Channell's plea could open avenue to North

WASHINGTON (AP) — The guilty plea of conservative fund-raiser Carl R. "Spitz" Channell, who sometimes introduced contributors to President Reagan, opens the door for investigators to unravel how White House aide Oliver L. North operated his private Contra aid network.

Channell, who pleaded guilty on Wednesday to conspiracy to defraud the U.S. government of taxes on $2 million in contributions for military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, also agreed to cooperate with independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh in his investigation of the Iran-Contra affair.

In a brief hearing following Walsh's filing of a criminal information against Channell, U.S. District Judge Stanley S. Harris asked Channell to name the persons with whom he conspired.

Channell replied, "Colonel North, an official of the National Security Council."

Walsh aide Michael Bromwich said prosecutors are not "at this time" bringing charges against North, who was fired from the NSC last November.

Channell has not implicated the president in his Contra aid effort. But he and others have confirmed that he took contributors to the White House on several occasions and that Reagan met with some of them.

Channell, who has been an activist conservative fund-raiser since the 1970s when he raised money for advertising campaigns against liberal congressmen, has said he had 14 meetings with North at the White House.

Channell's spokesman has said Reagan dropped in on sessions with Contra contributors to thank them for being patriotic Americans, but North wrote a memo on May 16, 1986, to his then-boss, National Security Adviser John Poindexter, saying,

"The president obviously knows why he has been meeting with several select people to thank them for their 'support for democracy' in CentAm."

The memo was contained in the Feb. 26 report of the presidentially appointed Tower commission that investigated the clandestine U.S. arms sales to Iran and the diversion of payments to the Nicaraguan Contras.

Asked about that memo at a news conference several weeks ago, Reagan said he had thanked the contributors who supported a pro-Contra TV campaign, which also was organized by Channell.

Jane McLaughlin, who formerly worked as a fund-raiser for Channel, said Wednesday on ABC-TV's "Nightline" that for contributors to meet with Reagan they would have to give at least $200,000.

"None of my contributors gave in excess of $200,000. However, I do know that other contributors did meet privately with the president. It wasn't kept a secret," she said.

Volunteer's death investigated

Discussing the death of Benjamin Linder, Portland, Ore., is Tom Voorhees, left, of the Nicaraguan Appropriate Technology Project. Joining him is Ingred Baur, another American who has done volunteer work throught the organization.

MATAGALPA, Nicaragua (AP) — The family of Benjamin Linder, the pro-Sandinista American the government says was killed by Contra rebels, was en route to Nicaragua today, and the U.S. Embassy said it was sending out a team to investigate his death.

The circumstances of Linder's death Tuesday remained unclear. The Contra rebels said he was killed in a firefight in northern Nicaragua between Contras and Sandinista militiamen. But the foreign minister said he was kidnapped and slain at the behest of the United States.

U.S. Embassy press attache Alberto Fernandez said Wednesday a team would be sent to remote Jinotega province, where Linder was killed, "to ascertain the facts."

Linder, of Portland, Ore., was the first American volunteer killed since the Contras began their guerrilla campaign against the leftist Sandinista government five years ago.

The U.S.-backed Contra rebels said the 27-year-old engineer, who was working on an electrification project, was killed during a firefight between Contras and Sandinista militiamen.

School finance ruling called 'devastating'

Order places MISD in 'bleak scenario'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A district judge's ruling that Texas' school finance system unconstitutionally discriminates against students in poor school districts met with stinging criticism Wednesday from state leaders, who vowed to appeal.

"It would be devastating, it would absolutely be devastating," said House Speaker Gib Lewis. "It this ruling is upheld, it would be devastating to the state, to education in the state."

"This is another classic example of a judge attempting to substitute his sole judgment for the collective judgment not only of the Legislature as elected by all the people of the state, but for the judgment of the (1,063) school districts in the state," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Gov. Bill Clements said he was "dismayed" by Judge Harley Clark's decision, but otherwise tempered his comments. "I wouldn't want to cry doom at this point," he said. "It's much too early. Let's not push the panic button."

Clark's ruling ended a three-month trial in which attorneys representing 66 property-poor districts argued that it is unfair for the state and some districts to spend thousands of dollars more educating a student in a wealthy district than in a poor one.

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

In school buildings across the Permian Basin today, educators are wondering what's next now that a judge has ruled Texas short-changes poor school districts.

One school official implied state District Judge Harley Clark's ruling Wednesday could be among the most expensive court decrees in state history.

The order paints a "bleak scenerio" for the Midland Independent School District given the state's current budgetary problems, said Superintendent Joseph P. Baressi Jr.

MISD is one of 45 districts that contributed financially to fighting the lawsuit brought against the state by 66 property-poor districts.

With lawmakers vowing there will be no new tax increase, Baressi said the only way Texas can raise money to fund education will be to take more from property-rich districts and give to those that are property-poor.

The MISD had a 1985-86 market value of $285,000 per student. That places the district in the category with others that have above average wealth, he said.

Baressi noted, however, that MISD's total market value of $4.9 billion dropped $700 million this year to $4.2 billion.

That means "we're sort of caught on both sides" as state funding and local revenues both decline, he said.

He predicted the Clark's order would not stand up on appeal.

Greenwood Independent School District Superintendent Sam Martin, voicing "confusion," said the ruling could require massive consolidation of school districts, thus changing the face of rural Texas.

Please see LOCAL, Page 2A

"It hold that under our state constitution, education is a fundamental right for each of our citizens," Clark said. "Equality of access to funds is the key and is one of the requirements of this fundamental right."

Rick Gray, an Austin attorney representing the poor schools, said he was "ecstatic" by the ruling. "The state needs to devise a system that does not punish and reward certain children depending upon if they happen to live in a wealthy or poor district," Gray said.

The heart of the problem, Clark said lies in the creation of school district boundaries that "did not follow any rational or articulated policy."

Those boundaries, and the disparity in wealth that lies within them, have created a situation where the wealthiest 200 school districts spend twice as much per student as do the poorest 200.

Within the Permian Basin, for example, the Midland Independent School District had a 1985-1986 market value of $285,000 per student, about 25 times less than the $7.8 million available to Iraan-Sheffield in nearby Pecos County.

"If one district has more access to funds than another district, the wealthier one will have the best ability to fulfill the needs of its students," Clark said.

Two bills will seek oil tariffs

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil state congressmen introduced a pair of bills Wednesday aimed at reviving the U.S. oil industry by placing tariffs on imported oil.

The Energy Independence Act of Rep. Joe Barton, D-Ennis, calls for an import fee to maintain a minimum $25 per barrel oil price, government purchases of oil from smaller producers (or stripper wells) and increased flow into the strategic oil reserve.

"We think that this bill, if passed, will go a long way to minimizing the country's energy dependence and maximizing our energy independence," Barton said.

Rep. Michael Andrews of Houston and nine other Democrats also introduced an oil import bill Wednesday identical to one submitted in the Senate by Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Bennett Johnston, D-La., on April 9.

The Andrews-Bentsen bill calls for a $24 fee price, instead of $25. All revenues would be applied to reducing the U.S. budget deficit. It also seeks elimination of the windfall profits tax.

"It is good to see the industry closing ranks," said Bernold Hanson, president of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists and a Midland oilman. "If the industry can achieve a stable oil price in the $25 range, we can see a substantial increase in exploration and production."

He said putting a tax on crude oil imports to reduce the deficit made sense, but he denounced a yet-to-be-announced plan by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski to put a 5-10 cent federal tax on gasoline in order to generate revenues to reach Gramm-Rudman deficit targets.

AIDS picking up political, medical, moral implications

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last in a special series on AIDS education. Contributing were Hearst news staff members in San Francisco (Calif.), Seattle (Wash.), Albany (N.Y.) and Midland as well as the Hearst Washington Bureau. This story deals with the growth of the disease as a political and medical issue.

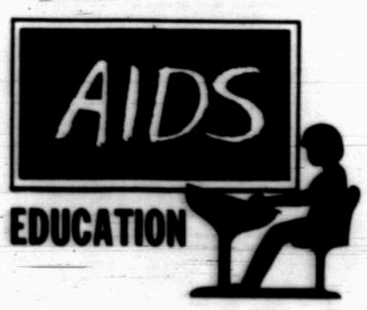
By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — AIDS, the deadly acquired immune deficiency syndrome now casting a shadow over America, is rapidly becoming a major political issue that promises to transform the 1988 presidential campaign.

From President Reagan to the latest candidate to announce for his job, politicians around the country are beginning to speak out on AIDS, an illness that health officials view as the century's most devastating epidemic.

Some of the candidates agree with Reagan that AIDS is a "moral issue." Others are calling for additional federal funds to combat the disease, and still others are urging that people take tests to see if they are carrying the AIDS virus.

Steven D. Stark, who teaches at the Harvard Law School, believes "AIDS will supplant the deficit, arms control, the Iran-Contra affair and trade policy in importance during the 1988 presidential campaign."



Stark, Jimmy Carter's issues director in the 1976 presidential campaign, notes that "most politicians are approaching AIDS cautiously, the way they approach welfare expenditures. They aren't quite sure what to say."

But once the campaign begins in earnest, Stark contends, the debate will intensify, "for AIDS raises serious issues of risk and privacy far beyond the domain of politics as usual."

"AIDS will become a metaphor that reflects the nation's fears about the future," Stark adds.

San Francisco Democratic Assemblyman Art Agnos, who introduced California's first AIDS bill in 1981, agrees that the disease, whose main victims have been homosexuals and intravenous drug users, is about to become as much a political story as a medical one. He notes that California legislators have introduced 77 measures on the issue this year.

The gingerly approach with which politicians are treating the issue is attributed to uncertainty over how catastrophic the epidemic really threatens to become, squeamishness over frank discussion of sexual practices, and concerns about threats to the civil rights of AIDS victims.

Liver transplant patient died 'like champion'

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Ronnie DeSillers, who captured the hearts of President Reagan and thousands of others, died "like a champion" as he awaited a fourth liver transplant, fighting until his mother said "it's all right to relax."

The 7-year-old Florida boy died Wednesday evening at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh after seven cardiac arrests, said Maria DeSillers.

"All day long, in the last three days, we kept telling him, 'Ronnie, you can hang on. You can fight,' and it was constantly a vigil with family members at his side," said Ms. DeSillers, calm but tearful and flanked by her fiance, brother and two friends.

"Then all of a sudden we said, 'Ronnie it's all right to relax.' Because he went on fighting. He went like a champion," she said.

The cause of death was shock with associated complications of acute kidney, respiratory and liver failure, said hospital spokeswoman Sue Cardillo.

The boy's condition took a drastic turn for the worse Sunday night, a day after he was placed back on the waiting list for a transplant.

Ms. DeSillers, 31, said her only child "fought to hang on until the very last minute."

"The doctors and the nurses in the ICU unit couldn't believe it, really. It was like he was going into battle and he would come back and he would go again...saying 'I'm fighting for you, Mom, I'm really fighting for you.' I guess it was like he couldn't fight anymore."

Radio station WHYI-FM in Hollywood, Fla., which raised $30,000 for Ronnie, planned a moment of silence at noon today in memory of the Miami boy.

Miami Beach industrialist Victor Posner, who donated $200,000 for Ronnie's transplant, planned to send a private plane to Pittsburgh today to return the boy's body and his family to Florida.

In Washington, the White House issued a statement to express sympathy to Ronnie's family, saying the president and his wife, Nancy, had kept the boy in their prayers. Earlier Wednesday, Reagan proclaimed this week as National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week.

Reagan had called Ronnie in February with words of encouragement, then contributed $1,000 after $4,000 raised by his schoolmates to help pay for his surgery was stolen from his Fort Lauderdale school.

Ronnie appeared to recover quickly from his first transplant, on Feb. 24, but was placed on the transplant waiting list on March 22 after the donor organ began to fail due to an infection that spread to his lungs.

On March 27, the rapidly deteriorating boy was placed on a respirator. He began receiving an experimental drug to control the virus, and a drug that paralyzed him so he wouldn't tamper with the air tube in his windpipe.

Ronnie received his second donor liver April 3, but that, too, failed. He went into his third transplant, April 23, suffering from abdominal infection, a non-infectious form of pneumonia and an inflamed pancreas. Two days before, he had undergone two operations to correct abdominal pain and internal bleeding.

Doctors told Ms. DeSillers the third transplant would be "very tricky" because of the boy's weakened condition from previous surgery. But she agreed to the operation, saying "there's no way we can turn back." The third donor liver, however, never functioned properly.

The second and third donor livers came from children of comparable size but with different blood types. Surgeons preferred the slight risk of crossing two types of blood over the greater risk of waiting for another donor with his relatively rare AB blood.

Ronnie was the 15th patient at Children's to have three liver transplants.

The money stolen in February was part of $89,000 raised by his mother, a former public relations consultant with no medical insurance.

As a result of publicity about the theft, contributions poured in from around the country. By the time the 38-pound boy arrived at Children's on Feb. 17, an estimated $400,000 had been raised.

Doctors said then a transplant was Ronnie's only hope and that he had only weeks to live.

LINDER

The statement, issued in neighboring Honduras, said the government forces were accompanying Linder and his Nicaraguan co-workers when the clash occurred about 80 miles north of Managua, the capital.

But Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto, in a protest note to Secretary of State George Shultz, said Linder was "kidnapped and later murdered." D'Escoto said the attack was carried out "by a counterrevolutionary group under contract to the U.S. government."

Other Nicaraguan government officials and witnesses said Linder was slain together with two Nicaraguan militiamen near the village of San Jose de Bocay. In Portland, David Linder, the slain man's father, on Tuesday blamed the Reagan administration for his son's death.

The elder Linder and other family members were to arrive this morning in Nicaragua, where Benjamin reportedly had said he wanted to be buried if anything happened to him.

A member of the U.S. organization that Linder belonged to charged the Contras had put Linder on a "hit list."

Sandinista forces last year shot down a U.S.-registered cargo plane on an arms drop mission to rebel forces in southern Nicaragua, killing the aircraft's American pilot and navigator.

About 50 fellow American volunteers paid their last respects Wednesday night to Linder, who had been in Nicaragua since 1983, during a wake in Matagalpa, a provincial capital.

Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young flew in for the wake. Young, who opposes U.S. support for the Contras, said Linder's death might force Americans to re-examine their country's policy towards Central America.

"It may be that Linder's innocent blood is a sacrifice to help the conscience of Americans to come forward and to show that the conscience of Americans is one of Benjamin's and not one of Ronald Reagan's," Young said.

OIL

"That would not add a single barrel to our reserves," said Hanson.

Barton said the import fee would add 21 cents a gallon to U.S. gasoline prices, and would would generate $12 billion in revenues, $9 billion of which could go to servicing the national debt and $3 billion to buying oil from stripper well producers at $25 a barrel.

Neither bill includes an exemption for home heating oil. Northeastern representatives have long opposed an import fee because they fear it would raise the cost of home heating oil.

Charles Perry, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said that the Andrews bill could have a better chance of getting out of committee in the House because the sponsor's position on the Ways & Means Committee.

In addition, he said that the Administration and Congress are both making themselves gradually more vulnerable to seriously having to address the oil import fee issue because of recent trade legislation.

"They're putting tariffs on silicon chips, cedar shingles and all kinds of things that have nothing to do with national security. It's going to force them to deal with the idea of tariffs on a vital strategic resource," Perry said.

"What they fail to realize is that the OPEC countries have for years manipulated the price of oil down, and whenever they want to, they can manipulate the price back up," said Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the PBPA, reiterated that group's long-standing support for an import fee and said that leadership changes on Capitol Hill make "chances for passage much more promising than in the past."

"This legislation has a much better chance of getting a full hearing than it did in the last Congress," said Frost.

"Last year, our net cost for oil imports into this country was $29 billion, that was the second largest item in the trade deficit," Barton said.

"And, while it's true that we don't have majority support for it either here in Congress or in the White House, we certainly think the opposition is softening."

Spannaus applauded the introduction of the two bills but said the time has come for action. "We've already seen lots of talk, it's time for the show. It takes little effort to propose the legislation, the thing that counts is passage."

IRAN

Meanwhile, Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, chairman of the Senate committee investigating the Iran-Contra affair, asserted again that Reagan "was very much knowledgeable about the events occurring around him, that in raising funds from private sources for the Contras, he was not just a peripheral player and he was involved very deeply."

Inouye, in an interview Wednesday with CBS News, elaborated on comments he made to The Washington Post last week, based on his review of excerpts of Reagan's diaries.

He said, however, there was no evidence Reagan was aware that profits from the weapons sales to Iran had been diverted to the Nicaraguan rebels, which is the main focus of Walsh's investigation and the congressional inquiry.

Reagan said last week his diaries contain no embarrassing revelations and he believes Inouye is wrong.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater declined to comment on the charge against Channell.

Congressional investigators said Channell's implication of North in the criminal matter would not alter their decision to grant North limited immunity from prosecution for testimony before hearings which open next Tuesday.

Lead-off witness in the joint hearings is to be retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord. Panel members expect Secord to give a broad picture of the affair from the arms sales to Iran through the financial transactions that carried money to the rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist government.

Channell has emerged as a key component in North's efforts to help the Contras during the two-year congressional ban on U.S. military assistance beginning in October 1984.

Investigators are likely to question Channell about Reagan's involvement and to what extent he was informed about the private aid network's activities.

Channell capitalized on his White House connections to impress contributors, inviting them to the White House to meet Reagan and hear presentations by North and other high-ranking officials.

The Tower report said North was actively involved in helping the rebels get money and supplies, but it has not been established specifically how the operation worked.

In pleading guilty to conspiracy to defraud the government, Channell had an agreement with prosecutors, including that three of his employees would not be prosecuted in exchange for their cooperation.

Channell has said the millions he collected for the Contras went through a public relations firm he employed, International Business Communications.

In his order, Clark said there is "no underlying rationale in the district boundaries of many school districts." If the order is upheld on appeal, Martin said state lawmakers would have to carve new districts to guarantee fair distribution of wealth.

"The high point is that the state law is unconstitutional," Martin said. "What concerns me is what the rest of the ruling says."

Martin said he's especially worried about funding for the remainder of this school year.

"The ruling could have quite an impact on the May vouchers," he said. "It means I'll have to come up with about $160,000 pretty quick."

Ector County Independent School District spokesman Chuck Horning also said Clark's ruling will have long-range ramifications across the state.

"We may be talking about having to realign complete programs," he said.

Horning said school districts put programs into place based on the amount of funding from the state.

When that funding is in jeopardy, so are the programs, he added.

STATE

Legislative leaders, however, maintained that Texas has made great strides in equalizing the distribution of state aid to rich and poor districts. Hobby pointed out that the poor districts that brought the suit "have been the primary beneficiaries" of those changes.

"They have then gone into court and said, 'We didn't get enough, court, please give us more.'"

With appeals expected to delay implementation of Clark's order for up to two years, lawmakers said the decision will have little direct impact on the ongoing quagmire involving the state's $5.8 billion shortfall for fiscal 1988-1989. But Senate Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said it reinforces his view that the Legislature must make "an adequate commitment" to public schools.

"Because no new taxes, as advocated by Clements, will exacerbate this and, I think, give credibility to this ruling and enhance it's ultimate support on appeal," Parker said. Education Commissioner William Kirby said it "puts additional emphasis on the need to make sure that there aren't any kind of cuts."

If the state loses on appeal, officials warned, they could be forced to take drastic action — such as consolidating the 1,063 districts into as few as 10 — to satisfy Clark. Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said that would be particularly traumatic to rural schools.

"That's where you have a lot of the small, 200-pupil schools," Rudd said. "In a Dallas, you have a lot of school districts, but it would be much easier to combine those than it would, say, a 60- to 80-mile school district."

Hobby, however, called massive consolidation "an inconceivable result," and Lewis said it "would cause taxpayers to revolt statewide."

Fasting Pantex protesters will be released

PANHANDLE (AP) — Three men who decided to fast after they were jailed for blocking the entrance to the Pantex nuclear weapons assembly plant will be released this week, officials say.

Carson County, Texas, jail officials have tried for the last three weeks to feed the three Houston men, who were sentenced to 40 days in jail.

Greg LeRoy, 29, Charles Perez, 36, and Jimmy Clark, 19, have taken only liquids while in jail. They said they fasted to protest their imprisonment and to publicize the nuclear arms issue.

The three men are part of a group dubbed "The Pantex Seven" who were arrested Aug. 10 outside the Pantex plant about 17 miles northeast of Amarillo on U.S. Highway 60. Four other men pleaded guilty last week to misdemeanor charges of blocking the entrance to the plant and paid $600 fines.

Plans to swap for Terry Waite in works?

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An Iranian Embassy employee has been kidnapped in west Beirut, and his abductors offered to trade him for missing Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, a weekly magazine reported today.

The magazine Ash-Shiraa said unidentified "armed elements have kidnapped Mohammad Khatami, an employee of the Iranian Embassy in Beirut...offering to swap him for Waite."

The weekly, which broke the story of U.S. secret arms sales to Iran last year, said Khatami was held "at an apartment run by a political party outside Beirut."

It did not disclose Khatami's nationality or what post he allegedly holds at the Iranian Embassy. His name appeared to be Iranian.

A spokesman for the Iranian mission in Beirut, speaking on condition of anonymity, said, "I know of no Mohammad Khatami who works for the embassy."

"I also know of no Iranian national by the name of Mohammad Khatami living in Lebanon," the spokesman said. He refused to elaborate.

Waite, a personal envoy of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, disappeared in Beirut on Jan. 20 while on a mission to seek freedom for foreign hostages.

There have been conflicting, unconfirmed reports that he is being held against his will. No group has said it holds him.

Lifestyles of ancient Egypt's rich and famous resurrected

By MIMI MANN

SAKKARA, Egypt (AP) — After five years of painstaking work atop a windswept bluff, Egyptian archaeologists have unearthed a cemetery of the rich and famous from one of ancient Egypt's most illustrious periods.

The finds include tomb chapels of a virtual Who's Who from the reign of Ramses II, the warrior king who kept Egyptian power at its height 3,250 years ago.

Graves found so far by the expedition from Cairo University have given Egyptologists new information on who served as Ramses' prime minister, commander-in-chief of his army, court physician, treasurer, overseer of his harem, scribe, butler and fan bearer.

Further study of these individuals, as well as the architecture, art and hieroglyphics of the tombs, is expected to add to the knowledge of Ramses' reign and the politics and religion of his time.

Tomb chapels were used by families of the deceased to leave offerings and to pay respects, as people today visit graves of loved ones. The chapels varied from one large room to a complex of several.

Also among the finds is a sarcophagus bearing the likeness of a female singer with a beard carved onto her delicate chin. This discovery added a choice bit of mystery because beards were the privilege only of pharaohs and this one also was placed on the likeness of a woman.

The cemetery under 33 feet of rubble has yielded 12 gravesites on the sandy hill overlooking ancient Memphis, a commercial, military and religious center for Ramses II about 35 miles south of modern Cairo.

Dr. Sayed Tawfik, the expedition's leader, said the architecture of the tomb chapels has not been seen before. Additionally, he said, excavations are providing important clues to the personalities of Ramses' court.

Tawfik, who is a professor of Egyptology and dean of Cairo University's School of Archaeology, said his team also made discoveries that long predate the Ramses era.

In early March, his workman unearthed the largest non-royal mastaba, or flat-roofed tomb, yet found in the vast burial ground of Sakkara. It belonged to a minister from the 5th Dynasty, 1,000 years before Ramses' officials chose their burial spot just to the west.

Working with heavy-duty cables a few days later, the expedition lifted to the surface a stunning 17-ton sarcophagus of red Aswan granite that belonged to the mysterious bearded woman singer, named Baket wer ner, in the Memphis temple of the cobra-goddess Wadjet.

"Only pharaohs merited beards," Tawfik said. "Who was this lady? One thing for certain is she was rich. Was she showing her great power, or was the beard a symbol of her role in the temple? What did the ancient workmen think, carving a beard for a woman?"

Tawfik said he was led to his latest finds by his discovery five years ago of a statue of Nefer renpet, Ramses II's prime minister.

"Then we found his tomb chapel, a magnificent one the size of a temple itself, and uncovered something extraordinary, two personal burial shafts, each containing a wonderful sarcophagus."

Tawfik said it gradually became apparent that more than Ramses' prime minister had been laid to rest in the cemetery.

"After this season we can say we have uncovered an almost complete necropolis for the 19th Dynasty," Tawfik said. "I don't like to say we've changed history, but never before have we been able to view...the Ramses period from such a religious, artistic and architectural standpoint."

Tawfik believes ego played an enormous role in the evolution of the cemetery.

"All the tombs were limestone, a sign of wealth," he said. "Five had pyramids at the rear of the chapel. The officials buried in this elite resting ground had a sense of grandeur and power. They wanted the feeling of being a pharaoh, to have the same things the pharaoh had, but on a smaller scale."

He thinks the best evidence is the use of the pyramids, which were small enough to fit into the tombs. The best preserved pyramid here has a base of about 100 square feet.

The pyramid was an important part of royal history from the Old Kingdom, when pyramids began, to the Middle Kingdom. By the time of Ramses II, however, pharoahs were buried in graves cut into rock in the Valley of the Kings, opposite the southern capital of Thebes about 450 miles south of Sakkara.

New Mexico, Texas battle over Pecos water

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawyers for New Mexico and Texas are waging a high-stakes Supreme Court battle over water from the Pecos River.

The attorneys clashed Wednesday with Renea Hicks, a Texas assistant attorney general, urging the justices to make New Mexico pay — in water — for 34 years of failing to live up to a 1949 agreement on using the river's water.

"This is water that Texas bargained for," Hicks said of the 340,100 acre-feet payback recommended last year by the court's appointed "special master" in the case, Charles J. Meyers.

But Charlotee Uram, a San Francisco lawyer and former New Mexico assistant attorney general, argued that the 1949 agreement between the two states never envisioned a noncompliance remedy that is "so onerous, such extreme hardship for New Mexico."

The 45-minute argument session was the latest round in a 13-year dispute over using water from the Pecos, which flows about 900 miles from the mountains of northern New Mexico until it reaches the Rio Grande River in Texas.

The high court is expected to announce its decision by July.

The dispute began in 1974, when Texas sought to "sue" New Mexico in the Supreme Court. A year later, the court agreed to hear the case even though it had not previously been aired in a lower court.

Ms. Uram said New Mexico does not disagree that a 340,100 acre-feet of shortfall of water occurred in Texas from 1950 through 1983.

But she contended that New Mexico should not have to pay "retroactive relief" for the years Texas was shortchanged. The court's special master recommended that New Mexico, after receiving a three-year grace period, pay back about 34,000 acre-feet of water a year for 10 years.

"You shouldn't have to pay any water back at all?" asked a seemingly skeptical Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist.

"That's right," Ms. Uram replied.

"Then what's the good of the (1949) compact?" said Rehnquist if after each non-compliance the states "just kiss and make up."

Ms. Uram said New Mexico stands ready to live up to the 1949 agreement in the future — which means letting an additional 10,000 acre-feet of water flow into Texas each year.

When Justice Sandra Day O'Connor asked about the possibility of having New Mexico pay monetary damages rather than extra water, Ms. Uram said that is "an option the court should consider" if it rules against New Mexico.

Outside the courtroom, Ms. Uram told reporters that paying damages in water "is a much greater hardship because it means that farmers will lose the use of the river's water for their farms; that municipalities and wildlife preserves will be forced to drastically cut water use."

But Hicks, Texas' lawyer, told the court his state is more interested in getting the extra water than in receiving monetary damages.

New Mexico Attorney General Hal Stratton, who attended the argument session but did not participate in it, predicted that if the court allows Texas to collect monetary damages, Texas lawyers "are going to suggest an inflated value for the water."

Baytown High School students watch as the main building of Robert E. Lee High School in Baytown goes up in smoke Wednesday morning.

Baytown high school damaged in blaze

BAYTOWN (AP) — A fire early Wednesday morning destroyed the main building of a high school, forcing school officials to cancel classes for the rest of the week.

Flames were shooting through the roof at Robert E. Lee High School when Baytown firefighters arrived at about 3:15 a.m., Baytown Police Sgt. Weldon Jones said.

Fire investigators said the fire appeared to have started on the second floor center hall of the oldest portion of the two-story 59-year-old school.

"Damage to the first floor appears to be mainly from the collapse of the second floor into the first floor. We also have smoke and water damage on the first floor," said Darell Davis, a Baytown fire department investigator.

The fire in the main building damaged 30 to 40 classrooms, library and cafeteria, Jones said. The school's agriculture building, band hall, choir room, gymnasium and auditorium were not destroyed, he added. Damages were estimated at $4 million to $5 million, Jones said.

The cause of the blaze is not known, he said. No injuries were reported.

School officials have not determined when or where classes will resume.

All of Baytown's five fire stations responded to the fire, Jones said.

Several of the 1,700 school's students and alumni gathered at the school to watch as it took firefighters about five hours to bring the blaze under control.

Mexican cheese linked to vicious brucellosis

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Unpasteurized goat cheese from Mexico has caused a vicious form of brucellosis in three San Antonio residents, health officials say.

"People should not buy, eat or allow in their homes cheese that is not labeled properly or packaged properly," warned Justus Baird, Metropolitan Health District coordinator of food and environmental services.

During February and March, two pregnant women and a 12-year-old boy were afflicted with brucellosis melitensis, which causes intermittent fever, headaches, weakness, sweating, chills and joint and muscle pain, the health district reported.

None of the cheese eaten by the patients was store-bought. Either friends or a door-to-door peddler supplied the cheese.

Because children and pregnant women eat a lot of dairy products, they are the most likely people to become infected by the bacteria, said Communicable Disease Coordinator Dr. Diane Simpson.

"You get a fever, you feel bad, you get a flu-like disease," Simpson said. "The fevers can come and go for days or months."

The three patients, health officials said, are currently recovering, although both women required hospitalization.

Simpson warned that the fever accompanied with brucellosis melitensis can soar above 102 degrees. Although the illness can become chronic and cause psychosis, she said it can be treated with antibiotics.

In Houston in recent years, 31 cases of the disease have occurred after people ate unpasteurized cheese from door-to-door salesmen.

Health district staffers did find several pounds of the cheese in small neighborhood stores on San Antonio's South Side, but none was found in supermarkets, Baird said.

The cheese is currently undergoing testing to determine if it contains the bacteria.

Baird said the key item to look for is a label saying the cheese has been pasteurized, a heating process that kills bacteria.

He also said the cheese should be sealed in its wrapping.

"When you buy cheese in the store, it's not only wrapped but sealed," Baird explained. "If you buy it off someone in a truck, it's just in a baggie. It's not sealed."

A cheese from France also is under suspicion, federal Food and Drug Administration officials warned Wednesday. The FDA warned consumers in Texas and New York not to eat "Saint Nectaire" soft, full-fat cheese that they may have purchased between April 14 and 16 at six specialty food shops in the two states.

FDA said the cheese may contain a potentially harmful bacteria called listeria monocytogenes. In healthy adults, listeria sometimes causes a transient illness with flu-like symptoms such as fever, headaches or gastrointestinal upset. It can be life-threatening to pregnant women and their fetuses, frail elderly people or others with weakened immune systems.

The importer told the agency that a small amount of the French cheese was sold at the following retail outlets: Rebel Liquor of Houston, and New York City locations of Bloomingdale's, Balducci's, Ideal Cheese, La Marka, Macy's, and Evans and Lewis.

The FDA discovered the contamination through an ongoing monitoring program.

FDA Commissioner Dr. Frank E. Young advised consumers who may have purchased the cheese to return it.

State legislatures struggle to control spread of AIDS

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Although more than three-fourths of the approximately 32,000 reported cases of AIDS in this country are concentrated in just five states, legislatures and health officials in the vast majority of states are stepping up their efforts to combat the spread of the disease.

Richard Merritt of George Washington University's Intergovernmental Health Policy Project, which keeps track of state efforts to cope with it, notes that no state is without at least one person afflicted with the dread acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

In most states, Merritt says, health officials are working to track the spread of the virus, encourage possible victims to get tested and warn of the dangers of having sex or sharing a needle with an infected partner.

At the beginning of the year, New York had the greatest number of AIDS cases with 5,220; California was second with 3,461; and Florida, New Jersey and Texas were third, fourth and fifth with 1,037, 903 and 770 cases respectively.

In 1986, 202 bills were introduced in two-thirds of the nation's legislatures and 46 were enacted to try to curb the spread of the disease. California's lawmakers considered 31 proposed measures and approved 12; Michigan pondered 14 and enacted 2, and Illinois studied 14 but approved only one measure. Washington state lawmakers proposed 10 bills and New York 12 but neither legislature acted on any of them.

This year, the pace is quickening. Merritt says that so far, 400 bills have been introduced and five enacted. California legislators have introduced 77 bills; Michigan 7; Illinois, 20; Washington state 10; Texas, 17 and New York 18.

Most AIDS-related legislation addresses at least one of the following areas: research, public education, confidentiality, protection of blood supply, and social-medical services.

A Florida act makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to disclose an AIDS test result to another person. Florida and California last year adopted legislation aimed at safeguarding the public blood supply. Washington state last year extended immunity to lawsuits arising from the contraction of AIDS from blood transfusions.

Thirty states are now considering legislation to require couples to be tested for AIDS before they can get a marriage license. A Utah law passed in late March prohibits anyone diagnosed as having AIDS from getting married.

Thirty-three states last year authorized funds for the support of AIDS-related programs and activities, ranging from laboratory services to education.

The Texas legislature, which did not meet in a regular session last year, is looking at a wide range of bills this year that would prohibit mandatory testing, authorize the Corrections Department to conduct AIDS tests on inmates prior to their release from prison, and provide for confidentiality of the results of blood tests.

According to Merritt, the initial focus of AIDS legislation was to create a public entity to coordinate state policies on AIDS.

In 1983, New York became the first state to pass AIDS legislation when it created the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome Institute. The institute is in charge of promoting research, sponsoring education and training programs for health professionals, counseling and maintaining a clearinghouse on AIDS informtion.

During the same year, the California legislature passed a law creating an AIDS advisory committee within the Health Services Department to assist state officials. At least 20 other states have established AIDS task forces, advisory commissions, coordinating councils and study groups.

Blue Cross of California is believed to be the first group health insurance company to request permission to offer a policy that would exclude coverage for AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. But the state's Insurance Department denied the request, contending that there was no justification for excluding coverage for AIDS while covering other lifestyle-related diseases such as lung cancer.

So far, appropriations earmarked specifically for AIDS-related programs have been adopted by 42 legislatures. California provided the largest amount, $55.7 million over the past four years. New York appropriated $23.4 million; Florida, $8 million; Illinois, $2.3 million; Michigan, $1.4 million; Texas, $160,000 and the state of Washington, $650,000.

Demand for AIDS information growing, even in small towns

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

CHICAGO — Some days Ellen Leahy's telephone at the Missoula, Mont., City-County Health Department rings so often that she can barely keep up with it. The callers are asking about AIDS.

Only eight cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome have been reported in the entire state of Montana, and Missoula, a university town of 30,000, did not report its first case until last summer. But the demand for information on the disease is overwhelming.

"We were ahead, taking initiatives," Leahy, the health department's director of education, said in an interview. "Now we're just neck and neck with the demand for information."

Leahy was one of more than 700 community leaders, doctors, nurses and business executives who gathered at a conference in Chicago this month to learn what they can do to prevent the spread of AIDS in their communities.

The American Medical Association conference, "AIDS and Public Policy: A Community Response," drew participants from Missoula, from Wichita, Kan., from Indianola, Iowa, and countless other places where AIDS is more a theoretical threat than an actual one. Yet they urgently needed to know more about it.

AIDS is no longer confined to New York, San Francisco and the handful of other cities where it has made its strongest mark.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said at the meeting that 17 American cities have now reported more than 300 cases of AIDS each. The disease has been reported in all 50 states, Guam and the Virgin Islands.

A cure for AIDS, or even a vaccine to prevent its further spread, now seem like distant goals, despite earlier optimism, officials say. "As an optimist, I will tell you I am not expecting a cure," Koop said.

Thus efforts like those by Leahy in Missoula could be critical. Education is the only effective means of preventing small cities, towns and rural areas from following in the footsteps of the current centers of the AIDS epidemic.

"We really feel we have an opportunity to prevent (AIDS) that other communities don't," said Leahy.

Dr. June Osborn, dean of the school of public health at the University of Michigan, said that if information on the spread of AIDS were communicated to the public, "We could abort the epidemic."

"This isn't like the flu," said Dr. Mervyn Silverman, president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research and former San Francisco health director. "No matter how much I educate you, you're still going to face the risk of flu."

With AIDS, however, such practices as the use of condoms during sex and the cessation of needle-sharing by drug addicts could markedly reduce the disease's spread, officials said.

The need for public education brought Don Flory, a family practitioner in Indianola to Chicago for the meeting, even though there hasn't yet been a single case of AIDS in Warren County, which includes Indianola.

"We basically don't want it," said Flory, when asked why he had come. He and his wife, Marcia, a registered nurse and a member of the executive board of Planned Parenthood of Mid-Iowa, have already begun fielding questions on AIDS.

"We've had patients come in to be tested," said Ms. Flory. "So there's fear out there, even in a rural area."

Indianola, located in farm country 12 miles south of Des Moines, is the home of Simpson College, a Methodist college. Half of its 12,000 residents commute to Des Moines and the others are farmers or work in local service industries, said Flory.

Partly in response to the AIDS crisis, the Indianola school board recently approved mandatory sex education classes in kindergarten through high school.

"Because of what we're seeing around the country, the school board, even though they got a lot of flak, realized the necessity of that," said Ms. Flory.

While coping with the demand for information, however, officials in Indianola have also had to deal with a certain complacency about AIDS, Flory said. "It's more that it's not going to happen here," he said. "Or," said Ms. Flory, "that it's only going to happen to homosexuals."

Much of the financial support for dealing with AIDS in small communities has come from the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, which administers money to the states to apportion as they see fit. This year the CDC is contributing $29.5 million to states and local agencies for AIDS education programs, said CDC spokesman Donald Berreth.

The agency makes an effort to distribute funds to every state, based on proposals it receives from the states, said Robert Kohmescher, education specialist in the division of sexually transmitted diseases.

Dr. Donna Sweet of the University of Kansas in Wichita notes the importance of AIDS education in states such as Kansas, where only 68 cases of AIDS have been reported. "You could perhaps get more out of your dollar if you spend it where AIDS is not rampant already," she said.

Doctors in Kansas are, however, taking care of more AIDS victims than the official tally suggests, she said. AIDS patients "get diagnosed in Texas or California where they went to be in a more freely open homosexual community," she said.

a prime sponsor of AIDS legislation

Congress and state legislatures are also coming to grips with the public health implications of AIDS as increased demands are being made on them to spend significant sums of funds on research, surveillance, testing sites, public education, social services and treatment of the disease.

Richard Merritt, director of George Washington University's Intergovernmental Health Policy Project, which tracks AIDS legislation in the states, says that the number of bills introduced seems to be doubling each year.

In 1981, the first year AIDS attracted attention, only a few bills were introduced. By the end of April, Merritt predicts, state lawmakers will be considering more than 400 AIDS bills, twice the total for all of 1986 when 202 measures were introduced and 46 enacted into law. State legislatures have enacted five bills so far this year.

Dozens of bills have also been introduced in both houses of Congress. The bills range from requests for more funding for research to those calling for elimination of the waiting period before AIDS patients could qualify for Medicare coverage.

Federal health officials say 32,000 AIDS cases have been reported in the United States and that 17,388 of those afflicted have died. Medical experts warn that the epidemic has only now begun and that by 1991, the total number of cases will reach 270,000 — unless a better treatment or a cure is found.

At the federal Centers for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta, officials estimate that up to 1.5 million Americans carry the AIDS virus in their bodies and that one-fourth will likely develop AIDS within five years.

The World Health Organization, which keeps worldwide statistics, estimates that some 10 million people may already be infected with the virus and that unless powerful preventive measures are enacted, as many as 100 million people could be infected within five years.

Many public health experts and members of Congress have been critical of the Reagan administration's efforts to address the AIDS problem, for not spending more or not exerting more leadership toward finding a cure.

"The president can't even bring himself to say the name of the enemy," Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., a prime sponsor of AIDS legislation, complained recently.

To combat that perception, Reagan did use the term AIDS in a Philadelphia speech April 1. The president labeled the disease as "public health enemy No. 1" and said he favored sex education for students in a "context that included instruction of moral values."

He urged schoolchildren to abstain from sexual relations as the best method to avoid contracting the disease.

Even though some of them are cautious, the announced and unnannounced presidential candidates have also begun speaking out on the subject.

Republican Alexander M. Haig Jr., a former secretary of state, has agreed with the president's contention that AIDS is a "moral issue that requires education not only in the schools but families, churches and synagogues."

In early April, Vice President George Bush and Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., called for mandatory AIDS testing for couples applying for marriage licenses.

Kemp also announced he supports the Reagan administration's research efforts into the causes and possible cure of AIDS and has endorsed a House bill setting up a national commission to determine a strategy to deal with the health crisis.

Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, another Republican presidential contender, recommended in a recent New Hampshire speech that the federal government consider spending several billion dollars to prevent the spread of the disease.

Democrat Gary Hart, a former Colorado senator, has called for additional federal funding for research and education and for voluntary testing for AIDS.

A spokesman for the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson says the unannounced Democratic candidate is "working on a position paper on the issue" and will speak out on it shortly.

Former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt says the federal government should provide both "the moral and medical message" on the dangers of AIDS and has urged parents to be responsible for instructing children "about the full range of issues dealing with human sexuality."

New Hampshire, the first state to hold a presidential primary next year, is also expected to be the first state to enact a law requiring mandatory AIDS testing for couples applying for marriage licenses.

Contra funds reportedly used for 'lifestyle, homosexual friends'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Hearst News Service

Channell

WASHINGTON — Carl R. (Spitz) Channell, who Wednesday pleaded guilty to using a tax exempt foundation to raise funds for the Nicaraguan Contras, used much of the money for a lavish lifestyle and to help support homosexual friends, according to documents, tax records and interviews with associates and former employees.

Austin oilman Burt Hurlburt, who helped Channell identify potential donors and set up meetings, said people who gave money are not disturbed about illegality or revelations of Channell's homosexuality.

"But the thing that worries them most is the allegation of excessive spending," he said.

Channell, 41, shares a $300,000 condominium overlooking a scenic park in the District of Columbia with his companion of six years, Eric Olson. During 1986, Olson received checks totaling $17,000 from the National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty (NEPL), the tax-exempt organization used primarily for Contra fundraising.

A source high in the NEPL, recently quoted by National Public Radio (NPR), knew of no services Olson provided to earn the money.

Daniel Lynn Conrad, the No. 2 man to Channell at NEPL, was founder of a San Francisco consulting company called Public Management Institute, that received $56,000 from NEPL over the past two years. Conrad left the San Francisco firm several years ago, but shares and jointly owns a condominium there with Public Management Institute president Ken Gilman, according to NPR. Gilman declined to specify what the firm did for the $56,000, other than provide consulting services.

NATION

Friends and associates say Channell was paid at least $130,000 in 1985 and $157,000 in 1986 in direct salary, but other sources and documents suggest his real income was considerably higher.

The Baltimore Sun examined hundreds of pages of internal Channell organization financial documents and memos, conducted interviews with two former employees with direct access to the books, and with Stephen McMahon, the chief accountant in the Channell organization, and looked at federal and local tax documents.

"Mr. Channel's life emerges as one of luxury," the newspaper concluded.

Channell recently hired a spokesman, Jared Cameron, who observed that most Washington money raisers are well paid and travel in chauffeur-driven limousines. But Hurlburt, who visited Channell at his office in a Capitol Hill townhouse in 1985, said he gained the impression Channell operated modestly.

Sources say Channell and his associates in NEPL made no secret of the fact that the top executives and at least four subordintes were gay men.

The "pro-family" side of the conservative movement, which resists efforts by gays to gain new political rights and social acceptability, is becoming increasingly uneasy by publicity concerning Channell and his organizations. Several other young, conservative fundraisers for various Washington-based organizations also are described by associates as homosexual.

Some conservatives, including Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., have withdrawn as members of a committee that is organizing a May 31 black tie dinner in honor of Surgeon General Everett Koop, who has been urging "safe sex" as a means of slowing the spread of AIDS, a fatal disease that so far has mostly struck gay men.

The Koop tribute was billed as a broad-based affair, but Phyllis Schlafly and Paul Weyrich, the heads of separate conservative groups with members from all parts of the country, wrote a letter accusing Koop of covering up for the homosexual community. They warned that those who support the dinner "will play into the hands of the gay rights agenda."

After the letter was circulated, several other conservative elected officials — including GOP presidential nominees Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y. and former Delaware governor Peter du Pont — withdrew from the dinner committee.

A former West Virginia motel operator, Channell learned fundraising techniques from his friend Terry Dolan, a founder of the National Conservative Political Action Committee (NICPAC), the group that helped defeat liberal senators in the 1980 election with hard-hitting negative advertising, giving Republicans control of the Senate. Dolan died last year of AIDS.

Hurlburt said he was a founder of NICPAC and frequently traveled with Dolan, who was chairman of NICPAC, and Channell, who then was finance director, to raise money for what they viewed as patriotic causes. He said he saw no indications that the two lived "a homosexual lifestyle" but concedes he was informed by several people that Dolan and Channel were gay.

New Soviet embassy said to be 'laced with bugs'; Move proposed

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two congressmen who plan to introduce a resolution forcing the Soviets to leave their new hilltop embassy say the site already is being used for espionage.

"We will move the Russians off Mount Alto. We will send the Soviets a diplomatic message," Rep. Richard Armey, R-Texas, who is introducing the proposal in the House, said Wednesday.

Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, who is introducing it in the Senate, urged U.S. diplomats not to occupy new U.S. Embassy offices in Moscow. President Reagan has said the incomplete offices are so laced with Soviet listening devices that he may order it destroyed.

"We should never occupy that building. It should be blown down and rebuilt with an American construction firm," Symms told a news conference on the roof of a hotel across the street from the gleaming white marble Soviet office building.

Armey told the news conference "we have evidence...from a variety of sources that (the Soviets) are already using the site to conduct espionage."

Asked what type of intelligence the Soviets were collecting, Armey said, "I have received convincing testimony from a number of people," but he declined to give specifics, and said, "I probably shouldn't have said that. The information is classified and I probably went beyond what I should say."

Under a 1972 agreement, the Soviets are not allowed to move into offices they have constructed on Mount Alto until American diplomats occupy the new U.S. building in Moscow.

The Soviets moved into their apartment buildings in 1979, and according to U.S. officials use them to collect radio signals.

From the hilltop, the Soviets can look down on the Capitol, the White House, the Pentagon and other sensitive buildings, and can intercept some microwave and radio communications from them, said Stanislav Levchenko, a former Soviet KGB major who defected in 1979.

Under agreements signed in 1969 and 1972, the Soviets were allowed to build eight office and apartment buildings on Mount Alto and the United States to construct a similar complex next to the current U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

Two presidential commissions and two State Department groups are investigating security problems at the new U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Monday, April 30, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Weather: 81, wind south, clouds, stormy, rain and thunder.

For April, the coldest was 25 degrees on April 2; the high was 90 today; prevailing winds were southwest; three inches of rain fell, and one inch of snow.

Charles Thomson received three boxes of plants, trees, and shrubs today.

For those who missed the first concert of the Uranian Society on the 13th, a reminder that the concert is repeated tonight. It begins precisely at 8 o'clock at the Hall of the University. Tickets are a half-a-dollar each.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress was not in session today for want of a quorum.

William Samuel Johnson of Connecticut reports the weather in New York is showery. He attends the session of the Court of Appeals of the Confederation.

DELEGATES TODAY

George Washington departed Fredericksburg at sunrise, bound for home. Preparation and planting continued. A half acre of sweet potatoes was planted at Muddy Hole Farm. Corn was being planted at Ferry Farm. Parsnips and carrots are put in at Dogue Run.

Robert Morris, merchant of Philadelphia, writes to John Langdon, merchant of Portsmouth, N.H., to introduce William Robinson Jr. Both gentlemen were chosen to represent their states at Philadelphia.

LOOKING BACK

Charles Thomson, Secretary

Charles Thomson, who received the plants mentioned above, was secretary of Congress, now sitting in New York. The plants were probably intended for his estate, "Harriton" in Ardmore, Pa.

Thomson was one of six children to sail from Ireland in 1739 with their widowed father. Their father died at sea and the orphaned children landed at New Castle, Del. Educated at New London, Chester County, Pa., Thomson settled in Philadelphia in 1750. He became a tutor in the Philadelphia Academy with Benjamin Franklin's assistance.

Thomson was appointed secretary to the First Continental Congress in 1774 and again to the Second Continental Congress in 1775. He continued in that office in Congress under the Articles of Confederation. Thomson resigned at the close of that Congress in July 1789. The new Congress under the Constitution chose not to continue Thomson's service and he retired to "Harriton" after 15 years of service.

Nakasone offers plan to increase Japanese role in world economy

By HENRY GOTTLIEB

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, opening two days of talks with President Reagan and congressional leaders, is trying to cool American passion for tough economic action against his country.

He carried fresh assurances that Japan will open its borders to foreign imports and brought additional details of a plan to increase Japanese responsibility for the world economy, Japanese foreign ministry spokesman Takeshi Ohara said Wednesday.

Among those details were "very specific figures" on a $20 billion to $30 billion Japanese loan program for impoverished nations, and word that the money need not be spent on Japanese products, Ohara said.

Ohara, briefing reporters on the visit, said Nakasone also brought details of how Japan plans to stimulate demand for consumer goods, a step that would presumably increase foreign sales in his country. The prime minister also is prepared to assure administration officials that Japan will honor a pledge to buy expensive, U.S.-built supercomputers.

Nakasone was greeted on arrival Wednesday with more evidence of U.S. government determination to reduce Japan's $58.6 billion billion trade surplus with America.

The House passed, 218-214, an amendment requiring countries to cut "excess and unwarranted" trade surpluses with the United States by 10 percent annually or face presidentially decreed sanctions.

At the White House, moreover, officials said they were in no great hurry to lift sanctions imposed earlier this month on $300 million worth of Japanese electronics products.

The punitive tariffs, which took effect April 17, were in retaliation for Japan's alleged violation of a 1986 agreement to refrain from cut-rate foreign sales of computer chips.

Ohara denied that Japan violated the agreement, said that the sanctions were unwarranted and that the prime minister would ask the president to lift the penalties. He said Nakasone would not suggest a date for cancellation.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said it would be "difficult" but not impossible to have enough information to lift the sanctions before the seven-nation economic summit in Venice on June 8-10.

While Reagan has indicated a desire to cancel the measures as soon as possible, "I don't think that we're rushing to lift the sanctions," a senior administration official told reporters at a briefing on Nakasone's visit.

"Once we are able to determine that there is something happening, that there is a change taking place as far as the ability to compete in the Japanese domestic market and the dumping cases in other areas of the world...we will consider lifting those sanctions," the official said. "But we're in no great hurry to do that."

While saying the sanctions would remain in place during Nakasone's visit, Fitzwater said: "I don't think it's necessary to produce a won-loss column or gifts or big dramatic developments to make it a succesful trip. ...There are a number of things they can discuss, particularly in the national security area."

The Reagan administration has lauded a recent Japanese decision to forgo the traditional practice of keeping defense spending below 1 percent of the country's gross national product.

In comparison, the United States spends more than 5 percent of its GNP on defense and has pressured Japan to increase its share of the defense burden in the North Pacific.

In return, Japan has put pressure on the United States to keep pushing for an agreement that would eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear forces, including Soviet missiles of that class based in Asia. This is the so-called global zero option.

U.S. and Soviet negotiators have said they are near agreement on a plan to eliminate such weapons from Europe. But as the plan now stands, the United States would base 100 intermediate-range missile warheads at home and the Soviets would keep 100 warheads in Asia.

"We prefer the global zero and would appreciate it if the U.S. government would keep our position in mind when it negotiates with the Soviet Union," Ohara said.

Nakasone's visit to the United States coincides with a major slide in his popularity at home.

Auditors sift through PTL 'mess'

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — PTL's financial records are "a mess," its new chief operations officer said as auditors began searching for assets that can be sold to cover the ministry's $50 million debt.

A home that the Rev. Jim Bakker and his wife lived in and a residence of the ousted PTL president, the Rev. Richard Dortch, probably will be sold with other properties as part of an effort to streamline operations and settle the debt, Harry Hargrave said Wednesday.

"Our goals are to right the ship from a fiscal standpoint, to create a balanced budget, and to go in and provide services to the PTL partners and general public that in turn will glorify God," Hargrave told an impromptu news conference.

PTL's new board hired Hargrave on Tuesday at $175,000 a year to bring the scandal-rocked ministry back to financial stability. It also exiled Bakker from the ministry and stopped all payments to him, his wife Tammy, and Jessica Hahn, the woman whose 1980 tryst with Bakker led to his resignation last month.

Dortch resigned under pressure at Tuesday's board meeting.

"The books are a mess," Hargrave said. "We have (auditors) in right now and they'll be there until we get it all sorted out. That doesn't mean we're going down the tubes."

One way to get money to pay off debts would be selling PTL's "extraneous" assets, Hargrave said. Six houses in the area, including ones the Bakkers and Dortch lived in, probably will be sold, along with boats and cars, he said.

This limited edition handmade doll of Tammy Bakker holds a sign of forgiveness from supporters of Jim and Tammy Bakker during the crisis at Heritage USA in Fort Mill, S.C. The doll is for sale at Heritage USA for $675.

"This ministry doesn't need much of that property," Hargrave said.

The Bakkers amassed at least $850,000 worth of real estate and cars in recent years.

PTL officials have not determined whether ministry funds were improperly used, said Mark DeMoss, executive assistant to the board chairman, the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

"That's going to take a few days of looking at the books," DeMoss said, adding that all of the couple's holdings would be examined. The Bakkers could be asked to surrender assets if it were determined they were bought with PTL funds, he said.

The couple bought a sprawling mansion in Palm Springs, Calif., for $600,000, a mountainside home in Gatlinburg, Tenn., for $148,500, a new Mercedes-Benz for $45,000 and a vintage 1953 Rolls-Royce for $55,000.

They have said they used their own money to buy the Palm Springs house.

DeMoss also said a decision on whether to seek assets of former PTL executives should be made in a few weeks.

He termed the millions of dollars in salaries and bonuses paid Bakker and his top executives "outrageous," and said PTL will review the payments. Each top executive got more than $100,000 last year, DeMoss said. "It's part of an effort to bring all pay and benefits down to a reasonable scale."

Rules could hamper search for AIDS cure

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration should not allow the use of more experimental drugs for incurably ill people despite arguments that easing the current rules would show compassion, a prominent medical researcher has told a House subcommittee.

"It shows no compassion for patients today because it will encourage disrupting their lives by the dangers and side effects of potent drugs without established effectiveness," Charles G. Moertel, a professor at the Mayo Clinic and Mayo Medical School, told the human resurces subcommittee of the House Governmental Operations Committee.

One of several witnesses arguing Wednesday against the proposed rules allowing drug companies to sell the drugs in certain instances before they are finally approved, Moertel went on, "It especially shows no compassion for patients tomorrow since it will delay availability of hopeful treatment by producing chaos in the orderly process of scientific drug research and development."

Family violence aid urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charlotte Fedders, whose accusations of physical abuse by her husband led to his resignation from a prominent federal position, has asked Congress to maintain funding for family violence prevention.

"We cannot begin cutting funds for programs that have only begun to exist," Mrs. Fedders testified Wednesday before the House Education and Labor subcommittee on select education. No funding has been released this year and none is proposed in the next budget.

Mrs. Fedders said she is trying to wrap up her divorce from John Fedders, former enforcement chief of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Fedders, through his lawyer, has denied being a "wife beater" although he acknowledged there were seven violent altercations during their marriage.

Parole revocation needed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. Parole Commission hearing examiner has recommended that former U.S. Rep. George Hansen be sent back to prison until at least Nov. 5, Hansen's attorney said.

"The hearing examiner recommended parole revocation, which was no surprise to us, but he also recommended that Mr. Hansen forfeit all of his free time since Jan. 7," said attorney Frank Campbell after the parole hearing Wednesday.

After serving six months of a five to 15-month sentence for breaking federal ethics laws, Hansen was released on parole from Petersburg Federal Penitentiary Dec. 19. He was ordered to file monthly financial reports and stay in Virginia. A report was due Jan. 7, but it did not comply with the rules, Campbell said. Federal marshals arrested Hansen in Omaha, Neb. as he was flying home from a speaking engagement.

Media to be fingerprinted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department has extended its general security crackdown to the news media, requiring fingerprints and background checks of reporters covering the Pentagon.

Pentagon officials, who asked not to be identified, said Wednesday the change in procedures would be implemented in the next month and would apply to all correspondents seeking a Pentagon building pass.

Robert Sims, assistant defense secretary for public affairs, confirmed that changes would soon be made but declined to discuss specifics immediately.

Writing budget takes compromise

There's a lot of haggling going on currently in Austin about what sort of state budget will come out of this year's legislative session. Not everyone is in agreement on what the final figure will be — or even should be.

The Senate Finance Committee adopted a $40 billion budget for the coming biennium and the House Appropriations Committee chose a $39.4 billion version. Gov. Bill Clements, no doubt elected over incumbent Mark White because of the former's staunch fiscal conservatism, stated in a meeting of the Reporter-Telegram editorial board a few weeks ago that he is willing to veto any budget he receives that exceeds his $36.9 billion figure.

Aside from all the rhetoric, what truly is needed is a budget that provides for state needs — as differentiated from desires — and, while not giving Texas the image of being so down-on-its-luck that it may never come up again, keeps the state attractive to outside investors and businesses looking for a new state home. Texas can't attract businesses or investors if it's giving an impression of being dead in the water.

So, it would seem that a budget which provides for the maintenance of state services and anticipated increases in costs without further overburdening the state's taxpayers would be reasonable. Chances are Gov. Clements' budget projection — which only provides for 2 percent growth over the current budget, multiplied by two — is slightly restrictive. But the governor shouldn't be faulted for trying to protect the interests of taxpayers during a difficult economic period.

On the other hand, the budgets adopted in the Senate Finance Committee and House Appropriations may be a bit ambitious, particularly in light of the difficulties the state economy is still encountering.

Compromise is the name of the game in any government endeavor, if it is successful. It's time both Gov. Clements and the leadership in the legislature started thinking in those terms.

Pit Bull confusion

I would like to educate the public about the Pit Bulldog.

The Pit Bulldog can be a vicious dog, if the owner is not a responsible person, and if the owner does not understand the dog.

People are confused between Pit Bulls and the American Staffordshire Bulldog.

The Pit Bulldog was bred for fighting dogs. The men who bred them years ago knew the damage they could do to people, so they did not tolerate a dog that acted mean to people. It would be put to sleep.

On the other hand, the American Staffordshire Bulldog was bred in England for the sole purpose of attacking people. The police got the idea from the American Pit Bulldog. They knew the damage the dogs could do, and that's what they wanted.

The recent incident near Fannin Elementary is sad. A Pit Bulldog that acts in that manner was more than likely aggravated over a period of time. Children coming home from school find that a great pasttime.

A lot of attacks happen when an irresponsible owner lets his dog run loose, and a parent sees the dog near his children. They react like anybody would. They get a broom or a stick and try to scare the dog away. Pit Bulldogs were bred for aggression; therefore an attack is provoked. The parent should calmly go and pick up his child. The best thing to do is act calm or talk to the dog. You would be surprised how they can tell by a person's tone of voice whether they are in trouble or being congratulated.

The American Pit Bulldog makes a great guard dog. They do not have to be trained simply because they are very territorial. I own a Pit Bulldog and out in public he loves people. When other dogs come around, he is very curious. He has yet to even growl at another dog or person. When he is in the backyard, it is a completely different story.

Could you imagine a burglar climbing into someone's backyard with a bulldog back there? You can bet the burglar's not going to just kick him and then proceed to steal.

And this final note: If the media would research before printing that headline story, it might be found that the American Pit Bulldog is not even in the top 10 of breeds that have attacked people.

Management problem

The other day I was in Lincoln County, Okla., office of the County Clerk. In a conversation with one of the deputies about the oil and gas economy she asked, "Things aren't really that bad, are they?" In looking around the office, it occurred to me that 10 deputies were on staff, four more than in 1980. Things are obviously not too bad in the county government business!

What does this have to do with Texas? It stands as an obvious example of government's inability or simple lack of desire to adjust to economic changes. A 65 percent drop in oil prices has not effected the Lincoln County Clerk's Office at all. And I am sure that Lincoln County is but a mirror image of most county and state government throughout Texas and Oklahoma.

Governor Clements is arguing for an overall 2 percent (or $766 million) increase in state spending. This is a proposed total budget of $36.9 billion. The Texas Legislature and the Democratic Party Truth Squad maintain that without larger increases in spending, services will be cut to the bone. This appears to me to be a management problem, not a revenue shortfall.

For years, I have been mad at Ronald Reagan for not using his veto power in a demand for decreased spending at the federal level. I congratulate Clements for following through with the task for which he was elected. State spending must be reined, and the bureaucracy must learn to live within its current revenues. I wish Clements the best of luck and much success in his battle.

Evidence points to Israeli/Iran deal

WASHINGTON — Israel, which has tried to minimize its role in the Reagan administration's arms deal with Iran, may itself have been trying to sell TOW antitank missiles to the Tehran regime as recently as February.

Jack Anderson

According to a Customs Service document obtained by our associate Corky Johnson, three Israelis — a three-star general, a colonel and a former two-star general — were trying to acquire an "end-user" certificate that would disguise the shipment to Iran of 10,000 U.S.-made TOW missiles. These are the same ground-controlled anti-tank missiles the White House arranged to deliver to Iran for help in freeing American hostages.

The document does not indicate whether the sale was ever consummated, and Customs Service sources were unable to discover the outcome of the reported negotiations.

The confidential Customs Service document — a Feb. 23 telex from the agency's Rome office to the Strategic Investigations Division in Washington — indicates that Italian officials requested information on a New York City company reportedly involved in the deal. (The company, "Grand M.A. Ltd.," is not listed in telephone company records.)

According to the telex, "a foreign national (not identified) is attempting to acquire in Italy an end-user certificate for the purchase of 10,000 BGM-71/A TOW missiles from Israel." It then states: "The missiles would ultimately be transshipped to Iran. The missiles will be sourced by the government of Israel from Grand M.A. Ltd."

Negotiations on the missile transaction were to take place in Switzerland, "sponsored" by the three Israeli officers.

The apparent beginning of the deal was described in a mysterious passage in the confidential telex: Italian officials told the Customs agent in Rome that on Sept. 10, 1986 — roughly two months before the White House weapons sale to Iran was acknowledged — "responsible officers of an Italian company ... had a meeting" with a Dutch middleman. There appeared to have been no subsequent meetings, the cable added.

Italian authorities learned of the Rome meeting and asked Customs to investigate those believed to be involved, "presumably because of the attempted approach to an Italian firm by an outside government (Israel)" the telex explained, adding: "The Customs agent in Rome feels we are on firm ground in supplying requested information and assistance."

Sources in the Customs Service could provide no further details of the negotiations, or the results of the investigation requested by Italy.

Israel has consistently denied that it supplied weapons to Iran. But the Tower commission, which investigated the White House arms-for-hostages operation, reported that Israel played a key role at "critical points" in the negotiations. The commission concluded that Israel "pressed" an Iranian arms dealer on the U.S. team, despite the CIA's assessment that he was unreliable.

"When doubts were expressed by critical U.S. participants," the commission reported, "an Israeli emissary would arrive with encouragement, often a specific proposal, and pressure to stay with the channel."

In fact, Vice President George Bush told the Tower Board of his concern that U.S. policy was "in the grips of the Israelis." He said he thought Israel might be using the U.S. deal as a "cover" for its own secret policy toward Iran. Israel's interests would be served by helping Iran continue its war with Iraq, an implacable enemy of Israel. As long as it was struggling against Iran, the Iraqi regime would be unable to take hostile action against Israel.

LAND GRABBERS WELCOME: The Bureau of Land Management has taken a truly Christlike attitude toward forgiveness of trespasses, to the serious disadvantage of law-abiding farmers and the taxpayers.

A recent report by the Agriculture Department's inspector general cites the case of a farmer who applied for lawful use of government land. It cost him $826 for a permit, plus an annual fee of $183. If he had used the land without permission and been caught, he'd have been fined only the $183 annual fee. "Consequently, by trespassing, the farmer could have saved $826 if caught, and $1,009 if not caught," the inspector general noted.

Such situations were supposed to have been rectified by new regulations that would make things tougher on trespassers growing crops illegally on government land. The new rules were supposed to have been published more than two years ago, but a bureau official told our reporter Lisa Sylvester they're still under review, and he couldn't say when they'll be out.

Meanwhile, as the inspector general also pointed out, some trespassers have even been collecting federal subsidies for crops they grew illegally on government land.

Jury returns verdict on capital punishment

WASHINGTON — It has been a winding path to an unanticipated destination, but America has come to the conclusion of the argument about the constitutionality of capital punishment. It did so in a case in which the Supreme Court came within one vote of sowing chaos throughout the criminal-justice system.

George F. Will

In 1978, in Georgia, Warren McCleskey, who with three accomplices was committing armed robbery, shot a white police officer in the face, fatally. The science of allocating and the art of attaining the status of victim are highly developed, and last week the Court came within one vote of declaring McCleskey a victim (of racism). But by voting 5-4 to uphold his death sentence, the Court closed a parenthesis in constitutional law. The parenthesis opened in 1972 when the Court split 5-4, scattering nine opinions as it overturned Georgia's death penalty.

In 1972, two justices said capital punishment had become violative of the Eighth Amendment proscription of "cruel and unusual" punishments because it had become incompatible with America's "evolving standards of decency." Three other justices said that capital punishment as then administered was cruel and unusual in the way that being struck by lightning is: Imposition of the death penalty was unusual in the sense of being of unpredictable incidence, and such unusualness is cruel.

Any state wanting capital punishment had to re-enact it with statutes consistent with the 1972 ruling. Thirty-five states promptly (and two more later) undertook to do just that, thereby refuting the theory that America's "evolving standards of decency" rejected the punishment. As an empirical (as distinct from moral) matter, there is a strong consensus about the morality and utility of the death penalty.

In a 1976 case arising from a challenge to Georgia's revised capital-punishment law, the Court held the law constitutional. The law substantially narrows the class of murders subject to the death penalty; it separates the processes of adjudicating guilt and imposing sanctions; it requires the finding of at least one of a specified list of "aggravating circumstances (such as the killing of a police officer); it allows the defendant to introduce any relevant mitigating circumstance that might dissuade a jury from imposing a death sentence.

The point of these elaborate procedures is to allow sentencing authorities to exercise discretion based on the particular circumstances of the crime and the criminal. These procedures recognize that there are no identical capital crimes or defendants.

Sentenced under these procedures, McCleskey had but one weapon — a study of capital punishment sentencings in Georgia. The study showed a statistical discrepancy that coincided with race. Killers of whites, and especially black killers of whites, were more likely than others to receive the death penalty.

McCleskey did not argue that Georgia intended a racially discriminatory effect from its law. He did not say he was innocent or his trial was in any way improper. He did not introduce any evidence specific to his case. He simply cited the statistical study. However, such statistical analysis can not prove that race influences any sentencing decisions. Justice Powell (joined by Rehnquist, White, O'Connor and Scalia) said that where discretion is involved, "we decline to assume that what is unexplained is invidious."

Had the Court declared capital punishment unconstitutional because of a statistical discrepancy correlating with race, innumerable laws would have been challenged because of similar discrepancies and correlations. The correlations might be to gender, or social class. There even are studies suggesting that physically attractive defendants receive greater leniency than less attractive defendants.

Arguments against capital punishment on constitutional (as distinct from moral) grounds have driven themselves into an intellectual cul-de-sac. They have provoked reforms that render that punishment immune to constitutional challenge.

Capital punishment might seem to be an issue admitting no satisfactory compromise, but America has reached what looks like a sensible splitting of differences. The social sciences have been deployed by both sides, but are inadequate to the task of demonstrating or disproving a causal connection between the regular imposition of capital punishment and a deterrent effect. This is partly because there are too many variables to control for, partly because there has not recently been regular imposition.

The case for capital punishment stands or falls on the issue of proportionality, on the intuition that it is disrespectful of human dignity not to take a life as punishment for especially cruel, wanton or cold-blooded killing. Today, capital punishment is essentially restricted to the function of expressing society's horror of such crimes.

Winning isn't everything when lawyers fight

Two lawyers were talking to each other at the next table. One was wearing a fire chief's hat, so I assumed he worked for Texaco. The other was putting Pennzoil on his salad.

Art Buchwald

The Pennzoil man said, "I feel like $11 billion."

The Texaco man took a swig of wine and replied, "You don't have to rub it in. You know you'll never see the money. We've gone into bankruptcy."

"Great," said the Pennzoil man. "That means we're going to have to sue you for it. I was wondering how we were going to get some additional fees after the original suit was settled."

"We're counting on Pennzoil suing us. With that suit and our fees for bankruptcy, every partner in my law firm will be able to send his kid to college."

The Pennzoil man admonished, "Lawyers shouldn't become rich on litigation. Their job is to serve the client at the least possible cost."

"I'll drink to that," the Texaco man chuckled as he drank directly from the wine bottle.

"I wouldn't be too happy about the way things are going. My Pennzoil clients are talking about settling out of court. If that happens we can both sell our houses in Easthampton."

The Texaco man looked shocked. "You can't let them settle out of court. That would make Pennzoil look chicken throughout the free oil world."

"If they want to settle I have no choice."

"If you don't sue us then we are going to sue you," asserted the Texaco man. "We have a lifetime of legal work staring us in the face and we're not letting it go down the drain because you people will settle for less than $11 billion to cover the pain and anguish Texaco caused you."

"On behalf of everyone in my firm I welcome your lawsuit and will set aside the next five years to take depositions."

"Good. We'll hire 20 more lawyers to work on the appeal just in case we lose in court," the Texaco man said. "Boy it's great to be on the losing side of a multibillion-dollar lawsuit."

The Pennzoil man retorted, "It's great to be on any side of a billion-dollar suit. What I would like to do is take this one to the Supreme Court. Then I could buy a new boat I've got my eye on."

"If we can take it to the Court of Appeals I'll be able to purchase that chalet in Aspen."

The Pennzoil man asked, "Suppose the judge throws the suit out of court because it has no merit. Where does that leave us?"

"We'll sue him."

"We can't sue a judge. But we can do the next best thing — fight the thousands of unhappy stockholders who are lined up ready to sue Texaco and Pennzoil for screwing up. We'll be in court until the year 2001," the Pennzoil man declared.

"You make it sound so good I think I'll buy a private airplane."

"There is an old saying in our profession: 'When you have a sick rich client, a private plane pays for itself,'" the Pennzoil man commented.

"When this case started several years ago I was so sure we would settle out of court I figured I would only make enough on it to buy a home in Great Neck," said the Texaco lawyer. "Little did I dream I could buy the Trump Tower."

"I felt the same way. Winning isn't everything in this case. The big money is coming in now that Texaco won't pay the $11 billion."

The Texaco man inquired, "What are you going to do with your fees?"

"The same thing any struggling corporation lawyer would do. I'm going to buy a sunflower painting by Vincent Van Gogh."

South American nations keep tenuous hold on democracy

By BRUCE HANDLER

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — New civilian governments have faced down mutinous soldiers in a series of recent confrontations across South America, a continent where just a few years ago military men ruled supreme.

In the latest episode, which began April 15, Argentina's President Raul Alfonsin quieted an uprising by disgruntled army units.

"The time for coups is over forever!" Alfonsin declared.

In Argentina, as in earlier cases, the civilian politicians appear to have made concessions to the military in order to quell the unrest. But the overall message, backed by hundreds of thousands of cheering citizens who jammed Buenos Aires' streets, remained clear: Argentina and the rest of South America refuse to return to military domination.

A decade ago, eight of the 12 independent nations on this politically volatile continent were under the military boot. Today, as a result of inept performances by soldier politicians, public outcries against secret arrests, torture and "disappearances," and international pressure, only three nations — Chile, Paraguay and Surinam — remain without civilian administrations.

Still, South America's armed forces are never far from the political stage. After centuries at the center of power, many Latin American military men still reserve to themselves a "right" to intervene again — a threat that may diminish only with time and experience in civilian rule.

Here is a look at the military-civilian clashes that have rattled South America in recent months:

ARGENTINA

The president's troubles began two weeks ago when an army major refused to answer a court summons in a human rights case stemming from Argentina's 1976-83 period of military rule, when thousands were killed in the military's "dirty war" against suspected leftists.

Responding to the crisis, Alfonsin persuaded hundreds of thousands of Argentines to gather in city plazas to proclaim their opposition to a new military takeover.

Addressing a multi-party assembly in the Argentine Congress, he declared, "Armed forces officers have only one obligation: to obey orders from the commander-in-chief."

The major's rebellion and two others that followed were ended by the following Tuesday. In the process, however, Alfonsin replaced the army chief of staff, who had backed the courts against military officers in human rights cases. Authorities reportedly are considering other steps to ease the prosecution of soldiers.

ECUADOR

In January, angry paratroopers kidnapped President Leon Febres Cordero, a civilian elected in 1984, and held him for 11 hours until he ordered the release of former air force commander Gen. Frank Vargas Pazzos, imprisoned for attempting an earlier military revolt.

Febres Cordero and Vargas Pazzos made a typically Latin deal: The general would be free to organize a campaign to run for president in elections set for early next year, and there would be no more coup attempts.

Febres Cordero, who expressed public sympathy for Alfonsin during the Argentine rebellion, said military dissidents in both countries "are following personal ambition and do not represent the will of the armed forces, much less the will of their nations."

PERU

Peru's elected president, Alan Garcia, also openly backed Alfonsin, having faced similar problems just two weeks earlier, when air force jets buzzed his Lima presidential palace because he fired air force commander Gen. Luis Abram.

Abram had opposed a law championed by Garcia merging the three armed-service branches under a civilian defense minister and ending the secrecy of the military budget-making process.

Polls showed that 63 percent of Peruvians supported the defense law. Garcia, highly popular because of his economic policies, held his ground and Abram remained dismissed.

BRAZIL

Rumors of a military coup circulated this month in Brazil, where the soldiers ruled for 21 years before turning power over to civilians in 1985. But the army and navy ministries said the rumors were baseless.

President Jose Sarney telephoned Alfonsin with words of hope that he would overcome the Argentine revolt.

Sarney has carefully nurtured good relations with his own armed forces, allowing the military to put down recent strikes and rigidly enforcing a 1979 amnesty that rules out trials of military men for human rights abuses during the previous regime.

Cloudy skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms are in the National Weather Service forecast for Friday. Winds will be out of the south at 10-20 mph and a high in the middle 80s is predicted.

Forecasters at the NWS at Midland Regional Airport say there is a very slight possibility of isolated thunderstorms tonight. There is a less-than 20 percent chance of rain. Under partly cloudy skies and with winds out of the south-southeast at five to 10 mph, the low is expected to be in the middle 50s.

Wednesday's high of 81 was 14 degrees below the record high set for that date in 1947. Today's low was 11 degrees above the record low of 41 set for this date in 1960.

STATE

The remnants of a weak upper level disturbance continued to produce some scattered thundershowers over Central Texas early today.

Elsewhere, light rain showers feel on parts of the western mountain region between Monahans and Marfa, although skies were fair to partly cloudy over most of the state.

A travelers advisory was posted for the Golden Triangle area as dense fog developed in the moist air along the upper Gulf Coast, the National Weather Service said.

Winds were light and variable over much of the Trans-Pecos, while south to southwest winds prevailed over the rest of Texas at 5 mph to 10 mph.

NATION

Snow flurries dotted northern Maine today while rain was widespread from the Northeast into the Midwest.

Showers also were widely scattered from central California across western Washington.

Rain dampened broad sections of northern New England and New York while rain and thunderstorms were scattered from Maryland across northern Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, southern Indiana, southern Illinois and central Missouri into east central Kansas.

Meanwhile, Massachusetts officials were on the lookout for flooding from melting snow that piled up as high as 21 inches on Wednesday from a spring storm.

The cold rains and snow amounted to 1.92 inches of liquid precipitation in Boston, bringing the month total to 9.45 inches, the highest since the National Weather Service began keeping records in 1871, said meteorologist Tom McGuire.

Attorney General Jim Mattox

Mattox says teens who 'play' are going to pay

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Attorney General Jim Mattox wants to give a moral and legal lesson to Texas teens — "If you're going to play, you're going to have to pay."

Mattox was in Midland Wednesday promoting a new program he hopes will educate youth about the costs of teen-age pregnancies and stem the growing tide of child support cases.

"We do not teach our young people the moral values nor the common sense to deal with these problems," Mattox said.

Local attorney general child support offices are setting up speaking programs to talk about their responsibilities to youngsters in high schools and in civic groups as part of the new program, he said.

"In Texas we like to brag about being number one. We've got one area were we're number one and we've have no right to brag about it," Mattox said.

Texas leads the nation in the number of pregnancies by mothers 14 years and under, and the state rates second nationwide in the number of teen-age pregnancies, he said.

Mattox didn't know how many teen mothers his office is trying to collect child support payments for. But he said of the 265,000 cases statewide, about 110,000 involve mothers receiving welfare and many of these mothers are teens.

Unlike a few years ago, today in Texas both parents have a legal responsibility to support their child, Mattox said.

A bill pending in the state Legislature would make grandparents support the infants of their teen children.

This bill would require grandparents to be financially responsible for their grandchildren if their children are under 18 years old.

If the Legislature passes the bill, Mattox said, "More mommies and daddies would...explain the birds and the bees."

Clements wins partial victory in budget battle

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A Senate committee handed the governor a preliminary victory Wednesday by approving a measure that would allow changes in state spending while the Legislature is not in session.

Gov. Bill Clements has threatened to call lawmakers into a summer special legislative session if they do not give him so-called budget execution authority. But more than a majority of the Senate has called Clements' bluff and promised to block the bill.

Under the bill approved 6-1 by the Senate Finance Committee, the governor could declare a budget emergency and recommend to the 10-member Legislative Budget Board that certain appropriations be transferred from one agency to another.

The House approved the bill 76-68, but the Senate last month overwhelmingly defeated a motion to debate it. Finance Committee Chairman Grant Jones, D-Temple and sponsor of the bill, said certain restrictions placed on the House version of the bill should make it more palatable a second time around in the Senate.

"It's ridiculous to leave us sitting here with no way to meet unexpected events," Jones said.

One restriction would prevent the Legislative Budget Board from taking away more than 10 percent of an agency's appropriated budget or injecting into an agency's coffers more than 5 percent of its budget.

Under the bill, the budget board — made up of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, House Speaker Gib Lewis, four senators and four House members, could accept, reject or modify the governor's recommendation for fund transfers and send it back to the governor's desk for final approval. The board must act within 30 days of a gubernatorial recommendation or the request becomes void.

Voters in 1985 approved a constitutional amendment authorizing budget execution authority.

The lone vote in opposition came from Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, who said the measure represented "an abdication of our reponsibilities."

"The most critical thing that we do is set priorities on where we spend our state funds," he said. "And if we abdicate that to a committee, we abdicate 50 percent of the reason that we are here. My people did not send me up here to substitute my judgment for the judgment of Grant Jones, Bill Hobby or Bill Clements about where their tax money ought to be spent."

Parker has gathered the support of 16 Democratic senators, more than a Senate majority, to block any bill giving the governor authority to redirect portions of the state budget.

Odessa jury to decide man's punishment for killing son

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 70th District Court Jury before noon today was expected to decide what prison sentence an 18-year-old man should serve for the murder of his 7-month-old son.

Orlando Hernandez Banuelos Wednesday was found guilty of the April 1, 1986, killing of Orlando Banuelos Jr. by the jury of eight men and four women after more than three and a half hours of deliberation.

Banuelos heard Judge Gene Ater read the jury's guilty verdict without any display of emotion. He remained free on $25,000 bond pending sentencing today.

Arguments in the punishment phase of the trial were scheduled to begin at 10:30 this morning. Jurors were expected to begin deliberations before the noon hour. The prosecution was expected to ask jurors to impose the maximum 99 year sentence. Banuelos could be sentenced to as little as five years in prison.

The body of the infant was found in a Dumpster several hours after the child was discovered missing from a crib in his mother's room in her family's home in the 2500 block of West 10th Street. An autopsy ordered by Peace Justice Manuel Valles revealed the child had suffocated when a sock had been stuffed down his throat.

In a statement to police, Banuelos admitted he stuffed the sock down the baby's throat, but only intended to stop him from crying.

In final arguments Wednesday morning, assistant district attorney Roger Jones told jurors Banuelos stuffed the sock down the baby's throat and placed a clothespin on the child's nose with intent to kill it.

Defense attorney Richard Alvarado argued that while Banuelos' action was "reckless and stupid" the young father did not intend to kill his son.

Alvarado told jurors it was the panic of a teen-ager that caused Banuelos to put the baby's body in the city Dumpster.

Banuelos' statement, taken by Odessa police Det. Fred Price, indicated the baby's mother, Modesta Gomez, then 17, heard the baby cry and told Banuelos she was going to get up give the baby a bottle. Banuelos told her he would do it. The baby spit out the bottle and continued to cry, he said.

Banuelos said he stuffed the sock in his son's throat, thinking the baby would be able to breathe through his nose. When he saw the baby was having trouble breathing, Banuelos tried to retrieve the sock but couldn't, he stated. Then he placed the clothespin on the baby's nose, thinking it would cause him to cough up the sock. Neither prosecutor Jones nor defense attorney Alvarado called Ms. Gomez, the baby's mother, to the witness stand to testify, although she was in the hallway outside the courtroom during the entire course of the nearly three-day trial.

Banuelos did not testify in his own defense during the trial.

Because the trial continues, Alvarado declined to comment on the jury's guilty verdict beyond saying he was "disappointed."

Local lawyer, Teen Court official honored by young attorneys' group

Ann Dye Scott

Harris Kerr

Midland lawyer Harris Kerr and Midland Teen Court coordinator Ann Dye Scott were lauded at noon Wednesday by the Midland County Young Lawyers Association in the Petroleum Club of Midland.

The young lawyers named Kerr, one of their kind, as "Outstanding Young Lawyer for Midland County" for 1986-87, and bestowed Ms. Scott with the Liberty Bell Award for her service to the community and to the judiciary via Teen Court.

"Teen Court is working in Midland," said Medferd Owen, district director for the Texas Young Lawyers Association, "and it is working because of the tireless efforts of Ann Scott."

Teen Court is an exercise in justice performed by teen-agers who sit in judgment of their peers who have erred by such Class C — the most minor — misdemeanor offenses as shoplifting, speeding, and drinking intoxicating beverages. Each court session is ruled over by a state district court or county judge, and teen-age jurors determine punishment, which is a public-service deed or series of acts, only after the defendant has pleaded guilty to the offense. The offense is forgiven and is not recorded in a court of law after public-service deeds have been performed.

Teen Court is a cooperative program of the Junior League of Midland, the city of Midland, Midland County, and the Midland Independent School District. "Ann Dye Scott is Midland Teen Court," said Owen. "It is only through her tireless effort and dedication that the program has been a success" since it was established in Midland in 1986.

Through Teen Court, juveniles "receive the chance to help themselves and others in the community," Owen said. "Many times, the chance to excel and assist (others) is the catalyst that a teen needs to put his or her life in order. Without Ann Scott, there would be no success story about Teen Court."

The program's intent is to help build errant teen-agers' self-esteem, self-love and self-respect and thereby instill respect for others and for society.

"The root cause (of teen-age offenses) is that kids do not have sufficient love and feelings of belonging to resist peer pressure," said Ms. Scott, whose academic and work background include guidance and counseling. "Kids don't shoplift because they need the stuff, but mostly because they want the high — the excitement. Somebody talks them into it. They want to belong."

"If you have a real good relationship with your family and with God, then you have more tools to resist (temptation)," Ms Scott said.

Ms. Scott, who said she was "excited about Teen Court," observed that the program "could not have happened without the super, super" support of the young lawyers of Midland.

Kerr, who comes from a family of lawyers and is steeped in "countless hours of community service," was presented the annual Outstanding Young Lawyer Award. The 150 to 200 lawyers in the association are under age 37.

"This award really means a lot to me," said Kerr. "And things like Teen Court mean a lot to this town." And in Midland, he said, there are a "lot of good lawyers" and many who are unsung in their deeds and community service.

Kerr said the award is particularly meaningful to him, for it comes from his "peers and the folks I think the most of. It's not something you run for. It comes out of the blue."

Kerr is being nominated for the Texas Young Lawyer of the Year Award.

Among those who are recommending Kerr for the statewide honor are U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton and 318th Texas District Court Judge Barbara Culver.

New center will help small firms overcome obstacles

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Helping "socially and economically disadvantaged" small companies overcome obstacles and learn traditional business practices is the goal of a new center opening in the Midland-Odessa area within the next two weeks.

The Permian Basin Business Development Center will be formed from of a $240,000 contract awarded by the U.S. Department of Commerce's Minority Business Development Agency to a Midland self-employed financial consultant, Ramon Chapa.

"We are to help socially and economically disadvantaged small businesses. We're not necessary for minorities, but we suspect most of our clients will be Hispanics and blacks," Chapa said.

Some major problems facing small businesses is that they have not established traditional banking relations and their records are usually not "up to par," Chapa said.

"If you were here four or five years ago, a lot of small businesses succeeded in spite of themselves.

"Now you really have to be astute in certain business procedures in order to make a profit and stick around," he said.

Forever-after love often elusive

Todd

This boy-girl thing is baffling.

Boy chases girl. Girl chases boy. Either way, drama ensues. And tears and heartbreak follow brief periods of unfettered and glorious joy. This forever-after love is elusive.

Here's the way it goes: Boy bears ahead at full steam. He's in rut but thinks he is "in love." All will be well once he has got the "dream of his life" all shackled up in a dream cottage in fantasy land. Or, girl pursues boy, converts her skirt into a red flag and waves Prince Charming down. Cinderella believes all will be well in her storybook romance once he is taken hostage.

Ah, how lovely is the sweet innocence and naivety of this thing called romantic love — an adventure in strained and unrestrained longings of the heart.

'Tis a wondrous thing, and, to quote English poet A.E. Housman on another form of intoxication, via ale: "And faith, 'tis pleasant till 'tis past: The mischief is that 'twill not last."

That's precisely when the crying begins.

Oh, for how long must the heart be tried and tried again before "true love" finally binds a loving couple together in love forever.

Who knows the magic formula and the attraction that joins one to another?

Many there are who know not. The players in divorce court can testify to that over and over. Many toss the dice of romance again and again in the same old way and expect different results. That is a form of insanity: Repeating the same mistakes and expecting different results.

Disappointment looms in this game of romance when the players "write the script," sincerely and unrealistically expect their love life to follow a preconceived notion, and are indignant, disappointed and heartbroken when their romantic life goes into orbit and out of their control.

Every heartbroken soul sings for awhile, "Boohoo. I keep a'crying over you."

And soon, or sometime thereafter, the pain and the crying and the sighing will subside. And excitement — the wondrous feelings of romance — will appear again in dreams and in life. And the heartbreak cycle will repeat itself. That's reason enough for crying.

Boohoo.

"And nothing now remained to do," says Housman, "But begin the game anew."

'Build Texas' clears panel in Senate

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's "Build Texas" program, a major bond package that supporters say will create jobs and build needed projects, cleared a Senate panel Wednesday without opposition.

The Senate State Affairs Committee approved the bills and proposed constitutional amendments that would give a bond board the authority to issue as much as $1.1 billion in notes for public works and water projects.

Hobby and other Senate leaders said the bond program will put Texans to work, primarily in construction jobs, while providing financing for projects such as prisons, sewer systems and water development.

Besides the Hobby package, the panel also approved a proposed constitutional amendment that would allow the bond board to issue up to $300 million for agriculture and marketing projects.

The panel also passed a bill that would authorize up to $1 billion in bonds in the case Texas lands the lucrative superconducting super collider, a high-tech federal research center commonly referred to as the atom smasher.

MATTOX

And while the Midland Independent School District does not offer sex education classes, Mattox said, "I would hope we're becoming enlightened enough in our society to solve this major problem."

He added, "I do not intend to teach sex education, but nobody's teaching about the legal responsibilities."

Mattox also put in a plug Wednesday requesting volunteers for his local child support office. The Midland attorney general's office covers a 26-county area with a staff of seven. An increase in local staff persons is unlikely unless the Legislature increases funding, Mattox said.

Mattox claimed his regional offices can only handle 25 percent of all the state's child support enforcement cases because the Legislature "pirates" $13 million of his $20 million budget to give to the Department of Human Services.

"Were the Legislature to be smart, they would restore the money to us," he said.

The less money spent on child support enforcement, the more taxpayers end up spending by supporting mothers on welfare, Mattox said.

CENTER

Charging $10 an hour, Chapa and two partners with teach business savvy to local small company owners. They also will assist business people in acquiring loans and getting state and federal bids.

Unlike the Permian Basin Bid Center which offers bidding opportunies, the Development Center will also have a procurement specialist to assist business people prepare bids.

"A major problem is they bid on the government contract and once they have the contract they don't know how to interpret it," Chapa said.

Once a contract is awarded, many small businesses have problems getting bonded, he said. A bond is an insurance policy guaranteeing that if the company doesn't do the work, another company will be found to complete the job.

The bonding industry has begun to issue bonds more strictly, he observed, a fact that has made obtaining bonds more difficult for the average business person.

However, through "private surety" companies, the development center will help business people receive the bonding, Chapa said.

For more information about the center contact Chapa at 683-6152. Chapa is still searching for an office location, but said he hopes to locate near the Midland Regional Airport.

■Respite care desperately needed for ailing older adults. Visiting briefly and perhaps even sharing an evening meal a few times a week would be an invaluable supplemental service for some low-income citizens.

■Calling all creative people! Help local agencies tap into the creative resources of the community by directing them to use their gifts and talents to some very worthwhile causes.

■Improve your journalism skills. Volunteer needed to assist editor in researching, writing, and distributing monthly or quarterly agency newsletter. Your creative writing ideas will be a plus to the agencies!

■Life is too difficult to handle sometimes, we know. A local agency is looking for people with mental health training or experience to assist them in helping parents to stop abusing their children. Your sensitivity is appreciated.

■Come join the team! Two agencies need assistance with public relations, recruiting of volunteers, making oral presentations concerning agency philosophy and programs. This is a perfect way to gain exposure in the community, develop your public speaking skills, and learn Midland's community resources.

■Children of single-parent families are in need of role models. Won't you have a few hours a week to take a child to a ball game, bowling, swimming, or just to be a "best friend?" Your leadership is desperately needed.

■New dance organization needs space to rehearse. This group, made up of professional women who want to help the community, meets in the evenings and is in desperate need of a place with wooden floors for practice.

■Caring people like you are needed for a program that assists single-parent families. You, with your leadership abilities, are needed as a positive role model.

■Research assistant needed for local agency's fund-raising efforts. Research creative and professional community resources. Help some agencies remain to help others.

■Make a difference in someone's life. Sensitive, caring people needed to help with disadvantaged, handicapped and emotionally disturbed adults. Local agency staff needs assistance with one-on-one direct client contact. Do you have a few hours weekly to help with transportation, recreational sports, or general office responsibilities? Make a difference!

■Children in foster care need you. Volunteers are needed to assist caseworkers with shopping, transportation to and from doctor's appointments, or just holding a child's hand while he is hospitalized. Your sensitivity can help these special children.

Volunteers make a difference! We want your volunteer experience to be a positive one, as you help us enhance and extend the very important services of our Midland community. We trust that you will experience meaningful personal growth and reward from your participation as part of the Midland Volunteer Center. Sharing is caring. Thank you for caring.

For more information on how you can volunteer or on how your agency can join the Volunteer Center, call 684-5866.

Investigators said a small amount of cocaine and marijuana were confiscated after the arrest.

Midland police are investigating the theft of a public address system from a local church.

Police said a 150-watt stereo with speakers, total value $500, two 100-watt speakers, total value $100, a cassette deck valued at $500, an amplifier valued at $300, microphones valued totally at $300, and a mixer/-amplifier valued at $300 were stolen from the Cuthbert Avenue Baptist Church, 3308 W. Cuthbert.

Crime Stoppers seeks robbery suspect's identity

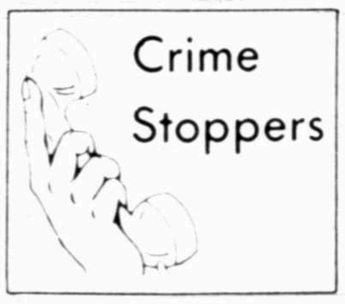
Crime Stoppers is asking for help identifying a robbery suspect who could be responsible for three armed robberies last month in Midland.

The first robbery occurred at the ClothesTime clothing store on March 11. Eight days later, the man struck again at the Desert Inn Motel.

The third robbery occurred March 29 at Taco Bell on South Midkiff Road. Shortly before closing, an employee at the fast food restaurant heard a door squeak, and when she looked up, she saw a "nicely-dressed" black man, wearing a stocking mask, standing behind a counter.

The victim said the man held a small gun in his right coat pocket. The suspect then pulled a grocery bag from his left pocket and demanded it be filled with cash.

All three robbery victims described the black man as five feet six to five feet eight inches tall, 200 pounds, between 30 to 40 years old, wearing a sports coat. In two of the robberies, investigators said he kept his hand in the right coat pocket, as if he was armed. The man also brought his own grocery bag, police said.



Anyone with information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the suspect could receive a $1,000 cash reward. Crime Stoppers in Midland can be reached at 694-TIPS, and in Odessa at 333-TIPS.

Culver said Kerr has a "reputation as one you can call on to help out."

Incoming officers of the Midland County Young Lawyers Association are Robert Rendall, president; Bill Ward, vice president, and Terry Rhoads, secretary-treasurer. Out-going officers are Randy Turner, president; Mona Lyman, vice president and Harper Estes, secretary-treasurer.

Once tolerant Dutch find 'free' sex, drugs, bicycles too expensive

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent
The Hearst Newspapers

AMSTERDAM — The Dutch have had it with the permissive society and the drug culture of which they were the proud pioneers 15 years ago.

"Free sex, free drugs and free bicycles," the '70s' anthem of a country that gloried in its avant-garde standard of tolerance, has a bitter and hollow ring nowadays.

Amsterdam, the European, if not the world, capital of druggies and dropouts, still has more than its share.

But public attitudes towards them have radically changed.

In nationwide elections two months ago, the drug issue, linked to alarmingly rising crime and insecurity, formed the major debating point for the victorious Conservative coalition.

The Conservative parties' demand for a clampdown on the wide-open drug traffic was wholeheartedly endorsed by the Roman Catholic hierarchy.

That might seem unexceptional anywhere else. But not in the Netherlands where churchmen had adopted a pattern of theological and social postures in keeping with the national view that practically any form of individual behavior was acceptable and not to be interfered with.

"There's no doubt that people are thoroughly disillusioned," said Hans-Gualthery Van Weezel, a Christian Democrat member of parliament. "Even the radicals want a cleanup."

He recalled that when he was first elected 10 years ago it would have been "worth my political life to criticize the permissive society, even mildly. To talk then about sending anyone to prison for committing a crime was to be instantly labeled a fascist."

Now, the prisons are so full that there is literally no more space.

Maurice Jelk, an editor of Het Parool, Amsterdam's leading "liberal" newspaper, explained that, in a growing number of cases, judges have had to let dangerous criminals off with suspended sentences simply because there were no cells to put them in.

The bitter fruit of our tolerant, open society has been a 35 per cent rise in murder and rape in just four years and almost uncontrollable lesser crime," he said.

More than 49,000 burglaries were recorded last year in Amsterdam alone. Auto thefts have become so commonplace that most car owners now ride around with notices announcing "no radio, nothing of valuable inside."

When, in the early '70s, the city of Amsterdam put a couple of thousand municipal bicycles on the streets for everyone's use free-of-charge, it was reported in newspapers around the world.

The famed "white bikes" have long since disappeared. Last year, Amsterdam citizens reported 8,600 of their bicycles stolen.

Nacogdoches mayor pushes team effort

NACOGDOCHES, Texas (AP) — In 1977, Judy McDonald was elected to her first term as a member of the Nacogdoches city commission.

Today, 10 years later, Mrs. McDonald is the first woman mayor of the oldest town in Texas.

"This city's success will have to be the result of a team effort," said Mrs. McDonald, who became mayor earlier this month when she was elected chairman of the city commission. "It can't be just one member of the commission. It can't be just the mayor, or management or just one board. We have to work in tandem."

The new mayor sees the creation of jobs as the commission's number one goal.

"We've got to work together for economic development — helping local industry expand. That's our number one goal. Secondly, I think we need to concentrate on development of tourism."

During her first two years as a member of the city commission, Mrs. McDonald says, she kept a diary.

"It wasn't a diary of what I did or anything like that," she said, "but just a record of the calls and questions I received. Eighty percent of the calls were from people outside my ward. I think that shows that you can't get hung up on trying to do things just for the people who reside in your ward."

As mayor, Mrs. McDonald says she will keep her open door policy, serving the people from all parts of the city.

"When this is all over with, I'd like for the people of Nacogdoches to be able to say about me that I never worried about WHO a person was that they called or who they represented or in which area of the city they lived," she said.

"I want to be known for having recognized the problem and having gotten on with the solution."

"Being the first woman mayor was never particularly significant to me," said Mrs. McDonald. "I never really wanted to be the first female to do anything."

She has another distinction on the commission — a custom-made stool under the commissioners' table.

"The chairs we sit in are huge," says Mrs. McDonald, who stands three-quarters of an inch over 5 feet tall.

"I'd sit in those chairs and have trouble seeing over the table. So I sat with my feet in the chair so I'd be taller. It was pretty uncomfortable, since my feet didn't touch the floor.

"The rest of the commissioners always teased me because I always had my shoes off. I told them the reason was that I had to sit with my feet in my chair because my feet didn't touch the floor."

Her predecessor as mayor, A.L. Mangham Jr., had a stool special made for Mrs. McDonald so that she'd have a place to rest her feet.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You now find the peace and quiet you have been seeking. Fresh ideas and more practical operational procedures can make this a banner year for you. Guard your financial resources from other people's excesses. Your eyes may be bigger than your bank account on occasion. Children brighten your days. A pet plays a role in the way you decide a career matter.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Author Joseph Heller, singer Rita Coolidge, actor Glenn Ford, longtime "Tonight" host Jack Parr, John Diehl of "Miami Vice," jockey Steve Cauthen, singer Judy Collins, WWII Gen. Mark Clark, singer Kate Smith.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You find a way to trim expenses that will not slow down your social life. Solid career gains depend on your being in the right place at the right time. Get out more.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Things go your way today. Use the telephone before 8 a.m. for best results. Self-reliance and an enterprising spirit win you a second chance. Romance plays a key role in your life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Get a financial situation onto firm ground now. Procrastination could leave you facing a really serious challenge. A personal relationship cannot last if it is built on fantasy. Face the truth.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is time to pull up your socks and move forward on your own. Spending time outdoors refreshes your mind, body and soul. Open up to a family member. Maintain a positive attitude.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not backslide about something that could have long-range ramifications for you and your business. A money matter offers a clever solution. Seize it and you can relax this weekend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are in your element today. A relationship responds well to change. Financial questions are answered in a way that lets you breathe easier. Look forward to a fun evening. Romance beckons.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A heart-to-heart chat with mate or partner will get the day off to a splendid start. You may have to settle for modest gains if you insist on working behind the scenes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Heartfelt communication will work wonders today. Let the important people in your life know exactly where you stand. Creative and artistic ventures will bring you top dollar. Discuss marketing questions with an expert.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A flow of adrenalin gives your work efforts a hefty boost. An important work or romantic relationship continues to improve. Others look to you for guidance. Become more of a leader.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A career or business investment begins to pay off in a big way. Put money in the bank for that rainy day. Spend a special evening with your one and only.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A sudden change of plan will work to your advantage. Do not set problems in motion by asking too many questions. An old flame re-enters your life. Go slow. Little has changed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Expressing your opinions loudly may be satisfying, but a quiet discussion will accomplish much more. Friends continue to add fun to your evenings. Keep entertainment costs down. Share expenses with close pals.

The bidding:

4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♣

Strange are the ways of bridge players. Making life easy for partner is a virtue to be cultivated; doing so for the opponents is a habit to be shunned. We are indebted for this hand to Fred Neuerberger of New York, which appeared in the American Contract Bridge League's District 4 Newsletter.

South's jump to four spades was rather on the aggressive side. However, he judged that all of his partner's points were likely to be working because of the club overcall, and he was afraid that a bid of three spades would sound as though he were merely competing.

West led a low club and East tried three rounds of the suit. Declarer ruffed with the nine, and it was readily apparent that, to land the vulnerable game, he had to hold his trump losers to one. Obviously, the key card is the jack of trumps. Declarer displayed exemplary technique by crossing to dummy with a diamond to lead a trump. Those defenders who blindly obey the dictum "second hand low" would now be headed for the poorhouse. South's king would win, and he would cross to the table with the queen of hearts to lead another trump. No matter what East played, declarer could not go wrong.

Those defenders who see nothing wrong in giving declarer a headache would rise with the ace on the first trump lead and continue with a fourth club. Declarer would ruff high, get back to the board with a red-suit card and lead another trump. When East now produces a low trump, declarer has to guess whether to play for the drop or finesse. If he is human, he is more than likely to go wrong in view of East's marked length in clubs.

Penn to surrender or be arrested

Penn

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Sean Penn must surrender by Friday or be arrested for allegedly punching an extra during shooting of "Colors."

"He needs to surrender by noon Friday," city attorney's spokesman Mike Qualls said Wednesday. Bail for Penn, who lives in Malibu with his wife, the entertainer Madonna, has been set at $5,000.

Lisa Kafteler, publicist for Penn, said there would be no comment from the 26-year-old actor, who was charged in an April 24 arrest warrant with violating terms of his probation set in connection with an assault.

Penn became enraged when Jeffrey Klein, 32, began taking snapshots of him and co-star Robert Duvall during a break April 2, Qualls said. "Mr. Penn swore at Mr. Klein, spat at him, Klein spat back and Mr. Penn, with a closed fist, struck Mr. Klein several times and had to be restrained by several people."

Starr

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Former Beatle Ringo Starr partied on the Mississippi River and said he wasn't upset about a newspaper article that irked some fans.

The opinion-page column last month in The Commercial Appeal noted how a visiting Beatle doesn't set off mobs of screaming teen-agers like those that followed the British rock group in the 1960s.

The column upset music producer Chips Moman, who gathered about 50 protesters to march in front of the newspaper building.

"I've been in the game too long now to worry about what anyone's saying," Starr said at a party Tuesday aboard a riverboat. He said also he hadn't read the article and that 16 tracks for his new album were cut at Moman's studio.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Maria Conchita Alonso says she was on the fast track as a teen-ager and had a big letdown before returning to fame.

She currently is in "Extreme Prejudice" as a nightclub singer caught in a feud between Texas ranger Nick Nolte and antagonist Powers Boothe.

Miss Alonso was named Miss Teen-Ager of Venezuela at 15 and, later, Miss Teen-Ager of the World. By 19, she had a record out and was in a Latin American soap opera. Then she came to the United States in 1982.

"I was real bad in auditions. I mean, I got turned down all the time," she said.

Less than a year later, she had a role in "Moscow on the Hudson." Now, she has two records coming out and soon will appear in Arnold Schwarzenegger's film "Running Man."

"I keep fighting," she said recently. "Some people start to say, 'Oh, forget it, I'll work as a waitress.' I never said 'Forget it.'"

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gilbert Becaud, a French singer and composer who has sold 50 million albums and written 400 songs, says he enjoys the anonymity he has in the United States.

"I'm free here," he said recently while preparing for today's opening of his first musical. "Nobody says hello to me in the street. It's like I'm wearing a mask."

Becaud isn't known in the United States for his singing as much as for his compositions, including "What Now My Love," "September Morn" and "It Must Be Him."

Becaud is in Los Angeles for his "Roza," opening today at the Mark Taper Forum. "Roza" tells of an aging prostitute who raises castoff children of other prostitutes in a down-and-out section of Paris.

Newman

ASHFORD, Conn. (AP) — Paul Newman's camp for seriously ill children is having money problems because of unfulfilled pledges.

Organizers once estimated that $2 million to $3 million had been raised since Newman announced plans for the camp in September. But fund-raiser Nancy Kerr said the amount was actually $600,000 to $800,000.

"Because of the construction schedule, we may not be able to open for limited operations as we had planned," she said Tuesday. "But there will be some sort of opening ceremony in the summer."

Profits from Newman's Own Foods are expected to provide half the funding and the rest must be from private sources under tax rules.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Grand Ole Opry humorist Jerry Clower is writing his third book, "Life Everlaughter," his agent says.

The collection of Clower's observations on life will be published this October by Rutledge Hill Press of Nashville, agent Tandy Rice said Wednesday.

Other books by Clower, of Yazoo City, Miss., are "Ain't God Good!" and "Let the Hammer Down."

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Ted Lange isn't forgetting tough times he's had and is sponsoring a contest next month to help aspiring actors.

Lange, who plays bartender Isaac Washington on television's "The Love Boat," sports around in a burgundy Mercedes-Benz with the license plate "ROCBOTM."

"That's where I started," he said recently, recalling cockroach-infested apartments in New York while he struggled to find work.

Feminists surface in Iceland politics

By MARCUS ELIASON

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — A general election has thrust an unusual alliance of feminists into Iceland's political foreground and put in doubt whether a stable government is possible.

No clear candidate for prime minister has emerged from the April 25 balloting, and there is no knowing which parties will form a coalition government. Bargaining could take weeks.

The issues that will dictate the makeup of the next government are largely domestic, but Iceland's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the big American military base here could come into play.

The disarray is in sharp contrast to the machine-like efficiency this north Atlantic island nation of 243,000 displayed last October when it last was in the international spotlight as host to the U.S.-Soviet summit.

Two factors have triggered what outgoing Prime Minister Steingrimur Hermannsson called "this incredible chaos."

A breakaway faction formed by a disgraced former Cabinet minister has decimated the outgoing coalition's seats in Parliament, and the feminist Women's Alliance has doubled its support to command a possible power-broker role.

A variety of permutations are possible for cobbling together a coalition from among the six parties that won seats in the 63-member Althing, or parliament. But each combination could carry the seeds of its own destruction.

An Analysis

Hermannsson's Progressive Party and the larger Independence Party are sure to head the next coalition, but with only 31 seats they need a third party's support. Three-party coalitions rarely have lasted long in Iceland.

The main parties are shunning the seven-seat Citizens' Party, founded by former Independence Party member Albert Gudmundsson after he was fired as industry minister following allegations of a petty income tax evasion.

The Social Democratic Party, with 10 seats, would seem a logical partner but it says it cannot work with the Progressive Party. It wants to join with the Independence Party and the left-wing People's Alliance, which has eight seats. But the People's Alliance is so factionally divided that analysts see them as unlikely to agree on joining any sort of coalition.

At this point, frazzled party strategists start looking toward a rundown former dosshouse in central Reykjavik where the Women's Alliance is headquartered.

Here a group of radical feminists, career women, housewives, grandmothers and unmarried mothers with babies in tow gather daily to debate what to do with their newfound parliamentary clout.

With six seats in Parliament, this all-female movement springs from an Icelandic tradition of feminine self-sufficiency.

It is determined to maintain its grassroots appeal and sisterly egalitarianism. It insists it has no leader, shuns behind-the-scenes politicking and is frank about its demands: better pay and status for women, more day-care centers for working mothers and cheaper housing for young couples.

It also has a vaguely defined but fervently stated belief in world disarmament and the removal of Iceland from military alliances.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Bombs hits Greek offices

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A bomb exploded outside the Greek subsidiary of a U.S. chemical company in suburban Athens early Thursday, one hour after simultaneous blasts at two government tax offices, police said.

The explosion at the offices of Union Carbide Hellas S.A. occurred at 12:10 a.m., breaking windows but causing no injuries, a police spokesman said.

No extremist group immediately claimed responsibility for the blast at the plant, which produces dry cell batteries and agricultural chemicals.

Earlier, two bombs exploded at the entrance to tax offices in the center of the Greek capital.

Pope to visit Germany

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II today begins a five-day trip to West Germany during which he plans to hold up two victims of Nazism as models for Roman Catholics.

The beatifications of a martyred Jewish-born nun and a priest, and a visit to the grave of a cardinal who defied Adolf Hitler's Third Reich will highlight the pontiff's 11-city tour.

"The witnesses of the past should become signs of hope for all of us," the pope told the German faithful in a television address last weekend.

John Paul, speaking in fluent German, recalled that as bishop of Krakow, Poland, he often visited the site of the nearby Auschwitz death camp and "repeately asked myself what the limits of human hatred are.".

But his decision to beatify Edith Stein, a Carmelite nun who was killed in Auschwitz, has sparked controversy. Some Jews have called it an insult to Judaism because she was born a Jew and converted to Catholicism.

Beatification is a step toward possible sainthood.

U.S. citizenship noted

MOSCOW (AP) — An American woman married to a Soviet man said Wednesday that Soviet authorities had recognized the U.S. citizenship of their baby, ending fears that the infant might not be allowed to leave the country.

Susan Graham, of Spokane, Wash., said Soviet officials stamped "foreign national" on her 4-month-old daughter's U.S. passport Tuesday and granted the infant exit papers for a weekend trip with her mother to Sweden.

The passport stamping ended a month and a half of uncertainty over whether Soviet authorities would acknowledge the U.S. citizenship of Emily Ann Finkel, who was born in Spokane, or maintain that she was a Soviet national.

"We insisted that she was an American who must be registered," Ms. Graham said in a telephone interview. "It's been a long, drawn-out process, and we've been chasing around in circles for six weeks."

Ms. Graham's husband, Matvey Finkel, is a Soviet citizen who has been denied permission to emigrate since they were married in December 1979.

Microwave meal: Sometimes wait is all the fun

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

I have always appreciated the finer qualities of frozen pot pies.

OK, so they aren't fancy, but they are inexpensive and they are tasty and they most certainly are easy.

Besides, when I was a kid, pot pies were the first things I learned how to "cook" for myself, so there's a certain amount of nostalgia involved here.

Anyway, I've never outgrown my love for these little frozen meals — beef, chicken or turkey stew (my favorite used to be tuna, but I guess they don't make tuna pot pies anymore) surrounded by pie crust.

So when I heard about Pillsbury's Microwave Classic Casseroles — which is a fancy name for pot pies designed to be cooked in a microwave oven — I couldn't wait to try one. (Of course, the fact that I am still having fun playing with my new microwave oven had absolutely nothing to do with wanting to try these frozen casseroles. Right.)

The usual taste-testers checked out the variety made with "breast of chicken" for taste, price and advertising accuracy. I must admit, though, that the taste-testers aren't quite the pot pie fanatics I am, though the teenager likes them sometimes.

Microwave Classic Casseroles are also made with beef or turkey.Our chicken one contained "sauce, pastry, chicken, vegetables," according to its label.

Besides the usual carrots, the casserole contained broccoli and mushrooms, but no potatoes, though. According to its ingredient label, it also contained sodium hexametaphosphate, monoglycerides, disodium inosinate, hydrogenated lard and hydroxypropyl methylcellulose. I'm sure chemists know what all that means, but I don't.

The nutrition label claims the product (each 8.3-ounce box is a single serving) contains 380 calories and 30 percent of the protein and niacin, 25 percent of the phosphorus, 20 percent of the vitamin A, 15 percent of the vitamin C, 10 percent of the calcium and 8 percent of the thiamin, riboflavin and iron suggested in the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance. It also contains 980 mg sodium and 20 g fat, both of which are nutritional no-no's for many consumers.

Ordinary pot pies in their little aluminum pans are usually about 7- or 8-ounces each and cost between 34 cents and 79 cents each, depending on the brand (10-ounce "chunky" pot pies cost about $1.09).

But Classic Casseroles are made for the microwave, and the savings in time is made up for by the increase in cost — Classic Casseroles cost $2.09 each. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Label advertising — like label advertising everywhere — just glows: "Classic Casseroles are just right anytime you're hungry and in a hurry. Each casserole is prepared with our finest ingredients, all in a perfectly seasoned sauce. And each Classic Casserole is topped off with a light and flaky crust. You'd never believe something this golden brown could come from a microwave!"

Pot pie connoisseur that I am, I couldn't wait to taste the casserole — and I should have, because the wait turned out to be better than the taste.

The "light and flaky crust" made up most of the casserole and the "perfectly seasoned sauce" tasted like it was made with an ordinary chicken boullion cube — complete with that metallic taste boullion cubes have.

The small children rejected the whole thing. I picked out the pieces of chicken and vegetables and gave the rest to the dogs.

I'll stick to regular pot pies, even though they take longer to prepare. I guess some things are worth the wait.

Insulating saves energy

Associated Press

A sharp knife, a straight-edge, a pair of work gloves, a ruler and safety glasses are the only tools needed for a home improvement project that can help lower year-round fuel bills, according to an expert on energy efficiency.

The energy-saving project — insulating the attic — is one of several weekend home improvements that also will increase the resale value of a home, says Michael Krach, vice president of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp.

"Insulation is one of the biggest energy savers a home can have," says Krach. "As a general rule, if you don't have five inches of insulation in your attic, your home is probably below recommended levels."

Krach advises the best way to determine the energy efficiency of a house is to get a professsional energy audit, which he says many utilities provide at little or no cost. Homeowners also can conduct their own audit.

Insulating the attic, he notes, has been cited by the federal Department of Energy as one way heat loss can be be cut significantly. Installing insulation is a matter of measuring the area to be insulated, cutting the material to fit and laying it between the joists or structual framing members.

Other home improvement projects Krach says can be completed in just one weekend include insulating the water heater, weatherstripping, caulking, insulating air ducts and sealing the attic entrance.

When insulating the attic, Krach advises, care must be taken not to block eave vents at the edges of the attic, and to keep insulation at least three inches from recessed light fixtures.

With water heaters, he notes, homeowners should be careful not to cover any controls on the tank. Those with gas water heaters are advised to use insulation retrofit kits available at building supply and hardware stores, and to be sure to keep the insulation away from the pilot light at the bottom of the heater.

Weatherstripping can cut down on drafts and reduce the infiltration of moisture, noise, dust and dirt, while caulking is used to plug small openings or cracks in the structure of the house.

Ductwork should be properly sealed and insulated to prevent loss of heated air from a furnace or cooled air from an air conditioner.

According to Krach, one of the most vulnerable areas to heat loss in a house is the attic entrance, and he suggests building a topless box or collar around the opening.

Some insect control 'experts' operate door-to-door scheme

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

It's unwise to assume everything you see creeping and scurrying around your house and yard is up to no good.

Although more than 86,000 species of insects have been identified in North America, making up about 85 percent of all living creatures on the continent, only about 1 percent can hurt you and damage or destroy your belongings.

Don't classify something as a pest unless it causes trouble.

Beware of door-to-door pest control "experts" who have a magic formula to rid your home or yard of pests.

The magic formula usually consists of an insecticide and laundry detergent. The salesman may try to scare you into authorizing immediate and costly treatments to prevent the collapse of ceilings or floors.

The Better Business Bureau offers the following tips:

- Ask to see his license. Texas has a pesticide use and applicator law under which commercial pest control firms must operate.
- Before you sign a contract be sure you know the terms.
- If someone says you have termites, get another opinion.
- Ask for customer references.
- If a sizeable amount of money is involved, do not hesitate to get bids from several pest control companies.

If you wish to obtain a list of pest control companies that are members of the BBB, or for information on how to select a pest control sevice, call 1-800-592-4433.

Knowledge, common sense violent weather protection

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

As the season for violent weather approaches, it's time to think about the consequences of power outages. You can use candles when the lights go out, and batteries for the radio; but what can you do about the food in your freezer?

The first thing you can do is find out how long it will be out. If it's anything less than a day or two, don't worry. Freezers are well insulated and each item of frozen food acts as a block of ice that keeps surrounding food cool. A well-stocked freezer should stay frozen two days. A half-stocked freezer should last a day. While the freezer does not have electrical power, keep it closed as much as possible. Each time you open the door, warm air rushes in, reducing the freezer's effectiveness.

If the power will be off for a few days, you should try to divide up the food among your friends' freezers or possibly rent space in a commercial freezer or cold storage plant.

In case of emergency, try putting dry ice in your freezer, with caution. Dry ice should never be touched with your hands because it freezes everything it touches and you could sustain burns.

If you use dry ice, put a layer of cardboard over the freezer items and put the ice on top of that. This should keep your food cold for a few days.

When the power returns, the food should be checked carefully. You may safely refreeze meat or poultry that still contains crystals. If the meat and poultry are only cool feeling, you should cook them immediately. Throw out any food that has even a slightly unusual color or odor.

As the storm season approaches, arm yourself with knowledge and common sense. You and your food may last longer.

Credit 'repair' companies' offers inaccurate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Companies offering to "repair" poor credit ratings seem to be increasingly common, but government and business experts urge caution in considering such services.

The offer of a credit fix may seem attractive, but in many cases the company may not be able to deliver on its promises, warn both the Federal Trade Commission and Associated Credit Bureaus Inc.

The repair offers are aimed at people who have problems getting credit because of some problem in their past.

According to the sales pitch, the company can find out what the problem is and get it corrected. However, these businesses cannot do anything that the average consumer can't do alone, the Trade Commission observes.

Several states have passed laws restricting these so-called credit clinics and others are considering regulations.

"Although the legislation regulating credit repair companies is certainly well-founded and desperately needed, consumers with credit problems of any kind would be a lot better off simply taking matters into their own hands and either calling the local credit bureau or going directly to the nearest office of the non-profit consumer counseling service," said Walter R. Kurth, head of the Associated Credit Bureaus.

The consumer who is denied credit has a right to be told why, and if the information that resulted in credit denial is wrong, the credit bureau has to correct it.

If the information is true, however, neither the consumer nor a credit repair company can get it changed.

"If you have been late paying your bills during the last 7 years, the law permits the credit bureau to tell creditors about your history of late payments. Bankruptcy may be reported for 10 years. That is the law," says the FTC.

"If anyone tells you that they can remove negative but accurate items from your file, they are making promises that they cannot keep," the agency adds.

The consumer's first step is to ask why credit was denied. If it was because of a report from a credit bureau, the consumer has the right to be told the name and address of that credit bureau.

And if contacted within 30 days of credit being denied, the bureau must disclose the information in its file on that consumer, at no charge.

If any of the information in the file is wrong, complain. Under the law, the credit bureau must investigate, and anything that it cannot double-check must be dropped from the file.

Folks facing a seemingly overwhelming pile of bills may want to seek credit counseling, but in most areas this service is available at little or no charge.

There is also the non-profit Consumer Credit Counseling Service with offices in 44 states which can help set up a realistic budget and arrange repayment plans. The service is listed in the white pages of phone books or can be contacted through the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, 8701 Georgia Ave., Silver Spring, Md., 20910.

Spring water making waves

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — "Penn State" has been splashed across T-shirts, baseball caps and toilet seats.

Now, get ready for a splash of "Penn State Spring Water."

After an intensive search for a sparkling spring, Edward J. Lauth III of State College has started a company to bottle spring water carrying the Penn State name. AquaPenn Spring Water Co. is the latest entry into the $1.5 billion bottled water market.

The 32-year-old Lauth, a real estate developer who arrived in State College about eight years ago, devoted one and a half years to searching for The Water.

Forget the divining rod. He pored over topographical maps in the Centre County Courthouse and other courthouses in surrounding counties. He ran advertisements in newspapers asking spring owners to contact him. Lauth says he researched every source of water in Central Pennsylvania.

One by one, he rated the springs on four criteria: The spring had to be easily accessible. The water had to be clean. The spring had to be available for lease or purchase. The spring had to have a good flow.

After months, he found The Spring.

Lauth will not reveal the site of the spring. But he did say it was 15 miles away from State College in Huntingdon County.

Dog robs butcher shop

TELFORD, England (AP) — Bob Holmes said a German shepherd has nipped meat from his butcher shop twice and he thinks to dog was trained to steal because it delivered one batch to a car.

The dog grabbed a 5-pound bag of sausages from a display table outside and an employee gave chase to no avail. It returned the next day, snatched a tray of pork chops from the same table and ran to a waiting car.

Holmes said in his shop at Telford, central England: "A woman got out, took the pork chops and was driven off by the man at the wheel with the dog running after the car. I was amazed. If this goes on I'll have to think of employing a guard dog to catch the dog."

Inspector Terry Lowe of Telford Police said the dog appeared to have looked over the display before choosing the chops. "The dog was seen to go past the butcher's several times before it snatched the chops," he said.

'Tax-qualified' retirement plans worthwhile

Associated Press

If you are a sole proprietor or a business partner, don't let the paperwork required for "tax-qualified" retirement plans scare you, says the Equitable Assurance Society of the U.S. Despite changes made by the new tax law, these plans can still be good tools for building substantial retirement wealth on a tax-favored basis. That's because they still offer two favorite tax advantages: deductions and deferrals.

DEAR ABBY

New husband waltzes away with estate

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our mother, at age 79 — after having been a lonely widow for 10 years — fell in love with her South American dancing instructor. Against the advice of her family and friends she married this smooth operator, who flattered her and made her feel "young, beautiful and desirable" (according to her). Mother was 80 and he was 39 at the time.

She died four months ago at the age of 85, leaving her three children a mere token. Her seven grandchildren were left a token as well. Everything else went to her husband of five years.

Of course we are contesting the will because of Mother's bizarre behavior these last six years. Also, we feel that this young opportunist took unfair advantage of a lonely, rich, gullible old woman.

Abby, when a will is contested, who usually wins? — B.J. AND F.

DEAR B.J. AND F.: The side with the best lawyer. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Our telephone number has been the same for over 30 years. I get calls from relatives of my husband that start out with demands like: "Let me talk to 'John,'" or, "Who is this?" I'm talking about a man and a woman who are college-educated and have put three children through college. They also do this to other people, who have asked me how it makes me feel to encounter such rudeness, so you can see it's not just me they are ill-mannered to.

Abby, please, for the benefit of everybody who does not know: What are the requirements of good etiquette for telephone courtesy? Sign me ... FEELING BETTER NOW

DEAR FEELING BETTER: For openers, the caller should identify him/herself immediately: "Hello, this is Sarah Harding. May I please speak to Minnie Zack?"

If the caller knows the party who has answered the phone, it's good manners to ask, "And how are you, Sam?"

It's bad manners to quiz the person who has answered the phone concerning the whereabouts of the person you are calling: "Where did Minnie go? And when do you expect her home?" Simply leave the message that you called and ask that she return your call.

If you realize too late that you have misdialed and reached a wrong number, don't hang up. Say, "Excuse me, please. I have a wrong number."

DEAR ABBY: I run a 50-room motel in the South. When a guest checks in, I always ask, "How many in your party?" Almost all of them say, "Just me." That would be fine if they would stop right there, but most of them will remark, "For now," or "Why, do you know someone?" I ask the question only because I charge $3 for an extra person.

How can I phrase the question without getting a smart-mouthed follow-up remark? — NO NAME IN THE SOUTH

DEAR NO NAME: Just tell them the room is $3 per extra person, and if they're expecting any additional heads to hit the pillow to please hand over $3 per head.

Mind 'managed' through foods

Copley News Service

If food is supposed to "fuel" you, then why do people feel sluggish after a heavy breakfast, lunch or dinner? Because they don't pay attention to what they eat, said Judith Wurtman in "Managing Your Mind and Mood Through Food."

The MIT food scientist says the brain manufactures both alertness chemicals and calming chemicals from certain foods we eat. For instance, protein-rich foods like lean meats and fish keep you alert and increase stamina during a pressure-packed day.

Device detects larvae movement in fruit

Copley News Service

A newly patented listening device can detect sounds of larvae hidden in grapefruit and other fruits above the din of a packinghouse.

The fruit rests on membranes like those used in doctors' stethoscopes. They, in turn, sit on a plastic tube that channels sound to a microphone for conversion to an electrical signal, which is then amplified and filtered so only the desired frequency is relayed to a computer.

Especially For Mom

Midland Reporter-Telegram
Thursday, April 30, 1987

A trash compactor helps keep the kitchen beautiful by eliminating unsightly trash containers, and Whirlpool trash compactors do the job efficiently and with style.

Trash compactors popular with mom

It was 1969 when the first major appliance in 30 years was introduced: the trash compactor. It offered a clean, convenient solution to dealing with unsightly household trash.

Since that daily chore so often falls on mom's shoulders, compactors have become a popular choice for a Mother's Day gift.

This appliance nearly compacts — with 2,000 pounds of pressure — and conceals several 30-gallon containers of trash into one neat package, shrinking a family's weekly trash to one-fourth its size. Operation costs are low; it costs a mere 25 cents a year to use it.

Today's compactors operate more quietly and efficently than the early models, and because consumers want it to help the kitchen look neat and stylish, it looks like a design element in the kitchen, complementing other appliances.

The compactors made by Whirlpool Corp., which invented the first compactor, feature drop-down side drawers, solid air freshners, removable start/on/off key lock, and rollers for easy installation.

High technology has improved top-of-the-line compactors, which offer a Dense Pack control to pack as much as 20 percent more trash into the bag, and Quiet Pack Sound Conditioning makes today's units the quietest ever built.

What does mom really want on her day?

How do you decide what mom really wants for Mother's Day? Here are a few gift suggestions that will show mom exactly how special she is to you.

The traditional Mother's Day dinner at her favorite restaurant is always welcome. The day after Mother's Day, though, it's back to the daily grind of putting dinner on the table for a hungry family.

You can give her a break from the usual routine, however, by catering a meal at home the week after Mother's Day. Gourmet food stores and an increasing number of restaurants prepare entire "meals to go."

Or if mom has a permanent sweet tooth, there are mail order houses that will deliver a different dessert to her door every month.

If you want a more lasting way to liven up her kitchen, consider General Electric's Spacemaker® color television with AM/FM radio.

It's a perfect companion for listening to the news or catching a favorite soap opera without abandoning what's in the oven.

The Spacemaker® color television mounts easily under kitchen cabinets, so it never takes up valuable counter space either. Once barbecue season arrives, the TV slides out of its bracket for easy portability and has a rechargeable battery pack for use indoors and out.

Pampering mom with a gift certificate for a facial, manicure or make-over at a local salon or department store would be a special treat.

If you're thinking of a bouquet of mom's favorite flowers, make it extra special by including a new vase to put them in.

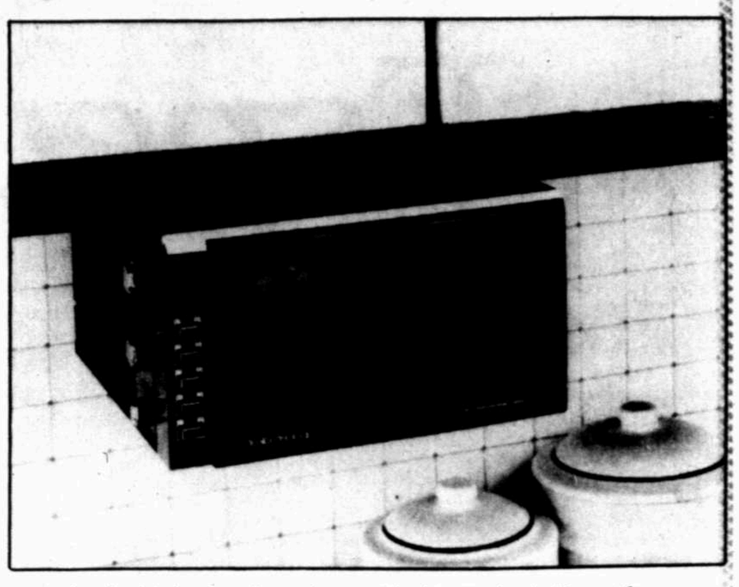
The vase will get lots of use if you remember to freshen up the bouquet regularly. She'll feel like it's Mother's Day all year long.

Pampering mom with a gift certificate for a facial, manicure or make-over at a local salon or department store would be a special treat.

Or if she's figure-conscious or determined to get into shape, a membership at a local spa or fitness salon might be a good idea.

Whatever you decide, the important thing to remember is how special the person you're shopping for is — try and make the gift just as special.

Even if it means a little more time and thought, when you see her smile on Mother's Day morning, you'll know it was worth it.



Make the kitchen a nicer place with this Mother's Day gift suggestion: General Electric's Spacemaker® color television. It provides entertainment without taking up valuable counterspace in the busiest room of the house.

Mom could use a 'hand' around house

Very few mothers enjoy cleaning, spring or otherwise. Even when mom says, "Oh, I don't mind it at all..." you know she'd much rather flick on Dynasty than vacuum the floor. Here are a few suggestions to give mom a special hand around Mother's Day. Show mom how much she means to the family by giving her a break from everyday cleaning chores. Include with her card a week's schedule of household cleaning jobs — all allotted to different family members.

It's a nice way to show mom she's not being taken for granted — and she's sure to enjoy the mini-vacation.

Give mom a new cleaning partner. The Dustbuster Power Brush® Cordless Vac, new from Black & Decker, is the perfect way to lighten dull cleaning tasks.

A fun-to-use gift that will be appreciated all year round, the Dustbuster Powr Brush® Cordless Vac includes a removable power nozzle with a rotating brush that provides powerful suction and deep cleaning action.

Mom will love its cordless convenience, and the way it tackles tricky cleaning jobs from carpeted stairs to pet hairs on upholstery.

Remember, one of the nicest gifts a mother can receive is to have someone call her "I don't mind cleaning" bluff. Even with mothers who never complain, these thoughtful and unusual gift ideas are sure to be hits.

A gift of peace and quiet...has always been a present any mom would prize. But the contemporary mother who's juggling career and family responsibilities seems to need it more then ever. That's why a luxurious lounge chair such as this stylish version from Riverside would make an especially fitting Mother's Day gift this year.

Say 'Mother' with personalized fine jewelry

May 10th is Mother's Day...one of the most sentimental days of the year, as we pause to recognize and reflect on the person who has had the most influence on our life...our mother.

The best way to express our deepest thanks and appreciation to our mothers this time of year can be frustrating, but Jewelers of America, the national organization dedicated to consumer information and education, has the perfect solution — a gift of fine jewelry.

After all, there is no gift more associated with love, sentiment, quality and lasting beauty than a gift created from precious metals and gemstones.

A very special way to say "mother" is to personalize her fine jewelry gift. Whether you select a karat gold ring with her initials in diamonds, or a gold pendant spelling out the word "mother" in block or script style letters, you are demonstrating a desire to individualize her gift, giving it deeper meaning for years to come.

Other suggestions include:

- Having mom's name engraved on a locket containing your photo;
- Having mom's first initial or full initials cut from single diamonds and set in a ring or pendant framed in black onyx and 14K gold;
- A sterling silver pin for hat or lapel that spells out "mother" or her name;
- A chain link bracelet with name centerpiece in diamond pave;
- A single pave diamond initial pendant in platinum to hang on a delicate platinum chain;
- A colored gemstone ring featuring the birthstones of all her children.

Where should you go to find the "perfect" personalized Mother's Day gift? JA urges you to go to a professional...your local jeweler whom you know and trust, and who has the widest selection of styles and prices, as well as the knowledge to answer your questions about fine jewelry.

If engraving is involved, he or she can give you a selection of styles from which to choose and more than likely do the job right on the store premises. Why entrust such an important purchase to a non-professional?

For more information about fine jewelry, write to Jewelers of America Inc., 1271 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10020. They will be happy to send you — free of charge — a series of brochures covering everything you want to know from "Buying a Diamond" to "Care and Cleaning of Fine Jewelry."

Mom's have right to time to themselves

Recognition that today's mom needs more time to herself than she's getting may be one of the best gifts a family could give this Mother's Day.

Statistics show that while busy women are managing to balance their dual roles, they have little or no time left for themselves.

Mothers — and psychologists — are beginning to voice concern about these all-work-and-no-play days. Yet most moms still find it difficult to justify the cutbacks that might be required to carve out an hour or so for themselves.

Sometimes it takes a nudge from caring family members to make a busy mom realize a little rest is everyone's right. An excellent way to get the message across is to give her her very own lounge chair this Mother's Day.

A femininely scaled and luxuriously upholstered chair such as this sumptuous style from Riverside Furniture Corporation can be a constant reminder that mothers have responsibilities to themselves as well as others.

Accompany the gift with a pledge not to disturb mom when she's using it, and you may well have the perfect Mother's Day present.

Labor-saving appliances necessity to working moms

Look at the statistics today. Well over half of all mothers with children under 18 are now working in jobs outside the home. And of all mothers, about 65 percent are running their households and working in commerce, industry and various professions.

Take a peek 10 years hence. It's estimated that fully 80 percent of all women — from about age 25 to 44 — will work outside the home.

It's proof that women will keep swelling the ranks of labor far into the next decade.

Even today, half of all the mothers with pre-school children work outside the home. That compares with just 15 percent only three decades ago.

And by the time we reach the 1990s it's estimated that half of all couples will have dual incomes.

When that many mothers are holding down two jobs — one outside and one inside the home — labor-saving appliances and devices won't just be a "nice" Mother's Day gift, but an absolute necessity.

You can get a jump on the future by anticipating what your mother might want most — a gift that will save time and labor around the house.

And you can select from something as elementary as a can opener to an under-the-counter microwave oven. The gamut of gift choices is just about as wide as one's imagination.

Want a couple more suggestions? Well, think about a sandwich toaster or a new automatic toaster that also serves as an oven for warming up ready-to-eat meals.

A favorite these days is the rechargeable "dust-picker-upper" which whisks away crumbs, lint, dust and other oddments that were once the bane of the happy housewife.

A very esoteric gift is a little device to lift champagne corks out in a "sec." No mess. No strain. No lost "bubbly." No kidding!

A good companion piece is a bottle capper that keeps the bubbles in champagne and other fizzing drinks for hours and days without the loss of taste or pleasure.

Other standby gifts which she may already have, but which now need updating, include an electric clock, a kitchen radio or television set, a pepper mill — there are many new types, some work with a one-hand squeeze — or an electric hot tray, if she's the entertaining type.

From sun to sun mom's work may never be done

It sounds strange, but it's true. Just about the time a lot of contented families wrap it up for the day, many of today's involved and working mothers start on their second job — that of running the household.

No matter how much of their burden has been eased by the marvels of modern appliances, pre-cooked food and streamlined interior decor, a house takes managing. And with over 60 percent of today's mothers working outside the home, the old eight or 10 hour day just isn't enough.

Can today's working mother have enough time for her children and be a true companion to her husband (unless he works beside her at home)? Is our concept of the American family togetherness a thing of the past, a way of life that has been so altered that it can never be the same?

One thing is for sure, the family structure is changing. A working mother is an informed mother; her exposure to current events and current practices fortifies her as a role model.

She can be more knowledgeable and sympathetic parent, aware of the pitfalls of today's environment and better equipped to guide her family through the complexities that mark our society.

And while it was once true that a dad would work from sun to sun but a mother's work was never done, now both mom and dad work from sun to sun and still their work is never done.

Available in a variety of styles, Mother's Day plates can serve as the perfect accent piece for virtually any decor. For example, the new issues shown here would beautifully complement settings as diverse as (clockwise from top left) traditional, contemporary, French provincial and Victorian.

Mother's Day plates 'beautiful, lasting reminder of devotion'

Tell mom "I love you" with style this year by giving her a Mother's Day plate: A beautiful and lasting reminder of devotion. There's one to enhance any decor, whether it's modern, traditional or something in-between.

Mother's Day plates are limited-edition collector's plates designed especially for Mother's Day. The first such plate — "Dogs and Puppies" — was issued in 1969 by the famous Danish porcelain house, Bing & Grondahl.

Since that time, almost 500 different Mother's Day plates have been issued conveying every conceivable image of motherhood in a wide variety of styles.

This year's new issues, for example, include plates that would fit beautifully into such diverse decors as country, colonial, modern or French provincial.

"Grandma's Surprise," the 12th plate in the Rockwell Society of America Mother's Day series, would make a wonderful addition to any home decorated in country or colonial style.

Produced by the Edwin M. Knowles China Co. for the society, the plate features Norman Rockwell artwork which first appeared in Household Magazine in 1928.

Dominated by warm, subdued browns and reds, this homey, nostalgic scene shows a kindly grandmother delighting her grandson and granddaughter by sprinkling raisins on their morning oatmeal.

"Spring's New Life," the first plate in a new Mother's Day series from the German porcelain house of Konigszelt Bayern, offers an alternative for mothers with more contemporary taste in interior design.

Collector's plate gifts for Mother's Day are available at local dealers and gift shops and through The Bradford Exchange, the world's largest trading center for limited-edition collector's plates.

Created by renowned German symbolist painter Sulamith Wulfing, this plate presents a mother, holding her blond, young son on her lap amid a field of yellow, blue, mauve and white wild flowers. Their growing love is reflected by the flourishing blooms surrounding them.

The simple design and delicate colors of this plate make it an attractive addition to any room characterized by clean, modern lines.

For the mother who favors a more formal style such as Victorian, Art Nouveau or French provincial, plates with gold borders or highlights are an excellent choice. Several are available among the 1987 Mother's Day issues, including two from Knowles.

"Catherine and Heather," the fourth issue in the Edna Hibel Mother's Day series, shows a young mother, Catherine, embracing her daughter, Heather.

A mother herself, Hibel is known for her sensitive paintings of mothers and their children.

This latest addition to her work uses a bright palette of colors such as cobalt blue, manganese green and pink overlayed with her signature gold highlights. A gold rim borders the plate.

"Mother's Here" marks the introduction of anothr new Mother's Day series: Portraits of Motherhood. A lacy gold border surrounds the artwork which depicts a mother comforting her little girl, who has just awakened from a bad dream.

This warm and enduring picture of a mother's love was created by William Chambers, a well-known portraitist who has become one of the most celebrated collector's plate artists since entering the medium four years ago. His previous series were based on two popular musical films: Annie and The King and I.

These and other collector's plate gifts for Mother's Day are available at local dealers and gift shops and through The Bradford Exchange, the world's largest trading center for limited-edition collector's plates.

For more information, visit your local dealer or write The Bradford Exchange, P.O. Box 390, Chicago, Ill., 60648.

The Jewelry Industry Council recommends gifts of gold-filled jewelry for Mother's Day. Earrings, necklace and pin by Krementz; bangle bracelet from A & Z Hayward.

Gold jewelry provides precious gift for mom

Saying "thank you" to mom with a present each Mother's Day is a wonderful, sentimental tradition. Mom: She's always been there for you, she's always given you her best. It's important to find a gift that expresses just how much she means to you.

For a very special "thank you," karat gold jewelry is a precious gift she'll never forget, one she'll enjoy for years to come.

When choosing a golden memento consider mom's personality, lifestyle and fashion style. There is a large assortment of fine gold jewelry items available at affordable prices, one of which is sure to complement the clothes she wears. Gold can be worn at work or at play. Whatever her favorite activities are, she'll feel and look great!

Unlike "gold-tone" costume jewelry, real gold jewelry won't discolor or lose its luster. In fact, its beauty is actually enhanced with each wearing, and its value is everlasting.

How can you be sure that what you're buying is real gold? The Gold Information Center says to buy your Mother's Day remembrance from a reputable establishment where you are assured of service, dependability and quality of craftsmanship.

When shopping for gold jewelry, always look for the karat (K) mark, such as 14K or 18K, stamped on each price. It is your guarantee that you are getting real gold throughout the entire piece, not just on the surface.

The most popular karatage in the U.S. is 14K, although many Americans now prefer paying a little more for 18K because of its higher gold content and richer appearence.

24K is 100 percent pure gold, with each karat representing one-twenty-fourth part gold.

Therefore, 14K is 14 parts gold alloyed with 10 parts other metals, 18K is 18 parts gold alloyed with six parts other metals, and so on.

The most popular karatage in the U.S. is 14K, although many Americans now prefer paying a little more for 18K because of its higher gold content and richer appearence.

You might find it interesting to know that 18K is the lowest karatage allowed by law in France. In the U.S., the lowest karatage is 10K.

Whether your mom works, volunteers her time to charitable organizations or is president of the PTA, gold is right for all of these and more.

Classically designed real gold earrings, pins, bracelets and necklaces can be worn day or night for every occasion. It's a present she'll use often, one that will give her a warm feeling every time she puts it on.

Fashionable gift will bring smile to mom's face

By JANET GORDON
Copley News Service

Whether your mother bustles around home in her Guess? jeans or zips off to work clad from head to toe in the latest Donna Karan get-up, a fashionable gift is sure to bring a smile to her glossy lips this Mother's Day.

Forgo the aprons and oven mitts for something personal and unique...something she probably wouldn't splurge on for herself.

Start with a scarf, one of the most traditional Mother's Day gifts. This year it doesn't have to be one of the most unused. Find one with bold graphics in red, white and blue, or muted pastels and natural tones in African prints, and she'll have an instant flash of color for her hair, waist or neck.

Another traditional but much appreciated Mother's Day gift is a robe. The thick, wraparound man-style versions made of plush pastel pink or blue cotton are perfect mom-spoilers, as are silky kimonos or floor-sweeping, button-down robes made of white eyelet.

Your mother probably already owns a functional, versatile watch that's big on reliability, but short on swank. Why not indulge her sense of fashion with a second timepiece?

If she has a favorite designer, consider the timely faces of Christian Dior, Diane Von Furstenburg, Gucci, Calvin Klein or Anne Klein or private labels such as Axcess for The Limited. For serious status, consider Rolex, Cartier or S.T. Dupont. On the strickly-for-fun side, check out the latest offerings by Guess? and Swatch.

Are jewels in order for a gem of a mother? Reward her with diamond stud earrings, a quintessential rope of pearls or the traditional "mother's ring" with the birthstones of her children set in a 14 karat gold band.

If your pocketbook is too small for real jewels, find earrings, a necklace and bracelet or cuff at the fashion jewelry counter to match her favorite outfit. African-inspired baubles of carved wood and faux ivory are the perfect accessories for a mother most comfortable in khaki walking shorts and a camp shirt. To make your decision easier amid the hundreds of possibilities, some jewelers such as Monet offer a selection of classic designs presented in boxes especially for Mother's Day gift giving.

Mothers' purses habitually take a lot of abuse when they're carting everything from pacifiers to unfinished work projects. You could update her bedraggled everyday bag with a durable, but fashionable carryall such as one of Ralph Lauren's white sailor totes trimmed with red or navy. Coach Leatherware also makes a line of lightweight, pouch-like bags that can go from the office to a family outing.

For dressier affairs, there are black straw bags lacquered to be stiff and shiny, and black and white patent leather envelopes in faux reptile textures.

For fun in the approaching summer months, a flouncy skirt, roomy T-shirt or softly-constructed terry jacket that matches her swimming suit could take a mother fashionably from poolside to party. A wide-brimmed straw hat shields out damaging rays at the beach, and is equally appropriate for a downtown shopping spree or an outdoor wedding.

If you'd rather stay within the realm of "safe" gift giving (no sizes, color or style preference, please), you always could give her perfume and a with-purchase gift such as a T-shirt or tote. You also could pamper her with a gift certificate for an hour massage, facial, skin regeneration treatment or manicure. Or, give her a coupon promising a comforting foot soak and massage (provided by you) after work for a week.

Great gifts come from children's hearts

What's a kid to do? His savings have run dry and Mother's Day is here. Mom herself can help by giving children ideas for great gifts. She can subtly say:

— It would be great to finish my shower and find my bed already made, and walk past the kids' rooms and see their beds made, too.

— I would love to sleep late and then wake up to my child's specialty breakfast of cornflakes, juice and toast — in bed. It would be even better if it's served on the new dishes dad bought for me.

— Sometimes I could use some help around the house. It would be wonderful to have an IOU booklet which would entitle me to help from the kids with. The groceries , the garbage, walking the dog, setting and clearing the table, and dusting.

— I could keep a homemade card forever! And what about drawing a picture of us together for the front?

— I would really enjoy some flowers and plants in the house. At a store the other day I noticed some fabric daffodils, tulips and ivy that looked so real! I would enjoy them all year and not have to worry about watering them.

Mom is worthy of honor; Grow her natural gift of roses

From the crack of dawn until the last of the late night hours, mothers of all ages and descriptions keep the home fires burning and tend to responsibilities too numerous to mention.

Whether it is mom, grandmother or mother-in-law, the dedication to her family and work schedule is worthy of "medal of honor" recognition.

On her special day, Sunday, May 10, we all seek out various formulas or recipes to tell the special mother in our lives how much we appreciate, respect and love her.

According to the Mother's Day Council, Americans have celebrated Mother's Day for 79 years. Sentimental customs and the traditional warm feelings associated with a gift of roses on Mother's Day are inseparable.

Many of us relate roses with our local florists who are, indeed, valuable partners in our floral gift giving. Yet they are just one part of the overall process. The rose grower, with his environmentally controlled greenhouse, is equally important.

A rose plant will grow almost anywhere, but it needs special care and favorable conditions to flourish. The "recipe" for a beautiful rose goes something like this:

Take some bright sunlight, about seven gallons of water, a good nitrogen rich diet, 20,000 BTUs of heat and a humid greenhouse. Simmer for about 50 days with tender loving care and you have a beautiful rose. Now, repeat this 30 million times and you'll have enough roses to supply a nation of mothers, grandmothers and mothers-in-law.

If this sounds too complicated, the following information will give you an inside view of the rose industry and what it takes to grow the natural gift that will please any mom.

Growing to 30 million roses that will be given to millions of moms across the nation on May 10, are the 200 members of Roses Inc., the national trade association of North American rose growers.

There are 3,600 people employed by these family owned businesses, and they "farm" about 31 million square feet of greenhouse area for a total of 700 plus acres and approximately 80 percent of the roses sold in the U.S.

The rose production greenhouses are considered small businesses by most standards, but many have third and fourth generation family members involved.

With rare exceptions, roses for cut flower production are grown in environmentally controlled greenhouses. Each year, a little over 23 million rose plants are cultivated. Close to 80 percent of these are rich, red colors, the most popular among rose buyers.

The rose grower is unique in the "farming" community because of his year-round production in the greenhouse structure. At the same time, he is a tremendous risk taker as the fragile greenhouse structure and the rose plants they contain are vulnerable to the whims of Mother Nature. Periods of dark and cloudy weather can throw the crop off schedule.

Roses grown for Mother's Day are planted directly after the Valentine's Day holiday. As the rose is grown, it must be marketed very quickly to ensure quality for the retailer and his consumer. A key reason why it's always best to ask for American-grown roses is that they experience minimum travel delays in getting to market.

All individuals in the floral industry distribution chain — from grower to wholesaler to your local florist — must work effectively together to preserve freshness for the consumer.

Roses picked upon maturation are immediately placed in water-filled buckets and transported to refrigeration units in the greenhouse. This process will keep the roses fresh prior to packaging and shipment.

What it takes to produce a rose

It takes from 45 to 57 days to produce a rose in a greenhouse depending on variety, time of year and, especially, light conditions.

A rose bush planted in the greenhouse grows and produces 365 days a year; yes, that includes weekends. Roses must be cut at just the right time of this everyday schedule or they become too open to send to market.

Rose plants cycle on a six to eight week schedule and produce about six crops per year. Each plant is kept in production for five to seven years before being replaced.

Roses are grown at fairly warm night tempertures. This means it takes a little more heat to keep them happy in the winter, but it ensures better roses.

Sunlight is one of the rose grower's best friends. Roses need a fairly ample supply of sunlight to bloom properly. This means that during the dark winter months of December, January and February, it will take longer to produce a rose.

Any extended period of dark weather can mean that a grower cannot bring in his entire crop for Christmas, Valentine's Day or Mother's Day.

New roses planted directly after Valentine's Day will make their first flower to meet the customer demand for Mother's Day gifting. Older roses are "pinched" to set up a flush of holiday blooms.

"Pinching," or removing one immature rose bloom from a plant, will set off the growth of more blooms where once there was only one. The process of pinching takes place about 45 days prior to when the grower gathers the blooms for sale. Pinching is crucial in correctly timing the growing process.

A commercial rose greenhouse contains automated controls for heat and ventilation. Growers may also provide additional carbon dioxide to supplement the air plants breathe to encourage faster growth.

In addition, automated fertilizer systems have been designed to provide the plants with measured amounts of fertilizer with each watering.

Quality control in greenhouses begins with getting roses into water and refrigerated as soon as they are harvested. This initial step in the harvest process ensures the best roses for the market.

In an effort to maintain a competitive position in the market, the domestic rose grower has done many things to cut costs, and improve production and quality.

Many have changed to alternate energy sources to heat their ranges. Others have set insulation systems into place to minimize greenhouse heat loss at night.

Once the rose is grown, it must be sold promptly, as it cannot be dried, frozen, canned or processed for later use in secondary markets. Each grower takes care to measure his market requirements before the rose is grown.

If he should find his market oversupplied with this week's crop, he cannot save his roses for another time, but must sell them at whatever price he can obtain.

New varieties and production techniques are being updated daily to increase output from each plant, further ensuring economical production and a quality rose product. Each grower wants to provide the consumer with a quality product that will represent his hard work and your love and devotion.

Care and handling techniques

When you receive roses in a box, open it immediately and give the roses some attention. If you don't have time (i.e., if you are at the office), put them in a cool, dark place until you do. The refrigerator is best.

Remove any leaves that might be under water when you put them in the container. Be careful not to scrape or cut the bark.

A powdery preservative should be included with the roses. Mix it with warm water and put it in the vase.

Using a sharp knife or shears, cut an inch off of the stem while holding it under water. This is important to keep air from blocking the flow of water to the head of the bud.

Put the roses into a deep vase with the water/preservative and, if possible, put them in a cool, dark place for two to four hours.

When placing them in your home, make sure you keep the arrangements away from direct sunlight, drafts and/or heat.

Use a lot of water. Top off the vase every day. Setting the roses in a cool dark place in the evening will prolong their life. By following these few basic steps you can give your roses a new lease on life.

Now that you know the hard work and care that goes into producing your Mother's Day gift, you can be sure on May 10, you will be giving your mom the very best.

As mothers' lives get busier 'it's high-tech to the rescue'

With so many of our mothers firmly into the seats of power in the modern world, and still managing households and having children and running families, it's only natural that they are tuned into hi-tech developments that make leisure more rewarding and take a lot of the drudgery out of housework. (Maintaining help around the house isn't exactly the easiest thing in the world, even if you have the money to pay for it.)

So it's high-tech to the rescue — with all it promises for a more gratifying life.

Take for example modern marvels like these:

— Home computers to do everything from store recipes to balance checkbooks and monitor household budgets. And with prices falling almost daily, a good home computer is quite within pocketbook-reach of a vast number of children, especially if the family chips in for one big gift.

— Telephone answering machine with phone built in, and a memory phone at that, so, with a touch of a button, mom can call as many as 50 frequently used numbers — family, friends, household suppliers — in a matter of seconds.

— Portable TV with tiny two-inch screen so mother can carry her favorite shows or news programs with her wherever she goes.

— Remote telephone with no wires to impede her as she totes it around the house or garden, or onto the deck outside. There are no needless steps when the "answer is in her hand."

— Is there a mother who wouldn't want a modern microwave oven? Not on your life, which is why they have been selling like the hot dishes they cook up in minutes. Probably half the families in the country now own one.

— Want to really splurge? Get her a video camera recorder to preserve those wonderful, intimate glimpses of her and her young children coming of age.

— Play them back, anytime, on a VCR. And for an added benefit, she can see her favorite films, old or new, in her leisure moments, without ever leaving the living room. Prices have dropped dramatically.

There are many gifts that are equally imaginative — but when you know what your mother does most often, you'll come up with the kind of hi-tech gift to match her high-speed lifestyle.

Mother's Day right idea at right time

It was the right idea at the right time.

When Anna Reeves Jarvis conceived of Mother's Day, while still bereaved by the loss of her own mother, the stars must have been in just the right configuration for success. In a matter of a couple of years, her concept of Mother's Day literally "took off."

It became a West Virginia state holiday in 1910; by 1913 Mother's Day a joint congressional resolution made Mother's Day a national holiday. This occurred just six short years from the first observance in Grafton, W.Va.

Yes, others had advocated the idea of Mother's Day more than three decades earlier, but Julia Ward Howe's crusade for peace on behalf of all mothers, following the cruel and costly Franco-Prussian War, 1870-71, came to a sudden halt after just a few years.

Maybe the world wasn't yet ready for the idea. Maybe the idea of crusading for peace in the name of motherhood was just too overpowering to capture the imagination of all except a handful of liberal thinkers.

Miss Jarvis' option was simple and easy to grasp. Just honor mother for her multiple roles within the family: caretaker, disciplinarian, teacher, confidante, what have you. It was an idea whose time had come.

Miss Jarvis, born in West Virginia,

Anna Reeves Jarvis

had moved to Philadelphia with her family, where her mother died in 1905.

Lonely and heartsick from mourning, she came up with the idea to honor her mother and, through her, all American mothers, with a day of "their own."

She broached the idea to some friends on the anniversary of her mother's demise, in 1907. After an enthusiastic acceptance, she took it to Philadelphia's civic leaders and groups for support and development.

The famous merchant, John Wananmaker, not only endorsed it, but helped Miss Jarvis guide it through to fruition a year later.

The first Mother's Day was observed in Grafton, W.Va., in the "home heartland" of the Jarvis family.

It was marked by a simple sermon, preached from the pulpit of a small country church, which still exists as a symbol of the birthplace of the modern Mother's Day.

President Woodrow Wilson signed the first Mother's Day Proclamation in 1914, setting aside the second Sunday of each May to be observed as Mother's Day.

Miss Jarvis never married, nor had any children of her own. But she had the comfort and joy of seeing Mother's Day almost universally observed.

She didn't think of greeting cards or gifts or big floral tributes. She wanted only that mothers be remembered with a special letter, or a bunch of wildflowers or an extra visit by her children on Mother's Day.

But Americans tend to have their own way with celebrations.

Letters have grown into a tidal wave of 125,000,000 greeting cards. Wildflowers aren't as available today as they were in the West Virginia countryside in the early years of this century. And we Americans find reason to mark every special occasion with gifts.

By 1910, Gov. William Glassman of West Virginia had declared Mother's Day to be a state holiday. From there the idea spread, until in 1913, Congress made Mother's Day a national holiday.

Today, the holiday brings out the best in most of us, finding one expression in the more than $6,000,000,000 spent annually to honor our mothers.

Flowers, all kinds of things to wear, fragrances and those wonderful labor-saving appliances are lavished upon American mom.

Miss Jarvis devoted her life to the advancement of Mother's Day as a national institution — right up until her demise in 1948. She kept writing, cajoling, pressuring and collecting memorabilia, until her crusade became an obsession.

Did Miss Jarvis really love her mother so devotedly or was her dedication to Mother's Day an expiation of a guilt she felt?

No one really knows. But everyone must feel gratitude for her devotion to the idea.

And how that idea has changed in 79 years! It's come a long way from a little church in West Virginia to a holiday that now has captured the imagination and acceptance around the world. This year's celebration is on May 10.

Special gifts can pamper mom

Whether your mom spends her days working on the job or at home, she's probably the busiest of us all. This Mother's Day, give mom some special pampering with these gift ideas:

— Send her to a special beauty salon for a new hairstyle or haircolor makeover.

— Give her a personalized workout session in the comfort of her own home with a fitness instructor.

— Make an appointment for her to get the best facial in town.

— Give her a gift certificate for a beauty/skin consultation with her favorite cosmetics company.

— Treat her to a body massage at a local spa and — for lasting comfort — give her a pair of Isotoner Comfort Slippers.

'Susie Soapsuds' washed up in '80s households

Television commercials of the '50s and '60s portrayed the housewife as a Susie Soapsuds, always fretting about hard water spots on her china and dreading the white glove inspection visits of her inquisitive mother-in-law.

But these are the eighties. It's goodbye, Susie, and hello to Wendy, Working Mom. With more than half of American women employed outside the home, few have time to worry about floor wax buildup and "ring around the collar."

To help out the more than 40 million Wendys in the U.S., cleaning experts from The Eureka Co., have compiled these suggestions to make house cleaning go faster:

— Set aside a specific time period for cleaning, say 1:00 to 3:00 p.m. on Saturday. Don't make any other plans for the slot.

— Once you get started, stick with it. Talking on the phone, looking at the mail and other interruptions will only prolong your tasks.

— Do one room at a time. It's self-defeating to run all over your house or apartment, doing little things here and there. By sticking with one room, you'll receive the instant gratification of seeing it sparkle. You can then advance to the next area.

— Organize a cleaning plan, and subdivide the labor among your spouse and children. Even smaller children can be responsible for retrieving their toys from the living room and "picking up" their own rooms.

— Your versatile vacuum cleaner can handle many different types of cleaning jobs. Don't do anything by hand that can be done with your cleaning equipment. For example, use your vacuum cleaner's attachments to pick up dust and crumbs in kitchen drawers, shelves and cabinets.

— Invite a friend over to share big cleaning jobs, and then reciprocate the favor by helping out with tasks in her home. Coordinate jobs so you'll both be in the same room and have someone to chat with while working.

For example, clean the oven or refrigerator while your friend cleans the counter tops, drawers and shelves; one can polish the silver while the other tackles the copper pots.

Ironing and window washing blend well together in the same room, as does polishing furniture and shampooing upholstery or washing woodwook and cleaning out closets.

— Consider purchasing a second vacuum cleaner to lighten the load. One of you can vacuum stairs and hallways with a canister vac or Power Team, while the other handles large carpeted areas with an upright vac.

Mom is worthy of honor; Grow her natural gift of roses

From the crack of dawn until the last of the late night hours, mothers of all ages and descriptions keep the home fires burning and tend to responsibilities too numerous to mention.

Whether it is mom, grandmother or mother-in-law, the dedication to her family and work schedule is worthy of "medal of honor" recognition.

On her special day, Sunday, May 10, we all seek out various formulas or recipes to tell the special mother in our lives how much we appreciate, respect and love her.

According to the Mother's Day Council, Americans have celebrated Mother's Day for 79 years. Sentimental customs and the traditional warm feelings associated with a gift of roses on Mother's Day are inseparable.

Many of us relate roses with our local florists who are, indeed, valuable partners in our floral gift giving. Yet they are just one part of the overall process. The rose grower, with his environmentally controlled greenhouse, is equally important.

A rose plant will grow almost anywhere, but it needs special care and favorable conditions to flourish. The "recipe" for a beautiful rose goes something like this:

Take some bright sunlight, about seven gallons of water, a good nitrogen rich diet, 20,000 BTUs of heat and a humid greenhouse. Simmer for about 50 days with tender loving care and you have a beautiful rose. Now, repeat this 30 million times and you'll have enough roses to supply a nation of mothers, grandmothers and mothers-in-law.

If this sounds too complicated, the following information will give you an inside view of the rose industry and what it takes to grow the natural gift that will please any mom.

Growing to 30 million roses that will be given to millions of moms across the nation on May 10, are the 200 members of Roses Inc., the national trade association of North American rose growers.

There are 3,600 people employed by these family owned businesses, and they "farm" about 31 million square feet of greenhouse area for a total of 700 plus acres and approximately 80 percent of the roses sold in the U.S.

The rose production greenhouses are considered small businesses by most standards, but many have third and fourth generation family members involved.

With rare exceptions, roses for cut flower production are grown in environmentally controlled greenhouses. Each year, a little over 23 million rose plants are cultivated. Close to 80 percent of these are rich, red colors, the most popular among rose buyers.

The rose grower is unique in the "farming" community because of his year-round production in the greenhouse structure. At the same time, he is a tremendous risk taker as the fragile greenhouse structure and the rose plants they contain are vulnerable to the whims of Mother Nature. Periods of dark and cloudy weather can throw the crop off schedule.

Roses grown for Mother's Day are planted directly after the Valentine's Day holiday. As the rose is grown, it must be marketed very quickly to ensure quality for the retailer and his consumer. A key reason why it's always best to ask for American-grown roses is that they experience minimum travel delays in getting to market.

All individuals in the floral industry distribution chain — from grower to wholesaler to your local florist — must work effectively together to preserve freshness for the consumer.

Roses picked upon maturation are immediately placed in water-filled buckets and transported to refrigeration units in the greenhouse. This process will keep the roses fresh prior to packaging and shipment.

What it takes to produce a rose

It takes from 45 to 57 days to produce a rose in a greenhouse depending on variety, time of year and, especially, light conditions.

A rose bush planted in the greenhouse grows and produces 365 days a year; yes, that includes weekends. Roses must be cut at just the right time of this everyday schedule or they become too open to send to market.

Rose plants cycle on a six to eight week schedule and produce about six crops per year. Each plant is kept in production for five to seven years before being replaced.

Roses are grown at fairly warm night tempertures. This means it takes a little more heat to keep them happy in the winter, but it ensures better roses.

Sunlight is one of the rose grower's best friends. Roses need a fairly ample supply of sunlight to bloom properly. This means that during the dark winter months of December, January and February, it will take longer to produce a rose.

Any extended period of dark weather can mean that a grower cannot bring in his entire crop for Christmas, Valentine's Day or Mother's Day.

New roses planted directly after Valentine's Day will make their first flower to meet the customer demand for Mother's Day gifting. Older roses are "pinched" to set up a flush of holiday blooms.

"Pinching," or removing one immature rose bloom from a plant, will set off the growth of more blooms where once there was only one. The process of pinching takes place about 45 days prior to when the grower gathers the blooms for sale. Pinching is crucial in correctly timing the growing process.

A commercial rose greenhouse contains automated controls for heat and ventilation. Growers may also provide additional carbon dioxide to supplement the air plants breathe to encourage faster growth.

In addition, automated fertilizer systems have been designed to provide the plants with measured amounts of fertilizer with each watering.

Quality control in greenhouses begins with getting roses into water and refrigerated as soon as they are harvested. This initial step in the harvest process ensures the best roses for the market.

In an effort to maintain a competitive position in the market, the domestic rose grower has done many things to cut costs, and improve production and quality.

Many have changed to alternate energy sources to heat their ranges. Others have set insulation systems into place to minimize greenhouse heat loss at night.

Once the rose is grown, it must be sold promptly, as it cannot be dried, frozen, canned or processed for later use in secondary markets. Each grower takes care to measure his market requirements before the rose is grown.

If he should find his market oversupplied with this week's crop, he cannot save his roses for another time, but must sell them at whatever price he can obtain.

New varieties and production techniques are being updated daily to increase output from each plant, further ensuring economical production and a quality rose product. Each grower wants to provide the consumer with a quality product that will represent his hard work and your love and devotion.

Care and handling techniques

When you receive roses in a box, open it immediately and give the roses some attention. If you don't have time (i.e., if you are at the office), put them in a cool, dark place until you do. The refrigerator is best.

Remove any leaves that might be under water when you put them in the container. Be careful not to scrape or cut the bark.

A powdery preservative should be included with the roses. Mix it with warm water and put it in the vase.

Using a sharp knife or shears, cut an inch off of the stem while holding it under water. This is important to keep air from blocking the flow of water to the head of the bud.

Put the roses into a deep vase with the water/preservative and, if possible, put them in a cool, dark place for two to four hours.

When placing them in your home, make sure you keep the arrangements away from direct sunlight, drafts and/or heat.

Use a lot of water. Top off the vase every day. Setting the roses in a cool dark place in the evening will prolong their life. By following these few basic steps you can give your roses a new lease on life.

Now that you know the hard work and care that goes into producing your Mother's Day gift, you can be sure on May 10, you will be giving your mom the very best.

As mothers' lives get busier 'it's high-tech to the rescue'

With so many of our mothers firmly into the seats of power in the modern world, and still managing households and having children and running families, it's only natural that they are tuned into hi-tech developments that make leisure more rewarding and take a lot of the drudgery out of housework. (Maintaining help around the house isn't exactly the easiest thing in the world, even if you have the money to pay for it.)

So it's high-tech to the rescue — with all it promises for a more gratifying life.

Take for example modern marvels like these:

— Home computers to do everything from store recipes to balance checkbooks and monitor household budgets. And with prices falling almost daily, a good home computer is quite within pocketbook-reach of a vast number of children, especially if the family chips in for one big gift.

— Telephone answering machine with phone built in, and a memory phone at that, so, with a touch of a button, mom can call as many as 50 frequently used numbers — family, friends, household suppliers — in a matter of seconds.

— Portable TV with tiny two-inch screen so mother can carry her favorite shows or news programs with her wherever she goes.

— Remote telephone with no wires to impede her as she totes it around the house or garden, or onto the deck outside. There are no needless steps when the "answer is in her hand."

— Is there a mother who wouldn't want a modern microwave oven? Not on your life, which is why they have been selling like the hot dishes they cook up in minutes. Probably half the families in the country now own one.

— Want to really splurge? Get her a video camera recorder to preserve those wonderful, intimate glimpses of her and her young children coming of age.

— Play them back, anytime, on a VCR. And for an added benefit, she can see her favorite films, old or new, in her leisure moments, without ever leaving the living room. Prices have dropped dramatically.

There are many gifts that are equally imaginative — but when you know what your mother does most often, you'll come up with the kind of hi-tech gift to match her high-speed lifestyle.

Return a little homespun love to mom with handcrafted gifts

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

Kids, remember the baby quilt your grandmother made to celebrate your birth and the Christmas teddy bear that kept your mother sewing past midnight for two weeks?

If you still cherish these and other objects of affection, you know all about the love and comfort that comes with presents handcrafted by a mother or grandmother.

You can return a little of that homespun love this Mother's Day with a gift you create yourself.

In a world of hectic schedules and expensive presents, a creative gift is an almost guaranteed way to delight a mother — especially if her refrigerator and bedroom mirror usually are covered with her children's report cards, school assignments and amateur works of art.

Following are some suggestions for gifts with a personal touch, affordable even for a child or teen's modest pocketbook (For most, children will need to recruit help from Dad or an older sibling):

High-tech greeting. If you can't be with your mother or grandmother, you can record an audiotape or videotape that will relay your affections on Mother's Day.

In a world of hectic schedules and expensive presents, a creative gift is an almost guaranteed way to delight a mother — especially if her refrigerator and bedroom mirror usually are covered with her children's report cards, school assignments and amateur works of art.

Children can sing or tell their favorite stories; teens can tell Mom about five positive ways she has influenced their lives, the one most important thing they learned from her or their greatest success and how she contributed.

Blooming baskets. Decorate inexpensive wicker baskets with ribbon and yarn and fill them with fresh or homemade flowers for mothers and grandmothers on Mother's Day. Another idea: Make bath baskets by filling them with small perfumed soap bars, envelopes of bath salts and a small brush or loofah.

Picture pizzazz. Instead of just dropping school snapshots in the envelope with the Mother's Day card to Grandma, add your own personal touches to make the photographs works of art, suggests Parents magazine.

For instance, make a collage by pasting several photos onto cloth or paper-covered cardboard and add designs or other mementos.

Super sculptures. With dough sculptures, you can make jewelry, picture frames, paperweights and other Mother's Day gifts.

To make a batch of dough, mix flour and salt in equal amounts, says syndicated crafts columnist Kelle Banks Barfield. Then, add tap water a little at a time until the dough can be easily shaped without being sticky.

Shape the dough with rolling pins, cookie cutters, toothpicks and forks. To set, place on a cookie sheet in an oven set at 200 F. The sculptures must be checked frequently since different shapes and thicknesses require varying amounts of setting time. Thin pieces may require only 15 minutes, while larger shapes could take an hour.

Once cool, paint the shapes with acrylic or poster paints.

Potato pictures. If Mom or Grandmother go wild over the art you bring home from school, they're sure to love a potato print designed especially for them.

To make the printer, halve a potato and create a design on its surface by simply cutting away the unwanted parts, Barfield says. One easy way to do this is to press a cookie cutter into the flat surface of the halved potato. Then carve around the cookie cutter with a knife. When you lift the cutter back out of the potato, the protruding design will remain.

To print with a multitude of colors, use sponges as ink pads. Set a moistened sponge in a bowl, then soak it with plenty of poster paint. After pressing the potato stamp onto the sponge, remove excess paint by stamping it on a newspaper before applying it to art paper. (You also can practice on the newspaper before beginning your print.)

Cards from the heart. Teens can personalize the cards they give for Mother's Day to make them more meaningful, according to Susan Polis Schutz, poet and author of "To My Daughter with Love on the Important Things in Life" (Blue Mountain Arts).

Modern moms deserve more than potholders

By BARBARA BECKLEY
and CAROL ROBERTS
Copley News Service

This Mother's Day, don't insult Mom with pot holders (unless you made them yourself and they won't fall apart the first time she uses them to take her TV dinner from the oven) or a bottle of overpowering perfume she wouldn't wear to a garage sale.

And though modern mothers still love chocolate truffles and spring bouquets, their up-to-date interests demand creative gift-giving — something to match their working-jogging-freeway commuting lifestyles.

In the spirit of modern motherhood, Marta Vago, a Los Angeles psychotherapist, has developed some ideas to consider when selecting Mother's Day gifts.

Rule No. 1. Every mother is a person before she is a mother, Ms. Vago says. So, when choosing a gift, make sure you stay away from household items that shout "Clean your messy house!" or "You've thousands of meals yet to prepare."

Instead, gifts of housewares for Mother's Day should be those the whole family can utilize, so Mom actually ends up with more free time. Microwaves, for instance, are available in programmable and easy-to-operate models, so even the kids can help defrost and cook dinner.

If she likes to be entertained, take her to a play or concert. If she likes to be spoiled, hire a caterer to bring her breakfast in bed or purchase a set of extra-thick towels, fragrant soaps, bubble bath, candles, after-bath splash and powder for a luxurious soak in the tub. If she likes a challenge, take her on a white-water rafting trip, or consider a hot-air balloon ride if it's excitement she craves.

Rule No. 2. Every mother is a unique being, says Ms. Vago. "Remember that every person who happens to be a mother has special interests, hobbies and creative pursuits. Your gift should speak to that uniqueness."

A few suggestions:

If she's an opera buff, take her to a performance or give her a recent recording of her favorite arias.

If she's a self-improvement enthusiast, give her a set of motivational tapes or pay her admission to a workshop.

If she's a gardener, give her a dozen baskets in assorted shapes and sizes for her favorite plants.

Crafty mothers would delight in the challenge of a new pattern book full of ideas for counted cross-stitch, knitting or needlepoint projects.

Gourmet cooks who find meal preparation a necessary pleasure could get new ideas with regional cookbooks such as "The Heritage of Southern Cooking" (Workman) by Camille Glenn, muffin tins shaped like teddy bears or hearts or other inventive utensils for her cookery collection.

Moms who work at home might applaud an ergonomically designed office chair that provides maximum comfort, or a mini-television and "Supermom" coffee mug for breaks.

For the bookworm's reading pleasure, choose the latest best-selling romance, spy thriller or a tabletop book full of glossy photos and information on her favorite hobbies, travel destinations or artists.

Rule No. 3. Every mother has a little child inside her. "Most of our mothers have told us over the years, 'When I was little I used to love...' These are clues to how she likes to be cared for, whether she likes to be cuddled, indulged, challenged, surprised (some people hate surprises). Give your mother the kind of experience she loved as a little girl," Ms. Vago says.

If she likes to be entertained, take her to a play or concert. If she likes to be spoiled, hire a caterer to bring her breakfast in bed or purchase a set of extra-thick towels, fragrant soaps, bubble bath, candles, after-bath splash and powder for a luxurious soak in the tub. If she likes a challenge, take her on a white-water rafting trip, or consider a hot-air balloon ride if it's excitement she craves.

With Mother's Day memorabilia, you can satisfy the kid in Mom by giving her "toys" designed around her day, such as a stuffed bear wearing a "Supermom" T-shirt.

Famous children recall mom's foods

By MONICA PEREZ

Eastwood

Geisel

When it comes to mothers, love and food usually are synonymous.

Throughout the decades, mothers have pampered their children with "comfort foods" such as bread pudding, chocolate cake, pot roast and homemade biscuits. These recipes and specialities are treasured as jewels — recalled with vivid memories and passed down through the generations.

Even in today's fast-paced, fast-food society, modern mothers still are showing love for their children by baking and cooking special foods, according to a recent survey conducted by the Roper Organization for Downy fabric softener.

Mothers participating in the survey also reported that their families eat dinner together about five nights per week, and more than half of the mothers with children under age 12 reported eating dinner together every night.

Of course, not all dinner-table memories associated with Mom's cooking are mouth-watering remembrances...remember the liver and the squash she made you at least "try"?

Syndicated food columnist Antonia Allegra asked a handful of celebrities and personalities, "Is there a food your mother made that you remember with special fondness or hatred?" Here are some of the responses:

Clint Eastwood — actor, mayor: "My favorite was oatmeal and I still eat it. I disliked cucumbers as a child. Still do."

Theodor "Dr. Seuss" Geisel — author: "Live boiled lobster. When we were in our beach house, we'd have them every day. Well, not every day — I'm exaggerating as I always do. Let's say more than was good for us."

Jonas Salk, M.D. — research scientist: "Potato pancakes."

Julia Child — cooking teacher, author and founder of American Institute of Wine and Food: "My mother? Well, all she could make was baking powder biscuits. In those days we all had maids and cooks. Cook went out on Thursday and mother cooked. It's the baking powder biscuits I remember."

Tommy Lasorda — manager, Los Angeles Dodgers: "Greens and beans. Yeah, that's the all-time favorite. She put pepperoni in it, and she'd go in the field and pick greens — like dandelion greens — and cook them with white beans."

Susan Clark — actress, Katherine in "Webster" television program: "My mother probably made the best roast beef and Yorkshire pudding I've ever had. The inside of the pudding was soft and creamy, not dried out like in some restaurants. How she did it, I honestly don't know. Now she lives in Florida and has given up making it because it's too heavy."

Spencer Johnson, M.D. — author, "One Minute Manager": "My mother always did marvelous visual presentation of the food, even when it was simple. And she always lit candles at dinner, which makes me the romantic that I am."

Deborah Szekely — founder, Golden Door spa: "All my childhood memories are happy. My mother was a fabulous cook. My fondest memories are of making huge cookies with cinnamon, almonds or raisins. And we made little cookies for my dolls. I wasn't expected to help cook; but I mopped the floor every night."

Along with lovingly-prepared foods, moms of the 1980s show love and affection to their children through lots of old-fashioned hugs and kisses, according to the Downy survey.

Mother's Day cards booming along with babies

By KAREN CALDWELL

CNS Graphic

There's no reason to worry about being left out on Mother's Day if you're a brand-new mother whose little one is too small to even crawl into a greeting card store. Ditto for the mother-to-be, whose due date is targeted for after May 10.

Babies are burgeoning and motherhood is back in style again — 3.7 million women are expected to give birth in 1987. So naturally, the greeting card industry is giving birth to cards that celebrate a woman's first Mother's Day.

It doesn't matter if your infant is too young to send you a Mother's Day greeting — expectant and new mothers can get cards from their mothers and fathers, friends and husbands.

The number of Mother's Day cards for new and expectant mothers has more than doubled in the last few years, according to Sally Groves, editorial director at Hallmark Cards. These cards will comprise a large part of the 145 million cards expected to be given for this fourth-ranked card-sending holiday.

"Greeting cards always have reflected social trends," Groves says. "Today, with a rising birthrate, there is a need for cards that celebrate the joys of motherhood."

Cards for new mothers wish for the happiness that comes with being a mother, and those for expectant mothers tend to reflect the anticipation and excitement of the mother-to-be, oftentimes tinged with a bit of humor. Two examples:

"When you become a mother, you're really going to change...and change and change and change."

"It's a wonderful day to look forward to all the exciting things new mothers do..."

Meanwhile, more experienced moms will reflect on the reality — and the humor — of motherhood through a crop of colorful cards, according to Groves.

Some cards, for example, are designed for knowing friends to give to each other, while other cards confirm that the job of being a mother is doubly difficult when Mom works.

Cards today are more open, shorter and straightforward with their messages than those of the past, and many are written in prose instead of lengthy poetry.

"These cards may use humor, but the message is often serious," Groves says.

Through cards, older children who now are mothers and fathers also are telling their mothers that they now know from firsthand experience what a challenging job parenting can be, according to Hallmark spokeswoman Rachel Bolton. Two examples:

"Mom, I remember all the times you said, 'You'll thank me for this someday!' Well, today's the day."

"Now that I'm a mother myself, I realize what a terrific job you did in raising me. In fact, you were so good at it...that I've decided you can raise my kids, too!"

Mothers, however, won't be the only ones receiving cards on Mother's Day this year. Today's changing lifestyles and trends have expanded the concept of Mother's Day.

Card shelves will be lined with myriad designs for the "mother-like" friends and relatives in our lives — stepmothers, mothers-in-law, aunts, sisters, friends, grandmothers, nieces, great-grandmothers, granddaughters, godmothers and babysitters...even fathers, according to Mary Ann Corrigan-Davis, group product manager for American Greetings.

This concept started in the 1920s, according to Bolton. Today, these relationships are served by cards that read, "For my other mother on Mother's Day," "You've been like a mother to me," or "Happy Mother's Day to a wonderful Dad who has always been there with his help and love."

Mothers redefine role in society

The last half of the 20th century has brought with it a sweeping change in lifestyle for women, and most notably, mothers.

Today, with more than two-thirds of American women working outside the home, mothers are contributing significantly to the family's income.

Mothers have redefined their position in society without abandoning their previous roles. Today they spend as much time at the office as they do at home and still manage to set aside quality time for their husband and children. On top of everything, they have to look their best.

Mothers are finding that the key to looking great all day, every day, doesn't require a monumental investment of time and money. Proper clothing care is half the battle.

Treat mom with breakfast in bed

Copley News Service

"Sh-h-h! Mom is asleep! Hey Dad, where do I put this arrow on the toaster? I think she'd like her toast medium rare, don't you?

"And can you help me make scrambled eggs? I already got out the eggs and look...I even smashed the shells and everything. She's going to be so surprised!"

Planning to treat Mom on her special day? Breakfast in bed is one way to initiate a day of love and relaxation for the lady of the house. The family can share in the cooking, but planning the menu might be the best part, next to Mom's beaming face when she is presented with a tray of unforgettable a.m. edibles.

How does a family plan a memorable breakfast? When choosing recipes, make sure they are good to eat, easy to prepare and pretty.

If Mom's a pancake fanatic or coffee-cake craver, you could indulge her with her favorite breakfast treat. Or, have each member of the family prepare his or her specialty, be it eggs benedict or hot chocolate. You also could plan the meal around a theme, such as the following ideas:

Mexican breakfast: Make breakfast a fiesta for Mom. Stir up something spicy, like the family's favorite recipe for Mexican omelets, huevos rancheros or something hot from a cookbook, such as eggs ole. Serve with Mexican hot chocolate (lots of cinnamon) and warm tortillas on a tray covered with a bright place mat and matching napkins. For the crowning touch, add a miniature sombrero or paper flowers. Don't forget the salsa.

Twist on the traditional: If the family's experience with breakfast sans Mom's help starts with cold cereal and ends with a take-out breakfast sandwich, you can stick with the basics and still dazzle the lady of honor. After all, it's better that she dine on several slices of traditional French toast or a stack of pancakes rather than spend the morning cleaning up a culinary calamity.

Besides, no one ever said French toast has to be boring. Why not dip an English muffin in the milk-egg-sugar liquid and then saute that in the classic style of French toast? Then, whirl a few strawberries (fresh or frozen) in a blender, pour the puree over the steamy muffin and top the delicious fare with a mound of sliced berries. Serve with sausage or bacon, scrambled eggs or freshly squeezed orange juice. Place a bouquet of flowers and a Mother's Day card on the tray just before taking it to Mom, and chances are good she will swear it's the best breakfast she has ever tasted.

You also could order Mom's meal from a breakfast in bed service or bakery. Decide on the menu in advance, then pick up the goodies or have them delivered late Saturday or early Mother's Day morning, arrange them on the tray and take them in just as Mom awakens. This way, there is no worrying about who is going to clean up the sticky pancake batter or spilled orange juice.

If Mom ends up arising before the cooks or wants to sleep in after a hard week at work, treat her to a Mother's Day brunch instead, either at her favorite eating place or a new restaurant she has been hinting about. Make sure you make reservations in advance.

Here are some recipes to try out on Mom on her day.

EGGS OLE

1 dozen large eggs
½ pound cheddar cheese, grated
½ pound Jack cheese grated
1 pint cottage cheese
1 can (7 ounces) chopped green chilies, or less if desired
½ cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
Garnishes: salsa, sour cream, chopped green onion

In large mixing bowl combine all ingredients. Pour into a greased 9 X 13-inch baking dish. Bake in 350 F oven for 45 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean and mixture is set. Serve topped with salsa, sour cream and chopped green onions as garnish. (For additional flavor and color, add few sprigs of fresh cilantro.) Serves 12.

WALNUT STREUSEL MUFFINS

1½ cups packed brown sugar
¾ cup butter or margarine
1 cup chopped walnuts
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon each nutmeg and ginger
½ teaspoon each baking soda and salt
1 cup buttermilk or sour milk
2 eggs, beaten

In mixing bowl, combine 2 cups flour and sugar; cut in butter to form fine crumbs. Measure ¾ cup of crumbs and combine with ½ cup nuts; set aside. To remaining crumb mixture add remaining flour, baking powder, spices, soda, salt and remaining nuts. Combine with buttermilk and eggs; stir into dry ingredients just to moisten. Spoon into 18 greased or paper-lined 2¾-inch muffin cups, filling about two-thirds full. Top each with generous spoonful of reserved crumb-nut mixture. Bake in 350 F oven 20 to 25 minutes until springy to touch. Cool 10 minutes; loosen and remove from pans. Makes 1½ dozen muffins.

BASIC FRENCH TOAST

4 eggs
1 cup milk
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla (optional)
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg (optional)
8 slices day-old bread

In bowl, beat together eggs, milk, sugar, vanilla (if used) and nutmeg (if used). Place bread slices on rimmed baking sheet. Pour egg mixture over bread and let stand a few minutes. Turn slices over and let stand until all egg mixture is absorbed. Melt butter on griddle or in frying pan over medium heat. Add few bread slices at a time and cook until browned; turn and brown other side. Place cooked toast on a serving plate and keep warm in a 150 F oven. (If oven is preheated to 150 F, then turn it off. Oven will retain enough heat to keep your toast warm without overbaking.) Repeat with remaining slices. Makes 4 servings of 2 slices each.

MICROWAVE HOT MOCHA CHOCOLATE

1 cup semisweet chocolate bits
2 tablespoons instant coffee granules
1 cup water
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
⅛ teaspoon ground nutmeg
4 cups milk
Whipped cream and chocolate shavings (optional)

In large glass bowl, combine chocolate bits, coffee and water. Microwave on high 3 to 4 minutes, or until chocolate is completely melted. Stir in remaining ingredients except whipped cream and chocolate shavings. Blend well and microwave 5 to 6 minutes longer.

Serve hot, garnished with whipped cream and shaved chocolate, if desired. Serves 4.

Dijon-peppercorn dressing spices up Cobb Style Salad

Here's a recipe every mom will love. The Cobb Style Salad is a pretty alternative to the more common chef salad. With a tangy dijon-peppercorn dressing, this summery main dish is great all year 'round.

The key to a beautiful Cobb Salad is evenly chopped pieces of each ingredient positioned in stripes on top of the lettuce.

Turkey and cheddar cheese provide protein...and there's plenty of color with green pepper, red onion, tomato and hard cooked eggs.

The dish is easy to make too, with the help of a food processor (if mom doesn't have one, it will make great Mother's Day gift).

• • •

COBB STYLE SALAD

½ medium head iceberg lettuce, chopped or torn
¼ cup cooked turkey breast, cubed
½ cup cheddar cheese, cubed
½ cup green pepper pieces
2 1-inch red onion pieces
2 hard cooked eggs, halved
1 medium tomato, seeded and cubed

Place chopped lettuce in a large bowl and set aside.

Chop turkey (in food processor or with knife). Arrange chopped turkey in a stripe down the lettuce.

Chop cheese, green pepper, onion, eggs and tomato and arrange until entire top of salad is covered with stripes of finely chopped ingredients.

Toss with dressing right before serving. Serves two.

Dijon-Peppercorn Salad Dressing

1-2 teaspoons whole black peppercorns
1 garlic clove
1 egg
2 teaspoons dijon mustard
½ teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup salad oil

Grind peppercorns (in pepper grinder or food processor). Add egg, mustard, sugar, salt and ¼ cup oil. If using processor, pour remaining oil through center feed and process until dressing has thickened. If mixing by hand, stir, then add remaining oil and mix until thickened.

Makes 1¼ cups. Keeps in refrigerator up to one week.

Midlanders hope to solve Region I track mysteries

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — The Class 5A Region I track meet here Friday and Saturday at the Lubbock Coronado oval will be a mystery affair that only the eventual running, jumping and throwing can solve.

First, there is the matter of a new Region I makeup. Gone are traditional powers such as Bryan, Temple and Kileen. But there are some new kids on the block to consider.

Districts 14 and 15, the loops with Bryan, Temple and Killeen, have been moved to Region II. Districts 7 and 8 have been moved into Region I with schools mainly in the Fort Worth, Irving and Duncanville areas. No one really seems to know just how this will effect the team races.

"I don't know what to expect, but when you lose teams like Bryan, Temple and Killeen, you can't complain too much. Year in and year out, those teams are going to be good," said Lee track coach Eddie Wolski. "Of course, there are probably some strong teams in the Fort Worth area that will compete well."

And that leaves the question of just how well we can expect the Midland entrants this year to fare. In all, Tall City runners (boys and girls) have qualified in 15 individual events and five relays. Just how many can make it through this hurdle to Austin is the other major mystery and that brings in a lot of little sub-plots along the way.

The top two finishers in each event here earn a trip to Austin for the state meet in two weeks. Here's a look at the prospects by schools.

Midland High Girls

The Lady Bulldogs have qualified for the most events with individuals in five events and two additional relays.

Amy Cumings: The first girl in the state to qualify for eight of the 16 Region events in a high school career will be in five this year. Her best chances for a trip to Austin will come in the 400 meters and 1600 relay. She has run the 400 in only three meets, but might be able to nail down a state berth if new competition pushes her. MHS' 1600 relay with Dawnyaell Shelby, Cumings, Abby Green and Ethel Edwards appears to have a shot with a 12th place state ranking. None of the Region I teams own a better time of 4:00.98, MHS's district time. Cumings is also in the high jump, long jump and sprint relay, all of which are considered long shots.

Ethel Edwards: Back for a third time in the 200 meters, has a revenge motive this weekend. She went to state as a sophomore, but a false start in the finals last year ended a state repeat. "I've thought about last year a lot and hope that doesn't happen this year," says Edwards. She owns a 24.59 this year, ranked fourth in the state. Edwards is also on both the relay teams and will team with Cumings, Carolyn Thomas and Gwen O'Neal in the sprint relay.

Chandra Govan: Even though Govan has been a dominate force in the West Texas shot put, she will have to come through with a big effort to advance in her first Region I appearance. Her district throw was 37-4½, but Trinity's Terri Gowland has a 41-2 this year and is the favorite.

Midland Lee Girls

The Lady Rebels qualified for four individual events and two relays.

Roz Eaden: There are no girls in Region I with state ranked jumps in either the long jump or triple jump, the two events Eaden is in. However, Eaden has been suffering from a muscle pull this year and it's uncertain if she can muster enough distance to make it to Austin.

Tami Woodberry: Woodberry's 14.74 in district put her in state ranked company and she just missed a trip to state last year with a third place finish. She has been a consistent winner and can run with quality competition. Woodberry will also team with Melody Miller, Regina Calicutt and Carrie Roach on the 800 relay team, but that is a long shot.

Melody Miller: Miller was a slight surprise qualifier in the 100, but as luck would have it, she is in the Region girls strongest event with Trimble Tech's Sonja Franklin and Fort Worth Poly's Melissa Blake in the field. Both are in the Top 3 of the state. Miller, however will also be on both relays, teaming with Calicutt, Francis Williams and Roach in the sprint relay, a long shot entry.

Lakers knock Denver out with sweep

Associated Press

It didn't take Denver's Doug Moe long to decide that the Los Angeles Lakers should be favored to win the NBA championship. Three games, to be exact.

The Lakers, with Byron Scott scoring 25 points and James Worthy 22, beat the Nuggets 140-103 Wednesday night, completing the first sweep of the Denver franchise in 23 playoff series.

"They played terrific," Moe said. "I knew we were in trouble at halftime because we had played about as good as we could play and we were still down 13 points.

"I can't see anyone that they can't beat. Maybe I'm wrong, but I think they're going to coast through this thing. They're just overwhelming and a truly awesome basketball team."

"When we get rolling, it's hard to stop us," Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said. "I didn't expect a blowout of this proportion. Our defense just got the job done. When you get a team down by 40 on the road, you're playing well."

Scott and Worthy led seven Lakers in double figures, but Abdul-Jabbar was not one of them as he finished with nine points.

Abdul-Jabbar, who recently extended his regular-season streak to 774 games in double figures, had a combined regular season-playoff string of 467 games before Wednesday night. He was held to six points in a playoff game in 1982 against Philadelphia.

Tonight's games have Portland at Houston and Dallas at Seattle, with the home teams leading both series 2-1.

On Friday night, it's Milwaukee at Philadelphia, Atlanta at Indiana and Utah at Golden State.

Pacers 96, Hawks 87

Chuck Person had 23 points, 17 rebounds and seven assists as Indiana won its first playoff game since joining the NBA.

The Pacers, in their 11th NBA season, are in the playoffs for the second time. They lost 2-0 in a mini-series against Philadelphia in their only previous appearance in 1981.

Atlanta, which trailed by as many as 18 points in the first half, hit 11 of 14 shots from the field in the third quarter and closed within three points with an 11-0 streak midway through the period. But Person, who had only five points in the first half, kept Indiana in front and helped the Pacers take a 69-60 lead late in the quarter.

Person said the key to the game was holding the Hawks to three offensive rebounds after they had 20 in Game 2.

"I only had nine rebounds in the previous two games, and I wanted to catch up," he said.

Pistons 97, Bullets 96

Rick Mahorn hit one of two free throws with four seconds remaining, giving the Detroit the sweep.

Mahorn, who improved his foul shooting dramatically this season, missed his first free-throw attempt and made the second. The Bullets then failed to get the ball in bounds successfully after calling time out twice.

"I worked hard on my free throws all summer, so this felt good," Mahorn said. "When I missed, I just concentrated hard on the second one."

Mahorn shot .829 from the free throw line in the regular season, after wavering between .575 and .683 in six previous campaigns.

He got his chance at the line after being fouled by Charles Jones at about the same time Washington's Frank Johnson and Isiah Thomas scuffled and then were ejected.

Warriors 110, Jazz 95

Golden State avoided being swept in its first playoff appearance since 1977, beating Utah as reserve guard Terry Teagle scored 30 points and Sleepy Floyd added 27.

Golden State opened the fourth quarter with a 12-2 run for an 89-69 lead, with Teagle accounting for six of his 14 fourth-quarter points. But Utah nearly caught up behind the scoring of Darrell Griffith and Karl Malone, cutting the deficit to 91-86 with 3:24 left.

Bucks 121, 76ers 120

Milwaukee, which lost Game 2 at home in overtime, got a narrow victory in Philadelphia when Jack Sikma hit a short jumper with two seconds left after having a shot blocked by Roy Hinson.

The Bucks trailed 117-109 with 2:36 to go, but scored 10 consecutive points, five by Terry Cummings, to go ahead.

Alysheba rich in family history

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Alysheba will be running for the Scharbauers of Midland in Saturday's Kentucky Derby and not some Arabian shiek.

When it comes to horses names, nothing really is surprising. Still, Alysheba? How did a horse owned by West Texans come up with a name like that?

"Easy enough," explains Clarence Scharbauer, Jr., "It was sired by Alydar, one of the finest, and the mother was Bel Sheba. Pam came up with the name, but it was only sixth on the list of those submitted. Sometimes it's difficult finding a name for a horse that hasn't already been taken."

"Actually, the horse belongs to Dorothy and Pam," explains Scharbauer. "We bought him at the 1985 summer sale in Keeneland."

DOROTHY Scharbauer is the daughter of the late Fred Turner and Pam is the granddaughter. Turner's Tomy Lee won the Kentucky Derby in 1959 and "It's something the media is picking up on around the country, the relationship between grandfather, daughter and granddaughter. In fact, we were on Sam Donaldson's ABC show Sunday."

A victory by Alysheba would really give the media something with which to run.

Scharbauer points out that Trainer Jack Van Berg "wouldn't trade his chances with anybody else in the race." Van Berg speaks with the authority of a Hall of Fame trainer who has won more races than anybody else in the business, says Scharbauer.

Only Capote, owned by Midlanders Bobby French and Barry Beal, of the Derby field has beaten Aylsheba.

IN HIS first year, Alysheba started 10 times, won one, took five seconds, a third, a fourth and a fifth. It has finished second in every stakes race entered and was third in the $10,000,000 Breeders Cup Nov. 1, a race won by Capote.

"Alysheba ranks among the top three or four in the field," says the Midlander.

Chris McCarron, one of the best jockeys around, will be up Saturday. Pat Day had been riding Alysheba, but "Pat likes the chances of Demons Begone and will ride him. McCarron rode Alysheba in the Santa Anita's Cup recently. Alysheba won but went from first to third because he bumped a horse on the outside coming out of the start."

The Scharbauers paid $500,000 for Alysheba, but already feel they've gotten their money's worth with $442,000 in earnings already and there's no telling what the stud fee might be worth, especially with a good showing in the Derby.

"This isn't a hobby for us. We're in it to make money," says Scharbauer.

Of course, the Derby represents a no-man's land of sorts for all of the three-year-olds entered. None have gone the 1¼-mile distance and you can't really be sure how they will respond until they do.

But that's not a worry for Scharbauer. "He finished second in the 1¼-mile run at Keeneland last week and he was bred to run the distance. He's for real. There's no fluke about him."

THE FUTURE? "If he makes a good showing in the Derby, there's no doubt about it we'll go to the Preakness and Belmont. We'll play each race by ear. If he doesn't do well, we might take him back to California and run some stake races."

Alysheba, says Scharbauer, "doesn't go to the front, but has that kick at the end." which sounds like a familiar refrain. When the Turner horse won in 1959, it was with a thunderous stretch finish that caught Sword Dancer by a nose at the wire.

Will they Play-It-Again,-Sam this Saturday?

Oklahoma lands Blaylock

From Staff Reports

Mookie Blaylock announced signing a letter-of-intent to play basketball at the University of Oklahoma while Lincoln Minor confirmed his signing with Kansas University this morning at a press conference at Midland College.

Blaylock, who averaged 19.6 points per game for Midland College's 35-5 Chaparrals last season, visited the University of Minnesota, Ohio State and Auburn, but picked the Sooners because, "I believe I can go up there and start right away. Ricky Grace didn't influence the choice," said, the Garland product, "but it will be nice playing with him again."

Grace played for the Chaparrals in 1985-86 and was a starter at OU last season.

KU announced last week that Minor had signed with the Jayhawks and Minor, who averaged 16.1 points per game last season, confirmed it.

"It's a good program. I liked the coaching staff. I liked the campus and the players returning from last year's team. All were factors," said Minor.

This marked the first time that all of MC's sophomores signed letters-of-intent to Division I colleges. Pivot Bruce Nix signed with Sam Houston State last fall while guard Todd Duncan signed with Texas Tech two weeks ago.

The Chaps were 33-1 in 1985-86 and reached the NJCAA finals last season, losing to Southern Idaho, 69-68, but played the championship game without Blaylock, who broke a bone in his foot in the semifinals.

As freshmen, Blaylock averaged 16.8 points and Minor 12.4.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Redskins insure Midland suffering

Williamson

Abuse isn't Rodney Dangerfield in a Miller Lite commercial, it's the 1987 NFL draft. I mean, for gosh sakes, Wally Kleine is a Hog.

Now that's abuse for all loyal Midlanders, who wave the silver and blue of the Dallas Cowboys. As far as I know, city editor Gary Ott, our unbeloved lover of the Washington Redskins, is the only person in town who can swallow this turn of events.

I saw Kleine last week working out at Memorial Stadium. He was my friend then. He wasn't a Redskin Hog. He wasn't talking about mashing one of the Cowboys' new calorie counters.

The former Midland High star looked great. I mistook him for a mountain. You could ski off his shoulders. Now he's a Redskin, the bad guy, an Irish background gone amuck.

Kleine was the 49th player selected in the draft, a second round price tag that will surely bring him some big bucks. But surely there are more important things than a football career with big bucks.

Surely this is an NFL conspiracy against Midland. After all, we should have some rights. We spent a lot of Friday nights watching this Bulldog mature into a player.

It's a known fact, Kleine's mom and dad have been known to root once or twice for the Dallas Cowboys. Is this the way a kid repays his parents after years of time investment?

THE WAY Kleine became a Hog is even suspect. Washington took him from the New York Jets through the Los Angeles Raiders. Now we can see Kleine as a Jet. After all, he proudly wore the green of Notre Dame for the past four years. Even the black and sliver of the Raiders wouldn't hurt too bad. But Washington Hog Red? There's no hope for the world.

I worry about Wally. No, he can take care of himself on the football field. But can he ever return home safely to visit mom and dad? There are too many of us Cowboy rednecks around here.

But it's over. I heard him say it. "I'm a Hog," he said. A Washington-Dallas Sunday afternoon will never be the same.

HOWEVER, KLEINE'S former MHS teammate Joe Goebel was drafted by the San Diego Chargers in the 11th round, the 284th player picked.

The UCLA center will be pass blocking and snapping the ball to Dan Fouts. That isn't so bad.

Goebel will make the Charger team. That's a prediction you can take to the bank. The Chargers need help in the offensive line.

Maybe when Dallas and Washington are playing against each other, we can switch the dial to NBC and see the Goebel to Fouts combination. That's easier to swallow than seeing Kleine mash a Cowboy.

Former MHS cager finally rewarded for back pain

By MICKEY HUMPHREY
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO (AP) — It seemed like a normal fall at the time. Little did Texas-El Paso forward Gary Brewster realize his basketball career had, for all intents and purposes, ended that night against Arizona a decade ago.

That didn't keep the Buffalo Braves from selecting Brewster with their first pick in the 1976 NBA draft at the very moment he was undergoing a back operation.

Brewster never played a minute for Buffalo, and he bounced around pro leagues in Italy, Austria and Mexico for seven years, trying to keep his lifelong dream of a basketball career alive. A bad back never let him realize that dream.

"It was tragic," says Gene Iba, Baylor basketball coach, who was an assistant at UTEP at the time. "He is simply the best basketball player I've ever coached and the best defensive player I've ever seen."

Brewster now is a paint contractor living in Midland. He was inducted recently into the Texas High School Hall of Fame at Waco.

"I thought it was friends pulling a prank on me when I got the call telling me about the selection," Brewster said. "This erases some of the pain I've gone through over the years. This lets me forget a little bit about the days I couldn't bend down and touch my toes."

The 6-foot-9 Brewster averaged 24.1 points in leading Midland High to the high school state tournament his senior year in 1972. Midland lost to San Antonio Roosevelt when future Texas Tech star Rick Bullock hit two free throws in the final 10 seconds.

"Bullock hadn't made a free throw the whole game, and then he makes both. I couldn't believe it. I would have given you a dollar that he wouldn't have made them," Brewster said.

Brewster signed with Texas-El Paso and then made his mark as a defensive whiz. In one game, Brewster guarded Utah guard Tickey Burden. Burden was averaging almost 30 points, but he got only four against Brewster. In a game against Southwestern Louisiana's Bo Lamar, he held Lamar to one shot.

"Coach (Don) Haskins always told me to grab the hot dog," said Brewster. "I enjoyed guarding big name people like (SMU's) Ira Terrell or Burden and shutting them down. I enjoyed defense."

Boston Celtics general manager Red Auerbach called Brewster "the finest defensive player I've ever seen." In 25 games his senior season, Brewster shut out the man he was guarding eight times.

"Gary couldn't jump high enough to get toilet paper under his feet," said Iba. "He couldn't jump a lick, but he knew basketball. He had the quickness to make up for his lack of jumping ability."

Iba believes Brewster hurt his back during an exhibition tour of Mexico when UTEP played seven games during a seven-night stretch. The fall that night against Arizona was the final blow.

"Gary kept telling the trainer the whole season his back was tight," Iba said. "The neurosurgeon said the disc had basically liquefied. He couldn't believe anyone could have stood the pain."

Brewster, who is UTEP's sixth all-time leading scorer with 1,213 points and fifth in rebounds with 713, has no regrets the back injury cut his career short.

"The back operation should have been the end of my career," Brewster said. "I chased it around a while. I lost a couple of steps. I couldn't move. I had the quickness, but then I lost that.

"I feel sorry for my wife (Deborah). We have some not-so-fond memories of playing in Europe. I wanted to play basketball, and there weren't any English-speaking people in the small towns we played. I had basketball. She had nothing. That's when I decided it was time to rid myself of the ghost."

Mets' Hernandez finds way to scuff Scott's fast ball

Associated Press

Some of the baseballs Mike Scott threw undoubtedly were scuffed — after they were struck by Keith Hernandez's bat.

But the balls Hernandez hit for a home run in the fourth inning and an RBI single in the fifth as the New York Mets edged the Houston Astros 2-1 Wednesday night weren't examined by the umpires. Nevertheless, they checked Scott on four different occasions, apparently on instructions from National League President A. Bartlett Giamatti.

As usual, they found nothing.

"(Plate umpire Randy) Marsh told me he had orders from Giamatti to check the balls," Houston Manager Hal Lanier said.

Giamatti and supervisor of umpires Ed Vargo visited the umpires' dressing room after the game. Neither had any comment, nor did the umpires.

"I'm calling Giamatti and asking why did he wait until Scott's sixth game of the season. Not one umpire found one (a scuffed baseball)," Lanier said. "I don't blame the umps. They were following orders."

Cubs 8, Giants 4

Andre Dawson hit for the cycle for the first time in his career. He hit his sixth home run in the first inning, doubled a run home in the third, singled in the fourth, tripled in the sixth and singled again in the eighth. He also threw losing pitcher Roger Mason out at first base in the second inning after an apparent single to right field.

Braves 5, Reds 2

Ken Griffey and Rafael Ramirez hit consecutive two-out home runs off Bill Gullickson in the third inning and Zane Smith allowed five hits in eight innings-plus for his first career victory over Cincinnati. Smith was relieved by Gene Garber after the Reds opened the bottom of the ninth with a single and a walk.

Cardinals 10, Padres 6

Curt Ford's single snapped a tie and Vince Coleman followed with a two-run single as St. Louis rallied for five runs in the bottom of the eighth. Trailing 6-5 after San Diego scored four times in the top of the eighth, St. Louis pounded relievers Lance McCullers and Dave Dravecky and recorded its fifth come-from-behind victory this year.

Baseball Results

Dodgers 10, Pirates 2

Bob Welch held Pittsburgh to one-hit in seven innings while running his pitching streak to 27 innings without an earned run. Welch struck out eight and allowed only R.J. Reynolds' two-out double in the second inning.

Phillies 5, Expos 0

Shane Rawley became the first Philadelphia pitcher to throw a complete game this season, limiting Montreal to six hits. Rawley, who missed the last two months of the 1986 season with a broken bone in his left shoulder, struck out four and walked four.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Rangers 8, Yankees 7

Pinch hitter Geno Petralli looped a two-out, two-strike single into right field to score Don Slaught from third base for Texas. Petralli delivered his clutch hit off Yankees reliever Cecilio Guante as the Rangers won their sixth consecutive game, the longest current streak in the big leagues.

Slaught started the Rangers' rally with a two-out double down the left field line. Steve Buechele beat out an infield single to set up Petralli's game-winning hit that gave the Rangers a sweep of the two-game series with the Yankees.

The Rangers tied the score 7-7 with three runs in the bottom of the eighth inning off Yankees ace reliever Dave Righetti. With one out, Righetti hit Buechele and walked Bob Brower and Jerry Browne. Scott Fletcher delivered a two-run single and Pete O'Brien hit a sacrifice fly to tie the game.

Brewers 8, Athletics 7

Milwaukee kept rolling, with their 18th victory in 20 games, despite losing the American League's leading hitter, Paul Molitor, and blowing a four-run lead.

Molitor raised his American League-leading average to .395 with a homer, but he strained a hamstring as he sprinted out of the batter's box and had to leave the game.

If the Brewers end April with another victory over the A's on Thursday, they'll have a 19-2 record and the best full-month winning percentage (.905) in modern baseball history, topping the Detroit Tigers 18-2 (.900) performance in April 1984.

Indians 6, Chisox 5

Doug Frobel, called up from Class AAA Buffalo the day before, sent the first pitch in the bottom of the ninth inning over the fence in right-center field. The 27-year-old Frobel was pinch hitting for rookie Dave Gallagher when he drove the 400-foot home run off Bob James, 1-2, the White Sox' third pitcher.

Blue Jays 8, Twins 1

Lloyd Moseby and Ernie Whitt each snapped home run droughts and Joe Johnson, 1-2, allowed only three hits and walked three in 7⅓ innings before Mark Eichhorn relieved. Kirby Puckett had a leadoff single in the fourth, Tom Brunansky singled in the eighth and scored on a double by Greg Gagne against Johnson.

Royals 5, Orioles 4

Willie Wilson tripled home the tying run in the ninth and scored the winner with two outs when third baseman Floyd Rayford threw wildly to first.

Red Sox 11, Mariners 5

Seldom-used Mike Greenwell had three hits, including his first home run of the year, and drove in four runs to pace a 13-hit attack for Boston, which snapped a five-game losing streak.

Greenwell entered the game with just one hit in 11 at-bats this year. He was playing left field for Jim Rice, who had the day off.

Tigers 2, Angels 1

Darnell Coles doubled to drive in the tie-breaking run in the 10th inning and give Detroit the victory.

Darrell Evans began the inning by walking against reliever Donnie Moore, 1-1. Pinch runner Terry Harper was forced at second on Larry Herndon's bunt, but Matt Nokes singled and Coles followed with his double into the left field corner. It was Coles' second hit in his last 33 at-bats.

Nokes homered in the eighth off Angels starter Don Sutton and gave Dan Petry a lead he couldn't hold.

California tied it in the bottom of the eighth. Mark McLemore walked, Brian Downing was hit by a pitch and Devon White singled in the run off King.

Angels hold on for 12-11 win

Associated Press

EL PASO — Midland racked up 12 runs in the first four innings and then held on for a 12-11 win over El Paso in Texas League action Wednesday night.

At Dudley Field, Midland scored 12 runs in the first four innings, only to see a 9-0 lead chipped away by the Diablos.

Midland pitcher Phil Venturino had shut out the Diablos the first two innings and retired the first batter in the third. Venturino, 3-1, took the win.

Then Darryel Walters started with a single to left. Lavell Freeman followed with a two-run homer to right center. Jesus Alfaro sent Venturino's next pitch far over the left center field wall for a solo home run. Two pitches later, Garrett Nago lined a Venturino pitch off the right field wall. One out later Casey blasted his first home run, a towering shot over the right field fence.

Midland held on for the win, improving their record to 11-12. El Paso dropped to 13-10. Pitcher Alan Sadler, 1-2, took the loss.

Midland's attack was aided by three homers by Redfield, VanBurkleo and Farmar. Redfield connected for his 10th of the year. He drove in four runs with two hits.

NFL ignores Kevin Murray

HOUSTON (AP) — A Texas A&M offensive coordinator says he is puzzled that school quarterback Kevin Murray was bypassed in the National Football League draft.

"I can't understand it. I'm shocked. All of the scouts had come in here and everything we had heard had him projected pretty high. Not to take anything away from any of the quarterbacks drafted, but I know Kevin is better than some of them," Lynn Amedee said Wednesday.

Amedee denied rumors that the two-time Southwest Conference offensive player is difficult to work with.

"I can't believe anyone would say that without checking with his coaches. Kevin has been fabulous to work with here and no one from any NFL team has asked me about his attitude," Amedee said.

Amedee said he could not reach Murray Wednesday. Murray watched the draft on television with teammate Keith Woodside.

"Keith told me Kevin was very upset," Amedee said.

The Dallas Cowboys and Houston Oilers had scouted Murray, but both passed on him during Tuesday's draft.

"I was very surprised no one took him," said Mike Holovak, the Oilers' director of player personnel. "We had taken a quarterback earlier in the draft and you can only look at so many. We already had three quarterbacks and with the draft we had four."

Brandt, the Cowboys' vice president for personnel and development, said his organization was under the impression that Murray wanted to play outside of Texas.

Murray, a junior in eligibility, decided just six weeks ago to make himself available for the draft, and even though he was not drafted, he is now no longer eligible to play in the NCAA. Going into the draft, Murray was rated among the top 10 available quarterbacks (19 were chosen).

Holovak said he believes Murray could still have a future in the NFL.

Repeat title out for Stanton

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — The Stanton boys golf team finished fourth here Wednesday in the Class 2A Region I golf tournament, losing a chance to defend the state title the Buffaloes won a year ago.

Ozona's Bret Hood posted a two-day score of 150 with a 75 on Wednesday to win medalist honors and a trip to the state meet. Memphis' Darryl Coffer had a 152 for second. Reagan County's Keith Bittner was fourth with a 160.

Stanton was paced by Greg Avery with a 165 and Skip Hopkins had a 162, both finishing in the top 10. Other Stanton golfers were Brad Holland, 174; Rusty Haggard, 186; and Stan Young, 178.

Dollar slips

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all key currencies except the Canadian dollar in light European trading early today. Gold and silver bullion rose.

Dealers said the dollar continued its fall in New York late Wednesday following the passage of a House of Representatives amendment to force other nations, particularly Japan, to slash their trade surpluses or face tough sanctions.

But the dollar was expected to trade within a narrow range ahead of a three-day holiday in much of Europe, dealers said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar edged up to a closing 139.65 Japanese yen from 139.45 yen at Tuesday's close. Japanese markets were closed Wednesday for a national holiday.

Later, in London, the dollar traded at 139.55 yen.

GOLD

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $454.60 a troy ounce, up from $451.50 late Wednesday. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $454.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $454.70, up from $451.50 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose to a closing bid of $454.18 from $450.48.

Silver jumped in London to a bid of $8.15 a troy ounce from $7.90 late Wednesdav.

Fed removes final hurdle to Republic/InterFirst merger

DALLAS (AP) — Federal approval of the merger of two Dallas bankholding companies clears the way for shareholder votes on the proposed $544 million acquisition of InterFirst Corp. by RepublicBank Corp.

The Federal Reserve Board on Wednesday unanimously approved the merger, which would form the nation's 12th largest banking organization and the largest headquartered in the Southwest.

A new Dallas-based company called First RepublicBank Corp., with $35 billion in total assets, would result from the merger.

In approving the plan, the Fed noted the weakened condition of the Texas economy and said the deal represents the "best available alternative to address InterFirst's financial difficulties." operations will create an organization with more than $35 billion in total assets and the largest banking company headquartered in the Southwest.

Stockholders of both corporations are scheduled to vote on the merger in separate meetings on May 27 in Dallas. Approval would complete all requirements for the merger after expiration of the standard 30-day waiting period, which began Wednesday.

"With shareholder approval, we will be creating an organization fully capable of competing on a national basis with other large financial service companies," said RepublicBank Chairman Gerald W. Fronterhouse.

The Fed order requires that RepublicBank issue $175 million in new preferred stock and convertible subordinated notes to boost its capital position. The amound is $50 million greater than originally proposed when the merger was announced Dec. 16.

Sufficient capital was an important component in granting approval, the Fed said, noting the weak Texas economy, the decline in operating performance at the banks and significant losses.

The Fed ordered the companies to divest only one subsidiary bank to eliminate anti-competitive market concentration. InterFirst announced Wednesday it had reached an agreement to sell its subsidiary bank in Brownwood to fulfill that requirement.

Bank officials estimate $710 million will be saved in the five years after the acquisition.

FTC: Crude storage cheaper than tariff

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's cheaper for the United States to store crude oil against a possible disruption in imports than it is to impose a protective tariff, according to a staff study for the Federal Trade Commission.

The study, released Wednesday and yet to be passed on by the commission, parallels an Energy Department report last month. That report said a tariff or import fee would cost the economy more jobs than it would save in the domestic oil production industry, hard hit by more than a year of low prices.

The FTC staff study by economists Keith B. Anderson and Michael Metzger estimated the loss to the economy of a $5-per-barrel tariff on crude oil and gasoline at $3.6 billion to $3.8 billion a year.

The loss figures consist of the amount that consumers would pay in higher prices and that refiners would suffer in reduced profits, even when taken against higher profits to domestic producers and increased revenues to the government.

Similar tariffs have been proposed in Congress, but have languished in the face of opposition by the Reagan administration and the consuming states.

"Even if there is a serious risk of a major oil shock and assuming that a tariff is capable of ensuring an adequate level of production in the future, it appears to be less costly to acquire and store the oil needed to maintain an acceptable level of consumption in the event of a disruption," Anderson and Metzger wrote.

The government has in fact squirreled away 520 million barrels of oil in salt domes along the Texas and Lousiana coasts, about 100 days' worth of imports. The study assumes there is no oil already stored.

The study calculated the cost of storing enough oil to provide a year's supply of 1.1 million barrels a day, which would be the amount of extra production stimulated by a $5 tariff on crude and gasoline.

Assuming a 3 percent loss of oil that cannot be retrieved, 413 million barrels would be needed.

At $17 a barrel for the oil and $3 a barrel to build a storage site, the first year's cost of storage would be $8.25 billion. The oil would be purchased all at once. The first-year cost of the tariff would be $3.8 billion.

However, storage costs would drop in the future to the costs of maintaining the reserve and the interest on the money to buy the oil, while the tariff cost would recur yearly.

If the disruption came in the fifth year, the tariff would cost the equivalent of $9.1 billion in today's dollars, while the storage strategy would return $1.55 billion. If the disruption came in the 10th year, cost of the tariff strategy would be $24.4 billion and the cost of the storage strategy would be $2.75 billion.

Penney latest New York casualty

Spiraling real estate values play role in corporate moves

NEW YORK (AP) — J.C. Penney decided to relocate its front office to Texas to be closer to its stores and the center of its operations, the chairman of the company said.

"Two-thirds of our operations are in the West and Midwest," said the official, William R. Howell. "By relocating to Dallas, we can simultaneously meet several corporate objectives that position us for continued growth into the next century."

The company announced Wednesday it was moving its corporate headquaters and 3,800 jobs to Dallas next year to be closer to its 1,400 stores.

Deputy Mayor Alair Townsend said offers of tax breaks and lower energy costs could not induce the giant retail chain to stay.

Penney's departure, along with that of Mobil Oil, which announced last Friday that it would move to Fairfax, Va., will reduce to 51 the number of Fortune 500 companies still headquartered in the city.

In 1969, about 125 of the nation's top corporations were based here. Some among the 74 missing companies were lost through mergers, but most just changed addresses.

The exodus was heaviest in the first half of the 1970s, a time of fiscal crisis and tarnished image for New York. Companies found that high taxes and the perception of bad public schools, crime and other municipal decline were keeping promising executives from locating in the city.

The deserters didn't go far, however, with two dozen, most notably General Electric in 1974, settling into southern Connecticut, close enough for executives and important customers to partake of Manhattan high life.

The current wave of departures comes with the Big Apple looking a lot glossier and taxes coming down.

Mobil, in announcing that it would be gone in three years, with 1,900 jobs, cited the cost of doing business and the high cost of living here for its employees. The No. 2 U.S. oil company, or its precedessor corporation, had been in New York since 1866.

Real estate and financial experts have estimated that the 42-story headquarters building on 42nd Street that Mobil bought in 1978 could be disposed of for as much as $500 million or bring in $60 million a year in rent.

The 45-story office tower just north of Rockefeller Center that Penney bought in 1977 for about $40 million, and which is assessed at $100 million for tax purposes, was believed to be worth as much as $400 million in today's market.

Penney said it would lease the 1.5-million-square-foot building, but said it had no estimate immediately of what rents would amount to.

Exxon's headquarters building, three blocks to the south, sold for $610 million last November.

Still officially headquartered in New York, Exxon has moved 2,000 of its front-office people to New Jersey and keeps only 325 in the city.

AT&T touched off an uproar in March when it said it was going to shift 1,000 of its 1,300 headquarters people to New Jersey and rent the freed space in its Madison Avenue tower for an estimated $30 million a year.

Hardin leaves chamber post

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Steve Hardin's decision to leave Midland and his job as director of economic development at the Midland Chamber of Commerce was one he did not come by easily. "I believe Midland and West Texas are on the edge of some exciting and very profitable endeavors. It's difficult to leave when some of the projects we have worked so hard for are coming to fruition," said Hardin.

Hardin, who has accepted a position as director of industrial and community development for The Delta Association in Greenville, Miss., says his two years with the local chamber have been both rewarding and challenging.

"I believe in Midland and its ability to survive. Besides financial and natural resources, its bountiful wealth of human resources will see it through tough economic times." Hardin adds that his leaving is "in no way an indication that opportunities for economic development no longer exist in Midland."

Hardin came to the local chamber when the city and the chamber board realized a need for economic diversification. "They felt the best way to accomplish diversification is primarily through industrial development."

He came to his current position from the North Mississippi Industrial Development Association in West Point, Miss. where he was director of development, serving as promoter for development in northeastern Mississippi.

The graduate of Mississippi State University says the previous two years have been a time of building a base for economic development opportunities. "I am proud of the accomplishments we have made. The creation of the Permian Basin Bid Center, Inc. which was a joint effort between the Midland and Odessa chambers is exciting. It was a relatively small dollar investment for the amount of return we have already seen.

"The Bid Center is economic development in its truest sense — it creates jobs, brings in outside investors and takes existing resources and technology and puts them to use."

Said Hardin: "The forming of a foreign trade zone and international port of entry are very close to being reality. It will bring added incentive for businesses to locate in the Midland/Odessa area and also gives local businessmen an opportunity to export goods in or out of the area."

Work being done by Hardin and the chamber's venture capital committee is also a bright spot for future diversification. "Economic development is all keyed around getting investor dollars. The committee and I have been working on identifying where the venture capitalists are who might be interested in investing in Midland. After we identify the sources, we will be trying to locate local individuals who need venture capital for projects," Hardin continues.

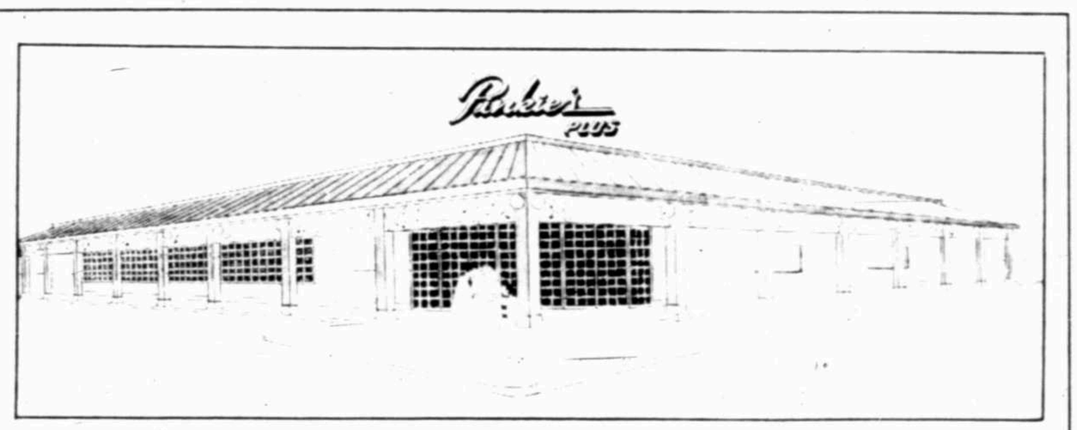
Hardin

Ironically, Hardin says the most exciting project he has worked on during his stay in Midland, the Superconducting Super Collider, will also be a project he will be working to bring to the Mississippi Delta in his new position. "Realistically, however, I still feel like the Garden City site is the best for the project. It meets all of the criteria and is a top-notch location for it."

He says the multi-billion dollar project is an economic developer's dream and West Texas stands a very good chance of landing it.

Hardin attributes many of his tenure's accomplishments to a spirit of teamwork among city leaders and especially between the Midland and Odessa chambers. "It is extremely important that the two cities work together. When you market Midland, you automatically market Odessa. We are doing some things that will be beneficial to both communities and teamwork is crucial."

Hardin says he has enjoyed his work in Midland: "I can't think of a better city to live in. For a town of this size, the opportunities are unmatched. My career just happens to be leading me away."



Local retailer changing directions

From Staff Reports

Pinkie's Liquor Stores Inc. has acquired the Cobb's department store location at Eighth and Maple streets in Odessa, with its sights set on branching beyond its traditional retail lines.

According to Jack Robbins, president and chief executive officer, the location will represent Pinkie's first venture into a new type of retail store: Pinkie's Plus.

"In addition to the full lines of liquors, beers and wines, this store will feature a complete meat and garden-fresh produce section," Robbins said. "Our emphasis will be on service, cut-to-order meats and the highest quality meat and produce available."

The new store will usher in a new era for the 52-year-old company. "With the advent of Pinkie's Plus, we feel we are offering the public something previously unavailable anywhere in Texas. Additionally, we envision a Pinkie's Plus in many of the markets in which we now operate," he said.

Remodeling will begin immediately on the 20,000 square foot facility, with Pinkie's committing in excess of $1.2 million to the project. The company plans to have the first Pinkie's Plus open by Sept. 1, creating approximately 50 jobs.

Founded in 1934 by Tom "Pinkie" Roden, the company operates 21 retail liquor stores in seven West Texas cities. The chain is ranked as one of the top ten liquor retailers in the United States.

Fence-mending time comes for communicators

Howland

There are times when issues and events dwarf long-standing competitiveness, rendering it trivial in comparison. The joint efforts of the Reporter-Telegram and its friendly daily rivals in Odessa, Big Spring and San Angelo to produce an informative publication on the myriad facets of the superconducting super collider is a prime example.

At least one local television station felt that the joint-produced tabloid effort was newsworthy enough to warrant coverage of the setting aside of individual interests for the "common economic good of all."

On the national front as well, there comes a time when petty differences must be set aside to address the "Big Picture."

A groundswell of public opinion against "the press" in general — both electronic and print — has professional journalists looking to a group of volunteers in the advertising community for aid in reversing negative public opinions about the press.

This is an interesting development considering the skepticism many journalists show for advertising and its practitioners.

Ad "hustlers" and PR "flaks" have often been referred to in less than glowing terms by their brethren who consider themselves "serious journalists," but the two groups are setting aside those differences to work on an ad campaign dubbed Project Watchdog. The multi-media campaign will center on the theme "If the press didn't tell us, who would?"

Consumer research compelled the Chicago-based Society of Professional Journalists to approach the Advertising Council. Among the findings of a recent Roper poll was that one in five Americans would remove freedom of the press from the First Amendment if they could, and a Times Mirror-Gallup Poll showed that one in three Americans feel negatively about the press.

Some of the examples used in the television, radio, newspaper and magazine advertising are: exposing President Ferdinand Marcos's corrupt regime; clarifying the events and effects of the Chernobyl nuclear accident; disclosing Kurt Waldheim's checkered past and reporting the defects which caused the Challenger tragedy.

Without electronic press outlets such as CNN's Larry King Live and ABC's Nightline, the "tele-evangelists" of the electronic pulpit would not have the opportunity to become "tell-evangelists," as the Rev. John Ankerberg was able to do last weekend.

The print ads will take two approaches. In the graphic-oriented ads global incidents such as the Marcos election and the Chernobyl accident are depicted in separate ads with two to three large photographs and very little copy except: "If the press didn't tell us, who would?"

The copy-intesive approach tells the story with headlines. One uses headlines such as "Crook got 40 months instead of 40 years" and "Man let out of prison early; arrested in slaying of three" to illustrate the case of an outraged public — informed by a free press — stopped Michigan officials from taking extreme steps to overcome prison overcrowding.

Every ad in the campaign will carry an 800 phone number so that interested parties can call for a brochure that uses the theme line as its title.

The brochure includes a quote from Alan Barth of The Washington Post that says, in part, "If you want a watchdog to warn you of intruders you must put up with a certain amount of mistaken barking."

The positions of chief executive officer and president had been held by Chiles since 1985. Chiles continues as chairman.

United Gas Pipe Line sold to LaSalle Energy

HOUSTON (AP) — United Gas Pipe Line Co. which has 9,800 miles of pipeline and assets of $1.2 billion is being sold by Occidental Petroleum Corp. to Dallas-based LaSalle Energy Corp., officials said.

An Occidental spokesman said Monday that the pipeline company and its relatively small marketing subsidiary, UER Marketing, were being sold to LaSalle. The spokesman said it was a stock transaction, but would not disclose further details.

Union Texas participates in Gulf bidding

HOUSTON (SWN) — Union Texas Petroleum reported that it participated in apparent high bids on seven Gulf of Mexico blocks offered at the federal offshore lease sale in New Orleans, La., on Wednesday, April 22. Overall, the company bid on a total of eight blocks in the sale. The company said that its portion of the seven high bids totaled approximately $6.1 million. The high bids are subject to approval by the Deapartment of Interior.

Of the seven successful bids, Union Texas has a 100 percent interest in four of the blocks. The company has interests ranging from 25 percent to 50 percent in the remaining three tracts.

Anadarko reports Oklahoma gas discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Anadarko Petroleum Corp. has made a significant natural gas discovery in Alfalfa County, Oklahoma.

On April 2, the Stoabs A 1-34 tested at 1.15 Mmcfd of natural gas from six feet of Misener sandstone perforations below 5,945 feet. The well is located 11 miles east of Cherokee, Oklahoma, eight miles west of the nearest commercial Misener sandstone production in Grant County, Oklahoma.

As operator, Anadarko has a 100 percent working interest in the well, and plans development drilling on the 2,500 net lease acres it has that surround the Stoabs discovery.

Chevron holds dedication for new waterflood project

HOBBS, N.M. — Chevron Co. USA held dedication ceremonies last week for the nearly completed Eunice-Monument South Unit in Lea County, N.M., an ambitious and promising waterflood oil recovery project.

According to R.C. Anderson, Chevron's Hobbs production division manager, and host for the ceremonies, the waterflood project should result in the production of 67 million additional barrels of oil from the Eunice-Monument South Unit over the next 30 years.

Additional revenues for the federal government and the state of New Mexico, because of the secondary recovery project, should be about $767 million and $666 million respectively, Chevron officials said. Private royalty interest owners should share an additional $113 million in revenues, they added.

About 90 percent of the estimated 134 million barrels of primary oil to be recovered from the unit has already been produced in the 53 years of operations since 1934. That figure, however, represents only about 20 percent of the estimated 672 million barrels of original oil in place, and secondary recovery methods are now necessary to recover the additional 67 million barrels.

The process of unitizing the project was underway when Chevron acquired Gulf in 1984. Unitization was completed in February, 1985 and was necessary before a waterflood project could be launched to recover the secondary oil and gas reserves.

Through primary recovery methods, the Eunice-Monument South Unit area is now producing an average of 63,000 barrels of oil a month from 215 active wells. Peak production through the waterflood project should be about 676,000 barrels a month.

Anderson said the cost to install the waterflood project will be approximately $60 million. Completed, the project area will have 178 producing wells and 179 water injection wells on an 80-acre, 5-spot pattern. Production is primarily from the Grayburg formation at an average depth of 3,700 ft. Salt water from the non-productive San Andres formation will be used for the waterflood.

The unit area, about 15 miles southwest of Hobbs, covers 14,490 acres comprising 357 40-acre proration units in the southern portion of the Eunice-Monument pool. The unit is divided into 101 tracts and involves 41 working interest owners and about 350 royalty interest owners.

The New Mexico Oil Conservation Division order approving the unitization and waterflood project allowed Gulf formerly — now Chevron — as unit operator, to place the unit into effect on behalf of all involved parties and initiated the necessary field operations for the waterflooding.

Chevron officials attending the dedication ceremonies included John L. Rowland, vice president, and Jim Irving, general manager, southern region of Chevron USA.

The state of New Mexico, on whose land the waterflood plant is located, was represented by John F. Bigbee, deputy land commissioner. He represented Governor Garrey Carruthers and State Land Commissioner William Humphries, who were unable to attend the ceremonies.

EXPERIENCE A HEIGHTENED AWARENESS OF THE ROAD. AND EVERYTHING ABOVE IT.

Presenting a BMW you're encouraged to open up in even the quietest neighborhoods. The 325i Convertible.

A car which combines all the joys of open-air driving with those of driving a BMW.

Joys which here include a 6-cylinder, 168-horsepower engine "of almost miraculous smoothness" (Motor Magazine). And an all-leather interior offering ample room for four.

Those wishing to see a car deemed "alone in the automotive landscape" (Auto Motor und Sport) should proceed to our showroom. Where we invite you to examine the 325i Convertible by starting it up. And then opening it up.

Susan visits Saddle Club.

I was delighted with my visit to Saddle Club! In addition to the individualized attention I was given by the professional leasing agent, I found the quality of Saddle Club's apartments far superior than I had imagined - and well within my budget.
I was pleasantly suprised to find that washers and dryers are available if needed and that I would have access to 2 swimming pools, 2 raquetball courts, 2 tennis courts, a universal weight room, sauna, jacuzzi, and professional aerobic classes.
