Clements tours debris-strewn Wichita Falls

Death-dealing twisters claim 54

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements toured by air and land the debris-strewn streets of this North Texas city of 96,000 today in wake of several mammoth tornadoes that killed at least 54 persons here and in area towns.

There are as many as 50 unconfirmed deaths in Wichita Falls alone although the body count was only at 41 at midmorning, said Capt. Terry Denson of the National Guard.

Another 12 were believed dead in Vernon, a town of 11,500 about 75 miles to the northwest. The twister tore a quarter-mile path through the southern part of the city. Homes and businesses were hit.

Two hours later, a death-dealing tornado struck Wichita Falls, with two shopping malls bearing the brunt of the damage. The path of destruction was eight miles long and ranged in width from a half-mile to a mile-and-a-half.

"There are 50 unconfirmed dead," Capt. Denson said.

More than 700 were reported injured, overcrowding hospitals and putting doctors, nurses and paramedical personnel on around-the-clock duty.

The National Guard worked through the night on search patrols and limited first aid duties. Units from Wichita Falls and Bowie were relieved by guardsmen from Fort Worth, she said.

An 18-wheel communications van was also trucked from Austin to serve as a communications headquarters to coordinate all rescue and cleanup agencies in the city.

In addition to Clements' staff, U.S. Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, flew from Washington to Wichita Falls, his hometown, for a personal inspection of the damage and to see what federal help might be needed.

The first tornado hit Vernon about 3:30 p.m.

Ironically, some of those injured in Vernon were taken to Wichita Falls hospitals.

"We were taking injured in from Vernon when this one hit here," said Dr. James Lee, medical coordinator for the Red Cross in Wichita Falls.

Another tornado later struck Harrold, a small town nine miles west of Vernon, killing one person.

Across the Red River in Oklahoma, a twister killed four persons in Lawton, north of Wichita Falls and northeast of Vernon.

Other tornadoes were reported about the same time in outlying areas of Texas but authorities could not say how many touched down.

There was damage at Lockett, six miles southwest of Vernon, and one touched down without damage or injury in a rural area near Seymour, due south of Vernon.

Early today funnel clouds were sighted near Sadler, Sherman, Bridgeport, Bowie and near Tioga, all in large North Central Texas area east-southeast of Wichita Falls and north of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

The damage in Wichita Falls and Vernon was devastating.

"There are literally thousands of people homeless," said Record-News reporter Rocky Scott, who watched the tornado from the Wichita County courthouse.

"As the storm started you could see the clouds being sucked into the center of the storm — the debris and huge pieces of house roofs, and tree limbs. All of a sudden there was a tremendous roar, and the storm appeared to move very quickly. It seemed like it lasted about five or six minutes and it looked like a huge snow cone," Scott said.

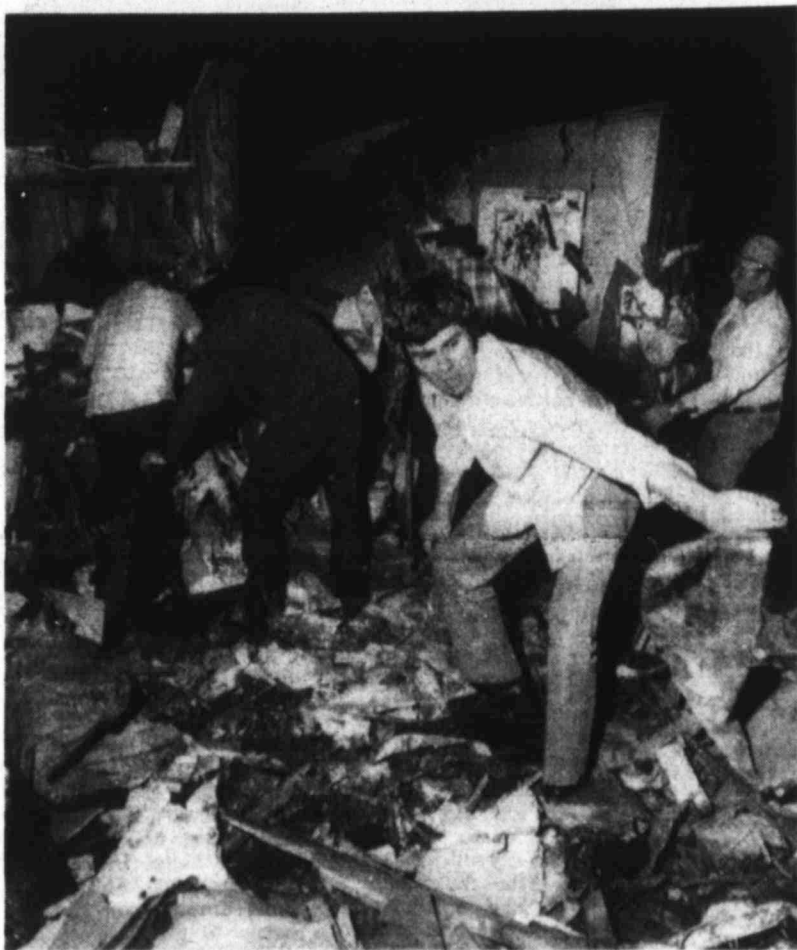

The injured and homeless were taken to school gymnasiums and other makeshift emergency centers.

One woman, asked not to be identified, sat and rubbed her feet and reflected on her luck, if one would call it that.

"The only thing left of my house is the closet I was lying in," she said. "I got so scared I just laid there and prayed. I've been through five hurricanes, but hurricanes are

To pursue business interests in city

City Manager Nagel resigns

By JAMES WERRELL

Big Spring City Manager Harry Nagel Jr. announced 9 a.m. today that he would resign the post to pursue business interest in the city.

"I am officially notifying the mayor and the city council that I will resign as city manager to pursue a private business," he said at a news conference this morning. "It has been my intention for a number of years to join my wife in the operation of two convenience stores she now owns," he added.

Mrs. Nagel currently owns and operates the Airport Grocery, 3107 West Highway, and the Mity-Mart, Birdwell and FM 700.

The resignation will become effective "at the will of the city council, within a limited period of time," Nagel added.

The council will meet 8:30 a.m. Monday in closed session to discuss the next move in finding his replacement.

"The reason I have made this announcement at the present time, as I have discussed with the mayor, is that I wanted to delay it until after the election so that whomever is selected will have been appointed by the new council," explained Nagel.

Both he and the Mayor Wade Choate stated that, with the time-consuming process of interviewing applicants for the job, no selections would be made until after the runoff election slated for April 28.

Nagel said that he had begun contemplating the resignation, and had made his intentions known to Choate two years ago.

"I told the mayor informally two years ago that I was ready to resign. But then we had the closure of Webb, and I was concerned about the economic effect on my wife's business and the future of the city. For lack of a better word, it was a hell of a time for a change in city managers, and wouldn't have been proper for me to leave," said Nagel.

Mayor Choate lauded Nagel and regretted having to accept his resignation.

"It is regrettable that we must accept this resignation. Harry has been a close personal friend, and the council could always count on his guidance in making tough decisions. He was never at a loss for words. All we had to do was ask, and he would offer recommendations. That isn't normal for a city manager, and we are going to miss him," said Choate.

The mayor reiterated that no decision about a replacement would be made until after the runoff election. The opening will first be publicized, and applicants will be screened and narrowed to "four or five people" before a final decision is made.

"It's going to be a long road," he concluded.

Q. This is asking you to go back in time, but do the records show who got the first traffic ticket in history?
A. It was probably Elwood Hayes, an early auto engineer and designer. A bicycle riding policeman ordered him off the streets in 1895.

Appeal could delay Stacy Dam by three years

Opponents of the $50 million Colorado River Municipal Water District Stacy Dam project say their planned appeal of a Texas Water Commission order approving the facility could delay construction up to three years.

Owen Ivie, general manager of the CRMWD, who returned from the TWC hearing in Austin Tuesday, said he did not know what the time element would be if the Lower Colorado River Authority wanted to fight the battle all the way to the Supreme Court but Ivie added he was hopeful the dam could be started long before that time.

"If they appeal to district court (in Austin) and the decision is handled in an expeditious manner ('in our favor'), we would be safe in spending money such as buying land and starting survey work," Ivie said.

The CRMWD executive also said that as long as a government entity is in litigation, bonds cannot be sold for the construction of such a project.

"The permit becomes effective 60 days after the order, but I don't think it (the CRMWD) would do anything with the permit if appealed in court," Fred Werkenthin, lawyer for the Lower Colorado River Authority, said.

Werkenthin's comments came after the TWC had unanimously approved the CRMWD application to build the dam-reservoir on the Colorado River 26 miles southeast of Ballinger.

Cities served by the CRMWD include Big Spring, San Angelo, Midland, Stanton, Odessa and Snyder.

Chairman Felix McDonald and Commissioners Joe Carroll and Dorsey Hardeman met five minutes to approve the application. The decision ended 18 months of hearings in possibly the most expensive fight ever over water in Texas.

The LCRA and the City of Austin opposed the plan to divert more than 36 billion gallons of water a year from communities below the dam.

The LCRA operates the Highland Lakes dam-reservoir system of Lake Buchanan, Lyndon B. Johnson, Travis and Austin.

Critics maintain the project adversely will affect downstream water supplies and hydroelectric power operation.

Werkenthin said he had every intention of asking the commission to reconsider the order. If necessary, he said he would appeal to the Travis County district court, the 3rd Court of Civil Appeals in Austin and the Texas Supreme Court.

Frank Booth, attorney for the water district, said the project also needs a state water quality permit and approval from the U.S. Corps of Engineers.

Ivie said construction of such a dam would take anywhere from 24 to 36 months. The reservoir would be by far the largest of the CRMWD's three reservoirs, capable of trapping 554,348 acre feet of water. When full, it would cover a surface area of 19,206 acres.

The dam would be 10,000 feet long and have a concrete spillway. The water would back up 20 miles, including five miles of the Concho River. The confluence of the Concho and Colorado rivers is about six miles above the site of the proposed dam.

The average rainfall at the dam-site is about 22 inches annually, compared to 18 inches plus for the Big Spring area. Drainage at the proposed lake covers about 3,150 square miles, compared to the 2,640 square miles behind Lake Spence.

In addition to Ivie, the CRMWD's assistant manager, Paschal Odom, R.

A. Schooling and Joe Pickle attended the meeting from Big Spring. Also present was P.C. Harbour of Odessa, president of the CRMWD board of directors.

Under a Water Commission order, the water district will be allowed to divert 88,000 acre feet of water annually for municipal and domestic purposes and 25,000 acre feet annually for power plant operations. (An acre foot of water is 325,851 gallons).

Booth said the only impact of Stacy Dam will be some limitation of hydroelectric power.

Texas Utility Service Co., a subsidiary of Texas Utilities, will build the project. Some water from the facility will be used to cool a huge generating plant near Stacy Reservoir to serve Dallas Power & Light, Texas Power & Light and Texas Electric Service Co. — also subsidiaries of Texas Utilities.

Ivie said several individuals and firms have large land holdings in the lake area. One 3,700-acre ranch, inactive now, in Coleman County, is owned by St. Louis, Mo., residents, Ivie revealed.

Choate praises years of service

Nagel predicts growth, prosperity

City Manager Harry Nagel's announced resignation came at the end of seven and a half years of distinguished service to the city.

He took on the job at a point when city government was in a confirmed state of turmoil.

"It was just after a recall election, and almost no one was left working for the city, he had to fill most of those positions, and the financial situation was deplorable," said Mayor Wade Choate, this morning. "But Harry had been in two other positions where the financial situations had been bad, and he had done a great job. That's why we hired him here."

The experience Nagel brought with him to Big Spring, to which Choate referred, included 14 years with a major gas company, 18 months as city manager of Uvalde and three years as city manager of Sulphur Springs.

"But I came here and liked it, and decided to stay," said Nagel.

He confirmed the mayor's assessment of the situation in the city when he first arrived. One of his major accomplishments "was being able to survive that first year," he said.

He also cited the successful conversion of Webb AFB to an industrial park and airport, and the rejuvenating of a number of city streets as highlights of his term.

"I have no regrets having served as city manager. I like Big Spring, Texas, and I think the future ahead holds great growth and prosperity for the city," he said this morning.

Moments later, however, he tempered this prognostication.

"In the future, if inflation is not curtailed, and spiraling costs are not contained, and city employees are not given an adequate wage, there is no way the city can operate without raising something," he said. "I am a businessman and taxpayer, and I am concerned with this city. If, at the next budget hearing, it is decided to raise something (for added city revenues) I will support it."

Nagel explained that his reference to adequate city salaries applied not just to some, but to all departments. He also predicted that a new city manager will require more money.

"If the city solicits applications from outside this area, it's going to cost some money," he said. "I know of a city near by that is much smaller than Big Spring, and they are offering $28,000 (a year) for the job. The city manager is the closest employee to the people, and all their problems are directed toward him," he added.

This, however, was not an expression of ill will: "For whoever replaces me; if the citizens give him the cooperation and help they gave me, he will have an easy time of it. I'm not mad at anybody," he said.

Policemen, firemen circulating petitions

Big Spring Police and Firefighters began a petition drive today to bring both groups under state Civil Service guidelines.

Members of the local chapter of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers met Tuesday night to discuss the move, said chapter president John Burson. If petitions are signed by 10 percent of the number of voters who went to the polls in Saturday's city election, then a city-wide referendum will be called.

"Although we are of the opinion that salaries are the major factor in this issue, we also feel that the security which can be obtained through Civil Service will help reduce the high incidence of trained personnel leaving the departments," said a news release issued by the IBPO today.

Burson stressed that the proposed will "not cost the taxpayers anything."

"It is mainly an issue of job security. The way it is now, we can be disciplined or discharged for any or no reason. Under the Civil Service guidelines we can appeal all the way through the court system," he said.

Police officers and firefighters will take petitions to a number of areas in the city for signatures. Only 254 will be needed in order to call a referendum.

In Wichita Falls shopping

Foard County folks believe

By J.T. SMITH (Harris-Hanks Austin Bureau) CROWELL — You don't have to make a believer out of Foard County folks when it comes to tornadoes.

In addition to leaving one Foard County woman dead near Lockett Tuesday, the tornadoes which left a path of destruction also affected several Crowell residents who were shopping in Wichita Falls.

Mrs. Bill (CecCee) Neason of Phalia was killed just outside Lockett in Willbarger County about 3:15 p.m., Tuesday when the tornado picked up her small station wagon off US 70 and threw it about 200 yards into a pasture.

Her two young children, also in the car, were injured.

H.L. Ayers Jr., Thalia County farmer who was first on the scene, helped take the children to Willbarger General Hospital in Vernon eight miles from Lockett. Their conditions were unavailable at press time due to communications problems in the stricken area.

Mrs. Neason was dead at the scene.

Two Crowell couples were in Sikes Center in Wichita Falls Tuesday when the deadly storm hit. Another couple who had gone to a physician in downtown Wichita Falls was still missing as of noon today.

Mr. and Mrs. Houston Atkins and Mr. and Mrs. James Sandlin were in the JC Penney Store in Sikes Center when the tornado struck. Although Atkins car was heavily damaged, they made it back to Foard County Tuesday night.

However, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Powers of Crowell are still missing in Wichita Falls where Powers had gone for an eye doctor appointment.

Most of Wichita Falls professional buildings including a doctor's building are in the near of downtown. Ray Shirley, a teller at Crowell State Bank, said he came to work early Wednesday and noticed coffee had not been made — that's normally Jack's job, Shirley said the bank custodian. Shirley said he then found out that Powers had not been heard from since they left for Wichita Falls Tuesday afternoon. Atkins had heard of the tornado striking Foard County about 3:15 p.m., Tuesday and at 6 p.m., was on the phone talking to his son, Randy, who was at Atkins' home to see if there was any damage.

While on the phone, the elder Atkins said a public address system at the shopping center carried a warning telling the customers to take cover.

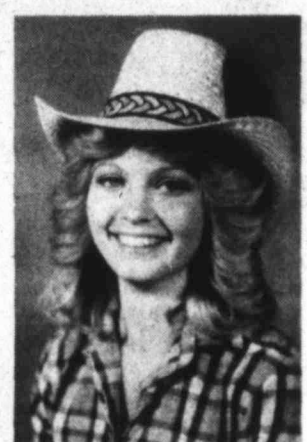

"I've gotta go. It's hitting here," Atkins told his son. This was after the tornado had left a path of disaster in a neighboring Wilbarger County about 3:30 p.m., Tuesday.

Houston Atkins said that after the warning 300 to 400 people hit the floor and Atkins and Sandlin had to "run like Hell" to get to their wives.

"We just laid down on the floor. It sounded like 14 locomotives," Atkins said.

Meanwhile, Mary Sandlin crawled over other persons on the floor to be beside her husband.

RODEO QUEEN — Dietra Fowler was the queen for the 1979 Howard College NIRA rodeo last weekend. The sophomore sold 132 tickets to earn the honor. The 22-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Fowler, of Coahoma, will soon be moving to San Angelo after May graduation from Howard College. She plans to attend Angelo State University, beginning with the June summer term, and hopes to graduate by August, 1980.

Relatives here

Resident tells of tornado effects

By CARLA WALKER Wichita Falls resident Terry McDaniel got to a telephone this morning to let his family, visiting in Big Spring, know that he was all right in spite of the fact that their apartment building was totally destroyed by the tornado that touched down in a residential area of Wichita Falls.

McDaniel's wife, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Slate of Big Spring, was here with the two McDaniel children visiting the Slates at the time of the tornado.

McDaniel waited in line to use a telephone in a government office in Wichita Falls, and finally got through to Big Spring about 8 a.m. today.

"He had just gotten home, and turned on the television when he heard the tornado was coming," said McDaniel's mother-in-law, Clifla Slate. "He and two other men ran outside, and one started to leave in a car but the tornado turned the car over."

"Terry and the other man ran inside, and they got in bathtubs until the storm was over. They said that the noise and the vacuum in the air hurt their ears," she said.

During the tornado, McDaniel said that dishes were exploding, and the roof was falling in. When it was over, McDaniel found that in all the apartment, only the television was still upright. Rabbit ears from the set were drilled through the wooden door, and the apartment was almost totally devastated, with only his clothes appearing to be salvageable.

In addition, the carport was "just gone" with the McDaniel's three cars destroyed. Mrs. McDaniel left today with friends to help her husband salvage what they could.

"Terry said he slept last night in a pickup — we don't know whose pickup since their cars were destroyed, but we were lucky that the rest of the family was here and that Terry wasn't hurt," said Mrs. Slate. "Many people lost family members, not just possessions, and we were also lucky to hear so soon — many of our friends are still waiting for news of their kindfolk."

Agriculture leader says

Campaign could backfire

WACO — An agricultural leader said a "beefless Wednesday" campaign would backfire and result in higher beef prices in the long run.

Carroll Chaloupka, president of the Texas Farm

Bureau, said the partial boycott of beef recommended by the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs "shows a total lack of understanding of what it takes to put beef on the table."

"Cattlemen are doing everything they can to increase the supply of beef for the American people," Chaloupka said. "They are responding to the more favorable prices of the past several months. A successful boycott would break the cattle market. It would be a signal for cattlemen to reduce herds again."

Chaloupka said cattlemen reduced total cattle population by 21 million head over the five years following the price collapse in 1974.

"The facts of life are that we have eight million fewer cows than we had five years ago," he said. "It takes cows to produce the calves that we fatten for beef steaks and hamburger. All we ask is that the boycotters and government leave us alone to build back our herds and provide an adequate supply of beef."

Local Lions Club members to attend annual convention

Nolan County ratios to rise

SWEETWATER — Nolan County tax ratios are going up by one third.

Following a request by tax collector Betty Bryant Tuesday, county commissioners set the ratio for her office. The county hiked their 32 percent tax ratio to 50 percent. The impact on the tax payer is, not yet known, although officials say their action will result in added taxes.

The county's financial condition and the need for funds to improve and maintain county facilities were cited as reasons for the increase.

Thank every one of you who voted in the election of Big Spring City Commissioners. It is my desire to serve this City to the best of my ability.

Appeals could hold up lake construction

The victory the Colorado River Municipal Water District won when the Texas Water Commission ruled unanimously in favor of the district's proposed lake near Stacy was a most significant one — but the CRMWD is by no means 'home free.'

THE OPPOSING forces could admit defeat and let the matter rest, but no one around the CRMWD headquarters is assuming they will. Those critics of the plan to dam up the Colorado River have ten days in which to file a motion for a rehearing. Should they resort to that maneuver and the State Water Commission again rule against them, the anti-lake forces then have 30 days to perfect an appeal to district court. There, instead of starting from scratch as formerly was the case, the matter would be strictly on the record from the water commission's hearing. For that reason, the CRMWD would save the time and expense of a long trial.

If the opposing forces wanted to fight the decision they could eventually take it all the way to the Supreme Court, meaning they could stretch it out for months, maybe even years.

What ever challenges lie ahead for the Colorado River Municipal Water District, officials feel they've won the big one. They exuded cautious optimism from the start and there was some indication early on that the opposition knew it was pursuing a lost cause.

This will be the biggest of the CRMWD's three reservoirs and the one that will promote continued growth in West Texas.

ASSUMING THE lake will eventually become a reality, it could be the last great water reservoir built in West Texas. Reason: Engineers have run out of sites for great dams.

Water demands will continue to increase, which means the precious liquid will eventually have to be brought in from other areas — whether it be from the great rivers of America or from the sea.

King Canute dead

William F. Buckley, Jr.

President Carter has surrendered in his Moral Equivalent of War, which began as a campaign to control the price of oil in a U.S. enclave surrounded by an oligopolistic sea. Mr. Carter has a genius for picking out the wrong enemies. Getting mad at U.S. oil producers while winking at the OPEC powers is the equivalent of concentrating on Chilean violations of human rights in the age of Gulgag.

In any event, President Carter has now changed his mind, but he has not done so gracefully. To do that, he would simply have talked about the merits of de-control. Instead, he is acting as what a critic of the New Deal once termed, speaking of the NRA, a "shower adjuster." A shower adjuster is the man who wants to reach into your bathroom and tell you what is the best temperature at which to take your own shower.

TO BE SURE, the President has political problems. He evidently feels the need, in surrendering, to use the rhetoric of defiance. The objective is to appear to be antagonistic to the oil companies, even as he recognizes that what the oil companies have been saying all along is substantially correct. The President has accordingly come up with a series of complicated taxes and surcharges and compliance dates and other constipating paraphernalia the effect of which, if enacted, would be substantially to inhibit what he and the country desire, namely a vigorous program of oil and gas exploration designed to diminish our dependence on foreign oil.

Conjoined to these complicated taxes is the incredible suggestion that Congress empower the President to decide what will be the temperature of one's own place of work. He has revealed that he would use Congressional authority to forbid an office being kept at a temperature of less than 80 degrees in the summer, or more than 65 degrees in winter. If I were Congress, I would be tempted to pass legislation authorizing the President to forbid offices from being kept warmer than 65 degrees in summer, and cooler than 80 degrees in winter. The notion that someone in Washington should decide what is the temperature an individual desires for his place of work is positively Neronic. Moreover, such ambitions are virtually unenforceable except in hermetically sealed office complexes. And even there, who is going to prevent the individual secretary who is uncomfortable at 65 degrees from bringing in a little electric heater? Or is Big Brother contemplating a thermometer in every office which will ring an alarm in Jim Schlesinger's console every time it detects 70 degrees in any office in the nation?

There was never a better illustration of Adam Smith's admonition that people who delude themselves into believing that they can make decisions for the individual are too deluded to exercise authority. President Carter, at this rate, might one day ask Congress for authority to move the U.S. population south by five degrees of latitude, which is the equivalent of 300 miles. If all of us had been raised in Georgia, 80 degrees of heat would strike us as more tolerable than if we had been raised, say, in Massachusetts.

THEN THE PRESIDENT suggested he might consider closing down service stations during weekends. This would have the primary effect of inconveniencing the population. Any race of people ingenious enough to manufacture and sell 15 million automobiles per year is ingenious enough to buy six five-gallon tanks of gasoline and stick them in the trunk for weekend driving.

WASH. POST

Thermometer can raise anxieties

Paul E. Ruble, M.D.

Dear Dr. Ruble: I continually run a low temperature — 96 degrees in the morning and 97.6 — 98 degrees at night. This started recently. Can you give me any information on this? I do have some rheumatism. — J.D.

When I get a letter like yours, the first obvious question that occurs is "why." Why are you taking your temperature regularly? Thermometers are great little tools, but many folks tend to misuse or overuse them. Thus, for many they become a source of great anxiety.

First of all, check your thermometer. It wasn't meant to last forever, and even the best ones become defective or give readings that may be a fraction of a degree or more off. Check your thermometer against a neighbor's. In a cold atmosphere a thermometer may take longer to warm up to body temperature. This is normally from three to five minutes. With so many people dialing down thermostats to conserve fuel these days, I imagine we'll be encountering many more "low temperature" readings. Mouth breathers can expect to have a somewhat lower than normal reading, and a glass of hot or cold liquid can alter normal readings.

Considering all of the above, and assuming none applies to you, I find nothing very ominous in the figures you give me. A healthy person can vary as much as two full degrees — lower in the morning, higher during the day. A range of 96.5 to 99.2 degrees is not unusual. Activity also raises body temperature. You say that you have some rheumatism. That might limit your daytime activity and lower temperatures could be expected.

Finally, you'll get a more accurate reading by taking your temperature rectally. You will need a special thermometer for this, the kind used for children. This will really tell you how hot or cold you are "running." If you have some symptom that prompts you to take your temperature, you should be examined by a doctor. If you are healthy put the thermometer away for a while.

Dear Dr. Ruble: Is adenocarcinoma always fatal? If not, roughly what percentage of those who contract this disease recover? Does surgical removal do any good? Aren't there always some minute surrounding cells that cannot be removed and which will regrow? Does chemotherapy cure adenocarcinoma? — E.L.

Adenocarcinoma is a type of cancer tissue that appears gland-like under the microscope. It is common in the breast, bowels and stomach.

Many adenocarcinomas are cured every year by surgery. The secret is to get the cancer before it has spread. If the total cancer is removed by the surgeon you are cured. This can be done in some cases without leaving any cancerous cells behind for regrowth. If the entire cancer is removed the cure rate is 100 percent. Chemotherapy (drug treatment) for adenocarcinoma helps control spread.

Dear Dr. Ruble: I wonder if there is anything you can suggest to help my hands? My fingers are stiff and I cannot close them. I am 82. — Mrs. N.P.

A doctor should look at your hands, first of all, to see what needs to be done. If your joints are swollen I would suspect some arthritis, which could be expected at your age. If they are not swollen, but there is only a stiffness, the cause of it would have to be investigated, and there are many possibilities. With arthritis there would be some pain, which you don't report.

If it is a simple stiffness (as from lack of use) you can increase flexibility of the joints with warm soaks and exercise — squeezing a sponge or a soft ball. That should help the stiffness no matter what the problem.

Dear Dr. Ruble: I am 21 and have developed bronchial asthma. Would this be something to worry about if I become pregnant? I read in the paper that cannabis pills (marijuana) have been effective in treating asthma. Can they be prescribed legally? What about smoking pot? — K.B.

Cannabis pills are not available except on an experimental basis. Smoking cannabis or any other substance will aggravate asthma. As for asthma in a future pregnancy, some women have less trouble with their asthma during a pregnancy. Others see no change. It is well to get the asthma under control before conception, although some women get through it with only minimal problems.

Dear Dr. Ruble: What is the value of sunflower seeds? — G.B.

They are a good source of protein and some of the polyunsaturated fats (the good kind). They have no magic qualities or curative powers.

Dear Dr. Ruble: I have heard about eye banks being used for storing corneas, so they can be transplanted to others' eyes to help vision. What about cataracts? Is it possible to transplant a healthy lens that has become clouded by cataracts? — N.L.

Human lens transplants are impractical; there is an artificial lens available for insertion so that the problems of transplantation are avoided. The success rate of this procedure is put at about 80 percent in medical centers using it. The operation is still under study by federal officials but is available in a number of centers.

Dear Dr. Ruble: You suggest eating slowly to reduce stomach gas and bloating. How does the speed of eating relate to the problem? — Z.C.H.

You tend to swallow more often when you eat fast, and this results in more air entering the stomach and intestines. The faster eater, who wants to get a meal over with promptly, is usually the person who can belch "on demand." Some people are so hurried, they will hold a forkful of steaming food inside their mouths and suck air over the food to cool it or gasp for breath if it scalds the membranes inside the mouth. The best rule is to chew well and swallow slowly.

Dr. Ruble welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

My answer

Billy Graham

DEAR DR. GRAHAM: I have turned my life over to Christ, but I still have a feeling of guilt in my heart that I need to do more to make it to Heaven. Can you advise me? — L.F.

DEAR L.F.: To make sure of that place in Heaven that Christ is preparing for you, there is nothing you can do but believe in God's promise of eternal life. God will not allow you to say that you deserve to go to Heaven because of the good you have done. "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works lest any man should boast" (Ephesians 2:8-9). After you have taken this step of faith and belief, there is much for you to do. As you obey the Word of God you will find assurance regarding eternal salvation.

Take the first epistle of John and read through it, noting every time God tells you to love someone. Start praying for that and put it into practice. To love God and your fellow men are the two greatest commandments God has given us. "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God" (1 John 4:7). Love is costly. It will lead you to do many things for other people. But always do them from the motive of love — your love for God because of the gift of eternal life in Heaven that He had procured for you.

Fun in writing

Around the rim

Don Woods

It seems like about ten people have asked me: "How can I get into freelance writing?" Then they invariably say: "I'm not any good or anything but I enjoy writing." Lastly they say something like: "I wrote an article once for a newsletter and it came off pretty well."

So, hopefully, if there are ten interested in free-lance writing there are more. This Rim will prove helpful to you if you are because we'll look at how to write it and how to market it. How to spend the money you can figure out on your own.

Whether the publication you have targeted is a newspaper or magazine the kind of article you write will probably be a feature article. The editor has a staff to handle news copy.

THE LEAD will be the most important part of your article. It is the first paragraph and the quality of it determines whether or not your story will be a success.

Feature stories are written to entertain so in your lead you'll want to grab the reader's attention. Ask a question, use a mind tantalizing quote or, when all else fails, say something unbelievable and explain it later.

Acquire three to six months of back issues of your target publication from the library. How are the leads structured? How do they do the body of the article?

Think about the audience your target publication appeals to and write with what interests them in mind, not what interests you.

Feature stories need polish. Why not write a rough draft and put it away for a day then pick it back up the next day? Polish it, go over it with a fine tooth comb, use words that if you cut them they would bleed.

Go over it again and maybe again after that.

Now a word on how to market your work. Write a letter of inquiry to the editor that summarizes your article. Keep it to four paragraphs because editors are busy and he may not read it if it's too long.

Use a block form business letter format.

DON'T SWEAT the formalities of "How are you? I'm fine." Start immediately with a condensation of your lead. "The wind beat savagely against..." or something.

Use short sentences; 12 to 15 words each and 25 at the most. The editor will probably judge the quality of your article by the quality of your letter of inquiry.

In the second and third paragraphs include things that you think will sell the article. In the fourth, specify whether or not there are pictures included. Count every word and give him your word count. Tell him you're submitting the story on speculation."

In the fifth paragraph, list your published credits.

A concluding sentence I like is: "Thank you for your time and consideration." Sign it "Respectfully," and skip four lines and type your name followed by your mailing address below it.

The most valuable part of the experience will be the letters he sends you back. He may have tips on how you can change the story to make it acceptable. If he asks for the story mail it in a neatly typed package.

When he replies to the article you send him watch for the words "pays on publication." This means you won't be paid for it until it is published and in the meantime you can't market the article to another publication. Again, if he says he can't use your article he may have valuable tips on how you can improve it.

Take "Writer's Digest," if you'd like. It is a good free-lance magazine with tips on writing and marketing.

Most of all, have fun!

Secret report

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Mafia godfathers wanted to knock off Cuban Premier Fidel Castro in the 1960s before the Central Intelligence Agency recruited them to do the job. They accepted the CIA's contract to kill Castro in order to compromise the federal government.

These are some of the startling conclusions that the House Assassinations Committee will present in its final report. The report hasn't yet been released to the public, but we can report it will air the CIA-Mafia plot against Castro thoroughly.

THE REPORT will raise the possibility that the plot to assassinate Castro might somehow have backfired against the late President John F. Kennedy, although the committee will largely exonerate Castro from involvement in the Kennedy killing.

"Organized crime was active in attempts to assassinate Castro independent of any activity it engaged in with the CIA," declares the unreleased report.

Quoting a top-secret 1977 CIA report, the committee notes that "it was possible that the CIA simply found itself involved in providing additional resources for independent operations that the syndicate already had underway...In a sense, the CIA may have been piggy-backing on the syndicate."

Adds the committee report: "Organized crime decided to assist the CIA for two reasons: CIA sponsorship would mean official sanctioning and logistical support; and a relationship with the CIA in the assassination of a foreign leader could be used by organized crime as leverage to prevent prosecution for unrelated offenses."

In other words, the mob intended to use the CIA as a tool to force the federal government into easing its pressure on the underworld.

The committee is critical of the CIA for concealing its anti-Castro activity from the Warren Commission. The plot against Castro, states the report, "should have been aggressively explored" by the Warren Commission in 1963-64.

By way of background, the CIA had two operations going against Castro in the 1960s. One involved a high official of Castro's government, named Rolando Cubela but known to the CIA as AMLASH. He persuaded the CIA that he was willing to organize a coup against the Cuban dictator. The CIA was in contact with AMLASH from March 1961, until June 1965.

THE OTHER PLOT, initiated in 1960 a few months after Castro ousted Fulgencio Batista, involved CIA recruitment of U.S. mobsters to kill Castro. This plan was officially scrapped in February 1963, nine months before Kennedy was assassinated.

Several years ago the Senate Intelligence Committee concluded that Castro would not have blamed Kennedy for the CIA-Mafia plots against him. "Castro probably would not have been certain that the CIA was behind the underworld attempts," the Senate panel decided.

Nor would Castro have distinguished between CIA-encouraged plots and wildcat operations by Cuban exiles "which were not affiliated in any way with the CIA," the Senate report said.

The House committee is not so sure, however. It was "unable to confirm the findings of the Senate Committee that there were reasons to discount the dangers to President Kennedy that may have resulted from CIA associations with the Mafia in anti-Castro activities." The committee also doesn't buy the Senate panel's view that Castro wouldn't have blamed Kennedy for the CIA plots.

Indeed, the House committee report concludes, if Castro erred in his assumptions about the Kennedy administration's involvement, "it was in the direction of attributing more, not less, U.S. government control over attempts to depose him."

The still-secret CIA report supports this position. But the CIA report agrees with the Senate committee that the Mafia plots ended months before the Dallas shooting and therefore would have had minimal influence on Castro.

HERE AGAIN, the House committee is not so sure. "The record is clear that the relationships created by these plots did not terminate in February 1963, nor had the threat to Castro or President Kennedy abated by that time," states the report, made available to our associate Tony Capaccio. "There is insufficient evidence to conclude that the inherently sinister relationship became benign before Nov. 22, 1963."

As to the origins of the CIA-Mafia alliance to kill Castro, the House report notes that both parties had motives for eliminating the Cuban dictator. The CIA's were political; the mob's was financial.

Their partnership may go down as the most sordid relationship in U.S. history.

SINGLE-ISSUE POLITICS: In an era of close elections and single-issue pressure groups, a politician's career often hangs on his position on one question of public policy.

The gun lobby shot down former Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J. Former Sen. William Hathaway, D-Me., went down to defeat for favoring the Panama Canal treaties. So did former Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa.

As the pressure groups line up their sights for the 1980 elections, one prominent target is startled to find himself one one particular single issue group's hit list. Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, has been marked for political extinction by the anti-abortionists despite his generally conservative stand.

Like the right-to-lifers, Church opposes abortion, but accepts the need for it where the mother's life is in danger. He even favors letting hospital employees refuse to handle abortions on religious grounds.

But Church would permit abortions in case of rape or incest, or when the mother would suffer severe and lasting damage if denied abortion. For the right-to-lifers, this slight deviation from the orthodox line is enough to lump Church in with those who favor abortion on demand.

Safety corrections needed on all plants, NRC determines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission said today the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant accident shows a need for urgent safety corrections on nearly all of nation's nuclear plants.

The agency did not spell out the actions needed, but said a design flaw was found in some power plants designed by Westinghouse Corp.

The commission said the design flaw, similar to one at the Three Mile Island plant built in Pennsylvania by Babcock and Wilcox, could mislead plant operators and prevent vital emergency cooling in the event of an accident.

The agency said safety corrections were needed "on a priority basis for all light-water power reactor facilities," which would cover nearly all the 72 nuclear power plants in the country.

In a "preliminary notification" which the agency telephoned to reactor operators, the NRC said Westinghouse sent plant owners a notice April 7 warning that some Westinghouse-designed facilities depend on a combination of two instrument signals by the plant computer to turn on emergency cooling automatically when there is trouble with the main cooling system.

Complete cooling failure can lead to a meltdown or overheating of the reactor's core and the release of large amounts of radioactivity.

Westinghouse said it was believed that a small break in a reactor pressurizer could leave one of these signals appearing high while the other falls.

In this case, the computer would not turn over emergency cooling and a plant operator could be misled into "erroneous actions."

Westinghouse recommended that operators start emergency cooling manually if the pressure signal alone drops below its trigger point.

"But it has been concluded," the NRC said, "that further actions should be considered on a priority basis for all light-water power reactor facilities."

KTRN, the only radio station on the air, issued frantic pleas from the Red Cross for blood and for fuel to operate the city's emergency vehicles.

Wichita Falls Mayor Kenneth Hill made an impassioned plea over radio for the residents prowling the streets to "please go home." He estimated property damage "in the millions."

The mayor urged residents to conserve water and said, "We don't know when power will be restored." Other officials said it might be as long as two days.

Capt. Terry Denson, with the Texas National Guard in Austin, said Gov. Bill Clements' office authorized the activation of 150 guardsmen from three units in Wichita Falls and Bowie to assist in search and rescue operations.

City Editor Bill McGee said "hospitals and civil defense forces" are in absolute chaos.

Wichita Falls high school ROTC units were called out to join National Guardsmen, military reservist, city and county employees in directing traffic, guarding the numerous downed power lines and protecting stores from potential looters.

The front wall of the Johnson & Johnson plant on the city's southwest side was wiped away by the tornado, and trailers from a nearby mobile home park shot across the highway from the force of the wind.

A safe in the National Guard armory exploded, leaving night sticks and incomplete M-16 rifles exposed. The bloodied wreckage of 20 cars were smashed underneath a bridge and into the abutment. Roofs were sheared away from some of the vehicles and several were battered until they could no longer be recognized as cars.

In Vernon, hospital administrator Billy Robertson said Wilbarger General Hospital Wichita Falls and Altus, Okla. Some of the injured also were taken to a hospital in Henrietta, Okla.

The Wilbarger Memorial Auditorium in Vernon was converted into an emergency shelter.

Schools out for Easter

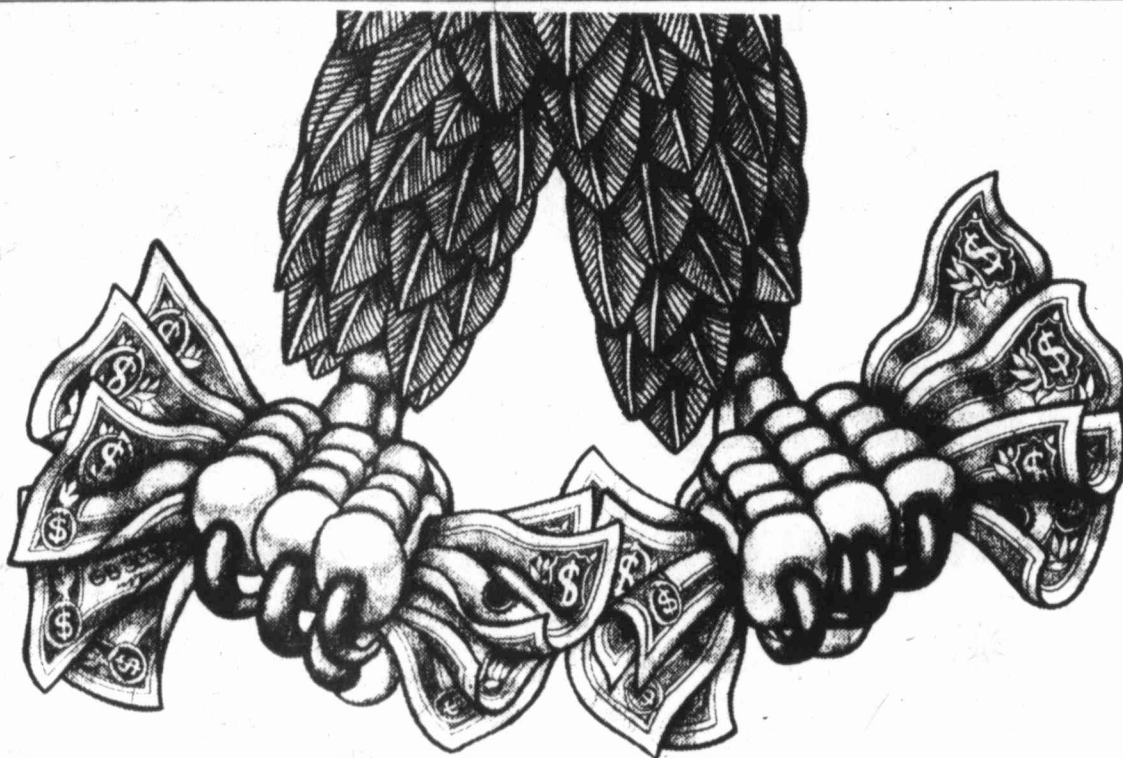

The county's three school systems will all observe a holiday schedule, with the coming of Easter.

Students in Coahoma have been out all week. They return to classes Monday.

In Big Spring, classes will dismiss 45 minutes early Thursday. The pupils do not return for classes until Tuesday morning, when they check in at the regular time.

Forsan students will begin their Easter break after today. They will remain on holiday until Monday morning.

Because students at Howard College had their break earlier, there will be no disruption of classes at the school.

Two city employees honored Zone change advanced

Two city employees were honored at Tuesday's meeting of the Big Spring City Council. Raymond Bustamante received a 10-year pin for service to the city. He began working for the city in December of 1968 as a laborer in the Sanitation Department, and was promoted to his present position of Service Worker in the garage department on Feb. 10, 1975.

Alvin C. Dorton, a native Big Springer, also received a 10-year pin. He began work as a laborer in the Water Treatment Plant in May of 1968. He was promoted to Plant Operator in 1969, and transferred to the City Fire Department in 1973, where he rose to his present position of Driver in 1974.

During the meeting, the council also gave Mayor Wade Choate permission to enter into contract with Roy Crim Engineering firm. The firm will provide an engineering design for street improvements funded under the Community Development Block Program this year.

According to city officials, the program will fund the paving of 18 blocks of previously unpaved streets, all on the north side of the city. A total of $160,000 has been provided for the project.

The council also approved the first reading of an ordinance designed to crack down on peddlers, itinerant merchants and solicitors. The move was made following complaints from a number of local merchants about practices of a variety of non-permanent vendors.

"I represent a number of businesses in Big Spring, and we object to the people selling on the corners and taking money out of the city," said Robert Pruitt, local merchant.

"This ordinance will cover the treatment of those such as vendors who sell sofas on the corner. It will include provisions for the purchase of a license costing $100 a day, to be paid a day in advance," said Elliott Mitchell, city attorney.

A provision will also be included requiring the purchase of a State Sales Tax Permit by those covered under the ordinance.

Another first reading passed by the council calls for the rezoning of 21.4 acres of land along Wasson Road. The land is currently zoned Single Family-2, and extends from the Jet Drive-in Theater to Parkway Road.

Robert Thomas, owner of part of the property under consideration, had asked for the zone change in order to construct a pastry shop near the Jet Theater. No one appeared at the meeting to object to the change.

All but Councilman Larry Miller voted in favor of the zone adjustment.

Larry Bristow, director of the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center, appeared before the council to request a yearly subsidy increase from the city of $2,500. The city currently subsidizes the center with $5,000 a year.

The council determined to review the city's six-month budget with City Secretary Tom Ferguson before making a decision on the request.

Council members gave city officials permission to solicit bids for the replacement of golf cart sheds at the Municipal Golf Course. Both figures from private firms and those using city crews as a construction force will be considered.

It will be determined upon review of these bids whether the current total of 40 a larger number of units will be constructed. Assistant

City Manager Paul Feazelle estimated that pre-fab units would cost between $12,000 and $12,400, while units built by city crews would cost between $8,000 and $10,000.

In other business, council members:

—Donated a section of 14th Street to the Church of the Nazarene. The property will be a part of the site of a fellowship hall and a new sanctuary in the future.

—Accepted minutes of meetings of the Structural Standards Board, the Traffic Commission and the City Council.

—Tabled a request for funds to be used by the city's Arson Control Center.

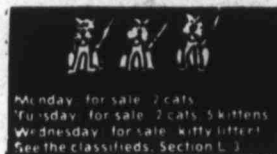

—Gave permission to advertise for bids for a new lawn mower for the Parks Department. Projected cost is approximately $4,500.

Teamsters, trucking industry ready to roll

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Teamsters union and trucking companies are getting ready to roll again, ending a nationwide shutdown after reaching a tentative contract agreement that reportedly meets President Carter's anti-inflation guidelines.

"The strike and defensive shutdown (by the industry) are being terminated," chief federal mediator Wayne L. Horvitz said shortly before midnight Tuesday as he announced a settlement in the 10-day work stoppage.

"Procedures for return to work will be made within 24 hours," he said.

The new package would provide increases in wages, cost-of-living and fringe benefits estimated at 26 to 30 percent over three years.

Union President Frank Fitzsimmons said he would recommend ratification by the 300,000-member rank and file covered by the pact. "I'm sure they'll be satisfied with this agreement; at least I hope so," he said.

The union said it would take four to six weeks to complete the ratification vote.

The two sides reached their agreement under the prodding of federal mediators in a final marathon round of bargaining that stretched over two days.

The settlement spelled an end to the longest industrywide shutdown in history, a dispute that forced mass layoffs in the auto industry but otherwise caused little damage to the nation's economy.

The dispute began at midnight March 31, when the two sides failed to meet a deadline for agreeing to a new contract. The Teamsters launched strikes against 73 companies, and Trucking Management Inc., the industry bargaining arm that represents about 500 firms, responded with a lockout that prevented union members from working at any of their companies.

Ugandan capital falls to invading Tanzanians

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Kampala, President Idi Amin's capital, fell to an invasion force of Tanzanians and Ugandan exiles early today, and by morning only scattered pockets of Ugandan troops were resisting in the city.

Amin was reported to have left Kampala Tuesday for his new headquarters in Jinja, 50 miles to the east. It was not known yet whether the invaders would pursue him. "The fascist dictator is finished," loudspeakers told Ugandan troops still holding out. They were urged to surrender.

The invaders started into Kampala Tuesday afternoon from the north and south after a night-long artillery bombardment, followed by a fierce rocket, artillery and jet fighter attack in the morning and early afternoon. Despite the heavy bombardment, there was little visible damage to homes and commercial buildings.

The Tanzanian column from the south was commanded by spear-brandishing Lt. Col. Ben Msekwa, who ran ahead of his troops to lead them whenever resistance was encountered. Heavy automatic weapons fire was poured into pockets of Ugandan holdouts, silencing them.

The Tanzanians and their Ugandan allies completed their penetration of the city during the night, charging isolated groups of Amin's troops in attacks launched by bugle calls.

Msekwa was reported to have had morning tea with the North Korean ambassador.

Kampalans greeted the invaders as they moved in from the south, swarming over three Tanzanian tanks and decorating them with flowers.

Looting Ugandans were seen at work in the city in the morning, and there were bodies of Ugandan troops who apparently had been beaten to death. Some of the looters tried to share their booty with the Tanzanians, but the invaders told them to return the goods.

Clements impressed with home for girls operation by Roloff

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — The church and the state got together for a while here as Gov. Bill Clements took a guided look at the 500 acres where evangelist Lester Roloff houses 178 girls.

"We've longed and looked for this day," Roloff, who has long opposed state licensing of his youth homes, said Tuesday in welcoming Clements and Attorney General Mark White.

"I'm much impressed with him," Clements said after the tour. "I'm much impressed with his work."

The visit by the state officials came amid a pair of controversies at the Roloff homes — the lingering legal battle about state licensing and a recently reported violent episode at the Rebekah Home for Girls here.

While White and Clements made little mention of the July incident, in which five girls reportedly stabbed a sixth resident, Roloff took the offense.

With his booming voice filling his People's Church, the evangelist talked about the incident and why he chose not to report it to law enforcement officials.

"They said we didn't report it, but that little girl reported it," Roloff said. "She said, 'God, help me. And she was not killed. She's batting 100 percent today. All of those girls have been saved.'"

Roloff also said he is disappointed at public reaction to the incident.

"I thought the whole world would like a success story, but some don't know how to take it. I'm sorry," he said.

The church session — punctuated by songs and psalms — was the focal point of the campus tour. The residents waved Texas and American flags and greeted White and Clements with standing ovations.

White spoke briefly after Roloff introduced him as a "Christian gentleman of the first order."

The attorney general, who will pursue the state's contention that the Roloff homes must be licensed, quoted from the Bible.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," White said, drawing a standing ovation.

Roloff admitted that getting a rousing reception in the church was not difficult.

"If you want to get an applause, just hold up the Book or say a word from it," Roloff said.

White offered no comments about the stabbing incident. He said the case is in the hands of the local district attorney.

The attorney general said he expects to hear soon from Roloff attorneys about the licensing battle.

"We will enforce the law," White said after the three men met privately for 10 minutes.

Clements also drew loud applause in the packed church.

"I have a strong conviction that you have been called here for a purpose. And it is evident that you are succeeding," he said.

The visiting state officials were given Bibles and other gifts and filed out of the church. The young voices that sang "The Eyes of Jesus" as the officials came in, sang "The Eyes of Jesus" as Clements and White headed out.

Prior to the church session, a Roloff official led the campus tour. Clements stopped to chat with girls at the home as he viewed the spacious facility.

"I am convinced Brother Roloff in his opinion is doing God's work as he sees it," Clements said at a press conference later in the day.

"His situation and the licensing situation is a question the attorney general and I are both going to have to consider," he added.

Sandinista guerrillas step up war on Somoza

SAN ISIDRO, Nicaragua (AP) — Fighting was reported in half a dozen cities in northern Nicaragua as the Sandinista guerrillas stepped up their war against President Anastasio Somoza.

Among the cities were Esteli, El Sauce, Leon and Condega, but the national guard, Somoza's 10,000-man army, said the situation was under control Tuesday and that 64 guerrillas were killed in three days of fighting along with seven soldiers and nine bystanders.

The guard also denied the guerrillas controlled Esteli, as witnesses claimed, but sent reinforcements and jeeps packed with machine guns and other weapons to the embattled city 18 miles north of San Isidro. The guard also sent a front-end loader, presumably to knock down six-foot barricades the guerrillas were erecting.

The Red Cross said the guard made several forays out of its encircled Esteli compound with an armored vehicle Tuesday night, and that its cannon could be heard firing.

A Red Cross spokesman also said the government agreed to allow a Red Cross supply convoy into Esteli early today and that the Red Cross would try to evacuate all residents who want to leave.

Refugees from the fighting said the guerrillas were better armed and organized than during the two-week September uprising in which an estimated 1,500 persons were killed before four northern cities were recaptured by the guard.

"It's starting out just like it did in September. We left a war behind," said Ruben Blandon, who fled Esteli along with several hundred other persons for this village. As he spoke, gunfire and occasional heavy explosions could be heard in the mountains toward Esteli.

The refugees said snipers were firing from three locations along the 18 miles of highway that separate Esteli and San Isidro but added that the national guard was patrolling the highway as far as the Esteli garrison.

Home financing to share spotlight

"Making the commitment to buy a home can be a frightening experience," said Pat Medley, president of the Big Spring Board of Realtors. "At least 25 percent of the questions the board receives from the public each day come from people confused by the complexity of financing a home."

Five speakers experienced in home financing, programs for low-income buyers and other details of home buying will conduct a free seminar designed to help first-time home buyers at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, April 19, in the Cactus Room of the Howard College Student Union Building.

Sponsored by the Big Spring Board of Realtors, the seminar will stress information on selecting and buying a first home and is designed for those actively seeking a home, as well as those who hope to buy in the future.

"There are lots of factors to be considered in purchasing a home," said board vice-president Elbia Henderson, "and if we can alert would-be buyers to just a few of them we will have achieved our purpose."

Charles Beil, president of First Federal Savings Association, will discuss home financing, including programs to assist low-income buyers. The complexities of conventional mortgages, VA and FHA loans, and financial assistance programs confuse more first-time purchasers than any other part of the transaction, according to Jackie Johnson of Jackie Johnson Mortgage Co., Midland.

Other speakers will include Rufus Rowland, Marc Campbell, Bill Estes and Mike McKinney discussing the advantages and disadvantages of home ownership, how to actually look at a home, closing costs and the formal procedures involved in buying a home.

A question and answer session will follow the panel discussion. No charge will be made for attending.

Easter morning at Coliseum

Baptist youth present musical

"His Children," a youth musical ensemble from the First Baptist Church, will offer Big Spring area residents a most unusual Easter experience Sunday morning in the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum on the Howard College campus.

They will present the new musical, "Breakfast in Galilee," written by Sonny Salsbury and directed by Joe Whitten. Whitten secured the services of Janie Ross of Dallas to assist him in staging the musical. She was in the original cast that premiered this work across the United States the past fall.

"Breakfast in Galilee" is a program that enables the entire community to come together. The program gets under way at 8 a.m. Those participating will be able to eat a breakfast prepared by the Howard College food service, hear a most unusual musical of worship, after which they will have plenty of time to attend the church

ches of their choice.

The only cost for those attending will be $2 for adults and those children desiring the complete breakfast. Children eating the continental meal will be charged $1. These charges are to cover the actual expense of the food service. No profit will be made by caterers or by the First Baptist Church.

Tickets must be purchased on or before Friday. No tickets will be sold at the door.

The tickets are available at the coliseum box office, Cleveland Athletics and the First Baptist Church.

Those planning to attend are being asked to park on the East parking lot and to enter the coliseum by way of the ramp down to the arena floor where breakfast will be served.

The musical will be staged in the round immediately after all present have eaten.

Farm

Final cotton figures surprising

The 1978 cotton crop is ginned, with the exception of a few thousand bales in Haskell, Knox, Baylor, and Kent Counties, reports B. B. Manly of the USDA's Abilene Marketing Services Offices.

The cotton crop brought two surprises — one good, the other not so good. The good was production that should reach 528,000 running bales, but prices have been on a steady decline, since December.

Early season cotton brought growers around 12½ cents per pound over CCC loan prices, compared to recent sales of 6 to 7½ cents per pound over the loan. Last week mixed quality lots sold for 49 to 50 cents per pound. Grade 42, Staple 32, Mike 35 to 49, brought around 49 to 50 cents per pound. Cottonseed prices were very strong, bringing growers 125 dollars per ton, compared with 61 dollars the year before.

The Munday sub-office area, consisting of Haskell, Knox, Baylor, Throckmorton, Young and Jack counties, may produce 120,000 bales of cotton. Sixty thousand bales were classed at Munday, and another 53,000 classed at Abilene after the Munday office closed February 8. They may gin another 7,000. In July it appeared the Munday area would do well to make 20,000, but the August rains turned the crop into an average or better one. Abilene counties produced about 405,000 running bales, at least double the amount expected in July. The 10 year average for Abilene and Munday Offices from 1967 through 1977 is 500,000 bales per year. The 1977 crop was 849,000 running bales.

Total value of the 1978 cotton crop was around $157 million. The $157 million is based on 450 pound bales and cottonseed at $125 per ton.

'Jaws' can remove smashed car door in a few minutes

'Jaws Of Life'

"Somebody get a pry bar — hurry, we gotta get this man out fast or he'll bleed to death."

In the past, frantic efforts to free trapped victims in a wrecked car or truck might take hours of effort with several men struggling with crude tools to pry metal away and get inside the car.

Now, however, a tool operated by a hydraulic motor can help rescue personnel to get inside a crushed auto in minutes, and the Big Spring Fire Department has the tool, called "Jaws of Life."

When Webb Air Force Base left and the City of Big Spring took over much of the equipment, two complete units of the $5,000 to $6,000 tool were among the items. However, it wasn't until recently that a representative of Texas Firefighters Equipment Company, which sells the Hurst-made tool, was able to come to Big Spring to show local emergency personnel how to operate it.

John Gill, shown operating "Jaws" in the photos, demonstrated how the tool could be used, under the watching eyes of members of the Big Spring Fire and Police Departments, Howard County Sheriff's Office and Shaffer Ambulance.

Gill said that, in most wrecks which would otherwise require two hours or more to remove victims, firefighters can get into the car with "Jaws" in less than five minutes. On one trial run, the TFEC personnel, using one tool, took a crushed car and removed four doors, the front seat, and steering column and dash out of the way of rescuers in 6½ minutes.

"Jaws" has up to 140,000 pounds of push or pull strength, which can be used with snap-on accessories to prize, crush, break, cut or tear away the crushed remains of a potential "Death Trap" in which the victim might otherwise bleed to death during the hours it would require to remove them without the tool.

"Not only is this valuable in wrecks, but it can be used to force doorways open to enter burning buildings, to cut through metal — almost like a giant can opener — to get into enclosures in emergency situations," said Gill, who added that with a silent motor, the tool was also a potential aid to burglars.

"That is why the state of New York requires that every unit be registered, and approval given for the purchase," Gill noted.

For the Big Spring demonstration, 87 Wrecking donated a smashed vehicle, and Glen Grigg, visible in several of the photos, volunteered to play the part of the trapped victim. As an employee of Shaffer Ambulance Service and the "demonstration victim," Grigg said the "Jaws of Life" could help rescuers get inside a crushed car rapidly, and keep it from becoming a certain death trap for a bleeding or seriously injured victim.

... cut through metal

... pull the steering wheel up and out of the way

... cut columns away and push the dash up

... all for the purpose of removing wreck victims rapidly and saving lives

Need to know more about drug

By Robert Wallace, Ed. D.

Dr. Wallace: I'm tired of your old-fashioned stand on the use of marijuana. If you really want to know the facts contact NORML (National Organization for Reform of Marijuana Laws).

This organization will straighten you out. — Beverly, Elizabethtown, Ky.

Beverly: It's interesting that you mention NORML, because last week I was reading a leading magazine and in it, Keith Stroup of NORML admits that "there is a lot we still need to know about the drug."

Please allow me to go on. We know that marijuana is not a killer. Nor is there any scientific evidence that moderate use leads to crime, heroin addiction, sexual promiscuity or brain damage. But it's what is NOT known about pot that can hurt the most.

With social pressures to try the drug, many teen-agers might overlook the still-unanswered questions about long-range or unsuspected effects of marijuana.

Teens are far more vulnerable than adults to the effects of the drug, experts say.

"Young adulthood is a period of intense growth and physical change," notes Dr. Robert Petersen of the National Institute of Drug Abuse. "If there's any messing up of the hormone functions during this time, it could be serious. And we don't know enough to rule out this possibility."

In addition, teen-age years are a time for learning to cope with new problems and decisions, and drugs that distract or encourage avoidance of these problems may hamper development in this respect.

Petersen points out another risk. "Unlike males, who produce new sperm all the time, girls are born with one lifetime supply of eggs. There's a potential danger if we ever find that this drug damages the genetic egg material."

Some drug experts counter that pot has been used so long by so many people that any widespread abnormalities caused by the drug would almost certainly have shown themselves by now. However, as one doctor warns, "There may be some surprises. Fifty years ago, no one would have suspected tobacco of being a major cause of heart attacks and lung cancer."

Interesting, isn't it?

Dr. Wallace: I'm 15 and my best girlfriend always steals my boyfriends from me. They start out liking me a lot, but then she comes around with her sweet talk and wiggle and takes them away from me.

When they start liking her, she drops them.

I've been putting up with this for a long time and I'm tired of being hurt. Why does she do this? Please help. — Flo, London Ontario, Canada

Flo: I think the time has come to find another best friend because this girl doesn't qualify. She does this just to let you know she has more "power" than you. It's her ego trip.

Extra calories count

COLLEGE STATION — Avoid a waistline disaster when eating out by planning in advance, a foods and nutrition specialist, Marilyn Haggard, advises. Remember, extra calories do count and they do show — on you, she points out.

Miss Haggard is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

So, keep the following suggestions in mind:

When eating lunch out regularly, plan smaller morning and evening meals.

When eating a late evening meal out, eat a light snack such as a piece of fruit, a small cube of cheese or a couple of crackers earlier in the evening to curb appetite.

Read menus carefully selecting entrees that are broiled, baked or grilled.

Avoid items which are prepared with breading, sauces and gravies.

Remove breading from fried meats and discard.

Select plain vegetables. Cut baked potatoes in half and eat only one portion.

Limit butter or margarine to one pat and season to taste. Decline sour cream, cheese and bacon bits.

Green salads are an excellent slimming choice. Ask for dressing on the side.

Use only enough to lightly moisten and flavor the salad. Better yet, request vinegar or lemon juice for the salad.

Limit intake of extra bread servings by asking that the server not leave bread baskets on the table.

Instead of cocktails try a fruit or vegetable juice.

Ask that plates be removed immediately after finishing and do not return to buffet lines for seconds.

When eating at fast food establishments, select the smaller burger or fish dinner.

Remove batter from fried chicken to save calories.

Thin crust pizza is lower in calories than thicker crust pizza.

Fun and Crafts Day enjoyed by extension homemakers

Members of the City Extension Homemakers Club enjoyed Fun and Crafts Day when they met April 6 at 10:30 a.m. in the Flame Room of Pioneer Natural Gas Co.

Mrs. C. F. Dohaney president, presided.

Mrs. H. P. Wooten was introduced as a guest and she displayed many different kinds of quilted pillows, shams and quilts. She revealed that quilting is an old craft steadily becoming popular again for older adults as well as the young.

A display of small colored, beaded bells and snow flakes used for Christmas tree ornaments was presented by another guest, Mrs. C. A. Smauley.

"To make the bells, different size beads are strung on nylon thread and shaped into bells. The snow flakes are strung on pipe cleaners to shape them," explained Mrs. Smauley.

Club member Mrs. M.F. Hodnett showed those present how to make angel tree ornaments from stained glass and mirrors and how to shape and make beads out of colored paper and string for necklaces.

Mrs. W.N. Norred displayed "Eggs with a View." This consisted of Easter eggs made from molded granulated sugar, using cake icing for decoration.

Mrs. W.G. Priebe showed an afghan with 42 blocks, each block representing a different crochet stitch.

Crocheted baby blankets were displayed by Mrs. Melvin Newton.

During the business meeting, plans were made to attend district meeting in Andrews April 17.

Mrs. Norred, Mrs. Ross Callihan and Mrs. Waymon Etchison were appointed to the By-Laws Committee.

Other guests introduced were Mrs. Eltea McMains, and Mrs. Elsie Cravens.

The next meeting will be April 27 in the home of Mrs. Callihan.

How to use softeners

COLLEGE STATION — Making fabric softeners work efficiently starts with knowing how they work in the first place, says a clothing specialist.

Fabric softeners add softness and they control static electricity — they do not soften water, Becky Culp explains.

Mrs. Culp is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

The most popular type is the final-rinse-cycle type. Another teams with detergent in the wash cycle. Still another works in the dryer. It might be tear-off sheets, pads, attachable bars or aerosols.

Whatever the type, it is important to follow label directions to avoid problems.

After continued use on clothing several times, fabric softeners can leave a "build-up" on garment surfaces. "Build-up" interferes with the performance of certain fabric finishes and fibers, and it causes dinginess and graying or a lack of absorbency.

To prevent this, omit the fabric softener from every fourth or fifth laundry load. To correct problem build-up, soak garments in detergent and bleach that is safe for the fabric. Then launder garments without using the softener.

When fabric softeners leave stains in garments, the stains will resemble grease stains — they are usually blue-gray, blue-green, yellow or black. Remove these stains by gently rubbing them with bar or liquid detergent. Then re-launder the fabric.

Women enlightened on daycare center

The 1955 Hyperion Club met in the home of Mrs. C.W. Mahoney, 4 Highland Heather, with Mrs. Robert F. Penner presiding.

The "Collect" was read by Mrs. Garland Morrison. Secretary Mrs. Jim Owens called roll to 23 members. Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as corrected. A thank you note from Suzanne Johnson, scholarship to Howard College winner, was read into the minutes.

Mrs. James Cowan, By-laws Committee, read for the second time the proposed addition to the By-Laws creating associate memberships.

The Nominating Committee including Mrs. Walter Wheat, chairman; Mrs. W.A. Moore, and Mrs. James R. Cave, presented the slate of officers for the year 1979-1980. They are President Mrs. H.B. Perry; Vice President Mrs. James Cowan; Recording Secretary and Publicity Mrs. Mathew Hunter; Corresponding Secretary Mrs. Charles Beil; Treasurer Mrs. W.A. Moore; and Parliamentarian Mrs. Robert F. Penner.

Mrs. H.B. Perry, program chairman, introduced Mrs. Ray Lawlis, director of the West Side Day Care Center, and asked her to explain the operations of the Center and her job responsibilities.

Mrs. Lawlis said the Center operated under Title 20 of the State of Texas and that its social services were funded 20 percent by the Day Care Association, 30 percent by local and 70 percent by the State.

First, family eligibility is determined and parents pay, 1½ percent of their gross income for one child to attend the center.

Mrs. Lawlis said that home visits are made after the child has been at the center one month to enable the parents and the workers at the Center to better fulfill the needs of the particular child. Many needs such as referral to the Council for the Blind for physical therapy have been the results of these visits.

A question and answer period followed.

Mrs. Jerry Snodgrass and Mrs. James Cape assisted Mrs. Mahoney as her co-hostesses.

Mrs. Penner announced that the meeting of May 1 would be a luncheon in her home at noon, and each member is to bring a covered dish. The installation of the new slate of officers will follow the luncheon.

VFW Auxiliary will sponsor Lite-a-Bike

Mrs. Frances Loftis was welcomed as a new member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Auxiliary as they met Friday in the Post Home in Silver Heels Addition at 7:30 p.m.

Mrs. Ethel Knapp, president, presided. Committee reports were given.

The Post and Auxiliary will present a Loyalty Day program at the next meeting, May 1. An American flag will be presented to the students of Elbow Elementary School.

A contribution was made to the state president's special heart projects. Plans were made to sponsor a Lite-a-Bike program.

Second-Hand Love Simply Won't Wear

DEAR ABBY: Would you please say something in your column about girls who get involved with married men?

My 23-year-old daughter has entered into such a relationship. The man is handsome, successful and charming, but can offer her nothing but a sleazy after-hours office romance. (The same old story: his marriage is "empty and loveless" but he can't give up his children.)

My daughter is pretty, intelligent and completely devoted to this man. (She works for him.) It hurts me to see her waste her best years in a hopeless relationship.

Since my information about this affair is confidential, I can't approach my daughter with warnings and "motherly" advice.

Perhaps a word from you might help. She reads your column faithfully and believes in you.

DEPENDING ON YOU

DEAR DEPENDING: A "word" from me isn't likely to help much. What your daughter needs is a word from someone who has been down that road and found that it usually leads to heartbreak alley. If she has read me "faithfully," she will have seen many such letters.

An involvement with a married man is painful, degrading and hopeless at best. But some women have to learn the hard way.

DEAR ABBY: Do you think girls who wear glasses come on as sexy as girls who don't?

G. IN PERRY, IOWA

DEAR G.: It depends on their frames.

DEAR ABBY: After many years of marriage my husband began to get careless about his personal hygiene. He'd forget to use a deodorant, or his toothbrush, work hard all day, then join me in bed without showering. He was physically very unattractive.

I didn't nag or scold him. Instead I became the aggressor. I'd slip a cute little poem to him which read something like this:

"Brush your teeth and take a shower
And meet me in the bedroom in half an hour!"
Or, after dinner, I'd lay out his good pajamas and tell him I just HAD to have him, and he'd better hurry up and shower and get to bed before I got out of the mood!

Let me tell you, it worked!
If only women would realize how much more they can accomplish with a little humor and sweet words. Also, men like to be pursued for a change.

My little game has made a big difference in our marriage. Abby, now sometimes he even writes ME a note. Pass this along.

"TIGER WOMAN" (his name for me)

DEAR ABBY: Like many others, I never thought I would have to write to you, but something so offended my sensitivities that I felt compelled to write for your opinion.

What do you think of a 4-year-old child who chews tobacco? His parents think it's cute. The little boy always carries a plug of tobacco and chews and spits just like a little old man.

When I told his parents that it could damage the child's health, they laughed and said, "He doesn't smoke it, so it's not harmful."

Can your experts come up with any facts about the possible dangers of chewing tobacco? Especially to a 4-year-old? Maybe they will listen to you.

A FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: The American Cancer Society informs me that there is evidence that chewing tobacco can cause cancer of the lips, tongue, mouth or throat. The parents of that child should be hauled into court for child abuse!

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. For a personal reply write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Cal. 90069. Please enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Dionne Warwick thought Red Cross was only about hurricanes.

"True, I always thought of Red Cross as a kind of rescue force in times of disaster and little more.

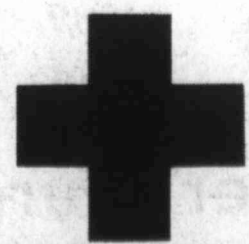

"Then I learned that in towns and cities across America, Red Cross gives the kind of help to individuals that you rarely hear about, because it doesn't make headlines in the newspaper.

"Red Cross, for instance, helps elderly people get to doctors' appointments... and even to the store. They help veterans get back on the track. They teach kids to swim... and how to save lives.

"I found out that if you added up all the different humanitarian jobs Red Cross does in different towns, the number comes to over 100!

"That's why I'm helping to keep Red Cross ready. And why I hope you do, too."

Keep Red Cross ready.

Denver, Phoenix take playoff wins

By The Associated Press

So who needs George McGinnis? Apparently not the Denver Nuggets. Center Dan Issel outplayed Los Angeles' mighty Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Tom Boswell contributed 19 points as a starter in place of the injured McGinnis as the Nuggets defeated the Lakers 110-105 Tuesday night in the opening game of their National Basketball Association playoff mini-series.

Denver can wrap up its best-of-three first-round series with a victory at Los Angeles Friday night.

In Wednesday night's other playoff game, the Phoenix Suns beat the Portland Trail Blazers 107-103. The second game of that series will be played in Portland Friday night.

The two Eastern Conference series get under way tonight, with the New Jersey Nets at Philadelphia 76ers and Atlanta Hawks at Houston Rockets.

Issel led the Nuggets with a season-high 30 points, including a three-point play that gave Denver its biggest lead at 85-67 with 4:52 left in the third period.

Los Angeles got its fast break going and outscored the Nuggets 23-8 to close within three, but could come no closer as David Thompson hit a free throw and Issel and Charlie Scott contributed baskets to push the lead back up to eight.

McGinnis suffered torn ligaments in his left ankle March 30 and has not played since. He was reactivated by the Nuggets in order to become eligible for the playoffs, but isn't expected to play until the late rounds, if at all.

"If there was a key statistic, I'd say it was rebounding," said Denver Coach Donn Walsh. "We beat them 45-37 on the boards, even without McGinnis. Issel played Abdul-Jabbar as well as anyone can, keeping him occupied the whole game, and Boswell gave us a big lift inside."

Lakers Coach Jerry West said his team dug itself too much of a hole. "We played very well the last 18 minutes, but we buried ourselves early," he said. "I think we'll play better at home on Friday."

Phoenix led by 10 midway through the first period before Portland rallied to close within one at 102-101 with 1:15 to go. A basket by Paul Westphal and a free throw by Walter Davis gave the Suns a four-point lead, and a basket by Portland's Ron Brewer was offset by a basket by Davis in the closing seconds.

Westphal led the Suns with 28 points and Davis had 25, with Davis getting 11 points in the fourth quarter and Westphal 10.

Rookies Ron Brewer and Mychal Thompson were high scorers for Portland with 26 and 22 points, respectively.

Phoenix shot 56 percent in the game to Portland's 48 percent, making up for a 45-30 rebounding deficit.

In NBA mini-series

Rockets host Atlanta

HOUSTON (AP) — Atlanta Hawks Coach Hubie Brown says he won't make any changes for tonight's National Basketball Association playoff game with the Houston Rockets but he'd sure like to do something about Rocket center Moses Malone.

Malone was the driving force in Houston's return to the playoffs during the regular season, leading the league in rebounding and minutes played. He grabbed 1,444 rebounds for a 17.6 average and averaged 41.3 minutes per game.

In four regular season games against the Hawks, Malone averaged 28 points and 18 rebounds.

"Whatever we're doing, with Moses must be wrong,"

Brown lamented. "The bleeping guy is killing us. We've just got to get somebody to slow him down."

But Rockets Coach Tom Nissalke isn't too comforting.

"If Mo is on his game, it doesn't make any difference who is guarding him," Nissalke said.

The best of three first round series will move to Atlanta's Omni Friday night and a third game, if necessary, would return to Houston Sunday at noon.

Brown says it's too late in the season to start making changes.

"We wouldn't dare change," he said. "We wouldn't know who we were if we did. We're very predictable. If we play our game, it should be very difficult for Houston to do what they want."

Despite Malone's dominance against Atlanta, the Hawks still managed to beat the Rockets three of four games in the regular season using a variety of defensive strategies.

"Offensively, we've just got to be sure we get into our stuff (offense)," Rockets assistant coach Del Harris said. "They can cause you so many problems with their changing defenses and you need to have the discipline to get into your offense and get the shots you want."

The defending NBA champion Washington Bullets, who had the best regular season record in the NBA this season, are awaiting the winner of the best of three Houston-Atlanta series.

HE STRUCK OUT — Richie Hebner of the New York Mets reacts in disgust after striking out in the third inning of Tuesday's home opener of the Mets at Shea Stadium against the Montreal Expos.

Celtics, Bird continue talks

BOSTON (AP) — Indiana State star Larry Bird apparently wants to be the highest paid player in National Basketball Association history, asking a $6 million, six-year contract from the Boston Celtics.

The opening salvo in the contract talks was fired Tuesday by Bird's Boston-based agent, Bob Woolf, who met for three hours with Celtics President Red Auerbach.

The team made a counter offer, believed to be about $500,000 per year, but Auerbach wouldn't comment. He did say the two sides "are apart," while Woolf termed the gap "substantial."

Both sides say Bird wants a six-year contract, and talks will resume Thursday. Woolf would neither confirm nor deny a request for $1 million per year.

He said David Thompson of the Denver Nuggets is the highest paid NBA player, at $800,000 per season, adding, "If you were starting an NBA team, who would you rather have, Thompson or Bird?"

McGuire considering Chicago Bull post

CHICAGO (AP) — Former Marquette University basketball coach Al McGuire will be having serious talks with the Chicago Bulls about taking a management job with the National Basketball Association team, his attorney says.

McGuire, who works as a television sports commentator, repeatedly has said he is not interested in going back into coaching, but his Chicago attorney said Tuesday there may be a management job in store for McGuire.

The attorney, Charles Besser, said the Bulls have expressed "extreme interest" in hiring McGuire and that serious discussions will be held soon.

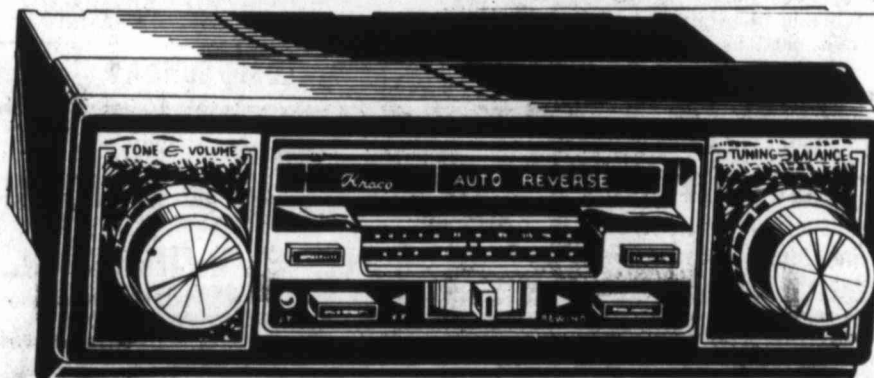

Hours after Harry Mangurian became sole owner of the Celtics, buying out partner John Y. Brown, a Kentucky gubernatorial hopeful, Auerbach said, "Now nothing can sidetrack me. We're on our way. Things are going to be taken care of."

The Celtics drafted Bird No. 1 last year as a junior. Bird then led Indiana State to the NCAA finals, winning player-of-the-year honors. If Boston can't sign the French Lick, Ind., native by the NBA June draft, he goes back in the talent pool.

Model law 'destroyed'

Consumer act changed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—The Senate has voted to change — one senator said destroy — a consumer protection law that purportedly was once hailed as a model for the other 49 states.

Sen. Bill Meier's proposed changes in the 1973 law cleared the Senate, 23-8, on Tuesday, after surviving two filibusters a week apart.

The final vote climaxed a bitter debate that appeared on the verge of turning into a personal confrontation between Meier and Sen. A.R. Schwartz, D-Galveston.

"The Consumer Destruction Act of 1979," was Sen. Lloyd Doggett's epithet for Meier's proposal, which now goes to the House.

Doggett, D-Austin, led a group of senators who stalled for a total of 24 hours in an attempt to arouse enough public support against the measure.

The Senate bill would require proof that a merchant's alleged deception amounted to a deliberate "unconscionable act" before the customer could collect triple damages, which are viewed by some as a deterrent to business fraud.

Doggett also objected the list of deceptive trade practices was shortened, and only the attorney general would be able to bring class-action suits.

"If you just steal a little from a lot of folks, nothing will happen," Doggett protested.

"A ridiculously bad bill... awful," shouted Schwartz, "the worst bill of the session."

He accused Meier of "perpetuating a fraud on the people of Texas" and said of his bill, "Nobody wants it, except the auto dealers and the real estate lobby."

Meier, D-Euless, insisted his proposed changes would "restore the balance to the market place area of the deceptive trade practice act."

"If God himself came out here today and asked you to vote against the lobby on this bill, you wouldn't do it," said Schwartz.

Since the consumer protection act became effective, businesses have done "backflips to satisfy consumers because they know gross penalties await them if they do not," said Sen. Ron Clower, D-Garland.

Clower said as a result of proposed changes by Meier, the only person who could cover triple damages for fraud or deceit would be a "senile old lady who had been completely taken advantage of, one who had been sold a car and doesn't have a driver's license."

The Senate repeatedly rejected proposed amendments that sponsors said would restore consumers' rights. A Clower amendment that was rejected 16-13 would have made it an offense for a person to fail to "disclose a past or existing fact known to him."

Doggett said this means a seller would not be liable for damages even if he sold a customer a termite-infested house and knew that it had termites.

Sen. Oscar Maauzy, D-Dallas, tried to add a provision that would enable a car buyer, for example, to "revoke his acceptance" of the vehicle if repeated attempts to repair it were unsuccessful. His amendment failed, however, 11-17.

Maauzy, the Senate sponsor of the original 1973 consumer protection law, said several years ago the nation's attorneys general had voted it a "model act" and recommended it to the other 49 states.

The House sponsor of the proposal, Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, who is now in the Senate, proposed an amendment to shift the burden of proof to the seller that he did not commit an unconscionable act. His amendment also failed, 13-17.

Sen. Gene Jones, D-Houston, said the "most awesome group in power and influence had come together to take the heart and soul out of the deceptive trade practices act."

"This Senate," said Schwartz, "consistently chooses to vote for liars, thieves and deceivers instead of the people of Texas."

Miss Marvin's attorney tearfully makes final statement to court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michelle Triola Marvin's lawyer tearfully urged a judge to give the former showgirl half of Lee Marvin's millions, crying out: "I implore this court to treat her fairly."

Marvin Mitchellson was the last lawyer to speak in final arguments as the Hollywood-style courtroom drama of love and money neared its crucial last act Tuesday.

His comments came at the end of nearly six hours of summations in which Marvin's chief attorney, A. David Kagon, said the actor never promised Miss Marvin a share of property and insisted that she is entitled to nothing.

"One of the reasons people don't get married," Kagon said, "is that they don't want the responsibilities and obligations."

The last words in the landmark case were left to Superior Court Judge Arthur Marshall, who said he will ponder some 8,000 pages of testimony before issuing a written ruling.

Marshall, who said he hopes to rule early next week, must decide whether Miss Marvin is entitled to half of the fortune Marvin made during the six years the actor and the former showgirl lived together as lovers. Miss Marvin's suit asks specifically for $1.8 million.

"He took both halves and we want our half back, or part of our half back," Mitchellson told the judge.

He stressed that Miss Marvin had loved the actor and was devoted to him during their affair.

"Michelle has broken down a few times on the stand here and shed a few tears," he recalled. "That was not an act. It's obvious she was in love with this man and would have done anything in the world for him and hated to lose him."

At day's end, Miss Marvin, 46, quietly wept once more as Mitchellson recalled her former role as helpline to the 55-year-old actor.

"Just think of how many times she comforted him, and I don't mean sexually," he said. "Think of how many times she held his head up, how many hangovers he had, how many times she got him off a barstool."

The white-haired Marvin stared glumly at Mitchellson as the attorney's voice rose to a crescendo in the crowded courtroom.

"Fairness is what this is about," Mitchellson said, his voice breaking. "I implore this court to treat her fairly. She gave something to this man. She helped him acquire this property. She deserves something."

Throughout the arguments, Marshall sharply questioned both lawyers on their interpretations of the California Supreme Court decision in Marvin vs.

Marvin that gives unmarried cohabitants the right to sue for property.

Kagon, meanwhile, minimized Miss Marvin's contributions to the actor's welfare in performing chores generally done by housewives.

"When she cooked, she also ate," said Kagon. "When she cleaned, she also participated in dirtying up the house."

ROONEY DEBUTS ON BROADWAY — Comic Mickey Rooney makes an unscheduled and highly unorthodox appearance on Broadway Tuesday to an unidentified passerby who apparently did not appreciate his act. The impromptu performance took place near the hall where Rooney opened rehearsals for a new stage musical "Sugar Babies," described as "the ultimate burlesque show," in which he co-stars with dancer Ann Miller. Its opening this fall in the Big Apple will mark the debut of Rooney on Broadway.

Carter insists on windfall tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter says he'll work with Congress or do the job himself as long as the results meet his demand: America's oil companies must use half of any new profits from decontrolled oil prices to search for more oil or gas.

Carter's signal that he might need congressional help to back up the demand he made in his energy speech last Thursday came during a Tuesday news conference in which he also apparently softened his standby gasoline rationing position to put it more in line with Senate wishes.

Congress has already given frosty receptions to Carter's request for a 50 percent tax on "windfall profits" expected to flow from the phased oil decontrol he's ordered to begin June 1 and to his standby federal gasoline rationing program calling for purchase coupons based in part on the number of cars a person owns.

Under Carter's decontrol plan, half of all "excess profits" would go into a special fund for development of alternate energy sources and for cushioning the blow of inevitably higher energy prices for poor people.

For the remaining profits, estimated at $6 billion over three years, Carter said, "The nation has a right to expect that all this new income will be used for exploration for new oil and gas, and not to buy timberlands and department stores."

He said he would support constraints imposed by either the executive branch or Congress on the oil companies' use of profits. But neither Carter nor other administration officials would say what actions he might take aside from proposing legislation to Congress.

As for gasoline rationing, Carter said that before the Energy Department imposed rationing requirements, "my own inclination is to let the states make the first effort to meet reduced consumption standards."

On other subjects brought up at the news conference, Carter said:

—He continues to support the use of nuclear energy despite the recent accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant in Pennsylvania. "There is no way for us to abandon the nuclear supply of energy in our country for the foreseeable future," he said.

—Progress continues in strategic arms limitation talks, but "there are still a few issues that remain to be resolved — clarifications in the stance of the American negotiators and the Soviet negotiators."

—He knows of no violations of law concerning loans of more than $6.5 million by the National Bank of Georgia to his family peanut business, and he will cooperate fully with federal investigations of the loans.

—He sees no immediate prospect for reinstatement of a military draft. "We are meeting the requirements of the armed forces adequately," he said.

Higher drinking age
bill nearing approval

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Eighteen-year-olds would have to wait for one more birthday to sip beer or liquor under a bill that is halfway through the Legislature.

Senators voted 25-5 Tuesday for Sen. Walter Mengden's proposal raising the state drinking age from 18 to 19. Opponents said it was unconstitutional and would make 18-year-olds "second-class citizens."

The measure goes to the House. Senators balked at approving the bill last week because they thought it might prevent 18-year-olds from handling beer or liquor as waiters or employees of groceries.

An amendment was adopted Tuesday, however, which Mengden, R-Houston, said solved that problem.

"It meets all the objections raised the other day," he said. "The whole purpose is to prevent the consumption of alcoholic beverages by 18-year-olds as in 37 other states and the District of Columbia."

Nevertheless, Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, protested, "We are treating citizens 18 to 19-years-old differently in one aspect than citizens over 18... We are committed as a nation and a state not to have second-class citizens for any purpose."

"On the face of it," Mauzy added, "this bill is blatantly unconstitutional... We can no more do this than we can say persons aged 18 to 19 will not be allowed to vote."

Sen. Jack Ogg, D-Houston, described Mengden's proposal as "a little bit of retreat" in civil rights.

He said the bill was hard to oppose because of reports of drinking on high school campuses, but he added that bills are pending in the Legislature to allow school administrators to punish drinking students.

He said he feared the bill could lead to retreats on the rights of Mexican-Americans, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and women. "Pretty soon, it's not retreat — it's surrender," said Ogg.

"Every educational organization has said it is an absolutely needed bill for the furtherance of education in this state," asserted Mengden. "If you want to help school children, vote for this bill."

"The Constitution of the United States and the state of Texas are not decided by a majority vote of the Senate, by a majority vote of the House or a majority vote of both houses," said Mauzy.

"There are no constitutional questions," said Mengden.

Senate okays
auto charges for paperwork

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. Tom Creighton won Senate passage 22-9 Tuesday of a bill allowing a $35 paperwork charge on auto sales but declined to put his name on the proposed law.

"Just as great artists sign their paintings, it seems that the hands that have been at work in preparation of this act ought to be recognized," said Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, in a humorous attempt to name the bill the Creighton-Fondren Act.

Gene Fondren is chief lobbyist for the Texas Automobile Dealers Association, which prepared the bill.

Doggett led a nine-hour filibuster Monday against the bill by Creighton, D-Mineral Wells.
