Noriega now facing drug charges

Panamanians celebrate his departure

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Exultant Panamanians danced in the streets and embraced American soldiers when they heard that Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, who intimidated them for years, had left the Vatican Embassy and surrendered to U.S. troops.

"The people feel a sense of peace knowing that the monster is leaving our land," said President Guillermo Endara, who was a frequent target of Noriega's thugs.

The ousted strongman decided to give up Wednesday night after realizing that he was cornered — that even his long-time supporters had turned against him, the archbishop of Panama, Marcos McGrath, said today.

"Once the Vatican had made it quite clear that he was not a diplomatic nor political refugee — but rather a refugee with criminal charges against him — it was quite clear he could not go to a third country. Therefore, his choice was simply Panama or the States," McGrath told ABC's "Good Morning America."

After hundreds of angry Panamanians staged an anti-Noriega protest outside the Vatican Embassy on Wednesday afternoon, Noriega "began to realize how much feeling there is against him in Panama — that it's much safer going to the States," McGrath said.

Late flight to U.S. follows his surrender

By BRIAN MURPHY

MIAMI (AP) — Fallen Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega arrived in the United States early today to face drug trafficking charges after surrendering to U.S. troops outside his Vatican Embassy sanctuary in Panama City.

Noriega, who defied two U.S. presidents until he was toppled by the Dec. 20 American invasion, was flown to Homestead Air Force Base, about 25 miles south of Miami.

Noriega was scheduled to appear this afternoon at U.S. District Court in Miami.

His attorney said Noriega planned to plead innocent to the charges that he used his official position to provide protection for the notorious Medellin cocaine cartel.

Panamanians celebrated in the streets as he left the country he has dominated since 1983 as military leader, and Panamanian exiles cheered in the cool night air outside the air base where a C-130 carrying him landed at 2:45 a.m.

"I wanted my children to see the reason people in Panama have been suffering," said 33-year-old Manuel Arana, who brought his two young daughters to Homestead. "To me, this is as important as the Berlin Wall coming down."

Maj. Bob Barca of the Air Force said Noriega departed the base at 2:51 a.m., but he would not disclose where Noriega was taken.

A security official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Noriega was being held in the federal courthouse.

Word of Noriega's departure from Panama late Wednesday triggered celebrations across Panama City. People banged pots and pans and kissed U.S. soldiers. Fireworks lighted the sky around the Vatican mission. Youngsters raced up and down streets waving Panamanian and U.S. flags.

"We are relieved to be rid of this criminal," Panamanian President Guillermo Endara said in a statement broadcast on national television. "The people feel a sense of peace knowing that the monster is leaving our land."

In Washington, President Bush said Noriega, who had taken refuge in the embassy on Christmas Eve, turned himself over to U.S. authorities voluntarily and "with the full knowledge" of the Panamanian government.

"It seems that the Vatican officials basically stressed to Noriega that his only viable strategy was to give himself up," said a U.S. official in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Bush said in his nationwide address that he is committed to giving Noriega a fair trial.

Powell travels to Panama to plan troop withdrawals

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush dispatched the nation's top military officer to Panama today to plan further American troop withdrawals as the administration hailed Manuel Antonio Noriega's dramatic surrender as the "icing on the cake."

Noriega was flown to Homestead Air Force Base near Miami and was expected to be arraigned later today on drug trafficking charges.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, appearing on CBS, said the United States did not strike a deal with Noriega. He explained Noriega's surrender this way: "I think he saw the handwriting on the wall."

He said Noriega's decision to walk out of the Vatican Embassy, where he had been holed up since Dec. 24, clears up a host of legal questions that could have complicated his prosecution.

"We have a good case," he said on NBC. "If we can make it better, we won't hestitate to do so."

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, also appearing on CBS, said Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, would work with Gen. Maxwell Thurman, commander of the more than 24,000 U.S. troops still in Panama, to "develop a plan for withdrawing those troops over the next several weeks."

Cheney called Noriega's surrender "the icing on the cake" for Operation Just Cause, the military invasion the United States mounted on Dec. 20 to drive Noriega from power. Bush said all his objectives in ordering the troops to Panama "have now been acheived."

Bush said the remaining U.S. troops in Panama will be withdrawn "as quickly as the local situation will permit."

Clements to call session on judges

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Legislature, facing a federal judge who ordered special non-partisan elections of state district judges in nine urban counties, including Midland County, on May 5 will consider judicial reform in a special legislative session, Gov. Bill Clements said Wednesday.

Clements, a Republican who previously said he would call a special session in March to deal with public school finance, said Wednesday he will determine the date for the session on judicial reform after he has consulted with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis, both Democrats.

Clements also asked Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox to appeal the case to higher courts to set aside the federal court order, which he said posed a "radical change" on the state's judiciary.

One affected judge filed an appeal on Wednesday.

Lawmakers hoped to hold off devising the permanent plan until the regular session in the spring of 1991, but U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton of Midland Tuesday said he would order a permanent plan to elect state judges in line with the Voting Rights Act if the Legislature does not act this spring.

As an interim solution for the 1990 election, Bunton ordered the nine urban counties, including Midland County, split into multiple judicial districts for a special May 5 non-partisan election.

Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton's order mandating non-partisan elections of 115 Texas district judges in nine urban Texas counties, including Midland and Ector, has been appealed to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans by District Judge F. Harold Entz of Dallas.

The order, which is designed to correct what the Bunton perceives as illegally diluted minority voting rights, calls for setting aside the Democratic Party and Republican Party political primary elections for judgeships in those nine counties on March 13. Instead, candidates for the judgeships would run for elections by single-member districts on May 5. Any run-off elections would be on June 2. Filing deadline would be March 26 with county election administrators.

Grand jury to investigate fire death

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A grand jury will investigate the fire death of a 6-year-old Midland boy a week ago, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said today. Meanwhile, investigators from three agencies returned to the burned out house to videotape evidence.

"We are going to present results of the investigation to the grand jury," Painter said. "There are some inconsistencies with stories provided to the investigators ... evidence we are uncovering leads us to believe there is a necessity for the grand jury to look at it."

Painter would not be more specific about what evidence has been found at the home at the intersection of South Midkiff Road and County Road 116.

Deryle Milholland, 6, was asleep in a bedroom when the fire broke out just after 1 a.m. on December 28. Paramedics at the scene were unable to revive him and he was pronounced dead on arrival at Midland Memorial Hospital.

The boy died of carbon monoxide poisoning, or smoke inhalation, according to an autopsy performed in San Antonio.

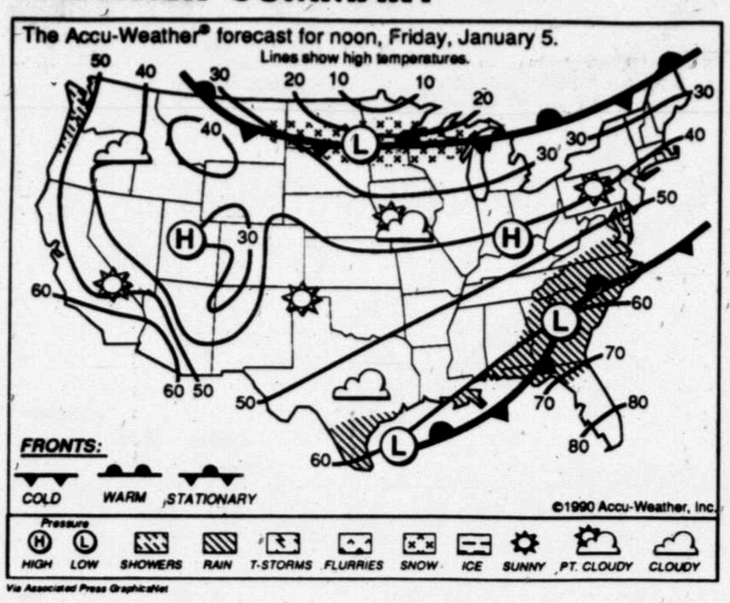

Jimmy Vanover, 26, the boy's stepfather, was treated for burns he suffered in the blaze. The boy's 3-year-old sister also escaped serious injury in the fire.

Vicky Milholland, the boy's mother, was not at home when the fire started, investigators said.

Fair skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight with low clouds expected near morning, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 20s and winds will be from the northeast at 5-15 mph.

Skies will be briefly cloudy Friday morning, becoming partly cloudy with the high in the lower 50s and winds from the east at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday's high of 60 was 10 degrees cooler than the record high of 70 set for that date in 1977. The overnight low of 24 was 16 degrees warmer than the record low of eight degrees set for this date in 1959.

STATE

Scattered showers are possible across South Texas and Southeast Texas tonight and Friday and drizzle and fog could develop across Northeast Texas late tonight.

The rest of the state will have clear to partly cloudy skies tonight and Friday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from the 20s in the Panhandle to the lower 50s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs Friday will be mostly in the 50s, ranging from the 40s in the Panhandle to the lower 60s in southern portions of the state, including the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

A low pressure trough at the surface stretching across western Louisiana and Southeast Texas triggered a few showers and a few isolated thunderstorms in Southeast Texas and along the upper coast early today.

Dense fog was reported during the pre-dawn hours along middle to upper sections of the Texas coast. Visibility was reduced to near zero at some points along the coast.

A Pacific cold front extended across North Central Texas and the Concho Valley westward into the Big Bend area early today and a cold, dry ridge of high pressure was reported in western portions of the state behind the front.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from the teens in the Panhandle and the 20s in West Texas to the 50s behind the front and in the 60s along the lower coast. Extremes ranged from 18 at Dalhart to 66 at Port Arthur.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 22 at Amarillo, 37 at Wichita Falls, 45 at Fort Worth, 56 at Waco, 60 at San Antonio, 65 at Houston and Corpus Christi, 64 at Brownsville, 37 at San Angelo, 26 at Lubbock and Midland and 29 at El Paso.

PANAMA

Jubilation gripped the capital of 1 million residents seconds after radio and television announced that Noriega, who ruled Panama six years with no popular mandate, had given up after evading American troops sent in to capture him Dec. 20.

"It's over! It's over!" people shouted as, leaning out of their cars and blaring their horns. Some people screamed themselves hoarse.

People ran up to the U.S. military roadblocks and hugged and kissed U.S. soldiers. They banged pots and pans, and fireworks exploded in the sky around the Vatican mission.

Youngsters raced around waving Panamanian and U.S. flags.

"Thank God, Panama can now feel like a free country," said Moises Rios, 20, one of hundreds outside the Vatican Embassy minutes after Noriega left.

A Vatican Embassy spokesman said Noriega left "of his own will" in his general's uniform shortly before 9 p.m. Wednesday.

As soon as he walked out, he was arrested by U.S. soldiers who had surrounded the building since he sought refuge there Christmas Eve.

Noriega was whisked by helicopter to Howard Air Base west of the capital and flown by military transport to Florida, where he faces drug trafficking charges.

The surrender took place just hours after about 20,000 people shouting "No More!" and "Assassin!" marched to the Vatican Embassy to demand Noriega's surrender.

Noriega was said to have been under "strict isolation" at the mission on orders of the papal nuncio, or ambassador.

McGrath said he saw little of Noriega in the embassy, but "from what I hear while he was there, he kept pretty much to himself and was downcast and a bit moody."

The television in the room Noriega used was broken, but Noriega must have heard the protesters and knew from radio reports broadcast by U.S. loudspeakers that his supporters had abandoned him.

Less than an hour after Noriega surrendered, President Bush announced victory in Washington: "His apprehension and return to the United States should send a clear signal that the United States is serious in its determination that those charged with promoting the distribution of drugs cannot escape the scrutiny of justice."

Bush also paid tribute to servicemen who were killed and wounded in the invasion, saying "Their sacrifice has been a noble cause."

By official count, 23 American soldiers and three American civilians were killed in the fighting. More than 300 American troops were wounded. At least 290 Panamanian soldiers and about 300 civilians were killed.

Gen. Maxwell Thurman of the U.S. Southern Command said American forces had only a few minutes' notice before Noriega surrendered.

Noriega's surrender ended days of bargaining. In the end he got three concessions: to be allowed to make a few phone calls and wear his uniform, and that his decision to give himself up be kept secret until his arrest.

Sources in Washington also said Vatican officials relayed to Noriega assurances he wouldn't be tried on a federal drug kingpin statute that carries the death penalty.

The surrender came after a visit by Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger and Vatican diplomat Monsignor Giacinto Berloco, and Thurman thanked Eagleburger for his efforts.

Administration sources said the United States did not deal directly with Noriega at any time and that all negotiations were through church officials.

The Vatican Embassy said in a statement after Noriega's departure that he "considered the situation serious and took the responsible decision to leave of his own will the residence of the pope's representative."

Noriega made no public statements during his stay in the Vatican compound.

Thurman said Noriega didn't say anything when he was spirited out but added that the former strongman "looked vigorous, looked confident. He looked fine."

NORIEGA

The United States agreed to three conditions set by Noriega: that he be allowed to make some phone calls, that his decision be kept secret until the actual time of his arrest, and that he be permitted to wear his uniform, administration officials said.

Although Gen. Maxwell Thurman, the commanding general of U.S. forces in Panama, said there were "no deals here," administration officials said the United States had also promised Noriega he would not be prosecuted under a new federal law allowing the death penalty for "drug kingpins."

The assurances were relayed to Noriega through Vatican officials. The United States did not directly deal with Noriega, the sources said.

Thurman said Noriega "looked vigorous, looked confident" as he walked out of the compound with the papal nuncio, Monsignor Sebastian Laboa. He was wearing his general's uniform.

But Panamanian Archbishop Marcos McGrath told ABC-TV the former chief of the Defense Forces gave up because he was "undoubtedly a lonely man, a broken man."

Thurman said Noriega's surrender "completes the fourth of our four objectives" in invading Panama. The others, he said, were to protect American lives, safeguard the integrity of the Panama Canal treaties and restore democracy to Panama.

According to authorities, about 290 Panamanian soldiers, 300 civilians, 23 U.S. troops and three American civilians died in the invasion.

Noriega's arraignment was tentatively scheduled for this afternoon in the federal courthouse in downtown Miami, said Diane Cossin, a spokeswoman for U.S. Attorney Dexter Lehtinen.

"There's going to be a plea entered tomorrow of not guilty," said Noriega defense attorney Steven Kollin. "We're going to request certain pretrial discovery requests including certain sensitive documents, and these sensitive documents will get to the truth of the matter.

"I believe he will be found not guilty if we can find a jury of 12 people after this unparalleled pretrial publicity."

If convicted, Noriega faces up to 145 years in prison and fined $1.1 million. He faces similar federal charges in Tampa.

A roadblock to prosecuting Noriega is his right to demand classified information stemming from his past cooperation with the Central Intelligence Agency, legal experts have said.

Noriega reportedly worked closely with the CIA and the Pentagon while he served as the head of Panama's military intelligence service and after he became commander in chief.

Federal officials were tight-lipped about where Noriega would be detained in the hours before his arraignment, citing security concerns.

But the fact he was on U.S. soil brought hope to Panamanians who had lived under Noriega's regime.

Among those waiting outside Homestead's main gates early today was Adela Giroldi, whose husband, Moises, was executed after leading a failed coup against Noriega last October.

"This is a great day," said Mrs. Giroldi. "I never thought I'd see Noriega being brought to justice in this way. ... This is a day all Panamanians celebrate."

TROOPS

Thirty House members left Andrews Air Force Base this morning for a two-day fact-finding visit to Panama.

House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., the head of the delegation, said the lawmakers "commend the president for being able to achieve the military objective that he set out. Now, the job begins of re-establishing our relationship with Panama, building a democracy in Panama."

Although Thurman stressed Wednesday night that no deals had been made, administration officials said the United States promised Noriega that he would receive a fair trial and would not be prosecuted under a new federal law allowing the death penalty for "drug kingpins."

The United States also agreed to meet three last-minute conditions by Noriega, the officials said: that he be allowed to make a few phone calls, presumably to relatives; that his decision be held secret until his arrest; and that he be allowed to wear his uniform.

Bush said in a nationally televised announcement that the United States "is committed" to provide Noriega a fair trial.

"Nevertheless," Bush added, "his apprehension and return to the United States should send a clear signal that the United States is serious in its determination that those charged with promoting the distribution of drugs cannot escape the scrutiny of justice."

Bush said he had four objectives in ordering 14,000 troops into Panama beginning Dec. 20 to supplement the 12,000 already stationed there to topple the Noriega government — safeguarding the lives of Americans, helping to restore democracy, protecting the integrity of the Panama Canal and bringing Noriega to justice.

"All of these objectives have now been achieved," Bush declared. He left the briefing room without answering questions.

Bush began bringing troops home on New Year's Day. Some 1,000 have now come home.

Noriega's return to the United States ended a two-year effort by the United States to bring him to justice and eliminated the source of what Bush called the major frustration of his first 11 months in office. But it opened the book on a whole new set of legal problems.

U.S. legal authorities have been studying secret documents this past month on Noriega's long tenure as a CIA and Drug Enforcement Administration informant. They expect he might try to derail his prosecution by seeking disclosure of information that would be embarrassing to Bush — a former CIA director — and the United States.

Bush several days ago said he was concerned that Noriega might try to "blindside" the legal process with such demands; but he said he wanted him brought to justice in a U.S. court anyway.

If convicted on all charges, Noriega could face up to 145 years in prison and more than $1.1 million in fines.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said, "Noriega will finally have his day in court, which is more than he gave the people of Panama."

SESSION

Bunton said he gave the Legislature a chance to offer an interim plan for the 1990 election, but Clements "deemed it advisable not to submit the question of judicial redistricting to the special session" in November and December.

Instead, Bunton said, Clements told him Dec. 11 he proposed to call another legislative session in April or May.

"If the Texas Legislature fails to fashion a permanent remedy by way of a special called session in the spring of 1990, then this court will put into effect a permanent plan for the election of state district courts in the nine target counties in question," Bunton said.

Clements Wednesday encouraged the appropriate legislative committees that started work on judicial reform during the special session in December to continue that work.

"I strongly believe that it is essential for Texas to avoid wholesale upheaval as we seek to improve our judicial system so that all Texans may enjoy enhanced participation in the process," Clements said. "Any change to Texas' 113-year-old judiciary must preserve the quality and the integrity that are so critical to our system of justice," he said.

Clements has called for a "Missouri-type" judicial selection that would use an appointive system, with later countywide retention elections, to increase the number of minority judges.

Bunton used an interim plan developed by Mattox and minority plaintiffs for 1990 that would elect judges with countywide jurisdiction from commissioner precincts in Jefferson, Lubbock, Midland and Ector counties; from legislative districts in Harris, Dallas, Tarrant and Bexar counties; and from justice of the peace precincts in Travis County.

Bunton departed from the settlement in ordering a non-partisan election for May 5, with June 2 runoffs, for four-year terms. Mattox had proposed going ahead with the March 13 party primaries and the Nov. 6 general election for two-year terms.

Mattox Tuesday said he was disappointed in Bunton's plan, but he was undecided whether to appeal to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. He scheduled a Capitol press conference for 1:30 p.m. today to make an announcement regarding Bunton's ruling.

Judges in Harris County who are intervenor defendants in the case said they plan to pursue an appeal of Bunton's order, regardless of Mattox's decision.

Clements Wednesday called Bunton's decision "a fundamental alteration of our judicial system," and asked Mattox for "a prompt and serious review."

In a letter to Mattox, he wrote, "As chief executive officer of this state, and on behalf of our state judiciary and citizenry, I request that you, as the state's attorney, take all action necessary for a full stay of all aspects of the federal court's interim plan to avoid a wholesale disruption of the state judiciary."

JUDGE

Judge Entz is a defendant along with Houston State District Court Judge Sharolyn Wood and Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox in the civil-rights suit lodged against them by the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC).

Mattox, representing that state, was expected to announce whether he would appeal the ruling later today.

On Nov. 8 in a 94-page order, Bunton mandated that Texas should not conduct "any future elections" for district judgeships in those nine counties "under the present at-large scheme" of electing judges.

Both Mattox and Wood have filed notices with the District Clerk's Office in Midland that they also are considering an appeal to Bunton's Nov. 8 order.

The federal appellate court conceivably could order a "stay" on Bunton orders, withhold a ruling on the validity of Bunton's orders, and, in the meantime, allow the 115 judges in those nine counties to reenter the partisan elections.

Meanwhile, Texas Governor Bill Clements, who has advocated non-partisan selection of state judges, is asking Texas legislators to consider judicial reform in a special session of the Texas Legislature and is encouraging Mattox to appeal Bunton's most recent order "to avoid a wholesale disruption of the state judiciary."

The nine counties affected by Bunton's rulings are Harris, Dallas, Tarrant, Bexar, Travis, Jefferson, Lubbock, Ector and Midland.

FIRE

Midland Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said today he has postponed again writing the official report that lists the cause and origin of the fire. Petree was scheduled to join investigators from the Midland County sheriff's office and state fire marshal's office at the home today. Investigators were going to videotape the interior of the wood frame, two-bedroom house, he said.

Petree said despite the week-long probe, investigators still don't know exactly what ignited the fire — and he said the fire may have been accidental or deliberately set.

"We just don't do guesswork when it comes to cause and origin," Petree said. "We're still trying to get at the cause of the fire ... we're working on how the fire spread.

"In all fairness, there was a life lost in this fire. We've not made a determination at this point as far as accidental or intentional."

Investigators had thought the fire started in the living area near a space heater fueled by propane. But "there are some questions" involving that scenario, both Painter and Petree said.

Assistant District Attorney Ralph Petty said he has not seen any reports on the fire, but said a grand jury investigation was "certainly possible."

Painter said Deryle's 3-year-old sister, Carol, "witnessed something" and has talked to officers. But he noted the credibility of her story is hard to judge.

"That's not testimony you can really use in court," Painter said.

According to an affidavit for a search warrant issued to investigators several hours after the fire, the blaze was started by someone "with the intent to destroy and damage the building."

Officers were looking for "a large cigarette lighter, or torch," according to the affidavit.

Investigators did find a cigarette lighter among burned debris, but there is no way to determine if it is connected to the fire, they said.

Painter said the warrant was necessary because at the time Vanover was being treated for his burns and could not give officers permission to search the area.

Officers could not locate Ms. Milholland until noon, nine hours after the fire was reported.

NATION

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — U.S. marshals are throwing mattresses on the floor for federal prisoners and driving hundreds of miles a day in a hunt for empty jail beds as authorities grapple with the Northeast's inmate glut.

The overcrowding problems were to be discussed at a "Northeast jail crisis meeting" scheduled today through the weekend at the U.S. Marshals Service headquarters in Alexandria, Va.

The federal prison population has "not just expanded, it has exploded," said U.S. Marshal Pasquale A. Mangini of Connecticut.

The Bureau of Prisons said Wednesday a projected doubling of population in federal prisons during the next five years won't provide relief.

Flip Lorenzoni, chief deputy marshal of New York's southern district, said the two pretrial detention centers near New York City are full. Women prisoners sometimes have to be driven 500 miles to Alderson, W.Va.

"We make that trip about weekly," he said.

Greg Bogdan of the Bureau of Prisons in Washington estimated the federal prison population nationwide at 54,000 — a 66 percent overcrowding rate — and said that figure was expected to grow to about 90,000 by 1995.

He said the problem is especially acute in the East, but a growing concern elsewhere.

"The East and West Coasts, and the Southeast portion of the country are the areas where we anticipate the biggest growth," Bogdan said.

Chronic overcrowding in Rhode Island's only prison forced the state Department of Corrections to cancel a contract with federal officials to keep suspects there. Rhode Island and Massachusetts have no federal detention center.

U.S. Marshal Donald Wyatt said Rhode Island marshals at minimum take a two-hour trip to the federal detention center in Hartford, Conn. The nearest federal prison is a 3¼-hour drive to Danbury, Conn., a prison with a 514-inmate capacity that has 868 prisoners, he said.

Sometimes, deputies are driving to Otisville, N.Y., from Philadelphia, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine and Massachusetts.

Exiled Czechoslovakian plans conservative political party

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Czech who has spent the past decade in exile is launching a conservative party to contest Czechoslovakia's first post-communist election on a platform of scrapping military ties with Moscow in favor of neutrality or alliance with the West.

"The Warsaw Pact ... has no place in our future. We feel that the question of active neutrality or adherence to Western collective security must be decided by a nationwide referendum after the free elections" promised for June, said Dr. Jiri Kotas.

The economic program of his Party of Constitutional Democracy will be all-out conservative, stressing "gradual but vigorous" privatization of the state-managed economy and "the most favorable conditions for Western capital investment," Kotas, 37, said in remarks prepared for appearances Thursday in Washington.

A critic of the communist regime who fled Czechoslovakia in 1979, Kotas has been living in Ottawa, Canada. He said he plans to return to Prague Jan. 13 to organize the new party, bringing together conservatives in the homeland with those in exile.

An early move will be to propose that the Federal Assembly order redistribution among all parties of part of the money amassed by the Communist Party in "decades of misrule," Kotas said.

Campaign financing will be crucial to fair elections, he said, along with equal radio and television time.

Election observers from "classically democratic countries" should be invited, Kotas said. Their presence might be a technical infringement of sovereignty but it is justified "after 40 years of dictatorship," Kotas said.

Czechoslovakia managed to break free of communist rule peacefully in late November because at the crucial moment the Kremlin messaged the faltering leadership that it would not help them, Kotas said, triggering resignation of the entire politburo.

He termed the current coalition transition government, led by anti-communist ex-dissident President Vaclav Havel and Communist Prime Minister Marian Calfa, his homeland's best government since the 1948 communist takeover and "the best possible at the moment."

Kotas said he opted for all-out conservativism feeling that the best antidote to communist misrule "was to completely embrace its absolute opposite — to adopt the Western concept of freedom, both political and economic." He credited the Heritage Foundation and similar conservative groups as playing a major role "in my intellectual and political maturing."

Some Czechoslovak experts question how far the country will abandon socialist economics. Pre-communist Presidents Tomas G. Masaryk and Eduard Benes were Social Democrats, they recalled.

Some foreign aid funds misused, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Theft and fraud in some foreign aid programs results in federal funds intended for food and health care being used instead to buy things like mink coats and a tennis court, a federal audit says.

The report by the U.S. Agency for International Development's inspector general said that from April through September 1989, it recovered $182,946 in misused funds and saved AID $2.4 million in unnecessary expenses.

The AID watchdog monitors more than 2,000 projects in 70 countries with a budget of about $7.2 billion. Most of the programs provide American money for health, education, rural development and agriculture in Third World nations.

The inspector general's report said it received 133 complaints during the six-month reporting period. Of that total, 102 concerned allegations of fraud, bribery, embezzlement, false claims or conflicts of interest; 25 were linked to allegations of criminal violations and six involved administrative irregularities.

According to the report, an AID bookkeeper pleaded guilty to the theft of $340,228 and "used the stolen funds to maintain a lavish lifestyle." Without identifying the woman, it said she gave $111,000 to friends, purchased several mink coats, toy dolls with mink coats, eight original paintings and a sculpture.

In Rwanda, investigators found that a director from a volunteer agency sold donated food to pay the labor costs for the construction of his new home and a tennis court. Several of his employees also sold food provided by AID "and, in one instance, built a restaurant."

In Chad, a local AID employee was found selling customs duty exemptions to local merchants. In Indonesia, an AID worker was jailed for forging stolen checks.

The inspector general's office questioned the viability of a multi-million-dollar irrigation program in the Bakel region of Senegal, saying "there was no evidence from the projects that irrigated farming was commercially viable."

The report said the project should be terminated if an evaluation "does not result in a positive assessment."

The investigation also said AID continued to have problems with cash advances, with an audit showing $1.1 million in outstanding advances. "Attempts to correct the problems had been restricted to a case-by-case basis without addressing the underlying systemic causes," it said.

Labor union wants to visit Soviet miners

WASHINGTON (AP) — The AFL-CIO, which is hosting a visit by nine Soviet miners trying to form independent unions, is still pressing the Soviet government to let U.S. labor leaders visit there, the federation's president says.

The Soviet government refused about a month ago to let an AFL-CIO delegation visit workers in the Soviet Union interested in setting up independent trade unions.

The nine Soviet miners met Wednesday with AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland and United Mine Workers President Richard Trumka as part of their month-long study of U.S. labor unions and mining and safety practices.

Kirkland, referring to the tentative settlement reached this week to end a bitter nine-month UMW strike against The Pittston Co., told the Soviet miners that workers trying to "gain a better life for their families must face and deal with powerful and entrenched forces in every society."

"That is certainly true here," he said.

Also Wednesday, the AFL-CIO called on the Soviet government to reverse last week's decision to revoke the passport and exit visa of a miner who had been scheduled to make the tour, Sergei Masalovich.

The AFL-CIO says the Soviet government inaccurately claimed the strike leader was relieved of his duties by the Vorkuta Strike Committee.

The miners are the guests of the AFL-CIO but the trip is being paid for through a U.S. Information Agency exchange program.

The Soviets are scheduled to visit mines in Virginia or West Virginia, the Colorado School of Mines, meet labor leaders in Pittsburgh and Atlanta and attend a Texas state AFL-CIO convention on political activity.

When Kirkland announced the Soviets' visit last month, he compared their struggle to that of Solidarity organizers in Poland in the early 1980s and pledged to offer the federation's support even if it meant defying the Soviet government.

The AFL-CIO's support of Solidarity included the smuggling of printing and other communications equipment into Poland when Solidarity was outlawed. In all, the federation gave about $5 million worth of equipment and other assistance to Solidarity.

Northside Family Sports store clerk Jesse Cheek relaxes Wednesday at the Boston store which came under pressure to stop selling baseball caps with area gang insignias.

Crime fighters force store to quit selling gang hats

BOSTON (AP) — Crime fighters in this city's tougher neighborhoods, who have pledged to win their war in the 1990s, can claim a victory as the decade dawns.

They beat back gang hats.

When word went out Wednesday that Northside Family Sports had started selling baseball-style caps inscribed with the names of two local gangs, community activists moved in swiftly.

Within hours, the shop's owner promised to stop selling them.

"If we let this store go then the one on the next block is going to start selling the same kind of stuff," said Georgette Watson, a recent target of gang threats.

"We've got to stop this kind of thing before it turns around everything we've been working for," added Watson, who has been under 24-hour police protection since a gang allegedly placed a $5,000 bounty on her last month.

Watson, founder of the Drop-A-Dime anti-drug tip hot line, was among a contingent of community leaders who went to Jack Malone's sporting goods store to let him know what they thought of his new merchandise.

Malone said he was unaware the hats, which were ordered at the request of customers, bore gang-related insignias and assured the activists no more special orders would be taken. The caps, selling for $12.99 each, were inscribed with the gang names, "Castlegate" and "IVP Intervale."

"I'd rather nip this thing in the bud," Malone said. "The last thing I want to see is gangs being promoted."

His decision was probably made easier by the appearance at his doorstep of the mayor, police commissioner, district police superintendent and about a dozen community leaders from the Roxbury, Dorchester and Mattapan neighborhoods.

Mayor Raymond L. Flynn, Police Commissioner Francis Roache and Police Deputy Superintendent William Celester met with Watson and other community leaders Wednesday at a doughnut shop adjacent to the sporting goods store.

"It's a free country, but that doesn't mean you have to do this kind of thing in this community," Celester said. "These leaders know what to do."

The activists stressed they didn't want to come on like vigilantes.

"We didn't come here to close anybody down," said Joan Almeida of the Neighborhood Justice Network. "We came to talk."

Still, some merchants and residents said the activists had gone too far.

"Are we going to stop selling gang members food to eat or clothes to wear?" asked one police officer who did not want to be identified. "It sounds like Hitler's Germany to me."

Yvonne Waith and her daughter, who work next door at a beauty parlor, said the activists' efforts were misplaced.

"What about the guns? Never mind the hats," Mrs. Waith said. "There are much more important battles than this."

The inner-city battle against gang- and drug-related crime has been fierce. Residents say they want to reclaim the turf lost to gun-toting adolescents — not cater to them by producing "status" merchandise.

Grass-roots organizer Ben Haith said the community reacted to the logo-inscribed caps "strongly and with outrage" because they go against so much of what parents, kids and local merchants have been working for.

Postal Service pays for slain dog's funeral

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — A dog killed by a postal carrier last week was shot from behind, police said on the same day the pet was buried in a funeral paid for by the U.S. Postal Service.

Witness statements and physical evidence indicate that letter carrier Floyd B. Sterling, 34, might have been as far as 40 feet from the dog at the time of the shooting, said Los Angeles Police Department Detective Gary Milligan.

Sterling faces arraignment Jan. 23 in San Fernando Municipal Court on three felony counts stemming from the Dec. 26 shooting of the dog in a suburban Arleta neighborhood.

Sterling, of nearby Pacoima, said he was 10 feet away from the dog when he fired to scare it.

An examination of the dog's body by a private veterinarian showed the bullet traveled from the rear of the animal's body to the front, Milligan said.

The 2-year-old German shepherd, named Skippy, died after a .22-caliber bullet entered from the left side and came to rest in the dog's right front leg.

Pet owner Tammie Brody said the examination shows the dog was not attacking the carrier before the shooting.

The dog was buried Wednesday at Los Angeles Pet Memorial Park in suburban Calabasas.

"This leaves us with happy memories of the dog as opposed to last Tuesday," the day of the shooting, Brody said.

The funeral cost $773.50 and was paid from Postal Service funds, not tax dollars, said John Conte, spokesman for the Van Nuys postal division.

Troop withdrawal wise move by Bush

President George Bush's decision to begin pulling troops out of Panama New Year's Day should have underscored for nations around the world this country's commitment to the democratic process

Coming only 12 days after the United States launched a predawn invasion of that country, the withdrawal also should give Americans visible assurance that Bush isn't a war-mongering jingo, but rather is interested in helping those nations that have legally chosen a democratic system of government to achieve it.

Gen. Manuel Noriega had openly defied the Panamanian people who had elected Guillermo Endara as president on May 7 and had haughtily proclaimed himself "maximum leader." Noriega also is under indictment in Florida on charges of trafficking in drugs. So his fall from power was important to the United States in more ways than one.

But even despite such compelling evidence in support of military action, the American people grow understandably uneasy anytime troops are committed to foreign soil. The legacy of other foreign wars — notably Korea and Vietnam — weighs heavily on the American public's conscience.

The Panama invasion was costly to the United States in the sense that it cost this country 23 lives. That is any military action's highest and most regrettable cost. Another 300 servicemen were injured in the action. The prayers of the nation should be for those who died and were injured. No doubt there are some Americans whose loved ones either died or were injured in the Panamanian invasion who are asking themselves whether it was worth it. That is always a very personal matter and the answer is never easy to find.

Perhaps Army Sgt. John Grauer of Fresno, Calif., one of the first Americans pulled out of Panama, provided a degree of enlightenment when he commented:

"Now they have a democratic government — it's what they want. They love Americans. They love what we did."

Even those uplifting words may not heal the pain of those who lost loved ones in Panama.

For the others — the ones whose loved ones remain there — President Bush's decision to start bringing troops home at least means that an end is in sight and someday soon, the servicemen will be out of danger.

Lorenzo's money still can't buy love

WASHINGTON — Frank Lorenzo is one of the people Americans love to hate, in a class with Leona Helmsley and Morton Downey Jr. Heaven knows, the president of Eastern Airlines has tried his best to make friends, and when that doesn't work, to buy friends.

Jack Anderson

While flying Eastern Airlines into bankruptcy court, Lorenzo threw plenty of money out the window and much of it landed in the campaign chests of members of Congress and state politicians.

But the surprise is, in Lorenzo's case, money can't buy love. Members of Congress are still trying to pull the reins on his management style, and Lorenzo-bashing is fashionable on Capitol Hill.

Lorenzo's kingdom includes Eastern's parent company, Texas Air, and a sister airline, Continental. His critics charge that he stripped Eastern of its assets after he bought it in 1986 and then funneled money to build up the non-union Continental as his pet airline.

Last March, Eastern filed for protection from creditors in federal bankruptcy court, five days after the airline's machinists, pilots and flight attendants went on strike. The pilots and flight attendants came back in November, but Lorenzo had already stuffed Eastern with new hires and union defectors, leaving few jobs open for the naughty strikers.

One doesn't tamper with a major American corporation without lining up support in Congress. Political action committees representing Lorenzo's companies gave at least $147,000 in campaign contributions to members of Congress last year, and more than twice that amount in 1987 and 1988. Lorenzo also gave $100,000 to the Republican Party — money that helped to put George Bush in the White House.

Lorenzo has even tried to bestow his largess on state lawmakers. But he is meeting resistance.

When Lorenzo sent a fancy Tiffany's paperweight to New Jersey Assemblyman Alan Karcher, Karcher sent it back. Continental was opening a new hub in Newark, and Karcher didn't like the implications of the gift. Our associate Scott Sleek has obtained a copy of the letter Karcher wrote to Lorenzo:

"I would never be able to look in the eyes of the innumerable constituents whose lives have been made miserable by your union-busting, anti-labor attitude. Therefore, I am sending it back to you. Perhaps if you didn't squander your money on public relations, you'd have money to pay your employees a decent wage."

It seems Lorenzo is a liability everywhere he turns. On Capitol Hill it is popular to berate him in floor speeches. Congress voted to establish a panel to investigate the strike, but President Bush vetoed the proposal. Congressional insiders tell us that even Lorenzo's former chums in Congress avoid the mention of his name. They only help him out in general terms by calling for the government to keep its nose out of the airline industry.

Even the archconservative Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., wears an anti-Lorenzo button.

There are a few who don't run from the mention of Lorenzo's name. Rep. Jack Fields, R-Texas, has openly rushed to Lorenzo's defense. Fields criticized legislation to restrict leveraged buyouts in the airline industry. He thinks Congress is trying to push Lorenzo around. And the congressman from Texas doesn't like to see anyone pushed around, especially if that person controls 10,000 jobs in Texas.

"The first rule of politics is you look after the men and women back home," a spokesman for Fields told us.

Lorenzo is looking out for Fields, so Fields can continue to look out for the folks back home. Fields has received at least $4,000 in campaign contributions from political action committees and lobbyists representing Texas Air.

BUSINESS BOOMING: The collapse of the savings and loan industry will give a temporary boost to people who work in real estate.

The federal government has $300 billion in assets from failed thrifts that it must get rid of. Property managers, structural engineers and brokers are being hired in legions to take inventory and sell the property.

One of the things thrift regulators are increasingly concerned about is the prospect that any person responsible for creating the thrift crisis could profit by buying back the distressed properties at bargain prices.

Pluralized Yugoslavia

Will Yugoslavia be the next Eastern European state to erupt — or can free elections help contain its explosive nationalist rivalries? Communists in Croatia and Slovenia, the most westward-looking of Yugoslavia's six republics, want to hold multiparty elections. In Serbia, largest of the six, the Communist Party objects. The federation's Communist Central Committee has now wisely backed the Croats and Slovenians.

In moving to end the Communist Party's political monopoly, the Central Committee recognized a central truth: that the best way to maintain unity in a multinational state like Yugoslavia is to allow more autonomy. If the urge for greater autonomy is thwarted, resentful nationalists could press more radical demands, like secession.

Yugoslavia's fragile unity is being tested by two crises at once. Belgrade is trying to find a remedy for economic distress whose symptoms include prolonged recession and 40 percent monthly inflation. And its component nationalities are struggling for greater self-determination.

Premier Ante Marcovic, a Croat, wants to loosen the bureaucratic hold on the economy by decontrolling prices in most sectors and encouraging private enterprise and foreign investment. These reforms could aggravate regional tensions because Slovenia and Croatia are better situated than other republics to benefit from freer markets.

Serbia's president, Slobodan Milosevic, argues that ministries in Belgrade need to retain economic control. A reflexive authoritarian, Milosevic has also sided with doctrinaire Communists to resist dilution of the party's leading role. He tried to pressure federal authorities into forcing Slovenia and Croatia back into line. His assertiveness has aroused fears of Serbian domination over other republics.

The differences over economic and political arrangements could yet fracture Yugoslavia along ethnic lines. Nationalisms might then leap across Yugoslavia's borders to kinsmen in neighboring states, sparking the same kind of instability that once plunged the Balkans and the rest of Europe into war. How to keep these tensions from spilling beyond Yugoslav borders is a matter Washington needs to begin thinking about, and discussing with its allies and with Moscow.

What sort of political and economic arrangements Yugoslavs prefer is their own business. But by allowing greater autonomy, they could ease their own and outsiders' concerns.

GOP should follow Lincoln's slavery example

WASHINGTON — Jack Rains, running for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in Texas, recently told a right-to-life group he stood "shoulder-to-shoulder" with it. But time (two weeks) passed, and perhaps polls were consulted, and then he announced that, come to think about it, he was an abortion-rights candidate. "My mind has not changed," he explained. "My thinking has crystallized."

George F. Will

Rains may be "right" with the electorate if it is looking for Plasticman, an infinitely malleable creature. But if Lincoln's party is to get off the hook it has impaled itself on regarding abortion, it must look to Lincoln's example.

Here is what the hook looks like. When Republicans convene in 1992, the ticket probably will be long settled and 15,000 bored journalists will have but one big story to make bigger by being a megaphone for both sides. The story will be the floor fight over the platform language — whatever it is — on abortion.

The 1980 platform said: "Abortion, despite the complex nature of its various issues, is ultimately concerned with equality of rights under the law. While we recognize differing views on this question among Americans in general — and in our own party — we affirm our support of a constitutional amendment to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children."

By 1984 and again in 1988, the platform said: "The unborn child has a fundamental right to life which cannot be infringed. We therefore reaffirm our support for a human-life amendment to the Constitution, and we endorse legislation to make clear that the Fourteenth Amendment's protections apply to unborn children." (That means, among many other things, that a pregnant woman who abuses alcohol or other drugs is committing child abuse.)

The right-to-life movement will seek to hold, in the platform committee, this maximalist position. The party dare not stand on that plank again. But how can it adapt to political realities without appearing unprincipled? It can begin by looking to Lincoln.

The 1850s arguments that drew Lincoln to greatness concerned not whether slavery should be abolished forthwith or even in the foreseeable futue, but rather two other questions, one general, one specific. The general question was: Would national policy stigmatize slavery as a tragic legacy and a moral wrong? The specific question was: Would policy confine slavery to its historic dominion by banning it from the territories, thereby, Lincoln hoped, putting it on a path to ultimate extinction?

Republicans, said Lincoln, should "insist that (slavery) should, as far as may be, be treated as wrong, and one of the methods of treating it as a wrong is to make provision that it shall grow no larger."

Opponents of abortion argue that the abortion issue is akin to the slavery issue because it concerns the scope of the concept of personhood, and because the issue was inflamed by judicial fiat (Dred Scott, Roe v. Wade). But there is a third similarity Republicans should note: The logic of Lincoln's response to the reality of slavery as a rooted institution is a model for dealing with the reality of abortion as a prevalent practice and a right currently enjoying broad if uneasy support.

In 1860, advocates of immediate, outright abolition of slavery were orally earnest but not politically serious. As with advocacy of abolition of abortion in 1990, the abolitionist position regarding slavery was emotionally satisfying but politically impractical.

However, the Republicans' first successful presidential candidate knew that to do good you must hold office, and to get to the core of a controversy you should begin by nudging in its borders. The right-to-life movement and its Republican allies should begin at the borders.

Most Americans may favor substantial abortion rights but also are uneasy about the promiscuous creation and destruction of life, often for frivolous reasons of negligence and convenience. There is, I believe, a vague but broad and plausible intuition that the moral status, and hence the protection appropriate for, a fetus changes with its developmental stages. (Hence the power of, and fury from pro-abortion people concerning, photographs of aborted fetuses sufficiently developed to resemble infants.)

Opponents of abortion can aspire to piecemeal abortion, endorsing government policy that treats abortion as (as ownership of slaves was) a contractable right. The first contraction should place severe restrictions on all abortions after, say, the eighth week of gestation. This point can be set with reference to neurological and other fetal developments. It probably would not eliminate even 90 percent of abortions, and if pro-abortion advocates opposed it, they would seem extreme.

Furthermore, long-run abolitionists can insist on stigmatizing the right as a bitter legacy of bad practices and confused thinking. The stigmatizing policy shall be that the exercise of the right shall not be subsidized by public funds.

But such funds shall be used to provide alternatives to it — birth control, adoption, child care, other supports for unwed mothers — just as there were proposals for using public funds to purchase emancipation (a lot cheaper than war, Lincoln said).

Republican thinking must crystallize along some such lines or many Republicans now in office will look unprincipled or will be unemployed.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Jan. 4, the fourth day of 1990. There are 361 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On January 4, 1885, Dr. William W. Grant of Davenport, Iowa, performed what is believed to have been the first appendectomy. The patient was 22-year-old Mary Gartside.

On this date:

In 1809, Louis Braille, inventor of a reading system for the blind, was born in Coupvray, France.

In 1821, the first native-born American saint, Elizabeth Ann Seton, died in Emmitsburg, Md.

In 1896, Utah was admitted to the Union as the 45th state.

In 1948, Britain granted independence to Burma.

In 1951, during the Korean conflict, North Korean and Communist Chinese forces captured the city of Seoul.

In 1960, French author Albert Camus died in an automobile accident at the age of 46.

In 1965, poet T.S. Eliot died in London at the age of 76.

In 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson outlined the goals of his "Great Society" in his State of the Union Address.

In 1986, Senator Gary Hart, D-Colo., announced he was not running for re-election, and strongly hinted at a possible run for president in 1988.

In 1987, 16 people were killed when an Amtrak train bound from Washington to Boston collided with Conrail engines approaching from a side track in Chase, Md.

Ten years ago: President Carter announced a sharp curtailment in U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union and other actions in response to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Five years ago: Ethiopia condemned the evacuation of Ethiopian Jews to Israel, one day after Israel reluctantly acknowledged it had mounted the relocation effort in previous months.

One year ago: Two U.S. Navy F-14 fighters shot down a pair of Libyan MiG-23 fighters in a clash over international waters off the Libyan coast.

Today's birthdays: Actor Sterling Holloway is 85. Actress Jane Wyman is 76. Former CIA director William E. Colby is 70. Actor Sorrell Booke is 60. Miami Dolphins football coach Don Shula is 60. Former heavyweight boxing champion Floyd Patterson is 55. Actress Dyan Cannon is 53. Opera singer Grace Bumbry is 53.

U.S. hopes Noriega will 'rock out' of embassy

The latest secret military weapon from the American arsenal showed up in Panama when U.S. military forces tried to drive Manuel Noriega out of the Vatican embassy by blasting him with rock music all day long. While it failed to achieve its goal, it is now estimated that there will be a lot of hard-of-hearing Panamanians once the fighting is over.

Art Buchwald

The idea of using rock music to dislodge ex-heads of state and other sleazy enemies was thought up by the U.S. Psychological Warfare Division at the Pentagon. It was actually an invention of a senior staff member, Col. Wolfpack MacArthur. Wolfpack got the idea after he had been driven out of his home last spring by his son's repeated playing of the Grateful Dead's "Skeletons From a Closet."

I spoke to Wolfpack as he sat ramrod straight on top of four loudspeakers at Andrews Air Force Base.

"Any casualties?" I yelled at him.

"We lost three microphones and one woofer, but we knocked out four Panamanian National Guardsmen, three nuns and a Papal Nuncio."

"Any damage to Noriega's eardrums?" I asked.

Wolfpack said, "He's starting to feel the pressure. We're going to fire off the Rolling Stones' top 10 tomorrow, and if that doesn't make him surrender, nothing will."

I shouted up, "Are we to assume that rock warfare is the wave of the future?"

"It's a proven deterrent. We know that no grown-up can survive four hours of the Led Zeppelin. We believe that any tin-horn dictator will come out with his hands high rather than listen to three Jefferson Airplane singles."

"What about the Geneva Convention which forbids anyone to play loud music around a diplomatic mission?"

"We don't recognize the Geneva Convention. Noriega is a thief and a drug dealer, and we will torture him with the U-2's 'Rattle and Hum' no matter what world opinion thinks."

"If rock music is such a successful weapon, why is Noriega still in the Vatican embassy?"

"The CIA reports that he may have taken earplugs in there with him."

"Why didn't the CIA know this at the beginning?"

"They were watching the back of the building — Noriega came in through the front. But we're not worried. We have more rock records in stock than Noriega has earplugs."

"The Vatican has officially complained about the noise, and Washington announced that they might knock it off."

"That's typical of Washington. They give us the rock war weapons and then they chicken out to Rome. If they just let us play one Madonna platter, we will have Noriega sticking his fingers in his ears and running naked down the streets of Panama."

Wolfpack told me that many countries are interested in rock war but the United States is worried that the weapon is too powerful to be allowed to fall into the hands of foreign governments. "Can you imagine what the Libyans would do to us if they could play Michael Jackson at high pitch in front of an American consulate?"

"Are you going back to Panama?" I asked the colonel.

"Yes, as soon as we add two more boom boxes to our amplifiers. We shall return, and this time we're going to knock Noriega out of bed with Bruce Springsteen's greatest hits if it kills us."

Global warming could alter forests early in next century

NEW YORK (AP) — A study showing that global warming could speed the destruction of forests by fire and windstorms suggests noticeable change could occur in the Earth's forests by early in the next century, a researcher said.

"The rate of change will be faster than we thought before," said Jonathan Overpeck, the study's principal author.

The change will be marked by the appearance of fast-growing species of trees in areas where mature trees have been destroyed, said Overpeck, a staff scientist at the Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory in Palisades.

Previous computer projections have shown that changes in temperature and rainfall could affect the growth of forests. This is the first to show that physical destruction of trees will play a significant role in changing forests as the Earth warms, Overpeck said.

George Woodwell, an ecologist and the director of the Woods Hole Research Center in Massachusetts, said Overpeck's findings agree with decades of research by ecologists showing that similar forest disturbance has occurred when climate changed in the past.

Margaret Davis, an ecologist at the University of Minnesota, said: "This is important because the effects of disturbance are much quicker than the effects of climate change. ... It gives us less time to respond to the change."

Overpeck's collaborators were David Rind of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Goddard Institute for Space Studies and Richard Goldberg of the Institute for Global Habitability at Columbia University.

Their study appears today in Nature, a British scientific journal.

Global warming is occuring as so-called greenhouse effect gases build up in the atmosphere. The gases include carbon dioxide and the chlorofluorocarbons used in refrigerators and air conditioners.

The Earth is expected to warm gradually during the next century as the gases enable the atmosphere to trap more and more of the sun's heat, mimicking the action of a greenhouse.

Experts disagree over how much the Earth will warm and when the effects will begin to be felt. But few disagree with the premise that the Earth will warm.

Overpeck cautioned that his findings should not be taken as a prediction. He cannot say precisely how soon changes in forests will begin to be noticed or how great the change will be.

But the research demonstrates that computer forecasts should take into account the physical destruction of forests as well as the effects of changing temperature and rainfall, he said.

Overpeck and his colleagues used a computer climate program developed by NASA to show that thunderstorms, hurricanes and tornadoes will occur more frequently as the climate warms.

They then used a second computer program to assess the effect of these changes on forests.

NATION IN BRIEF

Spill larger than estimated

LINDEN, N.J. (AP) — Exxon officials say a heating oil leak is 20 to 100 times larger than first estimated, and that up to 500,000 gallons of fuel spilled into a waterway separating New Jersey and New York's Staten Island.

The officials are investigating whether a leak detector in an underwater line may have malfunctioned. The Coast Guard closed much of the Arthur Kill channel to boat traffic Wednesday.

In Pennsylvania, officials reopened a stretch of the Monongahela River today that had been closed since New Year's Day, after some five dozen barges broke loose from moorings during a thaw. One wayward vessel spilled 10,000 gallons of gasoline into the water.

Exxon said from 100,000 to 500,000 gallons were spilled into the Arthur Kill after the Coast Guard questioned its initial estimate of 5,000 gallons and the company conducted an inventory, officials said.

Coast Guard Capt. Robert North of the Port of New York estimated that the actual spill of refined No. 2 oil was probably closer to 200,000 gallons and said about half of that already had evaporated. Of the remainder, about 50 percent had been contained by booms within the kill. The remaining 50,000 gallons is polluting the water and the shores.

The spill, first discovered early Tuesday, left an 11-mile slick from Shooter's Island at the mouth of Newark Bay in the north, to Tottenville, at the southern tip of Staten Island.

It was traced to an underwater rupture in a 6.7-mile, 12-inch pipe connecting the Exxon plant in Bayonne to its Bayway refinery and chemical plant in Linden.

12-year-old raped, burned

NEW YORK (NYT) — A 12-year-old girl was repeatedly raped, burned with a red-hot knife and stabbed with an icepick late Tuesday night during a five-hour attack by three teen-agers in a Harlem apartment, the police said Wednesday.

Near the end of the ordeal, the youths threatened to throw her from the roof of the five-story building but then took her home and demanded her family pay $45 that they claimed she owed them, according to the account the girl gave the police.

The victim, whom the police did not identify because of the nature of the crime, was taken to St. Lukes-Roosevelt Hospital and treated for burns and puncture wounds on her chest, leg and shoulder, the police said.

Husband commits suicide

BOSTON (AP) — A man who told police his pregnant wife was fatally wounded by a robber as they left a hospital childbirth class apparently killed himself this morning hours after learning he was a suspect in the slaying, police said.

The couple's son, delivered by Caesarean section as Carol Stuart lay dying, survived just 17 days after the Oct. 23 shootings.

Charles Stuart, who spent more than a month in the hospital after being wounded in the shootings, apparently committed suicide by jumping off Tobin Bridge into Boston Harbor. The body was seen in the water but not recovered, but police said there was little doubt it was Stuart.

Edward Marchand, chief of police in Stuart's hometown of Reading, said Stuart's house had been watched by police overnight after Boston police informed him that Stuart was a suspect in his wife's death. But Stuart never returned home.

Marchand said he believed Stuart was aware his house was being watched.

Marchand would not say why Stuart had become a suspect, but he said "there's a lot more to the story."

Chip on Magellan fails

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The Magellan spacecraft, speeding toward cloud-shrouded Venus on a $550 million mapping expedition, will need frequent commands from Earth until NASA fixes a computer problem.

Despite the failure of a computer chip on the spaceship, "there's no threat to the mission," said Edwin Sherry, a technical assistant at the space agency's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Until engineers locate the faulty chip, they must send Magellan new commands every other day to make sure it is pointing in the proper direction, Sherry said Wednesday.

He said a similar computer chip failure happened before Magellan was launched and that such a failure is expected about once annually.

Flu outbreak, accidents leave blood centers in short supply

DALLAS (AP) — An outbreak of influenza, unusually cold weather and an increase in trauma accidents during the holidays have left blood centers across Texas scurrying to find donors, officials said.

"In 1989 we had to import 9,500 blood products to meet the need here in El Paso," said Judy Sligar, community relations director for United Blood Services. "It's become a chronic problem. I guess we haven't done a good job in educating the public."

Ms. Sligar said the blood bank needs 100 to 120 donors a day to meet the city's needs. Each donor represents one potential unit of blood. The bank currently receives only about 30 to 35.

An outbreak of influenza and unusually cold weather during late December may have deterred some Texans from donating, said Fred Greene, administrative director of the Wadley Blood Center in Dallas.

The center usually collects 8,000 units of blood each month. In December, that number dropped to 6,000.

Mary Joe Smith, manager of the Parkland Blood Donor Center, said conditions in Dallas haven't been serious enough to curtail elective surgery or seriously affect patient care.

"We've had an increase in the number of trauma accidents," Ms. Smith said. "That usually happens during the holidays. And when it does, you can count on lower supplies of blood all over."

On Wednesday, the Valley Baptist Medical Center in Harlingen, the largest hospital in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, had no backup supply of O positive or A positive blood, said hospital spokesman Bill Elliott.

Normally, Elliott said, the hospital tries to keep 40 units of each on hand, but Wednesday it had only a total of 15 units of various types. And those had already been set aside for specific patients, he said.

United Blood Services of the Rio Grande Valley has begun going through the telephone book to solicit new donors and is promoting blood drives at high schools. Some Dallas and El Paso blood centers have used radio and television spots to encourage donations.

Pete Bommarito, executive director of United Blood Services of Lubbock, says the blood shortage and increased usage after the holidays is normal.

Traffic accidents increase over the holidays, "and, believe it or not, a lot of people choose to have elective surgery at the end of the year for their (medical insurance) deductibles," Bommarito said.

Donations drop off at the end of the year because people are shopping and celebrating, he said.

STATE

Krueger says he has experience for TRC

AUSTIN (AP) — Former congressman and ambassador-at-large Bob Krueger continued his bid for a seat on the Texas Railroad Commission, saying his experience will help him lobby for the state energy industry in Washington.

Krueger

"Texas needs to be heard at the national level with some credibility," Krueger said Wednesday.

Krueger, 54, is running for the Democratic Party nomination for the Railroad Commission position being vacated by Kent Hance, who is seeking the GOP nomination for governor.

Krueger, a New Braunfels businessman, faces former state legislator Clint Hackney, 34, of Houston in the March 13 primary.

In another political development, Hance launched his television campaign with three advertisements that will run in Dallas, Fort Worth, Austin, San Antonio and Houston through the end of the month.

The three, 30-second ads focus on education, Hance's background and his pledge to ban a state income tax.

Krueger pushed for deregulation of natural gas prices while in Congress from 1975-1979 and said his experience gained there would help him influence national energy policies to the benefit of Texas.

Krueger said he favors an oil import fee to reduce reliance on foreign oil as part of a national energy strategy. Krueger vowed that while trying to prop up the ailing energy industry, he will preserve the environment.

"It's not a choice between energy and environment," Krueger said. "No compromise. We must have both and we will."

He said he had no problem with Hance's trips to meetings of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, saying, "You got to hunt where the ducks are, and an awful lot of those ducks are landing on OPEC ponds."

Krueger also said he supports flexibility in trucking rates to ensure a healthy transportation industry.

Krueger ran for the U.S. Senate in 1978, narrowly losing to Republican John Tower.

Woman's family says indictment 'first step'

HOUSTON (AP) — Relatives of a woman killed in a freeway shootout last year say the indictment of a police officer is the first step in achieving justice for the woman, but they added that more must be done.

Officer Alex Gonzales was indicted for murder in the Oct. 31 shooting death of 50-year-old Ida Delaney. Gonzales, 25, and two other officers were off duty and in a private car when they chased Ms. Delaney's vehicle on a Houston freeway after she reportedly cut them off.

The Harris County grand jury that indicted Gonzales on Tuesday did not take any action against the other two officers. Gonzales was wounded in the chest in the exchange of gunfire with Ms. Delaney.

"We (the family) are now asking ourselves why they didn't indict the other officers."
— Mary Shaw, dead woman's sister-in-law

"We're not totally pleased, but the Gonzales indictment is a step," said Mary Shaw, Ms. Delaney's sister-in-law. "Maybe we will find out the truth about what happened."

All three officers testified before the grand jury on the same day last month. The shootings occurred after she stopped her vehicle; the officers said she fired first.

"We (the family) are now asking ourselves why they didn't indict the other officers," Mrs. Shaw said. "They are just as guilty as (Alex) Gonzales. Justice will not be served until all are indicted."

Mark Clark, president of the Houston Police Officer Association, said he was surprised by the indictment "because he was shot first and returned fire. How could that be murder?"

Tommy Britt with the Houston Police Patrolmen's Union called the indictment politically motivated, saying, "Any officer who is not in uniform and doing his duty is a damned fool. The perception is now it's OK to blow an officer away."

Fed cattle prices highest ever

AMARILLO (AP) — The price of fed cattle in the Texas Panhandle has reached the highest level in the industry's history, officials say.

The price reached $80.50 per hundredweight Tuesday. It was an increase of $21 over prices paid in 1987.

"When cattle make money, the multiplier effect goes into place and the whole Panhandle benefits," Jay O'Brien, and Amarillo cattleman said.

O'Brien said the high prices this week are only a part of the true success story. Cattle feeding has been a viable part of the Texas Panhandle for more than 20 years, and is now the Panhandle's largest employer.

"Cattlemen started the new year off right," said Jim Gill, Texas Cattle Feeders Association.

"The people in this area just do a better job of marketing cattle," he said, adding that their constant supply of information allows them to stay on top of the cattle feeding industry market nationwide, generally getting $1 to $2 per hundredweight more than cattlemen in other areas of the country.

Cattle prices negotiated between packers and feedyards for fed cattle had reached $80 the final week of 1989, the second time for that year and only the third time in cattle feeding history.

On Tuesday, 2,200 head of cattle sold for $80.50 per hundredweight in the Texas Panhandle and 8,700 more head traded at $80 to $80.25 per hundredweight, Gill said.

The higher price to the cattleman doesn't necessarily mean a higher price to the consumer, Gill noted.

Retail beef prices are not expected to rise with the recent fed cattle increase, Gill said, but they could if the fed cattle price climbs much higher.

Prices compared to this time in 1989 were $74 to $74.50 per hundredweight.

Student pleads guilty to selling drug

DENISON (AP) — One of five Denison High School students who were arrested last May in a drug sweep has pleaded guilty to five counts of delivery of a controlled substance.

Rogers "Roger" Hornsby on Tuesday waived his right to a jury trial in all five incidents. State District Judge Lloyd Perkins will sentence Hornsby after hearings this week.

Sherman Police narcotics officer Ed Colvin was the first witness called in the punishment phase of the trial.

Colvin testified that Hornsby sold him cocaine on five separate occasions — March 27, April 11, 13 and 19 and May 2 of last year. Colvin said he spent $175 purchasing a total of 1.17 grams of the drug from Hornsby. Colvin testified the defendant told him he could supply other drugs as well.

"(Hornsby) stated any time or anything I wanted, he'd be able to get it for me," he said.

Colvin said he talked to Hornsby about buying "larger amounts to be taken out of the city," but "never got close enough" to the defendant to make a large buy.

Under cross examination by defense attorney David Stagner, Colvin admitted he set up the initial meeting with Hornsby through a confidential informant. Colvin said in all five instances he asked Hornsby for the drugs, that Hornsby never approached him.

Counselor Michael Cross, testifying on Hornsby's behalf, said Hornsby's problem's stemmed from his parents' divorce, his father's alcoholism and adolescent worries among other things.

Prospects look dimmer for expanding UTPB

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Immediate prospects for expanding the University of Texas of the Permian Basin look dimmer because of information suggesting that the current upper-level status arrangement is "best suited" for the educational needs of the area.

"Lacking the justification to expand this upper-level center, any such change made for UTPB would be precedent setting," said a study prepared by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board this past September that analyzes several options for converting UTPB to four-year status.

The Reporter-Telegram obtained a copy of the report which was prepared at the request of the governor's office.

In the report, Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth said the options presented were aimed at bringing Midland and Odessa "closer together" and increasing support for the university.

The study concluded that there is "no educational justification for changing the status of UTPB" and that any proposed change "would be more damaging to the overall educational community in Midland and Odessa than maintaining the present configuration of institutions."

However, the study found that the UTPB situation could still be improved by taking the following steps:

- Arrange for lower division courses to be offered by both community colleges on the UTPB campus.
- Develop better articulation and transfer agreements among the schools.
- Promote the success and stability of UTPB rather than continuing the negative self-criticisms that have plagued the school for years.

Midlander Frank Cahoon, a member of the coordinating board and chairman of its Research Committee, wants community leaders to begin working with the University of Texas System officials to develop a UTPB facility in Midland adjacent to the Midland College campus.

"It's my belief that to ever be a research university, UTPB must achieve four-year status," said Cahoon, whose job is to oversee the allocation of $68 million in research projects to Texas colleges and universities.

"It's sad that it's been such a protracted problem with Rep. Gary Watkins with the large amount of research funds available to Texas' colleges and universities," he added.

Watkins, D-Odessa, has been searching for a vehicle to bring four-year status to the school, whose campus offered classes to a record 2,350 upper level students this past spring.

For his part, Watkins sees a "workable concept" in a plan that maintains four years of undergraduate classes and graduate study at the main Odessa campus.

However, the coordinating board study found that substantial additional costs to the state would be incurred if UTPB were elevated to four-year status at its present location.

UTPB already is operating as a free-standing campus, so there would not be start-up costs for a completely new campus. However, the increase in student enrollment would probably require an addition of 35,000 gross square feet of classroom and laboratory space.

This approach also would require adding lower division programs and courses and hiring additional faculty at a cost of up to $1.2 million by the second year.

The study was equally cool to the proposed merger of UTPB and Midland College with both operating a four-year campus at their current locations.

In the report, the coordinating board staff concluded that the 372 technical/vocational courses currently offered by Midland College would have to be eliminated, since such courses and two-year degrees are not congruent with the mission of a state university.

As a result, a new community college district would probably have to be created to replace vocational-/technical courses eliminated if Midland College was merged with UTPB.

The cost of building a new community college campus would include at least $22.3 million to replace the current investment in the physical plant at Midland plus land and annual operating costs.

Midland College costs — including $1.5 million for the physical plant operation and maintenance (out of a total of $8.7 million in educational and general expenditures) per year currently paid by the junior college district — would be assumed by the state as a new cost in appropriations from the general revenue fund.

A second variation on this option would be to merge UTPB with Midland College, creating a four-year university with lower-division courses taught on the existing community college campus in Midland and upper-division courses at the UTPB campus in Odessa.

Officials still debate site for animal shelter

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Run-down conditions continue to plague Midland's Animal Control Center, while scheduled completion of a new shelter is almost a year away, a city official said Wednesday.

City administrators and councilmen continue to debate where to build the new shelter. Meanwhile, the 1601 Orchard Lane center has seen high employee turnover as worker sickness and untimely animal deaths persist because of unsanitary conditions.

Parasites crawl through cracks in the 30-year-old building, a breeding ground for infectious bacteria, as carbon monoxide and other gases seep in from an old landfill.

"I would say things are as bad as they ever were," said George Logan, parks and recreation director. "We have some people concerned."

City officials had started planning to build a new shelter in the northwest corner of Hogan Park, but councilmen voiced their opposition of the plan at a recent meeting.

"I'd been getting a lot of calls from my constituents," Councilman Jose Cuevas said today. "I was told (by city officials) it was going to be on the northeast corner, where it wouldn't be a problem for anybody."

Logan said city planners continue to study other sites, including other sections of Hogan Park.

Plans for the building, with an estimated price tag of between $400,000 and $450,000, will be completed by April 1, Logan said. The building should be open by Oct. 1, he said.

"This will not be your conventional animal control building," Logan said. "It's a completely enclosed facility. Noise and odor won't be a problem.

"If it does anything, it will enhance the area out there. There's going to be a lot of landscaping. It's going to be reminiscent of a park."

Logan said the initial proposal was to build the shelter on a site near Angels Stadium.

"It's in the bottom of a dry lake bed," he said of the area. "We don't want to build too many buildings there.

"Would you make a recommendation to put something in the bottom of a lake?"

Coy Willis, animal control director, said working conditions combined with job stress have created unusually high turnover among the shelter's 11 employees. Five have quit in the past year, Willis said.

"Anytime you have to destroy healthy animals because you can't find them a home, it adds a lot of stress to the job," he said.

Though the building is steam-cleaned daily, some workers have developed flu-like symptoms because of the diseased conditions, he said. In addition, animals become ill and sometimes die before they can be destroyed, he said.

"Those conditions are not going to change," he said. "They're not going to get worse, but they're not going to get any better."

Willis said Hogan Park's northwest corner would have been the best spot for a new shelter.

"It's easy to find," he said. "It's a low population area. Our goal is to be there without posing any type of nuisance."

However, Cuevas said his telephone began ringing the minute residents in the area learned that the shelter might go up near their neighborhood.

"I don't think an animal shelter needs all that great an access," Cuevas said. "It's not like a convenience store or restaurant, where you have to have prime access."

Despite the current shelter's poor conditions, the Texas Department of Health last spring said it complied with minimum standards. Department inspectors, though, cited numerous instances where the building needs repairs.

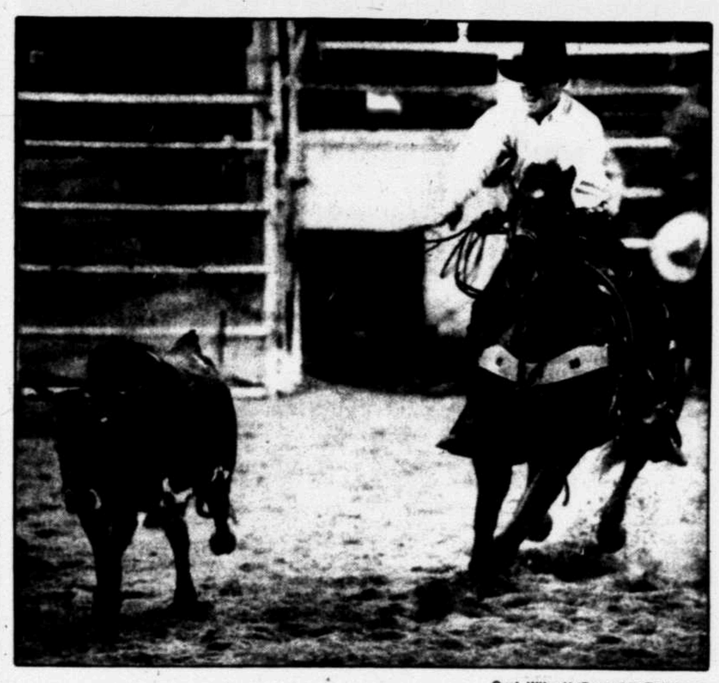

In compliance with a city ordinance, Midland veterinarians in October began collecting an extra $1 in license fees to help raise construction funds for the new shelter.

Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said the fee hike from $4 to $5 will raise about $20,000 a year. About $5,000 has been collected so far, McGregor said.

But Dr. Tom Green, a Midland veterinarian, complained that the license fee hike was unfair.

"The problem with animal fees is we're asking owners who comply with the law to pay for the problems of people who don't comply with the law," Green said. "A good percentage of animal control's problems work is created by unlicensed animals."

Chamber committee wants to expand MISD role

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

The Midland Chamber of Commerce Education Committee wants to expand its role in the Midland Independent School District in 1990, committee chairperson Molly Bedrich said this week.

"We're going to encourage local service clubs to expand direct recognition of academic achievement," she said. "We'd like to see schools and businesses linked more closely in support of academic achievement."

She said that while community support for MISD athletics is strong, activities like science fairs and the Academic Decathlon are often overlooked.

Ms. Bedrich said the committee is still deciding on ways to increase business involvement in recognizing student achievement, but she expects an enthusiastic response from business leaders.

"I think it's just a matter of letting companies and businesses know just how their support is needed in these areas," Ms. Bedrich said. "I think they're very interested in seeing students achieve academically."

The 23-member committee already sponsors MISD's Teacher of the Month awards and puts on a barbeque every fall for new teachers. Money for these projects comes from business contributions, Ms. Bedrich said.

She said schools and businesses are dependent on one another. The role of the education committee, which consists of school officials, business leaders and Chamber staff, is to act as a go-between.

"It's important to everyone that we have a strong educational system because businesses will depend on people coming out of the school system to provide services to them," Ms. Bedrich said. "Anytime that people are moving to Midland, they want to know what kind of school system we have here."

Committee member Van Pearcy, a Midland investment broker, said the committee has concentrated in the past on building teacher morale.

"The whole purpose of the committee is to create a better school environment and to show teachers that we appreciate what they do," he said.

MISD spokesman Ted Miller said the school district appreciates the committee's efforts.

"They're a big morale booster," he said. "You can't put a value on that."

Miller said the education committee, in addition to sponsoring Teacher of the Month and the fall barbeque, solicits business support for school bond elections and recruits businesses to offer discounts to MISD employees.

"We can do everything possible as an administration to tell teachers they're appreciated," he said. "But it means a whole lot more when it comes from the community."

Stepfather charged in fatal beating of 2-year-old boy

AUSTIN (AP) — The stepfather of a 2-year-old boy has been charged in the fatal beating of the toddler, who was scalded by another man in a bathtub last summer.

Gerald Christopher Zuliani, 23, was charged Wednesday with injury to a child, which carries the same penalty range as a murder charge — five to 99 years or life in prison.

The boy, Christopher Sebastian Wohlers, was declared brain-dead and disconnected from a life-support system at Brackenridge Hospital the same day.

The toddler was scalded last June in Round Rock, his home at the time, when his mother's then-boyfriend forced him to sit in 120-degree water, police said. Wayne Michael Hoffman, 21, was sentenced to 10 years in prison on Dec. 4 after pleading guilty to injury to a child.

"This has got to be one of the saddest ones," Austin homicide Sgt. Hector Polanco told the Austin American-Statesman. "This baby never had a chance."

Zuliani, who works for the Texas Employment Commission, was being held in Travis County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bail today.

The child's mother, Robbie Zuliani, 23, told a 911 dispatcher Tuesday night that the boy might have drowned and that she and her husband did not know how to perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation, police said.

Ms. Zuliani later told investigators she saw her husband strike her son with his fists and slam him against the wall of their home, according to Municipal Court documents. Police said she was afraid to report the alleged assault.

Larry BeSaw, hospital spokesman, said Christopher's heart, liver and kidneys were slated for transplant.

Midlanders should understand need for recycling

Despite all of their educated smartness and their pride as Texans in a legendary independent land, Midlanders are laggards in at least one desperate area: the environment.

Todd

That's about it — and about all there is — in the empirical world. The environment, the planet, is "home."

And that's something worth contending with — the wounded environment.

Some have. Others are. Most won't until they have to.

And one aspect drawing attention is this thing called "waste reduction," which may be subtitled "recycling spent earthly goods that often end up in the trash" and from there to the Dumpsters and then to the old dump grounds — the landfills.

The environmental group, euphemistically cloaked as "Keep Midland Beautiful" (KMB) and formerly hailed as "Clean Midland," is talking about making a concerted effort at cleaning up the community's mess through recycling or, as KMB boss Sharla Hotchkiss prefers to say, "waste reduction."

And KMB is "on the cutting edge" of the issue of the 1990s, perhaps one of the most important issues of the 20th century's last decade.

KMB is looking beyond just picking up trash along the railroad in Midland to get the news media's and, theoretically, the public's attention on anti-littering. KMB treasurer-accountant Robert Seymore considered a "llama patrol" to tote trash and to hype up the March 31 clean-up to coincide with the Great Texas Trash Off.

His father-in-law has some of those camel-like beasts up in the Panhandle. "The llamas can eat the trash," said Ms. Hotchkiss, who quickly righted her utterance: "No, goats can recycle the trash."

Charlie Waine of KMB was persuaded that a major littering source is city garbage trucks picking up loaded Dumpsters on windy days and allowing the trash to escape and blow down alleys.

"It's like pouring corn flakes into the wind," he quipped at KMB's Wednesday meeting.

Rick Turrentine of KMB was interested in dressing up the "ugly" streets by decking them out with trees amid the trash-reduction efforts.

KMB visitor Faye Beery, who is promoting Earth Day on April 22, said her 8-year-old son, Tommy, was "glad to get a couple of dollars" by selling recyclable plastic and cans.

"You get the kids behind this (recycling) project, and the parents will follow," she said.

The world is getting buried in trash.

And KMB latched onto a Frenchman, Richard Catania, to head up its recycling committee.

"It (recycling) came to France as a necessity," said Catania, a 35-year-old French teacher at Trinity School and an avowed environmentalist. France, which is somewhat smaller than Texas, has 54 million people — about three times Texas' population.

And recycling is "going to come to the United States in the same way" — by necessity.

France for sometime has been burdened, politically and practically, with disposing of nuclear wastes.

The problem with Midlanders and other Texans is taking the right perspective on "the wide-open space" that Catania finds so enticing and alluring.

"We take it for granted just because we have this wide-open space (in West Texas)," Catania said. "It is not a reason to change it into a 'trash can' and make it the 'trash can of the United States.' "

Catania, who works with Trinity students in recycling cans and plastics, is interested in keeping and, in cases, in restoring this "far-West look" that is without the litter of trash and garbage, including paper, plastics, and polystyrene, as in Styrofoam, cups.

Recycling transcends politics.

"Recycling is more than something that should be left to the goodwill of people, because you cannot count on the goodwill of people all the time," Catania said. "You have to count on something beyond. It has to be organized in a structured manner," he said, and people have to be held responsible.

Catania said he wishes people would cease viewing recycling as "some kind of left-wing activity. It's not."

Harris Kerr, KMB's legal counsel, said that Midland, in a critical sense, should be in the forefront in recycling to help conserve the world's natural resources and to help restore the planet to a more natural state — conducive to life.

"All the studies say that Midland has got one of the very highest educational levels in America, overall," Kerr said. "And everybody here ought to be aware of the benefits of recycling — the need for it — and waste reduction.

"Midlanders in particular and Texans in general don't like government telling them what to do," Kerr said.

And the independence in them is inclined to balk.

If government says "You will recycle," then people are 'going to get their backs up and say, 'Big Brother is not going to tell me what to do.' "

But, said Kerr, Midlanders and Texans "should know better." They should understand and appreciate the values of recycling. "I want to do that" should be their stance.

A major trend of the 1990s will be "the rise of an Environmental Party," similar to "The Greens" in Europe, that will "cross all spectrums — Republican and Democrat; man and woman; liberal, conservative.

"We are going to have an environmental issue."

Now, that is smart.

Teacher spends part of weekend instructing calculus

By ARTHUR LENTH CASTRO

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Almost mimicking the box office hit "Stand and Deliver," students at Gladys Porter High School are taking time out on weekends to secure a path for their college education by making the grade.

Besides attending daily classes which meet five days a week, about 40 juniors and seniors meet every Sunday in Room B-121 for a three-hour feature on calculus equations.

The star of the show is their teacher, Malini Iyer, who has been teaching at Porter for three years now.

"They are lining up to get in the room," Miss Iyer said one Sunday as the students filled up every seat.

"Soon there are not going to be enough seats, but at least I don't have to count absences," she said.

Like the movie which told the story about an East Los Angeles teacher, Jaime Escalante, who challenged his Hispanic students to strive for their potential, the Porter students are hitting the books in preparation for the Advanced Placement Exam that many hope to take next May.

The exam is a national test given by the Educational Testing Service which allows students who do well enough to gain college credit. Success almost assures students a spot in the university of their choice.

Porter High will be the first school in Brownsville to have students taking the exam.

Teaching during her spare time is not an inconvenience to their teacher who was schooled in Madras, India.

"In India, we are under the British school system," Miss Iyer explained. "...Students take exit exams for every subject and teachers are expected to prepare their students no matter how many hours it takes."

When entering her classroom the first thing that catches the eye is the far wall, which is covered with laminated posters quoting scholars of the past:

■ "Studies serve for delight, for ornament and for ability."

— Francis Bacon

■ "Genius is infinitely painstaking."

— H.W. Longfellow

■ "They are all able because they think they are able."

— Virgil

Miss Iyer feels her job is to make her students aware of their ability, but her style is painstakingly direct and uncompromising.

"Today you are going to see numbers hanging up and down," she warned the eager students who were leaning forward on their desks, pencils ready and brains working.

And off they went, "x-delta, y-delta, cosine, derivative of sine."

It's hard work but the students love it.

AP Laserphoto

Malini Iyer, a teacher at Gladys Porter High School in Brownsville, spends three hours every Sunday teaching calculus to about 40 students. Miss Iyer, a native of India, said she was educated under the British system, which expects teachers to spend extra time instructing.

"She's great. Fantastic," said Raul Salazar, a senior who plans to be a computer engineer.

"She doesn't even use the book, because she knows it all by memory."

Julie Mejia, a junior, thinks it's a funny coincidence that Miss Iyer is teaching this way even though she just saw "Stand and Deliver" a couple of weeks ago.

"Both the movie and Miss Iyer are a big influence for me because they taught me to strive for my potential," Mejia said.

She wants to be an aerospace engineer.

Jesse Gonzalez, who wants to be a doctor agrees: "Most people think we (Hispanics) are not capable of learning calculus because it's too 'big' of a subject," he said.

"But Miss Iyer taught us that it is just another language," Gonzalez explained. "If we can learn Spanish and English, we can learn calculus."

Art Torres, a senior, said that calculus is a song because each equation has rhythm "Cosine Squared, Theta plus Sine Squared, Theta equals 1," he sang.

Torres sees himself as an architectural engineer in the near future.

Miss Iyer thinks all of her students have a lot of potential.

"Not all of them will be great at calculus but they can all learn," she said.

"It is impossible for students to succeed in the maths and sciences without calculus because all of the university courses they take will have calculus," she explained.

Miss Iyer was influenced to teach in her off hours by students who told her about the motion picture.

Norma Cantu, director of educational programs for the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund (MALDEF) said that this is a common occurrence because many Hispanic children have found a new hero in Jaime Escalante.

MALDEF is a non-profit civil rights organization that is supported through private donations.

"The movie made a strong point," Ms. Cantu said. "Hispanics can learn and Jaime Escalante has become a new hero that has raised Hispanics' expectations for themselves."

Ms. Cantu doesn't think that the movie made the impact that it could have because it failed to describe some of the problems that Hispanic students have in American schools.

"I don't agree with the movie because it failed to hit the point that strong teachers need strong support," Ms. Cantu said.

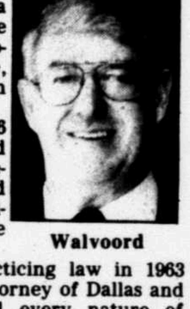

"Yes, if you give students high expectations, you get a lot back, but Escalante got a lot of support from parents and the movie failed to show this," she said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Attorney running for county judge

From Staff Reports

Midland attorney Al Walvoord today announced his candidacy for judge of the Midland County Court at Law, Place 1, in the 1990 Republican Party primary election.

Walvoord

Walvoord, 51, is currently a partner in the law firm of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder.

Citing his 26 years of trial and courtroom experience, Walvoord said he is qualified for the bench.

"I began practicing law in 1963 with the city attorney of Dallas and then prosecuted every nature of criminal case under Henry Wade, the Dallas district attorney," said Walvoord, who moved to West Texas in 1969 to work in the Ector County district attorney's office before joining the Stubbeman firm in 1970.

Walvoord is a 1959 graduate of Baylor University and received his law degree from Northwestern University School of Law in 1962.

He is a member of the First Baptist Church where he is a deacon, Sunday school teacher and is active in the Sanctuary Choir. He also served on the board of directors of Casa de Amigos.

Walvoord and his wife of 25 years, Delores, have two children, David, a student at Texas Tech University, and Leanna, a student at Baylor University.

Gas producer wins suit

AUSTIN (AP) — Lone Star Gas Co. must pay an estimated $3 million to an Abilene gas producer who sued the company for breach of contract, the Texas Supreme Court ruled Wednesday.

Two 1975 contracts between H.S. "Gus" Edwards and Lone Star said the gas purchase price could be redetermined annually, to reflect the highest price paid in similar contracts.

A 1978 federal law imposed price ceilings on such intrastate contracts but allowed the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to adjust the ceiling monthly for inflation.

Lone Star refused to include monthly adjustments as part of the redetermined price, as Edwards wanted, the court said. Instead, the company paid him a flat rate equal to the dollar amount actually paid under similar contracts at the time the price was redetermined.

"We hold that ... the reference to the highest price to be paid in other contracts incorporates the price fluctuations that occur under those contracts," the Supreme Court said. "Therefore, Edwards is entitled to receive a redetermined price that includes the monthly adjustments."

The court affirmed the Paducah trial court's ruling awarding Edwards damages equaling the monthly escalations and reversed a take-nothing judgment against him by the 7th Court of Appeals in Amarillo.

The Supreme Court denied Edwards' request for reimbursement of state severance taxes.

Houston attorney William Pannill, representing Edwards, said the monthly escalations, interest and attorney's fees total $3 million.

"Hundreds and hundreds" of gas producers have similar contract provisions, Pannill said, adding that 20 percent of the gas sold in the United States in 1978 was sold in Texas.

Robbery supsect sought

From Staff Reports

Midland police are looking for a woman who robbed a convenience store of an undetermined amount of cash early today.

According to reports, the woman entered the EZ Mart, 2210 N. Big Spring St., at about 1:50 a.m. The clerk, 33, told police she was carrying a small gasoline can and purchased 75 cents worth of gas.

"She implied she had a gun, and demanded cash from the cash register," police spokesman Cp. Jim White said. She took the money, and was last seen heading south from the store on foot.

The suspect was described as a black woman, 5 feet 3 inches tall weighing about 110 pounds. She wore her hair in a bun and wore a knit beret-type cap, according to officers.

She was wearing blue jeans, a gray sweater, and a blue jean jacket, according to reports.

White said the clerk never saw a gun.

UTPB

Significant costs would be involved in this option as well as another proposal to merge UTPB with both Midland and Odessa colleges, according to the study.

A single junior college district serving both cities was tried when a branch of Odessa College preceded the creation of Midland College. Judging from history, a single new district would not seem practical, the report said.

In addition to the $5.3 million in bonded indebtedness of Midland College, the outstanding indebtedness of Odessa College would have to be assumed by the UT Board of Regents. That additional indebtedness is $9.7 million.

According to the study, the precedent of the state assuming local community college indebtedness would be an open invitation to at least five other cities to unload local tax debts on to the state.

A fourth option — to relocate the UTPB campus near Midland International Airport — would require reversing the decision made in 1971 by the UT Board of Regents not to locate UTPB midway between the two cities, and require the disposal of the present campus.

The study concluded that the cost of relocating UTPB at a new site would be a minimum of $50 million for new buildings. Other costs would result from the need for more faculty and student housing.

Midlanders lead busy lives despite cancer

Treatment of patients with cancer has made astonishing improvements over the past 20 years. A key element in monitoring effectiveness of cancer treatment is the maintenance of a cancer registry. Such a registry makes long-term followup of individual patients possible; it also provides a data base for analysis of tumor patterns in the population.

Humphreys

Sherry Parker, Cancer Program Coordinator and a Certified Tumor Registrar, supplied the following information about the tumor registry maintained by Midland Memorial Hospital.

You might see pretty blond 16-year-old junior Kayla Johnson at many Lee High School events: she is in Dixie Dolls, German Club, Youth in Government and Bio Med. Or you might run in to Patty Hobbs, administrative assistant at Drilco, during her daily walks, her twice-weekly aerobics course or at Crestview Baptist Church. Students, teachers and staff at Santa Rita Elementary School daily see six-year-old Crystal Carathers, a first grade student who is thoroughly enjoying school this year.

At first glance, you might not even realize the connection between these three Midlanders of different ages and backgrounds. yet they are bound together by a unique set of experiences: they are all cancer patients who were diagnosed at least two years ago, have been treated extensively and are currently busily getting on with their daily lives. Kayla, Patty and Crystal are representative of an ever-growing number of Midland cancer survivors whose stories are well worth telling.

When Kayla, the daughter of cartoonist Norman and mother LouAnn Johnson was 14, she developed swelling in the neck area which was eventually diagnosed as Hodgkin's disease. She had surgery and radiation therapy, during which she lost quite a bit of weight. Today, she is the picture of health. She and her parents frequently attend Candlelighters, which is a support group for parents of children with cancer.

IN 1983, PATTY Hobbs was found to have breast cancer which had spread to two lymph nodes. She also received chemotherapy, and is extremely proud of the fact that she never missed a day of work! However, she does admit to once falling asleep on her typewriter, and she claims that she often did get very tired during her chemotherapy regimen.

A little over two years ago, Crystal Carathers was diagnosed as having acute lymphocytic leukemia, after telling her mom on several occasions that "my tummy hurts." Her parents, Kevin and Lori Carathers have been instrumental in organizing the local Candlelighters group.

These case histories are more than interesting stories: they and hundreds like them form the data base for the "cancer registry." For the past 30 years, Midland Memorial Hospital has been dedicated to maintaining such a data base, which records vital information about each cancer patient's history, diagnosis, treatment and end results. Registry data are reviewed by medical and administrative staff members, to determine effectiveness of care. Several interesting patterns have been documented through analysis of cancer registry data.

One such finding involves the average patient age at the time of diagnosis. Since the cancer registry was started in 1959, the average patient age has fallen by ten years. It used to be believed that cancer was a disease of the elderly; however, one look at cancer registry data today quickly dispels that belief, as we are seeing younger and younger patients each year.

Another significant finding associated with cancer registry statistics involves the importance of screening mammography. In a recent year, there were 61 newly diagnosed cases of breast cancer, 25 of which were diagnosed by mammogram alone. This means because the lesion found on mammography was too small to be felt, even by a physician.

THE IMPORTANCE of this finding is twofold: 1) Breast cancer that is diagnosed at an early stage results in an improved outcome and 2) Many women have utilized the option of Lumpectomy, which is excision of the tumor and surrounding tissue, sampling of axillary lymph nodes followed by radiation and possibly chemotherapy. there is now a series of Midland women with breast cancer who have had the option of retaining both breasts intact.

Another interesting pattern of the cancer registry involves the lifetime follow-up that is conducted on each patient. For example, in 1983 there were six young adult males between the ages of 18 and 32 who were diagnosed with testicular cancer. Five years later, at least one of those young men has fathered a child, and an additional three patients are doing quite well.

The uniqueness of a cancer registry is that lifetime follow-up is a priority, and every effort is made to "track" all cancer patients. The occurrence of some any testicular tumors in one year was discussed at the american Cancer Society board level, and several self-testicular examination educational programs were instituted at that time.

Other registry data reflect changes in habits and lifestyles among West Texans. Lung cancer was diagnosed infrequently in women thirty years ago; in one recent year 17 of 36 lung cancer patients diagnosed were women. This disease, which is often associated with smoking, is also striking patients at a younger [illegible] than in decades past; the Allison Center has treated several lung cancer patients who were in their thirties. The real tragedy of that situation is that many of those patients have very young families who must cope with the disease, therapy, complications and side effects.

Another trend that has developed during the past decade has been an increase in the number of head and neck cancers. These malignancies sometimes are associated with the use of a combination of alcohol and tobacco, and the numbers of these patients have climbed dramatically: 21 patients were diagnosed during a recent year. This disease often presents at a "late" stage, which means that lymph nodes or other body parts may be involved with the cancer.

A DISTINCT advantage of keeping an up-to-date community cancer registry is that these statistics play a real educational role. One of the objectives for the Allison Center is to attempt to educate younger audiences in the Midland area about cancer risks, prevention and screening. There are many "unknowns" about cancer causation; it makes good sense to concentrate on what is known about preventing this disease.

The real value of a cancer registry is that there are hundreds of patients like Kayla, Patty and Crystal; their case histories serve the community as both an educational resource and a motivation to continue to fight the battle against cancer. Data from 1959 show that most of the patients diagnosed that year died within ten years; patients diagnosed during 1989 have a much better chance for both quantity and quality of life.

Disease leaves bones vulnerable to breaks

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Andrew Rivers is a bright, witty 10-year-old whose 2-foot-11-inch frame is so brittle he breaks like a china doll.

"He will never be a Joe Namath; an Albert Einstein, maybe. We take things one day at a time," said Mary Rivers, whose son has osteogenesis imperfecta, a relatively rare genetic bone disorder for which science has no cure.

It's caused more than 30 fractures so far, stunted Andrew's growth and left him confined to a wheelchair. Doctors don't know if he'll ever walk.

"At the moment there are really no good medical therapies that make a difference long term," says Dr. Peter Byers, a Seattle medical geneticist who specializes in inherited diseases, including osteogenesis imperfecta.

For the short term, surgeons put metal rods through the bones in Andrew's deformed legs to strengthen them. Rodding, exercise and external splinting seem to be the best that medicine has to offer OI patients.

An estimated 20,000 to 25,000 Americans suffer from the disease, which is a lack of collagen or protein in the bone. It is either inherited or caused by some mutation in a gene. OI patients often have triangular heads and barrel chests that can lead to pulmonary and spinal problems.

Andrew has a 7-year-old buddy, Alex Metcalf, who also suffers from OI. The two match wits at computer games or sit giggling on the living room carpet as they bat a sponge ball around in a fast game of catch. The die-hard football fans cheer the Tampa Bay Buccaneers from the sidelines during home games.

AP Laserphoto

Alex Metcalf, 7, left, and friend Andrew Rivers, 10, watch a Tampa Bay Buchaneers football game earlier this season. Both boys suffer from osteogenesis imperfecta, a bone disorder.

Alex was born with three breaks and four shortened bones.

"Basically, we were told to handle this child as fine crystal," said his father, Matt Metcalf. "But you've got to assess the risk, take precautions, then let them go out and play despite the outcome. The interaction is important."

Sometimes, just twisting during sleep can break a child's limb. Picking up a baby up can fracture the frail bones. Often parents sandwich newborns between pieces of foam for support to turn the child over or change a diaper.

Andrew broke an arm while asleep; his right leg at six months, his left leg the month after.

"Here we have all this attention on child abuse and I'm carrying around this little body with all these casts," said Mrs. Rivers. "I was ready to get a T-shirt that read: 'I have brittle bones.'"

At Lake Fern Montessori Academy where Andrew is a fifth-grader, Principal Nettie Rossi credits Mary and Conrad Rivers for their son's academic and social achievements. "They're so supportive. They explain things, prepare him, then let him go out and do what he has to do. They don't baby him."

As a result, Andrew plays ball from his wheelchair and does push-ups with his class of 27. "He has a really good outlook. I'm sure he has his moments but they don't show here," Mrs. Rossi said. "He has a sense of hummor, is bright, a good conversationalist and just an all-around good guy. The kids treat him like one of them."

Children benefit from pared-down pacemakers

DANVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Pacemakers pared to the size of a half-dollar and implanted without open chest surgery are a medical blessing to small children like 7-year-old Margie Bass.

Margie was born with an abnormality in her heart's electrical system. As a result, her heart beat less than a third the normal rate, causing her to sleep 12 or more hours at night and then three hours or more during the day.

In June, Dr. Mark Cohen of Geisinger Medical Center implanted a quarter-inch-thick pacemaker below Margie's collarbone with a wire running through a vein to her heart.

The pacemaker weighs less than an ounce and is designed to last five years. It monitors how fast the top of her heart is beating and sends an electrical signal for the bottom part of her heart to beat.

"We often talk about how space-age technology has helped us face modern problems," Cohen said at a news conferece. "This is a particular example of how miniaturization and changes in technology have helped us adapt our care to children that have heart problems."

Margie, daughter of Donna and Roger Bass and a second-grader from Northumberland, had two bulkier pacemakers, the first at age 2, which doctors implanted during open chest surgery.

The device she has now is a Cosmos II pacemaker, a year-old product from Intermedics Inc. of Freeport, Texas.

"It is a minor surgical procedure, not a big open chest or open heart operation," Cohen said.

About one in 15,000 children are born with a lack of electrical signals from the atrium to the ventricle, according to Cohen, and nearly all of them will need pacemakers.

Without pacemakers, the children become inactive to compensate for their slow heart rate.

Older, larger pacemakers are more susceptible to damage, Cohen said.

Margie fell and cracked her first pacemaker when she was 4. Her second pacemaker lasted until June when she outgrew the electrical leads connected to her heart.

With the new pacemaker, doctors and other experts see few limits for her activity.

Pacemakers were introduced in the 1960s but were too large to be implanted in children. By the early 1980s, technology had reduced the size enough for children. To accommodate a child's growth, extra wire leads are implanted with the pacemaker.

Cohen estimates that doctors at 10 to 15 medical centers use the new technique. Pacemakers like Margie's cost $4,000 to $6,000, plus a like amount for the surgical procedure, he says.

New drug offers digestive relief

Associated Press

A powerful acid-inhibiting drug recently approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has been shown to be effective against severe cases of a common disease of the digestive tract.

Omeprazole, marketed under the name Losec, acts on an enzyme that forms hydrochloric acid, one of the principal ingredients of digestive juices. Studies have found it to be an impressive weapon in combatting the damage of gastroesophageal reflux disease, in which the acidic contents of the stomach wash back up the esophagus.

Dr. Andrew Milano of New York University Medical Center terms this complaint the source of many problems, including severe heartburn and irritation of the esophagus, which may cause difficulty swallowing.

Omeprazole has also been approved for short-term treatment of esophagitis which has not responded to other medications, or has been shown to be unusually severe under direct visualization by endoscopy.

It will probably be valuable in the therapy of peptic ulcers, although large-scale studies of this application have not yet been performed and the FDA approval does not extend to ulcer treatment.

Laboratory animals may develop tumors when given high doses of omeprazole, but the drug is not linked with tumors in human beings.

Ulcers develop when the gastric fluid that digests food proteins attacks the stomach or intestinal lining, causing sore areas and, in severe cases, bleeding and perforation of the stomach or intestinal wall. Active ulcers are usually painful, although as many as 25 percent of them may cause no symptoms.

Histamine blockers, such as cimetidine (Tagamet) and ranitidine (Zantac), also inhibit acid production, but they do so differently and not as completely as omeprazole. Side effects are infrequent, and include grogginess, headache and diarrhea.

Misoprostol (Cytotec) is used to prevent ulcers induced by aspirin and ibuprofen, which are used to treat arthritis. Although misoprostol seems to prevent bleeding ulcers, it must be taken four times a day, and may cause diarrhea.

Woodrow Moses, a 23-year-old engineering student at Austin Community College, estimates that he spends "between $60-65 a week on books." Moses is one of the reasons Austin has the highest sales of books per household in the nation, according to a survey by the American Booksellers Association.

Austin households top book sales, survey says

AUSTIN (AP) — Austinites may be the most well-read people around, according to a survey that shows residents here each year spend $195.86 per household on books — more than any other place in the nation.

William Lofquist, publishing analyst for the U.S. Department of Commerce, said three factors contributed to Austin's top rank in the American Booksellers Association survey for 1987.

"What we have in Austin is a state capital, a very large university and a fairly large group of households," Lofquist said. "The combination of those three bodes very well for the selling of books."

Austin was followed by Madison, Wis. ,at $175.70 and San Jose, Calif., at $164.25.

Lofquist said the survey's results include college textbooks. "That is clearly one reason that Austin ranked so high," he said.

New York City is the nation's largest book market in total sales and San Francisco has the most bookstores per capita with 2.43 per 10,000 households, followed by Austin at 2.21.

In the nation's 50 largest markets, the average household spent $57.17 on books in 1987.

In Texas, Dallas households spent $68.73 per year on books and Houstonians spent $59.90, said Carol Miles, director of research at the American Booksellers Association.

Woodrow Moses, an engineering student at Austin Community College, is one of the reasons Austin ranks No. 1.

Moses, 23, said he makes eight to 10 visits to bookstores each week.

"I buy science fiction, fantasy, adventure and computer engineering books," he said. "I don't watch a lot of TV. I spend most of my time reading books or working on my computer."

Kathy Weir, 27, who works in the public information office of the state treasury, said visiting a bookstore during lunch hour is a good way to get out of the office.

"I'm just one of those people who loves to go to bookstores," she said.

In the nation's 50 largest markets, the average household spent $57.17 on books in 1987, according to the survey.

Emergency kitchens feed farm workers

EDCOUCH (AP) — Emergency kitchens have begun feeding farm workers and others whose jobs vanished when freezing weather devastated agriculture in the Lower Rio Grande Valley the weekend before Christmas.

Evening meals provided by the Texas Department of Human Services are being served in Hidalgo County until Jan. 15. The kitchens opened Monday.

But some parents, apparently ashamed to take the free food, waited at home or in cars outside while their children ate Wednesday.

"Certainly not having to prepare dinner will help stretch them out in this difficult situation," said Maribel Navarro, executive director of the Hidalgo County Community Service Agency, which is overseeing the emergency kitchens.

"Some parents might be too proud to come in, but they're sending their children in."

Several groups of unaccompanied children ate quietly at the parish hall of St. Theresa Catholic Church in Edcouch Wednesday night. Some said their parents were at home.

"Some parents wait outside in their cars," said Juanita Marroquin, a Community Service Agency secretary helping supervise the Edcouch kitchen.

The other kitchens were at the Sacred Heart Church in Edinburg and the Service Center in Alton. Free meals were available to the general public with no questions asked.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements on Tuesday asked President George Bush to declare a federal disaster in the state's four southernmost counties: Starr, Hidalgo, Willacy and Cameron.

Clements said initial estimates indicate the area suffered at least $385 million in freeze-related damage. That includes $200 million in ruined crops, $150 million in losses to businesses related to agriculture and $35 million in lost wages for the thousands who lost their jobs, the governor said.

"I will have to look for some other work," said Chuy Perez of Elsa, who ate Wednesday night's free meal in Edcouch with his wife and three children.

Perez said he was harvesting oranges before the hard freeze destroyed the citrus and other winter crops.

"It's going to be a tough year," said Julie Garcia of Edcouch, who ate with her mother and three children.

Mrs. Garcia said her husband drives a truck for the sugar mill in Santa Rosa, but will be laid off at the end of the month because of damage to the sugar cane crop. He normally would work until April, she said.

Ms. Navarro said the free dinner provides a third meal for children who qualify for free breakfast and lunch programs at school.

Most of the families will have an opportunity to apply for unemployment assistance and food stamps by the time the kitchens close Jan. 15, Ms. Navarro said.

More than 18,000 people applied for disaster unemployment assistance after a freeze in 1983 devastated agriculture in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, said John Baker, office manager for the Texas Employment Commission in Harlingen.

Baker said he would not be surprised if as many or more lost work from last month's freeze.

Starr County's 35.1 percent unemployment rate already was the state's highest in November, the most recent month for which statistics are available, according to the TEC. Unemployment elsewhere during November in the Valley was 12.3 percent in Cameron County, 15.3 percent in Willacy County and 18.5 percent in Hidalgo County.

Farm bureau hopes grants provided

WACO (AP) — When President Bush considers assistance to South Texas counties hard hit by the late December freeze, the Texas Farm Bureau hopes Bush will provide some lasting relief as well as low interest loans.

"You just can't keep borrowing money," Texas Farm Bureau presiden S.M. True said in a letter to the president on Wednesday. "These people need grants of some kind in order to rebuild a very vital industry to the state of Texas."

True urged the president to declare the stricken counties, primarily in the Rio Grande Valley and San Antonio winter garden area, an official disaster area.

The Texas Citrus and Vegetable Association has scheduled meetings for 1:30 p.m. today at the Uvalde Civic Center and for 1:30 p.m. Friday at the Hoblitzelle Auditorium, Texas A&M Experiment Station in Weslaco, for producers to discuss the situation with federal officials.

STATE IN BRIEF

Citizenship fee rises to $110

EL PASO (AP) — A new fee for people wanting to become naturalized citizens is aimed at weeding out those not prepared for the required test, but one woman says the fee may keep some from getting their citizenship.

On Dec. 14, the cost of citizenship rose from $50 to $110 with a fee to offset costs of giving the exam and processing applications, Immigration and Naturalization officials say.

Rita Sarinana, a naturalization class instructor, says the extra charge will hinder some people, particularly older women, from seeking citizenship.

"Some of the older women don't work, and they can get $50. But a lot of them have told me there is no way they can come up with $110," Ms. Sarinana said.

"We've had a lot of people come in and take the test, even though they knew they couldn't pass it," said Joe Grillo, INS supervisor of immigration examinations.

People wanting to take the test have to pay a $60 fee each time they take it.

Grillo said people who take the test and pass it generally have two or three months before the court fee is due.

Wreck involves 30 vehicles

DALLAS (AP) — A woman was killed and 20 other people were injured in a series of accidents that involved at least 30 vehicles on fog-bound Interstate 30 east of Dallas.

Police Wednesday afternoon were called to the interstate near Lake Ray Hubbard after two tractor-trailers jack-knifed and a concrete truck overturned on the westbound side.

Traffic backed up on the eastbound side as motorists slowed to view the wreck. A tractor-trailer didn't slow down in time and set off a 10-vehicle chain reaction accident that killed Ruth Mahaney, 66, of Alvarado, said Dallas police Cpl. J.M. Nanney.

"Traffic had started backing up. Everybody was slowing and stopping. Whether it was people stopping to look or help, there was quite a bit of confusion," Nanney said.

Valley fuel prices up

AUSTIN (AP) — A Brownsville lawmaker said diesel fuel prices have increased two-fold recently in the Rio Grande Valley and has asked a legislative committee and the state attorney general to investigate the problem.

Sen. Hector Uribe, a Democrat, said he has requested an emergency meeting of the Senate Natural Resources Committee "to ensure that Valley residents are not being victimized by unscrupulous diesel suppliers."

Uribe said he wants to make sure the price increase is not related to the recent freeze.

Earth Day to shed light on global concerns

By BARNABY J. FEDER
N.Y. Times News Service

CNS Graphic

It began as a suggestion in 1969 by Sen. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin for college teach-ins on environmental problems, but by the time the first Earth Day was celebrated on April 22, 1970, it had erupted into a nationwide patchwork of demonstrations and community activities that attracted 20 million Americans.

Now, hundreds of environmental groups, most of which did not exist in 1970, are hoping to use the 20th anniversary of Earth Day for an even broader range of events and educational programs aimed at sharply stepping up pressure on businesses and governments worldwide for stricter environmental policies.

Unlike the largely student-led groups that put together the first Earth Day, organizers for the anniversary are bringing much more than zeal to their campaign.

The drive to exploit the anniversary is being waged with the sophistication and marketing tools of big business, ready access to television and radio coverage and multimillion-dollar budgets.

"You have the same type of public groundswell forming as in 1970, but this time there are engines behind it," said Barry Commoner, a Queens College professor in New York and author who is on the advisory boards of both the Earth Day 20 Foundation and Earth Day 1990, two groups formed this year to sponsor Earth Day events and spur local groups to organize their own.

INSTEAD OF PROFITS, these enterprises are looking for a variety of bottom-line results, starting with bringing hundreds of thousands of new activists into the environmental movement.

They also want to steer millions of investors and consumers toward companies judged to be most sensitive to environmental concerns.

They want the size and range of Earth Day activities to create a political mandate for tougher environmental laws.

And they expect Earth Day programs to encourage farmers, industrialists and service-industry executives to accelerate investments in products and processes that are environmentally "friendly."

"The point is not an event, but launching a decade of environmental activism," said Christina Dresser, 35, a lawyer who is executive director of Earth Day 1990, based in Palo Alto, Calif.

Earth Day organizers expect virtually everyone in environmentally related businesses to jump on the bandwagon with publicity, sales and events to stimulate participation.

University presidents and student leaders around the country have been invited to develop programs, and Earth Day 1990 alone has sent more than 6,000 letters to overseas groups seeking their participation.

"It has to be international this time because of the nature of the issues," said Denis Hayes, chairman of Earth Day 1990, who recently returned from an organizing trip to Europe.

Earth Day 20 and Earth Day 1990 have overlapping aims and support — indeed, former Senator Nelson, now an adviser to the Wilderness Society, is honorary chairman of both.

Both organizations are providing information to local groups planning their own activities, licensing their logos for fund raising and working on a calendar of media and entertainment events at home and overseas.

THEY HAVE ALSO talked of merging, but insiders say negotiations in that area have foundered.

As is often the case in the corporate world, the two groups have been unable to resolve disagreements over who would run the combined organization and over incompatible structures and strategies.

Hayes, 45, a lawyer who dropped out of Harvard Law School to serve as national coordinator for Earth Day 1970, has assembled an Earth Day 1990 staff that includes many veterans of political campaigns.

Edward W. Furia, 47, the lawyer and lobbyist who is president of Earth Day 20, was hired by University of Pennsylvania students to organize a week of Earth Day events in the Philadelphia area in 1970 and later served as a regional administrator for the Environmental Protection Agency.

Earth Day 1990 is the larger organization. It has 20 employees — compared with Earth Day 20's three — and is hiring 18 field coordinators.

It is backed by the broadest range of environmental groups ever assembled. Its 80-member board of directors is made up largely of environmental activists and politicians, but it also includes business executives and union leaders.

JOHN YOUNG, president and chief executive officer of Hewlett-Packard, is a member, along with Ted Turner, chairman of Turner Broadcasting, Owen Bieber, president of the United Automobile Workers and George J. Kourpias, president of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.

"We are building more out of the grass roots while Hayes is building from the Big 10 environmental groups and their mailing lists," said John O'Connor, an Earth Day 20 board member who is executive director of the National Toxics Campaign, a Boston-based coalition of 1,000 local groups concerned with industrial pollution.

"The grass roots tend to have a more combative relationship with industry. We don't like it that they have Hewlett Packard on their board since they are the second-biggest emitter of chloroflourocarbons in Silicon Valley and won't switch to alternative solvents.

"But there's less distinction than the two organizational heads would admit, and I predict you'll see them merge about a month before the big event."

Earth Day 1990 is pursuing its range of programs with a professionalism — and a $3 million budget — that contrasts sharply with the primitive organizational skills and resources available to environmentalists in 1970, when the national budget for Earth Day amounted to $190,000.

Earth Day 20 is seeking major corporate sponsors.

But organizers are leery about appearing beholden to any company, and not all businesses will be welcome.

Ms. Dresser said Earth Day 1990 will not accept money from oil companies and had named a committee of executives who manage funds in what it views as a socially responsible way to advise it on which companies should be allowed to sponsor activities.

So far, Earth Day organizers say, the question of turning away business contributions has not really come up because few businesses have thought much about the coming anniversary.

But some business executives looking ahead say April may be a difficult month for any company with hazardous or messy products or processes.

"I realize that the groups organizing Earth Day have a range of constituents and some of them are not going to be amenable to having anything to do with us," said Jon Holtzman, vice president of the Chemical Manufacturers Association, a Washington-based trade group.

The association was one of the first business organizations to take note of the coming anniversary and has approached Earth Day 1990 and Earth Day 20 to explore possible areas of cooperation.

Turner offers $500,000 for upbeat book on planet

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The future could be $500,000 richer for the writer who dreams up a story that ends with the survival and prosperity of all life on our planet. That is how much the winner of the Turner Tomorrow Award will receive when selected in the late spring of 1991.

The prize was announced recently by Ted Turner, chairman and president of the Turner Broadcasting System, at a news conference at the New York Public Library.

It is thought to be the largest amount offered as a prize for a single book. Four runners-up will each receive $50,000. "The great minds of today need to focus on the problems of global significance if humanity is to see new tomorrows," said Turner. "These awards are designed to encourage writing by authors throughout the world and in all languages that creates positive solutions to global problems."

All five winning books will be published in hard cover by Turner Publishing Inc., a newly created subsidiary of Turner Broadcasting.

The grand-prize winner will be guaranteed a minimum printing of 50,000 copies, a $50,000 budget for advertising and promotion and full screen credit if TBS makes a movie of the manuscript.

Manuscripts must be unpublished works of fiction of at least 50,000 words, set in the near future. They can be written in any language, but must be accompanied by a synopsis of at least 20 pages in English.

Manuscripts may be submitted from Jan. 15 through Nov. 20, 1990. Guinzburg said that the commitment was for only one year, but that the hope was to give the award every two years.

Rules and eligibility requirements may be obtained by writing to: Turner Tomorrow Awards, 1 CNN Center, Post Office Box 105366, Atlanta, Ga. 30329.

Noodle soup inexpensive to buy, quick to prepare

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Is there anything tastier than a bowl of hot soup on a cold winter evening? Lots of people swear by that classic, chicken soup; others prefer hearty stew.

At our house, chances are the soup du jour will be ramen. My children and I have been partial to this oriental-noodle soup for years, because anything made of super-long, slightly-curly noodles has to be good.

Before, though, one package of ramen made at least two servings of soup — which can be a pain when all you want is one. So when I found packages of single-serving Lipton Lots-A-Noodles Instant Oriental Noodle Soup mix in the supermarket, I had to buy all four flavors to take home and check out for taste, price and advertising accuracy. My co-taster in this scientific experiment was my soon-to-be college student, who has loved ramen since she could walk.

Each 1.5 ounce, single-serving package of Lipton's oriental noodle soup cost 38 cents — not too shabby for a quick meal. Flavors include chicken, beef and oriental flavors.

Label advertising starts off with the word "Microwaveable," which is guaranteed to get my attention. Then, label advertising continued: "Lots-a-Noodles is a hearty serving of noodles combined with a rich, delicious broth and vegetables. So quick and easy to prepare, you can satisfy your hunger anytime, anywhere." Of course, to do that, you have to have access to a microwave or a stove "anytime, anywhere," but that's beside the point.

Nutrition information lists a single-serving of chicken flavor Lots-A-Noodles (where do they come up with those names?) contains 180 calories, 8 grams of protein, 22 grams of carbohydrates and 2 grams of fat; and 10 percent of the protein and iron, 25 percent of the thiamin and 20 percent of the vitamin A, riboflavin and niacin suggested in the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowances.

Both of us who tasted the soup decided that, while it is convenient and quick to prepare, it doesn't taste quite like the ramen we prefer. The noodles are not long enough and there's not enough of them. The broth is nothing spectacular and the peas — well, dried peas never do quite soften up, do they. As the other tester said, "Well, it's good. But it's not ramen."

Oh, well, at least it was quick.

DEAR ABBY

Dad's doubts blocking daughter's travel plans

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have a 14-year-old daughter, "Jane," who is well-mannered and does very well in school.

For the most part, Jane is as responsible as a 14-year-old can be. Jane very recently started dating "John," a 17-year-old high school senior who seems to be a nice guy. Our neighbors told us that he comes from a nice family.

Because of Jane's age, and their age difference, my wife and I thought it best that when John and Jane date, it should be with groups of people (other couples).

The problem is that John and his family are going away for a five-day vacation and Jane was invited to join them.

Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but even though his parents will be there, the situation doesn't "feel" right to me.

I have seen Jane come home twice (after being with John) in tears because she was afraid he was going to "dump" her — and now she wants to go away with him. My wife and I are quietly fighting about this, because she sees no real problem with Jane going on a five-day vacation with John and his parents.

I'll take my lumps, Abby; please tell me if you think my daughter is too immature for this situation or am I? — FRANKLY CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: You say that "the neighbors" told you that John comes from a nice family, which indicates that you have never met them. Maybe I'm "old-fashioned," too, but I wouldn't send my 14-year-old daughter off on a five-day vacation with a young man and his parents unless I knew the parents. The situation might be as kosher as Manischewitz — but it doesn't "feel" right to me, either.

DEAR ABBY: I have read you for years and know that you do a lot of good, but please stay out of the wildlife field. Obviously you do not understand that everything lives on something else. It's a cruel world. Birds and animals were put on this earth to be used by man — not abused; used -- and this includes killing and eating.

If you eat filet mignon, some big, brown-eyed animal must give up his life. If you like chicken, some chicken was killed for you. For those who say, "Well then, I'll be a vegetarian" — all plants are living things.

Wild geese mate for life. (They have a better track record than we humans have.) Canada geese in captivity live for 80 years. Today, there are more Canada geese on the continent of North America than ever before. You should see them walking the streets of Rochester, Minn.! (The citizens are sick of the mess they make.)

I am a retired special agent for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and when I first came to Iowa in 1953, they were having their first deer hunting season in years. Now they have deer in every county. Last year, Iowa harvested nearly 100,000 deer. The farmers were complaining that the deer were eating their crops! You don't hear any "Bambi" stories in Iowa.

God bless you, Abby, for your compassion for animals, but please be realistic. It's a cruel world for wildlife, but that's the way God made it. — WESLEY S. NEWCOMB, MATLACHA, FLA.

DEAR WESLEY: I bow to your superior knowledge of wildlife as it applies to wild geese and deer. Hereafter I'll stick to humans, who tend to get caught up in a wild lifestyle that mortal men (and women) are heir to.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please do a service for all adoptive families? Inform newspaper editors that adopted children are not fertility drugs. I am sick of seeing sentences such as this one — from The New York Times, no less: "They tried for 10 years to have a child; it was not until after they adopted a baby boy that Mrs. Brand became pregnant."

There is no cause-and-effect here. The chances of conceiving a child are the same before and after adoption. Implying that all one has to do is "relax" belittles the infertile couple's experience, and is an insult to them and their adopted child.

Imagine how adoptees must feel when they read that they were just a means to an end — a reproductive aid to bring about their parents' second child! Adoptive parents do not think that way, but journalists thoughtlessly perpetuate the myth that adopted children are second-best.

And another thing: Could we all lighten up on phrases such as "adopt a whale," or "adopt a zoo animal"?

One last thing, Abby, and I'll have it off my chest. My son's "real mother" didn't give him up. His real mother ADOPTED him. The dear young woman who gave birth to him wasn't able to be a mother to him, so SHE gave him up. — MARY RUSSELL, SOUTH EUCLID, OHIO

Abby's favorite family recipes are included in her new cookbooklet. Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Abby's Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Don't dry wet currency in microwave oven

Copley News Service

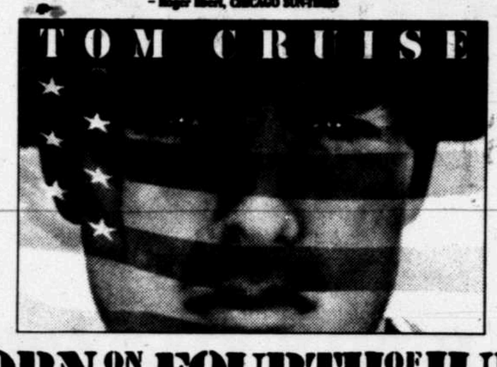

If you get caught in a downpour and have a wallet full of drenched dollar bills, don't dry them out in a microwave — you'll nuke them into ashes, according to U.S. currency examiner Gracie Scruggs.

Scruggs works of the Office of Currency Standards, which replaces damaged currency with new bills.

Scruggs says you should spread wet cash out on a towel and allow it to air-dry like a fancy sweater.

Aching back defies description

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

You probably thought you had heard the last of my back problem. Well, you would have, but since it bought me four days in the hospital, I figured I could milk it for another column. It owes me. Big!

As I was lying there trying to figure out what great author said on his deathbed, "Either the wallpaper goes or I go," another thought occurred on the subject of pain. Every time something happens to us, we are required to describe it to our doctors. Interpreting pain is not the easiest thing to do. Even describing where it is, is difficult for laymen. As I told my doctor, "It is lodged somewhere between the buns and the cellulite. You get paid all this money. You find it."

"Are you referring to your buttock and sciatic nerve?"

"Whatever."

"What does the pain feel like?"

"You know how a toaster looks when it clicks off and is cooling down and the heat just sorta keeps sliding down on all those little coils?" (He stared at me.)

"Actually, sometimes it's like the Stephen King novel I read last summer where a wacko nurse kept this author captive in an old house and chopped off his leg with a dull ax when he tried to leave." (I could tell he hadn't read it.)

"Sometimes," I said brightly, "it's not that sharp. It's a dull pain like you're sitting at an Ohio State football game on a cold, hard bleacher for three hours and it's 10 below, and you look around for someone who can carry you to the car in that chair-locked position because there isn't a chance in the world you can stand."

I've always admired country-western singers. No one, but no one, can describe their misery so graphically. There's just no hemming and hawing around with, "I got tears in my eyes from lying on my back on my bed while I cry over you."

They're so honest and simple. You know someone is hurting when one croons, "Drop-kick me, Jesus, through the goalposts of life" or, "If you want to keep the beer real cold, put it next to my ex-wife's heart." No one puts feelings into a context that can be understood better than the haunting "You must think my bed is a bus stop the way you come and go."

I told a nurse the other day about the pain. "You know what it's like to roll over on a pit bull that you startle out of a sound sleep?" I could tell by the way she looked at me she'd never done that.

Will Glanville stay or go? Who knows?

HOUSTON (AP) — All Jerry Glanville wanted to do was get on an elevator.

Asked if he was happy following a 2½-hour meeting with Houston Oilers owner Bud Adams and General Manager Mike Holovak, Glanville replied:

"I don't know what happiness is right now. I think it's getting on this elevator right now. Please let me go down by myself."

With that, Glanville, whose job is rumored to be on the line following Houston's loss to Pittsburgh last weekend in the NFL playoff, left his office building late Wednesday.

Holovak would only say the three men had a "nice" meeting and discussed "everything."

After leaving, Glanville traveled to Atlanta. Upon arriving Wednesday night, he refused to comment to Atlanta's WSB-TV that he was in town in connection with the Falcons' vacant coaching job. He said only that the meeting with the Oilers had gone well.

Adams, who ultimately will decide if Glanville will return for the final year of his contract, ended the meeting in order to attend his own birthday party. Adams did not issue a statement.

Holovak said there would be future meetings but declined to say when.

Glanville said he still is coach of the Oilers.

"All we did was have our usual (postseason) meeting and everything went fine," Glanville said.

Houston lost its last three games of the season, including Sundau's AFC wild-card game to Pittsburgh 26-23 in overtime. There had been speculation Glanville would be fired if the Oilers didn't reach the Super Bowl.

University of Houston coach Jack Pardee, who formerly coached at Chicago and Washington in the NFL, has been mentioned as a possible replacement, should the Oilers' job become open.

Pardee says it is a non-issue at this point.

"I have no idea what's going on over there; they've got a coach and I've got a job," Pardee said.

Pardee said he had not been contacted by the Oilers concerning any coaching vacancies.

"There are no what-ifs," Pardee said. "What if the Cougars have a great recruiting year.?"

Pardee and former Texas A&M coach Jackie Sherrill have been mentioned as possible successors to Glanville.

The Oilers already have one coaching vacancy. Secondary coach Nick Saban resigned to become head coach at the University of Toledo. His final day was Tuesday.

Pardee, who led the Cougars to a 9-2 record and No. 14 national ranking, was mentioned as a possible successor to Sherrill at Texas A&M last year.

"Nobody wanted to believe me then, but it was true," Pardee said.

College grid coaches begin to vie for many openings

Associated Press

The post-bowl scramble of football coaches was well under way Wednesday with hirings and interviews going on all over the college football landscape.

Alabama coach Bill Curry was in Lexington, Ky. to talk about the Kentucky job that became available when Jerry Claiborne retired at the end of the season.

Curry, who has had a stormy three-year stay at Alabama, led the school to a 10-2 record and a share of the Southeastern Conference title before losing in the Sugar Bowl 33-25 to Miami. That victory and Colorado's 21-6 loss to Notre Dame in Orange Bowl helped Miami to the national championship under first-year coach Dennis Erickson.

The Orange Bowl victory was Barry Alvarez' last game as an assistant at Notre Dame. He moved to Wisconsin, taking over for fired Don Morton, whose teams went 6-27 in three years.

Alvarez immediately hired two assistants, naming Dan McCarney as defensive coordinator and adding Bernie Wyatt to the staff. Both were assistants at Iowa with Alvarez, who coached there on Hayden Fry's staff for eight years before moving to Notre Dame three years ago.

Florida welcomed back alumnus Steve Spurrier, who won the Heisman Trophy there as a quarterback in 1966, to rebuild its program. When Spurrier took the job, it opened the post at Duke where assistant Barry Wilson took over for his old boss.

Reeves worried after win

DENVER (AP) — The Denver Broncos soundly whipped Pittsburgh 34-7 in the regular season and that has Broncos coach Dan Reeves worried as the teams head to a weekend rematch in the NFL playoffs.

"The biggest concern I have is when you beat a team early in the year, sometimes you don't take that team seriously enough when you play again," Reeves said. "I don't think there's any way we'll overlook this team. These are the playoffs. It's sudden death.

"They're playing with a lot of confidence. We've lost three of four. But this is a new season and we've got to move forward. If Pittsburgh has an emotional edge, then I've underestimated my team. As hard as we've worked since July, if we're not emotional for this game, then I've got the wrong kind of players."

Although the Broncos whipped Pittsburgh earlier in the season, the Steelers appear to be the hotter team.

The Steelers finished the regular season at 9-7, but won five of their last six games, then beat Houston 26-23 in overtime in the AFC wild-card game on Sunday.

The Broncos (11-5) lost three of their last four regular-season games after clinching the AFC West title in Week 12.

The Broncos have played remarkably consistent football all season, being competitive in every outing and sustaining three of their losses in the closing seconds. Solid defense and a potent rushing attack have been the team's hallmarks, with quarterback John Elway taking a more subordinate role.

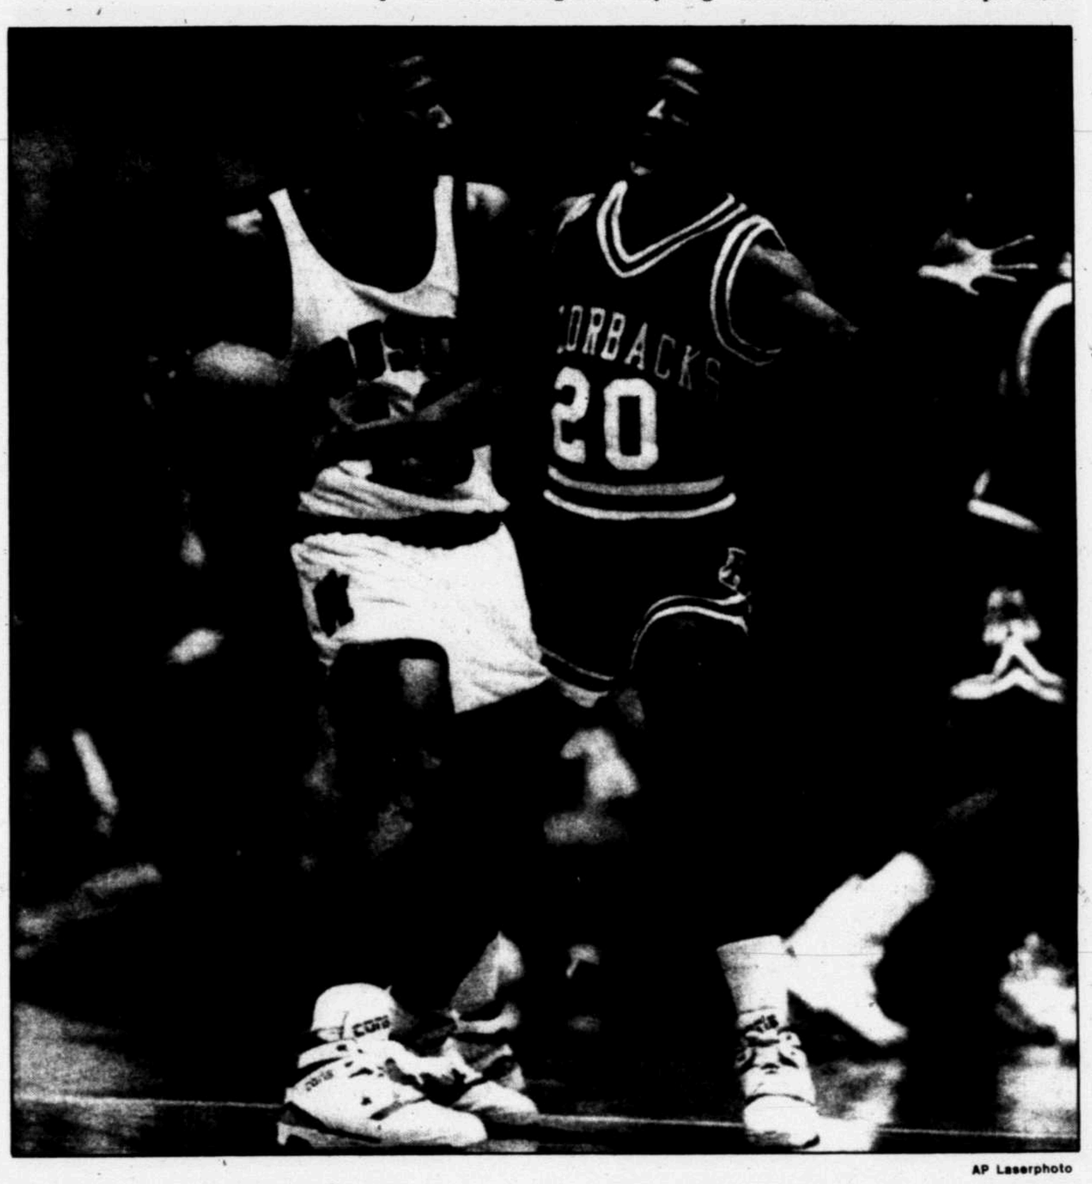

Pittsburgh, by contrast, has been erratic. When the Steelers lost their first two outings by a combined score of 92-10, many people wrote them off. But they bounced back to win four of six before losing to Denver. After a 20-0 shutout loss to Chicago, the Steelers won five of six to close out the season.

Coach Chuck Noll attributes the team's gradual improvement to "getting people healthy and our younger guys more comfortable with what we're doing. (Quarterback) Bubby Brister has been a real leader for us. He's a guy who has stepped in and taken control."

Meanwhile, in the Denver Broncos' team meeting room on Wednesday were the AFC championship trophies the Broncos earned in 1986 and 1987. Conspicuous by its absence was a stack of money.

The last time Reeves tried a motivational tool for his team, he displayed dollar bills prior to Denver's 1984 playoff game with the Pittsburgh Steelers. The heavily favored Broncos bowed 24-17 at home.

This time Reeves is taking a different tack.

Arkansas' Arlyn Bowers pressures Houston guard Derrick Daniels during Tuesday's game.

Hogs slop past tough Coogs

Associated Press

Falling behind by 18 points in the first half was just what 14th ranked Arkansas needed to get ready for the Southwest Conference basketball season.

The Razorbacks, down 31-13 in the first half, rallied behind Todd Day and Arlyn Bowers to an 82-78 victory over Houston Wednesday night in the first SWC game for both teams.

"I believe after this we can win anywhere on the road," Bowers said. "We got fired up and just got things going our way."

Getting out of their 18-point hole was a great confidence builder, Coach Nolan Richardson said.

"I told them at the half that we got down by 18 to somebody and then came back on them," Richardson said. "In the second half, we got our confidence back."

SWC

Day didn't score a point until the final 6:29 of the first half, and then he sank 15 to rally the Hogs to a 41-40 halftime lead.

They never trailed again, although the Cougars made another charge in the closing minutes, cutting Arkansas' lead to 79-78 with 2:21 to play.

But Day, who led Arkansas with 22 points, hit a three-point basket with 1:23 to go and the Cougars didn't score another point.

"We knew we had to start penetrating and start dishing it off to get our shots," Bowers said.

Bowers got three key steals and scored 14 points.

"They just didn't see me, I'm so small and I anticipated the passes," he said.

Richardson said Bowers' steals turned the game around.

"I think he was the key," Richardson said. "He gave his heart to this game. I knew we had to control the guard play and I talked to him about that."

Arkansas hit three of its first 18 shots while the Cougars jumped to their early lead.

"They came out playing like it was for the national championship," Richardson said. "In the first 10 minutes, Houston was the most awesome team we've seen."

Arkansas outscored Houston 28-9 over the final minutes of the first half and hit the first eight points of the second half.

Niners haven't forgotten defeat

NFC

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Two years have passed since Anthony Carter and the Minnesota Vikings made Candlestick Park their personal playground.

It doesn't seem that long ago to Ronnie Lott, one of the defensive backs burned by Carter in the Vikings' 36-24 playoff upset of San Francisco.

The 49ers safety would sooner recall Carter's playoff-record 10 receptions for 227 yards than he would San Francisco's 34-9 victory in the rematch last January, when the 49ers caught almost as many of Wade Wilson's passes (two) as did Carter (three).

"I always remember the bad things," Lott said Wednesday as the 49ers held their only full-pads workout prior to Saturday's NFC playoff game.

The 49ers haven't had many bad things happen to them this season to use as motivation for the Vikings game. A year ago, on the other hand, they could point to the humiliation of a year earlier, to a rocky regular season that produced six losses, and to the controversy surrounding Bill Walsh's decision to play Steve Young at quarterback instead of Joe Montana.

Montana was so pumped up that day that he made one of the two speeches he's ever given to his teammates.

Like 1987, San Francisco goes into this game fresh from the league's best regular season, a 14-2 record, riding high and with no major injuries. That has Lott fretting.

"I don't remember much about the (Minnesota) game last year," he said. "To remember the worst, that's how you prepare yourself. I remember that in the '87 game there were a couple of times we had a chance to turn the game around and we didn't."

Even though the Vikings were 10-6 this year with seven players selected for the Pro Bowl, the 49ers are focusing more on what Minnesota's offensive weapons are capable of than what they accomplished this year.

Carter had 65 receptions for four touchdowns and a 16.4-yard average this season, but those totals were surpassed by San Francisco's Jerry Rice and John Taylor. In fact, the receiving trio of Rice, Taylor and tight end Brent Jones had 182 catches, 3,060 yards and 31 touchdowns to 142 catches, 2,266 yards and eight touchdowns for Carter and Viking teammates Hassan Jones and Steve Jordan.

Herschel Walker finished the year with 915 yards rushing, but he was not a focal point of the Minnesota offense and his 3.7-yard average was his lowest in seven professional seasons.

San Francisco coach George Seifert, who was defensive coordinator for the last two playoff meetings with the Vikings, knows Carter is a clutch player in the postseason. And he knows this is Walker's first appearance in the NFL playoffs.

"We have to be alert to the fact they could all of a sudden use Walker a lot," Seifert said. "And Carter is the guy who broke our back in the past.

"I don't think you're ever going to stop guys like Carter or Walker. We just want to hold them in check."

College grid playoffs may be far away

AP Sports Writer

Analysis

It's time to debate the issue of a college football playoff again. On one thing, however, the pros and cons agree: It won't happen soon.

"I can't say it won't happen," Jim Brock, executive vice president of the Cotton Bowl, said. "Right now, I hope it won't. Personally, I don't see it happening in the '90s."

Proponents say a playoff will mean millions of dollars more for the schools, the exorcism of corporate sponsorship from postseason, and power for the schools over their own destinies. Not to mention, being able to settle once and for all: Who's No. 1.

"It's not right around the corner, but discussion has grown each year," David Ogrean, director of the College Football Association's television committee, said.

Opponents point to drawbacks that include destruction of a national tradition, the postseason bowls, and the transformation of a sort of postseason football Mardis Gras into all-out warfare among schools.

"The bowls are supposed to be a reward for a good season, not a battlefield," Brock said. "We feel like it's better to have 18 winners instead of just one."

The CFA's television committee has formulated a plan for a 16-team playoff that will incorporate six existing bowls — the Orange, Sugar, Cotton, Citrus, Holiday and Fiesta — in the final three rounds, ending with a championship game on the Saturday before the Super Bowl. The proposal may be made to the CFA membership in June, "but we're not wedded to it," Ogrean said.

"Never, at any time, have we claimed this would be a national championship," Orgrean said, since the Big Ten and Pacific-10 Conferences are not CFA members. "However, I would point out to people that it's been 11 years since a non-CFA team has been No. 1 in either wire service poll."

In 1978, Southern Cal, a Pac-10 member, was United Press International's national champion. Alabama was No. 1 in The Associated Press poll.

Ogrean said motivation for a bowl system is threefold.

First, and perhaps least important to the schools, is the No. 1 question.

"Second is the issue of control," he said. "We're the only sport which doesn't have its own postseason championship, and where, after an entire four-month period, we turn control of our sport over to 18 bowl committees."

If bowl committees are worried about tradition, it's hard to tell from the Sun Bowl. Corporate sponsorship has transformed it into the John Hancock Bowl, and Ogrean said that's a perfect example of losing control.

"We have evidence that the sponsor exerted some influence over the team selection process," he said.

Marc Boehm, information director for the John Hancock Bowl, called that allegation "completely false."

"We have a selection committee of 12 people, and they decide. John Hancock has no influence whatsoever," Boehm said. "One of the things we did when we signed a contract was to assure that we would pick the teams. Sure, they'll voice an opinion, but we pick the teams."

Third, and perhaps most important, is economics. "CBS paid $1 billion for the basketball playoffs," Ogrean said. "The economics of college football is very fragile. A lot of athletic directors are being asked not to go the corporate sponsorship route, but they're being told, 'You'd better balance your budgets, guys.' This could also help a lot of athletic programs keep other, non-revenue-producing sports alive."

While the bowls generate about $50 million a year for the schools, it's estimated that a playoff system might make $75 million. The CFA has figures of its own, but it has not released them yet.

Ogrean said, however, that with some bowls requiring minimum ticket purchases by schools and others paying only around $1 million, "the schools come home with nothing in their pockets."

Syracuse, for example, went to the Hall of Fame Bowl last year and broke even despite its $1 million payout, Ogrean said.

"Oregon decided to go to the Independence Bowl this year even though they were required to buy $400,000 in tickets," Ogrean said. "Because they hadn't been to a bowl game for so long, they felt it would be worth it to their program." The Independence Bowl pays $500,000.

Ogrean and Brock hinted that the first step toward a playoff might involve just two teams. This year, it could have been Miami and Notre Dame, for example. That might have frosted a few folks at Florida State, though. As Brock says: "Who's going to pick them?"

"They try to appease us by making the bowls part of a playoff," Brock said. "Right now, probably the most popular theory is one game following the bowl games in January, and it might be tried one of these days.

"But even that changes the whole nature of the bowls. Now, the teams come to town for a week, do a little sightseeing, relax, have some fun. They celebrate a little bit because they've been rewarded by going to a bowl," Brock said. "But what happens if this is a semifinal to some national championship? The pressure will be incredible, and it's not fun anymore.

"And you tell me: Are the folks from, say, Tennessee, going to come out here, buy tickets, spend a week, if their team may be going on to another game someplace else?"

The officials cried foul but Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim thought the new rule was more than fair. Even Pitt's Paul Evans, an opponent of the six-foul rule, didn't take it personal.

The Big East Conference decided to invoke some new math this season, raising the foul limit from five to six, and it played a big role in No. 1 Syracuse's 80-78 victory over Pitt on Wednesday night. Two of Syracuse's key plays down the stretch came from LeRon Ellis and Billy Owens, who were playing with five fouls apiece.

"The six-foul rule helped us tonight," Boeheim said. "There were some guys tonight who would have had to come out of the game but were able to stay in. Sure, I like the rule."

Evans was one of the biggest opponents of the rule but he refused to blame it for the loss, saying, "It really didn't make that much difference."

Syracuse wasn't the only member of the Top 25 to struggle. Iowa, ranked 20th, was embarrassed at Northern Iowa 77-74, and No. 22 Alabama fell to Vanderbilt 68-67.

Stephen Thompson, who scored 24 points, converted a three-point play with five seconds left after Syracuse rallied from 13 points down and then blew a five-point lead. Derrick Coleman added 23 points and 14 rebounds for the Orangemen (10-0).

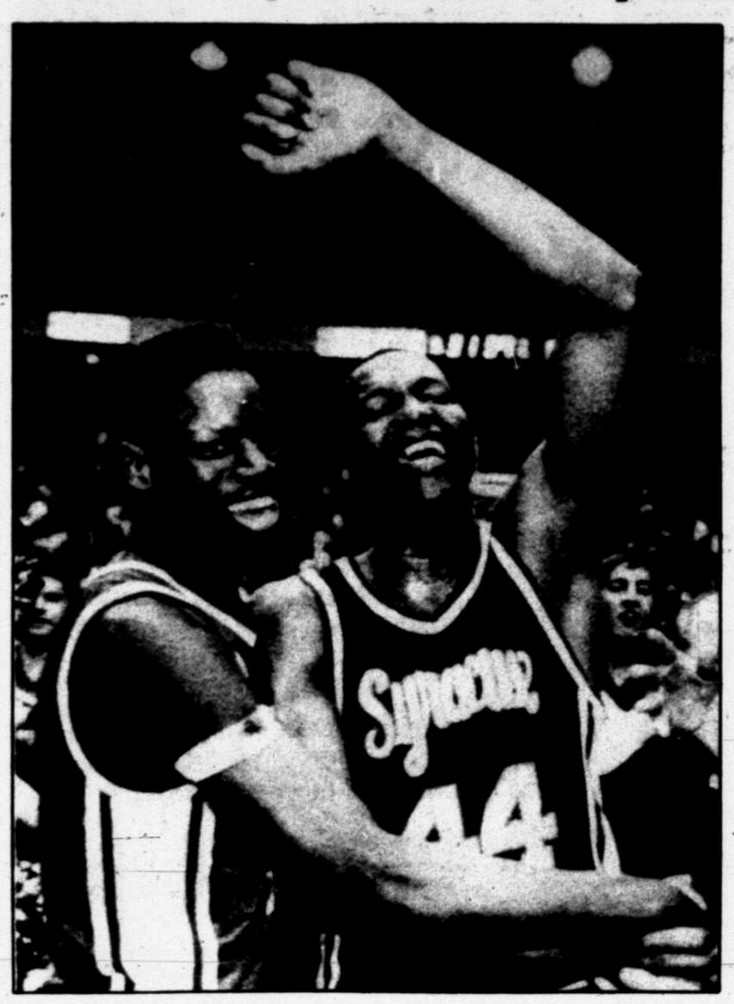

Owens, who missed 15 of his first 18 shots, finished 4-for-22 and didn't score for the first 16 minutes, hit a 3-pointer to slice Pitt's lead to 67-64 and start an 11-point run.

Syracuse blew a 72-67 lead and trailed only 78-77 thanks to Michael Edwards' 3-pointer with 55 seconds left. Pitt (5-6) ran the clock down to 16 seconds before calling a timeout.

With the clock winding down, Jason Matthews drove the lane but Ellis rejected his shot, came up with the ball and fired a midcourt outlet pass to Thompson, who drove in for a thunderous dunk and was fouled for the decisive three-point play.

Matthews led Pitt with 20 points but had only two in the final 19½ minutes. "We were fortunate to come away with a win in this game the way we shot (32 of 86, 37.2 percent)," Boeheim said. "Our bad shooting got us in a hole, but our pressure and our (nine) steals were the key.

"LeRon Ellis made a great block at the end. We kept our big guys back on the block in order to block the drive to the hoop. LeRon laid back to see what everyone else was doing and then made a great block."

No. 6 Oklahoma 101, Alaska-Anchorage 81

Damon Patterson scored 25 points and keyed a 12-0 run in the final four minutes. The Sooners (9-0) had won their first eight games by an average margin of 45.7 points and scored at least 130 points in six of them but the NCAA Division II Seawolves cut Oklahoma's lead to one point three times in the second half.

Alaska-Anchorage trailed 85-76 with 3:36 left when Patterson began a 12-point burst with a three-point play. Patterson's steal and basket with 1:51 left capped the run and gave Oklahoma a 97-76 lead.

Alaska-Anchorage (12-4) outshot Oklahoma 45 percent to 39 and outrebounded the Sooners 54-46. Oklahoma's advantage came at the free-throw line where the Sooners made 31 of 39 to the Seawolves' 12 of 17. Todd Fisher led the Seawolves with 31 points.

No. 10 UNLV 94, Fullerton St. 66

Anderson Hunt scored a career-high 28 points for the second straight game. Hunt scored 17 points in the first half and UNLV (8-2, 3-0 Big West) broke the game open late in the half and won its fifth straight game.

Hunt made 10 of 14 shots, including six of 10 from 3-point range. Two of the 3-pointers came with seven minutes left in the half when UNLV went on a 14-3 spurt to break open a 25-22 game. Mark Hill led Fullerton with 25 points.

"We've still got to do a lot of things better," UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "I don't feel comfortable with a lot of things yet. There's lots of phases of the game we need to get better at."

"I don't know of too many areas they're weak in," countered Fullerton coach John Sneed said. "They run, they shoot, they rebound, they come off the bench. They do everything."

No. 13 Duke 108, The Citadel 69

Phil Henderson scored 29 points and Robert Brickey sparked a second-half run. Duke (9-2) led 46-33 at halftime and began the second half with a 15-0 run that consumed nearly five minutes. Brickey scored seven points in the run and finished with 22. Alaa Abdelnaby added 19 points and 12 rebounds.

Reserve Patrick Elmore scored 21 of his 27 points in the second half for The Citadel. Henderson made 12 of 17 shots as Duke shot 60.8 percent.

No. 15 UCLA 89, Southern Cal 72

Don MacLean scored 35 points and Trevor Wilson added 27 as UCLA posted its eighth consecutive victory over its crosstown rival. UCLA (9-1, 3-0 Pac-10) opened a 35-20 lead in the first half and led 45-34 at the intermission.

After a sluggish opening five minutes in the second half, UCLA's fast break, led by Wilson, MacLean and Mitchell Butler, gave the Bruins a 76-58 lead that reached 84-62 with four minutes left. USC got 27 points from Ronnie Coleman.

No. 17 La Salle 63, Temple 62

Lionel Simmons scored 23 points and made two free throws with 11 seconds left as La Salle ended Temple's 27-game home winning streak. Temple's Mark Macon had an opportunity to tie the game with one second left but missed his second free throw.

Northern Iowa 77, Iowa 74

Reserve Brad Hill hit two 3-point baskets and teammate Cedrick McCullough forced a key turnover as Northern Iowa rallied in the final two minutes to upset Iowa before the largest basketball crowd in the state's history.

A crowd of 22,797 in Northern Iowa's UNI-Dome saw the Panthers come back with a 10-0 run after blowing an 11-point lead

Big East unites to nip Prop 42

NEW YORK (AP) — To protest what he considered the unfairness of Proposal 42, John Thompson rose from the Georgetown bench and strode across the floor of the Capital Centre last Jan. 14, just as the Hoyas were to play Boston College.

He also boycotted a game at Providence before returning Jan. 21 for a home game with Connecticut.

Now, the rest of the nine-school Big East Conference is working together to try to stop implementation of the academic eligibility rule.

"I had a grave concern that people who deserved an opportunity were going to be denied that opportunity without any flexibility or ability to appeal," Thompson said. "Education institutions were abandoning their own professionals — deans of admission and guidance counselors — in interest of a rule which had no tolerance for individual differences."

Discussion of Proposal 42 has been tabled for a year; meantime, Proposition 48 has been fully enforced.

Prop 48, now Bylaw 5-1-(j), calls for any student-athlete who failed to maintain a 2.0 average in a core curriculum and get a 700 on the SAT or a 15 on the ACT to sit out the first year of eligibility. However, the student would still be able to receive a sports scholarship.

Proposal 42 would maintain the same standards on core curriculum and the entrance exams, but it would not allow the student to accept any financial aid.

When the NCAA's annual convention opens next week in Dallas, Prop 42 will again be a major topic of discussion. But this time, Thompson is not alone.

Big East athletic directors voted in December to sponsor legislation to rescind or delay the implementation of Proposal 42 until a study currently under way on Proposition 48 is finished.

"Proposal 42 is scheduled to go into effect next August and there will be three pieces of legislation about it introduced in Dallas,' St. John's athletic director John Kaiser said Wednesday.

"The first is from the President's Commission and that would allow partial qualifiers to get aid from the institution based on need," he said. "The next is sponsored by the Big East and supported by St. John's and that would call for rescinding Proposal 42 and to remain under the current standards of Proposition 48.

Coghlan returns to racing

NEW YORK (AP) — Eamonn Coghlan, king of the indoor milers when he announced his retirement in December 1988, has no pretensions of regaining his throne now that he is returning to competition.

Coghlan, 37, announced Wednesday that he will end his brief retirement, but that he did not want to endure the pressure that can accompany running in elite-class races.

"My time of chasing world records and Olympic medals is out of the question," he said.

Coghlan owns the world indoor mile record of 3 minutes, 49.78 seconds, set in 1983 at East Rutherford, N.J. He barely missed medals in the 1976 and 1980 Olympics, finishing fourth in the 1,500 meters at Montreal and fourth in the 5,000 meters at Moscow.

His plans for now don't include running an indoor mile this season, although that could change, he said.

At present, he plans 3,000-meter races in the Millrose Games at New York on Feb. 2, the Meadowlands Invitational at East Rutherford, N.J., on Feb. 9, the Los Angeles Times Games on Feb. 16, and the Mobil Indoor Championships at New York on Feb. 23. He'll then go to Europe for a series of races.

Lakers post yet another blowout

Associated Press

Orlando Woolridge is performing some magic again and the Los Angeles Lakers are rolling again.

The Lakers, called "the worst 20-6 team ever" by Coach Pat Riley a week ago, have had blowout victories over conference rivals Golden State and Denver since then.

Woolridge, a reserve forward who missed the first 21 games of the season after knee surgery, scored 46 points in the two victories, including 24 on 11-for-13 shooting in Wednesday night's 114-98 decision over the Nuggets.

Magic Johnson had 27 points and James Worthy had 15 points and 13 rebounds for the Lakers.

"We weren't getting enough movement and the Nuggets were able to swarm James and Magic," Riley said. "We needed another scorer and Orlando's playing very well right now."

Woolridge said a position change from power forward to small forward has improved his game.

"Earlier this season, I told the coach that I wanted to play more at the '3' position (small forward)," the 6-foot-9 Woolridge said. "In my seven years in the league before I came here, that's the position I played. Now I'm able to do the things I do most naturally."

Denver, No. 1 in the NBA in scoring average with 116.8 per game, was held to 39 points in the second half on 14-for-48 shooting, 29.2 percent.

Coach Doug Moe called the Nuggets' performance "the worst game we've played in weeks. The Lakers didn't play well in the first half, but we let them off the hook. We just let too many opportunities go by."

Denver made 12 of 15 shots to start the second quarter and took a 55-44 lead with 3:27 left in the first half. Johnson and Worthy then scored five points each during a 14-4 spurt that closed the quarter, leaving the Nuggets with a 59-58 halftime lead.

The Lakers trailed only 76-74 with 2:16 left in the third quarter despite making only three of 18 field-goal attempts at the start of the second half.

Los Angeles then took control of the game as Byron Scott scored six of his 17 points during a 10-0 run that finished the period.

Denver, which got 22 points from Walter Davis, got no closer than eight points in the fourth quarter. The Lakers held Alex English, averaging 16.4, to two points on 1-for-8 shooting.

Spurs 103, 76ers 94

San Antonio won its 12th consecutive home game by defeating Philadelphia and pulled within one of last season's 21 victories.

David Robinson and Terry Cummings each scored 22 points for the Spurs, Willie Anderson had 21 and Maurice Cheeks a season-high 19 against his former team.

San Antonio led 92-90 with three minutes to play before Anderson scored the next seven points for the Spurs, giving them a 99-92 lead with 29 seconds left.

NBA

The 76ers, who led by 16 points in the first half, got 24 points and 13 rebounds from Charles Barkley. Mike Gminski had 18 points.

Jazz 119, Sonics 108

Utah handed Seattle its second straight home defeat as Karl Malone and Thurl Bailey combined for 27 points in the fourth quarter.

Malone had 14 of his 36 and Bailey 13 of his 22 in the final 12 minutes. Bailey's three-point play gave the Jazz a 105-99 lead and his two free throws with 2:01 left made it 112-105.

Xavier McDaniel led the Sonics with 25 points, Dale Ellis added 23 and Michael Cage had 17 points and 19 rebounds.

Celtics 120, Bullets 101

Boston stretched its winning streak to four games and Washington's road losing streak to 11 as Larry Bird led a balanced scoring attack with 20 points.

The Celtics scored the first six points, never trailed and led by at least five for the final 44 minutes. The biggest lead was 108-87 with 5:17 left in the game.

Pistons 84, Clippers 80

Isiah Thomas scored six of his 29 points during a 17-4 fourth-quarter run that lifted Detroit over Los Angeles.

Thomas, who also had 12 assists, scored 20 points in the second half and 12 in the fourth quarter. James Edwards scored 15 of his 16 points in the second half for Detroit.

Bulls 93, Cavaliers 87

Chicago beat Cleveland for its fourth consecutive victory as Michael Jordan scored 38 points and sparked an 11-1 run in the last three minutes.

Jordan had five points, an assist and a key steal down the stretch as the Bulls overcame an 86-82 deficit.

Rockets 117, Pacers 103

Houston snapped a four-game losing streak and won for only the third time in 11 games as Buck Johnson scored a career-high 27 points on his 26th birthday.

Bucks 110, Nets 96

Milwaukee squandered an 18-point halftime lead before Ricky Pierce helped beat New Jersey with 12 of his 32 points in the last four minutes.

The Bucks led 56-38 at halftime, but the Nets rallied with a 30-12 run.

Orange Bowl wins ratings war with Irish luck

NEW YORK (AP) — The Orange Bowl outdrew the Sugar Bowl by 2½-1. Why?

NBC had the luck of the Irish and ABC didn't.

"Notre Dame, for a host of reasons, is one of a kind. It stands alone and stands apart in a lot of ways from other schools," Ken Schanzer, executive vice president of NBC Sports, said. "That has to do with the history and nature of the program. It's popularity is preeminent over other colleges and extends beyond the boundaries of football fans."

The Orange Bowl, with top-ranked Colorado playing Notre Dame, drew an 18.5 rating for NBC. The Sugar Bowl, with eventual national champion Miami playing against Alabama, got a 7.4 rating for ABC.

"We expected to be dominant," Schanzer said. "You don't spend an enormous amount of time looking at relative ratings. We look at what we anticipated for our game and this was right in the ballpark."

Dennis Swanson, president of ABC Sports, declined to talk about the ratings as did other ABC Sports executives, spokeswoman Denise Bomberger said.

NBC had the Hall of Fame Bowl and the Fiesta Bowl leading into the Orange Bowl. ABC also had a tripleheader, starting with the Citrus Bowl and continuing with the Rose Bowl. CBS had the Cotton Bowl in midafternoon.

"We had terrific matchups and we had the glamour game of the day, which helps," Schanzer said. "I think there is a certain pulling effect by being the place where the No. 1 team is playing, and they were playing the number-one drawing team — Notre Dame."

Auburn beat Ohio State 31-14 in the Hall of Fame Bowl (9.3 overnight rating) opposite Illinois' 31-21 victory over Virginia in the Citrus Bowl (7.0). Then came Tennessee's 31-27 victory over Arkansas in the Cotton Bowl (7.2), Florida State's 41-17 victory over Nebraska in the Fiesta Bowl (8.4) and Southern California's 17-10 victory over Michigan in Bo Schembechler's last Rose Bowl (15.1).

"We started off with two schools with a national reputation, particularly Ohio State," Schanzer said. "We had a terrific matchup in the Fiesta Bowl, which was opposed by a great matchup. The Michigan-USC game is as good a matchup as the Rose Bowl can have."

And then came the Irish, who this season had all but one game on national network or cable.

"If you look at the ratings this year in telecasts during the season on both of the in-season packages (CBS and ABC), the games in which Notre Dame appeared were the stongest-rated games," Schanzer said.

The competition among the bowls for teams is great.

Third-stringer sits and waits...still

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Hey, buddy, want a hot tip on Saturday's Vikings-49ers playoff game?

It's not the point spread or the over-under. It's much more of a sure thing.

Bet on Rich Gannon's uniform staying wrinkle-free.

"I haven't stepped on the field in 16 weeks," said Minnesota's third-string quarterback — the so-called quarterback of the future. "I know that's not going to change in Week 17."

In three NFL seasons, Gannon has thrown 21 passes.

"I can understand that it's almost impossible for a rookie to come in and be successful," he said. "But I'm not a rookie anymore."

Gannon looks at the season just completed by Green Bay's Don Majkowski and shakes his head.

In 1987, Gannon was drafted in the fourth round by New England, two spots before the Vikings' choice. Minnesota general manager Mike Lynn wanted him so badly that he traded for Gannon within a week.

Six rounds later, Green Bay took Majkowski, who in 1989 passed for 4,318 yards and 27 touchdowns, almost led the Packers into the playoffs and became known as "Majik" for his penchant for pulling out games in the final moments.

"Given different circumstances, that could have been me," Gannon said. "He's certainly not a better athlete than I am. He certainly doesn't have a stronger arm.

"I don't want to take anything away from his season, because he's had a great season. But I just know I can do those kinds of things. I just haven't gotten an opportunity here."

Coach Jerry Burns said that's more than Gannon's ego talking.

"I agree with him," Burns said. "He's very smart. He's a competitor. He's got a quick release. He's got a strong arm. He throws the ball well. We just haven't had the opportunity to play him."

Asked if he felt sorry for Gannon, the coach said: "No, I feel sorry for myself that I can't get a chance to get him going. I'd like an opportunity to see him play. But how do I get it?"

It was suggested that Burns could start him Saturday in San Francisco.

"Yeah."

At this point, Gannon doesn't think he should replace Wade Wilson in the starting lineup. But he thinks he has more to offer than 34-year-old backup Tommy Kramer, whose arm strength and mobility don't compare with those of Gannon, who just turned 24. Kramer survives with knowledge, anticipation and guile, traits that can only be acquired through game competition.

"Or at least practice," Gannon said. "The second-stringer gets to work out with the offense. I have to run the scout team" which duplicates an opponent's plays against the Vikings defense.

"I can't come back next year for a fourth year with the scout team," Gannon said, but he may have little choice.

Burns and Lynn said they would protect against Gannon gaining free agency by not being included on Minnesota's list of protected players. And though Gannon is in the final year of a contract that pays him about $150,000 this season, he knows no team will sign him as a true free agent because that team would have to compensate the Vikings with high draft choices.

Besides, Lynn said, "We'll match any offer he gets. He's my guy. I think our quarterback of the future is Rich Gannon."

Lynn denies that the Vikings are still interested in Dallas' Steve Walsh, a St. Paul native for whom Lynn has shown undying admiration.

"Don't believe everything you hear," Gannon said. "No one thought (the trade for) Herschel Walker was possible, either. But, sure enough, it happened."

He isn't looking forward to negotiating a new contract with Lynn.

"He says I'm the quarterback of the future," Gannon said, "but I know that when I go into negotiations, I'm going to have a hard time. He's going to say, 'You're the third-string quarterback; take it or leave it.' "

Would Gannon leave it?

"I'm not saying I'm stubborn enough to do something like that, but, yes, it's an option," Gannon said. "I've saved up enough money to go to law school for three years."

Gannon isn't ready to settle for being the lawyer of the future, although he has tired of being the quarterback of the future.

"I want to be the quarterback of the present," he said.

"You have to believe that you can beat someone at home when you get them down by 18," Houston's Chris Morris said. "We felt we had a spot in the (SWC) tournament sewed up if we won tonight. It's a big letdown."

Carl Herrera led Houston with 23 points and 16 rebounds. Smith added 16 and Craig Upchurch had 15. Lenzie Howell scored 16 for the Hogs.

Texas A&M 76, Baylor 69

Guards Tony Milton and Lynn Suber scored 24 points each to pace the Texas A&M Aggies to a 76-69 win over the Baylor Bears.

The game opened conference play for both teams. The Aggies are 8-7 and 1-0 in conference, while the loss drops the Bears to 7-4 and 0-1 in conference.

Texas A&M coach Shelby Metcalf praised Milton's performance, saying it was "his usual great game."

TCU 63, SMU 61

Tony Edmond hit a driving layup with two seconds left on and the Texas Christian Horned Frogs captured their Southwest Conference opener with a 63-61 victory over the Southern Methodist Mustangs.

TCU improved its overall record to 7-4 in the victory before 1,620 fans in Moody Coliseum. SMU dropped to 4-6 and 0-2 in SWC play.

SMU trailed by as many as 12 points in the second half before Gerald Lewis tied it at 61 with a three-point shot.

TCU called time out then worked the ball to Edmond, who drove past two Mustangs to score.

"They tried to double team me but I just cut to the basket," Edmond said. "I was thinking about getting fouled, so I went for the lay-up. I wasn't worried about getting it blocked because the worst thing that could have happened was for us to go into overtime."

Edmond and Michael Strickland, who hit four three-point baskets, each scored 12 points for the Horned Frogs.

Rod Hampton scored a season high 17 points for the Mustangs while John Colborne added 12.

SMU outrebounded the Frogs 33-20 and outshot them 53 percent to 48 percent but suffered 17 turnovers because of a furious TCU fullcourt press.

Detroit 77, Rice 75

Freshman guard Dwayne Kelly scored 15 points and senior guard Bill Wood added 12 as the University of Detroit scored a school record 10 three-point field goals in their 77-75 victory over Rice.

The win evens the Titans' season record to 5-5. The Owls lost for the first time in five starts in Houston, bringing their record also to 5-5.

Rice's Brent Scott scored 16 points for the Owls and teammate Dana Hardy added 14.

ACU loses big

KEARNEY, Neb. (AP) — Scott Somerhalder and Brian Nielsen scored 21 points apiece to lead Kearney State to a 99-75 win over Abilene Christian of Texas.

The score was tied 6-6 early in the contest Wednesday night, but the Antelope scored 10 unanswered points to take the lead. Kearney built that lead to 53-33 at the half.

Also in double figures for Kearney were Brian Kissinger with 14 points and Sam Somerhalder with 10.

Rick Rigsbee led the Wildcats with 18 points.

COACH—

Other assistants were also on the move.

Tim Hundley, defensive coordinator at Oregon State for six years, resigned to become the defensive coordinator at Utah. He is the second assistant to leave the State program, following secondary coach John Neal who left for the defensive coordinator's job at the University of Pacific.

Maryland filled the quarterback coach slot, hiring Jerry Eisaman to succeed Steve Asman, who was recently named head coach at Northern Arizona.

It will be Eisaman's second time around at Maryland, where he coached quarterbacks from 1972-1981 on Claiborne's staff. He left to follow Claiborne to Kentucky.

Former Cornell quarterback Jim Hofner, now coaching quarterbacks at Tennessee, is among the candidates for the head job at his alma mater following ther resignation after one year of Jack Fouts. Athletic director Laing Kennedy said the original list of 100 applicants had been pared to 16 and that Hofner was one of about nine people he interviewed for the job last week.

Also on the interview trail is Dick Steinberg, newly-appointed general manager of the NFL New York Jets.

Oil at $22.50

From Staff and Wire Reports

Crude oil futures continued higher Wednesday as refiners put strong demands on supplies, but slipped slightly in early trading today.

The contract for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the main U.S. grade of crude oil, rose 79 cents to $23.68 per 42-gallon barrel, adding to Tuesday's increase of $1.07. Contracts for March, April and May delivery rose by 56 cents, 45 cents and 41 cents, respectively.

However, oil priced dipped 15 cents by mid-morning today, as posted priced continued at $22.50

The settlement price for the February contract was the highest since the near-month contract closed at $24.65 on April 20, according to market analysts.

Prices of wholesale unleaded gasoline and home heating oil also extended recent gains on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Unleaded gasoline futures, which staged an unusual winter rally on Tuesday, moved up again. Gasoline prices typically are more apt to strengthen during the peak summer driving season. The February contract added 1.54 cents to Tuesday's surge of 3.94 cents and finished at 67.23 cents a gallon. The March through May contracts ended with gains of 1.66 cents, 1.76 cents and 1.65 cents.

Heating oil for February delivery rose 0.81 cent to 78.20 cents a gallon, bringing the increase over the past two sessions to 3.95 cents. Heating oil contracts for March delivery jumped 1.47 cents while the April and May contracts each added 1.16 cents.

Strong fundamental demand plus speculative buying combined to prolong the rally in the energy futures pits, said Larry Lawrence, manager of options and technical analysis at Elders Futures Inc.

He said refiners rushed to buy crude because of the wide margin between crude and refined petroleum products and on the assumption that prices for refined products could continue to go higher.

Rumors of possible cutbacks in OPEC production also may have lent support to crude prices, Lawrence said. The reports of reduced oil output by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were not confirmed.

Senator Albert Gore and Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp announced plans Wednesday for a national conference on "clean coal." The March conference which will be hosted by Gore and Sharp will be in Ohio.

Sharp announces Ohio 'clean coal' conference

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp and U.S. Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tennessee, teamed up to promote the use of natural gas, especially as a fuel in power plants to reduce coal emissions.

Sharp announced Wednesday that he is setting up a March conference in Ohio to bring together leaders in the natural gas and coal industries with environmentalists to discuss ways to help clean up the air.

Gore will be the keynote speaker at the conference. A specific date and location has not been determined.

The conference will focus on "co-firing," a process which burns natural gas with coal in power plants in order to reduce toxic emissions put out by coal-fired burners.

Sharp said the increased use of natural gas means more jobs for Texans — the state meets one-third of the nation's natural gas demand — and cleaner air for all.

Gore said environmentally safe technologies must be encouraged to confront problems such as global warming, depletion of the ozone layer and acid rain.

"We know the solution to all those problems is increased use of natural gas," said Gore. "Natural gas will indeed play a significantly larger role in America's future."

Roger the dodger

LOS ANGELES — General Motors Corp. Chairman Roger Smith carefully dodged a barrage of questions about plant closings and the documentary "Roger & Me," which paints him as a greedy villain, at the unveiling of GM's new electric car prototype Wednesday.

Smith said he has not seen the film, an award-winning, biting comic look by journalist Michael Moore at the devastation caused when GM closed plants in Flint, Mich., the birthplace of General Motors, and shifted work to non-union, low-wage factories in Mexico.

But he declared the movie makes fun of poor people.

When the subject came up during the conference at Los Angeles-based Hughes Aircraft Co., a GM subsidiary, he said: "I'm not much for sick humor, and I don't like things that take advantage of poor people's problems" and quickly changed the subject back to the electric car.

When a USA Today reporter brought up the movie again, he said he would give a "film review" afterward.

It was decade of bust for banking

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most of the 1980s were boom years for the economy as a whole, but they were a bust for banks and savings institutions which failed in numbers not seen in half a century.

Capping a decade of failure for financial institutions, savings and loans in 1989 collapsed at the highest rate ever and bank closings fell only slightly short of a post-Depression high, regulators said Wednesday.

Government seizure of thrifts in Texas and New Mexico on Dec. 21 boosted the tally of failed S&Ls to 328, far above the previous high of 277 in 1938.

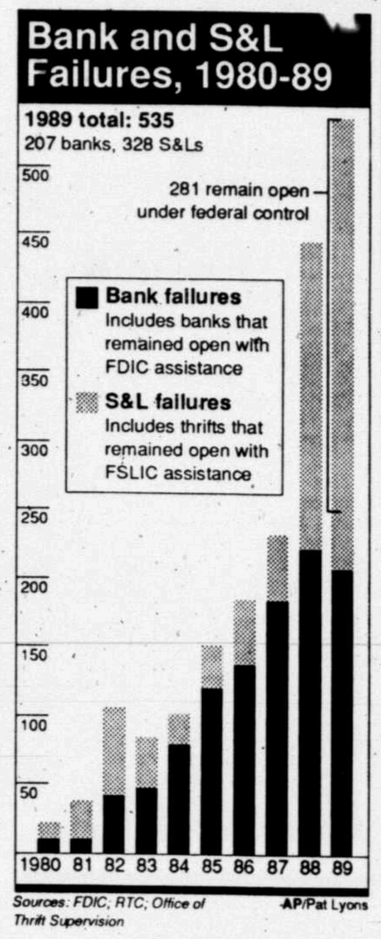

The Resolution Trust Corp., the agency created Aug. 9 to carry out President Bush's S&L bailout, took control of 318 failed thrifts, disposing of 37 of them by year's end. The old Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. dealt with 10 S&Ls.

Meanwhile, a commercial bank failure in California and another in New York on Dec. 20 pushed the total to 207 for the year, down from a post-Depression record of 221 in 1988, according to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The decline, although small, was the first since 1977 when six banks failed, a drop from 17 the previous year.

Academic experts and analysts point to a number of factors behind the soaring failure rate in the 1980s, some of which are still present as the financial system begins a new decade.

Quick fix seen for thrifts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key member of Congress praises the Bush administration's emphasis on speedily selling real estate from failed savings institutions, but others worry about the effect on shaky real estate markets.

The administration's strategic plan for conducting the savings and loan bailout, released Wednesday, instructs regulators to begin selling real estate and other assets from insolvent S&Ls even before the government officially closes the institutions.

Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn., chairman of a House task force which is monitoring the S&L bailout, praised the approach.

"Procrastinating is much more of a risk because you have to pay to manage it (the real estate). The stuff doesn't get better with age. It's not like red wine," Vento said.

Oil companies expected to spend more in 1990s

DENVER — Petroleum Information's survey of 180 oil and gas exploration and producing firms indicates that 1990 will be a year of increased spending for drilling and production-related activities, the company said.

Of the companies responding to PI's survey, taken in the fourth quarter of 1989, 41 percent said they budgeted increases in production-related expenditures for 1990, while 20 percent said their expenditures would decline. More spending for exploratory drilling and completion would be done by 38 percent, while only 13 percent said their budgets declined.

Of major integrated companies, 40 percent said their spending on acquisition of producing properties would be a high priority in 1990, the same percentage as for 1989. However, 51 percent of the majors surveyed said exploratory drilling would be a high priority in 1990, up from only 13 percent in 1989.

The number of independent operators ranking exploratory drilling as a high priority also rose. Of large independents, 58 percent ranked exploration a high priority, compared to 43 percent a year ago. Medium-sized independents ranking exploration high rose to 44 percent from 36 percent, and the number of small independents rose to 22 percent from 15 percent.

It appeared that spending for reserves enhancement projects would also rise, at least by the majors and large independents. Of the majors, 50 percent said such projects would be a high priority, up from 38 percent in 1989, while 43 percent of the large independents ranked reserves high, up from 21 percent.

PI noted that the surveyed companies indicated there would be little increase in oil and gas lease acquisition, as 28 percent of the companies said it would be a high priority in 1990, up slightly from 27 percent a year ago.

GM unveils new electric car

Runs twice as far on a charge

LOS ANGELES (AP) — General Motors Corp. unveiled a prototype electric car it says outpaces some gas-burning sports cars and runs twice as far between charges than previous electric models.

The two-seater Impact, which tapers at the rear like a Citroen, can travel 120 miles at 55 mph before recharging and zooms from 0 to 60 mph in eight seconds, GM Chairman Roger Smith said at a news conference Wednesday.

"The public perceives electric vehicles as golf carts," Smith said. "The Impact absolutely shatters that perception."

GM showed a film in which the Impact outpaced a Mazda Miata and a Nissan 300 ZX on a level-ground acceleration test.

John Zwerner, GM's executive director of advanced product engineering, said the prototype has never been crash-tested or passed other government tests and would go into production only if extensive tests find a market for it.

Boasting a top speed of 75 mph, the Impact can be charged halfway in as little as half an hour and almost fully recharged in six hours, GM said. Most electric vehicles need up to 12 hours for a full recharging.

GM Chairman Roger Smith poses beside the firm's revolutionary new electric car unveiled Wednesday in Los Angeles.

Electric cars are virtually non-polluting and are under close scrutiny in Los Angeles by environmental officials who are enacting stringent air quality rules.

He declined to reveal how much GM had spent developing the vehicle or to estimate a price, although he said it would have to be competitive in price with existing, internal combustion-powered cars.

A person driving a gas-powered car in Los Angeles 10,000 miles a year might now spend about $30 a month on fuel and another $10 on maintenance, Smith said.

Oil price loses

Oil futures prices turned lower after rising sharply the first two trading days of the new year.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, February contracts for West Texas Intermediate were at $23.53 in midmorning trading, down 15 cents from Wednesday's close. The contract climbed 79 cents Wednesday to close at $23.68.

Unleaded gasoline futures, which staged an unusual winter rally on Tuesday, moved up again. The February contract added 1.54 cents to Tuesday's surge of 3.94 cents and finished at 67.23 cents a gallon.

Heating oil for February delivery rose 0.81 cent to 78.20 cents a gallon, bringing the increase over the past two sessions to 3.95 cents.

Analysts credit strong demand and speculative buying for the recent rally in energy futures.

Intervention pushes dollar lower

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against major foreign currencies in moderate European trading today, pushed lower by central bank intervention to stem the dollar's rise. Gold prices were slightly lower.

The West German central bank, the Bundesbank, and the Swiss National Bank confirmed that they had sold dollars, buying up their own currencies.

Exchange Rates

- 1.7165 West German marks

- 1,285.50 Italian lire
- 1.1627 Canadian dollars

London dealers said the Bank of England was selling dollars for Japanese yen on behalf of the Bank of Japan. The Bank of England refused to comment.

The dollar soared in trading earlier in Asia and dealers said the currency would have gone higher if the Japanese central bank had not intervened.

Despite the rally, European traders said the dollar's downward trend would continue.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 1.80 yen to a closing 145.20 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a lower rate of 144.65 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.6170 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6080 late Wednesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $395.60 a troy ounce, unchanged from late Wednesday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $394.95.

Silver rose in London to a bid price of $5.19 a troy ounce, up from Wednesday's $5.16.

Stocks slip from record high

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market made little progress Wednesday, bogging down after its sharp rise to record levels in the opening session of 1990.

Stocks of a good many industrial companies whose fortunes are closely tied to the business cycle gained ground. But energy and precious metals issues came under pressure.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 56.95 points Tuesday to its first close above 2,800, slipped back 0.42 to 2,809.73.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 887 up, 724 down and 409 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 192.33 million shares, up from 162.07 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 232.01 million shares.

The market's gain Tuesday in the first session of the new year featured strength in many stocks that had fared poorly in the waning stages of 1989.

Analysts said that resulted from a lifting of the pressure of yearend tax selling.

But some investors seemed reluctant to chase after stocks Wednesday, apparently unsure that the market was ready for a lasting January rally.

Depressed computer, chemical and metals issues still managed to attract buyers on the theory that recession fears had gone to unwarranted extremes of late.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $1.59 billion, or 0.05 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .20 to 197.80.

Standard & Poor's industrial index dropped .. to 410.40, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down .93 at 358.76.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market gained 1.57 to 460.90. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 382.42, up .89.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

S&Ls lose $5.6 billion in deposits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's thrift institutions lost $5.6 billion in deposits in October, the 16th outflow in 17 months but an improvement over the previous month, the government said.

The Office of Thrift Supervision said Wednesday the October outflow at 2,895 thrifts followed $8.7 billion in net withdrawals in September and brought the total for the year to date to $59.2 billion, leaving the industry with a total deposit base of $949.3 billion.

TWA adding fuel surcharge to airfares

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines said it is adding a special fuel surcharge ranging from $5 to $20 per ticket, representing about 4 percent of an average ticket price.

TWA, United Airlines, Midway Airlines and USAir Group Inc. also said Wednesday they were matching steep fare cuts announced Tuesday by Eastern Airlines, but were keeping the usual cancellation penalties that Eastern had eliminated.

It is the first time since the 1970s oil crisis that U.S. airlines have imposed a surcharge to cover a dramatic jump in jet fuel prices and comes as they are discounting fares to encourage more business.

Judge approves CBS-shareholder settlement

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal judge has approved a $6 million settlement of a lawsuit filed by a CBS shareholder who claimed the company that owns the CBS television network was mismanaged from 1983 to 1986.

The lawsuit was brought in 1986 by Roger Minkoff, a real estate investor from St. Croix, Virgin Islands, who owns 12 CBS shares. The settlement, in which the management of CBS Inc. admits no wrongdoing, will be paid by a corporate insurance policy. It was approved by a judge Wednesday.

Of the settlement money, $4.5 million will go to the CBS treasury for an indirect benefit to shareholders.

UAL accelerates talks on employee buyout

CHICAGO (AP) — UAL Corp. is accelerating the schedule for talks with its non-union workers over a possible employee buyout, but the company still will miss a deadline set by a major shareholder for coming up with such a plan.

Imperial Chemical sells U.S. drug unit

LONDON (AP) — Imperial Chemical Industries PLC, a major British chemicals company, said it has completed the sale of its U.S. over-the-counter drug business to Johnson and Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharmaceuticals Co. for $395 million.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Cottle discovery flows 2.1 Mmcfd

From Staff Reports

A discovery has been completed in Cottle County, west of the Dad Warner field.

SOJOURNER DRILLING CORP., Abilene, tested the No. 1 Corinne Martin for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.1 Mmcfd from perforations 7,149 to 7,158 ft. The interval was acidized with 750 gallons of acid and fractured with 200 sacks of sand and 585 barrels of gel. Gas-liquid ratio is 7,405:1.

Permitted as a 9,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,330 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 7,311 ft. Pay was topped at 7,145 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 3, IRR survey, four miles southeast of Paducah.

★Cottle discovery

Sojourner Drilling, Abilene, has completed an unidentified gas discovery in Cottle County, west of the Dad Warner field.

Chaves County gains Siluro gas discovery

STEVENS OPERATING CORP. has completed a Siluro-Devonian discovery in Chaves County, southwest of the Diablo field.

On potential test, the No. 1 McBride State Com. flowed 1.76 Mmcfd on a 14/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,000 psi. The well flowed from perforations 6,218 to 6,364 ft., which had been acidized with 5,000 gallons of 15 percent acid.

Permitted as a 6,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 6,558 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,807 ft., include the San Andres at 1,378 ft., Glorieta at 2,558, Abo at 4,810, Wolfcamp at 5,550, Cisco at 6,828, Fusselman at 6,216, and Montoya at 6,432 ft. Pay was topped at 6,218 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and 1,980 ft. from west lines of Section 28, T10s, R27e.

Bass tests Wolfcamp producer in Crockett

The Southwest Mesa field of Crockett County has gained its fourth Wolfcamp producer, extending the pay 3/8-mile west.

BASS ENTERPRISES PRODUCTION CO., Midland, potentialed the No. 1 Sanders State to flow 108 barrels of 34.8 gravity crude on a 16/64 inch choke from perforations 6,273 to 6,278 ft. The interval was acidized with 3,300 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 648:1.

Total depth was 6,750 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and the well was plugged bck to 6,340 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and 1,848 ft. from northwest lines of Section 2, Block JH, Scrap File 12816, 11 miles southeast of McCamey.

Irion County field gains fourth producer

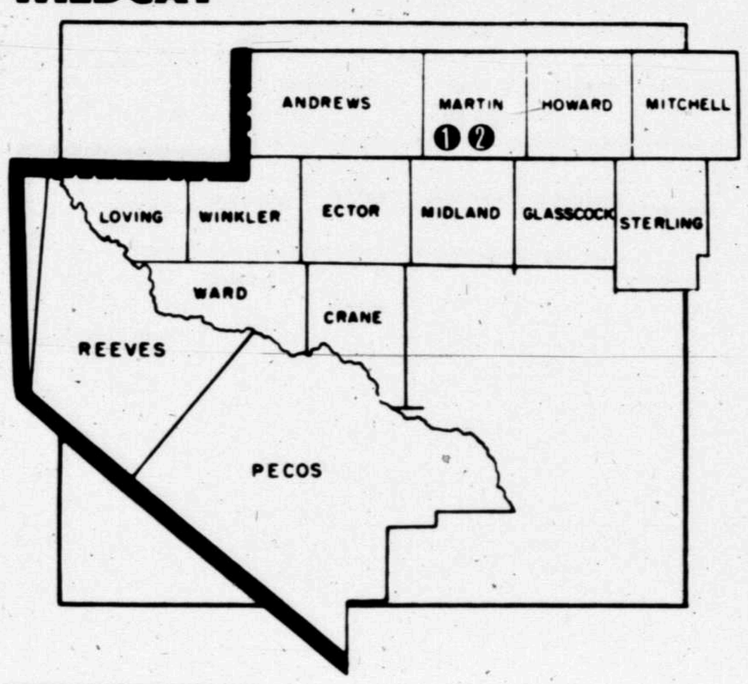

Also gaining its fourth producer was the Probandt field of Irion County, which gained a new Leonard producer and southern extension as PARKER & PARSLEY PETROLEUM CO. completed activity in the area.

Parker & Parsley tested the No. 3 Smith "59" to pump 20 barrels of 38 gravity crude and no water from perforations 5,150 to 5,162 ft. The interval was acidized with 250 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 950:1.

Drilled to 6,990 ft., the well was plugged back to 6,747 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 6,914 ft. kelly bushing.

Location is 1,980 ft. from south and 500 ft. from east lines of Section 59, Block 6, H&TC survey, 21 miles northwest of Mertzon.

Indonesian venture has new management

HOUSTON (AP) — Roy M. Huffington, Inc., has announced it will transfer management responsibilities for the East Kalimantan, Indonesia, oil and gas joint venture to Virginia Indonesia Company, an affiliate of venture members Union Texas Petroleum Holdings, Inc., and Ultramar PLC.

The transfer, to be effective March 31, was announced Tuesday and represents exploration, development and production of oil and gas in a 1.5 million acre area in Indonesia.

Huffington Corporation, the owner of RMHI, last month announced its intention to sell all its stock, yet keep all its 2,200 employees working.

"The agreement we are negotiating with our joint venture partners is intended to achieve that goal," said Roy M. Huffington, founder and chairman of RMHI.

Virginia Indonesia is a company jointly controlled by Union Texas Petroleum and Ultramar. Virginia Indonesia owns a 7.5 percent interest in Indonesia Joint Venture (IJV) and is owned by Unimar Company, a partnership owned equally by Ultramar and Union Texas Petroleum.

Revenues of the IJV are derived principally from the sale of liquefied natural gas under long-term contracts with utility and industrial customers in Japan.

Japanese will build tilt-wing prototype

DALLAS (AP) — A Japanese investment group plans to produce a tilt-wing aircraft at Alliance Airport near Fort Worth, officials say.

The Ishida Group of Japan will close on a land deal with the Perot Group, which is building the airport, for a TW-68 Tilt Wing plant, KDFW-TV reported Wednesday night.

The aircraft will be similar to the V-22 Osprey tilt-rotor plane Bell Helicopter and Boeing are building for the military at a plant in Arlington.

"In the short term, the Ishida production will ramp up with engineers and a highly technical staff to develop the first prototype," said Ross Perot Jr., who is leading the development of Alliance. "But I don't see their taking any of the production people from Bell Helicopter."

Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney recommended cutting the $1.8 billion V-22 from the Pentagon's 1990 budget, but Congress restored its funding.

"If for some reason the V-22 is not being fully funded and people are being laid off from Bell or General Dynamics because of military cutbacks, hopefully the Ishida program and the American Airlines maintenance program will help absorb some of those jobs," Perot said.

The V-22 is unique because it can take off like a helicopter and tilt its engines for fast, level flight, like ordinary airplanes.

The entire wing tilts on the TW-68. Ishida plans to build at least 100 of the aircraft initially. Production could begin in 12 to 15 months with a prototype ready in 1993 and production aircraft ready in 1996.

The Ishida development is the latest for the all-industry Alliance Airport. It will also be the home of 90 Drug Enforcement Administration aircraft and a distribution point for Honda Motor Co.

David Johnson is new CEO at Campbell Soup Inc.

Campbell Soup moves to squash buyout speculation

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Campbell Soup Co. on Wednesday named David W. Johnson, chief executive officer at Gerber Products Co., its new chief executive as the food products company moved to squash speculation it will be sold.

Johnson is the first outsider selected to head the company in its 120-year history. He replaces R.Gordon McGovern, who announced his early retirement in November after serving as president and chief executive since 1980.

Analysts hailed Johnson's selection and predicted he would bring stability to Campbell amid growing dissent among members of Campbell's founding family, who control about 59 percent of the company's 129.6 million outstanding common shares.

"Fundamentally, it looks like the news may have shifted toward the company being independent with such a strong executive being named," said Marvin B. Roffman, of Janney Montgomery Scott Inc. in Philadelphia. "David Johnson has a very fine reputation on Wall Street as an oustanding marketer and an outstanding executive."

Johnson, 57, was chosen because of his experience at beleaguered companies, Campbell Chairman Robert J. Vlasic said. He said Johnson's successful turnaround of Gerber "has made him one of the food industry's most highly respected executives."

"His first priority is to analyze the situation and come up with recommendations to the board on plans for the future," Vlasic said in a b..ef telephone interview Wednesday. "We hope that in turn will produce results that will change the minds of anybody who presently wants to sell their shares."

A source close to the group who spoke on the condition of anonymity said the family members endorsed Johnson's selection.

The Impact would use a maximum of 2 per month in electricity under the same conditions, but would still cost about twice as much to operate because the batteries must be replaced every 20,000 miles, adding another $70 a month to operating costs, Smith said.

Zwerner said that within three years, improvements in batteries may make it possible for the Impact to double its battery life to 40,000 miles, which would make operating costs nearly equal to those of gas-powered cars.

The 120-mile range is not expected to be improved much, officials said.

"You've got to keep in mind that this is not a car for driving to New York," he said. "But as a second car, running around L.A., I think it's great."

Smith said GM might need to produce as many as 100,000 of the vehicles a year for them to compete with cars powered by internal-combustion engines.

Each of the Big Three automakers has aggressive programs to research cars powered by fuels other than gasoline, but Smith said the Impact was far more advanced than any other electric car.

Kenneth A. Guenther, executive vice president of the Independent Bankers' Association of America, cautioned the policy "could wind up being a major political problem on the front door of the president ... by putting downward pressure on real estate prices."

He noted, however, the administration faces problems no matter which approach it emphasized: speed or caution.

"There's a real question of whether the market can stabilize if they don't get rid of the overhang" of unsold properties, he said.

The plan was written by an oversight board chaired by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady. The board sets policy for the Resolution Trust Corp., which is run by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., an independent regulatory agency.

Oversight board President Daniel P. Kearney, in an attempt to quiet fears the real estate will be dumped, noted much of it is entangled in legal problems and said it could take several years for the RTC to get clear title required to sell.

The plan released Wednesday was little changed from a draft obtained by The Associated Press three weeks ago. One difference was that the oversight board originally gave the RTC a June 30 deadline for reviewing bailout deals put together by its predecessor, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. The final plan extended the deadline to Aug. 31.

"I don't see 1989 as being the end of this," said Catherine England, a scholar at the Cato Institute, a conservative research group in Washington. "I think failures are going to continue to increase into the 1990s."

Rapidly advancing technology is making it more difficult for financial institutions to compete. Companies that once borrowed from banks are now able to issue junk bonds or commercial paper. Consumers can bank by telephone or computer, bypassing local banks and S&Ls in favor of better deals offered by big institutions and money market mutual funds.

"That means we just don't need as many banks and S&Ls as we once did. ... And this overcapacity is one of the reasons we're seeing these failures," she said.

Also, the expansion of federal deposit insurance in 1980 from $40,000 per account to $100,000 encouraged bank and S&L owners to take more risks, knowing the government would pick up the tab if their investments soured.

A farm crisis as the decade began, followed by an oil crisis in the mid-1980s, helped guarantee that many risky investments would go bad.

High interest rates used in the early 1980s by the Federal Reserve System to fight inflation depressed commodity prices and drove the value of the dollar sky high, squelching farm export sales. Farming's crisis became rural banks' crisis.

Savings institutions suffered from some of the same regional problems, but added at least three other causes: weak regulation, the effect of volatile interest rates on home mortgage portfolios and the inability of the government to close bankrupt institutions because the S&L deposit insurance fund had run out of money.

A few private analysts fear the true analogy for the 1980s is not the 1930s, but the 1920s, when hundreds of banks failed each year despite general prosperity. That was followed by even more collapses and general economic ruin in the 1930s.

FDIC Chairman L. William Seidman agrees the historically high failure rate won't disappear overnight, but he is predicting that 1990 will bring another drop in the bank closing total.

Last year's failures brought the decade total to 1,894 institutions: 1,059 banks and 835 S&Ls.

Then, with the 1986 collapse of oil prices, concern shifted to Texas and other oil-producing states whose go-go economies were fueled by the expectation of endlessly increasing oil prices. The fallout of the oil bust was still being felt as late as 1989 when 134 bank failures and 90 S&L insolvencies occurred in Texas.

Now, shaky real estate markets in Arizona and in some states of the Northeast are prompting concerns that as Texas recovers, institutions in other states will start to topple.

SPEND

Acquisition of seismic data will also be flat, according to respondents. Of the surveyed companies, only 15 percent said it would be a high priority, up from 13 percent a year ago.

While the move away from oil prospects toward gas prospects has been widely publicized, survey results indicate that companies are not planning that move just yet. In fact, respondents said they planned to increase their emphasis on oil prospects.

About 38 percent said their exploration and acquisition objectives were split 60-40 or more toward natural gas in 1989. Only 34 percent expressed such a split in 1990, and the percentage dropped to 31 percent for 1991. Results of PI's most recent survey are in stark contract to plans expressed by companies surveyed in mid-1989. At that time 51 percent of the companies surveyed said they would emphasize gas prospects over oil.

Operators were notably more optimistic about 1990 than in mid-1989. They forecast West Texas Intermediate would average $20.93 a barrel in 1989, and the spot price of natural gas to be $1.63 per thousand cubic feet. In mid-1989, surveyed companies predicted WTI would average $17.45 and spot gas would average $1.57 in 1990.

The Baker Hughes rig count forecast rose to 929 for 1990, up from 859 forecast six months ago. The rig count averaged 869 in 1989. The 1989 high point in rig activity was reached during the week of December 18, when 1,079 rigs were reported working.

When listing exploration priorities for 1990, three-fourths of major integrated companies indicated they would emphasize international offshore prospects. A fourth said they would give high priority to U.S. offshore prospects. In PI's mid-1989 survey, 44 percent said their highest priority for 1990 would be U.S. offshore prospects. The shift in priorities was likely attributable to fallout from the Valdez tanker spill and expectations of restrictive environmental legislation, PI said.

Predictably, independent operators ranked domestic targets as their top priority. At least two-thirds of all categories of independents gave domestic activity such a ranking. Of the large independents, 21 percent said they would give some consideration to international prospects.

At least 210 killed in Pakistan train crash

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — A packed passenger train was switched onto the wrong track and plowed into a standing freight train early today, killing 210 people in the worst rail disaster in Pakistan's history, officials said.

Many of the estimated 700 injured were trapped in mangled and derailed coaches of the 16-car passenger train. Army troops rushed to the scene in southern Pakistan and helped extricate victims from the wreckage.

Railway officials said rescuers recovered 188 dead by this afternoon, but officials at the scene said there were 210 known dead. The death toll was likely to rise as troops with metal torches searched through the wreckage.

Pakistan radio broadcast appeals for blood donations.

The passenger train was packed beyond its 1,408-seat capacity when, traveling at more than 35 mph, it hit the empty freight train, said Muktar Ahmad Abassi, the regional traffic officer for Pakistan Railways.

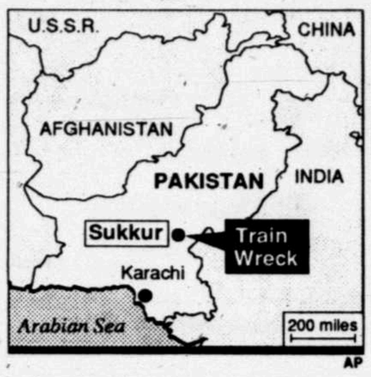

He said the engineer had no chance to brake.

"It was apparently a lineman's (switchman's) fault, who put the passenger train on the same track," said Abassi.

The accident occurred 225 miles north of the port city of Karachi at Sukkur. The city's deputy administrative commissioner, Hazul Baksh, said its seven hospitals were overflowing with injured an that some of the injured were being moved to other cities. Sukkur's hospitals have about 300 beds in all.

Baksh said hundreds of people had responded to the appeal for blood.

Abassi said three cars of the passenger train, each seating 88 people, were destroyed and two were badly damaged.

AP

The passenger train was traveling south on a 500-mile trip from Multan to Karachi and approaching the village of Sangi shortly after midnight when an improperly set switch shunted it off onto a siding and into the parked 67-car freight train, he said.

"It's a disaster, and the worst rail accident in Pakistan's history," said Abassi. The country won independence from India in 1947.

Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto "expressed her deep sense of shock and grief over the tragic railway accident," according to the official news agency, Associated Press of Pakistan.

It said she told her railway minister and other authorities to expedite rescue and medical aid, and start an immediate investigation.

Ms. Bhutto had been scheduled to fly to Karachi today and was expected to add a stop at Sukkur.

Pakistan's previous worst rail disaster was in 1958 when at least 150 people were killed as two trains collided near Gan[illegible], in Punjab province.

Romania forms panel, legalizes rallies

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — The government today officially legalized public rallies following the creation of an executive committee that will have final say on how the country is run until free elections promised for April.

Ionel

Rompres, the official news agency, reported that interim President Ion Iliescu had signed a decree that says "public gatherings ... are means of exercising freedom of opinion and speech, of organizing the citizens' participation in the country's public life."

Organizers of rallies and demonstrations will "be obliged to take all the necessary measures so that they should proceed peacefully and they also must notify police 48 hours in advance," Rompres said.

Under ousted dictator Nicolae Ceausescu, demonstrations were banned unless they were staged in support of his leadership.

Ceausescu and his wife, Elena, the country's second-in-command, were toppled in a popular revolution and tried and executed Christmas Day on charges of genocide and other grave crimes during 24 years of despotic rule.

Families whose homes were destroyed in fierce fighting in Bucharest during the revolution will move into spacious apartments Ceausescu built for his security forces in the city, media said today.

The 110 apartments were intended for security police who were to work in the Palace of the Republic, one of Ceausescu's pet projects that was not completed, and have been vacant for four years. Thousands of old homes and landmarks were razed to make way for the palace.

Wednesday, the military chief of staff denied foreign news reports that the revolution was planned several months in advance, but he acknowledged that tensions had been rising.

"The revolution was spontaneous, but the discontent had been piling up for years," Col. Gen. Vasile Ionel told reporters.

"Civilians and the military alike had felt the hardships. The army was dissatisfied by the way it was treated as a labor force on huge projects without any use for Romania," he said.

He said at least 196 officers and non-commissioned officers were killed during the uprising in fierce street fighting with Ceausescu loyalists. He did not give a figure for enlisted men or civilians who also took up arms.

Army troops joined pro-democracy demonstrators in ousting Ceausescu on Dec. 22, battling the despot's dreaded Securitate security police in the capital and other cities.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze will visit Bucharest Saturday, Soviet Embassy sources said. It will be the first visit by a top Kremlin official to the new leadership.

Rompres said Wednesday the National Salvation Front, which has been running the country since Ceausescu's ouster and promises to usher in democracy, had created an 11-member executive committee that has ultimate governing authority. It said President Iliescu would serve as chairman and that Dumitru Mazilu, a leading critic of Ceausescu, was named first deputy.

Mazilu blasted the old regime in a report smuggled out of Romania this fall and delivered to the United Nations' Human Rights Commission in Geneva, where he had worked until being placed under house arrest by Ceausescu in 1987.

Romania also has a Cabinet, led by Premier Petre Roman. But the Salvation Front has legislative powers and chose the premier. Roman was excluded from the executive committee, as announced by Rompres.

Rompres said a new justice minister, Teofil Pop, and supreme court president, Teodor Vasiliu, were named on Wednesday. It did not provide any details of their backgrounds.

The news agency said initial estimates of those killed in the first days of the revolution were exaggerated. It said "rigorous inquiries are being made to establish the exact number of the dead and wounded."

Initial reports put the death toll as high as 70,000, but later reports have varied widely and Western diplomats say the actual figure could be about 10,000.

Ionel, the army chief of staff, said "there is a high number of dead all over the country. ... Just how many died in the revolution will be found out later on."

Thousands demonstrate against neo-Nazism

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East German leaders joined tens of thousands of people at the Soviet war memorial Wednesday night in a protest of neo-Nazism, the official news agency ADN reported.

It said the demonstrators included Gregor Gysi, the new Communist Party chief; President Manfred Gerlach and other government leaders; and Vyacheslav Kotchemassov, Soviet ambassador to East Germany.

Last week, vandals painted Nazi slogans on the memorial to Soviet soldiers killed in Berlin in World War II. The memorial is in the Treptow district of East Berlin.

ADN initially said "tens of thousands" attended the demonstration Wednesday in Treplow, which the Communist Party sponsored. It later estimated the crowd at more than 250,000 people, but a witness who has seen other large demonstrations in East Germany said that was an exaggeration.

East Germany plans its first free elections in May and the Communist Party admits it may have difficulty remaining in the government. Observers feel the party may use the neo-Nazi issue in an attempt to build support and discourage sentiment for reunification with West Germany.

The news agency quoted Gysi as saying at the demonstration: "This country was born from anti-fascists. Don't let it become the homeland for neo-fascists."

He said democratic reforms were occurring in East Germany only because of change promoted in the Soviet Union by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, and "therefore, we cannot tolerate any form of anti-Sovietism. Our land is in danger, and it comes from the right."

Two young East Germans stand in front of a memorial for Soviet soldiers killed during World War II in East Berlin Wednesday, holding a sign that reads "ban Nazis." At the rally organized by the Communist Party, about 10,000 demanded a ban on neo-Nazi parties in the May elections.

Massive oil spill now no danger to Moroccan coast, expert says

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — Morocco's coastline is no longer in danger of being spoiled by a huge oil spill, and nearly all the 19 million gallons of oil that gushed into the sea have dissolved, pollution experts said today.

The Iranian tanker Khark 5, which began leaking oil after an explosion Dec. 19, had been towed 300 miles off the Moroccan coast by Wednesday night, said the Dutch salvage firm Smit Tak.

The edge of the slick held its position today 20 miles off the oyster-farming community of Oualidyia, the official Maghreb Arab Presse agency said.

Sailors laid floating barriers Wednesday, while helicopters sprayed chemicals on the greenish, 100-square-mile oil slick.

"The real danger to the Moroccan coast is over," Jean-Claude Sainnos, director of Mediterranean Marine Anti-Pollution Center in Valletta, Malta, said today. "If the vessel had come ashore, that would have been a major catastrophe."

Sainnos said more than 90 percent of the spill had dissolved in the relatively warm 60 degree water, had been broken up by waves, or dissolved by chemicals.

Darko Domovic, a technical expert at the Anti-Pollution Center, said there was practically no danger of massive spoiling of Morocco's coast, although bits of oil could wash ashore over the next couple of months.

"There is very, very little oil left on the sea surface," said Domovic. "What's left is an extremely thin sheen with patches of emulsified oil."

Morocco threatened to sue Iran's national oil company and accused Smit Tak of reacting too slowly to the explosion that tore through the Khark 5's hull.

Smit Tak, however, said its salvage operation was hampered because Morocco and Spain refused to let the tanker be towed near their coasts for emergency repairs. Instead, three tugboats were towing the 283,632-ton ship toward calmer waters near the Cape Verde islands, a 1,100-mile journey expected to take eight days.

Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh said today that reports of environmental damage caused by the spill were exaggerated, and he said the ship met all safety specifications.

The vessel, built in 1975, was damaged at least three times in Iraqi air strikes in the Persian Gulf during the Iran-Iraq war. The normal lifespsan of a supertanker is 15-20 years.

Speaking on Tehran radio, Aqazadeh said a storm ripped a hole in one of the tanker's storage tanks, causing the explosion that started the leak. He said some oil from the damaged storage tank burned in the fire, while a "limited amount" leaked out.

The Khark 5 was loaded with 72 million gallons of light Iranian crude when the explosion occurred.

Mass held for slain nun; Body flown to Wisconsin

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Government, opposition and church representatives attended a Mass for an American nun slain in an attack the government blamed on U.S.-backed Contra rebels. A Contra leader denied responsibility.

Following the Mass Wednesday, the body of Sister Maureen Courtney, 45, left Nicargua today on a Honduran SAHSA flight to Miami, where it will be transferred to a plane bound for her hometown of Milwaukee.

She and Sister Teresa Rosales, 24, a Nicaraguan, were killed and two other church workers were wounded Monday while riding in a pickup truck in Ojo de Agua, between the mining towns of Siuna and Rosita in northeastern Nicaragua.

"We do not have words to express our deep sorrow over such an act of violence," said a communique read Wednesday at the Mass by Bishop Salvador Schlaefer of Bluefields, in the Atlantic coast region where Sister Courtney worked with Miskito Indians.

Commander Jose Gonzalez, the Interior Ministry's delegate in the Atlantic coast town of Puerto Cabezas, represented the government at the Mass. Sandinista President Daniel Ortega and Interior Minister Tomas Borge sent flowers.

Hope dims for missing 14

GUAYMAS, Mexico (AP) — Rescue teams resumed their search today for 11 Americans and three Mexicans missing since their yacht sank, but officials held out little hope of finding them in the cold Gulf of California waters.

The boat was carrying 16 people, 12 American scuba divers and four Mexican crew members. Two people were rescued. The U.S. Coast Guard said a 17th person, an American crew man, also may have been aboard, but it provided no details.

No bodies from the Santa Barbara, a 68-foot refitted shrimp boat, had been found by nightfall Wednesday. Eight of the missing Americans were from Arizona and three from California, according to a spokesman for Silent Experience Scubacenter, a Tucson, Ariz. company that helped arrange the charter.

Protesters back off border

MOSCOW (AP) — Protesters in the republic of Azerbaijan began retreating from the Soviet-Iran border today after four days of violent attempts to reunite with with their Iranian brethren, a protest organizer said.

"The situation is stabilizing. People are gradually going home," said Yusif Samedoglu, a writer and leader of the Azerbaijani People's Front, which organized the protest. He spoke by telephone from Baku, the capital of Azerbaijan.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 5, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Domestic financial security and strong family ties are top priorities. Forget old grievances. Unusual new business opportunities may hold more promise than you think. Investigate. You could find yourself in a position with considerable clout. A business expansion or new partnership could bring big benefits in July. Stay in touch with former allies. An addition to the family could make you think about changing residences. Building on to your current home may be more practical.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: botanist George Washington Carver, actress Diane Keaton, coach Chuck Noll, actor Robert Duvall — and me!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be compassionate. Do not overreact to what others say. A willingness to compromise helps reduce stress. Good things begin to happen in your private life. Pursue a romantic interest.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Focus on long-range projects. Your enthusiasm will convince others to follow. New adventures beckon. Buy groceries in quantity whenever practical. Pay cash instead of using your credit cards.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Specialized training may hasten career progress. Remodeling your home will increase its value. A frenzied neighbor may need your help. Be a good listener; lend a sympathetic ear.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Extra work will augment your income. A long-overdue letter arrives. Do not decline a social invitation just because your clothes are not fancy. Others are more interested in your company.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A great day to launch a new work project. Your special talent draws others to you. Let them pay for picking your brain. Your financial interests expand. A loving relationship flourishes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look forward to greater activity at your place of work. Pitch in and help, and you will share some of the glory. A bonus is possible. If a romance is stagnant, end it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Confront your secret feelings about a relationship. Thanks to recent psychic growth, you can handle your emotions better. Creativity is favored; put your imagination to good use.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Learn when to say "no" or valuable energy could be wasted on unproductive projects or relationships. Refuse to be sidetracked by someone's unreasonable demands. Romance is inspirational.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Welcome a cycle of change. A crisis of the heart is not as serious as it sounds. Distance yourself from a problem and you will be able to solve it more quickly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A brand-new environment challenges you to make some basic changes. To set yourself free, loosen someone's emotional grip on you. Welcome a chance to travel. New friends add glamour to your life.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be honest about your feelings. You may not be able to give others what they expect from you. A relationship changes for the better. Learn to trust your instincts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forget your daydreams and deal with reality. You are the repository of many secrets; keep your own counsel. Your fine work performance will earn you new respect. A raise is likely.

Before playing to the first trick, count your winners. Then make sure that you plan a line of play that will produce at least the number of tricks you need for your contract.

When South showed a heart suit, North's hand improved considerably. It contained a wealth of controls, good support and a ruffing value. North conveyed that with a cue-bid of his cheapest ace and South's return cue-bid showed second-round spade control and slam aspirations. North launched into the Grand Slam Force, and an ambitious contract of seven hearts was reached when South held the two missing top trump honors.

West led the jack of spades, and there were only 11 fast tricks in sight. In view of the opening lead, the spade finesse was unlikely to succeed. One way to develop the extra tricks was to try to set up the spade suit. In the process, declarer came up with a remarkable dummy reversal.

South won the first trick with the ace and immediately ruffed a spade, noting the fall of the ten from West. A club to the king and another spade ruff confirmed the bad break in that suit. Now declarer had to hope for a 3-2 trump break. Using the table's other club winner and ace of diamonds, in that order, as entries, declarer ruffed two more spades, the last with the ace of trumps. He still had a heart left with which to cross to the board to draw trumps. Declarer was then able to take two more club tricks in hand to bring home the bacon. In all, he made seven trump tricks (four via ruffs), one spade, one diamond and four clubs.

Donna Rice building new life

WASHINGTON (AP) — Donna Rice, a household name after reporters found she spent a weekend with Gary Hart, has become a born-again Christian who spends much of her time doing charitable work, according to a published report.

A friend of Miss Rice's, Andy Messing, told The Washington Times in a story Wednesday that she "went back to her roots and because she did, she wound up coming out of a tailspin that would have killed other people."

Miss Rice, 32, who declined to be interviewed for the story, became an instant celebrity in 1987 when her relationship with Hart was publicized. Hart dropped out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomination, and later made an unsuccessful re-entry into the contest.

Miss Rice now lives with a female friend in northern Virginia. The newspaper said she doesn't have a full-time paying job, and quoted friends as saying she has become quietly involved in charitable work.

The newspaper also said she has a boyfriend, and attends some of Washington's high-profile dinners and events.

"Donna ... has not gone through that much of a change," said Tricia Erickson, head of a McLean, Va., modeling agency and Miss Rice's designated crisis manager in 1987. "I don't think that she 'went to God,' so to speak. Donna's always been like that. It isn't some miraculous thing."

MOSCOW (AP) — World chess champion Garry Kasparov has an entire country indignant over his latest move.

Kasparov, 26, proposed in an interview in Playboy magazine's November issue that the Soviet Union sell Mongolia, an independent country and loyal ally of the Soviets, to China.

Soviet government spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said Wednesday that protest letters and petitions signed by thousands of Mongolians have arrived at the Soviet Embassy in Ulan Bator, capital of Mongolia, and four Soviet consulates.

He said two-hour strikes were held Dec. 30 at Mongolian plants that make goods for the Soviet market.

In the interview, Kasparov said: "I just had the thought the other day: Why don't we sell the Kuril Islands to the Japanese? Frankly speaking, I'm not sure the islands belong to us, and the Japanese, who claim them, would give us billions and billions for them!

"That would keep us going for maybe five or 10 years. Then we could sell Mongolia to China and get a few more years that way."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS has denied a published report that the network will cancel the low-rated late-night "Pat Sajak Show" as soon as it finds a replacement.

Sajak

"CBS has no response," said a CBS official who declined to be identified. "This is an ongoing rumor and has no validity."

The trade publication Daily Variety said Wednesday that CBS was delaying cancellation of the show until a replacement series was found.

Rumors of the show's cancellation have been circulating for several months. Ratings for the show, introduced Jan. 9, have trailed NBC's "The Tonight Show" starring Johnny Carson, the syndicated "Arsenio Hall Show" and ABC's "Nightline."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — This year's Grammy Awards ceremonies will include lifetime achievement honors to Dick Clark, Paul McCartney, Miles Davis and the late Vladimir Horowitz and Nat King Cole.

The five will be honored at the Feb. 21 event, said Michael Greene, president of the National Academy of Recording Artists.

McCartney's impact on music as a songwriter and member of the Beatles, as well as his continuing growth as a solo performer were cited as reasons for his achievement award.

Jazz legend Davis played a crucial role in the development of jazz since the 1940s, the academy said.

Horowitz was included because many consider him the 20th century's greatest classical pianist, and Cole was cited as a leading singer of the 1940s and 1950s.

The inclusion of Clark was a surprise because he produces the American Music Awards, which competes with the Grammys.

"We don't view these shows as competitive and when you look at the big contribution Clark has made to the recording industry, especially in exposing new talent, there is no question he is deserving," Greene said.

Diamond

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer-songwriter Neil Diamond will be honored during the American Music Awards presentations with a special Award of Merit for his contributions to music.

Stevie Wonder, the 1982 Award of Merit winner, will present the trophy to Diamond during the ABC-TV awards show Jan. 22 from the Shrine Auditorium. Past recipients include Bing Crosby, Irving Berlin and Elvis Presley.

"Beginning in the 1960s, he has written, recorded and performed his very special songs about love, loneliness, good times and patriotic feelings about America," reads the inscription on the trophy.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge said she wants more information before deciding whether to hear a petition from the mother of Gary Coleman claiming that the diminutive actor is incompetent to handle his financial affairs.

Edmonia Sue Coleman, of Zion, Ill., filed a conservatorship petition in Superior Court on Dec. 4 contending that her 21-year-old son's deteriorating physical and mental condition puts him at "significant risk of financial exploitation."

Coleman's lawyer, Charles Wake, denied the allegations Wednesday, filing papers saying that the actor is in good health and mentally competent to handle his own business affairs. He alleged that Mrs. Coleman is merely trying to wrest control of her son's fortune.

Superior Court Judge Martha Goldin appointed attorney Arne Lindgren to represent Coleman temporarily and determine whether his own lawyers have a conflict of interest. She also told Lindgren to interview Coleman and his doctors and submit a report on the actor's health.

Coleman was born with an atrophied right kidney and has undergone two transplants during a childhood requiring frequent dialysis treatments and use of various prescribed drugs, the court documents said.

The 4-foot-5-inch actor, who gained fame in the TV series "Diff'rent Strokes," appeared cheerful and alert in court and told reporters he hoped for a resolution of the case soon.

Mrs. Coleman, absent from the hearing, has asked that a conservator be appointed for her son and that her bank, U.S. Trust Co. of California, be placed in control of assets that include $46 million in property and an annual income of $750,000.

Isolation breaks down tough-talking Noriega

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Tough-talking and heavy-handed while in power, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega spent his last days in Panama as a refugee in the Vatican Embassy, mostly keeping to himself in a state of nervous isolation.

While little information has been released on his 10-day stay, details gleaned through telephone calls to the papal mission indicate the toppled ruler found himself with little to do.

In the end, Vatican Embassy workers shunned Noriega, who was confined largely to a simple room with a crucifix and a broken television set.

Outside, people howled for his expulsion from the Vatican mission and trial in Panama or in the United States.

The Defense Forces that had kept him in power for six years were crushed quickly by invading U.S. troops on Dec. 20 and reduced to a handful of holdouts who surrendered or were captured.

Noriega sought refuge at the Vatican Embassy on Christmas Eve. Officials there urged him to leave and although it was said they would not throw him out, it was no secret he was hardly welcome.

Panama's top churchman, Archbishop Marcos McGrath, said publicly that Noriega would stand a better chance of a fair trial and decent treatment in the United States than in Panama.

Panama said it had no jail to hold him and third countries that might have been acceptable destinations to people calling the shots weren't interested in granting the ousted strongman asylum.

The man who was cheered by thousands weeks earlier was wanted only by the United States, and there only for his hide.

"He saw himself as something of an emperor in this part of the world, and I think that dream has been shattered," McGrath said on ABC's "Nightline" Wednesday night.

His detractors, who called him "pineapple face" because of his acne-scarred countenance, hung pineapples over the streets and used sticks to smash them to yellow sticky pulp.

Thousands of people wore "Noriega-buster" T-shirts depicting pineapples with a red circle and slash.

How much of this Noriega knew is uncertain, but radio reports of his bank accounts being frozen, his military support wilting and his cronies being captured were blared over loudspeakers by American troops around the Vatican Embassy.

Hours before he gave up, tens of thousands of Panamanians gathered near the compound demanding he leave.

No doubt much of this came as a shock to the stocky, up-from-the-slums city kid whose early military career, by most accounts, was brilliant and promising.

"He was cornered," McGrath said today of Noriega's decision to give up. "He had come to the Vatican Embassy ... looking for refuge because he was cornered physically, militarily ... and as the days went by it became more obvious he would not be able to get to a third country," the archbishop told NBC's "Today" show.

The protest outside the embassy Wednesday night further convinced Noriega there was no way out, McGrath said.

"I have often wondered if he really knew what people thought about him," Luis Martinz, an aide to President Guillermo Endara, said earlier this week.

"I have known him for a long time and I have to admit that at one time I liked him. He was sort of shy and self-effacing. He knew I was in the opposition but he never tried to change my mind.

"But he wasn't like that at all in the more recent years."

Martinz was jailed by Noriega for two months earlier this year for his activities with the opposition.

Noriega Charges

Manuel Antonio Noriega could receive up to 145 years in prison and more than $1.1 million in fines if convicted of all charges returned by a Miami grand jury.

The Miami indictment charges Noriega with 12 counts of conspiracy, racketeering, importing drugs and traveling to further the conspiracy.

Specifically, it accuses him of:

- Accepting a $4.6 million bribe from Colombia's Medellin drug cartel to protect shipments of cocaine, launder money, supply drug laboratories and shield drug traffickers from the law.
- Allowing smugglers to use Panama as a way station for U.S.-bound cocaine.
- Utilizing his official positions both before and after he took power in 1983 to provide protection for international criminal narcotics traffickers.
- Arranging for the shipment of cocaine processing chemicals, including those seized by Panamanian police.
- Laundering cartel narcotics proceeds in Panamanian banks.
- Allowing cartel leaders to shift operations to Panama to escape a crackdown in Colombia after the assassination of that country's anti-drug minister of justice.
- Traveling to Havana so Cuban President Fidel Castro could mediate a dispute with the Medellin cartel after Panamanian troops seized a drug laboratory that Noriega had been paid to protect.
- A grand jury in Tampa also indicted Noriega on three counts of marijuana trafficking. That indictment alleges he attempted to import more than 1.4 million pounds of marijuana into the United States and accepted a $1 million bribe from drug dealers for allowing them to smuggle drugs and launder cash in Panama.

Myth that women can't handle combat casualty of U.S. invasion

FORT CLAYTON, Panama (AP) — The women warriors who helped invade Panama have shattered myths about gender in combat and made mincemeat of a congressional ban.

"It blew everyone's theories," said 2nd Lt. Kimberly Thompson, 23. "Now they are regrouping."

Despite the ban on women in combat, female soldiers vindicated themselves so well that the White House is leaping to their defense and a leading senator said the exclusion should be re-examined.

Thompson, a platoon leader in the 988th Military Police Company from Fort Benning, Ga., knows the myths well. She is third-generation military and the wife of an airborne Ranger, a private who stayed home while she went to war.

"He's proud of me," she said of her husband, Steve Thompson. "He wishes he could have been here too."

Myth No. 1: Women can't handle combat.

Capt. Linda Bray led the 988th into battle, storming the gates of a Panamanian Defense Forces kennel in an armored jeep.

"It was an important military operation. A woman led it and she did an outstanding job," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Wednesday.

Bray's troops took the area after a 30-minute firefight in which three of the defenders were killed. There were no U.S. casualties.

"She knew exactly what to do and when to do it," said one of her platoon leaders, Sgt. Rick McGowan. "Her voice didn't quaver when she gave an order."

Myth No. 2: Men would spend their time protecting the women instead of fighting the enemy.

"Sex doesn't come into play. You don't really think about it," McGowan said. "I wasn't going to put a female squad leader over in a corner. It wouldn't have been fair."

When the top sergeant called for a machine gunner to advance, no one was thinking about Pvt. Christina Cabido's gender. They were thinking about firepower.

"I felt like we fought side by side. I felt equality," she said. "You don't always feel that in the Army."

Cabido, a 20-year-old from Strawberry, Ariz., recalled how she felt as her platoon went into battle.

"We were all scared. But we really pulled together as a team," she said. "I thought: Congress doesn't let females in combat. But I was going. I was going.'"

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., ranking minority member of Senate Armed Service Committee, said Wednesday in Panama that it is time to take another look at the ban.

The women warriors in Panama "discharged themselves in a very credible military, professional manner," he told a news conference.

Both law and military policy bar women from being assigned to units, like the infantry, whose main job is to fight the enemy. But women, who make up 11 percent of the military, serve in the military police and in support roles ranging from intelligence to infantry.

Deposed general's pilot likely to be key witness in case against Noriega

By DAN FREEDMAN
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The case against Manuel Antonio Noriega is built largely on the testimony of Floyd Carlton, the deposed general's diminutive personal pilot who initially introduced Noriega to drug kingpins of Colombia's Medellin cartel.

It was Carlton's stunning account of ferrying drugs from Colombia and cash proceeds from the United States — all through Panama — that convinced federal prosecutors in 1987 that they had a case against Noriega.

Noriega is due to be arraigned this afternoon at the U.S. courthouse in Miami after agreeing to surrender to American authorities in Panama City Wednesday night.

It may take more than a year to bring Noriega to trial, former federal prosecutor Richard Gregorie said on NBC-TV's "Today" program this morning.

Carlton, 40, had been under a 1985 federal indictment for drug trafficking when agents lured him to Costa Rica, which in turn extradited him to Miami in 1987. Carlton's subsequent cooperation with U.S. authorities enabled drug agents to gather other witnesses and corroborating evidence, law enforcement sources say.

"What we got from Carlton was a framework, how Noriega operated, who were the associates, names of people who took," said a federal prosecutor at the time of Noriega's indictment in Miami on 12 counts of drug trafficking on Feb. 5, 1988. "The case definitely would not have been made had not Carlton come back to the U.S."

The Miami indictment charges Noriega with accepting $4.6 million from cartel members in exchange for turning Panama into a worry-free way-station for drug trafficking. He faces 165 years in prison if convicted on all 12 counts, according to Justice Department spokesman David Runkel.

Runkel said Noriega garnered a total of $10 million from drugs between 1981 and 1986, the period covered by the indictment.

Although few agents and prosecutors who worked on the case could have predicted that Noriega would ever be brought to Miami to stand trial, the Justice Department nevertheless placed Carlton under protective custody in 1987 at an undisclosed location just in case.

Carlton and other witnesses "are available" to testify against Noriega, said Thomas V. Cash, Drug Enforcement Administration agent-in-charge in Miami. "We've been waiting patiently."

One of Noriega's lawyers, Steven Kollin, said today that the general cannot get a fair trial in the United States because of widespread media exposure of government charges against him.

Any trial of Noriega would also be complicated by defense efforts to expose Noriega's relationship with the Central Intelligence Agency in the 1970s and 1980s. Such disclosures could prove embarrassing to the Bush administration, even though President Bush, who headed the CIA in 1976, insists he has nothing to fear.

Prosecutors will attempt to counter defense efforts to introduce such evidence by arguing that "charges against him do not involve national security concerns," Runkel said. "They are about drug trafficking."

El Paso group protests U.S. invasion of Panama

EL PASO (AP) — Young American men should not have been called to do a job that should have been done by young Panamanians, said protesters of the U.S. invasion.

"The justification is that we should have intervened on behalf of democracy and did so. You can't restore democracy where it never existed," Emmett Melia, a retired Air Force major, said Wednesday.

Melia was among a handful of demonstrators calling themselves El Pasoans For Peace who protested outside the Texas Employment Commission office. They carried signs that said "Save Blood, Save Money. U.S. Out of Panama," and "Americans Out of Panama."

The group presented a document signed by 30 El Paso residents that called for the immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Panama, except for those needed to defend the Panama Canal.

Choose employment services carefully

Have you been pounding the pavement looking for employment? Well, if you've got holes in your shoes, but still no job, you may be considering an employment agency.

First, it's important to understand the differences between the various types of employment services. Before signing a contract, decide what type of service you need.

An employment agency, or a private personnel placement service, tries to match job seekers with prospective employers. The agency only charges a fee when the job seeker is actually hired. Before accepting a job, find out if the employer will pay all or part of the fee. The fee is usually based on a percentage of the first year's salary.

An executive search firm, or retained search firm, provides a management consulting service to its client companies. The firm locates qualified executives who are interested in working for the client. The executive who is offered a job does not pay a fee.

An executive counseling service, or career counseling service, offers help in writing a resume or improving interview skills. While the company may claim to put clients in touch with potential employers, it does not guarantee job placement. The fees, which range from $1000 to $4000, are paid by the job seeker before services are provided.

When choosing an employment agency, ask friends and business acquaintances for references. Also check with the Better Business Bureau, the local consumer protection, agency and the state attorney general's office to find out if the employment service you're considering has received any complaints. You may also want to select a firm that specializes in certain fields, such as accounting or hotel management.

Many employment agencies advertise jobs in local newspapers. This may give you a good idea of what kind of jobs the agency fills most often. However, watch out for ads that promise a big salary, but require no skills or experience. The job may not exist.

Don't sign a contract until you've read it carefully. Make sure the contract includes all the claims made by the sales representative.

CLICK and CLACK TALK CARS

SPOKES RATTLE, RATTLING DRIVER

Dear Tom and Ray:

I have a real problem with the wheel covers on my 1986 Delta 88. The wire spokes rattle terribly. The garage said to tape them with electrical tape which I did, but they have to be retaped every month. New ones are much too expensive. Will other wheel covers fit? What should I do? — Marvin

RAY: These wire wheel covers probably looked great, at least before you had to put black electrical tape all over them. But as you've discovered, they're a nuisance: They're noisy, they're hard to clean, and they fill up with ice and snow in the winter and throw your wheels out of balance.

TOM: Here's what you do, Marv. Take two weeks off and plan a road trip to New York. Get off the thruway at the Willis Avenue Bridge exit. Park on the street anywhere near there and go get a cup of coffee. By the time you come back, those wheel covers will be long gone. Just don't stay for a refill or a donut or the wheels may be gone, too.

RAY: Then, on your way out of New York, stop at a discount store and pick up a set of generic wheel covers for $30 (the one's that just say "CAR" on them). If you decide you really miss the noise, try a junkyard instead. If your timing is right, you might even be able to buy back your old ones!

• • •

Dear Tom and Ray:

I write to you concerning our beloved Cumulus, a 1977 white Buick LaSabre. We call it Cumulus because it rides like a cloud. It has 147,000 miles, and we are beginning to hear things we don't like. When we take longer trips on the highway we develop large amounts of valve rattle. After about an hour of highway driving, the valves sound as though they are about to come out through the hood. When this happens, we pull over to check the oil level and coolant level. Both are fine, but when we start up again the temperature light is on. What do we have to do to keep the car running for another 50,000 miles? — Charlie TOM: What you're calling "valve rattle" could either be pinging or the lifters making noise due to low oil pressure. Either way, it's probably related to a temperature problem. Even though you say you check the coolant level and it's fine, I'll bet you're checking the level in the overflow container — which has the FULL/ADD lines on it. The problem is that if you do have a hole in your cooling system, there would be no suction to draw coolant in from the overflow reservoir when the engine cools. In other words, the overflow container could read "full" when the system is actually low or empty.

RAY: Severe overheating could cause serious pinging. A little bit of pinging isn't all that bad. In fact, GM used to euphemistically refer to pinging as "the sound of economy." A lot of pinging, however, is the sound of engine destruction, and if you hear it every time you accelerate, that's too much.

TOM: Overheating could also cause the oil to thin out, and even though your oil level may be OK, your oil PRESSURE could be low — you might even need a new oil pump. If that were the case, the first things to be deprived of oil would be your lifters. Either way, Charlie, you better get this fixed if you want to go another 50K in Cumulus. If you choose not to fix it, we suggest you invest in a much more powerful radio with lots of speakers. That will drown out this noise and allow you to play a nice funeral dirge as you drive this thing into the ground.
