Hance: Oil still king of Texas economy

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Mac McGee of Cactus Drilling Co., president of the Permian Basin IADC, and Matthew Simmons, Houston investment banker, discuss drilling prospects at Thursday's meeting.

DALLAS (AP) — Energy remains the foundation of Texas' economy, despite the ravages of recent years brought on by falling oil prices, Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance said Thursday.

"Oil is still king in Texas," said Hance, who heads the agency that regulates how much oil can be pumped from the state's fields.

"We are not going to have a strong economic recovery until we have (oil price) stability," Hance told a meeting of petroleum industry analysts in Dallas.

Hance stressed stability, rather than high prices, saying even a jump to $30 a barrel for West Texas Intermediate Crude, the benchmark U.S. price, would be harmful. The price has been hovering around $20 per barrel in recent weeks, but dropped 19 cents Thursday to $19.80 a barrel.

Such a price would cause the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries cartel to retaliate by driving down the price, he said.

The recovery from prices as low as $10 a barrel to $20 "has not created drilling activity yet," he said, but if the price remains stable for another six months, exploration should pick up again.

Hance disputed the findings of a recent Southern Methodist University study, which concluded that the Texas economy no longer depends on energy.

He cited another study by Southwest Econometrics, which said a $5 increase in oil prices, sustained for more than a year, would have a larger impact on the state's economy than more than 25 "super colliders," the $4.6 billion atom smasher proposed for south of Dallas.

Hance said the SMU study gave too much weight to the early '80s, at which time oil prices were in the $30 range.

While oil has been the major component of Texas' energy mix, "natural gas is going to be the sexy fuel for the future," said Hance, a former Republican congressman.

"Everybody from Jesse Helms to Jane Fonda will be for natural gas," he said, because it is a cleaner fuel with less environmental problems.

The drawback, he said, will be in delivery, because no new natural gas wells are being drilled.

Hance plugged efforts to broaden the state's economy, "but you cannot forget the thing that's brought us to the point we are today," he said.

Meanwhile, Hance said the oil spill in Alaska's Prince William Sound will make the United States more dependent on foreign oil in the long run because it will hamper efforts to open up more of Alaska to production.

Drilling companies still working under threat

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

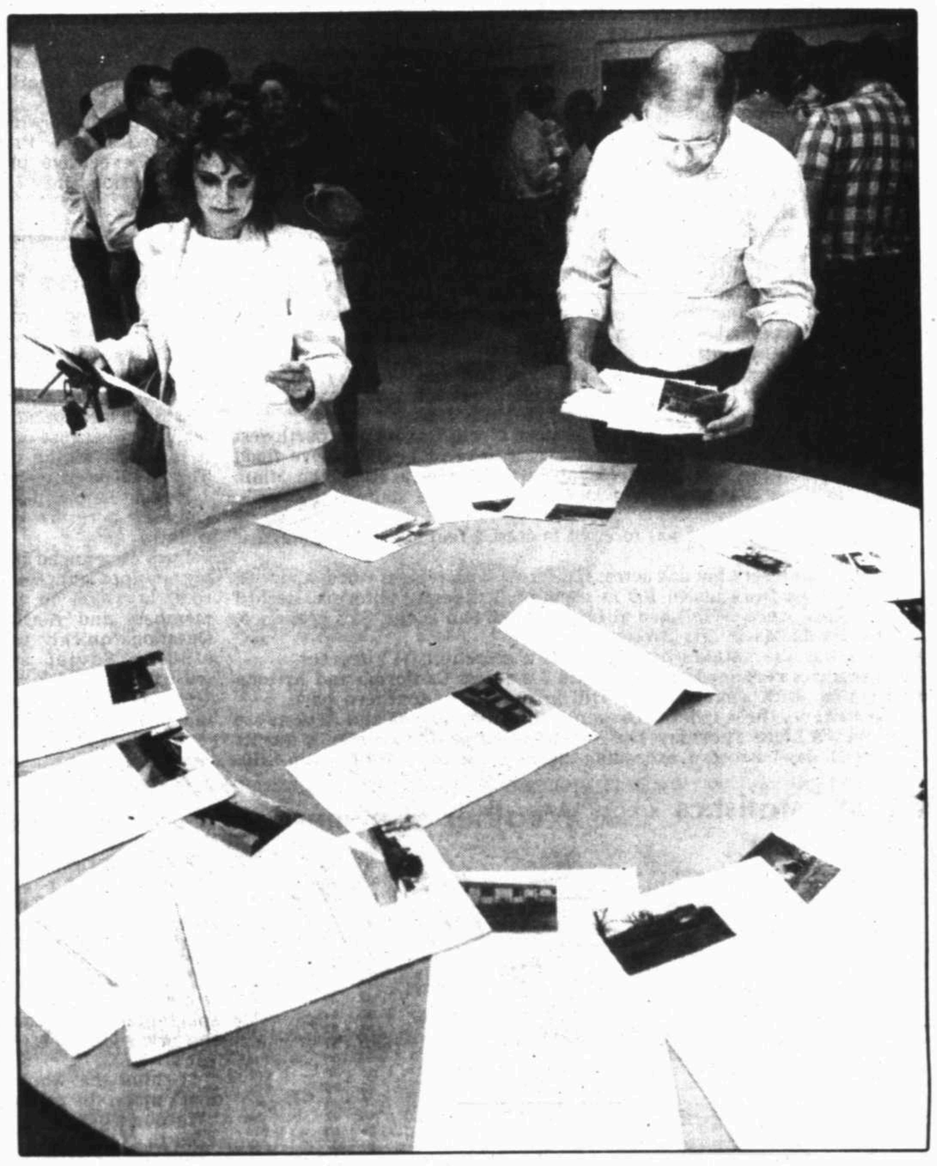

In the last four years, the question for drilling contractors has turned from one of holding on until a turnaround into one of absolute survival.

Matthew Simmons, president of the Houston investment banking firm Simmons & Co. International, told local drilling contractors that the specter of the demise of their segment of the business is "the largest threat to shutting down the domestic oil industry," that exists today.

He addressed a Thursday evening gathering of the Permian Basin chapter of the International Association of Drilling Contractors at the Petroleum Club of Midland.

The massive liquidation of the contract drilling business over the past three to five years has generated more than $2 billion in cash, an amount Simmons says "has masked a lot of time and a lot of inefficiencies."

2,000 could assist in Christmas in April

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Once again in Midland, hammers will be swinging and paint brushes will be sweeping almost in unison, as about 2,000 Midlanders saddle up on Christmas In April projects, repairing and rebuilding houses of the poor, the elderly, the handicapped and the ailing in Midland.

"It makes for a better community," Bobby Trimble, CIA president, said Thursday night after CIA volunteers had selected projects for the CIA work rally on Saturday, April 29.

"It shows that you have greater love of people when you are willing to give of your time to someone else," Trimble said.

For the 17th annual work rally, 147 housing projects, mostly on Midland's east and southeast sides, have been selected. About 100 projects were selected Thursday night at Alamo Heights Baptist Church by representatives of churches, businesses and civic organizations. And since last year's CIA weekend projects, Trimble, CIA volunteer Gene Butler and others have repaired an additional 99 houses.

Trimble will be contracting other groups to take on other projects, which often extend to additional weekends and nights to complete.

"I wish there were a magic word I could say, so somebody would say, 'I'll be there' " to take on a project, Trimble said.

Volunteer work crews will be picking up CIA supplies, materials, and equipment at the new CIA warehouse, which formerly was the King James Apartments at 500 S. Lee St. John Evans had donated the apartments to CIA after Bill Mims, who manages Evans' property, put Evans and Trimble together. Trimble and CIA volunteers converted two of the apartment complex buildings to the warehouse and offices and razed the third building.

The new warehouse, which replaces the old CIA warehouse that was abandoned in a city street-widening project, will be open to the public in in grand opening from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on April 16.

Among volunteers who selected 1989 CIA projects Thursday night were Clayton Ray and Rick Ricketts.

"We did a big one last year," said Ray, a deacon at Macedonia Baptist Church.

"We couldn't finish it all in a day," he said. Macedonia and Greater Ideal Baptist Church volunteers joined in the work project. "We completely stripped it (the roof), and re-roofed it."

Ray said he is looking forward to the 1989 project.

"I'm just interested in helping people," Ray said.

Ricketts, a geologist who is a CIA board member, selected three projects for Midland's First United Methodist Church.

"I've been involved with this about 14 years now — since I've been in town," said Ricketts, a Methodist."It's been fun."

"By doing this yourself, you get a lot more out of it," he said. "You get to meet people, and they really are appreciative."

Many houses have been in ill repair for years, and the owners often are physically and financially unable to work on their houses, he said.

Bush won't comment on North trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush firmly refused today to discuss his role in the Reagan administration's secret plan to aid the Contra rebels, saying he did not want to "prejudice the trial" of former White House aide Oliver North.

"The legal process ought to run unfettered without you or me" interfering, the president told a reporter who asked him to square his previous statements on the affair with courtroom disclosures on Thursday that suggested a greater role than had been known.

Bush said the material presented to the North jury "has been available to" government prosecutors and congressional investigators previously "and has been reviewed by them for any special significance." He would not answer a questioner who quoted Edmund Muskie — a member of a White House investigating panel — as saying that some of the material looked new to him.

"I stand by my statement about the Iran-Contra committee," Bush said.

Bush began his news conference with a statement increasing the federal role in cleaning up the aftermath of the Alaska oil spill. He ordered U.S. Armed forces personnel to assist in the cleanup, saying, "We all share the sorrow and concern of Alaskans."

"Exxon's efforts standing alone are not enough," he said, but emphasizing that the giant oil firm would continue to be responsible and liable for the accident. He defended himself from criticism that it had taken too long for him to provide federal help to the clean-up effort.

On other matters, Bush:

■ Said he was unwilling to compromise with Democrats who seek a larger increase in the minimum wage.

Local gas prices inch upward

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Ray Lindsey says he had to do it again Thursday morning when he got the gasoline bill from the distributors.

Once again, like he has for the past two weeks, the owner of two Texaco service stations in Midland raised the prices on the pumps, bringing unleaded to $1.11 a gallon and regular to $1.05.

"I haven't seen prices increase this quickly in the past 10 years," said Lindsey, who had to jack it up a nickel Thursday. "Somebody's doing something. It doesn't make any sense."

Only two weeks ago Lindsey's customers could get unleaded for 94 cents a gallon and regular for 89 cents.

State racing panel pulls back on two track bids

AUSTIN (AP) — State racing commissioners, worn out from three long days of hearings on pari-mutuel horse track applications, have postponed hearings on two others — at Lubbock and Colleyville.

Angie Roberts, spokeswoman for the Texas Racing Commission, said Thursday that hearings on the Class 2 license applications for Lubbock Downs and Ross Downs likely would be held later this month.

Commissioners this week approved the first three racing licenses — for Trinity Meadows Raceway near Fort Worth; Bandera Downs, near San Antonio; and G. Rollie White Downs, at Brady.

The hearings for all five applications initially had been scheduled to end Tuesday afternoon, but the actual pace proved to be much slower and consumed nearly 30 hours. Each hearing, including the first that ran until 12:50 a.m. Tuesday, took a full day.

"They (the commissioners) just want to take the time to make the right decisions," Ms. Roberts said of the delay on Lubbock and Ross. "This first go-round was pretty lengthy."

Applications for six other Class 2 tracks are scheduled for hearings beginning May 1. The first dog track applications are set for hearings May 10.

Officials of the Trinity Meadows track, located about 10 miles west of Fort Worth, said Wednesday's approval of their license means racing could begin by late September, depending on how many and which racing dates the track is assigned by the Racing Commission.

Commissioners aren't expected to finalize racing dates at least until May, once all applications for the Class 2 licenses are decided.

Class 2 tracks are the intermediate-sized facilities, many of which have been running non-gambling quarter horse races for years. Under the state's racing law, the Class 2 tracks will race for up to 44 days annually.

Besides the Ross and Lubbock applications, others still scheduled to be heard by the commission are:

■ Manor Downs, east of Austin.
■ Longhorn Downs, in Blanco County near Round Mountain.
■ Randall Park, near Canyon.
■ La Bahia Downs, at Goliad.
■ Del Rio Downs, at Del Rio.

The May 10 hearings on the two applications for a Cameron County pari-mutuel greyhound track will involve the Valley Racing Association and Lone Star Greyhound Park, Commission Chairman Hilary Doran said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair skies expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 50s and winds will be southerly 10-15 mph.

Saturday will be sunny and hot with the high expected to reach near 90 degrees. Winds will be variable at 5-15 mph in the morning, becoming easterly by afternoon.

Thursday's high of 87 was 12 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 99 set for that date in 1972. The overnight low of 46 was 23 degrees warmer than the record low of 23 set for this date in 1939.

STATE

A weak low-pressure trough stretching across northwestern sections of Texas today kept skies mostly fair and temperatures mild, with no precipitation expected.

Meanwhile, a high-pressure system aloft brought some low-level clouds into the Brownsville area temporarily. But the cloudiness retreated shortly after midnight, leaving clear skies in its wake.

The surface low-pressure trough reached from North Texas into the Panhandle, prompting northern to northeastern winds in the region at 5 to 10 mph. Winds elsewhere were mostly from the south, the National Weather Service said.

Low temperatures overnight were mostly in the 50s and 60s, with slightly cooler readings in the Panhandle and Big Bend of West Texas, where readings dipped into the 40s. Extremes ranged from 40 degrees at Marfa and 70 degrees at Brownsville.

The weather service said sunny days and fair nights should continue through Saturday. Highs through Saturday were expected mostly in the 80s and 90s but 70s in extreme Northeast Texas and in the Panhandle Saturday.

Lows tonight were expected mostly in the 50s and 60s, with 40s in the Panhandle and mountains of Southwest Texas.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the South and East today and snow was forecast as far south as Virginia, while a heat wave continued to grip much of the West Coast and Arizona.

Rain and thunderstorms fell in the lower Mississippi and Tennessee valleys, the southern Appalachians and the southern Ohio Valley.

Storm winds gusted to 41 mph at Birmingham, Ala., Thursday night, and power outages were reported around New Albany, Miss.

A low pressure system over Alabama was expected to drop snow on parts of the Appalachians today, with up to 3 inches expected in the mountains of southwest and west-central Virginia.

Rain was scattered across parts of New England and New York state. A flood warning was in effect for Maine's Kennebec River, which was expected to crest slightly above flood stage at Augusta today.

Flooding was significant in parts of eastern North Dakota and northwest Minnesota. The Wild Rice River was forecast to crest 14 feet above flood stage at Abercrombie, N.D., and 12 feet above flood stage at Hendrum, Minn. The Buffalo River was cresting at 11 feet above flood stage at Dilworth, Minn.

In Ohio, the Scioto River was forecast to crest 2 feet above flood stage at Piketon.

Thursday was a very hot day across California with temperatures above 90 degrees, and readings above 100 in parts of Southern California. Record highs for April were established at Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, San Jose, Santa Maria and Riverside.

El Toro was the nation's hot spot with a scorching 112 degrees.

Temperatures remained in the 60s and 70s across California and Arizona this morning, with some readings still in the 80s in southern parts.

At least twenty-three cities in Oregon, California, Nevada and Arizona set or tied record highs Thursday. Los Angeles' reading of 106 degrees was its hottest April day on record, exceeding the previous mark of 100 set in 1910.

North wanted to refuse inquiries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North testified today he tried unsuccessfully to persuade former national security adviser Robert McFarlane to refuse to answer congressional inquiries about the Reagan administration's secret assistance to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Testifying for the second day in his own defense, North said he told McFarlane that "we should be invoking executive privilege" after two letters came in from Congress in August 1985. North is accused of lying to and obstructing Congress in helping prepare written responses which denied that the National Security Council was involved in soliciting funds or offering tactical advice to the Contras.

"The Congress has a right to ask and the executive branch has a right to refuse to answer," North said he told McFarlane.

The former White House aide said he proposed the approach in the case of the letter from Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., then chairman of the House Intelligence Committee.

"We shouldn't be answering this," North said he told McFarlane as the two discussed what to do about the Hamilton letter.

The proposal, which would have involved having President Reagan invoke executive privilege, fell by the wayside and "I did draft a response" to the Hamilton letter, said North.

McFarlane "took the last two paragraphs of the second page and included it in a draft that he wrote," North said.

The two paragraphs on the second page are not part of the criminal charge against North. He says McFarlane prepared the portions denying that the NSC solicited funds or offered tactical advice to the Contras.

According to testimony earlier in the trial, North later reviewed McFarlane's draft and made editing changes, but didn't remove the denials of NSC assistance to the Contras.

The response was sent to Hamilton and a similar response was sent to then-U.S. Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., who also was making inquiries about news reports of NSC involvement with the Contras.

McFarlane pleaded guilty to withholding information from Congress in connection with the two letters.

North says top-level Reagan administration officials put him in charge of keeping the Nicaraguan rebels alive and ordered him to maintain total secrecy about the operation.

The CIA had been supplying the Contras, but by October 1984 when Congress banned further military aid "every bit of that CIA responsibility had been passed on to me," North told the jury at his criminal trial Thursday. "It was basically a handoff as in basketball."

The former National Security Council aide took the witness stand in his own defense for nearly 2½ hours. The 12 criminal charges against him focus on his alleged lies to Congress and the attorney general about his efforts on behalf of the Contras.

Then-national security adviser Robert McFarlane told him his role as overseer of the Contra network "could not be revealed," North testified.

The admonition "was reiterated innumerable times by Admiral Poindexter and by Director Casey," said North, referring to McFarlane's successor John Poindexter and CIA Director William Casey.

North said his superiors told him disclosure "would jeopardize the people doing it, the pilots shipping supplies" and others in the aid network. In addition, public exposure would "jeopardize the CIA's ability to move back in" because publicity would make it less likely Congress would restore military assistance.

North's testimony was preceded by a series of new disclosures about the Reagan administration's secret assistance to the Contras. Among the revelations in the written admissions of fact:

■ Vice President George Bush was an intermediary in a secret plan approved by Reagan and disclosed earlier at North's trial to slip Honduras an extra $110 million in aid if it would help support the Contras. Bush told President Roberto Suazo that "President Reagan had directed expedited delivery of U.S. military items to Honduras" as well as other steps helpful to Honduras.

■ North met in London in mid-1986 with Panamanian strongman Manuel Noriega, who "would try to take immediate actions against the Sandinistas." Noriega offered a list of priorities including "an oil refinery, an airport and the Puerto Sandino off-load facility."

■ In an earlier meeting, a representative of Noriega had said the Panamanian leader was offering to "assassinate the Sandinista leadership for the U.S. government." In exchange he wanted a promise from the U.S. government to help clean up Noriega's image and a commitment to lift the U.S. ban on military sales to the Panamanian military. U.S. law forbade assassinations, North told the representative, who countered by pointing to Noriega's help to the U.S. government "the previous year in blowing up a Sandinista arsenal."

BUSH

■ Expressed some satisfaction with recent talks on Middle East peace efforts.

■ Defended himself from criticism by Mikhail Gorbachev that his administration was slow to develop an initiative for arms reduction.

■ Said developments in Poland were "mind-boggling" because of the pace of reform. "I think it is a sign of the change of democratization... This is all very encouraging."

He said he had not decided whether he should consider a return visit to the East European country.

Bush announced the Alaska developments during an appearance in the White House briefing room at which he was accompanied by Cabinet members and Alaskan members of Congress. Questions quickly turned to other matters, including Soviet affairs, much to Bush's frustration.

Concerning the Iran-Contra affair, he said the independent counsel and congressional committees had access to the material made public at the North trial.

Asked what his pledge meant not to talk further on the subject, he replied, "It means I've said all I'm going to say about...on the advice of lawyers."

"Please accept it when I've said I'm not going to talk about it anymore."

"So nice try," he said to the reporter.

He reacted brusquely when asked about Soviet suggestions that the United States wasn't keeping pace with Soviet moves in arms reduction. Gorbachev, on a visit to Britain, said through a spokesman on Thursday that "continuity is the name of the game. We are a little bit apprehensive we could be losing it."

Bush said there was no delay in his administration's development of policy regarding nuclear weapons negotiations and foreign policy.

"We are making a prudent review," Bush said. "... Mr. Gorbachev knows there is no foot-dragging going on, and I'm not concerned in the least."

Bush also said he hoped his meetings this week with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir had produced some improvements in the peace prospects in the Middle East. He said sometimes "small steps" can be important.

Bush also emphatically refused to raise his proposal for a higher minimum wage, despite Democratic pressure to force him to do so.

"I have no intention of budging one inch on this. I have too much at stake," said Bush, who appears headed for a veto confrontation with the Democratic majorities of Congress over the issue.

The president opened his mid-morning news conference at the White House with the announcement that after two weeks he had ordered military personnel to assist in the cleanup of the disastrous oil spill in Prince William Sound.

Members of Alaska's congressional delegation and high-ranking administration officials joined him at the White House press room podium as the president predicted the effort would be "massive, prolonged and frustrating."

GAS

With gas prices for the past two weeks increasing more than a penny a day at pumps throughout the Permian Basin, Lindsey is not alone in seeing gasoline prices bowl through the dollar mark.

While some station owners and distributors attribute the increase on the March 24 Alaskan oil spill, others say a combination of factors caused the price jumps.

"I think the wholesalers haven't had a good mark-up on the refinery products," Lindsey said. "We don't get much Alaskan crude in here. It goes to both coasts."

But Gaylan Morgan, owner of a Gulf station at 3211 Andrews Highway, fully blames the increase on the Alaskan spill. Gas prices at his station have gone up 11 cents in the past two weeks.

"Anytime we have any type of interruption in supplies, there is a definite effect," Morgan said.

Ralph Arrell, executive vice president of Eddins-Walcher Co., a wholesale fuel marketer, said that although supply to the West Coast was interrupted when an Exxon tanker spilled 10.1 million gallons of oil into an Alaskan bay, a combination of events spurred gas prices.

One factor affecting local prices, Arrell said, was shutdowns for repairs to an Chevron refinery in El Paso and a Diamond Shamrock facility near Amarillo.

"Anytime you do this you reduce capacity and there's a little bit of a shortage," Arrell said.

Another agent causing price jumps, he said, is an increase in crude oil over the past two months. West Texas Intermediate hit a 19-month high on March 27, the first trading day after the spill, when it went to $20.53. It has since hovered between $19.91 and $20.81.

Arrell also said more gas is being exported to Mexico, which has been experiencing a shortage there for the past 60 days because of refinery and labor problems.

Another recent factor is stiffened Environmental Protection Agency safety standards for refineries, Arrell said, adding that implementing the changes have been costly.

Arrell, however, said he expects no further increases. "It may take a month for the market to work itself out," he said.

HOMES

Work often includes replacing decking, roofs and ceiling; building walls and floors; installing or repairing plumbing works and making electrical repairs; putting on sidings, and painting.

"I don't know anybody who," Ricketts said, "once they get involved in it, doesn't stay" with CIA projects in ensuring years.

Trimble alluded to regular repairs which houses, particular older ones, need. Roofing, for example, takes priority on painting.

"You have to do repair work on roofs," Trimble said, "since it (the house) will fall down around you" if neglected for too long.

Trimble indicated that he felt compelled to help others.

"You have to reach out," he said. "God blessed us with good jobs and decent health." And Trimble said many people sense the obligations of "giving of their time, talent and money" in helping others.

DRILLERS

The only hope for survival lies in consolidation, said the banker who has arranged numerous oilfield service company mergers. "Sister service" industries to drilling — such as cementing, wireline services, fracturing and stimulation and other well completion functions — have turned the corner to profitability because of extensive consolidation in their markets.

Elimination of competition down to an handful of major industry leaders has allowed those survivors to raise the rates they charge, which combined with savings from internal restructuring has contributed cash revenue flows of up to 15 percent.

He points to the wireline business, which runs various well tests during the course of drilling, as one consolidated industry which is making money in today's slack market.

While several drilling company mergers have been seen in recent months — Oklahoma City-based Grace Drilling Co. has doubled the size of its 100-rig through acquisitions in the Rockies and South Texas; and Ardmore, Okla.'s Noble Drilling Corp. has tripled its rig fleet — Simmons called those deals "only a drop in the bucket of what needs to be done industry-wide."

On Thursday, a Simmons-arranged deal helped Drillers Inc. of Houston take over a Louisiana-based contractor.

Even with recent mergers, there remain more than 650 contractor companies which control more than 2,500 rigs onshore in this country, Simmons said.

In the Permian Basin alone, there are 87 contractors with roughly 500 rigs. As of late March, only about half of those contractors had rigs at work, Simmons said, and only one rig in five was operating.

"At this point, it's as much an overhang of companies as it is an overhang of equipment," he said. He estimated that the large number of companies account for $300 million to $400 million in total overhead.

"If through consolidating, companies could save only 10 percent of that, you would be talking $30 million or $40 million to be divided up among the 'lucky survivors'," Simmons said.

The typical response against consolidation among drillers is that overhead is incidental to the industry, costs are closely tied to the rigs and two rigs can't be merged into one just for the savings.

But Simmons cites similarities between the onshore drilling business and the offshore supply boat industry, which also has relatively low overhead and costs closely tied to equipment.

But since 1986, supply boat companies have consolidated their fleets, scrapped old boats and begun generating positive cash flow of up to 15 percent. Simmons said it is the first time in 40 years of offshore drilling that supplying platforms is more profitable that actually drilling the wells.

Simmons said he worries that complacency with a rig count around 800 rigs will undermine the industry's future.

Until the last three years, the national rig count had spent only 14 months in 43 years below the magic 1,000 mark. Since then the count has been below 1,000 for 30 of the 36 months — half of those below 900, Simmons said.

Current economic conditions threaten to not only create a squeeze on contractors if the rig count jumps suddenly, but also if it languishes near 800 much longer. For one thing, 18 months to two years ago a contractor could buy any size rig, including drill pipe, for about $175,000. Today, a new string of drillpipe alone can cost $250,000.

The stockpile of equipment which can be "cannibalized" to keep newer rigs running is nearly exhausted, at last. Expendable goods, drillpipe and other items, are in particularly short supply and prices for new replacement parts are near 1981 levels, while rates charged to operators are far below their peak boom levels.

Conventional sources of capital — bank loans and lines of credit — are not in the drilling industry's foreseeable future, according to Simmons. But those companies who have been through consolidation, will be able to attract non-conventional funding.

The time for radical ideas to address the industry's problems has arrived, Simmons said. Among the more intriguing ideas being tossed around is a basin-wide labor pool of rig hands who would be available to work for any contractors as work dictated. The contractor would maintain a toolpusher and driller for each rig and hire the remainder from a pool, Simmons explained.

"At this point, I'm not sure what the answer is; but I know what it isn't, and that's doing nothing."

CBS will film Nussbaum's story

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS has bought the exclusive rights to Hedda Nussbaum's life story and will produce a four-hour miniseries about her battered life with Joel Steinberg to be shown next season, a newspaper reported today.

"I want it to be an honest and compelling account of who this woman is and what happened to her," Andrew Lack, executive producer of CBS News' "West 57th," was quoted in the Daily News as saying. Lack negotiated the deal with Nussbaum's lawyer Barry Scheck.

The series will likely concentrate on Nussbaum's relationship with Steinberg, the disbarred lawyer who was convicted of first-degree manslaughter in the fatal 1987 beating of 6-year-old Lisa, the couple's illegally adopted daughter.

Steinberg, 47, was sentenced to 8⅓-to-25-years in prison two weeks ago and is appealing his conviction.

ABC and NBC had also been vying for the rights to Nussbaum's story, the Daily News said. CBS' deal gives the network access to Nussbaum's diaries dating back to when she was 15.

Nussbaum and Scheck are concerned that Nussbaum "not be seen as profiting from this arrangement. It's not an arrangement which is lucrative for her," Lack said.

The deal will help pay Nussbaum's "staggering" medical bills, he said.

CBS declined to say how much Nussbaum would be paid, but the paper quoted an unidentified source as saying the sum was "under $100,000."

Steinberg lawyer Felix Gilroy told the Daily News: "The fact that the production exists and that it came out so quickly after the sentencing just demonstrates that there was a monetary motive behind her whole fabrication. If she told the truth, it wouldn't be a story."

Nussbaum, a patient at a Westchester County psychiatric center, testified against Steinberg at his trial.

Former first lady calls raid on cocaine 'rock house' depressing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former first lady Nancy Reagan's anti-drug crusade took her to a late-night police raid on a suspected cocaine "rock house," an experience she found "very depressing."

"I was able to see them busting in," said Mrs. Reagan, who wore a blue police windbreaker and running shoes to the Thursday night raid. "I always see the other end, kids who are in rehabilitation."

Police Chief Daryl Gates, who brought Mrs. Reagan to the raid, said she had expressed an interest previously in going on a drug bust but was unable to do so as first lady because of security concerns.

The raid took place in the city's beleaguered south central section, where gangs such as the Crips and Bloods wage war on each other, often using semiautomatic weapons such as the AK-47 to carry out their vendettas.

Police arrested 14 people and seized a small quantity of what they believed to be crystalline rock cocaine as Mrs. Reagan watched. Earlier in the evening, police said she witnessed undercover officers making drug purchases.

"It's awful to see when you think that these people have no lives. It's very sad," she said, remarking on the arrests and the house's sparse furnishings.

Gates said the house was called a "rock house" and a "smoke house" because drug users would use it as a location for smoking cocaine. The name is derived from the crystalline "rocks" of cocaine peddled and from the fortifications which are often installed in such homes by drug dealers.

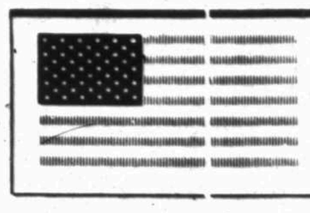

"We gave her the opportunity to see what the dope trade is about," Gates said. "She was right there when the SWAT team went in."

She did not talk to any of those arrested, but one of them said, "Hello Mrs. Reagan."

Wearing a Los Angeles Police Department jacket with "Nancy" on it, former first lady Nancy Reagan tours a "rock house" Thursday night after 14 occupants of the Los Angeles house were arrested. On the table are used syringes and other drug paraphenalia.

"Now, it's too late for them," she said. "What a waste. What wasted lives."

Mrs. Reagan, 65, who made the war against drugs a cornerstone of Reagan administration policy, has continued her anti-drug activities since she returned to the West Coast with former President Reagan.

One bystander, Elliott Davis, 21, said his sister was among those arrested.

"If it's going to help, I think it's good," he said of the raid and Mrs. Reagan's involvement. "I hope she talks to the people who are using, because I think she'd be an inspiration."

A crowd of about 50 people gathered after the raid. Some among them started calling out: "Nancy, Nancy Reagan." A few made gestures associated with street gang membership, but most were well behaved.

Commenting on security procedures employed for the raid, Gates quipped, "I'm sure the Secret Service agents have aged about ten years."

Mrs. Reagan interjected, "Along with my husband," who was home in Bel-Air.

Talks with Soviets over grain pact open this month

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. and Soviet Union officials will meet April 26 to open semiannual discussions about the long-term grain agreement between the two countries, the Agriculture Department says.

The meetings are required under the pact, which was extended after negotiations last year. The agreement specifies that the Soviet Union will buy a minimum quantity of wheat and corn from the United States each year.

The department said Thursday that the meetings in Washington "will include a review of the worldwide, U.S. and Soviet grain situations and the status of purchases and shipments under the agreement."

North prepares to produce notebooks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North's decision to testify in his trial also means he must turn over his notebooks, which prosecutors may use to prove North shredded documents during the Iran-Contra affair.

"We are prepared to produce" the notebooks, North attorney Barry Simon said toward the close of Thursday's court session. The notebooks cover the period from October 1984 to Nov. 25, 1986, the day North was fired from the National Security Council.

North's decision to take the stand takes away any privilege he may have to refuse to produce documents in his possession.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell had ruled earlier in the North trial that he didn't have to surrender his notebooks, based on his constitutional right against self-incrimination.

At a hearing Jan. 25, Simon suggested that prosecutors might try to use the notebooks in the portion of the case alleging destruction of documents by North in November 1986 as the Iran-Contra affair was unfolding.

In arguing against production of the notebooks, Simon said prosecutors might try to link references in the notebooks to documents that North allegedly destroyed before leaving the NSC.

North made daily entries in the spiral-bound notebooks while he worked at the National Security Council. The office of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh obtained a subpoena for them March 3 and now wants that subpoena enforced.

Simon wants to limit the use of the notebooks to those entries around the time periods of the alleged crimes North is accused of committing. Gesell said some of the entries may be classified material and should be censored.

The judge said he would issue an order today addressing those questions.

Portions of the notebooks that were turned over earlier to Congress and have been made public contain a wealth of information.

Document says Noriega offered to sabotage targets in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP)— Panamanian leader Manuel Antonio Noriega met with Oliver North in 1986 and offered to sabotage Nicaraguan targets including an airport and oil refineries, according to evidence presented at North's trial.

Noriega

The information is contained in a U.S. government "admission of facts" focusing on the Reagan administration's secret assistance to the Contra rebels at a time when Congress had cut off military aid to the rebel force.

In late September 1986, North reported to his boss, then-national security adviser John Poindexter "on his London meeting with Noriega," said the admission.

"Noriega would try to take immediate actions against the Sandinistas and offered a list of priorities including an oil refinery, an airport and the Puerto Sandino off-load facility," said the admission.

In late August, according to the admission, North told Poindexter that a representative of Noriega had said the Panamanian leader "would assassinate the Sandinista leadership for the U.S. government."

A Panamanian military spokesman on Thursday denied the allegations. Maj. Edgardo Lopez called them "another cock-and-bull story of the United States to continue strangling the Panamanian people and intensify its defamation campaign against the chief of our Defense Forces."

According to the court document, the assassination offer came "in exchange for a promise from the USG (U.S. government) to help clean up Noriega's image and a commitment to lift the USG ban on military sales to the Panamanian defense forces."

Government urged to help spill cleanup

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Oil from the Exxon Valdez threatened a national park and oozed through barriers protecting fisheries as President Bush today ordered U.S. armed forces to assist in the cleanup of Alaska's Prince William Sound.

With the nation's worst crude oil spill in its third week, Exxon made a second public apology and the tanker's captain made bail on charges that he was drunk when his ship went aground.

The Good Friday spill of 10.1 million gallons has killed thousands of seabirds and otters in the snowy landscape on the central Alaskan coast. Fishermen have lost millions of dollars.

And despite cleanup efforts by industry, government and private citizens, the spill has spread to more than 2,600 square miles.

"It's just immense," Jim Hayden, who is coordinating the cleanup for the state, said Thursday. "I don't think a spill of this size is controllable."

Bush today directed Defense Secretary Dick Cheney to "make available U.S. military forces personnel and equipment to assist in the cleanup." The president also directed Transportation Samuel Skinner to oversee the cleanup effort, but he said, "We are not federalizing this operation."

"This should not relieve Exxon from any of its responsibilities or liabilities," Bush said in the White House briefing room, accompanied by Cabinet members and Alaska's congressional contingent.

He conceded the job of cleaning up the oil that has washed up along the Alaskan coast with devastating effect on wildlife "will be massive, prolonged and frustrating. Nothing we can do will resolve this problem in the short term."

Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., the consortium of oil companies that owns and operates the 800-mile trans-Alaska oil pipeline and the Valdez terminal, announced Thursday that it would immediately begin requiring random drug and alcohol testing aboard all vessels using the terminal.

Alyeska also said it would require tugboat escorts for all entering and departing vessels to a point beyond Bligh Reef, where the Exxon Valdez ran aground.

Late Thursday the oily sheen was reported lapping at the rocks on islands near Kenai Fjords National Park, a remote refuge 100 miles southwest of Valdez. Ron Smith, a spokesman for a federal-state cleanup effort, said new booms were being put up to protect the area of inlets and fjords.

Closer to the spill site, local fishermen continued their fight to save the salmon fishery at three-mile-long Sawmill Bay, using fishing nets to corral the oil and "super sucker" vacuum trucks to remove it and protect millions of salmon fry.

Rand Little, product manager for the Prince William Sound Aquaculture Corp., said oil breached one of three booms protecting the young salmon. Fishermen were able to repair the breach before damage was done.

But fishermen worried about high tides this weekend that could lift the oil over the booms and complained that they couldn't empty their oil-filled barges because of a lack of pumps.

The frustration with the slow cleanup wasn't confined to area fishermen. Alaska legislators have introduced several bills designed to better prepare the state in the event of future spills. And Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., said his two-day tour of Prince William Sound convinced him oil industry contingency plans for a spill were "essentially a fraud on the public."

"The industry effort to clean up this spill...is almost nonexistent," said Miller, head of the congressional subcommittee overseeing oil exploration.

Exxon Chairman L.G. Rawl issued a second apology for the spill, caused when the tanker Exxon Valdez struck a reef outside the normal shipping channel, but said the company's response to the accident was "immediate and thorough."

On the East Coast, the captain of the tanker that spread the oily disaster was free after his bail was reduced to $25,000 from $1 million. The judge said the former skipper, Joseph Hazelwood of Huntington, N.Y., was unlikely to flee.

Hazelwood, 42, faces charges in Alaska of operating a ship while drunk, reckless endangerment and negligent discharge of oil; an extradition request from Alaska is pending. The misdemeanors carry a maximum penalty of 2¼ years in prison and a $10,000 fine upon conviction.

CIA director reveals alleged sale of Soviet bombers to Libya

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Col. Moammar Gadhafi may be bolstering Libya's arsenal with long-range bombers capable of delivering chemical weapons in hopes of achieving "a strategic advantage" across North Africa and into the Middle East, Central Intelligence Director William Webster said Thursday.

"The more clout he has, the more of a player he becomes," Webster said. "(But) I don't think he has a fully developed game plan."

While Webster declined to confirm published reports that Libya has bought from the Soviet Union up to 15 supersonic Sukhoi high-performance bombers with mid-air refueling capability, he readily responded to "hypothetical questions" that presumed the sale had taken place.

The aircraft, with a range of 805 miles, would make Libya capable for the first time of striking Israel, dropping bombs or firing missiles and returning to base.

Intelligence officials frequently discuss fast-breaking international developments "hypothetically" to avoid public confirmation that reveal the means of intelligence gathering or fan domestic political pressure for action by the White House.

"It is reasonably clear that the Libyans intend to have a substantial chemical warfare capability," Webster said. "I think it is also clear that they intend to increase their offensive capability as well as their defensive capability — whether it's by fueling in the air or longer-range bombers. That creates a strategic advantage in that part of the world and every indication is that that is the direction Gadhafi is going."

If the Soviet Union "were to" complete such a sale, Webster said, "hard cash" would be a major objective by the Kremlin.

In deals for arms and equipment, he said, "there's profit and money and we've seen that in a number of major countries that are dealing (weapons)."

Webster's comments came during a flurry of Middle East diplomacy. President Bush was hearing peace initiatives by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir at the White House Thursday following a session with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak earlier in the week.

Webster said that Libya, despite "some substantial setbacks," continues to develop a chemical weapons capability at a desert pharmaceutical plant at Rabta, some 40 miles southwest of Tripoli.

"We know that not all things have gone well...but there is no indication that he has abandoned plans in that area and that he may very well be close to achieving something," Webster said.

The international uproar stirred by the United States over West German and Japanese companies supplying Libya with technology to complete the facility "will make his (Gadhafi's) task more difficult," Webster said.

Webster began publicizing the facility late last year, describing it as the largest chemical weapons plant in the underdeveloped world and nearing production.

Webster said the spread of dangerous weapons in the Third World often is ignored by the United States because of its concern over the Soviet Union.

"But around the world, this development of chemical and biological capability coupled with missile capability, either acquired missiles or indigenous missiles, presents in my view a very (destabilizing) threat to our own security interests around the world."

More than 20 nations have or are acquiring the capability to produce poison gas, according to intelligence officials. Long-range Soviet-bloc ballistic missiles now are in the hands of Syria, Iran, Iraq and Libya. Saudi Arabia has acquired Chinese-made ballistic missiles and India is about to obtain the weapon.

Both Iran and Iraq used poison gas on the battlefield in an eight-year, stalemated war that ended with a cease-fire last year. Both used medium-range missiles for attacks on their enemy's cities.

"The situation, which already is highly complicated in the Middle East, is being further complicated by the ability of almost any country to deliver a weapon, a major explosive device, to almost any city in the Middle East," Webster said. "That's dangerous."

Arab nations defend the acquisition of chemical weapons and long-range missiles to counter Israel's widely presumed arsenal of nuclear weapons.

"I think we have to be looking for new ways to cope with the problem (of proliferation,)" Webster said. He noted that focusing public attention on companies that furnish such weapons to Third World nations had forced some firms to stop.

At least five tons of pot seized in Gulf

MIAMI (AP) — Federal agents seized a tugboat "mother ship" loaded with at least five tons of marijuana and three speedboats that fled at up to 90 mph in a smuggling ploy out of style since the early 1980s, officials said Thursday.

The mother ship carrying the marijuana from Mexico was spotted on radar Wednesday night about 100 miles southwest of Fort Myers on Florida's Gulf Coast, and 14 people had been detained by late Thursday, said Coast Guard Lt. Jeff Karonis.

A new Customs Service plane designed for night surveillance was in the area by chance on a shakedown training flight and for about six hours its crew filmed the 105-foot, Honduran-registered mother ship and six speedboats that rendezvoused with it.

"Once the Coast Guard cutter comes in, the speedboats scatter like a bunch of bees," Roger Garland, air branch chief for the U.S. Customs Service, said as he explained the videotape at a news conference.

The sophistication of the operation was almost as surprising to drug agents as the outmoded mother-ship smuggling method.

"From a communications standpoint, when you have an operation like that, you have a big network," Karonis said at the news conference. "That's a lot of people willing to stick their necks out to be involved in some pretty bad activities."

In recent years, the most common marijuana smuggling at sea has been on freighters docking in the Port of Miami, yachts with secret compartments docking most anywhere and small boats picking up bales dropped by aircraft.

"Something like this is what we had back in the early '80s. It kind of breaks the trend here," said Karonis.

Garland noted that most recent attention has been focused on cocaine smuggled through the Bahamas and Haiti.

In this case, the mother ship, the tugboat Turtola, made its last port of call in Coatzacoalcos, Mexico, about 120 miles southwest of Veracruz, before entering the Gulf of Mexico bound for Tampa.

Surveillance teams noticed several speed boats leaving Gulf Coast ports late Wednesday when the Turtola neared Florida. The Coast Guard moved in when four speedboats were gathered at the mother ship, and six had been spotted at various times.

The Coast Guard boarded the tug while the crew was working below deck to sink it, Karonis said. The flooding was brought under control, the South American crew of five was arrested, and the Coast Guard counted 165 bales on board. He estimated the total load was 10,000 to 15,000 pounds.

Senators say minimum wage plan too low

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats opened debate on a minimum-wage bill by thanking President Bush for his support of an increase but moving forward with their own plan after criticizing the president's as too modest and his attitude as too reticent.

"Don't give us a take-it-or-leave-it proposal," Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said Thursday after Bush promised again to veto any bill other than his. "That's the kind of administration we've had the last eight years. Confrontation. Confrontation. Confrontation."

It appears, however, that a showdown is inevitable if not imminent.

Sponsors were hoping for a final vote today but were unable to reach agreement with Republicans, meaning the debate likely will extend into next week. Amendments lowering the final minimum wage target to $4.55 from $4.65 and providing for a 60-day subminimum wage for new workers were likely to be offered with the resumption of debate today.

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Republican floor leader, urged Democrats to accept Bush's proposal as a compromise.

"President Bush has extended an opportunity to the Congress to enact a minimum wage increase," Hatch said. "In my opinion, it is a worthy alternative to the proposal now before us."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. and chief sponsor of the Senate bill, entered into a compromise with Southern Democrats over the $4.55 top minimum that appears to give him more than enough votes to win passage.

U.S. officials working on Vincennes plan

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials are moving ahead with a plan to compensate survivors of the 290 victims killed when an Iranian airliner was shot down by the USS Vincennes over the Persian Gulf last July, a State Department official disclosed Thursday.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III has approved the plan and will begin consultations with congressional committees next week, the U.S. diplomat said.

The delay in coming up with a payment plan prompted President Bush last week to become visibly upset when Baker informed a Cabinet meeting that Iraq had agreed to pay $27.3 million to the families of 37 sailors killed in the May 1987 attack on the USS Stark.

According to an official who attended the cabinet session, Bush exclaimed: "Where is our plan on Iran-air? Let's get this thing moving!"

After the cabinet session, Abraham Sofaer, the State Department's legal adviser who negotiated the settlement with Iraq, was instructed to come up with a plan.

The Baker plan will use the same method for determining the value of the Iranian and other lives that the U.S. asked Iraq to use in computing the value of the American lives lost in the earlier Stark attack, the official said.

This approach, called "victim specific" by State Department lawyers, seeks to compute on a passenger-by-passenger basis such things as a victim's projected lost income, the value of his or her education, the number of dependents and the emotional anguish to relatives. Thus, the dollar awards to individual families can vary widely.

The task is far more complicated than simply trying to negotiate a lump sum payment.

"We need to know (if a victim) was a brain surgeon or a manual laborer," a State Department lawyer said. "You then have to go and find all their sons, daughters, parents and relatives and find income streams."

Natives of six countries besides Iran were among those killed when the Vincennes mistook the Iranair: India, Italy, Pakistan, Yugoslavia and the United Arab Emirates and Yugoslavia. Of the 290 victims, 250 were Iranians.

When President Reagan announced last August that the U.S. government would voluntarily compensate the Iranair victims even though such payments were not required by international law, he declared none of the funds would be paid to or through the Iranian Government.

Interviews with State Department, Pentagon and White House officials revealed the following elements of the previously-undisclosed administration plan and the reasons for the delay in acting on it sooner.

The Pentagon had insisted that the U.S. claims against Iraq for the Stark attack be settled before U.S. officials moved ahead on settling the Iranian claims against the United States arising from the Vincennes episode.

Though the two incidents were unrelated, a White House official said, "The Pentagon didn't want to make any commitments about what its liability was (in the Vincennes attack) until it found out what its servicemen were going to get" for the Iraqi attack on the Stark.

He added that the Joint Chiefs of Staff "wanted to be sure their own people weren't going to get shortchanged."

Underlying Pentagon reluctance was concern that any compensation plan arising from the shootdown of the Iranian passenger plane would be based on a "lump sum" settlement.

NATION IN BRIEF

Panama Canal official resigns in Bush protest

WASHINGTON (HNS) — The American chairman of the Panama Canal Commission abruptly resigned Thursday to protest President Bush's extension of crippling economic sanctions against Panama.

William H. Gianelli, 70, an engineer who held the post since 1981, told the Hearst Newspapers he was taking the step to object to the administration's failure to ease provisions of the year-old sanctions that expose 7,500 Panamanian canal employees to harassment by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

As part of the sanctions, the U.S. canal agency has refused to turn over to the Noriega regime almost $20 million in income tax payments withheld from Panamanian employees. Noriega's forces have retaliated with increasing harassment of canal employees, including seizure of automobiles, freezing of bank accounts and withholding permission to travel abroad.

"It's fair to say I've objected all along to the portions of the sanctions that involve our employees' money," Gianelli said in a telephone interview from his home in Pebble Beach, Calif. "Both administrations apparently felt that they haven't wanted to move" to ease the sanctions.

Gianelli, named to the post by President Reagan, said Bush administration officials need "a member of their team" to work out a compromise between the sanctions and the needs of employees who increasingly blame the United States for their problems.

Gianelli said he gave the White House no advance notice of his action.

Marcos too ill for trial

NEW YORK (AP) — Imelda Marcos vowed to fight alone, if necessary, against federal racketeering charges after her ailing husband was temporarily severed from the case because of his poor health.

Prosecutors conceded that former Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos is too ill to stand trial for now and agreed on Thursday to separate him temporarily from the massive racketeering case.

But his wife, who still faces trial in New York, remained defiant.

"I look forward to defending myself. You don't have to be a doctor to see how sick the president is," the former first lady told The Associated Press in Honolulu. "If I have to face the court alone, so be it. I will walk into the courtroom with my head held high."

Prosecutors wrote to the judge presiding over the case, acknowledging that Marcos' health has deteriorated since a medical examination by a government doctor last fall.

Marcos, 71, is in guarded condition at St. Francis Medical Center in Honolulu, where he has been confined since Jan. 15 for treatment of heart, kidney and respiratory problems.

Bentsen anticipates changes

WASHINGTON (HNS) — Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Thursday the revision of trade laws in western Europe that already is in progress "will cause profound change for good or ill in the way the world does business."

Bentsen's Finance panel will hold a hearing on May 2 to discuss the impact on the United States of the eight-year process of trade reforms that will result by the end of 1992 in free trade among the 12 members of the European Community.

Returning from a week-long fact-finding trip to Europe over the recent Easter congressional recess, Bentsen said that revision of nearly 300 trade laws within the European Community "will mean freer trade and more trade among these 12 countries."

Bentsen also said that he fears a common European economic policy could hamper U.S. exports into western Europe.

One of the chief architects of the massive rewriting of U.S. trade laws in 1987, Bentsen recalled that in the 1960's Europe developed a common agricultural policy that "cut U.S. farm exports to the bone," and he said he is concerned that "we might see something like that" in the future.

Tough waste laws urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers from Missouri and Kansas proposed legislation today to tighten regulation of interstate shipments of hazardous materials, including radioactive wastes.

Citizens "have a right to expect that hazardous materials will be transported through their state as safely as possible," said Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., one of the measure's sponsors.

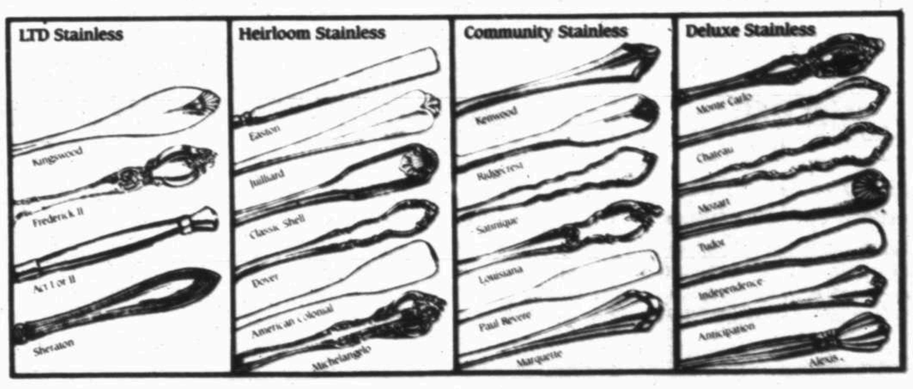

Also sponsoring the measure were Sens. Christopher Bond, R-Mo., and Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev checks his watch as British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher speaks.

Gorbachev plans to close reactors, cut military

LONDON (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev today announced the Soviet Union is halting production of weapons-grade uranium and will shut down two more nuclear reactors that produce plutonium for nuclear weapons by the end of next year.

In a half-hour speech in London's Guildhall, the Soviet president called his unilateral action "another major step toward the complete cessation of production of fissionable materials for use in weapons."

Arms experts said today that while uranium and plutonium are both used in Soviet nuclear weapons, plutonium is used more often and that Moscow has enough on hand to produce more weapons.

In Washington, President Bush declined to comment on Gorbachev's announcement, saying he had not had time to review it.

A Pentagon official said the steps outlined by Gorbachev would not have a major impact on the Soviet capability to wage war.

Gorbachev reiterated promises he made at the United Nations in December that the Soviet Union would soon begin paring 500,000 men from its standing army and withdrawing troops and tanks from Europe and the Chinese frontier.

Gorbachev made a strong appeal for world disarmament, but he warned the process could falter if the West did not reciprocate.

After the address, broadcast live throughout Britain and the United States, Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, called on Queen Elizabeth II at Windsor Castle, then left for Moscow at the end of a six-day trip to Ireland, Cuba and Britain.

Gorbachev invited the queen to visit the Soviet Union. She said she would like to accept but that her foreign travel is always fixed years in advance.

Queen Elizabeth II would be the first monarch to go to Russia since her grandfather's cousin, Czar Nicholas II, and his family were killed after the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution.

Speaking at Guildhall, the city's seat of government for 1,000 years, Gorbachev said the world has reached a crossroad in which it has to choose between peaceful interdependency and "a policy of force rooted in the past.

"If NATO goes ahead with its program of modernizing tactical nuclear weapons," he said, "this is bound also to devalue much of what has been achieved under the INF treaty" on medium-range nuclear weapons that he signed with President Ronald Reagan in 1987.

Gorbachev said, "In addition to the industrial reactor for the production of weapons-grade plutonium shut down in 1987, we plan to shut down two other such reactors this year and next year without commissioning new units to replace them."

With jokes and arguments, unlikely relationship grows

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

LONDON (AP) — They argued passionately, they joked, they discussed their grandchildren and they were solemn.

And after four hours of talks Thursday, the unlikely relationship between Margaret Thatcher, the doctrinaire anti-communist, and Mikhail Gorbachev, the new-look leader of the Soviet Union, had reached new heights.

The Soviets struggled for superlatives.

"I am at a loss for words," said Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov, after Gorbachev and Mrs. Thatcher met Thursday. "Any positive adjective you would like to use you can apply to the talks."

"This was the day when the relationship between them did reach a new high ... characterized by one word, and that is openness," said a British spokesman.

They have not gone to the first-name terms that characterized Mrs. Thatcher's friendship with Ronald Reagan. But they have a spark of chemistry that Sir Bryan Cartledge, former British ambassador to Moscow, explains as the attraction of a communist and a conservative who are really quite similar.

"They're both radicals," said Cartledge, who watched Mrs. Thatcher in action in Moscow two years ago. "Neither of them has much time for empty rhetoric. They get down to business very quickly and very easily."

It was like that from their first meeting in 1984 when Gorbachev, then No. 2 in the Kremlin, came to London. Mrs. Thatcher declared then: "I like Mr. Gorbachev. We can do business together."

And they have. This week's 40-hour visit was the third time Gorbachev has singled Mrs. Thatcher out for special treatment, following her trip to the Soviet Union in April 1987 and his stopover in Britain that December en route to a Washington summit.

She admires a leader who is trying to change everything, just as she set out to do 10 years ago with her own perestroika, or economic restructuring, when she ousted a Labor Party government and pledged to wipe out socialism from Britain.

"He is trying to do for the Soviet economy what we have done for the British economy in the last 10 years," said British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe in an interview this week with ABC News.

Surprise, senator! Texas didn't cheat

U.S. Sen. Dennis DeConcini has finally arrived at a rather startling conclusion. It seems the Arizona Democrat, who requested a General Accounting Office investigation into the selection of Texas as site for the proposed superconducting super collider, now believes that decision was made on merit and not politics.

The GAO said: "Our limited analysis provided us no reason to question the decision to site the super collider in Texas. We found that the task force evaluated and rated the proposed sites in accordance with the technical and cost criteria, and provided evidence to support its ratings."

One can't really blame DeConcini for suspecting a political "deal," what with then-Vice President George Bush being elected president just days before the selection announcement was made and several other prominent Texans (notably House Speaker Jim Wright and Senate colleagues Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm) holding influential positions in the Congress. That is, after all, the sort of material which lends itself to political skulduggery and smoke-filled-room shenanigans.

But simply because the necessary ingredients for political collusion exist is no indication that a "deal" was made. Even politically corruptible institutions like the Congress of the United States can fight off the temptation to take the expedient route and opt, instead, for that which is morally correct and rendered in the best interests of the nation as a whole, even though obviously benefitting one particular state.

Sen. Gramm shed light on the real reason Texas was chosen as the super collider site when he said, "Texas won the super collider for the best of reasons: hard work and technical merit."

While DeConcini may have been wise to question the SSC selection, because of the way Texans were sprinkled throughout the Congress and the administration, it's good to know that federal projects like the SSC are still assigned on the basis of hard work and actual merit rather than something as corruptible as politics.

Now that the question that has been bothering DeConcini is out of the way, he should concentrate his efforts on helping the Texas delegation gain approval for the $250 million in construction funds the Bush administration is seeking. He has that power since he sits on the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development which will decide funding for the super collider.

Restore Constitution!

When Joe Citizen looks at the forest and the trees of the jungle called Congress, is it any wonder that he is confused about which side Congress is on?

Recently, George Mitchell, Senate Majority Leader, made this comment: "When Americans believe that public office is a way to private enrichment, or that elective office is available only to the wealthy or well-connected, then the essential element of trust between the people and their government is lost and with it government's authority.

"We must acknowledge the existence of public mistrust today."

Why does Joe Citizen have reasons to mistrust Congress? There may be many reasons, but there definitely are a few: The INF Treaty and the Summit Agreements made in conjunction with it have given the Soviet Union help and prestige at a time when its slaves are restless and the U.S.S.R. economy is in shambles. Soviet influence in American education along with U.S./U.S.S.R. political, cultural, and economic cooperation as a result of the agreements will help keep the slaves of the communists in subjection while Americans move ever closer to slavery.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 has aptly been described by Louis Rukheyser as an act of war by Congress against the American people.

A multitude of "social legislation acts" without constitutional authority has bound business and Joe Citizen with paper chains of tyranny.

The betrayals of Vietnam, Ethiopia, Nicaragua, El Salvador and dozens of other countries into Communist terror will be a blot on our honor for decades to come.

All Americans of whatever race, creed or color mistrust Congress because the men in dark suits with red ties continue to destroy the rights of life, liberty, and property while they smile at the cameras and strengthen Joe Citizen's enemies with credits and talk of merger.

Restore the Constitution! Obey it! Bind Congress with the chains of the Constitution! That will restore trust.

Airport 'doublespeak'

Washington obviously has not cornered the market on "doublespeak." In the Midland International Airport story of March 28, Airport Director Vic White says that commercial airlines using the 10-28 runway "must restrict the amount of weight they carry on departing planes because the runway is too short."

He then says that the "airport's second runway is about 2,000 feet longer, but isn't equipped for instrument landing." What in the world does that have to do with takeoffs? It may be that the proposed runway extension is needed, but the specious argument of this nonsequitur is certainly no justification for it.

Let's see: First $50,000 for "an environment study on lands surrounding a proposed runway extension" (one that's already within the confines of the present airport?). Then it's to cost us a lot more for the runway extension itself; then more for the extension of the adjunct taxiway; then even more money for construction of an acute angle taxiway. Wow! That's going to be a lot of money before they're through.

An "acute angle taxiway?" Maybe I'm obtuse, but it looks as if the federal airport infrastructure is really taking the taxpayers for a ride.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, April 7, the 97th day of 1989. There are 268 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 7, 1862, Union forces led by Gen. Ulysses S. Grant defeated the Confederates at the Battle of Shiloh in Tennessee.

On this date:

In 1788, the first permanent settlement in Ohio was founded at present-day Marietta.

In 1927, an audience in New York saw an image of Commerce Secretary Herbert Hoover in the first successful long-distance demonstration of television.

In 1939, Italy invaded Albania, which offered only token resistance. Less than a week later, Italy annexed Albania.

In 1947, auto pioneer Henry Ford died in Dearborn, Mich., at age 83.

In 1948, the World Health Organization was founded.

In 1949, the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical "South Pacific" opened on Broadway.

In 1953, the UN General Assembly elected Dag Hammarskjold of Sweden to be secretary-general.

Probers confirm embarrassing events

WASHINGTON — When Edwin Meese was attorney general, and before he got caught up in problems of his own, he ordered Justice Department investigators to examine the department's Community Relations Service.

Jack Anderson

That low-profile arm of the department is supposed to help local communities mediate racial and ethnic disputes. Rumor had it that the agency was a mess.

The investigators found the rumor to be true, but officials sat on the evidence because they thought the Justice Department couldn't endure any more embarrassment.

Our associate Jim Lynch has seen the report, parts of which are now being examined by the Justice Department's office of professional responsibility. None of the findings will put anyone behind bars, but the agency that quietly spends about $30 million a year could benefit from an embarrassing airing of its dirty laundry.

In the Atlanta regional office, investigators found that the regional director Ozell Sutton had been flying his secretary to work from Chicago every week, at the taxpayers expense. All the while, Sutton was complaining to the service headquarters in Washington, D.C., that his office needed more money.

The jet-lagged secretary cost taxpayers about $1,000 a week in travel and hotel bills for a 10-week stretch before headquarters put a stop to the commuting arrangement. She flew to Atlanta every Monday, and according to her travel vouchers, bunked at the Marriott Marquis Hotel four days a week.

Sutton told us the woman was an "administrative assistant" with unique job skills and could not be easily replaced in Atlanta. He also said the Washington, D.C., office had approved the arrangement.

In Tucson, investigators found that the service spent at least $180,000 putting together a halfway house for refugees, before staffers realized they didn't have the required local consent for the house. Investigators also concluded the contractor was padding the bills with services that the government should not have been paying for.

In San Francisco, the regional director Julian Klugman reportedly was reluctant to answer investigators' questions. They wanted to know why he turned an official visit to Hawaii into an eight-day vacation with his wife. Klugman said he made the trip to introduce himself to new local officials in Hawaii and explain the function of his agency. But when investigators later asked Klugman what services he planned to offer in Hawaii, he reportedly said none.

Klugman told us he had a busy itinerary in Hawaii and that the trip was "strictly business" and directed from Washington, D.C.

The investigators were stunned by the high salaries pocketed by the Community Relations Service employees. The 125 workers average more than $40,000 a year and many earn upwards of $70,000. One conciliator for the Philadelphia regional office works out of his home in Pittsburgh for $44,769 a year. In San Francisco, a senior conciliator making more than $55,000, flies to Los Angeles almost every week on what investigators termed questionable assignments.

The investigators found an office in Detroit that the service rented, but never used. They found a $25,000 computer contract that was never fulfilled. The New York office ran up a bill of $3,436.99 one year for magazines and newspapers. The entire agency's annual bill for periodicals was $25,000.

How did the Justice Department react? It zipped its lips and told the investigator who uncovered most of the dirt to forget about it. That investigator, Janet Laver, was warned by her superiors that if she made a fuss about her findings, her job could be in jeopardy.

A service spokesman said the new director, Grace Flores Hughes, has issued directives to improve staff morale and money management. But our sources in the Justice Department say Hughes is definitely no watchdog on waste.

SHOPPERS' TOURS — Japanese investors who started buying U.S. real estate in Hawaii and California are now snapping up condominiums on the Eastern seaboard. Many Japanese buy sight-unseen. But for those who like to shop in person, travel agents are offering tourism packages that include side trips to buy real estate. Some U.S. realtors have opened branch offices in Tokyo.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan got up on the wrong side of the bed the other day. He had an unfortunate interview in which he revealed some ignorance about his new job. When his ignorance was reported, Lujan called the media "a bunch of cannibals." If that's the case, Lujan would do well to stop slathering himself in ketchup and mustard.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Reading 'The Journal' can change your life!

My first home-delivered copy of The Wall Street Journal arrived the other morning. The occurrence marked an important moment in my life.

Lewis Grizzard

Had I chosen a different profession, it is likely I would have been taking The Wall Street Journal at home for some time.

Had I decided to be, say, a stockbroker, I certainly would have needed to take the Journal. And what if I had become a television minister?

I would have needed the Journal near me at all times in case I had a sudden urge to invest one or two of my millions.

I put off taking The Wall Street Journal at home until now for a couple of reasons.

One, I felt my neighbors would see it on my lawn each morning and would say things like, "He's just trying to put on airs." Taking the Journal at home does indicate one has the need to keep a finger on the world's financial pulse and what would I, an humble columnist, need to do that for?

Two, The Wall Street Journal has always intimidated me. You have to work at reading it.

You don't just casually skim over the headlines until you get to the comics, where you can spend a little time.

The Wall Street Journal's articles are long and there are no comics nor puzzles. There's not even any sports news in the Journal unless it has to do with some millionaire basketball player deciding to buy Guatemala.

But all that changed recently when I received a pleasant surprise — a royalty check from a rerun of my critically acclaimed performance on television's "Designing Women."

I am not at liberty to divulge the amount of the check — Dixie Carter finds out and she'll be asking for a new contract — but I can say it was five figures. It's up to you to guess the location of the decimal point.

This windfall starting me thinking. A man who receives royalty checks from television shows can't afford to fool around with his financial future.

I'm certain Johnny Carson must read The Wall Street Journal as does Alan Hale Jr., who must be worth millions by now since there is a rerun of "Gilligan's Island" on at least one channel every minute of the day.

So, when I saw a Wall Street Journal commercial on television I immediately called the 800 number and subscribed.

My life has changed drastically. I used to go outside to get the local paper in my bare feet. But you don't walk outside to pick up your Wall Street Journal without wearing shoes, so I bought a new pair of wingtips simply for that purpose.

I used to carry a copy of USA Today's Life section to read during my lunch. Who's Cher dating now?

But no more. I carry The Wall Street Journal to lunch with me now and keep abreast of the latest merger rumors while I'm waiting in line to get my chili dogs.

I feel much more at ease at cocktail parties now, too. If someone asks, "Did you read the informative piece in The Wall Street Journal concerning the ramifications of the Exxon Alaskan oil spill?" I don't have to fade toward the hors d'oeuvres tray any more.

I can stick in there and say, "Of course, I read it. And did you read the Journal's incisive piece on the possibility of the Beecham Group merging with SmithKline Beckman?"

And when I've been taking The Wall Street Journal at home for a few more months, I may even start putting on a shirt when I go out each morning to pick up my copy off the lawn.

I expect property values in my neighborhood to show a substantial increase.

EVANS & NOVAK

'Drug czar' alienating conservative allies

WASHINGTON — William J. Bennett, who pulled himself up to superstar status in the conservative movement from a backwater Reagan Cabinet post, is now, as "drug czar," alienating his Bush administration colleagues and right-wing constituents alike.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

The ability to project persona and ideas that brought him instant national prominence as secretary of education has made Bennett one of the Bush team's best recognized faces. But he has vexed conservative backers with gun control statements, irritated Attorney General Dick Thornburgh and offended his patron, White House chief of staff John Sununu.

Whether anybody can succeed in a czar's job that lacks a czar's authority is dubious. Nevertheless, it is asked in the administration whether Bennett's exhortatory talents might be better suited to a job with less requirements for coordination.

Those very questions tell two things about the Bush regime distinct from Bennett. First, it may be unable to utilize so buoyant a political talent as his; second, Sununu is not the internal protector of conservative causes that right-wing activists expected.

That Bennett is there at all is a surprise. He was never close to Vice President George Bush and was disliked by key Bush aides. Nor did conservatives expect Bennett, a potential leader of the movement and future presidential candidate, to ask for the congressionally created drug job.

But bored by the lucrative, tedious lecture circuit, Bennett volunteered. He would not have been appointed save for efforts of Sununu (who did the same for Jack Kemp at Housing and Urban Development). In an administration of middle-roaders, professional bureaucrats and longtime Bush buddies, Sununu-Kemp-Bennett conceived of itself as a troika in conservative harmony.

Any chance of that happening vanished when Bennett was denied the Cabinet rank he assumed he was getting. Sununu's public explanation that the law required U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills in the Cabinet but not Bennett was disingenuous. When delighted Democratic politicians took up Bennett's cause, Sununu privately — and probably unfairly — accused the drug boss of stirring them up.

Typically trying to score a quick hit, Bennett announced his concentration on drug enforcement in the District of Columbia without informing the attorney general. Thornburgh, a turf-conscious politician, was outraged. Holding a job prone to jurisdictional conflict with Cabinet departments, Bennett also has tilted with Richard Darman's Office of Management and Budget.

He is consequently indicted by colleagues as a non-team player. "He is the same pain in the neck that he was at Education," says one of the many Reagan holdovers. But nonconformity is more onerous in the Bush administration. On this as on other questions, Sununu failed to live up to right-wing hopes that he would promote the movement's causes and members from the Oval Office.

Bennett complicated his situation by calling for limited controls on assault rifles and then taunting the National Rifle Association (NRA) — as in the Reagan years, he challenged the National Education Association (NEA). But the NEA is a liberal Democratic adjunct; the NRA — whatever its shortcomings — is part of the conservative movement that is Bennett's political base. What has antagonized his anti-gun control backers in Congress delights his erstwhile Democratic foes.

Having unwittingly changed the subject, he was questioned so much about assault rifles on NBC's "Meet the Press" that he protested he is director of "drug control," not "gun control." Actually, whatever the menace to society of the unfettered sale of semi-automatic weapons, no drug expert sees progress on drugs resulting from massively restricting the guns.

Indeed, what policies will work brings no expert consensus, attesting to the difficulty of Bennett's mission. But he might ease his task by playing smarter politics.

He might well try to align himself with Sununu, Darman and their staffs in natural common cause against the Cabinet he was not allowed to join. He might propose criminal and penal reforms more apt to inflame the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) than the NRA. Whatever his success in fulfilling the president's promise to end the "scourge" of drugs, Bennett's monumental task would be easier without alienating his natural allies.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak are columnists for North America Syndicate.

WORLD in brief

Haitian loyalists slay four rebels

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Loyalist troops killed four rebel soldiers with cannon fire, witnesses said, and the U.S. ambassador offered Washington's support for the embattled government of Haitian leader Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril.

The situation in Haiti remained chaotic as youths burned tires in the streets and rebellious soldiers fired gunshots into the air. Loyal soldiers guarded the Presidential Palace as the capital remained under a state of emergency.

The soldiers slain Thursday night were members of the elite Leopards commando unit, which on Sunday was among the rebellious military units that staged an unsuccessful coup. Sporadic clashes between military units have been reported since then.

Late Thursday, a witness said an armored car carrying loyal soldiers of the Presidential Guard chased a truck carrying members of the Leopards unit on a Port-au-Prince road.

The rebels fled into a house and the loyalist troops destroyed it with cannon fire, killing the four and wounding one, said the witness, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Solidarity legalized

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Parliament today lifted the seven-year ban on the Solidarity trade movement and enacted constitutional changes to give Poland the first freely elected legislative body in the East bloc.

Walesa

The Sejm, or parliament, passed a package of six bills that enact into law a historic agreement on political, economic and trade union reforms reached Wednesday between the Solidarity-led opposition and communist authorities.

Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski, who suppressed the Soviet bloc's only independent labor movement when he imposed martial law in December 1981, looked on as the votes were taken.

In a surprise move, independent Deputy Ryszard Bender proposed that the Sejm restore the state's official name to "The Republic of Poland" instead of "The Polish People's Republic" adopted when communists took over after World War II. "If we don't pass this change today, the next Sejm ... will," said Bender, saying the present name had been "imposed" during the Stalinist era.

The accord signed by the Solidarity-led opposition and the government resulted from two months of intense talks.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa on Thursday called the agreement a "political victory" but warned it could be disastrous if Poles do not quickly use it to improve the economy and elect effective representatives.

Namibian talks planned

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — Black nationalist guerrillas battled South African-led security forces today and South Africa, Angola and Cuba prepared for emergency talks aimed at preserving a plan for Namibia's independence.

A territorial police official, Chief Inspector Kierie du Rand, said 42 guerrillas were killed in clashes Thursday afternoon. He said the fighting continued this morning. There was no immediate word on new casualties.

"There is a crisis in Namibia," a State Department official in Washington who is monitoring the Namibia situation said Thursday. "We've got a real problem."

Du Rand said at least 252 guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization and 24 members of the South African-led security forces have been killed since battles broke out Saturday, when a U.N.-sponsored cease-fire was to have taken effect.

Angola's state news agency ANGOP quoted SWAPO defense spokesman Peter Muehihange as saying that as of Tuesday only 38 guerrillas had been killed and that nine were missing. He said 20 security force members were killed.

South Africa claims SWAPO has sent more than 1,500 guerrillas into northern Namibia in violation of a U.N. accord that is to lead to Namibia's independence within one year.

Vietnam's plan decried

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The Khmer Rouge today denounced Vietnam's plan to withdraw troops from Cambodia and called instead for a pullout supervised by the United Nations.

Resistance leaders also expressed doubt Vietnam would honor its pledge to remove its remaining 50,000 to 70,000 troops from Cambodia by Sept. 30.

Vietnamese troops entered Cambodia in December 1978 and ousted the communist Khmer Rouge, under whose rule an estimated one-fourth of Cambodia's 8 million people died from famine and execution since 1975.

But the clandestine Khmer Rouge radio, in its first public statement on Vietnam's withdrawal plan, said "the entire Cambodian people absolutely cannot accept the announcement of a unilateral troop pullout of the Hanoi Vietnamese aggressors."

The broadcast, monitored in Bangkok, also denounced Vietnam's proposal that India, Canada and Poland oversee the withdrawal along with a representative of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Jessica film fees 'no big deal,' police chief says

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Payments to Midland police officers portrayed in the movie dramatizing the 1987 rescue of Jessica McClure are "no big deal," Police Chief Richard Czech said late Thursday.

"It's a private concern, a private deal," Czech said of reports that at least two officers were paid $7,800 by a Los Angeles-based production company.

"If they want it public, it ought to be public. If they want it kept private, it ought to remain private."

The two officers, Detective Sgt. Andy Glasscock and Officer B.J. Land, were paid by Interscope Productions, which is producing the two-hour movie for television, the Reporter-Telegram learned Thursday. Czech said he did not know if the $7,800 figure was accurate.

Czech said it was "no secret" that certain key figures in the rescue, including himself and Fire Chief James Roberts, would be paid compensation by the moviemakers.

The chief declined to comment on the amount of money he was paid.

Glasscock and Roberts were out of town, and Land and could not be reached for comment.

"What my officers do with their money is their business," he said. "And what I do with my money is my business."

Czech said he expected no jealousy among members of his department.

"It was a business deal, pure and simple," he said.

"I don't have anything to hide and I don't think anyone else does... and if anyone has sour grapes, I'm sorry."

Collider picking up 'good momentum'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee's vote authorizing construction of the super collider gives the $4.6 billion particle accelerator "good momentum" heading into the next stage of the budget battle in Congress, says Rep. Joe Barton.

"It's just another building block to build on," says Barton, an Ennis Republican whose district includes the collider site.

The collider cleared its first budget hurdle of the year when the House subcommittee on energy and research development voted Thursday to spend $250 million on the project in next year's budget.

But panel chairwoman Marilyn Lloyd, D-Tenn., said the full Committee on Science, Space and Technology must still approve the project.

"The will of the committee will be expressed at that time," Rep. Lloyd said.

Ms. Lloyd's subcommittee approved the Energy Department's energy research and development budget with no debate on the collider, agreeing with President Bush's request for $160 million for initial construction of the project and $90 million for research and development.

Financing the super collider at the $250 million level, however, means deep cuts will have to be made in other energy research projects, said Rep. Harris W. Fawell, R-Ill., and the shape of those reductions will influence his support of the super collider.

Barton, however, is predicting approval by the full committee next week.

"I feel ... vindicated," Barton said. "I have said every time asked that I felt we were in good shape in the authorization process and that proved to be the case. ... This is the first manifestation of support for the project outside the state of Texas."

But Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., issued a statement saying he and Rep. Paul B. Henry, R-Mich., had reservations about the site selection process and the magnitude of the project.

"We are simply trying to focus members' attention on the procedural questions and on the broader policy question of the impact on the budget," Wolpe said. "We are testing the waters to see if there is broader concern from the committee. I've heard some rumblings."

In their joint statement, the Michigan congressmen said they believe "that the magnitude of contemplated national expenditure, combined with unresolved questions of procedure and substance on the site selection process, demands further review before recommending authorization for continued work on the project."

The men said they were concerned cost estimates on building the collider have "escalated dramatically since our last consideration of the issue."

The collider must also be weighed against the potential adverse effects on other scientific projects that must be cut to pay for building the particle accelerator, the men said.

The two Michigan congressmen also said "substantative questions" remain unanswered about the Department of Energy's site selection process that singled out Waxahachie area farmland.

Trivial Pursuit arch rivals Dr. Nancy Hart, Midland College faculty member, and MC student Steve O'Neal try a bit of drama to illustrate their rivalry. MC honor students will challenge MC instructors to a Trivial Pursuit tournament on Saturday. Last year, the students lost to their instructors.

MC rivals pursue trivia

Teams set to match wits in Saturday tourney

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

For another year, Midland College honor students will match their wit — or knowledge of petty trivia — against their teachers.

Last year, the budding scholars lost.

"That's the natural order of things," reasoned Dr. Nancy Hart, MC paralegal instructor, who was on last year's winning team, Technically Trivial, in the Trivial Pursuit tournament.

And another faculty team, headed by Dr. Will Morris, came in second place following tie-breakers on soap-opera and basketball trivia. But Morris rationalized that his team, the Cerebral Rhetorical Aesthete Pontificators, only lost because Dr. Charles Simmons, the team's soap-opera buff, wasn't there to answer a petty question, and Morris knew but had forgotten some obscure trivia about basketball.

But Hart and Morris disagreed on exactly what was the winning (or losing) question.

"My memory is better than Nancy's," Morris said. "She tends to forget things she doesn't want to remember."

Aside from the petty faculty conflict, Hart said she noticed "that the students weren't even in the playoffs last year. It was faculty-versus-faculty."

MC paralegal student Steve O'Neal, who is just about to graduate from the college, didn't seem too upset about the students' loss.

"Our lives wouldn't be worth living if we had won," O'Neal joked.

O'Neal, who is the tournament's promoter, is lame-duck president of MC's chapter of Phi Theta Kappa, national scholarship honor society. The PTK chapter will field students in the tournament, which is to begin at 10 a.m. Saturday in the Midland High School Youth Center.

Hart's team is returning to defend its title, but Morris and his group are bailing out of the tournament for one reason or another. Morris is attending an academic conference.

"We really do need them (MC faculty members) just to show up," pleaded O'Neal, who seemed anxious, as play-off time neared. "We really need the faculty to show up."

O'Neal, whose team is MC Dynamo, seemed careful not to appear to offend MC instructors. "I don't have Nancy (Hart) as a professor this semester, so my GAP (grade-point average) is not threatened," he said. "But Bob Peetz is on Nancy's team and is one of my professors, and I'm afraid she might subvert him."

Peetz teaches criminal-justice courses at the college.

"Due to our strenuous efforts last year," O'Neal said in an apparent effort to waylay the instructors, "we managed to lull the faculty into a false sense of security."

But, he said, had the students beaten the faculty, "We would have never made it through the rest of the semester. They whopped us," O'Neal jested. "They learned me how to talk right out here."

But at one point, O'Neal confessed that his laudatory comments were "all part of the strategy to make them (MC instructors) feel overconfident."

"Ha!" said Aline Collins, MC librarian and adviser to the PTK honor society. She noted that the student-faculty tournament of trivia is a "terrific idea." Funds raised in the game are to benefit the Midland County District Attorney's Victim Assistance Program.

O'Neal figured that the tournament "proves that no matter how much you think you know, Nancy Hart will probably beat you at it. She's so intelligent, it's disgraceful."

Panel wasting time with political AIDS bills, senator says

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A senator who served on an AIDS task force charged that a Senate subcommittee was wasting its time with bills that would order AIDS tests for prostitutes, drug users and prison inmates and make it a crime to expose someone to the AIDS virus.

Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, Thursday angrily asked the subcommittee chairman to send his bill, which would keep AIDS tests of prisoners confidential, back to the Senate Criminal Justice Committee with an unfavorable report rather than hold it for further review.

"We're just playing games with the subcommittee level," said Washington, who became upset when he arrived after more than an hour of testimony from law enforcement officers in support of bills to criminalize intentional transmission of the deadly virus and to allow disclosure of AIDS test results to victims.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, sponsored two of the bills that would make it a crime of attempted murder to intentionally expose someone to the AIDS virus and to order tests of convicted prostitutes and intravenous drug users.

Parker's bills are expected to be merged with a bill by Sen. Temple Dickson, D-Sweetwater, that would allow testing of state prison and county and city jail inmates, said Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, chairman of the special AIDS subcommittee, which took no official action on the bills Thursday.

But Washington blasted those bills as politically-motivated solutions to a health problem.

"We can't decide these policy issues in this subcommittee," he said. "We can take all the testimony you want to, but when you get down to it, it doesn't have anything to do with politics." Washington said he would vehemently object to the subcommittee choosing one bill over another.

Brown told Washington he had not planned to bottle up his Senate Bill 649 in the subcommittee, but Washington said he would work to kill the bills that take a criminal justice approach to what he considers a health problem.

"I'll see you in the full committee and on the (Senate) floor, because these bills don't address the subject at all and I'm not going to waste my time and your time fooling around," he said. "AIDS is actually a health care issue. It's not a criminal justice issue at all."

While health officials said the possibility of law enforcement officers catching AIDS from spit, blood or other bodily fluids was remote, lawmen said they are concerned. They sought the right to know if assailants carried the AIDS virus and the means to prosecute them.

Jim Wiggins, a Texas Department of Corrections guard, said prisoners twice had thrown feces and urine on him, but TDC has no guidelines in place to deal with such a situation.

Brad Patterson, a Fort Worth police officer and vice president of the Combined Law Enforcement Officers of Texas, said police face the daily threat of infection.

"We have officers trying to make arrests get bitten and spit in their face," he said, but they have little recourse under current law to force assailants to be tested for AIDS.

Brown noted that it would be little consolation to tell an infected officer he was one of a very small percentage who caught the disease.

Brown and Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, the other subcommittee member, assured the officers they were sympathetic to their concerns.

Later, Brown said Washington apparently walked into the meeting and believed his bill was going to die there. "That's not my intention," he said, but he believed the consolidation of the Parker and Dickson bills would provide "a more organized approach" to the criminalization and testing issue.

2 more cases of measles found in Clovis

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — State health officials have confirmed two more cases of measles in Clovis, bringing to four the number of confirmed cases in the area.

Several blood samples from Clovis are being tested in Santa Fe for the disease, said Dr. Laura Fehrs of the New Mexico Office of Epidemiology.

People born before 1956 may remember swifter diagnoses. Back then, the disease was so common that nearly any time a rash developed it could be diagnosed and treated as measles with no problem. Now, however, measles are not official until they have been confirmed by lab test.

It takes a while for the lab confirmation because we need two blood samples from each patient, said Fehrs.

"We've immunized about 2,500 people of the target population in the Clovis area," said Fran Black, state health department nurses in Clovis. The target population includes anyone born after 1956 who has not had a measles immunization since 1980.

U.S. farmers urged to plow foreign fields for new profits

LUBBOCK (AP) — President Bush is strongly committed to achieving a level playing field in the arena of agricultural exports, says a top agriculture adviser.

"We're not any longer going to be soft in our approach to world markets for our agricultural products," said Cooper Evans, Bush's special agriculture adviser.

Efforts to increase agricultural exports will be a key part of the nation's farm policy under the Bush administration, he told South Plains cotton producers at Thursday's annual meeting of Plains Cotton Growers Inc.

But as negotiations with major U.S. trade partners such as the European Economic Community and Japan move toward eliminating trade barriers, Evans said, the global market will affect domestic farmers even more.

"We're moving toward an era where more of our domestic farm policy is influenced very heavily by treaty and less of it by legislation," said Evans, a former Republican Congressman from Iowa who advises President Bush and U.S. Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter on farm policy. "That's a very important change."

Evans said the administration's aim in trade negotiations is to knock down trade barriers to U.S. agricultural products so domestic producers can adequately compete in the world market.

At the same time, however, some current price support programs constitute trade barriers to our trading partners, like target prices for commodities such as cotton.

"You as producers and we in this country must begin to give some real serious thought to what our domestic farm programs might look like in a world where distortions of world trade is taken far more seriously," Evans said.

Exporting more U.S. farm products would also help reduce the billions the federal government pays farmers annually in price supports and other programs, Evans said.

Congress this year faces the task of reworking and extending the 1985 Farm Bill, a job that will be affected not only by current foreign trade negotiations but by the need to whittle the huge federal deficit.

In particular, decisions about setting new target prices for U.S. agricultural products will be governed by budget concerns, Evans said.

El Paso healthcare group alters rules to avoid ethical conflicts

EL PASO (AP) — The 140 doctors who are partners in a company that owns two hospitals, some labs and clinics no longer will be paid according to the bills their patients run up at partnership-owned institutions, officials said.

El Paso Healthcare System's referral-based payment schedule appeared to violate medical ethics dealing with conflict of interest, critics charged.

The profit-distribution arrangement was used only for privately insured and paying patients; it wasn't used for Medicare and Medicaid patients because that would have been a felony under federal anti-kickback laws.

Effective April 1, the doctor-partners' 40 percent share of El Paso Healthcare System's profits will be distributed solely on the level of their investments, said Russell Schneider, president of El Paso Healthcare System.

Previously, most of the profits generated by privately insured and paying patients were being returned to the doctors who made the referrals. Under the arrangement, doctors were financially encouraged to run up their patients' bills, though no one has been accused of fraud.

"We've changed, and we're going forward," Schneider said Wednesday. "There are no ethical standards in the country that would disagree with us now."

In abandoning its profit-sharing method, the company is not saying it had ever violated medical ethics, Schneider said.

But Dr. Hector Franco, president of the El Paso Medical Society, said it's "probably a safe thing to say" that El Paso Healthcare System's former profit distribution plan violated ethics rules.

"Obviously they felt that way or they wouldn't be making any change," Franco said.

Schneider said the company made the change after the Texas Medical Association added to a long-standing ethics statement last month. The addition told doctors with investments in medical centers their "remuneration should be based on capital investment and not on utilization or referral of patients to a particular facility."

El Paso Healthcare System, a subsidiary of Columbia Hospital Corp. of Fort Worth, was created after Columbia's May 1988 purchase of Sun Towers and Vista Hills hospitals and West Texas Diagnostic Center, which owned two laboratories and three Med-Plus clinics in El Paso.

The 110 doctors with investments in West Texas Diagnostic became instant partners, and about 30 other doctors practicing at the two hospitals bought partnership shares for $30,000 each.

Schneider said he explained the changes Tuesday night to representatives of the El Paso County Medical Society's board of censors and the Texas Medical Association.

The board of censors never commented on the plan El Paso Healthcare System used for 11 months.

Dallas teen shows special courage

DALLAS (AP) — Petrea Hayes went back to school Tuesday for the first time in nearly four months. And although the grin was the same as before, and her eyes were bright and darting, her teachers and friends could tell something was different. Something wasn't right.

She still wore her favorite straw hat, one that hides a network of scars left by surgeons who, over the past eight years, took turns attacking the spot in her brain where a malignant tumor sat like a time bomb. Eight times now, they have cut into her brain.

And she still walked with a limp, of course, because a stroke several years ago had paralyzed her right side.

But she talked less and moved about more tentatively now, after the latest round of medical assaults that kept her hospitalized for almost three months.

And she said she was a little afraid of being run over by the mobs of students packing the halls at Highland Park High School. Never in her 16 years had she ever been afraid of anything. Even death.

Doctors have pointed out that undergoing three major brain operations and several related surgical procedures within a 30-day period, as Petrea has just done, can do strange, unexplainable things to anyone. And though she has become something of an expert patient who has defied the odds of survival, Petrea is no exception.

"She's more shy, and she's a little slower," said Kathy Kelchner, the ninth-grader's special-education teacher. "She says the computer keyboard looks blurred." She then smiled a big smile and added, "But she's such a neat, neat little girl. We're all so happy she's back."

Indeed, her mother, whose name also is Petrea, points out, "We're just thankful she's still with us."

After all, eight years ago, surgeons in California, who performed the first five brain operations, at one point gave up hope. She had neurofibromatosis, a genetic disorder that causes fibrous tumors to form along the nervous system. In most cases, the tumors are benign. But Petrea's was malignant. When efforts to remove the tumor failed, doctors gave their prognosis: She would live no more than 90 days.

Today she is known as the family miracle.

AP Laserphoto

Petrea Hayes, center, is welcomed back to Dallas' Highland Park High School earlier this week by, from left, Reineta Chapman, teacher Kathy Kelchner, John Hunter and Jenny Carlson. Petrea, 16, had missed nearly four months of school while undergoing three major brain operations.

She shrugs off the distinction. "I just want to be treated like everyone else," she has said.

Monday, for instance, she joined her classmates for a trip to the Ramses the Great exhibit at Fair Park.

"I asked her if she would like to have a wheelchair along just in case, and she said no," Kelchner said. "We found out we were going to have to park a couple of blocks from the exhibit and walk, and the bus driver said he could let the two of us off closer to the door if she'd like. But she said no, she wanted to do what the other kids were doing."

And she did, too, completing the day without a wheelchair.

Petrea has been surprising people in Dallas for two years, since she and her mother moved here from California and she enrolled at Highland Park's McCullough Middle School. In the eighth grade, she ran for vice president of her class. And although she was defeated, her classmates elected her to the Student Council.

At a walkathon last summer, her paralyzed right leg in a brace, she made five laps around the quarter-mile course.

This year, her first in high school, was interrupted in a frightening way. The time bomb apparently was still ticking.

On New Year's Day, she was diagnosed as having meningitis, an inflammation of the brain. Subsequent tests revealed a disturbing growth on the left side of her brain — the site of the tumor. Surgeons at Humana Hospital Medical City Dallas performed three operations, the longest lasting seven hours.

"We removed an abscess about like that," said Dr. Kenneth Shapiro, his hands illustrating a mass the size of a grapefruit. "If we hadn't operated, she probably would have died."

Since being released from the hospital last month, Petrea has been receiving physical, occupational and speech therapy daily at home. She's more tentative now than she was four months ago, her mother says, and sometimes she struggles for words that used to come easily. Her recovery has been psychologically painful, if not physically so.

But whatever additional brain damage she might have suffered during these past few months, there was good news, too. Surgeons said the tumor had disappeared.

Yes, Petrea said, she was happy, but she was cautious, too. Doctors, she had learned, don't know everything.

"What happened to it?" Petrea's mother asked.

At least this time, Dr. Derek Bruce, one of the surgeons, found it easy to admit he didn't know.

"Who cares?" he said. "It's gone."

Wright accused of pressuring ex-aide

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright telephoned a former aide last year and asked him to sign an affidavit stating that the aide had volunteered to work on the speaker's book, "Reflections of a Public Man," according to testimony given to the ethics committee investigating Wright's finances.

The testimony also alleges that Wright, at a breakfast meeting early in 1985, asked congressional aides to help set up promotional events for the book, according to sources familiar with the deposition of former Wright aide Matthew Cossolotto.

Wright's directive was followed in the next month or so by book signings at a Capitol Hill bookstore and the National Press Club, a distribution of copies — paid for by lobbyists — to Democrats attending a party conference and by an appearance on a televised talk show.

An aide to Wright, Mark Johnson, called Cossolotto "a disgruntled former employee" but did not deny the speaker had directed staff members to sell books.

The ethics committee, which met behind closed doors to continue its deliberations today, is looking into whether Wright used bulk sales of the book to circumvent limits on outside income from speaking and writing fees.

Cossolotto testified to the panel that after a newspaper reported last June that he had helped compile and edit the book, including a three-week trip to Fort Worth to oversee final preparation for printing, he telephoned the speaker. When Wright called him back, he asked Cossolotto to sign an affidavit swearing to the voluntary nature of the job assignment.

The former aide told the committee he considered the book work part of his official job assignment, and declined to sign the affidavit.

Johnson disputed that version of events, saying Cossolotto had volunteered at first to give an affidavit, then backed out.

Wright acknowledged Wednesday that in at least one instance — the sale of 504 copies of the book to Southwest Texas State University in lieu of a $3,000 speaking fee — he had given his assent to the deal.

In that case, the suggestion to sell books came from a staff member, Wright said.

In at least one other case, the March 1986 sale of $1,000 worth of books in lieu of a speaking fee from Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, the suggestion to buy books also came from a Wright staff aide, according to a source familiar with the transaction. Wright was to ship the books not to the trade group, but to schools in Texas, the source said.

One ethics committee member, who did not wish to be identified, acknowledged Thursday that the issue of book promotion was before the panel, but it was unclear how serious the committee considers that issue.

The ethics panel is expected to reach some conclusion in its nine-month investigation of Wright sometime next week, said Chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif. Sources have said the panel is concentrating on the book sales and Wright's financial dealings with his friend George Mallick.

Prosecutor reportedly fired over Adams case

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas County District Attorney's handling of the Randall Dale Adams case created a rift in his office that ended with the firing of one prosecutor and resignations of two others, moves that further stained the city's reputation for injustice, Adams' attorney said Thursday.

"First Tom Landry and now Winfield Scott. Is no icon safe in Dallas?" asked Randy Schaffer, the Houston attorney who represented Adams during appeals of his 1977 capital murder conviction of a Dallas police officer.

Scott, 48, who insulted a colleague and two judges during a last-minute battle to keep Adams behind bars, was fired by District Attorney John Vance Wednesday. Two other assistant prosecutors who worked on Adams' case also resigned.

Vance told the Dallas Times Herald Scott "just did not handle (the Adams case) the way I had told him to handle it ... He was convinced he was doing right and I was convinced he was doing wrong."

Several phone calls from The Associated Press to Scott and Vance went unreturned Thursday.

"Apparently, the powers that be just perceived that they could not longer keep him in the office. But I think he was just following orders," Schaffer said. "I guarantee you if he won the recusal hearing (to oust state district Judge Larry Baraka from the case), he wouldn't have been fired."

Adams, whose conviction for the 1976 slaying of a Dallas police officer was overturned last month, was freed after spending 12½ years in prison, coming within three days of execution at one point.

His case was resurrected with evidence uncovered in the Errol Morris documentary "The Thin Blue Line," which strongly suggested that Dallas officer Robert Wood was not slain by Adams, but by witness David Harris.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled the prosecutor in 1977, Doug Mulder, supressed evidence in the case while at least two witnesses lied on the stand.

Schaffer said the lasting affects of Adams' wrongful incarceration will be felt not only by his client, but also the rest of the state.

"I talked to a colleague of mine in Dallas who was picking a jury for a murder case this week," Schaffer said. "I understand during jury selection, 17 prospective jurors were slashed because they said they couldn't be fair to the state. One juror raised his hand and asked if Winfield Scott had anything to do with the case. I think that says a lot."

A source in the district attorney's office who asked to remain anonymous told The Associated Press that Scott was a casualty of Adams case.

"Vance was unhappy with the way the whole thing happened."

Assistant district attorneys Leslie McFarlane and John Creuzot announced earlier in the week that they were leaving the office by the end of the month. Both said they will pursue private practices.

"It's time for me to move on," said Ms. McFarlane, 32, who has been with the office 5½ years. "It's time for me to leave."

But sources said both Ms. McFarlane and Creuzot were embarrassed by the state's bungled attempts to deny Adams his freedom.

Lewis upset by firing of state wildlife head

AUSTIN (AP) — Voicing his disappointment, House Speaker Gib Lewis says Texas has lost one of the nation's top game biologists with the firing of state wildlife director Charles Allen.

"I think his record with Parks and Wildlife is an exceptional record, and I think everyone he has ever dealt with will tell you that," Lewis said Thursday. "It's sad when you lose someone of that quality under these circumstances ..."

Allen, who faces charges in New Mexico over an antelope-trapping mission, was fired Wednesday night by Charles D. Travis, executive director of the Parks and Wildlife Department.

It was the latest development in a continuing controversy that Lewis, an avid outdoorsman and big game hunter, said was unwarranted.

"I do have some friends around the country, and I called them to find out. The only reason that there was any cases brought (is) because of the press play that this has received back in Austin, Texas," Lewis said.

"It says we've got a pretty sorry system," he added.

Travis was unavailable for comment Thursday, his secretary said, and he did not return a call from The Associated Press.

"Employees serve at the will of the executive director," Travis said in a brief written statement. He also said that after reviewing a continuing internal investigation of the New Mexico incident, "It is my opinion that Mr. Allen did not knowingly violate any criminal statute."

Allen said earlier he was innocent of three felony and six misdemeanor charges brought against him last week in Alamogordo, N.M. Allen had been net gunner in a helicopter mission Jan. 30, which authorities allege strayed over New Mexico.

In a related development, the Senate on Thursday confirmed four appointees to the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission. But Sen. Chet Edwards said the department has a "serious public perception problem — at the least it has a public perception problem, at the most it needs to deal with clarifying, to deal with its policies."

"I think it's critical that the citizens of this state recognize and believe that anyone is going to be created equally by any state agency," said Edwards, D-Duncanville.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

'Sun of Man' shines on nuclear fusion

ODESSA — "The Sun of Man," a one-hour documentary, examines the use of nuclear fusion energy to create clean, safe and unlimited energy when it airs at 9 p.m. Sunday and 10 p.m. Tuesday on KOCV-TV/Channel 36.

The program explains the difference between nuclear fusion and nuclear fission, which is currently used in nuclear power plants. Nuclear fusion produces energy by fusing atoms together. Nuclear fission produces energy by splitting atoms and, consequently, fission gives off more radioactive waste, according to the program.

According to fusion proponents on the program, power plants using nuclear fusion are less likely to go out of control the way fission reactors did at Chernobyl in the Soviet Union and at Three Mile Island in Pennsylvania.

In the "Sun of Man," host Marc Levenson travels to the Soviet Union for a rare interview with Soviet scientist and dissident Dr. Andrei Sakharov. Sakharov is perhaps best known as a Nobel laureate for his work in human rights, but he is also a physicist. The interview marks the first time Sakharov has spoken on American television about the future use of thermonuclear fusion.

The documentary also examines the world's leading fusion research lab, Princeton University's Plasma Physics Laboratory in New Jersey. The laboratory is the home of the Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor.

"The Sun of Man" uses animation to explain fusion technology. Through interviews with nuclear fusion proponents, from Sakharov to Princeton's physicists to science fiction writer Isaac Asimov, the program reveals the impact of this research.

Threads of hope bind Filipino women

By CLARO CORTES

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Fidela Pizarra thinks she might make enough money to start rebuilding the home she lost in a typhoon.

Helen Rodica no longer has to beg in the streets to feed her family.

Their new beginnings come from Marie de la Soudiere, a Frenchwoman who barks orders — and encouragement — at them in the small, second-story office of Thread of Hope for Economic Advancement, or THEA.

They are among 40 women from impoverished squatter settlements who are making nightgowns being sold in boutiques in the United States and a half dozen other places in the world.

De la Soudiere brought the women together last year.

THEA's goal is to provide a decent livelihood for destitute women who cannot qualify for government jobs or who "fall through the cracks" of state welfare and assistance programs.

It is among hundreds of cooperatives, most supported by foreign and local charity organizations, that provide jobs for thousands of Filipinos who otherwise face lives of abject poverty.

De la Soudiere, who worked with international relief organizations in Southeast Asia for more than a decade, established THEA with $2,000 of her own and $500 from a friend.

After a year in operation, the cooperative exports nightgowns under its own label to boutiques in Canada, Japan, France, Hong Kong, Spain and Australia, as well as the United States. Plans call for expanding sales to Britain and New Zealand.

THEA sells its nightgowns to exporters for the equivalent of $12 to $30 apiece, depending on the difficulty of the design. The seamstresses receive $4 to $6 for each garment they make. That's an improvement over the Philippines' minimum daily wage of $3.

Money left over after buying raw materials and reimbursing de la Soudiere for her investment goes into a fund for community projects, such as artesian wells and a day-care center for children of cooperative employees.

"With what I am earning here, I can start sending money to my husband in the province to buy materials to build our house, which was destroyed by a typhoon last year," said the 58-year-old Mrs. Pizarra.

"I have been sewing on and off for 16 years but could not earn enough. Now I have a chance to earn more if I work a little bit harder."

De la Soudiere, who is married to an United Nations official, said many such cooperatives fail because they do not produce quality products that fetch high prices in foreign markets.

She said many cooperatives also rely too heavily on charity funding. When donations dry up, so do the cooperatives.

"I really want to establish THEA as a very well-made brand of lingerie, like Dior," she said. "Why not? Let's dream."

She demands high standards. She lectures cooperative members on the need for quality and sound business practices. Garments with loose stitching or poorly ironed creases are sent back to the seamstress to do over.

"It's her way of showing she cares," said Delia Calanno, 41, who supervises cutting and sewing. "She is teaching us the value of time and meeting deadlines."

"She's a big help to us," added Mrs. Rodica, 32, a mother of two. "She took me off begging in the streets. Now I can buy enough food for my family and medicine for my sick husband."

De la Soudiere expects to leave the Philippines in about six months when her husband is transferred. But she is optimistic the cooperative will survive under the management of the Filipinos she will leave behind.

She said the hardest part of her work has been to persuade the women that after generations of poverty, they can improve their lives with hard work. She encourages them to rely on themselves and not the government.

"They don't allow themselves to dream yet," she said. "They cannot imagine that they can really get out of the squatter camp. But now they are beginning to produce more, so something is happening."

Deadly Japanese delicacy scales heights of New York

NEW YORK (AP) — American diners with a death wish can now risk sushi-cide with fugu, a seafood delicacy that becomes the last supper for 100 Japanese each year.

The raw fish arrived in New York City last week, appearing on the menus of seven Manhattan restaurants and making the United States the only country outside Japan where fugu is found.

But the man who brought the gourmet delight stateside promised Wednesday this fugu couldn't hurt a fly, unlike the badly prepared fugu that's fatal to half the people who eat it. Every year about 100 Japanese eat a fatal fugu meal.

"There is no danger at all," said a confident Nobuyoshi Kuraoka, owner of Restaurant Nippon in midtown Manhattan. "In the 50 years since the war, there is no single instance of poisoning from the tiger puffer fish prepared by a licensed chef in the city of Shimonoseki."

With that in mind, all 265 pounds of fugu flown frozen into John F. Kennedy International Airport was prepared for delivery in that Japanese city. Kuraoka stressed its safety, but tales of fugu past provide another picture.

Fugu has been a taste treat in Japan for more than 2,000 years. There are 15 different kinds of fugu, all prepared from puffer fish. If not properly cleaned, the fish can be fatal — its entrails, liver and ovaries contain the deadly toxin tetrodotoxin.

The removal of the dangerous organs is handled by special chefs in Japan with at least 13 years' experience.

To insure smooth sailing with this first fugu shipment, Kuraoka had a chef with 53 years experience, Sakae Hata of Shimonoseki, handle inspection in Japan and upon arrival here.

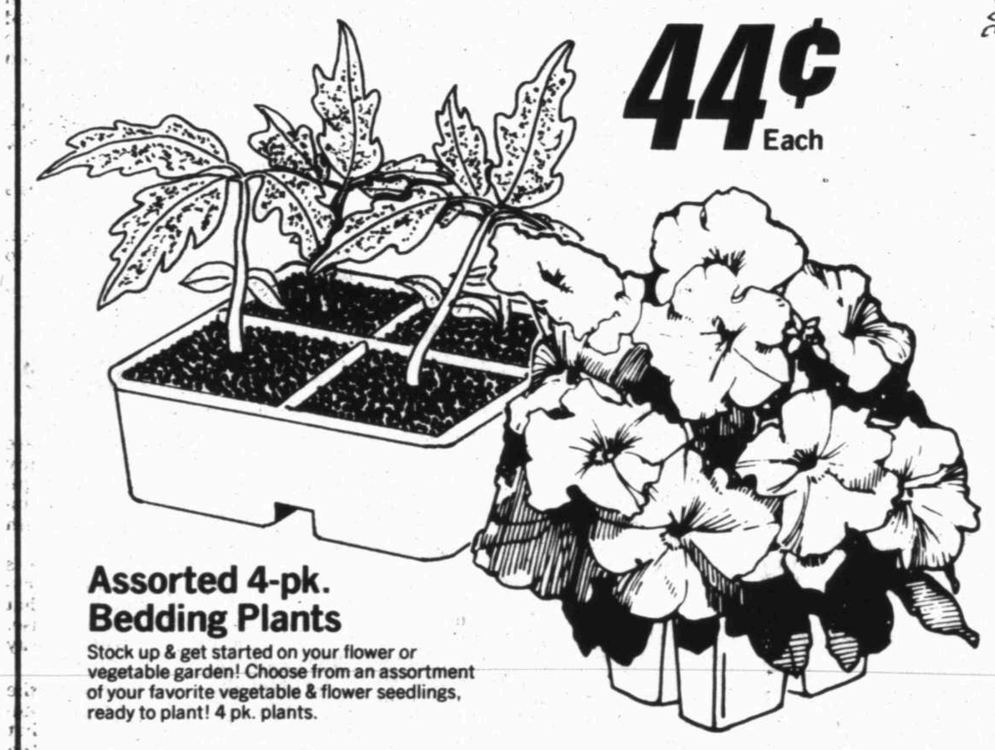

"No other fish is treated as strictly as this fugu today. Inspectors at Shimonoseki observed the whole process," said Kuraoka.

The go-ahead for importation was given in November 1988 after a year of intense negotiations between the two countries, said Chris Lecos of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Fugu now will be allowed into the United States up to three times per year between September and March when the fish are in season. Fugu had been on the FDA's automatic detention list for eight years, Lecos said.

"It has a very mysterious taste, profound and unforgettable," explained Kuraoka.

Big Spring poet wins honors with 'The Blue Knight'

By LYNN HAYES

BIG SPRING (AP) — David Payne says he wants to leave his mark on the world — and that thought has won him some national honors in poetry.

His first published poem, "The Blue Knight," was featured in the American Poetry Anthology in 1986. The work was dedicated to Howard County Sheriff's Deputy Ed Covington.

The two became friends when Covington, then a Big Spring police officer, investigated a burglary at Payne's home in 1985.

Payne says Covington's actions and professional attitude prompted him to write the following:

"He stands straight and tall, enforcing the law,
looking out for one and all.
He stands on the side of justice, fighting for that which is right.
They call him the Blue Knight."

Payne remembers the first poem he wrote.

"I was in 10th or 11th grade and the teacher told us to write a poem while in class. I saw a picture of a mountain hanging in the classroom and decided to write about it," Payne said.

Impressed by what he read, Payne's teacher told him his work was good enough to be published.

After researching book covers for publishing companies, Payne decided to enter poetry contests.

He entered "The Blue Knight" in the American Poetry Association's contest in the summer of 1986. When contest officials notified him they wanted to publish his work, "it thrilled me," Payne said.

Payne also was told he was a nominee for the association's title of "Best New Poet."

He submitted three more poems to be considered for publication. "Oh Listen" was chosen and was published in the APA's book of "Best New Poets of 1986."

Payne's poems were also published in Howard College's yearbook in 1987. He received honorable mention for his poem "The Fate of the Laura Lye."

Payne says overall he has written one short story and about 60 poems.

He says he realizes he won't profit from his writings until he publishes a book containing his own original material, but he says it doesn't matter because he enjoys writing.

"I express my feelings and express how others feel about me," he said. "I express how I perceive others and how they perceive me."

Payne says he writes with inspiration from God.

The Challenger explosion inspired Payne to write a poem, titled "America's Seven Eagles" the very day the disaster occurred.

Although the poem is still unpublished, Payne did send a copy to NASA in Houston. He received a call from a NASA official, who thanked him for his encouraging thoughts.

Leonard Cohen makes rare 'Austin City Limits' appearance

By KATHRYN BAKER

NEW YORK (AP) — The last time I saw Leonard Cohen perform was at least 10 years ago at a nightclub in Washington, D.C.

During intermission, several of us in the audience struck up conversations and realized it had been almost a decade since we had seen him before that.

I had seen him in, I think, 1971 at Municipal Auditorium in Austin, Texas, where he invited the entire audience of several hundred people up onto the stage with him. When an authority figure was summoned and took control of the proceedings, Cohen led the audience out onto the lawn and continued the performance.

The enigmatic poet-songwriter-singer (listen to him and you'll know why "singer" is always mentioned last) makes a rare appearance, his first major American television appearance, this Saturday on PBS' "Austin City Limits."

The venue is appropriate. Cohen had an affection for Austin after that early '70s performance, when he was surprised by such a warm response from a Texas audience for a rather obscure, intellectual Canadian poet.

In one of his funny but occasionally obtuse monologues on Saturday's show, Cohen explains, "I've only had one tricky moment in this city. It was when we were passing a shoe hospital. One of my boots, which has a long history of hypochondria, cried out pitifully, and my whole catalog flashed before my eyes."

The audience responded enthusiastically to this anecdote. But then some of them are inexplicably dressed in costumes — a young woman in a nun's robe, and a young man with a watermelon on his head, for instance. No kidding.

Cohen's recording career has been only slightly more prolific than his performing one. The TV appearance is no doubt prompted by the recent release of the well-received album, "I'm Your Man," which re-established Cohen as a champion of wry observation.

The only disappointment in Cohen's ACL appearance is that the hour-long set is almost all songs from "I'm Your Man," which is fine — it just would have been nice to hear more of the old songs, too. There are a couple.

A few songs into the performance, Cohen declares, "Austin is known as a seat of resistance," then launches into his haunting version of Anna Marly's "The Partisan," a tribute to a Resistance of another time, from his 1968 album "Songs from a Room": "When they poured across the border, I was cautioned to surrender, this I could not do. I took my gun and vanished. ... An old woman gave us shelter, kept us hidden in the garret, then the soldiers came. She died without a whisper. ..."

Cohen, 54, was born in Montreal and was known primarily as a poet and novelist ("Beautiful Losers") until Judy Collins recorded "Suzanne" in 1966 and launched his music career. The strength of his lyrics overcame the weakness of his raspy, monotonal voice, and he put together excellent backup bands. The ACL appearance is no exception.

Cohen opens with "First We Take Manhattan" from "I'm Your Man," then later on the album's "Tower of Song," pokes fun at his singing — "I was born like this, I had no choice, I was born with the gift of a golden voice."

He nevertheless demands his place, wherever it may be. "I said to Hank Williams, 'How lonely does it get?' Hank Williams hasn't answered yet. But I hear him coughing all night long, a hundred floors above me in the tower of song."

In introducing "Take This Waltz," another cut from "I'm Your Man," he explains that it is based on a poem by the Spanish poet Federico Garcia Lorca, "Little Viennese Waltz."

Cohen recalls as a youth rummaging through a second-hand bookstore and coming across a collection of Lorca's poems. He opened the book and read the line, "I want to pass through the arches of Elvira to see her thighs and begin weeping."

"Well, that certainly was a refreshing sentiment," Cohen said, drawing laughter from the audience. "I began my own search for those arches and those thighs and those tears. Another line, 'The morning threw fistfuls of ants in my face.' It's a terrible idea, but this was a universe I understood thoroughly."

Cohen said he so admired the poet, who was killed by the Spanish civil guard in 1936, that he named his daughter Lorca.

Appropriately enough, the final line of "Take This Waltz," the final song of the set, goes: "O my love, o my love, take this waltz, take this waltz. It's yours now. It's all that there is."

American pays $7.39 million for early Picasso

LONDON (AP) — An anonymous American collector paid $7.39 million at auction for an early cubist painting by Pablo Picasso, "Woman Sitting in an Armchair," Christie's auction house said.

The painting, which Picasso started in 1917 and completed in 1920, is thought to be modeled on Olga Kokhlova, daughter of a Russian general and a dancer whom Picasso met in Rome and married in 1918, Christie's said.

The auction house said it was bought by an American collector bidding by telephone who wished to remain anonymous.

Another Picasso work, "Woman's Head" painted in 1921 in the artist's neo-classical style, sold for $5.91 million during Monday's auction of impressionist and modern painting and sculpture.

Again, the buyer requested anonymity.

"Woman's Head" painted at Picasso's villa at Fontainebleau in northern France reflects the so-called return-to-order movement after the end of World War I in 1918.

Reacting to the destruction of the war, artists, musicians and writers substituted order for disorder, calm for violence and regular forms for the shattered forms which had prevailed for 10 years or more. In Picasso's art this took the form of a return to realism.

"Woman's Head" is said by art critics to reflect the deep feeling for antiquity in his Mediterranean heritage.

A work by Paul Klee, "Uplift and Way" painted in 1932, fetched $5.17 million and a work by Max Ernst, "Gray Forest" painted in 1927, sold for $1.33 million.

A work by Amedeo Modigliani, "Young Girl in a Striped Shirt" painted in 1917, fetched $4.62 million.

But a head-and-shoulders portrait by the French Impressionist Pierre Auguste Renoir of his model Madame Henriot painted in 1874 failed to attract a single bid. Christie's said it had been expected to sell for between $3.02 million and $4.2 million.

Christie's said the entire sale raised $40.99 million.

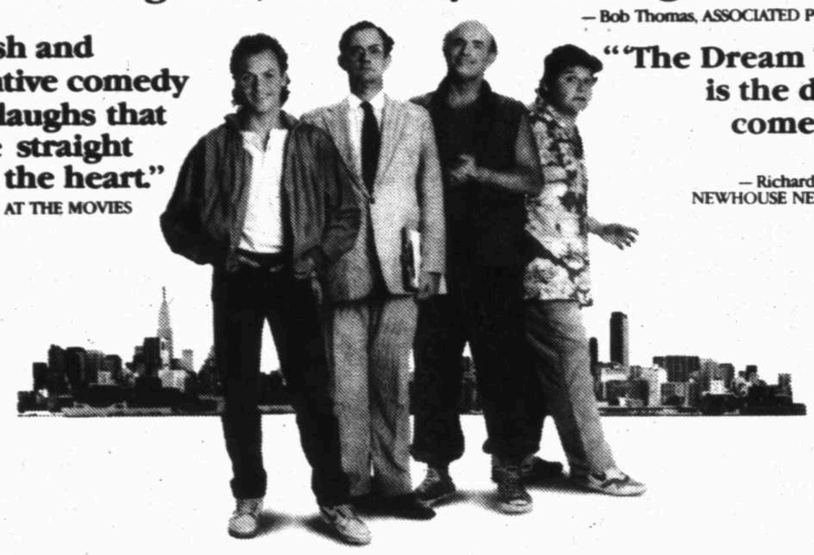

The London newspaper The Daily Telegraph, commenting on the sale prices, said: "The soaring market in impressionist and modern pictures took a pause for breath at Christie's ... In general bidders were out to consolidate recent excess rather than advance on it."

Guard helps in crackdown on drug traffickers

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — U.S. Customs officials say National Guard troops working with them in Texas for the next six months will make life more difficult for drug traffickers.

Ninety-two National Guard troops authorized for drug interdiction in Texas began working Thursday with Customs at international bridges on the Mexican border at Brownsville, Hidalgo, Laredo and El Paso, and at the Port of Houston.

"In very simple terms, what this will do is enable the Customs Service to inspect more cargo and do it quicker," said Charles Conroy, a Customs regional spokesman in Houston.

They will not search passenger vehicles, Conroy said.

A $2.9 million appropriation from the Pentagon makes the troops available for the next six months, said Lt. Col. Ed Komandosky, spokesman for the National Guard in Texas.

"They are weekend soldiers who have agreed to volunteer for the six-month duty," Komandosky said. "Some have left their civilian jobs to do this."

The troops inspecting cargo will not carry weapons or have authority to make arrests, Komandosky said.

"If the guy jumps out of the truck and starts to run away, it will be up to Customs to do something," he added.

"We have knowledge that narcotics are being brought into the United States through cargo, but because of a lack of manpower we cannot do the job we should do," said Fernando Macias, Customs port director at Brownsville.

Macias said the extra help will make it possible for his inspectors to fulfill a mandate that they unload, or "de-van," 10 percent of the cargo trucks that cross the Rio Grande at Brownsville. An average of 300 loaded cargo trucks enter at Brownsville every day, including many from U.S.-owned assembly plants across the border at Matamoros, Mexico.

Behind Macias on the cargo inspection dock Thursday afternoon, troops were helping Customs inspectors unload a truck full of furniture and oversaw the emptying of another truck loaded with jalapeno peppers.

The program to use National Guard troops in cargo inspections is patterned after a pilot project conducted at ports of entry last summer.

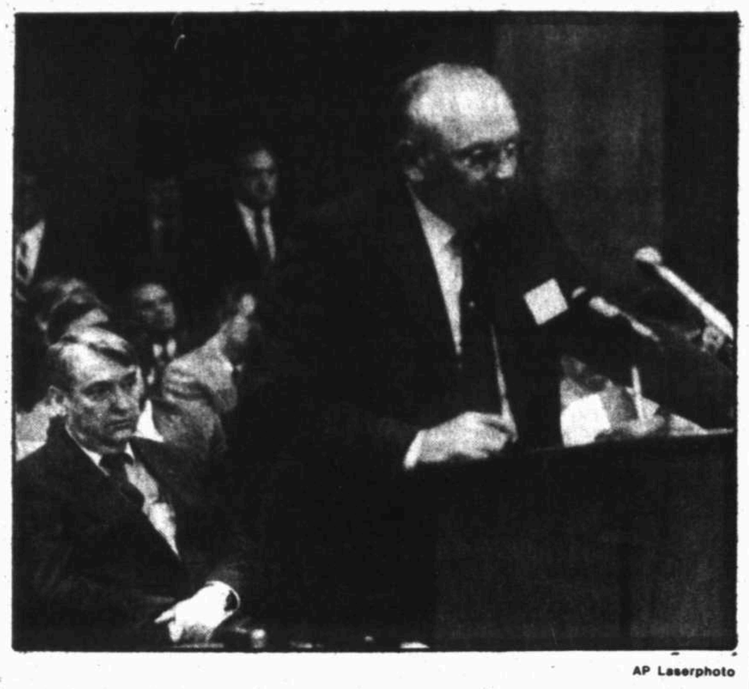

"That was a test and it was very successful," Komandosky said.

National Guard troops assisted in the seizure of 8,400 pounds of marijuana from a truck at Hidalgo last August, among other, smaller seizures.

A total of $12 million has been released for using the National Guard for drug interdiction in 12 states, said Maj. Bob Dunlap, a spokesman for the National Guard Bureau in Washington, D.C.

The troops will work with federal agencies in areas including aerial detection and photography, radar surveillance, expanded training of law enforcement personnel and increased loans of military equipment, Dunlap said.

Other states where Dunlap said National Guard troops will be deployed to fight drug trafficking are: Arizona, Alabama, California, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oregon and Washington.

Irving Mayor Bob Pierce, seated at left, listens as San Angelo Mayor Dick Funk testifies before the Public Utility Commission in Austin Thursday. Both mayors supported GTE, in its efforts to have the PUC reconsider a rate reduction.

PUC refuses to back down on GTE refund

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — The Texas Public Utility Commission, fighting a flood of legislative protests, confirmed Thursday its decision to order a $128 million refund to the customers of GTE Southwest and to reduce the phone company's annual rates by $59 million.

The commission also rejected attempts by consumer groups to reduce GTE's rates further.

Both GTE and consumer groups said they would appeal the decision to state district court.

The PUC decision will cost GTE $433 million over five years.

In an immediate response, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the decision to sustain the refund to consumers was wrong. "That commission has proceeded in a highly injudicious fashion," said Hobby.

The PUC has been under increasing political pressure since it decided 2-1 in February to reduce GTE rates by $59 million and to order the $128 million refund effective Jan. 1, 1987.

GTE responded by blaming the decrease for 600 employee layoffs and by saying it threatened GTE's decision to relocate a corporate headquarters to Irving, a Dallas suburb.

Commissioner Jo Campbell, who had earlier opposed the majority decision because she thought the refund and rate reduction were too low, voted to confirm the February decision.

Campbell had harsh words for E.L. "Buddy" Langley, president of GTE Southwest.

She said Langley should be criticized and reprimanded for engineering political reaction to the PUC's initial decision. Campbell said his action amounted to illegal communication, through the Legislature, with the commissioners.

Langley, who was in the packed PUC hearing room, denied the allegations.

He said he was asked to respond to the PUC decision and simply did so.

He confirmed that he is chairman of the Texas Telephone Association, which Campbell said spearheaded a resolution in the Texas House calling for the PUC to reverse its decision.

Langley said GTE would challenge in state district court the PUC ordered refund and also may challenge the reduction.

C. Kingsbery Ottmers, the state's designated consumer advocate, said she also would challenge the PUC decision, which she said gave GTE unwarranted and illegal tax breaks. She said it would be "devastating" to Houston area consumers if the tax treatment given to GTE were also given to Houston Lighting & Power Co., which has a $446 million rate increase pending before the PUC.

The GTE decision would mean 17 percent reductions in phone rates for the company, the second largest in Texas.

GTE serves the Dallas-Fort Worth area and also serves parts of Harris, Fort Bend, Galveston, Brazoria and Montgomery counties.

Lake's backers seek to keep funds' well from running dry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supporters of Cooper Lake are asking Congress to spend $31 million next year to help finish building the long-awaited Northeast Texas reservoir that will supply water to communities from the fringes of Dallas to Texarkana.

Backers of the project, on the drawing board for more than three decades, testified before a House appropriations committee Thursday that water from the reservoir is needed by communities from East Texas to Irving.

Donald W. Abernathy, vice president of the Sulphur River Municipal Water District, said the member cities — Commerce, Cooper and Sulphur Springs — have all had to ration water during the 34 years the project has been under consideration.

"In the 34-year delay, all cities have rationed water, laid temporary water lines, dug water wells, and hauled water by truck, just to get by while the Cooper Lake and channel reservoir was being completed," Abernathy testified.

He said the North Texas Municipal Water District, which supplies water to cities on the north and east fringe of Dallas as well as the city itself, has contracted for water from Cooper Lake. The cities of Irving and Texarkana are also awaiting Cooper Lake water.

Carl W. Riehn, executive director of the North Texas Municipal Water District, testified that without Cooper Lake, a drought would "place us into a shortage program with a very high mineral content water."

The project is estimated to cost $160 million.

STATE IN BRIEF

More than 100 El Paso pupils positive for TB

EL PASO (AP) — More than 100 students at a middle school have tested positive for exposure to tuberculosis and will undergo chest X-rays to determine whether they have the disease.

The 106 students apparently were exposed to tuberculosis after a contagious student attended Wiggs Middle School for three months with what were thought to be flu symptoms.

The students will be treated to prevent the infection from producing full-blown tuberculosis, said Dr. Miguel Escobedo of the El Paso City-County Health District. He said he expects few, if any, to develop tuberculosis.

Last week, 113 students and staff at another school — Guillen Intermediate — tested positive for tuberculosis infection. Everyone at the school was given a skin test after it was discovered a student at that school had attended classes for months while contagious.

Most of those 113 at Guillen have received chest X-rays and none have the disease in their lungs, Escobedo said. Those who tested positive at Wiggs will be X-rayed next week, he said.

Around 10 percent of the students at each school tested positive.

Officer hurt during arrest

TUCUMCARI, N.M. (AP) — A state police officer was kicked in the head and shot in the leg while trying to arrest a man who jumped out of a truck, grabbed the officer's gun and critically wounded the truck's driver, authorities said.

The kick knocked Officer Nathan Wallace nearly unconscious as his assailant opened the truck's passenger door late Thursday along Interstate 40 just west of Tucumcari, State Police Maj. John Denko said early today.

Truckers had radioed state police that a man, possibly under the influence of some mind-altering substance, had been jumping in front of traffic along I-40 around 11 p.m., Denko said. Wallace responded and found trucker Timothy J. Receveur of Indianapolis standing at the roadside, complaining that a man Denko identified as John Land of Vincennes, Ind., had climbed into his truck.

"The officer asked Land to get out. That's when Land opened the door and gave the officer a boot right in the head," Denko said.

Land allegedly seized Wallace's .357 Magnum service revolver and shot Receveur in the right side above the belt line, Denko said. The trucker was listed in critical condition early today at Northwest Hospital in Amarillo, Texas, Denko said.

Teen gets life sentence

HOUSTON (AP) — A 15-year-old youth convicted of the rape-slaying of a Houston woman may be the state's youngest prison inmate after he was sentenced to a life term.

Shannon Lee "Scoobie" Johnson was sentenced Thursday by State District Judge Ted Poe after jurors convicted him of killing Gloria Vargas Pastor, 66.

"You're a cold and calculated killer who put that knife in her heart for no apparent reason," the judge told Johnson. "But for the arbitrary laws of the state of Texas, you'd be facing the death sentence."

Texas Department of Corrections figures show that only 0.02 percent of the state's inmates are younger than 17. Although the capital murder conviction could carry a death sentence, it can be applied only to defendants who are at least 17 years old.

Johnson is an eighth-grade dropout with an IQ of 55.

UT regents hike some tuition, accept funds for Willie Nelson scholarship

EL PASO (AP) — Graduate business students at UT-Austin will pay more tuition, researchers at UT-Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas will get a new building and members of UT-Austin's Longhorn Band will be able to vie for a scholarship named after singer Willie Nelson, UT System regents have decided.

The regents, meeting Thursday at UT-El Paso, also raised student service fees at UT-Arlington, granted a lease renewal for a municipal golf course in Austin, established a doctoral program and approved a proposal to incorporate an outreach program at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center.

In approving incorporation for the M.D. Anderson Cancer Center Outreach Corp., regents allowed the hospital to establish outpatient centers for cancer care as well as inpatient centers at other hospitals. It also will establish internship and teaching programs with other hospitals and medical schools.

The regents approved a plan to build a $52.5 million, 307,000-square-foot research building at UT-Southwestern Medical Center and hired F&S Partners Inc. of Dallas as its architect. Regents appropriated $20 million from the Permanent University Fund, $23.5 million from the medical center itself and $10 million from grants and gifts. The other $1 million is for fees and administrative expenses.

Regents raised the student services fees at UT-Arlington from a maximum of $84 a semester to $90 a semester, saying the increase was needed to maintain the level of services. The fee pays for student publications, admission to sports and other events, graduation ceremonies and the Student Health Center.

Graduate students at UT-Austin's business school will have to pay more, too. Regents raised resident tuition from $32 a semester hour to $36 an hour, and non-resident tuition from $150 an hour to $152 an hour.

The board approved establishing a doctoral degree in public policy at UT-Austin's Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs. The proposal now goes before the UT System's coordinating board. It would be the first such degree to be offered in Texas. Harvard offers a similar doctoral program.

On the lighter side, regents accepted gifts totaling $35,000 from prominent Houston lawyer Joe Jamail and former UT-Austin football coach Darrell Royal to establish the Willie Nelson Endowed Presidential Scholarship in the College of Fine Arts. It will go annually to one or more members of the marching band.

Longhorn Band director Glenn Richter said the band plans to make a recording with Nelson, an Austin resident and golfing buddy of Royal's.

The only topic in which there was any debate concerned extending Austin's lease of the university-owned Lions Municipal Golf Course and negotiations over the use of 440 acres of adjacent university-owned land.

Negotiators for the city, represented Thursday by homeowner Stan Friedman, want the university to alleviate any traffic congestion by building an entrance ramp to a major north-south thoroughfare before allowing any construction on the land.

"It would be very difficult for us to sign the agreement without our conditions," Friedman said.

Regent Shannon Ratliff seemed irritated with Friedman's remarks and asked if he was delivering an ultimatum. Friedman said he wasn't.

Father of man killed by fired officer files suit

TYLER (AP) — A man whose son was one of three men fatally shot in separate incidents by an Arlington police officer has filed suit against the city, seeking damages of $12 million, his lawyer said Thursday.

Jerry C. Parker, the attorney for Winford Robinson, said the "notice of claim" was delivered by mail to Arlington officials Thursday informing them of Robinson's intentions to pursue legal damages for the Feb. 1 shooting death of his son, Michael Wayne Robinson, 21.

Robinson was shot by Brian Farrell as officers attempted to serve three felony forgery warrants, police said.

"I can tell you that Mr. Robinson's claims for legal damages will be based upon the Texas Tort Claim Act, Texas Wrongful Death Statute and the Civil Rights provisions of the U.S. Constitution," Parker said.

"It is our contention that the City of Arlington through their police department failed to properly plan and execute the police operation in question," Parker said. "But they selected and retained a police officer who was unfit for the position entrusted to him, and that they failed to properly supervise and control Officer Farrell."

Farrell, 25, was fired Wednesday, Arlington police spokesman Larry Barclay said, because he took a drug before a polygraph examination Feb. 24 in connection with the Robinson shooting and lied about it.

Propranolol, the substance detected in Farrell's blood, is used by people suffering from hypertension and heart ailments and "alters the body's physical responses," Barclay said.

Barclay said there was no evidence Farrell had a prescription for the substance.

Arlington Police Chief David Kunkle said Farrell was fired because he took the prescription drug to help pass the polygraph test and not because investigators found notches on his pistol.

Last week, Dallas police, who took Farrell's gun immediately after the Robinson shooting, discovered two notches in the trigger guard.

Robinson was armed with a table knife and approached two other officers when Farrell shot him in the chest, police said.

Officers said Farrell and his partner, Ed Gordon, were attempting to serve warrants on Robinson at his Highland Park apartment when the shooting occurred. The two officers were put on administrative leave while the shooting was investigated by Arlington and Dallas police departments.

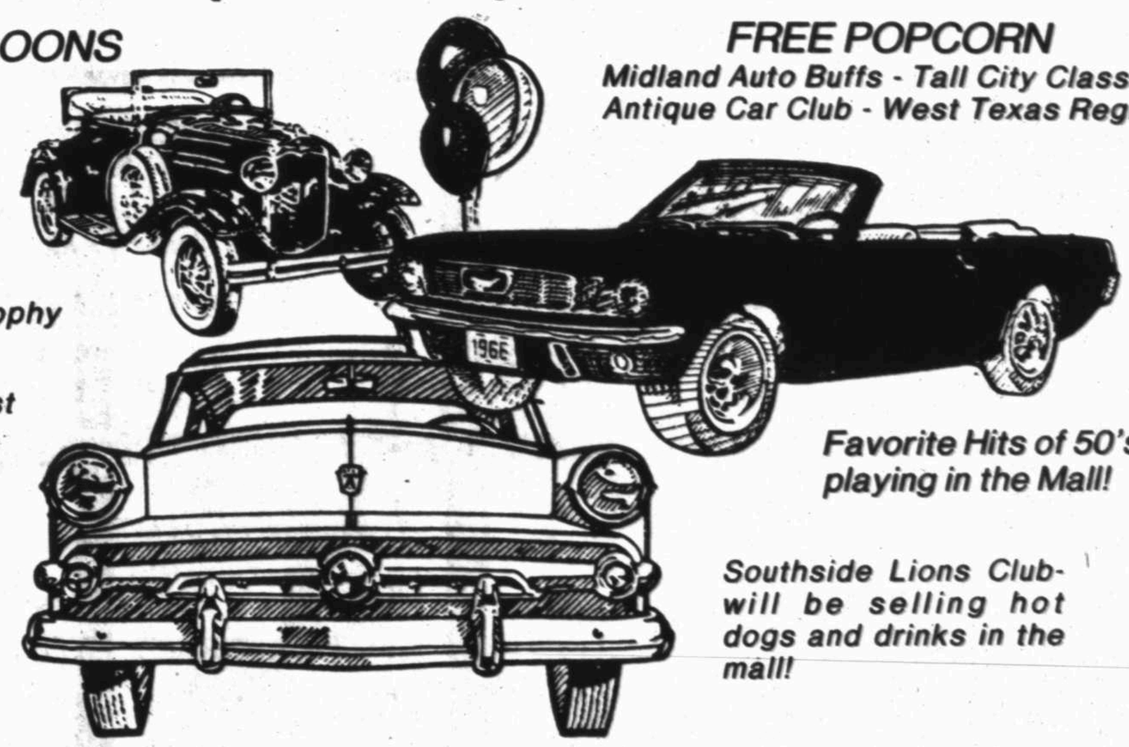

Farrell had previously shot and killed Martin Williams, 33, last Aug. 21 as Williams was being transferred from Arlington — where he had caused a disturbance at a store — to Fort Worth. Farrell said he had pulled over and a struggle began when Williams had reached for his gun. Farrell suffered a dislocated shoulder in the fight.

He also shot and killed Ray Soto Jr., 32, last Aug. 2 after a witness began yelling, "He's got a gun!"

Junior college students learn ropes about roping, riding

CLARENDON, Texas (AP) — The courses are listed in the college catalog as physical education 261, 271 and 281, but they're known to most as Rodeo P.E.

Unusual as it sounds, rodeo greats have to learn their skills somewhere, so why not college?

Clarendon Junior College offers the three physical education courses — rodeo timed events for men, rodeo timed events for women and rodeo riding events — to students interested in learning the skills of rodeo.

And while every student may not aspire to become a rodeo great, Kelvin Sharp, instructor for the course, offers them the fundamentals to grow on.

Sharp, a Nebraska native and professional team roper, came to the Texas Panhandle in 1983 to teach high school in Claude.

"I decided to move to Texas so I could rope during the winter, because the winters in Nebraska are too harsh," Sharp said. "I figured I could move to Texas and teach and rope all year."

A year later, Clarendon College offered him the position of math instructor with an added bonus: he could spend three afternoons a week sharing his rodeo skills with students.

Interest in the course, evident by the three-fold increase in enrollment, has grown steadily since Sharp's first year at the school. He said he thinks the course is sometimes a deciding factor in students' decisions to attend the college.

The rodeo classes serve as substitutes for a rodeo team, a standard at many colleges.

"We don't offer scholarships or have a team because we feel it's better to buy stock for all the students and give more kids a chance to participate," Sharp said.

The college provides cattle for the classes and handles upkeep of the arena, but students must furnish their own equipment such as horses and ropes. And since not all students have horses, the college has simulation equipment such as roping dummies and bull-riding machines for students.

"The course doesn't require any prior experience. It's for anyone who wants to learn," Sharp said. "We want them to come down and get all the practical benefits that they can, experience that can be used in the pasture, such as doctoring a calf, and horse management."

Sharp said the students learn how to take care of equipment and stock. And the class covers different types of equipment, such as bits, so students can select the right type for their needs.

In the timed event courses, students learn the fundamentals of calf and steer roping, steer wrestling, barrel racing, goat tying and break-away roping.

Fundamentals and skills involved in bareback, saddle bronc and bull riding are taught in the rodeo riding class. Sharp said much of the instruction for the rodeo events is done through videotapes.

"We try to create an atmosphere of competitiveness," Sharp said. "Teach them to rely on themselves; to take responsibility for how they do.

"We're providing the opportunity. Every kid has that opportunity. They can do whatever event they want. And they can do it as well as they want."

Sharp also gives them a taste of the profession. Professional cowboys driving through Clarendon on their way to rodeos often stop by to rope and talk with students.

Paul Tierny, 1979 World Champion Calf Roper; Mike Macy, Texas Circuit Team Roping Champion and Flynn Farris, 1988 Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association Rookie of the Year from Dalhart, are just a few of the greats who have graced the Clarendon arena.

"The guys tell them about their background and where their experiences began," Sharp said. "They talk about how much they practice, what they think is important to practice on and how much they travel. And I ask them to give the students their opinion on where rodeo is headed."

A condition of enrollment in rodeo P.E. is participation in the intramural rodeo held each semester. Students in the class must take part in the rodeo in some way, be it competition or just helping out.

The fall rodeo, held in October is just for students at the college, but the spring rodeo, on April 22 this year, is open to students and alumni.

The rodeo has the seven standard events: saddle bronc, bull and bareback riding; team and calf roping; steer wrestling and barrel racing.

Language center aims at getting families to read

FREEPORT, Texas (AP) — Because of minimal English reading skills, Greg Vargas never had a reason to visit the Freeport Library.

Vargas, an Oyster Creek resident for the past four years, said through an interpreter the library had nothing of value to offer him.

Library officials, taking into account Vargas is one of a growing number of Spanish-speaking residents, are working to change that.

In January the library, armed with a $23,000 grant, instituted a Spanish Language Center. The center is a first-of-a-kind idea for the Brazoria County Library System, one officials hope can boost readership by appealing to the area's increasing Spanish population.

"Right now, we're just building a collection," Head Librarian Betty Pritchard said of the more than 1,000 Spanish books and videotapes making up the section. "Even though it doesn't look like much, we feel like we have a lot."

Bill Hord, assistant director of the county system, said the word among other libraries and patrons so far has been positive.

"There's been a lot of interest," he said. "If it grows, we'll certainly spend more money on materials."

Hord said the center is a result of the large Hispanic population that has flocked to the area during recent years. That increase has caused a demand for the hard-to-find books in the language.

Maridale Martinez, a first-grade bilingual teacher at T.W. Ogg Elementary School in Clute, sees the changes. More schools in the area have some sort of bilingual class than when she started teaching eight years ago.

Martinez estimated there are 20 to 30 bilingual teachers in the Brazosport Independent School District alone, and only standard textbooks to keep students reading.

"We're always needing Spanish language books and it's been real hard to come by them," she said. "There was no good literature for the children to hear."

Pritchard was the only librarian in the area who applied for the one-year grant, noting more than one-quarter of the population in Freeport is Hispanic.

"I felt like the need was there," she said.

As well as the books and videos, the library used some of the funds to hire a part-time Spanish-speaking librarian, Anna Martinez, who oversees the collection and interacts with patrons using it.

Though some of the children have English skills, Pritchard said a majority of the adults tend to speak only Spanish.

"If they're looking for something, she can talk to them," Pritchard said.

Though lacking in some subjects, the collection runs the gamut from novels by Spanish and translated English authors to car repair, math and picture books.

Anna Martinez said about 600 selections are children's books, because they tend to get more use.

Hord said the program can help children from Spanish-speaking families, who statistically have a high dropout rate from school. Exposing the books to families for whom English is a second language and encouraging parents to read to their children in Spanish will benefit them in school.

"We have a lot of children who come in and order for their parents," Pritchard said, adding teachers from across the county also are putting in orders for the children's books in bulk.

"They've gotten a lot of use that way," she said.

Pritchard added the books and tapes also will help English-speaking students studying the language who hope to improve their vocabulary.

To encourage more use, Anna Martinez is spearheading a series of special programs in Spanish, including story times, crochet lessons and an income tax seminar.

Vargas, who learned about the center from his 14-year-old daughter Martha, is a regular visitor, picking out children's books for his younger child Reyna or checking out popular Spanish movies for future viewing.

The self-employed repairman said he is telling friends, who also have been by to see what's available.

Maridale Martinez said Vargas is a typical success, one member of a relocated culture in which reading plays a minor role.

"Very few of my students have any books at home, Spanish or English," she said, noting many are now reading during the weekends because the books are available.

"If the kids can see their parents with a book, they know it's important," Maridale Martinez said. "It makes a big difference, to see their parents reading."

Angels open TL season against Missions tonight

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Angels face the San Antonio Missions 7 p.m. today in Angels Stadium as the Texas League embarks upon its 93rd season.

Scott Lewis, a righthander from Medford, Ore., who last year was 5-3 for Class A Bend, is Manager Max Oliveras' starting hill choice.

The honorary first pitch will be thrown out by 16-year-old Jennifer Knight and Marily Anders will sing the national anthem.

Captain Dynamite's exploding Coffin of Death performance will follow the game.

TONIGHT'S game marks the start of a 136-game Texas League schedule and a 10-game homestand with El Paso's Diablos following the Missions into the Tall City.

Midland (California Angels), San Antonio (Los Angeles Dodgers), Wichita (San Diego Padres) and El Paso (Milwaukee Brewers) compose the West Division. The East Division is made up of Jackson, Miss., (New York Mets), Tulsa (Texas Rangers), Shreveport, La., (San Francisco Giants), and Arkansas (St. Louis Cardinals.

The season played in halves, the first ending June 16, and the regular season ends Aug. 28.

The divisional winners of each half meet in a best of three-game series and the East-West survivors play a best-of-seven series for the Texas League title.

BUT THAT'S a long way down the road and the immediate concern is the kind of team the Angels will field here.

Manager Max Oliveras is optimistic about Midland's prospects, bringing a blend of veterans and rookies out of spring training in Mesa, Ariz.

It's a team that could have good power and promises a young hard-throwing starting corps backed up by a strong, experienced bullpen.

Returnees include catcher Mike Knapp, outfielders Tom Alfredson and Dan Grunhard with Mark Doran, back after a season with Edmonton, Class AAA, Pacific Coast League.

Knapp, who shared backstopping duties with Erik Pappas last year, batted .263 with 33 rbi. Alfredson was a 15 home run hitter and Grunhard had eight homers, but hit five this spring while in spring training with Edmonton and Oliveras is looking for a big year from the leflt-handed swinging Chicagoan.

FIRST baseman Hedi Vargas is projected as a 20-home run hitter in Angels Stadium after batting cleanup and hitting 14 homers in helping Chattanooga to the Southern League pennant last year.

Chris Cron, a third baseman, hit 11 homers at Quad Cities in 1987 and 11 at Palm Springs last year.

Following Lewis in the starting rotation will be Mike Butcher, Palm Springs, Saturday; David Martinez, out with arm problems last year, Sunday; Roberto Hernandez, Quad Cities/Midland , Monday and Kevin Trudeau, Orlando/Portland, Tuesday.

Oliveras has always been blessed with a capable bullpen and this year appears no exception with Vinicio Cedendo, Frank DeMichele back from last year while Gary Buckels split time with Quad City and Midland and Shane Young pitched at both Edmonton and Midland.

Luis Merejo, up from Palm Springs, fills out the bullpen.

Tall City Relays also Last Chance

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Odessa Permian and Lubbock Coronado will be out to defend team championships Saturday when the annual Tall City Relays get underway at Memorial Stadium, but this meet holds even more importance for individual competitors since all district meets will be held next week.

In effect, the Tall City run is the "Last Chance" meet. It will be the last chance to hone skills for the district meet where advancement can be earned to the Region I competition. The District 4-5A run will be held next weekend at Ratliff Stadium in Odessa.

Tall City action begins at 9:45 a.m. Saturday with field event finals and running preliminaries start at 10 a.m. Running finals will be staged at 1:30 p.m. with the 3200-meter run starting the action.

In order to defend their championship, the Permian boys will face a field of San Angelo, Lubbock Estacado, Midland Lee, Midland High, Odessa High and Lubbock Coronado. Estacado is the only 4-5A foreigner, but is a tough 4A school in track. San Angelo beat Permian in the West Texas Relays this year.

Coronado has an even tougher row to hoe in the girls division for a repeat since Permian has a strong girls' team and is the easy favorite. The rest of the field includes MHS, Lee, Odessa High, Lubbock Dunbar and Lubbock High.

It appears that only two TC records are in jeopardy Saturday, unless some times and distances are dramatically produced this week.

Midland High's Tracy Parker has been over 40-feet twice this year in the shot put and will be gunning for her own record of 39-1¼. That looks like the only girls mark that could fall.

Permian's Adrian Hall has a 14-6 in the pole vault this season and that is the TC record. That may be the only shot at the stiff marks previously set in the TC meet.

But the meet isn't without some top individuals. Odessa High sophomore Dallas Cowan is drawing rave reviews in the sprints, sucking up everything in his sight. He was a double winner at San Angelo last week in the 100 and 200. His 10.33 in the 100 is excellent, but former Permian star Jason Leach set 1984 records of 10.15 in the 100 and 20.69 in the 200 for records that may last for years — or until Cowan matures into a senior. Cowan did break Leach's 100 record at San Angelo last week with the aid of high winds. Midland High's Albert Ray is coming on strong in the sprints.

San Angelo has also produced a double star in hurdler Joey Bonds. He set a record of 13.65 in the high hurdles last week at San Angelo, again wind-aided, but the TC record is 13.59 by Permian's Gerry Guster. Bonds also owns a 37.71 in the intermediates, but the record is 36.44 by Guster.

Jack Nicklaus comes out of sand.

Lee's game just not for Augusta?

By ED SHEARER

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Not even the best round of the day could keep Lee Trevino from insisting that his golf game wasn't suited to the Augusta National course.

Jack Nicklaus didn't buy that contention for one minute.

Neither did Tom Watson.

Nicklaus said he once told Trevino, "You can play anywhere. There's no reason in the world you can't play that golf course."

"Does he have the game to play this course?" Watson asked. "You bet he does."

Trevino, who has won each of the four major championships except the Masters, solved the swirling Augusta winds Thursday better than anyone in the 85-man field. He shot a 5-under-par 67 and had a one-shot lead over Nick Faldo of Great Britain after the opening round of the 53rd Masters.

"Sixth-seven on a windy day at Augusta is a great round of golf," Watson said. "I'm pulling for him. If I can't win, I want Lee to win."

"It's fabulous to see him playing well," Nicklaus said.

"Lee is such a great player that in all honesty I don't think anybody's surprised," Tom Kite said. "The surprise is he hasn't done it here more often."

"Incredible," Ben Crenshaw said of Trevino's round. "He gets days like this. He ought to just go ahead and play and not think about where he is."

Trevino, one of the game's most colorful performers, said, "This is a confidence builder to find it on a course not suited to my game in difficult conditions."

The 49-year-old Mexican-American has insisted for years that he can't play this 6,905-yard course.

This is his 18th Masters — he's turned down invitations three times and withdrew another time because of illness — and the last he can play under his five-year exemption for winning the PGA in 1984.

"I may come back with three 80s," Trevino said.

"I always regret what I say," he added, referring to past criticism of this course. "When you talk as much as I do you put a shoe in every once in a while."

AP Laserphoto

Lee Trevino
...first round leader

"I didn't expect to play this well," he said. "It lets me know there still is a spark in the fireplace. All I've got to do is throw the right wood on it."

Trevino gave some of the credit for his round to a 21-year-old picture taken of him during his first Masters. It showed his putting stance with his elbows up against his stomach.

"I've been all over the place," he said of his arms flinging while putting recently. "It could only go so far."

He went back to that style Thursday and said, "I was making them from everywhere."

Trevino, winner of two U.S. and British Opens and two PGAs, had a bogey-free round. His four birdies on the front side came on putts of 10, 20, five and 20 feet. He also birdied the par-3 16th from three feet.

Only 10 players bettered par.

Faldo's 68 had him alone in second, one shot ahead of Scott Hoch, who birdied the final hole.

Don Pooley and Andy Bean each shot 70s and five players shot 71 — two-time champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain, T. C. Chen of Taiwan, Jumbo Ozaki of Japan, Ben Crenshaw and Tom Purtzer.

OC, MC foes become friends

McCovery, Johnson team up in Juco classic

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

For some players, no matter how talented, Saturday's Texas-USA NJCAA All-Star Basketball Game is a chance to prove themselves one more time.

For others, including former Western Junior College Athletic Conference standouts Charles McCovery and Larry Johnson, Saturday's game is just for fun. That's because both McCovery, the former Midland College star, and ex-Odessa College banger Johnson put the tedium of recruiting behind them by signing national letters-of-intent during the fall signing period. McCovery will attend the University of Oklahoma, while Johnson is ticketed for the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

BOTH are clearly relieved that Saturday's 7 p.m. game at the Chaparral Center won't cause any ebb or surge to their dream of playing major college basketball. Not that a poor performance Saturday would really affect either one: both have proven themselves among the junior college elite this season.

McCovery averaged nearly 20 points a game for the MC Chaparrals, while Johnson was almost universally considered the best juco player in the country — with 32 points and 18 rebounds per game this season.

Still, both are glad to have put the weighty decision of choosing where to spend the next two years of the lives.

"These are the type of games that can make you or break you," McCovery said. "I think by signing early, I took away the added pressure to go out and perform in this game."

Johnson concurred. "Recruiting's over," he said. And professional teams need not apply, he added, despite rumors that have him skipping UNLV and applying to the upcoming National Basketball Association draft.

"It's hard to turn down money," Johnson said. "But when you have your priorities straight, you realize that basketball will not be a part of your life forever and that you need a college education to get anywhere in life.

"I KNOW the right thing for me to do now is to play two years at Vegas and see what happens from there."

Johnson denies that turning pro is even on his mind.

"I've never given the pros any thought," he said. "I'm just honored to hear that they think I might be ready."

Both McCovery and Johnson have fond memories of their junior college years that goes beyond their success on the court.

McCovery, who fell awry of the academic requirements posed by the NCAA's Proposition 48, said going to junior college beat sitting out a year at a major college.

"I wanted to do what was best for me," he said. "I needed to improve myself in a lot of ways, and going to Midland College helped me grow as a basketball player and as a person.

"I was definitely challenged on the junior college level," McCovery added. "But I was also able to receive some special attention in the classroom that I might not have gotten at another college."

JOHNSON came to Odessa College after originally signing with Southern Methodist University. The former Dallas Skyline star passed his Scholastic Aptitude Test on his second try, but balked when the NCAA asked him to take the test a third time because they felt there was too big a jump between his first and second tries.

Nevertheless, he's glad he chose OC.

"Junior college basketball was a big jump for me," he said. "By going the juco route, I feel like I increased my basketball skills and my academic skills."

JUCO NOTES: The Midland Jaycees hosted a "Meet The Players" reception for incoming athletes and their sponsors Thursday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa. Both teams practiced twice today and will attend a banquet tonight, at which University of Oklahoma head coach Billy Tubbs will be the featured speaker.

Texas team members include McCovery, Johnson, Arnold Bernard and Darryl Reid of San Jacinto; Robert Pack of Tyler; Isaac Washington of Paris; Ken Austin of Ranger; Guillermo Myers of Lon Morris; Keith Stewart of South Plains; and Carl Herrera of Jacksonville Baptist.

USA Team members include David Martin of Central Arizona; Jean Derovillere of Miami-Dade North; Carl Weldon of Allen Co. (Kan.); Karl James of Dixie (Utah); Craig Robinson of Genesee (N.Y.); John Eubanks of Sullivan (Ky.); Jackie Jones of Barton Co. (Kan.); Clifford Martin of Southern Idaho; David Martin of Mississippi Co. (Ark.); and Billy Coles of Chowan (N.C.).

Ex-Midland TLers are making $12 million in majors

Williamson

The opening of the Texas League season brings visions of warm summer nights and baseball for many Midlanders, but for the Midland Angel players, opening day brings dreams of what could be.

And those dreams are big. They only have to look at past TL fraternity brothers. It enough to make your bank roll — or lack of it — sweat.

Did you know that the Major Leagues will pay past Midland Cubs and Angels nearly $12 million this year? It seems worth dreaming about if you are good enough to pick up a bat and glove in the Texas League.

Currently, there are 19 active former Midland Cubs and Angels playing in the majors with a price tag of $11,730,167. That's straight salary, folks. Please, no incentive clauses or endorsement fees. It also doesn't include players in the minors with Major League contracts. We're just talking about active list rosters.

Leading the list is Bruce Sutter of the Atlanta Braves with a price tag of $1,729,167 per year. And Sutter probably won't even play this year. He announced his retirement, but the Braves are stuck with his contract. Still, Midlanders remember him when he was developing the split-fingered fastball that tore up the National League with the Cubs and Cardinals.

Outfielder Joe Carter recently signed a new contract with Cleveland that will pay him $1.63 million and Boston relief ace Lee Smith will earn $1.425. Carter can still hit those tape measure jobs. Smith was a starter with the M-Cubs, where we always wondered if he would make it through the first inning.

Texas Ranger Scott Fletcher, the newest former player to hit the $1 million per year hall, will make $1.2 million. Not bad for the singles hitting shortstop, who always thought a home run was running to the house from work.

We're still waiting for our first $2 million baby, but it can't be far behind the way payrolls are going these days.

Two former Midland players are close to the $1 million mark. San Francisco pitcher Mike Krukow is making $875,000, the same as Yankee outfielder Mel Hall. Both are former M-Cubs. Close behind is Giant pitcher Craig Lefferts at $600,000 and Chicago Cub Shawon Dunston stands at $550,000.

Other former M-Cubs are Houston outfielder Billy Hatcher, $495,000; San Diego outfielder Carmello Martinez, $490,000; Boston pitcher Dennis Lamp, $380,000, and Seattle outfielder Henry Cotto, $260,000. I've also added Philadelphia catcher Steve Lake ($280,000) to the list since he spent 14 days in 1984 with the Midland Cubs on rehab. He did, however, play in Midland during regular season games.

Naturally, former Midland Angels aren't making the same kind of stash. This is only the fifth year for the Angels in Midland and most of our graduates are still building names.

Still, California outfielder Devon White is making $320,000 to head the new wave. Other former Angels are Pittsburgh pitcher Bob Kipper, $230,000; California pitcher Bryan Harvey, $170,000; California pitcher Terry Clark, $85,000; California pitcher Vance Lovelace, $68,000; and California outfielder Dante Bichette, $68,000.

Second baseman Mark McLemore, who played all or part of three seasons with California, is not on the Angel roster this year after being sent down to Edmonton after a plus .300 hitting stroke in spring training. McLemore was making more than $100,000 per year.

The overall total could be much higher since Mike Diaz, Jon Perlman and Dewayne Buice were on active rosters a year ago.

In fact, it would take a small phone book to list all former M-Cubs and M-Angels who have played in the Major Leagues. My list says 103 Midland graduates have played in at least one Major League game.

It's no wonder that this year's crop of Angels have big eyes when thinking about the season ahead. After all, free agency is only a few hundred hits, or pitches, away. Go for it.

Twins big inning sinks Yanks, 7-1

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Wally Backman and Kirby Puckett hit successive triples to highlight a five-run sixth inning and Shane Rawley allowed three hits in six innings in his Minnesota debut as the Twins beat the Yanks, 7-1.

Both benches emptied in the eighth inning when Kent Hrbek charged the mound after reliever Dave Righetti threw a pitch high and inside. Hrbek was stopped by several players and neither player was ejected.

Yankees starter Dave LaPoint, who signed as a free agent for $2.575 million for three years in December, led 1-0 and had a perfect game through four innings until allowing Gary Gaetti's leadoff double in the fifth. He then retired the next three batters before running into trouble in the sixth.

LaPoint was the Yankees' second straight big-money free agent to be roughed up by the Twins. Andy Hawkins took the 12-2 loss on Wednesday night.

Brewers 3, Indians 0

CLEVELAND — Chris Bosio pitched a three-hitter and rookie Gary Sheffield hit a home run with two outs in the eighth inning to snap a scoreless tie as Milwaukee beat Cleveland 3-0.

Bosio, 1-0, earned his first victory as a starter since last May 16, striking out three and walking none. He got 14 Cleveland batters to hit into groundouts and retired the final 16 batters.

After Sheffield homered, Robin Yount followed with a triple off the top of the fence in center to chase starter Bud Black, 0-1.

Orioles 6, Red Sox 4

BALTIMORE — Jose Bautista allowed six hits in eight innings and Phil Bradley's single snapped a fourth-inning tie as Baltimore swept the two-games series.

Mickey Tettleton and Larry Sheets drove in two runs each for Baltimore, the only unbeaten team in the American League East.

Bautista, who lost his last six decisions in 1988, won for the first time since beating Milwaukee last Aug. 5. He struck out two and walked two and Mark Williamson got the final three outs for the save.

Mike Boddicker lasted just 2 1-3 innings and 72 pitches, allowing four hits and striking out five. Mike Smithson relieved with the score tied 3-3 and gave up the go-ahead run when Rene Gonzalez doubled, was sacrificed to third and scored on Bradley's single.

Athletics 11, Mariners 3

OAKLAND, Calif. — Glenn Hubbard's three-run homer capped a six-run third inning as Oakland swept the season-opening series.

Mark McGwire, Carney Lansford and Dave Parker each drove in two runs for Oakland.

White Sox 3, Angels 2

Ron Kittle snapped an eighth-inning tie with a two-out double. Willie Fraser, 0-1, hit Greg Walker with a pitch with one out. After Harold Baines flied out, Kittle doubled into the left-field corner.

Ken Patterson, 0-1, allowed one hit over 3 2-3 innings. Donn Pall pitched a one-hit ninth for his second save.

Carlton Fisk's 325th career homer gave Chicago the lead in the second. It was his second of the season and 305th as a catcher.

San Angelo's Darrell Abbe is also coming on strong in the discus and shot put, winning both events last week, but his 157-3 and 56-1 bests won't challenge any TC records. MHS' John Braun has a big victory under his belt in the discus at the large West Texas Relays.

Permian's Lloyd Hill is a returning Region I qualifier in the 400, but still needs to knock off less than a second to challenge the record.

Lee's David Arehart has twice had personal bests in the high jump this year with leaps of 6-7 and 6-8 and is quickly becoming the odds on favorite to win the district high jump title. He still needs two inches to challenge a record.

Among the girls, MHS' Annette Glover, returning to track for the first time since junior high, has been winning a lot of races in the 100 and 200. Coronado's Christine Vasquez is expected to win the 3200 easily and Permian's Tracy Lawrence is strong in the 400.

But since this meet has a "Last Chance" theme, more eyes may be on the likes of Lee's James Brown, Lee's Marcus Strambler, Lee's David Whiteside, Lee's Bill Swearingen, Lee's Melody Miller and MHS' Dwane Roberts.

Strambler was a state intermediate hurdler qualifier last year, but has been hampered by injuries and hasn't been effective. Alas, he came up lame in San Angelo last week while running on the first leg of the sprint relay.

Brown has been slowed by a hamstring problem and hasn't produced his 10.5 speed and Whiteside hasn't recovered from a leg injury suffered in the West Texas Relays. This is the very heart of the Rebels.

Roberts was a region qualifier last year in the 100, but he isn't among league leaders this year. Miller also falls into that list. She is seeking a third consecutive trip to the regional competition.

Trevino realist despite lead 67

By DAVE ANDERSON
N.Y. Times News Service

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Even after a 67 in the opening round of the Masters Thursday, Lee Trevino was a 49-year-old realist.

He talked about how it's "too early to even think about" his winning the green jacket that he has never been fitted for.

Through the years, he has never done better than tie for 10th on the Augusta National course that, in his mind, his game has never been fitted for.

"Jack Nicklaus kept telling me I could play this golf course, but you've got to hit the ball high and long here," he was saying now. "I told Jack: 'I'll play you a $1,000 Nassau, but you play from my tee ball and I'll play from yours. Or if you just use your 1-iron off the tee, no woods.' Jack didn't say a word."

TREVINO'S best round ever at Augusta National surprised him more than anybody else.

He joked that if a stranger had offered "to bet me I wouldn't break 76, I wouldn't have taken a quarter of it, and I'm a gamblin' man." But until his age shows, he's the talk of the Masters, an older and popular familiar name who's ahead of all the younger sometimes unfamiliar names.

Even more significant, having Lee Trevino in contention is precisely why the Masters should create an Old Masters: a senior division (age 50 and over) within the Masters itself.

"I'D LIKE to see a senior division," Trevino said when asked his opinion. "Then we could play the course like Jimmy Demaret did years ago. It wasn't as long then."

In its reverence for tradition, the Masters grants lifetime invitations to its past champions.

Once a winner, always an invitation. It's tradition. It's sentiment. It's romance. And it's wonderful.

All those Old Masters come alive off their Hall of Fame plaques. But it's not competition. The older the champions, the less they're in contention.

They're out there among the azaleas, but they're seldom up there on the leader boards.

By next year's Masters, both Nicklaus and Trevino will be 50, each eligible for the Senior PGA Tour, which has provided older touring pros with a mulligan in life.

IN THE years to come, Nicklaus, who had a 73 Thursday, and Trevino will drift out of contention here, as Arnold Palmer — who had an 81 Thursday — has in recent years.

But if there were an Old Masters, they would be competing among themselves, not against the younger, stronger golfers who dominate the PGA Tour events.

In an Old Masters division, Palmer's 81 would have been relative to the other seniors.

Bill Casper was the first-round senior leader with a 75; Gary Player had a 76.

"If we were playing among ourselves, we'd shoot better, even if we hit from the same tees," said Bob Goalby, the 1968 champion, who hasn't played here in recent years.

"We wouldn't be trying to hit it as far as the younger players, and we'd play better."

As of now, the Masters chairman, Hord W. Hardin, has no plans for an Old Masters. To him, seniors playing a shorter course "would distort the scores."

GOLF VIEWERS and readers would know that the senior scores were being shot on a somewhat shorter course, say 6,600 yards instead of the classic 6,905 yards, but Hardin also doesn't want to tarnish the Masters image.

"I don't want to bring in a bunch of outsiders," Hardin said, "just to make a division that would water down the Masters."

Hardin also sounded concerned about having to invite perhaps as many as a dozen more seniors and having to put up an extra $300,000 in prize money.

"We haven't got any room in the field," he said, "and we haven't got any money."

With anywhere from 80 to 90 golfers each year, the Masters has the smallest field on the PGA Tour.

Its profit is known to only the Internal Revenue Service and the club, but its prices are a bargain: $90 for an all-tournament badge with free parking and reasonable concession prices.

But its television income could be increased if it chose to expand the CBS coverage to include the front nine during the Saturday and Sunday rounds.

Even so, Hardin had another reason not to include a senior division.

"I don't want two Masters champions," he said.

To avoid that perception, the Old Masters could tee off on Wednesday and finish on Saturday, thereby not intruding on Sunday's theater in the pines.

And don't present the seniors winner with a green jacket. According to Goalby, "we wouldn't even need prize money, we'd play for a piece of crystal." All the seniors might not agree with that, but if there were an Old Masters division, they wouldn't just be out there on display.

Designer of Notre Dame library mural, Sheets, dead at 81

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Millard Sheets, the artist who designed the 10-story granite mural on the University of Notre Dame's library, is dead. He was 81.

The "Word of Life" mural, depicting Christ with outstretched arms surrounded by saints and scholars, overlooks the end zone of Notre Dame's football stadium and is widely known as "Touchdown Jesus."

Sheets died at home in Gualala, Calif., on March 31, the university announced this week.

The famous mural is 132 feet high and 65 feet wide and consists of some 7,000 pieces of granite — 81 varieties and 171 different finishes — from 16 countries and several states.

Leary's 5-hitter gives LA victory

From Wire Reports

CINCINNATI — Tim Leary knows what counts.

Leary pitched a five-hitter Thursday as the World Series champion Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Cincinnati Reds 4-1 for their first victory of the season.

The Dodgers, who were 6-3 last year at Riverfront Stadium, avoided their first sweep here since 1978 by taking the final game of a season-opening three-game series.

"I have to pitch my game and let them adjust," Leary said. "It's where you put the ball (that matters) sometimes. It was a big win. We needed to win and get on some kind of a winning streak."

Kirk Gibson had a hand in the Dodgers' first two runs. He singled in a run in the third inning against starter Rick Mahler and got caught in a run-down in the sixth inning, allowing Alfredo Griffin to score.

Leary, 17-11 last season, lost his shutout in the ninth inning when Kal Daniels led off with a walk and scored on Jeff Reed's two-out double. Leary walked two and struck out seven.

Mahler, 9-16 last season with Atlanta, allowed six hits over seven innings in his first start for the Reds.

Phillies 8, Cubs 3

CHICAGO — Chris James drove in four runs and Steve Ontiveros won his first NL game as Philadelphia defeated Chicago.

Ontiveros, who was signed as a free agent last Feb. 16 after being released by Oakland, allowed five hits in eight innings including Jerome Walton's first major-league homer. Steve Bedrosian pitched the ninth.

James had a sacrifice fly, a two-run homer and a run-scoring single.

Paul Kilgus, making his first NL start after being acquired in a trade from Texas, yielded four runs in the first inning — all unearned.

Expos 3, Pirates 2

MONTREAL — Otis Nixon doubled in two runs and Tim Wallach followed with a run-scoring single to cap a three-run rally in the eighth inning that carried Montreal past Pittsburgh 3-2.

Montreal's Pascual Perez, making his first start following a two-month stay at a drug treatment center, pitched seven innings.

He held the Pirates to three hits and two runs, one on Barry Bonds' fourth-inning homer and another on Bobby Bonilla's run-scoring single in the seventh.

Reliever Tim Burke, 1-0, got the victory with a scoreless inning and Joe Hesketh pitched the ninth for his first save.

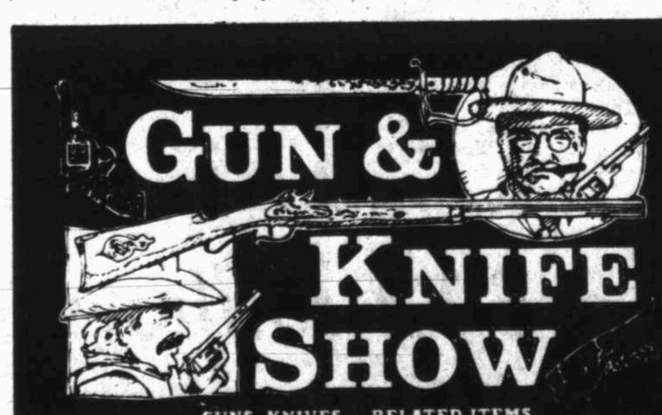

Braves 3, Astros 2

HOUSTON — Right-hander John Smoltz drove in a run with a triple and allowed six hits in eight-plus innings, leading Atlanta to a 3-2 victory over Houston.

Smoltz, 21, struck out seven and walked three before leaving with none out in the ninth and a runner on second.

Kevin Bass led off the ninth with a single and Bill Doran followed with a run-scoring double to chase Smoltz. Joe Boever came on to retire the side for his second save in as many nights. Last season, the Braves failed to have consecutive saves.

Smoltz's RBI triple in the fifth inning put the Braves ahead and he scored what proved to be the winning run on Jim Deshaies' wild pitch.

Moon, Oilers close to pact agreement

HOUSTON (AP) — Quarterback Warren Moon has agreed to a tentative contract with the Houston Oilers, Moon's agent said.

Although the team and Moon's agent Leigh Steinberg did not disclose details of the contract, sources said Moon would receive $10 million over five years.

That would make the 32-year-old All-Pro quarterback the second-highest paid player in the NFL, behind Denver quarterback John Elway, who makes $2.1 million annually.

The Oilers and Steinberg have been close to a deal since Saturday when Moon elected not to sign a two-year offer sheet with a team he refused to identify.

"There's been a lot of hard work done on this deal from both sides," Steinberg said. "We stayed at it and kept getting closer and closer to an agreement."

Steinberg was scheduled to travel to Houston from Los Angeles Thursday to finalize the contract.

"It's an agreement in principle, but there's still some language in the contract to work out," Steinberg said Wednesday from his Los Angeles office.

Moon's original contract signed in 1984 expired Feb. 1. He earned $5.5 million over five years, a deal that briefly made him the league's highest-paid player.

Three share LPGA top

POWAY, Calif. (AP) — Dale Eggeling, Deedee Lasker and Cindy Rarick all shot 3-under par 68s in 100-degree temperatures to tie for the first-round lead of the $300,000 Red Robin Kyocera Inamori Classic Thursday.

In a big group one stroke behind were Pat Bradley, Laura Davies, Sherri Turner, Sherri Steinhauer, Missie Berteotti, Nancy Brown, Martha Nause and Kim Williams.

Eggeling, who has been battling a cold this week and barely was able to talk, started fast with three birdies and one bogey on the front nine.

However, she missed a six-foot putt that cost her the bogey and blew three other birdie putts of eight feet or less on the front nine.

"I had a chance to blow the front nine apart," Eggeling said. "It could've been a lot better. You never know in this game."

Eggeling, whose only career victory came at the 1980 Boston Five Classic, recorded two birdies and one bogey on the back nine while missing a 10-foot birdie putt on No. 18.

Lasker, who started on the 10th hole, was 1 under with two birdies and a bogey on her first nine holes.

Booros paces Deposit golf

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (AP) — Jim Booros shot a 6-under-par 64 Thursday to take a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $200,000 PGA Deposit Guaranty Golf Classic.

Booros, 37, ended with six birdies and a dozen pars over the 6,280-yard Hattiesburg Country Club Course for a one-shot edge over Robert Thompson, Rocco Mediate, and Barry Cheesman.

Booros said the key to his round was the ninth hole, where he put his tee shot into the woods but scrambled to save par.

Booros said that "playing with a new putter, a new caddy, and a new attitude" also contributed to his successful round.

A total of 108 golfers are vying for the $36,000 first-place prize. The field will be cut to 70 after Friday's round.

Mediate also said his success on the ninth hole helped his first round.

"I had two good shots there that really turned me around," he said.

Mediate had one more birdie than Booros, but also had a pair of bogeys.

Thompson had seven birdies but was hurt by a double bogey on the par-4 10th hole, when he hit into the water.

UT opens 7-stroke lead

HOUSTON (AP) — Kyle Jerome shot a three-under-par 69 Thursday to lead the Texas golf team to a seven-stroke lead after the first round of the 35th Annual All-American Intercollegiate Invitaional at the Bear Creek World of Golf.

Ulfar Jonsson of Houston Baptist also shot a 69 to tie Jerome after the first day of the three-day, 54-hole tournament.

The Southwest Conference is using the event, along with the Harvey Penick and Border Olympics tournaments, to determine its regular-season champion. Texas leads the points-system competition with 170 after winning the Border Olympics tournament and placing third at the Harvey Penick.

Arkansas and Texas A&M are tied for second with 135 points.

The Longhorns posted a total of 288 Thursday.

Bo may make cage pick soon

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Michigan athletic director Bo Schembechler said he may decide early next week whether interim basketball coach Steve Fisher should become coach.

As Fisher and his wife, Angie, headed for a state dinner at the White House Thursday, Schembechler said he didn't think it would be long before a coach was named.

He said he had talked with Fisher since the Wolverines returned Tuesday from Seattle, where they won the NCAA title, but didn't describe the meeting as a formal interview.

Fisher said he expects to have another meeting with Schembechler for the job Coach Bill Frieder left last month.

Propp goal gives Flyers 3-2 victory

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Brian Propp's second goal of the game with 51 seconds left in regulation capped Philadelphia's three-goal third-period comeback and gave the Flyers a 3-2 victory over the Washington Capitals, evening the Patrick Division series at one game apiece.

With Washington's Dale Hunter off for slashing goalie Ron Hextall, Tim Kerr's shot from the lower left circle hit Propp and deflected past goaltender Pete Peeters. It was Propp's third goal in two games.

Propp had tied the score with 8:35 remaining when he tipped Gord Murphy's shot from the right goalpost past Peeters for a power-play goal.

Washington opened the scoring on a power-play goal that went in off the skate of Dino Ciccarelli as time expired in the second period. The green light went on and the clock went to zero, but referee Rob Shick allowed the goal.

Courtnall gave Washington a 2-0 lead 2:40 into the final period before Keith Acton scored on a rebound for Philadelphia.

Penguins 7, Rangers 4

PITTSBURGH — Kevin Stevens, Rob Brown and Jock Callender scored in a 91-second span to spark a five-goal first period for Pittsburgh, which grabbed a 2-0 lead in a playoff series for only the fourth time in its history. The Penguins, in their first playoff since 1982 won 3-1 in Game 1.

NHL scoring leader Mario Lemieux, who had been held to one assist in the first two games after finishing the regular season with 199 points, scored his first-ever playoff goal into an empty net with 1:06 remaining.

The Penguins took control early. Stevens opened the scoring at 3:06, converting Randy Cunneyworth's hard pass from the right boards. Just 29 seconds later, Brown made it 2-0 when he banged the rebound of Paul Coffey's shot past Bob Froese.

Canadiens 3, Whalers 2

MONTREAL — Bobby Smith's power-play goal highlighted a three-goal outburst in the second period for Montreal, which leads the Adams Division series 2-0. Montreal also won 6-2 Wednesday night.

Montreal was on a power-play when Petr Svoboda's point shot was blocked at the defense, picked up by Mats Naslund in the slot and fed across to Smith at the side of the crease. He slapped it past goaltender Peter Sidorkiewicz at 17:02 of the period.

Montreal has beaten the Whalers in eight of nine meetings this season.

Goaltender Patrick Roy stretched his home unbeaten string to 31 games (27-0-4).

Bruins 5, Sabres 3

BOSTON — Craig Janney and Bobby Carpenter scored 48 seconds apart early in the third period as the Bruins overcame a 3-0 deficit and evened their Adams Division series at 1-1.

Janney tied the game 68 seconds into the final period after John Carter's 20-foot shot from the left circle hit the right goalpost. The puck bounced to Janney in the slot and he beat goaltender Clint Malarchuk with a 10-foot shot.

Carpenter's go-ahead goal came on a power play at 1:56 when Malarchuk, starting his first game since suffering a severe neck wound March 22, stopped a shot but dropped the puck. Carpenter connected on a short shot to put the Bruins ahead for the first time in the series.

The victory broke Boston's 0-6-3 slump against Buffalo, which hasn't survived the first round of the playoffs since 1983. Malarchuk is winless in seven career playoff decisions.

Blues 4, North Stars 3

ST. LOUIS — Rick Meagher scored his second goal 5:30 into overtime, giving the Blues their second straight playoff overtime victory. Tentative projection shows 35 percent wheat crop boost

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "highly tentative" projection by the Agriculture Department shows that 1989 wheat production could be about 2.45 billion bushels, a 35 percent boost from last year's drought-shriveled harvest.

If the harvest turns out to be that much, it would be the largest U.S. wheat output since 1984, when production was almost 2.6 billion bushels.

Wheat production dropped in later years as tighter acreage restrictions were imposed to help curb rising grain surpluses. And drought took its toll last year as production dropped to 1.81 billion bushels.

Suddenly, once-large grain inventories were drained off and market prices rose. The USDA eased planting requirements for 1989 and is looking at possible adjustments for next year.

The department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service has published a "preliminary regulatory analysis" of the current wheat situation to help plan the 1990 program, including some fresh projections for this year.

"The forecasts for the 1989 crop year are highly tentative," the report said. "Production forecasts are subject to wide variability at this time because winter wheat has not been harvested and spring wheat has not been planted."

Despite such vagaries, the agency's report projected the 1989 wheat acreage for harvest at 65.5 million acres, up nearly a fourth from 53.2 million acres harvested in 1988. That would be the largest acreage since 1984 when 66.9 million were harvested.

The average yield per acre harvested was projected at 37.4 bushels, up from 34 bushels in 1988. That would produce a total wheat crop this year of 2.45 billion bushels.

Despite the boost in production, it would leave total U.S. wheat supplies in the 1989-90 marketing year that will begin May 1 at only 3 billion bushels, about what they were in the current year.

Total wheat use in the year ahead was projected at 2.47 billion bushels, or still more than this the 1989 harvest.

As a result, the wheat carryover a year from now — on May 1, 1990 — would be around 534 million bushels, or the same as it is expected to be this May 1.

The report projected the farm price of wheat to average $3.65 per bushel over the 1989-90 marketing year, down 10 cents from a forecast of $3.75 for the current year.

Analysts said the projections take into account severe drought in Kansas where wheat production is expected to be cut sharply this year.

Other USDA insider estimates of Kansas wheat production are ranging from about 190 million bushels to as much as 315 million bushels this year, compared with 323 million bushels produced in 1988 and a 1986-88 annual average of 342 million.

Kansas wheat farmers planted 12.4 million acres last fall, up sharply from 10.2 million planted for the 1988 crop.

According to one set of jottings, abandonment because of dry weather might reduce this year's harvest to 10.5 million acres, in which case yields could average 30 bushels per acre — a total state output of 315 million bushels.

Under another "scenario," however, the Kansas crop might be reduced to 9.9 million harvested acres, a yield of 25 bushels and a total output of 250 million bushels. The worst case version calls for 9.3 million acres harvested, an average of 20 bushels per acre and a total harvest of 190 million bushels.

Aid credited for stabilizing land values

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Agriculture Department economist says federal emergency aid "probably helped stabilize land values in the Midwest" last year after drought ravaged crops across the region.

Gregory Hanson of the department's Economic Research Service said that surveys by the Farm Credit Banks of St. Paul, Minn., indicate that land prices did not decline in Michigan, North Dakota or Wisconsin in June through November last year.

Other surveys indicate that farmland prices rose in the Corn Belt in 1988, he said. Real estate is the main source of loan collateral for farmers.

"While drought assistance has helped stabilize the agricultural economy, the USDA estimates that 10,000 to 15,000 commercial farms faced loan repayment problems due to crop losses," Hanson said. "These stressed farmers represent 1.5 percent to 2.5 percent of all commercial farms."

The Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 was signed into law last Aug. 11 as the scorching summer drought was still at its peak. The law provided up to $3.9 billion in federal aid and other measures to help farmers recover.

Hanson, writing in the April issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine, said that federal disaster assistance may turn out to be less than foreseen last fall "because crop losses were smaller than expected."

"Also, qualification for drought assistance was based on the whole-farm average yield for each crop, rather than on a field-by-field basis," he said. "The averaging-up of yields, where good fields offset poorer fields, excluded some farmers from qualifying in areas with scattered rainfall."

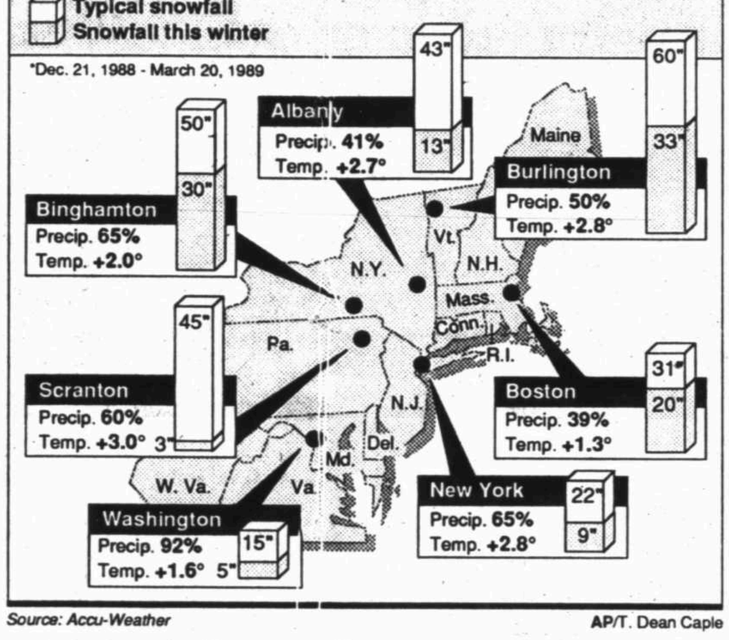

Even so, Hanson added, the combination of drought assistance and federal subsidized crop insurance "has permitted thousands of farmers in hard-hit states to survive last year's bad weather with less financial suffering than had been anticipated."

But on Capitol Hill there have been grumblings that USDA has mishandled 1988 relief and has ignored drought conditions now prevailing in parts of the Great Plains, notably in Kansas and parts of Texas.

Department officials testified that more than 558,000 producers had received disaster payments and emergency feed assistance amounting to more than $2.7 billion nationally.

Farm leader urges continued subsidies

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. farm leader says Congress should proceed on a new farm bill on the assumption that the European Economic Community will continue dragging its feet on an overhaul of world agricultural trade policies.

Dean Kleckner, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said Tuesday that a 1990 farm bill also should include — at least at its current level — the Export Enhancement program.

Under EEP, selected foreign markets are sold designated U.S. farm commodities at subsidized prices. One of the goals of the program is to make American products competitive with subsidized European exports.

The Bush administration wants to see the outcome of the current Uruguay Round of talks under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade before there is a new farm bill. The current law, passed in 1985, will expire next year, and there is some sentiment for extending the law a year or two so that any GATT settlement can be considered.

"I don't think we should write a farm bill based on what we hope will happen in the GATT talks," Kleckner told a news conference.

The United States and the 12-nation European Economic Community are hung up mainly on long-term strategy and by what U.S. negotiators say are distortions caused by certain subsidies and restrictive policies.

EEC officials contend there has been progress in overhauling the community's policies and that the United States should compromise on some of its goals — which at one time called for the gradual elimination of trade-distorting farm subsidies and rules.

Although Kleckner said he was not giving up yet on the Uruguay Round of negotiations — it has about two years still remaining — he said there is some danger of agricultural issues taking a back seat to other trade matters.

Scent may create 'fatal attraction'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Male insects whose pursuit of sex leads them to ravage peach trees are being drawn by an artificial perfume into wearing themselves out on plastic strips instead.

Scientists are holding out hope that the method of pest control by way of birth control will cost less and be safer than insecticides being used on peach trees.

The male pests are the lesser peachtree borer, which attacks the trunk or limbs of the tree, and the larva of a close relative, the peachtree borer, which chews at the base and roots.

Both are looking for female borers and are drawn by the scent into thinking they have found potential mates. But it's a fatal attraction, say Agriculture Department scientists.

"It works like this," said entomologist J. Wendell Snow. "The insects try to mate daily, from around 11 a.m. until about 2 p.m. for about two weeks, the lifespan of adults. When the male futilely approaches the (scent's) dispenser repeatedly, he becomes totally confused and exhausted."

Female insects, unable to compete with the artificial sex scents, remain barren, thereby breaking the reproductive chain, or egg-larvae-adult cycle.

The five-year project, described by the department's Agricultural Research Service, was led by entomologist J. Wendell Snow, who delved into the sex scents, or pheromones, emitted by the female borers.

Snow, who is in charge of the Southeastern Fruit and Tree Nut Research Laboratory in Byron, Ga., hung dispensers containing the artificial scent in each peach tree of the test orchards.

The sex attractants, when placed in the tops of test trees, "achieved almost complete control" of the borers in several orchards in central Georgia, he said.

Snow said the pheromone dispensers, which are made of plastic and resemble trash bag twist ties, are being reviewed by the Environmental Protection Agency for commercial use.

Opening lead: Queen of ◇

This is your lucky day. Four of the bridge players you despise most have ended up at the same table in a duplicate game, and you're going to get a chance to tell the world which of their bids and plays you dislike.

East rose with the ace of diamonds at trick one to fell the king, then continued the suit for declarer to ruff. He led the ten of hearts to West's king, and the shift was to the king of clubs. Declarer took his ace and continued with the queen of hearts to the ace. West returned his remaining club. East took two tricks in the suit as West got rid of his remaining heart, and then switched to a spade. In due course the defenders took three spade tricks for an 800-point set.

If you criticized East's reopening bid of two clubs, you would have been right had the game been rubber bridge. At duplicate, however, you are unlikely to achieve even an average score if you allow the opponents to buy the hand at the one-level, so we like two clubs. Similarly, South's two spades is beyond reproach.

We hope you didn't think that West's opening lead should be the king of hearts. That could cost the defense a tempo. His choice of the queen of diamonds is correct. You should try to set up your secondary tricks before your winners are forced out. The first error comes at trick two—East should shift to his trump because he cannot be sure he will ever regain the lead to take his partner off a possible endplay.

The last and most grievous error was declarer's decision to win the ace of clubs at once. Had he held up one round, he would have saved at least one trick, perhaps two, depending on the defense.

Academy's apology to Walt Disney Co. provides fairy-tale ending to lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Walt Disney Co. is grumpy no more. It got an apology and dropped its lawsuit over the use of a Snow White look-alike in the opening of the Academy Awards.

"The academy sincerely apologizes to Disney for the unauthorized use of Disney's copyrighted Snow White character and for unintentionally creating the impression that Disney had ... sanctioned the opening production number on the Academy Awards telecast," Richard Kahn, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, said Thursday.

Disney alleged in its suit filed in U.S. District Court that Oscar producers lacked permission to use Disney's fairy tale character.

"The lawsuit was filed, among other things, to remedy the confusion surrounding Disney's perceived involvement with the opening of the Academy Awards telecast," said Disney President Frank Wells.

In agreeing to drop the suit, Disney said there will be "an appropriate court stipulation in which the academy agrees not to reuse the segment ... featuring Disney's Snow White for any purpose."

Wells said last week the matter could have been settled without litigation if the academy had publicly apologized after the show.

"For its own reasons, however, the academy unfortunately did not accede to our request," Wells said.

The spoof was created by Steve Silver, producer of the camp "Beach Blanket Babylon" revue which moved this week from Club Fugazi in San Francisco to Las Vegas. Disney is also unhappy with that production, which includes a Snow White character played by the same actress.

"We haven't ignored it. We've had discussions and that's all I can really say," said Disney spokesman Erwin Okun.

No lawsuits have been filed against Silver so far, he said.

The Oscars broadcast, seen in about 27 million American homes, began with actress Eileen Bowman, dressed as Snow White, following a chorus line of dancing stars into the Shrine Auditorium.

In a squeaky Betty Boop voice, Bowman then launched into a rendition of "We Only Have Stars for You," to the tune of "I Only Have Eyes for You." She also sang a rendition of "Proud Mary" with actor Rob Lowe.

"We pride ourselves on our meticulousness in obtaining the proper legal clearances for all music, film and other material used on our show and regret that we didn't do it with Disney," Kahn said in his apology.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" was released by Disney in 1937 and was the studio's first feature-length animated cartoon. Critics praised the film, calling it a turning point in Disney's career and a milestone in movie history.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mel Gibson, star of "The Road Warrior" and "Lethal Weapon," will play the title role in a new film production of "Hamlet" to be directed by Franco Zeffirelli.

Gibson said Thursday he wants to bring Shakespeare to as wide an audience as possible.

"I would like to make ("Hamlet") extremely accessible," Gibson said in a telephone interview. "There's no point in doing anything for an elite.

"I love Shakespeare and I always have. But when I was in school, I didn't think it was accessible at all. It wasn't really taught to me properly.

"But there's no great mystery to Shakespeare. There's love, hate, passion, sex and violence. It's all there."

Gibson said he last performed Shakespeare in Australia 10 years ago, when he co-starred in "Romeo and Juliet." This is his first Shakespearean film role.

Zeffirelli directed the acclaimed 1968 film adaptation of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

"Hamlet" will be produced by Dyson Lovell, who just brought "Lonesome Dove" to CBS television.

LONDON (AP) — Kermit the Frog may lament it ain't easy bein' green, but now he can boast it's easy to be seen on Soviet television.

Kermit

Just call him comrade, because Muppets creator Jim Henson and his London-based company Henson International Television announced Thursday "The Muppet Show" and "Fraggle Rock" will be on Soviet TV come fall.

The governing body of Soviet television, Gostelradio, agreed to allow the shows. The agreement follows the airing in the Soviet Union of a "Fraggle Rock" episode which "drew unprecedented rating figures," according to a company statement.

It said 3,500 viewers wrote letters to the network after the show, and Soviet entrepreneurs have already applied to Henson for merchandising rights.

"I am very pleased that at last our programs and characters will be seen in the Soviet Union," Henson said. "I've always worked with an international audience in mind and having our programs seen in Russia is personally gratifying."

"The Muppet Show" alone has been seen in more than 100 countries by upward of 235 million people.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Pulitzer Prize-winning author and astronomer Carl Sagan says the United States and the Soviet Union should join forces and head for Mars.

Sagan

The show of cooperation between the two superpowers could revive a space exploration program that has been dormant for 10 years, Sagan told more than 400 scientists and aerospace specialists gathered Wednesday for a symposium.

Sagan joked that the joint mission might trigger a dispute over who would get to set foot first on Mars. "I have one solution," Sagan said. "We tie together the ankles of the Soviet and U.S. (astronauts). Or perhaps a better solution, posed by the Europeans: Let them be first."

Sagan told reporters after his speech that he thinks heading to Mars is a better next step for space exploration than establishing a presence on the moon.

NEW YORK (AP) — Greta Garbo, describing herself as a "sour little creature," says: "If somebody gave me a million dollars I wouldn't write anything about myself. I wouldn't do it for anything under the sun.

"I don't think it's worthwhile. I don't think it's very interesting."

Comments made over the last 26 years by the reclusive film star, who hasn't made a movie since 1941, were recorded by a friend and published in a spring issue of Life magazine.

"I don't want any kind of attention from anybody, except that I know that someone likes me, and that's nice. Otherwise, it's sickening," she said.

Unemployment falls to 5 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate dipped in March to 5 percent, the lowest rate in more than 15 years, despite a slowed rate in the creation of jobs, the government reported today.

The Labor Department said 180,000 new jobs were added to nonfarm payrolls last month, the lowest figure since 154,000 in August 1988 and down from a revised February figure of 280,000.

The slower rate of job creation, affected somewhat by the Eastern Airlines strike, indicates some slowing in the economy. But there were signs of continued strength as well.

The number of factory jobs remained stable and the average factory work week fell slightly, by 0.2 hours to 40.9 hours. Average overtime was unchanged at 3.9 hours.

The 5 percent civilian jobless rate, the lowest since December 1973 when it was 4.9 percent, defied predictions that unemployment would edge up slightly from the February rate of 5.1 percent, which itself had matched a 15-year low.

The bulk of the new job growth was in the service sector. Service industries alone added 110,000 jobs, with health services accounting for 55,000 new positions.

The job growth is tracked through a business survey that treats strikers as unemployed. Because of that about 25,000 striking Eastern airlines workers were counted as being out

Texas jobless rate hits four-year low

DALLAS (AP) — Texas' unemployment rate fell to its lowest level in almost 4½ years during March, despite the absence of any real growth in the job market, federal labor officials reported today.

Last month's decline to 6.0 percent matched the rate for November 1984 and reflected U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that almost 7.8 million Texans are working.

"What we're seeing is people coming off the unemployment rolls and moving into jobs with no real growth in the labor force," said BLS analyst Nic Santangelo. "That, in itself, is something of a weakness."

The number of Texans looking for jobs dipped to 495,000 in March, he said. When combined with the growth in total employment, the Texas labor force was virtually unchanged at just under 8.3 million.

Still, the Texas economy shows signs of the slow, steady growth it began in early 1987. The March rate was almost two full points below the 7.9 percent recorded one year earlier.

"We've seen a steady downward trend over almost two years from '87 through most of '88," Santangelo said.

Health care and business services have combined with growth in the transportation and government sectors to provide most of the new jobs over the last year. But employment in the state's troubled energy, construction and financial industries remained below year-earlier levels in February.

The BLS payroll survey routinely lags one month behind the unemployment data.

Texas' job market expanded at a 2.3 percent rate during the 12-month period that ended in February — or about two-thirds of the nationwide growth rate, Santangelo said.

EASTERN SALE

Texas Air chairman Frank Lorenzo, left, discusses the sale of Eastern Airlines to Peter Ueberroth, right, and Ueberroth's partner Tom Talbot, at a New York press conference.

Eastern unions ahead for Ueberroth

WASHINGTON (AP) — Representatives of Peter V. Ueberroth today met with Eastern Airlines' unions hoping to clear another hurdle in the proposed sale of the strike-crippled carrier — the former baseball commissioner's demand for wage and other concesssions from the workers.

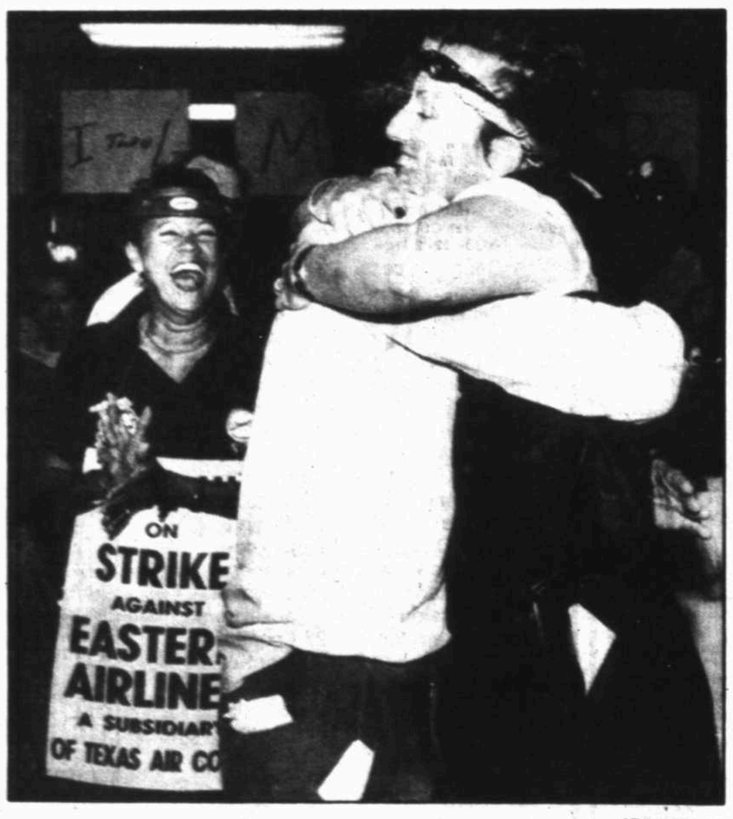

Ueberroth met informally with union officials Thursday night and formal negotiations began today at the headquarters of the International Association of Machinists, which struck the airline a month ago.

An IAM spokeswoman said the meeting began at 9:30 a.m. and was expected to last all day. She said she did not believe Ueberroth himself was at the session, which also involves unions representing Eastern's pilots and flight attendants, which have honored IAM pickets.

The talks came a day after a group led by Ueberroth agreed to buy strikebound Eastern for about $464 million. The deal would give Eastern's 30,000 employees a 30 percent stake in the airline in exchange for about $210 million in contract concessions.

Union officials said they hoped the deal could end the month-old walkout at the nation's seventh-largest airline and get Eastern flying a full schedule.

But some daunting hurdles remain for the deal, announced by Ueberroth and Lorenzo, chairman of Eastern's parent Texas Air Corp.

Texas S&Ls among those taken over

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators, nearing the end of their rush effort to seize control of the sickest savings and loans in the country, have added another 38 to the list of those under government control.

The latest takeovers announced Thursday were in California, Colorado, Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Mississippi and Texas.

The actions brought the number of institutions being run by federal regulators to 215 in 31 states. Officials expect to take over another 17 institutions within the next few weeks.

The takeovers are being supervised by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which regulates commercial banks. The agency began the takeover program on Feb. 7 with the aim of quickly taking control of the sickest S&Ls in order to minimize losses until Congress appropriates the money to shut them down or sell them to new owners.

Members of the House Banking Committee began writing their version of the S&L bailout legislation on Thursday and were to resume consideration of amendments today.

The FDIC said regulatory teams being put into the institutions would work to minimize operating losses and ensure that the S&Ls are operated in a safe and sound manner. The agency said all the institutions will remain open as usual and that all deposits are guaranteed up to the $100,000 insurance limit.

The largest of the 38 institutions taken over on Thursday was Murray Savings Association of Dallas with assets of $1.44 billion at the end of 1988.

The 38 institutions included:

CALIFORNIA: Cabrillo Savings Bank, Hayward; Founders Savings and Loan Association, Los Angeles; Royal Oak Savings and Loan Association, Manteca; Unified Savings Association, Northridge; City Federal Savings and Loan Association, Oakland; First California Federal Savings Association, Orange; Arrowhead Pacific Savings Bank, San Bernardino; Gateway Savings Bank, San Francisco; Perpetual Savings Association, Santa Ana; Washington Savings sand Loan Association, Stockton; Independence Savings and Loan Association, Vallejo; City Savings and Loan Association, Westlake Villa.

COLORADO: American Federal Savings and Loan Association of Colorado, Denver; Equity Federal Savings Bank of Denver.

IOWA: Sioux Valley Savings and Loan Association, Cherokee; 1st Federal Savings and Loan Association of Estherville and Emmetsburg.

ILLINOIS: First Federal Savings and Loan Association, East Alton; Libertyville Federal Savings and Loan Association, Libertyville.

KANSAS: First of Kansas Banking and Savings Association, Hays.

Nocona bank latest to fail

NOCONA, Texas (AP) — Depositors with First National Bank of Nocona were greeted by a new name on the door today as the bank became the 48th banking institution of 1989 to fail in Texas, federal regulators announced.

Depositors' accounts were automatically transferred to the First National Bank of Bowie, Texas. The new Bowie branch was scheduled to open today and handle 2,900 accounts totaling $24.5 million. The bank will pay a $276,200 premium to assume the accounts.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. will immediately infuse $3.9 million into the Bowie bank and will retain $3.5 million of the failed bank's assets.

First National, Bowie, will also control $20.4 million of Nocona's assets.

Controversial S&L proposal rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional panel rejected an attempt to force Texas and other states with lax regulations to help pay for the savings and loan mess, a provision one member said would have started a "second Civil War."

Meeting as regulatory agencies made two announcements underscoring the urgency of swift action, the House Banking subcommittee on financial institutions on Thursday also decided to permit regulators to charge higher deposit insurance premiums to institutions engaged in speculative lending.

By a 27-20 vote, the subcommittee authorized the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., if it chooses, to levy higher premiums against S&Ls and banks making high-risk investments.

The Bush administration opposes the measure. It is trying to prevent delay of its S&L rescue package by deferring ticklish deposit insurance issues until the completion of an 18-month study.

The FDIC said it took over 38 institutions, bringing the total number of S&Ls under its supervision to 215 in 31 states. The agency is attempting to hold losses down at the sickest S&Ls until Congress appropriates the money to close or merge them.

Meanwhile, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said the industry suffered $9.4 billion in withdrawals in February, the 10th consecutive month of outflows and down only slightly from the $10.6 billion record in January.

The House subcommittee, in the first of three scheduled all-day sessions, slogged through 48 of 165 proposed amendments, adopting two that would increase the power of the FDIC over S&Ls and deny the Bush administration some of the political control it had sought over the agency.

But it was a push by Northern legislators to force Texas, California, Florida and other states with lax regulation of state-chartered S&Ls to pay part of the bailout cost that generated the most heated debate.

The panel voted 39-7 against an amendment sponsored by Reps. Paul E. Kanjorski, D-Pa., and Marcy Kaptur, D-Ohio, requiring states with high numbers of state-chartered thrift failures to contribute 20 percent of the cost of bailing them out.

The measure drew considerable sympathy, but committee members argued against it for political reasons.

"This would have sent the bill to Fort Sumter. It would have started the second Civil War," Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., said after the vote.

Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, argued that attaching punitive measures to the S&L bill could draw a veto from President Bush: "All I ask the people here is, with this provision, is there a slight chance that a Texan in the White House will sign it?"

Kanjorski and Kaptur argued that Texas will get the lion's share of the bailout, $31 billion, representing $1,856 for every man, woman and child in the state, while most other states will pay more than they get, $479 per capita in Connecticut, for instance.

MARKETS

Posted price falls to $18.75

From Staff and Wire Reports

While futures prices head upward today, the posted price heads lower.

Local crude buyers, including Texaco Trading and Transporation and Permian Corp. have lowered their posted price for West Texas Intermediate 75 cents to $18.75.

Meanwhile, contracts for May delivery of WTI on the New York Mercantile Exchange have risen 26 cents to stand at $20.06 at midmorning.

Prices were mostly lower in moderate trading Thursday, led by falling gasoline prices as oil shipments in Alaska returned to normal. WTI fell 19 cents to close at $19.80 a barrel.

Unleaded gasoline had risen more than 13 cents since the giant spill off the Alaskan coast on March 24.

Unleaded gasoline for May delivery dropped 1.88 cents to 64.55 cents a gallon from 66.43 a gallon on Wednesday. Other contract months were mixed.

The May contract for heating oil fell .41 cent to 51.22 cents from 51.63 cents in the previous session, while other contracts also declined.

Analysts said gasoline prices were in for a technical correction after soaring in the week following the oil spill and the closure of the port of Valdez.

"Prices reflected mostly a technical change rather than anything fundamental," said Richard Redoglio, energy broker with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Analysts said oil shipments from the Valdez port exceeded 1.3 million barrels on Thursday while 2 million barrels are normally shipped.

Stocks fall in sluggish session

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market lapsed into a sluggish decline Thursday as investors cautiously awaited monthly statistics on employment.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 12.83 points to 2,291.97.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 3 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 581 up, 842 down and 538 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 146.53 million shares, down from 165.88 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 173.52 million shares.

Interest rates moved up a bit in the government securities market in advance of the Labor Department report due out Friday on the employment situation for March.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $6.98 billion, or 0.24 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .43 to 166.02.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

U.S. oil firms plan more overseas activity

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — U.S. producers have increased their offshore drilling budgets this year, but most plan to spend the extra money searching for petroleum in international waters, a survey indicates.

"Our survey said that there would be increases internationally in 1989 and I think it will be in offshore areas," George Hogarty, manager of marketing for the company which conducted the mail-in survey, said Thursday.

Hogarty also said he disagrees with the many oil company executives who predicted that Gulf of Mexico drilling and exploration will remain stagnant.

"Aside from our survey, I don't think the domestic market is going to stay flat," said Hogarty, of Western Oceanic in Houston. "There are strong indications that the Gulf of Mexico will show important improvement beginning later this year because of the natural gas situation."

NCNB wants meeting with C&S

ATLANTA (AP) — NCNB Corp. says it wants a face-to-face meeting with Citizens and Southern Corp. over a revised takeover bid, but C&S officials say the North Carolina banking company has made no effort to bring one about.

On Monday the C&S board rejected an unsolicited NCNB offer of 1.075 shares of NCNB stock for each share of C&S common stock. The value of that offer was placed at $39 a share, or about $2.4 billion.

James Hance, Charlotte, N.C.-based NCNB's chief financial officer, said NCNB may raise the price of the offer. He said analysts' predictions of a new offer of $44 worth of stock per share were "in the ballpark."

Retailers report mixed growth in March

NEW YORK (AP) — The country's major retailers reported mixed March sales, and analysts said the sluggish growth at some chain stores suggested that higher credit costs have made consumers more cautious about spending.

Inclement weather in parts of the country and the loss of a selling day due to store closures for the Easter holiday were cited Thursday as reasons for the mediocre results at the cash registers of several big general merchandisers.

UEBERROTH

Eastern's major creditors and the U.S. Bankruptcy Court must approve it. In addition, the deal requires Eastern to reach new work agreements with its three unions by midnight Tuesday.

Ueberroth's group is seeking about $210 million in pay cuts and work-rule concessions from the unions, sources close to the situation said. Lorenzo had sought $125 million in concessions.

"Under this agreement Eastern can be back flying in very short order," Lorenzo said at the news conference. "Eastern is prepared to be back flying within 24 hours ... after agreement is reached with the unions."

The Miami-based carrier has been virtually grounded since March 4 by the machinists' strike that was supported by pilots and flight attendants and drove Eastern to file for bankruptcy protection and reorganization on March 9.

"To sum it up, it's a mammoth challenge," said Ueberroth, who organized the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles. "I'm convinced that there is a spirit amongst the people in the company that I can help bring together to help this airline."

Although Texas Air has endorsed the Ueberroth plan, others still might submit competing proposals to the bankruptcy court.

Nevertheless, the Ueberroth deal was greeted with cheers by union members, who have vilified Lorenzo as a union buster.

At a crowded union hall in Miami, members chanted "Hey, hey! Ho, ho! Lorenzo's got to go" and sang "Take Me Out To The Ballgame" as they heard of the sale.

Union leaders were more cautious.

"We're reviewing the documents and we'll be making a decision very shortly," said Charles Bryan, head of the machinists' local at Eastern, who was in Washington for the talks with Ueberroth.

Jack Bavis, chairman of Eastern's pilots union, said his group was encouraged by the development and looked forward to working with Ueberroth.

In New York, Lorenzo told reporters that under the proposed purchase Texas Air would get about $200 million cash, would be forgiven $185 million that it owes to Eastern and would get $79 million worth of Eastern assets.

A union analysis, on the other hand, reckons the value of Texas Air debt owed to Eastern at $288.6 million. The debt includes loans to Texas Air and Eastern's sister carrier, Continental Airlines, to buy gates at airports in Newark, N.J., Houston and Cleveland, and for aircraft purchases.

Eastern is saddled with about $3.2 billion in debt.

The $79 million in asset transfers — which the unions have vocally opposed —would include Eastern's New York-Montreal route plus eight landing slots and one gate at New York's LaGuardia Airport as well as $28 million in unspecified assets.

Ueberroth and partner Thomas Talbot, a former airline executive from California, would own 30 percent of the airline.

Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., a major investment house, and Ardshiel Inc., a smaller New York firm, would sell securities to investors for the remaining 40 percent of Eastern.

Eastern would get a 19.9 percent interest in Texas Air's computer reservations system, System One, as well as Continental's Miami-London route.

Ueberroth said his group also would receive proceeds of Eastern's $365 million sale of its profitable Northeast shuttle to developer Donald J. Trump.

Lorenzo said Eastern intended to file a bankruptcy reorganization plan that would pay creditors 100 percent. Lorenzo will remain in charge of the airline until the deal is approved, but Ueberroth will participate in formulating the reorganization plan.

of work, meaning the new-job total would have been somewhat higher had it not been for the one-month-old strike.

The strke does not affect the unemployment rate, however, because that data is compiled through a separate household survey that counts strikers as being employed.

In other areas, retail trade operations continued to add jobs, about 75,000 in March, and wholesale trade also showed growth.

But construction employment dropped for the second consecutive month, losing 50,000 jobs in a decline the Labor Department said was largely focused on residential building and appeared to be linked to the recent rise in interest rates.

In data closely watched for signs of inflation, the department reported that average hourly earnings of non-supervisory employees rose 0.4 percent from February to March, about in line with expectations. Average weekly earnings also were up slightly, from $327.22 in February to $328.86 in March.

"The data released today show a relatively strong labor market in March, with improvement in unemployment and moderate job growth," Bureau of Labor Statistics Commissioner Janet L. Norwood said in testimony prepared for Congress this morning.

There have been a number of recent signs of slowing economic growth, including sluggish auto and major retail sales and slumps in construction and the housing market. At the same time, however, there have been other indications of still-inflationary growth, inluding near-record factory use.

The dip in the unemployment rate is attributable to the addition of only 83,000 new people in the labor force — those looking for jobs. Total civilian employment reached 117.1 million last month, while the number of people unemployed — those looking for a job who could not find one — fell by about 200,000 to 6.1 million, accordig to the household survey.

A separate unemployment rate that counts members of the armed services was 4.9 percent in March, down from 5.1 percent in February.

The department reported that 63 pecent of the population had jobs last month — a new high.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Well-run mutual funds keep 'expense ratio' low

By BILL DOYLE

Q. You describe "true" no-load mutual funds as those "charging no commission when investors buy shares, no rear-end load in the form of redemption fees or contingent deferred sales charges when shares are redeemed and no 12b-1 plan constantly eroding share values."

On the surface, true no-load mutual funds seem ideal. But how do they generate money to cover the cost of doing business? I cannot believe that no-load means all profits for investors and nothing for fund management.

A. Of course it doesn't. The people who manage mutual funds — load and no-load — are well compensated for their efforts.

Doyle

Every mutual fund has operating expenses. As with other types of companies, operating expenses are deducted from gross income. That reduces a fund's net income used to pay dividends to shareholders and, sometimes, lowers the net asset value behind fund shares.

At the typical mutual fund, the biggest operating expense is the management fee — sometimes called the investment advisory fee. Among other things, that fee pays the salaries of the people who run the fund.

A well-run mutual fund keeps its total annual operating expenses — known as the "expense ratio" — below 1 percent of the fund's net assets. You'll find that percentage figure and other expense data on Page 2 of every mutual fund prospectus printed since May 1, 1988.

Loads, front and rear, go mostly to brokers and other sales people — not to fund managers. And 12b-1 fees also are supposed to be used exclusively for "distribution" of fund shares, meaning that money is to pay for sales.

Q. As I understand it, management of a mutual fund with a 12b-1 plan can dip into fund assets for as much as 1.25 percent a year to pay distribution expenses. Over a number of years, that could greatly reduce the value of fund shares.

A mutual fund in which I am considering investing has a 12b-1 plan. Where can I learn the percentage size of its 12b-1 bite?

A. Simply look at the expense table on Page 2 of the fund's prospectus, assuming the prospectus has been printed since May 1, 1988. The 12b-1 bite is a line item there.

Q. I bought shares of a mutual fund about three years ago and had no idea the fund had a 12b-1 plan. Last summer, the letter "p" began appearing beside the fund's name in newspaper tables. The "p" means the fund has a 12b-1 plan.

Can a mutual fund change to a 12b-1 plan without informing shareholders?

A. Nope. If the fund did not have a 12b-1 plan, it could not adopt one without approval by the owners of a majority of its shares. Voting by shareholders would have to be conducted at the fund's regular annual meeting or a special shareholders' meeting.

Many newly organized mutual funds have 12b-1 plans, right from the go. That way, management doesn't have to ask shareholders to vote.

I suspect your fund had a 12b-1 plan all along but you weren't aware of it until you noticed that "p" in the tables. New footnotes began appearing in newspaper mutual fund tables last May 1.

The "p" is just one of the new explanatory symbols. You will find "r" next to the names of some other funds. That means the fund levies a redemption fee or contingent deferred sales charge as a rear-end load.

You'll spot a "t" aside some funds' names. That let's you know that those funds clobber investors with both 12b-1 plans and rear-end loads.

One especially enlightening thing about the relatively new tables is that only true no-load funds now carry the letters "NL." Funds that sell and redeem their shares at the same price but have 12b-1 plans and/or rear-end loads no longer have the "NL" letters.

FAMILY MATTERS

Communication vital in marriage

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: I think my husband and I have a real problem in our marriage. Whenever we have a problem, my husband won't talk about it. He won't tell me what is wrong. He just doesn't say anything.

I try and try to get him to tell me what is wrong and he just sits there like a piece of stone. Then one day he gets up and acts like everything is fine. I am usually still mad, but I go along with him just to get it over with.

I have talked to several of my friends and they say their husbands act the same way. Is that normal? I don't think that I can spend the rest of my life like this. If all men are this way I'd rather be alone. HURT

DEAR HURT: Your husband's response is common, but no means is restricted to men. From your description, your interaction with your husband sounds as if it goes like this: There is a problem, you attack, he retreats. You try to address the problem and he tries to deny it exists. Although common, this pattern is not very productive.

I believe we learn problem-solving techniques in our family of origin. I encourage couples who are contemplating marriage to tell each other how their individual families solved problems. What they often learn is that their families addressed problems very differently.

In many homes, the problems were never solved. It's important to be aware of the lessons that we learned, but it also is important to learn new lessons where appropriate.

Take some time to meet with your husband to discuss "problem solving." This time will need to be when there are no disruptions (no children, television, stereo). Identify the pattern as you have described. Find out from your husband what it would take for him to agree not to retreat. Come to an agreement about how you two will handle the situation the next time there is a problem. Then put the new method into practice.

After you have tried your new method several times, have another meeting to evaluate the method. Make the necesary changes and try again.

DEAR FAMILY: What can I do to get my 2-year-old son to go to bed when I want him to. I have basically given up and let him go to bed when we do. My husband doesn't like (son's name) being up so late. He thinks that I am weak because I can't make (son's name) go to bed on time. He may be right, but I just don't know what to do. Can you help? WEAK

DEAR WEAK: First, you and your husband agree on a bedtime for your son. Then agree to help each other enforce the selected bedtime. The task will be difficult and will take both of you working together. After you have agreed on a bedtime, select a good time to initiate the new bedtime routine — a time when you both will be available and outside influence (holidays, visitors, etc.) will be minimal.

Your routine may include a bath time with dad, reading a bedtime story or saying prayers. Once you and your husband have agreed on a routine that you both will follow, have a family meeting and tell your son what is going to happen.

Explain to him (very positively) that he is getting older and he needs a new way to go to bed just like big kids. Answer his questions. Be encouraging.

When you initiate the routine, he may cry and be upset. Be firm. Go into his room and calmly reassure him that it is bedtime, and that you are available to him, but he will stay in bed. He doesn't have to go to sleep, he just has to stay in his bed.

Two final thoughts: It usually takes seven full days and nights to change a child's habit. It seems to always get worse, just before it gets better. Good luck.

Parents: Be cautious when selecting pets

New York Times News Service

Spring is a time when many parents listen to their children's heartfelt assurances that caring for the crippled bird, the stray kitten or the neighbor's extra puppy really won't be any trouble at all.

Veterinarians and child-development experts stress that a good match between a child and a pet, be it a gerbil or a St. Bernard, depends on much more than the sad-eyed look or wagging tail that often attracts a child to a particular animal.

They caution that getting the wrong pet, or even the right pet for the wrong reasons, can do more harm than good, as can believing some of the common myths about which types of pets are best for children.

Although common pint-size pets for preschoolers, like turtles, gerbils or hamsters, are less expensive to care for than cats or dogs, these animals come with problems that new owners seldom anticipate.

"More of the caretaking responsibility for such small animals often falls on the parents," said Dr. Tina Ellenbogen, a veterinarian with the Delta Society, a national organization based in Renton, Wash., that studies the interactions of animals and people.

"A 5-year-old child can't hold a hamster in one hand and clean the cage with the other, but a child that age can feed the cat," she continued.

She also pointed out that many of the small mammals bought as first pets for young children are nocturnal and therefore not very active when the child is awake.

ALTHOUGH THERE are few hard-and-fast rules for which kind of animal will work best for a particular family, one combination that does not work is bringing an adult dog that is not used to small children into a family with a toddler. Dogs often find the erratic movements of toddlers very threatening.

"The dog will be afraid of the toddler," said Dr. Peter L. Borchelt, president of Animal Behavior Consultants in Forest Hills, N.Y., and a psychological consultant to the Animal Medical Center in Manhattan.

"It will back off and either bark or growl. If the toddler accidently corners the dog, the dog may bite."

Parents often overestimate the amount of involvement an older child will have in the day-to-day care of a pet. Preadolescents and adolescents will often balk when they are asked to walk the dog or change the cat's litter though they consider the animal their "best friend."

"Thinking that a dog is going to make an irresponsible child responsible is a mistake; it simply won't work," said Dr. Daniel F. Tortora, an assistant professor of psychology at Jersey City State College and the author of several books on animal behavior.

There are several common mistakes parents make that, if avoided, can make life with a pet more enjoyable for everyone in the family.

■ Teach children not to bring home wild animals.

"It's not in the best interest of either the animal or the people," said Dr. Amy Marder, an assistant professor of veterinary medicine at Tufts University in Boston.

She added that many of the fledgling birds children find on the ground and believe to be injured are not injured at all. They are simply learning to fly and are being watched by their parents.

"Similarly, the survival rate of baby rabbits brought in from the wild by children is so low that they would be better off left to be found by their mothers," she advised.

■ WHEN SELECTING a dog, pay more attention to the breed's temperament than its size.

"Having a small child doesn't mean you should get a small dog," said Dr. Robert K. Anderson, director emeritus of the Center to Study Human-Animal Relationships at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

"A larger dog may be more appropriate because large dogs are often much calmer."

The same advice often holds true for matching a dog to a living space. Small dogs may need more room to exercise than some large dogs.

"I've always had Newfoundlands in my New York apartments because they're so mellow," said Dr. Peter L. Borchelt, a psychological consultant to the Animal Medical Center in Manhattan. Newfoundlands are among the largest breeds of dogs, often weighing up to 150 pounds.

■ Don't believe that a dog will protect your children and, therefore, leave young children alone with a dog.

Most of the anecdotes about how an animal alerted children to a fire or pulled them out of the path of an car appear to be romantic embellishments of how the animal tried to save itself.

Children affected by modern stresses

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Kindergarten teacher Winnie Porter read her students a story about a man on a subway who was carrying a special white bag.

"What do you think is in the bag?" she asked the 5-year-olds.

"A machine gun," said one child.

"A knife," said another. Porter was floored by the class of 2000. "The man had a bag of cherries!" she said. "And I wasn't telling the story in a way to make them think he was a bad guy."

Children of the Cold War crouched under their desks, practicing "duck and cover" in case the bomb fell. Today, elementary school teachers discuss whether they should teach about AIDS. Apples have been temporarily banned from lunches because of a cancer-causing pesticide and used syringes can be found in playgrounds.

Is life tougher for today's children or has childhood always been a bumpy ride, both terrifying and wonderful?

"That's such a hard question to answer," said Ginny Strock, a Palo Alto, Calif. school psychologist and mother of two. "It's different to look at kids than to be a kid. But the pace of life is so much faster. Kids hear a lot about kidnappings and shootings. There's an element of worry and distress that didn't exist before, but part of the problem is the parents. Parents who are more worried and concerned feed that to their kids."

Strock says she doesn't spend a lot of time discussing the evils of the world with her own children, ages 8 and 10, because children, as a rule, already feel powerless. Telling them the world is a scary place only increases that feeling.

Luckily, children are wonderfully adaptable, says Judith Kell, an elementary school principal here.

"I can't make a flat statement about whether life is harder for the children of today," Kell says. "I can't get into kids' minds. But growing up, we had drunks on the street who beat up their wives. That scared me and that was 46 years ago.

Fourth- and fifth-graders polled at San Francisco's Hawthorne Elementary School said they were worried about a wide range of subjects, from losing a kickball game to a hole in the ozone layer to earthquakes. Other worries were closer to home. "My brother has Downs syndrome," said Miguel Ruiz. "He almost fell down the stairs the other day. I worry that he might."

Living in an urban area is hard on children, says San Francisco librarian Michael Tuller.

It's important to let children be children, without adult pressure to perform and get ahead, he says.

"We have to remind ourselves that kids need a childhood. We can push them too early into early education. Children have a hard enough time dealing with stress that's been there for centuries, much less the stress of the 1980s."

Free eye exams offered Monday

From Staff Reports

The Sheets Eye Foundation will conduct free glaucoma tests 9:30-11:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Stanton Senior Citizen Center, 210 E. Convent, Stanton.

Glaucoma is one of the leading causes of blindness in the United States. There are no symptoms and only with the finding of increased intra-ocular pressure is the diagnosis made. The high pressure in the eye causes damage to the optic nerve. This damage causes changes in the peripheral or side vision known as "visual field defects."

The central vision is not affected until very late in the disease, making it difficult for individuals to notice a change.

Periodic testing is suggested as a preventative measure.

Glaucoma is not curable, but may be controlled with lifelong therapy and medication.

DEAR ABBY

Man resents wife's spending habits

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am 77 years old. My wife is 68. We've been married for four years. It's a second marriage for both of us. She is a refined, good-looking woman, but she has some old-fashioned ideas. For example, she thinks a husband should support his wife completely, even if the wife has a very good income of her own.

I am very comfortable financially, but I am no multimillionaire. Her husband died and left her very well off, and although I've never counted her money, I'm sure her assets are greater than mine. The problem is that she saves her money and spends mine like it comes out of a pump. We get along fine — except when it comes to money.

Please understand, I am no cheapskate, but I don't want to be a sucker either. I have children and grandchildren I would like to leave a few dollars to, but at the rate this lady is going, I won't have anything left. (She has more jewelry than Tiffany's, but she's always buying more.)

Don't you think a second wife in her circumstances should spend her own money? Rush your advice, please, because I am considering talking to a lawyer. — GOING BROKE IN FLORIDA

DEAR GOING BROKE: It's too late for a prenuptial agreement, which a man in your circumstances should have had, but it's not too late to reach some kind of agreement about an allowance — or a budget.

A woman who comes to a marriage with a considerable amount of money should not expect her husband to support her in grand style while she sits on her assets.

DEAR ABBY: I am divorced and the mother of one child. I recently took a job as manager of an apartment building in order to support myself and my little one. It doesn't pay much, but I can live in this apartment rent-free, which helps a lot. It is a nice apartment with good security, and I never could afford to live here without this arrangement.

My problem: There is a man in this building who is legally separated from his wife. He is nice-looking, polite, gentlemanly and he lives alone. I have no car, so he gives me rides to the grocery store, Laundromat, etc. He is very kind and caring, but guess what? According to the tenants, the word is all over this building that this man and I are having an affair!

Abby, that is not true. Why can't people of the opposite sex be friends without sleeping together? A couple of tenants made some snide remarks about it to him, too, and I feel terrible about it. He said he couldn't care less what people say. Abby, why do people gossip? And what can I do about it? — IRATE IN NORTH CAROLINA

DEAR IRATE: People gossip for a variety of reasons — among them jealousy, malice and boredom. Ignore the talk and the talkers. Just because a dog barks doesn't mean you have to answer it.

DEAR ABBY: I know people who proudly recite by heart every single gift they have ever given anyone — also every favor they have ever done anyone in their entire lifetime.

I used to admire the terrific memories of people like this until I realized it's much easier to remember a short list than a long one. — BARBARA SACKS, ORANGE, N.J.

DEAR BARBARA: We all know people like that. It's one thing to remember, but to "recite" it is something else.

Wedding bells? Wedding bills! Who pays for what and everything else you need to know if you're planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Nose cone art makes come-back in California

CASTLE AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Painting pinups on airplane nose cones, an art form that reached its zenith in World War II, is making a comeback at this Strategic Air Command base.

A KC-135 Stratotanker now sports a 1940s-era calendar pinup, a looker in a midriff and a miniskirt rippling in the breeze.

Castle Air Force officials say the painting is designed to instill pride in the crews that fly and maintain SAC aircraft, but some women's rights groups say they find the pinup art form offensive.

Col. Richard Martin, commander of the 93rd Bombardment Wing at Castle, says today's aircraft pinups aren't so scantily clad as those of the 1940s. The sometimes-racy World War II pinups are "too sexist and not appropriate," he says.

"We want enthusiasm, vigor and spirit, but we don't want to offend anyone," says Martin.

Staff Sgt. Randy Jones says he found the model for the KC-135 painting on a 1943 calendar while browsing in Sonora, Calif. The calendar art was forwarded to base officials for review and approved by the previous wing commander, he says.

From that, Staff Sgt. Ruben Rodriguez painted the aircraft's nose cone in nine hours during a routine inspection stop.

Plane art originated during World War I when aircraft first assumed a major role in warfare. The "Hat in The Ring Squadron" was among the best known pieces of plane art of the era and was emblazoned on the side of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker's fighters.

During World War II, pinups such as "Ack Ack Annie," "Memphis Belle," "Pistol Packing Mamma" and "Shoo Shoo Baby" were featured on warplanes and were considered a source of pride to the troops. But nose cones carried other art forms, such as "Blue Goose," and "Poop Deck Pappy."

Martin says he's already approved a sketch of a knight with a sword and shield mounted on a horse that will be painted on the nose of another Stratotanker.

Exhibit features ancient Roman perfumes

ATLANTA (AP) — Thanks to research by Italian chemist Giuseppe Donato, commoners have a chance this spring to get a whiff of the mystic scents that perfumed Caesar and Cleopatra and wafted through the air at Roman banquets.

The ancient Romans loved perfume, which they used as medicine in religious festivals, for cosmetic purposes, even as an additive to food and wine. But what it smelled like was anybody's guess until recently.

Donato's reconstruction of seven popular ancient scents is the core of an exhibit, "The Fragrant Past," opening Wednesday at the Emory University Museum of Art and Archaeology.

"We have known the recipes because the ingredients are mentioned in several ancient texts, including Pliny's 'Natural History,'" said exhibit curator Monique Seefried. "But nowhere do we find the quantities. Dr. Donato's research and analysis finally established the percentages so the scents could be recreated."

Visitors will get a chance to smell the ancient fragrances by sniffing corks dipped in the perfumes, as a wine connoisseur might smell the cork from an old Bordeaux. Some of the fragrances will be for sale, at around $25 for a tiny vial.

Also out for public sniffing will be many of the herbs used to make the ancient perfumes, so visitors can smell what puts the smell in the fragrances.

The exhibit, which will run until June 25, will also feature a model of Cleopatra's cosmetic workshop and displays of ancient glass vials of the type used to store the scents, on loan from the Corning Glass Museum.

Ms. Seefried said Donato became interested about 18 years ago when he examined a beauty case found in an excavation in Romania.

"There were remains of perfume in glass vials," she said. "The scent was gone, of course, but the chemical residues remained."

More information was gleaned from pollens and other residues found at the 2,000-year-old ruins of Cleopatra's cosmetic workshop on the edge of the Dead Sea, which archaeologists found to be in remarkably good condition.

Ms. Seefried, the museum's curator of Near Eastern art, said there has been a tendency to know the Romans only through their art and literature.

"Now we can use our senses to get closer to their own tastes," she said. "We don't see or read it, we can smell it."

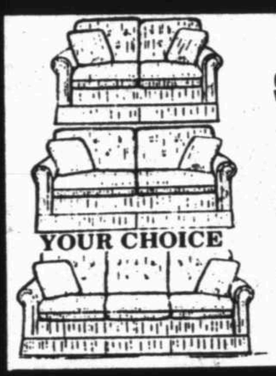

Donato assembled ingredients from such diverse places as China, Sri Lanka and England and used the processes described in ancient writings, some little changed in 2,000 years. The results are sweeter, more flowery and less aromatic than modern perfumes.

Ms. Seefried said perfumes were expensive then, too, but were sprinkled liberally around rooms and on guests at banquets. It was added to fountain water, burned in religious ceremonies, and even put on birds that were then sent flying through halls before a banquet.

There was a practical role for the scent, she said: While Romans bathed often and were meticulously clean, sewage was often dumped around the city in a cavalier manner.

"The smell must have been rather unpleasant," she said. "I should think people would have been glad to cover themselves in perfume."
