It's time to make annual trek for tree

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Oland Butler remembers one lady in 1968 who wanted stereo Christmas trees.

"She wanted one Christmas tree for each side of her stereo," said Butler, a Westside Optimist manning that organization's sales lot Saturday behind the Furr's Supermarket at Illinois and Midland Drive.

"We spent a lot of time trying to find two identical trees," said Butler with a laugh.

Saturday may have been the biggest day of the year for seasonal tree buying, as Midlanders — and not a few out-of-towners — flocked to supermarkets, hardware stores, private lots, lots sponsored by service organizations and nurseries.

Many were in search of the perfect tree — a well-proportioned and not too expensive noble fir, Scotch pine, or other variety that would make this holiday season even more special than those past.

With many lots featuring trees shipped in from locations as far away as Oregon or North Carolina, those searching might have found what they were looking for.

Butler estimated the Optimists' lot would sell 600 trees this year "at about the same price as last year." The sales will help fund Optimist activities throughout the year, including Little League and softball team sponsorships and Halloween activities for Midland youth.

At Wolfe Nursury, located in a shopping center at Scharbauer Drive and A Street, tree buyers were looking over a large selection of varieties and sizes — flocked and unflocked, live and cut.

Argentina's insurrection could spread

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Raul Alfonsin on Saturday ordered the army to crush a three-day revolt by rebel troops, and thousands of citizens poured into the streets to rally for democracy.

Alfonsin went on national television after government troops allowed hundreds of mutinous, heavily armed soldiers to leave an infantry school they had seized and move to a new military base.

He told the nation that he has ordered the army to "suffocate" the rebellion.

The mutinous soldiers began their revolt Thursday to protest the criminal trials of officers who have been charged with committing human rights abuses during the military dictatorships that ruled the country from 1976-83.

Alfonsin, who spoke slightly more than 3 minutes, described the revolt as a "seditious attempt" against "well-being, tolerance and liberty." He assured citizens that the revolt "does not endanger the republic nor the ... constitution."

The government broadcast repeated pleas on national television Saturday for citizens to rally for democracy. Thousands of people were reportedly gathering in streets and squares throughout the country, including about 5,000 in Buenos Aires.

Several ambassadors arrived at the Congress building in Buenos Aires, including Theodore Gildred of the United States. "We are here to lend our complete solidarity to the consolidation of democracy," Gildred said.

MADD plans candlelight remembrance

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Candle flames in the December night will spur awareness of the problem of drunken driving during the holiday season, and Christmas and New Year's Day will pass without a traffic death in the Permian Basin caused by too much alcohol.

That is the hope of Faye Higgins, who as head of the Midland chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving is looking forward to Monday night's candlelight vigil.

"It is a vigil for remembrance and hope to give tribute to all victims of drinking and driving," Ms. Higgins said. The vigil will be held at 7 p.m. Monday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa in Midland.

Law enforcement officers and representatives of Midland and Odessa as well as officials from both counties will attend the service, which is happening in 400 other communities across the country, Ms. Higgins said.

She said a band would be on hand to play such songs as "Morning Has Broken" and "We'll Remember You." The latter is a song written especially for MADD to remember a 14-year-old victim. "Taps" will also be played, she said.

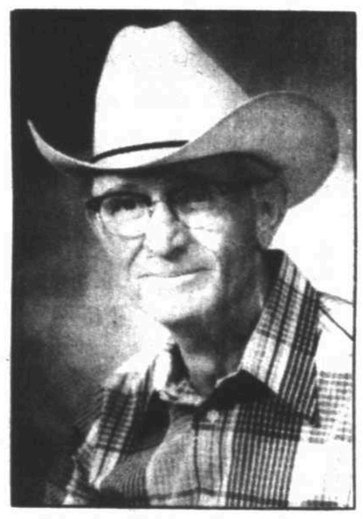

Ms. Higgins said the service will also serve as the kickoff for the red ribbon drive, which has become an annual holiday anti-drinking-and-driving campaign.

"We want people to have the red ribbon on their car, to show they have made a commitment not to drink and drive over the holidays," she said. Those who support the drive are asked to tie a red ribbon to the drivers side door handle, outside side view mirror, or antenna.

Friends and relatives of drunken driving victims from Monahans, Andrews and Big Spring are also expected to attend the vigil.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech is expected to read a poem at the vigil, while County Attorney Mark Dettman will read a list of drunk driving victims in West Texas.

Local scouts salute Frank Cowden Jr.

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Frank Cowden Jr. has dedicated himself to his community. On Thursday, the community will give something back.

Cowden — a fourth generation Midland rancher — will be given the first annual "Distinquished Citizen Award" at a dinner being sponsored by the Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

The night also will mark another special occasion — his 43-year marriage anniversary to the former June Wilkinson.

According to Gerald R. Petty, assistant scout executive, Cowden will be honored at a $100 a plate fundraiser to be held at 7 p.m. at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

"Frank is receiving this award for his outstanding service to his community, his church and to the scouts," said Petty. "This is our way of honoring a citizen who's part of the council."

Sniper suspects tripped up by muleshoe

EL MULANTO, Mexico (AP) — Authorities say snipers who killed a Texas man and injured two others as they rafted down the Rio Grande were tripped up because they didn't cover their tracks — literally.

Mexican police say they tracked four teen-agers accused of killing Michael Heffley and wounding his wife, Jamie, and their guide, Jim Burr, on Nov. 19 in the picturesque and normally serene Colorado Canyon because of a thrown muleshoe.

The killers had rained down a hail of bullets on the three Texans atop a Canyon rim on the Mexican side of the border. There, authorities say, came the break that led to four arrests.

"When they were going out, one of the mounts lost a shoe and it was a horseshoe made in the United States with a certain mark," said Loreto Quezada, a Chihuahua state police officer.

The muleshoe led them to Eduardo Pineda, 17, and three of this friends.

"We knew it came from a mule. Eduardo's father wouldn't let us inspect his mules. He kept saying they were somewhere else. No one informed on them," Quezada told the Dallas Times Herald.

A sworn statement taken by Mexican police from one of the suspects, 15-year-old Julio Cesar Hernandez Valenzuela, explains how the four had gone deer hunting and later began shooting at a hawk before noticing three people rafting below.

"So we went over by Eduardo. He said, without knowing if they were Mexicans or Americans, 'Let's shoot at the people'," the youth, who is illiterate, told police.

The disclosure of the statement to the newspaper helps explain what was formerly a mysterious incident that people attributed to a variety of possible motives, including drug dealings and drunken cowboys.

"The first to shoot was Eduardo, with a .44-caliber (Magnum) rifle.

Predawn quake shakes southern California

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A sharp earthquake deep beneath City Hall jarred Southern California early Saturday, toppling bottles from store shelves, knocking out power to thousands of homes and causing at least 24 minor injuries.

The 3:38 a.m. quake registered 5 on the Richter scale, said Hall Daily, a spokesman for the California Institute of Technology Seismology Laboratory. Several aftershocks were recorded, the largest measuring 2.6.

No serious damage was reported.

The quake was felt at least 90 miles away, in San Diego. The earth shook across 15,000 square miles and seven counties for about 15 seconds.

"Talk about your rude awakenings," said Patricia Brillhart, who was awakened at her home a quarter-mile from the Rose Bowl by her shaking bed and the sound of her china crashing to the floor. The Rose Bowl is about two miles from City Hall.

It was the strongest quake in the Los Angeles area since a 5.9 temblor on Oct. 1, 1987, and an aftershock two days later killed eight people, injured 200 and caused $358 million in damage.

The 66-year-old Rose Bowl, home of the annual Tournament of Roses New Year's Day college football classic, appeared to be undamaged.

Twenty-four people were treated for minor injuries at four hospitals. Most suffered cuts and bruises when they trippped and fell, nursing supervisors said.

The most serious injury was a man who mistook the quake for an intruder and shot himself in the leg, said Shirley Muldoon, nursing supervisor at St. Joseph's Medical Center in Burbank.

An 18-year-old man apparently panicked and fell through a window, suffering minor abrasions.

'Al Capone tax' on state agenda

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Among the 150 or so bills Texas lawmakers have filed in preparation for the 1989 legislative session is one Rep. Billy Clemons likes to call the "Al Capone tax."

Clemons, an East Texas Democrat from Pollok, got the innovative idea for fighting drug dealers from the state of Minnesota, where the law has worked successfully for the past couple of years.

What the bill does is require a tax stamp from the state comptroller, similar to ones found on cigarettes or liquor, on controlled substances and marijuana, Clemons says.

The tax rate would be $200 for each gram of a controlled substance, or $3.50 per gram of marijuana.

When a dealer gets busted, and his cache of dope has no stamp proving that taxes were paid, he could face charges of tax evasion, a felony, in addition to criminal penalties.

"I call it the Al Capone tax. Capone never got busted for numbers or bootlegging or prostitution, but they got him on tax evasion, of all things," Clemons says.

Because tax evasion is a civil penalty, he says, authorities could hold a drug dealer in jail without bond. "Because too many times you arrest them and they end up beating the cops back out on the streets," Clemons says.

Anyone caught trying to counterfeit tax stamps could face felony charges, according to the bill.

Clemons tried to get a similar bill passed in the 1987 session. But even with the support of law enforcement officials, the proposal was defeated on the House floor. Many legislators misunderstood its intent, he says, and some thought it was meant to legalize drugs.

"It does not address the issue of the criminal act of dispensing or selling drugs," he says. "What it does is add a new penalty of tax evasion.

Bhutto orders political prisoners' release, commutes death sentences

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto Saturday ordered about 1,000 political prisoners released and commuted all death sentences in her first official act after assuming power.

She also promised to free all women prisoners except those convicted of murder.

Ms. Bhutto, sworn in Friday, told a news conference her Pakistan People's Party amnesty program will be handed over to President Ghulam Ishaq Khan for approval.

Her new law minister, Etiaz Ahssan, refused to say where Ishaq Khan stood on the amnesty but said the president had to act on the advice of the prime minister.

In her first nationally televised address, Ms. Bhutto Friday promised sweeping reforms, including lifting bans on student and trade unions and launching a new education program to help fight the nation's 75 percent illiteracy rate.

All prisoners over 60 years old are to be released providing they have served five years of their sentence, Ahssan said.

He said all prisoners except military officers convicted of non-criminal offenses by military courts under late President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq are to be freed. The military will review its own cases, said Ahssan.

In addition, all sentences are to be reduced by three months, he said.

The prime minister offered freedom to "all persons convicted and sentenced by a military court for offenses not involving drugs, smuggling, corruption, embezzlement, bank fraud, robbery, dacoity (robbery by gangs), murder and rape."

Ms. Bhutto tempered far-reaching economic promises with a warning that Pakistan's financial books were deep in red ink.

"We are anxious to have foreign investment in our country to have economic growth," she said. "But ultimately it's the Pakistan labor we are looking toward" to help rebuild the economy.

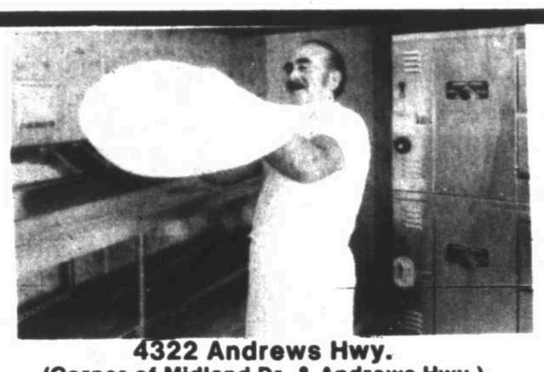

She said the economy left by Gen. Zia's military and civilian governments has "left the country close to bankruptcy."

However, Ms. Bhutto gave few details.

Zia died in a mysterious plane crash Aug. 17, weeks after announcing the Nov. 16 general elections that swept Ms. Bhutto's party to power. Authorities suspect sabotage in the crash, and a probe is continuing.

Ms. Bhutto's father, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, was overthrown by Zia in a bloodless coup in 1977 and executed in 1979 after his conviction for killing a political rival. The Bhutto family has denied the charge.

"I think he would be proud of me," Ms. Bhutto said of her father. "He was a pragmatist. I'm his daughter but he brought us up to be our own person."

Military and medical emergency vehicles crowd the Tarmac of Ben-Gurion International Airport Friday around a hijacked Soviet Ilyushin-76, which made its way from the southern part of the Soviet Union to Israel with a Soviet crew and four hijackers on board.

Israel sends 4 hijackers 'back to the U.S.S.R.'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Four Soviet gunmen who seized a busload of children in southern Russia and then traded them for a $3.3 million ransom and a plane to Israel were sent home Saturday with the airplane crew they held hostage.

The four hijackers left in two planes with the eight-member Aeroflot crew that brought them to Israel and a 19-member Soviet delegation that arrived Saturday to arrange the return, officials said.

Preparations for the departure were shown live on Israel television, with soldiers guarding the runway at Ben-Gurion Airport near Tel Aviv.

The Soviet Union's Tass news agency later reported the planes landed at Moscow's Sheremetyevo-1 airport at about 5 p.m. CST. Tass said the ransom money was returned to the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union had requested extradition of the hijackers, but ultimately Israel deported them as illegal immigrants. Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Liel said this helped "shorten the process."

As a condition for returning the hijackers, Israel received assurances the four men would not face the death penalty, Liel said. Israel radio reported that one of the hijackers requested political asylum in Israel, but Liel said he could not confirm that.

Originally, there were believed to be five hijackers. However, it was determined that the wife of one of the hijackers was not part of the plot. Tass identified her as a hostage.

Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron, Israeli army chief of staff, called the hijackers Friday "simple criminals with a lot of money who wanted to flee the Soviet Union."

The saga began Thursday, when the four gunmen seized a bus carrying 30 schoolchildren on an excursion in Ordzhonikidze, a city 900 miles southeast of Moscow in the Russian Republic. After hours of negotiations, the gunmen traded the children for an Aeroflot jetliner out of the country, a flight crew of eight and a ransom of $3.3 million.

A teacher on the bus, Natalya Efimova, told state-run Soviet television that one of the gunmen announced to the children, "I will release anyone who will burn his red scarf." The teacher said the children, who wear the scarves as part of their school uniforms, stuffed them in their pockets to reduce the provocation.

The Aeroflot jet landed in Israel Friday evening and the Soviets surrendered soon afterward. They were immediately taken to a prison near Tel Aviv. The released crew spent the night in a Tel Aviv hotel.

The deportation Saturday ended two days of unusual diplomatic contacts, during which U.S. officials played a role in getting the hijackers to Israel and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze thanked the Israelis for returning them.

Liel said Shevardnadze met with an Israeli consular delegation in Moscow on Saturday "to express the thanks and deep appreciation of the Soviet government and Soviet people regarding the noble way the government of Israel has dealt with this barbaric act."

Relations between the two nations have gradually been warming over the past few years. Moscow severed diplomatic ties in 1967 after Israel captured land from its Arab allies during the Middle East war.

Israel television quoted Foreign Minister Shimon Peres as saying he hoped Israel's handling of the incident would lead to greater understanding between his country and the Soviet Union.

Early in the drama, the United States acted as an intermediary to help the two nations compensate for the lack of formal diplomatic ties, Defense Ministry spokesman Eitan Haber said.

Two of the Soviets were sent back on the Ilyushin-76 that brought them to Israel. The other three were returned in a Tupolev airliner that brought the Soviet delegation to Tel Aviv on Saturday.

Soviet officials also were given the ransom money and the weapons carried by the hostages after signing a receipt for them, Israel television reported.

U.S.-Israel pact OK'd anti-terrorist actions, paper says

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Israeli linked to the Iran-Contra affair who died in a plane crash last week said in June that a secret U.S.-Israeli agreement authorized counter-terrorist operations he supervised with former White House aide Oliver North, The Washington Post said in its today editions.

Amiram Nir, the former Israeli official who died in a crash in Mexico Wednesday, told the Post last summer that the agreement authorized still-secret operations that he and North supervised in 1985-86, the newspaper said.

The Post said American and Israeli sources confirmed the existence of the Israeli-American agreement, referred to as "terms of reference" or "accords" by some knowledgeable sources. The paper said the agreement never was disclosed to Congress.

Nir, who served as an adviser on counter-terrorism to two Israeli prime ministers, maintained that the secret U.S.-Israeli covert operations were authorized by an agreement signed by President Reagan and then-Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres, said the Post. Other sources said the agreement was signed at a lower level in the two governments, the newspaper said.

Although few details of these operations have been disclosed, the paper said, Nir said the Israeli government has detailed records of all of them.

The Post said one operation conducted under the agreement was the organizing of an armed force of Lebanese Druze in Beirut in May 1986, at a time when the White House was considering the use of force to try to free American hostages in Lebanon.

As described by Nir, the agreement led to a series of covert actions that had common tactical elements, according to the Post. The secret transactions that led to the diversion of U.S.-Iran arms sales profits to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua may have fit a pattern established in those undertakings, the newspaper said.

Nir was interviewed by Post reporter Bob Woodward on June 25 and June 26 in London, with an agreement that none of the information would be attributed to him without further discussions, the newspaper said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Sunny, chilly Sunday likely

From Staff and Wire Reports

A sunny but chilly remaining weekend is in store for Midland, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Today will be sunny and colder with a high only reaching into the 50s. Winds will be from the northeast at 10-20 mph.

Tonight will be clear with a low in the low 30s.

Monday should be sunny with a high in the mid 50s.

The record high temperature for Saturday was set in 1954 when it reached 83. The record low for today was set in 1934 when it dipped to 20.

STATE

Unseasonably warm temperatures were common over most of Texas Saturday, despite a weak cold front that slipped into the Panhandle just south of Amarillo.

But the air mass remained dry over the state, so the cold front had little effect on weather conditions other than a shift in winds, the National Weather Service reported.

Winds shifted around to the north over the Panhandle behind the cold front, while south to southwest winds prevailed over the rest of the state.

Wind speeds were generally in the 5 to 15 mph range, the weather service said. But north winds gusted in excess of 30 mph at Dalhart in the northwest corner of the Panhandle.

Temperatures were in the 50s over the northern part of the Panhandle, while the rest of the state had readings in the 60s and 70s. Late afternoon extremes ranged from 57 degrees at Dalhart to 77 at Kingsville in South Texas.

The forecast for Sunday called for fair to partly cloudy skies, with highs mostly in the 50s and 60s, except in South Texas, where highs in the 70s were expected.

NATION

High pressure dominated the weather across the nation Saturday and the only precipitation was a few snow showers along a cold front in the upper Midwest.

Strong northwesterly wind was expected to move the snow showers to the lower Great Lakes region and parts of the upper Ohio Valley during the night, with up to 6 inches of snow possible in northwestern Pennsylvania.

Ahead of the cold front, strong southwesterly wind blew across the Ohio Valley and the lower Great Lakes region. Strong northwesterly wind prevailed from the upper Great Lakes to northeastern New Mexico.

A high wind warning was posted in western New York state.

Wind gusted to 55 mph at Buffalo, N.Y., and blew the cover on a police department undercover car. The small sedan was parked in front of police headquarters when the wind caught the driver's side door and ripped it off its hinges, police said.

Without a door, the undercover car was pretty conspicuous, acknowledged Chief of Detectives Angelo Alessandra.

Dense fog developed in the valleys of the West during the night but largely burned off during the day.

REVOLT

The U.S. Embassy issued a statement that said President Reagan and President-elect George Bush sent "their firm and unwavering support" for Argentine democracy.

Alfonsin met with aides and Cabinet members Saturday in the heavily guarded Government House. Congress also met in an emergency session on Saturday.

Congressman Cesar Jaroslavsky of Alfonsin's governing Civic Radical Union Party called on citizens to "go into the street to defend democracy."

"This is the moment," Jaroslavsky said.

He acknowledged that loyal armed forces members "have not been able to dominate the rebels."

Juan Carlos Pugliese, president of the House of Deputies, said "Democracy is in danger," and called the insurrection "a clear coup attempt."

The insurrection began shortly before dawn on Thursday when about 400 soldiers deserted their posts under the leadership of the charismatic Col. Mohamed Ali Seineldin.

The group, joined later by about 50 coast guard members, seized an infantry school Friday morning at the giant Campo de Mayo military base 22 miles northwest of the capital.

Government forces and tanks surrounded the base and exchanged several rounds of mortar and rifle fire with the rebels Friday, during which four people were wounded, the army said in a communique Saturday.

News reports said one person was killed, but there was no official confirmation.

On Saturday, the rebels left the base in army trucks. Government forces did not fire on the rebels, the official news agency Telam said. It said the rebels drove past the government troops aboard several trucks, which they had loaded with weapons and ammunition.

Telam said the rebels arrived a few minutes later at a motorized military unit in Villa Martelli about eight miles away. The unit's officers earlier had been reported as sympathizing with the rebels.

The rebels fortified their positions and set up snipers. At least six tanks were seen.

Several explosions were heard outside the base late Saturday night, the private news agencies Noticias Argentinas and Diarios y Noticias reported. Telam news service said lights at the base went out shortly afterward.

More than 100 area residents showed their opposition to the rebels by shouting insults and stoning a car as it entered the base. At one point, rebels fired blanks to disperse the demonstrators, Telam reported.

Presidential spokesman Jose Ignacio Lopez acknowleged Saturday evening that Cabinet ministers and military chiefs meeting at Government House were "nervous," and noted the presidential guard was being reinforced.

"If a group of rebels moves from one place to another and you don't know where they're going, the least you have to do to protect the president is reinforce the guard," he said.

Military uprisings in 1987 and earlier this year were led by Lt. Col. Aldo Rico, now discharged and imprisoned. They also were called to support fellow officers being prosecuted in civilian courts for human rights abuses during the dark days of Argentina's military dictatorships.

During the dictatorships, kidnappings, bombings and assassinations by leftist groups were curtailed, but at least 9,000 Argentines "disappeared" and were presumed executed by security forces.

In December 1985, five former junta members, including former military presidents Jorge Videla and Roberto Viola, were convicted in civilian court for crimes including kidnapping, torture and murder.

The military toppled the elected government of President Isabel Peron in 1976. Alfonsin, a human rights activist, ran for president when the military junta finally allowed elections in 1983.

Alfonsin won on a platform of human rights and honesty in government. It was the first defeat of the labor-based Peronist Party in open elections since 1945.

TREES

Because Saturday was the first day of the first weekend in December, Wolfe's assistant manager, B.J. Knowles, surveyed the crowd as the largest likely to show up for the holiday season.

He noted that flocked trees seem to be making a comeback this year after two years of slow sales. "After today we'll know more," he said. "They've been selling real steady."

In addition to cut trees shipped in from out of state, some locations feature a selection of live trees from Texas and New Mexico. Buyers of that kind "are mostly people who have had one before, and they've planted it in their yards already," Knowles said.

Of the two varieties of live trees at Wolfe's, pinon pines and elderica pines, the pinons seem to hold up better in West Texas, he noted.

"Normally if people are going to bring these into their homes, we recommend they don't do it until the last 10 days or so," he said.

That advice also seemed to hold up for people buying cut trees, according to Harold Hall, owner and manager of Oregon Trail Trees, an out-of-state concern now in its fifth year of coming to Midland.

Speaking at his lot located at the corner of Midkiff Road and Andrews Highway, Hall recommended that people "keep their trees as cool and damp as you can, and wait as long as possible before putting it up."

He also recommended choosing a location away from sun and heating vents and watering often with a plant food that is high in nitrogen.

"Any tree that anybody buys is going to dry out," he said. "It's just a question of who can keep it the freshest."

Many contacted Saturday said the Christmas tree business in Midland brings in a lot of out-of-town dollars from such cities as Fort Stockton, Rankin, Stanton, Andrews and Odessa. "And when they come to Midland to buy a tree, they shop a while here, too," he said.

Several sales persons contacted Saturday said tree buyers look cheerful this year and in the spirit of the holiday season.

And they made one special request: Lookers should try to stay out of restricted areas that may be dangerous — even if they see the absolutely most perfect tree that ever was on the other side.

AGENDA

"So what you have is just another tool for law enforcement to use against drug peddlers," Clemons says.

Another bill Clemons will carry this session is one that attempts to crack down on resort property promoters who use high-pressure sales tactics and misleading prize giveaways to attract potential buyers.

"I am trying to get these people... to tell the truth in their advertising," he says. "They are luring people with false promises and disappointing a lot of people."

Clemons says the problem is widespread of people being duped by misleading promotions of lake lots or condominiums that offer outrageous gifts that aren't what they're advertised to be.

Examples include the "bass boat" that turns out to be an inflatable kiddie raft or the "executive refrigerator" that's actually a small plastic ice chest.

"Some of these outfits are using high-pressure sales tactics to intimidate people, especially senior citizens," he says.

Clemons' bill would require a cooling-off period so people could go home and have time to think about whether they want to buy into a resort or time-share condo.

The bill would require that prizes be described in clear language that is not misleading. Promoters also would have to award prizes on site, and state a reasonable price for the items.

Clemons says he expects a lot of opposition from lobbyists representing condominium and resort owners. The other problem with the bill is it could affect legitimate sweepstakes like Publishers' Clearinghouse or Reader's Digest, although he says that's not its intent.

COWDEN

Cowden has been involved in scouting for nearly 50 years, having served as vice president of properties in charge of the council's 6,000-acre ranch, located in the Davis Mountains.

Currently, he serves as the scouts' vice president of administration. He also is a past recipient of the BSA's highest honor — the Silver Beaver Award.

Cowden sports an extensive civic resume. He was past director of First National Bank, past president of Midland Fair & Rodeo Association, past president of Midland Country Club and Midland Racquet Club; and past board member for the YMCA, the Midland Arthritis Foundation and the Cerebal Palsy Treatment Center.

He also has served as past director of Midland Savings & Loan and on the Citizen Committee For Courthouse Expansion. He's a past director of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, chairman of the Midland Youth Center and co-chairman to benefit the Jewish Hospital of Denver and First Objectives for Midland Planning as well as the Junior League's financial advisory board.

Cowden is a former school board member who served on the committee to desegregate public schools

He is a former trustee of Midland Memorial Hospital and served on the hospital's board of directors as its first president. Currently, he serves on MMH's board of governors.

A former member of the Midland College Foundation Board, who over the years has volunteered and chaired several divisions of United Way, Cowden is an active member of the First Baptist Church.

He has chaired the church stewardship program and the church history committee as well as worked as a member of the church building steering committee, financial board and long range planning.

A Midland High School graduate as well as a graduate of New Mexico Military Institute, Cowden worked two years at the Goldsmith Ranch before serving in the U.S. Air Force. He spent four years as a crew chief of a P-38 in World War II, including a 26-month stint that took him to England, Africa and Italy.

The Cowdens raised two children, Linda Jerman of Midland and Jim Cowden, an Austin attorney. Their grandchildren are Hunter and Allison Isbell and Carter Cowden. Cowden has one brother, Courtney Cowden of Midland, and one sister, Mrs. Joe Walter Jr. of Houston.

QUAKE

"It started out slow, then 'Bam!' for seven seconds," said Mitch Cramer, night manager at a grocery store, where the quake broke jelly jars, and juice and liquor bottles.

"The beef jerky fell down. The windows shook and the doors rattled," said Azad Medi, a clerk at a gas station and convenience store in El Toro.

Power outages were scattered throughout the area, including Pasadena, downtown Los Angeles and parts of the San Fernando Valley. The quake was felt in Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Diego, San Bernardino, Kern and Ventura counties.

About 100,000 customers of the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power were without electricity for up to seven minutes, said spokesman Ed Freudenburg. About 1,000 customers in the Van Nuys area were without power for about 90 minutes.

The temblor was at first believed to have been centered about six miles beneath the Rose Bowl. But additional readings later Saturday revealed the quake was centered 10 miles beneath the Pasadena City Hall, about two miles east of original estimates, said Daily at Caltech.

The City Hall was damaged in a stronger 1987 quake and now stands behind scaffolding, but did not appear to be damaged further although authorities had not yet closely examined it.

"A magnitude 5 is just beginning to get into the type of earthquake that one would expect damage, at least with the construction practices we have here," said Caltech seismologist Clarence Allen.

Pasadena officials said the quake broke a few residential gas lines and tripped numerous tripped burglar and auto alarms. The quake shattered plate glass windows in some stores.

Mark Gofstein, a newscaster for a radio station at the University of California at Los Angeles, said he was at the station on the Westwood campus when the temblor hit.

"A lot of pranksters started calling up the station requesting the song 'Shake, Rattle and Roll,'" Gofstein said.

Before the 1987 quakes in Whittier, the most destructive recent quake in metropolitan Los Angeles was the 1971 San Fernando quake, which measured 6.4 and caused $511 million in damage.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 5 can cause considerable damage in the local area, 6 severe damage and a 7 reading is a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage. An 8 is a "great" quake, capable of tremendous damage.

The San Francisco earthquake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the Richter scale.

MADD

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas also will issue a proclamation at the service.

Ms. Higgins also has been selected to represent the state of Texas in a national candlelight vigil December 11 at St. Paul, Minn. MADD representatives from the 49 other states and Puerto Rico will also attend.

"They chose someone from every state, and I just happened to be the one that was picked," she said. "It is quite an honor, because I will be representing the close to 1,500 victims who were killed by drunk drivers in 1987" in Texas.

The death toll caused by drunk drivers — after a decline — has begun to rise again despite the efforts of groups like MADD, Ms. Higgins said.

"It (drunk driving) is not the big thing anymore," she noted. "Other things have come to the forefront."

Farm workers leaving fields

PHOENIX (AP) — Many aliens who qualify for amnesty under a special program for farm workers are leaving the fields to seek other types of work, raising concern that there might be a future shortage of farm laborers, immigration officials say.

They also warned Friday that farmers who knowingly hire illegal aliens will be prosecuted under penalty provisions of the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act.

"Education and cooperation have been and will continue to be our key elements, but we fully intend to pursue our enforcement responsibilities in agriculture as aggressively as we have in other industries," said Patrick Kane, acting director of the Phoenix district of the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Kane commented one day after agricultural employers became subject to penalties for hiring illegal aliens. Non-agricultural employers have been subject to penalties since June 1.

Employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens are subject to civil fines of up to $10,000 per violation and criminal penalties of up to six months in prison.

Almost 3 million illegal aliens applied for amnesty, including 1.2 million farm workers and 1.7 million others who claim they qualify because they have lived in the United States continuously since before 1982.

SNIPER

Next was Maurilio Montoya Rodriguez with a .30-.30, later Alfredo Hernandez Bejarano with a .22 (-caliber) semiautomatic, and then I fired eight shots from a .22 semiautomatic rifle," Valenzuela said in his statement of Nov. 29..

In the statement Julio gave to the Chihuahua state police on Nov. 29, each of his teenage chums has an alias: Alfredo, 15, is "El Quelo" (a nonsensical nickname), Eduardo is "El Cuatro" (the fourth), and Maurilio, 17, has two, "El Cuevas" (the caves) and "Valerio" (a proper name).

All are now in police custody, with Eduardo being held on murder charges in Marfa, and Julio, Maurilio and Alfredo held in the state penitentiary in Chihuahua.

Julio told police he quit shooting after the initial ambush but said his friends pursued the rafters downstream.

The parents of Eduardo Rodriguez had little to say about the incident, according to the Times Herald.

"He went hunting. That's all we know. We didn't know a thing until the police came," said the suspect's mother, Juana Rodriguez.

His father, Eduardo Rodriguez Sr., who tends cattle and guides hunters, was away when the canyon shooting occurred.

"I went with him and the police to Presidio (Texas) after they arrested him, and he told me that the gringos shot first," said Rodgriguez.

According to investigators, Eduardo initially denied that a .44-caliber Magnum weapon — the murder weapon — had been involved, claiming that he had been shooting only a .22-caliber rifle.

13 filmmakers trapped in cave slip to safety

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Thirteen filmmakers trapped more than 250 feet underground in a desert cave slipped to safety one-by-one through a tiny hole dug by rescuers on Saturday, authorities said.

The group was trapped when a sudden rainstorm caused the mouth of the cave to collapse as they were making a documentary film in an isolated desert known as Nullarbor Plain in southwestern Australia.

The last of the group emerged Saturday evening from a small escape route that police said they had managed to dig. Police said no one was injured.

However, they described rescue conditions as very dangerous.

"It was raining and freezing cold, and they were afraid there would be another cave-in at any time," said police spokesman David Tree. "The rescuers had to be very careful.

"Police made a hole big enough for them to squeeze through one at a time, and they came out very slowly."

The group was filming a documentary on the system of caverns near the tiny township of Cocklebiddy on Friday when the storm washed away rocks, blocking the entrance to the cave.

South African whites protest resegregation

By DAVID CRARY

BOKSBURG, South Africa (AP) — A resegregation campaign by right-wing town councils is prompting many whites, including government leaders, to denounce racist practices that are legal and a few years ago were commonplace.

In effect, the revival of hard-line apartheid launched in Boksburg and a half-dozen other towns in the past week has provided whites with a mirror reflecting how blacks nationwide have been treated in recent decades.

To a large extent, whites don't like what they see.

"I feel so embarrassed to be from Boksburg," said Pam Berry, a housewife, at a meeting convened Thursday by residents opposed to the Conservative Party majority which took over the town council in elections Oct. 26.

The council voted Nov. 24 to resegregate public facilities — including the town hall, recreation areas and a large lakeside park — that had been opened to all races in recent years.

In the next few days, several other Conservative-controlled councils announced similar plans — one said it might impose a curfew barring blacks from the town of Carletonville at night.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha accused the Conservative Party of an "unnecessary emotional outburst of racism" and said its actions could intensify the sanctions campaign against South Africa. Discrimination "based merely on the color of skin" was wrong, Botha said.

YET BOTHA'S National Party, in power for 40 years, has made no moves to repeal laws that require racial classification of all citizens, that allow towns to bar blacks from public facilities, and that mandate segregation of neighborhoods, public schools and public hospitals.

Nationalist leaders ousted the mayor of Durban from the party recently because he favored integration of all-white beaches.

"I realize there are still (whites-only) signs, but the important point is that we are in a process of removing them," Botha said.

But in Botha's home city, Johannesburg, the National Party-controlled council has refused to integrate buses, swimming pools and recreation centers. The last major reforms in Johannesburg, say opposition politicians, came in 1973 when parks and libraries were integrated.

Pat Rogers, a spokesman for the anti-apartheid Progressive Federal Party, termed the National Party's attitude toward the resegregation campaign "nonsensical hypocrisy."

"If they really don't like it, why don't they abolish the Separate Amenities Act and legislate against racial discrimination," he said. "I would give the Conservative Party credit at least for greater honesty in this regard."

Many whites concerned by the Boksburg controversy have, for the first time, taken up confrontational pressure tactics that in the past were employed almost exclusively by anti-apartheid activists.

Business executives have threatened to cancel planned developments in Boksburg and other re-segregated towns.

National sports federations say they will prohibit tournaments in those towns unless the apartheid by-laws are rescinded.

Foes of the Conservatives in Boksburg are circulating petitions denouncing the council.

BLACK LEADERS have encouraged a tough response to the Conservative councils. Boksburg's black and mixed-race townships, Vosloorus and Reiger Park, are boycotting the town's white-owned stores to grant the council their wish for "a white Christmas."

Buchanan Jantjes, chairman of the management committee of Reiger Park, called on the National Party to abolish remaining apartheid laws. But he commended the government for allowing integration of many public facilities and for "turning a blind eye" to some violations, such as the growing number of blacks who live illegally in "whites-only" urban areas.

The Conservatives, Jantjes said, "are taking National Party laws off the shelves and dusting them off."

At the anti-Conservative meeting Thursday night, attended by about 300 whites, the loudest applause — a standing ovation — was given to Sidwell Mofokeng, the top-ranking local official of Boksburg's black township, Vosloorus.

"Vosloorus is with you," he told the cheering whites. "The struggle is ours together."

The next day, Mofokeng and 10 other black leaders entered the new whites-only zone around Boksburg Lake, in a protest covered by dozens of reporters but ignored by police.

Clive Derby-Lewis, a Conservative member of Parliament, described the controversy about Boksburg as "media hysteria" and noted that public facilities are segregated in the constituencies of many prominent Nationalist leaders.

Said another Conservative lawmaker, Koos van der Merwe: "The National Party has opened so few facilities, there is little for the Conservative Party to close."

Brazil production up

The gross domestic product of Brazil jumped 8.3 percent in 1985 after growing 4.5 percent in 1984, causing per capita income to surge 7.8 percent in those two years, according to the Inter-American Development Bank. If Brazil is excluded, the region grew by less than 1 percent in 1985.

Deadly cyclone takes man's only daughter

SHORON KHOLA, Bangladesh (AP) — When Dulal Biswas heard a cyclone was bearing down on his fishing village, he sent his 5-year-old daughter Shanti to her grandparents' home for safety.

Many of his friends and fellow boatmen disappeared in the storm Tuesday night, but Biswas survived and gave thanks that Shanti, too, was safe.

A few days later, he headed for the place where Shanti had gone, two miles further inland. On the way, he stumbled upon a child's body on the bank of the Pasur River, one of the more than 1,400 people who perished when the cyclone struck Bangladesh and India.

Drawing closer, he peered in disbelief at the bloated, decomposing body. Then he screamed, beat his chest and cried, "Shanti, my little doll, Shanti."

Biswas, incoherent with grief, could barely relate his story. Most of it was told by a volunteer from the Red Crescent Society, the Islamic equivalent of the Red Cross, who was with the boatman when he found his daughter's body.

Ram Chandra, the village elder, said Biswas' wife died a year ago of cholera and Shanti was his only child.

Chandra said six people died in Shoron Khola when the cyclone struck, leveling most of the straw-and-mud houses in the village of 160 people. But he said many people, perhaps dozens, had set out in their boats to try to escape the cyclone bearing down upon Shoron Khola, which is barely a mile from the Bay of Bengal.

"Those who stayed back and prayed were safe," the 55-year-old Chandra said. "Those who dared to take a boat are either dead or missing."

"The cyclone came and a wave 10 feet high crashed over the river. The wind howled and uprooted many trees and destroyed many houses," the village elder said.

In Bangladesh, about 1,050 people died in the cyclone, a Relief Ministry official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Saturday.

In India's West Bengal state, which abuts Bangladesh, the official death toll had reached 410 by Saturday.

The number of people still missing in Bangladesh, their fates unknown, ranged from 3,000 to 5,000, according to newspapers in Dhaka, the capital.

The newspapers estimated between 2.5 million and 5 million people were left homeless by the cyclone that devastated 30 of the country's 64 administrative districts.

The actual number of deaths may never be known. Communication is poor in much of the region, and bureaucracy slows the reporting of verifiable deaths in some places.

In Perojpur, 65 miles northeast of Shoron Khola, local council member Hamiduz Zaman claimed the cyclone caused greater property damage than one that killed at least 300,000 people in 1970.

That cyclone, which struck a year before Bangladesh won its independence from Pakistan in civil war, confined its fury mostly to the coastal region, while the latest storm reached more than 125 miles inland.

"Our latest cyclone did more damage to the standing crops, the infrastructures, dwellings and telecommunications than the one in 1970," Zaman said. "In my subdistrict, only 14 lives were lost (this time) but there was colossal damage to the rice crop and the mud-and-straw houses."

Proposed redefinition of 'who is a Jew?' splits more than hairs

By ARI L. GOLDMAN
New York Times News Service

RELIGION

An elderly man rose last month at the annual convention of the Council of Jewish Federations and spoke in a voice heavy with emotion.

"I came out of Auschwitz, a place where they decided 'who is a Jew,' " he said as the audience at the New Orleans convention center fell silent. "I didn't think I was going to live to see the day when it was decided in Israel."

In the month since the Israeli elections, American Jewish officials have rushed to Israel in great numbers and with surprising spontaneity to fight an Orthodox effort to amend Israel's Law of Return.

The remarks of the Holocaust survivor before some 3,000 Jewish convention delegates helped galvanize that response. Before the convention was over, a 10-member delegation left for what they called an "emergency mission" to Israel.

Under Orthodox tradition, a person is Jewish if he or she has a Jewish mother, and conversions must be conducted under strict Orthodox conditions.

The Orthodox parties want to amend the law — which gives every Jew the right to immigrate to Israel — to specify that among converts, only those converted by Orthodox rabbis are eligible for automatic citizenship. The reaction among American Jews, 90 percent of whom are non-Orthodox, has been widespread and anguished.

The ultimate impact of the American lobbying remains unclear because the parliamentary maneuvering in Israel is still going on.

But both Americans and Israelis agree the Americans had helped forestall the creation of a narrow government between Likud and the Orthodox parties.

"When I left for Israel on Nov. 13, it looked like a narrow government would be formed," said Dr. Ismar Schorsch, chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York. "That was delayed by the firestorm that swept across Israel from the States. Without it, there would have been a government in place already."

A few days before the News Orleans gathering, representatives of 27 Jewish groups had met in New York to draft a statement urging the major Israeli parties to resist the change.

The meeting, at the headquarters of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, had been called by Albert Vorspan, senior vice president of the union, which represents more than 1,000 Reform congregations.

Vorspan, a critic of Israel's handling of the Palestinian uprising, reached across the Jewish spectrum to organizations that have been reluctant to criticize Israel, such as Hadassah and B'nai B'rith.

"When we were finished, we knew we had to do more than send a telegram," said Rabbi Daniel B. Syme, one of the participants. Before the month was over, the groups sent a 33-member delegation to Israel.

At least five waves of American delegations have traveled to Israel in the month since the Israeli elections.

The various missions to Israel were not coordinated, much less inspired, by any central body. The depth of feeling about the issue seemed to have set the groups in motion with little time for orchestration.

Representatives of virtually every major American Jewish organization have made the trip. In blunt terms, the visitors warned that political and financial support from American Jews was at stake.

Some of the visitors had been publicly critical of Israel before, but others had never before breathed a word of dissent against the Jewish state.

The trips were so hastily planned that some American rabbis had to ask colleagues to fill in for them at weddings and funerals.

One Reform rabbi rushed to the airport after a meeting in Jerusalem so that he could get home to San Francisco in time for his daughter's bat mitzvah.

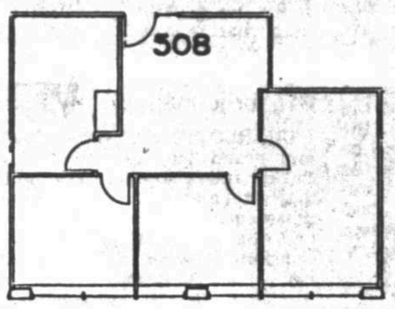

Colleagues explained the rabbi felt strongly about being in Israel despite the potential conflict with his daughter's bat mitzvah because the "who is a Jew?" issue struck very close to home for him.

His wife is a Reform convert. Both his wife and his daughter were in the category of those who would be ineligible for automatic citizenship in Israel should the Orthodox parties have their way.

Several participants told stories of running into American colleagues they did not know were in Israel.

400 arrested in abortion protests

Associated Press

Police arrested more than 400 people for blocking entrances to abortion clinics in New York, Ohio and Indiana on Saturday, and just the threat of a sit-in closed a New Jersey clinic, where protesters dispersed without incident.

All of the demonstrations were peaceful and no injuries were reported, police said.

"The goal from the beginning was to lock the doors and save babies from abortion," said Brian Rechten, spokesman for the New Jersey demonstrators, who he said kept as many as 10 women from entering the clinic.

"We're just trying to give them the other side," Rechten said. "We're not talking about a blob of protoplasm. We're talking about a human life."

The protests are the latest in a series around the country mostly organized by a group called Operation Rescue and dating to this summer's Democratic National Convention. Hundreds of people have been arrested, many staying in jail for extended periods, refusing to identify themselves.

New York police arrested about 250 anti-abortion demonstrators in a failed attempt to shut down a Manhattan Planned Parenthood clinic that provides abortions, counseling and other health services for women.

In Cincinnati, 77 people were charged with trespassing at a Planned Parenthood clinic, and three of them faced additional charges of resisting arrest because they had to be carried to police vans, authorities said.

'Torah Read-In' planned

NEW YORK (NYT) — Some people might think the idea grew from continual readings of James Joyce's "Ulysses" or Thomas Pynchon's "Gravity's Rainbow" on college campuses, but the organizers of Monday's all-day Torah Read-In at Manhattan's Central Synagogue claim a much earlier precedent.

It was in the year 428 B.C., or thereabouts, that, according to the Book of Nehemiah, Ezra the Scribe read the whole book of the law, "from daybreak until midday," to the assembled people of Israel.

Beverly Sills will begin reading a modern English translation of the five biblical books that make up the Torah at 8 a.m. The reading will be continued by dozens of figures in the arts and media, including Helen Gurley Brown, Vartan Gregorian, Marietta Tree, Norman Mailer, Barbara Walters, Kathleen Turner and Jimmy Breslin.

The public is invited for the reading as well as the live musical interludes that will mark the completion of each book and the evening candlelighting for the third night of Hanukkah.

Dismissal of SBC pastors up

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (NYT) — If you are a Southern Baptist pastor, the chances that your congregation will dismiss you are about one-third greater than four years ago.

An average of 116 of the 37,000 churches in the Southern Baptist Convention dismiss their pastors each month, according to a recent survey by a staff member of the Southern Baptist Sunday School Board.

Monthly dismissals averaged 88 in a 1984 survey. For Baptists, the Christian church is, above all, the local congregation. It may voluntarily join other Baptist churches in collective endeavors, but it always retains autonomy over matters like deciding its own leadership.

Ranked first among the reasons for the dismissals was a lack of communication between pastor and congregational leaders. Poor communication accounted for 13.4 percent of the terminations, but five other reasons were cited nearly as often: allegations of sexual or monetary immorality, poor pastoral performance, authoritarian style, power struggles and personality conflicts.

PTL indictments likely soon

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The federal grand jury investigating Jim Bakker and former associates at PTL may return indictments this week, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Unidentified sources told The Charlotte Observer Friday that they believe prosecutors are ready to end the 17-month investigation and intend to present an indictment for the grand jury to consider.

Bakker's attorney, Jim Toms, who has met with prosecutors, said he believes Bakker will be charged with mail and wire fraud involving PTL "lifetime partnerships" and with tax violations in connection with PTL money spent on Bakker.

Shuttle crew may have released spy satellite; NASA releases lunch menu

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA disclosed nothing but the lunch menu Saturday, the day space shuttle Atlantis was to deploy a top-secret spy satellite that can peer down at the Soviets through clouds and darkness.

The public space-to-ground radio link was kept silent while the crew of five military men went about their business on the second day of the mission, which began with Friday's launch and is under the control of the Air Force.

NASA said in advance it would break the silence only if major problems developed aboard the spacecraft.

By all accounts, Saturday was to have been the crew's busiest day, with the expected release of the $500 million Lacrosse satellite, but the only official word on the mission came from NASA, which released the menu: salmon, ham, macaroni and cheese and turkey tetrazzini.

Sources have said the satellite is capable of recording sharp images of military targets in the East Bloc. Weighing 18 tons and with a solar panel wingspan of 150 feet, the satellite, according to sources, will help verify Soviet compliance with arms treaties and serve as a "radar eye" for the stealth bomber.

■ Related story, Page 13B

The Soviet news agency Tass apparently knows plenty about the satellite, reporting many details about it, including the code name Lacrosse.

Atlantis' secret mission began with a spectacular public blastoff from Cape Canaveral, Fla., during a momentary calm in fierce, upper-level winds similar to those that halted the launch on Thursday.

Four hours after the shuttle blazed across the clear sky on a northward course, Mission Control broke the silence, saying: "The crew of Atlantis is go for orbit operations."

That announcement meant that the spaceship's cargo bay doors were open and the task of preparing the satellite for deployment could begin.

Only military men are aboard Atlantis, serving under Navy Cmdr. Robert L. Gibson, the commander. The pilot is Air Force Lt. Col. Guy S. Gardner, and the mission specialists are Col. Richard M. Mullane and Lt. Col. Jerry L. Ross of the Air Force and Navy Cmdr. William M. Shepherd.

According to pre-flight reports, Mullane was to be inside the shuttle cabin using the orbiter's robot arm to hoist the satellite out of the cargo bay and release it.

'Libby' Dole rumored to be Bush's U.N. choice

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole has been chosen by President-elect George Bush to serve as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, informed sources on Capitol Hill said Saturday.

The announcement is expected to be made by Bush as early as Monday, Cox Newspapers has learned.

Official spokesmen for Bush denied any knowledge of Mrs. Dole's selection. And Walt Riker, press secretary to Mrs. Dole's husband, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, said: "Elizabeth Dole says this is news to her. She has heard nothing from the Bush people."

"We cannot confirm or deny this report," Riker said. "However, she is a world-class talent. She will have a lot of options as to what to do next."

Both Alix Glenn, at Bush transition headquarters, and Steve Hart, the vice president's chief spokesman, said they were unaware of any planned announcement by Bush involving the U.N. ambassadorship, or on any personnel matters in his new administration to be made on Monday.

However, sources close to Sen. Dole's Capitol Hill office insisted on Saturday that Mrs. Dole's selection is "a done deal."

Mrs. Dole, 52, resigned her post as transportation secretary 14 months ago in order to help her husband wage a hard campaign for the presidency against Bush and several other Republican candidates last year and in early 1988.

As the New Hampshire primary unfolded last February, the senator from Kansas and the vice president became enmeshed in an angry struggle for control of the top of the ticket. Dole dropped out of the campaign by the end of March.

Last month, after Bush defeated Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis for the presidency, Bush met with Dole and the two promised to work closely together during the Bush administration.

Before Bush selected Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana as his surprise running mate, at the start of the GOP nominating convention last August in New Orleans, the personable and witty Mrs. Dole was among those most frequently mentioned as a top contender for the job.

Nussbaum describes life of domestic torture with Steinberg

NEW YORK (AP) — Hedda Nussbaum, a once-pretty woman whose face and psyche bear the scars of what she describes as domestic torture, has told of a sorrowful scenario that ended in death for 6-year-old Lisa Steinberg.

Monday, Ms. Nussbaum, a former editor for Random House, will return for a third day as the key prosecution witness in the trial of her former companion, disbarred lawyer Joel Steinberg, who is charged with murdering the illegally adopted child they raised as their own.

Her testimony, broadcast live by three local television stations and recounted nationally, has described an 11-year relationship that deteriorated with beatings, brainwashing, food deprivation and other bizarre punishments for imagined transgressions.

A 1981 photograph shows a smiling, vivacious, brown-haired, Hedda Nussbaum who bears no resemblance to the woman now testifying: gray-haired, with a boxer's nose, a cauliflower ear, a deformed mouth, an injured eye.

"I'm hoping something positive will come out of it: more support, more treatment and more awareness for women and for children," said Janet Segal, director of clinical services at the Four Winds Hospital in Katonah, where Ms. Nussbaum has received psychiatric treatment since March.

"It's not something that can be treated with a pill or one or two (therapy) sessions. It takes a lot of concerted effort."

In a slow, deliberate voice, punctuated by pain when she talks about Lisa, Ms. Nussbaum, 46, has told how she came to view Steinberg as a "godlike figure" — asking his permission to eat, obeying his orders to sleep on the floor or sit in a tub of cold water.

Jurors saw handwritten pages in which Nussbaum vowed to care about Steinberg's hair, clothes, work, problems, diet, future, teeth and other concerns. In another paper, she wrote 10 times that "anger is destructive" and that "self-defense is regressive."

Steinberg convinced Ms. Nussbaum that she had belonged to a sado-masochistic cult, then encouraged her to imagine the details after convincing her she had amnesia, she testified.

It was in this climate, the prosecution alleges, that an abused and neglected Lisa was hurt on the night of Nov. 1, 1987. Hours later, Joel Steinberg, smoking cocaine, admitted knocking the child down and said it was because she stared at him, Ms. Nussbaum testified. Lisa died four days later of a brain injury.

Ms. Nussbaum was arrested with Steinberg after the little girl's death, but charges against her were dropped and she agreed to testify against him.

The prosecution contends that Ms. Nussbaum, who lost her job when she frequently missed work because of injuries and then spent most of her time confined to the family's Greenwich Village apartment, was herself too much of a victim to have helped the child.

"I can liken it to being a prisoner of war," Ms. Segal said Saturday.

The battered spouse syndrome, Ms. Segal said, is "a process of brainwashing where you end up not really knowing what you think, what you believe, what's right, what's wrong. ...Gradually, there's an erosion of spirit, of will, of judgment."

Its victims often are those who "tend to be a bit timid, possibly fearful of the unknown," she said.

'Clauses' seek children's feelings about holiday

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Dan Bloom is asking children nationwide to keep their gift lists and instead write Santa and his wife about their feelings this holiday season.

Bloom, a 39-year-old author of children's books and part-time teacher in Alaska's capital, promises that Santa and Merry Claus will write back free of charge.

"I want the kids to describe their families, their preparations for Christmas, what they think the spirit of Christmas is, their hopes for world peace and, most importantly, to name somebody who's doing a good deed," Bloom said recently.

Bloom's "Heartlight Letterline" is not his first holiday letter-writing program.

Seven years ago, while living in the western Alaska town of Nome, Bloom invented the characters "Bubbie and Zadie" as a Jewish alternative to Mr. and Mrs. Claus. He invited children to write Bubbie and Zadie and share their feelings and joy about the holiday season.

"When I was a kid growing up in Massachusetts, I felt left out of the (Christmas) season," recalled Bloom, who is of Jewish descent. "That was my main impetus to begin Bubbie and Zadie. I thought maybe there could be something for Jewish kids to participate in."

After news articles about Bubbie and Zadie appeared across the nation, Bloom received thousands of letters from children of all faiths.

"In Yiddish, Bubbie and Zadie means Grandma and Grandpa, and basically they are everybody's grandma and grandpa," Bloom said. "They represent the love that grandparents have for grandchildren, and I think that's why it worked. I think if I had created Father Hanukkah or something, it wouldn't have been as endearing."

Bloom said he was motivated to keep the program going by the wonder and spirit of childhood reflected in the letters.

"I remember one of the first letters I got said, 'Dear Bubbie and Zadie: Do you happen to know my Bubbie and Zadie, Herman and Sarah from Cincinnati?' — as if these grandparents in Nome know all grandparents. The children's world is an amazing world," he said.

Bloom wrote a 1983 book about Bubbie and Zadie. Sales of the book, which includes an address, have kept dozens of letters coming to the mythical couple each year.

Last fall, he decided to apply the same letter-writing idea to Santa Claus to open it up to more children and to counter the materialism that has become part of the season.

"There's a lot of these little mail-order things where for $5 you can have a Christmas letter sent from Santa Claus to your kid, but it's just a commercial thing and there's not much feeling to it," Bloom said.

"As I see Santa and Merry, they are everybody's grandparents. It fits in, I think, with the Santa Claus myth."

Bloom said he will answer all the letters and plans to recruit friends to help if necessary.

"I get enormous satisfaction in doing this."

Letters should include a return address and be sent by Dec. 15 to: Santa and Merry Claus, P.O. Box 555, Auke Bay Station, Juneau, Alaska 99821.

Bush seeks to recruit women, minorities for administration

WASHINGTON (NYT) — President-elect Bush, who has pledged to recruit women and members of minority groups for his administration, will soon announce a nationwide effort to enlist Republican governors and campaign officials to seek them out, officials on his transition team said Saturday.

They said that in the next two weeks Bush would announce plans to use his national political network and state Republican organizations to come up with "fresh faces" for the administration, "with a special emphasis on women, minorities and the disabled."

The effort is designed to help Bush expand his base of political support, which the transition officials say has not reached its full potential.

It is also designed to head off the impression that the new administration will be dominated by white males, as the Reagan administration has been, with only token representation of other groups.

The reaction of some feminists and civil rights advocates was a mixture of skepticism and hope that Bush's policies in both recruiting and governing would be more acceptable to them than President Reagan's.

The overall effort has been placed under Robert M. Teeter, Bush's campaign poll taker and adviser, who is co-director of the transition, and Chase Untermeyer, Bush's transition personnel chief.

The president-elect has designated three members of his transition team to seek out those who are female, black or Hispanic.

One top aide said, "It's really an effort to break through the 'inside the Beltway' group that you usually get."

In part, the aides acknowledge, the effort is politically calculated and is aimed especially at blacks.

Only 12 percent of black voters chose Bush in the election, according to analysis of polling data. His aides say there is a reservoir of far more black support for Republicans at the local, state and national levels if the new president selects blacks for high-ranking jobs and supports policies that are important to blacks, especially Justice Department enforcement of civil rights laws.

Among the blacks mentioned for prominent jobs in the Bush administration are Thaddeus Garrett Jr., a business consultant and former domestic policy adviser to Bush; Dr. Leroy Keith, president of Morehouse College in Atlanta, and Alan Keyes, a former State Department official who ran unsuccessfully this year against Sen. Paul S. Sarbanes, D-Md.

Others are Arthur Fletcher, an assistant secretary of labor in the Nixon administration; Steven Rhodes, a former special assistant to President Reagan for intergovernmental affairs, and Constance B. Newman, a former official of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, who is now in charge of Bush's efforts to recruit blacks.

Although Bush aides say the president-elect has demanded in private meetings that his transition team seek out more women and members of minority groups, and although they say he will employ far more of them than Reagan did, representatives of some civil rights groups express doubt about his commitment.

SSA won't spend homeless funds, lawmaker claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security Administration has bottled up money to be spent on the homeless at the same time the agency's head is considering spending some $1.6 million on souvenir certificates, a congressman complained.

The attack leveled by Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., at Social Security Commissioner Dorcas Hardy comes at a time she is quietly campaigning for a post in the administration of President-elect George Bush.

However, Weiss, chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee on human resources, denied that his criticism — contained in a letter to Bush — was designed to derail Hardy's career.

He urged Bush to "reject the misplaced priorities" of Hardy.

Weiss said he and his subcommittee have had differences with Hardy on other matters "at a time when there was never any question about her continuation in office."

Meanwhile, on a different matter, Hardy announced Saturday that she has rejected a controversial draft proposal to narrow disability applicants' appeal rights.

She said she remains convinced that the disability appeals process needs reforms, but said the low-level staff proposal — which was leaked to a newspaper two weeks ago before reaching her desk — was not equitable, compassionate or efficient.

Weiss said Hardy has not acted on part of a 1987 budget act authorizing $1.25 million last year and $2.5 million this year in grants for homeless outreach projects.

Hardy has argued that Congress failed to provide money for the program and that it duplicated other government services.

She recommended that the Department of Health and Human Services seek repeal of the program or find an agency more familiar with state grant programs to run it.

Congress wanted states to use the money to find and help homeless people eligible for benefits, particularly the mentally and physically disabled who are entitled to Supplemental Security Income, Weiss said in the Dec. 2 letter.

"It's really the season that warrants it," he said in an interview. "Here we are with winter upon us. There are people out on the streets who are obviously and clearly qualified for SSI benefits. The purpose of the legislation was to help states reach out and identify those individuals...We felt we ought to bring it to the attention of the president-elect."

Phil Gambino, a spokesman for the Social Security Administration, said Congress not only failed to allocate money for the outreach grant program but in fact gave the agency less money in its overall budget than it requested for fiscal 1988 and 1989.

"Therefore we have to rely on other alternative means" to reach the homeless, Gambino said. He said employees at the 1,300 SSA offices nationwide work closely with shelters and advocacy groups to make sure the homeless receive benefits.

"Commissioner Hardy is very much concerned that we deliver our services compassionately and fairly to the homeless. We think we're doing a good job of it," Gambino said.

Weiss called that claim "baloney...They're not doing any kind of outreach that I can see. Obviously it was the congressional view that the kind of work that was needed was not being done."

He said there was no specific allocation because Congress assumed the agency would fund the relatively tiny grant program from its general budget.

At the same time she was fighting the homeless program, Weiss said, Hardy was supporting a $1.6 million plan to send decorative certificates, suitable for framing, to Social Security beneficiaries. Hardy approved the plan despite a recommendation to scrap it, according to documents supplied by Weiss' office.

Mayor Richard Berkley, his wife, and the city's Fire Chief Ed Wilson join hands and recite the Lord's Prayer during a public memorial service in Kansas City, Mo., Saturday, for the six firefighters who died in a massive explosion last Tuesday.

Hundreds of firefighters honor six fallen comrades

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Hundreds of firefighters and police from across the country paid tribute Saturday to six firefighters killed in an explosion blamed on arsonists.

"They were willing and able to take risks in their everyday jobs for our protection, risks most of us would never dream of taking," Mayor Richard Berkley told the mourners.

"So we owe these men a great deal. We owe them a commitment to do everything in our power to prevent things like this from ever happening again," the mayor said.

Relatives of the six firefighters wiped away tears during parts of the hour-long ceremony at Arrowhead Stadium. Flower arrangements covered the stadium's field, where football's Kansas City Chiefs play.

The firefighters died Tuesday when about 50,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate, a blasting agent, exploded at a highway construction site.

They had responded to a report that a pickup and construction trailer were on fire. Witnesses have said they saw people prowling in the area earlier.

An estimated 2,500 firefighters and public safety officers and 5,000 private citizens attended the memorial, said fire department spokesman Harold Knabe.

Alfred Whitehead, president of the International Association of Firefighters, spoke to the gathering in a trembling voice.

"As firefighters, we see death, destruction, pain and sorrow all the time," said Whitehead. "We don't usually share it with anyone else, just ourselves."

"But that doesn't mean we don't laugh, we don't love, we don't cry, and we don't hurt."

Sgt. Troy Cole said police have received 50 to 75 tips, most of them after Wednesday's announcement of a $35,000 reward. An anonymous donor contributed $25,000.

The men who died included two captains, Gerald C. Halloran, 57, and James H. Kilventon Jr., 54, who between them had 66 years of experience with the department.

Funerals were held Friday for the captains and firefighters Thomas McKarnin, 42, and Thomas M. Fry, 41. The rites for firefighter Michael R. Oldham, 32, were Saturday, and those for firefighter Luther E. Hurd, 31, will be Monday.

Friday, pumper trucks draped in black carried the first four firefighters to their graves, with Halloran and Kilventon buried not far from each other at a cemetery in suburban Raytown.

"It's difficult to try to reconcile the infinite love of God with what's happened here," said Bishop John Sullivan of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Kansas City-St. Joseph. "We're called not just to know God and to love him, but to trust him and put outselves in his hands."

"These men are very special," he said. "These men labor not much for monetary compensation but for the love of others."

U.S. rejecting some Soviet Jews

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In a major change, the United States has begun rejecting applications from some Soviet Jews and other Soviet citizens who want to come to this country as refugees.

State Department and immigration officials said Friday that during the last few months at least 175 Soviet Jews had been denied refugee status because they could not demonstrate "a well-founded fear of persecution" in the Soviet Union.

In addition, they said, 99 Soviet Armenians have been denied refugee status for the same reason.

The Union of Councils for Soviet Jews, another private group, said "hundreds of Soviet Jews" had been denied refugee status in the last few months.

Bishop's sale of land upsets congregation

HONOLULU (AP) — Clergy and parishioners of a Roman Catholic church Saturday criticized their bishop's decision to sell to Japanese investors the ocean-front land on which their parish has worshiped since the 1830s.

The $45 million deal, which will result in the demolition of the copper-roofed, modernistic St. Augustine Church in the heart of Waikiki and the building of a new church nearby, was announced Friday by Bishop Joseph Ferrario of Honolulu.

Diocese offices were besieged with phone calls Friday and Saturday after news reports of the sale. The diocese hired a public relations firm to help field the calls.

An advertisement taken out in the major daily newspapers here Saturday urged Catholics to protest by writing to the Vatican in Rome, which would have the power to overturn Ferrario's decision.

The church, built in 1962, is situated on a 50,000-square-foot parcel where the Sacred Hearts Fathers have led services since a thatched missionary church was built in the 1830s. Members of the order and the congregation complained that the deal went through without their approval.

"I thought they were going to take our feelings into consideration," said Adeline Trask, one of about 35 parish members invited to a meeting with the bishop in May to discuss unsolicited offers that were being made for the church property amid a land boom fueled by Japanese investments.

The purchaser announced Friday is Hama Kikaku, a Tokyo real estate company. The company agreed to allow the church to remain free of rent for 2½ years while a new church is built several blocks away on property also owned by Hama Kikaku, the Honolulu Diocese said.

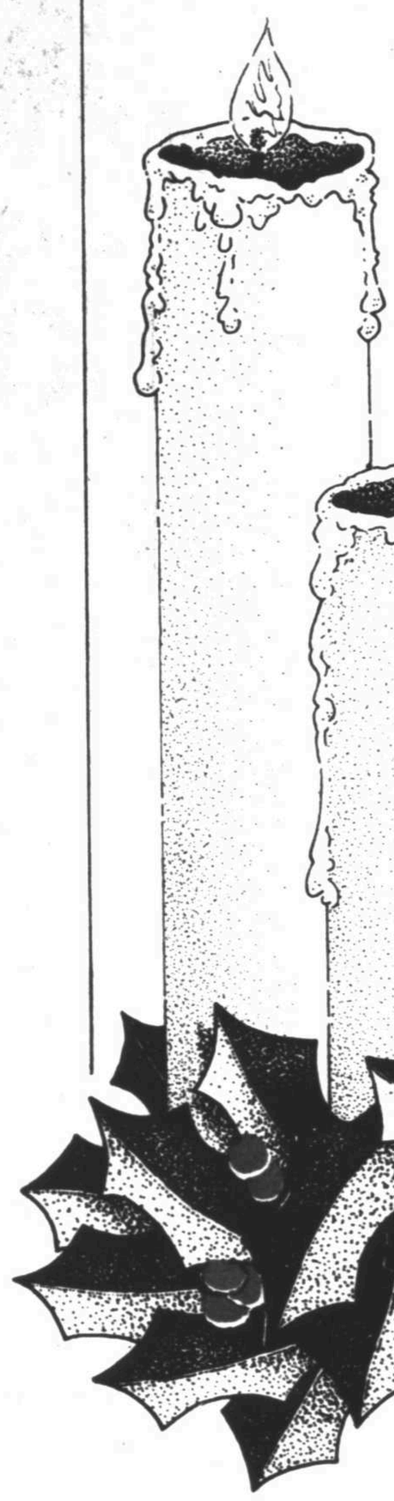

After the new church is built, $25 million will be left for a variety of educational and charitable causes, Ferrario said.

"I really think this use of real property is a real stewardship of our properties," he said. "It's a question of justice — the haves serving the have-nots, of respecting the rights of people of the parish."

Code Enforcement Administrator George Wolf overlooks a model concept of the City of Midland, which he proposed in the 1970s as a rejuvenation of the eastside.

City official would do it all again

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Planning. Some do it for retirement. Others do it for families. And still others, like George Wolf, plan for their cities.

"I've been through five mayors and a lot of councilmen," says Wolf, a 27-year civil servant, who will leave the ranks of city government after a long and somewhat hectic career.

"When I came here there were 58,000 people. Now, what is it, 100,000? asks Wolf. "The growth has been good. Some has come a little too fast ... but we've accomplished a lot."

Currently the city's code enforcement administrator, Wolf is credited for putting together one of the most effective zoning protection programs since coming to work in 1961.

During that period, he's worn the hats that go with it, serving in every capacity from director of planning to superintendent of inspections.

Born in St. Louis in 1923, Wolf came to Midland in 1959 after a visiting his brother and sister-in-law. "But I never dreamed I'd move here. It just seemed like a better place to raise children."

Apparently his children agree. Today, all of them, including eight grandchildren, still live in the Tall City.

In a day and age where public officials are under constant scrutiny, and many talented people are steered toward the private sector, there are still those, like Wolf, that are quite satisfied with their roles.

Wolf says he's never regretted a day at city hall. "If I had to do it again, I'd be in public service. I enjoy the people and I'll miss that aspect ... it's all in the mind. You try over the years to find just what people want from you."

Like any other job, Wolf says there's always a share of public "gripes" that he's tried to address and at the same time keep a sense of humor about — like the time the city received complaints about treehouses and was later forced to issue permits for them.

But much has changed over the years and a lot for the better, according to Wolf. "Sure, its grown fast, but that's progress. Midland has been fortunate to have (city) councils that had enough forsight to get things done for the good of the common people."

And Wolf has had a hand in that. From 1970 through 1975, he served as director of planning and traffic — the forerunner to the current planning and development department, where he worked on Midland's master plan.

It was Wolf who proposed a city-built convention center east of Main Street to rejuvenate the eastside. But the city opted instead to develop the smaller Midland Center, which he admits, serves a purpose.

"I still feel we need a convention center of some type in this community, but economics and oil have a lot to do with governing those kinds of projects," he said.

Wolf says he has no special plans after he retires and is more thankful, than anything else, that he was able to bring his family to Midland. "The Lord's been good to me," he says as he prepares for his last holiday at City Hall. "My children keep asking my wife and I what we want for Christmas. I tell them happiness."

CDRI proposes instructional center in area

The Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute is proposing a $200,000 CDRI Interpretive Center between Alpine and Fort Davis to help explain the "scope and magnitude" of the desert.

Bruner

CDRI probes into the complexities and natural wonders of the sprawling Chihuahuan Desert of Mexico and the Southwestern United States.

And to help illustrate the desert's marvels, beauties and properties, CDRI in Midland on Monday night will present showings of the CDRI films "Trilogy on the Chihuahuan Desert," narrated by Burgess Meredith, and "The Spiral Dance: Reflections on Big Bend National Park," narrated by Burl Ives.

The filmed presentations will be held at 7 p.m. Monday in the Midland Community Theatre at 2000 W. Wadley Ave., according to Tom Bruner, a Midland lawyer who is a member of CDRI's 27-member board of directors.

"I am, just by nature, a conservationist," Bruner said. "I just have a deep affection for this part of the world."

In addition to the films, which Bruner said have won "national acclaim," CDRI will present an exhibition of original color photography of Chihuahuan Desert wildlife — fauna and flora — by Bruner. The photography ranges from a bumble bee invading a wildflower to a stealthy coyote hiding in tall grass. Photography also includes Montezuma "crazy" quail, the gray fox, wild turkeys, javelina, deer, and the red-tailed hawk.

Shoppers divided on Bush namesake school

By JANE MARLER DEES

George Bush's name is fit to go down in history as the nation's 41st president, but it shouldn't necessarily grace the facade of a new public primary school — at least not at this time, according to an unscientific random poll conducted Saturday afternoon.

Of 25 Christmas shoppers queried informally at Midland Park Mall Saturday, 14 were against a proposal to name the yet-to-be-built school after President-elect Bush.

Midland Independent School District trustees will decide the matter Dec. 13.

The seven-member body has said it will name the new northwest Midland facility after Bush or appoint a panel to study alternatives submitted by MISD students.

The only name mentioned as an alternative Saturday was the late Gladys Hanger Abell.

The longtime Midland philanthropist donated huge sums of money to Midland's and other Texas cities' scholastic communities.

The 11 shoppers in favor of a "George Herbert Walker Bush Primary School" consistently cited two basic facts — he is president and a former Midlander.

After chuckling a moment, data processing manager Paul Johnson exclaimed: "Ohhhhhh...why not?"

Linda Williams, a general clerk, believes the president-elect deserves the honor simply because he's a former Midlander who will soon be running the country.

Others agreed.

"He lived here once and he's the only president to have ever come from Midland," said Lauren Leek, an interior designer. "Besides, I'm kind of patriotic."

MHS teacher honored by chamber

Nomination letters energetically praise school's spirit sponsor

From Staff Reports

It must have been sheer energy that helped Janice Strickland win November "Teacher of the Month" honors from the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Every day the Midland High School educator walks five miles for exercise, she says. That's at the end of a strenuous school day spent teaching two honors courses, sponsoring two cheerleading squads and one spirit club.

According to Ms. Strickland, she is motivated to do all those things by the children she teaches.

"I enjoy watching people successfully work through the challenges placed before them," she said. "... I love sharing with them (her students) my love and interest in literature because literature is about life, the world in which we live and the people with whom we interact daily.

"Witnessing students as they find meaning in what they read and, in turn, write effectively about these ideas is truly exciting," the teacher explained.

Nominated for the honors by two Midland women, Ms. Strickland teaches Honors English III Advanced Placement and Honors Vocabulary Development. In addition, she sponsors the MHS Packbackers and the junior varsity and varsity cheerleading squads.

"Ms. Strickland is an exceptional and brilliant instructor," wrote Lynda Kay Beal in her nomination letter. "Her classroom is a rewarding experience filled with quality challenges and stimulating discussions to expand the students' learning."

Added Nadine Craddick: "She is an asset to our academic climate. ...

"Through my daughter's three-year involvement in Packbackers, I have witnessed Janice's unflagging energy in dealing with this organization ... she has indeed evidenced excellence in those areas indicative of good leadership: dependability, enthusiasm, organization and cooperation," wrote Mrs. Craddick.

Ms. Strickland taught in the Monahans schools prior to joining the MHS faculty in 1976. After a short stint in Denver, Colo., she moved back to MHS in 1983.

Reflecting on her award, Ms. Strickland said: "I felt very honored. As much as I appreciate this award, my greatest rewards are those which involve my students' success.

"When they do well on the AP test, the SAT test or come back from college saying that their high school English courses have sufficiently prepared them, then I feel the value and the satisfaction of being a teacher."

Midland Realtors honor their outgoing president

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

As 1988 draws to a close, the Midland Board of Realtors honored outgoing president Darrell McDonald as Realtor of the Year and then turned its eyes to 1989 and its new leadership Saturday at its annual installation banquet and awards presentation, held at the Petroleum Club.

McDonald

"Imagine you're on Broadway, and the 1988 edition of the Midland Board of Realtors is closing and the 1989 edition is about to open," urged Petey Parker of Dallas.

Parker, vice president in charge of relocation services for Ebby Halliday Realtors, was the special guest at the banquet and administered the oath of office to the incoming officers and directors. A past president of the Lewisville Chamber of Commerce, she is active in public speaking and legislative work for the Texas Association of Realtors and the National Association of Realtors.

As she administered the oath to incoming president Kay Sutton, Parker likened Sutton to the star of a broadway show. "She carries the responsibilities; she is accountable to you, for you and with you."

President-elect Mary Pagett was likened to the understudy, waiting in the wings for her turn in the spotlight next year, Parker said. Second vice-president Roy Proctor has the supporting role, and secretary-treasurer Lee Denny not only is reponsible for the finances, but must keep the board on track.

We cling to pre-conceived notion of children's behavior

Ott

It must be hard being a child.

No matter what you do, certain people are going to find your behavior crude and obnoxious.

Of course, most children, at least the ones I have been exposed to, richly deserve those condemnations.

Still, we should be fair on this matter. Not all children are out-of-control animals just waiting to strike their next unsuspecting victim.

No, indeed. Some are little angels.

The fact of the matter is, many of us have been guilty of establishing stereotypes for children and then refusing to accept any positive changes in their behavior.

We prefer to hold on to our preconceived notions.

Children are demons and that's all there is to it.

And, we have mental pictures to verify our suspicions.

We all remember the worst of children we have met — the kind that snivel and whine and manipulate and fuss and beg and squirm and ... well, you get the point.

We remember that "darling" little freckled-faced 10-year-old who would tear through the house with reckless abandon, knocking over chairs, spilling drinks and eventually leaping into your lap, where his knee would invariably land in a portion of the male body that was never intended to be kneed.

We remember that "precious" little 12-year-old girl who would always seem so sweet on the surface, but somehow could never be trusted. She would tattle on her best friend.

And, we remember that "delightfully rambunctious" eight-year-old who would cuss with such fervor that you would think he had appeared on the Watergate tapes.

Yes, we must all acknowledge the simple fact that we are guilty of stereotyping children. We believe what we were taught to believe.

But that's not fair. We should change. We should give the little tykes the benefit of the doubt.

Not all of them are evil.

Consider, for example, a recent get-together I attended. It was held in a stylish home here in Midland and the guest list included a wide assortment of local society, including rich people, people who others consider rich but really aren't, people who looked like they would have rather been at a tractor pull than this particular party and at least three or four small children.

As the night progressed, things took their normal course. Two or three of the adults had too much to drink and began expressing their views on the Texas A&M football scandal with rather loud voices, which, of course, led to a physical confrontation in the kitchen. One of the women, who had blond hair with dark roots, began flirting with her boss. Her husband, a vocal defender of the A&M recruiting practices, spotted the mischievous behavior and began yelling incoherently at his wife, accusing her of being "a closet Longhorn." And, the evening's host, a man in his mid-forties who hadn't wanted to attend his own party, gulped two glasses of wine and passed out on the sofa.

The children, meanwhile, performed beautifully. They cleaned up after their parents, helped put two of them to bed and hid the keys from a dirty old man who had absolutely no business trying to drive home.

As I was about to leave, the children gathered around and apologized for their parents behavior. They said they had certainly enjoyed the evening and hoped I would come back sometime.

We talked briefly about the cultural changes occurring in the Soviet Union and then shook hands before I left.

As I drove away, I thought, "Darn kids. I wish they learn to act like adults."

CDRI

Bruner, who has been on the CDRI board since 1980, said Midlanders and other West Texans are invited to the free showings on the desert.

THE CHIHUAHUAN Desert lies between the Sierra Madre Oriental and the Sierra Madre Occidental mountain ranges of Mexico and extends into much of West Texas, New Mexico and parts of Arizona.

CDRI was established 15 years ago in Alpine to conduct research into the desert and to provide the public with information on the area.

Midland lies on the eastern outskirts of the desert.

"It's amazing," Bruner said. "Many people treat the West Texas desert as though it had no uniqueness. To me, it has a pristine environment that has not been trampled upon by man because it is so remote. A lot of people don't see the beauty in the desert." The desert is fraught with "many, many beautiful and scenic" display.

For example, Bruner calls the mountains in the Davis Mountains "desert islands."

"They are green oases among the otherwise dry environment."

Bruner, who seems to find a peaceful kinship in nature's untamed but often-gentle wilds, has built in the Davis Mountains a remote rock house, which he calls his "first love."

The Chihuahuan Desert is "picturesque, adventuresome and diverse," Bruner said. "It is both an Alpine and a desert environment" — mountains, valleys, rivers and plains.

A desert, Bruner noted, has "adequate" water to remain a desert and to display the aquatic biosphere peculiar to a desert. Any more water, and the desert would cease being a desert.

Through the planned Interpretive Center, the CDRI further would expand on its research into the expansive desert. Scientific research in the desert's Davis Mountains already takes in The University of Texas McDonald Observatory on Mount Locke, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration ranging laser, and a radio-telescope operated by the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics.

THE DAVIS MOUNTAINS southwest of Midland are ideal for the observatory, Bruner noted, because of the absence of "light pollution" associated with metropolitan areas.

"There has been a wonderfully dark sky in Fort Davis for years and will always be," he said.

Additionally, for years, the Davis Mountains and the Big Bend National Park areas have been used extensively for geological field work by colleges and universities and as field laboratories by artists, such as photographer Jim Bones and Western artist Wayne Baize.

"It's a fertile field for science," Bruner said of the desert. Much biological and geological research into the desert is based at Alpine's Sul Ross State University, where CRDI is headquartered.

"I don't look upon this as a way to exploit the desert," Bruner said of CDRI research.

For instance, "We could do marvelous work into wildlife management and studies of the mountain lion and endangered species." And, he said, "If we could find some use for the creosote (tar) bush, we could all be millionaires."

The CDRI board and Executive Director Dennie Miller manage the institute's 500-acre Chihuahuan Desert Visitor Center, which is three miles south of Fort Davis in the foothills of the Davis Mountains. The center includes a natural trail, desert gardens and a greenhouse.

THE PROPOSED Interpretive Center, designed by Houston architect Marvin Watson, is patterned after the 1800s military buildings at the Fort Davis National Historic Site. The building would take in 2,000 square feet.

CDRI, which traditionally has strong Midland support, is seeking 500 individuals and businesses to each donate $400 to raise the $200,000 needed to construct the building, exhibit room, central exhibit, exhibits, veranda, gift shop, and media room. Estimated cost of the building structure is $66,400.

Of the CDRI 27 board members, four are from Midland: Bruner, who is the board's secretary; Jack Pope Jr., vice president, and Frank Cahoon and Clayton Williams Jr., board members. Board president is James E. "Jim" Scudday of Alpine.

"Throughout our 15-year history," Miller wrote in a letter to CDRI friends and supporters, "our dreams and aspirations have been constrained by a limited budget and spiraling costs. Further pressures have come from a weak West Texas economy.

"Through it all," Miller said, "we have consistently produced quality results in all endeavors and have continued to grow in scope and stature."

BUSH

Added Adolpho Hernandez, a waiter: "He's our new president and he's from here."

Others concurred, but were less enthusiastic. "To be serious, I could care less," explained Dr. Michael Sparks, though he said he favored the proposition, nonetheless.

Many of 14 against the proposal either wanted to adopt a "wait and see" approach before naming the school after Bush or just plain didn't like the man.

"What if he turned out to be like (former president Richard) Nixon? Do we want a school named after him?" asked Craig Darrough, a geologist.

"He'll probably turn out to be a fine president. I voted for him. But the next thing you know they'll say, 'Let's name a school after Baby Jessica'," Darrough added.

Voicing stronger opposition was city of Midland employee Dane Orr.

"I didn't vote for him and I don't like him," Orr said. "I think he should have picked (Panamanian Gen. Manuel) Noriega as his running mate."

Retail manager Kathy Barrett said things are fine the way they are now.

"I just don't think everything should change just because he's in public office," Ms. Barrett said.

Toolpusher Jerry Trent also wants to wait and see on the president-elect's actions.

"He just hasn't shown enough of anything to me" to warrant the honor, Trent explained.

Added truck maintenance worker Victor Garibay: "Most all the schools names are from history. We should keep it that way."

The new primary school is being built as a part of the district's sweeping elementary expansion program financed with an $11.8 million bond referendum passed last summer.

A group of citizens organized by Midland attorney Charles "Bro" Seltzer, chairman of the county's Republican party, proposed the idea to MISD last week.

Trash, grass fires extinguished; Several city thefts investigated

From Staff Reports

Midland County Fire Department officials spent a good part of Friday and Saturday extinguishing grass and dumpster fires.

Four grass fires — none of which caused major damage — were reported Friday between 4:30 p.m. and 10 p.m.

On Saturday, four Dumpster and two grass fires were reported to county fire officials. No major damage was reported.

A fire department spokeswoman attributed the grass fires to the lack of rainfall in the area.

She added that residents are inadvertently starting Dumpster fires when trashing fireplace ashes before they are burned out.

Midland police are investigating two thefts which occurred Saturday.

A red Schwinn bicycle valued at $228 was stolen in the 2400 block of Camarie Avenue, shortly before 1 p.m. Saturday.

Another Midlander reported a residential burglary at 3 p.m. Saturday. Taken were a 19-inch color TV, a 16-channel scanner and a gun, valued at a total of $500.

Proper to name school after Bush

Midland has some well-known former residents but it is doubtful any are, or will be, more illustrious than the man elected president of the United States this past Nov. 8.

George Herbert Walker Bush will take office on Jan. 20, a fitting high point for a career that has spanned many years of public service in a variety of important roles.

He was a Midland resident from 1950 to 1959. Although he first lived in Odessa for a brief time it was in Midland where Bush actually laid the foundation of his career as an oilman and it was in Midland where several of his children were born.

But George Bush's life in Midland was marked by more than the beginning of his career and family. He was not a spectator during the years he called Midland home but an active participant in the civic arena for which this city was even then well known.

He is remembered by many who knew him and worked with him and who still live here as an enthusiastic achiever who, with many others, worked hard to make Midland a better place to live. His interest in young people was well known and young George Bush was involved in a number of programs and projects involving the community's youth. He coached boys' baseball; he helped found the Midland YMCA and the community theater. The chamber of commerce and various service organizations benefited from his efforts.

There is now a movement underway to persuade the school board to waive a longstanding procedure that restricts names of schools to deceased Texans and, instead, name a new elementary school in northwest Midland after Bush.

We agree completely with proponents of the proposal. Relatively speaking, few cities can boast that one of their former residents, native son or not, rose to occupy the highest office in the land. For those that can, it is entirely proper if they choose to name a school or park or street in his honor.

On the contrary, it would be surprising if they did not.

An overwhelming majority of Midland County voters indicated they wanted George Bush to be the next president of the United States when they went to the polls Nov. 8. It would seem likely a majority would also want to see their city honor the man who beginning in January will call the White House home but whose professional and family foundations really began here.

We hope MISD trustees will act quickly and without hesitation in bestowing this well-deserved honor on the man who soon will begin serving as 41st president of the United States.

JACK ANDERSON

Special interests corrupt Pentagon

WASHINGTON — Viewed from afar, the Pentagon is the nerve center of an awesome military complex — its bases around the world bristling with armaments, its warships stretching from horizon to horizon. Yet viewed up close in its particulars, the Pentagon is uninspiring, wasteful and counterproductive. It is also wracked with dissension, insubordination and maladministration.

Jack Anderson

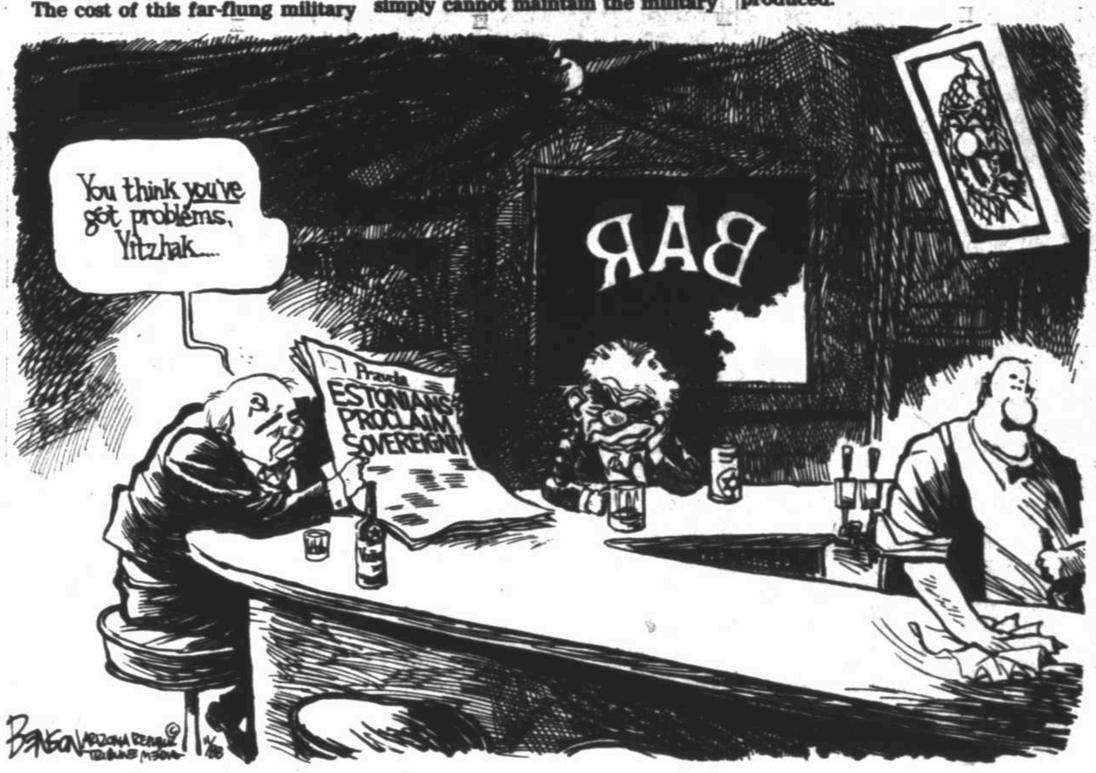

The cost of this far-flung military array is scandalous. During the Reagan years, a staggering $1.83 trillion was poured into the Pentagon. Billions went right down the drain. The four military services rushed ahead with new weapons before they had been proven. Little effort was made to coordinate the spending. With no system of priorities, the Reagan administration simply said yes to almost everything.

Money was lavished on armaments that should have been scrapped or never should have been built in the first place. Scientific advances also made many weapons systems obsolete faster than advocates of those systems could adjust their military thinking. Procurement raced ahead of modernization; maintenance was unable to keep up with operations.

Now the Pentagon is about to undergo internal trauma. George Bush simply cannot maintain the military spending of the Reagan years. This means the Pentagon will suffer the horrors of a post-Reagan shrinkage. The allocation of funds and missions will be in jeopardy. Rival military units will find themselves in a struggle not just for status but for survival.

Their future is complicated by the fact that the president-elect has backed just about every weapons system in the Pentagon pipeline. Yet he has sworn not to increase taxes to pay for them.

Each system is supported by a formidable lobby, composed of members of the military brass who believe in it, the contractors who manufacture the component parts, the workers who put them together and the members of Congress whose districts enjoy the economic benefits of having that particular system produced.

Most multibillion-dollar procurement decisions are made in the Pentagon's backrooms with little public scrutiny. These decisions involve much-agitated backstage wire-pulling, with the wires often crisscrossing.

Military officers with vested interests in a weapons system will slip up to Capitol Hill behind the backs of their superiors and whisper their case into sympathetic congressional ears. Rival services will pour out propaganda against one another's weapons and court key members of Congress with every possible blandishment. The members of Congress, in turn, will pound on Pentagon doors to demand favorable action on pet defense contracts.

Behind these government advocates, gently nudging them on, are the pressure people from the defense industries — affable lobbyists who know the right people in Washington. The fine art of gaining contracts depends as much on political influence as professional competence.

On the payrolls of almost all the top defense contractors are also retired admirals and generals, captains and colonels who are on a first-name basis with the Pentagon's big brass. After retirement, the same officers who once approved defense contracts can be found soliciting contracts from their former subordinates. They become caught in a golden cobweb, with billions in bait dangling before them.

Old Army ties become strings that are pulled to gain contracts. With billions involved, favors for friends easily turn into bribes. Government wiretaps have exposed a bouillabaisse of political pressure, corporate greed, military ties, inside information and financial favors.

An audit of 12 selected defense-industry companies this year uncovered $43 million in questionable professional fees and consultant costs. Now, 15 Justice Department lawyers and 75 federal agents are about to wind up a two-year investigation of fraud and bribery in the Pentagon. Indictments should be ready early this month.

Don't ignore killings

Iran and Iraq have each taken advantage of the August cease-fire in their long war to settle scores with dissenters at home. Iraq's lawless gassing of Kurdish villages has been deservedly condemned. Iran's mass killings of mainly leftist opponents have attracted less attention. But they have occurred on a scale sufficient to prompt a United Nations debate today (Nov. 30) on a report saying the executions "justify international concern."

Iran's canny response has been to divide its General Assembly critics by offering for the first time to open its borders to a special representative of the U.N. In return, Iran wants the U.N. to scrap a draft resolution deploring the wave of summary executions of political prisoners. Thus Iran wants a pat on the back for complying with the most rudimentary rules. Every other country targeted for a U.N. human rights inquiry — including Chile, Afghanistan and Cuba — has submitted to scrutiny.

Iran deserves censure, not coddling. Since this summer, at least 1,000 people are believed to have been shot, and thousands imprisoned, most on charges of supporting an armed insurgency, the People's Mujahedeen. The U.N. report finds "a nucleus of veracity" in accounts of these killings and of ill treatment of prisoners. It also documents the continued denial of basic rights to adherents of the minority Bahai faith, though systematic executions appear to have ceased.

Iran does not wholly scorn the U.N. or its resolutions — or else it would not haggle over censorious words. Its U.N. envoy has said "there is no unresolvable complication" in reconciling Islamic and international law. The more reason, therefore, for the General Assembly to adopt an undiluted resolution that could save lives and free prisoners.

GEORGE F. WILL

Nation needs realism of allied commander

WASHINGTON — From Hamburg have come rumblings of something always rare and rarely welcome in Washington: realism. The perpetrator of this faux pas is Gen. John Galvin, supreme allied commander in Europe. In a speech to parliamentarians from NATO nations, and in an essay in The Washington Quarterly, Galvin laments the lack of political leadership concerning the continuing Soviet threat, and he gives particulars.

George F. Will

Galvin acknowledges that Mikhail Gorbachev has initiated domestic changes of great if uncertain consequences, accompanied by pleasant rhetoric. But Galvin asks: "Is external policy really changing?" He notes that regardless of Soviet rhetoric about a shift from an offensive to a defensive configuration of conventional forces in the middle of Europe — after 40 years of denying the offensive configuration — "the Soviet military has not changed at all."

Galvin's focus is on "the iron that can be brought to bear on the battlefield." He says Soviet armaments-production is essentially unchanged since March, 1985, when Gorbachev took power. Since then, the Soviets have produced more tanks and artillery pieces than exist in the British, French and German armies combined. The Soviets are producing 700 combat aircraft per year and launching a nuclear submarine every 37 days.

Consider tanks, the core of a forward deployed force capable of moving west in large units over long distances rapidly and with good sustainment. The Warsaw Pact has 30,000 more tanks than NATO. Thirty thousand is more tanks than the entire Wehrmacht production in World War II. The production rate of the Soviet T-80 is approximately 3,400 per year, 280 per month, the equivalent of a tank division a month. If all Soviet and other Warsaw Pact tank factories were closed today, and the tank production of all NATO nations were tripled, it would take NATO 10 years to catch up.

Noting that the T-80 is the world's newest tank, Galvin stresses that the acceleration of the rate of technological change coincides with an increase in the importance of even marginal technological advantages. The British won at Waterloo with the "Brown Bess," a musket the British army had then been using for 130 years. But by the time of World War II, "if you built a fighter aircraft that was slightly better than your opponent, you could sweep the skies in a short period of time. That is now true not only of fighter aircraft but of everything else. If you build tanks that can fire accurately one second faster than other tanks, it will sweep the battlefield."

The Warsaw Pact has more attack capacity than NATO on the first day of battle, or 10 or 30 days after. Furthermore, proximity magnifies its advantages. A thousand ship sailings would be required for the initial reinforcement of NATO. A necessary component of a real Soviet change to a defensive deployment would be the movement far back from the front of the enormous stocks of ammunition now in East Germany and Czechoslovakia. So far none has been moved.

(Angelo Codevilla of the Hoover Institution, writing in Commentary, says there are more Soviet divisions in East Germany than in the entire U.S. Army, more in Czechoslovakia than there are U.S. divisions in Europe, and that all the Soviet divisions have mobile bridging equipment useful only for offense. Under Gorbachev, none of these divisions has been eliminated or ever diminished. All have been improved.)

Galvin worries that the willingness of Western publics to pay for preparedness rises only in response to events: the Berlin crisis, the Cuban missile crisis, the invasion of Czechoslovakia, the deployment of SS-20s, the invasion of Afghanistan. What is lacking is sober and sobering political leadership.

"Peace is breaking out all over," chirruped candidate Bush. His opposition to new taxes, in the context of Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction requirements, guarantees continuation of the four-year decline of the defense budget. When Bush meets Gorbachev next week, he might ask when glasnost will extend to publication of the Soviet defense budget, and when that budget will reflect Soviet rhetoric about changed intentions.

It is an old axiom: Some politicians seek office to do something, others just to be something. A President of the former type is leaving. Which type is Bush? Those for whom office is an end in itself will tell the nation whatever it wants to hear (for example, that new taxes are unnecessary and that peace is breaking out all over) and will not tell the nation what it needs to hear.

It needs to hear from the White House what Gen. Galvin says about the iron that can be brought to bear on the battlefield.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Dec. 4, the 339th day of 1988. There are 27 days left in the year. This is the first day of Hanukkah, the Jewish "Festival of Lights."

Today's Highlight in History:

On Dec. 4, 1783, General George Washington bade farewell to his officers at Fraunces Tavern in New York. In a choked voice, the departing chief commander of the Continental Army said, "With a heart full of love and gratitude, I now take leave of you."

On this date:

In 1816, James Monroe of Virginia was elected the fifth president of the United States, defeating Federalist Rufus King.

In 1875, William Marcy Tweed, the "Boss" of New York City's Tammany Hall political organization, escaped from jail and fled the country.

Uh oh, fans, Washington just got out-talked!

NEW YORK — I went to a professional football game in Washington. It was remarkably restful, and the game was good and interesting to the very end. The visiting players, working for a company licensed in Cleveland, won by the football equivalent of a hair in the final minute.

Russell Baker

Interesting curiosity: A minute in football bears no relationship to a minute in real life. A football minute lasts from 10 minutes up. Football's creation of the almost infinite minute makes the game longer than any game ought to be, except cricket. I allow the exception for cricket because the accompanying beverage for cricket is tea.

Football, however, apparently cannot be enjoyed without beer, and three to three and a half hours of beer is — well, a lot of beer unless you're a fiend for gassy-bloat. It's the rare game these days that doesn't go three hours.

The Washington game was such a rarity, ending slightly under three hours, but I put that down to the fact that I was in the stadium rather than by my parlor TV where the length of the average game makes Wagnerian opera feel like a preview of coming attractions.

What was striking about seeing a game in the arena, rather than on television, was its restful quality. After watching football on television, I always feel wrung out, irascible and guilty.

The guilt arises from a Calvinist conscience reacting to the discovery that it is hanging out with a man who can waste a whole afternoon staring at a box when he could have been composing limericks, bagging leaves for mulch or listening to Bach.

The wrung-out, irascible feeling results from television abuses aimed at keeping everybody's nerves stretched to the screaming point; to wit,

Batterings by beer and car commercials. Constant interruptions to see a spectacular play in the faraway and utterly irrelevant and preposterously boring Seattle-Miami game. Cuts back to Football Headquarters for bulletins on the status of Big Running Back Buck Backbreaker's three crushed rotator cuffs. Endless "instant replays." Inexhaustibly uninformative chatterings of broadcasters chosen for their power to deny the viewer a moment's peace. (Unless you're lucky enough to catch a game broadcast by the incomparable John Madden-Pat Summerall team.)

At the stadium you enter another world. There is the calming beauty of the field, an expanse of brilliant green grass under a great vault of sky, which in Washington Sunday was full of furious black and gray clouds. Nature is present, as it never is on television. (Nor in stadiums encased under domes with fake-grass carpets for fields.)

Even in a good seat you are far away from action, and action seems surprisingly infrequent. From a seat high over the field, the players become small armored figures who periodically engage in brief bursts of violent activity. Most of the time, though, is passed in hundreds of conferences and consultations, as though some immensely complex negotiation were in progress.

The players assemble for conferences on the field. A half-dozen authority figures — "the officials" — confer constantly with one another, often with the players, occasionally with the battalions of coaches clustered at either side of the field.

These coaches confer incessantly among themselves, or with players who have come off the field, or by telephone headsets with unseen consultants posted at remote points around the arena.

Because television, working to create nervous breakdown, harps on metaphors of football as combat, it is startling to discover that, instead of a battlefield, the arena is actually like a more disorderly Geneva, with dozens of talks almost constantly in progress.

The long talky pauses between bursts of action become restful after awhile. How lovely it is not having an instant replay of that key block. How peaceful not having to see the incredibly portentous field goal that tied the absolutely vital clash in faraway Nevada between the Las Vegas High Rollers and the Akron Steel Belteds.

How sweet it is to see the players standing idly on the field with nothing to do but scratch themselves, and know that this is a "TV timeout," and that somewhere — but not here — millions are being psychologically jump-started to get out and buy beer, fast cars, snow tires, batteries ...

What is this? The Washington team has lost? Ah well. They were probably out-talked in the conferences. Free from TV, one can find philosophical calm and recall what the philosopher Red Smith observed: It's only a game that boys can play.

BILL MODISETT

So what's the real story behind this Gorbachev guy?

Modisett

They said it couldn't be done. I said it couldn't be done. We all knew it could never happen. So, come on guys, what's going on with the Soviet Union?

When Mikhail Gorbachev came to power a few short years ago, and said he was going to upgrade Soviet thinking, I chuckled. Actually it was more of a snicker. Who was he kidding? Hadn't we heard that old line before?

So, then, after a few months of heavy-handed public relations activity, Gorbachev started bad-mouthing some of the old communist heroes. He even had a few unkind words for Nikita Khrushchev. I snickered again. Gorbachev, you see, was following the Soviet pattern almost without exception — building his power base, promising reform, choosing an official state whipping-boy and booting out a few old adversaries who were deemed no longer useful.

But then something happened. Gorbachev started talking about radical changes that got the Western press' attention, mine included. The Soviet Union, he seemed to be saying, was outdated and rife with incompetency. It had to alter its approach to dealing with the industrialized world. It had to become more competitive, more businesslike, and more socially just. In a word, it had to become more capitalistic and that entailed a measure more freedom.

Boy, I thought, ol' Gorby's not long for this world. You can only kick a sleeping dog so many times before the sucker wakes up and starts gnawing on your leg. I figured he was just about as far along this reform road as the Supreme Soviet would allow him to go, and I fully anticipated coming to work some morning, turning on the computer, and starting to read a wire story about how the old guard in the Kremlin finally had caught Gorby nodding off and took his Iron Fist Award away from him.

I mean, a man like Gorbachev can't simply walk in and tell the Soviet hierarchy that it's fit for mothballs without steaming some folks, can he? Don't they play hardball politics in the Kremlin like our own Congress-boys do, complete with smoke-filled-room pressure tactics? You know. it's the old you-scratch-my-back and I'll let-you-keep-yours philosophy.

At any rate, someone in the Kremlin must have missed his cue. Because not only has Gorbachev failed to become intimately familiar with the inside of the Siberian salt mines, but he actually has those old Muscovites believing in the power of perestroika.

And this thing called glasnost has really caught on. Gorbachev's openness is so popular, in fact, that the average Russian apparently feels comfortable joining the revolution.

What is happening behind what formerly was called the Iron Curtain is no less than that — a revolution but without guns. Gorbachev has switched the Soviet Union's game strategy. He's not trying to outmacho us any longer. He knows we're feisty enough to match him blow-for-blow in weapons spending and entrepreneurial enough to create systems that will keep his arms designers busy for years trying to counter what we do.

So Gorbachev apparently has decided, if they won't play my game I'll play theirs. He wants to modify communism enough to achieve the goal of full competition with the capitalistic West.

That possibility may not appear too frightening to some Americans considering the state of the Soviet Union's economy. But consider this: After World War II, the United States extended a humanitarian hand to Japan and European nations that had been ravaged by the long war. Large debts are still owed to this country because of what it did to help, and yet repayment has not been forthcoming although the United States could use the money now.

Today, the United States continues to offer assistance to the Soviet Union — food and technology, and loans — when sought. That may not be completely unwise, of course, because as some would argue, by helping the Russians we are in effect helping ourselves.

But look at the economic power now wielded by the Japanese. While it's true that much of it is due to their hard work and ingenuity, a portion of it is due to American assistance following the war. What if the Soviet Union attempts to achieve the same economic advantage now held by the Japanese? It could prove disastrous to the way of life Americans believe in.

But that couldn't possibly happen. Could it?

MHS backers need to stop their whining

I am so tired of hearing the Midland High School supporters crying and moaning about the coin toss! I agree it may not be fair, but that's the way it has always been decided. Do they think that they are the only team that has lost their chance for the playoffs by a coin toss?

In the past years, Lee High School and many other schools have lost out in the same way. How long are they going to act like children and pout? Stop? Midland High has won district in many other sports every year. Do you see Lee complaining and accusing them of cheating? How do you cheat on a coin toss?

If ties aren't decided by a coin toss, then how are you going to decide them? If they are going to be decided by total yardage and overall records, then MHS is going to have to start playing harder teams in preseason. Andrews is not equivalent to Killeen or Marshall. MHS has always played easier teams than LHS or Permian in the pre-season.

If total yardage is compared in many of the games MHS won, they only won by the score. If their team was so "fantastic," then it would never have come down to a coin toss.

MHS wanted district to be handed to them because they haven't been to the playoffs in so long. I'm sorry to say that victories aren't handed to the team that has the hardest time!

Please quit crying and start supporting the students the remainder of the school year in other sports.

Wills, Shultz right on mark about Arafat

Thanks to the Reporter-Telegram for carrying George Will's Nov. 20 column headlined "PLO Plan Has Trademark of 'Final Solution'!" And hooray for George Shultz! By denying Yasir Arafat's application for a visa to the U.S., he proved that at least one member of the State Department was not deceived by the doublespeak rhetoric of the declaration of the establishment of a Palestinian state by the Palestine National Council in Algiers.

The media representatives at that meeting were not even given English translations — they reported what took place to their papers and networks on the basis of what they were told the declaration said. A more thorough examination of the text reveals that Israel's right to exist is not explicitly recognized — only implicitly, and that terrorism in the land is not abandoned. The covenant of the Palestine Liberation Organization still stands — to destroy the Zionist entity (Israel). And how can anyone believe that the PLO would be happy with a state alongside Israel in Judea and Samaria (the West Bank) and would not launch further terrorism against Israel with the express purpose of taking away the only homeland in the world which Jews have? In George Wills' words, "The Algiers decision, far from being a departure from the PLO's 'rejectionist' stance regarding Israel, is designed to advance an explicit strategy of destruction."

A Palestinian state does exist — carved out of the partition of Palestine called for in the U.N. resolution of November 1947, which the Arab nations refused at the time to recognize. It is called Jordan. Let us not forget who Arafat is and who and what he represents. The PLO is a terrorist organization which is not only detrimental to Israel (its primary target) but also to the United States, on whose land the United Nations happens to stand.

MADD wants 'tie one on' to get new meaning

The holidays are special times and for some of us they are especially painful times. Glasses raised in merriment and cheer can shatter hopes and dreams. Drinking and driving don't mix.

Mothers Against Drug Driving (MADD) would like the public to join us in our National Project Red Ribbon Campaign. Please tie a red ribbon on the left sideview mirror or door handle of your vehicle as a simple reminder to pass the keys if you have been drinking and as a symbol of hope for a less violent future. We want to change the meaning of "tie one on." Look for MADD red ribbon containers in Midland stores, or make your own red ribbon.

Two out of five Americans will be involved in an alcohol-related crash in their lifetime. Two out of five. The odds are frightening. That's why drunk driving is everyone's problem. That's the bad news. The good news is that alcohol-related crashes can be prevented. Public awareness is one way to do this and a thing as simple as tying a red ribbon on your vehicle could save a life — maybe yours or someone you love.

Column reflected idea of moral breakdown

As a 50-year resident of West Texas I experienced nostalgia when reading Mr. Pitts article on "Wondering where it all went wrong" in the Reporter-Telegram, Nov. 13. He described the area as I knew it in the forties and fifties time-frame. However, after being hit on the three times in the past two years, plus just general cussedness all over the place, there appears to be a general moral breakdown since those earlier periods.

Probably not everyone would agree with Mr. Pitts postulates, i.e., that the decline in morals was caused by the removal of prayer in the schools, but most Americans do feel there has been a let-down in the mores of our culture over the past quarter of a century. There are other aspects involved also.

Mr. Pitts was harshly criticized in the Reporter-Telegram of Nov. 20 by Mr. and Mrs. Kreutzfeld of Midland who labeled the story as "journalistic trash" and allowed it did not belong in the business section of the paper.

The activities of financial institutions are business and are generally included in the business section. Certainly the manner in which a financial institution conducts its business is an extension of the issues as discussed by Mr. Pitts in his article on moral turpitude.

Such derelictions come readily to mind, such as the respected national brokerage house being brought to the bar for kiting checks; the on-going investigations and convictions for stock insider-trading involving hundreds of millions of dollars; statewide financial highjinks involving malfeasance, skullduggery and "Ponzi" schemes; plus in the local area alone where there have been a dozen or more cases of moral derelictions involving local financial institutions.

Everyone has their right to their own opinion, but the harsh tone in which Mr. Pitts was reprimanded by Mr. and Mrs. Kreutzfeld was out of keeping with the Midland spirit. Midland has enjoyed a reputation as a pleasant place to live and by the application of the milk of human kindness hopefully it can be kept that way.

PLO's spokesman sees no real future without cooperation

Lewis

AMMAN, Jordan — Bassam Abu Sharif was a terrorist and he was a victim of terrorism. Now, as chief spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization, he says "I don't think there's a future for either one if there's no cooperation" between Israelis and Palestinians.

He served as Yasser Arafat's point man for peace last summer, calling for direct talks because "no one can build his own future on the ruins of another's." Arafat, mindful of weaving contradictory strands into his own words, has never gone so far.

Bassam, as he's called, comes out of an extremist faction, George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. His own story, the strands of his own thought, shows how a man's mind can encompass attitudes that don't seem to fit together but evolve with experience into a new approach.

He comes from the village of Kafr Aqab, near Jerusalem, where he was born in 1946. He went to Beirut to study at the American University and was there when the 1967 war stopped him going home again. He studied economics, business administration, chemistry and history and he says he was offered lots of good jobs.

"But I decided to join the resistance to the occupation," he says. "My family was inside; it was a human reaction. We started in the resistance with the idea of going back, but then it was a reaction to the iron fist. We found that political talk was useless, it fell on deaf ears, so we were forced to use arms."

He went to a camp in the Jordanian desert with a group from the university. With a Jordanian passport, he traveled to Europe and the United States three times between 1967 and 1970, delivering lectures on the Palestinian cause. "Numbers of my family, hundreds, live in the U.S.," he said.

Bassam says: "I never shot a bullet. I was not a fighter, I was a political cadre." He doesn't say whether he actually helped plan terrorist deeds, but he accepted them as a member of his organization. "I was enthusiastic in the beginning for sensational operations, without casualties, to draw attention to our cause."

In 1970 he took part in the hijacking of three airliners that were kept in the Jordanian desert for a week and then blown up. He notes there were no casualties, and says his role was to explain the cause to the passengers. Bassam says a New York rabbi told him very seriously, "If I were in your place, I'd probably do the same."

That dramatic incident provoked world headlines and led to open fighting between PLO and Jordanian forces in "Black September." The PLO fighters were driven out and established themselves in Lebanon, where again they did what they could to build a "state within the state." It was an important factor in bringing on the Lebanese civil war.

Bassam was in his Beirut office in 1972 when a big envelope came containing a book, "the size of Webster's, with Che Guevara on the cover. It was a nice, cultural, explosive book." The bomb, evidently sent by Israelis, ripped several fingers off his hands, disfigured his face and nearly left him deaf and blind. A friend says he had been "very handsome, like a movie star." Now he is scarred and has eye trouble, a dark, stubby but surprisingly relaxed man.

He was in a hospital for a month. "I had a lot of time to think. I decided I would continue working for the cause in whatever way possible, but contrary to expectations, it didn't turn me into a man who wants revenge. I refused to fall into the vicious circle."

After what he calls "a lot of discussion" in the PFLP that year, he says the Habash group decided to quit international terrorism because it was counterproductive. But gradually he moved toward the less radical Arafat line, chafing under Syrian influence when his group moved to Damascus, where I first met him. In 1979 he was expelled for shaking hands with President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, and openly joined Arafat.

"My view is if there is a chance for self-determination and a state, we should do it," he says. He is an example of thoughts catching up with realities, and he criticizes colleagues who cling to ambiguities. "They speak in Arabic though the words are in English. But the opportunity is clear for people who are serious about peace."

Bush shows leadership qualities by acting pragmatically

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — A remarkable transformation has taken place in the public image of George Bush since he won the presidential election less than a month ago.

The quickness with which he has continued to display evidence of strong leadership capability must surprise those who thought he would, if elected, be a weak president.

During the past week, both the New York Times and the Washington Post have published front page articles on how he has acted promptly and wisely to show he will be a strong, pragmatic president who will not be manipulated by advisers in making his decisions.

It is now known that when shortly after the election it was suggested he appoint a White House "troika" to recommend what actions he should take as president, he swiftly squashed the idea.

The suggestion was reportedly made by James Baker, his long time friend and campaign manager whom he chose for secretary of state in his first Cabinet appointment. The "troika" was to be composed of New Hampshire Governor John Sununu, whom he has selected as White House chief of staff, Craig L. Fuller, his vice presidential chief of staff, and Robert Teeter, his campaign strategist and pollster.

Bush made it clear recently that he, and he alone, is going to be "calling the shots."

He added that "some day, somebody will understand" that he will determine how "things are going to work. It's going to take a while, but they're going to understand that."

Serving notice on his future White House advisers that he is not to be allowed to sleep if there is a national or world crisis during the night, he told reporters he intends to be a "shake me and wake me" president.

One White House adviser said that with President Reagan, staff "maneuvering" represented 70 percent of decision-making "but with Bush, it's ten percent on a good day."

According to the Washington Post, Bush, since becoming president-elect, has "rebelled repeatedly against others who tried to maneuver him into a decision."

He has also made clear he intends to be more immersed in detail than has been President Reagan's custom. He has held long one-on-one talks with those he has been selecting for his Cabinet.

He took the initiative in going to the Capitol to have a peace "pow-wow" with House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, whom he had said last May should be investigated by a special counsel for alleged ethical wrongdoing. They both emerged from the meeting smiling, and Wright said their talk led him to believe the president-elect is "prepared to do what's necessary to cope with the budget."

Bush also took the initiative in meeting twice this past week with Senate Republican leader Robert Dole, his most bitter enemy during the nomination campaign. He invited Dole to lunch at the White House.

They met alone for a personal talk to ease relations and then were joined by Richard G. Darman, the designated budget director. At the one-on-one meeting with the president-elect, Dole pledged to end their vehement rivalry.

After the lunch, the senator told reporters: "The election is over and we both have obligations, and certainly mine is to help him become a great president and I intend to do that."

Dole's gracious attitude reflected the great patriotism of one of the most remarkable men in American political history who, by indomitable courage and guts, returned half paralyzed from a World War II battlefield to become a towering political figure.

In describing the transformation of Bush since he became president-elect, the New York Times said he "has moved with such dispatch and with such seeming confidence that it seems almost as if he is governing, rather than preparing to govern."

Stating that as vice president Bush was greatly underestimated for his record of service to his country, the Washington Post said he has shown an assertiveness and a determination to use the levers of power that "in a variety of ways" have signaled the kind of presidency he will run.

This news is particularly gratifying to me not only because I strongly supported him editorially and voted for him, but because I, too, wondered how strong a president he would be.

Therefore, I am very pleased to see how he continues to display the qualities of strong presidential leadership to which I referred in my recent column and which is now being recognized by such moguls of the media as the New York Times and the Washington Post.

Midlanders attend state PTA meeting

From Staff Reports

Midland City Council Parent-Teacher Association and representatives of each local PTA were among the 3,000 PTA members and guests who attended the 79th annual Texas PTA Convention recently in Arlington.

State President Kathryn Whitfill, Pasadena, presided at the four general sessions in which delegates from 2,500 local PTAs representing 800,000 members participated.

Featuring the theme, "Baseball, Hot Dogs, Apple Pie & PTA," the meetings and workshops were held at the Arlington Convention Center and the Sheraton CentrePark Hotel. PTAers conducted their organization's annual business meeting, voted on a legislative position, adopted resolutions, and elected five new officers to the executive board.

Some 60 workshops, which included such topics as AIDS education, parenting, leadership, at risk children, drug/alcohol abuse prevention, and educational trends, were provided for the delegates. In addition, delegates visited numerous exhibit booths and displays which displayed a wide range of commercial and nonprofit educational materials, equipment and publications.

Each local PTA had a representative at the state PTA Convention totaling 84 members attending. Included in that number were seven principals, two school board trustees; Jim Builta and Adela Marmolejo, and Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr.; Midland's superintendent of schools.

The leadership, parenting, and educational skills will be brought back to each Midland school to directly help local students.

Burnet PTA to meet

Burnet Elementary PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the school cafetorium, 900 Raymond. The third grade students will present a Christmas program, following which MISD school board members Jim Builta and Ken Morrison will discus the new construction on Burnet schoolgrounds.

Single-engine plane crashes near Dallas

PLANO (AP) — A single-engine airplane "looked like a falling rock" when it crashed at the end of a runway north of Dallas Saturday, injuring one person, authorities said.

Officials at Plano's HCA Medical Center said Frank Chrabasz, 24, of Arlington was listed in serious, but stable condition there late Saturday.

"I believe he was the pilot," said John Black, owner of the maintenance facilities at Airpark Airport in Southwest Collin County, north of Dallas.

The plane apparently crashed at 5:52 p.m., said a Federal Aviation Administration official who asked not to be identified.

CFS support group will discuss alternative treatment programs

From Staff Reports

The December meeting of the Chronic Fatigue Syndrome support group will be at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Midland Memorial Hospital Social Work/Pastoral Care Conference Room. Those attending will find signs directing them to the proper location.

The program will look at different treatments in the United States which have received press coverage. One of these is "Sunrider" from California.

"Richard Carson has been assisted by and now assists others with this treatment," says the Rev. Alan Williams, chaplain at Midland Memorial Hospital. "I have spoken with him and he has agreed to be present with us via a telephone conference link for that meeting."

"I have tried many therapies in the past seven years to help me cope with CFS," Carson says. "An abbreviated list includes vitamins, minerals, numerous dietary restrictions, gamma globulin, acyclovir, transfer factor — Italy in 1986, American herbs, meditation, accupuncture and a number of pharmacerttical drugs too numerous to list. Unfortunately, these efforts met with little success.

"In early 1988, I received a call from Dr. Komaroff of Harvard during which time he mentioned a particular combination of Chinese herbs patients claimed were curing them of CFS.

The support group, which meets quarterly, was referred to previously as the Chronic Epstein-Barr Virus Support Group. Interested parties are invited to attend.

The last quarterly meeting, held in September, featured a special "Dealing with Symptoms" panel, presented by Dr. Roberta Case, Dr. Richard Reese and psychologist David Koch. The meeting was videotaped for those unable to attend.

In addition, the Social Work/Pastoral Care Office has a reference book of material available for on-location reading.

For more information call Williams, 685-1566.

TU Electric seeking help with Energy Aid Program

From Staff Reports

TU Electric is sending its annual reminder this month seeking continued support of the Energy Aid Program, which has provided more than $3 million in essential energy services for people in crisis situations since its beginning in 1983.

A message about the program and a contribution card are included with TU Electric bills during December. Customers may use the contribution cards to designate an amount to be added automatically to their bill each month to support Energy Aid. Contribution cards are also available at all TU Electric offices.

TU Electric began Energy Aid with an initial contribution, and its customers and employees have sustained the program by adding a dollar or more to their bill each month for that purpose. The funds provide electricity, natural gas or other energy assistance for area residents who are unable because of a financial crisis to afford essential services.

For the first three quarters of 1988 alone, the program provided more than $400,000 for such services.

The program is administered free of charge by experienced social agencies in the cities served by TU Electric.

The company has found that contribution cards are the most efficient metjod of providing ongoing support for Energy Aid, according to a press release provided by TU Electric.

One-time contributions also are accepted by TU Electric offices or by the agencies administering the program locally.

The Army's Delayed Entry Program guarantees qualified young people their choice of high-tech skill training.

The Army also allows them to enlist in a specific skill and wait up to 365 days before reporting for duty. This written guarantee allows them an opportunity to sign up while still in high school. But they must have earned their diploma before training starts.

Some of the available specialities using advanced technology include the use of laser range-finders and thermal-imaging night sights as part of tank training. Computers that fire multiple-launch rocket systems are part of a field artilleryman's training.

In the air, the Army's Apache, Cobra and Black Hawk helicopters use state-of-the-art equipment that is manned, maintained and repaired by Army-trained specialists with avionics skills.

For those aspiring to enter the medical field, the Army trains specialists and technicians to handle some of the world's most sophisticated equipment, including the advanced radiological scanning system (CAT Scan) that allows technicians to see body tissue as well as bone structure.

As an added incentive, the Army offers individuals a way to finance college or advanced technical training. The Montgomery GI Bill Plus the Army College Fund can mean up to $25,200 for education after completion of active duty.

The Army's Delayed Entry Program is a unique opportunity for talented individuals to enhance that talent on their own terms with guaranteed training in a high-tech skill.

Dallas police seek gunman

DALLAS (AP) — Police directing a search today for a Dallas man described as armed and dangerous said the ambush that left his ex-wife and her sheriff's deputy boyfriend dead outside a day care center could have been a carefully plotted attack that included plans for eluding authorities.

Despite several reported sightings and coordinated efforts by at least four law enforcement agencies, Billy Ross Sims continued to evade capture today.

Authorities described Sims, 38, as a Vietnam Veteran who had difficulty keeping a job, a history of beating his family and a desperate desire to see his 21-month-old daughter.

Police said Sims allegedly waited outside a day care center Thursday where he knew his ex-wife, Christen Corliss Sims, would drop off the estranged couple's daughter, Jade Jeannette Sims, before Mrs. Sims attended a custody hearing at the courthouse.

When Mrs. Sims returned to the car, officers say Sims opened fire on her, then went around to the driver's side and shot her boyfriend, Dallas County Sheriff's Deputy James J. Hughes. Mrs. Sims' 5-year-old son from a previous marriage, Kenneth Justin Russell, was in the car at the time, but was unharmed, police said.

Doctors pronounced Mrs. Sims, 30, dead on arrival at Baylor University Medical Center. Hughes, 41, died at Parkland Memorial Hospital after surgery for gunshot wounds to the neck, abdomen and left arm.

Later, Sims was charged with murder and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

A 1:30 p.m. hearing was scheduled in Judge Bob O'Donnell's 301st Distrist Court in Dallas. O'Donnell was to review one in a series of attempts by Sims to have his custody and visitation rights to his daughter restored.

The judge, who had also been threatened by Sims, was taken into protective custody.

TDC, Harris County standoff delayed

STATE

HOUSTON (AP) — A potential showdown between Harris County and the Texas Department of Corrections was temporarily averted when county officials decided not to deliver more inmates than prison officials could accept.

But authorities say the decision to deliver only 49 prisoners to TDC Monday may be a short-lived solution to a standoff created by conflicting court orders.

Harris County Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen said he would deliver only the number of inmates TDC officials said they could accept Monday. But court monitors appointed by U.S. District Judge James DeAnda plan to tour the crowded Harris County Jail Monday to see if Kevenhagen must try to send more prisoners to the state.

DeAnda last month ordered the county to send 290 prisoners a week to TDC in an order that conflicts with that of U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice, who has ordered TDC to limit its population to 96 percent of capacity.

The conflict is being watched closely by counties that are increasingly forced to keep TDC-bound inmates for longer periods of time.

In his ruling, DeAnda said the state was the culprit in the Harris County crowding problem "for failing to provide adequate constitutional housing" for prisoners. He said the state was "simply exporting the result of its failure to the counties."

Klevenhagen had said Thursday he would deliver 60 prisoners Monday to TDC, instead of the 49 state officials said they could accept. Although Harris County officials decided to only deliver 49 Monday, Klevenhagen said he would deliver additional prisoners Friday to TDC if the federal monitors tell him to do so.

Assistant County Attorney Lupe Salinas said the county decided to send only 49 prisoners Monday to save the expense of shipping prisoners who would have to be returned to Harris County to avoid potential security problems.

Assistant Attorney General Bob Ozer wrote Klevenhagen and court officials Thursday, saying TDC would have to reject those inmates the state prison has not agreed to accept.

Ozer said state officials would consider another admissions plan if the counties submitted one.

"If they got together and figured a better way to do this, I'm interested in hearing it," Ozer said.

Police shoot, kill suspect in shootout

ARLINGTON (AP) — A man was fatally shot by police after he had disarmed an officer and used the weapon in a shootout.

Robert Lee Ross, 39, of Arlington, died in a garage after Officer Pat Bridges had pursued the suspect on foot at 3:26 a.m. Friday.

Officer Blake Miller was preparing to stop a vehicle at 3:16 a.m. when the suspect emerged from the moving car and fled, according to Arlington police spokesman Dee Anderson.

Miller called for assistance by radio and pursued the suspect on foot. When Miller caught the suspect, a fight ensued and the man got control of Miller's service revolver. The suspect then jumped over a stockade fence onto the Shakleford Junior High School grounds.

Miller pulled a backup weapon he had concealed and started to climb the fence when the two exchanged gunfire.

1,000 people view launch of Customs balloon

DEMING, N.M. (AP) — About 1,000 people turned out to see the launching of the U.S. Customs Service's latest drug smuggler-detecting balloon Saturday some 20 miles southwest of Deming.

"We are showing drug interdiction at work," Michael Lane, deputy commissioner of the U.S. Customs Service, said Saturday. "We've driven smugglers out of the Southeast and into the Southwest."

"We're systematically closing off avenues into this country," he said.

The blimp-like balloon, made of a tough plastic called Kevlar and called an aerostat, floats about 2¼ to three miles high and is designed to detect low-flying aircraft. It is the size of a Boeing 747 and is inflated with 522,000 cubic feet of helium.

It is the second in a network of six tethered radar balloons that eventually will scan the entire U.S.-Mexican border, Customs spokesman Charles Conroy said Friday.

The Deming device's radar will overlap that of the aerostat at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., which was deployed early this year. The two balloons' overlapping radar will stretch from central Arizona to El Paso.

Critics have questioned the need for the aerostats, which cost $18 million to install, and point out that the Fort Huachuca device has yet to be used to catch an airborne smuggler. But Conroy said smugglers apparently have shifted their flight routes to avoid the radar, or have begun driving loads across the lonely stretch of desert.

But driving across is risky, too, Conroy said.

"It can read and track vehicles on the ground," he said. "It's so sophisticated, in fact, it can track vehicles on the streets of Phoenix from Fort Huachuca."

He said at least one land shipment has been seized with help from the radar.

The next aerostat is scheduled to go up July 1 near Marfa, Texas. Others are to be built at Yuma, Ariz. and in Eagle Pass and Rio Grande City, Texas.

Each balloon operates 24 hours a day and requires a 10-person contingent of Customs employees to cover all the shifts, he said.

Emblazoned on the side of the Deming balloon is an angry duck — patterned after the Deming Duck Race — ripping apart a marijuana plant.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., drew up a war analogy during Saturday's event.

State school's problems may cost it funding

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Fort Worth State School could lose its Medicaid certification unless it makes progress in correcting deficiencies by the end of the year.

However, improvements were already being made before Medicaid inspected the care facility for the mentally retarded, said Superintendent Rick Campbell, who presented a plan Friday to correct more of the school's problems.

"Because we're pressed for time, we're doing them a lot more quickly," Campbell said Friday.

If progress is not made by Dec. 31, the school could lose funding that amounted to more than half of its $15 million budget in fiscal 1988, Campbell said.

The school was cited in 21 areas, including, "Direct care staff were not aware of specific client objectives regarding 11 of 37 clients."

"There's no quick fix," said Campbell, who took over the school's administration in October. "It requires major systems modifications and fairly severe attitudinal changes. And that doesn't happen overnight," he added.

Another citation noted, "Environment was not conducive to training."

"Training is our principal thrust right now," Campbell said, adding that safety, basic care and hygiene remain very important.

Training was an issue that also came under fire 18 months ago during federal court hearings on conditions at the school.

Life at the school is "worse than death," a witness told U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders, because the residents' lives are empty, they receive no meaningful training and they are treated as "less than people."

After seven days of testimony, Sanders found the state in contempt of court for violating a settlement in a long-standing lawsuit seeking to improve conditions at the state's schools for the retarded.

To improve conditions, Campbell has implemented a plan that "allows for demonstrated success over time."

"We've established questionnaires that will test staff on specific program objectives and other relevant individualized information," Campbell added.

Groups mainly deflected blame at NTSB hearing

IRVING (AP) — Fingers were pointed in nearly every direction in a four-day public hearing into the crash of Delta Flight 1411 that seemed to yield confusion instead of conclusion.

"They didn't seem to be working as a team to resolve this accident," said Paul Bare of Garland, whose daughter, granddaughter and son-in-law were among the 14 to die as a result of the Aug. 31 air disaster at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

Over four days, investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board heard about 33 hours of testimony from 29 witnesses in an effort to gather evidence to explain why the Boeing 727 crashed.

They discussed Canadian air safety, debated the importance of the coefficient of drag on lift formulas, and heard how one man had to scramble over seats to claw his way out of a burning airplane.

But Bare and many other observers left shaking their heads.

NTSB investigators offered no conclusions as the hearing ended Friday and say they won't offer any possible explanations until a report on the crash is issued in about six months. Until then, there are almost as many puzzle parts as there were pieces of scattered wreckage that investigators meticulously charted.

Questions about the position of the plane's flaps remain unresolved after conflicting testimony on the matter.

"The main question seems to be: Were the plane's flaps extended or retracted," said Jim Burnett, the board member who chaired the proceeding.

The hearing — where officials from the Federal Aviation Administration, the Airline Pilots Association, Delta Air Lines, Boeing Commercial Airplanes, Pratt & Whitney, and D-FW Airport presented and reviewed evidence — resembled a 5-sided pingpong game, with everyone but airport authorities deflecting blame as it headed their way.

The airport officials observed silently, without asking any questions or offering any possible answers.

— The FAA was chastised for its slow distribution of a bulletin warning of problems on automatic takeoff warning system similar to one that did not sound on Delta 1141. Its officials also were questioned on how the government agency oversees the nation's airlines.

— Representatives from ALPA tried to hammer home points to prove that the flight crew had done everything expected of them, including putting the plane's flaps into proper position for takeoff. The union also steadfastly tried to counter charges that the pilots were slipshod in preflight preparations, including allowing a flight attendant into the cockpit area once the plane pulled away from the gate. Instead, ALPA maintained the pilots had been a victim of a split-flap configuration and possibly a faulty warning system.

— Delta was questioned about its non-specific preflight checklists that have since been upgraded and its training programs for pilots. The airline also was asked why it doesn't have a separate safety department as some other airlines do.

— Boeing called in its own engineers to explain that a corroded switch found in Delta's takeoff warning system had worked in subsequent tests. The plane's manufacturer also explained through complicated charts and formulas that the 727 was going fast enough to fly, even without properly set flaps.

— Pratt & Whitney, manufacturer of 1141's engines, was called to explain the cause of compressor surges like those the flight experienced. The company was quick to add that any engine damage would have occurred only because the plane had crashed and not because of anything else.

"All of them probably will be defendants later on," said Ken Adams, a Delta flight instructor and a member of ALPA's central safety committee.

NTSB officials said they hope, as always, to turn the tragedy into something positive, possibly learning something that may make air travel safer in the future.

But even some observers who watched the entire proceedings don't know just what to think yet.

Mitch Iverson of Garland, whose sister died in the crash, said he had drawn no firm conclusions.

"I did learn that the flight crew really believes they had the flaps in the right position," Iverson said. "Either that, or they're good actors.

"Right now, I don't know who's at fault. But I didn't come here to learn who to blame, just to find out what happened."

Second generation of shuttle astronauts chart new paths

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Space shuttle Atlantis is carrying two space newcomers, part of a new generation of astronauts with a look and background unlike that of the all-white, crew-cut, All American team who rode the Mercury capsules.

Nine more rookies have been named to four future flights, and a new class of astronauts is in training to fill spots vacated by veterans who took other jobs after the shuttle Challenger exploded on Jan. 28, 1986.

The space program now has 93 men and women astronauts, with a nearly even mix of experienced space travelers and those who have never flown into space.

Within 10 years, NASA is expected to add more as it responds to the demand of more shuttle flights and begins construction of the space station.

America's new astronauts are far different from the seven original ones.

The first U.S. astronauts were all military test pilots, all male and all white. All Jack Armstrongs in flight suits.

The space shuttles, with room for up to seven crew members, opened new opportunities.

In 1978, NASA selected women and men, pilots and non-pilots, and black, white, Hispanic and Asian candidates.

The newest group, chosen last year, includes the first black woman astronaut, Dr. Mae C. Jemison, a physician, and the first Coast Guardsman, Bruce E. Melnick.

Another group is scheduled to be chosen in January 1990. Despite the loss of the seven Challenger astronauts, the number of applications has increased since the accident, Johnson Space Center spokesman Jeff Carr said.

The competition seems to have stiffened over the years, said Lori Garver, executive director of the National Space Society, a Washington-based space advocacy group of about 20,000 people from the general public.

"I don't know how it could get more competitive from the early days, but it seems to have done just that," Ms. Garver said. "They have experience in all kinds of areas. (NASA) looks at the whole person and what they have to offer."

The astronauts are also more aggressive about voicing their opinions about quality and safety since Challenger, said astronaut Charles Bolden Jr., a Marine colonel. "Now, people have no qualms about speaking out," he said.

When Challenger exploded there were 95 astronauts. More than a dozen later retired. Some returned to their military branches; others — like Sally Ride, the first American woman in space — left NASA to pursue other careers.

Fifteen people — 10 military and five civilians — were added to the astronaut ranks in August 1987. Two of them are women, Ms. Jemison and Jan Davis.

It takes at least four years of training before an astronaut can even be assigned to a flight, and crews generally are named a year before their launch date, Ms. Davis said.

"I didn't understand before I came here how all-encompassing the job is. We don't just flip switches and follow check lists. We've got to understand what's going on with all these systems," said Ms. Davis, who has a doctorate in mechanical engineering.

Vance Brand, a civilian pilot who flew on two shuttle flights and the Apollo-Soyuz joint mission, said there has been an evolution of sorts in the astronaut corps, with a greater diversity of skills and backgrounds.

Hee said he expects even more diversity in the future.

"Space is like the American West, the Arctic or Antarctica. It's a new locality where you can do all kinds of different things," Brand said.

Chief Democrat blasts Dukakis' campaign staff

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle Saturday blasted former presidential candidate Michael Dukakis' national campaign staff and called for reform in the Federal Election Code to provide greater authority for state party campaigns.

Slagle, addressing the State Democratic Election Committee for the first time since the Nov. 8 elections, criticized Dukakis' staff for not consulting state party officials on their campaign strategy for Texas.

"We found ourselves hamstrung by a presidential campaign...that did not seem to care about what we had to say," he said.

Slagle contends Dukakis' strategists failed to listen to the advice of state and local officials and chose instead to send their own people to Texas to run the campaign.

"You can't find a state party in this country that will say they think they were paid adequate attention to or that their advice was heeded," he said.

Dukakis and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, the vice-presidential nominee, won in only 85 of Texas' 254 counties. In contrast, Bentsen won in 224 counties in his re-election bid for the Senate.

"I assumed that since Sen. Bentsen was on the ticket and that since he has very competent people on his staff, that the Dukakis campaign would ask Bentsen's people what they should do in Texas," Slagle said. "Bentsen's people said that didn't happen much."

Instead, Slagle said, the state party found itself limited by the national campaign and by federal election laws.

Slagle explained that under the Federal Election Code, state parties cannot pay for presidential campaign advertisements. To produce any ads referring to the presidential campaign, the state party must obtain funding from the national party.

But Dukakis' campaign staff controlled the money, and Democratic Executive Chairman Paul Kirk had to intervene to give the Texas Democratic party limited funds for television ads. Slagle added that Dukakis' staff refused to fund ads in rural parts of the state.

Slagle said the opinions of local and state parties cannot be ignored in the next election.

"Since we are so greatly impacted by them (presidential races) on races that have absolutely nothing to do with them, I think we need to seek more autonomy," he said.

Texas Democrats hoped their candidates in the state Supreme Court chief justice and railroad commissioner races would win votes with Bentsen's name on the ballot. Republican Chief Justice Tom Phillips and Commissioner Kent Hance won, effectively "cutting short Bentsen's coattails," Slagle said.

STATE IN BRIEF

7 burned in explosion of gunpowder at store

DENISON (AP) — Seven people were burned, two critically, Saturday when a five-pound can of smokeless gunpowder exploded in the sporting goods department of Barrett's Cut Rate Drug Store in Denison.

Store employees Harrison Taylor, 61, and Cory Sartor, 18, were listed in critical condition in Parkland's Burn Center Saturday. Taylor has second- and third-degree burns from his waist up. Sartor, a 1987 Denison High School graduate, was burned around his back, arms, neck and shoulders.

Police officers told the Denison Herald that Taylor was moving the can about 1 p.m. Saturday when it struck a fluorescent light, touching off the explosion.

The explosion and resulting fire ignited surrounding boxes of Steel Shot Reloader Kits, and a series of smaller explosions ensued. Taylor was thrown across the room by the blast, his clothing aflame.

Sartor was standing behind the counter near Taylor and was thrown in the other direction behind the aisle.

Three customers and two other store employees were treated and released from Texoma Medical Center. The injured customers were Bryan Keith Schneider, 31, of Gainesville; Jimmy Ray Mitcheson, 42, of Whitesboro; and Jerry Pederson, no age available, of Sherman. The employees who were injured included Store Manager Bob McGraw and Sporting Goods Manager Gerald Camp.

1 killed, 1 injured in crash

TOMBALL (AP) — A single-engine plane crashed in an open field north of Houston Saturday, killing one person and critically injuring another, officials said.

Harris County Deputy Sheriff John Elzey said the plane crashed in the northwest part of the county, and that the survivor was taken to a nearby hospital.

A Federal Aviation Administration official in Fort Worth who would not give his name said the Piper Tomahawk crashed about a mile north of the Hooks Memorial Airport and Seaplane Base near Tomball.

The plane crashed while practicing takeoffs and landings at the airport, the FAA official said.

Contamination trial to begin

BATAVIA, Ohio (AP) — CECOS International Inc. will open its defense Monday in its trial on charges of contaminating a public water supply.

Judge Robert Ringland said he granted the delay Friday in Clermont County Common Pleas Court because one of the chief defense lawyers had a commitment to another case.

The defendants are CECOS International of Buffalo, N.Y.; its parent company, Browning-Ferris Industries Inc. of Houston; former CECOS environmental manager Allan Orth, and former CECOS operations manager John Stirnkorb.

They were indicted in May 1985 on charges of pumping phenol-contaminated rainwater in November 1984 from the top of a toxic-waste burial cell at the 211-acre CECOS waste disposal site into a tributary of Pleasant Run Creek, which provides drinking water for the southwest Ohio village of Williamsburg. Phenol is a toxic, corrosive substance that is used in making dyes and resins.

School to get $40 million

DALLAS (AP) — A financier and philanthropist plans to announce Monday his $40 million gift to the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center for medical research in Texas.

The Dallas Morning News reported in Saturday's editions that sources familiar with the donations say Harold Clark Simmons, who committed $10 million over 10 years to the Dallas medical school in 1984 to establish an arthritis research center, will announce the gift in Dallas.

In a statement Friday, Southwestern officials did not deny the Simmons donation but announced a news conference on "the largest individual gift ever made in Texas higher education."

How To Take A Test

Patient X. has been suffering from chest pains in recent weeks and finally decided it might not be a case of indigestion. His physician ordered a thallium stress test to determine if there are blockages of the arteries or if there could be any heart damage.

This test often is ordered for patients who have symptoms of heart disease, such as chest pains, angina, shortness of breath, or pain down one of the arms, according to Paul Holland, ARRT, radiologic technologist at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital.

The test can be conducted on an in-patient or out-patient basis. Respiratory Therapy and Nuclear Medicine departments each play a role.

Patient X. first is hooked up to a stress machine and he is placed on a treadmill, according to Karen Ritchie, TRCP, Respiratory Care Department coordinator.

"We start them on the treadmill at a slow pace and encourage the patients to go as long as they physically can," she said.

Every three minutes the treadmill speeds up and increases in grade to give the effect of walking up a hill. Ms. Ritchie said the patient's blood pressure is monitored constantly and an EKG machine also is used to monitor the heart for any problems.

When the patient says he can go only one more minute, nuclear medicine takes over. That's when the thallium is injected, and the patient walks another minute to circulate the thallium throughout the blood system. Holland begins taking images, which consist of three different views of the heart. This first set is called stress images.

"Each part of the heart is fed by different arteries," Holland said. "If some blood vessels are restricted and are not letting blood into a part of the heart, there will be a decreased uptake of the thallium."'

He explained the use of thallium in terms of dyeing a piece of fabric. If one piece of the cloth doesn't absorb the dye, it has less of the color than the rest of the cloth. That's how it appears on the images if the thallium is not reaching all parts of the heart.

Three to four hours later, a second series of images called rest images are made, and these show if the damage to the heart is permanent or reversible. Holland said if the damage area fills in with the thallium after a few hours, then the damage is reversible.

When a thallium stress test shows a patient does have a possible blockage in one of the arteries, the next step often is a heart catheterization, according to Holland. This invasive procedure pinpoints exactly where a blockage is located in an artery and if there are more than one blockage.

However, if the thallium stress test shows no blockages and no heart damages, then the physician may have to look for another source of Patient X.'s pain--possibly indigestion.

Paul Holland, ARRT, explains the thallium stress test to a patient.

MRI

After wallowing for over three years behind Odessa, it now appears that Midland will finally have at least one, and perhaps two, Magnetic Resonance Imaging machines. I am thrilled to be a part of a group of doctors making this possible. This column has been pro-actively enthusiastic in the drive to get this medical technology in Midland.

HOW IT WORKS

The MRI machine is made up of a larger super-conducting, super-cooled magnet; a radio transmitter; and a powerful main frame computer. The source of information generated for the MRI picture is the nucleus of hydrogen atoms in the body.

In the normal state, the hydrogen nuclei are oriented randomly in the body. When you are placed in the MRI scanner, the hydrogen nuclei become temporarily aligned with the magnetic field of the system's magnet. A radio wave is then passed and the nuclei emit a characteristic signal which is picked up by an antenna in the system. This marks the locus of each nucleus. This data is used to contruct an anatomical picture for your doctor.

MRI differs from a CAT scan and other X-rays in that it does not use radiation, and does not require the injection of contrast material.

FUTURE APPLICATIONS

The application of MRI technology is rapidly expanding. It is anticipated the MRI will be able to do cell examinations such as biopsy examinations without having to surgically obtain a biopsy specimen. With MRI's current applications and other uses on the horizon, it is commendable that two physician-driven groups are actively involved in making MRI a reality in Midland.

VIRUSES 200

The common cold can be caused by over 200 different viruses which attack the membranes of the nose, throat and ears.

Symptoms vary from mild to severe and in the elderly or those with diabetes, heart problems or underlying chronic illnesses, it can cause severe complications.

Viruses are spread to the nose by hand to nose contact. Frequent hand washing and avoiding hand contact with infected persons and further avoiding touching your face and nose will help to prevent acquiring the infection from others.

Health Program Focuses On 'Total' Woman

By Jerry L. Cochran, M.D.
Midland Orthopedic Clinic
Texas Institute of Sports Medicine

More than one-half of the American population is female and yet how much true emphasis is placed upon preventive medicine in regards to this special population? The entire question of women's health tends to be approached in a piecemeal fashion. In different publications we read about osteoporosis, aging, menopause, weight, diet, physical fitness, mental health and all those other issues that have to do with women. However, it is not being realized that all of these factors are intimately interrelated and to isolate them is to miss the overall picture.

These factors may be divided into those which are intrinsic to physiology, that is osteoporosis, aging and menopause, and those which are extrinsic, or to some degree affected by personal factors such as diet, physical fitness, weight and mental health. It is obvious that the intrinsic factors are intensely affected by the extrinsic factors. The reverse is also true.

At this point in time, it is becoming increasingly apparent that there are five primary factors in human health enhancement. That is, cardiopulmonary strength, musculoskeletal strength, flexibility, diet and avoidance of negative health factors (abusive drug use, cigarette smoking, etc.). With rare exception, the positive institution of improved cardiopulmonary and musculoskeletal strength, increased flexibility, and proper diet will result in improved health. Even with the addition of a negative factor such as cigarette smoking, the net result is improved health.

Cardiopulmonary strength, musculoskeletal strength and flexibility are increased by specific physical exercises.

Cardiopulmonary strength may be defined as the ability of the body to metabolically burn oxygen. It is a direct measurement of degree of physical fitness. Oxidative chemical metabolic reactions are by definition aerobic in nature. The greater this ability, the better the health. In our society, there tends to be a direct correlation between increasing age and decreased ability to burn oxygen. This is a result of decreased physical activity as one ages, not the effect of aging itself. In fact, the result of gradually decreasing ability to burn oxygen are those factors that are associated with aging, specifically, decreased exercise, tolerance, cardiovascular disease and aging of tissue. Aerobic exercise burns only fat during the exercise process. This allows aerobic exercise to be an effective method to reduce total body fat percentage.

Aging is also associated with decreased musculoskeletal strength. In part, decreased physical strength is a natural consequence of the aging process. In his text on sports medicine, Daniel Kuland, M.D., points out that physical strength decreases approximately 1 percent per year of age past 40. This loss of physical strength dictates atropy of muscle tissue. Compare the contours of a 20-year-old male or female with their 70-year-old counterpart. This difference in appearance is one of those things we associate with the aging process. With the development of a proper musculoskeletal training program, this change may be significantly delayed. Of profound importance to women is the fact that musculoskeletal exercise tends to inhibit the development of osteoporosis.

Loss of joint flexibility is also directly associated with aging. This is caused by lack of activity, dehydration of connective tissue, and arthritic changes. It is appreciated that in order to maximize muscle fiber recruitment in exercise, joints have to be taken through a full range of motion. If an intense stretching or flexibility exercise program is followed, some loss of range of motion is regained and muscle strength and shaping is improved.

Dietary control tends to reinforce and enhance the effects of exercise by helping to reduce total body fat percentage, reduce serum cholesterol and triglyceride, improve serum electrolyte/water metabolism, and increase end organ receptivity to insulin. The typical American diet tends to be high in saturated fats, salt and simple sugars. The avoidance of red meat and fried foods typically lowers saturated fat intake and thus total body fat percentage as well as serum chelesterol and triglyceride levels. Reduction of simple sugars reduces total dietary caloric intake. Ingestion of turkey, chicken and fish, the use of unsaturated oils for cooking, and the use of complex carbohydrates such as pasta seems to be superior.

We at the Texas Institute of Sports Medicine are dedicated to the development of a truly integrated health enhancement program for women. This is a complete program which is designed with all five primary health enhancement factors in mind. Program design will inherently emphasize those factors which improve health and modify those which are health inhibiting.

Base line physical evaluation including electrocardiograms and laboratory assessment as well as fitness measurement including total body fat percentage will be studied. At appropriate time intervals, re-assessment of problem items (for example, serum chelesterol, triglycerides, total body fat percentage) will be accomplished. Our bottom line goal is to increase quality of life.

...Six Snifters of Dessert

By MICHEL McKAY

Ah, tis the season to eat, drink and be merry. People on low-calorie diets may equate this with a season to suffer through while everyone else relishes the sugary, high-calorie desserts.

Sally X. is planning a holiday dinner party using the recipes for low-calorie salad dressing and the Veal Emince. But she's stumped about a dessert.

The recipe for Marinade, below, can be adapted for people needing low-calorie food and also for diabetics. Just substitute grape juice for the Grand Marnier and Nutrasweet for the sugar. It's a simple dessert to make but is especially festive for the holidays.

MARINADE
(Serves Six)
1 pound raspberries (or other berries)
1 ounce Grand Marnier (or grape juice)
1 tbsp. orange peel
2 ounces sugar (or ½ ounce Nutrasweet)
Mefingue
5 egg whites
½ cup sugar (or 1 ounce Nutrasweet)
5 sheets of filo pastry (can be found in frozen food section)

1. Combine berries, sugar, Grand Marnier and orange peel in bowl and allow to soak a few hours.
2. Place egg whites and sugar in a mixer bowl and make meringue.
3. Spoon berry mixture into 6 brandy snifters (or wine glasses).
Add 2 tbsps of meringue.
4. Cover brandy snifter with filo pastry. Make sure the pastry is humid so it will seal the snifter. Place snifters in very hot oven (maximum heat, 550-600 degrees) until dough becomes golden brown. This will be about 5 minutes.
5. Remove from oven, sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve.

Shedding Light On The Blahs

When the clocks switched back to "regular" time earlier this fall, the days seemed to shorten dramatically. Now, dark has definitely arrived by 6 p.m.

The time change also marked the beginning of "seasonal depression," a major depressive disorder that is beginning to receive significant attention in psychiatric literature.

Symptoms for this disorder can include sadness, anxiety, decreased physical activity, increased appetite, carbohydrate craving, weight gain, hypersomnia, decreased libido, worsening of premenstrual symptoms, impaired work performance and interpersonal conflict.

In the October 1988 edition of American Academy of Family Physicians, Drs. Steven C. Dilsaver and Jeffrey A. Coffman noted this seasonal affective disorder is characterized by mood disturbances that begin in early fall to midwinter and begin to abate as the days get longer and warmer.

This disorder in which patients exhibit depression during the winter months only was recognized about 100 years ago. It was confirmed in another study in 1921.

For severe cases, antidepressant drugs have been used. But another form of treatment--exposure to full-spectrum bright artifical light--is found to be effective. This form of lighting system produces light that is five to 10 times brighter than ordinary room light, according to the AFP article.

Therapy calls for a patient who awakens early in the morning to be treated with bright light from 6 to 8 p.m. For those who are hypersomniac, the light can be used from 6 to 8 a.m. This latter group may have to be awakened in the morning to use the treatment.

For people who suffer severely from the shortened days during the winter, this treatment of artificial bright light could ease their seasonal depression, according to the AFP report.

Rankin suffers 1st loss

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

LEVELLAND — Troy Kennedy knew his Rankin Red Devils were in for a tough night when White Deer completed a 45-yard pass play on their first possession.

Even though the game was far from over, the Rankin head football coach said the "hideout" play from Bart Thomas to Allen Mercer only three minutes into the game helped key a 35-20 Red Devil loss in state Class A quarterfinal action here Saturday.

"That play took the wind out of our sails," Kennedy said. "We'd scored that first touchdown and it looked like we could move on them."

Rankin quarterback Doug Braden had popped a 71-yard touchdown run on the second play from scrimmage for a 6-0 Devil lead, but the Thomas-Mercer connection set up Jason Marlar's two-yard run. Thomas added the first of five extra-point kicks and the Bucks had their first lead.

White Deer, 13-0, faces Lindsay in a state semifinal game at Vernon this coming week, the exact time and date of which was unknown at press time.

Rankin finished at 12-1 in Kennedy's first season at the helm.

The Devils outgained White Deer 181-153 in the first half, but still trailed 14-12 due to an inability to convert extra-point tries.

Rankin took its last lead when Broan McCravey juked past safety Thomas for a 42-yard Td run with 2:53 left in the first period.

Two possessions later, White Deer took the lead for good when Marlar slashed over from the one with 7:50 left in the half to cap a nine-play 54-yard drive.

It's not that Rankin was overpowered by the bigger Bucks. Instead, the Devils moved within White Deer's 10-yard line twice in the second half, only to self-destruct while on the verge of scoring.

"We beat ourselves," Rankin guard-linebacker Michael Riojas said. "Even after they went ahead, we were just thinking all we had to do is score."

Scoring proved to be difficult for the gutsy Devs, however, until Braden connected with split end Junior Helmers on a 40-yard TD pass with 2:49 left in the game for the final score of a glorious season.

It's the times they didn't score that hurt.

After eating up the majority of the third quarter with a 12-play, 61-yard drive, Rankin halfback Joe Abalos fumbled at the White Deer five and Buck end Jerod Cox recovered with 5:24 left. The drive was keyed by Braden's 12-yard run with a fake punt that brought the ball into Buck territory.

Braden led all rushers with 135 yards on 22 carries. Abalos added 75 yards for the Devils.

After Thomas seemingly wrapped up a White Deer win with a 33-yard Td run off a quarterback draw, the Devils drove deep into Buck territory once again.

But a short TD pass from Braden to Helmers was called back when Brian McCravey was caught pushing a Buck defender in the end zone for offensive pass interference.

After the penalty, Braden tried to sweep right on third and goal at the 12 but was knooked out of bounds at the seven. The Devil QB then threw wildly into the end zone on fourth down under an all-out blitz led by Bryan Waitman and Zach Thomas.

White Deer's blitzing surprised the Devils, Kennedy said.

"When we sealed them off, we were all right. But we didn't pick it up all the time."

The Devils still had a chance in the final minutes after Braden's TD pass to Helmers cut the score to 28-20. But Kirk Kennedy's onside kick attempt didn't travel the required 10 yards and Thomas finally wrapped things up with a 53-yard drive around right end.

"I wish I could take back all our fumbles and turnovers," Braden said. The Devils lost three fumbles and Braden was intercepted once.

Heisman nails Sanders in his tracks

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Barry Sanders' campaign on behalf of quarterbacks Rodney Peete and Troy Aikman ended in failure Saturday night when Oklahoma State's record-breaking tailback won the Heisman Trophy as the nation's top college football player.

When the announcement was made, Sanders was in Tokyo, where Oklahoma State played its final regular-season game against Texas Tech a few hours later.

Sanders went into the game needing 47 yards to break the NCAA single-season rushing record of 2,342 yards by Southern Cal's Marcus Allen en route to the 1981 Heisman.

The 5-foot-8, 197-pound junior already set 18 NCAA, 13 Big Eight Conference and nine school records this season. Sanders is the eighth junior to win the Heisman.

In his first 10 games, Sanders set NCAA records of 35 touchdowns and if he fails to gain a single yard rushing, receiving or returning kicks he will still break the oldest record in the book — 246.3 all-purpose yards a game by Colorado's Byron "Whizzer" White in 1937.

Sanders was an easy winner over quarterbacks Rodney Peete of Southern Cal and Troy Aikman of UCLA. Sanders said earlier the two quarterbacks were more deserving of the award.

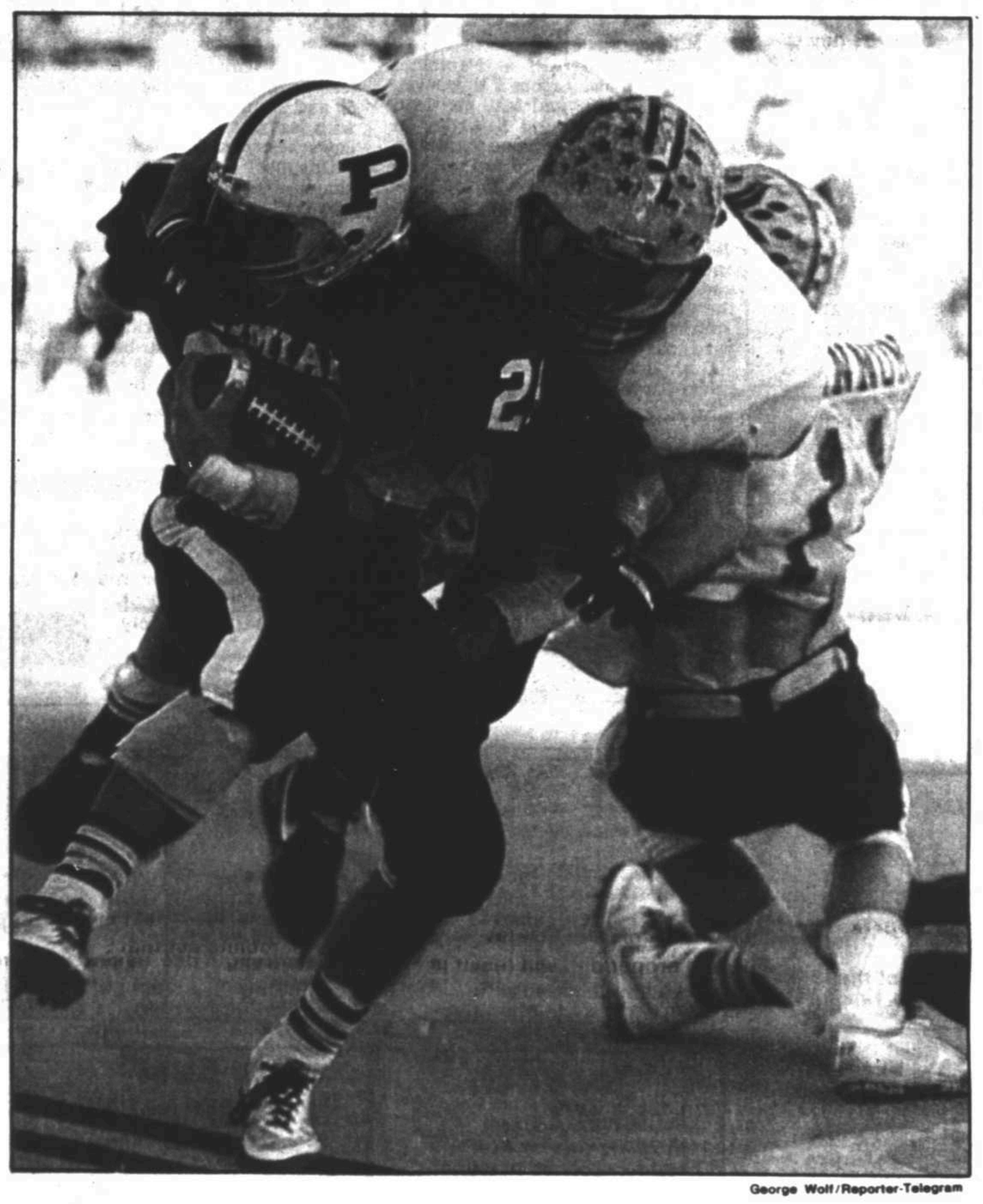

Sanders carried each of the nation's six Heisman voting regions. Sanders received 559 first-place votes, 77 second-place votes and 47 for third place, for a total of 1,878 points.

Peete received 70 firsts, 264 seconds and 174 thirds for 912 points. Aikman's totals were 31-149-191 — 582 points.

"I'd like to thank God for putting me in this position," Sanders said. "I couldn't have done it without Him. I also would like to thank my offensive line and my fullback, Gary Limbrick. They've done such a great job. I couldn't ask for a greater season from these guys."

Sanders, the first junior to win the award since Herschel Walker of Georgia in 1982, said he was "relieved, but individual goals do not mean as much as team goals."

Rounding out the top 10 were Miami quarterback Steve Walsh, 16-108-77 (341); West Virginia quarterback Major Harris, 27-60-79 (280); Michigan State offensive tackle Tony Mandarich, 3-9-25 (52); Washington State quarterback Timm Rosenbach, 6-6-14 (44); Florida State defensive back Deion Sanders, (no relation to Barry) 0-3-16 (22); Indiana running back Anthony Thompson, 0-4-13 (21), and Alabama linebacker Derrick Thomas, 3-2-7 (20).

Permian stings Vikings, 21-7

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — Arlington Lamar kept Odessa Permian running back Chris Comer from completing a rare playoff "Triple 200" at Ratliff Stadium Saturday afternoon in a Class 5A state playoff football game, but the Vikings didn't keep the Panthers from what they do best — winning.

Mojo stung the highly regarded Vikings 21-7 to advance to the state semifinals for the second consecutive year while continuing a dominance over Dallas-Fort Worth based teams. Permian now owns a 31-5-3 record against teams from the D-FW area.

COMER, who had over 200 yards rushing in two previous playoff games, gained a paltry (for him) 102 yards and only two touchdowns. He took losing out on the "Triple 200" in stride.

"Well, 102 yards isn't that bad," said Comer. "Besides, I'll take the victory and play another week anytime. The win is the important thing."

With the victory, Permian advances against Dallas Carter in the semifinals — if the court system allows Carter to make the meeting. Carter, a 22-18 victor over Marshall, is due back in court Monday, still waiting on a ruling over the grades of a Carter player. Carter ruined a re-match between Permian and Marshall. Marshall beat Permian in September in Marshall.

All this has leaves Permian wondering when and where they will play next week.

"We tried to get in contact with them this week and decide where we would play, but they wouldn't talk with us," said John Wilkins, Odessa athletic director. "At this point, we don't know where the game will be played or when. I wish I could tell you more."

PERMIAN head coach Gary Gaines is also at a loss over the situation.

"I just know we'll prepare for Dallas Carter until someone tells us it's not them," said Gaines. "A lot of teams have fallen into that trap of preparing for two teams up to this date and it hasn't worked.

"I probably don't know as much as I should about this situation, but I think it's ridiculous. The matter with Carter should have been decided long before now.

Meanwhile, the Panthers didn't seem to be worrying about next week, turning in another fine defensive performance against the Vikings.

Lamar possessed talented quarterback John Joe, who had passed for over 2,000 yards this year. He was held to 157 air yards and one 12-yard TD pass to Brent Ballow in the third quarter. Permian intercepted Joe three times.

With the Vikings owning a passing team, tremendous pressure was placed on Lloyd Hill and Robert Brown. Both are wide receivers and do double duty in Mojo's secondary.

"WE WORKED on conditioning all week because we knew it was going to be a track meet out there," said the junior Hill, who caught a spectacular 28-yard TD pass from Mike Winchell that gave Permian a 14-7 lead in the third period and the points Permian needed to win. Hill also intercepted a pass on defense.

Permian took a 7-0 lead in the first period by driving 81 yards in nine plays with Comer getting the final yard, but it got tough after that.

Lamar was denied a 65-yard TD pass from Joe to Chad Cannon in the second period on a holding call and the Vikings intercepted Winchell to set up a 7-7 tie to open the third period. Lamar had to move only 21 yards in three plays to knot the score on the Joe to Ballow connection. At that point, Lamar had the advantage, tied in penetrations, but leading on first downs.

Permian, however, came back with a six-play, 44-yard drive later in the period with Winchell connecting with Hill on a diving catch at the flag.

Monterey claims Tall City girls cage title

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Lubbock Monterey, as expected, dominated the Tall City Girls Invitational basketball tournament at Chaparral Center Saturday night with an 84-60 victory over Lubbock Estacado in the championship final.

While the Hub City produced the final two, two El Paso teams battled for third place with Bowie taking a 54-46 win over Eastwood. Midland Lee rallied for two victories Saturday after losing a first round game to win consolation honors with a 60-53 win over Odessa Permian in the title game.

Monterey, the real class of the tournament, scored almost at will throughout the three games they won. The Plainswomen got 27 points from Diana Kersey in the championship game against Estacado, but also had Shawin Shewmake (12), Ashley Ince (11) and Janice Farris (11) in double figures while Estacado countered with 23 from Deeadra Brown, 14 from Patrice Conwirght and 12 from Keisha Manahan.

Monterey got to the championship game with 53-39 win over Eastwood as Ince had 12 and Kasey Hardin 10. Estacado beat Bowie 61-50 wiuth Conwright scoring 26, Manahan 16 and Brown 13.

That forced Bowie and Eastwood into the third place batte and Bowie defeated Eastwood for the third time this year, but it took a 54-46 overtime to do it. Bowie had beaten Eastwood by 20 points in one game this season, but the Lady Troopers led most of the way in this one before Bowie rallied behind the 25 points of Alex Comancho and 17 from Monica Cisnernos. Bitsy Mueller led Eastwood with 10 points.

Monica Ramirez had a big day for the Lady Rebels of Lee. She scored a tournament high 32 points against Artesia, N.M., in the consolation semifinals and came back with 27 points against Permian in the consolation game.

Lee's Kim Davis had 17 points against Artesia and Mary Ann Isom had 14 against Permian. Permian's Stephanie James had 12 points.

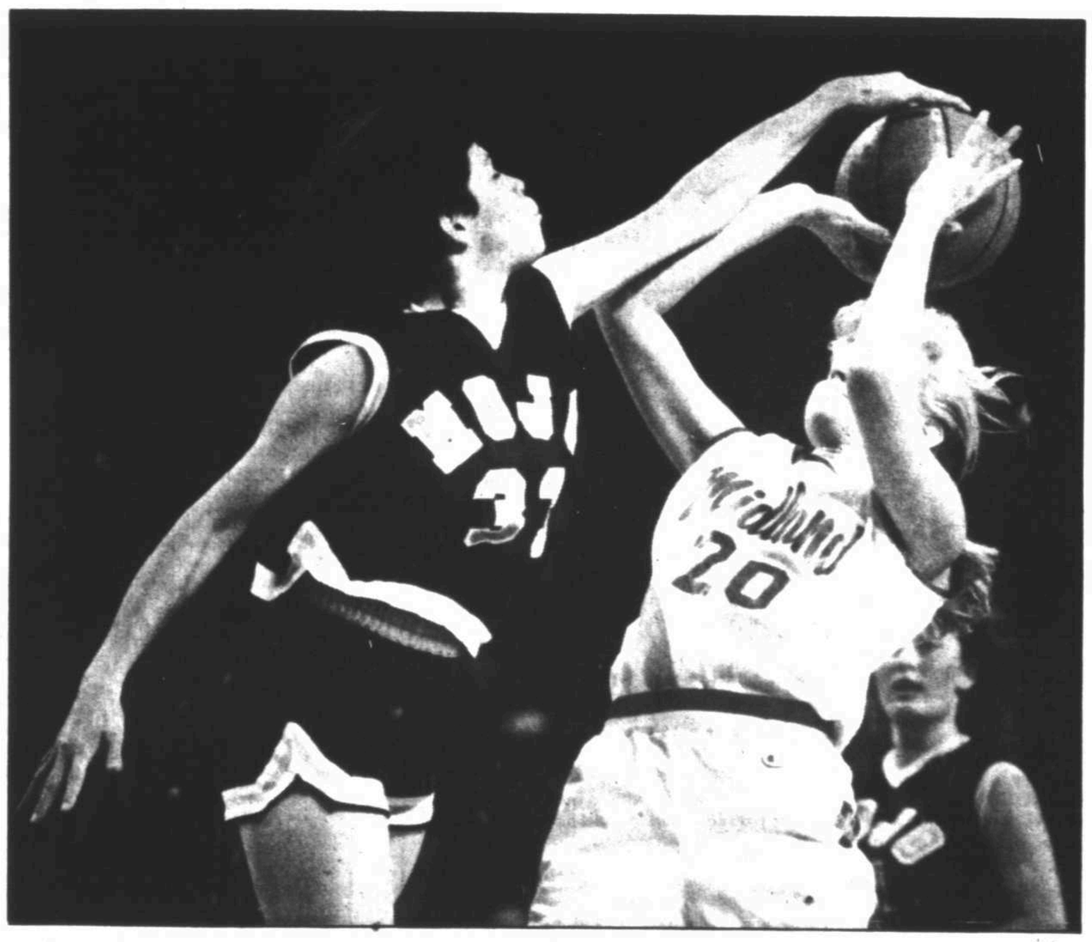

Permian rallied, however, against Lee and took a third quarter lead before the Lady Rebels got back on track.

"We played well on Saturday, except for the third quarter of the final game," said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson. "I was just glad that we got it back together."

Midland High suffered through a tough tournament, losing all three games. Saturday, the Lady Bulldogs dropped 59-45 decision to 4-5A opponent Permian and a 65-38 game to Artesia — the two teams Lee defeated on the way to the consolation title.

MHS' Kim Jackson was the only Bulldog in double figures in both losses, scoring 10 against Permian and 14 against Artesia.

Tournament action continues next Friday at Chaparral Center as Midland College hosts eight teams in a third consecutive tournament weekend. Entered in that tournament are MHS, Lee, Borger, Amarillo Tascosa, Austin LBJ, Odessa Permian, Plainview and Greenwood.

In his six career games against Dallas prior to Saturday, Jordan had averaged 24.5 points and had scored over 30 only once.

Chicago snapped a four-game losing streak in handing Dallas its worst loss of the season. The Mavericks are in their longest home losing streak since 1986.

Dallas, which got 23 points from Mark Aguirre, got no closer than 13 in the second half.

Sam Vincent had 18 points and 12 assists for the Bulls.

Dave Corzine scored five points during a 12-0 Chicago run late in the first quarter as the Bulls streaked to a 28-11 advantage with 43 seconds left in the period.

Dominique Wilkins and Moses Malone each had 22 points for the Hawks and John Battle had 16. Malone was 9-for-12 from the field.

Clyde Drexler led Portland with 23 points, followed by Mark Bryant with 17, Terry Porter with 16 and Kersey with 15.

Gaylord won't beg for Rangers

Associated Press

DALLAS — Amid reports that American League owners have been trying to find someone other than Texas Rangers minority owner Edward L. Gaylord to take control of the club, the Oklahoma City businessman said Saturday he won't beg for ownership of the team.

Gaylord's proposed purchase of the Rangers is on the agendas for the winter meeting of the American League owners in Atlanta on Tuesday and the joint meeting of American and National League owners on Wednesday.

Gaylord this fall exercised his right of first refusal to match an offer for the American League team made by a group of Tampa businessmen, who had reached an agreement to buy the team from Chiles.

Such a transaction requires approval of three-fourths of the American League owners and a majority of National League owners.

The Dallas Morning News on Saturday quoted several team owners who requested anonymnity as saying approval of Gaylord's offer will not be granted at the meetings.

The newspaper also said representatives of American League owners have been trying to find someone other than Gaylord to purchase Eddie Chiles' majority interest in the franchise.

In 1984, American League owners rejected a purchase of the Rangers by Gaylord, citing his controlling interest in KTVT-TV in Fort Worth, which has the broadcast rights to the team.

Brown, a former Rangers president, said opposition continues against Gaylord because of the television issue.

One owner, whose name was not used, told the Dallas newspaper, "He (Gaylord) is not interested in owning the team because of his interest in baseball but as a tool for his other business interests, to enhance his television station."

2 teams share lead

LARGO, Fla. — Mike Hulbert and Lori Garbacz, a last-minute pairing, and the veteran duo of Larry Mize and Martha Nause shared the lead after three rounds of the $800,000 J.C. Penney Classic.

Garbacz, who replaced injured Val Skinner as Hulbert's partner, and Hulbert, who finished second with Skinner two years ago, combined for a 7-under-par 65 over the par-72 Bardmoor Country Club course. They were at 15-under 201 along with Mize, the 1987 Masters champion, and Nause, who have competed together for six years and teamed up for a 67 Saturday.

Two other teams, Mike Sullivan-Sally Little and John Huston-Amy Benz were one stroke back. Huston and Benz shot a 65, including six birdies on the front nine, while Sullivan and Little had a 68.

Allem moves into Sun

SUN CITY, South Africa — South African Fulton Allem shot a 6-under-par 66 to climb from fifth place into a tie for the lead with American Ken Green Saturday after three rounds of the Million Dollar Challenge.

Allem, a first year pro, and Green had 54-hole scores of 209, and shared a two-stroke lead in the eight-man invitational event that offers golf's richest prize.

Allem, who had seven birdies and a bogey, conceded he could not avoid thinking of the money at stake.

"Anybody who tells you he's not nervous playing for a million dollars I think needs his head examined," he said.

Green shot a 70 in the steaming, 91-degree weather. He had a bogey on the eighth hole and a double-bogey on the ninth, but finished with two birdies.

Edberg Triumphs

NEW YORK — Stefan Edberg used a powerful serve to beat Mats Wilander 6-2, 6-2 Saturday, knocking the world's No. 1 player out of the Masters tennis tournament.

Longshot Jakob Hlasek joined Edberg in the semifinals by routing Andre Agassi 6-3, 6-2 in the day's second match at Madison Square Garden.

Hlasek, the only unbeaten player left in the tournament, will play Boris Becker in the semifinals and Edberg will meet defending champion Ivan Lendl.

Lendl qualified after winning the first set against Tim Mayotte in Saturday's final round-robin match. Under the complicated Masters format, Lendl was guaranteed a semifinal berth even if he lost in three sets.

Edberg had 11 aces against Wilander and held serve throughout the match. But he said the key was his decision to vary the pace of his shots and stay back on the baseline more than usual.

January leads

KAANAPALI, Hawaii — Don January shot a 68 Saturday to take the lead after two rounds of the Kaanapali Classic, the final event of the PGA Senior Tour season.

January, the biggest money-winner in the history of the Senior Tour, is still recovering after suffering a broken rib and three cracked ribs in a Sept. 3 auto accident in Dallas.

"I didn't pick up a club and start swinging until about a week ago," said the first millionaire on the Senior Tour. "I really hadn't played since June, because I took June, July and August off to open my new club, the Stonebriar, in Dallas."

Despite his injuries and a radical shift in the normal Trade Winds, which blow across the 6,704-yard Royal Kaanapali North Course, January finished two rounds in 10-under-par 134.

Soccer semis

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Waidi Akanni's penalty-kick goal 8:24 into the second half led No. 7 Howard University to a 2-0 upset victory over No. 5 South Carolina in the semifinals of the NCAA Division I soccer tournament Saturday.

Akanni's 16th goal of the season came after fellow forward Peter Isaacs was pulled down from behind by South Carolina's Mike Gosselin.

Howard, 18-0-1, advanced to Sunday's final.

Sheldon Jones iced the victory for the Bisons with a breakaway goal with just over 15 minutes to play.

Isaacs picked up an assist on that goal, finding Jones about 45 yards out. Jones controlled the pass, sprinted by two South Carolina defenders and poked it past a sliding Charles Arndt and into the Gamecock's goal.

NM State hands Tech another loss

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Guard Jeff McCool scored 19 points, including four three-point field goals in the first half, and forward Johnny Roberson added 13 as New Mexico State defeated Texas Tech 68-58 on Saturday.

The Aggies, 3-1, never trailed. The Red Raiders, now 0-3, scored only two baskets in the first 10 minutes of play.

The Aggies opened with a tenacious matchup defense and led 19-3 on a three-pointer by McCool with 11:15 to go in the first half. The Red Raiders went on a 15-5 run and trailed 24-18 with 4:06 left in the opening period, but NMSU led at the half 31-20.

In the second half, the visitors could get no closer than seven points. The Aggies maintained a lead ranging from nine to 12 points for most of the half. A pair of free throws by guard Sean Gay brought Tech to within seven, 58-51 with 3:14 to go, but they could get no closer.

The Aggies shot 45 percent, holding Tech to 36 percent. Gay, who was All-Southwest Conference last year, led the visitors with 18 points. Guard Jerry Mason added 14.

Leader of Year honors given

NEW YORK (AP) — Running back Lewis Tillman of Jackson State and safety Mark Blazek of Nebraska have been selected as winners of the 1988 Toyota Leader of the Year Awards.

Tillman has broken Walter Payton's all-time school rushing record at Jackson. He is a business management major and carries a 3.1 grade point average.

Blazek, a three-year letterman and defensive co-captain of the Orange Bowl-bound Cornhuskers, has a 3.96 grade point average in social science education.

30 share Laurel Double Triple

LAUREL, Md. (AP) — Thirty people will share in the record Double Triple $1.8-million jackpot at Laurel Race Course, after picking the top three finishers in the third and fifth races.

Laurel spokesman Jeff Whiteman said 8,322 people picked the top three in the third race correctly Friday.

The 30 people who then picked the correct 4-13-11 combination in the fifth race will receive $60,927.90 apiece. The top three horses in the fifth race were Skating Lady, Windy Royal and Mighty Juliet.

The third race included 11 horses, and was comprised of older runners with established form.

The fifth race was for 2-year-olds.

West Orange-Stark squeaks by Tomball

HOUSTON (AP) — Quarterback Tremain Lewis passed for three touchdowns to lead the West Orange-Stark Mustangs to a 24-22 win over the Tomball Cougars in the Region III regional finals of the state Class 4A playoffs.

West Orange-Stark, the defending state 4A champion, will be vying for its third straight title if it beats Kerrville Tivy in the semi-final match-up next week. The site of that game has yet to be decided.

Lewis had touchdown passes of 10 and seven yards to Julian Richard and of five yards to Eric West.

Lewis finished with 14 completions on 28 attempts for 168 yards. West caught eight passes for 106 yards.

Damon Gilmore led Tomball, 10-2-1, with 131 yards rushing on 18 attempts and two touchdowns. Gilmore had a 10-yard touchdown run and an 89-yard kickoff return for his second touchdown.

West Orange-Stark, 11-2, led 17-0 midway through the second quarter. Tomball came back to cut its deficit to 17-14 at the half.

The Mustangs moved ahead 24-14. Tomball scored with 1:08 left in the game and a two-point conversion run by Gilmore made the final score 24-22.

Tomball's onside kick went out of bounds with West Orange retaining possession with 1:04 left to play.

Judson blitzes CC Carroll, 30-0

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Fullback Kevin Harrison rushed for 129 yards and two touchdowns to pace Converse Judson to a 30-0 victory over Corpus Christi Carroll in a Class 5-A quarterfinal game Saturday.

Harrison's 32-yard touchdown dash with 9:35 to play gave the Rockets a 24-0 lead to put the game away. Tailback Vincent Kyle contributed 92 yards as Judson, 13-1, piled up 407 yards in total offense and 28 first downs.

Chaps find SPC no get-well card

From Staff Reports

While it's a little early to claim any basketball game is "crucial", the Midland College Chaps might be feeling that way about their 7:30 p.m. Monday meeting with the South Plains College Texans.

Chap Center could be filled for this encounter, since there's going to be a pre-game tailgate party in the parking lot, complete with free pizza, soft drinks, music, and the Midland College cheerleaders.

The public is invited to the tailgate affair, which is being sponsored by the Student Senate, with help from several other student organizations.

With their overtime loss to Howard College at Chap Center Thursday, the Chaps are 1-1 in conference play heading into a meeting with one of the teams expected to contest Odessa College for the loop title.

SPC coach Ron Mayberry's squad has only one loss this season, a close 74-72 game with Jacksonville College in the Chap Classic last month. Meanwhile the Chaps, after beating Western Texas College at Snyder last Monday, 110-100, seemed legweary against the Howard College Hawks in a game that was close all the way.

Monday's tilt is the last home appearance for the Chaps until Jan. 12, when they host Odessa College. The Chaps finish this fall's conference schedule Thursday at Roswell, playing the New Mexico Military Institute Broncos on their home court.

With the loss to Howard, the Chaps are 7-4 for the year.

"We're going to need a strong effort against South Plains. We saw how good they could be in the Chap Classic and they'll be coming in pretty confident after what Howard did to us," said MC coch Reggie Franklin, "We also need lots of fan support. Our players are young and we'd like them to know they have backing from the students and the townspeople. We hope they'll be out early for the tailgate party and then make lots of noise at the game."

With the dismissal of 6-10 sophomore Sydney Rice from the team for disciplinary reasons now confirmed, the Chaps have just one regular back from last year.

That places a load on the freshmen, who are talented but inexperienced against the type of players they're facing every week in this conference.

Keith Stewart, the 6-8 240-pound strongman in the middle of the South Plains squad, is one of the reasons the Texans are playing so well.

Sophomores Vernon Dobbs and Ron Shields, both 6-1, and transfer Sammy Simpson, 6-2, take care of the guard duties along with freshman Kevin Shelvin and Tyrone Maxey. But freshman Jeff Stern, 6-9, is becoming a force. And sophomores Earl McKinney, 6-4; Darion Newsome, 6-6; and 6-7 towers Scott Davis and Ron Teamer give the Texans lots of depth.

But the Chaps have been getting good production from freshman Tim Owens, the 6-5 Houston Yates product who leads the Chaps in scoring and rebounding. Freshmen Fred Campbell, 6-8, and Darryl King, 6-9, are getting better each time out.

And sophomore point guard Charles "Smokey" McCovery, who became MC's fourth player in four years to sign with Oklahoma University, has been getting some relief from Eric Golightly, while Randy Williams, Kethus Hanks, and Kerwin Harris are operating in shifts at the off-guard spot.

Is SWC playing under Death Penalty without realizing it?

Battles

If Texas A&M were assessed the Death Penalty for defiance of NCAA probation in the wake of SMU's death sentence, a reader wondered, what would it do to the Southwest Conference. Could it survive another such mortal blow?

There are those who suspect everybody in the SWC has been playing under the Death Penalty for at least two years and don't know it.

Texas' best high school talent is deserting the state in droves, which may be why the only successful team is from Arkansas, and the league is mired, and has been, in mediocrity.

ONCE the most innovative conference in the country, its brand of football reflects the evolution of Woody Hayes' Three Yards-and-a-Cloud into its present day form.

When Frank Leahy wanted to incorporate the forward pass into Notre Dame's offense before the war, he came to Texas to learn.

There was a time when the NFL came to the SWC for its quarterbacks...Sammy Baugh, Davey O'Brien, Adrian Burk, Lamar McHan,Frank Ryan, King Hill, Don Meredith for starters.

Nowadays, the SWC depends on bland X football, the one based on physical superiority to overpower the opposition. Only trouble is, once SWC teams venture outside the conference, they find there no longer is any such thing as a manpower edge.

JACK PARDEE is the lone breath of fresh air with his run-and-shoot offense at Houston. It could be the Hayden Fry story all over.

Fry went into the stodgy Big 10 with its two-team power structure and with a little imagination stood the league on its ear at a school that hadn't been competitive since the coaching days of Forest Evashevski.

Even Dan Jenkins, whose background goes back to Doak Walker, Bobby Layne glory days asserts the SWC has gone stale. He calls the coaches the worst in the country.

OF COURSE, the league held its own as long as it kept most of its best talent at home, but that's no longer the case.

So what happened? Some claim the state of SWC football, like everything else, is a result of the Bust.

"Face it," assures one who claims to know the inside story, "Once the bottom fell out of the market, those wheeler-dealers who were contributing heavily to the financial welfare of their institution's athletes simply couldn't afford it any more.

"When the money stopped coming, the athletes began to complain. Word got around, whistles began to blow and the fake green turf around the conference was yellow with dropped hankies."

Far-fetched, but something happened, somewhere..

There was a time when the SWC was notorious for the disrespect paid the uppercrust by the rabble in the league on the playing field...and widely admired and envied for it.

The one thing the SWC still has is a notorious reputation, but others no longer look on in admiration and envy.

The saving grace for the league this year was Arkansas' showing, coming within a dropped interception of an upset of mighty Miami and an unbeaten season. The strong showing proved a life saver for the league's Cotton Bowl game, with the Arkansas-UCLA match, as a result, assuming a stature that will enable it to compete with some of the other Jan. 2 attractions, the ones that aren't playing for No. 1.

Boxing does no more brain damage than soccer, sprinting

By STEPHAN NASSTROM
AP Sports Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Amateur boxing does no more brain damage than heading a soccer ball or sprinting, according to a five-year medical study presented by a team of Swedish scientists.

Fifty Swedish amateur boxers participated in the study along with 25 soccer players, many of them header specialists, and 25 track and field athletes representing different track events. The average age of the group was 33.

"We have conducted the most advanced medical study of its kind today in order to find out if the boxers suffered from possible brain damage," said Ejnar Eriksson, a sports medicine professor and head of the scientific team.

"We have been very careful and there is no doubt that Swedish amateur boxing does no brain damage. All participants were checked anonymously and the results were judged by several independent experts. But we want to stress that it's very important that the strict rules in Sweden are being obeyed."

Eriksson, heading a team of seven doctors from the Karolinska Institute and other hospitals in Stockholm, said a similar study is being planned in the United States.

Professional boxing was banned by the Swedish government in 1969, 10 years after Ingemar Johansson became the world heavyweight champion. Stricter amateur rules were established in the early 1980s after a bill to also ban the amateur sport was presented in parliament.

Sweden has long been among the world leaders in amateur boxing's safety issues.

"Nowhere is amateur boxing as safe as in Sweden," said Dr. Robert Ludwig, a Swedish member of the International Amateur Boxing Federation's medical committee. "Other European countries have strict rules, but the controls are better in Sweden."

The study, sponsored by the Swedish Sports Confederation, was carried out on amateur boxers active between 1967 and 1977. Since then, measures such as softer mats, softer gloves, longer breaks between fights and longer suspensions have increased safety.

In Sweden, only 1 percent of all bouts result in knockouts or RSC's (referee stops contest) compared to more than 10 percent in the Seoul Olympics.

A boxer that is knocked out receives a one-month suspension by the Swedish Boxing Association. Two knockouts within three months result in a six-month suspension and a third knockout in 12 months suspends the boxer for one year. But such suspensions are rare.

Oilers-Steelers

The Main Event: Noll vs. Glanville

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Pittsburgh's Bubby Brister will challenge Houston's aggressive defense and Houston's Warren Moon will try to penetrate the Steelers' zone pass coverage.

But the key matchup for Sunday night's game in the Astrodome will be Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll and Houston's Jerry Glanville.

There will be interest in whether the Oilers, 9-4, can beat the Steelers, 3-10, and move closer to their second playoff berth in as many years.

But what will happen after the game as cameras zoom in on the two coaches leaving the field?

Will Noll again lash out at Glanville, calling the Oilers a dirty team, as he did last season in a publicized mid-field confrontation?

ALL THE national viewers likely will see is the two coaches once again failing to shake hands, as happened Oct. 16 in Pittsburgh after the Oilers' 34-14 victory.

"That's all been blown out of proportion," Glanville said.

Noll and Glanville have been more concerned with the battle on the field than their own personal differences.

They've even spoken a few kind words about each other's teams.

Glanville says the Steelers have improved since their last meeting.

"Offensively, all you can ask of an offensive lineman is that on every play to get a hat on everybody and that's what they do," Glanville said of the Steelers.

"They are well-coached. Whatever scheme you put up, they block."

NOLL returned the praise.

"They are playing outstanding football, no question about that," Noll said. "I think to a man, they are playing aggressive and fine football."

Noll is concerned about the Oilers punt return team that has blocked an NFL record-tying five punts this season, including two against the Steelers.

"They do that very well," Noll said. "They have some individuals on that punt return team with the ability to come in there. They do cause us concerns."

Pittsburgh punter Harry Newsome has had an NFL record six punts blocked this season.

Moon, the second-rated passer in the AFC, says it will take patience against the Steeler defense.

"They like to drop eight guys off and rush three," Moon said. "That makes it hard to find the holes in the zone if you want to throw it downfield."

MOON prefers going downfield.

"You have to dink the ball off, which is something I don't like to do," Moon said. "They'll test my patience and I'll have to go with what they give me."

Moon's favorite receiver has been Drew Hill, who has a string of three straight 100-yard receiving games.

Hill and Ernest Givins are within reach of their second dual 1,000-yard receiving seasons in three years.

Hill has 57 catches for 917 yards and Givins has 45 catches for 704 yards with three games to play.

Houston's rushing attack ranks second in the AFC, led by Mike Rozier with 769 yards on 201 carries.

Brister is regaining form after missing three games with a dislocated finger.

"He had a better game last week than he did the two previous weeks," Noll said. "He's starting to get back in the groove."

Pittsburgh beat Kansas City 16-10 last week. They haven't won two games in a row all season.

Pittsburgh's rushing attack has improved in recent weeks, led by Merrill Hoge, who has gained 431 yards in the past six weeks and has 546 yards for the season.

"We had some injuries at running back and some trouble fumbling the football," Noll said. "We are running it better now."

Steeler wide receiver Louis Lipps needs five receptions to become the second Steeler to catch 200 passes in his first five seasons.

The Steelers will bring an 0-6 road record into the Astrodome, where the Oilers have won 15 of their last 16 non-strike games.

Landry suffering continues

By CHUCK MELVIN

CLEVELAND (AP) — Tom Landry has been through a longer losing streak, but never a worse one.

"This is much tougher," says Landry, whose Dallas Cowboys could match a team record by losing to the Cleveland Browns on Sunday. "Nobody expected you to win in those early years. Those were years when you didn't have much going for you."

In 1960, the Cowboys' first year of existence, they lost their first 10 games before breaking the streak by tying the New York Giants. Dallas finished 0-11-1, then won its first game the next season.

The 1988 Cowboys are 2-11, and they've lost nine games in a row.

"We've got a lot more going for us now than we did in those early years, but now everybody expects the Cowboys to be in the playoffs, regardless of whether you tell them you're rebuilding or what you're doing," Landry said. "That's the toughest part."

THE COWBOYS' streak of 20 consecutive winning seasons ended in 1986, when they went 7-9.

"I could have easily stepped down a couple of years ago when it became obvious we were on a downslope, as a result of not being able to draft higher through the years," Landry said. "I just made a commitment to give them three years and see if we could bring them back up.

"We're right in the middle of the second year. We're not doing very well, except we're playing pretty well. We played Houston pretty well, and hopefully we'll give Cleveland a competitive game."

Dallas lost 25-17 to the Oilers on Thanksgiving Day, after leading 17-13 going into the fourth quarter.

Cleveland, 8-5, can guarantee itself a fourth consecutive trip to the playoffs if it wins its next three games. The Browns are 8-3 in December games since Marty Schottenheimer became coach.

THE COWBOYS and Browns, who played annually during the 1960s, have met infrequently since the merger of the AFL and NFL in 1970. Dallas has won four of the last five meetings, although Cleveland beat the Cowboys 26-7 in a Monday night game in 1979, the last time the two played in Cleveland.

The Cowboys have not yet faced Cleveland quarterback Bernie Kosar, who was a rookie backup when Dallas beat the Browns 20-7 in September 1985. For that reason, Landry said he could not assess whether Kosar has fully recovered from the elbow sprain that sidelined him for six weeks earlier this season.

"I didn't watch Bernie much, even in his early years, because we don't play Cleveland often," Landry said. "He seems to be throwing the ball well right now, but I wouldn't be an authority on what the difference is today."

Landry, however, is becoming an authority on Cleveland's division, the AFC Central, because the Cowboys have played AFC Central leader Cincinnati and the second-place Oilers in the past two weeks. Dallas also lost to AFC Central-trailing Pittsburgh in the season opener.

"I WOULD always figure Cleveland in it, because they are a seasoned football team," he said. "They have been on the verge of the Super Bowl several times, and when a team has done that, if they can reach the playoffs, they have a chance to go to the Super Bowl.

"The Bengals impressed me more last week against Buffalo than they did when they played us," said Landry, whose team lost to Cincinnati 38-24 two weeks ago. "I wasn't too sure that their defense was strong enough to beat Buffalo, but they proved to be. Houston can be very, very hot. Their run-and-shoot offense can really sting you if you're not careful. That Central Division is very good, in my opinion."

Cleveland has gone 3-0 against the Cowboys' NFC East, with previous victories this year over Philadelphia, Phoenix and Washington.

Schottenheimer, however, has guarded against any letdown by comparing Dallas' 1988 season to Cincinnati's 4-11 record in 1987.

"The thing that strikes me is the number of close games they have lost this season," Schottenheimer said.

12 control own destiny

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

You can excuse the Minnesota Vikings if they worry as much about what happens in Anaheim Monday night as what they do in Minneapolis on today.

The Vikings, who are beginning to emerge as one of the NFL's best teams, play host to New Orleans in a game that could dramatically effect the playoff chances of both those 9-4 teams.

Both are among the 12 NFL teams who, to use NFL coaching jargon, control their own destinies. Any of those 12 who win their three remaining games make the playoffs.

But while the Saints lead the NFC West, Minnesota is two games behind in the Central to the 11-2 Bears, who visit the Rams Monday night. That means that if Chicago loses once and the Vikings win both, Minnesota can capture the division title by beating Chicago on the final Monday night because they won the first meeting, 31-7.

"We're starting to come on but we'll need some outside help," says Minnesota's defensive coordinator, Floyd Peters, whose unit has allowed just two field goals in its last three games as the Vikings have beaten Dallas, Indianapolis and Detroit by a combined 78-6.

Minnesota still remains in solid position for a wild-card and enters the game with one advantage — a 10-day rest following its 23-0 Thanksgiving win in Detroit.

But the Saints have a revenge motive — the 44-10 thrashing administered by Minnesota in the NFC wild-card game in New Orleans last year. The Saints entered that contest with a 12-3 record; the Vikings had just backed into the playoffs at 8-7.

Chicago (11-2) at Rams (7-6) (Monday night)

The Rams, in great playoff position a month ago, have now lost four straight, the latest 35-24 in Denver and Coach John Robinson says:"It's like standing in the middle of the road with a truck bearing down on you."

But the truck has a couple of flat tires.

The Bears, who have clinched at least a wild-card berth, lost defensive end Richard Dent with a broken leg and quarterback Mike Tomczak with a separated shoulder in a 16-0 win over Green Bay last week. Jim Harbaugh will start for Tomczak and Sean Smith for Dent.

Washington (6-7) at Philadelphia (8-5)
Phoenix (7-6) at Giants (8-5)

It's a bit strange to see the Redskins out of contention while the Eagles control the NFC East, courtesy of their two wins over the Giants.

But that's the way it is with Joe Gibbs in the uncharacteristic position of telling his Super Bowl champions that they're finishing the season "playing for pride." To emphasize that, he's starting Mark Rypien at quarterback — preparation for the future if nothing else.

The Eagles, who lost the first game 17-10 with Doug Williams at quarterback for the Redskins, get an extra — Mike Quick, who broke an ankle in that game will be back to add an extra dimension to Randall Cunningham and the offense.

The Giants-Cards game, a rematch of a 24-17 Phoenix victory three weeks ago begins with questions at quarterback.

Will it be Jeff Rutledge andor Jeff Hostetler for the Giants or will Phil Simms be back? Will Neil Lomax be ready to take his job back from Cliff Stoudt for the Cards?

Simms, whose bruised throwing shoulder has improved, has a better chance than Lomax, who injured his knee in the first meeting between these two. But it would be no surprise if both played.

Denver (7-6) at Raiders (6-7)
Seattle (7-6) at New England (7-6)

The way the AFC West has gone, the Raiders and Patriots will win, leaving it in a three-way 7-7 tie with two to go.

In fact, the Broncos, Raiders and Seattle can all win the division by winning their final three — both Denver and Los Angeles play the Seahawks again. But the Raiders, still without Howie Long and Todd Christensen and banged-up in the secondary need this one badly.

One way they'll try to get it is by reinstating Jay Schroeder at quarterback in place of Steve Beuerlein, who was just 4 for 19 in the 35-27 loss in Seattle Monday while Schroeder engineered a comeback from a 24-0 halftime deficit in the 30-27 overtime victory in Denver the first time these two met.

John Elway, meanwhile, threw for three touchdowns and ran for another in the 35-24 win over the Rams that was one of his best games in a mediocre season.

San Diego (4-9) at Cincinnati (10-3)
Pittsburgh (3-10) at Houston (9-4) (Sunday night)

The three AFC Central contenders are all double-digit favorites and figure to have it easy going into the final two weeks.

But they could be killed by looking ahead — all are "destiny" teams that can make the playoffs simply by winning. Houston has the hardest schedule but also an excellent shot at the title — after the Steelers, the Oilers get to play the Browns and Bengals and can win the division with three victories.

San Francisco (8-5) at Atlanta (5-8)

The 49ers, who have scored 85 points in their past two games, have a history of playing well down the stretch — they're 17-3 over the season's final quarter the last five years. Their aim — simply stay within a game of New Orleans before next week's meeting.

Atlanta upset the 49ers in their first meeting. The young Falcons have now won three of their last four, allowing only 26 points during that period.

Buffalo (11-2) at Tampa Bay (3-10)

This is a good chance for the Bills to start their playoff tuneup, although their 35-21 loss in Cincinnati last week means they still have to hold off the Bengals for the ultimate home-field advantage in the AFC playoffs.

Portland St. Vikes expel A&I, 35-27

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Portland State Vikings are Alabama-bound again.

"It's been one of those seasons," Vikings' Coach Pokey Allen said Saturday after his team held on for a 35-27 victory over turnover-plagued Texas A&I in the semifinals of the NCAA Division II football playoffs. "It's never easy."

"We fumbled the ball and let them back in," he said. "But, you know, this is destiny — destiny or whatever. We said we were going back to Alabama and we're going there, but this time to win."

The victory sends Portland State against unbeaten North Dakota State next Saturday in the championship game in Florence, Ala. Last year, the Vikings lost to Troy State of Alabama in the title game.

The Vikings, 11-2-1 and winners of 10 in a row, blew open a 35-14 lead in the third quarter, then withstood a fourth-quarter rally.

Portland State's Chris Crawford completed 25 of 32 passes for 270 yards and three thouchdowns. He was not intercepted.

"He's a real gutty young man," Texas A&I Coach Ron Harms said. "He really shined. I have nothing but praise for Chris Crawford."

"We were lucky we have the best quarterback in North America," Allen said. "I just stood there today and cheered."

Portland State played all three of its playoff games at home this season.

"The offense is rolling. The defense is rolling. I'm just glad we're going back to 'Bama," said Crawford, who has thrown for 645 yards the past two games.

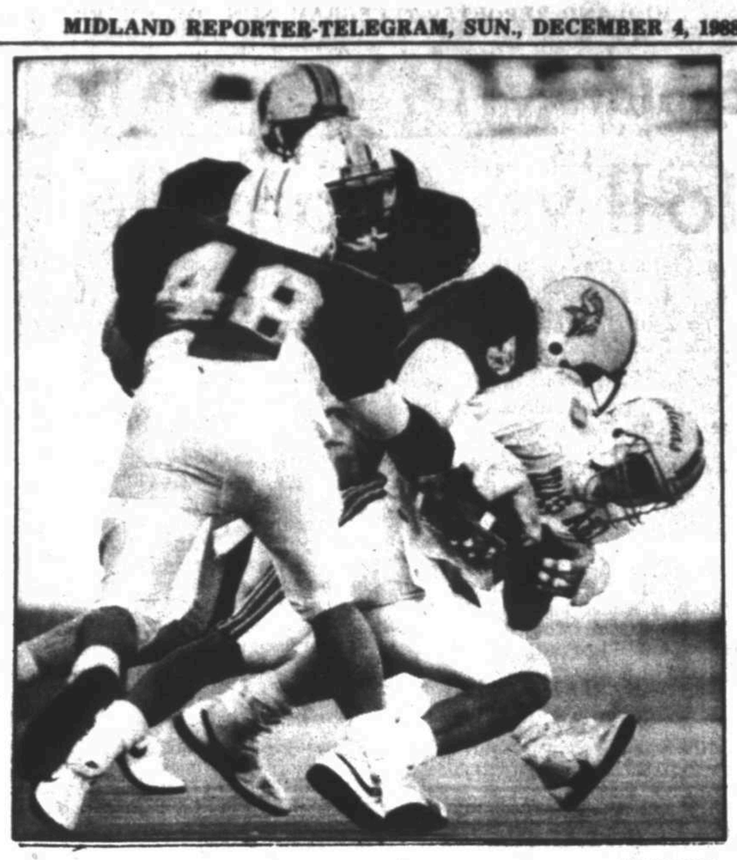

Texas A&I's Johnny Bailey, last season's Division II player of the year, rushed for 228 yards in 20 carries and scored touchdowns on runs of 55, 24 and 31 yards.

"He did it all on his own," Harms said. "When it comes to big games, he always performs."

"We gave it our best," Bailey said. "Losing to a great team isn't that bad. We worked hard for it. Things just didn't go our way."

Texas A&I, 10-3, committed seven turnovers, three of them resulting in Portland State touchdowns.

The Javelinas, who beat the Vikings in Portland 29-22 early in the season, jumped out to a 14-6 first-quarter lead on Bailey's 55-yard run and a 44-yard run by quarterback James Guidry.

Army defeats Middies, again

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE
N.Y. Times News Service

PHILADELPHIA — Army beat Navy as expected Saturday in the 89th game between the service academies, but the Cadets had no easy time in the 20-15 victory.

A 60-yard touchdown drive in the last period finally put Army in command after Navy had stayed close with three field goals by Ted Fundoukos. A late score by the Middies with 1 minute, 35 seconds left was their only touchdown.

The victory evened the series between the teams at 41-41, with seven ties.

ARMY RAISED its record to 9-2 this season with one game to go. The Cadets will play Alabama (8-3) in the Sun Bowl at El Paso at 1 p.m. Dec. 24. Navy finished with a 3-8 record, its sixth losing season in a row.

Navy showed early that the game would be no day at the beach for the Cadets. The Midshipmen put their trust in Alton Grizzard, the sophomore wishbone quarterback whose option play kept the Cadets off-balance.

The Navy communique last week had been that Grizzard was a questionable performer because of a lingering knee sprain. Perhaps that was a decoy because the talented son of a retired chief warrant officer had quickness, deception and speed.

In the first half he directed an offense that managed to get close enough to the goal line for Fundoukos to kick field goals of 44 and 22 yards.

The first field goal opened the scoring in the 12th minute of the first quarter, capping Navy's second possession.

A 63-yard drive ensued with Barnett driving for the touchdown from the 1 early in the second quarter.

Navy came right back with Grizzard and Luther Archer, the senior halfback who played with the 150-pound lightweight team the last three seasons, moving the ball. The Middies reached the Army 18 and settled for Fundoukos's second field goal, which made it 7-6.

Calvin Cass, Army's sophomore right halfback often overshadowed by the flashy Mayweather, had a 31-yard run to the Navy 25 and McWilliams followed with a gain of 11 yards. Those were the big plays in an Army drive that the Midshipmen managed to stop at their 6 near the end of the first half.

So Keith Walker, Army's 5-foot-4, 160-pound senior kicking specialist, booted a 22-yard field goal. That gave the Cadets a 10-6 lead at the intermission.

IN THE third period another field goal by Walker produced a 13-6 lead for the Cadets. This kick came at the end of a drive in which McWilliams, the slender quarterback, did some effective inside running and Mayweather fumbled twice, recovering each time.

Indianapolis (7-6) at Miami (5-8)

The Colts have won six of their last seven and could still get a wild-card berth if everything breaks well. That's remarkable considering Eric Dickerson has been held under 100 yards in three of his last four games and is averaging just 61 yards a game over that period.

Jets (6-6-) at Kansas City (3-9-1)

The Jets, who have played better than expected and have shown only sporadic signs of their late-season slide, let this one get away the first time — settling for a 17-17 tie in the Meadowlands. Coach Joe Walton has picked Pat Ryan to be his starting quarterback choice, with sore-shouldered Ken O'Brien in reserve, if necessary.

Green Bay (3-10) at Detroit (3-10)

This has all the potential for a scoreless tie or a 2-0 game.

The Lions beat the Packers 19-9 two weeks ago in Wayne Fontes' debut in what seems almost surely to be an interim coaching job. The Lions got just three first downs against Minnesota on Thanksgiving. The Packers have been shut out in three of their last five games and have scored just 22 points over that period.

Syracuse 'defenses' Pitt, 24-7

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Syracuse relied on Pittsburgh's reputation as relentless pursuers on defense and used it against them to topple the Panthers 24-7 Saturday.

"It was our plan all week to take advantage of their aggressive defense," said senior tight end Pat Davis, who turned two short passes from quarterback Todd Philcox into touchdowns to spark Syracuse's victory.

"They were the perfect calls at the perfect time," said Davis, who caught three passes for 84 yards, including touchdown receptions of 46 and 21 yards.

Philcox, a fifth-year senior, said he thought the 18th-ranked Orangemen would be able to throw long against Pitt but that it became clear early that short passes were there for the taking.

Pittsburgh coach Mike Gottfried attributed Davis' touchdown catches to blown assignments, rather than an over-aggressive defense.

Syracuse, which is headed to the Hall of Fame Bowl with a 9-2 record, lost its shutout bid with 5:30 to play when reserve tailback Adam Walker ran 29 yards for a touchdown.

Syracuse had difficulty moving the ball in the first quarter against the Pitt defense, which came into the game rated third nationally.

But after punting on its first two possessions, Syracuse caught the Panthers napping at the end of the quarter when Philcox tossed a 10-yard pass to Davis in the left flat. The 6-foot-3, 260-pound tight end rambled 36 yards down the left sideline, crashing into safety Troy Washington as he crossed the goal line.

Syracuse extended its lead to 14-0 with 5:31 to play in the second period when Philcox floated a pass to Davis on a third-and-short misdirection play at the Pitt 21. Davis caught the ball at the 15 and outran several defenders to the end zone.

Kevin J. Greene added a 27-yard field goal late in the third quarter and junior tailback Michael Owens scored on a 15-yard run in the final period for Syracuse.

The Panthers, who finished 6-5, had a chance to score on their opening drive when they moved the ball to the Syracuse 1. But freshman tailback Curvin Richards fumbled as he was hit at the line of scrimmage on a fourth-down play and Syracuse recovered.

Greene connected on all three of his point-after attempts to extend Syracuse's NCAA record for consecutive conversions by kicks to 260.

Rats close Lasorda's pasta joint

SOUTH PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Shortly after Dodger manager Tommy Lasorda's team won the World Series, his rib and pasta restaurant was shut down by officials because of a rat infestation and other health violations.

The restaurant, where a crush of Dodger fans gathered to watch and celebrate the series, was closed by Los Angeles County health officials on Oct. 26 and was reopened Oct. 31 when the problems were addressed.

"I've seen worse but this ranks right up there. I was shocked," said Abilio Lopez, a county health inspector who reported 43 health code violations.

Dirty kitchen equipment, gross contamination of food preparation surfaces and an "active rat infestation" were among the violations noted, according to county Department of Health Services records.

Jim Picola, vice president of the South Pasadena restaurant and another Lasorda eatery in Marina del Rey, denied there was any rat infestation.

"It's not true," Picola said. "I'll tell you right now there was some bureaucracy in there."

S.F. Austin loses, 27-6

Associated Press

Raymond Gross ran for 161 yards and threw for 136, leading Georgia Southern on a second-half comeback that gave the Eagles a 27-6 victory over Stephen F. Austin in the NCAA Division I-AA football quarterfinal playoffs.

Gross got 52 of his passing yards on a touchdown to Tony Beiser, giving the Eagles their 25th straight home victory. Georgia Southern, 11-2, won the national I-AA championship in 1985 and '86.

"Gross had a great day for a little, skinny kid," Coach Erk Russell said. "He can't run very fast, but he's slippery."

In other Division I-AA quarterfinals, Furman beat Marshall 13-9, Eastern Kentucky routed Western Kentucky 41-24, and Idaho beat Northwestern State 38-30.

In Division II semifinals, North Dakota State beat Sacramento State 42-20, and Portland State beat Texas A&I 35-27.

Ithaca defeated Ferrum 62-28 and Central beat Augustana 23-17 in two overtimes in the NCAA Division III semifinals.

In the NAIA Division I quarterfinals, Central State, Ohio, beat Hillsdale, Mich., 14-7; Carson-Newman, Tenn., stopped Moorehead State 42-6; Adams State, Colo., beat Southeastern Oklahoma State 38-7, and Pittsburg, Kan., beat Arkansas-Monticello 23-7.

In NAIA II, Westminster, Pa., defeated Evangel 26-9 and Wisconsin-La Cross whipped Oregon Tech 37-24.

NCAA I-AA

Ga. Southern 27, SFA 6

Stephen F. Austin, now 10-3, led 6-3 at halftime on a pair of field goals by Chuck Rawlinson. The Eagles, however, went ahead for good after Taz Dixon intercepted a pass by Todd Hammel and returned it 44 yards to the SFA 1. Two plays later, Ernest Thompson went over to make it 10-6 with 4:12 gone in the period.

The 52-yard scoring pass came with three minutes to play.

Eastern Kentucky 41, Western Kentucky 24

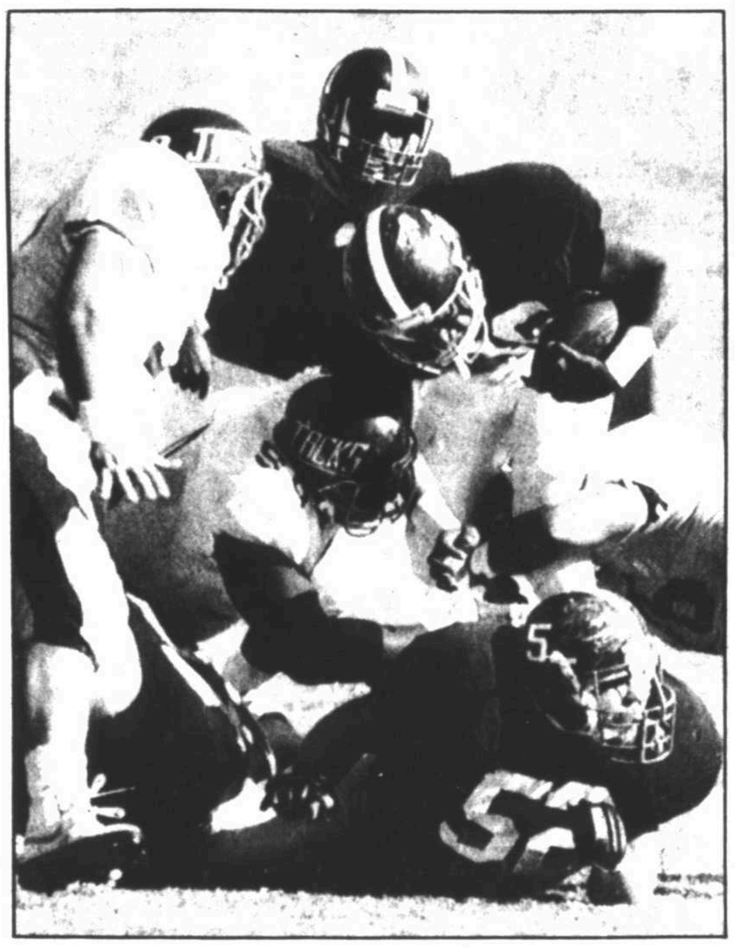

Elroy Harris ran for 109 yards and four touchdowns to lead Eastern Kentucky to a semifinal meeting with Georgia Southern.

Harris scored twice from the 1 and once each on 2- and 7-yard runs as the Colonels, 11-2, won their 10th straight game. Western Kentucky finished the season at 9-4.

Furman 13, Marshall 9

Dwight Sterling scored from the 1-yard line with 2:09 left to boost Furman over Marshall, a I-AA finalist last year. Marshall had beaten Furman 24-10 in October as the two teams tied for the Southern Conference regular-season title.

Furman and Marshall both are 11-2.

Georgia Southern's Joe Ross finds Stephen F. Austin's defense hard to budge in Statesboro, Ga., 1-AA Playoff game. But Southern still won, 27-6.

Idaho 38, NW Louisiana 30

John Friesz passed for four first-half touchdowns as Idaho took an early lead and hung on to beat Northwestern State, La.

Idaho, 11-1, advanced to the semifinals, where it will face Furman at Greenville, S.C., next Saturday. The Northwestern State Demons ended their season at 10-3.

NCAA II

N. Dakota St. 42, Sacramento St. 20

Chris Simdorn scored three touchdowns and was one of three North Dakota State backs to rush for more than 100 yards as the Bison beat Sacramento State. Simdorn rushed for 106 yards, leading North Dakota State's 412-yard rushing attack.

North Dakota State is 13-0, while Sacramento State fell to 10-3.

NCAA III

Ithaca 62, Ferrum 28

Paul Parker scored five touchdowns as Ithaca earned its sixth trip to the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl while spoiling Ferrum's perfect record. Ferrum now is 11-1, while Ithaca is 12-1. Parker rushed for 150 yards.

Ithaca led 35-14 at halftime.

Central, Iowa 23, Augustana 17, 2 OT

Rick Perry caught a 25-yard touchdown pass from Lance Kooiker in the second overtime as Central beat Augustana for the first time in three playoff games and moved into the finals.

Augustana, 10-2, took a 20-17 lead in the first overtime on a 40-yard field goal by Barry Read, but Central, 11-1, tied the game on Rob Phipps' 36-yard field goal.

Perry's winning touchdown was his second of the day from Kooiker, a tight end pressed into service at quarterback due to injuries.

Fletcher Sweeps end with Scott returning to Texas

Associated Press

The pursuit of shortstop Scott Fletcher the last few weeks must remind agents of the good old days.

Fletcher, who hit .276 with no homers and 47 RBI for Texas, had at least six lucrative offers before deciding to stay with the Rangers. Fletcher signed a three-year deal worth $3.9 million. Philadelphia had offered $4.1 million.

Fletcher, after ruling out Cleveland earlier in the week, made his decision Wednesday night as reporters from both towns awaited word via a conference call.

The "Fletcher sweepstakes" brought back memories of the times when free agents such as Mario Guerrero, Eric Soderholm and Steve Renko were considered hot properties and commanded top dollar. After they signed, they produced a new definition of misery index.

A couple of years ago, Detroit pitching ace Jack Morris couldn't even get the owners to send him a Christmas card and the players' association proved collusion. Now, the pendulum — and the dollars — seem to be swinging back to the players.

"This thing has gotten so crazy again this year that it just defies description," Cincinnati general manager Murray Cook said. "We're shooting ourselves in the foot again in my opinion — long term contracts, guaranteeing them all."

Entering the weekend, 12 free agents had signed, including two with different teams. Pitcher Mike Moore left Seattle to sign a three-year, $3.95 million deal with Oakland and second baseman Steve Sax turned down Los Angeles to sign a three-year contract worth $4 million with the Yankees.

Pitchers Bruce Hurst and Dave La Point are also close to signing big deals.

"Free agency is fine. There's nothing wrong with free agency," Cook said. "I think it was working. But when you start doing silly things again that we're starting to do, I see a danger in going right back where we were."

On the subject of free agents, new Chicago manager Jeff Torborg is pushing hard for the White Sox to sign free agent second baseman Willie Randolph. Randolph, 34, lost his job when the Yankees signed Sax.

"He seemed to be very excited about the possibility of playing in Chicago. I would love to have Willie," Torborg said. "But it will come down to a business decision."

Although no official offers have been made, Los Angeles, Toronto and Minnesota also have mild interest in Randolph. The Dodgers' interest might increase if they do not sign Ron Oester.

The Dodgers told Jesse Orosco he would not be offered a contract and the reliever will take a big cut no matter where he plays. Orosco made $1 million last season and ended up with a 3-2 record and nine saves in 55 games. Orosco may end up in San Francisco or Cleveland...

Baseball Notes

Oakland did not pick up the option year on second baseman Glenn Hubbard's contract but he may still return. By not exercising the option, the A's can negotiate a contract for less money.

Trading Cards

Topps Company, the people who make baseball cards, has announced its annual rookie all-star team:

The rookie all-star team has been selected by Topps since 1959.

Baseball Digest's rookie team was the same as Topps except for pitching. The magazine picked three starters, Melido Perez, Chicago White Sox; Don August, Milwaukee; and Belcher. The relievers were Bryan Harvey of California and Jeff Montgomery of Kansas City.

Being on a rookie all-star team does not mean a ticket to Cooperstown. In the last 20 years, some of the magazine's rookie teams have included: Doug Griffin, John Brohamer, Tim Johnson, Dennis Blair, Tom Poquette, Rick Jones, Dave Skaggs, Dave Revering, Pat Putnam, Dan Graham, Bill Laskey and Joe Pettini.

CROUDIP DEATH ACCIDENT— A Lawrenceville, Ga., coroner's jury, after hearing evidence at an inquest requested by the mother of Atlanta Falcons DE David Croudip, ruled his cocaine-related death to be undetermined. County medical examiner Joe Burton said the death was an accident. He said during an inquest that all of the facts behind Croudip's death appear to rule out foul play.

IRWIN OPENS LEAD— Two-time U.S. Open champion Hale Irwin fired a 65—201 Saturday for a two-stroke lead over Ben Crenshaw, Brett Ogle and Rodger Davis in the Australian Bicentennial Classic. Ogle shot a 66 round with seven birdies and a single bogey, while Davis had a 68 and Crenshaw a 70.

FERRARO OPPORTUNIST— Dave Ferraro of Kingston, N.Y., took advantage of two missed spares by Walter Ray Williams Jr. of Stockton, Calif., to capture the Professional Bowlers Association $135,000 Budweiser Championship Saturday, 212-195.

DRUG PROGRAM SUPPORTED— An out-of-competition testing program fully supported by the athletes was unanimously approved Saturday by The Athletics Congress, the national governing body for track and field. The sweeping approval came at the General Session on the final day of TAC's six-day convention and was heartily applauded by the athletes, who had proposed such a resolution at a meeting Thursday night.

LaPOINT SIGNS— Dave LaPoint, free-agent pitcher who had a career-high 14 victories last season, agreed to terms on a three-year contract with the New York Yankees. A source said the contract was worth about $2.55 million, paying $800,000 in 1989, $850,000 in 1900 and $900,000 in 1991.

"I'm not a hard thrower," LaPoint said. "I can barely break a pane of glass, but I get guys out. You guys are used to seeing Tommy John, and I'm not far off from that. You save money when I pitch. You don't need a radar gun."

MOJO—

"I was looking to see if I was out of bounds, but saw I had plenty of room and just jumped for the ball and made the catch," said Hill.

THE PANTHERS put it away with a third and fourth period 52-yard drive that consumed 6:45 of the clock. Comer got the final 14 yards.

Still, Comer had tough sledding getting his 100.

"Lamar had a tough defense," said Comer. "Everytime I ran I had to look for that rover named Ron Hagan. He got me a lot."

The Permian defense really got sticky after the Vikings scored in the third quarter.

"The defense really got pumped up after they put one in," said Hill. "We just kind of took over."

And Permian always seems to do a good job of "taking over" at this time of year.

Texas, SMU triumph

Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Travis Mays scored 24 points as the Texas Longhorns fought off Northwest Louisiana 109-104 Saturday afternoon.

The 109 points represents the fifth-highest point total in the school's history and the highest total since 1982.

The last time the Longhorns broke the 100-point barrier was in 1982 when they defeated TCU 105-89 during Abe Lemons' final season as coach. Texas also defeated Iowa State 109-75 during the year.

"Our offense was in gear today," said Texas Coach Tom Penders. "We were aggressive offensively and we had great distribution which is what we want."

Five Longhorns scored in double figures including Mays. Alvin Heggs and Joey Wright had 17 apiece, followed by Lance Blanks' 14 and Winn Shepard's 12.

Heggs, Texas' leading scorer coming into the game with a 21-point average, scored eight straight points in the final two minutes to give the Longhorns a seven point lead.

The 6-8 senior was 6-of-6 from the free throw line during that span.

SMU 59, NC State 57

DALLAS — Kato Armstrong scored 17 points and hit two free throws with 56 seconds left as Southern Methodist upset of 16th ranked North Carolina State.

SMU, winning in new coach John Shumate's home debut, evened its record at 1-1 while the Wolfpack dropped to 2-1.

Armstrong's free throws gave SMU a 59-52 lead then the Mustangs withstood a Wolfpack rally.

Mickey Hinnant scored three points and Chris Corchiani hit two free throws to draw N.C. State to within two points.

Todd Alexander missed two free throws for SMU with eight seconds to play and North Carolina State had a chance to tie the game at the buzzer but Rodney Monroe's jump shot hit the iron and bounced away.

Monroe led the Wolfpack with 22 points.

Byron Tucker's bank shot at the buzzer gave the Wolfpack of the Atlantic Coast Conference a 28-26 halftime lead over the Mustangs of the Southwest Conference.

SMU outrebounded the Wolfpack 50-36 to offset a 34 percent shooting performance from the field. North Carolina State shot only 36 percent for the game.

Home Blooms With Color

Shades of teal dominate the stylishly decorated formal living room that is brightened by a plantation shuttered window and has gorgeous hardwood floors.

As a person enters the courtyard of this week's featured home, not only will they notice the colorful plants - some of which are still in bloom - outside, but they will also be surprised by the many different colors that come alive through out the entire house.

A glass front door opens into an entrance hall that is lined with a floral wallcovering in shades of cream, rose, blue and teal.

The formal dining room is situated to the left of the entrance. Shades of teal, peach and blue highlight this spacious room that has hardwood floors. A window with plantation shutters views the front courtyard. An adjacent dining room makes this room ideal for entertaining, especially during the holiday season.

The kitchen and breakfast room can be found beyond the front entrance. A central work island makes the kitchen a great place for baking dozens of holiday cookies. The General Electric appliances include a double self-cleaning oven, stove top and dishwasher. Royal blue brightens the counter tops and a rust and royal blue wallpaper highlights the walls in this area. The kitchen also has an extra wide walk-in pantry and a built-in desk.

The adjacent breakfast room is set before a large bay window, also with plantation shutters. With sunshine warming this room, especially during the winter, any family would relish the cozy atmosphere of this room.

To the left of the kitchen, a hall leads to the family room. A built-in bookcase divides the hall from the formal dining room and a glass door leads to the covered patio in the backyard. The patio has a brick floor which extends out beyond the roof. This area has a wonderful view of beautifully manicured flower beds. A larger yard is located behind this intimate patio area.

The family room has neutral carpeting and focuses on a brick fireplace. Bookshelves and cabinets are situated on both sides and provides lots of room for favorite books and storage of games or movies.

Next to the family room is the utility room. This spacious room, with a country print wallpaper, can accommodate not only a washer and dryer but a freezer and desk as well. It also has a built-in ironing board and a window provides a cheerful atmosphere while ironing or folding clothes.

A two car garage with automatic door openers is also situated at this end of the home. The garage has an area that could be used as a work bench.

The home's three bedrooms and two baths are situated to the right of the front entrance. Two of the bedrooms are highlighted by a wall of fashionable wallpaper with a complimentary border.

The first bedroom has a floral print in shades of pale yellow, blue, rose and gold. The second bedroom has a train motif border and a matching subtle wallcovering.

Both of these rooms are spacious enough for two children, have walk-in closets with built-in shelves for toys and ceiling fans.

The hall bath has a tile vanity and floor, lots of storage cabinets and a tub/shower. A blue, rose and green country print wallpaper adds a colorful contrast to the white tile and floor.

Across the hall from the second bedroom, the master bedroom is situated. This room is brightened by two windows and has a U-shaped walk-in closet. The bath has a pale peach tile and features a built-in shower. A wallpaper in a petite tulip motif with rose, green and peach decorate these walls.

This "colorful" home is centrally located in Midland and contains approximately 2,550 square feet. Carriage Company, Realtors is offering this home for $122,900.

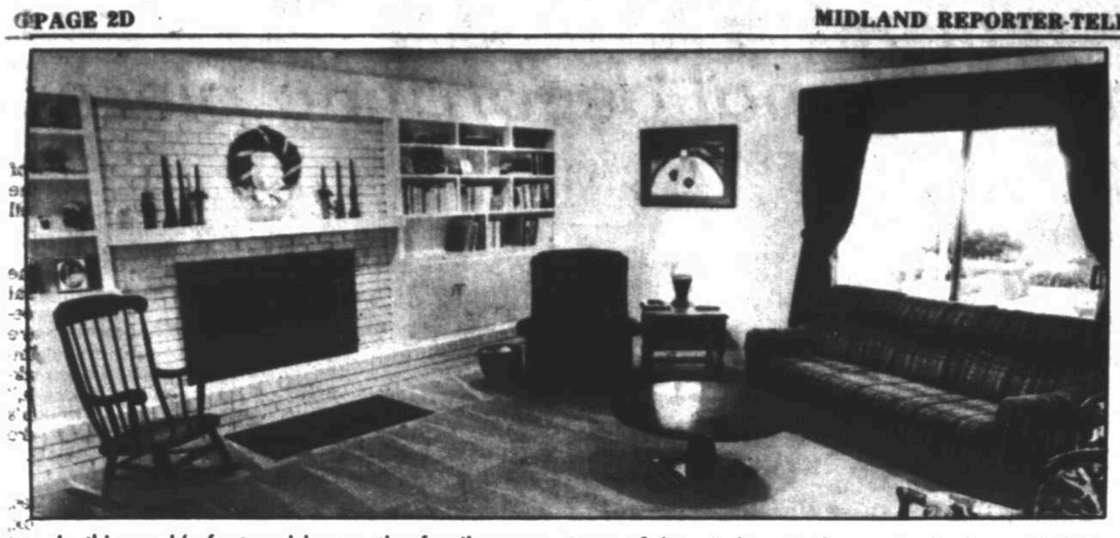

The cheerful, contemporary kitchen in this home is spacious and bright, with excellent lighting and a useful work island.

This spacious room has a walk-in closet and a bath with a built-in shower.

Grandfather clocks important, functional decorating pieces

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

A growing interest in traditional interiors has helped pave the way for the return of the grandfather clock to a place of honor in many American homes.

Originally known as a tall or a long case clock (it is still so called in the antique circuit), it became a "grandfather clock" because of the popularity of the song, "My Grandfather's Clock," around 1875.

According to John Snellenburg, a vice president at Christie's and a specialist in clocks and watches, interest in buying grandfather clocks is high, though the clocks don't get much publicity. Sales figures indicate such clocks are highly desirable home accessories, he says.

Those seeking a grandfather clock for the home have to compete with serious collectors of fine American furniture as well as clock fanciers who are interested in the development of horology.

Snellenburg says there are plenty of grandfather clocks to go around, however.

The most important consideration in selecting an antique clock is the condition of both the case and the works. Clocks are usually survivors, he says, and unless one has been especially abused, it probably can be put in good working order.

A good quality English long case clock dating from the 18th century or early 19th century costs from $1,000 to $3,500 at an auction. The clock is likely to feature a painted white dial, often with an arch, and a case of mahogany or oak. The same clock might cost $3,000 to $5,000 in an antiques store, says Snellenburg.

American clocks from the same era tend to be more expensive, especially if signed by a famous maker. It would not be uncommon to find prices of $40,000 to $100,000 for a signed Willard family clock, he says. American country clocks might range from $4,000 to $10,000.

Snellenburg recommends considering grandfather clocks that are neither antique nor new.

"Some of the 80-year-old clocks are a very good buy now," he says. "They have good movements and are usually copies of the traditional English style."

When buying an old clock, choose a reputable dealer. If buying from a dealer who doesn't normally deal in clocks, ask a specialist to look at it before you buy.

Old clocks most likely have appreciated in value as they age and are likely to continue to appreciate if they are in good condition.

But there are advantages to buying a new grandfather clock. Today's clocks offer more features, as well as sizes appropriate for today's interiors. They are dependable as timekeepers and offer such features as triple chimes, ornate pendulums and a beveled glass section to reveal the interior workings.

Prices for new grandfather clocks range from $600 to $7,000, depending on complexity of design, size and expense of materials — rare burls, carvings, beveled glass, gold-plated dials. Bigger movements cost more.

Most contemporary grandfather clocks play as many as three different melodies or chimes, says Philip Miller, executive vice president of Howard Miller Clock Co. Few of the old clocks are truly musical; they toll the time and strike the hour.

Contemporary clocks chime the whole tune on the hour and partial tune on the quarter, half and three-quarter hour. The melodies are based on church chimes. For example, the Westminster chimes are taken from a portion of the "Messiah," by Handel, as rendered at London's Big Ben; the Whittinton chimes are from London's St. Mary Le Bow.

In clocks that play three melodies, the chimes are like a music box, with a selection lever. You can set the tune you want to hear.

You've toiled and tended those fruits, vegetables and flowers. They're ripe. They're resplendent.

Now, bring that bounty into your home. Gardens can give you year-round pleasure. Whether you choose to display your garden bounty in fresh or dried floral arrangements, or opt for canning, drying or freezing your harvest, the result is the same. You'll have a year-round supply of garden joy.

Imagine a basket of daisies with pink clematis arching delicately over your table. Fresh-cut or dried, flowers and green foliage add a glow to any room. A floral arrangement from your garden can be the focal point or an it's important to choose firm, new blossoms, cut early in the day when flowers are wettest. Immediately plunge the stems into a bucket or container of water.

Before composing your arrangement, slit green stems from the bottom up the center about an inch. Woody stems should be smashed at the bottom.

While some flowers can get along with less water, bulb plants such as narcissi, tulips, iris and freesias absorb the entire length of their stems. As such, vase water should be as high as possible.

Flowers complement your fabrics and furniture.

Consider your style. Will you create a vase full of frilly posies or does your decor demand something more exotic?

Take a look at spacial and setting requirements. Are the flowers going to be seen from all angles? Or will they be against a wall or in the corner? While you're composing your arrangements, stand back and critique the overall effect from the angle at which it will be observed.

Do you need height? Pick delphiniums, hollyhocks or chrysanthemums. Shorter posies like ranunculuses, pansies, snowdrops and polyanthuses are perfect for a bedside or smaller table.

Try making several nosegays of snowdrops or violets twined together with stems. Lay them together in a wide glass bowl.

Is the bouquet for the kitchen? You might want to include some edible flowers like calendulas or nasturtiums. Fill in with lovage, sage or purple basil.

For a more formal setting, keep the frou-frou to a minimum. Look for flowers with simpler, stylized lines such as birds-of-paradise, calla lilies or orchids.

Antiques, traditional carpets and drapery demand a quainter, nostalgic bouquet. Forget-me-nots, lupin and larkspur are old-fashioned but early bloomers.

Consider scabiosa (pin cushion flower) as well as Queen Anne's lace. Later in the growing season you'll be able to gather rainbows of petunias and primroses.

Try an airier, looser Oriental look with more attention focused on stem direction, foliage and buds.

In Japanese design, the space between flowers is as important, if not more so, than the flowers themselves. To get this look, use budding woody plants such as forsythia, lilac, pussy willow and honeysuckle.

You need not forfeit these touches of glory at season's end. Many flower varieties dry beautifully and without much color loss. And these bouquets can be kept indefinitely.

Barbara Radcliff Rogers' "Encyclopedia of Everlastings: A Complete Guide to Growing, Preserving and Arranging Dried Flowers," from Weidenfeld & Nicholson, provides the most recent in-depth information.

There are three basic drying methods. Flowers should be picked on a dry day when the sun is high in the sky. Contrary to flower-picking for spring and summer bouquets, this assures the lowest possible moisture content.

Grasses, seedpods, seed heads and some flowers known as everlastings can be air-dried. Rhodanthe, hydrangea, golden rod and statis are among the many more successful air-dried varieties.

Remove the leaves, which can be dried by pressing. Tie flowers and seed heads into bunches according to type. Use twine, elastic bands, or silk thread.

The bunches should be hung upside down in a dry, warm place with plenty of circulation. Leave space between them for even drying. Tighten the ties as the stems dehydrate.

Leaves, hips, berry fruits and some herbs such as rosemary, can be dried by immersing the stems in a water and glycerine solution.

Succulent flowers, such as dahlias, asters, marigolds and zinnias, dry well in desiccants such as household borax, silica gel or treated sand.

You'll need an airtight container and the patience to handle the flowers gingerly. Cover the flower completely, shaking and working the desiccant under and through the petals with a small paintbrush.

Depending on the flower variety, the drying process should take from two to five days.

Dried flowers can be arranged in seashells, baskets, the hollows of driftwood or piles of smooth black stones.

Harvesting your fruits and vegetables at the right time makes all the difference in crispness and nutrient value.

If you don't have the room or time to grow fruits and vegetables, check out a "pick-your-own farm."

Not everyone has the time or expertise to undertake canning. But if you are feeling ambitious, first find a reliable book on the basics. "Sunset's Canning and Preserving" (Lane Publishing) is the old standby. Or write to the many manufacturers of canning equipment.

There are open-kettle canning and pressure canning, the latter being the more surefire. Open-kettle canning is OK for tomatoes, rhubarb, most pickles, jams and jellies, if you use the greatest care.

Freezing is by far the most popular method of preservation. Your garden riches will last eight to 12 months in recloseable plastic bags. Timid beginners will want to consider "The Busy Person's Guide to Preserving Food" by Janet B. Chadwick.

Vegetables last longer if blanched before freezing.

If you do decide to skip the blanching, try tray freezing. Chop fresh vegetables and spread them on open trays. Put them in the freezer overnight. The next day, empty them into meal-size plastic containers or bags.

All greens, except lettuce, which cannot be successfully frozen, should be stir-fried until wilted, packed in bags and cooled before freezing.

Berries should be washed and dried on towels overnight before freezing.

If you're up to your chin in mounds of fruit, cook it down. Strained of seeds and pulp, the juice can be conveniently frozen.

Above all, avoid overloading your freezer and be sure to follow the manufacturer's directions.

Dried fruit and vegetables are resurging in popularity. There are many newfangled food dehydrators on the market. A window screen or coldframe works just as well.

Spread window screens with one layer of sliced fruit, vegetables or nuts and cover with cheesecloth for protection against insects and birds. Weed out moldy or bruised areas. Put the screen between two chairs for increased circulation and bring your apparatus indoors at night.

To dry fruit and vegetables such as onions, peppers, winter squash, citrus rinds and zucchini in a coldframe, line it first with black plastic for a warm, clean surface. The coldframe should be south facing and covered with glass.

Pluck tomatoes early for fried green tomatoes or green tomato bread.

If you haven't discovered sun-dried tomatoes as a spicy addition to Mediterranean cooking, try them this season. They can be kept dry or moistened in jars of olive oil.

Eliminate raging zucchinis by nipping them in the bud — literally. Gathering and stuffing the blossoms will broaden your meal options. Try a stuffing of herbed rice and feta cheese or curried chicken.

As for herbs, pick fully developed leaves and branches and hang-dry on screens. Make sure they get plenty of circulating air and that the temperature does not exceed 95 degrees F. Most herbs freeze well too. Try freezing them into sauces or pestos so flavors will be mingled when you thaw them later.

When buying, selling, more people choose Don Harvey, Realtors

In Midland, the names Don Harvey and Don Harvey, Realtors have become synonymous with real estate. In fact, nearly one out of every three homes reported sold through MLS in Midland are listed for sale with Don Harvey, Realtors.

The name and reputation, however, are by no means limited to the boundaries of Midland, or even to West Texas. Having been very active in the National Association of Realtors, the Texas Association of Realtors and having served as Chairman of the Texas Real Estate Commission, Don Harvey has become well known and respected throughout the real estate industry nation wide.

Mr. Harvey became very actively involved in the employee relocation industry during its earliest beginnings. As that industry has grown, Don Harvey has grown with it and become a very integral part of its success in West Texas. Over the years, Mr. Harvey has been a regular participant and frequent speaker at the Employee Relocation Council meetings across the country. He has also become the key Realtor and network member for largest relocation companies as well as many of the smaller ones active in our area.

As job relocations have become more and more a fact of life for all Americans, the highly mobile oil industry employees have moved to and from Midland with an ever increasing frequency. Their own companies, the relocation companies and their co-workers, have consistently recommended they utilize the knowledge and experience in relocation gained by Don Harvey over the years.

Having grown up in Midland and having spent the past 25 years in the real estate business here, no one has been more concerned with growth and future of Midland than Mr. Harvey. His role as a highly demanded guest and motivational speaker frequently calls him to other cities in Texas and across the country. But the planes can never get him back home to Midland quickly enough.

Long term and life time Midlanders who stay in our area also buy and sell real estate and will do so an average of three or four times throughout their lives. A tremendous percentage of those will number themselves amount the satisfied clients and customers of Don Harvey, Realtors.

Although his company has consistently been one of the largest, if not the largest by several measurement standards, just having lots of sales people around, has never been one of Mr. Harvey's objectives. While having a good number of highly experienced, long tenured and well trained associates has. This has facilitated the highest average number of years of experience in the business and longest tenure as well as the highest average productivity per associate of any of the major companies in town.

Midland's economy has seen many ups and downs with the rise and fall of the oil industry over the years. The real estate industry has prospered and suffered as well through these cycles. But through these many phases, Mr. Harvey has always taught and practiced consistency. And that consistency in optimism, work and service has kept Don Harvey, Realtors at the top in Midland for more than 16 years.

About Real Estate

With Don Campbell

Fun with figures! Nobody plays the game better than our lenders.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I wish you would explain to me how banks and savings and loans juggle their figures around every time the interest rate changes on an adjustable rate mortgage. About three years ago we took out a second mortgage on our home for extensive remodeling — $30,000 for 15 years at, if I recall correctly, 10 percent.

We started accelerating the payoff, though, and the following year we had it down to $25,387. At that time, though, the interest rate went up to 10.12 percent and there was a minor adjustment. The next year we had it down to $19,243 and the interest rate went to 10.25 percent although the payment went down slightly.

What completely baffles us, though, is the notice that we have just received (the balance due is now $17,282) because the interest rate has jumped more than a full point — from 10.25 percent to a whopping 11.375 percent but, in spite of that, the monthly payment for principal and interest has gone DOWN slightly, from $223.73 to $220.50.

Although the letter goes on to say that this will "fully amortize the loan at the new interest rate over the remaining term," how can that possibly be if the payment actually went DOWN? They don't say WHEN this will be amortized, so aren't they simply freezing the number of years at last year's rate? I don't see how it will ever be amortized if they keep lowering the monthly payment every time the interest rate goes UP! We're completely frustrated. Mrs. J.C., Tempe, Ariz.

ANSWER: In this cynical age in which we live it's easy to get suspicious when an interest rate takes a quantum leap but the lender asks for less money. Lenders NEVER behave that way. The lender in this case, though, is playing straight with you — you're just not giving yourself enough credit for the impact that your repayment acceleration has had. You're too close to the forest to see the trees.

Remember, on this 15-year loan, you've cut that original $30,000 loan down a full 42 percent in just three years. Now that's acceleration with a capital A. It's true that ARMs, in effect, are reamortized every time the rate and payment change, but everything still hinges on the original term of the note. Yours was for 15 years, and every year since then your payment has been altered not only to reflect the new interest rate, but to keep that 15-year payoff in force. Thus, the second year, everything was adjusted to pay it off in 14 years. The next year it was adjusted to pay it off in 13 years, and this latest adjustment you received is geared up to pay it off in 12.

The lender is ignoring your acceleration. You can still continue accelerating, of course, and keep the lender's computer on its toes. You could stick with last year's payment of $223.73 (that's only an acceleration of $3.23 over your present payment, of course) which would pay it off in 11.6 years instead of 12). Or you could round it out to $250 a month (a $29.50-a-month acceleration) and knock it down to 9.4 years.

But, brace yourself. Your lender has a 15-year payoff fixation and, regardless of how you WANT to accelerate it, he's going to make this adjustment every year.

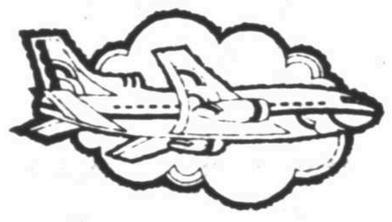

• • •

With 1988 fast fading, the new year — with all of its economic uncertainties — is a perfect time to begin an acceleration of payments on your mortgage principal that can save you thousands in interest, build up your equity fast and greatly shorten the payoff of that mortgage. Our leaflet, "Free and Clear: Getting the Mortgage Monkey off Your Back," explains how this can be done relatively painlessly. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope and $2 to cover costs to Don Campbell, P.O. Box 15273, Phoenix, AZ 85060.

Christmas on a SHOESTRING

Text by MYRA SALCEDO Photos by DOUG SEHRES

The countdown to Christmas has begun, and if your gift-giving list is immense, but your budget modest, consider making some of your own Christmas presents.

Homemade gifts can range from the practical — a dress fashioned from a flour sack — to the whimisical — a reindeer magnet made from a dog biscuit. Gifts of foods are also ideal, especially for the people — teacher, car-pool mother, cheerleading squad leader, scout leader or day care attendant — who you don't want to forget.

The best thing about making gifts is it ensures that your gift will be unique. And some of the most popular fashion items this season, known as wearable art, can't be found in any store. There has also been a harkening back to nostalgic items made with skills finely honed before the advent of machines.

CECELIA HOLLOWELL of Odessa has found a way to sew homemade items that satisfy the nostalgia trend. She fashions clothing, pillows and home decorating items from reproductions of feed and seed (flour, oats and feed) sacks which were printed in the 1920s and 1930s. "After the 1930s advertisers quit putting their ads on flour sacks," Ms. Hollowell said. "Then they began printing the sacks with prints, stripes and calicos."

Although many Americans sewed feed and seed sacks into clothing out of necessity during the Depression, they usually soaked the sacks in "Gold Dust" which removed the print from the fabric.

"Gold Dust was a yellow-colored laundry detergent with a bleaching agent," Ms. Hollowell said. She has reproductions of seed and feed sacks printed with instructions for removing print with the Gold Dust method. Ms. Hollowell once found a tin Leaver Bros. sign advertising Gold Dust in an antique shop. "But I found out it was a reproduction and I wanted an authentic sign," she said.

Ms. Hollowell, a substitute teacher for Ector County Independent School District, said the modern day feed and seed sacks were popular in other parts of the country last year. "I bought three and made a skirt, a blouse and a jumper. People stopped me on the street to ask about the sacks."

MS. HOLLOWELL recognized a virtual gold mine in the cotton sack market and began selling the sacks — and ready made clothing from the sacks — in August, which launched her own business, Cissy's Sax & Stuff. "My grandmother, who died three years ago at the age of 97, always called me Cissy. She was good luck to me, and I wanted her good luck for my business."

A panda bear, bucket and wine bottle are decorated for gift giving (left), resting above a hand painted collar and sweat shirt made from a a reproduction of a potato sack. Jalapenos are featured in a door hanger and necklace. Below is a mailbox Christmas decoration. Brightly colored Seed and Feed sacks (below) are featured hanging, in a dress draped over a crate and in a pillow. A bunny bedecked with ribbons, lace and seed pearls sits next to a basket of candy cane cookies. In front of the basket is a reindeer pin fashioned from a dog biscuit. Below is a wreath and a sack of panty hose potatoes.

Luck or not, Ms. Hollowell has made 120 garments from her unique fabric since September, and the reception the sacks received at a recent crafts show, "Ye Olde Christmas Fair" at Ector County Coliseum, showed that their popularity hasn't waned. Her modern day sacks are vibrantly colored. Though most customers prefer to allow their sacks to fade to look more authentic, Ms. Hollowell said if dry cleaned, the sacks will retain their bright colors.

"The sacks are 100 percent cotton. I wash mine before sewing to prevent any shrinkage after they are made," Ms. Hollowell said. "I just turn them inside out, wash them in cold water and hang them right side out to dry. Gone are the days when women would soak, scrub and beat the sacks."

ASIDE FROM THEIR easy care, Ms. Hollowell said the sacks are popular because they "are so soft and loose. It's like wearing nothing but an old cotton bag." The business woman also said the sacks' greatest appeal is that they invoke memories. "I met one woman who used to live in a shotgun house a block away from the Bewley Mills plant in Fort Worth. She remembered wearing flour sacks, and had to have them again."

Ms. Hollowell said quilters buy the sacks to sew into quilts and display as wallhangings.

For those handy with a needle, Ms. Hollowell sells the flour sacks for $6 each. She can be contacted at (915) 332-9676 in the evenings.

Another Odessan who is banking on the nostalgic trend is Nelda Albritton. She creates handmade crafts, jewelry and decorator items with a country and Texana theme. Along with her husband, Don, and sister Gloria Davis and her husband, Frank, both of Deer Park, Mrs. Albritton has the AD Jewelry Company. But her first love is crafts, and creating handmade items, she said.

MRS. ALBRITTON, a full-time teacher at Odessa High School, travels to arts and crafts fairs on weekends to peddle her old-fashioned hand painted collars trimmed in lace, necklaces strewn with artificial chilis and tiny painted cactus. "My sister designs and paints the fabric collars. She is the design person, and she paints acrylic landscapes."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Congratulations to Justice Barbara Culver of Midland and Judge James H. "Jim" Clack of Andrews, who were united in marriage Nov. 11 at the bride's home. Judge Dean Rucker officiated.

After a week's honeymoon in La Manzanilla, Mexico, Barbara is in the process of moving back from Austin, where she has served as a justice on the Texas Supreme Court for the past year.

Justice Culver plans to take senior status as a retired judge and sit in for other judges when needed. The couple will make their home in Andrews.

MELISSA ELLIS, daughter of Neil and Bobby Ellis, has received an Academic Excellence Scholarship at the University of Mississippi.

A freshman majoring in journalism, Melissa is an Ole Miss Ambassador and a member of Kappa Delta social sorority. She is a 1988 honor graduate of Midland High School.

ARTAMYSE (MRS. ALLEN J.) WATTS had as recent house guests the late Mr. Watts' three nieces, Mrs. Noel Widmeyer of King Salmon, Alaska; Mrs. David Carruso of Bolton, Conn., and Mrs. Charles A. Brown of Edmond, Okla.

After a short stay in Midland, they visited in San Angelo with Mrs. Watts' sister, Lutie (Mrs. Lewis) Hersey, and at the McMullan Ranch in Crockett and Reagan Counties with Peggie and Johnnie McMullan.

The three sisters were born and reared in Midland and will be remembered as Jean Ann, Sharron and Shirley Watts.

TRICIA FULLER and Tom Wilson, both of Phoenix, Ariz., were honored at a series of festivities prior to their Nov. 26 wedding in the First Christian Church here.

The parties began in September with a lingerie shower given in Lubbock by bridesmaids Jana Petty, Julie Henson and Traci Wicker. Guests included Kappa Alpha Theta sorority sisters and other Texas Tech friends of the bride.

In Midland, the bride was feted with a display shower at the home of Dorothy (Mrs. Bill) Vaughn. Co-hostesses were Dorothy (Mrs. Dave) Buthman, Buff (Mrs. Bob) Cooke, Lois (Mrs. W.C.) Harrington, Jean (Mrs. Jim) Deffenbaugh and Sue (Mrs. Ed) Gorence. Hazel and Keith Somerville and daughter, Bea Lea Somerville, hosted a buffet brunch at their home.

High school friends of Tricia and her bridesmaids were invited to a Christmas ornament shower and rice bag party at the home of Shirley (Mrs. Bill) Hull and daughter, Amy. The other hostesses were Ms. Gigi Carlisle and daughter, Kelly of Austin, Frances (Mrs. Jimmy) Smith and her daughter, Teri (Mrs. Mike) Foulds.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the groom's parents, Mary and Don Wilson of Grosse Pointe Park, Mich., at Green Tree Country Club. The bridal attendants were honored with a "Mad Hatters" brunch at Ranchland Hills Country Club by Tricia's sisters-in-law, Debbie (Mrs. Doug) Fuller of Shreveport, La., and Julie (Mrs. Gary) Fuller of Baton Rouge, La.

The bride's parents, Patty and Lawrence Fuller, hosted the wedding reception at the Plaza Club.

WHEN LANA ROBERTS of Bedford and David MacDonald were married the Saturday before Thanksgiving in Hurst, the groom's parents, Juanice and Lloyd MacDonald experienced a feeling of deja vu. They also were married the Saturday before the Thanksgiving holidays, but 30 years ago in Midland's First Baptist Church.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple are at home in Waco, where the bride is a property claims representative for Farmers Insurance Group and the groom is attending Baylor University School of Law.

A number of parties both in Bedford and Midland preceded the wedding. The festivities began here with a "Honey-Do" shower at the home of Sharla and Bart Hotchkiss. The other hosts and hostesses were Eleanor and Mike Morse, Georgia and Carroll Thomas and Iva (Mrs. R.C.) Maxson.

A display shower was held at the home of Ann (Mrs. Ralph) Lea. The co-hostesses were Jane (Mrs. Bob) Carrens, Helen (Mrs. Alan) Spinks, Jan (Mrs. Gary) Owen, Sally (Mrs. Reagan) White and Betty (Mrs. Russell) Cotton.

The home of Doris and Dr. Gene Spires was the setting for a Christmas ornament shower and dinner. Also hosting were Gwen and George Jackson, Iris and Bob Todd, Ruby and Raymond Viverette of Odessa, and Helen and Carroll Kiser of Little Rock, Ark.

The groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner at The Windsor restaurant in Arlington.

National holidays should reflect American lifestyles

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

I got a new calendar the other day, one of the increasingly popular variety that alerts you to holidays, birthdays, days, months and weeks that you probably didn't know (and probably didn't care to know) existed.

Thanks to this new calendar, I now know that Nov. 17 is Home-made Bread Day, Oct. 23 is TV Talk Show Host Day, June 15 is Smile Power Day, June 7 is BMW Appreciation Day and July 1-31 is Peach Mousse Month.

I also now know that Dec. 1-31 is The Birth of Bingo Month, Jan. 18 is Clean Your Desk Day, Feb. 4 is TV Weatherman's Day, Nov. 21 is Look at the Bright Side Day and Feb. 1-7 is Muffin Mania Week.

This is absolutely pathetic and is perhaps the best piece of evidence yet as to why America's credibility has sunk to the level of whale do-do.

What this country needs is a whole new set of occasions, a calendar that has some relevance to the way people actually live.

For starters, I think we ought to make Jan. 1 National Football Overdose Day. Jan. 22-28 should be National Christmas Bill Week and Feb. 1-28 can be National Catch the Flu Month.

March 3 can be Dental Appointment Day, March 9 can be Fight With Your Spouse Day and March 19-25 can be National Overdrawn Checking Account Week.

April 10 should be Cold Sore Day and April 23-29 should be National Inoperative Automatic Teller Week.

Let's make May 1-31 Traffic Jam Month and May 15 I Can't Believe I Forgot to Call My Mother on Mother's Day Day.

June 4-10 can be National Armpit Stain Week and June 18-24 can be National Lawn Disease Week.

July 2-8 can be National Long, Unpleasant Car Trip Week, July 13 can be Food Poisoning Day and July 25 can be Mildew Appreciation Day.

Let's designate Aug. 1-31 as National Cockroach Month.

September 1-30 could be Juicy Office Gossip Month, Sept. 12 could be Cellulite Identification Day and Sept. 22 could be Auto Insurance Cancellation Day.

I don't see why Oct. 8-14 can't be Athletic Injury Week or why Oct. 26 can't be National Obscene Gesture Day.

November 1-30 can be National Error in Judgment Month, Nov. 9 can be Lost Car Keys Day and Nov. 27 can be Billing Snafu Day.

December 1-31 should be National Overcommercialization Month, Dec. 16 should be National Boring Party Day and Dec. 24 should be National Some Assembly Required Day.

I think a calendar like this would go a long way toward getting America back on its feet and restoring its self-respect.

Activities for holiday season can be magic

By GINA SEAY
Hearst News Service

Parents can keep the magic in this holiday season by prioritizing activities with their kids.

When invitations arrive from classmates, neighbors and relatives, sit down with the kids and discuss social outings.

Trouble often arises when children try to fulfill their own expectations in selecting festivities to attend, while also wanting to keep friends and parents happy.

So they try to do it all, in addition to decorating the tree and house, shopping for gifts and visiting relatives.

Children shouldn't be forced to attend every event.

When making dates, parents should set aside time for activities the family wants to do together.

Next, allow children plenty of time to do things with their own age group.

Parents shouldn't try to schedule everything in one weekend. Most Mondays in December, kids return to school tired and hyper — their parents tried to compensate for family time missed during the work week by planning too much for the weekends.

Children should be encouraged to talk openly with parents, outlining which events they prefer to attend. Parents can help children decide if the event is something they really want to go to or if they are feeling pressured by peers to attend. Participation should be fun — not work.

Allotting more time for outside events is important for preteens and teens, ages when peer related activities are desired and appropriate. Younger children have shorter fuses and lower tolerance when it comes to social outings.

Parents should respond promptly to RSVP requests on invitations, and ask about appropriate dress.

Holidays low-cal

Copley News Service

Just because it's the holiday season doesn't mean you have to end up looking like an overstuffed turkey.

In fact, you can enjoy the season without guilt and without gaining weight if you're willing to take control of eating situations.

According to nutritionist Lori Moran, you should begin by being direct with your relatives — tell Grandma about your weight-maintenance goals so she doesn't feel bad when you turn down that third piece of pumpkin pie.

When you eat, stick with white meat, fruits and vegetables but steer clear of stuffing, gravy and candied yams.

Finally, Moran says if you are keeping holiday foods around the house for guests, make sure you keep plenty of vegetables around so you have something to snack on.

'Simple, inexpensive' routine test vital part of health care for women

Associated Press

The Pap smear is a simple, inexpensive and painless method of detecting cervical cancer. As this test can be responsible for saving women's lives, the recent focus on its inaccuracy, which is dependent on the competency of medical laboratories, is cause for alarm.

Ladies' Home Journal reports many women now doubt the value of a Pap smear and are unsure about whether they need to be conscientious about having the test regularly.

Experts from the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) point to statistics which prove the test is invaluable in the early detection of cervical cancer. Dr. Robert Park, president of ACOG, states that, "In the last 13 years, the number of cases of invasive cervical cancer has dropped from 60,000 yearly to 13,000 yearly." The ACOG recommends a yearly Pap smear for women, although a woman who has had three consecutive normal tests may need screenings less frequently.

The falsenegative rate for Pap smears (how often abnormal specimens are identified as normal) is nonetheless worrisome. Strict quality control can help reduce inaccurate Pap smear results. Unfortunately, it's difficult for patients to judge the standards of a doctor's lab. A few basic questions can help determine whether there is good communication between the lab and the physician. Ask if the lab is certified and by what organization. Ask if the pathologist who runs the lab has expertise in interpreting Pap smears. And ask whether the lab is willing to tell the physician when a smear is inadequate and requires another patient sample.

These questions can help women protect themselves until science finds a better method of testing for cervical cancer.

National Home Care Week is celebrated

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

This is National Home Care Week; a week set aside to recognize and honor the home care community and its contributions to the health care needs of Americans.

Led by the recent changes in Medicare involving Diagnostic Regulatory Groups (DRGs) and Catastrophic coverages, home health care has rapidly become a crucial part in meeting a patient's total health care needs. The result of the DRGs, in particular, has been that most Medicare patients and patients of all ages are being dismissed from the hospital much earlier than ever before.

Many of the patients have required additional health care in their home. Patient care through a combination of hospital and home settings has not only been seen as a cost effective measure, but also has provided additional benefits to the patient.

"Home care is helping my 80-year-old mother maintain her independence and good health by bringing any care she needs right to her doorsteps," said one family member.

"It's amazing what they are doing at home now. A friend of mine needs intravaneous chemotherapy and is getting it at home," said another.

One mother, whose son was born prematurely, said, "With home care, he got all the professional care he needed and all the love that only comes with being at home with us."

And a nurse from the Visiting Nurse Service commented, "It's encouraging to know that our residents are utilizing home care when they know about the options available to them. We want everyone to know that home health care, from the most basic assistance to sophisticated high tech medical treatment, is an essential element of the patient's total care recovery."

Home health care visits are covered under Medicare, as well as most private insurance policies. However, there are restrictions and limitations to the coverage.

Medicare participants are strongly encouraged to pick up the Medicare handbook provided by the Social Security Administration. It describes in detail what is covered under both parts of Medicare. This booklet should be kept where it is readily available so it can be referred to as often as necessary.

Since the Medicare program is subject to change, participants should contact the Social Security office periodically to determine if you have and up-to-date copy. This handbook also provides a comprehensive list of Medicare exclusions. Information also is available about the timetable involving Medicare Catastrophic coverages.

Because insurance companies are affected by new Medicare regulations some policy holders will receive information concerning policy changes. These notices should be received by Jan. 31, 1989, if applicable.

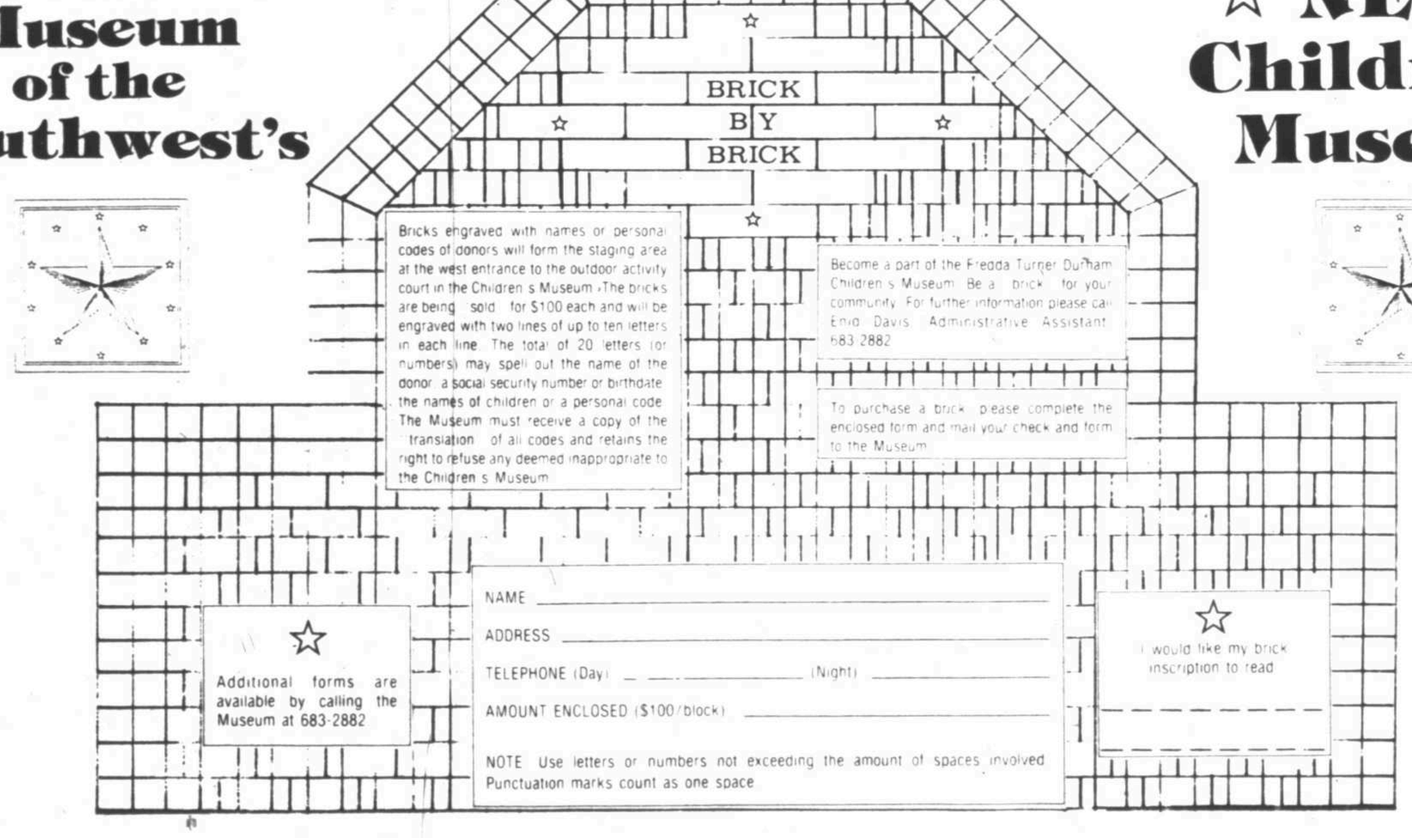

As Medicare recipients review the new Catastrophic benefits, now also is a good time to review any supplemental policies. Knowing that these changes are possible and may subsequently save you money, this insurance review should be initiated.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

'Simple, inexpensive' routine test vital part of health care for women

Associated Press

The Pap smear is a simple, inexpensive and painless method of detecting cervical cancer. As this test can be responsible for saving women's lives, the recent focus on its inaccuracy, which is dependent on the competency of medical laboratories, is cause for alarm.

Ladies' Home Journal reports many women now doubt the value of a Pap smear and are unsure about whether they need to be conscientious about having the test regularly.

Experts from the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) point to statistics which prove the test is invaluable in the early detection of cervical cancer. Dr. Robert Park, president of ACOG, states that, "In the last 13 years, the number of cases of invasive cervical cancer has dropped from 60,000 yearly to 13,000 yearly." The ACOG recommends a yearly Pap smear for women, although a woman who has had three consecutive normal tests may need screenings less frequently.

The false negative rate for Pap smears (how often abnormal specimens are identified as normal) is nonetheless worrisome. Strict quality control can help reduce inaccurate Pap smear results. Unfortunately, it's difficult for patients to judge the standards of a doctor's lab. A few basic questions can help determine whether there is good communication between the lab and the physician. Ask if the lab is certified and by what organization. Ask if the pathologist who runs the lab has expertise in interpreting Pap smears. And ask whether the lab is willing to tell the physician when a smear is inadequate and requires another patient sample.

These questions can help women protect themselves until science finds a better method of testing for cervical cancer.

Congratulations to Justice Barbara Culver of Midland and Judge James H. "Jim" Clack of Andrews, who were united in marriage Nov. 11 at the bride's home. Judge Dean Rucker officiated.

After a week's honeymoon in La Manzanilla, Mexico, Barbara is in the process of moving back from Austin, where she has served as a justice on the Texas Supreme Court for the past year.

Justice Culver plans to take senior status as a retired judge and sit in for other judges when needed. The couple will make their home in Andrews.

MELISSA ELLIS, daughter of Nell and Bobby Ellis, has received an Academic Excellence Scholarship at the University of Mississippi.

A freshman majoring in journalism, Melissa is an Ole Miss Ambassador and a member of Kappa Delta social sorority. She is a 1988 honor graduate of Midland High School.

ARTAMYSE (MRS. ALLEN J.) WATTS had as recent house guests the late Mr. Watts' three nieces, Mrs. Noel Widmeyer of King Salmon, Alaska; Mrs. David Carruso of Bolton, Conn., and Mrs. Charles A. Brown of Edmond, Okla.

After a short stay in Midland, they visited in San Angelo with Mrs. Watts' sister, Lutie (Mrs. Lewis) Hersey, and at the McMullan Ranch in Crockett and Reagan Counties with Peggie and Johnnie McMullan.

The three sisters were born and reared in Midland and will be remembered as Jean Ann, Sharron and Shirley Watts.

TRICIA FULLER and Tom Wilson, both of Phoenix, Ariz., were honored at a series of festivities prior to their Nov. 26 wedding in the First Christian Church here.

The parties began in September with a lingerie shower given in Lubbock by bridesmaids Jana Petty, Julie Henson and Traci Wicker. Guests included Kappa Alpha Theta sorority sisters and other Texas Tech friends of the bride.

In Midland, the bride was feted with a display shower at the home of Dorothy (Mrs. Bill) Vaughn. Co-hostesses were Dorothy (Mrs. Dave) Buthman, Buff (Mrs. Bob) Cooke, Lois (Mrs. W.C.) Harrington, Jean (Mrs. Jim) Deffenbaugh and Sue (Mrs. Ed) Gorence. Hazel and Keith Somerville and daughter, Bea Lea Somerville, hosted a buffet brunch at their home.

High school friends of Tricia and her bridesmaids were invited to a Christmas ornament shower and rice bag party at the home of Shirley (Mrs. Bill) Hull and daughter, Amy. The other hostesses were Ms. Gigi Carlisle and daughter, Kelly of Austin, Frances (Mrs. Jimmy) Smith and her daughter, Teri (Mrs. Mike) Foulds.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the groom's parents, Mary and Don Wilson of Grosse Pointe Park, Mich., at Green Tree Country Club. The bridal attendants were honored with a "Mad Hatters" brunch at Ranchland Hills Country Club by Tricia's sisters-in-law, Debbie (Mrs. Doug) Fuller of Shreveport, La., and Julie (Mrs. Gary) Fuller of Baton Rouge, La.

The bride's parents, Patty and Lawrence Fuller, hosted the wedding reception at the Plaza Club.

WHEN LANA ROBERTS of Bedford and David MacDonald were married the Saturday before Thanksgiving in Hurst, the groom's parents, Juanice and Lloyd MacDonald experienced a feeling of deja vu. They also were married the Saturday before the Thanksgiving holidays, but 30 years ago in Midland's First Baptist Church.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple are at home in Waco, where the bride is a property claims representative for Farmers Insurance Group and the groom is attending Baylor University School of Law.

A number of parties both in Bedford and Midland preceded the wedding. The festivities began here with a "Honey-Do" shower at the home of Sharla and Bart Hotchkiss. The other hosts and hostesses were Eleanor and Mike Morse, Georgia and Carroll Thomas and Iva (Mrs. R.C.) Maxson.

A display shower was held at the home of Ann (Mrs. Ralph) Lea. The co-hostesses were Jane (Mrs. Bob) Carrens, Helen (Mrs. Alan) Spinks, Jan (Mrs. Gary) Owen, Sally (Mrs. Reagan) White and Betty (Mrs. Russell) Cotton.

The home of Doris and Dr. Gene Spires was the setting for a Christmas ornament shower and dinner. Also hosting were Gwen and George Jackson, Iris and Bob Todd, Ruby and Raymond Viverette of Odessa, and Helen and Carroll Kiser of Little Rock, Ark.

The groom's parents hosted the rehearsal dinner at The Windsor restaurant in Arlington.

National holidays should reflect American lifestyles

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

I got a new calendar the other day, one of the increasingly popular variety that alerts you to holidays, birthdays, days, months and weeks that you probably didn't know (and probably didn't care to know) existed.

Thanks to this new calendar, I now know that Nov. 17 is Home-made Bread Day, Oct. 23 is TV Talk Show Host Day, June 15 is Smile Power Day, June 7 is BMW Appreciation Day and July 1-31 is Peach Mousse Month.

I also now know that Dec. 1-31 is The Birth of Bingo Month, Jan. 18 is Clean Your Desk Day, Feb. 4 is TV Weatherman's Day, Nov. 21 is Look at the Bright Side Day and Feb. 1-7 is Muffin Mania Week.

This is absolutely pathetic and is perhaps the best piece of evidence yet as to why America's credibility has sunk to the level of whale do-do.

What this country needs is a whole new set of occasions, a calendar that has some relevance to the way people actually live.

For starters, I think we ought to make Jan. 1 National Football Overdose Day. Jan. 22-28 should be National Christmas Bill Week and Feb. 1-28 can be National Catch the Flu Month.

March 3 can be Dental Appointment Day, March 9 can be Fight With Your Spouse Day and March 19-25 can be National Overdrawn Checking Account Week.

April 10 should be Cold Sore Day and April 23-29 should be National Inoperative Automatic Teller Week.

Let's make May 1-31 Traffic Jam Month and May 15 I Can't Believe I Forgot to Call My Mother on Mother's Day Day.

June 4-10 can be National Armpit Stain Week and June 18-24 can be National Lawn Disease Week.

July 2-8 can be National Long, Unpleasant Car Trip Week, July 13 can be Food Poisoning Day and July 25 can be Mildew Appreciation Day.

Let's designate Aug. 1-31 as National Cockroach Month.

September 1-30 could be Juicy Office Gossip Month, Sept. 12 could be Cellulite Identification Day and Sept. 22 could be Auto Insurance Cancellation Day.

I don't see why Oct. 8-14 can't be Athletic Injury Week or why Oct. 26 can't be National Obscene Gesture Day.

November 1-30 can be National Error in Judgment Month, Nov. 9 can be Lost Car Keys Day and Nov. 27 can be Billing Snafu Day.

December 1-31 should be National Overcommercialization Month, Dec. 16 should be National Boring Party Day and Dec. 24 should be National Some Assembly Required Day.

I think a calendar like this would go a long way toward getting America back on its feet and restoring its self-respect.

Activities for holiday season can be magic

By GINA SEAY
Hearst News Service

Parents can keep the magic in this holiday season by prioritizing activities with their kids.

When invitations arrive from classmates, neighbors and relatives, sit down with the kids and discuss social outings.

Trouble often arises when children try to fulfill their own expectations in selecting festivities to attend, while also wanting to keep friends and parents happy.

So they try to do it all, in addition to decorating the tree and house, shopping for gifts and visiting relatives.

Children shouldn't be forced to attend every event.

When making dates, parents should set aside time for activities the family wants to do together.

Next, allow children plenty of time to do things with their own age group.

Parents shouldn't try to schedule everything in one weekend. Most Mondays in December, kids return to school tired and hyper — their parents tried to compensate for family time missed during the work week by planning too much for the weekends.

Children should be encouraged to talk openly with parents, outlining which events they prefer to attend. Parents can help children decide if the event is something they really want to go to or if they are feeling pressured by peers to attend. Participation should be fun — not work.

Allotting more time for outside events is important for preteens and teens, ages when peer related activities are desired and appropriate. Younger children have shorter fuses and lower tolerance when it comes to social outings.

Parents should respond promptly to RSVP requests on invitations, and ask about appropriate dress.

Holidays low-cal

Copley News Service

Just because it's the holiday season doesn't mean you have to end up looking like an overstuffed turkey.

In fact, you can enjoy the season without guilt and without gaining weight if you're willing to take control of eating situations.

According to nutritionist Lori Moran, you should begin by being direct with your relatives — tell Grandma about your weight-maintenance goals so she doesn't feel bad when you turn down that third piece of pumpkin pie.

When you eat, stick with white meat, fruits and vegetables but steer clear of stuffing, gravy and candied yams.

Finally, Moran says if you are keeping holiday foods around the house for guests, make sure you keep plenty of vegetables around so you have something to snack on.

National Home Care Week is celebrated

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

This is National Home Care Week; a week set aside to recognize and honor the home care community and its contributions to the health care needs of Americans.

Led by the recent changes in Medicare involving Diagnostic Regulatory Groups (DRGs) and Catastrophic coverages, home health care has rapidly become a crucial part in meeting a patient's total health care needs. The result of the DRGs, in particular, has been that most Medicare patients and patients of all ages are being dismissed from the hospital much earlier than ever before.

Many of the patients have required additional health care in their home. Patient care through a combination of hospital and home settings has not only been seen as a cost effective measure, but also has provided additional benefits to the patient.

"Home care is helping my 80-year-old mother maintain her independence and good health by bringing any care she needs right to her doorsteps," said one family member.

"It's amazing what they are doing at home now. A friend of mine needs intravaneous chemotherapy and is getting it at home," said another.

One mother, whose son was born prematurely, said, "With home care, he got all the professional care he needed and all the love that only comes with being at home with us."

And a nurse from the Visiting Nurse Service commented, "It's encouraging to know that our residents are utilizing home care when they know about the options available to them. We want everyone to know that home health care, from the most basic assistance to sophisticated high tech medical treatment, is an essential element of the patient's total care recovery."

Home health care visits are covered under Medicare, as well as most private insurance policies. However, there are restrictions and limitations to the coverage.

Medicare participants are strongly encouraged to pick up the Medicare handbook provided by the Social Security Administration. It describes in detail what is covered under both parts of Medicare. This booklet should be kept where it is readily available so it can be referred to as often as necessary.

Since the Medicare program is subject to change, participants should contact the Social Security office periodically to determine if you have and up-to-date copy. This handbook also provides a comprehensive list of Medicare exclusions. Information also is available about the timetable involving Medicare Catastrophic coverages.

Because insurance companies are affected by new Medicare regulations some policy holders will receive information concerning policy changes. These notices should be received by Jan. 31, 1989, if applicable.

As Medicare recipients review the new Catastrophic benefits, now also is a good time to review any supplemental policies. Knowing that these changes are possible and may subsequently save you money, this insurance review should be initiated.

Gift of food perfect Christmas present

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Problem people on your gift list this holiday season?

The mythical "person who has everything" may not really exist — I don't know anyone who has everything — but I do know people who would be happy if they never got another pair of slippers, or another necktie, or another set of pink gift soaps shaped like little seahorses and nestled inside a pink-tinted seashell.

But even the person who has almost everything will welcome a gift of food. No need to wrack your brains thinking of a suitable and not-too-expensive item. Edible treats are an appropriate gift for just about anybody, and easy on your holiday budget, too — unless you insist on giving things like imported caviar.

There are a number of delectable offerings you might consider: a basket combining fresh and dried fruits, in-shell nuts, and maybe a bottle of wine and a soft dessert cheese, would be perfect for a couple who enjoy fine dining.

For a homier gift, a variety of fancy preserves and honey might accompany a basketful of homemade breads and muffins. Cookies and hot toddies are always appreciated.

Wrap up a selection of cheeses and salami or tinned meats on a breadboard, and include bread sticks and crusty French bread.

Or make cheese balls in several different flavors and give with an assortment of crackers and a fancy knife for spreading the cheese.

FILL A COOKIE jar with homemade cookies, and add a couple of mugs filled with individual packets of instant cocoa or spiced tea. With a coffee cake, include a selection of coffee beans — or give tea cakes with a fancy teapot and several kinds of tea.

Homemade goodies are usually the least expensive of all, and they show that you care enough to make something special. A beautiful basket packed full of home-baked breads or cookies conveys warmth and thoughtfulness like no set of gift soaps ever could.

Let your children take part in the cookie-making tradition at this time of year. Kids often lack funds to purchase gifts for their friends, and a small parcel of cookies they helped to bake is an easy answer to their pocketbook dilemma.

When you give "Homestyle Holiday Fruit Bread," you can give the container it's baked in as well: just wrap the cooled loaf in plastic and fit it back inside the cleaned baking dish. Tie in place with a ribbon. Be sure to include the recipe (3x5-inch cards work well for this purpose) with any homemade item.

For microwavers, individually wrapped packets of microwave popcorn make perfect stocking stuffers. Other stocking ideas: small glass custard cups or single-serving microwave-safe storage containers filled with goodies, plastic utensils you can leave in the container while microwaving, a selection of your favorite microwave recipes typed out on 3x5-inch cards.

(Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens.)

MICRO-TIP OF THE WEEK

To proof (rise) bread in the microwave — even if you're planning to bake conventionally — place kneaded dough in a greased bowl. Turn once, to coat dough, then cover bowl with a dish towel and place in microwave with a measuring cup of warm water. Microwave on LOW (10 percent power), 12 to 18 minutes, or until doubled in bulk.

HOMESTYLE HOLIDAY FRUIT BREAD

½ cup vegetable oil
½ cup brown sugar, packed
½ teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs
Two-thirds cup orange juice
1¾ cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup coarsely chopped nuts
½ cup chopped dates
¼ cup golden raisins
¼ cup candied citron
2 tablespoons wheat germ or finely chopped nuts
¼ teaspoon cinnamon

Yields 1 loaf.
Cooking time: 13 to 15 minutes.
Oven setting: MEDIUM (50 percent power); HIGH (100 percent power)

In large mixing bowl, combine vegetable oil, brown sugar, and vanilla. Stir briefly, then add eggs, one at a time, beating well. Stir in orange juice. In separate bowl, toss together flour, baking powder, baking soda, and salt. Add all at once to brown sugar mixture, stirring well to moisten. Fold in all remaining ingredients except wheat germ or nuts and cinnamon.

Lightly butter bottom and sides of a 1½-quart microwave-safe casserole or loaf pan. Toss together wheat germ or chopped nuts and cinnamon; sprinkle over buttered inside of dish, shaking to distribute evenly.

Turn batter into prepared dish. Microwave, uncovered, 10 minutes at Medium setting, rotating dish ¼ turn every 3 minutes. Reset oven to High setting and microwave 3 to 5 minutes longer, or until exposed surface is set. Let stand in baking dish 15 minutes. Turn bread out onto wire rack to cool completely, then wrap tightly in plastic.

Even the person "who has everything" will be pleased to receive a gift of food. Cookies and almonds can be attractively arranged so that the container is as welcome as the food. Cinnamon sticks, spiced tea bags, or packages of cocoa may be added to food gifts for a little something extra.

CHOCOLATE-NUT DROPS

1 pound light brown sugar
1 cup heavy whipping cream
1 (1-ounce) square semisweet chocolate, coarsely chopped
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups broken walnuts or pecans
1 cup crunchy chow mein noodles

Yields 20 to 30 pieces.
Cooking time: 10 to 16 minutes.
Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power).

Combine brown sugar and whipping cream in a 3-quart microwave-safe casserole; stir to blend well. Microwave, uncovered, 9 to 14 minutes, or until syrup reaches about 238 degrees on a microwave candy thermometer (a small amount of syrup dropped into cold water will form a soft ball).

Add chocolate, butter or margarine, and vanilla to hot syrup; stir briefly to combine. Fold in nuts and chow mein noodles. Return to oven and microwave 1 to 2 minutes longer. While mixture is hot and liquified, drop by teaspoonfuls onto waxed paper. Let stand until cool and firm.

Edible treats range from down-home to gourmet

By GLENDA WINDERS
Copley News Service

You'd like to give your brother-in-law a sweater, but you don't know his size.

A good friend just bought a compact disc player, but you're not sure what music she already has.

You'd like to surprise a valued employee, but you don't know much about his personal tastes.

These dilemmas are common at Christmas, but there is a solution, thanks to the one thing we all have in common: We like to eat!

Some creative planning, shopping and wrapping can yield tasty personalized gifts for everyone on your list from a rich great-uncle who has everything to the interesting strangers who just moved in next door. Consider some of these possibilities:

Box a selection of local wines or an imported favorite with a corkscrew or a decorative carafe. Or make it the centerpiece of a basket that also includes nuts, crackers, sunflower seeds or an elegant jar of caviar. Or pair a crisp chablis with a round of cheese and a good wooden cutting board.

Fill a crystal decanter with someone's favorite brandy, or wrap the bottle with a set of snifters. Include fluted glasses with champagne or pilsners with an imported beer.

Head for the local deli to start assembling a collection of sausages and cheeses for serious snackers. Include a box of crackers and perhaps an herbed mustard so they can dig in right away.

A great gift for a family is a ham, a turkey or a box of juicy filet mignon, especially if it arrives in time to be served for Christmas dinner. Or deliver a whole salmon on a bed of shaved ice.

HAS SOMEONE complimented your chili or your homemade cornbread? Assemble the ingredients and present with a typed recipe card.

Most people admire the colorful exotic fruits and vegetables in the produce department at the grocery store but feel trying all of them would be an extravagance. Give your friends the gift of an eating adventure. Decorate a country basket with gingham bows and fill it with eggplant, artichokes, pomegranates, plantains, squashes and kiwis.

Or take a cue from the successful mail-order houses and give bountiful baskets of shiny red apples or juicy oranges. Wrap the fruit individually with tissue paper for a festive appearance and to protect the fruit.

If you're one of the few people who still has time to prepare homemade goodies, your friends will like nothing better than a treat from your kitchen.

WHAT IS YOUR specialty? A tasty casserole? Tamales? Sweet rolls? How about your own special salad dressing? Start a tradition this Christmas. Here are two suggestions for getting started:

SHRIMP PATE

2 pounds shrimp, cooked, shelled and deveined
3 tablespoons drained capers
2 green onions, chopped
⅛ cup soft butter
⅛ cup heavy cream
2 teaspoons Pernod
Salt and pepper
Chopped parsley

Yields 1 quart.

Combine shrimp, capers, onions, butter, cream and Pernod in a food processor and puree until smooth. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

Pack mixture into a decorative crock and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Cover and chill. Wrap with a wooden spreader and a box of special crackers.

OLD-FASHIONED CORN RELISH

⅛ cup vinegar
One-third cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon celery seed
¼ teaspoon mustard seed
¼ teaspoon hot pepper sauce
1½ cups cooked corn kernels or 16-ounce can whole kernel corn, drained
2 tablespoons chopped green bell pepper
1 tablespoon chopped pimiento
1 tablespoon minced white or green onion

Combine first 6 ingredients in medium saucepan and bring to boil. Cook 2 minutes; remove from heat and cool.

Place remaining ingredients in medium bowl. Add cooled mixture and blend lightly. Chill. Pack in pint canning jar and top with a circle of gingham tied with a red yarn bow.

Be sure to label all of the edibles you give. Invest in some printed labels that list your name and the contents, for example, "Sugar cookies from the kitchen of Susan Jones."

If your gift needs to be baked or reheated, include the instructions. Wrap fragile cookies and candies in tissue paper to prevent breakage, and use lots of shredded paper or packing straw when you pack boxes or baskets of food.

CRAFTS

Mrs. Albritton said she has easy access to hard-to-find supplies since her sister does most of their supply shopping from wholesale houses in Houston.

Other items Mrs. Albritton makes are Christmas decorations, sequin studded stockings, ornaments and wreaths. She also decorates stuffed rabbits with lace, ribbons, and pearls. "Teddy bears aren't as popular as they have been in previous years," she said. "Now its the bunnies that are in."

Ms. Hollowell also makes bunnies to order. "I dressed one in the scraps of one woman's dress, so they would have matching dresses and am currently working on creating a boy bunny," she said.

Mrs. Albritton makes jewelry to order. She may be contacted at (915) 362-6408.

Although Both Ms. Hollowell and Mrs. Albritton have developed their sewing and designing skills with experience, many of the crafts they make can be made by beginners. There are hundreds of craft booklets sold by craft shops which have step-by-step instructions for making everything from jewelry to potatoes sewn with panty hose.

When making Christmas gifts it's best to match the colors of the decor of the person you are making the gift for, unless your creation is intended to be an annual holiday decoration (perhaps you're doing it in red and green).

The easiest last minute gift to make is a basket of cookies, fudge or cheese, dressed up with cellophane and bows. Sweatshirts or tennis shoes personalized with fabric paints are sure to please teenagers and young girls.

No matter what you choose to make, supplies can be expensive unless you plan to make more than one item per supplies purchased. Craft items can be complex or easy to create, extravagant or inexpensive, but they are always unique and can be made on a shoestring budget.

A simple recipe (children can help with this one) for Candy Cane cookies follows:

CANDY CANE COOKIES
(Yield: 2 dozen cookies)
1¼ cups butter or margarine
1 cup powdered sugar
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
½ teaspoon almond extract
3½ cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon salt
Red food coloring
1 egg white, slightly beaten
Red decorating sugar, (optional)

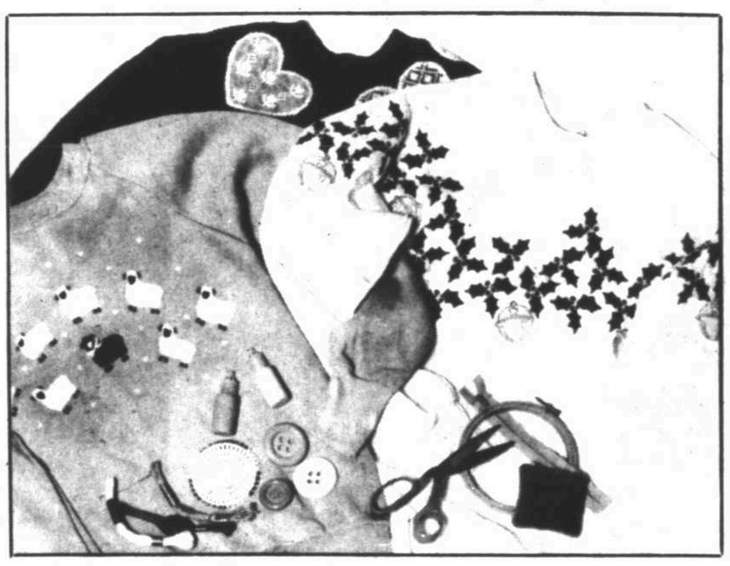

Cream together butter and powdered sugar. Beat in egg and flavorings. Combine flour and salt. Stir into first mixture. Set aside half of the dough. Tint remaining half light red with a few drops of food coloring. Keep dough chilled for ease of handling. (Dough works best if allowed to chill one hour before shaping cookies.)

With hands roll one teaspoonful of white dough and one teaspoonful of red dough into strips about four inches long. Put strips side by side and twist together lightly. Repeat with remaining dough.

Arrange on ungreased baking sheets. Curve one end down to form into candy cane shape.

Brush cookies with egg white. Sprinkle with red sugar if desired.

Bake at 350 degrees for 10-12 minutes or until very lightly browned. Cool on wire racks. Store airtight.

Sweatshirts decorated with scraps of material and fabric paint make great Christmas gifts for women, especially teenagers.

Simple, not expensive gifts entertain young children most

NEW YORK (AP) — Aunts, uncles, grandparents and friends can find holiday shopping frustrating when searching for gifts for youngsters.

"It's tough to know what to buy for young children because they change greatly in relatively short spans of time," says Dr. Susan Bredekamp of the National Association for the Education of Young Children.

"A wooden puzzle with a couple of pieces might be wonderful for a 15-month-old but boring to a 3-year-old, who wants the challenge of more pieces," she says. "A 3-year-old will love big fat paint brushes but the 5-year-old, who has developed finer hand movements, may want the slender kind."

The association, whose 60,000 members are teachers and administrators of the nation's child care, pre-school and kindergarten programs, offers these tips for holiday shopping:

— Avoid fad toys. "There is a reason the same toys are played with generation after generation: wooden blocks, crayon, puzzles, trucks, dolls. It's because they meet the needs that young children have always had," Bredekamp says.

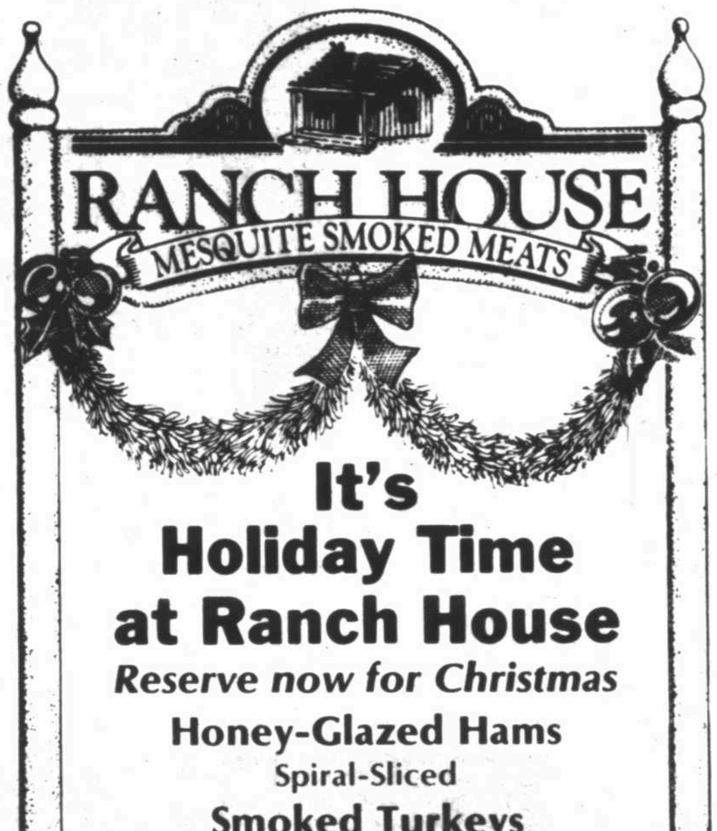

— Know the child's age, especially up to age 3. Very young children change significantly every three to six months, and thus their interest in certain toys changes. When in doubt, pick something the child will grow into within six months.

— Buy toys that involve the child, not that entertain him. "Talking" for a doll that doesn't speak, for example, stimulates a child's imagination more than playing with dolls that talk. Toys that move to a young child's touch help develop motor skills and thus are better than battery-run toys.

— Opt for toys that allow a child to create whatever he or she wants rather than a defined object. "Young children love the doing of an activity more than the end product," Bredekamp says. They enjoy coloring all over a page, for example, more than coloring in a coloring book, because it is fun, not because it looks good. Likewise, she says, wood, nails and a small hammer are better than a model or a kit.

— Remember that price has no bearing on the interest the child will have in a toy. "Many favorite activities of children involve inexpensive articles — Packets of colored construction paper, a box of chalk, plastic stacking cups.

Return to 'traditionalism' in love, marriage debated

Hearst News Service

A new "traditionalism" featuring romantic courtship, full-time moms and modest housing is under way, according to Jib Fowles, professor of human sciences and humanities at the University of Houston.

It's all because men are beginning to outnumber marriageable women, says Fowles, who advanced his theory in a guest editorial in The New York Times. Erma Bombeck cited his predictions that more families will have mothers at home by the year 2000 in a recent column calling for more respect for "the old-fashioned mother."

Fowles' argument is based on demographic trends. The ratio of men to women of marriageable age is reversing as the baby boom generation advances into middle age. Men typically marry women two to three years younger than themselves. Since each year of the baby boom until 1957 saw a larger number of births than the previous year, early boomer males had a huge pool of eligible females to choose from. Once the largest group of boomers passed through its 20s last year, however, younger baby boom males had to begin looking for mates from a smaller group of post boom females.

The harder it gets for men to find their mates, Fowles said, the greater value society will place on women — particularly wives and mothers.

Romantic courtships will make a comeback, Fowles predicted. Adultery, at least among men, will drop off. And the better men treat their mates, the more secure women will feel about staying home to raise children.

"Marriage is going to appear to women to be a much stronger and more satisfying institution than it has during the last 25 years," he said.

"I suspect they're going to find more satisfaction in child rearing. I think it will be a more esteemable thing to do," Fowles said. "We've found it easy to rationalize that we need two incomes, but the second earner's pay typically goes for luxuries Americans have come to view as necessities, such as opulent housing."

His conclusions may be correct, but Ben Wattenberg questions Fowles' lines of reasoning.

"There are other things working toward rejuvenating the American family," said Wattenberg, senior fellow at the American Enterprise Institute and author of "The Birth Dearth," a book on the implications of America's relatively low birth rate.

"Young women are reassessing and re-evaluating the experiences of their older sisters who got married later or not at all or had only one child or none at all, and many are deciding they don't want to do that," Wattenberg said. The spread of sexually transmitted diseases, particularly AIDS, also may be contributing to an apparent resurgence of interest in monogamy, marriage and children, he said.

The rule of thumb that men marry women a few years younger is being broken with some regularity these days, Wattenberg said.

"It's almost a semi-fad," for older women to seek younger men, he said. "If you want to get very cold blooded about it, insofar as a second earner is necessary and beneficial these days, a man 26 marrying a woman 29 is marrying someone with higher earning power."

He also questioned Fowles' prediction of a rising birth rate, saying that the most optimistic, albeit preliminary, findings indicate at best only a tiny increase, and a report expected this fall from the U.S. Census Bureau is said to predict an actual decline in the U.S. population after the year 2000.

Flourishes but no ruffles for second-time brides

By ANNE-MARIE SCHIRO
New York Times News Service

Many a bride-to-be has a fantasy of looking like a princess on her wedding day, with a lavish white dress and yards of veiling. But that fantasy can be out of kilter for a bride who is past the proverbial first blush of youth or who has been to the altar before.

A mature bride wants to look sophisticated, not sophomoric. But finding the dress of one's dreams can be a problem the second or third time around. The older bride can rarely find what she wants in a bridal salon — she may not even go to one — so she often undertakes an exhausting search for something appropriate.

For Betty Kelly Sargent, something appropriate for her second wedding was a white satin suit by Norma Kamali.

For Freddy Leventhal, it was a two-piece dress of cream-colored silk by Sylvia Heisel. Marika Somerstein bought a gold lace off-the-shoulder dress in Spain.

Joan Gelman, who wore traditional peau de soie with a lace mantilla at her first wedding 30 years ago, chose a dark green Stavropoulos dress for her second wedding. "I was married in January," she said, "and knew I wanted green velvet but I couldn't find it anywhere. Then I went into Martha on Park Avenue. She told her staff to call the Palm Beach store and have the Stavropoulos sent up. 'She'll want that,' she said. 'It will be perfect.' And it was."

Unlike Gelman, most second-time brides prefer pale colors or off-white, according to interviews with brides and with store employees around the nation.

Priscilla of Boston, a leading manufacturer of wedding dresses, has a collection called Contemporary Romantic that is geared to the second time around.

"For second marriages, women look for something elegant and appropriate," said Mary Cavanaugh, the personal shopper at Bergdorf Goodman. "Black is still inappropriate. They go into pastels; pink, yellow, pale blue, champagne or ecru, not usually white-white."

She recommends a suit or a silk dress. "I get some requests for tea-length dresses," she said, "but mostly they wear knee-length."

At I. Magnin in San Francisco, second-time brides in fairly formal weddings tend to favor romantic dresses of lace or chiffon with mid-calf or long skirts. For an informal wedding, a knee-length silk suit is usual.

"A second-time bride can be in her late 20s," said Linda Lee, head of the Macy's by Appointment shopping service. "She may wear a wedding dress if it's her husband's first marriage, but not if both have been married before."

"But most second-time brides," she added, "want suits or un-bridey dresses. They say 'I'm not a kid anymore' and ask for something a little special but not divergent from their general look. Most customers in our Herald Square store want to look sophisticated. In our Dallas and Florida stores, they're more traditionally bridal; a short lace dress rather than a suit or a simple silk dress."

A bride-to-be with something special in mind can have it made to order. Monica Hickey, who ran the bridal department at Henri Bendel until it was closed, is now director of custom designs for the bridal salon at Saks Fifth Avenue.

"We get a lot of second weddings," she said. "They usually choose short dresses. For daytime, I recommend a simple chemise with a touch of lace. Women over 30 also like suits."

For a formal evening wedding, she recently found a Bob Mackie outfit she considers appropriately sophisticated: a long strapless lace dress with a high-necked jacket.

Most bridal experts say a repeat bride should wear something on her head, whether a hat, a bow or flowers, but not a veil. Suky Rosan, who runs a bridal boutique in Ardmore, Pa., outside Philadelphia, recommends silk flowers with a bit of jeweling, although she considers a hat with veiling all right because the style is currently fashionable.

ALLEN-DUMAS

Laura Rose Allen and James Edwin Dumas, both of Midland, are planning a 2 p.m. Jan. 21 wedding at Crestview Baptist Church. The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ron Allen of San Antonio and Mr. and Mrs. Pat Grigg of Big Spring. Parents of the future bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dumas of Midland.

Miss Allen graduated from Churchill High School in San Antonio. She is employed with Exxon Company, U.S.A. Her fiance is a graduate of Lee High School. He earned a bachelor of business administration degree from University of Texas of the Permian Basin, and is employed with Avalon Vocational-Technical Institute.

San Diego park outstanding

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — This southern California city boasts one of the largest and most diversified urban parks in the nation, reports Travel Agent magazine.

The city's Balboa Park is more than just greenery, however, notes the international travel journal.

Scattered among 1,400 acres are a half-dozen museums whose ornate buildings in Spanish-Moorish style date back to the Panama-California Exposition of 1915, three theaters, a science center, concert halls, golf course, tennis courts and bicycle paths.

The crown jewel of the park is the San Diego Zoo, where more than 3,200 wild animals, representing more than 800 species, cavort on 100 acres of natural surroundings.

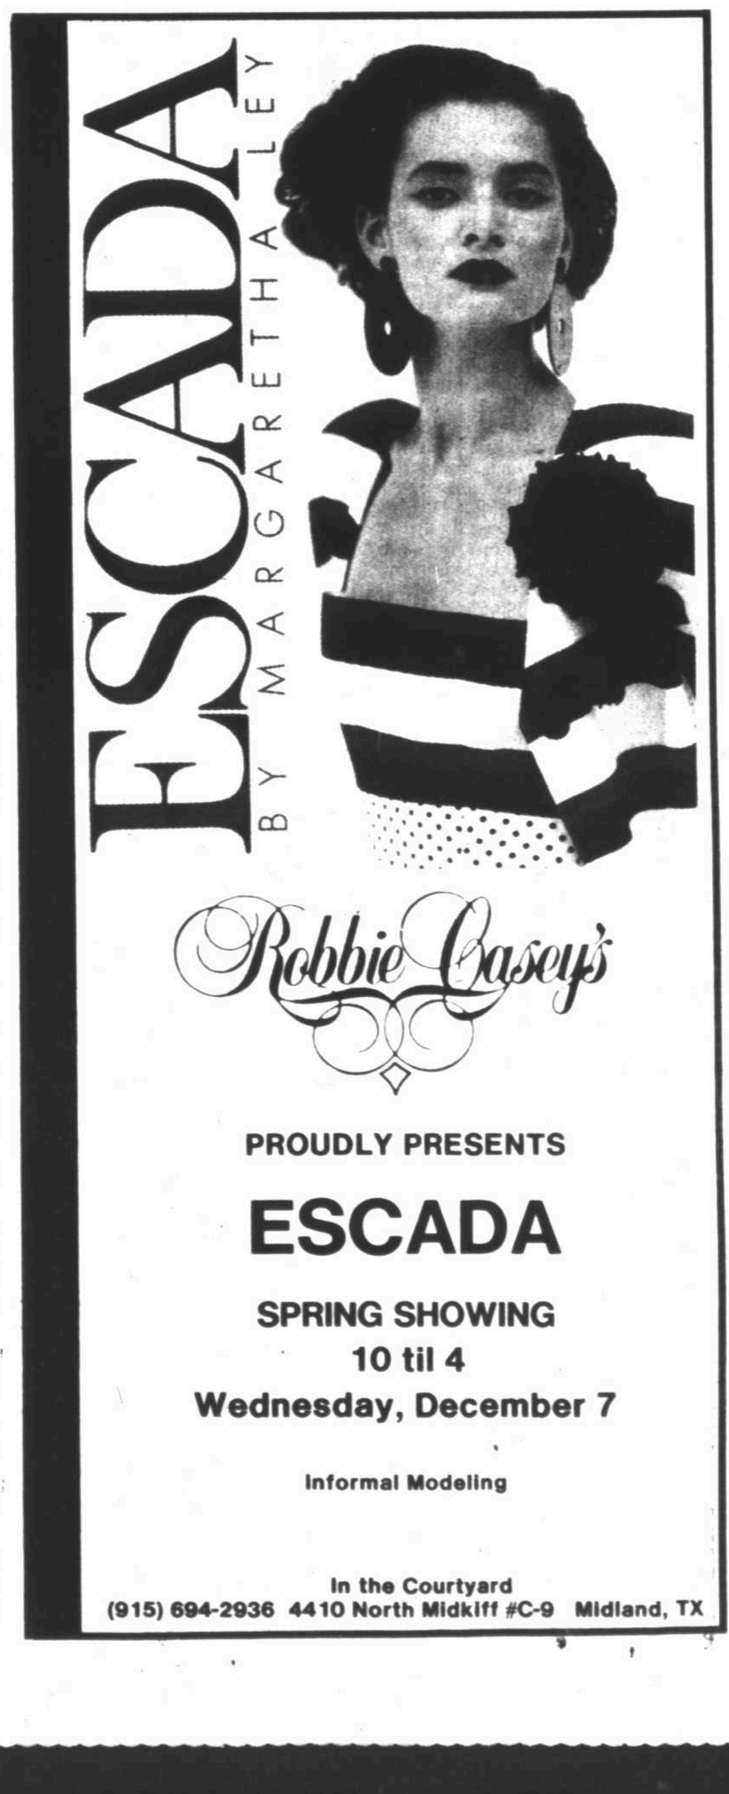

One mile west of the park is Old Town, where California began in 1769 with the first Spanish settlement on the West Coast.

DEAR ABBY

Doctor who lost big seeks small-town practice

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Are there any small towns or rural areas out there that want or need a good family doctor?

More than three years ago, I made a mistake and got into trouble with the government over Medicaid billings and lost my license. It was, and is, a personal tragedy. Since then, I have reunited with my wife and family and have given hundreds of hours of volunteer services to my church and community. I have become a much better Christian because of this unfortunate experience.

Sadly, state medical boards are very unforgiving, and if a physician loses his license in one state, he cannot get it back in another. (I have tried in eight different states.)

I am 39 years old, and all I want is a chance to start over again, doing what I do best — practicing good, compassionate medicine in a small town somewhere. If a community will go to bat for me and help me regain my license, they will get, in return, a competent, dedicated family doctor — for life.

I am signing my name and address, but you may prefer to sign this ... HOPEFUL IN LOUISIANA

DEAR HOPEFUL: I sympathize with your plight. It is indeed a tragedy to be punished a lifetime for one mistake. Anyone who is interested in you may write to me and I will give them your name and address. I wish you all the best.

DEAR ABBY: A very close relative of mine has a terminal illness. Her doctor says that she has six months to a year to live.

No one in her family thinks she should be told. Some are afraid she might take her own life if she knows the truth. I have my own opinion about this, but I would like to hear yours. Sorry, I can't sign my name, so please sign this ... ONE AGAINST MANY

DEAR ONE: If I were diagnosed as "terminal," I would want to know. I may want to travel, visit friends and relatives, revise my will, and enjoy my remaining time to the fullest.

However, news of this kind should be broken gently, beginning with "Your chances for recovery are very slim ..." Bear in mind that there are people who are alive today who were told years ago that their days were numbered. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: A reader signed "Confused" (obviously a man) complained that women always expect gifts from their husbands on their wedding anniversaries, but they never give their husbands anything. Well, here's one who does.

Norm and I have five children, and every year we feel the need to get out of town for a weekend to recharge our batteries and reaffirm our love for each other. And what better time to do this than on our wedding anniversary?

This year we weren't able to leave town, so I got a sitter for the kids, then I asked Norm's boss to let him off early. I showed up at his shop with a dozen long-stemmed roses, a bottle of champagne, a warm kiss, and I took him to a motel for a couple of hours. — VICKI IN MARYSVILLE

DEAR ABBY: I am a radiologic technologist at a large hospital. My job is secure in large part due to people who do not wear seat belts. I want to especially thank:

■ The 45-year-old female who had just a little too much to drink and was driving about 55 mph when her car hydroplaned on a puddle. She and her car went through a fence and hit a tree. She was thrown from the car and it rolled over her. She had a broken neck and back, skull and jaw fractures, broken ribs, collapsed lung, fractured pelvis, broken femur, shattered lower leg and ankle, and a broken arm. I X-rayed her for over 3½ hours. She can't feel or move anything below her neck. She will be here at the hospital for quite a while yet.

■ The 26-year-old man who leaned on his armrest while turning a corner. The door flew open, he fell out, and the car ran over him. He suffered a broken pelvis and two shattered femurs. He's lucky. With a few more operations, he'll walk again — with pain and difficulty, of course, but he will walk again. He kept me busy for over an hour.

■ The parents of a 3-year-old boy who was standing in the front seat between them. A truck ran a red light and their car broadsided it. They were going only 20 miles an hour when the car stopped. The little boy didn't. He was brought in with massive head and chest injuries after he flew through the windshield and slammed against the truck. The trauma team and I were busy with him for almost two hours before resuscitation efforts stopped and he was pronounced dead. I worked on the parents another two hours. His mother kept asking me how her son was.

■ The 22-year-old woman who was sideswiped by a passing car. She hit a tree and rolled over twice. She suffered only a broken collarbone — oops, sorry — she was wearing her seat belt. She only kept me busy for 20 minutes.

So all you people out there who find seat belts too much trouble to use, too confining or uncomfortable, keep it up! You keep my job secure. Sign me — SAFE AND SECURE IN KENTUCKY

Babies learn to eat solid foods in own time

Associated Press

Starting at around four or five months and continuing until 10 or 12 months, babies will go through a transition from breast or bottle feeding to a diet of mostly adult foods. Baby feeding experts at Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp. say you can't hurry a baby's ability to chew by adding solids early. If the baby keeps pushing the food out, it's usually too early for solids.

GIVE A GIFT THAT LASTS A LIFETIME AND BRING OUT THE CLASSROOM WHIZ THAT'S HIDING IN YOUR CHILD. GUARANTEED.*

WE GUARANTEE SUCCESS.

In just a short time, your child will be reading at a full grade level better than he or she does now. Or solving math problems that right now seem incomprehensible. And, best of all, discovering how it feels to succeed.

Such striking progress involves no secret formula. Just patience, some hard work—and two hours a week for 18 weeks, at a Sylvan Learning Center.

HOW SYLVAN CAN GUARANTEE SUCCESS.

Remove the competition, the stress, and the fear of failure from education, and what happens? Children learn.

This simple approach has been tested and proven at Sylvan, where thousands of children have learned how to do better in school. Which is why we offer this unique promise: your child's math or reading skills will improve by at least one full grade level after just 36 instruction hours. Or we will provide up to 12 additional hours of instruction, at no further cost. Improvement will be measured by a nationally-recognized achievement test, given before and after instruction at Sylvan.

ENROLL YOUR CHILD NOW.

Remember, because we hold the line at just three students per instructor, enrollment is strictly limited. And the sooner your child begins, the sooner you'll see positive results reflected in his classroom work.

Sylvan offers flexible after school hours and requires no contracts or long-term commitments. You simply pay monthly tuition. Don't let this learning opportunity pass your child by.

Watching mini-series lifelong

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I suppose there are some of you who watched 18 hours of "War and Remembrance" and got on with your lives. Well, good for you.

For some of us, watching a mini-series that lasts longer than most marriages is not easy. You know I have never been a goal setter — crossing my legs in hot weather is about as big as it gets for me. But a vow was made three weeks ago that for the first time in my life I was going to finish something I started if it took forever to do it. (A friend of mine watched "Amerika" in its entirety, and I consider her one of the bravest persons I have ever met.)

From the moment "War and Remembrance" started, I was doomed to failure. On the first night it ran, my husband and I had a dinner to go to. No problem. We'll tape the three hours. When will we watch the three hours? Why, the next night during the stupid ball game. Right? Wrong.

Just before the ball game began, I squeezed in an hour and a half of it, but on the next night put off the last half of Part I to watch Part II.

On night III, there was another conflict, so we taped it. At midnight, my husband said we should watch some of it then, since Part IV was coming up the next night. I told him I couldn't watch Pug reunited with Pamela until she had slept with Philip in Singapore in the first segment. It just wouldn't be right.

We fell asleep over the rest of Part I, and the next night went right into Part IV. Things started to get out of control when my husband carelessly erased the Battle of Midway from Part III, making the wrong people sleep together on Part IV.

During Friday and Saturday, I tried to catch up. I really did. I had "War and Remembrance" for breakfast, bits of it while I was unloading the groceries and snatches while trying to entertain. It was like a runaway train I couldn't catch up to.

On Sunday we said to heck with it and instead of taping it, watched Part V before we had finished viewing the last quarter of Part I and Part III. It was ironic that the United States was winning on the screen, but we were losing the war in the living room.

Nights VI and VII sort of ran together. Our lives were focused. We stopped speaking to each other and seeing people from the outside. Every night, like two drones, we know what we had to do. We dragged into the living room, turned on the VCR and watched World War II.

Someone said there are 12 more hours of "War and Remembrance" coming up in the spring. If we don't start getting up early to watch these tapes, it's going to be tight.

CHACO

CHACO CULTURE NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK, N.M. — A thousand years ago in the Southwest, all roads led — not to Rome — but to an arid canyon in northwestern New Mexico.

Chaco Canyon was home to at least 2,000 and perhaps as many as 5,000 Anasazi Indians, who lived in nine "Great Towns" — massive prehistoric stone "apartment buildings" surrounding open plazas — or scattered small "villages" composed of from 15 to 20 masonry rooms and associated round ceremonial structures located underground, called kivas.

Radiating out from this ancient center of prehistoric culture were more than 400 miles of roads linking the canyon with at least 75 other communities, according to information provided by the National Park Service.

The longest presently known road stretched 42 miles north toward two prehistoric towns, currently dubbed Salmon Ruins and Aztec Ruins, both located near Farmington. Ruins of other settlements along this road are spread out at intervals of approximately one day's foot travel.

Aerial photography and other remote sensing techniques have played a crucial role in the discovery of many of the roads, which date to the 11th and 12th centuries.

Not that they were mere tribal footpaths. They were laid out in straight lines that continue through miles of rough, broken country with little regard for terrain. In many areas, the roads were 30 feet wide.

Sloping ground was leveled and rock edgings built to retain the road fill. When the roads crossed bare sandstone terraces, they were frequently bordered by stone walls or lines of boulders.

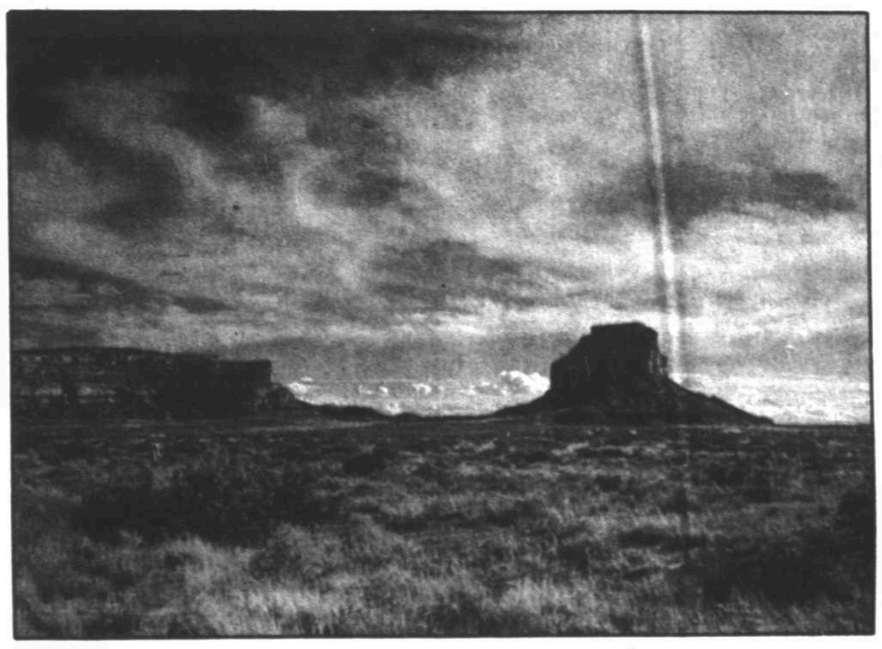

The remains of several stairways — such as the Jackson Stairway, named after an early Anglo explorer of the canyon — can still be seen carved into the soft sandstone cliffs. Such stairways linked the roads leading out of the canyon to those in the canyon bottom. Wooden ramps and scaffolds also were built against the cliffs to connect stairs and roads.

Archaeologists are still debating the significance of this impressive road system. Obviously, it made travel and trade between the canyon towns and the outlying settlements much easier.

Pueblo Bonito, the D-shaped structure in the top photo, is the largest town in the Chaco cultural system. It's likely that religious specialists used this passage in the floor of Casa Rinconada, a "Great Kiva," middle photo, to stage surprise appearances. Above, the setting sun paints this long wall at Chetro Ketl, another large Chacoan town, in gold tones. At right, Fajada Butte, a major landmark, is silhouetted against a cloudy sky.

The cliffs at Chaco Culture National Historical Park served as "bulletin boards" for the prehistoric Anasazi and historic Navajo sheepherders. The Anasazi pecked their designs — such as the spirals and human forms shown above — into the rock, and they have a blurry outline. In contrast, the Navajo cut their pictures into the rock, resulting in an angular appearance.

CHACO—

Some researchers have theorized that these ancestors of the modern Puebloan peoples used the roads to distribute scarce resources throughout the entire Chacoan area.

For example, it's hard to imagine how a population of perhaps as many as 5,000 people could grow enough food to feed themselves in this dry environment, which currently averages just eight inches of rainfall annually. Although rainfall varies quite a bit from year to year, it's unlikely to have been much heavier during the 11th and 12th centuries.

The Anasazi built water control devices — terraced fields and small dams to catch short-lived waterfalls which pour off the cliffs during intense summer rains — in the side canyons which feed into Chaco, but they probably did not extensively tap the undependable waters of Chaco Wash to flood their canyon-bottom fields.

So, archaeologists have speculated that surplus food from the edges of the San Juan Basin — at one time thought to be the extent of Chacoan influence — was hauled in on human backs over the roads and stored in the Great Houses.

This would have been possible because areas along the rim of the basin had higher rainfall and more productive soils than the canyon.

From Chaco, the theory goes, the goods were doled out to other communities affected by the periodic droughts, according to "The Chaco Canyon Community," by Stephen H. Lekson, Thomas C. Windes, John R. Stein and W. James Judge, in July 1988's Scientific American.

However, recent systematic surveys of western New Mexico and eastern Arizona have turned up perhaps as many as 150 "extracanyon" sites, which show Chacoan characteristics and sit astride Chacoan roads. This area covers from 93,000 to 186,000 square miles, the Scientific American article stated.

An elaborate distribution system on such a grand scale would have been almost impossible to operate.

CHACO——

Not that the Anasazi (the "ancient ones" in Navajo) of Chaco Canyon shrank back from seemingly impossible tasks. Archaeologists have estimated that about 215,000 trees, measuring up to 10 inches in diameter, were carried in from some 50 miles away to build the floors and roofs of the multistoried Great Houses.

The trees have proved to be worth their weight in information for 20th-century archaeologists. By counting the number of growth rings in the trees' trunks, and fitting them into a known chronology, archaeologists have been able to determine — often down to a specific year — when the tree was cut and thus how old the site is. Different building phases within the same site also have been dated.

Long-distance lumberjacking was just one example of the Anasazis' Herculean efforts.

Almost 100,000 pounds of sandstone, hand cut from the sandstone cliffs, would have been needed to build a single small room in one of the Great Houses. It's possible that 50 million pieces of sandstone were cut to build the Great House of Chetro Ketl, claimed the authors of the Scientific American article.

But they don't believe Chaco was a seething hive of sweating humanity during this period.

They theorized that 30 men working between two and four months a year for 10 years could have completed a major construction project, such as one of the Great Houses.

Although turquoise does not occur naturally in the canyon or the surrounding area, more than 60,000 pieces have been recovered from the excavations, according to "New Light on Chaco Canyon," by W. James Judge.

Judge speculated Chaco residents controlled or had unlimited access to turquoise sources, perhaps from Cerrillos, some 100 miles to the east. As evidence, he cited the turquoise workshops unearthed within the small village sites at Chaco.

Such control over a relatively scarce resource may have contributed to the road system's growth, Judge continued, as Chaco became, by A.D. 1000, the San Juan Basin's major source of the semi-precious stone.

Since turquoise probably was used to adorn objects of magical or religious importance, it also may have played a role in Chaco's development as a ritual center.

Judge was one of the primary excavators of Pueblo Alto, a Great Town located on the north rim of the canyon, on a sandstone terrace directly above Pueblo Bonito. Ten percent of this site — which was built between A.D. 1020 and A.D. 1060 — was excavated from 1976 to 1979, as reported in "The Chaco Canyon Community."

The archaeologists determined that only 5 of the 85 original rooms built at Pueblo Alto were living quarters; most were "road-related suites," small interconnected rows of storage rooms which opened directly onto the Chaco roads and were inaccessible from inside the pueblo.

From this, they estimated that no more than 100 people may have actually lived in each of the nine Great Houses, not the thousands of residents projected by earlier archaeologists

Although few rooms apparently were used as living quarters, more than 204,000 artifacts were recovered, 70,000 from a nearby trash mound.

During the 60 years of its occupation over 150,000 pots were tossed into this one trash mound. Using Judge's and others' estimates, that means 2,500 pots per year — or 25 pots per person per year — were thrown into this one refuse pile.

This improbably high pots-per-person figure should be tossed into the trash along with the broken pots.

Excavation revealed that the trash was deposited in intermittent layers, rather than in a day-by-day manner, according to the Scientific American article. The authors noted that not all the Great Houses have trash mounds, so they might not have been needed for everyday refuse disposal.

Great Houses which have mounds show a potsherd-to-resident ratio similar to that of Pueblo Alto. Thus, the excavators theorized that the mounds reflect something other than everyday activities.

One idea is that Anasazi pilgrims — drawn to Chaco for ceremonial events — are responsible for the mounds. Once such mounds were created, they might have become important visual reminders of the rituals. The mounds would have grown with each ceremony.

The network of roads would have aided pilgrims on their way to the center of their religious universe — Chaco Canyon.

Ultimately, however, this elaborate religious and social system was rather fragile. It did not survive more than perhaps three centuries; by A.D. 1200 the entire system had collapsed.

For more information on Chaco Culture National Historical Park, write Superintendent, Star Route 4, Box 6500, Bloomfield, N.M. 87413, or call 505-988-6727 or 505-988-6716. It is necessary to cross about 20 miles of unpaved roads to reach the park by either the north or south entrance. No lodging, gasoline, repair services or food are available in the park, although there is a campground.

Author examines 'retirement Edens'

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Increasing numbers of older Americans are discovering that they can live comfortably abroad on their Social Security checks — in "retirement Edens" from Mexico to Europe.

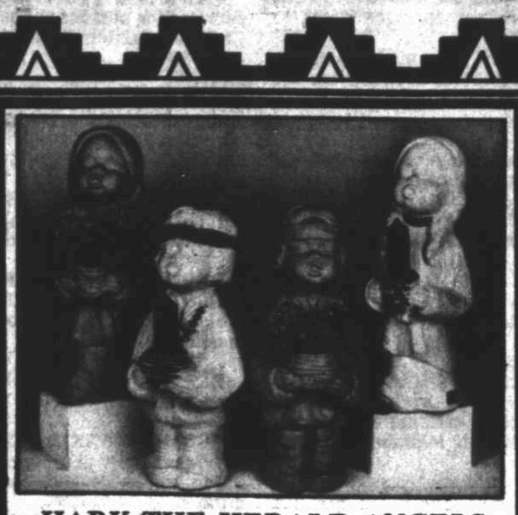

Author Peter A. Dickinson estimates that for $1,000 a month a couple can afford a "stylish villa with a sea view, relax with household help and a gardener, entertain grandly, and travel comfortably" within a number of countries around the world.

Dickinson should know because for years he has investigated bargain Utopias the world over.

He provides detailed information about them in his new book, "Travel and Retirement Edens Abroad," the latest in a series of AARP Books, an educational co-publishing project of the American Association of Retired Persons.

Dickinson, world traveler and author of the popular "Sunbelt Retirement" and "Retirement Edens Outside the Sunbelt" books, gives readers up-to-date information on retirement meccas in Mexico, Canada, Costa Rica, the Caribbean, Europe, Israel, Australia and the Far East.

Dickson tells not only where but how a retiree should go about setting up a "retirement Eden" outside the United States. His 454-page book is full of names, places, numbers and other details necessary to investigate living abroad.

Music can soothe abused or depressed children, according to expert

Copley News Service

Cajoling and candy won't get an abused child to snap out of his funk, but music will. According to California musicologist Howard Richman, music can turn tense, hyper or withdrawn kids into friendly, expressive and playful children. But not just any music.

In his work with abused children in Newhall, Richman says he has developed a special tape that employs the principles of something he calls "music entrainment." That involves taping musical passages that mirror a child's anger, hyperactivity or depression.

Richman says as the music calms down, so does the agitated child.

In addition, the $15.95 tape tackles emotions such as being sad, being scared, being mad and being stressed.

Booklet lists most promising careers

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most young people have visions of becoming something famous or familiar — perhaps a television star or firefighter. But as they get older, they should give serious thought to preparing for the work that will be available.

The Department of Labor may be able to help them. It has compiled a booklet entitled "Tomorrow's Jobs: Overview," which discusses population changes, new technology and the current job market and suggests what job opportunities may be promising in the next 10 to 15 years.

The booklet points out, for example, that that huge generation of people born in the years following World War II — known as the Baby Boom generation — is rapidly moving into middle age. In coming years they will create a huge boom in the number of older Americans.

People in these age groups eat out more than younger ones, they buy more insurance and they will tend to need more health care as they age. Those fields, thus, would seem to offer good opportunities for future employment.

The Baby Boom was followed by a "baby bust" when Americans had much smaller families, the booklet notes.

That means the number of workers in the 16 to 24 age group will be declining — a trend already under way. Thus, it should be easy to find work in the beginning jobs category often filled by these people. These, though, are often low-paying jobs and may offer little possibility for advancement.

The fastest-growing jobs will be those that require more education, the department predicts, especially scientists, engineers, accountants, computer experts and so forth.

Here is a rundown of a few of the job categories listed in the booklet and the outlook given for the next decade or so:

■ Managers are expected to see a 29 percent increase in jobs as businesses get larger and more complex.

■ Growth is anticipated at 42 percent for jobs in the health professions.

■ Engineers, architects and surveyers can expect a 32 percent increase, with electrical engineers seeing the fastest increases.

■ A 46 percent jump is anticipated in jobs for natural scientists and those specializing in computers and mathematics.

■ Retail and wholesale trade is expected to increase by 27 percent with more than half the new jobs in eating and drinking places.

■ A 26 percent boost is expected for jobs in finance, insurance and real estate.

■ A growth of 16 percent is expected in jobs for teachers, counselors and librarians.

■ Growth of state and local governments is expected to boost government jobs by 9 percent.

■ A 9 percent increase also is expected in jobs in transportation, communications and public utilities.

Copies of the Labor Department booklet can be obtained for $1.25 from the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo., 81009. Order item number 111T.

Cooking habits of American women researched

Copley News Service

Women are spending less time cooking but enjoying it more. According to a survey commissioned by Conde Nast Publications, the average woman spends 60 minutes preparing dinner — that's less time than three years ago.

In addition, roughly 80 percent of American women say they like to cook and consider it their responsibility.

Also, most women seem to have accepted the microwave as their modern-day savior, with 79 percent reporting that they use the high-tech reheater daily.

Walk corporate

Copley News Service

Before climbing the corporate ladder, learn to walk — the way you walk determines whether you're a wimp or a winner.

According to Jeffrey Greenberg of the National Institute of Business Management, the way you walk into the office tells all about your status in an organization. People at the top go right up to the person they're addressing and speak to him or her face to face. But those at the bottom don't even enter a room — they stand at the door trying to be polite, but coming across as passive.

With that in mind, his advice in a recent issue of Success magazine is: Try to be a little more assertive when dealing with your superiors, but don't go overboard.

Salesman survives oil bust

Sells 125 rigs in five years

DALLAS (AP) — In three years, Mike Mullen has sold more than 125 oil rigs.

The three years weren't the go-go years of the late 1970s and early 1980s. He's done it since 1986 — during three of the most pathetic years the domestic oil and gas drilling equipment industry has ever seen.

Mullen got into the oil business in 1975 and has been able to stay in it ever since — continuing to make money in the up and down cycles that his career has overlapped.

It could be said Mullen has good timing: Many still remember the Dallas native as a linebacker for St. Mark's School of Texas and later as an All-America at Tulane University. In 1973, he was drafted by the Miami Dolphins — and in his 1974 rookie season played with the Dolphins as they beat the Minnesota Vikings for their second consecutive Super Bowl championship.

"I had an opportunity to jump to the rival World Football League for a lot more money and what I thought was more job security," Mullen said from his office in suburban Highland Park. "The league cratered. I became aware of how unstable that type of profession can be."

And so he moved back to Dallas, ending his short-but-sweet football career, and launched another risky career — in the oil business.

But Mullen has learned to work the industry's downside to his advantage.

He started his second career with Sedco International, going to work in Iran and the North Sea. He returned to the United States in 1979 as the last domestic oil boom was taking off and operated a drilling company in five Southeastern states out of Natchez, Miss.

In 1983, as the industry was working its way out of the 1982 decline in oil prices, Mullen was hired by Dallas-based InterFirst Bank for a first-of-its-kind job. InterFirst hired the drilling contractor to be its manager of oil-related assets and to help restructure loans to contract drillers. In two years, Mullen managed $480 million in drilling equipment that the bank had taken back through foreclosure and lay dormant in three equipment yards.

In 1985, Mullen said he saw an opportunity to start his own company — "which was to buy assets from banks at distressed values with the intent of marketing them at a later date."

With a pool of investors he founded Dallas-based Energy Equipment Resource Inc. and became the managing partner of a multimillion-dollar venture capital fund that speculates in oil rigs.

Since its inception, gross sales have exceeded $12 million. This year, Mullen's company has had sales of $4.6 million.

"The reason I've been able to be successful in the equipment business is because I buy and sell — and I emphasize sell," Mullen said. "I'm competing with safe investments like T-bills. But what we're doing is safe because I only buy at a price that I can liquidate at a profit."

Recently he bought six rigs at a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. auction that sold the last of the Penn Square National Bank foreclosed properties for about five to six cents on the dollar.

COMMUNICATIONS

Radio-phones boon for isolated region

New system being tried at Fort Davis

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Outside Alaska, the Trans-Pecos region of West Texas is among the most remote and sparsely settled areas in the nation. Here, someone once exaggerated (almost correctly), distances are measured by hours, ranches by miles and residents counted on the fingers.

Roughly equal in size to New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island combined, it is an area comprised mostly of small towns and isolated ranches. Two New Hampshire-sized counties in the Trans-Pecos do not even have doctors. El Paso, so far west that it is more closely aligned with Tuscon than Fort Davis, Marfa, Alpine or Presidio, is the only city in the region.

Needless to say, with a population so sparse and a land so vast and rugged, telephone service can be a problem, especially on remote ranches. In most of the area the terrain is so rocky that underground cable service is out of the question, even if it were economical. Telephone service to some ranches is nothing more than telephone wire strung for miles along fence posts, making them vulnerable not only to weather but also enthusiastic bulls, careless hunters and kamikaze cowboys in pickups.

The new BETRS system will be an asset to Fort Davis Rancher Gary Puckett.

Now Southwestern Bell Telephone Division in Midland is looking to make telephone service to such remote locations more available, more dependable and less costly with an experimental telephone service called Basic Exchange Telecommunications Radio Service (BETRS).

Southwestern Bell is one of only two phone companies in the nation to be licensed by the Federal Communications Commission for the new radio-telephone service, which is expected to provide a dependable and inexpensive telephone link to thousands of isolated ranches, residences and resorts nationwide. Remote mining, construction and forestry projects are also possibilities.

Oddly, the acronym for BETRS is "betters" and Southwestern Bell feels the wireless system is indeed a better solution for telephone service in many remote application, and could one day be a substitute for the overhead copper wire and pole transmission systems, which are both costly to construct and maintain. Southwestern Bell says the system could reduce costs by one-third while providing a higher quality service to the customer.

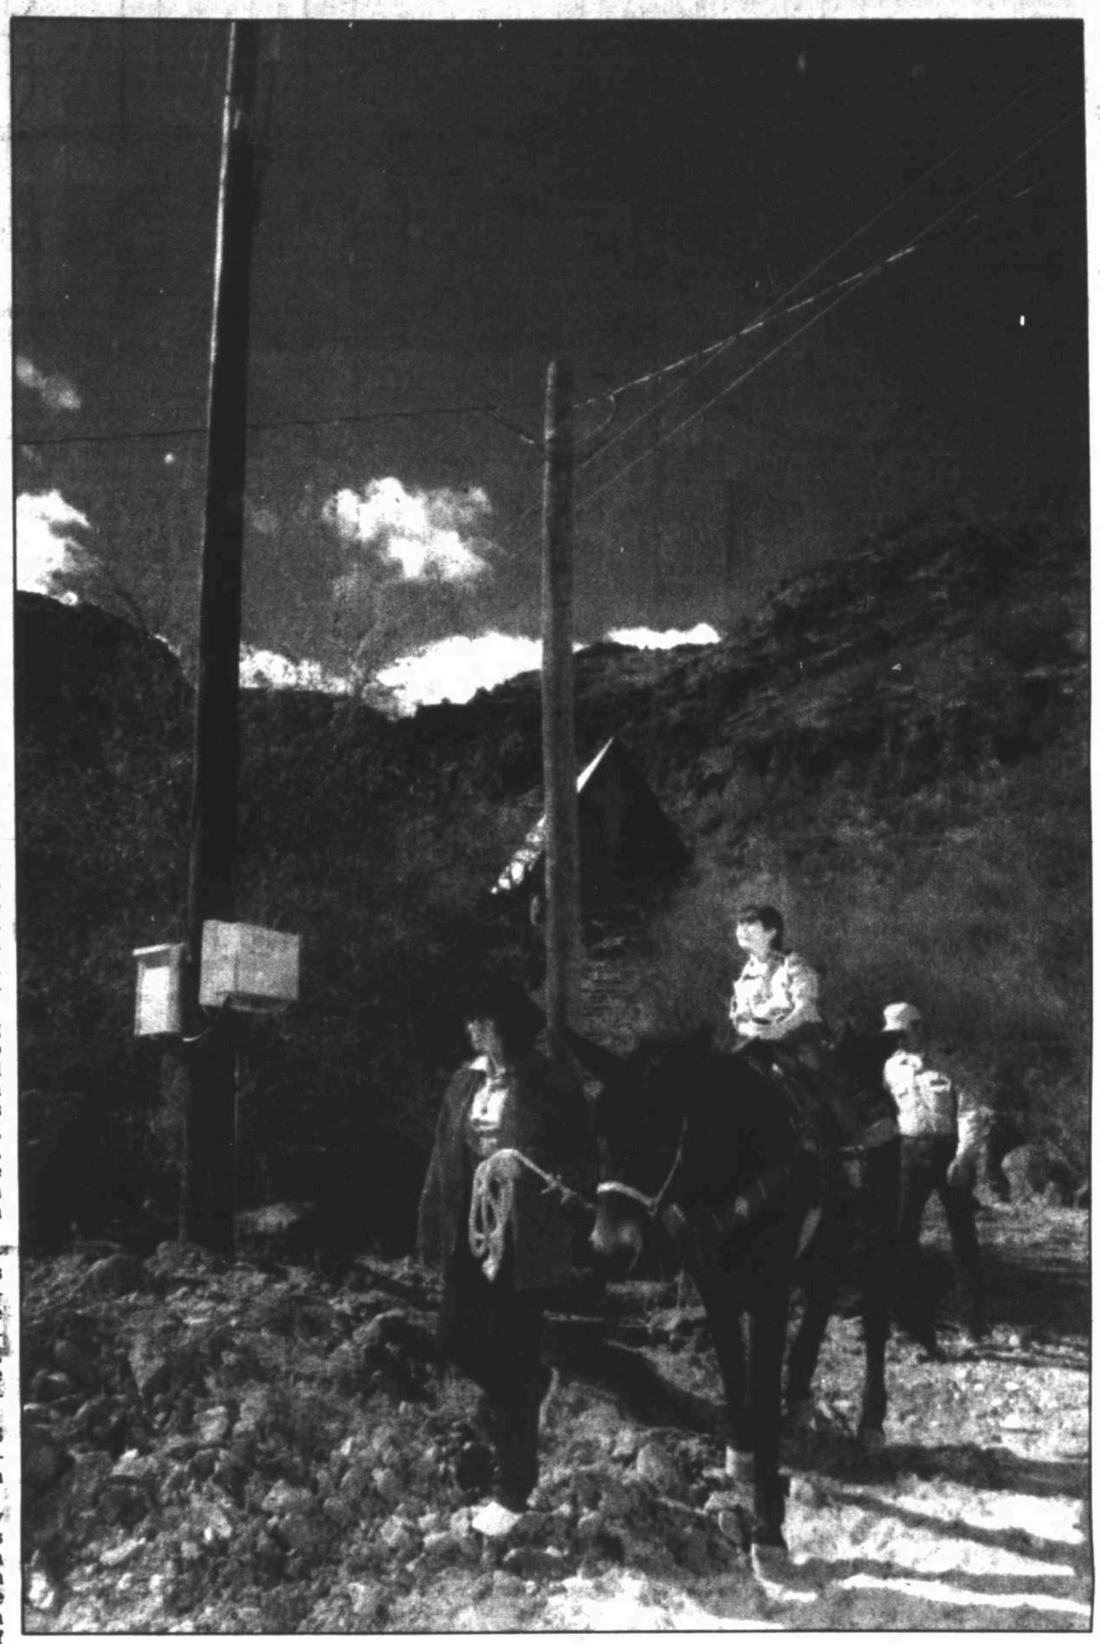

The BETRS system works by using Ultraphone radio equipment to transmit a digital telephone signal from a central switching office to a receiving antenna, which resembles a small TV antenna. The antenna, located at the customer's residence, feeds the signal into a small device which then converts the signal from digital to analog for reception on normal telephone equipment.

"By transmitting the signals digitally, we are able to send as many as four calls simultaneously over a single radio frequency," said Darlene Gifford, area public relations manager for Southwestern Bell Telephone, which provides network exchange service to more than 6.2 million customers in Texas.

The frequencies for the BETRS service were approved by the Federal Communications Commission in Feburary of 1988.

The telephone company currently has nine customers, all 18 to 37 miles from the nearest switching office in the community of Fort Davis, on an experimental project to determine the effectiveness of the system in the rugged Davis Mountains. One of the customers is the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch located deep in the mountains.

Pussy-Foot Inn caters to cats only

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Midlander Rhoda Humble cuddles one of her guests at the Pussy-Foot Inn. With cats outnumbering dogs as house pets, Midland cat lovers think her cats-only kennel is the cat's meow.

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

For the first time cats outnumber dogs as America's favorite pets. But when pet owners leave on vacation, dogs are still much more likely to have a special place to stay.

Midlander Rhoda Humble is looking to change that. She has opened the Pussy-Foot Inn, a felines only boarding facility southwest of Midland. Mrs. Humble originally envisioned her business as a supplement for retirement income, but as work has grown scarce for her truck-driving husband, the business has become more important for their current financial security.

The Pussy-Foot Inn offers a homelike atmosphere with its twelve cages set up in a converted mobile home next door to the Humble's residence. Being next door provides peace of mind for both Mrs. Humble and her clients. "If the cats were away from the house, I would worry about them, and if something happened, no one would know until morning"

With the current set up, Mrs Humble often checks on her guests several times during the evening.

"Veterinarians are good about boarding cats and dogs, but they just don't have the time to spend with the animals like I do," Mrs. Humble said. The homey surroundings of the Inn include 24-hour radio, indoor and outdoor lights and heating and air conditioning, depending on the season.

Holidays are a prime time for boarding cats. Mrs. Humble was near her capacity of twelve over the recent Thanksgiving weekend, and already has five reservations for the Christmas holidays.

"Repeat customers and word of mouth are crucial to my business," said Mrs. Humble, who is working with the Small Business Development Center at Midland College in hopes of strengthening her marketing program.

She keeps a file on each former guest including records of their shots and individual personality quirks.

"I hate to see cats categorized — they are just like kids. They each have their own disposition."

Does 'Little' George want to be governor?

Pitts

The political rumor making the rounds is that George Bush Jr. has moved from Midland into Rep. Steve Bartlett's third congressional district in Dallas to build a political base in a bigger pond. The reason goes one rumor: He wants to run against Kent Hance for Governor of Texas when Governor Bill Clements leaves office in 1994 (or before.)

The word is that "Little" George expects to capitalize off his daddy's political base in Houston and a strong Bush base in Midland, where both have lived. Hance narrowly defeated the younger Bush in 1978 when both ran to fill the seat vacated by George Mahon.

The wise say a repeat of the Hance-Bush conflict could be political suicide for George Bush Jr. (I know it's not Jr. but that's the tag that has stuck.)

Even if "Big" George succeeds in turning the Texas oil industry and the world around in his first two (or six) years as president and gains Reagan-like popularity, a name like George Bush Jr. may not even be enough to beat Hance, unless the commissioner does something stupid or immoral in the next few years. On the other hand, George Jr. just may make his own mark in Congress and be more politician than Hance can handle in six years. A lot can happen in that time.

Congress? The other rumor, that seems more plausible, according to local sources, is that Rep. Bartlett may step aside to run for state office and George Jr. will run for his seat in the Third District. But even that might be construed as grooming for the governorship in 1994. Whatever the case, the rumors of political fence-building surrounding the president-elect's Texas son are strong, and Texans should not be surprised to see another Bush running for or holding office in the near future.

***

WHAT WOULD HAVE HAPPENED if the Democrats had put Lloyd Bentsen at the top of the ticket instead of second place? Things might have been different — at least in Texas.

Following the election, the National Association of Royalty Owners conducted an informal survey of their members. Nearly all the members admitted that Bush-Quayle was their ticket of choice, but added they might have "hunkered" on their decision if Bentsen had been the democratic candidate for president.

THE "LADY LIBBERS" ARE ALWAYS ON THE PROWL looking for new causes to push women's rights. Unfortunately I think they might have overlooked a very vital cause — a cause that is sometimes perhaps as vital to women as equal pay for equal work.

It's the discrimination in public toilet facilities. Here there seems to be need for some definite affirmative action.

Did you ever notice, at halftime, the line at the women's restroom is always twice as long as the men's. It's not because more women have to go to the restroom at halftime. The fact is they just don't have enough stalls.

Normally around the country there is a standard 50-50 ratio between men's and women's toilet facilities in public rest rooms. But a recent study by the Washinton State Department of Transportation con-

RIGS

"That's less than the sales tax on those rigs when they were bought brand new," he pointed out. "The upside is there, and what's the chance of a five-cent-on-the-dollar rig falling further?"

The original cost of the rigs was about $32.6 million, and he paid $2.1 million.

Unlike many who speculate in rigs, Mullen doesn't like to hold on to his inventory for very long. "The quickest turnaround has been seven days, and the longest I've held a rig was 10 months," he said.

Ed Glasscock, a Houston-based drilling contractor who says he's been watching Mullen for the past few years, says the key to Mullen's success is his ability to buy rigs at the lowest prices and turn them quickly — instead of waiting for a day that may never come "trying to quadruple his investment."

"He's selling because he is pricing the equipment at a level others aren't willing to do," Glasscock said. "Others are doing what Mike is, and some are buying at the same price, but they won't sell. You can't buy a rig at $350,000 and expect to sell it at $1 million. He's smart enough to figure that out."

Mullen, with his large pool of money from his investors, can buy in volume, which allows him, in turn, to sell for less, he said.

Over the years, Mullen has purchased drilling rigs from FirstRepublic, First City, Manufacturers Hanover, Wells Fargo, Westinghouse Credit and Chrysler Capital.

"I had a network in place when I started doing this, and I waited for the optimum time to start," Mullen said. That time was when banks were being forced to decide how much longer they wanted to hold on to deteriorating assets.

When the banking industry's inventory started drying up, he shifted to company sales. More recently, he has become a buyer at auctions.

Mullen sells to a wide range of buyers, including several foreign countries. He has sold rigs to companies in West Germany, South America, India, China, Argentina and Indonesia. Four clerical workers and three field personnel assist him in moving and maintaining his ever-changing inventory, which currently consists of about 25 rigs with a total original value of $200 million.

"When I told people I was going to do this in 1985, they thought I was crazy," Mullen said. He started slowly, initially buying components such as generators off of rigs and selling them to hospitals and office buildings. Later, he worked his way up to selling complete rigs.

One of his favorite rig sales was a 2,000-horsepower diesel electric rig with an original cost of $8.3 million that sits on Southfork ranch and can be seen on "Dallas" as J.R. Ewing's personal oil rig.

Most of his customers are drilling contractors, other equipment brokers and manufacturers that need components.

"Although the industry has weathered a hellacious depression, contract drilling is ongoing both internationally and domestically, so the need for late-model equipment is still there," Mullen said. "I look at this like any other commodity."

"And I'm getting rigs out of the hands of non-industry entities and putting it back with people who are in the industry," he said. "Those that have to sell under distress don't like these prices, but before the equipment industry shows signs of recovery, total inventory has to be at a minimum."

Some may view him as a spoiler, but Glasscock and others said he's moving equipment in and out of a very stagnant market.

Roy Oliver, an Oklahoma City-based competitor, said eventually the supply and demand of drilling rig equipment in the United States "will reach equilibrium, but it's not there yet."

"We're clearing out a lot of inventory, and we're doing it faster," Oliver said of brokers such as Mullen and himself. "The buyers don't know where the equipment is, and the sellers don't have the patience to find the buyers."

PITTS

cludes that ratio is unfair. The study says a 60-40 ratio of stalls (60 for women) would be more equitable.

ARE VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS WORTH THEIR SALT? According to Texas A&M they may be worth a lot more than that. In conducting research on the value of vocational educational programs, Dr. Melvin Greenhut concluded that extra tax dollars put into high school vocational programs may be repaid in as little as four years by graduates of the programs who earn substantially higher wages and do not put a burden on taxpayers.

Greenhut says the programs result in higher wages, lower unemployment, reduced welfare costs and increased sales tax receipts. On average, students who complete vocational programs earn $1,724 more than those in similiar occupations who did not participate in vocational programs. They pay about $46 a year more in sales tax.

REACH OUT AND TOUCH SOMEONE. The next time you do, be prepared to try and try again says a new survey published by Adia Personel Services. In a random survey of 887 personnel executives, it was found that only 17 percent of business callers reach their intended party on the first attempt. On the second try 26 percent found their party and 47 percent on the third try. Still, executives say they prefer the telephone to fax, overnight mail, U.S. mail or any other form of communication that requires writing a message down and dispatching it. Almost 80 percent said they use the telephone exclusively for messages, because of the need for immediate responses.

Owners also must sign a release in the event that their pet needs to be taken to a veterinarian during their stay. The Inn provides only boarding and light grooming services, all veterinarian services are provided by professionals.

The $4 per day charge includes "top of the line" cat food, bottled water and litter. Each guest gets their daily exercise, one at a time, while Mrs. Humble cleans each guest accommodation. Each guest room is a carpeted 2-foot by 4-foot cage with individual feed, drinking and restroom facilities. Each cage is washed and disinfected thoroughly between guest visits.

For owners of more than one cat, adjoining cages can be linked so that housemates may share a double-size room.

"They can't get out of the building, I've had some of the best try"

Mrs. Humble, a cat-lover with three of her own, says that this business is one easy way to get the affection of more cats without having them fulltime. "Kind of like grandkids," she beams.

"Some of my clients have been here enough that it is like a second home to them."

The Pussy-Foot Inn has hosted both registered "show" cats as well as family pets.

By next year, Mrs. Humble hopes to expand her business into pick up and delivery of guests to the Inn, which is located six miles south of Air Terminal on County Road 1270.

"This is supposed to be a direct sight signal," said Gifford, "but we are finding that the signal bounces through canyons so well that mountains pose little problem."

Ranchers like Gary Puckett and Bob McKnight, owner of the McKnight Ranch in the Davis Mountains, welcomes the new system: "We need dependable telephone service, especially during roundup when there are a lot of cowboys living and working at the ranch," said McKnight.

Dependable telephone service is even more critical at the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch where hundreds of youngsters camp and hike each summer, and in the winter hunters utilize the facility.

"We are not exactly sure where and how this new system will be utilized," said Gifford.

Mexico offers production cut

MEXICO CITY (AP) - The Energy Department has offered to negotiate a reduction in Mexico's oil export platform in a bid to put some teeth into the OPEC cartel agreement to restrict production.

An Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries team shortly will visit Mexico and other independent producers to discuss mutual reductions in export quotas, according to a published report Thursday.

Energy Secretary Fernando Hiriart this week repeated an offer, previously spurned by the 13-member cartel, to reduce Mexico's 1.35 million-barrel daily export platform provided OPEC members enact similar reductions.

Reductions also would be sought from other independent producers, Hiriart said.

He said department officials planned informal talks with OPEC and independent producers on possible quota reductions.

The Energy Department announced that an OPEC committee plans to visit Mexico and other independent producers to negotiate reductions to buttress Monday's OPEC pact, the Mexico City newspaper La Jornada reported Thursday.

Department officials could not be reached for comment Thursday, a national holiday called to mark the inauguration of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

The OPEC agreement calls for a cartel export ceiling of 18.5 million barrels daily, roughly 4 million barrels below current production.

A statement issued this week by former President Miguel de la Madrid applauded the agreement and urged immediate consultations between cartel and independent producers. But it warned much remained to be done to shore up the weak global market.

"Mexico urges all producers — whether or not they are members of OPEC — to act with caution in the next few months," the statement said.

Mexico, the world's sixth-largest oil producer, has closely followed the cartel's pricing and production guidelines.

Only two weeks ago, Hiriart announced Mexico was abandoning that policy, saying overproduction by OPEC members had rendered its market quotas useless.

Mexico severely criticized OPEC overproduction this year for engaging in a price war it said threatened Mexico's share of the U.S. market and dragged down average prices of Mexican export crude to under $10.

Mexico loses an estimated $500 million in foreign earnings for each $1 drop in crude prices. Energy Department officials acknowledge the country has lost $2 billion in anticipated revenues this year.

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts recorded sharp drops this week, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

After gaining 26 rigs the prior week, the U.S. count dropped 12 to stand at 911, the Houston-based firm reported.

At the same time, the Basin tally fell 14 to stand at 96.

Lea County N.M. continued to be the most active in the Basin, with 13 rigs at work. Next were Andrews and Upton counties with eight each.

Irion, Schleicher, Hale and Yoakum counties saw renewed activity this week while Roosevelt County N.M. lost its only active rig.

Among major oil producing states, Kansas and Pennsylvania posted the biggest gains in the most recent count with two additional rigs, followed by New Mexico and Wyoming, both up by one.

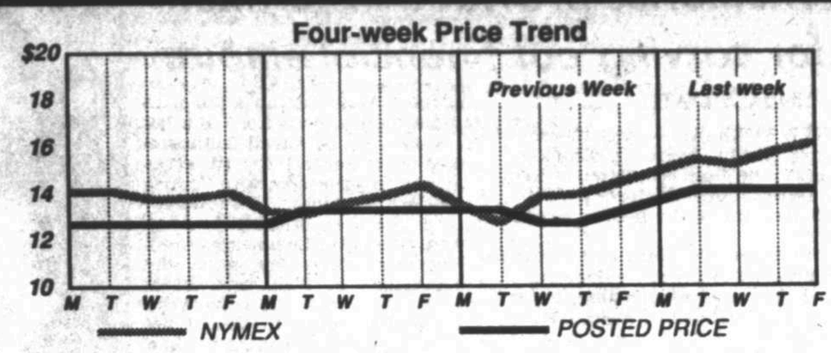

Oklahoma had the greatest decline with six fewer rigs, followed by Texas with four and Michigan with three. Colorado, North Dakota and Ohio each reported one fewer rig this week while California and Louisiana were unchanged.

Entrepreneur hasn't forgotten beginnings

Memories provided inspiration for carving out financial empire

By LINDA STOWELL

NEW YORK (AP) — A picture of a simple yellow house in Brooklyn hangs in the plush Manhattan offices of entrepreneur Sanford I. Weill, who grew up on the home's second floor.

The 55-year-old Weill also recalls his struggles to pay the milkman and the diaper service as a young career man who married straight out of college.

Such memories provide the inspiration that propels this Wall Street dealmaker, who having built and sold one financial empire is trying to work another miracle.

Weill says the pending merger of his Commercial Credit Inc. with Primerica Corp., headed by his old friend Gerald Tsai Jr., is as much of a challenge as starting out more than 30 years ago.

"When I started I was really scraping and when we decided to get into business, we (he and his wife Joan) put all of our money into it except $1,000," said Weill. "I think doing something like this merger gives us the opportunity to do that again."

That first business was Carter, Berlind, Potoma & Weill, which grew steadily through mergers and became what is today the giant Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

It was only the first big success for Weill, whose initial job out of Cornell University was as a messenger in a brokerage firm. He moved on to become a "quote boy" and later a stockbroker before going into business himself.

He sold Shearson to American Express for nearly $1 billion in stock in 1981. Shortly after that, Weill joined American Express and became president. There he played a major role in the company's attempt to turn around its troubled Fireman's Fund, a large property and liability insurer. He left American Express in 1985.

He participated in — but dropped out of — bidding for E.F. Hutton Inc., which was eventually purchased by his former firm, Shearson Lehman.

In 1986, Weill lost an attempt to acquire BankAmerica Corp. But later in the year, he joined Baltimore-based Commercial Credit after reaching an agreement with Control Data Corp. to spin off its subsidiary in a public stock offering.

Analysts say the Commercial Credit-Primerica transaction marks the re-emergence of Weill as a major force in financial services. Some say Weill is determined to build Commercial Credit into a giant rivaling American Express, with interests in a wide range of consumer credit and retail brokerage services.

Weill says he entered the market now for the fun and challenge of the turbulent times in the financial industry, which is still trying to right itself after the shock of last year's stock market crash.

"I think I'm going to have a lot of fun," Weill said. "I like to keep busy and work with bright people," he said, adding that "the best time to do something, not necessarily for the immediate results, is when there's some sort of turmoil in the marketplace."

Weill also scoffs at reports that he left American Express because he was not selected chief executive officer.

"The person was younger than I am and had different talents and different abilities," Weill said. We just had a different philosophy about management style and we agreed to disagree."

He says he doesn't look at the incident as a failure.

"I thought it was great to be president of American Express. . .. I grew up in Brooklyn in this house," he said pointing to the photograph of his modest boyhood home.

"It's absolutely true that I was disappointed or I wouldn't have left American Express. But it doesn't say any place that life has to be a bowl of cherries," he said.

Those who know Weill are watching his latest moves with interest.

Sanford Weill

"Sandy Weill has had an extremely successful career and he seems to be capping it off with a very interesting and exciting transaction," said Jeffrey Lane, president of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

"Normally one judges the ability to succeed based on past performance and given Sandy's past, one should assume the odds are in his favor," Lane said. "The task is certainly daunting ... (and) his record is outstanding."

Anthony Pearce-Batten, securities analyst with Legg Mason Wood Walker, Inc. in Baltimore, describes Weill as fairly conservative "who doesn't over pay for anything," a detail man and one who keeps an eye on the big picture in the industry.

Looking at Weill's decision to leave American Express and his failure to buy BankAmerica and E.F. Hutton, Pearce-Batten said: "They speak well of the man. He is not driven to buy something at any price. And, clearly he is not someone who spends a lot of time in the headlines.

"I get the sense that price comes before pride."

Commercial Credit agreed to acquire Primerica in a cash-and-stock deal valued at $1.65 billion. Along with Primerica, comes the struggling brokerage firm Smith, Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

The revival of Smith Barney, a mid-sized investment bank specializing in retail brokerage and municipal finance, is considered key to the future success of Commercial Credit. Frank Zarb, a prominent Wall Street figure who served as energy czar under President Gerald Ford, was recently named to head the brokerage.

Pearce-Batten says some on Wall Street are skeptical about Weill's chances for success, noting that Commercial Credit's stock has weakened sharply since the deal was announced.

"The simple way to put it — and I don't suggest this is the way I think — is that if Tsai couldn't run it, why should we believe Weill can," Pearce-Batten said. "I think there are a lot of reasons, but that's some of the conventional wisdom.

"And the management has an unusually strong incentive to get the stock price up because they have a stock option package. With the stock going down, their potential wealth is materially affected and while that's distressing, it's nice to know they're in the same boat."

Weill says the merger is probably his biggest challenge ever.

"I wouldn't say it scares me as much as when I was beginning," he mused. "If I made a mistake then, it would have been the end of the career."

Prominent New York hotel sold

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The resplendent Stanhope Hotel on Fifth Avenue, across from the Metropolitan Museum of Art, has been purchased by a Japanese real-estate and construction concern, officials said Wednesday.

The price for the hotel was not disclosed by the purchaser, Tobishima Associates, a New York-based subsidiary of the Tobishima Corp. of Tokyo, headed by Akira Tobishima.

Tobishima plans to continue operating the Stanhope as a hotel, said the president of Tobishima Associates, Roland Kluver.

"We believe the Stanhope is one of the prestige hotels of New York," Kluver said. "We look forward to a smooth transition from the previous ownership and expect its excellent, dedicated staff to remain with us."

Kluver did not identify the seller, but noted that several previous prospective investors in the hotel had planned to convert it to cooperative units.

The last owner of public record was Gerald Guterman, the son of a beverage wholesaler who over the last decade built a fortune on scores of condominium and cooperative conversions in the city.

Chocolate maker has recipe for success

By CHRIS BARNETT
and ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

BERKELEY, Calif. — Alice Medrich spends 10 hours a day in a world of dark, creamy, rich, pure and sinfully delicious chocolate, and she is fattening her net worth at the same time.

Alice is the West's reigning chocolatier, the CEO (chocophile executive officer) of a nine-store enterprise here called Cocolat that traffics in truffles among other tasty treasures. Indeed, while she doesn't boast about it, Medrich is credited with introducing the exquisite Parisian truffle to the American sweet tooth 15 years ago.

But it was an unplanned venture. Medrich, the reluctant entrepreneur, had no road map when she went into business but, fortunately, had a navigator who kept her on a steady course — her husband of 18 years, Elliott Medrich, a University of California at Berkeley professor who stays out of the kitchen and choreographs the cash flow.

Alice, meantime, has moved beyond truffles to chocolate torte birthday cakes, chocolate eclairs and 1-foot-tall chocolate Santa Clauses she plans to sell this Christmas for $32.50.

It's amazing that Cocolat exists at all because, as a youngster, Alice Medrich was not obsessed with anything nor was she particularly creative in the kitchen.

"She was strictly a cake-mix person," remembers Linda Ramsey, a good friend since the first grade.

RAMSEY SAYS Medrich was both creative and practical and destined to achieve.

"Her father is an inventor, self-starter, entrepreneurial type, and she's a lot like him. Could fix anything with a hairpin. But I thought she'd be a musician. Her father built a piano into the wall, like a piece of furniture."

Her parents, Herman and Beatrice Abrams of Manhattan Beach, Calif., don't remember their daughter as a budding Julia Child.

"She and Linda made Baked Alaska for us at least once," says her mom. "We didn't even know what it was. She once made meat and noodles and put a whole giant glove of garlic in it. She knows the first thing about cooking, though. She washes her hands."

Alice Medrich freely admits she was never driven as a youngster.

"I'm not a 'thinker-aheader,' a planner. I was expected to go to college. Still, I had no interest in business."

It was at Berkeley that she met Elliott Medrich, "consummate planner." He had a B.A. and M.A. in sociology from the University of Chicago and came to Cal to take a Ph.D. in regional planning and to teach.

They were total opposites; he was the Woody Allenseque grad student, impatient, intense, the striver who couldn't stand to waste a minute; she was the Calfornia girl who lived for today. They married anyway.

WHEN ELLIOTT finished his dissertation, the Medrichs packed up and went to Paris for a year. He worked; she explored.

"I was a resident tourist for a whole year," says Alice. "I took cooking classes, French classes two hours a day, learned to shop (for food) like a Parisian. We were students of the butcher, the baker, of all the little markets."

But it was their landlady who would change their life with a Christmas gift of chocolate truffles and, as a going-away present, her prized recipe.

Coming home to Berkeley in 1973 with her landlady's truffle recipe in hand, she rounded up the ingredients, fired up her oven and started baking.

"I don't know what got into me but I marched right over to the French deli called The Pig by the Tail and announced, 'I made these truffles. Do you want to buy them?' The owner, Victoria Wise, who was also a free-lance food writer, looked at them and said, 'We have to taste them. Go away and come back later."

The next day Alice got her first order, 25 dozen and another 25 dozen the next day and the same for the third day.

Medrich hit the books during the day and her stove at night. She saw her midnight baking business as nothing more than an MBA thesis and a nice way to make money at home.

HER FRIENDS told her she should get serious; forget the sheepskin and go for the dough. It sounded better and better the closer she got to her deadline.

"It was pure thesis avoidance."

Instead of meeting with her adviser, she met with a real estate broker and found a storefront near the university. Thirty other would-be shopkeepers were clamoring for the lease, but miraculously, Alice won out.

It was the summer of '76 and Alice found herself scrounging for equipment, building tables, painting walls, creating recipes, designing menus, jawing with contractors.

Meanwhile, she tried chatting up bankers for a loan.

"I didn't have the slightest idea how to talk to bankers. Branch managers of the major banks were condescending to me. They thought I was a little girl playing business. And I can't blame them. I didn't have a business plan. I just had a few notes."

The Small Business Administration was no help, either. In the end, she borrowed $9,000 from family sources.

Cocolat made its debut Saturday, Dec. 4, 1976. Alice had worked night and day for three days getting ready for the curtain-raiser. For a brief moment she clutched; nobody was beating her door down on opening day. Three hours later, though, the shelves were bare and $300 was in the cash register. She had to bake 'round the clock for the next two days to restock the store for Tuesday's re-opening.

SAYS ELLIOTT: "When you start a business like that, you suddenly discover all of these things you can do because they have to be done and there's no one else to do them. It's a terrific feeling."

Cocolat burst on the scene at a time when European desserts and sweets hadn't established a beachhead and gourmet take-out foods were unheard of. Alice figured one store with a near non-stop workday was enough, but Elliot, ever the planner, saw a real business blooming.

Store No. 2 opened 18 months later in nearby Oakland and by now the press had discovered truffles. Cocolat "starred" in 150 news articles in eight months.

With three stores open, bankrolled by their own cash flow, Elliot needed money to open a centralized baking plant.

"We never had a bank loan before."

Worry not, said the first banker, eyeing Cocolat's track record, "How much money do you want?"

Elliot tossed out a number — $225,000 for expansion capital — and the banker didn't blink. "We didn't fill out an application yet, they gave us the loan, we guess, based on the product they tasted. It blew us away."

But the banker's generosity almost buried them.

"We built this production facility," recalls Elliot, "but we didn't have a plan to sell the extra goods we'd produce here."

WORSE YET, besides the new $6,000 monthly repayment to the bank, delays in moving into the new plant chewed up working capital.

Alice and Elliott found a gun to their heads. To generate fresh cash to service the bank debt and to handle the new waves of truffles and desserts cascading out of the new 10,000-square-foot kitchen, they were forced to open three new stores. And they had to be in pricey neighborhoods where sophisticates shop, and that meant high rent.

The expansion was a costly gamble but it paid off, says Elliott, and the pressure is off, somewhat. Since then, Cocolat has ventured into mail-order sales through smart shops in Manhattan and elsewhere and its chocolates can be found on the pillows in Hyatt Regency hotels and in the sweets shops of Macy's in San Francisco and New York.

SEC proposes new rules on insider filings

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Securities and Exchange Commission on Tuesday proposed rules that would force corporate insiders to file prompt reports of their transactions in securities of their company.

The SEC action represents the first comprehensive review of corporate insider reports since Congress mandated those filings more than 50 years ago. The commission will consider whether to adopt the rule after a 90-day comment period.

Under SEC rules, company officials must report any trades in their company's stock by the 10th of the month after the trade. For example, an insider trade made Feb. 15 must be reported by March 10. But the SEC staff is clearly exasperated at the large number of company officials who file tardy reports, if they file at all.

Gary Lynch, the director of the SEC's enforcement division, said that 43 percent of the reports were filed late in 1988, down from a high of over 50 percent in 1987 and 48 percent in 1986.

SEC officials admitted that they had no accurate data at the number of reports that are never filed.

Under the SEC rule proposals, only top executives will have to make the reports. These officials will have to file an annual report of their holdings, even if no transaction take place.

Delinquent filers will have to notify the company's shareholders in the company's annual report and proxy statement of their failure to file the reports.

Securities industry urges capital-gains tax cut

New York Times News Service

BOCA RATON, Fla. — The president of the trade association for the nation's securities industry urged support for a reduction in the capital-gains tax.

Edward O'Brien, the president of the Securities Industry Association, said in a special newsletter issued at the association's conference here this week that a cut in the tax would benefit the nation's economy and the 47 million shareholders in the country.

"A capital-gains reduction would assist in job creation, stimulate overall investment and savings and assist start-up and small companies which are responsible for an important share of job creation," O'Brien said.

Capital-gains taxes are paid on the profits made when an asset is sold. Such profits on long-term holdings were once taxed at a lesser rate than income from other sources, but the tax overhaul that Congress approved in 1986 ended the preferential treatment for capital gains.

President-elect George Bush, during the presidential campaign and since his election, has called for a cut in the capital-gains tax.

Arthur Andersen reorganizing

By JULIA FLYNN SILER
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — In an attempt to remedy a growing discontent among its consulting partners, Arthur Andersen & Co. has proposed to revise its compensation system and to restructure its business into two separate operating units.

Consulting is the fastest-growing and most profitable area of Andersen's business, and the consulting partners have chafed at their inability to make key operating decisions at the firm and to garner a greater share of its profits.

But it is unclear whether the proposal, the result of a two-month study, is far-reaching enough to restore momentum and morale in the world's largest accounting and consulting firm.

In the last several months, Andersen has been jolted by the departures of some of its most talented consulting partners, and others are believed to be considering leaving.

Other top accounting firms face the possibility of similar defections in their consulting ranks.

"All of the Big Eight accounting firms are watching to see if Andersen can make this work," said Arthur W. Bowman, editor of Bowman's Accounting Report, a monthly newsletter. "If it does, they may apply it to their own practices."

The most significant proposal, industry observers said, is to revise the system of compensation for Andersen's partners to reflect the performance of individual partners and business units. Under the plan, if Andersen's consulting unit outperforms the other practices, the unit's partners would be rewarded.

Andersen's consulting partners would also apparently receive higher pay. In fiscal 1988 the practice contributed 40 percent of Andersen's $2.8 billion in revenues, up from 33 percent two years earlier. (Andersen declined to comment on profits.)

Consulting has grown 30 percent annually, compared with 15 to 20 percent for the firm as a whole.

Another uncertainty is whether the proposed change could narrow the huge pay gap between a consulting partner for a firm like Andersen and a one at the more broadly based consulting firms, such as McKinsey & Co.

Moreover, such a move could anger Andersen's tax and audit partners if their compensation did not rise as quickly as that of the consulting partners.

Duane R. Kullberg, Andersen's chief executive, said that although such a backlash was a possibility, the firm would establish a floor for compensating its partners, and that compensation based on performance would apply to all partners, not just those in the consulting practice. Kullberg declined to comment specifically on how much of an increase partners could receive.

The second proposal involves splitting the firm into two separate but equal operating units: an audit and tax practice, and a consulting business. The effect, Kullberg said, would be to put the consulting unit on an equal footing with the tax and audit side of the business.

"We've created two strategic business units that are equal in the eyes of the partners," said Stanley L. Cornelison, the managing partner for Andersen's worldwide consulting practice. "It's a big change."

The two practices would be run as separate units. Their day-to-day operations and the staffing functions would be run by as-yet-unnamed managing partners, reporting directly to Kullberg.

By contrast, the firm is now organized into three business units: tax, audit and consulting. While managing partners are responsible for day-to-day operations, the staffs report directly to Kullberg.

Consulting partners would be expected to have a greater say in the firm's operation.

"Two clear lines gives a more direct voice to the business units," Kullberg said.

In addition, consulting partners are expected to gain additional seats on the committees that govern the partnership. Now, for example, consulting partners occupy fewer than half of the seats on the executive committee.

"This is a plan aimed at keeping the big producers happy with their pay and their power at the firm," said Roman L. Weil, an accounting professor at the University of Chicago.

Kullberg

"The consulting people have been providing more profits to the operation than the audit and tax people, and some have threatened to resign because they felt they weren't being paid or given the authority commensurate to their contribution."

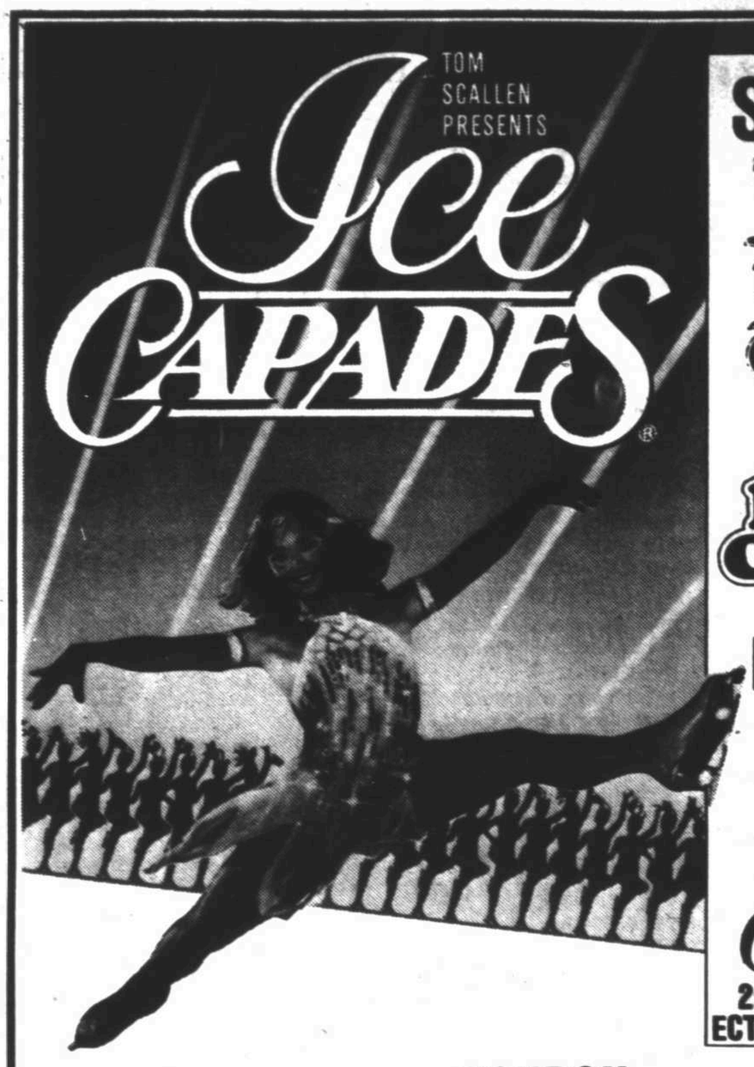

Other observers were even more blunt in their assessment.

"It's a last-ditch attempt to keep the consultant practice from leaving," said David A. Lord, managing editor of Consultants News, based in Fitzwilliam, N.H. "Arthur Andersen obviously feels under extreme pressure from the consulting group, and they're trying hard to respond."

Yet the firm may not have gone far enough. Some consulting partners have wanted to enter into joint ventures with audit clients and to bill clients on a contingency basis. They have been prevented from doing so by the accounting profession's own regulations, under which such ventures are considered a conflict of interest.

Some have also expressed interest in raising capital through means other than the partnership structure to finance computer purchases and the writing of software.

Mall management elevated to science

By JOE McDONALD

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (AP) — Spending time at the mall has been raised to an art form by some high school students, but at Youngstown State University it's a management science.

The school has just produced its first two graduates in shopping center management, and the trainees are finding a bull market for their specialized skills.

"It was kind of my destiny that I showed up and they had the major," said Tracey Farley, a former administrative assistant to a Virginia shopping mall manager and one of the first to earn a mall degree.

"Ever since I started at the mall in Virginia Beach, I knew shopping malls were never going to die," said Ms. Farley, 24, who worked 2½ years for mall developer Melvin Simon & Associates.

The study of malls — and how to run them — leads to a bachelor of science degree in business administration at Youngstown.

Before the university started the program, shopping center management was mostly taught in seminars offered to established shopping mall developers by the International Council of Shopping Centers, said Don Pendley, spokesman for the group.

"This is a major move by a school. There aren't many institutions that talk about shopping malls at all," said Pendley.

The industry has had three years of record growth with 21 regional malls, each the size of 10 football fields, built last year, Pendley said. He said that overall, construction began on 1,846 new shopping centers last year.

AP Laserphoto

Debra Matune, one of the first graduates of Youngstown State University's mall management program, is now assistant manager of the Eastwood Mall in Niles, Ohio.

Pendley said the council is helping develop training programs for graduate students at Harvard University and the University of Pennsylvania.

"They're looking for somebody to professionalize the development and management of centers, in this case," he said.

Youngstown State's involvement in training shopping mall managers began in 1985 when developers offered to help train managers for the growing field, said E. Terry Diederick, a business professor who directs the shopping center major.

"They've been very supportive and they've been a major source of expertise. They've served as lecturers and have been very helpful in placing our students," he said.

Among those offering to help train the students were the locally based Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. and the Cafaro Corp. — two of the country's largest shopping center developers.

The major, which has attracted 25 students this year, requires business school students to take courses in the history and planning of retail sales, shopping center operations and problems surrounding development, Diederick said.

He said students are also required to work at internships with developers.

"We draw on property management concepts that aren't really talked about in other courses," said Diederick in describing what sets the course apart from other business programs.

"A mall is much like a city, and they (the students) have to have a lot of those skills," said the professor.

Among the topics students explore are police science, engineering and traffic control, Diederick said.

"The shopping center industry has grown dramatically and it has gotten to the point that education has to be specific to that industry," said John Richley, director of operations for Cafaro.

About 55 percent of all retail dollars spent in the United States last year went to stores in shopping malls, Pendley said. With that figure growing at half a percent a year, he said, the council projects sharply increased demand from shopping center owners for trained managers.

Ms. Farley, for instance, said she is weighing job offers from Melvin Simon, DeBartolo and Cafaro, as well as several other shopping center developers. And she said that until other business schools start to copy Youngstown State's program, she doesn't expect much competition for the jobs she wants.

"Right now during this period there is no way you can get a view of what the industry is about in any other classroom setting," she said.

San Antonio thrift seeks insolvency remedy

By DAVID SEDENO

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — San Antonio Savings Association, founded by a former mayor 77 years ago, suffered multimillion-dollar losses in its 1988 third quarter, forcing the thrift into technical insolvency, officials said.

But SASA officials were quick to point out that customers' accounts were insured by the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. and that they hoped to have a remedy soon for the thrift. The institution is touted as the city's largest thrift with $2.9 billion in assets.

W.W. "Bo" McAllister III, SASA's chairman of the board and chief executive officer, said in a statement that the thrift lost $51 million in the third quarter and that its deficit in the Generally Accepted Accounting Principles capital was about $12 million.

The thift, which conducted its own audit and was being examined by the Federal Home Loan Bank, also will have to write off at least another $100 million in bad loans made in the real estate industry, McAllister said.

The losses would reduce SASA's regulatory capital to $57 million, well below its minimum regulatory requirement of $101 million.

The SASA announcement comes on the heels of federal banking officials predictions that the country's S&L crisis cleanup eventually may cost up to $100 billion. More than 140 thrifts have failed or have been forced to merge this year.

But McAllister remained optimistic that his institution would bounce back.

"We have been actively pursuing various avenues of attracting investment capital. There is considerable enthusiasm on Wall Street to recapitalize Texas financial institutions under the auspices of the Southwest Plan," McAllister said.

"Many options are open to us and we will not lose sight of our obligations to our customers," said said McAllister, serves on the board of the Federal Asset Disposition Association, which sells the troubled assets of failed thrifts taken over by the FSLIC.

SASA, founded in 1921 by former San Antonio Mayor W.W. McAllister, has 53 offices in San Antonio and South Texas and employs about 1,100 people.

James J. Horan, SASA's chief financial officer, said in an interview that the thrift's options are numerous.

"In the coming weeks and months we are going to have to find investors who are willing to recapitalize us and bring our net worth back to what is required by federal law," Horan said.

"That situation may involve a merger or it may involve investors just looking at SASA alone," he said.

He said, however, that customers should not be worried.

"As far as the customer is concerned, this means absolutely nothing," he said. "All deposits are federally insured. It's totally transparent to the customer."

ITT subsidiary sues Federated, Campeau Corp.

By ANISE C. WALLACE
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — For the second time in less than a month, the ITT Corp. has filed suit to recover damages related to its bondholdings in companies involved in takeovers.

An ITT subsidiary filed suit Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Manhattan against Federated Department Stores and the Campeau Corp.

The suit accuses Federated of securities fraud involving a $200 million bond issue in October 1987. Federated was acquired by Campeau in April for $6.6 billion after a takeover battle that began in January 1988.

The suit contends that Federated officials knew the company was a potential takeover target and failed to disclose that they could approve transactions that would cause the notes, which were being offered as investment-grade securities, to become "junk bonds."

The suit contends that Campeau intentionally interfered with the contract between Federated and its bondholders.

Campeau borrowed heavily to acquire Federated, causing the credit-rating agencies to downgrade the bonds issued by Federated.

The Hartford Fire Insurance Co., which is owned by ITT, sold Federated notes after the downgrading and suffered a loss of $4.3 million, the suit stated. The suit is asking for compensatory damages plus interest.

Settlement clears way for pipelines

HOUSTON (AP) — A settlement agreement for construction of natural gas pipelines to the Northeast will allow Coastal Corp. subsidiary ANR Pipeline Co. to build its own pipeline segment and join in two other pipeline projects, company officials said.

The chief adminstrative law judge of the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Wednesday recommended preliminary clearance of the Champlain Pipeline Co., the Iroquois Gas Transmission System and the ANR Pipeline projects.

In his final report to FERC commissioners, Judge Curtis L. Wagner Jr. certified a settlement endorsed by eight of the companies competing for FERC approval to build pipelines to the Northeast.

ANR Pipeline's role in the settlement includes a proposed $44 million, 90.5-mile pipeline from the company's mainline system near Muncie, Ind., to Lebanon, Ohio.

The segment will tie ANR with major pipelines linked to the Northeast and increase the company's maximum daily delivery to the region to 224 million cubic feet of domestic gas per day, Coastal offcials said The pipeline will be supplied by Gulf Coast, Southwest and Rocky Mountain producers.

Manufacturer starts work on Denton plant

DENISON, Texas (AP) — Officials of a lockset manufacturing firm broke ground Thursday on a multi-million-dollar plant, and said about 300 workers will be employed when the facility becomes fully operational.

Kwikset Corp. officials broke ground at 9 a.m. Thursday on a 25-acre tract in the East Industrial Park.

The new factory will manufacture components for all Kwikset product lines. Departments involved include metal forming and parts fabrication. Kwikset manufactures a line of residential locksets, deadbolt locks and other home security products.

Kwikset attorney Ed Cooney said that the $23.5-million facility is expected to be complete in April 1990.

The company is a subsidiary of Emhart Corp. In 1987, the Connecticut-based Emhart reported profits of $106.5 million on sales of $2.4 billion. Emhart is a multi-national producer, consumer, industrial products and electronic-information systems.

Whirlpool slates European venture

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — The Whirlpool Corp. said that its European joint venture with Philips NV of the Netherlands would begin operating Jan. 1 under the name Whirlpool International.

In August, Whirlpool agreed to buy a 53 percent equity stake in Philips's Major Domestic Appliances division for $350 million and an additional $120 million to be paid within three years. It said then that Willem G. Maeyer, the division's president, would head the venture, reporting to David R. Whitwam, Whirlpool's chairman and chief executive.

The division had about $2 billion in sales last year, compared with about $25 billion for Philips as a whole.

Whirlpool, based in Benton Harbor, Mich., had appliance sales of about $4 billion last year.

Whirlpool has said the investment will give it access to the European Economic Community before the end of 1992, when internal trade barriers are to be abolished.

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Merrill Lynch & Co. has announced the formation of a new merchant banking group, to be managed by Jeffrey L. Berenson and Raymond J. Minella, and said it had restructured its mergers and acquisitions operations.

Berenson led the firm's mergers and acquisitions unit, and Minella ran the high-yield and strategic finance department.

The mergers and acquisitions department will be headed by Alain Lebec and Jack Levy, and both merchant banking and mergers and acquisitions will operate within the investment banking division, headed by Barry S. Friedberg.

Merrill Lynch said the new merchant banking group would be responsible for leveraged transactions, including financing for management and leveraged buyouts. Brian M. Barefoot, director of the global broker dealer division, will join the group with responsibility for high-yield dealer activities.

Merrill Lynch Capital Partners, which reports to Friedberg and is under the leadership of James J. Burke Jr., will continue to have responsibility for buyouts in which Merrill Lynch and institutional clients are controlling investors.

How to find happiness in old age

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment writer

"If they'd argue back, they'd be fine," Abe says. "I was married to Louise for 48 years, she should rest in peace. That woman and I would have at least one argument a day. Sometimes just a snide remark; sometimes a little bone to pick; and on a good day we would fight tooth and nail. For 48 years we were happy and healthy, and then I went and screwed it up."

"What do you mean," Jerry asks.

"Louise got sick, and me like a fool, I made the mistake of being nice to her. For two weeks I was smiling and pleasant, and poof, she drops dead. I learned my lesson, Jerry. An argument a day keeps the doctor away, if you get my gist."

Webster's dictionary defines squabbles as "noisy altercations or quarrels usually over trifles." Midland Community Theatre defines "Squabbles" as Marshall Karp's two-act comedy, onstage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., through Dec. 17.

Jerry Sloan is a jingles writer married to a no-nonsense attorney named Alice. Living with the couple is her father, Abe. Squabbles begin when Mildred, Alice's mother, moves in after her apartment burns down, frying her pet "budgie bird."

For Odessan Bill Weir, who made his MCT debut in "Last Meeting of the Knights of the White Magnolia," this production marks his second opportunity to play Abe.

"I worked this show over in Odessa about six months ago, and it's just so well-written," says Weir, who was in Permian Playhouse's production. "It's one of those shows that you just can't hardly go wrong with. I really think the community will enjoy it."

An auctioneer, Weir traces his interest in theater back to seventh grade and acting in a production of "Cheaper by the Dozen" at Odessa's Crockett Junior High School in 1956. In the past 20 years, he has played in numerous productions at Permian Playhouse and the Globe Theatre.

"I always wanted to do theater," he says. "It's something that feels good to me; I enjoy doing it."

Although it's her a debut MCT performance, Nancy Hayes has played the part of Alice before. Her interest in thester coincides with moving to Fort Stockton five years ago.

"I didn't know anyone," says this former Midland resident who has recently moved back here. "I was new in town, and they were looking for someone for a part so I went and tried out."

Antics on ice

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment writer

Dave Pedley and Joey Percelly are serious about not being serious.

The sons of veteran ice skating comedians Biddy and Baddy, the two grew up learning how to turn violins, balloons, hobos, clowns, tuxedos and top hats into tools of their trade.

"One number we might be clowns, one number we might be hobos, one number Dave dressed up in drag, I was dressed us as the man, it was very funny. I was serenading him with the violin, and we tried to dance together," Percelly says during a recent telephone interview. He pauses, listening to Pedley in the background.

"He said he was a large breasted woman," Percelly says, repeating what he's heard. Then he adds, "They were balloons."

Both agree that humor is a stress reliever.

"People have so many problems in their lives, if you can contribute even five minutes of your time to make people laugh and forget about their problems, it's a worthwhile effort," Pedley says.

Their careers predate their first principal Ice Capades appearance in 1983.

"We started out before we got our act together," Percelly says. "We were our fathers' understudies. We could fill in in a moments notice. We were never taught, we learned by watching."

The two first began putting together their own routines six years ago and have since created five different numbers, several of which will be performed during the Ice Capades upcoming performances at Ector County Coliseum, set for Tuesday through Dec. 11. For more information call 1-366-3541.

In creating their routines, they drew on the knowledge their "comedy computer" fathers have.

"They've been in the business so long, they remember all kinds of gags," Percelly says.

The 23-year-old Percelly, who is the son of Sandy Perc, Ice Capades' performance director, and Gigi Percelly, was on skates when he was 2 years old and skated in his dad's routine when he was 4.

Now 27, Pedley, the son of Sherry Pedley, who began her career as a chorus girl in ice shows, and Steve Pedley, also made his professional debut at age 4.

Both graduated from high school by correspondence and spent five years of their childhoods in Europe.

They are often asked if they missed out on so called "normal life."

"We never really experienced much of the normal life so we don't feel as if we missed out on anything," Percelly says. "What is great about growing up in a big business like this, we tour with about 75 to 80 people, is it grows to be such a big family.

"You're around so many people all the time, they grow to be your brothers and sisters. You learn so much about life traveling. How many kids don't get to get on a plane or get out of their city? We've been around the world."

"We've had a great childhood and have no complaints," Pedley says. "We're very people wise."

Each has acquired skills other than skating so that they don't feel pressured, insecure and without a backup system in the event they can no longer skate.

"Last year, I worked on the backstage — David and I are just back together after two years," Percelly says. "I was an electrician.

"The crew gets there early to set up when we get to the city. It takes all day long to do that. They come in during the days and do a lot of maintenance. I have big respect for the crew guys now."

Billed as Dave and Joey, David Pedley, left, and Joey Percelly spend their time creating comedy routines for this year's Ice Capades, opening Tuesday at Ector County Coliseum.

During the off season, Percelly lives with his father in Knoxville, Tenn., and works as an electrician.

"When rock concerts come in, I help set them up, run spotlights," he says. "I'm quite the handyman; I like to get into building stuff. I like to create. Someday, when I get off the road, I'm going to build my own house and live happily ever after." He laughs and adds, "When I'm 80."

Pedley also has a talent for working with his hands.

"I've always been interested in hair," he says. "I've always been interested in acting."

The former seemed more secure than the latter, so he joined the Screen Actors Guild and enrolled in the Vidal Sassoon school in Los Angeles.

At first, the change was quite a shock.

"I was putting a roller set in a doll's head and I thought, 'What am I doing here? Excuse me, can I get my money back?' "

'The Best of Times'

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Celebrating its 49th season, Ice Capades takes a look at "The Best of Times" during its upcoming performances at Ector County Coliseum, 42nd and Andrews Highway.

This year's production includes such numbers as "Firebird!," a production based on the Russian folk tale and designed by Pete Menefee; "It's Not Where You Start...It's Where You finish," a backstage look into the world of ice shows from initial concept to final curtain call; "Luminescence," a novel Ice Capades experience which features the Optic Fans and the Flying Ballet; "The Beatles Remembered — A Rhapsody in Rock," skaters moving to the Beatles music; and the on-ice debut of Teddy Ruxpin and his magical friends.

Ice Capades skater expounds on idea of his being in love

Does this sound familiar?

Temple

"I am head over heels in love with this girl in the show, and it could be the one," says Ice Capades comedian David Pedley. "I've finally found that girl. She's one of the cover girls in the show — Sue Parry.

"It's amazing when you meet the right person, you just have that chemistry, it just clicks, you have the best feeling, it's like you've been together for years. There's no other feeling like it. Even if you're not in such a great city, it just doesn't matter. When you're in love, it doesn't matter if you're in Toledo or San Tropez."

Ah, yes, the symptoms are the same regardless of age, nationality or sex. Love is decidedly an equal opportunity employer. When you've got it, it's really got you.

These comments were made by Dave when I was interviewing him and his partner, Joey Percelly, for the story which runs today on the Entertainment section cover. I'm not certain who is enjoying Dave's love state more — Dave or Joey.

Joey had great fun teasing his partner. Their fathers worked together doing comedy ice routines and Dave and Joey might as well be brothers. They both started skating professionally with their parents when they were 4. When they were kids, they spent their free time kicking around together.

When Joey, who is four years younger than 27-year-old Dave, falls in love I suspect Dave will have as much fun as Joey is having now.

Ice Capades runs Tuesday through Dec. 11 at Ector County Coliseum. For more information call 1-366-3541.

Also happening in Odessa this week is Odessa College's production of "Oklahoma," onstage at the Globe Theatre at 2:30 p.m. today and at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday. Reservations for tickets may be made by calling 1-335-6618.

For this production, guest artist baritone David Corman of New York City is playing the role of Curly.

What brings a New Yorker to Odessa? An Odessa connection.

Paula Thompson, OC's theater department chairman who is directing the production, called former Odessan Kip Wilborn in New York to see if he knew an available baritone. Kip and David were apprentices this past summer in Santa Fe and are sharing an apartment in New York.

Originally from Minneapolis, Kan., David's educational background includes receiving bachelor degrees in voice and English literature from Friends University and a master of music degree in voice from Yale University.

David's life changed when he was 16 and auditioned for his high school's production of "Annie Get Your Gun."

"The chorus conductor showed me a couple of things — basically he got me to open my mouth and this voice came out. I had always dreamed of being, always wanted to be a baritone, and I ended up being exactly what I wanted to be."

Yet, when he graduated from Friends University, he wasn't sure of the direction he needed to take in his life. Instead of pursuing a career as a singer or in English literature — he'd been nominated as a Rhodes Scholar, he wound up in New York City working in Mother Teresa's inner city mission.

"I think my main problem had always been I had so many interests I didn't know what to follow, what to do, with my career. I found out there that I probably had something that the Creator gave me, he intended for me to use, and I couldn't hide it away. I had to develop it at least, and see where it took me from there."

The voice took him to Yale.

"On a whim I drove to Yale University on my day off. I sang for the faculty there. They decided they wanted me."

David has performed Marcello and Schaunard in "La Boheme" with the Yale Opera and in "Friedenstag" and "Feursnot" with Santa Fe Opera this past summer. His previous musical theater roles include Billy Bigelow in "Carousel," Arthur in "Camelot," Harry Beaton in "Brigadoon" and Paul in "Carnival."

He is developing a special affinity for Italian opera and singing solos in requiems and Masses with the combination of symphony and chorus.

He views the arts as a "service oriented profession.

"We are giving happiness to people or drawing from them different emotions of joy and sadness. Arts, at its highest, is a prophetic type of experience which calls people to be better, to change, to see some things differently that they haven't really looked at before, both in social consciousness and in our individual consciousness."

SQUABBLE

Since that time, Ms. Hayes has played in eight productions in Fort Stockton, including "Squabbles" last spring, and says of her decision to get involved in theater, "It's a good way to get to meet people."

Also making her MCT debut is Mary Canning, who plays the role of Mrs. Fisher, the domineering nurse maid.

"It's a funny part, and I'm very pleased to have a part at all," Ms. Canning says. "This gets my foot in the door and possibly I'll have a chance for another part at some future date."

For Ms. Canning, the role marks her stage debut as an adult.

"I've been interested in theater forever. I came to the point in my family life where the time availed itself, so I decided I was going to audition for this play."

Ms. Canning, whose youngest child started school this fall, has been working as a volunteer at MCT since the first of the year.

Theater has "always had a large part of my heart," Ms. Canning says.

The mother of three traces much of her interest in theater to one of her older brothers, John Murrell, a successful playwright who lives in Calgary, Canada. Through her brother, Ms. Canning realized that theater is "extremely demanding on your time. I wasn't ready to sacrifice my time with my family to be in theater."

The production, directed by Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director with Terry Martin working as stage manager, includes two Sunday performances. One is at 2:30 p.m. today and the other at 8 p.m. Dec. 11.

Since this is the last membership show of the season, those purchasing 1989 memberships may use them for "Squabbles." For reservations to the production, co-produced by Mobil Producing Texas & New Mexico, Inc., call 682-4111.

Also starring in "Squabbles" are Eric Thunem, most recently seen on MCT's stage as Axel in "The Nerd;" Marilyn Allen, whose most recent MCT role was Titania in "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" and Mark Eells, last seen as Gordo Gaspacho, the villain's sidekick in this year's "Summer Mummers."

Although Eells kept hearing from his friends that "Squabbles" had a character role which seemed just right for him, he went to the last night of auditions to work on construction, not to try out.

"I was asked to come on downstairs," Eells says. "So I went downstairs and read for the part and got it."

The role of Hector, the handyman, marks the first time Eells has had to deal with a Puerto Rican accent. "I just don't want it to be too stereotypical, but I'll do the best that I can."

Eells, who has been interested in theater since he was in junior high school, teaches speech and drama at Goddard Junior High.

"My degree is concentrated more in speech than in drama, and the availability of the community theater and the ability to work as a volunteer in all aspects of the theater has been very educational for me. I've learned more about drama here than I would have in college."

When he looks back over the roles he has played none stands out as his favorite. "I liked to play them all."

This role is one he almost didn't get to play to audiences, even after being cast. Eells had an accident in his Blazer Monday night. The vehicle rolled over into the drainage ditch between the theater and Midland College.

"I was leaving the theater after rehearsal. I went out the back way, overshot the alley and drove into the storm drainage ditch over there. I really don't remember a whole lot of it — just what the police have told me they think happened."

Although he was unconscious for several hours and is suffering from a bruised leg, a twisted knee and a blow to his head, he has an attitude typical of thespians.

"I haven't forgotten any of my lines," Eells says the day after the wreck. "I've gone over them."

For Ms. Allen, who usually selects dramas and period pieces, auditioning for "Squabbles" was the last thing on her mind.

"Actually, I really never thought about trying out for this role, which is a gal considerably older than I am.

"A friend called who wanted to read for the show. He (Weir) was not as old as the man was supposed to be in the play either. He's a good actor. So I said, 'I'll go take another look at it.' And, I did."

For Weir and Ms. Allen the challenge lies in capturing the accent. In addition, Ms. Allen finds "showing a bit of age without going into the stereotype of what so many do to show age" is also challenging.

"It's a great role," she says. "The older man and older woman are just wonderful roles. For all of its light and fluffiness and funny, funny lines, there is a bit of substance.

"Just because a person is of retirement age they aren't necessarily ready to go out to pasture. As Abe says in the play, 'And go to an old folks home and eat strained vegetables and watch Lawrence Welk'." She laughs and quickly adds, "No insult to Lawrence Welk."

Thunem knew he wanted to audition for "Squabbles."

"It had a good character," he says. "Jerry Sloan is a guy who writes jingles for ads and he writes music for advertisements on TV, and I have written some songs and I saw some similarities there, plus he has some funny lines."

Playing Sloan is vastly different than playing Axel in "The Nerd."

"It's a different kind of humor," he says. "The character in 'The Nerd' had a whole lot of funny lines and zingers. This show has a lot more supportive work for Abe. Abe really has the good quips and the one-liners.

"I think the character of Abe, the old man, has a lot of humor to it. I think the other characters are probably largely supporting roles, except for Mildred — they are the two leads. The play really is about them and finding happiness in old age. There's a lot of humor and a lot of warmth, and it's all wrapped together."

SKATERS

He laughs.

"Once I got into the whole haircutting scene, it was OK. I love learning different things. It's so stimulating. Someone would say, 'David, your next client's here.' And I'd think, 'I'm actually doing this.'

"It's strange. I tend to be a little bit of a worrier about the future. When you're on the road your whole life, you have fear of the outside world a little bit.

"What would I do if I had to get off the road? Going to hair school took away that fear. Making money was not as hard as I thought it would be.

"Once I decided I could do something else, I decided, 'Well, I'm going to go have fun,'" Pedley says. "I'm going back to the show."

Both missed the "natural high" they feel when they are making people laugh.

"Out there all by yourself — such an energy," Pedley says. "You don't get that stimulation from anywhere else. Only a performing job."

Murray on wild romp in 'Scrooged'

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Movie black humor in the guise of ghouls, which began with "Beetlejuice," continues with "Scrooged," a contemporary answer to Charles Dicken's "A Christmas Carol."

"Scrooged" stars Bill Murray as a mean-spirited television executive who, while overseeing a small-screen production of "A Christmas Carol," is himself taken on the trip of his life (past, present, and future). Murray is Frank Cross, a man so cynical that he has a sign in his office which defines "cross" as "something you nail people to."

Frank's shallowness is emphasized by his vision of "A Christmas Carol" which includes nearly nude Solid Gold dancers and Mary Lou Retton as Tiny Tim. "She won't just throw away her crutches," Frank brags, "she'll do a double somersault." When a production assistant complains that he is unable to fasten a pair of tiny antlers to the head of a mouse, Frank's solution is "staple them." Even worse, when a flustered Bob Goldthwait complains that the television special looks like 'The Manson Family Christmas Special,' Frank fires him on Christmas Eve.

In no time, spirits descend on Murray and try to show him the error of his ways. Most memorable is Carol Kane, as the Ghost of Christmas Present, a psychopathic Glinda the Good Witch from the "Wizard of Oz" who puts the "slap" back in slapstick. She literally beats Frank into paying attention to his past mistakes. "Sometimes the truth is painful," Kane's character says, as she punctuates her sentences with kicks and jabs.

Frank is forced to view scenes of the impoverished — but happy — homelife of his devoted secretary, Grace (Alfre Woodard). When not playing supermom, Grace serves Frank his coffee, straightens his pants, and generally sets women's liberation back a century. She also covers his tracks and sends his brother better Christmas gifts than Frank suggests.

Frank also confronts memories of his relationship with Claire (Karen Allen). She is a charitable soul, but an ill match for Frank, who says of her homeless charges, "Scrape 'em off."

Frank's journey into the past and present is a visual tour-de-force. His view of the future, however, is not harsh enough to invoke the reaction that it should. And although slickly done, it's hard to buy Frank's change of heart. By the time the spirit of Chirstmas has been pounded into the cynical Frank and he expounds upon the importance of family, it seems far too little too late.

Nonetheless, "Scrooged" is a wild romp and a lively contemporary film. If you like the irreverence of "Saturday Night Live" sketches and the special effects in "Beetlejuice" you'll enjoy "Scrooged" (which was written by "Saturday Night Live" writers Mitch Glazer and Michael O'Donoghue, and directed by Richard "Lethal Weapon" Donner).

There is no doubt that the cast of "Scrooged" had fun filming this one. According to an article in a recent issue of "Premiere" magazine, Murray tended to upset filming by improvising his scenes every time the cameras began to roll. On one occasion, according to the article, the crew tried to return the favor and make life difficult for Murray: when he had to test the full-body rig he was to use for one brief flying scene, they hoisted him in the air, kept him there, passed out blindfolds and foam rubber baseball bats, and used him as a pinata.

Another on-the-set note: All of Frank's relatives were played by Murray's siblings. The late Anne Ramsey also appears in a cameo as a homeless woman.

All fun aside, some moments in "Scrooged" seemed contrived. But then, so do many television moments. If you are a "Saturday Night Live" fan, go see "Scrooged." As the promo for Frank's television "Scrooge" says, "Yule Love It."

"Scrooged," which has been rated PG-13 ("Special Parental Guidance Suggested for Those Younger Than 13"), contains some vulgar language and sexual references. It is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Cocoon: The Return' will leave you smiling

Despite all the critic bashing "Cocoon: The Return" is receiving, it is an entertaining, if sappy film. For everyone out there who likes the sentimental stuff, the latest "Cocoon" manages to fill the bill (but not as well as its predecessor, the heartwarming 1985 film "Cocoon.")

The original "Cocoon" offered insights into how the elderly have become aliens in our society. If "Cocoon: The Return" has a message, it is one of mortality, with an almost overwhelming theme of death.

It opens with the despondent Bernie (Jack Gilford) one of the senior citizens of "Cocoon" who stayed behind after the death of his wife Rose (Herta Ware). Bernie is in a retirement home, and is reduced to hooking rugs as a form of recreation.

In some of the most inspired dialogue in the script, Bernie says (while pointing into the palm of his hand),"I was a man who once had the entire garment district right here. You are a good citizen, pay your taxes, work hard, and what do you get? A tight rug." Bernie is so depressed that he considers suicide, a scene that is handled too lightly.

The film switches to young David (Barret Oliver), who sees his space traveling grandfather Ben (Wilford Brimley) appear on television, a la "Poltergeist." It seems that all the old folks who journeyed to Antarea are returning on an exploratory mission, which ends up with them trying to rescue an Antarean in a cocoon (being held by scientists in the St. Petersburg Oceanographic Institute).

The three visiting couples — Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy, Don Ameche and Gwen Verdon, Brimley and Maureen Stapleton — decide to rescue the Antarean. They also have some other bigger choices to make, such as choosing between an eternal healthy life without family or a short life on Earth.

While the concept is good, the script, written by television writer Stephen ("Behind Enemy Lines") McPherson, tends to muddle the message. Too much inane dialogue seems added in to fill space. There are cries of "I feel like a teen-ager!" and "Did you get a load of the sunshine?" and such.

Then there is Courtney Cox, the attractive scientist, who appears to be giving her impression of Bambi while lovingly gazing at a glowing Antarean who looks equally stupified.

Another flaw is that a few things seemed to have been left out of the film, such as the fate of David on the baseball field.

Despite its flaws, "Cocoon: The Return," features a top-notch cast (including a Flipper Brigade of dolphins). It has some warmth, but is not as magical as the original "Cocoon," (except for the form in which Antareans ascend to their ship) but it will leave you with a smile.

"Cocoon: The Return," is rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested") for sexual references of the most innocuous kind. It is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinema.

'High Spirits' not as spirited as could be "High Spirits," a ghostly "comedy," has a script that is dead in the water. However, my 11-year-old daughter loved the film so much she saw it twice. Bless her romantic young heart, she was dazzled by Daryl Hannah's ethereal appearance (as a 200-year-old ghost) in gossamer dresses and tendrils of golden hair. However, those of us past the first-blush-of-romance stage, will find less in "High Spirits" to delight in.

The film involves the owner of an old Irish castle-hotel (Peter O'Toole, overacting and having fun with his role), who decides to drum up some business by advertising the place as an authentically haunted abode. He convinces the staff to dress up in sheets, suits of armor, and gussies up the hotel bus with fake dismembered body parts. All his attempts at creating a haunted illusion are ironic since the castle is actually haunted.

The real ghosts, Martin (Liam Neeson, most recently of "The Good Mother"), and Mary (Ms. Hannah) are an attractive pair doomed to nightly re-enact an argument which culminates in her murder.

The re-enactment is broken by castle guest Jack (Steve Guttenberg) who begins to prefer Mary over his whining wife, Sharon (Beverley D' Angelo, as delightful as ever). There is some sort of reference (which I have already forgotten) to the "Book of High Spirits" and all kinds of other balderdash.

The motley crew includes a parapsychologist, a priest (Peter Gallagher, who gives his character a fresh innonccence) and various other guests. The ghosts mingle with the guests and bedlam, which incorporates an animated bed, ensues.

However, there isn't enough laughs, or silliness to make the film as "spirited" as it would like to be. Even the attempt at comparing Mary's Irish heritage to Jack's American background fails miserably. "You're a ghost, I'm an American, it would never work," Mary says.

Nonetheless, Mary woos Jack with words like "Drink to me with thine eyes," and he answers her with the words from songs by the Big Bopper.

Despite all the hijinks, "High Spirits" suffers a malaise of mindlessness and has some slow spots. Even the concept of scamping whereby ghosts have sex (or something similar) with humans by walking through their bodies, seems lame.

Although "High Spirits" won't give your spirits a lift, it does seem to delight the younger generation. But the language and sex scenes are rather ribald for those under 14. The most amazing thing about "High Spirits" is that it has managed to stay in the theater a third week, while "The Good Mother," a classy drama which played at the same theater one week, is gone.

"High Spirits," rated PG-13 for some fairly blunt sexual references, is playing at North Park Cinema.

Opening lead: King of ◇ South, declarer at six spades, indulged in a trick-reduction play on this hand. He started out with 12 tricks and ended up with only 11.

West's pesky four-diamond preempt created a major problem for North. His fine fit and wealth of controls meant that his side could possibly make a grand slam, but there was no room to investigate with any degre of accuracy. His decision to bid six spades was a practical solution and meets with the approval of this department.

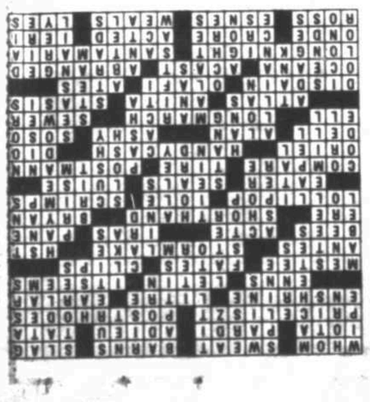

West led the king of diamonds against the slam. Declarer could count six spade tricks, three hearts, a trick in each minor and a heart ruff, for a total of 12. He called for dummy's ace of diamonds. Unfortunately East ruffed, and in the fullness of time declarer had to concede a club trick for down one.

Declarer had paid no heed to the bidding. It was quite likely that West had started with eight diamonds for his four-level preempt. As long as declarer could protect his winners from getting ruffed away, he was sure to make his slam.

The first step in that campaign should have been to duck the king of diamonds at trick one! That allows the defenders to score a trick in a suit where declarer, in theory, has no loser, but the trick will come back. Declarer can win any continuation (if it's a diamond, he ducks again on the table and ruffs in hand) and proceed about his business. After drawing trumps, he can discard his club loser on the ace of diamonds and ruff his heart loser on the board.

PUZZLE ANSWER

Handbell Choirs to give Christmas Concert

The Handbell Choirs of First United Methodist Church, Main Street at Ohio Ave., will present their fifth Annual Christmas Concert at 7:15 p.m. today in the sanctuary of the church.

Over 45 ringers ringing more than 200 different bells will join together to "ring in" the holiday season.

The program, under the direction of Brad and Kane Kisner, directors of Music Ministries at FUMC, will feature the Bolden Bells, Monday Belles, Wesley Ringers and Joyful Ringers Handbell Choirs.

Also featured on the program will be several solos and ensembles including the Texas Ding-A-Lings, Snanna Reynolds, Tracy Ricketts and Jane Schulte. These solos and ensembles make up an active part of the music ministry of the church.

First UMC was one of the first churches in West Texas to begin a handbell program with its purchase of bells in 1959 by the late George DeHart, organist and choirmaster of the church for 30 years. The handbell choirs have appeared in local, state, area and national handbell festuvals.

The concert is open to the public and no admission is charged. Child care will be available, but some young children may be interested in listening to the 45-minute program.

For more information call the music office of the church, 682-3701.

UTPB singers, orchestra to give concert

ODESSA — The University Singers and Chamber Orchestra from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will perform Classical Christmas concerts at 8 p.m. Saturday at St. John's Episcopal in Odessa and at 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 11, at Trinity Presbyterian in Midland.

The program of Christmas music from the 16th through 20th centuries will include selections from Handel's "Messiah," and a complete performance of Saint-Saens' "Christmas Oratorio."

The University Singers, the on-campus 26-member choral ensemble created by conductor Dr. Steven Powell, are well-known in West Texas as soloists with other groups, such as Theatre Midland, the Permian Playhouse, and the Symphony Chorale.

Both concerts are free and open to the public. For further information call 1-367-2361.

Odessa singer releases new record album

No Mountain Recording Studio has just released a new album by Scott White titled, "Lithographs," which features nine original contemporary-folk songs by the Odessa singer and songwriter.

"Lithographs" was a project that began back in 1982 and slowly developed over the years. Contributors to the album are Mark Stanford on guitar, Teresa Vickers singing harmony vocals, and Bill Ervin, lending his vocal talents.

Scott's work has been heard in the area over the last few years in radio jingles and TV commercials such as those for Odessa College, where he will be teaching a songwriting workshop during the upcoming spring semester, and the music for the 1988 ADDY awards.

"Lithographs" albums and cassettes are available at Endless Horizons in Midland and Odessa, or through No Mountain Studios: Heartsongs, 1235 Roanoke, Odessa, 79761.

Church to present musical program

First Christian Church is celebrating the Advent season with a musical program entitled "The Joyful Sounds of Christmas" at 7 p.m. today in the church sanctuary, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave.

The presentation features the church's choirs and the Lone Star Brass Quintet, a performing ensemble of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc. Directing the production is Anthony F. Lackland, director of music at First Christian Church.

'Any Wednesday' slated

ODESSA — The Permian Playhouse is presenting the adult comedy, "Any Wednesday," at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Tickets are $7 for adults and $4 for senior citizens and students. For more information contact the Playhouse at 1-362-2329.

'Babes in Toyland' to be staged

The Teen Suicide Prevention Task Force will sponsor a benefit musical, "Babes in Toyland" at 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 18, at the Midland Center.

"Babes in Toyland" is a contemporary adaptation of the classic favorite in which Jack and Jill, Simple Simon, the Toy Soldiers and all the "girl-and-boyland" friends come to life in Toyland and the Magic Forest.

The updated version features songs that were introduced in the 1903 original, including "the March of the Toys," "Toyland, Toyland" and "I Can't Do This Sum." Award-winning playwright Don Kersey also has created several new songs as a complement to the audience participation.

Unique moveable modules portray the Magic Forest, Toyland, and the Widow Piper's House. Special lighting effects have been created to enhance the glittering sets.

Tickets are presently on sale for $7 and can be purchased by calling 694-2150. Information about the Teen Suicide Prevention Task Force is also available by calling 694-2150.

North Pole, Santa center of exhibit

"What Rudolph Knows," an environmental/historical exhibition at the Museum of the Southwest Friday through Dec. 29, allows a peek into the lives of the inhabitants of the North Pole area where the famed Santa Claus lives and works with his assistants.

Featured are replicas of The North Pole, a North Pole village, Santa's workshop with tools, Santa's house and furnishings, and an elf's bed.

The reindeer, essential to Santa's operation, like to dance, and instructions for these special dances are illustrated. Guidelines for talking to reindeer are available for study, as well as explanations of the activities and games that the elves enjoy.

A "laughing room," like the one Santa uses to practice his "ho, ho, ho," will be available for those who would like to try their voices. One of Santa's favorite activities is telling jokes, and he practices those too.

Such historical information as Santa's origin, the elvish language, why Rudolph's nose is red and how he save the North Pole, and the science of reindeer flight.

The presentation is designed around "The Santa Claus Book" by Alden Perkes published by Lyle Stuart Inc. Ron Aday, Museum designer, is the planner and organizer.

While the exhibition, which is for adults as well as children, graphically illustrates the aging process which happens to those who will not believe in the "Santa magic," it should reinforce the faith of those who do believe, and reaffirm for those whose faith is wavering.

The museum, 1705 W. Missouri, is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. The museum will be closed for the holidays Dec. 23-26 and Dec. 30 through Jan. 2.

Six Flags staging holiday show, additional rides

ARLINGTON — An all-new show lineup and additional rides is being featured in Six Flags Over Texas' traditional Christmas spectacular, "Holiday In The Park," which began its fourth season the day after Thanksgiving.

The event's ice show, which was introduced last year, is bigger and more elaborate than the initial production. The 1987 show was designed for a theater seating less than 1,500 guests. The 1988 version is tailored to fit the 10,000-set Music Mill Amphitheater.

A new full-scale musical production filled with holiday songs and dance is being presented in the Southern Palace Music Hall. A totally new show also is being presented in the Crazy Horse Saloon, and a laser show with a holiday theme is slated for the Cinema 180 Theater.

Though most of the theme park's rides are silent during the Holiday In The Park, two have been added to this season's lineup. The park's recently restored antique carousel carries holiday funseekers and the Spelunkers Cave ride is decorated for the holidays.

Holiday In the Park is open Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights until nightly operation begins Dec. 16. With the exceptions of Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, the event will be staged from 5 p.m. until 11 p.m. each evening through Dec. 31. On the final night a special New Year's Eve fireworks spectacular will light the skies at 10 p.m.

Admission is $6.95 plus tax. Six Flags season passes will be honored. Children age two and under are admitted free. Parking is also free.

Art work from Corpus Christi colleges on display at OC gallery

ODESSA — An exhibition of art pieces from two Corpus Christi colleges is on display until Wednesday, Dec. 21 in the gallery of Odessa College's Instructional Building.

The exhibition, featuring 27 prints, drawings and paintings, may be viewed 7 a.m.-10 a.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday.

Works of Delmar College faculty and Corpus Christi State University faculty and students comprise the exhibit. Eddie Lambert, a former OC art student and currently Delmar College's art department chairman, has three works in the show.

The exhibit is showing concurrently with a collection from The Institute of American Indian Arts Museum in Santa Fe.

Also, an exhibition of Odessan Dale Short's abstract paintings will be on display from 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Friday and 2-5 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 11 through Friday, Jan. 27, in the Options Gallery of Odessa College's Learning Resource Center.

A reception honoring Short is set for 2-4 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 11, in the Options Gallery.

Short's paintings include works in both watercolor and acrylic mediums. According to Short, he uses these two mediums to produce images of visual excitement and strong emotional feeling.

Short received his associates degree in art from Odessa College and plans to continue his education in this field.

Concurrently, an exhibition of printing from The Institute of American Indian Arts Museum in Santa Fe will be on display until Wednesday, Dec. 21, in the gallery of Odessa College's Instructional Building, and may be viewed from 7 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday.

The exhibition features 50 pieces of work from the art institute's students, who are all of American Indian heritage, according to Deimos Hickmott, OC's art department chairman. The showing is a collection of first and second semester students from several years, Hickmott said in a news release.

All types of printing are represented in the exhibition, including linoleum cuts, screen prints, woodcuts, etchings and collographs. Many of the pieces deal with the Indian heritage of the students while other prints examine the art elements, such as color, Hickmott said.
