Egypt's fake photos crack Libyan plots

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

■ Other plots possible — Page 11A

CAIRO, Egypt — Egypt used faked photographs of a former Libyan prime minister lying in a pool of blood to trick Libya into claiming he had been assassinated by a death squad hired by Col. Moammar Khadafy, President Hosni Mubarak said Saturday.

Egyptian officials identified two Britons and two Maltese arrested as members of the Libyan-hired hit squad, and said the four told of other Libyan plots to assassinate leaders in West Germany, France, India, Pakistan, Britain, Saudi Arabia, Qatar, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates.

Mubarak said in a speech Saturday that the supposed victim, Abdel-Hamid Bakoush, was safe. Bakoush, 46, later appeared at a news conference in Cairo with Interior Minister Ahmed Rushdi.

"This incident proves that Khadafy lost his qualification as a responsible man and head of state," said Bakoush, Libya's last prime minister before Khadafy overthrow King Idris in 1969. "He is an international criminal, and I call on all countries and governments of the world to take a stand toward him."

Rushdi identified those arrested as Anthony William Gill, 48, and Godfrey Chiner, 47, both of London; and Romeo Nicholas Chakambari, 42, and Edgar Bonic Cacia, age unknown, both of Malta.

He said the four were recruited by Ali Nejm, Libya's ambassador to Malta. They were promised $250,000 to arrange the assassination and were told they could hire Egyptian collaborators — who turned out to be Egyptian undercover officers — for $150,000 to do the actual killing.

JANA, Libya's official news agency, and state-run Tripoli Radio both reported Friday that one of Khadafy's "suicide squads" had "executed" Bakoush on Monday, the last day friends and relatives reported seeing him and his wife.

Egyptian officials said their undercover agents faked photographs to fool the Libyans who had hired them to kill Bakoush.

"We gave imaginary pictures showing Bakoush to be critically injured and lying in a pool of blood," Mubarak said. "These pictures were sent to the Libyan leadership by those terrorists through the Libyan Embassy in Malta."

Rushdi said the first of the four Libyan agents arrived in Cairo on Oct. 17 and "from the first minute he was under surveillance by the authrorities." The others arrived separately between Oct. 23 and Nov. 9, he said.

When the four let it be known in criminal circles they were looking for killers, the people they ended up hiring were actually Egyptian intelligence agents, Rushdi said.

He showed copies of four photos Egyptian intelligence agents made of Bakoush in various poses: his hands tied behind his back and his mouth gagged, blood spattered on his face and shirt and, finally, lying supposedly dead in a pool of blood.

Rushdi said one of the Egyptian undercover agents flew to Malta with the photos and a letter from the hit squad stating the assassination had been completed. The agent returned to Cairo with a receipt for the materials signed by a Libyan spy working out of the Libyan Embassy in Malta, he added.

Rushdi said the Libyan ambassador took the photos and letter to Khadafy in Crete, where the Libyan leader was meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand.

Neither JANA nor Tripoli Radio mentioned Bakoush on Saturday, while Khadafy was in meetings on Malta. Libya and Malta's Socialist government have had normal diplomatic ties since resolving an offshore oil rights dispute in 1982.

Mubarak said he learned a Libyan hit squad had been sent to Egypt when he was visiting West Germany last month. He said he also learned of purported plots to assassinate Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany and King Faud of Saudi Arabia, and for forces loyal to Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, the late Pakistani prime minister, to overthrow President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

Pakistani officials have charged that Bhutto's sons, Murtaza and Shahnawaz, organized a Libya-backed underground group, Al-Zulfikar, to avenge their father's 1979 execution and oust Zia.

More and more drivers are choosing State Highway 191 over U.S. 80. Up to 9,000 vehicles have been counted on the road in single day. Before its March opening, there was no northside route between Midland and Odessa.

191 traffic signals growth

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Traffic along State Highway 191 is growing steadily as more commuters steer their cars from crowded U.S. 80 to the new highway and its single stop sign.

The most current road counts available from the Texas Department of Highways and Transportation show about 8,900 vehicles (1,000 more than during summer months) travelled this stretch connecting the north sides of Midland and Odessa on Monday, Oct. 15.

During May 1984, road counts averaged 7,700 vehicles per day. About 1,300 more drivers used S.H. 191 on Mondays in July than in May.

Meanwhile, traffic on U.S. 80 has eased. From highs of 22,900 in February before the link road opened, traffic dropped by 5,000 in July, according to the latest counts available on that road.

The Highway Department had originally hoped S.H. 191 would split the load U.S. 80 had borne during the boom years, when as many as 28,000 cars were counted daily on what was then the lone connector road.

While twice as much traffic continues to use the older road, highway department officials suspect that the boom in use of the link road is ending.

"By now, traffic that's attracted to 191 is already there," said Fred Nelle, planning coordinator of the Midland-Odessa Regional Transportation Study.

"We would expect increased growth to reflect the increased growth of the area," Nelle said.

Because of the potential for development along this northern corridor, Nelle said the Highway Department is projecting an annual growth rate of about 5 percent. Traffic counts along U.S. 80 should remain more stable, he said, because that strip has already undergone extensive development.

Drivers lured to the link road by the sparcity of traffic signals can expect this incentive to disappear as cars begin to crowd lanes designed to serve as access roads in the scheme of the final project.

"(Traffic signals) will probably happen as traffic builds and congestion increases," said Nelle. The traffic signals would be changed again when the highway is finished; complete with overpasses, interchanges and on and off ramps.

In response to the increase in traffic, the Department of Public Safety has increased its patrols of S.H. 191, said Capt. Winford Kelley.

"The traffic has picked up out there, especially during peak periods," he said, but no statistics were available on the number of tickets handed out for speeding and other violations.

As the road's use has grown, so has commercial development of the real estate alongside it.

Mission Dorado, straddling Midland-Ector County boundaries, is designed to be a planned community spanning about 2,500 acres. Already, six families are residing there, and more than 60 homes have been sold in the past seven months, said Jim Chase of the developer, HBF Corp.

Multi-family dwellings and office space also are planned. The Good Samaritan Society will construct a $10 million retirement center in the subdivision, said Chase.

More than 9,000 vehicles were counted by the Highway Department passing the intersection of S.H. 191 and Faudree Rd. (Mission Dorado's main thoroughfare) on a Wednesday earlier in November, said Chase. Lighting will be added at that intersection, said Chase, but no traffic signals have been planned.

Developments are at various stages at both the Midland and Odessa ends of the road.

Experiment awaits judgment

Lucius D. Bunton

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Bunton Experiment is awaiting its judgment day.

The experiment, LDB—3/6, a study in how diversely and similarly two sets of trial jurors perceive the same case, was carried out by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton in 40 to 50 civil trials.

The verdict: general agreement.

In about three-fourths of the cases, jurors on the regulation six-person jury and those on the experimental three-person jury entered the same judgment, Bunton said.

The experiment was carried out in 1983 and 1984 in the Midland-Odessa, Pecos, Waco and El Paso Divisions of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

The judge's objectives were to determine if the three-person jury would speed up the trial process, would be less expensive to the taxpayers than the six-person jury, and if verdicts from six-member and three-member juries coincided.

In the main, they did.

At the outset of the experiment in Waco, a "shocker" hit the courtroom. The three-person jury awarded the plaintiff, a paraplegic, $3 million in damages. But the six-person jury, which took another day to reach a verdict, awarded him nothing. The plaintiff had been paralyzed after a jack under a mobile home he was working on failed.

"THEY THOUGHT it (the experiment) was cruel and unusual punishment," Bunton said of the plaintiff's side, which, of course, got no money.

Newspaper launches Midland Cheer Fund

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has launched what is hoped will become the annual Midland Cheer Fund, a citywide project to provide food on Christmas for Midland's less fortunate citizens.

Recipients of Midland Cheer will be selected in cooperation with local church organizations and the Department of Human Resources to help insure that the most deserving benefit from the project and to avoid duplication of recipients in conjunction with existing holiday food programs.

Food will be provided at cost by Gibson's Discount Center.

The newspaper will receive contributions and management and staff members will select, sack and deliver the Cheer baskets on Saturday, Dec. 22.

In announcing the project, George B. Irish, publisher, said, "Our goal is to become increasingly involved in worthwhile civic projects and participating in the Christmas in April program has been most rewarding to our employees. In looking for ways to do more, and realizing there currently is no citywide Christmas Cheer program, we believe such a project will compliment those that are sponsored by churches and civic organizations on a more limited basis."

A $500 Reporter-Telegram contribution has been made to kick off the Christmas Cheer Fund, Irish said.

As contributions begin arriving, a list of donors will be published regularly on the newspaper's front page. Contributors who wish to remain anonymous should state so when they make their gift and their name will not be published.

Those who would like to join in spreading Midland Cheer this Christmas should make checks payable to Midland Cheer Fund and mail them to Midland Cheer, c/o The Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702. They also may be brought to the newspaper office.

More rain due in Basin through week, NWS says

From Staff and Wire Reports

More of the rain that deluged Midland Saturday may fall again later on in the week with a few days of nice weather in between, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Torrents of rain dropped over one- and-a-half inches of precipitation Saturday, the Weather Service said. Scattered showers are possible again today and more rain is predicted for late Thursday.

But a slow warming trend is expected for the early part of next week. Monday will have partly cloudy skies and continued cool weather, but the weather should start warming up on Tuesday and continue on through Thursday.

"It will be pretty fair during the week," said a NWS spokesman. "Temperatures should stay in the 50s and 60s."

At least one traffic accident was attributed to the wet weather this weekend. Traffic was blocked for over five hours on Interstate 20, near Stanton, when a tractor-trailer rig overturned after losing control on the rain-slicked highway.

Father says he didn't expect to be jailed for not testifying

HOUSTON (AP) — A man jailed for nearly two months because he refused to talk to a grand jury investigating a murder charge against his teen-age son says he and his wife didn't expect to be locked up when they decided not to testify.

Bernard Port said he and his wife, Odette, never consulted a lawyer before deciding not to cooperate in the investigation of Debora Sue Schatz's shooting death.

"When we went in, we didn't expect this would happen," Port said Friday, the first time he has discussed his imprisonment at any length with reporters. "We just did what we thought was right."

Port was freed Nov. 9 after a state district judge ruled his answers to a grand jury's questions last week were sufficient to clear him of a contempt of court charge. His wife remains jailed, having refused to answer about six questions that prosecutors put to her last week.

"Odette is a true American," Port said.

The couple agreed to testify after the grand jury's term was extended until Jan. 31.

Their attorney, Randy Schaffer, said the questions Mrs. Port refused to answer deal strictly with the killing, an offense which cannot be pursued further by the grand jury now that it has issued a murder indictment. Schaffer argues the panel must limit itself to seeking evidence of other crimes.

The Ports were jailed Sept. 12. Prosecutors have never alleged the parents were involved in any wrongdoing in the death of Ms. Schatz, but contend they have information vital to the grand jury investigation.

Prosecutors have said that information might warrant upgrading the indictment against David Port, 17, to capital murder.

STATE

Bernard Port limited the questions he would answer in Friday's interview, declining to talk about his son.

Ms. Schatz, a 23-year-old mail carrier, disappeared June 7 while on her rounds in the Ports' affluent west Houston neighborhood. Her body was found two days later in a remote area of northwest Harris County.

David Port is free on $20,000 bond.

State and federal courts have thrown out Schaffer's arguments that the elder Ports should not have to give evidence against David under a principle similar to that which protects spouses from testifying against each other in Texas courts.

They have also denied Schaffer's contention that it is a violation of the Ports' Jewish religion to force them to bear witness against a relative.

Bernard Port repeated the praise he had for his wife the day he was released from jail.

"She's staying in there for the love of a husband. All I can find is beauty that there is someone who's done something for me," he said. "My concern is my wife and the sacrifice she made for me. She was the hero. I was the father. It was expected of me."

Licenses of midwives suspended following birth of stillborn baby

EL PASO (AP) — The licenses of two El Paso midwives were suspended for 30 days following an investigation into the birth of a stillborn child, officials of the city's Lay Midwifery Commission say.

"The commission felt the midwives waited too long to transport the mother and the baby to the hospital," Carolyn Routledge, chairwoman of the commission and a certified nurse midwife, said Friday.

Officials say a 19-year-old woman gave birth to a stillborn child on Nov. 4 while under the care of Diane Holzer and Velia Rodriguez, two of about 20 lay midwives licensed to practice in El Paso County.

The woman, giving birth to her first child, was taken to Thomason General Hospital by the two midwives after they detected low heart sounds from the baby.

By the time the mother arrived at the hospital, however, the baby was dead and doctors had to deliver the child by Caesarean section, Ms. Routledge said.

The Midwifery Commission, a nine-member board that issues licenses and enforces city and county ordinances concerning lay midwives, appointed a subcommittee to investigate the case.

The suspensions are the first by the commission since it was created about four years ago, Ms. Routledge said.

The women were accused of violating part of an ordinance that requires a midwife to consult a doctor in case of breathing problems or any type of heart distress in the fetus.

"This is not a witch hunt, but we will see that the law will be enforced," Ms. Routledge said. "The bottom line is that we want to ensure safe care for mothers and babies."

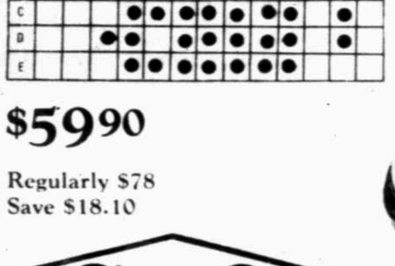

Ms. Holzer and Ms. Rodriguez are midwives with the Alameda Maternity Center.

Shari Daniels, director of the center, called the suspensions unfair.

"It seemed a little unfair to me that their licenses were immediately jerked. It's a pretty heavy slap on the hand considering that they're emotionally upset," Ms. Daniels said.

Attorneys charged with concealing evidence in murder case

KERRVILLE (AP) — Two attorneys who formerly represented defendants accused of killing a drifter enslaved on a Hill Country ranch have been indicted on charges of tampering with evidence in the case.

A Kerr County grand jury on Friday indicted Richard Mosty and Thomas Pollard, District Attorney Joe Mike Egan said

"They are charged with concealing evidence with the intent to hinder its availability as evidence in the investigation," Egan said. He declined to be more specific.

Mosty and Pollard represented three members of the Walter W. Ellebracht family before noted Houston attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes took charge of their defense.

Attempts by The Associated Press to reach Mosty and Pollard for comment Saturday were unsuccessful.

Walter W. Ellebracht, 53, his son, Walter Ellebracht Jr., 31, and the younger Ellebracht's wife, Joyce, 29, are charged along with six other defendants with organized crime in the March torture-slaying of Anthony Bates.

Authorities allege Bates was tortured with an electric cattle prod at the Ellebracht's spralling ranch in the Texas Hill Country before his body was burned.

Prosecutors also allege the Ellebrachts lured Bates and other drifters to their ranch with the promise of work, then forced them to stay.

The case against Mosty and Pollard was brought before the grand jury at the request of County Attorney H. Ritman Jones.

The Ellebrachts and the other defendants, all former drifters at the ranch, have yet to come to trial.

Investigators in the case told the Kerrville Daily Times Pollard and Mosty are accused of taking a jacket with a bullet hole in it, tapes purported to be recordings of a torture session, chains, handcuffs and a dagger from the Ellebracht ranch after law officers started their investigation.

An officer involved in the investigation told the newspaper that the items were surrendered by the attorneys after they were confronted with a federal subpoena shortly after the case broke.

The officer, who was not identified, said a witness involved in the tampering case is in custody in Orlando, Fla., and will be returned to Kerrville.

The witness was staying at the Ellebracht ranch when the evidence was removed, the officer said.

Egan said the misdemeanor case wold be turned over to the Kerr County attorney Monday and will be handled in county court.

STATE in brief

Levi Strauss will be laying off 50 employees

EL PASO (AP) — Fifty employees of Levi Strauss will be laid off when the company moves its Western-wear pressing operation from El Paso to Roswell, N.M., a company spokesman said and another 245 workers will be transferred to other plants in El Paso when the plant closes.

The 59 pressers who are laid off will be offered jobs in other plants whenever openings occur, Levi's public relations officer, Martin Krasney, said Friday.

Levi employs 2,788 people in seven El Paso locations.

In September, the jeans maker announced a 65 percent decline in third-quarter profits. The drop in sales and earnings was attributed to loss of jeans sales, increase in the cost of raw materials, higher advertising costs and operating inefficiencies as plants closed and layoffs continued.

Teen says he killed woman

HOUSTON (AP) — A 19-year-old who wept on the witness stand as he was questioned by a prosecutor, then admitted killing a woman as she gave her baby a Christmas present, has been sentenced to seven years in prison.

Louis Kevin Rigsby pleaded guilty Friday to a charge of involuntary manslaughter, a day after he broke under questioning by prosecutor Joe Magliolo. Rigsby said on the stand he was sorry he shot 21-year-old Deborah Arlene Arnold.

Magliolo said Rigsby at first testified that he was carrying a .22-caliber rifle down a street, planning to go hunting, and that the gun discharged when he spun around. He said he went home not knowing where the shot went. But then Rigsby admitted under questioning he aimed at the mailbox of Mrs. Arnold's house.

Magliolo said Mrs. Arnold was handing her 2-year-old son a Christmas present when the bullet shot through a window and struck her in front of her husband and parents. He said Mrs. Arnold's mother grabbed the baby and threw him on the floor, then ran into a back bedroom. He said the mother, through another window, saw Rigsby with a rifle.

Murchison owes hotel

DALLAS (AP) — A state district judge says he intends to award more than $5 million to Marriott Corp. from Clint Murchison Jr. and a Murchison company known as Tecon Hotel Corp.

Judge Joe Burnett last week ordered Marriott officials to draft a final judgment specifying the exact amount owed as a result of a 1979 agreement by Murchison and Tecon Hotel to participate in the establishment of Marriott's Pavilion Hotel in St. Louis.

In other court cases this year, more than $20 million has been awarded to creditors suing Murchison — the former owner of the National Football League's Dallas Cowboys — his companies and business partners.

In all, creditors are seeking more than $110 million from Murchison and his companies, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

Strake tells Hispanics they helped Reagan

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican Hispanics were told Saturday that their efforts helped President Reagan carry a number of key counties — and Texas.

State GOP Chairman George Strake said the group helped Reagan carry 19 of the 25 counties with the largest Hispanic population. Overall, Reagan captured 35 of the 46 counties with more than 5,000 voting age Hispanics, he said.

"We came together in harmony and unity and vindicated ourselves for what happened in 1982," said Strake, referring to Democratic Gov. Mark White's win over then-incumbent Republican Bill Clements.

A report prepared by Bob Bailon, the party's Hispanic coordinator for Texas, said the GOP made impressive in-roads in traditionally Democratic Hispanic areas, especially South Texas.

"The gains in that zone were truly noteworthy in the traditional Rio Grande Valley home of the Democrats," Bailon said.

Reagan carried Cameron County and ran surprisingly well in Hidalgo and Willacy counties.

"We at the Republican Party firmly believe that in Texas the Hispanic vote in support of President Reagan was between 36-41 percent," the Bailon report said.

Showers from Texas and New Mexico to the Northeast and in parts of Washington and Oregon, along with rain from Mississippi to the Virginias and snow flurries for the Great Lakes and parts of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana and Nevada are forecast for today by the National Weather Service.

WEATHER

According to the Texas Department of Public Safety, a semi-trailer rig driven by Colon Gray Merrill of Bedford, lost traction in the east-bound lane of Interstate 20 and jack-knifed. The truck hit the median and rolled one-and-a-half times before coming to a rest on its side in the west-bound lane of the highway.

The truck blocked traffic in the west-bound lane for over five hours before it could be moved. No injuries were reported.

The Midland Police Department reported other weather-related accidents Saturday, but all were minor with no injuries.

STATE

A change in Texas weather was underway over portions of the state Saturday as wet conditions moved into the northwest ahead of a wintry cold front.

Rain falling over the northwest half of the state from the Rio Grande to the Red River marked the change Saturday afternoon, the National Weather Service reported.

The cold weather still north of Texas was moving behind the rain, but it was advancing steadily to the south. Increasing odds for heavy rain ahead of the chill prompted a flash flood watch for the Hill Country Saturday.

Rain mixed with freezing rain or snow was expected in the Panhandle as colder air arrived there late Saturday, the weather service said.

The messy weather should continue through Sunday as high temperatures begin falling into the 60s and 70s for most of the state while remaining in the 40s over the northwest sections.

The cold and wet weather was expected statewide by Monday as weather typical of mid-November plowed well to the south. High temperatures on Monday were expected to stay mostly in the 40s and lower 50s, with South Texas registering a few 60-degree highs.

NATION

Rain, sleet and snow fell across the central Plains on Saturday, a wet, windy weather system moved across the Pacific Northwest, and bitter cold temperatures hit parts of Georgia and Tennessee.

Mixed precipitation fell across northwestern Arkansas, eastern Kansas, western Missouri and south-central Iowa.

A trace of snow was reported at Topeka, Kan., with a trace of sleet at Olathe, Kan. Rain, sleet and snow fell in Missouri at Kansas City and Grandview and in Iowa at Des Moines, Osceola and Lamoni. Rain and sleet was reported at Joplin, Mo., and rain and snow fell at St. Joseph, Mo.

Snow also fell as far south as northwestern Arkansas with snow and sleet reported in Benton and Boone counties.

Stockmen's advisories were posted for southwestern Kansas during the afternoon and for southwestern and north-central Kansas during the night.

Rain fell during the afternoon over parts of the central and southern Plains and western sections of the middle and lower Mississippi Valley

Wide Sikh conspiracy alleged

By BRAHMA CHELLANEY
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India — The investigation into Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's assassination spawned new reports Saturday of a wide-ranging conspiracy by members of the Sikh minority, living inside India and abroad.

The independent Hindustan Times newspaper reported in its Sunday editions that the government "is processing papers for the extradition" from Britain of Jagjit Singh Chauhan, head of a movement by a small minority of Sikhs to convert Punjab state into a separate Sikh nation.

The newspaper said the government would charge Chauhan with conspiring to "wage a war against the state," and other offenses. Chauhan, who lives in Reading, England, publicly called for Mrs. Gandhi's assassination last June in reprisal for the army attack on the Sikhs' holiest shrine, the Golden Temple in Amritsar.

Chauhan said after Mrs. Gandhi's death that her son and successor, Rajiv Gandhi, was her accomplice and also would be killed. Last week, India said Chauhan's statements incited violence against Indian leaders, and asked Britain to prosecute him. The British Foreign Office is studying the request.

Asked about the extradition report, Chauhan's personal assistant, Ajit Singh Khera, told The Associated Press in London: "They've been doing that for years. If they've got a case they should go to the courts, not to the newspapers."

Khera denied Chauhan was behind the assassination. Mrs. Gandhi "violated the holiest of Sikh shrines" and "the whole nation passed an execution sentence on her," he said.

Meanwhile, the Calcutta-based Stateman newspaper on Sunday reported the arrest of a Sikh militant who allegedly administered an oath to the assassins in which they pledged to kill Mrs. Gandhi to avenge the attack on the Golden Temple. It said Kair Singh would be charged with participating in a murder conspiracy.

Several more people have been arrested in connection with the assassination, including a New Delhi businessman, a Kashmir state resident and some policemen, the Statesman said.

Neither newspaper report could be confirmed independently.

An Indian government spokesman declined comment Saturday on press reports that investigators want to extradite a former Indian diplomat from Norway for involvement in a conspiracy to kill Mrs. Gandhi.

"I've nothing to say on that," External Affairs Ministry spokesman Salman Haidar said, adding that he was not aware of any extradition request.

The Hindustan Times alleged earlier that former envoy I. Harinder Singh, a Sikh, paid $100,000 to one of the suspected assassins. The Indian government has accused two men, both Sikh members of Mrs. Gandhi's personal security detail, in the Oct. 31 shooting. One of the men was slain by other guards and the second was wounded.

In Oslo, Harinder Singh denied he conspired to assassinate Mrs. Gandhi. "Such an allegation is ridiculous," a Norwegian newspaper quoted him as saying Saturday, "I never had contact with the killers. Now I'm afraid. Anything can happen to me and my family."

Harinder Singh, 37, resigned as India's charge d'affaires in Oslo and applied for political asylum in June after the army stormed the heavily fortified Golden Temple to flush out Sikh terrorists. The government later said about 600 people died in the fighting, but reliable sources have put the toll at about 1,200.

The press reports were the latest in a series of unconfirmed stories on the assassination plot and alleged confessions of Satwant Singh, 22, a security guard identified by the government as one of the two men who shot Mrs. Gandhi.

Some news reports have linked senior army and police officers with the killing. P.S. Bhinder, a former New Delhi police commissioner, complained he was the victim of scurrilous rumors merely because is a Sikh.

Other reports have said wealthy Sikh militants living in Western countries financed an assassination plot. At least one newspaper suggested that the extremists were backed by a foreign intelligence service.

Authorities have refused to disclose the number of people arrested in connection with the assassination. Among the large number of people believed detained are relatives of the two killers.

No government statement has been made on the shooting of Satwant Singh and the other guard, Beant Singh, 36, by members of an elite commando unit 15 minutes after the prime minister had been riddled with more than 20 bullets outside her residence.

One report said that Beant Singh and Satwant Singh were shot inside the prime minister's security office despite laying down their arms.

Singh is part of the names of all of India's 13 million Sikhs.

Satwant Singh, partially paralyzed by a bullet in his spine, is being interrogated under heavy security at Delhi's 17th-century Red Fort, a sprawling sandstone complex built by a Moghul emperor, reports said.

A city magistrate ordered him detained for 15 days after he was discharged from the hospital last Thursday.

Night session will keep jurors away from movie

By BOB SPRINGER
Associated Press Writer

ROCKFORD, Ill. — The trial of a man accused of killing his wife and three children will move to rare night sessions Sunday and Monday so jurors cannot see a made-for-television movie about an Army doctor convicted of murdering his family.

The scheduling change was ordered at the request of defense lawyers in the murder trial of businessman David Hendricks because of the broadcast of NBC's two-part dramatization "Fatal Vision."

A prosecutor says there are some "striking" similarities between the Hendricks case and the subject of the NBC mini-series, the 1979 conviction of Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, a former Green Beret physician, on charges of murdering his pregnant wife and their two daughters.

Hendricks, 30, a back-brace inventor and salesman from Bloomington, is charged in the Nov. 7, 1983, ax and knife slayings of his wife and three youngsters. He denies committing the killings, contending he was in Wisconsin on a sales trip when his family was slain and his home ransacked.

Hendricks' lawyers contend that two or more people invaded the house and murdered Susan Hendricks, 30, and the couple's two daughters, ages 9 and 7, and son, age 5.

Prosecutors say Hendricks hacked his family to death and then went to Wisconsin to set up an alibi. They say he was driven to the deed by an inner conflict between his fundamentalist religious beliefs and sexual feelings for young women who modeled his patented brace.

The movie "Fatal Vision," based on the best-selling book by Joe McGinniss, details the case of MacDonald, whose conviction came nine years after the killings of his family.

"We think that the effect of that (movie) ... could prejudice the jury for both parties," said John Long, one of Hendricks' two lawyers.

Two weeks ago, the defense asked that Hendricks' jury be ordered not to watch any television promotions for "Fatal Vision," and that arrangements be made to ensure that the jurors, who are not sequestered, not see the movie.

At the Midland end, Scharbauer Bros. & Co. has begun development of a 315-acre planned community on the north side of the road's intersection with Loop 250. Recently, the Scharbauers applied for annexation of about 85 acres on the south side of the intersection for a small shopping center, said Sam Listi, Midland's assistant director of planning.

At the Odessa end, the Odessa City Council voted in March to annex 146 acres Murphy & Rochester has slated for mixed development to include residential and commercial construction and drilling sites.

Apparently, those three developments are the only ones planned along S.H. 191.

But HBF's 10,000 acres (part of what was the 40,000 acre Faudree-Parks Ranch) and the Scharbauer's 19,000 acres include most of the land bordering the link road. Both developers have master plans to develop larger portions of their holdings in response to the area's growth.

Only a line on Highway Department maps until its mid-March opening, S.H. 191 is already serving as a major travel route for Petroplex commuters and figures to be lined by mixed development in the near future.

JUDGMENT

Had he been both judge and jury, Bunton said he would have given the man "some money, but I didn't decide the case." However, the judge said he would have not awarded $3 million due to comparative negligence; Bunton said he felt the man was partly at fault for his own injury. The plaintiff had contended the warning on the jack was inadequate.

The range of jury agreements, which Bunton said could vary from 65 to 85 percent, wasn't "too surprising in that most verdicts are defendant's verdicts." And that "kind of proves up the old adage: 'Most good cases don't go to trial; most sorry ones do.'"

What he calls good cases often are settled prior to trial or are compromised.

"The experiment also proves to me," Bunton said, "that jurors are interested in what other jurors would do.... I enjoyed doing it. The jurors were most cooperative."

The jury which reached a verdict first, which 90 percent of the time was the three-member jury, would wait around to see what the other jury did.

"I don't think it was curiosity," the judge said. "They're looking for some affirmation that what they did was right." He said the men and women on both juries were conscientious, as the law so directs them to be, and rendered true verdicts.

BASED ON EACH jury's make-up, demeanor, sex and personality, Bunton said he in some cases could explain "in my mind" why the jury rendered its particular verdict. "In others, I have no explanation why they went that way."

Bunton plans to write a report on the year-old experiment and will submit his findings to his fellow judges and to the Judicial Center, which would disseminate the information throughout the federal judiciary.

Any change from the six-person jury to the three-person jury or giving judges and/or trial attorneys the option of choosing either type of jury for civil trials would require a formal change in court rules.

"If they (attorneys) want to do it, I think the judge should accede to their wishes," Bunton said, if the three-person civil jury ever became an option.

"I think the court, in its discretion, ought to be able to allow or mandate that the cases be tried by a three-person jury" if the amount in dispute does not exceed $50,000.

"Beyond that, I think they ought to continue in the six-person jury judgments." However, if attorneys for both sides were to request the three-person jury in a case that went into the millions of dollars and "If that's what they want to do, it's fine with me."

"TO NO ONE'S surprise," Bunton said, the plaintiff's bar "felt more comfortable (with the three-juror experiment) and thought it was a better idea than did the defendant's bar."

Defense attorneys, he explained, apparently feared that if the three-person jury system were adopted in civil cases, then the next step might be to reduce the number of jurors in criminal trials from 12 to six.

"I suspect prosecutors would be in favor of trying it with a six-person jury. (But) I don't know that." The premise is that fewer jurors would reduce chances for dissension among the jurors and would cut down on hung juries, which are victories for the defense.

While Bunton is pondering his experiment, segments of the bar and court "feel that the jury system in some instances is antiquated and too slow." Advocates of the non-jury system for civil cases contend that it is unfair to ask laymen who have "no feeling" and "no knowledge" for technical and complicated matters, such as copyright and patent law and computer disputes and anti-trust matters, to decide issues.

Bunton noted that England, from whence the United States got its judicial system, still employs the jury system for criminal trials but has shucked it for civil trials except for libel cases.

"'It's working in England and why not here?'" some jurists have proposed.

Bunton is pro-jury.

"I firmly believe that juries ought to make determinations of fact," he said. "I recognize it's slower." Judges decide on issues of law. And he acknowledged that sometimes the courts are "asking jurors to make decisions on matters they know absolutely nothing about."

"Most of the time, justice is served, and they (jurors) reach the correct verdict. I don't always agree with them." The judge often is privy to information, including backgrounds of witnesses and facts about a case, with which the jury is not apprised. "That can't help but color my thinking," Bunton said.

"Justice is served (via the jury system). The jurors make the right decision based on the information that they have. So, I don't want to abolish the jury system."

Prison inmates injured in brawl

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — A Texas prison inmate was stabbed twice in the back and another suffered a broken arm during a brawl involving a third prisoner early Saturday, officials said.

Investigators were uncertain what prompted the incident at the Texas Department of Corrections' Beto 1 Unit, but said it may have been an outgrowth of pressure for sexual favors, said prison spokesman Phil Guthrie.

Willard Bell, 24, serving a 4-year sentence for unauthorized use of a vehicle, was taken to Palestine Memorial Hospital in stable condition, Guthrie said.

Terry Mayo, 25, serving a 10-year sentence for aggravated sexual abuse, was transferred to nearby Beto 2 Unit with a broken arm, he said.

The third prisoner, Dwight Taylor, 23, who was sentenced to 10 years for burglary of a habitation in Brazoria County, was not harmed and later placed in pre-hearing detention at Beto 2, he said.

Investigators said Mayo apparently attacked Bell in a unit dayroom about 12:15 a.m., Guthrie said.

When Taylor saw what was happening, he picked up a board and struck Mayo, he said. The pair struggled briefly with guards.

Two weapons — a butter knife that had been sharpened and a knife fashioned from a piece of metal — were found later in the dayroom, Guthrie said.

The incident came about 11 hours after three inmates were stabbed by six other prisoners in Brazoria in a hallway at the TDC's Clemens Unit, which houses primarily young convicts.

Murderer thought he would be subject of book, film

DALLAS (AP) — Mass murderer Abdelkrim Belachheb vowed before his conviction he would be "out on the streets in two months" and predicted his life would be chronicled in a book and movie.

Officials at the Lew Sterrett Justice Center, where Belachheb was held pending trial on charges of killing six people June 29 at a north Dallas restaurant, said he scanned the newspapers each day, saving the articles about himself and the shootings.

The Morocco native also was the subject of the most intense security measures since Jack Ruby — the accused killer of suspected presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald — was held 21 years ago, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

Belachheb, 39, was convicted Thursday and sentenced to six consecutive life prison sentences after a jury rejected his plea of innocent by reason of insanity. He also was sentenced to 20 years for attempted murder and fined $70,000 — the maximum possible punishment.

Jail officials said Belachheb believed he would be exonerated after his wife hired defense attorney Frank Jackson, known locally for his successful handling of insanity pleas.

They said he planned to divided the royalties from a book and movie about his life between his wife, his former wife in Europe and himself.

"It was almost like he didn't think he was in jail," said sheriff's Lt. H.B. Sherman, who as night watch commander loaned Belachheb a pack of cigarettes one day and immediately was taken into his trust. "He really believed it was all going to work out for him."

Sherman said Belachheb spoke of what he was going to do after he was found innocent.

"In his mind, he was convinced he would be out on the streets in two months," Sherman said. "He said he would go back to Europe because 'money is no object over there.'"

Jail personnel worked around the clock to ensure he was not hurt by another prisoner. After Belachheb attempted suicide by slashing his arms, guards worked to ensure he did not hurt himself.

"It put a tremendous strain on our operations," said Major Bob Knowles, jail commander. "This county hasn't had to provide such security since way back when Jack Ruby was in jail."

From the day of his arrest, Belaccheb had his own cell, which he kept meticulous, and his own shower. He was kept in the infirmary ward, where it was easier to isolate him from the other 2,000 inmates, Knowles said.

"We kept him away from the general population because we didn't know who else might be a friend or a relative of the victims," Knowles said. "The sheer magnitude of the crime meant there were a lot of people with scores to settle."

Officials also said they received reports of numerous threats against Belachheb during his stay at the jail.

To guard against Belachheb harming himself, a jailer standing less than 10 feet away always had a clear view of the prisoner. The lights in the cell were left on 24 hours a day and an intercom monitored any noise coming from the cell.

"Nothing was going to happen to jeopardize his coming to trial," Knowles said. "We did it that way for his protection and our protection."

Sherman said that as Belachheb became more accustomed to his surroundings, his demands increased.

"He's got to have the limelight," Sherman said. "He wants attention. He constantly tried to manipulate our system. He's good at it."

In one incident, officials said, Belachheb faked a heart attack. He once refused to wear a pair of jail coveralls because they had stains on them. He refused to eat his food if it was served on a paper plate instead of a plastic one.

Knowles said jail officials decided to transfer Belachheb to a state prison unit just two hours after he was sentenced Thursday.

"We wanted to get him out of here as fast as we could so we could get back to normal operations," Knowles said. "We'd had enough of him."

As he was transferred Thursday afternoon from the jail to an unmarked patrol car for the trip to prison, Belachheb was seen crying and walking unsteadily to the car.

Lawyer thinks Belachheb verdict 'setback' in use of insanity defense

By CANDICE HUGHES
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Defense attorney Frank Jackson knew immediately what had gone wrong with the insanity defense he had mounted on behalf of mass murderer Abdelkrim Belachheb.

"The sheer magnitude of the carnage overcame the intellectual aspects of the case," Jackson said after his client got six consecutive life sentences for murder plus another 20 years for attempted murder on Thursday.

Jackson and prosecutor Norman Kinne say the case is one of the few tried under a stricter law enacted by Texas lawmakers after John Hinckley Jr. was acquitted of trying to assassinate President Reagan by reason of insanity.

Jackson thinks the verdict in the Belachheb case was a setback for the insanity defense, a rarely used tactic that is historically unpopular with Texas juries.

"We were trying a principle in this courtrom," Jackson said. "We weren't trying Abdelkrim Belachheb."

If Jackson is correct, the principle took a serious drubbing at the hands of a youthful Dallas jury and a stern judge known as the "Iron Maiden."

Jurors deliberated only a few hours before convicting Belachheb and meeting out the harshest possible punishment for the June 29 shooting spree at a private Dallas nightclub.

State District Judge Gerry Meier pronounced sentence within minutes of the final verdict, stacking the life terms end to end.

Kinne, the chief felony prosecutor for Dallas County, does not agree that the Belaccheb conviction will discourage the use of the insanity defense.

Mass murderer Abdelkrim Belachheb is escorted to his cell after he was convicted Thursday in the deaths of six people at a Dallas nightclub.

"I think if an individual is truly insane, then, certainly — that is your defense," he said.

Jackson, one of the most successful practitioners of the insanity defense in Dallas, took on the Belachheb case at his own expense. He hired psychologists and psychiatrists and flew in expert witnesses from Boston.

The experts said the 39-year-old Moroccan native is a brain-damaged paranoid who couldn't tell right from wrong when he began methodically shooting people off their barstools at Ianni's Restaurant and Club.

Under current Texas law, a jury must find the defendant suffered from a mental disease or defect so severe he or she cannot tell the difference between right and wrong.

Jackson wanted a jury of older men, he said, "men of substance, men who were used to authority, to making decisions. Objective and not swayed by emotions."

When he saw few potential jurors that fit this profile, Jackson said he opted for young women who seemed "thoughtful." He said he had won two acquittals and had a hung jury in previous insanity defense cases with similar juries.

Prosecutors countered Jackson's case with explicit and often emotional evidence of the crime and the testimony of two experts who said the defendant was sane — a "sociopath."

"He is interested only in self-gratification and pleasure...and manipulating others. He has a complete disregard for human lives except his own," said Dr. James Grigson, a psychiatrist known as "Doctor Death" for his frequent testimony in capital murder trials.

In contrast to the defense witnesses, who spent a total of more than 150 hours testing and examining Belachheb, Grigson readily admitted his conclusion was based on an interview less than two hours long.

When the last witness had spoken and the eight women and four men on the jury finally began to deliberate, there was little doubt.

Their initial ballot showed eight votes for conviction and four undecided, said one juror. Within a matter of hours, the verdict was unanimous: guilty as charged on all counts.

American, Delta increase fares to cities abandoned by Braniff

DALLAS (AP) — American Airlines and Delta Air Lines have sharply increased fares on routes from Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport to five major cities abandoned earlier this month by Braniff Inc.

The new fares will be in force throughout the holiday travel season, the airlines said.

American and Delta have raised prices on flights from Dallas-Fort Worth to Detroit, Kansas City, Newark, Miami and Philadelphia. Braniff stopped service to those cities and five others Nov. 5 in the face of heavy losses since the resurrected carrier began flying again in March.

Round-trip tickets, if bought seven days in advance, now cost between $140 and $200 more than when Braniff was flying to those cities. Prices of tickets bought on shorter notice and at the time of departure are significantly higher.

Before Braniff's cutbacks, the price of its peak daytime round-trip flight to Philadelphia was $318, a price matched by American and Delta. The same round-trip, with an advance ticket purchase, now costs $459. A ticket on the day of departure is $682.

A ticket from Dallas-Fort Worth to Miami was $198 when Braniff was flying there. Now a round-trip ticket on American or Delta bought in advance costs $457 — while a ticket bought at the time of departure is $620.

Mafia suspect pleads innocent to charges

NEW YORK (AP) — A man accused of running a $1.6 billion heroin ring like a "multinational corporation," using pizzerias as fronts, has pleaded innocent to narcotics charges following his extradition from Spain.

Gaetano Badalamenti, 61, who officials say is the former "chairman of the board" of the Sicilian Mafia, was arraigned Friday under heavy security in U.S. District Court in Manhattan.

His nephew, Pietro Alfano, 51, pleaded innocent to similar charges.

According to U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani, Badalamenti was the overseas boss of a drug ring operated in New York by a Sicilian faction of the Bonanno underworld family. The ring allegedly shipped $1.6 billion worth of heroin into the United States in the last five years, using Sicilian-operated pizzerias as fronts.

"I'm not sure that we ever had a drug dealer of the dimension of Badalamenti — ever," Giuliani said, adding that the so-called "Pizza Connection" ring was run like a "multinational corporation... They were operating all over the world."

Because of Badalamenti's alleged position as former head of the "Sicilian Commission," the top Mafia organization in Sicily, there have been fears that associates might try to murder him to keep him from talking.

Giuliani stressed that Badalamenti is "not cooperating with the government."

Badalamenti and Alfano were flown to New York from Madrid Thursday night and escorted to a federal jail by marshals armed with shotguns and submachine guns.

U.S. District Judge Pierre N. Leval continued another judge's order under which Badalamenti was being held without bail and Alfano's bail was set at $10 million.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Martin said Badalamenti was a fugitive from Italian justice and has been accused by officials in Italy of "arranging and agreeing to multiple homicides."

Badalamenti, a native of Cinisi, Sicily, listened to the proceedings through a court interpreter who whispered in his ear. Neither he nor Alfano, of Oregon, Ill., spoke during the hearing.

Reagan in seclusion for holiday

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan arrived in California on Saturday for an eight-day Thanksgiving holiday after a week of closed-door, business-as-usual meetings that gave no outward sign that he had just won re-election by one of the largest landslides in history.

After the five-hour flight to California, the president went into seclusion at his mountaintop ranch near Santa Barbara until he returns to the White House Nov. 25.

It was just six days ago that Reagan left his 688-acre spread in the Santa Ynez Mountains to return to the nation's capital to give "no tax increase" marching orders to his staff as it prepares the fiscal year 1986 budget.

During Reagan's brief stay at the White House last week, there was no indication that he was reaching out to his opponents or those who voted against him in the Nov. 6 election.

Reagan attended two Cabinet meetings, entertained Grand Duke Jean of Luxembourg, had a meeting with his foreign policy advisers and received a live turkey in the Rose Garden — all activities he would have participated in despite the election.

The White House arranged brief picture-taking sessions of Reagan's receipt of the turkey, and the opening of one of the Cabinet meetings. But the president has been totally out of public view for six of the 12 days since the election.

When reporters did see Reagan and attempt to ask questions, he usually dismissed them with a one-line retort. In addition, two press interviews Reagan had scheduled last week were canceled. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said it was because the president didn't yet have any definite second-term plans to talk about.

Speakes, when asked, said last week that Reagan wanted at some point to meet with his vanquished Democratic challenger, Walter F. Mondale, and his running mate, Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro. But that apparently will wait until after Reagan returns from his ranch.

In addition, Speakes had said after Reagan's landslide re-election that the president would be looking for ways to unify the nation to show he intended to be president of all Americans, but no such symbolic display occurred last week.

AP Laserphoto

President Reagan is welcomed to southern California by Emily Wilkinson, 8, and her mother, Firth, of Santa Barbara. The Reagans are spending the Thanksgiving holiday at their California ranch.

However, Vice President George Bush appeared to be carrying a message of reconciliation, saying at the funeral of Martin Luther King Sr., that now was "a time for healing, a time to bring the country together," emphasizing he would like to help in that effort.

At the White House, there was near total preoccupation with the budget process. A budget working group of 12 top administration officials met throughout the week, trying to define in which programs to cut federal spending and to decide what the budget deficit should be at the end of fiscal year 1986.

At the end of the week, the group had not concluded its work, and Speakes said Reagan would not be given the group's recommendations — and would make no decisions — until he returns from California.

Various members of the budget group scattered for the Thanksgiving holiday, and it was likely the group would not even hold any more meetings for a week.

On Saturday during the flight to California, deputy White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater refused to confirm or deny a report that administration officials were aiming at reducing the federal deficit to $150 billion by 1988.

"We don't have any budget numbers to talk about," he told reporters aboard Air Force One.

However, he said the budget of top administration officials that met several times last week was in the process of deciding that the deficit target as well as what areas of the budget to cut spending.

"That's what they have been talking about all week among other things," he said. "As far as I know they have not set specific targets."

Fitzwater said their objective was to "get the deficits as low as possible."

The deficit this fiscal year is estimated in the $200 billion range.

Fitzwater said Reagan had no meetings scheduled at his ranch this week on the budget or any other topics.

The president came out of his enclosed compartment on the aircraft several times during the flight to talk to various staff members in forward compartments.

One aide later told reporters Reagan told several Irish jokes.

Fitzwater said the administration was "pleased by the tone" of answers by the Soviet leader, Constantine Chernenko, to written questions submitted by NBC News.

Fitzwater said Chernenko's responses have "some positive value."

Female soldiers should serve in missile silos, group says

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Female soldiers should serve in missile silos like their male counterparts, and the Pentagon should consider allowing some women in technical specialties into combat situations, the Department of Defense's Advisory Committee on Women said Saturday.

The committee, however, opposed totally scrapping the combat exclusionary law, which prohibits women from active front-line duty.

"From a political standpoint, a military standpoint, the standpoint of everyone involved, it is not the right atmosphere right now to make that decision," said committee member Yvonne Alford, staff manager for majority leader Ramona Barnes of the Alaska House of Representatives.

The recommendations from the committee's semi-annual meeting will be forwarded to Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger.

The committee asked the Defense Department to study changing job classifications to allow certain women specialists to be exempted from the combat exclusionary law. It did not say which classifications might be affected.

The committee has existed for 31 years to advise the Department of Defense on military matters affecting women. It is made up mostly of women political, education and governmental leaders.

In a session that ended the group's weeklong meeting, committee members recommended that the Air Force assign women as launch-control officers to the Minuteman-Peacekeeper missile. The Air Force already is studying such a move, the committee said.

That item passed the session with little fanfare after committee members were assured the Air Force either would build walls or hang privacy curtains in missile silos should a crew of men and women work the same shifts.

More controversial was the item calling for reclassification of some jobs that would put women into combat situations. It also asks the Pentagon to consider allowing women onto some combat support ships where they are now prohibited.

Ms. Alford said the committee was simply asking the military to study the issue, rather than advocating immediate job changes.

Proponents of the recommendations said it had already been approved by military representatives at the conference, but Elaine Donnelly, a political consultant from Michigan, said she opposed passing the measure until the women involved were consulted.

"Maybe we should talk to the enlisted women, who look at the whole issue in a totally different way, especially those who may be involved, if the law were changed, in direct hand-to-hand combat," she said.

In other action, the committee sought bigger roles for women in high technology, and recommended that state-of-the-art computers be used in the design of uniforms and equipment for women, particularly boots.

The committee also recommended that timely obstetrical and gynecological care be provided to military women either through an increase in military doctors or through civilian contracts.

Grateful man donates pumpkin pies

BRADDOCK, Pa. (AP) — A New Jersey man grateful for steelworkers' help following a savage storm in 1962 presented 600 pumpkin pies to a union food bank Saturday, part of his annual Thanksgiving gift to the unemployed.

It marked the third consecutive Thanksgiving that Carl Martin donated food to United Steelworkers Local 1219 in Braddock, a struggling milltown near Pittsburgh.

"As long as I've got my strength and my health, we're not going to let these people down, because they're hurting and we're not," said Martin, 53, a guard at Atlantic City's Convention Hall.

"He's so wonderful here...There's no words for it," said Joe Montedoro, a trustee for the local's food bank.

Martin began donating food to Braddock's unemployed shortly before Thanksgiving 1982 because of 17 steelworkers who had traveled to Atlantic City 20 years earlier to help out following a violent storm.

Martin said the men, whose names he can't remember, worked with him to rescue people trapped inside their water-logged homes.

"At the time, these people were working up there (in Braddock) making a decent living. Now they're wiped out," he said.

Since 1982, Martin has coordinated collection efforts in Atlantic City that have resulted in up to 15,000 pounds of spaghetti, 30,000 pounds of potatoes, thousands of pounds of canned goods and $5,000 in cash for the union's food bank.

This Thanksgiving's offering, for example, included 3,828 cans of food collected by youngsters from Arthur Rann School in Galloway Township, five miles outside Atlantic City.

Martin bought the pumpkin pies for $510 from the Giant Eagle supermarket in Braddock.

Plane plunges into Atlantic

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — At least three people were killed when their single-engine plane plunged into the Atlantic Ocean about three-fourths of a mile from witnesses on the Boardwalk, the Coast Guard said today.

Authorities searched Saturday for survivors of the Friday evening crash of the four-seat Piper Dakota which had been headed for this resort city from Farmingdale, N.Y., said Coast Guard Petty Officer Thomas Dickey.

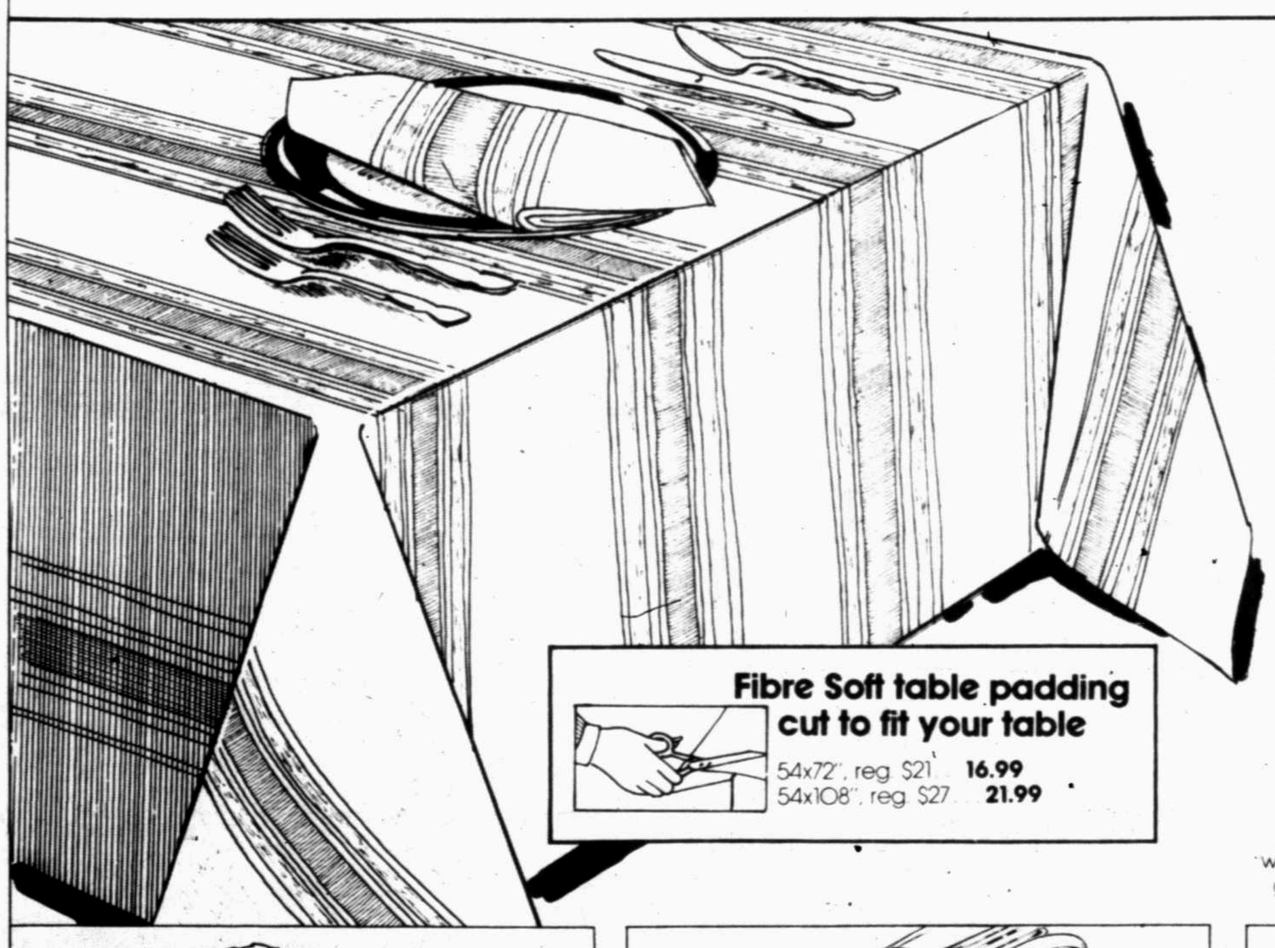

The badly mangled bodies of two "No Mayday calls were heard by any air traffic controllers," Dickey said. There are no controllers at Bader.

An Atlantic City police officer and at least three other people witnessed the crash, which occurred in front of the Ocean One Pier, a large shopping mall that juts into the water on a pier shaped like a ship, police said.

Sakharovs send photo to daughter

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — The stepdaughter of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov said Saturday she has received a photo of her mother and the Nobel Prize winner along with a note saying it was sent "to convince you at last that we are alive."

"I think it is a real picture of them," Tatiana Yankelevich said. "It doesn't seem to be retouched."

Mrs. Yankelevich said the photo was the first she has received from her mother, Yelena Bonner, since March, and offers proof that she has been reunited with Sakharov.

"It's a relief to see them together, but the picture doesn't tell us much and the note doesn't tell us about what their state of health is and what their living conditions are," she said.

Mrs. Yankelevich said there was a penciled note on the back of the picture reading, "This is for all of you and first of all for you, Mother, to convince you at last that we are alive. The picture was taken on Sept. 13."

Mrs. Bonner's mother, Ruth, lives with the Yankelevich family in Newton, a suburb of Boston.

In a separate note, Mrs. Bonner she and her husband were leading a quiet life and that "Dr. Sakharov spends a little bit of time at his desk."

Sakharov, who led the Soviet Union's development of the hydrogen bomb, was exiled to the city of Gorky in 1980 for his criticism of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

International concern for the health of Sakharov, who received the Nobel Peace Prize, was raised last May when the 63-year-old physicist staged a hunger strike over Soviet refusal to let his wife seek medical treatment abroad.

Mrs. Bonner has suffered three heart attacks, according to her daughter.

Sakharov was reportedly hospitalized and force fed. Moscow sources quoted Mrs. Bonner as claiming her husband was given mind-altering drugs.

Mrs. Bonner was reportedly arrested in Moscow this summer and sentenced to internal exile. The Yankelevich family said they received postcards this fall that indicated Sakharov and his wife had been reunited.

AP Laserphoto

This is copy of a photograph Yelena Bonner, left, sent to to her daughter, Tetiana Yankelevich, to show that she and her husband, Andrei Sakharov "are still alive."

Mrs. Yankelevich said the picture, apparently taken at a photo studio, showed the couple posed together. She said her stepfather "looks a little strange."

"His face is very round and a little bit swollen, whether that was because in the hospital they tried to get him to gain as much weight as possible, I don't know," she said.

She said her mother "looks good in a sense."

"She has this very sad expression on her face," she said.

"We were told by the Soviet operator that she had failed to come to the post office to receive our call," she said. "It is obvious to me that all our calls to my mother were not allowed by the authorities."

Hale loves addicts back to health

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike's mother was a junkie. He was born a 5-pound heroin addict, racked with convulsions for his first three months while doctors gave him phenobarbitol, another addictive drug, to ease his withdrawal symptoms.

Then Mike was moved to Hale House, where he was loved back to health by Clara Hale, the 79-year-old founder of a special group foster home for infants of drug addicts.

At the age of 4 months, Mike weighs 12 pounds and is smiling and alert. He is drug-free, and so is his mother, who is in prison on a drug-related charge.

"But she's going to be out next month. She's going to marry the father and take Mike home," says Mommy Hale, as she is called.

The goal of Hale House is reuniting families, and the waiting list is two to three times the house's capacity of about 15. Fewer than 20 of the 550 children who have lived at Hale House since it opened 15 years ago have been put up for adoption rather than returned to their natural parents.

Last week Mrs. Hale's work won her a Wonder Woman Award, given by the Wonder Woman Foundation to honor women who have made significant humanitarian contributions to society.

She says her technique with addicted children is simple: "Just keep walking the floor, talking to them and feeding them. They are very hungry."

Mothers have to apply to place their children in Hale House and agree to undergo drug rehabilitation with the intention of reclaiming the youngsters. The average child stays at the house for 18 months while the mother gets back on her feet. Weekly visits are mandatory.

Most children arrive at the age of 10 days, after the worst of their drug withdrawal has been handled at a hospital.

The youngest ones stay in cribs in Mrs. Hale's bedroom, on the third floor of a five-story walk-up in Harlem. With three infants there now, including Mike, her days begin with 5 a.m. bottle feedings in her rocking chair.

Downstairs in the nursery, older kids reach out for hugs and kisses and Mrs. Hale responds with a ceaseless litany of "love talk" and smooching.

In general, foster care officials prefer private families to group settings in the belief that the children will get more love, said Anita Delaney, spokeswoman for the division of Special Services for Children.

"But this is a very unique setting, a very special program," Ms. Delaney said.

Mrs. Hale has been a foster parent since she was widowed at the age of 26. She was considering retirement when she became involved with drug-addicted children.

Her daughter Lorraine, who is executive director of the house and has a doctorate in child development, said she had seen a woman sitting on a crate with a baby in her lap. The woman was in a drug trance and in danger of dropping the child.

"In a great act of impetuousness, I got out of the car," the younger woman said. "I lectured her and told her to take the baby to my mother."

The next day, Mrs. Hale called her daughter and said: "There's a junkie at my door and she said you sent her."

"That's how we started," the daughter said. "Within six months, there were wall-to-wall cribs."

Now the house has a staff of 15 and an annual budget of about $300,000, funded mostly from government sources and with some donations, including $20,000 a year from John Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono.

But there never seems to be enough money and the washing machine has been broken for a month.

According to the city Health Department's Bureau of Biostatistics, 884 children out of 112,000 live births were born to addicted mothers in 1983. Lorraine Hale says that is "a tremendous underestimate," explaining that many addicted babies are misdiagnosed as being malnourished because the symptoms are similar.

The Hales hope someday to open more houses in Harlem and have plans for a project to help get housing and counseling for mothers coming out of prison or rehabilitation programs.

They want to shorten the stays at Hale House because "as the child stays longer, it becomes nice to be a weekend parent," the younger woman said. "Very often we have to twist arms. They (mothers) can do better than they think they can."

And with shorter stays, the house could handle more children, she added.

Reagan 'welcomes' bishops' input

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House officials are taking no offense at the draft economic policy statement issued by the nation's Roman Catholic bishops, although a member of the drafting committee says the letter contains "a lot of things" critical of the Reagan administration.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes says President Reagan welcomes the bishops' contribution and shares their concern for the poor.

Asked directly whether the letter implies criticism of the administration, he said, "I don't think it would serve the purpose of dialogue within the church or between the administration and the church to address that."

No meetings have been set in regard to such a dialogue, and the bishops say they don't know if any will be.

The draft letter, released last week by the national Conference of Catholic Bishops, names no names.

But a member of the drafting commitee, Auxiliary Bishop Peter Rosazza of Hartford, Conn., says, "There's a lot of things in the letter that are critical of the Reagan administration."

He cited the sections of the letter urging higher welfare payments, new programs to create jobs and other initiatives long opposed at the White House. He also mentioned the "militarization of foreign aid," which the letter contends is a switch toward granting aid in line with strategic goals rather than human need.

Rosazza suggested that administration policy is aimed at preserving the status quo in America. "The status quo is evolving toward more poor people all the time," he said.

He said criticism of the bishops' efforts by conservative Catholics and others is welcome. But he also asked, "What is their solution?"

"People say apply the free-market approach to all those needs," he said. "They just want to free up their consciences."

Bishop James Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, president of the bishops group, said that rather than reading the letter solely as criticism of the administration, "it seems to me that it could be a challenge to the Congress to see that this matter deserves attention as the budget is examined."

But he said that with all Reagan's talk about holding down spending and reducing the federal deficit, "additional social programs do not seem to be part of the plan" coming out of the White House.

He said a major task for his group, even before its formal vote on a revised version of the letter next November, will be "to raise the consciousness" of public officials and private citizens concerning the needs of the poor.

Other bishops also seemed content to let the statement — formally the "Pastoral Letter on Catholic Social Teaching and the U.S. Economy" — speak for itself. Its principles, they said, were hardly limited to government actions, let alone to any particular White House administration.

During their meeting last week, the bishops overwhelmingly endorsed the letter and said they felt they had made the right decision in keeping it secret until after the election.

Some supporters of the letter's contents have criticized the bishops for not releasing it earlier. They argued that some of its points could have buttressed the "fairness issues" that Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale tried to use against Reagan.

But Archbishop Thomas Donnellan of Atlanta, another member of the drafting committee, said the decision was wise.

"Sure we want to stir up attention," he said, since the statement is designed to change attitudes and inspire action and thus needs publicity.

Police say sobriety check 'success'

BURLINGAME, Calif. (AP) — Police reported a "big success" after setting up California's first sobriety checkpoint Saturday in a new program to combat drunken driving.

In five hours, 233 drivers were screened and none was arrested.

"We had no trouble," said Sgt. Gene Harris. "...The department considers it a big success."

Barring a court challenge, the experiment in this city 15 miles south of San Francisco may lead to similar roadblocks around the state by the California Highway Patrol in time for the holidays. Similar checks are conducted in 21 states and Washington, D.C.

Dead woman's family sues bar

BRIGHTON, Colo. (AP) — The family of a woman who was run over by a car and killed after allegedly passing out on a busy street has sued the bar where she had been drinking that night.

The suit, which also names the driver who struck Patricia Joyce Beckius, seeks unspecified cash damages for the woman's sons, ages 5 and 11.

According to the lawsuit, which was filed last week, the bar served liquor "in negligently excessive amounts" to the 29-year-old woman. It said she was visibly drunk and became unconscious in the street where she was struck on Aug. 13, 1983.

Kennel owners to receive damages

DETROIT (AP) — Animal rights activists who a lawyer says "told wild stories" of torture in a bid to block a kennel from selling animals to medical researchers must pay the kennel owners $329,739 in damages, a jury has decided.

Fred and Jan Hodgins claimed in their lawsuit that their business was hurt and their civil rights violated by a campaign against the sale and use of impounded animals for medical research.

"Nobody can work with animals and hate them," Hodgins said after Wayne County Circuit Court jurors ended two days of deliberations Thursday.The couple filed suit in March 1981 after local authorities in two Detroit suburbs stopped releasing animals to them.

FBI charges leader of boycott

MOUNT VERNON, Ala. (AP) — A leader of an economic boycott that grew out of a voting rights dispute has been charged with extortion by FBI agents who say he sought $10,000 from merchants to lift the protest action.

Glenn Diamond, 35, also known as Casmarah Mari, a vice president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Mobile, was arrested Friday, said FBI Special Agent Carroll Toohey. His brother, Ronald Diamond, 31, also was charged with extortion, Toohey said.

In March, blacks began picketing merchants after the Town Council refused to annex a predominantly black community outside the town limits.

When a grocer attempted to seek ways to end the boycott, he was informed that a $10,000 payment was required, the FBI said. The grocer said that was too much.

Letter carriers charged in drug case

CHICAGO (AP) — Five letter carriers have been charged with delivering and selling marijuana and cocaine to houses on their routes, authorities say.

A mail clerk also was indicted in the probe by the Cook County state's attorney's office and the U.S. Postal Service. All were arrested Friday when they reported for work and were charged with the sale and possession of narcotics.All will be arraigned Dec. 6.

In July 1983, 19 postal employees, including seven security guards at the main post office in Chicago, were arrested on drug selling charges. A month later 10 more Chicago postal workers were arrested on similar charges at the O'Hare International Airport postal station.

Ex-coach sentenced for molesting

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — A former Little League coach who pleaded guilty to sexually molesting nine boys, some of whom he coached, was sentenced to 71 years in prison.

The sentencing came after Jeffrey Lee Gridley admitted he sexually abused 40 other youngsters in offenses stretching back 17 years, a prosecutor said, adding that 34-year-old man will not be tried in the other cases.

"It was a condition of his sentence that he provide us with a list of all the other children he has molested," said Alan Nudelman, a deputy district attorney.Gridley, who coached Little League baseball for four years and football for one year, was sentenced Thursday.

Jordache sues women over 'Lardashe' jeans

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Two women who make "resigner" jeans — for the woman who has resigned herself to a full figure — are being sued by the Jordache designer jean company, which contends the trademark "Lardashe" is too similar to its own.

Lardashe jeans, made by Susan Duran, 34, and Marsha Stafford, 32, feature reinforced seams, a high waist and an appliqued pig peering over the back pocket.

The women began selling the jeans in late summer and said they found a good market in New Mexico and other states.

But they believe the suit by Jordache Enterprises of New York may kill their fledgling business.

"When you have $3.76 in your purse and they have $180 million in sales to fight you with, you don't stand much of a chance," said Ms. Duran. "Right now, we're kind of nowhere. It's so depressing in the country that's supposed to be the land of opportunity."

The suit, filed Oct. 26, alleges the Lardashe name is so similar to the nationally recognized Jordache that it constitutes a trademark infringement. The similarity in names creates "a likelihood of confusion" among consumers, the lawsuit says.

"We have never, at any time, compared our jeans to Jordache," said Ms. Stafford. "All we were trying to do is put the heavier woman into something that looked good."

Added Ms. Duran: "We've never even gone after the same market as Jordache. Neither of us was familiar with Jordache. We can't fit into anything they make."

The women said they have sold more than 900 pairs of the jeans, which are manufactured in El Paso, Texas, and sell for between $38 and $68.

They said they have orders for 15,000 more pairs but no money to make them. Banks, citing the lawsuit, have closed their credit lines, they said.

"I don't know where we go from here," Ms. Duran said. "It seems any way we turn we run into another wall."

The women say they only wanted to develop jeans for women who lack a model's fashionable slenderness.

"There's nothing that says larger women can't be as fashionable as smaller women," Ms. Duran said. "It's a market that's been neglected for so long."

Egyptian president warns of other assassination plots

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak today warned of assassination plots against at least two other world leaders, but denied that a hit squad hired by Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy had killed a former Libyan prime minister.

Mubarak said he had learned about the Libyan plot in advance and Egypt was able to save the former prime minister and fool the Libyans into making a premature announcement that they had carried out the assassination.

Mubarak, quoted by Egypt's official Middle East News Agency, said he had warned world leaders of an international terrorist plot to assassinate Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany and King Fahd of Saudi Arabia and to overthrow the government of Pakistan's President Zia Ul-Haq. Mubarak offered no other details, however.

He said he learned of those plots last month during an official visit to

WORLD

West Germany, where he also learned of the Libyan plan to kill the former prime minister, Abdel Hamid-Bakoush, and other Libyan exiles now living in Egypt.

He said Egyptian authorities had used phony pictures of the exiled former official to make the Libyans think the Bakoush assassination had been carried out.

"We gave imaginary pictures showing (Bakoush) to be critically injured and lying in a pool of blood," Mubarak said. "These pictures were sent to the Libyan leadership by those terrorists through the Libyan Embassy in Malta."

Khadafy, the Libyan leader, arrived in Malta today for an official visit. Libya and Malta's Socialist government have had normal relations since 1982, when they resolved a dispute over offshore oil exploration.

Mubarak, quoted by the Egyptian government's Middle East News Agency, said a Briton and two Maltese had been hired for $106,000 to kill Bakoush, but he did not further identify the members of the so-called "suicide squad."

Lloyd's gets offers for satellites

LONDON (AP) — The Lloyd's of London insurance consortium said today it already has offers for the two communications satellites that U.S. space shuttle astronauts rescued from a faulty orbit this week.

Stephen Merritt, the underwriter who headed the recovery program for Lloyd's and a number of other insurance companies, said the insurors were ecstatic over the success of the recovery mission. "We're absolutely over the moon about it," he said.

The retrieval of the satellites could allow the insurance companies to resell them and recoup up to $70 million of the $180 million in losses they paid in claims when the satellites went awry.

"Ordinarily, sums of money as large as this are only recovered through litigation," he said. "It's nice to, almost literally, grab money out of thin air."

He said Lloyd's already is "involved in serious discussions with interested parties. There have been definite offers, and we hope to sell as soon as we get the top price."

Both the Indonesian Palapa B2 satellite and the American Westar VI satellites were released into space by the shuttle Challenger in February, but because of faulty booster rockets they ended up in useless orbits.

This week, astronauts Joe Allen and Dale Gardner of the shuttle Discovery attached a special probe to each of the satellites and hauled them back to the vehicle's cargo bay. Following the shuttle's landing Friday, both satellites were being examined by technicians before being refurbished, resold and relaunched.

Westar, owned by Western Union, was insured for $105 million and Palapa, owned by the Indonesian government, for $75 million. Lloyd's, which carried part of the insurance, paid out more than $75 million when the satellites went into errant orbits, but the insurers also acquired rights to the craft.

Merritt, who monitored the operation at the Houston space center of the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration, returned to London today and said the mission was a spectacular achievement.

He denied the venture had been a huge gamble. "I would not have invested almost half a million dollars of my own and other people's money into the project if I had not been satisfied that the risk involved was adequate for the money being spent," he said.

Nicaragua allegedly trying to buy missiles

EL FERROL, Spain (AP) — Nicaragua's ambassador to Spain said Saturday his country is negotiating to purchase land-to-air missiles to protect Nicaraguan air space and will also buy Soviet MiG fighter planes, according to a Spanish news agency report.

"We are arming to defend ourselves from aggression and all nations have the right to defend themselves," the news agency EFE quoted Ambassador Orlando Castillo as saying. "My government is negotiating to purchase land-to-air missiles with the object of preventing the constant violation of the Nicaraguan air space."

The news agency said Castillo, on a private visit to this northwestern Spanish city, told a press conference, "My country has not renounced the right to buy MiG planes ...and of course we will purchase the Soviet MiG planes."

A U.S. Defense Department spokesman in Washington, D.C., Lt. Richard Lake, said, "This is not the first time they've said this. It isn't new."

Officials of Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government have said many times that they were trying to buy MiG jet fighters. Nicaraguan Defense Minister Humberto Ortega said it two months ago in a press conference in Mexico City. But they have so far been unable to.

U.S. officials had indicated on Nov. 2 that a Soviet cargo ship arriving at the Nicaraguan port of Corinto might finally be bringing the Soviet MiG-21 fighter jets. U.S. government officials refused to rule out action to destroy the planes if they were unloaded.

The State Department has said such planes were only of use to Nicaragua for attacking its neighbors. MiG planes were never unloaded at Corinto, but more East bloc ships were headed to Nicaragua, according to the State Department, which says the country is acquiring more arms than it needs to defend itself.

Castillo mentioned the land-to-air missiles in reference to a series of sonic booms that have been occurring over Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan government has said they are caused by U.S. spy planes violating Nicaraguan air space. The Pentagon has refused to comment on that charge.

The Nicaraguans have for some time had SAM shoulder-fired, land-to-air missiles, and the ships that recently arrived in Nicaragua brought radar-guided land-to-air missiles, as well as combat helicopters, according to diplomatic sources in Managua, the Nicaraguan capital.

According to the Spanish news agency, Castillo said, "We are using the right when we buy arms to defend ourselves because we are a country which is being attacked by the military power of the United States."

He said there are tanks in Nicaragua's streets to defend factories, banks and shops against what the Nicaraguan government claims is an imminent invasion by the United States. But Castillo said 20,000 youths who had been recently mobilized for defense are now harvesting the coffee crop, Nicaragua's chief export.

OAS meeting ends on 'positive' note

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Hopes for a regional settlement to years of fighting in Central America improved during a meeting of 31 Western Hemisphere countries, officials said Saturday.

"The meeting was very positive," Joao Baena Soares, secretary-general of the Organization of American States, said at a news conference that preceded the closing of the OAS annual conference.

Delegates passed a resolution calling for dialogue, cooperation and peaceful solutions to the region's problems before adjourning.

During the conference they dealt with subjects ranging from drug trafficking to territorial disputes, but conflicts in Central American and Latin America's staggering foreign debt received the most attention.

Venezuela, Mexico, Panama, and Colombia, — together known as the Contadora group — held meetings with each of the five Central American countries to discuss peace proposals for the region. The five countries are El Salvador, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua.

The Contadora nations are promoting a peace plan stressing noninterference in each other's affairs, open elections and withdrawal of foreign advisers. They said in a communique that a peace agreement was possible, but that representatives of the Central American countries were concerned about the "new and dangerous increase in tensions."

The conference opened amid Nicaragua's charges that the United States was preparing to invade it. U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz has said those charges were "a self-inflicted wound on the part of Nicaragua."

Isidro Morales Paul, Venezuela's foreign minister, told The Associated Press that the movement of Soviet ships and U.S. planes around Nicaragua "brings us closer to war than to peace."

The OAS conference approved a resolution backing the Contadora efforts, saying: "It is the right of all countries in the region to live in peace and security, free from all outside interference."

Eleven of Latin America's most heavily indebted countries agreed to hold a third meeting on Latin America's $350 billion foreign debt in the Dominican Republic in February.

The so-called Cartagena group, formed earlier this year, is made up of Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, the Domican Repbulic, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The group seeks better repayment terms, lower interest rates and an end to trade barriers.

Jose Agusto Vega Imbert, the Dominican Republic's foreign minister, said the United States and other industrialized countries would be invited to a debtor-creditor meeting after the February meeting.

U.S., China officials will discuss grain agreement

PEKING (AP) — China's failure to live up to a long-term grain agreement with the United States will be the subject of talks between American and Chinese officials in Peking on Tuesday.

U.S. Embassy officials said Saturday that China requested the talks to discuss the four-year agreement that will expire at the end of this year. So far China, amidst record grain production of its own, has purchased only about 8.1 million of the 12 million metric tons of American grain it agreed to buy in 1983 and 1984.

The shortfall will be the "main topic of discussion," said one U.S. Embassy official speaking on the condition he not be further identified. "We'll be discussing whether there is some way the commitment can be made up."

Richard Smith, administrator of the Foreign Agricultural Service at the U.S. Department of Agriculture, will lead American negotiators at the one-day meeting.

Cao Wantong, managing director of Ceroil, the China Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import-Export Corp., will head the Chinese team.

Under the pact, China agreed to buy and ship 6 million metric tons of U.S. grain annually for four years. Purchases of wheat, corn and other grain fulfilled the 1981 and 1982 quotas.

But in 1983, the Chinese bought only 3.8 million tons after deliberately halting purchases because of an eight-month dispute over new American restrictions on Chinese textile exports to the United States.

So far this year, China has purchased 4.3 million tons, all wheat, and as of Nov. 9 only 3.7 million tons had been shipped.

THE BEST HOUSE FOR YOUR MONEY

In finding a house that's right for you and your family, you'll want the best house for your money. You'll also want to consider how stretchable your budget may be, based on your current job status as well as your future prospects. For example, if you are thinking of buying a house in the $80,000 range, is it worth your while to stretch that to 100,000 in order to buy a house that will be a better investment?

Whether you're a one-income or two-income family will make a difference as will the precentage of your monthly income that you are willing to put into home costs. If your job prospects include expected yearly pay increases, this percentage would decrease each year.

[illegible] some time you can expect the value of your home to appreciate in value. Whatever your financial circumstances, discuss the situation with your Realtor. It pays to be financially frank with your Realtor.

Palestinian professor killed outside home

GAZA CITY, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — A Palestinian professor and religious leader at the Islamic University in Gaza City was shot to death outside his home Saturday, said university and Al-Shifa Hospital officials.

The officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, quoted witnesses as saying two men who appeared to be Arabs were seen running away after shooting Dr. Ismail al-Khatib, 39, dean of the university's Arabic language college. No motive for the shooting was known, the officials said.

Montreal transit strike ends

MONTREAL (AP) — Normal public transit resumed Saturday after 4,000 bus drivers and subway operators ended a month-long strike which had left commuters with only peak-hour service weekdays and no weekend service.

Strikers voted by a 52 percent majority to accept a new contract which will gradually cut the present work week of 42½ hours for drivers to 40 hours by Jan. 1, 1986.

The Montreal transit commission chairman, Lawrence Hanigan, said increases were being considered in the present single cash fare of 85 cents to help pay for the additional $3 million the pact will cost the money-losing system next year.

Mugabe wants new policy

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe said Saturday that black Africa is looking for policy changes from President Reagan in his second term.

"We hope that after four years...the United States would really now attempt to readjust," Mugabe told a news conference after his return from the Organization of African Unity summit meeting in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

He said that independent African states cannot accept that Reagan's policy of "constructive engagement" with white-ruled South Africa has yielded any benefits.

Anti-terrorism meeting held

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Anti-terrorism specialists from 13 Western European nations met secretly in Madrid last week, the independent daily newspaper El Pais said Saturday.

The meeting, the fourth of its kind since Western European nations began coordinating anti-terrorist activities, took place Tuesday and Wednesday, but was not publicized for security reasons, the newspaper quoted the Ministry of the Interior as saying.

Experts from West Germany, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Britain, Switzerland and Spain discussed the activities of terrorists from Middle Eastern nations and how to prevent them from operating in Western Europe, the paper said.

Exhibit portrays Nazism

NUREMBERG, West Germany (AP) — An exhibit portraying the Nazi movement's effect on Germans opened Saturday at the Nuremberg stadium where Adolf Hitler staged huge political rallies during the era of the Third Reich.

Titled "Fascination and Power," the permanent exhibit is housed in a museum atop a grandstand at Zeppelin field, where Hitler received guests at elaborate Nazi party rallies.

The display of pictures accompanied by tape recordings describing events during Hitler's 12-year reign is an attempt to "decipher the language of national socialist power and ideological seduction," Nuremberg Mayor Andreas Urschlechter told 200 people who attended the opening.

Botha replies to proposals

PRETORIA, SOUTH AFRICA (AP) — South Africa has replied through U.S. mediators to Angolan proposals to send Cuban troops home in return for a peace agreement and independence for South-West Africa, the Foreign Ministry said.

No details were disclosed Friday on the two days of meetings between Foreign Minister R.F. Botha and Chester Crocker, U.S. assistant secretary of state for African affairs, or the nature of the South African reply.

Earlier this month at a meeting in the Cape Verde Islands, Crocker presented to Botha the Angolan government's conditions for sending home the estimated 25,000 to 30,000 Cuban troops in Angola.

South Africa and the United States had said the Cubans must leave before South Africa withdrew from South-West Africa and granted independence to the former German colony, also known as Namibia. Until recent months, Angola had insisted that the presence of Cubans in Angola could not be linked to South-West African independence.

Report 'embarrassing'

NEWFOUNDLAND, Nova Scotia (AP) — Newfoundland Liberal leader Leo Barry says a report by Mobil Oil shows the provincial Conservative government has over estimated the benefits of offshore oil development.

Barry says the environmental impact statement is embarrassing enough that Premier Brian Peckford may call a general election before releasing it.

Wilke shares his story at MCS dinner

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Wilke

In 1914, the physician who delivered Dr. Harold Wilke reportedly said he had never seen or heard of anything like him.

According to Wilke, medical journals in those days were not all-inclusive and it was unlikely that a busy country doctor would have had the time to read them anyway.

Nevertheless, the doctor told Wilke's mother that he had never known anything like him before — totally without hands and arms.

"How could I ever understand my mother's psychological and personal suffering? Her unraveled life? When I was born, my father went utterly to pieces.... My paternal grandmother...cried at the thought of me the whole first year," Wilke said Friday during a dinner to benefit Midland Christian School.

But Wilke, who is known worldwide for his work among the disabled, said he never was allowed to feel handicapped — only that he had to find new ways to do things.

This attitude later aided him in becoming a leader of voluntary health groups, a minister, a lecturer, author, professor and editor.

A delagate to a dozen national and international church groups, Wilke was awarded the Luther Medal in 1972 by the Church of Berlin-Brandenburg. He also chaired the Department of Ministry of the National Council of Churches and the General Commission of Chaplains and Armed Forces Personnel.

He is a volunteer in rehabilitation and is a consultant to a number of government bodies in Europe and to private rehabilitation agencies in the United States and Japan.

Although his struggle for independence didn't result without suffering, Wilke said, "Everything I need to do to take care of myself I do by myself.

"I was two or three years old, sitting on the bedroom floor of our home, having an extraordinarily difficult time getting a shirt over my head and around my shoulders. I grunted and sweated, while my mother just stood there and watched... Finally, a neighbor friend turned to her in exasperation and said, 'Ida, why don't you help that child?' My mother responded through gritted teeth, 'I am helping him.'"

Wilke explained his mother's withholding help actually helped in the long run.

"She expressed for me most graphically her own feeling that I must learn by myself. She helped me by not helping," he said.

According to Wilke, "All of us, at some time lose some part of ourselves — our job, our body, our esteem.... Many discover how to cope in the face of disability, problems, anxiety or other trouble. Many find strengths deep inside and develop new ways of fulfilling tasks when old ways have been closed."

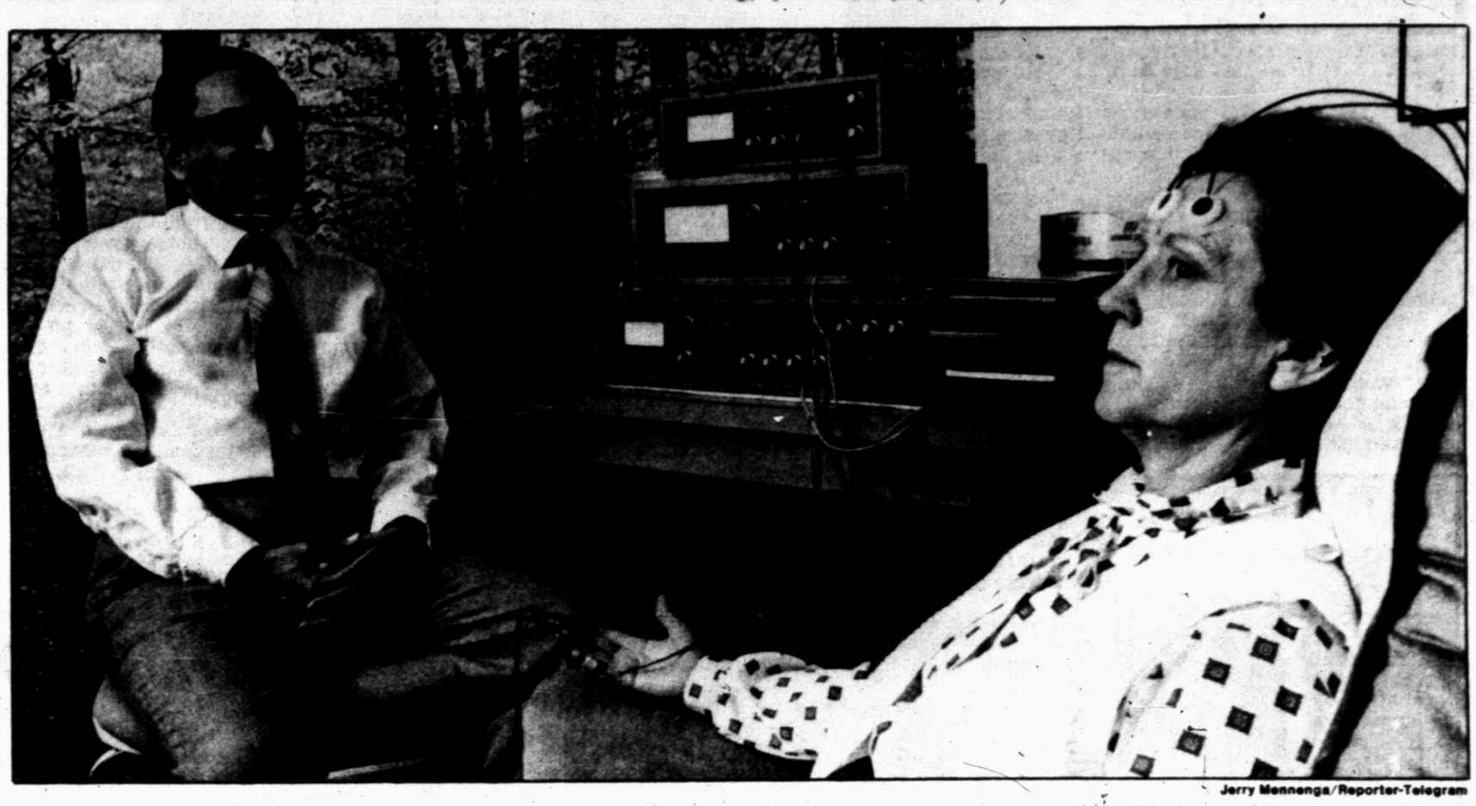

Out of his own experience in seeking and finding independence in daily activities, Wilke said, "For me, personally, the 'third eye' concept has been enormously helpful. The 'third eye' is the eye of imagination, the stance we take to find new ways to open minds.

"I certainly use it in dressing. But this third eye of imagination is applicable for all persons and to all areas of life, even to organizational activities," he added.

Citing one example, Wilke noted that during a recent flight, a stewardess — unaware of Wilke's disability — noticed he wore his watch on his ankle.

"She asked in amazement, 'Wearing your watch on your ankle?' I whispered back, 'It's the latest style right out of New York.'

"But I did think about that wristwatch. How do you make an anklewatch out of a wristwatch? ... By adding three or four links we expand the band. We stretch our horizons. We reach out to the beyond. We enlarge the place of our mental and our spiritual habitation," he said.

Dr. Kanti Patel, founder of the North Midland Minor Emergency Clinic administers biofeedback to Wanda Chastain. Patel treats migraine patients with a combination of biofeedback, acupuncture and nerve blocking.

Many methods fight migraines

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Ruth Fields called them her "numbness spells." They started with an "aura" — hallucinations, which for Mrs. Fields, took the form of half moons flashing like a strobe light. Next, her mouth would lose all feeling as if shot with novacaine, followed by a paralysis that spread down the left side of her body leaving her with the sensation of having half of her body asleep.

"When the feeling would return in my mouth and body, that's when the headache started," she said.

Mrs. Fields, like millions of other Americans, suffers from migraines, devastating headaches brought on by the constriction of blood vessals in the head. Migraines, also known as vascular headaches, differ from "normal" headaches, which are caused by muscle tension.

With new drugs, a flood of research in neurology and radiology and the acceptance of non-traditional treatment such as acupuncture, biofeedback, nerve block and hypnosis, migraine sufferers are gaining hope.

Mrs. Fields, 34, a vivacious sales representative for Republic Supply in Midland, never knew what she was suffering from until diagnosed by a neurologist at age 22.

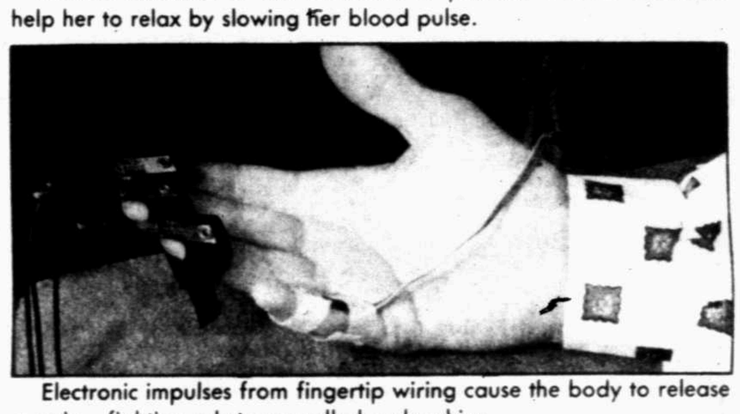

"When I was little, they didn't know anything about migraines," she said. "Migraines were associated with hypochondria. The doctor said things like, 'she'll grow out of it' and 'it won't hurt her to hurt a little,' and attributed it to a hormonal imbalance."

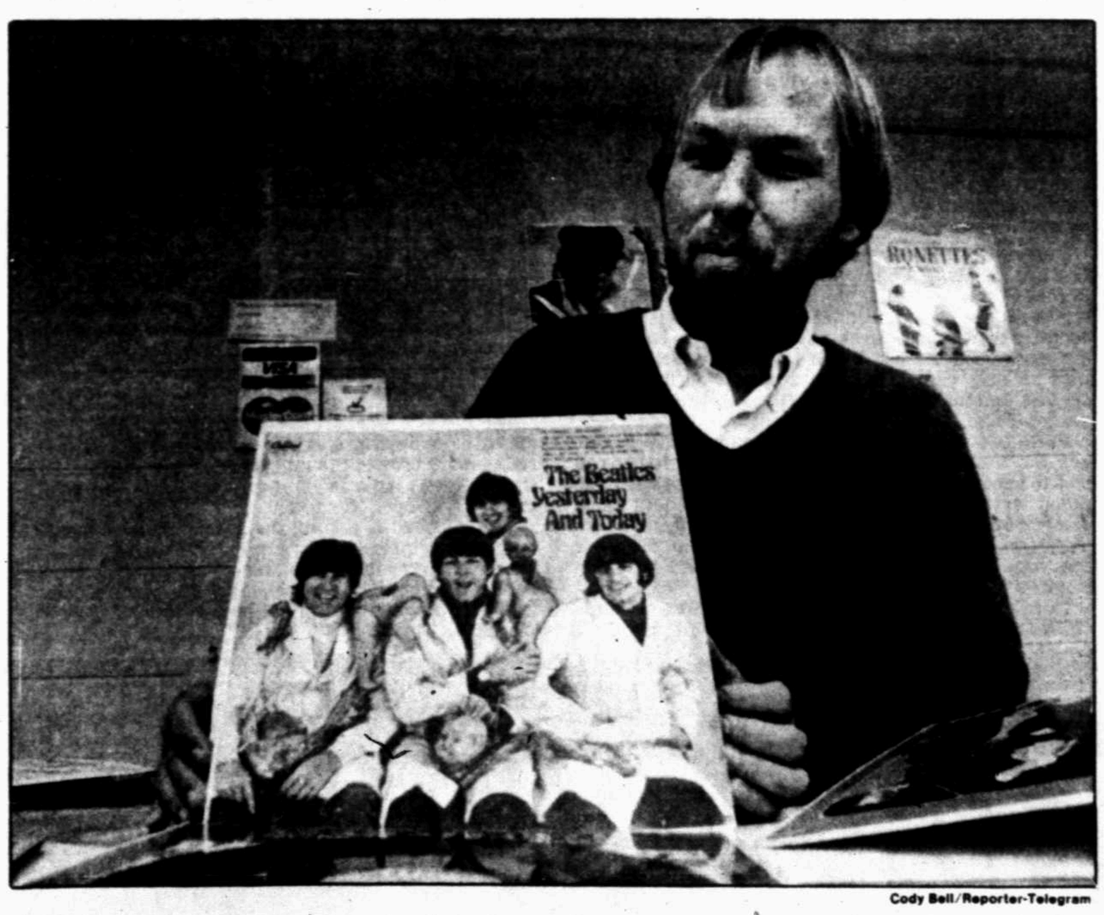

The headaches would often cause her to act strangely.

"I would be at school and the headache would come," said Mrs. Fields. "I would do real weird things like slap my head with my hand to relieve the pain. They thought I was nutty."

Please see MIGRAINES, Page 2B

Sensors attached to the forehead of patient, Wanda Chastain, help her to relax by slowing her blood pulse.

Electronic impulses from fingertip wiring cause the body to release a pain—fighting substance called endorphine.

David Conway displays a rare Beatles album sleeve that's worth over $200. Conway, of Golden Years Records in Odessa, hosts a Sunday morning show on KUFO-Radio.

Odessa record store owner hosts '60s album radio show

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — For most of the week, KUFO is the quintessential '80s album-rock radio station, spinning the latest heavy-metal hits by Iron Maiden or Twisted Sister, and occasionally leavening the mix with songs by such techno-pop groups as Duran Duran or the Thompson Twins.

But on Sundays from 8 a.m. to noon, KUFO turns its airwaves over to David Conway, and the 34-year-old record store owner takes his loyal listeners on a journey through the past.

"It's '50s and '60s rock 'n roll," says Conway, who brings in most of the records he uses from his Golden Years record store. He plays the familiar tunes by the Beatles and the Stones, but he also delves into his collection for more obscure names. Listeners are likely to hear such blasts from the past as "Mrs. Brown You've Got a Lovely Daughter," by Herman's Hermits, or "Glad All Over," by the Dave Clark 5.

"And a lot of the Supremes — 'Where Did Our Love Go,' that stuff — and Motown records in general," he says. "There are some people who call every week (with requests). They inspire me to dig up stuff I haven't thought about in years."

When Conway took over the show in September, it marked his return to the station where he got his start in radio back in 1970, after majoring in radio-television at Odessa College. The station was called KOYL then, and Conway says it was the first album-rock station in Odessa.

"It's funny that I've ended up back at the same station, and I'm doing essentially what I was doing 13-14 years ago. It's definitely a weird feeling."

Conway worked in local radio for nine years before moving to Austin. After his wife finished her law degree, they returned to Odessa, and Conway fulfilled a long-held dream of starting his own record store.

"I'd been plotting and scheming for years, obtaining records and getting ready for it," he says. "I guess you could say I cater to the collecting crowd." Conway keeps all kinds of records in stock, the accent is on the era he loves — the '60s.

"I guess every generation kind of locks into the music of their generation and doesn't like what comes after."

Conway remembers the first time the Rolling Stones appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show. His parents were horrified by the long, unkempt hair and lewdly outrageous antics of the British rockers. "But I just fell in love with it right there. This was your chance to be an individual no matter what you looked like."

Conway prefers such golden oldies as Phil Spector's girl-group hits to most current favorites.

"What's going on now is you have heavy metal becoming the dominant force in music. That's kind of what KUFO is evolving towards," he says. "In England right now the same thing is going on. It's easy to play; any 13- or 14-year-old kid can pick up a guitar and make heavy metal sounds."

But a bit more skill is required to create such classic records as "Lola," from Conway's prized Kinks collection, or "Be My Baby" by the Ronettes, from his Phil Spector collection. And while most collectors hoard their carefully gathered booty, Conway shares his with the entire KUFO audience each Sunday morning, helping to keep '60s music alive.

GARY OTT

Why mess with perfection, wholesomeness?

Beaver Cleaver is back and, quite frankly, I'm not sure I'm emotionally prepared for his return.

This is not to say I didn't like The Beav. Quite the opposite, in fact. The entire Cleaver clan was like a second family to me. It represented everything good and simple about small town America in the 1950s.

Now the Disney Channel (who else?) has brought it all back. June is still the perfect mother. Wally lives next door, along with his wife and daughter. Beaver, who's divorced (God forbid), has a couple of kids. The three of them live with June (they always were a close-knit family). And, Eddie Haskell, the neighborhood hoodlum, has grown up and has a kid who's just like him.

So for all of you "Leave it to Beaver" junkies there's a chance for some deja vu in the immediate future.

The question is: Do we want it?

I answer with an emphatic "no."

Why mess with perfection? The wholesomeness of the Cleavers was something you could always count on. A typical episode went something like this:

The Beav would face a problem (something monumental like whether to spend his birthday money or save it). He would go to Wally, a too-good-to-be-true big brother, for advice. Wally — because he was a too-good-to-be-true big brother — would tell him to do the right thing and set up a savings account. Eddie, who would be hanging out with Wally, would ridicule the good advice and encourage Beaver to spend the money while spending was good. Eddie, a bad influence on everyone he came in contact with, was like that.

Beaver would then agonize over his predicament before finally deciding to spend the $10, even though deep inside he knew he should save it.

Predictably, this would make him feel guilty and because of that he could never enjoy the toy he bought with the money.

He would then sit down with mom and dad and spill his guts about his dastardly deed. Ward, the dad, would then fold the evening newspaper, put it aside and say something fatherly like, "You're growing up, Beav. Realizing you have made a mistake is very important. Your mother and I are proud of you."

Then Beaver would hug his parents, say thanks and head upstairs to brush his teeth.

In the final scene, with the theme song playing in the background, Ward and June would smile at one another, content in their knowledge that their youngest son had learned a valuable lesson.

How does one improve on that kind of goodness? You don't. That's why the Disney Channel should leave it alone.

Some of us want to remember the Cleavers as they were, not as some modern family with modern problems.

We want Ward to lounge around the house on a Saturday afternoon in his business suit.

We want June to do the housework in her Sunday dress and high heels.

We want Eddie Haskell to tempt Wally, knowing full well the Cleaver upbringing will prevail in the end.

We want Beaver to make an ugly face and say "yuk" when asked by a female classmate to carry her books.

In short, we don't want the Cleavers to change. Why, if we let them grow up, the next thing you know we'll be told Wally is a closet homosexual and Beaver sniffs glue.

Don't do it to us. Long live the goody-goody two-shoes. America needs them as they were.

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

MIGRAINES

Mrs. Fields remembers her mother suffering from the disabling headaches, which often keep a normal, healthy person bedridden from several hours to several days at a time.

"They thought it was epilepsy," she said. "My grandparents would give her home remedies and send her to bed."

Mrs. Fields started seeking treatment when she was pregnant with her second son, Kaylor. "I was getting examined by my doctor and all of a sudden I began to have a migraine," she said.

"Fortunately, he recognized what is was and sent me to a neurologist."

Today, Mrs. Fields rarely suffers from the debilitating headaches, ("I don't know why they stopped," she said) and finds relief when they strike, from Dilaudid, a strong narcotic.

"I have heard that it is used for cancer patients," she said.

Other medicines also are available to migraine sufferers.

"Enderol, which is usually used for high blood pressure, has been found effective," said Dr. Walter Hewell, a Midland physician. "But it is good only as a preventative drug. After the migraine hits is too late."

Enderol, explained Hewell, prevents the spasm of blood veins in the skull, which constricts blood flow. The constriction causes the vision spots and numbness often associated with migraines.

Another drug, Ergotamine, is also effective, said Hewell.

"It can make the patient feel flushed, but there are no bad side effects that I know of," he said.

Hewell admits that drugs are not an end-all cure.

"If you have a mixed headache, both tension and vascular, then biofeedback can be effective," he said.

Biofeedback, a growing source of treatment for migraine sufferers, uses sensitive electronic equipment to teach the patient how to relax those muscles that are constricting blood flow.

"It's a tool," said Dr. Kantibhai Patel, founder of the North Midland Minor Emergency Center (formerly The Pain Clinic). "With biofeedback, you are teaching the patient how to heal himself."

Wanda Chastain is one patient who has learned how to control her migraines through biofeedback. Mrs. Chastain, who began getting the headaches ten years ago, sought help from her physician and three different chiropractors before coming to Patel.

"My doctor prescribed pain pills, and the chiropractors would give me adjustments," she said. "They helped relieve the pain, but it would always come back."

Through a combined program of biofeedback, acupuncture and nerve blocking, Patel has helped Mrs. Chastain to pinpoint the source of her migraine and alleviate the pain through relaxation.

Hooking up electronic sensors to her forehead, he would tell her to relax and try to quieten a loud "blip" coming from the biofeedback machine. The noise, produced by sensitivity to Mrs. Chastain's blood pressure, would stop when Mrs. Chastain was completely relaxed.

More sensors attached to her fingertips sent electronic impulses to the nerves, causing a release of endorphine, the body's natural painkiller.

The biofeedback combined with acupuncture was sometimes supplemented with nerve blocks — the injection of cortizone and other substances into pain areas.

Mrs. Chastain, a secretary for City Service Oil and Gas Co., rarely gets migraines anymore. When she does, she treats them herself with relaxation techniques she learned from Patel.

"It's well worth it," she said.

Another Midlander uses biofeedback to treat migraines, but with a different twist.

"I teach them self-hypnosis," said Peggy Dunphy, a physical therapist for the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center. "Biofeedback and self-hypnosis are similar. They both produce relaxation."

Ms. Dunphy, 37, herself a migraine sufferer since her teens, offers other treatments for the headaches.

"An old folk remedy is just to get into a hot tub and try to warm up the thoracic (chest region) of the back and the feet. Also, a hot cup of natural tea with honey helps," she said. "Honey is a natural sedative."

Ms. Dunphy stresses the importance of teaching the migraine patient not only how to get rid of the pain, but how to recognize what the source of the pain is.

"Acupuncture is good at relieving pain, but biofeedback and self-hypnosis are the best that I've come by in helping the patient know what is causing it."

"Self-hypnosis is very easy to learn," she said. "I teach them how to control their breathing and then imagery, in which the patient thinks of relaxing things."

Ms. Dunphy, whose migraines are brought on by reflective sunlight, uses the image of a circular staircase to relax her.

"Blue stairs," she said. "Blue is very relaxing."

Denton County residents proud of ugly trucks

Associated Press

DENTON, Texas — They clanked and clattered, belched and roared their way into the parking lot — 18 of the homeliest, mangiest, uncomeliest, downright ugliest pickup trucks in Denton County.

They came to The Denton Record-Chronicle for the Worst Looking Pickup Contest. And they came to win.

Entrants brought their wives, their husbands, their children, their friends. They sat on delapidated bumpers and discolored fenders and discussed the merits of their unsightly steeds.

Tim Wright pointed proudly to his '71 Ford that sported a mottled, mustard yellow hood, a green and white body and one blue fender with a red stripe.

Jerry and Kathy Glidewell leaned on their '55 Chevy that hinted of a smoky blue paint job in days gone by. "It has the original bed," Glidewell explained. "And a disgusting cab," his wife interrupted. "And he's sensitive about it. But I'll say one thing — it always starts."

JoAnne Ferris brought her 1966 Ford from Aubrey. Front-bumperless, the pickup is red and white in random areas, with large, irregular rust spots down the sides. The front grill is turquoise. There is a royal blue paint spill down one headlight mount that seems to have nothing to do with any other color on the vehicle. Mrs. Ferris married the truck, along with her husband, Jimmy, and they made a trip to South Carolina in it, she said.

"Its name is Betsy, and it only needs a quart of oil every five minutes," she said.

Gus Mallam's dad bought his '62 Chevy new, the Lewisville resident said. He took it over about 15 years ago. He pointed to a rusted-out hole in the left front fender. "I normally have a weed growing out of there," he said. "But the drought got it."

Rich Pentecost of Lewisville entered his 1959 Ford whose pale blue color was supplemented with gray spray paint on the hood. "I ruined my chances of winning when I replaced my windshield," he said. "It was busted, but it wouldn't pass inspection that way."

Willy Massouth hastened to explain the strange, rubber-tire bumper on his homely red '66 Dodge. "It's for pushing my car into the garage," he said.

"Zelzabab," Alex Allen's 1964 yellow International Harvester got him safely into Canada a few years ago, only breaking down four times, he bragged. "It lost its antipercolator valve," the Lewisville man said. "I didn't know what that was. I still don't. I put a piece of rubber hose on there and it's been working like that for four years!"

A plastic Bugs Bunny waving a Texas flag rides proudly atop the hood of Bugs Stout's '62 Chevy. It runs well, Stout explained, but starting it is a bit of a chore. "You have to take the battery cables off every time you stop it," he explained. "So when you start it, you have to put on the cables, use this screwdriver with an ignition key and push the starter button. It's a clunker."

Judges Cecil Hawk of Hawk's Body Shop, Marion Graham of Texas Pickup and Shawn Reneau of The Record-Chronicle wandered among the junkers, shaking their heads and wondering just how they could choose a winner from such a select group — each looking more than the last like a loser in a jousting bout with an ugly club. They muttered and scribbled and argued among themselves. After all, this was serious business.

These contenders were vying for prizes such as dinner for four at Texas Pickup, a pair of fuzzy red dice to decorate the rear-view mirror and a psychedelic green waving-bye-bye hand. First, second and third place trophies with some really hideous miniature trucks on top would grace any mantle. But the prize everyone coveted was a photo of himself with his truck.

Third place went to Keith Pierce of Denton, with his '57 Dodge. A classic rusted red with remnants of yellow paint on the hubs, it sported a black bed and a hood that just couldn't make contact with the rest of the body. Obviously of great use to its owner for storage, it held empty beer bottles, old antifreeze containers and several items of uncertain origin. The Dodge required a little jumping off before leaving the parking lot.

AP Laserphoto

Relaxing after their first place win in Denton's Worst Looking Pickup Contest are David Pringle and Jimmy Brearly. Among the prizes were a pair of fuzzy red dice to hang from the rear-view mirror and a psychedelic green waving-bye-bye hand.

"It's easy to win with a Dodge," one loser was heard to mutter. "They're ugly to begin with."

Ted Meador found his second-place winner in his grandfather's back yard with four flat tires. He paid $300 for the white (sort of) '63 Chevy and spent a week getting it to run an another week readying it for inspection. A real working truck, this one. Meador uses it for his summer lawn mowing business, and it arrived complete with all his equipment and piles of cut grass.

He will be a senior at Texas A&M in the fall. He's taking the trophy — but not the truck.

The first-place winner had belonged to, and been declared 4-F by the Army, the Air Force, the Department of the Interior and the Denton Independent School District. The '61 Ford is a particularly depressing shade of green, where any color remains at all after each previous owner stuck on decals and then scraped them off. The passenger side has at some time come into full-length contact with some immovable object, giving it a unique body wave and smashing the door handle flat. Three 15-inch and one 16-inch wheels hold the truck a little askew. The bed is filled with very old hay.

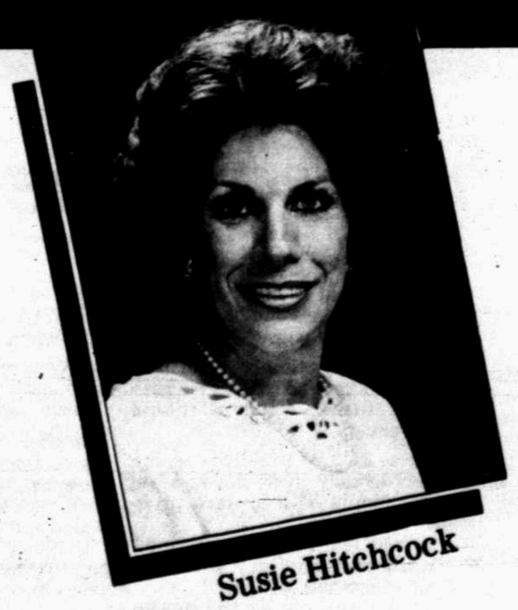

The driver's side has lost a window, but David Pringle, the winner's proud owner, covered it with shiny red vinyl to protect the interior. You have to stick your fingers into a hole in the door and jiggle the mechanism a bit to open the door.

"What's hard is getting the gear shift lever back in the hole," Pringle said. "It's laying on the dash board."

Pringle drives his pride and joy to work every day, he says. But he isn't responsible for the way it looks.

"I only put one dent in the back," he said. "The rest is original."

People of our community who make a difference.

Susie Hitchcock

Midlanders are known for taking on special projects which help others and strengthen the community. Each of those projects must have an initiater and some active individuals who will get the momentum going. Susie Hitchcock is one of those active Midlanders who gets projects off to a good start.

Ms. Hitchcock is a founding board member for the Midland Soccer Association, the West Texas Iris Society and Clean Midland. Currently, she is wearing the hat of entertainment chairman for the big Midland Centennial birthday party which will take place during the Fourth of July weekend in 1985. Summer Mummers, which is produced each year by Ms. Hitchcock, is writing a play for this grand celebration.

Though Ms. Hithcock is especially excited about the upcoming celebration, she is not limiting her activities to that one project. She is president of the Women's Health Club and has recently assumed the responsibility of being chairman of the board of Midland Crime Stoppers. She serves on the board for Ducks Unlimited, a organization which supports conservation of the marshlands. In addition, she is a long-time member of the choir at the First Presbyterian Church.

This Midlander is also an ambassador for the Odessa Chamber of Commerce. She feels that cooperation between the two cities "can only benefit Midland, as well as Odessa."

This contract dance instructor is also a member of the board of managers for the Central YMCA. Though the Midland and Odessa YMCAs and Midland College claim much of her instructing time, Ms. Hitchcock also does some volunteer teaching. The Senior Citizens Center, the Midland Association of Retarded Citizens and scouting groups all benefit from her volunteer work.

Having moved here when she was in third grade, Ms. Hitchcock considers herself a native Midlander. Though she hopes to see the development of some sophisticated parks in Midland which would sport trees, walkways, and beautiful architecture, she appreciates the natural landscape of the West Texas area. She says that it's good for the oil and cattle industry and the sunsets are beautiful.

Never does a sunset come to the West Texas plains when this active woman can't look back on the day and say that she has done something to try to better her community.

Enthusiasm, commitment, and action are why Susie Hitchcock makes a difference in Midland.

Midland Lee fans, above, react to a third quarter touchdown in Friday night's 42-7 bi-district playoff win over Plainview in Lubbock's Jones Stadium. At other points in the game, right, they sought what litle shelter was available from the light rain that fell during the evening. Lee now meets El Paso Andress at 8 p.m. Friday at the Sun Bowl in El Paso.

GOP pollster claims coalition threatened by 'religious right'

Associated Press

AUSTIN — The Republican coalition that flexed its muscles on election day is threatened by dissension sparked by the "religious right," a top GOP pollster said Saturday.

Responding to a question from his Democratic counterpart, Robert Teeter of Detroit said the GOP is "pretty united" on economic and foreign policy issues, but split on social issues.

"Once it begins to get divided over all of those religious right issues, it threatens to pull itself apart," Teeter said at an election analysis symposium at the University of Texas.

Democratic pollster Peter Hart of Washington, who worked for the Walter Mondale campaign, said Republicans must realize the young and "upscale" voters attracted by the GOP this year could be scared off by the "new right" emerging within the party.

The challenge to the Democrats, according to Hart, is "to prove they not only have the compassion to care, but the toughness to govern."

Both pollsters agreed the Reagan landslide trumpeted the end of the New Deal coalition that powered the Democrats for decades. What will replace it in the long run has not yet clearly emerged, they said.

Hart said Mondale faced a tough effort, given "the cards the Democrats were dealt."

"We were looking at a country where the mood was more optimistic than it's been in 20 years," he said.

"This is a post-war report from Gen. Custer's pollster," Hart joked. "The results are in and it went a little less well than expected."

The Mondale campaign took several bad turns, he said, including the financial disclosure squabble that moved Geraldine Ferraro from a "special figure" to "another politician under siege."

Mondale's tax plan also did little to help, according to Hart. The Democrats knew it could hurt, but they felt it was necessary to build Mondale's image as a leader.

"We had enough public opinion data to know raising taxes was not a popular issue in America," said Hart, adding he knew the tax talk would cause a "firestorm."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Getting to class much harder now

By H.A. TUCK

Access to, and departure from, the Midland College campus becomes a bit more difficult starting Monday. That's when a paving contractor begins tearing out and replacing North Garfield Street from Wadley north to Haynes.

City of Midland has agreed to open the Wadley Street gate to the campus and activate the traffic light at Wadley and I Street during the construction period.

The contractor plans to tear out the two westside traffic lanes and the center turn lane of Garfield initially, leaving the two eastside lanes open, with one lane each for north and south traffic. However, making a left-turn onto the campus will be impossible. When the westside laes have been rebuilt, they will be opened and the other two lanes will be ripped out and replaced.

Dean of Students C.C. Dakil reminds all campus visitors tht the speed limits are 10 mph on parking lots and 20 mph on Chaparral Circle.

Construction is scheduled to take 180 days.

However, it's a working weekend for the Chaparral basketball players and coaches. They traditionally spend the Thanksgiving weekend in Amarillo for the Amarilo College tournament, which starts on Thursday and runs through Saturday.

This event ends non-conference action for the Chaps. They'll be back home Monday, Nov. 26, for their conference opener against Clarendon College. That's the first of four conference games before the Christmas break.

There are a couple of other things you can do Sunday afternoon in addition to the car show. The Commerical Music Department is presenting its Roadrunner Band and two other groups in concert at 3 p.m., playing country music and soft rock. It's in the Allison Fine Arts Building and admission is free.

In the McCormick Gallery of the Allison Building, you can view the outstanding painting included in the Clarence Kincaid Retrospective from 1-5 p.m. Sunday. This show remains on display through Dec. 2. Hours are 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday and Tuesday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday. The gallery is going to be closed for the Thanksgiving holidays.

First high school basketball of the season is set for Monday, when Midland High's girls host Andrews at Chap Center. First game is at 6:15 p.m. That's the only cage action of the week in Chaparral Center, which means that center manager Mike Stevens gets to spend Thanksgiving at home for a change. He's usually on duty because of the Tall City Boys Invitational, but that has been scheduled this year for Nov. 20-Dec. 1.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Education Department now 'leanest'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Education Department, often assailed by conservatives, has cut personnel "fat" by 30 percent during the Reagan adminstration and is now "the leanest federal agency," its second-highest official contends.

Gary L. Jones, the under secretary of education, also said that most of the more than $3 billion growth in the Education budget over the past four years was inevitable because Congress has refused to alter open-ended formulas for student loans and grants.

The budget of the agency, which Reagan vowed in 1980 to abolish, has grown from $14.7 billion to $17.9 billion currently — an increase of 21 percent, or about 4 percent a year, he noted.

"We never asked for that high a funding level, but Congress has chosen not to modify programs, particularly in student financial aid, and... that is where the largest escalation of expenditures has occurred," Jones said in an interview Friday before departing for Paris, where he is heading a U.S. delegation to an international education conference.

Education Secretary T.H. Bell announced Nov. 8 that he was resigning from the Reagan Cabinet at the end of the year. Jones is considered to have only a remote chance of succeeding Bell, in part because some conservatives blame both Bell and Jones for not being aggressive enough in fighting to abolish the department, cut federal school programs and enact tuition tax credits for private schools.

Speculation has focused on William J. Bennett, chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities and a conservative Democrat, and Boston University President John Silber as possible successors.

Farm-city 'partnership' stressed

AGRICULTURE

By ALAN L. McWILLIAMS

"Farm and City: Partners in Progress" is the theme of this year's Farm-City Week, being observed through Thursday.

Purpose of the observance is to focus on the teamwork of farm and city people as partners in the growing, processing, marketing and consumption of food and fiber. In other words, Farm-City Week is aimed at promoting better understanding between farm and city people and increasing the knowledge and appreciation of each for the American way of life.

Farm-City Week is under the direction of the National Farm-City Council, Inc., which is coordinated by Kiwanis International.

Agricultural production, marketing and processing provides jobs and income for about a fourth of the working force in Texas.

One out of every 35 Texans is a farmer or rancher, and 30 percent of the state's retail trade business is directly associated with agricultural production and selling of food and fiber products.

Total cash receipts from Texas agricultural sales were about $9 billion in 1983, down about $1 billion from last year due to the PIK-reduced crop acreage. Economic activity generated from these marketing exceeded $33 billion.

Total farm assests in Texas are estimated at $92 billion. With 185,000 farms in Texas, assets average almost a half million dollars per farm. Many commercial size, full-time operators, have in excess of a million dollars invested in their farm or ranch business.

Texas ranks in third place in total cash receipts among the leading agricultural states, behind California and Iowa. Texas, however, is traditionally number one in the sales of cattle and calves, cotton, grain sorghum, sheep and wool, goats and mohair, cabbage and spinach.

One farm worker today provides food and fiber for 78 people. He also creates jos for more than five non-farm people who produce the things farmers need and who process, transport and merchandise the crops farmers harvest.

American agriculture is the world's largest commercial industry with assets exceeding $1 trillion. This industry employs nearly 23 million people, a full 22 percent of America's total labor force. The agricultural industry encompasses manufacturing, farming, transportation, processing, and merchandising.

Farm and city people make the best food and fiber team in the world and give this country the capacity to feed its own people and to export for economic gain as well as for humanitarian purposes.

Farmers overpaid, GAO report indicates

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The government overpaid millions of dollars to farmers who took acreage out of production under 1983 farm programs, according to a U.S. General Accounting Office report.

The report, prepared in reponse to a request by U.S. Rep. Berkley Bedell, D-Iowa, said the overpayments were the result of the average yield formula the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service used for calculating the payments due to farmers.

Farmers were supposed to be paid in cash or commodities based on an estimate of the yield they would otherwise have had. But since farmers naturally chose to set aside their least productive acreage, their historical average yield was higher than the yield they would have gotten from the set-aside acres, the report said.

The GAO used Nebraska and Texas farms in the study. The two states accounted for about 18 percent of the wheat, corn and sorghum acreage involved in 1982 farm programs, the GAO said.

"In Nebraska, we project, based on a statistically valid sample, that payments to corn farmers would have been from $19.4 million to $43.2 million less if they had been based on the expected yield from the land actually set aside," the GAO report said.

"Our work on wheat and sorghum in Texas confirmed that a similar condition existed there also. However, since we did not take a statistically valid sample of farms in Texas, we cannot provide statewide projections."

The GAO reviewed payments to 157 Texas farms and found an overpayment of $54,955.

The Agriculture Department has already revised its procedures, and 1984 payments will be based on production of the specific acreage involved, the GAO report said.

ASCS spokesman Charles Riley said the GAO report did not mention the difficulty officials have in determining whether or not acreage had previously been irrigated, but that the agency had agreed to review its procedures.

Irrigated versus non-irrigated land is what the GAO report meant when it referred to less and more productive acreage, he said.

The effect of the change in the formula is hard to estimate, Riley said.

"It's very hard to compare one program to another," he said. "Eighty-three was one heck of a big participation. Eighty-four is down."

ACSC analyst Charlie Cunningham said 61 percent of wheat farmers and 57 percent of corn and sorghum farmers participated nationwide in 1983. In 1984, he said. About half the number are participating in 1984 set-aside programs, Cunningham said.

Cotton growers should 'reassert'

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — To remain dominant in world markets, U.S. cotton producers need to "reassert our leadership in productivity," cotton economist M. Dean Ethridge told Arizona cotton growers.

"The issue is less about how much the worldwide market for cotton will grow than about how much of this growth will be supplied by the U.S. cotton industry," Ethridge said at the group's annual meeting.

He said the land devoted to cotton worldwide has remained almost constant since 1953 because there has been no need for an acreage boost since yields per unit of land have risen 67 percent.

"Until the 1970s," he added, "the United States led the way in productivity gains, but we have failed to keep the pace in recent years."

Arizona's high-quality, high-yield cotton is the state's No. 1 cash crop. About 85 percent of the crop is shipped overseas, mainly to Asian markets.

A major problem for U.S. producers is "an avalanche of cotton-textile imports" into the United States, according to Ethridge, who is an economist for the National Cotton Council.

He said net domestic cotton consumption was at its highest level in several years during the first quarter of this year — a rate of nearly 8.8 million bales yearly. A bale weighs 480 pounds.

However, consumption of raw cotton by U.S. mills was about average at slightly less than 6 million bales, he said.

Machinists say firm fired lawful strikers

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — The machinists' union at General Dynamics' Fort Worth Division, which walked out in a labor dispute on Nov. 5, has accused the company of firing employees engaged in lawful strike activities, according to the National Labor Relations Board.

The complaint, filed Friday by Local 776 of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, also accuses the company of "restraining and coercing employees" from exercising their right to take part in union activities and failing to bargain in good faith.

General Dynamics officials, who filed their own unfair labor practice complaint on Nov. 8, had no comment on the union accusations.

Regional NLRB director Michael Dunn said the company and union complaints were being investigated and could lead to litigation.

The plant, which delivers 13 F-16 jet fighters a month, has filled 41 percent of the strikers' jobs using supervisors, foremen and non-striking union members, a company spokesman said.

No developments were reported Saturday in negotiations to settle the strike.

The company wants to limit pay increases to 3 percent annual bonuses, while the union is demanding a boost in hourly wages.

Union spokesman Jim Conley said Friday that about 30 of the 6,400 striking machinists had crossed picket lines to return to work. He said union members violating the strike may face disciplinary measures after the walkout ends.

Conley said General Dynamics fired six workers over the past week for "gross misconduct on the picket line," but he said none of the employees had engaged in misconduct.

Where is wisdom

Justice may always be just, but it isn't necessarily wise as the Texas Supreme Court's ruling on unappropriated water verifies. The ruling leaves parts of an already parched and dismally dry state looking at the possibility of not recovering from the water crisis anytime soon.

The ruling that lower courts had "miscontrued and misapplied" laws on unappropriated water was directed at the long-talked Stacy Reservoir, planned for years at a site 25 miles southeast of Ballinger. That reservoir is the final site above Austin for location of a reservoir on the Colorado River, according to officials for the Colorado River Municipal Water District. It would impound more than 550,000 acre-feet of water to provide for the future needs of a number of West Texas communities including Midland.

But in issuing its ruling, the Supreme Court left the Stacy project in limbo by saying, in effect, that there isn't enough water flowing down the Colorado River to create yet another reservoir. Colorado River Municipal Water District officials don't buy that explanation and the state's water situation appears to bear that out. Texas desperately needs all the water it can get.

Water district manager O.H. Ivie said the district presented evidence in a 1978-79 permit hearing that showed an average of 2 million acre-feet of water flows down the Colorado River and into the Gulf of Mexico each year. That's above and beyond the water that is appropriated for each of the lakes already existing along the river's course to the gulf. "That in itself proves all the water in the Colorado River is not being effectively used," says Ivie.

The water district's contention is that since at no time do all the district's water users utilize the maximum amount of water allotted them and since there is an excess flow in the river in about 50 percent of the years, which causes reservoirs to spill over and lose that water, reservoirs could be permitted that would impound more water for use in dry periods.

While the Lower Colorado River Authority contends, on the one hand, that there isn't enough water in the river for construction of another reservoir — namely Stacy — that authority is moving forward with plans to build a new reservoir of its own at Columbus. That really appears contradictory and gives this the flavor of a water war.

The impact of the Stacy ruling doesn't only affect West Texas, either. According to Ivie, water officials believe the ruling may legally apply to the host of reservoirs around the state contained in the June 1984, "Water for Texas" report. "We think the opinion if it stands will have an adverse impact on the entire state and definitely on the Permian Basin area," said Ivie.

Within a few days the water district plans to file a request for a rehearing. After the exceedingly dry conditions of the past few years in this part of the state and with no prospects for drought-breaking rains in the offing, the only hope is that justice will be wise this time around.

No answers to terror

Five years after Iranian "students" seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, the United States and much of the world community still seem uncertain about how to deal with terrorism.

The events in Tehran outraged Americans and contributed to the defeat of President Carter in 1980.

Time, however, has shown that counteracting terrorism is no simple task. The Reagan administration appears uncertain about how to deal with the problem. When Secretary of State George Shultz said recently that Americans may have to accept the loss of innocent lives in reprisals for terrorist incidents, the White House said Shultz was not stating U.S. policy. Vice President George Bush said he disagreed with Shultz. In the wake of the Beirut bombings and recent threats of more violence in the Mideast, some Americans have come to think that vulnerability to terrorism goes with the nation's international responsibilities. Implicit in the government's promise to combat terrorism is the recognition that the terrorist has become an all-too-frequent player in world politics.

The fact is that terrorism often works. It draws attention.

For some terrorists, the act of throwing a bomb or killing an innocent civilian is sufficient. Simply reminding the world of a perceived injustice may be the terrorist's only objective.

As the United States learned in Lebanon, the desire to die a martyr for a cause is often the terrorist's guiding passion.

In 1979, Americans were shocked that U.S. citizens could be captured, abused and humiliated by Iranian fanatics.

Then came the truck-bomb attacks on the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, on the U.S. servicemen at Beirut airport and again, on the U.S. Embassy. During the past few weeks, terrorists of various stripes tried to murder the prime minister of Britain, threw bombs into a civilian bus in Israel and assassinated Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India.

There are also allegations that Bulgaria was involved in the plot to kill Pope John Paul II. Libya and Iran continue to use terrorism as an instrument of national policy.

Is the world becoming resigned to terrorist violence? That would give the terrorists what they want. Civilized nations should resist the temptation to accept terrorism as part of the price of conducting a foreign policy. The violence of the terrorist should not be allowed to become a substitute for diplomacy.

Kennedy award creates a fuss

WASHINGTON — This coming Tuesday, on what would have been Robert F. Kennedy's 59th birthday, an organization formed in his honor will give its first human rights award to a group in El Salvador known simply as the "Mothers' Committee."

That seemingly harmless gesture has caused a vehement, behind-the-scenes controversy inside the State Department.

Jack Anderson

The question is this: Has the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial been hoodwinked into honoring an undeserving group of leftist political activists, as officials in the U.S. Embassy in San Salvador believe?

In terse cables, the embassy has denounced the Mothers' Committee as "shrilly anti-U.S." and "simply a political pressure group for the extreme left." But Patricia Derian, one of five Kennedy Memorial judges who decided to give the award to the Mothers' Committee, has accused embassy officials of "vulgarity" for what she called "their efforts to put out the bad word on these people."

Derian headed the State Department's human rights bureau during the Carter years. The award — and the squabble it has touched off — are very much a part of the continuing, bitter debate over the Reagan administration's policy in El Salvador and its attitude toward human rights.

Critics of the administration are convinced that human rights are still systematically violated in El Salvador. Honoring the Mothers' Committee is a clear expression of this viewpoint.

It is the Reagan administration's position that under President Napoleon Duarte, elected last spring, the slaughter of innocents by right-wing death squads has abated measurably. The administration believes Duarte's middle-road government is trying successfully to curb the murderous excesses of the rightists.

Obviously, a human rights award to a group that is vociferously opposed to Duarte will give a black eye to his government. Embassy officials feel Duarte needs all the encouragement he can get from the United States.

The Kennedy Memorial examined more than 40 potential recipients for the $30,000 award before choosing the Salvadoran Mothers' Committee. Derian acknowledged to my associate Lucette Lagnado that she was the only one of the five Memorial judges who had had contact with the Mothers' Committee.

If the group being honored is a legitimate human rights organization, the award will be acutely embarrassing to the White House. But it's the State Department's view, based on information from Ambassador Thomas Pickering and his people on the scene in El Salvador, that the Mothers' Committee doesn't deserve the award. If this is indeed the case, it would be the Kennedy Memorial that suffers the embarrassment. So the political battle lines are clearly drawn and vigorously defended.

In one sharply worded cable, the embassy set forth its claim that the Mothers' Committee is not what it pretends to be: a simple, non-political group of women seeking justice for their murdered sons, like the "mothers of the disappeared" in Argentina.

The Salvadoran group is a different breed of cat, according to the embassy. "The Mothers' Committee has published numerous strong attacks against U.S. government policy toward Latin America," the cable states, "and places the blame for virtually all human rights abuses in El Salvador squarely on the shoulders of the Duarte regime."

The Catholic Church in El Salvador has never officially sponsored the group, the cable notes, and in fact the Mothers' Committee was asked last March to vacate church office space it had occupied for several years. Sources said church leaders were upset by the political bias of the committee, and activities that included demonstrations on the steps of the cathedral in San Salvador.

"The committee, however, has largely ignored the archbishop's injunction" over use of church offices, the cable adds.

The Mothers' Committee leaders are "politically astute young women," the embassy claims, stating, "They have evolved into a much more openly anti-U.S. political pressure group, negating ... their claim to be a non-political group of bereaved relatives of victims of political violence."

The embassy claims that among "organizations active in trying to deal with human rights issues in El Salvador, the Mothers are not considered to be a true 'human rights' organization," but have instead "become simply a political pressure group for the extreme left."

To support this charge, the embassy reports, "The Mothers have increasingly savagely denounced Duarte as a 'shameless Reagan puppet,'" and described his offer to talk with the leftist guerrillas as a "demagogic, exhibitionist demonstration of intransigence." On the other hand, the Mothers' Committee publicly announced that "we support categorically ... the sincere and honest efforts" of the guerrillas to reach a political solution.

The cable reports with some bitterness that meetings between the Mothers' Committee leaders and Pickering are invariably followed by "highly charged political attacks on the United States."

Of faith — and Ritz crackers!

WASHINGTON — The deplorables tendences of this hell-for-leather, live-in-the-future Republic include a tendency to neglect important memories and milestones. Yet even in the swirl and rush of recent events, amidst a foaming sea of politics, and with deep thoughts jostling one another in the public mind, a few of us have been in a fever of impatience for two November ceremonies.

George F. Will

We intend to keep in moral trim by celebrating the 50th birthday of Nabisco's Ritz cracker. And on Nov. 20, we shall silently meditate on the meaning of it all as McDonald's sells its 50 billionth hamburger.

A few months ago, Nabisco, unable to restrain itself, held a bash at the Waldorf to celebrate its cracker. But purists know that the Ritz cracker was not born until November, 1934. It was a Depression baby and its name was an act of bravado.

Imagine. While people were living in Hoovervilles and eating saltine crackers in soup lines, someone launched a cracker called Ritz. That was like launching an expensive magazine about business during the nation's worst business crisis and audaciously calling the magazine "Fortune." That is, of course, what Henry Luce did.

Nabisco considered hundreds of names and lit upon Ritz because Cesar Ritz's hotel on the Place Vendome in Paris is, well, ritzy. Sure, it made no sense to conjure up visions of luxury in 1934. And it was crazy to do so with a simple cracker. But the cracker was an instant success, and 50 years later Nabisco is selling 60 million of the things. Every day.

Today, with the Depression no longer even a memory for most Americans, it takes more than a fancy name to suggest luxury. But the Japanese are trying. They manufacture, for instance, "the Mercedes of strollers." The Aprica stroller comes in a "limited edition" Classic Leather series for upscale toddlers.

An advertisement for the Aston Martin Lagonda automobile says: "It comes in 23 colors, including envy green." Another advertisement for it proclaims: "It's not just another $150,000 car." A third says in large type: "Demoralize thy neighbor." The text reads: "It's one thing to trundle by in a Bentley, Jaguar, Mercedes or the like. Everyone in your neighborhood has one of those....Should your neighbors ask where they can get a Lagonda, tell them they probably can't."

But anyone can get a cracker. So why name a cracker after a hotel that is one of the world's most conspicuous symbols of exclusivity? Because, silly, the name affirmed, in a dark time, the glistening American faith. The faith is that the average American has a right to live above average. That is why a U.S. senator became indignant when told that half of America's families were making less than the median family income.

That scandal — regrettably, it is still the case — is not the fault of Ray Kroc. He is responsible for making more millionaires than any American who ever lived. He founded McDonald's. Many of the franchise holders have become millionaires by serving meals that cost 35 cents when Kroc opened his first store in 1955 (hamburger 15 cents, french fries 10 cents, Coke 10 cents). That meal now costs $1.50.

As a philosopher once said, life is one damn thing after another. Kroc understood a crucial fact of commercial life in a country that spans a continent: If you sell one small thing after another, often enough, you will get pots of money. Or, to put the point concisely: Life is cumulative.

Verily, things add up. McDonald's is selling 140 hamburgers a second, serving 14 million customers a day here and three million more overseas. Seventeen million customers a day is like inviting Australia to lunch and allowing it to bring New Zealand as a guest. Fifty billion hamburgers would fill 45 towers the size of Chicago's Sears Tower, world's tallest building. The flour for 50 billion hamburger buns would cover the ski slopes of Aspen and Vail ten feet deep.

McDonald's food is not for everyone. The poet Coleridge, for example, preferred eating honeydew and drinking the milk of paradise. But that is not fit food for a Republic. The cuisine of the common man is a cracker called Ritz, covered with peanut butter and jelly. Or a Big Mac.

Emancipated thinkers — people enslaved by their passion for appearing superior to popular taste — assume an austere, wary look at the mere mention of McDonald's, a name they speak as though it soils their lips. But I suspect that they creep like Chingachgook (James Fenimore Cooper's Indian who rushed silently through forests without even snapping a twig) through the golden arches.

ART BUCHWALD

Nice guys don't raise taxes!

Now that he has been reelected president, Ronald Reagan has miles to go and promises to keep.

The promise that voters will remember the most is that Mr. Reagan said he could see no situation where he would raise the people's taxes. The president was not just whistling "Dixie," — he really meant it.

Art Buchwald

Therefore, you can imagine how aghast I was when I walked into the Treasury Department cafeteria and found a fellow at a table studying a top secret manual titled, "Death and Taxes for the '80s."

"That's an interesting book you have there," I said.

"We've all been instructed to memorize it," he said confidentially. "It provides the guidelines to interdicting the deficit during the next four years."

"You're not going to increase taxes?"

"Of course not," he said. "President Reagan promised if elected he would kill them, not raise them."

"Then how are you going to cut the deficit?"

"It says in the book we're going to add revenue enhancers."

"Isn't that the same as a tax?"

"Wait a minute," he said, leafing through the pages. "No, it's just the opposite. We are going to reform the code so that people will pay less instead of more taxes."

"How do you plan to do it?"

"Here it is on page 12. 'One way to keep the tax base from rising is to stop people from deducting their state and city income taxes from their federal tax.' By doing this the government should be able to make $30 billion on the deal."

"If people can't deduct state and city income taxes from their federal returns, they'll still be paying more than they did before."

"Yes, but they'll get mad at the state and city officials and not at us. They can't fault the president just because he wants to close a notorious tax loophole."

"I should hope not."

"It says here that one of the ways to win the hearts and minds of the people is to withhold revenue on unemployment insurance."

"You're going to tax unemployment insurance?"

"No, we're going to enhance it, so that people entitled to it will give a portion of it back to the government."

"It sounds like a tax to me."

"It will only affect those out of work. If you have a job it won't cost you anything."

"Do they have any other 'revenue enhancers' in the book?"

"Here's one we'll take a shot at. We are going to simplify everyone's taxes so even if they start spiraling up in the first five years, they will go down in the next six, providing inflation stays at 4 percent and the Gross National Product goes up to 7."

"Do you think you can get away with that?"

"We can't, but the president can. That's why the people elected him."

"What else is in the manual?"

"There is a chapter devoted to how to conduct covert lobbying operations behind congressional lines, as well as how to 'neutralize' anyone who accuses the president of raising taxes when he said he wouldn't."

"What exactly do you mean by 'neutralize'? You're not thinking of assassinating anyone who accuses President Reagan of going back on his campaign promises."

"Are you crazy? We're not the CIA. When we say 'neutralize' we mean to reinforce our tax base so we won't be confronted with a fiscal window of vulnerability."

"So what's the bottom line?"

"The bottom line is that no matter how you cut it, the American people are going to have to pay more money to the government in '85 than they did in '84. In spite of that the people still won't get mad at Ronald Reagan."

"Why not?"

"Because everyone knows Ronald Reagan is a nice guy, and nice guys don't raise people's taxes."

Baby Fae experiment was hope for life of child

Bill Modisett

This week when Baby Fae died, I think a little part of every parent who has a child born with a physical defect died also.

The transplanted heart from a baboon was a novelty. It ensured that reporters would cling to Baby Fae to watch her every movement and that human idiocy would create controversy around a human child because an animal was "sacrificed" to prolong her tender life.

I'll tell you something about the mentality of those who bemoaned the fact that doctors killed a baboon in the fleeting hope of saving a child. They are the type of individuals who do not cherish and elevate human life. They think the only difference between Baby Fae and the baboon was the simple fact that the baboon had more hair.

Oh they claim they do it in the interest of protecting all life, but I don't believe they really understand what they're supporting. When a person attempts to put all life on an equal footing, some life forms will certainly be elevated but others necessarily will have to be lowered.

Do these baboon lovers truly believe that the doctors at Loma Linda Medical Center were Frankenstein-makers who were so enraptured with their ghoulish experiments that they lost sight of the value of life?

Not hardly. Baby Fae was a hope. A hope for the life of a child. A hope for a medical researcher whose goal is to give dying children a new breath of life. A hope for all the parents of children born with defective hearts and who are sentenced to watch, helplessly, as a part of them dies.

It wasn't successful in terms of Baby Fae living a normal lifespan, but it was a start. Was it worth the risk? The pain of loving and then losing a child?

Only Baby Fae's parents can answer that question, but I think they would say those three weeks of precious life were well worth the gamble.

There's an air of excitement about another kind of frontier, too. The latest flight of Space Shuttle Discovery seems to have renewed interest in the space program. Not that interest ever was really lacking all that much.

Now, though, people who probably thought they never would see the unbelievable sights the shuttle program is showing them truly are excited about the program's future.

And why shouldn't they be? Down through the ages man has longed to break free of his terrestrial home, to walk on new worlds, to seek out new forms of life, to find the answer to the question: "Are we the only ones here?"

The shuttle program is opening up all kinds of speculation about the future. With ordinary people taking to space, can shuttle flights to the moon for the public be far down the road?

I grew up in the Space Age and in just over two decades have seen men walk on the moon, walk in space and make monthly flights into the heavens on a reusable craft. My parents, who witnessed the advent of gasoline-powered motor vehicles and the death of the horse and buggy days, thought they'd never see space travel in their lives.

They have and it makes me wonder what's coming in the next two decades.

It's almost that time again. Last Christmas season the "biggie" was Cabbage Patch Kids dolls. I never got caught up in the excitement of the little rascals, but I guess that's because my son never asked for one.

He's more into dogs...and kitties...and rocks. At 19 months it's understandable that dolls don't hold too much attraction for little boys. But that may be less of a blessing than it seems.

I can hear the rumble of a personal computer just around the corner. How do you get one of those into a Christmas stocking?

For all those who got caught up in the nuclear war craze, just a note: Next Tuesday marks the first anniversary of the airing of ABC-TVs still-talked-about movie, "The Day After."

It may not seem too significant now, but, when the movie aired, it was controversial for what it supposedly did or didn't say. Personally I thought it was kind of like the movie, "Jaws." It was so over-billed that when I saw it, the movie was a letdown.

Overall, though, I believe the ABC movie was worthwhile. It focused national attention on a very real possibility and as long as attention is there, perhaps the outcome depicted in "The Day After" will remain unlikely.

I hope so, truly. I don't necessarily subscribe to the "nuclear winter" scenario, but just because we've never had a nuclear war is no reason to start one.

Museum has finally done 'dirty deed'

It is a shame that the Museum of the Southwest committee has finally done their "dirty deed." It is sad to think that the Lancaster House no longer exists. I guess this is what happens when you let businessmen get on a fine arts committee. They think that art or any object of art should earn a profit like an oilwell. Well I hate to say it but "art" isn't something you try to make money off like an oilwell.

Some people might not have thought the Lancaster House to be an object of art, but I did. I would like to thank the Save the Lancaster House Committee and all that they tried to do to save the house.

I think that it is ignorant to compare an object of art to a dry hole. The people who were lucky enough to get and hopefully will preserve some of the beautiful architectural objects probably did more to save the Lancaster House than did the Museum of the Southwest committee.

The next thing the Museum of the Southwest's committee probably will want to do is tear down the Turner home and build a new and modern museum. If the people on that committee have the attitude to destroy historical and landmark places in Midland, I wonder where they will get the support and money to do so?

Radio program like taking sip of nectar

It's like drinking nectar from a water glass.

All it takes is the selection on the radio band — 90 FM. Somehow, along the way, the sounds of "All Things Considered," does not greet us in the Midland—Odessa area, and perhaps there are residents who would voice their preference for Public Radio.

Perhaps, by virtue of correspondence to the editor — many thanks.

First championship for Lee was in '77-78

On Sunday, Oct. 28 you ran an article headlined "Rebels claim first 4-5A cross country crown." In the article it was stated, "It was the first cross country championship ever won by the Lee Rebels." This statement is incorrect.

In the school year 1977-78 Coach Sam Volpe had a girls' varsity cross country team that brought home the district championship trophy. This was the first time any Lee team had won a district cross country title since it became a UIL sport.

The team consisted of Holly Franz, Geri Moore, Tanya Phiffer, Shelley Hall, Vanessa Wood, Terry Reyes and Subrina Hicks.

Honesty establishes media's credibility

Congratulations to the Reporter-Telegram for publishing Charley Reese's column on Nov. 12 on journalistic integrity. This is one column which should be run in every paper through the land. Unfortunately, too much of the media would censor such a column on the basis that publicizing the errors of one undermines the credibility of all.

Au contraire. It is the honest self-policing efforts which establish credence in the overall integrity of the profession.

Again, congratulations for your courageous stand.

U.S. won't deliver for Sandinista leaders

I'm disappointed in the United States Government. They don't deliver what the Nicaraguan Marxist junta promises. This cabal of self-appointed leaders-through-arms have said for months that the U.S. is going to initiate a massive regular army invasion of their territory; first before their completely managed elections and now because of an "unnamed" leak about their "possible" receipt of a few out-of-date and barely super-sonic aircraft.

Only the news media has considered this an event, and they alone have stirred up all sorts of comments and speculations which only serve to confirm the mock concern of the so-called Sandinistas. Even their name was misappropriated.

How could our interests be served by a supposed leak, especially on election day? Why would President Reagan want any kind of leak on election day that on its face indicates there is a problem under his administration?

After Israel downed 81 such aircraft in three days using U.S. aircraft, how much of a threat could those MiG 21s be to us or any Central American country?

On the other hand, since we didn't invade them on schedule before their "elections," maybe they need to raise this possibility of invasion on any pretext in order to maintain their state of readiness and the fiction of their leadership importance to the remaining gullible Nicaraguan citizens.

In the eyes of national and international media, we are the bad guys without having done anything, so can lose little face whatever we do, but more properly we should just ignore the whole contrived thing from the outset.

Catalogs offer items not available in stores

The recent letter from Sue Harris expressing her frustration at competition from home shows and catalogs was sincere and well stated. Although I'm not a home show shopper, I confess to browsing the catalogs and, on occasion, buying from same.

Now, let me tell you why. I don't buy lots of items, but when the mood strikes, I'm fairly particular about quality and getting exactly what I want, not just something that will do. Let me cite three examples to show what I mean.

I was looking for some good walking shoes a while back. At my age, I wasn't interested in the earth pads and fabric and rubber jogging shoes that go over big with the younger set...just some plain, leather, garden variety, run-of-the-mill, thick soled walking shoes. I trod the malls and shopping centers..."We don't carry those"..."This is all we have"...you know, there's a monotonous boredom in seeing the same stuff in every shop, none of it being what you're after. Finally, one gentleman special ordered the shoes. They are comfortable, and he has made me a permanent customer. The point is that they were not available on the shelf.

Case two: A few months ago, I bought a couple of pairs of those cargo pants. You know, the kind with the big pockets thhat will hold everything from maps and extra film to lunch and spare socks. Great for traveling. Yep, I bought them from a catalog. No one in town carried them, and I looked. Well, when they're loaded down, they tend to sag, so the next item was suspenders. No, not those dressy, narrow kind with the cute little metal clips...a good, substantial, wide pair with the leather ends that button on, and which will hold up pants while hiking or hunting. Seven stores later, you guessed it, no one stocked heavy duty suspenders. Back to the catalog. Sure, it took three weeks, but I got what I wanted, and at a third the price of some I saw on the shelf.

One more: Being a pocket calculator freak, and misplacing the one I had carried for three years, a new model in a catalog caught my eye. It tells time, calculates, stores telephone numbers by name, and dials the numbers into a touch tone phone system. Sure enough, several stores and several phone calls later, I gave up and ordered the gadget using the 800 number.

I hear what Sue is saying, and sympathize with her problem. I really do. But the customer has a problem too. I would much prefer to buy in our local stores. I like to handle, try on, click switches, and see things work before committing to purchase. But more than that, I want to buy what I want, and not what some marketing specialist thinks I ought to have.

Don't waste time on 'poor' Carter

Regarding Gary Ott's column concerning poor ex-President Jimmy Carter. I do not know where Mr. Ott learned his politics but he writes like a true Democrat: Forget the past and blame everything on someone else.

Mr. Ott seems to have forgotten that for at least 50 years everything wrong with this country was blamed (by the Democrats) on Herbert C. Hoover, from the Great Depression to the Johnstown flood.

Democrats forget that many of the programs put into use by Roosevelt began with Hoover, and helped pull this country together again. But all of that is forgotten and Hoover is still blamed for many things he had no control over, so don't waste too much time feeling for sorry for "Peanuts" Carter.

He earned his spot in American history, so let him take whatever lumps he has coming.

Legalizing abortion in U.S. has opened Pandora's box

By JONATHAN ROBINSON

A junior at Midland High School, Jonathan Robinson is an honor student who has received academic awards. He participates in varsity swimming and soccer and serves as presient of Mid-Lee Productions through the Junior Achievement program. He is recipient of a scholarship to the National Junior Achievement Conference at Indiana University.

"The care of human life and not its destruction is the first and only legitimate object of good government."
— Thomas Jefferson

On Jan. 22, 1973, the United States Supreme Court ruled in the landmark Roe v. Wade and Doe v. Bolton decisions that unborn human beings are not legal "persons" according to the U.S. Constitution. A fetus (Latin for unborn child) is the property of the mother and she can have the unborn child killed at her request, even up to the time of birth if her doctor agrees. This Supreme Court decision to legalize abortion in America has opened a Pandora's box and presents Americans with an ominous future. To preserve the moral future of humanity the legalization of abortion must be abolished. Legalized abortion is an unjust law that exists within America and must be confronted by concerned Americans.

Abortion laws are unjust for they "degrade human personality" and legalize the murder of innocent human life. Abortion is the unjustified killing of unborn children. Thoreau plainly states that laws that are unjust must be broken. Legalized abortion is "of such a nature that it requires man to be the agent of injustice to another."

Obviously, abortion "is a code that is out of harmony with the moral law...," for human life begins when a sperm fertilizes an egg, not at birth. Even many doctors who believe that abortions are justified will concede that life begins at fertilization. Therefore, the destruction of human embryos is the murder of a human being. Abortion also defies God's moral law: "Thus says the Lord, your Redeemer, who formed you in the womb: See, I set before you today life and prosperity, death and destruction. Now choose life, so that you and your children may live." (Deuteronomy 30:15,19)

Martin Luther King Jr., a great leader of the civil rights movement, said that "it is wrong to use immoral means to attain moral ends. But now I must affirm that it is just as wrong or perhaps more so, to use moral means to preserve immoral ends..." The immoral laws that allow abortion on demand by pregnant mothers are increasing the number of irresponsible pregnancies and are leading to disrespect for human life. The murder of over 15 million unborn babies in the last 11 years cannot be labeled anything else but the highest irreverence for human life outside of war.

Today, with the abortion rate approaching 2 million per year, Americans are witnessing a holocaust that more than doubles the atrocities of Hitler's Germany. Only a tiny fraction of these abortions bear any reasonable justification such as rape, incest and the life of the mother on which the whole landslide of killing was argued into legality. Most Americans are reacting with unbelief and indifference. Thoreau characterizes these apathic Americans who "hesitate, and regret, and sometimes petition; but they do nothing in earnest and with effect."

People are numbed to the fact that pregnant mothers are systematically and purposefully destroying human life. Apathetic Americans must open their eyes and see the long range impact abortion will have on future generations. Some Americans with the philosophical belief that the fetus is not a human being deny the unborn baby his lawful rights and the dignity he deserves. The majority of abortions occur because women use this procedure as a method of birth control. Other Americans remain neutral on the position of abortion because they are afraid they may offend someone. Neutral Americans, however, are in actuality condoning murder.

There must be a reversal on the Supreme Court's ruling. The Justices of the Supreme Court need to listen to Thoreau's advice: "If I have unjustly wrested a plank from a drowning man, I must restore it to him though I drown myself." Concerned Americans, however, must break this "unjust law openly, lovingly and with a willingness to accept the penalty."

Martin Luther King Jr. believed that "nonviolent direct action seeks to create such a tension that community which has constantly refused to negotiate is forced to confront the issue." Passive resistance is the most effective weapon Americans can use against abortion. People across the United States, who believe in the abolition of abortion, must stand up and speak out. Americans can affiliate with pro-life legislation, including a human life amendment to the Constitution.

The Supreme Court has ruled that an unborn child in the womb is not a person entitled to the right to life, and may be deprived of life by the mother and her attending physician. The unborn and all U.S. citizens must have the legal protection of their right to life restored. Americans in cities throughout the United States can also organize passive resistance committees. These committees can picket neighborhood hospitals with signs opposing abortion. These committees also can offer counseling agencies for pregnant women. Americans also need to promote alternatives to abortion, including adoption and care for those who are pregnant out-of-wedlock.

Finally, concerned Americans should raise money and produce a graphic movie showing all Americans what really happens when abortions take place. This movie might jolt or shock neutral Americans to take a definite stand against abortion laws in America.

Concerned Americans must confront the issue of abortion and change this immoral law. History records that in all of the wars America has fought, 1½ million soldiers were killed. The outcry over the 58,000 soldiers killed in Vietnam should set an example for concerned citizens against abortion.

Abortion is the ultimate child abuse and must be stopped!

Now Reagan must tackle second-term headaches

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Fresh from his great electoral triumph, President Reagan began working briskly on a second-term agenda that may cause him more headaches than even his first landslide win. A divided Congress, in which Democrats keep a big edge in the House of Representatives and Republicans hold a slimmed-down lead in the Senate, could account for a political gridlock. In such a situation, Americans-at-large, who swept the president to victory, will suffer as legislators play politics and look to midterm polls in 1986 to better their partisan chances.

The president, a skilled politician in his own right, can still go over the heads of warring political factions with direct appeals to the people. He has been singularly successful with such approaches at significant junctures during his first term, compelling recalcitrant congressmen to back down when they had vowed otherwise.

HIGH ON HIS priority list is, of course, American defense and our security which provides the umbrella for all the Free World. President Reagan made it clear during the campaign that he does not intend to abandon our defense programs, either on land, sea, air or in space. Naturally, the Soviet Union demanded that he abandon the space projects which critics sneer at as "Star Wars." Its actual name is "High Frontier" and President Reagan approved the format in a talk to the nation nearly two years ago. The U.S.S.R. keeps experimenting with the concept and failing. We've scored some spectacular successes so far and that's why the Soviets want us to stop and negotiate arms control.

But the Soviets are very sneaky when it comes to yielding on their brazen efforts to intrude in Central America and create upheavals wherever possible throughout Latin America. They are busy stoking up emergencies in Marxist-run Nicaragua where the U.S.S.R. keeps supplying arms to the military junta through a steady series of freighter cargoes. Moscow denies any of the deliveries are MiG fighter aircraft which we have sworn to destroy. These planes would wreak havoc in neighboring Central American nations and be able to fly strikes against the Panama Canal.

THE NICARAGUAN Communists, who just garnered a big vote against virtually no opposition, refuse to show what the Soviet-made crates contain; just deny the accusations from Washington as did the U.S.S.R. The world recalls, however, that the Soviets in 1962 denied the existence of missile bases in Cuba when the late President John F. Kennedy had photos showing the actuality. That's a tradition with Moscow — lie for your regime.

By constantly repeating these realities about our adversaries and their hostile intentions to spread the disease of ideological discontent, I'm not being a scold. It's simply that I would like the Communist methods of subversion and infiltration better understood by my countrymen.

I often feel that we ignore or pay too little attention to Soviet-inspired malevolence in our own backyard. Too many folks in this great nation of ours don't know, or even care, what system runs Nicaragua or where it's located. For openers, let's remember that Marxist-ruled Nicaragua has about 12,000 Cubans sent by Castro, plus East Germans, Bulgars, Czechs and even PLO gunmen to kill for the Kremlin. It supplies the Communist-headed guerrillas marauding around next-door El Salvador which, with our aid, is beginning to win.

For nearly a year mustachioed Nicaraguan junta leader Daniel Ortega has shouted epithets at the United States, always concluding with the claim that we are about to "invade." It's an old "wolf" cry but quite a few knowledgeable sources in Washington believe that Ortega and his crew may be mounting an invasion against a neighbor themselves, probably El Salvador and/or Honduras, where we have some landing strips, and engage in joint army maneuvers with local forces.

THE REAGAN administration, having retreaded our military defenses, also is ready to meet any further Soviet-Cuban challenges and has said so with promises of more aid to beleaguered El Salvador if it feels additionally pressured. President Reagan told me and some of my colleagues this quite openly when we met with him at the White House before our elections. Our security is No.1 with him because if that should fall apart, nothing else matters. The president was optimistic, and so am I, that we can handle that tricky issue, impinging as it does on domestic and foreign matters.

At home, as far as anyone can forecast, I don't see the president finding many roadblocks when he needs help from Congess for endangered Central American republics. The nay-sayers from before the elections went to the stricken areas themselves and returned to tell President Reagan that he was right and from now on they'd do the right thing.

INFLATION LOOKS like continuing very much on the mild side with interest rates also coming down some. Two big questions persist on the home front, I think. The first is what will the administration do about that big national deficit? After the New Year, I have a hunch that there will be some tax hikes but it's anyone's guess as to which form they can take.

The other is the role of the labor unions. The AFL-CIO took a shellacking when at a minimum half its membership voted for President Reagan. As free Americans they made their choice in the voting booths and ignored the fact that their leader, Lane Kirkland, selected Walter Mondale early in the campaign.

Congress must also adjust to the voters' selection sooner or later.

Nuclear war would leave world in smoke, study says

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

It is a grim vision: a frozen, sunless world where no food can be grown and drinking water must be thawed. Now, some studying this nightmare theory of "nuclear winter" say the aftermath of a nuclear war may be worse than first imagined.

While the theories are controversial and unproven, some scientists have argued that nuclear war would leave the world in a shroud of smoke and soot, bringing on a long, killing winter.

Additional research now envisions a worse scenario: an empty arctic wasteland where man is an endangered species.

"We have become aware of other things that would expand the effects," says astronomer Carl Sagan, one of the first scientists to suggest the chilling possibility of nuclear winter. "If you put these all together there is a chance of its effects lasting five years.

"We were originally talking about six months to a year. Six months to a year would cause massive extinctions of many species."

Everyone studying the issue, however, agrees that years of research lie ahead before the theory is proven — as Sagan hopes — or discarded. Scientists employed by U.S. government agencies are proposing a five-year study.

Last fall, Sagan was among a group of scientists who released a study theorizing what would happen in the wake of nuclear war. The report was called TTAPS, a wry acronym for its authors, Richard Turco, O. Brian Toon, Thomas Ackerman, James Pollack and Sagan.

USING COMPUTER projections, they estimated that fires from target cities would pump soot, smoke and ash high into the atmosphere. The encompassing darkness would blot out the sun, plunging the northern hemisphere into subfreezing darkness for weeks, even months.

Crops would die; water would freeze. Those who had lived through the nuclear horror would face a long, starving winter.

"The study originally said six months of very bad weather would kill a lot of stuff and it would take a year or two to for the system to get better," says Toon, an atmospheric scientist at NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif.

Edward Teller, the noted physicist who helped develop the hydrogen bomb, ridicules the study for overestimating the amount of smoke.

Teller says other research indicates much of the smoke and soot would be immediately "rained out" by the moisture in the air. He says other work suggests there would be only moderate temperature changes.

"The trouble is they are making extreme assumptions," he says. "There is nothing wrong with the calculations. There is everything wrong with the assumptions."

Toon agrees with critics that there are "substantial uncertainties" in the predictions. But, he asserts, "there haven't been any contradictions to any of the (report's) ideas."

Now, other scientists suggest the TTAPS study may have been too optimistic. Scattered research indicates the nuclear winter could last years instead of months and spread to the southern hemisphere, affecting areas of the globe far from the combatants in any nuclear exchange.

"It's no longer a tenable position for other countries to believe nuclear war would affect only the major powers," says Sagan. "Countries like New Zealand and Brazil can see we're all in this together."

THE TTAPS study theorizes that nuclear attacks would turn cities into smoky pyres, sending tremendous plumes of smoke and soot more than five miles high. That happened, on a smaller scale, when the Indonesian volcano Tambora erupted in 1816. Scientists say that was a year without summer, a time when North America and Europe saw snow fall in July.

The TTAPS study estimated nuclear winter would end as moisture in the air gradually scrubbed the skies clean.

But William Cotton, a professor of atmospheric science at Colorado State University, says the smoke clouds could rise above the cleansing weather.

Using a computer model developed to predict wind currents in thunderstorms, Cotton estimates a nuclear blast leveling Denver would send debris shooting skyward at tremendous speeds, throwing as much as 40 percent of it 10 miles up into the drier stratosphere where it would stay much longer.

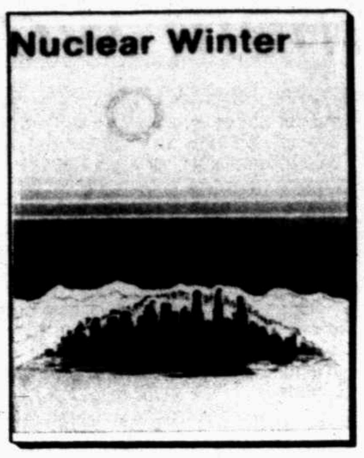

Bob Haberle, another Ames researcher, used a computer program that duplicates the patterns of dust storms on Mars, and he asked the computer what would happen if a nuclear exchange released 250 megatons of smoke — a figure based on prior projections.

The answer was disturbing. The dark smoke would soak up sunlight, heating and rising into the stratosphere where winds would carry it into the southern hemisphere.

"We are concerned about this because it means not only will there be a direct effect, lowering the temperature, but it would last longer," Haberle says. "It makes it worse."

Meteorologists have offered projections that show temperatures would fall within days.

"WE FOUND there was a substantial freezing," says Curt Covey of the University of Miami who has worked with researchers at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colo. "Temperatures could fall below freezing in North America and Eurasia even in July."

There have been other dire predictions. Sagan says research at the University of Maryland indicates that snow in southern climates and sea ice would keep temperatures frigid.

But Sagan and other scientists agree government-supported research is needed, and preliminary steps have been made in that direction.

The National Academy of Sciences will release a report next month that reviews past research. A committee of scientists from various federal agencies is finishing a proposal for a five-year research program that could cost as much as $50 million.

Government researchers at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in Livermore, Calif., have spent $1 million examining the issue.

Michael MacCracken of the lab's atmospheric science division, says preliminary research generally agrees with the TTAPS conclusion about a temperature drop. Other studies at Livermore suggest the smoke could remain in the atmosphere longer that first predicted.

"There are uncertainties based on what kind of war you would have and uncertainties on how well we are doing the physics," he says. "It's going to take several years to reach conclusions."

Scientists in the Soviet Union, France, Canada in other nations also have begun studying the issue.

Awful as the theory is, Sagan is hopeful that it can be proven true. If it is, he says, it would destroy the concept of limited nuclear war.

"If we all accept this theory, we all agree that there is a ridiculously large amount of nuclear warheads," he says. "If the net result of nuclear winter was a net reduction in nuclear arsenal, it would have a silver lining to it."

60,000 people may attend balls

ABOARD AIR FORCE ONE (AP) — Presidential aides are expecting perhaps 60,000 people to attend parties following President Reagan's formal inauguration Jan. 21 and may use the D.C. Convention Center for several of them, a top White House official said Saturday.

Deputy White House Chief of Staff Michael K. Deaver, who has been given overall charge of the inauguration planning, said Saturday that 18,000 people could fit in the convention center, making it an attractive site for two or more of the traditional post-inaugural balls.

By law, Reagan will be sworn in privately Jan. 20, but since that falls on a Sunday, the traditional ceremony in front of the capitol will occur on Jan. 21.

He said 250 military personnel have been working on inauguration planning since June. That group is being supplemented rapidly with the White House appointees to the inaugural committee.

A White House aide who spoke on condition that he not be identified said last week that the inaugural theme probably would have to do with unity.

Deaver said he did not know how many balls there would be, but said about 60,000 people attended the parties four years ago and that he was expecting a similar number in 1985.

Tech's Buzz Tatum makes an elbow landing after taking a pass from QB Aaron Keesee.

SMU rips up Tech

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Maybe this one should have been seen coming.

After emotionally-draining and losing efforts against Texas and Texas Christian University on successive Saturdays, Texas Tech had nothing left for its usual rude South Plains reception of Southern Methodist University Saturday. The result was a surprise of sorts when SMU toyed with Texas Tech, 31-0, before 31,864 drenched, but upset-expectant fans in Jones Stadium Saturday.

The lilting strings of Hawaiian banjos could be heard in the background playing Aloha to You, or was it Smu, as SMU raised its record to 7-2 and Tech slipped to 4-6.

A couple of hard-hits that caused momentum-turning fumbles and the escape antics of SMU quarterback Don King turned what had started in promising fashion for Tech into a rout.

The Red Raiders opened the game with what may have been their most impressive infantry march of the season, moving from their 26 to fourth and two at the SMU four. The Tech bench eschewed the field goal attempt to "go for it" and it worked. I-back Timmy Smith made it to the one and appeared ready to fall into the end zone when linebacker T.D. Briggs drove a shoulder, the ball popped free and cornerback Roderick Jones caught it.

"It was one of two big fourth down stops for us," said SMU Coach Bobby Collins. "We not only caught the fumble, but in the end zone, so that we got possession at the 20 instead of on the one. The other fumble also gave us good field position and led to a touchdown."

SMITH AGAIN was the victim as Tech gambled on fourth and two. Reggie Phillips recovered at the SMU 43 and the Mustangs launched a drive that led to a 14-0 lead when King found split end Jeff Jacobs alone and back-pedaling into the end zone on a 31-yard touchdown pass.

"It wasn't the pass I called," said King. "It wasn't supposed to work out that way. It was a fake inside and then a quick pass to the fullback."

King was flushed out of the pocket and fled to the outside. "What happened was that the linebacker picked up the fullback and I guess the cornerback came in to help out. Anyway, Jacobs was wide open in the end zone and waving his hands."

Reggie Dupard knifed off left tackle and cut back for a 27-yard touchdown run to give SMU its first touchdown with 7:39 left in the half. It concluded an 88-yard march in 11 plays.

"It seemed like the line just began coming off the blocks in the second period. They began to open holes and gave me time to pass," said King.

HOWEVER, it was King who was the key. It was when he began eluding the Tech containment to reel off impromptu long gains that the Red Raider defense began to unravel and everything seemed to work. Dupard, stopped cold in the first period, began to get his yards.

"We led by 14 and then we got that punt return touchdown. That was a big boost," Collins said, referring to a 55-yard punt return by Andrew Livington with just 1:02 left in the half.

It was a case of botched coverage by Tech. The ball hit the ground and Tech coverage relaxed to let it roll for the maximum yardage. Livington picked it up and within 15 yards was gone.

Texas takes control of SWC race

TCU's Cinderella season shattered, 44-23

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Texas Longhorns ended Cinderella Texas Christian's Cotton Bowl fantasy Saturday, seizing command of the Southwest Conference race with a 44-23 victory behind fullback Terry Orr's four touchdowns and 195 yards rushing.

The 10th ranked Longhorns, now 7-1-1, regained the SWC leadership with a 5-1 record.

The 12th rated Horned Frogs, playing before a crowd of 47,280, largest in Amon Carter Stadium history, fell to 8-2 overall and 5-2 in the SWC race.

Texas' much-maligned quarterback Todd Dodge, who threw five interceptions last week in a 29-15 loss to Houston, winged two touchdown passes and setup two more scores as Texas beat the Frogs for the 17th consecutive time.

Texas led the rain-soaked, regionally televised game 10-9 at halftime before Dodge found Orr behind the Frog secondary on a 63-yard pass-and-run early in the third period.

Edwin Simmons scored his first touchdown since 1983 on a 10-yard run to up the Texas lead to 23-9.

After TCU quarterback Anthony Sciaraffa had hit James Maness with an 11-yard scoring pass, Orr scored on a 3-yard run to cap a 74-yard drive.

Orr, enjoying his finest day, iced it for the Longhorns in the fourth period, rumbling 82 and 33 yards for touchdowns.

TCU was bidding for its first Cotton Bowl appearance since 1959. The Frogs, who were 1-8-2 last season, are the most improved team in NCAA Division I this year.

TEXAS OWNED a shaky 10-9 halftime lead thanks to a blocked extra point by senior linebacker Chris Duliban.

Duliban crashed through to block Ken Ozee's extra point try after TCU wide receiver James Maness' acrobatic touchdown reception of a 10-yard pass from Sciaraffa with 5:29 to play in the half.

The Longhorns got all their first half points because of Horned Frog miscues on the rain-slick artificial turf.

Strong safety Jerry Gray recovered Tony Jeffery's fumble at the TCU 29 in the first period.

From the TCU 20, Dodge found Bill Boy Bryant running free behind Frog freshman defensive back Garland Littles for the touchdown.

TCU sliced the deficit to 7-3 on Ozee's 27-yard field goal before Texas received a king-sized break. John Teltschik's line drive punt took a bounce and hit TCU's Billy Oliver.

The 'Horns recovered at the TCU 35 and six plays later Jeff Ward kicked a 35-yard field goal.

THE STUNG Frogs drove 68 yards in 8 plays including a 44-yard pass from Sciaraffa to Maness. Kenneth Davis dashed 23 yards.

On third and 5, Maness outfought Texas' James Lott in the end zone for the Horned Frog touchdown.

But the second half was all Texas. Dodge hit Bryant with a 38-yard pass to setup Orr's 3-yard run.

Then Orr broke Littles' tackle at the line of scrimmage and rolled 82 yards for the third longest run in Amon Carter Stadium history.

Jefferey punched across a consolation Horned Frog touchdown from a yad out with 5:43 to play but a TCU onsides kickoff attempt failed.

Six bowl scouts watched the game.

Davis, the nation's second leading rusher with a 152 yard average, rushed 15 times for 100 yards.

Sepkowitz calls it: Lee in Sun Bowl

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — Word spread straight and true across the vast space between Midland and El Paso when it comes to football.

Prior to the bi-district contest between Midland Lee and Plainview at Jones Stadium here Friday night, El Paso Andress football coach Allan Sepkowitz stated, "We think Lee will be the team we will play and we hope that game is in the Sun Bowl. We've already heard about Midland's Memorial Stadium and I don't think that is where we want to play."

Sepkowitz' dream came true after Lee bombed Plainview by a 42-7 score. In the coin flip after the game to determine who would be the home team in next Friday's area playoff battle, Sepkowitz tossed the coin and Lee coach Jack Tayrien called tails. It was heads.

If the truth be known, both coaches were probably sighing with relief. Although Lee must make a long road trip over the Thanksgiving Holidays to the Sun City, Tayrien hasn't been shy in stating that he prefers that his squad play on artificial surface. He feels that his team speed and quickness will do better on the artificial turf.

Sepkowitz also feel that artificial turf helps his team and wanted the Sun Bowl site. However, he may have been influenced from what he had heard from El Paso teams Eastwood and Irvin, both which played Lee at Memorial Stadium in 1983.

"We feel like playing in the Sun Bowl is a special treat for the kids and that's the way it should be in the state playoffs," said Sepkowitz. "I don't think playing in Memorial Stadium would be that kind of treat from what I've heard.

Andress won entry into the area game with Lee by virtue of a 34-12 bi-district win over Bel Air Thursday night in the Sun Bowl.

El Paso Austin defeated Ysleta Friday night in the Sun Bowl to earn the right to face unbeaten and No. 1 ranked Odessa Permian next weekend. According to Sepkowitz, "Austin is probably the best team in El Paso. We beat them during the regular season by a 28-21 margin, but we had an angel sitting on our shoulders that night."

Andress owns a more than respectable 9-2 mark with losses of 17-7 against El Paso Mayfield and 34-0 against Irvin, a team that didn't make the playoffs in 1984.

Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, said that tickets for the Lee-Andress area game will go on sale at 8 a.m. Monday at the Midland athletic office, located at the Northeast corner of Memorial Stadium.

Tickets will be sold for three days only due to the Thanksgiving break. Tickets will be sold from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. Monday through Wednesday. All seats will be general admission and there will be no special sale for season ticket holders since there is no chance of selling out the Sun Bowl.

Adult tickets will be $4 and student tickets $3 if purchased in Midland. Tickets up $1 in both categories on game day at the Sun Bowl.

The area game will be played at 8 p.m. MST. That will be 9 p.m. in Midland since there is a one hour time difference between the two cities.

Permian rolls Palo Duro

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK— For one half here at Jones Stadium Saturday night, Amarillo Palo Duro tried to jerk the golden ring out of the nose of number-one ranked Odessa Permian, but the Dons ultimately had to answer for the insult as quarterback Alton Holloway dished out some of his own Mojo magic with a brilliant aerial display.

After a 7-7 deadlock at the half, and Permian appearing to be reeling from the attack of the stubborn Dons, the Panthers efficiently put this bi-district contest in the hip piocket, 41-21, with a second half blitz.

For Holloway, his 13-of-19 night in the air for 207 yards and three touchdowns was a career high. But even this steel-veined leader of the Panthers thought things were going wrong for a while.

"I thought we might intimidate Palo Duro at first because we are Permian and all that stuff, but that didn't work too well," said Holloway. "They played us to the end. At first I couldn't figure out what they were doing on defense, so we started coming to the line quickly before they could adjust."

Holloway did get off to a slow start in the game, misfiring on five of his first seven pass attempts.

"I didn't realize I had over 200 yards passing. It sure doesn't seem like it. I was throwing a lot of incompletions at first, but our line gave me a lot of time out there and the receivers were catching some of the medicine balls that I was throwing."

But for the flicker of one brief half, Palo Duro was dreaming of the big upset over the state's biggest Panther. The Dons earned the 7-7 first half tie. Both teams were tied in penetrations at one each, but Palo Duro led in first downs by a 12-10 margin, the deciding factors in playoff advancement.

"We were talking about winning this thing on penetrations after the first half," said Permain coach John Wilkins. "But it turned out to be a good thing that we had to kick off in the second half because we got a quick fumble and a quick score."

And it was at that second half point where the dream of the Dons turned sour when they fumbled at their own 25 and 37-yard lines on their first two possessions of the second half. You don't do that against Permian in this year or any other and get away with it.

Lean years behind Rebs

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

Two years ago was a lean time for the Midland Lee boy's basketball team.

After many proud seasons, Coach Paul Stueckler's crew never overcame their inexperience and stumbled to a 3-27 record.

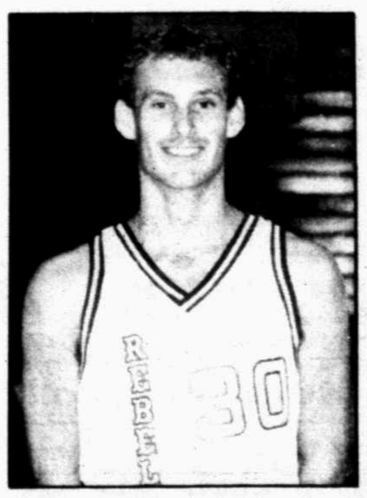

But a year ago, the ship righted itself and Lee was 17-14. Not only that, but the Rebels were only a whisper away from a playoff berth in the rough-and-tumble District 4-5A.

Two of the players who were part of the 3-27 campaign of 1982-83 are back for their senior seasons, and a third will rejoin the squad after the football season ends. The future is here for Lee.

"They play so well together and they're intelligent," Stueckler said of his team that begins competition Tuesday in Lubbock against Coronado.

THE REBS lost their top scorer and seven others to graduation, but return a solid nucleus that posted a 7-7 record in District 4-5A last year.

Stueckler's first praise of Lee is his team's outside scoring touch, and if it delivers the Rebs will win ball games. "We have good outside shooting," he said. "And great poise and dedication. Our shooting is as good as any in the district.

Derek Westbrook

"We try to feature outside shooting. If we can combine that with strong post play and some rebounding, we'll be a contender."

Lee can be counted on to make waves in the district race, but the Rebs are in need of a big rebounder inside. "Rebounding is where we're weak right now. We don't have great size. We're starting post men that are 6-2, 6-3, and that's not very big.

"They'll play their heart out."

For what the Rebs may lack in brawn, they more than replace with savvy. Third-year regular Derek Westbrook is the epitome of the Stueckler player.

"He's a real solid performer," Stueckler says of Westbrook. "Not only does he shoot well from outside, he has intangible leadership qualities."

Westbrook averaged 12.2 points per outing last season, and was the team's number two scorer behind graduated Alvin Henry. He'll be counted on inside as well as for his scoring touch, and his ability to go to the basket helped him lead the squad in free throws a last season.

Westbrook heads Stuckler's rough draft of his starting lineup. The coach has also penciled in Brian Marczynski (6-2 Sr., 2.5 ppg.), Raymond Morney (6-2 Sr., 2.2 ppg.), and Tim Hill (6-3 Sr., 2.9 ppg.) as starters.

Please See LEE, Page 2C

At point guard, Stueckler currently is playing musical chairs with the combination of Kenny Staehling (5-11 Sr., 0.4 ppg.) and Jack McCranie (5-10, Sr.).

Neither played a large amount a year ago, and McCranie played on the junior varsity, yet Stueckler thinks they can do the job of running the offense.

"They're both doing an excellent job. Jack's a little quicker and a better shooter, but Kenny's a better passer and has more poise on the floor," Steuckler said.

OFF THE bench, the talent doesn't thin out very much. Stueckler has been impressed with the play of his junior varsity newcomers.

There are currently six players involved in Lee's football trek to the state playoffs, so Stueckler's team is working without the benefits of two of last season's starters.

Tyrone Thurman came on after Lee's football season ended a year ago to play 18 games as a point guard. Averaging just under seven points a game, Thurman's court speed livened up the Lee offense and highlighted a mid-season win over Midland High.

Anthony Dickens played a regular role last year and appeared in every Lee ball game. Only he and Westbrook did that, and Dickens wound up third in scoring with a 9.3 average.

Dickens is big and talented. At 6-5, he will help Stueckler's rebounding worries immensely. Last year's experience should pay off for Dickens now. A year ago he sometimes wandered offensively, but since Stueckler's crew as been together picking up the offense should not be a factor for Dickens.

Another hoopster involved in the football progam is Jakie Young. Young is a 6-4 junior who Stueckler also will welcome as a rebounding threat.

"We're counting on him for board strength. They're concentrating on football right now, but let me put it this way: They're good athletes." And no coach will argue against having good athletes around, although Stueckler doesn't think the issue really rates. "We're not sitting around on our hands waiting for the football players. The kids out there right now are doing a great job."

Rodney Simms, Earl Davis and Lonnie Dixon are also slated for action this season upon completion of their football duties.

SO THE Rebs can count on at least equalling last season's feats, and with some luck could improve significantly. Schedule-wise, they will be tested early and often. Tuesday's game at Coronado the Rebs will face John Lewis, who played three games for Lee a year ago but is now starting in Lubbock. Then Lee visits Carlsbad, N.M., ranked tops in New Mexico in the first of a home-and-home set.

The Rebs are entered in the Tall City Tournament, naturally, and there they could meet any of several respected schools including Lamesa, El Paso Eastwood and Odessa Permian. And of course, Midland High will be represented as well.

Then the Rebs are off to San Antonio's Optimist Classic, a 32-team gut check that always has some of Texas' best schools participating. Lee has scheduled a third tournament in Clovis, N.M., a week before the district slate opens at San Angelo Jan. 3.

Stueckler doesn't discount his team's chances at a district title, but instead looks at a talented Odessa Permian unit that was 11-3 and district champs a year ago.

The Rebs played Permian close, losing on the road by one at the buzzer and taking a critical 51-44 home loss that severely damaged Lee's playoff hopes. Stueckler still remembers that home loss well. "That was our pivotal game," he said. With a year's experience, Lee could make the move to win the important close games.

"Permian's going to have a good squad," said Stueckler. "Abilene High will be good, and Midland High's got big 'ol Darrell Davis back on the backboard and great outside shooters."

The ingredients are there.

Still, there are always doubts on the eve of the season's beginning. "We won 17 games last year, and that's not bad," said Stueckler. "This team hasn't won any yet. I'm enthused but who knows? We could use a little rebounding, and we won't be in the playoffs unless we get it. They say the most important thing about rebounding is position, but it helps if you're 6-6."

At the present, the fate of the 1985 Rebs is an unknown quantity. But one thing is certain: Lee won't be 3-27, and they'll probably be better than last year's 17-14. And they didn't miss by all that much a year ago.

TECH

Tech could have been in the game at half if the opening-drive had resulted in a touchdown. Also after SMU scored its first touchdown, Charles Simpson fielded the kickoff a yard into the end zone. Coming straight up the swath cut in the middle of the field, Simpson had only one defender, Livingston, to beat as he reached the 35. Livingston was anchored at the 40, waiting...the last man. Any kind of move would have done the trick. Simpson barreled straight into Livingston.

So at half, it was 21-0, but Tech could easily have been even.

Brandy Brownlee's 27-yard field goal with 8:40 left in the third period made it 24-0.

King's pass to Jacobs from 10 yards out with 1:13 left in the third period was the TD that started the fans trickling toward the exits. They would have headed for the exits in droves, only there weren't enough fans for a "drove". The day long rain created great wooden patches in the stands.

COLLINS said no adjustments were made in response to Tech's awesome opening-drive. "Tech was just making some good play selections, stuff that we hadn't computerized," Collins said. "But we charted and anticipated on the sidelines and executed. First we had to stop the off tackle plays and then we shut off the option. It was more execution on our part than adjustments."

Perhaps the game's most misleading figure was Tech's 14 of 17 pass completions. Despite, all the completions, Tech managed just 101 aerial yards. Most of the passes were short.

"Tech hasn't thrown deep all year, so we anticipated the outs, flares and screens," Collins said. It worked. In addition to choking Tech off with short yardage, many of the completions were for losses, there were five sacks.

On the ground, Tech rushed for 167 yards, led by Smith's 101 yards, but wound up with a net 90.

Despite the ease with which SMU won, Collins seemed relieved. Tech's defense had given him cause for concern. And it was especially good for King, "A win like this over a tough defense like Tech's will give him more confidence."

King was six of nine for 76 yards and two TDs passing and seven for 54 rushing. Dupard's 13 carries for 78 yards led the Mustangs.

New story for Lee girls

Graduation hits Rebels hard

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

Midland Lee girl's basketball coach Shirley Stephenson is in a very unfamiliar position as her team prepares for the 1984-85 season opener Tuesday at Slaton.

"I've never been in this situation before," said Stephenson, the only coach the Rebels have ever had. "I can't remember a year when we didn't have at least one All-District player coming back."

Stephenson lost three good ones, Felicia Farias, Stacy Harmon, and Tunya Mayberry to graduation. An honorable mention All-District 4-5A selection is also gone, as are three others from a unit that was 23-8 and district co-champions in 1983-84.

The losses amount to over 55 points a game in scoring, and immeasurable talent and experience.

But Stephenson loves a challenge, and she also isn't unhappy with the development of a younger team of fresh faces.

"We have plenty of talent, if the coach can do the right thing with that talent," said Stephenson.

Four veterans return for Lee, and from them the Rebs will draw upon their experience. Brenda Haven, Diane White, Denise Hatch and Megan Pace are back for their senior campaigns, and they represent the whole of Lee's varsity experience.

All four players had expanded roles a year ago, and this season they are being leaned on for guidance. Stephenson is glad to have them. "All of them can do a lot of things. They have poise and that comes with experience."

Currently, Hatch and Pace are probably Lee's most ready to play in actual competition. White has also played up to par. Hatch showed signs a year ago of becoming a very good player late in the season.

"We're lucky that we have some tradition established," she said. "Our seniors are great leaders and they display that leadership in practice."

Lee has two other seniors, but neither played varsity ball last year for the Rebs. Georgann Williams is a transfer from Midland Christian School, and Stephenson has noticed her decent shooting touch. The other senior is Nancy DeWitt, who will likely see plenty of action also. DeWitt was a member of coach Linda Caraway's junior varsity a year ago. "She can hang in the air on her jump shot she never comes down," Said Stephenson of DeWitt.

WHERE THE Rebels could run into problems after the inexperience factor is inside. Lee lacks the muscle it had a year ago, and rebounding is one area Stephenson is monitoring for improvements.

"We realize that our tallest player is 5-8, if she's standing on something," said Stephenson of who should be her post player, Becky White. "We're not tall but when you aren't you have to reach down for something else. Sometimes that challenge makes you work harder."

Where Lee will try to win ball games until the team gels is with defense and team quickness. The Rebs aren't physical, but they are speedy and Stephenson says the defense has rapidly come together.

"Right now we're counting on our defense quite a bit," she said. "It will be a plus for us."

"One thing we will have that's a first is a sister act," said the coach. Diane White, a senior, and Becky White, a junior, should get plenty of time together on the floor. But Stephenson emphasizes that even with only four veterans back, everyone will be involved.

"They realize that if you pass the ball to the open player things happen. We have a lot of teamwork and a lot of cohesiveness."

Stephenson's cast of nine juniors and two sophomores are the nucleus of the future that have to come through for Lee to repeat their success of a year ago. Besides White, several others have shown flashes of excellence.

Joan Watley and Vicki Smith are JV products, and others who came up within the system are Valencia Wallace, Fonda Fields and Candace Morney, the younger sister of Raymond, a boy's varsity player for coach Paul Stueckler.

A group of move-ins will help Stephenson's depth situation. Louise Brown (Slaton), Teena Sisemore (Muleshoe) and Tina Swinney (Levelland) all came aboard in the off-season, and Swinney played a big role on Lee's volleyball team.

Lee also has an investment in the future in sophomores Rosalind Eaden and Regina Callicut. Eaden, the sister of Janetta Eaden who played last year, has drawn rave reviews in practice.

Lee doesn't have an easy road leading up to the district schedule that begins Dec. 20 against cross-town rival Midland High. Tuesday's opponent, Slaton, has 10 seniors back and is one of the more respected basketball powers in the area.

Lee immediately turns around after that and hosts Hobbs, the best New Mexico has to offer, before journeying to face Amarillo in the first round of their tournament.

"In a way that's good and in a way it's not good," said the coach of the early grind. "But we'll figure out real quickly what we have to do to be a contender."

"We have a lot of players," said Stephenson, noting that at present she has 17 players working out with the varsity. "They're inexperienced, but they have good skills and good quickness. The attitude is fantastic.

"I don't know what we have to worry about until after the first three games. I'm sure I'll worry about height and guarding a really good tall post player. But there are ways and we'll have to work them out."

Monahans wins 4A title

AUSTIN (AP) — For the second year in a row, League City Clear Lake dominated San Marcos in the Class 5A championship match of the State High School Volleyball Tournament, taking the UIL crown Saturday with a 15-5, 15-9 score.

Monahans won its eighth title in Class 4A by defeating New Braunfels 15-7, 15-10. Bellville, making its first appearance at the state tournament, beat Fabens 15-3, 14-16, 15-13.

In 2A, defending champ East Bernard beat defending A champion Jewett Leon, which moved up a division this year, 15-11, 15-6, and in A Bronte held off Wink 6-15, 15-5, 15-8.

With 6-foot Jill Blumenstein, 5-foot-10 Debbie Shelly and 5-foot-9 Sue Schelfhout, Clear Lake's height and college-style fast offense proved too much for the shorter Rattlers.

State Volleyball

Schelfhout led the Falcons with five kills, but substitute Stacey Branch's serve was even more overpowering. In the first game, Branch started serving at 4-5, and held it till the game ended 15-5.

"They're a short team, so we thought they'd be dinking us," said Clear Lake coach Angie Chivers. "That's all that they did in the semis, and we were ready for it, but they didn't. We got to them with our serving."

Class A

Class 2A

Naval broadside sinks Gamecocks' No. 2 ranking

Associated Press

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Navy, behind two touchdown passes from quarterback Bob Misch to Chris Weiler and two short scoring runs by halfback Mike Smith, stunned No. 2 South Carolina 38-21 in college football Saturday.

The Midshipmen, after building a 14-7 halftime lead, broke open the game in the third quarter when they scored on three consecutive possessions. They went on to increase the lead to 38-7 early in the fourth quarter before South Carolina scored twice in the final period to narrow the margin.

The Gamecocks, who had reportedly been in line for an Orange Bowl berth, slipped to 9-1 and will face Clemson in its final regular-season game. Navy is 4-5-1 and will play Army in its last game.

Two of Navy's third-period touchdowns were set up by pass interceptions after the Navy defense shut down the South Carolina running game, forcing the Gamecocks to go to the air.

A swarming Navy defense also forced several miscues by a South Carolina offense that had averaged almost 35 points a game while winning its first nine games.

A Navy offense riddled by injuries also moved the ball consistently against the Gamecocks, especially during the stretch in the third and fourth quarters when the Midshipmen scored 24 points to put the game pretty much out of reach.

Maryland 41, Clemson 23

BALTIMORE — Sophomore Alvin Blount rushed for 214 yards and scored two touchdowns and Tommy Neal ran for two more scores as Maryland came from behind twice and defeated 20th-ranked Clemson 41-23.

The fifth consecutive victory for the Terps, 7-3, snapped the five-game winning streak of the Tigers, 7-3, an Atlantic Coast Conference foe on league probation for NCAA infractions.

Maryland, which gained 406 yards on the ground, pushed across 17 points in the third quarter after a 48-yard TD run by Kenny Flowers, who rushed for 136 yards, put the Tigers ahead 23-17.

Clemson also led 17-14 late in the second period, after a 23-yard field goal by Donald Igwebuike and a 3-yard pass from Mike Eppley to Terrance Flagler followed two Maryland turnovers in the final four minutes.

Boston College 24, Syracuse 16

FOXBORO, Mass. — Troy Stradford scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 5-yard run late in the third quarter as Boston College, its passing game shut down by Syracuse for the third consecutive year, launched a rushing attack that gave the 13th-ranked Eagles a 24-16 victory.

As representatives of the Orange, Cotton, Sugar, Fiesta and Florida Citrus bowls looked on, Syracuse, third in the nation in pass defense, grabbed a 10-7 halftime lead.

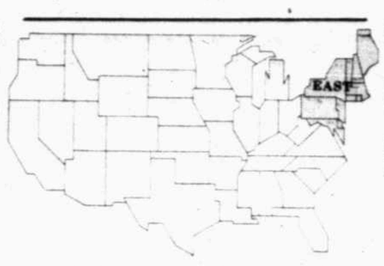

Stradford's touchdown with 2:25 left in the third quarter gave Boston College, 7-2, a 14-10 advantage, and Kevin Snow's 25-yard field goal boosted it to 17-10 early in the fourth quarter.

The margin grew to 24-10 when Kelvin Martin got his second punt return touchdown in as many games as he romped 78 yards to score with 6:04 left in the game. But Syracuse, 6-5, struck back with a 49-yard touchdown pass from Mike Kmetz to Scott Schwedes 49 seconds later. It made the score 24-16 before the rushing attempt for a conversion failed.

Temple 19, W. Virginia 17

PHILADELPHIA — Jim Cooper booted a second-chance field goal from 36 yards as time ran out to give Temple a 19-17 victory over West Virginia, spoiling the Mountaineer's bowl game hopes.

Temple evened its record at 5-5 with the victory over the four-point favorite Mountainers. West Virginia lost its third straight and slipped to 7-4.

The Mountaineers led 17-16 on a 43-yard pass from quarterback Kevin White to wide receiver Willie Drewrey and Paul Woodside's extra-point kick with 2:03 on the clock.

But Temple took the kickoff and drove from its own 20-yard line on a series of passes by quarterback Lee Saltz. The drive carried to West Virginia 25, where, with third-down, eight yards to go and eight seconds left, Cooper came on to attempt the game-winning field goal.

His kick was low. But West Virginia was ruled offsides and penalized five yards to the 20, giving Cooper another shot. He struck it right between the uprights.

Alabama 29, Cincinnati 7

CINCINNATI — Quarterback Mike Shula tossed a 34-yard touchdown pass and Van Tiffin kicked three field goals to send Alabama's Crimson Tide to a 29-7 victory over the University of Cincinnati.

Running backs Don Horstead and Chester Braggs also scored touchdowns to improve Alabama's record to 4-6. Cincinnati fell to 2-8.

After Mike Morton missed a 40-yard field goal attempt on Cincinnati's first possession, Alabama marched 56 yards to the game's first score. Shula tossed a 21-yard pass to flanker Greg Richardson to set up Horstead's 6-yard run around the right end with 5:56 left in the quarter.

Rutgers 17, Colgate 7

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Rusty Hochberg tossed one touchdown pass and Albert Smith ran for another TD as Rutgers stayed in the running for a bowl bid with a 17-7 victory over Colgate.

The victory raised the Scarlet Knights' record to 7-3 and capped the first year under Coach Dick Anderson, who took over a program that was 3-8 last year and had not had a winning season since 1980.

Yale 30, Harvard 27

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Paul Spivack ran for two touchdowns and set up the game-deciding touchdown by Ted Macauley late in the fourth period, rallying Yale to a 30-27 victory over Harvard and to the 101st meeting of a traditional Ivy League football finale.

Bill Moore booted three field goals from 34, 44 and 30 yards out and added three conversions as Yale fought back from 14-0 and 27-20 deficits.

Spivack, promoted to the starting fullback spot a week ago, ended his intercollegiate career by carrying 26 times for 102 yards. He scored on a 3-yard plunge in the first period and on a 1-yard dive in the second quarter.

Pennylvania 24, Cornell 0

ITHACA N.Y. — Quarterback John McGeehan completed 11 of 16 passes for 210 yards and two touchdowns as Pennsylvania routed Cornell 24-0 to give Penn its first undisputed Ivy League football title in 25 years.

The Quakers, who finished 8-1 including a loss to Army, are the first team since Dartmouth in 1970 to win all seven Ivy League games. Penn has shared the Ivy title the past two seasons and last won the title outright in 1959.

Princeton 21, Dartmouth 17

PRINCETON, N.J. — Quarterback Doug Butler threw for one touchdown and ran for a fourth-quarter score while Princeton's Derrek Graham set an Ivy League receiving record to lift the Tigers to a 21-17 victory over league rival Dartmouth.

With Princeton trailing 17-14, Butler, who threw for 184 yards, plunged into the end zone from 1 yard out with 13:39 remaining in the game. Princeton, which finished the season 4-5 overall and 3-4 in the league, ended a four-game losing streak with the victory. It was the third straight losing season for the Tigers.

Massachusts 14, N Hampshire 10

AMHERST, Mass. — Brothers Jim and Bob Simeone combined for both touchdowns Saturday as the University of Massachusetts upset New Hampshire 14-10 and knocked the Wildcats out of a share of the Yankee Conference title.

Jim Simeone, junior quarterback, hit his record-setting split end brother, Bob, with a 39-yard touchdown pass in the first quarter. The catch broke the school record for career reception yardage of 1,486 set by Tim Berra, son of Yankee baseball great Yogi Berra, giving Bob Simeone 1,569.

Bob Simeone later set up the winning touchdown with a 33-yard pass reception that put the ball on the New Hampshire 2-yard line in the fourth quarter. Jim Simeone finally plunged over from the 1 for the winning score as the Minutemen ended the season 3-8 overall and 1-4 in the conference.

Rhode Island 29, Connecticut 19

STORRS, Conn. — Rhode Island's pass-happy quarterback Tom Ehrhardt threw four touchdown passes, including three to wide receiver Dameon Reilly, to lead the Rams to a 29-19 victory over Connecticut, a share of the Yankee Conference championship and an automatic berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

The win coupled with New Hampshire's 14-10 loss to Massachusetts gave Rhode Island a tie with Boston University for the conference title. But because URI beat BU in head-to-head play, URI has won the Yankee Conference's automatic spot in the playoffs.

Holy Cross 24, Maine 7

ORONO, Maine — Quarterback Peter Muldoon ran for two second-half touchdowns to lead the Holy Cross Crusaders to a 24-7 victory over the Universisty of Maine Black Bears at Alumni Field Saturday.

Muldoon had a hand in all the Crusaders' scoring. He tossed an eight-yard touchdown pass to split end Bill Cowley in the second period, enabling Holy Cross to tie the game at 7-7. For the day, Muldoon connected on ten passes in 22 attempts for 121 yards and ran 13 times for 30 yards.

Bowling Green 27, Kent St. 10

KENT, Ohio — Bernard White ran for three touchdowns and became only the third major college football player to rush for more than 1,000 yards and catch more than 50 passes in one season Sunday as he led Bowling Green to a 27-10 Mid-American Conference victory over Kent State.

White, who scored on a second-quarter run of 17 yards and a pair of 1-yard runs in the second half, rushed for 112 yards and caught three passes to finish the season with 1,036 yards rushing and 56 receptions.

Lafayette 28, Lehigh 7

EASTON, Pa. — Freshman quarterback Jim Johnson passed for 166 yards and two touchdowns and ran for third score as Lafayette downed Lehigh 28-7 Saturday in one of college football's oldest rivalries.

Lafayette finished its season at 5-5 and Lehigh ended up 5-6. The two teams have met 120 times since 1884, more than any other two teams.

Brown 28, Columbia 14

NEW YORK — Jamie Potkul scored three touchdowns, including Brown's first scoring kickoff return in 37 years, leading the Bruins to a 28-14 Ivy League football victory over Columbia, sending the Lions to their 11th straight defeat.

Potkul scored on a 5-yard run in the first quarter, caught a 23-yard pass from quarterback Eric Rosso in the second quarter and returned a kickoff 94 yards in the third quarter, giving Brown its first touchdown on a kickoff since 1947 when Paul Gaffney scored on a 90-yard return against Rhode Island.

B.C. wants Cotton Bowl

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Boston College's four-year rise from obscurity, sparked by exciting quarterback Doug Flutie, reached a pinnacle Saturday when the school agreed to play in the Cotton Bowl on New Year's Day.

"The Cotton Bowl told us that we're their No. 1 team," said Boston College Athletic Director Bill Flynn. "We told them that we'd like to go there."

Official invitations to bowl games cannot be extended until 6 p.m. next Saturday. But the unofficial agreement was announced 90 minutes after 13th-ranked Boston College improved its record to 7-2 with a 24-16 victory over Syracuse.

The Eagles have regular-season games remaining against 14th-ranked Miami next Friday and Holy Cross, a Division I-AA power, Dec. 1.

The winner of Saturday's game between Texas and Texas Christian was virtually assured of gaining the other Cotton Bowl berth.

After Saturday's victory, Boston College was in great demand. Officials of three major bowls made their pitches to Flynn to entice Boston College and its crowd-pleasing quarterback.

First, Flynn met with Sugar Bowl executive director Mickey Holmes. Then, he talked at the same time with officials of the Orange and Cotton bowls.

"They're all so equal," said Flynn. "We'd love to go to all three, but I think the team would like to play against Texas and TCU."

Boston College, which last played in a major bowl in 1943, is headed for its third post-season game in as many seasons.

With Flutie at quarterback, the Eagles lost in his sophomore year in the 1982 Tangerine Bowl to Auburn 33-26 and in the 1983 Liberty Bowl to Notre Dame 19-18.

Boston College beat Syracuse in 1982 to earn the Tangerine bid, then fell to the Orangemen the next season to drop out of the running for a bid to the Fiesta Bowl, which is more prestigious than the Liberty Bowl.

"Last year, we couldn't win a big game and get into a (major) bowl game," said Boston College running back Troy Stradford, who scored on a 5-yard run to give Boston College a 14-10 lead late in the third quarter Saturday. "Now it's all over. We're going to play on Jan. 1 so it's a big win for the Boston College Eagles and their program."

Boston College's first bowl appearance was in the 1940 Cotton Bowl, won by Clemson 6-3. It beat Tennessee 19-13 in the 1941 Sugar Bowl, then fell to Alabama 37-21 in the 1943 Orange Bowl. It didn't appear in another bowl game until 1982.

Boston College was 0-11 in 1978, followed by 5-6 and 7-4 seasons. But its drive toward national prominence didn't begin until 1981, Flutie's freshman year, when the Eagles were 5-6. Flutie came off the bench in the fourth quarter of the fourth game of that season to throw for 135 yards and one touchdown and has been the quarterback ever since.

Boston College was 8-3-1 in 1982 and 9-3 in 1983.

Two weeks ago, Flutie set the major-college career total offense record. One week ago, he became major-college's all-time passing yardage leader. On Saturday, he ran for 81 yards and threw for 136 to raise his totals to 10,537 yards of offense and 9,831 yards of passing.

Cal-State Fullerton blanks NMSU, 20-0

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Senior quarterback Damon Allen threw for 163 yards and Cal-State Fullerton used deception and New Mexico State mistakes to take a 20-0 win over the Aggies Saturday in a Pacific Coast Athletic Association football game.

The win gave Cal-State Fullerton a season record of 11-1 and a 6-1 mark in the PCAA. New Mexico State finished with a 2-8 overall record and 1-6 mark in the conference.

Allen, the younger brother of Oakland Raiders running back Marcus Allen, completed 16 of 29 passes, including a 4-yard TD pass to Marvin Williams.

The Titans, who riddled New Mexico State's defense for 419 total yards, also got a pair of field goals from Greg Steinke from 38 and 28 yards out and a 1-yard scoring plunge by halfback Roy Lewis.

New Mexico State promptly got inself in trouble when the Aggies tried an onside kick on the opening kickoff and Fullerton recovered at midfield. From there, the Titans drove it in, with Lewis going over from the 1.

New coach takes Gators to promised land, 25-17

Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — After Galen Hall led fifth-ranked Florida to the promised land of the Southeastern Conference title that has eluded the Gators for 52 seasons, what else could the university do but make him head coach?

The Gators beat Kentucky 25-17 Saturday to claim at least a share of the crown, and Florida president Marshall Criser called off the search for a successor to Charley Pell, confirming rumors that had circulated in Florida all week.

"They represented every Gator that ever played for the University of Florida. Finally, conference champions!" Criser said. "They may be co-champions, but they won it on the field and under terrible adversity. They are a great, great bunch of Gators, and I thought I'd give them a little news today about the future. Galen Hall is the permanent head coach at the University of Florida."

Hall, the 18-year assistant at Oklahoma who came to Florida last February, inherits a headache and a possible heartache. The NCAA has issued Florida a three-year probation, now under appeal, and the SEC executive committee is scheduled to vote Tuesday on whether to let the Gators keep their title and eligibility for this season's bowl games.

Georgia Tech 24, Wake Forest 7

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Tailback Robert Lavette passed for his first touchdown and rushed for another score as Georgia Tech defeated Wake Forest 24-7 in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game.

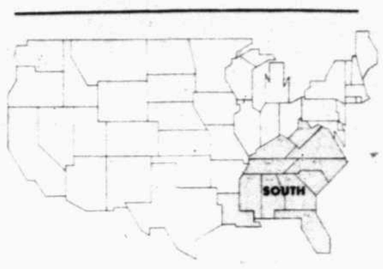

Lavette, a 6-foot, 195-pound senior, scored on a 2-yard run and hit flanker Mike Harrington with a 6-yard scoring pass on an halfback option.

The Yellow Jackets scored all four of their touchdowns on drives of more than 70 yards as they improved their record to 5-4-1 and 2-2-1 in the ACC.

Tennessee 41 Mississippi 17

JACKSON, Miss. — Quarterback Tony Robinson wrecked the Mississippi defense with his devastating passes and the slicing runs of tailbacks Johnnie Jones and Charles Wilson helped the Tennessee Volunteers smash the Rebels 41-17 in a Southeastern Conference football battle.

Robinson threw for one touchdown and Jones scored another before Wilson and the reserves picked up the load to finish the rout.

Tennessee scored its sixth victory against two losses and a tie before five bowl scouts to enhance the Vols hopes for a fourth straight post-season invitation.

Tennessee's unheralded defense contributed two touchdowns to seal the Rebels sixth straight defeat against three victories and one tie.

Linebacker Jesse Messimer killed the last Rebel hope for a comeback when he blocked an Ole Miss punt early in the third quarter. Defensive back Vic Peppers scooped up the ball and sprinted 8 yards into the end zone, as Tennessee boosted its lead to 24-3.

Place kicker Fuad Reviz kicked field goals of 24 and 40 yards for Tennessee, a SEC record 16 in a row. Reviz set the old mark in 1982.

Ole Miss trailed 10-3 at halftime.

Virginia Tech 23, Vanderbilt 3

NASHVILLE — Virginia Tech quarterback Mark Cox tossed touchdown passes of 30 and 13 yards to lead the Hokies to a 23-3 win over Vanderbilt's Commodores.

The victory, before scouts for the Hall of Fame and Independence bowls, allowed Tech, an independent, to finish its regular season with an 8-3 record.

Vanderbilt, a member of the Southeastern Conference, had its record leveled at 5-5.

The Commodores moved into Hokie territory only three times during the game and avoided their first shutout in 42 games when Ricky Anderson booted a 43-yard field goal with 6:40 left in the game.

Virginia Tech had come into the contest ranked seventh in the nation in scoring defense, giving up an average of only 12.4 points a game, while Vandy had been scoring 28.8 points a game.

Virginia 24, N. Carolina 24

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Ken Miller's 25-yard field goal with seven seconds left blunted a Virginia rally and gave North Carolina a 24-24 tie with the 19th-ranked Cavaliers.

Miller's kick was his 15th straight without a miss this year. He is the only NCAA Division I-A kicker without a miss in a minimum of 15 tries. He also set an ACC record for most consecutive kicks.

Despite the tie, Virginia can still claim the ACC title if it beats Maryland at Charlottesville next Saturday.

The Tar Heels had taken a 14-3 halftime lead, but Virginia recovered for a 24-14 advantage behind quarterback Don Majkowski.

Richmond 33, William & Mary 31

RICHMOND, Va. — Greg Grooms and David Bayer both ran for more than 100 yards and scored two touchdowns as Richmond's Spiders edged the Indians of William & Mary 33-31 in a Division I-AA college football showdown.

The win lifted Richmond, 7-3 and ranked No. 13, to its first five-game winning streak in 11 years. William & Mary, which entered the game ranked No. 18, fell to 6-5.

Duke 16, N. Carolina St. 13

RALEIGH, N.C. — Ken Harper kicked a 29-yard field goal and Darryl Brunson intercepted a pass with just over a minute left as Duke defeated North Carolina State 16-13.

The victory was the first in the conference in five tries for the 2-8 Blue Devils, and it spoiled a North Carolina State homecoming before a crowd of 35,200. The Wolfpack finished its season 1-6 in the ACC and 3-8 overall.

Harper's kick came with 1:56 left after a 14-play drive. North Carolina State started in good field position on its own 40 after a kickoff return by Mike Miller, but Brunson picked off a Tim Esposito pass on the second play of the drive to protect the Blue Devil lead.

Mississippi St. 16, Louisiana St. 14

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Artie Cosby's third field goal of the second half — a 27-yarder with 1:15 remaining — pushed Mississippi State past ninth-ranked Louisiana State 16-14 and knocked the Tigers out of a tie for the Southeastern Conference football championship.

The loss dropped LSU to 7-2-1 overall and 4-1-1 in the SEC and gave Florida its first conference championship. Mississippi State won its first SEC game in five outings and raised its overall record to 4-6.

E. Kentucky 21, Florida A&M 14

RICHMOND, Ky. — A 30-yard touchdown run by Barry Cox with 7:15 left in the game gave Eastern Kentucky a 21-14 non-conference college football victory over Florida A&M.

Hogs go 'Nutts' against Aggies

Arkansas still has slim chance at Cotton Bowl

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Quarterback Danny Nutt didn't see Brad Taylor get hurt on the second play of Saturday's game, but the fifth-year senior is always on call.

"I heard Coach (Ken) Hatfield hollering for me and I just went out to do my job," Nutt said.

He did it to perfection, completing 10 of 16 passes for 123 yards and leading Arkansas to a 28-0 victory over Texas A&M.

"The offense really played good today and the line did a superior job," Nutt said. "I believe the offense proved it can be explosive."

On a day with temperatures near freezing and a constant rain falling, A&M had seven turnovers but Arkansas lost the ball only twice.

"This is a special group of young men," Hatfield said. "No matter what happens the rest of the year, this team will go down as special in Razorback football history.

"There's no doubt the elements had an effect on the game. We were fortunate that we were quick enough to get to most of the fumbles."

Hatfield said the Arkansas team had several distractions during the week — homecoming and bowl talk.

"This team still managed to concentrate on playing this game," he said. "No one worked harder or deserved a shut out more than our defense."

Hatfield said the Razorbacks 12-play drive with the opening kickoff was important in that Bobby Joe Edmonds' 53-yard punt return midway through the third quarter broke the Aggies' back. Edmonds returned the ball to the 9 and Marshall Foreman scored three plays later to make it 21-0.

Arkansas had a 21-8 lead in first downs, a 389-192 lead in total offense and controlled the ball more than 40 minutes.

"I'd say we dominated all three areas — offense, defense and the kicking game," Hatfield said.

"I thought we did a real good job of moving the ball but when you turn it over as much as we did, it's difficult to win," A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill said. "You do have to give Arkansas credit. Kenny has done a good job. Their players aren't flashy — they just line up and do the things necessary to win.

"I've played in worse conditions when I was at Pitt and we played at Penn State. I don't know if our players have ever played in worse conditions."

A&M quarterback Craig Stump said, "They scored a touchdown and two field goals off our turnovers. I don't think we're pressing."

Arkansas linebacker David Bazzel, who recovered two fumbles, said, "It seemed like on every play we got 11 guys to the ball. We forced turnovers but we can't take credit for all the turnovers. The conditions had a lot to do with it. I'm just glad to get out of this game alive after surviving the cold.

"Texas A&M really was up for us, but the cold weather took its effect and our offense was just better than theirs."

Sooners keep title hopes alive, beat Huskers 17-7

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Tim Lashar kicked a tie-breaking 32-yard field goal on the second play of the final period and sixth-ranked Oklahoma stopped Nebraska an inch from a touchdown with a brilliant goal-line stand Saturday to preserve a 17-7 victory over the No. 1-ranked Cornhuskers and keep three Big Eight teams in the running for the Orange Bowl.

Just like the 31-30 Orange Bowl loss to Miami that cost Nebraska the 1983 national championship, this game featured another daring and unsuccessful gamble by Coach Tom Osborne.

Trailing 10-7 and needing only a tie to win the Big Eight title outright for the fourth straight year, Osborne passed up a chip-shot field goal that would have been shorter than an extra-point attempt. It failed when Jeff Smith took a pitchout to the left on fourth-and-goal at the one-inch line but was thrown back by Oklahoma cornerback Brian Hall.

In the Orange Bowl, needing a tie to capture the national championship, Osborne went for a two-point conversion with 48 seconds left. It misfired and the Cornhuskers finished second behind Miami in the final rankings.

Quarterback Danny Bradley, who scored Oklahoma's first touchdown early in the game on a one-yard plunge, added an insurance score when he ran 29 yards for another touchdown with 56 seconds left. Both of Bradley's touchdowns followed Nebraska turnovers.

Smith's one-yard plunge capped an 84-yard second-period Nebraska drive that tied the score and it remained that way as the Cornhusker defense, ranked No. 1 nationally, stuffed the Sooners time after time.

Nebraska finished its regular season with a 9-2 record, but 6-1 in Big Eight play. The Cornhuskers captured at least a share of the conference crown a week ago.

Oklahoma, which winds up next week against fourth-ranked Oklahoma State, is 8-1-1 overall, 5-1 in the Big Eight. The winners of next week's game between Oklahoma and fourth-ranked Oklahoma State will represent the conference in the Orange Bowl, although a tie next week would still enable Nebraska to back into a trip to Miami.

The setback undoubtedly will cost Nebraska the No. 1 ranking for the second time this year. The Cornhuskers suffered their only previous setback to Syracuse, 16-7, on Sept. 29 and were knocked out of the top spot after a three-week stay. This time, they were No. 1 for only one week.

Notre Dame 44, Penn St. 7

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Allen Pinkett rushed for 189 yards and four touchdowns, one of his three second-quarter scores coming on a dazzling 66-yard run to lead Notre Dame to a crushing 44-7 victory over Penn State.

The triumph was the third straight for the Irish, who also broke a three-season losing streak against Penn State. It left both teams with 6-4 records and in line for postseason bowl bids.

In addition to the 66-yard run, Pinkett scored on a pair of 1-yard runs and a 17-yard dash, boosting his career touchdown total to a Notre Dame record of 40.

Pinkett carried 34 times in posting his 15th career 100-yard game. He also crossed the 1,000-yard barrier for the second time his career, piling up 1,007 yards this season.

John Carney booted three field goals for the Irish, and quarterback Steve Beuerlein completed 20 of 28 passes for 267 yards to set up two touchdowns.

The Irish took charge from the start and ran up a 31-7 halftime lead with Pinkett gaining 161 of his yards in the first half.

Ohio St. 21, Michigan 6

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Tailback Keith Byars scored three touchdowns as 11th-ranked Ohio State beat Michigan 21-6 to win the Big Ten Conference title and a Rose Bowl berth.

The Buckeyes, 9-2 overall and 7-2 in the conference, will face Southern California in the Rose Bowl on New Year's Day.

Moments after the final gun, portions of the largest Ohio Stadium crowd in history, 90,286, streamed onto the field. However, campus police circled both goalposts to keep the delerious fans from tearing them down.

The loss left Michigan to a 6-5 record, the worst year in Bo Schembechler's 16 coaching seasons with the Wolverines. Michigan wound up 5-4 in the Big Ten.

Ohio State quarterback Mike Tomczak, coming back from a double fracture of his right leg in spring practice, connected on two long third-down passes to flanker Mike Lanese and split end Cris Carter to keep the Buckeyes' deciding touchdown drive alive in the final quarter.

Byars, the nation's leader in rushing, scoring and all-pupose running this season, bolted 1 yard to give Ohio State a 7-0 lead in the first quarter.

Wisconsin 20, Michigan St. 10

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Marck Harrison rushed for 105 yards on 29 carries and one of the two touchdowns set up by the Wisconsin defense as the Badgers beat Michigan State 20-10.

Wisconsin finished the regular season with a 7-3-1 overall record, 5-3-1 in the conference, and appears likely to receive a post-season bowl bid when invitations come out next week.

Scouts from the Cherry Bowl said in the press box that the Badgers are on the top of the list for their Dec. 22 game in the Silverdome.

Michigan State finished 6-5 overall, 5-4 in the Big Ten.

Kansas State 38, Colorado 6

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Todd Moody got Kansas State rolling with a 55-yard touchdown run in the first quarter and the Wildcats romped to a 38-6 victory over Colorado in the season finale for both teams.

Quarterback Stan Weber scored on a one-yard run in the second period and Moody added a one-yard plunge in the third as the Wildcats ended the year with a 3-7-1 overall record and a 2-4-1 mark in the Big Eight, leaving them tied for fifth place.

Colorado closed out its season 1-10 and 1-6.

Oklahoma St. 16, Iowa St. 10

STILLWATER, Okla. — Nose guard John Washington lumbered 30 yards with an interception return, setting up Larry Roach's insurance field goal as No. 4 Oklahoma State escaped with a 16-10 victory over Iowa State.

The victory gave the Cowboys a 9-1 record overall and 5-1 mark in the conference. The Cyclones fell to 2-7-2 and 0-5-2.

Late in the fourth quarter, Oklahoma State's Leslie O'Neal deflected a pass by Iowa State's Alan Hood and Washington snared the ball, returning it to the Cyclone 11. Four plays later, Roach drilled a 21-yard field goal — the Cowboys' first points of the second half.

With the field goal, Roach became Oklahoma State's career scoring leader, surpassing Heisman Trophy runnerup Terry Miller with 296 points.

The Cowboys' nationally ranked defense throttled Iowa State's offense, which took advantage of four Oklahoma State fumbles and one interception.

Purdue 31, Indiana 24

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Purdue spotted winless Indiana a 14-point lead in the first quarter, then buried the Hoosiers with Jim Everett's 265-yard passing attack and rolled to a 31-24 Big Ten Conference victory in their final game of the season.

Purdue, still hoping for a post-season bowl invitation, finished at 6-3 in the conference and 7-4 overall, the first winning season in Leon Burtnett's three years as head coach.

Indiana, 0-9 in the Big Ten and 0-11 overall under first-year coach Bill Mallory, stretched the nation's longest major college losing streak to 16 games over two seasons.

Kansas 35, Missouri 21

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Quarterback Mike Norseth passed for two touchdowns and scored another and tailback Lynn Williams ran for two more, pacing underdog Kansas to a 35-21 Big Eight Conference upset of Missouri.

Norseth, while taking advantage of an error-prone Missouri defense, teamed up with split end Richard Estell on the second-longest pass play in Kansas history.

Bears' rally KOs Owls

Baylor wins 46-40 slugfest

HOUSTON (AP) — Baylor's Tom Muecke completed a 45-yard touchdown pass to Glenn Pruitt with 38 seconds to play Saturday to rally the Bears to a 46-40 victory over Rice in a Southwest Conference football game.

Moments earlier, Baylor's short yardage quarterback, Ron Francis, completed a five-yard pass to Horace Ates who fumbled into the end zone and Kobe Fornes recovered it for a touchdown with 4:57.

The Owls, who have not won an SWC game in 24 tries, had earlier dazzled Baylor with 75 and 23-yard touchdown passes from Kerry Overton to Keith Lewis, a 76-yard touchdown run by John Davis and a 90-yard kickoff return by Antonio Brinkley.

Baylor improved its record to 4-6 overall and 3-4 in the SWC. Rice dropped to 1-9 and 0-7.

BAYLOR'S MARTY Jimmerson, who kicked four field goals in the game, missed a 39-yard field goal attempt that failed to break the deadline with 1:38 left.

Four of Rice's touchdowns were one-play drives as the Owls won their first SWC games since a 17-14 victory over Baylor Nov. 14, 1981.

The Owls, who had scored only 16 points in the first quarter all season, led Baylor 20-17 at the end of the first quarter on a 76-yard run by Davis, Lewis' 75-yard touchdown catch from Overton and Brinkley's 90-yard kickoff return.

Rice's James Hamrick missed the first two extra points of his career after two of the touchdowns and Overton hit Lewis for a two point conversion.

The Bears started a string of six consecutive scoring drives by both teams with an 11-yard pass from Muecke to Bobby Joe Conrad.

Lewis caught a 23-yard touchdown pass from Overton in the second quarter, Jimmerson kicked field goals of 22, 38, 34 and 32 yards and Francis ran 24 yards for a Baylor touchdown and a 26-26 deadlock at halftime.

OVERTON WAS intercepted four times, including three interceptions by Baylor linebacker Kevin Hancock. Two of those set up Jimmerson field goals before halftime and a third stopped Rice at the Baylor 2 in the third quarter.

The Owls kept up the big-play format with Overton's 32-yard touchdown pass to Derrick Wells on first down at the Baylor 32 after a fumble recovery by Ward Broom.

After Muecke hit Francis on a 55-yard bomb in the third quarter Overton leaped three yards to provide the Owls with the lead again.

Rice's first three touchdowns were one-play drives.

Davis, a red-shirt freshman, bowled through the middle of the Baylor defense and broke for the goal line on the first play after Baylor's opening score. Davis outran Baylor's Reyna Thompson to the goal.

On the first play following Francis' touchdown run, Lewis won a leaping battle with Bear cornerback Johnny Thomas and took off for the goal.

Madison's ineligible player expected to get caught

DALLAS (AP) — Terry Hamilton, a Dallas Madison running back declared ineligible after his team had reached the state high school playoffs, said he expected to be caught by school officials.

The District 5-4A executive committee on Thursday ruled that Hamilton had violated University Interscholastic League rules requiring that a student attend a majority of his classes in the spring to be eligible for football the next fall.

Madison posted a 6-3-1 season record and a 5-1 district mark before the UIL panel ordered the school to forfeit the nine games Hamilton played in.

'I didn't think I was going to get away with it," Hamilton told the Dallas Times Herald. "I knew it was only a matter of time. I'm just sorry it went so far. I'm sorry it had to hurt the team. I didn't break the rules on purpose. I just wanted to play football and help the team win."

Madison Coach Curtis Cobbs disputed the committee's ruling, but refused to comment on UIL rules.

Hamilton, who rushed for 1,430 yards and 16 touchdowns this season, said his attendance has been a problem since the seventh or eighth grades.

"I knew what I was capable of doing because when I did go to school, I'd catch up just like that," Hamilton said, snapping his fingers.

Hamilton made passing grades in his core curriculum classes, in accordance with UIL rules, and the senior said he still hopes college recruiters will take notice of his season.

Pistons rally by Mavs for 124-110 win

DALLAS (AP) — Kelly Tripucka and Isiah Thomas combined for 26 points in the fourth quarter to help Detroit wipe out an 11-point deficit and defeat the Dallas Mavericks 124-110.

Tripucka, who scored 16 of his 24 points in the fourth quarter, and Thomas, who scored 10 of his 24 during the period, led a Pistons rally that saw Detroit outscore Dallas 46-21 in the final quarter.

Dallas, which led by as many as 17 in the third quarter, was outscored 17-7 early in the fourth quarter as a Tripucka basket pulled Detroit within 96-95 with 7:08 left.

A sellout Reunion Arena crowd of 17,007 watched as a three-point play by Thomas two minutes later put Detroit ahead 104-102 and started an 11-2 run.

Dallas got 30 points from Mark Aguirre and 21 from Jay Vincent. Aguirre scored 20 points in the first half as the Mavericks pushed a 24-23 first-quarter lead to 57-47 at halftime.

A finger-roll by Aguirre gave Dallas its biggest lead at 80-63 with 4:27 left in the third quarter.

Reserve guard Vinnie Johnson added a season-high 23 points for the Pistons.

Auburn still has Sugar Bowl hopes

Associated Press

AUBURN, Ala. — Pat Washington accounted for two touchdowns as 18th-ranked Auburn possibly remained in the running for a return trip to the Sugar Bowl with a 21-12 victory over No. 15 Georgia in a Southeastern Conference football game Saturday night.

Washington scored on a 2-yard run in the second quarter and fired a 46-yard touchdown strike to Clayton Beauford in the third as the Tigers built a 21-3 lead and then withstood a Georgia comeback.

The SEC bowl picture turned into a messy situation earlier in the day when Mississippi State upset Louisiana State 16-14 and Florida trimmed Kentucky 25-17.

Those two games left Florida with its first SEC title in 52 years, but the Gators could be stripped of the honor and denied the champion's automatic Sugar Bowl berth when the SEC executive committee meets in Birmingham next Tuesday.

Florida is facing three years of NCAA probation, two with sanctions, and the SEC may elect to deal out a penalty before the NCAA sentence takes effect in January.

S. Mississippi 34, Louisville 25

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Sophomore quarterback Andrew Anderson directed a potent Southern Mississippi offense and scored a touchdown himself as the Golden Eagles closed out their season with a 34-25 thrashing of Louisville.

Anderson, making his first start of the season, mixed pinpoint passing with USM's punishing running game to tire the Cardinals' defense.

The victory allowed the Golden Eagles to finish a disappointing 4-7 season on a winning note. Last week, the team was rocked a recruiting controversy that cost an assistant coach his job.

Minnesota 23, Iowa 17

MINNEAPOLIS — Gary Couch dashed 14 yards with 4:17 remaining and Chip Lohmiller kicked three second-half field goals to lift Minnesota over Iowa 23-17 in a Big Ten finale.

Iowa, an 18-point favorite, led the whole game until Bill Happel muffed a punt and Minnesota's Willie Roller recovered the fumble.

Late Games

Minnesota's Couch, a freshman from Davenport, Iowa, took the ball on first down and scored, sending half the 63,479 fans into a frenzy.

The other half of the sellout crowd that came north from Iowa had watched Happel race 95 yards on a record-setting punt return to give Iowa a 14-7 lead early in the second half.

But Lohmiller kicked field goals of 40 and 36 yards to pull the Gophers within a point, 14-13, early in the final quarter. He sealed the victory with a 34-yarder with 56 seconds to go.

Tulane 14, Memphis State 3

NEW ORLEANS — Dave McLaughlin, getting his second starting assignment of the season, threw for 277 yards and two fourth-quarter touchdowns to lead Tulane to a 14-3 victory over Memphis State.

McLaughlin started against Pittsburgh a week ago but got the hook early in the contest, giving way to regular starter Ken Karcher who played with fractured ribs.

SW Louisiana 18, Tulsa 17

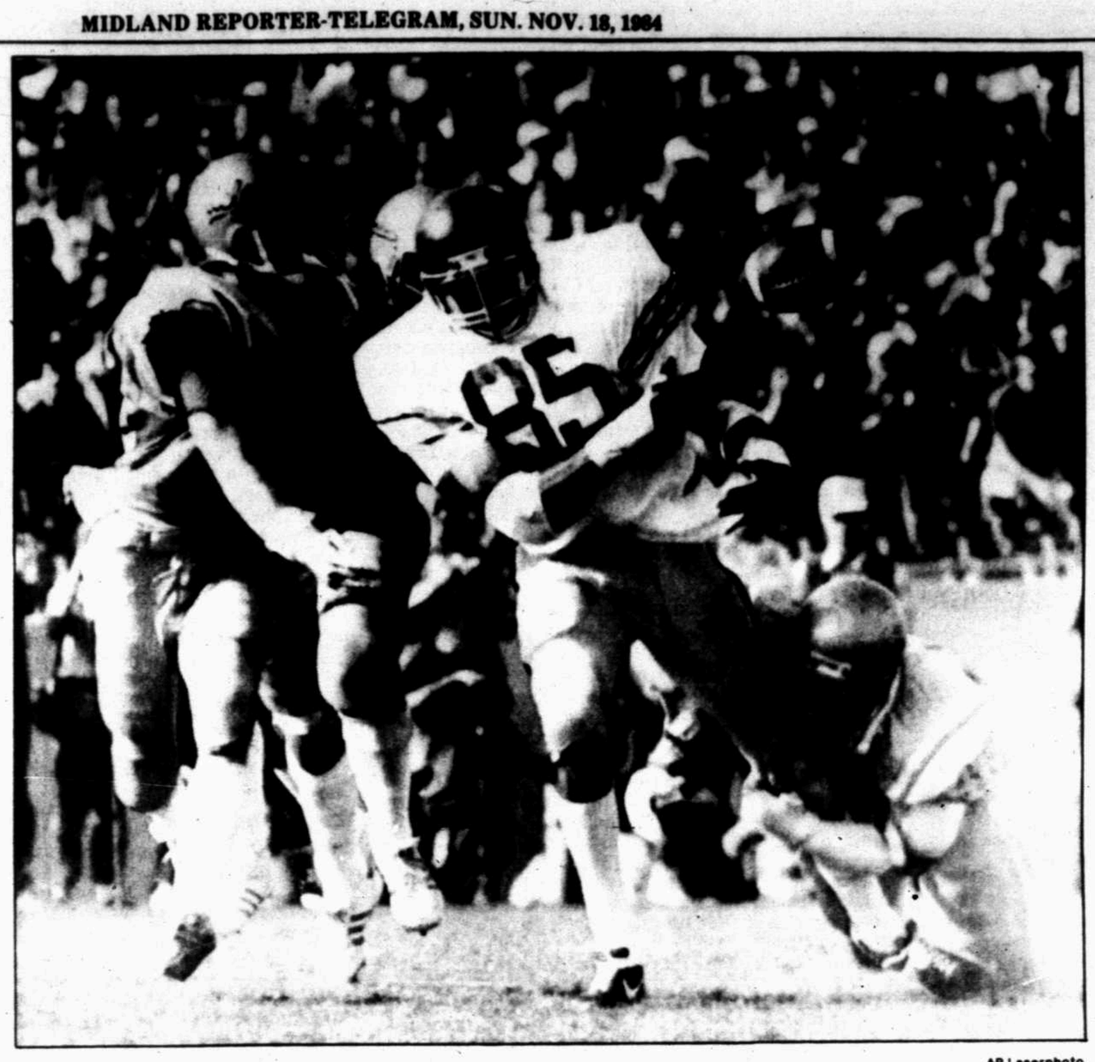

TULSA, Okla. — A 45-yard field goal by Patrick Broussard with four seconds left in the game gave Southwestern Louisiana an 18-17 victory over Tulsa.

The win gave the Ragin Cajun a 6-5 record on the season. Tulsa also finishes the season with a 6-5 record.

Stanford 27, California 10

BERKELEY, Calif. — Sophomore fullback Brad Muster of Stanford rushed for 204 yards, second highest total in the 87-year-old Big Game football series with California, in leading the Cardinals to a 27-10 victory.

The Stanford rushing attack featuring Muster, who carried the ball 34 times, and tailback Thomas Henley, who gained 102 yards, totaled 322 yards and picked up steam as the game progressed. Stanford had only two first downs in the opening period and trailed 10-0 early in the second quarter after Gale Gilbert of Cal threw a 12-yard touchdown pass to Keith Cockett.

USC tight end Joe Cormier (85) can't hold on to the ball as UCLA defenders Tony Phillips (49) and Craig Rutledge (30) apply the hit. UCLA recovered the fumble en route to an uspet over 7th-ranked Trojans.

UCLA's Lee kicks USC

Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. — UCLA's John Lee's established an NCAA single-season record by kicking five field goals Saturday as the Bruins stunned Rose Bowl-bound Southern Cal 29-10 for their third straight victory over the Trojans.

Lee finished the regular season with 29 field goals in 33 attempts. He broke the NCAA record of 28 three-pointers set by West Virginia's Paul Woodside in 1982 and equaled by Arizona State's Luis Zendejas last year.

Despite the one-sided setback, the seventh-ranked Trojans will face Big Ten champion Ohio State in the Rose Bowl game on New Year's Day. Southern Cal clinched its Rose Bowl berth by beating Washington 16-7 on Nov. 10.

The Trojans, who turned the ball over six times, completed their Pacific-10 Conference schedule with a 7-1 record and are 8-2 overall. They finish their regular season against Notre Dame next Saturday.

The two-time defending Rose Bowl champion Bruins, who figure to receive a bowl bid next Saturday when invitations may first be officially extended, wound up regular-season play at 5-2 in the Pac-10 and 8-3 overall.

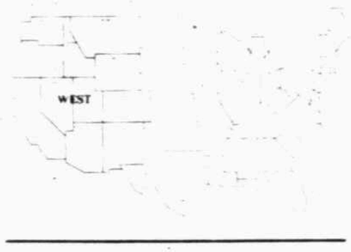

Lee, a 5-foot-11, 175-pound junior, booted a 46-yard field goal after 7:30 of play to put UCLA ahead for good in the nationally televised game, played before a crowd of 90,096 at the Rose Bowl.

He added field goals of 29, 43 and 37 yards in the second quarter. Three of the first-half field goals followed Southern Cal turnovers.

Lee broke the NCAA record by kicking a 49-yarder with 9:08 remaining in the game. He had missed from 44 yards out on the first play of the final period.

Lee's only misses this season were on attempts of 41, 44, 49 and 50 yards.

Brigham Young 24, Utah 14

SALT LAKE CITY — Quarterback Robbie Bosco threw three touchdown passes as No. 3 Brigham Young overcame a plague of turnovers to whip arch-rival Utah 24-14, extending college football's longest winning streak to 22 games.

Bosco, the nation's leader in passing efficiency, was intercepted three times in the first half and fumbled once in the third quarter. Utah kept the game close until Bosco's 4-yard scoring toss to Kelly Smith with 7:26 left in the game.

The victory gave BYU an 11-0 mark with one game remaining at home against Utah State. The Cougars, who own their ninth consecutive Western Athletic Conference title, will play in their seventh straight Holiday Bowl Dec. 21 in San Diego.

Utah, which ended its season at 6-5-1 overall and 4-3-1 in the WAC, played before the second-largest crowd in its history — 36,110.

Oregon 31, Oregon State 6

CORVALLIS, Ore. — Tony Cherry rushed for a pair of touchdowns, including a 51-yard ramble down the sidelines, to help Oregon roll to a 31-6 Pacific 10 Conference football victory over arch-rival Oregon State.

With the victory, the Ducks finished the season at 6-5, their first winning campaign since 1980 and ninth triumph over the Beavers in their annual "Civil War" clash in the last 10 years.

Oregon State, 2-9, hasn't beaten Oregon since 1974. Last year's game finished in a 0-0 tie.

The Beavers may have been playing their last game under Coach Joe Avezzano, who has a 6-47-2 record in five seasons. He will meet with university president John Byrne next week to discuss his job status.

Nev.-Las Vegas 36, Utah St. 20

LOGAN, Utah — Quarterback Randall Cunningham passed for three touchdowns and ran for another as Nevada-Las Vegas clinched the Pacific Coast Athletic Association title with a 36-20 victory over Utah State.

UNLV, which improved to 9-1 overall and 6-0 in the PCAA, was held to three points in the second half after scoring five touchdowns in the first half to take a 33-7 lead at halftime.

Utah State, which finishes its season next Saturday in Provo against third-ranked Brigham Young, fell to 1-9 overall and 1-6 in PCAA play.

Washington 38, Washington St. 29

PULLMAN, Wash. — Workhorse tailback Jacque Robinson ignited No. 8 Washigton's offense with 160 yards rushing and three touchdowns as the Huskies beat arch-rival Washington State 38-29 in a Pac-10 Conference game.

The Huskies, 10-1 overall, will most likely be invited to a New Year's Day bowl. They finished the conference season 6-1. WSU ended the regular season at 6-5 overall and 4-3 in the conference.

Robinson blasted in for two 1-yard scores in the fourth quarter, and rumbled 32 yards in the second quarter.

His second touchdown, with 14:15 to play, pushed UW ahead for good, 29-26.

That score was set up when cornerback Ron Milus picked off Cougar quarterback Mark Rypien.

Linebacker Joe Kelly ended WSU's next possession with another interception of Rypien, setting up Robinson's final score.

PERMIAN

Permian converted both Palo Duro fumbles into touchdowns and a 21-7 lead as Holloway dialed Diron New for a 17-yard strike and later hit New with a 28-yard bomb on fourth-and-three from the 30-yard line to set up Dal Watson's one-yard score.

Palo Duro gamely stayed close when Gerry Smith scored on a 27-yard romp to cut the Permian lead to 21-14. Holloway, however, answered on the next drive with a 17-yard TD pass to Rich Fletcher, and two series later dialed New again for a six-yard scoring toss for a 34-14 lead and it was obvious that Permian was headed for the area playoffs.

From there it was a happy-go-lucky game as Palo Duro's Richard Owens scored on a big 71-yard TD run and Permian's Clenon Williams got an 11-yard TD run.

Palo Duro shocked Permian in the first half, however, by holding Mojo scoreless in the first period and then taking a 7-0 lead in the second quarter on a 10-play, 75-yard drive. Earl Pettis set up his own one-yard TD with a smooth 33-yard run.

Pettis had 101 yards rushing at the half and Permian was wondering how to stop the bruising brute. The Panthers must have figured it out at the half, since Petttis had only 22 more yards rushing in the entire game.

Permian came back to knot the score at seven with only 30 seconds left in the half by marching 68 yards in 13 plays. Holloway completeed four passes in the drive to set up Watson's one-yard scoring plunge.

Permian won the home-field advantage for the area playoffs by winning a coin flip after the game. The Panthers host El Paso Austin at 2 p.m. Saturday in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium.

Cards, Giants fight for survival

Associated Press

Just when the new kids seemed ready to take over the NFC East, they stumbled. So when the St. Louis Cardinals and the New York Giants meet Sunday at Giants Stadium, both will be fighting for survival in the National Football League's playoff race.

The Cards and the Giants, both 6-5, dropped out of a four-way tie for first in the division when they lost last week — the Cards to the Dallas Cowboys, the Giants to the Tampa Bay Bucs. That left the division in a familiar alignment — with the Washington Redskins and Dallas Cowboys tied for first.

"Younger teams may know how to win big games," says St. Louis quarterback Neil Lomax. "But the older teams always seem to go out and do it."

The meeting between the Cards and the Giants is the first of two between those two junior the NFC East contenders. To the winner will go a place in the midst of the battle for the playoffs; to the loser falls the task of winning all four of its remaining games without being assured of a playoff spot.

"We've got to win five to be sure," says Giants wide receiver Earnest Gray, who probably will miss the game with a fractured bone in his hand. "If we can beat St. Louis, we're still in the thick of things. If not, we have to see how the others do."

IN OTHER games Sunday, Cleveland is at Atlanta; Dallas at Buffalo; Detroit at Chicago; the Los Angeles Rams vs. Green Bay in Milwaukee; New England at Indianapolis; Seattle at Cincinnati; Washington at Philadelphia; Kansas City at the Los Angeles Raiders; Miami at San Diego; Minnesota at Denver; the New York Jets at Houston, and Tampa Bay at San Francisco.

Monday night's game pits Pittsburgh at New Orleans.

The Cards and Giants put on one of the worst games in NFL memory last season — a 20-20 tie in a Monday night game in which St. Louis placekicker Neil O'Donoghue missed three overtime field goals, including a 19-yarder.

NFL Roundup

"I still have nightmares about it," says Cardinal receiver Roy Green, who combines with Lomax to give the Cardinals the NFC's most potent passing offense, although Lomax has had trouble in the past with the blitzing of Lawrence Taylor.

The Giants, with a lackluster running attack, are third in the conference in passing and Phil Simms is second only to Lomax in yardage gained. The Giants often use three wide receivers with Simms spreading the ball among Gray and four receivers in their first or second year — Lionel Manuel, Bobby Johnson, Byron Williams and Phil McConkey.

THERE'S ANOTHER big game, unexpectedly, in Cincinnati, where the Bengals, 4-7 after an 0-5 start, trail Pittsburgh by only two games in the AFC Central following a 22-20 victory over the Steelers last week. Their opponents, the 9-2 Seahawks, need the win to continue their chase of the Broncos in the AFC West.

This one may depend on turnovers — Cincinnati was minus seven in turnovers in its first five games and is plus eight in its last six; Seattle, with a conservative offense that depends on field position, has forced 50 turnovers by its opponents, 27 more than it has committed.

So Bengals Coach Sam Wyche has been emphasizing protecting the football this week — defensive players have been instructed in practice to strip the ball from the running backs.

"That may be the story line at the end of the game," Wyche says. "They have intercepted a lot of balls and they've knocked a lot of balls loose because they are a physical team. Their linebackers hit like a ton of bricks."

IN LOS ANGELES, the 7-4 Raiders will be trying to end a three-game losing streak that has jeopardized their playoff chances. If the playoffs started this week, the defending Super Bowl champions wouldn't be in them — they'd lose out to New England for the second AFC wild-card berth.

"This has become our most important game of the year," says Coach Tom Flores, whose team beat the Chiefs 22-20 in Kansas City earlier this season on Chris Bahr's field goal in the last minute.

Kansas City, 5-6, has played its worst football of the season the past two weeks, losing 45-0 in Seattle, then dropping a 17-16 decision to the Houston Oilers in Kansas City — Houston's first win after 10 losses.

But Coach John Makovic isn't surrendering.

"We've played some good football," he says. "We're still in a position where with a few breaks down the stretch we could get in the playoffs."

New England, 7-4 and 2-1 since Raymond Berry took over from Ron Meyer, is favored to beat the 4-7 Colts, who are last in the league in yardage gained and have scored just one touchdown in three games.

But the Patriots are wary of Indianapolis, which beat the Jets, 9-5 last week.

"The best way to get beat is to overlook an opponent," warns defensive end Kenneth Sims and the other defensive end, Doug Rogers, adds: "They've got two good running backs. They've got some explosive offensive power. We can't afford to let up or overlook anybody because we're in a good position regarding the playoffs."

THE RAMS, 7-4, are in the same position — if the playoffs began now, they'd be an NFC wild-card team.

But the Packers also harbor playoff hopes, albeit slim. After losing seven straight, they've won three in a row as Lynn Dickey has led an offense that's been averaging over 400 yards a game and at 4-7 are three games behind the Chicago Bears with five games left.

San Francisco, cruising along with a 10-1 record in the NFC West, can clinch at least a wild-card playoff berth against the 4-7 Bucs, who last week knocked the Giants off their perch at the top of the NFC East. Tampa's James Wilder, leading the league in total yardage, went over the 1,000-yard mark in rushing last week.

MIAMI, WHICH had a narrow one-point escape against the Eagles last week, will try to run its record to 12-0 this year and extend its regular-season winning streak to 17 against the 5-6 Chargers. That would be one short of the NFL record as the Dolphins and their players, led by Dan Marino, close in on 11 NFL records.

San Diego's Charlie Joiner, meanwhile, enters the game just eight receptions short of Charley Taylor's all-time NFL record for receptions.

Washington, 7-4, will have John Riggins back after a week's rest to take on the Eagles. Philadelphia, 4-6-1, is capable of upsetting anyone, as they proved in Miami last week, when they lost to the Dolphins by the margin of a blocked extra point.

Dallas, tied with the Redskins at the top of the NFC East, will continue with Gary Hogeboom at quarterback against winless Buffalo after Hogeboom's fourth-quarter touchdown pass beat St. Louis 24-17 last week.

Denver, 10-1, continues to win the close ones — like its 16-13 last-minute victory over San Diego last week. Coach Les Steckel of the 3-8 Vikings accused some of his players of quitting in last week's 45-17 loss to Green Bay last week but retracted that charge after watching the films.

PITTSBURGH, 6-5, could have just about clinched the AFC Central with a win in Cincinnati last week, but the Steelers still remain two games in front. New Orleans, 5-6, kept alive its very slim NFC wild-card hopes with a 17-13 win over Atlanta.

The Bears were beaten by the Rams last week, but their 7-4 record still gives them a comfortable three-game lead in the NFC Central and got a good showing from backup quarterback Steve Fuller, who was 21 of 27 for 240 yards in relief of the injured Jim McMahon. Detroit, 3-7-1, beat the Bears in both meetings last season.

The Jets, 6-5, still harbor wild-card hopes despite losing three in a row, but go into Houston with quarterback Pat Ryan questionable after suffering a concussion in last week's loss to Indianapolis. The Oilers are coming off their first win of the season and a defense that Jets Coach Joe Walton says is better than the Colts.

The game between 2-9 Cleveland and 3-8 Atlanta matches two teams whose hopes entering the season have turned to disaster. The Falcons, beset by crippling injuries to key players, have lost five in a row.

Aulby wins BMWO title

GLENDALE HEIGHTS, Ill. (AP) — Mike Aulby of Indianapolis beat top-seeded Gary Skidmore of Albuquerque, N.M., 253-241 to capture the $150,000 Brunswick Memorial World Open Saturday.

It was the second Professional Bowlers Association title in four weeks for the 24-year-old Aulby and the sixth of his career.

Marshall Holman of Jacksonville, Ore., a 17-time champion, finished third, ahead of 31-time winner Mark Roth of Spring Lake Heights, N.J., and Bob Learn Jr. of Erie, Pa.

Aulby, who won the Indianapolis Open three weeks ago, defeated Holman 241-212, to reach the title game.

Holman beat Roth 280-212, and Roth eliminated Learn 246-201, in the opening matches.

Against Skidmore, Aulby fell behind by 30 pins in the third frame.

But he put together seven straight strikes from the fourth to the 10th frames to win the title and the $27,000 first prize.

"I was really pumped up in the title game," said Aulby, who moved into second place on this year's money winning list with $110,620.

Flyers claims fifth straight victory

Associated Press

BOSTON — Mark Howe, Derrick Smith and Murray Craven beat Boston goalie Pete Peeters for goals on long shots in the third period, and the Philadelphia Flyers rolled to their fifth consecutive victory Saturday night, a 5-3 National Hockey League decision over the Bruins.

Rich Sutter and Tim Kerr scored first-period goals as the Flyers handed Boston its first home loss in eight games this season. Howe put Philadelphia ahead 3-1 as he let go a drive after crossing the center red line. The 70-foot shot trickled in off Peeters' pads just 51 seconds into the third period.

Peeters finished with only 19 saves. Philadelphia goalie Pelle Lindbergh had 29 saves.

NHL

Islanders 10, Rangers 4

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Mike Bossy tied Phil Esposito's NHL record for three-goal games with his 32nd career hat trick as the New York Islanders routed the New York Rangers 10-4.

Bossy now has three hat tricks this season, including a pair of four-goal games, and has collected those 32 hat tricks in 550 games. He now has a league-leading 22 goals this season.

UTEP beats Wyoming 35-22 for first WAC win

Associated Press

EL PASO — Quarterback Kevin Ward and tailback Tommy Bonds had touchdown runs of 2 and 13 yards in the fourth quarter to give Texas-El Paso a 35-22 Western Athletic Conference victory over Wyoming Saturday night in college football.

The Miners notched their first WAC victory against seven losses for a 2-8 overall record, while the Cowboys dropped to 4-4 in the conference and 6-6 overall.

The Miners first scored on a 1-yard plunge by quarterback Sammy Garza but the Cowboys struck back on a 3-yard run by running back Kevin Lowe less than five minutes later. A fumble set up the Miners next score, which culminated in a 46-yard run by tailback Tony George. The Miners scored once more on a 1-yard run by tailback James Rose to make it 21-7 at the half.

The Cowboys came on strong in the second half and scored on a fourth down bootleg by freshman quarterback Scott Runyan. A two-point conversion run by Runyan closed the gap to 21-15.

Wyoming took the lead for the first time on a 6-yard run by Gerald Abraham, but then the Miners front line showed a resurgence and the team marched 76 yards on 12 plays, culminating in Ward's touchdown.

A two-point pass from Ward to Brad McEachern was good for two points. The Miners again scored on their next drive on tailback Bonds' 13-yard run but the conversion failed.

SF Austin 22, NW Louisiana 18

NACOGDOCHES — Quarterback Todd Whitten connected on two second half touchdown passes as Stephen F. Austin upset Northwestern Louisiana 22-18 in the final Gulf Star Conference game of the year.

The Lumberjacks ended the season with an 1-3-1 league mark, 7-3-1 overall, while Northwest Louisiana finishes the year tied with Nicholls State with a 4-1 mark in the conference, and a 7-4 overall record.

The score was 8-8 at the half.

Whitten opened the second half with the first of his two touchdown passes as he connected with Floyd Dixon from 6 yards out.

The visiting Demons came back to tie in the third quarter when quarterback Wayne Van hit Odessa Turner on a 3-yard touchdown pass. Northwestern went in front moments later with Benny Brouillette's 35-yard field goal.

The Lumberjacks go ahead touchdown came with 1:41 remaining in the third period when Whitten found James Noble open over the middle with the junior running the ball to the end zone for a 50-yard completion.

Abilene Christian 24, ETSU 14

ABILENE — Fullback Anthony Thomas ran for 172 yards and scored two touchdowns to lead Abilene Christian to a 24-14 victory over East Texas State Saturday afternoon in both teams' final games of the season.

Thomas scored on a 3-yard run in the first quarter and a 7-yard run in the fourth, and had his sixth 100-yard game of the season.

Abilene is now 3-7 overall and 2-2 in the Lone Star Conference. East Texas fell to 5-5 for the season and 1-3 in conference play.

Drake 25, WTSU 22

CANYON — West Texas State's hopes of a top-division finish in the Missouri Valley Conference standings went down the drain as the Drake Bulldogs ambushed the Buffalos 25-22 in the teams' season finale.

Drake took an early advantage via a blocked punt that set up the Bulldogs for a 2-yard scoring pass. Then came a 20-yard field goal by John Brda, who later tied a school single-game record by kicking three field goals in five attempts.

West Texas State took command in the second quarter on the strength of two scoring runs by quarterback David Harbin. His touchdown runs of six yards and one yard put the Buffalos up 14-10.

But the Bulldogs came back from behind to finish up the game.

Drake finished the season 4-7 and 2-3 in the MVC; West Texas fell to 3-8 and 2-3.

Sam Houston 21, Southwest Texas 17

HUNTSVILLE — Freshman James Middleton scored on a one-yard run with only 4:55 remaining as Sam Houston State posted a 21-17 Gulf Star Conference victory over Southwest Texas.

The win gave Sam Houston an 8-3 season record, the best since 1970, and a 3-2 conference mark. Southwest Texas dropped to 7-4 and 2-3.

Sam Houston led 14-6 at the half on Raymond Young's two-yard run and a 22-yard scoring pass from Lanny Dycus to Sam Moore.

Southwest Texas' Neal Neunhoffer had field goals of 20 and 23 yards.

Angelo State 30, Howard Payne 7

BROWNWOOD — Angelo State quarterback Ned Cox threw touchdown passes of 14 and 23 yards as the Rams captured their first Lone Star Conference championship since 1978 with a 30-7 victory over Howard Payne.

The Rams closed out their regular season with an 8-3 record and a 4-0 conference mark.

Freshman running back Derrick Campbell scored on runs of 5 and 14 yards, and Paul Drain kicked a school record 53-yard field goal for Angelo State.

Howard Payne is now 1-8-1 and 0-4.

McNeese St. 34, Lamar 14

LAKE CHARLES, La. — Simon Jordan became the only Southland Conference back to rush for over 1,000 yards this season and safety Todd McArthur had three of McNeese State's six interceptions in leading the Cowboys to an easy 34-14 league victory over Lamar.

Jordan carried 29 times for 157 yards and one touchdown, giving him 1,020 for the year as McNeese's 7-3-1 finish matched a 1981 record which was the Cowboys' best this decade.

Still, Jordan had to share the glory with McNeese's defensive corps which, in addition to its six interceptions, also recovered two Lamar fumbles.

McNeese finished at 2-3-1 and out of contention for any sort of Southland recognition, while Lamar finished its year at 2-9 and 1-5.

The Cowboys finished off Lamar with a 21-point second period, scoring on a six-yard run by Blake Courville, a one-yard plunge by Tony Hunt and a 32-yard romp by Jordan.

Tony Whittington kicked field goals of 37 and 25 yards, and a two-yard touchdown run by Jeff Bryant finished off the Cardinals.

Lamar already was down 24-0 before George Landry put the Cardinals on the board with a five-yard touchdown run in the third period, followed by a two-point conversion.

Lamar's other touchdown came on a 73-yard touchdown bomb from quarterback Brent Watson to Rodney Clay in the fourth quarter.

Texas A&I 28, Missouri Western 13

KINGSVILLE — Quarterback Chris Soza passed for 305 yards and two touchdowns to lead Texas A&I to a 28-13 victory over Missouri Western State College here.

In the season finale for both teams, Soza paced the Javelinas to 528 total yards. He completed 16 of 28 passes, no interceptions, and touchdown strikes of 73 yards to Chuckie Miles and 12 to Harold Jackson. Tailback Marcus Brown scored on runs of 28 and 5 yards.

Missouri Western's scored on a 5-yard run by Melvin Ware and a 20-yard pass from quarterback Kevin Stephens to Keith Hoskins.

The Javelinas ended with a 6-5-0 record overall and 3-1 in the Lone Star Conference. Missouri Western is 4-6-1.

Texas-Arlington 22, N. Texas St. 0

ARLINGTON — Tailback Scotty Caldwell rushed for 101 yards and scored a touchdown to lead Texas Arlington past North Texas State 22-0 in Southland Conference play.

The game was the Mavericks' first shutout of the season and it upped their record to 7-4 overall and 4-2 in the conference. The loss left North Texas State's marks at 2-9 and 1-5.

The Mavericks built a 15-0 halftime lead on a 7-yard touchdown pass from Phil Blue, a one-yard scoring run by Caldwell and a 39-yard field goal off the toe of Scott Tennison.

Rockets use Sampson to rip Spurs

HOUSTON (AP) — Ralph Sampson has played some great basketball games as an All-American at the University of Virginia and as rookie of the year in the National Basketball Association last season.

But Rockets Coach Bill Fitch says the 7-foot-4 giant may have had his best game ever Saturday night as he helped the Rockets overpower the San Antonio Spurs 141-133.

Sampson, whose high game for the season had been 23 points and 13 rebounds, ravaged the Spurs for a career high 43 points and 17 rebounds in the game.

"It was his best game ever," Fitch said. "He had the intensity, he didn't waste energy and he didn't rush anything. He was in control.

"He will be a great confidence building. He's been struggling some," he said. "That's the Ralph we've waited to see for 93 games, and it's worth waiting for."

Actress Charlene Tilton 'moving' from Dallas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Charlene Tilton, who plays Lucy Ewing on the CBS television series "Dallas," is leaving the show after seven years because the producers have decided to drop her character, her publicist says.

"The termination results from Lorimar's creative decision to no longer expand her character," said a statement released Friday by PMK public relations. "While Charlene was surprised and disappointed, she looks forward to future projects and will leave amicably."

A spokesman for Lorimar said, "The writers didn't feel they could do anything further with the character, so the show's producer, Len Katzman, opted not to do another contract."

Ms. Tilton has played a member of the rich and powerful Ewing clan since the series began. She will continue to work on "Dallas" until the current season wraps up in April, PMK said.

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Fans of Michael Jackson and his brothers are still showing up at the group's Victory Tour concerts wearing Michael's trademark single glove, but ticket sales and audience reaction haven't been as strong as they were south of the border.

National tour promoter Chuck Sullivan declared the Vancouver portion of the tour a success Friday night even though scalpers were selling the $40 tickets for as little as $15 for seats on the main floor at B.C. Place Stadium. There were 2,000 unsold tickets for Saturday's concert and about 10,000 remained available for Sunday's.

Sullivan said the tour became profitable at the 40th performance, in Cleveland, and he estimated after the 47th performance here Friday that he and his company will gross more than $60 million.

The tour concludes Dec. 2 after three performances at Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles.

"I think everybody connected with the tour is tired and is ready to go home to their families for Christmas," Sullivan said at a news conference.

To Lease or Not To Lease

Reasons To Lease:

1. Leasing is convenient – you only pay for what you use and not for the full price of the car.
2. There is no used car to dispose of at lease end.
3. Leasing frees your cash and you can use your available bank line of credit for other purposes.
4. Lessee – leasing for business purposes will have the benefit of simplified tax records.

POINSETTIA

OLEANDER

Please ... don't eat the plants

As the holiday season approaches, many people deck their halls with boughs of holly, suspend mistletoe above doorways and festoon rooms with poinsettias.

These symbols of happy holidays, however, could cause serious distress and possibly even endanger a young life if a small child swallows a handful of the berries or leaves.

The bright green, leafy philodendrons, colorful caladiums and cheery dieffenbachias that decorate homes year-round also pose a similar threat of poisoning.

"We do have a little bit of a problem with it," said Wanda Douglas, R.N., director of the emergency department at Midland Memorial Hospital, although she estimated they see less than 10 plant poisoning cases a year.

"Mainly what we see are toddlers; 6 or 7 months old up to maybe 3 months old. We teach them to be inquisitive and teach them their colors. They see something red and pretty and they go, 'Mmmmm, let's taste this.'

"We get a lot more phone calls," she said, from people inquiring about the dangers of something a child has eaten.

In poisoning cases, she said, this may not be the best approach. She recommends parents immediately bring the child and a sample of the plant or substance to the hospital.

"For many things, time is of importance," said Ms. Douglas.

Parents should be prepared to tell medical personnel:

— The time the substance was swalled.

— The amount consumed.

— What was consumed.

— The age of the victim.

— The weight of the victim.

"Those are the things that are important to us immediately," said Ms. Douglas.

"Most moms know what kind of plants they have around the house," she noted, but bringing in a leaf or other sample is a good idea and extremely important if the plant is unidentified.

The hospital has a microfiche poison index to help identify poisonous substances and to find the correct way to treat them. They also work with the Poison Control Center in Galveston to further ensure proper treatment of poison victims.

To avoid poisonings, she suggested simply "keeping things out of the reach of children.

"Another thing to do is to check and find out if something is a poisonous plant" and handle it accordingly.

For most poisonous substances, she said, it is a good idea to attach "Mr. Yuk" stickers — colored cartoon stickers — to the container and teach the child not to handle anything bearing the sticker.

"That might be a little hard with a houseplant, although I suppose you could put it on the pot," said Ms. Douglas.

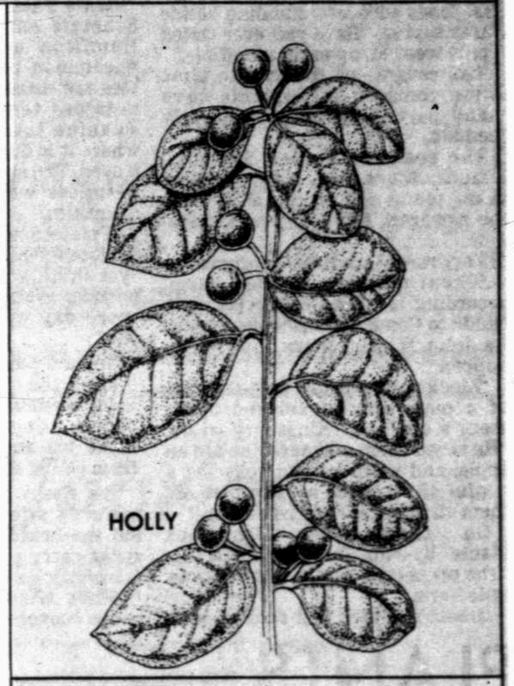

These hints to avoid plant poisoning were compiled from the book "Human Poisoning from Native and Cultivated Plants" by James W. Hardin and Dr. Jay M. Arena:

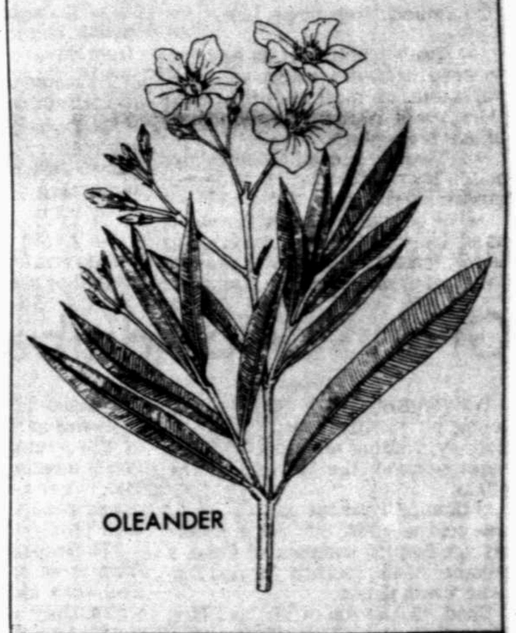

— Become familiar with the dangerous plants in the area, yard and home. Know them by sight and name.

— Do not eat wild plants, including mushrooms, unless positive of identification.

— Keep plants, seeds, fruits and bulbs away from infants.

Poisonous plants list

This list highlights a few of the most common poisonous plants used to decorate home interiors:

— Hollies. The attractive red berries of this popular holiday decoration are not terribly poisonous but are considered dangerous, especially for small children.

— Mistletoe. As long as this symbol of love remains suspended high out of the reach of children over doorways it is safe. All of the plant and especially the berries are poisonous. Deaths have occurred within a few hours of eating mistletoe berries.

— Poinsettia. The leaves, stems and sap of poinsettas contain toxic substances and a 2-year-old is reported to have died after eating a poinsetta leaf, according to "Dangerous Plants" by John Tampion.

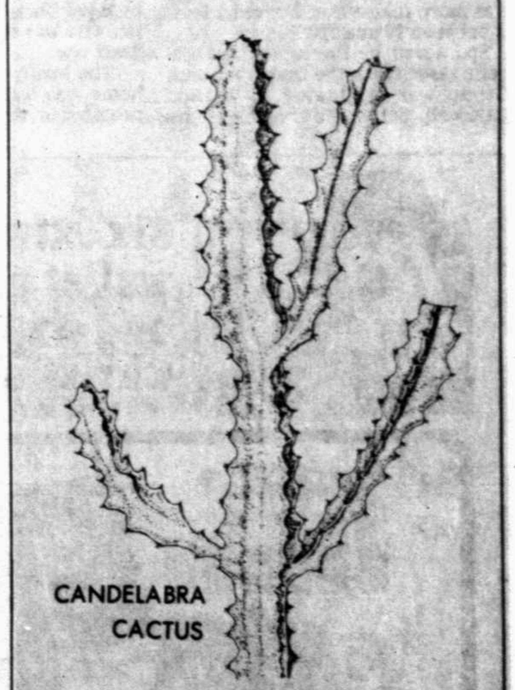

— Caladium or Elephant Ears. Caladiums contain tiny, needle-like crystals of calcium oxalate, which can cause intense irritation and swelling if chewed. Death may occur if tissues in the back of the mouth swell up enough to block breathing.

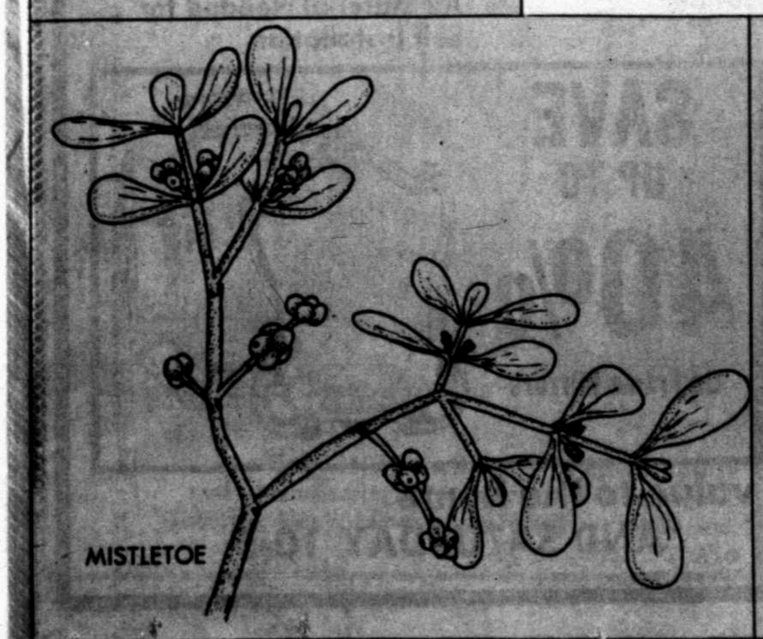

— Candelabra Cactus. This ornamental cactus is related to the poisonous poinsettia and crown-of-thorns cactus. Like its relatives, it can cause severe stomach distress if eaten and is considered potentially dangerous.

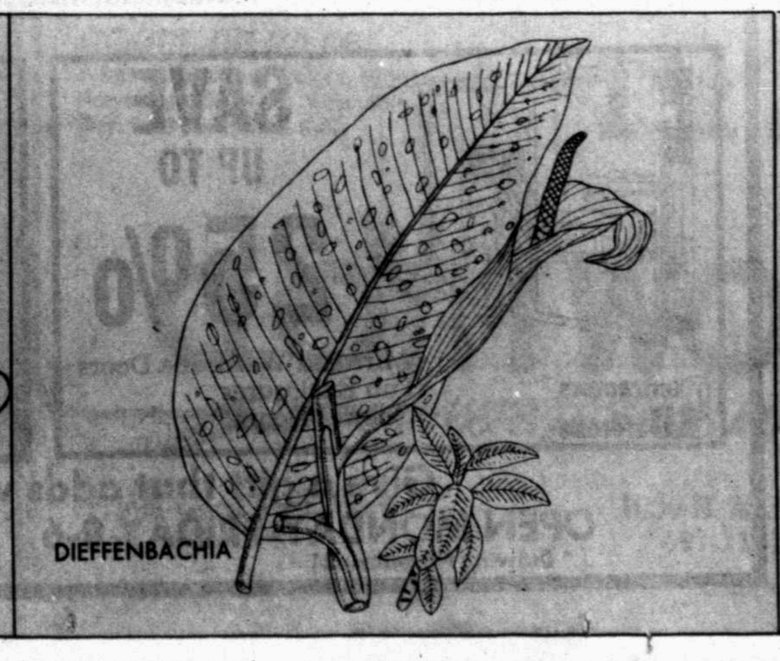

— Dieffenbachia or Dumbcane. This common houseplant also contains dangerous calcium oxalate crystals. "Deaths have occurred in experimental animals but have not been reported in humans," according to "Plants That Poison" by Ervin M. Schmutz and Lucretia Breazeale Hamilton.

— Oleander. Oleander is a highly toxic plant. Adults have been killed by eating a single leaf. According to "Plants That Poison," people have been killed by using branches from oleander bushes as meat skewers during cookouts and then eating the poisoned meat. Smoke from burning oleanders and honey made from its flowers are also considered potentially dangerous.

— Philodendron. This popular indoor foliage plant contains dangerous calcium oxalate crystals like its poisonous relatives pothos, windowleaf, spathe flower, anthurium and calla lily plants.

Salvation Army launches its 10th Dress-a-Live-Doll Christmas program

Dress-A-Live Doll, a Christmas program sponsored by the Salvation Army in conjunction with citizens of the community, is in its 10th year of clothing Midland's needy children.

Fifty children benefited from the project when it began in 1974. By 1983, the project had expanded to provide new clothing for more than 600 children.

Families, individuals, office staffs and civic or church organizations are eligible to participate in the project by providing a complete outfit for a child or several children. The Salvation Army staff visits families upon recommendation to determine needs and clothing sizes of children from infancy to 14-year-olds.

"Dressing" the children is defined in the project as purchasing a complete ensemble including school clothes, socks, shoes, night clothes, sweaters, jackets or coats, etc. The tax deductibleexpenses should be expected to be about $75. New clothing is preferred in the program because many underprivileged youngsters have never experienced wearing something new that is their own.

Persons interested in participating in Dress-A-Live-Doll should contact Theresa White, secretary, at The Salvation Army Office, 683-3614, before Dec. 1. A child and number will be assigned to them. No personal contact is made by the donors and anonymity for all parties is assured.

After the donor has requested to participate in the project, a size information sheet for a specific youngster is mailed to him. If the donor patronizes stores offering discounts for the Dress-A-Live-Doll program, he should use the sheet to identify himself as a donor.

Merchants offering discounts are Upstairs-Downstairs, Sears, Payless Shoe Source, Jimmy Smith Shoes and Anthony's Department Stores.

Clothing purchased for each child should be gift-wrapped in several packages, labeled with the donor's identification number, tied together and delivered to The Salvation Army Office, 300 S. Baird, by Dec. 17 to begin delivery to the children.

Area towns have become interested in the concept of dressing needy children following the example of Midland citizens. Chairman for the 1984 Dress-A-Live-Doll project is Mrs. J. Paul Karcher, member of The Salvation Army board. Major Jack Camp is commanding officer.

Many common foods are toxic

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

A television commercial which was popular some years ago featured Euell Gibbons, author and natural foods advocate, standing beside a tree saying, "Have you ever tasted a pine tree? Many parts are edible."

The reverse of this is also true. Some common food plants have many parts that are poisonously inedible.

The seeds of apples, apricots, lemons, limes, cherries, peaches, pears, plums and prunes all contain the powerful, fast-acting poison cyanide.

Very rarely are these consumed in sufficent quantity to cause harm, according to "Deadly Harvest — A Guide to Common Poisonous Plants" by John M. Kingsbury, but it can happen.

"Medical records include the case of a man who considered apple seeds a delicacy," Kingsbury wrote. "He saved them whenever he ate an apple; and when he had collected a cupful of seeds, he sat down to eat them all at once. They killed him."

On a cheerier note, "Dangerous Plants" by John Tampion points out, "The occasional 'pip' swallowed does little harm."

Green, sprouted and spoiled potatoes contain the violently toxic poison solanine. Green spots and sprouts on potatoes should always be discarded because of this.

While both people and livestock have been killed by eating potatoes, "Plants That Poison" by Ervin M. Schmutz and Lucretia Breazeale Hamilton notes that "Death is uncommon because sprouted potatoes are usually peeled, and boiling potatoes tends to leach out the solanine into the cooking water where it is diluted and partially destroyed. The skin of baked potatoes is harmless when eaten in normal quantities."

"Potatoes are the most dangerous (of foods)," according to Kingsbury, "yet think what vast quantities of potatoes are eaten around the earth every day without poisoning anyone."

Tomato plants also contain solanine, but the ripe fruits are harmless. Some poisonings have resulted from people using the plant's leaves to make tea and livestock have died from eating the vines.

The fleshy stalks of rhubarb are perfectly safe and make good pies, but the broad leafs attached to the stalks carry sharp, needle-like crystals of calcium oxalate.

When chewed the crystals can cause "severe irritation and corrision of the mouth, stomach and intestines," "muscle and kidney damage" and even death in severe cases, according to "Plants That Poison."

"As a common garden plant the dangers can not be over-emphasized," Tampion wrote about rhubarb leaves.

Eggplant is considered a bit suspicious by some authorities. Part of the reason for this may be guilt by association; eggplant is related to a number of poisonous plants, including nightshade and bull nettles.

Eggplant "has long had a reputation for toxicity," says "Plants That Poison." "However, cases of poisoning have not been documented. For safety, eat only cooked, healthy ripe fruits."

Some other plants that are normally safe but could be hazardous if consumed in abnormally large amounts are onions, spinach, beet tops and Swiss chard. In experiments these have caused illness and death in lab animals.

Mustard and its relatives — including cabbage, kale, brussels sprouts, cauliflower, broccoli, rutabaga, turnips, radishes, cress and horseradish — have been reported to cause illness if eaten raw in extremely large quantities.

PLANTS

— Teach children at an early age to keep unknown plants and plant parts out of their mouths. Make them aware of the potential danger of poisonous plants.

— Teach children to recognize poison ivy or other causes of dermatitis (skin irritation).

— Be certain you know the plants used by children as playthings (seeds, fruits or stems) or as skewers for meat or mushrooms.

— Do not allow children to suck nectar from flowers or make "tea" from leaves.

— Know the plant before eating its fruits or berries.

— Do not rely on pets, birds or squirrels to indicate non-poisonous plants. Just because an animal eats something doesn't mean you can safely try it.

— Avoid smoke from burning plants, unless you know exactly what they are.

— Remember heating and cooling do not always destroy the toxic substances.

— Store bulbs and seeds, even if in packages, safely away from children and pets.

— Do not make homemade medicines from native or cultivated plants.

— Remember there are no safe "tests" or "rules of thumb" for distinguishing edible plants from poisonous plants.

Group helps diabetic youngsters cope

WAYNESBORO, Pa. (AP) — For young people like Chad, Chris and Rodney, finding out they had diabetes seemed like the end of the world.

"I thought I was the only one and I was glad to know that other people my age had it," commented Chad, a member of the recently formed Diabetic Youth Group.

Chad, 12, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard George of South Mountain, was diagnosed a diabetic at a health fair in April. His blood sugar count was more than 400; the normal level is between 70 and 120.

Sponsored by the local adult diabetic association, the Diabetic Youth Group was originated by Wanda Caldwell, patient instructor at the Waynesboro Hospital.

"It was hard to keep the attention of the young people at the adult group meetings and we knew there was a need for a group for the young people so they could discuss their problems," Ms. Caldwell said.

"Their problems are different from those of adults. They have to deal with kids who stare at them when they are snacking (to get sugar) in school and things like that."

The first meeting was held at the home of Chris Williams of Greencastle, who was diagnosed diabetic five years ago.

"The family room of the Williams' home was wall to wall with young people and their parents. About 27 gathered at the first meeting," Ms. Caldwell said.

Chris agrees that it is important to be around other young people who are experiencing the same problems that she is.

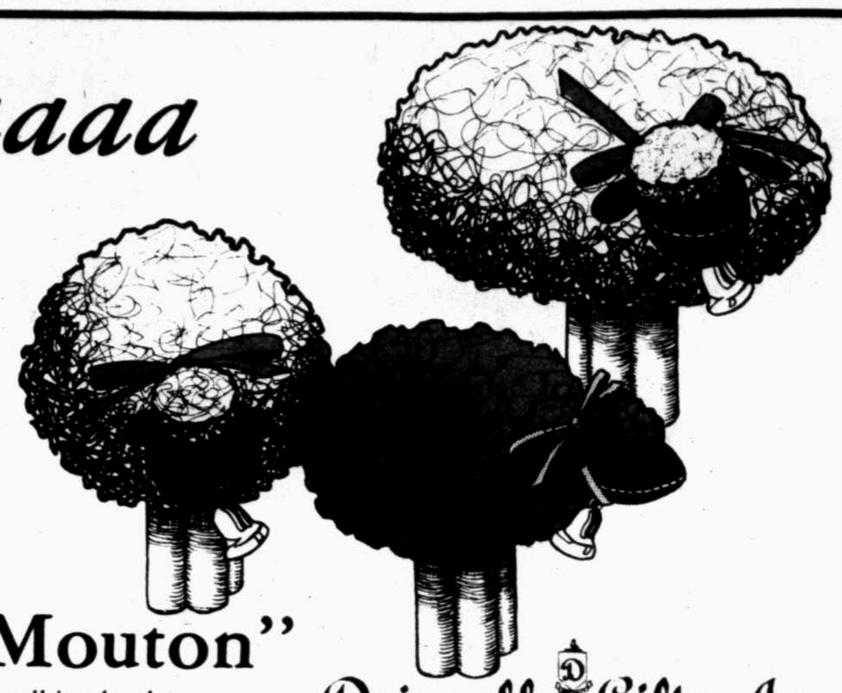

"It is also important to let your non-diabetic friends know about your disease so they can learn to deal with it, too," she said.

Early holiday start makes waiting frustrating

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — A too-long anticipation time can create overstimulation and anxiety for children, warns a family development specialist for Cornell Cooperative Extension, who urges parents not to start Christmas preparations too soon.

"A long anticipation period can be very difficult for children to cope with," says Suzanne West, who is also director of the nursery school in the New York State College of Human Ecology at Cornell University. "Children have a different sense of time. Six weeks to a child can seem like an eternity of waiting."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

After a honeymoon to St. John in the Virgin Islands, Brenda and Jim Shute will return to Dallas to make their home. Their wedding Saturday evening in the First United Methodist Church was followed by a reception at Midland Country Club.

The daughter of Betty and Don Ewan, the bride is a senior associate with Lucas Associates. Parents of the bridegroom are Betty Jo and Sam Shute of Jackson, Miss. He is a product coordinator for Diebold Inc.

Special guests at the wedding were the bride's grandparents, Dorothy (Mrs. J.D.) Ewan of Wichita, Kan., and George W. Scott of Pampa.

To begin the wedding week, the bride, her mother and her sister, Linda Ewan of Houston, invited guests to a "Come Sip and See" party in their home on Monday morning.

Karen (Mrs. Roy) Williamson and their daughter Jana entertained with a bridesmaids' luncheon Friday at the Racquet Club. Following the luncheon, a "Pamper the Bride" party was hosted at The Back Stage by Janet (Mrs. Lee) Foster, Judy (Mrs. Bud) Martin and Susan (Mrs. Paul) Lucas. That evening the groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner at the Petroleum Club.

A wedding day brunch for out-of-town guests was given at the home of Schatzie and Charlie Tighe. Co-hosting were Rachel and Oley Hedrick, Beverly and Forrest Muire, Sue and Ross Roberts, Ava and Joe Warren and Betty Jo Morgan. To conclude the round of parties, the bride's parents are hosting a brunch today at their home for the out-of-town guests.

A potpourri bag luncheon was held at Midland Country Club the Saturday prior to the wedding. Hostesses were Lillie B. (Mrs. Holt) Jowell, Brenda (Mrs. Chris) Brown and Jackie (Mrs. Audra) Cary. The highlight of the luncheon occurred when Brenda was presented a beautiful handmade quilt. It features squares made by close friends to show their special relationship to the bride.

THE CLEVER INVITATIONS to a party given Monday night by Barbara and Steve Chandler in their home were sprinkled liberally with all the old familiar political slogans — from "Walk Softly and Carry a Big Stick" to "There'll Be a Chicken in Every Pot," and ended with the lines, "So Whether You Liked Ike or Went All the Way with LBJ" . . . Join us for a Post Election Political Trivia Party.

Approximately 40 guests enjoyed the fun event, which included a buffet dinner. A trivia quiz posing the question, "What elected official is represented by each item on the menu?", was asked of guests as they stood in the buffet line. Among the more easily identifiable were George Washington, represented by cherry cheesecake, and President Reagan, with California wine.

Party decor featured a red, white and blue color scheme, and campaign posters, political buttons, flags and balloons all helped to create an election year ambience. A conversation piece was the tie, inscribed with the words "Wallace '68," worn by one of the guests.

BALLET MIDLAND'S new artistic director Anthony Ferro and his wife, the former Susan Clark, were honored at a party last Sunday afternoon. Held at the home of Ballet Midland board member Penny Angelo and her husband, Ernest, the party was given to introduce Anthony to the community.

Anthony's mother, Florence Ferro of Berwick, Pa., who left Saturday after a week's visit in the Tall City, was a special guest at the gathering, along with Susan's parents, Midlanders Jo Ann and George Clark.

In addition to his duties with Ballet Midland, Anthony is head of Midland College's dance department. Meanwhile, Susan has a busy schedule commuting to Fort Worth each week. She dances with the Fort Worth City Ballet, teaches at the Southwest Ballet School and works with the public schools under the auspices of the Texas Department of Cultural Arts in an enrichment program, which includes ballet.

TO HONOR Grace (Mrs. Dale) Pryor, a farewell coffee was held Monday morning in the home of Sarilyn (Mrs. Bill) Black. Grace, who is moving to Austin, has been the area representative here for Christian Women's Clubs. Guests included members of the Midland and Odessa clubs, as well as other special friends. She was presented an engraved brass tray from the group.

Co-hostesses for the party were Sherry (Mrs. Jerry) Hewett and Julie (Mrs. Bob) Cole. A collection of porcelain animals on a mirrored surface made a striking centerpiece.

FOR THE THIRD TIME in five years, Amy and Jimmy Hicks are hosting a Youth for Understanding foreign exchange student in their home. And when their middle daughter, Julie Hicks was married recently to Glen Cox, not only was their current student, Maiju Kauppenen of Rauma, Finland, in the wedding party, but also the two previous students, Marianne Roth of Sonderborg, Denmark, and Kari Dahlberg of Tromso, Norway.

All three girls have attended Lee High School: Marianne in 1979-80, Kari in 1982-83 and Maiju, as a senior this year.

Also coming over for the wedding were Marianne's fiance, Mogens Jenson, also from Sonderborg, and Heidi Hanson from Copenhagen, Denmark.

It was like "Old Home Week" for all concerned, with the Hicks' other daughters, Vickie Inman and Sabrina Wright, joining in the joyful occasion. An added plus for the visitors, Lee High's Homecoming took place the following weekend, and they were able to stay over and see many of their old friends.

The Hicks are enthusiastic backers of the YFU program. Ann says, "All three of the girls have been a joy to have and just like family. I wish more people would open their hearts and homes to these YFU students. It is a real experience not only for the students, but also for the host families."

Home-buying tips given

Associated Press

You are not likely to think about engineering when it is time to buy a house. But Dr. Rose Marie Dishman, associate professor of physics and engineering at U. S. International University in San Diego, Calif., thinks much of what engineers know can be utilized by the average house purchaser.

She and three of her engineering associates at the university have some suggestions for people considering buying a home. Dr. Robert Teitel, adjunct engineering professor, says to be aware of your surroundings. Just what does that mean? Says Teitel:

"For example, the afternoon you visit a house may just be a good day. The wind could be blowing just right to keep the smell of a factory upwind from wafting over the house. If there is an industrial site nearby, check whether it has a night shift. Noise pollution can be a factor causing you unhappiness.

"If you walk the boundaries yourself, it may save you heartbreak later on. You may discover your garage is three feet on your neighbor's property or that you don't own that large shade tree the real estate broker said you did. Personally, I once bought a piece of property, paced it off and found it was subdividable, so I sold the extra lot."

From Dr. Scott McElmury, an associate engineering professor, comes the advice to make a careful check of the soil around the house. "The soil may not be compacted correctly or your home may be built in a slide area. Have a soil test made before you buy."

Architecture aglow with neon lights

Copley News Service

Today's dynamic young architects don't talk friezes and moldings when it comes to decoration. They talk "jewelry" — and the most razzle-dazzle form of it right now is architectural neon: miles of glowing ruby rose, midnight blue and mauve purple streaming through shopping centers, creating moods in restaurants, entertainment spots, storefronts and domestic interiors.

Architecture is aglow about neon for several reasons:

Neon highlights the edges, curves and ledges characteristic of today's post-modernist buildings.

Neon's fun, boogie-woogie spirit satisfies a contemporary craving for color and motion already served in the media culture of movies, video and television.

Technologically, neon flows with the age of computer-image graphics.

Neon also is a reaction to the blandness that characterized our built environment for the last several decades and its growing popularity is related to the rediscovery of less abstract visual-art forms such as figurative painting.

THERE'S AN element of nostalgia, too — part of today's continuing fascination with art deco, the juicy swirls and geometric shapes of the '30s. It is glitzy, magic and glamorous — architecture's equivalent of sapphires, rubies and sequins.

Artist Larry Rivers explained the fascination best: "Neon has gaiety, joy, pageantry. Circus qualities. The canvas is the night. Neon is the simplest and strongest form of illustration."

"Let there be neon," declared Rudi Stern in his recent book of that title. And, indeed, why not?

The new neon is trendy, scintillating, playful, art-imbued and marked by a certain non-sophistication. It deals most often with light means of sculpturally dramatizing a building or place rather than communicating identity.

Essential elements of the new neon explosion are the emergence of a group of artists who work in that medium and the willingness of architects to use their skills and talents.

Until recently limited mainly to neon exhibitions in museums and galleries, artists now are getting commercial commissions for pieces on and in public and private buildings faster than they can get tubing bent.

"I DON'T believe the explosion that has happened, particularly in terms of the commercial situation," says Eric Zimmerman, a Los Angeles artist who creates computer-programmed, mirror-boxed neons and light environments for anything from Beverly Hills mansions at $50,000 a job to small, neighborhood police stations in which the city of Los Angeles wants to create a more pleasant mood.

Zimmerman uses a computer for the design of animated neon images. He sees virtually limitless future potential for neon in architecture and the built environment.

"People want to walk into something that has some excitement," he says. "They're tired of all this bland, plastic look."

One of the first American architects to seriously examine neon as architectural jewelry was post-modernist Charles Moore, who employed a sensuous rainbow of neon to highlight his Piazza d'Italia, built in New Orleans in the late 1970s. After that, architecture slowly warmed to neon.

"WE MAY only be at the start of what's really going to happen with neon because I think the stuff in the future will really get crazy," says Kevin Immel, a designer.

"You look at the buildings around now and the neon follows the line of the architecture. But in the future I think some really outstanding architect will do something totally out of line to celebrate neon for the sake of neon. Somebody just might be able to talk a firm or corporation into doing something really wonderful like that."

Others have neon dreams for tomorrow, but many architectural uses of neon are already reality or, at least, in aHvanced design stages. The University of California at San Diego's Stuart Collection, a foundation established to further the placement of public art on campus, has commissioned Bruce Nauman, foremost among the country's expanding group of neon artists, to provide a 4-foot-high rim of bright neon lettering spelling out the seven vices and seven virtues (faith, lust, etc.) in continuous motion around the Mandeville Weiss theater.

NAUMAN, AIREADY known for a neon-letter piece on the exterior of the Baltimore Museum of Art proclaiming "Violins Violence Silence," visited the campus last year and proposed the piece for the theater, says Stuart Collection coordinator Mary Beebe.

Already glowing is the new Bagley Repertory Theater in Seattle, where a 50-foot-long neon tiara spans the entire front. The abstract design is by Stepen Antonakos, whose many similar commissions around the country are further testimony that neon is a sign of the time.

"Neon has become very popular," says Antonakos, "but how long it will last I don't know. I do know that people are taking neon art seriously, that the public is accepting it, and that there are more and more people around the country who are asking people like myself to do work for them."

House plans fit different lifestyles

Associated Press

While a two-story structure gives you the most house for your money, the ranch or one-story dwelling continues to be the best seller. Why?

For one thing, the ranch is conducive to a pleasant exterior and most closely resembles what we used to dream of as a nice place to live. It affords a low, ground-hugging form easily adaptable to unusual design. There is more opportunity to create a relationship between the indoors and the outdoors. There is no stair-climbing. Sound control is fairly easy. So is maintenance. Access to the outside is easy in case of fire. And the resale value holds up over the years.

Sounds ideal, doesn't it? Not for everybody. A ranch requires more land. Also, more foundation, more roofing and more insulation. That means it costs more per square foot of living area than most other types of house. Which, in turn, means there is more space to be heated and cooled. While there is less or no stair-climbing, there is usually a lot more horizontal walking. And some people do not like bedrooms on the first floor.

All of which points up the fact that there are advantages and disadvantages to any style of house. It thus becomes a matter of which advantages and disadvantages are likely to affect us the most. When anyone asks which kind of house is best, no answer can be given until the questioner is asked a lot of questions and has given the answers.

If the house is to be built to order, how large is the lot and where is it located? How many persons are in the family and what are their ages? Can they all handle stairs? Will most of the maintenance work be done by someone in the family or by an outsider? Does anybody have any idiosyncrasies or hangups? And on and on.

When you buy an existing house — that is, one in which another family has lived — the same questions must be asked and answered. The difference in this case, however, is that everything is already there and, barring extensive remodeling, cannot be changed. Compromises must be made. The kitchen is ideal, but the living room isn't large enough. You would prefer that all the bedrooms be regular-sized, but one of them is in the attic and is rather small. You hoped the house would have a basement, but this one is built on a concrete slab. And one of the bathrooms isn't where you would prefer it.

In a two-story house, the perimeter that surrounds the space can be smaller than it would be in a ranch or split level with the same amount of interior square footage. The lot size, therefore, can be smaller, and so can the foundation and the roof. Heating and air conditioning would require shorter ducts.

Tree name 'fir-fetched'

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (AP) — The Douglas Fir, a tall evergreen common to the Western United States, actually isn't a fir tree at all.

According to Georgia-Pacific Corp., a forest products company, the tree was named for David Douglas, a Scotch explorer who studied the species in 1825 and determined it was not a true fir, but was actually a member of the pine family.

There still seems to be disagreement about just what kind of tree the Douglas fir is. In other parts of the country, the tree is called Douglas spruce and Douglas yew, and it was once known as false hemlock.

Chocolate, ale competed in England

So popular in England in the 1700s was a chocolate-flavored drink that owners of ale houses strove to restrict its manufacture.

MELLOW CHINTZ

The Cozy English country look in rooms filled with charming chintzes mixed with delicate porcelains, is very much a part of today's informal style of decorating. In the mid-19th century, England developed glazed finished for printed cotton fabrics. The resulting chintzes won immediate popularity because they resisted dirt so effectively. Today, chintzes are popular for the same practical reason and also because they come in such a vast array of colors and patterns. Rooms, such as the living room, that are dressed up in chintzes are charming expressions of comfort and livability. Chintzes are graceful and become even more mellow and supple after several washings or drycleanings.

Comfort and livability in a home are important. Our staff can help you achieve this by guiding you in the selection of wall, window and floor decor. Stop by and see us at WINDOW DECOR, 30 W. industrial Loop or call 685-0875. There are all types of fabric samples available for your selection and we'll work within your budget. Fall pruning can be tricky

Hearst News Service

Forsythia is lovely in the spring, yet come autumn the branches have grown long and seem to be a magnet for fallen leaves.

Pruning away those nasty branches seems the thing to do, but don't do it — no matter how many leaves are trapped. Fall pruning of spring-flowering shrubs is a mistake because next spring's flower buds already have formed on the branches most likely to be pruned — the quick-growing, vigorous ones. Removing the branches now removes the flower show mext April.

Forsythia is just one such shrub. Lilac is another, as is the flowering almond. The key is spring-flowering. These should not be pruned now.

Few garden plants benefit from pruning now. Evergreens such as yews and junipers will withstand a bit of cosmetic pruning, but heavy-duty pruning is not in order. It is a good idea to prune away any branches that may cascade over walkways or driveways when covered with heavy snow.

Some deciduous trees can be pruned after they have lost their leaves and gone dormant. White birch and European white birch are best pruned now, but care must be taken to make the cut very close to the trunk and as cleanly as possible. Doing so helps the wound heal swiftly.

The birch family is best pruned in the autumn since cuts made in the spring and summer will bleed sap profusely. Other candidates for fall dormant pruning include mountain ash, basswood, linden, littleleaf linden, red, pin scarlet and spanish oak, weeping willow and black gum and sour gum.

Fall pruning has its advantages for the gardener. Irregular growth is easy to see with the leaves fallen and there are not many other heavy maintenance chores to do in the garden. Sharp tools are essential if the wound is to be clean and quick-healing. In fall, pruning tools are usually in their worst cutting shape. Consider replacing the bow saw and getting the chain saw sharpened. The work will go quicker and the job will be neater.

Some flowering garden plants, such as the tree peony and rose, should not be pruned now. The tree peony is unlike the common, hardy herbaceous peony in that in it grows from "old wood." THe common peony's stems and leaves die each year and must be removed. The tree peony is really a shrub and should require only cosmetic pruning in late spring.

Pruning back roses now is not a good idea. Many gardeners make the mistake of doing so, thinking it will be easier to fit the canes under rose cones for winter protection.

Good 'housekeeping' important outdoors too

Hearst News Service

While it's a real job keeping the garden and lawn tidy at this time of year, good houskeeping outdoors is important to get rid of bugs and disease that otherwise would hang around all winter.

Harmful insects and disease would like nothing better than to winter over in a rotting apple, a clump of dormant perennials or frost-killed annuals. The gardener can prevent a lot of spring problems by getting rid of old plant materials.

Fallen apples are a nuisance because they're slippery to walk over and messy when chopped up by a lawn mower. They are an important element in the life cycle of the apple maggot, a nasty, common bug whether in one tree in the backyard or a thousand in a commercial orchard. They leave the skin pockmarked and the flesh brown-streaked and unappealing.

By the time an infested apple falls — it usually does so before it's ripe — the damage to that year's crop has been done. Next year's problem begins when the immature bug crawls out of the apple and digs into the soil, where it winters over. Come next June, the insect will be a fly; after a few weeks of feeding like a house fly, it return to that year's maturing apple crop and lays eggs. And the cycle begins again.

Chemical controls next year will help, but a better way is to get rid of the fallen fruit. This should be done frequently since the immature maggot typically crawls out within a week of the fruit falling to the ground.

Cool, damp autumn nights take their toll on roses, disfiguring the leaves with a white, powdery mildew or an irregular dark spot called black spot. Leaves infected with either cannot be saved; once the disease is apparent, it is too late to do anything about the leaf.

Gardeners should remove any diseased leaves. Often, these leaves will be at the base of the plant where moisture is high and air movement low. It's the base that needs winter protection (not before mid-November), and if the gardener buries diseased leaves while covering the plant, the spores will winter over and severely damage next spring's foliage.

Even the tough herbaceous peony is susceptible to disease while wintering over on old foliate. The withered foliage should be removed just below the surface of the soil. Clip it off cleanly. Don't yank or pull the old stem, or the critical depth of the root may be changed or the root torn. Tree peonies (really a bush) should not be pruned since their woody branches live through the winter. Tree peonies are not commonly grown. If you aren't sure and the peony you have has withered away, it is a herbaceous peony.

Remove withered foliage from other perennials in the same fashion. Cut it off cleanly; don't pull it out. Annuals can be yanked out of the soil and are easier to remove before repeated frosts turn the stem mushy. Any seed pods left by annuals such as marigolds, salvias and zinnias are not worth saving now because fall rains and high humidity have zapped the seeds' vitality.

Some perennial plants should be carefully removed from the garden and stored inside. These include tuberous-rooted begonias and caladiums. Frost quickly nips their foliage, but does not harm the root. Gently dig the root and rinse with tap water. Dry it in a cool and airy spot for a few days and then store loosely in a plastic tub filled with perlite, vermiculite or dry peat moss. Keep the tub in a cool (45 to 55) dry room away from light.

There are a few maintenance chores that should not be done now. Don't prune trees like oak, maple, ash, locust and others that are dropping leaves. They are not yet dormant.

November best month for lawn care 'trick-or-treat'

Hearst News Service

There's a bit of trick and treating the gardner can pull on his lawn during the month following Halloween. The trick is ripping up sod for a new garden next year. The treat is carefully feeding the grass for better, more even growth next spring.

An application now of a fertilizer high in nitrogen does a few healthy things. First, it gives grass roots reason to grow on through December. Grass blades aren't growing much now, but the roots are. A stronger root system makes the grass plant better able to cope with 1985 trauma — be it repeated games of volleyball, drought, insects, disease or neglect.

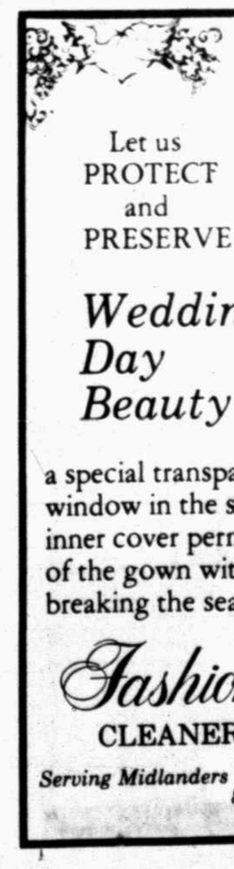

Another benefit of fall feeding is uniform greening in the spring. This means mowing will be reduced. What makes lawn care so tiring then are the endless hours spent behind the lawn mower. The homeowner often causes this by applying a fast-acting fertilizer in April. Frequent spring rains take the food to the roots and they oblige by sending up growth pell-mell. The result is a lovely, lush yard that needs mowing twice a week.

To do any good, the fall feeding should be applied when top growth has stopped and before a heavy rain is expected. A wash-out puts too much nitrogen too quickly back into the natural water supply system.

How much nitrogen depends on soil type. Shawn McBurney, a turfgrass specialist at Michigan State University, recommends using one pound of actual nitrogen for each 1,000 square feet of lawn. That's for regular soils. For sandy soils, the rate should be about three-quarters pound for each 1,000 square feet.

Researchers at the turfgrass center at Michigan State have found that a nitrogen fertilizer program with an application now will reduce the chance of a bout with fusarium blight. Nitrogen applied to lawns in April and May — when many, many homeowners fertilize — increases chance of the disease.

Fall nitrogen feeding is worthwhile if for no other reason than lessening the chance of fusarium blight.

Giant kangaroo grows by leaps, bounds

By ELVIN McDONALD

One of the most eye-catching vines I see in store windows, botanical gardens and outdoors in warm climates is Tetrastigma Voinieranum, a relative of both kangaroo vine (Cissus antarctica) and grape-ivy (C. rhombifolia). Tetrastigma is much larger and fleshier, yet its family ties such as wiry, coiled tendrils and wavy toothed leaf margins are obvious.

Tetrastigma is also called chestnut vine; it hails from Indochina. Robust, brown-hairy branches support digitate leaves, shiny and green above, pale and soft-fuzzy below. These contain three to five leaflets and may well spread to 12 inches across.

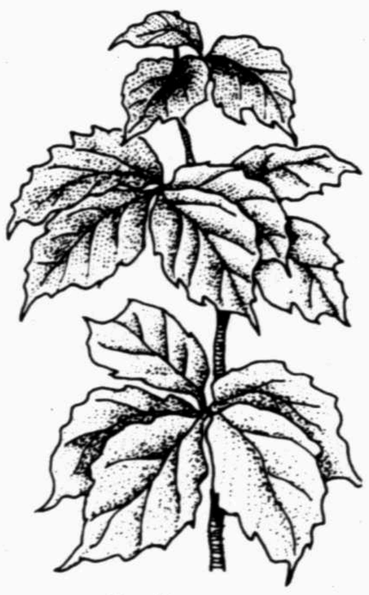

Because tetrastigma is imposing, it is effective indoors treated as a solitary specimen in a big space, or combined with a large painting or sculpture. It needs filtered sun, bleaches or burns in too much, thins out and weakens in poor light.

Another cissus relative for indoor gardens is Rhoicissus capensis, or evergreen grapevine. This one is smaller than tetrastigma but not exactly unassuming either. It will readily form a hanging basket several feet in diameter, or will make quite a show set on a pedestal. As the common name implies, the resemblance to a true grapevine is strong.

If there is a secret to growing any of these related plants well indoors, I suspect it is cool nights and warm but not hot days. Maintain the growing medium between evenly moist and slightly on the dry side; avoid extremes.

Because grape-ivy and kangaroo vine are exceptionally durable, even in low light and polluted air, they are often the victims of benign neglect. If you have one, pick the dead leaves, cut off leafless branches, and give the remaining healthy growth a shower of lukewarm water.

Grape-ivy, kangaroo vine and any other plants growing in hanging baskets may suffer unusual stress when the air around is heated artificially. Often they are hung in a window directly over the heating unit. In this situation it helps if the growing medium is never allowed to be dry; also, the hotter the air, the quicker the soil will need water.

Giant kangaroo

A larger selection of these and other house plants related to the true vine, the grape, is available from Glasshouse Works, Box 97, Stewart, Ohio 45778-0097 (catalog $1.50).

Quick Take: "The World Guide to House Plants," edited by Anthony Huxley, is a superb new book for indoor gardeners. Created in England and printed in Belgium, it is published in America by Charles Scribner's Sons (597 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017; $19.95). "World" is important here, for all the plants are presented according to where they occur in nature, with pertinent facts about geography and the weather.

Q.T.: As fall moves toward winter, be careful of too much water and fertilizer on indoor plants. An episcia, for example, that is soaking wet at the roots, may not survive chilling, while one next to it that is quite dry will show hardly any stress.

Q.T.: When you move plants from outside to indoors, it is natural to lose leaves and flowers. Don't fertilize. Go easy on watering. Promptly remove dying parts; this helps light and air reach healthy growth.

Late motherhood may be lasting trend

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Late motherhood — the tendency of many women to delay childbearing until their late 20s or early 30s — could be a "stable feature of the population scene" for years to come, according to a study recently released by the Population Reference Bureau.

Over the past decade and more, say authors Wendy Baldwin and Christine Winquist Nord, there has been a remarkable change in childbearing patterns among American women compared with those of the baby-boom generation, when women tended to marry young and quickly have lots of children.

Today, women are marrying later: only about half get married by age 24, compared with three-quarters a generation ago. And they are waiting much longer to have children. In 1970, 19 percent of first births were to women 25 or older; by 1982 it was 36 percent. The median age of women giving birth for the first time rose from 21.8 years in 1960 to 23.2 in 1982.

The authors believe the increase in delayed childbearing is rooted in major social changes and could turn out to be a long-term phenomenon.

Among the reasons for the increase are the massive entry of women into the labor force in the past generation; increased education for women, which gives them more job opportunities; the availability of contraceptives, and the recent economic pinch.

More women work, even after their first child is born, and they go back to work sooner after giving birth: in 1950, 12 percent of married women with children under 6 were in the labor force; today, it is 52 percent.

Since many of these social conditions are expected to continue, the authors believe that the tendency toward late childbearing could remain a long-term feature of American life. The authors note that this would be a return to the patterns of the 1930s, which were reversed in the post-World War II era when people started marrying earlier and having children earlier.

Reviewing statistics on health problems associated with delayed childbearing, the authors noted that, according to various studies, infertility rates are higher for older women (6 percent for the 20-24 age group, 9 percent from 25-29, 15 percent from 30-34, 30 percent from 35-39, and 64 percent from 40-44), that difficulties in delivery do not seem to be a major problem for women under 35, and that birth defects (many not serious) are 1 in 1,000 births for women under 35, 3 in 1,000 for women 35 to 39 and 16 per 1,000 for those 40-44.

They said new scientific discoveries may reduce the odds of problems with delayed childbirth. Baldwin added in an interview that since most women do not delay past 35, and since the odds avoiding health problems are pretty good until 35 or even 40, most women would probably not encounter difficulties.

Baldwin said there is no indication of a new baby boom or massive upsurge in births. The total fertility rate (the number of births for women aged 15 to 44) reached 3.7 in 1957, but then dropped; it has been at 1.8 for several years. Similarly, total actual births reached 4.3 million in 1957, then dropped to 3.2 million in the mid-1970s and seems to have leveled at about 3.6 million.

Lauren, Vittadini unveil spring collections

NEW YORK (AP) — In the old-fashioned wallpaper prints and pale linens of Ralph Lauren or the new-wave knits in fiesta solids by Adrienne Vittadini, spring 1985 offers something for everyone.

There's nothing new about Lauren's spring trench coat except that it's in ivory silk charmeuse — that shiny, satiny fabric that begs to be touched.

In the new collection unveiled recently at his Seventh Avenue showroom, Lauren used ivory charmeuse in trousers, sarong, pleated and dirndl skirts, camp shirts and walking shorts. But the dressy charmeuse looked odd when paired with plain white cotton lisle T-shirts or oatmeal cable-knit linen sweaters.

Lauren's clothes are more wearable when using cotton floral prints that look like grandma's dining room wallpaper.

A backless halter dress, with mid-calf circle skirt and cross front panels that tied behind the neck was especially flattering. In addition to the flower prints, the halter dress was shown in plain white cotton.

Antique rose, peach and green florals were shown with linen tweed jackets, white trousers or dirndls and madras scarves. The subtlety of the colors allowed Lauren to get away with the mix of tweed, flowers and plaid in one outfit.

Pearls, antique brooches, anklets, flat sandals and wide-brimmed straw hats pulled low on the forehead complemented his casual, but opulent, approach. His best single accessory was a two-inch wide crocodile belt that dressed up white on white tops and trousers.

Lauren also showed several versions of the ubiquitous big white shirt; one with a standard collar, another with a stand-up, single-button collar. But the best came equipped with tails that wrapped and tied at the hip.

One look paired short suede dirndl skirts in heather pink or light aqua with big white shirts and handknit crew sweaters in opposite colors.

Lauren's muted suede minis were his only concession to the Short Age in an otherwise classic collection.

Ms. Vittadini, winner of this year's Coty Award, was more enamored with dare-to-be-bare looks for spring, offering several rib-tickling and torso-hugging tops.

Fiesta colors in mixed solids and hot florals dominated her collection also shown Wednesday.

Hot pink mini skirts peeking out from big, orange cotton ribbed sweaters drew applause from the audience that packed RCA's recording studio for the runway showing.

The big tops also were shown with straight, mid-calf skirts in electrifying combinations of yellow, chartreuse, turquoise, orange and hot pink. Big bangles and disc earrings accented the mod look.

Ms. Vittadini showed two abbreviated cotton knit tops in the same five colors: a rib-tickler tank with exaggerated cut-in shoulders and a boatneck sweater with three-quarter sleeves that stopped short of the navel.

For a more sophisticated look, Ms. Vittadini offered a grouping of navy and maroon knit sweaters and vests paired with white silk safari shorts and pants.

Black and white, a perennial favorite for spring, were shown in print cardigans over a bandeau top with cotton jersey crop pants. The same print was used in a knit tank dress with cut-in shoulders.

Another grouping featured a hot pink, purple and green floral printed on bright yellow cotton jersey. Separates included a bustier with a button-up closure, a full swingy skirt and cropped pants. For mix and match, there was a smaller floral in the same colors and several cable knit sweaters in solids.

The print was too bright and too busy for some tastes. However, when the flower was blown up on big white sweaters, it was a knockout.

This beige three-piece wool suit, designed by Sterling Capricio and featuring new longer coat, rounded-off shoulders and snake skin piping, is an example of the fashions to be seen at "Sepia Fashion Revue," sponsored by Orgena's Club Inc. The show will feature the Vogue-Esquire models from Chicago. Tickets are $10 each and may be purchased by calling Mrs. Pat Traylor at 683-6155. Proceeds will be used to give scholarships to 1985 graduates of Midland High School and Lee High School.

Sequins shown on summer styles

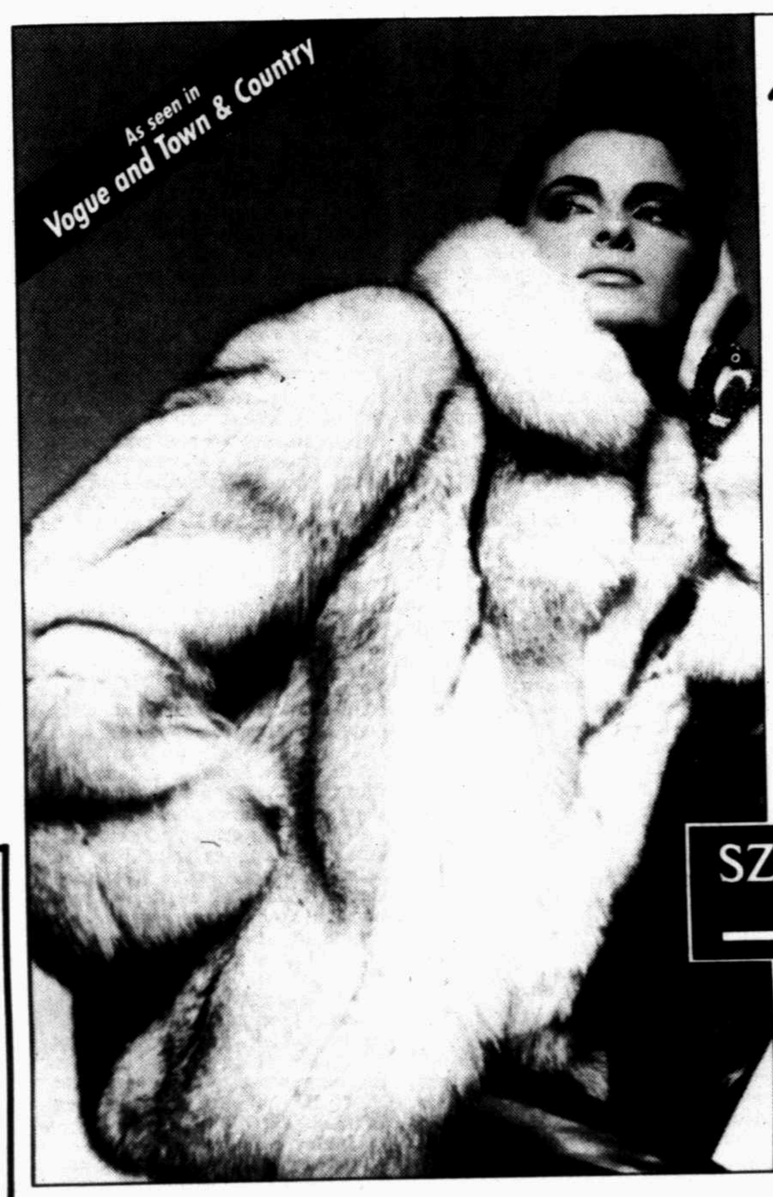

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Sequins for summer? The answer is a resounding yes. Just as linen and satin have slipped into the category of year-round materials, so sequins and beads are as likely to turn up in warm-weather collections as they are in clothes destined for midwinter festivities.

The colors may be a little lighter and the fabrics thinner, but these are nuances. Though meant to be worn in warm weather, a great many sequin-embroidered and beaded fashions shown in the spring collections in New York in the past two weeks are appropriate for most places and most climates.

Possible exceptions are the beaded tops and white linen shorts presented by Bill Blass, which are best where the weather is mild and the occasion somewhat informal. Still, there is no law against wearing the same tops with long pants or a long skirt, black or white, depending on the place and time.

Blass also showed crepe dresses with big, shimmering flowers appliqued at the front.

Parents should discuss sex

By DR. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Being a teen-ager. It's the most carefree of times. But it's also a time full of self-doubt and self-consciousness. From the many letters I receive from this column, as well as from my work on radio and television, the main question teens seem most preoccupied with is: Do I fit in with the crowd? As a result, they fall prey to peer pressure, especially about sex.

Parents of teens also want reassurance that their child is like the others. But when it comes to sex, they feel differently.

October was National Family Sex Education Month. The goal: to encourage parents and children to communicate about sexuality. Statistics show that only about two out of 10 families do that.

Yet the need for more education and family communication is clear. Nearly one out of two teen-agers under the age of 18 has tried intercourse. And 30,000 young people under the age of 13 get pregnant every year in this country.

THE MAJOR ISSUE that parents and teens must talk about: It's okay to say no way to sex.

With younger children, parents can be directive teachers. But teens are at a stage in life where they are stuggling to be independent. They often keep secrets from parents and become closer to friends. They rebel, to prove they have control over their own life.

Thus parents face a special challenge. Yes, they must set rules. But they also have to be flexible. Respect the teen's need to decide for him/her self. Discuss values and issues so the teen knows where you stand, and is guided, rather than browbeaten, into realizing the wisest course of action.

This conversation I had with Michelle, a teen-ager, is typical of many I have with teens.

Michelle: "I'm going out with a boy a few years older than me and I'm crazy about him. He takes me places and buys me presents and he's so cute. All the girls in school say so. He's everything I dream about. But now he says it's time we went further than, you know, making out. I'm not sure I should do that."

"Good for you, Michelle," I tell her, "for questioning whether you're ready to go further now. Having sex when you're not ready can make you feel worse than losing him. You and your boyfriend can have different feelings about having sex.

"And the most important lesson you can learn growing up is: You don't have to give in — to the boys or to your friends. What they do doesn't make them better, or worse, than you. You can stick to your own decision. What are you afraid will happen if you disagree with him?"

"He'll break up with me. I don't want that. But he says we've been going out for two months already."

"What do you say?" I ask her. Rather than panicking and telling teens what they should do, asking them what they actually do, and how they feel, helps them to learn about themselves and eventually to trust themselves — and you. You earn that trust more as a guide than as a dictator.

"I tell him we're not old enough," Michelle answered. "Then he says all his friends have done it. When I don't do it he doesn't call me for a week — like a punishment. But I like him so much. I'll do anything to keep him."

"I'm glad you feel you want to wait until you're older. I agree with that. But it hurts me to hear you say that you'll do anything to keep him. You're worth more. You don't have to give in to keep him. You have a lot going for you. He should earn your love by treating you with respect. If a person loves you, wouldn't he respect your feelings?"

MANY WOMEN will recognize here the roots of problems that linger into adulthood: feeling desperate to have a man. Doing anything to keep him even sexually. Feeling wiped out unless he wants you.

Thankfully, the trend I see now is that more women are willing to say, 'If I'm not treated well, something's amiss with him, not with me. I don't have to settle for crumbs. I am fine on my own until someone comes along who truly loves and respects me and therefore deserves my devotion.'

The time to first put that attitude in action is when you start dating. Youngsters will copy their parents. So if a mother, separated from a partner, says, "He left me, now I'm nothing," her daughter may copy that.

Michelle needs to know that having a boyfriend enhances her life but does not determine her value.

I told her that I know she must feel proud in front of her friends for attracting such a desirable boy. But she doesn't have to impress people with boyfriends. She is enough herself. People will like her for herself.

Once we explored her attitudes, the next step was to work out options for what to do.

One suggestion: Be honest with your boyfriend. Say, "I care about you but if this relationship is good, we make decisions together, not one-sided ones. Otherwise I can't continue to see you."

That turns the tables. She's no longer a victim. She's the one who says she is not pleased with the way things are and can withdraw. It's her choice too. She points out that a good relationship is one with mutual respect.

OTHER OPTIONS: You can say something direct like, "I've decided to wait." If he says, "You would if you loved me," you respond, "You wouldn't if you loved me."

Or she doesn't have to give any explanation at all.

I encouraged Michelle to talk with her parents. They may have gone through similar conflicts and may be more understanding than she expects.

For family talks about sexuality to be more effective, here are some tips for parents:

— Be aware of your own childhood experience and how they influence what you say and do. If you grew up in a home where sex was hardly discussed, it may be difficult for you to be open with your children.

If you feared you were "promiscuous," on the other hand, you may be extra cautious, suspicious or angry about your child's behavior. Complete these sentences: When I was a teenager, sex was ——. My mother taught me that sex ——. My father said that sex ——.

— Talk with your teens about your own growing up. Let them know what you value. Ask them about their own values.

— Discuss how the best time, in your estimation, to have sex is when you're older (e.g. at least 18) and in love. Talk about the reasons people have sex that may have nothing to do with being in love — like trying to be popular, or less lonely. Or proving you're a man or a woman.

Explain that sometimes people have physical sex when they're really afraid to be emotionally intimate. If they want to prove they're independent, they can do that in other ways.

Reassure your teens that finding out and appreciating who they are will make them less vulnerable to flattery and pressure into doing what others want.

— Convey that you trust and believe in your children and care about how they feel about themselves and their relationship.

— Notice how your own sexual attitudes and experiences now as an adult may influence the way you view your children's behavior.

— Sex is a serious subject. But a sense of humor is helpful in your talks with your teens. Remember the joke about the mother who told her daughter, "In my day we had a very effective oral contraceptive, but it wasn't a pill. It was saying 'no'."

— You can start discussions about sexuality by watching a movie or TV show together, or reading this column as a jumping-off point. Booklets also help: write to Planned Parenthood, 810 Seventh Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10019.

The Mattress:
A Somma Controlled Flotation System

It's called Controlled Flotation Sleep. And it's quickly replacing the innerspring mattress.
A Somma Controlled Flotation System has made sleeping on water completely respectable and acceptable. A Somma looks like a conventional mattress. It's lightweight and easy to move. It requires no troublesome heater. It comes in conventional mattress sizes. It uses standard bedding. It sits on a standard, heavy duty, bed frame. And the comfort level is unequalled by any other form of mattress available today.
A Somma's unique, patented, design of individual water filled cylinders nearly assures a leak proof bed while completely eliminating wave motion. By filling the individual cylinders to an appropriate level one side of the bed can be firmer than the other. The quilted top, with two inches of insulation, provides a luxurious sleeping surface. Your body is supported without any "hard" spots; a wonderful, relaxed, tension-free sleep is easily achieved.
Don't just look at a Somma Controlled Flotation System, lie down on one. You'll discover it's just like a bed, only better.

Exercise during winter not problem

Dear Dr. Solomon: With jogging and swimming and a hundred other things to do during the spring and summer, it's no big deal keeping in shape when the temperature is well up there. But how do you keep in shape during the fall and winter months? — Bo, Wheaton, Md.

Dear Bo: Unless you're a polar bear, swimming during the fall and winter months would have to be confined to an indoor pool. But running outdoors should not pose a problem as long as you dress properly. This means wearing several layers of clothing, mittens, and a hat. On particularly cold days, a ski mask will protect the ears, face and nose.

If, despite these precautions, running outdoors still does not appeal to you, try running in place within the comfort of your home. You might also want to look into the possibility of purchasing a mini-trampoline.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am in my fifties and I am taking both estrogen and a calcium supplement as protection against osteoporosis. I would like to know if there is any other kind of medicine or supplement I might take that would provide me with additional protection. — Mrs. W.C., Salem, Ore.

Dear Mrs. C.: Researchers from the University of Florida in Gainesville suggest that the use of diuretics may be helpful in the treatment of osteoporosis. Their conclusion is based on a finding that although women who were taking diuretics were found to faint and black out more often than did other women, their incidence of fractures was decreased. Ordinarily, one would expect that fainting and blacking out would be associated with an increased incidence of fractures.

If these findings are substantiated, the use of diuretics may provide more effective treatment for the millions of Americans who have osteoporosis.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What do you think of the idea of a teenager who wants to go in for weight-lifting? Any recommendations? — Frank, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Dear Frank: I would urge caution for any youngster who is thinking of taking up weight-lifting. Although I advocate exercise for everyone, some exercise is appropriate and some is not. Weight-lifting in a teenager whose bones are immature can do more harm than good, including the possibility of injury to the back, knees, shoulders and elbows.

Dr. Alan Fiegelman, of the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., recommends that weight-lifting not be attempted before puberty. Adolescents should begin by using light weights rather than heavy weights, increasing the number of repetitions. In addition, a warm-up period is as important in this as in any other forms of exercise because it increases the circulation of the blood and prepares the muscles.

For Ronnie, St. Paul, Minn.: There is no treatment for Alzheimer's disease; however, some of the symptoms associated with the disease may be alleviated by treatment.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write to Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. He will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column..

Computer package can provide medical advice

Hearst News Service

You or a family member aren't feeling well, so you sit down to answer some questions designed to diagnose your problem. A few simple "yes" and "no" answers later, you are given advice on what to do next from your home computer, using a new program called "An Apple a Day."

While computers are being touted as a quick and efficient tool in many areas, will they ever replace a caring, trained professional? Dr. Charles Eaton, a family practitioner and professor at Albany, N.Y. Medical College, says no, but he does have praise for "An Apple a Day."

"Overall, considering what they tried to do, they have done an excellent job," he said, after spending an hour with the program.

"An Apple a Day" is the first release by Avant Garde in its new series, "To Your Health," the firm's efforts to capitalize on the growing attention to health and preventive medicine.

The package come in three sections. The first section, and the one that will attract most people, is Health Advice. In it, the user is faced with a list of 46 health problems, from acne to venereal disease.

Selecting a category that seems to fit the problem, such as bee sting, the user is asked a question that requires a "yes" or "no" answer. Depending on the answer, the program branches off to other questions or a printout of advice. Often, the advice is to see a doctor or go to the hospital emergency room.

Eaton's first selection was "back pain" because, he said, "it can be a potentially serious problem, but it is also a common problem." As he scrolled through other categories, Eaton picked up on some areas he said he believed were misleading or wrong, such as one on viral infection that, after advising seeing a doctor, also noted the physician might prescribe an antibiotic.

"Antibiotics don't affect viruses," he said, "and 70 percent of infections are viral."

'Fish farm' can supply nutrition

MELBOURNE, Fla. (AP) — A backyard "fish farm" can supply low cost, high-nutrition food for as little as 50 cents a pound, says a university teacher who teaches a course in raising fish.

The only requirements are a supply of fingerlings, or baby fish and a wading pool 12 feet in diameter and 3 feet deep. A pool that size holds enough water to raise 100 pounds of fish.

Aim to eradicate lupus in 50 years

ATLANTA (AP) — Experts predict lupus will be eradicated within the next 50 years, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

Lupus, which afflicts 500,000 Americans, is an inflammatory disorder of the connective tissue. It damages the structure and function of vital organs such as the kidneys, heart and brain.

Ambition a la Alger not dirty word

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

When we were in high school, we all read Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar" and were marked forever more. We learned that Caesar was an ambitious man. And that term, ambitious, used so pejoratively and repetitiously, made ambition a dirty word.

Even if we skipped "Julius Caesar," we still got the message and confused ambition with greed. We know that greed is a sin, but what is ambition about? Is it sinful to want to use our talents well and achieve whatever we can? Obviously not, but how come so many of us won't own up to our own desires? Furthermore, we delude ourselves by assuming that those who do achieve and are recognized for it, do so despite themselves.

We put our faith in magic: Stay in your place. Your fairy godmother's wand will transform you. But don't dare even dream for yourself. In fact, don't dream at all. You will be taken care of.

Imagine such a population of passivists in this, the land of opportunity, the heritage of Horatio Alger. I asked some friends at a party recently if they knew about Horatio Alger, our patron saint of success. No one had read any of his novels: "Risen from the Ranks," "Try and Trust," "Strong and Steady." And no one knew anything about him. They didn't even know if he was a character in a book or the author. In fact, he was both.

Born a century and a half ago, Alger was an honor student at Harvard, an editor, a poet, a minister, a foreign correspondent, an adventurer to all points of the compass, and the writer of truly American tales, rags-to-riches stories that inspire his readers.

His unique books became big business themselves as they were read, swapped, given as door prizes and intoned as sermons during the time span from the Civil War to the Depression.

They even became a part of our language. You can look up "Horatio Alger" in the dictionary and find him used as an adjective: "of, or relating to, or resembling the works of Horatio Alger in which success is achieved through self-reliance and hard work..."

But the dictionary leaves out the real Horatio Alger. He had a dream. He took lots of chances. And he persisted. In short, he was ambitious. And he wrote about what he found.

It is time for us to rediscover our ambitions and own up to them. All achievers do. Ever since 1947 when the Horatio Alger Association was formed, successful people who started with nothing but their own ambition have been recognized and their stories told to inspire others.

The association is dedicated to recognizing successful people who love working, make time to contribute to their community, even their country, and serve as role models. Speakers representing the Horatio Alger Association go out to embolden high school students to succeed.

But their stories work as well on us whether or not we are in the "rags" down-one position. Poverty, after all, is also a state of mind. Feeling alienated, not connected, without hope or goals is not so different from being without money.

Maybe our assignment tonight, no matter our age, is to start reading the biographies of great people not only for what they did but how they involved people around them in their dream. No one makes it alone, we find.

Maybe we should even re-read "Julius Caesar" with different eyes. In doing that we will get to call up our ambition and discover what form it takes.

Dr. Scheele is the author of "Making College Pay Off" and "Skills for Success."

Authors earn little with pens

Hearst News Service

Mickey Spillane may appear in beer commercials, and William Kennedy, after years of struggle, may be feted for his literary accomplishments, but for most authors the literary life isn't that glamorous. Holding down a job and stealing time from family and friends to sit at the typewriter is more typical of the writer's life than appearing on the Today show or having a late-night chat with Larry King.

Only a handful of authors — 15 to 20 percent by one estimate — earn enough money to support themselves. A 1981 survey by the Columbia University Center for the Social Sciences found authors earned a median income of $4,775 by their pens.

"Very few people are making a living wage off writing. They're being subsidized, either by their other job or their spouses, much more commonly by their other job," said Paul Kingston, a sociologist at the University of Virginia who participated in the 1981 Columbia authors' survey. "We once calculated that writing, if you worked it out on a per hour basis, was a little better than working at McDonald's."

The survey, which polled more than 2,100 authors, found that for the year 1979:

— Median income earned by authors from their books, articles, cinema and television scripts was $4,775.

— Twenty-five percent of the authors earned less than $1,000 from their writing.

— Authors without any other paid occupation earned $8,000, while part-time authors earned $2,700.

— Forty-six percent of the authors held a regular job in addition to their free-lance writing, while half had breadwinning spouses.

— Genre fiction is the most lucrative of all kinds of writing. Twenty-one percent of the writers of such works earned at least $50,000, in contrast with 5 percent of children's book authors and 3 percent of writers of "academically-oriented" nonfiction.

— Authors' incomes from writing are subject to sharp annual fluctuations. In 1979, 5 percent earned about 10 times as much from their writing as in the year before, while 5 percent earned only one-fifth as much.

"The findings are still applicable," said Jonathan Cole, director of Columbia's Center for the Social Sciences. "There's been a general inflation that has affected these figures, but I don't think very much, perhaps less for authors than for other occupations."

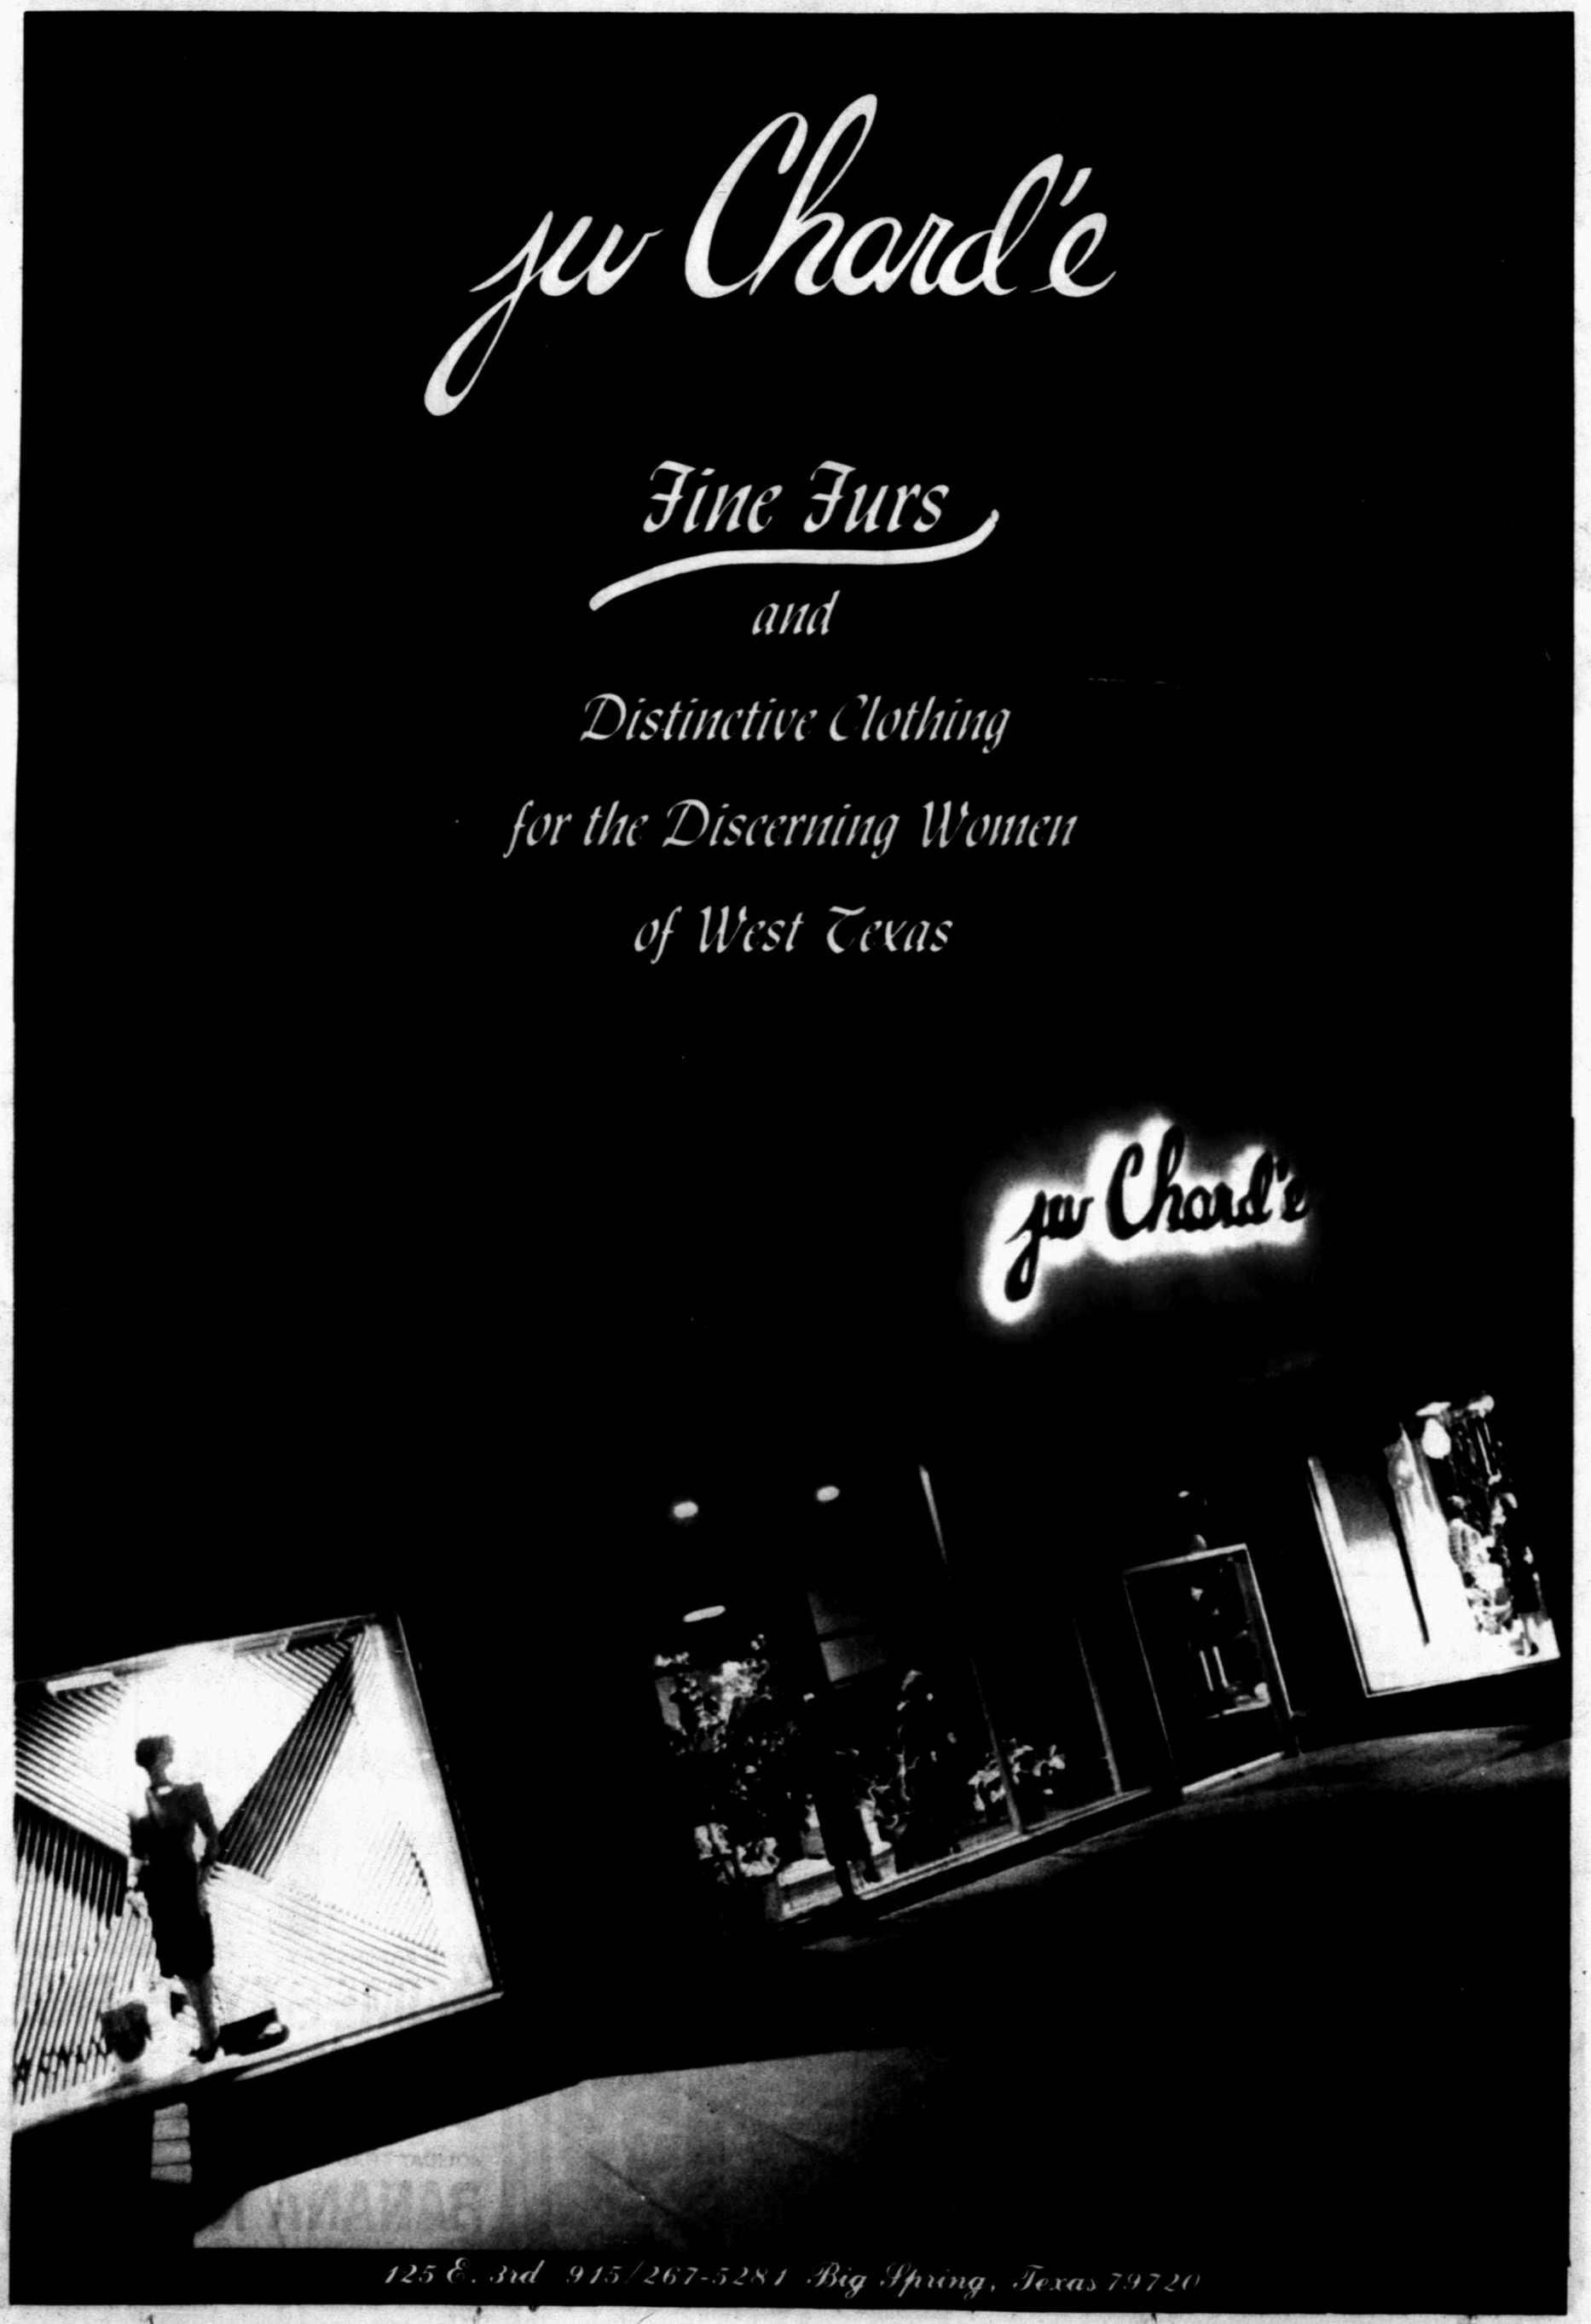

While the Columbia researchers found authors earn little from their writing, median personal income when second jobs were figured in came to $27,000; median family income was $38,000.

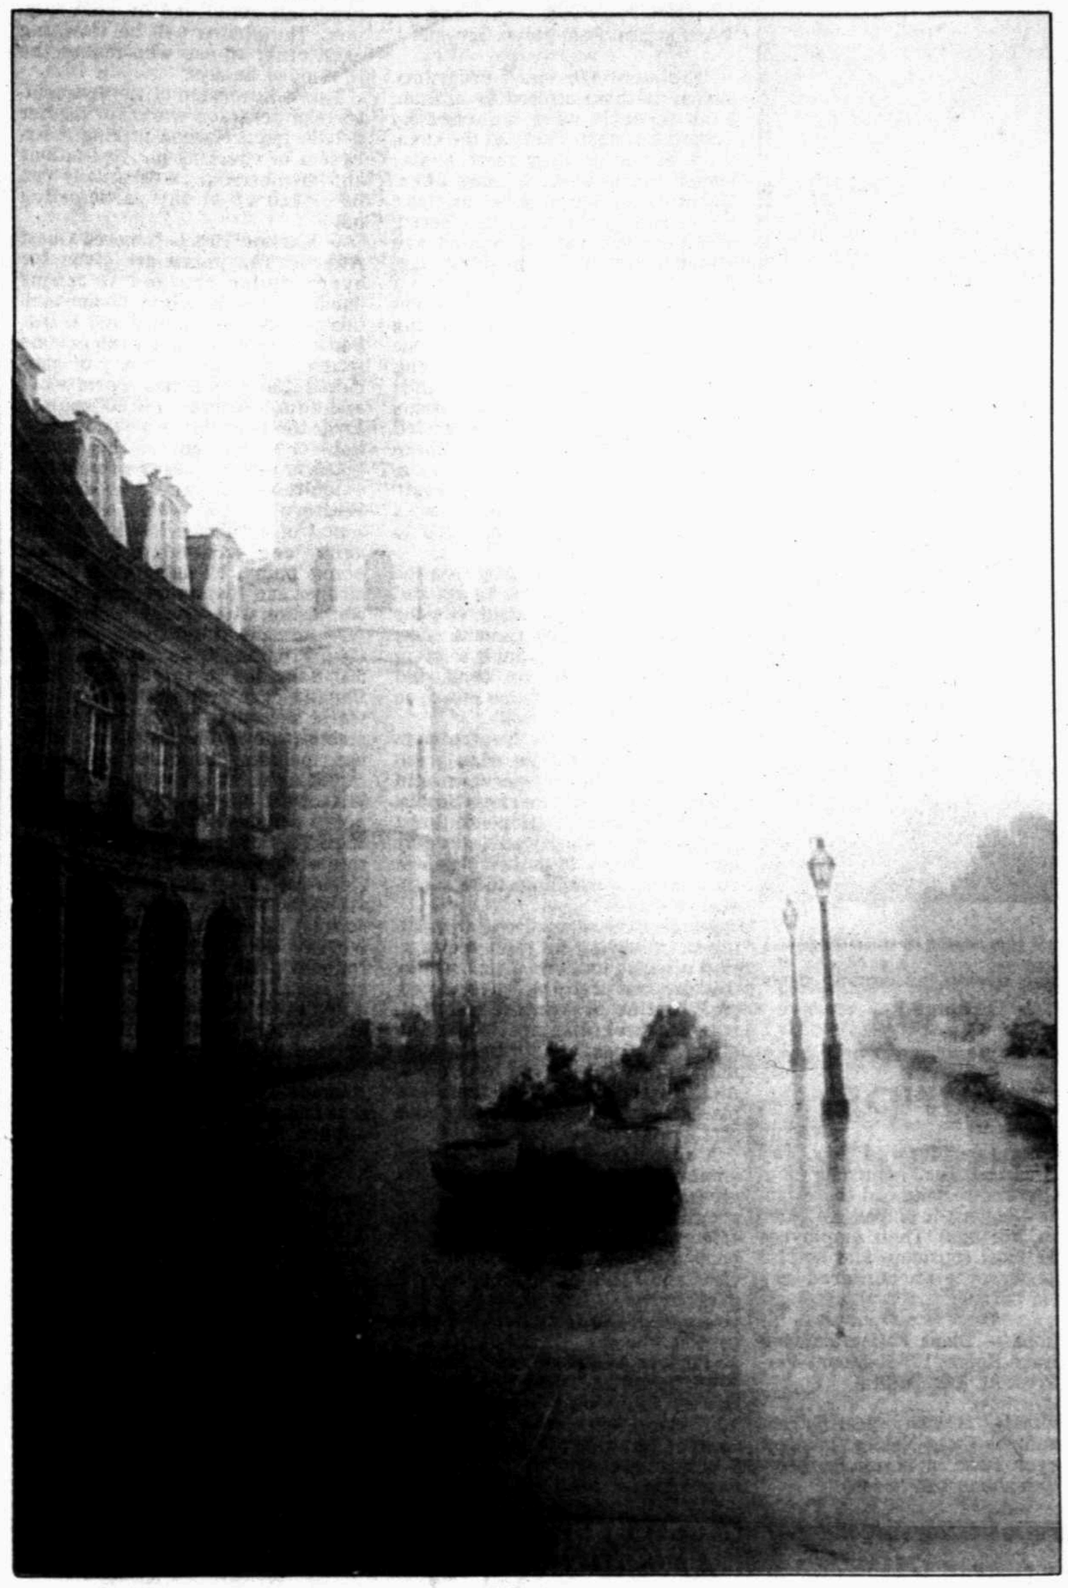

"The image of the author starving in a garret and the counter-image of authors benefiting from blockbuster sales are both incorrect," Cole said. He estimated that 15-20 percent of authors live by their pens. "The vast majority of authors cannot make ends meet from their writing activity. However, they possess skills that are very marketable and are used in second jobs."

"Non-fiction is where more money is these days," said Elizabeth Preston managing editor of The Writer, a service magazine for free-lance writers. "It is harder to sell fiction, although there has been somewhat of an increase in magazines accepting fiction, and there are a number of first novels being published, which is encouraging."

Even so, according to Peter Heggie, executive director of The Authors Guild in New York, it is more difficult to get fiction published today than it was 12-15 years ago.

"In commercial publishing, there's been a much greater emphasis on the individual best sellers and less concentration on the rest of the list," Heggie said. "It's more difficult for the author of a good book with a modest audience to get published. One has to add there have been an enormous number of new small literary presses, ranging from an operation in somebody's living room to a very healthy publishing enterprise. That may add to your number of authors getting published."

NEW ORLEANS...

the flair is still there even after the fair

Text by David Lee Forrest

NEW ORLEANS — One of the smaller, easily overlooked exhibits at the 1984 World's Fair in New Orleans was the little steam-powered launch which Katherine Hepburn and Humphrey Bogart rode in "The African Queen."

Even though the 72-year-old African Queen has been meticulously restored and cared for, the boat still has precisely the same ramshackle, peeling-paint appearance it had in the classic 1951 film.

New Orleans itself seems much like the African Queen; even though it enjoys incredibly active street life and a thriving tourist trade, it retains its mouldering Southern Gothic look.

Many places still exist in the famous French Quarter — or "Vieux Carre" (French for "old square") — where one can imagine a grimy, sweaty Stanley from "A Streetcar Named Desire" standing beneath a run-down building's rusty wrought-iron balcony pathetically yelling "Stella!"

However, the Louisiana World Exposition, which closed Nov. 11, has brought considerable renovation and change to old New Orleans, despite the well-publicized spectre of bankruptcy that constantly haunted the Fair (it ended more than $100 million in debt).

"All that new construction, the renovations along Bourbon Street, the road improvements and the generally upbeat mood of the people — all that certainly has had a beneficial effect on the city," New Orleans real estate developer Michael A. Pollack said in a recent article in Muse Air Monthly Magazine.

The French Quarter's streets and sidewalks have received some badly needed repairs. During a recent stroll through the French Quarter, one New Orleans native commented "There were holes in the streets your car could disappear into" prior to the preparations for the Fair.

The Fair itself was constructed in what was a decaying warehouse district with little aesthetic or real estate value along the banks of the Mississippi River. These old brick warehouses were repaired and remodeled into new bars, restaurants and shops.

One new building constructed for the Fair is the Great Hall, which housed a number of exhibits, the popular Louisiana Journey ride and a section of monorail track. The huge 750,000-square-foot building was specifically designed to become the New Orleans Convention Center after the fair.

The Louisiana Journey and the monorail are to be dismantled and the openings in the wall through which the monorail entered and exited will be closed. The building is expected to be the 10th largest convention center in the nation and has already booked conventions too large for the city's Civic Center.

Plans are being made to convert the Fair's International Riverwalk area, where most of the international pavillions were located, into a large block of shops and restaurants overlooking the Mississippi.

Real estate developers have also started planning luxury high-rise condominiums on the Chinese pavillion site.

Even higher overhead, the Mississippi Aerial River Transit gondola ride which ferried World's Fair tourists over the river will remain in place to be used as a park-and-ride mass transit system to downtown.

Although the gondolas offer a spectacular view of the city, only time will prove whether commuters really want to sway suspended from a cable 360 feet in the air above the river on their way to work each day.

The Fair and the anticipated increase in conventioneers has also spurred new hotel construction near the river, including the 509-room Meridien New Orleans, 497-room Inter-Continental New Orleans and the 350-room Hotel Iberville.

French Quarter

NEW ORLEANS — The Mississippi River may ebb and flow, the French and Spanish flags may rise and fall, and a World's Fair may come and go, but the French Quarter remains.

The French Quarter is actually the original area plot of land laid out in 1718 by the French and named New Orleans in honor of Phillippe, Duc d'Orleans.

In 1762, Louis XV of France signed the territory of Louisiana over to Spain. Until 1801, New Orleans remained the Spanish colonial capital of Louisiana. This period gave the French Quarter its early Spanish architecture graced by elaborate wrought-iron balconies.

The intermarriage of the French and Spanish created the Creole culture and cuisine that permeates the French Quarter even today.

In 1801, Louisiana briefly returned to French rule under Napoleon, who sold it to the United States in 1803 during Thomas Jefferson's presidency.

Disastrous fires in 1788 and 1794 destroyed all but about a fifth of old New Orleans, but the French Quarter still retains some buildings from the 18th century and an impressive array of 19th century architecture.

Throughout the first half of the 19th century, New Orleans was a thriving American city. By 1840, it was the fourth largest city in the United States and one of the most prosperous. The Civil War marked the end of the New Orleans "Golden Age," however.

It survived occupation by Union soldiers in 1862, a malaria plague in 1871, a major hurricane in 1915 and an influenza epidemic in 1918 that killed 35,000 people.

Despite the grim incidents, New Orleans — and the French Quarter in particular — has maintained a reputation as a place that truly believes one should "laissez les bons temps roule" (let the good times roll).

The Quarter has an air of sleaziness, created by X-rated bookstores, topless bars and gender-bending nightclubs, that mixes strangely with its beautiful architecture, fine restaurants and romantic aura.

The Quarter's unique atmosphere obviously attracts tourists. A study conducted by the University of New Orleans recently reported that two out of three tourists in New Orleans who had visited the city before said that the French Quarter was the primary reason they returned. More than half said the Quarter was the most important reason to visit New Orleans.

Walking down Bourbon Street, one is more likely to meet other tourists instead of New Orleans natives. The Quarter could be described as a "tourist trap," but it is an extraordinarily cosmopolitan one.

An Irish couple stopped a Texan on the street and asked him to photograph them in front of a picturesque old house; other tourists strolled past as they spoke German, and Cajuns from rural parishes paused to gawk at the sights in the city.

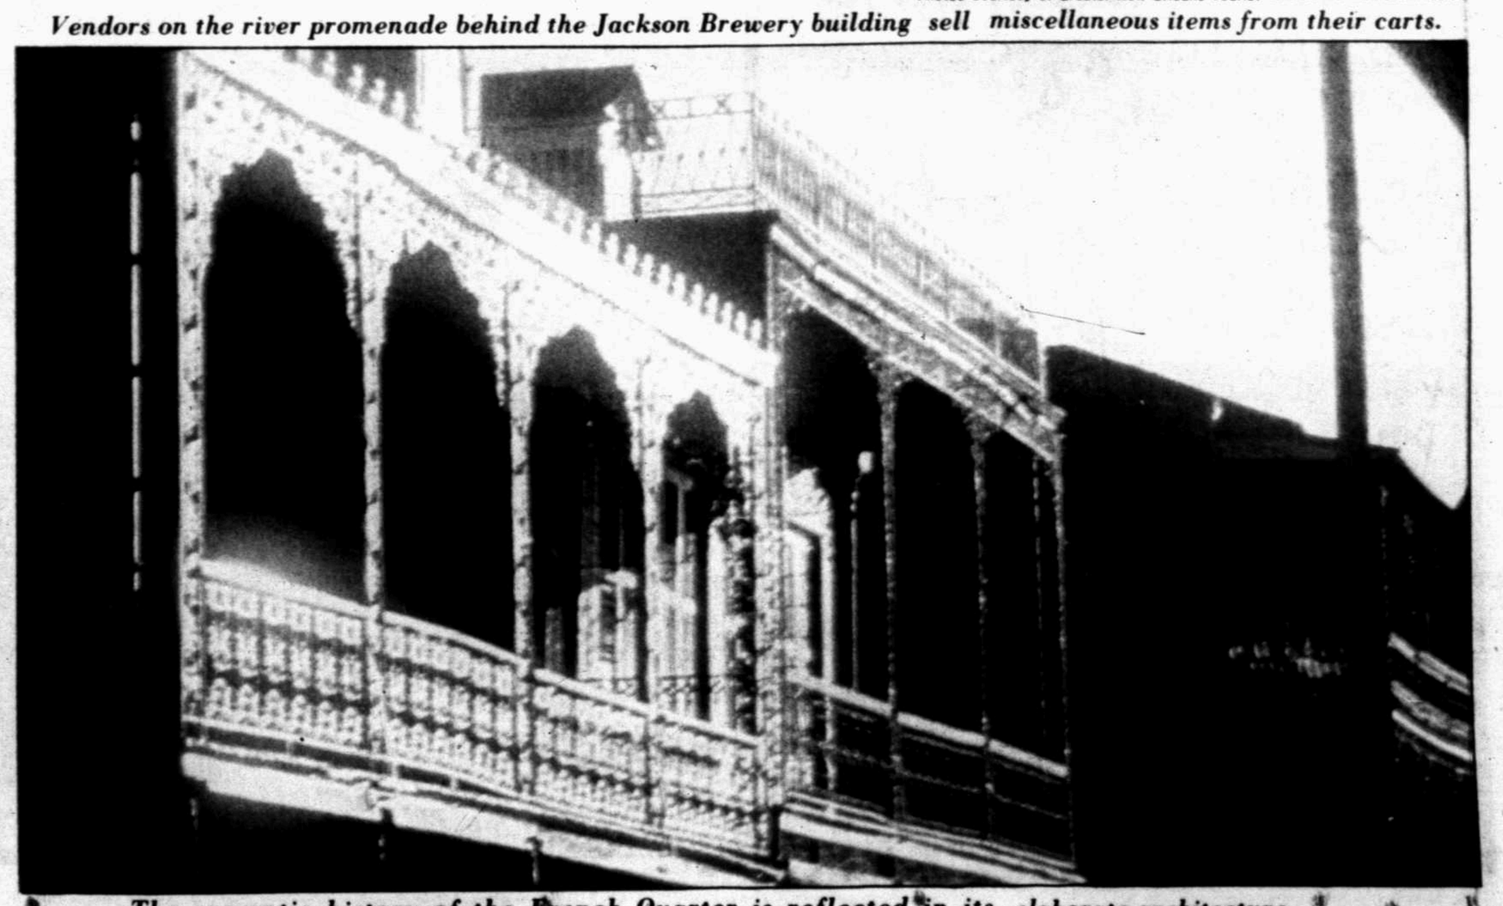

Watching two elderly men on a street corner waiting for their wives to slowly cross the street proved that even run-of-the-mill tourists from Middle America become entertaining when they get caught up in the French Quarter atmosphere.

One of the men smiled and called to his wife in a mock-angry voice, "Now, just how do you expect us to get picked up by wild women if you keep following us?"

The luxurious Hotel Iberville is also part of the recently opened One Canal Place, a 260,000-square-foot shopping mall with upscale retail stores like Saks Fifth Avenue, Gucci, F.A.O. Schwartz and Brooks Brothers. The complex is situated between the Fair grounds and the French Quarter.

Also located on the fringe of the French Quarter is the remodeled Jackson Brewery building. The brewery, the former home of Jax Beer, reopened last month as a "specialty retail marketplace."

The six-floor building — built in 1890 across from Jackson Square — houses restaurants, specialty shops with names like "Hats in the Belfry" and fast food concessions.

The fast food counters include such oddities as Buster Holmes which sells red beans, rice and fried chicken; Patout's Cajun Festival which sells oysters exclusively; and the Flying Fruit Fantasy which sells frozen daquiris — an inescapable drink in New Orleans during warm, muggy weather.

Developers of the project like to emphasize the brewery will benefit visitors to the Vieux Carre by linking the Quarter to the Mississippi River.

The "river promenade" behind the building overlooks the Mississippi. Tourists can sit and watch ships and barges sail up and down the river. Vendors with colorful pushcarts sell a variety of souvenirs, flowers and miscellaneous items in the plaza, an area between the French Market and a landing where riverboat excursion cruises dock.

The 200 large balloons released at the climax of the Jackson Brewery's grand opening ceremony on Oct. 27 demonstrated the feeling that many New Orleanians seem to have after the World's Fair.

The motto emblazoned on the side of each balloon was "The Festival Never Ends."

The Jackson Brewery building, a specialty marketplace in a restored 19th century brewery, celebrated its grand opening during the waning days of the World's Fair in late October.

Bonus travel programs: Costly way to buy loyalty

By MORRIS D. ROSENBERG
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"Frequent traveler" programs, similar to those offered by airlines, have recently been launched by major hotel chains around the country to encourage their guests to stay longer and come back more often. Vacationers sometimes can take advantage of the savings offered, even though the programs are aimed primarily at business travelers.

The plans — which have different names, rules and options, depending on the chain — share the same basic outline: Each paid night's lodging earns points that can be redeemed by a registered guest for accommodations, cash, premiums or extended vacations, including air fare. There may be other benefits, such as automatic room upgrades when available, check-cashing privileges and a free daily newspaper delivered to the room.

The programs have increased the occupancy rates at some hotels, and some hoteliers are satisfied with the results. But in certain cases the cost of operating the program is so great that it does not pay for itself, and may even have a negative effect on corporate earnings as well.

The programs are "very expensive," said Roger Dow, vice president for marketing services and development for Marriott Hotels, which is making its "Honored Guest Awards" — previously advertised by direct mail only to its best business customers — available to the general public.

But Dow considers travel an exciting prize, saying he can't see Marriott offering toasters: "Our business travelers are pretty well-heeled people." And he believes the frequent-traveler programs are worth the effort, that while a business guest may not be lured to a less-convenient hotel location, still there are places where rewarding loyalty pays off.

A few executives deplore the emphasis on merchandise and other giveaways. They would prefer to spend the money for more cost-effective, hospitality-oriented purposes that stress improved hotel services and facilities to bring in new guests rather than pull the same travelers back and forth between competitors.

"I'd love to get out of it tomorrow," admits Tedd Schorman, Howard Johnson's vice president for marketing, referring to his successful "Superpoints" program. Schorman is convinced that it would be a smarter business decision to give the consumer better service, and thinks hotel frequent-traveler programs could end by next summer. The chains will be watching each other to see who makes the first move, he says.

This is how some of the frequent-traveler programs work. For further details, inquire when making reservations or checking in. Applications and membership cards usually can be picked up at any participating hotel.

— Marriott Hotels Honored Guest Awards: Ten points are given for every dollar charged to rooms (including meals, drinks, phone, incidental personal charges and taxes). For 17,500 points, a guest can get one free weekend night at any of Marriott's 135 properties worldwide, excluding resorts; 150,000 points earns the top prize — a 12-day vacation for two at any of the chain's hotels or resorts, plus two round-trip coach tickets anywhere on Eastern, Western or TWA, and one-week rental of a full-size Hertz car. Travelers can accumulate additional bonus points by using those three airlines and that auto rental firm in connection with a stay at a Marriott.

— Ramada Hotel Group-Business Card Program: Guests at more than 500 Ramadas in this country and Canada earn free or lower-priced travel according to the total dollar amount shown on the bill at checkout, including banquets and meetings. One point is awarded for each $100 of the bill (to a maximum of 30 points per stay). Prizes range from a 50-percent discount on the weekend rate worldwide plus an upgrade on a Hertz car rental (for 10 points), to a six-night vacation for four (two rooms) at any of Ramada's 585 worldwide locations, including round-trip air fare and free luxury car rental (for 200 points). Merchandise awards (for 70 points) are to be announced soon. Points can be earned until May 31, 1985, and redeemed until Dec. 31, 1985. Ramada released figures showing that more than 100,000 persons have applied for membership since the program's introduction in May.

— Stouffer Hotels Certificate of Appreciation: Only American Express cardholders are eligible to participate in Stouffer's program. One certificate is earned for each night's stay; they may be redeemed for American Express gift certificates and U.S. Savings Bonds. Premiums range from a $25 gift certificate (five certificates of appreciation) to a $500 U.S. Savings Bond, a free weekend (Friday-Saturday) at any of Stouffer's 22 U.S. properties, plus a $100 gift certificate for American Express merchandise (50 certificates).

Kauai rebuilding 'better than ever'

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

POIPU BEACH, Kauai — The people of Kauai remember November 1982 just as the people of Dallas remember November 1963 — with great sadness. And, just as Dallas has become a great city since President Kennedy was assassinated — a city that has worked hard to overcome the brutal image flashed across millions of television sets 21 years ago — so has Kauai worked to overcome its great tragedy: the devastation of Hurricane Iwa.

Kauai's fledgling tourist industry was nearly destroyed by the hurricane; its winds ruthlessly raked the fragile shores of the island the Hawaiians call "The Garden Isle."

Poipu Beach, where most of Kauai's hotels are located, was the hardest hit. The Sheraton was splintered, its seaside units torn apart like cardboard boxes; Amfac's Waiohai was flooded and its lovely gardens ruined; all along the beach hotels and homes were reduced to shattered rubble.

AND YET, only two years after the storm, things have never looked better for Kauai's tourist industry. For example:

— United Airlines has begun nonstop service from the West Coast to Kauai, the first mainland airline to do so.

— A new, $60 million airport is scheduled to open next year.

— 1984 will be the biggest year for tourism in the history the island, with 850,000 expected to visit.

— $300,000 has been raised to promote the island on the mainland and in Japan, and Kauai's dynamic mayor, Tony Kunimura, personally visits travel agents to promote his island.

— $200 million has been spent in the past two years to rebuild the shattered hotels, replace the ravaged beaches, replant trees along such Kauai landmarks at the Maluhia Road tree tunnel.

— Of the 2,148 rooms available on Kauai the day Hurricane Iwa hit, 2,099 have reopened.

— Old Koloa town — the site of the first sugar cane plantation in Hawaii — is being rebuilt and renovated in a $3 million project designed to make it the sort of tourist attraction that Maui's old whaling village, Lahaina, has become.

AND, PERHAPS most important, Hurricane Iwa proved to all the people of Kauai just how important tourism is to the economy of the small island.

"The people of Kauai are warmer than ever, we have revived the old 'aloha spirit,'" says Mayor Kunimura. "We're trying to bring Kauai back up to what it was and hopefully a lot better. Our people appreciate tourism and tourists a lot more now because of what happened to their jobs when the hurricane hit."

What happened, of course, is they lost them. And that really hurt, for tourism is about all that exists to feed the families of Kauai. There were once three pineapple canneries on Kauai; today there are none. Of the nine sugar plantations once flourishing on Kauai, only four remain, and they employ only a few workers. Tourism, it appears, is the only way this island can survive.

But despite the importance of tourism, Kauai has not sold its soul to achieve success, as have some of the other islands, particularly Oahu with its garish Waikiki and some parts of Maui where high-rise condominium strips block out the sun.

Only one hotel on Kauai — the Kauai Surf — towers as high as 11 stories. When it was completed in 1960, Kauaians immediately voted to place a four-story height limitation on all future construction. It was this so-called "No higher than a coconut tree law" that has served Kauai so well.

THERE IS A DIFFERENT feeling on Kauai, a smalltown, laid-back, almost Caribbean atmosphere that is missing on the other islands. The pace is slower on Kauai, partly because of its small size, and partly because of its relative innocence. Kauai has always lagged behind bigger sisters Oahu and Maui in the tourist trade and even the Big Island of Hawaii, now undergoing massive growth in its tourist industry, is outgaining the Garden Isle in the race for tourists.

But that is precisely what makes Kauai so attractive to the many who return again and again to this place. There are few golf courses (only Princeville can be considered first-class), not much traffic (the first traffic light in county seat Lihua wasn't installed until 1973), the shopping isn't particularly good or exotic (although the shops in the Waiohai Hotel are excellent), and the nightlife pretty much consists of having a late drink on your terrace and watching the stars sparkle in the deep darkness.

But the beaches are superb, the foliage lush, the scenery — from the weeping Na Pali cliffs to the deep ravines of Waimea Canyon — is, without question, the most spectacular in Hawaii.

It is true that it rains more on Kauai than on the other islands (Waialeale, which receives 500 inches of rainfall a year, is the wettest spot on earth), but the rain nicely stays away from Poipu Beach so tourists can get their requisite tans, and the dampness promotes impossibly lush growth on other parts of the island.

KAUAI IS NOT the old Hawaii — it doesn't exist anymore except on privately-owned Niihau — but it is as close as you will find on your visits to the islands.

Young scientists have high future goals

Hearst News Service

The top young scientists of tomorrow are more interested in solving people-related problems than in answering the ivory-tower questions of pure science.

They see the challenge that science must solve in the next 20 years, according to an article in Science Digest's December issue, in terms of energy sources, food and population, medical advances, the arms race, pollution and the environment.

A panel of distinguished senior scientists was recruited by the magazine to pick America's top 100 young scientists. Then the magazine profiled the young researchers and also polled them, asking what they saw as the most important problem science must solve over the next 20 years.

Of the 81 who responded, most gave multiple answers. Twenty-two of them were concerned with energy — fusion, solar, or simply safe, clean and renewable sources.

Nineteen gave priority to problems of food and overpopulation. Seventeen mentioned medical advances. Thirteen of the scientists cited the need to control the arms race and prevent nuclear war, while 10 were concerned with pollution, the environment, and the quality of life.

The young scientists — the majority of whom came from suburbia or small to moderate size urban areas — appear very aware of the importance of distinguishing between pure and applied research, and one astronomer added that "for basic research, nothing is a must problem for the next 20 years, at least not in the context of the needs of society."

Five of the scientists discussed the limits of science in problem-solving, and a systems analyst wrote that "science doesn't solve problems; it contributes to solutions."

Light chosen finalist in pageant

Michelle Ann Light, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Light of Midland, will be a finalist in the 1985 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager pageant to be March 29-31, 1985 at Midland Center. The pageant will be official regional pageant to the 14th annual Miss Texas National Teen-Ager Pageant to be June 7-9, 1985 in Fort Worth.

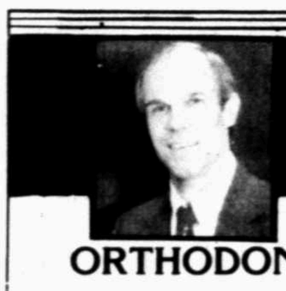

Michelle Ann Light

Winner of the Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager pageant will receive a $500 cash award, a full four-year tuition scholarship to Oklahoma City University, a $2,400 scholarship to Wayland Baptist University in Plainview and more. The top three winners will compete in the state pageant in Fort Worth.

Contestants will be judged on scholastic achievement and leadership, poise and personality and appearance. There will be no swimsuit competition. Talent or an oral essay on "What's Right About America" may be given.

Miss Light will be sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. John M. Wilson, Hilliard Oil and Gas Inc. in Midland and the Midland Hilton. Her hobbies include dancing, water skiing and bowling.

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.

ORTHODONTICS FOR ADULTS

QUESTION: I am 35 years old and have always been ashamed of my "buck teeth". Is it too late for me to have them straightened?

ANSWER: Although braces have long been associated with school-age children, they are now becoming very popular with adults. Until the mid-1960's, it was thought that orthodontics could only be successful with children as their jaws and teeth were still growing. But now, it's generally agreed that jaw growth is not always necessary for effective treatment. Today, you can produce that smile you've always wanted no matter what your age. Presently 20% of the 4 million Americans undergoing orthodontics are adults— so you are not alone.

Adoption Week celebrated

By ERMA BOMBECK

This week is National Adoption Week and I can think of no better way to celebrate it than with the McGee family of Clinton, Iowa.

There are 14 of them. They don't match. Some are tall and blonde. Some are short and black. Three are natural children of the McGees. Nine followed a path of love and found their way there.

Adoption is uncomfortable only to the people who haven't done it. They don't know what adoptive parents want to hear, so they say dumb things.

The McGees have heard it all.

"What beautiful children. Who do they belong to?"

"Does the government subsidize you?"

"Do they know they're adopted?"

"Where did you find all these kids?"

There's always some well-meaning disciple who has a message from the Lord who assures the McGees they will be crowned in heaven for being so saintly as to take on the "burden" of another woman's child.

And the "goodie" I've always loved comes after you've been up with a child a million times, toilet-trained them, run with them on their first bicycle, dried their tears, calmed their fears, sat white-knuckled in the car while they learned how to drive, dressed them for their first prom, mortgaged the house for their education only to have someone ask, "Do you think they'll ever want to find their 'real' mother?"

The biggest difference between adopting a child and having one naturally is with adoption the labor is longer and more painful.

I had a child adopt me when I was 26. Although she didn't know a lot about my background, she accepted me, flaws and all. It wasn't important to her that I wasn't in at the beginning of her life. It was only important that we had found one another. We too battled prejudice and ignorance.

"Your mother doesn't look like you. She's short."

"Do you suppose your mother will ever want children of her own?"

"I'll bet she wouldn't be so strict if she were your 'real' mother."

And one space cadet even said, "What are you going to do if your mother has a child of her own?"

Come to think of it, that was the same woman who saw me when I was eight months pregnant and asked, "What happened?"

DEAR ABBY

Church's work not without costs

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just came home from an extended stay in the hospital, during which time my minister visited me frequently. I wanted to show my appreciation in some special way, and then I remembered the following from your book, "The Best of Dear Abby."

"Many people think religion should be free, and they wonder why it costs so much to belong to a church. I'll tell you why.

"Priests, ministers and rabbis must eat. And since they work full time at their tasks, the churches must support them. Staff, professional choir members and musicians also must be paid. Buildings must be maintained, heated, lighted and beautified. (And of course, first they must be built!)

"Custodial staff must eat and feed their families. Most churches engage in philanthropic work (aid to the needy, missions and education); hence, they have their financial obligations. Even orchids, contrary to folklore, do not live on air. Churches can't live on air, either.

"Religion, like water, may be free, but when they pipe it to you, you've got to help pay for the piping. And the piper!"

So, I wrote a check and sent it to my minister with this note: "Dear Abby said, 'Religion, like water, may be free, but when they pipe it to you, you've got to help pay for the piping. And the piper! Enclosed is a check to help pay for the piping."

Abby, so few people remember their clergymen or clergywomen. If you want to print this as a reminder to others, sign me ... LOUIS FROM ST. LOUIS

DEAR LOUIS: I do. Thanks for the reminder.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to a wonderful woman for 35 years. She has had a battle with cancer for the last several years — several operations, chemotherapy, etc. The word is now out that she does not have much longer to live. She can deal with that, and so can I, but there is something I cannot deal with.

Women have been calling me at home wanting to "see" me. I've had calls from women as young as 24 and as old as 65. (I am 55.) I never would have dreamed that women could be so brazen!

Maybe a word in your column would let these insensitive, aggressive women know how unattractive they are to a man in my position. Many are friends of my wife, believe it or not. — NAMELESS, PLEASE

DEAR NAMELESS: I believe it. After 28 years of writing this column, I am shockproof.

(Problems? What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Hungary wonderful place to visit

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

BUDAPEST, Hungary — To most of us, even those who consider ourselves well informed in the ways of the world, the Iron Curtain conjures up strong images. The Volga Boat Song. Gray buildings, gray skies, gray people. Constant shortages, dour faces, the KGB kicking down doors in the middle of the night, and gulags. Not exactly the kind of place one wishes to go for fun.

Hungary is, of course, behind the Iron Curtain. The country was brutalized by the Russians in 1956 when they rolled their tanks across the border to crush a revolution. The Kremlin's iron hand struck savagely at Hungary; the fledgling uprising was quickly crushed. To this day it remains a Russian satellite.

And so it was with some trepidation that I recently journeyed to this small (about half the size of Oklahoma) country to dip my toes lightly into the murky waters of communism; to brave the capricious winds whipping across the Danube behind the Iron Curtain.

I shouldn't have been such a coward. This is a wonderful place — wonderful, at least, for a visitor from the West.

Budapest is beautiful, with wide boulevards flanked by chestnut trees, noisy cafes spilling out onto the bustling streets, restaurants serving robust food and magnificent Hungarian wines, and superb rococo buildings painted pink and yellow.

There are few shortages here, and no long lines waiting for hours to buy a loaf of bread or an orange, as you find in much of the Eastern bloc. The men and women are well-fed and well-dressed. Lunches are long, lasting until a final taste of apricot, cherry or plum brandy.

THE OPERA HOUSES (there are two in Budapest) are filled, symphony orchestras (there are 13 in the country) play to knowledgeable audiences, ballet is appreciated and supported, and gypsy violinists seem to be playing in every restaurant.

The cafes roar long into the night and nightclubs like the Moulin Rouge and Maxim flash lots of flesh at the audience. The casino at the Budapest Hilton will take your money as slickly as any place in Vegas, and the restaurants are always crowded.

For the visitor there is little of the tension experienced in East Berlin, none of the rudeness found in Moscow, and a lack of the seasonal upheavals of Poland.

Although well within the grasp of the Eastern bloc, Hungary maintains its identity and Hungarians their dignity, just as they did when their country was ruled by the Mongols, the Turks, the Austrians, the Germans. When a country has existed for 1,100 years, as has Hungary, and been allowed to rule itself for only 92 of those years, it learns to cope.

Hungary's economy is the most vigorous of the Eastern bloc, spinning out surplus goods exported throughout the world. The Great Market Hall in Budapest is jammed with fruits, vegetables, slabs of beef and pork, and a blizzard of flowers. Each day more than 30,000 people pass through the market to buy their evening meal, or a bouquet for their sweetheart.

Hungarians and visitors alike eat goulash and paprika chicken and goose liver better than anything the French offer, all washed down by great amounts of excellent Tokaj white wine or by red "Egir Bikaver," the famed "blood of the bull."

Nearly 10 million visitors come to Budapest each year — most from neighboring Austria — to sample the pleasures of this city. People who live in Vienna come to Budapest for fun, often including a joust with the streetwalkers who prowl the banks of the Danube near the Intercontinental, Forum and Hyatt hotels.

ALTHOUGH NEARLY 2½ million residents of North America are of Hungarian descent, travel to Hungary from the United States (78,000 visitors last year) and Canada (17,000) has been relatively minor — probably because of the same Iron Curtain stigma that initially discouraged me.

And that's a shame, for the tourist who is visiting nearby Vienna is foolish to ignore Budapest. It is cheaper (dinner for two with a bottle of wine costs less than $10; a half dozen long-stemmed roses bought from a street vendor, $2), has a splendid palace that can match the best of Austria, shares the same Danube River, and offers more nightlife than its Western neighbor.

Few buildings in the world can match the neo-Gothic beauty of the Budapest Parliament, once the Continent's largest building; and only Paris' Champs-Elysees can match the beauty of the Nepkoztarsasag Utja, a splendid boulevard shaded by chestnut trees and lined with excellent shops.

Budapest has many wonderful parks like its 250-acre city park where you can stroll, boat in the summer or ice skate in the winter, visit a zoo with 4,000 animals, play in a mini-Tivoli amusement park called Vidam and visit a very good circus.

BUDAPEST HAS 123 thermal baths, some of them going back to Roman times, to soothe your body, and churches like mighty St. Stephen's (which can, and often does, hold 8,000 for worship services) to soothe the soul.

Budapest travel tips offered

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

HOW TO GET THERE — There are no non-stop flights from North America to Hungary. Some 22 airlines, including Malev, the Hungarian airline, serve Budapest airport from major gateways in Europe. A lot of people opt for a slow boat trip up the Danube from Vienna as their method of reaching Budapest; there is also a hydrofoil that makes the trip in about four hours. Train and highway systems also connect Hungary with Austria, the easiest point of entry for Westerners. Taxis are plentiful and cheap in Budapest, and the city's subway (the first in Europe) is sparkling and efficient. There is tram and train service to outlying districts.

WHEN TO GO — Fall is particularly nice because of the fine weather and the easy availability of entertainment — the opera, symphony and ballet are all in full swing. The only time to avoid Budapest is in the depths of the harsh Hungarian winter.

WHAT TO SEE — The Royal Palace and its museums, St. Stephen's Church, Matthias Church, the city market and — in the summer — the zoo and the Vidam amusement park. In the summer be sure to go to Margaret Island with its swimming pools, thermal bathes and lovely Grand Hotel.

WHAT TO EAT — Try "halaszle" (fish soup), "toltott kaposzta" (stuffed cabbage), "paprikas csirke" (chicken paprika) and, of course, goulash. Go easy on the paprika at first, it is powerful. Some of the better restaurants in Budapest are Gundel, Hungaria, Tokaj, and Aranysarkany (in nearby Szentendre). Some hotels have very good restaurants, too, particularly the Hilton, Intercontinental and Hyatt. Tip at least 15 percent.

WHAT TO DRINK — Be sure to have the excellent Tokaj white wines and the famous "blood of the bull," a robust red. Hungarian brandies are very good, particularly the apricot. Surprisingly, imported spirits such as scotch are sold at very reasonable prices.

WHAT TO BUY — China, embroidered blouses and tablecloths, folk dolls, fur hats — all at a fraction of what you would pay here. The Intertourist shops located in all hotels sell most of the items but at usually higher prices than you will find in Budapest stores. In Intertourist shops you must use foreign currency. The Intertourist stores are the place to get cheap liquor from the West.

WHAT TO DO — In addition to sightseeing, you should try a thermal bath and take full advantage of the outstanding nightlife. The shows at the Moulin Rouge and Maxim are particularly good, but be sure to dine first — the food at both is over priced.

WHERE TO STAY — A number of international hotel groups, including Intercontinental, Penta, Hyatt and Hilton have properties in Budapest. My choice is the Hilton, which is beautifully situated on a hill in Buda in the middle of the Royal Palace grounds. Single room rates start at $54 per night, with doubles beginning at $74.

STOP RING TWISTING...
STOP FORCING RINGS OVER KNUCKLE

Your ring twists because it must be large enough to go over your knuckle. This makes it too large to fit your finger properly. Or, you can't get your ring on at all because your knuckle is too large or swollen.

We can replace the shank, the bottom part, of almost any ring with Finger Mate, an exclusive patented feature that permits the ring to expand up to three full sizes, making it easier to put on, then closes and locks, fitting the finger snugly and securely. No more twisting or slipping. No more forcing tight rings over swollen knuckles either. Come in for a demonstration and estimate without obligation.

Once a week, every week, she spends a few hours visiting people who don't get a lot of visitors.

Sometimes she brings flowers.

Sometimes a gift.

But most of the time, she brings what they appreciate most–herself.

And it isn't a one-way street. Because the people she visits give a lot to her, too. Their wisdom, their experience, their kindness.

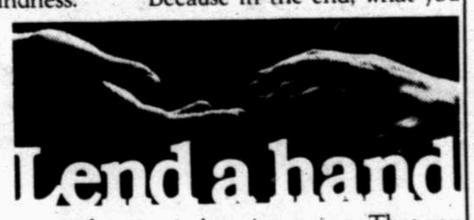

In this country, the elderly suffer from many things. Yet one of the most crippling is also one of the easiest to cure. Loneliness.

You don't need a lot of money. You just need people who care enough to spend time with people.

There are a lot of people who can use your help. And a lot of ways you can help them.

Whether you spend a little time at a retirement home, give money to the college of your choice, or just lend a hand any way you can – your time, your money, your talents make a difference.

Because in the end, what you give isn't so important. That you do give is.

Not everyone wants to be home for Christmas

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

To many Americans, last Christmas was notable not for snow, not for Santa Claus, not for hot-buttered rum, not even for Jack Frost nipping at your nose. Last Christmas will long be known for the great Cabbage Patch panic.

When little girls wanted a Cabbage Patch doll last year and made it very clear that nothing else would do when Christmas morning dawned, most parents somehow found a Cabbage Patch doll — even if they had to pay a scalper's price for it and fly to Podunk to pick it up.

To all of you who rushed about last Christmas trying to find a Cabbage Patch doll, or a Trivial Pursuit game, or whatever, I've an early Christmas present. Rather than doing the same thing this Christmas (you know there will be something the little brat will demand this year), why not get away from it all? Away from the brat, away from the job, away from the relatives stuffing themselves with the turkey you had to cook for them, away from all the hassles that often make Christmas a less than perfect holiday. This year, why not take a trip?

CNS Photos

If you want to escape December's chills, you can go find thrills riding the waves of Hawaii.

CHRISTMAS IS a wonderful time to let someone else pamper you. You don't have to worry about trimming the tree or baking a plum pudding or spiking the eggnog — all that will be handled by someone else. All you have to do is sit back and enjoy. 'Tis the season and all that.

This year's selection of Christmas trips ranges from a traditional English Christmas to a most untraditional Christmas cruise up the Amazon. If you're smart you'll book a Christmas trip now; a lot of other people have figured out that there is no better time to get out of town than Christmas.

Here is our pick of this year's best Cabbage Patchless Christmas vacations that would even make Scrooge smile:

— A DICKENS OF A TIME: Speaking of Scrooge, what better place to have Christmas than in England, land of Tiny Tim, the ghost of Christmas past and the yule log?

But this isn't just any Christmas; this is a Christmas such as only the English royalty (and a few visiting Americans) enjoy.

TravelTime, a Chicago-based tour company, has arranged for us to spend Christmas at Brocket Hall, one of the most gracious country homes in all of England. Our hosts will be Lord and Lady Brocket, who will welcome us to their 1,000-acre country estate and let their staff of 10 pamper us.

Before we go to the countryside we'll rest at the Dorchester in London, have dinner at the Arts Club, do the usual tourist things, and attend the Royal Opera. Then, it's on to Brocket Hall for five nights of fun, including a black tie dinner on Christmas Eve, a gift exchange in front of the huge Christmas tree, a sumptuous Christmas dinner, and the traditional ride to the hounds on Boxing Day, the day after Christmas.

All this and much more for $4,980 (not including airfare) for the entire 16-day tour or $2,150 for just the Brocket Hall five-day portion. Details from TravelTime, 17 North State Street, Chicago IL 60602.

— A COLONIAL CHRISTMAS: For all you good colonists, who wouldn't think of spending Christmas in England, how about a holiday in Colonial Williamsburg?

Here, where Patrick Henry gave his Stamp Act Speech and the First Continental Congress met, we'll spend eight days in the midst of the history of our nation.

We'll gather in a Market Square ablaze with bonfires, and sing carols beside the community Christmas tree sparkling with a thousand lights. We'll feast in the elegance of old Virginia, spend time in buildings illuminated only by candlelight, go to concerts, and warm ourselves before great roaring fireplaces. It will be a Christmas as it was long ago — before Cabbage Patch dolls.

Our Colonial Christmas will cost us $898 per person (not including airfare), which includes seven breakfasts, two luncheons and five dinners. Details from Maupintour, P.O. Box 807, Lawrence, KS 66044.

— ROCKY MOUNTAIN HIGH: If you're more a devotee of the Wild West than Early America, we can take care of your Christmas, too.

How about nine days spent high in the snow-clad Rockies, soft snow covering the lodge pole pines, deer feeding in the meadows, skiers rushing through the country's finest powder?

We'll see and hear the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, enjoy the grace of Ballet West's Nutcracker Suite, go to midnight Christmas services at the Cathedral of the Madeleine in Salt Lake City, and enjoy a sleigh ride on Christmas Day through some of the most beautiful countryside in the world.

Our trip will begin in Denver, where we'll stay at the Brown Palace. Then, we'll drive to historic Georgetown for lunch and have dinner in Vail, Colorado's answer to St. Moritz. Next we'll board a train for the spectacular mountain pass journey to Salt Lake City where we'll spend five nights at the old, charming Hotel Utah. All this for $998 twin, including eight breakfasts, four luncheons and six dinners. This trip is also offered by Maupintour.

— CHRISTMAS CRUISIN': If the thought of all that Rocky Mountain snow is making you cold, even in summer, we can escape together to the warmer climes of the world. Nearly all cruise lines offer special Christmas cruises, complete with free champagne, a Santa Claus, and lots of ocean breezes to warm your sun-starved skin.

Perhaps the most exotic of the Christmas cruises is Sun Line's 16-day trip which leaves Ft. Lauderdale Dec. 21. We'll visit the usual Caribbean ports — Virgin Islands, St. Martin, Martinique, St. Lucia, Barbados, Tobago — that all the other ships visit. But then we head south along South America's eastern coast, eventually arriving at the Amazon River. We'll poke along the world's mightiest river, stopping to see a classical ballet performance in the heart of the Brazilian jungle at the Manaus Opera House, learning about the Amazon and her people, and we'll drink a rum punch on the fantail as the tropical breezes ruffle our hair. Santa never had it so good.

We can do all this beginning for $2,990 per person for an inside standard cabin, or spend as much as $6,110 for a deluxe suite. Details from Sun Line at One Rockefeller Plaza, Suite 315, New York 10020.

Still not satisfied? Then perhaps American Hawaii Cruises' Christmas special will appeal to you.

The three-week voyage sails from San Francisco and Los Angeles Dec. 17, arriving in Honolulu Dec. 22. We'll then spend a week at the Hawaiian Regent in Waikiki or the Inter-Continental Wailea on Maui, sipping mai-tais and decorating palm trees. On Dec. 29 it's back on board ship for the cruise back to Los Angeles or San Diego. Costs for the three-week package range from $2,995.

We'll also get all the music you want for dancing from the Lawrence Welk musicians. Details from American Hawaii Cruises, 550 Kearny St., San Francisco, CA 94108.

— SOUTHERN COMFORT: There is no hospitality like Southern Hospitality, and no city in the South where it is so warm as Savannah, Georgia.

Savannah is so hospitable it invites the whole country to enjoy Christmas in its charming, oak-shaded cobblestoned streets. Savannah opens its heart and houses with Christmas tours of many of its historic inns and homes.

London is one place Americans who want to spend the holidays abroad can go.

If you want to spend several days in the old city, Gray Line is marketing a Christmas weekend ($87 per person) which includes special receptions in private homes, four holiday Low Country meals, and a ticket to the Savannah Symphony Christmas concert. Lodging is extra.

The city also invites visitors to a Christmas boat parade on Dec. 8, a Christmas tour of historic homes Dec. 15-16, a grand tour sponsored by the Historic Savannah Foundation (including receptions, tours of private homes, and a brunch and eggnog party in a private historic residence; $117 per person, Dec. 14-16, senior citizen Christmas parties Dec. 14-15, breakfasts with Santa at the Mulberry Inn Dec. 17-22, Dickens feasts Dec. 21-25, and more. For a brochure detailing all the Christmas doings in Savannah write the Savannah Hospitality Association, P.O. Box 9841, Savannah, GA 31412.

Arizona sportsmen turn to frog hunting

SIERRA VISTA, Ariz. (AP) — When a couple of avid sportsmen such as Dee Vannoy and Wayne Kaiser are between the season of the field and the season of the stream, they know what to do.

And that's to strike out for the nearest marsh and practice the amphibious sport of frog gigging.

With their rods and reels and lures and ammunition stored away for the season, Kaiser and Vannoy drag out their 79-cent barbed metal gigs, attach them to the nearest old broom handles, put on some clothes they don't mind getting muddy and head out at dusk to their "secret ponds" somewhere in Cochise County.

"It breaks up the cabin fever," said Kaiser, an animal control officer with the city of Sierra Vista.

Kaiser and Vannoy, a Sierra Vista public works employee, are longtime fishing and hunting buddies who try to hunt or fish every chance they get.

To them, frog gigging is a perfect mix of the field and stream sports they enjoy so much and makes a fine substitute for the fishing and hunting they would really rather be doing.

The skill in frog gigging as practiced by Vannoy and Kaiser is a large dose of patience combined with the ability to discern the difference between the riveted bullfrogs and the clumps of reeds and weeds in the shadows before they get too close and send the creatures swimming or leaping out of gig range.

The frogs can be found floating either in the water or among the tall grass at the edge of the marsh, for these amphibians like to come out of the water at night.

"The later it gets, the higher up on shore you'll find them," Kaiser said in explaining the habits of the bullfrog he has come to know so well.

When the frogs leave the water, he said, they like to hide near rocks or drain pipes or clumps of weeds.

Japanese handbook helps Americans communicate

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A handbook designed to enable Americans to communicate with the Japanese is offered free by the Japan National Tourist Organization, 624 S. Grand Ave., Los Angeles 90017. Here's how it works: Questions tourists ask most frequently are written in both English and Japanese on the left page. Multiple answers appear on the right page. Just show the handbook to a passerby, point to your question and you have your answer in a jiffy. Other questions answered by telephone (toll-free) anywhere in Japan outside Tokyo or Kyoto. Haitian hotels face problems

New York Times News Service

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — In a little less than two years six tourist hotels here have closed and at least three others are in trouble with the banks, according to an official of Haiti's Hotel and Tourist Association.

A handful of hotels that have been aggressively catering to repeat business travelers have managed to operate at an average of about 40 percent capacity for the year, Joel Thebaud, the vice president of the Hotel and Tourist Association, said in an interview.

But, he said, most of the 35 or so others are barely surviving, with occupancies averaging 20 to 25 percent. A few hotels, he said, have gone weeks without a guest.

The operators of the three gambling casinos in the capital and the dozen or so elegant restaurants that offer such delicacies as glazed quail and poached Canadian salmon say they have been able to stay in business mainly because of the patronage of the small group of well-to-do Haitian businessmen, professionals and government officials.

"Look at my dining room, look at my hotel," one hotel and restaurant owner said, gesturing toward rows of empty tables set with fine china and silver. He noted that he had had "one of the worst summer seasons ever."

Thebaud said he believed Haiti's tourist business was at its lowest ebb in at least 20 years.

Thebaud, as well as others in the industry and government officials, say there are a number of reasons for the slump. The most enduring problem, they say, is the poor reputation the country gained under the ruling Duvalier family.

Added precautions needed when traveling by charter

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

At least two major lessons are to be learned from the recent situation in which more than 3,000 American travelers were left briefly stranded in Europe after a Connecticut-based charter travel agency suddenly ceased operation:

— Federal safeguards aimed at protecting passengers on charter flights and tours from such occurrences aren't foolproof. But they apparently have made it possible for the stranded passengers-and those who had paid in advance for round-trip tickets but had not yet left home-to recover most, if not all, of their losses.

— Travelers contemplating a charter flight should consider several precautionary measures, such as taking out trip cancellation insurance, which is available at a reasonable cost, and checking in advance on the charter firm's reliability.

The firm that closed down in this case was Value Vacations of Winsted, Conn., which had offered frequent charter flights during the summer to several European cities from Boston, New York and Baltimore-Washington International airport. On Friday, Aug. 10, Value Vacations shut its doors, apparently in a contractual dispute with Arrow Airways of Miami, which had supplied the planes.

Arrow Airways says a point had been reached when it was not being paid for its flights and, therefore, it no longer intended to fly for Value Vacations, according to Hoyte Decker, spokesman for the Civil Aeronautics Board, which is investigating the incident. However, Arrow continued ferrying returning passengers to the United States for the remainder of the Aug. 10 weekend.

About 3,000 Americans holding return tickets from Value Vacations were forced to seek alternative flights home. Many discovered their problem only when they phoned Value Vacations' European representative to reconfirm their return journey.

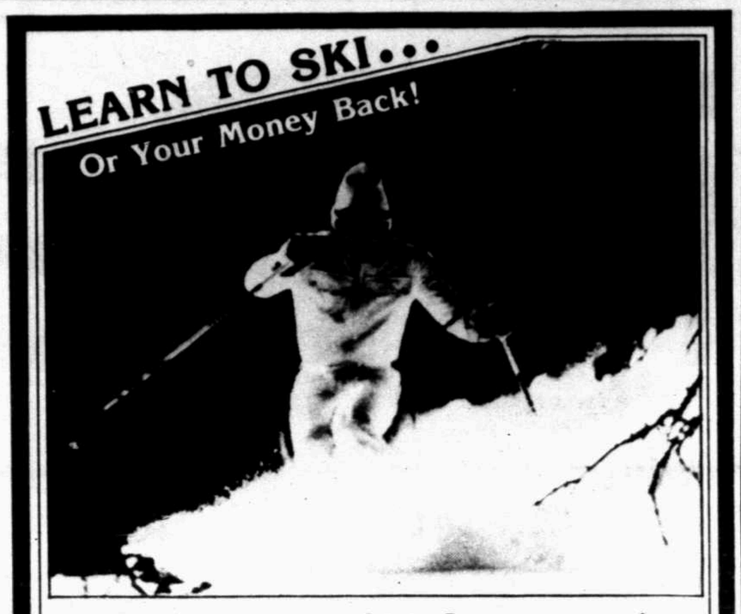

Although Value Vacations' customers ran into problems, tens of thousands of other travelers routinely fly on charters without major difficulties. For greater protection, however, charter passengers should consider these precautions:

— Buy trip cancellation insurance: A number of insurance companies sell it through travel agencies and charter firms. One of the nation's largest programs is Travel Guard, offered by Sentry of Stevens Point, Wisc. With Sentry, a $600 round-trip ticket can be insured for $30. Passengers stranded abroad will be refunded the cost of an economy ticket home; travelers who have not begun their trip will get the price of their ticket back.

— Inquire about the reliability of the charter operator with an experienced travel agent familiar with charter flights operating from local airports.

— Check the charter firm's complaint record with a local office of consumer affairs or the Civil Aeronautics Board's Office of Congressional, Community and Consumer Affairs, 673-6047. If a charter operator has a long list of consumer complaints, it may convince you to do business elsewhere.

— Charge your flight on a credit card when possible: If your plane does not depart, you have a case for challenging the bill for goods not received.

RAIL PASSES

A pass which can give you freedom to use the excellent rail system in Europe during certin periods of time can often be an excellent buy. Most of these passes have to be purchased from a travel agent in the U.S. before departing for Europe. The most well-known pass is the Eurailpass, valid for rail travel in 16 countries, with the one glaring exception being Great Britian which has Britrial Pass. One of the major advantages of these passes is the convenience of hopping on a train and going where and when you like. The other is cost. Because the pass has a fixed cost, the more you travel, the lower will be your cost per mile.

Making your travel arrangements through a travel agent can save you money. At LONES TRAVEL SERVICE, we can tell you about rail passes, hotel or other living accomodations to suit your budget, saliling, air fares, and everything else you need to make your trip the dream of a lifetime. Our computerized facility makes all plans hassle-free. Stop in and see us at 319 W. Texas, on the street level of the Permian Bldg., Mon. through Fri., between 8 and 5 or on Sat. by appointment. Phone: 682-8645.

A Eurailpass must be validated at a European train station on the first day of your rail journey.

Making it big with burritos

It's no longer a taco world

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

George and Yolanda Sosa and Jose Cuevas all have an ironic story to tell about burritos. Growing up in Texas they were ashamed of the burritos they had to take to school for lunch. They would hide them, and when the opportunity availed, would quickly trade them to the gringo kids for sandwiches. The irony? Today Cuevas (Jumburrito) and the Sosas (El Burrito) are living the good life from the sale of burritos.

It was a taco-colored world (Taco Bell, Taco Villa, Taco Viva, Senor Taco) in which the Cuevas and Sosas decided to launch their burrito enterprises. Now, both believe that burritos may one day be the dominant item in Mexican fast foods.

Six years ago George Sosa took stock of the situation and decided the conditions were ripe and what the world, or at least Midland, needed was a better burrito, served in a fast food setting.

"Genuine, high quality burritos were being served in the Mexican sit-down restaurants, but none from fast food stores. I thought people would pay the difference, and we were right. The demand was there."

FOLLOWING SOSA'S success Jose Cuevas launched his innovative jumbo-sized burritos, an idea he picked up from his uncle's restaurant in McAllen, Texas, but the demand for burritos did not divide and wane with the two competing stores in town; it only multiplied.

Today Cuevas' two locations on Lamesa Road and Midkiff are selling about 1,400 burritos daily, while Sosa makes about 1,000 tortillas daily to satify his two locations on Big Spring and Michigan.

"When we started in March 1979," said Sosa, "There was me, my wife and one lady making tortillas. We now have 10 employees, and have had a steady growth of 20 percent per year each year."

Sosa said that when they started the El Burrito in an closed Kentucky Fried Chicken location on Big Spring, the landlord didn't give them much chance of lasting the year. But, within a few months he had quit his job at the Midland Fire

Jose Cueves samples his fast-selling Jumburrito, which was launched in 1980 and may gross $1 million for him next year. Tortillas, below, made daily at El Burrito, are secret to good burritos. Yolanda Sosa, right, and her husband George launched the first successful burrito store in Midland.

Exxon forms property acquisititions group

In a move designed to improve its ability to ferret out and to respond quickly and competitively to acquisition opportunities, Exxon's Midland-based Midcontinent Division has formed a property acquisitions group that will be managed by A.H. Barber, currently division reservoir engineer.

"In the last 12 months, Barber has been involved in acquiring producing properties with reserves of 32 million oil-equivalent barrels. Establishing the acquisitions group and allowing Barber and his staff to work full-time demonstrates our commitment to this activity," according to Dan Mendell III, manager of the production division.

Barber and his staff have been asked to identify promising property purchase opportunities, coordinate technical and economic analysis of these properties, recommend which acquisitions to pursue and to implement negotiations with others.

"The group will also perform coordination functions to conclude the sale and assimilate newly acquired properties," Mendell observed.

Industrial production frozen in October

WASHINGTON (AP) — Production at the nation's factories, mines and utilities was frozen in October at the previous month's level in a further sign that the pace of economic growth has slowed dramatically, the government said today.

The report by the Federal Reserve Board said that output was unchanged from the September level, when production had fallen by 0.5 percent to stand at 165.2 percent of the 1967 level of 100.

The decline had broken a string of 21 consecutive monthly advances and was the first setback since November 1982, the low point of the last recession.

The unchanged output total for October was another in a string of recent business barometers that have pointed to slower growth in the economy. The gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, grew at an annual rate of only 2.7 percent from July through September, less than a third of the pace set in the first six months of the year.

Economists are divided on whether the current slowdown is a transitional period to slower but steady growth or an indication that the economy is in danger of tumbling into another recession.

Half of the September decline, which originally was put at 0.6 percent, was blamed on the effects of the strike at General Motors Corp.

Will Reagan bring back Richard Nixon?

In last Sunday's edition of the Reporter-Telegram, City Editor Gary Ott, issued a passionate plea for Americans to stop blaming the ills of the world on Jimmy Carter, to forgive him his shortcomings, and welcome him back into the world of the redeemed and living.

I would basically agree with that. One of the shortcomings of this country is that it holds grudges much too long, and seldom forgives failure.

I would agree with Mr. Ott that we should forgive Jimmy Carter and welcome him back into the fold. Jimmy Carter was not a good president; that is obvious. Moreover, he was a disaster, but he did have good intentions. As one commentator recently reported on a network talk show: "Jimmy Carter probably had the best intentions of any president we have had in this century, but the least ability."

But this is all the more reason he should be forgiven and welcomed back into the ranks of learned advisors. After all, we always learn more from our failures than our successes, and that being the case, Jimmy Carter has some important lessons he could pass on to President Reagan.

TAKING THAT LOGIC one step further, I for one, would like to see all ex-presidents given a formal, honorary advisory post in the administration of each president. It would be more or less a council of presidents that would meet from time to time to compare notes, bounce around ideas, and exchange personal experiences, and observations on world events and world leaders.

Being the leader of the free world and the head of the most powerful nation in the world, is a task that requires special vision and comprehension of the big picture. And the president of the United States would do well for himself and the nation to avail himself of the perspective of his predecessors, whether they were great presidents, scoundrels or plain vanilla. Such a view could only enhance his perception of the big picture.

I have said all that to issue my own passionate plea for the restoration of dignity and full citizenship to one of the best presidents this nation has had. I speak, of course, of Richard M. Nixon.

Had it not been for one stupid transgression, Nixon would have surely used his second term mandate to secure for himself a place of greatness in the presidential record.

AS AN EXILE in the shadowy, underworld of public disgrace, Nixon has done his penitence. Now it is time to bring this brilliant, articulate, experienced world leader back into the fold, if not for Richard Nixon, then for the United States of America.

The experience and insight of an ex-president of the United States is simply too valuable a commodity to waste. Less than a handful of men share that rare experience, and their insight is not to let stagnate.

In a recent interview with former Treasury Secretary, Bill Simon, I asked him about his one-time boss.

While he acknowledged the wrong-doing and even stupidity of Nixon's action in the Watergate affair, he had nothing but praise for him as a man and as a president.

Simon said it was time Nixon was forgiven and accorded once again the respect due a man of his experience and stature.

"Leaders in Europe and elsewhere in the world still have a very high regard for President Nixon," said Simon. "They invariably seek out his counsel when visiting in this country, and are appalled that he has been cast off as he has, by his country."

THERE WILL, of course, always be an unforgiving pocket of hard-core resistence from cynical-liberals, warmed-over-hippies, welfare-staters and other assorted anti-establishment types, opposed to according any measure of formal respect to Richard Nixon, but that should be discounted for what it is and a move initiated immediately to bring Richard Nixon back.

Secretary Simon informed this writer that the time was never more ripe to bring the former president back. He stated that recently Nixon was received warmly by a gathering of New York liberals, and there seemed to be some mellowing of the anti-Nixon sentiment.

And why not? The long black wall bearing the names of America's Viet Nam dead would be much longer, had Richard Nixon not finally ended the horror of feeding 19-year old American boys to that insatiable war machine.

Let us not forget either that not many years ago the most serious threat to American security was Red China. It was Richard Nixon who put the diplomatic ball in motion, with Henry Kissingers secret flights to China, that finally ushered that backward, belligerent nation into the twentieth century and set the stage for sweeping reforms in China that is moving them closer to the capitalist camp. Still far from being a friend, the Chinese threat has at least been defused for a time, and any pulled fuse in this powder keg world is something to rejoice about.

NOR SHOULD we forget that it was Nixon who ended military conscription, a form of involuntary servitude that disrupted the lives of millions of young Americans each May.

Nor should we forget that there was a growing, vital economy, without double-digit inflation and interest rates, when Richard Nixon was president.

In an article in Wall Street Journal this week, Nixon urged Reagan not to waste his mandate, as some presidents (including himself) had done, and to move quickly in the Middle East to avoid a confrontation of the superpowers. He also cautioned the president to concentrate on Third World countries, focus on a few issues and resolve to make steady progress rather than major breakthroughs in arms talks. The former president also said Japan should pay a higher price for the free ride it is getting militarily, by helping with economic development in Third World countries.

That is pretty solid advice. The kind that will not do President Reagan any harm.

As one who follows media trends, I have noticed what seems to be some "stage setting" as related to Richard Nixon. His press has not only increased, but it has become more positive.

I PREDICT that early in his second term Ronald Reagan will bring Richard Nixon back into the fold by giving him a formal ambassador-at-large or trouble-shooter post.

It is the right thing to do. The time is right.

Exxon forms property acquisititions group

In a move designed to improve its ability to ferret out and to respond quickly and competitively to acquisition opportunities, Exxon's Midland-based Midcontinent Division has formed a property acquisitions group that will be managed by A.H. Barber, currently division reservoir engineer.

"In the last 12 months, Barber has been involved in acquiring producing properties with reserves of 32 million oil-equivalent barrels. Establishing the acquisitions group and allowing Barber and his staff to work full-time demonstrates our commitment to this activity," according to Dan Mendell III, manager of the production division.

Barber and his staff have been asked to identify promising property purchase opportunities, coordinate technical and economic analysis of these properties, recommend which acquisitions to pursue and to implement negotiations with others.

"The group will also perform coordination functions to conclude the sale and assimilate newly acquired properties," Mendell observed.

Industrial production frozen in October

WASHINGTON (AP) — Production at the nation's factories, mines and utilities was frozen in October at the previous month's level in a further sign that the pace of economic growth has slowed dramatically, the government said today.

The report by the Federal Reserve Board said that output was unchanged from the September level, when production had fallen by 0.5 percent to stand at 165.2 percent of the 1967 level of 100.

The decline had broken a string of 21 consecutive monthly advances and was the first setback since November 1982, the low point of the last recession.

The unchanged output total for October was another in a string of recent business barometers that have pointed to slower growth in the economy. The gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, grew at an annual rate of only 2.7 percent from July through September, less than a third of the pace set in the first six months of the year.

Economists are divided on whether the current slowdown is a transitional period to slower but steady growth or an indication that the economy is in danger of tumbling into another recession.

Half of the September decline, which originally was put at 0.6 percent, was blamed on the effects of the strike at General Motors Corp.

Will Reagan bring back Richard Nixon?

In last Sunday's edition of the Reporter-Telegram, City Editor Gary Ott, issued a passionate plea for Americans to stop blaming the ills of the world on Jimmy Carter, to forgive him his shortcomings, and welcome him back into the world of the redeemed and living.

I would basically agree with that. One of the shortcomings of this country is that it holds grudges much too long, and seldom forgives failure.

I would agree with Mr. Ott that we should forgive Jimmy Carter and welcome him back into the fold. Jimmy Carter was not a good president; that is obvious. Moreover, he was a disaster, but he did have good intentions. As one commentator recently reported on a network talk show: "Jimmy Carter probably had the best intentions of any president we have had in this century, but the least ability."

But this is all the more reason he should be forgiven and welcomed back into the ranks of learned advisors. After all, we always learn more from our failures than our successes, and, that being the case, Jimmy Carter has some important lessons he could pass on to President Reagan.

TAKING THAT LOGIC one step further, I for one, would like to see all ex-presidents given a formal, honorary advisory post in the administration of each president. It would be more or less a council of presidents that would meet from time to time to compare notes, bounce around ideas, and exchange personal experiences, and observations on world events and world leaders.

Being the leader of the free world and the head of the most powerful nation in the world, is a task that requires special vision and comprehension of the big picture. And the president of the United States would do well for himself and the nation to avail himself of the perspective of his predecessors, whether they were great presidents, scoundrels or plain vanilla. Such a view could only enhance his perception of the big picture.

I have said all that to issue my own passionate plea for the restoration of dignity and full citizenship to one of the best presidents this nation has had. I speak, of course, of Richard M. Nixon.

Had it not been for one stupid transgression, Nixon would have surely used his second term mandate to secure for himself a place of greatness in the presidential record.

AS AN EXILE in the shadowy, underworld of public disgrace, Nixon has done his penitence. Now it is time to bring this brilliant, articulate, experienced world leader back into the fold, if not for Richard Nixon, then for the United States of America.

The experience and insight of an ex-president of the United States is simply too valuable a commodity to waste. Less than a handful of men share that rare experience, and their insight is not to let stagnate.

In a recent interview with former Treasury Secretary, Bill Simon, I asked him about his one-time boss.

While he acknowledged the wrong-doing and even stupidity of Nixon's action in the Watergate affair, he had nothing but praise for him as a man and as a president.

Simon said it was time Nixon was forgiven and accorded once again the respect due a man of his experience and stature.

"Leaders in Europe and elsewhere in the world still have a very high regard for President Nixon," said Simon. "They invariably seek out his counsel when visiting in this country, and are appalled that he has been cast off as he has, by his country."

THERE WILL, of course, always be an unforgiving pocket of hard-core resistence from cynical-liberals, warmed-over-hippies, welfare-staters and other assorted anti-establishment types, opposed to according any measure of formal respect to Richard Nixon, but that should be discounted for what it is and a move initiated immediately to bring Richard Nixon back.

Secretary Simon informed this writer that the time was never more ripe to bring the former president back. He stated that recently Nixon was received warmly by a gathering of New York liberals, and there seemed to be some mellowing of the anti-Nixon sentiment.

And why not? The long black wall bearing the names of America's Viet Nam dead would be much longer, had Richard Nixon not finally ended the horror of feeding 19-year old American boys to that insatiable war machine.

Let us not forget either that not many years ago the most serious threat to American security was Red China. It was Richard Nixon who put the diplomatic ball in motion, with Henry Kissingers secret flights to China, that finally ushered that backward, belligerent nation into the twentieth century and set the stage for sweeping reforms in China that is moving them closer to the capitalist camp. Still far from being a friend, the Chinese threat has at least been defused for a time, and any pulled fuse in this powder keg world is something to rejoice about.

NOR SHOULD we forget that it was Nixon who ended military conscription, a form of involuntary servitude that disrupted the lives of millions of young Americans each May.

Nor should we forget that there was a growing, vital economy, without double-digit inflation and interest rates, when Richard Nixon was president.

In an article in Wall Street Journal this week, Nixon urged Reagan not to waste his mandate, as some presidents (including himself) had done, and to move quickly in the Middle East to avoid a confrontation of the superpowers. He also cautioned the president to concentrate on Third World countries, focus on a few issues and resolve to make steady progress rather than major breakthroughs in arms talks. The former president also said Japan should pay a higher price for the free ride it is getting militarily, by helping with economic development in Third World countries.

That is pretty solid advice. The kind that will not do President Reagan any harm.

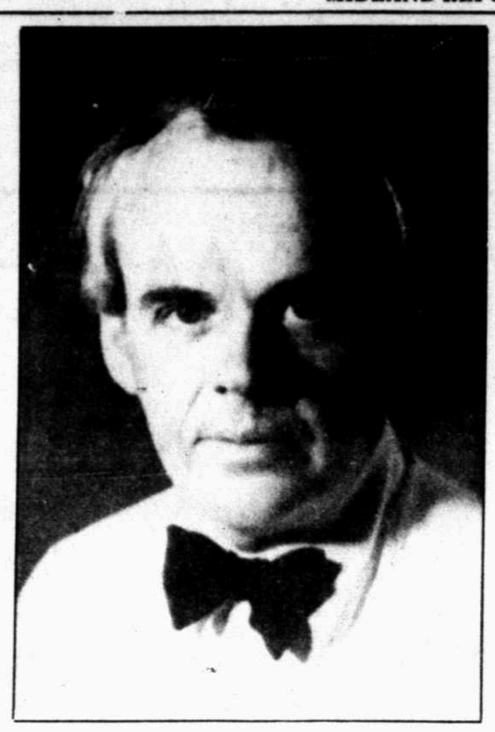

As one who follows media trends, I have noticed what seems to be some "stage setting" as related to Richard Nixon. His press has not only increased, but it has become more positive.

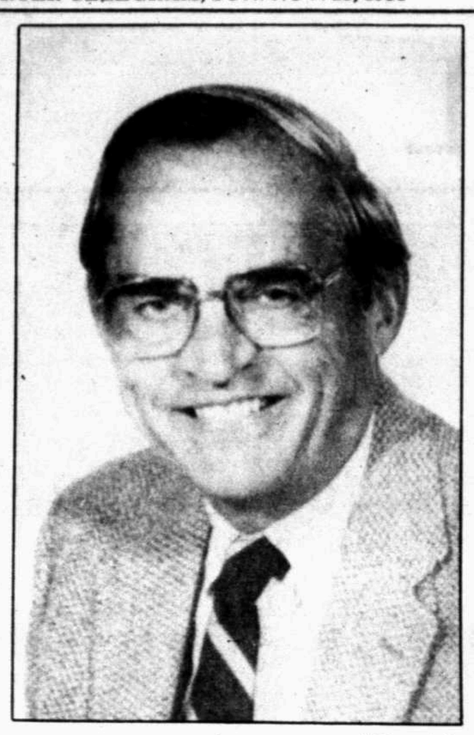

I PREDICT that early in his second term Ronald Reagan will bring Richard Nixon back into the fold by giving him a formal ambassador-at-large or trouble-shooter post.

It is the right thing to do. The time is right.

Buyout criticized

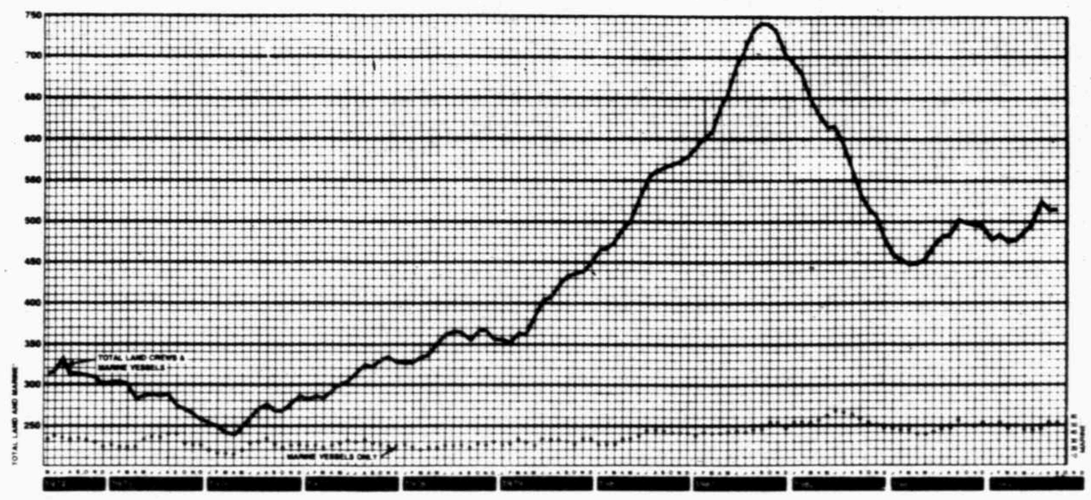

Top management of the Des Moines Register and Tribune Co. has been split by a purchase offer from a group including two executives of the newspaper company. Company chairman David Kruidenier (r) said he "very much" regrets the $112 million offer from the Dow Jones & Co. and four local businessmen, including Register publisher Gary Gerlach (l) and Register and Tribune Co. president Michael Gartner (center). Gartner and Gerlach have been placed on paid leaves of absence pending outcome of the offer, which would end 81 years of control of the company by members of the Cowles family.

Number of seismic crews increased in September

The number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil in the United States and U.S. waters during September increased by one crew over August, according to statistics released recently by the Society of Exploration Geophysicists.

The land crew increased by two crews, but the marine vessel total decreased by one, for a net increase of one crew.

The September total of 524 represents an increase of less than 1 percent over last month, a 5 percent increase over September 1983, a 2 percent decrease from September 1982, a 30 percent decrease from September 1981, an 8 percent decrease from September 1980, a 21 percent increase over September 1979 and a gain of 48 percent over the same month in 1978.

Exxon field yields 1.5 million barrels

MIDLAND—A 1982 Exxon discovery in Howard County in West Texas has already produced its first 1.5 million barrels of oil.

Exxon's Moore Deep (Fusselman) Field, located some three miles southwest of BigSpring, began production in March, 1982 and yielded its millionth barrel 25 months later. Cumulative production from the relatively small 900-acre field reached the 1.5 million barrel level in September and is expected to top two million barrels sometime in 1985.

"Our performance in the Moore Deep is a good illustration of how the market drives your activities," Dan Mendell III, manager of Exxon USA's Mid-continent Division, here, said.

"With the decline in demand for new gas production, we focused our attention on improving production from existing oil reservoirs as well as stepping out to find new fields and getting them on-stream as quickly as possible. In this field, we were able to drill ten 10,000 foot wells by January, 1984, or in 24 months, and fully develop our acreage.

"Our technical people determined that the field could be developed at this accelerated pace without causing any damage to the reservoir," Mendell added.

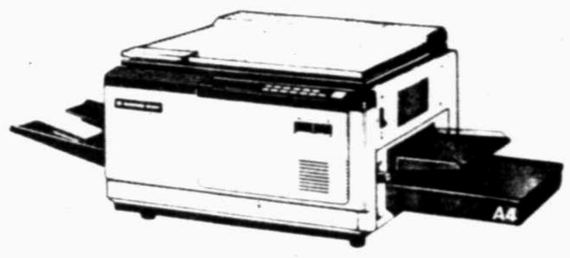

"This has proven to be the case as production rates have remained on forecast. Exxon's production is more than 2,700 barrels of oil per day, an average of 270 barrels per well."

Mendell said the Moore Deep Field is an example of deeper drilling activity in an established, shallower field. The Moore (San Andres) Field, which produces from 3,100 to 3,200 feet in the Permian San Andres dolomite, has yielded more than 10 million barrels of oil since its 1937 discovery.

Communist Cuba takes look at economic system

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

Communist Cuba, caught between collapsing sugar prices and ballooning foreign debt, is taking a hard new look at its economic system, American analysts report. And it is doing it in a surprisingly public way.

Beginning this month, Cuban planners are holding meetings across the island on whether recent reforms decentralizing economic power and allowing some free enterprise are working, the Cuban Communist Party newspaper Granma reports.

A party study group has concluded, meanwhile, that factories and other Cuban enterprises have been given too little autonomy to do their jobs.

"It's really incredible," said economist Sergio Roca, a leading U.S. specialist on the Cuban system. "Party leaders talk about these things among themselves. But I have not seen these kinds of admissions in the Cuban press in years and years."

Although Fidel Castro's government may seem preoccupied with U.S. hostility, Central America and African wars, it is clearly hard at work on something closer to home — the domestic economy and next year's pivotal Third Congress of the Cuban Communist Party.

The debate at the December 1985 Congress should be "rather vigorous," Jorge Dominguez, a noted Cuba analyst at Harvard University, said in a telephone interview.

"It will be between those who say, 'You promised us all these wonderful things if we liberalized our economy, but we haven't done well,' and those who say, 'If we hadn't liberalized our economy we'd be in even worse shape.'"

Cuba's 10 million people are in an economic corner.

The world price of sugar, which accounts for four-fifths of Cuba's exports, has dropped to below 6 cents a pound, from as high as 76 cents nine years ago. Cuba's national bank president, Raul Leon Torras, has compared the sugar crisis to "the worst moment of the Great Depression."

The open-market price affects only about one-third or less of Cuba's sales —the rest is sold to Soviet-bloc countries at much higher guaranteed prices. The U.S. State Department's chief Cuba-watcher, Kenneth N. Skoug Jr., estimates the current Soviet subsidy of Cuba equals $12 million or more a day.

The sugar earns Soviet rubles that go right back to Moscow for Soviet oil. Rubles cannot buy the manufactured goods, technology and expertise the Cubans need from Western Europe and Japan. For that, they must sell their sugar at paltry prices on the dollar market.

At the same time, Cuba's foreign debts are mounting.

It has negotiated an extension on loan repayments of $350 million due in 1984 to Canadian, Japanese and West European banks and governments. But the biggest debt comes due at the end of 1985 — the equivalent of more than $10 billion owed to the Soviet Union, borrowings continuously "rolled over" since the 1960s.

The Cuban reforms, designed to boost productivity in a notoriously inefficient economy, were introduced beginning in the late 1970s. They give local enterprises greater decision-making powers, use prices and "profits" to control the economy, offer worker incentives, and allow craftsmen and farmers to sell production privately.

Roca, of New York's Adelphi University, told a reporter the public debate emerged earlier this year in the official Cuban news media, when a Communist Party study panel on "enterprise profitability" complained that, despite the reforms, local production units still had insufficient economic power.

Then, on Oct. 22, Granma disclosed that the national planning board would hold meetings in workplaces across Cuba to determine whether the reforms are being properly carried out, and whether some "insufficiencies" are "due to the very conception of the new economic system."

Visitors to Havana also note a new candor in the press — open criticism of unproductive factories, poor restaurant service and similar problems.

"There's a struggle going on," Roca said. "Publicly the policy is still for decentralization, but there is still a very strong remnant in favor of the old system. The next battleground will be the party Congress."

The Cubans also have put a new task force to work studying how to de-emphasize sugar and diversify the economy, a goal that has eluded Castro's revolutionaries for 25 years.

Cuba is trying to build up its nickel, citrus and tourist industries and expand trade contacts, long hobbled by the U.S. economic embargo. But the Soviet bloc still accounts for almost 90 percent of Cuban commerce, and the Cubans are plowing ahead with an all-out push for a 12 million-ton sugar harvest by 1990, a 50-percent increase.

"It is utterly absurd," said Wayne S. Smith, the diplomat who headed the U.S. Interests Section in Havana in 1979-82.

"The whole future of sugar as an export commodity is at best uncertain. You've got substitutes, corn syrup, artificial sweeteners, coming on the market. And here they are putting more and more land in sugar," Smith said in a telephone interview.

Whatever the current economic uncertainties, ordinary Cubans seem largely unaffected.

Smith, who visits Cuba periodically, said the people appear better dressed and better fed than just a few years ago, though luxuries remain few and expensive.

"They're resilient," said Dominguez. "They're not very diversified, not very efficient, they depend on one crop, one country. But the one thing they're good at is that they deal well with international economic adversity."

Soviet aid is still the keystone, however.

Counts have sizeable increase

The Permian Basin and national rig counts both saw sizeable increases this week.

The Basin's count increased by 16 working rigs — from 380 to 396. A year ago the total was 340.

Andrews County showed an increase of two rigs, making its total 30 rigs. Glasscock County had three additional rigs, increasing its total to 10 rigs.

Loving had four more rigs — up from 5 to 9. Martin's total increased from 14 to 16.

On the other side, Upton County's total dropped by three rigs.

Nationally, the rig count increased from 2554 to 2597. A year ago, the total was 2556.

Texas' rig count went up from 856 last week to 878 for this week. Louisiana and Oklahoma saw an additional 10 rigs. Canada also saw an increase. It's count was up from 227 to 290.

However, New Mexico dropped six rigs to 91. Michigan lost three rigs this week as well as Wyoming, dropping their totals to 43 and 131, respectively.

U.S. senator predicts gas deregulation

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — U.S. Sen. Don Nickles said today he is optimistic Congress will move quickly towards total deregulation of natural gas when it convenes in January.

The Republican senator from Oklahoma plugged for deregulation in remarks before Gov. George Nigh's 5th Energy Conference at the Lincoln Plaza in Oklahoma City.

Contrary to the opinion of some members of Congress, natural gas deregulation will be a boon to the consumers, Nickles said.

When oil was deregulated a few years ago, Nickles said there were predictions that gasoline prices at the pump would skyrocket.

"There were predictions of $2 a gallon gas, but that hasn't happen. We've seen oil prices actually go down," he said.

Asked if the reduction in gasoline prices was not the result of many factors, he said: "Yes, a lot of factors were involved, but allowing the marketplace to work is a key factor."

Nickles was the first speaker at the conference. Scheduled to speak later was U.S. Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla. Frank A. McPherson, chairman and chief executive officer of Kerr-McGee Corp., was to give the keynote address.

In an interview before his appearance, Nickles said he believes President Reagan will announce a major tax reform package soon.

Seat belts save lives but cost GM

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. is getting fan mail from drivers who say the No. 1 automaker's advertising campaign promoting seat-belt use may have saved their lives.

GM's seven-month-old program pays $10,000 to the estate of anyone killed in a traffic accident while buckled up in one of the automaker's new cars or light trucks. A total of $210,000 has been paid on 21 claims so far, the company said Tuesday.

"Your commercial may have saved my life, and for this my family and I thank you," Robert Keaton, a 24-year-old security guard, said in a letter to GM's Chevrolet Division.

Keaton said in a telephone interview from Redmond, Wash., that he fastened his seat belts after hearing the commercial on the radio while driving in the Seattle suburb.

Twenty seconds later, "an 88-year-old man driving a big Pontiac ran the intersection, and I ran into him," Keaton said.

"It totaled my car," Keaton said. "The officer that investigated here said I wouldn't have been nearly as fortunate without the seat belt."

Peyton's to sell half year's volume during holidays

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer

As the busy Christmas season approaches, Midland retailers will have their hands full. But Peyton's Toys will have its toybox filled to the brim from Thanksgiving to Christmas — when the store will do about half of its 1984 volume.

This Christmas will be the 32nd for this well-known Midland enterprise, which was once the toy store for the Permian Basin, drawing customers from Rankin, Odessa, McCamey, Pecos and other distant points in West Texas.

Bob Peyton said his store begins ordering Christmas merchandise in February for the following season.

"Thanksgiving to Christmas is our biggest time," he said. "We'll do about 46 to 50 percent of our year's business during this time."

The toy business is a $3 billion business each year, Peyton said, adding that he did not know the amount Midlanders spend each year non toys. He said they are buying more toys now than when he opened his first toy store in September 1952.

The increase in toys sales is because of television commercials, he said. "Television governs toy sales," Peyton explained, adding that advertisers start Christmas toy commercials as early as July.

Some of the items Peyton expects to be his biggest sellers this holiday season are Cabbage Patch Dolls, Trivial Pursuit, Gobots, Masters of the Universe and the Transformers.

"I expect the Cabbage Patch Dolls to surpass everything by numbers," he said, adding that he has a standing order of 288 of the dolls each month but only can receive half of that number. "The number we have are sold within a day or two," he said.

The reason the dolls are so popular is that they appeal to everyone, he said.

Peyton also sells educational toys, such as the Teach Me series, which help children learn their numbers and shapes.

Although the educational toys do not sell as well as the new dolls or robots, Peyton said he thinks the robots are as educational as the Teach Me series. The new toys appeal to a child's fantasy, he explained.

One reason the educational toys may not be as popular is that they are not advertised as often as the other toys.

When Peyton opened his first toy store, the popular items then were Terri Lee Dolls, metal trucks, yoyos and tops, he said. Most toys cost about $5 then, he said. Now they average $25 each, although some are over $50.

The first store was located in a 1,200-square foot building on East Texas. "The building is gone now but I think it once was Dr. Shannon's veterinarian clinic. Now, Coca-Cola is about where it was," he said.

The toy store moved in March 1953 to the Andrews Highway and relocated again in 1961 to its present location at 2310 Missouri. Both moves were to accommodate the store's growing inventory, Peyton said.

His 10,000-square feet store, now celebrating its 32nd anniversary, handles 20 categories of toys, games and hobby and art supplies, including painting equipment, model planes and cars and collector dolls.

He said he worked hard to enlarge the store and build up the wide variety of products he sells but estimates it would even be harder to start a toy store now. "It would be rather difficult to start in the toy business now. I've been here a long time. I wouldn't want to start over again," he said.

TAE revenues increase during third quarter

Texas American Energy Corp. has reported its results for the third quarter and nine months ended Sept. 30, 1984.

For the nine month period ended Sept. 30, the firm's consolidated revenues were $143,404,000 as compared with $138,424,000 during the same period in 1983. The primary reason for this improvement was increased revenue from TAE's utility division, Western Kentucky Gas Co., according to William F. Judd, president.

Earnings available to common stockholders reached $1,605,000 or $.23 per common share compared to a loss of $755,000 or $.11 per share during the nine month period in 1983. The 1983 loss included a loss from discontinued operations of $3.6 million or $.50 per share.

Working capital provided from continuing operations (cash flow) in the nine month period increased $1.6 million over the same period in 1983, reaching $16.2 million. Stockholders equity was $49 million on Sept. 30, 1984 compared with $34 million one year earlier.

For the third quarter ended Sept. 30, 1984, consolidated revenues were $32,068,000 compared to $30,540,000 in the prior year After allowance for dividends on preferred stock in 1984, the company had a loss of $2,001,000 or $.30 per common share compared to a loss of $4,164,000 or $.58 per common share in the third quarter of 1983. The 1983 loss includes $3.3 million or $.46 per share from discontinued operations.

The primary factor in the decline in earnings from continuing operations was the non-recurring, incremental costs incurred in connection with the company's 1984 annual meeting proxy solicitation and related settlement of litigation.

Masters Energy reports income

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (SWN) — Masters Energy Corp. today reported net income of $1,572,482 ($.09 per share) for the third quarter ending on Sept. 30, 1984. This compares to a net loss of $238,837 ($.02 per share) during the third quarter of 1983. For the first nine months ended Sept. 30, 1984, the company reported net income of $1,822,753 ($.10 per share).

Oilmen's side investment blossoms into large firm

By CANDICE HUGHES
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — What started as a $25,000 side investment for a pair of Dallas oil entrepreneurs has blossomed into an $18 million venture into a toll-free national hotline for flowers.

John F. Davis III and James Poage have created a new company, 800-Flowers Inc., which takes its name from the telephone number customers can use any time to have flowers delivered anywhere.

"It was one of those things that was a side investment," said Davis, the vice president of marketing. "We never dreamed it would get this big."

Davis and Poage looked at the estimated $3.5 billion floral delivery industry and decided it was a fertile area.

"Today's flower business is disorganized and fragmented, with great variablity in quality and service," Poage said.

Its founders say 800-Flowers, which began operation in October, differs from other wire delivery services because it guarantees quality.

"The person who sent you these flowers wanted them to be beautiful," says the message accompanying every order. "If for any reason, they are not, please call us within 24 hours. We will replace them."

Davis said 800-Flowers is establishing a hand-picked network of 6,000 florists that will be monitored by the company's 16 field representatives.

"When you call a florist, he picks out someone through a directory. There is no personal service," he said. "There are 44,000 florists in the U.S. We've picked the top."

The giant in the floral delivery business, FTD, welcomes the competition, said FTD spokeswoman Judy Yovanovich in Southfield, Mich.

"In general, we think competition is good for the flower business," Ms. Yovanovich said.

800-Flowers' service extends to the "forget me not" plan that provides automatic deliveries on special occasions, like anniversaries, Davis said.

"You can call us up one time, give us the dates and we put them in the computer," he explained. "You're covered. You can't ever mess up again."

Unlike the major wire services, 800-Flowers is not focusing on out-of-town orders.

Davis said the new company is also aiming at the even more lucrative intracity business, which he estimates at $2.5 billion a year.

He said 800-Flowers hopes to make the telephone fill the same niche in American life as the street-corner flower vendors do in European life.

"Europeans spent almost five times as much as Americans do on flowers. You walk down the street and you can pick up flowers and take them home," Davis said. "But Americans live in their cars. You can't do that here."

Davis and Poage, both 32, first heard of 800-Flowers in 1982, when it was a struggling new business, barely more than an idea.

"We were brought in as investors with a majority interest in the company," Davis said. "Our initial investment was $25,000."

For almost two years, 800-Flowers was just a little "flyer" for the pair. Their main concern was Mid-South Drilling, an oil and gas exploration company.

The company also was bogged down in a trademark infringement lawsuit with a florist in Wisconsin who had claimed rights to 800-Flowers, but had not acquired the phone number.

In March, the two sides settled out of court. Davis declined to discuss terms of the settlement.

With a clear path, Davis and Poage raised $10 million in a few weeks through a limited partnership with 23 investors and themselves as general partners.

Davis said the total investment in 800-Flowers is now $18 million and includes a pair of IBM computers, telemarketing equipment and a lease on a new building in the Dallas suburb of Irving. Two-thirds of the money, $12 million, is being pumped into advertising.

The company began advertising in Chicago on Oct. 1, moved into the Atlanta market on Nov. 1 and starts up in Dallas on Dec. 1.

"We're rolling out on a controlled basis to make sure we can handle the business," Davis said.

At present, the budding business has 125 "telemarketing representatives" capable of handling 30,000 calls a day. Eventually 800-Flowers hopes to advertise nationally and employ 600 people to take telephone orders.

Ms. Yovanovich of FTD said the flower business is blooming these days. FTD, which is actually a cooperative with 21,000 members worldwide, had sales of nearly $500 million in the fiscal year that ended June 30, up 13.5 percent over the previous year.

Department and began negotiations to buy the building.

CUEVES TELLS a similar success story. "We started in 1980 with $1,500 savings, a $5,000 bank loan and $200 in the bank for operating capital," says Cuevas. "We only grossed $53 the first day, but then it began to take off. That year we grossed $210,000, the next $375,000; then $425,000 in 1983 and so far this year $525,000. Next year we will hit a million dollars in sales for sure."

The youthful entrepreneur opened his second location on cash flow, and plans to do all future expansion and remodeling on cash flow.

Cuevas who has a history in the restaurant business, working for the Midland Hilton and Regency Hotel and his uncle in South Texas, handles the operations of the business while his wife Diane takes care of the books. He has no plans to franchise his highly successful operation, but plans to open one more location in Midland on the Rankin highway, then launch into the frozen food business, selling his Jumburritos to supermarkets.

"I'm really turned on to this business. I'm a flaming capitalist," said Cuevas.

THE SOSAS are taking a different view of their success. "We want to take life a little easier, maybe do some traveling. We're going to remodel here, and maybe go into the tortilla business, but we don't have any expansion plans," said George Sosa.

What do the couples attribute to the success of their enterprises? Both give the credit to the superior tortilla. The qualities listed for a good burrito were: thickness, elasticity, texture and taste.

"You can't have a good burrito without a good tortilla," said Sosa. "We have had the same lady making tortillas for us since the day we opened. She doesn't have a recipe...just does it by feeling the dough."

Jose Cuevas says it a matter of getting the right mixture of flour and lard, so that the tortills will not flake and fall apart.

Also a factor in the success stories has been the variety of eating attainable with the easy-to-make, easy-to-eat burritos, which now include such tasty fillings as fajita and steak.

Breakfast burritos often made with egg, chorizo, potatos, beans or avocado have played a role in increasing the sales volumes of each enterprise, as have have take-outs and drive-through trade.

BOTH ARE EYEING a larger chunk of the family dining market with family promotions. El Burrito offers a family six-pack, while Jumburrito will soon offer a take home package with all the fixings to allow a family to make their own burritos.

Technology eliminates smoke, odor problems

By MARSHALL SCHUON
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Not so long ago, American drivers were being told that diesel oil was the wave of the future; that the diesel automobile was the solution to low fuel economy and high prices at the pump. That forecast failed to come true for a number of reasons, but now technology has eliminated at least two of them: smoke and odor.

There is a new device known as a trap oxidizer, and by using it in 1985 models, Mercedes-Benz has cut, by two-thirds, the smoke and odor of the turbocharged diesels it sells in 11 Western states. In addition, use of the trap means the cars can continue to be sold in California, whose diesel-emission standards for next year are twice as strict as those of the rest of the United States.

Mercedes expects to sell about 80,000 cars in the United States next year, and the trap oxidizer is particularly important to the West German company, since half of those sales will be diesels. Even that is a much smaller percentage than in the past, and Mercedes has changed its product mix to reflect sagging diesel sales that are the result of the stabilization of gasoline prices, the spotty availability of diesel fuel and the diesel engine's inherent noise, odor and smoke.

Methods for reducing the smell and soot have been studied for years, of course, and Mercedes is not alone in the research. Volkswagen has also been experimenting with oxidizers — but in combination with fuel additives, and the company says its version, which feeds tiny bits of magnesium additive into the diesel oil, has reduced soot by 50 percent.

According to Mercedes, however, the new trap oxidizer was found to be best for its engines.

"What we have in our current oxidizer," said A.B. Shuman, a Mercedes spokesman, "is a big cigarette filter in a can. And its practical effect is virtual elimination of smoke and odor, even in hard acceleration."

The oxidizer takes the form of a ceramic honeycomb, housed in a stainless steel casing mounted on the engine's exhaust manifold. The honeycomb is made up of rows of adjoining passages blocked at alternating ends, checkerboard fashion.

The exhaust gas entering any of the square passages cannot flow out without first passing through the porous walls into an adjoining passage open at the other end. The soot particles are trapped within the ceramic structure, and a special coating causes the trapped soot to be burned off, automatically cleaning the oxidizer as the car is driven.

To make sure that all this happens with the lowest possible drop in exhaust pressure, which is necessary for good performance, the ceramic trap must have a large filtering area, must be highly porous and must have sufficient mechanical and thermal strength.

The answer, according to the engineers, was Cordierite, a ceramic substance manufactured by Corning. The catalytic coating, based on vanadium oxide, was added to help the filter burn away trapped soot.

The 3½-pound canister is 6 inches long and 5½ inches in diameter. It has a filtering surface of 1,659 square inches, with 100 filtering cells per square inch. The soot begins to burn off at a temperature of 680 degrees Fahrenheit, although the top end of the effective heat range is nearly 1,200 degrees.

To achieve that, the filter was placed as close to the engine as possible, and modifications were made to raise the heat of the exhaust gases.

"The problem always has been the see-saw relationship between particulates and oxides of nitrogen," Shuman said. " 'Nox' is a product of heat in the combustion chamber, and you control it by recirculating the exhaust. But that boosts particulates, especially as the engine works harder."

Without the trap, the cars spewed out 0.55 gram of soot per mile. For 1985, the California standard is 0.4 of a gram, and that will go to 0.2 in 1986. The Federal standard will also drop to 0.2 in 1987.

DOE investigates recovery processes

BARTLESVILLE, Okla.—The Department of Energy's Bartlesville Project Office has published results of a research investigation examining the processes at work during low-tension surfactant (chemical) flooding for crude oil recovery.

The research was performed for the DOE by the University of Houston. Professors R.W. Flumerfelt and A.C. Payatakes were principal investigators. Fred W. Burtch was DOE technical project officer.

The objective of the research performed for the DOE by the University of Houston was to increase basic knowledge about the effect of surfactant flooding on the mobilization and coalescence (merging of oil droplets) of residual oil. Specifically, the chemical engineering professors studied the dynamics of oil drop coalescence, designed models to explain coalescence mechanisms, and developed and evaluated new procedures for determining surface viscometry or measurement of oil viscosity.

Crude oil remaining in the reservoir after conventional recovery operations is retained in the pore space of reservoir rock. In portions of the reservoir that have been contacted or swept by a injection fluid (water or gas), the residual oil remains as droplets (or ganglia) trapped in either individual pores or clusters of pores. To recover the residual oil, producers inject chemicals into the reservoir to release the oil droplets from the reservoir rock.

Surfactant or chemical flooding is a multiple-slug process involving the addition of surface active chemicals to water. These chemicals reduce the capillary forces that trap the oil droplets in the pores of the rock. The surfactant slug displaces most of the oil from the reservoir volume contacted forming a flowing oil/water bank that is propagated ahead of the surfactant slug. Water is injected to provide a water drive that moves the oil/water bank to producing wells.

The research revealed that the coalescence of mobilized oil droplets is extremely important in residual oil displacement. Because the dynamic interfacial properties associated with low-tension systems are small, solitary droplets will re-entrap after mobilization unless reconnection with other droplets is attained. The fastest coalescence is achieved in the optimal salinity region (salt concentrations where lowest tensions are found). Research on the dynamics of oil ganglia during immiscible displacement is also cited in the report.

EXXON

He stressed that Exxon's basic commitment is to developing and producing its own operated properties but attractive producing property acquisitions can help meet one of the company's continuing goals of increasing oil and gas reserves.

"Many good property acquisition opportunities exist; however, they are very competitive and any successful effort by Exxon will require an aggressive posture and a continuing, full-time manpower commitment to identify and pursue opportunities," Mendell explained.

Mendell said the acquisitions effort is expected to focus on opportunities in west Texas, the Rocky Mountain states, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas and the rest of the midwest where the division operates.

Barber, 42, is a 1965 graduate of Mississippi State University with accounting and engineering degrees. An 18-year veteran of the Exxon USA organization, he has served as the Midcontinent Division reservoir engineer since 1980.

Management Science's brand-name venture in microcomputer software declared failure

N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — When Management Science America Inc. brought its brand-name marketing approach to the microcomputer software business, many analysts said the company had resources to make the strategy work.

Last month, however, the company declared its three-year venture a failure and announced it would sell or spin off its personal computer software division, Peachtree Software Inc.

For Management, which with its mainframe software business will remain one of the nation's three largest independent software companies, the failure was a sobering experience that has at least slightly dampened expectations for its future. And among analysts, the development produced fresh evidence that it takes a smash hit, getting out a broad product line, to succeed in the volatile personal computer software business.

"M.S.A. made a strategic mistake, and we, the analysts, were all guilty of believing them too," said Scott Smith, an analyst for the Gartner Group in Stamford, Conn.

Last spring, when Peachtree introduced 25 software products in a campaign called "the Big Bang," the company's brand-name marketing approach came into full bloom.

John P. Imlay, Management's chairman and chief executive officer, boasted that by promoting the quality of a family of microcomputer programs, Peachtree would move ahead of companies such as the Lotus Development Corp. and Ashton-Tate Inc. that flourished because of a single hit product. In a few months, however, Imlay was proved wrong.

"We diversified into something that we aren't expert in," he said. "And I'd have to take the blame for it. We tried, we gave it our best, we did the big bang, television advertising and sent people to the dealers, but we watched it dry up."

In retrospect, analysts point to several reasons why Peachtree floundered. Some say Management failed to assign its most talented managers to the subsidiary, keeping them instead at the company's much larger and more profitable mainframe software operations.

In addition, Peachtree, which has been headed by three executives since it was acquired in 1981, suffered from heavy turnover.

"Believe me, every time we met with someone from Peachtree it was someone we'd never seen before," said Lorraine Mecca, vice chairman of Micro D Inc., a computer software and hardware distributor based in Santa Ana, Calif.

Peachtree was also hurt by the rapid establishment of favored products in a young industry. Furthermore, Peachtree never mastered the art of establishing a strong dealer network, which is vital in the retail personal computer software business. Imlay said Peachtree had been badly hurt when computer manufacturers stopped packaging Peachtree software with the computers.

Most important, Peachtree never developed a hit program that excited the market or became more than a moderate success.

The result of Peachtree's misfortunes was Management's recently reported loss of $1.8 million, on revenues of $31.2 million, in the third quarter. After growing at more than 35 percent annually since 1972, the company is expected to post weak results this year, with earnings forecast at less than half of last year's total of $10.8 million, or 63 cents a share.

Justice Department to investigate Diablo Canyon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department will investigate an allegation that federal regulators misled the U.S. Court of Appeals in its handling of the licensing of the controversial Diablo Canyon nuclear plant in California, says a congressional aide.

Assistant Attorney General Robert A. McConnell said in a letter to Rep. Richard Ottinger, D-N.Y., that the deparment would examine allegations that lawyers for the department and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission filed a "misleading" brief with the court on the embattled Diablo Canyon plant.

An aide to Ottinger, speaking only if not identified, said McConnell's letter was little more than a formal acknowledgment of Ottinger's request and a promise of a fuller response later.

Ottinger, chairman of the House energy and conservation subcommittee, asked for the probe two weeks ago in a letter to Attorney General William French Smith.

In a letter to the commission last month, Ottinger accused the commission of not fully disclosing to the appeals court the rationale for its decision last summer denying opponents of the plant a new round of hearings.

He said confidential transcripts of three closed NRC meetings in June and July indicate that the commission had considered material submitted by the plant's owner, Pacific Gas & Electric Co., without giving opponents a chance to challenge it.

The PG&E study dealt with the possibilities of an earthquake and an unrelated accident at the San Luis Obispo plant occuring at the same time and what effect each might have on the ability to evacuate residents from a 10-mile area around the facility.

The court last month agreed to consider that issue but also lifted a 2-month-old stay that had effectively prohibited the commercial opeation of the $5.2 billion plant.

The first reactor at the twin-reactor plant produced its first electricity on Sunday.

Study shows radioactive fuel on reactor floor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Neutron detection devices suspended inside the crippled Three Mile Island nuclear reactor indicate there are at least 4,400 pounds of radioactive rubble at the bottom of the reactor vessel, a new study says.

Westinghouse Hanford Co. said the tests were conducted for the Department of Energy to determine how much fuel was damaged during the March, 1979 accident in which the Unit 2 reactor core overheated at the plant near Harrisburg, Pa.

The company said 34 small detection devices were suspended at different locations inside the reactor cavity area for a three-week period in August and September of 1983.

Researchers concluded that at least 2,000 kilgrams or 4,400 pounds of radioactive fuel was lying in rubble at the base of the reactor vessel. That is equivalent to nearly four of the 177 fuel assemblies contained in the reactor.

The estimate is based on the minimum amount of nuclear fuel that could result in the particular neutron levels detected in the reactor cavity, the company said in a statement.

The company said a team of nuclear engineers from Pennsylvania State University has already used its findings to develop a more refined estimate that indicates there are 13,000 kilograms or 28,600 pounds of radioactive rubble at the base of the reactor vessel.

The higher projection remains well below earlier estimates, based on visual examinations, that about half the core had been reduced to rubble.

Westinghouse Hanford performs advanced nuclear technology programs at Richland, Wash. for the Department of Energy. The department is contributing research money to cleaning up the contaminated reactor and has said it will take responsibility for removing the radioactive core.

Muse Air board promotes Coats to chief officer

DALLAS — Muse Air Corporation's board of directors has elevated Sam Coats, the airline's recently named president, to chief executive officer of the corporation, effective immediately. Michael L. Muse will continue to serve as chairman of the board.

In making the announcement, the board affirmed that "this promotion further streamlines and strengthens the management structure created a month ago when Coats joined the Company. It recognizes Coats' responsibility for Muse Air's overall operating and business plans, and also allows Michael Muse to concentrate on important, long-term financial strategies for the Company."

Coats joined Muse Air on October 1 this year as president and chief operating officer. A 10-year airline veteran, Coats has held senior management positions with Texas International, Braniff International and, most recently, Southwest Airlines. He has also served as president of the Texas Research League in Austin and as a state representative from Dallas County, and is an attorney by training.

HNG to purchase Transwestern Pipeline Co.

HOUSTON—Houston Natural Gas Corp. (HNG) and Texas Eastern Corp. (TET) have announced the execution of an agreement calling for HNG to purchase Transwestern Pipeline Co., a Texas Eastern subsidiary, for $390 million. The transaction is expected to be effective in December or early January.

Kenneth L. Lay, chairman and chief executive officer of HNG said "The Transwestern pipeline system fits ideally with HNG's existing facilities and operations. In addition to the opportunity for coordination of Transwestern and HNG's pipeline systems in western Texas and eastern New Mexico, HNG Oil Co. is currently Transwestern's third largest producer supplier."

"The acquisition will provide Transwestern and its California and Oklahoma customers access to virtually all the major producing areas of Texas and the Gulf of Mexico plus the storage and peaking capability of HNG's Bammel storage field. It gives HNG a strong position in the California market, the nation's second largest gas market next to Texas, and a market which we believe has significant growth potential," Lay said.

I. David Bufkin, chairman and chief executive officer of Texas Eastern said that his firm's decision to sell Transwestern was a strategic move following careful study and analysis. "We concluded that the maximum value of Transwestern to our shareholders and its full potential as a transmission company would best be realized through its sale to another company," he stated.

He added that despite the sale of Transwestern, Texas Eastern continues its strong commitment to the gas pipeline business through Texas Eastern Gas Pipeline Co., a division that is a major supplier of natural gas to the east coast.

"Texas Eastern will continue to pursue its stated goals of expanding existing operations and entering new energy-related businesses when attractive opportunities arise," Bufkin stated.

The 4,395 mile, 30-inch diameter Transwestern pipeline moves natural gas from West Texas to Oklahoma and California. In 1983, Transwestern delivered 279 billion cubic feet. About 500 employees are involved with the operation of the pipeline and "are expected to stay with the company," said Lay.

Transwestern's net income for the twelve months ended June 30, 1984 was over $35 million on sales of approximately $1.1 billion. The pipeline company's assets exceed $500 million.

HNG owns the largest intrastate pipeline in the country with about 5,300 miles of pipeline criss-crossing Texas and is actively engaged in oil and gas exploration, development and production.

Money-saving tax tips must be taken by end of year

Hearst Feature Service

With the end of the year on top of us, here's a thought that will give you holiday heartburn: Taxes.

In most cases, steps that will trim your 1984 tax bill must be taken by Dec. 31. A principal exception is individual retirement account contributions, which can be made until the April 15 filing deadline.

At this time of year, quick, clean tax breaks can be hard to find. But an obvious one is giving to charity, either in cash or in property. Under IRS rules, taxpayers who itemize can deduct a maximum of 50 percent of their adjusted gross (pre-tax) income for cash donations to bonafide religious, educational and other publicly supported organizations, and up to 30 percent of cash gifts to private foundations after July 18. Before July 18, the ceiling was 20 percent.

To guide you, taxpayers with an adjusted gross income of $20,000 to $25,000 deducted an average of $670 in charitable contributions in a recent year, far less than the law allows. In that range, the maximum deduction would be $10,000-$12,500.

Gifts of property are governed by the 30 percent limit when the asset would qualify for a long-term capital gain if sold and when it isgto publicly supported organizations. Where private foundations receive the property, a 20 percent limit prevails, and there may be additional restrictions as well, especially with privately held stock.

Taxpayers who use the short form also are entitled to deductions for charitable giving – a benefit first made possible by 1981 tax-law revisions. Unfortunately, the amount of relief is small. For 1984, 25 percent of charitable contributions up to $300 are deductible, or a maximum of $75. Next year, the maximum write-off for taxpayers who don't itemize will be $150, with a $300 ceiling set for 1986.

Charitable work also can lead to deductions, suggesting that a review of your expenses for the year might pay off. However, keep in mind that the IRS imposes tougher standards on deductions for unreimbursed costs.

According to the accounting firm of Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, charity-related writeoffs typically arise from:

-ng your car. You can claim a deduction at the standard mileage rate (currently 9 cents a mile, rising to 12 cents next year) or for the actual operating expenses directly connected to charitable services, whichever is greater.

– Upkeep of personal property used in charitable work, such as a uniform.

– Entertainment expenses. Caution: If you throw a party for charity, the IRS may ask you to account for any benefit that went to you personally as a result.

– Travel and telephone expenses. Generally, the organization must specifically require the travel

Falling oil prices worry OPEC

Los Angeles Time,
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Just four years ago, amid fears that the Iran-Iraq war would cause drastic cuts in the world's oil supply, Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani delivered his then-favorite lecture to a group of Western reporters as he passed through the gulf kingdom of Bahrain.

Reform your profligate ways and conserve energy, he told reporters who scampered down the up escalator to keep pace with his imperious sweep from the Gulf Hotel.

Some day soon, he continued, the nations of the Persian Gulf will tire of spending their finite oil resources so the industrialized West can overheat houses, tool around in gas-guzzling cars and advertise its prosperity in neon lights.

The Iran-Iraq war still goes on but, contrary to the earlier fears, the world today is awash in oil.

And as the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries gather Monday in Geneva in what many consider a do-or-die effort to defend the oil cartel's prices against the downward spiral of the world market, Yamani may well wish he never had pushed the cause of energy conservation.

For many of today's OPEC problems arose because the industrialized world followed his advice only too well by adopting strong conservation measures and substituting other fuel for expensive OPEC oil.

It reduced its dependency on oil by 10 percentage points over the past decade, from 54 percent of energy consumption in 1974 to 44 percent today. World demand today is 10 million barrels of oil a day less than it was at its peak in 1979, Michael Sterner, former U.S. ambassador to the United Arab Emirates and a partner in The IRC Group, a Washington-based consulting firm, reported in the current issue of Foreign Affairs.

As an example of the turnaway from oil, in the decade from 1973 to last year, the gross national product of the Western economies increased by 20 percent, after accounting for inflation, while oil demand dropped 11 percent, said Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates and a long-time believer that higher oil prices would force the industrialized world to practice energy conservation.

In the United States, the Department of Energy has calculated that energy consumption for each dollar of GNP has dropped by an astounding 22 percent since 1973 — from 59,200 British thermal units for each dollar of GNP to 46,000 BTUs.

Americans, once considered the most wasteful of all energy uses, drive more efficient cars for fewer miles and keep their homes and offices cooler in the winter and warmer in the summer.

These moves have brought about profound changes in the position of the OPEC nations. Once sitting on top of the roost, these countries now face twin dilemmas that could determine their future economic and political stability: They either have to cut production to maintain the present price structure or lower the cost of their oil to match decreased demand. The shock waves of their present dilemma could spread throughout the Arab world, where even non-oil-producing nations such as Jordan and Syria depend on the largess of their OPEC neighbors.

But the super-rich states of the Persian Gulf — especially Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates — have developed a dependency on oil money to maintain their development programs and a high per capita income that they hope will prevent any uprising against the established governments. With the rise of a militant populist form of Islam, the rulers of the Gulf states have been increasingly concerned that they could fall victim in an Iran-style revolution.

Iran and Iraq, moreover, need oil revenues to finance their four-year-old war.

Poorer OPEC nations such as Nigeria need oil exports to survive and pay back large debts to Western lending institutions and multilateral organizations, as does Mexico, an oil supplier that does not belong to the cartel but follows its pricing patterns.

At home, the changes wrought by the OPEC oil shocks have had a major effect on the way Americans live and work.

The average home in the United States uses 20 percent less energy now than it did in 1973 — thanks to a combination of weatherproofing encouraged by government tax incentives and a more careful use of heating and air conditioning. As part of its massive energy conservation program, the giant American Telephone and Telegraph Co. decreed that none of its office could be heated above 65 degrees in the winter or cooled below 80 degrees in the summer.

These changes influenced the way Americans dress. Three-piece suits regained popularity among men, and the demand for sleeveless winter dresses diminished with the end of the super-heated offices of the early 1970s. Now cardigan sweaters are in vogue for men and women to ward off the 65-degree temperatures of home and office.

Conservation measures, a direct reaction to OPEC-led price hikes that carried the cost of a barrel of oil as high as $34.50 in 1981, brought about sweeping changes in the world's energy picture and reduced the oil cartel's ability to affect prices.

As a result of the price increases, moreover, OPEC nations now face direct competition from new suppliers such as Mexico, Great Britain and Norway, whose oil fields would not have been economically feasibles in the pre-1974 days of a $3.39 barrel of oil. Two of these countries, Great Britain and Norway, precipitated the current OPEC crisis by lowering the price of their premium North Sea oil almost two weeks ago, forcing OPEC member Nigeria to follow suit.

Now Mexico and Britain are among the top five suppliers of oil to the United States, whereas their oil exports were negligible as recently as 1973. OPEC sales to the United States have dropped by about 1.2 million barrels a day since 1974, while shipments from non-OPEC countries increased by half a million barrels a day.

Just four years ago, the Iran-Iraq war raised fears of a cutoff of Persian Gulf oil — a major source for the United States, Western Europe and Japan. Recent figures show that 20 percent of the Western world's oil now comes through the Persian Gulf compared with 40 percent in 1979.

Sterner said a little-known U.S. government study shows that oil shipments from the gulf could be cut in half without causing shortages or a basis for price increases.

"The decline in world demand has been considerably larger than the loss of oil exports from Iran and Iraq" resulting from their war, the U.S. Congress' Office of Technology Assessment noted in a September report.

The gasoline lines of 1979 dealt the U.S. auto industry a near-fatal blow and vastly increased the popularity of small foreign cars, especially the fuel-effecient Japanese models. But the lines also brought about a revolutionary drop in gas consumption, which takes up one of every nine barrels of oil produced in the world. Cars driven in this country used an average of 26 percent less gas in 1982 than they did in 1973, the peak era for gas guzzlers, as Americans drive less and and rack up better gas milage.

Industry also did its part. AT&T's energy conservation measures saved the equivalent of 50.1 million barrels of oil between 1973 and 1982.

The company found that the profit motive became a driving force behind conserving energy as it did well by doing good. It saved an estimated $2.67 billion for its stockholders through energy conservation in that period.

The use of alternative fuels also increased. France became the leading user of nuclear power, which now takes care of 40 percent of its energy needs, while Americans returned to one of the country's most abundant fossile fuels, coal. Coal use increased by about 18 percent in the past, while the use of oil dropped 14 percent. Imports of crude oil, which reached a peak in 1977, dropped last year to 1973 levels.

Texas woman to be sentenced in silver scam

DALLAS (AP) — A Garland woman will be sentenced next month following her conviction on charges of using a pyramid scheme involving silver to bilk nearly 700 people out of more than $17 million.

Peggy Stines was found guilty Tuesday of 23 counts of mail fraud stemming from a deal in which investors' money was to be used to extract silver from used photographic film.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer set Dec. 14 for sentencing. Mrs. Stines faces up to 130 years in prison and more than $50,000 in fines.

Her husband, Donald R. Stines, is scheduled to be tried on related charges next year.

A federal grand jury in August indicted Mrs. Stines and her husband on charges of allegedly using money invested with the Garland Film Buyers Group to purchase a ranch near Nevada in Collin County.

"She took the money and said, 'It's safe, safe as in a bank,' " said Assistant U.S. Attorney Cheryl Wattley in her closing argument.

Investors were told that their money was to be used to buy used photographic film, from which silver was to be extracted by North Texas Film Processors Inc., Mrs. Stines' reclamation plant in Garland.

Officials said Mrs. Stines, who also faces state felony charges stemming from the scam, fabaricated monthly statements to investors and instead used the money to buy a ranch, horses, several automobiles, an airplane, jewelry, furs and an oil lease.

The investors in the nationwide scheme included churches, as well as bankers, professional athletes, preachers and teachers, federal officials said.

The 1983 earnings included income of $3.2 million in settlement of certain non-recurring claims originating in prior years during the first quarter of that year.

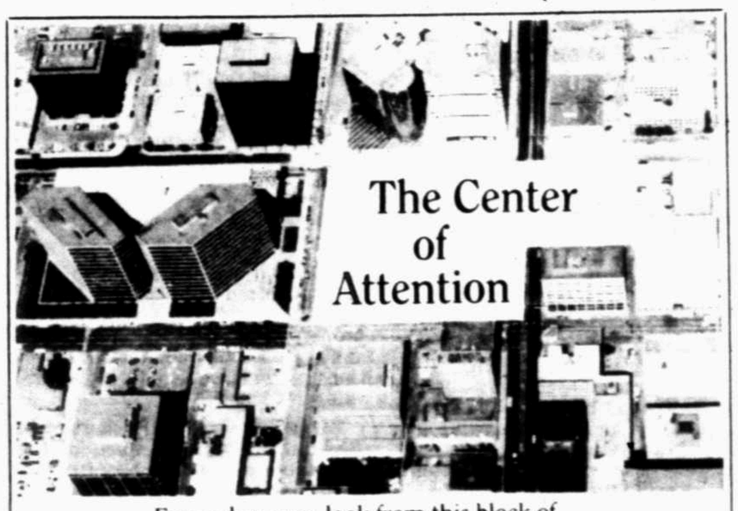

United States and Indonesian oil and gas sales were $32.2 million for the first nine months of 1984 ($10.8 million in the third quarter) compared with $25.5 million for the first nine months of 1983 ($8.1 million in the third quarter).

General Mills' Izod plant to cost the company in 1985 fiscal year

By PAMELA G. HOLLIE
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — General Mills was bitten by its little alligator Wednesday.

The big Minneapolis company, home of such powerhouse brands as Wheaties, Cheerios, Gold Medal and Bisquick, disclosed that troubles at its Izod Ltd. unit, which makes the shirt with the alligator emblem, would cost it 45 cents to 55 cents a share this fiscal year.

Despite repeated changes of management and futile efforts to reposition the brand, the chairman of General Mills, H. Brewster Atwater, said Wednesday that Izod Ltd. would lose money in its 1985 fiscal year, which ends next May.

"Izod's current-year sales prospects are down nearly 50 percent from the peak," he said. The peak came in 1982, when sales of the Izod knit shirts exceeded $400 million, according to analyst estimates.

Izod is a small part of General Mills — the fashion group that includes Izod contributes just 10 percent of the company's operating earnings — but the decline in Izod's performance has affected the entire company. General Mills stock has dropped at each new mention of Izod's troubles. Yesterday, the shares dropped $2.25, to $51.625, in trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

"Izod is not likely to keep General Mills from having record earnings and earnings per share," Alan S. Greditor, an analyst at Drexel Burnham, said. "But Izod has high visibility. And, this is the third reduction in the company's expectations in three months."

In August, General Mills acknowledged that Izod would do poorly this year. At the annual meeting in September, the company said Izod might break even. Wednesday, Atwater disclosed that Izod would lose money and said that to restore Izod's profitability, General Mills planned to cut expenses by more than a third at Izod and substantially reduce the number of employees.

Analysts' earnings estimates are being cut also.

"Things had gotten a little worse than expected," said George Dahlman, an analyst at Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc. in Minneapolis, who is working up a new and lower earnings estimate. In the year ended last May 27, General Mills earned $233.4 million, or $4.98 a share, on revenues of $5.6 billion.

Izod sales have been sliding for two years, battered by new competition in sportswear, a proliferation of rival emblems — a miniature menagerie of horses, unicorns, foxes, dragons, sheep — and a shift in fashions.

Among the young, the alligator emblem shirt, which the "Official Preppy Handbook" listed as the shirt of choice two or three years ago, has fallen from favor.

Teen-age girls, who bought one in five of the knit shirts in 1982, moved on to the "Flashdance" look. Older consumers, who wore the Izod knit shirt because it was comfortable, 100 percent cotton and in vogue, began to reject the notion of emblem dressing. At one time Izod could not manufacture enough shirts to meet demand; by the time it caught up, the tide was ebbing, and cheaper brands were in the market.

"What they failed to see was the rapid proliferation of look-alikes," John Bierbusse, an analyst at Duff & Phelps in Chicago, said. "There was a rapid saturation of the market. They were premium-priced emblem shirts. Many of the others were discount."

Some analysts also say that Izod could not decide what it wished its shirts to be. Should they be sportswear for adults, or dress for young children as well? Country-club garb for tennis or golf, or clothes for everyone? It failed to hold its own against more aggressive marketers such as Ralph Lauren, who offered clothes to accompany a life style.

Lauren sold premimum cotton knit shirts under his Polo brand. But his shirts and sports clothes carried the cachet. Izod also expanded into men's, women's and children's lines to capitalize on the Izod and Izod Lacoste brand names, but only diluted its focus. General Mills now markets the same shirts under the Izod brand for its "spectator" wear and under the Izod Lacoste brand for its "active sportswear." Increasingly, it has turned to making shirts without the emblem.

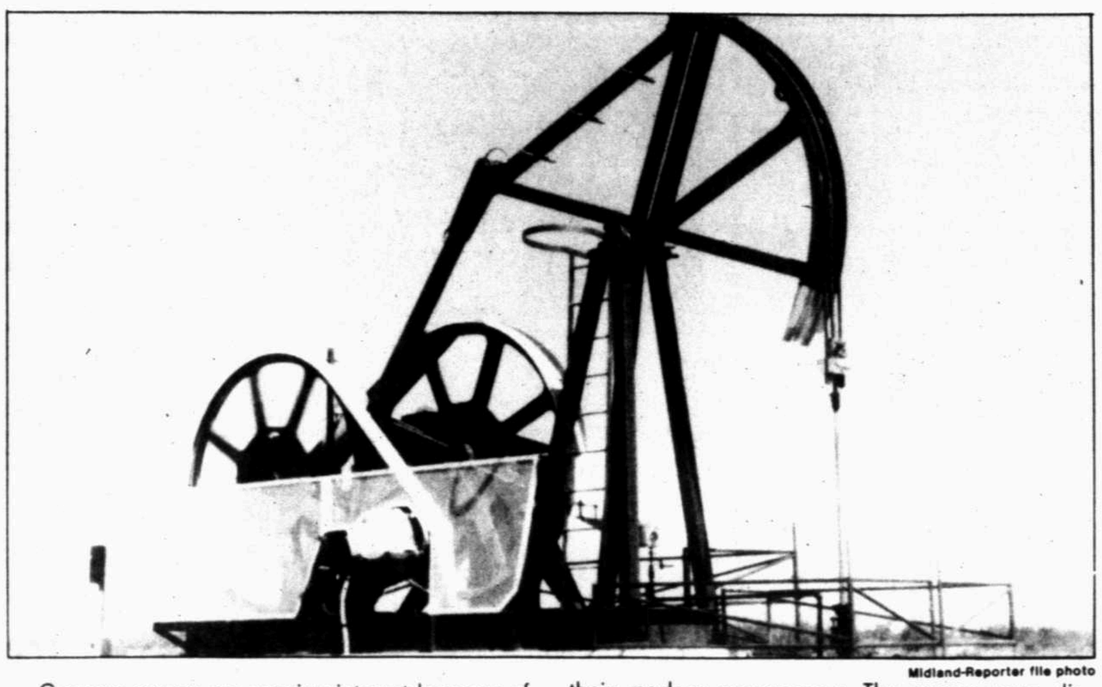

"The shortfall in Izod is not all that surprising," Bierbusse said. "The brand has been getting a lot of pressure from higher-end sportswear that has more pizzazz, more glamour."

Izod began in 1933; the cotton knit shirts were first marketed by the French tennis player Rene Lacoste, who was called "le Crocodile." La Chemise Lacoste in France later licensed the use of the Lacoste name in North America to David Crystal Inc.

With the purchase of David Crystal in 1969, General Mills acquired the rights to the use of the Lacoste brand in North America. David Crystal also owned a men's wear division with the Izod brand.

During the last two years, General Mills has brought in several new marketing men to try to turn Izod around. Robert Tutnauer was named president of Izod Ltd. last year. Richard Baker was named president of the men's division last May. In August, General Mills named Richard F. Kral as a corporate executive vice president in charge of the fashion group, which includes Izod.

Grooves pumping units display modern appearance

Grooves pumps are causing interest because of their modern appearance. The pumps were displayed at the Permian Basin Oil Show last month.

Among the attractions at last month's Permian Basin Oil Show were the new Grooves pumping units. Some interest was probably due to the fact that these units do not altogether resemble their counterparts in the oil fields. Two large wheels - the crank wheel and the flywheel - are belt-driven, eliminating the usual gearbox seen on conventional units. The horsehead is of a unique design, and the system has only one pitman arm instead of the usual two.

These units were designed from the down hole pump up to make the most of technology that provides the greatest possible operating efficiency yet has features that make it field repairable with simple hand tools.

The Grooves pumping unit was designed by Jerry Watson in Odessa. The first unit was shown at the 1980 Permian Basin Oil Show and later installed on an oil well south of Midland. The unit has been operating continuously since then without a problem and without maintenance, except for lubrication. Other units were manufactured and put into use. The company now offers a complete range of sizes which can be used with steel or composite sucker rods.

By analyzing the natural operating characteristics of all the known sucker rod designs and materials, Watson was able to construct pumping unit geometries which utilized each characteristic for the greatest possible pumping efficiency. Along with ultra-high-slip motors, used on the units, the unique design geometry has proven to be effective in increasing operating efficiency, increasing production because of an increased downhole pump stroke and because the inertia and energy otherwise wasted is utilized, and, in some cases, decreasing rod loading.

A major oil company recently introduced a new artificial lift pumping system, designated the "FSRS", Fiberglass Sucker Rod System. The system includes the Grooves pumping unit, fiberglass sucker rods, sinker bars, a modified API downhole pump and an ultra-hi-slip motor. Successful operation of the system has been documented by the company's engineers and the NABLA Corp. of Midland. The system approach has been shown to have a lower capital cost and a substantial reduction in utility cost on a cost-per-barrel lifted basis.

Yields drop 10th week

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on three-month Treasury bills have dropped for the 10th consecutive week, leaving those securities at their lowest level in more than a year.

The government sold $6.8 billion in three-month bills on Tuesday at an average discount rate of 8.73 percent, down from last week's 8.82 percent. Rates have been declining from a high of 10.63 percent reached on Sept. 4.

The government sold an additional $6.8 billion in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 8.99 percent, down from 9.07 percent last week. With only one exception, rates on six-month bills have also declined every week since Sept. 4.

The yield on the three-month bill was the lowest since 8.41 percent on Oct. 31, 1983, while the 8.99 percent rate on six-month bills was the lowest since 8.97 percent on Jan. 30 of this year.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 9.05 percent for three-month bills and 9.55 percent for six-month bills.

Security, luxury can be obtained by wise investing and planning

By MICHAEL BLUMSTEIN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Those who can send their children to the best colleges or retire in luxury are not necessarily corporate chieftains or lottery winners. Many have simply invested wisely and consistently. "People who just save whatever is left over," David Bugen, a financial planner in Morristown, N.J., said. "usually have too much month at the end of their money."

The problem, of course, is determining how much money to save each month and then how to put it to work. In deciding how much to save, many people rely on the rule of thumb that they should set aside 10 percent — if not more — of their pay before taxes. "If people could diligently set aside 20 percent, they'd be making some headway," Mark Bass, a financial planner in Lubbock, Tex., said. "But in real life, there are very few people that can meet that, unless they're extremely disciplined."

But rules of thumb are not always ideal, because they do not account for differing needs and desires. Planners, therefore, strongly recommend that people sit down and calculate exactly when their children will be in college and what their education is likely to cost, as well as when they plan to retire and how high they expect their monthly expenses to run. On the incoming side of the ledger, pension plan payouts and inheritances can also be estimated.

This planning is important. The sooner the money is needed, the less time investments have to grow, and the larger the savings must be from the start. In addition, inflation must be taken into account. A reasonable assumption to make is that prices will rise an average of 7 percent a year. "You have to have clearly defined goals," Bugen said. "If you don't know where you're going, you wind up someplace else."

Planners also find that calculating future financial needs as exactly as possible can provide a psychological advantage. Some people find it easier to investwhen they have definite purposes for the money. Peter Schaible and his wife, for example, want to retire in 14 to 16 years on today's equivalent of $4,000 a month, exclusive of Social Security. So, Schaible, who is 38 years old, and the owner of a graphic design company in Morristown, is investing heavily in a variety of assets, including oil and real estate limited partnerships. "No matter how much people plan," Schaible observed, "they tend to do the same thing — live a life style they're comfortable with and save the rest."

Once people know how much money they will need, and when, they then must decide where to invest. There are two basic choices: debt-based, or lending, assets and equity-based, or ownership, assets. With a debt-based asset, the investor, in effect, lends money by making a bank deposit, taking out an annuity or buying a bill, note or bond of a government or corporation. In its simplest form, a debt-based asset pays interest regularly and repays the original sum at maturity. If the asset must be sold before maturity, its value can fluctuate with interest rates — so many planners recommend debt-based assets that mature in no more than 10 years.

By contrast, equity-based assets represent ownership, with all its risks and rewards. The most common are stocks in companies, but real estate, gold and oil all fall into this category. No return is promised on these assets, and their value can generally fluctuate over a much greater range than debt-based assets. But because they do rise or fall with supply and demand, the potential for appreciation is usually much greater — as is the potential for loss.

Most planners recommend a mix of debt-based and equity-based assets, depending on the age of the investor. Age is important because older investors have less time to make up for their mistakes or to allow their new investments to mature. "You don't have to tell me your name, but you do have to tell me your age," Isabel Smith, a financial planner in Birmingham, Mich., quipped.

For those whose work life can still be measured in decades, Mrs. Smith advised investing one-third in relatively riskless debt-based assets, including municipal bonds and annuities; one-third in stock mutual funds that seek growth and one-third in assorted other assets, including real estate and cable television limited partnerships, maybe even gold.

But for someone, say, only five years away from retirement, Mrs. Smith recommended that 60 to 65 percent of the portfolio be in conservative debt-based assets, while the rest goes into stock mutual funds that seek both income and growth. "You can't swear off completely on growth forever," she said.

For retirees, many planners suggest that they stick completely to debt-based assets, because of today's relatively high interest rates and volatile stock market. The selection is large: government bonds, corporate bonds, tax-exempt municipal bonds, even funds that represent a pool of bonds. With these investments, retirees receive a steady, stable income. Alvera DeArmitt, 58, a widow in Smithtown, N.Y., who has invested in debt-based assets, said: "My main concern is really maintaining my life style. I have never been a gambler."

Financial planners strongly recommend that people consider four other factors besides their age when establishing an investing program: diversification, liquidity, taxes and risk. Diversification is perhaps the most frequently ignored principle of investing. If investments are diversified, then even if one investment sours — be it a stock, bond or even personal business — a person's entire financial health should not be ruined. Thus, many financial planners recommend mutual funds for those who want to invest in stocks, but do not have the minimum $15,000 to $20,000 that it takes to build a diversified portfolio. Some planners even advise investing in several mutual funds, in case one does poorly.

Planners caution against becoming too vulnerable to the vicissitudes of one particular market. For example, a young couple whose major asset is a house should probably not buy additional real estate, investing instead in shares in a stock mutual fund. Executives who own big blocks of stock in their company should probably avoid the stock market and look instead at a portfolio of municipal bonds.

Liquidity is another investment consideration. A checking account at a bank with automatic teller machines can supply cash 24 hours a day. But an apartment building can take months to sell. To insure at least minimum liquidity, planners suggest opening a money market mutual fund or a money market deposit account.

This account is easily accessible for emergencies, yet pays a market rate of interest. Many planners recommend depositing the equivalent of three months' living expenses — perhaps six months' if only one spouse is working. (A line of credit might also be used in a pinch.)

Taxes and how they relate to investments are often the immediate concern of those visiting financial planners, according to Philip Gainsborough, a planner in Los Angeles.

Basically, investments must be considered on an after-tax basis. Assume, for example, that inflation hits 7 percent, and a bond pays 10 percent. A person in the 20 percent tax bracket keeps 8 percent after taxes, and is one percentage point ahead of inflation. But a person in the 40 percent tax bracket keeps only 6 percent and thus falls behind by one percentage point a year. That person should look at either municipal bonds, which are tax-exempt, or common stocks, which have a potential for appreciation. Gains on stocks are taxed at no more than 20 percent, if the shares are held longer than six months.

Limited partnerships, many of which invest in real estate or oil, can also be important tax shelters for people in high brackets. Edgar Crawford, a civil engineer in Los Angeles, said that he was paying "an awful lot" in taxes and that the yield on his stocks was "pretty poor." So, he sold the stocks and moved into various real estate and oil tax shelters. The savings have been significant and immediate, he said.

One caveat: Investors should not let tax savings override other considerations, especially since the Internal Revenue Service has begun to crack down on tax shelters. "Think of a tax shelter as an investment," said Eli Gerver, a partner at Touche Ross & Co., the accounting firm. "Investment is the critical word."

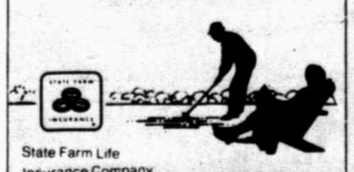

Risk is perhaps the most important consideration, because the return on an investment generally increases with the risk taken. Unfortunately, risk is a tricky factor, because the true risk of an investment is often difficult to assess, and many people have trouble assessing their taste for risk. Some people, for example, are just not comfortable with the idea that they might lose their principal.

D'Anne Burchett suggests electrolysis as a safe way to get rid of unwanted hair

D'Anne Burchett is a certified electrologist who specializes in helping people feel better about themselves. By getting rid of embarrassing excess hair individuals experience a new self confidence.

Many people are distressed by unwanted hair but don't know what they can do about it. Electrolysis is a safe way to permanently remove excess hair from your face, arms, legs, breasts, abdomen, or back. It can be a real confidence builder, if you'll just give it a try. After all, excess facial hair distracts from your natural beauty, while other excess hair may dictate the styles you wear.

Take charge and get rid of that unwanted hair permanently, yes, permanently. Razors, tweezers, and depilatories all fall short when it comes to the test of permanence, but electrolysis passes the test with flying colors.

D'Anne Burchett, a Registered Nurse and electrologist, simply directs a tiny, split-second impulse into the hair root, thereby destroying it so that it can never produce another hair again. You can hardly tell the probe tip is being inserted. And the tiny current destroys the hair root.

Beautiful women across the country have discovered this process and greatly benefited from it. Many fashion models, society leaders and state and screen personalities owe their smooth, hair-free skin to the skill of trained electrologists.

Foremost medical authorities agree that electrolysis is the only positive and permanent way to remove hair. You can be sure that it has been thoroughly tested. After all, medical journals have recorded successful electrolysis treatments since 1867, so feel free to ask your doctor about the process.

Since D'Anne Burchett is a R.N., a well as a Certified Electrologist, she will also be able to answer any questions which you might have. D'Anne is the only electrologist in Midland who has a R.N.'s license. Furthermore, her electrolysis training was at Fontaine's in Dallas, one of the leading electrolysis schools in the state.

Not only does D'Anne have outstanding technical credentials, she also has a deep understanding of her clients. She knows how frustrating and embarrassing excess hair can be and wants to help you remedy that problem permanently. Just imagine, no more putting your glasses on and taking them off over and over again to try to pluck your eyebrows. Think how nice it will be to select any swimsuit you want without worrying about excess hair.

D'Anne's private office allows her to give each of her customers the personal attention they need. She will be glad to give you a free consultation if you drop by her office at Christine Valmy, Number 39 Plaza Center at Wadley and Garfield. To insure that you don't have to wait, call ahead for an appointment at 683-9891.

Compared with many other beauty treatments, the cost of electrolysis is moderate. After all, it's a small price to pay for a lifetime of freedom from unsightly, unwanted hair. Don't you think you owe it to yourself to call D'Anne Burchett now?

Actress Joanne Woodward was the moving force behind the recent National Woman's Conference to Prevent Nuclear War in Washington D.C.

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features Syndicate

Joanne Woodward rarely gives interviews. "I hate them," she says frankly. Yet here she is, sitting on a couch in the beige-carpeted, file-jammed office of a building on New York's East Side, answering questions. It has been a long day for the Oscar-winning Georgia-born actress turned director and writer.

She rose early in the two-story colonial home she shares with husband Paul Newman, a home that nests on almost three acres of rolling Connecticut land and is filled with hooked rugs, has long-beamed low ceilings and a huge fireplace. It was 7:45 a.m., after an hour of exercising, when Ms. Woodward drove onto the highway toward New York City, where she teaches a workshop for young actors from 11 to 2:30 p.m.

Then came a quick visit to the Newmans' just-purchased Manhattan apartment, which was recently redecorated in "chintz and antiques."

Trim and cool in a fitted pastel printed dress with a flared calf-length skirt, her ash blonde hair cut short, her green eyes behind huge slightly tinted glasses, Ms. Woodward is intelligent, frank and likeable.

Not as the movie star who began her career with an Oscar win for "Three Faces of Eve" in 1957, then added films such as "A Kiss Before Dying," "Rally Round the Flag, Boys," "WUSA," which are films that showed a wide acting range from drama to comedy.

Not as the stage actress who met Paul Newman while understudying two leading roles in William Inge's prize-winning play "Picnic" and recently electrified critics with her return to the New York stage, after a 17-year absence, in "Candida." That is the famous Joanne Woodward.

AND WHILE talent is an inescapable part of the real woman, it is one dimension of a fascinating mature person. Any interview with Joanne Woodward is like bread and champagne: at once fundamental and exhilarating.

Ms. Woodward is a very private person and admits that she hates to make speeches. But she will speak out when it concerns something she believes in — like preventing nuclear war.

She opened an appeal for the recent Washington, D.C. National Women's Conference to Prevent Nuclear War by telling her audience: "You see before you a woman who is terrified to speak in public."

Explaining now, she says: "Dramatic training probably helped me a bit (as a public speaker). But acting is really behaving inside another form. When you make a speech, you must get up in your own shoes. I find that very difficult, but necessary."

She adds: "I'm not an activist, by and large. I'm not a Jane Fonda. My drives have been when I am strongly motivated."

She is very strongly motivated now — for herself and other generations.

She was so motivated as to be the moving force behind the nuclear war conference, in which women from all fields and walks of life — such as Nancy Reagan, Geraldine Ferraro, Helen Caldicott, Marlo Thomas and Barbara Jordan — met in Washington, D.C.

The conference was a cross-section of half of America — the women's half. It is their nation in microcosm. And it drew them together to learn the facts of life or nuclear death for themselves and their children: to focus media attention on a new women's movement, against war and for peace; then return them as "delegates" to stir action from what Ms. Woodward calls "their constituencies back home."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I just saw the movie "Gloria" and I thought Gena Rowlands was really sensational. Could you tell me about her? Is she married? Does she have children?

Mary Royer
Fresno, Calif.

A. She's 50, of Welsh heritage, from Cambria, Wisc., and has been married for 30 years to actor/writer/director John Cassavetes, whom she met when he came backstage in New York to pay his respects after her performance in a play. They were married four months later and have three children: Nick, Xan (Alexandra) and Zoe.

They also have done a number of films together besides "Gloria," since she has preferred, in the last decade, to work mostly for him. Among them: "A Woman Under the Influence," for which she won an Oscar nomination; "Minnie and Moskowitz" and the current "Love Streams."

As actors in other directors' films (which they often do to make money to sink into their own), they've worked together in "Tempest" and "The Brinks Job," among others, and she says she enjoys it — although he steals scenes.

Gena Rowlands and John Cassavetes

Right now, though, while he's finishing up the director's job on the film "Big Trouble," she's sticking especially close to home and the family. "John's not well," explains a family friend. "We're not sure how serious it is, but he says that all of the years of drinking have taken their toll and his liver is acting up. He doesn't look good. We're waiting to see."

Q. I read that Broderick Crawford was at one time married to Mamie Van Doren. Is that true?

A fan
Sioux Falls, S.D.

A. Interesting thought, but although we can find three marriages each on the record, none of these included the other. He'd been married to actresses Kay Griffith, Joan Tabor and Mary Alice Michaels; she to bandleader Ray Anthony, baseball player Lee Meyers and businessman Ross McClintock.

Broderick Crawford

Q. Will director John Huston be doing any more movies?

Rita Toner
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. By now, you may have seen "Under the Volcano," which has been undergoing a staggered national release. And Huston just started shooting another film, in New York — it's called "Prizzi's Honor" and it's described as a comedy about a Mafia family.

Huston hadn't originally intended to do it, as he explains, but he knew all of the princpials involved: Jack Nicholson; his daughter Anjelica, Nicholson's longtime companion; and Kathleen Turner.

Q. I am Dan Aykroyd's number-one fan but I hardly know anything about him. Can you help?

K.M.
Chicago, Ill.

A. He's 32, was born in Ottawa and raised in Hull, Quebec, Canada. He is the son of a Canadian government official, and was apparently quite a troublemaker in school — he got thrown out of many of Canada's finest schools, including a seminary.

At 20, though, he did graduate from Ottawa's Carlton College. Both he and his brother Peter were more interested in comedy than in government service, so after graduation, they both joined the Toronto branch of Chicago's improv troupe, Second City. While there, Aykroyd met Lorne Michaels, who went on to produce "Saturday Night Live" and took him along.

On that show, of course, he met John Belushi; and after a few seasons, the two close friends and "Blues Brothers" left the show to do movies. "The Blues Brothers," "1941" and "Neighbors" followed, and they were scheduled to do another, Louis Malle's "Moon Over Miami," when Belushi died in 1982.

Since the two were practically inseparable (they even had identical Mercedes and Jeeps and nearby houses on Martha's Vineyard), Aykroyd was devastated by his death. He even conducted his own investigation into the event and turned his findings over to the L.A.P.D.

Since then, his movie projects have been "Doctor Detroit," in which he met his wife Donna Dixon, "Trading Places" and, of course, "Ghostbusters." You may have also seen him recently as the droll co-host of the MTV Awards; or in numerous party photos at New York's Hard Rock Cafe. He's one of the owners.

Dan Aykroyd and John Belushi

Q. What can you tell me about Edward Albert? I miss seeing him since "The Yellow Rose" was canceled. Does he have any movie or TV plans?

Steph
Springfield, Ore.

A. He does, but they haven't become final. What has, though, is his new image. "We've changed it from the character actor he used to be," according to his manager, "to the hero mold."

Audiences will get a chance to see the completion of the process, pending the outcome of a pilot he plans to shoot during the winter. If it sells, you might see him next season. For the time being, you can see him in an episode of "Murder, She Wrote."

More personal info you may want to know: He's married, has a young son and lives on a ranch in Malibu with cows, horses and vegetables, home grown.

Eddie Albert

Q. Is Ida Lupino still working and is she still married to Howard Duff?

Ruth Cunningham
Milton, Fla.

A. She hasn't been too active in recent years. The last recorded film we could find was something called "Food of the Gods" in 1976. Before that, she'd made some TV appearances in series like "Streets of San Francisco" and "Barnaby Jones."

Regarding her marriage: It broke up in 1973.

JOANNE

IT WAS THE LATE Margaret Mead who once summoned women to protect the human race, saying: "If we will act unitedly, forget every other consideration on earth as we do when our children are at stake, we may be able to turn this world around and produce a world in which our children and other people's children will be safe." Those words are part of Ms. Woodward's anti-nuclear campaign.

The woman sitting opposite me says it another way. "This is not a political issue. It should not be political or partisan — not for Democrats or Republicans. It's survival. Period."

It was actor-director husband Newman — one of three citizen delegates to the U.N. General Assembly's 10th special session, its first on disarmament — who provided the connecting link that altered Ms. Woodward's life.

He once explained his U.N. job by saying: "I don't want my children to write on my tombstone that there lies a lazy old man who was never part of his time. It is part of our time to work for disarmament."

Newman introduced his wife to the Center for Defense Information, a non-profit, Washington, D.C. organization run by former U.S. military officers and a staff of civilian analysts directed by former Rear Admiral Gene R. La Rocque.

The groyp, a division of Fund for Peace, supports a strong defense but "opposes excessive expeditures for weapons and politics that increase the danger of nuclear war." And it provides information to the federal government, Congress, the media — or the public at large.

It was La Rocque, believing his generation of men had failed to halt the arms race, who asked Ms. Woodward to mobilize women for peace.

Nor is this nation alone involved. Already Ms. Woodward is planning a second gathering in Europe. Nuclear safety is not just an American problem, nor an American responsibility, she believes.

FOR JOANNE WOODWARD and most of the women who assembled in Washington this time, two ideas are paramount.

Women with 53 percent of the population and 54 percent of the voting power can make a difference. The recent nomination of Geraldine Ferraro as the Democratic vice presidential candidate proved that.

Says Ms. Woodward, "She is an extraordinary woman. Her choice electrified the convention. And pleased women. It is wonderful to put a woman up there in the forefront. We all need role models."

And it is still women who bear and nurture the next generations, notes Ms. Woodward.

For Ms. Woodward (who gained three young stepchildren when she married Paul Newman and later had three daughters — Elinor, Melissa and Clea), it is the children who matter most. After all, Ms. Woodward packed up and left California because of her children.

"We had to move," she says flatly. "I looked out my front door one day to see two busloads of sightseers. And two of my kids were still very tiny. And there were all those people flooding the lawn around them, trying to have their pictures taken with my kids. We put the house on the market within 24 hours and we haven't lived in California in a long time. People," says Joanne Woodward Newman, shaking her head, "can sometimes be bizarre."

Leaning forward on the couch, Ms. Woodward clasps her hands under her chin. "You know, I remember just last year, showing 'War Without Winners', a devasting film, to my daughters and some friends. And, at the end, there was a long, long moment of silence. And finally, one of the boys said, 'Mrs. Newman, what was it like to grow up in a world where there were no nuclear weapons?' "

Adds Ms. Woodward: "I never even thought of that. But I suddenly realized, I'm one of the last generation I know with a fairly innocent childhood. The first atom bomb was exploded when I was 15. Now space-walking is commonplace. And it's frightening to realize that anyone 39 or younger has never claimed a really secure childhood; certainly no one born after 1960 when the stockpiling began on both sides."

WELL THEN, what was it like growing up in a small dusty Southern town, Thomasville, Ga., where she was born; then another quiet backwater, Greenville, S.C., where she discovered a bent for acting in her high-school plays.

"It was lovely." Ms. Woodward is years and miles away, remembering another time and other places.

"It was very innocent. War was something so remote. I grew up in the South, remember. And in the South, war still meant Civil War. In my home, we had two crossed silver sabers over the fireplace and when I was very small and adults were talking about the Civil War, I remembered the sabers and thought they meant 'Silver War.' It was...I had an image of knights and silver swords. All very romantic. But that's certainly not the way war is waged now — if it ever was."

There were no political activists in the home of Wade and Elinor (Trimmier) Woodward when Joanne was born on February 27, 1930. And none for years afterwards.

Ms. Woodward's late father — who began as a math teacher and became a vice-president of publisher Charles Scribner's Sons — was a lifelong Democrat.

"My mother," says Ms. Woodward, "was and is an adorable, round little Southern lady. But neither my father nor my mother was really interested in politics. I can remember when Franklin Roosevelt died — because, of course, he'd been president almost all my life.

"But mostly I lived in my own secure world and grew up in towns all over the South: Atlanta, Marietta, Blakely, high-school years in Greenville, S.C., Baton Rouge, where I went to Louisiana State University for two years. I acted in school plays and went to dances. I never thought about politics then."

It wasn't until she came north to New York — leaving her mother, by then Mrs. Robert Carter of Aiken, S.C., and her brother, Wade Jr., now an architect in Atlanta — that Joanne Woodward discovered street petitions and protest marches.

They were all "more radical" than she was, her fellow students at New York's Neighborhood Playhouse School of the Theater, directed by the famous Sanford Meisner.

SHE WAS THE kid with the funny Southern accent; who worked three years to eradicate it, only to find herself locked into playing a traditional Southerner for her first few Hollywood roles. No matter. "When I was young, no life but acting really occurred to me." says Ms. Woodward.

There have been professional turning points in her acting life. And good productions: "Rachel, Rachel," which marked her husband's successful debut as a director; "Summer Wishes, Winter Dreams," which won the New York Film Critics Award; an Emmy for "See How She Runs," a 1978 TV special that brought Ms. Woodward "hundreds of wonderful letters from viewers."

And then there was Oscar, one night in 1958. "Not a turning point, really," she says. "That was just a great big lovely moment in life, wonderful because I was very young. I'd dreamed about that moment and wanted it."

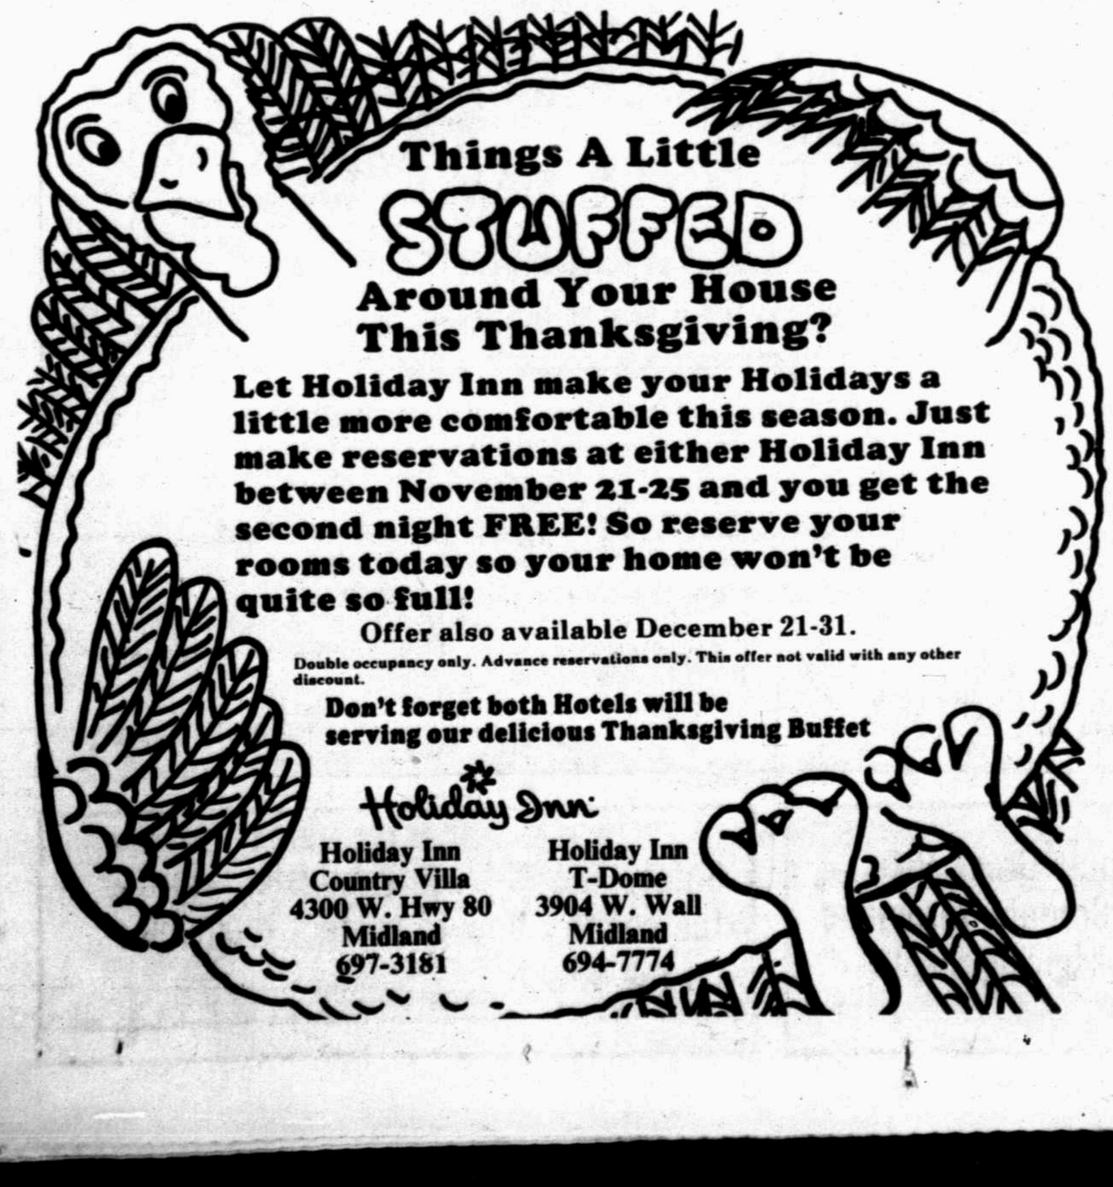

A more basic turning point came without the hoopla, the hype, the flashing cameras that surround most major stars like a warm mink coat. "When I reached... oh, somewhere in my mid-40s," she says, "I realized that once past a certain age, the roles Hollywood has to offer are not very interesting ones."

Recently, she has gone back to college, "taking courses just for my own interest." And she has been writing and directing for television.

"My first project for the American Film Institute was 'The Lover,' about a ex-vaudeville star, now a senile old lady, the younger ex-lover who takes care of her and the former vaudeville partner who comes to visit."

Would she ever direct her husband — who made his own brilliant directing debut with her in "Rachel, Rachel"?

That's an easy question for Ms. Woodward. "Why not? It would depend upon the part. But we work well together. We have respect for each other."

Audience at Rick Springfield concert keeps yelling for more

By BOB BRUNDAGE

Brundage

ODESSA — Rick Springfield, star of musical stage and movie and television screen, was a star in Odessa's Ector County Coliseum Wednesday night. Nobody wanted to see him leave.

Playing through a set that lasted 1½ hours, Springfield kept his audience yelling from the onset — when he stepped on stage to red and purple lights and smoke — until the concert's end. Even then the crowd wanted more, bringing the young entertainer back on stage for a well-received encore.

His audience came to see a show and he gave it to them. They wanted his hits, he sang them. They wanted to hear his new stuff, he threw that in too.

The music was loud and energetically performed. Springfield ran from one side of the stage to the other, jumped up on speakers at the corners and climbed a ramp that led to a ledge which was next to three screens. Videos were used to highlight his singing.

The videos were used throughout the performance, with songs like "Human Touch" and "My Father's Chair" which showed pictures of his family, including shots of his deceased father, the inspiration for the song and a sequel to "April 24, 1981"

One problem with the videos, for those interested in watching, was the stage and background lights used during the performance. For the most part the lights were dimmed enough for a good view of the screens but, at times, were too high and totally obscured the video presentation. It was the only real noticeable flaw of the show.

From the middle of his performance until the end, Springfield threw one after another of his biggest hits at the crowd, from "Human Touch," which brought the crowd to its feet, to "Jessie's Girl" to "You Better Love Somebody."

With each song the cheering just got louder. The crowd standing at ground level in front of the stage — the best view in the house — kept moving closer until there was a mass of bodies dancing and swaying with the music.

The crowd, which is at least half of the inspiration toward a good performance, was warmed up by Springfield's backup band, Canada's Corey Hart.

Though the audience never responded with the same type of wild enthusiasim as it did with Springfield, it enjoyed the music just the same.

Hart, also displaying an energetic performance with his music, got the crowd going strong late in his show with the songs "Sun Glasses at Night" and "It Ain't Enough" from his debut album "First Offense." He even went so far as to bring a girl from the crowd on stage to sing the chorus of "Sun Glasses" with him. Her vocals were far from professional standards, but was fun just the same.

The combination of the two, Springfield and Hart, made for an enjoyable evening. For those who missed this show, to see them in a return engagement — separately or together — is recommended.

'Amadeus' examines genius

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

The talent of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, the hero of "Amadeus," was certainly great enough to make almost anyone feel mediocre.

Mozart was composing music when he was five, launched a major concert tour of Europe by the time he was seven, had his first symphony publicly performed when he was 10 and at age 14 he wrote and conducted his first successful opera.

In his short life — Mozart died before his 36th birthday — he composed 77 sonatas, 8 trios, 29 quartets, 5 quintets, 51 concertos, 96 divertimenti, serenades and dances, 90 songs and arias, 60 religious works, 52 symphonies and 22 operas.

Not only did Mozart produce an astonishing quantity of work, the quality was, of course, outstanding. He and Beethoven are widely considered to be the two greatest composers of all time.

It is not altogether surprising, then, that he aroused strong jealousies during his lifetime. In fact, during the 19th century, it was rumored that a fellow composer, Antonio Salieri, was somehow responsible for Mozart's death.

While these old stories are now pretty much discounted as myths, playwright Peter Shaffer used them as the basis for his play — and now the motion picture screenplay — of "Amadeus."

Shaffer has freely admitted that "Amadeus" is "a fantasia based on fact" rather than a straightforward and completely accurate biography of Mozart.

His clever screenplay is a bit loose with some of the facts and chronology of Mozart's life, but Shaffer really doesn't distort the truth more than the average Hollywood "biopic" and manages to give an amazingly realistic idea of what Mozart the man probably was like.

Mozart was not a genius without flaws — he was childish, arrogant, a spendthrift and not very physcially attractive.

Tom Hulce — previously best-known for, of all things, playing a nerdy frat rat in "Animal House" — does an outstanding job playing the abrasive but brillant Mozart. He gives an intensively high-strung performance, has an obnoxious laugh and can be vulgar with the most casual ease, but still manages to be a sympathetic character.

"I am a vulgar man," he says in one scene, "but I assure you my music is not."

His rival, Salieri, finds Mozart's music sublime, but is throughly shocked when he first meets the composer, who is at that moment busily chasing a busty young lady around a room and making tasteless scatological jokes.

It is hard enough for the cultured Salieri to deal with the fact that someone has come along who makes his own music look terribly unimpressive, but that the person should also turn out to be an absolute nerd is simply more than he can handle.

Salieri has devoted his "chastity and industriousness" to music because he believes it is a purely spiritual medium.

"All I ever wanted was to sing to God," he says, but Mozart is a "giggling, dirty-minded creature" to Salieri's eyes and yet has 100 times his talent.

"Why would God choose such an obscene child as his instrument?" he wonders in outrage. Salieri then begins his war on both Mozart and God.

F. Murray Abraham is excellent as the elegant but vengeful Salieri. The entire very large cast, actually, is quite good without a single case of miscasting being obvious.

Milos Forman, whose previous films include "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," "Hair" and "Ragtime," directed "Amadeus." The movie could easily have been a drily intellectual art film, but in Forman's hands it becomes vividly alive.

Even while the film is seriously examining the nature of genius, the horror of realizing that one is mediocre, the importance of love and the fear of God, it also has hilarious moments of spritely humor and very entertaining musical scenes.

Forman obviously had a lavish budget to work with, and put it to good use by returning to his native Czechoslovakia to film "Amadeus" in some of Mozart's old haunts, like Prague.

Forman skillfully weaves Mozart's music into the film like golden threads in a plush tapestry. At times it's almost as though the audience is allowed to actually hear Mozart composing the music inside his head.

Many people will no doubt leave the theater with a much greater understanding of music. Sadly, perhaps only those who already love classical music will go to see "Amadeus," while the movie should be able to give almost anyone at least a slightly greater appreciation of Mozart's incredible work.

Both Mozart's music and "Amadeus" are such impressive achievements that it's hard not to leave the theater feeling a little humble.

"Amadeus," rated PG for adult situations and language, is now showing at the North Park Cinema.

'Country's' plot straightforward

"Country," which has just arrived in Midland, and "Places in the Heart," which has been showing here for a while, have many similarities. Both are quiet films about farm families struggling to hold onto their land, both feature strong female characters and both, oddly enough, have tornado sequences.

Perhaps most importantly, both films are very good.

The plot of "Country" is as levelly straightforward as the Iowa farmland it is set upon: a modern farming family finds itself faced with losing its land when the Farmers Home Administration abruptly calls in their loans.

Sam Shepard, who plays the farmer, and Jessica Lange, playing his wife, are stunned when it appears that they are on the brink of losing the only lifestyle they know.

"Hell, it's a way of life!" Shepard tells a government official.

"No, it's a business," comes the coldly bureaucratic reply.

Screenwriter and co-producer William Wittliff makes the family's story even more frightening by tragically paralleling it with a neighboring family whose similar problems are compounded by the fact that they have a retarded son.

Wittliff, a native Texan, manages to capture the dialogue, attitudes and details of farm life extremely vividly in his screenplay. He focuses on the personal suffering and family tensions caused by their financial problems rather than on those outward problems.

Wittliff took a similar approach in his screenplay for another film about a strong woman struggling for her family in 1981's "Raggedy Man" starring Sissy Spacek.

Wittliff and director Richard Pearce have so many little things just right in the film that anyone associated with contemporary American farm life will find scenes that are already sharply etched in their memories from real life: the battered Purina "checkerboard square" cap Shepard wears, the little girl and her baby sister playing "beauty shop" with mommy's makeup and coming home after church to eat Sunday dinner around the TV set and watch the football game.

Miss Lange, who not only stars in the film but also co-produced it, is a marvelous surprise.

Although she did put in a strong performance in the 1982 drama "Frances," nothing in Lange's better-known roles as the vacuous starlet in the lousy 1976 Dino De Laurentiis remake of "King Kong" or the sweet but not terribly wise soap opera actress in the 1982 comedy "Tootsie" indicated that she could play the gritty, unglamorous Jewell Ivy in "Country." She brings a quiet strength and surprising realism to her latest role.

Both she and Shepard look so gaunt and drawn in much of the film that they almost resemble younger, updated versions of the Midwest farm couple in Grant Wood's famous 1930 painting "American Gothic."

Shepard, who received an Oscar nomination for playing Chuck Yeager in last year's excellent film "The Right Stuff," also does a good job in his role, but Wittliff's screenplay seriously undercuts his character, apparently to make Lange look more impressive.

Shepard's character crumples, turns to hard drinking and disappears too suddenly for the film's own good. It is also not completely believeable since a farmer who has faced the years of adversity inherent in that life would likely prove much more resolute.

Character actor Wilford Brimley is also very good as the family's grandfather and the various children in the film are all nicely believeable rather than too cute or too obnoxiously precocious.

"Country" may be too quiet and bleak for some people's tastes but it is a strongly moving and realistic film about a possibly endangered way of American life.

"Country," rated PG for some adult situations and language, is now showing at the North Park Cinema.

'Affair' tries to show little sensitivity

The protagonist of "No Small Affair" is a 16-year-old obssessed with photography whose life is changed by a snapshot.

Within just a few days of taking that fateful photo, Charles, played by Jon Cryer, falls madly in love with a 22-year-old rock singer, gets thrown in jail, goes to his first stag party, is almost beaten up when he crashes a wedding reception, spends $6,000 on taxicab signs, offers a "lady-of-the-evening" money to give him a loathesome social disease, is grounded by his mother until he turns 40 and, on top of all this, gets a D minus on his French mid-term.

Charles is a smart, fairly likeable teen with a slightly sarcastic wise-cracking sense of humor.

"Hi. I'm Charles Cummings if you're wondering who's the son of the woman you had your way with," he cheerfully says to one of his divorced mother's dates.

He takes black-and-white photographs (he claims he even dreams in black and white) of inanimate objects, landscapes and even insects, but not people because he believes they're simply too much trouble.

After he accidentally photographs a beautiful woman, played by Demi Moore, however, he wants nothing more than to meet her and take some more pictures of her. He also eventually begins to dream in color.

In many respects, "No Small Affair" basically belongs to that genre of usually rather bad films, the teen-age sex comedy. "Affair" does have it's quota of bad jokes, sexual innuendo and female nudity.

It also tries to show a little bit of sensitivity too, though. Charles's pursuit of his dream girl really does seem to be romantic than sexual. Wandering the streets of San Francisco in the rain wearing a leaky garbage bag mooning for an unattainable girl may be a pretty juvenile thing to do, but it's only fair to keep in mind that Charles is an adolescent, after all.

The film is fast-moving and is full of oddball characters and funny dialogue. Interestingly, the director of "Affair," Jerry Schatzberg, is himself a former fashion photographer, which may help explain the film's hero's obsession.

Schatzberg gives his film a nicely human touch and still manages to keep it comic. The movie even turns out to be a little sad and wistful in the end.

"No Small Affair" may be a teen-age sex comedy at heart, but at least it really does have a warm heart.

"No Small Affair," rated R for sexual innuendo, adult situations and some nudity, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Houston theater group to perform 'Galley Proof'

ODESSA — The A.D. Players are presenting Jeannette Clift George's musical comedy "Galley Proof" at 2:30 p.m. today at the Globe Theatre.

"Galley Proof" breathes humor into the book of Exodus by combining slapstick, pantomine, music and drama. The play opens in ancient Egypt with the baby Moses being fished out of the Nile by a very bored daughter of Pharoah, journeys to the desert where a grown Moses receives a scholastic degree in leadership and returns to Egypt where Moses demands freedom for his people.

The plagues, the exodus, the Red Sea crossing and the trek through the desert are played out in modern-day terms, such as, "You can keep your eye on that pillar of fire; I'll start looking for a 7-Eleven."

The play uses a comedy to show how many of the problems facing Moses and the children of Israel 4,000 years ago are still with modern man.

A.D. Players is a Houston-based repertory theater company founded in 1967. The traveling arm of the company has performed in 36 states, three Canadian provinces, Scotland, England, West Germany, Switzerland and The Bahamas.

Admission to "Galley Proof" is $7 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens. Fulltime Odessa College and University of Texas of the Permian Basin students will be admitted free with a valid student ID card.

For more information call the theater, 1-332-1586.

Sponsored by McMinn Home Furnishings of Odessa, the performances are partially funded through a grant from the Odessa Cultural Council.

Late artist's paintings to be displayed at MC's gallery

Midland College is presenting a retrospective showing of paintings by Clarence E. Kincaid through Dec. 2 in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, Midland College campus.

Most of the paintings are from the Kincaid estate and have never been shown before. Other have been loaned by area collectors. Some are available for purchase.

"The work itself has a strong design quality, careful craftsmanship and is always a sensitive, forceful statement of the subject," said Dr. Charles Stewart, chairman of MC's fine arts department. "Light tended to dominate his thoughts while painting, thus his work possesses a strong chiaroscuro quality found in some of the works of the High Italian Renaissance."

In speaking of his paintings a few years ago, Kincaid said, "Content is the distilled essence of what an artist wants to say. I personally search for content through an intensified identification with the subject matter."

While most of his oeuvre depicts Southwest landscape forms, Kincaid often turned his attention to still life, portraiture and abstraction.

"A student of art history with a strong knowledge of painting styles, he considered and experimented with many schools and styles of expression," Stewart said. "While his research enriched his work, he deliberately sought to avoid any single style of expression or schema."

Kincaid died Nov. 28, 1983 at the age of 56. He is the subject of the entire November 1984 issue of Texas Trends, the official magazine of the Texas Art Education Association. A second retrospective exhibition is planned by the West Texas Museum in Lubbock for 1985.

SMU instructor discusses Poland

Currey: 'Poland' poor excuse for novel

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The audience is quiet by request as the sound of Chopin's Fantaisie Impromptu fills Theatre II.

"Chopin could only be Poland; he's unpredictable and you can't tell where he's going," Marjorie Currey tells about 100 people who have come to hear her review James Michener's book on Poland. This review is the first in a series of three Mrs. Currey will give in Midland. The other two in the series, sponsored by Casa de Amigos, are set for Feb. 20 and April 17.

The quote, from Michener's book, is taken from the comments of a young Polish pianist who goes on to say "he (Chopin) recorded our heartbeats." (It is interesting to note that the Russians took Warsaw in 1830 and Chopin never forgave them. He refused to perform in Russia and for the rest of his life filled his music with love for his native Poland.)

Mrs. Currey agrees with the character in Michener's book. She adds to those comments the following, "No matter what external form Poland takes, the heartbeat will always be for freedom."

She recalls what Winston Churchill and others have said, "People without a past, haven't got a future." Then, she points to how completely the Poles understand this by using the following example.

During World War II, Poland was marched across twice by the Nazis, twice by the Soviets. Both tried to obliterate any tangible trace of Poland's past; however, when the Poles rebuilt their capital city Warsaw, which was destroyed during the war, they did not choose to build in the style of the day.

Instead, at great personal expense, they rebuilt Warsaw exactly as it was before World War II as "tangible, material evidence that Poland has a past."

A difference in the Polish attitude and the American one, Mrs. Currey says, is the attitude toward World War II. "I think most of us don't ever think about the second world war. Even on Veterans Day this past week, I don't think we thought about World War II. In Poland they do."

As for Michener's book, Mrs. Currey says, "I wouldn't put hard-earned money into the hardback; it's a poor excuse for a novel. I wish he had written it as non-fiction, but then he wouldn't have sold half a million copies."

In 90 minutes, Mrs. Currey takes her audience through the history of Poland, recounting stories about its people, traditions, customs and attitudes. Many come from Michener's book; others from her own research and personal experience traveling in Poland. All are informative, well presented and hold the audience's rapt attention.

A teacher of theology and literature at Southern Methodist University and Hockaday School for Girls in Dallas, Mrs. Currey clearly demonstrates her understanding of both subject matters in her presentation. Her review also shows her understanding of world history and its impact on everyday life.

Her talk covers areas such as communism and religion considered sensitive in West Texas. These she handles with diplomacy.

In Poland it is not unusual for a member of the Communist Party and a priest to talk about their shared past and the ghosts they live with, she says, adding, this would not happen in this country.

"It (communism) has done some good; it wouldn't be going if it hadn't," Mrs. Currey says. "It isn't the devil incarnate." She uses as an example, the fact that prior to communist rule, only the nobility in Poland received an education.

Today, everyone has a chance for an education. The members of the communist party are able to send their children to better schools because they have access to "perks." Mrs. Currey points out the two systems, ours and theirs, work very much in the same manner in the area of fringe benefits.

Poland emerged into modern times, Mrs. Currey says, virtually intact as a medieval state with a rigid class structure. The nobility, no matter how poor, had absolute power over life. Only the nobility had "golden freedom." Each individual nobleman had the power of veto on anything that came up in assembly, Poland's governing body.

I'm sure everyone in here identifies with the nobility, not the peasants, she says. When the laughter subsides, she adds, "They had a devil of a time getting a standing army, hard time electing a king, and often elected a foreign king. Irony of ironies, 'golden freedom' keep them under foreign power."

The Polish have been dominated by foreigners so long, Mrs. Currey says, "They are expert at working within the system by working around the system." They use the two major tools, heroism and humor, for dealing with such a situation and are past masters at saying what they mean in jokes. The following Polish joke is an example.

A Pole is commenting favorably on the Soviet Union, referring to it as "big brother." An American tourist says, "I think it is rather unusual to call an enemy big brother." The Pole replies, "I think it is rather usual to be able to choose your enemy."

The Poles are no fools. After Hungary and Czechoslovakia, Mrs. Currey says, "They know they can't count on the United States of America, so they are going to stay with the Soviet Union."

She places the religious composition of Poland and the countries that surround it within their historical context, then says, "Today, Catholic piety and Polish nationalism are as intwined as they were then." She points to the fact that in Poland, officially an atheist country, thousands of people flock to churches every day. The communists have their children baptised and they marry in the church.

When asked about Solidarity during the question and answer period, she says, "The only visible evidence of Solidarity is a flower cross put out in front of a church in Warsaw every day." Solidarity was an attempt to get the communist party to live up to its promises of free trade unions and free elections, she says, adding, "Solidarity was a bleep in Poland's electrocardiograph."

She reminds the audience of what she has said earlier about the Polish spirit by quoting French philosopher Rousseau. His comments were made when Poland was partitoned into three areas in 1791. "The only sanctuary a nation has lies in the hearts of the people."

Mrs. Currey asks a question during the question and answer session designed to bring home her message of knowing one's past to know one's future. It works.

She begins by saying her reviews are presented to around 10,000 Americans a year and only 10 out of about 3,000 knew the answer.

"Who were the two first presidential candidates (in this country)? As names are being suggested by audience members, she adds, "Lots of Poles could answer that."

Then she recommends reading Michener's book in paperback and "The Poles" by Stewart Steven, to "launch out and see if you can't shape up your study of history."

In closing, Mrs. Currey says it was suggested she keep her presentation light. "I was told they want to laugh, they don't want to be instructed."

She does both, combining the two in an erudite manner.

Tennessee Valley Boys will give benefit concert

BIG SPRING — The Tennessee Valley Boys will be "Two-Stepping all the Way Back to Texas" for their fourth annual Country Music Benefit Concert at the Big Spring High School Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

This Nashville quartet has rapidly gained nationwide recognition this year with its first release, "Lo and Behold," which climbed to 53 on the Billboard chart nationwide and No. 1 in Calgary, Canada.

The Tennessee Valley Boys will be joined by Wally Fowler. Fowler has been in the country music business for 61 years. In addition to writing and singing songs, he helped discover such country greats as Hank Williams, Chet Atkins and Patsy Cline. Songs he wrote include Eddy Arnold's first million seller, "That's How Much I Love You," and Willie Nelson's "I Couldn't Believe It Was True."

One of the many stories Fowler tells centers around the naming of a group; one which is well known today, first in gospel and then in country.

In 1945, Fowler began playing shows at Oak Ridge, Tenn., the home of an atomic research laboratory.

"That was just before the atomic bomb," Fowler said. "There were 2,000 school kids there who couldn't get out because of security. We'd go and sing those hand-clappin', foot-stompin' spirituals every Saturday afternoon."

In honor of the kids response to the quartet, Fowler named the group the Oak Ridge Quartet. But the name was changed slightly by Red Foley.

"When Red Foley was emceeing the Grand Ole Opry, he'd say, 'Here comes Wally Fowler and his Oak Ridge Boys,' and that's how the name stuck."

That group was the precursor of today's Oak Ridge Boys.

Also performing Tuesday will be the cast of Music City Jubilee from Music Row, Nashville.

Advance tickets are $6 for adults and $3 for children. They may be purchased at Hastings Records and Tapes and The Record Shop, both in Big Spring.

Proceeds from the concert go to benefit the Big Spring Police Association to purchase law enforcement equipment and for related activities. The Big Spring Police Association is a charitable organization designed to help maintain a high professional standard for the Big Spring Police Department.

Writer to give workshop

Jheri Fleet, author of over 100 bylined articles in the past two years, will teach "How to Write and Sell Magazine Articles" in a week-long workshop starting Nov. 26.

Ms. Fleet is sponsored by the Professional Writers Workshop. This workshop will be offered from 6 to 10 p.m. at the Artificial Lift Efficiency School on Loop 250.

Ms. Fleet has spent 20 years working at being a writer.

"Writing was all I wanted to do, but there were other things that seemed to get in the way," she says. "I took many writing courses and finally found one that worked. I studied under a published writer and that did it."

"If you have worked in a job or company for five years, you know more than you think you do. Plumbers, housewives, salesmen, research assistants, secretaries and meter readers all have enough information to write articles about either their business and helpful hints or short cuts or their hobby and home life."

Ms. Fleet says the transition from magazine writing to books is not that complicated. "Once you establish the discipline of writing then you realize a book is only 20 articles that are tied together," she says, adding, "Non-fiction books sell very easily and make more money."

For more information on the workshop call 685-3568.

Novel portrays hell of combat

"High Command," by John Masters; William Morrow and Co.; 404 pages; $16.95.

By ED HUTSHING
Copley News Service

A Review

Because V-J Day was a milestone in recent history but hardly more than a pause for a deep breath in the military chronicles of the past 38-plus years, the world has forgotten what the term "peace-time army" really means. It was that 20-year era between World Wars I and II when arms and armaments, both for the army and the navy, were cut back and the numbers of men in the service were slashed to a bare minimum.

It would be ironic as well as eye-opening to compare the amounts of money this nation, Britain and France spent in keeping up their military establishments during those years, to, say, the budget for the coming fiscal year for the United States alone.

In "High Command," John Masters takes his hero from the end of World War I and the possible demobilization in June, 1919 of 20-year-old Lt. Bill Miller, throughout his career up to and including the rescue of British troops from Dunkirk in May, 1940.

Miller is no public schoolboy who fell into a commission with the Queen's Own Wessex Rifles. Rather, he ran away from home at 16, lied about his age and because of his bravery was given a battlefield commission. Miller does not want to leave the service, because he has learned to love all it stands for in the crucible of war.

Miller marries well, if not wisely, and through his father-in-law's influence remains in uniform. Then come the weary years of plodding duty in England, and later in India. There are confrontations with the jobless British labor unions, and with Indians fighting in a non-violent way for their independence. There is border violence with Afghanistan and, ultimately, a taste of the real thing in the Spanish Civil War in which Miller serves as a major with Franco's forces. There also are the petty politics and backbiting of "old school tie" officers and the jealousy of others who do not agree with Miller's views on modern warfare.

Through the vicissitudes of both his private and his military life, Miller keeps his eye on the main goal. He wants to become a general. And it is this climb, taking the rebuffs with the opportunities, that makes Miller emerge as a man who is not only a total human being, but an intelligent and sensitive leader.

The final portion of the book is given over to the tragic but heroic retreat through Belgium, as the British Expeditionary Force is nearly overrun by the swift-striking Panzer divisions. Here is where Masters brilliantly portrays the thinking of an officer in high command and the manner in which he must control and redeploy the troops and weapons he has at his disposal, not only to prevent the enemy from taking over, but also to save lives as well.

The scenes, and some of them are brutal and graphic, come close to "The Red Badge of Courage" in portraying the hell of combat. And it is the first time I can recall in any recent fiction that the reader is put in the shoes of a general in the field.

This is Masters' final work, because, sadly, he died in New Mexico last year. Yet somehow, I have a feeling that "High Command" was only the first of two books. The reader puts the volume down wondering if Miller did not, in the very end, achieve the rank of field marshal. God knows, he deserved to.

If I have any criticism of the work it is that the end-papers might have been devoted to maps, and there should have been a glossary of military terms which the average reader might find confusing despite Masters' explanations in the text.

Historian relates life of 'last fuehrer'

"Doenitz: The Last Fuehrer," by Peter Padfield; Harper & Row; 524 pages; $25.

By ROBERT ZIMMERMAN
Copley News Service

A Review

Karl Doenitz would rate a position in the history of naval warfare if only for his appreciation of what could be accomplished against enemy shipping by a "wolf pack" of submarines. But his story has greater dimensions. His Faustian pact with Adolf Hitler made him grand admiral of the German fleet, then briefly the fuehrer after Hitler's suicide, and finally a convicted war criminal in Spandau prison.

In this biography by the English naval historian Peter Padfield, we do not find much to admire in the character of Karl Doenitz, unless it is his unflagging dedication to the U-boat as a weapon of war.

He commanded a U-boat in World War I, became the architect of a new submarine fleet when the Nazis began re-arming Germany in the 1930s, and used the wolf-pack strategy to send hundreds of seamen and millions of tons of Allied shipping to the bottom during World War II. But his loyalty upward to his Fatherland and his loyalty downward to his U-boat crews became hopelessly confused and compromised by his gullibility to Naziism and his slavish belief in the infallibility of Hitler.

Doenitz would argue until his death in 1980 that he could have brought Great Britain to her knees if only Herman Goering and others closer to the fuehrer had been willing to put more resources into the submarine fleet instead of squandering them on tanks and airplanes for the war on land.

Padfield points out that if Doenitz had succeeded in shifting the Nazi emphasis to the war at sea, the Allies would have developed an appropriate response, and the outcome would have been the same. As it was, the ability of the Allies to provide air cover for convoys far out to sea, and to track surfaced submarines with radar, broke the back of the massed U-boat operations. The wolf-pack strategy was abandoned by January of 1944.

Doenitz mistook Hitler's hypnotic personal style for military genius, and allowed his belief in the Nazi cause to undermine his judgment about the chances that the Germans could win the war. "Our knowledge, our vision of things outside our limited sphere is fragmentary," he wrote in his war diary in 1943. "Anyone who believes he can do better than the fuehrer is foolish."

At Nuremberg, Doenitz protested that he should not have been put on trial with other Nazi leaders because he had served his country honorably and knew nothing about Nazi atrocities. He received a 10-year sentence, mainly for acquiescing in the use of slave labor for submarine construction, and for his association with an ambiguous order to U-boat commanders giving them authority to machine-gun the survivors of ships they had sunk.

Padfield concludes that if as much had been known at Nuremberg as is known today about Doenitz's position in the Nazi hierarchy, he probably would have been sentenced to death with Goering, Ribbentrop, Keitel, Jodl and others. Controversy about the Doenitz case has ebbed and flowed in postwar Germany. To the end, Doenitz insisted that he was tried at Nuremberg only for "political" reasons and otherwise had done nothing wrong.

His former staff officers and wartime comrades formed a circle of admirers and supporters after his release from Spandau, but the Bonn government kept its distance. The former grand admiral was denied a state funeral, and there was a ban against wearing military uniforms at the private services.

Forsyth's 'Fourth Protocol' good suspense novel

Copley News Service

THE FOURTH PROTOCOL: by Frederick Forsyth; Viking; 389 pages; $17.95.

A Review

Good suspense novel by the author of "The Day of the Jackal." Plot is based on miniaturization of nuclear bombs — to the point that they could be smuggled into a country and detonated with no warning. It is agent John Preston's job to stop an "accidental" explosion of such a nuclear bomb. Forsyth is a master at fitting seemingly disparate parts into the plot so that the whole thing suddenly makes sense — a master, in other words, of the suspense novel.

THE STORIES OF F. SCOTT FITZGERALD: selected by Malcom Cowley; Scribner's; 473 pages; $6.95 (paperback).

Fitzgerald wrote a lot of his short stories to stave off the bill collector. But, nevertheless, some of his short fiction is superior to his novels, with the notable exception of "The Great Gatsby." Fitzgerald struggled noticeably with "Tender Is the Night" and other longer works, probably because his alcoholism made long periods of concentration difficult. In this book the reader finds gems like "Babylon Revisited," "The Last of the Belles" and "The Lost Decade."

Safety Town teaches youngsters to protects themselves on street

By LIBBY BARSKY
King Features Syndicate

"I went right through a red light. I never saw it," Jason said. But Jason didn't get a ticket for the traffic infraction. The 5-year-old is enrolled in the Safety Town Program sponsored by the South Plainfield, N.J., Jaycees and Jayceettes with a grant from Prudential Insurance Company.

Safety Town itself is a miniature reproduction of a "real town" complete with wooden buildings built by Jaycee members. A network of streets is painted on the blacktop in back of the borough board of education administration building. It is here that the youngsters ride their "big wheels" which come equipped with seat belts.

The youngsters, most of whom will be starting kindergarten in the fall, learn to cross with a traffic light, to stop at the curb and to interpret different safety signs. They learn what side of the street people drive their cars and bicycles on. They also learn about the dangers of crossing railroad tracks, running between parked cars and how to avoid trouble, at home as well as on the street.

Although one of the long-range objectives of Safety Town is to have the youngsters eventually become safe drivers, the program's primary focus is in creating safety attitudes, in the home and on the playground as well as on the road.

The emphasis on road safety was the idea of Frend Boals, a mounted traffic policeman in Mansfield, Ohio. Boals wanted to teach children how to protect themselves after he read about the death of a little girl who was struck by an auto on her way to the first day of school in 1937.

Boals teamed up with a sign-maker friend to create the first miniature village. He set it up at various schools in Mansfield for pre-kindergarteners so they could be trained in safety before they entered a formal classroom.

In 1965, Dorothy Chlad originated "The New Concept of Safety Town" which expanded the curriculum to include safety in the home and community as well as on the street. "Children are exposed to more dangerous situations and objects than before," said Chlad of the copyrighted program.

In 1975, Sue Block, a Jayceette, brought the program to South Plainfield, N.J.

Youngsters listen to instructors lecture at the Safety Town Program.

"We started with approximately 60 youngsters," she said.

This past summer, over 150 children were enrolled in the two two-week sessions. Nina Turrise, a kindergarten teacher in the district's school system, aide Marlene Heacock and 12 teen-age volunteers saw that the program, which lasted 105 minutes daily for two weeks, ran smoothly.

"We couldn't do it without our teen-age volunteers," said Turrise.

Each volunteer is responsible for three or four children. They work with their assigned youngsters and teach them the safety rhymes, songs and their name, addresss and telephone number. Some of the volunteers, like Michel Bonnin, have been with the program for four years. Others, like Chris Heacock, were once participants as 5-year-olds.

As a thank-you to the volunteers, the Jaycees and Jayceettes host a party or take them to Great Adventure amusement park after the program is completed.

According to Turrise, the variety of experiences that the program offers is another reason that the youngsters are enthusiastic when they come every day. A trip to the local firehouse and visits to the rescue squad and school playgrounds as well as the community pool are just some of the highlights of the program. Daily visits to the administration building by police officers to show movies or demonstrations with "Otto the Auto" also make for lively instructions.

When "Otto the Auto," a Volkswagen made to look like a police car, came to Safety Town, Police Sergeant Francis Yurick of Traffic Safety asked what the children remembered after being at Safety Town for almost a week.

Lauren Graham, 5, was eager to speak. She stood for a moment in front of the car, shifting from one foot to the other, then said, "I forgot!"

But youngsters don't often forget, even if Lauren drew a momentary blank, says Ms. Heacock. She recalled that when her son Chris was in the program nine years ago, he couldn't forget his visit to the firehouse.

"After Chris visited the firehouse, he was so impressed about the need for a ladder to escape from his bedroom window that he kept asking for one. Finally, we bought him the ladder as a birthday present. He was thrilled," said Ms. Heacock.

Parents are thrilled with the program as well. In the questionnaire handed out at graduation, most parents answered affirmatively to "What is your opinion of Safety Town?" One mother replied, "It's important for the community to take the time to teach youngsters these necessary rules in safety. I appreciated the effort."

Parents are grateful not only for the things that their youngsters learned, but also for the way that their children keep every member of the family on their toes in regard to safety.

"If we cross a street, he tells us to look first," "My daughter informed me that I ride my bike on the wrong side of the road," and "Anything I fail to do, she reminds me," were the parents' replies to the questionnaire's query, 'Has the program prompted others to follow rules?'

And Susan Kendig sent her 6-year-old twins along with 5-year-old Tiffany for a refresher course. "Last year in Safety Town the twins learned to buckle up in the car. They would buckle up and say, 'Mommies should also buckle up.' We were in an accident, and if I hadn't paid attention to the twins, I might not be here now."

Community service organizations such as the Jaycees and Jayceettes sponsor Safety Town in South Plainfield. In other communities, the board of education provides the program.

Person's name makes statement, serves as introduction

By MARY ANNE B. COX
King Features Syndicate

Do you remember the comedy routine that led to a popular commercial done by a small man, with a small mustache, who delivered the line, "Oh, you can call me Ray, or you can call me Jay...but ya doesn't have to call me Johnson"? That small man hit upon a subject of interest to nearly everyone and hence his popularity and the hilarity with which his single comic device, besides his small mustache, was greeted.

Names and what they say about the people to whom they belong provide a fascinating study. For example, choosing the name for a new baby is frequently a cause of heated debate among family members.

A name for the baby is our first attempt at advertising a product that we have produced and we strive to choose a descriptive appelation that will sum up both the product's essential qualities and inheritance as well as our hopes for its future.

Aunts and uncles and cousins all have a stake in the matter and some advice to give on the subject of names. Faith, Hope and Charity, Jrs., IIIs and IVs, all speak volumes, not just about the bearer, but about the forebears as well.

Fortunately, few names today are as embarrassingly descriptive of character as were those invented by Charles Dickens for some of his more colorful and memorable characters. The names themselves delineated the essential traits of the character.

Mr. Sowerberry, the undertaker, and Chevy Slyme, from "Martin Chuzzlewit" call up vivid images just by their names. Ebeneezer Scrooge is a name that just sounds stingy. Such essential nomenclature today seems to be the exclusive territory of the Mafia: Joey (The Hook) Garbonza, or Louis (Larry the Nose) Lorenzo.

But still, a person's name, for better or worse, makes a statement and serves as his introduction to the world at large. It may become, as Dale Carnegie maintains, "the sweetest sound in the world" to that person or it may be the cause of embarrassment, a bad joke.

We have all had the experience of being introduced to someone with such an improbable name as Davy Crockett or Jack Rabbit to reply, "Sure, sure. Now what's your real name?" only to be greeted with an icy Queen Victoria stare which clearly, and editorially, states "We are not amused."

Conversely, what does one do when introduced to a man yclept R. Hollingsworth Dillingham III? In these days of "The Preppy Handbook," Skip, Chip or R.H. are all possibilities but it obviously calls out for a deferential "Mr. Dillingham," even when the person in question is only 5 years old.

Naming a pet is almost as difficult as naming a baby. Everyone in the family has his own ideas, his own claim, his own referential background to draw upon for inspiration. We have had a string of dogs and cats variously named Buttercup, Huckleberry, Blueberry and Jason. (Jason came, with his name, from a classical uncle.) We obviously lean toward the botanical in our own choices.

I have always wanted a cat named Anthony Martinetti so that I could call out the window, "Hey, Ann — thonnny!" but I have been voted down repeatedly. I have a friend who has named each new dog he has acquired over the years "Blue." A dog is only a dog if its name is Blue, according to him.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Change the set-up at work so that you have more clout. Tend to postponed chores. An unexpected invitation adds sizzle to your social life. You meet a very attractive Scorpio!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A friend offers you the benefit of his or her financial expertise. Pay close attention. Calm a sibling who is feeling jealous. You may not be able to depend on mate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have a firmer grip on your finances now. A special friendship need not end just because one of you is moving out of town. Your pals push you to socialize more.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An employment or romantic setback is strictly temporary. You will bounce back brilliantly! Seek support from your friends if vacillating on a major decision. Their encouragement fires your enthusiasm.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are most likely to find true love with a long-time acquaintance. Although romantic partner is possessive as well as dynamic, your relationship thrives. Travel is best postponed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An authority figure gives you strong encouragement now. Forget your doubts and act confident. Romantic partner may be thinking about marriage. Play a waiting game. A change of address is also possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your life could dramatically change direction. Do not despair if a partnership ends. New work interests will bring lasting rewards. Romance keeps you guessing. Do not reveal too much too soon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Focus on new friendships. A gentle Libra will play a key role in your life. An old wound begins to heal. A loving couple firms up their marriage plans. Show your delight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Introductions could lead to new employment opportunities. Get out and socialize. Write down your observations of the people you meet. The information could be important later on. Keep an eye on Aries.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): This is no time to sit passively by. Seize a leadership role at work before someone else does. Travel is favored. Your friends or relatives help you develop new contacts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A friend offers you an unexpected financial opportunity—be careful not to fumble the ball. You strike it lucky in romance, too. A blind date turns out to be something special.

Ethnic influences invade Thanksgiving dinner

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

In the United States, one holiday closely related to food is Thanksgiving Day. In Canada, where Thanksgiving is observed on the first Monday of October, there's little emphasis on a traditional meal. In America the holiday's steeped in the tradition of the Pilgrims' celebration.

Newspapers, magazines and cookbooks provide recipes to recreate what we have come to believe was the bill of fare when the Pilgrims and their Indian guests gathered 'round the table in 1621.

But, according to George R. Ursul, professor of history at Emerson College in Boston, no menu can be found, although accounts do mention an abundance of bass, cod, lobsters, oysters, wild turkeys, geese, ducks and venison.

There was roasted corn and mounds of other vegetables, he reports, as well as breads and cakes. Desserts were dried fruits of the summer which were eaten just as they were or baked in pies; and a mixture of cornmeal and molasses called Indian pudding.

According to many accounts, he said, the food was abundant but simply prepared. It was probably seasoned with sea salt but with very little pepper, nutmeg and cinnamon, so familiar to us today, because spices from the East were costly.

Food was consumed in vast amounts and with such a frenzy that some of the Pilgrims criticized these celebrations as tending to "make men too carnal-minded."

By 1660 Thanksgiving had taken root as a harvest festival but dinner played only a minor role until 1721 when the six- or seven-hour church service was abolished and dinner became an important part of the feast.

Now, I hate to burst our folklore bubble, but I learned on a recent visit to Williamsburg, Va., that in 1619 King James I granted the Berkeley Company a stretch of land halfway between what are now Richmond and Williamsburg.

On December 4, 1619, English settlers came ashore. Following the Berkeley Company's instructions that "the day of our ships' arrival... shall be yearly and perpetually kept as a day of Thanksgiving," they celebrated the first Thanksgiving. This was the year before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth.

Whatever the historical truth, most Americans will go on believing the traditional bird is turkey, the vegetables must be potatoes, turnips, sweet potatoes, greens and creamed onions. And desserts must be pumpkin, apple and mince pies.

But, in this melting pot we call America, ethnic influences are bound to invade the "American" meal. When I was a child, my American mother, following her Italian mother's menus for any feast and guided by my great-aunt who lived with us, served ravioli, capon or roast chicken.

Fine with us, until we got a little older and learned from friends that they "always had turkey and fixins." We began to feel deprived and eventually Mom capitulated and we too had turkey and fixins.

However, the meal began with her own special chicken-base soup with thinly sliced beans, carrots, celery, baby limas, peas, just a touch of tomato, and the tinest of meatballs scarcely larger than the peas.

I've been talking to friends of different ethnic backgrounds and was fascinated to find that even though they are first- or second-generation Americans, each has at least one ethnic dish that is now part of their Thanksgiving menu.

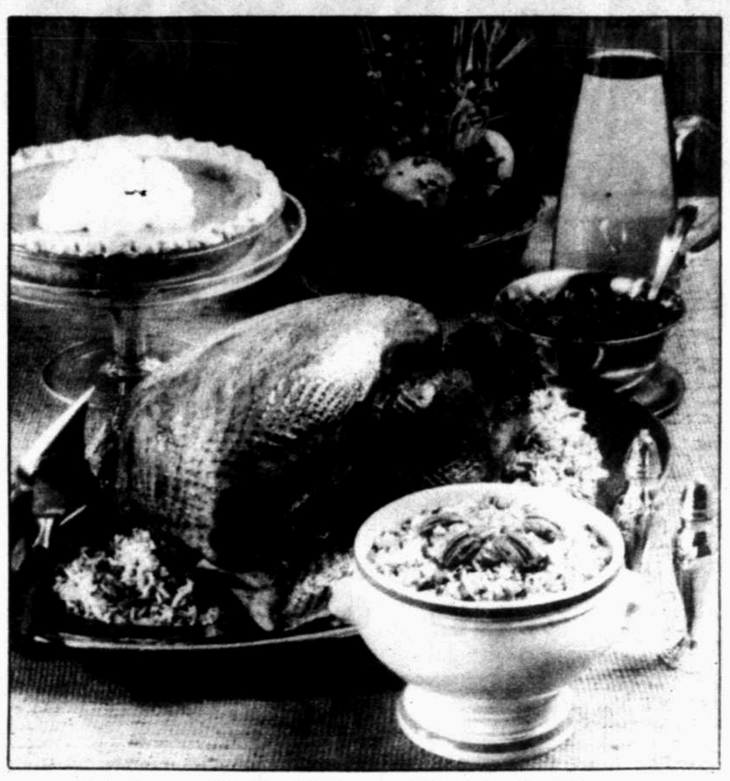

No one wants to discard the traditional, but you can inject an element of surprise with one or more of these recipes.

You might be dramatic like one of my French friends who carries his uncarved turkey to the table, dims the lights, flambes the bird, then sits back and enjoys the oohs and aahs. We used to flambe our roast chestnuts.

Instead of flaming, consider a fruity glaze. A friend, whose grandmother used to tell her that in Sicily the peaches grew as big as grapefruit and the oranges as big as cantaloupes, said that to set her Thanksgiving chicken apart from Sunday chicken her grandmother would give it a glaze. My friend has adapted it for her turkey.

Another friend, married to a Greek, has cast aside her Irish-American mother's bread stuffing for a unique Greek dressing.

A Chinese-American tells me his mother cooks an entirely American meal except for the soup. He's given me his simplified version.

Another, a Belgian-American, insists that his wife prepare Brussels sprouts the way his mother did.

The Germans rely on a different member of the cabbage clan. My sister-in-law's mother always included red cabbage cooked with wine and apples in her holiday meals.

A good number of Americans reside in California's grape vineyards. Naturally, their meals must include grapes. From one grower I discovered a luscious grape pie.

Another dessert comes from a Middle Easterner. Her dinner wouldn't be complete without Pistachio Cigars.

Thanksgiving binds all of our ethnic heritages in a special day of special food and fellowship.

3 cups chicken broth

In skillet with oil and butter, saute giblets. Remove from pan and finely chop. Return to pan with onion. Cook over medium heat until onion is golden.

Combine rice, pignoli and raisins. Alternately add one-quarter of the rice mixture and one-quarter of the broth to skillet. Stir and cook over medium high heat for 5 minutes. Continue every 5 minutes until all rice and broth is used. Stir continuously. Lower heat and continue cooking, uncovered, another 20 minutes.

Cool thoroughly, then lightly spoon into turkey. Do not pack.

During last 45 minutes of roasting, brush turkey with glaze.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS VERONIQUE

1 pint fresh Brussels sprouts, washed
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup finely chopped onion
¼ cup finely chopped celery
2 tablespoons flour
1¾ cups milk
2 tablespoons dry white wine
¼ teaspoon dried leaf marjoram
Salt and white pepper
2 cups seedless green grapes

In large saucepan, cook Brussels sprouts, uncovered, in enough boiling water to cover with ½ teaspoon salt until tender, 8 to 10 minutes. Drain; set aside. In same saucepan, melt butter. Add onion and celery; cook over low heat until tender, stirring to prevent browning.

Sprinkle flour over onion and celery, stirring to blend well. Gradually stir in milk. Cook, stirring constantly, until sauce thickens and comes to a boil. Stir in wine, marjoram and salt and pepper to taste. Stir in grapes and Brussels sprouts. Heat thoroughly.

1 teaspoon salt
1/16 teaspoon paprika
4 medium apples, unpeeled, cored and diced
¼ cup cider vinegar
¼ cup butter or margarine

In saucepan place cabbage, wine, salt, paprika and apples. Cover and simmer until cabbage is tender-crisp, 20 to 30 minutes. Add vinegar, tossing lightly, until butter is melted

• • •

SPECIAL GRAPE PIE

5 cups Ribier grapes
½ cup sugar
4 tablespoons cornstarch
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
½ teaspoon salt
Pastry for double crust 9-inch pie
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 tablespoons butter or margarine

Halve and seed grapes. Drain well.

Combine grapes, sugar, cornstarch, cinnamon and salt; place in pastry-lined pie plate. Sprinkle with lemon juice; dot with butter. Adjust top crust; flute edges and cut vents. Bake at 425F 35 to 45 minutes or until pastry browns and filling bubbles. If necessary, cover edges of pie with foil partway through baking time to prevent overbrowning.

Yield: 1 (9-inch) pie.

Note: If desired, grape leaf or turkey garnishes of pastry may be made as follows: Cut 6 leaf or turkey shapes out of pastry scraps, either freehand or with a cutter. With a dull side of knife, lightly imprint leaf veins or turkey features. Curve pastry cutouts over a rope of rumpled foil. Bake at 425F 8 to 10 minutes or until golden brown. Place on baked pie.

• • •

PISTACHIO CIGARS

1½ cups chopped pistachios
3 tablespoons sugar
¾ cup melted butter or margarine
16 sheets fillo dough
1 cup sugar
½ cup honey
½ cup water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon bottled rose water

In bowl, combine nuts and sugar; set aside.

Place 1 sheet fillo on damp towel. Brush with butter. Top with second sheet; brush with butter. Cut into 3 equal strips, 3 inches wide. Place 1 tablespoon nut mixture at narrow end of strip. Fold ends in and roll up into tight cylinder. Place on buttered baking sheet. Repeat with remaining pastry and filling. Brush with butter.

Bake in top third of oven at 400F for 20 minutes until crisp and golden.

Meanwhile, in small heavy saucepan, combine remaining ingredients except rose water. Cook to 220F on candy thermometer. Add rose water. Brush over pastries and pass remaining sauce.

Thanksgiving holiday for everyone to enjoy — even cook

By DOREEN T. HANSBURY
King Features Syndicate

Thanksgiving is a day to be enjoyed with relish. It's too late to mow grass, and usually too early to shovel snow. It's too late to feel guilty about unfinished summer projects, and one day too early to plunge into Christmas chaos. (Shopping is still at the enjoyable stage: on a list.)

Happy Thanksgiving Day celebrations have undergone external changes since the first big feast for Pilgrim fathers, Pilgrim mothers and helpful Indian neighbors. But the basic roast turkey, pumpkin, cranberries and overeating remain the same. I expect those first celebrants also could have used a touch of Tums or Rolaids after dinner.

Artists show us how the first Thanksgiving must have been. They depict Pilgrim fathers strolling around wearing broad-brimmed black hats and puffing on long-stemmed pipes. No doubt the men also were questioning the amount of salt Pilgrim mothers added to food they were stirring in big cauldrons.

The fall feast became such a popular observance it soon spread from New England. Now it's a national holiday.

In most households the top morning priority is to get the big bird in the oven early enough so dinner can be served before dark. I don't mind getting up at 5 a.m. for such a good cause, but my day has been getting off to a slippery start ever since meat packers started winding that pesky metal "footcuff" around the legs and nether end of the turkey.

No amount of pushing, shoving or poking can remove it from the bird without breaking a wooden spoon handle and a church key in the process. Nevertheless, the turkey does get stuffed, trussed and placed in the oven. And if anyone is up to overhear the cook's epithets, it remains a secret.

Second to turkey and gravy, some people consider the stuffing the best part of the feast. In a household I know well, Thanksgiving came hard on the heels of the wedding day, and that first holiday dinner almost instituted the proceedings for divorce. And all because of that stuffing.

His family made it with sausage and prunes. Hers made it the right way, with onions and chestnuts.

The big question before that first dinner was — which family recipe would be used? Naturally for each, the recipe they had grown up with was not only the best, but the only possible choice!

This confrontation led to one of those "If I don't get my way on this, I'm walking out the door" arguments. With both hands, feet and teeth, each one clung to the position of using the "old family recipe."

Then compromise and young love prevailed.

Now in use is a delicious stuffing of sausage, prunes, onions and chestnuts (and a few secret ingredients we each throw in while the other one isn't looking). After 30-plus years, it's grown to be the "old family favorite."

While Thanksgiving would seem to be one of the year's happiest celebrations, listening to Mona tell about last year's made me glad we hadn't been invited to her house.

Basically, Mona's dinner preparations didn't bring her to the point of exhaustion. She simply had her housekeeper clean and polish the house, silver and crystal, including the dining-room chandelier, while she called her turkey order in to the caterers. Yet, Mona vows this year she'll heat up TV dinners.

"I invited 14 out-of-town relatives who hadn't seen each other for years," Mona explains. "How could I have suspected it would be a disaster? Before the soup plates had been cleared, I sensed the ambiance of the occasion has been ruined," Mona moans.

She describes the horrible details. "Uncle Harry, who is politically a tad to the right of Attila the Hun, was engaged in a 'disscussion' with Cousin Fred, who is of the opinion Karl Marx was a conservative. Then, at the far end of the table, Aunt Florrie, who thinks ERA is a laundry detergent, started a shouting match with Cousin Gloria, who spends her time promoting women's rights on TV talk shows.

"In the meantime, Uncle John lit a cigar, which sparked fireworks between him and Cousin Earl, who spent the year fighting to give up smoking.

"Between mouthfuls, Cousin Ella and Aunt Marge debated the merits of the latest books by the current crop of diet doctors."

Mona recalls the females produced the higher decibel count, but the males came closer to mayhem.

"It was miserable," Mona moans. "I couldn't wait for them to leave so that I could lie down with a cold cloth on my head." It proved again large family reunions, like a fall day, can bring a mixture of sunshine and rain.

When I asked Agnes about her plans, she naturally had the day all organized. As usual, she was more than willing to share her system for easing the Thanksgiving work load.

"For instance," she instructs (holding me by the scarf), "I buy canned yams all cooked, peeled and ready to candy. Ditto, pearl onions in a jar. They come ready to drain and cream. Then I thaw one of the vegetable casseroles I 'double-batched' in September, pop a prestuffed turkey in the oven, and that's it!"

While Agnes doesn't admit this, I suspect she also commits an assault on the basic pioneering spirit of American womanhood by buying pumpkin and mince pies.

Olivia has a special Thanksgiving — a home-grown one. But, I think I will decline her invitation after our experience of joining her for dinner last year.

True, it was delicious. Her turkey dressing was perfectly flavored with home-grown sage and thyme, the pumpkin pie was the result of her garden's greatest effort, and all the vegetables were the end result of tenderly cared-for seedlings brought to harvest perfection by Olivia's green thumb.

Still, it is somewhat unsettling eating with Olivia. She discusses every green bean and Brussels sprout with the same pride most people save for their children. When she talks about "Bertie," the largest Brussels sprout, and her "darling" green beans, it curbs my appetite.

My friend Agatha loves Thanksgiving and always cooks a big dinner after joining a morning service at the little white church in town. She's planning on a large gathering around her table this year.

Austic boy is 'child of wonder, child of joy'

By SHEILA BARRY
King Features Syndicate

As I look out my kitchen window into the crisp fall air, I see the lone figure of an 8-year-old boy. He is standing in a far corner of the yard intently clapping two leaves together. A few feet away his 5-year-old brother plays happily with his small friend. Out front my two girls, ages 9 and 3, are involved in a game of hide-and-seek.

A new child to the neighborhood wanders by. He stands and watches my 5-year-old and his friend. Within minutes he is completely involved with them. Soon his eyes wander to the lone figure of the bigger boy. They are now fixed on him. A pain crosses my heart. The new boy continues to stare for a few moments, and then goes back to the wonderful world of child's play.

My 8-year-old slowly wanders over to the play group, and for a brief moment his eyes fix on them. My heart skips an extra beat — maybe this time he will join in. For a few seconds he watches. The leaves fall from his hands, and I think at this moment he has entered the world that surrounds him. But he soon turns to pick up his precious leaves and returns to his own private world, an immersion into an autistic shell.

This is my child of wonder, my child of joy.

Where did it all begin? My thoughts wander back to the day he was born...a nine-pound, six-ounce beautiful boy. The joy my husband and I felt in our heart could never be expressed. Total strangers remarked on his beauty and we smiled in agreement. We brought him home to our year-old daughter and our happiness was twofold.

The months flew by and then the years. My son grew more beautiful with time but a heaviness began to grow inside of me. He made no attempt to play with toys. That once-only moment when your child first mouths that lovely word "Mama" never happened.

In place of that bright-eyed look of a Gerber baby, there was a distant stare, as if he could see something the rest of us were forbidden to see.

He was hyperactive. He roamed through the house seemingly in constant search for something. His needs were meager — a few certain foods, and a set of bowling pins which had to be lined up perfectly straight or his world would have surely shattered.

It took doctors seven months to diagnose him. The bearded one told us it was called childhood autism. The specialists were unsure of the cause, he said. Some felt it was an emotional disorder, others said it was metabolic, and still others thought it was a form of brain damage.

We were told over and over not to blame ourselves, a statement which later on we were grateful for. In the future we were to meet many parents who were told that they did this to their child.

My husband and I left the brightly decorated interior of the doctor's office after getting the diagnosis. We both had a grip on our child's hand. He was angry and frustrated. It had been a long afternoon — a long seven months.

We stepped out into the cold January afternoon and the wind whipped at our bodies. Our son smiled. He loved the wind in his face. We ran with him; he laughed. He was happy, and back in his own world.

I was enveloped in bitterness and pity. I asked the question, "Why?" But there were no answers. For the next few weeks I functioned as a robot. I felt nothing. I wanted no one. Finally some sense of feeling invaded my numb body and my mind once more began to react.

It was the feeling of anger. I was angry with God, angry with everyone. Still, I was relieved to have this feeling. It put me back into motion. No longer was I a robot.

One day I looked through the one-way mirror in the nursery school. The teacher was working with my child. She was very good. He sat for a few seconds, so she rewarded him with a piece of M&M candy. She was trying to get eye contact. When he looked at her he was again rewarded. She told me we should try and toilet train him (he was then 4 years old).

On Christmas morning the brightly decorated tree filled the small room. Red and green wrapping paper was strewn about, and the smell of the traditional turkey was everywhere. I felt some kind of inner peace. My 5-year-old was playing contentedly with a new doll. My 2-year-old was piling blocks and laughing happily. In the corner my 4-year-old lined up a new set of bowling pins with the intensity of a perfectionist.

The teacher told me he was doing fine. I too could see improvement — eye contact where a blank stare used to be; a child sitting in a chair instead of constantly in motion. And I was beginning to hear sounds from a once mute body. I was no longer angry. A new feeling had taken over, one much more comfortable than anything felt in years past. I think it was called hope.

When I first started writing this article, I thought I would write about what is being done and what I felt should be done about autism. But as I wrote, a strange thing happened. Instead, I saw hidden feelings and memories go down on paper.

It is difficult for me to believe that so many years have passed since it all began. I now look at my 8-year-old through the eyes of hope. This has been made possible only because of the friends we've made and the lives we've touched over the years.

I would give anything I have if my child could be freed of this strange illness, but I also know that I can now face each day with the feeling that this child is truly a gift. He has changed our values, he has changed our lifestyle. He has made us all aware of the little things we take for granted in God's world. He is a pleasure to be with.

He is still my child of wonder, my child of joy.
