Clinton's testimony to air today

■ Americans given chance to view videotape of graphic questions, Clinton legalisms.

By John Solomon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A key Democratic senator suggested Sunday that President Clinton immediately volunteer to testify before Congress to halt a "political water torture" that escalates Monday morning when Americans view raw footage of the president's grand jury testimony about Monica Lewinsky.

That video will show Clinton admitting "inappropriate intimate contact" and "sexual banter" with Ms. Lewinsky but resisting prosecutors' efforts to define the conduct further. Clinton offers many legalistic replies and, at times, shows remorse.

"I regret that what began as friendship came to include this conduct," the president answered when he was first asked a sex-related question by prosecutors just seven minutes into his Aug. 17 testimony. The president's testimony was described to The Associated Press by lawyers familiar with it.

The moments of presidential regret are interspersed with legal hairsplitting involving the terms "sexual relations" and "alone" and, in one exchange, the tense of a verb.

At one point, Clinton was asked why he failed to produce to Paula Jones' lawyers a series of correspondence between himself and Kathleen Willey, the former White House volunteer who accused the president of an unwanted sexual advance near the Oval Office in 1993.

Clinton replied that he understood the subpoena to cover personal documents,

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Former Gov. George Wallace's death last week offered the nation a glimpse at a seemingly transformed Alabama: throngs of blacks and whites from all levels of society passing through the open Capitol doors, mourning a man who'd changed along with his home state. But a chorus of historians and political observers say a deeper look offers a different view, raising the question: Did the Wallace era ever end?

Teacher tries soft approach to hard subject

Jena McClain's sixth-grade class and Kristina Gill's high school physics class worked together to conduct an "egg drop" to test whether an egg could be dropped and remain intact.

The group made egg containers out of notecards and tape. Only two out of 11 eggs tested survived a 12-foot fall from the roof of the school.

Sixth-grader Angela Darden's group was among the two winners. The students' egg containers were all made out of simple material.

"Index cards, and two meters of tape," Angela said. "It worked because of the padding and insulation ... and luck."

"Because you get to design things," she said.

Mexico honors local man for soccer events

■ Fernando De La Rosa has organized events that have brought as many as 35 soccer teams at one time to Midland.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A local sports promoter has been honored with an award from the national government of the Republic of Mexico for his efforts in organizing international events in both countries.

De La Rosa

Fernando De La Rosa received a commemorative plaque last week from Lucinda Garza, new head of the Midland office of the Mexican Consulate.

Ms. Garza delivered the plaque on behalf of the Mexican Secretary of Public Education and the National Commissioner of Sports of the Republic of Mexico.

In this award, the 39-year-old De La Rosa was named "Best Sports Promoter" for his work in bringing as many as 35 soccer teams at one time to Midland.

The 1997 Cinco de Mayo tournament brought more than 1,500 Mexican citizens to Midland for the event, De La Rosa said.

"It was an honor and a surprise for me, since I had not been involved in Cinco de Mayo for a year," De La Rosa said.

De La Rosa's business is importing and exporting between Texas and Mexico, but sports promotion is a facet of this enterprise, he said.

"We bring teams from all over the country of Mexico," he said.

He has been involved in bringing the national sport of Mexico to the Permian Basin since 1994 and has organized local play by the Canadian, U.S. and Mexican national teams.

Abuse leaves neighbors, even prosecutor shocked

By Linda Deutsch

SAN FERNANDO, Calif. — The neighbors remember them well, a huge family with 14 children from infants to a 17-year-old, all dirty and unkempt, apparently malnourished, but hard-working.

"They were always pushing wagons filled with corn," recalled Carlos Miranda, who lived down the street. "Even the little ones. They were always out selling. They had quite a business going. Sometimes I would buy something from them because I just felt sorry."

What no one realized, Miranda said, was the alleged torture and death behind the doors of the converted garage where up to a dozen family members slept in one room.

"It's sad," he said, shaking his head. "It's so sad."

The story of Marco Barrera and the two sisters with whom he fathered 14 children is a grotesque tableau of child abuse that has left neighbors and even a seasoned prosecutor shocked.

Arizona officials to meet with imprisoned Mexican officer

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona officials plan to meet with an imprisoned Mexican police officer who claims to know where a kidnapped Arizona boy was buried.

Librado Castro Bravo says he has been on a hunger strike since Sept. 1 while awaiting sentencing for torturing suspects in the 1995 kidnapping of 3-year-old Omar Vargas. Castro, 39, is demanding to talk to U.S. authorities, claiming Mexican officials are corrupt and in cahoots with the boy's kidnappers — an allegation Mexican officials deny.

Vargas, of the Phoenix suburb of Chandler, was kidnapped in April 1995 while his family attended a religious revival in Agua Prieta, Mexico, which is just across the border from Douglas, Ariz. Authorities believe the boy is dead.

Arizona Assistant Attorney General Norma Martens said Arizona investigators familiar with the case will probably travel to Mexico to visit Castro in the next week. Martens said she worked out the arrangement with her counterparts in Mexico's Sonora state on Thursday.

Martens said Arizona authorities are reacting cautiously to Castro's offer of information.

"You're looking at somebody who's in custody for human rights violations," Martens said. "You have to look at it in that context."

Castro was commander of the Sonoran Judicial Police in Hermosillo, Mexico, and began overseeing the Vargas investigation in March 1996. He helped in the arrests of several suspects, including Armando Rivera Barron and brothers Javier Cuadras Alvarez and Ramon Cuadras Alvarez.

Rivera alleged Castro and other police tortured a confession out of him. Rivera said he was beaten and threatened with death repeatedly for more than a week.

Rivera said he was forced to dig a hole he was told would be his grave. When the hole was finished, police staged a mock execution, including holding an unloaded gun to his head and pulling the trigger, Rivera said.

Kidnapping charges against the Cuadras brothers and Rivera were dropped, and Castro was convicted of torturing them.

Castro's wife, Lidia Munguia, said he believes an obscure relationship between the Cuadras brothers and Sonoran Judicial Police led to a cover-up. Castro believes that given 10 days, he could find the boy's body, Munguia said.

Malaysian police arrest former deputy prime minister

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Malaysia's sacked deputy prime minister was arrested late Sunday after thousands of his supporters marched to the prime minister's house and demanded the ouster of Asia's longest-serving leader.

Hundreds of Anwar Ibrahim's allies shouted angrily, "God is great!" and "Long live Anwar!" shaking their fists as police led him away from the house where he had conducted almost two weeks of protest rallies against the 17-year rule of Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad.

The violence sullied a state visit by Queen Elizabeth II, who worshipped at a church not far from a mass opposition rally Sunday and was to meet with Mahathir on Monday.

Anwar, once Mahathir's handpicked successor, is now his principal foe. His arrest appeared to be an attempt to thwart the kind of large-scale protests earlier this year that led to the ouster of Indonesia's President Suharto, 77.

Mahathir, 72, became Asia's longest-serving leader after Suharto was forced out in May after 32 years by violent protests against alleged government corruption and a severe economic crisis.

Anwar was led away Sunday from his home and pushed into a van by police carrying assault rifles and firing tear gas to break up the crowd.

Helmeted special reserve police, armed with assault rifles, parked jeeps in front of Anwar's house and blocked off roads in the well-heeled neighborhood to prevent his supporters from marching after the van.

Sunday's newspapers carried stories containing explicit details of Anwar's alleged sodomy offenses, allegedly confessed by Anwar's adopted brother and a friend in a Saturday court hearing. Both had been denied access to their relatives or lawyers during their police detention. Sodomy is a crime in this conservative Muslim country.

Also arrested was Roslan Kassim, a northern state youth-wing leader from the ruling party, who was in the house during an Anwar news conference.

Matthew Moore, a journalist with Australia's Sydney Morning Herald, said when police came through the door, "They jumped on me, screamed at me and knocked me down." He said they demanded his tape recorder and notebook at gunpoint.

The violence broke out more than two hours after an unprecedented rally at the capital's central Merdeka (Freedom) Square, where Anwar led 35,000 people in chanting demands for Mahathir's resignation. The square was the site of Malaysia's declaration of independence from Britain in 1957.

The demonstrators then marched to the front gate of the prime minister's official residence. Police wearing face shields fired tear gas and water cannons at them.

Smoke filled the highway in front of the residence as the police fired at least three volleys. Thousands of people wrapped their faces in cloths and struggled back toward the center of town.

Anwar, 51, was fired by Mahathir on Sept. 2 from his posts as deputy prime minister and finance minister.

He was arrested under a law banning sodomy, said one of three lawyers who accompanied him. He was expected to be charged on Monday.

Sunday's newspapers carried banner-headlined stories containing explicit details of Anwar's alleged sodomy offenses, allegedly confessed by Anwar's adopted brother and a friend in a court hearing on Saturday. Both had been denied access to their relatives or lawyers during their police detention.

Sodomy is a crime in this conservative Muslim country, and both men were sentenced to six months in prison.

Anwar has vehemently denied the charges, saying they were cooked up by Mahathir, who fears Anwar's growing popularity and any challenge to his rule.

Anwar also charged that defendants had been tortured into confessing they committed sodomy with him. Mahathir denied the allegation.

Kuala Lumpur Police Chief Kamarudin Ali told the national news agency Bernama late Sunday that Anwar was being detained to aid police investigations into several crimes, including public disturbance, illegal assembly, criminal use of force and rioting. Kamarudin said Roslan had been arrested in connection with the Merdeka Square rally.

"Police have taken action to restore order and the situation is under control and has returned to normal," the police chief said.

Police had previously said they were investigating allegations against Anwar of treason, sexual misconduct and abuse of power. Anwar had predicted he would be arrested at the end of the Commonwealth Games, which close Monday.

Anwar's appearance in the center of the capital, at the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's visit, was the culmination of a week of nationwide rallies in which he has called for Mahathir's resignation and accused the leader of corruption.

Mahathir told reporters earlier Sunday he was not intimidated by the swelling crowds at Anwar's meetings.

"I am not concerned at all," he said. "But he has been holding rallies which have been illegal."

Sunday's demonstration was unprecedented: Opposition parties have routinely been denied permission to hold rallies.

"Malaysians have waited a long time. We have given Dr. Mahathir enough time. Enough is enough," Anwar told the crowd.

Iranians released by Taliban say they were tortured in captivity

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Five Iranians released by Afghanistan's Taliban militia returned to Tehran on Sunday, and several said they were tortured in captivity, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

Iran says the Taliban militia is holding at least 50 more Iranians. Tehran claims most were drivers delivering food, medicine and other humanitarian goods to needy Afghans.

The Taliban, which controls 90 percent of Afghanistan, has said the Iranians were carrying weapons to its opponents in the north of the country.

One of the released prisoners, Behnam Alipour, told IRNA he had suffered physical and psychological torture during three years of captivity.

Alipour, a truck driver, said he was beaten with a cable, and he and other captives were forced to confess that they were carrying arms to the Taliban's foes, although they were only transporting humanitarian aid.

Another driver, Ali Hussein Husseini, said he was held captive for 55 days and lost 44 pounds due to torture and poor living conditions, IRNA said. A third, unidentified prisoner said he was beaten repeatedly during a year of captivity.

No information was available on the other two released prisoners.

Tension between the two countries has risen since the Taliban overran the city of Mazar-e-Sharif in northern Afghanistan on Aug. 8 and killed several Iranian diplomats posted there.

Iran has since deployed about 200,000 troops on its border with Afghanistan, amid growing demands for vengeance by mobs of Iranian demonstrators.

The Taliban has returned the bodies of seven of the Iranians to Tehran, and has released a total of 10 Iranian captives.

Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar, in comments published Sunday, said he did not foresee a war with Iran.

However, in eastern Afghanistan, an estimated 10,000 people chanting anti-Iranian slogans rallied in the town of Khost on Sunday to protest Tehran's massive troop buildup, Kabul radio reported.

Flood-spawned mud, debris bury entire town in Mexico's Chiapas

VALDIVIA, Mexico (AP) — This small town on Mexico's Pacific Coast is no more. It was buried under tons of mud, rocks and fallen trees brought by torrential floods earlier this month that devastated much of southern Chiapas state.

About the only thing that could be seen standing in Valdivia over the weekend was a big statue of the Virgin of Guadalupe in the main square and the locomotive and cars of a freight convoy in the train station — both partly buried in caked mud.

Several hundred survivors in the community of 7,000 people say as many as 200 bodies may be buried under the avalanche that rolled off mountainsides down the Novillero River and into the lowlands.

Many more were injured and many were missing — perhaps swept out to sea. No one was sure and information was hard to come by. No official death toll has been given and Valdivia was still largely isolated Saturday. Food was scarce and so was drinking water.

A few government helicopters came in with food and medicine. But they had to land outside town to avoid getting stuck in the mud.

'Many people were swept away and died here. I saved myself (by) climbing on top of the engine.'
— Alejandra Dominguez, Valdivia resident

After days of rain, the slide began in the early morning of Sept. 8, said survivor Alejandra Dominguez, who on Saturday sat dejectedly on the platform of the train station, staring at Locomotive No. 5848.

Dominguez said her husband, the station watchman, was struck by a boulder near the station and taken to a nearby hospital.

"Many people were swept away and died here. I saved myself (by) climbing on top of the engine," Dominguez said, tears rolling down her cheeks.

Judith Escobar, a widow and mother of six, also survived the mudslide. "There are many dead, maybe several hundred. We saw how they were swept away by the waters. We were saved by God's will," she said.

A man and his son carry tools and materials for constructing a temporary shelter in the town of Valdivia, located on the Pacific coast of the Mexican state of Chiapas, Saturday. Survivors in the town of 7,000 say as many as 200 bodies may be buried under the avalanche that rolled off mountainsides down the Novillero River and into the lowlands. As of Saturday, Valdivia was still completely isolated and there was little outside aid. By government count, 181 bodies have been recovered and hundreds of people are missing. An estimated 450,000 have been left homeless in the state, devastated by the rains for the past two weeks.

Near downtown, rows of houses and other buildings were covered with mud — some with their roofs smashed. A few dogs and pigs rooted in the debris looking for something to eat.

Scavenger birds circled overhead, attracted by the smell of decaying bodies. A few men with tools were digging in the mud, trying to clear a few homes and looking for some loose timbers to build a lean-to.

One was Guadalupe Vasquez, a farmer from the edge of town. He and his family were saved. "But I lost everything. The farm was wiped out."

In the rest of the state, things weren't much better. The federal Department of Health warned the death toll in Chiapas could rise as more bodies are recovered.

President Ernesto Zedillo arrived Saturday in the town of Tapachula, near the border with Guatemala, for his fifth visit in 10 days to coordinate relief efforts.

Like Valdivia, at least 35 rural communities have been badly damaged and remain virtually inaccessible.

Violence comes to sleepy port resort city as drug trade moves south in Mexico

ENSENADA, Mexico (AP) — Relatives of the 18-member extended family killed outside this sleepy port in a drug-related payback say they saw the trouble coming several years ago.

Suddenly, young men with no visible means of support in this Baja California community began tooling around town in fancy, new trucks. Small airplane traffic increased. Fishermen were rumored to be hauling in more than sardines at night.

As authorities turned up the heat on the Arellano Felix drug trafficking gang in Tijuana, the smuggling activity and violence so common in their adopted hometown of Tijuana gradually began moving south.

And with that move came dangers never seen before in Ensenada, a Pacific port in northern Mexico long known for tourism and fishing.

"We told him to get out of there," Ignacio Liera said of his brother Luis Jaime Liera, who was slain at the family compound in the nearby community of El Sauzal. "But he didn't move, because he didn't have enough money."

Luis Jaime Liera was not believed to be involved with drugs, but several others living there were, including the apparent target of the Thursday attack, brother-in-law Fermin Castro. Castro miraculously survived and remained in a coma on Sunday.

Ignacio Liera and others on Saturday buried seven family members at a funeral attended by hundreds of people, simultaneously mourning the loss of their loved ones and the quiet community they once knew.

There were two tiny caskets: one for a 1-year-old boy and another, still smaller, for an 8-month-old fetus killed early Thursday. The gunmen, clad in black, dragged the victims from their beds, herded them to an outdoors patio and sprayed them with automatic rifle fire.

Authorities believe Castro headed one of a growing number of small independent smuggling bands that popped up in the region as the Arellano Felix brothers were forced to adopt a lower profile.

Experts believe that even before the gang's top enforcer, Ramon Arellano Felix, was placed on the FBI's Most Wanted List and indicted on U.S. federal drug charges in the fall of 1997, members of Mexico's fastest-growing narcotics organization were moving underground for survival.

Lieutenants in the Arellano Felix organization, one of Mexico's largest and most violent drug gangs, soon began charging smaller groups for the right to move drugs through the region.

While the small groups had indirect contact with the Arellano Felix organization, they never became part of its structure, authorities say.

"As the Arellano Felix brothers went on the run, smaller bands were told to pay a transit fee for trafficking drugs," said Gen. Jose Luis Chavez, the representative of the Attorney General's Office in Baja California state.

Ensenada's geography made it a perfect drug shipment point for U.S.-bound drugs: Miles of deserted coast on the Pacific and Gulf of California, and hundreds of square miles of desert for clandestine landing strips.

"This is an efficient corridor. Sometimes they come up through the Gulf and ship over dirt roads to the Pacific, or from the Pacific to the Gulf. They land drugs in planes. They stand offshore in ships and small boats bring the drugs into shore," Chavez said.

The quick cash offered by smugglers was attractive, especially following the 1994 devaluation of the Mexican peso and subsequent recession that threw many out of work.

"Some people are employed to wait for small aircraft, unload them and transport drugs in vehicles with hidden compartments to Tijuana and Mexicali," he said.

Ensenada residents blame the trouble on outsiders: the Colombians who ship the drugs to Mexico, traffickers from the nearby Pacific coast state of Sinaloa who ship the drugs across the Gulf of California to the Baja peninsula.

All of the massacre victims were local residents. Castro is a Pai Pai Indian from the mountains farther south on the coast.

Two young survivors of the massacre — a 12 year-old boy and his 15-year-old cousin — said the killers "didn't sound any different than people around here," said state police commander Felipe Perez Cruz.

German Unity Day boycott threatened over anthem

BERLIN (AP) — A nation's anthem is usually played and loved by all parties in an election campaign. But as Germany's race enters its final week, the "Deutschlandlied" is no longer just background music.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl's camp accuses left-wing politicians organizing next month's German Unity Day celebrations of desecrating the anthem by hiring a composer to add a few bars from the one played in communist East Germany. Some are threatening to boycott the official festivities.

Leftists say the conservatives are stomping on the sensitivities of 18 million former East Germans in their effort to score political points.

With only a week until the Sept. 27 parliamentary election, no one is sure how the anthem fight will play among voters in the east, now a potentially vital swing region in a tight national race.

But the reaction underscores how Germans from the two halves are still struggling to follow the same tune, eight years after unification.

The composition was commissioned by the Lower Saxony state government for the official Oct. 3 Unity Day ceremony, to be held in the state capital of Hanover this year.

The state's governor happens to be Gerhard Schroeder, the Social Democrat challenging Kohl in the federal election.

When word about the "musical collage" got out this summer, Kohl's party wasted no time chastising Schroeder and the Social Democrats for "tactlessness."

Although the 15-minute medley also includes parts of a song written and sung by concentration camp inmates, as well as a German pop tune, the attacks have focused solely on the anthem mix.

Germany's national anthem, with music written by Joseph Haydn in 1797, was kept by the western half after World War II, although the controversial first verse from 1841 starting with "Deutschland, Deutschland ueber alles" (Germany above all), is no longer sung.

The general secretary of Kohl's conservative Christian Democrats, Peter Hintze, says that to those caught behind the Berlin Wall, the West's anthem was "the melody of freedom," and shouldn't be "disfigured."

Another Kohl ally, Bavaria Gov. Edmund Stoiber, said he would boycott the national ceremony if the song is played, contending that the communist-era passage would mock the memory of all who suffered under East Germany's totalitarian government.

But many in the east, far from being offended, are at a loss to understand the fuss.

"A mix of both German anthems is also a symbol of the growing together from east and west," says Uschi Kretschmer, a 40-year-old businessman from the eastern city of Magdeburg.

The coach of the Magdeburg water polo team, Hannes Koch, says the East German anthem reminds him of "the great performances of our athletes at world championships and Olympic games."

Werner Schulz, a leading Greens politician and former East German civil rights activist, calls the musical mix "a constructive provocation."

"It makes the point that we don't have a real national anthem, but rather an unsolved problem," he said.

For his part, the 40-year-old pianist and jazz composer from Berlin who fused the anthems says he was caught off guard by the passionate reaction to his work, which has yet to be publicly heard.

TESTIMONY: Prosecutors can be heard posing questions and the Willey letters were in White House files. If the lawyer wanted the letters, Clinton said, they should have issued two subpoenas — one personal and the other official, lawyers said.

The White House and Congress — both facing perils in the unfolding impeachment proceedings — braced for the release Monday of an avalanche of new evidence that includes more material in which Ms. Lewinsky explicitly describes sex acts with Clinton, the president's videotape, presidential phone messages left at Ms. Lewinsky's home and the FBI test results that conclude semen on one of Ms. Lewinsky's dresses belongs to Clinton.

Clinton made a brief appearance Sunday morning at a fund-raiser aboard a Potomac River cruise ship and then he and Mrs. Clinton attended services at Foundry United Methodist Church, the first time since before his Aug. 17 grand jury testimony. On Monday, when the 2,800 pages of documents and videotape are released, Clinton will be in New York City addressing the United Nations.

A key senator suggested on the Sunday talk shows that Clinton immediately volunteer to testify to the House Judiciary Committee and answer all questions fully to spare the country further embarrassment.

"I believe the president would be well served to explain exactly what he did, exactly what he was thinking, do it to the Judiciary Committee and let's vote and let's move on one way or the other," said Sen. John Kerry, a Massachusetts Democrat and Clinton ally.

"The nation is being ill served by this political water torture that is taking place in a highly calculated, highly partisan way," Kerry told NBC regarding Congress' selected release of evidence.

Kerry's call for voluntary Clinton testimony was embraced by several colleagues, including Republican Sen. John Ashcroft, a presidential aspirant and harsh Clinton critic, and House Judiciary Committee members Barney Frank, D-Mass., and Lindsey Graham, R-S.C.

Uneasy about defending some of Clinton's legalistic answers, Democrats are discussing whether to concede Clinton committed perjury and accept Ms. Lewinsky's version of their sexual encounters even though Clinton disputes her allegations that he touched her and sexually stimulated her.

"I'm almost willing to say, 'Let's stipulate that President Clinton touched Monica Lewinsky where he shouldn't have,'" Rep. Robert Wexler, D-Fla., said on NBC.

Two sources familiar with the material Starr turned over to Congress told The Associated Press it includes an FBI interview report of an Arkansas woman, 55, whom Jones' lawyers sought to question about possible sexual misconduct by the president two decades ago.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the FBI report is "inconclusive" about whether anything improper happened, declining to be more specific. The report is not among the materials scheduled for release Monday.

In an event unparalleled in history, the unfiltered footage of the president's grand jury testimony will be aired by cable news channels simultaneous with its release, expected shortly after the breakfast hour Monday. To prepare viewers, CNN aired special statements Sunday warning that the video, which it plans to run in its entirety, contains "both language and descriptions" that "may be offensive to some viewers and unsuitable to children."

Congress risked a political backlash by releasing a videotape that 52 percent of Americans said they planned to watch but that 69 percent felt was unnecessary to release, according to a CBS survey.

The CBS poll indicated Congress' approval rating had dropped from 56 percent earlier last week to 44 percent, and that 59 percent of the public believed the tape's release had more to do with embarrassing the president than letting the public judge him. The White House sharpened its attack Sunday along those lines.

"They (lawmakers) decided that rather than just doing a document dump they would do a garbage dump on Monday, and I think people are going to wonder about that," White House Deputy Chief of Staff John Podesta said.

Though only Clinton will be visible on the videotape, which was made as part of a closed-circuit TV feed from the White House map room to the federal court house, the public also will get its first glimpse of the conduct of Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's prosecutors whose work has been conducted in the secrecy of the grand jury.

Four prosecutors can be heard posing questions to the president, frequently using graphic sexual terms and even starting off the entire question with a debate over the oath the president had just taken.

Lawmakers who already viewed the tape sought to lower expectations about its long-term political impact. "Frankly, large portions of it are rather boring," Rep. Asa Hutchinson, R-Ark., told ABC.

"If you like the president there are going to be times when you feel sympathy for him," said Graham, a conservative Republican. "If you think he is a guy you don't like there are going to be things you seize upon, but it is not going to be a knockout blow."

Rep. Marty Meehan, D-Mass., another House Judiciary Committee member, agreed: "I don't think it will have a great positive or negative effect," he told ABC.

At times combative and evasive, Clinton also lets his guard down on occasion during the testimony, according to one lawyer familiar with it.

At one point he spoke of the pain of having to acknowledge under oath in his Jan. 17 Paula Jones deposition having "sexual relations" with Gennifer Flowers, the Arkansas woman whose allegation of an affair nearly derailed his 1992 presidential bid.

He also expressed regret that Ms. Lewinsky, now 25, had been embroiled in the Starr investigation. He portrayed himself as a concerned friend who after their sexual contact ended, still tried to help find her a new job and to help her avoid having to testify in the Jones sexual harassment lawsuit.

"I think he is very sincere, you can tell that this has hurt the guy," said Graham, a Republican who has seen the videotape.

Network plans for airing Clinton testimony

N.Y. Times News Service

Videotape of President Clinton's Aug. 17 grand jury testimony will begin rolling on the major all-news cable television networks as soon as it is released to them Monday morning, but the three major broadcast networks plan to use only parts of the video at first, incorporated into live reports beginning at 9 a.m. or as soon as the tapes are released.

CNN, MSNBC, Fox News Channel and C-Span all plan to carry the four hours' worth of testimony in its entirety, spokesmen said. They will also release the videotaped testimony simultaneously on their websites.

ABC, CBS and NBC will have their anchormen — Peter Jennings, Dan Rather and Tom Brokaw, respectively — leading coverage of the videotape's release, but all three were unsure how many excerpts they would run or how long they will stay on the air in the morning.

The three major networks will also cut into their normal programs during the day if news developments warrant, and all three plan to expand their evening news broadcasts to a full hour, instead of the usual half-hour, from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. Eastern time.

NBC also plans to devote its Monday-night edition of "Dateline" (10 p.m. Eastern time) to the testimony, and ABC plans a special one-hour edition of "Nightline."

ABUSE: All three defendants pleaded innocent

cutor," said Deputy District Attorney David Mintz. "We know there is child abuse going on throughout Los Angeles every day. Hopefully, in the vast majority of cases, it's not to this degree."

On Thursday, Barrera, 35; his wife, Petra Barrera Ricardo, 35; and her sister, Guana Barrera, 28, were arraigned on charges of murder with special circumstances of torture in the deaths of two of Petra Barrera's children. Prosecutors have not decided whether to seek the death penalty.

"I deny all the charges," Petra Barrera said. "I deny everything."

All three defendants pleaded innocent.

"Our focus is on the torture aspects of this situation," Marco Barrera's lawyer, Deputy Public Defender Arthur Braudrick, said outside court. "I don't think there was torture by my client. He is not a torture-murderer person."

But one of Barrera's sons, 13-year-old Jose, described a virtual reign of terror by the father. In a heart-rending account at last month's preliminary hearing, Jose said Barrera focused his abuse on two of his youngest — a 2-year-old girl, Guadalupe, known as Lupita, and a 5-year-old boy, Ernesto — and buried both their beaten bodies in a nearby forest.

According to court documents, the entire family entered the country illegally within the last two years.

The sisters did not get along and lived in different houses, with the bulk of the family occupying the converted garage with Guana. Petra lived nearby with Marco and three of their sons, including Jose and his twin brother.

According to Jose, all of the children were beaten if they sold too few ears of the corn Barrera bought from local suppliers. But most of Berrera's fury was aimed at Ernesto and Lupita.

The girl had no diapers and would wet her bed. The boy could neither walk nor speak properly because of multiple beatings and fractured bones, Jose said.

"What would your father do when Lupita would wet her pants?" the prosecutor asked Jose.

"He would hit her."

Sometimes, he said, the father used a belt or shoes. Sometimes he kicked her.

He beat Ernesto because "he thought that he may have been a son of some other person because ... he looked more American and didn't speak right."

Eventually, he said, Ernesto had to be hand-fed by his brothers and sisters.

The prosecutor asked why.

"Because he didn't talk. He couldn't move his arms. He was in a coma. He was in that state for two months," Jose said.

Speaking through an interpreter, Jose recalled the day, probably last September, when his little sister died. Lupita had awakened and Barrera discovered she'd wet the bed.

"He really hit her bad," Jose said, speaking so softly that the judge asked him to stop whispering. "He struck her with a belt and also kicked her ... in the stomach."

He said his father then ordered Guana Barrera and one of the older daughters to bathe the baby in icy cold water.

"Was Lupita crying?" the prosecutor asked.

"Yes," Jose said. "He went into the bathroom and hit her to stop her from crying." Then "he threw her into the tub."

After she was removed from the tub, Jose said, "My father saw her come out of the bathroom and he picked her up and threw her — threw her against the wall and she injured her face."

Soon, he said, she lapsed into unconsciousness. Guana Barrera suggested taking her to a hospital, but the father refused and instead took the limp child to the home of his wife, Petra. There she is believed to have died some hours later.

Jose said his father bought a pick, a shovel and some sulfuric acid and took the baby to the mountains of the Angeles National Forest. There he poured acid over the child's body and buried her. Accompanying family members were told to dress in black to avoid detection, Jose said.

At home, the abuse of Ernesto continued for months; he died a week after being kicked in the head, Jose said.

The boy's body lay in the communal bedroom overnight, Jose said, and then "we took him over to my mother's. ... My mother began to cry, asking what had happened to the child and my father said that he had had a heart attack."

On March 1, the forest burial ritual was repeated. But this time, a sheriff's deputy returning from an unrelated traffic pursuit noticed the parked car about 11 p.m. and found the group gathered around a mound of loose earth. Marco and Guana Barrera were arrested.

Eleven weeks of investigation passed before authorities found a birth certificate in Tijuana for a missing Barrera child — Lupita. The other children were questioned, and Jose took them to his sister's small grave, about five miles from that of Ernesto.

The two women were charged as accessories. After Jose testified, the charges were upgraded to murder with special circumstances.

Municipal Court Judge Lloyd M. Nash refused to dismiss charges against the women.

"The facts and circumstances surrounding this case are beyond not only description but comprehension," he said, adding the two women "were aware of what was going on and they allowed it to continue."

PHYSICS: Main purpose of experiment was to have fun

(From 1A)

Tina Williams's group also was victorius. They showed off "Trixie," their egg mascot in its stylish green container with pleated paper.

Dena Wright, a Midland Christian senior, helped the students with their designs. She said the biggest purpose of the experiment was to have fun.

"I guess (it's) how you design them so they won't fall so fast, slow down the acceleration," Ms. Wright said. "We just had a little fun and showed them physics can be an exciting thing."

Ms. Gill said this is probably the first time Midland Christian has had an egg drop exercise. The experiment went perfectly with a unit of velocity.

"We're just working on free falling bodies and velocity and acceleration," she said. "We knew that they were going to accelerate with gravity, but we wanted to see what the best design would be to constrict the velocity."

Ms. Gill said both egg containers that worked had something in common.

"Both of the ones that won are real compact and dense and padded, and they had accordian pleats," she said.

The Midland Christian staff made sure to hose down the vicinity afterwards so no one would slip on egg yolk.

"Our big egg mess," Ms. Gill added.

Other Midland Christian student involved in the exercise were Corrie Scott, Grayson Boren, Joe Bob Ratliff, Daniel West, Brett Burleson, Levi Waldrop and Kelly Gaddis.

PROMOTER: Soccer is national sport of Mexico

(From 1A)

Midland and various Mexican cities has increased, he said.

In addition, De La Rosa has taken Permian Basin teams to play in various Mexican cities and has organized clinics for local teams in Leon, Mexico. Professional coaches from that country provided guidance and tips for better soccer play to local teams, he said.

Soccer is the international sport and is the national sport of Mexico, with large and devoted populations of fans, he said.

"The national news was on the back," De La Rosa said.

The Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce has taken over promotion for the large, annual Cinco de Mayo tournament, but De La Rosa continues to organize travel and play between Texas and Mexican teams.

Because of those efforts, local soccer teams are given a chance to improve themselves by facing a number of high-caliber teams, he said.

The El Paso native has lived in Midland for six years and continues to build bridges, both economic and social, between the Permian Basin and Mexico.

He is currently planning a local soccer tournament with Midland/Odessa, Dallas and El Paso

Widower prowls courthouse to see suspected killer of spouse

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Jim Martyn has two jobs, a long commute and painful memories that seem to be aging him quickly.

He also has a daughter to raise, who fortunately won't remember the day her mother was shot through the eye, stabbed in the belly and left dead on the kitchen floor of her Westchester County home.

But he hardly ever misses the chance to come to the county courthouse and stare at Carlos Cajigas, the once-trusted employee accused of killing Martyn's wife, a popular riding instructor.

'I just want to look at him, make sure he knows I'm there, make sure he knows I know what he did.'
— Jim Martyn, widower who never misses a chance to see the man accused of killing Martyn's wife

Even when he's not permitted in the courtroom — because he may be a witness at the trial — Martyn haunts the hallway outside, sometimes for hours.

"I just want to look at him, make sure he knows I'm there, make sure he knows I know what he did," says Martyn, 48. "He won't look at me, but I look at him."

Cajigas, 23, is scheduled to go on trial this week in the Jan. 6, 1997, murder of Kathleen Martyn, 32, who worked at the Bronx stable her husband operated. Cajigas allegedly killed her in the course of a burglary. Martyn found the body when he returned from the stables that evening. Their daughter, Katherine, then 18 months old, was uninjured and apparently unaware.

The killing astounded Pelham Manor, an affluent village of 6,000 that borders the Bronx, and left the local riding community grief-stricken. Stablehands in cowboy boots and weeping teenage girls attended the funeral.

In a courthouse interview with The Associated Press, Martyn said District Attorney Jeanine Pirro and her assistant prosecutors have been "more than terrific," but he is disappointed with her decision not to seek the death penalty.

"I told the DA I want to push the plunger" for a lethal injection, he said before she decided.

Talking about Cajigas and a co-defendant who has pleaded guilty, he said, "It's all over for me, why shouldn't it be over for them? It's over for Kathleen's mother. Her father can't talk about it. The baby — she knows her mother from a picture. She says 'Ma' when she sees Kathleen's picture."

The baby is 3 now and lives with her father and maternal grandparents on Long Island, well away from the pale yellow ranch house where she was sleeping, or maybe playing, when her mother let the killer into the house.

Cajigas had been to the house many times, Martyn says, during his time as a teen-age stablehand at the Pelham Bit stables 2 miles away. Part of the business was providing a horse-drawn carriage for weddings, and Cajigas sometimes got the plum job of driving, which meant dressing up.

"He changed his clothes in my bedroom!" Martyn sputtered outside court one day. "He wore my suit."

Cajigas attended Mrs. Martyn's wake, where police noticed he would not go in to see the coffin. He denied any involvement in the killing, telling police Mrs. Martyn was "a second mom" to him.

At a pretrial hearing, defense attorneys tried unsuccessfully to exclude the tape-recorded "second mom" comment. Prosecutor Pat Murphy said the defense knows it will be "absolutely chilling ... almost a punch to the gut" for jurors to hear — because Cajigas abandoned his wholehearted denial just a few days later.

At a hearing in the tiny Pelham courtroom on a frigid January night, a police officer read a statement in which Cajigas said he helped plan a robbery at the Martyn house, knew two other men were going to carry it out, gave them directions and provided a knife. But he insisted he was not there and did not know about the killing until the others — Michael Fernandez and Malcolm James — told him they shot and stabbed Mrs. Martyn after she tried to set off an alarm.

"Kathleen wasn't supposed to die," Cajigas said.

But court records show a bloody footprint was found in the house, and blood was found on Cajigas' boots. The prosecution says it has DNA evidence, as well as a plea bargain with James, who will testify against Cajigas.

The case is expected to last into November.

"I'll be here as long as it takes," Martyn said.

Critics wonder whether Wallace era really ended

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Former Gov. George Wallace's death last week offered the nation a glimpse at a seemingly transformed Alabama: throngs of blacks and whites from all levels of society passing through the open Capitol doors, mourning a man who'd changed along with his home state.

But a chorus of historians and political observers say a deeper look offers a different view, raising the question: Did the Wallace era ever end?

Black leaders still complain of bias in jobs, housing and education. Many state agencies remain under an employment discrimination order. State tax laws still favor land owners. "States' rights" — to some, a code-word for segregation — are still championed by Alabama's political leaders while federal court rulings are denounced as they were 30 years ago.

Current Gov. Fob James has "in effect, adopted as a strategy many of the same things Wallace used in his political campaigns — attack the federal courts, defy the federal courts, make up his own constitutional law in the face of obvious decisions of the court," said Sam Webb, a political historian at the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

As in Wallace's years, Webb said that the battle cry from James is: "We're going to have it our way. We're going to live in the past. We're going to fight the outside world."

Among examples cited by critics are James's opposition to a federal court ruling on school prayer and his promise to call up the National Guard to protect a judge's display of the Ten Commandments.

David Bronner, who manages the state pension fund and is an outspoken critic of Gov. James, said that amid such defiance, life for average Alabamans hasn't changed much.

"We spend a tremendous amount of energy at what some would call charging at windmills, expenditures of energy that don't improve the quality of life in Alabama," he said. "We holler 'states' rights,' jump up and down, and what's been accomplished?"

Since 1958, Alabama has elected just four governors, including Wallace, his wife Lurleen Wallace, preacher-farmer Guy Hunt, and James, who is in his second term.

All four "look remarkably similar on fundamental issues," said Culpepper Clark, a University of Alabama dean and author of a book on Wallace.

Clark said that Alabama's 1901 Constitution was written with some key goals: to exclude blacks from any meaningful role in government, to protect land owners from paying their share of taxes, and to deny power to urban centers. The aim of that Constitution, Clark said, "still speaks to us in the last half of the century."

Bob Gambacurta, a spokesman for James, takes issue with such criticism and said the image of Alabama has improved in the nation's eyes.

James' recent defense of school prayer and support for the Ten Commandments' display, for example, have drawn widespread support from all over the country, Gambacurta said.

Gambacurta acknowledged at least one common thread running from Wallace to James is "the belief that the Constitution grants certain rights to the states."

"We've seen and read and heard an awful lot these last few days of Governor Wallace's repentance and Governor Wallace's conversion," he said. "Wallace never gave up his opinion, he never changed his opinion or belief in the rights of the individual states."

He also points to the state's booming economy. The jobless rate was down to 3.7 percent in August — better than the national rate of 4.5 percent — and James contends the state has enjoyed $9 billion in new and expanding industry in the past three years.

"I don't think we've gotten a black eye when you look at record industrial expansion and record low unemployment," he said.

But critics point to other telling figures.

Rep. Alvin Holmes decries a lack of blacks in better-paying offices in state government. Blacks make up about one-fourth of Alabama's population, but in the state conservation department, for example, there are only 40 blacks in a work force of more than 600, Holmes said.

State officials say some 36 percent of all state government jobs are held by blacks, but Holmes says Wallace never favored hiring blacks for top-level jobs, and that hasn't changed in the 1990s.

Even after Wallace repudiated his segregationist views, Holmes said, "in most instances he put the same people back in charge that had been in charge during (the segregationist period) of his career. ... They did not employ blacks."

The Legislature is 25 percent black, but only because of federally mandated reapportionment.

"Progress for blacks did not come because of the generosity of the governor or state government," said Holmes. "It came because of federal laws."

Miss America pledges diabetes aid, calls for Clinton resignation

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Diabetes has a new face: Miss America's.

Hours after being crowned Miss America 1999, Nicole Johnson, who suffers from juvenile diabetes and wears an insulin pump 24 hours a day, promised Sunday to use her newfound fame to spotlight the disease.

"It makes me the perfect spokesperson for that issue," said the aspiring TV news anchor from Roanoke, Va.

The 24-year-old native of Seminole, Fla., is a graduate of the University of South Florida and Regent University in Virginia Beach, Va., who has worked for the Christian Broadcasting Network.

Seeking scholarship money, she competed twice in the Miss Florida Pageant before moving to Virginia to attend graduate school and competing in that state's pageant three times, finally winning this year.

She was diagnosed with juvenile diabetes, an uncommon form of the disease, at the age of 19. For four years, she had to eat meals at the same time each day, take insulin injections and carefully monitor her blood sugar levels.

Fourteen months ago, Johnson got an insulin pump, a small instrument that looks like a telephone pager. It delivers insulin through a needle and regulates the flow, giving her as much as she needs.

The device has freed her from the restrictions and injections, she said.

Pageant officials are de-emphasizing the royal aspects of Miss America in hopes of casting her as a relevant, down-to-earth role model, and Johnson declined to put the crown on during a news conference Sunday, offering instead to hold it.

Asked for her opinion on the White House sex scandal, Johnson called on President Clinton to resign for the good of the country.

"I personally think it would be better for him to resign," she said. "That's my personal opinion because I think it is so sad. He is the number one role model in the world, basically."

Red light effort can help change bad driver habits

There is no doubt about it — if you run a red light in Midland or Odessa, there is a good chance you are going to get a ticket. If you go through a light on red and a police officer is nearby, you are going to pay for it.

The effort to cut down on red light running — appropriately called "Red For A Reason" — has, as expected, resulted in more traffic citations in both cities. In fact, since the campaign was launched in August, citations in Odessa jumped by 75 percent and in Midland by 140 percent.

Since the 'Red For A Reason' campaign started, citations in Odessa have jumped by 75 percent and in Midland by 140 percent.

But don't misunderstand. The point of the "Red For A Reason" program is not to increase citations, but rather to get Midland and Odessa motorists to recognize that running red lights saves them very little time and dramatically increases their odds of being involved in a traffic accident, potentially a deadly one. Nationwide, 22 percent of all fatal accidents are caused because somebody ran a red light.

So, the program was launched to convince local drivers not to run red lights. And the increase in traffic citations in both cities illustrates just how serious the red light running problem was here.

Of course, changing the driving habits of motorists is easier said than done. There will continue to be some red light running in both cities through the end of October when the program will be completed.

Not every driver will change their habits, but some will and that will result in safer streets in Midland and Odessa. If only a few lives can be saved and property damage prevented, "Red For A Reason" will have been well worth the effort.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Sept. 21, the 264th day of 1998. There are 101 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Sept. 21, 1938, a hurricane struck parts of New York and New England, causing widespread damage and claiming more than 600 lives.

On this date:

In 1931, Britain went off the gold standard.

In 1937, "The Hobbit," by J.R.R. Tolkien, was first published.

In 1948, Milton Berle made his debut as permanent host of "The Texaco Star Theater" on NBC television.

In 1949, the People's Republic of China was proclaimed by its Communist leaders.

In 1977, after weeks of controversy over past business and banking practices, President Carter's embattled budget director, Bert Lance, resigned.

In 1983, in a speech to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Interior Secretary James G. Watt jokingly described a special advisory panel as consisting of "a black ... a woman, two Jews and a cripple." Although Watt later apologized, he ended up resigning.

Ten years ago: The Soviet women's gymnastics team won the gold medal at the Seoul Summer Olympics, with Romania placing second and East Germany third.

Five years ago: Russian President Boris Yeltsin announced he was ousting the hard-line, Communist-dominated Congress that had long opposed his reforms. The police drama "NYPD Blue" premiered on ABC.

One year ago: Saying their persistent demands for a special investigation had been vindicated, senior Republicans insisted Attorney General Janet Reno seek appointment of an independent counsel to look into White House fund-raising activities, a day after the Justice Department revealed it had begun a preliminary review.

Today's Birthdays: Cartoon animator Chuck Jones is 86. Actor Larry Hagman is 67. Poet-songwriter Leonard Cohen is 64. Actor-comedian Henry Gibson is 63. Author-comedian Fannie Flagg is 54. Author Stephen King is 51.

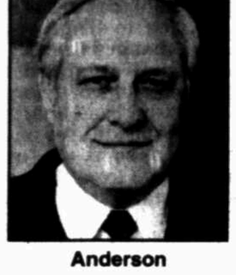
SSA penalizes children who 'make a wish'

We thought we'd seen bureaucratic witlessness at its worst when an anonymous official at the Internal Revenue Service suggested recently that the person who gave back Mark McGwire's 62nd home run ball might be slapped with a major "gift tax" for his charitable act.



Anderson

Wisely, the IRS quickly backed off when a furor erupted. But like McGwire's record, this bout of brainlessness was quickly matched by the Social Security Administration — which has taken to punishing children who suffer from life-threatening illnesses.

"Joel" lives in Pennsylvania with his mother, who doesn't want their full names or exact location used for this story.

Just 23 hours after coming into this world, Joel was on the operating table. The lining around his brain had swollen through a small hole in the skull, and his lungs were failing. Doctors were able to remove the swollen tissue and start his breathing, but their diagnosis wasn't good: Joel wouldn't make it past the age of two.

Joel is now 12, but his life remains filled with pain. He suffers from scoliosis, three of his vertebrae are fused, and his spine extends several inches into his brain. He has endured more than 50 brain surgeries. A computerized shunt monitors pressure on the part of his brain that can't drain cerebral fluid.

"I have a shunt, and I am very, very sick," Joel told us. "But I try not to have a sad face."

Over the years, Joel's illness has virtually depleted what little money his mother and father were able to save. To survive, his now-widowed mother relies on monthly checks from the Supplemental Security Income program, which helps out families with disabled kids.

In December 1995, Joel became a beneficiary of the Make-A-Wish Foundation, which granted him his greatest wish: a trip to Disneyworld and a chance to meet his TV hero, John Stamos.

But a month after returning from the Magic Kingdom, Joel's family got a letter from the government saying that their Supplemental Security Income would be slashed by the cost of the trip. Joel's mother, who had reported the trip to SSA officials, forcefully objected. When the dust settled, administrators agreed to deduct only $800 — the amount of cash given to the family to pay for meals and souvenirs.

"We are frustrated," said Ann Fisher of the Western Pennsylvania chapter of Make-A-Wish. "We are trying to do something good, and the family are sometimes penalized. We always tell the families that wishes come with no strings attached, and this is a pretty big string."

Joel's case is not unusual. Just last week, Victoria Schall informed an SSA bureaucrat that Make-A-Wish had given her 15-year-old daughter a shopping spree — only to have Social Security threaten to dock her check for next month.

When Schall objected, the SSA official asked to see the receipts from the shopping spree. The receipts are currently being reviewed.

Fisher, the Make-A-Wish spokeswoman, said that although the foundation doesn't keep formal records of such things, her office has been fielding calls from upset SSI parents for over a decade.

It turns out that the fate of families like Joel's ultimately rests with bureaucrats. The letter of the law requires that families on SSI receive no cash awards. But the agency also gives its case officers the right to exercise their own judgment in some instances.

"There have been some cases where we've been able to get leniency, and others where we haven't," Fisher said.

There may soon be relief on the way. Rep. Phil English, R-Pa., has a bill that would amend the Social Security Act to "except a cash award of not more than $2,000," when it is made by a charity like Make-A-Wish. The bill is scheduled for a vote this week and will likely pass easily.

And that's OK with the Social Security Administration, which isn't eager to be seen as an agency that punishes sick children. "It's certainly not the intention of this agency to disadvantage (Make-A-Wish) or disadvantage any child who's received a gift from a charitable organization," the SSA's John Trollinger told our associate Ashley Baker. He added that he can't comment on specific cases without knowing more about them.

But Michelle Atkins, president of the Western Pennsylvania Make-A-Wish, said that even the most affluent families can end up on SSI if their son or daughter gets sick.

"Most medical insurance companies have a cap on benefits that these families quickly reach," said Atkins. "That means they have to turn to the government. In order to qualify for SSI benefits; they have to be below a certain income level. They are forced to give away everything they own — including their home — to qualify for SSI benefits."

Ken Starr is not the bad guy; Clinton is

Ken Starr is the good guy. Bill Clinton is the bad guy. Yet, for most of this year, the public supported Clinton and booed Starr. That's the power of propaganda combined with ignorance.

Reese

Clinton, with the help of his pack of media lap dogs, spread several obvious lies about Starr. Let's look at them one by one.

Lie No. 1: Ken Starr has spent four years investigating the president and has nothing to show for it.

Truth: Starr has been the second-most-productive special prosecutor since the law was written. Before the Monica Lewinsky scandal came along, Starr had already gotten guilty pleas and convictions of 12 people -- including the governor of Arkansas and the former deputy attorney general.

Lie No. 2: Whitewater was just a land deal that went bad.

Truth: American taxpayers were defrauded out of several hundred thousand dollars.

Truth: Starr, whose ambition is to be a Supreme Court justice, killed his chances for appointment when he was George Bush's solicitor general. Bush wanted Starr to intervene on behalf of the defense contractors in a case involving whistle-blowers. Starr, after looking at the facts, sided with the whistle-blowers, knowing that it would ruin his shot at the Supreme Court. Sure enough, Bush soon thereafter appointed Souter to the vacancy. Sacrificing one's highest ambition for the sake of the truth is hardly the actions of a partisan hack.

Truth: The investigations took so long because the Clinton gang stonewalled and contested every motion and request and persistently "lost" records.

Starr is a man of genuine religious conviction, a faithful husband and lawyer with a reputation for integrity and fairness. Clinton is a sociopath and a sleazebag.

A nation is in trouble when people can no longer tell the difference between good and bad. That says they have no standards. A nation is in trouble when the people are so ignorant they are easily duped by propagandists. That says they have no real education and no ability to think critically.

Such people will never remain free, as Thomas Jefferson noted long ago. It is impossible to function as an effective citizen without knowledge and the ability to think and without a moral standard by which to judge men and events.

"For men are so simple and yield so much to immediate necessity, that the deceiver never lacks dupes." So said the great Italian realist Niccolo Machiavelli.

Perhaps Americans have lost the capacity and fitness for self-government. Perhaps they've grown too lazy and too selfish. If so, then rest assured that some Caesar or Napoleon will come along to govern them, though he will probably wear a suit rather than a uniform. There are no vacuums in nature or in politics. But men in suits can be as ruthless and cruel as men in uniform.

Jefferson, George Washington and Patrick Henry would be sickened and appalled to see what a mess we've made of the constitutional republic they gave us. We turned our back on the republic and installed a European-style centralized government that definitely leans toward socialism. It may turn out that their faith in the ability of ordinary people to govern themselves was misplaced.

I hope not. If what could be learned from the Clinton mess is that we should be more skeptical of charming people who tell us they will fix all our problems, that would be cause for optimism.

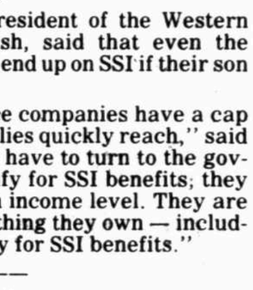
After latest assault, Clintons living 'lives of the hunted'

Ernest Thompson Seton once wrote a book called "Lives of the Hunted." The Clintons are now living it.



Rather

Ken Starr has hit President Clinton with his best shot. He has badly wounded him and has him staggering. But the president is still standing. Limping, wobbling and near collapse, but still standing.

Now Starr is pressing, trying to put the political kill-shot on him. Starr has many more shots to fire. They include unloading on Hillary Clinton.

Tucked away in Starr's voluminous report to Congress is the warning, the threat and the reminder that he is continuing to investigate other phases of what he considers to be possible criminal acts by both Clintons.

Starr reported: "Evidence is being gathered on ... the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association. ... All phases of the investigation are now nearing completion."

This refers directly to, in Starr's words, "legal work done by the Rose Law Firm, including the First Lady" (a partner in the firm) on the Arkansas "Whitewater" real estate deal in the 1980s.

The public may long ago have tired of the whole Whitewater business, but Starr hasn't. He reportedly has believed for a long time that he has enough evidence to indict Mrs. Clinton in that complex case.

Unlike the president's situation, where the law is unclear about whether, and if so when, a president can be indicted, there's no legal reason Hillary Clinton can't be indicted while her husband is still in office.

Politically, it could be risky for Starr to do such a thing. But the possibility of his doing so worries the Clintons plenty. The threat is a major factor in their thinking now. It has to be. It is one of the generally unrecognized pressures on the president to resign.

While Congress ponders what to do, Starr just keeps coming. He is relentless. And, as the Clintons see it, merciless and pitiless in his partisan political zeal. Nothing short of driving them from office and destroying them both politically will satisfy him and those who back him -- that's the view both Clintons have expressed privately to friends.

Starr naturally sees his role differently. He views truth and justice as his mission. The law, not politics, is his duty as he has described it. And about pursuing truth and justice, he has no apology, as he tells all who will listen.

For Starr, these are days of victory and vindication. The old Southern phrase "smiling like a deacon with four aces" comes to mind. The Clintons took him on, head-on, and he beat them.

But his defeat of them is not yet complete. So he aims now for the kill-shot. Some Republicans and many Democrats don't want him to take it. But the choice isn't theirs. Congress doesn't control Starr. No one does. That's the meaning of "independent counsel." The law says so.

When the smoke from all of this finally clears, that law may be changed. Politicians in both parties tell this reporter they now shudder at where the independent counsel law could lead in future investigations. But that's of little if any real help to the Clintons.

They've been hit. Crippling shot. And their pursuer still has them in his cross-hairs. They are the hunted, and the hunter is closing in, looking for the one, final shot that will put them away. Forever.

If the Clintons make it out of this bloody political corner they are now in (and into which, in many ways, they put themselves), it will be a survival story worthy of Ernest Seton.

A high office is diminished in the eyes of a rising generation

By Calvin Woodward
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The presidency towers in the eyes of children, a dimly understood but awesome job where George Washington was brave, Abe Lincoln was honest and the aura of celebrity sparkles like fairy dust.

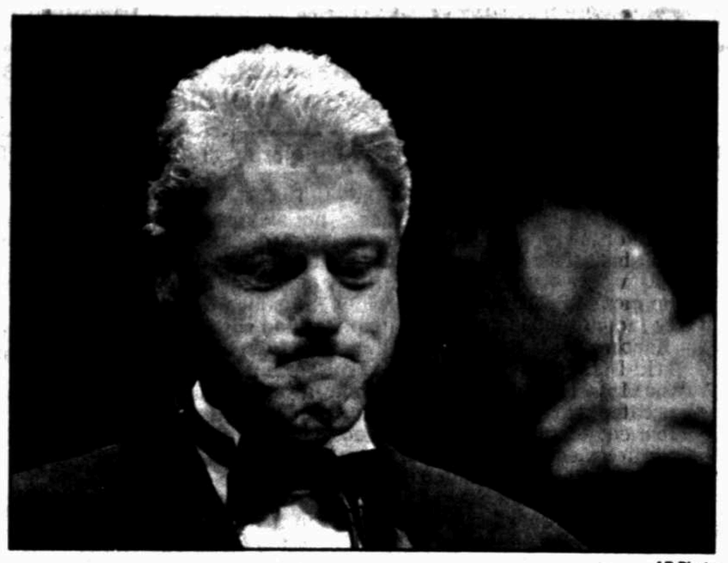
Now they are seeing a different side.

Kids who knew little more about the White House than the habits of Buddy and Socks now know more than adults wished. "The president has another friend he loves besides his wife," a first-grader blurted out in a Virginia religious class, as recalled by his instructor.

Some educators worry that underneath all the teen titillation provided by the Monica Lewinsky investigation, President Clinton's troubles may erode confidence in the office, not just the man, for youth as well as for adults.

"If anybody is going to put the nail into the coffin of the imperial presidency, it will be Bill Clinton," Princeton University historian Fred Greenstein said. "He's a reminder that politicians are human."

For the pint-sized, a president can be an important figure of security, even "somewhere between daddy and God," said Herbert M. Atherton of the Center for Civic Education, which designs curriculum and texts for civic instruction from Calabasas, Calif.



AP Photo
President Clinton thanks members of the Congressional Black Caucus for their unwavering support while speaking at the Caucus dinner at the Washington Convention Center Saturday

Even among the college-bound, he said, a much-studied disenchantment with public service and politics could be taking another hit. "It's too early to say," he ventured. "It can be fairly assumed that it's not going to make a difficult situation better."

Among early teens who are getting a more nuanced education about U.S. history than younger children, it may be disillusioning but not so shocking that Clinton would lie.

Many adolescents use a finely tuned sense of justice and fairness to judge everything from world events to the contents of their school lunch, says Tedd Levy, president of the National Council for the Social Studies and a Norwalk, Conn., middle-school teacher on leave.

Clinton's crisis appears to have set off that righteous tripwire for many, he says. But he adds: "I've heard comments like, 'If he lied, everybody does it.'

"That's a very poor way to look at the world and it's a very adolescent way to make decisions," he said. "But it's widespread."

Evan Sisley of Fairfax, Va., is one 12-year-old who hasn't yielded to cynicism. He surprised his parents by taking notes during Clinton's TV address on an "inappropriate relationship" with Ms. Lewinsky, then wrote to the president asking: "How are you a public figure and a role model?

"At my age I am taught to tell the truth," the letter says. "I expect a person in your office to tell the truth. Also to be more direct and honest to people you work for.

"All I am asking you is to tell the truth."

His mother, Ava, was teaching a religious course at her Catholic Church when a little boy suddenly asked about the president's "friend."

"That's not right," the boy said.

Democratic Rep. Jim Moran of Virginia, a Clinton ally on policy and the father of two grade-school children, mentioned the impact on youngsters when he suggested the president consider resigning. "My concern is what it does to the presidency, what it does to all those kids out there who strive to be president."

Tish Raff, assistant principal at Sequoyah Elementary School in Derwood, Md., says pupils are trying to understand perjury and obstruction of justice. For many, the presidency is barely on their radar screen, she said. "But I do think ... kids who are aware of the full nature of the events are shocked in a way that many adults are."

At Hillview Middle School in Menlo Park, Calif., Carolyn Malquist says her Grade 8 pupils already knew presidents aren't perfect. That is due, in part, to a change in many schools away from the old verities that showed historical figures as flawless.

When studying Thomas Jefferson, she said, "we talk about the great things he did but also we talk about the things that are questioned today," like his owning slaves.

Even so, she worries exposure of Clinton's problems may "take away the magic" of the office.

How to get that back?

A school year ushered in with classroom talk and hallway giggles about Clinton and the intern will gradually turn to a nobler chapter of history in many parts of the country, with studies commemorating the 200th anniversary next year of George Washington's death.

The apocryphal tale of Washington declaring he cannot tell a lie, and admitting he chopped down the cherry tree, is mostly purged from the canon. But an old hero and enduring model of presidential rectitude will be revisited.

Beyond that, says Atherton, all the spontaneous classroom discussions going on about Clinton and the Constitution may soothe some children shaken by his act of dishonesty.

The lesson for the young and insecure, he said, is that "ours is a government of laws, not men. That's our ultimate security."

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton was back in church Sunday, apparently strengthened by the friendly embrace he got from black members of Congress the night before.

To show appreciation for that gesture, the president — before attending church — stopped at a pier along the Washington waterfront to speak briefly at a fund-raiser for Rep. Donald Payne, D-N.J.

Payne, wearing a blue captain's hat, greeted Clinton at his limousine, shook his hand and stood with him as he waved to the crowd. The president got enthusiastic cheers there from many of the same people who were in the audience Saturday night when he addressed the Congressional Black Caucus' annual dinner.

He told the black caucus he appreciated its support "from the heart," and thanked them "for standing up for me and understanding the true meaning of repentance and atonement."

At the dinner he also said he had directed Housing Secretary Andrew Cuomo to seek legislation that would require public housing authorities to outline admissions plans aimed at reducing poverty and racial concentration through new tenants.

"We cannot rest while any communities are thoroughly segregated by income or by race," he said. The new admission policy for public housing would "deconcentrate poverty, mix incomes and thereby mix racial balances," he said.

Sunday, Clinton heaped praise on Payne and then excused himself.

"I have to go pick up the first lady and try to avoid being late for church. I don't need that today," Clinton said.

Hillary Rodham Clinton was waiting at the south driveway when the president arrived, and they made it to Foundry United Methodist Church in time for the unusually crowded 11 a.m. services. It was the first time they've been to Foundry since the Sunday before his Aug. 17 grand jury testimony and public admission to an inappropriate relationship with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

While the Clintons listened from their usual pew down front, the Rev. J. Philip Wogaman delivered a sermon on "Zion's Song in Babylon," focused on the role of music in the life of a church.

Later Sunday, the president and first lady were to travel to New York, where Clinton had an evening meeting with Prime Minister Romano Prodi of Italy.

Rep. Barney Frank to play key role in Clinton case

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was a sex scandal with details so embarrassing that more than a few wondered if the Democrat, despite his popularity and intellect, could survive.

President Clinton? No, Rep. Barney Frank of Massachusetts, the No. 2 Democrat on the House Judiciary Committee.

Now, Frank, one of two openly gay members in the House and the brother of White House Communications Director Ann Lewis, is playing a key role in defending Clinton's right to fair proceedings as the committee considers the case for possible impeachment.

Is Frank more sympathetic to Clinton's embarrassment and plight, considering what he went through?

"I don't know," he said in an interview. But he added that when you're being hit with many accusations, it's important to quickly admit what you did — and did not — do. Otherwise, all the charges tend to blur together.

"I did that right up front. I said, 'This is true, and this is true,'" said Frank, who saved his congressional seat, in part, by answering constituents' questions about the scandal at public meetings.

"I think the president would be in a better situation if he'd done that," he said. "I do understand his trouble now that he is disentangling the true versus the untrue. ... He made the mistake of denying it all."

'I do understand his trouble now that he is disentangling the true versus the untrue ... . He made the mistake of denying it all.'
— Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass.

Frank's case was the last time the House attempted to censure a member for bad behavior. It was 1990, and he ended up being reprimanded, a lesser punishment, for improperly using his congressional office to aid an acquaintance, male prostitute Stephen L. Gobie.

Frank, who once had paid Gobie for sex and later hired him as a personal assistant, fixed parking tickets, some accumulated by Gobie, and wrote a misleading memo for Gobie. Frank, who revealed his homosexuality in 1987, said he had been trying to reform Gobie. (The only other acknowledged homosexual in Congress is Rep. Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz.)

Since then, the outspoken liberal has been prominent in House debates on immigration, housing and banking. He is a strong supporter of gay rights and sometimes has been a target of anti-gay remarks by colleagues.

As the second-ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee behind Michigan Rep. John Conyers, his debating and parliamentary skills make him a natural choice to emerge as a dominant player on the minority side.

"I would think Barney Frank would be the worst guy in the Congress to debate," said Rep. Joseph Moakley of Massachusetts, the top Democrat on the House Rules Committee. Moakley was among many Democrats who tried to stop Republicans from releasing Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's 445-page report before Clinton had a chance to review it.

Frank has frequented the television news shows, proclaiming that nothing he'd seen so far seemed to reach the threshold for impeachment. He's been an unremitting critic of Starr's tactics in investigating both the Whitewater land deal in Arkansas and the Lewinsky case.

Now that the committee's work has started in earnest — combing through boxes of documents as it considers whether to recommend a full impeachment inquiry to the House — Frank says he'll be less in the spotlight, as Democrats look for ways to work together. That won't necessarily be easy, as neither Conyers nor Frank is considered a consensus-builder.

"Part of the problem ... is that there's not a whole lot of team players on the panel," said one Democratic aide who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Frank already has assumed some leadership duties behind the scenes.

With Rep. Howard Berman of California, the panel's fourth-ranking Democrat, Frank helped select staffers to assist in the preliminary review. On Thursday, Frank was the Democrat who pushed, unsuccessfully, to open part of a closed-door meeting on Clinton's videotaped grand jury testimony, the aide said.

Black activists condemn sitcom set in Civil War

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Black activists are condemning "The Secret Diary of Desmond Pfeiffer," an upcoming UPN comedy set during the Civil War, saying that it makes fun of slavery.

"This show desensitizes the pain and devastating suffering of slavery," said Ron Wright, pastor of the Emmanuel AME Church in Los Angeles.

"There is no compromise on this. This show need not air," said Danny Bakewell, head of the Brotherhood Crusade civil rights group.

Bakewell and Wright said they plan to organize a protest to demand that the show be kept off the air, and say they will target advertisers if it does appear.

The network has no plans to yank the show, UPN President Dean Valentine told the Los Angeles Times. "We have nothing to feel bad about," he said. "They can march up and down the street all they want to."

The series, set to debut Oct. 5, is a farce about a black Englishnobleman who winds up as a servant and adviser to Abraham Lincoln.

Chi McBride, who plays Pfeiffer, said he anticipated the controversy but stands by the show.

"If this were a comedy about slavery, I would not be involved," he said.

There are a few jokes referring to slavery in early episodes, including one in which Lincoln's chief of staff sees the title character relaxing in the kitchen and remarks: "The slaves haven't been emancipated yet, Pfeiffer. Get your feet off that table."

Valentine said the pilot was shown to black groups, who "found it incredibly funny."

U.S., Japan will study missile defense to counter N. Korea

NEW YORK (AP) — Concerned about North Korea's ballistic missile development, the United States and Japan agreed Sunday to conduct joint research on a missile defense system that could protect the island nation from attack.

"No one should doubt our commitment to defend our interests and to work together for peace and stability in Asia," Defense Secretary William Cohen said at a joint news conference with Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and their Japanese counterparts. "And this is the best way to protect both the United States and Japan."

The United States has 100,000 troops in the region, about one-third of them guarding the always tense demilitarized zone between North and South Korea.

Sunday's agreement comes after North Korea launched a rocket over Japan on Aug. 31 in a failed attempt to send a satellite into orbit. It was the latest example of Pyongyang's aggressive program to develop long-range missiles that could one day hit American shores, U.S. officials said.

Japan has conducted preliminary studies, some with the United States, on ways to defend against missiles. The United States is developing several theater missile defense systems as well, although American scientists haven't been able to overcome technological hurdles to knock a fast-moving target out of the sky.

Now, U.S. and Japan will work together on research and development, which could lead to a missile defense system in the future. No target date was set.

"Our two countries will spare no efforts" to improve defense and security in the region, said Japanese Foreign Affairs Minister Masahiko Komura.

The United States, after Japan's surrender in World War II, pledged to defend the island nation — partly to contain its historic aggression. The two sides reaffirmed that security alliance on Sunday and the Japanese agreed to legislatively approve revisions to increase cooperation as outlined in guidelines approved here last year.

How other Asian nations will respond to Sunday's announcement was not immediately clear, but China in particular long has been wary of any move towards rearming Japan.

Komura and Defense Minister Fukushiro Nukaga are new, coming in with Prime Minister Keizo Obuchi, who will hold his first talks with President Clinton on Tuesday. Clinton speaks to the General Assembly on Monday.

Clinton and Obuchi will discuss regional security matters too, but also will focus on Japan's faltering economy, with the president urging bank and other reforms to help reverse the Asian financial crisis now affecting other nations, including Russia and America.

Obuchi, in an interview with Western reporters, said Saturday that Japan already had taken every measure to pull itself out of recession short of a 'wartime economy' of massive military spending increases. He added that he would not resort to such a move, however.

Albright, in response to a reporter's question, said the administration was pleased by recent Japanese legislation to close or fix debt-ridden banks, but was looking for more actions and for real results.

"I think they have taken an important step," Albright said. "Implementation is important."

Sunday the focus was security and defense.

In a joint U.S.-Japan statement, the two governments called on North Korea not to develop, test, launch or deploy missiles. They also urged a halt to North Korean missile exports to other countries, something the poverty-stricken Communist country is doing to raise cash.

Supreme Court evolved toward conservative chief justice

Once dubbed 'the Lone Ranger' for his frequent, conservative dissents, Rehnquist today finds himself near the court's ideological center.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost 74 and beginning his 13th year as the nation's top judge, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist is riding high.

Once dubbed "the Lone Ranger" for his frequent, consistently conservative dissents — often without allies — Rehnquist today finds himself near the court's ideological center.

"His side has won," said Mary Cheh, a George Washington University law professor. "He's been successful in steering the Supreme Court to a sensitivity to states' rights and a general cutting back on the whole individual-rights revolution of the 1960s."

Rehnquist had a busier-than-usual summer, even with the highest court in recess. Acting alone, he rejected a pair of emergency requests that sought to shield White House lawyers and Secret Service officials from having to testify in the Monica Lewinsky investigation.

Rehnquist has been on the nation's highest court for 26 years and chief justice — the so-called first among equals — since Sept. 26, 1986. Few expect him to retire before the presidential election in 2000.

Constitutional scholars and lawyers who once worked for him say Rehnquist's core judicial philosophy has not wavered.

"The court is much more like him than it used to be," said Washington lawyer Charles Cooper, who served as a Rehnquist law clerk before becoming a Justice Department policymaker in the Reagan administration.

Another former Rehnquist law clerk, Washington lawyer Maureen Mahoney, agrees. "The court has come to him. His views are far more predominant than they once were," she said.

Presidents Reagan and Bush certainly contributed to Rehnquist's clout. In addition to elevating him to chief justice, Reagan appointed Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy and Antonin Scalia. Bush appointed David H. Souter — though Souter's voting record has disappointed conservatives — and Clarence Thomas, who, like Scalia, is considered more conservative than Rehnquist.

The chief justice's success has not been total. As Rehnquist reads the Constitution, states should be free to outlaw abortion and sponsor prayers in public schools. A majority of the court still disagrees.

But such disappointments do not eclipse Rehnquist's winning record, and the court's 1997-98 term offered statistical proof. Of the 91 signed decisions it yielded, Rehnquist dissented just 10 times — tied with O'Connor for the second least behind Kennedy's six dissents.

O'Connor and Kennedy are considered crucial "swing votes" in the most divisive cases, and often join Rehnquist, Scalia and Thomas. Souter and John Paul Stevens, an appointee of President Ford, often side with President Clinton's two appointees — Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer — to favor less conservative results.

Rehnquist voted with the 7-2 majority when the court in June made it easier for employees to win sexual-harassment lawsuits against their employers. Scalia and Thomas dissented.

Rehnquist authored the majority opinion when the court thwarted Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr's effort to obtain evidence by ruling that the lawyer-client privilege survives a client's death. Scalia, Thomas and O'Connor dissented.

When the chief justice votes with the majority, he decides who will write the majority opinion — considerable power because it often influences a ruling's scope. When the chief justice is in dissent, the majority's senior justice gets that assignment power.

Long an ardent student of politics, Rehnquist in 1976 wrote about his future job: "It may well be that the office of chief justice of the United States calls for skills and abilities more readily honed in the give-and-take of political life than in the practice and teaching of law."

Rehnquist is enormously popular with his court colleagues, and has won public and private praise from conservative and liberal justices alike for how he runs the court's deliberative conferences.

"I think he is responding to an institutional need to help unify the court rather than divide it," said New York University law professor Burt Neuborne. "He was once freer to be a gadfly."

David Leitch, a Washington lawyer who clerked for Rehnquist during his first year as chief justice, said, "I think he feels the court ought to speak with some clarity, and that as chief justice he is particularly obligated to help."

Republican House tax bill takes care of business ... interests

WASHINGTON (AP) — While most sponsors of the Republican tax cut bill tend to talk about the benefits to millions of middle-class Americans, the GOP made sure it also took care of key business interests.

Insurance companies, banks and securities firms doing business overseas and private-industry research and development would benefit from provisions tucked into the five-year, $80 billion collection of cuts moving in the House. Small businesses also would gain several breaks.

The House is expected to vote this week on the tax bill, which President Clinton has threatened to veto because it is mainly funded by projected budget surpluses. The president wants those reserved to ensure Social Security's future solvency.

Business has been a long-time bedrock of Republican political support. An analysis by the non-partisan Center for Responsive Politics of 1995-96 campaign contributions found that Republicans got 60% of the $391.4 million contributed by all kinds of businesses.

The most intense lobbying came on renewal of the research and development credit, a provision that expired June 30. It gives companies a tax credit for part of the wages, supplies, computer costs and contract expenses for a wide range of research.

The bill approved last week by the Ways and Means Committee would extend the credit for 20 months — retroactive to July 1 — at a cost of $3.9 billion.

"It has been our biggest priority," said Monica Maguire of the National Association of Manufacturers. "This credit benefits the broadest number of companies and those of the most different sizes."

A recent study by the Coopers & Lybrand consulting firm estimated that U.S. companies would spend an additional $41 billion on research and development through 2010 as long as the credit is in place, generating $58 billion in higher economic productivity.

Because the credit has been in place for years, most businesses are looking at its reenactment as inevitable.

"They would regard it as a horrendous tax increase if it were taken away," said Clint Stretch, director of tax and legislative affairs at the Deloitte & Touche accounting firm.

The other big-business item in the bill would exempt insurance companies, banks and securities firms from certain U.S. taxes on their international activities. It is aimed at reducing the combined U.S. and foreign taxes these companies pay.

A study produced by the American Council for Capital Formation, a group that advocates lowering business taxes, found that U.S. insurance firms now pay combined taxes that are 145 percent higher than those paid by foreign companies competing in a third country: for example, a British company competing with a U.S. firm in Italy.

"It is hard to imagine any tax policy justification for this result," said Thomas Horst, a former international tax director at the Treasury Department. "U.S.-owned financial subsidiaries are at a clear competitive disadvantage."

The House legislation would permit this exemption for fiscal 1999 at a cost of about $535 million.

Physics saves lives

As a premed student at Washington University in St. Louis, I had to take a difficult class in physics. One day our professor was discussing a particularly complicated concept. A student rudely interrupted to ask 'Why do we have to learn this stuff?'

'To save lives,' the professor responded quickly and continued the lecture.

A few minutes later, the same student spoke up again. 'So how does physics save lives?' he persisted.

'It keeps the ignoramuses out of medical school,' replied the professor.

If it creeps or crawls, look for it at the Insectarium

By Kevin Hoffman
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA — Five-year-old Andrew Belcher was about to eat a worm, but he dropped it on the floor before he could pop it in his mouth.

"You don't want to eat that!" Christi Cullen warned.

The young museum guide fished out a new cheese-covered worm and handed it to him.

"Tastes like a cheese doodle," Andrew said.

Cheese-covered meal worms are one of many treats awaiting brave-hearted, strong-stomached visitors to The Philadelphia Insectarium. If it creeps, crawls, stings or bites, you'll probably find it here.

Some of the specimens in the 6,000-square-foot museum are alive in natural habitats. The rest weren't so lucky. They're mounted on the walls.

Part zoo, part museum, the Insectarium has been delighting children and grossing out their parents since 1992. It's owned and operated by a man who has made a career of killing bugs: Steve Kanya of Steve's Bug-Off, an exterminating company housed in the same building.

Kanya opened his museum after he noticed children stopping to look at his catches of the day — a motley collection of rats, mice and insects he put in the window to attract business.

His museum workers are old bug hands.

"When I was young I was always the one out digging in the dirt and picking up worms and saying, 'Ooh! Look at this!'" Director Maureen Kennedy said.

This month, the museum is showing off insects from around the world, including bugs that look like ordinary tree leaves and insects so ornate that they are worn as living jewelry in Mexico.

Visitors are allowed to touch many of the dead bugs from Africa, Asia and Australia.

The star attraction is a most unpopular visitor — the American cockroach. In the museum's "Cockroach Kitchen," thousands live amid linoleum and wooden cabinets in a glass display case.

The museum aims to teach children that insects do more than sting, bite and annoy; they're a vital part of the ecosystem: Termites dispose of fallen trees, millipedes stir up dirt to make room for the plants and bees and butterflies pollinate flowers.

"Without bugs the world would be very different," Ms. Kennedy said. "It'd be a lot dirtier, and probably not as pretty."

A huge plastic and metal ant "crawls" up the facade of the Insectarium, known to local residents as the bug museum, as neighbors Bob Creedon and Cathy Lane, take a morning stroll down Frankford Avenue Sept. 13, in Philadelphia. Located in the northeast section of the city, the Insectarium is open to the public Monday through Saturday.

Scouts turn carpenters to build library for seniors

By Rick López
Staff Writer

Reading a good book is one of life's simple pleasures some people take for granted.

It's also one that two ambitious Boy Scouts have brought home for residents of Langtry Village Nursing Home in an extraordinary effort to earn the status of Eagle Scout.

Brothers Anthony McNealy, 16, and Timothy McNealy, 17, members of Scout Troop 175, created a small library for the center by building two large, sturdy bookshelves and filling them up with more than 900 reading materials.

Now, residents can curl up with a Danielle Steele paperback or take an African safari by flipping through pages of National Geographic. A color-coding system separates the collection into three categories: mystery, romance and non-fiction.

The teens, both students at Lee High School, began the project this spring, when they were discussing what they could do to rake up community project hours.

"We wanted to build a durable project, so it would last more than a couple of months," Timothy said.

So they organized a project that called for months of plan-

Saddlemaker works hard at perfection

By Jason Zara
Associated Press

EL CENTRO, Calif. — John Burgun built his business with sincerity and with a quality product he can stand behind.

And one you can sit on.

Burgun's business, Roo-hide Saddlery, crafts hand-made saddles designed to fit both horse and rider comfortably. While there are cheaper, faster ways to make saddles, Burgun said, they wouldn t have the same quality. People are willing to pay more and keep coming back because they know they are getting the best product.

Building saddles takes a number of things — skilled labor, good materials and perhaps 30 hours of work. Burgun said his crew of six has vast experience and all enjoy the work. Most of the workers are from families that have been doing saddlework for generations; two of the workers with decades of experience are teaching their sons the craft.

"If we added up all the years of experience it would make us all seem pretty old," Burgun said.

Ralph Alvarez is 63 and started making saddles when he was 14. He is teaching his sons to make saddles, and they will become the fourth generation of saddlemakers in their families.

"When you know how to do it, everything goes very smoothly," Alvarez said.

The only machines in the Roo-hide shop are two sewing machines — everything else is done by hand. Even some of the stitching is done by hand.

"This is the way they used to make saddles 100 years ago," Alvarez said, "by hand."

The crew builds about six saddles a week, Burgun said. The detail that goes into hand stamping the leather, crafting the edges and making each saddle perfect is incredible.

Burgun said another thing that makes a Roo-hide saddle better is that it is designed to be comfortable for the horse as well as the rider. Most saddles, he said, are built solely with the comfort of the rider in mind. His saddles have actually improved the performance of horses in competition because they are more comfortable for the animals and fit better.

There is a great deal of specific knowledge that goes into building a saddle. The material starts as a side of leather — half a steer. But the belly leather, for example, is useful for its softness and suppleness, not its strength, so it is not used for saddles.

While the saddles are made in a small shop in El Centro, selling the product is a much bigger affair. Burgun has a tractor-trailer rig set up as a "store on wheels," and he travels, often with his family, to shows across the country. He has customers from coast-to-coast, as well as in Europe, New Zealand and his native Australia.

Baby advice can be a lot of babble

As I write this, I am looking across a living room strewn with devices designed to calm a crying baby, or at least soothe her little nerves a bit.

The contraption in which you lay the baby on the floor and she plays with objects hanging from a couple of crossed rods lies folded and snapped shut on the couch.

And the baby? She is sitting contentedly in her stroller. We aren't going for a stroll. We haven't returned from one. It's just the only place she'll sit and not cry.

Still a rookie parent, I'm catching on quickly. Before our daughter was born, my wife and I read lots of books, all of them full of good advice and priceless wisdom. We talked to lots of parents. Lots of friends and relatives offered plenty of well-meaning advice. We watched other parents in action

Junior high students can lack shelf-esteem

There are some things about children I'll never understand.

For instance, we've got a 4-year-old boy who said the only thing he didn't like about his very first high school football game was that the cheerleaders stood in front of him and yelled the whole game, making it impossible for him to hear the game itself.

Patterson

This is the same child, undersand, who put the stopper in the bathroom sink the other day, turned the water on, and then ... went outside to play. An hour later, I hear water running. I go into the bathroom, see the potential destruction, and say a little prayer about how thankful I am for overflow drains at the tops of sinks (whoever invented the sink was obviously a parent).

These things that kids do ... I do not understand.

We have a 9-year-old that oftentimes can't finish her own sentences, but has no problem finishing mine and Mrs. P's.

This I do not understand.

And as you may recall, we have a 12-year-old rapidly approaching the teen years. She called me the other morning while I was at work. One of these days, I will learn to never pick up the phone during school hours.

"Dad?" she said.

"Oh boy," I said, knowing that whatever came next I would not like.

"I need you to come to school and set up my locker shelf."

Allow me to explain.

A locker shelf is another one of those items that students simply must have if life is to continue. Seems that with minimal assembly required, a student can have plastic shelving and free up some space in his or her locker.

So we bought it for her for one reason and one reason only: We got tired of hearing her ask for it.

In just a few minutes, I miraculously had it assembled. I figured the next thing would be the sound of her sliding it into her locker. The sight that came next, I hoped, would be an indication that all her problems were solved and graduation would be imminent (but of course still light years away).

Need I say next that things didn't work out quite that way?

Shortly after I had assembled it for her last Sunday, she brought it back to me in the same pile from which it had been prior to assembly. She told me that she couldn't take it to school assembled, and that she had disassembled it because it wouldn't fit in her backpack.

"Can you come to the school and set up my locker shelf?"

"I thought this was a done deal? I thought it was time to move on to the next crisis?" I asked her.

"Well, dad, the pieces of the shelf won't fit in my backpack and I can't ... just ... like ... carry it into school. Through the hallways and everything. That would be embarrassing."

"It would be what?"

SUPPLEMENT TO 1998

DAVE BARRY

It's a bird, a plane, Superman? No, it's Barry as Batman

One evening my wife mentioned, casually, that she had been talking to the son of one of her friends, a little boy named Alexander, about his upcoming fourth birthday.

Barry

"Alexander says he's having a Batman party," my wife said.

"Hm," I said.

"So I told him that maybe Batman would come to the party," my wife said.

"Hm," I said.

My wife said nothing th She just looked at me. Suddenly, I knew who was going to be Batman.

I was not totally opposed. In my youth I read many Batman comics, and it seemed to me that he had a pretty neat life, disguised as wealthy playboy Bruce Wayne, waiting for the police commissioner of Gotham City to shine the Bat Signal onto the clouds (it was always a cloudy night when the commissioner needed Batman). Then Bruce would change instantly — it took him only one comic-book panel — into his Batman costume and roar off in the Batmobile to do battle with the Forces of Evil or attend a birthday party.

Of course, Bruce owned his own Batman costume. I had to rent mine. It consisted of numerous black rubber pieces, similar to automobile floor mats, with strings so you could tie them to your body. One piece was shaped like rippling chest muscles, so you could transform yourself, like magic, from a flabby weakling into a flabby weakling wearing an automobile floor mat.

It took me a lot longer than one comic panel to get into this costume, but finally I was ready to speak the words that strike fear into the hearts of criminals everywhere: "Michelle, could you tie my G-string?" It turns out that a key part of the Batman costume is this triangular floor mat piece that protects the Bat Region. It's very difficult to attach this piece to yourself without help, which could explain why Batman hooked up with Robin.

At last I was ready. In full Bat regalia, I stepped out of the house, and — as crazy as this may sound — for the first time I truly understood, as only a crusader for justice can understand, why people do not wear heavy black rubber outfits in South Florida in August. Staggering through the armor-piercing sunshine and 384 percent humidity, I made it to the Batmobile, which was disguised as a wealthy playboy Toyota Celica.

When we got to Alexander's house, in accordance with our Bat Plan, I remained outside in the Batmobile while Michelle went to the back yard, where the party was going on. We had bought Alexander a Batman walkie-talkie set; Michelle gave Alexander one unit and told him to use it to call Batman. These Batman walkie-talkies contain actual transistors, so when Alexander called me, I was able to hear, on the other unit, clear as a bell, a random bunch of static. Interpreting this as the Bat Signal, I pulled the rubber Bat Cowl over my head, thus rendering myself legally blind, and drove the Toyota Batmobile into the back yard.

The effect on the party guests, as you would expect, was electrifying. The adults were so electrified that some of them almost wet themselves. The younger guests were stunned into silence, except for Matthew, age 1, who ran, crying, to his mom, and probably did wet himself.

With all eyes upon me, I stopped the Batmobile, flung the door open, and, in one fluid, manly motion, sprang out of the seat, then got retracted violently back into the seat, because I had forgotten to unfasten my seat belt. Eventually I was able to disentangle my cape and stride in a manly, rubberized way over to the birthday boy.

"Happy birthday, Alexander!" I said, using a deep Bat Voice. After that the conversation lagged, because, let's be honest, what are you going to talk to Batman about? The pennant races? So we just stood there for a while, with Alexander staring at me, and me trying to look manly and calm despite the fact that after 30 seconds in the sun I could have fried an egg on top of my cowl.

Finally the cake arrived, and everybody sang "Happy Birthday," and I announced that I had to go fight crime. Striding back to the Batmobile, I opened the car door, turned dramatically toward the youngsters and said, quote, "BWEEPBWEEPBWEEPBWEEP." Actually, it was the Batmobile that said this, because I had forgotten to deactivate the Bat Alarm. I climbed into the front seat, slammed the door with several inches of cape sticking out the bottom, and backed manfully and blindly into the street. Fortunately there was nothing in my way, because I would definitely have hit it, and the law would not have been on my side. ("Mr. Barry, please tell the jury exactly what you were wearing as you backed your car over the plaintiff.")

The next day, Alexander's mom reported that the first thing he did when he woke up was turn on his walkie-talkie and call Batman. He said he could hear Batman, but Batman couldn't hear him because he was busy fighting evil supercriminals named Poison Ivy and Mr. Freeze. This was almost true: Batman was actually battling Heat Rash. So he will be out of action for a while. The next superhero from this household to visit Alexander — and I have made this very clear to Michelle — will definitely be Cat Woman.

ning. While Anthony took a crash course in carpentry from a family friend, Timothy talked local supermarket managers into letting him place collection boxes inside the store.

Though more than 1,000 books were collected, some were discarded because they were ripped, in poor condition or outdated textbooks. On the other hand, some books appeared as if grocery shoppers who walked into the store and saw the collection box bought a book just to contribute to a worthy cause.

In the end, the teens were able to produce a project they were proud enough to present to the nursing home. The shelves, painted in glossy white, are adjustable and hold hundreds of books each. Brass plaques with their the teen's names engaved pay tribute to the hundreds of hours they spent making a difference in one community.

"We're hoping other groups will continue this project," said Timothy McNealy, the boys' father.

Immediately after the library was completed, residents rushed in and began combing through the shelves of knowledge, said Stella Clifton, nursing home manger.

"As soon as those bookshelves were stocked, they went through them," she said, adding that residents can now be seen walking to and from their rooms with a book in their hand.

Not only was their lesson in civics an experience that will last them a lifetime, but so were the other Boy Scout adventures, which have afforded them the opportunity to see many things no classroom can ever offer.

For instance, there's the trip to Camp Kanick, N.M, where the scouts had to compact mounds of snow into sheets three feet wide and shape them into wall panels for an igloo. The scouts had to build one strong enough for them to spend the night inside of it.

"It's fun to spend a night camping and learn about nature," Anthony said. "Nothing's electric out there. You have to put stakes in the ground to hold up your tent. You have to walk a mile to mess hall ... You take a step back from all the busyness and work and take a few moments to realize the beauty of nature."

The teens' father explained that their troop is one of the most aggressive ones in the state. They plan their outings so they never have to camp in the same place twice in 12 months — something that the boys have enjoyed more than a dozen times each.

"A lot of parents spend time helping them. It's a good experience for them to learn something other than what they learn just going to school," their mother Karen McNealy said.

PATTERSON: Never be 39 and get caught without a hall pass in junior high

(From 1B)

"Why would it be embarrassing?"

"Well, I would be carrying all those green pieces of plastic and, you know, everyone would look at me and stuff."

"Actually, I don't know. And stuff."

"Dad, please? I can't carry it in there."

I heaved a heavy sigh and told her I'd be there as soon as I could.

"If I don't make it today, I promise I'll have it installed in your locker by, oh, next June, maybe?"

"Dad, you promised!"

Actually, I promised nothing, except that I would buy it for her so she would quit asking for it every day.

I managed to sneak away for a few minutes one day last week to take care of it.

In hindsight, the most difficult part of the whole deal was the trip home before school. As every parent knows, when a kid calls from school, it means an automatic trip to the house to get whatever it is they've forgotten. It's a lot like a real life game of Monopoly. Do not pass go, do not collect $200, just collect the sack lunch or whatever your kid forgot and proceed directly to whichever school is farthest from wherever you are at that moment.

I got out of the car at her school with a fistful of unassembled, green plastic locker shelving. It didn't feel too bad. Certainly not embarrassing. Until that one kid kept looking at me.

"What are you looking at?" I shot back at him.

"What is that hideous thing you're carrying?" he asked.

"It's a locker shelf! That OK with you?"

"Whatever, man ... but it's ugly and you should be embarrassed," he said.

Kids, they don't make them like they made them when you and I were that age. We were all so polite.

I had parked the car outside the hallway and I knew my daughter's locker was right inside the door, just a few steps away. I started to tempt fate and just walk right to her locker without getting the required clearance necessary for an adult to enter a junior high. Then I thought better. I figured the sentence for being 39 and roaming the hallways without a hall pass was at least six months in algebra class.

So I got clearance from the front office and before I knew it I was struggling mightily trying to open my kid's locker. Combination lockers today are just as impossible to open today as they were 25 years ago. Several kids walked by and shot me a glance like I was some petty thief trying to bust open a locker. One kid volunteered to help me. I figured he was probably some petty con man trying to get my kid's combination. Mutual trust we did not have.

After several tries, the door popped open and I started assembling the shelf.

Several minutes later, it was done and the door closed with ease.

No problem.

Now we could move on to the next crisis.

Heading out the building, I thought about what I had just done: I walked into a school building, opened a locker, put something in it, closed the locker and walked back out.

Kids ... there are some things about them I'll never understand.

(From 1B)

whenever we could, usually anonymously in malls and the like.

From all of this, I learned the most important lesson so far:

Don't pay any attention to any of it.

By the book

A prenatal omen should have told me this. My wife and I were in one of those gigantic chain bookstores, browsing in the baby- and child-care section (rivaled only by the self-help section for sheer number of goofy titles) when we heard a commotion.

Making a high-volume exit from the children's reading room was a little girl, maybe 3 years old, steaming toward the cash register and shrieking in no uncertain terms that "THIS IS MY BOOK! MY BOOK! MY BOOK!"

I perked up when I saw, following her (but not so close as I would have liked, which is to say, not within muzzling distance), the girl's father. Aha. Finally, a good chance to see how a parent would handle a real-life temper tantrum. As he ambled along, he spoke in a quiet, polite tone of voice that made him sound as if he were asking his boss for a raise.

"Margaret, is this the type of behavior Daddy rewards?"

"THIS IS MY BOOK! MY BOOK! MY BOOK!"

Who taught this guy to negotiate, Neville Chamberlain?

Actually, I'll bet he learned his technique from a baby-rearing book. Although you can glean plenty of good information from any of them — I especially like the part where Dr. Spock assures you that if you forget to support your infant's floppy head for even a second, her head won't fall off and roll down the stairs — you can also drive yourself batty with contradictions.

What would Joe do?

Let the baby sleep in your bed, one book says. Never let the baby sleep in your bed, another warns. Always rush to a crying baby. Let the baby cry it out.

It's like listening to Joe Theismann's color analysis on ESPN's NFL coverage — occasionally it's interesting, but when you put it all together, it doesn't make any sense.

The same thing is true of the advice that friends, relatives and neighbors offer. They mean well, of course, but that doesn't make your head spin any less when the baby is screaming and you're remembering how one person told you this means she needs to be fed and another said it means she's been fed too much and a third said you better put her down before you spoil her — she's never going to get into a good college if you cater to her every whim.

What? How are you supposed to figure out what to do from all of this?

The answer is easy: You're not. In almost every case, there's not a totally right answer or a completely wrong one. It's taken me only a couple of months to figure out that when it comes to babies, common sense is your best guide, along with these eight words:

Love them a lot, and do your best.

Everything else is just details.

Can repeated Internet use lead to depression?

By Denise Caruso
N.Y. Times News Service

Robert Kraut, co-author of a new study linking depression with Internet use, sounded a bit depressed himself last week.

"I thought I was finished with this," Kraut, a professor of social psychology and human-computer interaction at Carnegie Mellon University, said with a sigh. He was alluding to the flood of attention — and criticism — that his study, titled "Home Net," had received since it was published two weeks ago.

Starting in 1995, "Home Net" researchers gave PCs and free Internet accounts to 169 people in 73 families in the Pittsburgh area. After monitoring their online behavior, in some cases for more than two years, the researchers concluded that spending time on the Internet was associated with statistically significant increases in depression and loneliness.

Critics assert that the study has fatal flaws that neutralize its findings and that they are appalled at the authors' far-reaching conclusions about the impact the findings might have on Internet policy and technology development.

Donna Hoffman, a Vanderbilt University professor and outspoken critic of Internet research design, was unequivocal about the "Home Net" study.

"Speaking as an editor, if this had crossed my desk, I would have rejected it," said Ms. Hoffman, who edits the journal Marketing Science. "The mistakes are so bad that they render the results fairly close to meaningless."

Among those mistakes, she said, were the absence of two standard safeguards: a control group and random selection of subjects.

"With 'Home Net,' we don't know for sure what led to their results," Ms. Hoffman said of the lack of a control group, "because we don't know what happened to people who weren't using the Internet."

In addition, the study recruited people from high schools and community service organizations, instead of selecting people randomly from a large area. Random selection is crucial to building a truly representative sample of a population — in this case, residents of the United States.

The study found that one hour a week online led to small but measurable increases in depression and loneliness and loss of friendships. While those measurements might well be statistically significant, critics assert that without a random sample, they are meaningless outside the group that was studied.

"The assertions have no statistical relevance to any population of Internet users beyond those in the study population — even in principle," declared Charles Brownstein, a former director at the National Science Foundation, now an executive director at the Corporation for National Research Initiatives in Reston, Va.

Although research studies do not always have to use control groups or randomly chosen participants to be valid, Ms. Hoffman said, those safeguards become imperative "when you're doing a study that claims causal relationships and that these relationships hold in the larger population."

The "Home Net" team clearly made such claims. For example, the news release stated that "Carnegie Mellon Study Reveals Negative Potential of Heavy Internet Use on Emotional Well Being," and even suggested that parents move PCs out of teen-agers' bedrooms and into shared family rooms.

Kraut was quoted extensively in the release, with such statements as, "We were surprised to find that what is a social technology has such anti-social consequences." Also: "Our results have clear implications for further research on personal Internet use. As we understand the reasons for the declines in social involvement, there will be implications for social policies and for the design of Internet technology."

Last week, Kraut wearily defended his study. "In 1995, we did start with a control group, but it was very hard to keep it, with little in the way of incentives for them to continue to fill out questionnaires," he said. "And we couldn't use a random sample because of the nature of the study's design — we wanted to be able to include groups who already had social connections with each other so we could observe some shifting, if it was going to occur, between existing social relationships."

And despite criticism of the researchers' methods, he said that the study was widely applicable.

"We have changes big enough that they aren't likely to have occurred on the basis of chance," Kraut said. "There is something here to explain."

But critics like Ms. Hoffman look askance at such results, given her experience debunking other Internet studies, including one from Neilsen Media Research in which she participated in 1996 and another in 1995 in which Marty Rimm, a graduate student in Carnegie Mellon's College of Engineering, published a study purporting to show that the Internet was overrun with pornography.

The impact of Rimm's study, though based on false premises and quickly discredited, was profound. The resulting furor in the media and in Congress helped bring about the Communications Decency Act, which the Supreme Court ruled was a violation of the First Amendment.

Critics fear that the "Home Net" study might end up having a similar effect.

"It's easy to imagine the results of this study being used to influence policy decisions about Internet access, especially in controversial funding decisions for schools and libraries," Ms. Hoffman said.

But in the end, Ms. Hoffman said, protecting the Internet itself is not the point.

"We're trying to protect the standard of research," she said. "This isn't obscure ivory-tower stuff that never sees the light of day. It has an impact on people's lives. If we're going to the trouble to study the Internet, at least we should make sure we're doing it right."

Web is awash with speculation about Clinton scandal

By Erin McCormick
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The release of the Whitewater independent counsel's report on President Clinton has the Internet buzzing with sordid discussions, lurid speculation and debate about the merits of punishing a public figure for a private sexual affair.

One Internet betting pool has offered up to $5,000 to the person who can correctly guess the date on which President Clinton might leave office.

An on-line chat group encouraged users to vote on which of 27 outcomes would seal the president's future, offering choices that included impeachment and Clinton suffering a heart attack, and thus gaining public sympathy.

And members of an on-line support group for people suffering from depression frantically exchanged messages about where they could find Kenneth Starr's report on Clinton's sexual adventures.

As the scathing report hit the World Wide Web Friday, thousands of Internet users responded by pouring their outrage, their anguish, their support and, more prevalently, their cynicism onto the information superhighway.

"Having just read it, Clinton should resign immediately," one user said in a message posted to a discussion group on current news.

"Looks to me like Starr's a Rush Limbaugh type, who thinks the prez is a naturally evil person who can be brought down with unsubstantial allegations," another Internet user wrote to a stock investors newsgroup.

And then there were the smart alecks, who seemed to outnumber those with serious comments 10-1.

One member of a discussion group suggested Clinton try to portray his sexual promiscuity as an illness that might fall under the Americans with Disabilities Act.

"They can NOT impeach Clinton. It's very simple," the pundit wrote in a newsgroup on politics. "Clinton clearly has a sexual addiction. That is a psychological disorder, and therefore a disability. ... And you can not fire someone for having a disability."

Not only did the Web serve as an ultrafast method of conveying information about the Clinton scandal, said Internet journalist David Weir, it also offered users a chance to vent.

"The Internet is a place where people feel they can talk," said Weir, managing editor of the on-line magazine Salon. "It's a way for people to process their emotional response to big stories. We saw that when Princess Diana died, as well."

The Internet also abounds with chances to bet on Clinton's future, although White House advisers have said Clinton would never resign because of the Monica Lewinsky affair.

The "Judgement Day Betting Pool" invites bets of $10 on which day will be the president's last day in office and get a chance to win up to $5,000.

Directions for the Internet pool, sponsored by a group called the New Irish Sweepstakes, explained that, if Clinton "gets off scot-free" and remains in office, his entire term, anyone who picked the date Jan. 20, 2001, would win $27.

"If Mr. Clinton stays till the normal end, all the names that predicted (this) will be put in a dark blue beret and one name will be chosen (to) get the plaque," the site's instructions say.

One political newsgroup asked readers to pick one of 27 scenarios for how Clinton's term will end. These ranged from impeachment, to Clinton suffering no repercussions whatsoever, to bizarre possibilities like diversionary attacks on foreign nations.

Choice No. 26 posed a scenario in which news anchor Katie Couric interviews Chelsea Clinton on the "Today Show," makes Chelsea cry on camera and then the "public sympathy saves Clinton."

Advertising and privacy in cyberspace

By Stuart Elliott
N.Y. Times News Service

'The more our customers trust us, the more we succeed in developing the relationships with them that makes our Web sites work.'
— John Kamp, senior vice president American Association of Advertising Agencies.

NEW YORK — Advertisers and agencies involved in aiming online sales pitches at children are being exhorted to toughen their policies for protecting privacy or suffer the consequences of growing demands from parents and government officials for restrictive regulation.

Those stern warnings were heard on Friday at a daylong conference at the World Trade Center in lower Manhattan that was described by its organizers as a "guide to safe harbors and sound practices online." The conference, the third of its kind, was sponsored by the Children's Advertising Review Unit, an organization that is a crucial part of Madison Avenue's longtime efforts to resolve disputes about advertising without outside intervention.

"We've done a pretty good job so far," Elizabeth Lascoutx, vice president and director for the children's unit, said in her opening remarks to the 85 people at the conference. "But we have a long way to go."

Concerns about privacy in cyberspace are intensifying as sites for children proliferate on the World Wide Web. There are increasing consumer perceptions that many marketers are reluctant to address problems like the overzealous collection of personally identifiable information from young computer users and the porous handling of such data.

"One site is asking kids for their Social Security numbers," Parry Aftab, a lawyer who specializes in interactive issues, said in her keynote speech. "How frustrating is that?"

Those involved in the children's Internet market ought to be "joining forces and writing a privacy page so kids know what to give out and not give out," said Ms. Aftab, the author of "A Parents' Guide to the Internet ... And How to Protect Your Children" (SC Press, 1997).

"We need to find a workable solution," she added, "or we'll lose the wonderful wealth of creativity and content that sites can offer."

The advocacy of self-regulation by the children's unit had been echoed enthusiastically by the Clinton administration, which sent Ira Magaziner, the president's Internet adviser, to the 1997 conference to applaud efforts to establish voluntary guidelines to police online peddling to youngsters.

But in June, a report from the Federal Trade Commission said legislation might be required because violations of children's privacy online were discouragingly frequent and safeguards were woefully absent.

"I'm not suggesting the advertising industry attracts none but the truly altruistic," said Walter O'Brien, president of the National Advertising Review Council, which administers the children's unit along with the Council of Better Business Bureaus and three industry organizations. "But it's enlightened self-interest to make a commitment to ethical advertising, particularly to children under 12."

And last month, the FTC accused Geocities, a company known for offering members access to so-called virtual neighborhoods, of ignoring the privacy policy posted on its site and engaging in misleading practices that included disseminating information gathered from children.

"You don't have to look very far to see a fundamental mistake there, a mistake we cannot make anymore," said John Kamp, senior vice president at the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

"In legal terms, it's called fraud," he added with a smile. "In general terms, it's called 'Do you know what you're doing?'"

"The more our customers trust us, the more we succeed in developing the relationships with them that make our Web sites work," Kamp said. "Privacy is the great opportunity to distinguish ourselves from our competition."

Kamp's organization is one of the three involved with the children's unit; the others are the American Advertising Federation and the Association of National Advertisers.

The FTC "has been very supportive of self-regulation in children's advertising," said Toby Milgrom Levin, a lawyer with the commission who worked on the Geocities case. "We recognize that the advertising industry did rise to the occasion and develop conventions to protect children from deceptive and overreaching ads."

But the belief that advertisers are dawdling about the Internet is likely to lead Congress to act, she said, and "there may well be hearings by the end of the month" on a bill that "authorizes the FTC to prescribe regulations to protect the privacy of children under 16."

To forestall legislation, "you can make privacy a front-burner concern," Ms. Levin advised, especially among top management. "The Webmasters are not in a position to make privacy happen," she added.

Clearly, more of those involved in putting up Web sites are becoming sensitized to privacy matters.

"Privacy is in the forefront of all our programming decisions," said Tina Sharkey, vice president and general manager of the CTW Online unit of the Children's Television Workshop in New York, which plans to introduce Monday a redesigned site called the CTW Family Workshop (www.ctw.org).

"We don't collect information from children under 13," she added, at areas on the site that are sponsored by marketers like Ford Motor Co. and Kellogg Co. "And parents are told everywhere they can sign up that they can opt out with a 'click here.'"

More than one speaker referred to the timing of the conference, coming as it did while computer users caused some Internet gridlock in searching for the report on President Clinton by the Whitewater independent counsel, Kenneth Starr.

"If any group in this country understands the danger of private information going public and having an impact on their lives," said Dan Jaffe, executive vice president at the Association of National Advertisers, "it's our politicians."

High-tech toys tap into fun

By Anu Manchikanti
Scripps Howard News Service

Children hearing voices in their heads aren't necessarily letting their imaginations run away with them these days. With the newest wave of technological advances comes new toys, including Sound Bites, toys that can create a variety of sounds within the user's head.

According to David Capper, the founder and co-inventor of Sound Bites, the sound is created by vibrations which travel through a sucker to the teeth to the jawbone and finally the inner ear. The vibrations are safe and less powerful than those of a toothbrush, he said. The interactive technology of the device is created by a microchip through a custom transmitter.

"There truly hasn't been a product that lets people hear in their heads," he said.

A user places the lollipop in the mechanical device and then inserts the pop in his or her mouth and laughs. Once touchdown occurs, the vibrations are translated to the noises in the head, sounds that are heard by no one else but the user. The available sounds vary from "voices in your head" and "wacky toons" to "rockin" saxophones, guitars and drums. Capper claims that all who experience the sounds are met with "amazement," "surprise" and "laughter."

Capper came up with the concept of Sound Bites while brainstorming with aerospace engineer Andrew Filo. The idea of sound came up, Capper said, and the rest was history.

Rokenbok has taken the classic concept of building and revamped it into an interactive toy. The Expandable Radio Control Building System, released in October 1997, utilizes a control pad much like those used in home video games. This control pad allows children to operate electronic components to the facilities which they create with the Rokenbok blocks.

The company offers sets which assemble to create a Deluxe Start Action Factory, Service Center, Bridges and Roadways and more. Each creation features motorized components which are activated with the control pad. For example, with the Basic Start Power Chutes, the pieces assemble to create a ramp for the wireless RC Loader vehicle to plow down.

Rokenbok utilizes an Addressable, Multi-Player, Digital Radio Control (AMD-RC), combining inexpensive radios with computer-controlled digital electronics. The technology is utilized in the Rokenbok common decks, control pads and RC vehicles.

Each child has the option of configuring the system to his or her preference, so they can do such things as load or dump "goods" from the trucks to the chutes, according to Irene Ortiz, vice president for marketing for Rokenbok.

"We're bringing technology from the digital world into toys," says Ortiz. The patented system is aimed at boys ages 6 and older and has been released in both North America and Europe.

The Rokenbok snap-lock pieces are compatible with Legos. A command deck is also available which can be connected to four different control pads and can control up to eight Rokenbok wireless RC vehicles at once. Though the system is currently "construction theme-oriented," said Ortiz, expansion into other themes is possible in the future. "The whole premise is to build an expandable radio building system," she said.

The Basic Start System is priced at $149.99, and the Deluxe Start/Action Factory at $199.99. Other systems with fewer accessories, like Bridges and Roadways at $49.99, are less expensive.

Another old favorite, Nintendo's Gameboy, will be new and improved in a color version, to be released Nov. 23. The $50 black and white Gameboy will remain the same, but the color version of the pocket Nintendo can be purchased for $30 more.

A new addition to the Gameboy, a photographic device, can now also be purchased for $49.95. Released in June, this small digital camera can be attached to any Gameboy in the game cartridge slot and take black and white photographs, 30 of which can be stored. For $59.95 more, a small black and white printer is available to print the photos on sticker paper at postage stamp size.

And according to Peter Main, executive vice president for sales and marketing for Nintendo of America, players can also insert their photographed faces into one of the four mini-games that are bundled with the camera. The camera can also alter the stored photographs by flipping, stretching and splitting the screen.

The Gameboy screen acts as the viewfinder for the camera, with the lens attached to the "cartridge." The camera includes panoramic and time-lapse modes and comes with a Disc Jockey option that allows a user to create music and control rhythms and special effects. It includes one Mb of SRAM, which can store photos, an animation sequence and a musical composition.

Golf, anyone?

By T. Mitchell Deane
Scripps Howard News Service

Golf enthusiasts and sports lovers alike should love "Microsoft Golf 98" (Windows 95 - $49.00), a great new title from one of the best software manufacturers in the business.

The game is one of the better golf simulations to be produced in quite a while. Graphically, "Microsoft Golf 98" is stunning. Digitally mapped golfers, skies, and trees add to the game's realistic feel. From sand spraying on bunker shots to divots being left after fairway iron play, the game focuses on the little things, and that adds a lot to the experience. If a simple round of golf alone doesn't seem all that appealing, Microsoft has several options for you to choose from. There is a "skins" game option, where hundreds of dollars can be won by winning a hole, being the first on the green, or landing closest to the pin. There are also several multiplayer options, such as a computer opponent or an online adversary who can be challenged via modem or network connections.

"Microsoft Golf 98" would be a welcome addition to the serious golf lover's game collection. After all, it's fun to play, it looks great, and you don't have to carry your own bag.

Are you digerati or newbie?

By Maryam Henein
Raleigh News and Observer

Geek exploitation runs rampant among Silicon Valley's high-producing corporations. Bitniks, with pockets full of change, peruse the Web while sipping cappuccino. The digeratis of the world have the advantage.

Welcome to the Digital Age, where new words sometimes seem as foreign as the scenes they describe. While Web users struggle to use informal language and technobabble, word processors underline the barrage of new terms.

"Computers and the Internet have had the most effect on words than any other innovation," says Allan Metcalf, executive secretary for the American Dialect Society.

New terms sprout from conversations, said Gareth Branwyn, author of Jargon Watch, a book on technological terminology.

"New words seem to rift off technical terms and are tinged with humor," Branwyn said. "Their success depends on how well they fill a niche."

For instance, the word "newbie" first surfaced in a newsgroup called – talk.bizarre – and today is widely used to describe new Web users.

Yet, to some, new fashioned words prove unsettling, Branwyn said.

"Many people refuse to use them unless they're found in dictionaries; still, slang exemplifies an experimental laboratory of words – the cutting edge of language," Branwyn said.

At any rate, the majority of words won't outlive the Internet hype. Metcalf said. His studies have found that it typically takes between 25 and 40 years to sort out which words will become permanent in American English.

WEB GLOSSARY

Egosurfing: Used to describe a user who is searching the Web to find information on themselves.

Emoticon: Expressions of emotions also known as smileys. Small graphical renderings made up of characters which substitute for facial expressions and body language, as in ;-) means wink.

Geek Exploitation: A term coined by Rolling Stone magazine, refers to the growing number of 20-something programmers who work round the clock.

Meme: A contagious idea; virus of the mind.

Netizen: A citizen of the Internet.

Dallas woman's plan for newspaper could give homeless a forum, jobs

By Kendall Anderson
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — For years, Clora Hogan walked by the homeless on her way to an accounting job in downtown Dallas. For years, she told herself something should be done.

Now she's doing it. The Dallas woman quit her full-time job this summer to start a newspaper that homeless people can sell and profit from.

Street newspapers that aim to give homeless people a job are used in 40 other U.S. cities, according to the North American Street Newspaper Association.

"I've wondered for years why there isn't one here in Dallas," said Ms. Hogan, who got the idea while vacationing in Seattle four years ago. "It seems like such a no-brainer."

A similar paper, the Street Peoples Weekly, was published in Dallas in the early 1990s. The 12-page paper, published by Lon Dorsey in north Oak Cliff, addressed the issues of the homeless in Dallas.

Ms. Hogan's fold-over, pamphlet-style newspaper will feature articles by the homeless and others. Content will focus on local social service agencies and profiles of the poor.

She said she hopes to begin publishing in December or January. Four social service agencies have agreed to provide nonmonetary support to the newspaper, which will be titled Endless Choices to reflect Ms. Hogan's belief that life constantly challenges people to make decisions.

Homeless people who choose to distribute the paper must first complete a short training program and sign a pledge to stay sober and courteous while selling.

Afterward, they will receive 10 free copies of each issue, with additional copies available to them for 30 cents apiece. The paper's retail price will be $1. Paper sales and advertising are not expected to cover production costs.

Ms. Hogan said she's eager to begin assembling her printing equipment and recruiting her sales force.

'I've wondered for years why there isn't one in Dallas. It seems like such a no-brainer.'
— Clora Hogan

"It will get rid of panhandlers," Ms. Hogan said. "And the person who would give to a panhandler will give twice as much to someone trying to help themself by selling the paper."

That up-by-your-bootstraps aspect of street newspapers has been their main selling point, says Timothy Harris, director of Seattle's Real Change, a street newspaper he started four years ago.

"I think the secret to success with street newspapers wherever they occur is that people like the idea of people being out there doing something to help themselves," said Harris, who also chairs the national street newspaper organization.

Local social service officials say they're excited about Ms. Hogan's plans.

The Stewpot, a downtown soup kitchen affiliated with First Presbyterian Church, will give Ms. Hogan space to run her nonprofit.

"It's wonderful to hear about Clora's project — everyone here has been really enthusiastic about it," said Lee Hutchins, development director at the Stewpot.

Stewpot staffers have tried unsuccessfully to start a similar paper, Ms. Hutchins said. They didn't have the time or tools to make it work, she said.

Ms. Hutchins sees the paper as an opportunity for both the homeless and working poor to earn money for basics including food and utility bills.

Chuck Phillips, a homeless man in downtown Dallas, said he might look into a job with the paper. The 30-something man, who's been on the streets for at least five years, was asking pedestrians for spare change Wednesday.

"It might work. People might give more and might understand more," said Phillips, carrying all he owns in a black plastic bag. "I'll have to see how they run it."

Ms. Hogan said vendors will wear a special badge while selling.

Harris said Real Change has evolved into a high-quality newspaper that attracts readers because of content. He said his circulation, about 30,000 monthly, has increased about 8 percent each year.

"It's popular because we're dealing with issues that other papers don't really cover so much," he said. "And we have writing by poor people. We think people want to understand homelessness and who these people are."

Will commuter-strong Dallas offer enough foot traffic for such a paper to succeed? Ms. Hogan said she's confident it will. Harris said some of his suburban Seattle vendors sell the publication from freeway on- and off-ramps, though it was unclear whether Dallas area authorities would allow such a tactic.

Because Ms. Hogan will be a member of the national association, she won't be allowed to profit from the paper. Profits for association newspapers must go toward helping the homeless.

Controversy overtook the New York street newspaper in the early 1990s when the publisher came under fire for unaccounted profits, association officials confirmed. He resigned over the allegations.

Ms. Hogan said she feels grateful to be living her dream. She has been a lifelong volunteer for homeless agencies but only recently was able to quit her full-time job.

"Remember when you see a homeless person that they are there because something happened," she said. "If they could do something else, they wouldn't be there."

One in four non-Mexican illegal immigrants caught in South Texas freed in South Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — Growing numbers of Central American illegal immigrants caught in South Texas are allowed to remain there because the U.S. Border Patrol lacks sufficient detention space, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday.

Of the 12,084 non-Mexican illegal immigrants caught in South Texas between Oct. 1 and Aug. 31, 3,122 of them were released there.

"We all get frustrated and say, 'Why are we going to mess with them? They're going to cut them loose anyway,' " one unidentified Border Patrol agent in Brownsville told the newspaper. "But by the same token, it's our job. We're here to enforce the law, not to be immigration judges. It's aggravating, but it's our job."

Agents can take Mexicans who enter Texas illegally back to Mexico easily across an international bridge. That's the standard procedure for undocumented immigrants who have no criminal record and agree to return voluntarily.

Noncriminal immigrants from other countries cannot be deported as easily.

If there is room to hold them in one of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's detention facilities in Port Isabel, El Paso, or in one of the private facilities in Laredo or Houston, they are locked up until investigators can determine whether they may be in the United States legally.

Often it is those immigrants, particularly those traveling as families, who go free and receive a summons telling them when to show up for a court hearing. They frequently disappear, never to be heard from again.

DEAR ABBY

Amateur in romance should take lessons from the pros

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 40-year-old man who is a former epileptic. I lived a very sheltered life until 1994, when I had surgery that successfully eradicated my seizures. Only after the surgery, when I tried to live a normal life, did I realize how protected I had been.

Van Buren

Finally last year, I married a wonderful woman. We have a good relationship, but I would like to make it even better. She is a romantic, and I'm very inexperienced in that department. I don't understand much when it comes to romancing my wife. I would greatly appreciate any advice you can give me on romance. — ROMANTICALLY ROCKY

DEAR ROCKY: Many women wish their husbands would ask this question. Being a willing student is the perfect first step. Look around you. Romance is everywhere, once you open your eyes to it. Learn from other couples who act as if they are in love. Watch their body language — it's almost as though the rest of the world doesn't exist. Paying focused attention to your partner is romantic. So is thoughtfulness. Listen to your wife's cues. Study up. Read books — there are many written on every aspect of romance. Watch classic romantic movies and pay attention to the small things the hero does. You'll get the picture. Then practice, practice, practice! Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: About three weeks ago, my girlfriend of five years and I had a terrible argument. We didn't speak for a week. During that time, I met another young lady whom I really started to like. She's seven months pregnant and is having a lot of problems with the baby's father, and I don't want to be in the middle of anything.

Now I'm really starting to miss my old girlfriend. Maybe I got involved with another relationship too soon. I don't know what to do. Can you please help me? — OVER MY HEAD IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR OVER MY HEAD: The solution to your problem is to be honest with both of these women. The girl who's seven months pregnant has problems of her own to resolve with the baby's father. And your girlfriend of five years needs to hear that you miss her. Don't procrastinate. The sooner you resolve this, the better for all concerned.

DEAR ABBY: I have a big problem. It's my ex-boyfriend. We play in the same basketball club, so we see each other every day. He looks at me all the time. He can't take his eyes off me.

What does he want? And what should I do? He's very, very shy. — CAROLINE IN BERELDANGE, LUXEMBOURG

DEAR CAROLINE: He keeps looking because he still finds you attractive. If you feel the same about him, be approachable without being too aggressive — which can intimidate a shy young man. When you see him, smile and say hello. If you need help perfecting a shot, ask him for some pointers. After that, as the old saying goes, "The ball's in his court."

CONFIDENTIAL TO "CAN'T FORGIVE IN MINOT, N.D.": Try harder. As Benjamin Disraeli put it, "Life is too short to be small."

Investigation into multiple killings expands to include 2 El Paso men

EL PASO (AP) — A long-standing investigation into the killings of dozens of women across the border in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, now includes two El Paso men, the El Paso Times reported Sunday in a copyright story.

The newspaper said the two men emerged as suspects largely because of psychological profiles.

"These men are suspects, and we are investigating them," interim El Paso Police Chief J.R. Grijalva said Saturday, declining to identify them because it might jeopardize the investigation.

Manuel Esparza, a state prosecutor in Chihuahua, Mexico, said the two suspects are ex-convicts and fit the profile of people who may be involved in multiple slayings.

The string of deaths that dates to 1993 follows a gruesome pattern. Many, but not all, of the victims were raped, strangled and dumped in remote areas of Juarez. Several were maquiladora workers in their teens or early 20s.

The exact number of victims isn't known. While Mexican officials put the number of the unsolved murders of girls and women in Juarez at 95, advocacy groups like Mujeres por Juarez (Women for Juarez) say the number is closer to 130 to 150.

Theories on who's behind the deaths have ranged from one or more serial killers to copycat killers to gangs.

Tom DeLay fashions new role as Clinton critic

WASHINGTON (AP) — A little more than a year ago, Tom DeLay faced the biggest political crisis of his career, in danger of being exiled from the House Republican leadership ranks for his role in an aborted coup against Speaker Newt Gingrich.

From that low, the outspoken Texan has rebounded to a position of prominence on Capitol Hill, establishing himself as the premier GOP critic of President Clinton.

The rebirth isn't surprising, some say.

"The principle by which he's benefiting is the same one that Clinton has used over and over: Hang on to power and office, and redemption can be just a day away," said Larry Sabato, a University of Virginia political scientist.

Far from being the most eloquent member of the GOP leadership team, DeLay nonetheless has become a fixture of late on CNN, C-SPAN and political talk shows, swarmed by reporters practically everywhere he goes.

As one who opined early on that Clinton "could very well be a sexual predator," the politician from suburban Houston isn't pulling any punches. The first high-ranking leader to call for Clinton's resignation, he has been a scathing critic of the president and the vaunted White House spin operation.

He even set up a research operation dedicated to getting information about impeachment — from the writings of the Founding Fathers to those of the Watergate impeachment team — into the hands of members of Congress.

DeLay, who earned the nickname "The Hammer" for his hard-nosed methods of keeping Republicans in line as majority whip, says his crusade owes nothing to politics.

Radial Keratotomy can improve vision for wide age range

For many people, wearing glasses or contact lenses is a problem. It can interfere with water sports or other activities; it can keep you from being an airline pilot, policeman or other professions. Glasses and contacts must be maintained and replaced from time to time. Some people develop an allergy to contact lens solutions.

The most common vision problem today is myopia, or nearsightedness. Myopia is caused when the cornea, or lens of the eye, is too curved, causing images to focus in front of the retina. The retina, on the back of the eyeball, is what receives the images seen by the eye and sends them on to the brain.

Alan D. Smith, M.D

A simple surgical procedure called Radial Keratotomy can greatly improve vision for many people with myopia. In 85 percent of cases, the improvement is sufficient to eliminate the need for any kind of corrective lenses. RK is also helpful in many patients with astigmatism, which is caused when the cornea is not round, keeping the eye from focusing properly at any point.

RK was first done in the early 1970s by a Russian Surgeon, Professor S. N. Fyodorov. The procedure came to the United States in 1979.

The procedure attempts to correct the imperfect vision of myopia by altering the shape of the cornea. The treatment involves making a series of tiny, carefully planned incisions in a circular pattern around the center of the cornea. These incisions cause the cornea to flatten, which allows it to focus images closer to the retina. How much correction is achieved depends on the number, depth and placement of the incisions.

Radial Keratotomy is performed as an out-patient procedure, usually done in the office. In some cases, it can be done in a day-surgery facility. The surgery itself takes only a very few minutes, and patients may go home soon afterward, provided someone else drives them. Depending on the patient's age, vision should begin to improve within a few days.

Surgery is usually done to one eye at a time, starting with the non-dominant eye, or the one you don't use, for example, to look through a telescope. After doing the first eye, the surgeon evaluates the results to see if the incisions should be done any differently on the second eye. In 18 percent of cases, the first eye must be redone to obtain optimum correction.

As with most surgical procedures, RK has seen a number of improvements which have decreased its cost in the last few years. By doing away with the need for contact lens replacements, solutions and cleaners, RK can actually pay for itself over time.

People in a wide range of ages are eligible for RK, providing other factors allow it. RK availability begins once the eye has stabilized, usually in the early 20s. Patients up to 65 years old may benefit from it as well. Since the eye tends to change over the years, it is not unheard of for someone to undergo this procedure a second time for further correction.

Before doing the surgery, the patient will be thoroughly evaluated to see if RK is indicated. Age, the shape of the cornea and the patient's sex are considered. RK is most effective for people with slight to moderate myopia. For more extensive cases, you may benefit from other microsurgical procedures that are as simple as RK.

Even after this surgery, yearly eye exams are important, especially after the age of 40. At that age, the eye begins to become more susceptible to diseases such as glaucoma, which can only be detected in an eye exam.

While Radial Keratotomy is one of the safest surgical procedures there is, it is important to choose a surgeon who has extensive experience with it. The success of the procedure depends greatly on the technique used.

Ripken ends streak

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken's incredible major league record streak of starting in 2,632 consecutive games since May 30, 1982, is over.

The Baltimore Orioles third baseman pulled himself from the starting lineup Sunday night against the New York Yankees, telling manager Ray Miller, "I think the time is right."

Tyson return?

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson, basically broke despite earning more than $100 million in his last six fights, could be back in the ring and earning millions by the end of November.

With his bid for a boxing license reinstatement now only a mere formality away from being accepted, Tyson stands ready to cash in with a series of megafights that figure to culminate in a third fight with Evander Holyfield.

If a psychiatrist gives the OK, Tyson could be fighting as early as late November at the same Las Vegas casino where he bit Holyfield's ears and was banished from the sport he once dominated.

"If I ever get reinstated again, I'll probably make $300 million," Tyson said Saturday.

If he does, he has a team of new advisers who say it will be their job to make sure he keeps most of the money.

Though Tyson made more than $100 million in official purses in six fights ending in the aborted title fight with Holyfield, he is now basically broke and owes the IRS $13 million in back taxes.

Tyson's free-spending ways did much to contribute to his financial problems. But a contract that gave promoter Don King and Tyson's two co-managers half of everything he made didn't help matters.

Tyson's attorney, Dale Kinsella, introduced figures at Saturday's Nevada Athletic Commission meeting showing Tyson ended up with only $5.2 million out of the $30 million purse he received to fight Holyfield in their second bout.

Kinsella promised that when Tyson resumes fighting, the commission will be given copies of all the contracts he has signed.

"Mike Tyson will be fighting for Mike Tyson again, not all the people around him," Kinsella said.

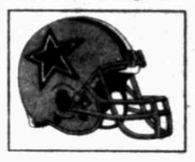
Garrett's abilities concern N.Y. Giants

By Tom Canavan
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Facing Jason Garrett instead of Troy Aikman doesn't give the New York Giants as big an advantage as you might think against the Dallas Cowboys on Monday night.



Backups, and even rookie quarterbacks, have done remarkably well playing against New York since Jim Fassel took over as coach, which scares some Giants defenders.

"I got one word for you," Giants safety Percy Ellsworth said, then paused. "Jacksonville."

Just to jog the memory, third-string quarterback Steve Matthews made his first NFL start against the Giants last year because of injuries to Mark Brunell and Rob Johnson. He completed 23 of 35 passes for 252 yards in a 40-13 Jaguars win.

Arizona's Jake Plummer, making only his fourth start, set an NFL rookie passing record throwing of 388 yards in a 19-10 Giants win on Nov. 16.

Even in this year's season-opening 31-24 win against Washington, third-stringer Trent Green came off the bench and hit 15 of his first 16 passes for two touchdowns to scare New York.

Now comes Garrett, making only his third start in six years. He completed 14 of 19 passes for 113 yards after Aikman broke his left collarbone in the second quarter of the Cowboys' 42-23 loss to Denver on Sunday. The former Princeton star led Dallas to a 42-31 win over Green Bay in his last start in 1994.

"I'm not looking at this guy to come in and be like a normal, average backup guy," Fassel said. "This guy can play football. He's been around. He's very bright and will function in their offense."

That message has been relayed to the Giants defense. Players have gone out of their way to say that while Garrett isn't in the class of Aikman, he's good.

"You guys are talking about Garrett like he has never held a football before," Giants middle linebacker Corey Widmer said. "You know, he is not an invalid in the pocket. He has come out and made good plays and good passes.

"So I am not going to even attempt to label him as being a handicap to the team," Widmer added. "We are going to come out and play to our level. We're not going to change our level no matter who they put back there."

Cowboys coach Chan Gailey said the Cowboys won't have to cut back on their offensive package with Aikman out.

Garrett, inactive for 47 of 53 games over the past three seasons, said he hasn't felt any extra pressure this week.

NFL ROUNDUP

Dolphins, Thomas shut down Steelers

Associated Press

MIAMI — Kordell Stewart passed for just 82 yards with three interceptions, including Zach Thomas' 17-yard touchdown return, and Miami's defense outscored Pittsburgh in a 21-0 victory Sunday.

Miami managed just 219 yards, including 113 by Dan Marino, but a group of young, swarming defenders carried the Dolphins to victory for the second week in a row. Stewart completed just 11 of 35 passes and was intercepted twice by Sam Madison.

Heavy rain beginning in the third period turned the baseball infield into a muddy quagmire, which compounded the Steelers' offensive woes. Miami improved to 3-0, and Pittsburgh fell to 2-1.

Vikings 29, Lions 6

MINNEAPOLIS — The Minnesota Vikings held Barry Sanders to 12 yards on 13 carries after halftime and forced three turnovers, including two by rookie quarterback Charlie Batch.

Still, Cunningham threw a 5-yard touchdown pass to Randy Moss in the third quarter and Leroy Hoard scored on an 11-yard run early in the fourth quarter after Batch fumbled deep in his own end. That allowed the Vikings (3-0) to beat Detroit (0-3) for the first time since 1996.

Packers 13, Bengals 6

O'Donnell, who came into the game with a league-best 72 percent completion rate, completed only 16 of 30 passes for 151 yards and was sacked three times. Dillon, last year's AFC offensive rookie of the year, gained only 28 yards on 16 carries for Cincinnati (1-2).

The Packers improved to 3-0 for the second time in three years even though their offense struggled without a consistent running game. Brett Favre threw a touchdown pass, extending his streak to 17 consecutive games with at least one, and Ryan Longwell remained perfect in six field goal attempts this season, hitting from 30 and 35 yards.

Jets 44, Colts 6

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Vinny Testaverde threw four TD passes, Leon Johnson scored three times and Curtis Martin rushed for 144 yards to give the New York Jets their first victory of the season.

Johnson scored on an 82-yard pass play, a 16-yard run and a 1-yard dive as the Jets (1-2) rushed for 302 yards, second most in team history. Testaverde took advantage of his chance to start for injured Glenn Foley with the second four-TD game of his career.

Indianapolis quarterback Peyton Manning, the league's top overall draft pick, completed 20 of 44 passes for 193 yards and was intercepted twice as the Colts fell to 0-3.

St. Louis Cardinals' Mark McGwire celebrates at home with teammate Ron Gant after hitting his 65th home run of the season against the Milwaukee Brewers on Sunday.

McGwire smacks No. 65

■ Cardinals' home run king probably could've, should've had 66th homer.

By Arnie Stapleton
AP Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE — Mark McGwire's home run total might need an asterisk, after all.

McGwire hit No. 65 to extend his record, then had an apparent No. 66 taken away by an umpire's ruling in the St. Louis Cardinals' 11-6 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

McGwire moved two homers ahead of Sammy Sosa with a first-inning shot off Scott Karl.

But Davidson, a member of the NL staff since 1983, ruled that a fan had interfered by reaching over the yellow railing at the 392-foot sign and pulling the ball in.

McGwire was forced to stop at second with a double — he rounded the bag, looking for a signal — as the crowd of 52,831 jeered and Cardinals manager Tony La Russa protested briefly.

"It was over by a good foot," said Dave Ernst, 30, of Dousman, Wis. "The guy made it look bad. It rolled up his arm and he missed it."

The fan who interfered was kicked out of the stadium and cited for disorderly conduct, Brewers spokesman Jon Greenberg said. The County Sheriff's Department didn't release the man's name.

The yellow pipe was installed about 18 inches above the outfield wall padding after the 1982 World Series, when a fan reached down and snatched a ball from Ben Oglivie's grasp.

It has been the source of several disputes since, mostly because there's a chain-link fence between the

Area teams don't succumb to upsets in week 3

While the worlds of college football and District 4-5A have been turned topsy turvy with upsets galore, some of our area teams have not fallen into that same category. In fact, some appear to be almost unstoppable.

LeRoy

Let's start with the No. 1 ranked Stanton Buffaloes and their 24-6 win over Colorado City. The Buffs were in firm control of their game against the pass-happy Wolves but Colorado City kept hanging around, scoreboard-wise, until the fourth quarter with various miscues and penalties by Stanton. It wasn't until Kyle Herm dazzled the Buffs' fans with a 50-yard punt return that really put the Wolves away on the scoreboard with 4:05 left on the game clock.

Although this was a sloppy game played by the Buffs and they still managed to win 24-6 against a Class 3A playoff team, imagine what the scoreboard will show if the Buffs improve and play that perfect game. Improving is the goal of coach Mark Cotton and his players. They know there's still work to do in all facets of their game. Don't think that just because 1997 ended in a dream season that the Buffs are satisfied. No way!

Is another state championship in the cards for the Buffs? As long as they continue to improve, you bet!

Some advice to Colorado City... Develop a running game!

News flash! Andrews' Shaud Williams is pretty good (as if most of you haven't noticed). The diminutive dynamo rushed for 201 yards on 14 carries and three touchdowns in the Mustangs' 40-6 win over Monahans.

Williams' totals for the year are 682 yards on 71 carries (9.6 yards per carry average) and 10 touchdowns. The highly-touted running back adds firepower to an already highly explosive No. 4 ranked team.

Williams is definitely the college recruiters' West Texas darling this year as just about every Division I university appears interested and wanting to court his attention. Some schools which are reportedly in the running to get Williams' signature are Notre Dame, Miami, Nebraska, Texas Tech, Texas, Oklahoma and Michigan.

There are probably about a dozen more schools which might pop into the picture but the inside line is that Williams wants to go to a consistent winner. I guess that means UTEP and New Mexico State, and maybe the Sooners (if coach John Blake doesn't turn things around this year) are out of the picture.

Are there any naysayers left that believe Lamesa is not a much-improved team from a year ago? Most of that improvement is that the Golden Tornadoes are on a level playing field in Class 3A. Lamesa has now surpassed its win total of the past two years with a 28-8 victory over Kermit on Friday. The Golden Tors not only are 2-1 for the season but have that dose of confidence that's been sorely needed over the past few years. Lamesa is this year's Cinderella team.

Kudos to those teams that got back on the winning track in Midland Christian and Garden City, which beat a perennial New Mexico Class A power in the Jal Panthers.

Extra kudos to both Greenwood and Midland Trinity as both teams picked up their first wins of the season with late scores. And both teams needed a win desperately to get some confidence in their non-district schedules.

The Chargers, especially, have a flair for the dramatics with a touchdown pass from Matt Midkiff to Dustin Truitt with 10 seconds left in the 18-12 win over Loraine.

It's good to be in an area where winners are constantly produced on the gridiron. Now as long as they don't have to make too many trips to El Paso County, they should be all right.

It's Sammy Day in Chicago

Cubs slugger honored for '98 accomplishments

By Nancy Armour
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa hugged his mother, kissed his wife and then took off on a victory lap around Wrigley Field, waving his cap as the theme from "Superman" blared over the loudspeakers.

What a way to end the best party Wrigley Field has seen in decades.

"It's been something special," Sosa said Sunday. "Thank you very much and God bless all of you."

A week after Sosa hit home runs No. 61 and 62 to tie and pass Roger Maris' single-season mark, the Chicago Cubs and major league baseball threw a bash to celebrate his amazing season. He has 63 home runs, two behind St. Louis' Mark McGwire.

Sosa's mother, Lucrecya, and his siblings were flown in from the Dominican Republic, and Maris' six children were on hand, too. Commissioner Bud Selig came, and so did Juan Marichal, the Hall of Fame pitcher who is Secretary of Sports in the Dominican Republic.

Even Michael Jordan showed up.

"It's been one of the greatest individual seasons in the history of major league baseball," Cubs general manager Ed Lynch said. "I don't think there's any way we could properly show our appreciation, but we're going to try."

Many said they should have tried earlier. Unlike the spontaneous party after McGwire's 62nd homer, Sosa didn't even get a small get-together last weekend.

"I never want him to think that he has been treated in any way but with the greatest respect," Selig said. "Here's a young man who battled from nothing, stayed with it. It's a wonderful story."

And a wonderful party. A huge sign in left field read, "Sammy: YOU'RE the Man." The team pennants that usually fly above Wrigley were gone, replaced by Dominican flags and pennants with "Sosa" on one side and "21" on the other. Latin music blared over the loudspeakers.

When Sosa came out of the dugout to take batting practice, fans roared and waved little Dominican flags that were being handed out outside.

"We're Dominican today," said teammate Manny Alexander, who grew up in the same town as Sosa. "It's just like playing winter ball."

There were gifts galore. McGwire sent a letter of congratulations. Selig gave him the Commissioner's Historic Achievement Award, and the Cubs gave him a painting. Cubs manager Jim Riggleman gave him a crystal statue.

Just when it seemed like everyone was done, the metal doors in right field opened, and in rolled a brand-new, maroon Plymouth Prowler convertible. As Lynch held up a license plate that read, "Sammy 98," a huge grin crossed Sosa's face.

Not bad for a boy who grew up selling oranges and shining shoes to help support his family.

"Baseball been very, very good to me," he said as the 40,000 fans at Wrigley roared.

His mother, whom Sosa honors with his now-famous heart taps every time he homers, beamed throughout the entire ceremony. His son, Sammy Jr., wanted to get a better look at what all the fuss was about, wandering up to the microphone. The little boy clapped and wiggled around until Sosa rested an arm on his son's head.

After all the gifts and honors had been handed out, Sosa thanked everyone and walked over to hug his mother and kiss his wife. Then, with a sheepish grin, he walked back to the microphone.

"Excuse me, I forgot my family," he said as his family laughed. "My wife, my mother, my brothers and friends, they've been supportive 100 percent to me."

Then he was off on his victory lap — even running through the Cincinnati bullpen while Pete Harnisch was warming up. The fans in right field bowed as he passed, and there were chants of "M-V-P, M-V-P."

As he reached the Cubs dugout, his applauding teammates swallowed him up in a huge hug.

"I told him, 'If you never get another base hit, you've been the MVP,'" said Riggleman, who had a private chat with Sosa a few hours before the game. "'You got us to this point. Enjoy this last week and again we're indebted to you and enjoy this special day.'"

Ripken ends start streak at 2,632

By David Ginsburg
AP Sports Writer

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken walked into his manager's office before the game with a simple, stunning message: "I think the time is right."

And so by taking himself out of the lineup Ripken ended the most amazing iron-man record in sports history.

After 16 years and 2,632 consecutive games, the 38-year-old third baseman sat out of Sunday night's game against the New York Yankees with just one week left in the season.

"I don't feel a sense of relief. I don't feel much different," Ripken said after the game. "Now that I know what it feels like I don't want to sit and watch a game anymore."

He said he would return to the starting lineup Monday night at Toronto.

Ripken was not hurt, but with the Orioles out of playoff contention and playing their final home game, he decided to end the string that began on May 30, 1982.

"What Cal did is so unbelievable. That's one record I do think that will be around for a generation," baseball commissioner Bud Selig said. "What he's done, he's done a great thing for baseball."

The end came during a magical season that has featured the historic home run chase between Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa, a perfect game by David Wells and the Yankees' pursuit of the AL record for victories.

There had been recent talk that Ripken would volunteer to end the streak, which broke Lou Gehrig's record of 2,130. Before the game, Ripken told manager Ray Miller to remove his name from the lineup; rookie Ryan Minor started in his place.

"The emphasis should be on the team," Ripken said. "There have been times during the streak when the emphasis was on the streak. I was never comfortable with that."

One out into the game, when it became evident that Ripken would not be playing, all of the Yankees walked to the top step of the dugout and applauded.

Ripken emerged from the Orioles dugout, tipped his hat toward the Yankees and stepped back down to the bench. With the sellout crowd standing and cheering, Ripken came out again and bowed to his fans.

There was an immediate rush to the souvenir stands at Camden Yards, with fans lining up to buy programs to the mark the historic night.

As the game progressed, Ripken appeared relaxed as he laughed with teammates on the bench. He then watched much of the game from the Orioles bullpen, occasionally shaking hands with fans and posing for pictures.

Ripken

Ripken also shook hands with fans in the bleachers along the outfield wall, much in the same fashion he did when he broke Gehrig's record. This time, however, he wore a warmup jacket over his uniform.

Ripken pulled himself a week before finishing his 16th straight season of playing every game. He finally did it only after the Orioles had no real chance of making the playoffs — they were mathematically eliminated with a 5-4 loss Sunday — and thus avoided yet another winter filled with questions about the streak.

Ripken, who went 0-for-4 against the Yankees on Saturday and was mired in an 0-for-12 skid, was batting .273 with 14 home runs and 61 RBIs.

His numbers are among the lowest of his career, which began in 1981. His streak began the next season, when he became the AL Rookie of the Year.

It started when Ronald Reagan was still in his first term as president. It was overseen by eight managers — including his father, Cal Sr. — and lasted longer than most baseball careers. It was analyzed, criticized and scrutinized.

And now, it's over.

After he told Miller of his decision, Ripken called Orioles owner Peter Angelos and calmly told him.

"He just said it very typically Cal. No melodrama, no emotion," Angelos said. "Just flatly, 'This is what I'm going to do.' In a very thoughtful way, he said, "I know you would like to know before I do this and I thought I should tell you."

While it appears no one will ever again play in 2,632 consecutive games, the man who broke Gehrig's seemingly unbreakable record by more than 500 isn't so sure the record will be his for eternity.

On Sept. 6, 1995, Ripken passed the record set by Gehrig, who was forced from the game by a rare muscular disorder that later became known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

A shortstop then, Ripken became the sport's all-time iron man on June 14, 1996, when he played in his 2,216th consecutive game — surpassing the record previously held by Japan's Sachio Kinugasa.

After he broke Kinugasa's record in Kansas City, Ripken was asked if he thought the mark would remain his forever.

"A lot of people think this is a great, great accomplishment," Ripken said. "But I really believe that somebody else will come along and play more games, because if I can do it, somebody else definitely will. I don't consider myself superhuman and I'm not an iron man physically or mentally.

"It's just that the right combination of things happened in my baseball career that allowed me to do that."

Ripken had played in every Orioles game since that day in 1982 when Earl Weaver started him at third base after giving him a break in the second game of a doubleheader one day earlier.

Ripken moved to shortstop on June 30 of that season and stayed at the position for 2,216 games before Manny Alexander replaced him while Ripken moved to third on July 15, 1996.

Baseball's humble hero, Ripken was credited by many with single-handedly saving baseball in the aftermath of the bitter 1994 players' strike that canceled the World Series and alienated fans from New York to Seattle.

The streak was something poetic at a time many thought baseball had lost its romance.

Ripken did not establish his streak by playing timidly. He dived and leapt and slid with the best of them, and there were plenty of close calls that almost brought the streak to an end.

The scariest moment came in the middle of the 1997 season, when back spasms nearly forced Ripken to sit out a game in Anaheim. But he played in pain, hit the game-winning home run and kept the streak intact through the end of the season.

Ripken also came close to benching himself in 1993 after he twisted his knee during a fight with the Seattle Mariners.

A's beat Rangers; keeps AL West race close

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Kenny Rogers earned his 15th win, Jason Giambi and Ben Grieve homered, and Oakland scored three unearned runs Sunday as the Athletics beat Texas 6-3 to keep the AL West race close.

The Rangers went into the game with a one-game lead over Anaheim, which faced Seattle in a night game. The Angels and Rangers start a three-game series in Anaheim on Monday.

Rogers (15-8) lasted five innings in the 91-degree heat, scattering eight hits, striking out five and walking one. T.J. Mathews pitched 2 2-3 innings of scoreless relief, and Billy Taylor got four outs for his 32nd save.

Esteban Loaiza (3-5) was the loser.

Ivan Rodriguez homered for Texas.

White Sox 6, Red Sox 4

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas and Albert Belle hit RBI doubles in the seventh as Chicago completed a three-game sweep of Boston, cutting the Red Sox's wild-card lead over Toronto to four games.

Mike Sirotka (13-15) snapped his five-game losing streak, allowing seven hits and four runs in seven innings. Bryan Ward got the last four outs for his first major league save. Jim Corsi (3-2) was the loser.

Blue Jays 7, Devil Rays 5, 12 innings

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Benito Santiago hit a two-out, two-run single off Albie Lopez (7-4) in the 12th inning as Toronto beat Tampa Bay to snap a three-game losing streak.

Bill Risley (2-4) got the final four outs for the victory

Indians 5, Royals 3

CLEVELAND — Bartolo Colon won for the first time since Aug. 17 and Einar Diaz homered and drove in three runs in Cleveland's victory over Kansas City.

Colon (14-8) allowed one run and seven hits in seven innings, striking out nine. Mike Jackson pitched a scoreless ninth for his 40th save.

Twins 3, Tigers 0

DETROIT (AP) — Benj Sampson pitched six shutout innings in his first major league start as Minnesota beat Detroit to snap a 10-game losing streak.

Sampson (1-0) allowed three hits and four walks and had nine strikeouts. Rick Aguilera pitched the ninth for his 37th save.

Seth Greisinger (6-9) was the loser.

Angels 3, Mariners 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Anaheim set the stage for an AL West title showdown against Texas, beating Seattle to move back into a tie. The Angels and Rangers open a three-game series Monday night at Anaheim.

Omar Olivares (9-8) held the Mariners to one run on eight hits in six-plus innings to win his fourth straight decision.

Anaheim scored three runs off Paul Abbott (2-1) in the third. Randy Velarde had a sacrifice fly, and Jim Edmonds and Tim Salmon hit RBI singles.

Yankees 5, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE (AP) — Orlando Hernandez (11-4) allowed one run and five hits in six innings for the victory. Mariano Rivera pitched the ninth for his 36th save.

Derek Jeter hit a two-run triple in the eighth to give New York a 4-1 lead, and Shane Spencer had an RBI double in the eighth.

Astros win 99th game of season with 2-0 win

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Richard Hidalgo had his second two-homer game against Pittsburgh in three weeks and Shane Reynolds pitched seven shutout innings to lead the Houston Astros over the Pirates, 2-0.

The win was the 99th of the season for the NL Central champion Astros. Houston needs one win in its final five games for its first 100-win season since beginning play in 1962.

Reynolds (19-8) gave up 10 hits but stranded eight runners to move within one victory of his first 20-win season.

Hidalgo hit a one-out solo shot in the first off Jason Schmidt (11-13), then followed with an even longer solo homer into the center-field seats off Schmidt in the third.

Reds 7, Cubs 3

CHICAGO (AP) — Sammy Sosa's home run stroke disappeared for the fourth straight game, and the Chicago Cubs' spot atop the wild-card race vanished as well .

Sosa went 0-for-5 and is now in an 0-for-17 skid that has included six strikeouts.

He hasn't homered since hitting a grand slam last Wednesday against San Diego and is stuck on 63.

Mets 5, Marlins 0

NEW YORK — John Olerud homered and doubled, giving him a team record-tying nine straight hits, and Al Leiter pitched the New York Mets past Florida 5-0 for a one-game lead in the NL wild-card race.

Leiter (17-5) won his fifth straight decision and set a career high for victories. He allowed five hits and struck out nine in eight innings.

Dodgers 1, Giants 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Carlos Perez threw a four-hitter to win a pitching duel against Shawn Estes as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat San Francisco, dropping the Giants another game back in the NL wild-card race.

Perez (11-13), who threw his fourth straight complete game, struck out eight and walked three. Shawn Estes (7-12) took the loss.

Braves 10, Diamondbacks 0

PHOENIX — Bruce Chen pitched seven shutout innings in his third major league start and the Atlanta Braves blanked the Arizona Diamondbacks for the third time in four games.

Andres Galarraga continued his history of pounding Amaury Telemaco (6-10), going 2-for-2 with a triple, double and a sacrifice fly against the Arizona starter. Galarraga is 6-for-13 (.461) with three homers lifetime against Telemaco.

Rockies 1, Padres 0

SAN DIEGO — Darryl Hamilton's RBI single in the 11th inning made a winner of Darryl Kile and gave the Colorado Rockies a victory over the San Diego Padres.

Kile (13-16) allowed just three hits in 10 scoreless innings in outlasting Kevin Brown just enough to get the win. Brown allowed four hits in nine shutout innings.

Phillies 6, Expos 3

PHILADELPHIA — Paul Byrd pitched 6 1-3 strong innings and Wendell Magee Jr. hit a key two-run single as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Montreal Expos.

Byrd (5-2) tied a season high with seven strikeouts in his third straight win.

MAC: McGwire just misses HR No. 66

padding and the yellow rail, making it difficult for umpires to tell for certain whether a ball clears the rail, hits right in front of it and bounces over or even if a fan reaches over.

Before Roger Maris set his record of 61 homers in 1961, commissioner Ford Frick declared any record would carry a "distinctive mark" if it did not beat Babe Ruth's mark of 60 in 154 games. McGwire surpassed Maris on Sept. 8 in is 145th game.

But now Mighty Mac has a footnote of his own. And for now and forever, fans will wonder whether his total should have been one higher.

As is usually the case, there was no doubt about McGwire's 65th homer.

McGwire, who struck out four times Saturday night, gave St. Louis a 2-0 lead with a 423-foot shot in the first following a single by Fernando Tatis.

On a 2-1 pitch, McGwire sent a drive into the left-field bleachers, setting off a scramble for the ball. Charles Dombrowski, 21, of Wisconsin Rapids, came up with it.

He said he'd give it back to McGwire: "It's the right thing to do."

"We wanted to watch the Packers on TV," he explained.

McGwire went 3-for-4 with a walk. Needing a triple to hit for the cycle — his last triple came in 1988 — he struck out in the seventh inning and walked in the ninth.

Karl (9-11) also gave up homers to Pat Kelly, Ron Gant and pitcher Manny Aybar (6-6) before leaving the game after three innings trailing 6-0.

McGwire's last two homers have come at County Stadium, the ballpark where Hank Aaron hit his final home run for the career record of 755.

McGwire, who broke a tie for the home run lead Friday with a 417-foot two-run homer off Milwaukee rookie Rafael Roque, skipped batting practice Sunday before connecting for his 451st career homer, tying him with Carl Yastrzemski for 20th on the career list.

Although most of his teammates took regular batting practice, McGwire hit in the batting cage beneath County Stadium. La Russa said he had no doubt his slugger would bounce right back after his first four-whiff game of the year.

"If you're talking about the mental aspect of the game, you never have to worry about Mark," La Russa said. "He's been very strong mentally. He's been the same every day, all year."

McGwire's homer was his fourth against Milwaukee pitching, which has surrendered 10 homers to Sosa.

The Cardinals, who swept the three-game series with the Brewers, have six games to go, all at home, where McGwire has homered a record 33 times. Notes: McGwire has 176 homers the past three seasons. ... St. Louis starter Kent Mercker was scratched after taking the mound in the bottom of the first when a blister opened on the middle finger of his left hand. ... Sosa and the Cubs visit Milwaukee on Tuesday and Wednesday. ... McGwire has 89 homers, 180 RBIs and 200 walks in 200 career games with the Cardinals. ... The three-game attendance of 155,157 broke the Brewers' record of 153,974 against Boston in 1978.

NFL: Elway aggravates hamstring injury

(From 1C)

Leaf, hospitalized earlier in the week with flu symptoms, committed five turnovers in his first seven possessions and completed only one of 15 passes for four yards as San Diego was routed by Kansas City.

Leaf, the first rookie quarterback since John Elway in 1983 to start his career 2-0, had three fumbles and two interceptions on a rainy and chilly day. All but three of Kansas City's points followed turnovers, but the Chiefs (2-1) had problems of their own on the slippery field and committed a team-record 15 penalties.

On their first three possessions, the Chiefs got field goals of 35, 31 and 33 yards from Pete Stoyanovich, who became the 25th NFL player to score more than 1,000 points. They went ahead 23-0 early in the second half after the Chargers fumbled on a punt return and then committed a 36-yard pass interference penalty.

Patriots 27, Oilers 16

Terry Glenn scored on a 51-yard pass play from Drew Bledsoe with 4:25 left and Lawyer Milloy returned an interception 30 yards for a touchdown three plays later for the Patriots (2-1).

Eddie George, who matched his career-low with 11 yards rushing in a loss to San Diego last week, gained 100 yards on 23 carries for the Oilers (1-2).

Rams 34, Bills 33

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Tony Banks, stopped less than a yard short of the end zone on the final play against Minnesota last week, scored on a 2-yard run with 11 seconds left to give St. Louis a victory over Buffalo.

Trailing 33-28, the Rams began the winning drive on their own 20 with 3:57 left. After they moved down the field with a 34-yard completion to Ricky Proehl and a 14-yard shuffle pass to Amp Lee, Banks ran in for the go-ahead touchdown.

The Rams (1-2) then went for the 2-point conversion, but the run failed. St. Louis trailed 28-10 in the third quarter before a pair of turnovers by Buffalo (0-3) allowed the Rams to make a comeback.

Seahawks 24, Redskins 14

SEATTLE — Steve Broussard ran back the opening kickoff 90 yards for a touchdown and Seattle improved to 3-0, the Seahawks' best start since 1986.

Ricky Watters had his second straight 100-yard rushing game and scored his first touchdown for the Seahawks, who also got Warren Moon's sixth TD pass of the season.

Trent Green passed for 383 yards and two touchdowns for the Redskins (0-3), who are off to their worst start since 1981.

Bucs 27, Bears 15

TAMPA, Fla. — The Tampa Bay Buccaneers opened Raymond James Stadium with a victory, scoring on four straight possessions after halftime to erase a 15-point deficit.

Trent Dilfer threw touchdown passes of 13 yards to Reidel Anthony and 44 yards to Dave Moore. Then Warrick Dunn broke two tackles to score on a 43-yard run to give the Bucs (1-2) their first lead of the season.

Mike Alstott's 2-yard TD run with just over five minutes to play made it 27-15, capping a remarkable turnaround from a sloppy first half in which Tampa Bay was outgained 217 yards to 63.

Chicago (0-3) scored on Glyn Milburn's 93-yard punt return and Jeff Jaeger's field goals of 26 and 52 yards before being held to 37 yards total offense in the second half.

Broncos 34, Raiders 17

OAKLAND, Calif. — Ray Crockett and Bill Romanowski combined for three interceptions that led to scores as Denver remained unbeaten.

The Raiders (1-2) seemingly had the Broncos (3-0) on the ropes but were hurt by their penchant for penalties and critical mistakes by Jeff George, who was intercepted twice by Crockett and once by Romanowski after John Elway aggravated a hamstring injury and left the game in the second quarter.

After replacing Elway, Bubby Brister's first pass was intercepted by Eric Turner and returned 94 yards for a TD. But Brister came back to throw two TD passes for the Broncos.

Jaguars 24, Ravens 10

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Fred Taylor, who came off the bench to replaced an injured James Stewart, rushed for 128 yards and a touchdown and made nine catches for 85 yards to lead Jacksonville over Baltimore.

Mark Brunell, who struggled through two mediocre games to open the season, threw for 376 yards and two touchdowns as the Jaguars (3-0) improved to 5-0 against the Ravens (1-2).

Cardinals 17, Eagles 3

TEMPE, Ariz. — Jake Plummer threw a 7-yard scoring pass to Johnny McWilliams with 7:19 left in the game, and Phoenix scored all of its points in the fourth quarter against winless Philadelphia.

Adrian Murrell, who gained 145 yards in 22 carries, ran 25 yards for an insurance touchdown with 1:52 to play as the Cardinals (1-2) avoided their fourth 0-3 start in the last seven years.

BOYS: Giants won both games last year

(From 1C)

Smith has rushed for 217 yards, 64 more than the entire Giants team. Irvin has 15 receptions for 200 yards.

"The biggest thing I have to do is believe in them, the guys in front of me, running the ball behind me, the guys I am throwing it to."

While the Cowboys have dominated the Giants in recent years, New York won both games last season in winning the NFC East title. The teams come into this game with 1-1 records after bad losses last week.

"I think we have the potential to be a good football team," Gailey said. "The first game we played pretty well and the second we did not play well. We have got to decide which one we are."

The Giants are in the same situation, heading into their first Monday night game in three years, which ironically was a 35-0 loss to Dallas.

Several questions arise after Kansas State whips Longhorns 48-7 in Big 12 encounter

By Doug Tucker
AP Sports Writer

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Is the wake of a pitiless 48-7 whipping, two questions arise.

Is Kansas State really this good?

Subject to more games down the road in what the Wildcats are hoping will be a magical season, the answers appear to be yes and probably not.

Nevertheless, in belting the slow-footed, poor-tackling Longhorns (1-2, 0-1 Big 12) on Saturday, the Wildcats played so well and so thoroughly they make it difficult to zero in on any single phase of an extraordinary effort.

Offensively, quarterback Michael Bishop continued to sparkle. The pass-run threat picked up 41 yards on the ground, including a 17-yard scamper and a one-yard touchdown run. He also hit 14 of 20 passes for 182 yards and two touchdowns.

Darnell McDonald, admitting that he felt like he "could do anything I wanted out there," caught 11 passes for 159 yards and both of Bishop's TD throws.

Eric Hickson got the scoring started with a 44-yard touchdown run and totaled 124 yards on 16 carries, which was 81 yards more than Ricky Williams managed on 25 futile carries against a ferocious Kansas State defense.

Senior linebacker Jeff Kelly made the Longhorns wish the Texas native had realized his boyhood dream of playing for them. Kelly totaled 11 tackles, forced two fumbles and returned an interception 17 yards for a touchdown in a 28-0 second-quarter blitz.

And what about the special teams? Did anybody's anywhere have a better game? James Garcia averaged more than 60 yards a punt, including an eye-popping 78-yarder. And David Allen totaled 172 yards on four punt returns. He brought one back 93 yards for a touchdown, marking the third straight game he's turned that trick.

And that was without a field goal from Martin Gramatica, who had a Big 12 record 65-yarder the week before.

Williams, who gained 160 yards in a 49-31 loss to UCLA the week before, thought the Wildcats compared favorably.

"They just kept coming and coming," he said. "K-State was much more aggressive and physical than UCLA."

"I didn't see any quit in him," said linebacker Travis Ochs. "But I think he was getting a little frustrated."

Allen's zig-zagging 93-yard return set the tone for a take-charge, 4-TD blitz in the second quarter.

It was just the sort of performance the Wildcats were looking for after getting little respect for lopsided wins over Indiana State and Northern Illinois.

"If we could have put more points on them it would have been better for us, frankly," said McDonald. But even McDonald pointed to the defensive effort that held Williams to his lowest output since getting 36 yards on 13 carries in a 66-3 loss last year to UCLA.

"What should grab them is our defense," McDonald said. "They stopped one of the Heisman hopefuls, almost shut him down totally. That should grab them. It should move us up in the rankings."

"We joked around about it all week, trying to get another one," he said. "Everybody was saying, 'Oh, they ran those two against weak teams. What were they going to do against Texas?' We went out and proved ourselves today."

WAC goes 0-3 in non-conference

By John Mossman
AP Sports Writer

"Opportunity Saturday," when four Western Athletic Conference teams had a chance to make a statement against ranked opponents and four others faced capable opponents, turned into "Black Saturday."

All eight WAC teams lost, dropping the conference's record in non-league play to 13-21.

In the only conference game on Saturday, Utah beat Hawaii 30-21 in Salt Lake City as Omar Bacon rushed for 125 yards and two touchdowns.

On Thursday night, unbeaten Air Force rallied to defeat Colorado State 30-27 at the academy and vaulted to No. 23 in this week's Associated Press poll.

Brigham Young traveled to No. 9 Washington and lost 20-10. Wyoming played at No. 12 Georgia and bowed 16-9, UNLV went to No. 14 Wisconsin and was routed 52-7, and San Jose State traveled to No. 22 Oregon and absorbed its worst loss in 30 years, 58-3.

In other non-conference action, New Mexico was edged by in-state rival New Mexico State 28-27 in Las Cruces, Fresno State lost to Texas Tech 34-28 in Lubbock, Rice fell to Northwestern 23-14 in Houston, and Southern Methodist was beaten by Arkansas 44-17 in Little Rock.

San Diego State, Texas Christian, Texas-El Paso and Tulsa were idle.

Utah went to 3-0 overall and 1-0 in the WAC's Pacific Division, handing Hawaii (0-2, 0-1) its eighth straight loss and 21st straight WAC road loss.

With Jonathan Crosswhite throwing two first-half touchdown passes, Utah took a 20-0 lead at intermission. But two fumbles, including Kamuela Cobb-Adams' 97-yard touchdown return, helped the Rainbows erupt for 21 points in the third quarter and a 21-20 lead.

"That shouldn't happen in a lifetime," Ute coach Ron McBride said of the third-quarter collapse. "The positive is, in the fourth quarter our backs were to the wall and the game was in doubt, and they found a way to win."

Hawaii coach Fred vonAppen said his team "had a chance to win. We made just enough mistakes in the second half not to."

BYU, which endured a scary moment on Friday when the team's charter plane had to make an evasive dive to dodge a military jet, apparently remained shaken at Washington. The Cougars (1-2) had only 11 first downs and 204 total yards, suffered numerous dropped passes and had 11 penalties for 96 yards.

"In our first three games, we knew we had to avoid the big play and not turn the ball over, and we could win," BYU coach LaVell Edwards said. "We did that last week (against Arizona State). We didn't do it against Alabama or Washington."

Two-way player Champ Bailey turned a short pass into a 51-yard touchdown and made a one-handed interception as Georgia overcame four fumbles to beat Wyoming (1-1).

Wisconsin's Ron Dayne rushed for 108 yards to set a school career rushing mark (3,785 yards) to help beat UNLV (0-3).

Big 12 teams continue winning ways

By Owen Canfield
AP Sports Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY — With few exceptions, the football teams of the Big 12 probably feel pretty good about themselves as they head into the fourth full week of the 1998 season.

After Saturday, conference teams are 22-7 against non-league opponents. Colorado, Nebraska and Texas Tech are 3-0 against teams from other conferences; Kansas State is 2-0.

Eleven conference teams played during the weekend and eight of them were winners. The only losers were Texas — beaten by fellow Big 12 team Kansas State — Oklahoma and Missouri.

"We ran the ball well, but you can't expect the guys up front to pound for 70 plays against one of the best teams in the country," Missouri quarterback Corby Jones said. "I think we would have done better if we would have mixed it up. We would have had a better chance to win."

The same is true for Oklahoma, which relied almost exclusively on its running game in a 13-12 loss to Cal. The Sooners scored on their third play, a 58-yard throwback screen pass, but they completed only two of their other nine tries the rest of the night.

Brandon Daniels returned at quarterback after missing the previous game with a shoulder injury. He ran for 67 yards, including a couple of big gainers, but it was clear Cal considered him no threat through the air. They used nine men up front all night, sometimes more than that.

"Our running backs ran hard, our line blocked hard," offensive coordinator Joe Dickinson said. "But when it came to executing the pass, we didn't do it. You've got to make those plays."

Baylor, a loser to Oregon State in its opener two weeks ago, jumped out to a 26-0 halftime lead against No. 20 North Carolina State and then held on for a 33-30 victory in Waco, Texas.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

The outcome wasn't secured until Baylor's Gary Baxter blocked Kent Passingham's 39-yard field goal try with four seconds remaining.

"Give them credit," Wolfpack coach Mike O'Cain said of the Bears. "They have great running backs and they played harder and wanted it more, especially in the first half."

In Stillwater, Oklahoma State rebounded from a miserable performance a week earlier against Tulsa to beat No. 25 Mississippi State, 42-23.

The Cowboys had two backs go over 100 yards for the first time since 1996 and finished with 561 total yards, their biggest output since 1988 when they had Barry Sanders.

"We came out and we executed," said quarterback Tony Lindsay, who finished with 288 total yards and two touchdowns. "The line whipped them up front and we were able to move the ball down the field. We cut down on the penalties and ran our game plan like we were supposed to."

The marquee game of the weekend proved what many people surmised beforehand — new Texas coach Mack Brown has a lot of rebuilding to do before the Longhorns are back among the nation's elite teams.

Texas visited No. 5 Kansas State and got hammered, 48-7. Ricky Williams gained just 43 yards, while Wildcat players ran through and around Texas defenders all afternoon.

"They just kept coming and coming," Williams said after his lowest output since a 36-yard game against UCLA last year. "I remember a couple of holes, but there were not many."

The feel-good story of the early season continues to be Iowa State. The Cyclones beat Ball State 38-0, giving them consecutive victories for just the second time this decade.

Darren Davis ran for 200 yards and scored three touchdowns and Iowa State recorded its first shutout in 14 years. The Cyclones gave up 44.8 points per game last year.

"To come from where we were last year defensively and to have the improvement we've shown up to this point, I'm real pleased," coach Dan McCarney said.

McCarney urges fans to get behind Iowa State

The Cyclones' 38-0 victory over Ball State on Saturday drew a crowd of 33,634 — only 625 more than the turnout for the opener against TCU on Sept. 5 and nearly 10,000 below capacity.

ISU officials had hoped for a better response from fans after Iowa State's upset of Iowa a week ago, the Cyclones' first victory over the Hawkeyes in 16 years. Jack Trice Stadium seats 43,000.

"Anytime there's empty seats, it's a disappointment," McCarney said. "I think this is a team that's really fun to support. We have great fans and I hope they really rally and respond and get behind this team this week."

Pepper, Steinhauer guide U.S. to victory

By Rusty Miller
AP Sports Writer

■ Solheim Cup

DUBLIN, Ohio — When the Solheim Cup was over, Dottie Pepper had further antagonized the Europeans and Sherri Steinhauer more than proved she belonged on the U.S. team.

Pepper improved her match record to 4-0 for the week and Steinhauer — who didn't play her way on the team but was a captain's choice — hit two memorable iron shots down the stretch as the United States retained the Solheim Cup with a 16-12 victory over Europe on Sunday.

Criticized by the Europeans for inciting the crowd on Saturday, an emotional Pepper came back with a 3 and 2 victory over Trish Johnson to run her record to 10-1 in the last three Solheims.

"I wouldn't be the same person if I played without emotion," Pepper said in responding to the Europeans' charges. "To me, it's patriotism. There was not one motion to another player or caddie. It was only to the crowd and they're a part of this."

The Europeans believed it wasn't patriotism but gamesmanship when Pepper tried to get the crowd to cheer before Marie Laure de Lorenzi hit a chip shot on the final green in Saturday morning's round. Pepper and her partner, Juli Inkster, had a 1-up victory when de Lorenzi failed to make the shot from the front fringe.

The Europeans used Pepper's cheerleading as motivation heading into Sunday's singles matches. They even imagined Pepper's likeness on a punching bag in the fitness trailer, taking turns throwing haymakers.

"I take it as a compliment. Period," Pepper said. "If that's what it takes, I'm glad to be their punching bag."

Laura Davies of England was still incensed even after play ended.

"That was unprofessional, unnecessary and it really spurred us on on top of that," an angry Davies said.

"It is not behavior I would encourage," European captain Pia Nilsson said curtly.

"That's her opinion," Pepper said.

Asked if she had crossed the line from exuberance to bad sportsmanship, Pepper added, "Not once."

Ahead 10 1/2-5 1/2 to start the final day, the United States needed just 3 1/2 points in singles to retain the Cup. With one point up for grabs in each of the 12 matches, Europe applied the heat by capturing Sunday's first three matches at Muirfield Village Golf Club before Pepper turned things around.

The victory was the Americans' fourth in the five biennial competitions, the women's version of the men's Ryder Cup. Europe's only victory came in 1992 at Dalmahoy in Scotland.

After Pepper's victory, Rosie Jones took a 6 and 4 win over Catrin Nilsmark and Kelly Robbins drained a 12-foot birdie putt at the 17th to close out Charlotta Sorenstam 2 and 1.

Steinhauer assured the United States would retain the cup when her third-shot approach on the par-5 15th came to rest 18 inches from the hole. Her birdie tap-in locked up the half-point the Americans needed.

"It's an incredible feeling," she said. "I was hoping it wouldn't come down to me because I was the 10th person off the tee today."

Nervous U.S. team captain and Midland resident Judy Rankin didn't realize until later that her side had met its goal.

On the 159-yard, par-3 16th, Steinhauer hit an iron to 8 feet. Europe's Catriona Matthew followed with a clutch shot of her own, knocking the ball two feet inside of Steinhauer's.

"A reporter asked me earlier this week if I was comfortable, if it came down to me, having to make the putt," Steinhauer said. "I said if I was confident in my putting and it was a 6-footer uphill. That's what I faced at 16."

Steinhauer's birdie putt closed out her match and closed out the Europeans. Rankin was able to see the decisive shot from behind the tee — the only time she saw a match end all day.

Tammie Green, who lives 50 miles away in Somerset, was followed by a large partisan gallery in beating Alison Nicholas 1-up.

In the final match of the day, Meg Mallon conceded the final hole to Europe's Sophie Gustafson — even though Mallon was on the back fringe and was ahead 1-up while Gustafson had an 18-foot birdie putt.

The late American heroics followed a valiant comeback by the Europeans, who went 6-5-1 in singles two years after going 1-9-2 on the last day.

Moments later, Helen Alfredsson saved par at 17 with an 8-foot putt that closed out Inkster 2 and 1. It was Inkster who had given the United States a dramatic final point and a 10 1/2-5 1/2 lead as the sun was setting Saturday night, rolling in a 45-foot putt at the 17th and then pirouetting three times across the green in celebration.

Annika Sorenstam made it three straight for Europe when she closed out Donna Andrews 2 and 1.

"We fought so hard and we wanted this Cup so badly and we prepared as well as we could," Sorenstam said. "We wanted it. When you don't get what you want, it's tough sometimes."

Europe also picked up points on Liselotte Neumann's 1-up victory over Brandie Burton, Marie Laure de Lorenzi's 1-up decision over Chris Johnson and Lisa Hackney's 6 and 5 win over LPGA Hall of Famer Betsy King.

Paul wins Lone Star 500

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

FORT WORTH — John Paul Jr. put an unhappy past firmly behind him Sunday, looking only to the future after winning the inaugural Indy Racing League Lone Star 500.

The 38-year-old driver, who spent a little over two years in federal prison for drug trafficking, made his difficult comeback complete by avoiding the trouble that found so many others in the attrition-filled race.

Paul gave up track position when he made a strategic pit stop on lap 163 of the 208-lap event at Texas Motor Speedway. But he steadily moved toward the front as other drivers who had stayed on the track had to pit for fuel.

Paul took the lead on lap 192 and held off a late challenge from rookie Robby Unser, crossing the finish line about 10 car-lengths (1.577 seconds) ahead. It was his first win since he took the 1983 Michigan 500 in the rival CART series.

"It's been a long 15 years," said an emotional Paul, who spent 28 months in a federal prison from 1986-88 after pleading guilty to a charge of racketeering for the unloading of a boat containing marijuana and helping in preparations to use the boat to haul marijuana from Colombia to Louisiana.

People who knew Paul placed the blame on his father, John Paul Sr., a two-time world endurance driving champion currently serving a 25-year term for drug trafficking and attempted murder of a witness in a federal drug case.

Asked if he ever thought this day would come, Paul said, "All those things are in the past and I've just been looking forward to this day and to the future."

It took years after being released for Paul to get his racing career back in sync, and he finally got his chance when the IRL was formed in 1996.

"Today was just awesome," Paul said. "We couldn't do anything wrong. I'm just as fresh as a daisy. I'm ready to go another 300 laps around this place."

That was the probably the euphoria of the moment speaking since air temperatures in the mid 90s and track temperatures over 140 caused considerable discomfort for the drivers and a big problem for some of the teams racing on Goodyear tires.

The race, which was interrupted by eight cautions, was marred by a series of crashes resulting from tires apparently coming apart in the intense heat. Among the drivers who either spun or hit the wall after having tires blown were pole-winner Billy Boat and rookie David Steele. Paul's winning car was on Firestone tires.

Jonathan Byrd, co-owner of the team with Clayton Cunningham, said, "The Firestone tires were incredible. We didn't have a single blister or any other problem. We finished with enough tires left to run another race."

Goodyear spokesman Todd Carpenter said, "Obviously, we're disappointed with the performance today. Some teams had continuing problems and others did well throughout the day. Coming into this race, Goodyear had been the winning tire in seven of nine races, and eight of the top 10 in the IRL points were on our tires. Today was just not our day."

Between yellow flags the race was as hot as the day, getting the crowd estimated at 81,000 on its feet and cheering a number of times over the 500-kilometer (312-mile) distance.

Jeff Ward and Roberto Guerrero, who both had to pit late in the race, got back on the lead lap near the end and finished third and fourth. Guerrero, who had the only car in the 28-car lineup powered by Nissan's Infiniti engine became the first driver to lead a race with that motor, leading three times for a total of 24 laps.

Kenny Brack, who saw his record three-race winning string end, finished a lap down in fifth and padded his series points lead. Going into the season-finale on Oct. 10 at Las Vegas, Brack will carry a lead of 31 points over Davey Hamilton and 43 over defending series champion Tony Stewart.

That gives both a mathematical chance at the title — with a maximum of 55 points available. But Brack, from Sweden, can shut them out by finishing seventh or better.

Hamilton, who had tire problems and lost a lap in the early going, finished ninth on Sunday, while Stewart, who led early in the race, wound up 20th after blowing his engine on lap 80.

The most serious accident of the afternoon came on lap 134 when rookie Donnie Beechler and Marco Greco tangled between turns one and two. The accident also caught up rookie Steve Knapp and Raul Boesel.

Greco was awake and alert after being removed from his car by safety personnel, but was flown by helicopter to a Dallas hospital for a precautionary CAT scan, which came back negative. He was held overnight for observation.

Martin sets record in MBNA Gold 400

Associated Press

■ Motorsports

DOVER, Del. — Mark Martin had just completed a record run that included some precision driving when it mattered most. What he wanted to talk about were the crewmen who helped him overcome a personal tragedy.

"I haven't been able to focus like I was before the accident," Martin said, alluding to a plane crash last month that killed three family members. "The guys reached up and took up the slack."

He was amazed by the work they did this weekend that culminated in a devastation of the field Sunday in the MBNA Gold 400.

"This was a win where the most important contribution was by the race team, their pit stops and everything else," Martin said after leading a record 380 of 400 laps at Dover Downs International Speedway. "We had a rocket car. We hit the setup."

But the 28th win of his career did little to help Martin close the gap in the Winston Cup standings because leader Jeff Gordon finished second. Gordon leads Martin by 194 points with only seven of 33 races remaining.

Martin was realistic about his prospects.

"We can win them all, and at this rate we won't be able to catch them," he said after winning by 2.036 seconds. "But this was the best car I ever drove,"

"Now I know how Jeff feels," he said.

At one point, it looked like Gordon would make a contest out of it. He halved the lead with about 30 laps remaining, but didn't negotiate lapped traffic as well and fell back.

Martin didn't back off a when he reached a gaggle of cars, saying he wasn't about to become cautious after dominating so much of the race.

"I didn't want to lose," he said. "So when we got to the traffic, I just stayed with it and I came through with the lead."

Gordon agreed that was the key moment of the race, and that his car just wasn't equal to the task.

"Every time I ran in that lapped traffic, it took some air off the nose and built up that right front pressure," he said. "That made my car handle worse."

"That was the best our car was all day, but it wasn't enough," he said. "They had the car to beat."

"We hardly did anything to the car all weekend," Martin said.

Martin established a career high with his sixth victory of the season. Gordon had held the mark for leading the most laps at The Monster Mile when he led for 375 in a losing effort May 31.

So dominant was Martin in the $1.6 million event Sunday that few even got close enough to attempt passes after Rusty Wallace got by him on the second lap. Martin went back in front on lap 4, and began his domination.

Martin, like Gordon, had a chance to win in the spring, but was forced to make a late gas stop. Dale Jarrett won the race by going the final 101 laps without a stop.

Gordon, trying become the only driver in the modern era of the sport to win 31 races within three seasons, led only six laps Sunday, He did so after beating Martin off pit road after a caution on lap 173.

But Martin passed him on lap 180, two laps after the green flag came out. Then the 39-year-old driver from Batesville, Ark., drove away from the field.

Martin's Ford averaged 113.834 mph in a race slowed seven times by 47 laps of caution. There were nine lead changes among four drivers.

Gordon's Chevrolet was followed by the Ford of Jeremy Mayfield. Bobby Labonte was fourth in a Pontiac, followed by the Ford of Wallace.

Sixth in a Ford was Matt Kenseth, a winner 24 hours earlier in the MBNA 200 Busch Grand National race. Kenseth was making his Winston Cup debut, driving for four-time Dover winner Bill Elliott, who missed the race because his father died Thursday.

Scelzi wins third straight

MOHNTON, Pa. — Gary Scelzi, the defending Winston Top Fuel champion, took over the points lead for the first time this year when he won at the Pioneer Electronics Keystone Nationals on Sunday, his third straight victory,

Dean Skuza, Kurt Johnson and Angelle Seeling also won at Maple Grove Raceway.

The $1.6-million event was the 17th stop in the 22-race NHRA Winston Drag Racing Series.

Scelzi covered the quarter-mile in 4.637 seconds at 305.39 mph in the Team Winston Dragster to easily defeat Dunn who had mechanical problems and coasted to a 6.534 at 117.70. They were meeting in the finals for the third straight event. Dunn remains winless in '98 while Scelzi has four victories.

Perry finally wins a PGA tournament after 14 years

Associated Press

■ Golf Roundup

ENDICOTT, N.Y. — Chris Perry finally won't have to hear it any more: "Why haven't you won? You've been right there."

After 14 years, Perry finally was right there on a Sunday.

He shot a 5-under-par 67 to win the B.C. Open by three strokes over Peter Jacobsen. Perry finished the four rounds at 15-under 273 and took the first-place check of $270,000.

Nolan Henke was third, another stroke back, while Curt Byrum, Robert Allenby, and Ted Tryba finished tied for fourth at 278.

This was Perry's 378th tournament.

"The first win is pretty tough," said Perry, who began the day two shots off the lead and made three birdies on the front nine to move into first. "Somebody's always just played better. I've been in position sometimes, I just haven't played my best on Sunday. I drew on all those experiences. It was time for me to win. I never really lost faith in myself. You've just got to believe you can do it."

Perry won it when nobody else mounted a challenge.

Third-round leader Bruce Fleisher, who started Sunday with a one-shot lead over Henke, faltered on the front nine with three bogeys, added two more on the back and finished with a 76 and in a tie for ninth at 280.

"I feel like I had the breaks today," said Fleisher, who will celebrate his 50th birthday in October and then head for the Senior PGA Tour. "You make your own breaks. It's a good finish. I'm looking forward to the senior tour. I don't think my heart can take this course again. I got off to a very slow start. When you start bogeying par-5s, you know you're in trouble."

Perry was in trouble four times but always managed to escape.

"I'd see him in the trees and in the fairway. Then I'd see him put his hand up after he made the putt for par," said Henke, who parred the first eight holes and finished with a 72 after two birdies and two bogeys. "He played well today. He's got the monkey off his back. Now maybe he'll win a few more tournaments."

Perry went to 13 under with a 14-foot birdie putt on the par-4 9th, then watched Henke finally break through with a birdie on No. 10 to tie him for the lead.

After a bogey-5 on the 11th, though, Perry reeled off three straight birdies on the rock-hard En-Joie Golf Club course to go 15 under. Jacobsen, who was already in the clubhouse with a final-round 67, watched on TV as his chance at victory suddenly vanished.

Perry comes from a family more used to pitching victories. His father, Jim, pitched in the major leagues for 17 years and his uncle, Gaylord Perry, is in the baseball Hall of Fame. Each won the Cy Young Award as the best pitcher in the game.

On Sunday, Chris, who will turn 37 in a week, could identify with their legacy.

"I feel like I won the Cy Young," Perry said as he looked at the championship trophy. "This is a great feeling. A win is a win. It doesn't matter if it's the U.S. Open, the B.C. Open, Milwaukee or wherever. I played solid, and I felt really good, and I played within myself."

Baiocchi wins five-way playoff

MASON, Ohio — Hugh Baiocchi made a 15-foot birdie putt on the second hole of a record-tying five-man playoff Sunday to win the rain-shortened Kroger Senior Classic.

The victory in the tournament, which had Sunday's final round rained out and was cut to 36 holes, was worth $165,000 to Baiocchi, who won the Comfort Classic last week at Indianapolis.

"To win two in a row is very satisfying. It's a great thrill for me," he said. "Last week, I was defending a lead all day. Today was virtually a lottery. I'm glad I had the winning ticket."

Sunday's round at The Golf Center at Kings Island, just north of Cincinnati, was initially suspended because of lightning. The last group of leaders had finished just two holes, so tournament officials wiped out the entire day's play when a heavy rain settled in an hour later.

That meant the five players tied for the second-round lead at 7-under-par 133 — Baiocchi, Bob Charles, Larry Nelson, Bruce Summerhays and Frank Conner — would meet in a playoff, tying the Senior PGA Tour record set at the 1996 Emerald Coast Classic.

Baiocchi had played three holes — par, bogey, birdie — when play was stopped.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll have: 5-Dymanic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Monday, Sept. 21, 1998:

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Let others take the ball and run with it. The truth is that you have very little control over them anyway. Dynamic thinking and understanding open doors for you. By admitting that you barked up the wrong tree, you'll find unexpected success. Tonight: Accept an unusual invitation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Work demands cooperation, direction and a willingness to revise ideas. You might find it particularly challenging to deal with a boss. View this person's changeability as an asset rather than as a liability. Does this allow you more creativity? Tonight: Burn the midnight oil.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Your imagination goes haywire as you attempt to deal with a wild-card situation. Proceed with an idea you have been contemplating. A partner changes his stand, allowing you greater freedom. A flirtation could build into more; go with the flow. Tonight: Say "yes."

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Take another approach to your workload. A change of environment is possible. Allow a partner or trusted friend to give you long-overdue feedback. You know your limits; explain them, but be open to different ideas. Tonight: Put the answering machine on and your feet up!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Talk, brainstorm, formulate a new plan. Listen to someone who is full of ideas. On some level, you feel unsteady with this person because of his unpredictability. Your feelings are important. The intensity in a relationship could overwhelm you; take it easy. Tonight: Out and about.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Target your spending and expenses. Input from a family member about personal matters sheds a different light on what could be. Consider a change in your work schedule or procedures. Create greater freedom and independence in your life. Tonight: Pay those bills.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Your smile has a way of breaking down boundaries. Use that ability, but be willing to revise your thinking about an emotional matter. It could relate to children or a love affair. A partner continues to surprise you. Tonight: You get what you ask for!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ It is wise to take a back seat. Review your assets, both materially and emotionally. Not everything is counted in terms of money. Recognize how much you offer. Be willing to shed what feels like an albatross. No longer settle for less than what you want. Tonight: Take a night off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Listen to feedback that others offer you. Make time for a group meeting or get-together. Not everything is as you see it. Your ability to adjust and make profound changes affects your professional life. Stay centered. Tonight: Aim for what you want.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Take the lead at work. You have an innovative realization. Understand your limits and that your thinking could be stopping you from getting what you want. Consider the role of money in your life. Does it rule you, or can you direct it? It might be time for a change in attitude. Tonight: It could be a late one.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Look closely at what is going on between you and someone else. You might not have the whole picture. Creativity and money mix. You could suddenly understand where someone is coming from. Work demands constant adaptability. Tonight: Make time for a special friend.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q 1 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠ K 9 6 4 2 ♡ A Q J 5 ◇ K 4 ♣ 7 3

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1◇	Pass	1♠	Pass
1NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - This is the only sequence where two hearts — a new suit by responder — should not be treated as forcing. So after partner has rebid one no trump, you must jump to three hearts to make sure partner will not let the bidding die before game has been reached.

Q 2 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠ A J 9 6 5 2 ♡ Q 8 3 ◇ 6 ♣ K 7 2

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♡	Pass	1♠	Pass
2NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - Despite only 10 high-card points, your proven fit in two suits puts you in the slam zone. The first item on the agenda is to tell partner of your spade length by bidding three spades. Of course, that's forcing — no one is enough of a genius to know that the hand will make exactly nine trick in spades rather than eight, or more, at no trump. You can wait till the next round to support hearts.

Q 3 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠ A Q J 9 6 5 ♡ K 10 5 ◇ K 5 ♣ A J

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
Pass	Pass	1♠	Pass
2◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - The 'obvious' rebid is a jump to three spades, but is that best? With a key honor in partner's suit and tenace positions in the other suits, it might be easier to make nine tricks than 10. Therefore, our vote goes to three no trump.

Q 4 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠ J 9 8 6 4 3 ♡ 9 7 2 ◇ 6 ♣ K Q 8

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♡	2♣	Pass	Pass
Dbl	Pass	?

A - We do not think you have quite enough to convert partner's double to penalties — even if you defeat the contract, it might not be enough to compensate for what you miss. We suggest a jump to three spades — two spades is an underbid opposite a partner who has shown extra values. If you play negative doubles, partner does not promise more than a minimum opening bid with shortness in clubs, so two spades is enough.

Q 5 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠ 7 3 ♡ K Q 9 5 ◇ K J 9 8 4 ♣ Q 6

The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1♡	1♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A - You are too strong to pass, but should not get too rambunctious since partner has only made a non-vulnerable one-level overcall. A bid of one no trump describes your holding nicely given these conditions.

Q 6 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠ K 10 6 ♡ A J 9 6 3 ◇ K 10 9 8 3 ♣ Void

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♣	Pass	1♡	Pass
1♠	Pass	2◇	Pass
2♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - Partner has shown 10 or 11 cards in the black suits, so there is no reason for you to persist with a red suit. Even though the hand is not fitting well, raise to four spades. That game should have play.

Flockhart depressed by Time cover

NEW YORK — "Ally McBeal" star Calista Flockhart was far from thrilled to see her face on the cover of Time magazine this summer.

"I won't say I was horrified, but I was quite depressed," says Ms. Flockhart.

That's because the June 29 Time cover displayed the actress opposite feminist icons such as Susan B. Anthony and asked in its headline: "Is Feminism Dead?"

"I mean, this is a comedy about an exaggerated character, and to compare her to Susan B. Anthony is outrageous," Ms. Flockhart says in the Sept. 26-Oct. 2 issue of TV Guide.

Ms. Flockhart takes offense that people confuse her with her character, a neurotic lawyer obsessed with being single and her ticking biological clock.

LOS ANGELES — Known on film for zinging the bad guys, Jackie Chan has a soft spot in his heart for animals.

The Hong Kong action star is asking the Taiwanese legislature to pass the nation's first animal protection law, one that would ban the killing of stray dogs.

"I was saddened to learn recently that dogs in Taiwan are being killed cruelly by poisoning, electrocution and starvation. This treatment of dogs goes against everything that an advanced, human nation like Taiwan represents," Chan wrote in a Sept. 16 letter to Secretary General Liu Pi-Liang.

He made the appeal on behalf of the group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, which says there are some 2 million stray dogs on the streets of Taiwan. Dogs are popular pets on the island, but there is no registration system and they are frequently abandoned.

NEW YORK — Ben Stiller made his name as a funny guy — a nerd, a weenie. But he thinks of himself in much darker terms.

"I, more than anyone I know, have been at the beck and call of the Mr. Meanjeans in my head for most of my life," Stiller says in "Feel This Book," an upcoming mock self-help guide he wrote with actress-comedian Janeane Garofalo. "I'm talking about dark, dark nights of despair and thoughts of suicide, further exacerbated by whatever drug of choice I had overindulged in that month."

In Sunday's editions of The New York Times, Stiller talks about some of those low times, including a bad acid trip during his senior year in high school when he called his father, actor Jerry Stiller.

"I know what you're going through. When I was 12, a kid gave me a Pall Mall, and I was sick for two days," Ben recalls his father saying. "My dad meant well, but his words didn't exactly comfort me."

MINNEAPOLIS —Talk about a crowd pleaser.

When Garth Brooks' Oct. 6 show sold out Saturday in 11 minutes, he wound up scheduling eight other shows to accommodate all his fans.

"Garth wants to play to everyone he can," said Caryn Fine, spokeswoman for the Target Center, where Brooks will be performing.

When hundreds of people lined up outside the center Saturday, organizers kept adding concerts until everyone had tickets. To prevent fans from camping out, they handed out wristbands that people could redeem for tickets.

LOS ANGELES — It took 1,700 special effects to get the metaphor right in Gary Ross' upcoming film "Pleasantville."

The story about two teen-agers transported to the world of a 1950s black-and-white TV show took more than two years to make and involved complex problems of lighting and digital coloring. In the film, scheduled to open next month, the teens slowly begin to transform the gray town into full color.

But writer and first-time director Ross wanted to get it right.

"I realized I had stumbled on a wonderful metaphor to express what it means to come alive," Ross says in Sunday's editions of the Los Angeles Times.

Ross, who received Oscar nominations for helping write the Tom Hanks hit "Big" and the presidential comedy "Dave," says he wanted to show the faults of the idealized America of the 1950s — a period when his father, screenwriter Arthur Ross, was blacklisted.

Bowman continues mulling his coaching future with Red Wings

DETROIT (AP) — Scotty Bowman, who turned 65 on Friday, is still mulling whether to return to coach the two-time defending Stanley Cup champion Detroit Red Wings.

Since Detroit the Cup in June, Bowman has had a partly blocked artery cleared and his left knee replaced. With one year left on his contract, Bowman has said his health would dictate whether he returns to pursue an NHL-record ninth Stanley Cup as coach.

While checkups next month could clear that uncertainty, the NHL's winningest coach said Saturday he's "leaning to coaching if I'm 100 percent or close to that."

"I won't jeopardize my health for a job," a slimmer Bowman told Booth Newspapers by telephone from New York.

While the rest of the Red Wings opened training camp and exhibition season last week, Bowman was in Buffalo, N.Y., handling what he called "my full-time job": Working the left knee that was surgically replaced Aug. 19.

Bowman is to undergo his seven-week checkup on his knee Oct. 6 in New York, then meet in mid-October with cardiologist Dr. William O'Neill.

"I want him to tell me when I get my physical how I am ... from the records and tests," said Bowman, who will undergo a stress test as part of the exam.

Red Wings general manager Ken Holland has said he expects Bowman to return this season but has gotten no hint from Bowman about his coaching plans. In Bowman's absence, assistant coaches Barry Smith and Dave Lewis have run the team.

Bowman's closest contact with the Red Wings has been by telephone and by watching last weekend's exhibition games via satellite dish. He has no immediate plans to come to Detroit during the preseason, and he's uncertain if he would attend the season-opener Oct. 10 in Toronto.

For now, Bowman's rehabilitation regimen includes two hours of physical therapy every other day, as well as short walks without using a cane. He's easing his use of the pain killer he has taken since knee surgery.

"My knee hurts quite a bit, and you don't think about anything but the knee sometimes," he said. "You have days you wonder if you will ever get back to where it was."

Bowman has lost about 15 pounds since the angioplasty to clear the artery blockage revealed he had high cholesterol, which since has been reduced, and adult-onset diabetes.

All in all, he feels lucky.

"They told me I was one of the fortunate ones," Bowman said of doctors. "Most of the ones that come in already have damage and they're picking up the pieces. It's like when you have problems with a car, but it hasn't broken down yet."

Bowman's brother, Jack, was 61 when he died after having a heart attack during routine bypass surgery in June, just a week after the Red Wings finished their sweep of Washington to repeat as NHL champions.

"The week after we won was difficult because my brother was a lot sicker than I thought," Bowman said. "That was the most difficult part. I was hoping things would have come around. As far as celebrating the Cup, it wasn't that different.

"I'm not one to take it and think it's forever. I've had my share of good times with it."

Florida boxing commission faces ethics complaint in dealings with promoter King

By Ian James
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — Florida's five commissioners who regulate boxing are considering whether to suspend or revoke Don King's license to promote fights in the state.

But there's more at stake before the State Athletic Commission than King's ability to promote his fighters.

The commission's decision may also test its credibility, as its executive director, Michael Scionti, fends off allegations that King was given special treatment in return for a $100,000 donation to a boxing foundation that Scionti started.

U.S. Sen. John McCain ha asked Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles to investigate allegations that the commission is caught up in a conflict of interest in its dealings with King.

Both the governor's office and the Attorney General's office are investigating the allegations.

"The governor's office has concerns, and we will be taking appropriate action," Chiles spokeswoman Edie Ousley said. "We are not taking this issue lightly."

By 1997, he decided to create a boxing foundation that would be a positive force for young fighters. It would offer scholarships and a way to give something back to the sport, he said.

Scionti discussed his plan at a commission meeting last September, announcing a major contribution from Don King Productions, based in Deerfield Beach.

"He floored me when he said $100,000," Scionti said.

When the Florida State Boxing Foundation was officially formed as a nonprofit group, its articles of incorporation did not include Scionti's name. He said he wanted it done that way to avoid a conflict.

But a New York attorney representing Julio Cesar Chavez — a six-time world boxing champion in a legal dispute with King — complained last month when Scionti proposed that the commission consider recognizing exclusive promotional contracts.

That change, said Judd Burstein, could help King in a dispute over a contract with Chavez. Chavez's lawyers were trying to have the contract ruled illegal while the fighter trained in Breckenridge, Colo., for his losing fight last Friday against Oscar de la Hoya.

Chavez's lawyers also charged the commission with improperly approving an application for Don King Productions that failed to list that King was under indictment on wire fraud charges. The commission's rules bar granting a promoter's license to someone facing those charges. That didn't stop the commission from granting King licenses the past four years.

Seven band members injured during brawl

BEAUMONT (AP) — Southern University's marching band director said Sunday that his group was provoked into a halftime brawl with band members from Prairie View A&M.

The fight broke out at halftime of Saturday night's Prairie View-Southern game in Beaumont, where the teams were playing on neutral ground at Lamar University's Cardinals Stadium.

Seven Prairie View band members reportedly suffered minor injuries in the fight. Prairie View officials did not return telephone calls from The Associated Press on Sunday.

Lamar University spokesman Brian Sattler said it was unclear which band started the fight, which continued for 20 minutes before police officers restored peace.

Southern band director Isaac Greggs said the melee started after his group had finished a seven-minute halftime show and was exiting toward the backside of the field in a block formation. As the formation approached the sideline, Southern drum major Terrell Jackson noticed the Prairie View band lined up there.

"They didn't want anyone to pass through," said Greggs, who was walking behind his band's formation. "When they indicated they weren't going to get our of our way, our drum major indicated to go down the sideline."

Exactly what happened after that to trigger the fight was unclear. Greggs said he was walking behind the formation and didn't see it. But the director said Jackson's mother, who had a clear line of sight, reported that her son was spun around from behind and attacked by at least one Prairie View band members.

"One or two hit him ... in the temple and in the bridge of his nose," Greggs said by telephone Sunday from his home in Baton Rouge, La. "When he got hit all of them started to fight. ... I was in the middle of it pushing my kids out of the way."

"This has never happened before," said Edwards, whose band never performed.

Greggs said that, aside from Jackson, none of his musicians were hurt. He wasn't sure how many instruments were damaged but planned to conduct an inventory on Monday.

Greggs also said he has films of his band's halftime show that might include footage of the brawl. He hadn't viewed the films by Sunday.

2002 Olympic budget to be unveiled soon

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah residents will get their first look at the budget for the 2002 Winter Games Thursday, but Olympic officials are not tipping their hand.

Salt Lake Organizing Committee officials have kept a tight lid on the details of the budget, projected to be about $1.4 billion.

SLOC sources also told The Salt Lake Tribune that the budget will — as promised — not use any local tax dollars and the state and local governments $59 million investment in venues will be repaid, with a $40 million endowment to pay for operations.

The budget does rely on federal money for Games-related expenses such as transportation and public safety as have other Games staged in the United States.

SLOC president Robert Garff said, whatever the budget is, Utah residents will be proud of the Games.
