Senators look at future of gas

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The future of natural gas made the lead item on the agenda as the Texas Senate Natural Resources Committee met Wednesday in Midland to gather testimony on several issues.

Texas Railroad Commissioner Charles Matthews told the committee, chaired by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown (R-Lake Jackson) and vice chairman Sen. Ken Armbrister (D-Victoria), that Texas — which produces one-third of U.S. natural gas — is being squeezed by increasing demand and declining production, and it might miss an economic opportunity if it does not take steps now to upgrade the natural gas infrastructure.

Matthews said that natural gas drilling simply was not responding to higher prices. The rig count in March, he said, was 296 — only 75 percent of the rig count in 1997. He also noted Texas was suffering from a labor problem in oil and gas that should have been resolved years ago and that gas storage levels were below normal.

"With production and storage down, how can we meet demand?" asked Matthews, who predicted that strong demand would put upward pressure on gas prices and said price spikes should be avoided at all cost.

He noted that U.S. demand in 2010 would be 28 trillion cubic feet — up 30 percent from 1998. The big driver of demand, he said, was electrical generation.

"In the next few years, 52,000 megawatts of generating power are set to be added nationally — and 97 percent will be by natural gas," Matthews said.

Of that national total, 16,800 megawatts will be added in Texas, he said. To meet the demand for natural gas, Matthews said, independent oil and gas operators would need to deliver more wells or better wells for the same money. He said he was taking input and working on a plan to assist gas producers that he would present to the Texas Legislature next year.

"The gas is there. As the nation's No. 1 gas producer, we have the natural resources, but we will have to work smart to meet the demand. If we don't some other state, or perhaps Canada, will step forward and take the opportunity," Matthews said.

John Hurstell, gas purchaser for Entergy — an electric utility serving Louisiana, Arkansas and part of Texas — said the demand factor may not be as severe as presented by Matthews, because the new power plants being built were 33 percent more efficient than older ones and would not use as much natural gas. He also noted that some of the announced power plants may not materialize. "Sometimes announcements are made just to scare off the competition." Hurstell warned, adding that natural gas demand would still be up.

Other locals testifying on the future of the oil and gas industry at the senate hearing included Kirk Edwards of Odessa Exploration, Jack Rathbone, of Titan Resources, Clayton Williams of Clayton Williams Energy, Vice Matthews of the Center for Energy and Economic Development and Morris Burns of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Other issues on the agenda included groundwater resources and storage of low-level radioactive waste. Other members of the com-

Midland High School led the list of finalists with six, which includes Matt Josefy, Adam Martin, Ryan Pai, Margaret Rendall and Emily Statton. Vanessa Spencer also was named as a finalist, but left Midland earlier in the year.

Lee High School posted five finalists: Robert Domingo, Stephen Fly, Laura Hays, Vinesh Patel and Russell Webb.

Trinity School had three merit scholar finalists: Mathew Hinkley, Keisha LaMonica and Dan Attanucci.

"Naturally, we are extremely proud of all three of these fine young people. They are scholars, athletes, exceptional artists and wonderful human beings, in addition to that," said Rhonda Durham, head of Trinity School.

Lee High School Principal George Cooper had similar comments about his students.

"They're great kids — not only sound academic kids. They are well rounded as far as making any number of contributions to Lee High School," he said.

Midland High School Principal Neil Richmond declined to comment on the achievements of MHS students, but Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. complimented all of the district's scholars.

"As a school district, we are extremely proud of the individual students that have achieved this national recognition. I think it certainly speaks well of them as individuals and well of their families," Baressi said. "I think the magnitude of the number of finalists speaks well for our academic program and our facilities at each of the two high schools."

The National Merit Scholarship Program recognizes 50,000 students for academic achievement each year. Of those, only 16,500 achieve semifinalist status and only 14,500 of graduating seniors in any year are named as finalists. The program will pare the list to 7,200 scholarship recipients.

"I think it is significant for us to have 10: five at each school and one student who moved. I think it speaks volumes," Baressi said.

The finalists are:

Statewide petition seeks raises for law enforcement

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

A Fort Stockton grandmother has been conducting a statewide petition drive on the behalf of law enforcement officers who she says are paid less-than-reasonable salaries for the hazards they face on the job.

"I'm concerned about anybody who makes less than $30,000," said Betty Harper Murphy of law enforcement officers. "I'm most concerned about the poorest, who make as little as $12,000 a year. We all say we support law enforcement, but they make miserable amounts of money. It doesn't show a whole lot of respect, does it?"

Ms. Murphy said the goal of the petition is to influence the state Legislature to grant a $10,000 stipend to every certified law enforcement patrol officer who makes less than $30,000 a year.

Ms. Murphy, whose son is a patrol officer, said her inspiration to begin the petition originated in October 1999, when two separate tragedies left four law enforcement officers dead. "I was real distressed about it. I had a week and a half where I had a hard time sleeping."

She said she began getting requests for petitions from around the state after a copy of a letter she wrote to a newspaper editor was published in various newspapers across the state. She said 74 of Texas' 254 counties currently have petitions circulating.

The petition is also circulated in Midland and Ector counties.

Ms. Murphy said the Texas Legislature established a precedent in 1999 by passing two bills — HB 1123 and HB 804 — that gives stipends to judges and county attorneys under set circumstances. She asked why law enforcement couldn't be entitled to the same monetary supplement.

Clayton McKinney, chief deputy for the Midland County Sheriff's Office, said the statewide petition could influence some level of legislative action.

"There's a real possibility that an oversight commission could be established by the Legislature to set the standards of sheriff's offices throughout the state," he said.

McKinney said a standards commission would create rules and regulations that would affect law enforcement agencies statewide on a variety of issues, including salaries.

Carl Watters, inspector for the Ector County Sheriff's Office, said Williams' prediction was a realistic one.

"We're just going to have to explain our plight. It's got to come from somewhere. The situation can't continue as it has. The cost of living goes up but our salaries don't. We're going to get behind her petition the best we can," he said.

Watters added that law enforcement officers in Odessa recently formed the Ector County Peace Officers Association and will discuss the petition issue at their April 25 meeting.

"We'll get behind it and see if citizens will support it. We went ahead and wrote our own little petition up based on hers. I think the last time we count-

College students are spreading the wealth

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

Some 22 college students gave back to their community Wednesday by awarding $25,000 in grants to 19 area nonprofit organizations.

Students in Philanthropy, a club at Midland College, rewards students for philanthropic activity with scholarship money.

In exchange for their scholarships, SIP students stage fund-raisers, volunteer for various community projects and review and investigate applications for grants.

During this round of funding, students reviewed 79 applications seeking more than $60,000. They made site visits to nonprofit agencies and had to decide which of the applicants best fit their goals of funding.

"SIP gives them a really good look at how difficult it is to be a philanthropist," said David Smith, executive director of the Abell-Hanger Foundation, which makes the program possible. Smith added that the program teaches students that regardless of someone's economic standing or ability, philanthropy is not just about writing a check.

"Most philanthropy is not done by foundations or companies. It's done by individuals," Smith said.

Students in SIP qualify for scholarships of either $500 or $800 based on whether they already receive Abell-Hanger scholarships. SIP raised $1,918 and Abell Hangar matched that amount on a 15-1 ratio.

"I didn't really know about philanthropy and I wanted to learn more about it," said Jana Prewit, who is in her second year of the program. "The first year it was really exciting and it's really fun to see people in the community who are working to benefit others. And it's exciting that we get to help them help people."

'Most philanthropy is not done by foundations or companies. It's done by individuals.'

— David Smith,
executive director of the Abell-Hanger Foundation

The agencies selected for funding by SIP were: Alzheimer's Association, Greater West Texas, $1,596; Boys and Girls Club of Midland, $1,000; Camp Fire Boys and Girls, $1,000; Bynum School, $1,000; Community Children's Clinic, $1,820; Community and Senior Services, $1,030; Freewill Foster Home, $500; High Sky Children's Ranch, $2,000; Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, $1,425; Need to Read, $1,500; Teen Court, $2,470; Muscular Dystrophy Association, $1,000; Museum of the Southwest, $1,500; Palmer Drug Abuse Program, $1,000; Recording Library for the Blind, $1,000; Safe Place of the Permian Basin, $2,000; Salvation Army, $479; Special Olympics, $1,680 and Young Life, $1,000.

More than 100 people die in Philippines airliner crash

SAMAL, Philippines (AP) — With plastic garbage bags wrapped around his hands as makeshift gloves, Mike Salaguinto searched smoldering debris and coconut palms for charred remains of the 131 victims of Wednesday's Air Philippines crash.

"I have a friend in this plane. But I'm not thinking any more of whether I will find her, I'm just picking up whatever I can find," the air force airman said. "I can't count how many bodies I've found."

Another black garbage bag covered Salaguinto's head to ward off the drizzle falling on Samal Island, where the Boeing 737-200 crashed early Wednesday on approach to nearby Davao city in the southern Philippines. It was the Philippines' worst air disaster ever. Many of those killed — 124 passengers and seven crew members — had been traveling home for Easter aboard Flight 541 from Manila.

The crash's cause was uncertain, but officials said there were foggy conditions in the area. Searchers found the plane's voice recorder, but the flight data recorder remained buried.

Some searchers used branches Wednesday to pick through the wreckage. A priest sprinkled water over the remains of victims as he delivered last rites.

By late afternoon, 81 bags of battered body parts had been recovered from the blackened, muddy hilltop, officials said. The remains were flown to a military base where grieving relatives tried to identify them.

The scattered debris at the crash site included an assortment of personal belongings that testified to the lives of the passengers. It included letters, photos, infant formula and an unmarred black stiletto-heeled shoe.

A doctor from the Davao Medical Center found a charred pair of bodies — a woman hugging a much smaller figure. "Up to the last minute, the mother was embracing her child," said Dr. Heidi Mancao.

The hot, smoky debris was strewn throughout a coconut grove on Samal, a sparsely populated island of farmers and fishermen that boasts one of the Philippines' best-known beach resorts.

Airport officials said there was fog in the area when the jet went down. The Davao airport does not have all the equipment needed for instrument landings in low-visibility conditions, and landings had been suspended for several minutes before the plane's initial approach, officials said.

When it made its approach, the 22-year-old plane was unable to land because another plane was on the runway. It crashed as it prepared to make a second approach from the opposite direction.

Villagers said the plane first clipped the top of a coconut palm, then tried to climb with a roar of its engines. Instead it fell to earth with a loud explosion.

"It was like a bomb," said Alvin Navarro, a coconut farmer. "My wife thought there was a war."

Smoke from the crash could be seen from Davao, a vibrant commercial center and the Philippines' second-largest city. At Davao's airport, relatives cried and hugged each other as Red Cross personnel tried to comfort them.

The crash came days after a U.S. Federal Aviation Administration panel recommended that Boeing redesign the rudder assembly on all models of the Boeing 737, the most widely used passenger jet in the world.

Air Philippines, the country's second-largest airline, said the plane received a normal maintenance check before taking off and no abnormalities were found.

Air Philippines is one of a number of relatively new airlines created since the industry was deregulated several years ago. Several of the airlines use aging planes and have been dogged with safety-related problems. Air Philippines' its operating permit was suspended in 1998 because of lapses in safety and maintenance procedures.

The crash ends a week that also saw two other major transportation accidents in the Philippines: On April 12, a cargo ship carrying more than 200 illegal passengers capsized, killing at least 148 people, and on Monday, a passenger ferry struck a fish trap and sank. All 137 people aboard were rescued in that accident.

"It is sickening. It is really saddening," Transportation Secretary Vicente Rivera said.

Australian officials said one Australian man, his Filipino wife and two daughters were among the plane crash victims. There were no immediate reports of other foreigners aboard.

DNA test proves heart belongs to Louis XVI's son

By Clar Ni Chonghaile

PARIS — Scientists have cracked one of France's most enduring mysteries, saying an ailing boy who died in a Paris prison more than 200 years ago was the son of King Louis XVI and Marie-Antoinette and heir to the French throne.

The fate of Louis XVI's 10-year-old son had long intrigued France. Some historians declared the dead boy to be Louis XVII; others said the royal heir escaped and another child died in his place to save official face during the unstable days of the French Revolution.

But now science has come to the aid of history.

Scientists from two European universities compared DNA from the long-preserved heart of the

DNA: Descendants want boy's mummified heart buried in royal crypt dead boy to DNA from hair cut from Marie-Antoinette when she was a child in Austria. They also compared the heart DNA to DNA from Marie Antoinette's sisters and two living members of the Bourbon family.

Philippe Delorme, the French historian who organized the tests, said they laid the riddle to rest at last.

"It was Louis XVII. It was the last little king of France who died in the Temple prison," Delorme said. "It's definitive."

The official version of the story has long gone like this: After his parents were beheaded in 1793, Louis XVII was imprisoned in the Temple, a fortified monastery in Paris, where he died of tuberculosis at age 10 on June 8, 1795.

But until now, that version was contradicted by rumor, legend and simple royalist hope, strengthened by some fabulous tales from that turbulent time. Some said the body in the Temple could not have been Louis XVII as it seemed to belong to an older child. Others claimed Louis XVII had been drugged with opium and a dead boy substituted for the living one in the coffin.

One guard at the time said he had seen many bathtubs being carried out of the prison. When the porters carrying one stumbled, he heard a child's cry from within, he said.

But Delorme said the scientific tests are indisputable.

They were carried out by Jean-Jacques Cassiman, a professor of genetics at Belgium's Louvain University, and Bernd Brinkmann of Germany's Muenster University. Both scientists came to the same conclusion, Delorme said.

Cassiman and Brinkmann performed their tests on the preserved heart, which took a circuitous route over almost 200 years before ending up in a crystal vase in the royal crypt outside Paris.

"(It) was extremely well-preserved," Cassiman told France's Europe-1 radio on Wednesday. "One could see all the vessels and all the compartments of the heart. But because it was mummified, we had to saw off a small piece to be able to do this analysis."

Skeptics will no doubt latch onto the heart's eventful history to throw cold water on the recent research.

The heart was stolen by the doctor who performed the autopsy on the dead child in 1795. He pickled it in alcohol for eight to 10 years. One of his students subsequently stole it, but on his deathbed, the student asked his wife to return it to the doctor.

After the restoration of the French monarchy in 1814, the heart was offered to various members of the royal family, but they were reluctant to accept a relic of such dubious provenance. It finally found its way to the Spanish branch of the Bourbon family. They returned it to Paris in 1975 and it was placed in the royal crypt.

"There will always be some people who think Louis XVII escaped. But now we have indisputable scientific proof that confirms the historic proof," said Delorme, author of "The Affair of Louis XVII."

The Bourbon family is already demanding a royal burial.

Prince Louis de Bourbon, the head of the house of Bourbon, on Wednesday said he hoped French authorities would consent to a burial for Louis XVII's heart next to the tombs of his father and mother in the royal crypt.

For Delorme, the discovery is both a vindication of history and a kind of belated justice.

"For me, it's a very important day, a very moving day for a historian. It's an affair that has lasted two centuries. There have been around 800 books written on the subject and we never managed to find the response," he said.

"I think we are bestowing justice on this child. Until now, his death was stolen, it was not admitted that he died in such a horrible way."

ed we had about 700 signatures. We haven't gotten fired up on it yet but we're going to," Watters said.

Ms. Murphy said her goal is to get at least 100 signatures per county. Thus far, she said, Midland has collected a little more than 40 signatures.

Ms. Murphy said she will mail a letter discussing the law enforcement salary issue to every state representative and senator on May 10.

"The posse is very excited about the fact that we have petitions in 74 counties," Ms. Murphy said. "And, if people are interested in finding out what we're about they can check our Web site at www.arealtexasposse.org."

Vermont closer to enacting gay unions legislation

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Bobbi Whitacre and Sandi Cote are already making plans for a small ceremony sanctifying their 33-year relationship. The women are just disappointed they won't be considered "married."

A bill that passed the Vermont Senate on Wednesday gets as close to gay marriage as any place in America, but it still reserves "marriage" for opposite-sex couples.

"It's a bittersweet victory, I think, for a lot of us," Cote said. "To have to stop short of the goal, it's disappointing."

On a 19-11 vote, the Senate passed a bill creating "civil unions," a legal structure parallel to marriage for gay and lesbian couples.

The landmark proposal would grant to same-sex couples some 300 state benefits of marriage, including medical decision-making, tax breaks and inheritance. No other state has conferred more than just a handful of the benefits.

"It's great that it passed," said Beth Robinson, one of the lawyers who successfully argued before the Vermont Supreme Court that gay and lesbian couples were being unconstitutionally denied the benefits of marriage. The court left the decision to the Legislature how to provide those rights.

The House voted 76-69 in March to provide civil unions. The Senate largely agreed with the House's approach to the issue, but changed some of the language in the bill and also moved up the effective date by two months to July 1.

Now the House will have to vote on whether to accept the Senate's changes. House Speaker Michael Obuchowski said he did not believe anyone would back off from his or her original vote. Gov. Howard Dean has promised to sign the bill.

"It has not been an easy journey," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Richard Sears, a Democrat. "But for a few months of my life, I've learned a lot about what it's like to be discriminated against. I also began to understand the goodness of my fellow Vermonters."

Because lawmakers decided to reserve the status of marriage only to heterosexual couples, gays and lesbians would not be able to qualify for federal benefits available to opposite-sex couples, such as sharing Social Security benefits, immigration status and some tax provisions.

Whitacre, 52, and Cote, 53, of Manchester had almost decided they would not enter into a civil union out of frustration that the state wouldn't allow them to marry, but they decided to go ahead with a ceremony anyway.

"I have difficulty with separate but equal," Cote said. "I fought for civil rights down in Alabama in the '60s. And that's what this state is letting happen, second-class citizens in the year 2000."

Even though they know there's one more vote to come in the House, people like Whitacre and Cote are beginning to plan their futures. On Sept. 15 — the anniversary of Whitacre's late grandparents' 58-year marriage — they'll hold their ceremony.

Jews do spring cleaning to prepare for Passover

JERUSALEM (AP) — Their shopping and cleaning done, Israeli families gathered at sundown Wednesday for the Passover meal, a ritual feast that commemorates the exodus of the Jewish people from ancient Egypt.

The nation's spirit was lifted by a stunning basketball victory — Maccabi Tel Aviv reached Thursday's European Cup finals, bringing a championship within reach for the first time in 20 years.

The holiday mood, however, was dampened by a slowdown at Ben Gurion International Airport that delayed thousands of travelers at the busiest time of the year. Tens of thousands of Israelis had booked trips abroad for the weeklong holiday.

And the tug-of-war over the release of 13 Lebanese prisoners overshadowed Passover preparations, especially an anguished plea by the mother of missing airman Ron Arad to keep the men in custody as future bargaining chips.

Just a few hours before sundown, the court set the men free, saying they could not be held as pawns.

Though only about a quarter of Israel's Jews describe themselves as Orthodox, about 80 percent conduct a yearly Passover seder, said Rabbi Yehoram Mazor, a leader of the liberal Reform Jewish movement that is beginning to establish a foothold in Israel.

For secular Israelis, Passover is an opportunity to get the whole family around the same dinner table, not always a blessing. One radio program offered advice for singles on how to silence prying relatives inquiring about marriage prospects.

The Orthodox Chabad movement held seders in 17 countries around the world for traveling Israelis, including Indonesia and Vietnam.

In the Greek city of Thessaloniki, Chabad flew in over 2,000 matzah balls — seasoned dumplings eaten in chicken soup — for a seder hosting 1,000 Israeli basketball fans who came to watch Israel's Maccabi Tel Aviv defeat Barcelona in Tuesday's European Cup semifinals.

During the weeklong holiday, Jews are supposed to eat unleavened bread, or flat, cracker-like creations called "matzah." Tradition says that the Jews were in such a hurry to leave Egypt, they did not have time to wait for the bread they were baking to rise.

The Bible orders Jews to get rid of all leavened food products before the holiday — a sign for Jews to clean their houses and everything in them.

Wednesday morning, acrid black smoke filled religious neighborhoods in Jerusalem, where residents threw their last bits of bread, cookies and cake into open fires. In the past few days, observant Jews dipped their metal dishes and pots into huge vats of boiling water to make them ritually suitable for the holiday.

Surveying the long line outside his Jerusalem dry cleaning store, Eli Zohar said the holiday meant a lot of work for him.

"This is the time to be sure that the clothes are cleaned of bread," he said.

Orthodox rabbis pound home the point that not a single bread crumb may be left in the house before Passover begins at sundown. As part of the tradition, when the cleaning is done, the head of the household inspects the entire house, holding a candle into each dark corner to make sure nothing was overlooked.

"If there is suspicion that there might be even a single crumb in a crack in a wall, and it cannot be removed, it must be plastered over and the crumb buried inside," Orthodox Rabbi Efraim Zalmanowitz wrote in the Arim weekly.

Some believe the spring cleaning can go too far, leaving people exhausted and unable to celebrate. Rabbi Yosef Kleiner, of the liberal Conservative movement, advised his congregation in the city of Rehovot to take it easy, saying that half a day or a day of cleaning is enough.

Kleine, Reynolds best choices for MC, MCHD seats

Only one position each on the Midland College Board of Trustees and the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors involve contested races in the May 6 elections.

In the college board election, longtime District 6 trustee William D. "Bill" Kleine faces a challenge from Hugh White, a staunch and enthusiastic advocate for Midland College and regular student there.

The District 5 seat on the hospital district board is being sought by Jay Reynolds, president of Rod-Ric Corp., a Midland drilling company, and Chip Balzer, an assistant fire chief for the Midland Fire Department.

MIDLAND COLLEGE BOARD, DISTRICT 6 — Although White is a good supporter of the community college where he is regularly a student and argues in favor of more frequent rotation on the board, that is not persuasive enough to remove Kleine from the board. Formerly with Permian Corp., Kleine has been on the board since 1980 and has helped shepherd the institution through a period of tremendous growth and development.

When Kleine came on the board, Midland College only had 2,699 students. Now it has 5,049 and is continually expanding, both in terms of the physical plant and academic offerings.

White agrees that Kleine has done a good job for Midland College, but says rotation is needed on the board.

Kleine is proud of the steps that have been taken at MC in recent years and says he would like to see to fruition such programs as the Advanced Technology Center, a joint project of both the college and Midland Independent School District; the Physician's Assistant program, started in cooperation with Texas Tech; and the construction of on-campus resident halls.

Midland College is one of the "crown jewels of Midland," Kleine says and we agree. In the future he envisions it continuing to serve the community's educational needs with more programs and students.

Voters in this race should cast their ballots for Bill Kleine.

MIDLAND COUNTY HOSPITAL BOARD, DISTRICT 5 — Both Reynolds and Balzer profess an interest in keeping Midland Memorial Hospital functioning at peak efficiency for the health of Midland citizens and without becoming a monetary drain on the hospital district. That has become more challenging in recent years due to changes in the federal reimbursement policy for patients that has cut into the hospital's profits and the spiraling cost of medical care.

Jay Reynolds could bring strong management skills to the hospital board. He talks about the need to enhance revenue-generating operations for the hospital district and to keep costs as low as possible.

Both men also note the promising Physician's Assistants program begun by Midland College and Texas Tech, and talk of how the medical education industry can be developed in Midland.

We think that is a great possibility and we encourage voters to cast their ballots for Jay Reynolds for the District 5 seat on the Midland County Hospital District board.

Falwell again has succumbed to politics

At a time when the Christian world is focusing on the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth and the meaning of those events, Rev. Jerry Falwell is again focusing on politics.

Thomas

A decade ago, after disbanding the Moral Majority (for which I toiled for five years), Falwell announced he was going back to preaching. People who heard him said his preaching became more powerful when he returned to his first love. But he has again succumbed to the temptation of politics and its illusion of power. At a news conference last week in Washington and on his "People of Faith 2000" Web page, Falwell announced a drive to register 10 million new voters in order to impose a moral code through government which most citizens, comfortable in their materialism, are not willing to impose on themselves.

Falwell will not register 10 million new voters who will vote as he wishes because there aren't that many unregistered. People who still believe the solution to moral decline lies in Washington registered to vote in the '80s and found that, even in the idealized Reagan era, not much changed. In fact, with the exception of a slight decline in abortions (not because of legislation but because of establishment of thousands of centers to help women with unplanned pregnancies), things have gotten worse. Many church members are following the ways of the world, divorcing and consuming pornography in increasing numbers, according to several surveys.

On his Web page, Falwell claims that "people of faith are persona non grata in the American political process." No, they're not. They just shouldn't expect to constantly run the Republican Party to which his wing of the church has attached itself. The lower kingdom (politics) is about compromise. The higher kingdom (the Gospel) is about no compromise. Falwell is trying to apply the principles of the higher kingdom to the lower one. Such attempts are futile.

Second, Falwell claims the "left-wing elite has been engaged in a campaign to purge traditional Judeo-Christian values from public life in America." It doesn't speak well for God if a "left-wing elite" can erode His power and reach. But the real blame is laid at the church doorstep. Falwell accuses "the deafening silence of America's pulpits and religious leaders" for causing this values purge. Viewers who see ministers and non-ministers all over television don't believe these people have been silenced. Most preachers I know have chosen to concentrate on preaching the Gospel and changing lives, not government. They have been unfairly slandered. They believe their call is from God; it is to Him they answer and no one else.

Culture can neither be spoiled nor cured by Washington. Its health is determined by millions of individual choices. Scripture forecasts its decline when people turn away from God.

Falwell says he resents Christians being treated as "second-class citizens." But that is precisely what Jesus told His true followers they could expect. He said, "If they hated me, they'll hate you," and "if they persecuted me, they will persecute you," and "a servant is not greater than His master." If such people are truly living godly lives, they should expect to be persecuted. They are not commanded to form a political movement to stop it. They should instead increase their godly behavior.

On his Web page, Falwell says: "... if millions of people of faith vote — with prayer-filled hearts — I believe we can return America to moral sanity and re-establish this great country as 'one nation under God.'" Not through government they can't. Those who are putting at least partial faith in George W. Bush to turn the nation around will be disappointed. Consider some of the appointments Republican presidents have made to the Supreme Court: Dwight Eisenhower named the liberal Earl Warren; Richard Nixon gave us Harry Blackmun, author of Roe vs. Wade; Ronald Reagan selected Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony Kennedy, who uphold Roe; George Bush delivered the ultra-liberal David Souter to the court.

"People of Faith 2000" will raise some money and make noise, but it will change little. The message of Easter can change everything.

Speaking Out

School plan should be more equitable

By Brad Gibson

For some time, MISD has been spending thousands, if not millions, of dollars along with thousands of man-hours in an effort to achieve unitary status.

The reasons given for the expenditures were so our children would then be able to attend their neighborhood schools, and we could now ensure our schools would be integrated without the burden of federal oversight. I, like many others, hoped this effort would bring the end of busing for my child and achieve a better overall school system for all of Midland.

Brad Gibson, a resident of Midland for eight years, is a teacher at Alamo Junior High School.

With the passage of the 14-2 plan by the school board, I took inventory of the system, which appears to be the one that will be in place for next year.

First, with the 14-2 plan, we will no longer have an integrated school system. Instead, we will return to segregated schools. Has anyone noticed that the new plan will leave the schools with the highest percentage of anglo and the highest percentage of minority students with no busing?

These in fact are the schools that are in most need of integration. The schools that are close to racial integration on their own will have parts of their populations shifted all about Midland. It is also no accident that the greatest burden of busing falls upon Hispanic children and the children of selected neighborhoods across Midland whose financial empowerment does not match that of the most affluent areas in Midland. I might also note that Dr. Joseph Baressi Jr.'s neighborhood school will not have any busing done whatsoever.

Second, by living in an area that has been selected to be bused, my son will be bused miles away from home past several elementary schools along the way. According to the MISD plan, he will be bused all seven years of his elementary career — even in his youngest years when he would be most vulnerable. Third, by being unfortunate enough to live in a busing neighborhood, my property values will dramatically decrease. If a prospective home buyer looks at a comparable home to the north, south, east, or west of my home, their child will be able to attend a school that is within sight of their front door. If they were to purchase my home, they will be faced with the prospect of busing their child miles away from home to attend school. The choice is an easy one — buy where your kids can attend the school that is close to home.

In sum, for my family and many others across Midland, the school board's decision gives us three things: Racially segregated schools (again), busing across town for even our very young children, and thousands of dollars lost in decreasing property values. This plan is a bad deal for all but a select few in Midland and it is a folly in that it doesn't improve our education system at all.

This decision could help spell the end of prosperity in our city. Without a superb education system, our kids will not be prepared to compete in the global market of the future. Our city will then die — oil or no oil beneath our feet.

Wake up Midland — especially the school board. Rethink this plan and come up with something more equitable and imaginative. Make it a plan for ALL of Midland this time.

Case shows how finely justices can split hairs

WASHINGTON — Steven Dewayne Bond was on a Greyhound bus, traveling from California to Arkansas, minding his own business. Unfortunately, his business involved trafficking in illegal drugs. So now he is a footnote in constitutional history, having contributed to the creation of "a constitutional jurisprudence of 'squeez-es.'" His case illustrates how Supreme Court justices can disagree about how finely some procedural hairs should be split.

The Supreme Court ruled 7-2 Monday that Bond's conviction on conspiracy and drug possession charges was improper because of the way the drugs were found. A Border Patrol agent squeezed Bond's canvas carry-on bag.

Will

When the bus pulled in, as it was required to do, at the immigration checkpoint on Interstate 10 near Sierra Blanca, Texas, the agent, working from the front to the back, checked that the passengers were legally in the country. Then, working from back to front, he looked for drugs by squeezing luggage in overhead bins.

When he felt a "brick-like" object in Bond's bag, and noted that Bond seemed nervous, he received Bond's permission to open the bag. He found methamphetamine wrapped in tape and in a pair of pants. After his arrest, Bond made incriminating statements.

Befofe his trial he remembered the Fourth Amendment ("The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated ... "). At trial he argued that the drugs were found by an illegal search and that his statements were inadmissible because they were a consequence of the search.

The court was not persuaded. He was sentenced to 57 months in prison. He appealed, but the appellate court affirmed his conviction. It noted that when he stored his bag, it was reasonable for him to expect that it would be moved and handled by passengers or Greyhound employees.

Then, Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist, writing for the majority, distinguished this case from two others in which the court upheld the constitutionality of police searches. One was the observation, from a police airplane, of marijuana growing in the backyard of a residence. The other was the observation, from a police helicopter, of drugs growing in a greenhouse adjacent to a residence.

Rehnquist said that Bond's case is different because tactile examination of a person's "effects" is constitutionally different than visual examination: "Physically invasive inspection is simply more intrusive than purely visual inspection." Bond did not expect passengers or Greyhound employees to "feel the bag in an exploratory manner."

Dissenting, Justice Stephen Breyer and Antonin Scalia said, that the court has held that it is not an illegal search for a police officer to smell luggage or to get a trained dog to smell it (or for an officer to examine the contents of a garbage bag put out for collection), but an officer cannot touch Bond's bag in a way more forceful than another passenger might.

"Privacy," said Breyer, "itself implies the exclusion of uninvited strangers, not just strangers who work for the government." And "in determining whether an expectation of privacy is reasonable, it is the effect, not the purpose, that matters (because of) a Fourth Amendment rule that turns on purpose could prevent police alone from intruding where other strangers freely tread."

Protesters observe year anniversary of death at U.S. Navy's firing range

VIEQUES, Puerto Rico (AP) — A year after David Sanes Rodriguez was killed by stray bombs from a U.S. warplane, mourners on Wednesday laid flowers at his grave and demanded the Navy's eviction from a live-fire range on this Puerto Rican island.

Fists raised, dozens of people shouted: "Out with the Navy! Long live a free Vieques!"

Sanes, a security guard, was killed on April 19, 1999, when two 500-pound bombs dropped by a Marine Corps F-14 missed their target on the Vieques island live-fire range.

Elsewhere in Puerto Rico, protesters held vigils and church services.

About 25 activists, who on Tuesday occupied San Juan's 16th-century Fort San Felipe del Morro, a U.S. national historic site, left peacefully Wednesday after taking down an American flag and leaving a Puerto Rican flag at half staff. There were no arrests.

In Washington, protesters urged President Clinton to close the range permanently.

Sanes' death was also remembered with a church service and a minute of silence at Roosevelt Roads, the sprawling U.S. Naval Station in Puerto Rico which administers the Vieques range. At noon, all vehicles and all ships in the harbor came to a stop, the airstrip was closed and the base chapel bells tolled.

Sanes "died while serving in the defense of our nation and we honored him with an appropriate ceremony," said Navy spokesman Lt. Jeff Gordon.

The Navy suspended its exercises on Vieques after Sanes' death. Protesters occupied the range and set up five camps amid beaches and scrubby hills littered with unexploded bombs and craters.

The militants have refused to leave despite an agreement between Clinton and Puerto Rican Gov. Pedro Rossello to allow the Navy to resume exercises using inert ammunition for three months of the year, compared to six months before Sanes' death.

Under the agreement, Vieques' residents will decide in a referendum whether the Navy can resume live fire training or abandon the island.

"The history of Vieques is going to change because of David," ex-Mayor Radames Tirado said. "In our sorrow, we can be happy because his death has given us a year of peace."

The Navy warns that without Vieques — used to prepare for every U.S. military conflict since World War II — lives could be lost in today's world of precision bombing.

The island off Puerto Rico's eastern tip is the only place where the Atlantic Fleet can hold simultaneous air, land and sea operations with live munitions.

Islanders charge that decades of bombing have led to a high cancer rate among Vieques' 9,300 residents — a charge the Navy says hasn't been proven. Bombing has stunted tourism, destroyed fishing grounds, coral reefs and mangroves, and harmed endangered species such as the peregrine falcon and hawksbill turtle, residents say.

Protesters also say the Navy has used Vieques in a way that would not be unacceptable elsewhere in the United States because Puerto Rico is a Spanish-speaking U.S. territory.

"This is definitely a case of environmental racism," said activist Roberto Rabin.

The anti-Navy campaign united Puerto Rican politicians, including the small independence movement and supporters of statehood. It also stoked an anti-American fervor. U.S. legislators accuse Puerto Ricans who want the Navy out of being unpatriotic and ungrateful for $11 billion in annual federal aid.

Sanes' death has even divided his family. His father marched last year with people who want the Navy to stay. His sister, Myrta, and her two daughters were the only family members at Wednesday's ceremony.

In the 1940s, the Navy purchased two-thirds of the 21-mile-long island, reserving a central portion for residents. A munitions depot on the western third of Vieques is being returned to Puerto Rico under the Clinton agreement.

California teens to be sentenced on cocaine smuggling charges

TUXTLA GUTIERREZ, Mexico (AP) — The judge who will decide the fate of two American teen-agers arrested on cocaine smuggling charges says he is leaning toward the maximum sentence of five years in a youth detention center.

Emma Leticia Soto, 16, and Irene Leticia Garcia, 17, both high school students from Modesto, Calif., were arrested Feb. 28 at the airport in Tapachula, along the Guatemalan border, carrying more than two pounds of cocaine within their bodies.

Police said the teen-agers confessed that they had bought the drugs and were planning to sell them in Chicago.

Statements from the two led federal agents to a cocaine-processing laboratory in Tapachula, and their ties to the laboratory increases the amount of time they could do, the judge, Guadalupe Arias, said Tuesday.

The new evidence means the women now face a maximum of five years in jail, vs. the three years they faced previously, Arias said. He said he would issue a sentence in about 20 days.

An official at the federal attorney general's office, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said the teen-agers had been living for at least two months at the house where the laboratory was located.

Arias said the teen-agers had tested negative for cocaine use.

The two are being held with six Mexican women at the Villa Krisol Center for Diagnosis and Treatment of Delinquent Minors near Tuxtla Gutierrez, the Chiapas state capital.

Clinton dedicates Oklahoma memorial

■ More nation news/7B

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Church bells chimed on streets that once rang with a bomb's blast. Children saw their reflections in a calm pool where there was once an ugly crater. And families found serenity Wednesday in a place that has pained them for five years.

On the anniversary of the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, 168 sculpted chairs stood in silent tribute to the 168 victims of the most deadly terrorist attack on American soil.

"To me it's like my funeral for him, my time to say goodbye," said 20-year-old Sarah Broxterman, who lingered over the stone-and-bronze chair inscribed with the name of her late father, bombing victim Paul Broxterman.

The chairs soon overflowed with flowers as thousands came for the first of two ceremonies to dedicate the Oklahoma City National Memorial at the site of the federal building.

Later, President Clinton walked with representatives of families, survivors and rescuers through the 168 chairs before the second dedication ceremony. At one point he paused to straighten flowers knocked over in the strong Oklahoma wind.

He stopped before one chair with Jeannine Gist, the mother of a victim, and placed a hand gently on her shoulder.

Clinton dedicated the memorial with the promise that "America will never forget" the suffering inflicted by the bombing.

"There are places in our national landscape so scarred by freedom's sacrifice that they shape forever the soul of America," the president said. "This place is such sacred ground."

The gate enscribed with 9:01, the time just before the blast, glowed in the evening sun as Clinton officially opened the memorial by untying symbolic colored ribbons: white for innocence, purple for courage, yellow for hope and blue for statehood.

Bells tolled at 9:02 a.m., the exact moment when the fuel-and-fertilizer truck bomb exploded and stripped the face from the building, turning its nine floors into a tomb of concrete and steel.

After the names of the victims were read, family members, survivors and rescuers stepped through one of two golden gates marking the entrance to the memorial. There were 149 big chairs for the adult victims and 19 little ones for the children who died.

"I felt their presence there. I feel their presence every day in the office," said Renee Kiel, who clutched roses as she walked among the 35 chairs representing Housing and Urban Development co-workers.

Children with thick sticks of chalk scrawled messages on tiles beneath artwork in the children's area of the memorial. Some dipped their fingers into the dark reflecting pool that stretches along what once was the bomb crater.

P.J. Allen, who was severely injured but was one of the few children in the building's day-care center to survive, stood waving an American flag. His hand still bears scars and a tube helps him breath.

"I thought it was lovely," said his grandmother, Delores Watson.

An honor guard representing the rescuers who rushed into the building first and stayed for weeks to recover the dead hoisted a U.S. flag over the site. Lifted by a stiff breeze, the flag snapped to its full length.

Clinton, appearing with Attorney General Janet Reno, called the bombing an "attack on all America and every American."

"We will never have all the answers for what happened here," the president said. "But as we continue our journey toward understanding, these truths ring clear: what was meant to divide us has brought us together. What was meant to break us has made us stronger."

Ms. Reno thanked the community for "showing America how to stand up to evil."

Rev. Robert Allen, a United Methodist minister who coordinated civilian chaplains during the rescue effort, said: "This whole memorial will serve as a reminder that hate may blow up a building but we as a people will never forget."

Just blocks away, Terry Nichols sat isolated in an Oklahoma County Jail cell awaiting an August preliminary hearing on 160 state counts of first-degree murder in the attack. Nichols and Timothy McVeigh were convicted in federal court. McVeigh, who was sentenced to death, is in a federal prison in Indiana.

Nichols had no way of watching or hearing the memorial services, said Sheriff John Whetsel. "It will be just another day in the life of a typical inmate," he said.

Many family members left the memorial content that it met the stated mission to remember the dead, and survivors. But Jannie Coverdale, who lost her two grandsons in the day-care center, had a different reaction.

"Those empty chairs, they are too sad," she said. "I don't have to go downtown to be reminded my grandsons are dead."

Ms. Broxterman echoed the thoughts of other family members that the memorial offered comfort and serenity. She placed flowers on the fence that long served as an impromptu memorial at the site and left saying she felt somewhat settled by being there.

"Hopefully I can put this behind and find peace."

Registration card will clarify voting districts

By Ian Heald
Staff Writer

According to Pat Eastup, elections administrator for Midland County, there has been some confusion among voters about what elections will be held May 6, who's running and what the various voting districts are.

Four elections will be held May 6. Four seats on the Midland City Council will be determined; three on the Midland Independent School District (MISD) board of trustees; three on the Midland College board; and four seats on the Midland County Hospital District board of directors.

No county races will be voted on during the May 6 election. Final votes for county commissioner, county constable and county sheriff will be held in the general election in November.

Ms. Eastup said that active registered voters were mailed voting cards in December. The card informs the voter of all districts they're allowed to vote in for the various races. There are no districts for the Midland College elections and those registered can vote in all precinct races.

Two of the MISD seats — districts 3 and 6 — have already been decided because only one candidate is running in each, Dale Strauss in District 3 and Linda Foster in District 6.

The same thing has occurred with the Midland College and hospital boards.

Neil Florer and Charlene Wurtz, college board candidates in districts 4 and 5, will not be on the ballot because they are unopposed, and therefore already elected. The only competition for the college board is in District 6 with the incumbent, William Kleine, being opposed by Hugh White.

Districts 1, 2 and 6 for the hospital board were up for election but won't be on the ballot because Ora Williams, David Orr and Pete Hulder were unopposed for those respective seats. Those living in District 5 of the hospital district will choose between Chip Balzer and Jay Reynolds.

The city council race has 14 candidates vying for seats in District 1, District 2 and two at-large seats.

District residents can cast one vote for a candidate running in their district.

District 1 has four candidates: LuAnn Morgan, Robin Donnelly, Robert Riek and Henry "Dewey" Lee.

District 2 has three candidates: James M. Bradford, Robbyne Hocker Fuller and Roy Smith.

Every city resident registered to vote can vote for as many as two at-large candidates. An at-large city councilman is representative of the entire city, whereas a district councilman can be elected only by members of their district.

There are seven at-large candidates: Hal L. Kempf, J.D. Faircloth, Bill Dingus, Mike Canon, Steve Coulon, Jerry Morales and Dale Brown.

Early voting began Wednesday and will last until May 2. Election day will be May 6.

Information on early voting locations can be found at www.co.midland.tx.us.

When Ashly Andrews, 12, had a vision for her GEM Scholars project, who would have thought that its implementation would also make dreams come true.

"I was very excited when I found out that I had won. My mom told me while I was still on my bus and I started screaming," said Ashly, who is a sixth-grader at Ben Milam Elementary School as well as a Gifted Education Midland student at Carver Cultural Center. "All of my friends were begging to get to go."

Get to go to Disney World next month, that is. The Millennium Dreamers Program, sponsored by Walt Disney and McDonald's, is recognizing "young people everywhere who put their best foot forward or lend a helping hand." The 2,000 students will come from around the world.

"It will probably be a really fun trip. The best part will be getting a lot of pen pals," Ashly said, excited about the prospect of meeting students from other nations.

Clinton will be judged by more than just Monica, authors say

By Bill Modisett
Staff Writer

ODESSA — President Bill Clinton, "a master of symbolic action," will be remembered in future years for his consistency on racial issues and ethnic concerns, asserted Dr. James MacGregor Burns and Dr. Georgia Sorenson Wednesday evening to scholars and political enthusiasts.

Burns, a Pulitzer Prize-winning presidential biographer, and Sorenson collaborated on "Dead Center: Clinton-Gore Leadership and the Perils of Moderation," a recently released book that was the topic of their discussion Wednesday at Odessa's Radisson Hotel.

Noting that in their first conversation with Clinton in researching material for the book they found him responsive, coherent and to the point, Burns observed that Clinton showed "a lot of grace under pressure."

But unlike a "transformational president" like Theodore Roosevelt, the author said, Clinton has not tackled the tough issues that would put him into that category.

As an example Burns illustrated his point by alluding to the Clinton health plan that ended in failure. "Instead of saying, 'Well, OK, we made a mistake. We'll do a better bill and come back,' he retreated, he quit," said Burns.

"Great leaders like Winston Churchill turn defeat into victory," noted the author, "and Clinton just quit."

Yet at this time in history, there are numerous issues that beg for presidential leadership. One of them is education, but Burns said "not a single president in the last 30 years has been an education president. The last one who was Lyndon Baines Johnson."

Clinton has focused on issues such as hiring 100,000 teachers nationwide and acquiring Internet access for Native Americans, but Burns contended that the president has not chosen a strategy which would allow him to be a transformational leader.

Burns, who wrote a biography of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, called FDR a great man who was a transformational leader. He said to be a transformational leader a person must have "conviction, commitment and compassion."

"I've changed my views about the presidency in recent years," he said, noting that "the presidency is a dangerous thing as well as a positive thing."

Dr. Sorenson said President Jimmy Carter was described as a great man, but a poor president. Clinton, she said, was the opposite. She questioned whether the nation can now have both a moral man and a great leader in one human being.

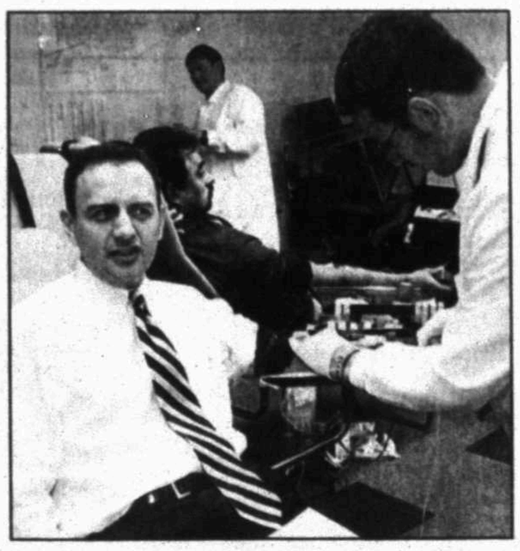
She also noted that the book has received both good reviews and bad reviews around the nation and said that in touring, "It's been wonderful to have the pulse of the American people."

Concerning the presidential contest between Vice President Al Gore and Texas Gov. George W. Bush, Dr. Burns noted that both candidates are centrists and that he would prefer to have two candidates who are not so closely aligned in their political views.

Rather, they said, they would prefer having principled leaders who profess their agendas with compassion and commitment.

Burns and Sorenson are helping lead sessions at the Third Annual Conference on Texas Leadership at the UTPB Center for Energy and Economic Diversification. Those sessions began Wednesday and continue today.

Blood driven success



Midland city manager, Rick Menchaca, grimaces as Peter Lara, senior donor care specialist with United Blood Services, pricks him with a needle. Menchaca and the city offered incentives and door prizes to help encourage employees to donate to help alleviate the blood shortage. More than 60 employees signed up to donate blood on Wednesday at City Hall.

There is a cleansing of the soul in housework

At last, a time of reckoning descended on the Todd household. It was a crossroads: A time to clean up, de-clutter, discard the superfluous and start anew or else cast care into the wind and wallow in the old mire.

For a fleeting moment, "casting care into the wind" sounded so inviting — an old so-called freedom. But I had been doing that for years — at least the decade and more in my Midland homestead.

Though the homeplace is my worldly refuge and haven, more and more it became a burden, a mental snake pit, a — to use a hyperbole — wilderness without balance or order.

Or — more than a mere place — was it I and my sorry mental state that needed fixing — a tuneup?

No doubt, the place was a mess, an eyesore. Yet, through that dismal cloud, I could envision the charm that is the house and its environs.

I could visualize its humble splendor.

But to make the vision reality would require hard work and the seeming sacrifice of throwing away the accumulation of junk and stuff collected over the years.

Todd

But first to go would be the scattered trash, which became heaps, and the layers of dirt and dust.

Over and over, I recalled reading a bit of wisdom from a classical composer who obviously exercised discipline and restraint in his talent: "It is not hard to compose, but what is fabulously hard is to leave the superfluous notes under the table."

That message, I suspect, would apply to all areas of life from writing a sonnet or epic poem to designing a grand tower or flying machine. And in those realms, the class is not only in practicality but in simplicity and subtleties. It is what is called discernment.

So, for the past two weeks, I, after taking leave from work, set out to cast out riffraff and cobwebs from the homestead and, in doing so, to dissipate the fog that increasingly was cluttering my mind and spirit.

There had to be a new beginning, a purging, and not just a shifting around of old things.

For years, I had done that in rearranging mounds of junk and stuff, including those once-curious items which I spied at garage sales. The mix ranged from old mechanical typewriters and lamps to assortments of whatnots.

In addition to the dust and cobwebs secreting in corners, there were layers of paper in the forms of books, magazines, newspapers, old court papers, and junk mail and the such.

The supreme question was this: What to keep and what to discard and for what purpose to treasure?

Purging is good as in getting foul bile out of the belly or cleansing the heart and mind of resentments and old hangups and fears.

At first and from time to time, I was frozen with inaction and not knowing just where to launch this historic cleansing enterprise.

Again, I could envision a spruced-up home place but getting there — making the journey — was the seemingly overwhelming challenge.

Still, at first I avoided attacking the biggest hurdle — taking on the house. So, I worked out in the yards, the front and the back, in the garage and shed, and put off the principal reason for my taking vacation time — to clean up the house.

The deadline was impending.

So, bit by bit, one step at a time, one sweep of the broom at a time, one handful of trash at a time, one bag of trash at a time, I began cleaning up the place, discarding here and there, sprucing up, and washing and polishing.

There was much to do. There is still much more to do. There is no practical end to the work. And I, envisioning a sweet haven called home, now know that seeking this perfection in an abode is laudable. But obtaining that perfection is hardly possible.

What I have found is this: There is a freedom in discarding the superfluous. There is reward aesthetically and physically in getting rid of those things that would cause a person to avoid getting to the crux of life.

And that simply is this: Doing that which we individually and intuitively, if we listen closely, know we ought to do and what we ought to become. First, there must be a clearing of the clutter and a discarding of the "superfluous notes," as the composer penned, before the sunlight of truth enlightens the heart and mind and brings peace.

'Bride' in alien marriage scam sentenced

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

One of three women facing federal charges in connection with a sham marriage scheme involving former employees of The Herrera Law Firm, was sentenced by U.S. District Judge W. Royal Furgeson Wednesday morning to probation and home confinement for four months for conspiracy to commit immigration fraud.

Macarena Venegas, 24, told Furgeson in federal District Court she was sorry and "It was really a dumb thing to do, but I needed the money and I just fell into it."

She admitted in court Feb.10 that she was guilty of conspiring to enter a marriage late last year to circumvent U.S. Immigration laws. She faced up to five years in prison for her part in the scheme.

Ms. Venegas was one of three women arrested Dec. 9 for their part in what was described as "an international sham marriage scheme," in a complaint filed by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Also arrested Dec. 9 were: a former The Herrera Law Firm paralegal, Juanita Lopez Fuentes, 58, the alleged marriage broker, and Rebecca Ulate Garcia, 26, who has also pleaded guilty.

Ms. Venegas pleaded guilty, but noted that she never completed the agreement. She also testified she was fired from her job at The Herrera Law Firm in August, before she agreed to the marriage plot.

The prosecution noted Ms. Venegas received $5,000 for her part at The Herrera Law Firm office at 319 Grant St. in Odessa.

The federal criminal complaint documents claim that Ms. Fuentes engaged in arranging for false fiance petitions leading to sham marriages that allowed illegal aliens to falsely file for permanent resident status.

It is legal for aliens to enter the United States if they are married to or engaged to be married to U.S. citizens, but it is illegal if the marriage or engagement is fictitious for the purpose of illegal entry.

She was approached Nov. 19, 1998 by an INS agent who sought her assistance on how to obtain legal immigration status for two fictitious illegal aliens who were already in the United States.

Once the aliens legally married the United States citizens, they would be able to apply for legal permanent residence status, expediting the process for resident alien status.

It was understood the arrangement was a marriage of convenience, would not be consummated and would end in divorce once permanent resident status was attained by the groom.

In the meantime, The Herrera Law Firm has become the Guardiola Law firm as of Jan. 24. Principal partner Jesse Herrera sold the Midland and Odessa offices to a former partner, Israel Guardiola.

TOYS: GEM student learns lessons

(From 1B)

The four-day trip to the theme park beginning May 8 may make Ashly's year a little brighter, but that is a just reward considering the difference she made in the lives of dozens of Midland children.

"This is our first year to have the GEM Scholars program. We try to encourage kids to go out into the community. Ashly took a lot of initiative and I haven't seen anyone take it quite as seriously as she did," Kim Bolla, the journalism and photography teacher at Carver, said.

Last Christmas, Ashly was brainstorming her service project for the program, equivalent to the high school Texas Scholars academic and service-based recognition. She decided to organize a toy drive for Toys for Tots.

As she began encouraging her classmates to make donations, she saw overwhelming response and wound up raising almost 200 toys.

Never would she have dreamed of any more attention, yet her grandmother found a way of reaffirming the good deed when she saw a commercial regarding the Millennium Dreamers program.

While local merchants did not actually have any applications, an application was found online and submitted.

Father Eddie Andrews was doubtful of hearing anything further.

"I really didn't think anything would happen. What are the odds?" he said.

"We're very proud of her," mother Kelly Andrews said. "This is just one little girl who did something great for her community. It was amazing how many toys they received. Maybe more kids will see this and think that they can do the same. This is something that she can remember for a lifetime."

"This trip is a way to celebrate that she's thoughtful about other people besides herself," Eddie Andrews said. "She took a lot of her own money to go buy presents for the program herself."

"People should realize that if they make a difference in somebody else's life, the person who they make a difference to might feel that they should do something to help and so on and so on," Ashly said. "A bunch of people helping others would make the world a better place."

"I have only had her this semester, but she is very generous and always willing to help other students," Carver journalism and photography teacher Ms. Bolla said. "She is very well-liked and students can count on her to proof their work because she is dependable and will give them her honest opinion."

Apart from playing the generous role of Santa Claus all year long, Ashly enjoys volleyball, tennis and golf. She often finds herself cuddled up with mysteries or autobiographies about the likes of Helen Keller and Shirley Temple, she said, who happens to be one of her favorite actresses.

"I think that her motives were altruistic. I think if you ask her, she saw benefits that were more than just materialistic; the amount her classmates gave was incredible," Ms. Bolla said.

"I'm thinking about doing a canned food drive next year," Ashly said.

If this year is any indication, beyond even that event, Midlanders will be able to feast on the realization that "it is better to give than to receive."

Man sentenced for sexual assault of toddler

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

A Midland man accused of aggravated sexual assault of a toddler last summer will be sentenced to 25 years in prison at a sentencing hearing today, according to Bo Blackburn of the Midland County District Attorney's Office.

Christopher Ty Furtado, 19, was found guilty by a 385th District Court jury Thursday after one hour of deliberation, Blackburn said. The jury later returned with the 25-year sentence.

Furtado will have to serve a minimum of 12.5 years and likely will serve more, said Blackburn.

Furtado was arrested June 25 on charges of aggravated sexual assault of a child, a first-degree felony punishable by five to 99 years in prison.

Furtado's charges stem from a sexual attack on a 19-month-old boy, which was reported to police from a local hospital June 24.

Authorities suspected the child was beaten at a downtown hotel, where his mother and Furtado had stayed the night.

When the child's grandmother visited them the next morning, she found the boy covered with bruises, human bite marks and cigarette burns.

Preliminary medical reports indicate that the child was sexually assaulted and suffered burns to his abdomen that appear to be caused by a lit cigarette.

Furtado's dental impression also matched the bite marks found on the child, it was reported.

The boy was taken into the custody of Child Protective Services and is now believed to be in the custody of the grandmother.

Furtado and the victim's mother were dating at the time, officials said.

Contemporaneous reports said that when police went to Furtado's residence, he ran out the back door, but ran back inside when officers began searching the yard.

Furtado was eventually found hiding inside a water heater closet, police reported.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, April 20, 2000:

You often elicit strong reactions, and you might not have a clue why. Slow down and don't trigger others' issues. You will be a lot happier if you choose to back off from volatile situations. You might constantly be deciding where to establish limits within your interpersonal relationships. Your instincts help you with business; be more in tune with them in general. If you are single, you have an unusual amount of appeal to members of the opposite sex. You might not always like how they express their caring, however. Opt for a deeper relationship this year. If attached, you gain by making plenty of quality time together. SCORPIO proves to be challenging, at best.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You get excited and frustrated at the same time, Burning off steam could mean some harsh words. Be careful. Why not go for a jog instead? Clear out tension. Another willingly talks and helps put plans back together. Remember, sugar works better than vinegar. Tonight: Be carefree with a partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Pressure and frustration need an outlet or they will take a toll on you. Do your job in clearing out pent-up feelings. A partner comes to your aid, as do others. Discussions where you reveal your deeper side prove to be successful. Tonight: Out and about, enjoying yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Get into work. Concentrating clears stress and opens up your mind. Another has ideas that appeal to you. Attend a meeting, or get together with others. Suggestions to simplify your work are well-intended. Give them consideration. Tonight: Buy a plant or some fresh flowers on the way home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Your imagination helps you work through a problem. You find answers because you demand them. A child or loved one acts up. Take time to smooth ruffled feathers. Your work demands precision and a willingness to adapt. Take charge. Tonight: Romp the night away.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Use common sense rather than anger with a family member who can't walk in your shoes or understand the pressures you feel. Let go of a problem. Discussions need to proceed with detachment and creativity if they are to succeed. Tonight: Call it an early night.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Take action where others can't. Realize what you want from another, then zero in. Adjust your plans, recognizing priorities. You need an associate's or partner's support for an investment. Talk to him! Tonight: Favorite dinner, favorite place.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Finances continue to be a point of contention. Don't try to convince another that you are right. Just handle what you must. Use your strong logic and appeal when dealing with others at work. They can't help but respond — your Libran ways melt others. Tonight: Cut expenses.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Your personality breaks through others' defenses, but expect quite a row at first. Another is as stubborn as you are determined. Logic regarding a money matter that involves work and daily living targets the problem. Tonight: Whatever makes you grin!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ You might be a lot angrier than you realize. How it comes out depends upon your personality. You might simply be nervous, with a short attention span. Use the afternoon for soul searching, thinking and evaluating. Tonight: Go for a mini-getaway.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Aim for what you want, network and make the most of an opportunity. A child could make heavy demands. Realize why another wants to talk. Have you been distant or difficult, in his eyes? Be open to conversation and easing some tension. Tonight: Could be very nice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Another's demands give you strong insight into what is going on with him. Pull back before you get too entwined. Ask questions. Know where you are heading with a key issue. Zero in on facts rather than fiction. Tonight: Work late if need be.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Make an effort to gather information, perhaps via the Internet. You might not like all the answers you come up with. Recognizing important financial facts helps you make the right career decision. Check in with a parent or an older relative. Tonight: Buy a new CD.

Opening lead: Five of ♣ Getting an exact count can be as elusive as finding Waldo. It is easy to get careless on this deal.

Three no-trump is obviously a better contract than four hearts as the cards lie. However, it is not easy to reach that spot with only a positional stopper in the enemy suit and no guarantee of nine running tricks.

West led the five of clubs. East won the king, cashed the ace and gave partner a club ruff. West switched to a spade, won in the closed hand, and declarer's problem was obvious — which defender held the queen of diamonds?

Declarer drew trumps in four rounds, discarding a spade from dummy, then cashed the king of spades. At this point declarer knew that East had started with five clubs, four hearts and at least two spades. It was impossible to tell whether spades and diamonds were split 2-2 or 3-1 in the East hand.

After much thought, declarer elected to place East with the queen of diamonds for the two-level overcall, so the ace and king of the suit were cashed. Down one. Could declarer have done better?

Much better. Instead of discarding a spade from dummy on the fourth heart, declarer should have shed a diamond. Then, after cashing the king of spades, declarer can ruff a spade, discovering that East started with three spades at least and, hence, no more than one diamond. Cashing the king of diamonds and then taking the finesse is a proven line.

Emmitt Smith ties the knot with actress

Smith

DALLAS — Emmitt Smith reportedly will walk down the aisle this weekend.

The Dallas Morning News reports today that the Dallas Cowboys running back will wed actress Patricia Southall Lawrence in Dallas on Saturday.

Smith and the former Miss Virginia became engaged last May.

Lawrence was married once before — in June 1995 to actor-comedian Martin Lawrence. They were divorced in September 1996. The couple had one daughter.

LONDON — A High Court judge ruled Wednesday that two members of Phil Collins' former backing band were not entitled to as many royalties as they claimed.

Louis Satterfield and Rahmlee Davis had sought royalties on all 15 tracks of a live album recorded during Collins' 1990 "Serious" tour.

But Justice Jonathan Parker ruled the pair only deserve pay for the five tracks on which they performed.

Davis, 51, a trumpeter, and Satterfield, 63, a trombonist, worked with Collins during the 1980s on several albums, including "Face Value" and "... But Seriously."

LIVERPOOL, England — Rarely seen artwork and letters of "fifth Beatle" Stuart Sutcliffe go on display in England this week, offering new insight into the legendary band's early influences.

The bass player's work, mostly unseen for 40 years, has been loaned to the Beatles Story Museum in Liverpool for a year by his sister, Pauline.

Sutcliffe, a Liverpool Art School friend of John Lennon, was 21 when he died in April 1962 from a brain hemorrhage, just six months before the band's first hit "Love Me Do."

The pair had met three years earlier and Sutcliffe, a talented artist, was persuaded to join Lennon's band, Johnny And The Moondogs. Sutcliffe quit the group in 1961 to continue his art studies.

Museum curator Shelagh Johnston said Sutcliffe's work and letters should be of great interest to Beatles' fans.

The late 1950s "was so important in the formation of the band and their relationships and was a potent period in developing their style," she said.

GREENVILLE, S.C. — American baritone Lester Lynch canceled a soloist appearance with the Greenville Symphony Orchestra on April 27 to honor the NAACP's boycott of South Carolina.

Symphony Executive Director Robert Howard said Tuesday that he is disappointed at the cancellation and will begin seeking a replacement.

Lynch, winner of the 1996 Metropolitan Opera National Council Auditions, has appeared with opera companies including La Scala in Milan, Italy, and the New York City Opera.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has led the boycott of South Carolina in an effort to get the Confederate flag removed from the Statehouse. Civil rights group claim the flag is a symbol of racism and hatred.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Nobel Prize-winning poet Seamus Heaney will deliver a poetry reading at Harvard University's commencement on June 8, school officials said Wednesday.

Heaney, whose recent translation of "Beowulf" became a bestseller in Great Britain, is a native of Northern Ireland. He won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1995 and is the Ralph Waldo Emerson Poet-in-Residence at Harvard.

Amartya K. Sen, awarded the Nobel prize for economics in 1998, also will speak.

PASADENA, Calif. — Henry Kissinger says he's disappointed that presidential candidates aren't talking more about foreign policy.

Kissinger

"Things are changing in every part of the world. ... These events are bound to affect us," the former secretary of state said. "Distances have shrunk, communication is easier. This affects our national security."

Unfortunately, Americans "have always felt that we can withdraw (from world affairs) or involve ourselves at will," the Nobel Peace Prize winner said Tuesday in a speech at the Pasadena Civic Center.

Herrera gets probation for contempt of court

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

Attorneys Jesse Herrera and Eli Salinas were given probated sentences, fines, and required to take ethics in law courses at a sentencing hearing Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson in Midland federal district court.

Herrera, 35, the former principal partner of the now-dissolved The Herrera Law Firm of Midland and Odessa, was sentenced to three years probation and a $15,000 fine, required to complete a drug and alcohol rehabilitation program and attend continuing legal education courses on ethics.

Salinas, 43, received a two-year probated sentence and a $2,400 fine and complete and ethics course.

The Herrera Law firm received a $5,000 fine.

In addition, Furgeson referred the case to both the State Bar of Texas and the Federal Bar for the Western District of Texas for review and possible review of their law licenses.

The defense indicated they would probably appeal, which must be done within 10 days.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Roomberg called for a six-month jail sentences for the two attorneys, the maximum allowable for what they were charged.

The two attorneys were found guilty of contempt of court Feb. 10 by U.S. District Judge Royal Furgeson in a complicated case of client swapping, false billing charges and perjury by attorneys.

Herrera, the law firm and Salinas were found guilty of criminal contempt by practicing law without authorization and with criminal contempt by disobeying a court order by continuing to represent a client they were barred from representing.

The Herrera Law Firm was found guilty of criminal contempt for failing to supervise Eli Salinas and prevent him from practicing law without authorization.

Salinas was found guilty of criminal contempt for obstruction of justice by committing perjury for false affidavits and obstructing justice for falsely testifying under oath.

Roomberg said the law firm's contempt of court troubles began in January 1996 with a case in Ector County against Nelson Gonzales on drug conspiracy and money laundering charges. Roomberg said Gonzales was represented by Tony Chavez, "but at some point, Gonzales wanted to switch to the Herreras."

The court ruled that representation by The Herrera Law Firm was a conflict of interest and barred the firm from being involved. The firm was accused of using outside lawyers to circumvent that order which, among other things, led to the accusations of contempt.

In the meantime, one of the outside lawyers discovered the bogus billing practices and money laundering.

In separate troubles for The Herrera Law Firm, the government has alleged for months that former employees of the law firm and some Herrera family members have engaged in illegal drug transactions in and out of the law firm's offices. The firm's offices in Midland and Odessa have recently been sold to a former partner of Herrera's, Israel Guardiola.

UNT fraternity suspended from campus for hazing

DENTON (AP) — The University of North Texas has kicked off campus a fraternity accused of alcohol-relating hazing.

The Theta Chi fraternity cannot operate on campus for four years, officials announced today. The chapter can then reorganize but would be placed under a two-year suspension.

The action follows a four-week investigation by the university's Office of Student Development into allegations that Theta Chi members supplied alcohol and encouraged drinking among pledges who are minors during parties at the fraternity house during the last weekend in January.

The fraternity's international headquarters has voted to revoke the chapter's charter, university officials said.

During the next four years, the chapter cannot solicit or accept new members, participate in service projects or hold local meetings at the Denton campus.

Last month, six students were arrested and the fraternity chapter was temporary suspended from campus.

A UNT police arrest affidavit said alcohol was served on Jan. 28 to pledge members who were minors at a fraternity function called "The Smoker," where some pledges became so intoxicated that they passed out.

The affidavit stated that one member was removed from a bathroom floor where he was passed out.

At two events the next day, contests reportedly encouraged drinking among pledges. In "The Walk," a minor who became the most intoxicated won a fraternity sweatshirt.

Branch Davidians hope a new church can close old wounds

WACO (AP) — A bell outside the new Branch Davidian chapel rang 82 times Wednesday afternoon — once for each person who died during the fire seven years ago that ended the government siege of the religious sect's compound.

Nearly 300 people — mostly volunteers, survivors and their family members — packed into the chapel on the former compound site about 10 miles outside Waco to remember the dead and celebrate a new beginning.

As the bell rang, survivor Clive Doyle tearfully read the names and ages of the victims, including Davidian leader David Koresh and Doyle's 18-year-old daughter, Shari.

Alex Jones, a radio talk-show host who organized the $92,000 volunteer construction effort, named Doyle trustee of the church during the dedication ceremony, which started nearly an hour later than scheduled.

"Government can come and destroy the building but as long as there is one child of God, they cannot destroy the church," Doyle told the group.

Doyle, who escaped the fire that consumed the compound's buildings, also read the names of five sect members who are serving prison terms for manslaughter and firearms convictions.

Four federal agents and six Davidians died during the Feb. 28, 1993, shootout that started when federal agents tried to arrest Koresh.

Jaime Castillo, Brad Eugene Branch, Renos Lenny Avraam and Kevin A. Whitecliff were sentenced to consecutive terms of 10 years in prison for manslaughter and 30 years for using machine guns during the gun battle. Graeme Leonard Craddock was sentenced to 10 years for using a grenade and a consecutive 10 years for using a machine gun.

"We've maintained their innocence throughout," said Doyle.

The Supreme Court on Monday will review an appeal in which the jailed Davidians are challenging their sentences.

"Let's pray that some good comes out of next Monday's hearing before the Supreme Court. We don't want them to have a shorter sentence. We want them out!" said Doyle.

Survivors also received a new flag to fly in front of the new church. When the 51-day standoff between the government and the Branch Davidians ended with a fire, federal agents took down the sect's flag that flew atop the compound.

The fire happened several hours after the FBI tear-gassed the buildings. The government contends the Davidians' deaths, whether by fire or gunshot wounds, came by their own hands.

Branch Davidians' relatives have filed a wrongful-death suit against the federal government over the raid. A trial is scheduled to begin June 19.

Later in the day, former Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agent Robert Rodriguez, who infiltrated the group's compound before the siege, came to pay respects to agents who died. His presence angered several Davidians.

"I just came to pay my respects, that's it," said Rodriguez. "I didn't come here to cause problems with anybody. ... I came here to pay respects to my people. A lot of things happened here ... a lot of things changed what I stood for, whatever that was."

He has contended that government agents used him as a scapegoat for the failed 1993 raid to cover up their own mistakes, and in 1995 sued the bureau. That lawsuit was settled.

Earlier that year, Rodriguez testified at a congressional hearing that the raid went on even though he told an assistant commander that the raid's secrecy had been compromised.

Census Bureau 'gratified' with return rate of survey forms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sixty-five percent of American households have returned their 2000 Census forms, tying the 1990 return rate with some forms still coming in, U.S. Census Director Kenneth Prewitt said Wednesday.

"This is a serious achievement," Prewitt proclaimed, noting that the Census Bureau had expected the response rate to fall slightly.

Equaling the 1990 return rate reverses a "decades-long decline in meeting our civic responsibility," he said.

Now a half-million census workers go into the field for follow-up operations where they call on households that did not mail back their forms. That effort will run from April 27 to July 7.

The Constitution requires the count every 10 years to reapportion seats in the House of Representatives.

In addition, billions of dollars in federal money are distributed based on population formulas calculated from the information collected in the census.

This makes a good response vital to local officials who conduct campaigns to encourage their citizens to cooperate. Indeed, some communities reportedly have gone so far as to offer their residents cash to complete their census forms.

The Census Bureau itself relies on encouraging people to do their civic duty to get them to respond but it is also looking for new ways to improve that cooperation. One method scheduled for a limited test includes offering the incentive of a calling card worth 30 minutes of long-distance calls in return for their response.

In recent weeks controversy has swirled over some of the questions on the long form, which some people felt were intrusive. Prewitt said he believed that has hurt the response.

Returns of the short form had topped the 1990 rate, 66.8 percent to 66 percent, he said. However, the long form response so far is just 54.1 percent, compared with 60 percent a decade ago.

"Federal statistics are not about individuals, therefore they are not about privacy," Prewitt said.

He refused to speculate, however, on whether people who received the long form would be more likely to resist census takers when they come to the door.

In March, about 120 million census questionnaires were mailed or hand-delivered to homes across the country.

The bureau launched a promotional campaign challenging communities to top their 1990 response rates by 5 percent and about 15 percent of cities and towns have done so, the agency reported.

The Census Bureau budgeted for a 61 percent response rate this year because the rate has declined each decade since 1970 — from 78 percent to 75 percent in 1980 and 65 percent in 1990.

While detailed figures being posted on the bureau's Internet site show the current response nationally at 64 percent, Prewitt said the overall total has now reached the 65 percent mark of a decade ago.

He said forms are expected to continue coming in slowly and final response figures should be available in a week or two.

"We are gratified with the nation's response," Secretary of Commerce William M. Daley said. "This initial response shows that the hard work of Census Bureau professionals, who planned and executed Census 2000, kept the bureau on track for a very successful census, the first of the new century."

The strongest showing this year is in the upper Midwest with return rates of more than 70 percent in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota and Nebraska.

Even so, some of these were below their 1990 rates. Minnesota was down 4 percentage points, for example, a drop Prewitt referred to as the "Lake Wobegon" effect.

"Something happened in Lake Wobegon," he said, referring to the fictional community created by humorist Garrison Keillor where it's always a quiet week.

The lowest return rates were recorded in the South, with under 60 percent returns in Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina. Vermont, New Mexico, Maine, Alaska and Hawaii also fell under 60 percent.

Massachusetts and Rhode Island had the biggest improvements, up three points, Prewitt noted.

Judges: Elian to stay in U.S. until hearing

MIAMI (AP) — Chastising the government for ignoring the wishes of a 6-year-old boy, a federal appeals panel on Wednesday ordered the Elian Gonzalez must remain in the United States until an asylum hearing next month.

The court action, extending an earlier stay granted by one of the judges, marked the latest in a series of victories for Elian's Miami relatives, who have been battling his Cuban father in an international tug-of-war over the child. The order, however, does not prevent the government from reuniting father and son in the United States.

In Little Havana, a tense vigil quickly became a celebration, with people dancing, crying and chanting "God Bless America."

"The Gonzalez family continues to believe in the laws of the United States," said Lazaro Gonzalez, the great-uncle who so publicly defied Attorney General Janet Reno's demand to turn the boy over to his father last week. "We will continue to pray ... that (Elian) may remain where his mother wanted him to be, in the life of freedom."

Elian played on his beloved swing set and high-fived his second cousin, Marisleysis.

Ms. Reno, in Oklahoma City for the dedication of a memorial to the victims of the federal building bombing five years ago, said she would abide by the court order.

"But it does not disagree with my determination, it does not say that the boy cannot be reunited with his father," she said. "I believe Elian should be reunited with his father and I said that all along."

Wednesday's order was by a three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta. The government could seek to have the stay lifted by the full circuit court or by a U.S. Supreme Court justice. Or it could wait until a scheduled May 11 hearing before the federal appeals court on the asylum request by the Miami relatives. The Immigration and Naturalization Service had denied that request.

The 16-page ruling did not specifically forbid the INS from taking custody.

Carpenter erects crosses on Columbine anniversary

Associated Press

LITTLETON, Colo. — The carpenter who last year erected wooden crosses for the 15 victims of the Columbine High School massacre returned to Colorado to restore the memorial as mourners prepared to mark today's anniversary of the tragedy.

Greg Zanis wanted "to honor the families of the victims," his wife, Susan, said in an interview from their Aurora, Ill., home.

His truck carried 13 crosses this time, in deference to one victim's parents who had torn down the two crosses representing the two student gunmen. Both boys committed suicide after the rampage.

The April 20, 1999, massacre was the worst school shooting in U.S. history, and it affected thousands of people worldwide who watched on television as police circled the building and terrified students fled the school, including one seen dropping from a library window.

At nearby Clement Park, where the crosses were erected after the slayings, workers unloaded orange-and-white barricades Wednesday in anticipation of thousands of mourners at a public memorial service and a candlelight vigil planned for today.

Elsewhere, victims' families organized memorial services to mark the day, and officials prepared for a statewide moment of silence.

The school itself remains off-limits to the public.

Davadas Moses, a doctor from Loma Linda, Calif., in Denver on business, tried to reach it Wednesday but was turned back by security.

"I just wanted to get a sense of it in my own mind," Moses said as he walked through Clement Park.

Many survivors, still coping with their grief, planned to stay away from the services and the Littleton area today.

Columbine's attendance has dropped this week, with 263 of 1,885 students absent Tuesday, said school district spokeswoman Marilyn Saltzman. Attendance was "way down" Wednesday but figures were not available by midafternoon.

"Most of the people I've talked to are trying to get as far away from this place as possible — the ones who were actually there," said Karen Nielsen, who was working in the cafeteria when the first shots rang out.

Kim Blair, a Columbine senior who saw her friend Anne Marie Hochhalter wounded, planned to spend the anniversary with her family in a hotel.

"Everybody I know is going up to the mountains or trying to get away for the day at least," Ms. Blair said. "For some, it's an emotional thing. Last year was so horrifying that they just can't be anywhere near that place at that time."

Still, officials expected a good number of students at the private assembly. Classes are canceled for the day, and attendance is not mandatory. Teddy bears sent in the wake of the shootings were to be set out for students to take if they want.

Gov. Bill Owens planned to lead a public service at the Capitol in downtown Denver, including a statewide moment of silence at 11:21 a.m. MDT, the time the attack began.

Darrell Scott, whose daughter Rachel was killed, was to lead a service at a nearby church that is expected to draw about 2,000 people, including victims' families. Other services were planned at nearby churches and the gravesides of some victims.

Nate Wooten, a freshman skateboarding during a break Wednesday, said there was little talk about the anniversary among Columbine students.

"They care, I know that," said his friend Brad Bootsma, a sophomore. "I guess they're just trying to go on with their lives. I know I am."

Networks debate extent of coverage

NEW YORK (AP) — Television networks are wrestling with how to mark the first anniversary of the Columbine school massacre while responding to pleas from some families of victims to show restraint today.

ABC, CBS and NBC are all expected to devote much of their morning news shows to Columbine High School, where two teen gunmen killed 12 students and a teacher before killing themselves on April 20, 1999.

Students and school officials in Littleton, Colo., have asked that cameras and all outsiders be kept away from Columbine, where a private memorial service will be held. Public remembrances are planned for the adjacent Clement Park and Denver.

Some parents of shooting victims have also asked the news media to refrain from showing pictures of the attack.

CNN and ABC's "Good Morning America" will have reporters in Littleton, but both decided not to send anchors.

NBC's "Today" show debated whether to go and decided to send anchor Katie Couric, said Jeff Zucker, executive producer.

CBS won't speak to anyone who doesn't want to be on camera, but it can't ignore the story, said Marcy McGinnis, the network's vice president of news coverage. Jane Clayson of "The Early Show" will be in Littleton.

Networks were also internally debating how much file footage of the massacre to show. Fox News Channel, for example, will show terrified students fleeing the school but won't air footage that contains dead bodies lying on the ground, said Alicia Acuna, a correspondent based in Denver.

CNN is "not trying to wallow in what happened a year ago" and decided against a prime-time special on the anniversary, said Sid Bedingfield, executive producer.

MHS' Burns claims 2 more gold medals

By Stewart Doreen
Assistant Sports Editor

ABILENE — The highlights for the Tall City girls' track and field teams at the District 4-5A Track and Field Championships can be summed up in two words — Tara Burns.

■ Girls

Burns was the show when it came to Midland's representation at Abilene Christian University.

Burns was the only girl from Midland High or Lee to win gold at district (she won two Wednesday). She was the only girl from MHS or Lee to win a medal (she won three over the two-day meet). She was the only MHS or Lee girl to qualify for the Region I-5A Track and Field Championships (she qualified in three events).

ABILENE — The Tall City boys track and field teams combined to send four entries to the Region I-5A Championships Wednesday at the District 4-5A Championships at Abilene Christian University.

■ Boys

To put the four entries in perspective, Odessa High didn't have one on Wednesday while both the Rebs and Bulldogs totaled five on Tuesday's limited schedule of field events. Also, Odessa Permian's Roy Williams had four of his five regional qualifications on the meet's second day.

It was that kind meet for Midland Lee and Midland High, which finished fourth and fifth respectively in the team standings. Lee scored 89 points. MHS, the 1999 champs, finished with 50. Permian won the meet with 150 points. Abilene High took second with 121.

NBA'S REGULAR SEASON ENDS

Robinson rises up

Spurs beat Lakers, clinch home-court advantage to start

By Kelley Shannon
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO — With Tim Duncan injured, David Robinson and the Spurs reserves clinched home-court advantage for the first round of the playoffs.

San Antonio came back from a 17-point deficit in the fourth quarter for a 103-98 overtime victory over the Los Angeles Lakers on Wednesday night.

David Robinson scored six points in overtime and four Spurs reserves scored in double figures — including Antonio Daniels with 11 points in the fourth quarter and overtime.

"Boy, we're actually starting to turn into a team again. That's a lot of fun," Robinson said.

San Antonio had to win to clinch homecourt advantage in the best-of-five first-round series against Phoenix. The teams were tied heading into Wednesday's games, and the Spurs owned the tiebreaker.

Duncan again was sidelined because of torn cartilage in his left knee. It was the fourth game he's missed with the injury, and it's questionable whether he'll be ready for the start of the playoffs.

Robinson led the Spurs with 17 points.

"I know I keep sounding like a broken record, but I'm real happy for these guys," said Spurs coach Gregg Popovich. "They've been playing well the past month and I'm just happy to get this done."

Kobe Bryant led the Lakers with 23 points, and Shaquille O'Neal had 22.

Midland battles Abilene

■ Four teams from two cities battle for three playoff spots.

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

With due respect to the high school baseball teams in Odessa and San Angelo, the real drama in the District 4-5A season is nearing its climax today, and all attention will be focused on Midland and Abilene.

■ 4-5A Baseball

The two games with the biggest impact on the district playoff race start at 4:30 p.m. today. Midland High, tied for first with Abilene Cooper at 7-3, will host 6-3 Abilene High at Zachery Field, while in Abilene, Cooper will host 6-3 Midland Lee in what could be an even more interesting game.

It's a gross understatement to say that these two games will determine who makes the playoffs. While Odessa High is still mathematically alive at 4-6, the Bronchos, who are open today, will be eliminated if either Lee or Abilene High pull off victories.

So it more than likely will be three of the above mentioned four teams from Midland and Abilene who will make the postseason. Things got logjammed last Saturday when Cooper beat Midland High 9-8 to force a tie for the district lead.

Barkley ends career with 2 points vs. Grizzlies

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Charles Barkley ended his 16-year career the way he wanted to.

Determined to go out standing up, the Houston Rockets forward thrilled the hometown crowd with 7:26 to go in the second quarter Wednesday night when he reported into the regular season finale against the Vancouver Grizzlies.

Barkley, out since Dec. 8 with a ruptured knee tendon, received a standing ovation amid shouts of "Barkley, Barkley, Barkley." Fans waved cardboard cutout Barkley masks and groaned when Barkley missed his first shot with 6:10 left in the half.

Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich obviously was trying to get Barkley in the scoring column. Barkley missed his next two shots before he finally got a rebound and scored with 1:24 left in the second quarter.

That got him another standing ovation, and Tomjanovich took him out with 1:19 left.

Barkley left smiling, finishing with six minutes of playing time, two points, one rebound, one assist and a blocked shot.

When he returned to the sidelines for the second half, a fluffy recliner awaited him.

The Rockets almost had another thrill with a fourth quarter comeback, but the Grizzlies held on for a 96-92 victory that snapped a seven-game losing streak. Former Rocket Michael Dickerson led Vancouver with 20 points.

But it was Barkley's night. After the game, the accolades flowed.

"He has what I call the heart of a champion," Tomjanovich said. "He always played to win. He put the team above himself and he always followed the golden rule: 'The open man gets the ball.' If he was double teamed 10 times he passed it out."

Rockets center Hakeem Olajuwon also praised Barkley.

"It's been my honor to have played against Charles and to have played with him on the same team," Olajuwon said. "In the beginning, we thought it was going to be hard to play on the same team with Charles, but it took only five minutes to know different."

Lady Chaps drop twinbill with Howard

By H.A. Tuck

It's quite simple. Midland College needs to win one game at home Thursday to advance to the Region V women's softball championship. The problem is that the Lady Chaps needed that same victory over Howard College Wednesday, but lost twice, 17-6 and 9-5, to the visitors.

The two teams play a doubleheader starting at 2 p.m. on Field Four of the Bill Williams Softball Complex. If the Lady Chaps take a win, they'll advance along with Western Junior College Athletic Conference champion El Paso Community College. Should Howard

Spurs, Hornets clinch homecourt advantage; Detroit gains 7th seed

Associated Press

The San Antonio Spurs and Charlotte Hornets will open the playoffs at home, and the Detroit Pistons will get the postseason matchup they wanted — Miami rather than Indiana.

The Spurs, Hornets and Pistons were among the few teams with something to gain on the final night of the regular season, and all of them did.

San Antonio overcame a 17-point fourth quarter deficit to beat the Los Angeles Lakers 103-98 in overtime despite the absence of Tim Duncan. The defending champions will open the best-of-five first round at the Alamodome against the Phoenix Suns.

The Hornets also needed a victory to clinch homecourt advantage for their series against Philadelphia, and the Hornets got it by defeating the Miami Heat 83-73.

It was Charlotte's 30th home win of the season against 11 losses, and coach Paul Silas said he hoped to continue that dominance in the playoffs.

"Not too many teams won 30 games at home this year," he said. "Getting the homecourt advantage is good, but you still have to play. We've got to maintain a homecourt edge that we have right now."

The Pistons needed only to beat the Chicago Bulls to lock up the seventh seed, and they did it with ease, 112-91.

"That's what we wanted — a trip to Miami," said Jerry Stackhouse, who led Detroit with 21 points and seven assists. "We've got some guys who are banged up, and they will feel a lot better hanging out in the sun than in the cold. Hopefully, that will be enough to give us a lot of energy."

Detroit (42-40) went 2-2 against Miami and 1-3 against top-seeded Indiana.

The Pistons wanted the matchup with Miami because Heat point guard Tim Hardaway is expected to miss the series with a foot injury.

"Now we can start concentrating on Miami," Pistons coach George Irvine said. "That's a great team. You have to focus on Alonzo (Mourning), but I respect the whole team. Their bench can do a lot of damage."

The playoffs begin Saturday.

The other matchups are Lakers-Kings, Jazz-SuperSonics, Trail Blazers-Timberwolves, Pacers-Bucks and Knicks-Raptors.

None of the statistical races was up for grabs on the final night.

Shaquille O'Neal won the scoring title going away over Allen Iverson of Philadelphia, finishing with a 29.7 average to Iverson's 28.4. The two had been neck-and-neck in the scoring race through March, but Iverson's production was limited over the last several games by foot and elbow injuries.

Vince Carter scored only 13 points in Toronto's game at Orlando to drop from third in the scoring race to fourth — one-tenth of a point behind Detroit's Grant Hill's 25.8 average.

Jeff Hornacek of Utah had a chance to finish with the third-highest free-throw percentage in league history behind Calvin Murphy's .958 in 1980-81 and Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf's .956 in 1993-94.

Hornacek, who had missed only nine free throws all season, entered Utah's final game with a percentage of .949.

Hubert Davis of Dallas did not attempt a 3-pointer in the Mavericks' final game and finished with a league-leading percentage of .491.

Dikembe Mutombo of Atlanta won his first career rebounding title, while Jason Kidd led the league in assists, Eddie Jones in steals and Alonzo Mourning in blocks.

In Houston, Charles Barkley made one last appearance for the Rockets and had two points, one rebound, one assist and a blocked shot in six first-half minutes.

Belcher gets ASC honor

ABILENE — Talitha Belcher, a Midland High graduate, set three McMurry University track records over the weekend at Angelo State University and was named the American Southwest Conference Female Track Athlete of the Week.

Belcher won the 200 meters in a time of 24.47, which is also the top time in the nation this year. Her 12.08 time in the 100 meters also broke a Lady Indian record and is the second best in the nation. The third record came in the 400 meters where she took the event in 57.03, the third best time in Division III this year.

Belcher rounded out the day as part of McMurry's 1,600 relay team which ran to a 48.37 time for the fifth best time recorded in the country. With wins in all four events, Belcher became an automatic qualifier in all four events.

McMurry's track and field squads will be hosting the American Southwest Conference championships this weekend at Indian Stadium.

ROCKETS: Barkley bows out

(From 1C)

Rockets vice president Carroll Dawson told Barkley that he "owned the backboards in the NBA" and then presented Barkley with the backboard fom which he got his final NBA rebound.

"You really own this one," Dawson said.

Barkley accepted the praise graciously.

"For 16 years, I've lived every kid's fantasy," Barkley said. "It's unfortunate I didn't come to Houston until I was on the downside. I wish I could have played my entire career here."

The Rockets trailed 84-71 with 7:59 left in the game but tied it at 90-90 with 1:27 to play. The Grizzlies hit six straight free throws to hold on. Walt Williams led Houston with 20 points.

After a dazzling 16-year career with Philadelphia, Phoenix and Houston that earned him a spot among the 50 greatest players in NBA history, Barkley brought it to a close against the Grizzlies.

Barkley's career was thought to have ended Dec. 8 when he ruptured a knee tendon against Philadelphia.

But he wanted to walk away — rather than be carried away — in his last game, which is why Barkley one more time despite his knee being only about 70 percent healed.

For all his flamboyance throughout his career, Barkley finished with a humble tone.

"Basketball doesn't owe me anything, I owe everything in my life to basketball, everything," Barkley said. "I'm 37 years old. I'm rich beyond my wildest dreams. I have great material things. I've been all over the world and it's all because of basketball.

"This is a sad day for me, I've been playing basketball since I was nine years old and now I'm not going to be playing anymore," Barkley said. "That's the only thing that makes me sad. I won't miss the limelight.

"The difficult thing is that nothing I'll do in my life from now on will come close to what I've accomplished in basketball in the last 16 years."

Barkley was the fifth player chosen overall in the 1984 NBA draft by Philadelphia after a standout career at Auburn. Barkley's draft class included Michael Jordan, John Stockton and current teammate Hakeem Olajuwon.

After playing six seasons with the 76ers, Barkley was traded to the Phoenix Suns and led the them to the NBA Finals, where they lost to the Bulls in 1993. Barkley was in his fourth season with the Rockets when he suffered the injury in Philadelphia.

"It's important for me from a mental standpoint to get out there," Barkley said of returning for one last game. "It's a mindset thing. It's been a grueling ordeal to get to this point. I just want to walk off under my own power."

Barkley averaged 22.2 points, 11.7 rebounds and 3.9 assists in 1,072 career games and won MVP honors in 1992-93.

field goals by Daniels and Robinson and outscored Los Angeles 14-9 in the extra period.

With 1:39 left in overtime, Robinson picked up a foul guarding O'Neal and fell to the floor as O'Neal elbowed him in the ribs. O'Neal was called for a technical foul, and Popovich was so mad over the incident he had to be held back at the bench by his assistants.

"It was unnecessary," Robinson said. "It (O'Neal's elbow) was after the play. I'm just glad the referees saw it as so."

O'Neal left the Alamodome without commenting.

Unlike the Spurs, the Lakers had nothing at stake in the game. But coach Phil Jackson said his team was trying its best to win despite using mostly reserves down the stretch.

"The second unit had a 17-point lead. They had an obligation to take it home," Jackson said. "We wanted to have a competitive game, and we got that."

The Lakers led 48-40 at halftime. Though the Spurs lurked close behind until midway through the third quarter, a 16-3 Los Angeles run opened a double-digit lead for the Lakers — 72-57 with 2:11 left in the period.

With a 74-61 advantage entering the fourth quarter, the Lakers inched further ahead and led by 17 points two minutes into the period. Then a 10-0 by Spurs reserves got San Antonio back in it.

San Antonio pulled to 84-81 on a dunk and follow-up free throw by Malik Rose with 4:48 remaining. A 3-pointer by Daniels tied the game at 84-84, two free throws by Terry Porter moved the Spurs ahead and a hook shot by Samaki Walker gave San Antonio a four-point lead with 1:58 remaining.

The Lakers went more than seven minutes in the fourth without a field goal before tying the game at 89-89 with 29 seconds left on a 3-pointer by Devean George.

The Spurs ran out the shot clock on their next possession, and Bryant missed a long jumper to send the game to overtime.

"We just didn't execute," Bryant said. "We wanted to relax and not get injured. Now is the time to get ready for Saturday or Sunday."

The Lakers, who open the playoffs this weekend against Sacramento, finished the regular season with a league-best record of 67-15. It's the second-best record in franchise history.

BASEBALL: Tall City teams in hunt

(From 1C)

Saturday and it wouldn't matter how things would go (today)," said MHS coach Barry Russell, whose team couldn't hold an 8-6 lead in the seventh inning at Cooper. "With the four-way tie right now that makes it that much bigger."

Technically, it isn't a four-way tie since Midland High and Cooper each have seven wins and Lee and Abilene High have six, but the four teams are nonetheless packed together. But perhaps that's no surprise.

Midland High has been in the playoffs two years in a row, Lee is the defending district champion and Abilene High and Cooper have been contenders for the past several seasons. Odessa High made things interesting in the first half of district by beating Lee and Abilene High, but the Bronchos have since returned to earth.

"The time I started thinking about (today's game) was when we lost to Odessa High," said Lee coach Jesse Benavidez. "I kind of figured out that was going to be this way right now. If we win this game we'll still be at best tied for the lead."

As big as these games are, they really won't resolve much immediately. All four teams will at worst be in position to make a district playoff game in case of a tie. If Midland High and Cooper win today, each school will clinch the right to at least play a district playoff game for seeding.

In reality, today's games are the toughest remaining games on the schedule for the Midland and Abilene teams.

"I believe whoever wins will be playing for the championships and whoever loses will be playing for third," said Russell.

If you go by past history, the two Midland schools might have advantages today. Midland High routed Abilene High, 15-0, in a run rule win in the first half of district, while Lee beat Cooper at home, 8-4, in the first half of district.

However, the taller task certainly awaits the Rebels today.

"I don't remember the last time we won over there," said Benavidez, in his 10th season as Lee's coach.

What could give the Rebels an advantage is their pitching situation, since they drew the open date on Tuesday and should have a rested staff. Benavidez said he'll most likely go with Collin Gilliam, who is 3-0 in district with a 1.67 ERA. If necessary, Jon Rogers, who last pitched in Saturday's 13-1 run-rule rout of Abilene High and defeated Cooper in the first half, will be rested enough to throw in relief.

Midland High's pitching staff isn't quite as rested, since the Bulldogs last played Tuesday in a 7-4 win over San Angelo Central. Freshman Casey Zachry, who came on in the seventh inning and threw 12 pitches to earn the save, should start today.

BOYS: MHS' Taylor, Lee's Shearod both qualify in two events

(From 1C)

Both schools — MHS and Lee — captured two region qualifiers each on Wednesday. MHS' Anrae Taylor had both for the Bulldogs. Taylor defended his title in the 110-meter high hurdles and placed second in the 300 hurdles.

For Lee, discus thrower Justin Painter joined "big boy" teammate Steve Subia as a district champion, winning the discus. Tuesday, Subia started the Lee weight sweep, winning the shot put. Sam Shearod, later, took second in the 400 meters to qualify for regionals in his second event.

Both Shearod and Taylor are the only Tall City boys to make regionals in two events. The Rebels led all Tall City track teams (boys or girls) with five region qualifiers.

"Five was about what we thought we would do," Lee coach Kelvin Ratliff said.

The Permian boys led all teams with 12. It was not exactly a big surprise. Permian was the favorite coming into the meet. The only disappointment for the Panthers was that distance runner Josh Vickers, the 1999 Class 5A champion in the 1,600 meters, failed to qualify for regionals in that event. He finished fifth.

For Taylor, he defended his championship, winning the 110-meter hurdles in a tight race. Taylor, a junior, again edged out Permian's Bronzay Rivera, winning the race in a time of 14.32. Rivera finished .04 of a second behind.

Taylor said it was a matter of keeping the momentum he collected at the Tall City Relays, the last tune-up meet for district. At the Tall City meet, Taylor beat Rivera for the first time this season.

"It (the win at the Tall City meet) got me mentally focused to where I could do it again," Taylor said. "It gave me a boost and got my ego back.

"I am not worried about the time. As long as I got the district championship, I am happy. That is what I was worried about."

Rivera did beat Taylor in the 300 hurdles. Rivera finished with a time of 38.31 and Taylor in a time of 38.36.

"Today really boosts his confidence," MHS track coach Kirk Thurman said. "He realizes he can go to state."

For Painter, this region berth was a long time coming. He won the discus with a throw of 159 feet, five inches, and earned his first trip to Lubbock. If football is any indication, this is where the fun begins.

"It is like 1998 (the first of Lee's first two state championship drives), we didn't know what to expect," Painter said. "It will be fun either way. I started thinking about regionals this morning."

Shearod qualified for regionals in the triple jump on Tuesday. He added another event by again taking second place — this time in the 400 meters.

Shearod ran his best time of the year — 48.63 — to comfortably earn second behind Abilene High junior phenom Jonathan Johnson, who won the event in a blistering time of 1:52.38. Johnson also won the 800 in meet record time.

Still, this was a good race for Shearod. It was also a region berth he wanted more.

"I wanted this one more (than the triple jump)," said Shearod, who took third in the 400 at district last year. "This is my race."

For Lee, the meet was a solid one in terms of region entries, but it also gave Ratliff a taste of the future.

"Damon Johnson, Freddie Jones and Ashley Jackson are sophomores who made the finals in the 100 and 200, and that is encouraging," Ratliff said. "It also gives us something to build on.

"All of the kids competed well and competed hard. I don't know if I have one kid who didn't compete the best he could. It was just the field was too strong today."

For the MHS boys, the day was almost about who would be joining Taylor. The Bulldogs nearly shocked the field in the 400-meter relay, placing a close third to AHS and Permian. MHS finished with a time of 41.72. AHS and Permian finished in 41.39 and 41.45, respectively.

"This is the first time for the team to run with Lamar (Hickey), and he made a big difference," Thurman said. "The good thing is that all four (Taylor, Cody Connell, James Gripp and Hickey) are coming back next year."

NOTES: AHS' Jonathan Johnson broke his own meet record in the 800 with a time of 1:52.38. He claimed a third gold in the 1,600-meter relay and is only a junior... Abilene Cooper's Dwayne Benoit, who won the 3,200 on Tuesday, completed the distance double, setting a record in the 1,600. Benoit ran 4:19.96, beating the previous record set by Lee's Robert Schooler in 1981... Williams qualified for the region meet in five events (the 100, long jump, high jump, and both relays)... Abilene High won both relays...

'Hounds fall after 10-inning battle

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Missions salvaged a 2-2 series split with the Midland RockHounds with a 7-6 win in 10 innings on Wednesday.

Midland (5-9) had to fight back after falling behind 6-1 after six innings of play. The 'Hounds eventually sent the game to extra innings but lost the game on a bases loaded wild pitch by Bert Snow (0-1).

The RockHounds were the first to get on the board with a run in the fourth inning. Justin Bowles singled, stole second base and reached third on an throwing error by Missions' catcher Adam Melhues. Bowles would then scored on a sacrifice fly by Cody McKay.

In the sixth, the Missions erupted for six runs. A walk issued by Midland started Justin Smith and then back-to-back singles tied the game at 1-1. Jim Brink relieved Miller at the mound then intentionally walked Melhues to load the bases. The 'Hounds would get a force out at the plate but then Brink walked Glenn Davis on four pitches to bring in the go-ahead run. The Missions would then get two big back-to-back hits as Kip Harkrider connected for a two-run single and Nick Theodorou had a two-run double down the left field line.

The 'Hounds responded in the eighth as Eric Byrnes and Dionys Cesar scored on groundouts hit by Rusty Keith and Esteban German to close the gap to 6-3.

In the ninth, Missions' reliever Bill Everly (1-0) issued consecutive walks to Jason Hart and McKay. A single by Jacques Landry loaded the bases. A sacrifice fly by Todd Mensik to score Hart made it 6-4. Byrnes then tied the game with a two-run double, and send the game to extra innings.

The 'Hounds had their opportunity to take the lead in the 10th, but Esteban German was gunned at the plate trying to score from second off a Hart single to right field.

ROCKHOUND BITES: McKay lost a nine-game hit streak as he went 0-for-2 but scored a run and had a RBI. McKay also had a sacrifice fly and two walks... Before their six-run sixth, the Missions had been held scoreless for 21 2/3 innings.

(From 1C)

points, and Odessa Permian record second with 121, it was Burns who was as good as any.

Burns tied Permian's Trina Woodard, AHS' Kristen Adkins and San Angelo Central freshman Misty Coley for most gold medals in individual events (two). She also tied Woodard for most region qualifications in individual events (three).

"She is going to regionals in three events, just like we predicted," MHS girls track coach Susan Nix said. "That is the first time that I have had a jumper qualify for regionals."

So Burns, a sophomore, made a little history too.

"It is exciting," Burns said. "I didn't know I could go in three."

Wednesday, Burns added gold medals in the long jump and 400 to go with the silver medal she earned in the triple jump on Tuesday. She will go to regionals as the most decorated Tall City track athlete (girl or boy) of this meet and of the season.

"I knew Tara had it in her," said MHS boys hurdler Anrae Taylor, who qualified in two events for regionals. "When she sets her mind to it, she can do anything."

Burns went into the long jump competition, having not lost this season. Early on, Woodard looked as though she might be the girl to beat Burns, launching a jump of 17 feet, 10 3/4 inches. Burns, though, responded right away with a leap of 18-0 1/4. It was her second jump of 18 feet or more this year. It was also good enough to win.

"It was hard," Burns said. "I was just thinking about winning."

More competition awaited Burns in the 400, where she again was the top seed. Burns was faced with holding off Permian's Kelly Wilson, who earlier in the meet set a record in the 800 meters. Burns did fall behind early, trailing at the 200-meter mark, but she turned it on and finished with a season-best time of 57.55. Her previous best was 59.00. Burns definitely turned some heads.

"She is awesome," said Wilson of Permian who finished second in the 400 for the second straight year. "I thought I got rid of Shae Simpson last year, and all of the sudden, there is another girl."

Burns was the highlight reel for the Midland teams, which finished sixth and seventh in the meet. MHS totaled 48 points. Lee earned 18.

Of the rest, Trechia Smith of MHS almost qualified in the 100 and 200, while Lee got top performances from Julie Jay in the hurdles and Katie Simpson in the 1,600. Also Audra Hocutt, competing in the 800 meters for the second time, finished fourth in the two-lap race in a remarkable time of 2:24.92. Hocutt, just a sophomore, should be a major factor in the district for two more seasons.

NOTES: Wilson, also competing in the 800 for the second time, broke the 800 record with a time of 2:15.32, shaving more than three seconds off the previous mark. Wilson should be a contender for the state title. She is already one of the best soccer players in the state... Abilene High won its second straight district title... Other records came from Kristen Adkins, who broke her own record in the 1,600 meters with a time of 5:16.84. Central's Misty Coley set a new record in the high jump, vaulting 5-8. Coley is only a freshman. Speaking of freshmen, Central's 1,600 relay team which won the district title is made up of all freshmen runners...

LANGE: Bulldog pitcher starts every game

both coming this week in the 4-5A playoff mini-tournament.

"I pretty well like pitching every game," Lange said. "It gives me more control over what happens, and there is enough time in between games, so that it isn't really a problem."

But what about two games in two days and three games over a five-day span.

"Well, I'm tired right now," Lange said Wednesday while preparing for Lubbock High. "I'm glad to have a couple of days off before I pitch again.

"Pitching those two games (against Cooper and Lee) were tough and stressful," Lange said. "Those were big games for us. But I really think the Lee game, especially, will help me. I kept my concentration the entire game. It's when I let up in my concentration that I seem to give up some runs."

But being the team pitching ace isn't all a bed of roses. She lost two 1-0 decisions to Lee in regular district play. She tossed a one-hitter against league champion Abilene High in district play and lost again 1-0.

"This game has amazing twists and turns," Lange said. "I threw a one-hitter against Abilene High and lost and then I had two-hitters against Cooper and Lee and won."

But Lange isn't just a pitcher. She is also the team's clean-up hitter. MHS scored a total of just three runs in its last two games and Lange drove in all three in three separate plate appearances.

"Hitting has always been a big deal with me," Lange said. "I've always been a good hitter, but I really got off to a bad start this year. It feels good to be hitting strong again. The (game winning) hit against Lee (Tuesday) was really nice because the last time I played against them, I came up with two runners on and struck out."

When Lange was a freshman, she got a small taste of what it was like to be in the state playoffs.

"They pulled me up from the JV (junior varsity) for the playoffs and I got to finish one game against an El Paso team, but I didn't get into any of the other games," Lange said. "So, this is exciting to be a junior and back in the playoffs. And this time I'll be playing. I'm looking forward to seeing just how far we can go."

Pitchers in District 4-5A are used to seeing the batters they face since most of them are three and four year players. The playoffs will present a different problem for Lange. The Lady Bulldogs have not played against Lubbock High, their bi-district opponent Friday.

"You don't know the weak spots of their hitters, so it is really different when you get to the playoffs," Lange said. "We may not ever face a team in the playoffs that we have played before. You just have to go out and throw strong through the order one time and find out what works."

Lange already has a leg up on the playoffs. She already seems to have found what works.

ROW: Lee junior throws wicked change-up teammate Mandy Hacker. Lee coach Wes Overton seldom breaks up the every other game rotation. Row just happens to draw the Monterey bi-district duty.

But would she rather have the sole pitching role at Lee like Collin Lange does at Midland High?

"I don't mind alternating (with Hacker) because you get some good rest between outings," Row said. "And it's good for both of us since we get in our playing time."

Overton says of his two pitchers, "When you have two good pitchers, you would be crazy not to use them. I don't really think it matters much who pitches for us. They both do a good job."

Row says that her best pitches are a screwball and a change-up. But it is her change-up that catches the eye of the average fan. When she delivers that floater to the plate out of a fast ball motion, batters sometimes hurt themselves trying to slow down the bat.

She has been known to throw back-to-back change-ups with the same result.

"I don't think it matters much when I throw a certain pitch," Row said. "I just throw what I think will work."

Row says she doesn't go into a game with a pitch in mind.

"Early in the game, I like to make sure all my pitches are working and then I just throw normal and throw what I think will work," Row said. "If one of the pitches isn't working, I might not throw that pitch in that game, but I'll use it in the next game. Sometimes one pitch is just better than another on a given day."

Row has hurled two no-hitters this year and lost a one-hitter to Abilene Cooper. She doesn't give up a lot of hits in many games. But she insists that she doesn't enter a game thinking about a no-hitter.

"If I think about something like that, that's when I really mess up," Row said. "So, I just go out and try to do my best."

Lee won the District 4-5A championship last season in somewhat of a surprise. This year the Lady Rebels had the entire team back, but end up as the No. 3 seed in the district. That means Lee may be on a collision course to face district champion Abilene High again in the third round. AHS defeated Lee in both meetings this year.

"Abilene High thought it was a fluke last year that won the district (title)," Row said. "So, we would really like another chance to play them since we didn't win the district this year. We could beat them in the playoffs and that would make up for district."

Row says she feels more prepared for the playoffs this season even though she already has a rich playoff experience behind her. Lee has never been eliminated from the state playoffs before the region semifinal (fourth) round.

"I don't know if I'm pitching any better than the last couple of years, but I know I have matured some," Row said. "I can handle situations better and don't get down when things go wrong. I'm doing a much better job of that."

MC: Lady Chaps lose

sweep today, they'll have second place in the conference.

Struggling at the plate and in the field, the Lady Chaps have lost eight straight, the last six in conference action. They've been outscored 80-26 in those six, not able to plate more than six runs in any of the crucial contests.

"We knew we needed to win all four in Midland, which is a tough task," said Howard College coach Andy Mace before the game. "So we are relaxed, with nothing to lose."

Lady Hawk pitcher De'Shaun Drake kept the Lady Chaps at bay in the first game, which went six innings, and then went the first five of the nightcap, gaining two wins for her work.

Howard plated eight runners in the first inning and never looked back, using four singles, an MC error, a wild pitch, two sacrifice flies, and a hit batter. MC coach Tommy Ramos argued hard over a play at the plate, when Howard's Teresa Johnson went far outside the baseline to avoid the tag on Lauren Wallace's throw from right field. The appeal was in vain, as Howard sent 12 batters to the plate.

Howard added two more in the third on two doubles, a single, and a sacrifice fly.

Midland finally scored four in the last of the third, making it 10-4, as Melissa Martinez blasted a grand-slam homer over left-center. MC had two singles, an error and walk ahead of the blast, but runners kept being erased at the plate.

Teresa Johnson added a solo homer for the Lady Hawks in the fourth. Ten batters went to the plate for Howard in the fifth, netting them six runs on four singles, a double and three MC miscues.

Midland could only make it a tiny bit closer in the last of the fifth, getting two runs on two singles, a ground-out, and two HC errors. With an 11-run margin, the game ended in the fifth.

Every Lady Hawk in the lineup had at least an RBI in the game with Josie Rosovich and Johnson each getting three RBIs.

Game two was quite different early as both teams were scoreless until Howard got a single run in the third on two singles and a stolen base.

MC finally got some great defensive help in the third when, with one on, second baseman Misty Baker made an over-the-shoulder catch in short right field. With two on, catcher Frannie Salcido smothered a towering pop fly right next to the backstop.

Three more scored for the Lady Hawks in the fifth, thanks to a solo homer for Becky Holland and a two-run homer by Rosovich, both over dead center.

It seemed MC might rally in the last of the fifth as the Lady Chaps got two runs on three singles and a throwing error, cutting the margin to 4-2.

Howard put an end to that with five runs in the sixth on three singles, a walk, a hit batter and three fielder's choices which failed to get runners twice.

Midland managed a run in the sixth on a walk and a two-base throwing error. But the Lady Chaps fell short in the bottom of the seventh, despite a single by Martinez ahead of Lauren Wallace's homer. The 9-5 final margin was the closest of any of the Chaps' last six conference losses — four at home last week to El Paso and now two to Howard.

New low

LONDON (AP) — The euro fell to a new low against the U.S. dollar in heavy trading today. Gold was mixed.

The euro, the single currency adopted by 11 European currencies last year, was under pressure for much of the trading day, with little support evident as it sank below the low of 93.90 cents that was reached Feb. 28.

The euro was quoted at 94.14 cents in late European trading, down from 94.81 cents on Tuesday. By midday in New York it sank as low as 93.57 cents before recovering some lost ground in light trading. At midafternoon, the euro traded at 93.92 cents.

The dollar also rose against the Swiss franc, but gave ground against other leading currencies in European trading.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Tuesday, included 104.36 Japanese yen, down from 104.46; 1.6688 Swiss francs, up from 1.6582; 1.4756 Canadian dollars, down from 1.4830.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5800, up from $1.5767.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 104.92 yen, and the pound was worth $1.5775.

Based on euro rates, the dollar is worth 2.0771 German marks, up from 2.0627; 6.9694 French francs, up from 6.9171; 2.3414 Dutch guilders, up from 2.3231; 2,057.24 Italian lire, up from 2,042.05.

Gold closed in London at $280.20 bid per troy ounce, down from $281.20 on Tuesday. In Zurich the bid price was $280.15 down from $280.75. In Hong Kong, gold closed at $281.45 an ounce, up from $281.25 on Tuesday.

Silver closed in London at $5.10 bid per troy ounce, down from 5.11 on Tuesday.

Futures rise

Heating oil and crude futures rose sharply Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange amid growing concern about shrinking fuel supplies, which are at their lowest level in at least seven years.

In other markets, cattle and grain futures climbed higher.

Inventories for distillate fuel, which includes heating oil and diesel fuel, fell again last week, according to newly released data from the Department of Energy and the American Petroleum Institute. That prompted a nearly 9 percent surge in heating oil prices, also leading other energy commodities higher.

Heating oil for May delivery rose 6.07 cents to 76.85 cents a gallon, while May intermediate crude jumped $1.24 to $27.35 a barrel.

May unleaded gasoline followed suit, rising 2.47 cents to 85.33 cents a gallon, while May natural gas fell 4.3 cents to $3.055 per 1,000 cubic feet.

In London, June Brent crude from the North Sea rose 72 cents to $23.77 a barrel on the International Petroleum Exchange.

The Energy Department data released early Wednesday confirmed what API figures had shown late the day before — that distillate and gasoline stocks both dropped.

Bill O'Grady, energy futures analyst for A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in St. Louis, said falling inventories, coming at a time of year when stockpiles usually are building, are heightening fears about the possibility of summer shortages.

Inventories are shrinking partly because of truck drivers tanking up to keep pace with the booming economy, according to analysts.

Trade deficit hits record $29.2 billion

■ Official says large portion of deficit can be traced to higher petroleum prices.

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A surging foreign oil bill along with Americans' appetite for foreign computers and telecommunications equipment helped push the U.S. trade deficit to a monthly record of $29.2 billion in February.

That bigger-than-expected deficit was up 6.5 percent from a January shortfall of $27.4 billion, the previous record, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

Imports jumped 1.5 percent in February to a record $113.4 billion as sales of crude petroleum, industrial supplies including chemicals and capital goods such as computers and telecommunications equipment rose to records.

Through the first two months of this year, the U.S. trade deficit was running at an annual rate of $340 billion, compared with $268 billion for all of 1999.

"About half of the increase in the deficit thus far this year can be traced to higher petroleum prices," said Commerce Secretary William Daley.

The price of crude oil hit $25.01 per barrel in February, the highest since $25.75 in December 1990 on the eve of the Persian Gulf War. Imports of foreign oil, meanwhile, hit an all-time monthly high of $6.5 billion in February.

Production limits by oil-producing nations pushed crude-oil prices to a nine-year high in early March of $34 a barrel, but prices have fallen since then. A decision by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to boost production should provide additional relief.

America's deficit with OPEC countries widened to a record $3.2 billion in February, a 21.4 percent increase.

Economists said the trade report isn't as bad as it appears. "When you adjust for oil prices, the deficit narrowed," said Northern Trust Co.'s chief economist, Paul Kasriel. National Association of Manufacturers' economist Gordon Richards said: "outside of oil, imports showed a small decrease."

On Wall Street, the Dow Jones industrial average and the Nasdaq closed down as investors took some profits from a powerful two-day run and sold shares that failed to live up to high expectations for corporate earnings. The market was little affected by the trade report.

For the second straight month, U.S. exports dipped in February. They fell 0.2 percent to $84.2 billion. Sales of food such as fish, corn and fruits fell, as did sales of cars and capital goods, including airplanes and industrial machines.

The widening trade deficit is the one bit of tarnish on an otherwise sterling, record-breaking economy, which is in its ninth year of uninterrupted growth.

Economists said the bloated deficit is actually a testimony to the robust state of the U.S. economy compared with other countries, particularly foreign economies that are continuing to recover from a global financial crisis that struck in 1997.

Prosperous consumers are helping the United States gobble up imported goods as demand from overseas' economies for U.S. exports, while picking up, continues to lag.

"The U.S economy is surging at a pace so much faster than the rest of the world that exports just cannot hope to keep up with imports," said economist Joel Naroff of Naroff Economic Advisors.

The U.S. economy could face dangers at some point, economists warn, if the huge increases in the trade deficit continue and foreigners suddenly decide they no longer want to hold dollar-denominated assets. A sudden rush for the exits could send American stock prices and the value of the dollar plunging.

On the political front, the deficit could present the Clinton administration with political problems as it tries to sell a landmark trade agreement to Congress that would clear the way for China to become a member of the 135-nation World Trade Organization.

America's deficit with China narrowed by 6.8 percent in February to $5.6 billion. But that deficit is running $2.2 billion higher in the first two months of this year than the same period last year. The administration argues that the market-opening trade deal with China would mean billions of dollars in increased sales for American exporters.

The politically sensitive deficit with Japan shot up 20.7 percent to $6.7 billion.

There was at least one bright spot in the report for U.S. exporters. Sales of U.S. consumer goods, such as household appliances, rose by $253 million to a record monthly high of $7.3 billion in February.

Dairy industry tries new, easy-to-use packaging

By Philip Brasher
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hoping to juice up its sales, the dairy industry is making big changes in the looks of the plastic jug, created half a century ago.

New on the market are a pitcher-like jug so easy to pour from that a 4-year-old can use it — without spilling — and jazzy single-serving bottles of flavored milk aimed at teen-age boys that would replace the half-pint cartons that are the staple of school cafeterias.

"The milk industry realized some years ago that it had to perk up its act a bit, or appear more relevant to consumers, especially young consumers," said John Sicher, editor of Beverage Digest.

For years, milk has been steadily losing market share to soft drinks, juice, bottled water and other beverages. Milk consumption dropped from 19.4 gallons per person in 1988 to 18.2 gallons in 1998.

Enter the Milk Chug, single-serve bottles of flavored milk introduced by the nation's second biggest dairy processor, Dean Foods Co. of Franklin Park, Ill. Sales totaled $100 million in 1999 and are projected to double to $200 million this year as the product is introduced nationwide, thanks to a new technology that the company says triples the shelf life of milk to six weeks or more.

Now mostly in convenience stores and supermarkets, Milk Chugs will soon be sold in vending machines in Philadelphia. A smaller competitor, Smith Dairy of Orrville, Ohio, has a similar product called Moover selling in convenience stores in New Jersey and several Midwest states.

The drinks give kids a healthy alternative to soda, said Eric Blanchard, a Dean Foods spokesman.

"That's the main goal, to get people to drink a healthier product that is still fun and tastes good," Blanchard said.

Stocks close lower as IBM, Intel slump

By Eileen Glanton
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks fell Wednesday as investors took some profits from a powerful two-day run and sold shares that failed to live up to high expectations for corporate earnings.

Mild volume and modest losses for major market indicators made for one of the calmest sessions of the year, in sharp contrast to the violent market swings of recent weeks.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 92.46 to close at 10,674.96, having given up a solid midday gain.

The Nasdaq composite index fell 87.16 to close at 3,706.41. Broader stock barometers also closed lower. The Standard & Poor's 500 fell 14.14 to 1,427.47.

The decline reminded investors that last week's devastating selloff has left the market vulnerable. Some mixed reports on corporate earnings and a sense that the rally on Monday and Tuesday may have been overdone sparked selling on Wednesday, analysts said.

In the first two sessions of this week, the Nasdaq rose 472 points, with record point gains each day, and the Dow average gained 461, wiping out big chunks of the crushing losses sustained last week.

Once again, earnings reports drove the market. Companies are nearing the peak of the reporting season, and while most companies have reported very strong profit growth, investors have punished those that have shown any hint of weakness.

Wednesday, IBM fell 7 to 104 1/2. The company said late Tuesday that while earnings beat analysts' expectations, sales slumped 5 percent in the first quarter, dragged down by a broad decline in products ranging from desktop computers to mainframes to hard disk drives.

Intel, a bellwether technology stock, fell 9 15/16 to 119 1/16, accounting for the largest share of the Dow's decline. Intel said first-quarter profits rose 37 percent, and executives also predicted unusually high sales for the traditionally sluggish second quarter.

Francis Galton's pea concept is most relevant in financial world

By M. Ray Perryman

Francis Galton was a fascinating man. Although not nearly as famous as his first cousin and compatriot, Charles Darwin, he had a profound impact on the world. Like Darwin, he was fascinated by genetics. Unlike Darwin, he was mesmerized by measurement. He measured all aspects of humans down to the length of fingers, the size of peas, and just about anything else that didn't measure back.

Perryman

His fame stemmed from several sources. His intense study of fingerprints led to their widespread use, making him a legend in criminology. His study of genetics caused him to believe that the human race could be enhanced by selected breeding. His name was invoked by the Nazis years after his death in 1911, but it is quite clear that he did not advocate that anyone be mistreated, much less the atrocities of World War II. Like many other intellects, his name was used inappropriately when he could no longer defend himself.

His greatest contribution to the world was in the field of finance and investing, although as a Victorian gentleman of the leisure class he never deigned to consider this subject. In the 1870s, Galton was fascinated by the fact that he seemed to find normal distributions (bell curves) wherever he looked — the height of soldiers, the diameter of peas, the dispersion of marbles passed through a device that he invented. But he went a step further — a very critical step indeed! He noted that, if you analyzed the outliers of a normal distribution, those people or things on the ends of the bell curve, you get another normal distribution.

Although we now take this notion so much for granted that you may have never given it a second (or even a first) thought, it is truly remarkable. If you plant only big peas, you won't get all big peas. You'll get a distribution of peas of all sizes. The same thing happens if you plant little peas. Now, the average pea grown from the big peas is likely to be larger than the average pea grown from the little peas, but big peas don't generate ever bigger peas and small peas don't bring ever smaller peas. In other words, both groups tend to move back toward the middle. Through many experiments, Mr. Galton validated this concept of moving back to the middle or, in more technical jargon, regression to the mean.

If you do give this idea a moment's thought, it makes a lot of sense. Without it, trees would tend to group themselves into one set many times taller than giant redwoods and another many times smaller than the miniature bonsai. Peas would fall into a group bigger than bowling balls and another smaller than BBs.

The concept has merit in many contexts, but it is perhaps most relevant (though often ignored) in the financial markets. In fact, the age-old axiom to "Buy Low and Sell High" reflects exactly this notion. There is an almost irresistible urge to follow the herd in investing. When everyone is buying and the price is going up, most people want to buy. When everybody else is dumping and the price is falling, you want to unload as well. Yet this herding instinct leads to buying "high" (when everybody wants to buy) and selling "low," the exact opposite of ancient market wisdom. If you want to "Buy Low and Sell High," you have to be a contrarian.

It is a well-established fact that, despite their marvelous efficiency, markets tend to overreact to short-term phenomena. New public offerings spurt to unsustainable levels and earnings assessments that miss a quarterly estimate by a penny can send a stock into a tailspin. There are natural market forces which tend to correct these exaggerated movements. A rapid run-up in price invites competition for the expected future profits; an abnormal fall leads shareholders to ponder replacing management and management to come up with innovative solutions. All of these factors support regression to the mean — and a contrarian approach.

Don't get me wrong. There are no guarantees in this or any other approach. One of the greatest difficulties and marvels in today's dynamic, lightning-fast world is that the mean itself is unstable and may well be increasing rapidly. Over an extended period of history, long-term profits and stock prices have indeed been rising. The availability of more and better information brings even more frequent adjustments. Nonetheless, the market does overreact — virtually every day. And — as surprisingly hard as it is to accomplish — "Buy Low and Sell High" remains a great strategy.

Dr. M. Ray Perryman is President and Chief Executive Officer of The Perryman Group (www.perrymangroup.com). He also serves as Institute Distinguished Professor of Economic Theory and Method at the International Institute for Advanced Studies.

Hispanics get HBOed again

For argument sake, let's say it's Fourth of July weekend.

You and your family plan to spend the entire day with family and friends, cooking out, swimming, setting off fireworks and, as darkness settles in, ending your celebration by watching a huge fireworks display at the park.

Acosta

But, wait. There's going to be a program on television that day, detailing the history of this country.

It could be interesting, but there's no way you're going to miss out on mouth-watering barbecue and a light show of explosive proportions for a television show ... right?

Leave it to HBO to come up with the assumption that the Hispanic population is going to be home on Cinco de Mayo (May 5). That, after all, is the day HBO will launch its documentary Americanos: Latino Life in the U.S.

Here is the pitch for the show from the HBO web site (http://www.hbo.com/home-pages/cmp/docs.shtml).

"From art to music to politics to education to religion, the history of Latinos is as rich and diverse as any group in America. This month, Latino-Americans from around the country share their personal stories — and their unique heritage — with HBO audiences. Conceived and co-produced by actor/activist Edward James Olmos, and directed by the Oscar-nominated team of Andy Young and Susan Todd (Children of Fate), this feature-length documentary explores the unique ways Latino-Americans are expressing their culture and individuality, helping to document their place in our society at the dawn of the 21st Century."

I can see why Cinco de Mayo would be a good day to air the program. After all, it is a Mexican holiday. Still, I don't know about you, but I don't plan on being in front of the television on that day. In Midland and Odessa there are going to be barbecues, fiestas, parades and concerts.

And even after all that fun stuff is over, we'll probably be at my grandmother's house, men outside talking, women in grandma's huge kitchen talking and kids playing until they fall asleep.

So if I want to see the documentary before they rerun it, I will have to tape it.

Next, HBO does not have the best record when it comes to understanding the ways of the Hispanic people.

Example.

A few years ago, Oscar De La Hoya was making his way to the ring to the sounds of live mariachi music. HBO boxing announcer Larry Merchant said something to the effect that the music wasn't so great. It was a major insult to anyone who loves mariachi music and was taken as such by much of the Hispanic community.

Here is how HBO fixed it.

Now, I know some of you may not watch boxing. Here is how the program is shown. Right before the fight they show the commentators give their expert opinions about the two fighters with the ring in the background.

Next they show the two fighters coming into the ring, then the meeting at the center of the ring.

The fight starts, in between rounds they show what is going on in the corners, replay highlights from the round that just finished and show punch stat numbers then the bell rings and the fight starts again.

Although you hear their voices you nev-

Super Car Show brings low-rider style to West Texas

By Richard Acosta

Lowriders and lowriders for as far as the eye can see.

Air-brushed ladies adorn the hoods of classic automobiles, with tires of shiny black surrounding highly polished chrome rims.

Rainbow-tinted window stand between the harsh sun and the soft velvet seats and all-leather interiors.

Under the hoods, engines gleaming gold the sunlight make it hard to see the different components that make up the motors.

The Tejano Super Bike and Car Show is a paradise for any kid who reads a low-rider magazine the way stockbroker reads the Wall Street Journal, a mecca for swarms of teens in baggy pants.

Carlos Lopez of Odessa, 16, one of the baggy-pants teens, was on hand to enjoy the show. He said that anytime he could see these cars and bikes for real is great.

"It's like something to do," Lopez said. "These are really cool and it is neat to see them for real and stuff. You know it is like you see them in the magazines and that is cool, but when you get to see them for real is different. I don't know, it is just cool."

Nick Hernandez of Texas Tours Entertainment said he was very pleased with the way the event turned out.

"I think it was very successful," he said. "We had a lot of local talent enter the contest and win a lot of awards."

Giving local performers an opportunity to showcase their talents is what the Tejano Super Bike and Car is Show all about, Hernandez said.

"This will never be a full-blown concert-type event," he said. "There is a lot of local painter car builders, bike builders, singers and other performers who need an opportunity to perform. That is what we want the Car Show to be."

Hernandez said that entries came in hand-over-fist from schools and cities around the Permian Basin to enter the show.

"We had to turn away a lot of entries the days before the show," he said. "We had about 250 entries all together, and next year we will have to expand the show."

In addition to the local talents, the event hosted some major performers. The groups NU Flavor, Eddie Gonzales and Lil' Suzy were the grand finally for the 2000 car show — which was fine for some of the young ladies on hand.

Susan Ramos, 16, said the only reason she came out the event was to hear Nu Flavor. She had she has all their CDs and getting to meet them will be a dream come true.

"I have to say that I am the biggest Nu Flavor fan ever in the history of the world," she said.

"I love their music, I love their songs, I hope I get to meet them; I would just die. My favorite is Rico (Luna). Oh my God, he is so fine. I hope he reaches down and touches me."

New cartoon meets need for Latino characters

By Susan Parrott
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Baldo, the subject of a new nationally syndicated comic strip, that made its debut on Monday, is like a lot of teenagers.

He longs to get noticed by the prettiest girl in school. He enjoys a good game of soccer, and he's building his very own car.

He's also Latino, and so is the rest of his comic-page family. And the car he's piecing together is a cherished low-rider.

Cartoons depicting mostly Hispanic characters are rare. And those themed around a Latino family were nonexistent in national syndication before Baldo was created by a Texas journalist and a Florida illustrator, said Lee Salem, vice president and editor of Universal Press Syndicate, which is launching the strip in nearly 100 newspapers.

"There certainly has been a dearth of strips in that area," Salem said. "It is something we have been looking for and when we saw Baldo, we knew it was the one."

"Baldo," is being released in English and Spanish versions.

Only three other Universal Press Syndicate comics have started out with higher numbers, Salem said. They are "For Better or For Worse," "Calvin & Hobbes," and "The Boondocks."

"It's a combination of defined market need and a good strip with characters that have a lot of humor potential," Salem said.

The daily cartoon is written by Hector Cantu, an assistant features editor at The Dallas Morning News, where the cartoon also will run; and drawn by Carlos Castellanos, a freelance artist from West Palm Beach, Fla.

Cantu said he has wanted to create a cartoon since he began reading Mad magazine as a child. He said he found little that resembled his own Mexican-American her-

DEAR ABBY

Clean hands prevent infection in hospitals, homes and schools

by Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: We would like to add to the discussion about unwashed hands being a hazard for patients. We are certified infection-control practitioners in a large medical center. The Association for Professionals in Infection Control and Epidemiology is a well-established organization with more than 3,000 professionals, whose goal is to promote excellence in infection control and prevention.

Van Buren

Hand-washing is the No. 1 prevention against spread of infection, inside and outside the hospital setting. It is important in the home, in schools and in every workplace. It is the cornerstone of infection-control practice and education for everyone who works in health care.

Proper hand-washing is taught during orientation for new employees and daily by most practitioners whenever the need arises. Soap, running water, friction and 10 to 15 seconds covering all surfaces of the hands are necessary to loosen dirt and wash the germs down the drain. It is the responsibility of all health-care employees to practice proper techniques to protect patients — as well as ourselves.

At our facility, hand-washing is considered serious business and proper practice is enforced. Alcohol foam or gels for hand antisepsis are recommended for those "difficult times" when an employee is unable to get to a sink.

We agree with your statement, "Proper hygiene practices are an essential part of high-quality medical care." And we want Dear Abby to continue to be part of our team, promoting good infection-control practices, handwashing and good health. Thank you, Abby. — JAN WROBEL, RN, AND BARBARA WIXSON, RN, SUMMIT MEDICAL CENTER, OAKLAND, CALIF.

DEAR JAN AND BARBARA: I'm sure many readers will be as surprised as I was to learn that most hospitals have a full-time infection-control team or nurse whose job it is to do surveillance, prevention and control of hospital-acquired infections.

A patient, relative or friend of a patient who witnesses a breach of proper hygiene practices should report it to the charge nurse, the administrator of the facility and the infection-control coordinator.

Speaking up will not jeopardize the comfort of the patient; however, failing to speak up could endanger the health, or even the life, of the patient.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I adopted a newborn girl three years ago. We knew the birth mother three months before delivery. She is a wonderful young woman. We keep in touch four or five times a year.

She is now 21 and is being married to a very nice young man. He knows about our daughter, but his parents do not. Because our child's skin color is darker than ours, they would surely realize that her birth mother is the bride.

We have been asked to attend the wedding but not to bring our daughter. I say no — but my wife wants to go. Help! — OPENLY ADOPTING IN CANADA

DEAR OPENLY ADOPTING: Resist the temptation to show off your daughter at the wedding. Do as the bride wishes and give her a loving send-off as she enters her new life.

Abby shares her favorite recipes in two booklets: "Abby's Favorite Recipes" and "Abby's More Favorite Recipes." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 per booklet ($4.50 each in Canada) to: Dear Abby Booklets, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, IL 61054-0447. Santana tops the music charts

By Steve Morse
The Boston Globe

Carlos Santana

At a time when teenagers often rule the trend-driven music world, the most unlikely current king of the charts is 52-year-old Carlos Santana — the original Woodstock hippie who scored the hottest Top 40 hit of the past year, while earning 10 Grammy nominations.

Benefiting from recent Grammy coverage leading to the Feb. 23 event for which he's the sentimental favorite to sweep the awards, Santana's album, "Supernatural," sold 204,000 copies this week and shot back to No. 1 on the charts. It outdistanced Britney Spears, the Backstreet Boys, and the other cuties on the airwaves. The album has sold 6 million copies since its release last spring.

"People have really grooved to this record and I don't think it's going to stop," says Lisa Goren, who manages the HMV store in Cambridge, Mass., where Santana's album is also No. 1. "As an older person, I'm glad he's getting this attention, and it's not just going to teens and rappers."

Santana's return from near oblivion is due in part to his solid base of support among baby boomers who remember the '60s and '70s, as well as to his smartly timed plan to ask new-generation artists to perform on his album, including Rob Thomas of Matchbox 20, Dave Matthews, Everlast, Lauryn Hill, Wyclef Jean, and Mana. They helped give it a contemporary edge that rescued Santana from his old-time classic-rock niche.

And, in a year that saw Ricky Martin take the Latin music scene to a mainstream mania, Santana has made his comeback virtually without the support of Latin radio, despite five tracks on the CD in Spanish.

"It's textbook the way it all came together," says Richard Palmese, senior vice president of Santana's label, Arista Records. "You go to radio and it works there. Then you go into the stores and it sells. Then the critics give you their support, then MTV and VH1. Everybody has been on board. It's been an amazing campaign."

Santana's talent is not to sing, but to play guitar with a trademark passion that hasn't waned since his Haight-Ashbury days. Born in Autlan de Navarro, Mexico (the son of a mariachi musician), he was raised in Tijuana and San Francisco, where he was washing dishes in a fast-food restaurant when the Grateful Dead pulled up and the band's guitarist Jerry Garcia, upon hearing of his musical interest, encouraged him to keep playing.

Garcia became a mentor ("he'd show me all kinds of things on the guitar," Santana once said), but Santana also listened to everyone from Jimi Hendrix and Eric Clapton (who plays on the "Supernatural" album) to Miles Davis, Wayne Shorter, Bob Marley, John Coltrane, Tito Puente, and, especially, African musician Baba Olatunji.

Santana came from an era of drug experimentation — and has acknowledged being on acid when playing at Woodstock '69 — but soon stopped using drugs and became a devout spiritual seeker and meditator. He also eschews limousines and still travels with his band as "one of the fellas," says his longtime keyboardist, Chester Thompson.

Santana's recent success — which rivals any achieved by boomer peers Bonnie Raitt, Cher, Elton John, and Rod Stewart in the '90s — was jump-started by the Top 40 single, "Smooth," a collaboration between Santana and Rob Thomas of Matchbox 20. Santana chose Thomas's song "because I believe that guy, I like the honesty of his voice," Thomas recalls Santana saying.

The first Top 40 station in the country to play the song was Boston's "Kiss 108" (WXKS-FM, 107.9). "Carlos hadn't been on the radio in a long time. I can't remember ever being approached about a Carlos Santana song," says the station's program director John Ivey.

"When (Arista) brought the record to us, they said, 'Look, we don't know what we've got here.' But when my music director, David Corey, and I listened to it, we knew it was going to be a smash. And it's still holding. We've probably had 2,000 spins on it at this point — and listeners just aren't tired of it.

"It doesn't have any of the elements that burn out listeners — it doesn't have too catchy a hook and isn't too glitzy," says Ivey. "And it's not in-your-face. It's just a great song."

"Carlos is almost like a mythical figure," Thomas says by phone from New York. "I'm 27 years old and I pinch myself when I think that I just worked with Santana. I'm ecstatic. And mine was the last song to get on the record, so that makes it even more special."

Thomas says Santana worked quickly in the studio ("we did maybe two takes of the song") and was a joy to work with in the accompanying video — a live clip shot in the streets of Harlem.

"The band wouldn't stop playing!" Thomas says, recalling last summer's videotaping. "

It was 98 degrees out there, but Carlos and the band and the extras just kept going, even when the cameras stopped. Everybody was sweating like a pig except for Carlos, who was cool as can be, in his suit."

Santana isn't talking these days, because his spokesman said he agreed to do an exclusive interview with Rolling Stone in exchange for a cover piece before the Grammys. But members of his entourage aren't so tongue-tied.

"A lot of people don't get a chance to take the ride we're on," says keyboardist Thompson. "And the main motivation for Carlos on this album was to reach young people, especially at a time when you have gangs and a lot of violence.

He saw it as an opportunity, because he has three young ones himself."

"Carlos wanted to be on the airwaves and be contemporary again," says producer K. C. Porter, who produced several tracks and wrote one of them ("Primavera"). "I worried about there being too many guests on the record," adds Porter, "but amid all the diversity, Carlos provides the common link."

"He's a loving, generous guy with a great family and that all comes out in his music," says former Grateful Dead percussionist Mickey Hart about his friend. "He honors his ancestors and understands that people came before him and plowed the way. And the young people he played with look up to him as a kind of godfather."

Santana's former manager — the legendary Bay Area promoter Bill Graham — encouraged him to collaborate with more young artists, but while Santana tried it to some degree in the past, he wasn't ready to fully plunge in until recently, says Hart.

"It's just a time of Carlos's life when he can let go. Sometimes you don't take directions when you're young, but you can take them when you're older."

Although Santana had some early Top 40 hits — including "Evil Ways," "Oye Como Va" and a cover of Fleetwood Mac's "Black Magic Woman" — he hasn't had a radio hit since 1982. He has survived most of the past three decades by touring, not through record sales and certainly not by winning Grammys (he's had only one Grammy his entire career).

"He's a very astute businessman when it comes to touring," says Dave Marsden, vice president of Cambridge's Don Law Co. "He's had some of the most intelligently packaged tours in the business. He has shared bills with Bob Dylan, Jeff Beck, and had Phish open for him when they got started."

CARTOON: 'Baldo,' put Latino face in comic strips

itage in the cartoon books and comic pages.

"Latino superheros have come and gone, but as far as comic strips, there was never a Latino family like this as I was growing up," Cantu said.

When he started drafting the story lines to Baldo two years ago, it was a natural fit.

"I had to create something I'm very familiar with," he said. "I couldn't write about polar bears in Alaska."

All he needed was an illustrator.

Cantu knew Castellanos from his contributions to Hispanic Business magazine in Santa Barbara, Calif., where Cantu once worked. The collaborators quickly developed the strip's characters.

They have never met, but communicate by e-mail and the telephone.

Baldo, who Cantu says is about 14, is the strip's central figure. He lives between the sometimes-conflicting influences of his U.S. home and Latin American heritage. And while the strip has a strong father figure, called Dad, there is no mother.

"Having just one parent will help us focus on the relationship between father and son," Cantu said.

The female influence on Baldo comes from his little sister Gracie, a strong-willed rebel who campaigns to save the Earth, and his great aunt, known as Tia Carmen, who forces Old World ways and magical remedies on the family.

While the creators drew on some of their own life experiences to create the strip (Baldo's physical features were modeled after Castellanos' half-brother), they say the strip's story lines about teen-age dilemmas and family interaction appeal to readers of all ethnicities.

"It certainly brings a new perspective into the comic strip pages," said Castellanos, a Cuban-American. "But there is nothing in the strip that other people can't relate to. It has broad appeal."

The pair first pitched their cartoons to Universal Press Syndicate in the summer of 1998. They signed a five-year contract a year later.

Cantu said he's excited about creating daily story lines.

"Luckily, life is full of so many different experiences that hopefully I'll get around to every single one of them."

Charles Ericksen, editor and founder of Hispanic Link News Services, says he believes the cartoon is successful at realistically portraying a Latino family without stereotypes.

"This would not be a caricature but a strip that would actually attempt to depict a real life situation of a Hispanic family living in the United States," he said.

HBO: Cinco de Mayo, not independence day er, ever, see the commentators during the fight.

During one fight however, Merchant, who upset the Hispanic community with his comments about mariachi music, was taking to De La Hoya, the one who requested the music for his entrance, were talking on air during the fight. HBO took the viewer away from the action, during the fight, to show Merchant sitting with his arm around the shoulder of De La Hoya.

Whatever.

I'm not saying the program Americanos won't be interesting. I'm not saying that the program will not be educational for non-Hispanics who want to learn more about the culture of the people who will soon be the largest minority in this country.

But, I can tell you this. How can trust a program about Hispanics that is put on by an organization says, on its web site, in black and white, "Americanos: Latino Life in the U.S. premieres on Mexican Independence Day (Cinco de Mayo): Friday, May 5 at 6:30 p.m. ET/PT."

WHAT!!!

If any of you are on "Who Wants to be a Millionaire," and they ask you, "When is Mexican Independence Day. Is is May 5? September 16? July 4? Or April 1?"

If you answer May 5 you need to roll up this newspaper and hit yourself on the head.

Mexican Independence Day, is Dieciséis de Septiembre (September 16).

According the World Book Encyclopedia on-line (http://www.worldbook.com/fun/cinco/html/cinco.htm),

"Cinco de Mayo commemorates the victory of a Mexican army over a French army at the Battle of Puebla on May 5, 1862. The Mexican army, led by General Ignacio Zaragoza, won the battle even though the French force was better armed and three times as large. The battle occurred after Emperor Napoleon III of France sent troops to Mexico to conquer the country. Despite the Mexican victory at Puebla, the French later gained control of Mexico City and established a French-supported government there. In 1866 and 1867, however, France withdrew its troops from Mexico because of resistance by many Mexicans and pressure from the United States. The French-backed government soon fell."

Maybe you didn't know. Hey, that's cool.

On the other hand your not HBO. They are the ones doing a show that is supposed to "explore the unique ways Latino-Americans are expressing their culture and individuality."

How can they pass themselves off as authorities on Hispanic culture and individuality when they don't know when don't know when Mexican Independence Day is.

That is like saying you are an expert on cheese and don't know what cheddar is.

Have I seen the program?

No.

Will it be good?

I don't know.

All I know is HBO has a bad reputation in the eyes of some Hispanics and is already off to a bad start with the promotion of its new documentary.

Will I watch it?

Yeah, I'll tape is and watch it when I get up Saturday May 6.

Oh by the way May 6 is the 85th Anniversary of Babe Ruth's First Major League Home Run, Sigmund Freud's birthday, the half way point of spring, 63rd anniversary of the Hindenburg disaster, the kick off for Holland Tulip Time Festival, No Diet Day, and the birthdays of Tony Blair, George Clooney, Roma Downey, Ben Masters, Willie Mays and Bob Seger.

I looked it up in Chase's Calender of Events- it is that easy.

(HBO spokes person Quetin Schaffer said labeling Cinco de Mayo as Mexican Independence Day was a mistake and will be fixed as soon as possible. He also said that airing the program on Cinco de Mayo seemed like an ideal time because of the content of the show. The program will also air on May 11, 14, 16 and 22.)

Yanks finish sweep of Texas

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Clay Bellinger hit a solo home run in the 10th inning and the New York Yankees completed their first three-game sweep at Texas since 1983, beating the Rangers 5-4 Wednesday for their eighth straight victory.

The Yankees' winning streak is their longest since they took nine in a row in August 1998. This string started with two victories over the Rangers last week at New York.

Ivan Rodriguez, who was getting the day off, tied it with the first pinch-hit homer of his career, a two-run shot with two outs in the ninth. The AL MVP connected on the first pitch he saw from Yankees closer Mariano Rivera (2-0).

Rivera had been successful on 27 straight save chances since last July 16. In the 10th, he retired David Segui on a fly ball with a runner on third to end it.

Bellinger, who entered the game as a pinch-runner in the eighth, homered off Jeff Zimmerman (0-2). The Rangers reliever struck out five — including two batters before the homer and two after it.

Little-used Lance Johnson got four hits for the Yankees and starter Roger Clemens pitched four-hit ball for seven-plus innings in his longest outing of the season.

Clemens, who hadn't gone past the sixth inning in his first three starters, struck out five and walked two.

Yankees manager Joe Torre pulled Clemens after he went 2-0 on Chad Curtis leading off the eighth. The Yankees said Clemens had stiffness in his lower back but said the situation wasn't serious.

Jeff Nelson relieved and threw two balls to Curtis, with the walk charged to Clemens. After a force play, Luis Alicea, who had homered in the sixth, hit an RBI double.

Johnson, getting his first start of the year, went 4-for-5. He had batted only three times, all as a pinch-hitter, in the first 13 games.

■ AL Roundup

The score was tied at 1 when Johnson led off the seventh with a double into the right-field corner and then stole third base uncontested off backup catcher Bill Haselman.

White Sox 5, Mariners 2

CHICAGO — Carlos Lee delivered a tiebreaking, bases-loaded single in the fifth inning and the Chicago White Sox, benefiting when a potential homer by Alex Rodriguez was just foul, beat the Seattle Mariners.

Gil Meche (0-1) got the first two outs in the fifth but then walked the bases loaded. Reliever Jose Paniagua gave up Lee's two-run single.

Orioles 3, Devil Rays 2

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken, playing his first game at Camden Yards since getting his 3,000th hit, provided another highlight by connecting for a home run in the bottom of the ninth inning that lifted the Baltimore Orioles over Tampa Bay.

Ripken led off by driving a 1-0 pitch from reliever Jim Mecir (2-1) into the left-field stands for his third homer of the year, giving the Orioles their third straight victory.

Ripken got his 3,000th hit during the weekend at Minnesota. The Orioles were rained out Monday and Tuesday.

Red Sox 10, Tigers 0

DETROIT — Trot Nixon hit a grand slam and four other Boston players homered as the Red Sox routed the Detroit Tigers.

Jose Offerman, Troy O'Leary, Mike Stanley and Nomar Garciaparra also homered for the Red Sox.

Brian Rose (1-2) and three relievers combined on a six-hitter in Boston's second straight shutout against Detroit.

Blue Jays 12, Angels 4

TORONTO — David Wells struck out 10 in his second complete game of the season as the Toronto Blue Jays routed the Anaheim Angels.

Wells (2-1) matched the shortest outing of his career in his last start, allowing six runs in just one inning.

The 36-year-old left-hander gave up eight hits in his 38th career complete game. He shut out Texas on April 8.

Athletics 10, Indians 5

CLEVELAND — Miguel Tejada hit his first career grand slam and Oakland hit four home runs to back Kevin Appier, powering the Athletics to a victory over the lifeless Cleveland Indians.

Tejada's slam came in the fifth inning off Sean DePaula as Oakland opened a 10-2 lead and coasted to its second win in a row against an Indians team that swept them at home last week.

Jason Giambi, Ben Grieve and Matt Stairs also homered for the A's, who chased Jaret Wright (2-1) in the fourth inning. Wright pitched a five-hit shutout in his previous start in Oakland.

Twins 7, Royals 6

MINNEAPOLIS — Butch Huskey hit an RBI single with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning and the Minnesota Twins sent Kansas City to its fifth straight loss.

With one out, Matt Lawton hit a double that bounced over the head of second baseman Carlos Febles. Ron Coomer grounded out and Corey Koskie was intentionally walked.

Huskey, who had been 0-for-4 in the game, singled to center off Jose Santiago (2-1) and Lawton scored easily from second base.

Lopez lifts Braves over Phillies

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Javy Lopez homered and equaled his career high with four RBIs to back seven strong innings by Tom Glavine, leading Atlanta to a 10-1 victory over Philadelphia on Wednesday night.

Andres Galarraga also drove in two runs for the Braves, who didn't need to use John Rocker. The controversial reliever began warming up in the top of the eighth with Atlanta ahead 4-1, but sat down when the Braves scored six runs in the bottom half.

Galarraga erased the save possibility with his second RBI single of the game, then Lopez sent his third homer of the season deep into the left-field stands against Steve Schrenk

Andruw Jones gave the Braves a 4-1 lead in the seventh with a solo homer against Randy Wolf (1-1).

Glavine (3-0) surrendered just four hits, but had to overcome five walks, two of which were intentional.

Reds 5, Giants 4

CINCINNATI — Benito Santiago returned from a dislocated knuckle and hit a two-run homer, leading Cincinnati past slumping San Francisco.

■ NL Roundup

Santiago's second-inning homer off Shawn Estes (0-1) put the Reds ahead to stay and helped Rob Bell (1-1) earn his first major league win. Santiago was out for 10 days after dislocating the middle knuckle on his left ring finger.

Danny Graves pitched the last two innings for his third save.

Ken Griffey Jr. had a single in three at-bats, leaving him in a 2-for-17 slide that has dropped his average to .185.

Mets 3, Brewers 1

NEW YORK — Rick Reed turned in another sharp start and New York beat Milwaukee for the seventh straight time.

The Mets ended Jason Bere's nine-game winning streak, dating to Sept. 19, 1998, when he pitched Cincinnati over Arizona.

Reed (2-0), who had no-decisions in two of his first three starts, has given up just three earned runs in 29 2-3 innings this season. Reed allowed seven hits and struck out six.

Armando Benitez pitched the ninth for his sixth save.

Cardinals 4, Padres 3

ST. LOUIS — Darryl Kile followed a horrid outing with his strongest of the season, working eight innings in St. Louis' victory over San Diego.

Kile (3-1), who lasted 1 2-3 innings in his last start at Colorado,, faced the minimum on only 69 pitches through six innings before allowing three runs the last two innings.

Dave Veres worked the ninth for his fourth save.

Expos 7, Cubs 3

Rangers purchase contract of Simms and put him on DL

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers purchased the contract of Mike Simms from Triple-A Oklahoma on Wednesday, and then placed the outfielder on the 60-day disabled list.

Simms has been on the disabled list at Oklahoma and has not played a game this season due to continual problems with his left hip. He played in 17 spring training games for the Rangers, his last appearance coming March 28.

Because of the problems, Simms is unable to do any type of baseball activity. The Rangers said his condition will be evaluated over the next couple of months.
