood the cook's ire later when I reached my table and found this bulletin: "Crew members are requested not to feed scraps from the crew's mess to the admiral's dog as it is upsetting his system."

The traditional spirit of the airborne soldier lives on at Fort Bragg, N.C., home of the elite 82nd Airborne Division. There the story is told of an in-ranks inspection conducted by the Division's commanding general:

A freshly recruited paratrooper from West Virginia was standing proudly at attention, jump wings on his chest, awaiting the commander's careful scrutiny. The general paused in front of the soldier and, spotting a loose thread on his uniform, said, "Trooper, your fatigue jacket is frayed."

To the guarded amusement of all within earshot, the noticeably affronted young private replied, "Sir, beggin' your pardon, but this here airborne jacket ain't 'fraid a nothin'."

As the only Naval personnel on an Army post, the Naval reservists stationed at the combined Armed Forces Reserve Center in Fort Wadsworth, N.Y. were outnumbered - but never outsmarted.

While preparing for the dedication of a new Army-Navy Reserve building, both the Army and Navy staffs pitched in. TheArmy put up the podium and chairs for the speakers, while the Navy decorated the building with colorful flags and banners. During the dedication ceremony, the Army's guest speakers good-naturedly teased the Naval rservists, who would share the new building. The Navy men only grinned.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the Naval commanding officer revealed that the innocent-looking signal flags did indeed give the Navy men something to smile about. They spelled out the time-honored cheer: GO NAVY, BEAT ARMY.

The grizzled master sergeant, who was a veteran of Salerno and Korea, had been farmed out to teach an Ivy League college's ROTC class during the remainder of his hitch.

Accustomed by now to cocky, mixed-up freshmen, he arranged us before him in one line, by height, with the tallest to his right and myself on the end of the line to his left. Patiently, he reviewed the secrets of a smartly executed right face - swiveling on the heel of one foot and the ball of the other. Then he barked the command.

All turned, less than smartly, to the right - except me. Not only short, I am also left-handed, which means I have a perpetual conflict between instinct and reason as to which is left and which is right. So, I had executed a proud left-face and stood glaring at ever-taller classmates in line. Not to be intimidated, I flared my nostrils and stared sternly into the eyes of my neighboring soldier.

After only the briefest hesitation, he promptly did an about-face and stared up at his neighbor, too. One by one, each classmate turned around, to the dismay of our veteran sergeant. My first inkling of a doomed military career came when he strode to my side and asked, "What's your real name? Napoleon?"

-- JOHN B. NICHOLSON, Washington, D.C.

One of the finest moments on a remote tour of duty is meeting your replacement at the airport. The long-awaited-day finally arrived for me one rainy morning in Iceland. As I stood waiting for the new arrivals, I noticed a young lieutenant anxiously watching the passengers clearing customs. Wanting to share my mood, I approached him. "Waiting for your relief, too, lieutenant?" I asked.

After a thoughtful pause, he replied, "Yes, sir. I guess you could say that."

Seeing the gray-haired major who would assume my job was a happy occasion for me, but nothing compared with the joy in the young lieutenant's eyes when his wife, who was arriving to visit him for a few days, ran into his arms.

A sailor shopping in the Navy commissary in Bremerton, Wash., told the salesgirl that he was having a hard time remembering the right brand of perfume to buy as a present for his girl. Suddenly, he jumped toward her and shouted, "I know! 'Attack!'"

BORDEN EXPLORER
Hinkle Exploration Ltd., Midland, will drill the 8,500-foot wildcat No. 1 Roy E. Reeder, 16 miles northeast of Gail.

There are a several wells of comparable depth in the vicinity, but all are more than one mile away. Apparently there are none nearer.

The stake is driven 660 feet from the north and east lines of section 478, block 97, H&TC survey.

DAWSON VENTURE
Exxon Corp., Midland, plans the No. 1 Bill Weaver as a 9,500-foot wildcat to be drilled 6 1/2 miles northwest of Lamesa.

The location is 1,750 feet from the north, and 838 feet from the west line of tract 27, league 3, Taylor CSL.

From the drillsite, there are a number of producing wells to the north and east. At least one is a 9,200-footer. There is a 9,489-foot dry hole, Humble's No. 1 Hemphill, about 1/2 mile southwest of the drillsite.

HOCKLEY DUO
Ketal Oil Producing Co., Fort Worth, will drill a 7,500-foot wildcat, the No. 1 D.H. Montgomery, three miles northeast of Whitharral.

The project spots 990 feet from the north, and 660 feet from the east line of labor 19, league 708, State Capital lands Survey.

Debe K. Vandenberg, John Bizilo, and J.R. Hope stand in front of Midland's new Summit Building on the corner of Marienfeld and Illinois. Debe's firm, "Pro-Clean" Professional Commercial Cleaning, Inc., has recently negotioted a commercial office cleaning contract with the Summit. Bizilo is Summit Building manager; Hope is maintenance engineer.

Pro-Clean wants persons seeking part-time employment

Are you considering a part-time job to offset the economic stress of continuing inflation?

Debe K. Vandenberg, owner of one of Midland's youngest, yet fastest growing companies, is always ready to talk to good, dependable workers who are interested in working from 15 to 20 hours per week after their regular jobs.

Staff members of Pro-Clean begin their work when the office workday ends and are usually home by 10 p.m. They are off on weekends. The pay scale runs from $3.75 to $5.00 an hour, depending on the type of work and length of service.

With Pro-Clean, it doesn't take long to move up; training sessions provide the basis for promotions and raises. Ms. Vandenberg believes that a professional attitude toward office cleaning on the part of each crew member is very important to the effectiveness of the crew as a whole. The result is a high-quality cleaning service — which is what Pro-Clean offers.

Part-time evening work appeals to many people: college students, young marrieds, people with sedentary regular jobs, anyone looking for supplemental income. Pro-Clean has several family groups. The higher-than-average pay scale for part-time work combined with free weekends make these jobs very attractive.

Pro-Clean also hires a few full-time employees for in-house service in commercial buildings.

If a part-time evening job sounds like just the solution to your problems, call Ms. Vandenberg at 699-5565.

Pro-Clean Professional Commercial Cleaning, Inc. offers fine quality cleaning service for both new and older commercial buildings and for building preparation before move-in. They do not do residential cleaning. Contracts are individually prepared to include a basic cleaning program plus customer-determined options.

To inquire about employment or to discuss high quality cleaning service keyed to customer satisfaction, call Ms. Vanderverg of Pro-Clean at 699-5565.

Securities yields are down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury securities are down for the fourth time in five weeks and are at their lowest level in seven months.

About $4.7 billion in six-month bills were sold Monday at an average discount rate of 12.721 percent. That's down nearly a full percentage point from the 13.619 percent of the previous week, officials reported after the weekly auctions.

Beginning today, banks and savings and loans may pay as much as 13.659 percent interest on their six-month, $10,000 savings certificates, down from the previous 13.869 percent.

Starting this week, interest on the certificates is limited to one-quarter point above the average yield on six-month bills at the four most recent auctions.

'Debt' is little understood subject

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Everyone is thinking about debt these days because almost everyone is in debt.

Uncle Sam owes $1 trillion, states owe at least $125 billion, local governments no less than $200 billion, and developing countries at least $500 billion to other nations.

Homeowners, of course, are in up to their necks, owing banks and other mortgage lenders about $1 trillion, and people who buy on installment credit plans have at least $300 billion to worry about.

Contemplating the stunning amounts of borrowings, an observer can be pardoned for being confused on learning that so little is understood about debt, even by those deeply involved in it.

Here are three observations about debt that might shed some small amount of knowledge on a very big subject.

—Why Japan can tolerate a relatively higher level of government debt and still finance industrialization without incurring the devastating inflation and high interest rates that plague the United States.

The explanation, says Richard W. Rahn, chief economist of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, lies in the Japansese personal savings rate, the highest of any major industrial nation.

The Japanese save more than 20 percent of their disposable income, compared with 15 percent by West Germans and French, 10 percent by the British and 5 percent by Americans.

This, says Rahn, permits the Japanese government to run fiscal deficits three or four times those by Washington. The projected U.S. deficit is only 1.3 percent of gross national product while the Japanese deficit is around 6 percent of GNP, according to Rahn.

"At our rate of savings, roughly 5 percent of GNP, American are saving approximtely $150 billion a year, which is available for business investments and for consumers and consumption," says Rahn.

If the federal government borrows $50 billion to finance the deficit, it means only $100 billion is left for all business and individual investment and consumption. But if you were to raise the savings rate to 7.5 percent, you would have $225 billion available.

The Japanese savings rate is nearly three times 7.5 percent. Therefore, says Rahn, they can finance bigger deficits without the threat of inflation and high interest rates as in the United States.

—How high interest rates have all but eliminated first-time buyers from the new-home market.

If home mortgage rates were 8 percent, instead of more than double that, more than 44 percent of families would have sufficient income to qualify for a $60,000 mortgage with a 30-year term.

But interest rates are closer to 18 percent in many areas of the country, and that means less than 14 percent of U.S. households can afford the monthly carrying costs.

The National Association of Home Builders, which developed these statistics, estimates that at an 18 percent interest rate a family would be required to pay $904 each month in interest and principal, and $215 for insurance, taxes and utilities. In order to cover those expenses, a family would have to earn an annual income of $40,284.

Some analysts would put that figure even higher, but the NAHB makes the assumption that families today are willing to allot to housing one-third of income rather than the traditional 25 percent.

Using the same criteria, the association figures that close to 40 percent of Americans, rather than just 14 percent, would be able to handle monthly payments if interest rates dropped to 9 percent.

—Why some students of international debt aren't terribly worried about the $500 billion of foreign debt owed by the developing nations.

The Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, of which the United States is a member, expects the total debt of developing nations to swell 15 percent to $524 billion by the end of this year. But, it explains, it isn't really worried.

One of the reasons, it explains is that the 15 percent a year rise in this Third World debt since 1978 is really only 5 percent or so when you wring out inflation. Inflation, it suggests, creates an illusion.

At an annual rise of 5 percent, it points out, the debt really is rising at no more than the rate at which the Third World economies are expanding.

The group plans to return to Odessa by 9 p.m.

Interested persons should contact Florence Milo, 697-6316, in Midland, or Jeannie Ross, 367-8435, in Odessa for additional information.

FTC alleges oil label misleading

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Philadelphia-based firm that blends motor oil, in response to Federal Trade Commission allegations, has agreed to tests and standards aimed at assuring the oil is correctly labeled.

The agreement, which the FTC announced Monday, came after the agency said Renuzit Home Products Co. couldn't prove what it said on its labels. FTC staffers alleged that consumers could be misled into buying the wrong oil for their cars, possibly leading to excessive engine wear or engine breakdown.

Renuzit blends oil and additives usually sold as "house brands" by retailers in Mid-Atlantic states.

New 'landowner' planning barbecue

JEWETT, Texas (AP) — If Jesse Johnson had it to do over again, he said he wouldn't have scraped together $800 in the 1920s to buy his 120-acre farm in Leon County.

He said he could have put the money down on another piece of property, rather than wage a battle with the State of Texas 40 years after he finished paying for the land.

But now Johnson, 82, calls the property home, and plans a barbecue to celebrate the passage of the constitutional amendment that gave him title to it.

"I didn't think they ought to have no vote on it," the farmer and retired railroad trainman said. "If I had known that they would have to vote on it, I would not have bought this place. They didn't tell me about it."

The phone rang constantly at the Johnson household late Tuesday, and 20 neighbors arrived to wish the Johnsons well.

"I feel really good — I sure do," Johnson said after the results were announced. "I thank all of them (voters), too. I was really glad. I thought maybe they might come in and help me out."

Texans overwhelmingly approved an amendment to allow the state land commissioner to issue titles for land held in good faith for at least 50 years but for which no legal title was obtained.

"They knew what kind of a tight I was in. Everyone who came by said, 'Oh, you ain't gonna lose. We are going to stay with you.' That is what I believed."

He said one of his nine children, 53-year-old Preston, was at the farm when the news arrived. Family members "are all glad, too," the elder Johnson said. "They know they will have a home. They are glad of it. When a fellow gets up to this age, and he is too old to work, that got me in a tight."

But he said his faith was proven. "I kind of thought it ought to happen," he said. "They told me there ain't no need to go worrying about it. 'You will get it back.'"

He said the barbecue is "going to be the biggest one I can have."

The Democratic candidate for governor of New Jersey, James Florio, locked in a seesaw battle for office with Republican Tom Kean, thanks supporters for their help in the campaign. Florio early today predicted ultimate victory but did not claim the election because of the miniscule margin separating the candidates.

New Jersey governorship hinges on uncounted absentee ballots

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Republican Thomas H. Kean and Democrat James J. Florio both said early today they thought they had won New Jersey's closest governor's race in a century, then awaited an outcome that appeared to hinge on uncounted absentee ballots.

With more than 2.2 million ballots counted, Kean, a millionaire Livingston, N.J., businessman backed by President Reagan, had an unofficial lead of 2,060 votes.

"We think that lead is going to hold up. I think I'm going to be your next governor," he told cheering supporters at his hometown headquarters.

With all 5,647 precincts reporting, Kean had 1,137,076 votes to Florio's 1,135,016.

Absentee ballots from several populous counties were included in the totals. But the News Election Service, which was tabulating the vote, said absentee ballots from as many as 13 counties, including Florio's home county of Camden, were not included.

Dick Eimers, spokesman for NES, said absentee votes from the remaining counties would be tabulated today. He said two of the 13 counties — the Democratic strongholds of Hudson and Middlesex — may already have been counted.

But Florio said Hudson County officials told him that as many as 2,500 absentee votes for his candidacy were not listed in the county's vote totals.

"I'm convinced that when the final certification comes in, we're going to win," the four-term congressman told supporters at his Cherry Hill headquarters.

"I'm going to be proud to be your governor," he said.

Meanwhile, Kean said he had asked Gov. Brendan T. Byrne to guarantee the security of all ballots cast in the event of an official recount, and Byrne ordered state police protection for both candidates.

Secretary of State Donald Lan, a deputy campaign manager for Florio, said he would order an unofficial check of all county vote totals today.

Florio stopped short of calling for a recount, but his spokesman, Fred Hillmann, said state law allows up to two weeks after the election for an official recount request.

The close vote reflected public opinion polls that had showed Kean closing on his Democratic opponent in the final week of the campaign. Florio said Reagan, whose economic policies were a campaign issue, was responsible for the narrow margin.

Reagan and Vice President George Bush headed the administration team that campaigned for Kean, and the president appeared in a television ad that was used heavily in the past week.

"I underestimated the influence of the president," Florio said. He also credited the effectiveness of the Republican TV commercials which were funded by the state and national GOP committees.

Until this year, the closest New Jersey gubernatorial election was in 1880, when Democrat George C. Ludlow was elected by 651 votes. More recently, Democrat Richard J. Hughes was elected in 1961 by 34,920 votes.

The impact of federal budget cuts on the state was a major issue in the race to succeed Byrne, a Democrat who was barred by law from seeking a third four-year term.

The voters also were electing a new Legislature of 40 members of the state Senate and 80 membrs of the state Assembly.

Kean, 46, proposed reductions in state business taxes as a corollary to the president's "supply-side" program of tax cuts, telling blue-collar workers they would mean jobs.

His family has a long history of public service. His father, Robert W. Kean, was a congressman for 20 years and his grandfather, John Kean, was a U.S. senator.

BELLAIRE, Ohio (AP) — Wayne L. Hays, the former Ohio congressman who resigned from the House following a sex scandal, won a seat on the Belmont County Board of Education in Tuesday's election.

Hays, 69, easily led a field of nine candidates in the race for three seats on the board, getting 21 percent of the vote. He received 2,805 votes, nearly 800 more than the next highest total.

Hays served 28 years in Congress before stepping down in 1976 in the wake of a furor about his relationship with Elizabeth Ray. Hays admitted having an affair with Miss Ray

Boston area referenda include budget, nuclear challenges

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Boston voters weighed a direct challenge to President Reagan's budget priorities and Cambridge voters considered whether the federal government should halt further nuclear weapon development in their city in referenda questions on municipal election ballots.

The Boston ballot Tuesday posed a classic "guns or butter" issue: should the City Council ask Congress to provide more money for education, jobs and housing by cutting money for atomic weapons and "programs of foreign military intervention." Such a proposal would run contrary to Reagan administration policies.

Another nonbinding question in this hotbed of Irish nationalism asked whether Reagan should push for the withdrawl of British military forces from Northern Ireland.

Results will not be tabulated until later today.

In Cambridge, a referendum asked whether the City Council should urge the federal government to freeze further development of nuclear weapons in the city, home of Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Another Cambridge proposition would recommend removal of tax exemptions for colleges located in the city. Proponents claimed the city could receive $32 million a year by taxing property owned by Harvard and MIT.

A final question called for the City Council to ask Congress to refrain from sending military advisers to El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala.

The Cambridge referenda were conducted with paper ballots.
